I quote here some other interesting stories which I have observed in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa regarding Prajāpati, the creation of the gods, and the manner in which they acquired immortality, and became superior to the Asuras, or to other deities. (Compare the fifth volume of this work, pp. 12–16.) The first extracts tell how Prajāpati himself became immortal, and what difficulties he encountered in the work of creation.

Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, x. 1, 3, 1 (p. 761 ff.)—Prajāpatiḥ prajāḥ asṛijata | sa ūrddhvebhyaḥ eva prāṇebhyo devān[96] asṛijata ye 'vānchaḥ prāṇās tebhyo martyāḥ prajāḥ | atha ūrdhvam eva mṛityum prajābhyo 'ttāram asṛijata | 2. Tasya ha Prajāpater ardham eva martyam āsīd ardham amṛitam | tad yad asya martyam āsīt tena mṛityor abibhet | sa vibhyad imām prāviśad dvayam bhūtvā mṛichcha āpaścha | 3. Sa mṛityur devān abravīt 'kva nu so 'bhūd yo no 'sṛishṭa' iti | 'tvad bibhyad imām prāvikshad' iti | so 'bravīd 'tam vai anvichhāma tam sambharāma na vai aham tam himsishyāmi' iti | tam devāḥ asyāḥ adhi samabharan | yad asya apsv āsīt tāḥ apaḥ samabharann atha yad asyām tīm mṛidam | tad ubhayam sambhṛitya mṛidancha apaścha ishṭakām akurvams tasmād etad ubhayam

[96] The gods are sometimes mentioned in the Rig-veda (see i. 34, 11; i. 45, 2) as being thirty-three in number. Here is an enumeration of them in the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, iv. 5, 7, 2: Ashṭau Vasavaḥ ekādaśa Rudrāḥ dvādaśa Ādityāḥ ime eva dyāvā-pṛithivī trayastriṁśyau | trayastrimśad vai devāḥ Prajāpatiś chatustriṁśaḥ | "There are eight Vasus, eleven Rudras, twelve Ādityas, and these two, heaven and earth are the [thirty-second and] thirty-third. There are thirty-three gods, and Prajāpati is the thirty-fourth."

ishṭakā bhavati mṛichcha āpaścha | 4. Tad etāḥ vai asya tāḥ pancha martyās tanvaḥ āsan loma tvaṇ māṁsam asthi majjā atha etāḥ amṛitāḥ mano vāk prāṇāś chakshuḥ śrotram | . . . . . 6. Te devāḥ abruvann 'amṛitam imaṁ karavāma' iti | tasya etābhyām amṛitābhyaṁ tanūbhyām etam martyām tanūm parigṛihya amṛitām akurvann ityādi . . . . | 7. . . . . tato vai Prajāpatir amṛito 'bhavat . . . | . . .

x. 1, 4, 1.—Ubhayaṁ ha etad agre Prajāpatir āsa martyaṁ chaiva amṛitancha | tasya prāṇāḥ eva amṛitāḥ āsuḥ śarīraṁ martyam | sa etena karmaṇā etayā āvṛitā ekadhā 'jaram amṛitam ātmānam akuruta |

"Prajâpati produced creatures. From his upper breaths he formed the gods, and from his lower breaths mortal creatures. After the creatures he created Death the devourer. 2, Of this Prajâpati, half was mortal, and half immortal. With that part of him which was mortal, he was afraid of Death.[97] Fearing, he entered this [earth], having become two things, earth and water. 3. Death said to the gods, 'what has become of him who created us?' [They answered], 'fearing you, he has entered this earth.' Death said, 'let us search for, and collect him. I will not kill him.' The gods then collected him on this [earth]. The part of him which was in the waters, they collected those waters, and the part which was in this [earth], they [collected] that earth. Having collected both of these, the earth and the waters, they made a brick. Hence these two things make a brick, viz. earth and water. 4. Then these five parts of him were mortal, hair, skin, flesh, bone, and marrow; and these immortal, mind, voice, breath, eye, ear. . . . . 6. The gods said, 'let us make him immortal.' So [saying], having surrounded this mortal part with these immortal parts, they made it immortal . . . . . thence Prajâpati became immortal . . . ."

x. 1, 4, 1.—"Prajâpati was formerly both of these two things, mortal and immortal. His breaths were immortal, and his body mortal. By this rite, by this ceremonial, he made himself uniformly undecaying and immortal."

Śatapatha Brâhmaṇa x. 4, 4, 1: Prajāpatiṁ vai prajāḥ sṛijamānam pāpmā mṛityur abhipaṛijaghāna | sa tapo 'tapyata sahasraṁ saṁvatsarān pāpmānaṁ vijihāsann ityādi | "Misery, death, smote Prajâpati when he was creating living beings. He performed austerity for a thousand years, to get free from misery." See the passages to a similar effect, quoted in the first volume of this work, pp. 68 ff., and Śatap. Br. xi. 4, 3, 1 ff., quoted in the fifth volume, p. 349; and further the same Brâhmaṇa, iv. 6, 3, 1: Prajâpater ha vai prajâḥ sasṛijânasya parvâṇi visasraṁsuḥ: "As Prajâpati was creating living beings, his joints became relaxed," etc.

[97] Comp. Taitt. Sanh. ii. 3, 2, 1. Devāḥ vai mṛityor abibhayuḥ, te Prajāpatim upādhāvan | "The gods were afraid of Death: they hastened to Prajâpati," etc. See also Śatap. Br. x. 4, 2, 2, quoted in the first volume of this work, p. 69.

The next extracts tell how the gods acquired immortality; and the first of them also informs us of a means whereby men may become immortal, after the decay of their bodies.[98]

Śatapatha Brâhmaṇa, x. 4, 3, 1 ff. (p. 787): Esha vai mṛityur yat sâmvatsaraḥ | Esha hi martyânâm aho-râtrâbhyâm âyuḥ kshiṇoty atha mriyante tasmâd esha eva mṛityuḥ | sa yo ha etam mṛityuṁ saṁvatsaraṁ veda na ha asya esha purâ jaraso 'ho-râtrâbhyâm âyuḥ kshiṇoti sarvaṁ ha eva âyur eti | 2. Esha eva antakaḥ | esha hi martyânâm aho-râtrâbhyâm âyusho 'ntaṁ gachhaty[99] atha mriyante | tasmâd esha eva antakaḥ | sa yo ha etam antakaṁ mṛityuṁ saṁvatsaraṁ veda na ha asya esha purâ jaraso 'ho-râtrâbhyâm âyusho 'ntaṁ gachhati sarvaṁ ha eva âyur eti | 3. Te devâḥ etasmâd antakâd mṛityoḥ saṁvatsarât Prajâpater bibhayânchakrur 'yad vai no 'yam aho-râtrâbhyâm âyusho 'ntaṁ na gachhed' iti | 4. Te etân yajnakratûṁs tenire 'gnihotraṁ darśa-pûrṇamâsau châturmâsyâni paśubandhaṁ saumyam adhvaram | te etair yajna-kratubhir yajamânâḥ na amṛitatvam ânaśire | 5. Te ha apy Agniṁ chikyire | te 'parimitâḥ eva pariśritaḥ upadadhur aparimitâḥ yajushmatîr aparimitâḥ lokampṛiṇâḥ yathâ idam apy etarhy eke upadadhati iti devâḥ akurvann iti te ha na eva amṛitatvam ânaśire | 6. Te 'rchantaḥ śrâmyantaś cherur amṛitatvam avarurutsamânâḥ | tân ha Prajâpatir uvâcha 'na vai me sarvâṇi rûpâṇy upadhattha ati vâ eva rechayatha na vâ 'bhyâpayatha tasmâd na amṛitâḥ bhavatha' iti | 7. Te ha ûchuḥ | 'tebhyo vai nas tvam eva tad brûhi yathâ te sarvâṇi rûpâṇy upadadhâma' iti | 8. Sa ha uvâcha shashṭiṁ cha trîṇi cha śatâni pariśritaḥ upadhatta shashṭiṁ cha trîṇi cha śatâni yajushmatîr adhi shaṭ-triṁśatam atha lokampṛiṇâḥ daśa

[98] Comp. S'atap. Br. ix. 5, 1, 1 ff., quoted in the first volume of this work, p. 14, note; and the same Brâhmaṇa ix. 3, 3, 2. In S'atap. Br. x. 3, 5, 13, happiness, or gladness, is said to be the soul or essence of all the gods (ânandâtmâno ha eva sarve devâḥ).

[99] Gachhati=gamayati | Comm.

cha sahasrāṇy ashṭau cha śatāny upadhatta atha me sarvāṇi rūpāṇy upadhāsyatha atha amṛitāḥ bhavishyatha' iti | te ha tathā devāḥ upadadhus tato devāḥ amṛitāḥ āsuḥ | 9. Sa mṛityur devān abravīd 'ittham eva sarve manushyāḥ amṛitāḥ bhavishyanty atha ko mahyam bhāgo bhavishyati' iti | te ha ūchur 'na ato 'paraḥ kaśchana saha śarīreṇa amṛito 'sad. yadā eva tvam etam bhāgam harāsai | atha vyāvṛitya śarīreṇa [śarīram vihāya, Comm.] amṛito 'sad yo 'mṛito 'sad vidyayā vā karmaṇā vā' iti | yad vai tad abruvan 'vidyayā vā karmaṇā vā' ity eshā ha eva sā vidyā yad Agnir etad u ha eva tat karma yad Agniḥ | 10. Te ye evam etad vidur ye vā etat karma kurvate mṛitvā punaḥ sambhavanti | te sambhavantaḥ eva amṛitatvam abhi sambhavanti | atha ye evaṁ na vidur ye vā etat karma na kurvate mṛitvā punaḥ sambhavanti te etasya eva annam punaḥ punar bhavanti |

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, p. 787.—"It is this year which is death; for it wears away the life of mortals by days and nights, and then they die; wherefore it is it which is death. Whoso knows this death [which is] the year,—it does not wear away his life by days and nights before [the time of] his decay: he lives through his whole life. 2. This [the year] is the ender; for it by days and nights brings on the end of the life of mortals, and then they die: hence it is the ender. Whosoever knows this ender, death, the year, it does not by days and nights bring on the end of his life, before his decay: he lives through his whole life. 3. The gods were afraid of this ender, death, the year [which is] Prajāpati, 'lest he should by days and nights bring on the end of our life.' 4. They performed these rites of sacrifice, viz. the agnihotra, the darśa and pūrṇamāsa, the chāturmāsyas (oblations offered at intervals of four months), the paśubandha, and the saumya adhvara: but sacrificing with these rites they did not attain immortality. 5. They moreover kindled sacrificial fires; they celebrated pariśrits, yajushmatīs, lokampṛiṇās, without definite measure, as some even now[100] celebrate them. So did the gods, but they did not attain immortality. 6. They went on worshipping and toiling, seeking to acquire immortality. Prajāpati said to them, 'Ye do not celebrate all my forms; ye either carry them to excess, or ye do not fully carry them out; hence ye do not become immortal.' 7. They said, 'Tell us how we may celebrate all thy forms.' 8. He said, 'Perform 63 hundred pariśrits, 63 hundred and 36 yajushmatīs, and 10 thousand 8 hundred lokampriṇās: ye shall then celebrate all my forms, and shall become immortal.' The gods celebrated accordingly, and then they became immortal. 9. Death said to the gods, 'In the same way all men will become immortal, and then what portion shall remain to me?' They said, 'No other person shall henceforward become immortal with his body, when thou shalt seize this portion [the body]: then every one who is to become immortal through knowledge or work, shall become immortal after parting with his body.' This which they said, 'through knowledge or work,' this is that knowledge which is Agni, that work which is Agni. 10. Those who so know this, or those who perform this work, are born again after death; and from the fact of being born, they are born for immortality. And those who do not so know, or those who do not perform this work, and are born again after death, become again and again his (death's) food."

[100] This seems to be a polemical hit aimed by the author of the Brāhmaṇa at some contemporaries who followed a different ritual from himself.

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. i. 2, 12.—Martyāḥ ha vai agre devāḥ asuḥ | sa yadā eva te saṁvatsaram āpur atha amṛitāḥ āsuḥ | sarvaṁ vai saṁvatsaraḥ | sarvaṁ vai akshayyam | etena u ha asya akshayyaṁ sukṛitam bhavaty akshayyo lokaḥ | "The gods were originally mortal.[101] When they obtained the year, they became immortal. The year is all: all is undecaying: by it a man obtains undecaying welfare, an undecaying world."

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 2, 3, 6.—Martyāḥ ha vai agre devāḥ āsuḥ | sa yadā eva te Brahmaṇā "pur (vyāptāḥ, Comm.) atha amṛitāḥ āsuḥ | "The gods were originally mortal. When they were pervaded by Brahma, they became immortal" (see the context of this passage in the fifth vol. of this work, p. 388). Comp. Taitt. Br., iii. 10, 9, 1, quoted in the first vol. of this work, p. 71.

The following story describes how the gods became distinguished from, and superior to, the Asuras. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ix. 5, 1, 12 ff. (p. 741).—Devāścha Asurāścha ubhaye prājāpatyāḥ Prajāpateḥ pitur [101] See Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa ii. 2, 2, 8, quoted in the second volume of this work, p. 388, note 36, for another legend on this same subject, in which the gods are said to have become immortal by another means.

dāyam[102] upeyur vācham eva satyānṛite satyanchaiva anṛitancha | te ubhaye eva satyam avadann ubhaye 'nṛitam | te ha sadṛiśaṁ vadantaḥ sadṛiśāḥ eva āsuḥ | 13. Te devāḥ utsṛijya anṛitaṁ satyam anvālebhire | asurāḥ u ha utsṛijya satyam anṛitam anvālebhire | 14. Tad ha idaṁ satyam īkshānchakre yad asureshv āsa 'devāḥ vai utsṛijya anṛitaṁ satyam anvālapsata hanta tad ayāni' iti tad devān ājagāma | 15. Anṛitam u ha ikshānchakre yad deveshv āsa 'asurāḥ vai utsṛijya satyam anṛitam anvālapsata hanta tad ayāni' iti tad asurān ājagāma | 16. Te devāḥ sarvaṁ satyam avadan sarvam asurāḥ anṛitam | te devā āsakti[103] satyaṁ vadantaḥ aishāvīratarāḥ iva āsur anādhyatarāḥ iva | tasmād u ha etad yaḥ āsakti satyaṁ vadaty aishāvīrataraḥ iva eva bhavaty anādhyataraḥ iva | sa ha tv eva antato bhavati[104] devaḥ hy evāntato 'bhavan | 17. Atha ha asurāḥ āsakty anṛitaṁ vadantaḥ ūshaḥ iva pipisur[105] ādhyāḥ iva āsuḥ | tasmād u ha etad yaḥ āsakty anṛitaṁ vadaty ūshaḥ iva eva pisyaty ādhyaḥ iva bhavati parā ha tv eva antato bhavati parā hy asurāḥ abhavan | tad yat tat satyaṁ trayī sā vidyā | te devāḥ abruvan 'yajnam kṛitvā idaṁ satyaṁ tanavāmahai' | . . . . . 27. Teshu preteshu tṛitīya-savanam atanvata | tat samasthāpayan | yat samasthāpayaṁs tat sarvaṁ satyam āpnuvaṁs tato 'surāḥ apapupruvire | tato devāḥ abhavan parā 'surāḥ | bhavaty ātmanā parā 'sya dvishan bhrātṛivyo bhavati yaḥ evaṁ veda |

"The gods and Asuras, both descendants of Prajāpati,[106] obtained their father Prajāpati's inheritance, speech, true and false, both truth

[102] Compare S'atap. Br., i. 7, 2, 22.

[103] Āsakti satyam | kevalaṁ satyam | Comm.

[104] Some such preposition as abhi might appear to be wanted here; but Dr. Aufrecht suggests to me that bhavati may be taken in a pregnant sense as meaning, "he really exists, continues, or prevails." Compare the words at the close of the 27th paragraph of this passage.

[105] I am indebted to Dr. Aufrecht for pointing out to me another passage of the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa where the word pisyati occurs, and which throws light on the one before us. The passage in question occurs in pp. 71, 72, of the Brāhmaṇa, i. 7, 3, 18: Pesukaṁ vai vāstu pisyati ha prajayā paśubhir yasya evaṁ vidusho 'nushṭubhau bhavataḥ | "His house becomes flourishing, he increases in progeny and cattle,—that man who, when he knows this, has the two anushtubhs." The commentator explains the word pesukam as equal to abhivardhana-śīlam, "whose nature is to increase," and pisyati as meaning ativriddho bhavati, "he becomes exceedingly augmented."

[106] Comp. Taitt. Br. i. 4, 1, 1. Ubhaye vai ete Prajāpater adhy asṛijyanta devās cha asurās cha | tān na vyajānād "ime anye ime anye" iti | "Gods and Asuras were both created from Prajāpati. He could not distinguish the one as different from the other."

and falsehood. They both spoke truth, and both [spoke] falsehood. Speaking alike, they were alike. 13. Then the gods, abandoning falsehood, adopted truth; while the Asuras, abandoning truth, adopted falsehood. 14. The truth which had been in the Asuras perceived this, 'the gods, abandoning falsehood, have adopted truth; let me go to it.' So [saying, truth] came to the gods. 15. Then the falsehood which had been in the gods perceived, 'the Asuras, abandoning truth, have adopted falsehood; let me go to it.' So [saying, falsehood] came to the Asuras. 16. The gods [then] spoke entirely truth, and the Asuras entirely falsehood. Speaking truth exclusively (or devotedly), the gods became, as it were, weaker, and, as it were, poorer. Hence it happens that the man who speaks exclusively truth becomes, as it were, weaker and poorer; but in the end he becomes [prosperous], for the gods became so in the end. 17. Then the Asuras, speaking exclusively falsehood, increased like saline earth, and became, as it were, rich. Hence it happens that he who speaks exclusively falsehood increases like saline earth, and becomes, as it were, rich; but succumbs in the end, for the Asuras succumbed. That which is truth is the triple science' (the three Vedas). Then the gods said, 'Let us, after performing sacrifice, celebrate this truth.'" The gods then performed a variety of sacrifices, which were always interrupted by the arrival of the Asuras. At length, 27. "When these had gone, they celebrated the third Savana, and accomplished it. Inasmuch as they accomplished it, they found it entirely true. Then the Asuras went away, and the gods became [superior, while] the Asuras were worsted. The man who knows this becomes in his own person superior, and his hater, his enemy, is defeated."

Another story relates to the same subject, Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, v. i. 1, 1 (=xi. 1, 8, 1 f.): Devāś cha vai Asurāś cha ubhaye prājāpatyāḥ paspṛidhire | tato 'surāḥ atimānena eva "asmin nu vayaṁ juhuyāma" iti sveshv eva āsyeshu juhvataś cheruḥ | te 'timānena eva parābabhūvuḥ | tasmād na atimanyeta | parābhavasya hy etad mukhaṁ yad abhimānaḥ | 2. Atha devāḥ anyo 'nyasmin juhvataś cheruḥ | tebhyaḥ Prajāpatir ātmānam pradadau | yajño 'ha eshām, āsa yajño hi devānām annam | "The gods and Asuras, both of them the offspring of Prajāpati, strove together. Then the Asuras, asking themselves to whom they should offer their oblations, through presumption went on placing them in their own mouths;[107] and in consequence of this their presumption they were overcome. Wherefore let no one be presumptuous; for presumption leads to defeat. 2. The gods went on offering their oblations to one another. Prajāpati gave himself to them; sacrifice became theirs; for sacrifice supplies the food of the gods."[108]

The following is from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 2, 9, 6 f.: Asurāṇāṁ vai iyam agre āsīt | yāvad āsīnaḥ parāpaśyati tāvad devānām | te devāḥ abruvan "astv eva no 'yam api" iti "kyaṁ no dāsyatha" iti | "yāvat svayam parigṛihṇītha" iti | "This [earth] formerly belonged to the Asuras. The gods had only as much as any one can see while sitting. The gods said to them, 'Let us also have a share in it. What will you give us?' 'As much as you yourselves can encompass.'" The different classes of gods then encompassed it on four sides.[109]

The next legend explains how inequality was introduced among the gods. Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iv. 5, 4, 1 (p. 397 f.).—Sarve ha vai devāḥ agre sadṛiśāḥ āsuḥ sarve puṇyāḥ | teshāṁ sarveshāṁ sadṛiśānāṁ sarveshām puṇyānāṁ trayo 'kāmayanta 'atishṭhāvānaḥ syāma' ity Agnir Indraḥ Sūryaḥ | 2. Te 'rchantaḥ śrāmyantaś cheruḥ | te etān atigrāhyān dadṛiśus tān atyagṛihṇata | tad yad enān atyagṛihṇata tasmād atigrāhyāḥ nāma | te 'tishṭhāvāno 'bhavan | yathā te etad atishṭhā iva atishṭhā iva ha vai bhavati yasya evaṁ vidushaḥ etān grahān gṛihṇanti | 3. No ha vai idam agre 'gnau varchaḥ āsa yad idam asmin varchaḥ | so 'kāmayata 'idam mayi varchaḥ syād' iti | sa etaṁ graham apaśyat tam agṛihṇīta tato 'sminn etad varchaḥ āsa | 4. No ha vai idam agre Indre ojaḥ āsa yad idam asminn ojaḥ | so 'kāmayata 'idam mayy ojaḥ syād' iti | sa etaṁ graham apaśyat tam agṛihṇīta tato 'sminn etad ojaḥ āsa | 5. No ha vai idam agre sūrye bhrājaḥ āsa yad idam asmin bhrājaḥ | so 'kāmayata 'idam mayi bhrājaḥ syād' iti | sa etaṁ graham apaśyat tam agṛihṇīta tato 'sminn etad bhrājaḥ āsa | etāni ha vai tejāṁsy etāni vīryāṇy ātman dhatte yasya evaṁ vidushaḥ etān grahān gṛihṇanti |

"Originally the gods were all alike, all pure. Of them, being all alike, all pure, three desired: 'May we become superior,' viz. Agni, Indra, and Sūrya (the sun). 2. They went on worshipping and toiling.

[107] Comp. the words ye adhi śuptāv ajuhvata, R. V. i. 51, 5; and Sāyaṇa's comment thereon.

[108] Comp. S'atap. Br. xi. 3, 2, 1: Sarveshāṁ vai eshaḥ bhūtānāṁ sarveshāṁ devānām ātmā yad yajnaḥ | "Sacrifice is the soul of all beings, of all the gods."

[109] Comp. S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 6, 2, 11; vi. 6, 3, 2; xi. 2, 7, 26.

They saw these atigrāhyas;[110] they offered them over and above. Because they did so, these draughts (or cups) were called atigrāhyas. They became superior. As they [became] thus, as it were, superior, so superiority is, as it were, acquired by the man, of whom, when he knows this, they receive these grahas (draughts, or cups). 3. Originally there was not in Agni the same flame, as this flame which is [now] in him. He desired: 'May this flame be in me.' He saw this graha, he took it; and hence there became this flame in him. 4. Originally there was not in Indra the same vigour, etc., etc. [as in para. 3]. 5. Originally there was not in Sūrya the same lustre, etc., etc. [the same as in para. 3]. That man has in himself these forces, these energies, of whom, when he knows this, they receive these grahas."

[110] By this name are called "three particular grahas, or sacrificial vessels, with which libations were made in the Jyotishṭoma sacrifice to Agni, Indra, and Sūrya." Prof. Goldstücker's Dict. The word is explained by Böhtlingk and Roth, as meaning "haustus insuper hauriendus," a draught to be drunk over and above; the designation of three fillings of the cup, which are drawn at the Soma offering.

CHAPTER II.

VISHṆU, AS REPRESENTED IN THE VEDIC HYMNS, THE BRĀHMAṆAS, THE IṬIHĀSAS, AND THE PURĀṆAS.

SECT. I.—Passages in the Hymns of the Ṛig-veda relating to Vishṇu.

R. V. i. 22, 16 ff.: 16 (=S. V. 2, 1024). Ato devāḥ avantu no yato Vishṇur vichakrame | pṛithivyāḥ sapta dhāmabhiḥ | 17 (=S. V. i. 222; Vāj. S. 5, 15; A. V. 7, 26, 4). Idaṁ Vishṇur vichakrame tredhā nidadhe padam | samūḷham asya pāṁsure [pāṁsule | S. V.] 18 (=S. V. 2, 1020; Vāj. S. 34, 43; A. V. 7, 26, 5). Trīṇi padā vichakrame Vishṇur gopāḥ adābhyaḥ | ato dharmāṇi dhārayan | 19 (=S. V. 2, 1021; Vāj. S. 6, 4; A. V. 7, 26, 6). Vishṇoḥ karmāṇi paśyata yato vratāni paspaśe | Indrasya yujyaḥ[1] sakhā | 20 (=S. V. 2, 1022; Vāj. S. 6, 5; A. V. 7, 26, 7). Tad Vishṇoḥ paramam padaṁ sadā paśyanti sūrayaḥ | divīva chakshur ātatam | 21 (=S. V. 2, 1023; Vāj. S. 34, 44). Tad viprāso vipanyavo jāgṛivāṁsaḥ samindhate | Vishṇor yat paramam padam |

16. "May the gods preserve us from the place from which Vishṇu strode[2] over the seven regions of the earth.[3] 17. Vishṇu strode over this [universe]; in three places he planted his step: [the world, or his step, was] enveloped in his dust.[4] 18. Vishṇu, the unconquerable[5] preserver, strode three steps, thereby maintaining fixed ordinances. 19. Behold the acts of Vishṇu, through which this intimate friend of Indra perceived[6] established laws. 20. Sages constantly behold that highest position of Vishṇu, like an eye fixed in the sky. 21. Wise men, singing praises, and ever wakeful, light up[7] [by the power of their hymns?] that which is the highest station of Vishṇu."

[1] Yujyo vā sakhā vā, R. V. ii. 28, 10; yuj, i. 10, 9; yujyāya, ix. 66, 18.

[2] Mbh. S'ānti-Parva, v. 13171: Kramaṇāch chāpy aham Pārtha Vishṇur ity abhisaṁjñitaḥ | "And from striding, O son of Pṛithā, I am called Vishṇu." The A. V. ix. 6, 29, speaks of the steps of Prajāpati being imitated by his worshipper (Prajāpater vai esha vikramān anuvikramate yaḥ upaharati).

[3] Instead of the words pṛithivyāḥ sapta dhāmabhiḥ, the Sāma-veda reads, pṛithivyāḥ adhi sānavi: "over the surface of the earth." This verse, as well as the following ones, is rendered by Professor Benfey, in his translation of the Sāma-veda, as well as in his "Orient und Occident," i. 30. He understands the place from which Vishṇu strides to be the sun, referring to verse 20. For the sense given by Sāyaṇa to this and the following verses, see Wilson's translation of the Ṛig-veda and notes in loco. Compare also Rosen's Latin version.

The 17th verse of this hymn is quoted in the Nirukta, xii. 19;[8] where we have the following explanations of its purport, derived by Yāska from two older writers:—

Yad idaṁ kincha tad vikramate Vishṇuḥ | tridhā nidhatte padam | 'tredhā-bhāvāya pṛithivyāṁ 'ntarikshe divi' iti Śākapūṇiḥ | 'samārohāne vishṇupade gayaśirasi' ity Aurṇavābhaḥ | 'samūḍham asya pāṁsure' | pyāyane 'ntarikshe padaṁ na dṛiśyate | apivā upamārthe syāt | saṁūḍham asya pāṁsule iva padaṁ na dṛiśyate ityādi |

"Vishṇu strides over this, whatever exists. He plants his step in a three-fold manner,—i.e. 'for a three-fold existence, on earth, in the atmosphere, and in the sky,' according to Śākapūṇi; or, 'on the hill where he rises, on the meridian, and on the hill where he sets,' according to Aurṇavābha. 'Samūḍham asya pāṁsure,' i.e. his step is

[4] According to Benfey, translation of S. V., p. 223, note, this phrase, the world is veiled in Vishṇu's dust, means, it is subjected to him. In his "Orient und Occident," he explains it thus: "he is so mighty that the dust which his tread raises, fills the whole earth." Can this dust be understood of the dazzling brightness of the sun's rays, surrounding his progress, and obscuring his disc from the view of the observer? The prophet Nahum says, i. 3, "The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet."

[5] Adābhya may also mean "who cannot be deceived." The idea of Vishṇu being pre-eminently the preserver of the universe, which became current in later times, may possibly have been derived from this verse.

[6] Sāyaṇa gives to the root spaś the sense of "hindering," or "touching." Benfey, in his S. V., renders paspaśe by "received," and, in the "Orient und Occident," by "firmly fixed." The sense, he says, is this: "Look to the sun, where the terminus lies from which Vishṇu started (verses 16, 21), and in which all the powers which work in nature have their source." Roth, in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, pp. 138 f., thinks that the sense of "beholding" is suitable in all the texts where forms of the root spaś occur in the R. V.

[7] Benfey renders samindhate "glorify." The commentator on the Vāj. S. 34, 44, makes it dīpayante = upāsate. Roth, under the word, explains "they kindle [Agni?] when Vishṇu is in his highest position."

[8] Formerly cited in part in the second volume of this work.

not seen in that prolific region, the atmosphere (pyāyane antarikshe): or the phrase may be metaphorical, 'enveloped in his dust, as it were, his step is not seen," etc.

The following is the comment of Durgāchārya[9] on this passage of the Nirukta:

Vishṇur Ādityaḥ | Katham iti yataḥ āha 'tredhā nidadhe padam' nidhatte padaṁ nidhānam padaiḥ | kva tat tāvat | 'pṛithivyām antarikshe divi' iti Śākapūṇiḥ | pārthivo 'gnir bhūtvā pṛithivyāṁ yat kinchid asti tad vikramate tad adhitishṭhati | antarikshe vaidyutātmanā | divi suryātmanā | yad uktam 'taṁ ū akṛiṇvan tredhā bhuve kam' (R. V. x. 88, 10) iti | 'samārohaṇe' udaya-girāv udyan padam ekaṁ nidhatte | 'vishṇupade' madhyandine 'ntarikshe | 'gayasirasy' astaṁgirāv ity Aurṇavābhaḥ āchāryo manyate |

"Vishṇu is the sun [Āditya].[10] How so? Because [the hymn] says, 'in three places he planted his step'; i.e. plants his step, [makes] a planting with his steps. Where, then, is this done? 'On the earth, in the firmament, and in the sky,' according to Śākapūṇi. Becoming terrestrial fire, he strides over,—abides in, whatever there is, on earth; in the shape of lightning, in the firmament; and in the form of the sun, in the sky. As it is said (in the R. V. x. 88, 10), 'They made him to become threefold." Aurṇavābha Āchārya thinks [the meaning is] this, 'He plants one foot on the 'samārohaṇa' (place of rising), when mounting over the hill of ascension; [another] on the 'vishṇupada,' the meridian sky; [a third] on the 'gayaśiras,' the hill of setting." [11]

It thus appears from the statement of Yāska that the two old writers whom he quotes had proposed two different interpretations of Vishṇu's steps.

First: Śākapūṇi thought that the triple manifestation of the god, in the form of fire on earth, of lightning in the atmosphere, and of the solar light in the sky, was intended in the hymn. This threefold distribution of divine agency is thus referred to in another interesting passage of the Nirukta, vii. 5:

[9] Already quoted in the second volume of this work.

[10] The Atharvaveda, v. 26, 7 has the following reference to Vishṇu: Vishṇur yunaktu bahudhā tapāṁsi asmin yajne suyujaḥ sṛūhā |

[11] See Appendix B.

Tisraḥ eva devatāḥ iti Nairuktāḥ Agniḥ pṛithivī-sthāno Vāyur vā Indro vā 'ntariksha-sthānaḥ Sūryo dyu-sthānaḥ | tāsām mahābhāgyād ekaikasyāḥ api bahūni nāmadheyāni bhavanti | api vā karma-pṛithaktvād yathā hotā 'dhvaryur brahmā udgātā ity apy ekasya sataḥ | api vā pṛithag eva syuḥ | pṛithag hi stutayo bhavanti tathā 'bhidhānāni ityādi |

"There are only three deities, according to the Nairuktas (etymologists), Agni, whose place is on earth, Vāyu, or Indra, whose place is in the atmosphere, and Sūrya, whose place is in the sky. These [deities] each receive many designations, in consequence of their greatness,[12] or from the diversity of their functions, as [the appellations of] hotṛi, adhvaryu, brahman, and udgātṛi are applied to one and the same person. Or [the gods in question] may all be distinct, for distinct hymns and appellations are addressed to them," etc.[13]

According to Sākapūṇi, therefore, Vishṇu would be the god who is manifested in a three-fold form on earth, in the atmosphere, and in the sky.

Secondly: Aurṇavābha interprets the passage differently. He understands the three steps of Vishṇu, not of fire, lightning, and solar light, but of the different positions of the sun at his rising, his culmination, and his setting.[14] According to him, therefore, Vishṇu is simply the sun.

Sāyaṇa (see Professor Wilson's translation, p. 53, note) understands this passage as referring to the three steps of Vishṇu in his "Dwarf incarnation," of which I shall supply details further on. The commentator on the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā annotates thus on 5, 15 (=verse 17 of the hymn before us):

Vishṇus trivikramāvatāraṁ kṛitvā idaṁ viśvaṁ vichakrame vibhajya kramate sma | tad eva āha | tredhā padaṁ nidadhe bhumāv ekam padam

[12] Καὶ Ταῖα πολλῶν ὀνομάτων μορφὴ μία, Æschylus Prom. Vinct. v. 217.

[13] In a previous part of this passage, vii. 4, it is said, Mahābhāgyād devatāyāḥ ekaḥ ātmā bahudhā stūyate | ekasya ātmano 'nye devāḥ pratyangāni bhavanti | "From the greatness of the Deity the one Soul is celebrated in many ways. The different gods are members of the one Soul," etc. Compare Mr. Colebrooke's Essays, i. 26 f.; or p. 12 f. of W. and N.'s ed. It appears from an advertisement in No. 75 of Trübner's American and Oriental Literary Record, that these Essays are being reprinted under the editorship of Prof. E. B. Cowell. (August, 1872.)

[14] This is the view taken by Prof. Max Müller: "This stepping of Vishṇu is emblematic of the rising, the culminating, and the setting of the sun," etc. Trans. of R. V., vol. i., p. 117.

antarikshe dvitīyaṁ divi tṛitīyam iti 'kramād Agni-Vāyu-Sūrya-rupeṇa ity arthaḥ |

"Vishṇu, becoming incarnate as Trivikrama (the god who stepped thrice), strode over,—i.e. stepped by separate strides over,—this whole [universe]. It is this that [the ṛishi] expresses [in the words], 'In three places he planted his step,' i.e. one step on the earth, a second in the atmosphere, and a third in the sky: in the successive forms of Agni, Vāyu, and Sūrya."

The commentator here combines the view that the Dwarf incarnation of Vishṇu is referred to in the hymn, with the conception that his different steps on the earth, in the atmosphere, and in the sky, were taken in the successive characters of Agni, Vāyu, and Sūrya, which is the interpretation of Sākapūṇi, as explained by Durga. There is no trace in the words either of Sākapūṇi, or of Aurṇavābha, as handed down by Yāska, of any allusion to such a Trivikrama incarnation of Vishṇu.[15]

I proceed to quote in order from the Rig-veda further texts relative to Vishṇu.

R. V. i. 61, 7: Asyed u mātuḥ savaneshu sadyo mahaḥ pitum papivān chāru annā | mushāyad Vishnuḥ pachataṁ sahīyān vidhyad varāhaṁ tiro adriṁ astā—"Having at the libations of that great measurer [of the worlds, i.e. Indra], drunk the potion, and [eaten] the pleasant oblations, the impetuous Vishṇu straightway stole the cooked mess, pierced the boar and shot through the mountain." See R. V. viii. 66, 10, below, and the quotation from Sāyaṇa's note on that verse.

[15] The Brāhmaṇas, as well as the hymns, contain frequent allusions to the three steps or stations of Vishṇu. See the Śatap. Br. vi. 7, 4, 7 ff.; Taitt. Sanh. i. 7, 5, 4. The Vājasaneyi Sanhitā has the following additional reference to them. According to the commentator, the interlocutors in the two verses are the brahman and udgātṛi priests. Vāj. Sanh., xxiii. 49: Pṛichhāmi tvā chitaye devasakha yadi tvam atra manasā jagantha | yeshu Vishṇus treshu padeshu eshṭas teshu viśvam bhuvanam āviveśa | 50 | Api teshu trishu padeshu asmi yeshu viśvam bhuvanam āviveśa | sadyaḥ paryemi pṛithivīm uṭa dyām ekenāṅgena divo asya pṛishṭham | "I ask thee, friend of the gods, that I may know, if thou by thy mind hast reached so far,—did Vishṇu, in the three steps (or spheres) in which he is worshipped, pervade the entire universe? | 50. I am even in those three steps by which he pervaded the entire universe. Straightway I move around the earth and heaven; with one member, (I move) over the surface of this sky."

R. V. i. 85, 7: Te avardhanta sva-tavaso mahitvanā ā nākaṁ tasthur uru chakrire sadaḥ | Vishṇur yad ha āvad vṛishaṇam mada-chyutaṁ vayo na sīdann adhi barhishi priye |

"They (the Maruts), strong in themselves, increased in greatness. They ascended to heaven, and have made [for themselves] a spacious abode. When Vishṇu assisted the hero [Indra?] who humbles pride,[16] they sat down like birds on the sacrificial grass which they love."

R. V. i. 90, 5, 9.—Uta no dhiyo go-agrāḥ Pūshan Vishṇo eva-yāvaḥ | karta naḥ svastimataḥ | 9. śaṁ no Mitraḥ śam Varuṇaḥ śaṁ no bhavatu Aryamā | śaṁ naḥ Indro Bṛihaspatiḥ śaṁ no Vishṇur urukramaḥ |

5. "Pūshan, Vishṇu, swift goer, make our prayers to bring us cattle and other possessions: make us prosperous. . . . . 9. May Mitra, may Varuṇa, may Aryaman, may Indra, may Bṛihaspati, may the wide-striding Vishṇu, all grant us prosperity."

I now come to a hymn which, with the exception of the last verse (where two gods are alluded to), is devoted exclusively to the celebration of Vishṇu's praises.

R. V. 1, 154 (=Vāj. S. 5, 18; A. V. 7, 26, 1).—Vishṇor nu kaṁ

[16] Though the commentator in loco renders mada-chyutam by madasya harshasya āsektāram, "dispenser of exhilaration" he interprets it in his note on R. V. i. 51, 2—where it is an epithet of Indra—by śatrūṇām madasya garvasya chyāvayitāram, "who brings down the pride of his enemies." In R. V., viii. 1, 21, the word madachyut is again applied to Indra, and in R. V. viii. 85, 5, to his thunderbolt. [I leave my translation to stand as it was in the first edition. Benfey, however, "Orient und Occident," ii. 248, renders the clause about Vishṇu thus: "When Vishṇu protects the dropping (Soma) who distils intoxication," and refers to a paper of his own in the Gött. Gel. Anzeigen regarding the relation of Vishṇu to Soma. In Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon the word madachyut, as it is to be understood in this passage, is translated "delightful," "gladdening," "inspiring." Prof. Müller, Translation of R. V., vol. i., renders the clause, "When Vishṇu descried the enrapturing Soma." In his note, p. 116, he remarks: "Vishṇu, whose character in the hymns of the Veda is very different from that assumed by him in later periods of Hindu religion, must here be taken as the friend and companion of Indra." After quoting various texts about the two gods, he adds, "The mention of Vishṇu in our hymn is therefore by no means exceptional, but the whole purport of this verse is nevertheless very doubtful, chiefly owing to the fact that several of the words occurring in it lend themselves to different interpretations." He says, p. 118, that "bringing down pride" is a meaning which the word madachyut clearly has not in the Veda. When applied to the thunderbolt, he says it ought to be rendered "wildly rushing down"; and when referred to Indra, his horses, or the Aśvins, or to horses in general, he would translate it by "furiously or wildly moving about."] vīryāṇi pravocham[17] yaḥ pārthivāni vimame rajāṁsi | yo askabhāyad uttaraṁ sadhasthaṁ vichakramāṇas tredhā urugāyaḥ | 2. (=A. V. 7, 26, 2, 3; Nir. 1, 20): Pra tad Vishṇuḥ stavate vīryeṇa mṛigo na bhīmaḥ kucharo girishṭhāḥ[18] | yasyorushu trishu vikramaṇeshu adhikshiyanti bhuvanāni viśvā | 3. Pra Vishṇave śūsham etu manma girikshite urugāyāya[19] vṛishṇe | yaḥ idaṁ dīrgham prayataṁ sadhastham eko vimame tribhir it padebhiḥ | 4. Yasya tri pūrṇā madhunā padāni akshīyamāṇā svadhayā madanti | yaḥ u tridhātu pṛithivīm uta dyām eko dādhāra bhuvanāni viśvā | 5. Tad asya priyam abhi pātho (R. V. iii. 55, 10) aśyāṁ naro yatra devayavo madanti | urukramasya sa hi bandhur itthā Vishṇoḥ pade parame madhvaḥ utsaḥ | 6. (Vāj. S. 6, 3; Nir. 2, 7): Tā vāṁ vāstūni uśmasi gamadhyai yatra gāvo bhūri-śṛingāḥ ayāsaḥ | atrāha tad urugāyasya vṛishṇaḥ paramam padam ava bhāti bhūri |

"I declare the heroic deeds of Vishṇu, who traversed the mundane regions, who established the upper sphere, striding thrice, the wide-stepping. 2. Therefore is Vishṇu celebrated for his prowess, terrible like a wild beast, destructive, abiding in the mountains [or, clouds, if this be an epithet of the god]; he within [the range of] whose three vast paces all the worlds abide. 3. Let my inspiriting hymn proceed to Vishṇu, the dweller in the [aerial] mountains, the wide-stepping, the vigorous, who alone traversed with three steps this wide, extended firmament;—4. Whose three [steps, or] stations, replenished with [17] The same form of expression occurs in a hymn to Indra (R. V. i. 32, 1), Indrasya nu vīryāṇi pravocham, etc. Compare R. V., ii. 15, 1.

[18] On this verse the Nirukta remarks: "Kucharaḥ" iti charati karma kutsitam| atha ched devatābhidhānaṁ kva ayaṁ na charati iti | girishṭhāḥ giristhāyī giriḥ parvataḥ . . . . tat-prakṛiti itarat sandhi-sāmānyād megha-sthāyī megho 'pi girir etasmād eva | "'Kuchara,' is one who does (charati) a blamable action. If the word be a designation of the god, it will mean 'where does he not go?' 'Girishṭhāḥ' means 'abiding in the mountains;' for giri means 'mountain.'" . . . . The author then gives various etymologies of the word parvata, "mountain," one of which is that it is derived from parvan, "a joint"; and then proceeds: "From this sense is derived another (owing to the idea of joint being common to both), viz., that of 'abiding in the clouds,' for a cloud also is called giri for the same reason." See Roth's Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 17. The same comparison, mṛigo na bhīmaḥ kucharo girishṭhāḥ, is applied to Indra in R. V., x. 180, 2 (=S. V., ii. 1223, and A. V. 7, 84, 3). Böhtlingk and Roth, s. v., think the word Kuchara may signify "slowly-moving," "slinking." The word mṛiga is applied to Varuṇa in R. V. vii. 87, 6.

[19] Urugāyasya=pṛithu-gamanasya adhikastuter vā.—Sāyaṇa on R. V. iii. 6, 4. Urugāyasya=mahāgateḥ.—Nir. ii. 7.

honey, imperishable, gladden us with food; who alone hath triply sustained the universe, the earth, and the sky, [yea] all the worlds. 5. May I attain to that beloved heaven of his, where men devoted to the gods rejoice; for (such a friend is he) there is a spring of honey in the highest abode of the wide-stepping Vishṇu. 6. We yearn to attain to those abodes of you twain, where the many-horned and swiftly-moving cows abide. Here that supreme abode of the wide-stepping, vigorous [god] shines intensely forth."

I shall quote a portion of the explanation Sāyaṇa gives of the words pārthivāni rajāṁsi, in the first verse of the preceding hymn: Yo Vishṇuḥ pārthivāni pṛithivī-sambandhīni rajāṁsi ranjanātmakāni kshity-ādi-loka-trayābhimānīny Agni-Vāyv-Āditya-rūpāṇi rajāṁsi vimame viśeshena nirmame | atra trayo lokāḥ api pṛithivī-śabda-vāchyāḥ | tathā cha mantrāntaram (R. V. i. 108, 9) 'yad Indrāgnī avamasyām pṛithivyām madhyamasyām paramasyām uta stha' iti | Taittirīye 'pi 'yo 'syām pṛithivyām asy āyushā' ity upakramya 'yo dvitīyasyāṁ tṛitīyasyām pṛithivyām' iti | tasmāl lokatrayasya pṛivithī-śabda-vāchyatvam | . . . . yadvā yo Vishṇuḥ pārthivāni pṛithivī-sambandhīni rajāṁsi adhastana-sapta-lokān vimame | . . . . rajaḥ-śabdo lokaḥ-vāchī 'lokāḥ rajāṁsy uchyante' iti Yāskenoktatvāt | . . . . athavā pārthivāni pṛithivī-nimittakāni rajāṁsi lokān vimame | bhūr-ādi-loka-trayam ity arthāḥ | bhūmyām upārjita-kārma-bhogārthatvād itara-lokānāṁ tat-kāraṇatvam |

"[The meaning is], Vishṇu who formed,—especially constructed,—the terrestrial [regions]; i.e., those connected with pṛithivī (the earth),—the regions (rajāṁsi),—the things whose nature is to delight (ranjanātmakāni),—existing in the form of Agni, Vāyu, and Āditya, who represent the three worlds, the earth, etc. Here all the three worlds are intended to be designated by the term pṛithivī. Thus another text [R. V. i. 108, 9] says: 'Whether, Indra and Agni, ye are in the lowest world (pṛithivī), in the middle [world], or in the highest,' etc. In the Taittirīya also, [we have the words] beginning with 'thou who with thy life art in this world,' etc.; [and proceeding] 'who in the second, or third world,' etc. Hence the three worlds are intended to be signified by the word pṛithivī. . . . Or, [the meaning may be], the Vishṇu who formed the terrestrial [regions], the regions connected with the earth, the seven worlds beneath the earth. The term rajas denotes a world, since Yāska says 'worlds are called rajāṁsi.' . . . . Or [the sense may be], he made the terrestrial regions, the worlds caused by the earth, i.e. the three worlds, the earth and the others. For as the other worlds are destined to be enjoyed as the rewards of merit acquired on earth, the latter is the cause of the former."

The following is the passage of the Nirukta, iv. 19, referred to by Sāyaṇa, which gives the meanings of rajas: Rajo rajateḥ | jyotiḥ rajaḥ uchyate | udakaṁ rajaḥ uchyate | lokāḥ rajāṁsy uchyante | asṛig[20]-ahanī rajasī uchyete | 'rajāṁsi chitrāḥ vicharanti tanyavaḥ' ity api nigamo bhavati |

"Rajas is derived from the root raj. Light is called rajas. Water is called rajas. The worlds are called rajāṁsi. [Blood and day, or] day and night, are called rajasī. There is also a text (R. V. v. 63, 5), 'Brilliant and resounding [the Maruts] sweep over the worlds.'"—See also Nir. x. 44, and xii. 23, and R. V. i. 90, 7.

In R. V. i. 164, 6, mention is made of six worlds (rājāṁsi): vi yas tastambha shaḷ imā rajāṁsi, "who established these six worlds."

The verb vimame cannot, I think, have the meaning, which the commentator assigns to it, of "constructing." It occurs not only in verse 1, of the hymn before us, but in verse 3 also, where it must have the sense of "measuring," or "traversing,"[21] as it could not fitly be said of Vishṇu that he constructed the firmament with three steps. The phrase rajaso vimānaḥ, "measurer of the world," occurs in R. V. x. 121, 5 (above p. 16), and in R. V. x. 139, 5, quoted in the third volume of this work, p. 260. In R. V. i. 50, 7, the participle vimimānaḥ seems to have the same sense: vi dyām eshi rajas pṛithv ahā mimāno aktubhiḥ | paśyan janmāni sūrya | "Sun, thou traversest the sky, measuring the broad space (rajas), and the days, with thy rays,[22] beholding created things."

The phrase rajaso vimānaḥ occurs also in R. V. iii. 26, 7 (=Vāj. S. 18, 66), where Agni says of himself that he is arkas tridhātuḥ rajaso vimānaḥ[23] | "the threefold light, the measurer of the world," which the commentator explains thus: tredhā ātmānam vibhajya tatra Vāyv-ātmanā rajaso 'ntarikshasya vimāno vimātā 'dhishṭhāta 'smi | "Triply

[20] Roth conjectures that the word asṛik here is spurious.—Illust. of Nir., p. 46.

[21] See Böhtlingk and Roth s. v. mā+vi.

[22] The word aktubhih is rendered "nights" by Yāska in his explanation of this passage, Nir. xii. 23, and by the commentator; but the latter explains the same word by raśmibhiḥ, "rays," in his annotation on R. V. i. 94, 5.

[23] This verse is explained in a spiritual sense in Nirukta Pariśishṭa ii. 1.

dividing myself, I am, in the character of Vāyu, he who abides in the atmosphere."

Compare, with the phrase before us, Habakkuk iii. 6: "He stood and measured the earth," etc.

I shall adduce one other passage R. V. v. 81, 3 (=Vāj. S. 11, 6), in which the same phrase occurs, where this function of measuring the world is ascribed to Savitṛi (the sun): Yasya prayāṇam anv anye id yayur devāḥ devasya mahimānam ojasā | yaḥ pārthivāni vimame sa etaśo rajāṁsi devaḥ Savitā mahitvanā | "He, the god whose course and whose might the other gods have followed with vigour, who measured [or traversed] the terrestrial regions by his power, this god Savitṛi is a steed."

This text is quoted and commented on in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, 6, 3, 1, 18: 'Yasya prayāṇam anv anye id yayur' iti | Prājāpatir vai etad agre karma akarot | tat tato devāḥ akurvan 'devāḥ devasya mahimānam ojasā' iti | yajno vai mahimā | devāḥ devasya yajnaṁ vīryam "ojasā" ity etad | 'yaḥ pārthivāni vimame sa etaśaḥ' iti | yad vai kincha asyāṁ tat pārthivam tad esha sarvaṁ vimimīte | raśmibhir hy enad abhyavatanoti | 'rajāṁsi devaḥ Savitā mahitvanā' iti | ime vai lokāḥ rajāṁsi | asāv Ādityo devaḥ Savitā | tān esha mahimnā vimimīte | "'Whose course the other gods have followed.' Prajāpati formerly performed this rite. The gods afterwards did it, [according to the words] 'the gods [followed] his [display of] power with vigour.' Power means sacrifice. This, [then, is said, that] the gods [followed] the sacrifice, the energy, of the god with vigour. 'He who measured out the terrestrial [regions] is a steed.' Whatever is on this [earth] is terrestrial. All this he measures out: for he stretches over [all] this with his rays. 'The god Savitṛi [measured out] the regions by his power.' These worlds are the regions: that Āditya (sun) is the god Savitṛi. He measures them out by his power."

The author of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa introduces the words pārthivāni vimame rajāṁsi, with a part of R. V. vii. 99, 2, at the close of his account of the Dwarf incarnation of Vishṇu, assigning to them, however (whether ignorantly, or knowingly), a different meaning from that which they have in the hymn,—Bhāg. Pur. viii. 23, 29: Pāram mahimnaḥ uru-vikramato gṛiṇāno yaḥ pārthivāni vimame sa rajāṁsi martyaḥ| kiṁ jāyamānaḥ uta jātaḥ upaiti martyaḥ ity āha mantradṛig ṛishiḥ puru-

shasya yasya | "The mortal who celebrates the utmost limits of this wide-striding (Vishṇu's) greatness, computes the [particles of the] dust of the earth. Can 'the mortal who is being born, or has been born,' attain to it? Thus speaks the ṛishi who saw a hymn regarding this Purusha."

This verse is explained by the commentator thus: Uru bahu vikramato Vishṇoḥ mahimnaḥ pārañ yo gṛiṇāno bhavati sa martyaḥ pārthivāni rajāñsy api vimame gaṇitavān | yathā pārthiva-paramāṇu-gaṇanam aśakyañ tathā Vishṇor guṇa-gaṇanam aśakyañ ity arthaḥ | tathā cha mantro 'Vishṇor nu kañ vīryāṇi' iti | etad eva mantrāntarārthañ sūchayann āha yasya purushasya pūrṇa-mahimnaḥ pāram mantra-dṛig ṛishir Vasishṭhaḥ ity evam āha | katham | kiñ jāyamāno jāto vā upaiti na ko' pi iti vadann anantatvena eva āha ity arthaḥ | tathā cha mantro 'na te Vishṇo jāyamāno na jāto 'deva mahimnaḥ param antam āpa' iti | "The mortal who celebrates the utmost limits of the greatness of the wide-striding Vishṇu, has computed also the particles of the dust of the earth. The meaning is, as the computation of the atoms of the earth is impossible, so also the enumeration of Vishṇu's qualities is impossible. Thus a hymn (R. V. 1, 154) says: 'I declare the heroic deeds of Vishṇu,' etc. Alluding to the sense of another verse (R. V. vii. 99, 2), he says the same thing in these words: 'regarding the utmost limit of the full greatness of which Purusha, Vasishṭha, the seer of the hymn, thus speaks:' How? 'Can any man being born, or already born, attain it?' No one. By this expression he intimates its infinitude. Thus the hymn says: No one who is being born, or has been born, has attained, O divine Vishṇu, to the furthest limit of thy greatness."

The sixth verse of the hymn before us is thus commented on in the Nirukta, ii. 6, 7: Sarve 'pi raśmayo gāvaḥ uchyante | . . . tāni vāñ vāstūni kāmayāmahe gamanāya yatra gāvo bhūri-śṛiṅgāḥ . . . ayāso 'yanāḥ | tatra tad urugāyasya Vishṇor mahāgateḥ paramam padam parārdhyastham avabhāti bhūri | "All rays are called gāvaḥ." Then, after quoting the verse, the author proceeds to explain it: "We desire to attain to those regions of you two, where are the many-horned cows, . . . the moving. There the highest abode, situated in the loftiest sphere, of that wide-stepping, large-pacing, Vishṇu shines forth brightly."

The verse is rendered thus, by Roth (Illustrations of Nir., p. 19): "May we arrive at your abodes, where the many-horned, moving, cattle are; for thence shines brilliantly down the highest place of the far-striding Showerer." Roth then proceeds to remark: "This verse occurs in a hymn to Vishṇu; consequently the dual vām ['of you two'] cannot refer to the deity of the hymn. Durga meets the difficulty, as the commentators frequently do with inconvenient duals, by saying vām iti dampātī abhipretya, etc. ['vām refers to the husband and his wife.'] But here we have rather a proof of the fact that, in the arrangement of the Veda, many verses have been inserted in wrong places. The verse is addressed to Mitra and Varuṇa; and, perhaps, belonged to one of the hymns to those two gods which immediately precede this in the Sanhitā. The verse has been introduced into the wrong place because Vishṇu is referred to in it. Compare verse 3. The inconvenient reading has been already altered in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (6, 3)," which, instead of tā vām vāstūny uśmasi gamadhyai, "we desire to go to these abodes of you two," etc., reads, yā te dhāmāny uśmasi, etc., "to which realms of thine we desire," etc., etc.

In the next hymn Indra and Vishṇu are jointly extolled:

R. V. i. 155.—Pra vaḥ pāntam[24] andhaso dhiyāyate mahe śūrāya Vishṇave cha archata | yā sānuni parvatānām adābhyā mahas tasthatur arvateva sādhunā | 2. Tvesham itthā samaraṇam[25] śimīvator Indra-Vishṇū suta-pāḥ vām urushyati | yā martyāya partidhīyamānam it kṛiśānor astur asanām urushyathaḥ | 3. Tāḥ īm vardhanti mahi asya pauṁsyaṁ ni mātarā nayati retase bhuje | dadhāti putro avaram param pitur nāma tṛitīyam adki rochane divaḥ | 4. Tat tad id asya pauṁsyaṁ gṛiṇīmasi inasya trātur avṛikasya mīḷhushaḥ | yaḥ pārthivāni tribhir id vigāmabhir uru kramishṭorugāyāya jīvase | 5. Dve id asya kramaṇe svardṛiśo abhikhyāya martyo bhuraṇyati | tṛitīyam asya nakir ā dadharshati vayaś chana patayantaḥ patatriṇaḥ | 6. Chaturbhiḥ sākaṁ navatincha nāmabhiś chakraṁ na vṛittaṁ vyatīn avīvipat | bṛihachchharīro vimimānaḥ ṛikvabhir yuvā 'kumārah pṛati eti āhavam |

"Sing praises to the great hero (Indra), who desires the draught of your soma, and to Vishṇu, who both swiftly rose invincible, to the summit of the [aerial] mountains, as if [carried by] an excellent steed. 2. Indra and Vishṇu, the drinker of the libation escapes the assault, so fierce, of you two who are violent,—who avert from the [pious] mortal that which is aimed at him,—the bolt of the archer Kṛiśānu. 3. These [libations, according to Sāyaṇa] augment his virility; he conducts the parents (heaven and earth) to receive the fertilizing seed; the son has the inferior name; the superior belongs to the father; the third is above the light of heaven. 4. We celebrate this virility of him, the strong, the deliverer, the innoxious, the bountiful, who with three steps traversed[26] far and wide the mundane regions, for the sake of [granting us] a prolonged (lit. wide-stepping) existence.[27] 5. A mortal is agitated when contemplating two of the steps of this heavenly [deity]; but no one dares to attempt his third step,[27*] not even the soaring, winged birds. 6. With four and ninety names, he has impelled his steeds, like a rolling wheel. Accoutred by his encomiasts, vast in body, the youthful, full-grown [deity], advances to the combat."

[24] Pāntam = pānīyaṁ.—Nir. vii. 25.

[25] Samaraṇaṁ s. = sangrāma-nāma.—Nigh. 2, 17.

R. V. 1, 156.—Bhava mitro na śevyo ghṛitāsutir vibhūta-dyumnaḥ evayāḥ u sapratháḥ | adha te Vishṇo vidushā chid ardhyaḥ stomo yajñaścha rādhyo havishmatā | 2. Yaḥ pūrvyāya vedhase navīyase sumajjānaye Vishṇave dadāśati | yo jātaṃ asya mahato mahi bravat sa id u śravobhir yujyaṃ chid abhi asat | 3. Tam u stotāraḥ pūrvyaṃ yathā vida ṛitasya garbhaṃ janushā pipartana | ā asya jānanto nāma chid vivaktana mahas te Vishṇo sumatim bhajāmahe | 4. Tam asya rājā Varuṇas tam Aśvinā kratuṃ sachanta mārutasya vedhasaḥ | dādhāra daksham uttamam aharvidaṃ vrajaṃ cha Vishṇur sakhivān apornute | 5. Ā yo vivāya sachathāya daivyaḥ Indrāya Vishṇuḥ sukṛite sukṛittaraḥ | vedhāḥ ajinvat trishadhasthaḥ āryam ṛitasya bhāge yajamānām ā bhajat |

"Be to us beneficent like a friend, worshipped with butter, greatly renowned, swiftly-moving, broadly diffused. Truly, Vishṇu, thy praise is to be celebrated by the sage, and sacrifice is to be performed to thee by the worshipper. 2. He who worships Vishṇu, the ancient, the disposer [or the wise], the recent, the [god] with the noble spouse,[28]—he who extols the nature of this mighty Being, shall excel [26] Compare R. V. i. 22, 17, 18 (above, p. 63, f.), and R. V. i. 154, 1, 3 (p. 69).

[27] Compare R. V. vi. 69, 5 (below).

[27*] See R. V. vii. 99, 1, below.

[28] Sāyaṇa gives two explanations of the word sumaj-jāni. The first makes it svayam evotpannāya, "born by his own power" (in proof of which sense he quotes Nir. vi. 22: Sumat svayam ity arthaḥ | "sumat means svayam, self"). The second meaning is thus stated: Sutarām māddyati iti sumat | tadṛiśī jāyā yasya sa . . . . | tasmai sarva-jagan-mādana-śīla-Śrī-pataye | "su-mat means 'greatly his friend[29] in renown. 3. Encomiasts, satisfy [with worship], as ye know how to do, him who, by his nature, is the primeval source of sacred rites. Knowing his name declare, 'Vishṇu, we enjoy the good will of thee, the mighty one.' 4. King Varuṇa and the Aśvins have done homage to the power of this ruler [or wise god] who is attended by the Maruts. Vishṇu possesses excellent wisdom, which knows the proper day;[30] and with his friends, opens up the cloud. 5. The divine Vishṇu, who has hastened to seek companionship with the beneficent Indra, [himself] more beneficent,—this wise [god], occupying three stations, has gratified the Ārya, and renders the worshipper a sharer in the sacred ceremony."

R. V. i. 164, 36 (A. V. 9, 10, 17; Nir. Par. ii. 21).—Sapta ardhagarbhāḥ bhuvanasya reto Vishṇos tishṭhanti pradiśā vidharmaṇi | te dhītibhir manasā te vipaścitaḥ paribhuvaḥ pari bhavanti viśvataḥ | "Seven embryos, the prolific sources of the world, abide by the command of Vishṇu in the function of supporting [the universe]. They by thought, and by mind, they intelligent, embracing, comprehend all things."

I do not attempt any explanation of this obscure and mystical utterance.

R. V. i. 186, 10.—Pro Aśvināv avase kṛiṇudhvam pra Pūshaṇaṁ svatavaso hi santi | advesho Vishṇur Vātaḥ Ṛibhukshāḥ achha sumnāya vavṛitīya devān | "Dispose the Aśvins, dispose Pūshan, to succour us, for they have power in themselves. Vishṇu is free from malice, and so is Vāta (Vāyu) and Ṛibhukshan. May I incline the gods to be favourable to us."

R. V. ii. 1, 3.—Tvam Agne Indro vṛishabhaḥ satām asi tvaṁ Vishṇur gladdening.' Sumaj-jāni then signifies 'one who has such a wife.' The phrase will thus mean, 'to the lord of S'rī, whose nature it is to gladden the world.'" Dr. Aufrecht thinks that jāni has always the sense of wife, and supposes the wife here alluded to to be the world. Prof. Roth, Illust. of Nir., p. 90, supposes sumat to be derived from su, and to mean "easily," "gladly."

[29] Compare the words yujyo vā sakhā vā in R. V. ii. 28, 10, where yujya is explained by Sāyaṇa as = yojana-samarthaḥ pitrādir vā; and R. V. i. 22, 19, where the same word yujya is said to be equivalent to anukūla, "friendly." Compare also ayuja in R. V. viii. 51, 2.

[30] See the interpretation of the word aharvid given by Sāyaṇa on R. V. i. 2, 2. In Böhtlingk and Roth's Dictionary the word is explained as signifying "long known."

urugāyo namasyaḥ | tvam brahmā rayivid Brahmaṇaspate tvaṁ vidhartaḥ sachase purandhyā | "Thou, Agni, art Indra, most energetic of heroes; thou art Vishṇu, the wide-stepping, the adorable; thou, Brahmaṇaspati, art a priest, possessor of wealth; thou, sustainer, art associated with sacred wisdom."

R.V. ii. 22,·1 (S.V. i. 457).—Trikadrukeshu mahisho yavāśiraṁ tuviśushmas tṛipat somam apibad Vishṇunā sutaṁ yathā 'vaśat | sa īm mamāda mahi karma kartave mahām uruṁ sa enaṁ saśchad devo devaṁ satyam Indraṁ satyaḥ Induḥ | "The great [Indra], of mighty force, satiating himself, has drunk the soma, mixed with barley-meal, poured forth by Vishṇu at the Trikadruka ceremony, as much as he desired. He [Soma] has stimulated the great and vast [god, Indra,] to achieve mighty acts. He, the god, the true Indu (Soma), has attended him, the god, the true Indra."

R.V. iii. 6, 4.—Mahān sadhasthe dhruve ā nishatto antar dyāvā māhine haryamāṇaḥ | āskre sapatnī ajare amṛikte sabardughe urugāyasya[31] dhenū | "The great [god, Agni,] is seated in his firm abode, beloved, between the mighty heaven and earth,—those two cows, joint-wives of the wide-stepping [god], united, undecaying, inviolable, dispensers of water." Agni himself may be the "wide-stepping god" intended here.

R. V. iii. 54, 14.—Vishṇuṁ stomāsaḥ puru-dasmam arkāḥ bhagasyeva kāriṇo yāmani gman | urukramaḥ kakuho yasya pūrvīr na mardhanti yuvatayo janitrīḥ | "Our hymns and praises have proceeded to Vishṇu, the worker of many wonders, like bards proceeding in the train of their lord. He is the wide-stepping, the exalted, whose [will] the numerous, youthful, mothers do not disregard."

R. V. iii. 55, 10.—Vishṇur gopāḥ[32] paramam pāti pāthaḥ[33] priyā dhāmāni amṛitā dadhānaḥ | Agnis tā viśvā bhuvanāni veda mahad devānām asuratvam ekam | "Vishṇu, a protector, preserves the highest heaven, sustaining the dear,[34] undecaying regions. Agni knows all these worlds: great and incomparable is the divine nature of the gods."

[31] Pṛithugamanasya adhika-stuter vā; Sāyaṇa, who names Agni as the god; though he makes heaven and earth to be the wives of the sun.

[32] Compare R. V., i. 22, 18. The word Vishṇu is here regarded by the commentator as an epithet of Agni, and rendered by "pervading." The hymn is, however, according to the Anukramaṇikā, one addressed to all the gods.

[33] Pāthaḥ occurs also in R. V. i. 154, 5. See above.

[34] Or, "vast." The commentator renders the word priya by aparimita, "unmeasured," in his note on R. V. iii. 32, 7.

R. V. iv. 2, 4.—Aryamaṇaṁ Varuṇam Mitram eshām Indrā-Vishṇū Maruto Aśvinā uta | su-aśvo Agne su-rathaḥ su-rādhāḥ ā id u-vaha su-havishe janāya | "Agni, [do thou, who hast] beautiful steeds, a beautiful car, and [bestowest] rich gifts, bring to the pious worshipper from among these [gods], Aryaman, Varuṇa, Mitra, Indra and Vishṇu, the Maruts, and the Aśvins" (comp. R. V. vii. 39, 5, below).

R. V. iv. 3, 7.—Kathā mahe pushṭim-bharāya Pūshṇe kad Rudrāya sumakhāya havir-de | kad Vishṇave uru-gāyāya reto[35] bravaḥ kad Agne Sarave bṛihatyai | "Why, Agni, [shouldst thou declare our sin] to the great supplier of nourishment, Pūshan? why to Rudra, the vigorous, the giver of oblations? why shouldst thou declare our sin to the wide-stepping Vishṇu? why to the great Śaru (Nirṛiti?)."

R. V. iv. 18, 11.—Uta mātā mahisham anvavenad amī tvā jahati putra devāḥ | Atha abravīd Vṛitram Indro hanishyan sakhe Vishṇo vitaraṁ vikramasva | "And his mother sought to draw back the mighty [Indra], saying, 'My son, those gods forsake thee.' Then Indra, being about to slay Vṛitra, said, 'Friend Vishṇu, do thou stride vastly.'"

The last words of this verse form the commencement of the 12th verse of the 89th hymn of the 8th Maṇḍala, which I shall introduce here.

R. V. viii. 89, 12.—Sakhe Vishṇo vitaraṁ vikramasva dyaur dehi lokaṁ vajrāya vishkabhe | hanāva Vṛitraṁ riṇachāva sindhūn Indrasya yantu prasave visṛishṭāḥ | "'Friend Vishṇu, stride vastly;' Sky, give room for the thunderbolt to descend; let us slay Vṛitra, and let loose the waters; let them, when released, flow by the impulse of Indra."[36]

[35] Dr. Aufrecht suggests that the original reading here may have been repas = āgas, "sin." But as the text stands he would connect retas with śarave, so as to give the sense, "our sin (understood), which is the occasion for the great arrow of destruction." Böhtlingk and Roth render retas by "libation."

[36] The Taittirīya Sanhitā, ii. 4, 12, 2, has the following story about Indra and Vishṇu: Tasmād Indro 'bibhed api Tvashṭā | Tvashṭā tasmai vajram asinchat | tapo vai sa vajraḥ āsīt | tam udyantuṁ na aśaknot | atha vai tarhi Vishṇur anyā devatā āsīt | so 'bravīd "Vishṇav ehi idam āharishyāvo yena ayam idam" iti | sa Vishṇus tredhā ātmānam vinyadhatta pṛithivyāṁ tṛitīyam antarikshe tṛitīyaṁ divi tṛitīyam | abhiparyāvartād hy abibhet | yat pṛithivyāṁ tṛitīyam āsīt tena Indro vajram udayachhad Vishṇv-anushṭhitaḥ | so 'bravīd "mā me prahāḥ | asti vai idam mayi vīryam | tat te pradāsyāmi" iti | tad asmai prāyachhat | tat pratyagṛihṇāt | "adhāḥ mā" iti tad Vishṇaye 'tiprāyachhat | tad Vishṇuḥ pratyagṛihṇād "asmāsv Indraḥ indriyaṁ dadhātv" iti | yad antarikshe tṛitīyam āsīt tena Indro vajram udayachhad Vishṇv-anushṭhitaḥ | so 'bravīd "mā me prahāḥ | asti vai idam mayi vīryam | tat

R. V. iv. 55, 4.—Vi Aryamā Varuṇaś cheti panthām ishas-patiḥ suvitaṁ gātum Agniḥ | Indrā-Vishṇū nṛi-vad u shu stavānā śarma no yantam amavad varūtham | "'Aryaman and Varuṇa know the path; so too Agni, the lord of strength [knows] a prosperous road. Indra and Vishṇu, when ye are lauded, according to human ability, bestow on us prosperity and strong protection."

R. V. v. 3, 1–3.—Tvam Agne Varuṇo jāyase yat tvam Mitro bhavasi yat samiddaḥ | tve viśve sahasas-putra devās tvam Indro dāśushe mart-

te pradāsyāmi" iti | tad asmai prāyachchhat | tat pratyagṛihṇāt | "dvir mā adhāḥ" iti tad Vishṇave atiprāyachhat | tad Vishṇuḥ pratyagṛihṇād "asmāsv Indraḥ indriyaṁ dadhātv" iti | yad divi tṛitīyam āsīt tena Indro vajram udayachhad Vishṇv-anushṭhitaḥ | so 'bravīd mā me prahāḥ | yena aham idam asmi "tat te pradāsyāmi" iti | "tvī" ity abravīt | "sandhāṁ te sandadhāvahai | tvām eva praviśāni" iti | "yan mām praviśeḥ kim mā bhunjyāḥ" ity abravīt | "tvām eva indhīya tava bhogāya tvām praviśeyam" ity abravīt | taṁ Vṛitraḥ prāviśat | udaraṁ vai Vṛitraḥ | kshut khalu vai manushyasya bhrātṛivyaḥ | yaḥ evaṁ veda hanti kshudham bhrātṛivyam | tad asmai prāyachhat | tat pratyagṛihṇāt | "trir mā 'dhāḥ" iti tad Vishṇave 'tiprāyachhat | tad Vishṇuḥ pratyagṛihṇād "asmāsv Indraḥ indriyaṁ dadhātv" iti | yat triḥ prāyachhat triḥ pratyagṛihṇāt tat tridhātos tridhātutvam | yad Vishṇur anvatishṭhata Vishṇave 'tiprāyachhat tasmād Aindrāvaishṇavaṁ havir bhavati| "Indra was afraid of him, as was also Tvashṭṛi. Tvashṭṛi moistened for him the thunderbolt: it was heat or austere-fervour (tapas). He could not lift it. Now there was another deity, Vishṇu. Indra said: 'Come, Vishṇu, we two will take that whereby he is this [which he is].' Vishṇu divided himself into three parts, [placing] one on earth, a second in the air, and a third in the sky. For he was afraid of [Vṛitra's] development (abhiparyāvartāt: yasmād asya Vṛitrasya abhiparyāvartāt sarva-dig-vyāpi-rūpāyāḥ vriddher ayam Indro 'bibhet, Comm.). With the third [of Vishṇu] which was on the earth, Indra lifted the thunderbolt, followed by Vishṇu. Vṛitra said, 'Do not smite me: there is in me this energy: that I will give to thee.' He gave, and Indra took it, and passed it on to Vishṇu, [saying,] 'Thou hast supported me.' Vishṇu received it, [saying], 'May Indra impart energy to us.' Indra then lifted the thunderbolt with the third [of Vishṇu] which was in the air," etc., as before. 'Indra passed it on to Vishṇu, saying, 'Thou hast twice supported me,'" etc. "Indra then, followed by Vishṇu, lifted the thunderbolt with the third [of Vishṇu] which was in the sky. Vṛitra said, 'Do not smite me; I will give thee that whereby I am that [which I am].' Indra agreed. 'Let us make an agreement; let me enter into thee' [said Vṛitra]. 'If thou enterest me, wilt thou eat me?' [replied Indra]. 'I will kindle thee; I will enter thee for thy enjoyment' [answered Vṛitra]. He accordingly entered into him. Vṛitra is the belly. Hunger is man's enemy. He who knows this slays his enemy. So Vṛitra gave Indra [that whereby he was what he was]. Indra took it, [and saying,] 'Thou hast thrice supported me,' passed it on to Vishṇu," etc., etc., as before. "From the circumstance that the one god gave, and the other took [what was given], thrice, the 'tridhātu' derives its character. And from the fact that Vishṇu followed Indra, and the latter passed on [what he had received] to the former, there is an oblation called 'Aindrāvaishṇava,' i.e. common to both the gods."

yāya | 2. Tvam Aryamā bhavasi yat kanīnām nāma svadhāvan guhyam bibharshi | anjanti mitraṁ sudhitaṁ na gobhir yad dampatī samanasā kṛiṇoshi | 3. Tava śriye Maruto marjayanta[37] Rudra yat te jamina chāru chitram | padaṁ yad Vishṇor upamaṁ nidhāyi tena pāsi guhyaṁ nāma gonām |

"Thou, Agni, [art] Varuṇa, when thou art born; thou art Mitra when thou art kindled: son of strength, in thee [reside] all the gods; thou art Indra to the man who sacrifices. 2. Thou art Aryaman when thou, self-sustaining, possessest the mysterious name of the maidens. Men anoint thee, like a benevolent friend, with milk, when thou makest the husband and wife to be of one mind. 3. For thy glory, Rudra, [or, terrible Agni], the Maruts have adorned themselves, such is that beautiful and wondrous birth of thine.[38] Through that which has been fixed as the highest abode of Vishṇu, thou possessest the mysterious name of the cows."

R.V. v. 46, 2–4 (=Vāj. S. 33, 48, 49).—Agne Indra Varuṇa Mitra devāḥ śardhaḥ pra yanta Māruta uta Vishṇo | ubhā Nāsatyā Rudro adha gnāḥ Pūshā Bhagaḥ Sarasvatī jushanta | 3. Indrāgnī Mitrā-Varuṇā Aditiṁ svaḥ pṛithivīṁ dyām Marutaḥ parvatān apaḥ | huve Vishṇum Pūshaṇam Brahmaṇaspatim Bhagaṁ nu śaṁsaṁ Savitāram ūtaye | 4. Uta no Vishṇur uta Vāto asridho draviṇodāḥ uta Somo mayas karat | uta Ṛibhavaḥ uta rāye no Aśvinā uta Tvashṭā uta Vibhvā anu maṁsate |

2. "Agni, Varuṇa, Mitra, ye gods, give us strength, and thou Vishṇu with the Maruts. Both the Aśvins, Rudra, and the wives of the deities, with Pūshan, Bhaga, and Sarasvatī, are pleased. 3. I invoke Indra and Agni, Mitra and Varuṇa, Aditi, Heaven, Earth, Sky, the Maruts, the Mountains, the Waters, Vishṇu, Pūshan, Brahmaṇaspati; I praise Bhaga and Savitṛi, that they may succour us. 4. And may Vishṇu, and the Wind, uninjuring, and Soma, the bestower of riches, give us happiness. And the Ṛibhus, Aśvins, Tvashṭṛi, and Vibhvan are favourable to us, so as to [grant us] wealth."

R.V. v. 51, 9.—Sajūr Mitrā-Varuṇābhyāṁ sajoḥ Somena Vishṇunā | ā yāhi Agne Atri-vat sute raṇa | "Associated with Mitra and Varuṇa, [37] Compare R. V. vii. 3, 5.

[38] This refers, Dr. Aufrecht suggests, to the production of lightning in the air at the time of a storm.

associated with Soma and Vishṇu, come Agni, and rejoice in our libation, as [in that of] Atri."

R. V. v. 87, 1 (S. V. i. 462).—Pra vo mahe matayo yantu Vishṇave Marutvate girijāḥ evayāmarut | pra śardhāya prayajyave sukhādaye tavase bhandad-ishṭaye dhuni-vratāya śavase | . . . . 4. Sa chakrame mahato nir uru-kramaḥ samānasmāt sadasaḥ evayāmarut | yadā ayukta tmanā svād adhi shṇubhir vishpardhaso vimahaso jigāti śevṛidho nṛibhiḥ | . . . . 8. Advesho ṇo Maruto gātum ā itana śrota havaṁ jaritur evayāmarut | Vishṇor mahaḥ samanyavo yuyotana smad rathyo na daṁsanā apa dveshāṁsi sanutaḥ |

"May your hill-born (or, voice-born) hymns proceed to the great Vishṇu, attended by the Maruts, O Evayāmarut, (swiftly-moving Marut?); and to the troop [of Maruts], impetuous, wearing beautiful rings, strong, rushing on exultingly,—to that power which delights in resounding. . . 4. The wide-striding [god] strode forth from the great common abode, O Evayāmarut; when by himself he has yoked his emulous and vigorous [steeds], he issues from his own [abode] with his swift heroes, augmenting our felicity. . . . 8. Maruts, come in a friendly spirit to our song, hear the invocation of your worshipper, Evayāmarut; of the same mind with the great Vishṇu, like men riding in chariots, drive our enemies away far from us by your might."

The hymn from which these verses are taken is quoted and translated in Prof. Benfey's Glossary to the Sāma-veda, p. 39 f.

R. V. vi. 17, 11.—Vardhān yaṁ viśve Marutaḥ sajoshāḥ pachat śatam mahishān Indra tubhyaṁ | Pūshā Vishṇus trīṇi sarāṁsi dhāvan vṛitra-hanam madiram aṁśum asmai | "For thee, Indra, whom all the Maruts, in concert, will magnify, Pūshan and Vishṇu cooked a hundred buffaloes. For him three lakes discharged the Vṛitra-slaying, exhilarating soma."[39]

[39] To illustrate the last line, Dr. Aufrecht has pointed out to me another passage, R. V. viii. 66, 4: Ekayā pratidhā 'pibat sākam sāraṁsi triṁśatam | Indraḥ somasya kāṇukā | "Indra swallowed at one draught thirty lakes of Soma. . . ." This verse is quoted in Nir. v. 11. I have not attempted to translate the difficult word kāṇukā, at the close. See Roth's Illust. of Nir. p. 60, f. In a review of Pictet's Origines Indo-Européennes, vol. ii, in Kuhn und Schleicher's Beiträge zur Vergl. Sprachforschung, iv. 279, f., Prof. Weber refers to this passage. "Saras, a pond," he says, "in the sense of cup (R. V. viii. 66, 4. . . .), which reminds us of the 'weltmeer' (world-ocean) of our students,' is no doubt merely a poetical metaphor." See also R. V. vii. 103, 7; viii. 7, 10." In R.V. v. 29, 7 f., Agni is said to have cooked three hundred buffaloes for Indra, who ate them, and drank three lakes of soma, when proceeding to fight with Vṛitra.

R. V. vi. 20, 2.—Divo na tubhyaṁ anu Indra satrā asuryaṁ devebhir dhāyi viśvam | Ahiṁ yad Vṛitram apo vavṛivāṁsaṁ hann ṛijīshin Vishṇunā sachānaḥ | "All divine power, like that of the Sky, was completely communicated to thee, Indra, by the gods,[40] when thou, O impetuous [deity], associated with Vishṇu, didst slay Vṛitra Ahi, stopping up the waters."

R.V. vi. 21, 9.—Pra ūtaye Varuṇam Mitram Indraṁ Marutaḥ krishva avase no adya | pra Pūshaṇaṁ Vishṇum Agnim Purandhiṁ Savitāram oshudhīḥ parvatāṁścha | "Dispose to-day to our help and succour Varuṇa, Mitra, Indra, the Maruts, Pūshan, Vishṇu, Agni, Purandhi, Savitṛi, the plants and the mountains."

R. V. vi. 48, 14.—Taṁ vaḥ Indram na sukratuṁ Varuṇam iva māyinam | Aryamaṇaṁ na mandraṁ śṛipra-[41]bhojasaṁ Vishṇuṁ na stushe ādiśe | "I praise thee, of great power like Indra, wondrous in might like Varuṇa, pleasant like Aryaman, conferring large enjoyment like Vishṇu, that thou mayest bestow wealth."[42]

R.V. vi. 49, 13.—Yo rajāṁsi vimame[43] pārthivāni triś chid Vishṇur Manave bādhitāya | tasya te śarmann upadadyamāne rāyā madema tanvā tanā cha | "May we, ourselves and our offspring, be gladdened by wealth, under the protection afforded by thee, that Vishṇu who thrice traversed the mundane regions for Manu [or the Āryan man] when he was oppressed."[44]

R. V. vi. 50, 12.—Te no Rudraḥ Sarasvatī sajoshāḥ mīḷhushmanto Vishṇur mṛiḷantu Vāyuḥ | Ribhukshāḥ Vājo daivyo vidhātā Parjanyāvātā pipyatām ishaṁ naḥ | "May these dispensers of blessings, Rudra, Sarasvatī, Vishṇu, and Vāyu together be gracious to us. May Ṛibhukshan, Vāja, the divine Vidhātṛi (or disposer), Parjanya and Vāta replenish our store of nutriment."

[40] Stotṛibhiḥ, "worshippers," according to Sāyaṇa.

[41] The word śṛipra occurs also in R. V. i. 96, 3; i. 181, 3; iii. 18, 5; iv. 50, 2; viii. 25, 5; and viii. 32, 10 = S. V. i. 217. By Yāska, Nir. vi. 17, it is derived from the root śṛip, "to go" (see Roth's Illust., p. 83); and is rendered by Sāyaṇa sarpaṇa-śīla, "going," prasṛita, "extended," etc. (See also Benfey's Glossary to the S. V.) The word viśva-bhojasam occurs in the preceding verse vi. 48, 13.

[42] Such is the sense assigned to ādiś by Sāyaṇa: in Wilson's Sanskrit Dictionary I find the word pradeśana rendered "a gift or offering, anything given to the gods, superiors, or friends," etc.

[43] Tribhir eva vikramaṇaiḥ parimitavān | "measured with three strides."—Sāyaṇa. Compare R. V. i. 154, 1, above (p. 69, ff.), and vii. 100, 4, below (p. 87).

[44] Asurair hiṁsitāya | "injured by Asuras."—Sāyaṇa.

R. V. vi. 69, 1–8.—Saṁ vāṁ karmaṇā sam ishā hinomi Indrā-Vishṇū apasas pāre asya | jushethāṁ yajnaṁ draviṇaṁ cha dhattam arishṭair naḥ pathibhiḥ pārayantā | 2. Yā viśvāsāṁ janitārā matīnām Indrā-Vishṇū kalaśā soma-dhānā | pra vāṁ giraḥ śasyamānāḥ avantu pra stomāso gīyamānāso arkaiḥ | 3. Indrā-Vishṇū mada-patī madānām ā somaṁ yātaṁ draviṇo dadhānā | saṁ vām anjantu aktubhir matīnāṁ saṁ stomāsaḥ śasyamānāsaḥ ukthaiḥ | 4. Ā vām aśvāso abhimāti-shāhaḥ Indrā-Vishṇū sadhamādo vahantu | jushethāṁ viśvā havanā matīnām upa brahmāṇi śṛiṇutaṁ giro me | 5. Indrā-Vishṇū tat panayāyyaṁ vāṁ somasya made uru chakramāthe | akṛiṇutam antarikshaṁ varīyo aprathataṁ jīvase no rajāṁsi | 6. Indrā-Vishṇū havishā vāvṛidhānā agrādvānā namasā rātahavyā | ghṛitāsutī draviṇaṁ dhattam asme samudraḥ sthaḥ kalaśaḥ somadhānaḥ | 7. Indrā-Vishṇū pibatam madhvo asya somasya dasrā jaṭharam pṛiṇethām | ā vām andhāṁsi madirāṇi agmann upa brahmāṇi śṛiṇutaṁ havam me | 8. (A. V. 7, 44, 1) Ubhā jigyathur na parā jayethe na parā jigye kataraśchanainoḥ | Indraścha Vishṇo yad apaspṛidhethāṁ tredhā sahasraṁ vi tad airayethām |

"Indra and Vishṇu, I stimulate you twain with this rite and oblation: at the conclusion of this ceremony do ye accept our sacrifice, and grant us wealth, conducting us to our object by secure paths. 2. Indra and Vishṇu, ye who are the generators of all prayers, and are, [as it were,] the bowls which hold the soma-juice, may the words which are now recited gratify you, and the hymns which are sung with praises. 3. Indra and Vishṇu, ye two lords of exhilarating draughts, come to the soma-juice, bringing with you wealth; may the hymns uttered with praises anoint you[45] twain with the unguents of our prayers. 4. Indra and Vishṇu, may your steeds, vanquishing foes, and sharing in your triumph, bear you hither. Accept all the invocations of our hymns, and hear my devotions and prayers. 5. Indra and Vishṇu, this deed of you twain is worthy of celebration, that, in the exhilaration of the soma-juice, ye took vast strides;[46] ye made the atmosphere wide, and stretched out the worlds, for our existence.[46a] 6. Indra and Vishṇu, gladdened by our oblation, ye to whom are due the first draughts of the soma, ye to whom offerings should be presented with reverence, and to whom butter is offered, bring us wealth, for ye are the ocean, the bowl in which the soma is held. 7. Indra and Vishṇu, workers of wonders, drink this sweet potion; fill your bellies with soma; the exhilarating soma-draughts have reached you; hear my prayers and invocation. 8. Ye two have both conquered, and are not vanquished. Neither of these twain has been vanquished. Vishṇu, when thou and Indra strove, ye scattered thrice a thousand [of your foes]."[47]

[45] Compare R. V. iii. 17, 1.

[46] The commentator remarks on this: Yadyapi Vishṇor eva vikramas tathāpy ekārthatvād ubhayor ity uchyate | "'Though 'striding' is an act of Vishṇu only, yet it is so [described as here] owing to both gods having one end in view." In R. V. vii. 99, 6 (see below), the epithet urukrama, "far-stepping," is applied in the same way to both these deities. In the Harivansa, 7418, it is applied to S'iva.

R. V. vii. 35, 9 (=A. V. xix. 10, 9).—S'aṁ no Aditir bhavatu vratebhiḥ śaṁ no bhavantu Marutaḥ su-arkāḥ | śaṁ no Vishṇuḥ śaṁ u Pūshā no astu śaṁ no bhavitraṁ śaṁ u astu Vāyuḥ | "May Aditi be propitious to us with her acts: may the well-hymned Maruts be propitious to us: may Vishṇu, may Pūshan, may the Air,[48] may Vāyu, be propitious to us."

[46a] Comp. i. 155, 5, above.

[47] The commentator explains this as follows. Yad yad vastu praty apaspridhethāṁ asuraiḥ saha aspridhethāṁ tredhā loka-veda-vāgātmanā tridhā sthitaṁ sahasram amitaṁ cha vi tad airayethāṁ vyakramethām ity arthaḥ | tathā cha brāhmaṇam ubhā jigyathur ity achchhāvākasya | ubhau hi tau jigyathur na parājayethe na parājigye iti na hi tayoḥ kataraśchana parājigye 'Indraś cha Vishṇo yad apaspridhethāṁ tredhā sahasraṁ vi tad airayethām' iti | Indraś cha ha vai Vishṇuś cha asurair yuyudhāte tān ha sma jitvā ūchatuḥ "kalpāmahai" iti | te ha tathā ity asurāḥ ūchuḥ | so 'bravīd Indro "yāvad evāyaṁ Vishṇus trir vikramate tāvad asmākam atha yushmākam itarad" iti | sa imān lokān vichakrame 'tho vedān atho vācham | tad āhuḥ "kiṁ tat sahasram" iti "ime lokāḥ ime vedāḥ atho vāg" iti brūyāt | "airayethām airayethām" ity achchāvākaḥ ukthye 'bhyasyati | Ait. Br. 6, 15 (see Prof. Haug's translation, pp. 403, f.). "In reference to whatever thing ye two strove, i.e. strove with the Asuras, over that, in its three characters, i.e. as existing in its character of world, Veda, and speech, and in number a thousand, and immeasurable, ye strode. Thus a Brāhmaṇa [the Aitareya, 6, 15,] says: 'ye both conquered; this is what the Achhāvāka priest [repeats]: for ye both conquered, ye are not vanquished, neither was vanquished, for neither of these two was vanquished' [the last line of the verse before us is then cited]. Indra and Vishṇu fought with the Asuras. Having conquered them, they said, let us divide [the world]. The Asuras said, be it so. Indra said, As much as this Vishṇu strides over in three strides, so much shall be ours; the rest yours. He strode over these worlds, then the Vedas, then speech. When people say, what is that thousand? let him say, These worlds, these Vedas, then speech. The Achhāvāka priest repeats at the Ukthya ritual, ye scattered, ye scattered.'" Comp. Taitt. S. vii. 1, 5, 5.

[48] The word bhavitra is explained by Sāyaṇa as = bhuvanam antarikshaṁ udakaṁ vā. "The world, or the atmosphere, or water." The word, Dr. Aufrecht informs me, does not occur again in the Vedas.

R. V. vii. 36, 9.—Achha ayaṁ vo Marutaḥ ślokaḥ etu achha Vishṇuṁ nishikta-pāṁ śravobhir ityādi | "Maruts, may this hymn reach you: may it [reach] Vishṇu, the preserver of embryos, with its eulogies," etc.

R. V. vii. 39, 5.—Ā Agne giro divaḥ ā pṛithivyāḥ Mitraṁ vaha Varuṇam Indram Agnim | Ā Aryamāṇam Aditiṁ Vishṇum eshāṁ Sarasvatī Maruto mādayantām | "Agni, from heaven and earth bring Mitra, Varuṇa, Indra, Agni, Aryaman, Aditi, Vishṇu to the hymns of these persons;[49] may Sarasvatī and the Maruts be gratified."

R. V. vii. 40, 5.—Asya devasya mīḷhusho vayāḥ Vishṇor eshasya[50] prabhṛithe havirbhiḥ | vide hi Rudro rudriyaṁ mahitvaṁ yāsishṭaṁ vartir Aśvināv irāvat | "The branches of this prolific and rapid deity Vishṇu [are to be worshipped?] with oblations at the offering. For Rudra possesses impetuous power. The Aśvins have come to our place of sacrifice which is provided with food."[49]

R. V. vii. 44, 1.—Dadhikrāṁ vaḥ prathamam Aśvinā Ushasam Agniṁ samiddham Bhagam ūtaye huve | Indraṁ Vishṇum Pūshaṇam Brahmaṇaspatim Ādityān dyāvā-pṛithivī apaḥ svaḥ | "I invoke you for succour, first Dadhikrā, the Aśvins, Ushas, the kindled Agni, Bhaga, Indra, Vishṇu, Pūshan, Brahmaṇaspati, the Ādityas, Heaven and Earth, the Waters, the Sky."

R. V. vii. 93, 8.—Etāḥ Agne āśushāṇāsaḥ ishṭīr yuvoḥ sachā abhi aśyāma vājān | mā Indro no Vishṇur Marutaḥ parikhyann ityādi | "Breathing forth these petitions, may we, O Agni [and Indra], with [the help of] you twain, obtain food. Let not Indra, Vishṇu, and the Maruts despise us," etc.

[49] Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. esha, conjecture that in this verse the correct reading is eshāṁ, "the rapid," as an epithet of Vishṇu, and not eshām.

[50] Sāyaṇa interprets the first words of the verse before us thus, Vishṇoḥ sarvadevātmakasya asya devasya anye devāḥ vayāḥ śākhāḥ iva bhavanti | "Other gods are, as it were, branches of this god, who is the soul of all the gods." He explains eshasya as follows: Prabhṛithe havirbhir. havī-ṁṛūpair annaiḥ eshasya prāpraṇīyasya, "one who can be brought by oblations of food." The same epithet esha is applied to Vishṇu in the other two following passages referred to in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon under this word. R.V. ii. 34, 11.—Tān vo ṁnaho Marutaḥ evayāvno Vishṇor eshasya prabhṛithe havāmahe | ityādi | "At the offering of the rapid Vishṇu we invoke you, the great, and impetuous Maruts," etc. R. V. viii. 20, 3.—Vidma hi Rudriyāṇāṁ śushmam ugram Marutām śimīvatām | Vishṇor eshasya mīḷhushām | "For we know the fiery vigour of the sons of Rudra, the impetuous Maruts, of the rapid Vishṇu, [all of them] prolific."

R. V. vii. 99, 1.—Paro mātrayā[51] tanvā vṛidhāna na te mahitvam anu aśnuvanti | ubhe te vidma rajasī pṛithivyāḥ Vishṇo deva tvam paramasya vitse | 2. Na te Vishṇo jāyamāno na jāto deva mahimnaḥ param antam āpa | ud astabhnāḥ nākam ṛishvaṁ bṛihantaṁ dādhartha prāchīṁ kakubham pṛithivyāḥ | 3 (=Vāj. S. v. 16). Irāvatī dhenumatī hi bhūtaṁ suyavasinī manushe[52] daśasyā | Vi astabhnāḥ rodasī Vishṇo ete dādhartha pṛithivīm abhito mayūkhaiḥ | 4. Uruṁ yajnāya chakrathur u lokaṁ janayantā Sūryam Ushasam Agnim | dāsasya chid vṛishaśiprasya māyāḥ jaghnathur narā pṛitanājyeshu | 5. Indrā-Vishṇū dṛiṁhitāḥ S'ambarasya nava puro navatiṁ cha śnathishṭam | śataṁ varchinaḥ sahasraṁ cha sākaṁ hatho aprati asurasya vīrān | 6. Iyam manīshā bṛihatī bṛihantā urukramā tavasā vardhayantī | rāre vāṁ stomaṁ vidatheshu Vishṇo pinvatam iśho vṛijaneshu Indra | 7. (S. V. 2, 977; Taitt. Sanh. ii. 2, 12, 4) Vashaṭ te Vishṇo āsaḥ ā kṛiṇomi tad me jushasva S'ipivishṭa havyam | vardhantu tvā sushṭutayo giro me yūyam pāta svastibhiḥ sadā naḥ |

"Thou who, with thy body, growest beyond our measure, [men] do not attain to thy greatness: we know both thy two regions of the earth; thou, divine Vishṇu, knowest the remotest [world].[52*] 2. No one, O divine Vishṇu, who is being born, or who has been born, knows the furthest limit of thy greatness. Thou didst prop up the lofty and vast sky; thou didst uphold the eastern pinnacle of the earth.[53] 3. [Ye two worlds,] be ye abundant in food, cows, and pastures, through beneficence to man. Vishṇu, thou didst prop asunder these two worlds; thou didst envelope the earth on every side with beams of light. 4. Ye (Indra and Vishṇu) have provided ample room for the sacrifice, producing the sun, the dawn, and fire. Ye, O heroes, destroyed in the battles the wonderful powers of the hostile (dāsa) Vṛishaśipra. 5. Indra and Vishṇu, ye smote the ninety-nine strong cities of Sambara; together, ye slew, unopposed, a thousand and a hundred heroes of the Asura Varchin. 6. This great hymn gladdens you twain, the great, the wide-striding, the powerful; Vishṇu and Indra, I present to you twain a hymn at the sacrifices. Supply abundant nutriment in our habitations. 7. Vishṇu, I utter to thee this invocation from my mouth.

[51] Compare paro-mātram ṛishīsha(ṇa)m Indram; R. V. viii. 57, 1.

[52] Yajur-veda v. 16 reads manave.

[52*] Comp. R. V. i. 155, 5, above, p. 74.

[53] Compare Isaiah xl. 22 xlv. 12, 18.

Śipiviṣṭa,[54] favourably receive this my oblation. May my laudatory hymns delight thee: do you always preserve us with blessings."

R. V. vii. 100.—Nu 'marto dayate sanishyan yo Vishṇave urugāyāya dāśat | pra yaḥ satrāchā manasā yajāte etāvantaṁ naryam āvivāsāt | 2. Tvaṁ Vishṇo sumatiṁ viśvajanyām aprayutām evayāvo matiṁ dāḥ | parcho yathā naḥ suvitasya bhūrer aśvāvataḥ puruśchandrasya rāyaḥ | 3. Trir devaḥ pṛithivīm eshaḥ etāṁ vi chakrame śatarchasam mahitvā | pra Vishṇur astu tavasas tavīyān tveshaṁ hi asya sthavirasya nāma | 4. Vi chakrame pṛithivīm eshaḥ etāṁ kshetrāya Vishṇur manushe daśasyan | dhruvāso asya kīrayo janāsaḥ 'urukshitiṁ sujanimā chakāra | 5. (S. V. 2, 976; Taitt. S. ii. 2, 12, 5; Nir. 5, 9.) Pra tat te adya Śipiviṣṭa nāma aryaḥ śaṁsāmi vayunāni vidvān | taṁ tvā gṛiṇāmi tavasam atavyān kshayantam asya rajasaḥ parāke | 6. (S. V. 2, 975; Taitt. S. ii. 2, 12, 5; Nir. 5, 8.) Kim it te Vishṇo parichakshyaṁ bhūt[55] pra yad vavakshe Śipiviṣṭo asmi | mā varpo asmad apa gūha etad yad anyarūpaḥ samithe babhūtha | (The seventh verse is repeated from the last hymn.)

"That man never repents who, seeking [for good], brings offerings to Vishṇu, the wide-stepping, who worships him with his whole heart, and propitiates such a powerful [god]. 2. Vouchsafe to us, swiftly-moving Vishṇu, thy benevolence, which embraces all mankind, thy unpreoccupied regard; that thou mayest grant us abundant good, and brilliant wealth, with horses. 3. Thrice the swift god by his greatness has traversed this earth with its hundred lights. May Vishṇu the strongest prevail over the strong: for awful is the name (nature) of that immovable [being]. 4. The swift Vishṇu traversed the earth to bestow it for a habitation on Manu [or man]. The men who praise him are secure: [the god] of exalted birth has given them an ample abode. 5. I, a devoted worshipper, who know the sacred rites, to-day celebrate this thy name, Śipiviṣṭa; I, who am weak, laud thee who art strong, and dwellest beyond this lower world. 6. What, Vishṇu, hadst thou to blame, that thou declaredst, 'I am Śipiviṣṭa'? Do not conceal from us this form, since thou didst assume another shape in the battle."[56]

[54] See the note on this word where it occurs in the hymn next following.

[55] The Sāma-veda reads parichakshi nāma.

[56] The following illustration of this verse is quoted by Professor Benfey from the commentary on the corresponding passage of the S. V.: Purā khalu Vishnuḥ svaṁ

R. V. viii. 9, 12.—Yad Indreṇa saratham yātho Aśvinā yad vā Vāyunā bhavathaḥ samokasā | yad Ādityebhir Ṛibhubhiḥ sajoshasā yad vā Vishṇor vikramaṇeshu tishṭhathaḥ | "When, Aśvins, ye ride in the same car with Indra, or when ye dwell in the same abode with Vāyu, or when ye are associated with the Ādityas and the Ṛibhus, or when ye abide in the strides of Vishṇu."

rūpam parityajya kṛitrimaṁ rūpāntaraṁ dhārayan saṅgrāme Vasishṭhasya sāhāyyaṁ chakāra | taṁ jānann ṛishir anayā pratyāchashṭe | "Vishṇu formerly abandoning his own form, and assuming another artificial shape, succoured Vasishṭha in battle. Recognizing the god, the ṛishi addresses him with this verse." In Nir. v. 8 and 9, Yāska quotes verses 5 and 6 of the hymn before us in inverse order. After telling us (v. 7) that, "according to Aupamanyava, Vishṇu has two names, S'ipivishṭa, and Vishṇu, of which the former has a bad sense" (S'ipivishṭo Vishṇur iti Vishṇor dve namanī bhavataḥ | kutsitārthīyam pūrvam bhavati ity Aupamanyavaḥ), Yāska quotes verse 6, on which he observes: Kiṁ te Vishṇo 'prakhyātam etad bhavaty aprakhyāpanīyaṁ yan na prabrūshe | ḍepaḥ iva nirveshṭito 'smi ity apratipanna-raśmiḥ | api vā praśaṁsā-nāmaiva abhipretaṁ syāt | kiṁ te Vishṇo prakhyātam etad bhavati prakhyāpanīyaṁ yad uta prabrūshe | S'ipivishṭo 'smi iti pratipanna-raśmiḥ | śipayo 'tra raśmayaḥ uchyante | tair āvishṭo bhavati | mā varpo asmad apagūha etat | varpaḥ iti rūpa-nāma . . . . | yad anya-rūpaḥ saṁithe saṅgrāme bhavasi saṁyata-raśmiḥ | "What, Vishṇu, is this undeclared thing of thine, not to be declared, which thou tellest not? 'I am enveloped like a private member,' i.e. with rays obscured. Or, by S'ipivishṭa a laudatory appellation may be intended; 'what is this declared thing of thine, which is to be declared, that thou tellest?' 'I am S'ipivishṭa, i.e. one whose rays are displayed.' The word 'śipi' here means 'rays;' with these he is pervaded. 'Do not conceal this form:' varpas is a word meaning 'form.' . . . . 'That thou art of another form in the battle (samithe=saṅgrāme), with thy rays withheld.'" See Taitt. S., vol. ii., p. 585. On v. 5, Yāska remarks: Nir. v. 9: "Tat te 'dya S'ipivishṭa nāma aryaḥ śaṁsāmi" | aryo 'ham asmi īśvaraḥ stomānām | aryas tvam asi iti vā | taṁ tvā staumi tavasam atavyāṁs tavasaḥ iti mahato nāmadheyam udito bhavati | nivasantam asya rajasaḥ parāke parākrānte | "'I, a master, to-day celebrate this thy name, S'ipivishṭa.' I am aryaḥ, a master of praises. Or, thou art a master. 'I, weak, praise thee, the strong.' Tavasa is a word used for 'great.' 'Dwelling beyond (parāke=parākrānte) this lower world.'" From the above quotation, it appears that even in the time of Yāska, the sense of the word S'ipivishṭa was uncertain. In the Mahābhārata, S'āntiparva, vv. 13229, ff., Kṛishṇa is introduced as explaining the sense of the word thus (if the writer intended to represent Yāska as the Vedic ṛishi by whom the word was first applied to Vishṇu, he could not have been a particularly good Vedic scholar): S'ipivishṭeti chākhyāyāṁ hīnaromā cha yo bhavet | tenāvishṭaṁ tu yat kinchich Chhipivishṭeti cha smṛitaḥ | Yāsko māṁ ṛishir avyagro naika-yajneshu gītavān | S'ipivishṭaḥ 'smi iti hy asmād guhya-nāmadharo hy aham | stutvā māṁ S'ipivishṭeti Yāskaḥ sarshiḥ udāra-dhīḥ | mat-prasādād adho nashṭam Niruktam abhijagmivān | "A bald man is designated by the word S'ipivishṭa. Anything which is penetrated by that is called S'ipivishṭa. Yāska, the serene ṛishi, celebrated me at many sacrifices. In consequence of this, I bear the mysterious name of S'ipivishṭa. Yāska, that ṛishi of large understanding, having lauded me as S'ipivishṭa, recovered by my favour the Nirukta, which had been destroyed."

R. V. viii. 10, 2.— . . . . Bṛihaspatiṁ Viśvāndevān ahaṁ huve Indrā-Vishṇū Aśvināv āśu-heshasā | "I invoke Bṛihaspati, the Viśvedevas, Indra and Vishṇu, and the Aśvins with quickly neighing steeds."

R. V. viii. 12, 16 (=S. V. i. 384; A. V. 20, 111, 1).—Yat somam Indra Vishṇavi yad vā gha Trite Āptye | yad vā Marutsu mandase sam indubhiḥ | . . . 25. Yad Indra pṛitanājye devās tvā dadhire puraḥ | ād it te haryatā harī vavakshatuḥ | 26. Yadā Vṛitraṁ nadī-vṛitaṁ śavasā vajrinn abadhīḥ | ād id ityādi | 27. Yadā te Vishṇur ojasā trīṇi padā vichakrame | ād id ityādi |

"Whether, Indra, thou [drinkest] soma along with Vishṇu, or with Trita Āptya, or with the Maruts art exhilarated by libations. . . . . 25. When, Indra, the gods placed thee in their front in the battle, then thy dear steeds waxed strong. 26. When, thunderer, thou didst by thy might slay Vṛitra, who stopped up the streams, then thy dear steeds grew strong. 27. When by thy force Vishṇu strode three steps, then thy dear steeds waxed strong."

R. V. viii. 15, 8 (=S. V. 2, 996, f.; A. V. 20, 106, 26).—Tava dyaur Indra pauṁsyam pṛithivī vardhati śravaḥ | tvām āpaḥ parvatāsaś cha hinvire | 9. Tvāṁ Vishṇur bṛihan kshayo[57] Mitro gṛiṇāti Varuṇaḥ | tvāṁ śardho madati anu mārutam | 10. Tvaṁ vṛishā janānām maṁhiṣṭhaḥ Indra jajnishe | satrā viśvā su-apatyāni dadhishe |

8. "Indra, the sky augments thy manhood, and the earth thy renown. The waters and the mountains stimulate thee. 9. Vishṇu, who dwells on high, Mitra, and Varuṇa celebrate thee; the troop of Maruts follows thee with exultation. 10. Of all beings, thou, Indra, hast been born the most bountiful hero; thou hast made all things altogether prolific."

R. V. viii. 25, 11.—Te no nāvam urushyata divā-naktaṁ sudānavaḥ | arishyanto ni pāyubhiḥ sachemahi | 12. Aghnate Vishṇave vayam arishyantaḥ sudānave | śrudhi svayāvan sindho pūrva-chittaye | 13. (Nir. v. 1) Tad vāryam vṛiṇīmahe variṣṭhaṁ gopayatyam | Mitro yat pānti Varuṇo yad Aryamā | 14. Uta naḥ siṇdhur apāṁ tad Marutas tad Aśvinā | Indro Vishṇur mīḍhvāṁsaḥ sajoshasaḥ |

[57] Benfey, in his translation of the Sama-veda, renders kshaya by "king." Roth, in his Lexicon, thinks this sense is not established, and renders the words bṛihan kshayaḥ by "high abode, i.e. heaven, or those who dwell in the high abode, the gods." He also conjectures that the correct reading in this passage may be bṛihat-kshayaḥ, "who dwells on high."

"Do ye, bountiful [gods], preserve our bard[58] night and day. May we, free from injury, receive your protection. 12. Free from injury, we [offer praise] to the innocuous, and bountiful Vishṇu. Listen, O self-moving Ocean, [to us] as your first thought. 13. We desire that excellent treasure, worthy to be guarded, which Mitra, Varuṇa, and Aryaman possess. 14. And may the Ocean of waters, may the Maruts, may the Aśvins, Indra, and Vishṇu, all of them prolific, associated together, [bestow] that upon us."

R. V. viii. 27, 8.—Ā prayāta Maruto Vishṇo Aśvinā Pūshan mākīnayā dhiyā | Indraḥ āyātu prathamaḥ sanishyubhir vṛishā yo vṛitrahā griṇe | "Come hither, ye Maruts, Vishṇu, Aśvins, Pūshan, at my hymn. May Indra come the first, he who is celebrated by those who desire [his blessing], as the vigorous, the slayer of Vṛitra."

The following hymn, in the seventh verse of which Vishṇu is mentioned, is interesting from the manner in which the various characteristics of the different gods are succinctly described:

R. V. viii. 29, 1 ff.—Babhrur eko vishuṇaḥ sūnaro yuvā anjī ankte hiraṇyayaṁ | 2. Yonim ekaḥ ā sasāda dyotano antar deveshu medhiraḥ | 3. Vāśīm eko bibharti haste āyasīm antar deveshu nidhruviḥ | 4. Vajram eko bibharti haste āhitaṁ tena vṛitrāṇi jighnate | 5. Tigmam eko bibharti haste āyudhaṁ śuchir ugro jalāsha-bheshajaḥ | 6. Pathaḥ ekaḥ pīpāya taskaro yathā esha veda nidhīnām | 7. Trīṇi ekaḥ urugāyo vi chakrame yatra devāso madanti | 8. Vibhir dvā charataḥ ekayā saha pra pravāsā iva vasataḥ | 9. Sado dvā chakrāte upamā divi saṁrājā sarpirāsutī | 10. Archantaḥ eke mahi sāma manvata tena sūryam arochayan |

"One[59] is a youth, brown, variable,[60] active. A golden lustre invests him. 2. Another,[61] luminous, has seated himself on the place

[58] Dr. Aufrecht tells me that the word nāvam is so accented that it cannot mean "ship." He regards it as a masc. noun from the root nu, "to praise;" and assigns to it the sense of "bard," or "hymn." That there is such a word as nāva is proved by its occurrence in R. V. ix. 45, 5: Induṁ nāvāḥ anūshata | where it must mean "the bards, or hymns, celebrated Indu."

[59] Soma, as the moon, according to the commentator. M. Langlois thinks the sun is meant. Dr. Aufrecht thinks the troop of Maruts, Marud-gaṇa, may be meant, to whom, he remarks, the epithet babhru, "dark-brown, tawny," is as applicable as it is to their master, Rudra, to whom it is frequently given.

[60] Böhtlingk and Roth understand vishuṇa of the changing phases of the moon.

[61] Agni, according to the commentator. Atra yonim iti lingād Agnir uchyate | of sacrifice, wise, amidst the gods. 3. Another[62] holds in his hand an iron axe, steadfast, among the gods. 4. Another[63] holds the thunderbolt poised in his hand, with which he slays his enemies. 5. Another,[64] bright, fiery, possessing healing remedies, holds a sharp weapon in his hand. 6. Another[65] watches the roads like a robber: he knows the treasures. 7. Another,[66] wide-stepping, strode three [strides, in the regions] where the gods rejoice. 8. Two [others][67] ride on birds (horses) with one [goddess]: they dwell afar, as if abroad. 9. Two [others],[68] the highest, have made their abode in the sky, monarchs, worshipped with butter. 10. Some, worshipping, have meditated a great sāma-hymn, by which they have caused the sun to shine."

R. V. viii. 31, 10.—Ā śarma parvatānām vriṇīmahe nadīnām ā Vishṇoḥ sachā-bhuvaḥ | "We seek for protection from the mountains, the rivers, and Vishṇu who is associated with them."

R. V. viii. 35, 1, 14.—1. Agninā Indreṇa Varuṇena Vishṇunā Ādityaiḥ Rudrair Vasubhiḥ sachā-bhuvā | sajoshasā Ushasā Sūryeṇa cha somam pibatam Aśvinā | 14. Angirasvantā uta Vishṇuvantā Marutvantā jaritur gachhatho havam ityādi | "Aśvins, drink the soma-juice, united with Agni, Indra, Varuṇa, Vishṇu, the Ādityas, Rudra, the Vasus, and associated with Ushas and Sūrya. 14. Attended by Angiras, by Vishṇu, and by the Maruts, you come at the invocation of your worshipper."

R. V. viii. 66, 10.—Viśvā it tā Vishṇur ābharad urukramas tvā ishitaḥ | śatam mahishān kshīra-pākam odanaṁ varāham Indra emusham| "The wide-striding Vishṇu, urged by thee, O Indra, carried off all [these things], a hundred buffaloes, broth cooked with milk, and a fierce (?) hog."

This verse is considered by Dr. Aufrecht to contain an allusion to [62] Tvashṭṛi. [63] Indra.

[64] Rudra. Compare R. V. i. 43, 4, where Rudra is named, and the same epithet, jalāsha-bheshaja, is applied to him, and R. V. vii. 35, 6, where he is called jalāsha, "healing."

[65] Pūshan. [66] Vishṇu.

[67] The Aśvins. In various passages of the R. V., the daughter of the Sun is said to ride on the car of the Aśvins. See the account of these deities in the fifth volume of this work. In R. V. v. 73, 5, the goddess is called Sūryā.

[68] Mitra and Varuṇa.

some myth (also referred to in R. V. i. 61, 7, quoted in p. 67), in which Vishṇu appears to have been represented as carrying off cattle, a hog, and other provisions for the use of Indra. Compare Professor Wilson's note (d) on R. V. i. 61, 7. The same story may be alluded to in R. V. vi. 17, 11, above, p. 81. See also the note there.

Sāyaṇa gives two explanations of the verse (viii. 66, 10), that of the Nairuktas or etymologists, and that of the Aitihasikas or recorders of legends. I cite the latter only. The story there told is the same as I have already cited above (pp. 39 f.) from the Taittirīya Sanhitā; but it is here given in a different and conciser version. Part of the following quotation consists of Sāyaṇa's own application of two Vedic texts, R.V. i. 61, 7, quoted above, p. 67, and viii. 66, 10, which has just been given.

Aitihāsika-pakshe | charaka-brāhmaṇe itihāsaḥ āmnāyate | "Vishṇur yajnaḥ | sa devebhyaḥ ātmānam antaradhāt | tam anya-devatāḥ na avindan | Indras tv avet | sa Indram abravīt 'ko bhavān' iti | tam Indraḥ pratyabravīd 'aham durgāṇām asurāṇāṁ cha hantā | bhavāṁs tu kaḥ' iti | so 'bravīd 'aham durgād āhartā | tvam tu yadi durgāṇām asurāṇāṁ cha hantā tato 'yaṁ varāho vāmā-mushaḥ ekaviṁśatyāḥ purām pāre 'śmanmayīnāṁ vasati | tasminn asurāṇāṁ vasu vāmam asti | tam imaṁ jahi' iti | tasya Indras tāḥ puro bhittvā hṛidayam avidhyat | adhi tatra yad āsīt tad Vishṇur āharad" iti | so 'yam itihāso "asya id u mātuḥ savaneshu" "viśvā it tā Vishṇur" ity ābhyām pratipāditaḥ | tayor madhye "asya id u mātur" ity atra Vishṇunā "he Indra tvam 'durgāṇāṁ hantā' ity ātmānaṁ kathayasi tarhi vāma-mushaṁ varāham asuraṁ jahi" ity uktārtho "vidhyad varāham" iti pādena pratipāditaḥ | Indreṇa cha 'Vishṇo tvaṁ "durgād āhartā" iti brūshe | mayā purāṇi jitāny asuraś cha ghātitas tasya vāmaṁ vasv ānaya' ity ukto Vishṇu-mūrtis tasya Varāhāsurasya dhanam mumosha | so 'rtho "mushāyad Vishṇuḥ pachatam" iti pādena sūchitaḥ | ka kim punar mushitavān iti tad atra uchyate "viśvā it tā" iti |

"On the part of the Aitihāsikas a story is recorded in the Charaka Brāhmaṇa (i.e. the Brāhmaṇa of the Black Yajur Veda): 'Vishṇu is the sacrifice. He withdrew himself from the sight of the gods. The other gods did not discover him; but Indra knew [where he was]. He said to Indra, Who art thou? Indra replied, I am the destroyer of castles, and Asuras; but who art thou? He said, I am he who removes [the spoil] from the castle: but if thou art the destroyer of castles and Asuras, then this Varāha, a plunderer of goods, dwells on the other side of twenty-one stone ramparts; in him abide the wealth and property of the Asuras: slay him. Indra broke through these ramparts, and pierced his heart; and Vishṇu carried off all that was found there.' This story is set forth in the two verses, the one beginning 'Having at the libations,' etc. (R. V. i. 61, 7), and 'The wide-striding Vishṇu,' etc. (viii. 66, 10). In the fourth quarter of the first of these verses the words 'pierced the boar' (Varāha) refer to the clause of this story in which Vishṇu says, 'Thou, Indra, callest thyself a destroyer of castles; slay then the Asura Varāha, the plunderer of goods.' The third quarter of the same verse, 'the impetuous Vishṇu stole the cooked mess,' alludes to the other clause of the story in which the being in the form of Vishṇu, being addressed by Indra in the words, 'Vishṇu, thou callest thyself the being who carries off goods from the castle. I (Indra) have conquered the castles and slain the Asura; now, therefore, bring the treasures plundered, the property of the Asura Varāha.' But what was it that he plundered? That is declared in the words, the wide-striding Vishṇu, etc. (viii. 66, 10)." The verse is then explained. The story in the Brāhmaṇa seems to be made up from the obscure hints in the hymns.

R. V. viii. 72, 7 (=Vāj. S. 33, 47).—Adhi na Indra eshāṁ Vishṇo sajātyānām | ita Maruto Aśvinā | "Remember, Indra, Vishṇu, Maruts, Aśvins, us thy kinsmen."

R. V. ix. 33, 3 (S. V. 2, 116).—Sutāḥ Indrāya Vāyave Varuṇāya Marudbhyaḥ | somāḥ arshanti Vishṇave | "The soma-draughts poured forth, hasten to Indra, Vāyu, Varuṇa, the Maruts, and to Vishṇu."

R. V. ix. 34, 2.—Sutaḥ Indrāya Vāyave Varuṇāya Marudbhyaḥ | somo arshati Vishṇave | "The soma hastens to Indra, Vāyu, Varuṇa, the Maruts, and Vishṇu."

R. V. ix. 56, 4.—Tvam Indrāya Vishṇave svādur Indo pari srava | nṛīn stotṛīn pāhi aṁhasaḥ | "Indu, do thou flow, sweet, to Indra, to Vishṇu. Preserve from sin the men who praise thee."

R. V. ix. 63, 3.—Sutaḥ Indrāya Vishṇave somaḥ kalaśe akṣharat | madhumān astu Vāyave | "The soma, when poured forth, flowed into the vessel for Indra, for Vishṇu. May it be honied for Vāyu."

R. V. ix. 65, 20 (S. V. 2, 345).—Apsāḥ Indrāya Vāyave Varuṇāya Marudbhyaḥ | somo arshati Vishṇave | "Pouring forth streams, the soma hastens to Indra, Vāyu, Varuṇa, the Maruts, and to Vishṇu."

R. V. ix. 90, 5.—Matsi Soma Varuṇam matsi Mitram matsi Indram Indo pavamāna Vishṇum | matsi śardho Mārutam matsi devān matsi mahām Indram Indo madāya | "Soma, Indu, purified, thou exhilaratest Varuṇa, thou exhilaratest Mitra, thou exhilaratest Indra, thou exhilaratest Vishṇu, thou exhilaratest the troop of the Maruts, thou exhilaratest the gods, and the great Indra, that they may be merry."

R. V. ix. 96, 5 (=S. V. ii. 293).—Somaḥ pavate janitā matīnāṁ janitā divo janitā pṛithivyāḥ | janitā Agner janitā Sūryasya janitā Indrasya janitā uta Vishṇoḥ | "Soma is purified [he who is] the generator of hymns, the generator of the Sky, the generator of the Earth, the generator of Agni, the generator of Sūrya, the generator of Indra, and the generator of Vishṇu."

This verse is quoted, and thus explained in the Nirukta-pariśishṭa, ii. 12: Somaḥ pavate | somaḥ sūryaḥ prasavanāt | janitā matīnāṁ prakāśa-karmaṇām āditya-raśmīnāṁ divo dyotana-karmaṇām āditya-raśmīnāṁ pṛithivyāḥ prathana-karmaṇām āditya-raśmīnāṁ Agner gati-karmaṇām āditya-raśmīnāṁ Sūryasya svīkaraṇa-karmaṇām āditya-raśmīnāṁ Indrasya aiśvarya-karmaṇām āditya-raśmīnāṁ Vishṇor vyāpti-karmaṇām āditya-raśmīnāṁ ity adhidaivatam | atha adhyātmam | somaḥ ātmā apy etasmād eva indriyāṇāṁ janitā ity arthaḥ | api vā sarvābhir vibhūtibhir vibhūtata (?) ātmā ity ātma-gatim ācashṭe | "Soma is purified. Soma is 'sūrya' (the sun), from generating (prasavanāt). He is the generator of hymns (or thoughts), i.e. of those solar rays whose function it is to reveal; of the Sky, i.e of those solar rays whose function it is to shine; of the Earth, i.e. of those solar rays whose function it is to spread; of Agni, i.e. of those solar rays whose function it is to move; of Sūrya, i.e. of those solar rays whose function it is to appropriate (svīkaraṇa); of Indra, i.e. of those solar rays whose function is sovereignty; of Vishṇu, i.e. of those solar rays whose function is diffusion: such is the mythological explanation. Now follows the spiritual interpretation, i.e. that which refers to soul. Soma is also the soul; and for this cause he is the generator of the senses: such is the meaning. Or, he thus declares the course of the soul, that it is variously modified by all its changing manifestations."

R. V. ix. 166, 6 (=S. V. ii. 366),—Pavasva vāja-sātamaḥ pavitre dhārayā sutaḥ | Indrāya Soma Vishṇave devebhyo madhumattamaḥ | "Soma, be purified, dispenser of strength, poured out in a stream into the filter, for Indra, for Vishṇu, for the gods, most honied."

R. V. x. 1, 3.—Vishṇur itthā paramam asya vidvān jāto bṛihann abhi pāti dṛitīyam | āsā yad asya payo akrata svaṁ sachetaso abhi achanti atra | "Vishṇu, knowing thus his (Agni's) highest [birth-place], when born, the great being, protects his third [birth-place, on earth]. Men unanimously worship him here, when they offer him their libation face to face."[69]

R. V. x. 65, 1.—Agnir Indro Varuṇo Mitro Aryamā Vāyuḥ Pūshā Sarasvatī sajoshasaḥ | Ādityāḥ Vishṇur Marutaḥ Svar bṛihat Somo Rudro Aditir Brahmaṇaspatiḥ | "Agni, Indra, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, Vāyu, Pūshan, Sarasvatī, associated together, the Ādityas, Vishṇu, the Maruts, the great Sky, Soma, Rudra, Aditi, Brahmaṇaspati."

R. V. x. 66, 4, 5.—Aditir dyāvā-pṛithivī ṛitam mahad Indrā-Vishṇū Marutaḥ Svar bṛihat | devān Ādityān avase havāmahe Vasūn Rudrān Savitāraṁ sudaṁsasam | 5. Sarasvān dhībhir Varuṇo dhṛita-vrataḥ Pūshā Vishṇur mahimā Vāyur Aśvinā | brahma-kṛito ṁmṛitāḥ viśva-vedasaḥ śarma no yaṁsan trivarūtham aṁhasaḥ |

"We invoke Aditi, Heaven and Earth, the great Ceremonial, Indra and Vishṇu, the Maruts, the great Sky, the divine Ādityas, to our succour, the Vasus, Rudras, and Savitṛi, the wonder-working. 5. May Sarasvat, through our prayers, may Varuṇa, whose ordinances are fixed, Pūshan, Vishṇu, the great Power, Vāyu, the Aśvins, the immortals, offerers of prayer, possessors of all wealth, grant us a triple protection from evil."

R. V. x. 92, 11.—Te hi dyāvā-pṛithivī bhūri-retasā Narāśāṁsaś chaturango Yamo 'ditiḥ | devas Tvashṭā Draviṇodāḥ Ṛibhukshaṇaḥ pra rodasī Maruto Vishṇur arhire | "The prolific Heaven and Earth, the four-limbed Narāśansa, Yama, Aditi, the god Tvashṭṛi, Draviṇodas, the Ṛibhukshans, the two worlds, the Maruts, Vishṇu have been honoured."

R. V. x. 113, 1.—Tam asya dyāvā-pṛithivī sachetasā viśvebhir devair anu śushmam āvatām | yad ait kṛiṇvāno mahimānam indriyam pītvī somasya kratumān avardhata | 2. Tam asya Vishṇur mahimānam ojasā[69*]

[69] See above p. 66 f.; and the fifth volume of this work, p. 207.

[69*] The same combination of words, mahimānam ojasā, occurs in R. V. v. 81, 3, above, p. 72.

aṁśuṁ dadhanvān madhuno vi rapśate | devebhir Indro maghavā sayāvabhir Vṛitraṁ jaghanvān abhavad varenyaḥ | "The concordant heaven and earth, with all the gods, have stimulated that vigour of his. When he went on displaying his energetic greatness, drinking the soma, the powerful god exulted. 2. Vishṇu, in his might, bringing the soma plant, [the source of] his greatness, is full of the honied juice. Indra, the opulent, with the gods attending, having slain Vṛitra, became distinguished."

R. V. x. 128, 2 (A. V. 5, 33).—Mama devāḥ vihave santu sarve Indravanto Maruto Vishṇur Agnir ityādi | "May the gods all attend on my invocation, the Maruts with Indra, Vishṇu, Agni," etc.

R. V. x. 141, 3 (Vāj. S. 9, 26; A. V. 3, 20, 4).—Somaṁ rājānam avase 'gniṁ gīrbhir havāmahe[70] | Ādityān Vishṇuṁ Sūryam brahmāṇancha Bṛihaspatim | . . . 5c (Vāj. S. 9, 27; A. V. 3, 20, 7.) Aryamaṇam Bṛihaspatim Indraṁ dānāya chodaya | Vātaṁ Vishṇuṁ Sarasvatīṁ Savitārancha vājinam | "We invoke with hymns king Soma, to our aid, and the Ādityas, Vishṇu, Sūrya, and the priest Bṛihaspati. 5. Excite Aryaman, Bṛihaspati, Indra, to generosity, and Vāta, Vishṇu, Sarasvatī, and Savitṛi, the heroic."

R. V. x. 181, 1.—Prathaś cha yasya Saprathaś cha nāma ānushṭubhasya havisho havir yat | Dhātur dyutānāt Savituś cha Vishṇoḥ rathantaram ā jabhāra Vasishṭhaḥ | 2. Avindan te atihitaṁ yad āsīd yajnasya dhāma paramaṁ guhā yat | Dhātur dyutānād Savituś cha Vishṇor Bharadvājo bṛihad ā chakre Agneḥ | 3. Te 'vindan manasā dīdhyānāḥ yajuḥ skannam prathamaṁ devayānam | Dhātur dyutānād Savituś cha Vishṇor ā Sūryād abharan gharmam ete |

"Vasishṭha has received from the shining Dhātṛi, from Savitṛi, and from Vishṇu, the Rathantara, that which is the offering of the fourfold sacrifice, whereof Prathas and Saprathas are the names. 2. These [sages] discovered what was very far removed, the supreme and secret abode of sacrifice. Bharadvāja has received the Bṛihat from the shining Dhātṛi, from Savitṛi, from Vishṇu, and from Agni. 3. Contemplating with their minds, these [sages] discovered the descended Yajush, the first path to the gods. From the shining Dhātṛi, Savitṛi, Vishṇu, Sūrya, they brought down Gharma."

R. V. x. 184, 1 (=A. V. 5, 25, 5).—Vishṇur yoniṁ kalpayatu Tvashṭā

[70] The Vājasaneyi Sanhitā reads anvārabhāmahe instead of gīrbhir havāmahe.

rūpāṇi piṁśatu | ā sinchatu Prajāpatir Dhātā garbhaṁ dadhātu te | "Let Vishṇu form the womb; let Tvashṭṛi mould the forms; let Prajāpati infuse [the seminal principle]; let Dhātṛi form the embryo."

SECT. II.—Subordinate position occupied by Vishṇu in the hymns of the Rig-veda as compared with other deities.

The preceding passages are all, or nearly all, which the Rig-veda contains regarding Vishṇu. In my remarks on R. V. i. 22, 16 ff. (above p. 64 ff.), I have quoted the opinions of two of the most ancient interpreters of the Veda, Śākapūṇi and Aurṇavābha, on the character of Vishṇu. The former regards him as a god who, in what are called his three strides, is manifested in a threefold form, as Agni on earth, as Indra or Vāyu in the atmosphere, and as the Sun in heaven. The second writer, Aurṇavābha, on the other hand, interprets Vishṇu's three strides as the rising, culmination, and the setting of the sun. These three strides are also noticed, as we have seen above, in R. V. i. 154, 1, 2, 3, 4; i. 155, 4, 5; vi. 49, 13; vii. 100, 3, 4; viii. 29, 7; while in other places (R. V. ii. 1, 3; iii. 54, 14; iv. 3, 7; iv. 18, 11; viii. 89, 12; v. 3, 3; v. 87, 4; viii. 9, 12; viii. 66, 10; x. 1, 3) the epithet "wide-stepping," or "wide-striding," is either applied to this deity, or, at least, some allusion is made to this function, or to this god's station in the heavens. In R. V. vi. 69, 5, and vii. 99, 6, Indra is associated with Vishṇu as taking vast strides.

As the peculiar divine office of Vishṇu, indicated by his three steps, stages, or stations, was differently understood by the oldest interpreters whose opinions have been handed down to us, it is natural to suppose that it was not so clearly defined or understood as the functions of some of the other gods, as Agni and Indra for example. But the specific character of many, I may say most, of the Vedic gods is far from being distinctly determined in the hymns.

Some other acts of even a higher character are attributed to Vishṇu. In R. V. i. 154, 1, 2; vii. 99, 2, 3, he is said to have established the heavens and the earth, to contain all the worlds in his strides; in R. V. vi. 69, 5, and vii. 99, 4, to have, with Indra, made the atmosphere wide, stretched out the worlds, produced the sun, the dawn and fire; in R. V. i. 156, 4, to have received the homage of Varuṇa; while in R. V. vii. 99, 2, his greatness is described as having no limit within the ken of present or future beings. The attributes ascribed to Vishṇu in some of these passages are such that, if these latter stood alone in the Rig-veda, they might lead us to suppose that this deity was regarded by the Vedic Rishis as the chief of all the gods. But, as we have already seen, Indra is associated with Vishṇu even in some of those texts in which the latter is most highly magnified (as R. V. i. 155, 1 ff.; vi. 69, 1 ff.; vii. 99, 4 ff.; viii. 15, 10); nay, in one place (R. V. viii. 12, 27), the power by which Vishṇu takes his three strides is described as being derived from Indra; in R. V. iv. 18, 11, vi. 20, 2, and viii. 89, 12, he is the associate of Indra; in another text (R.V. viii. 15, 9), Vishṇu is represented as celebrating Indra's praises; while, in R. V. ix. 96, 5, Vishṇu is said to have been generated by Soma.

It is also a fact, notorious to all the students of the Rig-veda, that the hymns and verses which are dedicated to the praises of Indra, Agni, Mitra, Varuṇa, the Maruts, the Aśvins, etc., are extremely numerous; whilst the entire hymns and separate verses in which Vishṇu is celebrated are much fewer, and have all, or nearly all, been adduced in the preceding pages.

The reader will also have noticed that, in a large number of shorter passages which I have cited, Vishṇu is introduced as the subject of laudation among a great crowd of other divinities, from whom he is there in no way distinguished as being in any respect superior. From this fact, we may conclude that he was regarded by those writers as on a footing of equality with the other deities.

Further, the Rig-veda contains numerous texts in which the Ṛishis ascribe to Indra, Varuṇa, and other gods, the same high and awful attributes and functions which are spoken of in the hymns before cited as belonging to Vishṇu. I shall quote a sufficient number of these texts to show that, in the Rig-veda, Vishṇu does not hold a higher rank than several of these other divinities. If, on the other hand, we look to the large number of texts, in which, as I have just stated, some of the other gods are celebrated, and to the comparatively small number of those in which Vishṇu is exclusively or prominently magnified, we shall come to the conclusion that the latter deity occupied a somewhat subordinate place in the estimation and affections of the ancient rishis.

I shall first adduce a number of passages in which divine attributes and functions of the highest character are ascribed to Indra.[71]

R. V. i. 7, 3—Indro dīrghāya chakshase ā sūryaṁ rohayad divi ityādi | "Indra has raised up the sun in the sky to be seen from afar," etc.

R. V. i. 52, 8.— . . . . ayachhathāḥ bāhvor vajram āyasam adhārayo divi ā sūryaṁ dṛiśe | . . . . 12. Tvam asya pāre rajaso vyomanaḥ svabhūty-ojāḥ ajase dhṛishan-manaḥ | chakṛishe bhūmim pratimānam ojasaḥ apaḥ svaḥ paribhūr eshi ā divam | 13. Tvam bhuvaḥ pratimānam pṛithivyāḥ ṛishva-vīrasya bṛihataḥ patir bhūḥ | viśvam ā aprāḥ antarikśam mahitvā satyam addhā nakir anyas tvāvān | 14. Na yasya dyāvā-pṛithivī anu vyacho na sindhavo rajaso antam ānaśuḥ | nota svavṛishṭim made asya yudhyataḥ eko anyach chakṛishe viśvam ānushak |

"Thou hast grasped in thine arms the iron thunderbolt; thou hast placed the sun in the sky to be viewed. . . . . 12. [Dwelling] on the further side of this atmospheric world, deriving thy power from thyself, daring in spirit, thou, for our advantage, hast made the earth, the counterpart[72] of [thy] energy; encompassing the waters and the sky, thou reachest up to heaven. 13. Thou art the counterpart of the earth, the lord of the lofty sky, with its exalted heroes. Thou hast filled[73] the whole atmosphere with thy greatness. Truly there is none other like unto thee.[74] 14. Whose vastness neither heaven and earth have equalled, nor the rivers of the atmosphere have attained its limit,—not when, in his exhilaration, he fought against the appropriator of the rain (?); thou alone hast made everything else in due succession."

R. V. i. 55, 1.—Divaś chid asya varimā vi paprathe Indraṁ na mahnā pṛithivī chana prati | "His vastness is extended even beyond the sky: the earth is not comparable to Indra in greatness."

R. V. i. 61, 9.—Asya id eva praririche mahitvaṁ divas pṛithivyāḥ pari antarikshāt ityādi | "His greatness transcends the sky, the earth, and surpasses the atmosphere," etc.

[71] Compare the additional texts of the same tenor in the fifth vol. of this work, pp. 99 ff.

[72] Compare R. V. i. 102, 8; ii. 12, 9; x. 111, 5 (below). The word pratimāna also occurs in R. V. x. 138, 3.—See the second volume of this work, p. 362.

[73] Compare R. V. i. 81, 5; ii. 15, 2; vi. 17, 7; vii. 20, 4; vii. 20, 4; vii. 98, 3; and x. 134, 1 (below).

[74] Compare R. V. i. 81, 5; iv. 30, 1; vi. 30, 4; and vii. 32, 23 (below).

R. V. i. 81, 5.—Ā paprau pārthivaṁ rajo badbadhe rochanā divi | na tvāvān Indra kaśchana na jāto na janishyate ati viśvaṁ vavakshitha | "He has filled the terrestrial region: he has fastened the luminaries in the sky. No one like thee, Indra, hath been born, or shall be born: thou hast transcended the universe."

R. V. i. 102, 8.—Trivishṭi-dhātu pratimānam ojasas tisro bhūmīr nṛipate trīṇi rochanā | ati idaṁ viśvam bhuvanaṁ vavakshitha aśatrur Indra janushā sanād asi | "The three worlds, O king, the three luminaries are a triple counterpart of [thy] energy. Thou hast transcended this whole universe. By nature, Indra, thou art of old without an enemy."[75]

R. V. i. 103, 2.—Sa dhārayat pṛithivīm paprathachcha vajreṇa hatvā nir apaḥ sasarja | ahann Ahim ityādi | "He established the earth and stretched it out; smiting with the thunderbolt, he let loose the waters. He slew Ahi," etc.

R. V. i. 121, 2.—Stambhīd hā dyāṁ ityādi | 3. . . . tastambhad dyāṁ chatushpade naryāya dvipade | "He has supported the sky, etc. 3. . . . . He has propped up the sky for the four-footed [beasts], and for the two-footed race of man."

R. V. ii. 12, 1 (Nirukta, x. 10).—Yo jātaḥ eva prathamo manasvān devo devān kratunā paryabhūshat[76] | Yasya śushmād rodasī abhyasetāṁ nṛimṇasya mahnā sa janāsaḥ Indraḥ | 2. Yaḥ pṛithivīṁ vyathamānām adṛiṁhad yaḥ parvatān prakupitān aramṇāt | yo antarikshaṁ vimame varīyo yo dyām astabhnāt sa janāsaḥ Indraḥ | 9. . . . . Yo viśvasya pratimānam babhūva yo achyuta-chyut sa janāsaḥ Indraḥ | 13. Dyāvā chid asmai pṛithivī namete śushmāch chid asya parvatāḥ bhayante ityādi |

"He who, immediately on his birth, the first, the wise, surpassed the gods in force; at whose might the two worlds shook, through the greatness of his strength, he, O men, is Indra. 2. He who fixed the quivering earth; who gave stability to the agitated mountains; who measured[77] the vast atmosphere; who propped up the sky, he, O men, is Indra. 9. . . He who has been a counterpart of the universe; who casts down the unskaken, he, O men, is Indra. . . . 13. Even the sky and the earth bow down to him; even of his might the mountains are afraid," etc.

[75] Compare R.V. viii. 21, 13; x. 133, 2 (below).

[76] Kratunā karmaṇā paryabhavat paryagṛihṇāt parāṅarakshad atyakrāmad vā . . . nṛimṇasya mahnā balasya mahattvena.—Nirukta. At the end of the comment the writer adds: iti ṛisher dṛishṭārthasya prītir bhavaty ākhyāna-saṁyuktā | "Thus when the rishi has seen the subject [of his hymn], gratification ensues, conjoined with a narrative."

R. V. ii. 15, 1.—Pra gha nu asya mahato mahāni satyā satyasya karaṇāni vocham | trikadrukeshu apibat sutasya asya made ahim Indro jaghāna | 2. Avaṁśe dyām astabhāyad bṛihantam ā rodasī apṛiṇad antarikṣham | sa dhārayat pṛithivīm paprathach cha somasya tā made Indraś chakāra | 3. Sadmeva prācho vi mimāya mānair ityādi |

"I declare the mighty deeds of this mighty one; the true acts of this true one. From the three cups Indra drank of the soma, and in its exhilaration he slew Ahi. 2. He propped up the vast sky in empty space;[78] he hath filled the two worlds, and the atmosphere. He hath upheld the earth, and stretched it out. Indra has done these things in the exhilaration of the soma. 3. He measured with measures the eastern (regions) as an abode," etc.

R. V. iii. 30, 9.—Ni sāmanām ishirām Indra bhūmim mahīm apārām sadane sasattha | astabhnād dyāṁ vṛishabho antarikṣham arshantu āpas tvayeha prasūtāḥ | "Thou, Indra, hast fixed in its place the level, the blooming,[79] earth, the great, the boundless. The vigorous god has propped up the sky, and the atmosphere: may the waters flow, sent forth now by thee."

R. V. iii. 32, 7.—Yajāma id namasā vṛiddham Indram bṛihantam ṛishvam ajaraṁ yuvānam | yasya priye mamatur yajniyasya na rodasī mahimānam mamāte | 8. Indrasya karma sukṛitā purūṇi vratāni devāḥ na minanti viśve | dādhāra yaḥ pṛithivīṁ dyām utemāṁ jajāna sūryam ushasaṁ sudaṁsāḥ | 9. Adrogha satyaṁ tava tad mahitvaṁ sadyo yaj jāto apibo ha somam | na dyāvaḥ Indra tavasas te ojo nāhā na māsāḥ śarado varanta[80] |

[77] Compare R.V. i. 154, 1, 3, and the other corresponding passages above, p. 69 ff.; and R.V. ii. 15, 3, immediately following. The word here, however, may mean "constructed." With the first part of the verse compare R. V. x. 149, 1, below (p. 110).

[78] Compare R. V. x. 149, 1 (below); and Job xxvi. 7, "He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing." See also R. V. x. 111. 5; and vi. 72, 2 (below).

[79] Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v., explain ishira as meaning "fresh," "blooming."

[80] Compare verse 16 of this same hymn, and R. V. viii. 77, 3: Na tvā bṛihanto adrayo varante | "The mighty mountains do not stop thee."

"We worship, with reverence, the mighty Indra, the powerful, the exalted, the undecaying, the youthful. The beloved[81] worlds (heaven and earth) have not measured, nor do they [now] measure, the greatness of this adorable being.[82] 8. Many are the excellent works which Indra has done; not all the gods are able to frustrate the counsels of him, who established the earth, and this sky, and, wonder-working, produced the sun and the dawn. 9. O innoxious god, thy greatness has been veritable since that time when, as soon as thou wast born, thou didst drink the soma. Neither the heavens, nor the days, nor the months, nor the seasons, can resist the energy of thee [who art] mighty."

R. V. iii. 44, 3.—Dyām Indro haridhāyasam pṛithivīm̃ harivarpasam| adhārayad ityādi | "Indra upheld the sky with its golden supports, and the earth with its golden form," etc.[83]

R. V. iv. 16, 5.—Vavakshe Indro amitam ṛijīshī ubhe ā prapau rodasī mahitvā | ataś chid asya mahimā virechi abhi yo viśvā bhuvanā babhūva | "The impetuous[84] Indra hath waxed immeasurably; he has filled both worlds with his vastness. Even beyond this extends the majesty of him who transcends all the worlds."

R. V. iv. 30, 1.—Nakir Indra tvad uttaro na jyāyān asti Vṛitrahan| nakir eva yathā tvam | "There is none, Indra, higher than thee, or superior to thee, thou slayer of Vṛitra; neither is there any like thee."

R. V. vi. 17, 7.—Pāprātha kshām mahi dam̃so vi ūrvīm upa dyām ṛishvo bṛihad Indra stabhāyaḥ | adhārayo rodasī devaputre pratne mātarā yahvī ṛitasya | "Thou hast filled the broad earth with thy mighty [81] Sāyaṇa explains priye as meaning aparimite, "immeasurable."—See vii. 87, 2.

[82] Dr. Aufrecht proposes to translate the last clause thus: "his beloved (spouses), heaven and earth, imagine, but do not measure (=comprehend) the greatness of this holy being." He regards the repetition of the root mā "to measure" in two different forms as purposeless, and conjectures that mamatuḥ may be the perfect of man, and used for mamanatuḥ or mamnatuḥ. Compare the aorist amata, and sasavān for sasanvān; see also R. V. vii. 31, 7: Mahān asi yasya te 'nu svadhāvarī sahaḥ | mamnāte Indra rodasī | "Thou art great, (thou) to whose energy the self-supporting Heaven and Earth have submitted themselves."

[83] In the hymn from which this verse is taken, the changes are rung on the words hari, harita, etc.

[84] See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon under the word ṛijīshin, and Benfey's note 260, on R.V, i. 32, 6, in his "Orient und Occident." The verse before us (iv. 16, 5) is translated by the same author in his Glossary to S.V., p. 162. See also his Glossary to the Sāmaveda, s.v. ṛijīshin.

works; thou, Indra, exalted, hast mightily propped up the sky; thou hast supported the two worlds, of whom the gods are the offspring, the ancient and mighty parents of holy rites."

R. V. vi. 30, 4.—Satyam it tad na tvāvān anyo asti Indra devo na martyo jyāyān ityādi | "This is a truth, there is no other, god or mortal, like thee, Indra, or greater than thee," etc.

R. V. vi. 31, 2.—Tvad-bhiyā Indra pārthivāni viśvā achyutā chit chyāvayante rajāṁsi | dyāvā-kshāmā parvatāso vanāni viśvaṁ dṛiḷham bhayate ajmann ā te | "Through fear of thee, Indra, all the mundane regions, however steady, totter; heaven and earth, mountains, forests, everything that is fixed, is afraid at thy coming."

R. V. vi. 38, 3.—Taṁ vo dhiyā paramayā purājām ajaram Indram abhi anūshi arkair ityādi | "I have lauded with an excellent prayer, and with praises, thee, Indra, born of old, and undecaying."

R. V. vii. 20, 4.—Ubhe chid Indra rodasī mahitvā ā paprātha tavishībhis tuvishmaḥ ityādi | "Thou, powerful Indra, hast filled both worlds with thy mighty deeds," etc.

R. V. vii. 32, 16.—Tava id Indra avamaṁ vasu tvam pushyasi madhyamam | satrā viśvasya paramasya rājasi nakis tvā goshu vṛiṇvate | . . . . 22. Abhi tvā śūra nonumaḥ adugdhāḥ iva dhenavaḥ | īśānam asya jagataḥ svardṛiśam īśānam Indra tasthushaḥ | 23. Na tvāvān anyo divyo na pārthivo na jāto na janishyate ityādi[85] |

"Thine, O Indra, is the lowest wealth; thou possessest the middle; verily thou rulest over all the very highest; none resist thee among the cattle. . . . . 22. We, O heroic Indra, like unmilked cows, approach with our praises thee who art the heavenly lord of this moving, and of the stationary [world]. 23. No one, celestial or terrestrial, has been born, or shall be born, like to thee."

R. V. vii. 98, 3 (=A. V., 20, 87, 3).— . . . . Ā Indra paprātha uru antarikshaṁ yudhā devebhyo varivaś chakartha | . . . . "Indra, thou hast filled the wide sky: thou hast by battle acquired freedom for the gods."[86]

[85] This entire hymn is translated in Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 543 ff.

[86] The words at the close of this verse occur also in R.V. i. 59, 5 (see below). In regard to varivaḥ, compare R. V. i. 63, 7: aṁhoḥ rājan varivaḥ Pūruve kaḥ | "Thou affordedst relief to Pūru from his strait." The word occurs R. V. ix. 97, 16, in the plural, varivāṁsi kṛiṇvan. In the Nighantu, 2, 10, it is said to mean "wealth."

R. V. viii. 3, 6 (=S. V. ii. 938).—Indro mahnā rodasī paprathach chhavaḥ Indraḥ sūryam arochayat | Indre ha viśvā bhuvanāni yemire ityādi | "The mighty Indra by his power has spread out the two worlds; Indra has lighted up the Sun: on Indra all the worlds are supported," etc.[87]

R. V. viii. 21, 13 (=S. V. 1, 399; A. V. 20, 114, 1)—Abhrātṛivyo anā tvam anāpir Indra janushā sanād asi | yudhā id āpitvam ichhase | "Indra, by thy nature, thou art indeed of old without a rival, without a fellow. By battle thou seekest alliance."

R. V. viii. 36, 4.—Janitā divo janitā pṛithivyaḥ ityādi | "Generator of the sky, generator of the earth," etc. (Indra).

R. V. viii. 37, 3.—Ekarāḍ asya bhuvanasya rājasi ityādi | "Thou rulest a sole monarch over this world," etc. (Indra).

R. V. viii. 51, 2.—Ayujo asamo nṛibhir ekaḥ kṛishṭīr ayāsyaḥ | pūrvīr ati pravāvṛidhe viśvā jātāny ojasā ityādi | "Without a fellow, unequalled by men, [Indra] alone, unconquerable, has surpassed in power many tribes, and all creatures."

R. V. viii. 59, 5 (=S. V. i. 278).—Yad dyāvaḥ Indra te śataṁ śatam bhūmīr uta syuḥ | na tvā vajrin sahasraṁ sūryāḥ anu na jātam ashṭa rodasī | "If, Indra, a hundred skies, and a hundred earths were thine, a thousand suns could not equal thee, thunderer, nor could anything created, [nor] the two worlds."

This verse is quoted and briefly commented on in the Nirukta Pariśishta i. 1, ff.: Atha imāḥ atistutayaḥ ity ākhakshate api vā sampratyayaḥ eva syād mahābhāgyād devatāyāḥ | . . Yadi te Indra śataṁ divaḥ śatam bhūmayaḥ pratimānāni syur na tvā vajrin sahasram api sūryāḥ na dyāvāpṛithivyāv apy abhyaśnuvītām iti | "Now these [which follow] are what are called exaggerated praises; or they may be expressions of perfect faith owing to the grandeur of the Deity." Then, after citing passages referring to Agni and Varuṇa, the writer quotes the verse before us, and thus paraphrases it: "If, Indra, a hundred skies, a hundred earths be the counterparts [with which thou art compared], not even a thousand suns, O thunderer, nor heaven and earth, can equal thee."

[87] In the 8th verse of this hymn (=S. V. 1, 924; Vāj. S. 33, 97; A. V. 20, 99, 2) the following words occur: asyed Indro vāvṛidhe vṛishṇyaṁ śavo made sutasya vishṇavi | "Indra increased his fecundating strength, in the exhilaration of this soma, at the sacrifice." Vishṇavi, the word here rendered "sacrifice," is the locative case of vishṇu. Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v., think the word here has this sense, as the Brāhmaṇas frequently employ the phrase yajno vai Vishṇuḥ | "Vishṇu is the sacrifice." The commentator of the Vāj. Sanhitā explains it by sarva-śarīra-vyāpake, "That which pervades the whole body." Sāyaṇa, too, makes it=kṛitsna-dehasya vyāpake |

R. V. viii. 67, 5.—Nakīm Indro nikartave na Śakraḥ pariśaktave viśvaṁ śṛiṇoti paśyati | "Indra is not to be overcome, Śakra is not to be overpowered. He hears and sees all things." [88]

R. V. viii. 77, 4.—Yoddhā 'si kratvā śavasota, daṁsanā viśvā jātā abhi majmanā | ā tvā ayam arkaḥ ūtaye vavartati yaṁ Gotamāḥ ajījanan | 5. (S. V. 1, 312.) Pra hi ririkshe ojasā divo antebhyas [89] pari | na tvā vivyācha rajaḥ Indra pārthivaṁ anu svadhāṁ vavakshitha |

"A warrior, thou surpassest all creatures in power, in vigour, in exploits, in strength. This hymn, which the Gotamas have generated, incites thee to succour us. 5. For by thy might thou hast overpassed the bounds of the sky. The mundane region hath not contained thee: thou hast grown according to thine own will." [90]

R. V. viii. 78, 5 (=S. V. ii. 779 f.)—Yaj jāyathāḥ apūrvya Maghavan Vṛitra-hatyāya | tat pṛithivīm aprathayas tad astabhnāḥ uta dyām | 6. Tat te yajno ajāyata tad arkaḥ uta haskṛitiḥ | tad viśvam abhibhūr asi yaj jātaṁ yachcha jantvam | [91]

"When thou, O unrivalled Maghavan (Indra), wast born for the destruction of Vṛitra, then thou didst spread out the earth, and then thou didst establish the sky. 6. Then was thy sacrifice produced; then thy hymn and thy song of praise. Then thou didst transcend all things that have been born, or shall be born."

R. V. viii. 82, 11.—Yasya te nu chid ādiśaṁ na minanti svarājyaṁ na devo na adhrigur jaṇaḥ | "Whose command, and empire, no one,—whether god, or audacious mortal,—can resist."

R. V. viii. 86, 9.—Na tvā devāsaḥ āśata na martyāso adrivaḥ | viśvā

[88] This hymn is translated by Professor Müller, Zeitsch. D. M. G. for 1853, p. 375.

[89] Instead of antebhyaḥ the S. V. reads sadobhyaḥ.

[90] At the end of the verse the S. V. reads ati viśvam vavakshitha | "Thou hast transcended the universe." On the sense of svadhā, see Roth, Illust. of Nir. pp. 40 f. and 132; and Müller, Transl. of R. V. vol. i. pp. 49 ff.

[91] Compare the words yad bhūtaṁ yachcha bhāvyam in the Puruṣha Sūkta, R. V. x. 90, 2. See the first volume of this work, in the early part of which this entire hymn is translated.

jātāni śavasā abhibhūr asi ityādi | 10 (S. V. i. 370). Viśvāḥ pṛitanāḥ abhibhūtaraṁ naraṁ[92] sajūs tatakshur Indraṁ jajanuś cha rājase | kratvā varishṭhaṁ vare[93] āmurim uta ugram ojishṭhaṁ tavasam[94] tarasvinam |

"Thee, O hurler of rocks, neither gods nor mortals have equalled. Thou transcendest in power all creatures, etc. 10. They, united, have formed and generated for dominion the heroic Indra, the vanquisher of all armies, eminent in power, destroyer, fierce, strong, vigorous, and swift."

R. V. viii. 87, 2.—Tvam Indra abhibhūr asi tvaṁ sūryam arochayaḥ | viśvakarmā viśvadevo mahān asi | "Thou, Indra, art the most powerful; thou hast kindled the sun; thou art great, the architect of all things, and the lord of all."

R. V. x. 43, 5 (=A. V. 20, 17, 5; Nir. 5, 22).—Kṛitaṁ na śvaghnī vichinoti devane saṁvargaṁ yaṁ Maghavā sūryaṁ jayat | na tat te anyo anu vīryaṁ śakad na purāṇo Maghavan na uta nūtanaḥ | "When Maghavan has conquered spoils[95] from the sun, he is like a gamester who gathers in his gains at play.[96] No other, Maghavan, either old or recent, can imitate that thy prowess."

R. V. x. 48, 3.—Mahyaṁ Tvashṭā vajram atakshad āyasam mayi devāso avṛijann api kratum | mama anīkaṁ sūryasya iva dustaram mām āryanti kṛitena kartvena cha | "Tvashṭṛi fashioned for me (Indra) an iron thunderbolt; into me the gods have infused force. My splendour is unsurpassed, like that of the sun. Men praise me for what I have done and shall do."

R. V. x. 86, 1 (=A. V. xx. 126, 1).—. . . . viśvasmād Indraḥ uttaraḥ | (Repeated at the close of every verse of this hymn.) "Indra is superior to every other."

[92] The Sāma-veda reads naraḥ.

[93] The Sāma-veda reads kratve vare sthemany āmurim. It is difficult to assign a sense to vare in the text.

[94] The Sāma-veda reads tarasaṁ.

[95] Sāyaṇa explains saṁvargam as = saṁyag vṛishṭer varjayitāram | "discharger of rain." The word, as Dr. Aufrecht informs me, occurs only once again in the R. V. viz. in viii. 64, 12: saṁvargam saṁ rayiṁ jaya | and he adds that the translation "spoils" is supported by several passages of the S'. I. Br. e.g. i. 7, 2, 24 (p. 69): pitur dāyam upeyuḥ . . . kathaṁ nv imam api saṁvṛiṅjīmahi (Schol. apaharemahi): Ibid. samavṛinjata, saṁvṛinkte. S'. P. Br. i. 9, 2, 34: sarvaṁ yajñaṁ saṁvṛijya (=samāpti-pūrvaṁ saṁhṛitya). In the R. V. Indra is called samvṛik samatsu "the spoiler in battles."

[96] The same phrases occur in R. V. x. 42, 9, and A. V. 7, 50, 6; 20, 89, 9.

R. V. x. 111, 1.—Manīshiṇaḥ pra bharadhvam manīshāṁ yathā yathā matayaḥ santi nṛiṇām | Indraṁ satyair ā īrayāma kṛitebhiḥ sa hi vīro girvaṇasyur vidānaḥ | 2. Ṛitasya hi sadaso dhītir adyaut saṁ gārshṭeyo vṛishabho gobhir ānaṭ | ud atishṭhat taviṣheṇa raveṇa mahānti chid saṁvivyācha rajāṁsi | 3. Indraḥ kila śrutyai asya veda sa hi jishṇuḥ pathikṛit sūryāya | ād menāṁ kṛiṇvann achyuto bhuvad goḥ patir divaḥ sanajāḥ apratītaḥ | 4. Indro mahnā mahato arṇavasya vratā aminād Angirobhir gṛiṇānaḥ | purūṇi chid ni tatāna rajāṁsi dādhāra yo dharuṇaṁ satyatātā | 5. Indro divaḥ pratimānaṃ pṛithivyāḥ viśvā veda savanā hanti Śushṇam | mahīṁ chid dyām ā atanot sūryeṇa chāskambha chit skambhanena skabhīyān |

"Sages, present the prayer, according as are the various thoughts of men. Let us move Indra, with his genuine acts, for he is a hero, and loves our hymns. 2. The hymn has shone forth from the place of sacrifice. The bull, offspring of a heifer, has approached the cows; he has arisen with a loud bellowing; he has embraced in himself the vast regions. 3. Indra by hearing is surely aware of this [hymn]. For he, the victorious, has formed a path for the sun, and then creating the female of the bull, became the unshaken, eternal and matchless lord of the sky (compare R. V. i. 51, 13; i. 121, 2). 4. Celebrated by the Angirases, Indra by his power has defeated the designs of the great streaming [cloud-demon];[97] he has stretched out many worlds, he who has laid a foundation in truth. 5. Indra, [who is] the counterpart of the heaven and of the earth, knows all libations, slays Śushṇa; with the sun, he has extended the vast sky, and, [being] a strong supporter, he has supported it with a support."[98]

R. V. x. 133, 2 (=S. V. ii. 1151).—Tvaṁ sindhūn avāsṛijaḥ adharācho ahann Ahim | śatrur Indra jajnishe viśvam pushyasi vāryam ityādi | "Thou hast let loose the streams to flow downwards; thou hast slain Ahi. Indra, thou hast been born without a foe: thou possessest all that is desirable," etc.

R. V. x. 134, 1 (=S. V. i. 379).—Ubhe yad Indra rodasī āpaprātha

[97] That this is the allusion in the word arṇava is shown by the following passage: R. V. x. 67, 2.—Indro mahnā mahato arṇavasya vi mūrdhānam abhinad Arbudasya ityādi | "Indra by his power split asunder the head of the great streaming Arbuda," etc.

[98] Compare R. V. vi. 72, 2, below.

ushāḥ iva | mahāntaṁ tvā mahīnāṁ saṁrājaṁ charshaṇīnām | devī janitrī ajījanad bhadrā janitrī ajījanat[99] | "When thou, Indra, like the dawn, didst fill both the worlds, a divine mother bore thee, the mighty monarch of mighty creatures,—a gracious mother bore thee."

How great soever the attributes assigned to Indra may be, we see that here he is not regarded as a self-existent being, but as the son of a mother. See the earlier part of the account of this deity in the fifth volume of this work.

The two following texts refer to Indra in conjunction with another god:

R. V. vi. 72, 2.—Indrā-Somā vāsayatha ushāsam ut sūryaṁ nayatho jyotishā saha | upa dyāṁ skambhathuḥ skambhanena aprathatam pṛithivīm mātaraṁ vi | "Indra and Soma, ye cause the dawn to shine, ye make the sun to rise with the light. Ye have propped up the sky with a support,[100] ye have spread out the earth, the mother."

R. V. vii. 82, 5.—Indrā-Varuṇā yad imāni chakrathur viśvā jātāni bhuvanasya majmanā ityādi | "Indra and Varuṇa, since ye have made all these creatures of the world by your power," etc.

The passages next following celebrate the divine attributes of Varuṇa:

R. V. i. 24, 8.—Uruṁ hi rajā Varuṇaś chakāra sūryāya panthām anu-etavai u ityādi | "King Varuṇa hath made a broad path for the sun to follow," etc.

R. V. ii. 27, 10.—Tvaṁ viśveshāṁ Varuṇa asi rājā ye cha devāḥ asura ye cha martāḥ | "Thou, divine Varuṇa, art king of all, both of those who are gods, and of those who are men."—Quoted in Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 534.

R. V. vi. 70, 1.—Ghṛitavatī bhuvanānām abhiśriyā ūrvī pṛithvī madhu-dughe supeśasā | dyāvā-pṛithivī Varuṇasya dharmaṇā vishkabhite ajare bhūri-retasā | "Full of fatness, the common abodes of creatures, wide, broad, dropping sweetness, beautiful in form, heaven and earth are sustained asunder by the support of Varuṇa, undecaying, abundant in fertility."

R. V. vii. 86, 1.—Dhīrā tu asya mahinā janūṁshi vi yas tastambha rodasī chid urvī | pra nākam ṛishvaṁ nunude bṛihantaṁ dvitā nakshatram paprathach cha bhūma | "Wise are his creations who by his power propped asunder the two worlds, thought vast. He raised up the lofty and wide firmament, and spread out apart the stars and the earth."—This hymn is translated in Müller's Sansk. Lit., pp. 540 f.

[99] The last line is repeated at the close of each of the five following verses.

[100] Compare R. V. ii. 15, 2; x. 111, 5; and x. 149, 1, below.

R. V. vii. 87, 1.—Radat patho Varuṇaḥ sūryāya pra arṇāṁsi samudriyā nadīnām | sargo[100*] na sṛishṭo arvatīr ṛitāyan chakāra mahīr avanīr ahabhyaḥ | 2. Ātmā te vāto rajaḥ ā navīnot paśur na bhūrṇir yavase sasavān[100†] | antar mahī bṛihatī rodasī ime viśvā te dhāma Varuṇa priyāṇi |

"Varuṇa has opened out paths for the sun, and the courses of the rivers leading to the ocean. Like a troop (of horses) let loose, following the mares, he has made great channels for the days. 2. The wind, thy breath, has sounded through the atmosphere, like an impetuous beast rushing along a pasture. Within [thee?] are these two great and vast worlds; all thy realms, O Varuṇa, are beloved."[101]

R. V. viii. 42, 1.—Astabhnād dyām Asuro viśvavedāḥ amimīta varimāṇam pṛithivyāḥ | āsīdad viśvā bhuvanāni samrāḍ viśvā it tāni Varuṇasya vratāni | 2. Eva vandasva Varuṇaṁ bṛihantaṁ namasya dhīram amṛitasya gopām | sa naḥ śarma trivarūthaṁ viyaṁsad ityādi |

"The omniscient Spirit (Asura) has propped up the sky; he has measured[102] the expanse of the earth; he has occupied all the worlds, the monarch: all these are the achievements of Varuṇa. 2. Reverence, then, the mighty Varuṇa, bow down before the wise guardian of immortality. May he extend to us triple protection," etc.

The next texts refer to the Sun (Sūrya, Āditya, or Savitṛi):

R. V. i. 50, 7.—Vi dyām eshi rajas pṛithv ahā mimāno aktubhiḥ | paśyan janmāni Sūrya | "Thou traversest the sky, the broad expanse, measuring the days with thy rays; beholding created things, O Sūrya."

R. V. viii. 90, 11, 12 (=S. V. ii. 1138, 9).—Baḍ mahān asi Sūrya baḍ Āditya mahān asi | mahas te sato mahimā panasyate addhā deva mahān asi | Baṭ Sūrya śravasā mahān asi satrā deva mahān asi | mahnā devānām asuryaḥ purohito vibhu jyotir adābhyam |

"Verily, Sūrya, thou art great; verily, Āditya, thou art great. The majesty of thee who art great is celebrated: certainly, god, thou art great. 12. Verily, Sūrya, thou art great in renown: O god, thou art [100*] The word sarga occurs also in R. V. i. 190, 2; iii. 33, 4; vi. 32, 5; vi. 46, 13.

[100†] In regard to this participle, see the note (82) on R. V. iii. 32, 7, above, p. 102.

[101] See note (81) on R. V. iii. 32, 7, above, p. 102.

[102] See above, p. 71.

truly great; through thy greatness thou art the divine leader of the gods, the pervading, irresistible luminary."

R. V. x. 149, 1.—Savitā yantraiḥ pṛithivīm aramṇād askambhane Savitā dyām adṛiṁhat | aśvam iva adhukshad dhunim antarikṣham atūrte baddhaṁ Savitā samudram | 2. Yatra samudraḥ skabhito viaunad apāṁ napāt Savita tasya veda | ato bhūr ataḥ āḥ utthitaṁ rajo ato dyāvā-pṛithivī aprathetām |

"Savitṛi has established the earth by supports; Savitṛi has fixed the sky in unsupported space;[103] Savitṛi has milked the atmosphere, which resembles a sounding horse,—the ocean fastened in the impassable expanse. 2. Savitṛi, the son of the waters, knows the place where the ocean, supported, issued forth. From him the earth, from him the atmosphere arose; from him the heaven and earth extended."

[103] In later times, as is well known, the earth is represented in Hindu mythology as resting on the head of the serpent S'esha, or on some other support. Thus it is said in the Vishṇu Pur. ii. 5, 19 (Wilson, Dr. Hall's ed. ii. 212): Sa bibhrat s'ekharī-bhūtam aśeshaṁ kshiti-maṇḍalam | āste pātāla-mūla-sthaḥ S'esho 'śesha-surārchitaḥ | "S'esha, worshipped by all the gods, supports the whole region of the earth which forms a diadem on his head, and stands beneath the base of Pātāla." The Siddhāntas, or scientific astronomical works of India, however, maintain that the earth is unsupported. Thus it is said in the Siddhānta-s'iromaṇi, iii. 2: Bhūmeḥ piṇḍaḥ śaśāṅka-jña-kavi-ravi-kujejyārki-nakshatra-kakshā-vṛittair vṛitaḥ san mṛid-anila-salila-vyoma-tejomayo 'yam | nānyādhāraḥ sva-śaktyaiva viyati niyataṁ tiṣṭhati ityādi | . . . 4. Mūrto dhartā ched dharitryās tad-anyas tasyāpyanyo 'syaivam atrānavasthā | antye kalpyā chet sva-śaktiḥ kim ādye kiṁ no bhūmir ityādi | which is thus translated by the late Mr. L. Wilkinson in the Bibl. Indica (new series), No. 13: "2. This globe of the earth formed of [the five elementary principles] earth, air, water, the ether, and fire, is perfectly round, and encompassed by the orbits of the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn, and by the constellations. It has no [material] supporter; but stands firmly in the expanse of heaven by its own inherent force. On its surface throughout subsist [in security] all animate and inanimate objects, Danujas and human beings, gods and Daityas." . . . "4. If the earth were supported by any material substance or living creature, then that would require a second supporter, and for that second a third would be required. Here we have the absurdity of an interminable series. If the last of the series be supposed to remain firm by its own inherent power, then why may not the same power be supposed to exist in the first—that is, in the earth? For is not the earth one of the forms of the eight-fold divinity, i.e. of S'iva?" Ārya Bhaṭṭa, one of the most ancient of Indian scientific astronomers, even maintained that the alternation of day and night is the result of the rotation of the earth on its own axis. His words, as quoted by Mr. Colebrooke (Essays, ii. p. 392), are these: Bha-pañjaraḥ sthiro bhūr evāvṛityāvṛitya prātidaivasikāv udayāstamayau sampādayati nakshatra-grahāṇām | "The starry firmament is fixed. It is the earth, which, continually revolving, produces the rising and setting of the constellations and planets."

The first of the preceding verses is quoted by Yāska (Nir. x. 32), and illustrated as follows: S'avītā yantraiḥ pṛithivīm aramayat | anārambhaṇe 'ntarikshe Savitā dyām adṛiṁhat | aśvam iva adhukshad dhunim antarikshe megham baddham atūrte baddham atūrṇe iti vā 'tvaramāṇe iti vā Savitā samuditāram iti | kam anyam madhyamād evam avakshyat | Ādityo 'pi Savitā vchyate. "Savitṛi by supports has caused the earth to rest; Savitṛi has fixed the sky in the place which has no basis—the atmosphere. Savitṛi has milked the cloud fastened in the atmosphere,—the impassable, or the unhastening—(the cloud) sounding as a horse, and that which rises. What other god than the intermediate one (i.e. the deity residing in the atmosphere) would he have thus described? The sun also (whose place is in the sky) is called Savitṛi."

Prof. Roth (Illust. of Nir., p. 143) thus translates the verse: "Savitṛi has fixed the earth with supports, he has fastened the heaven in unsupported space; he has milked the atmosphere shaking itself like a horse, the stream which is confined within limits which cannot be overpassed." In his Lexicon, however, Prof. Roth gives to dhuni the sense of "sounding" (which is also adopted by Prof. M. Müller, Transl. of R. V. i. 95). He then observes: "According to Yāska the Savitṛi who is here mentioned must be the intermediate one, on account of his function in causing rain."

The following passages refer to Agni:

R. V. i. 59, 5.—Divaś chit te bṛihato Jātavedo vaiśvānara pra ririche mahitvam | rājā kṛishṭīnām asi mānushīṇāṁ yudhā devebhyo varivaś chakartha | "Jātavedas, present with all men, thy greatness surpasses even that of the vast sky. Thou art the king of human creatures; by battle thou hast obtained freedom for the gods" (see R. V. vii. 98, 3, above p. 103).

R. V. i. 67, 3.—Ajo na kshāṁ dādhāra[103*] pṛithivīm tasthambha dyām mantrebhiḥ satyair ityādi | "Like the moving [sun, or the unborn] he upheld the broad earth; he supported the sky with true texts," etc.

The next verses celebrate the greatness of Parjanya:

R. V. vii. 101, 4.—Yasmin viśvāni bhuvanāni tasthus tisro dyāvas tredhā sasrur āpaḥ ityādi | 6. Sa retodhāḥ vṛishabhaḥ śaśvatīnāṁ tasminn ātmā jagataś tastuṣhaścha | (Compare R. V. i. 115, 1.) "He in whom all the worlds abide, and the three heavens, and [by whom] the waters flowed in three directions, etc. 6. He is the bull that impregnates all [the cows]: in him is the soul of the moving and stationary world" (comp. sūryaḥ ātmā jagatas tastushaś cha, R. V. i. 115, 1).

[103*] Comp. R. V. viii. 42, 10:—Yaḥ skumbhenā vi rodasī ajo na dyām adhārayat |

The next passage refers to the god called Gandharva:

R. V. x. 139, 5.—. . . . Divyo Gandharvo rajaso vimānaḥ | "The divine Gandharva, measurer of the world," etc.

The last set of passages which I shall adduce celebrate the greatness of Soma:

R. V. ix. 61, 16 (= S. V. 1, 484).—Pavamāno ajījanad divaś chitrāṁ na tanyatum | jyotir vaiśvānaram bṛihat | "The purified [Soma] has generated the great light which is common to all mankind, like the wonderful thundering of the sky."

R. V. ix. 86, 28.—Taveme̱āḥ prajāḥ divyasya retasas tvaṁ viśvasya bhuvanasya rājasi | athe̱dāṁ viśvam pavamāna te vaśe tvam Indo prathamo dhāmadhāḥ asi | 29. Tvaṁ samudro asi viśvavit kave tavemāḥ pancha pradiśo vidharmaṇi | tvaṁ dyāṁ cha pṛithivīṁ chāti jabhrishe tava jyotīṁshi pavamāna sūryaḥ | 30. Tvā̱m pavitre rajaso vidharmaṇi devebhyaḥ soma pavamāna pūyase | tvām Uśijaḥ prathamāḥ agṛibhṇata tubhyemā viśvā bhuvanāni yemire |

"All these creatures spring from thy divine seed; thou art the lord of the whole universe. All this, purified god, is under thy control; thou, Indu, art the first sustainer of the regions. 29. Thou, sage, art an all-containing ocean; all these five quarters of the world are upheld by thee. Thou hast ascended beyond the sky and the earth; thine, O purified god, are the luminaries and the sun. 30. In the filter which is the support of the world, thou, pure Soma, art purified for the gods. The Uśijes first gathered thee. To thee all these worlds have bowed."

R. V. ix. 89, 6.—Vishṭambho divo dharuṇaḥ pṛithivyāḥ viśvāḥ uta kshitayo haste asya ityādi | "He is the supporter of the sky, the upholder of the earth: all men are in his hand."

R. V. ix. 96, 5, which has been quoted above (p. 94), should be again referred to here.

R. V. ix. 97, 24.—Pavitrebhiḥ pavamāno nṛichakshāḥ rājā devānām uta martyānām ityādi | "[Soma], purified by filters, the beholder of men, is the king of gods and of mortals," etc.

R. V. ix. 100, 8.—Pavamāna mahi śrœvaś chitrebhir yāsi raśmibhiḥ [104] | śardhan tamāṁsi jighnase viśvāni dāśusho gṛihe | 9. Tvaṁ dyāṁ cha mahivrata pṛithivīṁ chāti jabhrishe ityādi | "Thou, pure [Soma], marchest onward to great renown, by thy brilliant rays; daring, thou willest to destroy all darkness in the house of thy worshipper. 9. Thou, achiever of great deeds, hast ascended above heaven and earth," etc.

R. V. ix. 107, 7.— . . . Tvaṁ kavir abhavo deva-vītamaḥ ā sūryaṁ rohayo divi | "Thou art a sage most pleasing to the gods; thou hast caused the sun to rise in the sky."

R. V. ix. 109, 4 (=S. V. ii. 591).—Pavasva soma mahān samudraḥ pitā devānāṁ viśvā abhi dhāma | "Be purified in all abodes, Soma, [who art] a great ocean, the father of the gods," etc.

The preceding texts are amply sufficient to show that Vishṇu is not the only god to whom the highest divine functions are ascribed in the Veda, but that, on the contrary, the same attributes are assigned, and with far greater frequency, to several of the other deities.

The following passage from Professor Müller's Ancient Sanskrit Literature (p. 532 f.) shows that all the principal Vedic deities are, in their turn, addressed by their worshippers as supreme:

"When these individual gods are invoked, they are not conceived as limited by the power of others as superior or inferior in rank. Each god is to the mind of the supplicants as good as all the gods. He is felt, at the time, as a real divinity, as supreme and absolute, in spite of the necessary limitations which, to our mind, a plurality of gods must entail on every single god. All the rest disappear for a moment from the vision of the poet, and he only who is to fulfil their desires stands in full light before the eyes of the worshippers. 'Among you, O gods, there is none that is small, none that is young: you are all great indeed,' [105] is a sentiment which, though, perhaps, not so distinctly expressed as by Manu Vaivasvata, nevertheless, underlies all the poetry of the Veda. Although the gods are sometimes distinctly invoked as the great and the small, the young and the old (R. V. i. 27, 13), this is only an attempt to find the most comprehensive expression for the divine powers, and nowhere is any of the gods represented as the slave of others. It would be easy to find, in the numerous hymns of the Veda, passages in which almost every single god is represented as supreme and absolute. In the first hymn of the Second Maṇḍala, Agni is called the ruler of the universe,[106] the lord of men, the wise king, the father, the brother, the son, and friend of men;[107] nay, all the powers and names of the others are distinctly ascribed to Agni. The hymn belongs, no doubt, to the modern compositions; yet, though Agni is thus highly exalted in it, nothing is said to disparage the divine character of the other gods. Indra is celebrated as the strongest god in the hymns as well as in the Brāhmaṇas, and the burden of one of the songs of the Tenth Book[108] is: Viśvasmād Indra uttaraḥ | 'Indra is greater than all.' Of Soma it is said that he was born great, and that he conquers every one.[109] He is called the king of the world,[110] he has the power to prolong the life of men,[111] and in one verse he is called the maker of heaven and earth, of Agni, of Sūrya, of Indra, and of Vishṇu.[112] If we read the next hymn, which is addressed to Varuṇa (οὐρανός), we perceive that the god here invoked is, to the mind of the poet, supreme and almighty. Nevertheless, he is one of the gods who is almost always represented in fellowship with another, Mitra; and even in our hymn there is one verse, the sixth, in which Varuṇa and Mitra are invoked in the dual. Yet what more could human language achieve, in trying to express the idea of a divine and supreme power, than what our poet says of Varuṇa: 'Thou art lord of all, of heaven and earth.' Or, as is said in another hymn (ii. 27, 10), 'Thou art the king of all; of those who are gods, and of those who are men,'" etc.

[104] Compare R. V. ix. 4, 1: Sanā cha Soma jeshi cha pavamāna mahi śravaḥ | and ix. 83, 5: Jayan śravo bṛihat |

[105] R. V. viii. 30, 1, quoted by Müller, p. 531.

Sect. III.—Vishṇu as one of the Ādityas.

In the hymns of the Veda the Ādityas, or sons of Aditi, are alluded to as being seven or eight in number; but only six deities, of whom Vishṇu is not one, are specified by name as belonging to this class.[113]

[106] "Tvaṁ viśvāni svanīka patyase | ii. 1, 8.—See Nirukta Pariśishṭa i.
[107] ii. 1, 9. [108] x. 86. [109] ix. 59.
[110] ix. 96, 10: bhuvanasya rājā. [111] ix. 96, 14. [112] ix. 96, 5.
[113] See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon under the word Āditya; Prof. Roth's dissertation on the Ādityas in his paper "on the principal gods of the Arian nations," Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. vi., pp. 68 ff.; and the 5th vol. of this work, pp. 54 ff. Sūrya (the Sun) is however called Āditeya in R. V. x. 88, 11 (Nir. vii. 29).

The following are the only texts which I consider it necessary to cite on this subject:

R. V. ii. 27, 1 (Nir. xii. 36).—Imāḥ giraḥ Ādityebhyo ghṛitasnūḥ sanād rājabhyo juhvā juhomi | śṛiṇotu Mitro Aryamā Bhago nas tuvijāto Varuṇo Daksho Aṁśaḥ | "With my tongue I of old offer up these praises, dropping with unctuousness, to the kings, the Ādityas: may Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, the mighty Varuṇa, Daksha, Anśa, hear us." Yāska makes tuvijātaḥ to be=bahujātaś cha Dhātā, thus understanding it to designate Dhātṛi, as a seventh Āditya.

R. V. ix. 114, 3.—Sapta diśo nānā-sūryāḥ sapta hotāraḥ ṛitvijaḥ | devāḥ Ādityāḥ ye sapta tebhiḥ Somābhiraksha naḥ | "The seven points of the compass, with their respective suns, the seven hotṛi priests, and the seven gods, the Ādityas,—with these, O Soma, protect us."

In another text (R. V. x. 72, 8, 9), which has already been quoted in p. 12 f., it is said that Aditi had eight sons, though she only presented seven of them to the gods, and cast out Mārtāṇḍa, the eighth.

In his explanation of the first text, which I have now quoted (R. V. ii. 27, 1), Sāyaṇa observes of the Ādityas: Te cha Taittirīye 'ashṭau putrāso Aditer' ity upakramya spashṭam anukrāntāḥ | 'Mitraścha Varuṇaścha Dhātācha Aryamācha Aṁśuścha Bhagaścha Indraścha Vivasvāṁś cha ete' iti | "They (the Ādityas) are distinctly specified in the passage of the Taittirīya, beginning with the words, 'The eight sons of Aditi,' as 'these, Mitra, Varuṇa, Dhātṛi, Aryaman, Anśu, Bhaga, Indra, and Vivasvat.'"

In a passage of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (iii. 1, 3, 3 ff.) quoted above (p. 14, f.), the Ādityas are alluded to as eight in number, in conformity with the text of the R. V. x. 72, 8, 9. In other texts of the same Brāhmaṇa mention is made of twelve Ādityas.

Vishṇu, as is remarked by Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v., is mentioned along with the Ādityas [of the R. V., and other gods with whom they were afterwards associated] in A. V. xi. 6, 2: Brūmo rājānaṁ Varuṇam Mitraṁ Vishṇum atho Bhagam | Aṁśaṁ Vivasvantam brūmas te no munchantū aṁhasaḥ | 3 | Brūmo devaṁ Savitāram Dhātāram uta Pūshaṇam | Tvashṭāram agriyam brūmaḥ | "We invoke King Varuṇa, Mitra, Vishṇu, Bhaga, Anśa, Vivasvat. May they free us from calamity. 3. We invoke the God Savitṛi, Dhātṛi, Pūshan, and Tvashṭṛi the chief," etc.

The following are two passages of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa in which mention is made of the Ādityas as being twelve in number.

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 1, 2, 8.—Sa manasā eva vācham mithunaṁ samabhavat sa dvādaśa drapsān garbhy abhavat | te dvādaśa Ādityāḥ asṛijyanta tān dikshu upādadhāt | "With his mind he associated conjugally with Speech. He became pregnant with twelve drops. They were created the twelve Ādityas. Them he placed in the quarters of the horizon."

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 6, 3, 8 (=Bṛih. Ār. Up. iii. 9, 5, p. 646). Katame Ādityāḥ iti | dvādaśa māsāḥ saṁvatsarasya ete Ādityāḥ—ete hi idaṁ sarvam ādadānāḥ yanti | te yad idaṁ sarvam ādadānāḥ yanti tasmād Ādityāḥ iti | "How many Ādityas are there? There are twelve months of the year. These are the Ādityas. For they go on taking (ādadānāḥ) all this. Since they go on taking all this, they are called Ādityas."

The Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 9, 21, 1, tells a story of the Ādityas: Ādityāś cha Angirasaś cha suvarge loke 'spardhanta | te 'ngirasaḥ Ādityebhyo 'mum Ādityaṁ aśvaṁ śvetam bhūtaṁ dakshiṇām anayan | te 'bruvan "yaṁ no 'neshṭa sa varyo 'bhūd" iti | tasmād aśvaṁ savarya ity āhvayanti | tasmād yajne varo dīyate | yat Prajāpatir ālabdho 'śvo 'bhavat tasmād aśvo nāma | yat śvayad-arur āsīt tasmād arvā nāma | yat sadyo vājān samajayat tasmād vājī nāma | yad asurāṇāṁ lokān ādatta tasmād Ādityo nāma | "The Ādityas and the Angirases strove in heaven. The Angirases brought that Āditya, who had become a white horse, to the Ādityas as a present. The latter said, 'He whom you have brought to us has become excellent (varya).' Hence men call to a horse, o savarya. Hence a boon (vara) is given at a sacrifice. Inasmuch as Prajāpati when sacrificed became a horse (aśva, which means "pervading," according to the commentator), he has the name of aśva. Inasmuch as he suffered pain from swelling (so the commentator renders śvayad-aruḥ, stating that Prajāpati suffered from a swollen eye), he is called arvan. Inasmuch as he conquered riches [or, in races] (vāja), he got the name vājin. Inasmuch as he took (ādatta) from the Asuras their worlds, he is called Āditya."

The Taitt. Āraṇyaka, i. 14, 1, also derives Āditya from the root ā+dā: Yo 'sau tapann udeti sa sarveshām bhūtānām prāṇān ādāya udeti | mā me prajāyāḥ mā paśūnām mā mama prāṇān adāya udagāḥ | asau yo

'stam eti sa sarveshām bhūtānām prāṇān ādāya astam eti | mā me prajāyāḥ mā paśūnām mā rāma prāṇān ādāya astaṁ gāḥ | "That [Sun] which rises glowing, rises taking the breath of all creatures. Do not rise [O Sun], taking the breath of my offspring, or of my cattle, or of myself. That [Sun] which sets, sets taking the breath of all creatures. Do not set [O Sun], taking the breath of my offspring, or of my cattle, or of myself."

The Nirukta, ii. 13, gives various etymologies of the word Āditya: Ādityaḥ | kasmād | ādatte rasān | ādatte bhāsaṁ jyotishaṁ | ādīpto bhāsā iti vā | Aditeḥ putraḥ iti vā | alpaprayogaṁ tu asya etad ārchābhyāmnāye | sūkta-bhāk "sūryam ādityam" Aditeḥ putram | evam anyāsām api devatānām Ādityapravādāḥ stutayo bhavanti | tad yathā etad | Mitrasya Varuṇasya Aryamṇo Dakshasya Bhagasya Aṁśasya iti |

"The Āditya: whence [so called]? He takes up the fluids.[114] He takes up the light of the luminaries; he is illuminated (ādīptaḥ) by light; or, he is the son of Aditi. But this [appellation] is seldom applied to him in the text of the Rigveda. Sūrya Ādityeya, Sūrya the son of Aditi, is mentioned in a hymn.[115] In the same way there are praises of other deities, addressed to them as Ādityas; as in the case of Mitra, Varuṇa, Aryaman, Daksha, Bhaga, Anśa."

In the following texts from the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas, the Ādityas, though their names are not always uniformly given, are stated or understood to be twelve in number, except in one case where only eleven are specified. Vishṇu is almost always named as one of them, [114] Sahasra-guṇam utsrashṭum ādatte hi rasān raviḥ | "For the sun takes up the fluids [from the] earth, to discharge them again a thousand-fold."—Raghuvanśa, i. 18. In the hymn to the Sun, Mahābh. iii. 166 ff., it is similarly said, v. 179: Tvam ādāyāṁśubhis tejo nidāghe sarva-dehinām | sarvaushadhi-rasānāṁ cha punar varshāsu munchasi | "Having in the hot season taken up by the rays the substance of all embodied beings, and the essence of all plants, thou again dischargest them in the rainy season." And Manu says: Ashṭau māsān yathā "dityas toyaṁ harati raśmibhiḥ | tathā haret karaṁ rāshṭrād nityam arkavrataṁ hi tat | "As Āditya (the sun) during eight months draws up water by his rays, so let him (a king) extract revenue from his country, for that is his continual solar function."—Manu, ix. 305.

[115] Dr. Aufrecht conjectures that the word sūkta-bhāk should be read asūkta-bhāk "has not a hymn devoted to him;" as he appears to be only mentioned in one verse, R. V. x. 88, 11 (Nir. vii. 29). Durga, however, as quoted by Roth (Illust. p. 21), says: sūkta-bhāg eva chaitad abhidhānaṁ na havirbhāk | "This appellation has a hymn devoted to it, but no oblation is ordained [to be offered to the god under this name]." By "hymn" Durga may only mean part of a hymn.

and as by the time when these works were written, his dignity had become enhanced in general estimation, he is declared to be the greatest of the twelve.

Mahābhārata, i. 2,519, 2,522 ff.—Marīcheḥ Kaśyapaḥ putraḥ Kaśyapāt tu imāḥ prajāḥ | prajajñire mahābhāgāḥ Daksha-kanyās trayodaśa | . . . . 2,522. Adityāṁ dvādaśādityāḥ 'sambhūtāḥ bhuvaneśvarāḥ | ye rājan nāmatas tāṁs te kīrtayishyāmi Bhārata | Dhātā Mitro'ryamā Śakro Varuṇas tv Aṁśaḥ eva cha | Bhago Vivasvān Pūshā cha Savitā daśamas tathā | ekādaśas tathā Tvashṭā dvādaśo Vishṇur uchyate | jaghanyajas tu sarveshām Ādityānāṁ guṇādhikaḥ |

"Kaśyapa was the son of Marīchi; and from Kaśyapa these beings were born. There were thirteen eminent daughters of Daksha . . . 2,522. I will recount to thee, by name, king of the race of Bharata, the twelve Ādityas, lords of the world, who were produced from Aditi;[116] Dhātṛi, Mitra, Aryaman, Śakra (Indra), Varuṇa, Anśa, Bhaga, Vivasvat, Pūshan, and Savitṛi the tenth; the eleventh is Tvashṭṛi, and the twelfth is called Vishṇu, who, though the latest born, surpasses all the Ādityas in his attributes."

Mahābhārata, i. 2,598.—Marīcheḥ Kaśyapaḥ putraḥ Kaśyapasya Surāsurāḥ | jajñire nṛipa-śārdūla lokānām prabhavas tu saḥ | . . . . . 2,600. Dvādaśaivāditeḥ putrāḥ Śakra-mukhyāḥ narādhipa | teshām avarajo Vishṇur yatra lokāḥ pratishṭhitāḥ |

"From Kaśyapa, who was the son of Marīchi, were produced, O king, the deities (Suras) and the Asuras; and he was the source from which all beings sprang. . . . 2,600. Aditi had twelve sons, beginning with Śakra. The youngest of them was Vishṇu, on whom the worlds are supported."

Mahābhārata, xiii. 7,092 f.—Aṁśo Bhagaścha Mitraścha Varuṇaścha jaleśvaraḥ | tathā Dhātā 'ryamā chaiva Jayanto Bhāskaras tathā | Tvashṭā Pūshā tathaivendro dvādaśo Vishṇur uchyate | ity ete dvādaśādityāḥ Kāśyapeyāḥ iti śrutiḥ |

"Anśa, Bhaga, Mitra, Varuṇa, lord of the waters, Dhātṛi, Aryaman, Jayanta, Bhāskara, Tvashṭṛi, Pūshan, Indra, and Vishṇu, who is called [116] In the hymn to the sun, Mahābh. iii. 166 ff., it is said that that Luminary, dividing himself twelvefold, became the twelve Ādityas (kṛitvā dvādaśadhā "tmānaṁ dvādaśādityatāṁ gataḥ).

the twelfth: these are the twelve Ādityas, the sons of Kaśyapa, according to tradition (or the Veda, śruti)."

Mahābhārata, v. 3,501 ff.—Akshayaś chāvyayaś chaiva Brahmā lokapitāmahaḥ | tathaiva bhagavantau tau Nara-Nārāyaṇāv ṛishī | Ādityānāṁ hi sarveshāṁ Vishṇur ekaḥ sanātanaḥ | ajayyaś chāvyayaś chaiva śāśvataḥ prabhur īśvaraḥ | nimitta-maraṇāś chānye chandra-sūrya-mahījalam | Vāyur Agnis tathā "kāśaṁ grahās tārā-gaṇās tathā | te cha kshayānte jagato hitvā lokā-trayaṁ sadā | kshayaṁ gachhanti vai sarve sṛijyante cha punaḥ punaḥ | muhūrta-maraṇās tv anye mānushāḥ mṛiga-pakshiṇaḥ | "Brahmā, the parent of the world, is undecaying and imperishable; and so too are the venerable Ṛishis, Nara, and Nārāyaṇa. Vishṇu alone of all the Ādityas is eternal, invincible, imperishable, everlasting, potent, the lord. Other beings perish on some occasion, [as at the end of a Kalpa],—[117] the moon, the sun, the earth, water,[118] air, fire, the ether, the planets, and the stars. At the dissolution of the universe, all these invariably abandon the three worlds, and perish, and are created again and again. Other [creatures], men, beasts, and birds, die after a brief interval (muhūrta)."

Vishṇu Purāṇa, 1, 15, 90 ff. (vol. ii. pp. 26 f. of Dr. Hall's edition of Wilson's translation)—Pūrvamanvantare śreshṭhāḥ dvādaśāsan surottamāḥ | Tushitāḥ nāma te 'nyonyam ūchur Vaivasvate 'ntare | upasthite 'tiyaśasaś Chākshushasyāntare Manoḥ | samavāyīkṛitāḥ sarve samāgamya parasparam | Āgachhata drutaṁ devāḥ Aditiṁ sampraviśya vai | Manvantare prasūyāmas tan naḥ śreyo bhaved iti | evam uktvā tu te sarve Chākshushasyāntare Manoḥ | Mārīchāt Kaśyapāj jātās te 'dityā Daksha-kanyayā | tatra Vishṇuścha Śakraścha jajñāte punar eva hi | Aryamā chaiva Dhātāṫha Tvashṭā Pūshā tathaiva cha | Vivasvān Savitā chaiva Mitro Varuṇaḥ eva cha | Aṁśo Bhagaś chātitejāḥ Ādityāḥ dvādaśa smṛitāḥ | Chākshushasyāntare pūrvam āsan ye Tushitāḥ smṛitāḥ | Vaivasvate 'ntare te vai Ādityāḥ dvādaśa smṛitāḥ |

"In the former Manvantara there were twelve eminent and re-

[117] I suppose nimitta-maranāḥ is to be understood practically in this sense.—See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, Dr. Hall's ed. i. 113; v. 186, and note. Nārāyaṇa, in his commentary on the Mahābhārata, explains the phrase thus: Nimittam pralayādi-nimittam maraṇaṁ nāśo yeshāṁ te nimitta-maraṇāḥ |

[118] Water and ether are said in the Rāmāyaṇa to have preceded Brahmā.—See above, p. 33. See also the order of creation described in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, and in Manu, in section ii., chapter i., above.

nowned deities called Tushitas; who, being assembled together, said to each other in the Chākshusha Manvantara, when the Vaivasvata Manvantara was approaching, 'Come quickly, deities, let us enter into Aditi, and be born in the [next] Manvantara: this will be for our welfare.' Having thus spoken in the Chākshusha Manvantara, they were all born from Kaśyapa, son of Marīchi, and Aditi, daughter of Daksha. In this way Vishṇu and Śakra (Indra) were again born, and Aryaman, Dhātṛi, Tvashṭṛi, Pūshan, Vivasvat, Savitṛi, Mitra, Varuṇa, Anśa, and the energetic Bhaga: these are known as the twelve Ādityas. Those who formerly in the Chākshusha Manvantara were called the Tushitas, are known as the twelve Ādityas in the Vaivasvata Manvantara."

The same story is repeated in very nearly the same words in the Harivanśa, verses 171 ff.

The following is another passage from the Harivanśa, verses 11,548 ff.: Adityāñ jajnire rājann Ādityāḥ Kaśyapād atha | Indro Vishṇur Bhagas Tvashṭā Varuno 'ñśo 'ryamā Raviḥ | Pūshā Mitraścha varado Manuḥ Parjanyaḥ eva cha | ity ete dvādaśādityāḥ varishṭhās tridivaukasaḥ | "From Kaśyapa and Aditi were born the Ādityas, Indra, Vishṇu, Bhaga, Tvashṭṛi, Varuṇa, Anśa, Aryaman, Ravi (the Sun), Pūshan, Mitra, the bestower of boons, Manu, and Parjanya,—these are the twelve Ādityas, most eminent celestials."

In the same work, verses 12,456 f., we read: Aryamā Varuṇo Mitraḥ Pūshā Dhātā Purandaraḥ | Tvashṭā Bhago 'ñśaḥ Savitā Parjanyaścheti visrutāḥ | Adityañ jajnire devāḥ Kaśyapāl loka-bhāvanāḥ | "The gods, creators of the worlds, known as Aryaman, Varuṇa, Mitra, Pūshan, Dhātṛi, Purandara (Indra), Tvashṭṛi, Bhaga, Anśa, Savitṛi, and Parjanya, were sprung from Kaśyapa and Aditi."

Only eleven names occur in this list: that of Vishṇu is omitted.

The next is another legend on the same subject from the same work. Here quite a different origin is assigned to the Ādityas, who are said to have sprung from the face of Vivasvat or Mārtaṇḍa, the Sun.

Harivanśa, 589 ff.—Tato nirbhāsitañ rūpañ tejasā saṁhatena vai | kāntāt kāntataraṁ drashṭum adhikañ śuśubhe tadā | mukhe nirvartitañ rūpañ tasya devasya goptaḥ | tataḥ-prabhṛiti devasya mukham āsīt tu lohitam | mukha-rāgantu yat pūrvam Mārtaṇḍasya mukha-chyutam | Ādityāḥ dvādaśaiveha sambhūtāḥ mukha-sambhavāḥ | Dhātā 'ryamā cha

Mitraścha Varuṇo 'mśo Bhagas tathā | Indro Vivasvān Pūshā cha Parjanyo daśamas tathā | tatas Tvashṭā tato Vishṇur ajaghanyo jaghanyajaḥ | harshaṁ lebhe tato devo dṛishṭvā "dityān sva-deha-jān | "Then his appearance, illuminated with concentrated lustre, shone forth more brilliantly, fairer than the fairest to behold. This appearance was produced in the face of that god, the lord of rays. Henceforward the face of the god was red: From the previous colour of the face which fell from the countenance of Mārtaṇḍa were produced twelve face-born Ādityas: Dhātṛi, Aryaman, Mitra, Varuṇa, Anśa, Bhaga, Indra, Vivasvat, Pūshan, Parjanya the tenth, then Tvashṭṛi, then Vishṇu not the least, though the last born. The god then rejoiced, beholding the Ādityas, sprung from his own body."

This story is not only in opposition to the ordinary account of the Ādityas being sons of Aditi, but it contradicts itself. Vivasvat is one of the Ādityas, who is produced from Vivasvat; and Tvashṭṛi was already existing, and playing a part in the former part of the legend. (See Langlois's note 7, p. 50 of his French version of the Harivanśa.) The Vishṇu Purāṇa tells the same story about Vivasvat, but says nothing of the birth of the Ādityas. (See Wilson's translation, Dr. Hall's ed., iii. 20 f.)

Bhāgavata Purāṇa, vi. 6, 24 f.—S'riṇu nāmāni lokānām mātṛiṇāṁ śaṁkarāṇi cha | atha Kaśyapa-patnīnāṁ yat-prasūtam idaṁ jagat | Aditir Ditir ityādi | . . . . 36 f. Athātaḥ śrūyatāṁ vaṁśo yo 'diter anupūrvaśaḥ | yatra Nārāyaṇo devo svāṁśenāvātarad vibhuḥ | Vivasvān Aryamā Pūshā Tvashṭā 'tha Savitā Bhagaḥ | Dhātā Vidhātā Varuṇo Mitraḥ S'akraḥ Urukramaḥ |

"Hear now the auspicious names of the wives of Kaśyapa, the mothers of the worlds, from whom this universe was produced; Aditi, Diti, etc. . . . 36 f. Hear now, in order, the race of Aditi, in which the all-pervading god, Nārāyaṇa, descended in a part of himself,—Vivasvat, Aryaman, Pūshan, Tvashṭṛi, Savitṛi, Bhaga, Dhātṛi, Vidhātṛi, Varuṇa, Mitra, S'akra, Urukrama (the wide-strider=Vishṇu)."

SECT. IV.—Stories regarding Vishṇu from the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, the Panchaviṁśa Brāhmaṇa, the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata, and the Purāṇas.

The following story from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (in which Vishṇu is represented as a dwarf, and as having, under the form of sacrifice, conquered the whole earth), with others of the same tenor, contains the germ of the story of the Dwarf Incarnation:

Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 2, 5, 1 ff.—Devāścha vai Asurāścha ubhaye prājāpatyāḥ paspṛidhire | tato devāḥ anuvyam iva āsuḥ | atha ha Asurāḥ menire 'asmākam eva idaṁ khalu bhuvanam' iti | 2. Te ha ūchur 'hanta imām pṛithivīṁ vibhajāmahai tāṁ vibhajya upajīvāma' iti | tām aukshṇaiś charmabhiḥ paśchāt prāncho vibhajamānāḥ abhīyuḥ | 3. Tad vai devāḥ śuśruvur "vibhajante ha vai imām Asurāḥ pṛithivīm preta tad eshyāmo yatra imām Asurāḥ vibhajante | ke tataḥ syāma yad asyai na bhajemahi" iti | te yajnam eva Vishṇum puraskṛitya īyuḥ | 4. Te ha ūchuḥ "anu no 'syām pṛithivyām ābhajata astv eva no 'py asyām bhāgaḥ" iti | te 'surāḥ asūyantaḥ iva ūchur "yāvad eva esha Vishṇūr abhiśete tāvad vo dadmaḥ' iti | 5. Vāmano ha Vishṇur āsa | tad devāḥ na jihīḍire "mahad vai no 'dur ye no yajna-saṁmitam adur" iti | 6. Te prānchaṁ Vishṇuṁ nipādya chhandobhir abhitaḥ paryagṛighṇan "gāyatreṇa tvā chhandasā parigṛihṇāmi" iti dakshiṇatas | "traishṭubhena tvā chhandasā parigṛihṇāmi" iti paśchāt | "jāgatena tvā chhandasā parigṛihṇāmi" iti uttarataḥ | 7. Taṁ chhandobhir abhitaḥ parigṛihya agnim purastāt samādhāya tena archantaḥ śrāmyantaś cheruḥ | tena imāṁ sarvām pṛithivīṁ samavindanta | tad yad enena imāṁ sarvāṁ samavindanta tasmād vedir nāma | tasmād āhur 'yāvatī vedis tāvatī pṛithivī' iti | etayā hi imāṁ sarvāṁ samavindanta | evaṁ ha vai imāṁ sarvāṁ sapatnānām saṁvṛiṅkte nirbhajaty asyai sapatnān yaḥ evam etad veda | 8. So 'yaṁ Vishṇur glānaś chhandobhir itaḥ parigṛihīto 'gniḥ purastād na apakramaṇam āsa | sa tataḥ eva oshadhīnām mūlāny upa mumlocha | 9. Te ha devāḥ ūchuḥ "kva nu Vishṇur abhūt kva nu yajno 'bhūd" iti | te ha ūchuś "chhandobhir itaḥ parigṛihīto 'gniḥ purastād na apakramaṇam asty atra eva anvichhata" iti taṁ khanantaḥ iva anvīshus taṁ tryangule 'nvavindaṁs tasmāt tryangulā vediḥ syāt | tad u ha api Pānchis tryangulām eva saumyasya adhvarasya vediṁ chakre | 10. Tad u tathā na kuryād ityādi |

"The gods and Asuras, who were both sprung from Prajāpati, strove together. Then the gods were, as it were, worsted, and the Asuras thought, 'This world is now certainly ours.' 2. Then they spake, 'Come, let us divide this earth, and having divided it, let us subsist thereon.' They accordingly went on dividing it with ox-hides from west to east. 3. The gods heard of it, [and] said, 'The Asuras are dividing this earth; come, we shall go to the spot where they are dividing it. Who shall we become (i.e. what shall become of us), if we do not share in it?' Placing at their head Vishṇu, the sacrifice, they proceeded [thither], 4. and said, 'Put us with yourselves in possession of this earth; let us also have a share in it.' The Asuras, grudging as it were, answered, 'We give you as much as this Vishṇu can lie upon.'[119] 5. Now, Vishṇu was a dwarf. The gods did not reject that offer; [but said among themselves], 'They have given us much, [these Asuras], who have given us what is co-extensive with sacrifice.' 6. Then having placed Vishṇu to the east, they surrounded him with metres; [saying], on the south side, 'I surround thee with the Gāyatrī metre;' on the west, 'I surround thee with the Triṣṭubh metre;' on the north, 'I surround thee with the Jagatī metre.' 7. Having thus surrounded him with metres, they placed Agni (fire) on the east, and thus they went on worshipping and toiling. By this means they acquired the whole of this earth; and since by this means they acquired (samavindanta) it all, therefore [the place of sacrifice] is called vedi (from the root vid, 'to acquire'). Hence men say, 'as great as is the altar, so great is the earth;' for by it (the altar) they acquired the whole of this [earth]. Thus he who so understands this, appropriates all this [earth] from rivals, dispossesses from it rivals. 8. Then this Vishṇu, being wearied, surrounded by metres, with Agni to the east, did not advance; but then hid himself among the roots of plants. 9. The gods then exclaimed, 'What has become of Vishṇu? what has become of the sacrifice?' They said, 'Surrounded by metres, with Agni to the east, he does not advance; search for him here.' So digging, as it were, they searched for, and found him at a depth of three fingers; therefore let the altar [have a trench] three fingers deep; therefore, also, Pānchi[120] made an altar of this description for the soma sacrifice. 10. But let no one do so," etc.

The next story from the same work relates how Vishṇu became pre-eminent among the gods, and how he lost his head. Here also he is identified with sacrifice:

[119] Compare with this story the similar one quoted above in the note on R. V. vi. 69, 8 (p. 84 f.) from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, 6, 15.

[120] Pānchiḥ soma-yāgasyapi vediṁ tryangula-khātām eva mene | "Pānchi thought that the altar for the soma sacrifice also should have a trench three fingers deep." (Commentary.) Pānchi is again mentioned in the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 1, 4, 27 (p. 143), along with Āsuri and Mādhuki, where the commentator speaks of them as three munis (Āsuri-prabhṛitayas trayo munayaḥ). See Weber's Ind. Stud. i. 192, 434.

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiv. 1, 1, 1 ff.—Devāḥ ha vai satraṁ nishedur Agnir Indraḥ Somo Makho Vishṇur viśve-devāḥ anyatra eva Aśvibhyām | 2. Teshāṁ Kurukshetraṁ devayajanam āsa | tasmād āhuḥ "Kurukshetraṁ devānāṁ devayajanam" iti | tasmād yatra kva cha Kurukshetrasya nigachhati tad eva manyate "idaṁ devayajanam" iti tad hi devānāṁ devayajanam | 3. Te āsata | "śriyaṁ gachhema yaśaḥ syāma annādāḥ syāma" iti tatho eva ime satram āsate "śriyaṁ gachhema yaśaḥ syāma annādaḥ syāma" iti | 4. Te ha ūchur "yo naḥ śrameṇa tapasā śraddhayā yajnena āhutibhir yajnasya udṛicham pūrvo 'vagachhāt sa naḥ śreshṭho 'sat tad u naḥ sarveshāṁ saha" iti "tathā" iti | 5. Tad Vishṇuḥ prathamaḥ prāpa | sa devānāṁ śreshṭho 'bhavat tasmād āhur "Vishṇur devānāṁ śreshṭhaḥ" iti | 6. Sa yaḥ sa Vishṇur yajnaḥ sa | sa yaḥ sa yajno 'sau sa Ādityaḥ | tad ha idaṁ yaśo Vishṇur na śaśāka saṁyantum | tad idam apy etarhi na eva sarvaḥ iva yaśaḥ śaknoti saṁyantum | 7. Sa tisṛi-dhanvam[121] ādāya apachakrāma | sa dhanur-ārtnyā śiraḥ upastabhya tasthau | taṁ devāḥ anabhidhṛishṇuvantaḥ samantam pariṇyaviśanta | 8. Tāḥ ha vamryaḥ ūchuḥ | imāḥ vai vamryo yad upadīkāḥ | "yo 'sya jyām apyadyāt kim asmai prayachheta" iti "annādyam asmai prayachhema api dhanvann apo 'dhigachhet tathā asmai sarvam annādyam prayachhema" iti | 9. Tasya upaparāśritya jyām apijakshus tasyāṁ chhinnāyāṁ dhanur-ārtnyau vishphurantyau Vishṇoḥ śiraḥ prachichhidatuḥ | 10. Tad ghriṇṇ iti papāta | tat patitvā 'sāv Ādityo 'bhavat | atha itaraḥ prāṇ eva prāvṛijyata | tad yad ghriṇṇ ity apatat tasmād gharmaḥ | atha yat prāvṛijyata tasmād pravargyaḥ | 11. Te devāḥ abruvan | "mahān vata no vīro 'pādi" iti tasmād mahāvīraḥ | tasya yo raso vyaksharat tam pāṇibhiḥ sammamṛijus tasmāt samrāṭ | 12. Taṁ devāḥ abhyasṛijyanta[122] yathā vittiṁ vetsyamānāḥ evam | tam Indraḥ prathamaḥ prāpa | tam anvangam anunyapadyata | tam paryagṛihṇāt tam parigṛihya idaṁ yaśo 'bhavad yad idam Indro yaśaḥ | yaśo ha bhavati ya evaṁ veda | 13. Sa u eva makhaḥ sa Vishṇuḥ | tataḥ Indro makhavān abhavad | makhavān ha vai tam Maghavān ity ācakshate paroksham paroksha-kāmāḥ hi devāḥ | 14.

[121] This word occurs also in Śatap. Br. xi. 1, 5, 10; in Taitt. S. i. 8, 19, 1, and Taitt. Br. ii. 7, 9, 2, in all which places it is explained by the Comm. tisṛibhir ishubhir yuktaṁ (or sahitaṁ) dhanva (or dhvnuḥ).

[122] This, according to Böhtlingk and Roth, is the correct reading, in place of abhimṛijyanta, given in Weber's edition. See a parallel passage, Śatap. Br. iv. 1, 3, 5.

Tābhyo vamrībhyo 'nnādyam prāyachhan | āpo vai sarvam annañ tābhir hi idam abhiknūyam iva adanti | yad idam kiñvadanti | 15. Atha imañ Vishṇuñ yajñañ tredhhā vyabhajanta | . . . . tena apaśīrshṇā yajñena devā archantaḥ śrāmyantaś cheruḥ |

"The gods, Agni, Indra, Soma, Vishṇu, Makha, and all the [other] deities, excepting the Aśvins, were present at a sacrifice. 2. Kurukshetra was the place of their divine worship. Hence, men say that Kurukshetra is the country where the gods sacrifice. Consequently, to whatever part of Kurukshetra a man goes, he looks upon it as a place for divine worship, since it was the spot where the gods worshipped. 3. They were [there. They said], 'May we attain prosperity, become famous, and eat food.' And in the very same way these [men] attend a sacrifice [saying], 'May we attain prosperity, become famous, and eat food.' 4. Then [the gods] said, 'Whoever among us, through toil, austerity, faith, sacrifice, and oblations, first comprehends the issue of the sacrifice, let him be the most eminent of us: this [shall be] common to us all.' [To this they consented, saying], 'Be it so.' 5. Vishṇu first attained that [proposed object]. He became the most eminent of the gods: wherefore men say, 'Vishṇu is the most eminent of the gods.' 6. He who is this Vishṇu is sacrifice; he who [is] this sacrifice is the Āditya. Vishṇu could not control [his love of] this fame.[123] And the same is the case now, that every one cannot control [his love of] fame. 7. Taking his bow and three arrows, he departed. He stood, resting his head on the end of his [bended] bow. Being unable to overcome him, the gods sat down all around him. 8. Then the ants said to them (now the ants were the same as upadīkās—another name for ants), 'What will you give to him who gnaws the bowstring?' [The gods replied], 'We will give him the enjoyment of food, and he shall find waters even in the desert; so shall we give him every enjoyment of food.' 9. [The ants, then], approaching, gnawed his bowstring. When that was cut, the ends of the bow, starting asunder, cut off the head of Vishṇu. 10. It fell, making a sound (ghṛiṇ). That having fallen, became that Āditya. Then the rest of him became extended towards the east. Since the head fell with the sound of ghṛiṇ, hence gharma, ['the [123] It seems as if there were a play of words here, the word yaśaḥ, "fame," having reference to the words sa yaḥ sa Vishṇuḥ, etc., sa yaḥ sa yajñaḥ, etc. "He who [is] this Vishṇu," etc. "He who [is] this sacrifice," etc.

sacrificial kettle,' received its name]; and since he became extended, (prāvṛijyata), the pravargya [received its appellation]. 11. The gods then said, 'A great hero (mahān vīraḥ) of ours has fallen.' Hence arose the name of mahāvīra (a sacrificial vessel).[124] They wiped (sammamṛijuḥ) with their hands the fluid (blood) which flowed from him. Hence arose the name of samrāṭ. 12. The gods rushed towards him (Vishṇu), as men about to obtain property do. Indra first reached him. He came into contact with him limb by limb. He embraced him. Having embraced him, he became this fame, which Indra is. He who so knows this becomes fame. 13. That Vishṇu was indeed Makha.[125] Hence Indra became Makhavat (the possessor or associate of Makha). He is Makhavat: they call him Maghavat esoterically; for the gods love what is esoteric. 14. They (the gods) gave food to those ants. All food is water; for with water men, as it were, moisten the food which they eat: as the common saying is. 15. Then they divided into three portions this Vishṇu, the sacrifice. . . . . With that headless sacrifice (see above), the gods went on worshipping and toiling."

I am indebted to Professor Weber for the next two passages; the first from the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka,[126] and the second from the Pancha-[124] A long account is given of the gharma, pravargya, and mahāvīra in Katyāyāna's Śrauta Sūtras, xxvi.

[125] In regard to this word I quote the explanation of Böhtlingk and Roth, s. v. 2 c: "This is the name of a malign mythical being, as is to be conjectured from the following passages, R. V. x. 171, 2: tvam Makhasya dodhataḥ śiro ava tvacho bharaḥ| ('Thou hast smitten off the head, the skin, of the furious Makha'); ix. 101, 13, apa śvānam arādhasaṁ hata Makhaṁ va Bhṛigavaḥ | ('Drive away the niggardly dog, as the Bhṛigus did Makha'). Herewith is to be connected the mention made of Makha's head in sacrificial formulæ, Vāj. Saṁhitā, 37, 3: devī dyāvā-pṛithivī Makhasya vām adya śiro rādhyāsaṁ devayajane pṛithivyāḥ | . . . . 4. Devyo vamryo bhūtasya prathamajāḥ makhasya vo 'dya śiro rādhyāsam devayajane pṛithivyāḥ | ('O divine heaven and earth, may I rightly prepare for you to-day the head of Makha, on the part of the earth where the gods sacrificed. . . . 4. O divine ants, firstborn of created things, may I rightly prepare for you the head of Makha on the part of the earth where the gods sacrificed'); ibid. 11, 57; Taitt. S. i. 1, 8, 1; iii. 2, 4, 1, namo 'gnaye Makhaghne | Makhasya mā yaśo 'ryād ity āhavanīyam upatishṭhate | yajno vai makhaḥ ('Adoration to Agni, the slayer of Makha. May the fame of Makha come to me. So (saying), he stands by the āhavanīya-fire. Makha is sacrifice')," etc.

[126] This part of the Taitt. Ār. has now been printed in the Bibliotheca Indica, pp. 590 ff. The commentary on it will be found in pp. 371 ff.

viṁśa Brāhmaṇa, which both relate the same story which has just been given from the Śatapathā Brāhmaṇa.

Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, v. i. 1–7.—1. Devāḥ vai satram āsata ṛiddhi-parimitaṁ yaśaskāmāḥ | te 'bruvan "yan naḥ prathamaṁ yaśaḥ ṛichhāt sarveshāṁ nas tat saha asad" iti | teshāṁ kurukshetraṁ vedir āsīt | tasyai Khāṇḍavo dakshiṇārdhaḥ āsīt Tūrghnam uttarārdhaḥ Parīṇaj jaghanārdho Maravaḥ utkaraḥ | 2. Teshām Makhaṁ Vaishṇavaṁ yaśaḥ ārchhat | tad nyakāmayata | tena apākrāmat | taṁ devāḥ anvāyan yaśo 'varurutsamānāḥ | tasya anvāgatasya savyād dhanur ajāyata dakshiṇād ishavaḥ | tasmād ishudhanvam puṇya-janma yajna-janma hi | 3. Tam ekaṁ santam bahavo na abhyadhṛiśhṇuvan | tasmād ekam ishudhanvaṁ[127] vīram bahavo 'nishudhanvāḥ na abhidhṛishṇuvanti | so 'ṣmayata "ekam mā santam bahavo na abhyadharshishur" iti | tasya śishmīyāṇasya tejo 'pākrāmat | tad devāḥ oshadhīshu nyamṛijyuḥ | te śyāmākāḥ abhavan | smayākāḥ vai nāma ete | 4. Tat smayākānāṁ smayākatvam | tasmād dīkshitena apigṛihya smetavyaṁ tejaso dhṛityai | sa dhanuḥ pratiskabhya atishṭhat | tāḥ upadīkāḥ abruvan | "varaṁ vṛiṇāmahai | atha vaḥ imaṁ randhayāma | yatra kva cha khanāma tad apo 'bhiṭṛiṇadāma" iti | tasmād upadīkāḥ yatra kva cha khananti tad apo 'bhiṭṛindanti | 5. Vārevṛitaṁ hy āsām | tasya jyām apyādan | tasya dhanur vipravamāṇaṁ śiraḥ udavartayat | tad dyāvāpṛithivī anuprāvartata | yat prāvartata tat pravargyasya pravargyatvam | yad ghrāṁ ity apatat tad gharmasya gharmatvam | mahato vīryam apaptad iti tad mahāvīrasya mahāvīratvam | 6. Yad asyāḥ samabharaṁs tat samrājaḥ samrāṭtvam | taṁ stṛitaṁ devatās tredhā vyagṛihṇata | Agniḥ prātaḥsavanam Indro mādhyandinaṁ savanaṁ Viśvedevās tṛitīya-savanam | tena apaśīrshṇā yajnena yajamānāḥ na āśisho 'vārundhata na suvargaṁ lokam abhyajayan | te devāḥ Aśvināv abruvan | 7. "Bhishajau vai sthaḥ | idaṁ yajnasya śiraḥ pratidhattam" iti | tāv abrūtāṁ "varaṁ vṛiṇāvahai grahaḥ eva nāv atrāpi gṛihyatām" iti | tābhyām etam āśvinam agṛihṇan | tāv etad yajnasya śiraḥ pratyadhattāṁ yat pravargyaḥ | tena saśīrshṇā yajnena yajamānāḥ ava āśisho 'rundhata | abhi suvargaṁ lokam ajayan | yat pravargyam praviṇakti yajnasya eva tach chhiraḥ pratidadhāti | tena saśīrshṇā yajnena yajāmāno 'va āśisho rundhe 'bhi suvargaṁ lokaṁ jayati | tasmād eshu āśvina-pravayāḥ iva yat pravargyaḥ |

[127] The Bibl. Ind. reads ishudhanvinam.

"The gods, desirous of glory, were attending a sacrifice complete in every respect. They said, 'Whatever glory first comes to us, that shall be common to us all.' Kurukshetra was their altar. Khāṇḍava was its southern, Tūrghna its northern, and Parīṇah its hinder section. The Marus were the earth dug from it. 2. Glory came to Makha Vaishṇava among their number. This glory he eagerly desired; with it he departed. The gods followed him, seeking to obtain [this] glory. From the left [hand] of him while thus followed, a bow was produced, and from his right hand arrows. Hence a bow and arrows have a holy origin, for they are sprung from sacrifice. 3. Though many, they could not overcome him, though he was only one. Therefore many men without bows and arrows cannot overcome one hero who has a bow and arrows. He smiled, 'Though they are many, they have not overcome me who am only one.' Strength departed from him as he continued to smile. This the gods put upon the plants. They became śyāmāka grain. For they are smilers (smayākāḥ). 4. Hence this grain derives its name. Wherefore a person who has been consecrated should smile with [his mouth] shut, that he may retain his strength. He stood leaning on his bow. The ants said [to the gods], 'Let us choose a boon; and after that we shall subject him to you. Wherever we dig, let us open up water.' Hence wherever ants dig, they open up water. 5. For this was the boon which they chose. They knawed his (Vishṇu's) bowstring. His bow, starting asunder, hurled his head upwards. It travelled through heaven and earth. From its so travelling (prāvartata), the pravargya derives its name. From its falling with the sound of ghrāṁ, gharma obtained its name. Strength (vīrya) fell from the mighty one (mahataḥ): hence the mahāvīra got its name. 6. As they gathered it (samabharan) from this [earth], a samrāṭ obtains his appellation. The gods divided him when prostrate, into three parts; Agni [took] the morning oblation; Indra the midday oblation, and the Viśvedevas the third oblation. Sacrificing with this headless sacrifice, they (the gods), neither obtained blessings, nor conquered heaven. 7. The gods said to the Aśvins, 'Ye two are physicians, replace this head of the sacrifice.' They said, 'Let us ask a boon, let our graha (libation of Soma) be offered here also.' [The gods, accordingly] recognized this Aśvina [libation] for them. [The Aśvins] replaced this head of the sacrifice, which is the pravargya. Sacrificing with this sacrifice with a head, they obtained blessings, they conquered heaven.[128] When one offers the pravargya, then he replaces the head of the sacrifice. Sacrificing with this sacrifice with a head, a man obtains blessings, and conquers heaven. Hence this pravargya is principally efficacious through texts addressed to the Aśvins."

Panchaviṁs'a Brâhmaṇa, vii. 5, 6.—Devaḥ vai yaśaskāmāḥ satram āsata Agnir Indro Vāyur Makhas te 'bruvan 'yan no yaśaḥ ṛichhāt tan naḥ saha asad' iti | teshām Makhaṁ yāśaḥ ārchhat | tad ādāya apākrāmat | tad asya pra saha āditsanta tam paryayatanta | sa dhanuḥ pratishṭhabhya atishṭhat tasya dhanur-ārtnir ūrdhvā patitvā śiro 'chhinat sa pravargyo 'bhavat | yajño vai Makhaḥ | yat pravargyam pravṛiñjanti yajñasya eva tach chhiraḥ pratidadhati |

"Desirous of glory, the gods, Agni, Indra, Vāyu and Makha, were attending a sacrifice. They said, 'Whatever glory comes to us, that shall be common to us.' Glory came to Makha among their number. Taking it, he departed. The others wished to take their share in it. They surrounded him. He stood leaning on his bow. The end of his bow, springing upwards, cut off his head. He became the pravargya. Makha is sacrifice. When men offer the pravargya, they replace the head of Makha."

The Aitareya Brâhmaṇa has these two passages relating to Vishṇu, 1, 1: Agnir vai devānām avamo | Vishṇuḥ paramas | tadantareṇa sarvāḥ anyāḥ devatāḥ. "Agni is the lowest, Vishṇu the highest, among the gods; between them both are placed all the other deities." In his Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 390, note, Prof. Müller remarks that "this passage proves nothing as to the relative dignity of Agni and Vishṇu." Again, 1, 30, on quoting R. V. 1, 156, 4, the Aitareya says: Vishṇur vai devānāṁ dvārapaḥ | sa eva asmai etad dvāraṁ vivṛiṇoti. "Vishṇu is the door-keeper of the gods; he opens for him this door." The Taitt. Br. iii. 1, 5, 7, has the following: Vishṇur vai akāmayata puṇyaṁ ślokaṁ śṛiṇvīya na mā pāpī kīrttir āgachhet. "Vishṇu desired, 'May I hear a holy verse; may no ill renown reach me.'" The Taitt. S. iii. 4, 5, 1, says: Rudraḥ paśūnāṁ Tvashṭā rūpāṇāṁ Vishṇuḥ parvatā-

[128] Compare the close of the story about the Aśvins quoted from the S'atapatha Brâhmaṇa, iv. 1, 5, 1 ff., in the fifth volume of this work, pp. 250 ff.

nām Maruto ganānām adhipatayaḥ. "Rudra is the lord of beasts, Tvashṭṛi of forms, Vishṇu of mountains, the Maruts of hosts."

The following passage from the Rāmāyaṇa gives the legend of the Dwarf incarnation in its later form:

"Rāmāyaṇa (Schlegel's ed.), i. 31, 2 ff.—2. Iha Rāma mahābāho Vishṇur deva-namaskṛitaḥ | tapaś-charaṇa-yogārtham uvāsa sa mahātapāḥ | 3. Esha pūrvāśramo Rāma vāmanasya mahātmanaḥ | siddhāśramaḥ iti khyātaḥ siddho yatra mahātapāḥ | 4 Abhibhūya cha devendram purā Vairochanir Baliḥ | trailokya-rājyam bubhuje balotseka-madānvitaḥ | 5. Tato Balau tadā yajnañ yajamāne bhayārditāḥ | Indrādayaḥ suraganāḥ Vishṇum ūchur ihāśrame | 6. "Balir Vairochanir Vishṇo yajate 'sau mahābalaḥ | kāma-daḥ sarva-bhūtānām maharddhir asurādhipaḥ | 7. Ye chainam abhivartante yāchitāraḥ itastataḥ | yacheha yatra yathāvacheha sarvañ tebhyaḥ prayachchhati | 8. Sa tvañ sura-hitārthāya māyā-yogam upāśritaḥ | vāmanatvañ gato Vishṇo kuru kalyāṇam uttamam" | 9.[129] [Etasminn antare Rāma Kaśyapo 'gni-sama-prabhaḥ | Adityā sahito Rāma dīpyamānaḥ ivaujasā | 10. Devī-sahāyo bhagavān divya-varsha-sahasrakam | vratañ samāpya vara-dañ tushṭāva Madhusūdanam | 11. "Tapomayañ tapo-rāśiñ tapo-mūrtiñ tapo-dhanam | tapasā tvāñ su-taptena paśyāmi purushottamam | 12. S'arīre tava paśyāmi jagat sarvam idam prabho | tvam anādir anirdeśyas tvām ahañ śaraṇañ gataḥ" | 13. Tam uvācha Hariḥ prītaḥ Kaśyapañ dhūta-kalmasham | varañ varaya bhadrañ te varārho 'si mato mama | 14. Tach chhrutvā vachanañ tasya Mārīchaḥ Kaśyapo 'bravīt | "putratvañ gachchha bhagavann Adityāḥ mama chānagha | 15. Bhrātā bhava yavīyāñs tvañ S'akrasyāsura-sūdana | śokārtānāñ tu devānāñ sāhāyyañ kartum arhasi" | 16. Atha Vishṇur mahātejāḥ Adityāñ samajāyata | chhatrī bhikshuka-rūpeṇa kamaṇḍalu-śikhojjvalaḥ |] 17. Evam uktaḥ surair Vishṇur vāmanañ rūpam āsthitaḥ | Vairochanim upāgamya trīn yayāchātmanaḥ kramān |

[129] The following verses 9–16 seem to be rightly inclosed in brackets by Schlegel, as interpolated. A comparison of verse 8 with verse 17 shows that the latter must originally have followed immediately after the former. It will be seen, however, that in verse 19 of the text of the Bombay edition, as quoted further on, the words at the beginning of verse 17 of Schlegel's edition: Evam uktaḥ surair Vishṇuḥ ("Vishṇu being thus addressed by the deities"), are omitted, and the appearance of interpolation is avoided. Compare the versions of the story given below from the Mahābhārata and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, where the dwarf is said to have been the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi. This is also the parentage of Vishṇu as one of the twelve Ādityas.—See above, pp. 118 ff.

18. Labdhvā cha trīn kramān Vishṇuḥ, kṛitvā rūpam athādbhutam | tribhiḥ kramais tadā lokān ājahāra tri-vikramaḥ | 19. Ekena hi padā kṛitsnām pṛithivīm so 'dhyatishṭhata | dvitīyenāvyayaṁ vyoma dyāṁ tṛitīyena Rāghava | 20. Taṁ chāsuram Baliṁ kṛitvā pātāla-tala-vāsinam | trailokya-rājyam Indrāya dadāv uddhṛitya kaṇṭakam |

The readings of this passage, as given in the Bombay edition[130] i. 29, 2 ff., differ occasionally from those of Schlegel's. I subjoin them here: 2. Iha Rāma mahābāho Vishṇur deva-namaskṛitaḥ | varshāṇi subahūnīha tathā yuga-śatāni cha | 3 | tapaś-charana-yogārtham uvāsa sumahātapāḥ | [verses 3b and 4a correspond,—with only the difference of hy atra for atra,—with verse 3 of Schlegel's edition] 4b | etasminn eva kāle tu rājā Vairochanir Baliḥ | 5 | nirjitya daivata-gaṇān sendrān saha-marud-gaṇan | kārayāmāsa tad-rājyaṁ trishu lokeshu viśrutaḥ | 6 | yajnaṁ chakāra[131] sumahān asurendro mahābalaḥ | Bales tu yajamānasya devāḥ sāgni-purogamāḥ | samāgamya svayaṁ chaiva Vishṇum ūchur ihāśrame | 7 | "Balir Vairochanir Vishṇo yajate yajnam uttamam |

[130] See Prof. Weber's account of this edition in the Journal of the German Oriental Society for 1863, vol. 17, pp. 771 ff.

[131] In his note on this passage, the commentator discusses the question how Bali could sacrifice to the gods, since he was at enmity with Indra and the rest of them: Nanu "asurasya Baler deva-dvisho yāgādyanupapattir yāga-tarpaṇīya-devatābhāvād Indradīnāṁ tad-dveshyatvāt | nacha śabda-mātraṁ devatā iti yuktam artha-vāda-prāmāṇyena devatāyāḥ vigrahavattvasya uttara-mīmāṁsāyāṁ siddhāntitatvād" iti chet | na | karma-deva-ājāna-deva bhedena devānāṁ dvaividhyāt | tatra ye karmaṇā devatvam prāptās te karma-devāḥ | ājāna-devās tu yajna-mantrārtha-bhūtāḥ mantreṇa nitya-sambaddāḥ karma-devebhyaḥ prāchīnāḥ eva | tat-karma-devānāṁ dveshyatve 'py ājāna-devānāṁ yajne tarpyatve na doshaḥ | vighna-kartāro 'py atra karma-devāḥ eva | yajnādyadhikārābhāvo 'py ājāna-devānām eva sva-yashṭavya-devatāntarābhāvāt | karma-devānāṁ tv asty eva | ataḥ eva Indrādīnāṁ yajnādi-śravaṇaṁ ṇa anupannam |

"But is there not an absurdity in the idea of sacrifice, etc., being celebrated by Bali, the enemy of the gods; from there being no deities who could be gratified by it, since Indra and the rest of them were the objects of his hostility? And it is not correct to say that a god is a mere name, for in the Uttara Mīmāṁsā the corporeality of the deities is established on the authority of the Arthāvadas (illustrative passages of the Vedas). [See the passage of Sankara's Commentary on the Brahma or Vedānta Sūtras, i. 3, 28, quoted in the third vol. of this work, pp. 99 ff., especially p. 102 at the foot.] If this objection be urged, then I reply, that the case is not so; for the gods are of two kinds, work-gods, and those who are gods from their birth. (See the fifth vol. of this work, p. 17, f. note 26, and the S'atap. Br. xiv. 7, 1, 34 f.) Of these two kinds, the gods who have become such by works of merit are 'work-gods.' But it is those who are gods from their birth that are the objects of the sacrificial formulas, and eternally connected with those formulas; and they are more ancient than the 'work-gods.' Even if the 'work-gods' be objects of hostility, no exception can be taken to the supposition that the gods by birth may be gratified by sacrifice. And in asamāpta-vrate tasmin svakāryam abhipadyatām | [verses 8–15*a* correspond with verses 7–14*a* of Schlegel's ed., substituting however tapātmakam for tapo-dhanam, and purushopamam for purushottamam] 15*b* | Adityāḥ devatānāṁ cha mama chaivānuyāchitam | 16 | varaṁ varada suprīto dātum arhasi suvrata | [verses 16*b* and 17 agree with 14*b* and 15 of Schlegel's edition] 18. Ayaṁ Siddhāśramo nāma prasādāt te bhavishyati | siddhe karmaṇi deveśa uttishṭha bhagavann itaḥ | 19. Atha Vishṇur mahātejāḥ Adityāṁ samajāyata | Vāmanaṁ rūpam āsthāya Vairochanim upāgamat | 20 | trīn padān atha bhikshitvā pratigṛihya cha medinīm | ākramya lokān lokārthī sarva-loka-hite rataḥ | 21 | Mahendrāya punaḥ prādād niyamya Balim ojasā | trailokyam sa mahātejāś chakre Śakra-vaśam punaḥ |

I subjoin the text of the same passage according to Signor Gorresio's edition:

Rāmāyaṇa (Gorresio's ed.), i. 32, 2 ff.—Esha pūrvāśramo Rāma vāmanasya mahātmanaḥ | siddhāśramaḥ iti khyātaḥ siddho yatra mahāyaśāḥ | 3. Vishṇur vāmana-rūpena tapyamāno mahat tapaḥ | trailokya-rājye 'pahṛite Balinendrasya Rāghava | [verses 4, 5, 6 correspond word for word with those of Schlegel's edition] 7. Taṁ tvaṁ vāmana-rūpeṇa gatvā bhikshitum arhasi | vikramāṁs trīn mahābāho dātā hi niyataṁ sa te | 8. Bhikshito vikramān etāṁs trīn vīrya-bala-darpitaḥ | paribhūya jagannāthaṁ tubhyaṁ vāmana-rūpiṇe | 9. Ye hy enam abhiyāchante lipsamānāḥ svam īpsitam | tān kāmair īpsitaiḥ sarvān yojayaty asureśvaraḥ | 10. Sa tvaṁ trailokya-rājyaṁ no hṛitam bhūyo jagat-pate | dātum arhasi nirjitya vikramair bhūribhis tribhiḥ | 11. Ayaṁ siddhāśramo nāma siddha-karmā bhavishyati | tasmin karmaṇi saṁsiddhe tava satya-parākrama | [Gorresio's edition does not contain any verses corresponding to those marked by Schlegel as spurious, viz. lines 9–16 of his edition.] 12. Evam uktaḥ surair Vishṇur vāmanaṁ rūpam āsthitaḥ | Vairochanim upāgamya trīṇ ayāchata vikramān | [The remaining verses are word for word the same as in Schlegel's recension.]

the case before us it is the 'work-gods' who are the disturbers of the sacrifice. Further, it is the gods by birth who are incapable of performing sacrifice, because there are no other deities to whom they could offer it. [See the first vol. of this work, p. 365, note 163.] Whereas the 'work-gods' can perform sacrifice. Wherefore the tradition that Indra and the rest performed sacrifice is not absurd." It is strange for readers of the Vedic hymns to be told that Indra is not an object of worship by sacrifice.

The following is a translation of the passage according to Schlegel's edition:

Viśvāmitra speaks: "2. In this place, O large-armed Rāma, Vishṇu, the great ascetic, reverenced by the gods, dwelt for the purpose of practising austerity, and contemplation. 3. This, Rāma, was the former hermitage of the magnanimous dwarf, renowned as the 'Hermitage of the Perfect,' where the great ascetic was perfected. 4. Formerly, Bali, the son of Virochana, after conquering the chief of the gods (Indr[illegible]ree enjoyed the empire of the three worlds, intoxicated with the increase[illegible] of his power. 5. When Bali was then celebrating a sacrifice, Indra and [illegible]u for other gods, disturbed with apprehension, addressed Vishṇu in this her[illegible] give age. 6. 'That mighty Bali, son of Virochana, O Vishṇu, is now perfo[illegible] from ing sacrifice,—he who grants the desires of all creatures, the prospe[illegible]which lord of the Asuras. 7. Whatever suppliants wait upon him from wh[illegible], in ever quarter, he bestows on them in a proper manner all whatever, of any sort of thing, [they wish]. 8. Do thou, O Vishṇu, assuming a magical state for the benefit of the deities, take the shape of a dwarf, and bring about our highest welfare.' [9. At this period, O Rāma, the divine Kaśyapa, luminous as fire, glowing, as it were, with splendour, attended by the goddess Aditi, (10) having completed an act of austerity which had lasted for a thousand years of the gods, celebrated [thus] the praises of the boon-bestowing Madhusūdana: 11. 'Through intense austerity I behold thee, the supreme Spirit, whose essence is austerity, who art a congeries of austerity, the impersonation of austerity, who art rich in austerity. 12. In thy body, lord, I behold this whole universe; thou art unbeginning and ineffable; to thee I have resorted as my refuge.' 13. Then Hari, gratified, spake to Kaśyapa, whose taint of sin had been purged away: 'Ask a boon; may good attend thee; thou art regarded by me as deserving a boon.' 14. Hearing these words of his, Kaśyapa, son of Marīchi, replied: 'Sinless lord, become the son of Aditi and myself. 15. Slayer of the Asuras, become the younger brother of Śakra (Indra). Thou oughtest to succour the gods who are oppressed with grief.' 16. Vishṇu, of mighty energy, was accordingly born of Aditi, shaded by an umbrella, in the form of a mendicant, resplendent with a drinking gourd, and a lock of hair on the crown of his head.] 17. Thus addressed by the deities, Vishṇu took the form of a dwarf, and approaching the son of Virochana, begged three of his own paces. 18. Having obtained three paces, the thrice-stepping Vishṇu assumed a miraculous form, and with three paces took possession of the worlds. For with one step he occupied the whole earth, with a second the eternal atmosphere, and with a third the sky, O Rāghava. Having then assigned to the Asura Bali an abode in Pātāla (the infernal region), he gave the empire of the three worlds to Indra, after removing his enemy."

I subjoin a translation of those parts of the Bombay text which are different from Schlegel's:

2. "In this place, O great-armed Rāma, Vishṇu, the great ascetic, reverenced by the gods, dwelt very many years and hundreds of yugas, for the purpose of practising austerity and contemplation. [Verses 1 and 4*a* are almost identical with the reading of the other edition.]

But at this very period the renowned King Bali, son of Virochana, (5) having conquered the hosts of the deities, including Indra and the Maruts, ruled in their stead over the three worlds. 6. This very great and potent lord of the Asuras celebrated a sacrifice. While he was doing so, the gods, headed by Agni, assembled, and addressed Vishṇu in this hermitage. 7. 'Bali, the son of Virochana, O Vishṇu, is celebrating a grand sacrifice. Let his rite remain incomplete; and let our object be attained. [Verses 8–15*a* correspond very nearly with 7–14*a* of the other edition.] 15*b*–16*b*. O boon-bestowing, holy, deity, be well pleased, and bestow the boon which Aditi, the gods, and I solicit. [Verses 16*b* and 17 agree with 14*b* and 15 of the other ed.] 18*a*. This by thy favour shall be called Siddhāśrama (the hermitage where the work was accomplished). The work being accomplished, depart hence, O king of the gods.' 19. Then the glorious Vishṇu was born of Aditi. Assuming the form of a dwarf, he approached the son of Virochana. 20. Then having begged for three paces of ground, and having occupied the earth, he, desiring the worlds, devoted to the good of all creatures, having stalked over the worlds, (21) restored them to Mahendra (great Indra), having overcome Bali by his might. This glorious being made the three worlds again subject to Śakra (Indra)." (See note [129] above.)

I add a translation of those parts of Gorresio's text which differ from Schlegel's:

"2. This, Rāma, is the former hermitage of the magnanimous dwarf, called the 'Hermitage of the Perfect,'[131*] where the illustrious Vishṇu was perfected, (3) when performing a great act of austerity in the form of a dwarf, [at the time] when the empire of the three worlds had been taken away from Indra by Bali. [Verses 4–6 correspond word for word with those of Schlegel's edition.] 7. 'Now thou shouldst go in the form of a dwarf, and beg three paces, O large-armed. 8. For, proud of his valour and strength, after his victory over the lord of the world (Indra), he, when supplicated, will certainly give these three paces to thee [appearing] in the form of a dwarf. 9. For that lord of the Asuras fulfils the desires of all those persons who supplicate him for their accomplishment. 10. Thou, lord of the world, oughtest to give us back the empire of the three worlds which has been taken away from us, after thou hast conquered it by three vast strides. 11. This which is called Siddhāśrama (the hermitage where the work was fulfilled),[131*] shall be [a place] where this work is fulfilled, when this work has been accomplished by thee, O possessor of real might.' Thus addressed by the deities, Vishṇu assumed the form of a dwarf, and approaching the son of Virochana, begged for three paces." (The rest corresponds with Schlegel's edition, except, as above stated, in the omission of verses 9–16 there given.)

The following are two brief notices of the dwarf incarnation from the Mahābhārata:

Mahābhārata, Sāntiparva, vv. 12943 ff. — Virochanasya balavān Baliḥ putro mahāsuraḥ | abadhyaḥ sarva-lokānām sa-devāsura-rakshasām | bhavishyati sa Śakrancha sva-rājyād chārayishyati (=chyāvayishyati?) | trailokye 'prahṛite tena vimukhe cha Śachīpatau | Adityaṁ dvādaśādityaḥ sambhavishyāmi Kaśyapāt | tato rājyam pradāsyāmi Śakrāyāmita-tejase | devatāḥ sthāpayishyāmi sveshu sthāneshu Nārada | Balinchaiva karishyāmi pātāla-tala-vāsinam | Dānavancha Balim śreshṭham abadhyam sarva-daivataiḥ |

After referring to his Boar, and Man-lion incarnations, Vishṇu says to Nārada: "The great Asura Bali, the strong son of Virochana, shall be indestructible by all beings, including gods, Asuras, and Rākshasas. He shall oust Śakra (Indra) from his kingdom. When the three worlds have been taken by Bali, and the lord of Śachi (Indra) has been put to flight, I shall be born in the form of the twelve Ādityas, the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi. I will then restore his empire to Śakra of boundless energy; will reinstate the gods in their several positions; will place Bali in Pātāla, the eminent Dānava Bali, indestructible by all the gods."

[131*] The participle siddha means both "perfect" and "accomplished."

Mahābhārata, Vanaparva, vv. 484 ff.—[132]Aditer api putratvam etya Yādava-nandana | tvaṁ Vishṇur iti vikhyātaḥ Indrād avarajo vibhuḥ | śiśur bhūtvā divaṁ khancha pṛithivīncha parantapa | tribhir vikramaṇaiḥ Kṛishṇa krāntavān asi tejasā | samprāpya divam ākāśam āditya-sadane sthitaḥ | atyārohaścha bhūtātman bhāskaraṁ svena tejasā | prādurbhāva-sahasreshu teshu teshu tvayā vibho | adharma-ruchayaḥ Kṛishṇa nihatāḥ śataśo' surāḥ | "And thou, Kṛishṇa, of the Yādava race, having become the son of Aditi, and being called Vishṇu, the younger brother of Indra, the all-pervading, becoming a child, O vexer of thy foes, hast by thy energy traversed the sky, the atmosphere, and the earth, in three strides. Having attained to the sky and the ether, and occupied the abode of the Ādityas, thou, O soul of all beings, hast overpassed the sun by thine own lustre. In these thousands of thy manifestations, O all-pervading Kṛishṇa, thou hast slain hundreds of Asuras who delighted in iniquity."

The next passage is a short notice of the same incarnation from the Vishṇu Purāṇa:

Vish. Pur. iii. 1 (p. 265 of Wilson's translation; vol. iii., p. 18, of Dr. Hall's ed.).—Manvantare tu samprāpte tathā Vaivasvate dvija | vāmanaḥ Kaśyapād Vishṇur Adityāṁ śambabhūva ha | Tribhiḥ kramair imān lokān jitvā yena mahātmanā | Pūrandarāya trailokyaṁ dattaṁ nihata-kaṇṭakam | "So when the Vaivasvata manvantara had arrived, Vishṇu was born as a dwarf, the son of Aditi and Kaśyapa. By this great being, after he had conquered these worlds by three paces, the three worlds were given to Purandara (Indra), his enemy being destroyed."

The story of Vishnu's incarnation as a dwarf is told in a greatly developed form in the fifteenth and following sections of the eighth Book of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. As the whole narrative is too long to be quoted here in extenso, I shall give an abstract of the contents of these sections, translating in full some of those portions which appear the most important. The story commences thus:

[132] See Lassen's Indian Antiquities, vol. i., p. 489, note, and p. 779 f. and note (pp. 587, and 921 of the second edition).

Bhāgavata Purāṇa, viii. 15, 1.—Baleḥ pada-trayam bhūmeḥ kasmād Harir ayāchatā | bhūtveśvaraḥ kṛipaṇa-val labdārtho 'pi babandha tam | 2. Etad veditum ichhāmo mahat kautūhalaṁ hi naḥ | yajneśvarasya pūrṇasya bandhanaṁ chāpy anāgasaḥ |

The king asks: "Why did Hari, the lord of creatures, ask, like a poor man, three paces of land from Bali? and why, when he had obtained his object, did he bind him? 2. This we desire to know; and we have a great curiosity;—and also why an innocent being was bound by the perfect lord of sacrifice?" The sage Śuka replies (verses 3 ff.) that after Bali had been deprived of life by Indra, he was restored by the Brāhmans of the race of Bhṛigu, who consecrated him for supreme dominion, and celebrated for him a Viśvajit sacrifice, which had the virtue of enabling him to conquer all his enemies. He then sets out (verse 11), attended by a host of Daityas, to attack the capital of Indra, which is described with all its splendours and attractions. When Bali had invested the city (verse 23), Indra inquires of his spiritual preceptor how it is that his enemy has acquired this tremendous power, which appears altogether irresistible.

The preceptor replies (verses 15, 28 ff.): Jānāmi Maghavan śatror unnater asya kāraṇam | śishyāyopabhṛitaṁ tejo Bhṛigubhir brahma-vādibhiḥ | 29. Bhavad-vidho bhavān vā'pi varjayitveśvaraṁ Harim | nāsya śaktaḥ puraḥ sthātum kṛitāntasya yathā janāḥ | 30. Tasmād nilayam (=adarśanam,[133] Comm.) utsṛijya yūyaṁ sarve trivishṭapam | yāta kālam pratīkshanto yataḥ śatror viparyayaḥ | 31. Esha vipra-balodarkaḥ sampraty ūrjita-vikramaḥ | teshām evāvamānena sānubandho vinankshyati |

"I know, Maghavan, the cause of the exaltation of this your enemy to be the might imparted to their pupil by the Bhṛigus, the declarers of the Veda. 29. No one such as you, not even you yourself, [nor any one] excepting only Hari the lord, is able to stand before him, as men [are unable to confront] death. 30. Wherefore do ye all, abandoning heaven, disappear, expecting [the operation of] time, from which [shall come] the overthrow of your enemy. 31. He now reaps the fruits of Brahmanical power, and thus his prowess has become augmented. Through contempt of these same Brahmans, he shall perish with all his dependents."

[133] The word nilaya, however, may also mean "abode," in which case the sense will be "abandoning heaven, your abode, depart," etc.

(The prophecy here uttered in regard to the fall of Bali as a result of his disregard of the Brahmans will hereafter be found to be fulfilled. See below, sect. 20, vv. 14 ff., p. 145.)

Following the advice of their preceptor, Indra and the other gods abandoned heaven, and Bali took possession of the celestial capital, when the Bhṛigus celebrated for him a hundred aśvamedhas (or horse-sacrifices).

The sixteenth section opens with an account of the distress of Aditi, the mother of the gods, at the discomfiture of her sons by the Daityas. She receives a visit from her husband the Prajāpati Kaśyapa, who makes various conjectures about the cause of her apparent unhappiness, of which (verse 15 f.) he receives an explanation. He then replies:

(Sect. 16, vv. 18 ff.)—Evaṃ abhyarthito 'dityā Kas tām āha smayann iva | aho māyā-balaṃ Vishṇoḥ sneha-baddham idaṃ jagat | 19. Kva deho bhautiko 'nātmā kva chātmā prakṛiteḥ paraḥ | kasya ke pati-putrādyāḥ mohaḥ eva hi kāraṇam | 20. Upatishṭhasva Purusham bhagavantaṃ Janārdanam | sarva-bhūta-guhāvāsaṃ Vasudevaṃ jagad-gurum | 21. Sa vidhāsyati te kāmān Harir dīnānukampanaḥ | amoghā bhagavad-bhaktir netareti matir mama |

18. "Being thus entreated by Aditi, Ka [134] (Kaśyapa) answers her, as it were smiling, 'O, the power of Vishṇu's illusion! this world is bound by affection. 19. Where is this elemental body, which is not soul? and where is soul, which is superior to matter? (i.e. how great is the superiority of soul to the body!) [135] Who are the husband, or the sons, or other relatives, of any person? [136] (i.e. there are no such things

[134] For an explanation of this word see above, p. 15, note 43. Here it stands for Kaśyapa.

[135] Compare for this idiom the Raghuvaṃśa, i. 2: Kva sūrya-prabhavo vaṃśaḥ kva chālpa-vishayā matiḥ | "Where is the race descended from the Sun, and where is my mind of which the (proper) objects are so small?" i.e. the disproportion between the two things is great.

[136] This sentiment appears to be here intended as orthodox: but similar observations, when made in the Rāmāyaṇa (Schlegel's and Bombay editions), ii. 108, 3 f., are spoken of as dharmāpeta, which the scholiast in the Bombay edition interprets as = dharma-mārga-viddhaṃ lokāyatika-matāvalambanam, i.e., "opposed to righteousness, and derived from the tenets of the Lokāyatikas."[2] The words there are: kaḥ kasya purusho bandhuḥ kim āpyaṃ kasya kenachit | eko hi jāyate jantur ekaḥ eva vinaśyati | 4 | tasmād mātā pitā cheti Ṛāma sajjeta yo naraḥ | unmattaḥ iva sa jneyo nāsti kaśchid hi kasyachit | 3. "What person is the relation of any (other)? what affinity has any one with another? For a creature is born alone, and perishes alone. 4. Whosoever, as real relations); delusion alone creates them. 20. Betake thyself to Purusha, the divine Janārdana, who dwells in the heart of all creatures, Vāsudeva, the preceptor of the world. 21. Hari, who compassionates the afflicted, will fulfil thy desires: devotion to the lord, and that alone, is never fruitless; such is my judgment."

Aditi then asks how she is to worship Vishṇu in such a way as to obtain her desire, and receives from Kaśyapa an account (extending to the end of the section) of the milk ceremonial (payo-vrata) which she is to perform.

She accordingly celebrates the prescribed rite (sect. 17 ff.), when Hari, the primeval Purusha, appears to her in yellow vesture, with four arms, bearing his shell, discus, and club. She implores his succour, and receives an assurance that he has been gratified by her service, which shall not remain unfruitful. He goes on to say:

(Sect. 17, vv. 18 ff.)—Tvayārchitaś chāham apatya-guptaye payo-vratenānuguṇaṁ samīḍitaḥ | svāṁśena putratvam upetya te sutān goptāsmi Mārīcha-tapasy adhishṭhitaḥ | 19. Upadhāva patim bhadre prajāpatim akalmasham | māṁ cha bhāvayatī patyāv evaṁrūpam avasthitam | 20. Naitat parasmai ākhyeyam pṛishṭayā 'pi kathanchana | sarvaṁ sampadyate devi deva-guhyaṁ susaṁvṛitam | 21. Śukaḥ uvācha | etāvad uktvā bhagavāṁs tatraivāntaradhīyata | Aditir durlabhaṁ labdhvā Harer janmātmani prabhoḥ | upādhāvat patim bhaktyā parayā kṛita-kṛitya-vat | 22. Sa vai samādhi-yogena Kaśyapas tad abudhyata | pravishṭam ātmani Harer aṁśaṁ hy avitathekshaṇaḥ | 23. So 'dityāṁ vīryām ādhatta tapasā chira-sambhṛitam | samāhita-manāḥ rājan dāruṇy agniṁ yathā 'ṇilaḥ |

"'Worshipped by thee with the milk ceremonial for the deliverance of thy offspring, and lauded according to my attributes, I shall, with a portion of myself, become thy son, and deliver thy children, presiding over the austerity of Mārīcha (Kaśyapa). 19. Wait, virtuous female, upon thy husband, the sinless Prajāpati, meditating on me, who in therefore, is attached to any person, (thinking 'this is my) father or mother,' is mad: No one is anything to any other." The word āpyam in verse 3, which I have rendered by "affinity," according to the Vedic sense of the term, is explained by the commentator as =prāpyam, "to be obtained." The clause, according to him, would thus mean: "What is to be obtained by any one person from any other?" The word may here, however, perhaps have the Vedic sense, although it is unusual, if not elsewhere unknown, in modern Sanskrit. Gorresio's edition, ii. 116, 12, has kāryam instead of āpyam, thus making the meaning to be, "What has any one person to do with any other?"

this form abide within him. 20. This must not in any way be disclosed by thee to any one, even though thou art asked. The secrets of the gods, O goddess, issue in good [only] when they are kept concealed.' 21. When the deity had said so much, he disappeared on the spot. Aditi, having obtained the [boon], so hard to obtain, that Hari, the lord, should be born of her, waited on her husband with the greatest devotion, like one who had obtained her object. 22. Kaśyapa with certain intuition understood by the power of contemplation that a portion of Hari had entered into him. 23. With contemplative mind, he impregnated Aditi with the generative fluid which he had accumulated by long austerity, as the wind forces fire into wood."

We have already seen that Vishṇu, in his character as one of the Ādityas, also, was the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi (see above, p. 118 ff.). The connexion with the old legend is therefore preserved here, as well as in the story given in the Bombay edition of the Rāmāyaṇa, above, pp. 132 and 134.

The eighteenth section relates how Hari was born of Aditi, to the great delight of all creatures, and how he then took the form of a dwarf:

(Sect. 18, v. 12).—Yat tad vapur bhāti-vibhūshaṇāyudhair avyaktachid vyaktam adhārayad Hariḥ | babhūva tenaiva sa vāmano baṭuḥ sampaśyator divya-gatir yathā naṭaḥ | "With that body which Hari, the invisible spirit, had assumed, and which was manifested by splendour, by its ornaments, and by weapons,—with that same body, he, whose ways are supernatural, became, while [his parents] were looking on, a dwarfish Brahmanical student, as an actor [changes his character]."

He afterwards went to attend the aśvamedha sacrifices celebrated for Bali by the Bhṛigus on the banks of the river Narmadā.[137] Bali welcomes the young Brahman dwarf with respect, offers him a seat, aud washes his feet. The narrative then proceeds:

(Sect. 18, v. 28 ff.)—Tat-pāda-śauchaṁ jana-kalmashāpahaṁ sa dharma-vid mūrdhny adhāt sumangalam | yad deva-devo Girišaś chandramaulir dadhāra mūrdhnā parayā cha bhaktyā | 29. Balir uvācha | svāgataṁ te namas tubhyaṁ brahman kiṁ karavāma te | brahmarshīṇāṁ tapaḥ sākshād manye tv ārya vapur-dharam | . . . . 32. Yad yad baṭo vānchhasi tat pratīchha me tvām arthinam vipra-sutānutarkaye | gāṁ

[137] It is to be noticed that the scene of this sacrifice is on earth, though Bali, as we were told above, had taken possession of Indra's heaven.

kāṅchanaṁ guṇavad dhāma mṛishṭaṁ ṭathā 'nna-peyam uta vā vipra-kanyām | grāmān samṛiddhāṁs turagān gajān vā rathāṁs tathā 'rhattama sampratīchha | 28. "Acquainted with duty, he placed upon his head the auspicious water with which the Brahman's feet had been washed, which removes the sins of men, and which Giriśa (Śiva), the god of gods, who wears the moon for a frontal ornament, bore on his head, with supreme devotion. 29. Bali said: 'Welcome to thee, reverence to thee, Brahman, what can we do for thee? honourable man, I regard thee as the visible, impersonated austerity of Brahman-sages. . . . . 32. Ask of me, student, whatever thou desirest; son of a Brahman, I conclude that thou art a suppliant; ask, most venerable youth, a cow, pure gold, an embellished house, food and drink, or a Brahman's daughter, flourishing villages, horses, or elephants, and carriages.'"

In section nineteenth the dwarf answers Bali in a speech complimentary to himself and his ancestors, and craftily, with a hypocritical pretence of moderation not very creditable to a god, ends with the seemingly modest demand of three paces of ground:

(Sect. 19, v. 16 ff.)—Tasmāt tvatto mahīm īshad vriṇe 'haṁ varadarshabhāt | padāni trīṇi daityendra sammitānī padā mama | 17. Nānyat te kāmaye rājan vadānyāj jagadīśvarāt | nainaḥ prāpnoti vai vidvān yāvad-artha-pratigrahaḥ | 18. Balir uvācha | Aho Brāhmaṇa-dāyāda vāchas te vriddha-sammatāḥ | tvam bālo bāliśa-matiḥ svārtham praty abudho yathā | 19. Māṁ vachobhiḥ samārādhya lokānām ekam īśvaram | pada-trayaṁ vriṇīte yo 'buddhimān dvīpa-dāśusham | 20. Na pumān mām upravrajya bhūyo yāchitum arhati | tasmād vṛitti-karīm bhūmiṁ baṭo kāmam pratīchha me | 21. Śrī-bhagavān uvācha | yāvanto vishayāḥ preshṭhās trilokyām ajitendriyam | na śaknuvanti te sarve pratipūrayituṁ nṛipa | 22. Tribhiḥ kramair asantushṭo dvīpenāpi na pūryate | nava-varsha-sametena saptadvīpa-varechhayā | . . . . . 27. Tasmāt trīṇi padāny eva vriṇe tvad varadarshabhāt | etāvataiva siddho 'ham vittaṁ yāvat prayojanam | 28. Śukaḥ uvācha | ity uktaḥ sa hasann āha vāñchhitam pratigṛihyatām | vāmanāya mahīṁ dātuṁ jagrāha jala-bhājanam |

"Wherefore I ask from thee, the chief of the bountiful, a small portion of ground, three paces, lord of the Daityas, measured by my step. 17. I desire nothing more from thee, the generous lord of the world. A wise man incurs no sin when he asks [only] as much as he needs.

18. Bali answered: 'Thy words, son of a Brahman, are such as beseem an old man. Thou art a youth, with the mind of a stripling, and like one ignorant regarding his own interest. 19. He is not wise who, having by words reverenced me, the sole lord of the worlds, asks me, the bestower of continents, for three paces of ground. 20. It is not fit that a man should come to me and make repeated requests: wherefore freely ask me for ground sufficient for thy subsistence.' 21. The deity replied: 'All the desirable objects in the three worlds cannot, O king, satisfy the man whose senses are unsubdued. 22. He who is not contented with three paces of ground will not be satiated even with a continent, and its nine divisions (varshas), since he will desire the gift of the seven continents.[138] . . . . 27. Wherefore I desire from thee, who art the chief of the bountiful, only three paces of ground. With so much as suffices for my maintenance I am complete.' 28. Being thus addressed, Bali said, smiling, 'take what thou desirest;' and with the view of giving the land to the dwarf, he took a vessel of water."

Uśanas,[139] however, Bali's priest and preceptor, recognizing Vishṇu in the dwarf, and knowing the god's designs, here interposes, and warns the monarch against granting the ground solicited:

(Sect. 19, v. 29 ff.)—Vishṇave kshmām pradāsyantam Uśanā asureśvaram | jānanś chikīrshitaṁ Vishṇoḥ śishyam prāha vidāṁ varaḥ | 30. Sʻukrāchāryaḥ uvācha | Esha Vairochane sākshād bhagavān Vishṇur avyayaḥ | Kaśyapād Aditer jāto devānāṁ kārya-sādhakaḥ | 31. Pratiśrutaṁ tvayaitasmai yad anartham ajānatā | na sādhu manye daityānām mahān upagato 'nayaḥ | 32. Esha te sthānam aiśvaryaṁ śriyaṁ tejo yaśaḥ śrutam | dāsyaty āchhidya Sʻakrāya māyā-māṇavako Hariḥ | 33. Tribhiḥ kramair imān lokān viśva-kāyaḥ kramishyati | sarvasvaṁ Vishṇave dattvā mūḍha vartishyase katham | 34. Kramato gāṁ padaikena dvitīyena divaṁ vibhoḥ | khaṁ cha kāyena mahatā tārtīyasya kuto gatiḥ | 35. Nishṭhām te narake manye hy apradātuḥ pratiśrutam | pratiśrutasya yo 'nīśaḥ pratipādayitum bhavān | 36. Na tad dānam praśaṁsanti yena vṛittir vipadyate | dānaṁ yajnas tapaḥ karma loke vṛittimato yataḥ | 37. Dharmāya yaśase 'rthāya kāmāya svajanāya cha | panchadhā vibhajan vittam ihāmutra cha modate | 38. Atrāpi bahvṛichair gitaṁ śṛiṇu me

[138] See the first volume of this work, pp. 489 ff. for an account of these continents and varshas.

[139] See the second volume of this work, p. 386, note 65.

'sura-sattama | satyam om iti yat proktaṃ yan nety āhānṛitaṃ hi tat | 39. Satyam pushpa-phalaṃ vidyād ātma-vṛikshasya jīvataḥ | vṛikshe 'jīvati tan na syād anṛitaṃ mūlam ātmanaḥ | 40. Tad yathā vṛikshaḥ unmūlaḥ śushyaty udvartate 'chirāt | evaṃ nashṭānṛitaḥ sadyaḥ ātmā śushyed na saṃśayaḥ | 41. Parāg riktam apūrṇaṃ vai aksharaṃ yat tad "om" iti | yat kinchid "om" iti brūyāt tena richyeta vai pumān | 42. Bhikshave sarvam om kurvan nālaṃ kāmena chātmane | athaitat pūrṇam abhyātmaṃ yach cha nety anṛitaṃ vachaḥ | 43. Sarvaṃ nety anṛitam brūyāt sa dushkīrtiḥ śvasan mritaḥ | strīshu narma-vivāhe cha vṛitty-arthe prāṇa-sankaṭe | go-brāhmaṇārthe hiṃsāyāṃ nānṛitaṃ syāj jugupsitam |

29. "Uśanas, chief of the wise, knowing Vishṇu's intention, thus addresses his pupil, the chief of the Asuras, who was about to give the earth to that deity: 30. 'This, O son of Virochana, is manifestly the divine, undecaying Vishṇu himself, born of Kaśyapa and Aditi, [to be] the fulfiller of the purposes of the gods. 31. That ill-advised promise which thou, unwittingly, hast made to him, is not, I consider, to the advantage of the Daityas;—a great error has been committed. 32. This illusory dwarf, having bereft thee of thy place, dominion, prosperity, splendour, renown, and sacred knowledge, will give them to Śakra. 33. He whose body is the universe, will traverse these worlds in three strides; fool, where shalt thou abide, when thou hast given all thy possessions to Vishṇu? 34. Where shall there be room for the third pace of the all-pervading being when he has traversed the earth with one pace, the sky with a second, and [occupied] the heaven with his vast body? 35. I think that thy abode shall be in hell, when thou art unable to give all that thou hast promised, since thou shalt not be master (so as to bestow it) of what thou hast engaged to give. 36. Men do not approve that gift by which [the donor's] livelihood is ruined: for [it is understood] in the world that gifts, sacrifices, austerities, ceremonies, are only performed by those who have the means. 37. The man who divides his property into five parts destined severally for purposes of religion, renown, personal interest, pleasure and family support, is happy in this world as well as in the next.[140] 38. Hear from me, most excellent of the Asuras, what has been sung on this subject by teachers of the Rigveda: to say "yes" is to be true; to say "no" is to be false. 39. Know that truth is celebrated as the flower and fruit of that tree, one's self, while it is alive; but this cannot be the case unless the tree lives; [therefore, when it tends to our preservation], falsehood is the root of one's self. 40.

[140] The drift of verses 38 ff., which are founded upon a passage of the Veda quoted by the commentator, is thus explained by him: Nanu tarhi pratiśrutya "na" iti

katham anṛitaṁ vāchyam | tatra āha sārdhhaiḥ shaḍbhiḥ | atrāpi satyānṛita-vyavasthāyām bahvṛicha-śrutyā hi prathamam "'om' iti satyaṁ 'na' iti anṛitam" ity ādinā satyānṛitayor lakshaṇa-pūrvakaṁ stuti-nindābhyāṁ satyaṁ vihitam anṛitaṁ cha nishiddham anantaraṁ cha "parāg vai etad riktam aksharam" ityādinā satye doshān anṛite cha guṇān uktvā "tasmāt kāle eva dadyāt kāle na dadyāt tat satyānṛite mithunīkaroti" ity upasaṁhāreṇa vṛitti-sankaṭādishv anṛitam apy anujñātam tam imaṁ śruty-arthaṁ darśayann āha | "But the objection arises, how, after promising, can a man say 'no,' and thus be guilty of falsehood? To this he replies in six and a half verses. Here, with a view to fixing the rules regarding truth and falsehood, after having first of all stated the characteristic marks of each, according to these words of the Rigvedic doctors, '"yes" is truth, and "no" is falsehood,' etc., and having by praise and blame shown that truth is enjoined and falsehood forbidden, he cites the clause, 'this word denotes removal and evacuation,' etc., to indicate the faults of truth and the virtues of falsehood; and lastly, after quoting the words, 'he combines truth and falsehood by saying "let a man give and withhold on the proper occasions,"' he sums up by deciding that falsehood is permitted when necessary for the sake of subsistence, and in straits, etc. Propounding this doctrine of scripture, he says, etc."

The words of the passage here referred to, from a Bahvṛicha-S'ruti (Rigveda Brāhmaṇa or Upanishad, which is unknown to me), as quoted by the commentator in his notes on verses 40, 41, and 42 of this passage, are as follows: "Om" iti satyaṁ "na" ity anṛitam | tad etat pushpam phalam vācho yat satyam | sa ha īśvaro yaśasvī kalyāṇa-kīrtir bhavitā | pushpaṁ hi phalaṁ vāchaḥ satyaṁ vadati | atha etad mūlaṁ vācho yad anṛitam | tad yathā vṛikshaḥ āvirmūlaḥ śushyati sa udvartate evam eva anṛitaṁ vadann āvirmūlam ātmānaṁ karoti sa śushyati sa udvartate | tasmād anṛitaṁ na vaded dayeta tv enena | [anena tv anṛitena "dayeta" sankaṭeshv ātmānaṁ rakshed iti śruty-arthaḥ | Comm.] parāg vai etad riktam aksharam yad etad "om" iti | tad yat kincha "om" ity āha atra eva asmai tad richyate | sa yat sarvam "oṁ" kuryād richyād ātmānaṁ sa kāmebhyo nālaṁ syāt | Atha etat pūrṇam abhyātmaṁ yad "na" iti | sa yat sarvaṁ "na" iti brūyāt pāpikā 'sya kīrtir jāyeta | sā enam tatra eva kunyāt | Tasmāt kāle eva dadyāt kāle na dadyāt tat satyānṛite mithunīkaroti |

"'Yes' (om) is true, 'no' is false. Truth is the flower, and the fruit, of speech. He shall be lord, famous, of excellent renown: for he utters truth, the flower, and the fruit, of speech. Again, falsehood is the root of speech. Just as a tree, the root of which is exposed, dries up, and falls, so a man, uttering a falsehood, exposes his own roots, dries up, and falls. Wherefore let no man utter falsehood, but let him protect himself by it." [Such is the sense assigned to dayeta tv enena by the commentator, who adds "in straits."] "This word, 'yes,' denotes removal and emptiness. Therefore by every 'yes' which is uttered, emptiness is occasioned. The man who says always 'yes' will empty himself, and not have sufficient for his wishes. Again, the word 'no' denotes fulness in one's own interest. He who says always 'no' will acquire an evil reputation, which will straightway destroy him. Wherefore he combines truth and falsehood by [the rule] let a man give and withhold at the proper times."

Wherefore, as a tree, when uprooted, dries up and falls, so too we ourselves, if we abandon falsehood, shall undoubtedly become dried up. 41. The word "yes" denotes removal, evacuation, and emptiness; whenever, then, any person says "yes," he will be emptied out. 42. By continually saying "yes" to an applicant, a man does not retain enough to satisfy his own desires; whilst a false "no" [preserves our] full [property] for ourselves. 43. The man whose every "no" is false, is infamous, and dead even while he breathes. But falsehood is not blamable when addressed to women, or in jest, or in reference to a marriage, or for subsistence, or when life is in danger, or on behalf of cows and Brāhmans, or when one is exposed to violence.'"

Bali, however, refuses (sect. 20, vv. 2 ff.) to break his promise, whatever consequences to himself may result. He is thereupon cursed by his preceptor for his disobedience:

(Sect. 20, vv. 14 ff.)—Evam aśraddhitaṁ śishyam anādeśa-karaṁ guruḥ | śaśāpa daiva-prahitaḥ satyasandham manasvinam | 15. "Dṛiḍham paṇḍita-māny ajnaḥ stabdho 'sy asmad-upekshayā | mach-chhāsanātigo yas tvam achirād bhraśyase śriyaḥ" | 16. Evaṁ śaptaḥ sva-guruṇā satyād na chalito mahān | vāmanāya dadāv enām architvodaka-pūrvakam | 17. Vindhyāvalis tadā "gatya patnī jālaka-mālinī[141] | āninye kalaśaṁ haimam avanejany-apām[142] bhṛitam | 18. Yajamānaḥ svayaṁ tasya śrīmat-pāda-yugaṁ mudā | avanijyāvahad mūrdhni tad-apo viśva-pāvanīḥ |

14. "The preceptor, impelled by fate, cursed his disciple, thus devoid of faith and disobedient, yet wise and true to his promise; [saying], 15. 'Though thou regardest thyself as extremely learned, thou art ignorant and stubborn in thy contempt of us: but thou who transgressest my commandment, shalt soon fall from thy prosperous state.' 16. Though thus cursed by his preceptor, this great [monarch], who would not depart from truth, gave this [earth] to the dwarf, after making an obeisance and pouring water [on his hand]. 17. Then his wife Vindhyāvali, wearing a necklace of pearls, approaching, brought a golden vessel filled with water for ablution. 18. Next the offerer of the sacrifice, after himself washing with delight the blessed feet [of the Brahman], bore upon his head the world-purifying water which had been so employed."

This magnanimous act of Bali is applauded by the celestials, and rewarded by them with a shower of flowers, and by strains of music. Immediately, however, the body of the dwarf begins to expand:

[141] Jālakam muktābharaṇa-viśeshaḥ | Comm.
[142] Avanejanīnām apām | Comm.

(Sect. 20, v. 21.)—Tad vāmanaṁ rūpam avardhatādbhutaṁ Harer anantasya guṇa-trayātmakam | bhūḥ khaṁ diśo dyaur vivarāḥ payodhayas tiryaṇ-nṛi-devāḥ ṛishayo yad āsata | "That dwarfish body of the infinite Hari, consisting of the three qualities, increased miraculously, [that body] in which were comprehended the earth, the air, the points of the compass, the sky, the abysses, the oceans, brutes, men, gods and ṛishis."

A further account of this vast body, of the effect which the appearance of it produced on the Asuras, and other beings, is given in verses 22–32; and at length the strides of the deity are thus described:

(Sect. 20, v. 33.)—Kshitiṁ padaikena Baler vichakrame nabhaḥ śarīreṇa diśaścha bāhubhiḥ | padaṁ dvitīyaṁ kramatas trivishṭapaṁ na vai tṛitīyāya tadīyam aṇv api | urukramasyāṅghrir upary upary atho maharjanābhyāṁ tapasaḥ paraṁ gataḥ | "He traversed the earth of Bali with one pace; and [occupied] the air with his body and the points of the compass with his arms. His second pace, as he strode, [filled] the heaven; and not even the minutest fraction of it remained for a third pace. The foot of the wide-striding deity rose upwards and upwards, and then reached beyond the Mahar-, Jana-, and Tapo-lokas."[143]

The gods assemble (sect. 21) to do homage to Hari on his victory, which they celebrate with great rejoicing, and which is proclaimed by the king of the bears:

(Sect. 21, vv. 8 ff.)—Jāmbavān ṛiksha-rājas tu bheri-śabdair manojavaḥ | vijayaṁ dikshu sarvāsu mahotsavam aghoshayat | 9. Mahīṁ sarvāṁ hṛitāṁ dṛishṭvā tri-pada-vyāja-yāchnayā | ūchuḥ sva-bhartur asurāḥ dīkshitasyātyamarshitāḥ | 10. Na vai ayam brahma-bandhur Vishṇur māyāvināṁ varaḥ | dvija-rūpa-pratichhanno deva-kāryaṁ chikīrshati | 11. Anena yāchamānena śatruṇā baṭu-rūpiṇā | sarvasvaṁ no hṛitam bhartur nyastadaṇḍasya varhishi | 12. Satya-vratasya satataṁ dīkshitasya viśeshataḥ | nānṛitam bhāṣhituṁ śakyam brahmaṇyasya dayāvataḥ | 13. Tasmād asya badhe dharmo bhartuḥ śuśrūshaṇe cha naḥ | ity āyudhāni jagṛihur Baler anucharāsuraḥ | 14. Te sarve vāmanaṁ hantuṁ śūla-paṭṭiśa-pāṇayaḥ | anichhato Baleḥ rājan prādravan jātamanyavaḥ |

8. "Jāmbavat, king of the bears, swift as thought, proclaimed this victory, the occasion of great festivity, with sound of kettledrums, in all the regions. 9. Beholding the whole earth taken from their master when consecrated for sacrifice, by an artful request for three paces of ground, the Asuras, greatly incensed, exclaimed: 10. 'This is certainly not a petty Brahman, but Vishṇu, the chief of magicians; disguised under the form of a twice-born man, he seeks to accomplish the purposes of the gods. 11. By this enemy, in the form of a suppliant student, has been taken all the property of our master, who had laid down his sceptre on the sacrificial grass. 12. Untruth cannot be uttered by one who is always devoted to truth[2]—especially when he is consecrated,—by one who is pious and compassionate. 13. Wherefore it is our duty to slay him (the dwarf), and obey our master:'—so saying, the Asuras, followers of Bali, seized their weapons. 14. Against the wish of Bali, they all ran, infuriate, pikes and axes in hand, to slay the dwarf." [144]

[143] See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa (p. 48, note, and p. 213 = pp. 98, vol. i., and 226, vol. ii., of Dr. Hall's ed.) for an account of these Lokas.

This attack of the Asuras is, however, derided by the followers of Vishṇu, who kill some of them, and they are at length restrained by Bali, who points out that time and fate are at present unfavourable to his cause. Bali is then bound in the chains of Varuṇa, and reproached by Vishṇu for failing to fulfil his promise:

(Sect. 21, v. 26.)—Atha Tārkshy-suto jnātvā Virāṭ prabhu-chikīrshitam | babandha Vāruṇaiḥ pāśair Baliṁ sautye'hani kratau | 27. Hāhākāro mahān āsīd rodasyoḥ sarvato-diśam | gṛihyamāṇe 'sura-patau Vishṇunā prabhavishṇunā | 28. Tam baddhaṁ Vāruṇaiḥ pāśair bhagavān āha vāmanaḥ | nashṭa-śriyam sthira-prajnam udāra-yaśasaṁ nṛipa | 29. Padāni trīṇi dattāni bhūmer mahyaṁ tvayā 'sura | dvābhyāṁ krāntā mahī sarvā tṛitīyam upakalpaya | 30. Yāvat tapaty asau gobhir yāvad Induḥ sahoḍubhiḥ | Yāvad varshati Parjanyas tāvatī bhūr iyaṁ tava | 31. Padaikena mayā krānto bhūrlokaḥ khaṁ diśas tanoḥ | svarlokas tu dvitīyena paśyatas te svam ātmanā | 32. Pratiśrutam adātus te niraye vāsaḥ ishyate | viśa tvaṁ nirayaṁ tasmād guruṇā chānumoditaḥ | 33. Vṛithā manorathas tasya dūra-svargaḥ (duresvargaḥ, Bombay ed.) pataty adhaḥ | yo viprāya pratiśrutya na tad arpayate 'rthitam[145] | 34. Vipra-

[144] It will be observed that here the dwarf is still represented as having that shape, though he had been above described as assuming a superhuman form and filling all the worlds. Yet though he is spoken of as a Brahman dwarf, he is said to have had followers who easily defeated the Asuras of Bali.

[145] The reading given of this line is that of Burnouf's edition. The Bombay edition has instead of it: pratiśrutasyādānena yo 'rthinaṁ vipralambhate | "who deceives a suppliant by not giving him what had been promised."

labdho dadāmīti tvayā 'haṁ chādhya-māninā | tad-vyalīka-phalam bhunkshva nirayaṁ katichit samāḥ | 26. "Then Virāṭ (Garuḍa), the son of Tārkshya, knowing the purpose of the lord, bound Bali with the bonds of Varuṇa[146] at the sacrifice on the day of the Soma libation. 27. A great lamentation arose in all the quarters of the two worlds (heaven and earth), when the Lord of the Asuras was seized by the puissant Vishṇu. 28. Him bound with the bonds of Varuṇa, whose prosperity was destroyed, but whose understanding was firm, and whose renown was vast, the divine dwarf thus addressed: 29. 'Asura, three paces of ground were given to me by thee: with two paces the entire world has been traversed: find a place for the third. 30. This world of thine extends as far as that [sun] warms with his beams, as far as the moon shines with the stars, as far as Parjanya rains. 31. With one pace I traversed the region of the earth, and [occupied] the air and regions with my body; and whilst thou wast looking on, I [traversed] the sky with a second [pace, filling] thy possessions with myself. 32. As thou hast not given what was promised, it is my pleasure that thou shalt dwell in the infernal regions; enter therefore thither, with the approbation of thy preceptor. 33. That man's desires are frustrated, and he falls downward, far from heaven, who, after promising to a Brahman, does not deliver to him what he had solicited. 34. I have been deluded by thee, thinking thyself wealthy, when thou saidst "I give." Endure the infernal regions for some years as the penalty of that deceit.'"

Bali answers as follows (sect. 22):

(Sect. 22, v. 2).—Yady uttama-śloka bhavān mameritaṁ vacho vyalīkaṁ sura-varya manyate | karomy ṛitaṁ tad na bhavet pralambhanam pādaṁ tṛitīyaṁ kuru śīrshṇi me nijam | 3. Bibhemi nāhaṁ nirayāt pada-chyuto na pāśa-bandhād vyasanād duratyayāt | naivārtha-kṛichchhrād bhavato vinigrahāt asādhu-vādād bhṛiśam udvije yathā |

2. "If, renowned chief of the gods, thou considerest the word which I uttered to be deceitful, I now make it good,—and here there can be no deception,—place thy third step on my head.' 3. Fallen from my position, I fear not the infernal regions, nor binding in bonds, nor misfortune difficult to escape, nor loss of wealth, nor thy restraint, so much as I am afflicted by a bad name."

[146] See Manu, viii. 82; ix. 308. In R. V. vii. 65, 3, Mitra and Varuṇa are said to be bhuri-pāśāv anṛitasya setū | "barriers against falsehood, furnished with many nooses."—See Roth's article on the principal gods of the Arian nations, "Journal of the German Oriental Society," vol. vi. p. 73, and the fifth volume of this work, pp. 57, 65.

He then goes on to express his sense of his conqueror's superiority, and submission to his fate. He is now visited and consoled by his grandfather Prahrāda. His wife Vindhyāvali nexts worships Vishṇu; and then Brahmā intercedes in behalf of the Asura monarch. Vishṇu, after making some general reflections, replies as follows:

(Sect. 22, v. 28).—Eśha dānava-daityānām agraṇīḥ kīrti-vardhanaḥ | ajaishīd ajayām māyāṁ sīdann api na muhyati | 29. Kshīṇa-rikthaś chyutaḥ sthānāt kshipto baddhaścha śatrubhiḥ | jnātibhiścha parityakto yātanām anuyāpitaḥ | 30. Guruṇā bhartsitaḥ śapto jahau satyaṁ na suvrataḥ | chhalair ukto mayā dharmo [quere dharmaṁ?] nāyam tyajati satyavāk | 31. Esha me prāpitaḥ sthānaṁ dushprāpam amarair api | Sāvarṇer antarasyāyam bhavitendro mad-āśrayaḥ | 32. Tāvat sutalam adhyāstāṁ Viśvakarma-vinirmitam | yan nādhayo vyādhayaścha klamas tandrā parābhavaḥ | nopasargāḥ nivasatāṁ sambhavanti mamechchhayā |

28. "This chief of the Dānavas and Daityas, and enhancer of their renown, has conquered unconquerable Delusion: though dispirited, he is not bewildered. 29. Having lost his prosperity, fallen from his place, cast down and bound by his enemies, abandoned by his relations, involved in suffering, 30. reprehended and cursed by his preceptor, still, faithful to his obligation, he has not abandoned truth. [Though] duty has been inculcated by me in a deceitful fashion, this truthful being does not swerve from it.[147] 31. He has [therefore] been elevated by me to a position to which even the immortals with difficulty attain: he shall be the Indra, supported by me, of the Sāvarṇi Manvantara. 32. Meanwhile let him occupy Sutala, formed by Viśvakarman, where, by my will, neither mental nor bodily pains, nor fatigue, nor weariness, nor discomfiture, nor diseases afflict the inhabitants."

(Sect. 23, v. 2).—Bali replies thus: Aho praṇāmāya kṛitaḥ samudyamaḥ prapanna-bhaktārtha-vidhau samāhitaḥ | yal lokapālais tvadanugraho 'marair alabdha-pūrvo 'pasade 'sure 'rpitaḥ | 3. Śukaḥ uvācha | ity uktvā Harim ānamya Brahmāṇaṁ sa-Bhavaṁ tataḥ | viveśa Sutalam prīto Balir muktaḥ sahāsuraiḥ | 2. "' O, even the effort made to adore

[147] If we should read dharmam instead of dharmaḥ, the sense would be: "Though deceitfully addressed by me, he does not abandon duty."

thee succeeds in effecting the object of the devout man who seeks thee; seeing that thy favour, such as has not been before attained by the immortal guardians of the worlds, has been bestowed on me, a degraded Asura.' 3. Having thus spoken, and bowed down to Hari, to Brahmā, and to Bhava (Śiva), Bali, being released, entered Sutala with joy, along with the Asuras." Vishṇu now addresses Uśanas, the priest of Bali:

(Sect. 23, v. 13).—Athāhośanasaṁ rājan Harir Nārāyaṇo 'ntike | āsīnam ṛitvijām madhye sadasi brahma-vādinām | 14. Brahman santanu śishyasya karma-chhidraṁ vitanvataḥ | yat tat karmasu vaishamyam brahma-dṛishṭaṁ samam bhavet | 15. Śukraḥ uvācha | Kutas tat-karma-vaishamyaṁ yasya karmeśvaro bhavān | yajneśo yajnapurushaḥ sarva-bhāvena pūjitaḥ | 16. Mantratas tantrataś chhidraṁ deśa-kālārha-vastutaḥ | sarvaṁ karoti niśchhidram anusankīrtanaṁ tava | 17. Tathāpi vadato bhūman karishyāmy anuśāsanam | etach chhreyaḥ param puṁsāṁ yat tavājnānupālanam | 18. Śukaḥ uvācha | abhinandya Harer ājnām Uśanā bhagavān iti | yajna-chhidraṁ samādhatta Baler viprarshibhiḥ saha | 19. Evam Baler mahīm rājan bhikshitvā vāmano Hariḥ | dadau bhrātre Mahendrāya tridivaṁ yat parair hṛitam | 13. "Hari Nārāyaṇa then approaching Uśanas sitting among the priests, in an assembly of expounders of the Veda, thus addressed him: 14. 'Brahman, rectify the irregularities of thy pupil in performing the ceremonial: whatever fault there is in any rite is removed if it be seen by a Brahman.' 15. Śukra (Uśanas) replied: 'How can there be any irregularity in that ceremony of which thou art the lord, the lord of sacrifice, the sacrificial Man, adored in every aspect? 16. Whatever defects there may be in respect of texts, of order, of place, of time, of persons, or of materials,—the mere celebration of thee obliterates them all. 17. Nevertheless, great being, I shall fulfil the injunction which thou utterest: this is the highest happiness of men, to obey thy commands.' 18. Having assented to the order of Hari, the divine Uśanas, with the Brahman-rishis, rectified the irregularities of Bali's sacrifice. 19. Having in this manner begged the earth from Bali, the dwarf Hari gave [back] to his brother Mahendra[148] the heaven which had been taken from him by his enemies."

[148] Vishṇu is called Upendra (the inferior or younger Indra), the brother of Mahendra, the great Indra.—See above, p. 133, line 6 from the bottom.

Though the whole tenor of this legend, and, indeed, of the entire Bhāgavata Purāṇa, represents Vishṇu, of whom the dwarf was an incarnation, as the supreme deity, it is now rather strangely said that Brahmā and the other deities made the dwarf governor of all things:

(Sect. 23, v. 20).—Prajāpati-patir Brahmā devarshi-pitṛi-bhūmipaiḥ| Daksha-Bhṛigv-Angiro-mukhyaiḥ Kumāreṇa Bhavena cha | 21. Kaśyapasyāditeḥ prīṭyai sarva-bhūta-bhavāya chā | lokānām loka-pālānām akarod vāmanam patim | 22. Vedānāṁ sarva-devānāṁ dharmasya yaśasaḥ śriyaḥ | mangalānāṁ vratānāncha kalpaṁ svargāpavargayoḥ | 23. Upendraṁ kalpayānchakre patiṁ sarva-vibhūtaye | tadā sarvāṇi bhutāni bhṛiśam mumudire nṛipa | 20. "Brahmā, the lord of the Prajāpatis, together with the gods, ṛishis, pitṛis, with Daksha, Bhṛigu, Angiras, and other lords of the earth, with Kumāra, and Bhava, 21. with a view to the gratification of Kaśyapa and Aditi, and the good of all creatures, made the Dwarf master of the worlds and of the guardians of the worlds. 22, 23. He made Upendra (Vishṇu) master of the Vedas, of all the gods, of righteousness, renown, prosperity, blessings, and ceremonies, and lord of heaven and final liberation, in order that he might have command of all things. Then all creatures rejoiced exceedingly."

The section concludes with the verse I have already quoted above (p. 72) in glorification of Vishṇu, followed by a statement of the benefits resulting from hearing the story of the Dwarf incarnation.

This incarnation is also briefly related in the Agni Purāṇa, iv. 5*b*–11, and is either referred to, or narrated more or less diffusely, in the Harivaṁśa, verses 2725; 4159; 4166; 12195–12204; and 12900–14390. In the last-mentioned verses the story is told at length, with the various conflicts between the gods and Asuras by which it had been preceded. The incarnation itself and its results are related in vv. 14039–14390. Sections 231–233 of the Matsya Purāṇa are devoted to the same subject.[149] I give an abstract of the 47th section, in which Vishṇu's incarnations are enumerated.[150] It is here stated that it was in consequence of a curse pronounced by Bhṛigu (as we shall [149] See Prof. Aufrecht's Catalogue, p. 42*b*. The Matsya Purāṇa has been lithographed and published at Bombay, with a Mahratti explanation; but the portion containing the sections in question has not yet reached me.

[150] In verse 9 it is said that Kaśyapa was a portion of Brahmā, and Aditi of the Earth (Brahmaṇaḥ Kaśyapas tv aṁśaḥ Pṛithivyās tv Aditis tathā).

see further on) that Vishṇu assumed most of these forms (v. 37). There were twelve conflicts between the gods and Asuras (vv. 39–52). It is related (vv. 58 ff.) that on one occasion when Prahrāda had been overcome, and Indra had gained the empire of the three worlds, Śukra, the priest of the Asuras, left them and went to the gods.[150*] They, however, entreated him not to desert them, when he reassured them by the promise of his support (vv. 60 ff.). They were nevertheless attacked by the gods, and again resorted to Śukra; when their assailants left them. Śukra then referred to their former discomfitures, counselled them to wait for a favourable turn of fortune, and declared his intention to resort to Mahādeva and obtain certain sacred texts which would insure their victory (vv. 65 ff.). They then promised to the gods to desist from hostilities and betake themselves to austerities (vv. 73 ff.). Śukra accordingly went to Mahādeva and asked for texts more powerful than those possessed by Bṛihaspati, the priest of the gods; when the deity directed him to perform a painful rite, imbibing the smoke of chaff (kaṇa-dhūma)[151] with his head downward for a thousand years. This he agreed to do (vv. 78 ff.). Hearing of this, and taking advantage of the defenceless state of the Asuras, the gods went to attack them. The Asuras remonstrated, and in the absence of Śukra, resorted to his mother for help, and were reassured by her (vv. 83 ff.). The gods, however, followed, and assailed them, when the goddess (Śukra's mother—her name is not given), by her magical power, rendered Indra helpless, and then the other gods took to flight (vv. 91 ff.). Vishṇu, however, now interposed, and desired Indra to enter into him (Vishṇu). This provoked the goddess, who threatened to burn them up. Indra called upon Vishṇu to slay her before she could carry her threat into effect. Vishṇu, though hesitating to kill a female, cut off her head with his weapon (vv. 95 ff.). Vishṇu was hereupon doomed by a curse of Śukra to be born seven times in the world of men; and in consequence of this he appears for

[150*] Compare Tāṇḍya Mahābrāhmaṇa, vii. 5, 20: Uśanā vai Kāvyo 'surāṇām purohitaḥ āsīt | taṁ devāḥ kāmadughābhir (kāma-dugdhābhir gobhiḥ | Comm.) upāmantrayanta | tasmai etāny aśanāni prāyachhan | kāmadughāḥ vai aśanāni | "Uśanas Kāvya was the priest of the Asuras. The gods invited him with milch cows. They gave him these Aśana texts. Aśana texts are milch cows."

[151] I have to thank Prof. Aufrecht for pointing out an explanation of this phrase given by the commentator on the Kāśī Khaṇḍa of the Skanda Pur. 16, 2, viz. Kaṇāḥ khaṇḍitās taṇḍulatushās tajjanyaṁ dhūmam |

the good of the world when unrighteousness prevails:[152] (vv. 102 taṁ dṛishṭvā stri-badhaṁ ghoraṁ chukrodha Bhṛigur īśvaraḥ | tato 'bhiśapto Bhṛiguṇā Vishṇur bhāryā-badhe tadā | 103 | yasmāt te jānato dharmam abadhyā strī nishūditā | tasmāt tvaṁ saptakṛitveha mānusheshūpapatsyasi | 104 | tatas tenābhiśāpena nashṭe dharme punaḥ punaḥ | lokasya cha hitārthāya jāyate mānusheshv iha). Śukra then sprinkled his mother with water, and restored her to life, an act and result which were applauded by all creatures (vv. 105 ff.). Indra now, with the intention of counteracting Śukra's austerities, sent his daughter Jayantī to the saint to wait upon and soothe him by her assiduous and affectionate attentions and services, till the conclusion of his painful performances (vv. 111 ff.). She found him in the act of being thrown down into the pit of fire by the Yaksha who had prepared it, and drinking in the smoke of the chaff, with his head downward, and though enfeebled, yet tranquilly meditating on the form of Mahādeva (vv. 116 ff. taṁ dṛishṭvā tu pibantaṁ sā kaṇadhūmam avāṇmukham | yakshena pātyamānaṁ cha kuṇḍa-dhāreṇa pātitam | dṛishṭvā cha tam pātyamānaṁ devī Kāvyam avasthitam | svarūpa-dhyāna-śāmyantaṁ durbalam bhūtim āsthitam); lauded him with endearing language, and rubbed his limbs with her gentle touch (v. 118). At the conclusion of his austere rite, continued for a thousand years, Mahādeva applauded him as the only person who had ever performed it; and granted him a variety of boons, including superiority to the gods. Śukra lauded the god in a hymn of 41 stanzas, consisting of an enumeration of his attributes (vv. 119 ff.). Mahādeva, gratified, touched the saint with his hand, granted him a vision of his form, and then disappeared (v. 167). Śukra then noticed Jayantī standing beside him, expressed

[152] I have not elsewhere met with an explanation of Vishṇu's incarnations so dishonourable to the god. Yet even here he is said to be born for the good of mankind when righteousness has declined, with a view to its restoration—a singular result of a curse! Compare the passage from the Bhagavadgītā given above, p. 53, and vv. 7 and 8 of the 4th sect. of the same work: 'Yadā yadā hi dharmasya glānir bhavati Bhārata | abhyutthānam adharmasya tadā "tmānaṁ sṛijāmy aham | paritrāṇāya sādhūnaṁ vināśāya cha dushkṛitām | dharma-samsthāpanārthāya sambhavāmi yuge yuge | "Whenever righteousness declines, and unrighteousness arises, then I create myself. For the deliverance of the good and the destruction of the wicked, I am born in every Yuga." See also the 32nd verse of the hymn to Vishṇu in the 10th Canto of the Raghuvaṁśa: Anavāptam avaptavyaṁ na te kinchana vidyate | lokānugrahaḥ evaiko hetus te janma-karmaṇoḥ | "Thou hast nothing unobtained to obtain. Kindness to men is the only cause of thy birth and of thy action."

himself gratified by her devoted attentions, asked her what she wished, and promised to bestow it. She replied that he, in virtue of his transcendent knowledge, should know what she wished. Her desire was, he said, to live in his company for ten years. This he granted, and took her home and married her. They lived together, rendered invisible to all eyes by his magical power, for ten years (vv. 168 ff.). The Asuras, however, learning the success of their preceptor's austerities, came to his abode, but failed to see him. Bṛihaspati, the preceptor of the gods, knowing that Śukra would be occupied with Jayantī for ten years, at the instigation of Indra, took advantage of this circumstance to assume his form, and summoning the Asuras, passed himself off to them as their spiritual guide, and offered to act as their teacher, an offer which they gladly accepted (vv. 177 ff.). As the fruit of Śukra's ten years' cohabitation with Jayantī, a daughter, Devayānī, was born. Śukra then resolved to visit his pupils, and informed Jayantī of this intention, the fulfilment of which she admitted to be a duty, and said she would not stand in the way of its performance. He accordingly went and found that the Asuras had been deluded by Bṛihaspati, who had assumed his (Śukra's) form. He told them that he was Śukra; and when they were bewildered by the sight of the two sages identical in appearance, he repeated that he was their genuine preceptor, and that the other was Bṛihaspati, and demanded that they should forsake the latter, and follow him. They, however, were unable to distinguish between the two; and Bṛihaspati asseverated that he was the genuine Śukra, and that the other was Bṛihaspati. The Asuras, considering that the person who had taught them for ten years was their real preceptor, made obeisance to him, and angrily rejected the claim of Śukra to be their Guru. They were in consequence doomed by the curse of the incensed sage (Śukra) to lose their senses and incur defeat (vv. 183 ff.). Satisfied with this result, Bṛihaspati reassumed his own proper form, and disappeared. Seeing that they had been deluded, the Asuras, headed by Prahrāda, followed Śukra, and appeared before him with downcast looks. Though at first angry, he was at length pacified by their entreaties, reassured them by saying that they would regain their senses and gain one victory over the gods, though after that they should have to descend to the infernal regions, the period of their dominion declared by Brahmā having then expired. 'In the Sāvarṇi Manvantara, however, they were destined to regain supremacy, and Bali, grandson of Prahrāda, would become lord of the worlds. Another boon was destined for Prahrāda, which Brahmā had forbidden Śukra to reveal (vv. 201 ff.). Elated by this prediction of their future ascendancy, the Asuras desired to anticipate the time of its realization, and challenged the gods to battle. A combat ensued, which lasted for a thousand years, at the end of which the Asuras were victorious. The gods then took counsel together, and invited Saṇḍa and Marka[153] (who are mentioned in verse 39, and appear to be the pupils of Bṛihaspati alluded to in v. 221) to abandon the Asuras, and aid them (the gods) in their sacrifice. If they, succeeded in obtaining this aid, they were confident they should overcome the Asuras. Saṇḍa and Marka accepted the invitation, and the gods conquered the Asuras; who, being forsaken by these two priests, and undergoing the consequences of Śukra's curse, were expelled by their adversaries from the upper world, and entered the infernal regions [226. Yajnenopāhvayāmas tau tato jeshyāmahe 'surān | tadopāmantrayan devāḥ Śaṇḍāmarkau tu tāv ubhau | 227. yajne chāhuya tau proktau "tyajetām asurān dvijau | vayaṁ yuvām bhajishyāmaḥ saha jitvā tu dānavān" | 228. evaṁ kṛitābhisandhī tau Śaṇḍāmarkau surās tathā | tato devāḥ jayam prāpur dānavāś cha parājitāḥ | 229. Śaṇḍāmarka-parityaktāḥ dānavāḥ hy abalās tathā | evam daityāḥ purā Kāvya-śāpenābhihatās tadā | 230. Kāvya-śāpābhibhūtās te nirādhārāś cha sarvaśaḥ | nirasyamānāḥ devaiś cha viviśus te rasātatam |] (vv. 223 ff.). In consequence of Śukra's curse, which operated periodically, Vishṇu was born time after time, (see above, p. 152), after a decline of righteousness, which he re-established, destroying the Asuras. For Brahmā had decreed that all those Asuras who should be disobedient to Prahrāda[154] should be slain by men (231. tataḥ-prabhṛiti śāpena Bhṛigor naimittikena tu | 232. jajne punaḥ punar Vishṇur dharme praśithile prabhuḥ | kurvan dharmavyavasthānam asurāṇām praṇāśanam | 233. Prahrādasya nideśe tu na sthāsyanty asurāś cha ye | manushya-badhyās te sarve Brahmeti vyāharat prabhuḥ | Vishṇu's incarnations are then enumerated (verses

[153] See the fifth volume of this work, p. 230, note.

[154] Regarding Prahrāda, or Prahlāda, see Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, Dr. Hall's ed., vol. ii., pp. 30–68.

234–245) viz. (1) a portion of him sprung from Dharma, (2) the Narasinha, or Man-lion, and (3) the Dwarf, incarnations, which are called the celestial manifestations, the remaining seven being the human incarnations caused by Śukra's curse (v. 238. Etās tisraḥ smṛitās tasya divyāḥ sambhūtayo dvijāḥ | mānushāḥ sapta yānyās (sic.) tu śāpajās tāḥ nibodhata). These seven are (4) the Dattātreya, (5) Māndhātṛi, (6) Paraśurāma, (7) Rāma, (8) Vedavyāsa, (9) Buddha, (10) Kalki, incarnations. (Eight instead of seven are obtained if, with the Mahratti expounder, we understand the beginning of verse 243 to refer to Kṛishṇa.) The Bhāgavata Purāṇa gives twenty-two incarnations (i. 3, 1 ff.) viz.: Those in the forms of (1) Purusha, (2) Varāha or the Boar, (3) Nārada, (4) Nara and Nārāyaṇa, (5) Kapila, (6) Dattātreya, (7) Yajna or Sacrifice, (8) Ṛishabha, (9) Pṛithu, (10) Matsya or the Fish, (11) Kūrma or the Tortoise, (12 and 13), Dhanvantari, (14) Narasinha or the Man-lion, (15) Vāmana or the Dwarf, (16) Paraśurāma, (17) Vedavyāsa, (18) Rāma, (19 and 20) Balarāma and Kṛishṇa, (21) Buddha, and (22) Kalki. These last two are represented as future. But the incarnations of Vishṇu are innumerable, like the rivulets flowing from an inexhaustible lake. Rishis, Manus, gods, sons of Manus, Prajāpatis are all portions of him (verse 26. Avatārāḥ hy asankheyāḥ Hareḥ sattva-nidher dvijāḥ | yathā 'vidāsinaḥ kulyāḥ sarasaḥ syuḥ sahasraśaḥ | 27. ṛishayo manavo devāḥ manu-putrāḥ mahaujasaḥ | kalāḥ sarve Harer eva saprajāpatayas tathā).

Sect. V.—Vishṇu as represented in the Nirukta, Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata, and Purāṇas.

From the passages adduced in the preceding pages, it is clear that Vishṇu is not regarded as the supreme god either in the Rig-veda, or in the Brāhmaṇas. In these ancient works he is considered only as one of the gods, and not as superior to the rest. It is also manifest from the passage I have cited from the Nirukta (xii. 19) in p. 64 that neither Yāska himself, nor Śākapūṇi and Aurṇavābha, the ancient interpreters of the Veda, whose opinions he quotes, assigned to Vishṇu any higher rank than they did to the other members of the Indian Pantheon. From another text of the Nirukta (vii. 5) which I have cited in p. 66, in appears that the old expounders of the Veda regarded the deities worshipped in the Veda as mainly represented by three gods of primary consequence, and that of these Vishṇu is not one. As the passage from which this latter extract was made is of great interest and importance, I shall quote it here at length:

Nir. 7, 4.—Tad ye 'nādishṭa-devaṭāḥ mantrās teshu devatopaparīkshā | yad-devataḥ sa yajno vā yajnāngaṁ vā tad-devatāḥ bhavanti | atha anyatra yajnāt prājāpatyāḥ iti yājnikāḥ | nārāśaṁsāḥ iti nairuktāḥ | api vā sā kāma-devatā syāt prāyo-devatā vā | asti hy āchāro bahulaṁ loke deva-devatyam atithi-devatyam pitṛi-devatyam | yājna-daivato mantraḥ iti | api hy adevatāḥ devatā-vat stūyante | yathā 'śva-prabhṛitīny oshadhi-paryantāny athāpy ashṭau dvandvāni | sa na manyeta āgantūn iva arthān devatānām pratyaksha-dṛiśyam etad bhavati | mahābhāgyād devatāyāḥ ekaḥ ātmā bahudhā stūyate | ekasya ātmano 'nye devāḥ pratyangāni bhavanti | api cha sattvānām prakṛiti-bhūmabhir ṛishayaḥ stuvanti ity āhuḥ | prakṛiti-sārvanāmnyāch cha itaretara-janmāno bhavanti itaretara-prakṛitayaḥ karma-janmānaḥ ātma-janmānaḥ | atmā eva eshāṁ ratho bhavaty ātmā 'śvāḥ ātmā "yudham ātmā ishavaḥ ātmā sarvaṁ devasya | 5. Tisraḥ eva devatāḥ iti naiṛuktāḥ Agniḥ pṛithivī-sthāno Vāyur vā Indro vā 'ntariksha-sthānaḥ Sūryo dyu-sthānaḥ | tāsām mahābhāgyād ekaikasyāḥ api bahūni nāmadheyāni bhavanti | api vā karma-pṛithaktvād yathā hotā 'dhvaryur brahmā udgātā ity apy ekasya sataḥ | api vā pṛithag eva syuḥ | pṛithag hi stutayo bhavanti tathā 'bhidhānāni | yatho etat-"karma-pṛithaktvād" iti bahavo 'pi vibhajya karmāṇi kuryuḥ | tatra saṁsthānaikatvaṁ sambhogaikatvaṁ cha upekshitavyam | yathā pṛithivyām manushyāḥ paśavo devāḥ iti sthānaikatvam | sambhogaikatvaṁ cha dṛiśyate yathā pṛithivyāḥ Parjanyena cha Vāyv-Ādityābhyāṁ cha sambhogo 'gninā cha itarasya lokasya | tatra etad nara-rāshṭram iva | 6. Atha ākāra-chintanaṁ devatānām | purusha-vidhāḥ syur ity ekam | chetanāvad-vad hi stutayo bhavanti tathā 'bhidhānāni | athāpi paurusha-vidhikair angaiḥ saṁstūyante | "ṛishvā te Indra sthavirasya bāhū" (R. V. vi. 47, 8); "yat sangribhṇāḥ maghavan kāśir it te" (R. V. iii. 30, 5) | athāpi paurusha-vidhikair dravya-saṁyogaiḥ | "ā dvābhyāṁ haribhyām Indra yāhi" (R. V. ii. 18, 4); "kalyāṇīr jāyā suraṇaṁ gṛihe te" (R. V. iii. 53, 6) athāpi paurusha-vidhikaiḥ karmabhiḥ | "addhi Indra piba cha prasthitasya" (R. V. x. 116, 2); "āśrutkarṇa śrudhi havam" (R. V. i. 10, 9) | 7. Apurusha-vidhāḥ syur ity aparam | api tu yad dṛiśyate 'purusha-vidhaṁ tat | yathā 'gnir vāyur ādityaḥ pṛithivī chandramāḥ iti | yatho etat "chetanāvad-vad hi stutayo bhavanti" ity achetanāny

apy evaṁ stūyante yathā 'kṣha-prabhṛitīny oshadhi-paryantāni | yatho etat "paurusha-vidhikair angaiḥ saṁstūyante" ity achetaneshv apy etad bhavati | "abhi krandanti haritebhir āsabhiḥ" iti grāva-stutiḥ | yatho etat "paurusha-vidhikair dravya-saṁyogair" ity etad api tādṛiśam eva | "sukhaṁ rathaṁ yuyuje sindhur aśvinam" iti nadī-stutiḥ | yatho etat "paurusha-vidhikaiḥ karmabhir" ity etad api tādṛiśam eva | "hotuś chit pūrve havir adyam āśata" iti grāva-stutir eva | api cha ubhaya-vidhāḥ syuḥ | api vā purusha-vidhānām eva satāṁ karmātmānaḥ ete syuḥ | yathā yajno yajamānasya | esha cha ākhyāna-samayaḥ | 8. Tisraḥ eva devatāḥ ity uktam purastāt | tāsām bhakti-śāhacharyaṁ vyākhyāsyāmaḥ | atha etāny Agni-bhaktīny ayaṁ lokaḥ prātaḥ-savanaṁ vasanto gāyatrī trivṛit-stomo rathantaraṁ sāma ye cha deva-gaṇāḥ samāmnātāḥ prathame sthāne 'gnāyī pṛithivī ilā iti striyaḥ | atha asya karma vahanaṁ cha havishām āvahanaṁ cha devatānāṁ yach cha kinchid dārshṭi-vishayikam Agni-karma eva tat | atha asya saṁstavikāḥ devāḥ Indraḥ Somo Varuṇaḥ Parjanyaḥ ṛitavaḥ | Āgnā-Vaishṇavaṁ havir na tu ṛik saṁstavikī daśatayīshu vidyate | atha apy Āgnā-Paushṇaṁ havir na tu saṁstavaḥ | tatra etāṁ vibhakti-stutim ṛicham udāharanti (R. V. x. 17, 3) 9. "Pūshā tvā itaś chyavayatu pra vidvān anashṭapaśur bhuvanasya gopāḥ | sa tvā etebhyaḥ paridadat pitṛibhyo Agnir devebhyaḥ suvidatriyebhyaḥ" | "Pūshā tvā itaḥ prachyāvayatu vidvān anashṭapaśur bhuvanasya gopāḥ" ity esha hi sarveshām bhūtānām gopāyitā Ādityaḥ | "sa tvā etebhyaḥ pari dadat pitṛibhyaḥ" iti sāṁśāyikas tritīyaḥ pādaḥ | Pūshā purastāt tasya anvādeśaḥ ity ekam Agnir uparishṭāt tasya prakīrtanā ity aparam | "Agnir devebhyaḥ suvidatriyebhyaḥ" | suvidatraṁ dhanam bhavati vindater vā ekopasargād dadāter vā syād dvyupasargāt | 10. Atha etāni Indra-bhaktīny antariksha-loko mādhyandinaṁ savanaṁ grīshmas trishṭup panchadaśa-stomo bṛihat-sāma ye cha deva-gaṇāḥ samāmnātāḥ madhyame sthāne yāścha striyaḥ | atha asya karma rasā-nupradānaṁ Vṛitra-vadho yā cha kā cha bala-kṛitir Indra-karma eva tat | atha asya saṁstavikāḥ devāḥ Agniḥ Somo Varuṇaḥ Pūshā Bṛihaspatir Brahmaṇaspatiḥ Parvataḥ Kutso Vishṇur Vāyuḥ | atha api Mitro Varuṇena saṁstūyate | Pūshṇā Rudreṇa cha Somaḥ | Agninā cha Pūshā | Vātena cha Parjanyaḥ | 11. Atha etāny Āditya-bhaktīny asau lokas tṛitīya-savanaṁ varshāḥ jagatī saptadaśa-stomo vairūpaṁ sāma ye cha deva-gaṇāḥ samāmnātāḥ uttame sthāne yāścha striyaḥ | atha asya karma rasādānaṁ raśmibhiś cha rasādhāraṇaṁ yach cha kinchit pravalhitam

Āditya-karma eva tat | Chandramasā Vāyunā Saṁvatsareṇa iti saṁstavaḥ | eteshv eva sthāna-vyūheshv ṛitu-chhandaḥ-stoma-pṛishṭhasya bhakti-śesham anukalpayīta | śarad-anushṭub-ekaviṁśa-stomo vairājaṁ sāma iti pṛithivy-āyatanāni | hemantaḥ panktis triṇava-stomaḥ śākvaram sāma ity antarikshāyatanāni | śiśiro 'tichhandās trayas-triṁśa-stomo raivatam sāma iti dyu-bhaktīni |

4. "We shall now inquire who are the deities in those hymns in which no deity is indicated. They are addressed to the god to whom the sacrifice or part of a sacrifice [in which they are employed] is offered. The hymns which are unconnected with a sacrifice are, according to the ritualists (yājnikāḥ), addressed to Prajāpati; according to the etymologists (nairuktāḥ), they are spoken in praise of men.[155] Or in such cases the deity may be an optional one, or a class of deities:[156] for it is a very prevalent practice to [classify rites] as those which have a god, a guest, or a progenitor, respectively, for their deity. In reference to what has been said that hymns are sacrificial, and addressed to a god, [it is to be remarked that] beings other than gods are lauded as gods, as e.g. the objects beginning with horses and ending with herbs (see Nighaṇṭu, 5, 3, and Nir. ix. 1–28), and also the eight pairs (see Nighaṇṭu, 5, 3, and Nir. ix. 35 ff.). But let him [the student] not regard any matters relating to the gods as if they were accidental: this may be clearly seen. Owing to the greatness of the deity, the one Soul is lauded in many ways. The different gods are members of the one Soul. And [the learned] say that the rishis address their hymns according to the multiplicities of natures in the [celestial] existences; and [further] from the universality of their nature [these existences] are produced from each other, and possess the natures of each other (compare Nir. xi. 23, quoted above, p. 13); they are produced from works; they are produced from soul. It is soul that is their car, soul their steeds, soul their weapon, soul their arrows, soul is a god's all.

[155] Professor Roth refers to Nir. ix. 9, where the word nārāśaṁsa is thus defined: Yena narāḥ praśasyante sa nārāśaṁso mantraḥ | "A hymn in which men are eulogized is a nārāśaṁsa hymn." As an instance of this kind of hymn Yāska quotes R. V. i. 126, 1.

[156] This is the sense assigned to prāyo-devatā by Roth, Illustrations of Nirukta, p. 102, see note 1 there: but may not the word mean a being who has something of the character of a god?

5. "There are three deities according to the etymologists (nairuktāḥ), viz. Agni, whose place is on earth, Vāyu, or Indra,[157] whose place is in the atmosphere, and Sūrya (the Sun), whose place is in the sky. These [deities] receive many designations in consequence of their greatness, or from the diversity of their functions, as [the appellations of] hotṛi, adhvaryu, brahman, and udgātṛi, are applied to one and the same person. Or the gods in question may all be distinct, for the praises addressed to them, and also their appellations, are distinct. As [regards the view that] this [diversity of appellation] arises from difference of function [and not from distinctness of personality, it may be objected that] a plurality of individuals also may each fulfil their separate allotted functions. In this latter case, a community of locality, and of possession, must be remarked. Thus men, beasts, and gods, occupy the earth; here is community of place. Community of possession, too, is seen in such instances as that of the joint occupation of the earth both by Parjanya, and by Vāyu, and Āditya, and of the rest of the world by [Vāyu, Āditya, and] Agni. Here the case is like that of a kingdom and its inhabitants (i.e. the one realm is occupied by different classes of persons).

6. "We have now to consider the forms of the gods. One [mode of representation in the hymns makes] them resemble men: for they are praised and addressed as intelligent beings. They are also celebrated with members such as those of men. Thus R. V. vi. 47, 8: 'Huge, O Indra, are the arms of thee who art strong'; iii. 30, 5, 'when thou didst grasp the two worlds, they were but as a handful to thee.' They are also [celebrated] with the accompaniment of material objects such as those belonging to men. Thus it is said, R. V. ii. 18, 4, 'Come, Indra, with thy two tawny steeds'; iii. 53, 6, 'A handsome wife and pleasure are in thy house.' And further, they are celebrated with functions of a similar character to the human. Thus R. V. x. 116, 2, 'Eat, O Indra, and drink from the bowl;' R. V. i. 10, 9, 'Thou whose ears hear us, listen to our invocation.'

7. "Another [mode of representation makes them] unlike men. But further, that which is seen [of them] is unlike what is human, as Fire, Air, Sun, Earth, Moon. As [regards the assertion] that 'they are praised as intelligent beings,'—it is also true that senseless things are in like manner praised, as the objects beginning with dice and ending with herbs (Nigh. 5, 3; Nir. 3, 7 ff.). Again, as [regards the remark] that the gods are 'celebrated with members such as those of men,'—the same thing is done in the case of senseless objects, as stones are celebrated in the words, 'They cry with their ruddy mouths' (R. V. x. 94, 2). Further, the same is the case as [regards the remark] that the gods are [celebrated] 'with the accompaniment of material objects such as those possessed by men;' for a river is praised in the words, 'The Sindhu has yoked his beautiful car drawn by steeds' (R. V. x. 75, 9). And the same thing applies to the remark that the gods are described with 'functions similar to those of men;' for stones are lauded in the words, 'Even before the priests they have eaten food of melted butter' (R. V. x. 94, 2). Or the gods may be described under both forms (either as having, or as not having, a human form). Or, again, when they are described as similar to men, this may be merely in their character of actors in a particular function, as sacrifice is only the [temporary] act of the man who offers it. This is the condition of all narrations.[158]

[157] Compare Taitt. Sañh., vi. 6, 8, 3: Indra-Vāyū hi sayujau | "For Indra and Vāyū are closely united.

8. "It has been declared above (par. 5) that there are three deities. We shall now declare the various objects which are associated with their provinces. Now these which follow are connected with Agni's domain: viz. this world, the morning oblation, spring, the gāyatrī metre, the trivṛit stoma, the rathantara sāma, the classes of gods who in the Nighaṇṭu are enumerated in the first sphere, with the goddesses Agnāyī, Pṛithivī, and Ilā. Then Agni's function is to carry away the oblations, and to bring the gods: and whatever has reference to things visible is the work of Agni. Then the deities who are lauded along with him are Indra, Soma, Varuṇa, Parjanya, and the seasons. There is an oblation made to Agni and Vishṇu in common; but in the ten books [of the R. V.] there is no Ṛich which praises these two gods together. There is also an oblation made to Agni and Pūshan in common, but no conjoint laudation. Here the following verse containing separate praise [of these two gods] is quoted, viz. R. V. x. 17, 3: 9. 'May Pūshan, the wise, the preserver of the world, he who loses none of his cattle, convey thee away hence: may he deliver thee to these fathers; and may Agni [entrust thee] to the gracious gods.' The words, 'May Pūshan, the wise, etc.,' refer to the Sun, who is the protector of all creatures. The sense of the third quarter of the verse beginning, 'May he deliver thee, etc.,' is dubious: on the one hand it may be a repetition of the reference to Pūshan, who had been named before;[159] or, on the other hand, it may be a celebration of Agni, who is mentioned afterwards. Suvidatra (from which suvidatriyebhyaḥ in the fourth clause, "May Agni," etc., comes) means 'wealth,' and is either derived from vid, 'to find,' with one preposition (su), or from dā, 'to give,' with two prepositions (su and vi).

[158] The commentator Durga (as I learn from Prof. Roth's note, Illust. of Nir. p. 104) refers this observation to the Mahābhārata, and adduces, as illustrations of the remark in the text, the appearances of the Earth in the form of a woman to request a Brahman to relieve her of her load, and of Agni in the form of a Brahman to ask aid from Vāsudeva and Arjuna respecting the Khāṇḍava wood, and in the form of a man, and of fire, to burn the wood in question. See Williams's Indian Epic Poetry, p. 101; and the Vanaparvan, verses 8079 ff.

10. "The following are the objects connected with Indra's domain: viz. the atmosphere, the midday oblation, summer, the trishṭubh metre, the panchadaśa stoma, the bṛihat sāma, the classes of gods and the females who are enumerated in the second sphere. Indra's function is to bestow moisture, to slay Vṛitra: and all exertions of force are the work of Indra. The deities lauded along with him are Agni, Soma, Varuṇa, Pūshan, Bṛihaspati, Brahmaṇaspati, Parvata, Kutsa, Vishṇu, and Vāyu. Further, Mitra is lauded along with Varuṇa, Soma with Pūshan and Rudra, Pūshan with Agni, and Parjanya with Vāta.

11. "The following are the objects connected with Āditya's (the Sun's) domain: heaven, the third oblation, the rainy season, the jagatī metre, the saptadaśa stoma, the vairūpa sāma, the classes of gods and the females who are enumerated in the highest sphere. The function of Āditya is to draw up moisture, and to retain it by his rays: and whatever is mysterious is the work of Āditya. He is praised along with the Moon, the Air (Vāyu), and the Year.

"[The student] is to class the remaining seasons, metres, stomas, and pṛishṭhas (particular sāma formulas) under [one or other of] the [three] spheres above mentioned. Autumn, the anushṭubh metre, the ekavinśa stoma, and the vairāja sāma, belong to the sphere of earth. The early winter, the pankti metre, the triṇava stoma, and the śākvara sāma, belong to the atmospheric sphere. The later winter, the atichhandas metre, the trayastrinśa stoma, and the raivata sāma, are connected with the celestial sphere."[160]

[159] I have translated the clause as referring to Pūshan.

It will be observed that in the preceding classification of the gods, the principal places are assigned to Agni, Vāyu, or Indra, and Sūrya, who appear therefore to have been regarded in the time of Yāska as the triad of deities in whom the supreme spirit was especially revealed. Vishṇu is only alluded to as one of the divinities who were worshipped conjointly with Indra; and Rudra is only mentioned as worshipped along with Soma. If we may judge from his silence regarding it, the conjunction of Brahmā, Vishṇu and Rudra as the triple manifestation of the deity (trimūrti) would appear to have been unknown to Yāska.

It is true that his object in the passage I have cited, as well as in other parts of his work, is to classify the Vedic deities; and it may be urged that the Puranic mythology (of which the trimūrti of Brahmā, Vishṇu and Śiva is a part) might have grown up along with the Vedic. It may, however, be objected to this view, that if Yāska had been cognizant of any other than the Vedic mythology (at least if he had attached any authority to any other), he would not have failed to make some reference to the latter, and would have endeavoured to blend and reconcile it with the former. As we find no attempt of this kind in his work, we may perhaps conclude, either that the Puranic mythology had no existence in his day, or that he regarded it as undeserving of any attention.

The following passages from the Bṛihaddevatā, in which the views of Yāska are repeated, are derived from Weber's Ind. Stud. i. 113 f.:

Bṛihaddevatā, i. 13.—Bhavad-bhūta [sya bha] vyasya jangama-sthāvar-asya cha | asyaike sūryam evaikam prabhavam pralayañ viduḥ | asataś cha sataś chaiva yonir esha Prajāpatiḥ | yad aksharañ cha vāchyañ (?) cha yathaiva Brahma śāśvatam | kṛitvaisha hi tridhā "tmānam eshu lokeshu tishṭhati | Ibid. i. 14 . . . tisraḥ eveha devatāḥ | etāsām eva māhātmyād nāmānyatvañ vidhīyate | tach cha sthāna-vibhāgena tatra tatreha dṛiśyate | i. 13: "Some consider Sūrya (the Sun) to be the only cause of the production and destruction of this [universe], present, past, and future, moving and stationary. And this lord of creatures (Prajāpati) is the source of non-entity and entity, which is undecaying and describable (?) like the eternal Brahma. He, having made himself threefold, abides in these worlds. i. 14: . . . There are but three deities; and from their greatness, a variety of names is assigned [to each of them]. This is seen in different instances according to the distinction of places."

[160] The above passage is translated by Prof. Roth in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, pp. 101 ff.

From the passage cited above (p. 30 f.) from Manu, it appears that the word Nārāyaṇa is there applied to Brahmā, and that no mention whatever is made of Vishṇu, as concerned in the creation. In fact Vishṇu is only once mentioned[161] by Manu, viz. in the following verse xii. 121:

Manasīndum diśaḥ śrotre krānte Vishṇum bale Haram | vāchy Agnim Mitram utsarge prajane cha Prajāpatim | "[He may contemplate] in his mind the Moon (Indu), in his hearing the regions, in his stepping Vishṇu, in his strength Hāra, in his voice Agni, in excretion Mitra, and in procreation Prajāpati." Vishṇu is not spoken of here as in any way superior to the other gods with whom he is associated.

In the text quoted above (p. 33) from the older recension of the Rāmāyaṇa too, it is Brahmā who is spoken of not only as the creator, but also as the god who raised up the earth from the bottom of the ocean.

Again, those texts of the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas (see above, pp. 118 ff.) where Vishṇu is described as one of the twelve Ādityas, confirm the conclusion that he must have been originally looked upon as a deity of no more elevated rank than the other sons of Aditi; and the circumstance that he is in some of those passages distinguished from the rest of the gods by epithets expressive of some higher characteristics is easily explicable, as I have already remarked, by the supposition that those passages have been composed or modified at a period when his superiority had come to be recognized.

In some of the earlier passages of the Rāmāyaṇa also, where Vishṇu is introduced, though he is treated as a deity of higher rank than Indra and others (with whom he had been originally, at most, on a footing of equality), yet he is not designated by the same sort of epithets which are applied to him in the Vishṇu and Bhāgavata Purāṇas, and in some parts of the Mahābhārata, and other portions of the Rāmāyaṇa itself (unless we suppose these to be later interpolations), or identified with the supreme deity, as in these first-named works. In proof of this I adduce the following passage from the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 14, 1 ff. (Schlegel's edition;=i. 15, 1 ff., Bombay edition, and i. 14, 1 ff. of Gorresio's edition):

[161] Lassen, Ind. Ant., 1st ed., i. 777, note; or 2nd ed., p. 918.

Rāmāyaṇa, i. 14, 1 ff.—Medhāvī tu tato dhyātvā sa kinchid idam uttaram | labdha-sanjnas[162] tatas taṁ tu veda-jño nṛipam abravīt | 2 | ishṭiṁ te 'nyāṁ[163] karishyāmi putrīyām putra-kāraṇāt | atharvaśirasi proktair mantrair siddhāṁ vidhānataḥ | 3 | [164]tataḥ prachakrame kartum ishṭiṁ kāma-samṛiddhaye | tasya rājño hitānveshī Vibhāṇḍaka-suto vaśī | 4 | tatra devāḥ sa-gandharvāḥ Siddhāścha munibhiḥ saha | bhāga-pratigrahārthaṁ vai pūrvam eva samāgatāḥ | 5 | Brahmā sureśvaruḥ Sthāṇus tathā Nārāyaṇaḥ prabhuḥ | Indraś cha bhagavān sākshād Marud-gaṇa-vṛitas tathā | 6 | aśvamedhe mahāyajne rājñas tasya mahātmanaḥ | tatra bhāgārthino devān āgatān so 'bhyayāchata | 7 | ayaṁ rājā Daśarathaḥ putrārthī taptavāṁs tapaḥ | ishṭavān aśvamedhena bhavataḥ śraddhayā 'nvitaḥ | 8 | ishṭiṁ cha putra-kāmo 'nyām punaḥ kartuṁ samudyataḥ | tad asya putra-kāmasya prasādaṁ kartum arhatha | 9 | abhiyāche cha vaḥ sarvān asyārthe 'haṁ kṛitāñjaliḥ | bhaveyur asya chatvāraḥ putrās trailokya-śiśrutāḥ | 10 | te tathety abruvan devāḥ ṛishi-putraṁ kṛitāñjalim | mānanīyo 'si no vipra rājā chaiva viśeshataḥ | 11 | prāpsyate paramaṁ kāmam etayeshṭyā narādhipaḥ | ity uktvā

[162] Labdha-sanjnaḥ samādhy-utthitaḥ | Comm. in Bombay ed.

[163] Bombay ed. reads te 'ham for te 'nyām.

[164] The Bomb. ed. here reads: 3. Tataḥ prākramad ishṭiṁ tām putrīyām putra-kāraṇāt | juhāv agnau cha tejasvī mantra-dṛishṭena karmaṇā | 4 | tato devāḥ sa-gandharvāḥ siddhāś cha paramarshayaḥ | bhāva- [qu. bhāga] pratigrahārthaṁ vai samavetāḥ yathāvidhi | 5 | tāḥ sametya yathānyāyaṁ tasmin sadasi devatāḥ | abruvan loka-kartāram Brahmāṇaṁ vachanaṁ tataḥ | 6 | Bhagavaṁs tvat-prasādena Rāvaṇo nāma rākshasaḥ | sarvān no bādhate vīryāt śāsituṁ taṁ na śaknumaḥ | "He then began that sacrifice for the sake of obtaining a son; and the glorious (rishi) cast an oblation into the fire, accompanied by the prescribed recitation of texts. 4. Then the gods, Gandharvas, Siddhas, and great Rishis were gathered together in due form to receive their portion. 5. Having duly assembled in that abode, the deities spake thus to Brahmā, the creator of the world: 6. 'Lord, owing to thy favour a Rākshasa named Rāvaṇa distresses us all by his power, and we cannot subdue him.'" What follows corresponds in the main with the readings of Schlegel's text.

This text, it will be noticed, differs in several points from Schlegel's [and from Gorresio's] in (a) not stating the gods to have been already present at the preceding sacrifice of the aśvamedha; (b) in not naming Brahmā, Sthāṇu (Mahādeva), and Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu) as being of the number; or (c) as having been supplicated by the rishi on behalf of king Daśaratha; and (d) in proceeding at once to represent the gods as invoking Brahmā's aid, as the other two texts do further on. The Bombay text may be the most original, and the verses there omitted may be later additions, as they do not fit in very well into the sequel. Compare note 166 below. This, however, would not prove that the whole section was not a prior interpolation. See further on.

'ntarhitāḥ devās tataḥ S'akra-purogamāḥ | 12 | tāḥ sametya yathānyāyaṁ tasmin sadasi devatāḥ | abruvan loka-kartāram Brahmāṇaṁ vachanaṁ tataḥ | 13 | tvat-pradishṭa-varo Brahman Rāvaṇo nāma rākshasaḥ | sarvān no bādhate darpād maharshīṁś cha tapo-ratān | 14 | tvayā hy asya varo dattaḥ prītena bhagavan purā | deva-dānava-yakshāṇām abadhyo 'sīti kāmataḥ | 15 | mānayantaścha te vākyaṁ sarvam asya 'sahāmahe | sa bādhayati lokāṁś trīn vihiṁsan rākshaseśvaraḥ | . . . . 19. Tad mahad no bhayaṁ tasmād rākshasād ghora-darśanāt | badhārthaṁ tasya bhagavann upāyaṁ kartum arhasi | evam uktaḥ suraiḥ sarvaiś chintayitvā tato 'bravīt | hantāyaṁ vihitas tasya badhopāyo durātmanaḥ | tena "gandharva-yakshāṇāṁ deva-dānava-rakshasām | abadhyaḥ syām" iti proktaṁ tathety uktaṁ cha tad mayā | avajnāya tu tad raksho manushān nānvakīrtayat | tasmāt sa mānushād badhyo mṛityur nānyo 'sya vidyate | etach chhrutvā priyaṁ vākyam Brahmaṇā samudāhṛitam | devāḥ S'akra-purogās te harshitāḥ sarvato 'bhavan | etasminn antare Vishṇur upayāto mahādyutiḥ | śankha-chakra-gadā-pāṇiḥ pīta-vāsāḥ jagat-patiḥ | Vainateyaṁ samāruhya bhāskaras toyadaṁ yathā | taptc-haṭaka-keyūro vandyamānaḥ surottamaiḥ | tam abruvan surāḥ sarve samabhishṭutya sannatāḥ | ārtānām asi lokānām ārti-hā Madhusūdana | yāchāmahe 'tas tvām ārtāḥ śaraṇaṁ no bhavāchyuta | brūta kiṁ karavāṇīti Vishṇus tān abravīd vachaḥ | iti tasya vachaḥ śrutvā punar ūchur idaṁ surāḥ | rājā Daśaratho nāma taptavān sumahat tapaḥ | ishṭavāṁś chāśvamedhena prajā-kāmaḥ sa chāprajāḥ | asman-niyogāt tvaṁ Vishṇo tasya putratvam āpnuhi | tasya bhāryāsu tisṛishu Hrī-S'rī-Kīrty-upamāsu cha | Vishṇo putratvam āgachha kṛitvā "tmānaṁ chaturvidham | tatra tvam mānusho bhūtvā pravṛiddhaṁ lokakaṇṭakam | abadhyaṁ daivatair Vishṇo samare jahi Rāvaṇam | . . . . . 34. Tvaṁ gatiḥ paramā deva sarveshāṁ naḥ parantapa | badhāya devaśatrūṇāṁ nṛiṇāṁ loke manaḥ kuru | sa niyuktas tathā devaiḥ sākshād Nārāyaṇaḥ prabhuḥ | tān uvācha ityādi |

"Then that sage, skilled in the Veda, having meditated for a little on this answer, having regained his consciousness [which had been suspended during his state of meditation], said to the king: 'I shall perform for thee another sacrifice, celebrated according to rule with the texts enjoined in the Atharva-śiras, to obtain for thee a son.' The self-subdued son of Vibhāṇḍaka, desiring the king's welfare, then began to perform the sacrifice for the attainment of his desire. The gods, with the Gandharvas, Siddhas, and Munis, had previously come thither to receive their portions [of the sacrifice], both Brahmā, lord of the deities, Sthāṇu (Mahādeva), the lord Nārāyaṇa[165] (Vishṇu), and the divine Indra in visible presence, surrounded by the host of Maruts. He (Ṛishyasṛinga thus) supplicated the gods who had come, desiring their shares, to the great aśvamedha sacrifice [described in the preceding section] of that high-souled king: 'This King Daśaratha, desiring a son, has performed austerity, and inspired with faith, has worshipped you with an aśvamedha. Longing for a son, he is also prepared to celebrate another sacrifice. Ye ought, therefore, to show favour to him, who is anxious for a son; and with joined hands, I entreat you all on his behalf. Let him have four sons, renowned in the three worlds.' The gods said to the rishi's son [standing] with joined hands, 'So be it. Thou, Brahman, art deserving of honour from us, and so especially is the king. The lord of men shall obtain the highest object of his desire by means of this sacrifice.' Having thus spoken, the gods, headed by Śakra (Indra), then disappeared.

"Having duly assembled, in that abode,[166] these gods then addressed a word to Brahmā, the creator of the world: 'A Rākshasa named Rāvaṇa, having obtained a boon from thee, O Brahmā, in his pride harasses us all, and the great rishis devoted to austerity. For, O lord, a boon was formerly granted to him freely by thee when well-pleased, viz. 'Thou shalt be indestructible by gods, Dānavas or Yakshas.' Obedient to thy words, we endure everything at his hands. This lord of the Rākshasas vexes the three worlds by his acts of cruelty . . . 19. We are therefore in great fear of this Rākshasa of horrible aspect.

[165] Here it will be observed that Vishṇu, like the other gods, comes for his share.

[166] This verse does not combine well with what precedes. See the last note but one (164). Why should the gods disappear in order to reassemble, so far as appears, in the same place (tasmin sadasi)? See the text of the Bombay ed., as quoted in note 164, verses 4 and 5. Gorresio's edition connects the disappearance and reappearance of the gods thus, i. 14, 11*b* ff.: ity uktvā 'ntarhitāḥ devās tataḥ Śakra-purogamāḥ | 12 | tāṁ dṛishṭvā vidhivad dīkshāṁ kriyamāṇām mahaṛshiṇā | upetya lokakartāram Prajāpatim idaṁ vachaḥ | 13 | ūchuḥ prāñjalayo bhūtvā Brahmāṇaṁ varadaṁ tatha | 11*b*: "Having thus spoken, the gods, headed by Śakra, vanished thence. 12. Beholding that initiatory ceremony being duly performed by the great rishi, they approached with joined hands the lord of creatures, the boon-bestowing Brahmā, and spoke as follows," etc. It may also be noticed that Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu) is mentioned both in Schlegel's ed. and in Gorresio's (v. 4) as having been one of the gods who were present. If the gods who reappeared were the same as those who disappeared, why was not he among them? But he is said to have arrived afterwards.

Thou, lord, oughtest to imagine some device for his slaughter.' Being thus addressed by all the deities, [Brahmā], after reflection, thus spoke to them: 'O, this device has been imagined [by me] for the slaughter of that malignant being. 'Let me be indestructible by Gandharvas, Yakshas, gods, Dānavas and Rākshasas;' such was his request, to which I replied, 'Be it so.' But despising men, the Rākshasa made no mention of them. He must therefore be slain by a man: no other death is possible for him.' Having heard this acceptable word spoken by Brahmā, the gods, headed by Śakra, were altogether delighted. In the mean time the glorious Vishṇu arrived, bearing in his hand the shell, discus, and club, in yellow garments, lord of the world, mounted on Garuḍa, like the Sun on a cloud, with an armlet of refined gold, adored by the chief of the deities. After lauding him with prostrations, all the gods said: 'Thou, Madhusūdana, art he who removes the affliction of the afflicted worlds. Wherefore we, distressed, beseech thee be our refuge, O Achyuta (Unfalling).' Vishṇu said to them, 'Tell me what I shall do.' Hearing this answer of his, the gods again said: 'A king named Daśaratha has performed great austerity, and celebrated an aśvamedha sacrifice, desirous of offspring, for he is childless. Do thou, Vishṇu, according to our appointment, take upon thee his sonship. Making thyself fourfold, do thou become the offspring of his three wives who resemble Hrī, Śrī, and Kīrti (Modesty, Prosperity, and Renown). Having then become man, do thou slay in battle Rāvaṇa, the powerful enemy of the worlds, who is indestructible by the gods. . . . 34. Thou, god, vexer of thy foes, art the highest refuge of us all; resolve to destroy in the world of men the enemies of the deities.' The manifested lord Nārāyaṇa, being thus appointed by the gods," replies by asking for further explanations in regard to the occasion which demanded his intervention. This explanation the gods give and say, that he alone of all the celestials can kill the wicked one (tvatto hi nānyas tam pāpaṁ śakto hantuṁ divaukasām). Vishṇu, then, "the lord of the gods" (deveśa), "the most excellent of the immortals" (tridaśa-pungava), "adored by all the worlds" (sarva-loka-namaskṛita), reassures the deities, promises to slay Rāvaṇa, and to reign on earth for eleven thousand years.

I have said that the representation given of Vishṇu in the preceding passage is of a different character from that which we find in writings of a later age. But it is not certain that any portion of this passage formed part of the Rāmāyaṇa, as it originally existed. I extract the following remarks from Lassen's "Indian Antiquities," (vol. i. p. 488, 1st edition; i. 586, 2nd edition), in regard to the interpolations which he supposes to have been made in the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata:

"It is true that in the Epic poems Rāma and Kṛishna appear as incarnations of Vishṇu, but they at the same time come before us as human heroes, and these two characters (the divine and the human) are so far from being inseparably blended together, that both of these heroes are for the most part exhibited in no other light than other highly gifted men,—acting according to human motives and taking no advantage of their divine superiority. It is only in certain sections which have been added for the purpose of enforcing their divine character that they take the character of Vishṇu. It is impossible to read either of these two poems with attention, without being reminded of the later interpolation of such sections as ascribe a divine character to the heroes, and of the unskilful manner in which these passages are often introduced, and without observing how loosely they are connected with the rest of the narrative, and how unnecessary they are for its progress." [167]

In p. 489 (1st edition, p. 587 2nd edition) note, he remarks more

[167] In the Preface to his Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. ix., 4to. ed.(=p. xv. of Dr. Hall's ed.), Professor Wilson had previously made some observations of the same tenor: "But the ascription to individual and personal deities of the attributes of the one universal and spiritual Supreme Being, is an indication of a later date than the Vedas certainly, and apparently also than the Rāmāyaṇa, where Rāma, although an incarnation of Vishṇu, commonly appears in his human character alone. There is something of the kind in the Mahābhārata in respect to Kṛishṇa, especially in the philosophical episode known as the Bhagavad Gītā. In other places the divine nature of Kṛishṇa is less decidedly affirmed; in some it is disputed or denied; and in most of the situations in which he is exhibited in action, it is as a prince and warrior, not as a divinity. He exercises no superhuman faculties in the defence of himself, or his friends, or in the defeat and destruction of his foes. The Mahābhārata, however, is evidently a work of various periods, and requires to be read throughout carefully and critically before its weight as an authority can be accurately appreciated." Professor Goldstücker, too, observes in the Preface to his Mānava Kalpa Sūtra, p. xxxi.: "It is of course impossible for me to treat here, as it were incidentally, not merely of the question concerning the age of the Mahābhārata, but the relative ages of the various portions of this work, since it must be evident to every one who has read it, that it is, in its present shape, a collection of literary products belonging to widely distant periods of Hindu literature."

particularly: "As regards the Rāmāyaṇa, Mr. von Schlegel has often observed to me that the chapters in which Rāma is conceived of as an incarnation of Vishṇu, might be entirely omitted without injuring the connexion of the story. In fact, at the point where the incarnation of Vishṇu in the four sons of Dasaratha is described (Rām. i. 14 ff.), the proper great sacrifice is already concluded, and the priests have all been presented with gifts at its close, when the new sacrifice is commenced, at which the gods appear, then withdraw, and now for the first time propose to Vishṇu to become incarnate. If this had been an original portion of the story, the gods would certainly have considered the matter sooner, and the ceremonial of sacrifice would have proceeded without interruption. In the same book, ch. 74, 75, a scene with the earlier [or Paraśu-] Rāma is suddenly interpolated, in order that he may be made to declare the new Rāma to be Vishṇu."

An examination of the earlier portions of the Rāmāyaṇa seems to confirm the opinion of Lassen that the 14th and following sections which describe the miraculous births of Rāma and his brothers as incarnations of Vishṇu, are additions interpolated at a later date in the original poem. It appears from various passages which I shall cite from the 8th and following sections, that the aśvamedha or horse-sacrifice, a rite of great importance and dignity, was instituted for the express purpose of procuring progeny for Daśaratha. But if this be so, what necessity was there for celebrating the fresh ceremony, alluded to at the beginning of section 14 as a "putrīyā ishṭi," for the same purpose? The passages to which I allude are the following:

Rām. i. 8, 1 ff. (=Bombay ed. i. 8, 1; Gorresio's ed. i. 8, 1).—Tasya tv evam-prabhāvasya dhārmikasya mahātmanaḥ | sutārtham tapyamānasya nāsīd vaṁśa-karaḥ sutaḥ | tasya chintayato buddhir utpanneyam mahāmateḥ | sutārtham vāji-medhena kimarthaṁ na yajāmy aham | suniśchitām matiṁ kṛitvā yashṭavye vasudhādhipaḥ | "But a son to prolong his race was not born to this king so mighty, and righteous, and great, though he performed intense austerity for that purpose. As this wise man reflected, the idea arose in his mind, 'why do I not celebrate a horse-sacrifice to obtain a son?' Having then formed this fixed opinion that he ought to sacrifice, the king, etc."

Again, in sect. 11, 1 (=Bombay ed. i. 12, 1; Gorresio's ed. i. 11, 1), it is said: Atha kāle vyatikrānte śiśire tadanantaram | vasanta-samaye

prāpte rājā yashṭum mano dadhe | tataḥ prasādya śirasā taṁ vipraṁ deva-varchasam | yajnāya varayāmāsa santānārthaṁ kulasya vai | "Then, when the winter had passed, and the spring had arrived, the king set his mind upon sacrificing. Having then propitiated, by [bowing] his head, that Brahman of divine splendour, he solicited him to [perform] a sacrifice for the prolongation of his race."

Then, after calling his spiritual advisers, Vāmadeva, Jāvāli, Vasishṭha, etc., he says to them (v. 8=v. 8*b* Bomb. ed.; v. 11, Gorr.): Mama tātapyamānasya putrārthaṁ nāsti vai sukham | tad ahaṁ haya-medhena yajeyam iti me matiḥ | tad-arthaṁ yashṭum ichhāmi haya-pūrveṇa karmaṇā | "I get no satisfaction, though I perform intense austerity for a son. It is therefore my resolution to celebrate a sacrifice in which a horse is the first victim."

We are again told (v. 20):

Tataḥ sa gatvā tāḥ patnīr narendro hṛidayangamāḥ | uvācha dīkshāṁ viśata yakshye 'haṁ suta-kāraṇāt | "Then going to his beloved wives, the king said to them, 'Enter upon a course of consecration; I am about to sacrifice for a son.'"

And at the beginning of the 12th section (=Bomb. ed. 13th; Gorr. 12th) it is said: Punaḥ prāpte vasante tu pūrṇaḥ saṁvatsaro 'bhavat | prasavārtham gato yashṭum hayamedhena vīryavān | "Then, when the spring arrived, a year had elapsed, and the heroic king went to celebrate a horse-sacrifice for the sake of offspring."

Preparations are then made for the sacrifice (sect. 12), and it is duly celebrated (sect. 13). The queen, Kauśalya, "through desire of a son," remains in close contact with the slaughtered horse for one night (13, 36 [=Bomb. ed., i. 14, 34; Gorr. i. 12, 34]: Patatriṇā tadā sārddham sushṭhitena cha chetasā | avasad rajanīm ekām Kauśalyā putra-kāmyayā), and the other two queens beside her (v. 37).[163]

The conclusion of the sacrifice is thus recorded at the end of section 13, vv. 54 ff. (=Bomb. ed. 14, 58*b*; Gorr. 13, 45).

[163] See Wilson's translation of the R. V., vol. ii., Introd., p. xiii.; the Vājasaneyi Saṁhitā, xxiii. 20 ff., and commentary; S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, pp. 990 ff.; Kātyāyana Sūtras, p. 973; and Mahābhārata, xiv. 2645. On the word patatrin, "winged," applied to the horse, the commentator in the Bombay ed., in loco, remarks: Purā aśvānām pakshāḥ santi iti prasiddhyā evaṁvādaḥ | patatriṇā garuḍa-vegena ity anye | "This is said because it is well known that horses formerly had wings. Others say the meaning of the word is, 'having the speed of Garuḍa' (the fabled bird)."

Dakshiṇāḥ parigṛihyātha suprīṭa-mānasā dvijāḥ | ūchur Daśarathaṁ tatra kāmaṁ dhyāyeti vai tadā | tato 'bravīd Ṛishyaśringaṁ rājā Daśarathas tadā | kulasya vardhanaṁ tat tu kartuṁ arhasi suvrata | tatheti sa cha rājānam uvācha dvija-sattamaḥ | bhavishyanti sutā rājaṁś chatvāras te kulodvahāḥ | "Having received the gifts with great gratification, the Brahmans then said to Daśaratha, 'Think of the object you desire.' The king then said to Ṛishyaśringa, 'Thou oughtest, saint, to effect that increase of my race.' The most excellent of Brahmans replied, 'So be it; king, there shall be to thee four sons, the continuators of thy race.'"

We are then told at the beginning of section 14, as above quoted (p. 165), that Ṛishyaśringa, after thinking over the preceding reply, offers to celebrate another sacrifice with texts from the Atharva-śiras, in order to procure offspring for the king; and proceeds accordingly to do so, though, in striking contrast to the particular description given of the aśvamedha, no details of this additional ceremony are supplied. We are then told (verse 4) that the gods had previously come to the aśvamedha sacrifice, to obtain their shares of the oblations, and that Ṛishyaśringa now tells them that the king had performed austerity in order to obtain offspring, that he had also celebrated an aśvamedha sacrifice, and was now about to perform another rite. The necessity for this second sacrifice does not appear; it seems strange that a ceremony of such importance as the aśvamedha should be insufficient; there appears to be no reason why the gods should not have been told at first, on that occasion, that the king was anxious for a son, since that was the very object for which the first sacrifice was offered; and that this communication should have been reserved till the commencement of the second sacrifice.

In section 15 (=Bombay ed. 15, 31 ff. and 16; Gorr. 15) we are told that Vishṇu, considering how he shall fulfil his promise to the gods, makes himself fourfold, and chooses Daśaratha for his human parent. He then, after respectfully addressing Brahmā, disappears from heaven, and when Daśaratha is offering the second sacrifice for progeny, the god issues forth from the fire in the form of a glorious being, calling himself a son of Prajāpati (prājāpatyaṁ naram), and bearing a large vessel full of nectar. This nectar he desires Daśaratha to administer to his wives, who would then bear sons. Vishṇu then, after receiving the king's homage, disappears.

Daśaratha gives the half of the potion to Kauśalyā, and a fourth each to Sumitrā and Kaikeyī. They all in consequence become pregnant.

Section 16 (=Bombay ed. 17; Gorresio, 20) begins thus: Putratvaṁ tu gate Vishṇau rājnas tasya mahātmanaḥ | uvācha devān āhūya Svayambhūr bhagavān idam | "When Vishṇu had entered into the relation of sonship to that great king, the divine Svayambhū (Brahmā) summoned the gods, and said to them." These words must either be said by way of anticipation, for the birth of Daśaratha's sons is not related till we come to section 19; or the section must be misplaced, or interpolated. The commentator in the Bombay ed. explains gate by gantum upakrānte, "had begun to enter." In Gorresio's ed. this section is placed as the 20th. The section proceeds to describe the creation of the monkeys, who were to be the allies of Rāma.

The conclusion of the aśvamedha sacrifice and the departure of the gods are again alluded to at the commencement of sect. 17 (Schlegel's ed.) in these words: 1. Samāpte tu kratau tasmin vājimedhe mahātmanaḥ | havirbhāgān avāpyeshṭān jagmur devāḥ yathāgatam | 2 | ṛishayaś cha mahātmānaḥ pratijagmuḥ supūjitāḥ | rājānaś chaiva ye tatra kratāv āsan samāgatāḥ | 1. "When that horse-sacrifice of the great king had been completed, the gods, having received the desired shares of the oblations, departed as they had come. 2. The great rishis, too, after being duly honoured, and the kings who had come to the sacrifice, returned." Here we have another indication that the sections intervening between the 13th and the 17th form a later interpolation. With the commencement of this 17th section of Schlegel's ed., the opening verses of Gorresio's 16th section, and of the 18th section of the Bombay ed., coincide. The last-mentioned recension, however, from which I proceed to quote some verses, touches very briefly on the dismissal of the kings who had come to the sacrifice, and of Ṛishyaśṛinga, and proceeds to the birth of Rāma and his brothers, whilst the other two texts enlarge on the former topics, and do not arrive at the last subject before their 19th section. Sect. 18 of the Bombay ed. begins thus:

1 | Nivṛitte tu kratau tasmin hayamedhe mahātmanaḥ | pratigṛihyāmarāḥ bhāgān pratijagmur yathāgatam | 2 | samāpta-dīkshā-niyamaḥ patnī-gaṇa-samanvitaḥ | praviveśa purīṁ rājā sa-bhṛitya-bala-vāhanaḥ |

3 | yathārham pūjitās tena rājñā cha prithivīśvarāḥ | muditāḥ prayayur deśān praṇamya muni-pungavam | 4 | śrīmatāṁ gachhatāṁ teshāṁ svagṛihāṇi purāt tataḥ | balāni rājñāṁ śubhrāṇi prahṛishṭāni chakāśire | 5 | gateshu prithivīśeshu rājā Daśarathaḥ punaḥ | praviveśa purīṁ śrīmān puraskṛitya dvijottamān | 6 | S'āntayā prayayau sārdham Ṛishyaśṛingaḥ supūjitaḥ | anugamyamāno rājñā cha sānuyātreṇa dhīmatā | 7 | Evaṁ visṛijya tān sarvān rājā sampūrṇa-mānasaḥ | uvāsa sukhitas tatra putrotpattiṁ vichintayan | 8 | tato yajne samāpte tu ṛitūnāṁ shaṭ samatyayuḥ | tataś cha dvādaśe māse ityādi | 1. "When that horse-sacrifice of the great king had come to an end, the immortals, after receiving their shares, returned as they had come. 2. The ceremony of consecration being concluded, the king with his wives, servants, army, and chariots, entered into the city. 3. The princes, too, after being duly honoured by the king, and having made obeisance to the most excellent muni, departed with joy to their several countries. 4. The hosts of these glorious monarchs, as they set out from the city for their homes, shone brilliant and delighted. 5. When they had gone, King Daśaratha again entered the city, preceded by the Brahmans. 6. Ṛishyaśṛinga, receiving homage, set out with (his wife) S'āntā, followed by the wise king and his attendants. 7. Having dismissed all these (visitors), the king, with satisfied mind, dwelt in happiness, meditating on the birth of his sons. 8. Then six seasons elapsed after the sacrifice had been completed; and in the twelfth month," etc. [The sequel of this passage, together with the parallel verses of Gorresio's edition, will be found in the Appendix.]

Schlegel's ed., as I have already noticed, does not reach the same point of the narrative till its 19th section, which begins by relating the birth of Daśaratha's sons, twelve months after the conclusion of the sacrifice, by which no doubt the horse sacrifice is intended (tato yajne samāpte tu ṛitūnāṁ shaṭ samatyayuḥ | tataścha dvādaśe māśe ityādi). After specifying the month, day, and planetary influences under which Rāma was born, the writer proceeds: . . . . Jagannāthaṁ sarva-loka-namaskṛitam | Kauśalyā 'janayad Rāmaṁ divya-lakshaṇa-saṁyutam | Kauśalyā śuśubhe tena putreṇāmita-tejasā | yathā 'dhipena devānām Aditir Vajrapāṇinā | [bhavāya sa hi lokānāṁ Rāvaṇasya badhāya cha* | Vishṇor vīryārdhato jajne Rāmo rājīva-lochanaḥ | Bharato

*nāma Kaikeyyāṁ jajne satya-parākramaḥ | [sākshād Vishṇoś chaturbhāgaḥ sarvaiḥ samudito guṇaiḥ | atha Lakshmaṇa-Satrughnau Sumitrā 'janayat sutau | dṛiḍha-bhaktī mahotsāhau Vishṇor ardha-samanvitau |] pushye jātas tu Bharato mīna-lagne prasanna-dhīḥ | sārpe jātau tu Saumitrī kulīre 'bhyadite ravau |

"Kauśalyā bore Rāma, the lord of the universe, adored by all worlds, distinguished by divine marks. Kauśalyā derived lustre from that son of boundless might, as Aditi did from the Thunderer, the lord of the gods. [*For the lotus-eyed Rāma was produced from the half of Vishṇu's virile power, for the good of the world and the slaughter of Rāvaṇa. Bharata, of genuine valour, was born of Kaikeyī, manifest as the fourth part of Vishṇu, endowed with all virtues. Then Sumitrā brought forth two sons, of strong devotion and great energy, Lakshmaṇa and Śatrughna, possessing (each) the half (of the fourth part) of Vishṇu.] Now Bharata, of clear understanding, was born under Pushya (the eighth lunar mansion), under the sign of the fishes; while the sons of Sumitrā were born under the [ninth] lunar mansion of the serpents, when the sun had entered into Cancer."

If the supposition of Schlegel and Lassen that the 14th, 15th, and 16th sections are interpolated, be correct, it is quite conceivable that the verses of the section before us describing Daśaratha's sons as portions of Vishṇu, which I have marked with an asterisk and included in brackets, may also have been interpolated, as they can be spared without detriment to the connexion; and if they are retained, the births of Bharata, Lakshmaṇa, and Śatrughna, are related twice. In that case the epithets "lord of the universe," and "adored by all worlds," which occur in the first of the verses I have quoted, may have been afterwards substituted for some of a less magnificent character which stood there before. And, in fact, if Rāma was originally regarded as an incarnation of Vishṇu, it does not appear so suitable to compare his birth to that of Indra (in that case a personage of less dignity than Vishṇu), as is done in one of the verses which I presume to be ancient, and genuine.

The following is a summary of the episode of the apparition of Paraśurāma referred to above by Prof. Lassen in p. 170. When King Daśaratha was returning to his capital, after taking leave of Janaka, the King of Mithilā, whose daughter Sītā had just been married to Rāma (Rāmāyaṇa, Schleg. i. 74=Bombay ed. i. 74, and Gorresio's ed. i. 76), he was alarmed by the ill-omened sounds uttered by certain birds, which however were counteracted, as the sage Vasishṭha assured the king, by the auspicious sign of his being perambulated by the wild animals of the forest. The alarming event indicated was the arrival of Paraśurāma, preceded by a hurricane which shook the earth and prostrated the trees, and by thick darkness which veiled the sun. He was fearful to behold, brilliant as fire, and bore his axe and a bow on his shoulder. Being received with honour, which he accepted, he proceeded to say to Rāma, the son of Daśaratha (in section 75), that he had heard of his prowess in breaking the bow produced by Janaka (Rām. i. 67), and had brought another which he asked Rāma to bend, and to fit an arrow on the string; and if he succeeded in doing so, he (Paraśurāma) would offer to engage with him in single combat. Daśaratha is rendered anxious by this speech, and adopts a suppliant tone towards Paraśurāma, but the latter again addresses Rāma, and says that the bow he had broken was Śiva's, but the one he himself had now brought was Vishṇu's. Two celestial bows, he proceeds, were made by Viśvakarman, of which one was given by the gods to Mahādeva, the other to Vishṇu. The narrative then proceeds (14 ff.):

Tadā tu devatāḥ sarvāḥ pṛichhanti sma Pitāmaham | Śitikaṇṭhasya Vishṇoś cha balābala-nirīkshayā | abhiprāyaṁ tu vijñāya devatānām Pitāmahaḥ | virodhaṁ janayāmāsa tayoḥ satyavatāṁ varaḥ | virodhe tu mahad yuddham abhavad roma-harshaṇam | Śitikaṇṭhasya Vishṇoś cha parasparajayaishiṇoḥ | tadā tu jṛimbhitam śaivaṁ dhanur bhīma-parākramam | hunkāreṇa Mahādevaḥ stambhito 'tha trilochanaḥ | devais tadā samāgamya sarshi-sanghaiḥ sa-chāraṇaiḥ | yāchitau praśamaṁ tatra jagmatus tau surottamau | jṛimbhitaṁ tad dhanur dṛishṭvā śaivaṁ Vishṇu-parākramaiḥ | adhikam menire Vishṇuṁ devāḥ sarshi-gaṇās tathā | dhanū Rudras tu sankruddho Videheshu mahāyaśāḥ | Devarātasya rājarsher dadau haste sa-sāyakam | idaṁ tu Vaishṇavaṁ Rāma dhanuḥ para-puranjayam | Ṛichīke Bhārgave prādād Vishṇuḥ sa nyāsam uttamam | "The gods then all made a request to Brahmā, desiring to find out the strength and weakness of Śitikáṇṭha (Mahādeva) and Vishṇu. Brahmā, most excellent of the true, learning the purpose of the gods, created enmity between the two. In this state of enmity a great and terrible fight ensued between Śitikaṇṭha and Vishṇu, each of whom was eager to conquer the other. S'iva's bow of dreadful power was then relaxed, and the three-eyed Mahādeva was arrested by a muttering. These two eminent deities being entreated by the assembled gods, rishis, and Chāraṇas, then became pacified. Seeing that the bow of S'iva had been relaxed by the prowess of Vishṇu; the gods and rishis esteemed Vishṇu to be superior.[169] Then the illustrious Rudra, incensed, gave the bow and arrows into the hand of the royal rishi Devarāta [who dwelt] among the Videhas. But this, Rāma, is the bow of Vishṇu, which vanquishes hostile cities. Vishṇu gave this excellent deposit to Ṛichīka, the descendant of Bhṛigu." From him it came to Jamadagni, father of Paraśurāma. After referring to his father's murder by Arjuna,[170] and his own subsequent history, Paraśurāma repeats that he had heard of Rāma's prowess in breaking the other bow, and again asks him to bend Vishṇu's; and in the event of his succeeding, again offers to fight him. Rāma replies (section 76) that though his warlike qualities are contemned by his rival, he will give him a proof of his powers. He then snatches, in anger, the bow from the hand of Paraśurāma, bends it, fits an arrow on the string; and tells his challenger that he will not shoot at him because he is a Brāhman, and for the sake of his kinsman Viśvāmitra; but will either destroy his superhuman capacity of movement, or deprive him of the blessed abodes he has acquired by austerity. The gods now arrive to be witnesses of the scene. Paraśurāma becomes disheartened and powerless, and humbly entreats that he may not be deprived of his faculty of movement (lest he should be incapacitated from fulfilling his promise to Kaśyapa to leave the earth every night), but consents that his blissful abodes may be destroyed. He then goes on, v. 17 (Schlegel's and Bombay editions=sect. 77, 49 ff. of Gorresio): Akshayam Madhuhantāraṁ jānāmi tvām maheśvaram (or sureśvaram) | dhanusho 'sya parāmarśāt svasti te 'stu parantapa | 18 | ete sura-gaṇāḥ sarve nirīkshante samāgatāḥ | tvām apratima-karmāṇam apratidvandvam āhave | 19 | na cheyam mama Kākutstha vrīḍā bhavitum arhati | tvayā trailokya-nāthena yad ahaṁ vimukhīkṛitaḥ | 17. "By the bending of this bow I recognize thee to be the imperishable slayer of Madhu, the great Lord (or lord of the Gods): hail, vanquisher of thy foes! 18. All these assembled gods behold thee who art unequalled in action, unrivalled in fight. 19. It need be no cause of shame to me that I have been humbled by thee who art the lord of the three worlds." Rāma then shoots the arrow, and destroys Paraśurāma's abodes.

[169] The orthodox commentator (in the Bombay edition) will not allow this to be taken absolutely. He says: Vastutas tu prakṛita-yuddhe Vishṇor ādhikya-darśanāt Tripura-badhe S'ivasya ādhikya-darśanāt tayoḥ sāmya-grahaṇam iti tātparyam | "In reality, as we find that Vishṇu is the stronger in the fight before us, whilst S'iva is stronger in the slaughter of Tripura, the result is that their equality must be assumed."

[170] See the first volume of this work, second edition, pp. 449 ff.

In whatever light the author of these lines may really have looked upon Vishṇu, whether as identical with the supreme Spirit or not, the passage itself contains no epithet or expression which necessitates such an interpretation. At the same time it is to be observed that the Vishṇu Purāṇa (see Wilson's trans. pp. 594 ff. 4to. ed.=pp. 114 ff. vol. v. of Dr. Hall's ed.), the Harivaṁśa (sections 183 and 184), and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (x., 64th and previous sections), which indubitably regard Vishṇu as the supreme Deity, also relate a combat between him and Mahādeva. There is no doubt, however, that the 119th section of the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, which I now proceed to quote from the text of the edition published some years ago at Bombay, distinctly speaks of Rāma as an incarnation of the supreme Spirit. This Bombay text, though it follows the Devanāgarī recension of Upper India, does not, in this section, differ materially, except in the arrangement of the verses, from that of Gorresio. I should judge, from the nature of the epithets which are here applied to Vishṇu, that this chapter, as it now stands, could not have formed part of the original Rāmāyaṇa. In the preceding portion of the poem it had been related that Sītā, after being recovered by Rāma on the defeat and death of Rāvaṇa, had been suspected of unchastity by her husband, and had in consequence entered the fire. The 119th section then goes on thus:

Yuddha-Kāṇḍa, sect. 119, 1 ff.—Tato hi durmanāḥ Rāmaḥ śrutvaivaṁ vadatāṁ giraḥ | dadhyau muhūrtaṁ dharmātmā vāshpa-vyākula-lochanaḥ | tato Vaiśravaṇo rājā Yamaś cha pitṛibhiḥ saha | Sahasrākshaś cha deveśo Varuṇaścha jaleśvaraḥ | shaḍ-ardha-nayanaḥ śrīmān Mahādevo vṛisha-dvajaḥ | kartā sarvasya lokasya Brahmā brahma-vidāṁ varaḥ | [171] sa cha rājā Daśaratho vimānenāntarīksha-gaḥ | abhyājagāma taṁ deśaṁ deva-rāja-sama-dyutiḥ |] ete sarve samāgamya vimānaiḥ sūrya-sannibhaiḥ | āgamya nagarīṁ Lankām abhijagmuś cha Rāghavam | tataḥ sa-hastābharaṇān pragṛihya vipulān bhujān | abruvan tridaśa-śreshṭhāḥ Rāghavam prāñjaliṁ [171] This verse is found in Gorresio's edition only, not in that of Bombay.

sthitam | kartā sarvasya lokasya śreshṭho jñānavidāṁ vibhuḥ | upekshase kathaṁ Sītām patantīm havyavāhane | kathaṁ deva-gaṇa-śreshṭham ātmānaṁ nāvabudhyase ||| Ṛita-dhāmā Vasuḥ pūrvaṁ Vasūnāṁ cha Prajāpatiḥ | tvam trayāṇāṁ hi lokānām ādikartā svayam prabhuḥ | Rudrāṇām ashṭamo Rudraḥ Sādhyānām api panchamaḥ | Aśvinau chāpi te karṇau chandrādityau cha chakshushī | ante chādau cha bhūtānāṁ dṛiśyase tvam parantapa | upekshase cha Vaidehīm mānushaḥ prākṛito yathā | ity ukto lokapālais taiḥ svāmī lokasya Rāghavaḥ | abravīt tridaśa-śreshṭhān Rāmo dharma-bhṛitāṁ varaḥ | ātmānam mānusham manye Rāmaṁ Daśarathātmajam | so 'haṁ yaśeha yataś chāhaṁ bhagavāṁs tad bravītu me | iti bruvāṇaṁ Kākutsthaṁ Brahmā brahma-vidāṁ varaḥ | abravīt śṛiṇu me vākyaṁ satyaṁ satya-parākrama | bhavān Nārāyaṇaḥ devaḥ śrīmāṁś chakrāyudhaḥ prabhuḥ | eka-śṛingo varāhas tvam bhūta-bhavya-sapatna-jit | aksharam Brahma satyaṁ cha madhye chānte cha Rāghava | lokānāṁ tvam paro dharmo Vishvaksenaś chaturbhujaḥ | Śārnga-dhanvā Hṛishīkeśaḥ purushaḥ purushottamaḥ | ajitaḥ khaḍga-dhṛig Vishṇuḥ Kṛishṇaś chaiva vṛihadbalaḥ | Senānīr grāmaṇīḥ satyas tvam buddhis tvaṁ kshamā damaḥ | prabhavaś chāpyayaś cha tvam Upendro Madhusūdanaḥ | Indra-karmā Mahendras tvam padmanābho raṇānta-kṛit | śaraṇyaṁ śaraṇaṁ cha tvām āhur divyāḥ maharshayaḥ | sahasra-śṛingo vedātmā śata-śīrshāḥ maharshabhaḥ | tvaṁ trayāṇāṁ hi lokānām ādi-kartā svayam prabhuḥ | siddhānām api sādhyānām āśrayaś chāsi pūrvaja | tvaṁ yajnas tvaṁ vashaṭkāras tvam oṁkāraḥ parāt paraḥ | prabhavaṁ nidhanaṁ vā te na viduḥ ko bhavān iti | dṛiśyase sarva-bhūteshu brāhmaṇeshu cha goshu cha | dikshu sarvāsu gagane parvateshu nadīshu cha | sahasra-charaṇaḥ śrīmān śata-śīrshāḥ sahasra-dṛik | tvaṁ dhārayasi bhūtāni vasudhāṁ cha sa-parvatām | ante pṛithivyāḥ salile dṛiśyase tvam mahoragaḥ | trīn lokān dhārayan Rāma deva-gandharva-dānavāḥ | ahaṁ te hṛidayaṁ Rāma jihvā devī Sarasvatī | devāḥ romāṇi gātreshu Brahmaṇā nirmitāḥ prabho | nimeshas te smṛitā rātrir unmesho divasas tathā | saṁskārās te 'bhavan vedāḥ naitad asti tvayā vinā | jagat sarvaṁ śarīraṁ te sthairyaṁ te vasudhā-talam | Agniḥ kopaḥ prasādas te Somaḥ śrīvatsalakshaṇa | tvayā lokās trayaḥ krāntāḥ purā svair vikramais tribhiḥ | Mahendraś cha kṛito rājā Balim baddhvā sudāruṇam | [172] yat paraṁ śrūyate jyotir yat paraṁ śrūyate tamaḥ | yat param parataś chaiva paramātmeti kathyase | paramākhyam paraṁ yach cha tvam eva parigīyase | sthity-utpatti-vināśānāṁ tvām āhuḥ paramāṁ

[172] These two verses occur in Gorresio's edition only, not in that of Bombay.

gatim |] Sītā Lakshmīr bhavān Vishṇur devaḥ Kṛishṇaḥ prajāpatiḥ | badhārthaṁ Rāvaṇasyeha pravishṭo 'mānushīṁ tanum ityādi |

"Then the righteous Rāma, dejected, on hearing the words of those who thus spoke, meditated for a moment, with his eyes disturbed by tears. Then King Kuvera, and Yaṁa with the Pitṛis, and Indra, lord of the gods, and Varuṇa, lord of the waters, and the glorious three-eyed Mahādeva, whose ensign is a bull, and Brahmā, the creator of the whole world, the most eminent of the knowers of the Veda; [*and that King Daśaratha, moving in the air on a celestial car, arrived in that region, equal in lustre to the king of the gods]; these all having come on cars brilliant as the sun, and arrived in the city of Lankā, came near to Rāghava (Rāma). Then these most eminent gods, holding the large arms of Rāma, adorned with armlets, addressed him as he stood with joined hands: 'How dost thou, the maker of the whole universe, the most eminent of the wise, the pervading, disregard Sītā's throwing herself into the fire? How dost thou not perceive thyself to be the chief of the host of the gods? [Thou wast] formerly the Vasu Ṛitadhāman, and the Prajāpati of the Vasus. Thou art the primal maker of the three worlds, the self-dependent lord, the eighth Rudra of the Rudras, and the fifth of the Sādhyas. The Aśvins are thine ears, the Moon and Sun thine eyes. Thou, vexer of thy foes, art seen in the end and at the beginning of created things. And yet thou disregardest Sītā like a common man.' Being thus addressed by these guardians of the world, Rāma, the lord of the world, chief of the supporters of righteousness, said to the most eminent gods, 'I regard myself as a man,[173] Rāma, son of Daśaratha; do you, divine being, tell me who and whence I am.' Brahmā, chief of the knowers of the [173] In the parts of the Mahābhārata where Kṛishṇa is identified with the supreme Deity, he is always represented as perfectly conscious of his true character. The commentator explains away this eleventh verse in the following manner: Atha Brahmānugrahād eva Brahma-vidyaunmukhyasya śruty-ādi-siddhatayā tad-aunmukyasya "ātmānaṁ nāvabudhyase" iti Brahmaṇaiva kṛitatvāt taj-jijñāsur iva svīyānāṁ sva-svarūpa-bodhanāya Brahmāṇaṁ gurum ajñaḥ iva upāsad ity āha "ātmānam" iti | "As it is established by the Veda, etc., that the aspiration after the science of Brahma comes only from the grace of Brahmā, and since Brahmā had just prompted that aspiration by the words 'how dost thou not perceive thyself?' Rāma, assuming the appearance of a desire to know, with the view of explaining his nature to his (worshippers), applies to Brahmā, as an ignorant student to his teacher, and says, 'I regard myself,' etc."

Veda, replied to Kākutstha (Rāma) thus speaking: 'Hear my true word, O being of genuine power. Thou art the god, the glorious lord, Nārāyaṇa, armed with the discus. Thou art the one-horned boar, the conqueror of thy foes, past and future, the true, imperishable Brahma, both in the middle and end. Thou art the supreme righteousness of the worlds, Vishvaksena, the four-armed; the bearer of the bow, Sārnga, Hṛishīkeśa (lord of the senses), Purusha (the male), the highest of Purushas, the unconquered, sword-wielding, Vishṇu, and Kṛishṇa[174] of mighty force, the general, the leader, the true. Thou art intelligence, thou art patience, and self-restraint. Thou art the source of being and cause of destruction, Upendra (the younger Indra), and Madhusūdana. Thou art Mahendra (the elder Indra) fulfilling the function of Indra, he from whose navel springs a lotus, the ender of battles. The great divine rishis call thee the refuge, the resort of suppliants. Thou art the thousand-horned, composed of the Veda, the hundred-headed, the mighty. Thou art the primal maker of the three worlds, the self-dependent lord, and the refuge of the Siddhas and Sādhyas, O thou primevally born. Thou art sacrifice, thou art the vashaṭkāra, and the oṁkāra, higher than the highest. Men know not who thou art, the source of being, or the destroyer. Thou art seen in all creatures, in Brahmans and in cows, in all the regions, in the mountains and rivers, thousand-footed, glorious, hundred-headed, thousand-eyed. Thou sustainest creatures, and the earth with its mountains; thou art seen, Rāma, at the extremity of the earth, in the waters, a mighty serpent supporting the three worlds, gods, Gandharvas, and Dānavas. I am thy heart, Rāma, the goddess Sarasvatī is thy tongue. The gods have been made by Brahmā the hairs on thy limbs. The night is called the closing, and the day the opening, of thine eyes. The Vedas are thy thoughts.[175] This [universe] exists not without thee. The whole world is thy body; the earth is thy stability. Agni is thine anger, Soma is thy pleasure, O thou whose mark is the Śrīvatsa. By thee [174] If this means, as it seems to do, Kṛishṇa, the son of Devakī, it must, if not an anachronism, be intended as prophetic. The commentator, both here and further on, makes it mean merely the "black-coloured" (kṛishṇas tad-varṇaḥ).

[175] The commentator explains saṁskārāḥ thus: Saṁskriyante bodhyante ebhir lokāḥ iti saṁskārāḥ pravṛitti-nivṛitti-vyavasthā-bodhakāḥ | "Saṁskāras are the things by which people are instructed, the things which prescribe the rules of acting and forbearing to act." But this cannot well be the sense here.

the three worlds were traversed of yore with thy three paces, and Mahendra was made king after thou hadst bound the terrible Bali. [*That which is known as the chiefest light, that which is known as the chiefest darkness, that which is higher than the highest,—thou art called the highest Soul. It is thou who art hymned as that which is called the highest, and [is] the highest. Men call thee the highest source of continuance, production, and destruction.] Sītā is Lakshmī,[176] and thou art Vishṇu, the divine Kṛishṇa, the lord of creatures, who hast entered a mortal body for the slaughter of Rāvaṇa,'" etc.

In the same way as Vishṇu is associated with Rāma in the Rāmāyaṇa, so is he connected with Kṛishṇa in the Mahābhārata, the Vishṇu, Bhāgavata, and Brahma-vaivartta, Purāṇas, and other Vaishṇava works of a later date. In the two first-named Purāṇas, though Kṛishṇa is sometimes spoken of as a partial incarnation of Vishṇu (see the passage from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, x. 33, 27, quoted above, p. 50, and another from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, which will be adduced below), he is generally regarded as a perfect manifestation of that deity, who, again, is identified with the supreme Spirit. In the Mahābhārata—which, as we have seen, contains a vast collection of heterogeneous materials originating in different ages, and embodying the opinions of various sects—we shall find that Kṛishṇa is diversely represented in different parts of the work. I have already (p. 169) quoted some remarks of Professors Wilson and Lassen on this subject. According to these authors Kṛishṇa, in so far as he is introduced as an actor in the events of the poem, is generally made to play a merely human part, and to manifest no superhuman power in succouring friends, or overcoming enemies; while, as Professor Wilson remarks, his divine character is frequently disputed. In the Chhāndogya Upanishad he is spoken of simply as the son of Devakī. In various parts of the Mahābhārata he is described as rendering homage to Mahādeva, and as receiving from him boons of various kinds. In many passages he is identified with the rishi Nārāyaṇa, while his friend Arjuna appears as one with the rishi Nara, the inseparable companion of the former. In these various passages, however, Kṛishṇa is by no means regarded in general as an ordinary mortal. He receives various divine weapons from Mahādeva; in his character as the rishi Nārāyaṇa, he lives through successive ages, and displays superhuman faculties. Even while acting as the ally of the Pāṇḍus, he destroys Śiśupāla supernaturally with his discus. And in numerous passages he is identified in the clearest manner with Vishṇu, who again, as I have said, is commonly assumed to be one with the supreme Spirit. I shall now proceed to adduce a variety of passages illustrative of these various assertions.

[176] In regard to Lakshmī and S'rī, see the fifth volume of this work, pp. 348 f.

I. The following short passage from the Chhāndogya Upanishad (pp. 220 ff. of the Bibl. Ind.) is, I believe, the oldest text yet known in which Kṛishṇa the son of Devakī is mentioned. It is extremely unfortunate that it is so brief; that it leaves us without any particulars of a personage about whom we should have been glad to possess the fullest details, who in after-times became so famous as to obtain the honour of deification,—except the meagre information that he was the son of Devakī, the pupil of a teacher named Ghora,[177] and that he was so enthusiastically devoted to the pursuit of mystical lore as to become indifferent to everything else:

Tad ha etad Ghoraḥ Āṅgirasaḥ Kṛishṇāya Devakī-putrāya uktvā uvācha apipāsaḥ eva sa babhūva so 'nta-velāyām etat-trayam pratipadyeta "akshitam asy achyutam asi prāṇa-saṁśitam asi" iti | "Ghora, the descendant of Angiras, having declared this [the preceding mystical lore] to Kṛishṇa the son of Devakī, said to him that [which, when he heard], he became free from thirst [i.e. desire], viz.: 'let a man at the time of his death have recourse to these three texts, 'Thou art the undecaying, thou art the imperishable, thou art the subtile principle of breath.'"

I quote some of the commentator's remarks on this important text:

Tad ha etad yajna-darśanaṁ Ghoro nāmataḥ Āṅgiraso gotrataḥ Kṛishṇāya Devakī-putrāya śishyāya uktvā uvācha | tad "etat trayam" ityādi vyavahitena sambandhaḥ | sa cha etad darśanaṁ śrutvā apipāsaḥ eva anyābhyo vidyābho babhūva | itthaṁ cha viśishṭā iyaṁ vidyā yat Kṛishṇasya Devakī-putrasya anyāṁ vidyām prati trid-vichheda-karī iti purusha-yajna-vidyāṁ stauti | Ghoraḥ Āṅgirasaḥ Kṛishṇāya uktvā imāṁ vidyāṁ kim uvācha iti tad āha | sa evaṁ yathokta-yajna-vid anta-velāyām maraṇa-kāle etan-mantra-trayam pratipadyeta japed ity arthaḥ |

[177] I am not aware whether Ghora is mentioned in connexion with Kṛishṇa in any other work.

. . . . prāṇa-saṁśitam prāṇasya śaṁśitaṁ samyak tanukṛitancha sūkshmaṁ tattvam asi . . . . | "A person, Ghora by name, and an Āngirasa by family, having declared this doctrine of sacrifice to Kṛishṇa the son of Devakī, his pupil, then said, etc. The connexion of the last word 'said,' is with the words which occur some way below, 'these three,' etc. And having heard this doctrine, he became free from desire for any other kinds of knowledge. In this manner he praises this knowledge of the Purusha-sacrifice by saying that it was so distinguished that it destroyed all thirst in Kṛishṇa, the son of Devakī, for any other knowledge. He now tells us what Ghora Āngirasa said after declaring this knowledge to Kṛishṇa. It was this: 'Let him who knows the aforesaid sacrifice, at the time of his death have recourse to, mutter, these three texts; . . . . prāṇa-saṁśitam means, 'thou art the very minute, and subtile principle of breath.'"

II. I shall next quote some passages of the Mahābhārata in which Kṛishṇa is represented as rendering homage to Mahādeva, and consequently, to all appearance, as acknowledging his own inferiority to that deity. It is related in the Vana-parvan (vv. 1513–1656), in a passage which I shall quote further on, that Arjuna goes to supplicate Mahādeva for celestial weapons, and obtains from him the Pāśupata.

At a later stage of the poem (Droṇa-parvan, v. 2838) Arjuna is advised by Kṛishṇa to apply again to Mahādeva for the same Pāśupata weapon, as if the author (if indeed he is the same by whom the earlier passage was written) had forgotten that he had already got it. Arjuna, it appears, had vowed (vv. 2681 ff.) to slay Jayadratha on the following day, though all the inferior deities should stand forward as his protectors. Subsequently, however, he becomes dejected, reflecting that the enemy's leaders would do their utmost to preserve Jayadratha, and that he would thus be unable to fulfil his promise (vv. 2830 ff.). Kṛishṇa hereupon advises Arjuna to supplicate Mahādeva for the Pāśupata weapon with which that god himself had formerly destroyed all the Daityas, and with which he (Arjuna) would be able to slay Jayadratha on the morrow (vv. 2833 ff.). Arjuna and Kṛishṇa then arrive with the speed of the wind, at the mountain on the summit of which Mahādeva abode, where they obtain a vision of that deity, with Pārvatī and his attendant Bhūtas (demons). On seeing him Vāśudeva (Kṛishṇa) bows down to the earth:

Mahābhārata, Droṇa-parvan, vv. 2862 ff.—Vāsudevas tu taṁ dṛishṭvā jagāma śirasā kshitim | Pārthena saha dharmātmā gṛiṇan brahma sanātanam | lokādiṁ viśva-karmāṇam ajam īśānam avyayam | manasaḥ paramāṁ yoniṁ khaṁ vāyuṁ jyotishāṁ nidhim | srashṭāraṁ vāridhārāṇām bhuvaścha prakṛitim parām | deva-dānava-yakshāṇām mānavānāncha sādhanam | yogānāncha param brahma tṛiptam brahma-vidāṁ nidhim | charācharasya srashṭāram pratihartāram eva cha | kāla-kopam mahātmānaṁ śakra-sūrya-guṇodayam | vavande taṁ tadā Kṛishṇo vāṅ-mano buddhi-karmabhiḥ | yam prapadyanti vidvāṁsaḥ sūkshmādhyātma-padaishiṇaḥ | tam ajaṁ kāraṇātmānaṁ jagmatuḥ śaraṇam Bhavam | Arjunaś chāpi taṁ devam bhūyo bhūyo 'py avandata | jñātvā taṁ sarva-bhūtādim bhūta-bhavya-bhavodbhavam | tatas tāv āgatau dṛishṭvā Nara-Nārāyaṇāv ubhau | suprasanna-manāḥ S'arvaḥ provācha prahasann iva | āgataṁ vāṁ nara-śreshṭhāv uttishṭhetāṁ gata-klamau | kincha vām īpsitaṁ vīrau manasaḥ kshipram uchyatām | yena kāryeṇa samprāptau yuvāṁ tat sādhayāmi kim | vriyatām ātmanaḥ śreyas tat sarvam pradadāmi vām |

"The righteous Vāsudeva (Kṛishṇa) then, together with the son of Pṛithā (Arjuna), reciting the eternal Veda, bowed his head to the ground, beholding him, the source of the worlds, the maker of the universe, the unborn, the imperishable lord, the supreme source of mind, the sky, the wind, the abode of the luminaries, the creator of the oceans, the supreme substance of the earth, the framer of gods, Dānavas, Yakshas, and men, the supreme Brahma of meditative systems, the satisfied, the treasure of those who know Brahma, the creator of the world, and also its destroyer, the great impersonated destructive Wrath, the original of the attributes of Indra and Sūrya. Kṛishṇa then reverenced him with voice, mind, understanding, and act.[178] Those two [heroes] had recourse to Bhava (Mahādeva) as their refuge,—to him whom the wise, desiring the subtile spiritual abode, attain,—to him the unborn cause. Arjuna, too, again and again reverenced that deity, knowing him to be the beginning of all beings, the source of the past, the future, and the present. Beholding those two, Nara and Nārāyaṇa, [178] In a passage from the S'āntiparvan, vv. 13152 ff., which I shall quote further on, Kṛishṇa explains away the worship which here and elsewhere he is said to have rendered to Mahādeva, by saying that it was done for the sake of example to others, and was in reality offered to himself, Mahādeva being one of his manifestations, and, in fact, one with him. But no hint is given of this here.

arrived, S'arva (Mahādeva), then greatly gratified, said, as if smiling: 'Welcome, most eminent of men, rise up freed from fatigue, and tell me quickly, heroes, what your mind desires. Shall I accomplish for you the object for which you have come? Choose what is most for your welfare. I will give you all.'"

Kṛishṇa and Arjuna then recite a hymn in honour of Mahādeva, in the course of which he is designated as the "soul of all things, the creator of all things, and the pervader of all things" (viśvātmane viśva-sṛije viśvam āvṛitya tishṭhate). Arjuna now, after reverencing both Kṛishṇa and Mahādeva, asks the latter for the celestial weapon. They are thereupon sent by Mahādeva to a lake where he says he had formerly deposited his bow and arrows. They there saw two serpents, one of which was vomiting flames, and approached them, bowing to Mahādeva and uttering the Śatarudriya.[179] Through the power of Mahādeva, the serpents change their shape and become a bow and arrow (v. 2899), which Kṛishṇa and Arjuna bring to Mahādeva. Eventually Arjuna receives as a boon from Mahādeva the Pāśupata weapon, with the power of fulfilling his engagement to slay Jayadratha (vv. 2906 ff.); after which they both return to their camp.

In the Sauptika-parvan, 312 f., Mahādeva, smiling, as it were (hasann iva), says to Aśvatthāman: Satya-śauchārjava-tyāgais tapasā niyamena cha | kshāntyā matyā cha dhṛityā cha buddhyā cha vachasā tathā | 313. Yathāvad aham ārāddhaḥ Kṛishṇenāklishṭa-karmaṇā | tasmād ishṭatamaḥ Kṛishṇād anyo mama na vidyate | "I have been duly worshipped by Kṛishṇa, the energetic in action, with truth, purity, honesty, liberality, austerity, ceremonies, patience, wisdom, self-control, understanding and words: wherefore no one is dearer to me than Kṛishṇa." (See Prof. Monier Williams's analysis of this book in his "Indian Epic Poetry," pp. 121 ff.)

In a later part of the same book (vv. 765 ff.) Kṛishṇa thus celebrates the greatness of Mahādeva: Nūnaṁ sa deva-devānām īśvareśvaram avyayam | jagāma śaranaṁ Drauṇir ekas tenābadhīd bahūn | 766 | prasanno hi Mahādevo dadyād amaratām api | vīryaṁ cha giriśo dadyād yenendram api śātayet | 767 | vedāhaṁ hi Mahādevaṁ tattvena Bharat-arshabha | yāni chāsya purāṇāni karmāṇi vividhāni cha | 768 | ādir

[179] A long hymn from the Yajur-veda, which will be quoted further on in the chapter on Rudra.

esha hi bhūtānām madhyam antaś cha Bhārata | vicheshṭate jagach chedaṁ sarvam asyaiva karmaṇā | 765. "Aśvatthāman resorted to the imperishable lord of lords of the gods of gods as his refuge; and through him he, though but one, slew many. 766. For Mahādeva, if pleased, can bestow even immortality, and prowess whereby any one may overcome even Indra himself. 767. I perfectly know Mahādeva, and his various works of old, 768. For he is the beginning, middle, and end of (all) creatures; and this entire world moves through his agency." See Williams's "Indian Epic Poetry," p. 123.

The Anuśāsana-parvan also contains several sections in which the praises of Mahādeva are celebrated at considerable length, and in which he is declared to have been worshipped by Kṛishṇa. At v. 588 of that book Yudhishṭhira asks Bhīshma to declare the names of that deity, when the latter replies as follows (vv. 590 ff.):

Aśakto 'haṁ guṇān vaktum Mahādevasya dhīmataḥ | yo hi sarva-gato devo na cha sarvatra dṛiśyate | Brahma-Vishṇu-sureśāṇāṁ srashṭā cha prabhur eva cha | Brahmādayaḥ Piśāchāntāḥ yaṁ hi devāḥ upāsate | prakṛitīnām paratvena purushasya cha yaḥ paraḥ | chintyate yo yoga-vidbhir ṛishibhis tattva-darśibhiḥ | aksharam paramam Brahma asachcha sad-asachcha yat | prakṛitim purushanchaiva kshobhayitvā sva-tejasā | Brahmāṇam asṛijat tasmād deva-devaḥ prajāpatiḥ | ko hi śakto guṇān vaktuṁ deva-devasya dhīmataḥ | garbha-janma-jarā-yukto martyo mṛityu-samanvitaḥ | ko hi śakto Bhavaṁ jñātum mad-vidhaḥ Parameśvaram | ṛite Nārāyaṇāt putra śankha-chakra-gadā-dharāt | esha vidvān guṇa-śreshṭho Vishṇuḥ parama-durjayaḥ | divya-chakshur mahātejāḥ vīkshyate [vīkshate ?] yoga-chakshushā | Rudra-bhaktyā tu Kṛishṇena jagad vyāptam mahātmanā | tam prasādya tadā devaṁ Badaryām kila Bhārata | arthāt[180] priyataratvaṁ cha sarva-lokeshu vai tadā | prāptavān eva rājendra suvarṇākshād Maheśvarāt | pūrṇaṁ varsha-sahasraṁ tu taptavān esha Mādhavaḥ | prasādya varadaṁ devaṁ charāchara-guruṁ Śivam | yuge yuge tu Kṛishṇena toshito vai Maheśvaraḥ | bhaktyā paramayā chaiva prītaśchaiva mahātmanaḥ | aiśvaryaṁ yādṛiśaṁ tasya jagad-yoner mahātmanaḥ | tad ayaṁ dṛishṭavān sākshāt putrārthe Harir achyutaḥ | tasmāt parataranchaiva nānyam paśyāmi Bhārata | vyākhyātuṁ deva-devasya śakto namāny aśeshataḥ | esha śakto mahābāhur vaktum bhagavato guṇān | vibhūtinchaiva kārtsnyena satyāṁ māheśvarīṁ nṛipa |

[180] The MS. of the Mahābhārata in the library of the Roy. As. Soc reads annāt.

"I am unable to declare the attributes of the wise Mahādeva, who is an all-pervading god, yet is nowhere seen, who is the creator and the lord of Brahmā, Vishṇu,[181] and Indra, whom the gods, from Brahmā to the Piśāchas, worship, who transcends material natures as well as spirit (Purusha), who is meditated upon by rishis versed in contemplation (yoga), and possessing an insight into truth, who is the supreme, imperishable Brahma, that which is both non-existent, and at once existent and non-existent. Having agitated matter and spirit by his power, this god of gods and lord of creatures (Prajāpati) thence created Brahmā. What human being like me, who has been subject to gestation in the womb, and to birth, and is liable to decay and death, can declare the attributes of Bhava, the supreme lord,—[who can do this] except Nārāyaṇa, the bearer of the shell, the discus, and the club? This Vishṇu, wise, eminent in qualities, very hard to overcome, with divine insight, of mighty power, beholds[182] [him] with the eye of contemplation. Through his devotion to Rudra, the world is pervaded by the mighty Kṛishṇa. Having then propitiated that deity (Mahādeva) at Badari, he (Kṛishṇa) obtained from the golden-eyed Maheśvara the quality of being in all worlds more dear than wealth. This Mādhava (Kṛishṇa) performed austerity for a full thousand years, propitiating Śiva, the god who bestows boons, and the preceptor of the world. But in every mundane period (yuga) Maheśvara has been propitiated by Kṛishṇa, and has been gratified by the eminent devotion of that great personage. This unshaken Hari (Kṛishṇa), [when seeking] for offspring, has beheld distinctly of what character is the glory of that great parent of the world. Than him I behold none higher. This large-armed [Kṛishṇa] is able to recount fully the names of the god of gods, to describe the qualities of the divine [being], and the real might of Maheśvara in all its extent."

Bhīshma then calls upon Kṛishṇa, whom he designates as Vishṇu, and as the divine teacher of gods and Asuras (surāsura-guro deva Vishṇo), to celebrate Mahādeva's greatness. Kṛishṇa accordingly says (vv. 610 ff.):

[181] Professor Aufrecht (Catalogue, p. 54a, note) quotes the following verse from the 55th chapter of the Vāyu Purāṇa, as spoken by Mahādeva: Ayam me dakshiṇo bāhur Brahmā loka-pitāmaḥaḥ | vāmo bāhuś cha me Vishṇur nityaṁ yuddheshu nirjitaḥ | "Brahmā, the parent of the universe, is my right arm, and Vishṇu is my left arm, always overcome in battles." Must not the correct reading here be yuddheshv anirjitaḥ, "unconquered in battles"?

[182] The printed text reads vīkshyate, "is beheld," but the sense seems to require vīkshate, "beholds."

Na gatiḥ karmaṇāṁ śakyā vettum īśasya tattvataḥ | Hiraṇyagarbha-pramukhāḥ devāḥ sendrāḥ maharṣhayaḥ | na vidur yasya bhavanam Ādityāḥ sūkshma-darśinaḥ | sa kathaṁ nara-mātrena śakyo jñātuṁ satāṁ gatiḥ | tasyāham asura-ghnasya kāṁśchid bhagavato guṇān | bhavatāṁ kīrtayishyāmi vrateśāya [vrateśasya?] yathātatham | "The course of the deeds of Īśa (Mahādeva) cannot be really known. He whose essence neither the gods headed by Hiraṇyagarbha, nor the great rishis with Indra, nor the Ādityas, the perceivers of the minutest objects, understand,—how can he, the refuge of saints, be known by any mere man? I shall declare to you exactly some of the attributes of that divine slayer of the Asuras, of the lord of religious ceremonies."

Kṛishṇa then relates how he had formerly seen Mahādeva. It appears that his wife Jāmbavatī (v. 616), daughter of the king of the monkeys [183] (kapīndra-putrī, v. 629), had come to him desirous of a son; she says (vv. 619 f.):

Na hi te 'prāpyam astīha trishu lokeshu kinchana | lokān sṛijes tvam aparān ichhan Yadu-kulodvaha | tvayā dvādaśa-varshāṇi vratībhūtena śushyatā | ārādhya paśubhartāraṁ Rukmiṇyāṁ janitāḥ sutāḥ | "For there is nothing in these three worlds unattainable by thee (Kṛishṇa). Thou, scion of the race of Yadu, couldst create other worlds.[184] By thee, after twelve years' fasting and mortification,[185] and worship of the nourisher of beasts (Mahādeva), sons were begotten on Rukmiṇī (another of his wives)."

Kṛishṇa promises to bring about the accomplishment of Jāmbavatī's wishes. The story proceeds that he was then conveyed by the celestial bird Garuḍa to the Himālaya (v. 632), where he sees the delightful hermitage of the saint Upamanyu, which is described at length (vv. 634–652).[186] Kṛishṇa enters, and is reverentially saluted by Upamanyu

[183] He is, however, called king of the bears in the Vishṇu Purāṇa.—See Wilson's translation, p. 427 f. (vol. iv., pp. 76 and 79 of Dr. Hall's ed.)

[184] Compare what is said of Viśvāmitra in the first volume of this work, p. 404.

[185] This twelve years' austerity performed before for the sake of progeny is alluded to further on in the Anuśāsana-parvan, v. 6397, and the birth of a son is mentioned, v. 6889. As Kṛishṇa is represented in that passage in a higher character than he is in the one before us, it will be more appropriately quoted further on.

[186] One of the features of the hermitage is thus depicted in v. 651: Krīḍanti sar-

(v. 655), who tells him that after propitiating Mahādeva by austerities, he shall obtain a son equal to himself (v. 658).[187] The saint then goes on to celebrate the greatness of Mahādeva, who, he said, had given boons to various beings, and to Vishṇu his discus (vv. 662 ff.):

Hiraṇyakaśipur yo 'bhūd dānavo Meru-kampanaḥ | tena sarvāmaraiś-varyaṁ S'arvāt prāptaṁ samārbudam | tasyaiva putra-pravaro Mandaro nāma viśrutaḥ | Mahādeva-varāch chhakraṁ varshārbudam ayodhayat | Vishṇoś chakrancha tad ghoraṁ vajram Ākhaṇḍalasya cha | śīrṇam purā 'bhavat tāta Grahasyāngeshu Keśava | yat tad bhagavatā pūrvaṁ dattaṁ chakraṁ tavānagha | jalāntara-charaṁ hatvā daityancha balagarvitam | utpāditaṁ Vṛishāṅkena dīptaṁ jvalana-sannibham | dattam bhagavatā tubhyaṁ durdharshaṁ tejasā 'dbhutam | na śakyaṁ drashṭum anyena varjayitvā Pināṅkinam | Sudarśanam bhavaty evam Bhavenoktaṁ tadā tu tat | Sudarśanaṁ tadā tasya loke nāma pratishṭhitam | taj jīrṇam abhavat tāta Grahasyāngeshu Keśava | Grahasyātibalasyāṅge varadattasya dhīmataḥ | na śastrāṇi vahanty ange chakraṁ vajra-śatāny api | ardamānāścha vibudhā Graheṇa subalīyasā | S'iva-datta-varān jaghnur asurendrān Surāḥ bhṛiśam |

"Hiraṇyakaśipu, the Dānava, the shaker of mount Meru, obtained from Sarva (Mahādeva) the sovereignty of all the immortals for a hundred million years. He had an eminent and renowned son, called Mandara, who by the grace of Mahādeva fought with Indra for a hundred million years. Formerly both the dreadful discus of Vishṇu and the thunderbolt of Ākhaṇḍala[188] (Indra) were shattered against the limbs of Graha (Rāhu). That discus, resplendent and fiery, which was formerly given to thee by the god after slaying the marine monster, and the Daitya, proud of his strength, was produced pair nakulāḥ mṛigair vyāghrāścha mitra-vat | prabhāvād dīpta-tapasāṁ sannikarshād mahātmanām | "Weasels sport in a friendly fashion with serpents," [the two kinds of creatures being deadly foes], "and tigers with deer, through the power of those saints of brilliant austerity, from the proximity of those mighty ones."—Compare Isaiah xi. 6 ff.: "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid," etc.

[187] In v. 655 the appellation puṇḍarīkāksha, "lotus-eyed," and in v. 659, that of adhokshaja, are applied to Kṛishṇa.

[188] This word occurs in Rigveda, viii. 17, 12, and the words are quoted in the Nirukta, iii. 10: Ākhaṇḍala pra hūyase | "O Ākhaṇḍala, or destroyer, thou art invoked." It is rendered "shatterer," "destroyer," in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v.

by Mahādeva.[189] Bestowed upon thee by the god, resistless, and wonderful in its potency, it could not be looked upon by any other than Pināk in (the bearer of the bow, i.e. Mahādeva). It then received from Bhava (Mahādeva) the name of Sudarśana, and by that name it is celebrated in the world. That discus was shattered against the limbs of Graha. On the body of the wise and very powerful Graha, who had received a boon, no weapons, not even the discus, or a thousand thunderbolts, produce any effect. The gods being harassed by the most mighty Graha, slew on many occasions the Asuras who had received boons from Śiva."

After telling that many other persons had obtained boons by worshipping Mahādeva, the saint Upamanyu relates a story about himself, how his mother, after smelling him on the head (mūrdhany āghrāya) had fully declared to him the greatness of this deity (vv. 724 ff.). In addition to the more general attributes assigned to the god, the following are some characteristics of a more special description (some of them sufficiently horrible or disgusting), as detailed with admiration by this female devotee. He assumes many forms of gods (as Brahmā, Vishṇu, Indra, Rudra), and of men, of goblins, demons, barbarians, tame and wild beasts, birds, reptiles, fishes, with many varieties of human disguises, etc. (v. 731 ff.). He is the soul of all the worlds, all-pervading, residing in the heart of all creatures, knowing all desires (v. 742 f.). He carries a discus, a trident, a club, a sword, an axe (v. 745). He has a girdle of serpents, earrings of serpents, a sacrificial cord of serpents, and an outer garment of serpents' skins (v. 746). He laughs, sings, dances charmingly, and plays various musical instruments (v. 747). He leaps, gapes, weeps, makes others weep; speaks like a madman or a drunkard, as well as in sweet tones (v. 748). He laughs terrifically (v. 749). He is both visible and invisible, on the altar, on the sacrificial post, in the fire, a boy, an old man, a youth (v. 751). He dallies with the daughters and the wives of the rishis, with erect hair, obscene appearance,[190] naked, with excited look (v. 752: krīḍate

[189] In an account of Kṛishṇa's exploits in the Droṇa-parvan, however, it is said (v. 402) that the chakra was obtained by worshipping Agni: Khāṇḍave Pārtha-sahitas toshayitvā Hutāśanam | Āgneyam astraṁ durdharshaṁ chakraṁ lebhe mahābalaḥ | In the same passage (v. 401) he is said to have obtained his shell (śankha) by conquering Panchajana in the infernal regions.

[190] Literally, ingenti membro virili præditus. Compare Sauptika-parvan, v. 289.

ṛishi-kanyābhir ṛishi-patnībhir eva cha | ūrddha-keśo mahāśepho nagno vikṛita-lochanaḥ |). He is one-faced, two-faced, three-faced, many-faced.

Such is the deity, of whom, after hearing this description, Upamanyu becomes a constant devotee, and whom he gratifies by long austerities, standing for a thousand years on the tip of his left toe, during the first hundred years of which period he lives on fruits, the second hundred on withered leaves, the third hundred on water, and the remaining seven hundred on air (v. 758 ff.). Mahādeva at length appears to him in the form of Indra, and offers him his choice of a boon. Upamanyu, however, is indifferent about Indra, and declares that he cares nothing about any other god than Mahādeva, and will accept no boon, however great, at the hand of any other, adding many passionate expressions of devotion to this deity. And a further occasion being offered by a question of Indra, the saint again proceeds to expatiate in a passage of some length on the attributes of his favourite god (vv. 784–829), of which I shall only quote the following lines (v. 822 ff.):

Hetubhir vā kim anyais tair Īśaḥ kāraṇa-kāraṇam | na śuśruma yad anyasya lingam abhyarchyate suraiḥ | kasyānyasya suraiḥ sarvair lingam muktvā Maheśvaram | archyate 'rchita-pūrvaṁ vā brūhi yady asti te śrutiḥ | yasya Brahmā cha Vishṇuś cha tvaṁ chāpi saha daivataiḥ | archayethāḥ sadā lingaṁ tasmāch chreshṭhatamo hi saḥ | na padmānkāḥ na chakrānkāḥ na vajrānkāḥ yataḥ prajāḥ | lingānkā cha bhagānkā cha tasmād Māheśvarī prajā | Devyāḥ kāraṇa-rūpa-bhāva-janitāḥ sarvāḥ bhagānkāḥ striyo lingenāpi Harasya sarva-purushāḥ pratyaksha-chihnīkṛitāḥ | yo 'nyat kāraṇam īśvarāt pravadate devyā cha yad nānkitaṁ trailokye sacharāchare sa tu pumān vāhyo bhaved durmatiḥ | pumlingaṁ sarvam Īśanaṁ strī-lingaṁ viddhi chāpy Umāṇ | dvābhyāṁ tanubhyāṁ vyāptaṁ hi charācharam idaṁ jagat | "Is Īśa (Mahādeva) the Cause of causes for any other reasons? We have not heard that the linga (male organ) of any other person is worshipped by the gods. Declare, if thou hast heard, what other being's linga except that of Maheśvara is now worshipped, or has formerly been worshipped, by the gods? He whose linga Brahmā and Vishṇu, and thou (Indra), with the deities, continually worship, is therefore the most eminent. Since children bear neither the mark of the lotus (Brahmā's), nor of the discus (Vishṇu's), nor of the thunderbolt (Indra's), but are marked with the male and the female organs,—therefore offspring is derived from Maheśvara. All women produced from the nature of Devī as their cause, are marked with the female organ, and all males are manifestly marked with the linga of Hara. He who asserts any other cause than Īśvara (Mahādeva) or [affirms] that there is any [female] not marked by Devī in the three worlds, including all things movable or immovable, let that fool be thrust out. Know everything which is male to be Īśana, and all that is female to be Umā; for this whole world, movable and immovable, is pervaded by [these] two bodies."

The saint is at length gratified by the appearance of Mahādeva himself with his spouse Pārvatī (vv. 837–841 f.); and a long description of the vision is given. Brahmā and Vishṇu stand on Mahādeva's right and left, and celebrate his praises (v. 869 f.):

Savya-deśe tu devasya Brahmā loka-pitāmahaḥ | divyaṁ vimānam āsthāya haṁsa-yuktam manojavam | vāma-pārśva-gataś chāpi tathā Nārāyaṇaḥ sthitaḥ | Vainateyaṁ samāruhya śankha-chakra-gadā-dharaḥ | . . . . . 875 f. Astuvan vividhaiḥ stotrair Mahādevaṁ surās tadā | Brahmā Bhavaṁ tadā 'staushīd rathantaram udīrayan | jyeshṭha-sāmnā cha deveśaṁ jagau Nārāyaṇas tadā | gṛiṇan brahma paraṁ S'akraḥ śatarudriyam uttamam | Brahmā Nārāyaṇaś chaiva devarājaścha Kauśikaḥ | aśobhanta mahātmānas trayas trayaḥ ivāgnayaḥ | 869. "On the left (right?) of the god was Brahmā, patriarch of the world, standing on a celestial car, drawn by swans, and fleet as thought. On the left was Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu) mounted on Garuḍa, bearing a shell, discus and club. . . . . 875. The gods then lauded Mahādeva with various hymns. Brahmā celebrated him, reciting the Rathantara, while Nārāyaṇa hymned the god of gods with the Jyeshṭha sāman, and Indra, uttering that most eminent prayer, the excellent Satarudriya. Brahmā, Nārāyaṇa, and the king of the gods (Indra), the son of Kuśika,[191] the three mighty deities, shone like the three fires."

Upamanyu himself then lauds Mahādeva (vv. 880–923). At the conclusion of his hymn a shower of flowers falls from the sky on his head, accompanied by celestial odours, and music (v. 925 f.), and Mahādeva addresses him, offering to bestow everything he wishes. Upamanyu sheds tears of joy, falls on his knees, makes repeated prostrations, and after acknowledging with gratitude the god's condescension in granting him this vision, proceeds to say (vv. 839 ff.):

[191] The epithet of Kauśika is given to Indra in R. V. i. 30, 11. See the first vol. of this work, pp. 347 f.

Sa esha bhagavān devaḥ sarva-sattvādir avyayaḥ | sarva-tattva-vidhāna-jnaḥ pradhāna-purushaḥ paraḥ | yo 'sṛijad dakshiṇād angād Brahmāṇaṁ loka-sambhavam | vāma-pārśvat tathā Vishṇuṁ loka-rakshārtham Īśvaraḥ | yugānte chaiva samprāpte Rudram Īśo 'sṛijat prabhur ity ādi | "This is the glorious god, the beginning of all existences, undecaying, who knows the formation of all principles, who is Pradhāna and Purusha (or the principal Purusha), the supreme; who, the lord, created from his right side Brahmā, the originator of the worlds, and from his left side Vishṇu, for the preservation of the universe; and when the end of the age (yuga) had arrived, the mighty lord created Rudra," etc.

Upamanyu concludes by asking these boons, viz. that his devotion to the god may be perpetual, that he may know the past, the present, and the future, that he may always eat food cooked with milk (kshīraudana) with his relations, and that they may ever enjoy the near presence (sānnidhya) of Mahādeva in their hermitage (vv. 945 ff.). The god bestows all these and many other blessings, and disappears (vv. 949 ff.).

Having heard all this account from Upamanyu, Kṛishṇa expresses a desire that the god may vouchsafe to him a similar vision and the like favour. Upamanyu promises that Mahādeva shall appear to Kṛishṇa in six months, and bestow on him twenty-four boons, and pays him the compliment of saying that any of the gods would consider it as a highly laudable act to have an interview with such a pious, innocent, and devout person as he (Kṛishṇa) is (vv. 964 ff.). Kṛishṇa is then consecrated by the Brahman (973 ff.). Equipped with a staff, shaved, clothed with rags, anointed with ghee, and provided with a girdle, living for one month on fruits, for four more on water, standing on one foot, with his arms aloft, he at length obtained a glorious vision of Mahādeva and his wife (v. 978), whom all the gods were worshipping, and among them Indra, Vishṇu (the delight of his mother Aditi), and Brahmā, all uttering the rathantara sāma (S'atakratuś cha bhagavān Vishṇuś chāditi-nandanāḥ | Brahmā rathantaraṁ sāma īrayanti Bhavāntike). Kṛishṇa then describes the effect of this vision on himself (vv. 997 ff.):

Purastād dhishṭhitaḥ S'arvo mamāsīt tridaśeśvaraḥ | purastād dhishṭhi-

taṁ dṛishṭvā mameśānancha Bhārata | sa-Prajāpati-Śakrāntaṁ jagad mām abhyudaikshata | īkshituṁ cha Mahādevaṁ na me śaktir abhūt tadā | tato mām abravīd devaḥ "paśya Kṛishṇa vadasva cha | tayā [tvayā ?] hy ārādhitaś chāhaṁ śataśo 'tha sahasraśaḥ | tvat-samo nāsti me kaśchit trishu lokeshu vai priyaḥ" | śirasā vandite deve devī prītā hy Umā 'bhavat | tato 'ham abruvaṁ Sthāṇuṁ stutam Brahmādibhiḥ suraiḥ | "Before me stood Śarva, the lord of the gods. Beholding Īśāna standing before me, the world from Prajāpati to Śakra (Indra) gazed upon me. I had no power to look on Mahādeva. The god then said to me, 'Behold, Kṛishṇa, and speak. I have been adored by thee hundreds and thousands of times. There is no one in the three worlds so dear to me as thou.' The god having been reverenced by obeisance, the goddess Umā was gratified. I then said to Sthāṇu (Mahādeva), who had been praised by Brahmā and the rest of the gods," etc.

Kṛishṇa proceeds to laud Mahādeva (vv. 1002–1018) as the supreme Deity. Mahādeva then says (v. 1023): Vidmaḥ Kṛishṇa parām bhaktim asmāsu tava śatruhan | vriyatāṁ ātmanaḥ śreyaḥ prītir hi tvayi me parā | vriṇīshvāshṭau varān Kṛishṇa dātāsmi tava sattama | brūhi Yādava-śārdūla yān ichhasi sudurlabhān | "We know, Kṛishṇa, slayer of foes, thy eminent devotion to us. Choose what is most advantageous to thee, for my love for thee is extreme. Choose eight boons; I will give them to thee, most excellent being. Specify, chief of the Yadus, those boons which are most difficult to obtain which thou desirest." Kṛishṇa then asks these eight boons: (1) steadfastness in righteousness, (2) the destruction of his foes in battle, (3) eminent renown, (4) the greatest strength, (5) abstraction (yoga), (6) amiability (priyatvam), (7) close proximity to Mahādeva, and (8) a hundred hundreds of sons,—all of which were accordingly granted by Mahādeva. Umā next offers him his choice of eight more boons, and he selects (1) the goodwill of the Brahmans, (2) the favour of his father, (3) a hundred sons, (4) eminent enjoyment, (5) the affection of his tribe, (6) the favour of his mother, (7) tranquillity of mind, and (8) ability. These boons are granted by the goddess, who superadds sixteen thousand wives whose affection he should retain, and several other blessings. Mahādeva and his spouse then disappear, and Kṛishṇa relates to Upamanyu all that has happened (v. 1034). That sage then goes on to tell him a story about a rishi called Taṇḍi, who had formerly worshipped Mahādeva, in the Kṛita age, and praised him in a long hymn (which is given vv. 1049–1103) as the supreme Deity whom even Brahmā, Indra, and Vishṇu did not perfectly know, vv. 1052 (Brahmā S'atakratur Vishṇur viśvedevāḥ maharshayaḥ | na vidus tvāṁ tu tattvena kuto vetsyāmahe vayam). These words appear to have been especially gratifying to the god (vv. 1105 ff.). Taṇḍi had then come to Upamanyu's hermitage, and recited to him the eleven thousand mystical names of Mahādeva, which Upamanyu repeated to Kṛishṇa (vv. 1144 ff.). This hymn, existing in the heart of Brahmā, was, we are told (vv. 1287 ff.), declared by that deity to Indra, by him to Mṛityu (Death), by him to the Rudras, and from them it came to Taṇḍi, etc.

A little further on (vv. 1358 ff.) we are told that Upamanyu expressed himself thus to Kṛishṇa:

Aśubhaiḥ pāpakarmāṇo ye narāḥ kalushīkṛitāḥ | Īśānaṁ na prapadyante tamo-rājasa-vṛittayaḥ | Īśvaraṁ samprapadyante dvijāḥ bhāvita-bhāvanāḥ | sarvathā vartamāno 'pi yo bhaktaḥ parameśvare | sadṛiśo 'ranyavāsānāṁ munīnām bhāvitātmanām | Brahmatvaṁ Keśavatvaṁ cha S'akratvaṁ vā suraiḥ saha | trailokyasyādhipatyaṁ vā tushṭo Rudraḥ prayachchhati ityādi | "Those sinful men who are soiled by unhallowed (deeds) do not seek Īśāna, living under the dark and passionate qualities. Brahmans who have meditated on the cause [of all things] seek Īśvara. The man who is devoted to Maheśvara—whatever mode of life he follows—is equal to those contemplative munis who dwell in the forests. Rudra, when he is gratified, bestows the rank of Brahmā, or of Keśava (Keśava is a name of Kṛishṇa), or of Indra, or the supreme lordship of the three worlds, including the deities."

In a later part of the Anuśāsana-parvan, 7402 ff., Kṛishṇa relates to Yudhishṭhira the benefits which had resulted to himself from his patient submission to the caprices and freaks of the irritable Brahman Durvāsas (an incarnation of S'iva, as it is stated below; see page 204), who, among other tricks, had yoked Kṛishṇa's wife Rukmiṇī to his car, and had wounded her with a goad, while drawing him on the road, and as a reward of Kṛishṇa's patient endurance of all this annoyance, had offered him his choice of boons, and had promised to Rukmiṇī that she should be eminently renowned in the world, and the most distinguished of the sixteen thousand wives of Kṛishṇa, whom she should worship. The Brahman then disappeared, and Kṛishṇa performed an Upānśu rite, i.e. muttered prayers, with his wife. Then entering his house he found that all the articles which Durvāsas had broken or burned, were replaced.

Yudhishṭhira then says to Kṛishṇa (vv. 7458 ff.): Durvāsasaḥ prasādāt te yat tadā Madhusūdana | avāptam iha vijnānaṁ tan me vyākhyātum arhasi | mahābhāgyancha yat tasya nāmāni cha mahātmanaḥ | tattvato jnātum ichhāmi sarvam matimatāṁ vara | Vāsudevaḥ uvācha | Hanta te kīrtayishyāmi namaskṛitya Kapardine | yad avāptam mayā rājan śreyo yach chārjitaṁ yaśaḥ | prayataḥ prātar utthāya yad adhīye viśāmpate | prānjaliḥ śatarudrīyaṁ tan me nigadataḥ śriṇu | Prajāpatis tat sasṛije tapaso 'nte mahātapāḥ | S'ankaras tv asṛijat tāta prajāḥ sthāvara-jangamāḥ | nāsti kinchit param bhūtam Mahādevād viśāmpate | iha trishv api lokeshu bhūtānaṁ pravaro hi saḥ | na chaivotsahate sthātuṁ kinchid agre mahātmanaḥ | na hi bhūtaṁ samaṁ tena trishu lokeshu vidyate | gandhenāpi hi sangrāme tasya kruddhasya śatravaḥ | visanjnāḥ hata-bhūyishṭhāḥ vepante cha patanti cha | ghorancha ninadaṁ tasya Parjanya-ninadopamam | śrutvā viśīryed hṛidayaṁ devānām api saṁyuge | yāṁścha ghoreṇa rūpeṇa paśyet kruddhaḥ pināka-dhṛik | na surāḥ nāsurāḥ loke na gandharvāḥ na pannagāḥ | kupite sukham edhante tasmīnn api guhāgatāḥ | Prajāpates tu Dakshasya yajato vitate kratau | vivyādha kupito yajnaṁ nirbhayas tv abhavat tadā | dhanushā vāṇam utsṛijya saghoshaṁ vinanāda cha | tena śarma kutaḥ sāntiṁ vishādaṁ lebhire surāḥ | viddhe cha sahasā yajne kupite cha Maheśvare | tena jyā-tala-ghoshena sarve lokāḥ samākulāḥ | babhūvur avaśāḥ Pārtha visheduś cha surāsurāḥ | āpaś chukshubhire chaiva chakampe cha vasundharā | vyadravan giriryaś chāpi dyauḥ paphāla cha sarvaśaḥ | andhena tamasā lokāḥ prāvṛitāḥ na chakāśire | praṇashṭā jyotishām bhāś cha saha sūryeṇa Bhārata | bhṛiśam bhītās tataḥ śāntiṁ chakruḥ svastyayanāni cha | ṛishayaḥ sarva-bhūtānām ātmanaś cha hitaishiṇaḥ | tataḥ so 'bhyadravad devān Rudro raudra-parākramaḥ | Bhagasya nayane kruddhaḥ prahāreṇa vyaśātayat | Pūshāṇaṁ chābhidudrāva pādena cha rushānvitaḥ | puroḍāśam bhakshayato daśanāṁś cha vyaśātayat | tataḥ praṇemur devāś te vepamānās tu S'ankaram | punaś cha sandadhe Rudro dīptaṁ suniśitaṁ śaram | Rudrasya vikramaṁ dṛishṭvā bhītāḥ devāḥ saharshibhiḥ | tataḥ prasādayāmasuḥ sarve te vibudhottamāḥ | jepuś cha śatarudrīyaṁ devāḥ kṛitvā 'njaliṁ tadā | saṁstūyamānas tridaśaiḥ prasasāda Maheśvaraḥ | Rudrasya bhāgaṁ yajne cha viśishṭaṁ te tv akalpayan | bhayena tridaśāḥ rājan śaraṇaṁ cha pra-

pedire | tena chaiva hi dushṭena (tushṭena?) sa yajno sandhito 'bhavat | yad yach chāpahṛitaṁ tatra tat tathaiva sa jīvayat | Asurāṇām purāṇy āsaṁs trīṇi vīryavatāṁ divi | āyasaṁ rājataṁ chaiva sauvarṇam api chāparam | nāśakat tāni Maghavā bhettuṁ sarvāyudhair api | atha sarve Mahārudraṁ jagmuḥ śaraṇam arditāḥ | tataḥ ūchur mahātmāno devāḥ sarve samāgatāḥ | Rudra raudrāḥ bhavishyanti paśavaḥ sarva-karmasu | jahi daityān saha purair lokāṁs trāyasva mānada | sa tathoktas tathety uktvā kṛitvā Vishṇuṁ śarottamam | śalyam Agniṁ tathā kṛitvā punkhaṁ Vaivasvataṁ Yamam | vedān kṛitvā dhanuḥ sarvān jyāṁ cha sāvitrīm uttamām | Brahmāṇaṁ sārathiṁ kṛitvā viniyujya cha sarvaśaḥ | triparvaṇā triśalyena kāle tāni bibheda saḥ | śareṇādītya-varṇena kālāgni-sama-tejasā | te 'surāḥ sa-purās tatra dagdhāḥ Rudreṇa Bhārata | taṁ chaivānka-gātaṁ dṛishṭvā bālam panchaśikham punaḥ | Umā jijñāsamānā vai "ko 'yam" ity abravīt tadā | asūyataś cha S'akrasya vajreṇa praharishyataḥ | sa vajraṁ stambhayāmāsa tam bāhum parighopamam | na sambubudhire chaiva devās tam bhuvaneśvaram | sa-prajāpatayaḥ sarve tasmin sumahatīśvare | tato dhyātvā tu bhagavān Brahmā tam amitaujasam | ayaṁ śreshṭhaḥ iti jñātvā vavande tam Umā-patim | tataḥ prasādayāmāsur Umāṁ Rudraṁ cha te suraḥ | babhūva sa tadā bāhur balahantur yathā purā | sa chāpi brāhmaṇo bhūtvā Durvāsāḥ nāma vīryavān | Dvāravatyām mama pure chiraṁ kālam upāvasat | viprakārān prayunkte sma subahūn mama veśmani | tān udāratayā chāhaṁ chakshame chāti-duḥsahān | sa vai Rudraḥ sa cha S'ivaḥ so 'gniḥ S'arvaḥ sa sarva-jit | sa vai chandraś cha Vāyuś cha so 'śvinau sa cha Vidyutaḥ | sa chandramāḥ sa cheśānaḥ sa Sūryo Varuṇaś cha saḥ | sa kālaḥ so 'ntako mṛityuḥ sa tamo rātry ahāni cha | māsārdha-māsāḥ ṛitavaḥ sandhye saṁvatsaraś cha saḥ | sa dhāta sa vidhātā cha viśvakarmā sa sarva-vit | nakshatrāṇi grahāś chaiva diśo 'tha vidiśaś tathā | viśva-mūrtir ameyātmā bhagavān amara-dyutiḥ | ekadhā cha dvidhā chaiva bahudhā cha sa eva hi | tathā sahasradhā chaiva tathā śata-sahasraśaḥ | īdṛiśaḥ sa Mahādevo bhūmaḥ[192] sa bhagavān ajaḥ | na hi śakyāḥ guṇāḥ vaktum api varsha-śatair api | Yudhishṭhira mahābāho mahābhāgyam mahātmanaḥ | Rudrāya (?) bahurūpāya bahu-nāmne nibodha me | Vadanty Agnim Mahādevaṁ tathā Sthāṇum Maheśvaram | ekāksham tryambakaṁ chaiva viśva-rūpaṁ S'ivaṁ tathā | dve tanū tasya

[192] See Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. bhūman, vol. v., p. 1660, where several passages of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa are referred to in which a kindred word, bhūman, is applied as an epithet to Kṛishṇa. See also page 347 of the same vol.

devasya brāhmaṇāḥ vedajnāḥ viduḥ | ghorāñ anyāñ śivañ anyāñ te tanū bahudhā punaḥ | ugrā ghorā tanūr yā sā so 'gnir vidyut sa bhāskaraḥ | śivā saumyā chā yā tv asya dharmas tv āpo 'tha chandramāḥ | ātmano 'rdhañ tu tasyāgniḥ somo 'rdham punar uchyate | brahmacharyañ charaty ekā śivā yā 'sya tanus tathā | yā 'sya ghoratamā mūrtir jagat saṁharate tadā[192*] | īśvaratvād mahatvāch cha Maheśvaraḥ iti smṛitaḥ | yad nirdahati yat tīkshṇo yad ugro yat pratāpavān | māṁsaśoṇita-majjādo yat tato Rudraḥ uchyate | devānāñ sumahān yach cha yach chāsya vishayo mahān | yach cha viśvam mahat pāti Mahādevas tataḥ smṛitaḥ | dhūmra-rūpañ cha yat tasya dhūrjaṭīty ata uchyate | samedhayati yad nityañ sarvān vai sarva-karmabhiḥ | manushyān śivam anvichhañs tasmād eva Śivaḥ smṛitaḥ | ityādi

Anuśāsana-parvan, v. 7458 ff.—Yudhishṭhira says to Kṛishṇa: "Thou oughtest, Madhusūdana, to expound to me that knowledge which thou then obtainedst by the favour of Durvāsas. I wish, most eminent of the wise, to know exactly all the grandeur of that great Being, and his names. Vāsudeva replies: Yes, I shall declare to thee, after bowing down before the god with the spirally-braided hair (Mahādeva), the happiness which was obtained by me, and the glory which was acquired. Hear from me, O king, the Śatarudrīya, which, when risen in the morning, I intently repeat with joined hands. The great devotee, Prajāpati, created that [prayer[193]] at the end of his austerity. Śankara has created [all] beings, stationary and moving. There is nothing, O king, which exists superior to Mahādeva; for he is the most excellent of beings in all these three worlds. And nothing can stand before this great deity: for there is no being like him in the three worlds. In battle, when he is even in the slightest degree (lit. 'even by a scent') incensed, his enemies tremble and fall senseless, and mostly slain. And the heart even of the gods would be withered in battle, on hearing his dreadful voice, resembling the sound of Parjanya (i.e. of the thunder clouds). And neither gods, nor Asuras, nor Gandharvas, nor Pannagas, nor any one whom the Holder of the bow (Mahādeva), incensed, looks upon with his direful aspect, can enjoy tranquillity when he is angry, even though they hide themselves. When the Prajāpati Daksha was sacrificing, and his ceremonial was arranged, Mahādeva in his wrath pierced the sacrifice, and was then devoid of fear, and discharging an arrow with his bow, he uttered a loud shout. The gods received from this no pleasure or tranquillity, but rather dejection. And forthwith, the sacrifice being pierced, and Maheśvara being incensed, all the worlds were disturbed at the sound of his bowstring; both gods and Asuras became helpless and cast down; the waters were troubled, and the earth shook; the mountains were dissolved; the sky was rent in all directions; enveloped in thick darkness, the worlds did not shine, and the light of the luminaries and of the sun was quenched. Being greatly alarmed, the rishis then sought to appease Mahādeva, and recited texts to avert his anger, seeking their own welfare, and that of all creatures. Rudra of dreadful power then ran up to the gods, and, in his rage, knocked out the eyes of Bhaga with a blow, and, incensed, assaulted Pūshan with his foot, and knocked out his teeth, as he was eating the puroḍāśa offering.[194] The gods

[192*] With this and the preceding lines compare Dronap., 9632 ff.

[193] It is part of the White Yajur Veda (Vājasaneyi Sanhita). See further on, chapter iii., section second. It is not reproduced in the passage before us. Compare vol. iii. of this work, on the mode in which the Veda is conceived to have been produced.

[194] For the older story about Bhaga and Pūshan, see Indische Studien, ii. 306 f.; and Taittirīya Sanhitā, ii. 6, 8, 3 f., partially quoted in the fifth vol. of this work, p. 476, note on p. 178, line 6. The entire passage is as follows: Devāḥ vai yajnād Rudram antar āyan | sa yajnam avidhyat | tam devāḥ abhisamagachhanta "kalpatām naḥ idam" iti | te 'bruvan "svishṭam vai naḥ idam bhavishyati yad imam rūdhayishyāmaḥ" iti | tat svishṭakṛitaḥ svishṭakṛittvam | tasya āviddham nirakṛintan (4) yavena sammitam | tasmād yava-mātram avadyet | yaj jyāyo 'vadyed ropayet tad yajnasya | yad upa cha striṇīyād abhi cha ghārayed ubhayataḥ saṁśvāyi kuryāt | avadāya abhighārayati | dviḥ sampadyate | dvipād yajamānaḥ | pratishṭhityai | yat tiraśchīnam atihared anabhividdham yajnasya abhividhyet | agreṇa pariharati tīrthena eva pariharati | tat Pūshṇe paryaharan tat (5) Pūshā prāśya dato 'ruṇat | tasmāt Pūshā prapishṭa-bhāgaḥ | adantako hi | tam devāḥ abruvan "vi vai ayam ārdhi | aprāśitriyo vai ayam abhūd" iti | tad Bṛihaspataye paryaharan | so 'bibhed Bṛihaspatir "itthaṁ vāva sya ārtim ārishyati" iti | sa etam mantram apaśyat | "The gods excluded Rudra" [in the form of Svishṭakṛit Agni, Comm.] "from the sacrifice. He pierced the sacrifice [with an arrow]. The gods came together to him, [and said,] 'Let this [rite] of ours be [again] rectified.' They [i.e. certain wise gods, according to the Commentator] said, 'If we propitiate him, this [rite] of ours will be well sacrificed (svishṭa).' It is from this that the Svishṭakṛit insures the due performance of the rite." [According to Professor Weber, Ind. Stud., ix. 217, the svishṭakṛit is the portion of the sacrifice destined for Agni Svishṭakṛit.] "They cut off the part which had been pierced to the extent of a barleycorn. 4. Wherefore let the adhvaryu priest cut off [the prāśitra portion] only to the extent of a barleycorn. If he cut off more than this, he will break that off from the sacrifice. If he should both spread [ghee] underneath and sprinkle [ghee] above, he would cause the oblation to become swollen on both sides. He is therefore, after cutting off [the prāśitra], only to trembling then made obeisance to Śankara, and he again fitted on the string the glittering, well-whetted arrow. Beholding the prowess of Rudra, the gods, with the rishis, terrified, propitiated him, and with sprinkle [ghee] above it. To do this twice is proper [for the sacrificer has two feet], in order that it may succeed. If he hands [the brāhmān's share] to him across [the altar], he will pierce that part of the sacrifice which is uninjured; whereas if he reaches it to him in front, he does so in the proper direction. They handed that [portion] to Pūshan. Eating it, he broke his teeth. Wherefore Pūshan has a portion of ground meal offered to him; for he is toothless. The gods said of him, 'he has come to grief; he has become unfit for the prāśitra.' They handed it to Bṛihaspati. He was afraid, saying, 'In this way shall one incur misfortune.' He saw this text," etc.

I am indebted to Professor Weber for a German translation of this passage, which has enabled me to correct and improve my own. He remarks that the reason why the prāśitra broke Pūshan's teeth was, that it was 'Rudriya' (see the passage from the S'atap. Br., i. 7, 4, 15 f., adduced at the end of a following quotation), i.e. the portion of the oblation struck by Rudra's shot. This effect of it must be obviated by the use of a text. Professor Weber thinks that aruṇak (followed by tasmāt), in the above passage, must stand for aruṇak (though the root ruj is nowhere else conjugated in the seventh conjugation), and compares Taitt. S., vii. 4, 9, 1, asṛid dvābhyām for asṛig (see Ind. Stud., viii. 54, note); Kauś. 39, nyat for nyak; sammad-aṇṇā for samyag-ājnā, Dhammap. verse 57; saṁsṛidbhiḥ from saṁsṛip, Taitt. Br., i. 8, 1, 1; nadbhyaḥ from nap, R. V., x. 60, 6; adbhiḥ, adbhyaḥ from ap; saṁyat te, Taitt. S., i. 2, 7, 1 (compare Weber's Indische Streifen, i. 127, note 5).

The S'atap. Br. i. 7, 4, 5, refers to the same story in the sequel of a passage which has already been given above, p. 45. The continuation is as follows: 5 | Te ha ūchur "upajānīta yathā idaṁ na amuyā asat kanīyo ha āhuter yathā idaṁ syād" iti | 6 | te ha ūchur "Bhayāya enad dakshiṇataḥ āsīnāya pariharata | tad Bhagaḥ prāśishyati tad yathā āhutam eva bhavishyati" iti | tad Bhagāya dakshiṇataḥ āsīnāya paryājahruḥ | tad Bhago 'vekshāṁchakre | tasya akshiṇī nirdadāha | tathā in nūnaṁ tad āsa | tasmād āhur "andho Bhagaḥ" iti | 7 | te ha ūchur "no nv atra aśamat | Pūshṇe enat pariharata" iti | tat Pūshṇe paryājahruḥ | tat Pūshā prāśa | tasya dato nirjaghāna | tathā in nūnaṁ tad āsa | tasmād āhur "adantakaḥ Pūshā" iti | tasmād yam Pūshṇe charuṁ kurvanti prapishṭānām eva kurvanti yathā adantakāya evam | 5 "They said, 'Take care that this may not be lost; but that it may be less than the oblation.' 6. They said, 'Present it to Bhaga, sitting on the right side; he will eat it; that shall be as if it were offered.' They presented it to Bhaga sitting on the right side; he looked at it; it burned his eyes. That truly happened so. Therefore they say, 'Bhaga is blind.' 7. They said, 'Let it not be so tranquilized. Present it to Pūshan.' Pūshan ate it; it knocked out his teeth. That verily so happened. Wherefore they say, 'Pūshan is toothless.' Hence the cooked oblation they present to Pūshan is of ground materials."

In the sequel of this passage it is said, i. 7, 4, 9: Sa yat prāśitram avadyati yad eva atra āviddhaṁ yajnasya yad Rudriyaṁ tad eva etad nirmimīte (bahiḥ karoti nishkarshati, Comm.) | "The prāśitra which he cuts off, the part of the sacrifice which was pierced, which is connected with Rudra,—that he separates." And further on, i. 7, 4, 15: Sat prāśnāti | "Agnes tvā āsyena prāśnāmi" iti | na vai Agniṁ kinchana pinasti | tathā u ha enam etad na hinasti | 16 | tad na dadbhiḥ khādet | "na id me idaṁ Rudriyaṁ dato hinasad" iti | tasmād na dadbhiḥ khādet | 15. "He eats that, joined hands, muttered the Śatarudriya. Being thus lauded by the gods, Maheśvara became pleased; and they apportioned to him a distinguished share in the sacrifice, and, through fear, resorted to him as [saying], 'I eat thee with Agni's mouth.' 'Nothing destroys Agni. So this does not destroy him. 16. Let no one eat it with his teeth, [thinking], 'Lest this, which is connected with Rudra, destroy my teeth.' Wherefore let no one eat it with his teeth."

The following is a passage from the preceding section of the same Brāhmaṇa: i. 7, 3, 1: Yajnena vai devāḥ divam upodakrāman | atha yo 'yaṁ devaḥ paśūnām īshṭe sa iha ahīyata | tasmād vāstavyaḥ ity āhuḥ | vāstau hi tad ahīyata 2 | sa yena eva devāḥ divam upodakrāmaṁs tena u eva archantaḥ śrāmyantaś cheruḥ | atha yo 'yaṁ devaḥ paśūnām īshṭe yaḥ iha ahīyata (3) sa aikshata "aha asya ha antaryanty u mā yajnād" iti | so 'nuchchakrāma | sa āyatayā uttarataḥ upotpede | sa esha svishṭakṛitaḥ kālaḥ | 4 | te devāḥ abruvan "mā visrakshīr" iti | "te vai mā yajnād mā 'ntargata āhutiṁ me kalpayata" iti | "tathā" iti | sa samabṛihat sa na āsyat sa na kanchana ahinat | 5 | te devāḥ abruvan "yāvanti no havīṁshi gṛihītāny abhūvan sarveshāṁ teshāṁ hutam upajānīta yathā 'smai āhutiṁ kalpayāma" iti | 6 | te 'dhvaryum abruvan "yathāpūrvaṁ havīṁshy abhighāraya | ekasmai avadānāya punar āpyāyaya | ayātayāmani kuru tataḥ ekaikam avadānam avadya" iti | 7 | so 'dhvaryur yathāpūrvaṁ havīṁshy abhyaghārayad ekasmai avadānāya punar āpyāyayad ayātayāmāny akarot tataḥ ekaikam avadānam avādyat | 1. "By sacrifice the gods ascended to the sky. Now the god who rules over cattle was excluded here. Hence men call him Vāstavya; for he was excluded [by remaining] on the sacrificial ground (vāstu). 2. The gods went on worshipping and toiling with that whereby they had ascended to the sky. Now, the god who rules over cattle, and was here excluded, (3) perceived that the other gods were excluding him from the sacrifice. He followed them, and rose up on the north with . . . . This is the time of the Svishṭakṛit. 4. The gods said to him, 'Do not disturb (the sacrifice).' [He rejoined,] 'Do not exclude me from the sacrifice; give me an oblation.' They agreed. He kept together, and did not scatter, the materials of the sacrifice, or injure anything. 5. The gods said, 'Take notice of all the offerings which have been presented, that we may form an oblation for him.' 6. They said to the Adhvaryu, 'Sprinkle the oblations in order with butter; and again replenish each fragment. Make them fresh; then cut off each part.' 7. The Adhvaryu accordingly sprinkled the oblations in order with butter, replenished each fragment, made them fresh, and divided all the parts from each other."

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, referred to by Böhtlingk and Roth, s. v. Bhaga and Pūshan, has the following verses on these gods: iv. 5, 20 | Bhagasya netre bhagavān pātitasya rushā bhuvi | ujjahāra sadasstho 'kshṇā yaḥ śapantam asūsuchat | 21 | Pūshṇaś chāpātayad dantān Kālingasya yathā Balaḥ | S'apyamāne garimaṇi yo'hasad darśayan dataḥ | "The god (Mahādeva) in the assembly plucked out the eyes of Bhaga, whom in his rage he had felled to the ground, because with his eye he had made a sign to [Daksha] who was cursing [Mahādeva]. 21. And he knocked out the teeth of Pūshan (as Bala had done to the king of Kalinga), because, when the great god was being cursed, he had laughed, showing his teeth." vi. 6, 41 | Pūshā 'napatyaḥ pishṭādo bhagna-danto 'bhavat purā | yo 'sau Dakshāya kupitaṁ jahāsa vivṛitadvijaḥ | "Pūshan formerly became childless, an eater of ground food, toothless, because he had laughed with his teeth disclosed at [Mahādeva], who was incensed against Daksha."

their refuge. He then became pleased and rectified the sacrifice, and whatever was removed he restored to life as it had been before.

"There were in the sky three cities of the valorous Asuras, one of iron, another of silver, and a third of gold,[195] which Maghavan (Indra) could not demolish, with all his weapons. Then all the great gods, distressed, went to the great Rudra as their refuge, and said to him, after they were assembled: 'Rudra, there shall be victims devoted to thee in all the sacrifices. Bestower of honour, destroy the Daityas with their cities, and deliver the worlds.' He, being thus addressed, said, 'So be it;' and making Vishṇu his arrow, Agni its barb, Yama, the son of Vivasvat, its feather, all the Vedas his bow, and the excellent Sāvitrī (the Gāyatrī) his bowstring, and having appointed Brahmā his charioteer,[196] he in due time pierced through these cities with a three-jointed three-barbed arrow, of the colour of the sun, and in fierceness like the fire which burns up the world. These Asuras with their cities were there burnt up by Rudra.[197] Again, beholding him a child in the lap, with five locks,[198] Umā, desiring to know,[199] said, 'Who is [195] See the second vol. of this work, pp. 378 ff., and the Karṇa-parvan of the M.Bh. vv. 1402 ff. below.

[196] See the story from the Karṇa-parvan, cited below, vv. 1515 ff.

[197] For the older forms of this story, see the second vol. of this work, pp. 380–384.

[198] Like an ascetic, according to Böhtlingk and Roth, s. v. pañchaśikha.

[199] Or, is the proper reading jijñāsamānān, and the sense this: "Umā said to [the gods] who were inquiring, 'Who is this?'" There is a parallel passage in the Droṇa-parvan, v. 9575, which throws some light on the one before us: Purāṇi dagdhavantaṁ taṁ devī yātā pravīkshitum | bālam ankagataṁ kṛitvā svayam pañchaśikham punaḥ | Umā jijñāsamānā vai "ko' yam" ity abravīt surān | asūyataś cha S'akrasya vajreṇa praharishyataḥ | bāhuṁ savajraṁ taṁ tasya kruddhasyāstambhayat prabhuḥ | prahasya bhagavāṁs tūrṇam sarva-lokeśvaro vibhuḥ | tataḥ saṁstambhita-bhujaḥ S'akro deva-gaṇair vṛitaḥ | jagāma sa-suras tūrṇam Brahmāṇam prabhum avyayam | te tam praṇamya śirasā prochuḥ prāñjalayas tadā | kimapy ankagatam Brahman Pārvatyāḥ bhūtam adbhutam | bāla-rūpa-dharaṁ dṛishṭvā nāsmābhir abhivāditaḥ | tasmāt tvām prashṭum ichchhāmo nirjitāḥ yena vai vayam | ayudhyatā hi bālena līlayā sa-purandarāḥ | "The goddess (Umā) went to see him when he had burnt the cities, having again placed the child with five locks in her lap. She told the gods, who inquired [should we read, jijñāsamānān? though none of the printed copies read so] 'Who is this?' And the divine lord, master of all the worlds, all-pervading, with a smile, instantly paralyzed the arm and thunderbolt of Indra, who showed ill-will, and in his anger was about to smite with the thunderbolt. Indra, his arm having been paralyzed, immediately went with the gods to Brahmā, the imperishable lord; and bowing with their heads, with joined hands, they said: 'O Brahmā, we have seen in the lap of Pārvatī, a wonderful being bearing the form of a child; and we have not saluted him. Wherefore we desire to ask thee who is the child by whom we, including Indra, have been conquered, as if in play, and without any fight.'" this?' And when Indra, envious, was about to smite him (the child) with the thunderbolt, he stayed the thunderbolt, and paralyzed that arm resembling a club. None of the gods, including Prajāpati, understood the lord of the worlds, [existing] in that most mighty deity [in the form of an infant]. Then the divine Brahmā, meditating on that being of boundless glory, and knowing that he was supreme, adored the lord of Umā. Then these gods propitiated Umā and Rudra; and the arm of the slayer of hosts became as before. And again, Mahādeva, becoming a powerful Brahman, by name Durvāsas, dwelt a long time in my city Dvāravatī. He practised very many perversities in my house, which, though difficult to support, I, through generosity, endured. He is Rudra, he is Śiva, he is Agni, he is Sarva, the all-conquering; he is Indra, he is Vāyu, he is the Aśvins, he is the lightning, he is the moon, he is Īśāna, he is Sūrya, he is Varuṇa, he is time, he is Death the ender, he is darkness, and night, and the days, he is the months, and the half months, and the seasons, the morning and evening twilight, and the year. He is Dhātṛi, and Vidhātṛi, Viśvakarman, the all-knowing, the constellations, the planets, the regions [or quarters], and intermediate regions or [points of the compass]; universal-formed, immeasurable in essence, divine, of undecaying splendour. He is simple, twofold, manifold, a thousand-fold, and a hundred-thousand-fold. Such is Mahādeva, the vast, the divine unborn being; his qualities cannot be declared in a hundred years." Kṛishṇa proceeds uninterruptedly at the beginning of a new section: "Large-armed Yudhishṭhira, understand from me the greatness of the glorious, multiform, many-named Rudra. They call Mahādeva Agni, Sthāṇu, Maheśvara, One-eyed, Tryambaka, the universal-formed, and Śiva. Brahmans versed in the Veda know two bodies of this god, one awful, one auspicious;[200] and these two bodies again have many forms. The dire and awful body is fire, lightning, the sun. The auspicious and beautiful body is virtue, water, and the moon. The half of his essence is fire, and the moon is called the [other] half. The one, which is his auspicious body, practises chastity: while the other, which is his most dreadful body, destroys the world. From his being lord (īśvara) and great (mahat), he is called Maheśvara. Since he consumes, since he is fiery, fierce, glorious, an eater of flesh, blood, and marrow,—he is called Rudra. As he is the greatest of the gods, as his domain is wide, and as he preserves the vast universe,—he is called Mahādeva. From his smoky colour, he is called Dhūrjaṭi. Since he constantly prospers all men in all their acts, seeking their welfare (śiva), he is therefore called S'iva," etc., etc.

[200] In Vāj. S., v. 8, Agni is said to have three bodies. See the second volume of this work, p. 381, note.

In the Bhīshma-parvan (vv. 793 ff.) Kṛishṇa is introduced as recommending Arjuna to worship the goddess Durgā :

Sanjayaḥ uvācha | Dhārtarāshṭram balaṁ dṛishṭvā yuddhāya samupasthitam | Arjunasya hitārthāya Kṛishṇo vachanam abravīt | S'rībhagavān uvācha | S'uchir bhūtvā mahābāho saṅgrāmābhimukhe sthitaḥ | parājayāya śatrūnāṁ Durgā-stotram udīraya | Sanjayaḥ uvācha | evam ukto 'rjunaḥ saṅkhye Vāsudevena dhīmatā | avatīrya rathāt Pārthaḥ stotram āha kṛitāñjaliḥ |

"Beholding the host of Dhṛitarāshṭra come near to the conflict, Kṛishṇa, in the interest of Arjuna, addressed to him these words: 'Having purified thyself, O large-armed hero, standing in front of the battle, utter a hymn to Durgā for the overthrow of thine enemies.' Arjuna, being thus addressed in battle by the wise Vāsudeva, descending from his chariot, uttered a hymn with joined hands."

III. In the passage which I have quoted above (p. 169, note 167) from Professor Wilson, it is remarked that in some places of the Mahābhārata the divine nature of Kṛishṇa is disputed or denied. An instance of this denial is to be found in the following passage of the Sabhā-parvan, in which S'iśupāla, prince of the Chedis, is introduced as objecting to the divine honours which had been paid to Kṛishṇa, and as ultimately suffering the penalty of his proud and contemptuous impiety at the hands of the incarnate deity.

Yudhishṭhira having resolved to perform the Rājasūya sacrifice (Sabhā-parvan, v. 1211), is joined by Kṛishṇa, who is designated as Hari, the ṛishi, the ancient, identified with the Veda, invisible to those who know him, the highest of things moving and stationary, the source and destroyer of all things, the lord of the past, the future, and the present (v. 1213: Athaivam bruvatām evaṁ teshām abhyāyayau Hariḥ | ṛishiḥ purāṇo vedātmā 'dṛiśyaś chaiva vijānatām | jagatas tasthushāṁ śreshṭhaḥ prabhavaś chāvyayaś (chāpyayaś?) cha ha | bhūta-bhavya-bhavan-nāthaḥ Keśavaḥ keśi-sūdanaḥ). Numerous kings assembled to witness the celebration (vv. 1260 ff.). On this occasion Bhīshma proposed that, apart from the customary presents bestowed on all the kings, Kṛishṇa should be singled out as the most eminent of the chiefs to receive gifts indicative of his superiority (vv. 1333 ff.).

Sabhā-parvan, 1333 ff.:—Esha hy eshāṁ samastānāṁ tejo-bala-parākramaiḥ | madhye tapann ivābhāti jyotishām iva bhāskaraḥ | asūryam iva sūryeṇa nirvātaḥ iva vayunā[201] | bhāsitaṁ hlāditaṁ chaiva Kṛishṇenedaṁ sado hi naḥ | tasmai Bhīshmābhyanujñātaḥ Sahadevaḥ pratāpavān | upajahre 'tha vidhivad Vārshṇeyāyārghyam uttamam | pratijagrāha tat Kṛishṇaḥ śāstra-dishṭena karmaṇā | S'iśupalas tu tām pūjāṁ Vāsudeve na chakshame | "For he, by his energy, force and valour, appears shining in the midst of all these princes, like the sun among the luminaries. This assembly of ours is enlightened and gladdened by Kṛishṇa, as a sunless place is by the sun, and a windless spot is by the wind. Commissioned by Bhīshma, the majestic Sahadeva then presented in due form to Vārshṇeya (Kṛishṇa) a most excellent offering, which the latter received with the act prescribed by the śāstra. But S'iśupāla could not endure that honour shown to Vāsudeva."

S'iśupāla then proceeds to state at length a variety of objections to what had been done (vv. 1338 ff.). He urges that Kṛishṇa was a "transgressor of the injunctions of law (smṛiti), a contemptible and ill-instructed person" (v. 1340: Ayaṁ cha smṛity-atikrānto hy apageyo 'lpa-darśanaḥ); that he was not a king, or a person venerable from age, his father Vasudeva being still alive (v. 1343: Athavā manyase Kṛishṇaṁ sthaviraṁ Kuru-pungava | Vasudeve sthite vṛiddhe katham arhati tat-sutaḥ |); that in other respects he was inferior to other chiefs present, and that he had unjustly killed Jarāsandha (v. 1360, compare verses 1474 ff.); and taunts him with being greatly elated with the undeserved honour that had been paid him, like a dog devouring in a secret place the leavings of an oblation which he has discovered (v. 1364: Ayuktām ātmanaḥ pūjāṁ tvam punar bahu manyase | havishaḥ prāpya nisyandam prāśitā śveva nirjane |).[202] Having [201] This line had previously occurred as part of verse 1218 of the same Parvan.

[202] Similarly we read in S'iśupāla's speech on the same occasion as given in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, x. 74, 34: .... Gopālaḥ kula-paṁsanaḥ | yathā kākaḥ puroḍāśaṁ saparyāṁ katham arhati | "How does this cowherd, the vilest of his race, deserve homage, any more than a crow deserves to eat an oblation?" The commentator thus gives what he calls the "real sense" of these words: "Gopālaḥ"

thus vented his indignation, Śiśupāla leaves the assembly, followed by Yudhishṭhira, who endeavours to soothe him. Bhīshma then defends Kṛishṇa's claims to the honour which he had received (vv. 1377 ff.):

Na hi kevalam asmākam ayam archyatamo 'chyutaḥ | trayāṇām api lokānām archanīyo mahābhujaḥ | Kṛishṇena hi jitāḥ yuddhe bahavaḥ kshatriyarshabhāḥ | jagat sarvañ cha Vārshṇeye nikhilena pratishṭhitam | tasmāt satsv api vṛiddheshu Kṛishṇam archāmi netarān | . . . . 1382. Nā kevalañ vayañ kāmāch Chedi-rāja Janārdanam | na sambandham puraskṛitya kṛitārthañ vā kathanchana | archāmahe 'rchitañ sadbhir bhuvi bhūta-sukhāvaham | Yaśaḥ śauryam jayañ chāsya vijñāyārchām prayuṃjmahe | na cha kaśchid ihāsmābhiḥ subālo 'py aparīkshitaḥ | guṇair vṛiddhān atikramya Harir archyatamo mataḥ | jñāna-vṛiddho dvijātīnāñ kshatriyāṇām balādhikaḥ | "1377: This unfalling being (Achyuta) is not only deserving of the utmost worship from us, but, large of arm, he is also to be worshipped by the three worlds. For many eminent Kshatriyas have been conquered by Kṛishṇa: and the whole world rests upon Vārshṇeya. Wherefore, even though there be aged men [present], I worship Kṛishṇa, and not the others. . . . . 1382: It is not therefore from interested motives, king of the Chedis, nor in consequence of our connexion, nor for the sake of anything he has done for us, that we worship Janārdana, who is worshipped by the good on earth, and who promotes the happiness of creatures. But knowing his renown, heroism, and victories, we offer him our worship. Nor is there here any mere youth whom we have never tried. Hari, surpassing the aged in his virtues, is regarded by us as most worthy iti veda-pṛithivy-ādi-pālakaḥ ity arthaḥ | kutsitañ veda-viparītañ lapanti iti kulapāḥ pākhaṇḍāḥ | tān añsate samāghātayati iti tathā saḥ | "akākaḥ" kañ cha akañ cha kāke (=kā+āke) sukha-duḥkhe te na vidyete yasya saḥ | "akākaḥ" āptakāmaḥ ity arthaḥ | sa yathā āptakāmo deva-yogyam puroḍāśa-mātrāṃ na arhati api tu sarvasvam api tathā 'yañ śrī-kṛishṇo brahmarshi-yogyañ samarpaṇa-mātraṃ katham arhati | kintv ātma-samarpaṇam apy arhati ity arthaḥ | "'Gopāla' means the protector of the Veda, the earth, etc. 'Ku-lapāḥ' are those who speak what is evil, contrary to the Veda, heretics. 'Kulapāñsana' (Ku+lapa+añsana) is thus one who destroys (añsate) such persons. 'Akākaḥ' (the commentator chooses here to suppose that there is an elided a between yathā and kākaḥ) is one to whom ('kāke') pleasure and pain (ka+a+ka) do not attach; one who has gained all he desires. Just as such an one merits not merely an oblation suitable for a deity, but all wealth also, so Kṛishṇa does not deserve merely the offering suitable for a Brāhman-ṛishi, but also the offering up of one's self."

of worship. In knowledge he excels Brahmans, and in force Kshatriyas." . . . .

1386: Pūjyatāyāncha Govinde hetū dvāv api saṁsthitau | veda-vedāṅga-vijñānam balaṁ chāpy adhikaṁ tathā | nṛiṇāṁ loke hi ko 'nyo 'sti viśishṭaḥ Keśavād ṛite | dānaṁ dākshyaṁ śrutaṁ śauryaṁ hrīḥ kīrtir buddhir uttamā | sannatiḥ śrīr dhṛitis tushṭiḥ pushṭiścha niyatā 'chyute | tam imaṁ loka-sampannam āchāryam pitaraṁ gurum | arghyam architam archārhaṁ sarve saṁkshantum arhatha | ṛitvig gurur vivāhyaś cha snātako nṛipatiḥ priyaḥ | sarvaṁ etad Hṛishīkeśas tasmād abhyarchito 'chyutaḥ | Kṛishṇaḥ eva hi lokānām utpattir api chāpyayaḥ | Kṛishṇasya hi kṛite viśvam idam bhūtaṁ charācharam | esha prakṛitir avyaktā kartā chaiva sanātanaḥ | paraś cha sarva-bhūtebhyaś tasmād pūjyatamo 'chyutaḥ | Buddhir mano mahad vāyus tejo 'mbhaḥ kham mahī cha yā | chatur-vidhaṁ cha yad bhūtam sarvaṁ Kṛishṇe pratishṭhitam | . . . . . .

1396: Sa-devakeshu lokeshu bhagavān Keśavo mukham | ayaṁ tu purusho bālaḥ Śiśupālo na budhyate | sarvatra sarvadā Kṛishnaṁ tasmād evaṁ prabhāshate | yo hi dharmaṁ vichinuyād utkṛishṭam matimān naraḥ | so vai paśyed yāthā dharmaṁ na tathā Chedi-rāḍ ayam| sa-vṛiddha-bāleshv athavā pārthiveshu mahātmasu | ko nārham manyate Kṛishṇaṁ ko vā py enaṁ na pūjayet | athainām dushkṛitām pūjāṁ Śiśu-pālo vyavasyati | dushkṛitāyāṁ yathānyāyaṁ tathā 'yaṁ kartum arhati|

"There are two reasons why Govinda is worthy of honour: his knowledge of the Vedas and Vedāngas, and his superior strength. For who in the world of men is distinguished except Keśava? Generosity, ability, sacred learning, heroism, modesty, eminent renown, intelligence, humility, splendour, endurance, cheerfulness and joyousness, exist continually in Achyuta. You ought all to tolerate this teacher arisen in the world (or successful in the world), this father, preceptor, venerable, honoured, deserving of honour. Priest, preceptor, marriageable man, householder, king, beloved,—Hṛishīkesa is all this, and therefore he has been honoured. It is Kṛishṇa who is the origin and the destruction of the worlds: all this universe, movable and immovable, has come into being through (or for the sake of) Kṛishṇa.[203] He is undistinguishable matter (prakṛiti), and he is the eternal maker, transcending all beings: hence Achyuta is most worthy of honour. Intellect, mind, the great one (mahat), air, fire, water, sky, and earth—whatever fourfold being exists—all depends upon Kṛishṇa. . . . . 1396. The divine Keśava is chief among the worlds including the gods. But this foolish man, S'iśupāla, does not know that Kṛishṇa [is] everywhere and always—and hence he speaks thus. For this king of the Chedis does not regard righteousness in the same way as an intelligent man who can distinguish eminent righteousness. Who is there, whether among old or young, or among mighty kings, who will not regard Kṛishṇa as honourable, or who will not reverence him? S'iśupāla treats this honour as unduly paid. But it having been unduly paid, he should act as is befitting."

[203] The grounds urged for honouring Kṛishṇa in this and the following verses are of a different character from those in the preceding lines, which do not ascribe to him any qualities of a superhuman character; whilst the succeeding ones do. It is quite possible that the whole of this description of his qualities may not be of one age, but may contain interpolations subsequently introduced.

S'iśupāla afterwards renews his vilifications of Kṛishṇa, in a long harangue, of which the following is a specimen (vv. 1433 ff.):

1433. S'iśupālaḥ uvācha | vibhīshikābhir bahvībhir bhīshayan sarva-pārthivān | na vyapatrapase kasmād vriddhaḥ san kula-pāṁsanaḥ | yuktam etat tṛitīyāyām prakṛitau vartatā tvayā | vaktuṁ dharmād apetārthaṁ tvaṁ hi sarva-kurūttama[ḥ] | nāvi naur iva sambaddhā yathā 'ndho vā 'ndham anviyāt | tathā bhūtāḥ hi Kauravyāḥ yeshām Bhīshma tvam agranīḥ | Pūtanā-ghāta-pūrvāṇi karmāṇy asya viśeshataḥ | tvayā kīrtayatā 'smākam bhūyaḥ pravyathitam manaḥ | avaliptasya mūrkhasya Keśavaṁ stotuṁ ichhataḥ | katham Bhīshma na te jihvā śatadheyaṁ vidīryyate | yatra kutsā prayoktavyā Bhīshma bālatarair naraiḥ | tam imaṁ jñāna-vriddhaḥ san gopam saṁstotum ichhasi | yady anena hatā bālye śakuniś chitram atra kīm | tau vā 'śva-vṛishabhau Bhīshma yau na yuddha-viśāradau | chetanā-rahitaṁ kāshṭhaṁ yady anena nipātitam | pādena śakaṭam Bhīshma tatra kiṁ kṛitam adbhutam | valmīka-mātraḥ saptāhaṁ yady anena dhṛito 'chalaḥ | tadā Govardhano Bhīshma na tach chitram matam mama | bhuktam etena bahv annaṁ krīḍatā naga-mūrdhani | iti te Bhīshma śṛiṇvānāḥ paraṁ vismayam āgatāḥ | yasya chānena dharma-jña bhuktam annam balīyasaḥ | sa chānena hataḥ Kaṁsaḥ ity etan na mahādbhutam | na te śrutam idam Bhīshma nūnaṁ kathayatāṁ satām | yad vakshye tvām adharma-jñaṁ vākyaṁ Kuru-kulādhama | strīshu goshu na śastrāṇi pātayed brāhmaṇeshu cha | yasya chānnānī bhunjīta yasya cha syāt pratiśrayaḥ | iti santo 'nuśāsanti sajjanaṁ dharmiṇaḥ sadā | Bhīshma loke hi tat sarvaṁ vitathaṁ tvayi dṛiśyate | jñāna-vriddhaṁ cha

vṛiddhaṁ cha bhūyāṁsaṁ Keśavam mama | ajānataḥ ivākhyāsi saṁstuvan Kauravādhama | go-ghnaḥ strī-ghnaś cha san Bhīshma tvad-vākyād yadi pūjyate | evam-bhūtaś cha yo Bhīshma kathaṁ saṁstavam arhati | . . .
1451. Nūnam prakṛitir eshā te jaghanyā nātra saṁśayaḥ | ataḥ pāpīyasī chaishām Pāṇḍavānām apīshyate | yeshām archyatamaḥ Kṛishṇas tvaṁ cha yeshām pradarśakaḥ | dharmavāṁs tvam adharma-jnaḥ satām mārgād avaplutaḥ | ityādi |

S'iśupāla answers Bhīshma: "How is it that thou, disgracing thy race, art not ashamed, old man as thou art, to terrify all the kings with many alarms? It is very fitting [forsooth] that thou who art now existing in the third condition,[204] shouldst utter things contrary to righteousness, seeing thou art the most eminent of all the Kurus! For as a boat is tied to a boat, or as one blind man follows another, so is it with the Kurus of whom thou, Bhīshma, art the leader. Our minds have frequently been vexed by thee when detailing his (Kṛishṇa's) slaughter of Pūtanā[205] and other feats. How is it, Bhīshma, that thy tongue, thou proud fool, is not split into a hundred pieces, when thou seekest to magnify Keśava? Thou who art ripe in knowledge, art eager to eulogize the cowherd who ought to be vilified even by the silliest of men! If in his childhood he slew S'akuni,[206] or the horse and bull, who had no skill in fighting, what is the wonder? If a waggon, an inanimate piece of wood, was upset by him with his foot,[207] what wonderful thing did he do? If the mountain Govardhana, a mere ant-hill, was held up by him for seven days,[208] I do not regard that as anything remarkable. Hearing that when playing on the hill-

[204] The commentator explains this phrase as follows: Dve prakṛitī pariṇāminyau māyā tasyaṁ chit-prativimbas 'cha | tṛitīyā prakṛitis tv etad-ubhayādhyāsādhishṭhānaṁ nirviśeshaṁ vastu | tatra vartatā vartamānena, etc. "Two conditions are changeable, viz. (1) illusion (māyā) and (2) the reflected image of thought (chit-prativimba) in it. The third condition is the basis of the erroneous ascription of the other two, substance without distinction," etc. I am indebted to Dr. R. Rost for an important suggestion regarding the combination of two of the words in this sentence. Dr. Rost informs me that in the text one MS. reads kurūttamaḥ and another sarvaṁ kurūttama.

[205] A female demon slain by Kṛisbṇa.—See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 506 (vol. iv., p. 276, of Dr. Hall's ed.).

[206] See the Udyoga-parvan 4409, where Pūtanā and S'akunī (there spelt with a long ī) are mentioned together as having been slain by Kṛishṇa in childhood.

[207] See Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 508 (vol. iv., p. 279, of Dr. Hall's ed.).

[208] See Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 526 (vol. iv., p. 315, of Dr. Hall's ed.).

top, he had eaten a great quantity of food, these people were very much astonished. And it is no great miracle, O Bhīshma, thou judge of duty, that he slew Kansa, the powerful king whose food he had eaten. Hast thou not heard virtuous men declaring this which I shall tell thee, who art ignorant of duty, Bhīshma, thou basest of the tribe of Kurus? 'Let no one smite with his weapons women,[209] cattle, or Brahmans, or him whose food he eats, or on whom he is dependent.' Such is the instruction which good and virtuous men always give to a virtuous [pupil]. All this, Bhīshma, is seen by all to be falsified in thee. Thou, basest of the Kurus, eulogizing, speakest of Keśava as old in knowledge, and mature, and superior, as if I did not know him. If he, being a slayer of cattle, and of women, is, according to thy word, to be reverenced,—how, Bhīshma, can such a person merit encomium? . . . . 1451. Certainly this nature of thine is base, of this there is no doubt; and hence [the nature] of these Pāṇḍavas also is shown to be most wicked,—[these Pāṇḍavas] to whom Kṛishṇa is an object of the highest honour, and of whom thou art the virtuous preceptor,—thou, who art ignorant of duty, and hast gone astray from the path of good men!"

This speech excites the wrath of Bhīmasena (v. 1482), who, however, is restrained by Bhīshma from assaulting S'iśupāla, though the latter is anxious to fight him. Bhīshma then goes on (1494 ff.) to give Bhīmasena an account of S'iśupāla's infancy and early history. He had, it seems, been born with three eyes and four arms; and his parents, alarmed at his portentous appearance, were disposed to cast him out, but were prevented by a voice from the sky, which declared to them that the time fated for his death had not yet arrived. In answer to his mother's inquiry, the voice informed her that her son was doomed to die by the hands of the person who should take him into his lap, and by so doing should occasion his two superfluous arms to drop off, and his third eye to disappear. A part of this prediction was fulfilled when Kṛishṇa came and took him into his lap, and the infant got rid of his superfluous members.[210] On seeing this, his [209] See above, pp. 152 f.

[210] On this story of S'iśupāla Lassen remarks (Indian Antiquities, i. p. 674 first ed.; p. 822 second ed.): "S'iśupāla in this case represents S'iva, and the conflict of the S'iva-worship with that of Vishṇu: for he was born with three eyes and four arms, and the legend attributes the falling off of his two superfluous arms and the dis-mother begged a boon from Kṛishṇa, viz. that he would forgive Sís'upāla's offences. Kṛishṇa promises to pardon a hundred. Bhīshma then proceeds (v. 1518 ff.):

Evam esha nṛipaḥ pāpaḥ S'iśupālaḥ sumanda-dhīḥ | tvāṁ samāhvayate vīra Govinda-vara-darpitaḥ | Naishā Chedi-pater buddhir yayā tvā "hvayate 'chyutam | nūnam eṣha jagad-bhartuḥ Kṛishṇasyaiva viniśchayaḥ | ko hi mām Bhīmasenādya kshitāv arhati pārthivaḥ | kṣheptuṁ kāla-parītātmā yathaisha kula-pāṁsanaḥ | esha hy asya 'mahābāhus tejo 'ṁśaś cha Harer dhruvam | tam eva punar ādātum ichhaty uta tathā vibhuḥ | yenaisha Kuru-śārdūla śārdūlaḥ iva Chedi-rāṭ | garjaty atīva durbuddhiḥ sarvān asmān achintayan |

"Thus this wicked king S'iśupāla, slow of understanding, proud of the boon conferred by Govinda, challenges thee, O hero. This does not show wisdom in the lord of the Chedis, that he challenges thee who art Achyuta. For this is the fixed opinion of Kṛishṇa, the sustainer of the world, 'What king on earth, O Bhīmasena, ought to-day to revile me, deprived by destiny of his reason, like this degrader of his race?' For this large-armed (S'iśupāla) is certainly [an emanation of] the strength, and a portion, of Hari, which the pervading [deity] wishes to draw back again [into himself]; in consequence of which, O chief of the Kurus, this foolish king of the Chedis growls loudly, like a tiger, disregarding us all."

S'iśupāla here breaks in angrily (v. 1524 ff.), and asks why Kṛishṇa should be so praised to the exclusion of all other warlike kings. Bhīshma replies (1551), that he values not a straw all the other chiefs who were present. On hearing this, some of them became greatly incensed; and some cried out that Bhīshma should be killed or burned. Bhīshma replied that they might slay or burn him if they pleased, but that Kṛishṇa, the object of his reverence, would survive, and that appearance of his frontal eye to the look and embrace of Kṛishṇa. This story is of especial importance for the purpose of determining the periods to which the different parts of the Mahābhārata belong. Kṛishṇa's deification belongs to the period after Buddha. In the attack upon Jarāsandha he is still exhibited principally as a hero, acts upon human motives, and performs actions unworthy of a god: but there are evident beginnings of his deification." The same author adds in a note on the same page (p. 823, second ed.): "S'iśupāla is probably an earlier name of S'iva, who is called 'Paśupati,' or lord, protector, of beasts. 'S'iśu' denotes the young of men and beasts, and 'pāla' protector. He had a second name 'Sunītha' (Sabhāp. v. 1410), which no doubt was the proper one."

any one who was desirous to incur speedy destruction should challenge him to fight. Siśupāla hereupon challenges Kṛishṇa; and the narrative proceeds:

(Verses 1561 ff.): Tataḥ śrutvaiva Bhīshmasya Chedi-rāḍ uru-vikramaḥ | yuyutsur Vāsudevena Vāsudevam uvācha ha | āhvaye tvāṁ raṇaṁ gachha mayā sārdhaṁ Janārdana | yāvad adya nihanmi tvāṁ sahitaṁ sarva-Pāṇḍavaiḥ | saha tvayā hi me badhyāḥ sarvathā Kṛishṇa Pāṇḍavāḥ | nṛipatīn samatikramya y'air arājā tvam architaḥ | ye tvāṁ dāsam arājānam bālyād archanti durmatim | anarham arha-vat Kṛishṇa badhyās te iti me matiḥ | ity uktvā rāja-śārdūla [s?] tasthau garjann amarshaṇaḥ | evam ukte tataḥ Kṛishṇo mṛidu-pūrvam idaṁ vachaḥ | uvācha pārthivān sarvān sa samakshaṁ cha Pāṇḍavān | esha noḥ śatrur atyantam pārthivāḥ Sātvatī-sutaḥ | Sātvatānāṁ nṛiśaṁsātmā na hito 'napakāriṇām | Prāgjyotisha-puram yātān asmān jñātvā nṛiśaṁsa-kṛit | adahad Dvārakām esha svasrīyaḥ san narādhipāḥ | krīḍato Bhoja-rājasya esha Raivatake girau | hatvā baddhvā cha tān sarvān upāyāt sva-puram purā | aśvamedhe hayam medhyam utsṛishṭaṁ rakshibhir vṛitam | pitur me yajña-vighnārtham aharat pāpa-niśchayaḥ | Sauvīrān pratiyātāncha Babhror esha tapasvinaḥ | bhāryām abhyaharad mohād akāmā [m?] tām ito gatām | esha māyā-pratichhannaḥ Kārūshārthe tapasvinīm | jahāra Bhadrāṁ Vaiśālīm mātulasya nṛiśaṁsa-vat | pitṛi-svasuḥ kṛite duḥkhaṁ sumahad marshayāmy aham | dishṭyā hīdaṁ sarva-rājñāṁ sannidhāv adya vartate | paśyanti hi bhavanto 'dya mayy atīva vyatikramam | kṛitāni tu paroksham me yāni tāni nibodhata | imaṁ tv asya na śakshyāmi kshantum adya vyatikramam | avalepād badhārhasya samagre rāja-maṇḍale | Rukmiṇyām asya mūḍhasya prārthanā "sīd mumūrshataḥ | na cha tām prāptavān mūḍhaḥ śūdraḥ vedaśrutīm iva | evam-ādi tataḥ sarve sahitās te narādhipāḥ | Vāsudeva-vachaḥ śrutvā Chedi-rājaṁ vyagarhayan | tasya tad-vachanaṁ śrutvā Siśupālaḥ pratāpavān | jahāsa svanavaddhāsaṁ vākyaṁ chedam uvācha ha | mat-pūrvām Rukmiṇīṁ Kṛishṇa saṁsatsu parikīrtayan | viśeshataḥ pārthiveshu vrīḍāṁ na kurushe katham | manyamāno hi kaḥ satsu purushaḥ parikīrtayet | anya-pūrvāṁ striyaṁ jātu tvad-anyo Madhusūdana | kshama vā yadi te śraddhā mā vā Kṛishṇa mama kshama | kruddhād vā 'pi prasannād vā kiṁ me tvatto bhavishyati | tathā bruvataḥ evāsya bhagavān Madhusūdanaḥ | manasā 'chintayach chakraṁ daitya-garva-nisūdanam | etāsminn eva kāle tu chakre hasta-gate sati | uvācha bhagavān uchchair vākyaṁ vākya-viśāradaḥ | śṛinvantu me mahīpālāḥ yenāitat

kshamitam mayā | aparādha-śataṁ kshāmyam mātur asyaiva yāchane | dattam mayā yāchitaṁ cha tad vai pūrṇaṁ hi pārthivāḥ | adhunā badhayishyāmi paśyatāṁ vo mahīkshitam | evaṁ uktvā Yadu-śreshṭhaś Chedirājasya tat-kshaṇāt | vyapāharach chhiraḥ kruddhaś chakreṇāmitrakarshaṇaḥ | sa papāta mahābāhur vajrāhataḥ ivāchalaḥ |

"The king of the Chedis, mighty in valour, desirous to fight with Vāsudeva, after he had heard Bhīshma, then addressed the former: 'I challenge thee, approach to combat with me, Janārdana, till I slay thee with all the Pāṇḍavas. For together with thee, Kṛishṇa, I must utterly destroy the Pāṇḍavas, who, passing over kings, have honoured thee who art no king. They who, through folly, honour thee, a fool, who art a slave, and no king, and who art unworthy, as if thou wert worthy, [they, I say,] ought in my opinion to be slain.' Having so spoken, the tiger of kings stood growling and indignant. Kṛishṇa then addressed these mild words to all the kings and the Pāṇḍavas, in their presence: 'This son of Sātvatī, O princes, is the bitter enemy, truculent and ill-disposed, of us the Sātvatas, who have done him no wrong. This malignant man, a sister's son, knowing that we had set out for the city of the Prāgjyotishas, burned Dvārakā. While the king of the Bhojas was formerly amusing himself on the Revata mountain, he slew and captured them all, and then returned home. Bent upon wickedness, to interrupt my father's sacrifice, he carried off the horse intended as a victim, which had been let loose, attended by keepers. He in his infatuation carried off the wife of the devotee Babhru, who had set out to return to [the country of] the Sauvīras, who had gone hence, and who had no passion [for him]. Under a magical disguise, he, like a cruel wretch, carried off for the Kārusha the devout Bhadrā, daughter of Viśāla, [the daughter] of my maternal uncle. For the sake of my father's sister (S'iśupāla's mother), I submit to great vexation. Fortunately, this occurs to-day in presence of all the princes, for ye all behold the great transgression committed against me. As for the offences which have been done out of your sight, learn them from me. I shall not to-day be able to endure this transgression of this infatuated man, who, for his presumption, deserves to be slain in the full assembly of princes. He who is doomed to die, sought to gain Rukmiṇī, but the fool did not obtain her, as a Śūdra is excluded from the veda.' Hearing these and such other words of Vāsudeva, all the princes together then reviled the king of the Chedis. But the mighty S'iśupāla, hearing these words, laughed a sonorous laugh, and thus spake: 'How is it, that thou art not ashamed, Kṛishṇa, thus in the assembly, and especially before the princes, to make mention of Rukmiṇī, who was betrothed to me?[211] For what man but thou, Madhusūdana, after reflection, would mention among respectable persons a woman who had been betrothed to another? Forgive me, Kṛishṇa, if thou hast generosity, or refuse to forgive me. What shall happen to me from thee whether thou art well-pleased or angry?' As he thus spake, the divine Madhusūdana in his mind thought upon the discus, the humbler of the pride of the Daityas. The discus having come into his hand at that very time, the divine being, skilled in words, uttered aloud this word: 'Let the kings listen to me by whom this forgiveness has been practised. At the request of his mother, a hundred offences were to be pardoned. That request was granted by me, and it has been fulfilled, O kings. I shall now slay him, while you kings look on.' Having thus spoken, the chief of the Yadus, the vexer of his foes, incensed, instantly struck off the head of the king of the Chedis with his discus. The great-armed (warrior) fell like a mountain smitten by a thunder-bolt."[212]

[211] Rukmiṇī had been betrothed to S'iśupāla, as we are told in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, v. 26, 1 ff. (Wilson, p. 573, first ed.; p. 69, vol. v. of Dr. Hall's ed.): Bhīshmakaḥ Kuṇḍine rājā Vidarbha-vishaye 'bhavat | Rukmī tasyābhavat putro Rukmiṇī cha varāṅganā | Rukmiṇīṁ chakame Kṛishṇaḥ sā cha tāṁ chāru-hāsinī | na dadau yāchate chainām Rukmī dveshena chakriṇe | dadau cha S'iśupālāya Jarāsandha-prachoditaḥ | Bhīshmako Rukmiṇā sārddhaṁ Rukmiṇīm uru-vikramaḥ | "Bhīshmaka was king in Kuṇḍina, in the country of the Vidarbhas. Rukmin was his son, and the beautiful Rukmiṇī (his daughter). Kṛishṇa loved Rukmiṇī, and the sweetly-smiling maid (loved) him, but Rukmin did not give her to the wielder of the discus, when he asked her; but urged by Jarāsandha, Bhīshmaka, mighty in valour, together with Rukmin, gave her to S'iśupāla." Kṛishṇa comes to witness the nuptials of his rival, and carries off the princess on the eve of the wedding. The story is told at greater length in the Harivaṁśa, sect. 117, vv. 6579 ff.; and in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, x. sections 43 ff.

[212] See the sequel, vv. 1585–1588. The Vishṇu Purāṇa (Wilson's translation, p. 437, first ed.; vol. iv. p. 104, of Dr. Hall's ed.) tells that S'is'upāla had been in a former birth the Daitya Hiraṇyakaśipu, who was killed by Vishṇu in his man-lion incarnation. He afterwards became Rāvaṇa, who was slain by Rāma. In his character as S'iśupāla he evinced an intense hatred towards Vishṇu, "a portion of the supreme being, who had descended to lighten the burthens of the earth," (V. P. iv. 14, 14: S'iśupālatvena bhagavato bhū-bhārāvatāraṇāya avatīrṇāṁśasya Puṇḍarīkanayanākhyasya upari dveshānubandham atitarāṁ chakāra |) and was in consequence slain by him;

Duryodhana, the son of Dhṛitarāshṭra, and the principal leader of the Kurus, is represented as manifesting a similar disbelief of Kṛishṇa's divine character, or at least as maintaining a proud and contumacious resistance to his claims. In the Udyoga-parvan (vv. 2527 ff.), Sanjaya unfolds the divine nature of Kṛishṇa, "who," he says, "being distinct in nature, and self-subdued, is able, by a thought, to subject to himself the earth, the air, and the heaven" (pṛithivīnchāntarīkshancha dyāṁ chaiva Purushottamaḥ | manasaiva visishṭātmā nayaty ātma-vaśaṁ vaśī)| He then goes on to say, vv. 2529 ff.:

Ekato vā jagat kṛitsnam ekato vā Janārdanaḥ | sārato jagataḥ kṛitsnād atirikto Janārdanaḥ | bhasma kuryād jagad idam manasaiva Janārdanaḥ | na cha kṛitsnaṁ jagach chhaktam bhasmīkartuṁ Janārdanam | yataḥ satyaṁ yato dharmo yato hrīr ārjavaṁ yataḥ | tato bhavati Govindo yataḥ Kṛishṇas tato jayaḥ | pṛithivīṁ chāntarīkshancha divancha Purushottamaḥ | vicheshṭayati bhūtātmā krīḍann iva Janārdanaḥ | sa kṛitvā Pāṇḍavān satraṁ lokaṁ sammohayann iva | adharma-niratān mūḍhān dagdhum ichhati te sutān | kāla-chakraṁ jayach-chakraṁ yuga-chakrancha Keśavaḥ | ātma-yogena bhagavān parivartayate 'niśam | kālasya cha hi mṛityoścha jangama-sthāvarasya cha | īśate bhagavān ekaḥ satyam etad bravīmi te | īśann api mahāyogī sarvasya jagato Hariḥ | karmāṇy ārabhate kartuṁ kīnāśaḥ iva vardhanaḥ | tena vanchayate lokān māyāyogena Keśavaḥ | ye tam eva prapadyante tena muhyanti mānavāḥ | Dhṛitarāshṭraḥ uvācha | kathaṁ tvaṁ Mādhavaṁ vettha sarva-loka-maheśvaram | katham enaṁ na vedāhaṁ tad mamāchakshva Sanjaya | Sanjayaḥ uvācha | śriṇu rājan na te vidyā mama vidyā na hīyate | vidyā-hīno tamo-dhvasto nābhijānāti Keśavam | vidyayā tāta jānāmi triyugam Madhusūdanam | kartāram akṛitaṁ devam bhūtānām prabhavāpyayam | Dhṛitarāshṭraḥ

but as his thoughts were "constantly engrossed by the supreme being," S'iśupāla became united with him after death; for the lord gives "to those to whom he is favourable whatever they desire," and "bestows a heavenly and exalted station even upon those whom he slays in his displeasure." This is further explained in the next section, where we are told that Kṛishṇa as an object of hatred was ever present to S'iśupāla's thoughts, and that he was constantly uttering his names, and though this was done disrespectfully and in malediction, yet he at last beheld the deity in his true character when he was being slain by him, and that then all his passion and hatred ceased, and his sins were consumed by his divine adversary, with whom he became united. The attempt of S'iśupāla's brother, king of the S'ālvas (whose capital was Saubha), to revenge his death, his assault on Dvārakā, his desire to slay Kṛishṇa, and the destruction which he thereby drew upon himself, are narrated in the Vana-parvan, vv. 615–890.

uvācha | Gāvalgaṇe 'tra kā bhaktir yā te nityaṁ Jānardane | yathā tvam abhijānāsi iriyugam Madhusūdanam | Sanjayaḥ uvācha | māyāṁ na seve bhadraṁ te na vṛithā dharmam ācharе | śuddha-bhāvaṁ gato bhaktyā śāstrād vedmi Janārdanam | Dhṛitarāshṭraḥ uvācha | Duryodhana Hṛishīkeśam prapadyasva Janārdanam | āpto naḥ Sanjayas tāta śaraṇaṁ gachha Keśavam | Duryodhanaḥ uvācha | Bhagavān Devakī-putro lokāṁś ched nihanishyati | pravadann Arjune sakhyaṁ nāhaṁ gachhe 'dya Keśavam |

2529. "On the one side the whole world, on the other Janārdana,—in his essence Janārdana exceeds the whole world. He could by a thought reduce this world to ashes; but the whole world could not reduce him to ashes. Since he is truth, righteousness, modesty, rectitude,—therefore is he Govinda; since he is Kṛishṇa, he is therefore victory. The chief of males (or spirits), Janārdana, the soul of beings, imparts activity to the earth, air, and sky, as if in sport. He having made for the Pāṇḍavas a sacrifice, deluding, as it were, the world, wishes to burn up thy (Dhṛitarāshṭra's) infatuated and unrighteous sons. The divine Keśava by his own abstraction (yoga) makes the circles of time, of the world, and of the ages (yugas), continually to revolve. This divine being alone is lord of time, of death, and of things movable and immovable,—this I tell thee as a truth. Hari, the great contemplator, though the lord of the whole world, undertakes to perform works, like a poor peasant seeking gain. He deceives the world by this display of delusion whereby the men who seek him are bewildered. Dhṛitarāshṭra said: How dost thou know Mādhava, the great lord of the whole world? and how is it that I do not know him?—tell me that, Sanjaya. Sanjaya answered: Hear, O king, thou hast not knowledge; but to me knowledge is not wanting. He who is devoid of knowledge, and sunk in darkness, does not recognize Keśava. By knowledge I recognize Madhusūdana, who exists in the three ages (yugas), the maker, the unmade, the god, the source of beings, and the cause of their destruction. Dhṛitarāshṭra asks: O Gāvalgaṇi (Sanjaya), what is this devotion of thine to Janārdana, whereby thou recognizest him to exist in the three Yugas? Sanjaya answers: I do not pursue a delusion, bless thee, nor do I vainly practise righteousness. Having by devotion attained to purity, I know Janārdana from the scripture (śāstra). Dhṛitarāshṭra said: Duryodhana, do thou seek Hṛishīkeśa, Janārdana: Sanjaya is to us an authoritative teacher: resort to Keśava as thy refuge. Duryodhana said: If the divine son of Devakī should destroy the worlds, I should not, declaring friendship for Arjuna, resort to-day to Keśava."

Duryodhana is hereupon reproved by his father and mother for his pride, self-will, and ambition, and is told by the latter that "when he has received his death-blow from Bhīmasena, he will remember the words of his father (nihato Bhīmasenena smartāsi vachanam pituḥ)." After some further conversation, Dhṛitarāshṭra asks to be further instructed about Kṛishṇa, when Sanjaya proceeds as follows (vv. 2560 ff.):

Sanjayaḥ uvācha | śrutam me Vāsudevasya nāma-nirvachanaṁ śubham | yāvat tatrābhijāne 'ham aprameyo hi Keśavaḥ | vasanāt sarva-bhūtānāṁ vasutvād deva-yonitaḥ | Vāsudevas tato vedyo vṛihatvād Vishṇur uchyate | maunād dhyānāch cha yogāchcha viddhi Bhārata Mādhavam | sarva-tattva-mayatvāch cha Madhuhā Madhusūdanaḥ | kṛishir bhū-vāchakaḥ śabdo ṇaścha nirvṛiti-vāchakaḥ | Vishṇus tad-bhāva-yogāchcha Kṛishṇo bhavati Sātvataḥ | puṇḍarīkam paraṁ dhāma nityam akshayam avyayam | tad-bhāvāt Puṇḍarīkāksho dasyu-trāsāj Janārdanaḥ | yataḥ sattvād na chyavate yach cha sattvād na hīyate | sattvataḥ Sāttvatas tasmād ārsha-bhād Vṛishabhekshaṇaḥ | na jāyate janitrā 'yam Ajas tasmād anīkajit | devānāṁ sva-prakāśatvād damād Dāmodaro vibhuḥ | harshāt sukhāt sukhaiśvaryād Hṛishīkeśatvam aśnute | bāhubhyām rodasī bibhrad mahā-bāhur iti smṛitaḥ | adho na kshīyate jātu yasmāt tasmād adhokshajaḥ | narāṇām ayanāch chāpi tato Nārāyaṇaḥ smṛitaḥ | pūraṇāt sadanāch chāpi tato 'sau Purushottamaḥ | ṣaṭaś cha sataś chaiva sarvasya prabhavāpyayāt | sarvasya cha sadā jñānāt Sarvam etam prachakshate | satye pratishṭhitaḥ Kṛishṇaḥ satyam atra pratishṭhitam | satyāt satyancha Govindas tasmāt Satyo 'pi nāmataḥ | Vishṇur vikramaṇād devo jayanāj Jishṇur uchyate | śāśvatatvād Anantaścha Govindo vedanād gavām | atattvaṁ kurute tattvaṁ tena mohayate prajāḥ | evaṁvidho dharma-nityo bhagavān Madhusūdanaḥ | āgantā hi mahābāhur ānṛiśaṁsyārtham achyutaḥ |

"Sanjaya says: Thou hast heard from me the auspicious explanation of Vāsudeva's names, as far as I understand the subject; for Keśava is immeasurable. He is to be known as Vāsudeva from his dwelling (vasanāt) in all beings, from his issuing as a Vasu from a divine womb. From his greatness (vṛihatvāt) he is called Vishṇu. From his silence, (maunāt) contemplation, and abstraction, do thou know him to be Mādhava. From his possessing the nature of all principles, he is

Madhuhan, and Madhusūdana. The word kṛishi denotes 'earth,' and ṇa denotes 'cessation'; Vishṇu, from containing the nature of these things, is Kṛishṇa, the Sāttvata. Puṇḍarīka means the highest abode, eternal, unchangeable, undecaying; from his having that character he is Puṇḍarīkāksha. From terrifying the Dasyus he is Janārdana. Inasmuch as he does not fall from, or fail in, existence (sattva), therefore, from his existence, he is Sāttvata, and from his excellence (ārshabhat) he is Vṛishabhekshaṇa. As he is not generated by a father, he is Aja (the unborn), the victorious in battle. From the self-illumination of the gods, and from self-restraint (dama), the mighty being is Dāmodara. He obtains his character as Hṛishīkeśa from joy (harsha), pleasure, and the ease with which he rules. Sustaining the two worlds with his arms, he is called Mahābāhu (great-armed). Since he never sinks downwards (adho na kshīyate) he is Adhokshaja. From movement among men (narāṇām[213] ayanat) he is called Nārāyaṇa. From filling (pūraṇāt) and from abiding (sadanāt) he is Purushottama. Since he is the source and the destruction of everything (sarvasya) both non-existent and existent, and since he always knows all, they call him Sarva. Kṛishṇa is based on truth (satye), and truth is based on him, and Govinda is truer than truth, therefore he is also called Satya. The god is called Vishṇu from striding (vikramaṇāt), Jishṇu from conquering (jayanāt), Ananta from his eternity, and Govinda from the possession of cattle[214] (vedanād gavām). He makes the reality an unreality, and so deludes creatures. Of such a character, constant [213] Perhaps the true reading is nārāṇām, "waters," as in the text of Manu, cited above, p. 31.

[214] Another explanation of this name is given in S'ānti-parvan, v. 13228 f.: Nashṭāṁ cha dharaṇīm pūrvam avindaṁ vai guhāgatām | Govindaḥ iti tenāhaṁ devair vāgbhir abhisthṭutaḥ | "And since I discovered the earth which had formerly been destroyed, and had sunk into the abyss, I was therefore lauded by the gods with praises as Govinda." And in the following verse, occurring in the description of the ocean, in the Ādi-parvan, v. 1216, the word Govinda is thus interpreted: Gāṁ vindatā bhagavatā Govindenāmitaujasā | varāha-rūpiṇā chāntar vikshobhita-jalāvilam | "[That ocean] which was rendered turbid when its waters were agitated within by the divine Govinda of illimitable power, who in the form of a boar found the earth [beneath its surface]." I notice in the same passage another verse (1215), which seems to show that, at the period when it was written, the Hindūs were acquainted with the cause of the tides, or at least with the influence of the moon upon the ocean: Chandra-vṛiddhi-kshaya-vaśād udvṛittormi-samākulaṁ | "[The ocean] tossed with waves which rise in obedience to the waxing and waning of the moon."

in righteousness, is the divine Madhusūdana. For the great-armed Achyuta (or unfalling deity) will come for the sake of innocence."

The following is another illustration of Duryodhana's enmity to Kṛishṇa, and of his scepticism in regard to the supernatural character of that personage, at the same time that it shows the writer's faith in the divine nature of his hero. It is related in the Udyoga-parvan that Kṛishṇa went to the Kurus, with the intention of mediating between them and the Pāṇḍus. While he was with them, Duryodhana plotted to confine him (v. 4368), but Vidura warns the plotter that his attempt would be vain, owing to the divine power of Kṛishṇa. On the conclusion of Vidura's speech, Kṛishṇa addresses himself to Duryodhana (4418 ff.):

Vidureṇaivam uktas tu Keśavaḥ śatru-pūga-hā | Duryodhanaṁ Dhārtarāshṭram abhyabhāshata vīryavān | eko 'ham iti yad mohād manyase māṁ Suyodhana | paribhūya sudurbuddhe grahītum māṁ chikīrshasi | ihaiva Pāṇḍavāḥ sarve tathaivāndhaka-vṛishṇayaḥ | ihādityāścha Rudrāś cha Vasavaś cha saharshibhiḥ | evam uktvā jahāsochchaiḥ Keśavaḥ para-vīra-hā | tasya saṁsmayataḥ S'aurer vidyud-rūpāḥ mahātmanaḥ | angushṭha-mātrās tridaśāḥ mumuchuḥ pāvakārchishaḥ | asya Brahmā lalāṭa-stho Rudro vakshasi chābhavat | loka-pālāḥ bhujeshv āsann Agnir āsyād ajāyata | Ādityāś chaiva Sādhyāś cha Vasavo 'thāśvināv api | Marutaś cha sahendreṇa Viśve devāś tathaiva cha | babhūvus chaika[215]-rūpāṇi Yaksha-Gandharva-Rakshasām | prādurāstaṁ tathā dorbhyāṁ Sankarshaṇa-Dhananjayau | dakshiṇe 'thārjyuno dhanvī halī Rāmaś cha savyataḥ | Bhīmo Yudhishṭhiraś chaiva Mādrī-putrau cha pṛishṭhataḥ | Andhakāḥ Vṛishṇayaś chaiva Pradyumna-pramukhās tataḥ | agre babhūvuḥ Kṛishṇasya samudyata-mahāyudhāḥ | śankha-chakra-gadā-śakti-śārṅga-lāṅgala-nandakāḥ | adriśyantodyatāny eva sarva-praharaṇāni cha | nānā-bāhushu Kṛishṇasya dīpyamānāni sarvaśaḥ | ityādi.

"Being thus addressed, the heroic Keśava, slayer of hostile bands, thus addressed Duryodhana, son of Dhṛitarāshṭra: 'Since, Suyodhana, thou, in thy delusion, regardest me as if I were alone, and, O fool, seekest to overcome and confine me, [know that] here are all the Pāṇḍavas, the Andhakas, and the Vṛishṇis, as well as the Ādityas, Rudras, and Vasus, together with the rishis.' Having thus spoken, Keśava, slayer of hostile heroes, laughed aloud. As the mighty descendant of Śūra [Kṛishṇa] smiled, the gods, wearing the appearance of lightning, of the size of a thumb, and luminous as fire, issued forth from him. Brahmā occupied his forehead, Rudra was produced on his chest, the guardians of the world appeared on his arms, and Agni sprang from his mouth. The Ādityas, too, and the Sādhyas, Vasus, Aśvins, Maruts, and all the gods along with Indra were produced, and also the forms of the Yakshas, Gandharvas, and Rākshasas. Sankarshaṇa and Dhananjaya also were manifested from his arms, Arjuna armed with a bow from his right, and Rāma holding a plough from his left, Yudhishṭhira and Bhīma, the sons of Mādrī, from his back. Next Andhakas and Vṛishṇis, headed by Pradyumna, arose on his front, with their weapons ready. A shell, discus, club, spear, bow, plough, and sword, were seen prepared, and all weapons, gleaming in every form on the different arms of Kṛishṇa."

[215] Quere, may not chaiva be the proper reading?

In the next passage, taken from the Karṇa-parvan also, Duryodhana, and other warriors on his side, put themselves on the same level as Kṛishṇa (except in one place, vv. 1625 ff.). It is there related (vv. 1265 ff.) that Karṇa promised to Duryodhana to encounter and slay Arjuna, or be slain by him. Karṇa says, however, that in some respects he is inferior to Arjuna; as, for instance, in not having such a charioteer as Arjuna had in Govinda (Kṛishṇa) (v. 1302: Sārathis tasya Govindo mama tādṛiṅ na vidyate); while in other respects he regards himself as having the advantage (v. 1304). As, then, Kṛishṇa, creator of the world, preserves the car of Arjuna (Kṛishṇaś cha srashṭā jagato rathaṁ tam abhirakshati[216]), if, in like manner, Śalya, king of the Madras, the ornament of the battle-field, who is equal to Śauri (Kṛishṇa) and, as well as Dāśārha, (Kṛishṇa) who knows a horse's heart, is skilled in horses, will act as his charioteer, Karṇa thinks the victory of Duryodhana's side will be certain (v. 1308: Ayaṁ tu sadṛiśaḥ Śaureḥ Śalyaḥ samiti-śobhanaḥ | sārathyaṁ yadi me kuryād dhruvas te vijayo bhavet | . . . . 1311: Evam abhyadhikaḥ Pārthāt bhavishyāmi guṇair aham | Śalyo 'py abhyadhikaḥ Kṛishṇād Arjunād api chāpy aham | yathā 'śva-hṛidayaṁ veda Dāśārhaḥ para-

[216] If the words srashṭā jagataḥ, "creator of the world," are not an interpolation, it is not easy to perceive how Karṇa could have regarded Kṛishṇa as his equal, as he would never have thought of calling Śalya, or any other of his brother warriors, the creator of the world.

vīra-hā | tathā S'alyo 'pi jānīte haya-jnānaṁ mahārathaḥ |) Duryodhana then goes to S'alya, and asks him to act as charioteer to Karṇa, saying that he (S'alya) was equal to Kṛishṇa, that there was no other person who could drive Karṇa but himself; and that Brahmā had fulfilled the same office to Mahādeva (v. 1328 f.: Sārathyaṁ rathināṁ śreshṭha praṇayāt kartum arhasi | tvayi yantari Rādheyo vidvisho me vijeshyate | abhīshūṇāṁ hi Karṇasya grahītā 'nyo na vidyate | ṛite hi tvām mahābhāga Vāsudeva-samaṁ yudhi | sa pāhi sarvathā Karṇaṁ yathā Brahmā Maheśvaram |). S'alya, however, is very much offended (v. 1354 f.) that a person of his dignity should be asked to undertake the office of charioteer, and boasts that he is superior to Karṇa, and could alone destroy their enemies. He points to his thick arms, which would smite like a thunderbolt, and asserts that he could by his own strength cleave asunder the earth, scatter the mountains, and dry up the seas (v. 1361: Paśya pīnau mama bhujau vajra-saṁhananopamau | . . 1363: Dārayeyam mahīṁ kṛitsnāṁ vikireyaṁ cha parvatān | S'oshayeyaṁ samudrāṁś cha tejasā svena pārthiva |). He will not brook to undertake the inferior office of driving a person who is his own inferior[217] (v. 1365: Kasmād yunakshi sārathye nīchasyādhirathe raṇe | na mām adhuri rājendra niyoktuṁ tvam ihārhasi | na hi pāpīyasaḥ śreyān bhūtvā preshyatvam utsahe |). He threatens, in consequence of the insult thus offered to him, to go home (v. 1375); and accordingly rises and goes, but is followed by Duryodhana, who endeavours to soothe him by saying that he did not regard Karṇa as superior to him (v. 1379: Na Karṇo 'bhyadikas tvattaḥ), but considered Karṇa to be superior to Arjuna; while the world regarded him (S'alya) as superior to Kṛishṇa, whom he excelled in strength, as well as in knowledge of horses and their dispositions, (v. 1384: Manye chābhyadhikaṁ S'alya guṇaiḥ Karṇaṁ Dhananjayāt | bhavantaṁ Vāsudevāch cha loko 'yam iti manyate | Karṇo hy abhyadhikaḥ Pārthād astrair eva nararshabha | bhavān abhyadhikaḥ Kṛishṇād aśva-jnāne bale tathā | yathā 'śvahṛidayaṁ veda Vāsudevo mahāmanāḥ | dviguṇaṁ tvaṁ tathā vetsi Madrarājeśvarātmaja |). S'alya is flattered by his being reckoned superior to Kṛishṇa, and agrees to act as charioteer to Karṇa, vv. 1387 ff.: Yad mām bravīshi Gāndhāre

[217] He regarded Karṇa as what he was generally supposed to be, a Sūta, or charioteer, by caste (sūta-putrasya, v. 1374).

madhye sainyasya Kaurava | viśishṭaṁ Devakīputrāt prītimāṉ asmy ahaṁ tvayi | esha sārathyam ātishṭhe Rādheyasya yaśasvinaḥ | yudhyataḥ Pāṉḍavāgryeṇa yathā tvaṁ vīra manyase | samayaś cha hi me vīra kaśchid Vaikartanam prati | utsṛijeyaṁ yathā-śraddham ahaṁ vācho 'sya sannidhau | Sanjayaḥ uvācha | tatheti rājan putras te saha Karṇena Bhārata | abravīd Madra-rājasya matam Bharata-sattama | "I am pleased with thee, Kaurava, since in the midst of the army thou declarest me to be superior to the son of Devakī. I undertake to be charioteer to the renowned Karṇa when he fights with the chief of the Pāṉḍavas, as thou, hero, thinkest [I ought to do]. And now that I have entered into a certain agreement with Karṇa, let me candidly excuse to him the words I have used." Sañjaya proceeded: "Thy son (i.e. Duryodhana) having assented, declared to Karṇa the resolution of the king of the Madras (Śalya)."

Though he had thus gained his point, by persuading Śalya to act as charioteer to Karṇa, Duryodhana is nevertheless represented as proceeding, in the next three sections, the 33rd–35th, vv. 1391 ff., (which, for reasons to be afterwards assigned, I regard as probably interpolated,) to repeat to Śalya an ancient story, telling how Brahmā had formerly done duty as charioteer to Mahādeva in a war between the gods and Asuras. In this war the gods, it is related, were at first the victors (1394). The three sons of the Asura Tāraka thereupon performed severe austerities, which induced Brahmā to grant them a boon (1397). They asked that they might become indestructible by any being whatever, which, however, Brahmā declined to grant, as immortality, he said, was not an universal attribute (1399). They then asked that they should occupy three castles, and from thence move about the earth at will, and that after a thousand years these three castles should become united, and that they themselves should only be destructible by the deity who should be able to overthrow the castles with a single arrow (1402 ff.: Vayam purāṉi trīṉy eva samāsthāya mahīm imām | vicharishyāmo loke 'smin . . . . tato varsha-sahasre tu sameshyāmaḥ parasparam | ekībhāvaṁ gamishyaṉti purāṉy etāni chānagha | samāgatāni chaitāni yo hanyād bhagavaṁs tadā | ekeshuṉā deva-varaḥ sa no mṛityur bhavishyati |). Brahmā granted this boon, and the Asura Maya built them three castles, one of gold, in heaven; a second of silver, in the air; and a third of black iron, on earth[218] (1406 ff.), which the three Asura kings above mentioned severally occupied, and where innumerable hosts of formidable demons were collected. Maya, by his magical power, gave them everything that any of them wished (1415): and Hari, the son of Tārakāksha, obtained as a boon from Brahmā that there should be a pond within their castle, into which, when any Asuras slain in battle were thrown, they should be resuscitated and become stronger than ever (1418 ff.). Armed with all these powers, the Asuras harassed the worlds, putting to flight the celestial hosts, and destroying the gardens of the gods, and the hermitages of the rishis (1421 ff.). Indra attacked the castles of the Asuras with his thunderbolts, but without effect (1427). He then went with the other gods to consult Brahmā about the means of overthrowing the titans (1429 ff.). Brahmā replied that the castles could only be destroyed by a single arrow, and that this could only be effected by Mahādeva (1434), to whom they should apply. The deities, then, headed by Brahmā himself, went to supplicate Mahādeva, who gives security amid alarms, the soul of all things, by whom the universe is pervaded, who, through particular austerities, knows the "yoga" and the "sānkhya" of himself, (or of spirit,) and whose spirit is always in subjection,—(they went to supplicate him) practising rites of austerity, repeating the eternal Veda, and uttering awful or fierce hymns, (1437 ff.: Tapo-niyamam āsthāya gṛiṇanto brahma śāśvatam | . . . . tushṭuvur vāgbhir ugrābhir bhayeshv abhaya-daṁ nṛipa | sarvātmānam mahātmānāṁ yenāptaṁ sarvam ātmanā | tapo-viśeshair vividhair yogaṁ yo veda chātmanaḥ | yaḥ sānkhyam ātmano vetti yasya chātmā vaśe sadā |). They beheld Mahādeva, to whom a variety of other honorific epithets are applied, such as "the essence of all beings, the unborn, the lord of the world" (1442: sarva-bhūtamayaṁ dṛishṭvā taṁ ajaṁ jagataḥ patim|). Mahādeva received them smiling, and invites them to state their wishes (1444). They then recite a number of his epithets (1445 ff.), and Brahmā replies on their behalf (1455 ff.) that he himself, who had obtained from Mahādeva his rank of Prajāpaṭi, had bestowed a boon on the Dānavas, that they had in consequence transgressed all bounds, and that now there was no one but Mahādeva who could destroy them,—which he was therefore implored to do. Mahādeva answers (1459) that he himself alone could not destroy them, as they were strong, but that, with the aid of half his strength, they themselves would be able to conquer their enemies. They answered that they could not sustain half of his strength (vibhartuṁ tava tejo 'rdhaṁ na śakshyāmaḥ), but proposed that he should undertake the work, aided by half of their strength. To this Mahādeva consented, and became stronger than all the gods, and was thenceforward called Mahādeva, or "the great god," (ardhaṁ ādāya sarveshāṁ tejasā 'bhyadhiko 'bhavat | sa tu devo balenāsīt sarvebhyo balavattaraḥ | Mahādevaḥ iti khyātas tataḥ prabhṛiti Śankaraḥ). Mahādeva then (1468) desired the gods to provide him with a bow and arrows, and a chariot. The gods promised to provide a chariot which should be composed of all the forms of the universe (1469: mūrtīḥ sarvāḥ samādhāya trailokyasya tatas tataḥ | rathaṁ te kalpayishyāmaḥ). The composition of the car, formed by Viśvakarman and the gods, is then described at great length (vv. 1471–1492). Vishṇu, Soma, and Agni became different parts of Mahādeva's bow and arrow; the earth became his chariot, the mountain Mandara its axle; and the great river, the regions, the constellations, the Kṛita age, the serpent Vāsuki, the Himālaya and Vindhya mountains, plants, the sun and moon, day and night, various goddesses, duty, truth, the vashaṭkāra, the gāyatrī, etc., formed portions of the car, or of its appurtenances. Mahādeva's weapons and equipments are then specified (1495 ff.). At verse 1503 it is repeated that "Vishṇu, Agni, and Soma formed his arrow; for all the world," it is added, "is formed of Agni and Soma, and is said to be composed of Vishṇu, and Vishṇu is the soul of Mahādeva of boundless power.[219] Hence they could not abide the bow, or the contact of the bowstring of Hara. In that arrow the terrible god, dark-blue, and dusky in hue, clad in an antelope's skin, hurled forth the fire of wrath, of fierce fury, intolerable, and sprung from the rage of Bhṛigu and Angiras. . . . . 1507. He is the constant preserver of virtuous, and destroyer of wicked, men. The divine Sthāṇu (Mahādeva) shines forth distinguished by these inherent qualities, which are destructive, fearful in power, fearful in form, and rapid as thought. This whole universe, movable and immovable, existing contained in his members, shone forth, wonderful to behold." (Ishuś chāpy abhavad Vishṇur Jvalanaḥ Somaḥ eva cha | Agnī-Somaṁ jagat kṛitsnaṁ Vaishṇavaṁ chochyate jagat | Vishṇuś chātmā bhagavato [219] Can these words be a Vaishṇava addition to the passage?

[218] See above p. 203; and the 2nd vol. of this work, pp. 378 ff.

Bhavasyāmita-tejasaḥ | tasmād dhanur jyā-saṁsparśaṁ na vishehur Harasya te | tasmin śare tigma-manyum mumochāsahyam Īśvaraḥ | Bhṛigv-Angiro-manyu-bhavaṁ krodhāgnim atidussaham | sa nīla-lohito dhūmraḥ kṛittivāsāḥ bhayankaraḥ | . . . . 1507: Nityaṁ trātā cha hantā cha dharmādharmāśritān narān | pramāthibhir bhīma-balair bhīma-rūpair manojavaiḥ | vibhāti bhagavān Sthāṇus tair evātma-guṇair vṛitaḥ | tasyāngāni samāśritya sthitaṁ viśvam idaṁ jagat | jangamājangamaṁ rājan śuśubhe 'dbhuta-darśanam |)

Taking the arrow produced from Soma, Vishṇu, and Agni, Mahādeva mounted the car which had been made for him (1510 ff.). He then smilingly asked (1515) who was to be his charioteer. The gods answered that any one whom he should appoint would undertake that office. He then said that the god who was greater than he (mattaḥ śreshṭhataro hi yaḥ) should be made his charioteer. The gods next went to Brahmā, and asked him to appoint one (1520), expressing an opinion that he himself was the only person who was fit for the office (1526). Brahmā consented (1530 ff.). Mahādeva is again represented as mounting the car, with the arrow produced from Vishṇu, Soma, and Agni in his hand (1535). He then sets out,[220] and arrives at the triple castle of the Asuras (1551), when some of the Asuras are destroyed by the roaring of his bull (1553), and others come forth to battle. Mahādeva becomes insensate with rage. The three worlds tremble. The chariot begins to sink from the agitation of Soma, Agni, and Vishṇu in the arrow, when it is being fitted on the string, and from the movement of Brahmā and Mahādeva. Vishṇu then issues from a portion of the arrow (1556), takes the form of a bull, and raises up the chariot. Mahādeva again fits his arrow on the string (1562), and discharges it against the triple castle (1567), which falls to the ground, while the Asuras are burnt up and thrown by Mahādeva into the western ocean. The gods praise Mahādeva and depart (1572).

Duryodhana now (1575 ff.) makes his application of this legend by exhorting Śalya to follow Brahmā's example, and act as charioteer to [220] In vv. 1545 ff. it is said that the rishis praised Mahādeva, and increased his strength (rishayas tatra devīśaṁ stuvanto bahubhiḥ stavaiḥ | tejaś chāsmai vardhayanto rājann āsan punaḥ punaḥ). This is a pure Vedic touch, the same power of imparting strength to the gods by their praises being occasionally asserted of the bards in the Rig-veda. See the fifth volume of this work, p. 91. In most of the texts there cited, however, it is perhaps only meant that the gods were gratified by the praises addressed to them.

Karṇa. Śalya, he adds, is superior to Kṛishṇa, Karṇa, and Arjuna, and as Karṇa resembled Mahādeva in fighting, so Śalya resembled Brahmā in guiding [a chariot], etc. To supply additional motives for compliance, he then (1581 ff.) goes on to tell Śalya another story about Paraśurāma performing austerity to propitiate Mahādeva and obtain celestial arms. Mahādeva appears to him, and tells him he shall obtain arms when he has qualified himself by purification to receive them. Paraśurāma renews his austerities and religious ceremonies (1591), and is at length appointed by Mahādeva to slay the Daityas who had been harassing the gods (1599). He successfully accomplishes this task (1806), and receives celestial arms from Mahādeva. Paraśurāma had, as Duryodhana goes on to say, taught the divine science of archery to Karṇa (1613), which proves that Karṇa is free from sin; and Karṇa is not, as Duryodhana believes, a Sūta or charioteer by birth, but a son of one of the gods, born in a Kshatriya family. For how could a doe give birth to a tiger resembling the sun (katham āditya-sadṛiśam mṛigī vyāghraṁ janishyati | 1617)? Duryodhana then recurs to the legend of Brahmā becoming Mahādeva's charioteer, and renews his exhortation to Śalya to perform the same office to Karṇa. Śalya appears now to waver in his determination, formerly expressed, to comply with Duryodhana's request, as he replies (1625) that he himself had often heard this story before; and that Kṛishṇa also had no doubt heard of it, as he knows the future and the past, and that he had for that reason consented to be the charioteer of Arjuna. And, Śalya adds, if Karṇa should slay Arjuna, Kṛishṇa would himself fight, and armed with the shell, discus, and club, burn up the whole of Duryodhana's army, and no prince would be able to stand before him among his opponents when he was incensed, (v. 1629 ff.: Yadi hanyāch cha Kaunteyaṁ Sūta-putraḥ kathanchaṇa | dṛishṭvā Pārthaṁ hi nihataṁ svayaṁ yotsyati Keśavaḥ | śankha-chakra-gadā-pāṇir dhakshyate tava vāhinīm | na chāpi tasya kruddhasya Vārshṇeyasya mahātmanaḥ | sthāsyate pratyanīkeshu kaśchid atra nṛipas tava). Duryodhana in reply expatiates on the eminent prowess of Karṇa, and of Śalya himself: (1643) Tvam śalya-bhūtaḥ śatrūṇām avishahyaḥ parākrame | tatas tvam uchyase rājan Śalyaḥ ity ari-sūdana | tava bāhu-balam prāpya na śekuḥ sarva-Sātvatāḥ | tava bāhu-balād rājan kintu Kṛishṇo balādhikaḥ | yathā hi Kṛishṇena balaṁ dhāryaṁ vai Phālgune hate | tathā Karṇā- tyayībhāve tvayā dhāryam mahad balam | kimarthaṁ samare sainyaṁ Vāsudevo nyavārayet (sic) | kimarthaṁ cha bhavān sainyaṁ na hanishyati Mārisha | "Thou art a spear (śalya) to [pierce] thine enemies, irresistible in valour: hence, O king, destroyer of thy foes, thou art called S'alya.[221] Feeling the power of thy arm, all the Sātvatas could not [resist]. But [it is said that] Kṛishṇa is superior in force to the strength of thy arm. Just as great strength is to be exhibited by Kṛishṇa, if Arjuna were killed; so is great strength to be put forth by thee, if Karṇa were slain. Why should Kṛishṇa withstand [our] army? and why shouldst not thou slay the [enemy's] host?" S'alya then answers (1648 ff.) in nearly the same words[222] which had formerly been assigned to him in vv. 1387-9: "I am pleased with thee, bestower of honour, since before the army thou declarest me to be superior to the son of Devakī. I undertake to be charioteer to the renowned Karṇa," etc. This repetition of the same speech of S'alya at the close of the episode regarding Mahādeva's conquest of the Asuras with Brahmā for his charioteer, and Paraśurāma's acquisition of celestial weapons, renders it probable, as I have already said, that this episode has been subsequently interpolated. As S'alya had already consented, in vv. 1387 ff., to do duty as Karṇa's charioteer, it was quite unnecessary to detail at great length the legend of Brahmā and Mahādeva, which had been already briefly alluded to in verse 1330, and which is merely followed by a renewed expression of S'alya's willingness to comply with the request of Karṇa and Duryodhana.

IV. In various parts of the Mahābhārata Kṛishṇa and Arjuna are singularly represented as having formerly existed in the persons of two rishis, Nārāyaṇa and Nara,[223] who always lived and acted together. A

[221] In verse 1381 the same thing had been said in nearly the same words: S'alya-bhūtas tu śatrūṇāṁ yasmāt tvam yudhi mānada | tasmāt S'alyo hi te nāma kathyate pṛithivī-tale | The repetition of this idea is an additional argument in proof of the probable interpolation of the passage between v. 1389 and v. 1648.

[222] The only difference of reading in the two passages is, that in the first line of the later passage the words agre sainyasya mānada, "before the army, conferrer of honour," are substituted for madhye sainyasya Kaurava, "in the midst of the army, O Kaurava."

[223] In the Vāmana-purāṇa, sect. 6, quoted in Prof. Aufrecht's Catalogue, p. 45*b*, it is stated that Dharma with a divine body was the heart-born son of Brahmā, that his (Dharma's) wife was Ahiṁsā, and that she bore to him Hari and Kṛishṇa, and Nara and Nārāyaṇa, of whom the two former were devoted to the practice of the Yoga similar close union exists between the two heroes in the various transactions narrated in the great epic. Their earlier connexion will appear from the following passages,[224] in which, however, these two rishis are always represented as possessed of supernatural or divine powers.

It is related in the Vana-parvan (vv. 461 ff.) that Kṛishṇa, having gone with other friends of the Pāṇḍus to visit them after they had retired into the forest, expressed great indignation at the way in which they had been treated by Duryodhana and his party. Arjuna (one of the Pāṇḍus), with the view of pacifying Kṛishṇa, recounts (vv. 471 ff.) his marvellous deeds in former births, his austerities, his slaughter of the Daityas and Dānavas (478), his various forms (480), his three strides as the son of Aditi (484),[225] and his destruction of various enemies (487 ff.); and then proceeds thus (vv. 496 ff.):

Yugānte sarva-bhūtāni sankshipya Madhusūdana | ātmanaivātmasāt kṛitvā jagad āsīḥ parantapa | yugādau tava Vārshṇeya nābhi-padmād ajāyata | Brahmā charāchara-gurur yasyedaṁ sakalaṁ jagat | taṁ hantum udyatau ghorau Dānavau Madhu-kaiṭabhau | tayor vyatikramaṁ dṛishṭvā kruddhasya bhavato Hareḥ | lalāṭāj jātavān S'ambhuḥ śūla-pāṇis trilochanaḥ | itthaṁ tāv api deveśau tvach-chharīra-samudbhavau | tvan-niyoga-karāv etāv iti me Nārado 'bravīt | tathā Nārāyaṇa purā kratubhir bhūri-dakshiṇaiḥ | ishṭavāṁs tvam mahāsatraṁ Kṛishṇa Chaitrarathe vane | naivam pūrve nāpare vā karishyanti kṛitāni vā | yāni karmāṇi deva tvam bālaḥ eva mahābalaḥ | kṛitavāṇ Puṇḍarīkāksha Baladeva-sahāyavān | Kailāsa-bhavane chāpi brāhmaṇair nyavasaḥ saha | Vaiśampāyanaḥ uvācha | evam uktvā mahātmānam ātmā Kṛishṇasya Pāṇḍavaḥ | tūshṇīm āsīt tataḥ Pārtham ity uvācha Janārdanaḥ | mamaiva tvaṁ tavaivāhaṁ ye madīyās tavaiva te | yas tvāṁ dveshṭi sa māṁ dveshṭi yas tvām anu sa mām anu | Naras tvam asi durdharsha Harir Nārāyaṇo hy aham | kāle lokam imam prāptau Nara-Nārāyaṇāv ṛishī | ananyaḥ Pārtha mattas tvaṁ tvattaś chāhaṁ tathaiva cha | nāvayor antaram śakyaṁ veditum Bharatarshabha |

"'At the end of the mundane period (yuga), thou, O Madhusūdana, vexer of thy foes, having caused all created things to collapse, and by thyself made them subject to thyself, wast the world. At the commencement of the yuga, O Vārshṇeya (Kṛishṇa), Brahmā, the chief of things movable and immovable, whose [is] all this world, sprang from the lotus issuing from thy navel. Two horrible Dānavas, Madhu and Kaiṭabha, were ready to slay him. From the forehead of Hari, who became incensed when he saw their transgression, was produced Sambhu (Mahādeva), wielding the trident, and three-eyed. Thus even those two lords of the gods (Brahmā and Mahādeva) are sprung from thy (Kṛishṇa's) body, and they execute thy commands,—this Nārada declared to me. So, too, O Kṛishṇa, Nārāyaṇa, thou didst formerly celebrate a great sacrifice in the Chaitraratha forest, with oblations and many gifts. The ancients [have] not [done], nor shall those who are to come do, the deeds which thou didst, Puṇḍarīkāksha, even when a child, mighty in power, accompanied by Baladeva. And thou didst dwell with the Brāhmans in the abode of Kailāsa.' Having thus addressed that great being, the Pāṇḍava (Arjuna, who was) the soul of Kṛishṇa, became silent. Then Janārdana (Kṛishṇa) thus addressed the son of Pṛithā: 'Thou art mine, and I am thine;[226] those who are mine are thine also. He who hates thee hates me; he who loves (lit. follows, or favours) thee loves me. Thou, invincible hero, art Nara, and I am Hari Nārāyaṇa: in due time we came into this world, the rishis Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Thou, son of Pṛithā, are not different from me, nor, in like manner, I from thee; no distinction can be conceived between us.'"

(Hṛidbhavo Brahmaṇo yo 'sau Dharmo divyavapuḥ sadā | tasya bhāryā tv Ahiṁsā tu tasyām ajanayat sutau | Hariṁ Kṛishnaṁ cha devarshe Nara-Nārāyaṇau tathā | yogābhyāsa-ratau nityaṁ Hari-Kṛishṇau babhūvatuḥ).

[224] See also the extract from the Droṇa-parvan, translated above, p. 185.

[225] See above, p. 136.

Again, it is related in the Vana-parvan that, with the view of obtaining celestial weapons, Arjuna, at the suggestion of Indra (vv. 1513 ff.), went northward, to the top of the Himālaya, to see Mahādeva (vv. 1526 ff.) Arrived there, he performs austerity. The rishis, not knowing his object, are alarmed, and go to tell Mahādeva (vv. 1543 ff.), who assures them that there is no cause for apprehension, as Arjuna cherishes no ambitious designs. Mahādeva then takes his bow and arrows, and assuming the form of a Kirāta (barbarous mountaineer), approaches Arjuna (vv. 1551 ff.). At that moment a [226] The mutual attachment of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, or Arjuna and Kṛishṇa, may therefore be quoted as an Indian parallel to the renowned friendships which are already proverbial in the western world, viz. those of David and Jonathan, Pylades and Orestes, Damon and Pythias.

Dānava, in the form of a boar, is meditating an attack upon Arjuna, who prepares to shoot him with his arrows. The Kirāta desires Arjuna to allow him to shoot the Dānava, as he had been the first to take aim; but Arjuna will not consent; and they both shoot together, and kill the boar. Arjuna addresses the Kirāta, and complains that he had acted in an unsportsmanlike manner (na hy esho mṛigayā-dharmo yas tvayā 'dya kṛito mayi), and that he should therefore kill him. The Kirāta replies that he had aimed first, and had killed the Dānava, and would kill Arjuna also. Mahādeva, in the form of the Kirāta, and Arjuna then fight together (vv. 1582 ff.) with a succession of weapons, arrows, swords, trees, stones, etc., till at length Arjuna is squeezed by his opponent, and falls exhausted (v. 1613). He, however, revives, and worships his enemy, falling at his feet. Mahādeva expresses admiration of Arjuna's prowess, and promises to give him an irresistible weapon which he is fit to wield. The narrative then proceeds (vv. 1622 ff.): Tato devam Mahādevaṁ Giriśaṁ śūlapāṇinam | dadarśa Phālgunas tatra saha devyā mahādyutim | sa jānubhyām mahīṁ gatvā śirasā praṇipatya cha | prasādayāmāsa Haram Pārthaḥ para-puranjayaḥ | Arjunaḥ uvācha | "Kapardin sarvadeveśa Bhaga-netra-nipātana | deva-deva Mahādeva nīla-grīva jaṭā-dhara | kāraṇānāncha paramaṁ jāne tvāṁ Tryambakaṁ vibhum | devānāncha gatiṁ deva tvat-prasūtam idaṁ jagat | ajeyas tvam tribhir lokaiḥ sa-devāsura-mānushaiḥ | Śivāya Vishṇu-rūpāya Vishṇave Śiva-rūpiṇe | Dakshayajña-vināśāya Hari-Rudrāya vai namaḥ | lalāṭākshāya Sarvāya mīḍhushe śūlā-pāṇaye | pināka-goptre sūryāya mārjālīyāya vedhase | prasādaye tvām bhagavan sarva-bhūta-maheśvara | gaṇeśaṁ jagataḥ śambhuṁ loka-kāraṇa-kāraṇam | pradhāna-purushātītam paraṁ sūkshmataram Haram |

"Then Phālguna (Arjuna) beheld the god Mahādeva, Giriśa, bearer of the trident, resplendent, together with his goddess. Falling on the ground on his knees, and bowing his head, the son of Pṛithā, conqueror of hostile cities, propitiated Hara (Mahādeva) in these words: 'God with the spirally-braided hair, lord of all the gods, extinguisher of Bhaga's eyes, god of gods, Mahādeva (the great god), blue-necked, wearer of matted hair, I know thee to be of causes the supreme, Tryambaka, the mighty, the refuge of the gods. From thee this world has been produced. Thou art invincible by the three worlds, including the gods, Asuras, and men. Adoration be to Śiva in the form of Vishṇu, to Vishṇu in the form of S'iva, to the destroyer of Daksha's sacrifice, to Hari-Rudra, to him with the frontal eye, to Sarva, the beneficent, the wielder of the trident, the bearer of the bow, the sun, the Mārjalīya,[227] the disposer. I propitiate thee, divine lord of all creatures, lord of troops, benefactor of the world, cause of the causes of the world (i.e. ultimate creator of the immediate creators), who transcendest Pradhāna and Purusha (matter and spirit), the supreme, most subtile, Hara.'"

Mahādeva then embraces Arjuna, and says to him:

1637 ff.—Devadevaḥ uvacha | Naras tvam pūrva-dehe vai Nārāyaṇa-sahāyavān | Badaryāṁ taptavān ugraṁ tapo varshāyutān bahūn | tvayi vā pāramaṁ tejo Vishṇau vā purushottame | yuvābhyām purushāgryābhyāṁ tejasā dhāryate jagat | S'akrābhisheke sumahad dhanur jalada-niḥsvanam | pragṛihya dānavāḥ śāstās tvayā Kṛishṇena cha prabho ityādi | "Thou wast Nara in a former body, and with Nārāyaṇa for thy companion, didst perform dreadful austerity at Badari for many myriads of years. Either in thee is the highest power, or in Vishṇu the supreme Purusha. By you twain, the chief of men (or Purushas), through your power, the world is upheld. At the inauguration of S'akra (Indra), the Dānavas were chastized by thee and Kṛishṇa, when thou hadst grasped a great bow resounding like the clouds."

Mahādeva then offers Arjuna the choice of a boon. Arjuna asks the Pāśupata weapon (v. 1643), which Mahādeva gives him (v. 1650), though he cautions him against discharging it rashly, as it might destroy the whole world. Arjuna accordingly receives the weapon (v. 1656).

Again, in the Udyoga-parvan (vv. 1917 ff.) it is related that Bhīshma informed Duryodhana that on one occasion the gods of different classes came to Brahmā, and the narrative then proceeds (vv. 1920 ff.):

Namaskṛityopajagmus te loka-vṛiddham Pitāmaham | parivārya cha viśveśam paryāsata divaukasaḥ | teshām manaś cha tejaśchāpy ādadānāv ivaujasā | pūrva-devau vyatikrāntau Nara-Nārāyaṇāv ṛishī | Vṛihaspatis

[227] This word is explained in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon as a spot to the right of the altar, where the sacrificial vessels are cleansed. It is mentioned in Sāyaṇa's commentary on R. V. i, 1, 4: and (as Prof. Aufrecht has pointed out to me) it occurs in the Vāj. Sanh. v. 32, where the commentator defines it as the place where the (sacrificial) vessels are washed (mārjalīyaḥ | tatra hi pātrāṇi prakshālyānte).

tu paprachha Brahmāṇaṁ kāv imāv iti | bhavantaṁ nopatishṭhete tau naḥ śaṁsa Pitāmaha | Brahmā uvācha | yāv etau pṛithivīṁ dyāncha bhāsayantau tapasvinau | jvalantau rochamanau cha vyāpyāsītau (-nau?) mahābalau | Nara-Nārāyaṇāv etau lokāl lokaṁ samāsthitau | ūrjitau svena tapasā mahāsattva-parākramau | etau hi karmaṇā lokaṁ nandayāmāsatur dhruvam | dvidhā-bhūtau mahā-prajnau viddhi brahman parantapau | asurāṇāṁ vināśāya deva-gandharva-pūjitau | Vaiśampāyanaḥ uvācha | jagāma Śakras tach chhrutvā yatra tau tepatas tapaḥ | sārdhaṁ devagaṇaiḥ sarvair Vṛihaspati-purogamaiḥ | tadā devāsure yuddhe bhaye jāte divaukasām | ayāchata mahātmānau Nara-Nārāyaṇau varam | tāv abrutāṁ vṛiṇīshveti tadā Bharata-sattama | athaitāv abravīch chhakraḥ sahyaṁ naḥ kriyatām iti | tatas tau Śakrum abrūtāṁ karishyāvo yad ichhasi | tābhyāncha sahitaḥ Śakro vijigye daitya-dānavān | Naraḥ Indrasya saṅgrāme hatvā śatrūn parantapaḥ | Paulomān Kālakanjāṁścha sahasrāṇi śatāni cha | esha bhrānte rathe tishṭhan bhallenāpāharach chhiraḥ | Jambhasya grasamāṇasya tadā hy Arjunam āhave | esha pāre samudrasya Hiraṇyapuram ārujat | jitvāshashṭiṁ sahasrāṇi Nivātakavachān raṇe | esha devān sahendreṇa jitvā para-puranjayaḥ | atarpayad mahābāhur Arjuno Jātavedasam | Nārāyaṇas tathaivātra bhūyaśo 'nyān jaghāna ha | evam etau mahā-vīryau tau paśyata samāgatau | Vāsudevārjunau vīrau samavetau mahārathau | Nara-Nārāyaṇau devau pūrva-devāv iti śrutiḥ | ajeyau mānushe loke sendrair api surāsuraiḥ | esha Nārāyaṇaḥ Kṛishṇaḥ Phālgunaś cha Naraḥ smṛitaḥ | Nārāyaṇo Naraś chaiva sattvam ekaṁ dvidhā-kṛitam | etau hi karmaṇā lokān aśnuvāte 'kshayān dhruvān | tatra tatraiva jāyete yuddha-kāle punaḥ punaḥ | tasmāt karmaiva kartavyam iti hovācha Nāradaḥ | etad hi sarvam āchashṭa Vṛishṇi-chakrasya vedavit | śankha-chakra-gadā-hastam yadā drakshyasi Keśavam | paryādadāṇaṁ chāstrāṇi bhīma-dhanvānam Arjunam | sanātanau mahātmānau kṛishṇāv eka-rathe sthitau | Duryodhana tadā tāta smartāsi vachanam mama |

"Doing obeisance, the gods approached the Progenitor, the chief (or ancient) of the worlds; and encompassing, they sat around the lord of all. The two ancient and surpassing gods, the rishis Nara and Nārāyaṇa, deprived them, as it were, of thought and of strength by their splendour. Vṛihaspati inquired of Brahmā, 'Tell us, O Progenitor, who these two are who do not approach thee.' Brahmā said: 'These devotees of mighty strength, burning and shining, who sit pervading and illuminating the earth and the sky, these are Nara and Nārāyaṇa, who have travelled from world to world, strong by their own austerity, of great dignity and valour. These two have perpetually gladdened the world by their deeds. Know, O Priest, that these, destroyers of their foes, of great intelligence, adored of gods and Gandharvas, have become twain for the destruction of the Asuras.' Having heard this, Indra, accompanied by all the hosts of gods, headed by Vṛihaspati, went to the place where these two devotees were performing austerity. Alarm having been at that time excited among the celestials by a war between the gods and Asuras, he (Indra) begged of the great Nara and Nārāyaṇa a boon. They replied, 'Choose.' Then Indra said, 'Let us be delivered.' They answered Indra, 'We will do what thou desirest.' And with their assistance Indra conquered the Daityas and Dānavas. Nara, the vexer of foes, having slain in battle the enemies of Indra, thousands and hundreds of Paulomas and Kālakanjas,—he, standing in a whirling chariot, cut off the head of Jambha,[228] who was swallowing up Arjuna in battle. He demolished Hiraṇyapura (or the city of gold), on the other side of the ocean, having slain in battle sixty thousand Nivātakavachas. The large-armed Arjuna, conqueror of hostile cities, having, along with Indra, overcome the gods, satiated Jātavedas (Agni,) [with his oblations]. In like manner Nārāyaṇa slew many others. Thus behold those twain arrived—those twain who are of so great strength, Vāsudeva and Arjuna, united together, riders on great cars, Nara and Nārāyaṇa, the deities, the ancient deities, as it is reported, invincible in the world of mortals even by Indra and the other gods and Asuras. This Nārāyaṇa is Kṛishṇa, and Nara is called Phālguna (Arjuna). Nārāyaṇa and Nara are one being, divided into twain. These two through their works pervade the undecaying and perpetual worlds. They are born at different places at the time of battle again and again. Wherefore Nārada said that works are to be performed. All this he (Nārada), who knew the Veda said to the army of the Vṛishṇis. When thou shalt see Keśava (Kṛishṇa) with his shell, discus and club, and Arjuna with the dreadful bow, assuming his arms, these two eternal and glorious beings, of dark complexion, mounted on one car,—then, dear Duryodhana, thou shalt remember my words." (Compare the same warning given in p. 218.)

[228] The name of a demon. It will occur again below.

It is narrated in another part of the same Udyoga-parvan (vv. 3459–3488) that, in order to persuade the Kurus to adopt moderate counsels by showing the great power of Arjuna and Kṛishṇa, Paraśu-rāma told them another story about the two rishis Nara and Nārāyaṇa. There was formerly, he says, an universal sovereign named Dambhod-bhava, who had an overweening conceit of his own prowess. Being told by his independent Brāhmans that there were two ascetics whom he could not match, viz. Nara and Nārāyaṇa, he proceeded with his army to the mountain Gandhamādana, where he found the emaciated saints, and challenged them to fight. They tried to put him off by saying that they were divested of all earthly passions, and lived in an atmosphere of peace. Dambhodbhava, however, insisted on fighting, when Nara took a handful of straws, and defied him. With these arms he neutralized all the arrows of Dambhodbhava's host, and as the straws whitened all the air, and penetrated into the eyes, ears, and noses of the assailants, Dambhodbhava was soon forced to fall at Nara's feet, and sue for peace. Being admonished by his conqueror to be more humble in future, he departed homeward, and ever after led a righteous life.

The next passage on the same subject is from the Droṇa-parvan, vv. 419 ff.:

Arjunaḥ Keśavasyātmā Kṛishṇo 'py ātmā Kirīṭinaḥ | Arjune vijayo nityaṁ Kṛishṇe kīrtiścha śāśvatī | sarveshv api cha lokeshu Bībhatsur aparājitaḥ | prādhānyenaiva bhūyishṭhaṃ ameyāḥ Keśave guṇāḥ | mohād Duryodhano Kṛishṇaṁ yo na vettīha Keśavam | mohito daiva-yogena mṛityu-pāśa-puraskṛitaḥ | na veda Kṛishṇaṁ Dāśārham Arjunaṁ chaiva Pāṇḍavam | pūrva-devau mahātmānau Nara-Nārāyaṇāv ubhau | ekāt-mānau dvidhā-bhūtau dṛiśyete mānushair bhuvi | manasā 'pi hi durdhar-shau senām etāṁ yaśasvinau | nāśayetām ihechhantau mānushatvāch cha nechhataḥ |

"Arjuna is the soul of Keśava (Kṛishṇa), and Kṛishṇa too is the soul of Kirīṭin (Arjuna). Victory abides perpetually with Arjuna, and eternal renown with Kṛishṇa. And even in all worlds Arjuna is unconquered. Through his pre-eminence there are infinite virtues in abundance in Keśava. [The reason why] Duryodhana, through infatuation, does not know Kṛishṇa, is that, deluded by destiny, and involved in the bonds of death, he does not recognize Kṛishṇa the Dāśārha, and Arjuna the Pāṇḍava. The former gods, the two mighty ones, Nara and Nārāyaṇa, though, in reality, one in nature, are by men on earth seen separated into two. These illustrious [beings], who are invincible even in imagination, could, if they desired, destroy this army, but from their humanity they do not desire it."

Again, in the Bhīshma-parvan, vv. 2932 ff., Bhīshma exhorts Duryodhana to come to terms with the Pāṇḍavas, who, he says, are invincible, in consequence of Kṛishṇa's protection. To illustrate Kṛishṇa's divine greatness, Bhīshma goes on to tell a story of his being celebrated by Brahmā in a hymn (2944 ff.), and entreated to become incarnate in the tribe of the Yadus, for the establishment of righteousness, the destruction of the Daityas, and the preservation of the world (2964 f.). Vishṇu assents to Brahmā's request, and disappears. Being then asked by the attendant gods and rishis who it was that he had just worshipped, Brahmā replies as follows (2978 ff.):

Yat tat param bhavishyancha bhavitā yachha yat param | bhūtātmā yaḥ prabhuś chaiva Brahma yach cha paraṁ padam | tenāsmi kṛita-saṁvādaḥ prasannena surarshabhāḥ | jagato 'nugrahārthāya yāchito me jagat-patiḥ | "mānushaṁ lokam ātishṭha Vāsudevaḥ iti śrutaḥ | asurāṇām badhārthāya sambhavasva mahītale | sangrāme nihatāḥ ye te daitya-dānava-rākshasāḥ | te ime nṛishu sambhūtāḥ ghora-rūpāḥ mahābalāḥ | teshām badhārtham bhagavān Nareṇa sahito balī | mānushīm yonim āsthāya charishyasi mahī-tale" | Nara-Nārāyaṇau tau tu purāṇāv ṛishi-sattamau | ajeyau hi raṇe yau tau sametair amarair api | sahitau mānushe loke sambhūtāv amita-dyutī | mūḍhās te tau na jānanti Nara-Nārāyaṇāv ṛishī | yasyāham ātmajo Brahmā sarvasya jagataḥ patiḥ | Vāsudevo 'nuneyo vaḥ sarva-loka-maheśvaraḥ | tathā manushyo 'yam iti kadāchit sura-sattamāḥ | nāvajneyo mahāvīryaḥ śankha-chakra-gadā-dharaḥ | etat paramakaṁ guhyam etat paramakam padam | etat paramakam Brahma etāt paramakaṁ yaśaḥ | etad aksharam avyaktam etach chhāśvatam eva cha | etat Purusha-sanjno vai gīyate jnāyate na cha | etat paramakaṁ tejaḥ etat paramakaṁ sukham | etat paramakaṁ satyaṁ kīrtitaṁ Viśvakarmaṇā | tasmāt surāsuraiḥ sarvaiḥ sendraiś chāmita-vikramaḥ | navajneyo Vāsudevo mānusho 'yam iti prabho | yaś cha mānusha-mātro 'yam iti brūyāt sa manda-dhīḥ | Hṛishīkeśam avajnānāt tam āhuḥ purushādhamam | taṁ yoginam mahātmānam pravishṭam mānushīṁ tanum | yo 'vamanyed Vāsudevaṁ tam āhus tāmasaṁ janāḥ | devaṁ charācharātmā-

naṁ śrīvatsāṅkaṁ suvarchasam | padma-nābhaṁ na jānāti tam āhus tāmasaṁ janāḥ | kirīṭa-kaustubha-dharam mitrāṇām abhayaṅkaram | avajānan mahātmānaṁ ghore tamasi majjati | . . . 3002: Vārito 'si purā tāta munibhir bhāvitātmabhiḥ | mā gachha saṁyugaṁ tena Vāsudevena dhanvinā | Pāṇḍavaiḥ sārdham iti yat tat tvam mohād na budhyase | manye tvāṁ Rākshasaṁ krūraṁ tathā chāsi tamo-vṛitaḥ | tasmād dvishasi Govindaṁ Pāṇḍavaṅcha Dhananjayam | Nara-Nārāyaṇav devau ko 'nyo dvishyād hi mānavaḥ |

"That being who is supreme, who is to be, who shall continue to be supreme, who is the soul of beings, and the lord, and who is Brahma, the supreme existence,—it is with him, propitious, that I have been conversing, O eminent deities. The lord of the world was entreated by me [in these words] to show favour to the world: 'Do thou, celebrated as Vāsudeva, appear in the world of men: be born on earth for the slaughter of the Asuras. The Daityas, Dānavas, and Rākshasas who have been slain by thee in battle, they are these who have been born among men, horrible in form and great in might. To slay them, thou, the divine and mighty being, accompanied by Nara, having entered a human womb, wilt act upon earth.' Those ancient and most excellent of rishis, Nara and Nārāyaṇa, who are invincible in battle even by the united immortals, and who are of boundless splendour, have been born together in the world of men. Those fools do not know these rishis, Nara and Nārāyaṇa. He of whom I, Brahmā, the master of the whole world, am the son, that Vāsudeva, the lord of all the worlds, is to be propitiated by you. Never, O most excellent deities, is the potent bearer of the shell, the discus, and the club, to be slighted as a mere man. This Being is the highest mystery, this the highest existence, this the highest Brahma, this the highest renown. This Being is the undecaying, the undiscernible, the eternal. This Being which is called Purusha is hymned and is not known. This Being is celebrated by Viśvakarman as the highest power, as the highest joy, and as the highest truth. Wherefore Vāsudeva of boundless might is not to be contemned by the deities, including Indra, or by the Asuras, as a [mere] man. Whoever says that he is a mere man is dull of comprehension: from his contempt of Hṛishīkeśa they call such a person the lowest of men. Whoever despises Vāsudeva, that great contemplator who has entered a human body,—men call that person one full of darkness. Whoever is ignorant of the glorious god whose self is the world, whose mark is the śrīvatsa, from whose navel sprang the lotus,—men call that person a man full of darkness. Despising that great being who wears the diadem and jewel (kaustubha), who relieves his friends from fear, a man is plunged in horrible darkness."[229]

Bhīshma then says to Duryodhana (v. 3302): "Thou wast formerly, my son, prohibited by the contemplative munis [who said]: 'Engage not in battle with that archer Vāsudeva and the Pāṇḍavas.' Since thou, through infatuation, regardest not this [prohibition], I look upon thee as a cruel Rākshasa, and thou art enveloped in darkness. It is for this reason that thou hatest Govinda (Kṛishṇa) and the Pāṇḍava Dhananjaya (Arjuna). For what other man could hate the gods Nara and Nārāyaṇa?"

The next passage is from the Śānti-parvan, where Kṛishṇa, after describing many of his own other forms and functions, is introduced as saying (vv. 13265 ff.):

Purā 'ham ātmajaḥ Pārtha prathitaḥ kāraṇāntare | Dharmasya Kuru-śārdūla tato 'haṁ Dharmajaḥ smṛitaḥ | Nara-Nārāyaṇau pūrvaṁ tapas tepatur avyayam | dharma-yānaṁ samārūḍhau parvate Gandhamādane | tat-kāla-samaye chaiva Daksha-yajno babhūva ha | na chaivākalpayad bhāgaṁ Daksho Rudrasya Bhārata | tato Dadhīchi-vachanād Daksha-yajnam apāharat | sasarja śūlaṁ kopena prajvalantam muhur muhuḥ | tach chhūlam bhasmasāt kṛitvā Daksha-yajnaṁ sa-vistaram | āvayoḥ sahasā "gachhad Vadary-āśramam antikāt | vegena mahatā Pārtha patad Nārāyaṇorasi | tatas tat-tejasā "vishṭāḥ keśāḥ Nārāyaṇasya ha | babhūvur munjavarṇās tu tato 'ham munja-keśavān | tachcha śūlaṁ vinirdhūtaṁ huṁkāreṇa mahātmanā | jagāma Śankara-karaṁ Nārāyaṇa-samāhatam | atha Rudraḥ upādhāvat tāv ṛishī tapasā 'nvitau | tataḥ enaṁ samudhbūtaṁ kaṇṭhe jagrāha pāṇinā | Nārāyaṇaḥ sa viśvātmā tenāsya śiti-kaṇṭhatā | atha Rudra-vighātārtham ishīkāṁ Naraḥ uddharat | mantraiś cha saṁyuyojāśu so 'bhavat paraśur mahān | kshiptaś cha sahasā tena khaṇḍanam prāptavāṁs tadā | tato 'haṁ ['yaṁ?] Khaṇḍa-paraśuḥ smṛitaḥ paraśukhaṇḍanāt | . . . . 13278. tayoḥ saṁlagnayor yuddhe Rudra-Nārāyaṇātmanoḥ | udvignāḥ sahasā kṛitsnāḥ sarva-lokās tadā 'bhavan | nāgṛihṇāt Pāvakaḥ śubhram makheshu suhutaṁ haviḥ |

[229] This passage seems to have a polemical aspect, as if aimed at some contemporaries of the author, who did not assign so high a dignity to Kṛishṇa.

vedāḥ na pratibhānti sma ṛishīṇām bhāvitātmanām | devān rajas tamaś chaiva samāviviśitus tadā | vasudhā sanchakampe cha nabhaś cha vipaphāla ha | nishprabhāṇi cha tejāṁsi Brahmā chaivāsana-chyutaḥ | agāch chhoshaṁ samudraś cha Himavāṁś cha vyaśīryata | tasminn eva samutpanne nimitte Pāṇḍunandana | Brahmā vṛito deva-gaṇair ṛishibhiś cha mahātmabhiḥ | ājagāmāśubhaṁ deśaṁ yatra yuddham avartata | so 'ñjali-pragraho bhūtvā chatur-vaktro nirukta-gaḥ | uvācha vachanaṁ Rudraṁ "lokānām astu vai śivam | nyasyāyudhāni viśveśa jagato hita-kāmyayā | yad aksharam athāvyaktam īśaṁ lokasya bhāvanam | kūṭasthaṁ kartṛi nirdvandvam akarteti cha yaṁ viduḥ | vyakti-bhāva-gatasyāsya ekā mūrtir iyaṁ śubhā | Naro Nārāyaṇaś chaiva jātau Dharma-kulodvahau | tapasā mahatā yuktau deva-śreshṭhau mahā-vratau | aham prasāda-jas tasya kutaśchit kāraṇāntare | tvaṁ chaiva krodha-jas tāta pūrva-sarge sanātanaḥ | mayā cha sārdhaṁ varadaṁ vibudhaiś cha maharshibhiḥ | prasādayāśu lokānāṁ śāntir bhavatu mā chiram" | Brahmaṇā tv evam uktas tu Rudraḥ krodhāgnim utsṛijan | prasādayāmāsa tato devaṁ Nārāyaṇaṁ prabhum | śaraṇyaṁ cha jagāmādyaṁ vareṇyaṁ varadam prabhum | tato 'tha varado devo jita-krodho jitendriyaḥ | prītimān abhavat tatra Rudreṇa saha sangataḥ | ṛishibhir Brahmaṇā chaiva vibudhaiś cha supūjitaḥ | uvācha devam Īśānam īśaḥ sa jagato Hariḥ | "yas tvāṁ vetti sa māṁ vetti yas tvām anu sa mām anu | nāvayor antaraṁ kinchid mā te bhūd buddhir anyathā | adya-prabhṛiti śrīvatsaḥ śūlānko me bhavatv ayam | mama pāṇy-ankitaś chāpi śrīkaṇṭhas tvam bhavishyasi" | evaṁ lakshaṇam utpādya paraspara-kṛitaṁ tadā | sakhyaṁ chaivātulaṁ kṛitvā Rudreṇa sahitāv ṛishī | tapas tepatur avyagrau visṛijya tridivaukasaḥ | esha te kathitaḥ Pārtha Nārāyaṇa-jayo mṛidhe | nāmāni chaiva guhyāni niruktāni cha Bhārata | ṛishibhiḥ kathitānīha yāni sankīrtitānī te | evam bahu-vidhaiḥ rūpaiś charāmīha vasundharām | Brahma-lokancha Kaunteya golokancha sanātanam | mayā tvaṁ rakshito yuddhe mahāntam prāptavān jayam | yas tu te so 'grato yāti yuddhe sampraty upasthite | taṁ viddhi Rudraṁ Kaunteya deva-devaṁ kapardinam | kālaḥ sa eva 'kathitaḥ krodhajeti mayā tava | nihatās tena vai pūrvaṁ hatavān asi yān ripūn | aprameya-prabhāvaṁ taṁ deva-devam Umā-patim | namasva devam prayato viśveśam Haram akshayam | ityādi |

13265. "Formerly, son of Pṛithā, most excellent of the Kurus, I was celebrated on another occasion as the son of Dharma: and hence I was called Dharmaja. In former times Nara and Nārāyaṇa, mounted on the chariot of righteousness, performed an undecaying penance, on the mountain Gandhamādana. At that conjuncture of time, the sacrifice of Daksha took place. Daksha did not then divide any share for Rudra, who in consequence, at the suggestion of Dadhīchi, swept away the sacrifice of Daksha, and in his anger launched the trident blazing forth repeatedly. That trident, after reducing to ashes the sacrifice of Daksha with all its appurtenances, suddenly approached our hermitage at Badari, and fell with great impetus on the breast of Nārāyaṇa. The hair of Nārāyaṇa, penetrated by its glow, became of the colour of grass (munja): from which I am called Munjakeśavat. The trident being repelled by the great being with a yell went back into the hand of Śankara, when struck by Nārāyaṇa. Rudra then ran up to those austere rishis, when Nārāyaṇa, the soul of all things, with his hand seized him by the throat, when he had thus sprung up: hence his (Śiva's) name of Śitikaṇṭha. Nara next raised a straw for the slaughter of Rudra, and applied to it sacred texts, whereby it speedily became a huge axe. Hastily hurled by him, the axe (paraśu) became shattered into fragments (khaṇḍana), from which shattering of the axe, he is called Khaṇḍaparaśu." Arjuna here interposes to ask who was victorious in this conflict;[230] when Kṛishṇa proceeds: 13278. "When Rudra and Nārāyaṇa had become engaged in battle, all the worlds were instantly distressed; the fire did not receive the shining butter offered in the sacrifice; the vedas were not revealed to the contemplative rishis; [the qualities of] passion and darkness invaded the gods: the earth trembled, the sky became split; the luminaries lost their light; Brahmā fell from his seat; the ocean became dried up, and the Himavat wasted. When this prodigy had arisen, Brahmā, surrounded by the host of gods, and the magnanimous rishis, came to that disastrous place where the battle was raging. The four-faced god (Brahmā), the penetrator of mysteries, with joined hands, addressed these words to Rudra: 'Let the welfare of the worlds be [consulted]; put down thy weapons, lord of all, from goodwill to the universe. This is one auspicious form of him, now in the state of manifestation,—of him whom [sages] know as the undecaying, undiscernible [essence], the lord, the creator of the world, the supreme, the doer, unaffected by pleasure or pain, and not the doer,—[this I say is one form of him, viz.], Nara and Nārāyaṇa, born in the race of Dharma, distinguished by intense austerity, eminent gods, great devotees. I was once on another occasion born as the offspring of his good pleasure, and in a former creation thou didst spring from his anger,[231] an everlasting [being]. Together with me and the gods and rishis, do thou speedily propitiate this bestower of boons; let the worlds have tranquillity without delay.' Being thus addressed by Brahmā, Rudra, abandoning the fire of anger, then propitiated the god Nārāyaṇa, the lord; and the god sought as his refuge the primeval, most excellent, boon-bestowing lord. Then the boon-bestowing god, who had conquered anger and overcome his senses, meeting Rudra, became gratified. Being worshipped by the rishis, by Brahmā, and by the gods, Hari, the lord of the world, addressed the god Īśāna (Mahādeva): 'He who knows thee knows me; he who loves (lit. favours) thee loves me.[232] There is no distinction between us: do not thou entertain any other idea. From this day forward let this śrīvatsa of mine be the mark of the trident: and thou shalt be the śrīkaṇṭha marked upon my hand.' Having thus created a mark devised by each for the other, and having joined an incomparable friendship with Rudra, the two rishis practised austerity undisturbed, after dismissing the gods. This, son of Pṛithā, which I have told thee, was the victory of Nārāyaṇa in battle: and [my] mysterious and unexplained names, too,—those which are celebrated by the rishis, have been declared to thee. In this manner do I frequent this earth and the world of Brahmā, and the everlasting Goloka, in manifold forms. By me thou hast been preserved in battle, and hast gained a great victory. But know, son of Kunti, that he who goes before thee in the conflict which has now arrived, is Rudra, the god of gods, with spirally-braided hair. He, Time, has been declared by me to thee to be the offspring of my anger. The enemies whom thou formerly slewest were slain by him. Devoutly reverence him the god of gods, the lord of Umā, of boundless power, Hara, the undecaying lord of all."

[230] See above, pp. 176 f.

Again, in the Śānti-parvan, Vaiśampāyana tells Janamejaya how Nārada, after returning from Śveta Dvīpa, saw the two saints, Nara and Nārāyaṇa (v. 13337):

[231] See verses 13140 and 13145 of the Śānti-parvan, quoted below.

[232] A similar expression has already occurred above, p. 230.

Nipapāta cha khāt tūrṇaṁ viśālāṁ Vadarīm anu | tataḥ sa dadṛiśe devau purāṇāv ṛishi-sattamau | tapaś charantau sumahad ātma-nishṭhau mahā-vratau | tejasā 'bhyadhikau sūryāt sarva-loka-virochanāt | śrīvatsa-lakshaṇau pūjyau jaṭā-maṇḍala-dhāriṇau | jāla-pāda-bhujau tau tu pādayos chakra-lakshaṇau | vyūḍhoraskau dīrgha-bhujau tathā mushka-chatu-shkinau | shashṭi-dantāv ashṭa-daṁshṭrau meghaugha-sadṛiśa-svanau | svāsyau pṛithulalāṭau cha subhrū su-hanu-nāsikau | ūtapatreṇa sadṛiśe śirasī devayos tayoḥ | evaṁ-lakshaṇa-sampannau mahā-purusha-sanjnitau | tau dṛishṭvā Nārado hṛishṭas tābhyaṁ cha pratipūjitaḥ | svāgatenābhi-bhāshyātha pṛishṭaś chānāmayaṁ tathā | babhūvāntargata-matir nirīkshya purushottamau |

"He descended rapidly from the sky to the spacious Badari. There he saw the ancient gods, the two most excellent rishis, performing severe penance, self-sustained, great devotees, in splendour surpassing the sun which illuminates all the worlds, bearing the śrīvatsa mark, adorable, wearing a circle of matted hair, web-footed and web-armed, with the mark of the discus on their feet, broad-chested, long-armed, with four testicles, sixty teeth and eight grinders, with voices sonorous as a host of clouds, with beautiful countenances, broad foreheads, handsome eyebrows, chins, and noses. The heads of those two gods resembled umbrellas. Beholding them, distinguished by such marks, and named the two great males, Nārada rejoicing, and saluted by them in return, welcomed, and questioned in regard to his health, became absorbed in reflection, beholding those highest of persons." He then recollected to have previously seen them in the Śveta Dvīpa. Nara and Nārāyaṇa next ask him if he had seen in the Śveta Dvīpa the supreme Spirit, their own highest substance (āvayoḥ prakṛitiḥ parā). He replies that he had; and that now when he beheld them he beheld Him, as they were distinguished by all the same marks, in a manifested form, as Hari possessed in an invisible manner; and that he had on that occasion beheld them at the side of the deity (vv. 13351 ff.: Adyāpi chainam paśyāmi yuvāṁ paśyan sanātanau | yair lakshaṇair upetaḥ sa Harir avyakta-rūpa-dhṛik | tair lakshaṇair upetau hi vyakta-rūpa-dharau yuvām | dṛishṭau yuvām mayā tatra tasya devasya pārśvataḥ). Some further conversation ensues; and it is then related (v. 13397 f.) that Nārada remained a thousand years of the gods in their hermitage, worshipping the deity, and Nara and Nārāyaṇa.

V. In the following passage (which is commented upon by Lassen in his Indian Antiquities, 1st ed., i. 621 f., and note, p. 622; 2nd ed., pp. 768 ff.[233]) Kṛishṇa is represented as possessed of extraordinary prowess and superhuman powers; but he is not, unless it be in one or two places, represented as the supreme deity.

To show how little prospect the Kurus had of vanquishing the Pāṇḍus, aided as the latter were by Kṛishṇa, Dhṛitarāshṭra gives an account of the exploits of the Yādava chief:

[233] His remarks are as follows:—"The history of Kṛishṇa in the Mahābhārata does not describe his juvenile life with the cowherds, and his numerous adventures with their wives, which at a later period were especially noticed and celebrated. On the other hand, victories over many kings and tribes are attributed to him, which possess no historical value, and are only important in so far as they represent him as a hero, and indicate that the Yādavas waged frequent wars with the tribes of ancient India. In a short enumeration of his feats (the passage quoted in the text) he is named Govinda, or the proprietor of cows, and it said of him that he grew up among the herds. None of the stories regarding him and the cowherds' wives are here mentioned; but another is introduced which describes him as a protector of the herds, inasmuch as he strangled with his arms a Dānava which in the form of a bull slaughtered the cattle. His proper and oldest name as the son of Nanda was probably Govinda. There must also have been stories about him in which he was represented as a leader of cowherds, for according to the Mahābhārata he supplied to Duryodhana (by whom he had been solicited to assist him in the great battle) thousands of cowherds, who are called the gopas of Nārāyaṇa. These take no share in the battle, and are very seldom mentioned.—See Udyoga-parvan, v. 130 ff.; and Droṇa-parvan, vv. 3255 ff., where the Nārāyaṇas, the cowherds, are spoken of along with the Kāmbojas, etc., as having been conquered by Karṇa, etc. (Nārāyaṇaś cha gopālāḥ Kāmbojānāncha ye gaṇāḥ | Karṇena vijitāḥ |)

The Nārāyaṇas are also mentioned in the Droṇap. 752 and 759 (see Böhtlingk and Roth, s. v.).

Kṛishṇa, when applied to by Duryodhana, as well as by Arjuna, for aid in the impending conflict, promises succour to them both, but allows Arjuna the first choice:

Udyoga-parvan, vv. 147 ff.—Mat-saṁhanana-tulyānāṁ gopānām arbudam mahat | Nārāyaṇāḥ iti khyātāḥ sarve saṅgrāma-yodhinaḥ | te vā yudhi durādharshāḥ bhavantv ekasya sainikāḥ | ayudhyamānaḥ saṅgrāme nyastaśastro 'ham ekataḥ | ābhyām anyataram Pārtha yat te hṛidyataram matam | tad vṛiṇītām bhavān agre pravāryas tvaṁ hi dharmataḥ |* "Let one of you either take those invincible soldiers, the great hundred millions of herdsmen called Nārāyaṇas, whose bodies are equal to my own, and who are all fighting men; or let him take, on the other hand, myself who do not engage in battle, and have laid aside my weapons. Do thou, son of Pṛithā, first choose the one of these two things which is most acceptable to thee; for thou art justly entitled to the preference."

Arjuna selects Kṛishṇa himself, "the unborn Nārāyaṇa, destroyer of his foes, who had been at his will born among men" (Nārāyaṇam, amitraghnaṁ kāmāj jātam ajaṁ nṛishu), though he was not to fight. Duryodhana chose the army of warriors.

* The word saṁhanana occurs also in the Droṇa-parvan, v. 147.

Droṇa-parvan, 382.—Dhṛitarāshṭraḥ uvācha | śṛiṇu divyāni karmāṇi Vāsudevasya Sanjaya | kṛitavān yāni Govindo yathā nānyaḥ pumān kvachit | saṁvardhatā gopa-kule bālenaiva mahātmanā | vikhyāpitam balam bāhvos trishu lokeshu Sanjaya | Uchchhaiḥśravas-tulya-balaṁ vāyu-vega-samaṁ jave | jaghāna Haya-rājānaṁ Yamunā-vana-vāsinam | Dānavaṁ ghora-karmāṇaṁ gavām mṛityum upasthitam | vṛiṣha-rūpa-dharam bālye bhujābhyāṁ nijaghāna ha | Pralambhaṁ Nirakaṁ Jambham Pīṭhaṁ vā 'pi mahāsuram | Muraṁ chāmara-sankāśam abadhīt pushkarekshaṇaḥ | tathā Kaṁso mahātejāḥ Jarāsandhena pālitaḥ | vikrameṇaiva Kṛishṇena saguṇaḥ pātito raṇe | Sunāmā raṇa-vikrāntaḥ samagrākshauhiṇī-patiḥ | Bhoja-rājasya madhya-stho bhrātā Kaṁsasya vīryavān | Baladeva-dvitīyena Kṛishṇenāmitra-ghātinā | tarasvī samare daghdaḥ sasainyaḥ Śūrasena-rāṭ | Durvāsāḥ nāma viprarshis tathā paramakopanaḥ | ārādhitaḥ sadāreṇa sa chāsmai pradadau varān | tathā Gāndhārarājasya sutāṁ vīraḥ svayaṁvare | nirjitya pṛithivī-pālān āvahat pushkarekshaṇaḥ | amṛishyamāṇāḥ rājāno yasya jātyāḥ hayāḥ iva | rathe vaivāhike yuktāḥ pratodena kṛita-vraṇāḥ | Jarāsandham mahābāhum upāyena Janārdanaḥ | pareṇa ghātayāmāsa samagrākshauhiṇī-patim | Chedirājāncha vikrāntaṁ rāja-senā-patim balī | arghe vivadamānancha jaghāna paśu-vat tadā | Saubhaṁ daitya-puraṁ svasthaṁ Śālva-guptaṁ durāsadam | samudra-kukshau vikramya pātayāmāsa Mādhavaḥ | . . . . . v. 400: Praviśya makarāvāsaṁ yādobhir abhisaṁvṛitam | jigāya Varuṇaṁ sankhye salilāntargatam purā | yudhi Panchajanaṁ hatvā pātāla-tala-vāsinam | pānchajanyaṁ Hṛishīkeśo divyāṁ śankham avāptavān | Khāṇḍave Pārtha-sahitas toshayitvā Hutāśanam | āgneyam astraṁ durdharshaṁ chakraṁ lebhe mahābalaḥ | Vainateyaṁ samāruhya trāsayitvā 'marāvatīm | Mahendra-bhavanād vīraḥ pārijātam upānayat | tachcha marshitavān Śakro jānaṁs tasya parākramam | rājñāṁ chāpy ajitaṁ kanchit Kṛishneneha na śuśruma | yachcha tad mahad āścharyaṁ sabhāyām mama Sanjaya | kṛitavān Puṇḍarīkākshaḥ kas tad-anya ihārhati | labdhabhaktyā prasanno 'ham adrākshaṁ Kṛishṇam īśvaram | tad me suviditaṁ sarvam pratyaksham iva chāgaman | nāntaṁ vikrama-yuktasya buddhyā yuktasya vā punaḥ | karmaṇā śakyate gantuṁ Hṛishīkeśasya Sanjaya | tathā Gadaś cha Śambaścha Pradyumno 'tha Vidūrathaḥ | . . . . . 410: Ete 'nye balavantaś cha Vṛishṇi-vīrāḥ prahāriṇaḥ | kathanchit Pāṇḍavānīkaṁ śrayeyuḥ samare sthitāḥ | āhūtāḥ Vṛishṇi-vīreṇa Keśavena mahātmānā | tataḥ śaṁśayitaṁ sarvam bhaved iti matir mama | nāgāyuta-

balo vīraḥ Kailāsa-śikharopamaḥ | vapa-mālī halī Rāmas tatra yatra Janārdanaḥ | yam āhuḥ sarva-pitaraṁ Vāsudevaṁ dvijātayaḥ | api vā hy esha Pāṇḍūnāṁ yotsyate 'rthāya Sanjaya | sa yadā tāta sannahyet Pāṇḍavārthāya Sanjaya | na tadā pratisaṁyoddhā bhavitā tasya kaśchana | yadi sma Kuravaḥ sarve jayeyur nāma Pāṇḍavān | Vārshṇeyo 'rthāya teshāṁ vai gṛihṇīyāt śastram uttamam | tataḥ sarvān saravyāghro hatvā narapatīn raṇe | Kauravāṁś cha mahābāhuḥ Kuntyai dadyāt sa medinīm | yasya yantā Hṛishīkeśo yoddhā yasya Dhananjayaḥ | rathasya tasya kaḥ sankhye pratyanīko bhaved rathaḥ | na kenachid upāyena Kurūṇāṁ driśyate jayaḥ | tasmād me sarvam ākhakshva yathā yuddham avartata | [234]

"Dhṛitarāshṭra says: Hear, Sanjaya, the divine acts of Kṛishṇa, which Govinda performed, such as no other person [ever did]. While he was growing up as a high-souled boy in the tribe of cowherds, the force of his arms was rendered famous by him in the three worlds. He slew the king of the Hayas [horses], dwelling in the woods of the Yamunā, equal to Ucchaiḥśravas (the horse of Indra) in strength, and to the wind in speed. In his childhood he destroyed with his arms the Dānava, a doer of direful deeds, who arose, as it were, the Death of cattle, bearing the form of a bull. The lotus-eyed [hero] slew Pralambha, Naraka, Jambha and Pīṭha, the great Asura, and Mura, resembling the immortals. So, too, Kansa, of great force, supported by Jarāsandha, was, with his hosts, overthrown in battle by Kṛishṇa, through his valour. Sunāman, valiant in fight, the lord of a complete army, the brother of Kansa, who interposed for the king of the Bhojas, the bold and heroic prince of the Śūrasenas, was, with his army, burnt up in battle by Kṛishṇa, destroyer of his enemies, seconded by Balarāma. And a Brāhman rishi called Ṛurvāsas, extremely irascible, was worshipped by him (Kṛishṇa), together with his wife, and bestowed on him boons.[235] So, too, the lotus-eyed hero, having conquered the princes, carried off the daughter of the king of the Gāndhāras at the Swayamvara:[236] and the princes, being unable to endure him, were

[234] Towards the close of Dhṛitarāshṭra's speech the following verse of a proverbial character occurs:—v. 429: Pakvānāṁ hi badhe Sūta vajrāyante tṛiṇāny api | "When men are ripe for destruction, even straws smite like thunderbolts."

[235] See the Anuśāsana-parvan, vv. 7402 ff., referred to above, p. 196.

[236] Lassen, Ind. Alt. i., 622, first edition (p. 769, second edition), note, thinks this story has probably some foundation in fact, and adds that Nagnajit, king of the Gāndhāras, is mentioned in the Ait. Br., vii. 34. See Colebrooke's Essays, i. 46, and the second volume of this work, p. 353.

yoked like highbred horses to the bridal car, and wounded with the goad. Janārdana, by a clever device, caused Jarāsandha, the large-armed, lord of a complete army, to be slain.[237] This hero also slaughtered like a beast the king of the Chedis (see above, p. 215), the valiant lord of a royal army, who quarrelled regarding the offering [made to Kṛishṇa]. Assailing Saubha, the self-supporting (i.e. flying) city of the Daityas, on the shore of the ocean, protected by the Sālva (king), and difficult to destroy, Mādhava overthrew it." [Then follows a list of numerous tribes, Angas, Bangas, etc., etc., conquered by Kṛishṇa.] . . . . . v. 400: "Entering of old the ocean, filled with marine monsters, he overcame in battle Varuṇa, who had sunk within the waters. Having slain in battle Panchajana dwelling in Pātāla, Hṛishīkeśa obtained the divine shell Pānchajanya. Having, along with Pārtha (the son of Pṛithā, Arjuna), propitiated Agni in Khāṇḍava, this mighty being acquired the irresistible fiery weapon, the discus.[238] Mounted on Garuḍa, and terrifying Amarāvatī (the city of Indra), this hero brought back the pārijāta from the abode of the elder Indra.[239] And to this Śakra submitted, knowing his prowess. And we have not heard of any of the kings who has not been conquered by Kṛishṇa. Then who but Puṇḍarīkāksha could have performed that very wonderful act which he did in my assembly? Through the faith which I had attained, I beheld Kṛishṇa, the lord, with delight; of all that I was well assured, and I obtained as it were a distinct vision. No one can by act attain to the limit of Hṛishīkeśa who is distinguished by valour as well as by wisdom. And Gada also, and Sāmba, and Pradyumna, and Vidūratha, [here follows a list of other warriors] these, and other powerful martial heroes of the Vṛishṇi tribe, summoned by the great Vṛishṇi hero, Keśava, will join in some way the host of the Pāṇḍavas, and stand up in the battle. Hence, in my opinion, everything will be doubtful. Wherever Janārdana is, there is also the hero Rāma, in strength equal to ten thousand elephants, resembling the summit of Kailāsa, wearing a garland of wild flowers, and carrying a plough. Or Vāsudeva, he whom the Brahmans call the universal father, will fight for the Pāṇḍavas. When he shall arm [for battle] on their behalf, no one shall then stand up to encounter him. Even if all the Kurus were to overcome the Pāṇḍavas, Vārshṇeya (Kṛishṇa) would on behalf of the latter seize his pre-eminent weapon; and having then slain all the princes and the Kauravas in battle, this great-armed and tiger-like man (lit. man-tiger) would bestow the earth on Kuntī. What chariot can stand in the conflict against that chariot of which Hṛishīkeśa is the driver, and on which Dhananjaya (Arjuna) fights? By no contrivance does the victory of the Kurus appear [to be possible]. Give me therefore a full account of the way in which the battle proceeded."

[237] See the story as told in the Sabhā-parvan, vv. 848 ff.

[238] Compare note 189, p. 191; and see Ādi-parvan, v. 8196, where the story is told.

[239] See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, pp. 585 ff. (vol. v., pp. 97 ff., of Dr. Hall's ed.).

Then follow the verses which have been already quoted above in p. 235, Arjunaḥ Keśavasyātmā, "Arjuna is the soul of Keśava," etc.

Another account of Kṛishṇa's exploits is given in the Udyoga-parvan. It is there related that Sanjaya had been sent on an embassy to the Pāṇḍus, and that on his return he reported to the chiefs of the Kurus the defiant answer which Arjuna had given. The latter chief prophesied that Duryodhana would certainly repent having engaged in conflict with himself and Kṛishṇa (vv. 1863 ff.) He then enlarges as follows on the prowess of Kṛishṇa (vv. 1875 ff.):

Pūrvāhṇe māṁ kṛita-japyaṁ kadāchid viprah provāchodakānte manojnam | kartavyaṁ te dushkaraṁ karma Pārtha yodhavyaṁ te śatrubhiḥ Savyasāchin | Indro vā te harimān vajra-hastaḥ purastād yātu samare 'rīn vinighnan | Sugrīva-yuktena rathena vā te paśchāt Kṛishṇo rakshatu Vāsudevaḥ | vavre chāhaṁ vajra-hastād Mahendrād asmin yuddhe Vāsudevaṁ sahāyam | sa me labdho dasyu-badhāya Kṛishṇo manye chaitad vihitaṁ daivatair me | sa bāhubhyāṁ sāgaram uttitīrshed mahodadhiṁ salilasyāprameyam | tejasvinaṁ Kṛishṇam atyanta-śūraṁ yuddhena yo Vāsudevaṁ jigīshet | giriṁ sa ichhet tu talena bhettuṁ śilochayaṁ śvetam atipramāṇam | tasyaiva pāṇiḥ sa-nakho viśīryed na chāpi kinchit sa gires tu kuryāt | agniṁ samiddhaṁ śamayed bhujābhyāṁ chandrancha sūryanṁcha nivārayeta | hared devānāṁ amṛitam prasahya yuddhena yo Vāsudevaṁ jigīshet | yo Rukmiṇīm eka-rathena Bhojān utsādya rājnaḥ samare prasahya | uvāha bhāryāṁ yaśasā jvalantīṁ yasyāṁ jajne Raukmineyo mahātmā | ayaṁ Gāndhārāṁs tarasā sampramathya jitvā putrān Nagnajitaḥ samagrān | baddham mumocha vinadantam prasahya Sudarśanaṁ vai devatānāṁ lalāmam | ayaṁ kapāṭena jaghāna Pāṇḍyaṁ tathā

Kalingān Dantakūre mamarda | anena dagdhā varsha-pūgān anāthā Vārāṇasī nagarī sambabhūva | ayaṁ sma yuddhe manyate 'nyair ajeyaṁ tam Ekalavyaṁ nāma Nishāda-rājam | vegeneva śailam abhihatya Jambhaḥ śete sa Kṛishṇena hataḥ parāsuḥ | tathograsenasya sutaṁ sudushṭam Vṛishṇy-Andhakānām madhya-gataṁ sabhā-stham | apātayad Baladeva-dvitīyo hatvā dadau chograsenāya rājyam | ayaṁ Saubhaṁ yodhayāmāsa svastham vibhīshaṇam māyayā Śālva-rājam | Saubha-dvāri pratyagṛihṇāt śataghnīṁ dorbhyāṁ kaḥ enaṁ visaheta martyaḥ | Prāgjyotishaṁ nāma babhūva durgam puraṁ ghoram Asurāṇām asahyam | mahābalo Narakas tatra Bhaumo jahārādityāḥ maṇi-kuṇḍale śubhe | na taṁ devāḥ saha Śakreṇa śekuḥ samāgatāḥ yudhi mṛityor abhītāḥ | dṛishṭvā cha taṁ vikramaṁ Keśavasya balaṁ tathaivāstram avāraṇīyam | jānanto 'sya prakṛitiṁ Keśavasya nyayojayan dasyu-badhāya Kṛishṇam | sa tat karma pratiśuśrāva dushkaram aiśvaryavān siddhishu Vāsudevaḥ | nirmochane shaṭ sahasrāṇi hatvā sanchhidya pāśān sahasā kshurāntān | Muraṁ hatvā vinihatyaugha-raksho nirmochanaṁ chāpi jagāma vīraḥ | tatraiva tenāsya babhūva yuddham mahābalenātibalasya Vishṇoḥ | śete sa Kṛishṇena hataḥ parāsur vāteneva mathitaḥ karṇikāraḥ | āhṛitya Kṛishṇo maṇi-kuṇḍale te hatvā cha Bhaumaṁ Narakam Muranchа | śriyā vṛito yaśasā chaiva vidvān pratyājagāmāpratima-prabhāvaḥ | asmai varān adadaṁs tatra devāḥ dṛishṭvā bhīmaṁ karma kṛitaṁ raṇe tat | "śramaś cha te yudhyamānasya na syād ākāśe chāpsu cha te kramaḥ syāt | śastrāṇi gātre na cha te kramerann" ity eva Kṛishṇaś cha tataḥ kṛitārthaḥ | evaṁ-rūpe Vāsudeve 'prameye mahābale guṇa-sampat sadaiva | tam asahyaṁ Vishṇum ananta-vīryam āśaṁśate Dhārtarāshṭro vijetum |

"Once, in the forenoon, when I had muttered my prayers, and concluded my ablutions, a Brahman addressed to me these pleasant words: 'Son of Pṛithā, thou hast a difficult work to do; thou hast to fight with thine enemies, O Savyasāchin (a name of Arjuna). Shall Indra with his steeds, and wielding the thunderbolt, go before thee in battle, smiting thy foes, or shall Kṛishṇa, the son of Vasudeva, with his car, to which Sugrīva (one of Kṛishṇa's horses) is yoked, protect thee from behind?' I elected to have in the combat Vāsudeva for an ally, rather than Mahendra, wielding the thunderbolt. Kṛishṇa was obtained by me as a helper in slaying the Dasyus, and I think that this was effected for me by the gods. That man will try to stretch over the ocean, the immeasurable receptacle of waters, with his arms, who thinks to conquer in battle the glorious and eminently heroic Kṛishṇa. If any one should attempt to split with his hand the white mountain (viz. Kailāsa), a vast pile of rocks, his hand and nails would be worn away, and he could produce no effect upon the mountain. That man would extinguish blazing fire with his arms, would stop the moon and sun, would daringly plunder the ambrosia of the gods, who should think to conquer Vāsudeva in battle,—[Vāsudeva] who having boldly destroyed in battle the Bhoja kings, carried off on the same car with himself Rukmiṇī his bride, shining in renown, of whom the great Raukmiṇeya was born. He (Kṛishṇa) having by his prowess destroyed the Gāndhāras, having conquered all the sons of Nagnajit, forcibly released [king] Sudarśana, renowned even among the gods, who had been bound [by the sons of Nagnajit], and was making an outcry.[240] He slew Pāṇḍya with the fragment of a door, and crushed the Kalingas in Dantakūra. Through him the city of Benares, which had been burnt, and remained for many years defenceless, sprang into existence. He regarded Ekalavya the king of the Nishādas as invincible by others in battle, [but slew him], having smitten him furiously with a rock. Jambha sleeps, bereft of life by Kṛishṇa.[241] Seconded by Baladeva, he also prostrated [Sunāman] the wicked son of Ugrasena standing in the midst of the assembly of the Vṛishṇis and Andhakas, and having slain him, gave the kingdom to Ugrasena. He conquered the self-supporting (i.e. flying) [city of] Saubha, and the king of the Śālvas, terrible from his magical powers, and arrested with his arms at the gate of Saubha the weapon Śataghnī:[242] what mortal can assail him? There was an im-

[240] One of the commentators says that Sudarśana was a certain king, and explains devatānāṁ lalāmam by devatānām madhye praśastam, "approved among the gods." Another commentator says lalāmam=śiromaṇim, "a head-jewel or ornament." The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, x. 34, 8 ff., tells a story of a Vidyādhara also named Sudarśana, who in consequence of a curse had been changed into a serpent, but who renewed his former shape on being touched by Kṛishṇa's foot.

[241] The construction and sense of this verse are not very clear.

[242] A weapon generally supposed to be a species of firearms, or a rocket, but also described as a stone set round with iron spikes.—Wilson's Dictionary. See also Williams's Sanskrit English Dictionary, s.v., and the end of note 189, page 191, above. A double account is given of the destruction of the flying (kāmaga) city of Saubha and of its king in the Vana-parvan. The story is first of all briefly given in vv. 615–635; and afterwards very diffusely in vv. 636–889. Kṛishṇa splits the city with his discus Sudarśana (v. 883), and kills the king of the Śālvas himself (v. 885).—See Lassen's Indian Antiquities, p. 615, first ed., p. 761, second ed.

pregnable, formidable, and unassailable castle of the Asuras, called Prāgjyotisha. Thither the powerful Naraka son of the Earth had carried off the beautiful jewelled earrings of Aditi.[243] The assembled gods aided by Indra, fearless of death, could not [overcome] him in battle. But perceiving the valour, the strength, and the irresistible weapons of Keśava, and knowing his nature, they appointed him (Kṛishṇa) to slay the Dasyu. Vāsudeva, possessing divine power in his magical endowments (aiśvaryavān siddhishu), undertook that difficult task. Having in the city Nirmochana slain six thousand [Asuras], and having violently cut asunder the nooses sharp as razors,[244] having slain Mura and the Rākshasa Ogha, he proceeded to Nirmochana.[245] There Vishṇu of surpassing strength had a fight with the powerful foe; who, smitten by Kṛishṇa, sleeps lifeless, like a karnikāra[246] tree overthrown by the wind. Having captured the jewelled earrings and slain Naraka, son of the Earth, and Mura, the wise Kṛishṇa of incomparable power, returned surrounded by splendour and renown. Then the gods having seen that terrible work which he had achieved in battle, conferred upon him these boons: 'Let no fatigue oppress thee when thou art fighting; let thy step traverse the sky and the waters; and let no weapons make any impression on thy body.' With these boons Kṛishṇa was satisfied. In Vāsudeva, who is of such a character, immeasurable, and of mighty strength, there is always an abundance of virtues. It is this irresistible Vishṇu, of infinite power, whom the son of Dhṛitarāshṭra hopes to overcome."

[243] The story of this demon is told in the Vishṇu Purāṇa.—See Wilson's translation, pp. 581 ff., or vol. v., pp. 87 ff. of Dr. Hall's ed.

[244] These nooses are also mentioned in the Vishṇu Purāṇa (see Wilson's translation, as in the last note) and in the Harivaṁśa, v. 6833. See Langlois's note to his French translation, p. 521, in which he refers to the Asiatic Researches, vol. xiii., p. 278 ff. In that article an account is given of the Phānsigars or Thugs, who murder their victims by throwing a noose. The writer refers in illustration to the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 29, 9 (Schlegel's edition), where three kinds of nooses are mentioned, the dharma-pāśa, the kāla-pāśa, and the Vāruṇa-pāśa. In the Vana-parvan, 879, the epithet kshurānta, sharp as a razor, is applied to Kṛishṇa's discus.

[245] See verse 4407 of this same parvan; Nirmochane shaṭsahasrāḥ pāśair baddhāḥ mahāsurāḥ | This line evidently contains an allusion to the same story as is referred to in the text; and from a comparison of both passages I infer that Nirmochana is the name of a place. Böhtlingk and Roth s v. do not recognize this signification.

[246] Pterospermum acerifolium.

It will be noticed that Kṛishṇa is here represented as receiving various boons from the gods. It would appear, therefore, as if the author of this passage could not consistently have regarded him as one with the supreme deity.

The following passage from the Vana-parvan describes Kṛishṇa as a great devotee, as a performer of sacrifices, as a destroyer of hostile men and demons (referring to some of the legends already alluded to); and also in some places identifies him with the supreme spirit. Kṛishṇa, we are told, had gone with some of his clansmen to visit the Pāṇḍavas in the forest; and as he showed himself greatly incensed at the conduct of the Kurus, Arjuna, to appease him, related (needlessly, one would think, if he was regarded as the Supreme Deity) his exploits in former births (vv. 471 ff.): Arjunaḥ uvācha | Daśa-varsha-sahasrāṇi yatra Sāyangṛiho muniḥ | vyacharas tvam purā Kṛishṇa parvate Gandhamādane | daśa-varsha-sahasrāṇi daśa-varsha-śatāni cha | pushkareshv avasaḥ Kṛishṇa tvam apo bhakshayan purā | ūrdhva-bāhur viśālāyāṁ Vadaryam Madhusūdana | atishṭhaḥ eka-pādena vāyu-bhakshaḥ śatam samāḥ | avakṛishṭottarāsangaḥ kṛiśo dhamaṇi-santataḥ | āsīḥ Kṛishṇa Sarasvatyāṁ satre dvādaśa-vārshike | Prabhāsam apy athāsādya tīrtham puṇya-janochitam | tathā Kṛishṇa mahātejāḥ divyaṁ varsha-sahasrikam (sic) | atishṭhas tvam yathaikena pādena niyama-sthitaḥ | loka-pravṛitti-hetos tvam iti Vyāso mamābravīt | kshetra-jnaḥ sarva-bhūtānām ādir antaś cha Keśava | nidhānam tapasāṁ Kṛishṇa yajnas tvaṁ cha sanātanaḥ | nihatya Narakam Bhaumam āhṛitya maṇi-kuṇḍale | prathamotpāditaṁ Kṛishṇa medhyam aśvam avāsṛijaḥ | kṛitvā tat karma lokānām ṛishabhaḥ sarva-loka-jit | abadhīs tvāṁ raṇe sarvān sametān daitya-dānavān | tataḥ sarveśvaratvaṁ cha sampradāya S'achī-pateḥ | mānusheshu mahābāho prādurbhūto 'si Keśava | sa tvaṁ Nārāyaṇo bhūtvā Harir āsīḥ parantapa | Brahmā Somaś cha Sūryaś cha Dharmo Dhātā Yamo 'nalaḥ | Vāyur Vaiśravaṇo Rudraḥ kālaḥ kham pṛithivī diśaḥ | ajaś charāchara-guruḥ śrashṭā tvam purushottama | parāyaṇaṁ devam ūrjhvaṁ kratubhir Madhusūdana | ayajo bhūri-tejāḥ vai Kṛishṇa Chaitrarathe vane | śataṁ śata-sahasrāṇi suvarṇasya Janārdana | ekaikasmiṁs tadā yajne paripūrṇāni bhāgasaḥ | . . . . Sāditāḥ Mauravāḥ pāśāḥ Nisunda-Narakau hatau | kṛitaḥ kshemaḥ punaḥ panthāḥ puram Prāg-jyotisham prati | Jārūthyām Āhvṛitiḥ Krāthaḥ S'iśupālo janaiḥ saha | Jarāsandhaś cha S'aivyaś cha S'atadhanvā cha nirjitaḥ | tathā Parjanya-

ghoshena rathenāditya-varchasā | avāpsīr mahishīm bhojyāñ rane nirjitya Rukminam | Indrayumno hataḥ kopād Yavanaś cha Kaserumān | hataḥ Saubha-patiḥ Śālvas tvayā Saubhañ cha pātitam | Irāvatyāñ hato Bhojaḥ Kārtavīrya-samo yudhi | Gopatis Tālaketuś cha tvayā vinihatāv ubhau | tāñ cha Bhogavatīm punyām Ṛishikāñ tāñ Janārdana | Dvārakām ātmasāt kṛitvā samudrañ gamayishyasi | na krodho na cha mātsaryañ nānṛitam Madhusūdana | tvayi tishṭhati Dāśārha na nṛiśaṁsyañ kuto 'nṛijuḥ | āsīnañ chaitya-madhye tvāñ dīpyamānañ sva-tejasā | āgamya rishayaḥ sarve 'yāchantābhayam Achyuta |

Vana-parvan, 471. "Formerly, Kṛishṇa, thou didst roam for ten thousand years on the mountain Gandhamādan, where the muni Sāyangṛiha was. Formerly thou didst dwell ten thousand and ten hundred years in ponds, subsisting upon water. Thou didst stand on the spacious Badari a hundred years with thy arms aloft, on one foot, subsisting on air, with thy outer garment thrown off, emaciated, with thy veins swollen. Going also to Prabhāsa, a sacred spot fit for holy men, thou stoodest glorious, Kṛishṇa, for a thousand years of the gods, on one foot, practising self-restraint, for the benefit of the world,—this Vyāsa declared to me. Thou, Keśava, art the spirit residing in men's bodies, the beginning and the end of all existences, the receptacle of austerities, and the eternal sacrifice. Having slain Naraka, the son of the Earth, and having carried off the jewelled earrings, thou didst let loose the first-produced sacrificial horse. Having performed that rite, chief of the worlds, and conqueror of all worlds, thou didst slay in battle all the assembled Daityas and Dānavas. And then, having conferred the lordship of the universe on Indra, thou, O great-armed, didst become manifested among mankind. Thou, being Nārāyaṇa, wert Hari, O vexer of thy foes. Thou, O Purushottama (or chief of Spirits, or Males), art Brahmā, Soma, Sūrya, Dharma, Dhātṛi, Yama, Anala (Fire), Vāyu, Kuvera, Rudra, Time, Sky, Earth, the Regions, the unborn, the lord of the world, the creator. Thou, Madhusūdana, Kṛishṇa, of great glory, didst with sacrifices worship the supreme, high, god in the forest of Chaitraratha. A hundred times a hundred thousands of gold were then severally told out in full tale at each sacrifice." [Here follow the verses quoted above, p. 136, beginning Aditer api putratvam, and ending nihatāḥ śataśo 'surāḥ]. The nooses of Muru were destroyed; Nisunda and Naraka were slain; the way to the city Prāgjyotisha was again rendered safe. On the Jāruthī Āhvṛiti, Krātha, Śiśupāla with his men, Jarāsandha, Śaivya and Śatadhanvan[247] were conquered. So, too, having vanquished Rukmin in battle with thy car, resounding like Parjanya, and gleaming like the sun, thou didst obtain thy queen to be the object of thy love. (See above, p. 215.) Indradyumna was slain by thee in thy wrath, and the Yavanâ Kaserumat, and Śālva, the lord of Saubha; and Saubha was thrown down. Bhoja, equal to Kārtavīrya[248] in battle, was slain by thee on the Irāvatī, as well as both Gopati and Tālaketu. And having subdued to thyself Dvārakā, thou wilt cause the holy Bhogavatī and the Ṛishikā to flow to the ocean. Neither anger, nor envy, nor falsehood, nor cruelty, abides in thee, Dāśārha (Kṛishṇa): how then canst thou be deceitful? The rishis came to thee, [Achyuta,] whilst thou wast sitting in the midst of the Chaitya (sacrificial ground), resplendent with thy own brightness, and begged of thee security. [Then follow some lines which have been quoted above, p. 229, beginning Yugânte sarva-bhūtâni sankshipya, etc.]

VI. Although, as we have already seen from various passages of the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas, Kṛishṇa is generally identified with Vishṇu, and Vishṇu with Brahma, or the supreme deity, yet in a text quoted above (p. 49) from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, x. 33, 27, Kṛishṇa is spoken of as only a partial incarnation of the godhead. The same is the case in another passage in the first section of the same tenth book of the Bhāgavata. The king there says to Śuka that he has heard from him the history of the kings of the solar and lunar races, and among them of Yadu. He then asks the sage to relate the achievements of Vishṇu, the creator and soul of all things, who became partially incarnate (tatrâṁśenâvatīrṇasya Vishṇor vīryâṇi śaṁsa naḥ | avatīrya Yador vaṁśe bhagavân bhūta-bhâvanaḥ | kṛitavân yâni viśvâtmâ tâni no vada vistarât). Śuka in reply goes on to relate that the earth being afflicted by Daityas in the shape of proud princes, had, in the form of a cow, preferred her complaint to Brahmā, who had consequently gone with the other gods to supplicate the help of Vishṇu. Brahmā hears a voice in the sky:

[247] See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, pp. 428 ff. (vol. iv. pp. 80 ff. of Dr. Hall's ed.)
[248] See the first volume of this work, pp. 450 ff.

Bhāgavata Purāṇa, x. i. 21 ff.—Girāṁ samādhau gagane samīritāṁ niśamya Vedhās tridaśān uvācha ha | gām paurushīm me śṛiṇutāmarāḥ punar vidhīyatām āśu tathaiva māchiram | puraiva puṁsā (Īśvareṇa, Comm.) 'vadhṛito dharā-jvaro bhavadbhir aṁśair Yadushūpajanyatām | sa yāvad urvyāḥ bharam īśvareśvaraḥ sva-kāla-śaktyā kshapayaṁś chared bhuvi | Vasudeva-gṛihe sākshād bhagavān Purushaḥ paraḥ | janishyate tat-priyārthaṁ sambhavantu sura-striyaḥ | Vāsudeva-kalā 'nantaḥ sahasra-vadanaḥ svarāṭ | agrato bhavitā devo Hareḥ priya-chikīrshayā | Vishṇor māyā bhagavatī yayā sammohitaṁ jagat | ādishṭā prabhuṇā 'ṁśena kāryārthe sambhavishyati |

"Having, while in a state of contemplation, heard a voice uttered in the sky, Vedhas (Brahmā) said to the gods: 'Hear from me, immortals, the voice of Purusha, and then speedily act so [as it enjoins]. The distress of the earth was already understood by Purusha. Do you, in portions of yourselves, be born among the Yadus, whilst he, the god of gods, walks upon the earth, removing her burthen by his destructive power. The supreme divine Purusha shall be born in his own person (sākshāt) in the house of Vasudeva. To please him, let the wives of the gods be born. The infinite, thousand-faced, self-resplendent deity shall first become a portion of Vāsudeva, in order to gratify Hari. The divine Delusion of Vishṇu, by which the world is deceived, being commanded by the lord, shall be born in a portion of herself to effect the desired objects."

In the Vishṇu Purāṇa, also, the incarnation of Vishṇu is spoken of as that of a part, or even a part of a part. At the commencement of the fifth book of that work the following lines occur:

Nṛipānāṁ kathitaḥ sarvo bhavatā vaṁśa-vistaraḥ | Vaṁśānucharitaṁ chaiva yathāvad anuvarṇitam | Aṁśāvatāro brahmarshe yo 'yaṁ Yadu-kulodbhavaḥ | Vishṇos taṁ vistareṇāhaṁ śrotum ichchhāmy aśeshataḥ | Chakāra yāni karmāṇi bhagavān Purushottamaḥ | Aṁśāṁśenāvatīryor-vyāṁ tatra tāni mune vada | Parāśaraḥ uvācha | Maitreya śrūyatām etad yat pṛishṭo 'ham iha tvayā | Vishṇor aṁśāṁśa-sambhūti-charitaṁ jagato hitam |

"You have related to me the complete genealogy of the kings, and also the entire history of the races. I now wish, divine sage, to hear in full detail the particulars of the incarnation of a portion of Vishṇu which took place in the tribe of the Yadus. Tell me, Muni, what acts the divine Purushottama performed when he descended to the earth in a portion of a portion [of himself]. Parāśara replies: 'Hear, Maitreya, that which you have asked me, the history, beneficial to the world, of the birth of a portion of a portion of Vishṇu.'"

The sage proceeds to relate (see Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, pp. 493–497; pp. 249 ff. of the 4th vol. of Dr. Hall's ed.) how the earth had complained to Brahmā and the other gods that the Asura Kālanemi had revived in Kansa, and other demons also had been born as princes; so that she had to bear upon her surface many hosts of strong and haughty Daitya chiefs wearing celestial forms; and that she could not support the load. (V.P. v. 1. 12. Etasminn eva kāle tu bhūri-bhārāvapīḍitā | jagāma dharaṇī Merau samāje tridivaukasām | . . . . . 25 | akshauhiṇyo hi bahulāḥ divya-mūrti-dhṛitāṁ surāḥ | mahābalānāṁ dṛiptānāṁ daityendrāṇām mamopari | tad-bhūri-bhāra-pīḍārtā na śaknomy amareśvarāḥ | vibhartum ātmanā "tmānam iti vijñāpayāmi vaḥ | kriyatāṁ tat mahābhāgāḥ mama bhārāvatāraṇam | yathā rasātalaṁ nāhaṁ gachheyam ativihvalā).[249] Brahmā proposed that they should [249] The Greek writers, too, speak of the earth being burthened, but from a different cause, viz. with the load of men, and that Jupiter brought about the Trojan war for her relief. In the Helena of Euripides, vv. 38 ff., it is said: Πόλεμον γὰρ ἐισήνεγκεν Ἑλλήνων χθονὶ Καὶ Φρυξὶ δυστήνοισιν, ὡς ὄχλου βροτῶν Πλήθους τε κουφίσειε μητέρα χθόνα, Γνωτόν τε θείη τὸν κράτιστον Ἑλλάδος. "For he brought on a war between the land of the Greeks and the unhappy Phrygians, that he might relieve mother Earth of the crowd and multitude of mortals, and make known the bravest man in Greece."

Similarly in the Orestes of the same author, vv. 1639 ff., it is said: Ἐπεὶ θεοὶ τῷ τῆσδε καλλιστεύματι Ἕλληνας εἰς ἓν καὶ Φρύγας συνήγαγον, θανάτους τ' ἔθηκαν, ὡς ἀπαντλοῖεν χθονὸς Ὕβρισμα θνητῶν ἀφθόνου πληρώματος. "Since the gods by means of her beauty brought the Greeks and Phrygians into conflict, and occasioned deaths, in order that they might remove from the Earth the grievance of being superabundantly replenished with mortals."

And in the Scholia Minora on the Iliad, i. 5 (quoted in Heyne's Homer, Oxford, 1821), we read: Ἄλλοι δὲ ἀπὸ ἱστορίας τινὸς ἔιπον εἰρηκέναι τὸν Ὅμηρον· φασὶ γὰρ τὴν γῆν βαρουμένην ὑπὸ ἀνθρώπων πολυπληθείας, μηδεμιᾶς ἀνθρώπων ὄυσης εὐσεβείας, αἰτῆσαι τὸν Δία κὸυφισθῆναι τοῦ ἄχθους. Τὸν δὲ Δία, πρῶτον μὲν ἐνθὺς ποιῆσαι τὸν Θηβαϊκὸν πόλεμον, δι' οὗ πολλοὺς πάνυ ἀπωλέσεν. ὕστερον δὲ πάλιν συμβούλῳ τῷ Μώμῳ ἐχρήσατο, ἣν Διὸς βουλὴν Ὁμηρός φησιν. ἐπειδὴ οἷός τε ἦν κεραυνοῖς ἢ κατακλυσμοῖς πάντας διαφθεῖραι, τοῦτο τοῦ Μώμου κωλύσαντος, ὑποθεμένου δὲ αὐτῷ γνώμας δύο, τὴν Θέτιδος θνητογαμίαν, καὶ θυγατρὸς καλὴν γένναν, ἐξ ὧν ἀμφοτέρων πόλεμος Ἕλλησί τε καὶ βαρβάροις ἐγένετο, οὕτω συμβῆναι κουφισθῆναι τὴν γῆν, πολλῶν ἀναιρεθέντων. ἡ δὲ ἱστορία παρὰ Στασίνῳ τῷ τὰ Κύπρια πεποιηκότι, εἰπόντι οὕτως· Ἦν ὅτε μυρία φῦλα κατὰ χθόνα πλαζόμενα Βαθυστέρνου resort to Vishṇu, "who is the spirit of all, and of whom the universe consists," and "who constantly, for the sake of earth, descends in a very small portion of his essence, to establish righteousness below" (v. 32. sarvadaiva jagaty-arthe sa sarvātmā jaganmayaḥ | svalpāṁśenāvatīryorvyāṁ dharmasya kurute sthitim). The gods accordingly went to the milky sea, and lauded Vishṇu in a long hymn. Vishṇu was gratified by their praises, desired them to state their wishes, and assured them that these should be accomplished. Brahmā renewed his praises; and we are then told what happened when they were concluded:

58. Evaṁ saṁstūyamānas tu bhagavān parameśvaraḥ | Ujjahārātmanaḥ keśau sita-kṛishṇau mahāmune | Uvācha cha surān etau mat-keśāu vasudhā-tale | Avatīrya bhuvo bhāra-kleśa-hāniṁ karishyataḥ | Surāścha sakalāḥ svāṁśair avatīrya mahītale[250] | Kurvantu yuddham unmattaiḥ pūrvotpannair mahāsuraiḥ | Tataḥ kshayam aśeshās te Daiteyāḥ dharaṇītale | Prayāsyanti na sandeho mad-dṛik-pāta-vichūrṇitāḥ | Vasudevasya yā patnī Devakī devatopamā | Tasyāyam ashṭamo garbho[251] mat-keśo bhavitā surāḥ | Avatīrya cha tatrāyaṁ[252] Kaṁsam ghātayitā bhuvi |

πλάτος αἴης. Ζεὺς δὲ ἰδὼν ἐλέησε, καὶ ἐν πυκιναῖς πραπίδεσσι Σύνθετο κουφίσαι ἀνθρώπων καμβώτορα γαῖαν, Ῥιπίσας πολέμου μεγάλην ἔριν Ἰλιάκοιο· Ὄφρα κενώσειεν θανάτῳ βάρος· οἱ δ' ἐνὶ Τροίῃ Ἥρωες κτείνοντο. Διὸς δὲ τελείετο βουλή.

"Others have declared that Homer used the expression (Διὸς δὲ τελείετο βουλή) 'And the counsel of Zeus was fulfilled') in consequence of a certain history. For they relate that the Earth, being weighed down by the multitude of men, among whom there was no piety, prayed to Zeus to be relieved of the burthen; and that he had first caused the Theban war, whereby he destroyed very many. Afterwards he employed Momus as his counsellor, (an act) which Homer calls 'Zeus's consultation.' When he could have destroyed the whole of mankind by his thunderbolts or by deluges, but was dissuaded from doing so by Momus, who suggested two plans, the marriage of Thetis to a mortal, and the generation of a beautiful daughter, in consequence of which two events a war was occasioned between the Greeks and Barbarians,—it thus came to pass that the Earth was lightened, many being slain. The history is found in Stasinus, who composed the Cypria, and who speaks as follows: 'There was a time when myriads of races wandered over the Earth, on the breadth of the deep-bosomed land. But Zeus, beholding, pitied her, and in his wise mind resolved to relieve the all-nurturing Earth of [the load of] men, by exciting the great strife of the Ilian war, in order that by slaughter he might clear away the burthen: and the heroes were slain in the Troad. And the counsel of Zeus was fulfilled.'" See also above, p. 215, note 212; and Dronap., 2051 f.

[250] Another MS. reads mahītalam.

[251] Another MS. reads esha garbho 'shṭamas tasyāḥ.

[252] Another MS. reads tatrāham.

Kālanemiṁ samudbhūtam ityuktvā 'ntardadhe Hariḥ | Adṛiśyāya tatas tasmai praṇipatya mahāmune | Meru-pṛishṭham surāḥ jagmur avateruś cha bhūtale |

"Being thus lauded, the divine Parameśvara plucked out two of his own hairs, a white and a black, and said to the deities, 'These two hairs of mine, descending to the earth, shall remove her burthen and sufferings. And let all the deities, descending in portions of themselves to the earth, fight against those mad Asuras who were formerly born. Then all these sons of Diti (the Asuras) shall no doubt perish, being annihilated by the glances of my eyes. This my hair, gods, shall become the eighth child of Devakī, the wife of Vasudeva who (Devakī) resembles the goddesses. And this [hair] descending there, shall destroy Kaṁsa, the Kālanemi who has been born.' Having thus spoken, Hari disappeared. Having then bowed down to him the unseen, the gods went to the top of Meru, and descended on the earth."

The following are the remarks which Ratnagarbha, one of the commentators on the Vishṇu Purāṇa, makes on the first of the preceding passages (p. 254), and which have reference to the sequel also:

"Chakāra" iti | tatra Kṛishṇāvatāre ati-parichchhinna-manushyākāra-līlā-vigraheṇāvirbhāvād aṁśāṁśena ity uktam upachārāt | na tu śakti-hrāseṇa Kṛishṇādy-avatāreshv api viśva-rūpa-darśana-sarvaiśvaryādy-ukteḥ | Nanu aṁśino 'ṁśoddhāreṇa śakty-ādi-hrāsas tathā 'ṁśasyāpi tad-apekshya alpa-śaktitvādikaṁ dhānya-rāśy-ādi-vibhāgaḥ iva prasajyeta iti ched na | prakāśa-svarūpe tad-abhāvāt | pradīpasya hi tan-mūlaka-dīpāntarasya vā upādhi-bhede 'pi śakty-ādi-sāmya-darśanāt "pūrṇam adaḥ pūrṇam idam pūrṇāt pūrṇaṁ udachyate | pūrṇasya pūrṇam ādāya pūrṇam evāvaśishyate" iti śruteḥ | "param Brahma narākṛiti gūḍham param Brahma manushya-lingaṁ Kṛishṇas tu bhagavān svayam" ityādi vākyebhyaś cha | yas tu "mat-keśau vasudhā-tale" ity-ādāv "ayaṁ Kaṁsaṁ ghātayitā" ity atra keśa-vyapadeśaḥ sa Brahmaṇaḥ paripūrṇasya bhū-bhāra-haraṇa-rūpaṁ kāryam aty-alpa-yantra-sādhyam iti khyāpayituṁ na tu keśayoḥ Rāma-Kṛishṇatvaṁ vaktum | jaḍayoḥ keśayos tad-dehakshetrajnatvābhāvena tat-kāryaṁ kartum aśaktatvāt | keśātmaka-māyayodbhava-Rāma-Kṛishṇa-dehāv ādiśya [āviśya?] bhagavān eva tat tat karishyati iti ched om iti brūmaḥ phalato 'viśeshāt "kṛishṇāshṭamyām aham niśi" iti svayam evoktatvāch cha ity alaṁ vistareṇa |

"Purushottama is here figuratively said to have become incarnate with a portion of a portion of himself, because in the Kṛishṇa incarnation he was manifested in a merely sportive body in the very circumscribed form of a man, and not because of any diminution of his power, since even in the Kṛishṇa and other incarnations he is said to have shown himself in every possible form, and to have possessed all divine power, and so forth. But is it not the case that if a portion is taken from a whole composed of parts, there is a decrease of power, etc. [in that whole], and that thus an inferiority of power will attach to the portion relatively to the whole, just as when a heap of grain, or any other such whole, is divided? I answer, No; since such a diminution does not occur in him whose nature is light; for though there is a seeming difference in the individuality of one lamp, and of another lamp derived from it, yet an equality of power is perceived in each; agreeably to the text from the Veda (the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiv. 8, 1, p. 1094= Bṛih. Āraṇyaka Upan. beginning of adhyāya 7, p. 948 of ed. in Bibliotheca Ind.), 'That is full, and this is full; a full arises out of a full: if a full be taken from a full, a full remains;'[253] and also agreeably to such texts as this, 'The supreme Brahma with the form, and with the characteristics, of a man, is a great mystery; but Kṛishṇa is the lord himself.' And the employment of the term 'hairs' in the words, 'My hairs shall descend to the earth,' and 'This hair shall slay Kansa,' etc., is intended to signify that the task of removing the earth's burthen was such as Brahma in all his plenitude could effect by a very slight instrumentality, and not to assert that the two hairs were identical with [Bala]rāma and Kṛishṇa: for two insensible hairs, not being conscious spirits animating the bodies of those two persons, could not fulfil their task. If it be said that the lord occupying the bodies of Balarāma and Kṛishṇa, which were produced by the magical operation of the hairs, will do so and so, we reply, 'Yes, for there is no difference in the result, and because he himself said, 'I [shall be born] on the eighth night of the dark fortnight of the moon.' But there is no occasion for further prolixity."[254]

[253] See Dr. Roer's translation of this verse, with his explanatory note at p. 247 of the Bibliotheca Indica, vol. ii., part iii. The Commentary on the verse in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, p. 1157 of Weber's edition, may also be consulted. The Atharva-veda has the following verse; x. 8, 29: Pūrṇat pūrṇam udachati pūrṇam pūrṇena sichyate | uto tad adya vidyāma yatas tat parishichyate | "He takes a full from a full: the full is sprinkled with the full: and may we to-day know that from which that is sprinkled."

The passage which follows is from another commentary on the same text:[255]

Ujjahāra | utpāṭitavān | ayam bhāvaḥ | mama dushkaraṁ ched yushmābhiḥ sāhāyyaṁ kāryaṁ syāt | na tv etad asti bhū-bhārāpaharaṇādau mahaty api kārye mat-keśa-mātrasyaiva samarthatvād iti | na tu keśamātrāvatāraḥ iti mantavyam | "mad-dṛik-pāta-vichūrṇitaḥ" "kṛishṇāshṭamyām aham utpatsyāmi" ityādishu sākshāt svāvatāratvokteḥ | sita-kṛishṇa-keśoddhāraṇaṁ cha śobhārtham eva | "Ujjahāra means that he 'plucked out' the hairs. The sense is as follows: 'It would be a difficult matter if aid had to be rendered to me by you: but the same is not the case in regard to the task, though a great one, of removing the load of the earth, etc., since my hairs alone are equal to it.' But it is not to be supposed that there was nothing beyond an incarnation of the mere hairs; for his own incarnation is distinctly asserted in the words 'annihilated by the glance of my eye,' 'I shall be born on the eighth night of the dark fortnight of the moon,' etc., etc. The mention of his plucking out white and black hairs is for the purpose of ornament."[256]

The same story about the production of Balarāma and Kṛishṇa from two hairs is also told in the Mahābhārata, Ādi-parvan, 7306 ff.:

Tair eva sārdhaṁ tu tataḥ sa devo jagāma Nārāyaṇam aprameyam | anantam avyaktam ajam purāṇaṁ sanātanaṁ viśvam ananta-rūpam | sa chāpi tad vyadadhāt sarvam eva tataḥ sarve sambabhūvur dharaṇyām | sa chāpi keśau Harir udvavarha śuklam ekam aparaṁ chāpi kṛishṇam | tau chāpi keśau niviśetāṁ Yadūnāṁ kule striyau Devakīṁ Rohiṇīṁ cha | tayor eko Baladevo babhūva yo 'sau śvetas tasya devasya keśaḥ | Kṛishṇo dvitīyaḥ Keśavaḥ sambabhūva keśo yo 'sau varṇataḥ kṛishṇaḥ uktaḥ |

"Along with them (viz. four preceding Indras and a fifth deity sprung from Indra) the god (Indra) went to Nārāyaṇa, immeasurable, infinite, undiscernible, unborn, primeval, everlasting, universal, endless [254] The preceding copy of the text, and commentary on the text, from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, have been kindly copied, and carefully collated, for me by Professor Monier Williams.

[255] I am indebted to Professor Goldstücker for copying this passage for me.

[256] See Professor Wilson's notes on these passages of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, viz. in p. 492, and in p. 497 (pp. 247 and 258, vol. v., of Dr. Hall's ed.).

in his forms; and he fulfilled all [that they desired]. Then they were all born on earth. Hari also plucked out two hairs, one white and the other black. These two hairs entered into two women of the tribe of the Yadus, Devakī and Rohiṇī. One of them, the white hair of the god, became Baladeva; while the second hair (keśa), which was called black (kṛishṇa) in colour, became Kṛishṇa, Keśava."

The following remarks are made on this passage by Nīlakaṇṭha, one of the commentators on the Mahābhārata:

Atra keśāv eva reto-rūpau Pāṇḍavānām iva Rāma-Kṛishṇayor api prakaraṇa-sangaty-arthaṁ sākshād deva-retasaḥ utpatter avaktavyatvāt[257] | ataḥ eva Devakyāṁ Rohiṇyāncha sākshāt keśa-praveśaḥ uchyate na tu Vasudeve | tathā sati tu "devānāṁ reto varshaṁ varshasya retaḥ oshadhayaḥ" ityādi-śrauta-pranādyā 'smad-ādi-vat tayor api vyavadhānena deva-prabhavatvaṁ syāt | tathā cha "etan nānā-'vatārāṇāṁ nidhānaṁ vījam avyayam" iti bhagavataḥ sākshād matsyādy-avatāravījatvam uchyamānaṁ virudhyeta | apicha keśa-retasor deha-jatve samāne 'pi retaḥ-prabhavatve 'rvāksrotastvena manushyatvam putratvaṁ cha syāt| tathā cha "Kṛishṇas tu bhagavān svayam" iti śrīmad-bhāgavatoktiḥ sangachhate | na cha keśoddhāraṇāt Kṛishṇasyāpy aṁśatvam pratīyate iti vāchyam | keśasya dehāvayavatvābhāvāt | tasmād Namuchi-badhe kartavye yathā apām phene vajrasya praveśaḥ evaṁ Devakī-Rohiṇyor jaṭhare praveśe kartavye keśadvayena dvāra-bhūtena bhagavataḥ kārtsnyena eva āvirbhāvaḥ eshṭavyaḥ iti yuktam |

"Here the two hairs are of the nature of seed productive of Balarāma and Kṛishṇa, just as in the case of the Pāṇḍavas, [and this expression is employed] for the sake of conformity to what had preceded, since it is manifest that one cannot speak of production from the seed of a god. For this reason it is distinctly said that the hairs entered into Devakī and Rohiṇī [the mothers], and not into Vasudeva [the father]. But such being the case, according to the process of derivation described in the Veda, that 'rain is the seed of the gods, and plants are the seed of rain,' etc., these two persons also (Balarāma and Kṛishṇa) will be mediately the offspring of the deity, just as is the case with ourselves and other beings. And thus—since 'this substance of the different incarnations is an undecaying seed,'[258]—it would be opposed to that declaration to predicate of the deity that he is literally the seed of the fish, and other incarnations. Further, although hairs and seed spring equally from the body,' yet in the case of production from seed, humanity and sonship will arise, after the manner of the inferior animals. And thus the saying of the Bhāgavata, that 'Kṛishṇa is the Lord himself,' is not contradicted. And it must not be said that from a hair being plucked out, Kṛishṇa also is shown to be only a portion [of the deity]; for a hair is not a part of the body. Wherefore, just as, when [the demon] Namuchi was to be slain, the thunderbolt [of Indra] entered into the foam of the waters,[259] so when an entrance

[257] The MS. in the E. I. Office Library reads avas'ya-vaktavyatvāt |

[258] I put these words between inverted commas, as they appear to be a metrical quotation, though I am not aware whence it is derived.

[259] I am indebted to Dr. Aufrecht for pointing out to me the legend to which reference is here made, viz. that mentioned in R.V. viii. 14, 13: Apām phenena Namucheḥ śiraḥ Indrodavartayaḥ | viśvāḥ yad ajayaḥ spṛidhaḥ | "Thou, Indra, didst strike off the head of Namuchi with the foam of the waters, when thou didst vanquish all opponents." On this Sāyaṇa tells the following story: Purā kila Indro 'surān jitvā Namuchim asuraṁ grahītuṁ na śaśāka | sa cha yudhyamānas tenāsurena jagṛihe | sa cha gṛihītam Indram evam avochat "tvāṁ visṛijāmi rātrāv ahni cha śushkenārdreṇa chāyudhena yadi māṁ na himsīr" iti | sa Indras tena visṛishṭaḥ sann ahorātrayoḥ sandhau s'ushkārdra-vilakshaṇena phenena tasya s'iras chichcheda | ayam artho 'syām pratipādyate | He Indra apām phenena vajrībhūtena Namucher Asurasya śiraḥ udavartayaḥ | "Formerly Indra having conquered the Asuras, was unable to seize the Asura Namuchi; and fighting, was seized by the Asura. The latter said to Indra, whom he had seized: 'I release thee if thou wilt not smite me by night, or by day, with a dry or a wet weapon.' Indra, being released by him, cut off his head at the junction of day and night with foam, which is different both from dry and wet. This purport is set forth in this verse." See also S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, xii 7, 3, 1 ff., quoted in the fifth volume of this work, p. 94; and also Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 7, 1, 6 f.: Indro Vṛitraṁ hatvā asurān parābhāvya Namuchim āsuraṁ na alabhata | taṁ S'achyā 'grihṇāt | tau samalabhetām | so 'smād abhiśunataro 'bhavat | so 'bravīt "sandhāṁ sandadhāvahai | atha tvā vaḥ (ava ?) srakshyāmi | na mā s'ushkeṇa na ārdreṇa hanāḥ na divā na naktam" iti | sa etam apām phenam asinchat | na vai esha śushko na ārdraḥ | vyushṭā āsīd anuditaḥ sūryaḥ | na vai etad divā na naktam | tasya etasmin loke apām phenena śiraḥ udavartayat | "Indra, after having slain Vṛitra and defeated the Asuras, could not catch Namuchi, who was one of that race. He (Namuchi) captured him (Indra) with S'achi [or by force]. These two laid hold of each other. The one (Namuchi) was stronger than the other (Indra). He (Namuchi) said: 'Let us make an agreement; then I shall let thee go. Promise that thou wilt smite me neither with dry nor wet, neither by day nor by night.' He (Indra) anointed (the thunderbolt) with this foam of the waters, which was neither dry nor wet. It was twilight,—the sun not risen; neither day nor night. He smote off his head with the foam of the waters." The story is also told in the Indra-vijaya (published by Holtzmann), vv. 185 ff.; Mahābhārata, Udyoga-parvan, vv. 320 ff.

This story of Indra destroying Namuchi with foam is again told in the Mahābhārata, S'alya-parvan (vv. 2434 ff.): Namuchir Vāsavād bhītaḥ sūrya-raśmiṁ samāvisat | tenendraḥ sakhyam akarot samayanchedam abravīt | "na chārdreṇa na śushkeṇa na was to be made into the wombs of Devakī and Rohiṇī, the manifestation of the deity in all his plenitude is to be understood as effected through the medium of the two hairs."

I add an interesting passage from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 22, 36 ff., where Vishṇu is first of all placed on a level with Brahmā and Śiva; but afterwards declared to be the highest form of Brahma:

36. Dve rūpe Brahmaṇas tasya mūrtaṁ chāmūrtaṁ eva cha | kshara-kshara-svarūpe te sarva-bhūteshv avasthite | 37. aksharam paramam Brahma kshara̱ṁ sarvam idaṁ jagat | 38. eka-deśa-stkitasyāgner jyotsnā vistāriṇī yathā | parasya Brahmaṇaḥ śaktis tathedam akhilaṁ jagat | 39. tatrāthāsanna-dūratvād bahutva-svalpatāmayaḥ | jyotsnā-bhedo 'sti tachchhaktes tadvad Maitreya vidyate | 40. Brahma-Vishṇu-Śivāḥ brahman pradhānāḥ Brahma-śaktayaḥ | tataś cha devāḥ Maitreya nyūnāḥ Yakshādayas tataḥ | 41. Tato manushyāḥ paśavo mṛiga-pakshi-sarīsṛipāḥ | nyūnāḥ nyūnatarāś chaiva vṛiksha-gulmādayas tataḥ | tad etad akshayaṁ nityaṁ jagad muni-varākhilam | āvirbhāva-tirobhāva-janma-nāśa-vikalpavat | 42. Sarva-śaktimayo Vishṇuḥ svarūpam Brahmaṇaḥ param | mūrtaṁ yad yogibhiḥ pūrvaṁ yogārambheshu chintyate | 43. sālambano mahāyogaḥ savījo yatra saṁsthitaḥ | manasy avyāhate samyag yunjatāṁ jāyate mune | 44. sa paraḥ sarva-śaktīnām Brahmaṇaḥ samanantaraḥ | mūrta-brahma mahābhāga sarva-brahmamayo Hariḥ | 45. tatra sarvam idam protam otaṁ chaivākhilaṁ jagat | tato jagat jagat tasmin sa jagach chākhilam mune | 46. ksharāksharamayo Vishṇur bibharty akhilam īśvaraḥ | purushāvyākṛitamayam bhūshaṇāstra-svarūpavat |

rātrau nāpi chāhani | badhishyāmy asura-śreshṭha sakhe satyena te śape" | evaṁ sa kṛitvā samayaṁ dṛishṭvā nīhāram īśvaraḥ | chichhedāsya śiro rājann apām phenena Vāsavaḥ | tach chhiro Namuches chhinnaṁ pṛishṭhataḥ S'akram anviyāt | bho mitra-hana pāpeti bruvāṇaṁ S'akram antikāt | evaṁ sa śīrasā tena chodyamānaḥ punaḥ punaḥ | Pitāmahāya santaptaḥ etam arthaṁ nyavedayat | tam abravīt loka-gurur aruṇāyāṁ yathāvidhi | ishṭvopaspṛiśa devendra tīrthe pāpa-bhayāpahe | "Namuchi being afraid of Indra, entered into a ray of the sun. Indra formed a friendship with him, and uttered this agreement: 'I shall neither slay thee with wet nor with dry, neither in the night nor in the day; I swear in truth to thee, my friend, thou most eminent of Asuras.' Having made this agreement, the lord Vāsava (Indra), beholding a fog, [when it was neither night nor day], cut off his head with the foam of the waters [which was neither wet nor dry]. That head of Namuchi, after being cut off, followed close after Indra, calling out, 'O wicked slayer of thy friend.' Being thus again and again pressed by the head, and being distressed, he [Indra] represented the matter to Pitāmaha (Brahmā). The lord (or teacher) of the world (Brahmā) said to him: 'Having sacrificed, touch [the waters] in the Aruṇā, that sacred spot, which removes sin and fear,'" etc.

"Of that Brahma there are two conditions, one possessed of form, the other formless. These decaying and undecaying states exist in all creatures. The undecaying is the highest Brahma; the decaying is this entire universe. Just as light is diffused from a fire which is confined to one spot, so is this whole universe the [diffused] energy of the supreme Brahma. And as light shows a difference, greater or less, according to its nearness or distance from the fire, so is there a variation in the energy of Brahma. Brahmā, Vishṇu and Śiva are his chief energies. The deities are inferior to them; the Yakshas, etc., to the deities; men, cattle, wild animals, birds and reptiles to the Yakshas, etc.; and trees and plants are the lowest of all [these energies]. This entire universe, which, O most excellent Muni, is subject to appearance and disappearance, to production, to destruction, and to change, is yet undecaying and eternal. Vishṇu, containing all the energies, is the highest form of Brahma, which, at the commencement of their abstraction, is contemplated by Yogins as invested with shape. Directed to him, the great union (mahāyoga) with its basis, and its germs, is produced in the undistracted minds of the devotees. Hari (Vishṇu) is the highest and most immediate of all the energies of Brahma, the embodied Brahma, formed of the whole of Brahma. On him this entire universe is woven and interwoven: from him is the world, and the world is in him; and he is the whole universe. Vishṇu, the lord, consisting of what is perishable as well as what is imperishable, sustains everything, both Purusha and Prakṛiti, in the form of his ornaments and weapons." [The writer goes on to explain what is meant by the last clause. Vishṇu bears or wears Purusha as the Kaustubha gem, Prakṛiti as the Śrīvatsa, etc. See Wilson's translation, vol. ii. p. 94 of Dr. Hall's ed.]

In the earlier part of the same section (Wilson, vol. ii., pp. 86 f.) it is said that all kings, whether of men, gods, Daityas, Dānavas, or Rākshasas, are portions of Vishṇu.

VII. In several of the passages which have been already cited in the preceding pages, Vishṇu has been identified with the supreme spirit (see above, pp. 38, 50, 181). I shall now proceed to adduce some others of the same kind from the Mahābhārata. In the Śānti-parvan, vv. 1500 ff. Yudhishṭhira says to Kṛishṇa:

Tava Kṛishṇa prasādena nayena cha balena cha | buddhyā cha Yadu-śārdūla tathā vikramaṇena cha | punaḥ prāptam idaṁ rājyam pitṛi-

paitāmaham mayā | namas te Puṇḍarīkaksha punaḥ punar arindama | tvām ekam āhuḥ Purushaṁ tvām āhuḥ Sāttvatāṁ gatim | nāmabhis tvām bahuvidhaiḥ stuvanti prayatāḥ dvijāḥ | viśvakarman namas te 'stu viśvātman viśva-sambhava | Vishṇo jishṇo Hare Kṛishṇa Vaikuṇṭha Purushottama | Adityāḥ saptadhā tvaṁ tu purāṇe garbhatāṁ gataḥ | Pṛiśnigarbhas tvam evaikas triyugaṁ tvāṁ vadanty api | Suchisravāḥ Hṛishīkeśo ghṛitāchir haṁsaḥ uchyase | trichakshuḥ Sambhur ekas tvaṁ vibhur Dāmodaro 'pi cha | Varāho 'gnir vṛihadbhānur vṛishabhas Tārkshyalakshaṇaḥ | . . . . 1514. Yonis tvam asya pralayaścha Kṛishṇa tvam evedaṁ sṛijasi viśvam agre | viśvanchedaṁ tvad-vaśe viśvayone namo 'stu te śārṇga-chakrāsi-pāṇe |

"By thy favour, Kṛishṇa, chief of the Yadus, and policy, and power, and understanding, and valour, I have recovered this kingdom of my father and grandfathers. Adoration be to thee, lotus-eyed, subduer of thy foes, again and again. Thee alone men call Purusha: thee alone they call the refuge of the Sātvats. Devout twice-born men laud thee by names of various kinds. Glory be to thee, thou maker of all, thou soul of all, thou source of all, Vishṇu, conqueror, Hari, Kṛishṇa, Vaikuṇṭha, chief of spirits (or males). Of old thou didst become the sevenfold offspring of Aditi.[260] Thou alone art Pṛiśnigarbha: they also call thee [him who exists in] the three ages (yugas). Thou art called Suchiśravas, Hṛishīkeśa, Ghṛitāchi, and Hansa. Thou alone art the three-eyed Sambhu (Mahādeva) and Dāmodara, the pervading, the Boar, Agni, Vṛihadbhānu,[261] the Bull, he whose sign is Tārkshya (Garuḍa)." A long list of other titles then follows, concluding with these words: "Thou art the source and the destruction of this universe, Kṛishṇa: it is thou who createst it in the beginning, and it is all in thy power, thou source of all things: glory be to thee who wieldest the bow, the discus, and the sword."

A little further on, at vv. 1604 ff., a long hymn of Bhīshma to Kṛishṇa is given, in which the following lines occur:

1609 | Yasmin viśvāni bhūtāni tishṭhanti cha viśanti cha | guṇabhūtāni bhūteśe sūtre maṇi-gaṇāḥ iva | yasmin nitye tate tantau dṛidhe srag iva tishṭhati | sad-asad grathitaṁ viśvaṁ viśvāṅge viśva-karmaṇi |

[260] This, I suppose, refers to the Ādityas being in the Veda spoken of as only seven in number. See above, pp. 114 ff.

[261] A name of Agni.

Harim̃ sahasra-śirasam̃ sahasrā-charaṇekshaṇam | sahasra-bāhu-mukuṭam̃ sahasra-vadanojjvalam | prāhur Nārāyaṇam̃ devam̃ yam̃ viśvasya parāyaṇam | anīyasām anīyāmsam̃ sthavishṭham̃ cha sthavīyasām | garīyasam̃ garishṭham cha śreshṭham̃ cha śreyasām api | yam̃ vākeshv anuvākeshu nishatsūpanishatsu cha | gṛiṇanti satya-karmāṇam̃ satyam̃ satyeshu sāmasu | ityādi | . . . . . 1616. Sarvātmā sarva-vit sarvaḥ sarvajnaḥ sarva-bhāvanaḥ | yam̃ devam̃ Devakī devī Vasudevād ajījanat | Bhaumasya Brahmaṇo guptyai dīptam̃ Agnim ivāraṇiḥ | . . . . 1622. Yasmin lokāḥ sphurantīme jale śakunayo yathā |

"In whom, the lord of beings, all beings, existing as his qualities, abide and enter, like gems [strung] upon a thread: upon whom, the universal-membered artificer of all things, extended as a strong and eternal thread, the universe, existent and non-existent, abides, arranged, like a chaplet; Hari, the thousand-headed, thousand-footed, thousand-eyed, with a thousand arms and diadems, resplendent with a thousand faces, whom they call Nārāyaṇa, the god who transcends all, the minutest of the minute, the vastest of the vast, the greatest of the great, the most eminent of the eminent, whom, true, and true in act, they celebrate in 'vākas,' 'anuvākas,' in 'nishads,'[262] and in 'upanishads,' and in true 'sāma'-hymns, . . . 1616. the soul of all, the omniscient, the all, the all-knowing, the producer of all, the god whom the goddess Devakī bore to Vasudeva, for the preservation of the terrestrial deity (i.e. the Vedas, Brāhmans and sacrifices, Comm.) as Araṇi (the wood used for kindling fire),[263] produced the flaming Agni. . . . . 1622. In whom these worlds flutter, like birds in water," etc.

[262] This is the only place in which I have ever met with this word. I am unable to say whether Indian literature contains any such writings as 'nishads,' or whether the term is a purely fictitious one, invented by the author of this passage to denote a principal and original set of writings to which the Upanishads may have formed, in his idea, a secondary and supplemental class, as the Upapurānas do to the Purānas. Nīlakaṇṭha, one of the commentators (whether conjecturally, or on good grounds, I cannot say), explains nishatsu as meaning karmāngādy-avabaddha-devatādi-jnāna-vākyeshu, "works treating of the knowledge of the deities, etc., connected with the ceremonial part of the Veda," etc. The Upanishads "reveal the knowledge of soul alone" (kevalātma-jnāpaka-vākyeshu). Vākas, according to the same authority, "make known ceremonies generally" (sāmānyataḥ karma-prakāśakeshu); while anuvākas are "texts of the Brāhmaṇas, explanatory of the sense of the mantras, or Vedic hymns" (mantrārtha-vivaraṇa-bhūteshu brahmaṇa-vākyeshu).

[263] See the 5th vol. of this work, pp. 208 ff.

In the following passage, also from the Śānti-parvan, Kṛishṇa identifies himself with the supreme Spirit, and represents Brahmā and Mahādeva as having proceeded from him. In it the writer likewise endeavours to explain away the effect of certain texts in other parts of the poem (see above, pp. 185–204), in which Kṛishṇa is related to have worshipped Mahādeva, and which were no doubt felt to be inconsistent with the supreme deity of the former. The difficulty is attempted to be overcome by the explanation that in worshipping Rudra, he was only worshipping himself. In the verses 13133 ff. Arjuna asks Kṛishṇa to interpret the different appellations which had been applied to him in the Vedas and Purāṇas; and this Kṛishṇa accordingly proceeds to do, remarking by the way that Arjuna had been of old declared to be his own half[264] (tvaṁ hi me 'rdhaṁ smritaḥ purā). Nārāyaṇa (i.e. Vishṇu), he says, was the source of all things, and from him Brahmā and Śiva were produced; the one from his good pleasure, the other from his anger (13140. Yasya prasādajo Brahmā Rudraścha krodha-sambhavaḥ). He then goes on (13144): Brāhme rātri-kshaye prāpte tasya hy amita-tejasaḥ | prasādāt prādurabhavat padmam padma-nibhekshaṇa | tato Brahmā samabhavat sa tasyaiva prasādajaḥ | ahnaḥ kshaye lalāṭāchcha suto devasya vai tathā | krodhāvishṭasya sanjajne Rudraḥ saṁhāra-kārakaḥ | etau dvau vibudha-śreshṭhau prasāda-krodha-jāv ubhau | tad-ādeśita-panthānau sṛishṭi-saṁhāra-kārakau | nimitta-mātram tāv atra sarva-prāṇi-vara-pradau | kapardī jaṭilo muṇḍaḥ śmaśāna-gṛiha-sevakaḥ | ugra-vrata-dharo Rudro yogī parama-dāruṇaḥ | Daksha-kratu-haraśchaiva Bhaga-netra-haras tathā | Nārāyaṇātmako jneyaḥ Pāṇḍaveya yuge yuge | tasmin hi pūjyamāne vai deva-deve Maheśvare | sampūjito bhavet Pārtha devo Nārāyaṇaḥ prabhuḥ | aham ātmā hi lokānām viśveshām Pāṇḍu-nandana | 13152. tasmād ātmānam evāgre Rudrāṁ sampūjayāmy aham | yady ahaṁ nārchayeyaṁ vai Īśānāṁ varadaṁ Śivam | ātmānaṁ nārchayet kaśchid iti me bhāvitātmanaḥ | mayā pramāṇaṁ hi kṛitaṁ lokaḥ samanuvartate | pramāṇāni hi pūjyāni tatas tam pūjayāmy aham | yas taṁ vetti sa māṁ vetti yo 'nu taṁ sa hi mām anu | Rudro Nārāyaṇaś chaiva sattvam ekaṁ dvidhākṛitaṁ | loke charati Kaunteya vyakti-sthaṁ sarva-karmasu | na hi me kenachid deyo varaḥ Pāṇḍava-nandana | iti sanchintya manasā purāṇam Rudram īśvaram | putrārtham ārādhitavān aham ātmānam ātmanā | na hi Vishṇuḥ [264] See the other passages about their identity, or intimate union, above, pp. 228 ff.

praṇamati kasmaichit vibudhāya cha | ṛite ātmānam eveti tato Rudram bhajāmy aham | sabrahmakāḥ sarudrāścha sendrāḥ devāḥ saharshibhiḥ | archayanti sura-śreshṭhaṁ devaṁ Nārāyaṇaṁ Harim | bhavishyatāṁ vartatāncha bhūtānānchaiva Bhārata | sarveshām agraṇīr Vishṇuḥ sevyaḥ pūjyaścha nityaśaḥ ityādi |

"When the end of Brahmā's night had arrived, there sprang from the good pleasure of that being of boundless power a lotus, O thou whose eyes are like a lotus. From it was produced Brahmā, who was the offspring of his (Vishṇu's) good pleasure; and at the end of the day Rudra the destroyer was born from the forehead of the god when he was possessed with anger. These two eminent gods, produced [the one] from his good pleasure, [the other] from his anger,[265] have their

[265] I quote the following from the Maitrī Upanishad, 5th Prapāṭhaka: Tamo vai idam agre āsīd ekam | tat pare syāt | tat tat pareṇa īritaṁ vishamatvam prayāti | etad rūpaṁ vai rajaḥ | tad rajaḥ khalv īritaṁ vishamatvam prayāti | etad vai sattvasya rūpam | tat sattvam eva īritaṁ rasaḥ samprāsravat | so 'mśo 'yaṁ yaś chetā-mātraḥ pratipurushaḥ khetrajñaḥ sankalpādhyavasāyābhimāna-lingaḥ | Prajāpatir Viśvā ity asya prāg uktāḥ etās tanavaḥ | atha yo ha khalu vāva asya tāmaso 'mśo 'sau sa brahmachāriṇo yo 'yaṁ Rudraḥ | atha yo ha khalu vāva asya rājaso 'mśo 'sau sa brahmachāriṇo yo 'yam Brahmā | atha yo ha khalu vāva asya sāttviko 'mśo 'sau sa brahmachāriṇo yo 'yaṁ Vishṇuḥ | sa vai esha ekas tridhā bhūto 'shṭadhā ekādaśadhā dvādaśadhā aparimitadhā vā udbhūtaḥ udbhūtatvād bhūtam bhūteshu charati pravishṭaḥ sa bhūtānām adhipatir babhūva | ity asā ātmā antar bahiś cha antar bahiś cha | This passage is translated as follows by Professor Cowell: "Verily this was at the first darkness alone; it abode in the Supreme; then, being set in motion by the Supreme, it passes into inequality. This condition becomes activity (rajas): this activity, being set in motion, passes into inequality. This becomes the condition of Goodness. This goodness alone was set in motion; and Flavour flowed forth. This is a portion [of the Soul] which is only measured by the Soul, reflected in each individual, cognizant of the body, and possessing as its signs volition, ascertainment, and consciousness. Prajāpati, Viśwā—these and the like, before mentioned, are its forms. As for its darkness-characterized" [tāmasaḥ] "portion, that, O ye students, is the same as Rudra; as for its activity-characterized" [rājasaḥ] "portion, that, O students, is the same as Brahman; and as for its goodness-characterized" [sāttvikaḥ] "portion, that, O students, is the same as Vishṇu. He truly is one, existing as threefold, as eightfold, as elevenfold, as twelvefold, as infinite fold; he is manifested everywhere; and, from being thus manifested, he is the Being; he enters and pervades all beings, he is the lord of beings. Thus he, the Soul, is within and without, within and without."

In the Vāyu-purāṇa, sect. 66, as quoted by Professor Aufrecht in his "Catalogus Codicum Sanscriticorum," p. 56*b*, it is declared by Sūta that there is but one God, who assumed three forms (rājasī, sāttvikī, tāmasī tanūs) for the creation, preservation, and destruction of the world. In the Devā-Bhāgavata Purāṇa, book i., sect. 4, v. 46, quoted in the same Catalogue, p. 80a, Nārada tells Vyāsa that Vishṇu had once spoken to Brahmā as follows: Srashṭā tvam pālakaś chāhaṁ Haraḥ saṁhāra-kārakaḥ | courses prescribed by him, [and are] the accomplishers [respectively] of creation and destruction. In this, these bestowers of boons on all creatures are merely instrumental causes. Rudra, with braided hair and matted locks, shaven, the frequenter of cemeteries, the performer of awful rites, the devotee, the very terrible, he who swept away Daksha's sacrifice, and put out Bhaga's eyes, is to be understood by thee to possess in every age the nature of Nārāyaṇa. For when that god of gods Maheśvara is worshipped, then, son of Pṛithā, the god Nārāyaṇa, the lord, will also be worshipped. I am the soul of all the worlds. 13152. It was therefore myself whom I formerly worshipped as Rudra. If I were not to worship Īśāna, the boon-bestowing S'iva, no one would worship myself [or the Soul]—this is [the reflection made] by me who am contemplative in spirit. An authoritative example is set by me [which] the world follows.[266] Authoritative examples are to be reverenced: hence I reverence him (S'iva). He who knows him knows me; he who loves him loves me.[267] Rudra and Ṇārāyaṇa, one essence, divided into two, operate in the world, in a manifested form, in all acts. Reflecting in my mind that no boon could be conferred upon me by any one, I [yet] adored the ancient Rudra, the lord, [that is] I, with myself adored myself, to obtain a son (see p. 195). For Vishṇu does not do homage to any god, excepting himself: hence I [in this sense] worship Rudra. The gods, including Brahmā, Rudra, and Indra, together with the rishis, worship the god Nārāyaṇa, Hari, the most eminent of the deities. Vishṇu the chief of all who shall be, are, or have been, is to be served and worshipped continually."

In the following passage (Anuśāsana-parvan, vv. 6295 ff.), some kṛitaḥ keneti sa tarkaḥ kriyate veda-pāragaiḥ | 47 | Jagat-sanjanane śaktis tvayi vartati rājasī | sāttvikī mayi Rudre cha tāmasī parikīrtitā | 48 | tayā virahitas tvaṁ tu na hy etat karaṇe prabhuḥ | nāham pālayituṁ śaktaḥ saṁhartuṁ nāpi S'ankaraḥ | 49 | tad-adhīnāḥ vayaṁ sarve vartāmaḥ satataṁ vibho | 46. "The question by what thou art made the creator, I the preserver, and Hara the destroyer, is proposed by those who have studied the Veda. 47. In thee there exists a passionate [or 'active,' as Professor Cowell translates rājasī] energy, [which operates] in the production of the world, in me there is declared to be a pure [sāttvikī], and in Rudra a dark [tāmasī], energy. 48. If we were destitute of these several energies, thou wouldest be unable to create, or I to preserve, or S'ankara to destroy. 49. We are continually dependent upon these our [respective energies]."

[266] See above, p. 53, the quotation from the Bhagavad-gīta, iii. 21 ff.

[267] Compare a similar sentiment in p. 230.

parts of which may be later interpolations, Kṛishṇa is described as performing a ceremony to obtain a son, at the same time that he is represented as the supreme deity. Bhīshma, at the request of Yudhishṭhira, tells him a story illustrative of the glory of Kṛishṇa. He states that Kṛishṇa had performed a ceremonial (vrata) of twelve years' duration (6397), which many rishis came to witness. In presence of these rishis flame issued from the mouth of Kṛishṇa, which set on fire the mountain where he was, and burnt up everything on it; and having done so, came back, and submissively touched his feet. The mountain was afterwards restored to its natural condition. Seeing the rishis astonished at this display, Kṛishṇa asks the cause of their surprise. They request that he who is the creator and destroyer of all things will explain to them the phenomenon which they have just witnessed. He replies that this was the power (tejas) of Vishṇu which had issued from his mouth. He had come, he informs them, to this mountain to perform a ceremony with the view of obtaining a son like himself (6320); and the soul residing in his body had become fire, and blazed forth, and had gone to see the parent of the world, when Mahādeva had declared that a son should be created for him out of the half of his power (tejas). Kṛishṇa next calls on the rishis to tell him any wonders they had seen or heard of in heaven or on earth. The rishis then, after celebrating Kṛishṇa's praises, appoint Nārada to describe the wonders which had been witnessed by the rishis on the Himālaya mountain, when they had gone thither on a pilgrimage to the holy places. Nārada accordingly proceeds to give an account of a long conversation which had taken place between Mahādeva and his wife Umā or Pārvatī, the daughter of the Himālaya. Mahādeva, it appears, had been performing austerity (tapas, vv. 6340, 6348) on that mountain, where he was surrounded by his attendant demons (Bhūtas) and by the nymphs (Apsarases), etc., etc. While he was sitting in that delightful region, clothed in tigers' and lions' skins, with a serpent for his sacrificial cord (6355 f.), his wife Umā comes up, clothed in the same style as her husband, with her attendant demonesses (Bhūta-strī-gaṇa), and playfully puts her hands over his eyes. The effects of this act are tremendous. Suddenly the world becomes darkened, lifeless, and destitute of oblations and vashaṭkāras, etc. This gloom, however, is as suddenly dispelled by a great flame which bursts from Mahādeva's forehead, in which a third eye, luminous as the sun, was formed (6367). By the fire of this eye the mountain was scorched and everything upon it consumed. Umā hereupon stands in a submissive attitude before her lord, when in a moment her parent, the Himālaya, is restored to his former condition. A long conversation then ensues between Mahādeva and Umā. The latter inquires why Mahādeva's third eye had been formed (6379), and puts a number of questions about himself, and the various duties of men (6412 ff.), all of which he answers. Mahādeva next, in his turn, asks Umā to describe the duties of women. She says she will consult the rivers in regard to the question. The Gangā replies on their behalf that Umā herself should furnish the answer, which, as Bhīshma tells us, she accordingly does (6780 ff.). Bhīshma then informs us (v. 6804) that, at the close of Umā's discourse, Mahādeva dismissed his attendant demons, with the rivers, nymphs, and celestial choristers (Gandharvas). We might have expected here that Nārada (who had hitherto been the narrator of what was done and said on the Himālaya) would have finished his account of all that occurred there, without the introduction of the other interlocutor; but, as I have said, he is interrupted by Bhīshma at v. 6804, and afterwards introduced again at v. 6870. Whatever may be the reason, we are first told by Bhīshma (v. 6804) that the rishis now requested Mahādeva to describe to them the greatness of Vāsudeva (Kṛishṇa). At the close of Mahādeva's discourse, Nārada is again abruptly introduced (6870), and relates that a great sound of thunder accompanied with lightning was then heard, and the sky became covered with thick clouds and veiled in darkness. Mahādeva and his attendant demons were now no longer visible to the munis. (The departure of the demons and the other classes of beings had, however, been previously told in v. 6804.) The darkness then suddenly clears away. Nārada next observes to Kṛishṇa (6875) that he was the eternal being, one with Brahma, about whom they had been instructed on the mountain. At the close of Nārada's discourse, the rishis express their devotion to Kṛishṇa (6879 ff.), and say that as he knew all things, he had no occasion to ask them for any information such as had been given at his request. They end by giving him what, after this avowal of his omniscience, was (one would have thought) a needless assurance, that he should have a son like himself. Bhīshma then relates that, after completing the rite on which he had been engaged, Kṛishṇa returned to Dvārakā, where a son was born to him (6889), and goes on to expatiate yet further on his divine character. Yudhishṭhira, however, is still unsatisfied, and inquires as follows (6937 ff.):

Kim ekam daivataṁ loke kiṁ vā py ekam parāyaṇam | kaṁ stuvantaḥ kam archantaḥ prāpnuyur mānavāḥ śubham | kó dharmaḥ sarva-dharmāṇam bhavataḥ paramo mataḥ | kiṁ japan muchyate jantur janma-saṁsāra-bandhanāt | Bhīshmaḥ uvācha | Jagat-prabhuṁ deva-devaṁ anantam purushottamam | stuvan nāma-sahasreṇa purushaḥ satatotthitaḥ | tam eva chārchayan nityam bhaktyā purusham avyayam | dhyāyan stuvan namasyaṁścha yajamānas tam eva cha | an-ādi-nidhanaṁ Vishnuṁ sarva-loka-maheśvaram | lokādhyakshaṁ stuvan nityaṁ sarva-duḥkhātigo bhavet | brahmaṇyaṁ sarva-dharma-jnaṁ lokānāṁ kīrti-vardhanan | loka-nātham mahad bhūtaṁ sarva-bhūta-bhavodbhavam | esha me sarva-dharmāṇāṁ dharmo 'dhikatamo mataḥ | . . . . 6946. Yataḥ sarvāṇi bhūtāni bhavanty ādi-yugāgame | yasmiṁścha pralayaṁ yānti punar eva yuga-kshaye | tasya loka-pradhānasya jagannāthasya bhūpate | Vishṇor nāma-sahasram me śṛiṇu pāpa-bhayāpaham |

"What is the one deity in the world, or what is the one highest object? By lauding and worshipping whom can men attain to felicity? What duty is regarded by you as the highest of all duties? By muttering what, is a creature freed from the bonds of birth and of the world? Bhīshma answers: A man, rising continually, and lauding with his thousand names the supreme infinite Purusha, the lord of the world, the god of gods, worshipping perpetually with devotion this undecaying Purusha, contemplating, praising, reverencing, and adoring him, Vishṇu, without beginning or end, the great lord of all the worlds, lauding continually the ruler of the worlds, who (the ruler) is devout, skilled in all duty, the augmenter of the renown of the worlds, the lord of the world, the great being, the source of the existence of all beings, [doing all this, a man] will overpass all grief. This is regarded by me as the greatest of all duties. . . . v. 6946. Hear, king, from me the sin-and-fear-removing thousand names of this Vishṇu, chief of the world, lord of the world, from whom all creatures spring on the arrival of the commencing yuga, and in whom again they are absorbed at the end of the yuga."

These thousand names of Vishṇu are then detailed, among which the following occur, all, or most of them, ordinarily appellations of Mahādeva, viz. Sarva, Śarva, Śiva, Sthāṇu (v. 6953), Īśāna (v. 6957), Rudra (v. 6962).

Again, we are informed in the Anuśāsana-parvan, that the rishis requested Mahādeva to expound to them the greatness of Vāsudeva (Kṛishṇa), which he accordingly does in vv. 6806 ff.:

Pitāmahād api varaḥ śāśvataḥ Purusho Hariḥ | Kṛishṇo jāmbūnadābhāso vyabhre sūryaḥ ivoditaḥ | daśa-bāhur mahātejāḥ devatāri-nisūdanaḥ | śrīvatsānko Hṛishīkeśaḥ sarva-daivata-pūjitaḥ | Brahmā tasyodara-bhavas tathā chāhaṁ śiro-bhavaḥ | śiroruhebhyo jyotīṁshi romabhyaścha surāsuraḥ | ṛishayo deha-sambhūtās tathā lokāś cha śāśvatāḥ | Pitāmahagṛihaṁ sākshāt sarva-deva-gṛihaṁ cha saḥ | so 'syāḥ pṛithivyāḥ kṛitsnāyāḥ srashṭā tribhuvaneśvaraḥ | saṁhartā chaiva bhūtānāṁ sthāvarasya charasya cha | sa hi deva-varaḥ sākshād deva-nāthaḥ parantapaḥ | sarvajnaḥ sa hi saṁślishṭaḥ sarvagaḥ sarvato-mukhaḥ | paramātmā hṛishīkeśaḥ sarvavyāpī maheśvarah | na tasmāt paramam bhūtaṁ trishu lokeshu kinchana | sanātano vai Madhuhā Govindaḥ iti viśrutaḥ | sa sarvān pārthivān sankhye ghātayishyati mānadaḥ | sura-kāryārtham utpanno mānushaṁ vapur āsthitaḥ | na hi deva-gaṇāḥ śaktās Trivikrama-vināḳṛitāḥ | bhuvane deva-kāryāṇi kartuṁ nāyaka-varjitāḥ | nāyakaḥ sarvabhūtānāṁ sarva-bhūta-namaskṛitaḥ | etasya deva-nāthasya deva-kāryaratasya cha | brahma-bhūtasya satataṁ devarshi-śaraṇasya cha | Brahmā vasati garbhasthaḥ śarīre mukha-saṁsthitaḥ | sarvāḥ sukhaṁ saṁśritāś cha śarīre tasya devatāḥ | sa devaḥ puṇḍarīkākshaḥ śrīgarbhaḥ śrī-sahoshitaḥ | ityādi | . . . 6827. bhavārtham iha devānām buddhyā paramayā yutaḥ | prājāpatye śubhe mārge Mānave dharma-saṁhite | samutpatsyati Govindo Manor vaṁśe mahātmanaḥ | . . . . v. 6835. teshaṁ vikhyāta-vīryāṇāṁ chāritra-guṇaśālinām | yajvanāṁ suviśuddhānāṁ vaṁśe brāhmaṇa-sammate[268] | sa Śūraḥ kshatriya-śreshṭho mahāvīryo mahāyaśāḥ | svavaṁśa-vistara-karaṁ janayishyati mānadaḥ | Vasudevaḥ iti khyātam putram Ānakadundubhim | tasya putraś chaturbāhur Vāsudevo bhavishyati | dātā brāhmaṇa-satkartā brahmabhūto dvija-priyaḥ | . . . . 6842. Tam bhavantaḥ samāsādya vāṇ-mālyair arhaṇair varaiḥ | archayantu yathānyāyam Brahmāṇam iva śāśvatam | yo hi māṁ drashṭum ichheta Brahmāṇancha pitāmaham | drashṭavyas tena bhagavān Vāsu-

[268] Quere, Brāhmaṇa-sammite, "equal to Brahmans"?

devaḥ pratāpavān | dṛishṭe tasminn ahaṁ dṛishṭo na me 'trāsti vichāraṇā|
pitāmaho vā deveśaḥ iti vitta tapodhanāḥ |

"Superior even to Pitāmaha (Brahmā) is Hari, the eternal Purusha, Kṛishṇa, brilliant as gold, like the sun risen in a cloudless sky, ten-armed, of mighty force, slayer of the foes of the gods, marked with the śrīvatsa, Hṛishīkeśa, adored by all the gods. Brahmā is sprung from his belly and I (Mahādeva) from his head, the luminaries from the hair of his head, the gods and Asuras from the hairs of his body, and the rishis, as well as the everlasting worlds, have been produced from his body. He is the manifest abode of Pitāmaha, and of all the deities. He is the creator of this entire earth, the lord of the three worlds, and the destroyer of creatures, of the stationary and the movable. He is manifestly the most eminent of the gods, the lord of the deities, the vexer of his foes. He is omniscient, intimately united [with all things], omnipresent, facing in every direction, the supreme Spirit, Hṛishīkeśa, all-pervading, the mighty lord. There is no being superior to him in the three worlds. The slayer of Madhu is eternal, renowned as Govinda. He, the conferrer of honour, born to fulfil the purposes of the gods, and assuming a human body, will slay all the kings in battle. For all the hosts of the gods, destitute of Trivikrama (the god who strode thrice), are unable to effect the purposes of the gods, devoid of a leader. He is the leader of all creatures, and worshipped by all creatures. Of this lord of the gods, devoted to the purposes of the gods, who is Brahma, and is the constant refuge of gods and rishis, Brahmā dwells within the body, abiding in his face, and all the gods are easily sheltered in his body. This god is the lotus-eyed, the producer of Śrī, dwelling together with Śrī. . . . 6827. For the welfare of the gods, Govinda shall arise in the family of the great Manu, possessed of eminent intelligence, and [walking] in the excellent path of the Prajāpati Manu, characterized by righteousness." [Govinda's ancestors are then detailed.] 6835. "In this family, esteemed by Brahmans, of men renowned for valour, distinguished by good conduct and excellent qualities, priests, most pure, this Śūra, the most eminent of Kshatriyas, heroic, renowned, conferring honour, shall beget a son Ānakadundubhi,[269] the prolonger of his race, known as Vasudeva. To him shall be born a four-armed son, Vāsudeva, liberal, a benefactor of Brāhmans, one with Brahma, a lover of Brāhmans. . . . 6842. You (the gods) should, as is fit, worship this deity, like the eternal Brahmā, approaching him with reverential and excellent garlands of praise. For the divine and glorious Vāsudeva should be beheld by him who desires to see me and Brahmā the Parent. In regard to this I have no hesitation, that when he is seen I am seen, or the Parent (Brahmā), the lord of the gods: know this, ye whose wealth is austerity."

[269] See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 436 = vol. iv., p. 101, of Dr. Hall's ed.

Further on in the same Anuśāsana-parvan (7356 ff.), it is related that Bhīshma, when called on by Yudhishṭhira to inform him what are the benefits resulting from reverence rendered to Brāhmans, refers him to Kṛishṇa, whose divine greatness he then proceeds to set forth as follows (vv. 7360 ff.):

Kṛishṇaḥ pṛithvīm asṛijat khaṁ divancha Kṛishṇasya dehād medinī sambabhūva | varāho 'yam bhīma-balaḥ purāṇaḥ sa parvatān vyasṛijad vai diśaścha | asya chādho 'thāntarīkshaṁ divancha diśaś chatasro vidiśaś chatasraḥ | sṛishṭis tathaiveyam anuprasūtā sa nirmame viśvam idam purāṇam | asya nābhyām pushkaraṁ samprasūtaṁ yatropannaḥ svayam evāmitaujaḥ | yena chhinnaṁ yat tamaḥ Pārtha ghoraṁ yat tat tishṭhaty arṇavaṁ tarjayānam | . . . . 7388. Vāyur bhūtvā vikshipate sa viśvam agnir bhūtvā dahate viśva-rūpaḥ | āpo bhūtvā majjayate sa sarvam Brahmā bhūtvā sṛijate sarva-sanghān | vedyancha yad vedayate cha vedyaṁ vidhiścha yaś chāśrayate vidheyam | dharme cha vede cha bale cha sarvaṁ charācharaṁ Keśavaṁ tvam pratīhi | jyotir-bhūtaḥ paramo 'sau purastāt prakāśate yat prabhayā viśva-rūpaḥ | apaḥ sṛishṭvā sarva-bhūtātma-yoniḥ purā 'karot sarvam evātha viśvam ityādi |

"Kṛishṇa created the earth, the air, and the sky; from Kṛishṇa's body the earth was produced. He is the ancient boar of fearful strength; he created the mountains and the regions. Beneath him are the atmosphere and the heaven, the four regions, and the four intermediate regions: and [from him] this creation sprang forth: he formed this ancient universe. In his navel a lotus grew up, where he himself [in the form of Brahmā] was born of boundless power. By him the dreadful darkness was pierced, that threatening ocean which abides. . . 7388. Becoming Vāyu, he dissipates this universe; becoming Fire, he burns it, universal in his forms; becoming Water, he drowns all things; becoming Brahmā, he creates all the hosts [of beings]. He is whatever is to be known, and he makes known whatever is to be known: he is the rule for performance, and he who exists in that which is to be performed. Believe that Keśava [abides] in righteousness, in the Veda, in strength, and that he is the whole world, movable and immovable. Since he, the supreme, being by nature luminous, shines from the beginning, in every form of splendour, this soul and source of all beings, having created the waters, formed of old this entire universe." Kṛishṇa then (vv. 7402 ff.) proceeds to set forth the benefits of reverence to Brahmans, who he says (7412 f.) could reduce this world to ashes, and create new ones, and rulers of worlds, (bhasma kuryur jagad idaṁ kruddhāḥ pratyaksha-darśinaḥ | anyān api sṛijeyuś cha lokān lokeśvarāṁs 'tathā) and illustrates his opinion of their importance by the results of his own experience regarding Durvāsas (see above, p. 196). He afterwards goes on, in the passage which I have already cited in pp. 197 ff., to return the compliment paid to him by Mahādeva, by celebrating the greatness of that deity; and in the course of his description he makes nearly as explicit an avowal of the supreme divinity of the other god, as the latter has made in regard to him in the text (Anuśāsana-parvan, 6806 ff.) which has just been adduced in p. 273 f.

In the Āśvamedhika-parvan it is related, vv. 1536 ff., that when Kṛishṇa had left the city of the Pāṇḍus, and was journeying to Dvārakā, he fell in with the muni Uttanga, who asked him whether he had reconciled the Kurus and Pāṇḍus with one another. Kṛishṇa replied (1559) that he had made the attempt to do so, but without success, and that the Kurus had perished in consequence. On hearing this Uttanga becomes greatly incensed, and threatens to curse Kṛishṇa because he had not rescued the Kurus, although he was perfectly able to do so. To pacify the muni's wrath, Kṛishṇa offers to explain the circumstances, and to unfold the mystery of his own nature; which he accordingly does in vv. 1564 ff.:

Vāsudevaḥ uvācha | tamo rajaś cha sattvaṁ cha viddhi bhāvān mad-āśrayān | tathā Rudrān Vasūn vā 'pi viddhi mat-prabhavān dvija | mayi sarvāṇi bhūtāni sarva-bhūteshu chāpy aham | sthitaḥ ityādi | . . . .

1567. *Sad asachchaiva yat prāhur avyaktam vyaktam eva cha | aksharaṁ cha ksharanchaiva sarvam etad mad-ātmakam | ye chāśrameshu vai dharmāś chaturdhā viditāḥ mune | vaidikani chā sarvāṇi viddhi sarvam mad-ātma-

kam | asachcha sad-asachchaiva yad viśvaṁ sad-asat-param | mattaḥ parataraṁ nāsti deva-devāt sanātanāt | oṁkāra-pramukhān vedān viddhi māṁ tvam Bhṛigūdvaha | yūpaṁ somaṁ charuṁ homaṁ tridaśāpyāyanam makhe | hotāram api havyaṁcha viddhi mām Bhṛigu-nandana | adhvaryuḥ kalpakasyāpi haviḥ parama-saṁskṛitam | udgātā chāpi māṁ stauti gīta-ghoshair mahādhvare | mrāyaśchitteshu mām brahman śānti-mangala-vāchakāḥ | stuvanti viśvakarmāṇaṁ satataṁ dvija-sattama | mama viddhi sutaṁ dharmam agrajaṁ dvija-sattama | mānasaṁ dayitaṁ vipra sarva-bhūta-dayātmakam | tatrāhaṁ vartamānaiścha nirvṛittaiśchaiva māna-vaiḥ | bahvīḥ saṁsaramāṇo vai yonīr vartāmi sattama | dharma-saṁraksh-aṇārthāya dharma-saṁsthāpanāya cha | tais tair veśaiś cha rūpaiś cha trishu lokeshu Bhārgava | ahaṁ Vishṇur aham Brahmā S'akro 'tha pra-bhavāvyayaḥ (āpyayaḥ?)[270] | bhūta-grāmasya sarvasya srashṭā saṁhāraḥ eva cha | adharme vartamānānāṁ sarveshām aham achyutaḥ | dharmasya setum badhnāmi chalite chalite yuge | tās tāḥ yonīḥ praviśyāham prajānāṁ hitakāmyayā | yadā tv ahaṁ deva-yonau vartāmi Bhṛigu-nandana | tadā 'haṁ deva-vat sarvam ācharāmi na saṁśayaḥ | . . . . 1582. Mānushye vartamāne tu kṛipaṇaṁ yāchitāḥ mayā | na cha te jāta-sammohāḥ vacho 'gṛihṇanta mohitāḥ | bhayancha mahad uddiśya trāsitāḥ Kuravo mayā | kruddhena bhūtvā cha punar yathāvad anudarśitāḥ | te 'dharmeṇeha saṁyuktāḥ parītāḥ kāla-dharmaṇā | dharmeṇa nihatāḥ yuddhe gatāḥ svargaṁ na saṁśayaḥ | . . . . Uttangaḥ uvācha | abhijānāmi jagataḥ kartāraṁ tvāṁ Janārdana |

"Know that the qualities of darkness (tamas), passion (rajas), and goodness (sattva) have their abode in me. Know also that both the Rudras and Vasus are sprung from me. All beings reside in me, and I in all beings, etc. . . . . 1567 ff.: That which men call entity and non-entity, the unmanifested and the manifested, the undecaying and the decaying,—all this consists of my essence. And know, O muni, that the fourfold duties which are recognized as belonging to the [four] conditions of life, as well as all the Vedic [ordinances], partake of my essence. As regards non-entity, and that which is both entity and non-entity, and that which transcends both entity and non-entity, —know that [of all this] there is nothing which transcends me, the eternal god of gods. Know, descendant of Bhṛigu, that I am the Vedas which are introduced by the oṁkāra, [that I am], the sacrificial post, the soma, the charu, the homa, which satiates the immortals, tridaśā-pyāyana in the sacrifice. Know that I am both the hotṛi (priest), and the havya (oblation). [I am] also the adhvaryu of the ceremony, and the highly purified butter. The udgātṛi celebrates me with sounds of hymns at the great sacrifice. And at the rites of atonement, the priests who utter propitiatory and auspicious texts continually, O excellent Brahmaṇ, praise me, the architect of all. Know that Dharma (Righteousness) is my beloved first-born mental son, whose nature is to have compassion on all creatures. There I exist among men, both present and past, passing through many varieties of mundane existence, in different disguises and forms, in the three worlds, for the preservation and establishment of righteousness. I am Vishṇu, Brahmā, Indra, and the source as well as destruction [of things], the creator and the annihilator of the whole aggregate of existences. When all men live in unrighteousness, I, the unfalling, build up the bulwark of righteousness, as the ages pass away, entering into various wombs, from a desire to promote the good of creatures. Whenever I assume a divine birth, I act in every respect agreeably to my character of a god." . . . (He adds that he acts agreeably to all the other natures which he assumes.) 1582. "But during the existence of my mortal condition, though they (the Kurus) were humbly entreated by me, they, through delusion, were not touched, and did not listen to my words. Though terrified by me, when I was incensed, with great alarms, and again fittingly admonished, they, influenced by unrighteousness, and overcome by fate, have been righteously slain in battle, and have undoubtedly gone to heaven."[271] On hearing this reply of Kṛishṇa, the sage Uttanga breaks out: "I recognize thee, Janārdana, as the creator of the world," etc. Kṛishṇa then shows him his divine form.

[270] See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, under apyaya; and Udyoga-parvan, v. 2569.

[271] See Mahābhārata, Śānti-parvan, v. 3655 ff., where Indra says: Āhave tu hataṁ śūraṁ na śocheta kathanchana | aśochyo hi hataḥ śūraḥ svarga-loke mahīyate | na hy annaṁ nodakaṁ tasya na snānaṁ nāpy aśauchakam | hatasya kartum ichhanti tasya lokān śṛiṇushva me | varāpsaraḥ-sahasrāṇi śūram āyodhane hatam | tvaramāṇā 'bhidhāvanti "mama bhartā bhaved" iti | "Let no one ever lament a hero slain in battle. A hero slain is not to be lamented, for he is exalted in heaven. Men do not desire to offer to him food or water, or perform ablutions, or [contract?] impurity [on his account]. Hear from me the worlds to which he goes. Thousands of beautiful nymphs (apsarases) run quickly up to the hero who has been slain in combat, saying to him, 'be my husband.'" Professor Weber refers to this passage, Indische Studien, i. 398, note, and notices the parallel it forms to similar representa-

VIII. In the preceding pages, various passages have been adduced in which the supremacy of Mahādeva and his identity with the soul of the universe have been asserted (pp. 185 f., 194, 196), and other texts have been quoted in which the same rank and character are assigned to Vishṇu (pp. 263 ff.). The reader will likewise have noticed that in some places also (pp. 241, 268), an attempt is made, by alleging the essential oneness of the two deities, to reconcile their conflicting claims.[272] Another passage of this description occurs in the Harivaṁśa, vv. 10660 ff. It had been related in the preceding section that Śiva had come to the assistance of Bāṇa and the Dānavas in tions about Hūris in the Coran. So also in vv. 3591 ff., it is said: Abhīto vikiran śatrūn pratigṛihya śarāṁś tathā | na tasmāt tridaśāḥ śreyo bhuvi paśyanti kinchana | tasya śastrāṇi yāvanti tvacham bhindanti saṁyuge | tāvataḥ so 'śnute lokān sarva-kāma-duho 'kshayān | yad asya rudhiraṁ gātrād āhave sampravartate | saha tenaiva pāpena sarva-pāpaiḥ pramuchyate | "The gods see nothing on earth superior to the man who, fearless, scattering his foes, receives arrows in his body. As many weapons as pierce him in the fray, so many worlds yielding all enjoyments does he enjoy. With the blood which flows from his body, and through that misery so endured, he is freed from all his sins." Much more follows in praise of valour and reprehension of timidity. In vv. 3626 ff. a battle is compared to a sacrifice, and their corresponding parts described. In vv. 3666 ff. we are told that King Janaka showed his warriors the shining heavens, filled with Gandharvas' daughters, and yielding all manner of delights, destined for the courageous (abhīrūṇām ime lokāḥ bhāsvanto hy anta paśyata | pūrṇāḥ gandharva-kanyābhiḥ sarva-kāma-duho 'kshayāḥ); and the hells prepared for such as fled from battle. In the same way Kṛishṇa says to Jarāsandha (Sabhā-parvan, v. 869): Ko hi jānann abhijanam ātmavān kshatriyo nṛipaḥ | nāviśat svargam atulaṁ raṇānantaram avyayam | svargaṁ hy eva samāsthāya raṇa-yajneshu dīkshitāḥ | jayanti kshatriyāḥ lokāṁs tad viddhi manujarshabha | svarga-yonir mahad brahma svarga-yonir mahad yaśaḥ | svarga-yonis tapo yuddhe mṛityuḥ so 'vyabhichāravān | "For what Kshatriya king, who was wise, and appreciated his own noble birth, has not, after the battle, entered into an incomparable and undecaying paradise? Know, chief of men, that Kshatriyas, consecrated in the sacrifice of battle, attain to paradise and conquer the worlds. Great scriptural knowledge is the source of paradise, and so is great renown; austerity (tapas) in fight, too, is the source of paradise; such a death never fails of its reward." See also R.V. x. 154, 3, quoted in the fifth volume of this work, p. 310.

[272] Compare Vāyu Purāṇa, as quoted in Aufrecht's Catalogue, p. 56, col. 2 (partly referred to above, p. 267, note); Varāhap., ibid., p. 58, col. 2, note 2, and p. 59, col. 2; Devībhāg., ibid., p. 81*a*; also Padmap., ibid., p. 16, note 1. The last text is as follows: Kṛishṇa speaks: S'aivāḥ Saurāś cha Gāṇeśāḥ Vaishṇavāḥ S'akti-pūjakāḥ | mām eva prāpnuvantīha sarvāpaḥ sāgaraṁ yathā | eko hi panchadhā jātaḥ svarūpair nāmabhiḥ kila | Devadatto yathā kaśchit putrādy-āhvāna-nāmabhiḥ | "The worshippers of S'iva, Sūra (the Sun), Gaṇeśa, Vishṇu and S'akti, come to me, as all streams flow to the ocean. For, though one, I am born with fivefold forms and names, just as the man Devadatta when called [is addressed] by the appellations of 'son,' etc."

their conflict with Kṛishṇa (v. 10587 f.), when a terrible combat ensues between the latter and S'iva, which causes the earth to tremble, and throws the whole universe into disorder (v. 10601 f.). S'iva is at length paralyzed by a weapon of his adversary called jṛimbhana, which causes him to yawn incessantly (v. 10632 f.). The earth is distressed (v. 10641 ff.) and appeals to Brahmā for assistance. Brahmā (v. 10647) remonstrates with S'iva against his conflict with Kṛishṇa, who, he says, is in reality one with himself. S'iva perceiving by yoga (mental union with the object contemplated) the truth of what Brahmā had stated, says to Brahmā that he will no longer fight against Kṛishṇa, and the two combatants embrace (v. 10648 ff.). Brahmā then says to the sage Mārkaṇḍeya (v. 10656 ff.) that he had formerly, in a dream, seen the two deities on the northern side of the mountain Mandara, each invested with the emblems of the other, Hara (S'iva) in the form of Hari (Vishṇu) with the shell, discus, and club, clothed in yellow vestments and mounted on Garuḍa, and Hari in the form of Hara, bearing the trident and axe, clad in a tiger's skin, and mounted on a bull; and he asks the sage Mārkaṇḍeya to explain this phenomenon which had occasioned him great astonishment. Mārkaṇḍeya replies (vv. 10660 ff.):

Mārkaṇḍeyaḥ uvācha | S'ivāya Vishṇu-rūpāya Vishṇave S'iva-rūpiṇe[273] | athāntaraṁ na paśyāmi tena te diśataḥ[274] śivam | an-ādi-madhya-nidhanam etad akṣharam avyayam | tad eva te pravakshyāmi rūpam Hari-Harātmakam | yo vai Vishṇuḥ sa vai Rudro yo Rudraḥ sa Pitāmahaḥ | ekā mūrtis trayo devāḥ Rudra-Vishṇu-Piṭāmahāḥ | varadāḥ loka-kartāro loka-nāthāḥ svayambhuvaḥ | ardha-nārīśvarāś te tu vrataṁ tīvraṁ samāśritāḥ | yathā jale jalaṁ kshiptaṁ jalam eva tu tad bhavet | Rudraṁ Vishṇuḥ pravishṭas tathā Rudramayo bhavet | agnim agniḥ pravishṭas tu agnir eva yathā bhavet | tathā Vishṇum pravishṭas tu Rudro Vishṇumayo bhavet | Rudram agnimayaṁ vidyād Vishṇuḥ somātmakaḥ smṛitaḥ | agnīshomātmakaṁ chaiva jagat sthāvara-jangamam | kartārau chāpahartārau sthāvarasya charasya cha | jagataḥ śubha-kartārau prabhū Vishṇu-Maheśvarau | kartṛi-kāraṇa-kartārau kartṛi-kāraṇa-kārakau | bhūta-bhavya-bhavau devau Nārāyaṇa-Maheśvarau | etau tau cha prakṛitārāv etau tau cha prabhāmayau | jagataḥ pālakāv etāv etau sṛishṭikarau smṛitau | ete chaiva pravarshanti bhānti vānti sṛijanti cha | etat

[273] See the same words above, p. 231.

[274] The MS. in the library of the Royal Asiatic Society reads darśitaḥ.

parataraṁ guhyaṁ kathitaṁ te Pitāmaha | yaś chainam paṭhate nityaṁ yaś chainaṁ śriṇuyād naraḥ | prāpnoti paramaṁ sthānaṁ Rudra-Vishṇu-prasāda-jam | devau Hari-Harau stoshye Brahmaṇā saha sangatau | etau cha paramau devau jagataḥ prabhavāpyayau | Rudrasya paramo Vishṇur Vishṇoścha paramaḥ S'ivaḥ | ekaḥ eva dvidhā-bhūto loke charati nityaśaḥ | na vinā S'ankaraṁ Vishṇur na vinā Keśavaṁ S'ivaḥ | tasmād ekatvam āyātau Rudropendrau tu tau purā | ityādi.

"When thou showest me this auspicious [vision], I perceive thereby no difference between S'iva who exists in the form of Vishṇu, and Vishṇu who exists in the form of S'iva. I shall declare to thee that form composed of Hari and Hara (Vishṇu and Mahādeva) combined, which is without beginning, or middle, or end, imperishable, undecaying. He who is Vishṇu is Rudra; he who is Rudra is Pitāmaha (Brahmā): the substance (mūrti) is one, the gods are three, Rudra, Vishṇu, and Pitāmaha. Bestowers of boons, creators of the world, sovereigns of the world, self-existent, they are the half-female lords, and have performed austere rites. Just as water thrown into water can be nothing else than water, so Vishṇu entering into Rudra must possess the nature of Rudra. And just as fire entering into fire can be nothing else but fire, so Rudra entering into Vishṇu must possess the nature of Vishṇu. Let Rudra be understood to possess the nature of Agni; Vishṇu is declared to possess the nature of Soma (the Moon); and the world, movable and immovable, possesses the nature of Agni and Soma.[275] The lords, Vishṇu and Maheśvara, are the makers and destroyers of things movable and immovable, and the benefactors of the world. The gods Nārāyaṇa and Maheśvara are the [first] makers of the cause, and of [the secondary] maker, the [first] causers of the cause, and of the [secondary] makers, existing in the past, future, and present. And these two are the revealers, they possess a luminous essence, they are declared to be the preservers of the world, and the creators. They rain, they shine, they blow, and they create. This which I have told thee, Pitāmaha, is the highest mystery. The man who continually repeats it, and hears it, obtains the highest abode, granted by the grace of Rudra and Vishṇu. I shall laud the gods Hari and Hara, associated with Brahmā; and these two are the supreme deities, the originators and destroyers of the world. Vishṇu, the highest [manifestation] of Rudra, and Śiva, the highest [manifestation] of Vishṇu,—this [god] one only, though divided into twain, moves continually in the world. Vishṇu does not [exist] without Śankara, nor Śiva without Keśava; hence these two, Rudra and Upendra (Vishṇu), have formerly attained to oneness," etc.

[275] See above, pp. 204 and 225.

Then follows a hymn to the double deity.

The various representations of Kṛishṇa given in the different sets of passages above cited possess a certain interest in themselves, even independently of the light which they may be considered to throw on the process by which his deification was effected. Among the texts adduced from the Mahābhārata there are some (see pp. 185 ff.) in which he is distinctly subordinated to Mahādeva, of whom he is exhibited as a worshipper, and from whom, as well as from his wife Umā, he is stated to have received a variety of boons. Even in these passages, however, a superhuman character is ascribed to Kṛishṇa.

A second class of texts has been brought forward in pp. 205 ff., in which his superiority is represented to have been denied by Śiśupāla, Duryodhana, Karṇa, and Śalya. Of course we are not to imagine that any claim to a superhuman character was ever advanced on behalf of the Yādava hero in his lifetime, either by himself or his friends. These narrative passages, therefore, in which his divine dignity is denied by his enemies, and asserted by his partisans, as well as vindicated by the miraculous exploits which are attributed to him, are nothing more than poetical fictions (possibly of a polemical import) put forward at a period when his godhead had come to be recognized by the Vaishṇavas, though perhaps doubted or disputed by other sects. Such a resistance to the pretensions set up on Kṛishṇa's behalf may be indicated in the verses I have quoted in p. 237 f., where all who regard him as a mere man are stigmatized as being under the dominion of the quality of darkness.

In the third class of passages, quoted in pp. 243 ff., where the achievements of Kṛishṇa are described with a supernatural colouring, it seems not unreasonable to recognize a basis of simpler legend (if not of actual history)[276] underlying the miraculous narrative, and to trace a reference to a variety of warlike adventures in which the Yādava chief contended as a mere man with the warriors of other tribes. The supernatural powers which are here ascribed to him are not in their character essentially different from those which are attributed to his enemies, who, it will be observed, are in like manner represented as endowed with superhuman faculties; while Kṛishṇa himself is in various places described as being indebted to the gods for his weapons, or for other advantages (see the Droṇa-parvan, v. 402, and the Ādi-parvan, v. 8196, quoted or referred to in pp. 244 ff., and the Udyoga-parvan, quoted in p. 247).

[276] See Lassen's Indian Antiquities, vol. i., p. 615; in second ed., p. 762.

The identification of Arjuna and Kṛishṇa with the saints Nara and Nārāyaṇa (pp. 228 ff.)[277] is curious; but I am unable to conjecture whether it may have originated in a previously existing legend respecting two rishis of that name (the one of whom, as bearing the same name which was ultimately applied to Vishṇu and Kṛishṇa, was, in the fanciful spirit of Indian mythology, and in consonance with the tenet of metempsychosis, declared to have been an earlier manifestation of Kṛishṇa,—when Arjuna, the bosom friend of the latter, would naturally be regarded as the same with Nara, the inseparable companion of Nārāyaṇa); or whether the whole legend was originally invented for the glorification of Kṛishṇa and Arjuna.

In the passages above adverted to, where Kṛishṇa is subordinated to Mahādeva, the latter is identified with the supreme Deity (see pp. 185 ff., 194). In another set of texts, however (pp. 230, 264 ff.), Kṛishṇa, as Vishṇu, is asserted to be one with the supreme God,[278] while Mahādeva is represented as springing from, and dependent on, Vishṇu. But here and elsewhere, as we have already seen, an attempt is made to reconcile the claims of the two rival deities by affirming their identity (pp. 241, 268). How are we to explain this circumstance, that in one place Mahādeva is extolled at the expense of Kṛishṇa, and that in another place Kṛishṇa is exalted above Mahādeva? Must we assume the one set of passages to be older than the other, or are we to suppose them to be contemporaneous, or nearly contemporaneous, and to have been inserted in the Mahābhārata by different classes of sectaries in order to give a sort of catholicity to the great epic, by making it a storehouse in which the votaries of all the different deities might find something to satisfy their various tendencies?

[277] In Böhtlingk and Roth's Dictionary the word Nārāyaṇa is explained as the "son of man," and as a patronymic of the personified Purusha, the rishi of the Purusha-sūkta (R.V., x. 90). Nara is in the same work interpreted as the "primeval man."

[278] Even in the parts of the Vishṇu Purāṇa and Mahābhārata (see pp. 49 and 253 ff.), where Kṛishṇa is represented as a partial incarnation of the godhead, there does not appear to be any intention to question the plenitude of his divine nature. Compare the 27th with the 34th and following verses of the 33rd section of the 10th Book of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, quoted in p. 49.

Though deeper study might lead to a different conclusion, it does not, I think, result from a superficial comparison of the principal passages which I have quoted relative to Mahādeva, with those which have reference to Kṛishṇa, that the one class bears in its general complexion the impress of any greater antiquity than the other. Both, in their present form at least, appear to belong to the same age, as we find in both the same tendency to identify the god who is the object of adoration with the supreme Soul. The passages relating to both gods, as they now stand, would therefore seem to be the products of a sectarian spirit, and to have been introduced into the poem by the Śaivas and Vaishṇavas for the purpose of upholding the honour of their respective deities. But on the other hand the mere fact that a poem in which Kṛishṇa plays throughout so prominent a part, and which in its existing form is so largely devoted to his glorification, should at the same time contain so many passages which formally extol the greatness, and still more, which incidentally refer to a frequent adoration, of the rival deity, by the different personages, whether contemporary or of earlier date, who are introduced,—this fact is, I think, a proof that the worship of the latter (Mahādeva) was widely diffused, if indeed it was not the predominant worship in India, at the period to which the action of the poem is referred. Various references to such a worship of Mahādeva as I have alluded to will be found in the preceding pages, 184 ff., 230 ff., and 269 (where the abode of this deity is described as being in the Himālaya, p. 230 and 269). I shall quote some further illustrations of its prevalence.[279]

Lassen remarks (i. 780; i. 922 in second ed.), that in the epic poems the worship of Vishṇu is but seldom[280] mentioned—a fact which he regards as proving that at the period when they were composed no special worship of that deity had been extensively spread, at least among the Brahmans and princes, to the description of whose manners and customs those works almost exclusively confine themselves. On the other hand he quotes (note to i. 561, 1st ed.; i. 675, 2nd ed.) the following passages to prove the wide extension of the worship of Mahādeva in different parts of India. In the Tīrtha-yātrā, or section on visiting places of pilgrimage, in the Vana-parvan, 6054 ff., it is said of the Vaitaraṇī river, in the country of the Kalingas:

[279] See Lassen's Indian Antiquities, vol. i., pp. 561, 571, 610, 711, 716, 741, and 781; =pp. 675, 685, 756, 861, 708, 871, 922, in second ed.

[280] Lassen (i. 679 = p. 828 in second ed.) refers to a passage of the Vana-parvan (15283 ff.), where Duryodhana, being prevented from offering a rājasūya sacrifice, is advised by his priest to offer a sacrifice to Vishṇu. This story will be quoted further on.

Tatas Tripishṭapaṁ gachchhet trishu lokeshu viśrutam | tatra Vaitaraṇī puṇyā nadī pāpa-praṇāśinī | tatra snātvā 'rchayitvā cha Śūlapāṇiṁ Vṛishadhvajam | sarva-pāpa-viśuddhātmā gachheta paramāṁ gatim |

"Let him then go to Tripishṭapa, renowned in the three worlds. There is the holy river Vaitaraṇī, which destroys sin. Having bathed there and worshipped the god who wields the trident and whose ensign is the bull (Mahādeva), he shall be purified from all sin, and attain the highest felicity."

At vv. 11001 of the same book (p. 569 of the printed Calcutta ed.) it is said of the north bank of the same river:

Atraiva Rudro rājendra paśum ādattavān makhe | paśum ādāya rājendra bhāgo 'yam iti chābravīt | hṛite paśau tadā devās tam ūchur Bharatarshabha | mā para-svam abhidrogdhāḥ mā dharmān sakalān vaśīḥ | tataḥ kalyāṇa-rūpābhir vāgbhis te Rudram astuvan | ishṭyā chainaṁ tarpayitvā mānayānchakrire tadā | tataḥ sa paśum utsṛijya deva-yānena jagmivān | tatrānuvaṁso Rudrasya tan nibodha Yudhishṭhira | ayātayāmaṁ sarvebhyo bhāgebhyo bhāgam uttamam | devāḥ sankalpayāmāsur bhayād Rudrasya śāśvatam | imāṁ gāthām atra gāyann apaḥ spṛiśati yo naraḥ | deva-yāno 'sya panthāś cha chakshushā 'bhiprakāśate |

"In this very place, O king, Rudra seized a victim at a sacrifice, and having done so, said, 'This is [my] portion.' When he had seized the victim, the gods said to him, 'Do not attack the property of others; do not covet all the offerings.' They then lauded Rudra with words of auspicious import; and having satiated him with an oblation, they paid him honour. He then relinquished the victim, and departed by the path of the gods. Referring to this is the following traditional verse of Rudra, which learn from me, Yudhishṭhira: 'Through dread of Rudra, the gods allotted to him for ever the most excellent of all portions, the ayātayāma (or fresh portion). The man who, here reciting this verse, touches the waters, obtains a distinct vision of the path leading to the gods.'"

In the same Vana-parvan, v. 8166, it is said that Mahādeva was worshipped at Gokarṇa, on the west coast of the Dekhan:

Atha Gokarṇam āsādya triṣhu lokeshu viśrutam | samudra-madhye rājendra sarva-loka-namaskṛitam | yatra Brahmādayo devāḥ ṛishayaś cha tapodhanāḥ | . . . . . 8169: Saritaḥ sāgarāḥ śailāḥ upāsanta Umā-patim | ityādi | "Then having reached Gokarṇa, renowned in the three worlds, standing in the sea, adored by all worlds, where Brahmā and the other gods and rishis rich in austerity," [various other kinds of beings are here enumerated, Bhūtas, Yakshas, etc., etc.], "rivers, oceans, and mountains worshipped the lord of Umā (Mahādeva)."

The same place is also mentioned in the Rāmopākhyāna of the Vana-parvan, v. 15999 f.:

Trikūṭaṁ samatikramya Kālaparvatam eva cha | dadarśa makarāvāsaṁ gambhīrodam mahodadhim | tam atītyātha Gokarṇam abhyagachhat Daśānanaḥ | dayitaṁ sthānam avyagraṁ Śūlapāṇer mahātmanaḥ | "Having passed Trikūṭa, and the Black Mountain, he (Rāvaṇa) saw the deep ocean, the abode of marine monsters. Having crossed it, he then approached Gokarṇa, the beloved undisturbed abode of the mighty wielder of the trident."

[The same Tīrtha-yātrā, however, from which the passages preceding the last are taken, contains the following lines celebrating Kṛishṇa:

Vana-parvan, v. 8349 f.—Puṇyā Dvāravatī tatra yatrāsau Madhusūdanaḥ | sākshād devaḥ purāṇo 'sau sa hi dharmaḥ sanātanaḥ | ye cha veda-vido viprāḥ ye chādhyātma-vido janāḥ | te vadanti mahātmānaṁ Kṛishṇaṁ dharmaṁ sanātanam | pavitrāṇāṁ hi Govindaḥ pavitram param uchyate | puṇyānām api puṇyo 'sau mangalānāṁ cha mangalam | trailokye Puṇḍarīkāksho deva-devaḥ sanātanaḥ | avyayātmā vyayātmā cha kshetrajñaḥ parameśvaraḥ | āste Harir achintyātmā tatraiva Madhusūdanaḥ | "There is the holy Dvāravatī where that Madhusūdana [abides], that manifest, ancient god; for he is the eternal righteousness. Brāhmans who know the Veda, and who know the supreme spirit, call the mighty Kṛishṇa the eternal righteousness. Govinda is called the supremely pure among the pure, the holy among the holy, the blessed among the blessed. In the three worlds the lotus-eyed is the eternal god of gods, the undecaying in essence, and the decaying, the conscious occupant of the body, the supreme lord. There the inconceivable Hari, Madhusūdana, abides."]

The following passages supply some further instances of the worship of Mahādeva by personages introduced in the poem:

Ādi-parvan, v. 7049.—Evaṁ teshāṁ vilapatāṁ viprāṇāṁ vividhāḥ giraḥ | Arjuno dhanusho 'bhyāse tasthāu girir ivāchalaḥ | sa tad dhanuḥ parikramya pradakshiṇam athākarot | praṇamya śirasā devam Īśānaṁ varadam prabhum | Kṛishṇaṁ cha manasā kṛitvā jagṛihe chārjuno dhanuḥ | yat pārthivaiḥ Rukmi-Sunītha-Vaktraiḥ Rādheya-Duryodhana-Śalya-Śālvaiḥ | tadā dhanur-veda-parair nṛiśiṁhaiḥ kṛitaṁ na sajyam mahato 'pi yatnāt | tad Arjunaḥ ityādi | "While the Brāhmans thus uttered various speeches, Arjuna stood firm as a mountain, trying the bow. He then made a circuit round it, bowing down in reverence to the boon-bestowing lord Īśāna (Mahādeva); and having meditated on Kṛishṇa,[291] Arjuna seized the bow. And that bow which the lion-like kings Rukmin, Sunītha (Śiśupāla), Vaktra, Rādheya, Duryodhana, Śalya, and Śālva, skilled in archery, could not with great effort bend [so as to fix the bowstring], Arjuna bent, and hit the mark," etc., etc.

In the Vana-parvan, vv. 15777, it is related that Jayadratha, after being captured by Bhīshma and released at the request of Yudhishṭhira, went to worship Mahādeva (v. 15801):

Jagāma rājan duḥkhārto Gangādvārāya Bhārata | sa devaṁ śaraṇaṁ gatvā virūpāksham Umāpatim | tapaś chachāra vipulaṁ tasya prīto Vṛishadhvajaḥ | baliṁ svayum pratyagṛihṇāt prīyamāṇas Trilochanaḥ | varaṁ chāsmai dadau devaḥ sa jagrāha cha tach chhriṇu | "Samastān sarathān pancha jayeyaṁ yudhi Pāṇḍavān" | iti rājā 'bravīd devaṁ neti devas tam abravīt | ajayyāṁś chāpy abadhyāṁś cha vārayishyasi tān yudhi | ṛite 'rjunam mahābāhuṁ Naraṁ nāma sureśvaram | Vadāryāṁ tapta-tapasaṁ Nārāyaṇa-sahāyakam | ajitaṁ sarva-lokānāṁ devair api durāsadam | mayā dattam pāśupataṁ divyam apratimaṁ śaram | avāpa lokapālebhyo vajrādīn sa mahāśarān | deva-devo hy anantātmā Viṣṇuḥ sura-guruḥ prabhuḥ | pradhāna-purusho 'vyaktaḥ viśvātmā viśva-mūrtimān | yugāntakāle samprāpte kālāgnir dahate jagat | sa-parvatārṇava-dvīpaṁ sa-śaila-vana-kānanaṁ |

[291] Lassen (Indian Antiquities, vol. i., p. 646, first ed.; p. 794, second ed.) regards this reference to Kṛishṇa as a later interpolation in the older story.

"He went, O king, distressed with grief, to Gangādvāra (Haridvāra). There, resorting to the distorted-eyed lord of Umā as his refuge, he practised long austerities. Gratified with this, the three-eyed god, whose ensign is a bull, himself received his oblation, and offered him a boon, which he accepted. Hear how [he did so]. The king (Jayadratha) said to the god, 'May I vanquish all the five Pāṇḍavas with their chariots in battle.' The god said, 'No; thou shalt withstand them all, though they are unconquerable and not to be slain, excepting only the great-armed Arjuna, who is called Nara, the lord of the gods, who performed austerity at Badari, attended by Nārāyaṇa, who is invincible by all the worlds, and irresistible even by the gods. He obtained the Pāśupata, a divine, incomparable missile, given by me, and thunderbolts and other great weapons from the guardians of the worlds. For the infinite Vishṇu, the god of gods, the chief of the deities, the chief spirit (Purusha), the undiscernible, the soul of all things, the universal-formed, at the end of the yuga burns up the world, with its mountains, oceans, continents, rocks and forests." Mahādeva then goes on to relate how the destruction and the restoration of the world is effected by Vishṇu, and describes his various incarnations. He concludes by saying that Arjuna who was aided by him could not be conquered even by the gods. In this legend it will be observed that the warrior goes to worship Mahādeva, and not Vishṇu, though the latter is represented as being magnified by the rival deity. But this part of the story may be interpolated.

In the Sānti-parvan also (vv. 1748 f.), it is related how Paraśurāma worshipped Mahādeva on the mountain Gandhamādana, and obtained his celebrated axe, by which he became renowned in the world (toshayitvā Mahādevam parvate Gandhamādane | astrāṇi varayāmāsa paraśuṁ chāti-tejasam | sa tenākuṇṭha-dhāreṇa jvalitānala-varchasā | kuṭhāreṇāprameyeṇa lokeshv apratimo 'bhavat). Then follows the story of Kārtavīrya (see the first volume of this work, pp. 450, 478).

In the following passage, Jarāsandha is introduced as a zealous votary of Mahādeva. Yudhishṭhira had been purposing to celebrate a Rājasūya sacrifice, which presupposed that he was the most powerful of contemporary monarchs; but Kṛishṇa in the following words tells him that he cannot do so while Jarāsandha lives:

Sabhā-parvan, v. 626.—Na tu śakyaṁ Jarāsandhe jīvamāne mahābale |

rājasūyaṁ tvayā 'vāptum eshā rājan matir mama | tena ruddhāḥ hi rājānaḥ sarve jitvā Girivraje | kandare parvatendrasya siṁheneva mahādvipāḥ | sa hi rājā Jarāsandho yiyakshur vasudhādhipaiḥ | Mahādevam mahātmānam Umāpatim arindama | ārādhya tapasogreṇa nirjitās tena pārthivāḥ | pratijñāyāś cha pāraṁ sa gataḥ pārthiva-sattamaḥ | sa hi nirjitya nirjitya pārthivān pṛitanāgatān | puram ānīya baddhvā cha chakāra purusha-vrajam | vayaṁ chaiva mahārāja Jarāsandha-bhayāt tadā | Mathurāṁ samparityajya gatāḥ Dvāravatīm purīm |

"But whilst the powerful Jarāsandha lives, a Rājasūya sacrifice cannot be attained by thee; such, king, is my opinion. For all the kings have been conquered, and are imprisoned by him in Girivraja, as elephants by a lion in a cave of a great mountain. For this monarch Jarāsandha desired to sacrifice to the glorious Mahādeva, the lord of Umā, with these kings [as victims]; and they were conquered by him after he had worshipped the god with dreadful austerities. And this eminent prince has attained to the accomplishment of his design. For after repeatedly conquering the princes who had come against him in battle, he has brought them to his capital, confined them, and made them a human herd. And we too," (confesses Kṛishṇa) "from dread of Jarāsandha, deserted Mathurā, and went to the city of Dvāravatī."

Kṛishṇa returns, a little farther on, to Jarāsandha's cruelty to the kings:

Sabhā-parvan, v. 653.—Ratna-bhājo hi rājāno Jarāsandham upāsate | na cha tushyati tenāpi bālyād anayam āsthitaḥ | mūrdhābhishiktaṁ nṛipatim pradhāna-purusho balāt | ādatte na cha no dṛishṭo 'bhāgaḥ purushataḥ kvachit | evaṁ sarvān vaśe chakre Jarāsandhaḥ śatāvarān | taṁ durbala-paro rājā katham Pārtha upaishyati | prokshitānām pramṛishṭānāṁ[282] rājnām Paśupater gṛihe | paśūnām ivā kā prītir jīvite Bharatarshabha | "For jewelled kings wait upon Jarāsandha; and yet he is not contented even with that, having through folly become imprudent. A prince seizes by force a consecrated king, and we do not see that he has failed to master any mortal anywhere.[283] In this manner

[282] The commentator's remark on this is as follows: Pramṛishṭānām | Rudra-daivatyo 'yam iti pratyekam abhimṛishṭānām |

[283] These words are explained by the commentator in the above sense: Jarāsandhena abhāgaḥ asvīkṛitaḥ | purushataḥ mūrdhābhishikteshu purusheshu | tena sarve vaśīkṛitāḥ ity arthaḥ | "Abhāgaḥ means 'unappropriated' by Jarāsandha. Purushataḥ means 'among anointed kings.' The sense is, that 'all have been subdued by him.'"

Jarāsaṇdha has reduced to subjection in all at least a hundred persons; how, then, can a feeble prince approach him? What pleasure can those princes have in existence, when they have been sprinkled for slaughter and devoted as victims like beasts in the temple of Paśupati (Mahādeva)?"

Kṛishṇa afterwards proceeds to Jarāsandha's capital with Bhīma and Arjuna, with the view of slaying their enemy. They are admitted to his palace in the disguise of Brahmans, and after some conversation, Kṛishṇa says to Jarāsandha:

Sabhā-parvan, vv. 861 ff.—Tvayā chopahṛitāḥ rājan kshatriyāḥ loka-vāsinaḥ | tad āgaḥ krūram utpādya manyase kim anāgasam | rājā rājnaḥ kathaṁ sādhūn hiṁsyād nṛipati-sattama | yad rājnaḥ sannigṛihya tvaṁ Rudrāyopajihīrshasi | asmāṁs tad enopagachchhet kṛitaṁ Vārhadratha tvayā | vayaṁ hi śaktāḥ dharmasya rakshaṇe dharmachāriṇaḥ | manushyāṇāṁ samālambho na cha dṛishṭaḥ kadāchana | sa katham mānushair devaṁ yashṭum ichhasi S'ankaram | savarṇo hi savarṇānām[284] paśu-sanjnāṁ

[284] On this the commentator remarks: Nanu "Brahmaṇe brāhmaṇam ālabheta" ityādinā sarva-jātīyānāṁ sarva-karmaṇām manushyānām ālambho devatārtham badhaḥ śrūyate ity āśankya āha savarṇo hi iti | "But is not the immolation,—the slaughter as an offering to a god,—of men of all classes, and all occupations, enjoined in such Vedic texts as this, 'let him immolate a Brāhmaṇa to Brahman,' etc.? Having raised this doubt, he says, 'For thou, belonging to the same tribe,' etc."

Texts such as that here quoted by the commentator occur in the Taitt. Br., iii. 4, 1, 1 ff. (Brahmaṇe brāhmaṇam ālabhate ityādi | "He sacrifices a Brāhmaṇa to Brahman," etc., etc.) and in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, xxx. 5 ff. (Brahmaṇe brāhmaṇam ityādi). In regard to the question whether human sacrifices were practised in the earliest Vedic age, see Prof. Haug, as quoted in the first volume of this work, p. 11, and in the second volume, p. 463; the story of S'unaśśepa, adduced in vol. i., pp. 355 ff.; Prof. Müller's Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 419 f.; Prof. Weber's paper in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xviii., pp. 262 ff. (reprinted in his Indische Streifen, i., pp. 54 ff.). The two last-named writers quote texts from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii., 8, and the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, i., 2, 3, 6, which I shall here cite. The former begins thus: Purushaṁ vai devāḥ paśum ālabhanta | tasmād ālabdhād medhaḥ udakrāmat | so 'śvam prāviśat | tasmād aśvo medhyo 'bhavat | atha enam utkrānta-medham atyārjanta | sa kimpurusho 'bhavat | te 'śvam ālabhanta | so 'śvād ālabdhād udakrāmat | sa gām prāviśat | tasmād gaur medhyo 'bhavat | atha enam utkrānta-medham atyārjanta sa gauramṛigo 'bharat | te gām ālabhanta | sa gor ālabdhād udakrāmat | so 'vim prāviśat | "The gods sacrificed a man as a victim. After he had been sacrificed, the sacrificial element went out of him. It entered into the horse, which consequently became suitable for sacrifice. They then dismissed the man, after the sacrificial element had left him; and he became a kimpurusha," [probably an ape, according to Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, vol. ii., p. 228, and vol. v., p. 1296; with whom Weber agrees, Ind. Stud., ix., 246. "The author very karishyasi | ko 'nyaḥ evaṁ yathā hi tvaṁ Jarāsandha vṛithā-matiḥ | yasyāṁ yasyām avasthāyāṁ yat yat karma karoti yaḥ | tasyāṁ tasyām avasthāyāṁ tat-phalaṁ samavāpnuyāt | te tvāṁ jñāti-khsaya-karaṁ vayam ārtānusāriṇaḥ | jñāti-vṛiddhi-nimittārthaṁ vinihantum ihāgatāḥ | . . . . Jarasāndha uvācha . . . . 882 : Devatārtham upāhṛitya rājnaḥ Kṛishṇa katham bhayāt | aham adya vimuchyeyaṁ kshātraṁ vratam anusmaran |

"Thou, king, hast devoted [to Mahādeva] Kshatriyas dwellers in this world. Having devised this cruel iniquity, dost thou regard thyself as guiltless? How should a king slaughter virtuous kings? Inasmuch as thou hast confined kings, and seekest to offer them up to Rudra, the guilt committed by thee, son of Vṛihadratha, would attach to us. For we who practise righteousness are able to protect righteousness. And [such a thing as] the immolation of men has never been seen. How [then] dost thou seek to sacrifice to the god Sankara with human victims? For thou, belonging to the same tribe [as those likely means a dwarf," Haug's transl. of the Ait. Br., p. 90, note; Müller regards the word as meaning "a savage."] "They sacrificed the horse, from which the sacrificial element then departed, and entered into the ox, which consequently became fit for sacrifice. They then dismissed the horse out of which the sacrificial element had departed, and it became a white deer. They next sacrificed the ox, from which the sacrificial element then departed, and entered into the sheep," etc. The same thing happens to the goat (in which the sacrificial element remained longest), then to the earth, in which it (the thing fit for sacrifice), when followed by the gods, became rice.

On this Prof. Müller remarks: "The drift of this story is most likely that in former times all these victims had been offered. We know it for certain in the case of horses and oxen, though afterwards these sacrifices were discontinued."

The text from the S'atapatha Brāhmana, i., 2, 3, 6, is as follows: Purushaṁ ha vai devāḥ agre paśum ālebhire | tasya ālabdhasya medho 'pachakrāma | so 'śvam praviveśa | te 'śvam ālabhanta | tasya ālabdhasya medho 'pachakrāma sa gām praviveśa | te gām ā—— | so 'vim praviveśa | te 'vim ā—— | so 'jam praviveśa | te 'jam ālabhanta | tasya ālabdhasya medho 'pachakrāma | 7 | sa imām pṛithivīm praviveśa | taṁ khanantaḥ iva anvīshuḥ | tam anvavindaṁs tāv imau vrīhi-yavau | . . . . . sa yāvad-vīryavad ha vai asya ete sarve paśavaḥ ālabdhāḥ syus tāvad-vīryavad ha asya havir bhavati yaḥ evaṁ veda | "The gods formerly offered up a man as a victim. The sacrificial element left him when he had been sacrificed and entered into the horse. They offered up the horse; whereupon the sacrificial element went out of him and entered into the ox." The same thing happens with the ox, and then with the sheep and the goat successively. "The sacrificial element went out of the goat, and (7) entered the earth. Digging, they searched for it, and found it (the thing fit for sacrifice) in the shape of rice and barley. . . . . An oblation of these grains has as much efficacy, for him who knows this fact, as resides in all these victims when sacrificed."

princes], wilt designate as victims men of thine own tribe. What other person, Jarāsandha, is so foolish as thou? Whosoever, in any condition, perpetrates any particular act, will reap the fruit of it in that particular condition. We, the avengers of the afflicted, seeking the welfare of our kindred, have come hither to slay thee, the destroyer of thy kindred." Kṛishṇa, then, after some further arguments, calls upon Jarāsandha either to liberate the kings, or to submit to be destroyed in combat. Jarāsandha (v. 880) says he has conquered the kings, and has a right to act as he is doing. He adds (v. 882): "How, Kṛishṇa, can I, who have devoted the kings to the god, remembering my duty as a Kshatriya, to-day release them through fear?" He then accepts the challenge, and is killed by Bhīmasena.

The birth of Jarāsandha is thus related in the Sabhā-parvan; and the narrative contains at the close a reference to his being a worshipper of Mahādeva. His father, Vṛihadratha, had two wives, who, after having been long barren, at length bore him two halves of a boy (v. 711), which, being regarded with horror, were thrown out (v. 714). A female demon (Rākshasī) named Jarā, an eater of flesh, takes them up (v. 715), and puts them together in order that they may be more easily carried away. A boy is thus formed who cries; and people in consequence come out of the inner apartments of the palace, and among them the two queens and the king. The Rākshasī assumes a human shape, and gives the child to the king, who then asks who she is. She replies (vv. 729 ff.):

Jarā-nāmā 'smi bhadraṁ te Rākshasī kāma-rūpiṇī | tava veśmani rājendra pūjitā nyavasaṁ sukham | gṛihe gṛihe manushyāṇāṁ nityaṁ tishṭhāmi rākshasī | gṛiha-devīti nāmnā vai purā sṛishṭā Svayambhuvā | dānavānāṁ vināśāya sthāpitā divya-rūpiṇī | yo mām bhaktyā likhet kuḍye saputrāṁ yauvanānvitām | gṛihe tasye bhaved vṛiddhir anyathā kshayam āpnuyāt | tvad-gṛihe tishṭhamānā tu pūjitā 'haṁ sadā vibho | likhitā chaiva kuḍye 'ham putrair bahubhir āvṛitā | gandha-pushpais tathā dhūpair bhakshyair bhojyaiḥ supūjitā | sā 'ham pratyupakārārthaṁ chintayāmy aniśaṁ tava | taveme putra-śakale dṛishṭavaty asmi dhārmika | saṁśleshite mayā daivāt kumārāḥ samapadyata | tava bhāgyād mahārāja hetu-mātram ahaṁ tv iha | Meruṁ vā khādituṁ śaktā kim punas tva bālakam | gṛiha-sampūjanāt tushṭyā mayā pratyarpitas tava |

"I am, bless thee, a Rākshasī named Jarā, who can change my shape at will. Worshipped in thy house, I have dwelt there in comfort. Named the house-goddess, I dwell constantly in every separate house of men, having been created of old by Svayambhū; and placed [there], of celestial form, for the destruction of the Dānavas. Prosperity will remain in the house of that man who devoutly paints me in a youthful form, together with my sons, upon his wall;—otherwise he shall decay. Abiding in thy house, O king, and continually reverenced, painted upon the wall,[285] surrounded by my numerous sons, worshipped with odours and flowers, with incense, and various kinds of food, I continually consider how I may benefit thee in return. I saw, righteous prince, these two pieces of thy son; I put them together by chance, and a boy was produced, through thy good fortune, O great king, and I was merely the instrument. I could devour mount Meru, much more thy son: but being gratified by the domestic worship I have received, I have restored him to thee."

The Rākshasī then disappears. King Vṛihadratha orders a great festival to be celebrated among the people of Magadha in her honour; and calls the boy Jarāsandha, because he had been put together (sandhitaḥ) by the Rākshasī Jarā (v. 738. Ājnāpayach cha rākshasyāḥ Magadheshu mahotsavam | tasya nāmākaroch chaiva Pitāmaha-samaḥ pitā | Jarayā sandhito yasmāj Jarāsandho bhavatv ayam). The rishi Chaṇḍakauśika arrives on a certain occasion in the country of the Magadhas, and prophesies the future greatness of Jarāsandha (vv. 745 ff.). He ends by saying that this mighty prince of Magadha should have a manifest vision of Rudra, Mahādeva, Hara, the destroyer of Tripura (v. 753. Esha Rudram Mahādevaṁ tripurānta-karaṁ Haram | sarvalokeshv atibalo sākshād drakshyati Māgadhaḥ).

The description here given by the Rākshasī of the worship paid to herself, furnishes, as Lassen (who quotes it, i. 609, first ed.; p. 755, second ed.) remarks, an instance of the local adoration of particular deities in ancient India.

In the account given of the transactions connected with the Rājasūya sacrifice which Yudhishṭhira sought to celebrate, we find (as Lassen, i. 673, first ed.; p. 821, second ed., remarks) the Pāṇḍavas represented as the partisans of Kṛishṇa; and this legendary narrative may perhaps be taken as an indication that they actually were the votaries of Vishṇu, and opposed to the worship of Mahādeva. In the story of Śiśupāla, which has been given above (pp. 205 ff.), we have seen that, in the assembly of princes who were gathered together on the occasion of that ceremonial, Kṛishṇa's claims to veneration were strongly maintained by the Pāṇḍavas, and others who took their side, while they were strenuously resisted by Śiśupāla, an adherent of the Kauravas, and, according to Lassen,[286] a representative of the Śaiva worship. The same opposition to the worship of Kṛishṇa was, as I have already noticed, manifested by Duryodhana, Karṇa, and Śalya (pp. 216, 218, 220, etc.).

[285] Lassen remarks, vol. i., p. 755, note, that this is one of the oldest references in Indian literature to images of the gods.

It is true that there is one passage (referred to above, p. 283, note 280), to which Lassen has drawn attention, in which Duryodhana is represented as having offered up a sacrifice to Vishṇu; and as this legend exhibits some features of interest, I shall give some account of it here. In the Vana-parvan, 15274 ff., Karṇa, after having conquered the earth, says to Duryodhana that the earth was now his, and he should rule over it like Indra. Duryodhana answers that he wished to celebrate a Rājasūya sacrifice. Karṇa replies that he should make preparation for that purpose (15278 ff.). Duryodhana then sends for his priest (purohita), whom he desires to perform the sacrifice (15284). The priest, however, states that the Rājasūya sacrifice cannot be celebrated by Duryodhana while Yudhishṭhira lives, and while his own father, Dhṛitarāshṭra, survives (15285 ff.); but he suggests that there is another great sacrifice which Duryodhana may offer (15287 ff.):

Asti tv anyad mahat satraṁ rājasūya-samam prabho | tena tvaṁ yaja rājendra śṛiṇu chedaṁ vacho mama | ye ime pṛithivī-pālāḥ kara-dās tava pārthiva | te karān samprayachhantu suvarṇancha kṛitākṛitam | tena te kriyatām adya lāṅgalaṁ nṛipa-sattama | yajna-vāṭasya te bhūmiḥ kṛishyatāṁ tena Bhārata | tatra yajno nṛipa-śreshṭha prabhūtānnaḥ susaṁskṛitaḥ | pravartatāṁ yathānyāyaṁ sarvato hy anivāritaḥ | esha te Vaishṇavo nāma yajnaḥ satpurushochitaḥ | etena neshṭavān kaśchid ṛite Vishṇum purātanam | rājasūyaṁ kratu-śreshṭhaṁ spardhaty esha mahākratuḥ | "But there is another great ceremonial equal to the Rājasūya, with which, O great king, do thou sacrifice: and hear this which I have to say. Let those princes who are your tributaries present to you their contributions, and gold both wrought and unwrought. With this let a plough be to-day made, and with it let the ground of thy sacrificial inclosure be ploughed. There let a sacrifice, well arranged, and with abundant food, be duly celebrated; for it will be completely unobstructed. This is to thee the Vaishṇava sacrifice (the sacrifice of Vishṇu), a ceremony suitable for virtuous men. With it no one ever sacrificed except the ancient Vishṇu.[287] This great ceremonial vies with the Rājasūya, the most excellent of sacrifices."

[286] See above, p. 211, note 210.

Duryodhana and his friends consented to this proposal (15295 f.), and the sacrifice was accordingly performed (15301 ff.). Amid the rejoicings which followed the ceremony, however, some foolish persons said to Duryodhana that his sacrifice was not a sixteenth part so good as Yudhishṭhira's Rājasūya sacrifice, while his friends said that this sacrifice surpassed all other ceremonies, and that Yayāti, Nahusha, Māndhātṛi, and Bharata, had celebrated this rite, and had in consequence gone to heaven (15327 ff.): Apare tv abruvans tatra vātikās tam mahīpatim | Yudhishṭhirasya yajnena na samo hy esha te kratuḥ | naiva tasya kratōr esha kalām arhati shoḍaśīm | evaṁ tatrābruvan kechid vātikās taṁ janeśvaram | suhṛidas tv abruvans tatra ati sarvān ayaṁ kratur ityādi |

I am not aware of any passage of the Mahābhārata in which Duryodhana is represented as a special worshipper of Mahādeva; but in a passage in the Karṇa-parvan, quoted above, pp. 223 ff., (which, however, I have supposed may be a later interpolation) he is declared to have narrated a legend descriptive of Mahādeva's prowess, and in which Vishṇu is generally subordinated to his rival. Duryodhana is also in two passages of the Mahābhārata connected (as if he was considered to be heretically disposed) with a Rākshasa named Chārvāka, and is represented as his friend (Śānti-parvan, 1414–1442), and as calling him to mind after he has received his death-blow, and expressing a belief that if once informed of his fate, the eloquent mendicant Chārvāka would perform an expiation for him in the holy lake Samantapanchaka.

I subjoin both of these passages: the substance of the first is given at the close of the preceding sentence.

Śalya-parvan, v. 3619: Yadi jānāti Chārvākaḥ parivrāḍ vāg-viśā-

[287] It must, according to this, have been very uncommon. Further on, however, it is said to have been celebrated by Yayāti and others.

radaḥ | karishyati mahābāho dhruvaṁ chāpachitam mama | Samantapanchake puṇye trishu lokeshu viśruṭe |

The passage from the Śânti-parvan, v. 1414, is as follows: Niśśabde cha sthite tatra tato vipra-jane punaḥ | rājānam brāhmaṇa-chhadmā Chārvāko rākshaso 'bravīt | tatra Duryodhana-sakhā bhikshu-rūpeṇa saṁvṛitaḥ | sākshaḥ śikhī tridaṇḍī cha dhṛishṭo vigata-sādhvasaḥ | vṛitaḥ sarvais tathā viprair āśīrvāda-vivakshubhiḥ | paraṁ sahasraiḥ rājendra tapo-niyama-saṁśritaiḥ | sa dushṭaḥ pāpam āśaṁśuḥ Pāṇḍavānām mahātmanām | anāmantryaiva tān viprāṁs tam uvācha mahīpatim | Chārvākaḥ uvācha | ime prāhur dvijāḥ sarve samāropya vacho mayi | dhig bhavantaṁ kunṛipatiṁ jñāti-ghātinam astu vai | kiṁ tena syād hi Kaunteya kṛitvemaṁ jñāti-sankshayam | ghātayitvā gurūṁś chaiva mṛitaṁ śreyo na jīvitam | iti te vai dvijāḥ śrutvā tasya dushṭasya rakshasaḥ | vivyathuś chukruśuś chaiva tasya vākya-pradharshitāḥ | tatas te brāhmaṇāḥ sarve sa cha rājā Yudhishṭhiraḥ | vrīḍitāḥ paramodvignās tūshṇīm āsan viśāmpate | Yudhishṭhiraḥ uvācha | prasīdantu bhavanto me praṇatasyābhiyāchataḥ | pratyāsanna-vyasaninaṁ na māṁ dhikkartum arhatha | Vaiśampāyanaḥ uvācha | tato rājan brāhmaṇās te sarve eva viśāmpate | ūchur naitad vacho 'smākaṁ śrīr astu tava pārthiva | jajnuś chaiva mahātmānas tatas tu jñāna-chakshushā | brāhmaṇāḥ veda-vidvāṁsas tapobhir vimalīkṛitāḥ | brāhmaṇāḥ ūchuḥ | esha Duryodhana-sakhā Chārvāko nama rākshasaḥ | parivrājaka-rūpeṇa hitaṁ tasya chikīrshati | na vayam brūma dharmātman vyetu te bhayam īdṛiśam | upatishṭhatu kalyāṇam bhavantam bhrātṛibhiḥ saha | Vaiśampāyanaḥ uvācha | tatas te brāhmaṇāḥ sarve hunkāraiḥ krodha-mūrchhitāḥ | nirbhartsayantaḥ śuchayo nijaghnuḥ pāpa-rākshasam | sa papāta vinirdagdhas tejasā brahmavādinām | māhendrāśani-nirdagdhaḥ pādapo 'nkuravān iva | pūjitāś cha yayur viprāḥ rājānam abhinandya tam | rājā cha harsham āpede Pāṇḍavaḥ sa-suhṛij-janaḥ | tatas tatra tu rājānaṁ tishṭhantam bhrātṛibhiḥ saha | uvācha Devakīputraḥ sarvadarśī Janārdanaḥ | Vāsudevaḥ uvācha | brāhmaṇās tāta loke 'sminn archanīyāḥ sadā nama | ete bhūmicharāḥ devāḥ vāg-vishāḥ suprasādajāḥ | purā Kṛitayuge rājaṁś Chārvāko nāma rākshasaḥ | tapas tepe mahābāho Vadaryām bahuvārshikam | vareṇa chhandyamānaś cha Brahmaṇā cha punaḥ punaḥ | abhayaṁ sarva-bhūtebhyo varayāmāsa Bhārata | dvijāvamānād anyatra prādād varam anuttamam | abhayaṁ sarvabhūtebhyo dadau tasmai Prajāpatiḥ | sa tu labdha-varaḥ pāpo devān amita-vikramaḥ | rākshasas tāpayāmāsa tīvrakarmā mahābalaḥ | 1414.

"When the Brahmans were again standing silent, the Râkshasa Châr-vâka, the friend of Duryodhana, a pretended Brahman, in the garb of a mendicant, with a rosary, a lock of hair on his head, carrying three staves, bold, and shameless, addressed the king. Surrounded thus by all the Brahmans, thousands in number, who were devoted to austere observances, and who sought to utter blessings, this wretch, who wished ill to the great Pâṇḍavas, without consulting the Brahmans, thus spoke to the monarch: 'All these Brahmans, assigning the speech to me, utter an imprecation against thee, thou wicked king, slayer of thy kindred. What can come of this? Since thou hast destroyed thy kinsmen, and slaughtered thy elders, death is better for thee than life.' Hearing the words of this wicked Râkshasa, the Brahmans were pained, and cried out, being provoked by his speech. All the Brahmans and king Yudhishṭhira, being ashamed and extremely vexed, remained silent. Then Yudhishṭhira said: 'Let all your reverences be gracious to me, who bow down, and supplicate you. You ought not to curse me, who have so recently been involved in calamity.' All the Brahmans replied: 'These were not our words: prosperity be thine, O king!' These great Brâhmans, learned in the Veda, purified by austerities, understood by the eye of knowledge (who Châr-vâka was). They said: 'This is a Râkshasa called Châr-vâka, the friend of Duryodhana, who has assumed the form of a wandering mendicant, and desires his welfare. We say nothing (of what he pretends); let such an apprehension pass away from thee: may good fortune be the lot of thyself and thy brothers!' The holy Brahmans then, furious with anger, slew the wicked Râkshasa, reviling him with loud menaces. Burnt up by the fervour of these utterers of the Veda, he fell, like a sprouting tree consumed by the lightning of Indra. The Brahmans honoured, departed, after saluting the king; and the Pâṇḍava monarch and his friends were glad. The all-seeing Janârdana, son of Devakî, then said to the king as he stood there with his brothers: 'The Brahmans are always to be revered by me in this world: they are gods who walk on the earth, whose words are poison, and also beneficent. Formerly, in the Kṛita age, a Râkshasa named Châr-vâka practised austerity for many years at Badari. Having again and again received from Brahmâ the offer of any boon which he might prefer, he chose that of security against all creatures. Prajâpati granted the incomparable boon which he asked, on condition that he should not contemn the Brahmans. But the wicked Rākshasa of boundless valour, fierce in act, and great in force, having obtained the boon, began to vex the gods.'" The result is that they appeal to Brahmā, who assures them that he has provided for the speedy death of Chārvāka. Duryodhana will become his friend; and out of regard to him, he will treat the Brāhmans with disrespect; and they will destroy him. This has now been fulfilled.[288]

In his Indische Studien, i. 206, Professor Weber conjectures that "the Kurus may have been the representatives of the Rudra (=Śiva)-worship, and the Pāṇḍus or Panchālas of the Indra (=Vishṇu)-worship," and this supposition seems to derive support from the considerations which have just been adduced.

The following passage from the Sabhā-parvan (where Kṛishṇa is describing to Yudhishṭhira the different partisans of Jarāsandha) appears as if it contained a tradition indicating some struggle, at a period antecedent to that of the writer, between the worship of Vishṇu, and that of some local deity who was venerated in the provinces east of Magadha.

Jarāsandhaṁ gatas tv eva purā yo na mayā hataḥ | Purushottama-vijñāto yo 'sau Chedishu durmatiḥ | ātmānam pratijānāti loke 'smin Puroshottamam | ādatte satatam mohād yaḥ sa chihnaṁ cha māmakam | Vanga-Puṇḍra-Kirāteshu rājā bala-samanvitaḥ | Pauṇḍrako Vāsudeveti yo 'sau loke 'bhiviśrutaḥ | "And he who formerly was not slain by me, has also taken the side of Jarāsandha—(I mean) the wicked man who is known as Purushottama among the Chedis, who in this world professes himself to be Purushottama, who through infatuation continually assumes my mark—He who is a powerful king among the Bangas, Puṇḍras, and Kirātas, and is celebrated in the world as the Vāsudeva of the Puṇḍras.[289] He is mentioned also Ādip. v. 6992.

---

[288] Both passages had been previously translated by me in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. xix., pp. 308 f. I have not been able to find any other text in the Mahābhārata in which the connexion of Duryodhana with this Chārvāka (who stands here, no doubt, as a mythical representative of the well-known heretics of that name) is more explicitly described; though, from the two passages above adverted to, one would have expected to find some further references to Duryodhana's connexion with him. The passage referred to in the summary of the contents of the Mahābhārata, i. 349, must be the second of those here quoted.

[289] On this Lassen remarks (i. p. 608, first ed.; p. 754 f., second ed.): "Since

The following remarks of Prof. Weber on the preceding chapter (translated from a notice of this work in the "Literarisches Central-Blatt," reprinted in his "Indische Streifen," ii. 226 f.) may be introduced here, though they might perhaps have been more appropriately quoted in p. 97, or p. 163. "As regards the second part, the representation of the Vishṇu legends, it is impossible to arrive at any certain conception of the proper nature of this god from the documents presented to us. According to our view it would have been perhaps more advantageous for the course of the representation in general to start, not from the later triad of gods, but from the Vedic triad, which so often appears in the Brāhmaṇa texts themselves, viz. that of Agni, Vāyu, and Sūrya, the rulers of the earth, the air, and the heaven; as we have in fact actually to recognize this as the foundation of the later triad. The sun, as the generative, creative, principle, is throughout the ritual-texts regarded as the equivalent of Prajāpati, the father of the creation. The destructive power of fire in connexion with the raging of the driving storm lies clearly enough at the foundation of the epic form of Śiva. By the side of Vāyu, the wind, stands his companion Indra, the lord of the light, clear, heaven; and with him again Vishṇu, the lord of the solar orb, stands in a fraternal relation (see my two Vedic texts on omens and portents, p. 338). This close relation of Vishṇu to Indra is far from being estimated by the author in its full significance. Vishṇu owes to Indra his blue colour, his names Vāsava and Vāsudeva, and his relations to the human heroes, as Arjuna, Rāma, and Kṛishṇa, which have become of such great importance for his entire history."

these (Purushottama and Vāsudeva) became in later times two of the most venerated names of Vishṇu, it is clear from this passage, that among the Eastern tribes, and those too not of Arian origin, a supreme god was worshipped, whose name was afterwards transferred to Vishṇu."

CHAPTER III.

RUDRA AND MAHĀDEVA, AS REPRESENTED IN THE VEDIC HYMNS, AND THE BRĀHMAṆAS.

In the preceding chapter I have quoted a variety of passages from the Mahābhārata, which, though primarily adduced to illustrate the ideas entertained of Kṛishṇa's nature, afford at the same time a pretty full representation of the attributes of Mahādeva as he was conceived in the period of the epic poems and Purāṇas. I have thus anticipated much that would otherwise have found its place towards the close of the present chapter, of which it is the purpose to compare the earlier and the later accounts furnished to us by Indian literature of the deity or deities to whom the name of Rudra was applied. I shall now proceed to adduce the passages relating to this divinity which occur (1) in the Rig-veda, (2) in the Yajur-veda, (3) in the Atharva-veda, and (4) in the Brāhmaṇas, and to compare the representations which they contain with those which are found in the texts descriptive of Mahādeva which I have quoted in the preceding chapter.

SECT. I.—Rudra as represented in the Hymns of the Rig-veda.

In the present Section I purpose to quote all the texts of the Rig-veda in which the word Rudra occurs in the singular, whether as an epithet of Agni or as the name of a separate deity.

R.V. i. 27, 10 (S. V. i. 15; Nir. x. 8).—Jarābodha tad viviḍḍhi viśe viśe yajniyāya stomaṁ rudrāya dṛiśīkam | "Thou who art skilled in praise, utter therefore for every house a beautiful hymn to the adorable, the terrible (Agni)."[1] In connexion with this verse, Yāska remarks:

Nir. x. 7 and 8.—Agnir api rudraḥ uchyate | tasya eshā bhavati. . . . jarā ājutiḥ | jarateḥ stuti-karmaṇaḥ | tām bodha tayā bodhayitar iti vā | tad viviḍḍhi[2] tat kuru manushyasya manushyasya yajanāya stomaṁ Rudrāya darśanīyam | "Agni also is called Rudra, as in this verse

[1] See Prof. Benfey's version of this and following texts of the first maṇḍala of the R.V. in his "Orient und Occident."

[2] See Westergaard, Benfey's Glossary to Sama-veda, and Böhtlingk and Roth, s. v. vish.

(the one before us). Jarā means 'praise.' One who perceives it, or awakens [another] by it, is jarābodha. Compose that for the worship of every man,—a sightly hymn for the terrible." Roth (Illust. of Nir., p. 136) remarks that "rudra" in this verse is an epithet of Agni, to whom the whole "ṭricha," or aggregate of three verses in which it occurs, is addressed; and he refers to R. V. x. 70, 2, 3, and R. V. viii. 26, 5, where the same epithet is applied in the dual to Mitra and Varuṇa, and to the Aśvins,[3] respectively. Roth also quotes from Jayatīrtha the following short itihāsa in reference to this verse, which, however, applies it to Rudra: Agniḥ stūyamānaḥ Śunaśśepham uvācha "Rudraṁ stuhi raudrāḥ hi paśavaḥ" iti | Sa tam pratyuvācha "nāhaṁ jānāmi Rudraṁ stotuṁ tvam eva etaṁ stuhi" iti tad idam uchyate "He jarābodha Rudra-stuti-vettas tat kuru" ityādi | "Agni, when he was being praised, said to Śunaśśepha, 'Praise Rudra, for cattle (or victims) belong to him.' He (Śunaśśepha) answered, 'I do not know how to praise Rudra; do thou praise him.' It is this which is here expressed, 'O thou who art skilled in the praise of Rudra, do thou do so.'"

R.V. i. 43, 1 ff.—Kad Rudrāya prachetase mīḷhushṭamāya tavyase | vochema śantamaṁ hṛide | 2. Yathā no Aditiḥ karat paśve nṛibhyo yathā gave | yathā tokāya rudriyam[4] | 3. Yathā no Mitro Varuṇo yathā Rudraś chiketati | yathā viśve sajoshasaḥ | 4. Gātha-patim medha-patiṁ Rudraṁ jalāsha-bheshajam | tat śaṁyoḥ sumnam īmahe | 5. Yaḥ śukraḥ iva sūryo hiraṇyam iva rochate | śreshṭho devānāṁ vasuḥ | 6. Saṁ naḥ karaty arvate sugam meshāya meshye | nṛibhyo nāribhyo gave | "What can we utter to Rudra, the intelligent, the most bountiful, the strong, which shall be most pleasant to his heart? 2. That so Aditi may bring Rudra's healing to our cattle, and men, and kine, and children. 3. That so Mitra, Varuṇa, Rudra, and all the [gods] united, may think of us. 4. We seek from Rudra, the lord of songs, the lord of sacrifices, who possesses healing remedies, his auspicious favour. 5. [We seek this from him] who is brilliant as the sun, who shines like gold, who is the best and most bountiful of the gods. 6. He grants prosperity and welfare to our horses, rams, ewes, men, women, and cows."

R.V. i. 64, 2.—Te jajñire divaḥ ṛishvāsaḥ ukshaṇo Rudrasya maryāḥ asurāḥ arepasaḥ | pāvakāsaḥ śuchayaḥ sūryāḥ iva satvāno na drapsino

[3] See also R.V. viii. 22, 14, which will be quoted further on.

[4] "Rudra's favour" (Benfey). Compare mārutasya bheshajasya in R.V. viii. 20, 23.

ghora-varpasaḥ | 3. Yuvāno Rudrāḥ ajarāḥ abhogghano vavakshur adhri-gāvaḥ parvatāḥ iva | dṛiḷhā chid viśvā bhuvanāni pārthivā prachyāvayanti divyāni majmanā | . . . . 12. Ghṛishum pāvakaṁ vaninaṁ vicharshaṇiṁ Rudrasya sūnuṁ havasā gṛiṇīmāsi | rajasturaṁ tavasam mārutaṁ ganam ṛiṭīshiṇaṁ vṛishaṇaṁ saśchata śriye | "These followers of Rudra have been produced from the Sky, exalted, fertilizing, divine, purifiers, bright as suns, like heroes, shedding drops, fearful in form. 3. The youthful Rudras, undecaying, destroyers of the niggardly, resistless, [firm as] mountains, have increased [in vigour]. By their power they cast down all terrestrial and celestial creatures, however firm. . . 12. We praise with invocations the fierce, purifying, rain-dispensing energetic offspring of Rudra. To obtain prosperity, worship the host of Maruts, which sweeps over the atmosphere, vigorous, impetuous, and fertilizing."[5]

R.V. i. 85, 1.—Pra ye śumbhante janayo na saptayo[6] yāman Rudrasya sūnavaḥ sudaṁsasaḥ | rodasī hi marutaś chakrire vṛidhe madanti vīrāḥ vidatheshu ghṛishvayaḥ | "The swift Maruts, energetic sons of Rudra, who, in their course, are bright like wives, have made the two worlds to prosper, and, impetuous heroes, rejoice in sacrifices."

R.V. i. 114, 1 ff. (Vāj. S. 16, 48; Taitt. S. iv. 5, 10, 1).—Imāḥ Rudrāya tavase kapardine[7] kshayad-vīrāya[8] prabharāmahe matīḥ | yathā

[5] See Prof. Max Müller's version of this hymn, and of that next quoted, in his Translation of the R.V., vol. i.

[6] See Prof. Max Müller's note on this word, Translation of R.V. i. 110 ff. The word also occurs in R.V. x. 142, 2, as well as in the other texts enumerated by Müller, p. 112

[7] Kapardin is also an epithet of Pūshan in R.V. vi. 55, 2: Rathītamaṁ kapardinam īśānaṁ rāḍhaso mahaḥ | rāyaḥ sakhāyam īmahe | "We solicit the great charioteer, adorned with spirally-braided hair, the lord of great bounty, and our friend, for wealth." And also in R.V. ix. 67, 10, 11: Avitā no ajāśvaḥ Pūshā yāmani yāmani | ābhākshat kanyāsu naḥ | 11. Ayaṁ somaḥ kapardine ghṛitaṁ na pavate madhu | ā bhakshat kanyāsu naḥ | "Pūshan, who has goats for steeds, is our protector on every journey. May he make us possessors of damsels. 11. This soma is purified for the god with spirally-braided hair, like sweet butter. May he make us possessors of damsels." The word is also applied to the Ṛitsus in R.V. vii. 83, 8. . . . . S'vityancho yatra namasā kapardino dhiyā dhīvanto asapanta Ṛitsavaḥ | . . . . . "Where the white-robed Ṛitsus with braided hair have worshipped you with obeisances and prayers." With this compare dakshiṇatas-kapardāḥ in R.V. vii. 33, 1. The word Kapardin also occurs in R.V. x. 102, 8.

[8] This word is rendered "governing men" by Böhtlingk and Roth, vol. ii. (published 1856–1858), who first cite, as determining the sense of the word, R.V.

śam asad dvipade chatushpade viśvam pushṭaṁ grāme asminn anāturam | 2. (=T. S. iv. 5, 10, 2) Mṛiḷa no Rudra uta no mayas kṛidhi kshayadvīrāya namasā vidhema te | yat śaṁ cha yośchu Manur ā yeje pitā tad aśyāma tava Rudra praṇītishu | 3. Aśyāma te sumatiṁ deva-yajyayā kshayad-vīrasya tava Rudra mīḍhvaḥ | sumnāyann id viśo asmākam ācharа arishṭa-vīrāḥ juhavāma te haviḥ | 4. Tveshaṁ vayaṁ Rudraṁ

viii. 19, 10: Yasya tvam ūrdhvo adhvarāya tishṭhasi kshayadvīraḥ sa sādhate | so arvadbhiḥ sanitā sa vipanyubhiḥ sa śūraiḥ sanitā kṛitam | "The man to whom thou hoverest over the sacrifice, prospers as a commander of heroes: he, with horses, with triumphant men, with heroes, will acquire spoil." Benfey also (Orient und Occident, iii. pp. 140 and 156) renders the word "governing heroes"; and adds in a note on the latter page: "Are the heroes, the single stormy winds, the maruts (comp. v. 6) over whom Rudra rules; or is Rudra generally designated as the lord of all heroes, inasmuch as he makes them swift, and destructive as storm-winds, in battle? 'Destroyer of heroes,' as Whitney proposes, ('slayer of men,' Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol. iii., p. 319, published in 1853), is not specially suitable in R.V. viii. 19, 10, or in other places." Professor Aufrecht translates the word "ruling over men" (as well as gods). Rudra, he remarks, is called īśānād asya bhuvanasya bhūreḥ, "lord over this manifold creation," in R.V. ii. 33, 9; and compares sed u rājā kshayati charshaṇīnām in i. 32, 15, and the similar phrases in i. 112, 3, and x. 9, 5. Kshayadvīra is, he believes, nothing more than the usual nṛipati. It is true, Professor Aufrecht adds, that in i. 114, 8, it is said of Rudra, "do not strike our children in thy anger," and that in iv. 3, 6, he is called nṛihan; but he does not think it likely that in one particular hymn a word should have a quite different meaning from that which it has in all other passages; and regards it as quite possible that nṛihan may be based on a false interpretation of kshayadvīra. Sāyaṇa renders the word variously. On the passage above referred to, viii. 19, 10, he interprets it: nivasadbhir itvarair vā vīraiḥ putrādibhir upetaḥ | i.e. "attended by heroes, sons, etc., dwelling or moving." On i. 106, 4, where it is an epithet of Pūshan, he explains it ati-balinam | yasmin sarve vīrāḥ kshīyante, i.e. "very powerful: he in whom all heroes are consumed." On the passage before us, i. 114, 1, he gives two possible explanations of it: Kshayanto vinaśyanto vīrāḥ yasmin tādṛiśāya | yadvā kshayatir aiśvaryakarmā | kshayantaḥ prāptaiśvaryāḥ vīrāḥ Marudgaṇāḥ putrāḥ yasya | "He in whom heroes perish; or, as the root kshi also means 'exercising authority,'—he of whom the Maruts, heroes, exercising authority, are the sons." The same verse occurs in Vāj. S., xvi. 48, where Mahīdhara interprets the phrase: Kshayanto nivasanto vīrāḥ śūrāḥ yatra sa kshayadvīras tasmai śūra-yuvāya ity arthaḥ | kshayanto naśyanto vīrāḥ ripavo yasmād iti vā | "He in whom heroes dwell is kshayadvīra; to him who is possessed of heroes. Or, he through whom heroes perish." On the second and third verses of i. 114, Sāyaṇa repeats in different words the explanations he had given on the first verse (Kshayita-sarva-vīram prāptaiśvaryair marudbhir yuktaṁ vā | kshayita-pratikṣakshasya Marudbhir yuktasya vā). On verse 10, he confines himself to the one explanation, Kshayita-sarva-śatru-jana. In R.V. i. 125, 3, the same epithet is applied to Indra; where Sāyaṇa expounds it thus: Kshiyanto nivasanto vīrāḥ putra-bhṛityādayo yasya taṁ tādṛiśaṁ tvad-ishṭa-sādhana-bahu-dhana-pradātāram | "He in whom heroes, sons, servants, etc., abide—the giver of much wealth, which is the instrument of obtaining thy wishes."

yajña-sādhaṁ vankuṁ kavim avase nihvayāmahe | āre asmad daivyaṁ helo asyatu sumatim id vayam asya ā vṛiṇīmahe | 5. Divo varāham arushaṁ kapardinaṁ tveshaṁ rūpaṁ namasā nihvayāmahe | haste bibhrad bheshajā vāryāṇi śarma varma chhardir asmabhyaṁ yaṁsat | 6. Idāṁ pitre Marutām uchyate vachaḥ svādoḥ svādīyo Rudrāya vardhanam | rāsva cha no amṛita marta-bhojanaṁ tmane tokāya tanayāya mṛiḷa | 7 (=V. S. 16, 15; T. S. iv. 5, 10, 2; A. V. ii. 2, 29). Mā no mahāntam uta mā no arbhakam mā naḥ ukshantam uta mā naḥ ukshitam | mā no badhīḥ pitaram mota mātaram mā naḥ priyās tanvo Rudra rīrishaḥ | 8. (V. S. 16, 16; T. S. iv. 5, 10, 3). Mā nas toke tanaye mā na āyau (āyushi V. S., T. S.) mā no goshu mā no aśveshu rīrishaḥ | vīrān mā no bhāmito (bhāmino V. S., T. S.) badhīr havishmantaḥ sadam it tvā havāmahe | 9. Upa te stomān paśu-pāḥ ivākaram rāsva pitar Marutāṁ sumnam asme | bhadrā hi te sumatir mṛiḷayattamā atha vayam avaḥ it te vṛiṇīmahe | 10. (T.S. iv. 5, 10, 3). Āre te go-ghnam uta pūrusha-ghnam kshayad-vīra sumnam asme te astu | mṛiḷa cha no adhi cha brūhi deva adha cha naḥ śarma yachha dvi-barhāḥ | 11. Avochāma namo asmai avasyavaḥ śṛiṇotu no havaṁ Rudro marutvān | tan no Mitro Varuṇo mamahantām Aditiḥ sindhuḥ pṛithivī uta dyauḥ |

"We present these prayers to Rudra,[9] the strong, with spirally-

[9] Sāyaṇa, in his note on this verse, gives no less than six explanations of the word Rudra, which I subjoin, as a specimen of commentorial ingenuity:

Rodayati sarvam antakāle iti Rudraḥ | yadvā rut saṁsārākhyaṁ duḥkham | tad drāvayaty apagamayati vināśayati iti Rudraḥ | yadvā rutaḥ śabda-rūpāḥ upanishadaḥ | tābhir drūyate gamyate pratipādyate iti Rudraḥ | yadvā rut śabdātmikā vāṇī tat-pratipādyātma-vidyā vā | tam upāsakebhyo rāti dadāti iti Rudraḥ | yadvā runaddhy āvṛiṇoti iti rud andhakārādi | tad dṛiṇāti vidārayati iti Rudraḥ | yadvā kadāchid devāsura-saṅgrāme 'gny-ātmako Rudro devair nikshiptaṁ dhanam apahṛitya niragāt | asurān jitvā devāḥ enam anvishya dṛishṭvā dhanam apāharan | tadānīm arudat | tasmād Rudraḥ ity ākhyāyate | "He is called Rudra (1) because he makes every one weep (rodayati) at the destruction of the world. Or (2) rut means the suffering called the world. He drives away (drāvayati), removes, destroys, that: therefore he is named Rudra. Or (3) rut in the plural meaus the Upanishads, which are composed of words: by them he is attained, expounded (drūyate): therefore he is termed Rudra. Or (4) rut signifies language composed of words, or the science of soul which is to be explained by it: this he gives (rāti) to his worshippers: hence he is denominated Rudra. Or (5) the root rudh means to shut, cover; and therefore rut means darkness, etc.: he tears (dṛiṇāti), rends, it: therefore he is designated as Rudra. Or (6) when on one occasion there was a battle between the gods and Asuras, Rudra having the nature of Agni carried off the treasures which had been thrown down by the gods and went away. But the gods, after conquering the Asuras, sought him, saw him, and took the treasures from him: then he wept (arudat), and from that he is called Rudra."

braided hair, ruling over heroes, that there may be prosperity to our two-footed and four-footed creatures, that everything in this village may be well fed and free from disease. 2. Be gracious to us, Rudra, and cause us happiness; let us with obeisance worship thee, the ruler over heroes. Whatever prosperity and blessing our father Manu acquired by worship, may we attain it all under thy guidance, Rudra. 3. May we by our divine worship obtain the goodwill of thee, Rudra, who art the ruler of heroes, and beneficent; act favourably towards our people: may we, with our men unharmed, offer thee our oblation. 4. We invoke to our succour the impetuous Rudra, the fulfiller of sacrifice, the swift, the wise. May he drive far away from us the anger of the gods, for we desire his favour. 5. We invoke with obeisance the ruddy boar of the sky, with spirally-braided hair, a brilliant form. Carrying in his hand most choice remedies, may he give us protection, defence, shelter. 6. This exhilarating hymn, sweeter than the sweetest, is uttered to Rudra, the father of the Maruts. Bestow on us, O immortal, the food of mortals; be gracious to ourselves, our children, and descendants. 7. Slay neither our great, nor our small, neither our growing nor our grown, neither our father nor our mother; injure not, Rudra, our dear selves. 8. Injure us not in our children and descendants, nor in our men (life, V.S.), nor in our cattle, nor in our horses. Slay not our men in thine anger (angry men, V.S.): we continually worship thee with offerings. 9. As a keeper of cattle (brings victims), so have we brought praises near to thee:[10] bestow on us thy favour, O father of the Maruts. For kind and most gracious is thy benevolence, and now we desire thy succour. 10. Far from us be thy cow-slaying and thy man-slaying [weapon]: ruler of heroes, let thy blessing be with us. Be gracious to us, O god, and take our side; bestow on us mightily thy protection. 11. We have uttered to him our adoration, desiring his help. May [10] Compare R.V. x. 127, 8, quoted by Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. kar+upa+ā: upa te gāḥ iva ākaram vriṇīshva duhitar divaḥ | Rātri stomaṁ na jigyushe | "I have, O Night, brought before thee (praises) as it were cows; choose (them, daughter of the Sky), as it were a hymn to a conqueror." Sāyaṇa (on R.V. i. 114, 9) explains the comparison as follows: Yathā paśūnām pālayitā gopaḥ prātaḥkāle svasmai samarpitān paśūn sāyaṁkāle svāmibhyaḥ pratyarpayati evaṁ tvat sakāśāl labdhān stutirūpān mantrān stuti-sādhanatayā tubhyam pratyarpayāmi | "As a cattle-herd returns to the owners in the evening the cattle entrusted to him in the morning, so I, by the fulfilment of praise, give back to thee the laudatory hymns received from thee."

Rudra, attended by the Maruts, listen to our invocation. Then may Mitra, Varuṇa, Aditi, Sindhu, Earth and Sky, gladden us."

In Sāyaṇa's annotations on the sixth verse, he quotes the following later story to explain how Rudra (here identified with the later Mahādeva) came to be called the father of the Maruts:

Rudrasya Marutām pitṛitvam evam ākhyāyate | purā kadāchid Indro 'surān jigāya | tadānīm Ditir Asura-mātā Indra-hanana-samartham putraṁ kāmayamānā tapasā bhartuḥ sakāśād garbhaṁ lebhe | imaṁ vṛittāntam avagachhann Indro vajra-hastaḥ san sūkshma-rūpo bhūtvā tasyāḥ udaram praviśya taṁ garbhaṁ saptadhā bibheda | punar apy ekaikaṁ sapta-khaṇḍam akarot | te sarve garbhaika-deśāḥ yoner nirgatyārudan | etasminn avasare līlārthaṁ gachhantau Pārvatī-parameśvarāv imān dadṛiśatuḥ | Maheśam prati Pārvaty evam avochat | "ime māṁsa-khaṇḍāḥ yathā pratyekam putrāḥ sampadyantām evaṁ tvayā kāryam mayi chet prītir asti" iti | sa cha Maheśvaras tān samāna-rūpān samāna-vayasaḥ samānālankārān putrān kṛitvā Gauryai pradadau "taveme putrāḥ santv" iti | ataḥ sarveshu Māruteshu sūkteshu Maruto Rudra-putrāḥ iti stūyante Raudreshu cha Marutām pitā Rudraḥ iti |

"The story of Rudra being the father of the Maruts is thus recounted. Formerly, once on a time, Indra overcame the Asuras. Then Diti, the mother of the Asuras, desiring a son who should be able to slay Indra, through austerity became pregnant by her husband. Indra, learning this news, entered into her womb in a very minute form, with a thunberbolt in his hand, divided her fœtus into seven parts, and again made each of these parts into seven. All these being in one part of the fœtus, issued from the womb and wept. At this conjuncture, Parameśvara (Mahādeva) and Pārvatī were passing by for amusement, and saw them. Pārvatī spoke thus to Parameśvara, 'If you love me, effect that all these bits of flesh may become severally sons.' Maheśvara made them all of the same form and age, and with the same ornaments, and gave them to Gaurī (Pārvatī), saying, 'Let these be thy sons.' Hence in all the hymns addressed to the Maruts, they are lauded as the sons of Rudra; and in the hymns to Rudra, he is praised as the father of the Maruts."[11]

[11] On R.V. viii. 28, 5, Sāyaṇa has the following note: Atra purātanī kathā | Indra-samānam putram ichhantyāḥ Aditer garbhasya kenachit kāraṇena Indreṇa saptadhā bhinnatvāt sa garbhaḥ sapta-gaṇātmako 'bhavat | tato Marutaḥ sampannāḥ |

R.V. i. 122, 1.—Pra vaḥ pāntaṁ raghu-manyavo 'ndho yajñaṁ Rudrāya mīḷhushe bharadhvam | dīvo astoshi asurasya[12] vīrair ishudhyā iva Maruto rodasyoḥ | "Present, ye zealous (priests), to the bountiful Rudra, the draught of soma, your offering. I have praised him with the heroes of the divine Sky: may I (with my prayer) as it were aim at the Maruts in heaven and earth."

R.V. i. 129, 3.—Dasmo hi shma vṛishaṇam pinvasi tvachaṁ kaṁ chid yāvīr araruṁ śūra martyam parivṛiṇakshi martyam | Indrota tubhyaṁ tad Dive tad Rudrāya sva-yaśase | Mitrāya vochaṁ Varuṇāya saprathaḥ sumṛiḷīkāya saprathaḥ | "Thou (Indra), who art energetic, fillest the teeming skin (the cloud?): thou, hero, hast chased away every hostile mortal, thou puttest to flight the mortal. Indra, I have uttered this to thee, and this to the Sky, and to Rudra, who derives his renown from himself, and to Mitra, and to Varuṇa abundantly, to the very gracious, abundantly."

R.V. ii. 1, 6.—Tvam Agne Rudro asuro maho divas tvaṁ śardho mārutam pṛikshaḥ īśishe | tvaṁ vātair aruṇair yāsi śaṁgayas tvam Pūshā vidhataḥ pāsi nu tmanā | "Thou, Agni, art Rudra, the great spirit (asura) of the sky. Thou art the host of the Maruts. Thou art lord of nourishment. Thou, who hast a pleasant abode, movest onward with the ruddy winds. Thou [being] Pūshan, by thyself protectest those who worship thee."

"sapta-ganāḥ vai Marutaḥ" iti śruteḥ | "Regarding this there is an ancient story. The fœtus of Aditi, who desired to have a son equal to Indra, having been for some reason divided by Indra into seven parts, it became formed into seven troops. Thence the Maruts were produced. For a Vedic text says, "The Maruts are divided into seven troops." Unless the reading in the latter of these two passages is incorrect, it will be observed that the mother of the Maruts is variously represented to be Diti and Aditi. As in the first of the two texts Diti is defined as the mother of the Asuras, the reading there must be correct; and the Maruts must have been regarded by the writer as her sons. In the hymns they are said to be the sons of Rudra and Pṛiśni; and the sons of the Sky and Ocean. See the fifth volume of this work, p. 147 f.

[12] Compare with divo asurasya, R.V. i. 131, 1, and iii. 53, 7, where the phrases Dyaur asuraḥ, "the divine Sky," and Divas putrāso asurasya, "the sons of the divine Sky," occur. I am indebted to Prof. Aufrecht for an explanation of the sense of this half verse. He holds ishudhyā as put for ishudhyāni, the 1st pers. sing. of the imperative of the root ishudhy. See Dr. Bollensen's article in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xxii., "Die Lieder des Parāśara," p. 577, where other instances of the suffix ni being omitted in this part of the verb are given.

See above (p. 76 f.) the third verse of this hymn, where Agni is identified with Indra, and Vishṇu, in the same way as he is identified with Rudra and Pūshan in the verse before us.—See also verses 4, 5, and 7. Sāyana, in his commentary on this verse, gives two derivations of the word Rudra:

Rud duḥkhaṁ duḥkha-hetur vā pāpādiḥ | tasya drāvayitā etan-nāmako devo 'si | "Rudro vai esha yad Agnir" ity ādishv Agneḥ Rudra-śabdena vyavahārāt | yadvā tvaṁ 'Rudraḥ | rauti | māṁ anishṭvā narāḥ duḥkhe patishyanti | Rudras tādṛiśo 'si | "Rut means suffering, or sin, etc.; which causes suffering. Thou (Agni) art the god so called, who drives this away (rud-drāvayitā); for Agni is intended by the word Rudra in such passages as this, 'He who is Agni is Rudra.' Or, thou art Rudra. He cries: Not worshipping me, men will fall into grief. Thou art such a Rudra," etc.

R.V. ii. 33, 1 ff.—Ā te pitar Marutāṁ sumnam etu mā naḥ sūryasya saṁdṛiśo yuyothāḥ | abhi no vīro arvati kshameta pra jāyemahi Rudra prajābhiḥ | 2. Tvā-dattebhiḥ Rudra śaṁtamebhiḥ śataṁ himā aśīya bheshajebhiḥ | vi asmad dvesho vitaraṁ vi aṁho vi amīvāś chātayasva vishūchīḥ | 3. S'reshṭho jātasya Rudra śriyā 'si tavastamas tavasāṁ vajra-bāho | parshi naḥ pāram aṁhasaḥ svasti viśvāḥ abhītīḥ rapaso yuyodhi | 4. Mā tvā Rudra chukrudhāma namobhir mā dushṭutī vṛishabha mā sahūtī | ud no vīrān arpaya bheshajebhir bhishaktamaṁ tvā bhishajāṁ śṛiṇomi | 5. Havīmabhir havate yo havirbhir ava stomebhiḥ Rudraṁ dishīya | ṛidūdaraḥ suhavo mā no asyai babhruḥ suśipro rīradhad manāyai | 6. Ud mā mamanda vṛishabho marutvān tvakshīyasā vayasā nādhamānam | ghṛiṇīva[13] chhāyām arapāḥ aśīya ā vivāseyaṁ Rudrasya sumnam | 7. Kva sya te Rudra mṛiḷayākur hasto yo asti bheshajo jalāshaḥ | apabhartā rapaso daivyasya abhi nu mā vṛishabha chakshamīthāḥ | 8. Pra babhrave vṛishabhāya śvitīche maho mahīṁ sushṭutim īrayāmi | namasyā kalmalīkinaṁ namobhir gṛiṇīmasi tveshaṁ Rudrasya nāma[14] 9. Sthirebhir angair puru-rūpaḥ ugro babhruḥ śukrebhiḥ pipiśe hiraṇyaiḥ | īśānād asya bhuvanasya bhūrer na vai u yoshad Rudrād asuryam | 10. Arhan bibharshi sāyakāni dhanva arhan nishkaṁ yajataṁ viśvarūpam | arhann idaṁ dayase viśvam abhvaṁ na vai ojīyo Rudra tvad asti |

[13] See Dr. Bollensen's article in Benfey's Orient und Occident, ii. 474, where he says ghṛiṇī is a locative or instrumental. Böhtlingk and Roth judge differently. See s.v.

[14] Compare R.V. vii. 100, 3, above, p. 87.

11 (A. V. 18, 1, 40; T. S. iv. 5, 10, 3, 4). Stuhi śrutaṁ garta-sadaṁ yuvānam mṛigaṁ na bhīmam[15] upahatnum ugram | mṛiḷa jaritre Rudra stavāno anyaṁ te asmad ni vapantu senāḥ | 12. Kumāras chit pitaraṁ vandamānam prati nanāma Rudra uyayantam | bhūrer dātāraṁ satpatiṁ gṛiṇīshe stutas tvam bheshajā rāsi asme | 13. Yā vo bheshajā Marutaḥ śuchīni yā śaṁtamā vṛishaṇo yā mayobhu | yāni Manur avṛiṇīta pitā nas tā śaṁ cha yoścha Rudrasya vaśmi | 14 (V. S. 16, 50; T. S. iv. 5, 10, 4). Pari no hetiḥ Rudrasya vṛijyāḥ[16] (vṛiṇaktu, V. S., T. S.) pari tveshasya durmatir mahī gāt | ava sthirā maghavadbhyas tanushva mīḍhvas tokāya tanayāya mṛiḷa | 15. Eva babhro vṛishabha chekitāna yathā deva na hṛiṇīshe na haṁsi | havana-śrud no Rudra iha bodhi bṛihad vadema vidathe suvīrāḥ |

"1. Father of the Maruts, may thy blessing come (to us): remove us not from the sight of the sun. May the hero spare our horses: may we, Rudra, increase in offspring. 2. Through the auspicious remedies conferred by thee, Rudra, may I attain a hundred winters. Drive away far from us enmity, and distress, and diseases, to a distance. 3. Thou, Rudra, art in glory the most eminent of beings, the strongest of the strong, O wielder of the thunderbolt. Carry us happily across our calamity: repel all the assaults of evil. 4. Let us not, Rudra, provoke thee by our prostrations, by our unsuitable praises, vigorous [deity], or by our common invocations. Raise up our heroes by thy remedies: I hear that thou art the greatest physician of physicians. 5. May I with hymns avert (propitiate) that Rudra who is invoked with praises and oblations. Let not him who is mild, easily-invoked, tawny, with a beautiful chin, deliver us up to this ill will [of our enemies]. 6. The mighty [god], attended by the Maruts, has gladdened me his suppliant with robust health. May I, free from injury, obtain [thy protection], as it were, shade in the heat [of the summer]: may I seek the blessing of Rudra. 7. Where, Rudra, is that thy gracious hand which is healing and restorative? Removing the evil which comes from the gods, spare me, thou vigorous [deity]. 8. I joyfully send forth a great encomium to this tawny, vigorous, luminous god.

[15] Compare similar modes of speaking about Vishṇu, Indra, Varuṇa, etc., above, p. 69 and note 18.

[16] See in the note to Roth's Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 86, other instances of similar forms, apparently of the 2nd pers. sing., standing for the 3rd pers.

Reverence the fiery [deity] with prostrations: we celebrate the glorious name of Rudra. 9. With firm limbs, multiform, fierce, tawny, he has been arrayed with bright golden (ornaments).[17] Divine power can never be removed from Rudra, the lord of this vast world. 10. Thou, fitly, holdest arrows and a bow; fitly, thou [wearest] a glorious necklace of every form (of beauty). Fitly, thou possessest all this vast [world]. There is nothing, Rudra, more powerful than thou. 11. Celebrate the renowned and youthful god, mounted on his chariot, terrible as a wild beast, destructive, and fierce. Be gracious to thy worshipper, Rudra, when praised: may thy hosts prostrate some one else than us. 12. Even a boy, when his father approaches and salutes him, makes obeisance to him in return; [so] O Rudra, I praise [thee], the giver of much [good], the lord of heroes. Thou, when lauded, grantest to us remedies. 13. Those pure remedies of yours, Maruts, those which are salutary, ye strong [gods], those which are beneficent, those which our father Manu desired[18]—those, as well as the blessing and favour of Rudra, I desire. 14. May the bolt of Rudra avoid us; may the great malevolence of the impetuous [deity] depart far from us. Unbend thy strong [bows so as not to strike] thy wealthy worshippers. Dispenser of good, be gracious to our children and descendants. 15. O tawny and vigorous god, so taking heed of us, as neither to be incensed against us, nor to injure us—think of us now, Rudra, hearing our invocations; let us with our vigorous men utter a great hymn at the sacrifice."

R. V. ii. 34, 2.—Dyāvo na stṛibhiś chitayanta khādino vi abhriyāḥ na dyutayanta vṛishṭayaḥ | Rudro yad vo Maruto rukma-vakshaso vṛishā 'jani priśnyāḥ śukra ūdhani | "Adorned with armlets, [the Maruts] have shone like the skies with their stars, they have glittered like showers from the clouds, at the time when the prolific Rudra generated you, O Maruts, with jewels on your breasts, from the shining udder of Pṛiśni."

R. V. ii. 38, 9.—Na yasya Indro Varuṇo na Mitro vratam Aryamā na minanti Rudraḥ | na arātayas tam idaṁ svasti huve devaṁ Savi-

[17] See śukra-piś, Nir. viii. 11 = R.V. x. 110, 6; and Roth, Erl. See the fifth vol. of this work, p. 453 f., where some remarks of Dr. Bollensen (Journ. Germ. Or. Society, xxii. 587 ff.) are quoted, in which this passage, with others, is adduced to show that images of the gods were common in the Vedic age.

[18] Compare i. 114, 2, above, pp. 302 and 304.

tāraṁ namobhiḥ | "With prostrations I invoke this blessing from the god Savitṛi, whose purpose neither Indra, nor Varuṇa, nor Mitra, nor Aryaman, nor Rudra, nor any enemies can resist."

In the next text, 'rudra' is merely an epithet of Agni.

R. V. iii. 2, 5.—Agniṁ sumnāya dadhire puro janāḥ vāja-śravasam[19] iha vṛikta-barhishaḥ | yata-sruchaḥ suruchaṁ viśva-devyaṁ rudraṁ yajñānāṁ sādhad-ishṭim apasām | "Men, having prepared the sacrificial grass, and holding ladles, have, to obtain his blessing, placed in their front Agni, renowned for wealth, the brilliant, acceptable to all the gods, the terrible (rudra), who fulfils the objects of sacrifices and rites."

In the first verse of the hymn next quoted also, 'rudra' is merely an epithet of Agni. In verse 6, on the other hand, Rudra is the name of a god.

R. V. iv. 3, 1.—Ā vo rājānam adhvarasya rudraṁ hotāraṁ satya-yajaṁ rodasyoḥ | Agnim purā tanayitnor achittād hiraṇya-rūpam avase kṛiṇudhvam | 6. Kad dhishṇyāsu vṛidhasāno Agne kad Vātāya pratavase śubhaṁye | parijmane nāsatyāya kshe bravaḥ kad Agne Rudrāya nṛi-ghne[20] | (verse 7 is quoted above, p. 78). "Before the thunderbolt [falls] unawares, call to your succour Agni, the terrible (rudra) king of the sacrifice, the invoker in both worlds, offering genuine worship, the golden-formed. . . . 6. Wilt thou, Agni, who delightest in the altars, wilt thou declare [our sin][21] to Vāta, the energetic, the bestower

[19] This word is explained by Sāyaṇa in this place as = manushyebhyaḥ preritānnam, "who has sent food to men," and on R.V. vi. 35, 4, as = vājair balair prasiddhāḥ, "famed for force." In the Nighantus (ii. 7, 17) two senses are assigned to vāja, "food," and "battle," and to śravas are ascribed (ii. 7, 10) the meanings "food," and "wealth." In the Nirukta iv. 24 (where R.V. iv. 38, 5, is explained), the senses "praise" or "wealth" are attributed to the latter word; in Nir. ix. 10, the sense of "praise"; in Nir. x. 3, that of "food"; and in Nir. xi. 9, that of "renown." Böhtlingk and Roth assign to vāja the senses (1) of "swiftness, spirit," (2) "running a race, conflict," (3) "prize of victory in a race, spoil," (4) "gain, reward, valuable possession," etc.; and explain the compound vāja-śravas, "contending in a race," comparing it with vāja-sṛit, to which they ascribe the same meaning, and which is explained by Sāyaṇa in R.V. ix. 43, 5, as = saṅgrāma-saraṇaḥ, "moving in battle."

Prof. Aufrecht sees no reason why vājaśravas should be interpreted differently from vasuśravas, and translates it "renowned for power or wealth," comparing gomad vājavat śravas, R.V. i. 9, 7; vājāya, śravase ishe cha, vi. 17, 4 (vi. 1, 11); ix. 67, 5; iv. 36, 9; mahi śravo vājam, vi. 70, 5; sa vājaṁ darshi sa iha śravo dhāḥ, x. 69, 3; vājam ukthyam, x. 140, 1; abhi vājam uta śravaḥ, ix. 1, 4; ix. 6, 3; vājaṁ jeshi śravo bṛihat, ix. 44, 6; ix. 63, 12; ix. 87, 5.

[20] Comp. pūrusha-ghnam in i. 114, 10, above, p. 303. [21] See the preceding verse.

of blessings, the circumambient, the truthful? Wilt thou declare it to the earth, and to the man-slaying Rudra?"

R.V. v. 3, 3, quoted and translated above, p. 80.

R.V. v. 41, 2.—Te no Mitro Varuṇo Aryamā "yur Indraḥ Ṛibhukshāḥ Maruto jushanta | namobhir vā ye dadhate suvṛiktiṁ stomaṁ Rudrāya mīḷhushe sajoshāḥ | "May Mitra, Varuṇa, Aryaman, Āyu, Indra, Ribhukshan, the Maruts, be favourable to us, [and to those] who, united together, offer with obeisances hymns and praises to the bountiful Rudra."

R.V. v. 42, 11.—Tam u shṭuhi yaḥ svishuḥ sudhanvā yo viśvasya kshayati bheshajasya | yakshva mahe saumanasāya Rudraṁ namobhir devam asuraṁ duvasya | . . . . 15. Esha stomo mārutaṁ śardho achha Rudrasya sūnūn yuvanyūn ud aśyāḥ | ityādi | "Praise him who has excellent arrows and bow, who commands all remedies. Worship Rudra to [obtain his] great benevolence: with prostrations adore the spiritual deity. . . . . 15. May this hymn ascend to the troop of Maruts, to the sons of Rudra, who comport themselves as youths," etc.

R.V. v. 46, 2 (V.S. 33, 48), quoted and translated above, p. 80.

R.V. v. 51, 13.—Viśve devāḥ no adya svastaye vaiśvānaro vasur Agniḥ svastaye | devāḥ avantu Ṛibhavaḥ svastaye svasti no Rudraḥ pātu aṁhasaḥ | "May all the gods, may Agni, the beneficent, worshipped by all men, may the divine Ribhus, preserve us for our welfare. May Rudra bless and preserve us from calamity."

R.V. v. 52, 16.—Pra ye me bandhveshe gāṁ vochanta sūrayaḥ Pṛiśniṁ vochanta mātaram | adha pitaram ishmiṇaṁ Rudraṁ vochanta śikvasaḥ | "These wise and powerful [Maruts], who, when I was inquiring after their kindred, declared to me that the Earth, Pṛiśni, was their mother, and that the rapid Rudra was their father" (see above, p. 306, note 11).

R.V. v. 59, 8.—Mīmātu Dyaur Aditir vītaye naḥ saṁ dānu-chitrāḥ ushaso yatantām | āchuchyavur divyaṁ kośam ete ṛishe Rudrasya Maruto gṛiṇānāḥ | "May Dyaus and Aditi provide for our enjoyment: may the dawns, glittering with moisture, strive [in our behalf]. These Maruts, [the sons] of Rudra, when lauded, O ṛishi, have caused the celestial treasure to drop down."

R.V. v. 60, 5.—Ajyeshṭhāso akanishṭhāsaḥ ete sam bhrātaro vāvṛidhuḥ saubhagāya | yuvā pitā svapāḥ Rudraḥ eshāṁ sudughā Pṛiśniḥ sudinā Marudbhyaḥ | "These brothers (the Maruts), among whom there is no distinction of elder and younger (comp. R. V. v. 59, 6, where also these epithets occur), have grown to prosperity. Rudra, their young and energetic father, and the prolific Pṛiśni, [have created] fortunate days for the Maruts."

R.V. vi. 16, 39.—Ya ugraḥ iva śarya-hā tigma-śṛingo na vaṁsagaḥ | Agne puro rurojitha | "Thou, Agni, who art fierce (ugra), like an archer, like a sharp-horned bull, hast broken down castles."

On this the commentator remarks: "Rudrᴠ vai esha yad Agnir" iti śruteḥ | Rudra-kṛitam api Tripura-dahanam Agni-kṛitam eva iti Agniḥ stūyate | "For the Veda says that 'this Agni is Rudra.' It is here said in praise of Agni, that the burning of the Tripura (or the three cities), though done by Rudra, was done by Agni." Another explanation of the commentator is that Agni was present in Rudra's arrow on that occasion. All this, however, is merely said with the view of bringing the Veda into harmony with later stories.

R.V. vi. 28, 7 (A. V. iv. 21, 7).—Prajāvatīḥ sūyavasaṁ riśantīḥ śuddhāḥ apaḥ suprapāṇe pibantīḥ | mā vaḥ stenaḥ īśata mā 'ghaśaṁsaḥ pari vo hetiḥ Rudrasya vṛijyāḥ | "Be ye (cows) prolific, consuming excellent pasture, drinking pure waters in a good pond. May no thief or wicked man have power over you. May the bolt of Rudra avoid you."

R.V. vi. 49, 10.—Bhuvanasya pitaraṁ gīrbhir ābhiḥ Rudraṁ divā vardhaya Rudram aktau | bṛihantam ṛishvam ajaraṁ sushumnam ṛidhag huvema kavineshitāsaḥ | "Magnify with these songs, the father of the world, Rudra, by day, [magnify] Rudra by night. Let us, impelled by the poet, severally invoke [him] the mighty, the exalted, the undecaying, the beneficent."

R.V. vi. 50, 4.—Ā no Rudrasya sūnavo namantām adya hūtāso Vasavo adhṛishṭāḥ | ityādi | (verse 12 is quoted above, p. 82). "May the sons of Rudra, the irresistible Vasus (or gods), invoked to-day, stoop down to us," etc. . . . . v. 12 (translated above, p. 82).

R.V. vi. 66, 3.—Rudrasya ye mīḷhushaḥ santi putrāḥ yāṁś cho nu dādhṛivir bharadhyai | vide hi mātā maho mahī sā sā it Pṛiśniḥ subhve garbham ā adhāt | . . . . 11. Tam vṛidhantam mārutam bhrājad-ṛishṭiṁ Rudrasya sūnuṁ havasā ā vivāse | ityādi |—"Those who are the sons of the bountiful Rudra, and whom he upholds for their nourishment. For the mighty mother possessed these mighty sons. This Pṛiśni was pregnant for an illustrious birth. . . . . 11. I worship with invocation this growing race of the Maruts, with shining weapons, the offspring of Rudra," etc.

R.V. vi. 74, 1 ff.—Somā-Rudrā dhārayethaṁ asuryam pra vām ishṭayo 'ram aśnuvantu | dame dame supta ratnā dadhānā śaṁ no bhūtaṁ dvipade śaṁ chatushpade | 2 (A. V. 7, 42, 1). Somā-Rudrā vi vṛihatam vishūchīm amīvā yā no gayam āviveśa | āre bādhethāṁ Nirṛitim parāchair asme bhadrā saúśravasāni santu | 3 (A. V. 7, 42, 2). Somā-Rudrā yuvam etāni asme viśvā tanūshu bheshajāni dhattam | ava syatam muñchataṁ yad no asti tanūshu baddhaṁ kṛitam eno asmat | 4. Tigmāyudhau tigma-hetī suśevau Somā Rudrāv iha su mṛiḷatam naḥ | pra no muñchataṁ Varuṇasya pāśād gopāyatam naḥ sumanasyamānā | "Soma and Rudra, do ye grasp divine power. May oblations in abundance reach you! In every house, bearing with you seven jewels, be favourable to our bipeds and our quadrupeds. 2. Soma and Rudra, drive far away that disease which has entered into our abode. Chase Nirṛiti far away from us. May we have excellent renown. 3. Soma and Rudra, infuse into our bodies all these remedies. Remove and banish from us whatever sin we have done which attaches to our bodies. 4. Soma and Rudra, whose weapons are sharp, and whose bolts are piercing, be beneficent and favourable to us. Deliver us from the noose of Varuṇa; protect us, regarding us with favour."

R.V. vii. 10, 4.—Indraṁ no Agne Vasubhiḥ sajoshāḥ Rudraṁ Rudrebhir ā vaha bṛihantam | Ādityebhir Aditiṁ viśva-janyām Bṛihaspatim ṛikvabhir viśva-vāram | "Agni, united with the Vasus, bring hither to us Indra; with the Rudras [bring] the powerful Rudra, with the Ādityas [bring] Aditi, who is acceptable to all, and with the bards [bring] the Bṛihaspati who grants all boons."

R.V. vii. 35, 6.— . . . . Śaṁ no Rudro Rudrebhir jalāshaḥ . . . . "May the healing Rudra, with the Rudras, be favourable to us," etc.

R.V. vii. 36, 5.—Yajante asya sakhyaṁ vayaś cha namasvinaḥ sve ṛitasya dhāman | vi pṛiksho bābadhe nṛibhiḥ stavānaḥ idaṁ namo Rudrāya preshṭham | "Men making obeisance in their own place of sacrifice, seek by worship his friendship, and life. Lauded by men, he has distributed food amongst them. This reverence is most dear to Rudra."

R.V. vii. 40, 5 (quoted and translated above, p. 85).

R.V. vii. 41, 1 (V. S. 34, 34; A. V. 3, 16, 1).—Prātar Agnim

prātar Indraṁ havāmahe prātar Mitrā-Varuṇā prātar Aśvinā | prātar Bhagam Pūshaṇam Brahmaṇaspatiṁ prātaḥ Somam uta Rudraṁ huvema | "In the morning we invoke Agni, in the morning Indra, in the morning Mitra and Varuṇa, in the morning the Aśvins; in the morning let us invoke Bhaga, Pūshan, Brahmaṇaspati, Soma, and Rudra."

R.V. vii. 46, 1 (Nirukta x. 6).—Imāḥ Rudrāya sthira-dhanvane giraḥ kshipreshave devāya svadhāvne[22] | ashāḷhāya sahamānāya vedhase tigmāyudhāya bharata śṛiṇotu naḥ | 2. Sa hi kshayeṇa kshamyasya janmanaḥ sāmrājyena divyasya chetati | avann avantīr upa no duraś chara anamīvo Rudra jāsu no bhava | 3 (Nirukta x. 7).—Yā te didyud avasṛishṭā divas pari kshmayā charati pari sā vṛiṇaktu naḥ | sahasraṁ te svapivāta[23]

[22] Prof. Roth (Illust. of Nir., p. 135) considers the word svadhāvat to signify "independent," "whose glory is inherent," etc., and refers to R.V. vii. 20, 1; vii. 37, 2; vii. 86, 4. At p. 40 f. of his Illustrations Roth assigns to svadhām anu, etc., the sense of "according to one's own determination," "according to pleasure," and quotes the following passages where it has this sense, viz.: R.V. i. 6, 4; i. 33, 11; i. 81, 4; ii. 3, 11; iii. 47, 1; vii. 78, 4; and viii. 20, 7. On svadhā see also Prof. Müller's Transl. of the R.V., pp. 19–25.

[23] This word is not explained in the printed text of Sāyaṇa; although in the "Varietas Lectionis," appended to his preface, Prof. Müller notes that in one MS., B. 4, svapivāta is rendered by jitaprāṇa, "he by whom life (or breath) is conquered." In the Nirukta, x. 7, it is explained by svāpta-vachana, "thou whose words are very suitable or authoritative." In his Illustrations of the Nirukta, pp. 135 f., Prof. Roth has some remarks on the word, which I translate: "Svapivāta in the Pada text is divided into su+apivāta, and is consequently to be derived from api+vat, a compound, which is often found in the R.V., viz. in vii. 3, 10, api kratuṁ suchetasaṁ vatema; vii. 60, 6, api kratuṁ suchetasaṁ vatantaḥ; i. 128, 2, taṁ yajna-sādham api vatayāmasi; i. 165, 13, manmāni chitrāḥ api vātayantaḥ; x. 25, 1, bhadram no api vātaya mano daksham uta kratum; x. 13, 5, pitre putrāso apy avīvatann ṛitam | It has the signification of 'learning to understand,' 'appropriating to one's self,' and in the causal 'to teach to understand,' agreeing entirely with the Zend word of similar form, which as yet no one had been able to discover in Sanskrit. The word (svapivāta) thus means 'readily understanding, hearing, accessible, gracious.' Yāska's explanation appears right, and Durga has misunderstood it, when he explains the word by anatikramaṇīyājna ('thou whose command cannot be transgressed')." I have to remark, however, that if Yāska's phrase svāpta-vachana have the sense I have above assigned to it of "speaking with authority," (see the third vol. of this work, pp. 124, 127 f., and elsewhere) it means nearly what Durga asserts. Prof. Roth, however, must have taken it to mean "thou by whom words (prayers) are readily received, or apprehended." Otherwise it could not harmonize with the sense he regards as the right one. In his Lexicon, s.v. vat+api, Prof. Roth adheres to the meanings assigned to the compound verb in his "Illustrations," rendering it "to understand, comprehend," and in the causal "to cause to understand, to make comprehensible"; and assigning to the words bhadraṁ no api vātaya manaḥ in x. 20, 1 and x. 25, 1, the sense of "awaken in us a good sense." Prof. Aufrecht assigns to bheshajā mā nas tokeshu tanayeshu rīrishaḥ | 4. Mā no vadhīḥ Rudra mā parā dāḥ mā te bhūma prasitau hīḷitasya | ā no bhaja barhishi jīva-śaṁse[24] yūyam pata svastibhiḥ sadā naḥ | "Present these songs to Rudra with the strong bow, and swift arrows, the self-dependent god, unassailable, the assailant, the disposer, armed with sharp weapons: may he hear us. 2. Through his power he perceives the terrestrial race, and through his universal dominion [he perceives] the divine. Protecting us, approach our protecting doors; Rudra, remove sickness from our offspring. 3. May that shaft of thine which is discharged from the sky, and traverses the earth, avoid us. Thou, who art easy of access, hast a thousand remedies. Injure us not in our children and descendants. 4. Slay us not, Rudra; do not abandon us; let us not fall into thy net when thou art incensed. Give us a share in the sacrifice desired by the living. Do ye always succour us with your benedictions."

R.V. vii. 56, 1 (S. V. i. 433).—Ke īṁ vyaktāḥ naraḥ sanīḷāḥ Rudrasya maryāḥ adha svaśvāḥ | 2. Nakir hi eshāṁ janūṁshi veda te anga vidre mitho janitram | "Who are these brilliant heroes, the sons of Rudra, occupying the same abode, riding on excellent horses? No one knows their births. They [themselves] know the place of their common production."

R.V. vii. 58, 5.—Tān ā Rudrasya mīḷhusho vivāse ityādi | "I worship these [sons] of the bountiful Rudra," etc.

svapivāta the sense "possessed of great knowledge," from su+apivāta, "intelligence, knowledge," which again comes from api+vat, to which he considers that the proper meaning has been assigned by Prof. Roth. Sāyaṇa explains as follows the texts quoted above, viz. R.V. vii. 3, 10: Apy api cha kratum karma yajnānāṁ kartāraṁ vā suchetasaṁ śobhāna-prajnāna-yuktaṁ suprajnānam putraṁ vā vatema sambhajemahi | vanateḥ sambhajanārthasya varṇāntarāgame sati rūpam | "And further may we gain a rite, or a performer of sacrifices possessed of good intelligence, or a very intelligent son. Van, which means 'to divide' (or gain), becomes vat by the alteration of a letter." He interprets vii. 60, 6, thus: Api suchetasam prakrishṭa-jnānavantam purusham kratuṁ kartāraṁ karmānushṭhānavantaṁ vatanto gachhantaḥ | "going to a man, a performer of rites possessed of eminent intelligence." The verb in R.V. i. 128, 2, is thus expounded: ā paritoshaṁ sevāmahe "we serve till we are satisfied"; and in i. 165, 13, thus: sampūrṇam prāpayantaḥ, "completely bringing to us"; in x. 20, 1, by āgamaya, "cause to come"; in x. 25, 1, by yamaya, "cause to go"; in x. 13, 5, by sangamayanti, "cause to go together."

[24] This word appears from Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon to occur twice in the R.V., viz. in i. 104, 6, and the present passage. They make it a substantive, signifying "rule over the living." Benfey, in his translation of i. 104, 6, renders the word "to be praised among men." Sāyaṇa has there kāmayitavye, "to be desired"; and here āśaṁsanīye, which means the same.

R.V. viii. 13, 20.—Tad id Rudrasya chetati yahvam pratneshu dhāmasu | mano yatra vi tad dadhur vichetasaḥ | "That great (manifestation) of Rudra [or the terrible (Indra)[25]] is perceived in the ancient abodes, and on it the wise have therefore fixed their minds."

R.V. viii. 20, 17.—Yathā Rudrasya sūnavo divo vaśanti asurasya vedhasaḥ | yuvānas tathā it asat | "As the youthful sons of Rudra, the wise deity of the sky, desire, so shall it be."

R.V. viii. 22, 13.— . . . . Tā u namobhir īmahe | 14. Tāv id doshā tāv ushasi śubhas patī tā yāman rudra-vartanī[26] | mā no martāya ripave vājinī-vasū paro rudrāv ati khyatam | "We invoke them (the Aśvins), with adoration, (14) at evening and at dawn, and on their path, the two lords of splendour, proceeding on terrible roads. Do not, O terrible (rudrau) lords of swift horses,[27] abandon us to our mortal enemy."

R.V. viii. 29, 5. (quoted and translated above, p. 90).

R.V. viii. 61, 3.—Antar ichhanti taṁ jane rudram paro manīshayā | gṛibhṇanti jihvayā sasam[28] | "They entreat the god (Agni), who is terrible (rudra) beyond all thought,[29] [to enter] among the people. With their tongue they take food (or seize him sleeping)."

R.V. x. 64, 8.—Triḥ sapta sasrāḥ nadyo mahīr apo vanaspatīn parvatān Agnim ūtaye | Kṛiśānum astrīn Tishyaṁ sadhasthe ā Rudraṁ Rudreshu rudriyaṁ havāmahe | "We invoke to our aid in the assembly of sacrifice, the three times seven swift rivers, the great waters, the trees, the mountains, Agni, Kṛiśānu, the archers, Tishya, and Rudra, among the Rudras, and possessing their character."

[25] Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. rudra, hold the word to be here an epithet of Indra. The rest of the hymn is addressed to him.

[26] This word rudra-vartanī is also applied to the Aśvins in the first verse of this hymn, and in R.V. x. 39, 11. Compare kṛishṇavartani and kṛishṇādhvan as applied to Agni. See the fifth vol. of this work, p. 212.

[27] This is the sense assigned by Böhtlingk and Roth to vājinīvasū. Sāyaṇa renders it by annavasu (R.V. v. 74, 6), annadhana (x. 40, 12) "rich in food." Elsewhere he also takes vājinī for food or oblation.

[28] This word is given in the Nighaṇṭus, 2, 7, as signifying food. Sāyaṇa takes it to mean "sleeping," and renders the last clause "men through praise sprung from their tongue, catch Agni with their fingers" (jihvā-prabhavayā stutyā gṛibhṇanti gṛihṇanty angulibhiḥ). See Roth's Illustrations of Nirukta, pp. 55 and 85 f.; also R.V. i. 51, 3 (where Benfey renders sasena "in sleep"); iii. 5, 6; iv. 5, 7; iv. 7, 7; v. 21, 4; x. 79, 3.

[29] This interpretation is confirmed by Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. manīshā, who refer to R.V. v. 17, 2, as another passage where the phrase occurs.

R.V. x. 65, 1 (quoted and translated above, p. 95).

R.V. x. 66, 3.—Indro Vasubhiḥ paripātu no gayam Ādityair no Aditiḥ śarma yachhatu | Rudro Rudrebhir devo mṛilayāti nas Tvashṭā no gnābhiḥ suvitāya jinvatu | "May Indra with the Vasus preserve our habitation; may Aditi with the Ādityas grant us protection. May the divine Rudra with the Rudras be gracious to us; may Tvashṭṛi with the wives (of the gods) advance us to prosperity."

R.V. x. 92, 5.—Pra Rudreṇa yayinā yanti sindhavas tiro mahīm aramatiṁ[30] dadhanvire | yebhiḥ parijmā pariyann uru jrayo vi roruvaj jaṭhare viśvam ukshate | . . . . 9. Stomaṁ vo adya Rudrāya śikvase kshayad-vīrāya ṇamasā didishṭana | yebhiḥ śivaḥ svavān evayāvabhir divaḥ sishakti[31] sva-yaśāḥ nikāmabhiḥ | "The waters flow [impelled] by the hastening Rudra, and have spread over the vast earth; with them the circumambient, shouting god, who moves round the wide space [of the earth], moistens all (that is contained) in its womb. . . . . 9. With reverence present your hymn to-day to the mighty Rudra, the ruler of heroes, [and to the Maruts] those rapid and ardent deities with whom the gracious and opulent [Rudra], who derives his renown from himself, protects us from the sky."

R.V. x. 93, 4.—Te gha rājāno amṛitasya[32] mandrāḥ Aryamā Mitro Varuṇaḥ parijmā | kad Rudro nṛiṇāṁ stuto Marutaḥ Pūshaṇo Bhagaḥ | . . . . 7. Uta no rudrā chid mṛilatām Aśvinā ityādi | "These are the [30] This word occurs in different parts of the R.V., where it is variously interpreted by Sāyaṇa. On ii. 38, 4, he explains it by anuparatiḥ, "never resting," as an epithet of Savitṛi; on v. 43, 6, as an epithet of gnā (a goddess), ā samantād ramamāṇāṁ sarvatra gantrīṁ vā, "sporting all round, or, going everywhere"; on vii. 36, 8, similarly, uparati-rahitāṁ, "having no rest," as an epithet of mahī, the earth; on vii. 42, 3, as meaning the earth (bhūmim); on vii. 1, 6, as signifying brilliancy (dīptiḥ); on v. 54, 6, as āramaṇaṁ dhanādikam, "object of enjoyment, wealth," etc.; on vii. 34, 21, as denoting a being "of perfect intelligence, or whose intelligence reaches to all objects," (paryāpta-buddhiḥ sarva-vishaya-vyāpi-buddhir vā) spoken of Tvashṭṛi; and on viii. 31, 12, as equivalent to alammatiḥ paryāpta-stutiḥ, a god "who obtains full, or complete, worship," said of Pūshan. I have not access to his commentary on x. 64, 15, and x. 92, 4, 5. Böhtlingk and Roth regard Aramati in all these passages but one as designating either "readiness for service, obedience, devotion," or "as a personification of religious worship, or active piety." In viii. 31, 12, they regard it as signifying "obedient, pious." I cannot see that any of these senses except that of earth is applicable to the passage before us. Or Aramati may here be an epithet of the earth.

[31] From the root sach. See R.V. i. 18, 2; i. 56, 4; and v. 41, 20.

[32] Compare amṛitasya gopām, R.V. viii. 42, 2; and amṛitasya patnīḥ, iv. 5, 13.

kings of immortality who gladden us: Aryaman, Mitra, Varuṇa the circumambient, what (shall we say) of Rudra celebrated by men, the Maruts, the Pūshaṇs, and Bhaga? . . . . 7. May the terrible (rudra) Aśvins be favourable to us," etc.

R.V. x. 125, 6 (A. V. 4, 30, 5).—Ahaṁ Rudrāya dhanur ā tanomi brahma-dvishe śarave hanṭavai u ityādi | (Vāch?[33] speaks): "I bend the bow for Rudra, for an arrow to slay the hater of the priest," etc.

R.V. x. 126, 5.— . . . . Ugram Marudbhiḥ Rudraṁ huvema ityadi | "Let us invoke the terrible Rudra with the Maruts," etc.

R.V. x. 136, 1 (Nir. xii. 26).—Keśī agniṁ keśī vishaṁ keśī bibharti rodasī | keśī viśvaṁ svar dṛiśe[34] keśī idaṁ jyotir uchyate | 2 | munayo vātarasanāḥ piśangā vasatę malā | vātasyānu dhrājiṁ yanti yad devāso avikshata | 3 | unmaditāḥ mauneyena vātān ā tasthimā vayam | śarīred (i.e. śarīrā id) asmākaṁ yūyaṁ martāso abhi paśyatha | 4 | antarikshena patati viśvā rūpā 'vachākaśat | munir devasya devasya saukṛityāya sakhā hitaḥ | 5 | Vātasyāśvo Vāyoḥ sakhā atha deveshito muniḥ | ubhau samudrāv ā ksheti yaś cha pūrvaḥ utāparaḥ | 6 | apsarasāṁ gandharvāṇām mṛigāṇāṁ charaṇe charan | keśī ketasya vidvān sakhā svādur madintamaḥ | 7. Vāyur asmai upāmanthat pinashṭi sma kunannamā | keśī vishasya pātreṇa yad Rudreṇāpibat saha | "The long-haired [being] sustains fire, water, and the two worlds; he is to the view the entire sky; he is called this light. 2. The wind-clad (i.e. naked) munis wear brown and soiled (garments); they follow the course of the wind, when ye, O gods, have entered (into them). 3. Transported by (our) impulses as munis, we have pursued the winds. You, O mortals, behold our bodies. 4. The muni, a friend fitted to gain the beneficent aid of every god, flies through the air, perceiving all forms. 5. The muni, impelled by the gods, the steed of the wind, the friend of Vāyu, dwells in both the oceans, the eastern and the western. 6. Moving in the path of the Apsarases, the Gandharvas, and the wild animals, the long-haired being is aware of our call, and a sweet and gladdening friend. 7. Vāyu agitated for him; the long-haired [being] breaks down the things which are unbending, by means of the vessel of water (visha) which he drank along with Rudra."

Although but little of this hymn has reference to Rudra, I have quoted it entire on account of the interest it possesses in another respect. The first verse is explained in the Nirukta x. 26; and Prof. Roth, in his Illustrations of that work, p. 164, has the following note on the subject of the hymn: "The hymn," he says, "shows the conception that by a life of sanctity (mauneyena, verse 3) the muni can attain to the fellowship of the deities of the air, the Vāyus, the Rudras, the Apsarases, and the Gandharvas; and, furnished like them with wonderful powers, can travel along with them on their course. Transcending even this, the verse before us says that the beautiful-haired, the long-haired, that is to say, the Muni, who during the time of his austerities, does not shave his hair, upholds fire, moisture, heaven, and earth, and resembles the world of light, ideas which the later literature so largely contains. Similarly in an older hymn, R. V. vii. 56, 8, an unusual power of the Muni is celebrated, when it is said of the winds: S'ubhro vaḥ śushmaḥ krudhmī manāṁsi dhunir munir iva śardhasya dhṛishṇoḥ, where Sāyaṇa explains the word mananād muniḥ stotā ('the muni, from the root "man," is one who praises'); and where the representation above given is in any case to be found in its germ."

[33] See note 27 in p. 258 of the third vol. of this work.

[34] Keśī idaṁ sarvam idam abhivipaśyati | —Nir. xii. 26.

Although, in his Lexicon (see s.v. muni), Prof. Roth no longer adheres to Sāyaṇa's explanation of the word muni, as applicable to the last-mentioned passage, where he thinks it may mean "pressure, crowd, impulse," he takes the same view as formerly of the hymn before us (x. 136), and defines the word muni as signifying "(one who is driven by an inward impulse), a person inspired, or in a state of ecstacy; with this conception of the word," he proceeds, "agrees what is said of the ecstacy and deification of the muni in R. V. x. 136, 2, 4, deveshito muniḥ ('the god-impelled muni'), v. 5, and what is related in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa vi. 33, of the Muni Aitaśa, whom his son regards as mad. Indro munīnāṁ sakha, 'Indra is the friend of munis,' R. V. viii. 17, 14." I subjoin the passage of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa vi. 33, here referred to:

Aitaśa-pralāpaṁ śaṁsati | Aitaśo ha vai munir "Agner āyur"[35] dadarśa yajnasya ayātayāmam iti ha eke āhuḥ | so' bravīt putrān "putrakāḥ 'Agner āyur' adarśam | tad abhilapishyāmi | yat kincha vadāmi tad me mā parigāta" iti | sa pratyapadyata "etāḥ aśvāḥ āplavante pratīpam

[35] The words Agner āyur asi tasya te occur in the Kāṭhaka, according to the list of initial words of passages given by Weber, Ind. Stud., iii. 289.

prātisutvanam" (A. V. xx. 129, 1) iti | tasya Abhyagnir Aitaśāyanaḥ aitya akāle 'bhihāya mukham apyayṛihṇād "adṛipat naḥ pitā" iti | taṁ ha uvācha "apehy alaso bhūr yo me vācham avadhīḥ | śatāyuṁ gām akarishyaṁ sahasrāyum purusham | pāpiṣṭhām te prajām karomi yo mā ittham asakthāḥ" iti | tasmād āhur "Abhyagnayaḥ Aitaśāyanāḥ Aurvāṇām pāpishṭhāḥ" iti | "He repeats the Aitaśa-pralāpa. The Muni Aitaśa beheld (i.e. received a revelation of) the 'Agner āyuḥ' ('Agni's life,' etc.), which, some say, renders the sacrifice efficacious.[36] He said to his sons, 'Sons, I have seen "Agni's life;" and will speak of it. Do not fail to attend to[37] what I say.' He then obtained (by revelation) the verse beginning etāḥ aśvāḥ, etc. Abhyagni, of the family of Aitaśa, came unseasonably, and stopped his mouth, saying 'our father is mad.' His father said, 'Go, become destitute of energy,[38] thou who hast stopped my words. I should otherwise have made kine live a hundred years, and men a thousand. Since thou hast so done violence to me, I make thy offspring most degraded. Hence they say that the Abhyagnis of the family of Aitaśa are the most degraded of all the Aurvas."

Compare Professor Kuenen's remarks on the possible original sense of the Hebrew word nabi, "prophet," in his Historisch-Kritisch Onderzoek, ii. 3, and also pp. 16 (note 3), and 19 (note 6).

The allusion in the 7th verse of the hymn before us to Rudra drinking water (visha) may possibly have given rise to the legend of his drinking posion (visha).—See above, p. 50.

R. V. x. 169, 1.—Mayobhūr vāto abhivātu usrāḥ ūrjasvatīr oshadhīr āriśantām | pīvasvatīr jīva-dhanyāḥ pibantu avasāya padvate[39] Rudra mṛiḷa | "May the wind, causing prosperity, blow upon our cows. Let them consume invigorating plants; let them drink (waters) rich and life-sustaining: Rudra, be gracious to our walking sources of food" (compare vi. 28, 7, above, p. 312).

[36] Prof. Haug renders ayātayāmam, "which should remove all defects from the sacrifice"; and Prof. Weber, who, in his review of Dr. Haug's translation, Indische Studien, ix. 177 ff., dissents from many of the translator's renderings, expresses here no difference of opinion, see p. 304.

[37] Weber here differs from Haug's rendering of parigāta by "do not scorn me," and translates übergehet (überhöret mir dies nicht) was ich auch sagen mag, which is also the sense assigned in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon; and has been given by me.

[38] Haug translates, "Become infected with leprosy"; Weber, "become destitute of energy."

[39] Pavad avasaṁ gāvaḥ | —Nir. i. 17.

SECT. II.—Passages relating to Rudra in the Vājasaneyi recension of the white Yajur-Veda.

I now proceed to quote from the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā the principal texts which it contains relative to Rudra.

Vaj. S. 3, 57 ff.—Esha te Rudra bhāgaḥ saha svasrā Ambikayā taṁ jushasva svāhā | esha te Rudra bhāgaḥ ākhus te paśuḥ[40] | 58. Ava Rudram adīmahy ava devaṁ tryambakam | yathā no vasyasas karad yathā naḥ śreyasas karad yathā no vyavasāyayāt | 59. Bheshajam asi bheshajaṁ gave 'śvāya purushāya bheshajam | sukham meshāya meshyai | 60 (=R. V. vii. 59, 12; Taitt. S. i. 8, 6, 2). Tryambakaṁ yajāmahe sugandhim pushṭi-vardhanam | urvārukam iva bandhanād mṛityor mukshīya mā 'mṛitāt | tryambakaṁ yajāmahe sugandhim pativedanam[41] | urvārukam iva bandhanād ito mukshīya mā 'mutaḥ | 61 (T. S. i. 8, 6, 2). Etat te Rudra avasaṁ tena paro Mūjavato atīhi | avatata-dhanvā pināka-vasaḥ kṛitti-vāsāḥ ahiṁsan naḥ śivo 'tīhi | 62. Tryāyushaṁ Jamadagneḥ Kaśyapasya tryāyusham | yad deveshu tryāyushaṁ tad no astu tryāyusham | 63. S'ivo nāmā 'si svadhitis te pitā namas te astu mā mā hiṁsīḥ | nivartayāmy āyushe annādyāya prajananāya rāyasposhāya suprajāstvāya suvīryāya |

"This is thy portion, Rudra, with thy sister Ambikā; accept it with favour, may it be fortunate (svāhā). This is thy portion; thy victim is a mouse. 58. We have satisfied Rudra; we have satisfied the god Tryambaka,[42] that he may make us most opulent, most happy, that he may prosper us. 59. Thou art a medicine, a medicine for kine and horses, a medicine for men, a [source of] ease to rams and ewes. 60. We worship Tryambaka, the sweet-scented, the increaser of prosperity. May I, like a cucumber [severed] from its stem, be freed from [40] The Taittirīya Br. i. 6, 1ρ, 4, has only the first part of this verse: Esha te Rudra bhāgaḥ saha svasrā Ambikayā: then follow the words: ity āha | S'arad vai asya Ambikā svasā | tayā vai esha hinasti | "He says, 'This is thy portion, Rudra, with thy sister Ambikā.' His sister Ambikā is the autumn; with her he smites (or kills)," etc. The commentator on the passage before us (of the Vāj. S.) says in reference to this that Ambikā kills by taking the form of Autumn, and producing diseases, etc. (S'arad-rūpam prāpya jar- [qu. ? jvar-] ādikam utpādya taṁ nirodhinaṁ hanti).

[41] Compare pativida, "the acquisition of a wife," in Taitt. Br. ii. 4, 2, 7.

[42] S. P. ii. 6, 2, 9.—Ambikā ha vai nāma asya svasā | tayā 'sya esha saha bhāgaḥ | tad yad asya esha striyā saha bhāgas tasmāt Tryambako nāma | "He has a sister called Ambikā, with whom he has this share: and since he has this share along with a female (strī), he is called Tryambaka" (i.e. Stryambaka).

death, not [severed] from immortality. We worship Tryambaka, the sweet-scented, who bestows on us husbands.[42*] Like a cucumber [severed] from its stem, may I be released from this [world], not [severed] from that [world]. 61. This, Rudra, is thy provision; with it depart beyond the Mūjavat, with thy bow unbended, and concealed from view, clothed with a skin, without injuring us, gracious, cross over.[43] 62. Let us have a triple life, the triple life of Jamadagni, the triple life of Kaśyapa, the triple life which exists among the gods. 63. Thou art gracious (śiva) by name; the thunderbolt[44] is thy father. Reverence be to thee: destroy us not. I clip thy hair, thee [O sacrificer], that thou mayest live, have food to eat, the power of procreation, the possession of wealth, abundant offspring, and eminent prowess."[45]

The next passage which I shall quote is the famous Satarudriya, a prayer, which is referred to in three passages quoted above from the Mahābhārata, pp. 186, 193, and 199. It is translated and annotated by Prof. Weber in his Indische Studien, ii. 32 ff. The text there translated, and which is given in the preceding pp. 26 ff., is that of the Upanishad bearing the name of Satarudriya.

Vājasaneyi Samhitā, xvi. 1 ff. (=Taitt. S. iv. 5, 1, 1 ff.).—Namas te Rudra manyave uto te ishave namaḥ[46] | bāhubhyām uta te namaḥ | 2. Yā te Rudra śivā tanūr aghorā 'pāpa-kāśinī | tayā nas tanvā (tanuvā, T. S.) śantamayā gṛiśantābhichākaśīhi | 3. Yām ishuṁ giriśanta haste bibharshi astave | śivāṁ giritra tāṁ kuru mā hiṁsīḥ purushaṁ jagat | 4. S'ivena vachasā tvā giriśāchha vadāmasi | yathā naḥ sarvam ij jagad ayakshmaṁ sumanāḥ[47] asat | 5. Adhy avochad adhivaktā prathamo daivyo bhishak | ahīṁścha sarvān jambhayan sarvāścha yātudhānyo 'dharāchīḥ parāsuva[48] | 6. Asau yas tāmro aruṇaḥ uta babhruḥ sumangalaḥ | ye chainaṁ Rudrāḥ abhito dikshu śritāḥ sahasraśo 'vaishāṁ heḍaḥ īmahe | 7. Asau yo 'vasar-

[42*] This, the Commentator says, is spoken by virgins walking round the fire.

[43] See the second volume of this work, pp. 351 f., and note 138, where the comments of the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa (ii. 6, 2, 17) on the passage before us are quoted.

[44] Such is the sense assigned to svadhiti in the Nighaṇṭus, 2, 20.

[45] The commentator says that the first half of this verse is addressed to a razor, and the second half is supposed to be spoken by the razor to the person to whose head it is to be applied. He translates the words nivārtayāmy āyushe, etc., by "I shave thee that thou mayest live," etc.

[46] The Taitt. S. inserts here namas te astu dhanvane, "reverence be to thy bow."

[47] Sumanaḥ-śabde puṁstvam ārsham | Comm.

[48] These last two words are omitted in the Taitt. S.

pati nīlagrīvo vilohitaḥ | utainaṁ gopāḥ adṛiśrann adṛiśrann udahāryaḥ[49] sa dṛishṭo mṛiḍayāti naḥ | 8. Namo 'stu nīla-grīvāya sahasrākshāya mīḍhushe | atho ye asya satvāno ahaṁ tebhyo 'karaṁ namaḥ | 9. Pramuncha dhanvanas tvam ubhayor ārtnyor jyām | yāścha te haste ishavaḥ parā tā bhagavo vapa[50] | 10. Vijyaṁ dhanuḥ 'kapardino viśalyo bāṇavān uta | aneśann asya yāḥ ishavaḥ ābhur asya nishangadhiḥ [-thiḥ, T. S.] | 11. Yā te hetir mīḍhuṣhṭama haste babhūva te dhanuḥ | tayā 'smān viśvatas tvam ayakshmayā pari bhuja[51] | 12. Pari te dhanvano hetir asmān vṛiṇaktu viśvataḥ | atho yaḥ ishudhis tava āre asmad nidhehi tam | 13. Avatatya dhanush ṭvaṁ sahasrāksha śateshudhe | niśīrya śalyānām mukhā śivo naḥ sumanāḥ bhava | 14. Namas te āyudhāya anātatāya dhṛishṇave | ubhābhyām uta te namo bāhubhyāṁ tava dhanvane | 15 and 16 (=R.V. i. 114, 7, 8, see above p. 303). 17. Namo hiraṇyabāhave senānye diśāncha pataye namo namo vṛikshebhyo harikeśebhyaḥ paśūnām pataye namo namaḥ śashpinjarāya tvishīmate pathīnām pataye namo namo harikeśāya upavītine pushṭānām pataye namaḥ | 18. Namo babhluśāya vyādhine 'nnānām pataye namo namo Bhavasya hetyai jagatām pataye namo namo Rudrāya ātatāyine (ātatāvine, T. S.) kshetrāṇām pataye namo namaḥ sūtāya ahantyai (ahantyāya, T. S.) vanānām pataye namaḥ | 19. Namo rohitāya sthapataye vṛikshāṇām pataye namo namo bhuvantaye vārivas-kṛitāya oshadhīnām pataye namo namo mantriṇe vāṇijāya kakshāṇām pataye namo namo uchchairghoshāya ākrandayate pattīnām pataye namaḥ | 20. Namaḥ kṛitsnāyatayā (kṛitsnavītāya, T. S.) dhāvate satvanām pataye namo namaḥ sahamānāya nivyādhine āvyādhinīnām pataye namo namo nishangiṇe kakubhāya stenānām pataye namo namo nicherave paricharāya araṇyānām pataye namaḥ | 21. Namo vanehate parivanchate stāyūnām pataye namo namo 'nishangine ishudhimate taskarāṇām pataye namo namaḥ sṛikāyibhyo (sṛikāvibhyo, T. S.) jighāṁsadbhyo mushṇatām pataye namo namo 'simadbhyo naktaṁ charadbhyo vikṛintānām (prakṛintānām, T. S.) pataye namaḥ | 22. Namaḥ ushṇīshine giricharāya kulunchānām pataye namo namaḥ ishumadbhyo dhanvāyibhyaścha vo namo namaḥ ātanvānebhyo pratidadhānebhyaścha vo namo namaḥ āyachchhadbhyo 'syadbhyaścha vo namaḥ | 23. Namo viśṛijadbhyo vidhyadbhyaś cha vo namo namaḥ

[49] The Taitt. S. adds here utainaṁ viśvā bhūtāni, "and all beings have seen him."

[50] The T. S. introduces here verse 13 of the Vāj. S.

[51] The T. S. inserts the 14th verse here, and there are similar transpositions elsewhere.

svapadbhyo jāgradbhyaś cha vo namo namaḥ śayānebhyaḥ āsīnebhyaścha vo namo namas tishṭhadbhyo dhāvadbhyaścha vo namaḥ | 24. Namaḥ sabhābhyaḥ sabhāpatibhyaścha vo namo namo 'śvebhyo 'śvapatibhyaścha vo namo namaḥ āvyādhinībhyo vividhyantībhyaścha vo namo namaḥ ugaṇābhyas tṛiṁhatībhyaś cha vo namaḥ | 25. Namo gaṇebhyo gaṇapatibhyaścha vo namo namo vrātebhyo vrātapatibhyaścha vo namo namo gṛitsebhyo gṛitsapatibhyaścha vo namo namo virūpebhyo viśvarūpebhyaścha vo namaḥ | 26. Namaḥ senābhyaḥ senānibhyaścha vo namo namo rathibhyo 'rathebhyaścha vo namo namaḥ kshattṛibhyaḥ sangrahītṛibhyaścha vo namo namo mahadbhyo arbhakebhyaścha (kshullakebhyaś cha, T. S) vo namaḥ | 27. Namas takshabhyo rathakārebhyaścha vo namo namaḥ kulālebhyaḥ karmārebhyaścha vo namo namo nishādebhyaḥ punjishṭhebhyaś cha vo namo namaḥ śvanibhyo mṛigayubhyaścha vo namaḥ | 28. Namaḥ śvabhyaḥ śvapatibhyaścha namo Bhavāya Rudrāya cha namaḥ S'arvāya cha Paśupataye cha namo nīlagrīvaya cha śitikaṇṭhāya cha | 29. Namaḥ kapardine cha vyupta-keśāya cha namaḥ sahasrākshāya cha śatadhanvane cha namo giriśayāya (giriśāya, T. S.) cha śipiviśhṭāya cha namo mīḍhushṭamāya cha ishumate cha | 30. Namo hrasvāya cha vāmanāya cha namo bṛihate cha varshīyase cha namo vṛiddhāya cha savṛidhe (samvṛidhvane, T. S.) cha namo 'gryāya pathamāya cha | 31. Namaḥ āśave cha ajirāya cha namaḥ śīghryāya (śīghriyāya, T.S.) cha śībhyāya cha namaḥ ūrmyāya cha avasvanyāya cha namo nādeyāya (srotasyāya, T.S.) cha dvīpyāya cha | 32. Namo jyeshṭhāya cha kanishṭhāya cha namaḥ pūrvajāya cha aparajāya cha namo madhyamāya cha apagalbhāya cha namo jaghanyāya cha budhnyāya cha | 33. Namaḥ sobhyāya cha pratisaryāya cha namo yāmyāya cha kshemyāya cha namaḥ ślokyāya cha avasānyāya cha nama urvaryāya cha khalyāya cha | 34. Namo vanyāya cha kakshyāya cha namaḥ śrāvāya cha pratiśravāya cha namaḥ āśushenāya cha āśurathāya cha namaḥ śūrāya cha avabhedine (avabhindate, T. S.) cha | 35. Namo bilmine cha kavachine cha namo varmiṇe cha varūthine cha namaḥ śrutāya cha śrutasenāya cha namo dundubhyāya cha āhananyāya cha | 36. Namo dhṛishṇave cha pramṛiśāya cha[52] namo nishangiṇe cha ishudhimate cha namas tīkshṇeshave cha āyudhine cha namaḥ svāyudhāya sudhanvane cha | 37. Namaḥ srutyāya cha pathyāya cha namaḥ kāṭyāya cha nīpyāya cha namaḥ kulyāya cha sarasyāya cha namo nādeyāya (nādyāya, T. S.) cha vaiśantāya cha | 38. Namaḥ kūpyāya cha avaṭyāya cha namo vīdhryāya cha ātapyāya namo meghyāya cha

[52] The T. S. adds here namo dūtaya cha prahitāya cha.

vidyutyāya cha namo varshyāya cha avarshyāya cha | 39. Namo vātyāya cha reshmyāya (reshmiyāya, T. S.) cha namo vāstavyāya cha vāstupāya cha namaḥ Somāya cha Rudrāya cha namas tāmrāya cha aruṇāya cha | 40. Namaḥ śangave (śangāya, T. S.) paśupataye cha namaḥ ugrāya cha bhīmāya cha namo agrevadhāya cha dūrevadhāya cha namo hantre cha hanīyase cha namo vṛikshebhyo hari-keśebhyo namas tārāya | 41. Namaḥ śambhavāya (śambhave, T. S.) cha mayobhavāya (mayobhave, T. S.) cha namaḥ śankarāya cha mayaskarāya cha namaḥ śivāya cha śivatarāya cha | 42. Namaḥ pāryāya cha avāryāya cha namaḥ pratarāṇāya cha uttarāṇāya cha[53] namas tīrthyāya cha kūlyāya cha namaḥ śashpyāya phenyāya cha | 43. Namaḥ sikatyāya cha pravāhyāya cha namaḥ kiṁśilāya cha kshayaṇāya cha namaḥ kapardine cha pulastaye cha namaḥ iriṇyāya cha prapathyāya cha | 44. Namo vrajyāya (grihyāya, T. S.) cha goshṭhyāya cha namas talpyāya cha gehyāya cha namo hṛidayyāya (hradayyāya, T. S.) cha niveshyāya cha namaḥ kāṭyāya cha gahvareshṭhāya cha | 45. Namaḥ śushkyāya cha harityāya cha namaḥ pāṁsavyāya cha rajasyāya cha namo lopyāya cha ulapyāya cha namaḥ ūrvyāya cha sūrvyāya (sūrmyāya, T. S.) cha | 46. Namaḥ parṇāya (parṇyāya, T. S.) cha parṇaśadāya cha namaḥ udguramāṇāya (apagurumāṇāya, T. S.) cha abhighnate cha nama ākhidate cha prakhidate cha namaḥ ishukṛidbhyo dhanushkṛidbhyaś cha vo namo namo vaḥ kirikebhyo devānāṁ hṛidayebhyo namo vichinvatkebhyo namo vikshiṇatkebhyo (vikshīṇakebhyo, T. S.) namaḥ ānirhatebhyaḥ[54] | 47. Drāpe andhasaspate daridra (daridran, T. S.) nīlalohita | āsām prajānām eshām paśūnām mā bher mā roṇ mo cha naḥ kinchanāmamat | 48 (=R.V. i. 114, 1). 49. Yā te Rudra śivā tanūḥ śivā viśvāhā bheshajī | śivā rutasya bheshajī tayā no mṛiḍa jīvase | 50 (=R.V. ii. 33, 14[55]). 51. Mīḍhushṭama śivatama śivo naḥ sumanāḥ bhava | parame vṛikshe āyudhaṁ nidhāya kṛittiṁ vasānaḥ āchara pinākam bibhrad āgahi | 52. Vikiridra (vikirida, T. S.) vilohita namas te astu bhagavaḥ | yās te sahasraṁ hetayo 'nyam asmad nivapantu tāḥ | 53. Sahasrāṇi sahasraśo (sahasradhā, T. S.) bāhvos (bāhuvos, T. S.) tava hetayaḥ | tāsām īśāno bhagavaḥ parāchīnā mukhā kṛidhi | 54. Asankhyātā sahasrāṇi (sahasrāṇi

[53] The T. S. here adds, namaḥ ātāryāya cha ālaṭyāya cha.

[54] The T. S. here adds, namaḥ āmīvatkebhyaḥ.

[55] Instead of mahī gāt, the concluding words of the first half of the verse, as it stands in the R.V., the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā has aghāyoḥ, "of the malicious." The T. S. introduces here verses corresponding to those in R.V. i. 114, 2, 7, 8, 10; ii. 33, 11, 14.

sahasraśo, T. S.) ye Rūdrāḥ adhi bhūmyām | teshāṁ sahasra-yojane ava dhanvāni tanmasi | 55. Asmin maṭhaty arṇave antarikshe Bhavāḥ adhi | teshām ityādi | 56. Nīlagrīvāḥ śitikaṇṭhāḥ divaṁ Rudrāḥ upāśritāḥ | teshām ityādi | 57. Nīlagrivāḥ śitikaṇṭhāḥ Sarvāḥ adhaḥ kshamācharāḥ | teshām ityādi | 58. Ye vṛikshesḳu śashpiṇjarāḥ nīlagrīvāḥ vilohitāḥ | teshām ityādi | 59. Ye bhūtānām adhipatayo viśikhāsaḥ kapardinaḥ | teshām ityādi | 60. Ye pathām pathirakshasaḥ (patiṛirakshayaḥ, T. S.) ailabṛidāḥ āyuryudhaḥ (yavyudhaḥ, T. S.) | teshām ityādi | 61. Ye tīrthāni pracharanti sṛikāhastāḥ (sṛikāvanto, T. S.) nishaṅgiṇaḥ | teshām ityādi | 62. Ye anneshu vividhyanti pātreshu pibato janān | teshām ityādi | 63. Ye etāvantaścha bhūyāṁsaś cha diśo Rudrāḥ vitasthire | teshāṁ ityādi | 64. Namo 'stu Rudrebhyo ye divi yeshāṁ[56] varsham ishavaḥ | tebhyo daśa prāchīr daśa dakshiṇāḥ dāśa pratīchīr daśa udīchir daśa ūrdhvāḥ | tebhyo mamo astu te no avantu te no mṛidayantu te yaṁ dvishmo yaś cha no dveshṭi tam eshāṁ (vo, T. S.) jambhe dadhmaḥ (dadhāmi, T. S.)| 65. Namo 'stu Rudrebhyo ye antarikshe yeshāṁ vātaḥ ishavaḥ | tebhyo daśa ityādi | 66. Namo 'stu Rudrebhyo ye pṛithivyaṁ yeshām annam ishavaḥ | tebhyo daśa ityādi |

"Reverence, Rudra, to thy wrath, and to thy arrow. Reverence to both thy arms. 2. Shine upon us, dweller in the mountains, with that blessed body of thine which is auspicious, not terrible,[57] and which does not betoken harm. 3. The arrow, O dweller in the mountains, which thou bearest in thy hand to discharge, make it, O lord of the mountains, auspicious; do not slay men and cattle. 4. With auspicious words we supplicate thee, dweller in the mountains, that all our men and cattle may be healthy and cheerful. 5. The deliverer, the first divine physician, hath interposed for us. Destroying all serpents, strike down and drive away all Yātudhānīs (female goblins). 6. We deprecate from us the wrath of that auspicious deity who is copper-coloured, ruddy, and brown, and of those Rudras who in thousands surround him on all sides. 7. May he who glides away, blue-necked and red-coloured, and whom cowherds and female drawers of water[58] have seen,—may he, when seen, be gracious to us. 8. Reverence to the blue-necked, to the thousand-eyed, to the bountiful; and to his attendant spirits I offer reverence. 9. Loosen the string from both ends of thy bow; and throw away, O divine being, the arrows which are in thy hand. 10. May the bow of the god with braided hair be stringless, and his quiver contain pointless shafts. His arrows have perished, and his sword-sheath is empty. 11. That shaft, O most bountiful, that bow which is in thy hand, with it, rendered innocuous, do thou protect us on every side. 12. May the shaft from thy bow avoid us in every direction; and deposit thy quiver far from us. 13. Unbending thy bow, O thousand-eyed, and thousand-quivered, and blunting the points of thy arrows, be gracious and kind to us. 14. Reverence to thy violent weapon, unstrung, to both thy arms, and to thy bow. (Verses 15 and 16 correspond nearly with R. V. i. 114, 7, and 8. See above, p. 304.) 17. Reverence to the golden-armed leader of armies, to the lord of the regions, to the green-haired trees, to the lord of beasts,[59] who is yellow like young grass, to the radiant, to the lord of roads, the yellow-haired, the wearer of the sacrificial cord, to the lord of the full-fed, (18) to the brown-coloured, to the piercer, to the lord of food. Reverence to the weapon of Bhava, to the lord of things moving, to Rudra with the bended bow, to the lord of the fields, to the innoxious charioteer, to the lord of the forests, (19) to the red architect, to the lord of trees, to the being who stretches out the worlds, who affords deliverance, to the lord of plants, to the observant merchant, to the lord of bushes, to the loud-shouting lord of foot-soldiers who causes his foes to shriek, (20) to him who runs in full stretch, to the lord of spirits, to the conqueror, to the piercer, to the lord of armies which wound, to the towering wielder of a sword, to the lord of thieves,[60] to the robber, [59] This, Weber thinks, must originally have meant "the lord of sacrificial victims."

[56] The T. S. inserts here the words annaṁ vāto.

[57] Compare the passage quoted from the Mahābhārata, above, p. 204, near the foot.

[58] "Persons who are destitute of initiation in Vedic rites" (Vedokta-saṁskāra-hīnāḥ).—Comm.

[60] On this the Commentator has the following apologetic remarks: Rudro lîlayâ chorâdi-rûpaṁ dhatte | yadvâ Rudrasya jagad-âtmakatvâch chorâdayo Rudrâḥ eva dheyâḥ | yadvâ stenâdi-śarîre jîveśvara-rûpeṇa Rudro dvidhâ tishṭhati | tatra jîva-rûpaṁ stenâdi-śabda-vachyaṁ | tad îśvara-rudra-rûpaṁ lakshayati | yathâ śâkhâ-graṁ chandrasya lakshakam | kim bahunâ | lakshyârtha-vivakshayâ mantreshu laukikâḥ śabdâḥ prayuktâḥ | "Rudra in sport assumes the forms of thieves and such like persons. Or, since Rudra is the soul of the world, thieves, etc., are to be thought of as being Rudras. Or, Rudra abides in two ways, as life and as lord, in the bodies of thieves, etc. Then his character as life is denoted by the words thieves, etc.; and that points to his character as Rudra the lord, just as the end of a branch points to the moon. But why enlarge further? Common words are employed in the sacred texts to intimate the sense which is pointed to."

to the prowler, to the lord of woods, (21) to the cheater, to the deceiver, to the lord of pilferers, to the bearer of the sword and quiver, to the lord of robbers, to those armed with thunderbolts, to the murderous, to the lord of stealers, to those who carry swords, to those who prowl by night, to the lord of plunderers; (22) to him who wears a turban, who frequents the mountains, to the lord of robbers, to you who have arrows, and to you who have bows, to you with bended bows, and you who fit your arrows on the string, to you who draw the bow, and to you who shoot, (23) to you who discharge, and to you who pierce, to you who sleep and you who wake, to you who lie and you who sit, to you who stand and you who run, (24) to the assemblies, and to you the lords of assemblies, to horses, and to you the lords of horses, to you the hosts which wound and pierce, and to the goddesses who have excellent troops, and who are destructive, (25) to the troops, and to you the lords of troops, to the companies, and to you the lords of companies, to the rogues, and to you the lords of rogues, to you who are ill-formed, and to you who have all forms, (26) to armies, and to you the leaders of armies, to you who ride in chariots, and to you without chariots, to you the charioteers, and to you the drivers of horses, to you the great, and to you the small, (27) to you the carpenters, and to you the chariot-makers, to you the potters, and to you the blacksmiths, to you the Nishādas, and to you the Punjishthas, to you the leaders of dogs, and to you the huntsmen, (28) to dogs, and to the masters of dogs, to Bhava,[61] and to Rudra, and to Sarva, to Paśupati, to Nīlagrīva, and to [61] Prof. Weber has the following note on verse 28 of his translation of the S'ata-rudriya in his Indische Studien, ii. 37: "Bhava is variously explained, sometimes as the 'existent,' 'eternal' (bhavaty eva na kadāchid,api na bhavati), sometimes as the producer of everything (bhavaty asmin sarvam), so that according to the latter explanation he is the exact opposite of 'S'arva,' the destroyer: and possibly the term (Bhava) has been formed with the view of propitiating the terrible god by a favourable name. When both words appear in verses 55 and 57 as additional names of the Rudras, they are no doubt transferred to them from their master, since the name Bhava in particular will not apply well to them. According to the S'atap. Br. i. 7, 38 (dating certainly from a period when Rudra had already been identified with Agni), both words (see also Ind. St. i. 132, 140) are appellations of Agni,—Bhava being that which was usual among the Bāhīkas, and S'arva the one prevailing among the Prāchyas (and so among the Kośala-videhas, for example). As we meet with the word S'arva in the well-known passage of the Vendidad, Fargard x., p. 342," (S'aurva in the Zend, see Spiegel's translation, p. 176, and his Commentary, i., p. 285, and Justi's Handbuch s.v.) "we should rather have expected that S'arva would have

Sitikaṇṭha, (29) to him with the braided hair, and to him with the shaven hair, to him with a thousand eyes, to him with a hundred bows, to the dweller in the mountains, to Sipivishta,[62] to the most bountiful, to him who has arrows, (30) to the short, and to the dwarf, to the great, and to him who has arrived at a mature age, to the old, to the coetaneous, to the chief, and to the first, (31) to the swift (or pervader), and to the moving, to him who abides in the swift, and in the flowing waters, and to him who dwells in billows, and in tranquil waters, and in rivers, and on islands, (32) to the eldest, and to the youngest, to the first-born, and to the last-born, to the middlemost, to him who is not full-grown, to the lowest, to him who exists at the roots of trees, (33) to him who lives in the magical city Sobha (?), to him who exists in incantations, to him who exists in punishment, and in prosperity, to the renowned, to the endmost, to him who exists in the soil, and in the threshing floor, (34) in the woods and in the bushes, in the form of sound, and in echo, to him who has fleet armies and swift chariots, to the hero, and to the splitter, (35) to the helmeted, to him with cotton-quilted cuirass, with iron mail, and with armour, to him who is renowned and has a renowned army, to him who exists in drums, and in resounding blows, (36) to the impetuous, to the assailant, to the bearer of a sword and a quiver, who carries swift arrows, who wields weapons, and has excellent weapons and a good bow, (37) to him who dwells in pathways, and roads, and rough (or desert) places, and the skirts of mountains, and watercourses, and lakes, and rivers, and ponds, (38) and in wells, and pits, and in bright clouds, and in sunshine, in clouds, in lightning, in rain, in fair weather, (39) in wind, in storm, to the dweller in houses, to the protector of houses, to Soma, and to Rudra, to the copper-coloured, to the ruddy, (40) to the bringer of prosperity, to Paśupati, to the fierce (ugra) and the terrible, to him who kills in been the name current among the Bāhīkas. It is difficult to decide whether both appellations actually belonged at first to Agni, and not to Rudra. But, generally speaking, the contrary appears to me to be more credible, because in the hymns of the Rig-veda a peaceful, and not a destructive, character is predominatingly ascribed to Agni. Further, both words are brought directly into connexion with the lightning in A.V. x. 1. Bhavāśarvau asyatām pāpakṛite devāhetim." This text is quoted a few pages further on.

[62] R.V. vii. 99, 7; and vii. 100, 6, above, pp. 86–88, and Appendix on p. 88.

front, and who kills from afar, to the slayer, to the excessive slayer, to the green-haired trees, to the deliverer, (41) to the source of prosperity, to the source of happiness, to the causer of prosperity (śankarāya), to the causer of happiness, to the auspicious (śiva) and the very auspicious, (42) to him who exists beyond and on this side, to him who crosses over to and fro, to him who exists in fords and river-banks, in young grass, and in foam, (43) who exists in gravel and in streams, in stony ground, and in habitable[63] places, to the god with spirally-braided hair, to him with smooth hair,[64] who exists in barren land, and in frequented roads, (44) among herds, in cow-pens, in beds, in houses, in the heart, in whirlpools (or in hoar-frost), and in rough (or desert) places, who abides in abysses, (45) in dry things and in green things, in dust, in moisture (or dust), in inaccessible places, in creepers, in the earth and deep under the earth. 46. Reverence to the leaf, and to him who is in the fall of the leaf, to the threatener, to the slayer, to the vexer and the afflicter, to you who make arrows and who make bows, to you the sprinklers, to the hearts of the gods,[65] to the discerners, to the destroyers, and to the indestructible. 47. O thou who chasest away, who art lord of the soma-juice, who art poor,[66] who art blue and red, do not crush, do not destroy[67] these [our] offspring, or these cattle, and let nothing of ours be sick. 48 (=R.V. i. 114, 1). 49. That we may live, be gracious to us with that body of thine which is propitious, which is propitious and healing on all days, which is propitious and heals disease. 50 (=R.V. ii. 33, 14. See above, p. 309). 51. Most bountiful, most gracious, be gracious and benevolent to us. Placing thy weapon on the remotest [or, highest] tree, approach, clad in a skin,[68]

[63] Or, "in a place with still water."—Comm.

[64] This is the rendering of Böhtlingk and Roth. See Weber's Ind. Stud., ii. 41, note. The Commentator on the Vāj. S. gives the following alternative explanation: Pulastaye agre tishṭhati pulastiḥ . . . . yadvā pūrshu śarīreshu astiḥ sattā yasya sa pulastiḥ sarvāntaryāmī |

[65] Agni, Vāyu, and Āditya are meant, according to the Commentator, and the S'atap. Br. ix. 1, 1, 23.

[66] Daridra. The Commentator explains this as meaning "without any connexion with others, from being without a second" (nishparigraho 'dvitīyatvāt). Prof. Roth (Lexicon) proposes to render the word by "roving about," and Prof. Weber by "splitter."

[67] Mā bher mā rok. See Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. ruj, where bheḥ is said to come from bhid, not bhī.

[68] See V. S. 3, 61, above, p. 322.

come, holding thy bow. 52. O deity, who avertest wounds [or, shootest arrows], and art ruddy in hue, reverence be to thee. May thy thousand shafts smite some one else than us. 53. Thousands of thousands of shafts are in thy hands. O god, do thou, the lord, avert their points [from us]. 54. We unbend a thousand leagues (yojana) away the bows of those unnumbered thousands of Rudras who are upon the earth. 55. Above this great atmospheric ocean there exist Bhavas. We unbend their bows a thousand leagues away. 56. Rudras with blue necks and white throats occupy the sky. We unbend, etc. 57. Sarvas with blue necks and white throats frequent [the regions] beneath the earth. We unbend, etc. 58. Of those [deities] with a colour like young grass, with blue necks and ruddy hue, who [live] in trees, we unbend, etc. 59. Of those lords of beings who are without locks of hair, and of those whose hair is spirally-braided, we unbend, etc. 60. Of those who are guardians of roads, givers of nourishment, who fight for life, we unbend, etc. 61. Of those who frequent the fords, with weapons in their hands, and swords, we unbend, etc. 62. Of those who pierce, in the midst of their meals, men who are drinking in vessels, we unbend, etc. 63. Of those Rudras who, so many [as we have described] and yet more numerous, occupy the regions, we unbend, etc. 64. Reverence to the Rudras who [live] in the sky,[69] of whom rain is the arrows. To them [I hold out] ten [fingers] to the east,[70] ten to the south, ten to the west, ten to the north, and ten upwards. To them be reverence: may they protect us, may they be gracious to us. We consign to their teeth the man whom we hate, and who hates us. 65. Reverence to the Rudras who [live] in the atmosphere, of whom the wind is the arrows. To them [I hold out] ten [fingers], etc., etc. 66. Reverence to the Rudras who [live] upon the earth, of whom food is the arrows. To them [I hold out] ten [fingers], etc., etc."

Many of the epithets in this S'atarudriya are not found in other books; and it is difficult, and perhaps of little importance, to discover their real sense. Others, as the reader will have observed, are of the most fantastic character.

[69] The T. S. inserts here, "whose food is the wind."

[70] Prāgabhimukhāḥ angulīḥ kurve iti śeshaḥ | . . . añjalim baddhvā sarva-dikshu namaskaromi | Comm.

SECT. III.—Passages relating to Rudra, Bhava, S'arva, etc., from the Atharva-veda.

A. V. ii. 27, 6.—Rudra jalāsha-bheshaja nīla-śikhaṇḍa karma-kṛit | prāśam pratiprāśo jahi arasāṁ kṛiṇu oshadhe | "Rudra, who hast healing remedies, who hast dark locks, who art the performer of works, destroy the food of him who seeks to take ours; make it savourless, O plant!"

A. V. iv. 28, 1.—Bhavā-S'arvau manve vām asya vittaṁ yayor vām idam pradiśi yad virochate | yāv asyeśāthe dvipado yau chatushpadas tau no munchatam aṁhasaḥ | 2. yayor abhyadhve uta yad dūre chid yau viditāv ishubhṛitām asishṭhau | yāv—— | 3. sahasrākshau vṛitrahaṇā huve 'haṁ dūregavyūtī stuvann emy ugrau | yāv—— | 4. yāv ārebhāte bahu sākam agre pra ched asrāshṭam abhibhāṁ janeshu | yāv—— | 5. yayor vadhād nāpapadyate kaśchana antar deveshūta mānusheshu | yāv—— | 6. yaḥ kṛityā-kṛid mūla-kṛid yātudhāno ni tasmin dhattaṁ vajram ugrau | yāv—— | 7. adhi no brūtam pṛitanāsu ugrau saṁ vajreṇa sṛijatam yaḥ kimīdī[71] | staumi Bhavā-S'arvau nāthito johavīmi tau no munchatam aṁhasaḥ |

1. "O Bhava and Sarva, I reverence you; have regard to this (your worshipper), ye under whose control is all this which shines: ye who are lords of this two-footed and four-footed (creation), free us from calamity. 2. Ye to whom belongs all that is near and even all that is remote, who are known as the most skilful shooters among all archers: ye who are lords, etc. (as in v. 1). 3. Ye thousand-eyed slayers of enemies, I invoke you; I go on praising you, ye fierce gods, whose domain extends far and wide: ye who are lords, etc. 4. Ye who, united, performed many (exploits) of old, who manifested ill omens among men: ye who are lords, etc. 5. Ye from whose destroying stroke no one either among gods or men escapes: ye who are lords, etc. 6. Fierce gods, launch your thunderbolt against the Yātudhāna, who practises sorcery, and prepares roots (for that purpose): ye who are lords, etc. 7. Fierce gods, take our side in battles, smite with the thunderbolt him who is a goblin. I praise you, Bhava and Sarva; distressed I again and again invoke you; deliver us from calamity."

[71] Yāska explains this word thus, Nirukta, vi. 11: Kim idānīm iti charate kim idaṁ kim idam iti vā piśunāya charate |

A. V. v. 21, 11.—Yūyam ugrāḥ Marutaḥ Pṛiśni-mātaraḥ Indreṇa yujā pra mṛiṇīta śatrūn | Somo rājā Varuṇo rājā mahādevaḥ uta mṛityur Indraḥ | "Do ye, fierce Maruts, whose mother is Pṛiśni, allied with Indra, destroy [our] enemies. (May) king Soma, king Varuṇa, and Indra, who is a great god and death, (do the same)." [This verse is from a martial hymn addressed to the Dundubhi or drum, which in verses 4–6 is besought to terrify the poet's enemies, as the sight of a man frightens wild animals, a wolf goats and sheep, and a hawk smaller birds. 4. Yathā mṛigāḥ saṁvijanta āraṇyāḥ purushād adhi | . . . . 5. Yathā vṛikād ajāvayo dhāvanti bahu bibhyatīḥ | . . . . 6. Yathā śyenāt patatriṇaḥ saṁvijante ahar divi. . . . .]

A. V. vi. 93, 1.—Yamo Mṛityur aghamāro nirṛitho babhruḥ S'arvo 'stā nīla-śikhaṇḍaḥ | deva-janāḥ senayā uttasthivāṁsas te asmākam pari vṛinjantu vīrān | 2. Manasā homair harasā ghṛitena S'arvāyāstre uta rājne Bhavāya | namasyebhyo namaḥ ebhyaḥ kṛiṇomy anyatra asmad aghavishā nayantu | "May Yama, Death, who brings dire destruction, may the Destroyer, may tawny Sarva the archer with dark locks, may the hosts of the gods, arising with their army, may these avoid our heroes. 2. With mind, with oblations, with fire, with butter, I offer reverence to Sarva the archer, and to king Bhava, to them who deserve reverence; let them carry their deadly poisons to others than us."

In A. V. vi. 141, 1, Rudra is mentioned along with Vāyu, Tvashṭṛi, and Indra (Rudro bhūmne chikitsatu).

A. V. vii. 87, 1.—Yo Agnau Rudro yo apsv antar yaḥ oshadhīr vīrudhaḥ āviveśa | yaḥ imā viśvā bhuvanāni chāklṛipe tasmai Rudrāya namo astv Agnaye | "Reverence be to that Rudra, Agni, to the Rudra who is in Agni, who is in the waters, and who has entered into the plants and bushes, and who has formed all these creatures."

A. V. viii. 2, 7.— . . . . Bhavā-śarvau mṛiḍatam śarma yachhatam apasidhya duritaṁ dhattam āyuḥ | . . . . . "Bhava and Sarva, be gracious, give protection; removing calamity, give life."[72]

A. V. viii. 5, 10.—Asmai maṇiṁ varma badhnantu devāḥ Indro Vishṇuḥ Savitā Rudro Agniḥ | ityādi | "May the gods, Indra, Vishṇu, Savitṛi, Rudra, Agni, bind on him the jewel as a protection," etc.

[72] See the translation of the entire hymn, in which this half verse occurs, in the fifth volume of this work, p. 446 ff.

A. V. ix. 7, 7.—Mitraś cha Varuṇaś cha aṁsau Tvashṭā cha Aryamā cha doshaṇī Mahādevo bāhū | "Mitra and Varuṇa are the shoulders, Tvashṭṛi and Aryaman the fore-arms, and Mahādeva the two arms."

A. V. x. 1, 23.—Bhavā-śarvāu asyatām pāpa-kṛite kṛityā-kṛite dush-kṛite vidyutaṁ deva-hetim | "Let Bhava and Sarva launch the lightning, the bolt of the gods, against the doer of wickedness, against him who employs sorcery, against the evil doer." (See Weber's Ind. Studien, ii. 37, note, quoted above in p. 328 f.)

A. V. xi. 2, 1.—Bhavā-S'arvau mṛiḍatam mā 'bhiyātam bhūta-patī paśu-patī namo vām | pratihitām āyatām mā vi srāshṭam mā no hiṁsi-shṭaṁ dvipado mā chatushpadaḥ | 2. S'une kroshṭre mā śarīrāṇi kartam aliklavebhyo gṛidhrebhyo ye cha kṛishṇāḥ avishyavaḥ | makshikās te Paśu-pate vayāṁsi te vighase mā vidanta | 3. Krandāya te prāṇāya yāś cha te Bhava ropayaḥ | namas te Rudra kṛiṇmaḥ sahasrākshāya amartya | 4. Purastāt te namaḥ kṛiṇmaḥ uttarād adharād uta | abhīvargād divas pari antarikshāya te namaḥ | 5. Mukhāya te Paśupate yāni chakshūṁshi te Bhava | tvache rūpāya saṁdṛiśe pratīchīnāya te namaḥ | 6. Angebhyas te udarāya jihvāyai āsyāya te | dadbhyo gandhāya te namaḥ | 7. Astrā nīla-śikhaṇḍena sahasrākshena vājinā | Rudreṇārdhaka-ghātinā tena mā samarāmahi | 8. Sa no Bhavaḥ pari vṛiṇaktu viśvataḥ āpaḥ[73] ivāgniḥ pari vṛiṇaktu no Bhavaḥ | mā no 'bhi māṁsta namo astv asmai | 9. Chatur namo ashṭakṛitvo Bhavāya daśa kṛitvaḥ Paśupate namas te | taveme pancha paśavo vibhaktāḥ gāvo aśvāḥ purushāḥ ajāvayaḥ | 10. Tava chatasraḥ pradiśas tava dyaus tava pṛithivī tavedam ugrorv antariksham | tavedaṁ sarvam ātmanvad yat prāṇat pṛithivīm anu | 11. Uruḥ kośo vasudhānas tavāyaṁ yasminn imā viśvā bhuvanāny antaḥ | sa no mṛiḍa Paśupate namas te paraḥ kroshṭāro abhibhāḥ śvānaḥ paro yantv agharudo vikeśyaḥ | 12. Dhanur bibharshi haritaṁ hiraṇyayaṁ sahasra-ghniṁ śata-vadhaṁ śikhaṇḍin | Rudrasyeshuś charati deva-hetis tasyai namo yatamasyāṁ diśītaḥ | 13. Yo 'bhiyāto nilayate tvāṁ Rudra nichikīrshati | paśchād anu prayunkshe taṁ viddhasya pada-nīr iva | 14. Bhavā-rudrau sayujā saṁvidānāv ubhāv ugrau charato vīryāya | tābhyāṁ namo yatamasyām diśītaḥ | 15. Namas te astv āyate namo astu parāyate | namas te Rudra tishṭhate āsīnāyota te namaḥ | 16. Namaḥ sāyaṁ namaḥ prātar namo rātryā namo divā | Bhavāya cha S'arvāya cha ubhābhyām akaraṁ namaḥ |

[73] In Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, vol. v., p. 1003, several passages are quoted where āpaḥ (with a long ā in the first syllable) occurs as an accusative plural.

17. Sahasrāksham atipaśyam purastād Rudram asyantam bahudhā vipaśchitam | mā upārāma jihvayā īyamānam | 18. S'yāvāśvaṁ kṛishṇam asitam mṛiṇantam bhīmaṁ ratham' keśinaḥ pādayantam | pūrve pratīmo namo astu asmai | 19. Mā no 'bhi ɛrāḥ matyaṁ deva-hetim mā naḥ krudhaḥ Paśupate namas te | anyatra asmad divyāṁ śākhāṁ vi dhūnu | 20. Mā no hiṁsīr adhi no brūhi pari no vṛindhi mā krudhaḥ | ma tvayā samarāmahi | 21. Mā no goshu purusheshu mā gṛidho no ajāvishu | anyatrogra vi vartaya 'piyārūṇām prajām jahi | 22. Yasya takmā kāsikā hetir ekam aśvasyeva vṛishaṇaḥ krandaḥ eti | abhipūrvaṁ nirṇayate namo astv asmai | 23. Yo antarikshe tishṭhati vishṭabhito ayajvanaḥ pramṛiṇan deva-pīyūn | tasmai namo daśabhiḥ śakvarībhiḥ | 24. Tubhyam āraṇyāḥ paśavo mṛigāḥ vane hitāḥ haṁsāḥ suparṇāḥ śakunāḥ vayāṁsi | tava yaksham Paśupate apsv antas tubhyaṁ ksharanti divyāḥ āpo vṛidhe | 25. Siṁśumārāḥ ajagarāḥ purīkayāḥ jashāḥ matsyāḥ rajasāḥ yebhyo asyasi | na te dūraṁ na parishṭhā 'sti te Bhava sadyaḥ sarvām pari paśyasi bhūmim pūrvasmād haṁsy uttarasmin samudre | 26. Mā no Rudra takmanā mā visheṇa mā naḥ saṁ srāḥ divyenāgninā | anyatrāsmad vidyutam pātayaitām | 27. Bhavo divo Bhavaḥ īśe pṛithivyāḥ Bhavaḥ ā papre uru antariksham | tasyai namo yatamasyāṁ diśitaḥ | 28. Bhava rājan yajamānāya mṛiḍa paśūnāṁ hi paśupatir babhūtha | yaḥ śraddadhāti santi devāḥ iti chatushpade dvipade asya mṛiḍa | 29 (=R.V. i. 114, 7). Mā no mahāntam uta mā no arbhakam mā no vahantam uta mā no vakshyataḥ | mā no hiṁsīḥ pitaram mātaraṁ cha svāṁ tanvaṁ Rudra mā rīrisho naḥ | 30. Rudrasyailaba-kārebhyo 'saṁsūkta-gilebhyaḥ | idam mahāsyebhyaḥ śvabhyo akaraṁ namaḥ | 31. Namas te ghoshiṇībhyo namas te keśinībhyaḥ | namo namaskṛitābhyo namaḥ sambhunjatībhyaḥ | namas te deva senābhyaḥ svasti no abhayaṁ cha naḥ |

1. "Bhava and Sarva, be gracious to us, be not hostile, lords of spirits, lords of beasts [see v. 9]; reverence to you twain. Discharge not a long arrow; destroy not our bipeds and quadrupeds. 2. Abandon not our bodies to the dog or the jackal, to carrion birds, to vultures, to thy greedy black flies, lord of beasts; let not thy birds get us to devour. 3. We offer reverence to thy shout, to thy breath, and to thy arrows, Bhava, and, O immortal Rudra, to thee the thousand-eyed. 4. We offer reverence to thee from before, and from above, and from below, and from thy domain in the sky: reverence to thy firmament.

5. Reverence to thy face, Paśupati, to thine eyes, Bhava, to thy skin, to thy form, to thine aspect from behind. 6. Reverence to thy limbs, to thy belly, to thy tongue, to thy mouth, to thy teeth, to thy odour (nose?). 7. May we never contend with that archer whose locks are dark, who has a thousand eyes, the warrior, with Rudra the slayer of Ardhaka.[74] 8. May he (Bhava) everywhere avoid us, may Bhava avoid us as fire avoids the waters. May he not bear malice towards us: reverence be to him. 9. Four times, eight times, be reverence to Bhava: ten times be reverence to thee, Paśupati. Thine are these five distinct sorts of animals—kine, horses, men, goats, and sheep. 10. Thine, Ugra [or fierce god], are the four regions, the sky, the earth, and the wide atmosphere; thine is everything which has a spirit and which breathes upon the earth. 11. This is a vast and wealthy storehouse of thine, within which all these beings are contained. Do thou favour us, Paśupati; reverence be to thee. Far from us be jackals, unlucky omens, dogs: may shrieking female demons with dishevelled hair go far from us. 12. Long-haired god, thou carriest a yellow and golden bow, [a weapon] which smites thousands and kills hundreds. Rudra's arrow, a celestial bolt, flies abroad: reverence be to it in whatever direction from hence [it flies]. 13. Thou pursuest after the adversary who lurks and seeks to overcome thee, Rudra, as a man tracking the steps[75] of a wounded [animal]. 14. Bhava and Rudra, who are always united and concordant, both fierce, ye advance to [deeds of] heroism. Reverence be to them twain in whatever direction they are from hence. 15. Reverence to thee coming, and to thee departing; reverence to thee, Rudra, standing, and to thee sitting. 16. Reverence in the evening, in the morning, by night and by day: I have offered reverence to Bhava, and to Sarva, both of them. 17. Let us not with our tongue offend Rudra, who rushes on, thousand-eyed, viewing all the world, who hurls his shafts in our presence, and who is manifoldly wise. 18. We approach first [with our worship] the god who has brown horses, is dark, black, destroying, terrible, who casts down the car of Keśin (the long-haired being)[76]: reverence be to him. 19. Do [74] Rudra is elsewhere said to be the slayer of Andhaka or Antaka. See Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇya Kāṇḍa 30, 27, which is quoted in the Appendix.

[75] Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth assign to pada-nī the sense of "guide."

[76] Böhtlingk and Roth make keśin an epithet of Rudra: see s.v.

not hurl at us thy club,[77] thy celestial bolt: be not incensed at us, Paśupati; reverence be to thee. Brandish thy celestial weapon[78] over some other than us. 20. Slay us not; interpose for us; avoid us; be not angry with us; let us not contend with thee. 21. Do not covet our cattle, our men, our goats, and sheep. Fierce god, betake thyself [or, turn thy chariot] elsewhere; slay the offspring of the malignant. 22. Reverence be to him whose consumption, whose cough, whose bolt assails some one like the neighing of a stallion—to him who carries away [his victims?] in order. 23. Be reverence paid with ten śakvarī verses to him who abides fixed in the atmosphere, smiting the despisers of the gods who offer no sacrifice. 24. For thee the beasts of the wood, deer, swans, and various well-winged birds[79] are placed in the forest; thy living creatures, Paśupati, exist in the waters: to delight thee the celestial waters flow. 25. (There exist) porpoises, great serpents, purīkayas, sea-monsters, fishes, rajasas,[79*] at which thou shootest. There is to thee, Bhava, nothing far, nor anything which stands [near] around thee. At a glance thou lookest around the whole earth: from the eastern thou slayest in the northern ocean. 26. Do not assail us, Rudra, with consumption, or with poison, or with celestial fire: cause this lightning to descend elsewhere than upon us. 27. Bhava rules the sky, Bhava rules the earth, Bhava hath filled[80] the vast atmosphere: reverence be to him in whatever direction from hence [he is]. 28. Bhava, king, be gracious to thy worshipper, for thou art lord of beasts. Be gracious to the quadrupeds and bipeds of him who believes that the gods exist.[81] 29 (=R.V. i. 114, 7). Slay neither our great nor our small, neither him who is growing nor those who are to grow,[82]

[77] A. V. viii. 8, 11.—Triṇeḍhu enān matyam Bhavasya | "May the club of Bhava crush them."

[78] The word in the original is śākhā, "branch."

[79] In the original, suparnāḥ śakunāḥ vayāṁsi.

[79*] B. and R. say this word perhaps means "unclean."

[80] Compare R.V. i. 52, 13, p. 99, above; and the other passages quoted in note 73 on the same page.

[81] Compare R.V. viii. 89, 3, 4, quoted in the third volume of this work, p. 254.

[82] Compare R.V. i. 114, 7, and T. S. iv. 5, 10, 2, p. 303, above. In Professor Wilson's Dictionary I find the sense of "growing" assigned to the root vah, when conjugated in the ātmane pada with a nasal, vaṁhate. He says, however, that in this sense the root is more properly bah, baṁhate. If the verb be so understood in this passage, the meaning will be the same as that which, on the authority of Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth, I have adopted in the parallel text of the Rigveda.

neither our father nor our mother: injure not, Rudra, ourselves. 30. I have offered this reverence to Rudra's wide-mouthed howling dogs who swallow their prey unchewed. 31. Reverence, O deity, to thy shouting, long-haired, reverenced, devouring hosts. May blessing and security be ours."

A. V. xi. 6, 9.—Bhavā-śarvāv idam brūmo Rudram Paśupatiś cha yaḥ | ishūr yāḥ eshāṁ saṁvidma tāḥ naḥ santu sadā śivāḥ | "We say this to Bhava and Sarva, to Rudra and to him who is Paśupati: may those arrows of theirs which we know be always propitious to us."

A. V. xii. 4, 17.—Yaḥ enām avaśām āha devānāṁ nihitaṁ nidhim | ubhau tasmai Bhavā-śarvau parikramyeshum asyataḥ | "Both Bhava and Sarva advancing, discharge an arrow against him who declares this [cow], the hoarded treasure of the gods, to be no cow."

A. V. xiii. 4, 4.—So 'ryamā sa Varuṇaḥ sa Rudraḥ sa Mahādevaḥ | 26. Sa Rudro vasuvanir vasudeye namovāke vashaṭkāro 'nu saṁhitaḥ | 27. Tasyeme sarve yātavaḥ upa praśisham āsate | 28. Tasyāmū sarvā nakshatrā vaśe chandramasā saha | "4. He (Savitṛi) is Aryaman, he is Varuṇa, he is Rudra, he is Mahādeva. 26. He, Rudra, the giver of wealth, is placed as the 'vashaṭkāra' in the reverential invocation, at the giving of wealth. 27. All these demons wait upon his command. 28. All these stars, with the moon, are under his control."

The following passage, together with the rest of the fifteenth book of the Atharva-veda, is quoted and translated by Prof. Aufrecht in the first vol. of Weber's Indische Studien, pp. 121–140:

A. V. xv. 5, 1.—Tasmai prāchyāḥ diśo antar-deśād Bhavam ishvāsam anushṭhātāram akurvan | Bhavaḥ enam ishvāsaḥ prāchyāḥ diśo antar-deśād anushṭhātā 'nutishṭhati | nainaṁ Sarvo na Bhavo na Īśāno na asya paśūn na samānān hinasti yaḥ evam veda | 2. Tasmai dakshiṇāyāḥ diśo antardeśāch chharvam ishvāsam ityādi | 3. Tasmai pratīchyāḥ diśo antar-deśāt Paśupatim ityādi | 4. Tasmai udīchyāḥ diśo antar-deśād ugraṁ devam ityādi | 5. Tasmai dhruvāyāḥ diśo antar-deśād Rudram ityādi | 6. Tasmai ūrdhvāyāḥ diśo antar-deśād Mahādevam ityādi | 7. Tasmai sarvebhyo antar-deśebhyāḥ Īśānam ityādi | "[The gods] made Bhava the archer [to be] to him (the Vrātya) a deliverer from the intermediate space of the eastern region. Bhava the archer, a deliverer, delivers him from the interval of the eastern region. Neither Sarva nor Bhava, nor Īśāna slays either him who knows this, or his cattle, or his kindred.

2. [The gods] made Sarva the archer [to be] his deliverer from the intermediate space of the southern region, etc. 3. [The gods] made Paśupati the archer [to be] his deliverer from the intermediate space of the western region, etc. 4. [The gods] made the god Ugra, etc. (as above), of the northern region, etc. 5. [The gods] made Rudra, etc. (as above), of the lower region, etc. 6. [The gods] made Mahādeva, etc. (as above), of the upper region, etc. 7. [The gods] made Īśāna the archer [to be] his deliverer from all the intermediate regions," etc.

Sect. IV.—Passages relating to Rudra from the S'atapatha and S'ānkhāyana Brāhmaṇas.

In the following text (which has been already quoted in the second volume of this work, p. 202) Rudra is identified with Agni:

Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 7, 3, 8.—Agnir vai sa devaḥ tasya etāni nāmāni S'arvaḥ iti yathā prāchyāḥ āchakshate Bhavaḥ iti yathā Bāhīkāḥ Paśūnām patiḥ Rudro 'gnir iti | tāny asya aśāntāny eva itarāṇi nāmāni | Agnir ity eva śāntatamam | "Agni is a god. These are his names: Sarva, as the eastern people call him,[83] Bhava, as the Bāhīkas, Paśūnāmpati (lord of beasts), Rudra, and Agni. These other names of his (i.e. all the foregoing except Agni) are ungentle. Agni is his gentlest appellation."[84]

The following passage describes the birth of Rudra, and at the same time identifies him with Agni:

Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, 6, 1, 3, 7 ff.—Abhūd vai iyam pratishṭhā iti | tad bhūmir abhavat | tām aprathayat sā prithivy abhavat | tasyām asyām pratishṭhāyām bhūtāni bhūtānāncha patiḥ saṁvatsarāya adīkshanta | bhūtānām patir griha-patir āsīd Ushāḥ patnī | 8. Tad yāni tāni bhūtāni ritavas te | atha yaḥ sa bhūtānām patiḥ saṁvatsaraḥ saḥ | atha yā sā Ushāḥ patny aushasī sā | tāni imāni bhūtāni cha bhūtānāncha patiḥ saṁvatsaraḥ Ushasi reto 'sinchan | sa saṁvatsare kumāro 'jāyata | so 'rodīt | 9. Tam Prajāpatir abravīt "kumāra kiṁ rodishi yach chhramāt

[83] On this the commentator remarks (p. 124 of Weber's edition): Prāchyādi-deśa-bhedena S'arvādi-nāma-bhede 'pi devatā ekā eva | "Though, owing to the difference of countries, there is a difference of names, as S'arva, etc., still the god is but one."

[84] See the note translated from Weber's Indische Studien above in p. 328.

tapaso 'dhi jāto 'si" iti | so 'bravīd "anapahata-pāpmā vai asmy ahita-nāmā nāma me dhehi" iti | tasmāt putrasya jātasya nāma kuryāt pāpmānam eva asya tad apahanty api dvitīyam api tṛitīyam abhipūrvam eva asya tat pāpmānam apahanti | 10. Tam abravīd Rudro 'si iti | tad yad asya tan nāma akarod Agnis tad-rūpam abhavat | Agnir vai Rudraḥ | yad arodīt tasmād Rudraḥ | so 'bravīt "jyāyān vai asato 'smi dhehy eva me nāma" iti | 11. Tam abravīt "Sarvo 'si" iti | tad yad asya tan nāma akarod āpas tad-rūpam abhavan | āpo vai Sarvaḥ | adbhyo hi idaṁ sarvaṁ jāyate | so 'bravīj "jyāyān vai asato 'smi dhehy eva me nāma" iti | 12. Tam abravīt Paśupatir asi iti | tad yad asya tan nāma akarod oshadhayas tad-rūpam abhavan | oshadhayo vai Paśupatis tasmād yadā paśavaḥ oshadhīr labhante 'tha patīyanti | so 'bravīj "jyāyān vai asato 'smi dhehy eva me nāma" iti | 13. Tam abravīd Ugro 'si iti | tad yad asya tan nāma akarod Vāyus tad-rūpam abhavat | Vāyur vai Ugras tasmād yadā balavad vāty "Ugro vāti" ity āhuḥ | so 'bravīj "jyāyān vai asato 'smi dhehy eva me nāma" iti | 14. Tam abravīd "Aśanir asi" iti | tad yad asya tan nāma akarot vidyut tad-rūpam abhavat | vidyud vai Aśanis tasmād yaṁ vidyud hanty "Aśanir abadhīd" ity āhuḥ | so 'bravīj "jyāyān vai asato 'smi dhehy eva me nāma" iti | 15. Tam abravīd "Bhavo 'si" iti | tad yad asya tan nāma akarot Parjanyas tad-rūpam abhavat | Parjanyo vai Bhavaḥ | Parjanyād hi idaṁ sarvam bhavati | so 'bravīd "jyāyān vai asato 'smi dhehy eva me nāma" iti | 16. Tam abravīd "Mahān devo 'si" iti | tad yad asya tan nāma akaroch chandramās tad-rūpam abhavat | Prajāpatir vai chandramāḥ Prajāpatir vai mahān devaḥ | so 'bravīj "jyāyān vai asato 'smi dhehy eva me nāma" iti | 17. Tam abravīd "Īśāno 'si" iti | tad yad asya tan nāma akarod Ādityas tad-rūpam abhavat | Ādityo vai Īśānaḥ Ādityo hy asya sarvasya īshṭe | so 'bravīd "etāvān vai asmi mā mā itaḥ paro nāma dhāḥ" iti | 18. Tāny etāny ashṭāv Agni-rūpāṇi Kumāro navamaḥ | sā eva Agnes trivṛittā | 19. Yad vai iva ashṭāv Agni-rūpāṇy aṣṭākṣharā gāyatrī tasmād āhur "gāyatro 'gnir" iti | so 'yaṁ kumāro rūpāṇy anuprāvišat | na vai Agniṁ kumāram iva paśyanty etāny eva asya rūpāṇi paśyanty etāni hi rūpāṇi prāvišat |

"This foundation existed. It became the earth (bhūmi). He extended it (aprathayat). It became the broad one (pṛithivī). On this foundation beings, and the lord of beings, consecrated themselves for the year (samvatsara). The lord of beings was a householder, and Ushas was his wife. 8. Now these 'beings' were the seasons. That

'lord of beings' was the Year. That wife Ushas was Aushasī (the daughter of the dawn).[85] Then both those beings, and that lord of beings, the Year, impregnated Ushas, and a boy (Kumāra)[86] was born in a year. The boy wept. 9. Prajāpati said to him, 'Boy, why dost thou weep, since thou hast been born after toil and austerity?' The boy said, 'My evil indeed has not been taken away, and a name has not been given to me. Give me a name.' Wherefore when a son has been born [to any man], let a name be given to him; that takes away his evil; and [let] also a second and a third [name be given] in succession: that takes away his evil. 10. Prajāpati said to him, 'Thou art Rudra.' Inasmuch as he gave him that name, Agni became his form, for Rudra is Agni. He was Rudra because he wept (arodīt from rud, 'to weep').[87] The boy said, 'I am greater than one who does not exist: give me a name.' 11. Prajāpati replied, 'Thou art Sarva.'[88] Inasmuch as he gave him that name, the waters became his form, for Sarva (All) is the waters, because all this is produced from the waters (see above, p. 24 f.). The boy said, 'I am greater than one who does not exist: give me a name.' 12. Prajāpati replied, 'Thou art Paśupati.' Inasmuch as he gave him that name, the Plants became his form, for Paśupati is the Plants. Hence, when beasts obtain plants, they become lords (or strong). The boy said, [85] I am unable to explain how Ushas, the dawn, is identified with her own offspring, Aushasī; or how the 'lord of beings'=the Year, consecrated himself for the year.

[86] The name Kumāra, Weber remarks (Indische Studien, ii. 302, 395), is applied to Agni in Rig-veda, v. 2, 1.

[87] See the end of note 9, p. 303, above. A story like the one there given will be found in Taitt. Sanh. i. 5, 1, 1:—Devāsurāḥ saṁyattāḥ āsan | te devāḥ vijayam upayanto 'gnau vāmaṁ vasu sannyadadhata "idam u no bhavishyati yadi no jeshyanti" iti | tad Agnir nyakāmayata | tena apākrāmat | tad devāḥ vijitya avarurutsamānāḥ anvāyan | tad asya sahasā ādītsanta | so 'rodīt | yad arodīt tad Rudrasya Rudratvam | "The gods and Asuras engaged in battle. The gods, conquering, deposited valuable property with Agni, saying, 'If they should ever conquer us, we shall have this.' Agni desired the property; and went off with it. The gods, after being victorious, went after him to recover their goods, which they sought to take from him by force. He wept. From his weeping Rudra gets his character of Rudra."

[88] The origin of this name may perhaps be found in Rig-veda, x. 61, 19, where these words occur: Iyam me nābhir iha me sadhastham ime me devāḥ ayam asmi Sarvaḥ | dvijāḥ aha prathama-jāḥ ṛitasya idaṁ dhenur aduhaj jāyamānā | "This is my centre, here is my abode, these are my gods, this is I, Sarva (All). The twice-born men are the firstborn of the sacred rite. This the cow milked out, when she was being born."

'I am greater than one who does not exist: give me a name. 13. Prajāpati said to him, 'Thou art Ugra.' Inasmuch as he gave him that name, Vāyu (the Wind) became his form. For Ugra (or the 'Fierce') is Vāyu. Wherefore when it blows strongly, men say, 'Ugra blows.' The boy said, 'I am greater than one who does not exist: give me a name.' 14. Prajāpati said to him, 'Thou art Aśani.' Inasmuch as he gave him that name, Vidyut (Lightning) became his form. For Aśani is Lightning. Hence they say that Aśani has struck a man whom lightning strikes. The boy said, 'I am greater than one who does not exist: give me a name.' 15. Prajāpati said to him, 'Thou art Bhava.' Inasmuch as he gave him that name, Parjanya (the god of rain) became his form. For Bhava (Being) is Parjanya; because all this [universe] springs (bhavati) from Parjanya. The boy said, 'I am greater than one who does not exist: give me a name.' 16. Prajāpati replied, 'Thou art Mahāndevaḥ (the 'Great god').' Inasmuch as he gave him that name, Chandramas (the Moon) became his form. For the Moon is Prajāpati: the 'Great god' is Prajāpati. The boy said, 'I am greater than one who does not exist: give me a name.' 17. Prajāpati replied, 'Thou art Īśāna (the ruler).' Inasmuch as he gave him that name, Āditya (the Sun) became his form. For Īśāna is the Sun, because he rules (īshṭe) over this universe. The boy said, 'I am so much: do not give me any further name.' 18. These are the eight forms of Agni. Kumāra (the boy, see above, para. 8 in the preceding page) is the ninth. This is the threefoldness (trivṛittā) of Agni. 19. Since there are, as it were, eight forms of Agni, [and] the gāyatrī metre has eight syllables, men say, 'Agni pertains to the gāyatrī.'[89] This boy (Kumāra) entered into the forms. Men do not see Agni as a boy; it is these forms of his that they see; for he entered into these forms."

This passage appears to be the original from which the story of the birth of Rudra in the Purāṇas is borrowed. That legend, as given in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (in nearly the same words as in the Vishṇu Purāṇa), is as follows:

[89] The same words occur in the Taitt. S. ii. 2, 5, 5; and the Taitt. Br. i. 1, 5, 3. The Commentator on the latter passage says: Agner mukha-jatvena gāyatrī-sambandhitvam | "Agni's connexion with the Gāyatrī arises from his having sprung from the mouth."

Mārk. Pur. Sect. 52, 2 ff.—Kalpādāv ātmanas tulyaṁ sutam pradhyāyataḥ prabhoḥ | 3. Prādur-āsīd athānke 'sya kumāro nīla-lohitaḥ | ruroda susvaraṁ so 'tha dravaṁś cha dvija-sattama | kiṁ rodishīti tam Brahmā rudantam pratyuvācha ha | nāma dehīti taṁ so 'tha pratyuvācha jagat-patiṁ | Rudras tvaṁ deva nāmnā 'si mā rodīr dhairyam āvaha | evam uktas tataḥ so 'tha sapta-kṛitvo ruroda ha | tato 'nyāni dadau tasmai sapta nāmāni vai prabhuḥ | sthānāni chaishām ashṭānām patnīḥ putrāṁś cha vai dvija | Bhavaṁ Sarvaṁ tatheśānaṁ tathā Paśupatim prabhuḥ | Bhīmam Ugram Mahādevam uvācha sa Pitāmahaḥ |

"When, at the beginning of the kalpa, the lord (i.e. Brahmā) was meditating on a son similar to himself, there was manifested in his lap a boy of a blue and red colour, (3) who then wept loudly, running about. Brahmā said to him when he was weeping, 'Why dost thou weep?' He answered the lord of the world, 'Give me a name.' [Brahmā rejoined], 'Thou, O deity, art called Rudra; do not weep; be patient.' Being thus addressed, [the boy] wept again seven times. Then the lord gave him seven other names, and the places of these eight, and wives and sons. The Progenitor (Brahmā) called him [besides Rudra] Bhava, Sarva, Īśāna, Paśupati, Bhīma, Ugra, Mahādeva."

These names (except Bhīma, which is substituted for Aśani) are the same as those in the Brāhmaṇa. The same legend is given in a somewhat different form in the S'ānkhāyana or Kaushītakī Brāhmaṇa, and an abstract of that passage is furnished by Prof. Weber in his Indische Studien ii. 300 ff. For the text of the passage I am indebted to Prof. Aufrecht, who copied it from the MS. of the S'ānkhāyana in the Bodleian Library at Oxford.

S'ānkhāyana Brāhmaṇa, vi. i. etc.—Prajāpatiḥ prajāti-kāmas tapo 'tapyata | tasmāt taptāt pancha ajāyanta Agnir Vāyur Ādityaś Chandramāḥ Ushāḥ panchamī | tān abravīd "yūyam api tapyadhvam" | te 'dīkshanta | tān dīkshitāṁs tepānān Ushāḥ prājāpatyā 'psaro-rūpaṁ kṛitvā purastāt pratyudait | tasyām eshām manaḥ samapatat | te reto 'sincharta | Te prajāpatim pitaram etya abruvan "reto vai asichāmahai idam nu mā amuyā bhūd" iti | sa prajāpatir hiraṇmayaṁ chamasam akarod iṣhu-mātram ūrdhvam evam tiryancham | tasmin retaḥ samasinchat | tataḥ udatishṭhat sahasrākshaḥ sahasrapāt sahasreṇa pratihitābhiḥ | 2. Sa prajāpatim pitaram abhyāyachhat | tam abravīt "kathā mā 'bhyā- yachhasi" iti | "nāma me kurv" ity abravīn "na vai idam avihitena nāmnā annam atsyāmi" iti | "sa vai tvam" ity abravīd "Bhavaḥ eva" iti yad Bhavaḥ āpas | tena na ha vai evam Bhavo hinasti na asya prajāṁ na asya paśūn na asya bruvāṇaṁ chana | atha yaḥ enaṁ dveshṭi sa eva pāpīyān bhavati | na sa yaḥ evaṁ veda | tasya vrataṁ ā īm eva vāsaḥ paridadhīta iti | 3. Taṁ dvitīyam abhyāyachhat tam abravīt | "kathā mā abhyāyachhasi" iti | "dvitīyam me nāma kurv" ity abravīn "na vai idam ekena nāmnā annam atsyāmi" iti | "sa vai tvam" iti abravīch "Chharvaḥ eva" iti yach Chharvo 'gniḥ | tena na ha vai enaṁ Sarvo hinasti na asya prajāṁ na asya paśūn na asya bruvāṇaṁ chana | atha yaḥ enaṁ dveshṭi sa eva pāpīyān bhavati | na sa yaḥ evaṁ veda | tasya vrataṁ sarvam eva na aśnīyād iti | 4. Taṁ tṛitīyam abhyāyachhat | tam abravīt "kathā mā abhyāyachhasi" iti | "tṛitīyam me nāma kurv" ity abravīn "na vai idaṁ dvābhyāṁ nāmabhyām annam atsyāmi" iti | "sa vai tvam" ity abravīt "Paśupatir eva" iti yat Paśupatir Vāyuḥ | tena na ha vai enam Paśupatir hinasti na asya prajāṁ na asya paśūn na asya bruvāṇaṁ chana | atha yaḥ enaṁ dveshṭi sa eva pāpīyān bhavati | na sa yaḥ evaṁ veda | tasya vratam brāhmaṇam eva na parivaded iti | 5. Taṁ chaturtham abhyāyachhat | tam abravīt "kathā mā 'bhyāyachhasi" iti | "chaturtham me nāma kurv" ity abravīt | "na vai idaṁ tribhir nāmabhir annam atsyāmi" iti | "sa vai tvam" ity abravīd "Ugraḥ eva devaḥ" iti yad Ugro devaḥ oshadhayo vanaspatayaḥ | tena na ha vai enam Ugro devo hinasti na asya prajāṁ na asya paśūn na asya bruvāṇaṁ chana | atha yaḥ enaṁ dveshṭi sa eva pāpīyān bhavati | na sa yaḥ evaṁ veda | tasya vrataṁ striyāḥ eva vivaraṁ na īksheta iti | 6. Tam panchamam abhyāyachhat | tam abravīt "kathā mā 'bhyāyachhasi" iti | panchamam me nāma kurv" ity abravīt | "na vai idaṁ chaturbhir nāmabhir annam atsyāmi" iti | "sa vai tvam" ity abravīn "Mahān eva devaḥ" iti | yan Mahān devaḥ Ādityaḥ | Tena na ha vai enam Mahān devo hinasti na asya prajāṁ na asya paśūn na asya bruvāṇaṁ chana | atha yaḥ enaṁ dveshṭi sa eva pāpīyān bhavati | na sa yaḥ evaṁ veda | tasya vratam udyantam eva enaṁ na īksheta astaṁ yantaṁ cha iti | 7. Taṁ shashṭham abhyāyachhat tam abravīt "kathā mā abhyāyachhasi" iti | "shashṭham me nāma kurv" ity abravīt | "na vai idam panchabhir nāmabhir annam atsyāmi" iti | "sa vai tvam" ity abravīd "Rudraḥ eva" iti yad Rudraś Chandramāḥ | Tena na ha vai enaṁ Rudro hinasti na asya prajāṁ na asya paśūn na asya bruvāṇaṁ chana | atha yaḥ enaṁ dveshṭi sa eva pāpīyān bhavati | na sa yaḥ evaṁ veda | tasya vrataṁ vimūrtam eva nāśnīyān majjānaṁ cha iti | 8. Taṁ saptamam abhyāyachhat | tam abravīt "kathā mā 'bhyāyachhasi" iti | "saptamam me nāma kurv" ity abravīt | "na vai idaṁ shaḍbhir nāmabhir annam atsyāmi" iṭi | "sa vai tvam" ity abravīd "Īśānaḥ eva" iti yad Īśano 'nnaṁ | tena na ha vai enam Īśāno hinasti na asya prajāṁ na asya paśūn na asya bruvānaṁ chana | atha yaḥ enaṁ dveshṭi sa eva pāpīyān bhavati | na sa yaḥ evaṁ veda | tasya vratam annam eva ichhamānaṁ na pratyāchakshīta iti | 9. Tam ashṭamam abhyāyachhat | tam abravīt "kathā mā 'bhyāyachhasi" iti | "ashṭamam me nāma kurv" ity abravīn "na vai idaṁ saptabhir nāmabhir annam atsyāmi" iti | "sa vai tvam" ity abravīd "Aśanir eva" iti yad Aśanir Indraḥ | tena na ha vai enam Aśanir hinasti na asya prajāṁ na asya paśūn na asya bruvāṇaṁ chana | atha yaḥ enaṁ dveshṭi sa eva pāpīyān bhavati | na sa yaḥ evaṁ veda | tasya vrataṁ satyam eva vaded hiraṇyaṁ cha bibhṛiyād iti | sa esho 'shṭanāmā 'shṭadhā vihito Mahān devaḥ | ā ha vai asya ashṭamāt purushāt prajā 'nnam atti vasīyān vasīyān ha eva asya prajāyām ājāyate yaḥ evaṁ veda |

"Prajāpati, being desirous of progeny, performed austerity. From him when he had [thus] performed austerity five [children] were born, Agni, Vāyu, Āditya, Chandramas (Moon), and Ushas (dawn) the fifth. He said to them, 'Do you also perform austerity.' They consecrated themselves. Before them, when they had consecrated themselves, and had performed austerity, Ushas, the daughter of Prajāpati, assuming the form of an Apsaras (a celestial nymph) rose up. Their attention was riveted upon her, and they discharged seed. They then came to Prajāpati their father, and said to him, 'We have discharged seed; let it not lie there in vain.' Prajāpati made a golden platter, of the depth of an arrow, and of equal breadth. In this he collected the seed, and from it there arose a being with a thousand eyes, a thousand feet, and a thousand arrows on the string. 2. He came to his father Prajāpati, who asked him, 'Why dost thou come to me?' He answered, 'Give me a name. I shall not eat this food, so long as no name has been given to me.' 'Thou art Bhava,' said Prajāpati; for Bhava is the Waters. Therefore Bhava does not slay this man, nor his offspring, nor his cattle, nor any [creature of his] who speaks. And further, whoever hates him is most wicked. Such is not the case with him who knows this. His rule is, let a man wear a garment. 3. He (this newly-produced being) came a second time to Prajāpati, who asked him, 'Why dost thou come to me?' 'Give me,' he replied, 'a second name: I shall not eat this food with only one name.' 'Thou art Śarva,' Prajāpati answered; for Śarva is Agni. Wherefore Śārva does not slay him, nor his offspring, nor his cattle, nor any [creature of his] who speaks. Further, whoever hates him is most wicked. Such is not the case with him who knows this His rule is, let not a man eat every sort of food. 4. He came the third time to Prajāpati, who said to him, 'Why dost thou come to me?' 'Give me a third name,' he replied; 'I shall not eat this food with only two names.' 'Thou art Paśupati,' Prajāpati answered; for Paśupati is Vāyu (the Wind). Wherefore Paśupati does not slay him, etc., etc. His rule is, let no one slander a Brāhman. 5. He came the fourth time to Prajāpati, who said to him, 'Why dost thou come to me?' 'Give me a fourth name,' he replied; 'I shall not eat this food with only three names.' 'Thou art Ugradeva (the fierce god),' Prajāpati answered; for Ugradeva is plants and trees. Wherefore Ugradeva does not slay him, etc., etc. His rule is, let not a man look upon the shame of a woman. 6. He came the fifth time to Prajāpati, who said to him, 'Why dost thou come to me?' 'Give me a fifth name,' he replied; 'I shall not eat this food with only four names.' 'Thou art Mahāndeva (the great god),' Prajāpati answered; for Mahāndeva is Āditya (the Sun). Wherefore Mahāndeva does not slay him, etc., etc. His rule is, let no man look upon him (the Sun) rising or setting. 7. He came the sixth time to Prajāpati, who said to him, 'Why dost thou come to me?' 'Give me a sixth name,' he replied; 'I shall not eat this food with only five names.' 'Thou art Rudra,' Prajāpati answered; for Rudra is Chandramas (the Moon). Therefore Rudra does not slay him, etc., etc. His rule is, let no man eat anything coagulated [or solid],[90] or any marrow. 8. He came the seventh time to Prajāpati, who said to him, 'Why dost thou come to me?' 'Give me a seventh name,' he replied; 'I shall not eat this food with only six names.' 'Thou art Īśāna,' Prajāpati answered; for Īśāna is food. Wherefore Īśāna does not slay him, etc., etc. His rule is, let no one reject him who desires food. 9. He came the eighth time to Prajā-pati, who said to him, 'Why dost thou come to me?' 'Give me an eighth name,' he replied; 'I shall not eat this food with only seven names.' 'Thou art Aśani,' Prajāpati answered; for Aśani is Indra. Wherefore Aśani does not slay him, etc., etc. His rule is, let a man speak truth, and keep gold. This is the Mahāndeva (great god), who has eight names, and who is formed in eight ways. The progeny to the eighth generation of the man who possesses this knowledge, eats food, and ever wealthier and wealthier men will be born among his descendants."

[90] This is the sense assigned by Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. mūrchh+vi.

The following is the account given in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa of the object and name of the Śatarudriya:

Śatapatha Brāhmāṇa, ix. 1, 1, 1.[91]—Atha ataḥ śatarudriyaṁ juhoti | atra esha sarvo 'gniḥ saṁskṛitaḥ | sa esho 'tra Rudro devatā | tasmin devāḥ etad amṛitaṁ rūpam uttamam adadhuḥ | sa esho 'tra dīpyamāno 'tishṭhad annam ichchhamānaḥ | tasmād devāḥ abibhayur "yad vai no 'yam na hiṁsyād" iti | 2. Te 'bruvann "annam asmai sambharāma tena enaṁ śamayāma" iti | tasmai etad annaṁ samabharan śānta-devatyam[92] | tena enam aśamayan | tad yad etaṁ devam etena aśamayaṁs tasmāch chhānta-devatyam | "śānta-devatyaṁ ha vai tach chhatarudriyam" ity āchakshate paroksham | paroksha-kāmāḥ hi devāḥ |

"He now offers an oblation with the Śatarudriya. Here this universal fire has been prepared; and here this Rudra is the deity. In him the gods placed this most excellent immortal form. Here he rose up flaming, desiring food. The gods were afraid of him, 'lest' (they thought) 'he should destroy us.' 2. They said, 'Let us collect food for him, and with it appease him.' They collected for him this food with which a deity is appeased, and with it they appeased him. Inasmuch as they appeased this god with this, it is therefore called 'Śāntadevatya' ('that with which a god is appeased'). They call this 'Śāntadevatya' esoterically 'Śata-rudriya'; for the gods love what is esoteric."

[91] Compare Taitt. Br. i. 6, 1, 2. In the same work, i. 7, 1, 2, we read that the gods and Asuras were fighting, when the former said to Agni, "We shall conquer with thee as our champion." He said, "I shall transform myself into three parts." He did so, Agni being one part, Rudra a second, and Varuṇa a third, etc (te devāḥ Agnim abruvan "tvayā vīreṇa Asurān abhibhavāma" iti | so 'bravīt "tredhā ātmānaṁ vikarishye" iti | sa tredhā ātmānam vyakuruta Agniṁ tṛitīyaṁ Rudraṁ tṛitīyaṁ Varuṇaṁ tṛitīyam ityādi).

[92] Śānta-devatyam śānta-devatārthaṁ devatā-śānty-artham | Comm.

On this the commentator remarks: Vihito 'yaṁ homo Rudra-rūpatāpannasya Agner upaśamanārtham | "This oblation is offered in order to appease Agni who has taken the form of Rudra."[93]

The same work gives, a little further on, another account of the origin of Rudra, and a different etymology for the S'atarudriya:

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ix. 1, 1, 6 ff.—Prajāpater visrastād devatāḥ udakrāmaṁs tam ekaḥ eva devo na ajahād Manyur eta | so 'sminn antar vitato 'tishṭhat | so 'rodīt | tasya yāny aśrūṇi prāskandaṁs tāny asmin Manyau pratyatishṭhan | sa eva śata-śīrshāḥ Rudraḥ samabhavat sahasrākshaḥ śateshudhiḥ | atha yāḥ anyāḥ viprusho 'pataṁs tā asankhyātā sahasrāṇi[94] imān lokān anuprāvišan | tad yad ruditāt samabhavaṁs tasmād Rudrāḥ | so 'yaṁ śataśīrshāḥ Rudraḥ sahasrākshaḥ śateshudhir[95] adhijya-dhanvā pratihitāyī bhīshayamāṇo 'tishṭhad annam ichhamānaḥ | tasmād devāḥ abibhayuḥ | 7. Te Prajāpatim abruvan | "asmād vai bibhīmo yad vai no 'yaṁ na hiṁsyād" iti | so 'bravīd "annam asmai sambharata tena enaṁ śamayata" iti | tasmai etad annaṁ samabharan śatarudriyaṁ tena enam aśamayan | tad yad etaṁ śataśīrshāṇaṁ Rudram etena aśamayaṁs tasmāch chhataśīrsha-rudra-śamanīyam | śataśīrsha-rudra-śamanīyaṁ ha vai tat śatarudriyam ity ācakshate parokṣham | parokṣha-kāmāḥ hi devāḥ ityādi | . . . 14. "Namas te Rudra manyave" iti | yaḥ eva asmin so 'ntar Manyur vitato 'tishṭhat tasmai etan namaskaroty uto "te ishave namo bāhubhyām uta te namaḥ" iti ishvā cha hi bāhubhyāṁ cha bhīshayamāṇo 'tishṭhat |

6. "From Prajāpati, when he had become enfeebled, the deities

[93] In the Taitt. S. v. 4, 3, 1, it is said: Rudro vai esha yad Agniḥ | sa etarhi jāto yarhi sarvaś chitaḥ sa yathā vatso jātaḥ stanam prepsaty evaṁ vai esha etarhi bhāgadheyam prepsati | tasmai yad āhutiṁ na juhuyād adhvaryuṁ cha yajamānaṁ cha dhyāyet | S'atarudriyaṁ juhoti | bhāgadheyena eva enaṁ śamayati | na ārtim ā archaty adhvaryur na yajamānaḥ | "This Agni is Rudra (or terrible). When now he is born, and all kindled, as a calf when born desires the udder, so he now desires his share. If an oblation were not presented to him, he would turn his thoughts (with the view of devouring) towards both the adhvaryu priest and the sacrificer. The S'atarudriya is celebrated; and the priest quiets him with a share. So both adhvaryu and sacrificer avoid injury." The same work, v. 5, 7, 4, says similarly: Rudro vai esha yad Agniḥ | sa yathā vyāghraḥ kruddhas tishṭhaty evaṁ vai esha etarhi | sanchitam etair upatishṭhate namaskārair eva enaṁ śamayati | "This Agni is Rudra (or terrible). As a tiger stands raging, so does he now. The priest approaches with these [oblations] [the fire] that has been prepared [and kindled]; and quiets him with prostrations.

[94] Compare Nir. i. 15, and Vāj. Sanh. 16, 54, above, 325.

[95] Compare Vāj. Sanh. xvi. 13, above, p. 323.

departed. Only one god, Manyu, did not leave him, but continued extended within him. He (Prajāpati) wept. The tears which fell from him remained in that Manyu. He became Rudra with a hundred heads, a hundred eyes, and a hundred quivers. Then the other drops which fell from him in unnumbered thousands entered into these worlds. They were called Rudras because they sprang from him when he had wept. This Rudra with a thousand heads, eyes, and quivers, stood with his bow strung, and arrows on the string, causing terror, and demanding food. The gods were afraid of him. 7. They said to Prajāpati, 'We are afraid of this being, lest he destroy us.' Prajāpati said to them, 'Collect for him food, and with it appease him.' They collected for him this food, the śatarudriya, and with it they appeased him. From the fact that with this they appeased the hundred-headed Rudra, it is 'that wherewith the hundred-headed Rudra is to be appeased' (Śata-śīrsha-rudra-śamanīyam). This they esoterically call Śatarudriya; for the gods love what is esoteric." . . . 14. "'Reverence, Rudra, to thy wrath' (see above, p. 326, verse 1). (In these words) he (the priest) expresses reverence to Manyu, who stood extended within him (Rudra). 'Reverence also to thy arrow and thine arms.' He (the god) stood causing terror with his arrow and arms."

The word Mahādeva occurs in the Tāṇḍya Mahābrāhmaṇa, vi. 9, 7, Yāṁ samām Mahādevaḥ paśūn hanyād ityādi | "In whatever year Mahādeva slays cattle." The same work, vii. 9, 16 ff., makes mention of Rudra in connexion with cattle or victims: Devāḥ vai paśūn vyabhajanta | te Rudram antarāyan | "The gods were dividing the victims. They passed over Rudra."

In the descriptions of Mahādeva which are found in the passages quoted in the last chapter from the Mahābhārata, though that deity is occasionally identified with Agni, as he is with other gods (see above, p. 204), he is generally represented in a different aspect, and with different characteristics. In the legend of the birth of Skanda or Kārttikeya,[96] however, which is narrated in the Vana-parvan of that poem, we find some trace of the early connexion of Rudra with Agni. We are there told that, after Skanda had been installed in his office of general of the gods (v. 14424), Mahādeva and Pārvatī arrived:

[96] Lassen (Ind. Ant. i. 588, note, 1st ed. = p. 701, 2nd ed.) observes that this legend differs from the one on the same subject in the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 38, and regards the former as a later interpolation in the Mahābhārata.

14427 ff.—Āgamya manuja-vyāghra saha devyā parantapa | archayāmāsa suprīto bhagavān govrishe-dhvajaḥ | Rudram Agniṁ dvijāḥ prāhuḥ Rudra-sūnus tatas tu saḥ | Rudreṇa śukram utsṛishṭaṁ tat śvetaḥ parvato 'bhavat | Pāvakasyendriyaṁ śvete kṛittikābhiḥ kṛitaṁ nage | pūjyamānaṁ tu Rudreṇa dṛishṭvā sarve divaukasaḥ | Rudra-sūnuṁ tataḥ prāhur Guhaṁ guṇavatāṁ varam | anupraviśya Rudreṇa vahniṁ jāto hy ayaṁ śiśuḥ | tatra jātas tataḥ Skando Rudra-sūnus tato 'bhavat | Rudrasya Vahneḥ Svāhāyāḥ shaṇṇāṁ strīṇāṁ cha Bhārata | jātaḥ Skandaḥ sura-śreshṭho Rudra-sūnus tato 'bhavat |

"The god whose banner is a bull, arriving with his goddess, paid him honour, well pleased. Brāhmans call Agni Rudra; consequently he (Kārttikeya) is the son of Rudra. The seed which was discharged by Rudra became the white mountain. And the seed of Pāvaka (Agni) was formed by the Kṛittikās on the white mountain. Having seen Guha (Kārttikeya) thus honoured by Rudra, all the deities consequently call him, who is the most excellent of the gifted, the son of Rudra. For this child was produced by Rudra when he had entered into Fire. Being there born, Skanda was the son of Rudra. Skanda, that most eminent deity, being born from Agni, [who was] Rudra, and from Svāhā [and] the six wives [of the Rishis], was the son of Rudra."

The allusions in this passage will become more intelligible if I give an outline of the preceding part of the allegorical story, which commences with v. 14241. Indra being distressed at the defeat of the armies of the gods (deva-senā) by the Dānavas (v. 14245 ff.) is meditating on this subject, when he hears the cry of a female calling for help, and asking for a husband to protect her. Indra sees that she has been seized by the demon Keśin, with whom he remonstrates; but the demon hurls his club at Indra, who, however, splits it with his thunderbolt. Keśin is disabled in the next stage of their combat, and goes off. Indra then finds out from the female that her name is Devasenā (army of the gods), and that she has a sister called Daityasenā (army of the Daityas), and that they are both daughters of Prajāpati. Her sister, she says, loves Keśin, but she herself does not, and wishes Indra to find for her a proper husband, who shall be able to overcome all the enemies of the gods. Indra takes Devasenā with him to Brahmā and desires him to provide her with a martial husband; and Brahmā promises that a helpmate of that description shall be born (14279 f.).

Indra then departs with Devasenā. It happened that Vaśishṭha and other rishis had been offering a sacrifice, whither the gods headed by Indra proceeded to drink the soma-juice. Agni too, being invoked, descended from the region of the sun, entered into the fire, received the oblations of the rishis, and presented them to the gods. The story then proceeds (v. 14287):

Nishkrāmaṁś cāpy apaśyat sa patnīs teshām mahātmanām | sveshv āśrameshūpavishṭāḥ svapaṇṭīś cha tathā sukham | rukma-vedi-nibhās[97] tās tu chandra-lekhāḥ ivāmalāḥ | hutāsanārchiḥ-pratimāḥ sarvās tārāḥ ivādbhutāḥ | sa tatra tena manasā babhūva kshubhitendriyaḥ | patnīr dṛishṭvā dvijendrāṇāṁ Vahniḥ kāma-vaśaṁ yayau | bhūyaḥ sa chintayāmāsa na nyāyyaṁ kshubhito hy aham | sādhvyaḥ patnyo dvijendrāṇām akāmāḥ kāmayāmy aham | naitāḥ śakyāḥ mayā drashṭum prashṭuṁ vā 'py animittataḥ | gārhapatyaṁ samāviśya tasmāt paśyāmy abhīkshṇaśaḥ | saṁspṛiśann iva sarvās tāḥ śikhābhiḥ kāñchana-prabhāḥ | paśyamānaś cha mumude gārhapatyaṁ samāśritaḥ | nirushya tatra suchiram evaṁ Vahnir vaśaṁ gataḥ | manas tāsu viniḥkshipya kāmayāno varāṅganāḥ | kāma-santapta-hṛidayo deha-tyāga-viniśchitaḥ | alābhe brāhmaṇa-strīnām Agnir vanam upāgamat | Svāhā tam Daksha-duhitā prathamaṁ kāmayat tadā | sā tasya chhidram anvaichhach chirāt-prabhṛiti bhāvinī | apramattasya devasya na cha paśyaty aninditā | sā taṁ jñātvā yathāvat tu Vahniṁ vanam upāgatam | tattvataḥ kāma-santaptaṁ chintayāmāsa bhāvinī | ahaṁ saptarshi-patnīnāṁ kṛitvā rūpāṇi Pāvakam | kāmayishyāmi kāmārtā tāsāṁ rūpeṇa mohitam | evaṁ kṛite prītir asya kāmāvāptiś cha me bhavet | Śivā bhāryā tv Angirasaḥ śīla-rūpa-guṇānvitā | tasyāḥ sā prathamaṁ rūpaṁ kṛitvā devī jaḍādhipa | jagāma Pāvakābhyāsaṁ taṁ chovācha varāṅganā | māṁ Agne kāma-santaptāṁ tvaṁ kāmayitum arhasi | karishyasi na ched evam mṛitām mām upadhāraya | aham Angiraso bhāryā Śivā nāmā Hutāśana | śishṭābhiḥ prahitā prāptā mantrayitvā viniśchayam | Agnir uvācha | katham māṁ tvaṁ vijānīshe kāmārtam itarāḥ katham | yās tvayā kīrtitāḥ sarvāḥ saptarshīṇām priyāḥ striyaḥ | Śivā uvācha | asmākāṁ tvam priyo nityam bibhīmas tu vayaṁ tava | tvachchittam ingitair jñātvā preshṭā 'smi tavāntikam | maithunāyeha samprāptā kāmam prāptuṁ drutaṁ chara | yāmayo mām

[97] In Rāmāyaṇa iii. 32, 5, Rāvaṇa is described as Rukma-vedi-gatam, which the Commentator explains as rukma-vedim prāptam hiraṇyeshṭaka-chitāṁ vedim prāptam | "mounted on a platform of golden bricks."

pratîkshante gamishyâmi Hutâśana | Mârkaṇḍeyaḥ uvâcha | tato 'gnir upayeme tâṁ S'ivâm prîtâm mudâ yutaḥ | prîtyâ devî samâyuktâ śukraṁ jagrâha pâṇinâ | achintayad mamedaṁ 'ye rûpâṁ drakshyanti jânane | te brâhmaṇînâm anṛitaṁ doshaṁ vakshyanti Pâvake | tasmâd etad rakshamânâ Garuḍî sambhavâmy aham | vanâd ṇirgamanaṁ chaiva sukham mama bhavishyati | Suparṇî sâ tadâ bhûtvâ nirjagâma mahâvanât | apaśyat parvataṁ śvetaṁ śara-stambaiḥ susaṁvṛitam | dṛishṭîvishaiḥ sapta-śîrshair guptam bhogibhir adbhutaiḥ | rakshobhiś cha piśâchaiś cha raudrair bhûtaganais tathâ | râkshasîbhiś cha sampûrṇam anekaiścha mṛiga-dvijaiḥ | sâ tatra sahasâ gatvâ śaila-pṛishṭhaṁ sudurgamam | prâkshipat kânchane kuṇḍe śukraṁ sâ tvaritâ śubhâ | saptânâm api sâ devî saptarshînâm mahâtmanâm | patnî-sarûpatâṁ kṛitvâ kâmayâmâsa Pâvakam | divya-rûpam Arundhatyâḥ kartuṁ na śakitaṁ tayâ | tasyâs tapaḥ-prabhâveṇa bhartuḥ śuśrûshaṇena cha | shaṭkṛitvas tat tu niḳkshiptam Agneḥ retaḥ Kurûttama | tasmin kuṇḍe pratipadi kâminyâ Svâhayâ tadâ | tat skannaṁ tejasâ tatra saṁvṛitaṁ janayat sutam | ṛishibhiḥ pûjitaṁ skannam anayat Skandatâṁ tataḥ | shaṭ-śîrâḥ dviguṇa-śrotro dvâdaśâkshi-bhuja-kramaḥ | eka-grîvaika-jaṭharaḥ kumâraḥ samapadyata | . . . . . .

v. 14514: Yadâ Skandena mâtṛînâm evam etat priyaṁ kṛitam | tathainam abravît Svâhâ "mama putras tvam aurasaḥ | ichhâmy ahaṁ tvayâ dattâm prîtim parama-durlabhâm" | tâm abrâvit tataḥ Skandaḥ prîtim ichhasi kîdriśîm | Svâhâ uvâcha | Dakshasyâham priyâ kanyâ Svâhâ nâma mahâbhuja | bâlyât prabhṛiti nityancha jâta-kâmâ Hutâśane | na sa mâm kâminîm putra samyag jânâti Pâvakaḥ | ichhâmi śâśvataṁ vâsaṁ vastum putra sahâgninâ | Skandaḥ uvâcha | Havyaṁ kavyancha yat kinchid dvijânâm mantra-saṁstutam | hoshyanty Agnau sadâ devi svâhety uktvâ samuddhṛitam | adya prabhṛiti dâsyanti suvṛittâḥ sat-pathe sthitâḥ | evam Agnis tvayâ sârdham sadâ vatsyati śobhane | Mârkaṇḍeyaḥ uvacha | evam uktâ tataḥ Svâhâ tushṭâ Skandena pûjitâ | Pâvakena samâyuktâ bhartrâ Skandam apûjayat | tato Brahmâ Mahâsenam Prajâpatir athâbravît | abhigachha Mahâdevam pitaraṁ tripurârdanam | Rudreṇâgniṁ samâviśya svâhâm âviśya chomayâ | hitârthaṁ sarva-lokânâṁ jâtas tvam aparâjitaḥ |

"Issuing forth, he beheld the wives of these great [rishis] reclining in their own hermitages, and sweetly sleeping, resembling golden altars, pure as beams of the moon, like to flames of fire, all wonderful as stars. Perceiving that, his senses became agitated. Beholding the wives of the Brahmans, Agni was overcome by desire. Again and again he reflected, 'It is not proper that I should be thus agitated: I am enamoured of the chaste spouses of the Brahmans, who are not in love with me. They cannot be looked upon or questioned by me without reason. Entering into the domestic fire, I shall gaze upon them close at hand.' Entering the domestic fire, touching, as it were, with his flames, all of them, who were bright as gold, and beholding them, he was delighted. Dwelling thus there for a long time, fixing his attention upon these beautiful women, and enamoured of them, Agni was overcome. His heart being distressed with desire, Agni, failing to obtain the Brahmans' wives, resolved to abandon his corporeal form, and went into the forest. Then Svāhā, the daughter of Daksha, first fell in love with him. This amorous and blameless goddess for a long time sought for his weak point, but as the god was watchful, she could not find any. But being perfectly aware that he had gone into the wood, and that he was really disturbed by desire, the amorous goddess thus reflected: 'I, who am distressed by love, will take the forms of the seven rishis' wives, and will court the affection of Agni, who is enchanted by their beauty. By doing so he will be pleased, and I shall obtain my desire.' Assuming first the form of Śivā, the wife of Angiras, who possessed a good disposition, beauty, and excellent qualities, the handsome goddess (Svāhā) went to Agni, and thus addressed him: 'Agni, thou oughtest to love me, who am disturbed with love for thee: if thou wilt not do so, look upon me as dead. Agni, I, Śivā, the wife of Angiras, have come, sent by virtuous women, and having considered my determination.' Agni replied: 'How dost thou, and how do all the other beloved wives of the seven rishis whom thou mentionest, know that I am distressed with love?' Śivā answered: 'Thou hast always been beloved by us, but we are afraid of thee. Knowing thy heart by external signs, I have been sent to thee. I have come to be embraced: come quickly and fulfil thy desire. The other females are awaiting me; I shall depart, Hutāśana (Agni).' Agni then with joy embraced the delighted Śivā. The goddess filled with delight took his seed in her hand. She reflected, 'All those who shall see this form of mine in the forest will falsely allege the transgression of Brahmans' wives with Agni. Wherefore preserving this, I shall become Garuḍī; and thus my egress from the wood will become easy. She then, becoming Suparṇī, issued from the great forest, and beheld the white mountain surrounded by palisades of arrows, guarded by wondrous seven-headed serpents, whose very glance was venomous, by Rākshasas, Piśāchas, and by hosts of Rudra's demons, filled with Rakshasīs, and numerous beasts and birds. The beautiful goddess, having then gone quickly to the summit of the mountain, which was difficult of access, hastily threw the seed into a golden reservoir. Thus this goddess, assuming in succession the resemblance of the wives of the seven great rishis, loved Agni. But she could not take the divine form of Arundhatī (the wife of Vaśishṭha), owing to the power of the latter's austerity, and her obedience to her husband. Six times was the seed of Agni thrown by the enamoured Svāhā into the reservoir on the pratipad (the first day of the lunar fortnight). Discharged there and collected, that seed by its energy generated a son. That [seed] which was discharged (skanna), being worshipped by the rishis, gave to this son his character of Skanda. Kumāra (Kārttikeya) was born with six heads, a double number of ears, twelve eyes, arms, and feet, one neck, and one belly." Kārttikeya marries Devasenā (vv. 14446 ff.). The six rishis' wives, his mothers, afterwards come to him, complaining that they had been abandoned by their husbands, and degraded from their former position, and asking him to secure their admission into paradise (svarga). The story then proceeds (v. 14514 ff.): "When Skanda had done what was gratifying to his mothers, Svāhā said him, 'Thou art my genuine son: I desire the love, difficult to obtain, which thou givest.' Skanda then asked her, 'What love dost thou desire?' Svāhā replied, 'I am the beloved daughter of Daksha, by name Svāhā. From my childhood I have been enamoured of Agni. But, my son, Agni does not thoroughly know me, who am enamoured of him. I wish to dwell perpetually with Agni.' Skanda rejoined: 'Whatever oblation of Brahmans is introduced by hymns, they shall always, goddess, lift and throw it into the fire, saying, "Svāhā." From this day forward, virtuous men, abiding in the right path, shall grant [thee this]. Thus, O beautiful goddess, Agni shall dwell with thee continually.' Being thus addressed by Skanda, Svāhā, gratified, worshipped by Skanda, and united with Agni as her husband, worshipped Skanda. Then Brahmā Prajāpati said to Mahāsena (Skanda), 'Go to thy father Mahādeva, the vexer of Tripura. Thou unconquered hast been produced for the good of all worlds by Rudra who had entered into Agni, and Umá who had entered into Svāhā.'"

Sect. V.—Passages relating to Rudra in the Upanishads.

To the preceding passages, descriptive of Rudra, from the Brāhmaṇas, I shall now subjoin a few of a different character from the Upanishads.

The first is from the Svetāśvatara Upanishad (Bibliotheca Indica, vol. vii., pp. 323 ff.):

Svetāśvaratara Upanishad, iii. 1 ff.—Yaḥ eko jālavān īśate īśanībhiḥ sarvān lokān īśate īśanībhiḥ | yaḥ eva ekaḥ udbhave sambhave cha ye etad vidur amṛitās te bhavanti | 2. Eko hi Rudro ṇa dvitīyāya tasthur[98] yaḥ imān lokān īśate īśanībhiḥ | pratyaṅ janāṁs tishṭhati sanchukopānta-kāle[99] saṁsṛijya viśvā bhuvanāni gopāḥ | 3. (R.V. x. 81, 3, above, p. 5.) Viśvataś-chakshur uta viśvato-mukho viśvato-bāhur uta viśvatas-pat | sam bāhubhyām dhamati sam patatrair dyāvābhūmīm (sic) janayan devaḥ ekaḥ | 4. Yo devānām prabhavaś chodbhavaś cha viśvādhipo Rudro maharshiḥ | Hiraṇyagarbhaṁ janayāmāsa pūrvaṁ[100] *sa no buddhyā śubhayā saṁyunaktu | 5 and 6=*Vāj. S. xvi. 2, 3 (see above, p. 322) . . . . iv. 21. *Ajātaḥ ity evaṁ kaśchid bhīruḥ pratipadyate | Rudra yat te dakshiṇaṁ mukham tena mām pāhi nityam | 22=*R.V. i. 114, 8, and Vāj. S. xvi. 16 with various readings (see above, pp. 303 and 323). "He who alone, the enchanter, rules by his powers, rules all worlds by his powers, he who in origination and in production is alone,—they who know this become immortal. 2. For Rudra who rules these worlds by his powers, is but one; [the wise] do not assert (?) a second. Having, a preserver, created all worlds, he abides in men severally; he displays his wrath (absorbs them?) at the time of the end. 3. This one god, who has on every side eyes, on every side a face, on every side arms, on every side feet, when producing the heaven and earth, fashions them with his arms and with his wings. 4. May Rudra, the lord of all, the great rishi, the cause of production and the source of the gods, who first generated Hiraṇyagarbha,—may he put us in possession of an excellent understanding. . . . . Ibid. iv. 21. Some fearful man concludes thus—'[Thou art] unborn.' Rudra, protect me with thy southern face."

[98] These words na dvitīyāya tasthuḥ appear to be established as the current reading of this passage; and a reading partly similar (with variations in other respects) will be found below in a corresponding verse which occurs in the Atharva-śiras. The commencement of the verse is, however, also found in the Nirukta, i. 15, where the reading is different and preferable, ekaḥ eva Rudro 'vatasthe na dvitīyaḥ; and Sāyaṇa, in his commentary on the Rig-veda (quoted in vol. iii. of this work, p. 60), gives the words thus, ekaḥ eva Rudro ṇa dvitīyo 'vatasthe. Durga, the commentator on the Nirukta, as cited by Roth (Illust. of Nir., p. 12, note 4), quotes the whole verse as follows (without saying from what work it is taken): Ekaḥ eva Rudro 'vatasthe na dvitīyo raṇe vighnan pṛitanāsu śatrūn | saṁsṛijya viśvā bhuvanāni goptā pratyaṅ janān sanchukośānta-kāle | "One only Rudra has existed and no second; slaying his enemies in the conflicts of the battle. Having created all worlds, a protector, he draws back all beings into himself at the time of the end."

[99] The proper reading is probably sanchukocha. See the last note; and Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. kuch+sam; where sanchukocha is given as the proper reading, instead of sanchukośa, which is found in Roth's Illust. of Nirukta, p. 12, note 4.

[100] These two words are varied below, 4, 12, thus: paśyata jāyamānam, i.e. "beheld Hiraṇyagarbha being born." The rest of the verse remains the same.

The next passage is from the commencement of the Atharva-śiras[101] Upanishad. The MSS. which I have consulted vary very much in their readings:

Devāḥ ha vai svargaṁ lokam agaman | te devāḥ Rudram apṛichchhan "ko bhavān" iti | so 'bravīd "aham ekaḥ prathamam āsaṁ vartāmi cha bhavishyāmi cha na anyaḥ kaśchid matto vyatiriktaḥ" iti | so 'ntarād antaram prāviśad diśaścha antaraṁ samprāviśat | "so 'ham nityānityo vyaktāvyakto 'ham Brahmābrahma aham prāñchaḥ pratyancho 'haṁ dakshiṇāñcha [dakshiṇāś cha?] udancho 'ham adhaścha ūrddhvancha diśaścha pratidiśaścha aham pumān apumān strī cha ahaṁ sāvitry ahaṁ gāyatry aham triṣṭub jagaty anushṭup cha akaṁ chhando 'ham gārhapatyo dakshiṇāgnir āhavanīyo 'haṁ satyo 'haṁ gaur ahaṁ Gaury ahaṁ jyeshṭho 'haṁ śreshṭho 'haṁ varishṭho 'ham āpo 'haṁ tejo 'ham ṛig-yajuḥ-sāmātharvāṅgiraso 'ham aksharam ahaṁ ksharam ahaṁ guhyo 'haṁ gopyo 'ham araṇyo 'ham pushkaram aham pavitram aham agrancha madhyancha vahiścha purastāj jyotir ity aham ekaḥ | sarvancha mām eva mām yo veda sa sarvān devān veda | gāṁ gobhir brāhmaṇān brāhmaṇyena havīṁshi havishā āyur āyushā satyaṁ satyena dharmaṁ dharmeṇa tarpayāmi svena tejasā" | tato devāḥ Rudraṁ na apaśyams te devāḥ Rudraṁ dhyāyanti tato devāḥ ūrdhvabāhavaḥ stuvanti yo vai Rudraḥ sa bhagavān yaś cha Brahmā tasmai vai namo namaḥ | yo vai Rudraḥ sa bhagavān yaścha Vishṇus tasmai vai namo namaḥ | yo vai Rudraḥ sa bhagavān yaścha Maheśvaras tasmai

[101] A work called Atharva-śiras is mentioned in the passage of the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 14, 2, quoted above, p. 165 f. See Weber's Indische Studien, i. 382 ff.; and ii. 53 ff.

vai namo namaḥ | yo vai Rudraḥ sa bhagavān yā cha Umā tasmai . . . . | yo vai Rudraḥ sa bhagavān yaścha Vināyakas tasmai . . . . | yo vai Rudraḥ . . . . yaścha Skandaḥ . . . . | yo vai Rudraḥ . . . . yaścha Indraḥ . . . . | yo vai Rudraḥ . . . . yaścha Agniḥ . . . . | yo vai Rudraḥ . . . . yā cha Bhūḥ . . . . | yo vai Rudraḥ . . . . yaścha Bhuvaḥ . . . . | om ādau madhye bhūr bhuvaḥ suvar ante śīrsham janadom[102] viśva-rūpo 'si | Brahma ekas tvaṁ dvitridhā ūrdhvam adhaś cha tvaṁ śāntiścha tvaṁ pushṭiścha tvaṁ tushṭiścha tvaṁ hutam ahutam viśvam aviśvaṁ dattam adattam kṛitam akṛitam param aparam parāyaṇancha iti | "apāma somam[103] amṛitāḥ abhūma aganma jyotir avidāma devān | kiṁ nūnam asmān kṛiṇavad arātiḥ kim u dhūrtir amṛita martyasya" | (R.V. viii. 48, 3) | sarva-jagaddhitam vai etad aksharam prājāpatyaṁ sūkshmaṁ saumyam purusham agrāhyam agrāhyeṇa Vāyuṁ vāyavyena somaṁ saumyena grasati svena tejasā | tasmai upasaṁhartre mahāgrāsāya vai namo namaḥ | hṛidisthāḥ devatāḥ sarvāḥ hṛidi prāṇe pratishṭhitāḥ | hṛidi tvam asi yo nityaṁ tisro mātrāḥ paras tu saḥ | tasya uttarataḥ śiro dakshiṇataḥ pādau yaḥ uttarataḥ sa oṁkāraḥ | yaḥ oṁkāraḥ sa praṇavo yaḥ praṇavaḥ sa sarva-vyāpī yaḥ sarva-vyāpī so 'nanto yo 'nantas tat tāraṁ[104] yat tāraṁ tat sūkshmaṁ yat sūkshmaṁ tat śuklaṁ yat śuklaṁ tad vaidyutaṁ yad vaidyutaṁ tat param Brahma iti sa ekaḥ | sa eko Rudraḥ sa Īśānaḥ sa bhagavān sa Maheśvaraḥ sa Mahādevaḥ | atha kasmād uchyate oṁkāraḥ | yasmād uchchāryamāṇaḥ eva sarvaṁ śarīram unnāmayati tasmād uchyate oṁkāraḥ . . . . atha kasmad uchyate ekaḥ | yaḥ sarvān lokān udgṛihṇāti[105] sṛijati visṛijati vāsayati tasmād uchyate ekaḥ | atha kasmād uchyate eko Rudraḥ | "eko Rudro na dvitīyāya tasthe (sthitavān | advitīyaḥ eva sthitavān | Comm.) turīyam imaṁ lokaṁ īśate īśanīyur (niyamana-śaktimān | Comm.) jananīyuḥ (viśvotpādaka-śaktimān | Comm.) | pratyaṁ janās tisṭhanti saṁyug

[102] The commentator explains this thus: S'īrshaṁ śiro mantraḥ svāhā ity evaṁrūpaḥ | janadom janada iti karmopalakshaṇārtham akshara-trayam | janam janim tadupalakshita-janimad vastu-jātam tad dadāti iti janadaḥ | tasya sambodhanam | Instead of the words in the text, another MS. reads, bhūs te ādir madhyam bhuvas te svas te śīrshaṁ viśvarūpo 'si.

[103] Umayā Brahma-vidyā-svarūpiṇyā Kātyāyanyā saha vartate iti Somas tam | [Soma is thus = sa + Uma, "with Umā"] yataḥ somam apāma tataḥ amritāḥ maraṇa-hetubhir avidyā-tat-kārya-saṁskārair vivarjitāḥ abhūma sampannāḥ | —Comm.

[104] Tārayati, "delivers:" that which delivers.—Comm.

[105] Ūrdhva-moksham ātmani gṛihṇāti | —Comm.

asyāntakāle samhṛitya viśvā bhuvānani goptā" | tasmād uchyate eko Rudraḥ[106]| atha kasmād uchyate Īśāno "yaḥ sarvān lokān īśate īśanībhir" jananībhiḥ parama-śaktibhiḥ | "abhi tvā śūra nonumaḥ adugdhāḥ iva dhenavaḥ | īśānam asya jagataḥ svardṛiśam īśānam Indra tastushaḥ" | (R.V. vii. 32, 22) | tasmād uchyate Īśānaḥ | . . . . atha kasmād uchyate Maheśvaraḥ | yaḥ sarvān lokān sambhakshaḥ sambhakshayaty ajasraṁ sṛijati visṛijati vāsayatī tasmād uchyate Maheśvaraḥ | atha kasmād uchyate Mahādevaḥ | yaḥ sarvān bhāvān parityajya ātma-jñāna-yogaiś-varye mahati mahīyate tasmād uchyate Mahādevaḥ | tad etad (etad nāma-nirukti-rūpaṁ charitam | Comm.) Rudra-charitam | "esho ha devaḥ pradiśo 'nu sarvāḥ pūrvo ha jātaḥ sa u garbhe antaḥ | sa eva jātaḥ sa janishyamāṇaḥ pratyaṅ janās tishṭhati viśvato-mukhaḥ" | (Vāj. S. 32, 4)| "viśvataś-chakshur uta viśvato-mukho viśvato-bāhur uta viśvatas-pāt | sam bāhubhyāṁ dhamati saṁ patatrair dyāvā-pṛithivī janayan devaḥ ekaḥ" | (R.V. x. 81, 3) | . . . . Rudre ekatvam (aikyam | Comm.) āhuḥ | Rudraṁ śāśvataṁ vai purāṇam ityādi . . . . | vratam etat pāśupatam | Agnir iti bhasma Vāyur iti bhasma jalam iti bhasma sthalam iti bhasma vyoma iti bhasma sarvaṁ ha vai idam bhasma manaḥ etāni chakshūṁshi bhasmāni | "Agnir" ityādinā bhasma gṛihītvā nimṛijya angāni saṁspṛiśet | tasmād vratam etat pāśupatam paśu-pāśa-vimokshāya | yo 'tharva-śiram brāhmaṇo 'dhīte so 'gni-pūto bhavati | sa vāyu-pūto bhavati | sa āditya-pūto bhavati | sa soma-pūto bhavati | sa satya-bhūto bhavati sa sarva-bhūto bhavati | sa sarveshu tīrtheshu snāto bhavati | sa sarveshu vedeshv adhīto bhavati | sa sarva-veda-vrata-charyāsu charito bhavati | sa sarvair devair jñāto bhavati | sa sarva-yajña-kratubhir ishṭavān bhavati | tena itihāsa-purāṇānāṁ Rudrāṇām śata-sahasrāṇi japtāni bhavanti | gāyatryāḥ śata-sahasraṁ japtam bhavati | praṇavānām ayutaṁ japtam bhavati | rūpe rūpe (pāṭhe pāṭhe pratipāṭham | Comm.) daśa-pūrvān punāti daśottarān ā chakshushaḥ panktim punāti ityāha bhagavān Atharva-śiro 'tharva-śirch (abhyāsaḥ ādarārthaḥ | Comm.) | sakṛij japtvā śuchiḥ pūtaḥ karmaṇyo bhavati | dvitīyaṁ japtvā gāṇapatyam (sarva-niyantṛitvam | Comm) avāpnoti tṛitīyaṁ japtvā devam eva anu-praviśaty oṁ satyam | "yo Rudro agnau yo apsv antaḥ ya oshadhīr vīrudhaḥ āviveśa | ya imā viśvā bhuvanāni chāklṛipe tasmai Rudrāya namo 'stu Agnaye" | (A. V. vii. 87, 1, above, p. 333).

[106] In another MS. a different answer is given to this question: Yasmād ṛishibhir na anyair bhaktair drutam asya rūpam upalabhyate | "He is called 'Rudra' because his form is quickly (drutam) perceived by rishis, and not by other devout persons."

"The gods went to heaven. They asked Rudra, 'Who art thou?' He said, 'I alone was before [all things], and I exist, and I shall be. No other transcends me.' He entered into one space after another, and into the space of the sky. 'I am eternal and not eternal, discernible and undiscernible, I am Brahma, I am not Brahma,[107] I am the eastern, western, southern, northern [breaths, etc., Comm.], I am below and above, the regions, and the intermediate regions, I am male, eunuch, and female, I am the Sāvitrī, I the Gāyatrī, I the Trishṭubh, Jagatī, and Anushṭubh (metres), I am metre, I am the household, the southern, and the āhavanīya fires, I am true, I am the earth (or cow), I am Gaurī,[108] I am the eldest, I am the chief, I am the most excellent, I am the waters, I am brilliancy, I am the Ṛik, Yajush, Sāman, Atharvāngirases, I am the undecaying, I the decaying, I the mysterious, I the secret, I dwell in the forests, I am the pushkara (sacrificial jar), the filter, the end, the middle, the outside, the front, and light, —I alone. He who knows me only, me, to be all, knows all the gods. By my own energy I satisfy the earth with rays (or the cow with cows), the Brahmans with brahmanhood, oblations with oblation, life with life, truth with truth, righteousness with righteousness.' Then the gods did not behold Rudra. They meditate upon him. Then the gods, with arms raised aloft, praise him: 'He who is Rudra is divine, and he who is Brahmā, to him be adoration. He who is Rudra is divine, and he who is Vishṇu, to him be adoration. He who is Rudra is divine, and he who is Maheśvara, to him be adoration. He who is Rudra is divine, and he who is Umā, to him be adoration. He who is Rudra, etc., and he who is Vināyaka, to him be adoration. He who is Rudra, etc., and he who is Skanda, to him be adoration. He who is Rudra, etc., and he who is Indra, to him be adoration. He who is Rudra, etc., and he who is Agni, etc. He who is Rudra, etc., and he who is Bhūḥ, etc. He who is Rudra, etc., and he who is Bhuvaḥ, etc. (In the same way Rudra is identified with suvaḥ [svaḥ]; mahaḥ; jana; tapas; satya; pṛithivī; āpas; tejas; vāyu; ākāśa; sūryā; soma; nakshatrāṇi; ashṭau grahāḥ; prāṇa; kāla; Yama; mṛityu; amṛita; bhūta; bhavya; bhavishyat; viśva; kṛitsna;

[107] Vākyābhyāso rūpasya ātmano vāstavatva-pradarśanārthaḥ | Comm. I should rather suppose, however, that the second word is not Brahma, but abrahma.

[108] S'iva-priyā | ashṭavarshā vā kumārī gaura-varnā bāla-tatā (?) tu | Comm.

sarva; and satya.) Om! at the beginning, and in the middle are Bhūr, Bhuvaḥ, Svaḥ; at the end is the head. O giver of life, Om, thou art universal-formed. Thou alone art Brahma doubly, and triply, above and below; thou art gentleness, fatness, contentment; thou art the thing sacrificed, and the thing not sacrificed, the whole, and not the whole, what is given, and what is not given, what is done, and what is not done, that which is supreme, and not supreme, and what is surpassing. 'We have drunk the Soma, we have become immortal, we have entered into light, we have known the gods. What can an enemy now do to us? What can the malice of any mortal effect, O immortal god?'[109] This imperishable [principle], beneficial to the whole world, sprung from [or, having the nature of,] Prajāpati, subtile, beautiful, by its own energy swallows up the incomprehensible Purusha by the incomprehensible, Vāyu by that which has the nature of Vāyu, soma by that which has the nature of soma.[110] To him the destroyer, the great devourer, be adoration. All the gods reside in the heart, situated in the heart and the breath. Thou who art continually in the heart, [art] the three letters, but he is beyond. To the north of him is the head, to the south the feet; that which is the north is the omkāra. The omkāra is the praṇava, which (praṇava) again is all-pervading, which ('all-pervading') again is infinite, which again is that which delivers, which again is subtile, which again is white, which again has the nature of lightning, which again is the supreme Brahma: thus he is the one. He is the only Rudra, he is Īśāna, he is divine, he is Maheśvara, he is Mahādeva. Now whence does the omkāra get its name? Inasmuch as so soon as it is uttered, it raises up the whole body, it is called omkāra." (The same inquiry is then made and answered in regard to the words 'praṇava,' 'sarvavyāpin' ['all-pervading'], 'ananta' ['infinite'] the 'deliverer,' 'subtile,' 'white,' 'having the nature of lightning,' and 'the supreme Brahma.' Then 'eka,' 'one,' is explained.) "Now why is he called 'one'? He who evolves, creates, variously creates, sustains all worlds, is therefore called the

[109] Quoted in the third volume of this work, p. 265. According to the commentator whom I have quoted under the text, Soma means sa+uma, he who dwells with Umā, in the form of divine knowledge, Kātyāyanī. What would the Vedic rishi who composed the verse have said to this mystical interpretation? Such explanations are not, however, peculiar to the adherents of any one religion.

[110] I do not profess to understand the sense of this.

'one.' Now why is he called the one Rudra? 'There is only one Rudra; there is no place for a second. He rules this fourth world, controlling and productive; living beings abide within him united with him. At the time of the end he annihilates all worlds, the protector.' Wherefore he is called the one Rudra. Then why is he called Iśāna? He it is who rules all worlds by his ordinances, and supreme creative powers. 'We, O heroic Indra, like unmilked cows, approach with our praises thee who art the heavenly lord (īśāna) of this moving, and the lord of this stationary, [world].[111] Hence he is called 'Īśāna.' ('Bhagavat' is then explained.) Then why is he called Maheśvara? He who, a devourer, constantly devours, creates, variously creates, sustains all worlds, is therefore called Maheśvara. Then why is he called Mahādeva? He who, abandoning all forms of being, exults in the great divine power of absorption in the knowledge of himself, is therefore called Mahādeva. Such is the history of Rudra. 'This god [abides] throughout all regions; he was the first born; he is within the womb; it is even he who has been born, and he is still to be born; he exists, O men, pervading all things, with his face turned to every side.' (Vāj. S. 32, 4.) 'The one god, who has on every side eyes, on every side a face, on every side arms, on every side feet, when producing the earth and sky, fabricates them with his arms, and with his wings.'" (R.V. x. 81, 3, above, p. 6.) . . . . Rudra is mentioned again in the following verses. "In Rudra they say there is oneness, and that Rudra is eternal and primeval," etc. The Pāśupata rite is thus described: "This is the Pāśupata observance; 'Agni is ashes, Vayu is ashes, water is ashes, dry land is ashes, the sky is ashes, all this is ashes, the mind, these eyes, are ashes.' Having taken ashes while pronouncing these preceding words, and rubbing himself, let a man touch his limbs. This is the Pāśupata rite, for the removal of the animal bonds. The Brahman who reads the Atharva-śira is purified with fire, with air, with the sun, with soma (or the moon); he becomes truth, he becomes all, he has bathed in all the holy places, he is read in all the Vedas, he has practised the observances prescribed in all the Vedas, he is known by all the gods, he has sacrificed with all sacrificial rites; by him hundreds of thousands of itihāsas, purāṇas, and Rudras (formulas relating to Rudra), and a hundred thousand Gāyatrīs have been muttered, ten thousand Oms have been uttered; at every recitation he purifies ten generations of ancestors, and ten future generations of descendants; he purifies a row of men as far as the eye can reach; thus says the divine Atharva-śiras. Having muttered it once, he becomes clean, pure, and fit for the ceremonial; having muttered it a second time, he obtains dominion over hosts; having muttered it a third time, he enters into the god: Om, [this is] true. 'Adoration be to Rudra Agni, who resides in fire, and in the waters, who has entered into these plants, who formed all these worlds.'"

[111] R.V. vii. 32, 22, quoted above, p. 103.

I shall not make more than a few further extracts from this mystical Upanishad, which throws little light on Rudra's character or history. The three gods, Brahmā, Vishṇu, and Rudra, are mentioned together, along with Indra (Brahmā-Vishṇu-Rudrendrāḥ); and Sambhu (one of the names of Rudra) is said (in a passage which I need not attempt to translate at length) to be possessor of all divine qualities, and to be lord of all; while the benefits of worshipping him are described (kāraṇaṁ tu dhyeyaḥ sarvaiśvarya-sampannaḥ sarveśvaraś cha Sambhuḥ ākāśa-madhye dhruvaṁ stabdhvā 'dhikaṁ kshaṇam ekaṁ kratuśatasyāpi chatuḥ-saptatyā yat phalaṁ tad avāpnoti kṛitsnam oṁkāragataṁ cha sarva-dhyāna-yoga-jñānānāṁ yat phalam tad oṁkāra veda-para īśo vā śiva eko dhyeyaḥ śivankaraḥ sarvam anyat parityajya).

In the Kaivalya Upanishad (translated by Prof. Weber, Ind. Stud. ii. 10 ff.) Āśvalāyana asks Brahmā to explain to him the science of divine things (Athāśvalāyano bhagavantam parameshṭhinam upasametya uvācha adhīhi bhagavan brahma-vidyāṁ ityādi). Brahmā (pitāmaha) among other things tells him as follows: Antyāśrama-sthaḥ sakalendriyāṇi nirudhya bhaktyā sva-gurum praṇamya | hṛit-puṇḍarīkaṁ virajaṁ viśuddhaṁ vichintya madhye viśadaṁ viśokaṁ | anantam avyaktam achintya-rūpaṁ śivam praśāntam amṛitam brahma-yonim | tam ādi-madhyānta-vihīnam ekaṁ vibhuṁ chidānanda-svarūpam adbhutam | Umā-sahāyam parameśvaram prabhuṁ trilochanaṁ nīla-kaṇṭham praśāntam | dhyātvā munir gachhati bhūta-yoniṁ samasta-sākshiṁ tamasaḥ parastāt | sa Brahmā sa Śivaḥ Śendraḥ so 'ksharaḥ paramaḥ svarāṭ | sa eva Vishṇuḥ sa prāṇaḥ sa ātmā parameśvaraḥ[112] | sa eva sarvaṁ yad bhūtam yachcha bhavyaṁ sanātanam | jñātvā taṁ mṛityum atyeti nānyaḥ panthā vimuk-

[112] Another MS. has here Sa kālo 'gniḥ sa Chandramāḥ.

taye | . . . . yaḥ śatarudriyam adhīte so 'gnipūto bhavati sa Vāyupūto bhavati ityādi | "A man in the last (or fourth) religious order (i.e. that of a mendicant) restraining all his senses, making obeisance to his teacher, meditating within on the lotus of the heart, [which is] spotless, pure, lucid, undisturbed,—the infinite, undiscernible, inconceivable, auspicious (śiva); tranquil, immortal, source of Brahma, [or, of divine knowledge],—contemplating him who is without beginning, middle, or end, the one, the pervading, the spiritual and blessed, the wonderful, the consort of Umā, the supreme lord, the three-eyed, the blue-throated, the tranquil,—[doing this] a Muni, [passing] beyond darkness, attains the source of being, the universal witness. He is Brahmā, he is Śiva, he is Indra, he is undecaying, supreme, self-resplendent; he is Vishṇu, he is breath, he is the spirit, the supreme lord; he is all that has been or that shall be, eternal. Knowing him, a man overpasses death. There is no other way to liberation." Further on it is said: "He who reads the Śatarudriya becomes purified by fire, purified by air," etc., etc.

In one of the MS. collections of Upanishads belonging to the library of the East India Office, I find another work of that description, called the Nīlarudropanishad, which begins thus: Apaśyaṁ chāvarohantaṁ divitaḥ pṛithivīmayaḥ | apaśyam apaśyaṁ taṁ Rudraṁ nīlagrivaṁ śikhaṇḍinam | "I, formed of earth, beheld descending from the sky, I beheld, I beheld, that blue-necked, crested Rudra." This composition contains many verses from the Śatarudriya.

Sect. VI.—Some further texts from the Itihāsas and Purāṇas relative to Rudra.

In the earlier parts of this work I have given a variety of extracts from the Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata, etc., which exhibit the character of Mahādeva as he was conceived in the epic period (see pp. 165, 176, 178, 184–205, 223–228, 230–232, 240 f., 266–273, 278–281, 282–289). I shall now adduce such other passages from the Itihāsas, or Purāṇas, as may appear to throw any light on the history of the conceptions entertained of this deity, and of his relations to the other members of the Indian pantheon.

Rudra is briefly alluded to in the passages of the Rāmāyaṇa i. 14, 1 ff.; i. 75, 14 ff.; and Yuddha-Kāṇḍa, 119, 1 ff., quoted in pp. 165, 176 f., and 178 ff. The other texts of the Rāmāyaṇa in which I have observed any allusion to him are the following; and the representations which are there given of this god bear generally, perhaps, a stamp of greater antiquity than those which are found in the Mahābhārata.

In Rāmāyaṇa i. 23, 10 ff. (ed. Bombay), Rudra curses the embodied Kandarpa (the Indian Cupid), who wished to enter into him after his marriage, at a time when he was performing austerity; and Kandarpa in consequence becomes bodiless (ananga). (Kandarpo mūrtimān āsīt Kāmaḥ ity uchyate budhaiḥ | tapasyantam iha Sthāṇuṁ nimayena samāhitam | 11. Kṛitodvāhaṁ tu deveśaṁ gachhantaṁ sa-marud-gaṇam | dharshayāmāsa durmedhāḥ hunkṛitaś cha mahātmanā | 12. Avadhyātaś cha Rudreṇa chakshushā Raghunandana | vyaśīryanta śarīrāt svāt sarva-gātrāṇi durmateḥ |)

In i. 35, 20 (Bombay ed.), it is mentioned that the mountain-god, Himavat, gave his daughter Umā to the "unequalled Rudra" (Rudrāya apratirūpāya). In chapter xxxvii. of the same book, vv. 5 ff. the connubial intercourse of Śiva with Umā is described in most undignified language, as follows: Purā Rāma kṛitodvāhaḥ Śitikaṇṭho mahātapāḥ | 6. Dṛishṭvā cha bhagavān devīm maithunāyopachakrame | tasya saṁkrīḍamānasya Mahādevasya dhīmataḥ | Śitikaṇṭhasya devasya divyaṁ varsha-śataṁ gatam | 7. Na chāpi tanayo Rāma tasyām āsīt parantapa | "Formerly, after his marriage, Śitikaṇṭha (Śiva) the great devotee, (6) beholding the goddess, began to indulge in connubial love. A thousand years of the gods passed while the wise Mahādeva Śitikaṇṭha was thus sporting. But, O Rāma, vexer of thy foes, no son was born to Umā." The gods being alarmed at the prospect of the formidable character of the offspring which might be born to Mahādeva, entreated him and his spouse to practise chastity. To this Mahādeva consented; but asked what would become of the seed which he had already discharged. This, the gods said, should be received by the earth. The gods then desired Agni, along with Vāyu, to enter into this seed. This Agni did, and the white mountain was produced in consequence (see above, p. 354), where Kārttikeya was born. The gods then worshipped Śiva and Umā, but the latter imprecated sterility on all their wives. The thirty-seventh section relates the birth of Kārttikeya. While Tryambaka (Śiva), the lord of the gods, was performing austerity, the other deities went to Brahmā and asked for a general in the room of Mahādeva, who, it seems, had formerly acted in that capacity. "He," they said, "whom thou didst formerly give us as a leader of our armies (i.e. Mahādeva), is now performing great austerity, along with Umā" (sect. 38, v. 3, Schlegel's ed.=sect. 37, 3, of Bombay ed.: Yo naḥ[113]. senāpatir deva datto bhagavatā purā | sa tapaḥ param āsthāya tapyate sma sahomayā). Brahmā says, that in consequence of the curse of Umā, no son could be born to any of the wives of the gods; but that Agni could beget a son on the river Gangā, who should be the general of the gods. The gods accordingly went to mount Kailāśa, and appointed Agni to effect their object. Agni accordingly impregnated the Gangā, who brought forth Kārttikeya, so called because he was nursed by the Kṛittikās."

In the forty-second section it is related how the royal rishi Bhagīratha performed austerity in order that the Gangā might descend from heaven and purify the ashes of the sons of Sagara (who had been destroyed by Kapila, sect. 40, at the end); and might by this means elevate them to paradise. Brahmā appeared to the king and told him that he ought to propitiate Śiva, who was the only being who could sustain the shock of the falling Gangā. Bhagīratha (as is told sect. 43) continued his austerities till Śiva the lord of Umā, the lord of animals (Paśupati), appeared to him, and said he would receive the Gangā on his head. He accordingly mounted the Himālaya, and called on the Gangā to descend. The Gangā was indignant at this summons, and came down in great volume and with great force on his head, thinking to sweep him down along with her into Pātāla. The god, however, determined to humble her pride, and she was compelled to circle for a long period of years in the labyrinth of his matted locks, without being able to reach the earth. Being again propitiated by Bhagīratha, Śiva at length allowed her to reach the lake Vindu, to flow to the sea, and eventually into the infernal regions, where she purified the ashes of the sons of Sagara and enabled them to ascend to heaven.

In the forty-fifth section is described the production of nectar from the churning of the ocean of milk by the rival sons of Diti and Aditi, who wished to obtain some specific which should render them immortal. In the first place, however, a fiery poison was vomited from the mouths of the serpent Vāsuki, who was used as the rope in the process of churning. The gods then resorted to Śiva to deliver them from this portent:

[113] Yo naḥ is the reading of Schlegel's edition, as well as of Gorresio's, 39, 3. The Bombay edition reads yena, which does not seem so good a reading.

21. Atha devāḥ Mahādevaṁ Śaṅkaraṁ śaraṇārthinaḥ | jagmuḥ Paśupatiṁ Rudram trāhi trāhīti tushṭuvuḥ | 22. Evam uktas tato devair deva-deveśvaraḥ prabhuḥ | prāduṛāsīt tato 'traiva śaṅkha-chakra-dharo Hariḥ | 23. Uvāchainaṁ smitaṁ kṛitvā Rudram śūla-dharaṁ Hariḥ | daivatair mathyamāne tu yat pūrvaṁ samupasthitam | 24. Tat tvadīyaṁ sura-śreshṭha surāṇām agrato hi yat | agra-pūjāmiha sthitvā gṛihāṇedaṁ visham prabho | 25. Ity uktvā cha sura-śreshṭhas tatraivāntaradhīyata | devatānām bhayaṁ dṛishṭvā śrutvā vākyaṁ tu Śārṅgiṇaḥ | 26. Halāhalaṁ vishaṁ ghoraṁ sanjagrāhāmṛitopamam | devān visṛijya deveśo jagāma bhagavān Haraḥ | 21. "Then the deities, seeking as their refuge Mahādeva, Śaṅkara, went to Rudra Paśupati, and lauded him [calling out] 'deliver, deliver.' 22. Then, being addressed by the gods, the lord of the gods, Hari, appeared on that very spot, bearing the shell and the discus, (23) and smiling, said to Rudra, the wielder of the trident: 'That which has first appeared, when the ocean was being churned by the deities, (24) belongs to thee, most eminent of the gods, since thou art at the head of them. Standing here, receive, lord, this poison as the earliest offering.' 25. Having thus spoken, the most eminent of the gods disappeared on the spot. Perceiving the alarm of the deities, and having heard the words of Vishṇu, (26) he (Śiva) took the deadly poison, as if it had been nectar. The divine Hara then dismissed the gods and departed."

The gods and Asuras proceeded with the churning, but were obliged now to call in the aid of Vishṇu, as the mountain with which the operation was being performed sank down into the infernal regions. Vishṇu, however, assumed the form of a tortoise, and supported the mountain on his back. At length nectar was produced, which Vishṇu carried off.

In the description of the northern region contained in the Kishkindhā[114] kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, Kailāsa is spoken of as the residence of Kuvera, and no mention is made of Śiva as residing there:[115]

Kishk. 44, 27 ff. (ed. Gorresio = Bombay ed. 43, 20 f.).—Taṁ tu

[114] In the Bombay edition this word is written 'Kishkindhā,' without a y before the final ā, which it has in Gorresio's edition.

[115] See, however, the passage from the Sundara Kāṇḍa, sect. 89, which will be quoted in the Appendix, where Mahādeva is said to visit Kuvera, or to Kailāsa.

śīghram atikramya kāntārañ loma-harshaṇam | pāṇḍuraṁ drakshyatha tataḥ Kailāsaṁ nāma parvatam | tatra pāṇḍura-meghābhaṁ Jāmbūnada-parishkṛitam | Kuvera-bhavanañ divyaṁ nirmitaṁ Viśvakarmaṇā | "Having quickly passed over that dreadful desert, you shall then see the white mountain, called Kailāsa, and there the celestial palace of Kuvera, formed by Viśvakarman, in colour like a brilliant cloud, and decorated with gold."

The Bombay edition, 43, 54 ff., has the following lines, in which Rudra may be referred to: Tam atikramya śailendram uttaras toyasāṁ nidhiḥ | tatra Somagirir nāma madhye hemamayo mahān | 55. Sa tu deśo visūryo 'pi tasya bhāsā prakāśate | sūrya-lakshmyā 'bhivijneyo tapateva Vivasvatā | 56. Bhagavāṁs tatra viśvātmā S'ambhur ekādaśātmakaḥ | Brahmā vasati deveśo brahmarshi-parivāritaḥ[116] | 54. "Beyond this monarch of mountains is the northern ocean, in the midst of which stands the great golden mountain, called Somagiri. 55. With its lustre that region, although sunless, shines; and is distinguished by a solar splendour, as if from the beams of Vivasvat (the sun). 56. There the divine soul of the universe, the eleven-fold S'ambhu, Brahmā, lord of the gods, dwells, attended by the Brahman Rishis."

In Gorresio's edition (44, 117 ff.) this passage shows a number of various readings: Kurūṁs tān samatikramya uttare payasāṁ nidhiḥ | tatra Somagirir nāma hiraṇmaya-samo mahān | 118. Indra-loka-gatāḥ ye cha Brahma-loka-gatāś cha ye | sarve te samavaikshanta girirājaṁ divaṁ gatāḥ | 119. Asūryo 'pi hi deśaḥ sa tasya bhāsā prakāśate | sasūryaḥ iva lakshmīvāṁs tapatīva divākare | 120. Bhagavāṁs tatra bhūtātmā Svayambhūr bahudhātmakaḥ | Brahmā bhavati vaśyātmā sarvātmā sarva-bhāvanaḥ | 117. "Beyond, to the north of the Uttara Kurus, is an ocean, in which is a great mountain, as it were of gold. 118. All those who have gone to the sky, to the world of Indra, or to that of Brahmā, have beheld the king of mountains. 119. By its light that region shines, although sunless, as if it had a sun, and resplendent as if the lord of day were blazing. 120. There the divine soul of beings, Svayambhū, Brahmā, dwells, self-subdued, the soul, and producer of all things." Here there is no reference to Mahādeva, Svayambhū being substituted for Śambhu.

[116] The commentator thus explains this verse: Viśvam atati vyāpnoti iti viśvātmā vyāpakas tena Vishṇu-rūpaḥ | vishṇu-vyāptāv ity anusārāt | sa eva S'ambhuḥ śam bhavaty asmāt | sa eva ekādaśātmakaḥ ekādaśānuvākārthaikādaśa-rudrātmakaḥ | sa eva Brahmā bṛiṁhaṇatvāt jagat-srashṭṛitvāt | "Viśvātmā" means, he who pervades all things; and consequently he is in the form of Vishṇu, as Vishṇu has the sense of pervader. The same being is S'ambhu, he from whom prosperity (śam) arises (bhavati); and he is also elevenfold, in the form of the eleven Rudras, who signify eleven repetitions of him (?). The same being is also Brahmā, from his increasing,—creating the world."

Another passage relating to Rudra which occurs in Gorresio's recension of the Rāmāyaṇa is the following (though it is not to be found in the corresponding section of the Bombay edition):

Kishk. 44, 46 ff.—Taṁ tu deśam atikramya Triśṛingo nāma parvataḥ | tasya pāde saro divyam mahat kāñchana-pushkaram | tataḥ prachyavate divyā tīkshṇa-śrotās taraṅgiṇī | nadī naika-grahākīrṇā kuṭilā loka-bhāvinī | tasyaikaṁ kāñchanaṁ śṛingam parvatasyāgni-sannibham | vaidūrya-mayam ekancha śailasyāsyā samuchhṛitam | Anutpanneshu bhūteshu babhūva kila bhūmitaḥ | agrajaḥ sarva-bhūtānāṁ Viśvakarmeti viśrutaḥ | tat tasya kila paurāṇam agnihotram mahātmanaḥ | āsīt triśikharaḥ śailaḥ pravṛittās tatra ye 'gnayaḥ | tatra sarvāṇi bhūtāni sarvamedhe mahāmakhe | kṛitvā 'bhavad mahātejāḥ sarva-loka-maheśvaraḥ | Rudrasya kila saṁsthānaṁ saro vai sārvamedhikam | tataḥ pravṛittā Sarayūr ghora-nakravatī nadī | deva-gandharva-patagāḥ piśāchoraga-dānavāḥ | praviśanti na taṁ deśam pradīptam iva pāvakam | tam atikramya śailendram Mahādevābhipālitam | ityādi | "When that region has been overpassed, a mountain called Tṛisṛinga [will be seen], at the foot of which is a divine lake, of large dimensions, filled with golden lotuses. Thence flows a divine billowy river, with rapid stream, swarming with crocodiles, winding, gladdening the world. That mountain has one golden peak, [one] resembling fire, and it has also one elevated point formed of lapis lazuli. When no creatures had as yet come into existence, there sprang from the earth the first of all beings, known as Viśvakarman. This triple-peaked mountain was the scene of the ancient Agnihotra sacrifice of that great being, where all the fires were employed. Having formed all beings there at this great universal sacrifice, he became the mighty lord (maheśvara) of all worlds. This lake of the universal sacrifice is the abode of Rudra; and from it issues the river Sarayū, abounding in dreadful crocodiles. Gods, Gandharvas, birds, Piśāchas, snakes, and Dānavas, do not enter that region, which is like blazing fire. Having overpassed that great mountain, protected by Mahādeva," etc.

In regard to the story of Viśvakarman, which is not usually met with in the Purāṇas, and does not harmonize well with the course of their cosmogony, compare the two hymns in pp. 5 ff., the story from the Nirukta in p. 9, above, and the Śatap. Br. xiii. 7, 1, 14.

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 7, 1, 14.—Tena ha etena Viśvakarmā Bhauvanaḥ īje | teneshṭvā 'tyatiskṭhat sarvāṇi bhūtani idaṁ sarvam abhavat | atitishṭhati sarvāṇi bhūtāni idaṁ sarvam bhavati yaḥ evam vidvān sarvamedhena yajate yo vā etad evam veda | 15. Taṁ ha Kaśyapo yājayāṁchakāra | tad api Bhūmiḥ ślokaṁ jagau | "na mā martyaḥ kaśchana dātum arhati Viśvakarman Bhauvana mandaḥ āsitha | upamankshyati syā salilasya madhye mṛishaisha te sangaraḥ Kaśyapāya" iti | "With this sacrifice, Viśvakarman, the son of Bhuvana, sacrificed. Having sacrificed with it, he overpassed all beings, and became all this. That man overpasses all beings and becomes all this, who, knowing this, sacrifices with the Sarva-medha ('universal sacrifice'), or he who thus knows this. 15. Kaśyapa performed this sacrifice for him. Wherefore also the Earth recited a verse:[117] 'No mortal ought to bestow me. Viśvakarman, son of Bhuvana, thou wast foolish. She (the earth) will sink into the midst of the water. This promise of thine to Kaśyapa is vain.'"

It would appear as if the author of the preceding passage of the Rāmāyaṇa intended to identify Rudra with Viśvakarman, when he says that the latter "became the mighty lord (maheśvara) of all worlds." Compare the passages from the Kūrma Purāṇa and Mahābhārata quoted below in notes 131 and 133, pp. 376 and 377; and Mahābhārata, Śāntip. 241, quoted in a note to p. 372, vol. v., of this work. If Mahādeva is identified with Viśvakarman, he must, according to the Rāmā-

[117] The commentator observes on this: Asmai cha Viśvākarmā bhūmiṁ dātum iyesha tatra cha kāle Bhūmir api imaṁ ślokaṁ gītavatī | tvaṁ tu mandaḥ mandamatir janaḥ āsitha babhūvitha jātaḥ ity arthaḥ | upa-śabdo ni-śabdasya arthe | yaś cha aśakyam pratijānīte mandaḥ ity abhiprāyaḥ | "Viśvakarman desired to give the earth to him; and at that time the Earth also sang this verse. Thou wast 'dull,' dull of understanding. The preposition upa is here used in the sense of ni. And the sense is that he who promises what is impossible is foolish." Compare the passage of the Mahābhārata, Vana-parvan, v. 10209 (in the first vol. of this work, p. 451), where the earth is said to have been given to Kaśyapa by Paraśurāma; and another text from the Anuśāsana-parvan, vv. 7232 ff. (ibid. p. 464), where the earth is said to have become offended with king Anga, who desired to bestow her on the Brahmans, and to have in consequence abandoned her form. Kaśyapa afterwards entered into her, and she became his daughter. Compare also Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vii. 4, 3, 5 (quoted above, p. 27).

yaṇa and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, be regarded as sprung from the earth, or Bhuvana, and therefore not eternal. It is to be noted, however, that the Śatap. Br. speaks of this Viśvakarman as a mortal, and the Ait. Br. speaks of him as a prince who conquered the earth.

In the next passage[118] Mahādeva is represented as visiting Kuvera on Mount Kailāsa, and as acknowledging the divinity of Rāma:

Rām. (ed. Gorresio) v. 89, 6 ff.—Atha pradhāno dharmātmā lokānām īśvaraḥ prabhuḥ | tataḥ sabhāyāṁ devasya rājño Vaiśravaṇasya saḥ | dhanādhyaksha-sabhāṁ devaḥ prāpto hi Vṛishhabha-dhvajaḥ | Umā-sahāyo deveśo gaṇaiś cha bahubhir vṛitaḥ | avatīrya vṛishāt tūrṇam mahitaḥ śūla-dhṛig vibhuḥ | gires tasya mahātejaḥ pravishṭas tu sabhāṁ Haraḥ | Ṛiddhyā sahāya-yuktaś cha tathā Vaiśravaṇaḥ svayam | anyonyaṁ tau samālingya upavishṭāv ubhāv api | sabhāyāṁ tatra tau devau te cha devāḥ yathākramam | upavishṭāḥ gaṇāś chaiva Yakshāś cha saha Guhyakaiḥ | aksha-dyūtaṁ tatas tābhyām pravṛittaṁ samanantaram | etasminn antare tatra Rākshasendraṁ Vibhīshaṇam | dṛishṭvā Paulastyam āyāntaṁ Śivaḥ prāha dhaneśvaram | ayaṁ Vibhīshaṇaḥ praptaḥ śaraṇam tava pārthiva | manyunā 'bhipluto vīro Rākshasendra-vimānitaḥ | ityādi |

"Now the righteous and mighty ruler of the worlds, whose banner is a bull, the god of gods, accompanied by Umā, and attended by numerous hosts, came then to the assembly of the divine king Vaiśravaṇa (Kuvera), the lord of riches. Alighting quickly from his bull, Hara, the mighty lord, the wielder of the trident, being received with honour, entered into the assembly on that mountain (Kailāsa, v. 4); and at the same time Vaiśravaṇa himself, with Ṛiddhi (his wife),[119] and attended by his companions, [came in]. Having embraced each other, those two gods with the other deities sat down in order in the assembly, together with their hosts, and the Yakshas and Guhyakas. The two gods then began to play at dice. In the mean time, beholding the eminent Rākshasa Vibhīshaṇa, the son of Pulastya, approaching, Śiva says to the lord of riches, 'This, O king, is the hero Vibhīshaṇa, who has resorted to thee, overwhelmed by distress, having been dishonoured by the chief of the Rākshasas (Rāvaṇa),'" etc., etc.

While Śiva is speaking, Vibhīshaṇa arrives, and bows down before [118] This passage, however, is only to be found in Gorresio's recension, and not in the section of the Devanāgarī recension which corresponds to it—viz. vi. 17, 1, ff.

[119] See Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. Ṛiddhi, and the Mahābhārata, Asuśāsana-parvan, 675, and 7637, as well as the Harivaṁśa, 7167, 7739, there referred to.

the deities, who tell him to stand up; and go to Rāma, who will install him king of the Rākshasas (vv. 21 ff.). Vibhīshaṇa stands, with his head bent downwards, and sunk in contemplation, when S'iva again speaks to him (vv. 37 ff.): Taṁ dhyāyamānam bhagavān uvācha prabhur avyayaḥ | uttishṭhottishṭha rājendra sukham āpnuhi śāśvatam | . . . . . 39. Tasmād uttishṭha gachchha tvam purāṇam prabhum avyayam | ādhārāṁ sarvabhūtānāṁ śāśvataṁ niravagraham | sa hi sarva-nidhānaṁ cha gatir gatimatāṁ varaḥ | kṛitsnasya jagato mūlaṁ tasmād gachchhasva Rāghavam | "The divine, imperishable lord said: 'Stand up, stand up, prince of kings, obtain ever-during happiness. . . . . Stand up, therefore, go to the ancient, imperishable lord, the support of all beings, eternal, uncontrolled. For he, the most excellent, contains all things, and is the refuge of all who seek a refuge, the root of the whole world: wherefore go to Rāghava (Rāma).'" Vibhīshaṇa then departs through the air, to go to Rāma.[120]

[120] In the following passages some of Mahādeva's achievements are alluded to:—iii. 30, 27 (ed. Bomb.), and iii. 35, 93 (Gorr.): Sa papāta Kharo bhūmau dahyamānaḥ śarāgninā | Rudreṇeva vinirdagdhaḥ S'vetāraṇye purā 'ndhakaḥ | "[The Rākshasa] Khara fell on the ground, burnt by the fire of the arrow, like Andhaka [who was] formerly consumed by Rudra in the S'veta forest." (Compare A. V. xi. 2, 7, above, pp. 334, 336, where Rudra is called the slayer of Ardhaka.) iv. 5, 30 (Gorr.): Yathā kruddhasya Rudrasya Tripuraṁ vai vijigyushaḥ | "[The frowning face of Rāma] like that of the incensed Rudra, who had conquered Tripura." vi. 51, 17 (Gorr.): "The Rākshasa trembled when smitten by Lakshmaṇa's arrow, like the dreadful portal of Tripura, when struck by the bolt of Rudra" (Rudra-vāṇāhataṁ ghoram yathā Tripura-gopuram). In the following verse allusion is made to Rudra as a slaughterer of animals: vi. 73, 37 f. (Gorr. = Bombay ed. vi. 94, 35). Hatair aśvaiḥ padātaiś cha tad babhūva raṇājiram | ākrīḍaḥ iva Rudrasya kruddhasya nighnataḥ paśūn | "With slain horses and footmen, that battle-field became like the garden of the enraged Rudra when slaughtering animals." I do not know what the next verse refers to, vi. 55, 88 (Gorr.): Kumbhasya patato rūpam bhagnasyorasi mushṭinā | Īśvareṇābhipannasya rūpam Paśupater iva | "The appearance of Kumbha when shattered on the chest by the fist of Sugrīva, was like the appearance of Paśupati (S'iva) when overcome by Īśvara." The commentator quoted by Gorresio has the following note in explanation: Īśvareṇa pralaya-kālena hetunā abhipannasya lokān abhisrastasya Paśupateḥ Rudrasya rūpam iva rūpam babhūva ity arthaḥ | The Bomb. ed. (76, 93) reads in the second line: babhau Rudrābhipannasya yathā rūpaṁ Gavāmpateḥ | which the commentator renders, "appeared like the form of the lord of rays (the sun), overcome by Rudra" (Rudreṇa abhipannasya abhibhūtasya Gavāmpateḥ Sūryasya iva.) It would almost seem (strange as it may appear) as if the author of the recension of the Rāmāyaṇa published by Gorresio, had not understood the word Gavāmpati (lord of cows or rays) as designating the sun, when he took it for the equivalent of Paśupati. Īśvara and Paśupati are both names of Rudra; and he could not be assailed by himself. Gavāmpati occurs in the hymn to the Sun in the Mahābhārata, iii. 192 (as quoted by Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v.), as one of the numerous names or epithets of the Sun.

From the passages quoted above from the Mahābhārata and Brāhmaṇas in p. 284, and pp. 200 and 202, note, it appears as if some contest had at one time existed between the votaries of Mahādeva, and those of other deities, in regard to adoration of the former. It may perhaps be inferred from the passages cited in pp. 288–291, also, that the worship of this god, as practised by some tribes, was regarded by others with aversion, or even with horror. Some further indications of this aversion may be discovered in the myth of Daksha's sacrifice, as related in the Mahābhārata, and in the Vāyu and other Purāṇas (see Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, pp. 61 ff.=pp. 120 ff. of Dr. Hall's ed., vol. i.).

This story is told, perhaps in its simplest form, in the following passage of the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 66, 7 ff. (ed. Schlegel and Bombay= 68, 7 ff. Gorresio):

Evam uktas tu Janakaḥ pratyuvācha mahāmunim | śrūyatām asya dhanusho yad-artham iha tishṭhati | Devarātaḥ iti khyāto Nimeḥ shashṭho (jyeshṭho, Bomb. ed.) mahīpatiḥ | nyāso 'yaṁ tasya bhagavan haste datto mahātmanaḥ | Daksha-yajna-badhe pūrvaṁ dhanur āyamya vīryavān | vidhvasya tridaśān Rudraḥ salīlam idam abravīt | "yasmād bhāgārthino[121] bhāgān nākalpayata me surāḥ | varāṅgāni [=śirāṁsi, Comm. in Bomb. ed.] mahārhāṇi dhanushā śātayāmi vaḥ | tato vimanasaḥ sarve devāḥ vai muni-pungava | prāsādayanta deveśaṁ teshām prīto 'bhavad Bhavaḥ | prītaśchāpi dadau teshaṁ tāny angāni mahaujasām | dhanushā yāni yāny āsan śātitāni mahātmanā | tad etad deva-devasya dhanū-ratnam mahātmanaḥ | nyāsa-bhūtaṁ tadā nyastaṁ asmākam pūrvake vibho | [122]

"Janaka, being thus addressed, replied to the great muni: 'Hear, regarding this bow, from what cause it is here. A king called Devarāta was the sixth in descent from Nimi. This [bow] was a deposit committed to the hands of this great personage. Formerly, at the destruction of Daksha's sacrifice, the heroic Rudra, when he had drawn this bow, and routed the gods, thus spake in derision: "Since, ye gods, ye have divided to me no portion, though I desired it, I cut off your most precious heads with my bow." Then all the deities, being distressed, propitiated the god of gods, who became favourable to them, and restored the limbs of those glorious beings which had been cut off by the mighty bow. This is the precious bow of the great deity, which was at that time deposited with our ancestor.'"

[121] Svishṭakṛid-ādi-yajna-bhāgārthino mama | "To me who desired a share in the Svishṭakṛid, etc., offering."—Comm.

[122] This last line runs as follows in Gorresio's edition (ch. lxviii. 13): Tishṭhaty adyāpi bhagavan kule 'smakaṁ supūjitam | The other various readings, though numerous, are unimportant.

In this version of the myth, there is no mention of Rudra commissioning Vīrabhadra, or any other demons, to destroy the sacrifice or put the gods to flight. He is simply said to wound the gods with his bow.[123]

The same story is told in the Sauptika-parvan, vv. 786–808, and in greater detail in the Śānti-parvan, of the Mahābhārata, in verses 10226–10258, and is immediately afterwards repeated in vv. 10275 ff. According to the first account (which is given in answer to a question regarding the origin of Jvara, Fever), Umā, Śiva's wife, seeing the gods passing by in chariots, inquires of her husband where they are going, and is told by him that they are proceeding to Daksha's horse-sacrifice. The goddess then asks why her lord also does not go. He replies: Surair eva mahābhāge pūrvam etad anushṭhitam | yajneshu sarveshu mama na bhāgaḥ upakalpitaḥ | pūrvopāyopapannena mārgeṇa varavarṇini | na me surāḥ prayachhanti bhāgaṁ yajnasya dharmataḥ[124] |

[123] This same story is again briefly alluded to in the following other passages of the Rāmayaṇa:—iii. 30, 36 (ed. Gorr. = Bomb. ed. iii. 24, 35): Taṁ dṛishṭvā tejasā yuktaṁ vivyathur vana-devatāḥ | Dakshasyeva kratuṁ hantum udyatāstram Pināķinam | "Beholding him (Rāma), possessed of might, the sylvan deities were distressed, as if he had been Pināķin (Śiva) with his weapon ready to destroy the sacrifice of Daksha." Ibid. 70, 2: Hantu-kāmam paśuṁ Rudraṁ Rudraṁ kruddhaṁ Daksha-kratau yathā | "Like the incensed Rudra who sought to slay the victim at the sacrifice of Daksha." (The Bomb. ed. iii. 65, 2, has a quite different reading: Dagdhu-kāmaṁ jagat sarvaṁ yugānte 'va yathā Haram | "Like Hara [Rudra] desirous of burning up the whole world at the end of the Yuga.") And again, vi. 54, 33 (ed. Gorr.): Tato visphārayāmāsa Rāmas tad dhanur uttamam | bhagavān iva sankruddho Bhavaḥ kratu-jighāṁsayā | "Then Rāma stretched that excellent bow, like the divine Bhava enraged, and seeking to destroy the sacrifice." Rudra's followers are, however, mentioned in the Rāmāyaṇa. Thus in iii. 31, 10 (ed. Gorr.) it is said: Sa taiḥ parivṛito ghoraiḥ rākshasair nṛi-varātmajaḥ | Mahādevaḥ pitṛi-vane gaṇaiḥ pārśva-gatair iva | "This son of an eminent man (Rāma) was surrounded by these horrible Rākshasas, like Mahādeva by his attendant hosts in a cemetery." (Instead of the last line the Bomb. ed. has the following, iii. 25, 12: Tithishv iva Mahādevo vṛitaḥ pārishadāṁ gaṇaih.) And in another place (v. 12, 39, ed. Gorr.) Śiva is called the lord of demons (gṛiham Bhūtapater iva).

[124] The same words nearly are put into the mouth of Mahādeva in the Vāyu-purāṇa. See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. i., p. 126, of Dr. Hall's ed.

"The former practice of the gods has been, that in all sacrifices no portion should be divided to me. By custom, established by the earliest arrangement, the gods lawfully (dharmataḥ) allot me no share in the sacrifice." Umā is extremely chagrined that her husband, a god of so great dignity, should be so treated. Perceiving his wife's distress, Śiva goes, with his attendants, and puts an end to the sacrifice. The sacrifice takes the form of a deer, and is followed by Śiva to the sky. A drop of sweat falls from his forehead, from which a fire proceeds, out of which again a formidable being is born, Jvara (fever), which burns up the sacrifice, puts the gods to flight, etc. On this Brahmā appears to Śiva, and promises that the gods shall henceforth give him a share in the sacrifice (bhavato 'hi surāḥ sarve bhāgaṁ dāsyanti vai prabho), and proposes that Jvara (fever) shall be allowed to range over the earth. Śiva is propitiated, and assents to Brahma's proposal, and has ever afterwards obtained a share in the sacrifice (ity ukto Brahmaṇā devo bhāge chāpi prakalpite | bhagavantaṁ tathety āha . . . . parāncha prītim agamad utsmayaṁścha Pināka-dhṛik | avāpa cha tadā bhāgaṁ yathoktam Brahmaṇā Bhavaḥ).

The second version of the story is as follows: vv. 10272 ff. Daksha formerly commenced a sacrifice at Gangādvāra in the Himālaya, which was attended by the various orders of divine beings, including Indra and Brahmā. Dadhīchi, however, a votary of Rudra, was indignant that no worship was to be offered to that deity. 10283 ff. Tān dṛishṭvā manyunā "vishto Dadhīchir vākyām abravīt | "nāyaṁ yajno na vā dharmo yatra Rudro na ijyate | badha-bandham prapannāḥ vai kinnu kālasya paryayaḥ | kinnu mohād na paśyanti vināśam paryupasthitam | upasthitam mahāghoraṁ na budhyanti mahādbvare" | Ity uktvā sa mahā-yogī paśyati dhyāna-chakshushā | sa paśyati Mahādevaṁ devīncha vara-dām śubhām | Nāradancha mahātmānaṁ tasyāḥ devgāḥ samīpataḥ | santosham paramaṁ lebhe iti niśchitya yoga-vit | eka-mantrās tu te sarve yeneśo na nimantritaḥ[125] | tasmād deśād apākramya Dadhīchir vākyam abravīt | apūjya-pūjanāchchaiva pūjyānānchāpy apūjanāt | nṛi-ghātaka-samam pāpaṁ śaśvat prāpnoti mānavaḥ[126] | anṛitaṁ nokta-pūrvam me na cha

[125] A line similarly expressed occurs a little further on.

[126] The account of Daksha's sacrifice given in the Vāyu-purāṇa, and translated by Prof. Wilson, V.P. (vol. i., pp. 122 ff. of Dr. Hall's ed.), has a good many lines which correspond nearly with some in this passage of the Mahābhārata. Of these Dr. Hall was kind enough to send me copies. One of them agrees in sense with this verse.

vakshye kadāchana | devatānām ṛishīṇāñ cha madhye satyam bravīmy aham | āgatam Paśubhartāraṁ srashṭāraṁ jayataḥ patim | adhvare yajna-bhoktāraṁ sarveshām paśyata prabhum | Dakshaḥ uvācha | Santi no bahavo Rudrāḥ śūla-hastāḥ kapardinaḥ | ekādaśa-sthāna-gatāḥ nāhaṁ vedmi Maheśvaram[127] | Dadhīchir uvacha | sarveshām eva mantro 'yaṁ yenāsau na nimantritaḥ[128] | yathā 'ham Śankarād ūrdhvaṁ nānyam paśyāmi daivatam | tathā Dakshasya vipulo yajno 'yaṁ na bhavishyati | Dakshaḥ uvācha | etan makheśāya suvarṇa-pātre haviḥ samastaṁ vidhi-mantra-pūtam | Vishṇor nayāmy apratimasya[129] bhāgam prabhur vibhuś chāhavanīya eshaḥ | Devy uvācha | kim nāma dānaṁ vishamaṁ tapo vā kuryām ahaṁ yena patir namādya | labheta bhāgam bhagavān achintyo ardham tathā bhāgam atho tṛitīyam | evam bruvāṇām bhagavāṇ sva-patnīm prahṛishṭa-rūpaḥ kshubhitām uvācha | na vetsi māṁ devi kriśodarāngi kim nāma yuktaṁ vachanam makheśe | ahaṁ vijānāmi viśāla-netre dhyānena hīnāḥ na vidanty asantaḥ | tavādya mohena cha sendra-devāḥ lokās trayaḥ sarvataḥ eva mūḍhāḥ | mām adhvare śaṁsitāraḥ stuvanti rathantaraṁ sāma-gāś chopagānti | mām brāhmaṇāḥ brahma-vido yajante mamādhvaryavaḥ kalpayante cha bhāgam | Devy uvācha | suprākṛito 'pi purusho sarvaḥ strī-janasaṁsadi | stauti garvāyate chāpi svam ātmānam na saṁśayaḥ | Bhagavān uvācha | nātmānaṁ staumi deveśi paśya me tanu-madhyame | yaṁ srakshyāmi varārohe yāgārthe vara-varṇini |

"Beholding them, Dadhīchi, filled with indignation, thus spake: 'This is no sacrifice, nor a legitimate ceremony, in which Rudra is not worshipped. [These gods] have become entangled in the bonds of destruction. Is this the adverse influence of time? or is it through delusion that they do not see that ruin is at hand? They perceive not that a great calamity is impending at the sacrifice.' Having so spoken, this great devotee beholds with the eye of contemplation: he sees Mahādeva and his boon-bestowing and auspicious goddess, and close to her the great Nārada, and received the highest satisfaction. Dadhīchi, versed in meditation, having ascertained that all the gods had adopted a common resolution that they would not invite Mahādeva, issued [127] A verse closely resembling this occurs in the Vāyu Purāṇa.

[128] The corresponding line runs thus in the Vāyu Purāṇa: Sarveshām eka-mantro 'yaṁ yeneśo na nimantritaḥ; which Prof. Wilson thus renders: "The invocation that is not addressed to Īśa is, for all, but a solitary (and imperfect) summons."

[129] Instead of bhāgam, etc., the Vāyu Purāṇa reads sarvam prabhor vibhor hy āhavanīya-nityam.

forth from that [sacrificial] ground, and spake thus: 'By worshipping that which ought not to be worshipped, and neglecting to worship that which ought to be worshipped, a man ever incurs sin equal to that of a murderer. I have never before uttered, neither shall I ever utter, falsehood. Among gods and rishis I declare the truth. Behold Paśubhartṛi (Śiva) arrived, the creator, the master of the world, the lord of all, the eater of the sacrifice.' Daksha replied: 'We have many Rudras, armed with tridents, and wearing spirally-braided hair, who occupy eleven places.[130] I know not Maheśvara.' Dadhīchi answered: 'This is a [preconcerted] plan of all [the gods] that he (Mahādeva) has not been invited. Since I perceive Śankara, and no other deity, to be supreme, therefore this sacrifice of Daksha shall not be prosperous.' Daksha spake: 'I offer to the lord of sacrifice (Vishṇu), in a golden vessel, this entire oblation purified by rites and by texts, the share of the incomparable Vishṇu: he is the lord, the all-pervading, the sacrificial fire.'[131] Devī (who, without any preamble, is here introduced as speaking) said: 'What liberality or arduous austerity can I perform whereby my divine, incomprehensible husband may to-day obtain a share, a half-share, or a third?' The god, delighted in aspect, addressed his troubled wife who had thus spoken: 'Thou knowest me not, goddess, slender of waist and limb; nor what speech befits the lord of sacrifice. I know, O large-eyed; but the wicked, devoid of [130] Compare the phrase ekādaśātmaka above, p. 367.

[131] Prof. Wilson (p. 124 f.) has the following note on the parallel passage of the Vāyu Purāṇa: "The Kūrma Purāṇa gives also this discussion between Dadhīcha and Daksha, and their dialogue contains some curious matter. Daksha, for instance, states that no portion of a sacrifice is ever allotted to Śiva, and no prayers are directed to be addressed to him, or to his bride (sarveshv eva hi yajneshu na bhāgaḥ parikalpitaḥ | na mantrāḥ bhāryayā sārdhaṁ Śankarasyeti neshyate). Dadhīcha apparently evades the objection, and claims a share for Rudra, consisting of the triad of gods, as one with the sun, who is undoubtedly hymned by the several ministering priests of the Vedas (sa stūyate sahasrāṁśuḥ sāmagādhvaryu-hotṛibhiḥ | paśyainaṁ Viśvakarmāṇaṁ Rudram mūrti-trayīmayam). Daksha replies that the twelve Ādityas receive special oblations; that they are all the suns; and that he knows of no other. The Munis, who overhear the dispute, concur in his sentiments (ye ete dvādaśādityāḥ Āditya-yajña-bhāginaḥ | sarve sūryāḥ iti jneyāḥ na hy anyo vidyate raviḥ | evam ukte tu munayaḥ samāyātāḥ didṛikshavaḥ | vāḍham ity abruvan Dakshaṁ tasya sāhāyya-kāriṇaḥ). These notions seem to have been exchanged for others in the days of the Padma P. and Bhāgavata, as they place Daksha's neglect of Śiva to the latter's filthy practices—his going naked, smearing himself with ashes," etc., etc. An abstract of the story as given in the Bhāgavata will be found in the text.

reflection, know not: and the three worlds, including Indra and the gods, are to-day altogether bewildered with thy bewilderment. Worshippers praise me at the sacrifice, singers of the sāma chant the rathantara, Brahmans, versed in the veda (brahma), adore me, and Adhvaryu (i.e. Yajurvedic) priests divide for me a portion.'[132] Devī replied: 'Doubtless, every common man praises and magnifies himself in an assembly of women.' Mahādeva answered: 'I praise not myself, queen of the gods; behold, slender-waisted, beautiful-complexioned [goddess], what being I shall create.'" Mahādeva accordingly creates a dreadful being, who, attended by hosts of other frightful creatures, demolishes all Daksha's preparations for his sacrifice. Brahmā and the other gods humbly inquire of this destroyer who he is. He replies that he is neither Rudra nor Devī, but Vīrabhadra, sent to destroy the sacrifice, and exhorts them to submit to Mahādeva, whose wrath is better than the beneficence of any other god (varaṁ krodho 'pi devasya vara-dānaṁ na chānyataḥ). Upon this Daksha sings the praises of Maheśvara.[133] The latter then appears, and assents to Daksha's request that his preparations for sacrifice shall not be fruitless (vv. 10338 ff.). Daksha then celebrates him by reciting his eight thousand names.

The following is an abstract of the same story as told in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, book iv. sections 2–7, with a colouring different from that of the Mahābhārata, and some interesting illustrations of the hostility between the Śaivas and the Vaishṇavas, or between the former and the more orthodox adherents of the Vedas, which, notwithstanding the conciliation of the conflicting views introduced by the writer at the close of the story, no doubt had, and perhaps still has, a real existence in the minds of many of the sectaries. Satī, the wife of Śiva, was the daughter of Daksha, as we are told in the same work (iv. 1, 47, 48): Prasūtim Mānavīm Dakshaḥ upayemè hy Ajātmajaḥ | tasyāṁ sasarja duhitṛīḥ shoḍaśāmala-lochanāḥ | trayodaśādād Dharmāya tathaikām Agnaye vibhuḥ | pitṛibhyaḥ ekāṁ yuktebhyo Bhavāyaikām bhava-chhide | "Daksha, the son of Aja (the 'unborn'—he is said [v. 11] to be the son of Brahmā=Aja), married Prasūti, the daughter of Manu. From her he begot sixteen pure-eyed daughters. Of these this lord gave thirteen to Dharma, one to Agni, one to the meditative [or united, saṁyatebhyo militebhyo vā, Comm.] Pitṛis, and one to Bhava (Śiva), the destroyer of existence." Satī, however, bore no children to Śiva. i. 64. Bhavasya patnī tu Satī Bhavaṁ devam anuvratā | ātmanaḥ sadṛiśam putraṁ na lebhe guṇa-śīlataḥ |

[132] The text of the Vāyu Purāṇa as translated by Prof. Wilson (Vish. Pur., p. 65 = p. 128 of Dr. Hall's ed. vol. i.) differs somewhat from that of the Mahābhārata, as here given. The former text has been copied for me by Prof. Fitz-Edward Hall from the Guikowar MS. in the India Office Library, and is as follows: Mamādhvare śaṁsitāraḥ stuvanti rathaṁtare sāma gāyanti geyam | abrāhmaṇe brahma-satre yajante mamādhvaryavaḥ kalpayante chabhāgam | "At my sacrifice worshippers praise (me); in the rathantara they sing the sāma song; they adore (me) in a sacrifice of devotion without Brahmans; and the adhvaryus divide for me a portion." It is remarkable that Mahādeva's worship should be here described as performed "without Brahmans." But what are we to make of the word "adhvaryu"? Could it mean, in later times at least, anything else than the Brahmanical priest so called?

[133] In this passage (v. 10332) Mahādeva is called Viśvakarman (Devo nāhūyate tatra Viśvakarmā Maheśvaraḥ). Compare the passage from the Rāmāyaṇa, above, p. 368 f., and note 131, p. 376. There appears to be some confusion in the narrative as given in verses 10331 ff. Though Daksha had already made his submission to Mahādeva, the story seems to be begun over again, or recapitulated.

In the second section we are informed how enmity arose between Mahādeva and his father-in-law Daksha. It appears that the gods and rishis were assembled at a sacrifice celebrated by the Prajāpatis. On the entrance of Daksha, all the personages who were present, rose to salute him, excepting only Virinchya (Brahmā) and Mahādeva. Daksha, after making his obeisance to Brahmā, sat down by his command; but was offended at the treatment he received from Śiva (iv. 2, 8 ff.): Prān nishaṇṇam Mṛidaṁ dṛishṭvā nāmṛishat tad-anādṛitaḥ | uvācha vāmaṁ chakshurbhyām abhivīkshya dahann iva | śrūyatām brahmarshayo me saha-devāḥ sahāgnayaḥ | sādhūnām bruvato vṛittam nājnānād na cha matsarāt | ayaṁ tu loka-pālānāṁ yaśoghno nirapatrapaḥ | sadbhir ācharitaḥ panthāḥ yena staḍdhena dīkshitaḥ | esha me śishyatām prāpto yan me duhitur agrahīt | pāṇim viprāgni-mukhataḥ sāvitryāḥ iva sādhu-vat | gṛihītvā mṛiga-śāvākṣyāḥ pāṇim markaṭa-lochanaḥ | pratyutthānābhivādārhe vāchā 'py akṛita nochitam | lupta-kriyāyāśuchaye mānine bhinna-setave | anichhann apy adāṁ bālāṁ śūdrāyeveśatīṁ giram | pretāvāseshu ghoreshu pretair bhūta-gaṇair vṛitaḥ | ṛitaty unmatta-vad nagno vyupta-keśo hasan rudan | chitā-bhasma-kṛita-snānaḥ preta-sraṅ nrasthi-bhūshaṇaḥ | śivāpadeśo hy aśivo matto matta-janapriyaḥ | patiḥ pramatha-bhūtānāṁ tamo-mātrātmakātmanām | tasmai unmāda-nāthāya nashṭa-śauchāya durhṛide | dattā mayā vata sādhvī chodite parameshṭhinā | vinindyaivaṁ sa Girīśam apratīpam avasthitam | Daksho 'thāpaḥ upa- spṛiśya kruddhaḥ śaptum prachakrame | ayaṁ tu deva-yajane Indropendrādibhir Bhavaḥ | saha bhāgaṁ na labhatāṁ devair deva-gaṇādhamaḥ | "Beholding Mṛiḍa (Śiva) previously seated, Daksha did not brook his want of respect; and looking at him obliquely with his eyes, as if consuming him, thus spake: 'Hear me, ye Brahman rishis, with the gods and the Agnis, while I, neither from ignorance nor from passion, describe what is the practice of virtuous persons. But this shameless being (Śiva) detracts from the reputation of the guardians of the world,—he by whom, stubborn as he is, the course pursued by the good is transgressed. He assumed the position of my disciple, inasmuch as, like a virtuous person, in the face of Brahmans and of fire, he took the hand of my daughter, who resembled Sāvitrī. This monkey-eyed [god], after having taken the hand of [my] fawn-eyed [daughter], has not even by word shown suitable respect to me whom he ought to have risen and saluted. Though unwilling, I yet gave my daughter to this impure and proud abolisher of rites and demolisher of barriers, like the word of the Veda[134] to a Śūdra. He roams about in dreadful cemeteries, attended by hosts of ghosts and sprites, like a madman, naked, with dishevelled hair, laughing, weeping, bathed in the ashes of funeral piles, wearing a garland of dead men's [skulls], and ornaments of human bones, pretending to be Śiva (auspicious) but in reality Aśiva (inauspicious), insane, beloved by the insane, the lord of Pramathas and Bhūtas (sprites), beings whose nature is essentially darkness. To this wicked-hearted lord of the infuriate, whose purity has perished, I have, alas! given my virtuous daughter, at the instigation of Brahmā.'[135] Having thus reviled Giriśa (Śiva), who did not oppose him, Daksha having then touched water, incensed, began to curse him [thus]: 'Let this Bhava (S'iva), lowest of the gods, never, at the worship of the gods, receive any portion along with the gods Indra, Upendra (Vishṇu), and others.'" Having delivered his malediction, Daksha departed. A counter-malediction, as follows, was then uttered upon him and the Brahmans who took his part, by Nandīśvara, one of the chief of Mahādeva's followers:

[134] Uśatīṁ giram, which the commentator explains veda-lakshaṇāṁ giram. It occurs also elsewhere in this same Purāṇa, as in iii. 16, 13, where the Comm. renders it by kamanīyām, "to be loved." See Böhtlingk and Roth, vol. v., p. 1204, s.v.

[135] The commentator gives as follows what he calls the real, esoteric, sense of this abuse:— Vāstavas tv ayam arthaḥ | luptāḥ kriyāḥ yasmin para-brahma-rūpatvāt | ataḥ eva nāsti śuchir yasmāt | amānine abhinna-setave iti cha chhedaḥ | tasya parameśvarasya madīyā mānushī kanyā kathaṁ yogyā syād iti lajjādinā dātum anichhann api tat-sambandha-lobhena dattavān | 'śūdrāyeti' anarhatva-mātre dṛishṭānto na hīnatve pūrvāpara-sva-vachana-virodhāpatteḥ | etad uktam bhavati | yathā kaśchit śūdrāya vedaṁ artha-lobhena dadāti | 'pretāvāseshv' ityādi sarvaṁ vidambana-mātram iti | svayam eva āha 'unmatta-vad' iti | anyathā 'unmattaḥ' ity eva avakshyat | 'aśivaḥ' nāsti śivo yasmāt | amattaḥ | amatta-jana-priyaḥ | iti chhedaḥ | 'patiḥ pramatha-bhūtānām' iti bhakta-vātsalyam āha | tāmasān api dosham apanīya pāti iti | nashṭānām api śauchaṁ śuddhir yasmāt | dushṭeshv apy eṣe mayā anukampyāḥ iti hṛin mano yasya

21 ff.—Yaḥ etam martyam uddiśya bhagavaty apratidruhi | druhyaty ajnaḥ pṛithag-dṛishṭis tattvato vimukho bhavet | gṛiheshu kūṭa-dharmeshu sakto grāmya-sukhechhayā | karma-tantraṁ vitanutād[136] veda-vāda-vipanna-dhīḥ | buddhyā parābhidhyāyinyā vismṛitātma-gatiḥ paśuḥ | strī-kāmaḥ so 'stu nitarāṁ Daksho vasta-mukho 'chirat | vidyā-buddhir avidyāyāṁ karmamayyām asau jaḍaḥ | saṁsarantv iha ye chāmum anu S'arvāvamāninam | giraḥ śrutāyāḥ pushpiṇyāḥ madhu-gandhena bhūriṇā | mathnā chonmathitātmānaḥ sammuhyantu Hara-dvishaḥ | sarva-bhakshāḥ dvijāḥ vṛittyai dhṛita-vidyā-tapo-vratāḥ | vitta-dehendriyārāmāḥ yāchakāḥ vicharantv iha | "May the ignorant being who, from regard to this mortal (Daksha), and considering [S'iva] as distinct [from the supreme sa durhṛit tasmai | 'vata' iti harshe | Brahmaṇo vākyā[l ?] lajjā-bhayādikam pahityajya dattā ity arthaḥ | "The real meaning (of vv. 13 ff.) is this: 'He in whom works are destroyed, owing to his character of supreme Brahma; in consequence of which there is none purer than he.' Instead of mānine and bhinna-setave, the division of words may also be amānine, abhinna-setave, 'not proud,' 'not demolisher of barriers.' Though unwilling to give my daughter through modesty, etc., from a feeling that my human daughter could not be worthy of the supreme lord, I nevertheless gave her from a covetous desire of being connected with him. The words 'as to a S'ūdra' are merely an illustration to express unfitness, and not defectiveness, otherwise there would be a contradiction between his preceding and his following words. The sense is this: 'just as any one through covetousness of money gives the Veda to a S'ūdra.' The words 'in cemeteries,' etc., are a mere disguise. He himself says 'like a madman.' Otherwise he would have said 'a madman.' Aśiva, inauspicious, means he than whom none is more auspicious. The words matta and matta-jana-priya should be so divided as to be preceded by a negative, and thus mean 'not insane,' 'beloved by the not-insane.' The words 'lord of Pramathas,' etc., intimate his love for those devoted to him. The sense is that, removing their faultiness, he cherishes even those who have the quality of darkness. Nashṭa-Śauchāya means that from him comes purity to the depraved. Durhṛit means he whose heart, feeling, suggests that 'even these, although wicked, are to be compassionated by me.' Vata intimates joy. 'Owing to the injunction of Brahmā, abandoning modesty, fear, etc., I gave my daughter:' such is the sense."

[136] This is Burnouf's reading. It is an archaic, Vedic, form. The Bombay edition reads vitanute.

spirit],—hates the deity who does not return the hatred,—be averse to the truth. Devoted to domestic life, in which frauds are prevalent,[137] let him, from a desire of vulgar pleasures, practise the round of ceremonies, with an understanding degraded by Vedic prescriptions.[138] Forgetting the nature of soul, with a mind which contemplates other things, let Daksha, brutal, be excessively devoted to women, and have speedily the face of a goat. Let this stupid being, who has a conceit of knowledge, and all those who follow this contemner of Sarva (Siva), continue to exist in this world in ceremonial ignorance. Let the enemies of Hara (Siva), whose minds are disturbed by the strong spirituous odour and the excitement of the flowery words[139] of the Veda, become deluded! Let those Brahmans, eating all sorts of food, professing knowledge and practising austerities and ceremonies [merely] for subsistence, delighting in riches and in corporeal and sensual enjoyments, wander about as beggars!"

The wrath of Bhrigu, one of the sages present at the sacrifice, is aroused by this curse:

27 ff.—Tasyaivaṁ dadataḥ śāpaṁ śrutvā dvija-kulāya vai | Bhṛiguḥ pratyasṛijach chhāpam brahma-daṇḍaṁ duratyayam | Bhava-vrata-dharāḥ ye cha ye cha tān samanuvratāḥ | pāshaṇḍinas te bhavantu sachchhāstra-paripanthinaḥ | nashṭa-śauchāḥ mūḍha-dhiyo jaṭā-bhasmāsthi-dhāriṇaḥ | viśantu Śiva-dīkshāyaṁ yatra daivaṁ surāsavam | brahma cha brāhmaṇāṁś chaiva yad yūyam parinindatha | setum vidhāraṇam puṁsām ataḥ pāshaṇḍam āśritāḥ | esha eva hi lokānāṁ śivaḥ panthā sanātanaḥ | yam pūrve chānusaṁtasthur yat-pramāṇaṁ Janārdanaḥ | tad brahma paramaṁ śuddhaṁ satām vartma sanātanam | vigarhya yāta pāshaṇḍaṁ daivaṁ vo

[137] The words so rendered, gṛiheshu kūṭa-dharmeshu, occur thrice in this Purāṇa (see Böhtlingk and Roth s.v. kūṭa-dharma), viz., in iii. 30, 10; in iv. 25, 6; and in the verse before us. In his note on iii. 30, 10 (verse 9 in the Bombay edition) the commentator explains the word kūṭa-dharmeshu as meaning houses "in which frauds, practices such as roguery in regard to money, etc., prevail" (kūṭāḥ vitta-śāṭhyādi-bahulāḥ dharmāḥ yeshu). In his remarks on the other passages he gives no explanation of the word. In his translation of iii. 30, 10, M. Burnouf renders the term by "sa maison où dominent le mensonge [et la misère," duḥkha-tantreshu]; in the verse before us by "attaché dans les maisons, à des vils devoirs"; and similarly in iv. 25, 6, by "au milieu des devoirs vulgaires d'un maître de maison."

[138] This depreciation of the Vedas may have arisen from a consciousness on the part of the Śaivas, that their worship was not very consistent with the most venerated Scriptures of their own country.

[139] Compare the Bhagavad Gītā ii. 42 ff., quoted in the 3rd vol. of this work, p. 31 f.

yatra bhūta-rāṭ | "Hearing him thus utter a curse against the tribe of Brahmans, Bhṛigu launched a counter-imprecation, a Brahmanical weapon, hard to be evaded: 'Let those who practise the rites of Bhava (Mahādeva), and all their followers, be heretics, and opponents of the true scriptures. Having lost their purity, deluded in understanding, wearing matted hair, and ashes and bones, let them undergo the initiation of Śiva, in which spirituous liquor is the deity. Since ye revile the veda (brahma) and Brahmans, the barriers by which men are restrained, ye have embraced heresy. For this [veda] is the auspicious (śiva) eternal path of the people, which the ancients have trod, and wherein Janārdana (Vishṇu) is the authority. Reviling this veda (brahma), supreme, pure, the eternal path of the virtuous, follow the heresy in which your god is the king of goblins.'"

On hearing this imprecation, Śiva departed with his followers, while Daksha and the other Prajāpatis celebrated for a thousand years the sacrifice in which Vishṇu was the object of adoration.

The enmity between the father-in-law and son-in-law continues (sect. 3). Daksha being elevated by Brahmā to the rank of chief of the Prajāpatis, becomes elated. He commences a great sacrifice called Vṛihaspatisava. Seeing the other gods with their wives passing to this sacrifice, Satī presses her husband, Śiva, to accompany her thither. He refers to the insults which he had received from her father, and advises her not to go. She, however (sect. 4), being anxious to see her relatives, disregards his warning and goes; but being slighted by her father, Daksha, she reproaches him for his hostility to her husband, and threatens to abandon the corporeal frame by which she was connected with her parent. She then voluntarily gives up the ghost. Seeing this, Śiva's attendants, who had followed her, rush on Daksha to kill him. Bhṛigu, however, throws an oblation into the southern fire, pronouncing a Yajus text suited to destroy the destroyers of sacrifice (yajna-ghna-ghnena yajushā dakshiṇāgnau juhāva ha). A troop of Ṛibhus in consequence spring up, who put Śiva's followers to flight. Śiva is filled with wrath when he hears of the death of Satī (sect. 5). From a lock of his hair, which he tore out, a gigantic demon arose, whom he commanded to destroy Daksha and his sacrifice. This demon proceeds with a troop of Śiva's followers, and they all execute the mandate. 15 ff. Rurujur yajna-pātrāṇi tathaike 'gnīn anāśayan |

kuṇḍeshv amūtrayan kechid bibhidur vedi-mekhalāḥ | abādhanta munīn anye eke patnīr atarjayan | apare jagṛihur devān pratyāsannān palāyitān | . . . 19. juhvataḥ sruva-hastasya śmaśrūṇi bhagavān Bhavaḥ | Bhṛigor lulunche sadasi yo 'hasat śmaśru darśayan | Bhagasya netre bhagavān pātitasya rushā bhuvi | ujjahāra sadaḥstho 'kshṇā yaḥ śapantam asūsuchat | Pūshṇaś chāpātayad dantān Kālingasya yathā Balaḥ | śapyamāne garimaṇi[140] yo 'hasad darśayan dataḥ | 15. "Some broke the sacrificial vessels, others destroyed the fires, others made water in the ponds, others cut the boundary-cords of the sacrificial ground; others assaulted the Munis, others reviled their wives; others seized the gods who were near, and those who had fled. . . . . 19. The divine Bhava (Śiva) plucked out the beard of Bhṛigu, who was offering oblations with a ladle in his hand, and who had laughed in the assembly, showing his beard. He also tore out the eyes of Bhaga, whom in his wrath he had felled to the ground, and who, when in the assembly, had made a sign to [Daksha when] cursing [Śiva]. He moreover knocked out the teeth of Pūshan[141] (as Bala did the king of Kalinga's), who (Pūshan) had laughed, showing his teeth, when the great god was being cursed." Tryambaka (Śiva, or Vīrabhadra, according to the commentator) then cuts off the head of Daksha, but not without some difficulty. The gods report all that had passed to Svayambhū (Brahmā), who, with Vishṇu, had not been present (sect. 6). Brahmā advises the gods to propitiate Śiva, whom they had wrongfully excluded from a share in the sacrifice (v. 5. athāpi yūyaṁ kṛita-kilvishāḥ Bhavaṁ ye barhisho bhāga-bhājam parāduḥ). The deities, headed by Aja (Brahmā), accordingly proceed to Kailāsa, when they see Śiva "bearing the linga desired by devotees, ashes, a staff, a tuft of hair, an antelope's skin, and a digit of the moon, his body shining like an evening cloud" (v. 35. lingaṁcha tāpasābhīshṭam bhasma-daṇḍa-jaṭājinam | angena sandhyā-'bhra-ruchā chandra-rekhāṁcha bibhratam). Brahmā addresses Mahādeva "as the eternal Brahma, the lord of Śakti and Śiva, who are respectively the womb and the seed of the universe,—who, in sport, like a spider, forms all things from Śakti and Śiva, who are consubstantial with himself, and preserves and reabsorbs them" (vv.

[140] Garimaṇi gurutare Rudre | Comm.

[141] See Taitt. Sanhitā, ii. 6, 8, 3, and other texts quoted above, pp. 200 ff., for the older story.

41 f. jānc tvām īśaṁ viśvasya jagato yoni-vījayoḥ | Śakteḥ Śivasya cha param yat tad Brahma nirantaram | tvam eva bhagavann etach Chhiva-Śaktyoḥ sarūpayoḥ | viśvaṁ śrijasi pāśy atsi hrīḍann ūrṇa-paṭo yathā). (A similar supremacy, as we shall see, is ascribed to Vishṇu in section 7.) Brahmā adds that it was this great being who had instituted sacrifice, and all the regulations which Brahmans devoutly observe; and entreats him, who is beyond all illusion, to have mercy on those who, overcome by its influence, had wrongly attached importance to ceremonial works, and to restore the sacrifice of Daksha, at which a share had been refused to him by evil priests (v. 49. Na yatra bhāgaṁ tava bhāgino daduḥ kuya-jvinaḥ). Mahādeva partly relents (sect. 7), and allows Daksha to have a goat's-faced head, Bhaga to see with Mitra's eyes, Pūshan to eat with the teeth of his worshipper, Bhṛigu to have a he-goat's beard, etc. (vv. 3 ff.) Daksha, after having had a goat's head fitted to his body, celebrates the praises of Śiva (vv. 8 ff.). The sacrifice is then recommenced, and in order to its completion, and to remove the pollution occasioned by the touch of Mahādeva's warriors, an oblation is made to Vishṇu on three platters (v. 17. Vaishṇavaṁ yajna-santatyai trikapālaṁ dvijottamāḥ | puroḍāśaṁ niravapan vīra-saṁsarga-śuddhaye). Hari (Vishṇu) being meditated on, then appears (v. 18), is saluted with the greatest reverence by the gods, headed by Brahmā, Indra, and Śiva (Tryaksha); is lauded successively by Daksha, by the priests, by Rudra himself, etc., etc. (vv. 26 ff.), and at length expresses himself as follows, in such a manner as to demonstrate the futility of the dispute between Daksha and Mahādeva, and to show that he himself was the one supreme deity, of whom all the others were only the manifestations, though in reality one in their essence:

V. 50. Śrī-Bhagavān uvācha | aham Brahmā cha Śarvaś cha jagataḥ kāraṇam param | ātmeśvaraḥ upadrashṭā svayaṁdṛig aviśeshaṇaḥ | 51. ātma-māyāṁ samāviśya so 'ham guṇamayīṁ dvija | śrijan rakshan haran viśvaṁ dadhre saṁjñāṁ kriyochitām | 52. tasmin Brahmany advitīye kevale paramātmani | Brahma-Rudrau cha bhūtāni bhedenājño 'nupaśyati | 53. yathā pumān na svāṅgeshu śiraḥ-pāny-ādishu kvachit | pārakya-buddhiṁ kurute evam bhūteshu mat-paraḥ | 54. Trayāṇām eka-bhāvānāṁ yo na paśyati vai bhidām | sarva-bhūtātmanām brahman sa śāntim adhigachhati | 50. "I am Brahmā and Śarva (Śiva), the supreme cause of the world, the soul, the lord, the witness, the self-manifesting (or, self-beholding), devoid of attributes. 51. Entering into my own illusion consisting of the [three] Guṇas (qualities)—creating, preserving, and destroying—I have assumed names corresponding to my several acts. 52. In that one and only Brahma, the supreme Spirit, the ignorant person perceives a distinction of Brahmā and Rudra, and creatures. 53. But as a man does not think of his own members, his head, hands, etc., as belonging to another, so the man who is devoted to me [does not look upon] created things [as distinct from me]. 54. He who beholds no distinction between the three gods who are one in essence, and the soul of all things, attains tranquillity."

Daksha, after adoring Vishṇu, worships the other gods, and offers to Rudra his proper share in the sacrifice (vv. 55 f.). Satī, the daughter of Daksha, who had abandoned her original body, is born again as the daughter of Himavat and Menā (v 58. evaṁ Dākshāyaṇī hitvā Satī pūrva-kalevaram | jajne Himavataḥ kshetre Menāyām iti śuśruma).[142]

The Śaiva compiler of the Linga Purāṇa takes his revenge on the Vaishṇava writers, who, like the author of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, have exalted Vishṇu at the expense of Śiva, by narrating the following legend of an undignified dispute between Brahmā and Vishṇu regarding their respective claims to superiority, and of the apparition of the

[142] The same account of Satī's double birth is given in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 8, 9 ff.: Evam-prakāro Rudro 'sau Satīm bhāryām avindata | Daksha-kopāchcha tatyāja sā Satī svaṁ kalevaram | Himavad-duhitā sā 'bhūd Menāyāṁ dvija-sattama | upayeme punaś chomām ananyām bhagavān Bhavaḥ | "Rudra, being of the character thus described (i.e. one of the eight forms of the son born to Brahmā: see above, pp. 339 ff.) obtained Satī for his wife. This Satī abandoned her body in consequence of the anger of Daksha. She then became the daughter of Himavat and Menā; and the divine Bhava again married Umā who was identical [with his former spouse]." In the preceding section (the 7th) of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, Satī is mentioned as one of the twenty-four daughters of Daksha; but the husband, Bhava, to whom she is said to have been given in marriage, is enumerated (as is also Agni) among the Munis to whom Daksha's daughters were wedded: Tābhyaḥ śishṭāḥ kanīyasyaḥ ekādaśa sulochanāḥ | Khyātiḥ Saty atha Sambhūtiḥ Smṛitiḥ Prītiḥ Kshamā tathā | Sannatiś chānusūyā cha Ūrjā Svāhā Svadhā tathā | Bhṛigur Bhavo Marīchiś cha tathā chaivāngirāḥ muniḥ | Pulastyaḥ Pulahaś chaiva Kratuś charshi-varas tathā | Atrir Vasishṭho Vahniś cha Pitaraś cha yathā-kramam | Khyāty-ādyāḥ jagṛihuḥ kanyāḥ munayo muni-sattama | "Younger than them (the other thirteen daughters of Daksha) were eleven virtuous and lovely-eyed damsels, Khyāti, Satī, Sambhūti, Smṛiti, Prīti, Kshamā, Sannati, Anusūyā, Ūrjā, Svāhā, and Svadhā. Bhṛigu, Bhava, Marīchi, the muni Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu the excellent rishi, Atri, Vasishṭha, Vahni (i.e. Agni or Fire), and the Pitris,—these munis in order married Khyāti and the other maidens."

Linga to rebuke and humble them by pointing out the inferiority of both to the supreme Mahādeva:

Linga Purāṇa, i. 17, 5–52.—Pitāmahaḥ uvācha | Pradhānaṁ lingam ākhyātaṁ lingī cha parameśvaraḥ | rakshārtham ambudhau mahyaṁ Vishṇos tv āsīt surottamāḥ | vaimānike gate sarge jana-lokaṁ saharshibhiḥ | sthitikāle tadā pūrṇe tataḥ pratyāhṛite tathā | chatur-yuga-sahasrānte satyalokaṁ gate surāḥ | vinā "dhipatyaṁ samatāṁ gate 'nte Brahmaṇo mama | śushke cha sthāvare sarve tv anāvṛishtyā cha sarvaśaḥ | paśavo mānushāḥ vṛikshāḥ piśāchāḥ piśitāśanāḥ | gandharvādyāḥ krameṇaiva nirdagdhāḥ bhānu-bhānubhiḥ | ekārṇave mahāghore tamo-bhūte samantataḥ | pushṭe (?) hy ambhasi yogātmā nirmalo nirupaplavaḥ | sahasra-śīrshāḥ viśvātmā sahasrākshaḥ sahasra-pāt | sahasrabāhuḥ sarvajñaḥ sarva-deva-bhavodbhavaḥ | Hiraṇyagarbho rajasā tamasā S'ankaraḥ svayam | sattvena sarvago Vishṇuḥ sarvātmatve Maheśvaraḥ | kālātmā kāla-nābhas tu śuklaḥ kṛishṇas tu nirguṇaḥ | Nārāyaṇo mahābāhuḥ sarvātmā sadasanmayaḥ | tathā bhūtam ahaṁ dṛishṭvā śayānam pankajekshaṇam | māyayā mohitas tasya tam avocham amarshitaḥ | kas tvaṁ vadeti hastena samutthāpya sanātanam | tadā hasta-prahāreṇa tīvreṇa sa dṛidhena tu | prabuddho 'hīya-śayanāt samāsīnaḥ kshaṇaṁ vaśī | dadarśa nidrā-viklinnaṁ nīrajāmala-lochanaḥ | mām agre saṁsthitam dhāsā'dhyāsito bhagavān Hariḥ | āha chotthāya bhagavān hasan mām madhuraṁ sakṛit | svāgataṁ svāgataṁ vatsa pitāmaha mahādyute | tasya tad vachanaṁ śrutvā smita-pūrvaṁ surarshabhāḥ | rajasā viddha-vairaś cha tam avochaṁ Janārdanam | bhāshase vatsa vatseti sarga-saṁhāra-kāraṇam | mām ihāntaḥ-smitaṁ kṛitvā guruḥ śishyam ivānagha | kartāraṁ jagatāṁ sākshāt prakṛiteścha pravartakam | sanātanam ajaṁ Vishṇuṁ Virinchiṁ viśva-sambhavam | viśvātmānaṁ vidhātāraṁ dhātāram pankajekshaṇam | kimartham bhāshase mohād vaktum arhasi satvaram | so 'pi māṁ āha jagatāṁ kartā 'ham iti lokaya | bhartā hartā bhavān angād avatīrṇo mamāvyayāt | vismṛito 'si jagannāthaṁ Nārāyaṇam anāmayam | purusham paramātmānam puru-hūtam purushṭutam | Vishṇum achyutam īśānaṁ viśvasya prabhavodbhavam | tavāparādho nāsty atra mama māyā-kṛitaṁ tv idam | śṛiṇu satyaṁ chaturvaktra sarva-deveśvaro hy aham | kartā netā cha hartā cha na mayā 'sti samo vibhuḥ | aham eva param Brahma paraṁ tatṭvam pitāmaha | aham eva paraṁ jyotiḥ paramātmā tv ahaṁ vibhuḥ | yad yad dṛishtaṁ śrutaṁ sarvaṁ jagaty asmiṅś charācharam | tat tad viddhi chaturvaktra sarvam manmayam ity atha |

mayā sṛishṭam purā vyaktaṁ chaturviṁśatikaṁ svayam | nityāntāḥ hy aṇavo baddhāḥ sṛishṭāḥ krodhodbhavādṛyaḥ | prasādād hi bhavān aṇḍāny anekānīha līlayā | sṛishṭā ḥuddhir ṃayā tasyām ahankāras tridhā tataḥ | tanmātra-panchakaṁ tasmād mano ḍehendriyāṇi cha | ākāśādīni bhūtāni bhautikāni ça ha līlayā | ity uktavati tasṃiṁś cha mayi chāpi vachas tathā | āvayoś chābhavad yuddhaṁ sughoraṁ romaharshaṇam | pralayārṇava-madhye tu rajasā baddha-vairayoḥ | etasminn antare lingam abhavach chāvayoḥ puraḥ | vivāda-śamanārthaṁ hi prabodhārthaṁ tathā"vayoḥ | jvālā-mālā-sahasrāḍhyaṁ kālānala-śatopamam | kshaya-vriddhi-vinirmuktam ādi-madhyānta-varjitam | anaupamyam anirdeśyam avyaktaṁ viśva-sambhavam | tasya jvālā-sahasreṇa mohito bhagavān Hariḥ | mohitam prāha mām atra parīkshāvo 'gni-sambhavam | adho gamishyāmy anala-stambhasyānupamasya cha | bhavan ūrdhvam prayatnena gantum arhasi (sic) satvaram | evaṁ vyāhṛitya viśvātmā svarūpam akarot tadā | vārāham aham apy āśu haṁsatvam prāptavān surāḥ | tadā-prabhṛiti mām āhur haṁsaṁ haṁso virāḍ iti | haṁsa haṁseti yo brūyād māṁ haṁsaḥ sa bhavishyati | suśveto hy analākshaś cha viśvataḥ paksha-saṁyutaḥ | mano-'nila-javo bhūtvā gato 'haṁ chordhvataḥ surāḥ | Nārāyaṇo 'pi viśvātmā nīlānjana-chayopamam | daśa-yojana-vistīrṇaṁ śata-yojanam āyatam | Meru-parvata-varshmāṇaṁ gaura-tīkshṇāgra-dashṭriṇam | kālāditya-samābhāsaṁ dīrgha-ghoṇam mahāsvanam | hrasva-pādaṁ vichitrāngaṁ jaitraṁ driḍham anaupamam | vārāham asitam rūpam āsthāya gatavān adhaḥ | evaṁ varsha-sahasraṁ tu tvaran Vishṇur adho gataḥ | nāpaśyad alpam apy asya mūlaṁ lingasya sūkaraḥ | tāvat ḳālaṁ gato hy ūrdhvam aham apy arisūdanāḥ | satvaraṁ sarva-yatnena tasyāntaṁ jñātum ichhayā | śrānto hy adṛishtvā tasyāntam ahankārād[143] adho gataḥ | tathaiva bhagavān Vishṇuḥ śrāntaḥ saṁtrasta-lochanaḥ | sarva-deva-bhavas tūrṇam utthitaḥ sa mahāvapuḥ | samāgato mayā sārdham praṇipatya mahāmanāḥ[144] | māyayā mohitaḥ Śambhos tathā saṁvigna-mānasaḥ | pṛishṭhataḥ pārśvataś chaiva chāgrataḥ paramēśvaram | praṇipatya mayā sārdhaṁ sasmāra kim idaṁ tv iti | tadā samabhavat tatra nādo vai śabda-lakshaṇaḥ | om om iti sura-śreshṭhāḥ suvyaktaḥ pluta-lakshaṇaḥ | kim idam tv iti sanchintya mayā tishṭhan mahāsvanam | lingasya dakshiṇe bhāge tadā-'paśyat sanātanam | ādyaṁ varṇam a-kāraṁ tu u-kāraṁ chottare tataḥ | ma-kāram madhyataś chaiva nādāntaṁ tasya chom iti |

[143] In a transcript of this passage made for me in India, and published in my Mataparīkshā, the reading is ahaṁ kālād, which seems a preferable reading.

[144] Bhayād muhuḥ—reading in the Mataparīkshā.

"Pitāmaha (Brahmā, in answer to an inquiry of the gods and rishis) says: 'Pradhāna (nature) is called the Linga, and Parameśvara is called Lingin[145] (the sustainer of the Linga). It arose for the preservation of myself and Vishṇu in the ocean, O deities. When the Vaimānika[146] creation had proceeded with the rishis to the Janaloka,[147] and when—the period of the continuance [of the world] having then been completed,—[all things] had been absorbed, at the end of the thousand sets of four yugas, and had departed to the Satyaloka—I, Brahmā, being at length reduced to a condition of equality [with other creatures] without dominion over them,[148] and all immovable things having become altogether dried up from want of rain,—beasts, men, trees, Piśāchas, flesh-eating goblins, Gandharvas, etc., were by degrees burnt up by the rays of the sun. The one awful ocean being everywhere enveloped in darkness, the great-armed Nārāyaṇa, the soul of all things, formed of existence and non-existence, sleeps[149] upon the water, plunged in contemplation, spotless, tranquil, thousand-headed, the soul of the universe, thousand-eyed, thousand-footed, thousand-armed, omniscient, the source of the existence of all the gods, he who is himself through passion (rajas) Hiraṇyagarbha, through darkness (tamas) Śankara, through goodness (sattva) the all-pervading Vishṇu, and in his universality Maheśvara, having the character of time, having time for his centre,[150] white, black, free from the three qualities, the great-armed Nārāyaṇa, the universal soul, having the essence both of entity and non-entity. Beholding the lotus-eyed deity in this condition, sleeping, I, deluded by his illusion, touching the eternal being with my hand, impatient, said to him, 'Who art thou? speak.' Roused

[145] Lingādhishṭhānam | Comm.

[146] Vaimānike sarge deva-sarge | Comm.

[147] "The different accounts agree in stating that when the three lower spheres are consumed by fire, Maharloka is deserted by its tenants, who repair to the next sphere, or Jana-loka. Jana-loka, according to the Vāyu, is the residence of the rishis and demigods during the night of Brahmā," etc.—Wilson, Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 213, note; see also the same work, p. 632, and note 7 (=pp. 227 ff., vol. ii., and pp. 192 ff., vol. v. of Dr. Hall's ed.).

[148] Lit. "the end of me, Brahmā, having come to equality without dominion."

[149] The reading of the Bombay text is here pushṭe; but some such word as śete, "sleeps," seems to be required by the sense.

[150] Kālānabha is the term in the original. Perhaps the proper reading may be Kālanātha, "the lord of time," which occurs in the Mahābhārata, S'āntip. 10368. See Böhtlingk and Roth s.v.

by the strong and violent stroke of my hand from his snaky couch, sitting for a moment, self-restrained, the deity whose eyes are pure as the lotus looked up heavy with drowsiness. The divine Hari, invested by lustre, seeing me standing before him, rising up, said to me, sweetly smiling at the same time, 'Welcome, welcome, my child, the glorious Pitāmaha.' Hearing these words of his, accompanied by a smile, O deities, my illwill being excited by passion (rajas), I said to Janārdana (Vishṇu): 'Dost thou,' O sinless god, like a teacher speaking to his pupil, smiling inwardly, address the words 'child, child,' to me [who am] the cause of creation and destruction, the undisputed maker of the worlds, and the mover of Prakṛiti (nature), the eternal, unborn, Vishṇu,[151] Virinchi, the source and soul of all things, the disposer, the upholder, the lotus-eyed? Why dost thou foolishly address me thus? Tell me quickly.' He said to me, 'Perceive that I am the maker, the preserver, the destroyer of the worlds; thou hast issued from my imperishable body. Thou hast forgotten the lord of the world, the potent Nārāyaṇa, Purusha, the supreme Spirit, invoked of many, lauded of many, Vishṇu, the undecaying, the lord, the source and origin of the universe. In this there is no fault of thine: it arises from my illusion. Listen to the truth, O four-faced deity: I am the lord of all the gods, the maker, the director, the destroyer; there is none equal to me, all-pervading. I, even I, O Pitāmaha, am the supreme Brahma, the supreme reality, the supreme light, the supreme spirit, all-pervading. Whatever thing, movable or immovable, has been seen or heard of in this world, know, O four-faced deity, that it is all formed of me. By me of old has been created everything that is discernible, consisting of the twenty-four principles; the atoms, which in their ultimate [and most subtile] form are eternal, have been united; and the beings sprung from my wrath[152] (Rudra), etc., have been created. From my complacence thou and numerous (mundane) eggs have been formed in sport. Intelligence (buddhi) has been created by me in sport; and then from it three-fold ahankāra: from it the five tanmātras, and thence mind, with the bodily senses, as also ether and the other elements, and things formed of the elements.' As soon as he and I had thus spoken, a direful and terrific fight arose in the sea of universal dissolution [153] between us twain, whose enmity had been roused by passion. At this time there appeared before us, to stay our contention and admonish us, a luminous Linga, encircled with a thousand wreaths of flame, equal to a hundred final mundane conflagrations, incapable of diminution or increase, without beginning, middle, or end, incomparable, indescribable, undefinable, the source of all things. Bewildered by its thousand flames, the divine Hari said to me (Brahmā) who was myself bewildered, 'Let us on the spot examine the source of [this] fire. I will go down the unequalled pillar of fire, and thou shouldst quickly proceed strenuously upwards.' Having thus spoken, the universal-formed took the shape of a boar, and I immediately assumed the character of a swan.[154] Ever since then men call me Hansa (swan), for Hansa is Virāj.[155] Whoever shall call me 'Hansa, Hansa,' shall become a Hansa (unimpassioned saint). Having become purely white, and fiery-eyed, with wings on every side, rapid as thought and as the wind, I went upwards. Nārāyaṇa too, the soul of all things, having taken the dark form of a boar, like a heap of blue collyrium, ten yojanas broad and a hundred yojanas long, bulky as mount Meru, with white sharp-pointed tusks, luminous as the sun of mundane destruction, long-snouted, loud-grunting, short-footed, wondrous-limbed, victorious, strong, incomparable, proceeded downwards. Speeding thus downwards for a thousand years, Vishṇu, the boar, beheld no base at all of the Linga. For the same period I went rapidly upwards, O destroyers of your foes, with all my might, desirous of learning its end; but I descended from the lapse of time, without seeing its end; and so, too, the divine Vishṇu of vast bulk, the source of all the gods, worn out, with affrighted look, ascended rapidly. Meeting with me, that magnanimous deity, prostrating himself, bewildered by the illusion of Sambhu (Śiva), and disturbed in mind, bowing, along with me, before Parameśvara (Śiva), behind, at the side, and in front, exclaimed, 'What is this?' Then, O chief of the gods, there arose there the articulate sound "om, om," distinct and protracted. Considering what this could be, he then, standing with me, beheld this eternal loud-resounding [monosyllable] upon the right side of the Linga; the first letter a-kāra, after it u-kāra, ma-kāra in the centre, and Om as the result of the sounds.'"

[151] Brahmā here assumes this character as belonging to himself.

[152] See above, pp. 230 and 266 f.

[153] See the commencement of this extract.

[154] In the 5th and 6th sections of the Śiva-purāṇa "it is explained in a puerile and inept manner why Brahmā took the form of a swan and Vishṇu of a boar." —Aufrecht's Catalogue of the Bodl. Sansk. MSS., p. 63*b*.

[155] See the first volume of this work, pp. 9 and 36.

This is followed by a great deal of mysticism about the letters of the word om and the other letters of the alphabet, etc., etc.

The eighteenth section of the same Purāṇa contains a hymn addressed by Vishṇu to Rudra, which recites a list of the attributes of the latter deity. Mahādeva is gratified with this hymn, and tells Brahmā and Vishṇu that they had both sprung from him, offers them a boon, and touches them with his auspicious hands. Nārāyaṇa asks as a boon that they may both entertain an eternal devotion for him; which Mahādeva as a matter of course grants. I cite the verses which follow, in the original:

Linga Purāṇa, 19, 8 ff.—Jānubhyam avanīṁ gatvā punar Nārāyaṇaḥ svayam | praṇipatya cha Viśveśam prāha mandataraṁ vaśī | "āvayor deva-deveśa vivādam ati-śobhanam | ihāgato bhavān yasmād vivāda-śamanāya nau" | tasya tad-vachanaṁ śrutvā punaḥ prāha Haro Harim | praṇipatya sthitam mūrdhnā kṛitāñjali-puṭam smayan | Śrī-mahādevaḥ uvācha | pralaya-sthiti-sargāṇāṁ kartā tvaṁ dharaṇīpate | vatsa vatsa Hare Vishṇo pālayaitach charācharam | tridhā bhinno hy ahaṁ Vishṇo Brahma-Vishṇu-Bhavākhyayā | sarga-rakshā-laya-guṇair nishkalaḥ parameśvaraḥ | sammōhaṁ tyaja bho Vishṇo pālayainam Pitāmaham | pādme bhavishyati sutaḥ kalpe tava Pitāmahaḥ | tadā drakshyasi māṁ chaivaṁ so 'pi drakshyati padma-jaḥ | evam uktvā sa bhagavāṁs tatraivāntaradhīyata | tadā-prabhṛiti lokeshu lingārchā supratishṭhitā | linga-vedī Mahādevī lingaṁ sākshād Maheśvaraḥ | "The self-restraining Nārāyaṇa, falling on his knees on the ground, and having made obeisance to Viśveśa (Śiva), spoke gently thus: 'Our dispute, O god of gods, has proved most auspicious,[156] since thou hast come hither to allay it.' Having heard these words, Hara (Śiva), smiling, again said to Hari (Vishṇu), who stood making obeisance with his hands joined: 'Thou, lord of the earth, art the author of the creation, continuance and destruction [of the universe]: my child, my child, Hari, Vishṇu, preserve all this moving and stationary world. I, the undivided supreme lord, am divided in a threefold manner under the names of Brahmā, Vishṇu, and Bhava, possessing the attributes of creating, preserving, and destroying. Relinquish, Vishṇu, thy delusion; cherish this Pitāmaha. He shall be thy son in the Pādma Kalpa. Then shalt thou behold me, and he also who sprang from the lotus (Brahmā) shall see me.' Having thus spoken, the deity vanished. Thenceforward the worship of the Linga has been inaugurated in the worlds. The pedestal of the Linga is Mahādevī (Umā), and the Linga is the visible Maheśvara."

[156] I cannot render this sentence, as it stands, otherwise than by taking vivādam for a neuter nominative, though nouns of this formation are masculine. The commentator explains śobhanam as meaning ubhayor api sama-balatvāch chhobhamānam, "brilliant from the equal powers of the two combatants"; and supplies śamaya, "appease, or stop, it" (ataḥ śamaya ity adhyāhāraḥ).

The reader will probably be of opinion that this story does not throw much light on the real origin of the Linga-worship.

The Vishṇu Purāṇa (i. 7, 6 ff.) does not assign a high rank to Rudra; but makes him the offspring of Brahmā (as the Mahābhārata, quoted above, p. 230 and 266 f., makes him of Vishṇu): Sanandanādayo ye cha pūrvaṁ sṛishṭās tu Vedhasā | na te lokeshv asajjanta nirapekshāḥ prajāsu te | sarve te chāgata-jnānāḥ vīta-rāgāḥ vimatsarāḥ | teshv evaṁ nirapeksheshu loka-sṛishṭau mahātmanaḥ | Brahmaṇo 'bhūd mahākrodhas trailokya-dahana-kshamaḥ | tasya krodhāt samudbhūta-jvālā-mālā-vidīpitam | Brahmaṇo 'bhūt tadā sarvaṁ trailokyam akhilam mune | bhrukuṭī-kuṭilāt tasya lalāṭāt krodha-dīpitāt | samutpannas tadā Rudro madhyāhnārka-samaprabhaḥ | ardha-nārī-nara-vapuḥ prachaṇḍo 'ti-śarīravān | "vibhajātmānam" ity uktvā tam Brahmā 'ntardadhe punaḥ | tathokto 'sau dvidhā strītvam purushatvaṁ tathā 'karot | bibheda purushatvaṁ cha daśadhā chaikadhā cha saḥ | saumyāsaumyais tathā śāntāśāntaiḥ strītvaṁ cha sa prabhuḥ | bibheda bahudhā devaḥ svarūpair asitaiḥ sitaiḥ | "Sanandana and the others who were before created by Vedhas (Brahmā) had no regard for the worlds, and were indifferent about offspring, for they had all attained to knowledge, and were free from love and from hatred. As they were thus indifferent to the creation of worlds, the mighty Brahmā was filled with fierce anger, sufficient to burn up the three worlds. The three worlds were illuminated in every part by the wreaths of flame engendered from the wrath of the god. From his forehead, wrinkled with a frown and inflamed with anger, Rudra then sprang forth, glorious as the noonday sun, his body half male and half female, fierce, and huge in bulk. Brahmā disappeared after saying to him, 'Divide thyself.' Being thus addressed, he severed himself into twain, into a male and a female body. The god then divided his male form into eleven portions, gentle and ungentle; and in like manner his female body into many forms black and white." [157]

In the same way the Harivaṅśa says (v. 43): Tato 'sṛijat punar Brahmā Rudraṁ roshātma-sambhavam | "Then Brahmā next created Rudra, the offspring of his anger."

Sect. VII.—Results of the preceding Sections.

The various texts quoted in Sections i.–iv. (pp. 299–355) from the Rig-, the Yajur-, and Atharva-vedas, and from the Brāhmaṇas, relative to Rudra, compose the principal materials which we possess for forming an idea of the characteristics ascribed to that deity in the more ancient portions of Indian literature anterior to the composition of the Epic poems and Purāṇas. The Upanishads from which I have derived the mystical extracts given in the fifth section (pp. 355 ff.) are of uncertain date, and their contents throw but little light on the development of the worship of Rudra. The extracts which I have given from the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata in chapter ii. (pp. 176 f., 184 ff., 223–226, 230 ff., 240 f., 263, 266 ff., 278 ff., and 283–291), and in the last section, while they contain some of the earliest descriptions of which I am aware, of Rudra in the new, and very different, aspect in which he has been conceived in the later ages of Hindū mythology, since he has come to be identified with Śiva or Mahādeva, are yet unfitted to elucidate the process by which he became elevated to the highest rank in the Indian pantheon. I shall, however, draw from these texts a summary of the attributes which they respectively assign to Rudra, which will exhibit the modifications which the conception of this deity undergoes in the later, as compared with the earlier, passages. To my own remarks on this subject, however, I shall prefix some observations by Professors H. H. Wilson, Weber, and Whitney, on the character of the Vedic Rudra.

[157] See Professor Wilson's notes on this passage, V. P., 2nd ed., vol. i., p. 103, ff. The Śāntiparvan of the Mahābhārata also speaks (vv. 13723 ff.) of Mahādeva, the three-eyed, and the great devotee, as having sprung from the forehead of Brahmā, of his coming to visit his father on the mountain Vaijayanta, and of his saluting him respectfully, falling at his feet, and being raised up by him with his left hand. Brahmā then proceeds to unfold to him the nature of Purusha. (Atha tatrāsatas tasya Chaturvaktrasya dhīmataḥ | lalāṭa-prabhavaḥ putraḥ Śivaḥ āgād yadṛichchhayā | ākāśena mahāyogī purā trinayanaḥ prabhuḥ | tataḥ khād nipapātāśu dharaṇīdhara-mūrdhani | agrataś chābhavat prīto vavande chāpi pādayoḥ | tam pādayor nipatitaṁ dṛishṭvā savyena pāṇinā | utthāpayāmasa tadā prabhur ekaḥ Prajāpatiḥ | uvācha chainam bhagavāṁś chirasyāgatam ātmajam.)

The following remarks by Professor Wilson are extracted from the Introductions to the first and second volumes of his translation of the Rig-veda (published, vol. i., 1st ed., in 1850, and 2nd ed. in 1866; and vol. ii. in 1854):

"We have a Rudra, who, in after-times, is identified with Śiva, but who, even in the Purāṇas, is of very doubtful origin and identification; whilst in the Veda he is described as the father of the winds, and is evidently a form of either Agni or Indra. The epithet kaparddin which is applied to him appears, indeed, to have some relation to a characteristic attribute of Śiva,—the wearing of his hair in a peculiar braid; but the term has probably in the Veda a very different signification—one now forgotten,—although it may have suggested in after-time the appearance of Śiva in such a head-dress, as identified with Agni; for instance, kaparddin may intimate his head being surrounded by radiating flame, or the word may be an interpolation; at any rate, no other epithet applicable to Śiva occurs, and there is not the slightest allusion to the form in which, for the last ten centuries at least, he seems to have been almost exclusively worshipped in India, that of the Linga or Phallus: neither is there the slightest hint of another important feature of later Hinduism,—the Trimūrtti, or Tri-une combination of Brahmā, Vishṇu, and Śiva, as typified by the mystical syllable om, although, according to high authority on the religions of antiquity, the Trimūrtti was the first element in the faith of the Hindūs, and the second was the Lingam." [158]—(vol. i., pp. xxvi., xxvii.)

"Of Rudra also, the character is equivocal; but it may be doubted if it partakes in any remarkable degree of that fierceness and wrath which belong to the Rudra of a later date; he is termed, it is true, the slayer of heroes, but so is Indra: the effects of his anger upon men and animals are deprecated; but he is also appealed to as wise and bountiful, the author of fertility and giver of happiness, and his peculiar characteristics are evidently his presiding over medicinal plants and removal of disease, attributes of a beneficent, not of a malignant and irascible deity. As above remarked, the Maruts, or winds, are termed his sons;[159] and this relationship would assimilate him to Indra. There is also a class of inferior deities, termed Rudras, who in one passage are worshippers of Agni, and in another are followers of Indra; being the same as the Maruts. So far, therefore, Rudra might be identified with Indra; but we have the name applied unequivocally to Agni in a hymn exclusively dedicated to that divinity (R. V. i. 27, 10). The term denotes, according to the Scholiast, the 'terrible Agni'; but there is no warrant for this in the text, and we may be content, therefore, with the latter, to regard Rudra as a form or denomination of fire."—(Ibid. pp. xxxvii. f.)

[158] Creuzer, Religions de l'antiquité, book i., chap. i., p. 140.

"Rudra is described, as in the first book, by rather incompatible qualities, as both fierce and beneficent; but his specific province is here also the tutelarship of medicinal plants, and administration of medicine, and he is designated as a physician of physicians (R. V. ii. 33, 4). With respect also to his presiding over medicinal plants, there occurs a passage worthy of note, as among the herbs are those, it is said, which Manu selected, alluding, most probably, to the seeds of the plants which Manu, according to the legend as related in the Mahābhārata, took with him into his vessel at the time of the deluge. There are more particulars of the person of Rudra than usual. He is sometimes said to be brown or tawny, but he is also said to be white-complexioned (R.V. ii. 33, 8); he is soft-bellied and handsome-chinned; he is armed with a bow and arrows, and brilliant with golden ornaments. He is also called the father of the Maruts. There is little, however, in all this, except his fierceness, to identify him with the Rudra of the Purāṇas." —(vol. ii., pp. ix. f.)

The following interesting and ingenious speculations of Professor Weber are translated from his Indische Studien, ii., 19–22 (published in 1853):

"In the beginning of the ninth book of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (see above, p. 347 f.), we obtain a complete explanation of the Śatarudriya (see above, p. 322 ff.). When the preparation of the consecrated place for kindling the fire is completed (chity-upadhāna-parisamāpty-ānantaryam, Sāyaṇa), and the fire has been kindled, and blazes up (dīpyamāno [159] See the Section on the Maruts in the fifth vol. of this work, pp. 147 ff.

'tishṭhat), the gods (i.e. the Brahmans[160]) are terrified by it, yad vai no 'yaṁ na hiṁsyād iti ('lest it should destroy us'): and with the view of appeasing this [howling, hungry] flame, which is conceived of as in the form of Rudra, i.e. to consecrate and propitiate the fire, they offer their adoration to Rudra, and to his supposed troop of associates, i.e. to all conceivable shapes of terror, and by this means render them favourable, and avert all their malevolent influences. Hence the Brāhmaṇa explains śata-rudriya by śānta-rudriya (as gata comes from the root gam); a double sense, which may perhaps have actually been, though indistinctly, contemplated, when the name was first given.[161] In this application of Rudra as the god of fire (independently of the other contents of the Śatarudriya), we may find an indication of the time when it was composed. Though Rudra originally signifies generally the howler, and consequently can stand as well for an epithet of the crackling fire as of the raging storm, yet in the earliest period the word had been more specially used to denote the latter signification, and is therefore frequently used in the Rig-veda in the plural as an epithet of the Maruts. The unbridled fury (manyu) of the storm, its roaring, its tearing up (aufwühlen) of heaven and earth,[162] must have produced a strong and overpowering effect upon the Arian Indians in the high mountain valleys (perhaps of Kashmīr) in which we must conceive them to have lived at that early period; and it was thus in the natural course of things that they should connect everything terrible and horrible with the idea of the god of storms, and regard him as the lord, and the cause, of every evil:[163] numberless, indeed, were these aerial hosts, black, pierced only by the quivering gleams of the lightning, diffusing everywhere shuddering and horror.

"It is true that Rudra 'is also appealed to as wise and bountiful, the [160] "In the Brāhmaṇas the thoughts of men are very frequently put into the mouths of the gods. For instance, when the gods go to Prajāpati, and request him to solve any difficulty, this is merely a transcendental expression for the fact of a few wise men applying for instruction to one still wiser than themselves."

[161] "The Ārshādhyāya of the Chārāyaṇīya School of the Kāṭhaka also (ii. 17) says: Śatarudriyaṁ devānāṁ Rudra-śamanam." 'The Śatarudriya is an appeasing of Rudra by the gods.'

[162] "Hence in the R.V. i. 114, 5, he is also called varāha, "boar," as the storm-clouds too are elsewhere conceived under the same image" (Ind. Stud. i. 272, note).

[163] "In R.V. i. 114; ii. 33. Hence, too, seven verses from these hymns are incorporated in the Śatarudriya."

author of fertility, and giver of happiness;'[164] but it is only indirectly that he is so addressed, and merely because he departs, and directs his destroying arrows towards some other quarter, against the enemies of the suppliant, and leaves the latter himself in peace; the worshipper flatters him with fair words, as if he were purely benevolent, to pacify his anger, and to render him gracious (śiva); and he only appears directly beneficent in so far as he chases away clouds and vapours, purifies and clears the atmosphere; in reference to this he is called a physician, and moreover acquainted with healing herbs: but he carries also diseases and contagions themselves as arrows in his quiver, and slays therewith men and cattle.

"In the crackling flame of the fire, now, men thought that they heard again the wrathful voice of the storm, that in the consuming fierceness of the former, they perceived once more the destructive fury of the latter. In this way we have to explain how it happened that both deities became gradually identified, and lent their respective epithets to one another, particularly as at the same time the storm is, in bad weather, accompanied with gleaming and fiery lightnings. This identification seems to have extended not merely to Agni and Rudra themselves, but also to the Rudras, in so far as the latter, from being the raging and flaming companions of the storm, appear to have become the representatives of all sorts of terrific shapes in general, until in the epic period they retired completely into the background, while their ancient master, Rudra, in his combination with Agni, became continually more firmly condensed as the god of rage and destruction, and a new class of beings took the place of the Rudras as attendants upon him (in his capacity of S'iva).

"At the period when the Rudra-book (the S'atarudriya) was composed, the blending of the two destructive deities (Storm and Fire) had evidently taken place; and the epithets which are there assigned to Rudra lead us back partly to himself, and partly to Agni. The epithets 'dweller in the mountains' (giriśa, girišaya, girišanta, giritra), and those of kapardin, vyupta-keśa, ugra, and bhīma, bhishaj and śiva, śambhu and śankara, belong to the Storm, while on the other hand those of nīla-grīva (=nīlakaṇṭha, spoken of smoke), śitikaṇṭha, hiraṇya-bāhu (of flame), vilohita, sahasrāksha (of sparks), paśupati (of sacrificial victims), śarva and bhava, etc., belong to Fire. Now almost all these epithets[165] are technical epithets and characteristics of the epic Śiva, and when applied to him are partially unintelligible, and become explicable only after they have been distinguished according to the two separate elements to whose combination this god owes his origin.[166] But as in the Rudra-book Rudra nowhere appears as Īśa or Mahādeva, and no character is assigned to him analogous to that of the epic Śiva; and as the word śiva is applied to him simply as an epithet (with its comparative śivatara annexed); the book in question must in any case be held to date from an earlier epoch of the Indian religion, whilst its elevation to the rank of an Upanishad may only have taken place in the epic period, and have been occasioned by the special worship of Śiva."

[164] Wilson, Introd. to Trans. of R.V., vol. i., quoted above, p. 394.

The following remarks of Professor Whitney on the same subject are taken from the Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol. iii., p. 318 f. (published in 1853); and are reprinted in the volume entitled "Oriental and Linguistic Studies," published by their author in 1873:

"To the second domain, the atmosphere, belong the various divinities of the wind and storm. God of the breeze, the gentler motion of the air, is Vayū (from the root vā, 'blow'). He drives a thousand steeds; his breath chases away the demons; he comes in the earliest morning, as the first breath of air that stirs itself at daybreak, to drink the soma, and the Auroras weave for him shining garments. The storm-winds are a troop, the Maruts or Rudras: the two names are indifferently used, but the former is much the more usual (the etymology of neither is fully established). They drive spotted stags, wear shining armour, and carry spears in their hands; no one knows whence they come nor whither they go; their voice is heard aloud as they come rushing on; the earth trembles and the mountains shake before them. They belong in Indra's train; are his almost constant allies and companions. They are called the sons of Rudra, who is conceived of as peculiar god of the tempest. As their father he is very often mentioned; as a divinity with independent attributes he is of much rarer occurrence; hymns addressed to him alone are but few.

[165] "And so of many other epithets found elsewhere: thus Śiva owes his epithet Tryambaka, and his wife Ambikā, to Rudra; and, on the other hand, his epithet Tripura, and his wife Kālī, Karālī, to Agni," etc.

[166] "Hence he is also called Kālāgnirudra, as in the Purāṇas, and in the Kālāgnirudra Upanishad."

He is, as might be expected, a terrible god: he carries a great bow from which he hurls a sharp missile at the earth; he is called the 'ruler of men,' kshayadvīra;[167] his wrath is deprecated, and he is besought not to harm his worshipper; if not in the Ṛik, at least in the Atharvan and Brāhmaṇas, he is styled 'lord of the animals,' as the unhoused beasts of the field are especially at the mercy of the pitiless storm. At the same time, to propitiate him, he is addressed as master of a thousand remedies, best of physicians, protector from harm: this may have its ground, too, partly in the beneficial effects of the tempest in freshening the atmosphere of that sultry clime. Rudra's chief interest consists in the circumstance that he forms the point of connexion between the Vedic religion and the later Çiva-worship. Çiva is a god unknown to the Vedas: his name is a word of not unfrequent occurrence in the hymns, but means simply 'propitious'; not even in the Atharvan is it the epithet of a particular divinity, or distinguished by its usage from any other adjective. As given to him whose title it has since become, it seems one of those euphemisms so frequent in the Indian religion, applied as a soothing and flattering address to the most terrible god in the whole Pantheon. The precise relation between Çiva and Rudra is not yet satisfactorily traced out. The introduction of an entirely new divinity from the mountains of the north has been supposed, who was grafted in upon the ancient religion by being identified with Rudra; or again a blending of some of Agni's attributes with those of Rudra to originate a new development. Perhaps neither of these may be necessary; Çiva may be a local form of Rudra, arisen under the influence of peculiar climatic relations in the districts from which he made his way down into Hindostan proper; introduced among, and readily accepted by, a people which, as the Atharvan shows, was strongly tending toward a terrorism in its religion."

The characters ascribed to Rudra in the hymns of the R. V. are most heterogeneous and frequently indefinite. I shall endeavour to gather, from different places and to group together those epithets which have most affinity to each other. This god is described as wise, bountiful, and powerful (i. 43, 1; i. 114, 4), as the strongest and most glorious of beings (ii. 33, 3), as lord (īśāna) of this world, possessed of divine power (ii. 33, 9), as unsurpassed in might[168] (ibid. 10), as the father of the world,[169] mighty, exalted, undecaying (vi. 49, 10); as cognizant of the doings of men and gods by his power and universal dominion (vii. 46, 2); as putting the waters in motion (x. 92, 5); as self-dependent (vii. 46, 1), and as deriving his renown from himself (i. 129, 3; x. 92, 9); as the lord of heroes (i. 114, 1, 3, 10; x. 92, 9); as the lord of songs and sacrifices (i. 43, 4), the fulfiller of sacrifices (i. 114, 4); brilliant as the sun, and as gold (i. 43, 5), tawny-coloured (this epithet is frequently applied), with beautiful chin (ii. 33, 5), fair-complexioned (ibid. 8), multiform, fierce, arrayed in golden ornaments (ibid. 9), youthful (v. 60, 5), terrible as a wild beast, destructive (ii. 23, 11), wearing spirally-braided hair (i. 114, 1, 5); and as the celestial boar (ibid. 5). He is frequently represented as the father of the Maruts or Rudras (i. 64, 2; i. 85, 1; i. 114, 6, 9; ii. 33, 1; ii. 34, 2; v. 52, 16; v. 60, 5; vi. 50, 4; vi. 66, 3; vii. 56, 1; viii. 20, 17). He is once identified with Agni (ii. 1, 6). He is described as seated on a chariot (ii. 33, 11), as wielding the thunderbolt (ii. 33, 3), as armed with a bow and arrows (ibid. 10, 14; v. 42, 11; x. 125, 6), with a strong bow and fleet arrows, with sharp weapons (vi. 74, 4; vii. 46, 1; viii. 29, 5). His shafts are discharged from the sky, and traverse the earth (vii. 46, 3). He is called the slayer of men (nṛi-ghne, iv. 3, 6).[170] His anger, ill-will, and destructive shafts are deprecated (i. 114, 7, 8; ii. 33, 1, 11, 14; vi. 28, 7; vii. 46, 3, 4). But he is also represented as benevolent (i. 114, 9), as mild, and easily invoked (ii. 33, 5), beneficent (ibid. 7), gracious (śiva, x. 92, 9), as the cause or condition of health and prosperity to man and beast (i. 114, 1). He is frequently described as the possessor of healing remedies, and is once characterized as the greatest of physicians (i. 43, 4; i. 114, 5; ii. 33, 2, 4, 7, 12, 13; v. 42, 11; vi. 74, 3;[171] vii. 35, 6; vii. 46, 3; viii.

[167] Compare the note on the sense of this word, above, p. 301 f.

[168] Compare the similar epithets applied to Vishṇu and Indra above: see pp. 97 f. and generally sections i. and ii., chapter ii. above. And yet in R.V. ii. 39, 9, Rudra is described in common with Indra, Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman, as unable to resist the will of Savitṛi. See the fifth volume of this work, p. 163.

[169] Bhuvanasya pitaraṃ. Compare Raghuvaṃśa i., 1, where Parameśvara (Śiva) and Pārvatī are styled the "parents of the world" (jagataḥ pitarau).

[170] In vii. 56, 17, it is similarly said of the Maruts, āre gohā nṛihā vadho vo astu: "Far be your kine-slaying, man-slaying bolt."

[171] In this passage Soma is associated with Rudra as the dispenser of remedies.

29, 5). He is supplicated for blessings (i. 114, 1, 2; ii. 33, 6), and represented as averting the anger of the gods (i. 114, 4; ii. 33, 7). In R. V. vi. 74, 1 ff., he is connected with Soma in the dual, and entreated along with the latter to bestow good and avert evil.

On a review of these passages, and the hymns from which they are drawn, it appears that in most places Rudra has no very clearly defined function (such, for instance, as is ascribed to Indra and Agni, or even to Vishṇu) as an agent in producing, or a representative of, the great phenomena of the physical world. It would be difficult to make out from the larger portion of the texts which I have cited to what region of the universe the activity of this god should be referred. It is true that he is repeatedly declared to be the father of the Maruts or Rudras (the winds or storms); and from this relation we might anticipate that he would be described as, still more eminently than they, the generator of tempests, and chaser of clouds. There are, however, few, if any, distinct traces of any such agency being ascribed to him. The numerous vague epithets which are constantly applied to him would not suffice to fix the particular sphere of his operation, or even to define his personality, as most of them are equally applied to other deities. This is the case with the terms "fierce," "tawny-coloured," "with beautiful chin"; and even the word kapardin ("with spirally-braided hair"), which at a later period became a common, if not distinctive, epithet of Mahādeva, is in the R.V. applied also to Pūshan (see above, p. 301, note 7). While, however, the cosmical function of Rudra is thus but obscurely indicated, he is described as possessing other marked and peculiar characteristics. It is, however, principally in his relation to the good and evil which befall the persons and property of men that he is depicted. And here there can be little doubt that, though he is frequently supplicated to bestow prosperity, and though he is constantly addressed as the possessor of healing remedies, he is principally regarded as a malevolent deity, whose destructive shafts, the source of disease and death to man and beast, the worshipper strives by his entreaties to avert. If this view be correct, the remedies of which Rudra is the dispenser may be considered as signifying little more than the cessation of his destroying agency (as Professor Weber remarks, see above, p. 397), and the consequent restoration to health and vigour of those victims of his ill-will who had been in danger of perishing. It may appear strange that opposite functions should thus be assigned to the same god: but evil and good, sickness and health, death and life, are naturally associated as contraries, the presence of the one implying the absence of the other, and vice versâ; and in later times Mahādeva is in a somewhat similar manner regarded as the generator as well as the destroyer. We may add to this that, while it is natural to deprecate the wrath of a deity supposed to be the destroyer, the suppliant may fear to provoke his displeasure, and to awaken his jealousy, by calling on any other deity to provide a remedy. When the destructive god has been induced to relent, to withdraw his visitation, or remove its effects, it is natural for his worshippers to represent him as gracious and benevolent, as we see done in some of the hymns to Rudra.

From the above description, however, it will be apparent that the elder Rudra, though different in many respects from the later Mahādeva, is yet, like him, a terrible and destructive deity; while, on the other hand, the ancient Vishṇu, like the modern god of the same name, is represented to us as a preserver, of a benignant, or, at least, of an innocuous, character (R.V. i. 22, 18; i. 155, 4; i. 186, 10; viii. 25, 12).

In the Yajur-veda we find the same characteristics assigned to Rudra as in the Rig-veda. Thus both a healing virtue (iii. 59; xvi. 5, 49) and a destructive efficacy are ascribed to him, the latter being depicted in the liveliest colours, and deprecated in every variety of expression. Thus he is represented (iii. 61; xvi. 1, and elsewhere) as carrying a bow and arrows, and is earnestly supplicated (xvi. 9 ff., 51 ff.) to avert his shafts from the worshipper. Many of the epithets which are applied to him in the Rig-veda occur again here, such as "brown" or "tawny" (xvi. 6), the god "with spirally-braided hair" (ibid. 10), the "fierce" (ibid. 40), the "bountiful," the "gracious" (51), etc.; while a multitude of new appellations are heaped upon him (and his attendants), such as "blue-necked," "thousand-eyed" (ibid. 7), "thousand-quivered" (13), "clad in a skin" (iii. 61; xvi. 51), "the dweller in the mountains" (xvi. 2, 3, 4), and others far too numerous to repeat (xvi. 17–46). The imagination of the rishi runs riot in the invention of these epithets, which are of the most heterogeneous description. Some of the characteristics here attributed to Rudra are of a disgraceful nature, as where he is styled the "lord of thieves, the robber, the cheater, the deceiver, the lord of pilferers and robbers," etc. (vv. 20, 21). Several new names are ascribed to Rudra in this Veda, as Bhava, Sarva, Paśupati, etc., etc. (vv. 18, 28),[172] Altogether an approximation is discernible in the epithets which occur in the Satarudriya to the fierce, terrific, impure, and repulsive character of the later Mahâdeva. Ambikâ is mentioned for the first time in the Vâjasaneyi Sanhitâ (iii. 5), and is described not as the wife, but as the sister of Rudra.

In the Atharva-veda also reference is made both to the therapeutic character of Rudra and to the destructive arrows and lightnings of Bhava and Sarva (ii. 27, 6; vi. 93, 1; x. i. 23; xi. 2, 1, 12, etc.). Rudra is identified with Agni (vii. 87, 1); and again with Savitṛi (xiii. 4, 4). On the other hand, Bhava and Sarva, and again Bhava and Rudra, are spoken of in the dual (viii. 2, 7; x. i. 23; xi. 2, 1; xi. 2, 14, 16; xi. 6, 9; xii. 4, 17); and would thus appear to have been regarded by the rishi as distinct gods. Sarva is described as an archer, Bhava as a king (vi. 93, 2); and they, as well as Rudra, are said to have poisons and consumption at their command (vi. 93, 2; xi. 2, 26). In A. V. xi. 2, 2, 30, the devouring birds and dogs of Rudra are alluded to (compare Vâj. Sanh. xvi. 28). In another verse Bhava is said to rule over the sky and the earth, and to fill the vast atmosphere (A. V. xi. 2, 27).[173]

In the Satapatha Brâhmaṇa (i. 7, 3, 8) Sarva, Bhava, Paśupati, and Rudra are said to be all names of Agni; and of these appellations Sarva is declared to be in use among the people of the east, and Bhava among the western tribe of the Bâhîkas. Another passage (vi. 1, 3, 7 ff.) of the same Brâhmaṇa describes the birth of a boy (kumâra, a word applied to Agni in the Rig-veda, v. 2, 1), to whom the names of Rudra, Sarva, Paśupati, Ugra, Aśani, Bhava, Mahân-deva, and Îśâna were successively given, all of them, according to the writer, representing different forms of Agni. In the somewhat different version of the same story given in the Śānkhāyana Brāhmaṇa (see above, pp. 343 ff.) the newly-born deity is not identified with Agni. But the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, in another passage (ix. 1, 1, 1 ff.) referred to by Professor Weber (see above, pp. 347 and 395 f.), appears again clearly to make this identification. Finally, traces of the early connexion of Rudra with Agni are discoverable, as I have already remarked (p. 349), in the legend of the birth of Kārttikeya, which I have quoted from the Mahābhārata.

[172] In the same Veda, xxxix. 8, we have the following gods, or appellations of one god, specified, viz., Agni, Aśani, Paśupati, Bhava, S'arva, Îśâna, Mahâdeva, Ugra-deva, etc. (Agniṁ hṛidayena Aśaniṁ hṛidayâgreṇa Pâśupatiṁ kṛitsna-hṛidayena Bhavaṁ yaknâ | S'arvam matasnâbhyâm Îśânam manyunâ Mahâdevam antaḥparśavyena Ugraṁ devaṁ vanishṭhunâ ityâdi).

[173] The Nirukta i. 15, as I have already remarked, p. 355, note 98, contains the first words of a text relating to Rudra which is given at length by the commentator Durga, and is cited and translated above. After ascribing a martial character to Rudra in the first line, this text appears to assign to him, in the second, the threefold function of universal creator, preserver, and destroyer. As it is partially quoted in the Nirukta, this verse, though it does not appear whence it comes, must, unless interpolated, be of considerable antiquity.

Though, however, these deities may have at one time come to be thus identified, the distinctive epithets applied to Rudra in the Rigveda appear sufficiently to prove that he was generally discriminated from Agni by his early worshippers. The tendency visible both in the hymns of the Veda and in the Brāhmaṇas (see above, R.V. ii. 1, 6, p. 306; A. V. vii. 87, 1, and xiii. 4, 4, pp. 333 and 338; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, as quoted in p. 341; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 1, 1, 5, p. 22) to identify the different deities with one another may have arisen from a vague conception of the unity of the divine principle by which all these several divinities were supposed to be diversely animated.

Between the texts which I have cited from the Brāhmaṇas relative to Rudra, and the earliest descriptions of the same deity which we discover in the Epic poems, a wide chasm intervenes, which, as far as I am aware, no genuine ancient materials exist (for the Upanishads I have quoted are of uncertain date) for bridging over. The Rudra of the Mahābhārata is not indeed very different in his general character from the god of the same name who is portrayed in the Śatarudriya; but in the later literature his importance is immensely increased, his attributes are more clearly defined, and the conceptions entertained of his person are rendered more distinct by the addition of various additional features, and illustrated by numerous legends. Instead of remaining a subordinate deity, as he was in the Vedic era, Rudra has thrown Agni, Vāyu, Sūrya, Mitra, and Varuṇa completely into the shade; and although Indra still occupies a prominent place in the Epic legends, he has sunk down into a subordinate position, and is quite unable to compete in power and dignity with Rudra, who, together with Vishṇu, now engrosses the almost exclusive worship of the Brahmanical world. Ambikā, who was subsequently identified with the spouse of Rudra, is in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (above, p. 321) spoken of as his sister. Umā or Pārvatī, with whom he was unconnected in the Vedic period, and of whom the earliest mention, as far as I know, occurs in the Kena Upanishad, and the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka,[174] is now his acknowledged consort.[175] In systematic mythology the function of destroyer is assigned to him, as that of creator is to Brahmā, and that of preserver to Vishṇu; but he is also worshipped under the emblem of the "Linga" as the great generative power.

I have (above, pp. 192 f.) quoted a passage from the Mahābhārata in which the Linga is dwelt upon at length, though it is difficult to say to what age this passage may be referable. Comp. also the epithet "mahāśepha" in p. 191 f., which points to the same idea.

In the following passage of the same book, the Linga is again mentioned in verses which follow the last of those quoted above in p. 197 ff.:

Anuśāsana-parvan, v. 7510.—Dahaty ūrdhvaṁ sthito yach cha prāṇān nṛiṇāṁ sthiraś cha yat | sthira-lingas cha yan nityaṁ tasmāt Sthāṇur iti smṛitaḥ | . . . . . v. 7516. Nityancha brahmacharyeṇa lingam asya yadā sthitam | mahayanty asya lokāś cha priyaṁ hy etad mahātmanaḥ | vigraham pūjayed yo vai linyaṁ vā pi mahātmanaḥ | linga-pūjayitā nityam mahatīṁ śriyam aśnute | ṛishayas chāpi devāś cha gandharvāpsarasas tathā | lingam evārchayanti sma yat tad ūrdhvaṁ samāsthitam | ityādi | "And since, standing aloft, he consumes the lives of men, and since he is fixed, and since his Linga is perpetually fixed, he is therefore called Sthāṇu. . . . . 7516. And when his Linga remains constantly in a state of chastity, and people reverence it, this is agreeable to the great [god]. The worshipper of the Linga, who shall adore the image (vigraha), or the Linga, of the great [god], enjoys continually great prosperity. It is the Linga, raised up, which the rishis, gods,

[174] These passages will be quoted in the next section.

[175] It appears (see Westergaard's Dissertation on the Oldest Period of Indian History, p. 82, note) that Pāṇini (4, 1, 49) gives a rule whereby, in addition to the names of the goddesses Indrāṇī and Varuṇānī, which are found in the Rig-veda, the names of four others who are not found there, and who are all wives of S'iva (under his different appellations of Bhava, S'arva, Rudra, and Mṛida)—viz. Bhavānī S'arvāṇī, Rudrāṇī, and Mṛiḍānī—may be formed. (The rule is this: Indra-Varuṇa-Bhava-S'arva-Rudra-Mṛiḍa-himāraṇya-yava-yavana-mātulāchāryāṇām āṇuk). It does not, however, follow that these last-named goddesses had risen into any importance in the time of Pāṇini. Indrāṇī and Varuṇānī were never of any significance.

Gandharvas, and Apsarases worship." Compare with this extract verses 9616 f., 9625 and 9631 of the Droṇa-parvan.

The Linga is also mentioned in the list of Śiva's names in another part of the same Anuśāsana-parvan, v. 1160:

Ūrdhva-retāḥ ūrdhva-lingaḥ ūrdhva-śāyī nabhaḥ-sthitaḥ | v. 1191. Lingādhyakshaḥ surādhyakshaḥ . . . . vīrādhyaksho vīja-kartā . . . . "He whose seed is raised up, whose Linga is raised up, who sleeps aloft, who abides in the sky." . . . . v. 1191: "The lord of the Linga, the lord of the suras (gods) . . . . the lord of seed, the former of seed." [176]

We possess no records to show how this phallic emblem became connected with Rudra. But, as Dr. Stevenson (Journal R. A. S., viii. 330 [177]) and Professor Lassen (Ind. Ant., i. 2nd ed. 924) imagine, it

[176] In the Sauptika-parvan it is related that Mahādeva had been appointed by Brahmā to create living beings. He proceeded to perform austerities, and continued doing so so long that Brahmā produced another creator, who performed his task. Mahādeva at last came, and seeing that the creation had already been effected, he became angry and split his Linga, which was then placed in the earth (v. 780 f.: chukrodha bhagavān Rudro lingaṁ svaṁ chāpyavidhyata | tat praviddhaṁ tathā bhūmau tathaiva pratyatishṭhata). I have not observed any mention of the Linga in the earlier part of the Rāmāyaṇa, but in the Uttara Kāṇḍa, sect. 31, v. 42 f., the following lines occur: Yatra yatra cha yāti sma Rāvaṇo rākshaseśvaraḥ | jāmbūnadamayaṁ lingaṁ tatra tatra sma nīyate | 43. Bālukā-vedi-madhye tu tal lingaṁ sthāpya Rāvaṇaḥ | archayāmāsa gandhaiś cha pushpaiś chāmṛita-gandhibhiḥ | "Wherever Rāvaṇa, lord of the Rākshasas, went, a golden linga was carried thither. Placing that linga in the midst of a pedestal of sand, Rāvaṇa worshipped it with incense, and flowers of ambrosial odour." The commentator remarks on v. 43: Tal lingaṁ jāmbūnadamayaṁ nitya-pūjā-lingam | Aiśvarya-kāmanayā hi tal-linga-pūjā Rāvaṇasya | Aiśvarya-kāmasya sauvarṇa-linga-pūjāyās tantreshūkteḥ | "That golden linga was intended for constant worship. He worshipped it from the desire of sovereignty. For it is prescribed in the Tantras that a golden linga should be worshipped when any one desires sovereignty."

[177] In this paper on "the Ante-Brahmanical Religion of the Hindus," the Rev. Dr. Stevenson asserts that the "worship of S'iva, especially under the form of the Linga," is one of the practices for which he considers modern Hinduism is indebted to the ante-Brahmanical religion of India, i.e. to local superstitions prevalent among the aboriginal tribes anterior to the development of the existing Brahmanical system. This opinion in regard to S'iva is grounded by Dr. Stevenson on the facts: (1) that S'iva is not named in the ancient Vedic hymns; (2) that Rudra does not occupy in those hymns the high position which the later S'iva holds; (3) that various particulars in the legend of Daksha (see above, pp. 372 ff.), such as the general indisposition to acknowledge S'iva's right to share in the sacrifice, and the circumstance that his rites required no Brahmanical priest (see above, p. 377, note 132), point to a recent introduction of S'iva's worship (comp. Mahābhārata, Vana-parvan, vv. 11001 ff., cited is not impossible that it may have been at first an object of veneration among the aboriginal or non-Arian Indians; and that it was subsequently adopted by the Brahmans from them, and associated with the worship of Rudra.

This conjecture would acquire additional probability if we were justified in supposing that the word "śiśnadeva," which occurs in two passages of the Rig-veda, had any reference to a worship of this sort existing among the barbarous tribes towards whom the authors of the hymns so often express hostility, as the followers of a different religion from their own. The texts in which the word in question is found have been already adduced and translated in the second volume of this work (p. 391, note 76). But I shall quote them again here with their obscure and difficult contexts, and endeavour to elucidate them further. The first passage is as follows:

R.V. vii. 21, 3 ff.—Tvam Indra sravitavai apas kaḥ parishṭhitāḥ Ahinā śūra pūrvīḥ | tvad vāvakre rathyo na dhenāḥ rejante viśvā kṛitrimāṇi bhīshā | 4. Bhīmo vivesha āyudhebhir eshām apāṃsi viśvā naryāṇi vidvān | Indraḥ puro jarhṛishāṇo vi dūdhod vi vajra-hasto mahinā jaghāna | 5. Na yātavaḥ Indra jūjuvur no na vandanā śavishṭha vedyābhiḥ[178] | sa śardhad aryo vishuṇasya jantor mā śiśna-devāḥ api gur ṛitaṃ naḥ | 6. Abhi kratvā Indra bhūr adha jman na te vivyan mahimānaṃ rajāṃsi | svena hi Vṛitraṃ śavasā jaghantha na śatrur antaṃ vividad yudhā te | 7. Devāś chit te asuryāya pūrve anu kshatrāya mamire sahāṃsi | Indro maghāni dayate vishahya Indraṃ vājasya johavantu sātau | 8. Kīriś chid hi tvām avase juhāva īśāṇam Indra saubhagasya bhūreḥ | avo babhūtha śatam-ūte asme abhikshattus tvāvato varūtā |

"3. Thou, heroic Indra, hast caused to flow the abundant waters which had been obstructed by Ahi. Through thee the cows (rivers, in p. 284 of this volume); (4) that there is no connexion between the Linga and any of the ancient Brahmanical emblems; (5) that the principal seats of the Linga worship are to be found in the south and north-east of India, at a distance from the original Brahmanical settlements; (6) that in the Mahratta country no Brahman officiates as priest in a Linga temple, while, on the contrary, in the temples of Vishṇu Brahmans alone officiate. [This distinction does not, I think, exist in Northern India. In the temple of Viśves'vara, at Benares, the officiating priests, if I am not mistaken, are Brahmans. The same is the impression of Prof. Fitz-Edward Hall, with whom I have communicated on the subject.—J. M.]

[178] For the sense assigned to this word in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, see s.v. vedyā.

according to Sāyaṇa) have rolled on like warriors in chariots. All created things tremble for fear. 4. The terrible [god], skilled in all heroic deeds, has with his weapons mastered these [cloud-demons]. Indra, exulting, has shattered their cities; armed with the thunderbolt he has smitten them asunder by his might. 5. Neither demons impel us, Indra, nor, O puissant [deity], of a truth any evil spirits. The glorious [Indra] defies the hostile beings: let not those whose god is the 'śiśna' approach our sacred ceremony. 6. Thou, O Indra, hast surpassed in power, when thou runnest thy course. The worlds have not comprehended within them thy greatness. By thine own might thou hast slain Vṛitra. No enemy hath attained the end of thee in battle. 7. The earlier gods have yielded to thy divine power; their powers have bowed before thy sovereign might.[179] Indra having conquered, dispenses wealth. Let men invoke Indra in the combat. 8. Indra, the bard hath invoked for protection thee, the lord of great prosperity. O thou who bringest a hundred succours, thou hast been a defence to us, a defender against the assailant of him who is devoted to thee."

R.V. x. 99, 1 ff.—Kaṁ naś chitram ishanyasi chikitvān pṛithugmānaṁ vāśraṁ vāvṛidhadhyai | kat tasya dātu śavaso vyushṭau takshad vajraṁ Vṛitra-turam apinvat | 2. Sa hi dyutā vidyutā veti sāma pṛithuṁ yonim asuratvā "sasāda | sa sanīḷebhiḥ prasahāno asya bhrātur na ṛite saptathasya māyāḥ | 3. Sa vājaṁ yātā apadushpadā yan svarshātā parishadat sanishyan | anarvā yat śata-durasya[180] vedo ghnan śiśnadevān abhi varpasā 'bhūt | 4. Sa yahvyo avanīr goshu arvā ā juhoti pradhanyāsu sasriḥ | apādo yatra yujyāso 'rathāḥ drony-aśvāsaḥ īrate ghṛitaṁ vāḥ | 5. Sa Rudrebhir aśasta-vāraḥ ṛibhvā hitvī gayam āre-avadyāḥ ā agāt | vamrasya manye mithunā vivavrī annam abhīlya arodayat mushāyan | 6. Sa id dāsaṁ tuvi-ravam patir dan shaḍ-akshaṁ tri-śīrṣhāṇaṁ damanyat | asya Trito nu ojasā vṛidhāno vipā varāham ayo-agrayā han | 7. Sa druhvane manushe ūrdhvasānaḥ ā sāvishad arśasānāya śarum | sa nṛitamo nahusho 'smat sujātaḥ puro 'bhinad arhan dasyu-hatye | "What wonderful, wide-travelling bull dost thou, perceiving, send to us for our delight! What an act of power does he display at the dawn! He has formed the

[179] "Ihre Kraft kommt deiner Herrscherkraft nicht gleich,"—Böhtlingk and Roth s.v. mā+anu.

[180] This word in the locative plural also occurs in R.V. i. 51, 3.

Vṛitra-slaying thunderbolt, and has strengthened thee. 2. With gleaming light he comes to the goal; in his divine glory he hath seated himself on our broad place of sacrifice; with his allies he overcomes the delusions of him who pretends to be his seventh brother. 3. Proceeding to the conflict, and desiring to acquire them, he has gone to, and in hostile array besieged, inaccessible places, at the time when, irresistible, slaying those whose god is the 'śisna,' he by his craft conquered the riches of the city with a hundred gates. 4. The steed, coming among the cows conquered in battle, pours out the flowing rivers [in the place] where the allies, without feet or chariots, employing the clouds as their horses, send forth fertilizing water. 5. The great [Indra], who has indescribable treasures, and from whom evil is far removed, forsaking his house, has arrived with the Rudras. Coming and plundering their food, he has, I believe, made the two unsheltered (children) of Vamra to weep. 6. This lord subjugated the loud-voiced Dāsa with six eyes and three heads. Trita, increasing through his strength, struck the boar with his iron-tipped shaft. 7. Rising up, he has launched his arrow against the malignant and destructive man. He, the noble and potent hero, has shattered for us the cities of the enemy (or of Nahush) in the conflict with the destroyers (Dasyus)."[181]

The following is Sāyaṇa's explanation of the word "śiśnadeva" in the first of the preceding passages, R.V. vii. 21, 5, and repeated briefly in his note on the second passage: Śiśna-devāḥ | śiśnena dīvyanti krīḍanti iti śiśna-devāḥ | abrahmacharyāḥ ity arthaḥ | tathā cha Yāskaḥ | .... "śiśna-devāḥ abrahmacharyāḥ" | .... " 'Śiśnadevāḥ' are those who sport with the śiśna (membrum virile), i.e. unchaste men; as Yaska says, 'Śiśnadevāḥ' means the unchaste." Durga, the commentator on the Nirukta, as cited by Roth (Illust. of Nir. p. 47), gives the same explanation as Sāyaṇa. He says that those men are called "śiśnadeva" who, "are always dallying carnally with prostitutes, forsaking Vedic observances" (śiśnena nityam eva prakīrṇābhiḥ strībhiḥ sākaṁ krīḍantaḥ āsate śrautāni karmāṇy utsṛijya). Roth, in the place I have cited, thinks the word is a sarcastic appellation for priapic or lustful demons, and translates it by "Schwänz-götter."

[181] Prof. Aufrecht has given me much assistance in translating these two passages. —Note in first edition. I have made a good many alterations in the second edition.

It does not appear to me that Sāyaṇa's interpretation has much to recommend it. There are some other words in the Veda in which the word "deva" forms the last member of the compound, as "anṛita-deva" (vii. 104, 14) and "mūra-deva" (vii. 104, 24).[182] Sāyaṇa explains "mūra-devāḥ" as="maraṇa-krīḍāḥ," "those who make a sport of killing"; and he therefore takes "deva" there in the same sense as he does in "śiśna-deva." But in the other word, "anṛita-deva," he takes "deva" in the usual sense of "god," and interprets it as "he whose gods are false" (anṛitāḥ asatya-bhūtāḥ devāḥ yasya tādṛiśaḥ). In the same way he understands "anti-devam" in R.V. i. 180, 7, as meaning "near the gods." And though in Böhtlingk and Roth's Dictionary the word "anṛita-deva" is explained as signifying a "false player," this interpretation is afterwards withdrawn (in favour of that which Sāyaṇa gives of this word) at the close of the article on the word "deva." Nor does the sense assigned by Sāyaṇa to "śiśna-deva" appear to be in itself a very probable one. For the epithet "lascivious" would not necessarily be a term of reproach in the mouth of an Indian poet of the Vedic age, when, though the institution of marriage was recognized and honoured, no great amount of reprobation could have been attached to unchastity in the case of men (compare R.V. i. 167, 4; ix. 112, 4; x. 85, 37, and x. 86, 16, 17, and the fifth volume of this work, pp. 307 f., 460 f.). On the other hand, if the word "śiśna-deva" is to be understood of human beings, and if it could be taken as describing any deviation from the contemporaneous Arian worship, it would find many parallels in the Rig-veda, as may be seen by a comparison of the words "akarman," "adevayu," "anṛich," "anindra," "anya-vrata," "apavrata," "avrata," "abrahman," "ayajvan" "ayajyu" | "without ceremonies, no worshippers of the gods, without hymns, without Indra, following other rites, averse to rites, without rites, without priests, or prayers, offering no sacrifices," in the passages quoted in the second volume of this work, pp. 359 f., 371 ff.

It is, however, objected that "śiśna" cannot be taken as equivalent to "Linga," which means a sign, the phallus, and is therefore emblematic, while the "śiśna" denotes not an image, but the male organ itself. "Siśna" has also the sense of "tail," as in R.V. i. 105, 8, pointed out to me by Professor Aufrecht, where the words mūsho na śiśnā vyadanti mā ādhyaḥ mean, "cares worry me, like mice gnawing their tails." The word "śiśnadevāḥ," if understood of demons, may therefore mean, as Roth suggests, "tailed (or priapic) demons," and not "worshippers of the śiśna." The same difficulty which we encounter in fixing the meaning of the word "dasyu," viz. whether it is to be understood of men or demons (see the second volume of this work, pp. 362 ff.; 388 ff.), recurs here. In the first of the passages quoted above (vii. 21, 5) it appears, so long as we are ignorant of the real sense of "śiśna-deva," that it might be understood either of men or demons, either of whom would have been unwelcome visitors at an Arian ceremonial. Perhaps, as the word "yātavaḥ" (demons) precedes, it is most likely that the latter are intended: and the same remark may be held to apply to the second passage (x. 99, 3).

[182] The word is explained by Böhtlingk and Roth s.v. as=mūladeva, and as denoting a species of goblins.

However interesting, therefore, it would be to find a proof of the existence of a phallic worship among the aboriginal tribes contemporary with the Vedic rishis, it must be confessed that the word "śiśnadeva" does not supply this evidence.

In a passage (in the Preface to the tenth vol. of his Rāmāyaṇa, p. ix.) which I have adduced in the second vol. of this work (pp. 419 f.), Signor Gorresio expresses the opinion that the Southern race, whom he supposes to be symbolized under the appellation of Rākshasas, were specially addicted to the worship of "Rudra, or a terrible" and, as he believes, "a Hamitic deity." In note 35 (p. 291 of the same volume), on the destruction of Daksha's sacrifice, he says: "It appears to me that in this fact the struggle of the ancient religions of India is represented under a mythical veil. Śiva (a deity, as I believe, of the Cushite or Hamitic tribes which preceded on the soil of India the Arian or Indo-Sanskrit races) wished to have a part in the worship of the conquerors, and in their sacrifices, from which he was excluded; and by disturbing their rites, and by a display of violence at their sacrifices, he succeeded in being admitted to participate in them." Signor Gorresio, however, offers very little proof of his assertion in regard to the worship of Śiva being specially prevalent among the savage tribes of the south. In note 116, p. 370, of his ninth vol., indeed, he remarks as follows on a passage (Rāmāyaṇa vi. 19, 50 f.) where it is said that Indrajit, son of Rāvaṇa, had a golden serpent for his banner: "The serpent was the special symbol in the worship of the Hamite races, and here therefore Indrajit, the black Rākshasa, the Hamite, sets it up as his banner. Thus in the seventy-eighth chapter of the Sundara Kāṇḍa it is said that Indrajit was in the habit of sacrificing especially to Siva, the Hamitic deity, who possesses all the attributes of the Hamitic religion, and who entered into the Indo-Sanskrit Olympus by one of those religious syncretisms of which traces are so frequently to be found in the ancient systems of worship."

The passage of the Sundara Kāṇḍa to which Gorresio refers occurs, in the Bombay edition, in the seventh section of the Yuddha Kāṇḍa, vv. 18 f. (=Sundara Kāṇḍa 78, 17, in Gorresio's ed.), and is as follows:

Tishṭha vā kim mahārāja śrameṇa tava vānarān | ayam eko mahārāja Indrajit kshapayishyati | anena cha mahārāja Māheśvaram anuttamam | ishṭvā yajñaṁ varo labdho loke parama-durlabhaḥ | "Stay, great king, what need is there of thy exertions? This Indrajit alone will destroy the monkeys. For by him a boon, hard to be gotten, was obtained after he had offered an unequalled sacrifice to Mahādeva."

This passage is not sufficient to prove that Mahādeva was in a special degree the god of the savages of the South. We have already seen (pp. 184 ff., 283 ff.), by the cases of Arjuna, Jayadratha, Paraśurāma, and above all, of Jarāsandha, as recorded in the Mahābhārata, that the worship of Mahādeva (frequently for the purpose of obtaining some boon) was practised by the warriors of Northern India, just as it is here said to have been by Indrajit. Further, it is not Siva alone whom the Rākshasas worshipped for their own purposes. It appears from the passage of the Rāmāyaṇa (cited above in p. 167) that Rāvaṇa had obtained the gift of invincibility from Brahmā. At the same time it will be seen from a passage cited below from the Uttara Kāṇḍa 25, 9, that it was the sacrifice to Mahādeva, and not the one to Vishṇu which procured for Indrajit his magical powers.

The same worship of Brahmā is related in regard to Atikāya, one of Rāvaṇa's sons, in Rāmāyaṇa vi. 71, 31 f. (Bombay ed):

Etenārādhito Brahmā tapasā bhāvitātmanā | astrāṇi chāpy avāptāni ripavaś cha parājitāḥ | sūrāsurair abadhyatvaṁ dattam asmai Svayambhuvā | "By this contemplative (Rākshasa) Brahmā had been worshipped with austerities, and he had obtained weapons, and conquered his enemies. [The privilege] had been bestowed on him by Svayambhū that he should be indestructible by gods or Asuras."

In verse 28 he is described as "reverent to the aged, and of renowned strength" (vṛiddha-sevī śruta-balaḥ[183]). Rāvaṇa himself is represented in the Rāmāyaṇa as an observer of the Vedic ritual. Thus in Book vi. 93, 58 ff. (Bombay ed.=vi. 72, 62 ff. of Gorr.), his minister, Supārśva (Avindhya[184] in Gorr.), who is described as "virtuous and pure," is introduced as saying to him: Veda-vidyā-vrataḥ snātas sva-karma-niratas[185] tathā | striyāḥ kasmād balhaṁ vīra manyase Rākshaseśvara | "Why dost thou, heroic Rāvaṇa, lord of the Rākshasas, who knowest the Veda, hast practised the prescribed discipline, and art an initiated householder, and devoted to thy duty, meditate the slaughter of a woman?" And Vibhīshaṇa, in his eulogy on his brother after his death, says (vi. 111, 23, Bombay ed.=vi. 93, 30 of Gorr.): Esho hitāgniś[186] cha mahātapāś cha vedāntagaḥ karmasu chāgrya-śūraḥ | "He had placed the sacrificial fire, was very austere, had read the concluding treatises of the Veda, and was an eminent hero in rites."[187]

[183] Instead of śruta-balaḥ, Gorresio's edition reads śrutidharaḥ, "an observer of the Vedas." In Manu vii. 38 the following verse occurs: Vṛiddhāṁscha nityaṁ seveta viprān veda-vidaḥ śuchīn | vṛiddha-sevī hi satataṁ rakshobhir api pūjyate | "Let [the king] constantly reverence old and pure Brahmans, skilled in the Vedas; for he who continually reverences the aged is honoured even by the Rākshasas." Can this verse refer to the character vṛiddha-sevī given to Atikāya in the passage (Rām. vi. 71, 28) quoted above? If so, the passage in Manu must be posterior in date to the Rāmāyaṇa. Or has this character been given to Atikāya in consequence of the verse of Manu? or have the two passages no connexion? The coincidence is at least curious.

[184] He is, as remarked by the commentator, also called Avindhya; and so in the (Rāmopākhyāna in the Vana-parvan of the) Mahābhārata (vv. 16148, 16492–6, and elsewhere).

[185] The commentator thus explains these words: Veda-vidyā-grahāpekshita-brahmacharya-vrata-pūrva-vidyāṁ gṛihītvā | snātaḥ | guru-kulāt samāvṛittas tadanantaraṁ dāra-grahaṇa-pūrvaṁ nityāgnihotrādi-sva-karma-niratah | "One who has obtained a knowledge of the Veda after practising the discipline of continence required for the reception of such knowledge; and who, after returning from his preceptor's family, has married a wife, and continues devoted to the practice of the agnihotra and other indispensable rites." See Wilson's and Williams's Dictionaries, s.vv. snāta and snātaka, and Kullūka's note on Manu iii. 2, referred to by the latter lexicographer.

[186] Esho hitāgnir ity ārshaḥ sandhiḥ | āhitāgnir iti chhedaḥ | Comm.

[187] Vedāntagaḥ | adhītopanishatkaḥ | karmasu agnihotrādishu | agryaśūraḥ | paramānushṭhātā parama-karmaṭhaḥ | In some of the earlier lines of the same section Vibhīshaṇa thus speaks of Rāvaṇa: Gataḥ setuḥ sunītānāṁ gato dharmasya vigrahaḥ | gataḥ satvasya sankshepaḥ suhastānāṁ gatir gatā | ādityaḥ patito bhūmau

Again, it is related in the hundred and thirteenth section (Bombay ed.), that Rāvaṇa was buried with the usual Brahmanical ceremonies, though the commentator (in his note on verse 107) says that the Brahmans who were concerned in them were Rākshasa-brahmans (Rākshasa-dvijāḥ).

Rāmāyaṇa vi. 113, vv. 112 ff. (Bombay ed.)—Chitāṁ chandana-kāṣṭhaiś cha padmakośīra-chandanaiḥ | brāhmyā[188] saṁvartayāmāsuḥ rāṅkavāstaraṇāvṛitām | prachakruḥ Rākshasendrasya pitṛimedham anuttamam | vedīṁcha dakshiṇāprāchīṁ yathā-sthānancha pāvakam | pṛishadājyena sampūrṇaṁ sruvaṁ skandhe prachikshipuḥ | pādayoḥ śakaṭam prāpur ūrvoś cholūkhalaṁ tadā | dāru-pātrāṇi sarvāṇi araṇiṁ chottarāraṇim | dattvā tu musalaṁ chānyaṁ yathā-sthānaṁ vichakramuḥ | śāstra-dṛishṭena vidhinā maharshi-vihitena[189] cha | tatra medhyam paśuṁ hatvā Rākshasendrasya Rākshasāḥ | paristaraṇikāṁ[190] rājño ghṛitāktāṁ samaveśayan | gandhair mālyair alankṛitya Rāvaṇaṁ dīna-mānasāḥ | Vibhīshaṇa-sahāyās te vastraiś cha vividhair api | lājair avakiranti sma vāshpa-pūrṇa-mukhās tathā | sa dadau pāvakaṁ tasya vidhi-yuktaṁ Vibhīshaṇaḥ | snātvā chaivārdra-vastreṇa tilān darbha-vimiśritān | udakena cha sammiśrān pradāya vidhi-pūrvakam[191] | "They formed, magnas tamasi chandramāḥ | "The bulwark of the righteous is gone; gone is the image of virtue; gone is the summary of goodness [or strength, Comm.]; the lot of heroes has been gained by him. The sun has fallen to the ground; the moon has been quenched in darkness," etc. And yet Vibhīshaṇa abuses his dead brother in the hundred and thirteenth section (Bombay ed.), vv. 93 ff.

[188] Veda-mārgānugata-kriyayā | Comm.

[189] Kalpa-sūtra-kṛid-ṛishi-vihitena | Comm.

[190] Paristīryate mukham anayā iti paristaraṇikā vapā | tām rākshasendrasya mukhe samaveśayan | "vapā 'sya mukham praurṇauṭ" iti sūtrāt | Comm.; who seems therefore to understand paristaraṇikā of fat (see Müller as cited in the article referred to in note 192). The commentator, however, gives also another reading and explanation which I quote: Tīrthas tu anustaraṇikīṁ rājñaḥ iti paṭhitvā anustaraṇikīṁ rājagavīṁ tām ālabhya tachcharmaṇā yajamānaṁ āstṛitavantaḥ ity arthaḥ | "But Tīrtha (a previous commentator) reads anustaraṇikīṁ rājñaḥ, and explains the sense thus: having immolated a rājagavi (bos grunniens), they covered the sacrifice with its skin."

[191] I insert here part of Gorresio's text for comparison (vi. 96, 10 ff.): Tatas te veda-vidvāṁsas tam rājñaḥ paśchimāṁ kriyāṁ | chakrire rākshasendrasya pretamedham anuttamam | vedīncha dakshiṇa-prāchyāṁ yathā-sthānaṁ cha pāvakam | Vibhīshaṇas tu samprāpya tūshṇīṁ samasṛijat śruvam | pṛishadājyasya sampūrṇāṁ śruvāṁ sarvān yathāvidhi | Rāvaṇasya tadā sarve vāshpa-pūrṇa-mukhāḥ dvijāḥ | pādayoḥ śakatāṁ chakrur antarorāv udūkhalam | vānaspatyāni chānyāni antare 'pi vyadhāpayan | dattvā tu mushalaṁ chaiva yathāsthānam mahātmanaḥ | śāstra-dṛishṭena vidhinā maharshi-vihitena cha | tataḥ paśchāt paśuṁ hatvā rākshasendrasya rākshasāḥ | athāstaraṇikaṁ sarvaṁ ghṛitāktaṁ samaveśayan |

with Vedic rites, a funeral pile of faggots of sandalwood, with "padmaka" wood, "uśīra" grass, and sandal, and covered with a quilt of deer's hair. They then performed an unrivalled obsequial ceremony for the Rākshasa prince, [placing] the sacrificial ground to the south-east and the fire in the proper situation. They cast the ladle filled with curds and ghee, on the shoulder [192] (of the deceased); they placed the car on the feet, and the mortar between the thighs. Having deposited all the wooden vessels, the [upper] and lower firewood (araṇi), and the other pestle, in their proper places, they departed. The Rākshasas having then slain a victim to their prince in the manner prescribed in the Śāstras, and enjoined by great rishis, cast [into the fire] the coverlet of the king saturated with butter. They then, Vibhīshaṇa included, with afflicted hearts, adorned Rāvaṇa with perfumes and garlands, and with various vestments, and besprinkled him with fried grain, their faces being covered with tears. Vibhīshaṇa having bathed, and having, with his clothes wet, scattered in proper form "tila" seeds mixed with "darbha" grass, and moistened with water, applied the fire [to the pile]." [193]

Gorresio remarks (note 94, p. 310, vol. x.) that the funeral rites of the Arian Brahmans are here introduced as practised among the Rākshasas, a race of different origin and worship, in the same way as Homer represents Grecian ceremonies as having been celebrated in Troy.

[192] "According to Āpastamba (says the commentator), it should have been placed on the nose; this must therefore have been done in conformity with some other sūtras" (yadyapi "nāsike sruvāv" ity Āpastambenoktaṁ tathāpi sūtrāntarāt skandhe 'pi nikshepaḥ sruvasya bodhyaḥ). Compare Professor Müller's article on the funeral ceremonies of the Brahmans in the Journal of the German Oriental Society for 1855, pp. vi. ff.

[193] On this whole passage the commentator remarks: "Tatyajus tam mahābhāgam pancha-bhūtāni Rāvaṇam | śārīra-dhātavo hy asya māṁsaṁ rudhiram eva cha | neśur brahmāstra-nirdagdhāḥ na cha bhasmāpy adṛiśyata" iti Mahābhārate uktatvena kasya Vālmīkinā śmaśānānayana-pūrvakaṁ dāhaḥ uktaḥ iti chen na | tasya Rāmavāṇa-tejo-varṇana-vishaye 'tyukty-alankāra-paratvād iti vadati | "Since it is said in the Mahābhārata (Rāmopākhyāna, in Vana-parvan 16529 f.) that 'the five elements forsook the great Rāvaṇa, and the constituents of his body, flesh, and blood perished, when he was burnt up by the divine weapon (brahmāstra), and not even any ashes were seen;'—who is it that is here alleged by Vālmīki to have been brought to the cemetery and then burnt? If any one raises this objection, I deny that there is any difficulty, as in the description of Rāma's prowess the Mahābhārata makes use of the ornament of exaggeration."

Nor does it appear that in the rites described in the following passage (of Gorresio's edition) which are said to have been performed by Indrajit, the son of Rāvaṇa, there is anything, except the "Rākshasa texts," contrary to Brahmanical usages. As, however, the commentator (in the Bombay ed.), in his note on another passage, represents the worship at the Nikumbhilā as being offered to 'Kālī, and as the description is of some interest, I will quote it at length: [194]

Rāmāyaṇa vi. 19, 38 ff. (Gorr.).—Indrajiṭ ṭu tatas tena saṁyuge 'dbhuta-kāriṇā | nirjito Bāḷi-putreṇa krodhaṁ chakre sudāruṇam | so 'ntardhāna-gataḥ pāpo Rāvaṇiḥ raṇa-karkaśaḥ | nikumbhilāyāṁ vidhi-vat Pāvakaṁ juhuve 'stra-vit | juhvatas tasya tatrāgnau raktoshṇīshāmbara-srajaḥ | ājahrus tatra sambhrāntāḥ Rākshasāḥ yatra Rāvaṇiḥ | śastraṇi śitadhārāṇi samidho 'tha vibhītakān | lohitāni cha vāsāṁsi sruvaṁ

[194] The Bombay edition (vi. 44, 32 ff.) gives the first verse and the first half of the second nearly as they stand in Gorresio's edition, and the second half of the second, with its sequel, as follows: Brahma-datta-varo vīro Rāvaṇiḥ krodha-mūrchhitaḥ | adṛiśyo niśitān vāṇān mumochāśani-varchasaḥ | "The son of Rāvaṇa, to whom a boon had been given by Brahmā, mad with rage, discharged sharp arrows, gleaming like lightnings." No mention is made of the sacrifice in the Bombay text. In Rāmāyaṇa, book v., sect 24 (Bombay ed.), it is related that the female Rākshasas had been threatening Sītā after her capture by Rāvaṇa, because she would not yield to his desires, and that one of them, Śūrpaṇakhā, acceding to a proposal to eat her, says (v. 44 f.): Surā chānīyatāṁ kshipraṁ sarva-śoka-vināśinī | mānusham māṁsam āsvādya nṛityāmo 'tha nikumbhilām | "And let wine be quickly brought, which annihilates all sorrows. Enjoying human flesh, let us dance at the Nikumbhilā." The comment on this passage states that the Nikumbhilā was an image of Bhadrakālī on the west side of Laṅkā (Nikumbhilā nāma Laṅkāyāḥ paśchima-bhāga-vartinī Bhadrakālī | tāṁ nṛityāmaḥ tat-samīpaṁ gatvā nṛityāmaḥ). In the Uttara Kāṇḍa (sect. 25, v. 2) we are told that Rāvaṇa, with his attendants, entered "the Nikumbhilā, a grove in Laṅkā" (tato nikumbhilā nāma Laṅkopavamam uttamam). The commentator says it was "a wood situated at the western gate of Laṅkā for the performance of rites" (Laṅkā-paśchima-dvāra-deśa-varti-karma-siddhi-hetu-bhūtaṁ kānanam). His son Indrajit, with the aid of the Brahman Uśanas, had been celebrating there the seven sacrifices, the "agnishṭoma," "aśvamedhha," "rājasūya," "gomedha" (cow-sacrifice), the Vaishṇava ceremonial, etc. When he had performed the Māheśvara offering, "which it is difficult for men to obtain," he obtained boons from Mahādeva, who appeared to him (ibid. verses 3 ff.). (This is the ceremony alluded to above, in p. 412.) But he had also been performing the Vaishṇava rite; which, however, is not said to have been productive of any results. Verses 7*b* ff. of this section are as follows: Yajñās te sapta putreṇa prāptās te bahu-vistarāḥ | 8. Agnishṭomo 'śvamedhaś cha yajño bahusuvarṇakaḥ | rājasūyas tathā yajño gomedho Vaishṇavas tathā | 9. Māheśvare pravṛitte tu yajñe puṁbhiḥ sudurlabhe | varāṁs te labdhavān putraḥ sākshāt Paśupater iha | Only six kinds of sacrifice are here mentioned, unless the word "Bahusuvarṇaka" stands for a seventh.

kārshāyasaṁ tataḥ | sarvato 'gniṁ samāstīrya śaraiḥ sa-prāsa-tomaraiḥ | chhāgalasyāpi kṛishṇasya kaṇṭhād ādāya jīvataḥ | soṇitaṁ tena vidhivat sa juhāva raṇotsukaḥ | sahṛid eva samiddhasya vidhūmasya mahārchishaḥ | babhūvuḥ saṁnimittāni vijayaṁ yāpy avedayan | pradakshiṇāvarta-śikhas tapta-hāṭaka-sannibhaḥ | havis tat pratijagrāha Pāvakaḥ svayam utthitaḥ | tato 'gni-madhyād uttasthau kāñchanaḥ syandanottamaḥ | chaturbhiḥ kāñchanāpīḍair aśvair yuktaḥ prabhadrakaiḥ | antardhāna-gataḥ śrīmān dīpta-pāvaka-saprabhaḥ | hutāgnim tarpayitvā cha daitya-dānava-rākshasān | vāchayitvā tataḥ svasti prayuktāśīr dvijātibhiḥ | āruroha rathaṁ śreshṭham antar-dhāna-charaṁ śubham | sva-vaśyair vājibhir yuktaṁ śastraiś cha vividhair yutam . . . 50. Jāmbūnadamayo nāgas taruṇāditya-sannibhaḥ | babhūvendrajitaḥ ketur vaidūrya-samalankṛitaḥ | Hutvā 'gniṁ Rākshasair mantrais tato vachanam abravīt |

"But Indrajit, being conquered in the conflict by the miracle-working son of Bāli, became inflamed with terrific anger. This wicked son of Rāvaṇa, fierce in battle, having become invisible, made an oblation to Pāvaka (Fire) in due form, on the sacrificial ground. When he was there throwing his oblation into the fire, wearing a red turban, garments, and garland, the reverent Rākshasas brought thither sharp-edged weapons, logs of wood, and myrobalan, blood-red vestments, and a ladle of black iron. Having heaped the fire all over with arrows, darts, and iron maces, and having drawn blood from the throat of a live black goat, he offered it as an oblation, being eager for battle. At the same time there appeared from the brightly-burning and smokeless fire omens which portended victory. Pāvaka himself, rising, with his flame sweeping round to the right, and luminous as refined gold, received the oblation. Then from the midst of the fire there arose a magnificent golden chariot, drawn by four lucky horses with golden head-ornaments; but became invisible, while glorious and lustrous as burning fire. Having satiated the sacrificial fire, with the Daityas, Dānavas, and Rākshasas, having caused a benediction (svasti) to be pronounced, and been blessed by the Brahmans, [Indrajit] ascended the beautiful chariot, moving invisibly, drawn by self-directed horses, and furnished with various weapons. . . . . 50. A golden serpent,[195] bright as the rising sun, and adorned with lapis lazuli, formed the banner of Indrajit. Having made an oblation to Fire with Rākshasa texts, he then spake," etc.

[195] See, in reference to this, the quotation from Signor Gorresio given above in p. 412.

The ceremony of Indrajit is again alluded to by Vibhīshaṇa in vi. 84, 14 ff. (Bombay ed.=vi. 63, 13 of Gorr. ed.):

Chaityaṁ nikumbhilām adya prāpya homaṁ karishyati | Hutavān upayāto hi devair api sa-vāsavaiḥ | durādharsho bhavaty esha saṅgrāme Rāvaṇātmajaḥ | . . . . 16. Sa-sainyās tatra gachchhāmo yāvat tan na samāpyate | . . . . 23. Samāpta-karmā hi sa Rākshasarshabho bhavaty adṛiśyaḥ samare surāsuraiḥ | yuyutsatā tena samāpta-karmaṇā bhavet surāṇām api saṁśayo mahān | "Having to-day resorted to the sacrificial ground, he will offer an oblation (homa). When he approaches after making this offering, this son of Rāvaṇa is invincible by gods and Vāsavas. . . . . 16. Let us go thither with our hosts before that ceremony is completed. . . . . 23. For when he has accomplished his rite,[196] that prince of the Rākshasas becomes invisible by either gods or Asuras in battle; and even the gods would hesitate to encounter him if he desired to fight."

In the following section Vibhīshaṇa returns to the subject (vi. 85, 12, Bombay ed.=vi. 64, 11 of Gorr.):

Tena vīreṇa tapasā vara-dānāt Svayambhuvaḥ | astram brahma-śiraḥ prāptaṁ kāmagāś cha turangamāḥ | sa esha saha sainyena prāptaḥ kila nikumbhilām | yady uttishṭhet kṛitam karma hatān sarvāṁś cha viddhi naḥ | nikumbhilām asamprāptam akṛitāgniṁ cha yo ripuḥ | tvām ātatāyinaṁ hanyāt Indraśatro sa te badhaḥ | "This hero has obtained through austerity, and by the gift of Svayambhū, a weapon called 'brahma-śiras,' and horses that go according to his will. He with his army has reached the sacrificial ground. If he rises after completing his ceremony, you may regard us all as destroyed. But if any foe slays thee, thou cruel tyrant (Indrajit), before thou hast reached that ground,[197]

[196] It is related in the Uttara Kāṇḍa 30, 12 ff., that after his victory over Indra, Indrajit asked, and obtained, this boon as the condition of releasing his captive foe. For a summary of the story of Indra and Indrajit, see the Appendix.

[197] Explained by the commentator as nikumbhilāṁ tad-yāga-bhūmim mahākālī-kshetraṁ tad-ākhya-nyagrodha-mūla-rūpam | "That sacrificial ground, the sacred precinct of the great Kālī—viz. the root of the nyagrodha tree so called." This tree is mentioned in vi. 87, 2 ff., Bombay ed. (=vi. 66, 2, Gorr. ed.): . . . . praviśya tu mahad vanam | adarśayata tat-karma-Lakshmaṇāya Vibhīshaṇaḥ | nīla-jīmūta-saṅkāśaṁ nyagrodham bhīmadarśanam | tejasvī Rāvaṇa-bhrātā Lakshmaṇāya nyavedayat | ihopahāram bhūtānām balavān Rāvaṇātmajaḥ | upahṛityа tataḥ paśchāt saṅgrāmam abhivartate | adṛiśyaḥ sarva-bhūtānāṁ tato bhavati Rākshasaḥ | nihanti samare śatrūn badhnāti cha śarottamaiḥ | tam apravishṭaṁ nyagrodham balinaṁ Rāvaṇātmajam | vidhivaṁsaya śarair dīptair ityādi | and kindled the fire, this, O enemy of Indra, is the manner of thy death," etc.

It is related in the following section (86, 14, f., Bombay ed.=65, 12 Gorr.) that he rose before his rite had been completed:

Svam anīkaṁ vishaṇṇaṁ tu dṛishṭvā śatrubhir arditam | udatishṭhata durdharshaḥ sa karmany ananushṭhite | vṛikshāndhakārād nirgamya jāta-krodhaḥ sa Rāvaṇiḥ | ityādi | "Hearing that his army was harassed by their enemies, and dispirited, the irresistible (Rākshasa) arose while his ceremony was unaccomplished. Issuing forth from the gloom of the tree, the son of Rāvaṇa, incensed, mounted his chariot," etc.

Again, in a passage of the Sundara Kāṇḍa, or Fifth Book, sect. 89, vv. 22 ff. (only found in Gorresio's, not in the Bombay ed.), which forms the sequel to the one given above, p. 370, Mahādeva is represented as receiving Vibhīshaṇa with favour, after he had deserted his brother Rāvaṇa. Now if the author of the poem had intended to represent Śiva as an especial object of adoration to the Rākshasas, he might have been expected to describe this deity as repaying their worship with especial favour and affection; but it is inconsistent with this that he should represent Śiva as receiving favourably a deserter from the Rākshasa camp.

There is a section (the forty-first) of the Yuddha Kāṇḍa, or Sixth Book (which, however, is to be found only in Gorresio's ed.), wherein Rāvaṇa defies Vishṇu at great length. But I do not consider this as any proof that the poet intended to attribute to the speaker any especial hostility to Vishṇu's worship (particularly as Indra, Śiva, and Brahmā are also slightingly spoken of), but rather as a demonstration called forth by the poetical necessities of the argument. Even while the poet represented Rāma as the incarnation of Vishṇu, it was of course natural to make the arrogant Rāvaṇa defy him. The fact is, that the traits ascribed to the Rākshasas in the Rāmāyaṇa must be regarded as poetical far more than historical. The poet assigns to his personages such characteristics as he considered at the moment to be most conducive to the interest, and effective with a view to the action, of his poem. These characteristics are sometimes absolutely contradictory, as when Rāvaṇa is described both as an observer of the Vedas and at the same time as a persecutor of Brahmans and polluter of their sacrifices. I do not therefore see that the Rāmāyaṇa supplies any sufficient grounds for regarding the non-Arian tribes of Southern India as being especially addicted to the worship of Śiva.[198]

SECT. VIII.—The earlier and later representations of Umā, the wife of Śiva.

We have already seen (p. 267) that in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (3, 57) Ambikā, who at a later period is identified with the wife of Rudra, is declared to be his sister.[199]

The earliest work, as far as I am aware, in which the name of Umā occurs, is the Talavakāra, or Kena Upanishad. In the third section of that Treatise (see Dr. Roer's translation in the Bibliotheca Indica, vol. xv., p. 83 ff.) it is mentioned that on one occasion Brahma gained a victory for the gods. As, however, they were disposed to ascribe the credit of their success to themselves, Brahma appeared for the purpose of disabusing them of their mistake. The gods did not know him, and commissioned first Agni, and then Vāyu, to ascertain what this apparition was. When, in answer to Brahma's inquiry, these two gods represented themselves, the one as having the power to burn, and the other as able to blow away, anything whatever, he desired them to burn and to blow away, respectively, a blade of grass; but they were unable to do this, and returned without ascertaining who he was. Indra was then commissioned (Kena Up. iii. 11, 12; and iv. 1, 2):

[198] It is also related in the Uttara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa (sections 4–8, of which I shall give the substance in the Appendix) that a Rākshasa named Sukeśa had formerly received a boon from Mahādeva and Pārvatī, and that his three sons, the lords of Lankā, had made an attack upon the gods, but had been driven back and defeated by Vishṇu, and compelled to take refuge in Pātāla. But neither does this, nor even the Linga-worship attributed to Rāvaṇa in the Uttara Kāṇḍa 31, 42 f., suffice to prove any special adoration of Śiva among the southern races more than among the northern.

[199] Rodasī is his wife according to the Nirukta xi. 49; and xii. 46; Rodasī Rudrasya patnī. Sāyaṇa, however, on R.V. i. 167, 4 and 5, says that she is the wife of the Maruts. On v. 4 his words are: Tasya (Rudrasya) strī Rodasī iti kechid āhuḥ | apare tu Marud-āṁ striyo Rodasī iti nāmadheyam ity āhuḥ | ayam eva paksho yuktaḥ uttaratra evaṁ vyavahārāt | "Some say Rodasī is Rudra's wife. Others say Rodasī is the name of the wife of the Maruts. This is the correct view, from the word being so applied afterwards" (in the next verse). On verse 5 Sāyaṇa says: Rodasī Marut-patnī vidyud vā. "Rodasī is the wife of the Maruts, or Lightning." In this verse she receives the epithet of vishita-stukā, "having dishevelled hair," and is said to seek the society of the Maruts (Joshad yad īm asuryā sachadhyai vishita-stukā Rodasī nṛimaṇāḥ). I doubt if she is much, if at all, noticed in the later literature. See the fifth volume of this work, pp. 148 and 345.

Atha Indram abruvan "Maghavann etad vijânîhi kim etad yaksham" iti | "tathâ" iti tad abhyadravat tasmât tirodadhe | 12. Sa tasminn eva âkâśe striyam âjagâmâ bahu śobhamânâm Umâm Haimavatîm | tâm ha uvâcha kim etad yaksham iti | iv. 1. Sâ Brahma iti ha uvâcha Brahmano vai etad-vijaye mahîyadhvam iti | tato ha eva vidânchakâra Brahmeti |

"They then said to Indra, 'Maghavan, ascertain what this apparition is.' He replied, 'So be it;' and approached that being, who vanished from him. In that sky he came to a woman who was very resplendent, Umâ Haimavatî. To her he said, 'What is this apparition?' She said, 'It is Brahma. In this victory of Brahma, exult.' By this he knew that it was Brahma." [200]

In his remarks[201] on this passage of the Kena Upanishad (Ind. Stud. ii. 186 ff.), Professor Weber supplies an interesting and ingenious contribution to the mythological history of Umâ. He says: "The representation in sections 3 and 4 indicates that the Kena Upanishad was produced at a time when,—in place of the three principal gods, Agni, Vâyu, and Sûrya,[202] who had become developed into the conjoint representatives of the divine principle on earth, in the atmosphere, and in heaven,—Agni, Vâyu, and Indra were regarded as such. These are properly only two, since Indra is essentially identical with Vâyu. Though I have found numerous examples of the first triad, especially in the two Yajur-vedas, I have noticed only one other of the second triad, which is properly only a duad, viz. in the Rik-text of the Purusha Sukta (R.V. x. 99, 13). Nor am I able to give a satisfactory

[200] This is explained by the commentator: Tasya Indrasya yakshe bhaktim buddhvâ Vidyâ Umâ-rûpinî prâdurabhût strî-rûpâ | sa Indras tâm Umâm bahu śobhamânâm sarveshâm hi śobhamânânâm śobhanatamâm Vidyâm tadâ "bahu śobhamânâ" iti viśeshanam upapannam bhavati | Haimavatîm hema-kritâbharanavatîm iva bahu śobhamânâm ity arthah | athavâ Umâ eva Himavato duhitâ Haimavatî nityam eva sarvajnena Îśvarena saha vartate iti jnâtum samarthâ iti kritvâ tâm upâjagâma Indras tâm ha Umâm kila uvâcha paprachha kim etad darśayitvâ tirobhûtam yaksham |

"Knowing Indra's devotion to this apparition, Knowledge, in the form of a woman, Umâ, appeared. Indra [came] to her who was very resplendent, to Knowledge who is the most resplendent of all the resplendent beings, and whose epithet 'very resplendent' is then established. 'Haimavatî' means that she was very resplendent like a female with ornaments made of gold. Or, it was Umâ Haimavatî, the daughter of Himavat, who from continually dwelling with the omniscient Îśvara (Mahâdeva) is able to know. With this belief Indra approached Umâ, and said to her, 'What is this apparition which appeared and vanished?'" explanation of it. On the other hand, the totality of the divine was already comprehended in Brahman (neuter), and it is the object of the legend here to make clear and to enforce the supremacy of Brahma over all temporary divine manifestations, and even over the triad of such.

[201] Already translated by Dr. Roer (Bibl. Ind. xv. 84 ff.).

[202] See above, pp. 163 and 298.

"But how shall we explain the position of Umā Haimavatī, who comes forward as mediatrix between the eternal Brahman and the gods? According to Śankara, she is Vidyā (knowledge) who appears Umārūpiṇī (in the form of Umā) to Indra. The same explanation is found in Sāyaṇa, who (on Taitt. Ār. x. 1, 150, p. 787 of the text in the Bibliotheca Indica), when interpreting the word soma, cites this passage, and remarks: Himavat-putryāḥ Gauryāḥ brahma-vidyābhimānirūpatvād Gaurī-vāchakaḥ Umā-śabdo brahma-vidyām upalakshayati | atah eva Talavakāropanishadi brahma-vidyā-mūrti-prastāve brahma-vidyā-mūrtiḥ paṭhyate "bahu śobhamānām Umāṁ Haimavatīṁ tāṁ ha uvācha" iti | tad-vishayaḥ Paramātmā[203] Umayā saha vartamānatvāt Somaḥ | '[Since Gaurī, the daughter of Himavat, is the impersonation of divine knowledge, the word Umā, which denotes Gaurī, indicates divine knowledge. Hence in the Talavakāra Upanishad, in the passage on the impersonation of divine knowledge, the impersonation of divine knowledge is introduced in these words: "He said to the very resplendent Umā Haimavatī. The supreme Spirit, who is the object of this Divine Knowledge, from his existing together with Umā, is called Soma (i.e. Sa+Uma."]'[204] And again in the same commentary on Anuvāka 48, it is said: Umā brahma-vidyā tayā saha vartamāna Soma paramātman | 'Umā is divine knowledge: thou who existest with her, O Soma, supreme spirit,' etc. Further in the same commentary on Anuvāka 18, in explanation of the term Ambikā-pataye, we have the words: Ambikā jaganmātā Pārvatī tasyāḥ bhartre | 'Ambikā is Pārvatī, the mother of the world,—to her husband,' etc.; and the word Umāpataye (which stands in the Drāviḍa, but not in the Āndhra, text of the Taitt. Ār.) is thus interpreted: Tasyāḥ eva brahma-vidyātmako dehaḥ Umā-śabdenochyate tasyāḥ svāmine | 'Her (Ambikā's) body, consisting of divine knowledge, is designated by the word Umā—to her (Umā's) husband,'

[203] [The word Paramātmā is not in the text as given by Weber.]

[204] [The same explanation of Soma is given in the Atharvaśiras Upanishad. See above, p. 302.]

etc.[205] This last passage is the only one in the circle of the Vedic writings in which—with the exception of that in the Kena Upanishad—I have as yet directly met with the name Umā; for the expression 'Umā-sahāya' in the Kaivalya Upanishad (see above, p. 363) no longer belongs to the Vedic period; and further, though the commentaries in other places also[206] explain 'soma' by 'Umayā sahita,' 'accompanied by Umā' (as Sāyaṇa has done in the passage above cited), such an interpretation is just as groundless as in the texts commented on by Sāyaṇa, where the word signifies simply the Soma-libation. From the considerations just stated, therefore (i.e. partly from the unanimity of the commentaries, and partly from the very position which Umā here assumes in the Kena Upanishad), the signification of this word might seem to be fixed with tolerable certainty as denoting 'Brahma-vidyā,' 'divine knowledge,' and Umā might appear to be directly related to Sarasvatī, the divine word, and we might even be tempted to bring her into etymological connexion with the sacred word 'om.' There are, however, some additional points which seem to place the original signification of Umā in quite a different light. First of all, why is she called Haimavatī? What has she to do with the Himavat? Is it that the Brahma-vidyā (divine knowledge) came originally from the Himavat to the Arians dwelling in Madhyadeśa (the central region of Hindustan)? We have learnt from the Kaushītakī Brāhmaṇa (Ind. Stud. i. 153) that the north of India was distinguished by greater purity of speech, and that students travelled thither to learn the language (vāchaṁ śikshitum), and on their return thence enjoyed great consideration and authority. Now it would have been quite natural if this state of things had not been confined to language, but had become extended to speculation also, and if the knowledge of the one, eternal Brahma, had been sooner attained in the peaceful valleys of the Himālaya than was possible for men living in Madhyadeśa, where their minds were more occupied by the practical concerns of life. Such a view of Umâ Haimavatî appears to me, however, to be very hazardous. For—not to say that in our explanations of the ancient Indian deities we act wisely when we attach greater importance to the physical than to the speculative element—we are by no means certain that Umâ actually does signify divine knowledge (brahma-vidyâ); and, moreover, her subsequent position as Rudra's wife (in the Taitt. Âr.), and so Śiva's, would thus be quite inexplicable. Now there is among the epithets of this latter goddess a similar one, viz. Pârvatî, which would lead us in interpreting the word Haimavatî, to place the emphasis not upon the Himavat, but upon the mountain (parvata): and with this I might connect the epithets of Rudra which we have learnt from the Śatarudriya (see above, p. 322), Giriśa, Giriśanta, Giriśaya, Giritra, in which we recognize the germ of the conception of Śiva's dwelling on Kailâsa. He is the tempest, which rages in the mountains, and his wife is therefore properly called Pârvatî, Haimavatî, 'the mountaineer,' 'the daughter of Himavat.' At the same time it is not clear what we have to understand by his wife;[207] and further she is, perhaps, originally not his wife, but his sister, for Umâ and Ambikâ are at a later period evidently identical, and Ambikâ is Rudra's sister (Ind. Stud. i. 183).[208] Besides, this identification of Umâ with Ambikâ leads us to a new etymology of the former. For as [207] Indian mythology, however, assigns wives to the gods, without always, or even generally, ascribing to the wives any specific cosmical function. Weber adds in a note: "Does she perhaps denote the streams and torrents, poured forth by Rudra, the Storm, from the mountains and clouds? and does the name Ambikâ stand in direct relation thereto? In the same way Sarasvatî also, the goddess of streams and of speech, is called Ambitamâ, is addressed with the word 'Amba,' and is said to be 'produced on the highest peak on the mountain top' (uttame śikhare jâtâ parvata-mûrdhani). According to this view, Umâ and Sarasvatî, Ambikâ and Ambitamâ, Pârvatî and the parvata-mûrdhani jâtâ, would perhaps have been originally identical, and have only become gradually separated, in such a way that in the one the violent and destructive energy of nature had become concentrated, and in the other the harmonious music of the streaming waters? And should we thus have to seek in the Umâ of the Kena Upanishad and, on the other hand, in the Varadâ of the Taitt. Âr. two examples of the original identity of both? Kuhn, at least, as he has informed me, holds Ambikâ to be decidedly identical with Sarasvatî." [Is not a certain confirmation of this supposed original connexion of Umâ and Sarasvatî to be found in the fact that in the mythology of the Râmâyaṇa i. 36, 13 (quoted below in p. 430) Umâ is the younger, while the river Gangâ is the elder daughter of Himavat?—J.M.]

[205] [The entire text of the Anuvāka, and the part of its commentary which refers to the terms Ambikāpataye and Umāpataye, as given in the Bibl. Indica, are as follows: Text: Namo hiraṇyabāhave hiraṇyavarṇāya hiraṇyarūpaya hiraṇyapataye Ambikāpataye Umāpataye paśupataye namo namaḥ | Comm.: Ambikā jaganmātā Pārvatī | tasyāḥ pataye bhartre | tasyāḥ eva Ambikāyāḥ brahma-vidyātmako dehaḥ Umāśabdena uchyate | tādṛiśyāḥ Umāyāḥ pataye svāmine Rudrāya punaḥ punaḥ namaskāro 'stu.]

[206] e.g. Mahīdhara on Vāj. S. 16, 39, and Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra on the corresponding passage of the Taitt. Sanhitā.

[208] See above, p. 321.

Ambikā, 'mother,' appears to be merely an euphemistic and flattering epithet, employed to propitiate the cruel goddess (see Mahīdhara on Vāj. S. 3, 57,[209]—just as Rudra was called Śiva), in the same way it appears that we must derive Umā from the root 'u,' 'av,' 'to protect.' It is true that a final vowel before 'ma' commonly takes 'guṇa,' or is lengthened, but the words 'sima' and 'hima' show that this is not necessary, and the name of Rumā is perhaps (unless we derive it from 'ram') a perfectly analogous formation. It certainly remains a mystery how we are to conceive the cruel wife of Rudra coming forward here in the Kena Upanishad as the mediatrix between the supreme Brahma and Indra, for on that supposition this Upanishad would have to be referred to a period when her husband, Rudra, was regarded as the highest god, the Īśvara, and thus also as Brahma; i.e. it would belong to the period of some Śaiva sect. But since this remains questionable and improbable, we must first of all hold to the view that the conception entertained by the commentators of Umā as representing 'divine knowledge' rests solely upon this passage of the Kena Upanishad, unless indeed the original identity of Umā with Sarasvatī, which in the last note was regarded as possible, is here again visible.

"I consider the present opportunity a favourable one for speaking of some other names of Śiva's spouse. As in Śiva, first of all two gods, Agni and Rudra, are combined, so too his wife is to be regarded as a compound of several divine forms,[210] and this becomes quite evident if we look over the mass of her epithets. While one set of these, as Umā, Ambikā, Pārvatī, Haimavātī, belong to the wife of Rudra, others, as Kālī, Karālī (see Ind. Stud. i. 287) carry us back to the wife of Agni, while Gaurī and others perhaps refer to Nirṛiti, the goddess of all evil.

[209] [The words of Mahīdhara here referred to are: Yo 'yaṁ Rudrākhyaḥ krūro devas tasya virodhinaṁ hantum ichhā bhavati tadā anayā bhaginyā krūradevatayā sādhanabhūtayā taṁ hinasti | "This cruel god called Rudra desires to slay his enemy. Then by the instrumentality of this sister, a cruel goddess, he destroys him." Then follow the words quoted above in p. 321, note 40, at the end.]

[210] "The most remarkable instance of this is to be found in Mahābhārata iv. 178 ff., in the hymn of Yudhishṭhira to Durgā, where he calls her Yaśodā, Kṛishṇā, 'born in the cowherd family of Nanda,' 'sister of Vāsudeva,' 'enemy of Kansa,' and 'having the same features as Sankarshaṇa,' etc., etc. However late the date of this hymn may be, it is still in the highest degree remarkable."

"The Tenth Book of the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, in which she is several times invoked under different names, is particularly important for a knowledge of her character. The principal passage in which these invocations occur has been already noticed above (Ind. Stud. i. pp. 75 and 228[211]). It is, like the prayers which precede it, an imitation of the Gāyatrī, and runs thus: Kātyāyanāya vidmahe Kanyakumāri[212] dhīmahi | tan no Durgiḥ prachodayāt | ['We think on Kātyāyana and meditate on Kanyakumāri; may Durgi advance us.']

. . . "Now it is certainly difficult grammatically to find in this text the sense which Sāyaṇa puts into it,[213] and which must have been traditionally connected with it, as that sense is the basis of the modification of the passage as found in the Atharva collection of Upanishads.

[211] In the first of these passages (Ind. Stud. i. 75) the author remarks that the Nārāyaṇīya Upanishad (the part of the Taitt. Ār. in which the verse in question occurs) is also found among the Upanishads of the Atharva-veda, "but with remarkable variations, which indicate a later period. Thus the words quoted above according to the reading in the Taitt. Ār., viz. Kātyāyanāya vidmahe Kanyākumārīṁ dhīmahi tan no Durgiḥ prachodayāt, are, in the Upanishad as it is given in the Atharva collection, changed into Kātyāyanāyai vidmahe Kanyākumārīṁ dhīmahi tan no Durgā prachodayāt | This agrees with the sense which Sāyaṇa, in his interpretation, puts on the words." In the passage of the Linga Purāṇa ii. 48, of which the commencement is given in the third volume of this work, p. 263 f., this invocation of Durgā occurs as follows in verse 26: Kātyāyanyai vidmahe Kanyākumāryai dhīmahi tan no Durgā prachodayāt |

[212] The author observes here that in Ind. Stud. i. 75, he had incorrectly given Kanyakumārim as the proper reading. The text in the Bibl. Ind., p. 770, has Kanyākumārī.

[213] Sāyaṇa's interpretation, as given by Weber i. 228, note, and here, is as follows: Paśchād Durgā-gāyatrī | Hema-prakhyām indu-khaṇḍāṅka-mauḷim [-āntamaulim, in Bibl. Ind.] ity āgama-prasiddha-mūrti-dharāṁ [-rīṁ, B. I.] Durgām prārthayate "Kātyāyanāya" iti | kṛittiṁ vaste iti Kātyo [Kārtyo, B. I.] Rudraḥ | . . . . sa eva ayanam adhiṣṭhānaṁ yasyāḥ sā Kātyāyanī [Kārtyayanī, B. I.] Athavā Katasya ṛishi-viśeshasya apatyaṁ Kātyaḥ | . . . : Kutsitam anishṭham mārayati iti kumārī kanyā dīpyamānā chāsau kumārī cha Kanyākumārī | Durgiḥ Durgā | lingādi-vyatyayaḥ savatra chhāndaso drashṭavyaḥ | [There are other variations in the text as given in the Bibl. Ind.] . . . . "Then follows Durgā's gāyatrī. In the words 'Kātyānāya,' etc., he supplicates Durgā, bearing the form celebrated in the śāstras 'as bright as gold, and having for a diadem the ornament of a section of the moon.' Kātya is he who wears a skin, Rudra . . . . . and Kātyāyanī is she whose path, support, is Kātya. Or, Kātya is the offspring of Kata, a particular rishi. . . . . Kumārī is she who destroys what is bad, undesirable. She who is both Kanyā, 'shining,' and Kumārī, is Kanyākumārī. Durgi is Durgā. Diversity in forms is to be seen everywhere in the Vedas."

All the other gods who are invoked are male—viz. Rudra, Mahādeva, Danti, Nandi, Shaṇmukha, Garuḍa, Brahman, Vishṇu, Nārasinha, Āditya, Agni; and it must therefore surprise us if we are to regard the twelfth deity as feminine, especially as the form is masculine. On the other hand, the sense of the words seems to compel us to adopt the traditional explanation. . . . . Moreover, Kātyāyanī, Kanyākumārī, and Durgā, are already well known to us as names of Śiva's consort: and, indeed, they all appear to carry us back to the flame of fire. It is true that as regards Kātyāyanī this is somewhat difficult; though when we consider the great importance of the Kātya family in reference to the sacrificial system of the Brahmans, it does not seem very improbable that a particular kind of fire, which perhaps was introduced by one of the Kātyas, was called after him, and that this name was then associated with Kālī, Karālī, and Durgā, which are originally mere appellations of fire. Kanyākumārī, or 'the maidenly,' is a very fitting epithet of the holy, pure, sacrificial flame; and even at the time of the Periplus, i.e. of Pliny, we find her worship extended to the southernmost point of India, to the Cape which was then, as now, called after her Cape Comorin: but does it not appear that she was then no longer worshipped as the sacrificial flame, but as the wife of Śiva himself (whose name Nīlakaṇṭha Lassen [Ind. Ant. i. 194] finds rendered in the Νελκύνδα of the Periplus)? The hymn to Agni in the second anuvāka of the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (Āndhra recension) seems pretty decisive in favour of our connecting Durgā with the sacrificial fire. It is there said[214] in the second verse [Bibl. Ind., p. 788]: Tām agnivarṇām tapasā jvalantīm vairo-chanīm karma-phaleshu jushṭām | Durgām devīm śaraṇam aham prapadye sutarasi tarase namaḥ | ['I seek as my refuge the goddess Durgā, who is of the colour of fire, burning with austerity (or heat), daughter of the sun (or of fire), who is sought after for the reward of rites: adoration be to thy energy, O impetuous [goddess].'] The five following verses repeat (as does also the Durgā-stava in the Pariśishṭa) the same thought, which is also expressed in R.V. i. 99,[215] that Agni would help the suppliant over all 'durga' and 'durita' (difficulties and evils). Verse second could certainly be understood as if the worshipper turned to the personified Durgati (Evil) herself, and sought her protection, so that thus Durgā would have arisen out of Nirṛiti. But it appears to me better to understand the passage of the violent flame of the fire, which, like the fire itself, delivers, atones, and frees from all 'durga' and 'durita,' is a 'durgā,' a protecting fortress, against them; so that this name would belong to the same class as Ambikā, Śiva, Umā. If at a later period Durgā decidedly appears to have taken the place of the evil goddess Nirṛiti, this is no proof that the case was so from the beginning, but only shows that the original signification had been lost; which is in so far quite natural, as the consort of Śiva bore a terrific character, both from her connexion with Rudra and also with Agni (compare Karālī).

[214] "This verse is also found in the Durgā-stava of the Rātripariśishṭa between the fourteenth and fifteenth divisions of the seventh section of the eighth Ashṭaka of the R.V." (i.e. between Maṇḍala x. 127 and 128). See note in the Appendix.

[215] This verse is as follows: Jātavedase sunavāma somam arātīyato nidahāti vedaḥ | sa naḥ parshad ati durgāṇi viśvā nāveva sindhuṁ duritā 'ti Agniḥ |

"The last name of Śiva's consort which I find in the Taitt. Ār. x. is Varadā, in anuvākas 26 and 30. It is true that there it appears rather to be the name of Sarasvatī, not of Durgā, when it is said: Āyātu varadā devī aksharam brahma-sammitam | gāyatrīṁ [gāyatrī, Bibl. Ind.] chhandasām mātā idam brahma jushasva me | . . . . sarvavarṇe mahādevi sandhyā-vidye Sarasvati | [216] But the words in anuv. 30 are not so clear: Uttame śikhare jātā bhūmyām parvata-mūrdhani | brāhmaṇebhyo 'bhyanujñātā gachha devi yathāsukham | stuto (=stutā u) mayā varadā veda-mātā prachodayantī pavane dvijātā,[217] etc.; where especially the first strophe reminds us of Pārvatī and Haimavatī, and one does not rightly comprehend how Sarasvatī obtains such an epithet (unless we are to understand the waters streaming from the hills, since Sarasvatī is, as is well known, at once a river goddess and the goddess of speech). In the same way the names Mahādevī and Sandhyāvidyā (see Wilson under Sandhyā) belong at a later period exclusively to the consort of Śiva. The other names, however, 'sarva-varṇā,' 'chhandasām mātā,' 'veda-mātā,' and finally 'Sarasvatī' itself, conduct us to Sarasvatī; and so does also the liturgical usage, and the sense itself of anuvākas 26–30. Thus there only remains to us the possibility of assuming here a blending (and so a reminiscence of the possible original identity) of both goddesses; as we may perhaps also assume in the case of Umā Haimavatī in the Kena Upanishad, agreeably to the conjecture intimated above, p. 189" (see p. 424, note 207, above).

[216] [The sense of these words, according to the reading in the Bibl. Ind., is: "May the boon-bestowing goddess (or the goddess Varadā) come: do thou, the mother of the Vedas, the letter equivalent to the Veda, the gāyatrī, receive with favour this my prayer . . . O thou who hast all letters, great goddess, Twilight-science, Sarasvatī." The latter portion of this quotation is not found in the text in the Bibl. Ind.]

[217] [The sense is: "Born on the highest peak, on the earth, on the summit of the mountain, dismissed from the Brahmans, go, goddess, wherever thou wilt. Praised by me, the boon-bestowing goddess, the mother of the Veda, twice born in the air, stimulating us," etc. The latter part of this quotation does not occur in the text as given in the Bibl. Ind.]

Two of the names alluded to in the above extract from the Indische Studien, which were afterwards applied to the consort of Śiva, viz. Kālī and Karālī, occur in a passage of another of the Upanishads (the Muṇḍaka i. 2, 4), where they are appellations of two of the different tongues of fire: Kālī Karālī cha Manojavā cha Sulohitā yā cha Sudhūmravarṇā | Sphulinginī Viśvarūpī cha devī lelāyamānāḥ iti sapta jihvāḥ | which is thus translated by Dr. Roer (Bibl. Ind. xv. 153): "The seven flickering tongues [of the fire] are—Kālī (the black one), Karālī (the terrific one), Manojavā (swift as the mind), Sulohitā (the very red one), Sudhūmravarṇā (of purple colour), Sphulinginī (emitting sparks), and the Viśvarūpī (all-shaped) goddess." The words "of the fire" are not in the original. The commentator, however, briefly remarks: Kālī Karālī Manojavā cha Sulohitā cha yā cha Sudhūmra-varṇā Sphulinginī Viśvarūpī cha devī lelāyamānāḥ dahanasya jihvāḥ | Agner havir-āhuti-grasanārthāḥ etāḥ sapta jihvāḥ | "Kālī, Karālī, Manojavā, Sulohitā, Sudhūmravarṇā, Sphulinginī, and the goddess Viśvarūpī, are the seven flickering tongues of fire. These are the seven tongues which Agni has for devouring oblations of butter."

On this passage Prof. Weber has the following remarks in his Indische Studien i. 286 f., which are thus of an earlier date than those above cited: "The first two of these names were at a later period personified, and came to represent Durgā (the consort of Śiva, who was developed out of Agni), who (Durgā), as is well known, became the object of a bloody sacrificial-worship under the names Kālī (the dark, black), Kaṭālā, Karālavadanā, Karālānanā, Karālamukhī. It is evident that a considerable time was required for the sense of the word to become developed from that of the 'dark, terrific, tongue of fire' to that of a goddess Kālī, Karālā, worshipped with bloody sacrifices: and since we find the latter in the drama of 'Mālati-Mādhava,' by Bhavabhūti, who is assigned by Wilson to the eighth century, the Muṇḍaka Upanishad must be considerably older; unless, indeed, the ancient signification of these names maintained itself at a later period alongside of the popular one. The worship of Durgā, Umā, and Pārvatī, may be shown in its beginnings, if not from this passage, at all events from the Upanishads of the Yajus, see Ind. Stud. i. p. 78." In a note Weber adds: "The third name (Manojavā) reminds us of Manojavas, the appellation of Yama, the god of death, in the Vāj. S. 5, 11. Does it at a later period denote his wife? for Yama too, like Śiva, is one stage of Agni, the older, certainly, while Śiva is the more recent."

In the passages quoted from the Bhāgavata and Vishṇu Purāṇas in section vi. (pp. 378, 385), the spouse of Mahādeva is said to have been originally the daughter of Daksha, and to have become the daughter of Himavat only when she was born the second time after her voluntary death at Daksha's sacrifice. The following passage of the Rāmāyaṇa says nothing of this double birth and parentage:

Rāmāyaṇa i. 36, 13 ff. (ed. Schl. = Bombay ed. 35, 13 ff; Gorresio's ed. 37, 14 ff.).—Śailendro Himavān nāma dhātūnām ākaro mahān | tasya kanyā-dvayaṁ jātaṁ rūpeṇāpratimam bhuvi | yā Meru-duhitā Rāma tayor mātā sumadhyamā | nāmnā Menā manojñā vai patnī Himavataḥ priyā | tasyāṁ Gangeyam abhavaj jyeshṭhā Himavataḥ sutā | Umā nāma dvitīyā 'bhūt kanyā tasyaiva Rāghava | . . . 19. Yā chānyā Śaila-duhitā kanyā "sīd Raghu-nandana | ugraṁ sā vratam āsthāya tapas tepe tapo-dhanā | ugreṇa tapasā yuktāṁ dadau Śaila-varaḥ sutām | Rudrāyāpratirūpāya Umāṁ loka-namaskṛitām | Ity ete Śaila-rājasya sute Rāma babhūvatuḥ | Gangā cha saritām śreshṭhā devīnāṁ chāpy Umā varā | "To Himavat, the chief of mountains, the great mine of metals, two daughters were born, in beauty unequalled upon earth. The daughter of Meru, Menā by name, the pleasing and beloved wife of Himavat, was their slender-waisted mother. Of her was born Gangā, the eldest daughter of Himavat; and his second daughter was called Umā. . . . 19. The other daughter of the mountain, rich in austere observances, having undertaken an arduous rite, fulfilled a course of severe austerity. This daughter, Umā, distinguished by severe austerity, adored by the worlds, the chief of mountains gave to the matchless Rudra.

These, Rāma, were the two daughters of the king of mountains, Gangā, the most eminent of rivers, and Umā, the most excellent of goddesses."

The Harivamsa (vv. 940 ff.) gives the following history of Umā, which differs in some points from that of the Rāmāyaṇa, as it assigns three daughters to Himavat and Menā, among whom the Gangā is not included:

Eteshām mānasī kanyā Menā nāma mahāgireḥ | patnī Himavataḥ śreshṭhā . . . . 943. Tisraḥ kanyās tu Menāyām janayāmāsa S'aila-rāṭ | Aparṇām Ekaparṇām cha tritīyām Ekapāṭalām | tapaś charantyaḥ sumahad duścharaṁ Deva-Dānavaiḥ | lokān samtāpayāmāsus tās tisraḥ sthāṇu-jangamān | āhāram eka-parṇena Ekaparṇā samācharat | pāṭalāpushpam ekaṁ cha ādadhāv Ekapāṭalā | ekā tatra nirāhārā tām mātā pratyashedhayat | "u mā" iti nishedhantī mātṛi-snehena duḥkhitā | sā tathoktā tada mātrā devī duścharа-chāriṇī | Umety evābhavat khyātā trishu lokeshu sundarī | tathaiva nāmnā teneha viśrutā yogadharmiṇī | etat tu trikumārīkaṁ jagat sthāsyati Bhārgava | tapaḥ-śarīrās tāḥ sarvās tisro yoga-balānvitāḥ | sarvāś cha brahma-vādinyaḥ sarvāś chaivordhva-retasaḥ | Umā tāsām varishṭhā cha jyeshṭhā cha vara-varniṇī | mahāyoga-balopetā Mahādevam upasthitā | Asitasyaikaparṇā tu Devalasya mahātmanaḥ | patnī dattā mahābrahman yogāchāryāya dhīmate | Jaigīshavyāya tu tathā viddhi tām Ekapāṭalām |

940. "Their (the Pitṛis') mental daughter was Menā, the eminent wife of the great mountain Himavat. . . . . 943. The king of the mountains begot three daughters upon Menā—viz. Aparṇā, Ekaparṇā, and Ekapāṭalā. These three, performing very great austerity, such as could not be accomplished by gods or Dānavas, distressed [with alarm] both the stationary and the moving worlds. Ekaparṇā ('One-leaf') fed upon one leaf. Ekapāṭalā took only one pāṭalā (Bignonia) for her food. One (Aparnā) took no sustenance, but her mother, distressed through maternal affection, forbade her, dissuading her with the words u mā ('O don't'). The beautiful goddess, performing arduous austerity, having been thus addressed by her mother on that occasion, became known in the three worlds as Umā. In this manner the contemplative goddess became renowned under that name. But this world shall remain [distinguished by] having these three maids. All these three had mortified bodies, were distinguished by the force of contemplation, and were all chaste, and expounders of divine knowledge. Umā was the eldest and most excellent among the three. Distinguished by the force derived from deep contemplation, she obtained Mahādeva [for her husband]. Ekaparṇā was given as a wife to the great Asita Devala, the wise teacher of the Yoga. And know that Ekapāṭalā was in like manner bestowed on Jaigīshavya."

The following is the commencement of the hymn of Arjuna to Durgā which, as has been mentioned in p. 205, he uttered at the suggestion of Kṛishṇa:[218]

Mahābhārata, Bhīshma-parv. vv. 796 ff.—Arjunaḥ uvacha | namas te Siddhasenāni ārye mandara-vāsini| Kumāri Kāli Kāpāli Kapile Kṛishṇa-pingale | Bhadrakāli namas tubhyam Mahākāli namo 'stu te | Chaṇḍi Chaṇḍe namas tubhyam Tāriṇi Varavarṇini| Kātyāyani mahābhāge Karāli Vijaye Jaye | śikhi-pichha-dhvaja-dhare nānābharaṇa-bhūshite | aṭṭa-śūla-praharaṇe khadga-kheṭaka-dhāriṇi | gopendrasyānuje jyeshṭhe Nanda-gopa-kulodbhave | Mahishāsṛik-priye nityaṁ Kauśiki pīta-vāsini | aṭṭa-hāse koka-mukhe namas te 'stu raṇa-priye | Ume Śākambhari Śvete Kṛishṇe Kaiṭabha-nāśini | Hiraṇyākshi Virūpākshi Dhūmrākshi cha namo 'stu te | Veda-śruti mahāpuṇye brahmaṇye Jātavedasi | Jambū-kaṭaka-chaityeshu nityaṁ sannihitālaye | tvam brahma-vidyā vidyānām mahānidrā cha dehinām | Skandha-mātar bhagavati Durge kāntāra-vāsini | . . . . Svāhākāraḥ Svadhā chaiva kalā kāshṭhā Sarasvatī | Sāvitrī Veda-mātā cha tathā Vedānta uchyate (uchyase?) | stutā 'si tvam Mahādevi viśuddhenāntarātmanā | Jayo bhavatu me nityaṁ tvat-prasādād raṇājire | kāntāra-bhaya-durgeshu bhaktānām pālaneshu cha | nityaṁ vasasi pātāle yuddhe jayasi dānavān | tvaṁ Jambhanī Mohinī cha Māyā Hrīḥ Śrīs tathaiva cha | Sandhyā prabhāvatī chaiva Sāvitrī Jananī tathā | Tushṭiḥ Pushṭir Dhṛitir Dīpṭiś chandrāditya-vivardhinī | bhūtir bhūtimatāṁ sankhye vīkshyase siddha-chāraṇaiḥ |

"Reverence be to thee, Siddhasenānī (Generaless of the Siddhas), the noble, the dweller on Mandara, Kumārī, Kālī, Kāpālī, Kapilā, Kṛishṇa-pingalā. Reverence to thee, Bhadrakālī; reverence to thee, Mahākālī; reverence to thee, Chaṇḍī, Chaṇḍā; reverence to thee, O Tāriṇī (deliveress), O Varavarṇinī (beautiful-coloured), O fortunate Kātyāyanī, O Karālī, O Vijayā, O Jayā (victory), who bearest a peacock's tail for thy banner, adorned with various jewels, armed with many spears, wielding sword and shield, younger sister of the chief of cowherds (Kṛishṇa), eldest, born in the family of the cowherd Nanda, delighting always in Mahisha's blood, Kauśikī, wearing yellow garments, loud-laughing, wolf-mouthed, reverence to thee, thou delighter in battle, O Umá, Śákambharī, thou white one [or Śvetá], thou black one [or Kṛishṇá], O destroyer of Kaiṭabha. Reverence to thee, O Hiraṇyákshī, Virúpákshī, Dhúmrákshī (golden-, distorted-, dark-eyed), O Vedaśruti (tradition of the Veda), most pure, devout, Játavedasī (female Agni), who dwellest continually near to (. . . . . ?) mountain-precipices and sepulchres. Of sciences thou art the science of Brahma (or of the Veda), the great sleep of embodied beings, O mother of Skanda, divine Durgá, dweller in wildernesses. Thou art called Svāhā, Svadhā, Kalā, Káshṭhā (minute divisions of time), Sarasvatī,[219] Sávitrī, mother of the Vedas, and the Vedánta (or end of the Vedas). Thou, great goddess, art praised with a pure heart. By thy favour let me be ever victorious in battle. In deserts, fears, and difficulties, and in the preservation of thy devout servants, and in Pátála, thou constantly abidest; and conquerest the Dánavas in battle. Thou art Jambhanī (destroyer?), Mohinī, Máyá, Hrī, Śrī, Sandhyá,[220] the luminous, Sávitrī, the mother, Tushṭi (contentment), Pushṭi (fatness), Dhṛiti (constancy), Dípti (light), increaser of the sun and moon, the power of the powerful in battle,—[all this] thou art seen by the Siddhas and Chárańas [to be]."

[218] The Bhagavadgītā, in which Kṛishṇa himself is so highly extolled and glorified, begins shortly afterwards in the twenty-fifth section of the Bhīshma-parvan, vv. 830 ff.

In another part of the Mahábhárata, (fourth or) Virāṭa-parvan, 178 ff., there is another hymn (already referred to above, p. 425, note) addressed by Yudhishṭhira to Durgá, and very similar to the preceding. Among other things, she is there said to "have her perpetual abode on the Vindhya mountains, and to delight in spirituous liquor, flesh, and sacrificial victims" (Vindhye chaiva naga-śreshṭhe tava sthánam hi śáśvatam | Káli Káli Mahákáli sídhu-mámsa-paśu-priye).

In the Harivaṁsa, vv. 3236 ff., it is related by Vaiśampáyana that with the view of defeating the designs of Kansa in regard to the destruction of Devakī's offspring, Vishṇu descended into Pátála, where he sought the aid of Nidrá Kála-rúpiṇī (Sleep in the form of Time); and [219] Compare what has been said by Prof. Weber on the relation of Umá and Sarasvatī, above, p. 424, note, and p. 428.

[220] See above, p. 428.

promised her in return that through his favour she should be a goddess adored in all the world (v. 3242). He desires her to be born as the ninth child of Yaśodā on the same night on which he was to be born as the eighth child of Devakī (3247), when he would be carried to Yaśodā and she to Devakī. He tells her that she would be taken by the foot, and cast out upon a rock; but would then obtain an eternal place in the sky, becoming assimilated to himself in glory; would be installed by Indra among the gods (3251 ff.), received by him as his sister under the name of Kauśikī, and would obtain from him (Indra) a perpetual abode on the Vindhya mountain, where, thinking upon him (Vishṇu), she would kill the two demons Śumbha and Niśumbha, and would be worshipped with animal sacrifices (tatraiva tvām bhaginy-arthe grahīshyati sa Vāsavaḥ | Kuśikasya tu gotreṇa Kauśikī tvam bhavishyasi[221] | sa te Vindhye naga-sreshṭhe sthānaṁ dāsyati śāśvatam | ityādi). Vaiśampāyana then (vv. 3268 ff.) repeats a hymn to Āryā (Durgā) which had been "uttered by rishis of old," beginning Nārāyaṇīṁ mamasyāmi devīṁ tribhuvaneśvarīm | "I bow down before the goddess Nārāyaṇī, the mistress of the three worlds." She is here called by many of the names which we have already met in Arjuna's hymn (above, p. 432 f.), such as Śrī, Dhṛiti, Kīrti, Hrī, Sandhyā, Kātyāyanī, Kauśikī, Jayā, Vijayā, Tushṭi, Pushṭi (3269 f.). She is also called the eldest sister of Yama (jyeshṭhā Yamasya bhaginī, v. 3271); and it is worthy of remark that she is said to be worshipped by the [savage tribes of] Śavaras, Varvaras, and Pulindas (Śavarair Varbaraiś chaiva Pulindaiś cha supūjitā, v. 3274). She is also described as fond of wine and flesh (surā-māṁsa-priyā, v. 3279), the goddess of wine (surā-devī, v. 3286), as being Sarasvatī in Vālmīki (comp. pp. 424 f., 425 f.), and Smṛiti (memory) in Dvaipāyana, i.e. Vyāsa (Sarasvatī cha Vālmīke Smṛitir Dvaipāyane tathā, v. 3285), and among sciences, the science of Brahma or the Veda (vidyānām brahma-vidyā, v. 3291), and as pervading the entire world (tvayā vyāptam idaṁ sarvaṁ jagat sthāvara-jangamam, v. 3293).

The object of this passage seems to be to take Durgā and her worship (the extensive prevalence of which could not be ignored by the Vaishṇavas) under the protection and patronage of Vishṇu.

[221] Kauśika is applied as an epithet to Indra in R.V. i. 10, 11. See the first volume of this work, p. 347 f., and the fifth volume, p. 219.

A hymn addressed to Durgā by Pradyumna, the son of Kṛishṇa, is also to be found in Harivaṁsa vv. 9423 ff.; and another uttered by Aniruddha, son of Pradyumna and grandson of Kṛishṇa, occurs in vv. 10235 ff. of the same work. The latter hymn is repeated by Vaiśampāyana after he had made obeisance to the "infinite, imperishable, celestial, eternal primeval-god Nārāyaṇa" (anantam akshayaṁ divyam ādi-devaṁ sanātanam | Nārāyaṇaṁ namaskṛitya, 10232); and he talks of the goddess as being "adored by rishis and gods with flowers of eloquence" (ṛishibhir daivataiś chaiva vāk-pushpair architāṁ śubhām, 10234). The hymn addresses Durgā as the sister of Indra and Vishṇu (Mahendra-Vishṇu-bhaginīm, v. 10235), as Gautamī, and by many of the names which we have already found in the preceding hymns, as well as by many new appellations, and goes on thus (v. 10256 ff.): Brahmā Vishṇuś cha Rudraś cha Chandra-sūryāgni-mārutāḥ | . . . . kṛitsnaṁ jagad idam proktaṁ devyāḥ nāmānukīrtanāt | "Brahmā, Vishṇu, Rudra, the sun, moon, and wind . . . . all this world is pronounced by uttering the name of this goddess."

The worship of this goddess reaches its climax in such works as the Devī-māhātmya in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, sections 81 ff.; where it is remarkable that she is connected with Vishṇu, and not with her proper consort, Mahādeva. She is there called Mahāmāyā (the great Illusion), Yoganidrā (the Sleep of meditation), etc. It is there said of her (v. 47 ff.): Nityaiva sā jagan-mūrtir tayā sarvam idaṁ tatam | tathāpi tat-samutpattir bahudhā śrūyatām mama | devānāṁ kārya-siddhy-artham āvirbhavati sā yadā | utpanneti tadā loke sā nityā 'py abhidhīyate | "She is the eternal form (or substance) of the world; by her all this [universe] is stretched out; and yet hear from me her manifold birth. Whenever she is manifested to effect the purposes of the gods, she, though eternal, is said in the world to be born." The narrative then proceeds, that when Vishṇu was sunk in this sleep of contemplation (Yoganidrā) at the end of the Kalpa, two demons, Madhu and Kaiṭabha, sprang from his ear and were about to kill Brahmā; when the latter, seeing Vishṇu asleep, with the view of arousing him, began to celebrate the praises of Yoganidrā, "his divine sleep who was abiding in his eyes, the mistress of the universe, the support of the world, the cause of its continuance and destruction" (Hari-netra-kṛitālayām | viśveśvarīṁ jagaddhātrīṁ sthiti-saṁhāra-kāri- ṇīm | nidrām bhagavatīm Vishṇoḥ). Some of the functions assigned to her are as follows (v. 56): Tvayaiva dhāryate sarvaṁ tvayaitat sṛijyate jagat | tvayaitat pālyate devi tvam atsy ante cha sarvadā | "By thee the universe is upheld; by thee the world is created, by thee it is preserved; and thou always devourest it at the end." Again, it is said of her (v. 63 ff.): Yachcha kinchit kvachid vastu sad asad vā 'khilātmake | tasya sarvasya yā śaktiḥ sā tvaṁ kiṁ stūyase tadā | yayā tvayā jagat-srashṭā jagat-pātā 'tti yo jagat | so 'pi nidrā-vaśaṁ nītaḥ kas tvām stotum iheśvaraḥ | Vishṇuḥ śarīra-grahaṇam aham Īśāna eva cha | kāritās te yato 'tas tvām kaḥ stotuṁ śaktimān bhavet | "Thou art the power (śakti) of whatever substance, existent or non-existent, anywhere is, O thou soul of all things: why art thou, then, lauded [by us who are unequal to the task]? Who is able to magnify thee by whom the Creator of the world, the Preserver of the world, and the Devourer of the world, have been subjected to sleep? Since thou hast caused Vishṇu, and me (Brahmā), and Īśāna (Śiva) to become incorporate, who has the power to praise thee?"

The following is the beginning of a hymn addressed to her after her destruction of the demon Mahisha:

Mārk. Pur. sect. 84, 1 ff.—Śakrādayaḥ sura-gaṇāḥ nihate 'tivīrye tasmin durātmani surāribale cha devyā | tāṁ tushṭuvuḥ praṇati-namra-śirodharāṁsāḥ vāgbhiḥ praharsha-pulakodgama-chāru-dehāḥ | devyā yayā tatam idaṁ jagad ātma-śaktyā niḥśesha-deva-gaṇa-śakti-samūha-mūrtyā | tām Ambikām akhila-deva-maharshi-pūjyām bhaktyā natāḥ sma vidadhātu śubhāni sā naḥ | yasyāḥ prabhāvam atulam bhagavān Ananto Brahmā Haraś cha na hi vaktum alam balancha | sā Chaṇḍikā 'khila-jagat-paripālanāya nāśāya chāśubha-bhayasya matiṁ karotu | "When the goddess had slain this very powerful and malignant [demon] and the host of the enemies of the gods,—the deities, headed by Indra, with their necks and shoulders bowed down in obeisance, and their bodies beautified by horripilation, delighted, lauded her with [these] words: 'We bow down with devotion before that goddess Ambikā, who stretched out this world by her own power, in whom are impersonated the various energies (śakti) of all the gods, who is to be adored by all the deities and rishis: may she confer upon us blessings. May Chaṇḍikā, whose unequalled majesty and might neither the divine Ananta (Vishṇu), nor Brahmā, nor Hara (Śiva) is competent to express, determine upon the preservation of the world, and the destruction of the fear of evil."

These specimens may suffice to show the dignity to which this goddess has eventually been elevated in the estimation of her worshippers; and a comparison of the characteristics which are here assigned to her with the descriptions quoted above from the Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata, etc. (pp. 364, 373 ff., 430 f.), will show that she has now attained a higher rank in the Indian pantheon than was originally enjoyed by the daughter of Daksha and Himavat.

APPENDIX.

NOTE A.—Page 33, line 19.

In the Uttarakāṇḍa, too, of the Rāmāyaṇa (iv. 9, Bombay ed.), it is said: Prajāpatiḥ purā sṛishṭvā apaḥ salila-sambhavaḥ | tāsāṁ gopāyane sattvān asṛijat padma-sambhavaḥ | "The lotus-born Prajāpati, sprung from the waters (or the source of the waters), having formerly created the waters, created beings to protect them;" who, from agreeing to undertake this function, were called Rākshasas (from the root raksh, "to protect").

On this verse the commentator remarks: "Apaḥ sṛishṭvā" bhūmer adho-bhāga-vartinīr apaḥ sṛishṭvā ity arthaḥ | tatra "salila-sambhavaḥ" Prajāpatir abhūd ity anvayaḥ | . . . . "'Having created the waters:' the sense is having created the waters existing beneath the earth. In them the water-born Prajāpati arose: such is the connexion." . . . . He then quotes Manu i. 8 (see p. 30, above), and two other texts from the Veda. See above, p. 24, note.

NOTE B.—Page 65, line 25.

In the description of the regions to which the monkeys were sent to search for Sītā after she had been carried off by Rāvaṇa, which is given in the Kishkindhā Kāṇḍa or fourth book of the Rāmāyaṇa, the following reference occurs to the three steps of Vishṇu; and it is of such a character as to preserve some trace of Aurṇabhāva's interpretation of those steps:

Sect. 40, vv. 54*a* ff. (Bombay ed.)[1]—Tataḥ paraṁ hemamayaḥ śrīmān Udaya-parvataḥ | tasya koṭir divaṁ spṛishṭvā śata-yojanam āyatā | jāta-

[1] Gorresio, iv. 40, 59 ff., has several various readings in this passage. I have noted those which occur in the most important verses.

rūpamayī divyā virājati sa-vedikā | . . . . 57. Tatra yojana-vistāram uchhritaṁ daśa-yojanam | śringaṁ Saumanasam nāma jātarūpamayaṁ dhruvam | 58. Tatra pūrva-padaṁ kṛitvā purā Vishṇus trivikrame (trivikramaḥ, Gorr.) | dvitīyaṁ śikharе Meroś chakāra purushottamaḥ | 59. Uttareṇa parikramya Jambūdvīpaṁ divākaraḥ | dṛiśyo bhavati bhūyishṭhaṁ śikharaṁ tad mahochhrayam (dṛiśyo bhavati bhūtānāṁ śikharaṁ tam upāśritaḥ, Gorr.) | 54. "Beyond that is the glorious, golden, Udaya parvata [mountain over which the sun rises]; the divine and golden peak of which shines, touching the sky, a hundred yojanas long, and supported by a basement. . . . . 57. There stands the firm, golden Saumanasa peak, a yojana broad and ten yojanas high. When Vishṇu, the chief of spirits, formerly strode three paces, he planted his first step there, and his second on the summit of Meru. When the sun has circled round Jambūdvīpa by the north [or, with his last (step)], he is mostly visible on that lofty peak;" (or, 'he is visible to living beings, resting upon that peak,' Gorr.).

The commentator remarks on vv. 57 and 58: Tatra śata-yojana-dīrghe Udaya-giri-śikhare | 58. Tatra Saumanase śringe trivikrame tribhiḥ padais trilokyāḥ ākramaṇa-prastāve prathamam padaṁ tatra kṛitvā dvitīyam padam Meroḥ śikhare chakāra | On v. 59: Astānantaram uttareṇa Jambu-dvīpam parikramya tan mahochhrayaṁ śikharam Saumanasākhyam prāpya sthito divākaro Jambu-dvīpa-vartināṁ bhūyishṭhaṁ dṛishṭo bhavati Saumanasa-śikhare ity arthaḥ | idam satya-yugābhiprāyaṁ tretāyāṁ kshīra-sāgara-madhya-gasya dvāpare suroda-madhya-gasya kalau Lankā-madhya-gasya Jambudvīpa-stha-manushya-dṛiśyatāyāḥ anyatroktatvāt | "'There,' on this summit of the Udaya-giri, a hundred yojanas long. 58. 'There,' on that peak Saumanasa, in his triple stride, on the occasion of his traversing the three worlds with three steps, [Vishṇu] placed his first step, and his second on the summit of Meru." On v. 59 he observes: "After sunset, when the sun has circled round Jambūdvīpa by the north [or, with his last (step)], he is mostly seen by the inhabitants of that Dvīpa standing on the lofty summit called Saumanasa. This refers to the Satya yuga. For it is said in other books that in the Tretā age the sun is beheld by the men of Jambūdvīpa to go through the ocean of milk, in the Dvāpara through the ocean of wine, and in the Kali through Lankā."

The three steps of Vishṇu are mentioned in other parts of the Rāmā-yaṇa. Thus in book vi. 39, 21 (Bombay ed.), it is said: Prāsādaiścha vimānaiś cha Lankā parama-bhūshitā | ghanair ivātapāpāye madhyamaṁ Vaishṇavam padam | "Lankā was beautifully adorned with temples and palaces, as the middle step (or position) of Vishṇu, with clouds, at the departure of the hot season [and commencement of the rains]." The commentator explains the middle position of Vishṇu by ākāśa. This passage appears to refer to the zenith.

NOTE C.—Page 134, line 34.

It will be observed that in the text of the Bombay edition the two parts of the story, viz. (1) the request of the gods to Vishṇu that he would assume the form of a dwarf, and (2) the petition of Kaśyapa to the same deity that he would become the son of himself and Aditi, are more closely connected than they are in Schlegel's edition by the insertion of the words, "Bestow the boon which Aditi, the gods, and I solicit," which are wanting in Schlegel's text. Further, in the Bombay edition Kaśyapa is made to allude to "the hermitage where the work was accomplished," as if he was himself present there, of which nothing is said in Schlegel's edition. And again, as already noticed in note 129, p. 130, by the omission of the words "thus addressed by the deities," which occur at the beginning of verse 17 of Schlegel's text, the Bombay edition harmonizes the two parts of the story, and removes the appearance of interpolation which Schlegel's text exhibits.

NOTE D.—Page 175, line 33.

In this note I shall adduce some further evidence tending to confirm the supposition that Rāma may not have been originally represented in the Rāmāyaṇa as an incarnation of Vishṇu.

In the summaries of the poem, contained in sections 1 and 3[2] of

[2] It is worthy of remark, that in the third section the poet is said to have "seen" all that he narrates in the poem; just as the Vedic rishis are said to have "seen" their hymns (see Nirukta ii. 11: Ṛishir darśanāt | Stomān dadarśa ity Aupamanyavaḥ | "'Ṛishi comes from seeing: he is one who saw the hymns,' so says Aupamanyava." See the second volume of this work, pp. 195 and 196; also the third vol., p. 85). Rāmāyaṇa i. 3, 3: Rāma-Lakshmaṇa-Sītābhiḥ rājñā Daśarathena cha |

the First Book, as given in the Bombay edition and in Schlegel's, no allusion is made to the divine origin of Rāma; and the same is the case in the first and third sections in Gorresio's edition also. In the fourth section, however, of the last-named recension (which the others do not contain), the plan pursued by the gods for the destruction of Rāvaṇa, and the divine fluid through which the sons of Daśaratha were produced, are distinctly referred to (vv. 14, 15: "Rāvaṇasya badhopāye mantraṇaṁ samudāhṛitam | 15. Svargāvataraṇaṁ chaiva surāṇāṁ samudāhṛitam | divyā cha pāyasotpattiḥ putra-janma nṛipasya cha). In the first of the two summaries in Rāmāyaṇa i. 1, 13 and 18 (Bombay ed.), Rāma is described as "glorious like Prajāpati" (Prajāpati-samaḥ śrīmān, v. 13), and as "resembling Vishṇu in vigour, and pleasant to behold, like the Moon" (Vishṇunā sadṛiśo vīrye soma-vat priyadarśanaḥ, v. 18). The first of the epithets in the last line would imply that he was not Vishṇu. Otherwise, what necessity for the comparison? The commentator remarks thus on the expression in v. 18: Yadyapi Rāmo Vishṇur eva sarva-rūpaś cha tathāpi mānushopādhi-bhedāt sarvatra sādṛiśyaṁ drashṭavyam | yadvā Vishṇunā sadṛiśaḥ ity ananvayālankāraḥ | "Although Rāma was no other than Vishṇu, still, from the seeming distinctness of his humanity, resemblances may be regarded as existing in all points [between the one and the other]. Or, the comparison may be regarded as coming within the class of improper similes (ananvayālankāra)." See Professor Goldstücker's Dictionary under this word. In regard to the other epithet, "glorious like Prajāpati," v. 13, the commentator similarly observes: Yadyapi Rāmo Brahma eva tathāpi mānusha-dharmāṇāṁ śoka-mohadīnām māyikānāṁ tatra darśanena aupādhika-bhedam ādāya tat-samatvoktiḥ | Bhāryava-loka-pratibandha-rūpāj

sabhāryeṇa sarāshṭreṇa yat prāptaṁ tatra tattvataḥ | 4. Hasitam bhāshitaṁ chaiva gatir yāvach cha cheshṭitam | tat sarvaṁ dharma-vīryeṇa yathāvat samprapaśyati | 5. Strī-tṛitīyena cha tathā yat prāptaṁ charatā vane | satyasandhena Rāmeṇa tat sarvaṁ chānvavaikshata | 6. Tataḥ paśyati dharmātmā tat sarvaṁ yogam āsthitaḥ | purā yat tatra nirvṛittam pāṇāv āmalakaṁ yathā[c] | 7. Tat sarvaṁ tattvato dṛishṭvā ityādi | 3. "Whatever actually occurred to Rāma, Lakshmaṇa and Sītā, to king Daśaratha with his wives and dominions, (4) their laughing, their talking, their fates and their endeavours—all that he sees exactly by the power of righteousness. 5. He also beheld all that happened to the truthful Rāma while travelling in the forest with his wife as the third. 6. Then the righteous (bard), falling into a state of contemplation (yoga), sees all that had formerly happened, like an "āmalaka" fruit in his hand. 7. Seeing all this exactly," etc.

Jaṭāyu-moksha-pradāna-rupāt svena saha sarvāyodhyā-vāsi-janasya saśarīrasya Brahma-loka-nayana-rūpāch cha kāraṇāt tat-samatvam | sarvathā svatantrasya eva īdṛiśeshu yogyatvāt | "Although Rāma was no other than Brahma, still, owing to the circumstance that grief, delusion, and other illusory human attributes, were seen in him,—in reference to this apparent distinctness,—a resemblance is predicated. From the fact that he deprived Bhārgava (Paraśurāma, see above, p. 177) of his celestial abode, that he conferred final emancipation on Jaṭāyu (Rāmāyaṇa, Bombay ed., iii. 68, 37), and that he took with him to Brahmā's paradise the whole of the inhabitants of Ayodhyā in an embodied state, there is a similarity (between Rāma and Prajāpati); since only a being who was in all respects independent of others could be capable of such acts." As instances of Rāma's "illusory human attributes," I may mention his ignorance of Sītā's locality when she had been carried off by Rāvaṇa (Ār. Kāṇḍa 58, 1 ff., Bombay ed.= Gorr. sect. 65), and the consequent search instituted for her discovery (Kishkindhā K. 40, 11 ff., Bombay ed.=Gorr. ed. 40, 9 ff.), and his doubt regarding her purity after she had been rescued from the Rākshasa's palace (Bāla Kāṇḍa 1, 81 ff., Bombay ed.). There are some phrases in the summary of the poem, in the first chapter of the first book, which are of a hyperbolical character, and do not necessarily point to a divine character in Rāma. Thus, in verse 4 the hero about whom inquiry is made is described as one of whom the gods are afraid (kasya bibhyati devāś cha). In v. 84 Rāma is said to have been honoured, or worshipped, by all the gods (pūjitaḥ sarva-devataiḥ); while on the other hand he is said, v. 86, to have received a boon from the gods (devatābhyo 'varam prāpya). In verse 32 Rāma and his party, while living at Chitrakūṭa, are compared to gods and gandharvas (deva-gandharva-sankāśāḥ). In section 2, verse 32, the epithets dharmātmano bhagavataḥ, and dhīmataḥ, "righteous," "divine or venerable" (an epithet constantly applied to Kṛishṇa, as well as to Buddha), and "wise," are assigned to Rāma. "Bhagavat" need not necessarily mean "divine."

In the text, pp. 170 ff. (see also pp. 165 ff.), following Lassen, I have pointed out that the second sacrifice described in the fourteenth section in Schlegel's edition has some appearance of not having formed a portion of the original poem. It will also be seen from note 164 in p. 165, as compared with the quotation given in the text in the same and the following pages, that the Bombay edition, which frequently differs in its readings from Schlegel's, omits vv. 5–11 of the section in question (the fourteenth), as given in the latter, and passes at once from the fourth to the twelfth verse. In the account which follows of the request preferred by the gods to Vishṇu to become incarnate in the sons of Daśaratha, etc., the two editions differ in their arrangement of details, but not in the substance. In the Bombay edition the words pitarañ rochayāmāsa tadā Daśaratham nṛipam ("he accepted as his father the king Daśaratha"), which occur in section 15, 32, are repeated in section 16, 8.

In the text, pp. 174 f., I have given the account of the birth of Daśaratha's sons according to Schlegel's edition. I now subjoin the description of the same event as found in the Bombay edition and in Gorresio's:

[Bombay ed., sect. 18, vv. 8 ff.]

8. Tato yajñe samāpte tu ṛitūnañ shaṭ samatyayuḥ | tataś cha dvādaśe māse chaitre nāvamike tithau | 9. Nakshatre 'diti-daivatye svochcha-saṁstheshu panchasu | graheshu karkaṭe lagne Vākpatāv Indunā saha | 10. Prodyamāne jagannāthāñ sarva-loka-namaskṛitam | Kauśalyā 'janayad Rāmañ divya-lakshaṇa-saṁyutam | 11. Vishṇor ardham mahābhāgam putram Aikshvākunandanam | lohitāksham mahābāhuñ raktoshṭham dundubhi-svanam | 12. Kauśalyā śusubhe tena putreṇāmita-tejasā | yathā vareṇa devānām Aditir Vajrapāṇinā | 13. Bharato nāma Kaikeyyām jajñe satya-parākramaḥ | sākshād Vishṇoś chaturbhāgaḥ sarvaiḥ samudito guṇaiḥ | 14. Atha Lakshmaṇa-Śatrughnau Sumitrā 'janayat sutau | vīrau sarvā-

[Gorr. ed., sect. 19, vv. 10 ff.]

10. Tāsām prajajñire putrāś chatvāro 'mita-tejasaḥ | Rāma-Lakshmaṇa-Śatrughna-Bharatāḥ devarūpiṇaḥ | 11. Janma-tejo-guṇajyeshṭham putram apratimaujasam | Kauśalyā 'janayad Rāmañ Vishṇutulya-parākramam | 12. (almost the same as v. 12 of the Bomb. ed.) 13. Bhavāya sa hi lokānām Rāvaṇasya badhāya cha | Vishṇor vīryārdhato jajñe Rāmo rājīva-lochanaḥ | 14. Tejo-vīryādhikaḥ śūraḥ śrīmān guṇa-gaṇākaraḥ | babhūvānavaraś chaiva Śakrād Vishṇoś cha paurushe | 15. Tathā Lakshmaṇa-Śatrughnau Sumitrā 'janayat sutau | dṛidha-bhaktī mahotsāhau Rāmasyāvarajau guṇaiḥ | 16. Tāv 'apy āstām chatur-bhāgau Vishṇoḥ sampiṇḍitāv ubhau | ekaḥ eka-chaturbhāgād aparasmād ajāyata | 17.

stra-kuśalau Vishṇor ardha-samanvitau | 15. Puchye jātas tu Bharato mīnalagne prasanna-dhīḥ | Sārpe jatau tu Saumitrī kulīre 'bhyudite ravau | 16. Rājnaḥ putrāḥ mahātmānaś chatvāro jajnire pṛithak | guṇavanto 'nurūpāścha ruchyā proshṭhapadopamāḥ |

[Bombay edition.]

8. "After the sacrifice had been completed, the six seasons passed; and then in the twelfth month, in Chaitra, on the ninth lunar day, (9) in the lunar mansion of which Aditi is the deity, when five planets were culminating, when Jupiter was rising with the moon in the sign of Cancer,—(10) Kauśalyā brought forth Rāma, the lord of the world, adored by all worlds, possessed of celestial marks, (11) a son of high destinies, the half of Vishṇu, and gladdener of the race of Ikshvāku, with red eyes, great-armed, with red lips, and with a voice like a kettle-drum. 12. Kauśalyā received lustre from this son of unbounded might, as Aditi did from the chief of the gods who wields the thunderbolt. 13. [A son] called Bharata, of real valour, possessed of all virtues, was born of Kaikeyī, who was manifestly the

Bharato nāma Kaikeyyāḥ putraḥ satya-parākramaḥ | dharmātmā cha mahātmā cha prakhyāta-bala-vikramaḥ | . . . 19. Sa chaturbhir mahābhāgaiḥ putrair Daśaratho vṛitaḥ | babhūva parama-prīto devair iva Pitāmahaḥ | 20. Teshām ketur iva śreshṭho Rāmo loka-hite rataḥ | Svayambhūr iva devānāṁ sarveshāṁ sama-darśanaḥ |

[Gorresio's edition.]

After naming Daśaratha's wives, the narrative proceeds:

10. "To them were born four sons, of boundless might, Rāma, Lakshmaṇa, Śatrughna, and Bharata, in fashion like the gods. 11. Kauśalyā brought forth Rāma, a son of unparalleled vigour, the first in birth, might, and qualities, equal in valour to Vishṇu. 12. (=v. 12. of the Bomb. ed.) 13. For this lotus-eyed Rāma was born from the half of Vishṇu's generative power, for the good of the worlds, and the destruction of Rāvaṇa.[3] 14. This glorious hero, a mine of virtues, excelled in fire and energy, and in manly vigour was not inferior to Indra and Vishṇu. 15. So too Sumitrā bore two sons, Lakshmaṇa and Śatrughna, firm in devotion, of great energy, second to Rāma in virtues. 16. These two also, combined, were two fourth part of Vishṇu. 14. Then Sumitrā bore two sons, Lakshmaṇa and Śatrughna, heroes, skilled in all weapons, who had [each] the half [of the fourth] of Vishṇu.[4] 15. But Bharata, of tranquil mind, was born under the lunar mansion Pushya and the sign of Pisces; while the sons of Sumitrā were born under Sārpa (or the ninth lunar mansion), when the sun had risen in Cancer. 16. The four great sons of the king were separately born, possessing great qualities, resembling one another, and in brilliancy like the constellation Proshṭhapadā."

[3] This verse, though not in the Bombay edition, is to be found in Schlegel's as the fifth.

fourth parts [i.e. were, together, the fourth part] of Vishṇu. From the other fourth part there was born (17) to Kaikeyī, one son named Bharata, of real valour, righteous, high-souled, renowned for power, and energy. . . . . 19. Daśaratha, surrounded by his four sons of high destinies, was highly pleased, like Pitāmaha, attended by the gods. 20. Rāma, devoted to the good of the worlds, was, like a banner, the most eminent among them, like Svayambhū among the gods, and impartial to all."

The Bombay edition has not the verse which is found as the fifth in Schlegel's edition, and the thirteenth in Gorresio's, but it, equally with the others, asserts in its eleventh verse (which is not in Schlegel's edition) that the half of Vishṇu was incarnate in Rāma. The same remark which in p. 175 I have made on the passage as given in Schlegel's edition, applies to this recension also—viz. that the verses which refer to Daśaratha's sons being incarnations of Vishṇu might be omitted with little injury to the connexion. The account of Bharata, Lakshmaṇa, and Śatrughna, given in vv. 13–15 (as they now stand), has a certain awkwardness, inasmuch as after leaving Bharata, and introducing (v. 14) Lakshmaṇa and Śatrughna, the narrator recurs (v. 15) to Bharata, to give further particulars of his birth, and then goes back again to the other brothers. If, however, vv. 13 and 14 have been interpolated, it is possible that some other lines, which seem necessary to complete v. 15, and to tell the name of Bharata's mother, and the names of Sumitrā's sons (which that verse does not contain), may at the same time have been left out. In Gorresio's text of this passage, the verses describing the astrological influences under which Daśaratha's sons were born, are left out; though these are not unlikely to have formed part of the original text of the poem.[5] The twelfth verse of this (as well as the corresponding verses of the other two recensions), where Rāma is compared to Indra,[6] and also the fourteenth verse (Gorr.), in which he is said to be not inferior to Indra and Vishṇu [these two verses, I say, if original portions of the poem, as is not unlikely], sound somewhat strangely as part of a work in which the incarnation of Rāma was originally contemplated, as it would not exalt the reader's conception of the dignity of the hero (supposed to be an incarnation of Vishṇu) to compare his might to that of Indra, an inferior god. On this subject Gorresio remarks, in note 90, p. 423 f. of his sixth volume, as follows: "This is one of the passages in the poem from which it might be inferred that the avātara of Vishṇu in Rāma was an interpolation in the epopee. If Rāma was a corporeal manifestation of Vishṇu, and consequently Vishṇu himself in a human form, the epithet 'not inferior to Vishṇu,' which is here assigned to him, has neither appropriateness nor sense. It would be as if it were said to any one that he was not inferior to himself. But we shall not anticipate the judgment of a question which has need to be maturely considered."

[4] Which had been communicated to their mother. See sect. 15, 21, Schlegel.

Again, it is related in the Āraṇya K., or Third Book, 30, 20 ff. of Gorresio's edition, that when the Rākshasas were about to attack Rāma, the gods and other beings became very anxious about his safety: Tato devarshi-gandharvāḥ siddhāś cha saha chāraṇaiḥ | ūchuḥ parama-santrastāḥ guhyakāś cha parasparam | chatur-daśa sahasrāṇi rakshasām bhīma-karmaṇām | ekaś cha Rāmo dharmātmā kathaṁ yuddham bhavishyati | Rāmo no vidito yo 'yaṁ yatiś cha vasudhāṁ gataḥ | manushyatvaṁ tu matvā 'sya kāruṇyād vyathitam manaḥ | nardantīva chamūs teshāṁ rakshasāṁ kāma-rūpiṇām | nānā-vikṛita-veśānāṁ Ramāśramam upāgamat | "Then the gods, rishis, Gandharvas, Siddhas, Chāraṇas, and Guhyakas, being greatly terrified, spoke thus among themselves: 'There are fourteen thousands of Rākshasas, terrible in their deeds, and the righteous Rāma is but one: how shall they fight together? We know who this Rāma is, and how he went to the earth; but considering his human nature, our minds are distressed from compassion. The army of these Rākshasas, who take any shape they will, and who have assumed various disguises, has approached the hermitage of Rāma, as if shouting.'"

[5] Signor Gorresio, on the other hand, thinks they are superfluous (Preface, vol. i., p. lii.).

[6] In the Āraṇya Kāṇḍa 68, 38 (Bombay ed.), Rāma and Lakshmaṇa are compared to the chiefs of the gods, Vishṇu and Vāsava (Indra, surendrāv iva Vishṇu-vāsavau) The commentator makes no remark on this.

In the Bombay ed. iii. 24, 19 ff., however, most of the words ascribed to the gods, etc., are quite different: Tato devāḥ sa-gandharvāḥ siddhāś cha saha chāraṇaiḥ | sameyuścha mahātmāno yuddha-darśana-kānkshayā | 20. Ṛishayaś mahātmāno loke brahmarshi-sattamāḥ | sametya chochuḥ sahitās te 'nyonyam puṇya-karmaṇaḥ[7] | 21. Svasti go-brāhmaṇānāncha lokānāṁ cheti saṁsthitāḥ[8] | jayatāṁ Rāghavo yuddhe Paulastyān rajanīcharān | 22. Chakra-hasto yathā yuddhe sarvān asura-pungavān | evam uktvā punāḥ prochur ālokya cha parasparam | 23. Chaturdaśa sahasrāṇi rakshasām bhīma-karmaṇām | ekaś cha Rāmo dharmātmā kathaṁ yuddham bhavishyati | 24. Iti rājarshayaḥ siddhāḥ sa-gaṇāś cha dvijarshabhāḥ | jāta-kautūhalās tasthur vimāna-sthāś cha devatāḥ | 25. Āvishṭaṁ tejasā Rāmaṁ saṅgrāma-śirasi sthitam | dṛishṭvā sarvāṇi bhūtāni bhayād vivyathire tadā | 26. Rūpam apratimaṁ tasya Rāmasyāklishṭa-karmaṇaḥ | babhūva rūpaṁ kruddhasya Rudrasyeva mahātmanaḥ | . . . . . 35. Tasya rushṭasya rūpaṁ tu Rāmasya dadṛiśe tadā | Dākshasyeva kratuṁ hantum udyatasya Pināķinaḥ[9] | 19. "Then the great gods, Gandharvas, and Siddhas, with the Chāraṇas, (20) and the great rishis, the most excellent Brahman rishis, assembled in the world, eager to witness the battle: and being assembled, these holy beings thus spoke to one another: 21. 'Blessings be upon cows and Brahmans, and upon the worlds! may Rāma conquer in battle the Rākshasas, the descendants of Pulastya, (22) as the god who bears the discus (Vishṇu) [overcame] the chiefs of the Asuras.' Having thus spoken, and looked at each other, they said again: 23. 'There are fourteen thousands of Rākshasas, terrible in their deeds, and the righteous Rāma is but one:

[7] Adīrghatvaṃ ārsham | Comm.

[8] The following is the commentator's note on the last four words of this line, of which it is difficult to make any sense as they stand: "Lokānām ye 'bhisangatāḥ" iti pāṭhe lokānāṁ lokapālānāṁ sangatāḥ havir-homādi-dvārā upakārakāḥ ity arthaḥ. "According to another reading, lokānāṁ ye 'bhisangatāḥ, the sense is, 'and upon those guardians of the world who have arrived, who aid us by means of oblations, sacrifices,' etc."

[9] This verse, as given in Gorresio's edition, will be found above, p. 373, note.

how shall they fight together?' 24. [Having] thus [spoken], the royal rishis, Siddhas, and Brahman rishis with the [other] hosts, stood in curious expectation, together with the gods in aerial cars. 25. Beholding Rāma, full of might, standing in the front of the battle, all creatures were agitated with fear. 26. The unparalleled form of Rāma, vigorous in action, was like that of the great Rudra when incensed. . . . . 35. The form of Rāma, incensed, was beheld then, like that of Pināk in (Rudra) when prepared to destroy the sacrifice of Daksha."

From a comparison of these passages, as given in the two different recensions, it appears probable that the speech which is put into the mouths of the gods and other spectators, in the Bombay edition, is the most ancient and original, as no mention is there made of the divine nature of Rāma, the reference to Vishnu in the twenty-second verse being introduced only by way of illustration, in the same way as the allusions to Rudra in the twenty-sixth and thirty-fifth verses. In Gorresio's edition, on the other hand, there is a distinct reference to the divine nature of Rāma; and I therefore conjecture that the short speech which it contains has been substituted for the other somewhat longer one, by a subsequent editor in support of this later conception.

The career of Rāma in his conflicts with the Rākshasas was not entirely unchequered by reverses. In the forty-fifth section of the sixth, or Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Bombay ed. (corresponding to section 20 of Gorresio's recension), it is related that both he and his brother Lakshmaṇa were severely wounded and rendered senseless by a cloud of serpents transformed into arrows, which were shot by Indrajit, son of Rāvaṇa.

In the following citations I shall use the Bombay edition only, except when I specially refer to Gorresio's. In vv. 7 ff. (sect. 45) it is said: Rāma-Lakshmaṇayor eva sarva-deha-bhidaḥ śarān | bhṛiśam āveśayāmāsa Rāvaṇiḥ samitiñjayaḥ | nirantara-śarīrau tu tāv ubhau Rāma-Lakshmaṇau[10] | kruddhenendrajitā vīrau pannagaiḥ śaratāṁ gataiḥ | tayoḥ kshata-ja-mārgeṇa sasrāva rudhiram bahu | . . . 16. Baddhau tu śara-bandhena tāv ubhau raṇa-mūrdhani | nimeshāntara-mātreṇa na śekatur avekshitum | . . . 22. Papāta prathamaṁ Rāmo viddho marmasu mārgaṇaiḥ | krodhād Indrajitā yena purā S'akro 'pi nirjitaḥ | "The son of [10] Instead of tāv ubhau Rāma-Lakshmaṇau, Gorresio's edition (vi. 20, 8) reads kritau tau sāyakais tadā.

Rāvaṇa, victorious in battle, discharged numerous arrows which pierced the whole bodies of Rāma and Lakshmaṇa. Both of these two heroes had their bodies [wounded] in every spot by the incensed Indrajit with serpents[11] which had taken the form of arrows. Much blood flowed through the openings formed by their wounds. . . . . 16. Bound by the chain of these arrows in the front of the battle, those two could not look up even for a moment.[12] . . . . 22. Rāma first fell, pierced in the most vital parts, in anger, by Indrajit, by whom even Indra had formerly been conquered."[13] Their allies the monkeys arrive and find the two brothers lying helpless. Sect. 46, 3 ff. . . . Anvaśochanta Rāghavau | acheshṭau manda-niśvāsau śoṇitena pariplutau | śara-jālāchitau[14] stabdhau śayānau śara-talpa-gau | niśvasantau yathā sarpau niśceshṭau dīna-vikramau | ityādi | "They bewailed the two descendants of Raghu, incapable of effort, breathing slowly, bathed in blood, encompassed with a net of arrows, stiff, lying on a bed of arrows, breathing like serpents, helpless, their vigour quelled," etc. Vibhīshaṇa comforts the monkeys by saying that the good fortune of Rāma and Lakshmaṇa would not forsake them (vv. 38 ff.): Athavā rakshyatāṁ Rāmo yāvat sanjñā-viparyayaḥ | labdha-sanjñau hi Kākutsthau bhayaṁ nau vyapaneshyataḥ | naitat kinchana Rāmasya na cha Rāmo mumūrshati | na hy enaṁ hāsyate Lakshmīr durlabhā yā gatāyushām | "Or, let Rāma be guarded while his insensibility continues. When the two descendants of Kakutstha have recovered their senses, they shall remove our fear. This [mishap] of Rāma is nothing; he is not about to die: for Good Fortune (Lakshmī), who is beyond the reach of the dead, will not abandon him."

[11] The edition of Gorresio (see preceding note) supplies the word "arrows." Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. nirantara, translate the clause thus: "There was no spot on their bodies in which an arrow was not sticking."

[12] On this the commentator, in conformity with his dogmatic views regarding the divine nature of the two heroes, remarks: Na śekatur avekshitum | tādṛisāv iva sthitau manushyatva-naṭanāya iti bodhyam | "'Could not look up:' remained, as it were, in this condition. This is to be understood as done to act (i.e. simulate) humanity (i.e. that they were mere men)."

[13] Indrajit's victory over Indra is related in the Uttara Kāṇḍa, section 27. He was originally called Meghanāda, but after he had taken Indra captive, he received from Brahmā the name of Indra-jit, or the "conqueror of Indra," ibid. section 30. A summary of the story will be found further on.

[14] Gorresio's ed. reads śara-jālāvṛitau.

It will be observed that nothing is here said of the divine nature of Rāma; and nothing is said of Lakshmī being his spouse, though she is regarded in Hindu mythology as the consort of Nārāyaṇa (see the commentator's remark on Uttara Kāṇḍa, 17, 35, which will be quoted below).

In the next section (the forty-seventh) of the Yuddha Kāṇḍa it is related that Rāvaṇa sent Sītā on his car Pushpaka, with the Rākshasī Trijaṭā (v. 14), to the spot where Rāma and Lakshmaṇa were lying wounded and helpless; and that on seeing these brothers, "powerful as the sons of the gods" (deva-suta-prabhāvau, v. 23), she broke out into lamentations, supposing them to be dead. The forty-eighth section contains her lament, in the course of which she says: 16. "Did not the two sons of Raghu possess the supernatural weapons of Varuṇa, Agni, Indra, and Vāyu, and the Brahma-śiras?[15] 17. My two lords (though I am now lordless), Rāma and Lakshmaṇa, the equals of Indra, have been slain in battle by an unseen foe, by enchantment. 18. For no foe, though swift as thought, could return living, after he had once been beheld by Rāma in the fight. 19. Nothing can counterbalance the power of Time, and Fate is invincible" (vv. 16 ff.: Nanu Vāruṇam Āgneyam Aindraṁ Vāyavyam eva cha | astram Brahma-śiraś chaiva Rāghavau pratyapadyata | 17. Adṛiśyamānena raṇe māyayā Vāsavopamau | mama nāthāv anāthāyāḥ nihatau Rāma-Lakshmaṇau | 18. Na hi dṛishṭi-patham prāpya Rāghavasya raṇe ripuḥ | jīvan pratinivarteta yadyapi syād manojavaḥ | 19. Na Kālasyātibhāro 'sti kṛitāntaś cha sudurjayaḥ). Sītā is then consoled by the Rākshasī Trijaṭā, who tells her (v. 22) that her husband is not dead; and explains why she thinks so. In vv. 30 f., she says: Nemau śakyau raṇe jetuṁ sendrair api surāsuraiḥ | tādṛiśaṁ darśanam dṛishṭvā mayā chodīritaṁ tava | idaṁ tu sumahach chitraṁ śaraiḥ paśyasva Maithili | visanjnau patitāv etau naiva Lakshmīr vimunchati | prāyeṇa gata-sattvānām purushāṇāṁ gatāyushām | dṛiśyamāneshu vaktreshu paruṣhāṇi vaikṛitam | "These two cannot be conquered in battle even by the Suras and Asuras, Indra included. Such a sight I have seen, and declared to thee. But behold this great wonder, that though they are lying senseless from the arrows, Fortune (Lakshmī) does not abandon them. There is generally a great change in the countenances, when beheld, of men who have lost their lives, and whose breath has departed." While the monkeys were watching Rāma, he recovers his consciousness (sect. 49, v. 3): Etasminn antare Rāmo pratyabudhyata vīryavān | sthiratvāt satva-yogāchcha[16] śaraiḥ sandānito 'pi san | "In the mean time the heroic Rāma awoke, owing to his firmness and robustness of frame, though he had been bound by the arrows." He then begins to lament the loss of his brother Lakshmaṇa, whom he supposes to be dead; and ascribes the misfortune to his own bad generalship (v. 18: Imām adya gato 'vasthām mamānāryasya durnayaiḥ).

[15] The commentator says on this verse: Pratyapadyata pratyapadyetām | eka-vachanam ārsham | "nanv" itaḥ pūrvaṁ tat kiṁ idānīṁ na smṛitam iti śeshaḥ.

In sect. 50, Vibhīshaṇa laments the condition of Rāma and his brother, and the disappointment thereby caused to his own hopes of becoming king of Lankā; but is comforted by Sugrīva, who says to him (vv. 21 f.): Rāyjyam prāpsyasi dharma-jna Lankāyāṁ neha saṁśayaḥ | Rāvaṇaḥ saha putreṇa sva-kāmaṁ neha lapsyate | 22. Garuḍādhishṭhitāv etāv ubhau Rāghava-Lakshmaṇau | tyaktvā moham badhishyete sa-gaṇaṁ Rāvaṇaṁ raṇe | "Thou, O [prince], well skilled in duty, shalt without doubt obtain sovereignty in Lankā; but Rāvaṇa and his son shall not obtain the object of their desire. 22. Both Rāma and Lakshmaṇa are watched over by Garuḍa: having escaped from their swoon, they shall slay Rāvaṇa with his hosts." Sugrīva, however, proposes to his father-in-law Sushena, to remove Rāma and Lakshmaṇa from the scene of action to Kishkindhā; and promises that he himself will slay Rāvaṇa, his sons and kinsmen, and bring back Sītā, as Indra recovered the lost Śrī (24 f.: Saha śūrair harigaṇair labdha-sanjnāv arindamau | gachha tvam bhrātarau gṛihya Kishkindhāṁ Rāma-Lakshmaṇau | ahaṁ tu Rāvaṇaṁ hatvā sa-putraṁ sahabāndhavam | Maithilīm ānayishyāmi Śakro nashṭām iva Śriyam).[17]

Sushena, however, then relates (vv. 26–32) that once when the gods had been wounded with arrows and rendered senseless, in a combat with the Dānavas, they had been cured by Bṛihaspati by his knowledge and the use of herbs aided by sacred texts; and suggests that some of the monkeys should be sent to the ocean of milk to bring those herbs. The Bombay edition then goes on at once in vv. 33 ff. to relate that a tempest arose, attended with lightnings, and announces the arrival of the celestial bird Garuḍa for the purpose of curing Rāma and his brother. In Gorresio's text the following verses are introduced between those which correspond to the thirty-second and thirty-third of the Bombay edition:

[16] Mahā-bala-yuktatvāt | Comm.

[17] In Gorresio's edition fifteen more verses (vi. 25, 27–41) follow, in which Sugrīva boasts further of what he will accomplish; but they are not found in the Bombay ed.

Gorresio, sect. 26, vv. 8, 9, 10, 11*a*.—Athainam upasangamya Vāyuḥ karṇe vacho 'bravīt | Rāma Rāma mahābāho ātmānaṁ smara vai hṛidā | Nārāyaṇas tvam bhagavān Rākshasārthe 'vatāritaḥ | smara sarpa-bhujaṁ devaṁ Vainateyam mahābalam | sa sarpa-bandhād ghorāt tu yuvāṁ sammochayishyati | sa tasya vachanaṁ śrutvā Rāghavo Raghunandanaḥ | sasmāra Garuḍaṁ devam bhujagānām bhayāvaham | "Then Vāyu, approaching him, spoke this word in his ear: 'Rāma, Rāma, great-armed, recollect thyself in thy heart: thou art the divine Nārāyaṇa, who hast descended [to earth] on account of the Rākshasas. Call to mind the snake-devouring god, the strong Vainateya (the bird Garuḍa); he shall deliver you twain from the dreadful bonds of the serpents.' Hearing Vāyu's words, Rāma called to mind the god Garuḍa, the terrifier of serpents."

The absence of these verses from the Bombay edition renders it probable that they formed no part of the original Rāmāyaṇa. But in addition to this fact, another proof to the same effect is to be found in the circumstance that in the verses which follow shortly after in both recensions Rāma, after being cured by Garuḍa, is represented as inquiring, and consequently, as being ignorant, who his benefactor is, although, according to Gorresio's edition, he had just before called Garuḍa to mind, i.e. summoned him. It is true Rāma had been senseless; but he had regained his consciousness so far as to call upon Garuḍa: so that in Gorresio's text it must be implied,—unless we are to suppose it to be inconsistent with itself,—that he again became unconscious. The verses in which this is shown are as follows (Bombay ed. 50, 37 ff. =Gorr. ed. 26, 16 ff.): Tam āgatam abhiprekshya nāgās te vipradudruvuḥ | yais tu tau purushau baddhau śara-bhūtair mahābalaiḥ | tataḥ Suparṇaḥ Kākutsthau sprishṭvā pratyabhinandya cha | vimamarśa cha pāṇibhyām mukhe chandra-sama-prabhe | Vainateyena saṁsprishṭās tayoḥ samruruhur[18] vraṇāḥ | suvarṇe cha tanū snigdhe tayor āśu babhūvatuḥ |

[18] Yathā-pūrvaṁ saṁrūḍha-māṁsāḥ abhūvan | Comm.

40. Tejo vīryam balañ chavjaḥ utsāhaścha mahāguṇaḥ | pradarśanancha buddhiścha smṛitiś cha dviguṇā[19] tayoḥ | tāv utthāpya mahātejāḥ Garuḍo Vāsavopamau | ubhau cha sasvaje hṛishṭo Rāmaś chainam uvācha ha | bhavat-prasādād vyasanañ Rāvaṇi-prabhavam mahat | upāyena vyatikrāntau śīghrañ cha balinau kṛitau | yathā tātañ Daśarathañ yathā 'jancha pitāmaham | tathā bhavantam āsādya hṛidayam me prasīdati | 44. Ko bhavān rūpa-sampanno divya-srag-anulepanaḥ (The last line is identical with that in Gorresio's edition) | "Beholding him arrived, the powerful serpents by whom, in the form of arrows, these two heroes had been bound, took to flight. Then Garuḍa, having touched and saluted the descendants of Kakutstha, soothed with his hands their faces brilliant as the moon. Touched by Garuḍa, their wounds closed up, and their bodies became speedily sleek and of a beautiful colour. 40. Their fire, strength, force, vigour, and energy became many degrees greater, and their insight, understanding, and memory, were doubled. The powerful Garuḍa raised up and embraced those two [princes] resembling Indra; and Rāma, delighted, thus addressed him: 'By thy favour, and through thy appliances, we have quickly got over the great calamity inflicted by the son of Rāvaṇa, and have become strong. Since I have found thee, who art as my father Daśaratha, and my ancestor Aja, my heart rejoices. 44. Who art thou,[20] distinguished by beauty, adorned with celestial garlands, and unguents?'" etc.

[19] In his remarks on vv. 40, 41, the commentator, in the Bombay ed., explains this as follows: Dviguṇā Vainateya-sparśāt pūrvato 'py adhikā | atra anyair devair avatīrya bhagavato Rāmasya mūla-mūrter ājnayā upakāraḥ saṃpādito Garuḍena tu sva-rūpataḥ eva iti bodhyam | . . . . "Though formerly great, their insight, etc., became doubled from the touch of Garuḍa. Here it is to be understood that the assistance was rendered by the command of the divine Rāma, the root [of all things] by other gods descending to the earth, but by Garuḍa in his own form."

[20] In his remarks on this verse, the same commentator says: "Ko bhavān" ity ayam praśno 'pi manushya-śarīrochita-vyavahāraḥ eva tat-satyatva-pratyāpanārthaḥ | atra Rāma-samīpāgacchamana-paryantam paksha-śarīra-sthatva-sannidhi-mātrena nāga-bandhanancha nirasya Rāghava-sparśanādy-artham purushākāreṇa vyavahritavān iti bodhyam | "This question 'who art thou?' also harmonizes with [Rāma's assumption of] a human body, and is designed to convince men of its reality. Here it is to be understood that the author accommodates to Rāma's human character the entire narrative from [Garuḍa's] appearance in the form of a bird, his removal, by his mere proximity, of the fetters of the snakes, and his touching Rāma, and ending with his near approach to the latter," etc.

The corresponding passage in Gorresio's edition (sect. 26, vv. 16 ff.) does not, as I have intimated, differ materially from the above, and in it, in like manner, Rāma is distinctly represented as inquiring who Garuḍa is.

In reply to Rāma's question, Garuḍa tells him (vv. 46 ff.) who he is, says he is his friend, and that no one but himself, whether god or Asura, could have delivered Rāma from the bonds of the serpents, which had been turned into arrows by the magic art of Indrajit. He warns him that in dealing with the treacherous Rākshasas he must proceed warily, and finally assures him that he shall slay Rāvaṇa and recover Sītā; and then departs after walking round and embracing him (v. 60: Pradakshiṇaṁ tataḥ kṛitvā parishvajya cha).[21]

There is another passage in Gorresio's edition (book vi., sect. 33) in which it is related that after the fall of Prahasta, one of the Rākshasas, Mandodarī, Rāvaṇa's queen, went into the assembly to dissuade her husband from contending any further against Rāma, when she is introduced as saying (v. 25 f.): Na cha mānusha-mātro 'sau Rāmo Daśarathātmajaḥ | ekena yena vai pūrvam bahavo rākshasāḥ hatāḥ | "Nor is this Rāma a mere man, he by whom singly many Rākshasas have formerly been slain." The same idea is repeated in the two following verses, where the number of the slain and the names of some of them are given.

The passage in which these verses occur is not, however, to be found in the corresponding section (the fifty-ninth) of the Bombay edition, which omits verses 6–51 of the thirty-third, and the whole of the thirty-fourth sections of Gorresio's edition.

In the fifty-ninth section of the same book (Bombay ed.) it is related that Lakshmaṇa was wounded by Rāvaṇa with an iron lance given to the latter by Brahmā (v. 105–7); but that when Rāvaṇa tried to lift his fallen foe, he was unable (v. 109 f.): Himavān Mandaro Merus trailokyaṁ vā sahāmaraiḥ | śakyam bhujābhyām uddhartuṁ na śakyo Bharatānujaḥ | śaktyā bṛāhmyā tu Saumitris tāḍito 'pi stanāntare | Vishṇor amīmāṁsya-bhāgam ātmānam pratyanusmarat | "Himavat, Mandara,

[21] From this last circumstance the commentator infers the divine nature of Rāma. His words are: Pradakshiṇaṁ kṛitvā iti anena divya-devatāvatāro Rāmaḥ iti sarvān prākṛita-kapīn praty api bodhitam | "By these words, 'having walked round him, with the right side towards him,' it is intimated even to all the ordinary monkeys that Rāma was an incarnation of a celestial deity."

Meru, or the three worlds with the immortals, might be lifted by him with his arms, but not the younger brother of Bharata. But Lakshmaṇa, though smitten on the chest with the lance given by Brahmā, recollected himself to be an incomprehensible portion of Vishṇu."[22] Similar words are again ascribed to him in v. 120: Vishṇor bhāgam amīmāṁsyam ātmānam pratyanusmaran. Expressions of the same purport occur in the parallel verses in Gorresio's edition, sect. 36, vv. 86, 88, and 98. The words in v. 88 are Vishṇor achintyo yo bhāgo mānushaṁ deham āsthitaḥ | "The inconceivable portion of Vishṇu residing in a human body." The expressions, however, may be later interpolations in both editions. In vv. 122 f. of the same section

[22] The commentator's note on v. 110 is as follows: Amoghayā Brahma-dattayā stanāntare āhataḥ Saumitrir Vishṇor amīmāṁsyaṁ niśśaṁśaya-Vishṇu-bhāgatvavantam iyattayā chintayitum aśakyaṁ vā Vishṇor bhāgam ātmānam pratyanusmarat anvasmarat | na hi svīyaṁ svaṁ hinasty ity āśayena Brahma-śakti-mūlāya (?) trāṇārtham bhagavat-tejo'ṁśaḥ eva aham asmi iti dhyātavān | naṭa-vad angīkṛita-manushyatvasya itareshāṁ dṛiḍha-pratīty-artha-paraṁ na sarvadā tathā dhyānam | evaṁ cha Brahmabhāvanayā Lakshmaṇena sva-śarīrasya garīyastvam āpāditam ity uktam bhavati | "Being struck on the breast with the unfailing (dart) given by Brahmā, Lakshmaṇa recollected himself to be indubitably a portion of Vishṇu, or to be a portion of Vishṇu which could not be conceived of as being of such and such magnitude. With reference to the principle that nothing destroys that which belongs to itself, he reflected, with a view to his preservation from the lance of Brahmā (?), that he was a part of the divine energy. As he had, like an actor, assumed the human form, this reflection of his had the object of confirming the belief of others, and it is not (to be imagined) that he always so reflected. And so too by conceiving himself as Brahma, he made his body very ponderous." It is afterwards said in verse 117 that Hanumat took Lakshmaṇa in his arms and carried him to his brother, and that, though he could not be moved by his enemies, he made himself light to Hanumat in consequence of the latter's friendship and devotion. On this the commentator remarks: Idaṁ cha bhakta-mātrasugrahatvam bhagavato bhagavad-avatārāṇāṁ cha svabhāva-siddhaṁ eva iti bodhyam | evaṁ cha Rāma-Lakshmaṇayor ajnāna-śaktimatva-tātparyatayā bhāsamānāni vachanāni mānusha-vesha-nirvahaṇa-mātra-parāṇi iti bodhyam | tad uktam Bhāgavate | "Martyāvatāras tv iha martya-śikshaṇaṁ raksho-badhāyaiva na kevalaṁ vibhoḥ | kuto 'nyathā syuḥ ramataḥ sve ātmanaḥ Sītā-kṛitāni vyasanānīśvarasya" | "This capability of being taken up by a devoted person alone is to be understood as resulting from the nature of the Deity and of His incarnations. And so it is to be understood that the expressions which seem to ascribe the capability of ignorance to Rāma and Lakshmaṇa are only intended to serve the purpose of carrying out their characters in their human disguise. This is declared in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (the verse occurs in v. 19, 5, as I learn from Böhtlingk and Roth's reference, s.v. śikshaṇa), 'The Lord's incarnation as a man on this earth was meant for the instruction of men, and had not merely in view the slaughter of the Rākshasa. Otherwise, how could the Lord, the Spirit, whose delight is in himself, have undergone the sufferings arising from Sītā?'"

(fifty-ninth, Bombay ed.) Hanumat tells Rāma to mount on his back, as Vishṇu on that of Garutmat or Garuḍa (Vishṇur yathā Garutmantam āruhya); and in verse 125, Rāma is said to have rushed on Rāvaṇa as Vishṇu rushed on Vairochana (Vairochanāṁ iva kruddho Vishṇur ityādi).

In the same sect. (59, 135 ff., Bombay ed.) it is related that Rāvaṇa was defeated by Rāma, but spared, and sent back to Lankā. After his return he thus speaks (sect. 60, v. 5 ff.): Sarvaṁ tat khalu me moghaṁ yat taptam paramaṁ tapaḥ | yat sanātano Mahendreṇa mānusheṇa vinirjitaḥ | 6. Idam tad Brahmaṇo ghoraṁ vākyam mām abhyupasthitaṁ | "mānushebhyo vijānīhi bhayaṁ tvam iti tat tathā | 7. Deva-dānava-gandharvair yaksha-rākshasa-pannagaiḥ | abadhyatvam mayā proktam mānushebhyo na yāchitam" | 8. Tam imaṁ mānusham manye Rāmaṁ Daśarathātmajam | Ikshvāku-kula-jātena Anaraṇyena[23] yat purā | 9. "Utpatsyati hi mad-vaṁśe purusho rākshasādhama | yas tvāṁ sa-putraṁ sāmātyam sa-balaṁ sāśva-sārathim | 10. Nihanishyati sangrāme tvāṁ kulādhama durmate" | śapto 'ham Vedavatyā cha yathā sā dharshitā purā | 11. Seyaṁ Sītā mahābhāgā jātā Janaka-nandinī | Umā Nandīśvaraś chāpi Rambhā Varuṇa-kanyakā | 12. Yathoktās[24] tan mayā prāptaṁ na mithyā ṛishi-bhāshitam | etad eva samāgamya yatnaṁ kartum ihārhatha | "All the extreme austerity that I have undergone is then vain, since [23] See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 371: "Whose (Sambhūta's) son was Anaraṇya, who was slain by Rāvaṇa in his triumphant progress through the nations" (tato 'naraṇyas | taṁ Rāvaṇo dig-vijaye jaghāna). Here, and in the legend related in the second volume of this work, p. 421, note 129, a set of events different from those narrated in the earlier books of the Rāmāyaṇa, is referred to.

The story of Anaraṇya is, however, told in the Uttara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, section 19. Dushkānta (sic), Suratha, Gādhi, Gaya, Purūravas (though, as the commentator remarks, they lived at different periods [bhinna-bhinna-kāla-vartino 'pi Dushkantādayaḥ sva-sva-kāle Rāvaṇam prati jitatva-vādaṁ vara-dānād uktavantaḥ], yet they all in their own times) submitted, without fighting, acknowledging themselves conquered, to Rāvaṇa on his victorious march through the world in consequence of the boon Brahmā had given to him (v. 5). Anaraṇya, a descendant of Ikshvāku, and king of Ayodhyā, however, when called upon either to fight, or acknowledge himself conquered, prefers the former alternative (v. 9); but his army is overcome, and he himself is thrown from his chariot (v. 21). When Rāvaṇa triumphs over his prostrate foe, the latter says that he has been vanquished, not by him, but by fate, and that Rāvaṇa is only the instrument of his overthrow (v. 26); and he predicts that Rāvaṇa should one day be slain by his descendant Rāma (v. 29: Utpatsyate kule hy 'asmiṁ Ikshvākūṇāṁ mahātmanāṁ | Rāmo Dāśarathir nāma yas te prāṇān harishyati).

[24] Yathoktavantaḥ . . . . yad uchus tan mayā iti pāṭhāntaram | Comm.

I, though the equal of Indra, have been overcome by a man. This is the direful word of Brahmā that has now reached me, [when he said]: 'Know that thy great cause of apprehension is from men. I have decreed thy indestructibility by gods, Dānavas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Rākshasas, and Pannagas: but thou hast asked no [security] from men.' This man I consider to be Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, since I was formerly thus cursed by Anaraṇya of the race of Ikshvāku; 'There shall arise among my posterity a man who shall slay thee in battle, thou lowest of Rākshasas, and wicked wretch, along with thy sons, ministers, hosts, and charioteers.' And I was also cursed by Vedavatī when she was insulted by me: it is she who has been born as the great Sītā, the gladdener of Janaka. And that which Umā, Nandiśvara, Rambhā, and the daughter of Varuṇa[25] (Puñjikasthalā) uttered, has befallen me. What has been spoken by rishis[26] is never falsified. Wherefore, ye must assemble, and make exertions."

In this passage it will be observed that there is no express reference to the divine nature of Rāma: and it is conceivable that the original legend may have represented him as being, even in his human capacity, of sufficient prowess to slay the king of the Rākshasas.

[Most of the stories referred to in the preceding passage are given in the Uttara Kāṇḍa, and I shall supply an abstract of them here. That of Anaraṇya will be found in note 23.

The rather pretty story of Vedavatī is related in the seventeenth section of that book, vv. 1 ff., as follows: Rāvaṇa, in the course of his progress through the world, comes to the forest on the Himālaya, where he sees a damsel of brilliant beauty, but in ascetic garb, of whom he straightway becomes enamoured. He tells her that such an austere life is unsuited to her youth and attractions, and asks who she is, and why she is leading an ascetic existence. She answers that she is called Vedavatī, and is the Vocal daughter (vāṅmayī kanyā) of Vṛihaspati's son, the rishi Kuśadhvaja, sprung from him during his constant study of the Veda. The gods, Gandharvas, etc., she says, sought to woo her, but her father would give her to no one else than [25] The stories connected with all these names are briefly referred to by the commentator.

[26] The commentator remarks here: Ṛishi-padena tapo-yuktāḥ uchyante | "The word "ṛishi" denotes persons distinguished by austerity." It would thus refer to Vedavatī and others.

to Vishṇu, the lord of the world, whom he desired for his son-in-law (v. 12: Pitus tu mama jāmātā Vishṇuḥ kila sureśvaraḥ | abhipretas trilokeśas tasmān nānyasya me pitā | dātum ichhati tasmai tu). This resolution provoked Śambhu, king of the Daityas, who slew her father, Kuśadhvaja, while sleeping, on which her mother (whose name is not given), after embracing his body, entered into the fire (15). Vedavatī then proceeds (v. 16): Tato manorathaṁ satyam pitur Nārāyaṇam prati | karomīti tam evāhaṁ hṛidayena samudvahe | iti pratijñām āruhya charāmi vipulaṁ tapaḥ | . . . . 18. Nārāyaṇo mama patir na tv anyaḥ purushottamāt | āśraye niyamaṁ ghoraṁ Nārāyaṇa-parīpsayā | "In order that I may fulfil this desire of my father in respect of Nārāyaṇa, I wed him with my heart.[27] Having entered into this engagement, I practise great austerity. Nārāyaṇa, and no other than he, Purushottama, is my husband. From the desire of obtaining him, I resort to this severe observance." Rāvaṇa's passion is not in the least diminished by this explanation, and he urges that it is the old alone who should seek to become distinguished by accumulating merit through austerity; prays that she who is so young and beautiful will become his bride; and boasts that he is superior to Vishṇu (v. 24). She rejoins that no one but he would thus contemn that deity. On receiving this reply, he touches the hair of her head with the tip of his finger (27). She is greatly incensed, and forthwith cuts off her hair, and tells him that as he has so insulted her, she cannot continue to live, but will enter into the fire before his eyes. She goes on (v. 31 ff.): Yasmāt tu dharshitā chāhaṁ tvayā pāpātmanā vane | tasmāt tava badhārthaṁ hi samutpatsyaty aham (samutpatsyati samutpatsye ity arthaḥ) | Comm.) punaḥ | nahi śakyaḥ striyā hantum purushaḥ pāpa-niśchayaḥ | śape tvayi mayotsṛishṭe tapasaś cha vyayo bhavet | yadi tv asti mayā kinchit kṛitaṁ dattaṁ hutaṁ tathā | tasmāt tv ayonijā sādhvī bhaveyaṁ dharmiṇaḥ sutā | evam uktvā pravishṭā sā jvalitaṁ jātavedasam | papāta cha divo divyā puṣhpa-vṛishṭiḥ samantataḥ | saishā Janaka-rājasya prasūtā tanayā prabho | tava bhāryā mahābāho Vishṇus tvaṁ hi sanātanaḥ | pūrvaṁ krodha-hataḥ śatrur yayā 'sau nihatas tayā | upāśrayitvā śailābhas tava vīryam amānusham | "'Since I have been insulted in the forest by thee who art wicked-hearted, I shall be born again for thy destruction. For a man of evil designs cannot be slain by a woman; and the merit of my austerity would be lost if I were to launch a curse against thee. But if I have performed, or bestowed, or sacrificed, aught, may I be born the virtuous daughter, not produced from the womb, of a righteous man.' Having thus spoken, she entered the blazing fire. Then a shower of celestial flowers fell from every part of the sky. It is she, lord, who (having been Vedavatī in the Kṛita age, v. 38) has been born (in the Tretā age, v. 38) as the daughter of king Janaka, and [has become] thy bride; for thou art the eternal Vishṇu. The mountain-like enemy who was [virtually] destroyed before by her wrath, has now been slain by her, after she had associated herself with thy superhuman energy." On this the commentator remarks: Aneha Sītā eva Rāvaṇa-badhe mukhyaṁ kāraṇam Rāme tu hantṛitvam āropitam iti sūchitam | "By this it is signified that Sītā was the principal cause of Rāvaṇa's death; but the function of destroying him is ascribed to Rāma." On the words "thou art Vishṇu," in the preceding verse, the same commentator remarks: Anena Sītāyāḥ Lakshmītvaṁ sphuṭam evoktam | tad uktam Parāśareṇa "Rāghavatve 'bhavat Sītā Rukmiṇī Kṛishṇa-janmani" iti | "By this it is clearly affirmed that Sītā was Lakshmī. Parāśara says: 'In the god's life as Rāma, she became Sītā, and in his birth as Kṛishṇa [she became] Rukmiṇī.'"

[27] This language offers an exact parallel to that of devout female ascetics in other parts of the world.

I have not noticed in the Uttara Kāṇḍa any separate legend about Umā, but the commentator[28] connects this allusion to her in the preceding passage (vi. 60, 11) with the following story about Nandīśvara, which is thus told in the sixteenth section of the Uttara Kāṇḍa (v. 1 ff.): After his victory over Kuvera, Rāvaṇa went to Saravaṇa, the birthplace of Kārttikeya. Ascending the mountain, he sees another delightful wood, where his car Puṣhpaka stops, and will proceed no further. He then beholds a formidable dark tawny-coloured dwarf, called Nandīśvara, a follower of Mahādeva, who desires him to halt, as that deity is sporting on the mountain, and has made it inaccessible to all creatures, the gods included (v. 10). Rāvaṇa angrily demands who Śankara (Mahādeva) is, and laughs contemptuously at Nandīśvara, who has the face of a monkey. Nandīśvara, who was another body (aparā tanuḥ) of Śiva, being incensed at this contempt of his monkey form, declares that beings, possessing the same shape as himself, and of similar energy, monkeys, shall be produced to destroy Rāvaṇa's race (v. 17: Tasmād mad-vīrya-saṁyuktāḥ mad-rūpa-sama-tejasaḥ | utpatsyanti badhārthaṁ hi kulasya tava vānarāḥ). Nandīśvara adds that he could easily kill Rāvaṇa now, but that he has been already slain by his own deeds (v. 20). Rāvaṇa threatens (v. 23 ff.) that as his car has been stopped, he will pluck up the mountain by the roots, asking in virtue of what power Śiva continually sports on that spot, and boasting that he must now be made to know his danger. Rāvaṇa then throws his arms under the mountain, which, being lifted by him, shakes, and makes the hosts of Rudra tremble, and even Pārvatī herself quake, and cling to her husband (v. 26: Chachāla Pārvatī chāpi tadā śliṣhṭā Maheśvaram). Śiva, however, presses down the mountain with his great toe, and along with it crushes the arms of Rāvaṇa, who utters a loud cry, which shakes all creation. Rāvaṇa's counsellors then exhort him to propitiate Mahādeva, the blue-throated lord of Umā, who on being lauded will become gracious. Rāvaṇa accordingly praises Mahādeva with hymns, and weeps for a thousand years. Mahādeva is then propitiated (v. 35), lets go Rāvaṇa's arms, says his name shall be Rāvaṇa from the cry (rāva) he had uttered, and sends him away, with the gift of a sword bestowed on him at his request (v. 43).

[28] His words are: Tatra Umā-śāpaḥ | Kailāśa-śikhara-chālana-velāyāṁ Rāvaṇasya strī-nimittam maraṇam ity evaṁ-rūpam ity āhuḥ | "They say that at the time when he shook the summit of Kailāsa, a curse was pronounced on Rāvaṇa that he should die on account of a woman."

The legend of Rambhā is narrated in the twenty-sixth section of the Uttara Kāṇḍa. Rāvaṇa goes with his army to Kailāsa, to conquer the gods. He there sees the Rambhā, the most beautiful of all the Apsarases, and is smitten with her charms (v. 20). She says she is properly his daughter-in-law, being the wife of Nalakūvara (son of his brother Kuvera), with whom she has an assignation, and cannot therefore receive his addresses (v. 34). Rāvaṇa says the Apsarases are mere courtezans, without any husbands, and ravishes her (v. 41). She goes and reports the outrage to Nalakūvara (46), who, after touching all his organs of sense (chakshur-ādīndriya-gaṇaṁ sarvam | Comm.) with water, launches the following curse against Rāvaṇa: v. 54. Akāmā tena yasmāt tvam balād bhadre pradharshitā | 55. Tasmāt sa yuvatīm anyāṁ nākāmām upayāsyati | yadā hy akāmāṁ kāmārto dharshayishyati yoshitam | mūrdhā tu saptadhā tasya śakalībhavitā tadā | "Since thou, kind lady, who hadst no passion for him, hast been forcibly insulted by him, he shall not approach any other damsel who does not reciprocate his passion. For when through passion he shall ravish any woman who has no passion for him, his head shall split into seven fragments." Hearing of this curse, Rāvaṇa resolves to abstain from offering violence to women.

I have not noticed in the Uttara Kāṇḍa any story about the daughter of Varuṇa, but the commentator on the text (vi. 60, 11) explains the allusion to her thus: Varuṇa-kanyakā Punjikasthalā tan-nimittam brahma-śāpaḥ strī-dharshaṇe maraṇa-rūpaḥ | "The daughter of Varuṇa was Punjikasthalā. On her account, a curse of Brahmā, involving the penalty of death, [was pronounced] on the rape of women."]

After expressing himself as above (p. 458), Rāvaṇa desires his brother Kumbhakarṇa (a monster who, owing to the curse of Brahmā,[29] slept for six months at a time, and remained awake for a single day) to be awakened. This is with immense difficulty effected. Kumbhakarṇa asks (book vi., sect. 60, Bombay ed., vv. 67 ff.) why they have awakened him, and is told that they stand in dread, not of the gods, but of a man, Rāma (v. 72: Mānushān no bhayaṁ rājan tumulaṁ samprabādhate | ityādi); when he assures them that he will destroy their foes, and himself drink the blood of Rāma and Lakshmaṇa. After drinking two thousand jars of liquor, he goes to see and consult with his brother Rāvaṇa; who, in answer to his inquiry, describes to him (sect. 62) the present position of affairs, and the necessity there is to obtain his assistance. Kumbhakarṇa, in reply, delivers (sect. 63, Bombay ed., vv. 2–21) a moral discourse on the wickedness of Rāvaṇa's conduct, such as we should scarcely have expected from the speaker's antecedents;[29] and is told by Rāvaṇa in answer (vv. 23–27) that this is not the time for such laboured lectures, but for action, to which he calls upon him to proceed, if he has any regard for him, or pretensions to valour. Kumbhakarṇa then promises (vv. 30 ff. of the same section) to destroy the enemies of his brother. But before this last speech of Kumbhakarṇa, which is given in the forty-second section of Gorresio's recension, that text introduces another speech of the same personage, which occupies vv. 30–53 of the fortieth section, and a further speech of Rāvaṇa which fills the forty-first section; both of which are wanting in the Bombay edition, and even in one of the MSS. consulted by Signor Gorresio, as we learn from his Preface, vol. v., p. xlvi.; and might, as he thinks, be omitted without detriment, or perhaps with advantage, to the connexion of the ideas, and the march of the poem. Some mention must, however, be made of this speech, as in it Kumbhakarṇa gives the same account of the divine origin of Rāma, as we have already met with in the earlier part of the poem (see p. 168 ff., above). He says that one day he had seen the divine sage Nārada, who had told him that he had just returned from an assembly of the gods who had met to take counsel for the destruction of the Rākshasas, on which occasion Brahmā had spoken as follows (sect. vi. 40, 44 ff., ed. Gorr.): Evam ukte tu vachane Brahmā devān uvācha ha | abadhyatvam mayā dattam deva-daityaiścha rākshasaiḥ | mānushebhyo bhayaṁ tasya vānarebhyaścha devatāḥ | surāsura-samūhe'pi badhas tasya na vidyate | tasmād esha Harir devaḥ padmanābhas trivikramaḥ | putro Daśarathasyāstu chaturbāhuḥ sanātanaḥ | bhavanto vasudhāṁ gatvā Vishṇor asya mahātmanaḥ | vānarāṇāṁ tanuṁ kṛitvā sahāyatvaṁ karishyatha | "When [the priest of the gods Vṛihaspati] had thus spoken, Brahmā said to the gods: 'I have conferred [on Rāvaṇa] indestructibility by gods, Daityas and Rākshasas: he has, O gods, to fear men and monkeys. Nor can he be killed by all the Suras (gods) or Asuras. Wherefore let this god (devaḥ) Hari (Vishṇu), from whose navel sprang a lotus, who is thrice-striding, four-armed, and eternal, become the son of Daśaratha. You, gods, repairing to the earth, and assuming the form of monkeys, shall assist the mighty Vishṇu.'" Kumbhakarṇa says that Vishṇu has taken the human form of Rāma, and come to slay them. He therefore advises that Sītā should be restored, and peace made with Rāma, before whom the three worlds bow down.

[29] See sect 61, vv. 19 ff.

In reply to this exhortation, Rāvaṇa utters the following defiance of Vishṇu (sect. 41, 2 ff., ed. Gorr.): Ko 'sau Vishṇur iti khyāto yasya tvam tāta bibhyase | devatve na namasye tam tathā 'nyān devatā-gaṇān | manushyatvaṁ gate tasmin kim bhayam tvām upasthitam | nityam samara-bhītās tu mānushāḥ sumahābala | khādayitvā tu tān pūrvaṁ katham paśchād namāmy aham | praṇamya mānushaṁ Rāmaṁ Sītām datvā tu tasya vai |

hāsya-bhūtas tu lokānām anuyāsyāmi pṛishṭhataḥ | Rāghavāñ tam mahābāho dīna-rūpo 'tha dāsa-vat | ṛiddhiñ cha paśyamāno 'sya kathañ śakshyāmi jīvitum | hṛitvā tasya purā bhāryām māyāñ kṛitvā sudāruṇam | praṇamed Rāvaṇo Rāmam esha te buddhi-niṛṇayaḥ | yadi Rāmaḥ svayañ Vishṇur Lakshmaṇo 'pi Śatakratuḥ | Sugrīvas Tryambakaḥ sākshāt svayam Brahmā tu Jāmbavān | aho śāstrāṇy adhītāni yasya te buddhir idṛiśī | atītāśramiṇañ Rāmañ yo namaskartum ichhasi | devatvañ yaḥ parityajya mānushīñ yonim āśritaḥ | asmān hantuñ khilāyātaḥ sa sandheyaḥ katham mayā | yadi vā Rāghavo Vishṇur vyaktañ te śrotram āgataḥ | devatānāñ hitārthañ tu pravishṭo mānushīñ tanum | sa vānarāṇāñ rājānañ Sugrīvañ śaraṇāñ gataḥ | aho 'sya sadṛiśañ sakhyañ tiryagyoni-gataiḥ saha | vīrya-hīnas tu kiñ Vishṇur yaḥ śritaḥ ṛiksha-vānarān | athavā vīrya-hīno 'sau yena pūrvam mahāsuraḥ | vāmanañ rūpam āsthāya yāchitas tripadaḥ padam | Balis tu dīkshito yajñe tena tvañ sakhyam ichhasi | yena dattā mahī sarvā sa-sāgara-vanārṇavā | upachāra-kṛitā pūrvam 'sa baddho yajña-dīkshitaḥ | upakārī hatas tena so 'smān rakshati vairiṇaḥ | yadā me nirjitāḥ devāḥ svargañ gatvā tvayā saha | tadā kim nāsti Vishṇutvañ tasya devasya Rākshasa | sāmprataṁ kutaḥ āyātaḥ sa Vishṇur yasya bibhyase | śārīra-rakshaṇārthāya brūshe tvañ vākyam īdṛiśam | nāyañ klīvayituñ kālaḥ kālo yoddhuñ niśāchara | svāmyam Pitāmahāt prāptañ trailokyañ vaśa-gañ kṛitam | Rāghavam praṇame kasmād hīna-vīrya-parākramam | tad gachha śayanīyañ tvam piva tvam vigata-jvaraḥ | śayamānañ na hanyāt tvāñ Rāghavo Lakshmaṇas tathā | ahañ Rāmam badhishyāmi Sugrīvancha sa-Lakshmaṇam | vānarāñścha hanishyāmi tato devān mahāraṇe | Vishṇunchaiva badhishyami ye cha Vishṇv-anuyāyinaḥ | gachha gachhasva tat kshetraṁ chiraṁ jīva sukhī bhava | bhrātaraṁ tv evam uktvā 'sau Rāvaṇaḥ Kāla-choditaḥ | sāvalepañ sa-garjanchā punar vachanam abravīt | jānāmi Sītāñ dharaṇī-prasūtāñ jānāmi Rāmam Madhusūdanancha | etad hi jāne tv aham asya badhyas tathāhṛitā me Janakātmajaishā[30] | na kāmāchchaiva na krodhād dharāmi Janakātmajām | nihato gantum ichhāmi tad Vishṇoḥ paramam padam |

[30] A verse resembling this in most of its clauses had previously occurred in a similarly defiant speech of Rāvaṇa's in sect. 34, 7, of Gorresio's recension: Jānāmi Sītāñ Janaka-prasūtāñ jānāmi Rāmam Madhusūdanañ cha | Etad hi jānāmy aham asya badhyas tathāpi sandhiñ na karomy anena | "I know Sītā to be Janaka's daughter, and Rāma to be Madhusūdana; and I know this that I shall be slain by him; and yet I cannot make peace with him." Gorresio regards both passages as of doubtful authenticity. In explanation of the epithet dharaṇī-prasūtā applied to Sītā, I may quote these lines from the Rāmāyaṇa (Bombay ed.) i. 66, 13 ff., where

"'Who is that being called Vishṇu, whom thou fearest? In his divinity I reverence neither him, nor any of the other hosts of gods: what fear is this, then, which has seized you, now that he has become a man? Men are always afraid of battle. When I have formerly eaten them, how can I afterwards bow down before them? Paying reverence to the mortal Rāma, and restoring Sītā, how could I,—an object of derision to the universe,—follow behind Rāghava in humility like a slave? and beholding his prosperity, how could I live? This is thy opinion, that after carrying off Rāma's wife, and manifesting terrible haughtiness, Rāvaṇa should bow down before him! Even if Rāma were Vishṇu himself, and Lakshmaṇa were Indra, if Sugrīva were Tryambaka (Śiva), and if Jāmbavat were Brahmā—O thou hast [well] studied the Sāstras, thou who so thinkest, and who desirest to make obeisance to Rāma who stands without the four orders of society; who, abandoning his divine nature, has entered into a mortal womb! How can I make peace with him who has come to kill us? Or if it has distinctly reached thy ears that Rāma is Vishṇu, and has entered into a mortal body for the welfare of the gods, [still] he has resorted [for help] to Sugrīva the king of the monkeys. How suitable is his friendship with brutes! Is then Vishṇu destitute of valour that he has sought [the aid of] bears and monkeys? Or, he is [certainly] devoid of valour who formerly assuming the form of a dwarf, demanded of the great Asura Bali three paces of ground, while he was consecrated for the sacrifice: with such a person thou desirest friend-

Janaka says of his daughter: Atha me kṛishataḥ kshetraṁ lāṅgalād utthitā tataḥ | 14. Kshetraṁ śodhayatā labdhā nāmnā Sīteti viśrutā | bhūtalād utthitā sā tu vyavardhata mamātmajā | etc. 13. "Now as I was ploughing my field, there sprang from the plough (a girl), (14) obtained by me while cleansing my field, and known by name as Sītā (the furrow). This girl, sprung from the earth, grew up as my daughter." In the next verse she is styled ayonijā, "not born from the womb." The commentator quotes the following lines from the Padma-purāṇa on the same subject: Atha lokeśvarī Lakshmīr Janakasya pure svataḥ | śubha-kshetre halotkhāte tāre chottara-phālgune | ayonijā padma-karā bālārka-śata-sannibhā | Sītā-mukhe samutpannā bāla-bhāvena sundarī | Sītā-mukhodbhavāt Sītā ity asyai nāma chākarot | tato 'bhūd aurasī tasya Urmilā nāma kanyakā | iti | "Now Lakshmī, the mistress of the worlds, was born by her own will in the city of Janaka, in a beautiful field opened up by the plough, under the star in the second half of the month Phālguna. She sprang from the womb of no female, with a lotus in her hand, like a hundred young suns, but arose from the opening of the furrow, beautiful, in the form of a child. He gave her the name of Sītā, because she sprang from the opening of the furrow (sītā). Then his daughter Urmilā was born by ordinary generation."

ship! He (Bali) who formerly presented to him the whole earth with its oceans, forests, and seas, was bound by him when consecrated for sacrifice! A benefactor was destroyed by him; and he is to deliver us who are his enemies![31] When I went to heaven with thee and conquered the gods, had not this god then his character of Vishṇu? Whence has this Vishṇu now come, whom thou fearest? Thou speakest in this strain to save thy body [from injury in battle]. This is not the time for timidity, Rākshasa, but for fighting. I have obtained dominion from Brahmā; the three worlds are subject to me; why should I bow down before Rāma who is destitute of energy and valour? Go, therefore, to thy couch; drink, free from disquiet. Neither Rāma nor Lakshmaṇa will kill thee when thou art sleeping. I shall slay Rāma, and Sugrīva, and Lakshmaṇa, and the monkeys, and then the gods also in a great battle. I shall kill Vishṇu too, and all Vishṇu's followers. Go, go then to thy abode, live long, live at ease.' Having thus, impelled by fate, spoken to his brother with arrogance and in a loud tone, Rāvaṇa said again: 'I know Sītā to be sprung from the earth; I know Rāma to be Madhusūdana. And this I know, that I am to be slain by him; and therefore have I carried off this daughter of Janaka. It is not from passion or from anger that I retain her: I desire, being slain, to go to that highest abode of Vishṇu.'" Compare the quotation from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, given above, regarding Śiśupāla, pp. 215 f., note 212.

The change of tone in this last short speech is remarkable. The defier of Vishṇu all at once acknowledges his deity and becomes his humble worshipper. This looks like a still later addition to the preceding part of the section, inserted by some editor who considered the earlier portion to be too blasphemous to be allowed to stand without some qualification, or recantation.

Again, after Rāvaṇa's death, Mandodarī, the highest in rank of his queens, in the lament which she utters for her husband's loss, speaks as follows (sect. 113, 5 ff., Bombay ed.): Sa tvam mānushа-ṇyātкeṇa Rāmeṇa yudhi nirjitaḥ| na vyapatrapase rājan kim idaṁ rākshaseśvara| 6. Kathaṁ trailokyam ākramya śriyā vīryeṇa chānvitam | avishahyaṁ jaghāna tvām mānusho vana-gocharaḥ | 7. Mānushāṇām avishaye charataḥ kāma-rūpiṇaḥ | vināśas tava Rāmeṇa saṁyuge nopapadyate | 8. Na chaitat

[31] Such is the sense—apparently not a very suitable one—of the words.

karma Rāmasya śraddadhāmi chamū-mukhe | sarvataḥ samupetasya tava tenābhimarshaṇam | 9. Athavā Rāma-rūpeṇa Kṛitāntaḥ svayam āgataḥ | māyāṁ tava vināśāya vihāyāpratitarkitām | 10. Athavā Vāsavena tvaṁ dharshito 'si mahābala | 11. Vāsavasya tu kā śaktis tvāṁ drashṭum api saṁyuge | Mahābalaṁ mahāvīryaṁ deva-śatrum mahaujasam | 12. Vyaktam esha mahāyogī[32] paramātmā sanātanaḥ | an-ādi-madhya-nidhano mahataḥ paramo mahān | 13. Tamasaḥ paramo dhātā śankha-chakra-gadā-dharaḥ | 14. Śrīvatsa-vakshāḥ nitya-śrīr ajayyaḥ śāśvato dhruvaḥ | mānushaṁ rūpam āsthāya Vishṇuḥ satya-parākramaḥ | 15. Sarvaiḥ parivṛito devair vānaratvam upāgataiḥ | sarva-lokeśvaraḥ śrīmān lokānāṁ hita-kāmyayā | sa-rākshasa-parīvāraṁ deva-śatrum bhayāvaham | 16. Indriyāṇi purā jitvā jitam tribhuvanaṁ tvayā | smaradbhir iva tad vairam indriyair eva nirjitaḥ | 17. Yadaiva hi Janasthāne Rākshasair bahubhir vṛitaḥ | Kharas tu nihato bhrātā tādā Rāmo na mānushaḥ |

"5. Art not thou ashamed, O king, to have been conquered by Rāma, a mere man? What is this, lord of the Rākshasas? 6. How did a man frequenting the forests slay thee who hadst assailed the three worlds, who wast distinguished by good fortune and heroism, and unconquerable? 7. That thou who movedst at will, invisible to men, shouldst have been destroyed by Rāma, is inconceivable. 8. I do not credit this act of Rāma in the front of the battle, the overthrow by him of thee who wast endowed in every way. 9. Either Death (Kṛitānta) came in the form of Rāma, applying an unimagined magic for thy destruction, (10) or thou hast been overwhelmed by Vāsava (Indra). 11. But what power had Vāsava in battle even to look at thee, who wast the mighty in force and heroism, the glorious enemy of the gods? 12. This was manifestly the great contemplator (Mahāyogin),[33] the supreme spirit, the eternal, without beginning, middle, or end, the great Being superior to the great (or to Mahat,[34] i.e. Prakṛiti or matter), (13) superior to darkness,[35] the sustainer, the wielder of the shell, the discus, and the club, (14) who bears the śrīvatsa on his breast, who [32] Svābhāvika-sarva-śakti-yuktaḥ | Comm.

[33] This knowledge of the truth, says the commentator, was derived by Mandodarī from the divine favour (satyam evam Mandodarī jānīte Bhagavat-kṛipayā).

[34] The commentator does not say in what sense the word mahat should be taken.

[35] The commentator says that tamasaḥ paramaḥ means prakṛiteḥ pravartakaḥ, "he who causes the activity of Prakṛiti (or matter)." Instead of tamasaḥ, he adds, some read tapasaḥ.

enjoys perpetual prosperity, the invincible, everlasting, unchanging, Vishṇu, of genuine prowess, who had assumed a human form, (15) and was attended by all the gods in the shape of monkeys, the glorious lord of all the worlds, who desired the good of all the worlds. [He slew thee],[36] the terrific enemy of the gods, with thy attendant Rākshasas. 16. Formerly, by subduing thy senses, thou didst subdue the three worlds; but thou wast [afterwards, i.e. when thou didst carry off Sītā, etc.] overcome by thy senses, which, as it were, remembered[37] [and revenged] that [former] hostility [of thine towards them]. 17. For since thy brother Khara, attended by many Rākshasas, was slain [by Rāma] in Janasthāna, Rāma is not a mere mortal."

If this quotation from the Bombay edition be compared with the corresponding passage of Gorresio's text (sect. 95), it will be found that, on this occasion, the former is more diffuse than the latter. Verses 5–8 are nearly the same in both recensions; but instead of two verses (the ninth and tenth) affirming the divine character of Rāma, which we find in Gorresio's edition, there are in the Bombay recension seven verses, in most of which, at least, the same idea is enforced. The ninth and tenth verses of Gorresio's edition are as follows: 9. Athavā Rāma-rūpeṇa Vishṇuś cha svayam āgataḥ | tava nāśāya māyābhiḥ praviśyānupalakshitaḥ | 10. Yadaiva hi Janasthāne rākshasair bahubhir vṛitaḥ | Kharas tava hato bhrātā tadaivāsau na mānushhaḥ | "Or Vishṇu himself came in the form of Rāma, having entered into him unperceived, through supernatural powers, for thy destruction. 10. For since thy brother Khara, attended by many Rākshasas, was slain by [Rāma] in Janasthāna, Rāma is not a mere mortal." It will be observed that here a verse (the tenth), which corresponds to the seventeenth of the Bombay edition, immediately succeeds the ninth, and that consequently there is in Gorresio's text no such development of the idea contained in the ninth verse as we find in vv. 10–15 of the other edition. Now if we are to suppose that the original text of the Rāmāyaṇa made no allusion to Rāma being an incarnation of Vishṇu, it might at first sight seem as if the ninth and tenth verses of the Bombay text, [36] It is necessary (with the commentator, who says hatavān iti śeshaḥ) to supply the words in brackets, or some others of a similar tenor, in order to make sense.

[37] This clause the commentator explains thus: "Purā" Bhagavad-uddeśena tapo-'nushṭhāna-kāle | "tad vairaṁ" sva-jaya-nimittaṁ vairaṁ smaradbhir indriyair akarma-pravṛitti-sampādanena nirjitaḥ |

which represent Death (Kṛitānta), or Indra, as taking the form of Rāma, were more genuine than the corresponding verse of Gorresio's edition, which declares that Vishṇu assumed the form of that hero. In this case, verses 12 ff. of the Bombay edition, which represent Rāma as an incarnate deity, would be a subsequent interpolation. But the twelfth and following verses appear, on examination, to hang well enough together with those which precede; and if the entire passage thus forms one connected whole, we can only (on the hypothesis that Rāma's divine nature was foreign to the original poem) suppose that the interpolation, or alteration, has extended over a wider surface. It is worthy of remark that the hundred and thirteenth section of the Bombay edition is in other parts also more developed than Gorresio's. Thus after verse 40 of the Bombay edition, corresponding to verse 28 of Gorresio's, eighteen verses are inserted which are not in the latter, and after verse 59 of the Bombay edition = verse 29 of Gorresio's, twelve verses are found which are wanting in the latter. From this it would appear that both recensions have, in different places, received developments after they began to be separately handed down, unless, indeed, we are to assume that that followed by Gorresio omitted passages which had previously existed in the common source of both.

In the passage which I shall next quote, the legend makes no mention of the incarnation of Vishṇu, but specifies the birth of Sītā as the means whereby Rāvaṇa is to be destroyed. After the Rākshasas had been defeated by Rāma and driven back into Lankā, their females loudly bewailed the calamities by which their race had been overtaken. In the course of this lament they say (sect. 95, vv. 25 ff., Bombay ed. = sect. 74, vv. 27 ff., Gorresio): Rudro vā yadi vā Vishṇur Mahendro vā S'atakratuḥ | hanti no Rāma-rūpeṇa yadi vā svayam Antakaḥ | 26. Hata-pravīrāḥ Rāmeṇa nirāśāḥ jīvite vayam | apaśyanto[38] bhayasyāntam anāthāḥ vilapāmahe | 27. Rāma-hastād Daśagrīvaḥ śūro datta-mahā-varaḥ | idam bhayam mahāghoraṁ samutpannaṁ na budhyate | 28. Taṁ na devāḥ na gandharvāḥ na piśāchāḥ na rākshasāḥ | upasṛishṭam[39] parītrātuṁ śaktāḥ Rāmeṇa saṁyuge | 29. Utpātāśchāpi dṛiśyante Rāvaṇasya raṇe raṇe | kathayanti hi Rāmeṇa Rāvaṇasya nibarhaṇam |

[38] Apaśyanto 'paśyantyaḥ | Comm.
[39] Upasṛishṭaṁ hantum ārabdham | Comm.

30. Pitāmahena prītena deva-dānava-rākshasaiḥ | Rāvaṇasyābhayaṁ dattam manushebhyo na yāchitam | 31. Tad idam mānusham manye prāptaṁ nihsaṁśayam bhayaṁ | jīvitānta-karaṇaṁ ghoraṁ rakshasāṁ Rāvaṇasya cha | 32. Pīḍyamānās tu balinā vara-dānena rakshasā | dīptais tapobhir vibudhāḥ Pitāmahaṁ apūjayan | 33. Devatānāṁ hitārthāya mahātmā vai Pitāmahaḥ | uvācha devatās tushṭaḥ idaṁ sarvāḥ mahad vachaḥ | 34. Adya-prabhṛiti lokāṁs trīḥ sarve dānava-rākshasāḥ | bhayena prabhṛitāḥ nityaṁ vicharishyanti śāśvatam[40] | 35. Daivatais tu samāgamya sarvaiś chendra-purogamaiḥ | vṛisha-dhvajas Tripura-hā Mahādevaḥ pratoshitaḥ | 36. Prasannas tu Mahādevo devān etad vacho 'bravīt | utpatsyati hitārthaṁ vo nārī rakshaḥ-kshayāvahā | 37. Eshā devaiḥ prayuktā tu kshud yathā[41] dānavān purā | bhakshayishyati naḥ sarvān rākshasa-ghnī sa-rāvaṇān | 38. Rāvaṇasyāpanītena[42] durvinītasya durmateḥ | ayaṁ nishṭānako[43] ghoraḥ śokena samabhiplutaḥ | 39. Tan na paśyāmahe loke yo naḥ śaraṇa-do bhavet | Rāghaveṇopasṛishṭānāṁ kāleneva yugakshaye | 25. "Either Rudra, or Vishṇu, or the great Indra Śatakratu, or Death himself, slays us in the form of Rāma. 26. Having had our heroes destroyed by Rāma, we despair of life. Seeing no end of our apprehension, we lament, deprived of our protectors. 27. The heroic Daśagrīva (Rāvaṇa), who had received a great boon [from Brahmā] does not perceive this great cause of alarm which [comes] from the hand of Rāma. 28. Neither Gods, nor Gandharvas, nor Piśāchas, nor Rākshasas, are able to deliver him when assailed by Rāma in fight. 29. Portents, too, regarding Rāvaṇa are seen in every battle, which foretell his destruction by Rāma. 30. Pitāmaha, gratified, granted to Rāvaṇa security against Gods, Dānavas and Rākshasas, but he did not ask [to be secured] against men. 31. This dreadful danger from men has now, I think, without doubt arrived, which shall [40] These words are thus explained by the commentator: Dānavāḥ rākshasāś cha bhayena prabhṛitāḥ devebhyo bhayaṁ bibhrāṇāḥ eva vicharishyanti | devāḥ svataḥ parato vā 'smān pīḍayishyanti ity arthaḥ | "The Dānavas and Rākshasas shall roam about entertaining fear of the gods: viz. that the gods themselves, or through others, would distress them." This verse is thus given in Gorresio's edition (74, 36 f.): Adya-prabhṛiti lokeshu ye bhūtāḥ bhaya-varjitāḥ | bhayārtās te punar iha vicharishyanti rākshasāḥ.

[41] "Purā" pūrva-kalpe | devair dānava-nāśārtham prayuktā kshud yathā dānavān harati sma | Comm. "'As formerly,' in a former Kalpa, Hunger, being appointed by the gods for the destruction of the Dānavas, carried them off."

[42] Apanītena anayena | Comm.

[43] Nishṭānako nāśaḥ | Comm.

terminate the life of Rāvaṇa and the Rākshasas. 32. Now the gods, when oppressed by the Rākshasa (Rāvaṇa), who was mighty through the boon which [Brahmā] had conferred on him, worshipped Pitāmaha (Brahmā) with ardent austerities. 33. The great Pitāmaha, pleased, addressed this great word to all the deities for their benefit: 34. 'From this day forward all the Dānavas and Rākshasas shall roam continually through the three worlds, influenced by fear.' 35. But all the gods,[44] with Indra at their head, assembled and propitiated Mahādeva, whose banner is a bull, and who destroyed Tripura (or, the three castles). 36. He, being pleased, thus spake to them: 'For your benefit there shall arise a female who shall bring destruction to the Rākshasas.' 37. This female slayer[45] of Rākshasas, being commissioned by the gods, shall [now] devour all of us, including Rāvaṇa; as Hunger formerly [devoured] the Dānavas. 38. Through the folly of the misguided and wicked Rāvaṇa this dreadful destruction, accompanied by affliction, has come upon us. 39. We see no one in the world who shall afford protection to us assailed by Rāma, as it were by Time at the end of the ages."

Compare with the preceding passage the story of Devavatī, extracted above (p. 458 ff.) from the Uttara Kāṇḍa. Both of these forms of the legend appear to regard Sītā, and not Vishṇu, as the real destroyer of Rāvaṇa.

In an earlier part of the poem it is related that after Rāma had slain the Rākshasa Khara, he was congratulated by the gods in a way which, strictly speaking, is scarcely consistent with the idea that the poet regarded him as an incarnation of Vishṇu:

Āraṇya Kāṇḍa (or Third Book) 30, v. 27 ff. (Bombay edition = section 35, vv. 93 ff., Gorresio's edition). — Sa papāta Kharo bhūmau dahyamānaḥ śarāgninā | Rudreṇeva vinirdagdhaḥ Śvetāraṇye yathā 'ntakaḥ | 28. Sa Vṛitraḥ iva vajreṇa phenena Namuchir yathā | Balo vendrāśani-hato nipapāta 'hataḥ Kharaḥ | 29. Etasminn

[44] The commentator remarks here: Evam Brahmaṇaḥ prāsādāt sabhayatva-mātram prāptam | saṁhārādhikṛita-Rudra-prasādena tu nāśaḥ evāsmākam ity āhuḥ | "Thus by the favour of Brahmā, the gods only obtained that the [Dānavas, etc.] should be terrified: but through the favour [granted to them] by Rudra, whose function is destruction, we shall be destroyed."

[45] Said to be Sītā, according to the commentator (sā eshā Sītā eva ity āhuḥ). Gorresio's text has Saishā daiva-prasṛishṭā tu kshudhitā Janakātmajā, etc.

antare devāś chāraṇaiḥ saha sangatāḥ | dundubhīṁśchābhinighnantaḥ pushpa-varshaṁ samantataḥ | 30. Rāmasyopari saṁhṛishṭāḥ vavarshur vismitās tadā | ardhādhika-muhūrtena Rāmeṇa niśitaiḥ śaraiḥ | 31. Chaturdaśa sahasrāṇi rakshasāṁ kāma-rūpiṇāṁ | Khara-Dūshaṇa-mukhyānāṁ nihatāni mahāmṛidhe | 32. Aho bata mahat karma Rāmasya viditātmanaḥ | aho vīryam aho dārḍhyaṁ Vishṇoḥ iva hi dṛiśyate | 33. Ity evam uktvā te sarve yayur devāḥ yathāgatam | 27. "Burnt up by the fire of the arrow, Khara fell like Antaka, who was formerly consumed by Rudra in the S'veta (white) forest.[46] 28. He fell like Vṛitra smitten by the thunderbolt, like Namuchi by the foam,[47] or like Bala by the lightning of Indra. 29. At this moment the gods, joined with the Chāraṇas, beating kettle-drums, delighted, (30) rained on Rāma a shower of flowers all round, and [said] in astonishment: 'In a muhūrta and a half (two hours) (31) fourteen thousand Rākshasas, changing their shapes at will, headed by Khara and Dūshaṇa, have been slain by Rāma with sharp arrows in a great fight. 32. O what a mighty exploit of Rāma, who knows himself![48] O, his valour and his firmness are seen to be like those of Vishṇu!' 33. Having thus spoken, all those gods went as they came."

If the writer of these verses regarded Rāma as an incarnation of Vishṇu, it would seem to have been superfluous to compare him with that deity. In the corresponding section of Gorresio's edition (the thirty-fifth) the several classes of ṛishis are introduced as [among other things] applauding Rāma for displaying the qualities of a Kshatriya (dhārmajna vardhase dishṭyā kshatra-dharmeṇa Rāghava, v. 99), and as saying to him (vv. 105 ff.) that all the gods, Gandharvas, etc., were saluting him with congratulations on his victory (jayāśīrbhiḥ), and that Brahmā and Mahādeva were paying him honour. Rāma is then said to have "made obeisance to the gods whom he saw not far off standing on their celestial cars" (namaś chakre vimānasthān dṛishṭvā 'dūre 'divaukasaḥ).

[46] On this legend the commentator informs us as follows: Andhakāsuraḥ S'vetāraṇye Rudreṇa hataḥ iti purāṇa-prasiddham | . . . . "S'vetāraṇye yathā 'ntakaḥ" iti prachuraḥ pāṭhaḥ | tatra Kāverī-tīra-vartini S'vetāraṇye Mārkaṇḍeya-chirajīvitvāya Antaka-saṁhāro Rudreṇa kṛitaḥ iti tan-māhātmye prasiddhiḥ | Kaurme tu uttarakhaṇde S'vetasya rājarsheḥ paramaśaivasya Kālanjare parvate tapasy abhiratasya māraṇāya āgatasya Antakasya S'ivena vāma-pāda-prahāreṇa saṁhāraḥ kṛitaḥ iti shaṭtriṁśe 'dhyāye uktam | "The asura Andhaka was slain by Rudra in the S'veta forest, as is well known from the Purāṇas. . . . . The reading, 'as Antaka in the S'veta forest,' is frequently met with. Regarding him it is told in the Glorification of Mārkaṇḍeya, that, to prolong the life of that sage, Antaka (the Ender, Death) was destroyed by Rudra. But in the latter part of the Kūrma-purāṇa, sect. 36, it is related that Antaka, who had come to kill the royal ṛishi S'veta, an eminent votary of S'iva, who was addicting himself to austerities on the Kālanjara mountain, was destroyed by a blow of S'iva's left foot." Compare A.V. xi. 2, 7, quoted above, p. 336, where Rudra is called "the slayer of Ardhaka."

[47] See above, p. 261, and note 259.

[48] Viditātmanaḥ. This epithet is not explained by the commentator.

The following is another passage of the sixth or Yuddha Kāṇḍa occurring in the Bombay edition, but not in Gorresio's, in which Rāma, when about to engage in battle with Rāvaṇa, is recommended by Agastya to utter a hymn to the Sun, which will insure his victory over his enemy. Not a word is said of Rāma's own divinity; and in fact the use of such a prayer does not seem to harmonize with such a character:

vi. 106, 1 ff. (Bombay ed.): Tato yuddha-pariśrāntaṁ samare chintayā sthitam | Rāvaṇaṁ chāgrato dṛishṭvā yuddhāya samupasthitam | 2. Daivataiś cha samāgamya drashṭum abhyāgato raṇam | upagamyābravīd Rāmam Agastyo bhagavāṁs tadā | 3. Rāma Rāma mahābāho śṛiṇu guhyaṁ sanātanam | yena sarvān arīn vatsa samare vijayishyase | 4. Āditya-hṛidayam puṇyaṁ sarva-śatru-vināśanam | jayāvahaṁ japan nityam akshayam paramaṁ śivam | 5. Sarva-mangala-māngalyaṁ sarva-pāpa-praṇāśanam | chintā-śoka-praśamanam āyurvardhanam uttamam | 6. Raśmimantaṁ samudyantaṁ devāsura-namaskṛitam | pūjayasva Vivasvantam bhāskaram bhuvaneśvaram | 7. Sarva-devātmako hy esha tejasvī raśmi-bhāvanaḥ | esha devāsura-gaṇān lokān pāti gabhastibhiḥ | 8. Esha Brahmā cha Vishṇuś cha Śivaḥ Skandaḥ Prajāpatiḥ | Mahendro Dhanadaḥ Kālo Yamaḥ Somo hy Apāmpatiḥ | 9. Pitaro Vasavaḥ Sādhyāḥ Aśvinau Maruto Manuḥ | Vāyur Vahniḥ prajāḥ prāṇaḥ ṛitu-kartā prabhākaraḥ | 10. Ādityaḥ Savitā Sūryaḥ kha-gaḥ Pūshā gabhastimān | suvarṇa-sadṛiśo bhānur hiraṇya-retāḥ[49] divākaraḥ | . . . . 26. Pūjayasvainam ekāgro deva-devaṁ jagat-patim | etat triguṇitaṁ japtvā yuddheshu vijayishyati | 27. Asmin kshaṇe mahābāho Rāvaṇaṁ tvaṁ jahishyasi | evam uktvā tato 'gastyo jagāma sa yathāgatam | 28. Etach chhrutvā mahātejāḥ nashṭa-śoko 'bhavat tadā | dhārayāmāsa suprīto Rāghavaḥ prayatātmavān | 29. Ādityam prekshya japtvedam paraṁ harsham avāptavān | trir āchamya

[49] Aksharādhikyaṁ ārsham | Comm.

śuchir bhūtvā dhanur ādāya vīryavān | 30. Rāvaṇam prekshya hṛishṭātmā jayārthaṁ samupāgamat | sarva-yatnena mahatā vṛitas tasya badhe 'bhavat | 31. Atha ravir avadad nirīkshya Rāmam mudita-manāḥ paramam prahṛishyamāṇaḥ | niśicharapati-sankshayaṁ viditvā sura-gaṇa-madhya-gato vachas tvareti |

"The divine Agastya then beholding [Rāma] fatigued with the conflict, standing anxious[50] in the battle, and in his front Rāvaṇa, who had drawn near to the combat, [Agastya, I say], (2) who had arrived to see the conflict, joining the gods, and coming near to Rāma, said: 3. 'Rāma, Rāma, great-armed, hear the eternal mysterious [prayer], by which, my son,[51] continually muttering it,—(4) the holy Āditya-hṛidaya ('heart of the sun'), which destroys all enemies, brings victory, is undecaying, supreme, beneficent, (5) the auspiciousness of all auspicious things, the destroyer of all sins, the allayer of anxieties and sorrows, the prolonger of life, the most excellent—thou shalt conquer all thine enemies in battle. 6. Worship the rising Vivasvat,[52] the radiant sun, adored by gods and Asuras, the lord of the world. 7. For he possesses the essence of all the gods, is fiery, the producer of rays. He by his beams sustains the gods, the Asuras, and the worlds. 8. He is both Brahmā and Vishṇu, Śiva and Skanda, Prajāpati, Indra, Kuvera, Kāla (Time), Yama, Soma, and the lord of waters (Varuṇa), (9) the Pitṛis, Vasus, Sādhyas, Aśvins, Manu, Vāyu, Agni, created beings, breath, the former of the seasons, the producer of light, (10) Āditya, Savitṛi, Sūrya, moving in the sky, Pūshan, the radiant,

[50] The commentator will not allow this apprehension to be real: Evam bhayanāṭanaṁ tan-mūlakam Agastyād upadeśa-grahaṇaṁ lokanugrahāya lokasya jayasādhana-vastu-prakāśanārtham iti tattvam | "The truth is that this acting (or simulation) of fear, and the acceptance of instruction from Agastya founded thereon, originated in kindness to mankind, and in a desire to reveal to them the means of gaining victory."

[51] See above, p. 389, how much Brahmā was offended by having this appellation, vatsa, "my son," applied to him by Vishṇu. If, then, the poet here intended to represent Rāma as possessing a divine nature, he must have conceived of Vishṇu as less susceptible than Brahmā, when he makes Agastya address him thus.

[52] Compare the hymn to Sūrya in the Mahābh. iii. 166 ff., of which some specimens are given in the fifth volume of this work, p. 161. It is there said, v. 190: Tvāṁ Indram āhus tvaṁ Vishṇus tvaṁ Rudras tvam Prajāpatiḥ | tvam Agnis tvam manaḥ sūkshmaṁ prabhus tvam Brahma śāśvatam | "They call thee Indra; thou art Vishṇu, Rudra, Prajāpati: thou art Agni, the subtile Mind, thou art the lord, the Eternal Brahma."

of golden hue, the shining, who has golden seed, the maker of the day." Then follow (vv. 11–15) many other titles of the Sun, succeeded (vv. 15–21) by invocations addressed to him under various appellations, among which is (v. 19) Brahmeśānāchyuteśāya,[53] "to the lord of Brahmā, Īśāna (Śiva), and Achyuta (Vishṇu)." After some further eulogies of the Sun, Rāma is again exhorted to worship this deity (vv. 26 ff.): "Worship with fixed mind this god of gods, the lord of the world. Having thrice muttered this [hymn], a man shall conquer in battles. 27. In this moment, O great-armed, thou shalt slay Rāvaṇa.' Having thus spoken, Agastya went as he had come. 28. After hearing this, the vigorous Rāma became then freed from grief; and, with well-governed spirit, bore it in his memory. 29. Beholding the Sun, and muttering this hymn, he attained the highest joy. Having thrice rinsed his mouth, and become pure, the hero took his bow. 30. Beholding Rāvaṇa with gladdened spirit, he approached to vanquish him; and with great intentness became bent upon his slaughter. 31. Then the Sun, with rejoicing mind, exceedingly exulting, looking upon Rāma, knowing the [approaching] destruction of the chief of the Rākshasas, and standing in the midst of the gods, uttered the word 'speed.'"

This extract, as I have said above, is entirely wanting in Gorresio's edition, in which a verse (the last of its eighty-ninth section) corresponding with the last in the hundred and fifth section of the Bombay edition, is succeeded immediately by one (Gorr. 90, 1) corresponding to the second half of the fourth verse of the hundred and seventh section of the Bombay edition. The whole of the matter which is wanting in Gorresio may be omitted without detriment to the connexion; and in fact the recurrence at the beginning of the hundred and seventh section (Bombay ed.) of an expression repeating in substance what had been said at the close of the hundred and fifth might lead to the conclusion that the whole of the hundred and sixth section was interpolated. On the other hand, it seems strange that a passage which appears to militate against Rāma's divine character should be a later addition. The only conceivable motive for such an interpolation would be to glorify the Sun by the insertion of this hymn in celebration of his praise, an object which does not bear upon the main design of the Rāmāyaṇa.

[53] Brahmeśānāchyutānāṁ sṛishṭi-saṁhāra-sthiti-kartṛīṇāṁ īśāya svāmine | "sṛishṭi-sthity-anta-karaṇīm Brahma-Vishṇu-Śivātmikāṁ sa sanjñāṁ yāti bhagavān ekaḥ eva Janārdanaḥ" iti smṛiteḥ | "To the lord of Brahmā, Īśāna, and Achyuta, who are the authors of the creation, destruction, and continuance (of the world); according to the Smṛiti text: 'The divine Janārdana alone receives the conjoint title of Brahmā, Vishṇu, and Śiva, representing the causes of the creation, continuance and end (of the universe).'" Such is the manner in which the commentator chooses to explain away his text.

The following is, on the other hand, a passage which may be understood as ascribing a superhuman nature to Rāma. After Vibhīshaṇa had deserted his brother Rāvaṇa, and come over to Rāma's side, a consultation took place among the friends of the latter, whether the deserter was deserving of confidence or not. Some regarded him with suspicion, but Rāma himself was in favour of receiving him with open arms. In the course of the conversation he asks (Yuddha Kāṇḍa 18, 22 f., Bombay ed.): Sa dushṭo vā 'py adushṭo vā kim esha rajanīcharaḥ | sūkshmam apy ahitaṁ kartum mama śaktaḥ kathanchana | pisāchān dānavān yakshān pṛithivyāṁ chaiva rākshasān | anguly-agreṇa tān hanyām ichhan hari-gaṇesvara | "Whether the Rākshasa be good or bad, what, even the smallest, injury can he do to me in any way? If I wish, I can destroy Piśāchas, Dānavas, Yakshas, and Rākshasas on the earth, with the tip of my finger."[54] This mode of expression rather points to an inherent divine power. In Gorresio's edition the expression is somewhat different. Rāma there says (Sundara K. 91, 3) that he could destroy all those beings "forthwith, and by the power of a divine weapon" (śakto 'haṁ sahasā hantuṁ divyenāstra-balena cha), which may be understood of a derived power. However this may be, it turned out upon trial that Rāma was unable to dispose of his enemies so summarily, as we have seen above in the case of his conflict with Indrajit (p. 383 ff.).

[54] On this the commentator remarks: Anena sankalpa-siddhir aiśvaraṁ chihnam uktam | yady evam asmadādi-sangraho vyarthas tatra āha "ichhann" iti | svasya niratiśaya-mahimānaṁ tāttvikam Brahma-bhāvam prakaṭīkartum ichhan yadi syāṁ tadā tathaiva kuryām | samprati tu deva-bhāvopeta-nija-vilāsair aśeshair "abadhyatvam asya mayaiva dattam" iti tat-paripālanāya sva-divya-bhāvaṁ sva-śaktyā eva antardhāya mānusha-maryādāyāṁ sthityā tad-bhāvya-prakaṭanāya eva Sītā-viyoga-prayukta-rodana-vad bhavādṛiśa-sahāya-melanam | vastuto na svātirikta-sahāyāntarāpekshā mama | manushyāṇāṁ saṁsāra-maryāda-jñāpanaṁ tad-vyavahāra-phalam iti bhāvaḥ | "By this [phrase 'with the tip of my finger'] the accomplishment of an intention is declared to be the mark of the Deity. If thus the efforts of persons such as we [men] are, be vain,—in regard to this the author says, 'If I wish.' If I be desirous to manifest my own surpassing greatness, my real character as Brahmā, then I can do this. But now, with the view of maintaining my fiat, [declared in the words] 'I have conferred [on Rāvaṇa] indestructibility,' which I issued agreeably to all the sportive manifestations of my divine nature, suppressing that celestial nature through my own power by remaining within the limits of humanity, with the view of displaying that character, I have associated with myself such allies as you, (Sugrīva), just as I wept for my separation from Sītā. In reality I have no need for any other ally but myself. To show to men the limitations of worldly existence is the fruit of my so acting. Such is the purport." The meaning of this passage is clear, though I may not have succeeded in accurately rendering all the phrases in it.

The termination of Rāma's terrestrial career is thus told in sections 103 ff. of the Uttara Kāṇḍa.[55] Time, in the form of an ascetic, comes to his palace-gate (103, 1 ff.), and asks, as the messenger of the great Rishi (Brahmā), to see Rāma. He is admitted and received with honour (v. 8), but says, when asked what he has to communicate, that his message must be delivered in private, and that any one who witnesses the interview is to be slain by Rāma (v. 11 f.). Rāma promises to abide by this, informs Lakshmaṇa of it, and desires him to stand outside (v. 13 f.). Time then tells Rāma (104) that he has been sent by Brahmā to say that when he (Rāma, i.e. Vishṇu), after destroying the worlds, was sleeping on the ocean, he had formed him (Brahmā) from the lotus springing from his navel, and committed to him the work of creation (vv. 4–7); that he (Brahmā) had then entreated Rāma to assume the function of Preserver, and that the latter had in consequence become Vishṇu, being born as the son of Aditi (v. 9 f.), and had determined to deliver mankind by destroying Rāvaṇa, and to live on earth ten thousand and ten hundred years (v. 11 f.): that period, adds Time, was now on the eve of expiration (v. 13), and Rāma could either, at his pleasure, prolong his stay on earth, or ascend to heaven and rule over the gods (v. 14 f.). Rāma replies (v. 18) that he had been born for the good of the three worlds, and would now return to the place whence he had come, as it was his function to fulfil the purposes of the gods. While they are speaking, the irritable rishi Durvāsas[56] comes to visit Rāma, and when Lakshmaṇa asks him to wait a little, insists on being introduced into the presence of the former immediately, under a threat, if refused, of cursing Rāma, his city, kingdom, [55] All the references to this Kāṇḍa apply to the Bombay edition. I have not seen Gorresio's edition of this book.

[56] Compare p. 196, above.

and all his family (105, 1 ff.). Lakshmaṇa, peferring to save his kinsmen, though knowing that his own death must be the consequence of interrupting the interview of Rāma with Time, enters the palace, and reports the rishi's message to Rāma (v. 9). Rāma dismisses Time, comes out, and receives Durvāsas, and when the sage has got the food he wished, and departed, Rāma reflects with great distress on the words of Time, which require that Lakshmaṇa should die (vv. 10–16). Lakshmaṇa, however (106, 2 ff.), exhorts Rāma not to grieve, but to slay him, and not break his own promise. The counsellors who are consulted concurring in this advice (vv. 5 ff.), Rāma abandons Lakshmaṇa, (v. 13) who goes to the river Sarayū, suppresses all his senses (nigṛihya sarva-srotāṁsi), and after the gods had showered down flowers upon him, is conveyed bodily by Indra to heaven (vv. 15 ff.). The gods are delighted by the arrival of the fourth part of Vishṇu (v. 18). Rāma then resolves to install Bharata as his successor, and retire to the forest and follow Lakshmaṇa (107, 1 ff.). Bharata, however, refuses the succession, and determines to accompany his brother (v. 5 f.). Rāma's subjects are filled with grief, and say they also will follow him wherever he goes (vv. 9 ff.). Kuśa and Lava, Rāma's two sons,[57] are then installed as kings of the Southern and Northern Kośalas (vv. 17 ff.). Messengers are sent to Śatrughna, the other brother, at Madhurā, and he also resolves to accompany Rāma (108, 1–14); who at length sets out in procession from his capital with all the ceremonial appropriate to the "great departure" (mahā-prasthāna, 109, 1 ff.), silent, indifferent to external objects, and to ease, with Śrī on his right, the goddess Earth on his left, Energy in front, attended by all his weapons in human shapes, by the Vedas in the form of Brahmans, by the all-protecting Gāyatrī, the Omkāra, the Vashaṭkāra, by rishis, by earthly divinities (i.e. Brahmans, mahīsurāḥ), by his women, female slaves, old and young, eunuchs (varshavarāḥ), and servants. Bharata with his wives, and Śatrughna, follow, together with Brahmans bearing the sacred fire, and accompanied by their families, with the ministers of state, and the whole of the people of the country, and even with animals, and birds, etc., etc. Rāma, with all these attendants, comes to the banks of the Sarayū (sect. 110). Brahmā, and all the gods, in innumerable celestial cars, now appear, and all the sky is refulgent with the divine splendour of their apparition. Pure, fragrant, and delightful breezes blow, a shower of flowers falls, thrown by the gods. While hundreds of musical instruments sound, and the air is crowded with Gandharvas and Apsarases, Rāma enters the waters of the Sarayū; and Brahmā utters a voice from the sky, saying: "Approach, Vishṇu; Rāghava, thou hast happily arrived, with thy god-like brothers. Enter whatever body thou pleasest, thine own body as Vishṇu, or the eternal ether. For thou art the abode of the worlds (loka-gatiḥ): no one comprehends thee, the inconceivable and imperishable, except the large-eyed Māyā, thy primeval spouse." Hearing these words, Rāma enters the glory of Vishṇu (Vaishṇavaṁ tejas) with his body and his followers; and is worshipped by the gods, rishis, etc. He then asks Brahmā to find an abode for the people who had accompanied him from devotion to his person, and Brahmā appoints them a celestial residence accordingly (lokān santānakān).[58]

[57] See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. iii. p. 318 (Dr. Hall's ed.).

Instead of describing any such resumption of his divine nature, the Mahābhārata, which in the Droṇa-parvan 2224–2248, refers to Rāma as one of the great kings of old, merely speaks in v. 2246 of his going to heaven with four kinds of creatures (chaturvidhāḥ prajāḥ Rāmaḥ svargaṁ nītvā divaṁ gataḥ). He is, however, celebrated in the most hyperbolical language, as where he is said (v. 2235) to "have transcended all beings, rishis, gods, and men" (Ati sarvāṇi bhūtāni Rāmo Dāśarathir babhau | ṛishīṇāṁ devatānāṁ cha mānushāṇāṁ cha sarvaśaḥ), but no reference is made to his being an incarnation of Vishṇu. The word īśvara applied to him in v. 2242 may mean only "lord," and need not be employed in the sense of "god." (This passage is referred to in Professor M. Williams's Indian Epic Poetry, p. 104.) The Rāmopākhyāna (see further on) in the Mahābhārata does not describe the apotheosis of Rāma at all.

The probability that many of the verses in the preceding passages which I have above suspected to be spurious may really be such, is greatly strengthened by the fact that the commentators on the poem themselves note various texts which they regard as interpolated. Thus the commentator an Kishk. K., sect. 43 (Bombay ed.), remarks on 46 ff.: Itaḥ uttaram kechit ślokāḥ "ramante 'tatatam tatra nārībhiḥ bhāsvara-prabhāḥ" (v. 50) ity antāḥ ślokāḥ prakshiptāḥ prāchīna-pustakeshv anupalambhād iti Kataḳaḥ | "Kataka (a previous commentator) says that after this some verses ending with the words (in the fiftieth verse) 'They sport there resplendent, along with their women,' are rejected, because they are not found in the old copies."

[58] These worlds are explained by the commentator as realms an abode in which gradually leads to final liberation by the attainment of Brahmā's heaven (Krameṇa Brahma-loka-prāpti-dvārā mukti-janakān).

At the end of the twenty-third section of the Uttara Kāṇḍa the commentator remarks: Itaḥ param pancha-sargāḥ prakshiptāḥ bodhyāḥ | "After this five sections are to be regarded as rejected." On these sections, to which he assigns separate numbers, he gives no commentary. In the first of these sections, v. 42, Kansa is mentioned by anachronism.

At the end of the thirty-seventh section of the same book the commentator furnishes the following piece of sensible criticism: Etad-uttaram Bāli-Sugrīvotpattītihāso Rāvaṇasya Śvetadvīpa-gamanetihāsaś cha katipayaiḥ sargair Agastyoktitayā kvachit pustakeshu driśyante | te tu pūrva-sargānte eva Agastyasya svāśrama-gamana-kathanād asangatāḥ Kataka-Tīrthādy-anādṛitatvāch cha mayā 'pi na vyākhyātāḥ | "That which follows—viz. the tale of the birth of Bāli and Sugrīva, and the story of Rāvaṇa's journey to Śveta-dvīpa—is found in some copies, as being related by Agastya in several sections. But as these sections are inconsistent with the account [given] at the end of the previous section (36, vv. 51, 58 f.) of Agastya's departure to his hermitage, and have not been received by Kataka, Tīrtha, and other [previous commentators], I also have left them uncommented." These sections are accordingly without any commentary.

Again, at the close of section 59, he remarks: Etad uttaraṁ śvamātur akhyānaṁ gridhrolūkākhyānancha kvachid driśyate | Tīrtha-Katakādy-aspṛishṭatvena prakshiptam iti na vyākhyātam | "The story of the dog's mother and that of the vulture and owl which follow, are found in some copies: but as they are left untouched by Tīrtha, Kataka, and others, they are rejected, and consequently have not been explained."

From these extracts it is clear that various passages which are still preserved in the Rāmāyaṇa were regarded by the commentators as spurious because they were not to be found in the oldest MSS. extant in their day, or because they contained something inconsistent with the context in which they occur. The judgment of these commentators is no doubt correct, especially as they must have been well acquainted with the habit which, we need not hesitate to assume, prevailed in their day, of interpolating legendary works such as the Purāṇas and Itihāsas, the style of which, from its simplicity, offers the greatest facilities for imitation. But if such interpolation be admitted by the commentators as practised in their time, it is natural to suppose that it must have been practised at an earlier period also. And the example of the Mahābhārata confirms this supposition.

After reviewing most of the passages, which I have cited above, in which Rāma's divine character is alluded to, as they are given in his own edition, and, in addition, the section which I have cited in p. 180 ff.,[59] Signor Gorresio remarks as follows (vol. v., Preface, p. xlvii. f.): "What are we to conclude from all this? Notwithstanding the citations adduced, I would not yet venture to pronounce a definitive judgment on this question" (whether the idea of the incarnation of Vishṇu in Rāma was an original part of the conception of the poem, or interpolated). "The passages quoted only prove that the interpolation, if it be such, has been made with great study and much art. But in order thoroughly to elucidate this question, we must have recourse to other documents, and seek for other proofs and indications than the poem itself supplies. Our sentence, therefore, remains suspended."

The Mahābhārata also contains a history of Rāma, (Rāmopākhyāna) which is told to Yudhishṭhira by the sage Mārkaṇḍeya, in the Vana-parvan, vv. 15872–16602. In this episode it is briefly related (v. 15878 f.) that Daśaratha had four sons, born of his three queens.

[59] On this passage he observes (p. xlvii.): "Among the names here assigned to Vishṇu some of a sufficiently suspicious character are found, such as that of Kṛishṇa, which I do not recollect to have discovered in any other part of the poem. Besides, this chapter has no close bond to connect it with the context, and might be removed without the least injury to the poem."

The birth and history of Rāvaṇa and his brothers are described in much greater detail (vv. 15881–15928), and many particulars are given which do not occur in the earlier part of the Rāmāyaṇa, though the Uttara Kāṇḍa contains a similar account. According to the episode in the Mahābhārata, Brahmā had a mental son Pulastya, who again had a son Gaviputra Vaiśravaṇa (v. 15883). The latter deserted his father and went to Brahmā, who as a reward made him immortal and appointed him to be the god of riches, with Laṅkā for his capital, and the car Pushpaka for his vehicle (vv. 15886 ff.). His father, Pulastya, however, being incensed at this desertion of himself, reproduced the half of himself in the form of Viśravas, vv. 15884 (tasya kopāt pitā rājan sasarjātmānam ātmanā | sa jajne Viśravāḥ nāma tasyātmārdhena vai dvijaḥ | and again, v. 15889 : Pulastyasya tu yaḥ krodhād ardhadeho 'bhavad muniḥ | Viśravāḥ nāma ityādi). This Viśravas looked upon Vaiśravaṇa with indignation. The latter strove to pacify his father[60] (v. 15890 ff.), and with this view gave him three elegant Rākshasīs to attend on him: Pushpotkaṭā, who had two sons, Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarṇa; Mālinī, who bore Vibhīshaṇa; and Rākā, who bore Khara and Śūrpaṇakhā. These sons were all valiant, skilled in the Veda, and observers of religious rites; but perceiving the prosperity of Vaiśravaṇa, they were filled with jealousy. They accordingly (except Khara and Śūrpaṇakhā) began to practise austerities to propitiate Brahmā, and at the end of a thousand years Rāvaṇa cut off his own head and threw it as an oblation into the fire (v. 15908). Brahmā then appeared to stop their austerities and offer them boons (except that of immortality).[61] He ordained that Rāvaṇa should have heads and shapes at will, and should be invincible, except by men; that Kumbhakarṇa, who was influenced by the quality of darkness (tamas), should, according to his request, enjoy long sleep[62] (sa vavre

[60] Viśravas is here meant, although according to v. 15883 ff. Pulastya reproduced himself as Viśravas after the birth of Vaiśravaṇa, and in consequence of the latter having deserted his father in his original form as Pulastya. Vaiśravaṇa means the son of Viśravas, and in v. 15925, Vaiśravaṇa (Kuvera) is said to be the brother of Vibhīshaṇa, who must have been the son of Viśravas, as his brother Rāvaṇa is called in v. 15930.

[61] See above, p. 223 and p. 488, below.

[62] This disagrees with the statement in the Rāmāyaṇa (quoted above, p. 462) that he was doomed to long sleep as a curse.

mahatīm̃ nidrām̃ tamasā grasta-chetaṇaḥ, v. 15916). Vibhīshaṇa asks that even in the greatest misfortunes he may never meditate any unrighteousness, and that the Brāhman's weapon may become manifest to him without being learned.[63] Brahmā promises him immortality. Having obtained the power above described, Rāvaṇa expels Vaiśravaṇa (Kuvera) from Lankā (v. 15920). The righteous Vibhīshaṇa follows his brother[64] (v. 15925), Kuvera, who had retired to Gandhamādana (v. 15921). Rāvaṇa having been installed as king, and begun to exercise his power tyrannically, the rishis resort for deliverance to Brahmā (v. 15929 ff.), who promises that as Rāvaṇa could not be killed either by gods or Asuras, the four-armed Vishṇu, the chief of [63] Aśikshitancha bhagavan Brahmāstram pratibhātu me | See the second volume of this work, 2nd ed., p. 416, where the sense of the line is not correctly rendered. See the note on a similar line from the Uttara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa below in p. 489. In v. 15897 Vibhīshaṇa is said to be the handsomest of Pulastya's sons (rūpeṇa sarvebhyo 'bhyadhikaḥ), and a protector of righteousness, and practiser of religious rites (dharma-goptā kriyāratiḥ).

[64] In v. 16157 f. Vibhīshaṇa is said to dwell, shaded by a white umbrella, and with white garlands, on the S'vetaparvata, or, "white mountain," attended by his four counsellors, and apart from his disreputable brothers Kumbhakarṇa, etc., who, naked, with dishevelled hair, and red garlands, frequented the south. In v. 16314 f. he is said to join Rāma, and it is not mentioned whence he comes; but as his treachery is at first suspected by Sugrīva, it might appear to be implied that he came from Lankā, as is expressly related in the Rām., vi. 17, 1, Bombay ed. In Gorr. ed. (Sundara Kāṇḍa, 89, 1–43) forty-two verses are introduced between the two lines which make up the first verse of the 17th section of book sixth in the Bombay ed. That verse states that after addressing some harsh words to Rāvaṇa, Vibhīshaṇa came immediately to Rāma. Gorresio's text adds that after leaving his brother, Vibhīshaṇa first tells his mother all that had happened, and then went through the air to Kailāsa, the residence of Vaiśravaṇa (Kuvera, v. 4). Before his arrival, however, Mahādeva had gone with Umā and his attendants to the abode of Kuvera (vv. 6 ff.), had dismounted from his bull, and entered the assembly; when the two gods embraced each other, sat down, and began to play at dice. At this conjuncture Mahādeva sees Vibhīshaṇa approaching, and tells Kuvera that he has come to seek his protection; but that he ought to go to Rāma, who would install him as monarch of the Rākshasas (vv. 11 ff.). Vibhīshaṇa arrives, kneels and touches the ground with his forehead, when the two gods give him the advice which Mahādeva had proposed (vv. 21 ff.). Vibhīshaṇa remains thoughtful (v. 36). Mahādeva again addresses him (v. 37), and tells him to "rise and resort to the ancient lord, the imperishable, the support of all beings, the eternal, the irresistible, the treasury of righteousness, the refuge of those who seek him, the root of the whole world, Rāma" (v. 39) (Tasmad uttishṭha gachha tvam purāṇam prabhum avyayam | ādhāram sarva-bhūtānām śāśvatam̃ niravagraham | 40. Sa hi dharma-nidhānam̃ cha gatir gatimatām̃ varaḥ | kṛitsnasya jagato mūlam̃ tasmād gachhasva Rāghavam). Vibhīshaṇa hereupon rises, makes obeisance to the two gods, and goes to Rāma through the sky (vv. 41 ff.).

warriors, should, by his (Brahmā's) appointment, descend to earth for his destruction (tad-artham avatīrṇo 'sau man-niyogāch chaturbhujaḥ | Vishṇuḥ praharatāṁ śreshṭhaḥ sa tat karma karishyati). No account is, however, given of the way in which Vishṇu was to become incarnate in one or more of the sons of Daśaratha; or how this was accomplished. Brahmā also desired Indra and the other gods to be born on earth, and beget on the she-bears and she-monkeys sons who should assist Vishṇu, which they accordingly did. He also gave injunctions and instructions to a Gandharvī called Dundubhī, who was born on earth as the hunchbacked Mantharā, and stirred up enmity by urging Kaikeyī to claim the succession to Daśaratha's throne for her own son Bharata (vv. 15934 f., and 15960 ff.).

Whether the portion of the episode which relates the earlier history of Rāvaṇa, and the means adopted by Brahmā for his destruction, formed an original part of the poem, I need not attempt to decide; but an allusion is afterwards made in a later part of it to the monkeys of Rāma's army having been begotten by the gods (v. 16309), where Sāgara, the Ocean, who had appeared to Rāma, is introduced as saying: Asti tatra Nalo nāmo vānaraḥ śilpi-sammataḥ | Tvashṭur devasya tanayo balavān Viśvakarmaṇaḥ | "There is there a monkey called Nala, approved by artizans, the strong son of the god Tvashṭri Viśvakarman."

The main incidents in this episode agree, as far as I have examined them, with those of the Rāmāyaṇa: though there are some minor points in which there is a difference between the two. Thus the larger poem appears (as far as I have looked into it) to say nothing of Mantharā being the incarnation of a Gandharvī, though this is alluded to by the commentator in ii. 7, 1 of the Bombay edition, in these words: Atha Sītāyāḥ Lankā-pura-praveśaṁ vinā Rāvaṇa-badhasyāśakyatayā tat-siddhaye devaiḥ preritāyāḥ kṛita-kubjā-veshayāḥ Mantharāyāḥ Rāmābhisheka-vighna-pravṛittim . . . . . vaktum upakramate | "Now since Rāvaṇa could not be killed unless Sītā entered into Lankā,—with a view to the accomplishment of that, he (the poet) begins to relate how Mantharā, who had been sent by the gods, and had taken the disguise of a hunchback, threw obstacles in the way of Rāvaṇa's inauguration, etc." Again, as we have already seen, long periods of sleep are said, in the larger poem, to have been inflicted by Brahmā on Kumbhakarṇa as a curse, but in the episode to have been granted as a boon.[65] The account which will be given below from the Mahābhārata is a sort of reconciliation of these two statements. Another discrepancy noticed by the commentator has been already cited above, p. 415, note 193.

In the sequel of the story, as given in the Mahābhārata, it is said that, after the destruction of Rāvaṇa, and the appearance of the gods to persuade Rāma to take back his wife Sītā, Brahmā offered Rāma any boons he might choose, and that Rāma accordingly desired that he might continue steadfast in righteousness, and unconquered by his enemies; and solicited the resurrection of the monkeys who had been killed by the Rākshasas (vv. 16570 ff.). The poet, who represents Rāma as consenting to receive these boons from Brahmā, could scarcely have regarded him as the Supreme Spirit, as he is declared in some parts of the Rāmāyaṇa to have been (see above, p. 180 ff.). The last act of his which is described (vv. 16600 f.) is the celebration of ten aśvamedhas. No reference is made to his death.

As I have noticed above, the Uttara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa contains an account of the birth, and a sketch of the earlier history, of Rāvaṇa and his brothers, which varies in some particulars from the narrative in the Mahābhārata. We are there told how after Rāma had returned to Ayodhyā, and taken possession of the throne, the rishis assembled from the east, west, north, and south, to greet him (1, 1 ff.), and Agastya, in answer to his questions, recounted many particulars regarding his old enemies. In the Kṛita Yuga (or Golden Age) the austere and pious Brahman-rishi Pulastya, a son of Brahmā, and who was like his father, being teased with the vicinity, sports, singing, and dancing of different damsels, who interrupted his austerities,[66] proclaimed that any one of them whom he again saw near his hermitage, on the side of Mount Meru, should become pregnant. The others kept [65] The story of Rambhā, which is related in the passage referred to above (461 f.), is in this episode briefly sketched in these words (v. 16151 ff.): Nalakūvara-śāpena rakshitā hy asi nandini | śapto hy esha purā pāpo badhūm Rambhām parāmṛishan | na śaknoty avaśām nārīm upaitum ajitendriyaḥ | "Thou art protected, charming one, (i.e. Sītā) by the curse of Nalakūvara. For this wicked being of unrestrained passions (Rāvaṇa), having formerly been cursed when insulting his (N.'s) wife Rambhā, is unable to approach a helpless woman." See also v. 16563 f.; and p. 461 f., above.

[66] "Not intentionally," says the commentator on v. 8, "but like (dried) grass and fire" (tṛiṇāgni-nyāyena na tu buddhi-pūrvam).

at a distance, but the threat had not been heard by the daughter of the royal-rishi Tṛiṇavindu, who one day came into Pulastya's neighbourhood, and her pregnancy was the result (sect. 2, vv. 14 ff.). After her return home, her father, seeing her condition, took her to Pulastya, who accepted her as his wife, and she bore a son who received the name of Viśravas (v. 32). This son was, like his father, an austere and religious sage. He married the daughter of the muni Bharadvāja, who bore him a son, to whom Brahmā gave the name of Vaiśravaṇa= Kuvera (sect. 3, vv. 1 ff.). The latter performed austerity for thousands of years, when he obtained from Brahmā as a boon, that he should be one of the guardians of the world [along with Indra, Varuṇa, and Yama] and the god of riches (vv. 11 ff.). He afterwards consulted his father Viśravas about an abode, and, at his suggestion, took possession of the city of Lankā, which had formerly been built by Viśvakarman for the Rākshasas, but had been abandoned by them through fear of Vishṇu, and was at that time unoccupied (vv. 23 ff.). Rāma then (sect. 4) says he is surprised to hear that Lankā had formerly belonged to the Rākshasas, as he had always understood that they were the descendants of Pulastya, and now he learns that they had also another origin (v. 4. Pulastya-vaṁśād udbhūtāḥ rākshasāḥ iti naḥ śrutaṁ | idānīm anyataś chāpi sambhavaḥ kīrtitas tvayā). He therefore asks who was their ancestor, and what fault they had committed that they were chased away by Vishṇu. Hearing the polished (saṁskārālankṛitam)[67] words of Rāma, Agastya replies (vv. 9 ff.) that when Brahmā created the waters, he formed certain beings—some of whom received the name of Rākshasas—to guard them.[68] The first Rākshasa kings were Heti and Praheti (v. 14). Heti married Bhayā, the sister of Kāla (Time). She bore him a son Vidyutkeśa (v. 17), who in his turn took for his wife Sālankaṭankaṭā, the daughter of Sandhyā (v. 21). She bore him a son Sukeśā (v. 32), whom she abandoned (v. 24), but he was seen by Śiva, as he was passing by with his wife Pārvatī (v. 27 ff.), who made the child as mature as his mother, and immortal, and gave him a city which moved through the ether. Pārvatī, too, gave as a boon to the Rākshasa women the power of immediate conception and parturition, and to their children instant maturity equal to that of their mothers (v. 30 f.). Sukeśa married a Gandharvī called Devavatī (sect. 5, v. 3), who bore three sons, Mālyavat, Sumāli, and Māli (v. 6). These sons practised intense austerities (v. 9), when Brahmā appeared (v. 12), and conferred on them invincibility and long life (15). They then harassed the gods and Asuras (16). Viśvakarman, at their request, gave them a city, Lankā, on the mountain Trikūṭa, on the shore of the southern ocean, which he had built (vv. 18 ff.). They marry the three daughters of the Gandharvī Narmadā. Mālyavat's wife, Sundarī, bears Vajramushṭi, Virūpāksha, Durmukha, Suptaghna, Yajnakopa, Matta, Unmatta, and one daughter Anala (v. 35 ff.). Sumāli's wife, Ketumatī, bears Prahasta, Kampana, Vikaṭa, Kālikāmukha, Dhūmrāksha, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Sanhrādi, Praghasa, Bhāsakarṇa, and four daughters, Rākā, Pushpotkaṭā, Kaikasī, and Kumbhīnasī (vv. 39 ff.). Māli's wife, Vasudā, bore Anala, Nila, Hara, and Sampāti (v. 43). The three Rākshasas, Mālyavat and his two brothers, with their sons, continue to oppress the gods, rishis, etc. (v. 44), who (sect 6, v. 1 ff.) in consequence resort for aid to Mahādeva, "the creator and destroyer of the world, the unborn, imperceptible, the support of all worlds" (Jagat-srishty-anta-kartāram ajam avyakta-rūpiṇam | ādhāraṁ sarva-bhūtānām), who, having regard to his protegé Sukeśa (the father of Mālyavat, etc., see above), says that he cannot kill the Rākshasas (v. 10); but advises the suppliants to go to Vishṇu, which they do (v. 12), and receive from him a promise that he will destroy their enemies (v. 21). One of the three Rākshasa kings, hearing of this, informs his brothers, and, after consultation (v. 23 ff.), they proceed to heaven to attack the gods (v. 46), unterrified by the portents which were manifested (vv. 53 ff.). Vishṇu prepares to meet them (v. 63). The battle is described in the seventh section. The Rākshasas are defeated by Vishṇu with great slaughter, and driven back to Lankā, one of their leaders, Māli, being slain (vv. 42 ff.). Mālyavat remonstrates with Vishṇu, who was assaulting the rear of the fugitives, on his unwarriorlike conduct (na jānīshe kshātraṁ dharmam purātanaṁ),[69] and wishes to renew the combat (sect. 8, v. 3 ff.).

[67] See the second volume of this work, pp. 157–159.

[68] See Note A., p 439.

[69] The next verse (4) adds: Parāṅmukha-vadham pāpam yaḥ karoti sureśvara | sa hantā na gataḥ svargaṁ labhate puṇya-karmaṇām | "The slayer who wickedly slaughters foes who have turned their backs, after his death does not attain to the heaven of the meritorious."

Vishṇu replies that he must fulfil his promise to the gods by slaying the Rākshasas, and that he would destroy them even if they fled to Pātāla (v. 7 ff.). The battle is renewed, but Mālyavat and Sumāli are driven into Lankā (v. 20), and being unable to withstand Vishṇu, at length retire to Pātāla (v. 22). These Rākshasas, Agastya says, were more powerful than Rāvaṇa, and could only be destroyed by Nārāyaṇa, i.e. by Rāma himself, the eternal indestructible god (v. 24 ff.). Sumāli with his family lived for a long time in Pātāla, while Kuvera dwelt in Lankā (v. 29). In section 9 it is related that Sumāli once happened to visit the earth, when he observed Kuvera going in his chariot to see his father Viśravas. This leads him to consider how he might restore his own fortunes. He consequently desires his daughter Kaikasī to go and woo Viśravas (v. 12), who receives her graciously (vv. 18 ff.). She becomes the mother of the dreadful Rāvaṇa (v. 29) whose birth was succeeded by portents, of the huge Kumbhakarṇa (v. 34), of Śūrpaṇakhā, and of the righteous Vibhīshaṇa, who was the last son (v. 35),[70] and whose nativity was followed by a shower of celestial flowers, by the sound of celestial drums, and exclamations of delight in the air (v. 36). These children grow up in the forest. Kumbhakarṇa goes about eating rishis (v. 38). Vibhīshaṇa lives in the practice of duty, the study of the Veda, and temperance, and controls his senses (v. 39). Kuvera comes to visit his father (v. 40), when Kaikasī takes occasion to urge her son Rāvaṇa to strive to become like his brother (Kuvera) in splendour. This Rāvaṇa promises to do (v. 45). He then goes to the hermitage of Gokarṇa with his brothers to perform austerity (v. 47). In section 10 their austere observances are described. After a thousand years' penance, Rāvaṇa throws one of his heads as an offering into the fire (v. 10). He performs this oblation nine times at equal intervals, and is about to do it the tenth time, when Brahmā appears (v. 12 ff.), and offers a boon. Rāvaṇa asks immortality, but is refused (17). He then asks that he may be indestructible by all creatures more powerful than men, etc.; which boon is accorded by Brahmā (v. 22), together with the recovery of all the heads he had sacrificed, and the power of assuming any shape he pleased. Vibhī-

[70] This account varies from that of the Mahābhārata (above, p. 482), according to which the mothers are different, and Khara (who is not named here) is also a son of Viśravas.

shaṇa (nearly as in the Mahābhārata, see above, p. 483) asks as his boon (v. 30 f.) that "even amid the greatest calamities he may think only of righteousness, and that the Brahman's weapon may become manifest to him without being learned; and that in every stage of life his aims may be righteous" (paramāpad-gatasyāpi dharme mama matir bhavet | aśikshitaṁcha brahmāstram bhagavan pratibhātu me[71] | yā yā me jāyate buddhir yeshu yeshv āśrameshu cha | sā sā bhavatu dharmishṭhā taṁ taṁ dharmaṁ cha pālaye). The god grants his request, and adds the gift of immortality. When Brahmā is about to offer a boon to Kumbhakarṇa, the gods interpose (v. 35 ff.), as, they say, he had eaten seven Apsarases and ten followers of Indra, besides rishis and men; if he has done this without receiving any boon from Brahmā, he would, if he should obtain such a favour, devour the three worlds; and they end by suggesting that under the guise of a boon stupefaction should be inflicted on him (v. 39). Brahmā thinks on Sarasvatī, who arrives (v. 40), and by Brahmā's command (v. 42. Vāṇi tvaṁ Rākshasendrasya bhava vāg-devatepsitā) enters into Kumbhakarṇa, that she may speak for him. Under this influence he asks, when desired to choose a favour, that he may receive the boon of sleeping for many years, which is granted (v. 45).[72] When, however, Sarasvatī has left him, and he recovers his own consciousness, he perceives that he has been deluded (v. 47). Kuvera, on the demand of Rāvaṇa, and by his father's advice, gives up the city of Lankā to Rāvaṇa (sect. 11, v. 39 ff.).

[71] The commentator explains these last words thus: Aśikshitaṁ sad-gurūpadeśaṁ vināpīty arthaḥ | brahmāstram brahma-vidyā | etad varaṇam aśesha-brahma-vidyā-siddhi-pratibandhaka-nivṛittaye | "Unlearnt, that is, [may it appear to me] even without the instruction of a good teacher. The Brahman's weapon is the science of Brahma (or of the veda). This choice of a boon seeks the removal of all obstacles to the attainment of divine knowledge." The commentator also says that by dharme ("righteousness") in the first line is meant Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu), according to the saying, 'Rāma is the incarnate righteousness': as looking to what follows, the passage would otherwise be tautological ("Dharme" Nārāyaṇe matir bhavet | "Rāmo vigrahavān dharmaḥ" ity ukter atra dharma-padena Nārāyaṇaḥ | anyatha "sā sā bhavatu dharmishṭhā" ity anena paunaruktyaṁ syāt |

[72] The commentator remarks here: Evam iti | atra shaṇ-māsād arvāk jāgaraṇaṁ na iti niyamaḥ | tad-adhikā 'pi nidrā tu bhavaty eva iti vara-svarūpam bodhyam | ataḥ eva shaṇ-māsā 'svapiti iti pūrvaṁ Vibhīshaṇoktyā varshāṇy anekāni iti Kumbhakarṇoktyā cha pūrvoktasya na virodhaḥ | "In these words of Brahmā (v. 45) there is no condition that Kumbhakarṇa should wake after six months, but it is understood as the nature of the boon that he might sleep for even a longer time. Wherefore, although it was formerly said by Vibhīshaṇa that 'he sleeps six months,' and Kumbhakarṇa here speaks of sleeping many years, there is no discrepancy between the latter and the former."

The Uttara Kāṇḍa, sect. 36, vv. 44 ff., contains in its description of the monkey Hanumat's history the following testimony to his literary merits: 44. Asau punar vyākaraṇaṁ grihīshyan sūryonmukhaḥ prashṭumanāḥ kapīndraḥ | udyad-girer asta-giriṁ jagāma grantham mahad dhārayan aprameyaḥ | 45. Sa-sūtra-vṛitty-artha-padam mahārthaṁ sasangrahaṁ sidhyati vai kapīndraḥ | na hy asya kaśchit sadṛiśo 'sti śāstre vaiśārade chhanda-gatau tathaiva | sarvāsu vidyāsu tapo-vidhāne praspardhate 'yaṁ hi guruṁ surāṇām | 44. "Again the chief of monkeys (Hanumat), measureless, seeking to acquire grammar, looking up to the sun, bent on inquiry, went from the mountain where the sun rises to that where he sets, apprehending the mighty collection—(45) viz. the aphorisms (sūtra), the commentary (vṛitti), the vārttika (artha-pada), the Mahārtha, and the Sangraha [of Vyāḍi]. The chief of monkeys is perfect, no one equals him in the śāstras, in learning, and in ascertaining the sense of the Scripture, [or in moving at will]. In all sciences, in the rules of austerity, he rivals the preceptor of the gods."

The following is the commentary on the above passage: Udyad-girer udaya-girer mahad granthaṁ dhārayan arthataḥ pāṭhataś cha gṛihṇan | dhārayan aprameyaḥ iti nuḍ-abhāva ārshaḥ | sūrya-sāmmukhyārthaṁ tāvad gamanam | 45. Ko 'sau granthas tatrāha "sa-sūtra" iti | sūtram ashṭādhyāyī-lakshaṇam | vṛittis tātkālika-sūtra-vṛittiḥ | artha-padaṁ sūtrārtha-bodhaka-padavad vārttikam mahārtham mahābhāshyam Patanjali-kṛitam | "sa-sangraham" Vyāḍi-kṛita-sangrahākhya-grantha-sahitam | "sidhyati vai" siddho bhavati śāstrāntareshv apīty arthaḥ | tad evāha | na hy asya śadṛisaḥ śāstre kaśchit "chhanda-gatau" pūrvottara-mīmāṁsā-mukhena vedārtha-nirṇaye "vaiśārade" vaidushye | viśishya navama-vyākaraṇa-kartā Hanūmān iti cha prasiddhir iti Katakaḥ | "From the mountain where the sun rises, 'helping,' apprehending in sense and in text 'the great collection.' The absence of the reduplicated n in dhārayan aprameyaḥ is vedic (ārska). He went to face the sun. 45. In the words 'with the sūtras,' etc., he describes what the book was. The sūtras mean the eight books of Pāṇini (ashṭādhyāyī). The vṛitti is the contemporaneous gloss on the sūtras (sūtra-vṛitti). The artha-pada is the vārttika, containing sentences explaining the sense of the sūtras; the Mahārtha is the Mahābhāshya composed by Patanjali. 'With the sangraha' means with the book called Sangraha, composed by Vyāḍi. 'He is perfect' means he excels in other śāstras also, as the author goes on to say: 'for no one is like him in the śāstras, in ascertaining the sense,' in determining the meaning of the Veda by the mouth of the Pūrva and Uttara Mīmānsā. 'In skill,' i.e. in learning. When specifying, it is well known that Hanumat was the ninth author of Grammar; such is Kataka's explanation."

The other eight grammarians are mentioned by Colebrooke—Essays, ii., pp. 39, 48 (ed. 1837).

NOTE E.—Page 261, note [259], line 3 from bottom.

With this compare the Tāṇḍya Mahābrāhmaṇa xiv. 11, 28, where it is said: Indro Yatīn sālāvṛikebhyaḥ prāyachhat | tam aślīlā vāg abhyavadat | so 'śuddho 'manyata | sa etat śuddhāśuddhīyam apaśyat | tena aśudhyat | "Indra gave up the Yatis to the jackals. An evil voice addressed him" [charging him with the murder of Brāhmans, according to the Commentator]. "He recognized himself as unclean. He beheld this 'Suddhāśuddhīya,' [a particular sāman text] and became purified." The story is repeated further on in the same Brāhmaṇa xviii. 1, 9, where it is said that instead of beholding the "Suddhāśuddhīya," Indra went to Prajāpati, who gave him the "Upahavya" (Prajāpatim upādhāvat | tasmai etam upahavyam prāyachhat). This story of Indra and the Yatis is alluded to in Ait. Br. vii. 28, which is quoted in the first volume of this work, pp. 437 f. It is also referred to in the Tāṇḍya Br. viii. 1, 4, and xiii. 8, 17. The latter passage is as follows: Indro Yatīn sālāvṛikebhyaḥ prāyachhat | teshāṁ trayaḥ udaśishyanta Pṛithuraśmir Bṛihadgiriḥ Rāyovājaḥ | te 'bruvan "ko naḥ imān putrān bharishyati" iti | "aham" iti Indro 'bravīt | tān ajihnidhāya parichārya charaḥ vardhayaṁs tān vardhayitvā 'bravīt "kumārakāḥ varān vṛiṇīdhvam" iti | "kshatram mahyam" ity abravīt Pṛithuraśmiḥ | tasmai etena pārtharaśmena kshatram prāyachhat | kshatrakāmaḥ etena stuvīta | kshatrasya iva asya prakāśo bhavati | "Brahmavarchasam mahyam" ity abravīd Bṛihadgiriḥ | tasmai etena bārhadgireṇa brahmavarchasam prāyachhat | brahmavarchasa-kāmaḥ etena stuvīta | brahmavarchasī bhavati | "paśūn mahyam" ity abravīd

Rāyovājaḥ | tasmai etena rāyovājīyena paśūn prāyachhat | paśukāmaḥ etena stuvīta | paśumān bhavati | 18. Pārtharaśmaṁ rājanyāya brahmasāma kuryāt bārhadgiram brāhmaṇāya rāyovājīyaṁ vaiśyāya | svena eva enāṁs tad-rūpeṇa samardhayati stomaḥ | "Indra gave up the Yatis to the jackals. Three of them were left, Pṛithuraśmi, Bṛihadgiri, and Rāyovāja. They said, 'Who will cherish these persons, us, as sons?' 'I,' said Indra. Having placed them [on his car, according to the comm.], he went on tending and rearing them. When he had reared them, he said, 'Youths, choose boons.' Pṛithuraśmi said, 'May regal power be mine!' He accordingly gave him regal power by means of this 'pārtharaśma' sāman. Let the man who desires regal power offer praise with this sāman; and he obtains distinction like that of regal power. Bṛihadgiri said, 'May Brahmanic lustre be mine!' He gave him Brahmanic lustre by means of this 'bārhadgira' sāman. Let him who desires this characteristic offer praise with this sāman; and he obtains it. Rāyovāja said, 'Let me have cattle!' He gave him cattle by means of this 'rāyovājīya' sāman. Let him who desires cattle offer praise with this sāman; and he obtains them. 18. Let a 'pārtharaśma' be the 'brahma-sāman' performed for a Rājanya, a 'bārhadgira' that for a Brahman, and a 'rāyovājīya' for a Vaiśya. The 'stoma' thus brings prosperity to each of them after his own fashion." The Yatis are declared by the commentator on Tāṇḍya Br. viii. 1, 4, to be persons "who practised observances contrary to the Veda" (veda-viruddha-niyamopetān); on xiii. 4, 17, to be "the persons so called who were hostile to sacrifices" (etat-sanjnakān yajna-virodhi-janān); on xiv. 11, 28, to be "persons hostile to rites" (karma-virodhi-janān); and on xviii. 1, 9, to be "Brahmans who did not celebrate the jyotishṭoma and other sacrifices, but lived in another way" (jyotishṭomādy akṛitvā prakārāntareṇa vartamānām brāhmaṇān). The Yatis are also mentioned in the Taitt. Sanhitā ii. 4, 9, 2, in these words: Yatīnām adyamānānāṁ śīrshāṇi parāpatan | te kharjūrāḥ abhavan | "The heads of the Yatis who were being eaten fell off. They (the Yatis) became date-trees." In the same Sanhitā, vi. 2, 7, 5, they are again referred to thus: Indro Yatīn sālāvṛikebhyaḥ prāyachhat | tān dakshiṇataḥ uttara-vedyāḥ ādan | "Indra gave up the Yatis to the jackals: they devoured them on the south side of the northern altar." On the former of these texts the commentator remarks as follows: Pāramahaṁsya-rūpaṁ cha- turthāśramam prāptānāṁ yeshāṁ Yatīnām mukhe Brahmātmaka-prati-pādako vedānta-śabdo nāsti tān Yatīn Indraḥ āraṇyebhyaḥ śvabhyaḥ prāyachhat | tathā Kaushītaki-brāhmaṇopanishadi Indrasya pratijñā samāmnāyate "Aruṇmukhān Yatīn sālāvṛikebhyaḥ prāyachham" iti | patitatvāt teshāṁ tathātvaṁ yuktaṁ | tathā cha smaryate "nitya-karma parityajya vedānta-śravaṇaṁ vina | vartamānas tu sannyāsī pataty eva na saṁśayaḥ" iti | teshāṁ cha sālāvṛikair bhakshaṇaṁ shashṭha-kāṇḍe samāmnāyate . . . . iti | vedānta-śravaṇa-vāñchhāṁ vinā nitya-karma-parityaktavatāṁ bhavatām api īdṛiśī gatir iti darśayituṁ vedi-samīpe bhakshaṇam eva | "Indra gave up to the wild dogs those Yatis in whose mouth (although they had attained the fourth stage of life [āśrama], that of Paramahaṁsas) the word of the Vedānta [or Upanishads] which sets forth that the soul is Brahma, was not found. Accordingly Indra's declaration that he 'gave up the Arunmukha Yatis to the jackals is recorded in the Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa Upanishad" (iii. 1; see p. 161 of Prof. Cowell's translation in the Bibliotheca Indica). "In consequence of their fallen condition, it was fit that this should have been done: according to the text of the Smṛiti, 'A Sannyāsin who lives in the neglect of the fixed observances, and without hearing the Vedānta [or Upanishads], sinks without doubt into a fallen condition.' And the fact of the Yatis being eaten by jackals is recorded in the sixth book (of this Sanhitā, as quoted above). The circumstance of their being devoured near the altar is intended to show that the same fate awaits you gentlemen also, who live without desiring to hear the Upanishads, and in the neglect of the fixed ceremonies." From Prof. Cowell's note in the Kaushītaki Br. Up. transl., p. 161, it appears that Sāyaṇa, the commentator on the Ait. Br. vii. 28, regarded the Yatis there mentioned as being Asuras in the disguise of devotees, and the Arurmaghas referred to there as being Asuras in the form of Brahmans. Prof. Cowell adds in a second note that the commentator (in the Kaush. Br. Up.) "explains the Arunmukhas" (there mentioned), "as those in whose mouths the reading of the Vedas is not;" and observes that "they and the Arurmaghas of the Ait. Br. are equally obscure." See the remainder of the note, and Prof. Haug's note on the latter passage in his translation of the Ait. Br., p. 483 f. He thinks the Arurmaghas "were no doubt a kind of degraded Aryas, very likely a tribe of the ancient Iranians," etc.

NOTE F.—Page 310, note [19].

In regard to this note I have been favoured with a communication from Prof. Roth, who is of opinion that there are two substantives śravos, as there are two roots śru. There is not only, he considers, a root śru, "to hear," but a second śru=sru; and there are, he adds, a number of passages where the sense "renown," traditionally ascribed to śravas, however wide this idea is, and in however forced a manner it may be applied, does not suffice. The forthcoming fasciculus of his Lexicon will, Prof. Roth informs me, supply details on this subject.

Wilson, Westergaard, and Williams, in their Dictionaries, give a second śru as equivalent to sru, "to move," "to flow," etc. Prof. Aufrecht is of opinion that in addition to śru, "to hear," there is another root śru, with the meaning "to quake," "to shake," "to tremble." This root, he states, occurs only twice in the whole Vedic literature which we have before us. The passages in which it is found are R.V. i. 127, 3: Vīḷu chid yasya samṛitau śruvad vaneva yat sthiram | "Even the strong quakes at his attack, and even the firm shakes like trees;" and R.V. i. 39, 6: Ā vo yāmāya pṛithivī chid aśrot | "Even the earth trembled before your rush." From this root is derived çrona, "lame." Prof. Aufrecht does not think that in any Vedical passage the root çru has the meaning of sravati, "to flow." In his note on the former of these two passages, Sāyaṇa explains śruvat by gachhet, śiryeta, i.e. "will move," "will crumble."

NOTE G.—Page 412, line 19.

In her lamentation for Rāvaṇa (Rām., Bombay ed. vi. 113) his queen Mandodarī, among other attributes which she ascribes to him, speaks of him (v. 49) as jetāraṁ lokapālānāṁ kshaptāraṁ S'ankarasya cha, "conqueror of the guardians of the world, and caster down (or, contemner) of Śankara." Śankara could not therefore have been looked on by the writer of this as the Supreme Deity. From the story of Nandīśvara, quoted in the Appendix, above, p. 460 f., it will have been seen, however, that Rāvaṇa was really no match for Śankara.

NOTE H.—Page 418, note [196].

The following is a summary of the story of Indra and Indrajit, as given in the twenty-seventh and following sections of the Yuddha Kāṇḍa. Rāvaṇa in the course of his expeditions goes to Indra-loka. Indra tells the gods to get ready for battle; but, being afraid, resorts to Vishṇu (sect. 27, 6), whom he glorifies as the Creator and the Being into whom all things are absorbed at the end of the world, and asks his advice (v. 13). Vishṇu reassures him; but says that he could not interfere without killing Rāvaṇa,—which he is unable to do on account of the boon conceded to the Rākshasa chief by Brahmā (v. 18); but he would slay him at the proper time (v. 20). Meanwhile he tells Indra to fight with Rāvaṇa (v. 21). A battle takes place between the gods and Rākshasas (v. 26 ff.). The eighth Vasu Sāvitra comes on the field (vv. 34 and 43), fights with Sumāli, one of the Rākshasas, and grandfather of Rāvaṇa, who had routed the gods, kills him, reducing to ashes his bones and all the rest of him (v. 50), and puts the Rākshasas to flight. They are, however, rallied by Indrajit (sect. 28, 1 ff.), and the gods repulsed. Indra's son, Jayanta, enters the fray (vv. 6 ff.). The gods are furiously assailed by Indrajit. Both sides, in the confusion, smite their own warriors (vv. 17 f.). Jayanta is carried off by his grandfather, his mother Sachī's father, Puloman, the Daitya, who enters with him into the sea (vv. 19 f.). The gods, thinking that Jayanta had been killed, take to flight (v. 21), and are pursued by Indrajit. Indra himself now comes upon the scene (v. 23), and is opposed by Rāvaṇa (vv. 29 ff.), whom he eventually captures (sect. 29, v. 18 f.). Meghanāda (son of Rāvaṇa), afterwards called Indrajit, becoming invisible by his magical power, which he had obtained from Mahādeva, binds Indra and carries him off (v. 27). The gods, headed by Brahmā, follow them to Laṅkā (sect. 30). Brahmā praises Meghanāda's valour, and declares that he shall be called Indrajit ("the conqueror of Indra," v. 5). Brahmā then asks that Indra shall be released (v. 7). Indrajit, as a condition, requires the boon of immortality (v. 8). This Brahmā refuses (v. 9).[73] Indrajit then says, v. 11: Śrūyatāṁ vā bhavet siddhiḥ Śatakratu-vimokshaṇe | 12. Mameshṭaṁ nityaśo havyair mantraiḥ sampūjya Pāvakam | saṅgrāmam avatartuṁ cha śatrunirjaya-kāṅkshiṇaḥ | 13. Aśva-yukto ratho mahyam uttishṭhet tu Vibhāvasoḥ | tat-sthasyāmaratā syād me esha me niśchito varaḥ | 14. Tasmin yady asamāpte cha japyahome Vibhāvasau | yudhyeyaṁ deva-saṅgrāme

[73] See similar cases above, pp. 223 and 482.

tadā me syād vināśanam | 15. Sarvo hi tapasā deva vṛiṇoty amaratām pumān | vikrameṇa mayā tv etad amaratvam pravartitam | 16. Evam astv iti taṁ chāha vākyaṁ devaḥ Prajāpatiḥ | mukto 'si chendrajitā S'akro gatāś cha tridivaṁ surāḥ | 11. "Listen: or let me attain perfection by releasing Śatakratu (Indra). 12. My wish is,—desirous as I am of conquering my enemies,—to enter into battle after constantly worshipping Agni with texts and oblations: (13) and the boon I have fixed to ask for is that (whenever I shall do so) a chariot with horses may rise up for me out of the Fire, and that while I stand in it I may remain immortal: (14) and if I fight in it against the gods before I have finished my prayers and oblations to Agni, let me perish. 15. For, O god, every man desires by austerities to attain immortality. And by my valour I have sought for this immortality. 16. 'So be it,' said Brahmā. Then Indra was released by Indrajit, and the gods went to heaven." Brahmā then tells Indra (vv. 17–48), who was standing humiliated and thoughtful, that he had incurred this misfortune because he had corrupted Ahalyā (v. 46), the first woman, whom Brahmā had made and had given to the sage Gautama (v. 27), as a reward for his austere virtue. For this he had been cursed by the sage (vv. 31 ff.). Ahalyā, too, was reprehended by the sage, expelled from his hermitage, and condemned to lose her prerogative of being the only beautiful woman in the world (vv. 36 ff.). She excuses herself by saying that Indra had assumed the form of her husband, and thus deceived her, and that she had not yielded to illicit passion (vv. 40 f.). She is then assured that she would be restored to purity by the vision of Vishṇu incarnate in Rāma, and received again by her husband (vv. 41 ff.); and Indra himself was enjoined to offer a Vaishṇava sacrifice by which he would be purified (v. 47 f.).[74] (Compare the forty-eighth and forty-ninth sections of the first book of the Rāmāyaṇa, Bombay ed., the note in p. 49, above; and a similar purification of Indra for another sin, above, p. 262, note, and the beginning of Note E., p. 491.) I quote the verses in which Brahmā here describes the creation of the first woman Ahalyā:

[74] The commentator remarks on verse 49, where the performance of this sacrifice is mentioned: Devānāṁ na yajneshv adhikāraḥ iti Jaiminy-uktaṁ tu pramādād iti nirūpitam prāk | "The saying of Jaimini that the gods have not the prerogative of sacrificing has been before determined to be founded on an inadvertence." The end of the remarks on Rāmāyaṇa i. 29, 7, quoted above, p. 131, note 151, may be here referred to by the commentator. Besides the text cited in p. 262, note, mention is elsewhere found of sacrifice being offered by Indra. See the story of Nahusha adduced in the first volume of this work, pp. 307 ff., where such a sacrifice is referred to (p. 310). The lines of the Udyoga-parvan (414 f.) in which this is mentioned are as follows: Mām eva yajatāṁ S'akraḥ pāvayishyāmi vajriṇam | punyena hayamedhena mām ishṭvā Pākaśāsanaḥ | punar eshyati devānām indratvam akutobhayaḥ | Vishṇu

Sect. 30, 19 ff.—Amarendra mayā buddhyā prajāḥ sṛishṭās tathā prabho | eka-varṇāḥ samābhāshāḥ eka-rūpāś cha sarvaśaḥ | 20. Tāsāṁ nāsti viśesho hi darśane lakshaṇe 'pi vā | tato 'haṁ ekāgra-manās tāḥ prajāḥ samachintayam | 21. So 'haṁ tāsāṁ viśeshārthaṁ striyam ekāṁ vinirmame | yad yat prajānām pratyangaṁ viśishṭaṁ tat tad uddhṛitam | 22. Tato mayā rūpa-guṇair Ahalyā strī vinirmitā | Halaṁ nāmeha vairūpyaṁ halyaṁ tat-prabhavam bhavet | 23. Yasyāḥ na vidyate halyaṁ tenāhalyeti viśruta | Ahalyety eva cha mayā tasyāḥ nāma prakīrtitam | 19. "O chief of immortals (Indra), all creatures were by my understanding formed by me of one caste, of the same speech, and of one form in every respect. 20. There was no distinction of them in appearance or characteristic (sexual) mark. I then, with intent mind, reflected on these creatures. 21. In order to distinguish them, I formed one woman. Whatever there was most distinguished (excellent) in the several members of [different] creatures was taken [to compose her]. 22. A woman faultless (ahalyā) in form was then fashioned by me. Hala means ugliness, and halya that which springs from ugliness. 23. She who has nothing sprung from ugliness (halya) is known as 'Ahalyā.' And I have made her known by this name."

NOTE I.—Page 427, line 7 from the foot.

Professors Aufrecht and Müller have been good enough to furnish me with the text of this Durgā-stava, or Rātri-sūkta, which, in the Sanhitā MSS. of the R.V., follows a hymn addressed to Night (the 127th of the Tenth Maṇḍala=Aṣhṭaka viii. 7, 14). I will first give the text, with a translation, of the genuine hymn to Night (R.V. x. 127), and then quote the Pariśishṭa:

R.V. x. 127.—1. Ratrī vi akhyad āyatī purutrā devī akshabhiḥ | viśvāḥ adhi śriyo 'dhita | 2. Ā uru aprāḥ amartyā nivato devī udvataḥ | speaks: "Let S'akra (Indra) worship me: I will purify the thunderer. Having sacrificed to me with a pure horse sacrifice, he shall again obtain the headship of the gods, and be delivered from fear."

jyotishā bādhate tamaḥ | 3. Nir ū svasāram askṛita ushasam devī āyatī | apa id u hāsate tamaḥ | 4. Sā no adya yasyāḥ vayaṁ ni te yāmann avikshmahi | vṛikshe na vasatiṁ vayaḥ | 5. Ni grāmāso avikshata ni padvanto ni pakshiṇaḥ | ni śyenāsaś chid arthinaḥ | 6. Yavaya vṛikyaṁ vṛikaṁ yavaya stenam ūrmye | atha naḥ sutarā bhava | 7. Upa mā pepiśat tamaḥ kṛishṇaṁ vyaktam asthita | ushaḥ ṛiṇā iva yātaya | 8. Upa te gāḥ iva ā akaraṁ vṛiṇīshva duhitar divaḥ | rātri stomaṁ na jigyushe | "The divine Night arriving, hath shone in many places with her eyes; she has assumed all her splendours. 2. The immortal goddess has widely filled the lower and the upper regions: by light she destroys the darkness. 3. Arriving, the goddess has driven away her sister the Twilight: the darkness departs. 4. Be to-day [favourable] to us who have gone to rest at thy coming, as birds to their nests in a tree. 5. Men, cattle, and even suppliant hawks, have gone to rest. 6. Drive away, O Night, the she-wolf and the wolf: drive away the thief; and carry us safely across [thyself]. 7. Darkness adorned [with stars], black, and yet illuminated, has approached me: do thou, Ushas, drive it away like one who is bound [to do so]. 8. I have brought for thee a hymn, as it were an offering of cows, like [an encomium] for a conqueror. Receive it, O Night, daughter of the Day."

1. (=Nir. iv. 29; A.V. 19, 47, 1; and Vāj. S. 34, 32)—Ā rātri pārthivaṁ rajaḥ pitur aprāyi dhāmabhiḥ | divaḥ sadāṁsi bṛihatī vi tishṭhase āttveshaṁ vartate tamaḥ | 2. (A.V. 19, 47, 3) Ye te rātri nṛichakshaso yuktāso[75] navatir nava | aśītiḥ santv ashṭā uto te sapta saptatiḥ | 3. Rātrim prapadye jananīṁ sarva-bhūta-niveśanīm[76] | bhadrām bhagavatīṁ kṛishṇāṁ viśvasya jagato niśām | 4. Saṁveśanīṁ saṁyamanīṁ graha-nakshatra-mālinīm | prapanno 'haṁ śivāṁ rātrīm bhadre pāram aśīmahi bhadre pāram aśīmahi oṁ namaḥ | 5. Stoshyāmi prayato devīṁ śaraṇyām bahvṛicha-priyām | sahasra-saṁmitāṁ Durgāṁ Jātavedase sunavāma somam[77] | 6. Śānty-arthaṁ dvijātīnām ṛishibhiḥ samapāśritāḥ (samupāśritā?) | ṛig-vede tvaṁ samutpannā 'rātīyato nidahāti vedaḥ | 7. Ye tvāṁ devi prapadyante brāhmaṇāḥ havya-vāhanīm |

[75] For yuktāsaḥ, the A.V. reads drashṭāraḥ, "seers."

[76] This, Professor Aufrecht remarks, is imitated from R.V. i. 35, 1: Rātrīṁ jagato niveśanīm.

[77] The final pādas of this and the three following verses are, as Prof. Aufrecht observes, borrowed from R.V. i. 99.

avidyāḥ bahuvidyāḥ vā sa naḥ parshad ati durgāṇi viśvā | 8. Agni-varṇāṁ śubhāṁ saumyāṁ kīrtayishyanti ye dṛijāḥ | tān tārayati durgāṇi nāveva sindhuṁ duritā 'ty Agniḥ | 9. Dṛ́rgeshu vishame ghore sangrāme ripu-sankaṭe | agni-chora-nipāteshu ,dushṭa-graha-nivāraṇe | 10. Durgeshu vishameshu tvāṁ saṅgrāmeshu vareshu cha | mohayitvā prapadyante teshām me abhayaṁ kuru teshāṁ me ábhayaṁ kuru oṁ namaḥ | 11. *Keśi-nīṁ sarva-bhūtānām pañchamīti cha nāma ch*a | sā mām samāḥ niśāḥ devī sarvataḥ parirakshatv sarvataḥ parirakshatu oṁ namaḥ | [v. 12 is the same as the verse quoted by Weber in the text, beginning tām agni-varṇām, etc.] | 13. Durgā durgeshu sthāneshu śaṁ no devīr abhiṣh-ṭaye | yaḥ imaṁ Durga-stavam puṇyam rātrau rātrau sadā paṭhet | rātriḥ kuśikaḥ saubharo rātrī-stavo gāyatrī | rātri-sūktaṁ japed nityaṁ tat-kālam upapadyate |

I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht for assistance in correcting the corrupt text and in explaining parts of this composition.

1. "O Night, the terrestrial atmosphere was filled with thy father's might. Thou, the mighty one, pervadest the celestial mansions, and awful darkness returns. 2. Night, may the man-beholders which are united with thee[78] be 99, 88, or 77. 3. I attain to Night, the mother, who brings rest to all creatures, kind, divine, dark, the night of the whole world. 4. I have attained the auspicious Night, who causes men to rest, who composes [them], who is invested with a garland of planets and stars. May we reach the other side in safety! may we reach the other side in safety! 5. Intent, I will praise the divine Durgā, who affords a refuge, who is beloved by the Bahvṛichas (priests of the Rig-veda ceremonial), who is equal to a thousand. Let us pour forth soma to Jātavedas (Fire). 6. For the tranquillization of the twice-born, thou art resorted to by rishis, and hast thy origin in the Rig-veda. May [Agni] burn up the wealth of him who seeks to hurt us! 7. The Brahmans, learned or ignorant, who resort, O goddess, to thee, the carrier of oblations,—may he transport us over all difficulties. 8. Agni transports over all evils [though] hard to be traversed,—as in a boat across the ocean,—those twice-born men who shall celebrate the fire-coloured, auspicious, beautiful goddess. 9. In difficulties, in dire perplexity, in battle, in trouble from enemies, in visitations of fire, and thieves, for the prevention of inauspicious planets, (10) in difficulties, perplexities, battles, and forests, men, bewildered, resort to thee. Give us security from these things, give us security from these things! 11. [I praise] her the long-haired, and whose name among all creatures is Panchamī. May this goddess every night preserve me in every way. (12. The same as the verse already quoted in the text, p. 427, line 26.) 13. May the divine Durgā be propitious for our good in difficulties. He who always every night reads this holy Durgā-stava,—(the night, Kuśika, Saubhara, the rātri-stava, gāyatri),—he who continually mutters the rātri-sūkta, arrives at that time."

[78] Or, according to the reading of the A. V., "May thy man-beholders, lookers be," etc.

It will be seen that the sense of some parts of this production is not very clear, but to ascertain it is of little consequence.

NOTE J.—Page 429, lines 13 f.

These same tongues of fire are also mentioned in a hymn to Agnī, in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, sect. 99, vv. 52 ff.: Yā jihvā bhavataḥ Kālī kāla-nishṭhā-karī prabho | bhayān naḥ pāhi pāpebhyaḥ aihikāchcha mahā-bhayāt | 53. Karālī nāma yā jihvā mahā-pralaya-kāraṇam | tayā na pāhi ityādi | 54. Manojavā cha yā jihvā laghimā guṇa-lakshaṇā | tayā ityādi | 55. Karoti kāmam bhūtebhyo yā te jihvā Sulohitā | tayā ityādi | 56. Sudhūmra-varṇā yā jihvā prāṇināṁ roga-dāyikā | tayā ityādi | 57. Sphulinginī cha yā jihvā yataḥ [yā te?] sakala-pudgalā | tayā ityādi | 58. Yā te Viśvā sadā jihvā prāṇināṁ śarma-dāyinī | tayā ityādi | 52. "By thy tongue Kālī, the final destroyer [of the world], preserve us from sins and from great present alarm. 53. By thy tongue Karālī, the cause of the great mundane dissolution, preserve us, etc. 54. By thy tongue Manojavā, which is distinguished by the quality of lightness, preserve us, etc. 55. By thy tongue Sulohitā, which accomplishes the desires of creatures, preserve us, etc. 56. By thy tongue Sudhūmravarṇa, which inflicts diseases on living beings, preserve us, etc. 57. By thy tongue Sphulinginī, the loveliest of all, preserve us, etc. 58. By thy tongue Viśvā, which always bestows blessings on living beings, preserve us, etc."

In the course of this hymn to Agni he is said (v. 41) to have been formed eightfold: Tvām ashṭadhā kalpayitvā yajnam ādyam akalpayan |

"Having formed thee in eight ways, they performed the earliest sacrifice." This seems to refer to the legend from the Brāhmaṇas given in pp. 339–347. Again, we are reminded of some characteristics which are ascribed to Rudra in the Śatarudriya vv. 2 and 11 (above, pp. 322 f.) by the expressions which are applied to Agni in the seventieth verse of this hymn: Yat te Vahne śivaṃ rūpaṃ ye cha te sapta hetayaḥ | taiḥ pāhi naḥ stuto deva pitā putram ivātmajam | "When thou art lauded, Agni, preserve us by thine auspicious form, and by thy seven shafts, as a father preserves his own son."

In v. 63 Agni is said to have "stretched out the whole universe, and, though one, to exist in manifold shapes" (tvayā tataṃ viśvam idaṃ charācharam Hutāśanaiko bahudhā tvam atra).

ADDITIONAL NOTES AND CORRECTIONS.

i. Page 6, note 13.

See further R.V. ii. 33, 1; and Dr. Bollensen's remarks on the word sandṛiś in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xxii., p. 588.

ii. Page 9, line 11.

See Tāṇḍya Mahābrāhmaṇa, viii. 2, 1 f.

iii. Page 19, line 3 from the top and line 11 from the foot.

I learn by a communication, dated some months ago, from Professor Aufrecht, that anvāśaye is not a substantive, as I had understood it, but the third person singular present, from the root śī+anu+ā. He would translate the whole verse thus: "With which body has Skambha entered the past, and which body of his rests over the future? When he divided his one body into a thousand bodies, with which of them did he enter there?" And he thinks that the second half of verse 8 has exactly the same sense. Śaye is, he adds, a very common Vedic form for śete. See also the fasciculus of Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon (recently received), s.v. śī, where also śaye is stated to be the 3rd pers. sing.; and the scholiast on Pāṇini vii. 1, 41, is referred to in proof. In the same work the root śī+aṇu+ā is explained as, in this passage, signifying "to stretch over."

iv. Page 28, line 8.

I find from Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. śatalēhu, that the words here referred to occur in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka x. 1, 8. I quote in full the verse in which they occur, as well as that which precedes it: Aśvakrānte rathakrānte Vishṇukrānte vasundharā | śirasā dharāyishyāmi rakshasva mām pade pade | bhūmir dhenur dharaṇī lokadhāraṇī | uddhṛitā 'si varāhena kṛishṇena śatabāhunā |

v. Page 28, line 14.

See Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa, xx. 14, 2 ff.; the commencement of which corresponds with the text from the Paṅchaviṁśa Brāhmaṇa, quoted in the fifth volume of this work, p. 392.

vi. Page 29, line 9.

See Tāṇḍya Br. iv. 1, 4.

vii. Page 39, line 17.

For "vi. 2, 42," read "vi. 2, 4, 2."

viii. Page 39, line 23.

Ahaṁ durgād āhartā. Compare R.V. i. 61, 7, and viii. 66, 10, in pp. 67 and 91, and the quotation from Sāyaṇa's commentary given in p. 92 f., above.

ix. Page 44, line 22.

For "5, 32," read "5, 34."

x. Page 45, line 5.

See Tāṇḍya Br. viii. 2, 10.

xi. Page 56, line 11.

Compare Tāṇḍya Br. vii. 4, 2; where it is told that the gods failed to gain heaven by either the Gāyatrī, the Triṣhṭubh, the Jagatī, or the Anushṭubh metres, but gained it by the Bṛihatī.

xii. Page 58, last line of the text.

Compare Tāṇḍya Br. vii. 5, 11; 6, 5; xii. 5, 23; 9, 21; 13, 27 f.

xiii. Page 61, line 5.

See the discussion among the gods about a formula in Tāṇḍya Br. vii. 8, 1 f.

xiv. Page 67, line 18.

On the word mātṛi, "measurer," Böhtlingk and Roth have the following explanation: "Sāyaṇa brings under this head the verse 1, 61, 7, making the word equivalent to 'the world-creating (-sustaining) sacrifice.' Benfey translates 'carpenter.' But Vṛitra's mother may be here spoken of."

xv. Page 78, line 11 from the foot.

See also Tāṇḍya Br., xx. 15, 6, ff.

xvi. Page 80, line 5 from the foot.

Vishṇu is also mentioned in R.V. v. 49, 3: Indro Vishṇur Varuṇo Mitro Agnir ahāni bhadrā janayanta dasmāḥ |

xvii. Page 81, line 27.

In R.V. viii. 12, 8, Indra is said to have eaten a thousand buffaloes and to have in consequence gained in vigour (yadi pravṛiddha satpate sahasram mahishān aghaḥ | ād it te indriyam mahi pra vavṛidhe).

xviii. Page 85, line 13.

"The Aśvins," etc. Read "Ye, Aśvins, have come by a path which yields enjoyment."

xix. Page 88, lines 16, 22 and 28.

For "yan na" read "yan naḥ: and in line 22, for "tellest not" read "tellest to us."

The passage of the Taitt. San. referred to in p. 88, line 28, viz. ii. 5, 5, 2 (p. 585 of Bibl. Ind., vol. ii.), gives the following explanation of the words Vishṇave Śipivishṭāya: Yajno vai Vishṇuḥ | paśavaḥ śipiḥ | yajnaḥ eva paśushu pratishṭhati | "'Vishṇu' means sacrifice, and 'Śipi' means victims; for sacrifice depends upon victims." See also the Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa ix. 7, 9 ff. R.V. vii. 100, 6, is translated by Prof. Roth in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 59. I am indebted to Prof. Aufrecht for the following remarks on "Śipiviṣhṭa:" "This attribute of Vishṇu occurs only in R.V. vii. 99, 6 (a verse which ought to have stood only at the end of hymn 100, as hymn 99 is devoted to the celebration of Indra and Vishṇu), and in the only important verses vii. 100, 5 and 6. The A.V. does not know the word, and in the other Saṇhitās and Brāhmaṇas it has been, as in other cases, adopted from the R.V. It is perfectly clear that something opprobrious was expressed by the epithet, for vii. 100, 6, means: 'Why should any one, O Vishṇu, have found a subject for reproof when thou didst say, "I am Śipiviṣhṭa"? Do not conceal even that shape of thine from us, as thou wearest another form in public.' Now Aupamanyava says clearly that 'Śivipiśhṭa' is 'kutsitārthīya' (has a bad, or contemptuous, sense).[79] The commentator on the Taittirīya Sanhitā ii. 2, 12, 5 (vol. ii., p. 390) says that it is used for atyanta-rogin.[80]

[79] The complete words of Aupamanyava are as follows: S'ipivishṭo Vishṇur iti Vishṇor dve nāmanī bhavataḥ | kutsitārthīyam pūrvam ity Aupumanyavaḥ | "Aupamanya says that there are two names of Vishṇu, S'ipivishṭa and Vishṇu: of which the former has a bad sense."

[80] I quote the commentator's remarks on the verse (vii. 100, 6, of the R.V.) at length: He "Vishṇo" tvaṁ "yad" yasmāt kāraṇat "S'ipivishṭo asmi" iti prakarsheṇa "vavakshe" punaḥ punar vakshi tasmāt "te" tava manasi "kim it parichakshyam bhūt" kim idaṁ garhaṇīyam abhū | na etad garhaṇīyaṁ vṛithā eva tava lajjā ity abhiprāyaḥ | yadyapy etan nāma loke atyantarogiṇy | udghāṭita-guhyatva-vimūḍhaiḥ prayujyate "S'ipivishṭo 'yam" iti tathāpy avayavārthasya brāhmaṇeha vyākhyātatvād nāsty atra tava lajjā-kāraṇam | tasmād "etad varpo" varishṭhaṁ nāma "asmad mā apagūhaḥ" asmākam agre gūḍham mā kuru | "yad" yasmāt tvaṁ gūhanāya eva samithe yuddhe kavacha-śīrshaṇyābhyāṁ gūḍho "anyarūpo ḥabhūtha" babhūvitha | tad anyathā yathātathā vā bhavatu tathāpy asmad-vṛiddhau (quere buddhau ?) praśastam idam mā gopāya ity arthaḥ | "O Vishṇu, since thou repeatedly sayest I am S'ipivishṭa, how, then, is this, in thy mind, matter of reproach? It is not matter of reproach; thou art needlessly ashamed: such is the purport. Although this word is in common language applied to diseased persons, to those whose nakedness is uncovered, and to fools, by those who say 'so and so is S'ipivishṭa,' yet as the sense of its component parts is expounded in this Brāhmaṇa (ii. 5, 5, 2, see above), thou hast no occasion for shame. Do not therefore conceal from us thy most excellent name (so the commentator understands varpas). Inasmuch as in the battle thou hast for the sake of concealment been covered by a coat of mail and a helmet,—whether the fact be so or otherwise, do not conceal that which in our estimation deserves praise."

The word "S'ipivishṭa" also occurs in the S'atarudriya (Vājas. Sanhitā 16, 29); and is thus commented on by Mahīdhara on the verse: S'ipivishṭāya Vishṇurūpāya | "Vishṇuḥ S'ipivishṭaḥ" iti śruteḥ | yadvā śipishu paśushu vishṭaḥ pravishṭaḥ | "paśavo vai śipir" iti śruteḥ | sarva-prāṇishv antaryāmitayā sthitāḥ ity arthaḥ | yadvā "yajno vai śipiḥ" | yajne 'dhidevatātvena pravishṭaḥ | śipir ādityo vā maṇḍalādhishṭhātā ity arthaḥ | tasmai namaḥ | "śipayo 'tra raśmayaḥ uchyante tair āvishṭo bhavati" iti Yāskokteḥ (Nirukta, 5, 8). "To S'ipivishṭa, i.e. to him who is in the form of Vishṇu: for the Veda says S'ipivishṭa is Vishṇu. Or, according to the Vedic text, that 'śipi' means cattle, S'ipivishṭa will mean, he who enters into cattle, i.e. who is present in all creatures, pervading them. Or 'S'ipi' means sacrifice; and so S'ipivishṭa may signify him who has entered into sacrifice as its presiding deity. Or, 'śipi' is the sun who presides over the circle of the sky—to him be reverence; according to what Yāska says (Nirukta 5, 8) 'S'ipi' means rays; by them he is pervaded."

Professor Weber has the following notice of 'S'ipivishṭa' in his Indische Studien ii. 37 f., note. This is one of those words which already gave trouble to Yāska (Nirukta 5, 9). Bhaṭṭa Bhāskara Miśra has the following: Nirveshṭita-śeshāya (śepāya ?) | sarvadā devadāru-vana-pradeśādau vā yathā ādityātmane | yathā Skanda-purāṇe S'aityāchhamatayogād (?) vā śipi vāri prachakshate | tatpānād rakshaṇād vā 'pi śipayo raśmayo matāḥ | teshu pravishṭaḥ savitā S'ipivishṭa ihochyate | yadvā paśavaḥ śipayaḥ "yajno vai Vishṇuḥ paśavaḥ śipir" iti śruteḥ sarva-prāṇādy-antaryāmitvena pravishṭaḥ ity arthaḥ | [Prof. W. then quotes the passage of the Mahābhārata, 13229]. "'S'ipi' is akin to 'śepa,' 'śipra,' Kiefer, hip, Hüfte, cippus."

This piece of information is taken from the Amarakosha, where it is said, S'ipivishṭas tu khalatau duścharmaṇi maheśvare. Halāyudha and Hemachandra have the same. Amara must have taken the two first meanings ('bald-headed' and 'leprous?') from actual use; and there is no reason to doubt that even in the Vedic passages 'S'ipivishṭa' means either bald-headed, or one who has a skin disease. So long as the sense of 'śipi' is undetermined, it will be difficult to choose between the two. The word 'śipi' is not found used separately. For what the Taittirīya Sanhitā ii. 5, 5, 2 (quoted above) says, yajño vaï Vishṇuḥ | paśavaḥ śipiḥ (Tāṇḍya Br. xviii. 6, 26[81]), and all that the modern Hindu commentators say, about 'śipi,' is worthless. A glimmer of light is cast upon 'śipi' by 'śipitam,' 'defective,' in the Śatap. Br. xi. 1, 4, 4."[82]

xx. Page 91, note [67].

See also R.V. viii. 22, 1.

xxi. Page 95, line 1.

For "ix. 166," read "ix. 100."

xxii. Page 95, line 10.

Another verse in which Vishṇu is mentioned is one in the funeral hymn, R.V. x. 15, 3: Ā ahan pitṛīm suvidatrān avitsi napātaṁ cha vikrámaṇaṁ cha Vishṇoḥ | "I have found the beneficent Fathers, and the path and the stride of Vishṇu." Napāt is explained by Mahīdhara in Vāj. S. 19, 56, thus: Nāsti pāto yatra sa napāto deva-yāna-patho yatra gatānām pāto nāsti. "Napāta means that on which there is no

[81] This passage is as follows: Eshā vai Prajāpateḥ paśushṭhā tanūr yat S'ipivishṭaḥ | prāṇo bṛihat | prāṇaḥ eva paśushu pratitishṭhati | "This S'ipivishṭa is that body of Prajāpati which abides in victims (or beasts), The Bṛihat is breath: and it is breath which abides in victims." On which the commentator remarks: "Yajño Vishṇuḥ | pasavaḥ śipir" iti śruty-antarāt | Vishṇoḥ Prajāpatitvāt S'ipivishṭaḥ iti | "For another Vedic text says that Vishṇu is sacrifice, and śipi denotes victims. Since Vishṇu has the character of Prajāpati, he is S'ipivishṭa," etc.

[82] The Commentator's note on this passage is as follows: Akāle nirlptaṁ haviḥ śipitam | tad-āśrito dosha-viśeshaḥ | tad-yuktam iva yajñasya śarīram bhavati | Prof. Aufrecht proposes to correct this as follows: Akāle——śipitam | śipitaṁ tanv-āśrito dosha-viśeshaḥ, etc. According to this corrected reading the sense will be: "An oblation offered at a wrong time is 'śipita.' Now 'śipita' means a particular defect residing in the body. With it the body of the sacrifice becomes affected, as it were."

fall, the path leading to the gods, on which those who go along it do not fall." Sāyaṇa on R.V. x. 15, 3 makes the word=vināśābhāva, "the absence of destruction."

xxiii. Page 114, line 14.

For "verse" read "sense."

xxiv. Page 119, note [118].

As regards the question whether or not ether (ākāśa) is eternal, see the first volume of this work, pp. 130 and 506, and the third vol., pp. 70, 106, and 164.

xxv. Page 127, line 4 from the foot.

For "praviṇakti" read "pravṛiṇakti." xxvi. Page 128, line 5.

The Commentator on the Taitt. Ār. (Bibl. Ind.), p. 372, explains utkara thus: Veder uttara-bhāge pāṁśu-tṛiṇādayo yatra prakshipyante so 'yam utkaraḥ | "'The utkara' is the place on the north side of the Vedi (altar) where dust, grass, etc., is thrown."

xxvii. Page 129, line 13.

This passage is identical with Tāṇḍya Br. vii. 5, 6, vol. i., p. 433.

xxviii. Page 262, line 6 from the foot.

The Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa xii. 6, 8, also relates that Indra, after thus treacherously slaying Namuchi, was followed by the head or something else which cried, "Slayer of a hero, thou hast injured me, thou hast injured me." This he could not destroy, either by ṛich, or sāman, but by a Hārivarṇa" (tad enam pāpīyaṁ vāchaṁ vadad anvavartata "vīra-hann adruho 'druhaḥ" iti | tad na ṛichā na sāmnā apahantum aśaknot | tad hārivarṇasya eva nidhanena apāhata)

xxix. Page 297, line 18.

To the word "Jarāsandha" at the beginning of the line, prefix "582."

xxx. Page 300, line 6.

For "x. 70," read "v. 70."

xxxi. Page 302, line 15.

Prof. Whitney has since given up this interpretation. See p. 399.

xxxii. Page 303, line 7.

For "ii. 2, 29," read "xi. 2, 29."

xxxiii. Page 303, line 22.

For "commentorial," read "commentatorial."

xxxiv. Page 306, line 26.

See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, Dr. Hall's ed., vol. ii., pp. 77 f.

xxxv. Page 319, line 2.

For "x. 26," read "xii. 26."

xxxvi. Page 400, line 11.

For "ii. 23," read "ii. 33."

xxxvii. Page 421, line 24.

For "x. 99," read "x. 90."

xxxviii. Page 471, line 12.

For "Devavatī," read "Vedavatī."

xxxix. Page 491, line 27.

For "xiii. 8, 17," read "xiii 4, 17."

INDEX.

A.

Abhyagni, 320
Achhāvaka priest, 84
Aditi, 11 ff., 80, 84, 114 f., 133 f., 136, 229, 306, 365 etc.
Adhvaryu priest, 66, 160
Adhvaryu Brāhmaṇa, 14
Āditeya, 117
Āditya, 14, 26 f., 46, 65, etc.
——— is lord of Brahmā, Vishṇu and Rudra, 475
Āditya-hṛidaya, a hymn, 474
Ādityas, 14 f., 54, 114 ff.
Æschylus, Prometheus Vinctus, 66
Agastya, 473, 480, 485
Agnāyī, 161
Agni, 9, 22 f., 26, 28 f., 45, 58, 61, 66, 70, 76, etc.
—— texts in praise of, 111
—— one of triad of gods, 66, 70, 160 ff.
—— breaks down castles, 312
—— his eight forms and names, 340 ff.
—— enamoured of Rishis' wives, 352 ff.
—— his tongues, 429, 497
Agnihotra, 57
Agni Purāṇa iv., 5—151
Ahalyā, 48, 496
Ahankāra, 42 f.
Āhavanīya fire, 359
Ahi, 82, 101
Āhvriti, 253
Aindra-vaishṇava oblation, 79
Aṁ, 46
Aitareya Brāhmaṇa—
i. 1—129
— 30—129
ii. 8—289
iv. 22— 9
vi. 15— 84, 123
— 33—319
Aitaśa, 319
Aitāśa-pralāpa, 320
Aitihāsikas, 92
Aja, 378, 383 (see Brahmā)
Ākāśa (ether), 33, 119
Ākhaṇḍala (appellation of Indra), 190
Amaravatī, 246
Ambikā, 321, 422
——— is sister of Rudra, according to the Yajurvedas, 321. See Umā.
Ambitamā, 424
Aṁśa, or Aṁśu, 14, 115
Ānakadundubhi (name of Vasudeva), 273
Anaraṇya, 457 f.
Andhaka, 336, 472
Angas, 246
Angiras, 91
Angirases, 107, 116
Aniruddha, grandson of Kṛishṇa, 435
Anṛita-deva, 410
Antaka, 336, 472
Anukramaṇikā, 77
Anushṭubh, 162
Āpaḥ. See Waters
Aparṇā, 431. See Umā
Apsarases, obtained by Kshatriyas slain in battle, 277
Apsarases, 461
Araṇati, sense of the word, 317
Arbuda, 107
Ardhaka, 336
Arjuna, 161 and passim
Arjuna (Kārtavīrya), 177, 253
Arthavādas, 131
Arundhatī, 354
Arunmukha Yatis, 493
Arurmaghas, 493
Āryas, 76
Ārya Bhaṭṭa, 110
Aryaman, 14, 68, 78
Aśani, 342, 347
Asita Devala, 432
Asura (the Spirit), 109
Asuras, 26 f., 40, 54, 58 ff., etc.
Asuras, their castles, 203, 223 ff.
Āsuri, 123
Aśvatthāman, 186
Aśvamedha, or horse-sacrifice, 167 ff.
Aśvins, 46, 48, 68, 76, 128, etc.
Atharva-śiras, 166, 172
———quoted, 356
Atharva-veda, quoted or referred to—2, 1, 3— 6
— 27, 6—332, 403
3, 16, 1—313
— 20, 4, 7— 96
4, 2, 1-8— 15 f., 18
— 21, 7—312
— 28, 1ff.—332
— 30, 5—318
5, 3, 3— 96
— 21, 11—333
— 25, 5— 96
— 26, 7— 65
6, 93, 1, 2—333, 403
— 141, 1—333
7, 26, 1-3— 68
— 26, 4-7— 63
— 42, 1, 2—313
— 44, 1— 83
— 50, 6—106
— 79, 4— 16
— 80, 3— 16
— 87, 1—333, 358, 403
8, 2, 7—333, 403
— 5, 10—333
— 8, 11—337
9, 2— 4
— 6, 29— 63
— 7, 7—334
— 10, 17— 76
10, 1, 23—334, 403
— 2, 7— 23
— 3, 9— 11
— 7, 25— 11
— 7, 7ff.— 18 f.
—8, 2, 11, 44— 19
— 8, 29—258
11, 2, 1-31—334 ff., 403
— 6, 2—115
— 6, 9—338, 403

Atharva-veda, continued—
12, 1, 8— 24
— 4, 17—338, 403
13 2, 26— 5
— 4, 4, 26 ff.—338, 403 f.
15, 5, 1-7—338
18, 1, 40—308
19, 10, 9— 84
— 53, 10— 27
20, 17, 5—106
— 87, 3—103
— 89, 9—106
— 99, 2—104
— 106, 26— 89
— 111, 1— 89
— 114, 1—104
— 126, 1—106
Atigrāhyas, 62
Atikāya, son of Rāvaṇa, 412
Aufrecht (Prof. Th.), his aid acknowledged, 7, 59, 78, 81, 84, 90 f., 102, 106, 117, 152, 232, 261, 302, 306, 310, 314, 409, 411, 494, 502, 504 ——— his Catalogue of Sanskrit MSS., 151, 188, 228, etc.
Aupamanyava, 88, 505
Aurṇavābha, 64 ff., 97, 156, 439
Avindhya, Minister of Rāvaṇa, 413

B.

Babhru, 212
Badari, 188, 232, etc.
Bāhīkas, 328, 339
Bahvṛich S'ruti, 144
Balarāma or Baladeva, 245, 249, 258, 260
Balarāma incarnation, 156
Bali, 133 ff., 155, 465
Banerjea's (Rev. K. M.) dialogues on Hindu philosophy, 49
Bangas, 246
Benfey's (Prof. Th.) Glossary to Sāma-veda, 11, 81 f., 102
—— translation of Sāma-veda, 63 f., 87, 89
——— of Rigveda, in Orient und Occident, 63 f., 68, 102, 229, 302, 315 f.
Bhadrā, 212
Bhadrakālī, 416
Bhaga, 14, 80, 115
——— his eyes knocked out by Rudra, 200, 268, 383
Bhagavadgītā, 169, 381
——— 3, 20 ff., and 4, 7 f., quoted, 53, 153
Bhāgavata Purāṇa quoted 1, 3, 7— 36
— 3, 1 ff., & 26 f.—156
— 3, 16— 27
2, 5, 34— 44
— 6, 21 ff.— 10
— 10, 10— 44
3, 12, 28 ff.— 47
— 20, 12 ff.— 43
— 26, 50 ff.— 43
— 30, 10—381
4, 1, 47 ff.—378
— Sects. 2-7—377 ff.
— 5, 20—202
— 25, 6—381
5, 19, 5—456
6, 6, 24, 36—121
— 6, 41—202
8, Sects. 15-23—137 ff.
— 23, 29— 72
— 24, 4 ff.— 39
10, 1, 21 ff.—254
— 33, 27 ff.—49 f., 182, 253
— 34, 8—249
— Sects. 43 ff.—215
— 64th and previous sections—178
— 74, 34—206
Bhagīratha, 365
Bharadvāja, 96, 486
Bharata, epithet of Agni, 28
Bharata, bróther of Rāma, 175, 445 f.
Bhava, 43, 328, 332
Bhavas, 331
Bhavānī, 405
Bhavitra, 81
Bhīmasena, 211
Bhīshma, 206
Bhīshmaka, 215
Bhogavatī, 253
Bhoja, 253
Bhṛigu, 177
——— reviles Rudra, 382
——— his beard plucked out by Rudra, 383
Bhṛigus, 140
Bhū, 14
Bhūr, bhuvaḥ, svar, 25
Bhūtādi, 42 f.
Bhuvana, 9, 369
Boar, or Varāha, 39, 67
Boar incarnation, 27, 33 f., 36 ff., 156, 390
Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, 13, and passim Bollensen's (Dr.) articles in Jour. Germ. Or. Soc., and Benfey's Orient und Occident, 306 f.
Bombay edition of Rāmāyaṇa, 33, 131, & passim
Brahma, 7, 19 f., 29 f., and passim
Brahma (the Veda), 22
Brahmā, 10, 18, 31 f., and passim
—— born in an egg, 31 f.
—— sprung from the waters and ether, 33
——becomes a boar, 33, 39
—— takes the form of a fish, 38 —— called Nārāyaṇa, 31, 37, 39, 164
—— springs from a lotus issuing from Vishṇu's navel, 43, 230, 267, 477 —— his passion from his own daughter, 47 f.
—— the first god in the Trimūrti, 163, 280
—— grants boons to Rāvaṇa and Atikāya, etc., 167, 412, 458, 470 —— informs Rāma of his divinity, 181 —— created by Rudra, 188, 194
—— created by Krishṇa, or Vishṇu, 230, 267, 273
—— worships Linga and Rudra, 192 f.
—— acts as charioteer to Rudra, 222, 226
—— grants boon to Tāraka's sons, 223
—— praises Krishṇa in a hymn, 236
—— is son of Vāsudeva, 237
—— mediates between Vishṇu, or Krishṇa, and Rudra, 240, 279
—— promises to Rudra a share in sacrifices, 374 —— is present at sacrifices, 167, 374, 378
—— is father of Daksha, 378

Brahmā, his dispute with Vishṇu allayed by the Linga, 388
—— is a form of Rudra, 392
—— Rudra springs from his forehead, 392
—— identified with the soul of the Universe, 367 f.
—— curses Kumbhakarṇa, 462
—— his promise to the gods, 471
—— Āditya called his lord, 475
—— asks Vishṇu to become Preserver, 477
—— welcomes Rāma to heaven, 479
—— is mental father of Pulastya, 485 —— offers boons to Rāma, 485
—— creates the first woman, 496. (See Hiraṇyagarbha, Prajāpati, Viśvakarman).
Brahma-kalpa, 35
Brahman (priest), 66
Brahmaṇaspati, 12, 77, 162
Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, 182
Bṛihadāraṇyaka, 3, 22, 24, 29
Bṛihaddevatā, i., 13—163
Bṛihadgiri, 492
Bṛihaspati, 68, 96, 152, 154, 162
Bṛihat, 96, 162
Burnouf's Bhāgavata Purāṇa, 39, 147
Buddha, 212
—— incarnation, 156

C.

Chaitraratha forest, 230, 252
Chaṇḍakauśika rishi, 292
Charaka Brāhmaṇa, 92
Chāraṇa, 177
Chāryāka, Rākshasa, friend of Duryodhana, 294 ff.
Chāturmasya, 57
Chākshusha Manvantara, 120
Chedis, 205, 215, 246
Chhandas, 163
Chhāndogya Upanishad quoted, 12, 26, 183
Churning the ocean for Amṛita, 50, 365
Colebrooke's (Mr. H. T.), Essays, 66, 110, 245, etc.
Cowell's (Prof. E. B.), Maitrī Upanishad, 267 —— translation of the Kaushītaki Upanishad, 493

D.

Dadhīchi, 240, 374
Dadhikrā, 85
Daityas, 110
Daityasenā, 350
Daksha, 12 ff., 28, 115, 117 f.
—— his sacrifice disturbed, 200, 240, 372 ff.
—— reviles and curses Rudra, 379 f.
—— his daughters, 385
Dambhodbhava, 235
Dānavas, or Danujas, 39, 110, 167
Darśa, 57
Daśaratha, 167, 171 ff.
Dasyus, 248
Dattātreya incarnation, 156
Dawn, daughter of Prajāpati, 45
Death, personified, 55, 57 f.
Devakī, mother of Kṛishṇa, 181, 183, 257 ff.
Devarāta, 177, 372
Devasenā, 350
Devavatī, 487
Devayānī, 104
Devī. See Umā
Devībhāgavata quoted, 267
Devīmāhātmya quoted, 435 f.
Dhammapada, referred to, 201
Dhanvantari incarnation, 156
Dharma, 156, 239, 241, 378
Dhātṛi, 14, 96 f., 115, 204
Dhūrjati, 205
Diti, mother of Daityas, 257, 305, 365
Dravinodas, 95
Dundubhī, a Gandharvī, 484
Durgā, 426. See Umā
Durgāchārya, commentator on the Nirukta, 65, 74, 117, 161, 355, 409
Durgā-stava, 427, 498
Durgati, 428
Durvāsas, 199, 204, 245, 275, 477
Duryodhana, disbelieves Kṛishna's supernatural character, 216 ff, 220 ff.
—— desires to celebrate Rājasūya sacrifice, 283, 293 —— celebrates Vaishṇava sacrifice, 293 f.
Dūshaṇa, 472
Dushkanta, 457
Dvārakā, 214, etc.
Dwarf incarnation, 66, 107 f., 130 ff., 156
Dyaus, 46, etc.

E.

Earth, the goddess, 38, 46, 80, 161
—— her burthen lightened, 215, 255. Compare p. 161
Egg, mundane, 23 ff., 30, 41 ff.
Ekalavya, 249
Ekaparnā, 431
Ekapāṭalā, 431
Ekaviṁśa-stoma, 162
Emūsha, 28
Entity and Non-entity, 4
Euripides, his Helena and Orestes quoted, 255
Evayāmarut, 81

G.

Gada, 246
Gandhamādana, 240, 252
Gāndhāras, 245, 249
Gandharva, 6, 112, 165
Ganeśa, 278
Gangā, 270, 430
—— her descent, 365
Gangādvāra, 374
Garuḍa, 189, etc.
Garuḍī, 353
Gaurī, 359, 422. See Umā
Gautama, 49, 496
Gāyatrī, 123, 161
Genesis, Book of, 48
Gharma, 96, 126
Ghora Āngirasa, 183
Girivraja, 288
Gods, how they became immortal, 54

Gods, how they became superior to the Asuras, 58
—— how they became unequal, 61
—— by birth are alone objects of sacrifice, 131; "work-gods" may themselves offer sacrifice, 132, 496
Gokarna, 284
Goldstücker's (Prof. Th.) Pāṇini, or Mānavakalpa Sūtra, 5, 169
—— Sanskrit Dictionary, 62
Gopati, 253
Gopīs, 50 f.
Gorresio's Rāmāyaṇa, 34, and passim —— opinion regarding Rāma's incarnation, 447, 481 —— opinion regarding Śiva's worship in Southern India, 411 —— remark by him, 415
Govinda, 38, 219
Graha (Rāhu), 190
Grahas, 62
Guha, 350. See Kārttikeya
Guṇas, 43

H.

Habakkuk, iii. 6—72
Hall (Dr. Fitzedward), his aid acknowledged, 374, 377, 407 —— his edition of Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, 3, and passim
Hansa, name of Kṛishṇa, 264
Hansa, name of Brahmā, 490
Hanumat, 456
—— his merits as a grammarian, 490
Hari, 39. See Visbṇu Harivaṁśa quoted, or referred to—line 35,—32
43,—393
171,—120
549,— 13
589,—120
940,—431
2725,—151
3236,—433
4159,—151
Harivaṁśa, continued—
4166,—151
6579,—215
6833,—250
7418,—383
9423,—435
10235,—435
10660,—278
11548,—120
12195,—151
12425,— 32
12456,—120
12900,—151
Sections 183 f.,—178
Haug's (Prof. M.) translation of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, 9, 84, 290, 320, 493 —— dissertation by him referred to, 289
Hayagrīva, 39
Heaven (svar), 80
Heti, 486
Himālaya, 230, 269
Himavat, 385, 430
Hiraṇyagarbha, 15 ff, 31 ff, 188, 355, 388
Hiraṇyakaśipu, 190, 215.
Hiraṇyapura, 234.
Hotṛi priest, 66
Human sacrifices, whether practised in the Vedic age, 289
Hrī, 168
Hṛishīkeśa, 181, 208, etc.

I.

Ikshvāku, 445
Ilā, 161
Immortality, how acquired by the gods, 54 ff.
Incarnation of a portion of Vishṇu, 253
—— of white and black hairs of Vishṇu, 257 ff.
Indha, 22
Indische Studien (Prof. A. Weber's), referred to or quoted, 23, 28, 123, 200, 277, etc.
Indra, 15, 20, 22, 25 f., 40, 48, 61, 64, 66, 160, etc.
—— texts in which his greatness is celebrated, 99 ff.
—— celebrated conjointly with Vishṇu, 74, 78, 83, 86
—— with other gods, 108
Indra conquered by Indrajit, 495 —— corrupts Ahalyā, 49, 496
Indradyumna, 253
Indrajit, son of Rāvaṇa, and conqueror of Indra, 411, 417 ff, 450, 494
Indrāṇī, 405
Interpolated passages in Rāmāyaṇa, 479
Indu (soma), 77
Irāvatī, 253
Isaiah, xi. 6—190
—— xl. 22; xlv. 12, 18-86

J.

Jagatī, 123, 162
Jaigīshavya, 432
Jaimini, criticized by Commentator on Rāmayaṇa, 496
Jamadagni, 177, 322
Jāmbavat, 146
Jāmbavatī, wife of Kṛishṇa, 189
Jambha, 234, 245, 249
Jambudvīpa, 440
Janaka, father of Sītā, 175, 372, 464 f.
Janaloka, 38, 146, 388
Jarā, rākshasī, a household goddess, 291
Jarāsandha, 212, 245
—— destines human victims for Rudra, 288 ff.
—— slain by Bhīmasena, 291
—— his birth related, 291
Jārūthī, 253
Jāvāli, 171
Jayadratha, 184, 186, 286
—— worships Rudra, 286
Jayanta, an Āditya, 118
Jayanta, son of Indra, 495
Jayantī, daughter of Indra, 153 f.
Jayatīrtha, 300
Jīva, 44
Job xxvi. 7—101
Journal of American Oriental Society, referred to or quoted, 48, 398
Jvara (fever), 374
Jyeshtha sāman, 193
Jyotishṭoma, 62

K.

Ka (Prajāpati or Kaśyapa), 15, 138

Kaikasī, mother of Rāvaṇa, 487 f.
Kaikeyī, 173, 175, 445 f.
Kailāsa, 230, etc.
Kaiṭabha, a Dānava, 230, 433, 435
Kaivalya Upanishad, 362
Kālakanjās, 234
Kālanemi, an asura, 254
Kālī, 416, 425, 427, 429. See Umā.
Kalinga, 202, 249
Kalki incarnation, 156
Kamalāsana (Brahmā), 43
Kāmbojas, 243
Kaṇadhūma penance, 152f.
Kandarpa, 364
Kanyākumārī, 427
Kansa, 245, 255, 480
Kapardin, epithet of Rudra, 301, 394 —— epithet of Pūshan, 301
—— of the Ṛitsus, 301
Kapila incarnation, 156
Karālī, 425, 429. See Umā
Karṇa, 221 ff, 227 f.
Kārtavīrya, 253
Kārttikeya, his birth according to the Mahābhārata, 349
—— according to the Rāmāyaṇa, 364
Kārūsha, 214
Kaserumat, 253
Kaśyapa, 13, 27, 33 f, 118, 133, 136, 177, 322, 369
Kataka, commentator on the Rāmāyaṇa, on interpolations in that work, 480 f.
Kāṭhaka, 319, 396
Kātyāyana's śrauta sūtras, 126
Kātyāyanī, 360, 426
Kauśalyā, 171, 173, 175, 445
Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa, 343, 423
Kauśika 193
Kauśikī, 434
Kaustubha gem, 263
Kena Upanishad, quoted, 420
Keśin (the long-haired), 318
Keśin (his car), 336
Keśin (a Dānava), 350
Ketumatī, 487
Khaṇḍaparaśu, 240
Khāṇḍava, 128
Khāṇḍava forest, 161, 246
Khara, a rākshasa, brother of Rāvaṇa, 471, 482
Kimpurusha, 289
Kirāta, form of, taken by Rudra, 230
Kīrti, 163
Kośala Vidèhas, 328
Krātha, 253
Kṛiśānu, 75, 316
Krishna, his adulteries, 148ff.
—— his self-consciousness, 178
—— identified with Rāma, 181
—— son of Devakī, and pupil of Ghora, 183
—— renders homage to Mahādeva, 186 ff.
—— receives boons from Mahādeva and Umā, 195
—— is a great devotee, 251
—— performs a ceremony for a son, 259
—— recommends worship of Durgā, 205
—— his supernatural character disputed by Śiśupāla and Duryodhana, 205 ff, 281
—— explanation of his names, 218
—— identified with the ṛishi Nārāyaṇa, 185, 228
—— his supernatural power and various exploits, 245 ——, produced from the black hair of Vishṇu, 257 ff.
—— identified with the Supreme Spirit, 50, 208, 240, 264 ff.
—— Brahmā and Rudra produced from him, 230, 267, 273
—— one with Rudra, 268, 280
—— his fight with Rudra, 279
—— goes to Dvāravatī from fear of Jarāsandha, 288
—— summary of views regarding him, 281 f.
Kṛita age, 196
Kṛittikās, 350
Kshayadvīra, sense of the word, 301 f, 399, 507
Kuenen's (Prof. A.) Historisch-Kritisch Onderzoek referred to, 320
Kuhn's (Prof.) opinion referred to, 424
Kuhn and Schleicher's Breiträge, etc., 81
Kullūka on Manū, 3, 31.
Kumāra, 151
Kumāra (a boy), applied to Agni, 341
Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, 48
Kumbhakarṇa, brother of Rāvaṇa, 462, 482
Kūrma (tortoise) incarnation, 27, 156
Kūrma Purāṇa, 376, 472
Kurukshetra, 125, 128
Kuśa, son of Rāma, 478
Kutsa, 162
Kuvera, 180, 366, 482 f, 486

L.

Langlois's Harivaṁśa, 250
Lassen's (Prof. Christian) Indische Alterthumskunde, or, Indian Antiquities, referred to, 136, 169, 211, 243, 245, 283, etc.
Lakshmaṇa, brother of Rāma, 175, 445, etc.
—— wounded by Indrajit, 449 ff.
—— ascends to heaven, 478
Lakshmī, 182, 450 f, 460, 465
Lava, son of Rāma, 478
Linga Purāṇa quoted—
1, 3, 28 ff—42
1, 4, 59 ff—39
1, 17, 5–52—386
1, 19, 8 ff —391
2, 28 —426
Linga worship, 192, 405 ff.
Lingin (receptacle of the linga), 388
Lokampṛiṇa, 57
Lokāyatikas, 138
Madhu, a Dānava, 230, 435
Mādhuki, a muni, 123
Madhurā, a city, 478
Madhusūdana, 133
Maghavat (Indra), 105 f.
Mahābhārata, quoted or referred to—
i. Ādiparvan.
1215—219
2519—118
2592—11
2598—118
2785—50

Mahābhārata, continued.
7049—286
7306—259
8196—246
ii. Sabhā-parvan.
582—297
626—287
653—288
729—291
861—289
869—278
1211—205
1333—206
1410—212
iii. Vana-parvan.
166 ff.—117 f., 474
192—371
461—229
471—251
484—136
615—216
1513—184, 230
6054—284
8166—285
8349—285
10209—369
10316— 48
10368—388
10932— 38
11001—284
12797— 38
14287—351
14427—350
15274—293
15777—286
15872—481
15999—285
16148—413
16492—413
16529—415
iv. Virāṭa-parvan.
178—425, 433
v. Udyoga-parvan.
130—243
147—243
320—261
414—496
1875—247
1917—232
2527—216
2560—218
3459—235
3501—119
4407—250
4409—210
4418—220
vi. Bhīshma-parvan.
793 ff.—205, 432
2932—236
Mahābhārata, continued.
vii. Droṇa-parvan.
382—244
401—191
419—235
2224—470
2355—243
2832—184
9575—203
9632—199
viii. Karṇa-parvan.
1625—221
ix. S'alya-parvan.
2434—261
3619—294
x. Sauptika-parvan.
289—191
312—186
780—406
786—373
xii. S'ānti-parvan.
241—369
1414—295
1500—263
1748—287
3655—277
6775— 35
6805— 35
7092—118
10226—373
10272—374
12943—135
13133—266
13152—185, 266
13171— 63
13228—219
13229— 88
13265—238
13337—241
13723—393
xii. Anusāsana-parvan.
590—187
1160—406
6295—268
6397—189
6889—189
7092—118
7232—369
7356—274
7402—196
7510—405
xiv. Aśvamedhika-parvan.
1536—275
Mahādeva. See Rudra
Maharloka, 146, 388
Mahat, 42
Mahāvīra, 126
Mahendra, 150. See Indra
Mahīdhara's commentary on Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, 7, 15 f., 17, 104
Maitrī Upanishad, quoted, 267
Makha, 125 ff.
Mākhavat, 126
Makha Vaishṇava, 128
Mālatī-Mādhava, 430
Māli, 487
Mālinī, 482
Mālyavat, 487
Mānasa (a name of the Creator), 35
Mandara (a mountain), 279
Māndhātṛi incarnation, 156
Mandodarī, Rāvaṇa's queen, 455, 466
Mau-lion (nara-siṁha) incarnation, 135, 156
Manojavā (one of the tongues of Fire), 429, 498
Mantharā, 481 f.
Manu, quoted—
i. 5 ff.—30
— 32 ff.—35, 48
iii. 2 —413
vii. 38 —413
viii. 82 —48
ix. 305 —117
— 308 —148
xii. 91 —30
— 121 —164
Manu, the bard, 27
Manu Svāyambhuva, 13
—— Vaivasvata, 33, 113
Manvantaras, (Chākshusha and Vaivasvata), 120
Manyu, 349
Marīchi, 33 f., 47, 118, 120
Marka, 155
Mārkaṇḍeya, 279
—— Purāṇa, 343, 435, 497
Marus, 128
Maruts, 45, 68, 76, etc.
Mārtāṇḍa, 13, 15, 115
Mataparīkshā, 49
Matsya (or Fish) incarnation, 156
Matsya Purāṇa, 45
—— quoted, 48
——47th section of, abstracted & quoted, 151 ff.
Maya, an Asura, 223
Meghanāda (or Indrajit), son of Rāvaṇa, 450, 495
Mena, wife of Himavat, 385, 430 f.

Meru, 42
Mithilā, 175
Mitra, 14, 68, 74
Molesworth's Marathi Dictionary, 53
Mṛida, 379. See Rudra
Mṛidānī, 405
Mūjavat, 322
Müller's (Prof. Max) edition of Rigveda, 314 ——— his translation of ditto, 66, 68, 105, 111, 301, 314
——— Ancient Sanskrit Literature, 5, 17, 48, 103, 108, 113, 129, 289 f.
——— translation by him in Zeitschr. der D. M. G., 105
——— article on funeral rites of the Brāhmans in ditto, 415
——— his, aid acknowledged, 498
Muṇḍaka Upanishad, 29
——— i 2, 4 ——— 429
Muni, the, 318 f.
Munjakeśavat, 240
Mura, 245, 250
Mūradeva, 410

N.

Nagnajit, 245, 249
Nahum, i. 3—64
Nairuktas (or etymologists), 66, 92, 159
Nalakūvara, 461, 485
Namuchi, slain by Indra with foam, 261, 472
Nandiśvara, 380, 460 f.
Nara, 31 f., 119, 156, 185, 228 ff.
Nārāḥ, 31 f.
Nārada, 269
———incarnation, 156
———denounces Brahmā, Preface, vi.
Nārada-pancharātra, edited by Rev. K. M. Banerjea, Preface, vi.
Naraka, an Asura, 245, 250
Narāsaṁśa, 83
Nārāsaṁśa hymns, 159
Nārāyaṇa, 31 f, 37, 119, 156, 185, 228 ff.
Nara-siṁha, or man-lion incarnation, 135, 156, 215
Nārāyaṇa, commentator on the Mahābhārata, 119
Nārāyaṇas, cowherds so called, 243
Nārāyaṇīya Upanishad, 426
Narmadā river, 140
Nekkuṇḍa, 427
Nidra Kālarūpinī, 433
Nighaṇṭu—
2, 7, 10, 17—310, 316
2, 10—103
2, 17—74
5, 3—159
Nikumbhilā, place of sacrifice, 416
Nīlakaṇṭha, name of Rudra, 427
Nīlakaṇṭha, commentator on the Mahābhārata, 260, 265
Nīlarudra Upanishad quoted, 363
Nimi, 372
Nirmochana, 250
Nirṛiti, 78, 313
Nirukta, quoted or referred to—
1, 15—355, 403
1, 17—320
1, 20—69
2, 6, 7—69, 73
2, 11—441
2, 13—117
2, 17—74
3, 7—165
3, 10—190
3, 21—19
4, 19—71
4, 24—310
5, 7, 8, 9—88, 505
5, 11—81
6, 11—332
6, 15—8, 11
6, 17—82
6, 22—75
7, 4ff—65, 157ff.
7, 25—74
8, 29—114
8, 11—309
9, 1—28, and 35 ff—159
9, 9—159
9, 10—310
10, 6ff—299, 314
10, 20—100
10, 26—9
10, 27—8
10, 32—113
10, 44—71
11, 9—310
11, 23—13, 159
11, 49—420
Nirukta, continued—
12, 19—64, 156
12, 23—71
12, 26—318 f.
12, 36—115
Nirukta, Pariśishta—
1 —114
1, 1—104
2, 1—71
2, 10—8
2, 12—94
2, 21—76
Nishad, a sort of treatise, 265
Nishādas, 328
Nisunda, 252
Nivātakavachas, 234

O.

Ogha, a rākshasa, 250

P.

Padma Purāna, quoted, 278
Pādma-kalpa, 37
Panchadaśastoma, 162
Panchajana, an asura, 246
Panchaviṁśa Brahmaṇa quoted, 129
Pānchi, a muni, 123
Pāṇini, 405, 490, 502
Pankti metre, 162
Pannagas, 199
Parameshṭhin, 19, 23
Paraśurāma, 156, 170, 175 ff, 227, 287
Parīṇah, 128
Pārijāta tree, 246
Pariśrit, 57
Parjanya, 82, 111, 120, 160
Pārvatī. See Umā, and Himavat
Paśubandha, 57
Paśupati, 289, 336 f. See Rudra.
Pāśupata weapon, 184, 232
Pāśupata rite, 361
Pātāla, 38, 110
Paulomas, 234
Periplus, 427
Pictet's (M. Adolphe) Origines Indo-Européennes, 81
Pināki, 191. See Rudra
Piśachas, 188
Piṭha, 245
Pliny, 427
Prabhāsa, 252
Prāchyas, 328
Pradhāna, 3, 42, 194, 388 See Prakṛiti.

Pradyumna, son of Kṛishṇa, 221, 246, 435
Prāgjyotisha, 214, 253
Praheti, 486
Prahrāda, 149, 152, 154 f.
Prajāpati, 8, 15, 17 ff, 28 f, 33, 37, 54 ff, 97
——— created by the gods out of seven men, 22
——— creates the Veda, 22 ——— creates the waters, 22, 439
——— born in an Egg, 25
——— takes the form of a tortoise, 27
——— Agni, Indra, etc., spring from him, 26 ——— produced Agni from his mouth, 28
——— is Daksha, 28
——— is supporter of the universe, 28
——— seeks to conquer worlds, 29
——— his passion for his own daughter, 45
——— half of him mortal, 55
——— father both of Gods and Asuras, 59
——— gives names to the Kumāra, 341, 345
——— produces Agni, Vāyu, Chandramas, and Ushas, 345
——— gods depart from Him, 348. See Brahmā.
Prajāpati in a secondary sense applied to Kaśyapa, Manu, 138, 273
Prakriti, 263, 389. See Pradhāna
Pralambha, 245
Pramathas, 379
Praśitra, 200
Prasūti, daughter of Manu, and wife of Daksha, 378
Prathas, 96
Pravargya, 126, 128
Prayati, 4
Pṛiśni, 309, 311, 335
Pṛiśnigarbha, 264
Prishṭhas, 162
Pṛithā, mother of Arjuna, 53 f., 63, 185
Pṛithivī, 161
Pṛithuraśmi, 492
Pṛithu incarnation, 156
Pulastya, 482, 485
Puloman, 495
Punjikasthalā, daughter of Varuṇa, 458, 462
Punjishṭhas, 328
Purandara (Indra), 120
Purandhi, 82
Purīkayas, 337
Pūrṇamāsa, 57
Pūru, 103
Purūravas, 457
Purusha, 10, 19, 33, 42, 43, 73, 194
Purusha incarnation, 156
Purusha Nārāyaṇa, 29
Puruṣha-sūkta, 10, 29
Purushottama, 252
Purushottama of the Chedis, 297
Pūshan, 68, 76, 95, 115, etc.
——— his teeth knocked out by Rudra, 200, 383
Pushpotkaṭa, mother of Rāvaṇa, 482, 487
Pūtanā, female demon killed by Kṛishṇa, 210
Putrīyā ishṭi, 170

R.

Rādheya, 286
Rāhu, 190
Raivata-sāman, 163
Raghuvaṁśa quoted, 53, 117, 138, 153
Rajas, 11, 71, 267, 276
Rājendralāl Mitra (Babu), his translation of the Chhāndogya Upanishad quoted, 26
Rajasas, 337
Rājasūya sacrifice, 205, 287
Rākā, 482, 487
Rākshasas, their origin and early history, 486
——— did they specially worship Rudra? 411
Rāma, represented as an incarnation of Vishṇu, 168 ff.
——— his miraculous birth discussed, 170 ff., 441 ff., 481 ——— ignorant of his own nature, 180
——— told by Brahmā who he is, 181
——— the gods anxious about him, 447 ——— congratulated by gods, 472
——— says he can easily destroy Rākshasas, 476
Rāma wounded by Indrajit, 450
——— recovers his senses, 452
——— told by Vāyu who he is, 453
——— does not know Garuḍa, 453
——— defeats Rāvaṇa, 457
——— defied by Rāvaṇa, 463
——— advised to utter a hymn to the Sun, 473
——— his divinity owned by Mandodarī, 467
——— ascends to heaven, 479
Rāmāyaṇa quoted or referred to—

i. Bāla-kāṇḍa.

1, 4, 81 ff., 84, 86—443
1, 13 & 18—442
2, 32—443
3, 3 ff.—441
4, 14—442
8, 1—170
11, 1—170
11, 20—171
12, —171
13, 36, 54—171
14, 1—165
16, 1—173
17, 1—173
18, 1 ff.—173, 444
19, 1 ff.—174
19, 10 ff.—444
23, 10—164
29, 9—250
31, 2 ff.—130
32, 2 ff.—132
35, 20—364
36, 13—430
37, 3, 5—364 f.
42 & 43 —365
45, 21—366
45, 26— 50
48, 16 ff.— 48
49, 1 ff.— 49
66, 7—372
66, 13—464
75, 14—176

ii. Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa.

108, 3—138
110, 2— 33
119, 2— 34

iii. Āraṇya-kāṇḍa.

24, 19—448
30, 20—447
30, 27—371, 471

Rāmāyaṇa, continued.
30, 36—373
31, 10—373
32, 5—351
58, 1—443
70, 2—373
iv. Kiṣhkindhā-kāṇḍa.
5, 30—371
40, 11—443
40, 54—439
43, 20—366
43, 46—480
43, 54—367
44, 27—366
44, 46—368
44, 117—367
v. Sundara-kāṇḍa.
12, 39—373
24, 44—416
89, 1 ff.—370, 419, 483
91, 3—477
vi. Yuddha-kāṇḍa.
7, 18—412
17, 1—483
18, 22—476
19, 38—416
26, 8 ff.—453
33, 25—455
34, 7—464
39, 21—441
40, 44—463
41, 2—463
44, 32—416
45, 50—449
51, 17—371
54, 23—373
55, 88—371
59, 105—455
60, 5—457
60, 67—462
60, 11—462
63, 2—462
63, 13—418
64, 11—418
65, 12—419
66, 2—418
71, 28, 31—412 f.
72, 62—413
73, 37—371
76, 93—371
84, 14—418
85, 12—418
86, 14—419
87, 2—418
93, 30—413
93, 58—413
95, 5—468
95, 25—469
Rāmāyaṇa, continued.
96, 10—414
106, 1—473
111, 23—413
113, 5—466
113, 49—494
113, 112—414
119, 1—178
vii. Uttara-kāṇḍa.
Sections 1–11—485 ff.
4, 9—439
16, 1—460
17, 1—458
17, 35—451
19, —457
23, —480
25, 2, 7—416
27, 30—495 ff.
30, 12—418
30, 19—497
31, 42—406, 420
36, 44—490
37, —480
59, —480
103 ff. —477
Rāmopakhyāna, story of Rāma as told in the Vana-parvan of the Mahābhārata, 481 ff.
Rāma's story as related in the Droṇa-parvan of the Mahābhārata, 479
Rathantara, 96, 161, 193 f.
Ratnagarbha, commentator on Vishṇu Purāṇa, quoted, 257
Rambhā, an Apsaras, 458, 461
Rātrī-sūkta, 498
Rāvaṇa's birth, 482, 488
——— his austerities, 482, 488
——— obtains boon from Brahmā, 482, 488
——— drives Kuvera from Laṅkā, 483
——— acts oppressively, 483
——— Brahmā promises his destruction, 483
——— wounds Lakshmaṇa, 453
——— defeated by Rāma, 457
——— his reflections, 457
——— sues, and then insults, Vedavatī, 459
——— his arms crushed by Rudra, 461
Rāvaṇa violates Rambhā, 461
——— defies Vishṇu, 463, 465
——— acknowledges Rāma to be Vishṇu, 466
——— his body burned with Brahmanical rites, 414
——— observes the Vedic ritual, 413
Rāyovājīya, 492
Ribhukshan, 76, 95, 311
Ribhus, 80, 88, 311
Ṛich, 10
Richīka, 177
Ṛiddhi, wife of Kuvera, 370
Ṛigveda Sanhita quoted or referred to—Maṇḍala i.
2, 2—76
6, 4—314
7, 3—99
9, 7—310
10, 9—160
10, 11—193, 434
18, 2—317
22, 16–21—63 ff., 97, 402
22, 17 ff.—75 ff.
24, 8—108
27, 10—299, 395
27, 13—113
32, 1—69
32, 6—102
32, 15—302
33, 11—314
33, 1—502
34, 11—54
39, 6—494
43, 1–6—91, 300, 399 f.
45, 2—54
50, 7—71, 109
51, 2—68
51, 3—316, 408
51, 5—61
52, 8, 12–14—99
55, 1—99
56, 4—317
59, 5—103, 111
61, 7—67, 92, 503
61, 9—99
63, 7—103
64, 2—300, 400
67, 3—111
81, 4—314
81, 5—99 f.
85, 1—301, 400
85, 7—68
90, 5, 9—68

Rigveda, continued.

90, 7—71
94, 5—71
96, 3—28, 82
99, —499
102, 8—99 f.
103, 2—100
104, 6—315
105, 8—410
106, 4—302
108, 9—70
112, 3—302
114, 1-11—301 ff., 309 f., 396, 400 f.
115, 1—111
121, 2 f.—100, 107
122, 1—306
125, 3—302
126, 1—159
127, 3—494
128, 2—314 f.
129, 3—306, 400
131, 1—306
154, 1-6—68 ff., 73, 75, 82, 97, 101
155, 1-6—74 f., 84, 86, 97 f.
156, 1-5—75 f., 97
164, 6—71
164, 36—76
165, 13—314 f.
167, 4 f.—410, 420
180, 7—410
181, 3—82
186, 10—76
190, 2—109

Mandala ii.

1, 3—76, 97
1, 6—306, 400
1, 8 f.—114
3, 11—314
12, 1 f., 9, 13—15, 99, 100
15, 1-3—69, 99, 101 108
18, 4—160
22, 1—77
27, 1—115
27, 10—108, 114
28, 10—63, 76
33, 1-15—302, 307 ff. 396, 399 ff.
34, 2—309, 400
34, 11—85
38, 4—317
38, 8—13
38, 9—309

Mandala iii.

2, 5—310
5, 6—316

Rigveda, continued.

6, 4—69, 77
17, 1—83
18, 5—83
26, 7—71
30, 5—100
30, 9—101
32, 7-9—77, 101 f., 109
33, 4—109
44, 3—102
47, 1—314
53, 6—160
53, 7—306
54, 14—77, 97
55, 10—77

Mandala iv.

1, 6—6
2, 4—78
3, 1, 6—302, 310, 400
3, 7—78, 97
5, 7, 13—316 f.
6, 6—6
7, 7—316
16, 5—102
18, 11—78, 97 f.
30, 1—99, 102
36, 9—310
38, 5—310
50, 2—82
55, 4—79
58, 5—19

Mandala v.

2, 1—341
3, 1-3—79, 97
17, 2—316
21, 4—316
29, 7—81
41, 2—311
41, 20—317
42, 11, 15—311, 400
43, 6—317
46, 2-4—80
49, 3—504
51, 9—80
51, 13—311
52, 16—311, 400
54, 6—317
59, 8—311
60, 5—311, 400
63, 5—71
70, 2 f.—300
73, 5—91
74, 6—316
81, 3—72, 95
83, 8—5
87, 1, 4, 8—81, 97

Mandala vi.

1, 11—310
11, 2—7

Rigveda, continued.

16, 39—312
17, 4—310
17, 7—99, 102
17, 11—81, 92
20, 2—82, 98
21, 9—82
28, 7—312, 400
30, 4—99, 103
31, 2—103
32, 5—109
35, 4—310
38, 3—103
46, 13—109
47, 8—160
48, 13 f.—82
49, 10—312, 400
49, 13—82, 97
50, 2—13
50, 4—312, 400
50, 7—17
50, 12—82
55, 2—301
66, 3—312, 400
69, 1-8—83 f., 97
70, 1, 5—108, 310
72, 2—101, 107 f.
74, 1-4—313, 400 f.

Mandala vii.

1, 6—317
3, 5—80
3, 10—314 f.
10, 4—313
20, 1—314
20, 4—99, 103
21, 3-8—407, 409
31, 7—102
32, 16, 22 f.—99, 103, 258
33, 1—301
34, 21—317
35, 6—313, 400
35, 9—84
36, 5—313
36, 8—317
36, 9—85
37, 2—314
39, 5—78, 85
40, 5—85
41, 1—313
42, 3—317
44, 5—85
46, 1-4—314, 400
56, 1, 2—315, 400
56, 8—319
58, 5—315
59, 12—321
60, 6—314 f.
65, 3—148
78, 4—314

Rigveda, continued.
82, 5—108
83, 8—301
86, 1—108
86, 4—314
87, 1, 2—102, 109
87, 6—69
93, 8—85
98, 3—99, 103, 111
99, 1–7—72. 75, 86 f., 97 f., 504
100, 1–6—82, 86 f., 97, 307, 504
101, 4—111
103, 7—81
104, 12, 24—410

Maṇḍala viii.
1, 21—68
3, 6, 8—104
7, 10—81
9, 12—88, 97
10, 2—89
12, 8—504
12, 16, 25 ff.—89, 98
13, 20—316
14, 13—261
15, 8 ff.—89, 98
17, 12—190
17, 14—319
19, 10—302
20, 3—85
20, 7—314
20, 17—316, 400
20, 23—300
21, 13—15, 100, 104
22, 1—506
22, 13 f.—300, 316
25, 5—82
25, 11–14—89, 402
26, 5—300
27, 8—90
28, 5—305
29, 1–10—90 f., 97, 400
30, 1—113
31, 10—91
31, 12—317
32, 10—82
35, 1, 14—91
36, 4—104
37, 3—104
42, 1, 2, 10—209, 111, 317
48, 3—357
51, 2—76, 104
57, 1—86
59, 5—104
61, 3—316
64, 12—106
66, 4—81
66, 10—27, 91, 97, 502

Rigveda, continued.
67, 5—105
72, 7—93
77, 3—101
77, 4—105
78, 5—105
82, 11—105
85, 5—68
86, 9—105
87, 2—106
89, 3 f.—337
89, 12—78, 97 f.
90, 11 f.—109

Maṇḍala ix.
1, 4—310
4, 1—113
6, 3—310
33, 3—93
34, 2—93
43, 5—310
44, 6—310
45, 5—90
56, 4—93
59, 1—114
61, 16—112
63, 3, 12—93, 310
65, 20—94
66, 18—63
67, 5, 10 f.—301, 310
83, 5—113
86, 28-30—112
87, 5—310
89, 6—112
90, 5—94
96, 5—94, 98, 112, 114
96, 10, 14—114
97, 16—103
97, 24—112
100, 6—95
100, 8—113
101, 13—126
107, 7—113
109, 4—113
112, 4—410
114, 3—115

Maṇḍala x.
1, 3—95, 97
7, 6—7, 9
9, 5—302
10, —48
15, 3—506
17, 3—162
25, 1—314 f.
39, 11—310
40, 12—316
42, 9—106
43, 5—106
48, 3—106

Rigveda, continued.
61, 4–7—46
61, 19—341
64, 8—316
64, 15—317
65, 1—95
66, 3—317
66, 4 f.—95
69, 3—310
72, 1–9—11 f., 28, 115
75, 9—161
79, 3—316
81, 1–7—5 ff., 30
82, 1–7—5 ff.
85, 37—410
86, 1—106, 114
86, 16 f.—410
88, 10—65
88, 11—114
90, —282
90, 2—105
90, 16—23
92, 5, 9—317, 400
92, 11—95
93, 4, 7—317
94, 2—161
95, 4 f.—19
99, 1–8—408 f.
102, 8—301
109, 1—24
110, 6—309
111, 1–5—99, 101, 107 f.
113, 1 f.—93
116, 2—160
121, 1–10—15, 71
125, 6—318, 400
126, 5—318
127, 1–8—304, 498
128, 2—96
129, 1–7—3 f.
133, 2—15, 100, 107
134, 1—25, 99, 107
136, 1–7—318
138, 3—99
139, 5—71, 112
140, 1—310
141, 3, 5—96
142, 2—301
149, 1—101, 108, 110
154, 3—278
168, 3 f.—16
169, 1—320
171, 2—126
180, 2—69
181, 1–3—96
184, 1—96
Rishabha incarnation, 156
Rishikā, 253
Rishis, 22
Rishyaśringa, 167, 172

Ritadhāman, 180
Rodasī, 420
Roer's (Dr. E.) translation of the Upanishads, 421
Rohinī, 260, 262
Rosen's (Dr. F.) Latin translation of the Rigveda, 63
Rost (Dr. R.), suggestion made by him, 210
Roth (Professor Rudolph), article by him in Jour. of the American Oriental Society, 48 —— article by him in Journal of German Oriental Society, 114, 148 —— his Illustrations of the Nirukta, 6, 8, 9, 13, 64, 69, 73, 81 f., 105, 314, etc.
—— his remarks on śravas and śru, 494.
See Böhtlingk and Roth
Rudra, 42, 45, 50
Rudra, as represented in the Rigveda, 299 ff.
—— in the Yajurveda, 321 ff.
—— in the Atharvaveda, 332 ff.
—— in the Brāhmaṇas, 339 ff.
—— in the Upanishads, 355 ff.
—— in the Rāmāyaṇa, 176, 364 ff., 405
—— in the Mahābhārata, 184–205, 223 ff., 230 ff., 240 f., 266 ff., 278 ff., 282 ff., 373 ff.
—— in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, 378 ff.
—— in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, 392
—— in the Linga Purāṇa, 386 ff.
—— in the Harivaṁśa, 393
Rudra identified with Agni, 339 ff.
—— fights with Vishṇu, 176, 279
—— fights with Arjuna, 231
—— identified with Krishṇa, or Vishṇu, 280
Rudra, his linga, 192, 405 ff.
—— his unchastity, 191
—— worshipped by Krishṇa and Arjuna, 184 ff., 195
—— worshipped by Brāhmā and Vishṇu, 193
—— his fight with Krishṇa, 279
—— the creator of Brahmā & Vishṇu, 188, 193, 391
—— sprung from Brahmā, 392 f.
—— sprung from Krishṇa or Vishṇu, 267, 273
—— identified with Vishṇu, 241, 280, 384
—— identified with the Supreme Spirit, 185, 232
—— disturbs Daksha's sacrifice, 240, 268, 372 ff.
—— destroys castles of the Asuras, 203, 225 f.
—— his vigour increased by hymns, 226
—— his third eye formed, 270
—— his names applied to Vishṇu, 272
—— prevalence of his worship as described in the Mahābhārata, 284 ff.
—— seizes victims at sacrifice, 284
—— human victims devoted to him, 288 ff.
—— father of Maruts, 305
—— curses Kandarpa, 364
—— the lord of thieves, 327 —— attributes applied to, or abuse of, him explained away by commentators, 327, 379
—— cursed by Daksha, 380
—— cursed by Bhṛigu, 382
—— plucks out Bhṛigu's beard and Bhaga's eyes, knocks out Pūshan's teeth, and cuts off Daksha's head, 383 f. (see also 200, 268)
—— formerly general of the gods, 365 —— receives the Gangā on his head, 365
—— swallows poison, 366
—— his abode, 367
—— identified with Viśvakarman, 369, 376 f.
Rudra, his linga appears & allays a dispute between Brahmā and Vishṇu, 390 —— plays dice with Kuvera, 483
—— his linga worship, 192, 405 ff.
—— remarks of Professors Wilson, Weber, and Whitney on him, 394 ff.
—— summary of views regarding him, 399 ff.
Rudra Prajāpati, 46
—— Vāstoshpati, 46
Rudras, 64, 180, 331
Rudrānī, 405
Rudravartani, sense of the word, 316
Rukmin, 215, 286
Rukmiṇī, wife of Krishṇa, 189

S.

S'achi, 135
Sādhyas, 180
Sagara, 365
Saint John's Gospel, iii. 8–16
S'aivas, 385
S'aivya, 253
S'ākapūṇi, 64 ff., 97, 156
S'akra, 105
S'akti, 383
S'ākvara sāma, 162
Sālankaṭankaṭā, 486
S'alya, King of the Madras, 221 ff.
Sāmaveda, parallel passages from, 5, 10, 63, &c.
—— i. 90, and i. 361—27
S'ambara, 86
S'ambhu, 43, 367
S'ambhu, King of the Daityas, 459
Sanaka, 38
Sanandana, 38
S'aṅda, 155
Sandhyāvidyā, 428
S'ankara on Brahma-sūtras i. 3, 28, referred to, 131
S'ānkhāyana Brāhmaṇa vi. 1 ff., 343
Sānkhya, 3, 41, 224
S'āntā, 174
Saprathas, 96
Saptadas'a stoma, 162
Sarasvatī, 35, 80, 85, 424, 428
Sarayū, 368, 478 f.

S'ārnga, 181
S'aru, 78
S'arva, 186, 328, 332
Sarvamedha, 369
S'arvānī, 405
S'atadhanvan, 253
S'ataghnī, a magical weapon, 249
S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa quoted—

i.
2, 3, 6 —290
2, 5, 1 ff.—122
7, 2, 22 — 59
7, 2, 24 —106
7, 3, 1 —202
7, 3, 8 —339, 403
7, 3, 18 — 59
7, 4, 1 ff.— 45, 201
9, 2, 34 —106

ii.
1, 1, 3 — 21
1, 4, 11 — 24
1, 4, 27 —123
2, 2, 8 — 58
2, 4, 1 — 28
4, 4, 1 — 28
6, 2, 9 —321

iii.
1, 3, 3 — 14, 115
9, 4, 20 — 27

iv.
1, 5, 1 — 48, 129
5, 4, 1 ff.— 61
5, 7, 2 — 54
6, 3, 1 — 56

v.
1, 1, 1 — 60

vi.
1, 1, 1 ff.—20 ff., 404
1, 2, 1 — 46
1, 2, 8 —116
1, 2, 13, 21 — 21
1, 3, 1 ff.— 21
1, 3, 7 ff.—339, 404
2, 1, 1 — 21
3, 1, 18 — 72
6, 2, 11 — 61
6, 3, 2 — 61
7, 1, 17 — 24
8, 1, 14 — 28

vii.
4, 1, 19 — 15
4, 3, 5 — 27
5, 2, 11 — 19
5, 2, 21 — 22

S'atap Brāhmaṇa, contd.

ix.
1, 1, 1 ff.—330, 347
1, 1, 6 ff.—348
2, 2, 2 — 21
3, 3, 2 — 56
5, 2, 1 — 56
5, 1, 12 ff.— 58

x.
1, 3, 1 ff.— 54
1, 4, 1 — 55
2, 1, 1 — 29
2, 2, 1, 5 — 23
2, 3, 18 — 23
2, 4, 8 — 23
3, 5, 13 — 56
4, 2, 2 — 55
4, 3, 1 ff.— 56
4, 4, 1 — 54
6, 5, 1 — 3

xi.
1, 2, 12 — 58
1, 4, 4 —506
1, 6, 1 ff.— 17, 24
1, 6, 14 — 21
1, 8, 1 f. — 30, 60
2, 3, 1 — 29
2, 3, 6 — 58
2, 7, 26 — 61
3, 2, 1 — 61
4, 3, 1 — 56
5, 1, 1 — 19
6, 3, 8 —116

xii.
3, 4, 1 — 29
7, 3, 1 —261

xiii.
2, 4, 1 — 29
6, 1, 1 — 29
7, 1, 1 — 29
7, 1, 14 f. —369

xiv.
1, 1, 1 —124
1, 2, 11 — 27
2, 2, 2 — 24
4, 2, 21, 23 —129
7, 1, 34 —131
8, 1, 1 —258
8, 6, 1 — 24

S'atarudriya, 186, 193, 199, 322 ff.
—— its object and name explained, 349
S'atarūpā, 13, 48
Satī (Mahādeva's wife), 378, 385. See Umā
S'atrughna, 275, 445
Sattva guṇa, 267, 276
Satyaloka, 388
Saubha, a magical city, 246, 249, etc.
Saumanasa peak, 440
Saumya adhvara, 57
S'aurva, 328
Sauvīras, 214
Savana, 60
Sāvarṇi Manvantara, 149, 155
Savitṛi, 20, 72, 80, 109. See Sūrya
Sāvitrī, 48, 379
Sāyana, 11, 12, 14, 46, 261, 303, etc.
Sāyangṛiha muni, 252
Schlegel's Rāmāyaṇa, 33, and passim
—— his opinion referred to, 170
Scholia minora on the Iliad quoted, 255
S'esha, 110
Siddhas, 165
Siddhāntas, 110
Siddhānta-śiromaṇi, 110
Siddhāśrama, 135
S'ipivishṭa, 87 f., 504 ff.
S'iśnadeva, sense of the word, 407 ff.
S'iśupāla disputes Kṛishṇa's right to honour, 205 ff.
—— his previous history, 211
—— slain by Kṛishṇa, 215
Sītā, daughter of Janaka, and wife of Rāma, 175, and passim —— her birth from the ground, 464 f.
—— threatened by Rākshasīs, 416
—— sees Rāma wounded, 451
—— was formerly Vedavatī, 460
—— born for Rāvaṇa's destruction, 460, 471
—— enters the fire, 178
S'itikaṇṭha, 176, 240
S'iva, 176 (see Rudra)
S'ivā, wife of Angiras
Skambha, 11 f., 18 ff.
Skanda (see Kārttikeya)
Skanda Purāṇa, 152
Sky (Dyu), 46
Sky, daughter of Prajāpati, 45
Soma, 77, 80, 94 f., 108, 113 f., 280, 422

Somagiri, 367
Speech, 22
Sphulinginī, 429, 498
S'raddhā, 27
S'rī, 76, 168, 273, 453
S'rīdhara Svāmin, 51
S'rīkaṇṭha, 241
S'rīvatsa, 241, 263
Stasinus, Cypria, 256
Stevenson (Dr.), on the ante-brahmanical religion of the Hindus, 406
Sthānu, 165, 167
Stomas, 162
Sudarśana (name of Vishṇu's chakra), 191, 249
Sudarśana, 249
S'uddhāś'uddhīya, 491
Suddhūmravarṇā, 429
Sugrīva, 452, 465
Sukes'a, 486
S'ukra, 150, 152 ff.
Sulohitā, 429, 498
Sumāli, 487, 495
Sumitrā, 173, 175
Sunāman, 245, 249
S'unaśśepa, 289, 300
Sundarī, 487
Supārśva (minister of Rāvaṇa), 413
S'ūrasenas, 245
S'ūrpaṇakhā, 482, 488
Sūrya, 29, 61, 66
—— texts in praise of, 109, 473
—— one of the triad of gods, 66, 160 ff., 298
Sūryā (goddess), 91
S'ushṇa, 107
Sutala, 149
Svadhā, 4
—— sense of the word, 314
Svadhāvat, sense of, 314
Svāhā, 353
Svapivāta, sense of the word, 314
Svarāṭ, 43
Svayambhū, 47, 173
Svāyambhuva, 13
S'vetadvīpa, 241
S'vetāśvatara, Upanishad, 355
Svishṭakṛit, 200, 372

T.

Taittirīya, 70
Taittirīya Āraṇyaka—
i. 14, 1 —116
— 23, 1 — 24
Taittirīya Āran., contd.—
v. 1, 1 ff.—127
x. 1, 8 —28, 502
— 1, 150 —422
Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa—
i.
1, 3, 5 ff.— 24
4, 1, 1 — 59
6, 1, 2 —347
6, 4, 10 —321
7, 1, 2 —347
7, 1, 6 —261
ii.
2, 9, 9 — 25
6, 9, 1 ff.— 21
iii.
1, 5, 7 —129
2, 7, 9 —15
2, 9, 6 —61
4, 1, 1 —289
9, 21, 1 —116
10, 9, 1 —58
12, 3, 1 —29
Taittirīya Sanhitā—
i.
1, 5, 1 —341
1, 8, 1 —126
ii.
2, 12, 5 —505
3, 2, 1 —55
4, 9, 2 —492
4, 12, 2 —78
5, 5, 2 —504, 506
6, 8, 3 —200
iii.
2, 4, 1 —126
4, 5, 1 —129
iv.
1, 8, 3 ff.—17
6, 2, 1 ff.—5 f.
v.
4, 3, 1 —348
5, 7, 4 —348
7, 5, 3 —24
vi.
2, 4, 2 —39
2, 7, 5 —492
6, 8, 3 —160
vii.
1, 5, 1 ff.—24
4, 9, 1 —201
Tālaketu, 253
Talavakāra Upanishad, 420, 422
Tamas, 267, 276
Tandi, 195
Tāṇḍya Mahābrāhmaṇa—
iv. 1, 4—503
vi. 9, 7—349
vii. 4, 2—503
— 5, 6—507
— 5, 11; 6, 5—503
— 5, 20—152
— 8, 1 f.—503
viii. 1, 4—491 f.
— 2, 1—502
— 2, 10—503
ix. 7, 9—504
xii. 5, 23; 9, 21; 13, 27—503
— 6, 8—507
xiii. 4, 17—491
xiv. 11, 28—491 f.
xviii. 1, 9—492
— 6, 26—506
xx. 14, 2—503
— 15, 6—504
Tanūnapāt, 9
Tapoloka, 146
Tāraka, Tārakāksha, an Asura, 223 f.
Tārkshya, 148
Tides, cause of the, 219
Time, in the form of an ascetic, 477
Tīrtha, a commentator on the Rāmāyaṇa, 480
Tishya, 316
Trayastriṁśa stoma, 163
Triad of Agni, Vāyu (or Indra), and Sūrya, 61, 163, 298, 421
—— of Brahmā, Vishṇu and S'iva (or Rudra), 280
Trijaṭā, a Rākshasī, 451
Trikadruka, 77, 87
Trikūṭa, 285
Triṃūrti, 163
Triṇava stoma, 162
Triṇavindu, 486
Tripishṭapa, 284
Triple science, 60
Trishṭubh, 123, 162
Triśringa, 355
Trita Āptya, 89, 409
Trivikrama, 67, 273
Trivṛit stoma, 161
Tryambaka, 204, 321
Tūrghna, 128
Tushitas, 120
Tvashṭṛi, 80, 91, 95, 97, 115, 317.

U.

Uchhaiśśravas, 245
Udayagiri, or Udaya-parvata, 65, 440
Udgātṛi, 66
Ugra and Ugradeva, 336, 339, 342 f., 346
Ugrasena, 249
Ukthya ritual, 84
Umā, daughter of Daksha and Prasūti, 378, 385
—— reborn as daughter of Himavat and Menā, 385
Umā Haimavatī, 421 ff.
Umā, how she got her name, 431
—— her names and attributes, 432
—— born as a child of Yaśodā, 434 —— connected with Vishnu as Mahāmāyā, 435 —— identified with the Supreme Spirit, 436, (Called also Aparṇā, Devī, Durgā, Kālī, Karālī, Pārvatī, Satī, Yoga-nidrā)
Upahavya, the, 491
Upamanyu, 189
Upendra, 150. See Vishnu
Urmilā, 465
Urukrama, 121
Uśanas, 142 f., 150, 152
Ushas, 91, 340
Uśijes, 112
Uttānapad, 12 f.
Uttānapāda, 13
Uttanga muni, 275
Uttara Kurus, 367
Uttara Mīmānsā, 131

V.

Vāch, 23, 46 f.
Vaijayanta, 393
Vaimānika creation, 388
Vairāja sāman, 162
Vairūpa sāman, 162
Vaishnava rite, 294, 416, 496
Vaishnavas, 377
Vaiśravana, 370, 482, 486
Vaitaranī river, 284
Vaivasvata Manvantara, 120, 136
Vājasaneyi Sanhitā quoted or referred to—
3, 57-63—321, 420
5, 11—430
Vāj. Sanhitā, continued—
5, 15—66
5, 16—86
6, 3—74
8, 4—5
10, 20—16
11, 57—126
12, 102—16
13, 4—15
16, 1-66—302, 322ff., 505
17, 17-23—5
17, 25-31—5 f.
18, 66-71
23, 3—16
23, 20—171
23, 49—67
25, 12, 13—15 f.
27, 5—17
27, 25 f.—16
30, 5—289
32, 4—358
32, 6 f.—16
33, 74—4
33, 48 f.—80
37, 3-5—27, 126
39, 8—403
Vājaśravas, sense of the word, 310, 494
Vajramushṭi, 487
Vaktra, 286
Vālmiki, "sees" the Rāmāyana, 441
Vāmadeva, 171
Vāmana Purāna, 228
Vamra, 409
Varadā, 428
Varāha, an Asura, 93. See "Boar"
Varāha Purāna, 278
Varchin, 86
Varuna, 14, 20, 48, 68, 74, 76, 98
—— his majesty celebrated, 108 f.
—— his daughter, 458, 462. See Punjikasthalā Varunānī, 405
—— his bonds or nooses, 148, 250
Vasishtha, 33, 73, 96, 171, etc.
Vāstavya, 262
Vāstoshpati, 47
Vāsudeva, 38, 218, 270, etc.
—— of the Pundras, 297
Vasu Sāvitra, 495
Vasus, 54, 91
Vāta, 16, 76, 96
Vāyu, 29, 46, 66, 70, 76, 89, etc.
Vāyu, one of the triad of gods, 66, 70, 160 ff.
Vāyu Purāna quoted, 188, 267, 278, 375, 377
Vedas, depreciated by the Śaivas, 381
Vedavatī, 458, 471
Vedavyāsa incarnation, 156
Vendidad, 328
Vibhāndaka, 166
Vibhīshana, 370, 450, 452, 476
—— his righteous character, 483, 489
—— obtains boon from Brahmā, 483, 489
Vibhvan, 80
Vidarbhas, 215
Videhas, 177
Vidhātṛi, 81, 121, 204
Vidūratha, 246
Vidyutkeśa, 486
Vināyaka, 359
Vindhyāvali, 145, 149
Vīrabhadra, 373, 377
Virāj, 44, 48, 148, 390
Virinchi, Virinchya, 378, 389. See Brahmā.
Virochana, 133
Viśāla, 214
Viśesha, 44
Vishnu, 20, 27 f., 31, 34, 36 ff., 47, 219, & passim
—— as represented in Rigveda, 63-97
—— his three steps, 63 ff., 229, 439
—— his rank in the Rigveda, as compared with other deities, 97-114
—— as an Āditya, 114-121, 164
—— as described in the Brāhmanas, 121 ff.
—— a dwarf, 123
—— the sacrifice, 125
—— his incarnation as a fish, tortoise, boar, 27, 37 ff.
—— as a dwarf, 130 ff.
—— kills Śukra's mother, 152
—— doomed by Śukra's curse to be born seven times on earth, 152, 155 f.
—— his ten incarnations according to the Matsya Purāna, 156

Vishṇu, his twenty-two incarnations according to the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, 156
——— his incarnations innumerable according to ditto, 156
——— incarnation as Rāma, 156, 168 ff., 175, 441 ff.
——— his incarnation as Kṛishṇa, 156, 169, 216 ff., 252 ff.
——— one with Rudra, 241
——— one with the Supreme Spirit, 38, 50, 181, 264 ff.
——— fights with Rudra, 177 f.
——— Brahmā and Mahādeva produced from him, 230, 267, 273
——— his dispute with Brahmā, 389
——— sprung from Rudra (or Mahādeva), 391
Vishṇupada, 65
Vishṇu Purāṇa quoted or referred to—

i.	2,	21 f.	—3
—	2,	25	—41
—	3,	1 ff.	—36
—	4,	1 ff.	—36
—	7		—385
—	7,	1	—35
—	7,	6	—392
—	7, 12, &c.		— 35, 48
—	7,	26	—35
—	8,	9	—385
—	15,	90 ff.	—119
—	22,	36 ff.	—262
ii.	5,	19	—110
iii.	1,		—136
iv.	14,	4	—215
v.	1,	1 ff.	—254 ff.
—	26,	1	—215

Vishvaksena, 181
Viśravas, 482, 486
Viśvajit sacrifice, 137
Viśvakarman, 22, 149, 176, 204, 367 f., 377, 484
Viśvāmitra, 177, 189
Viśvarūpī, 429
Viśvedevas, 89, 128
Vivasvat, 14 f., 33 f.
Vraja, 50
Vrātya, 338
Vṛihadratha, 291
Vṛihaspatisava, 382
Vṛishaśipra, 86
Vṛitra, 78, 89
Vyāḍi, 490

W.

Waters, 17 f., 22 ff., 31 ff., 119
Warriors slain in battle, their future rewards, 277
Weber, Prof. Albrecht, see "Indische Studien" ——— translation and remarks supplied by him, 201
——— his dissertation on Rudra, 395 ff.
——— on Umā, 421 ff.
——— his article in Journal of Germ. Or. Soc., 131
——— Indische Streifen, 289
——— article in Kuhn and Schleicher's Beiträge, 81
——— his notice of the first edition of this work, 298
——— remarks on Muṇḍaka Upanishad, i. 2, 4—429
——— on S'ipivishṭa, 505
Westergaard's dissertation on Indian history, 405
——— Radices, 299
Whitney's (Prof. W. D.) remarks on Rudra, 398 f.
Wilkinson's (Mr. L.) translation of Siddhānta-śiromaṇi, 110
Williams's (Prof. Monier) Indian Epic Poetry, 161, 166
——— Sanskrit English Dictionary, 249
Wilson's (Prof. H. H.) Sānkhyakārikā, 41
——— Sanskrit Dictionary, 82
——— translation of Rig-veda, 66, 171
——— of Vishṇu Purāṇa, 3, 41, 48, 119, etc.
——— his remarks on Rudra, 394 f.
"Work-gods" are not objects of sacrifice, but can offer it, 131, 496

Y.

Yadus, 50
Yajna incarnation, 156
Yājnikas, 159
Yajush, 10, 96
Yajushmatī, 57
Yakshas, 153, 167
Yama, 48, 180, 203, 333
Yamī, 48
Yāska. See Nirukta
Yatis, 491 f.
Yātudhāna, 332
Yatudhānīs, 326
Yavana, 253
Yoga, 224
Yoganidrā, 435
Yudhishṭhira, 205 & passim ——— purposes rājasūya sacrifice, 287, 292

Z.

Zeus, 256

THE END.

STEPHEN AUSTIN AND SONS, PRINTERS, HERTFORD

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA
294.1M8901868 C001 V004
ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS ON THE ORIGIN AN
3 0112 014311689

LIBRARY OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN
294.1 M890 1868
v. 5
STX

ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS

ON THE

ORIGIN AND HISTORY

OF

THE PEOPLE OF INDIA,

THEIR RELIGION AND INSTITUTIONS.

COLLECTED, TRANSLATED, AND ILLUSTRATED

BY

J. MUIR, D.C.L., LL.D., PH.D.

VOLUME FIFTH.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO A KNOWLEDGE OF THE COSMOGONY, MYTHOLOGY, RELIGIOUS IDEAS, LIFE AND MANNERS, OF THE INDIANS IN THE VEDIC AGE.

LONDON:
TRÜBNER & CO., 8 AND 60, PATERNOSTER ROW.

1870.

(All rights reserved.)

Οὐ γὰρ οὖν οὐδὲ ἄψυχον ἀνθρώποις ὁ θεὸς ὑποχείριον· ἀπὸ τούτων δὲ τοὺς χρωμένους αὐτοῖς καὶ δωρουμένους ἡμῖν καὶ παρέχοντας ἀένναα καὶ διαρκῆ θεοὺς ἐνομίσαμεν, οὐχ ἑτέρους παρ' ἑτέροις οὐδὲ βαρβάρους καὶ Ἕλληνας οὐδὲ νοτίους καὶ βορείους· ἀλλ' ὥσπερ ἥλιος καὶ σελήνη καὶ οὐρανὸς καὶ γῆ καὶ θάλασσα κοινὰ πᾶσιν, ὀνομάζεται δὲ ἄλλως ὑπ' ἄλλων, οὕτως ἑνὸς λόγου τοῦ τᾶυτα κοσμεῦντος καὶ μιᾶς προνοίας ἐπιτροπευούσης, καὶ δυνάμεων ὑπουργῶν ἐπὶ πάντας τεταγμένων, ἕτεραι παρ' ἑτέροις κατὰ νόμους γεγόνασι τιμαὶ καὶ προσηγορίαι· καὶ συμβόλοις χρῶνται, καθιεράμενοι μὲν ἀμυδροῖς, ὅι δε τρανωτέροις, ἐπὶ τὰ θεῖα τὴν νόησιν ὁδηγοῦντες οὐκ ἀκινδύνως. Ἔνιοι γὰρ ἀποσφαλέντες παντάπασιν εἰς δεισιδαιμονίαν ὤλισθον· οἱ δε φεύγοντες ὥσπερ ἕλος τὴν δεισιδαιμονίαν, ἔλαθον αὖθις ὥσπερ εἰς κρημνὸν ἐμπεσόντες τὴν ἀθεότητα.—Plutarch, de Iside et Osiride, section 67.

[In opposition to those who represented Dionysos, the wine-god, as meaning merely wine, Hephaistos fire, Demeter corn, etc., Plutarch urges]:—

"For the god is not a lifeless thing, subject to human handling and control. But from the fact that they dispose of, and bestow upon us, these objects, and preserve them to us perpetual and constant, we have considered them to be gods. And the gods are not different among different peoples, they are not Barbarian, or Hellenic, nc southern or northern; but just as the sun, and the moon, and the heaven, and the earth, and the sea are common to all—though they receive different names from different races—so too, while there is but one reason that orders, and one providence that superintends, this universe, and administrative powers are set over all, different honours and appellations have been assigned to these divine beings by the laws of different nations. And symbols too are employed, some of an obscure character, by initiated persons, and others of a plainer description by others, with the view of guiding men's conceptions of divine things. But this practice is not free from danger; for some persons, deviating from the truth, have slipped into superstition, while others, seeking to avoid the marsh of superstition, have fallen into atheism as over a precipice."

HERTFORD:
PRINTED BY STEPHEN AUSTIN.

294.1
M89o
1868
V.5

PREFACE.

In the present volume I have reprinted, with the addition of some new materials, subsequently collected, and of the texts on which they are founded, a series of papers on the theogony, mythology, and religious ideas of the Vedic poets, and other subjects, which originally appeared in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland for 1864, and the two following years: and I have appended a new section, on life and manners during the Vedic age.

I have not thought it necessary to translate all the texts to which I have referred in proof of the representations I have made. To have done so would have extended the work to an unnecessary length, as numerous verses are cited for the sake of a single epithet. Some of the texts are rendered in full; but in many, perhaps most, cases I have contented myself with giving the substance of several passages of similar or identical purport.

Nor have I considered it necessary to supply here any summary of the contents of the volume, such as was given in the prefaces to the third and fourth volumes, and in that to the second edition of the first volume. The summary given in the Table of Contents seems sufficiently ample to afford the reader the means of readily ascertaining what he may expect to find in the body of the work.

I have tried to exhibit, in a metrical form, the substance of the ideas regarding Indra and some other deities, which are more fully illustrated in the prose sections.

I should also further remark that in this volume I have attempted nothing more than to exhibit the most prominent features of the gods,—such as display themselves on the surface. It must remain for some more profound and critical scholar, after maturer investigation, to penetrate more deeply into the nature and essence of the Vedic mythology, to estimate and represent it in a more philosophical spirit, to investigate the age of the different hymns, and to determine how far it may be possible to trace in them a development of the mythology, from a simpler to a more complex state, or any other modification of its character or elements, even before it began to show any tendency towards monotheism.

Meanwhile, and until the subject shall have been treated in a manner more befitting its importance, the materials which I have brought together, arranged, and interpreted, will enable those students of mythology who are themselves unable to consult the originals, to form, I trust, a not inaccurate, and a tolerably complete, conception of the character and attributes of the Indian deities in the earliest form in which they are represented to us by written records.

294.1
M 89o
1868
V.5

CONTENTS.

PAGES.

v., vi. PREFACE.

1 — 7. INTRODUCTION.

2. (1) Affinities of the Indian and Grecian mythologies.

3. (2) Antiquity and peculiarity of the Vedic mythology.

4. (3) Origin of cosmogonic and mythological speculation.

6. (4) Variety in the conceptions of the Vedic poets.

8 — 20. SECTION I. THE INDIAN GODS GENERALLY, AS REPRESENTED IN THE RIG-VEDA.

8. (1) Yāska's classification of the gods.

9. (2) Their number.

12. (3) Their origin and immortality.

16. (4) Different generations of gods and their mutual relations.

18. (5) Their powers and prerogatives.

21 — 34. SECTION II. DYAUS AND PṚITHIVĪ (HEAVEN AND EARTH).

22. (1) Heaven and Earth described as the universal parents.

24. (2) Passages to the same effect from the classical authors.

30. (3) Heaven and Earth elsewhere spoken of as created.

32. (4) Speculations about their origin.

35 — 53. SECTION III. ADITI.

35. (1) The epithets by which she is characterized.

37. (2) Origin of the conception of Aditi according to Professors Roth and Müller.

37. (3) Aditi as the mother of the Ādityas.
38. (4) Is Aditi ever identified with the sky?
40. (5) Aditi seems to be distinguished from the Earth.
42. (6) Aditi and Diti.
43. (7) Aditi may be a personification of universal nature.
46. (8) Aditi as a forgiver of sin.
47. (9) Aditi's position is sometimes a subordinate one.
48. (10) Creation as described in Rig-veda, x. 72; birth of Aditi, Daksha, the gods, and the Ādityas.

54— 57. SECTION IV. The Ādityas.

58— 76*d*. SECTION V. Mitra and Varuṇa.
58. (1) General idea of these two gods.
59. (2) Their chief characteristics.
61. (3) Functions and attributes of Varuṇa.
68. (4) Conjoint functions and attributes of Mitra and Varuṇa.
69. (5) Hymn addressed to Mitra alone.
69. (6) Professor Roth's remarks on Mitra and Varuṇa.
71. (7) The Indian Mitra and the Zoroastrian Mithra.
72. (8) Is there any historical connection between Varuṇa and Ahura Mazda?
72. (9) Varuṇa connected with the element of water, even in the Rig-veda.
75. (10) Explanations by Professors Roth and Westergaard of the process by which Varuṇa came to be regarded as the regent of the sea.
76. (11) Correspondence of Varuṇa with the Greek Uranos.
76*a*. (1) Varuṇa, as represented in the hymns,—a metrical sketch.

77—139. SECTION VI. Indra.
77. (1) His origin and parents; his wife.
83. (2) His attributes, physical and mental.
84. (3) His chariot and horses.
86. (4) His thunderbolt and other weapons and instruments.
88. (5) His love of soma-juice; his combats with the cloud-demons: explanation of the myth.

98. (5*a*) Indra's greatness.
103. (6) His relations with his worshippers.
115. (7) Apparent mutual incongruity of some of the preceding representations of Indra.
116. (8) Professor Roth's theory of the supersession of the worship of Varuṇa by that of Indra.
118. (9) Supersession of Dyaus by Indra according to Professors Benfey and Bréal.
120. (10) Opinions of Professors Roth, Whitney, Spiegel, and Dr. F. Windischmann on the question whether Varuṇa and Ahura Muzda are historically connected.
121. (11) Whether there are any passages in the hymns which decisively show that Indra was superseding Varuṇa.
126. (12) Indra as represented in the hymns,—a metrical sketch. (1) Invitation of Indra to the sacrifice. (2) His birth. (3) His arrival. (4) Indra invited to drink the soma-draught. (5) Praise of Soma. (6) Indra's drinking song. (7) He drinks the libation. (8) Indra, attended by the Maruts, sets out to encounter Vṛitra. (9) His conflict with Vṛitra. (10) His greatness. (11) His relation to his worshippers.

140—142. SECTION VII. Parjanya.

143—146. SECTION VIII. Vāyu.

147—154. SECTION IX. The Maruts.
147. (1) Their parentage, epithets, characteristics, and action.
153. (2) Their relations to Indra, and the rival claims of the two parties.

155—161. SECTION X. Sūrya.
155. (1) The two sun-gods separately celebrated in the hymns.
157. (2) Sūrya's parentage, relations to the other gods, epithets, and functions.
158. (3) Subordinate position sometimes assigned to him.
159. (4) Translations in prose and verse of a hymn to Sūrya.

162—170. SECTION XI. Savitṛi.
162. (1) His epithets, characteristics, and functions.
165. (2) Passages in which the derivation of his name seems to be alluded to.
168. (3) Savitṛi sometimes distinguished from, sometimes identified with, Sūrya.

171—180. SECTION XII. Pūshan.
171. (1) Functions and epithets of Pūshan.
174. (2) Hymns addressed to him (i. 42; vi. 53-vi. 58, and portions of others) quoted and translated.

181—198. SECTION XIII. Ushas.
181. (1) Three hymns to Ushas (i. 48; i. 92; i. 113), and portions of others quoted and translated.
190. (2) Relations of Ushas to other deities.
193. (3) Her epithets, functions, and characteristics.
196. (4) Ushas, as represented in the hymns,—a metrical sketch.

199—223. SECTION XIIIa. Agni.
199. (1) His functions.
204. (2) His births, and triple existence.
211. (3) His epithets and characteristics.
214. (4) High divine functions ascribed to him.
216. (5) His relations to his worshippers.
221. (6) Agni,—a metrical sketch.

224—233. SECTION XIV. Tvashṭṛi.
224. (1) His epithets, functions, and relations.
227. (2) His daughter and her wedding.
229. (3) Hostility of Indra and Tvashṭṛi.

234—257. SECTION XV. The Aśvins.
234. (1) Their character and parentage, their relations to Sūryā, their attributes and accompaniments.
235. (2) Legends regarding different persons delivered or favoured by them.

248. (3) Their connection with other deities.
249. (4) Their relations to their worshippers.
250. (5) Legend of Chyavana and the Aśvins, according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and the Mahābhārata.
255. (6) Remarks on the Aśvins by Professor Goldstücker.

258—271. SECTION XVI. Soma.
259. (1) Quotation from Euripides relating to the Greek god Dionysus.
261. (2) Prevalence and enthusiastic character of the ancient Soma-worship.
262. (3) How the soma-plant was brought to the earth.
264. (4) Soma's wives.
265. (5) Properties ascribed to the soma-plant or its presiding deity.
266. (6) Divine powers attributed to Soma.
269. (7) Soma associated with other gods.
270. (8) Soma in the post-vedic age a name of the moon.

272—283. SECTION XVII. Bṛihaspati and Brahmaṇaspati.
272. Professor Roth's account of this deity.
274. (1) Passages in which he is celebrated (R.V. ii. 23; ii. 24, 1 ff.; iv. 50, 1, 4 ff.; x. 68, 6 ff.; i. 40, 5 f.; i. 190, 1 f.; v. 43, 12; x. 98, 7) quoted and translated.
280. (2) Parentage and attributes of the god.
281. (3) Whether Bṛihaspati and Brahmaṇaspati are identifiable with Agni;—opinions of M. Langlois, and Professors H. H. Wilson and Max Müller.

284—335. SECTION XVIII. Yama and the doctrine of a future life.
284. (1) References to immortality in the earlier books of the Rig-veda.
286. (2) References to the Fathers (the souls of departed ancestors) in the earlier books of the Rig-veda.
287. (3) Hymns and portions of hymns relating to Yama and the Fathers, viz., x. 17, 1 f.; x. 10; x. 14; x. 15; x. 16, etc., quoted and translated.

300. (4) Summary of the conceptions conveyed in the preceding quotations.
305. (5) Further quotations from the hymns on the subject of paradise, its pleasures, the continuance there of the family relations, and on future punishment.
314. (6) Quotations from later Indian works, the Brāhmaṇas, etc., with some remarks of Professor Weber on their doctrines regarding the destiny of the soul.
327. (7) Yama and a future life,—a metrical sketch.
329. (8) Nachikétas, an ancient theosophic story, metrically rendered from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa and the Kaṭha Upanishad.

336. SECTION XIX. Minor Divinities: Trita Āptya, Ahirbudhnya, and Aja Ekapād.

337—349. SECTION XX. The Goddesses mentioned in the Vedic hymns.
337. (1) Sarasvatī, Iḷā, Bhāratī, Mahī, Hotrā, Varūtrī, and Dhishaṇā.
343. (2) Āpas, the Waters; hymn to the Sindhu, Gangā, Yamunā, and other rivers.
345. (3) The Apsarases.
345. (4) Agnāyī, Varuṇānī, Aśvinī, Rodasī.
346. (5) Araṇyānī; (6) Rākā, Sinivālī, and Gungū; (7) Śraddhā.
348. (8) Lakshmī and Śrī.

350—420. SECTION XXI. Progress of the Vedic Religion towards abstract conceptions of the Deity.
350. Introductory remarks, embracing references to some texts indicating a tendency in this direction.
353. (1) Texts of a more decidedly monotheistic or pantheistic character.
354. (2) Viśvakarman.
355. (3) Hiraṇyagarbha; (4) Brahmaṇaspati, Daksha, and Aditi.
356. (5) Nonentity, entity, and the One, R.V. x. 129, with illustrations from the commentary on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, etc.
367. (6) The Purusha-sūkta, R.V. x. 90; the hymn on Purusha, A.V. x. 2, etc.

378. (7) Skambha and Brahma, A.V. x. 7; x. 8, etc; with remarks by Professor Goldstücker on Skambha, etc.
390. (8) Prajāpati.
393. (9) Prāṇa, as celebrated in A.V. xi. 4.
395. (10) Rohita, as celebrated in A.V. xiii. 1, and xiii. 2.
396. (11) The Uchhishṭa, as celebrated in A.V. xi. 7.
398. (12) Sacrificial implements, etc.; (13) Anumati.
399. (14) The Ox or Kettle; (15) the Brahmachārin.
402. (16) Kāma, as celebrated in A.V. ix. 2.
407. (17) Kāla, or Time, as celebrated in A.V. xix. 53 and 54.
410. (18) General remarks on the preceding passages.
412. (19) Whether polytheism or monotheism was the earliest form of the Aryan religion: opinions of Messrs. Pictet, Pfleiderer, Scherer, Réville, and Roth on this subject.

421—449. SECTION XXII. Miscellaneous hymns from the Rig- and Atharva-vedas.
421. Introductory remarks.
422. (1) Hymn to Araṇyānī, R.V. x. 146.
424. (2) R.V. ix. 112, on the variety of human aims.
425. (3) R.V. x. 34, the gambler's lament, with quotations from the A.V. regarding the prevalence of gaming.
431. (4) R.V. x. 117, in praise of liberality.
433. (5) R.V. x. 107, in praise of liberality to priests.
435. (6) R.V. vii. 103, Frogs reviving in the autumn, compared to Brāhmans celebrating their rites.
438. (7) A.V. vii. 12, relating to social meetings.
439. (8) A.V. iii. 30, incantation for concord in a family.
440. (9) A.V. v. 30, incantation to preserve the life of a sick man, or recall the spirit of a dead man.
442. (10) A.V. vii. 53, on the same subject.
443. (11) A.V. viii. 1, ,, ,, ,,
446. (12) A.V. viii. 2, ,, ,, ,, ,

450—473. SECTION XXIII. Brief Notes on Society and Life in the Vedic age, as represented in the hymns.
450. (1) The country occupied by the Vedic people, their villages and cities.

451. (2) Their religious worship.
453. (3) Did the Vedic Indians make images of their gods?
454. (4) Kings and principalities.
457. (5) Different ranks in society,—rich and poor; (6) Domestic relations, polygamy, remarriage of widows, freedom of women, levirical marriages, sexual immorality.
461. (7) Dress, ornaments, etc.
463. (8) Food and drink; use of wine.
464. (9) Professions and trades,—carpentry, agriculture, etc.
466. (10) Amusements, gambling, dancers or actors; (11) Crime.
467. (12) Animals, wild and tame.
469. (13) Wars, armies, armour, and weapons.
472. (14) Poetry and speculation.
473. (15) Conclusion.
474. APPENDIX.
479. INDEX.

ERRATA ET CORRIGENDA.

Page 22 In the page-headings from here to p. 96, for "The Indian gods generally" substitute the headings of the several subsections.

Page 34, line 1, for "Gau" read "Go."
" 36, " 4, for "stānāḥ" read "sthānāḥ."
" 46, " 19, for "Varuṇauta" read "Varuṇa uta."
" 57, " 7, for "51" read "5."
" 62, " 10, for "sindhave" read "sindhavo."
" — " 11, for "praa rṇāṁsi" read "pra arṇāṁsi."
" 63, " 10, after "foolish" insert "vii. 61, 5."
" 67, " 28, for "let us seek" read "we seek."
" 77, " 1, for "v." read "vi."
" 85, " 3 from bottom, after "Indra" insert "vi. 21, 4."
" 93, " 9 from bottom, for "jaghrusho" read "jaghnusho."
" 98, " 8 from bottom, for "(5)" read "(ə*a*)".
" 107, " last line, for "tivram" read "tīvram."
" 134, " 6 from bottom, for "dare" read "brave."
" 170, " 2, for "Savita" read "Savitā."
" 199, " 1, for "xiii." read "xiii*a*."
" 200, " 10, for "92" read "91."
" 214, " 9, for "rodasysḥ" read "rodasyoḥ."
" 218, " 4 from bottom, for "viii." read "vii."
" 224, " 10, for "vriśchād" read "vṛiśchād."
" 225, " 22, for "Tvashṭa" read "Tvashṭā."
" 228, " 5 from bottom, for "Vivasvāt" read "Vivasvat."
" 234, " 3, for "Sūrya" read "Sūryā."
" 237, " 16, for "Pushan" read "Pūshan."
" 280, " 8, for "z" read "x."
" 284, " 24, for "191," read "91."
" 336, " 1, for "xxi." read "xix."
" 350, " 21, after "quoted" insert "above, p. 59, and."
" 354, " 4 from bottom, for "χώτι τ ὧνδ'" read "χὤ τι τῶνδ'."
" 387, " 27, for "19," read "1, 9."
" 407, " 21, for "54" read "58."

ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS.

VOLUME FIFTH.

INTRODUCTION.

In the Fourth Volume of this work I have collected the principal passages of the Vedic Hymns which refer to the origin of the universe, and to the characters of the gods Hiraṇyagarbha, Viśvakarman, Vishṇu, Rudra, and the goddess Ambikā; and have compared the representations there given of these deities with the later stories and speculations on the same subjects which are to be found in the Brāhmaṇas, and in the mythological poems of a more modern date. In the course of these researches, I have also introduced occasional notices of some of the other Vedic deities, such as Aditi, Indra, Varuṇa, etc.

In the present volume I propose to give a further account of the cosmogony, mythology, and religious ideas exhibited in the hymns of the Rig-veda,[1] and to compare these occasionally with the corresponding conceptions of the early Greeks.

[1] This subject has been already treated by Professor Roth in his dissertations on "The Legend of Jemshid" and on "The Highest Gods of the Arian Races," in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, iv. 417 ff. and vi. 67 ff.; by the same writer, and by Professor Whitney, in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, iii. 291 ff., and 331 ff.; by Professor Roth in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vii. 607 ff.; by Professor Max Müller in the Oxford Essays for 1856 (reprinted in Chips from a German Workshop, vol. ii. pp. 1 ff.), and in his History of Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 531 ff.; by Professor Wilson in the Prefaces to the three vols. of his translation of the Rig-veda; by M. Langlois in the notes to his French translation of the Rig-

(1) Affinities of the Indian and Grecian mythologies.

In the Second Volume of this work I have stated the reasons, drawn from history and from comparative philology, which exist for concluding that the Brahmanical Indians belong to the same race as the Greek, the Latin, the Teutonic, and other nations of Europe. If this conclusion be well-founded, it is evident that at the time when the several branches of the great Indo-European family separated to commence their migrations in the direction of their future homes, they must have possessed in common a large stock of religious and mythological conceptions. This common mythology would, in the natural course of events, and from the action of various causes, undergo a gradual modification analogous to that undergone by the common language which had originally been spoken by all these tribes during the period of their union; and, in the one case as in the other, this modification would assume in the different races a varying character, corresponding to the diversity of the influences to which they were severally subjected. We shall not, therefore, be surprised to find that even the oldest existing mythology of the Indians differs widely from the oldest known mythology of the Greeks, any more than we are to find that the Sanskrit in its earliest surviving forms is a very different language from the earliest extant Greek, since the Vedic hymns, the most primitive remains of Sanskrit poetry, date from a period when the two kindred races had been separated for perhaps above a thousand years, and the most ancient monuments of Greek literature are still more recent. Yet, notwithstanding this long separation, we might reasonably anticipate that some fragments of the primitive Indo-European mythology should have remained common to both the eastern and the western branches of the family; while, at the same time, we should, of course, expect that such traces of common religious conceptions would be more distinctly perceptible in the older than in the more recent literary productions of the several peoples. And such, in point of fact, turns out to be the case. The mythology of the Veda veda; by Professor Weber, and by Drs. Kuhn and Bühler, etc. etc. The substance of some of the following sections is repeated or condensed in a paper which I read before the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1864. See the Transactions of that Society, vol. xxiii. part iii. pp. 547 ff.

does exhibit in some points a certain similarity to that of Homer and Hesiod, and the mutual resemblance between the religious ideas of those ancient works is, upon the whole, greater than that existing between the later Indian and the Greek pantheons. I say that, upon the whole, the older Indian mythology coincides more nearly with the Greek than the later Indian mythology does. But, on the other hand, the later Indian system presents some points of resemblance with the Greek which the Vedic system does not exhibit. I allude to the fact that we find in the Indian epic poems and Purāṇas a god of the sea, a god of war, and a goddess of love, who (the last two, at least,) are unknown to the oldest parts of the Veda, and yet correspond in a general way to the Poseidon, the Ares, and the Aphrodite of the Greeks. Personifications of this sort may, however, be either the product of an early instinct which leads men to create divine representatives and superintendents of every department of nature, as well as of human life and action; or they may arise in part from a later process of imagination or reflection which conducts to the same result, and from a love of systematic completeness which impels a people to fill up any blanks in their earlier mythology, and to be always adding to and modifying it. Resemblances of this last description, though they are by no means accidental, are not necessarily anything more than the results of similar processes going on in nations possessing the same general tendencies and characteristics. But the older points of coincidence between the religious ideas of the Greeks and the Indians, to which reference was first made, are of a different character, and are the undoubted remains of an original mythology which was common to the ancestors of both races. This is shown by the fact that, in the cases to which I allude, it is not only the functions, but the names, of the gods which correspond in both literatures.

(2) Antiquity and peculiarity of the Vedic mythology.

But the value of the Vedic mythology to the general scholar does not consist merely in the circumstance that a few religious conceptions, and the names of two or three deities, are common to it with the Greek. It is even more important to observe that the earliest monuments of Indian poetry, consisting, as they do, almost exclusively of hymns in praise of the national deities, and being the productions of an age far anterior to that of Homer and Hesiod, represent a more ancient period of religious development than we discover in the Greek poets, and disclose to us, in the earliest stages of formation, a variety of myths which a few centuries later had assumed a fixed and recognised form.[2] It is also to be noticed that, from the copiousness of the materials they supply, the hymns of the Rig-veda furnish us with far more minute illustrations of the natural workings of the human mind, in the period of its infancy, upon matters of religion than we can find in any other literature whatever. From their higher antiquity, these Indian hymns are also fitted to throw light on the meaning of a few points of the Greek system which were before obscure. Thus, as we shall see, the Indian Dyaus (sky, or heaven) explains the original meaning of the Greek Zeus, and the Sanskrit Varuṇa gives a clue to the proper signification of Ouranos.

As in the first volume of this work, 2nd edition, pp. 2–4,[3] I have stated the grounds on which the Vedic hymns are assumed to have been composed at a period considerably more than a thousand years before our era, I shall here take their great antiquity for granted, and proceed to give some account of their cosmogony and mythology.

(3) Origin of cosmogonic and mythological speculation.

To a simple mind reflecting, in the early ages of the world, on the origin of all things, various solutions of the mystery might naturally present themselves. Sometimes the production of the existing universe would be ascribed to physical, and at other times to spiritual, powers. On the one hand, the various processes of growth and change which are constantly visible in all the departments of nature might have suggested the notion of the world having gradually arisen out of nothing, or out of a pre-existing undeveloped substance. Such an idea of the spontaneous evolution of all things out of a primeval principle, or out of indiscrete matter, called Prakṛiti, became at a later period the foundation of the Sānkhya philosophy. Or, again, perceiving light and form and colour

[2] See Professor Max Müller's essay on "Comparative Mythology," in the Oxford Essays for 1856, p. 47, and the reprint in Chips from a German Workshop, p. 75 f.

[3] See also Vol. II. pp. 206 ff. and Vol. III. 2nd ed. 217 f. and 224.

and beauty emerge slowly every morning out of a gloom in which all objects had before appeared to be confounded, the early speculator might conceive that in like manner the brightness and order of the world around him had sprung necessarily out an antecedent night in which the elements of all things had existed together in indistinguishable chaos. And, in fact, this idea of the universe having arisen out of darkness and chaos is the doctrine of one of the later hymns of the R.V. (x. 129). Or, on the other hand, contemplating the results effected by human design and energy, and arguing from the less to the greater, or rather impelled by an irresistible instinct to create other beings after his own likeness,[4] but endowed with higher powers, the ancient thinker might feel that the well-ordered frame of nature could not possibly have sprung into being from any blind necessity, but must have been the work of a conscious and intelligent will. In this stage of thought, however, before the mind had risen to the conception of one supreme creator and governor of all things, the various departments of nature were apportioned between different gods, each of whom was imgined to preside over his own especial domain. But these domains were imperfectly defined. One blended with another, and might thus be subject, in part, to the rule of more than one deity. Or, according to the various relations under which they were regarded, these several provinces of the creation might be subdivided among a plurality of divinities, or varying forms of the same divinity. These remarks might be illustrated by numerous instances drawn from the Vedic mythology. In considering the literary productions of this same period, we further find that as yet the difference between mind and matter was but imperfectly conceived, and that, although, in some cases, the distinction between some particular province of nature and the deity who was supposed to preside over it was clearly discerned, yet in other instances the two things were confounded, and the same visible object was at different times regarded diversely, as being either a portion of the inanimate universe, or an animated being, and a cosmical power. Thus, in the Vedic hymns, the sun, the sky, and the earth, are severally considered, sometimes as natural objects governed by particular gods, and sometimes as themselves gods who generate and control other beings.

[4] Arist. Pol. i. 2, 7. Καὶ τοὺς θεοὺς δὲ διὰ τοῦτο πάντες φασὶ βασιλεύεσθαι, ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ οἱ μὲν ἔτι καὶ νῦν, οἱ δὲ τὸ ἀρχαῖον ἐβασιλεύοντο· ὥσπερ δὲ καὶ τὰ εἴδη ἑαυτοῖς ἀφομοιοῦσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποι, οὕτω καὶ τοὺς βίους τῶν θεῶν. "And all men represent the gods as being ruled by a king, because they themselves, either now, or formerly, were so governed. And just as men regard the forms, so also they consider the lives, of the gods, to be similar to their own."

(4) Variety in the conceptions of the Vedic poets.

The varieties and discrepancies which are in this way incident to all nature-worship, are, in the case of the Vedic mythology, augmented by the number of the poets by whom it was moulded, and the length of time during which it continued in process of formation.

The Rig-veda consists of more than a thousand hymns, composed by successive generations of poets during a period of many centuries. In these songs the authors gave expression not only to the notions of the supernatural world which they had inherited from their ancestors, but also to their own new conceptions. In that early age the imaginations of men were peculiarly open to impressions from without; and in a country like India, where the phenomena of nature are often of the most striking description, such spectators could not fail to be overpowered by their influence. The creative faculties of the poets were thus stimulated to the highest pitch. In the starry sky, in the dawn, in the morning sun scaling the heavens, in the bright clouds floating across the air and assuming all manner of magnificent or fantastic shapes, in the waters, in the rain, in the storm, in the thunder and lightning, they beheld the presence and agency of different divine powers, propitious or angry, whose characters corresponded with those of the physical operations or appearances in which they were manifested. In the hymns composed under the influence of any grand phenomena, the authors would naturally ascribe a peculiar or exclusive importance to the deities by whose action these appeared to have been produced, and would celebrate their greatness with proportionate fervour. Other poets might attribute the same natural appearances to the agency of other deities, whose greatness they would in like manner extol; while others again would devote themselves in preference to the service of some other god whose working they seemed to witness in some other department of creation. In this way, while the same traditional divinities were acknowledged by all, the power, dignity, and functions of each particular god might be differently estimated by different poets, or perhaps by the same poet, according to the external influences by which he was awed or inspired on each occasion. And it might even happen that some deity who had formerly remained obscure, would, by the genius of a new poet devoted to his worship, be brought out into greater prominence. In such circumstances it need not surprise us if we find one particular power or deity in one place put above, and in another place subordinated to, some other god; sometimes regarded as the creator, and sometimes as the created. This is very prominently illustrated in the case of the Vedic divinities, Dyaus and Pṛithivī, Heaven and Earth, to which the second Section shall be devoted, and by other instances which will be brought to light in the following pages.

SECTION I.

THE INDIAN GODS GENERALLY, AS REPRESENTED IN THE RIG-VEDA.

Before proceeding to offer some description of the powers, functions, characters, and mutual relations of the several deities celebrated in the Rig-veda, I shall give some account of the general conceptions entertained by the Vedic poets and some later Indian writers, regarding their classes, numbers, origin, and duration.

(1) Yāska's classification of the gods.

The following classification of the Vedic gods is adduced by Yāska[5] in his Nirukta (vii. 5), as being that given by the ancient expositors who preceded him: Tisraḥ eva devatāḥ iti Nairuktāḥ Agniḥ pṛithivī-sthāno Vāyur vā Indro vā antariksha-sthānaḥ Sūryo dyu-sthānaḥ | tāsām māhābhāgyād ekaikasyāḥ api bahūni nāmadheyāni bhavanti api vā karma-pṛithaktvād yathā hotā adhvaryur brahmā udgātā ity apy ekasya sataḥ | api vā pṛithag eva syuḥ | pṛithag hi stutayo bhavanti tathā abhidhānāni | "There are three deities according to the expounders of the Veda (Nairuktāḥ), viz. Agni, whose place is on the earth; Vāyu, or Indra, whose place is in the air; and Sūrya (the sun), whose place is in the sky.[6] These deities receive severally many appellations, in consequence of their greatness, or of the diversity of their functions, as the names of hotṛi, adhvaryu, brahman, and ud-

[5] For some account of Yāska's work see the second vol. of this work, pp. 162 and 173, and my article "On the Interpretation of the Veda" in the Journ. R. A. S. for 1866, pp. 319 ff.

[6] Compare R.V. x. 158, 1. Sūryo no divas pātu Vāto antarikshāt | Agnir naḥ pārthivebhyaḥ | "May the Sun preserve us from the sky, Vāyu from the air, and Agni from things on earth."

gātri, are applied to one and the same person, [according to the particular sacrificial office which he happens to be fulfilling]. Or these gods may all be distinct, for the praises addressed to them, and also their appellations, are distinct."[7] Pursuing the triple classification here indicated, Yāska proceeds in the latter part of his work to divide the different deities, or forms of the same deities, specified in the fifth chapter of the Naighaṇṭuka or Vocabulary, which is prefixed to his work, into the three orders of terrestrial (Nirukta vii. 14–ix. 43), intermediate or aerial (x. 1–xi. 50), and celestial (xii. 1–46). I shall not reproduce these lists, which could not in some places be thoroughly understood without explanation, as they include several deities whose precise character and identification with other divinities are disputed, and embrace a number of objects which are not gods at all, but are constructively regarded as such from their being addressed in the hymns.[8]

(2) Their number.

The gods are spoken of in various texts of the Rig-veda as being thirty-three in number. Thus it is said in R.V. i. 34, 11: "Come [7] This passage is quoted more at length in the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 133 ff.

[8] The following is the manner in which Yāska classifies the hymns. I quote the classification as interesting, though unconnected with my present subject:—He divides (Nir. vii. 1) the hymns, or portions of hymns, devoted to the praise of the gods into three classes, viz. (1) those in which the gods are addressed in the third person as absent, as "Indra rules over heaven and earth" (x. 89, 10), etc.; (2) those which address them in the second person as present, such as "O Indra, slay thou our enemies" (x. 152, 4), etc.; and (3) those in which the author speaks in the first person, and about himself. Of these the first two classes are the most numerous. Again some of the hymns are merely laudatory, as, "I declare the valorous deeds of Indra," R.V. i. 32, 1; others contain prayers, not praises, as, "may I see clearly with my eyes, be radiant in my face, and hear distinctly with my ears." Again, there are imprecations, as, "may I die to-day, if I am a Yātudhāna" (vii. 104, 15), etc. Again, a particular state of things is described, as, "there was then neither death nor immortality" (x. 129, 2). Again, a lamentation is uttered, as, "the bright god will fly away and never return" (x. 95, 15). Or, praise and blame are expressed, as, "he who eats alone, is alone in his guilt" (x. 117, 6), and "the house of the liberal man is like a pond where lotuses grow" (x. 107, 10); and in the same way, in the hymn to Dice, gambling is reprehended, and agriculture praised (x. 34, 13). "Thus the views with which the rishis beheld the hymns were very various." The original text of most of this passage will be found in the 3rd vol. of this work, p. 211.

hither, Nāsatyas, Aśvins, together with the thrice eleven gods,[9] to drink our nectar" (ā nāsatyā tribhir ekādaśair iha devebhir yātam madhupeyam Aśvinā).

Again, in i. 45, 2: "Agni, the wise gods lend an ear to their worshipper. God with the ruddy steeds, who lovest praise, bring hither those three and thirty" (śrushṭivāno hi dāśushe devāḥ Agne vichetasaḥ | tān rohidaśva girvaṇas trayastriṁśatam ā vaha).

i. 139, 11 (=Taitt. S. i. 4, 10, 1). "Ye gods, who are eleven in the sky, who are eleven on earth, and who in your glory[10] are eleven dwellers in the (atmospheric) waters, do ye welcome this our offering" (ye devāso divi ekādaśa stha pṛithivyām adhi ekādaśa stha | apsukshito mahinā ekādaśa stha te devāso yajnam imaṁ jushadhvam).

iii. 6. 9. "Agni bring hither according to thy wont and gladden the three and thirty gods with their wives" (patnīvatas triṁśataṁ trīṁś cha devān anushvadham āvaha mādayasva).

viii. 28, 1. "May the three over thirty gods who have visited our sacrificial grass, recognize us, and give us double"[11] (ye triṁśati trayas paro devāso barhir āsadan | vidann aha dvitā 'sanan).

viii. 30, 2. "Ye who are the three and thirty gods worshipped by Manu (or man), when thus praised, may ye become the destroyers of our foes" (iti stutāso asatha riśādaso ye stha trayaś cha triṁśach cha | manor devāḥ yajniyāsaḥ).

viii. 35, 3. "Aśvins, associated with all the thrice eleven gods, with the Waters, the Maruts, the Bhṛigus, and united with the Dawn and the Sun, drink the soma" (viśvair devais tribhir ekādaśair iha adbhir marudbhir Bhṛigubhiḥ sachābhuvā | sajoshasā Ushasā Sūryeṇa cha somam pibata Aśvinā).

[9] That is, as Sāyaṇa explains, those included in the three classes, consisting each of eleven gods, specified in the verse (i. 139, 11), "Ye eleven gods who exist in the sky," etc.

[10] On this Sāyaṇa remarks, "Although, according to the text, 'There are only three gods,' (Nirukta, vii. 5), the deities who represent the earth, etc., are but three, still through their greatness, i.e. their respective varied manifestations, they amount to thirty-three, according to the saying, 'other manifestations of Him exist in different places.'" Compare Śp. Br. xi. 6, 3, 4 ff. The Atharva-veda (x. 9, 12) divides the gods into dwellers in the sky, air, and earth (ye devāḥ divishado antarikshasadaś cha ye ye cha ime bhūmyām adhi). And the same Veda i. 30, 3, speaks of the gods who dwell in the sky, on earth, in the air, in plants, animals, and waters (ye devāḥ divi stha ye pṛithivyāṁ ye antarikshe oshadhīshu paśushu apsu antaḥ).

[11] Roth says that dvitā does not mean double, but assuredly, especially.

ix. 92, 4. "O pure Soma, all these gods, thrice eleven in number, are in thy secret," etc.[12] (tava te, Soma pavamāna ninye viśve devās trayaḥ ekādaśa).

This number of thirty-three gods is in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (iv. 5, 7, 2) explained as made up of 8 Vasus, 11 Rudras, and 12 Ādityas, together with Dyaus and Pṛithivī (Heaven and Earth), while Prajāpati makes a thirty-fourth (aṣhṭau Vasavaḥ ekādaśa Rudrāḥ dvādaśa Ādityāḥ ime eva dyāvā-pṛithivī trayastriṁśyau | trayastriṁśad vai devāḥ | Prajāpatiś chatustriṁśaḥ). Or, according to another passage (xi. 6, 3, 5), the thirty-three are made up in the same manner with the exception of Indra and Prajāpati, who are substituted for Heaven and Earth (te ekatriṁśad Indraś chaiva Prajāpatiś cha trayastriṁśau).[13]

This enumeration could scarcely have been the one contemplated in the hymns, as we have seen that one of the texts above quoted (R.V. i. 139, 11) assigns eleven deities, who must probably have been all of the same class, to each of the three spheres, sky, air, and earth.[14] It is [12] This number of thirty-three gods is referred to in a hymn to the sun in the Mahābhārata iii. 171, as joining in the worship of that deity: Trayas triṁśach cha vai devāḥ. See also v. 14019 and 15465 of the same third book; book iv. 1769, and book xiii. 7102. According to the Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa 14, 14 f. (Bombay ed.) Aditi was the mother of thirty-three gods, Adityas, Vasus, and Rudras, and of the two Aśvins (Adityāṁ jajnire devās trayastriṁśad arindama | Adityāḥ Vasavo Rudrāḥ Aśvinau cha parantapa). In Gorresio's edit. the verse occurs in 20, 15. See also the Śp. Br. xii. 8, 3, 29. The Taittirīya Sanhitā, ii. 3, 5, 1, says that Prajāpati had thirty-three daughters, whom he gave in marriage to Soma. The A.V. xi. 3, 52, says that Prajāpati made thirty-three worlds out of the odana oblation. See also R.V. viii. 39, 9, Vālakhilya, 9, 2. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 18, says: trayastriṁśad vai devāḥ somapās trayastriṁśad asomapāḥ | aṣhṭau Vasavaḥ ekādaśa Rudrāḥ dvādaśa Ādityāḥ Prajāpatiś cha Vashaṭkāraś cha ete devāḥ somapāḥ | ekādaśa prayājāḥ ekādaśa anuyājāḥ ekādaśa upayājāḥ ete asomapāḥ paśu-bhājanāḥ | somena somapān prīṇāti paśunā asomapān | "Thirty-three gods are drinkers of Soma, and thirty-three are not. The eight Vasus, the eleven Rudras, the twelve Ādityas, Prajāpati and Vashaṭkāra are the soma-drinkers. The eleven Prayājas, the eleven Anuyājas, and the eleven Upayājas are those who do not drink it, but receive animal sacrifices. He (the sacrificer) satiates the soma-drinkers with soma, and those who do not drink it with animal-sacrifices." For an explanation of the terms prayāja, anuyāja, and upa-yāja see Professor Haug's translation of the Ait. Br. ii. 110, notes.

[13] Compare Taitt. Br. ii. 7, 2, 4. In the sequel of the above passage (Śatap. Br. xi. 6, 3, 6) Dyaus, Pṛithivī, and Āditya are said to be included among the Vasus. So that it is clear there is no consistency in these accounts.

[14] On this division of the universe into three domains, see the remarks of Professor Roth in his dissertation on "The Highest Gods of the Arian Races." Jour. Germ. Or. Society, 1852, p. 68.

also clear that this number of thirty-three gods could not have embraced the whole of the Vedic deities, as in some of the preceding texts Agni, the Aśvins, and the Maruts are separately specified, as if distinct from the thirty-three. Further, Indra could not have been, in the opinion of the author of the Brāhmaṇa, at least as expressed in this passage, xi. 6, 3, 5, one of the twelve Ādityas (as he was regarded at a later period), since he is separately specified as making up the number of thirty-three gods.

In the R.V. iii. 9, 9 (= R.V. x. 52, 6 and Vāj. S. 33, 7) the gods are mentioned as being much more numerous: "Three hundred, three thousand, thirty and nine gods have worshipped Agni,"[15] etc. (trīṇi śatā trī sahasrāṇi Agniṁ triṁśach cha devāḥ nava cha asaparyan).

In another passage (i. 27, 13) the gods are spoken of as divided into great and small, young and old: "Reverence to the great, reverence to the small: reverence to the young, reverence to the old. Let us worship the gods if we are able; may I not, o gods, neglect the praise of the greatest" (namo mahadbhyo namo arbhakebhyo namo yuvabhyo namaḥ āśinebhyaḥ | yajāma devān yadi śaknavāma na jyāyasaḥ śamsam ā sṛikshi devāḥ |).

I am not aware, however, that this latter classification of the gods is alluded to in any other of the hymns. In fact this distinction among the deities is denied in another passage, viii. 30, 1: na hi vo asti arbhako devāso na kumārakaḥ | viśve satomahāntaḥ it | ("None of you, o gods, is small or young: you are all great").

(3) Their origin and immortality.

In the Rig-veda the gods are spoken of as immortal[16] (as in i. 24, 1; i. 72, 2, 10; i. 189, 3; iii. 4, 11; iii. 21, 1; iv. 42, 1; vii. 11, 1; vii. 17, 4; x. 13, 1; x. 65, 15; x. 69, 9; x. 72, 5; but they are not regarded in [15] The commentator remarks here that the number of the gods is declared in the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad. See pp. 642 ff. of the text of this Upanishad, printed in the Bibl. Ind.; and pp. 205 ff. of the English translation in the same series. The same passage occurs in nearly the same words in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 6, 3, 4 ff. On the numbers of the gods, see a note of Professor Haug in his Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 212, note, and the remarks by Dr. Kuhn in his notice of this paper in his Zeitschrift, p. 223.

[16] In the Atharva-veda i. 31, 1, four immortals are spoken of as the guardians of the four quarters of the sky (āśānām āśāpālebhyaś chaturbhyo amṛitebhyaḥ).

general as unbeginning or self-existent beings.[17] There are, as we shall see in the next section, many passages in which they are described as being the offspring of Heaven and Earth. In i. 113, 19, Ushas, the Dawn, is characterized as the mother of the gods (devānām mātā); in ii. 26, 3, Brahmaṇaspati is called their father (devānām pitaram); in ix. 87, 2, Soma is said to be the father and skilful generator of the gods (pitā devānāṁ janitā sudakshaḥ; see also ix. 42, 4; ix. 86, 10; and ix. 109, 4); in ix. 96, 5, the same deity is described as the generator of Heaven, Earth, Agni, Sūrya, Indra, and Vishṇu (janitā divo janitā pṛithivyāḥ | janitā Agner janitā Sūryasya janitā Indrasya janitota Vishṇoḥ); in x. 72, 5, the gods are declared to have been born after Aditi (tāṁ devāḥ anv ajāyanta); in x. 97, 1, certain plants appear to be described as produced three ages (yugas) before the gods (yāḥ oshadhīḥ pūrvāḥ jāiāḥ devebhyas triyugam purā); whilst in x. 129, 6, the gods are said to have been born subsequently to the creation of the universe, so that in consequence no one can declare its origin (arvāg devās tasya visarjanena atha ko veda yataḥ ā babhūva).[18] Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, Daksha, and Aṁśa are designated, in R.V. ii. 27, 1, and some of them elsewhere, as Ādityas, or sons of Aditi. The birth of Indra is mentioned in various texts, and his father and mother alluded to, though not generally named[19] (iv. 17, 4, 12; iv. 18, 5, 12; viii. 45, 4; viii. 66, 1; x. 134, 1 ff.). In vi. 59, 1, Indra and Agni are ad-

[17] This is not, however, admitted by Professor Max Müller, who says (Chips from a German Workshop, i. 38) "passages in which the birth of certain gods is mentioned have a physical meaning: they refer to the birth of the day, the rising of the sun, the return of the year."

[18] In the Atharva-veda xi. 7, 23, all the gods are said to have been born from Uchchhishṭa or the remains of the oblation (Ucchhishṭāj jajnire sarve divi devāḥ diviśritāḥ); and in verse 27 the same assertion is repeated regarding them in conjunction with the fathers, men, Gandharvas, and Apsarases (devāḥ pitaro manushyāḥ Gandharvāpsarasaś cha ye | uchchishṭāj jajnire sarve divi devāḥ diviśritāḥ). Compare Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 3, 2, 3. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa xiv. 2, 2, 2, it is said: Ayaṁ vai samudro yo 'yam pavate | etasmād vai samudrāt sarve devāḥ sarvāṇi bhūtāni samuddravanti | "This which is purified is the ocean (samudra). From this ocean all the gods, all creatures issue forth" (samuddravanti). The gods are said to have been born in pairs according to a passage of the Taittirīya Saṁhitā (vi. 5, 6), referred to by Sāyaṇa on R.V. viii. 72, 8.

[19] In R.V. x. 101, 12, a goddess called Nishṭigrī is mentioned, apparently as the mother of Indra: Nishṭigryāḥ putram ā chāvaya ūtaye Indram | "draw hither Indra the son of Nishṭigrī to aid us," etc. Sāyaṇa on this passage identifies her with Aditi, viz.: "She who swallows up her rival wife Nishṭi, i.e. Diti." Indra is in fact dressed in these words: Hatāso vām pitaro devaśatravaḥ Indrāgnī jīvatho yuvām | "Your fathers, who had the gods for foes, have been slain, o Indra and Agni; but you survive." But in the next verse both gods are said to have had one generator and to be twin-brothers (samāno vām janitā bhrātarā yuvām yamāv ihehamatarā). The A.V. i. 30, 2, speaks of some of the gods as being fathers and others as being sons (ye vo devāḥ pitaro ye cha putrāḥ sachetaso me śṛiṇuta idam uktam). See also R.V. x. 63, 2, which will be quoted in the Section on Aditi.

In iv. 54, 2 (=Vāj. S. 33, 54) it is said that Savitṛi bestows immortality, an excellent lot, on the gods (devebhyo hi prathamaṁ yajniyebhyo amṛitatvaṁ suvasi bhāgam uttamam).[20] Agni is also said, vi. 7, 4, by his power or skill, to confer immortality on the gods, who worship him when he is born like an infant and shines forth from out of his parents (tvāṁ viśve amṛita jāyamānam śiśuṁ na devāḥ abhi saṁ navante | tava kratubhir amṛitatvam āyan vaiśvānara yat pitror adīdeḥ). In ix. 106, 8 the gods are said to drink Soma to obtain immortality (tvāṁ devāso amṛitāya kam papuḥ; compare ix. 109, 2, 3).[21] In x. 53, 10 some means are alluded to (it is not clear what) by which the gods attained immortality (yena devāso amṛitatvam ānaśuḥ). In x. 167, 1 Indra is said to have conquered heaven by austere fervour (tvaṁ tapaḥ paritapya ajayaḥ svaḥ); and in x. 159, 4 he is said to have become glorious and exalted by the offering of some oblation (yenendro havishā kṛitvī abhavad dyumnī uttamaḥ).

In the A.V. iv. 23, 6 Agni is said to have been the author of the immortality of the gods (yena devāḥ amṛitam anvavindan); in the same addressed as an Āditya along with Varuṇa in vii. 85, 4. He is not, however, as we have seen above, considered as such in the S'p. Br. xi. 6, 3, 5, where he is mentioned as distinct from the twelve Ādityas.

[20] Sāyaṇa interprets this by saying that he gives them soma and other means of attaining immortality (amṛitatvaṁ tat-sādhanam uttamam utkrishṭatamam bhāgam somādi-lakshaṇam suvasi anujānāsi). The same deity is said i. 110, 3, to have conferred immortality on the Ṛibhus (tat Savitā vo amṛitatvam āsuvat).

[21] See S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa ix. 5, 1, 1–8, where it is said that immortality departed from the gods (devebhyo ha vai amṛitatvam apachakrāma), when they set themselves to recover it by religious observances. They poured out soma into Agni and thus infused immortality into him, and by so doing acquired it themselves, as he is the soul of all the gods. Soma is the principle of immortality (abhishutya agnāv ajuhuvuḥ | tad agnāv amṛitam adadhuḥ | sarveshām u ha esha devānām ātmā yad agniḥ | tad yad agnāv amṛitam adadhus tad ātmann amṛitam adadhata | tato devāḥ amṛitāḥ abhavan | tad yat tad amṛitaṁ Somaḥ saḥ).

Veda, xi. 5, 19, the gods are said to have overcome death by continence and austere fervour (brahmacharyeṇa tapasā devāḥ mṛityum apāghnata); and, ibid. xiii. 1, 7, to have acquired immortality through Rohita (yena devāḥ amṛitam anvavindan). Compare the same Veda iii. 22, 3; iv. 11, 6; iv. 14, 1; Śatap. Br. i. 7, 3, 1; Ait. Br. vi. 20; Taitt. Sanh. i. 7, 1, 3, and vi. 5, 3, 1; and the Mahābhārata xiv. 1444: Tathaiva tapasā devāḥ mahāmāyāḥ divaṁ gatāḥ |.

I have elsewhere quoted a number of passages from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, in which it is related how the gods became immortal; and how, though of the same parentage, and originally on a footing of equality, with the Asuras, they became superior to them.[22] (See the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 47–53; and the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. xx. pp.41–45.)

According to the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa the gods obtained their divine rank by austerity (tapasā devāḥ devatām agre āyan | iii. 12, 3, 1).

In other places some of the gods, as Indra (iii. 46, 1; v. 42, 6), are spoken of as undecaying; and in vi. 24, 7 it is said of that god that neither autumns nor months wear him out, nor do days cause him to decay (na yaṁ jaranti śarado na māsāḥ na dyāvaḥ Indram avakarśayanti). Whether or not the Vedic poets had any conception of an absolute future eternity of the gods, does not appear. But, as we have seen, the authors of the Brāhmaṇas did not regard them as naturally and essentially immortal; and it is at all events evident that in later times their immortality was regarded as only relative, as according to the Puranic representation the gods are only a portion of the existing system of the universe, and are therefore subject, as regards their corporeal part, to the same law of dissolution as other beings. See the 1st vol. of this work, 2nd ed. p. 49, and Professor Wilson's Sānkhya Kārikā, p. 14. Thus, in a verse quoted in the commentary of that work (p. 3 of the Sanskrit), it is said: "Many thousands of Indras and of other gods have, through time, passed away in every mundane age; for time is hard to overcome" (bahūnīndra-sahasrāṇi devānāṁ cha yuge yuge | kālena samatītani kālo hi duratikramaḥ). And in the Sānkhya Aphorisms, iii. 53, it is said that "the suffering arising from decay and death is common to all" (samānaṁ jarā-maraṇādi-jaṁ duḥkham); which the commentator interprets to mean that such suffering is "the common lot of all beings, both those who go upwards and those who go downwards, from Brahmā to things without motion" (ūrddhvādho-gatānām Brahmādi-sthāvarāntānāṁ sarveshām eva jarā-maraṇādi-jaṁ duḥkhaṁ sādhāraṇam).[23] The souls which have animated the gods, however, like those which animate all other corporeal beings, being eternal and imperishable, must of course survive all such dissolutions, to be either born again in other forms, or become absorbed in the supreme Brahma. See Wilson's Vishṇu Pur. p. 632, note 7; and the 3rd vol. of this work, 2nd ed. p. 99, where it is shewn, on the authority of the Brahma Sūtras or of Sankara their commentator, that the gods both desire and are capable of final emancipation.

[22] In Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa ii. 4, 2, 1, it is said that all creatures came to Prajāpati, and asked that they might live. To the gods he said, "Sacrifice is your food, your immortality is your support, the sun is your light," etc. (yajno vo 'nnam amṛitatvaṁ vaḥ ūrg vaḥ sūryo vo jyotiḥ | To the passages of the Ś. P. Br. regarding the manner in which the gods acquired immortality, above referred to, I may add one as yet unpublished from the India Office MS. of the Taittirīya Sanhitā vii. 4, 2, 1: Yathā vai manushyāḥ evaṁ devāḥ agre āsan | te 'kāmayantāvarttim pāpmānam mṛityum apahatya daivīṁ saṁsadaṁ gachhema iti | te etaṁ chaturviṁśatirātram apaśyaṁs tam āharaṁs tena ayajanta tato vai te 'varttim pāpmānam mṛityum apahatya daivīṁ saṁsadaṁ agachchan | "The gods were formerly just like men. They desired to overcome want, misery, death, and to go to the divine assembly. They saw, took, and sacrificed with, this Chaturviṁśatirātra, and in consequence overcame want, misery, and death, and reached the divine assembly." In the Taitt. Sanh. v. p. 43*a* (of India Office MS.) we are told that "the gods and Asuras contended together; and that the former were less numerous than the latter, when they took some bricks which they saw, and placing them in the proper position to receive the sacrificial fire, with the formula 'Thou art a multiplier,' they became numerous" (Devāsurāḥ saṁyattāḥ āsan | kanīyāṁso devāḥ āsan bhūyāṁso 'surāḥ | te devāḥ etāḥ ishṭakāḥ apaśyan | tāḥ upādadhanta "bhūyaskṛid asi" ity eva bhūyāmso 'bhavan). In the Mahābhārata, Śāntip. 1184, it is said that in the battle which they had with each other "the Asuras were the elder brothers and the gods the younger" (idaṁ tu śrūyate pārtha yuddhe devāsure purā | asurāḥ bhrātaro jyeshṭhāḥ devāś chāpi yavīyasaḥ).

(4) Different generations of gods and their mutual relations.

Two of the passages above quoted (in p. 14), R.V. vi. 59, 1, and A.V. i. 30, 2, imply that the existing gods were successors of others who had previously existed. The former verse is perhaps illustrated (as Prof. Aufrecht has suggested to me) by R.V. iv. 18, 12: Kas te mātaraṁ vidhavām achakrat śayuṁ kas tvām ajighāṁsat charantam | kas te devo adhi māṛḍīke āsīd yat prākshiṇāḥ pitaram pādagṛihya | "Who (o

[23] Compare Ritter's History of Philosophy, Engl. transl. vol. 3, p. 538.

Indra) made thy mother a widow? Who sought to kill thee lying or moving? What god was present in the fray, when thou didst slay thy father, seizing him by the foot?"[24] In vii. 21, 7, mention is made of earlier gods: "Even the former gods[25] admitted their powers to be inferior to thy divine prowess" (devāś chit te asuryāya pūrve anu kshattrāya mamire sahāṁsi). Earlier gods are also mentioned in x. 109, 4, though in conjunction with (unless we are to understand them as identified with) the seven rishis: "In regard to her the former gods said, the seven rishis who sat down to practise austerity," etc. (devāḥ etasyām avadanta pūrve saptaṛishayas tapase ye nisheduḥ). An earlier age of the gods is mentioned in x. 72, 2 f.: "In the former age of the gods, the existent sprang from the non-existent. In the first age of the gods the existent sprang from the non-existent" (devānām pūrvye yuge asataḥ sad ajāyata | 3. Devānāṁ yuge prathame asataḥ sad ajāyata). And in R.V. i. 164, 50 we have the following verse, which is repeated in x. 90, 16 (the Purusha Sūkta): yajnena yajnam ayajanta devās tāni dharmāṇi prathamāni āsan | te ha nākam mahimānaḥ sachanta yatra pūrve sādhyāḥ santi devāḥ | "With sacrifice the gods worshipped the sacrifice: these were the earliest rites. These great powers sought after the sky, where are the early Sādhyas, gods."[26]

[24] In explanation of this legend Sāyaṇa refers to the Taittirīya Sanhitā vi. 1, 3, 6. The following is the passage referred to, which I quote to show how little light it throws on the text of the R.V.: Yajno dakshiṇām abhyadhāyat | tām samabhavat | tad Indro 'chāyat | so 'manyata "yo vai ito janishyate sa idaṁ bhavishyati" iti | tāṁ prāviśat | tasyā Indra evājāyata | so 'manyata "yo vai mad ito 'paro janishyate sa idaṁ bhavishyati" iti | tasyā anumṛiśya yonim āchhinat | sā sūtavaśā 'bhavat | tat sūtavaśāyai janma | tāṁ haste nyaveshṭayata | tāṁ mṛigeshu nyadadhāt | sā kṛishṇavishāṇā 'bhavat | "Indrasya yonir asi mā mā hiṁsīr" iti | "Yajna (sacrifice) desired Dakshiṇā (largess). He consorted with her. Indra was apprehensive of this. He reflected: 'whoever is born of her will be this.' He entered into her. Indra himself was born of her. He reflected: 'whoever is born of her besides me will be this.' Having considered, he cut open her womb. She produced a cow," etc. No mention is here made of his killing his father.

[25] Sāyaṇa in loco says this means Asuras.

[26] I quote here part of a note from my article On the Interpretation of the Veda, Jour. R.A.S. for 1866, p. 395: Yāska tells us (Nirukta xii. 41) that the Nairuktas understood the Sādhyas to be "the gods whose locality is the sky," dyusthāno devagaṇaḥ, whilst, according to a legend (ākhyāna) the term denoted a former age of the gods." Professor Wilson translates the word Sādhyāḥ in R.V. i. 164, 50 by "who are to be propitiated," a sense not assigned by Sāyaṇa, who proposes, first, that of sādhanā yajnādīsādhana-vantaḥ karmadevāḥ, "performers, performers of sacrifices, etc., work-gods." These words are rendered by Prof. Wilson in his note on i. 164, 50, "divinities presiding

The gods do not seem to have lived always on a friendly footing with each other. It appears to me that the two following verses, R.V. iv. 30, 3, 5, though otherwise rendered by Professor Wilson (after Sāyaṇa) are to be understood of Indra fighting against the gods, and not with the gods against the Asuras: 3. Viśve chana id anā tvā devāsaḥ Indra yuyudhuḥ | yad ahā naktam ātiraḥ | 5. Yatra devān ṛighāyato viśvān ayudhyaḥ ekaḥ it | tvam Indra vanūn ahan | 3. "Even all the gods assailed thee Indra, when thou didst prolong(?) day and night. 5. When thou didst fight alone against all the furious gods, thou didst slay the destructive." This interpretation is favoured by the tenor of verses 4, 6, 8–11 of the same hymn.[27]

(5) Their powers and prerogatives.

The gods can do whatever they will; no mortal, however hostile his disposition, can thwart their designs (R.V. viii. 28, 4. Yathā vaśanti devās tad id asat tad eshāṁ nakir ā minat | arāvā chana marttyaḥ). The same is said of the Maruts viii. 20, 17; and of Indra viii. 50, 4; viii. 55, 4. It is similarly declared in iii. 56, 1, that no one, however skilful over or giving effect to religious acts." This does not, however, appear to be the real sense, as Mahīdhara on Vāj. S. 31, 17, tells us that "there are two kinds of gods," karmadevāḥ, "work-gods," and ājānadevāḥ, "gods by birth," the first being those who had attained to the condition of deities by their eminent works, and the second those who were produced at the beginning of the creation. The second class is superior to the first, and, according to the Bṛihadāraṇyaka, a hundred enjoyments of the latter (the work-gods), "are only equal to one single enjoyment of the former." See all this and more declared in the Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad, pp. 817 ff. (p. 230 f. of translation), and S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, p. 1087. A second sense proposed for sādhyāḥ by Sāyaṇa on R.V. i. 164, 50, is that of the "deities presiding over metres," chhando 'bhimāninaḥ, who were Ādityas and Angirases, and, according to a Brāhmaṇa, by worshipping Agni were exalted to heaven. Prof. Wilson remarks in his note: "It would seem that in Sāyaṇa's day the purport of the designation Sādhya had become uncertain." Mahīdhara on Vāj. S. 31, 16, renders the term virāḍ-upādhi-sādhakāḥ, "producers of the condition of Virāj."

[27] I should observe that the Brāhmaṇas constantly speak of the gods and Asuras as being both the offspring of Prajāpati: as contending together (S'atap. Br. v. 1, 1, 1; vi. 6, 2, 11; vi. 6, 3, 2); and even as being originally equal or alike (4th vol. of this work, p. 52). And to prove that even malignant spirits may be called "gods," Prof. Roth, s.v. deva, quotes from the Taitt. Sanh. iii. 5, 4, 1, a verse to the effect: "May Agni preserve me from the gods (devāḥ), destroyers of sacrificers, stealers of sacrifices, who inhabit the earth;" and a second text from the A.V. iii. 15, 5: "Agni, do thou through the oblation repel the gods who are destroyers of happiness" (? sātaghnaḥ).

and wise, can impede the first and firm decrees of the gods (na tā minanti māyino na dhīrāḥ vratā devānām prathamā dhruvāṇi). They have dominion over all creatures (x. 65, 15. Devān Vasishṭho amṛitān vavande ye viśvā bhuvanā abhi pratasthuḥ). They are supplicated in viii. 30, 3, not to lead the worshippers far away from the paths of their ancestor Manu (mā naḥ pathaḥ pitryād mānavād adhi dūraṁ naishṭa parāvataḥ). In one passage (R.V. x. 33, 8 f.) a grateful priest exclaims that if he were lord of the immortals and of mortals, his royal patron's life should be prolonged; but, he adds, no one, even though he attain the age of a hundred years, can live beyond the time the gods appoint; such has been the perpetual course of things (8. Yad īśīya amṛitānām uta vā martyānām | jīved id maghavā mama | 9. Na devānām ati vrataṁ śatātmā chana jīvati | tathā yujā vi vavṛite). In another place, x. 117, 1, an encomiast of liberality expresses his assurance that the gods had not ordained him (or others) to die of hunger, as even the full-fed are overtaken by various forms of death (Na vai u devāḥ kshudham id vadhaṁ dadur uta āśitam upa gachhanti mṛityavaḥ). Another poet cries (x. 64, 2) that there is no other helper than the gods, on whom the fulfilment of all his wishes depends (na mardhitā vidyate anyaḥ ebhyo deveshu me adhi kāmāḥ ayaṁsata). They live in enjoyment in the region where Vishṇu took his three strides (viii. 29, 7. Trīṇi ekaḥ urugāyo vi chakrame yatra devāso madanti | comp. i. 154, 4). In iii. 54, 5, the rishi asks "who knows, who now can declare, what road leads to the gods? Their lower abodes are indeed perceived, but there are higher and mysterious manifestations, or regions, beyond (ko addhā veda kaḥ iha pra vochad devāṁ achha pathyā kā sameti | dadṛiśre eshām avamā sadāṁsi pareshu yā guhyeshu vrateshu[28]).

On the other hand the drinker of Soma attains to the privilege of immortality and of knowing the gods (viii. 48, 3. Apāma somam amṛitāḥ abhūma aganma jyotir avidāma devān | Comp. x. 31, 3. navedaso amṛitānām abhūma |).

[28] The construction and sense of the last four words is obscure. They occur again in a different connection in x. 114, 2 (where however yāḥ is feminine: tāsām ni chikyuḥ kavayo nidānam pareshu yāḥ guhyeshu vrateshu | "The wise perceive the nature of these, who [exist] in high and mysterious forms, [or realms]." The sense of enclosure or realm is assigned to the word vrata by Müller, Trans. of R.V. i. 225, who renders this last line thus: The poets discovered their (the Nirṛitis') origin, who are in the far hidden chambers."

The gods reward their pious worshippers and punish those who neglect their service: viii. 2, 18. Ichhanti devāḥ sunvantam na svapnāya spṛihayanti | "The gods desire a man who pours out libations. they do not love sleep."

viii. 31, 15. Makshu devavato rathaḥ śūro vā pṛitsu kāsu chit | devānāṁ yaḥ id mano yajamānaḥ iyakshati abhīd ayajvano bhuvat | 16. Na yajamāna rishyasi na sunvāna na devayo | "15. Impetuous is the chariot of the godly man, and he is a hero in every battle. The sacrificer who seeks to please the gods overcomes the man who does not sacrifice. 16. Thou dost not perish, o sacrificer, nor thou who offerest libations, nor thou, o godly man."

vii. 39, 2. Na devāsaḥ kavatnave | "The gods are not for (i.e. they are not the portion of) the illiberal (or sluggish)." Have the words na ṛite śrāntasya sakhyāya devāḥ, in iv. 33, 11, a similar meaning: "The gods are not friendly to him who is tired of the sacred rite"? See a collection of texts to the same effect as regards the individual deities in my article "On the relations of the priests to the other classes of society in the Vedic age," Journ. R. A. S. for 1866, pp. 286 ff.; and a selection from them in the 1st vol. of this work, 2nd ed. pp. 259 ff.

According to the Satapatha Brāhmana, i. 1, 1, 7, "the gods know the intentions of a man. They are aware that he contemplates the performance of this rite, and will make his offering in the morning; and consequently they all come to his house and abide there" (Mano ha vai devāḥ manushyasya ājānanti | te enam etad vratam upayantaṁ viduḥ prātar no yakshyate iti | te asya viśve devāḥ gṛihān āgachhanti te asya gṛiheshu upavasanti).

I have here endeavoured to collect such characteristics and attributes as are in the Veda ascribed to the gods collectively. In the sections treating of the several deities, the qualities and functions attributed to each will be brought forward in detail.

SECTION II.

DYAUS[29] AND PṚITHIVĪ.

I begin with Dyaus and Pṛithivī (Heaven and Earth), who seem to have been very ancient Aryan divinities, and are in many passages of the Rig-veda described as the parents of the other gods.

In addition to numerous detached verses in which these deities are introduced among other objects of adoration, are invited to attend religious rites, and supplicated for different blessings, there are several hymns[30] (i. 159; i. 160; i. 185; iv. 56; vi. 70; and vii. 53), which are specially devoted to their honour. As a specimen of the way in which they are addressed, I subjoin a translation (very imperfect, I fear,) of some parts of the 159th and 160th hymns of the first book:

i. 159, 1. Pra dyāvā yajñaiḥ pṛithivī ṛitāvṛidhā mahī stushe vidatheshu prachetasā | devebhir ye devaputre sudaṁsasā itthā dhiyā vāryāṇi prabhūshataḥ | 2. Uta manye pitur adruho mano mātur mahi svatavas tad havīmabhiḥ | suretasā pitarā bhūma chakratur uru prajāyāḥ amṛitam varīmabhiḥ | "1. At the festivals [I worship] with offerings, and celebrate the praises of, Heaven and Earth, the promoters of righteousness, the great, the wise, the energetic, who, having gods for their offspring, thus lavish, with the gods, the choicest blessings, in consequence of our hymn. 2. With my invocations I adore the thought of the beneficent Father, and that mighty inherent power of the Mother. The prolific Parents have made all creatures, and through their favours (have conferred) wide immortality on their offspring."

[29] The crude form of this word is Dyu. I employ the nominative Dyaus, from its closer resemblance to the Greek Ζεύς. The genitive is Divas.

[30] See also A.V. iv. 26. Pṛithivī alone is celebrated in R.V. 5, 84, 1 ff. Hymn i. 185, is translated and commented on by M. Ad. Regnier in his E'tude sur l'idiome des Vedas.

i. 160, 2. Uruvyachasā mahinī asaśchatā pitā mātā cha bhuvanāni rakshataḥ | . . . . 3. Ayam devānām apasām apastamo yo jajāna rodasī viśva-śambhuvā | vi yo mame rajasī sukratūyayā ajarebhiḥ skambhanebhiḥ samānṛiche | 4. Te no gṛiṇāne mahinī mahi śravaḥ kshattraṁ dyāvā-pṛithivī dhāsatho mahat | yenābhi kṛishṭīs tatanāma viśvahā panāyyam ojo asme sam invatam | "2. Widely expanded, vast, unwearied, the Father and the Mother preserve all creatures. . . . . 4. He was the most skilful of the skilful gods who produced these two worlds, which are beneficent to all, who, desiring to create an excellent work, stretched out these regions and sustained them by undecaying supports. 5. When lauded, may the mighty Heaven and earth bestow on us great renown and power. May they impart to us laudable energy whereby we may always control other creatures."

In the hymns Heaven and Earth are characterized by a profusion of epithets, not only such as are suggested by their various physical characteristics, as vastness, breadth, profundity, productiveness, unchangeableness (uruvyachasā, mahinī, urvī, bahule, dūreante, gabhīre, ghṛitavatī, madhudughe, bhūriretasā, payasvatī, ajare) (i. 160, 2; i. 185, 7; iv. 56, 3; vi. 70, 1, 2); but also by such as are of a moral or spiritual nature, as innocuous or beneficent, wise, promoters of righteousness, (ṛitāvṛidhā, ṛitāvarī, prachetasā, adruhā) (i. 159, 1 f.; i. 160, 1; iv. 56, 2; vi. 70, 6; x. 36, 2).

(1) Heaven and Earth described as the universal parents.

The two (Heaven and Earth) together are styled parents, pitarā (in i. 159, 2; iii. 3, 11; vii. 53, 2; x. 65, 8), or mātarā (in i. 155, 3; ix. 85, 12; x. 1, 7; x. 35, 3;[31] x. 64, 14), or janitrī (dyāvā-Ṗṛithivī janitrī R.V. x. 110, 9). In other passages the Heaven is separately styled father, and the Earth mother (in R.V. i. 89, 4; i. 90, 7; i. 159, 2; i. 160, 2; i. 185, 11; iv. 1, 10; v. 42, 16; v. 43, 2, 15; vi. 51, 5;[32] vi. 70, 6; vi. 72, 2; viii. 92, 2; x. 54, 3; x. 88, 15 (= Vāj. Sanh. 19, 47). See also A.V. ii. 28, 4; iii.

[31] Here they are supplicated to preserve the worshipper sinless. In R.V. vi. 17, 7, they are called mātarā yahvī ṛitasya, "the great parents of sacrifice."

[32] The words of the original here are Dyaush pitaḥ Ṗṛithivī mātar adhrug Agne bhrātar Vasavo mṛiḷatā naḥ | "Father Heaven, innoxious mother Earth, brother Agni, Vasus, be gracious to us." A.V. vi. 4, 3 has Dyaushpitar yāvaya duchhunā yā.

23, 6; vi. 4, 3; vi. 120, 2; viii. 7, 2; and xii. 1, 10. In the same Veda, xii. 1, 12, the poet says: "The Earth is the mother, and I am the son of the earth: Parjanya is the father; may he nourish us (Mātā bhūmiḥ putro aham pṛithivyāḥ | Parjanyaḥ pitā sa u naḥ pipartu). Again in verse 42 of the same hymn he says, "Reverence be paid to the Earth, the wife of Parjanya, to her who draws her richness from showers (Bhūmyai Parjanya-patnyai namo 'stu varsha-medase). Here, as it will be noticed, Parjanya takes the place of Dyaus, as the husband of Pṛithivī.[33]

In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iv. 27, we have the following reference to the marriage of Heaven and Earth: Imau vai lokau saha āstām | tau vyaitām | na avarshat na samatapat | te panchajanāḥ na samajānata | tau devāḥ samanayan | tau saṁyantāv etaṁ deva-vivāhaṁ vyavahetām | ..... asau vai lokaḥ imaṁ lokam abhi paryāvarttata | tato vai dyāvāpṛithivī abhavatām | na dyāvā antarikshād na antarikshād bhūmiḥ | which is translated as follows by Professor Haug (vol. ii. 308): "These two worlds (heaven and earth) were once joined. (Subsequently) they separated. (After their separation) there fell neither rain, nor was there sunshine. The five classes of beings (gods, men, etc.) then did not keep peace with one another. (Thereupon) the gods brought about a reconciliation of both these worlds. Both contracted with one another a marriage according to the rites observed by the gods." The end of the section I render: "That world approached this world: thence were produced heaven and earth: neither the heaven nor the earth was produced from the air."

Heaven and Earth are regarded as the parents not only of men, but of the gods also, as appears from the various texts where they are designated by the epithet devaputre, "having gods for their children" (viz. in i. 106, 3; i. 159, 1; i. 185, 4;[34] iv. 56, 2; vi. 17, 7; vii. 53, 1; x. 11, 9). In like manner it is said (in vii. 97, 8) that "the divine worlds (i.e. Heaven and Earth), the parents of the god, have augmented Bṛihaspati by their power"[35] (devī devasya rodasī janitrī Bṛihaspatiṁ

[33] The Taittirīya Āranyaka says, p. 73: Jāyā bhūmir patir vyoma | mithunaṁ tā ityādi | "The Earth is the wife, the Sky is the husband; they are a pair." Manu says, ii. 225: Mātā pṛithivyāḥ mūrttiḥ | "A mother is an image of the Earth."

[34] In verse 6 of this hymn they are called janitrī, "the parents."

[35] In iii. 53, 7, and iv. 2, 15, the Angirases are said to be divasputrāḥ, sons of Dyaus. See also x. 62, 6, and 3.

vāvṛidhatur mahitvā); and (in x. 2, 7) they are described as having, in conjunction with the waters, and with Tvashṭṛi, begotten Agni (yaṁ tvā dyāvā-pṛithivī yaṁ tv āpas Tvashṭā yaṁ tvā sujanimā jajāna). And in various passages they are said to have made (pitarā bhūma chakratuḥ), and to sustain (pitā mātā cha bhuvanāni rakshataḥ | viśvaṁ tmanā bibhṛitho yad ha nāma) all creatures (in i. 159, 2; i. 160, 2; i. 185, 1).[36]

In the next Section we shall find that according to R.V. x. 63, 2, a threefold origin is ascribed to the gods, some of them having been produced from Aditi, others from the aerial waters, and others again from the earth.

(2) Passages to the same effect from the classical authors.

But it is not in ancient Indian mythology alone that Heaven and Earth are regarded as being the universal parents. It is observed by a recent French author that "the marriage of Heaven and Earth forms the foundation of a hundred mythologies."[37] According to the Theogony of Hesiod (116 ff.) the first thing that arose out of Chaos was "the broad-bosomed Earth, the firm abode of all things"

Ἤτοι μὲν πρώτιστα Χάος γένετ', αὐτὰρ ἔπειτα
Γαῖ' εὐρύστερνος, πάντων ἕδος ἀσφαλὲς αἰεί.

She in her turn "produced the starry Heaven, co-extensive with herself, to envelope her on every part."[38] From the union of these two powers sprang Oceanos, Kronos, the Cyclopes, Rheia, etc. (132 ff.); and from Kronos and Rheia again were produced Zeus, Here, and other deities (453 ff.). In his "Works and Days" (561) Hesiod speaks of the Earth as Γῆ πάντων μήτηρ, the earth the mother of all things."[39]

Among the Homeric hymns there is one of 19 lines addressed to "the mother of all things" which begins thus:

Γαῖαν παμμήτειραν ἀείσομαι, ἠῢθεμεθλον,
Πρεσβίστην, ἣ φέρβει ἐπὶ χθονὶ πάνθ' ὁπόσ' ἐστὶν, κ.τ.λ.

[36] In one place (vi. 50, 7), the waters are spoken of as mothers (janitrīḥ) of all things moveable and immoveable. Compare the passages from the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, in the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 15 f.; 21 f.; and the texts given in the 1st vol. 2nd ed. p. 31 f. 52 f.; and R.V. x. 121, 7; x. 29, 3. In the A.V. xix. 54, 1, the waters themselves are said to have sprung from time (kālād āpaḥ samabhavan).

[37] M. Albert Réville, Essais de Critique Religieuse, p. 383. "Cent mythologies sont fondées sur le mariage du ciel et de la terre." See also pp. 292 and 298.

[38] The original verses will be found at the close of the section on Varuṇa.

[39] The line in which these words occur is however supposed to be spurious.

"I will sing of the Earth, the universal mother, the firmly based, the most venerable, who feeds all creatures that are on the ground," etc. In v. 6, it is said that it depends on her to give life to mortals, and to take it away:

πότνια, σεῦ δ' ἔχεται δοῦναι βίον ἠδ' ἀφελέσθαι θνητοῖς ἀνθρώποισιν.

In verse 16 she is addressed as a venerable goddess, σεμνὴ θεὰ, and in v. 17 as "the mother of the gods, and the spouse of the starry Ouranos:

χαῖρε θεῶν μήτηρ, ἄλοχ' Οὐρανοῦ ἀστερόεντος.

Æschylus, in his Prometheus Vinctus, 88 ff., makes Prometheus exclaim "O divine æther, and ye many-winged blasts, ye fountains of the rivers, thou multitudinous laugh of Ocean, and thou Earth, the Universal Mother;—and the all-beholding circle of the Sun I invoke:"

ὦ δῖος αἰθὴρ καὶ ταχύπτεροι πνοαὶ ποταμῶν τε πηγαὶ ποντίων τε κυμάτων ἀνήριθμον γέλασμα, παμμῆτορ τε γῆ, καὶ τὸν πανόπτην κύκλον ἡλίου καλῶ.

In the Seven against Thebes, 16, Eteocles speaks of "Mother Earth, the most beloved nurse":

Γῇ τε μητρὶ, φιλτάτῃ τροφῷ.

At the beginning of the Eumenides of the same poet the Earth is worshipped as the first prophetess:

Πρῶτον μὲν εὐχῇ τῇδε πρεσβεύω θεῶν
Τὴν πρωτόμαντιν Γαῖαν.

And in the 41st fragment of Æschylus (from the Danaides) Aphrodite is introduced as saying:

ἐρᾷ μὲν ἀγνὸς οὐρανὸς τρῶσαι χθόνα, ἔρως δὲ γαῖαν λαμβάνει γάμου τυχεῖν· ὄμβρος δ' ἀπ' εὐνάεντος οὐρανοῦ πεσὼν ἔκυσε γαῖαν· ἡ δὲ τίκτεται βροτοῖς μήλων τε βοσκὰς καὶ βίον Δημήτριον· δενδρῶτις ὥρα δ' ἐκ νοτίζοντος γάμου τέλειός ἐστι. τῶν δ' ἐγὼ παραίτιος.

"The pure Heaven loves to inflict on the Earth an amorous blow; and desire seizes the earth to obtain the nuptial union. Rain falling from the moist Heaven impregnates the Earth, who brings forth for mortals the food of sheep, and the sustenance of Demeter. The verdure of the woods also is perfected by the showers proceeding from this marriage. Of all these things I (Aphrodite) am in part the cause."

Sophocles also, in his Œdipus Coloneus, 1480, makes the chorus speak of "Mother Earth:"

Ἴλαος, ὦ δαίμων, Ἴλαος, ἔι τι γᾷ ματέρι τυγχάνεις ἀφεγγὲς φέρων.

And in his Antigone, 338, she is characterized as "the highest of the deities, imperishable and unwearied:"

θεῶν τε τὰν ὑπερτάταν, γᾶν ἄφθιτον, ἀκαμάταν ἀποτρύεται, κ.τ.λ.

In his Philoctetes, 391, she is addressed as "the all-nurturing earth, the mother of Zeus himself:"

Ὀρεστέρα παμβῶτι Γᾶ, μᾶτερ αὐτοῦ Διὸς, ἃ τὸν μέγαν Πακτωλὸν εὔχρυσον νέμεις.

Euripides also, in his Hippolytus, 601, makes his hero invoke "Mother Earth:"

ὦ γαῖα μῆτερ ἡλίου τ' ἀναπτυχαὶ, κ.τ.λ.

So too in the Helena, 39:

Ὡς ὄχλου βροτῶν
πλήθους τε κουφίσειε μητέρα χθόνα, κ.τ.λ.

And again in the same drama, 613, the heroine speaks of Heaven as the Father:

πατέρ' ἐς οὐρανὸν
ἄπειμι·

In his Bacchæ, 274, the same poet makes Teiresias thus identify Earth with the goddess Demeter:

δύο γὰρ, ὦ νεανία,
τὰ πρῶτ' ἐν ἀνθρώποισιν Δημήτηρ θεά.
Γῆ δ' ἐστίν· ὄνομα δ' ὁπότερον βούλει κάλει,
αὕτη μὲν ἐν ξηροῖσιν ἐκτρέφει βροτούς.

"Two things, o youth, are the first among men, the goddess Demeter, and she is the Earth. Call her by either name as you please. She nourishes mortals with dry sustenance."[40] The second deity is Dionysus who gives them the juice of the grape.

[40] In describing the Egyptian cosmogony Diodorus Siculus i. 12 also thus connects the Earth with Demeter: Τὴν δὲ γῆν ὥσπερ ἀγγεῖόν τι τῶν φυομένων ὑπολαμβάνοντας μητέρα προσαγορεῦσαι· καὶ τοὺς Ἕλληνας δὲ ταύτην παραπλησίως Δήμητραν καλεῖν, βραχὺ μετατεθείσης τῆς λέξεως· τὸ γὰρ παλαιὸν ὀνομάζεσθαι γῆν μητέρα, καθάπερ καὶ τὸν Ορφέα προμαρτυρεῖν λέγοντα "γῆ μῆτερ πάντων, Δημήτηρ πλουτοδότειρα." "And they say that, conceiving the Earth as a sort of receptacle of the things which were produced, they called her mother; and that the Greeks in like manner call her Demeter, with a slight alteration of the letters (i.e. Dēmētēr for Gēmētēr): for of old she was called 'Earth Mother' (Gēn mētĕra), as Orpheus too testifies when he speaks of 'the Earth the mother of all things, Demeter, the giver of wealth.'"

And in the 6th fragment from the Chrysippus of the same dramatist we find the following passage:

Γαῖα μεγίστη καὶ Διὸς αἰθὴρ, ὁ μὲν ἀνθρώπων καὶ θεῶν γενέτωρ,
ἡ δ' ὑγροβόλους σταγόνας νοτίους παραδεξαμένη τίκτει θνατοὺς, τίκτει δὲ βορὰν, φῦλα τε θηρῶν, ὅθεν οὐκ ἀδίκως
μήτηρ πάντων νενόμισται.

"The mighty Earth, and Jove's Æther,—of these the one is the generator of men and gods, and the other, receiving the drops of moisture, produces mortals, produces food, and the tribes of animals;—whence she is not unjustly regarded as the mother of all." [41]

The earth also appears to be regarded by Pindar (Nem. 6, 1 ff.) as the common parent, or sustainer, of both gods and men:

Ἓν ἀνδρῶν, ἓν θεῶν γένος· ἐκ μιᾶς δὲ πνέομεν ματρὸς ἀμφότεροι·

"There is one race of men, and one of gods; but we both draw our breath from the same mother."

In the following passage of Dionysius of Halicarnassus, vol. v. p. 355 (Diod. Sic. i. 7;[42] Euseb. P. E. i. p. 20[d])[43], and in the fragment of Euri-

[41] See also Plato, Repub. iii. 20: Ἐπειδὴ δὲ παντελῶς ἐξειργασμένοι ἦσαν καὶ ἡ γῆ αὐτοὺς μήτηρ οὖσα ἀνῆκε, κ.τ.λ. "But when they were perfectly fashioned, and the earth, their mother, sent them forth," etc. See also the Menexenus, Sect. 7: from which I extract the following: ὅ δὴ καὶ ἡ ἡμετέρα γῆ τε καὶ μήτηρ ἱκανὸν τεκμήριον παρέχεται ὡς ἀνθρώπους γεννησαμένη· . . . οὐ γὰρ γῆ γυναῖκα μεμίμηται κυήσει καὶ γεννήσει ἀλλα γυνὴ γῆν. "Whereby our own land and mother (Attica) gives sufficient proof that she has produced men," etc. And: "For the earth does not imitate woman in becoming pregnant, and bearing offspring, but woman the earth."

[42] Diodorus begins the passage i. 7, in which he introduces these lines from Euripides, as follows: He tells us that in the opinion of some speculators "heaven and earth had, according to the original constitution of things, but one form, the natural properties of the two being blended; but that afterwards, when the body of the one had become separated from that of the other, the world assumed that regular arrangement which we now witness," etc. (κατὰ γὰρ τὴν ἐξ ἀρχῆς τῶν ὅλων σύστασιν μίαν ἔχειν ἰδέαν οὐρανόν τε καὶ γῆν, μεμιγμένης αὐτῶν τῆς φύσεως· μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα διαστάντων τῶν σωμάτων ἀπ' ἀλλήλων τὸν μὲν κόσμον περιλαβεῖν ἅπασαν τὴν ὁρωμένην, ἐν αὐτῷ σύνταξιν, κ.τ.λ.). After giving the details of this development, he concludes: "And in regard to the nature of the universe, Euripides, who was a disciple of Anaxagoras, the physical philosopher, does not appear to have differed from the views which have been stated" (ἔοικε δὲ περὶ τῆς τῶν ὅλων φύσεως οὐδ' Εὐριπίδης διαφωνεῖν τοῖς προειρημένοις, μαθητὴς ὢν Ἀναξαγόρου τοῦ φυσικοῦ). He then quotes the lines given in the text.

[43] See W. Dindorf's Euripides, vol. ii. p. 915, ed. Oxford, 1833.

pides, which is there preserved, we find that a doctrine, partly similar to that of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa adduced above, regarding heaven and earth, is ascribed to the philosopher Anaxagoras, and was expressed by his disciple the poet:

Ἀναξαγόρᾳ προσεφοίτησεν Εὐριπίδης. Ἀναξαγόρου δὲ λόγος ἐστὶν ὅτι πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν, εἶτα ὕστερον διεκρίθη. μετὰ ταῦτα ὡμίλησε καὶ Σωκράτει, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ ἀπορώτερον ἤγαγε τὸν λόγον. ὁμολογεῖ οὖν την διδασκαλίαν τὴν ἀρχαίαν διὰ τῆς Μελανίππης·

Κοὐκ ἐμὸς ὁ μῦθος, ἀλλ' ἐμῆς μητρὸς πάρα, ὡς οὐρανός τε γαῖά τ' ἦν μορφὴ μία· ἐπεὶ δ' ἐχωρίσθησαν ἀλλήλων δίχα, τίκτουσι πάντα κἀνέδωκαν εἰς φάος δένδρη, πετεινὰ, θῆρας, οὕς θ' ἅλμη τρέφει, γένος τε θνητῶν.

"Euripides frequented the lectures of Anaxagoras. Now it was the theory of that philosopher that all things were confounded (lit. all things were in all things), but afterwards became separated. Euripides afterwards associated with Socrates, and became doubtful regarding the theory. He accordingly admits the ancient doctrine by the mouth of Melanippe: 'The saying is not mine but came from my mother, that formerly the Heaven and Earth formed one substance: but when they were separated from each other, they gave birth to all things, and brought them forth into the light, trees, birds, beasts, fishes, and the race of mortals.'"

The appellation of mother is naturally applied to the earth, as the source from which all vegetable products spring, as well as the home of all living creatures. This is remarked by Lucretius, "De Rerum Natura," in these lines, v. 793 ff.:

"Nam neque de cælo cecidisse animalia possunt,
Nec terrestria de salsis exisse lacunis:
Linquitur ut merito maternum nomen adepta
Terra sit, e terra quoniam sunt cuncta creata," etc.

And again, v. 821:

"Quare etiam atque etiam maternum nomen adepta
Terra tenet merito, quoniam genus ipsa creavit
Humanum atque animal prope certo tempore fudit," etc.

And in illustration of the idea that Heaven is the father of all things, I may quote his words, ii. 991:

"Denique cælesti sumus omnes semine oriundi:
Omnibus ille idem pater est, unde alma liquentis

> Umoris guttas mater cum terra recepit,[44]
> Feta parit nitidas fruges arbustaque laeta
> Et genus humanum," etc.

And ii. 998 :

> "Qua propter merito maternum nomen adepta est.
> Cedit idem retro de terra quod fuit ante,
> In terras, et quod missumst ex ætheris oris
> Id rursum cæli rellatum templa receptant."

See also v. 799 :

> "Quo minus est mirum, si tum sunt plura coorta > Et majora, novâ tellure atque æthere adulta," etc.

My attention was drawn to these passages by finding them referred to in Professor Sellar's "Roman Poets of the Republic," pp. 236, 247, and 276. See also Lucretius i. 250 :

> Postremo pereunt imbres, ubi eos pater aether
> In gremium matris terrai praecipitavit ;

And v. 318 :

> Denique jam tuere hoc, circum supraque quod omnem,
> Continet amplexu terram :

See also Pacuvius 86, quoted by Mr. Munro in his Notes on Lucretius v. 318, and Virgil, Georgics ii. 325, cited in his note on Lucr. i. 250 :

> Tum pater omnipotens fecundis imbribus aether
> Conjugis in gremium laetae descendit et omnis
> Magnus alit magno commixtus corpore fetus.

Mr. Munro there remarks: "From the Vedas to the Pervigilium Veneris poets and philosophers love to celebrate this union of ether and earth, ether as father descending in showers into the lap of mother earth." See the same author's notes on Lucr. ii. 991.[45] Tacitus, too, informs us in his Germania, 40 : Nec quidquam notabile in singulis nisi quod in commune Ertham, it ed Terram matrem, colunt, eamque intervenire rebus hominum, invehi populis arbitrantur.[46] "Nor is there anything in regard to particular points which deserves remark except that they all together worship Ertha, i.e. Mother Earth, and think that she intervenes in the affairs of men, and moves round among the nations."

[44] Compare A.V. xii. 1, 12, 42, quoted above, p. 23.

[45] See also Professor Max Müller's Lectures on Language, ii. 459, and Mr. C. Bruce's paper "On the Vedic Conception of the Earth," Journ. R. A. S. xix. 330 ff.

[46] Ed. F. Ritter (Cambridge and London, 1848) who substitutes Ertham for the common reading Nertham. See his Notes in loco, and on Section 9.

(3) Heaven and earth elsewhere spoken of as created.

On the other hand, Heaven and Earth are spoken of in other places as themselves created. Thus it is said (i. 160, 4; iv. 56, 3), that he who produced heaven and earth must have been the most skilful artizan of all the gods[47] (ayaṁ devānām apasām apastamò yo jajāna rodasī viśvaśambhuvā: sa it svapā bhuvaneshu āsa yaḥ ime dyāvā-pṛithivī jajāna). Again, Indra is described as their creator (janitā divo janitā pṛithivyāḥ) (vi. 30, 5; viii. 36, 4);[48] as having beautifully fashioned them by his power and skill (x. 29, 6, mātre nu te sumite Indra pūrvī dyaur majmanā pṛithivī kāvyena); as having generated from his own body the father and the mother (by which heaven and earth are clearly intended (x. 54, 3. Kaḥ u nu te mahimanaḥ samasya asmat pūrve ṛishayo antam āpuḥ | yan mātaraṁ cha pitaraṁ cha sākam ajanayathās tanvaḥ svāyāḥ); as having bestowed them on his worshippers (iii. 34, 8. Sasāna yaḥ pṛithivīṁ dyām utemām); as sustaining and upholding them (dadhāra yaḥ pṛithivīm dyām utemām) (iii. 32, 8; iii. 44, 3; vi. 17, 7; x. 55, 1);[49] as grasping them in his hand (iii. 30, 5. Ime chid Indra rodasī apāre yat saṁgṛibhṇāḥ maghavan kāśir it te); as stretching them out like a hide (viii. 6. 5. Ojas tad asya titvishe ubhe yat samavarttayat | Indraś charmeva rodasī). The same deity is elsewhere (vi. 30, 1) said to transcend heaven and earth, which are equal to only a half of the god[50] (Pra

[47] This phrase is, perhaps, primarily meant as an eulogy of the heaven and earth, by expressing that he must have been a most glorious being who was the author of so grand a production as heaven and earth (see Sāyaṇa on R.V. i. 160, 4, who says, "that having in the previous verse magnified the heaven and earth by lauding their son the sun, the poet now magnifies them by exalting their maker"). But it also appears to intimate that, in the idea of the writer, the heaven and earth were, after all, produced by some greater being. In iv. 17, 4, it is similarly said that "the maker of Indra was a most skilful artist."

[48] The A.V. xii. 1. 10, says: "May our mother the earth whom Indra, the lord of power, made, friendly to himself, give milk to me her son (Indro yāṁ chakre ātmane anamitraṁ śachīpatiḥ | sā no bhūmir visṛijatām mātā putrāya me payaḥ.

[49] Who are the sons or children of Indra's brother (bhrātuḥ putrān) mentioned in this verse, and who is the brother?

[50] In viii. 59, 5, it is said: "If, Indra, a hundred heavens and a hundred earths were thine, a thousand suns could not equal thee, thunderer, nor anything born, nor both worlds" (yad dyāvaḥ Indra te śataṁ śatam bhūmīr uta syuḥ | na tvā vajrin sahasraṁ sūryāḥ anu na jātam aṣhṭa rodasī).

ririche divaḥ Indraḥ pṛithivyāḥ arddham id asya prati rodasī ubhe); and they are further represented as following him as a chariot wheel a horse (viii. 6, 38. Anu tvā rodasī ubhe chakraṁ na vartti etaśam); as bowing down before him (i. 131, 1. Indrāya hi Dyaur asuro anamnata Indrāya mahī pṛithivī varīmabhiḥ);[51] as trembling from fear of him (iv. 17, 2. Tava tvisho janiman rejata Dyauḥ rejad bhūmir bhiyasā svasya manyoḥ[52] | See also iv. 22, 3 f.; vi. 17, 9; viii. 86, 14); as being disturbed by his greatness (vii. 23, 3. Vi bādhishṭa rodasī mahitvā Indraḥ); as subject to his dominion (x. 89, 10. Indro divaḥ Indraḥ īśe pṛithivyāḥ); and as doing homage to his power (viii. 82, 12. Adha te apratishkutāṁ devī śushmaṁ saparyataḥ | ubhe suśipra rodasī). The creation of heaven and earth is also ascribed to other deities, as to Soma and Pūshan (ii. 40, 1. Somāpūshaṇā jananā rayīnāṁ jananā divo janānā pṛithivyāḥ); to Soma (ix. 98, 9. Sa vāṁ yajneshu Mānavī Indur janishṭa rodasī | devo devī ityādi |[53] See also ix. 90, 1; ix. 96, 5); to Dhātṛi (x. 190, 3. Sūryā-chandramasau Dhātā yathāpūrvam[54] akalpayat | divaṁ cha pṛithivīṁ cha antarikshaṁ atho svaḥ); to Hiraṇyagarbha (x. 121, 9. Mā no hiṁsīj janitā yaḥ pṛithivyāḥ yo vā divaṁ satyadharmā jajāna | Comp. v. 5); they are declared to have received their shape and variety of forms, from Tvashṭṛi, though themselves parents (x. 110, 9. Yaḥ ime dyāvāpṛithivī janitrī rūpair apiṁśad bhuvanāni viśvā); to have sprung respectively from the head and the feet of Purusha (x. 90, 14. Nābhyāḥ asya antarikshaṁ śīrshṇo dyauḥ samavarttata | padbhyāṁ bhūmiḥ); and to be sustained or supported by Mitra (iii. 59, 1), by Savitṛi (iv. 53, 2; x. 149, 1. Savitā yantraiḥ pṛi-

[51] Heaven (Dyaus) is here styled asuraḥ, "the divine," as also in iii. 53, 7.

[52] It might at first sight appear as if, according to the fourth verse of this hymn (iv. 17, 4), the Heaven, Dyaus, was the father of Indra (see Professor Wilson's translation, vol. iii. p. 151). But the meaning seems to be: "The Heaven esteemed that thy father was a stalwart hero: he was a most skilful artist who made Indra, who produced the celestial thunderer, unshaken, as the world (cannot be shaken) from its place." This is confirmed by verse 1, which says that the Heaven acknowledged Indra's power; and by verse 2, which represents it as trembling at his birth. See also vi. 72, 3.

[53] The two worlds, rodasī, are here styled devī, "divine," and mānavī, "human," or "connected with men," or "friendly to men."

[54] It is remarkable that here Dhātṛi is said to have formed the sun, moon, sky, earth, air, and heaven, as before; as if, agreeably to the Puranic conception, they had previously existed, and been destroyed. See the 1st vol. of this work, 2nd ed. pp. 51, 66, 76.

thivīm aramṇād askambhane Savitā dyām adṛiṁhat), by Varuṇa (vi. 70, 1; vii. 86, 1; viii. 42, 1), by Indra and Soma (vi. 72, 2), by Soma (ix. 87, 2), and by Hiraṇyagarbha (x. 121, 5).

(4) Speculations about their origin.

In other passages we encounter various speculations about their origin. In i. 185, 1, the perplexed poet enquires, "Which of these two was the first,[55] and which the last? How have they been produced? Sages, who knows?" (Katarā pūrvā katarā aparā ayoḥ kathā jāte kavayoḥ ko vi veda).[56] In vii. 34, 2, the waters are said to know the birth-place of heaven and earth (viduḥ pṛithivyāḥ divo janitraṁ śriṇvanti āpo adha ksharantīḥ). In x. 31, 7, the Rishi asks: "What was the forest, what was the tree, from which they fashioned the heaven and the earth, which abide undecaying and perpetual, (whilst) the days and many dawns have disappeared?" (kiṁ svid vanaṁ kaḥ u sa vṛikshaḥ āsa yato dyāvā-pṛithivī nishṭatakshuḥ | saṁtasthāne ajare itaūtī ahāni pūrvīr ushaso jaranta). This question is repeated in x. 81, 4;[57] and in the same hymn (verses 2 and 3) the creation of heaven and earth is ascribed to the sole agency of the god Viśvakarman:[58] 2. "What was the support, what and how was the basis from which by his might the all-seeing Viśvakarman produced the earth, and spread out the sky? 3. The one god who has on every side eyes, faces, arms, and feet, blows with his arms and his wings, when producing the heaven and earth" (2. Kiṁ svid āsīd adhishṭhānam ārambhanaṁ katamat svit kathā āsīt | yato bhūmiṁ janayan Viśvakarmā vi dyām aurṇod mahinā viśvachakshāḥ | 3. Viśvataśchakshur uta viśvatomukho viśvatobāhur uta viśvatspāt | sam bāhubhyaṁ dhamati sam pata-

[55] S'atap. Br. xiv. 1, 2, 10, Iyam pṛithivī bhūtasya prathama-jā, "This earth is the firstborn of created things."

[56] Compare Professor Müller's Lectures on Language, ii. 428, and Nirukta iii. 22.

[57] See also the Taitt. Br. ii. 8, 9, 6, where the answer is given, "Brahma was the forest, Brahma was that tree from which they fashioned heaven and earth" (Brahma vanam Brahma sa vṛikshaḥ āsīd yato dyāvāpṛithivī nishṭatakshuḥ). In A.V. xii. 1, 60, Viśvakarman is said to have sought the earth with an oblation when she had entered into the fluid atmosphere (yām anvaichhad Viśvakarmā antar arṇave rajasi pravishṭām). Compare the accounts in the Brāhmaṇas and Purāṇas of the earth being sunk beneath the waters at the creation, 1st vol. of this work, 2nd ed. pp. 50–55, 76.

[58] See the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 4 ff., and Haug's Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 299.

trair dyāvā-bhūmī janayam devaḥ ekaḥ). In x. 72, which will be quoted in the next section, a different account is given of the origin of heaven and earth. In R.V. x. 129, 1, it is said that originally there was "nothing either non-existent or existent, no atmosphere or sky beyond" (na asad āsīd no sad āsīt tadānīṁ na āsīd rajo no vyoma paro yat); and in Taitt. Br. ii. 2, 9, 1 ff., it is declared, that "formerly nothing existed, neither heaven, nor earth, nor atmosphere," and their formation is described: "That, being non-existent, resolved, 'Let me become,'" etc. (idaṁ vai agre naiva kinchana āsīt | na dyaur āsīt | na pṛithivī | na antarikṣham | tad asad eva san mano 'kuruta "syām" iti | The passage is quoted at length in the 3rd vol. of this work, pp. 27 ff.)

It is, as we have already seen (p. 24), a conception of the Greek, as well as of the oldest Indian, mythology, that the gods sprang from Heaven and earth (in the former case Ouranos and Gaia). The Indian god who is represented in the Veda as the consort of the Earth and the progenitor of the gods, does not, however, as we have seen, bear the same name as the corresponding divinity among the Greeks, but is called Dyaus, or Dyaush pitar. But this latter name is in its origin identical with Zeus, or Zeus pater, and Jupiter, or Diespiter, the appellations given to the supreme god of the Greeks and Romans,[59] whom Hesiod represents as the grandson of Ouranos. On the other hand, the name of Ouranos corresponds to that of the Indian deity Varuṇa, who, though he is not regarded as the progenitor of the gods, yet, as we shall see more fully in a future section, is considered to coincide with Ouranos in representing the sky.

The word Pṛithivī, on the other hand, which in most parts of the Rig-veda is used for Earth, has no connection with any Greek word of the same meaning. It seems, however, originally to have been merely an epithet, meaning "broad;"[60] and may have supplanted the older [59] For the proof of the identity of Dyaus and Zeus, see Prof. Müller's Lectures on Language, i. 11; ii. 425–434; Prof. M. Bréal, "Hercule et Cacus," 102; Hartung, "Religion und Mythologie der Griechen," ii. 5 f.; iii. 1 ff. See also iii. pp. 45 f., and and 76 f. of the last-named work, where Hera, the consort of Zeus, is described as a representative of the earth, and where Uranos and Gaea, Kronos and Rhea, Zeus and Hera, though described in the Greek mythology as successive pairs of deities, are yet asserted to be essentially the same couples, with altered names.

[60] Compare in the first volume of this work, pp. 52, 53, two passages from the Taittirīya Saṅhitā and Brāhmaṇa, in which the formation of the earth is described, word Gau, which (with Gmā and Jmā) stands at the head of the earliest Indian vocabulary, the Nighaṇṭu, as one of the synonyms of Pṛithivī (earth), and which closely resembles the Greek Γαῖα or Γῆ. In this way Gaur mātar may possibly have once corresponded to the Γῆ μήτηρ or Δημήτηρ of the Greeks.

Professor Benfey (Orient und Occident, i. 48, note 275, which the German reader may consult), and M. Michel Bréal (Hercule et Cacus, p. 101) are of opinion that the functions which in the older Indian mythology were assigned to Dyaus, were at a later period transferred to Indra, whose characteristics will form the subject of a later section.

and in which it is said to have derived the name of Pṛithivī from its being extended (aprathata). See also R.V. ii. 15, 2, sa dhārayat pṛithivīm paprathat cha | "He upheld the earth (pṛithivī), and spread it out" (paprathat).

SECTION III.

ADITI.[61]

I proceed to Aditi, who is, in idea at least, if not chronologically, one of the older Indian deities, and who is the only goddess, except Nishṭigrī[62] and Ushas, whom I have noticed as specified by name in the R.V. as the mother of any of the gods.

(1) The epithets by which she is characterized.

Though not the subject of any separate hymn, Aditi is an object of frequent celebration in the Rig-veda, where she is supplicated for blessings on children and cattle (as in i. 43, 2. yathā no Aditiḥ karat pāsve nṛibhyo yathā gave | yathā tokāya rudriyam), for protection and for forgiveness. She is represented, as we have already seen (p. 13), as the mother of Varuṇa and some of the other deities. In the Nighaṇṭu, or ancient vocabulary prefixed to the Nirukta, the word Aditi is given a synonym (1) of pṛithivī, the earth; (2) of vāch, voice; (3) of go, cow;[63] and (4) in the dual, of dyāvā-pṛithivyau, heaven and earth (Nigh. i. 1, 11; 2, 11; 3, 30). In the Nirukta (iv. 22) she is defined as the mighty mother of the gods (adīnā deva-mātā).[64] In another part [61] Before commencing the revision of this section, I had received the first vol. of Prof. Müller's translation of the Rig-veda, which contains, pp. 230–251, an able dissertation on Aditi. See the same author's Lectures on Language, ii. 500.

[62] See note in p. 13.

[63] Compare R.V. viii. 90, 15, gām anāgām aditim; and Vāj. Sanh. xiii. 43, where Agni is supplicated not to injure her (gām mā himsīr Aditiṁ virājam), and 49 (ghṛitaṁ duhānām aditiṁ janāya).

[64] In R.V. i. 113, 19, Ushas (the dawn) is styled "the mother of the gods, and the manifestation of Aditi" (mātā devānām Aditer anīkam); or, as Sāyaṇa explains, the rival of Aditi, from her appearing to call all the gods into existence when they are worshipped in the morning, as Aditi really gave them birth. Compare i. 115, 1. Müller, Transl. of R.V. i. 231, renders Aditer anīkam, "the face of Aditi."

(xi. 22) of the same work (where the different gods are taken up in the order in which they are found in the list in the Nighaṇṭu, chap. 5) she is placed at the head of the female divinities of the intermediate region (atha ato madhya-stānāḥ stṛiyaḥ | tāsām Aditiḥ prathamāgāminī bhavati). In numerous texts of the R.V. Aditi is styled the "goddess," or the "divine" (devī) (as in iv. 55, 3, 7; v. 51, 11; vi. 50, 1; vii. 38, 4; vii. 40, 2; viii. 25, 10; viii. 27, 5; viii. 56, 10), the "irresistible goddess" (devī Aditir aṛarvā, ii. 40, 6; vii. 40, 4; x. 92, 14), "the luminous,[65] the supporter of creatures, the celestial" (jyotishmatīm Aditiṁ dhārayat-kshitiṁ[66] svarvatīm, i. 136, 3), the "widely expanded" (uru-vyachāḥ,[67] v. 46, 6), the friend of all men" (viśvajanyām, vii. 10, 4). In v. 69, 3, the rishi exclaims: "In the morning I continually invoke the divine Aditi, at mid-day, at the setting[68] of the sun" (prātar devim Aditiṁ johavīmi madhyandine uditā sūryasya.) In i. 185, 3, her gifts—pure, unassailable, celestial, imperishable, and inspiring veneration,—are supplicated (aneho dātram Aditer anarvam huve svarvad avadhaṁ namasvat); and in another place (i. 166, 12) the large blessings conferred by the Maruts are compared to the beneficent deeds of Aditi (dīrghaṁ vo dātraṁ Aditer iva vratam).[69] In iv. 55, 3, she is styled Pastyā, which Professor Roth understands to mean a household goddess (comp. Müller, p. 248). In the Vāj. S. she is thus celebrated, 21, 5 (=A.V. vii. 6, 2): "Let us invoke to aid us the great mother of the devout, the mistress of the ceremonial, the strong in might, the undecaying, the widely-extended, the protecting, the skilfully guiding Aditi" (mahīm ū shu mātaraṁ suvratānām ṛitasya patnīm avase huvema | tuvikshatrām ajaṛantīm urūchiṁ suśarmāṇam Aditiṁ supraṇītim.

[65] See Roth in Journ. Germ. Or. Society, vi. 69; and compare R.V. vii. 82, 10: "We celebrate the beneficent light of Aditi," etc. (avadhraṁ jyotiḥ).

[66] The same epithet, dhārayat-kshiti, is, in R.V. x. 132, 2, applied to Mitra and Varuṇa, the sons of Aditi.

[67] Compare Taitt. Br. ii. 4, 2, 7: Senā ha nāma pṛithivī dhananjayā viśvavyachāḥ Aditiḥ sūryatvak.

[68] The word uditi here is understood both by Roth (s.v.), by Kuhn (in his review of this essay), and Müller (Transl. R.V. i. 231, 232), to signify the setting of the sun.

[69] Müller, p. 199, translates this: "your bounty extends as far as the sway of Aditi." See his note on the different senses of vrata, pp. 225 ff.

(2) Origin of the conception of Aditi according to Professors Roth and Müller.

In the Lexicon of Böhtlingk and Roth the word aditi is taken (in addition to other senses which are also assigned) to signify "infinity, especially the boundlessness of heaven in opposition to the finiteness of the earth, and its spaces;" and this signification is considered to be personified in the goddess Aditi. In his Illustrations of the Nirukta, pp. 150 f. Professor Roth had understood the word to mean "inviolability," "imperishableness;" and when personified as a goddess, to denote eternity, her sons the Ādityas being the sons of eternity, and the solar and luminous gods Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, etc., being pre-eminently the eternal deities, as light was regarded as the immaterial and eternal principle. In his essay on the highest gods of the Arian nations (Journ. of the German Or. Society, vi. 68 f.) the same writer says: "Aditi, eternity, or the eternal, is the element which sustains, and is sustained by, the Ādityas. This conception, owing to the character of what it embraces, had not in the Vedas been carried out into a definite personification, though the beginings of such are not wanting. . . . . This eternal and inviolable principle, in which the Ādityas live, and which constitutes their essence, is the celestial light."

In a note on R.V. i. 166, 12 (Trans. of the Rig-veda, i. 230), Professor Müller says that "Aditi, an ancient god or goddess, is in reality the earliest name invented to express the Infinite; not the Infinite as the result of a long process of abstract reasoning, but the visible Infinite, visible by the naked eye, the endless expanse, beyond the earth, beyond the clouds, beyond the sky." And in the next page he goes on to remark that "if we keep this original conception (the conception which he has explained in these two pages) of Aditi clearly before us, the various forms which Aditi assumes, even in the hymns of the Veda, will not seem incoherent.

(3) Aditi as the mother of the Ādityas.

I proceed to adduce some of the other texts in which Aditi is described and characterized, and begin with those in which she is represented as the mother of Varuṇa and the other kindred gods:

viii. 25, 3. Tā mātā viśvavedasā asuryāya pramahasā | mahī jajāna Aditir ṛitāvarī | "The mother, the great, the holy Aditi, brought forth these twain (Mitra and Varuṇa), the mighty lords of all wealth, that they might exercise divine power."

viii. 47, 9. Aditir naḥ urushyatu Aditir śarma yachhatu | mātā Mitrasya revato Aryamṇo Varuṇasya cha anehasaḥ | "May Aditi defend us, may Aditi grant us protection, she who is the mother of the opulent Mitra, of Aryaman, and of the sinless Varuṇa. See also x. 36, 3, and x. 132, 6; and A.V. v. 1, 9.

In R.V. ii. 27, 7, she is styled rāja-putrā,[70] "the mother of kings;" in iii. 4, 11, su-putrā, "the mother of excellent sons;" in viii. 56, 11, as ugra-putrā, "the mother of powerful sons;" and in Atharva-veda, iii. 8, 2; xi. 1, 11, "the divine Aditi, mother of heroes" (śūra-putrā). All these epithets have obviously reference to Varuṇa and the other Ādityas as her offspring. In A.V. viii. 9, 21, she is called Aditi, who had an eight-fold parturition, who had eight sons" (ashṭa-yonir Aditir ashṭaputrā). In viii. 90, 15, (referred to by Professor Müller in his Lectures ii. 501, and in his Trans. of the R.V. i. p. 237), Aditi appears to be described as the daughter of the Vasus, the sister of the Ādityas, and the mother of Rudras (mātā rudrāṇāṁ duhitā vasūnāṁ svaṣā "dityānām amṛitasya nābhiḥ | pra nu vochaṁ chikitushe janāya mā gām anāgām Aditiṁ vadhishṭa).

In the Sāma-veda (=A.V. vi. 4, 1) the brothers as well as the sons of Aditi appear to be mentioned, i. 299: "May Tvashṭṛi, Parjanya, and Brahmaṇaspati [preserve] our divine utterance. May Aditi with (her) sons and brothers preserve our invincible and protecting utterance"[71] (Tvashṭā no daivyaṁ vachaḥ Parjanyo Brahmaṇaspatiḥ | putrair bhrātṛibhir Aditir nu pātu no dushṭaraṁ trāmaṇaṁ vachaḥ). Who her brothers may be, does not appear.

(4) Is Aditi ever identified with the sky?

In another passage of the R.V. x. 63, 2, Aditi is thus mentioned, along with the waters, and the earth, as one of the sources from which [70] In ii. 27, 1, the epithet rājabhyaḥ, "kings," is applied to all the six Ādityas there named.

[71] Benfey, however, understands the sons and brothers to be those of the worshipper. For trāmaṇaṁ vachaḥ the A.V. reads trāyamāṇaṁ sahaḥ, "delivering force."

the gods had been generated: "All your names, ye gods, are to be revered, adored, and worshipped; ye who were born from Aditi,[72] from the waters, ye who are born from the earth, listen here to my invocation" (Viśvā hi vo namasyāni vandyā nāmāni devāḥ uta yajniyāni vaḥ | ye stha jātāḥ Aditer adbhyas pari ye pṛithivyās te me iha śruta havam |). In this passage we appear to find the same triple classification of gods as celestial, intermediate, and terrestrial (comp. A.V. x. 9, 12), which we have already met with in R.V. i. 139, 11,[73] and in the Nirukta. The gods mentioned in the verse before us as sprung from Aditi, might thus correspond to the celestial gods, among whom the Ādityas are specified by Yāska as the first class, or to the Ādityas alone.[74]

The hymn before us proceeds in the next verse (x. 63, 3): "Gladden, in order to promote our well-being, those Ādityas, who are invigorated by hymns, the bringers of vigour, the energetic, to whom their mother the sky, Aditi, (or the infinite sky),[75] towering to the empyrean, [72] Roth, in his Lexicon, understands the word Aditi in this passage to mean "infinity," the boundlessness of heaven as opposed to the limitation of earth.

[73] The same threefold origin of the gods, together with the use of the word "waters," to denote the intermediate region, is found also in x. 49, 2, where it is said: māṃ dhur Indraṃ nāma devatāḥ divaś cha gmaś cha apāṃ cha jantavaḥ | "The gods, both those who are the offspring of the sky, of the earth, and of the [aerial] waters, have assigned to me the name of Indra;" and in x. 65, 9, the poet says: Parjanya-Vātā vṛishabhā purīshiṇā Indra-Vāyū Varuṇo Mitro Aryamā | devān Ādityān Aditiṃ havāmahe ye pārthivāso divyāso apsu ye | "Parjanya, Vāta, vigorous and shedders of moisture, Indra, Vāyu, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman: We invoke the divine Ādityas, Aditi, those (gods) who are terrestrial, celestial, who (exist) in the aerial waters." The word "waters" seems to be used in the sense of air, in ii. 38, 11, and x. 45, 1. Compare also vii. 35, 11, where the gods are classed as divya, pārthiva, and apya (celestial, earthly, and aerial, apsu antarikshe bhavāḥ: Sāyaṇa), v. 14 of the same hymn where they are divided into divya, pārthiva, (celestial, earthly), and gojāta; and vi. 50, 11, where they are distinguished as divya, pārthiva, gojāta, and apya (celestial, earthly, gojāta, and aerial. Sāyaṇa on R.V. vii. 35, 14, explains gojāta as Pṛiśner jātāḥ "born of Pṛiśni." On vi. 50, 11, he characterizes Pṛiśni as mādhyamikā vāk, "the Vāch of the middle region." In the former of these two passages, if the threefold division of gods is maintained gojāta ought to be = apya: but in the latter passage we have a fourfold division, and as the apya gods are one of the four classes, gojāta ought to designate a different class. Roth so explains the last word as meaning the gods of the starry heaven.

[74] Nirukta xii. 35: Athāto dyusthānāḥ devagaṇāḥ | teshām Ādityāḥ prathamāgāmino bhavanti |

[75] The word for "sky" here is Dyaus, which, if my rendering is correct, must in this passage be regarded as feminine, though, as we have seen, it is generally masculine, and designated as father. In v. 59, 8, the words dyaus and aditi are similarly supplies the sweet ambrosial fluid" (Yebhyo mātā madhumat pinvate payaḥ pīyūshaṁ dyaur aditir adri-barhāḥ | uktha-śushmān vṛishabharān svapnasas tān Ādityān anu mada svastaye). This verse, in which it may seem that Aditi is either identified with, or regarded as an epithet of, the sky, appears rather to confirm the view I have taken of the one which precedes. The tenor of R.V. x. 65, 9, quoted in a preceding foot-note ([73]), seems, however, opposed to this identification of Aditi with the sky, as she and her sons the Ādityas are there mentioned separately from the other gods who are the inhabitants of the three different spheres; though possibly the last named classification may be meant to sum up all the gods before enumerated, and so to comprehend the Ādityas also.

(5) Aditi seems to be distinguished from the Earth.

But even if we suppose that in the preceding passages it is intended to identify Aditi with the sky, this identification is very far from being consistently maintained in the hymns. And it is equally difficult to take the word as a constant synonym of the Earth. For although, as we have seen, Aditi is given in the Nighaṇṭu as one of the names of the Earth, and in the dual as equivalent to Heaven and Earth, and though in the obscure verse R.V. i. 72, 9, and in Atharva-veda, xiii. 1, 38, she may appear to be identified with the Earth,[76] we find her in many passages of the Rig-veda mentioned separately, and as if she were distinct from both the one and the other. Thus, in iii. 54, 19, 20, it is said: "Śṛiṇotu naḥ pṛithivī dyaur utāpaḥ sūryo nakshattrair uru antarikshaṁ | 20 . . . Adityair no Aditiḥ śṛiṇotu | "May the Earth and the Heaven hear us, the Water, the Sun with the stars, the wide Atmosphere . . . . 20 May Aditi with the Ādityas hear us;"

united: mimātu dyaur aditiḥ, etc. Professor Müller takes aditi in x. 63, 3, as well as in v. 59, 8, for an adjective, and renders the first half of the former verse thus: "The gods to whom their mother yields the sweet milk, and the unbounded sky, as firm as a rock, their food" (pp. 243 and 249). But we should thus have to take Aditi in different senses in two adjoining verses. In v. 2 of this hymn Prof. Müller himself takes Aditi as signifying the goddess (p. 240). For adribarhas see Roth, s.v., and under barhas.

[76] R.V. i. 72, 9. Mahnā mahadbhiḥ Pṛithivī vi tasthe mātā putrair Aditir dhāyase veḥ | "The earth, the mother, Aditi stood in power with her mighty sons for the support of the bird." The word pṛithivī may, however, as Professor Müller supposes, p. 243, be here an epithet. A.V. xiii. 1. 38: Yaśāḥ pṛithivyā Adityā upasthe, etc.

in v. 46, 6: Indrāgnī Mitrāvaruṇa Aditiṁ svaḥ pṛithivīm dyām Marutaḥ parvatān apaḥ | huve | "I invoke Indra, Agni, Mitra, Varuṇa, Aditi, Heaven, Earth, Sky, etc.; in vi. 51, 5: Dyaush pitaḥ Pṛithivī mātar adhrug Agne bhrātar Vasavo mṛilata naḥ | viśve Adityāḥ Adite sajoshā asmabhyaṁ śarma bahulaṁ viyanta | "Father Heaven, benificent mother Earth, brother Agni, Vasus, be gracious to us; all ye Ādityas, Aditi, united, grant us mighty protection;" in ix. 97, 58: Tan no Mitro Varuṇo māmahantām Aditiḥ Sindhuḥ Pṛithivī uta Dyauḥ | "May Mitra, Varuṇa, Aditi, Ocean, Earth, and Heaven gladden us;" in x. 36, 2: Dyauś cha naḥ Pṛithivī cha prachetasā ṛitāvarī rakshatām aṁhaso riṣhaḥ | . . . . 3. Viśvasmān no Aditiḥ pātu aṁhaso mātā mitrasya Varuṇasya revataḥ | 2. "Heaven and Earth, the wise and holy, protect us," etc.; . . . . 3: "May Aditi, the mother of Mitra and the opulent Varuṇa, preserve us from every calamity." See also x. 92, 11. Perhaps the most distinct text of all, however, is x. 63, 10: Sutrāmāṇam Pṛithivīṁ Dyām anehasaṁ suśarmāṇam Aditiṁ supraṇītim | daivīṁ nāvāṁ svaritām anāgasam asravantīm ā ruhema svastaye | 10: "(We invoke) the excellent protectress the Earth, the faultless Heaven, the sheltering and guiding Aditi: let us ascend for our well-being the divine bark, well rowed, free from imperfection, which never leaks."[77] Vāj. S. xviii. 22: "May Earth, and Aditi, and Diti, and Heaven, etc., etc., satisfy me through my sacrifice," etc. (. . . . pṛithivī cha me Aditiś cha me Ditiś cha me Dyauś cha me . . . yajnena kalpantām).

In A.V. vi. 120, 2: the Earth seems to be distinguished from Aditi: Bhūmir mātā Aditir no janitram bhrātā 'ntariksham ityādi | "The Earth our Mother, Aditi the place of our production, the air our brother, etc.

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, indeed, it is said (ii. 2, 1, 19): "Aditi is this earth; she is this supporter," (iyaṁ vai Pṛithivī Aditiḥ sā iyam pratishṭhā), etc.; and in another passage (v. 3, 1, 4): "Aditi is this earth; she is the wife of the gods," (iyaṁ vai Pṛithivī Aditiḥ sā iyaṁ devānām patnī). (See also viii. 2, 1, 10; xi. 1, 3, 3). But these identifications of the Brāhmaṇas are very arbitrary and frequently fanciful.

I have already mentioned that Aditi is placed by Yāska at the head of the goddesses of the intermediate region. If, however, the same ancient writer has done rightly in placing the Ādityas among the deities of the celestial sphere (Nir. xii. 35), Aditi their mother ought surely to have found her place in the same class, as it is scarcely conceivable that the composers of the hymns should have thought of thus separating the parent from her offspring. But Yāska is here merely following the order of the list of words (for it can hardly be called a classification) which he found in the fifth chapter of the Nighaṇṭu; and in following this list (to which he no doubt attached a certain authority) he has had to specify Varuṇa, who is twice named in it, not only among the celestial gods (xii. 21), among whom as an Āditya he was properly ranked, but also among the gods of the intermediate region[78] (x. 3).

[77] This verse occurs also in the Vāj. S. xxi. 6; and Ath. V. vii. 6, 3. See Müller, p. 238.

(6) Aditi and Diti.

In the following verse Aditi is named along with another goddess or personification, Diti, who, from the formation of her name, appears to be intended as an antithesis, or as a complement, to Aditi (v. 62, 8. Hiraṇyarūpam ushaso vyuṣhṭāv ayaḥ-sthūṇam uditā sūryasya | ārohatho Varuṇa Mitra gartam ataś chakshāthe Aditiṁ Ditiṁ cha | "Ye, Mitra and Varuṇa, ascend your car, of golden form at the break of dawn, (your car) with iron supports at the setting[79] of the sun, and thence ye behold Aditi and Diti."[80] Sāyaṇa here understands Aditi of the earth as an invisible whole, and Diti as representing the separate creatures on its surface (Aditim akhaṇḍanīyām bhūmim Ditiṁ khaṇḍitām pra-

[78] Roth, in his remarks on Nir. x. 4, offers the following explanation of this circumstance: "Varuṇa who, of all the gods, ought to have been assigned to the highest sphere, appears here in the middle rank, because among his creative and regulative functions, the direction of the waters in the heavens is one.

[79] I here follow Roth, who, in the Journ. Germ. Or. Society, vi. 71, and in his Lexicon, renders the word uditā sūryasya here by "setting of the sun." Sāyaṇa goes the length of explaining this phrase by aparāhṇa "afternoon," in his note on v. 76, 3, though not in the passage before us.

[80] These two words, aditi and diti, occur also in a passage of the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (x. 16), which is partly the same as the present. The concluding clause (tataś chakshātām aditim ditiṁ cha) is thus explained by the commentator there as signifying in the adhidaiva sense: "Thence behold [o Varuṇa and Mitra] the man who is not poor (aditi=adīna), i.e. who observes the prescribed ordinances (vihitānushṭhātāram), and him who is poor (diti=dīna), who follows the practices of the atheists (nāstika-vṛittam)."

jādikām). In his essay on "The Highest Gods of the Arian Races" (Journ. Germ. Or. Society, vi. 71), Professor Roth translates these two words by "the eternal," and "the perishable." In his Lexicon, however, the same author (s.v.) describes Diti "as a goddess associated with Aditi, without any distinct conception, and merely, as it appears, as a contrast to her." Aditi may, however, here represent the sky, and Diti the earth; or, if we are right in understanding the verse before us to describe two distinct appearances of Mitra and Varuṇa, one at the rising and the other at the setting of the sun, Aditi might possibly stand for the whole of nature as seen by day, and Diti for the creation as seen by night. At all events the two together appear to be put by the poet for the entire aggregate of visible nature.[81] Diti occurs again as a goddess, but without Aditi, in another place (vii. 15, 12, Tvam Agne vīravad yaśo devaś cha Savitā Bhagaḥ | Ditiś cha dāti vāryam | "You, Agni, and the divine Saṿitṛi and Bhaga, (bestow) renown with descendants; and Diti confers what is desirable." Sāyaṇa here explains Diti as meaning a particular goddess (Ditir api devī). Roth (s.v.) considers her to be a personification of liberality or opulence. Professor Müller, Trans. i. 244, considers that the original reading in this passage was Aditi, and that Diti has been substituted by later reciters. Diti is also named along with Aditi as a goddess, A.V. xv. 6, 7, and xv. 18, 4; Vāj. S. xviii. 22; and in A.V. vii. 7. 1, her sons are mentioned. These sons, the Daityas, as is well known, were regarded in later Indian mythology as the enemies of the gods.

(7) Aditi may be a personification of Universal Nature.

Perhaps Aditi may best be regarded as a personification of universal, all-embracing Nature, or Being, with which she is in fact identified in the following remarkable verse. She is the source and substance of all things celestial and intermediate, divine and human, present and future (i.89, 10): "Aditi is the sky; Aditi is the air (or intermediate firmament); Aditi is the mother, and father, and son; Aditi is all the gods, and the five tribes;[82] Aditi is whatever has been [81] The words aditi and diti occur together in another passage, iv. 2, 11 (ditiṁ cha rāsva aditim urushya), where Sāyaṇa takes diti for "the liberal man," and aditi for the "illiberal," and translates "grant us a liberal giver, and preserve us from the illiberal," while Roth renders them by "wealth" and "penury" respectively.

[82] In another place, vi. 51, 11, Aditi is invoked, along with Indra, the earth, the born; Aditi is whatever shall be born"[83] (Aditir dyaur Aditir antarikṣham Aditir mātā sa pitā sa putraḥ | viśve devāḥ Aditiḥ panchajanāḥ Aditir jātam Aditir janitvam |).

Sāyaṇa states that here Aditi is either the earth, or the mother of the gods, and that she is lauded under the character of universal nature[84] (Aditir ādīnā akhaṇḍanīyā vā pṛithivī devamātā vā | . . . evaṁ sakala-jagad-ātmanā Aditiḥ stūyate). Yāska says (Nir. iv. 22 f.), that Aditi means "not poor, the mother of the gods" (Aditir adīnā devamātā), and that the variety of her manifestations is set forth in this verse, or that the objects which are there characterized as aditi are adīna, the reverse of dīna, "poor" (ity Aditer vibhūtim āchashṭe | enāny adīnāni vā). This text occurs at the end of a hymn addressed to all the gods, and does not appear to have any connexion with the verses which precede, from which it derives no elucidation."[85]

Compare with it Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 3, 1, where it is similarly said "that the self-existent Brahma, who is the highest austere-fervour, is son, father, and mother (Svayambhu Brahma paramaṁ tapo yat | sa eva putraḥ sa pitā sa mātā).

With this may be compared Æschylus, Fragment 443:

Ζεύς ἐστιν αἰθὴρ, Ζεὺς δὲ γῆ, Ζεὺς δ' οὐρανός·
Ζεύς τοι τὰ πάντα χὠ τι τῶν δ' ὑπέρτερον.

ground (kshāma), Pūshan, Bhaga, and the five tribes (pañchajanāḥ), to bestow blessings. Are the "five tribes" to be understood here, with some old commentators (see Nir. iii. 8) of the Gandharvas, Pitṛis, Devas, Asuras, and Rākshasas; or with the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa quoted by Sāyaṇa on i. 89, 10, of gods, men, Gandharvas, Apsarases, serpents, and Pitṛis (the Gandharvas and Apsarases being taken as one class)? Perhaps we should rather understand the term, as in x. 53, 4, 5 (pañchajanāḥ mama hotraṁ jushaḍhvaṁ, "ye five tribes, welcome my offering"), as denoting the whole pantheon, or a particular portion of it. In R.V. x. 55, 3, pancha devāḥ, the five gods, or classes of gods, are mentioned, and in x. 60, 4, "the five tribes in the sky" (divīva pancha kṛishṭayaḥ). See the 1st vol. of this work, p. 177.

[83] In a note on this verse (Orient und Occident, ii. p. 253) Professor Benfey remarks "The conception of this goddess is still dark."

[84] M. Ad. Regnier, E'tude sur l'idiome des Vedas, p. 28, remarks: Aditi is the name of a divinity, a personification of the All, the mother of the gods."

[85] There is a hymn (x. 100)—addressed to different gods, and where they are invoked in succession—in which the words ā sarvatātim aditiṁ vṛiṇīmahe form the conclusion of all the verses except the last. The precise meaning of these words was not very clear to me, especially as they have no necessary connection with the preceding portions of the different stanzas in which they occur. But Professor Aufrecht suggests that the verb vṛiṇīmahe governs a double accusative, and that the words

"Zeus is the Æther, Zeus is the Earth, Zeus is the Heaven. Zeus is all things, and whatever is above them." See Müller, Lectures on Language, ii. 441.

The signification, "earth" or "nature," may be that in which the word Aditi is employed in R.V. i. 24, 1: Kasya nūnaṁ katamasya amṛitānām manāmahe chāru devasya nāma | ko no mahyai Aditaye punar dāt pitaraṁ cha dṛiśeyam mātaraṁ cha | 2. Agner vayam prathamasya amṛitānām manāmahe chāru devasya nāma | sa no mahyai Aditaye punar dāt pitaraṁ cha dṛiśeyam mātaraṁ cha | "of which god, now, of which all the immortals, shall we invoke the amiable name? who shall give us back to the great Aditi, that I may behold my father and my mother? 2. Let us invoke the amiable name of the divine Agni, the first of the immortals; he shall give us back to the great Aditi, that I may behold my father and my mother." These words are declared in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa to have been uttered by Śunaśśepa when he was about to be immolated (see Professor Wilson's Essay in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, xiii. 100; Professor Roth's paper in Weber's Indische Studien, i. 46; Müller's Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 408 ff.; Haug's Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 460 ff., and the First Vol. of this work, pp. 355 ff. In regard to the passage immediately before us, Müller's Lectures on Language, ii. 500, and his Translation of the Rig-veda, i. 243, may also be consulted). Whether this account be correct or not, the words may be understood as spoken by some one in danger of death from sickness or otherwise, who prayed to be permitted again to behold the face of nature. This interpretation is confirmed by the epithet mahī, "great," applied in this verse to Aditi, which would not be so suitable if, with Roth (s.v.), we should take the word here in the sense of "freedom" or "security." If we should understand the father and mother whom the suppliant is anxious to behold, as meaning heaven mean "We ask Aditi for sarvatāti," (whatever that may mean). In an ingenious excursus on R.V. i. 94, 15 (Orient und Occident, ii. 519 ff.), Professor Benfey regards the word as coming originally from the same root as the Latin sălūt, of which he supposes the primitive form to have been salvotāt, and to have the same signification. This sense certainly suits the context of the four passages on which principally he founds it, viz., i. 106, 2; iii. 54, 11; ix. 96, 4; x. 36, 14. In a note to his translation of this paper (Orient und Occident, iii. 470) he explains the words under consideration, "we supplicate Aditi for welfare." In his transl. of R.V. i. 247, Müller similarly renders them: We implore Aditi for health and wealth."

and earth (see above), it would become still more probable that Aditi is to be understood as meaning "nature." Sāyaṇa (in loco) understands the word of the Earth (pṛithivyai).

(8) Aditi as a forgiver of sin.

Benfey in his translation of the hymn just referred to i. 24 (Orient und Occident, i. 33), treats Aditi as a proper name, and explains it as denoting "sinlessness." Whatever may be thought of this interpretation, the goddess Aditi is undoubtedly in many other texts connected with the idea of deliverance from sin. Thus at the end of this same hymn (i. 24, 15), it is said: Ud uttamaṁ Varuṇa pāśam asmad ava adhamaṁ vi madhyamaṁ śrathaya | atha vayam Āditya vrate[86] tava anāgasaḥ Aditaye syāma | "Varuṇa, loose from us the uppermost, the middle, and the lowest bond. Then may we, o Āditya, by thy ordination, be without sin against Aditi."[87]

The same reference is also found in the following texts:

i. 162, 22. "May Aditi make us sinless" (anāgastvaṁ no Aditiḥ kṛiṇotu).

ii. 27, 14. "Aditi, Mitra, and Varuṇa, be gracious if we have committed any sin against you" (Adite Mitra Varuṇauta mṛiḷa yad vo vayaṁ chakṛima kach chid āgaḥ).

iv. 12, 4. "Whatever offence we have, through our folly, committed against thee, after the manner of men, o most youthful god, make us free from sin against Aditi; loosen our sins altogether away, o Agni"

[86] On the different senses of the word vrata see Müller, Trans. of R.V. i. 225 ff. Here he renders "under thy auspices," p. 228.

[87] The abstract noun adititva occurs along with anāgāstva, "sinlessness," in the following line (vii. 51, 1): anāgāstve adititve turāsaḥ imam yajnam dadhatu śroshamāṇāḥ, "May the mighty gods, listening to us, preserve this ceremony in sinlessness, and prosperity." Though adititva is joined with anāgāstva, it does not follow that it must have the same sense.—In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa x. 6, 5, 5 (= Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, p. 53 ff.,) the name of Aditi is explained from the root ad, to eat: "Whatever he created, he began to eat: for Aditi derives her (or his) name from this, that she (or he) eats every thing" (yad yad eva asṛijata tad attum adhriyata | sarvaṁ vai atti iti tad Aditer adititvam). Aditi is an epithet of Agni in R.V. iv. 1, 20; vii. 9, 3; and of Aryaman in ix. 81, 5. Yāska tells us that Agni also is called Aditi (Agnir apy aditir uchyate, Nir. xi. 23), and quotes in proof of this the 15th verse of a hymn to Agni, R.V. i. 94. In vii. 52, 1, the worshippers ask that they may be aditayaḥ, which Sāyaṇa renders by akhaṇḍanīyāḥ, "invincible."

(Yach chid hi te purushatra yavishṭha achittibhiḥ chakṛima kach chid āgaḥ | kṛidhi su asmān Aditer anāgān vi enāṁsi śiśratho vishvag Agne).

v. 82, 6. "May we be free from sin against Aditi through the help of the divine Savitṛi" (anāgasaḥ Aditaye devaya Savituḥ save).

vii. 87, 7. "May we, fulfilling the ordinances of Aditi, be without sin towards Varuṇa, who is gracious even to him who has committed sin" (yo mṛiḷayāti chakrushe chid āgo vayaṁ syāma Varuṇe anāgāḥ | anu vratāni Aditer ṛidhantaḥ).

vii. 93, 7. "Whatever sin we have committed, be thou (Agni) compassionate: may Aryaman and Aditi sever it from us" (yat sīm āgaś chakṛima tat su mṛiḷa tad Aryamā Aditiḥ śiśrathantu).

x. 12, 8. "May Mitra here, may Aditi, may the divine Savitṛi declare us sinless to Varuṇa" (Mitro no atra Aditir anāgān Savitā devo Varuṇāya vochat).

A consideration of these passages, where Aditi is supplicated for forgiveness of sin, might lead us to suppose that she was regarded as the great power which wields the forces of the universe, and controls the destinies of men by moral laws; and the idea derives some support from her connection with Varuṇa, whose bonds are so often referred to as afflicting sinners.[88] But this supposition is weakened by the fact that many others of the gods are in the same way petitioned for pardon, as Savitṛi (iv. 54, 3) and other deities, as the Sun, Dawn, Heaven and Earth (x. 35, 2, 3), Agni (iii. 54, 19).

(9) Aditi's position sometimes subordinate.

Though, as we have seen, Aditi is regarded as the mother of some of the principal Vedic deities, she is yet, in other texts, represented as playing a subordinate part.

Thus, in vii. 38, 4, she is mentioned as celebrating the praises of Savitṛi, along with her sons Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman, and welcoming his aid (abhi yaṁ devī Aditir gṛiṇāti savaṁ devasya Savitur jushāṇā | abhi saṁrājo Varuṇo gṛiṇanti abhi Mitrāso Aryamā sajoshāḥ); and in viii. 12, 14, she is declared to have produced a hymn to Indra uta svarāje Aditiḥ stomam Indrāya jījanat | puruprasastam ūtaye ṛitasya yat).

[88] See on this subject Müller's transl. of the R.V. i. 244 ff.

(10) Creation as described in Rig-veda x. 72; birth of Aditi, Daksha, the gods, and the Ādityas.

In a hymn of the tenth book (the 72nd), supposed from its contents to be of a comparatively late date, the process of creation is described at greater length than in any earlier passage, and the share which Aditi took in it is not very intelligibly set forth:[89]

x. 72, 1. Devānāṁ nu vayaṁ jānā pra vochāma vipanyayā | uktheshu śasyamāneshu yaḥ paśyād uttare yuge | 2. Brahmaṇaspatir etā saṁ karmāraḥ ivādhamat | devānāṁ pūrvye yuge asataḥ sad ajāyata | 3. Devānām yuge prathame asataḥ sad ajāyata | tad āśāḥ anv ajāyanta tad Uttānapadas pari | 4. Bhūr jajne Uttānapado bhuvaḥ āśāḥ ajāyanta | Aditer Daksho ajāyata Dakshād u Aditiḥ pari | 5. Aditir hi ajanishṭa Daksha yā duhitā tava | tāṁ devāḥ anv ajāyanta bhadrāḥ amṛitabandhavaḥ | 6. Yad devāḥ adaḥ salile susaṁrabdhāḥ atishṭhata | attra vo nṛityatām iva tīvro reṇur apāyata | 7. Yad devāḥ yatayo yathā bhuvanāni apinvata | attra samudre ā gūḷham ā sūryam ajabharttana | 8. Ashṭau putrāso Aditer ye jātās tanvas pari | devān upa pra ait saptabhiḥ parā mārttāṇḍam āsyat | 9. Saptabhiḥ putrair Aditiḥ upa prait pūrvyaṁ yugam | prajāyai mṛityave tvat punar mārttāṇḍam ābharat |

"1. Let us, in chaunted hymns, with praise, declare the births of the gods,—any of us who in (this) latter age may behold them. 2. Brahmaṇaspati blew forth these births like a blacksmith.[90] In the earliest age of the gods, the existent sprang from the non-existent. 3. In the first age of the gods, the existent sprang from the non-existent: thereafter the regions sprang, thereafter, from Uttānapad. 4. The earth sprang from Uttānapad, from the earth sprang the regions: Daksha sprang from Aditi, and Aditi from Daksha. 5. For Aditi was produced, she who is thy daughter, o Daksha. After her [89] I have already given this translation in vol. iv. of this work, pp. 10, 11, but repeat it here, with some variations, for the sake of completeness. Prof. Müller in his transl. of the R.V. pp. 234 f. gives a version of the first four verses. In the first verse, second line, he proposes to read yat for yaḥ and to translate "that a man may see them," etc. In the third verse he takes Uttānapadas, where it first occurs, for a nominative, and in the fourth verse for a genitive. Whichever way we take the words, there is a double production of the regions; first, either (a) from Uttānapad, or (b) after the non-existent, but before Uttānapad, to which they gave birth, and, second, from the earth, which itself sprang from Uttānapad.

[90] Compare R.V. iv. 2, 17; and x. 81, 3.

the gods were born, happy, partakers of immortality. 6. When, gods, ye moved, agitated, upon those waters, then a violent dust[91] issued from you, as from dancers. 7. When, gods, ye, like strenuous men,[92] replenished the worlds, then ye drew forth the sun which was hidden in the (aerial?) ocean. 8. Of the eight sons[93] of Aditi who were born from her body, she approached the gods with seven, and cast out Mārttāṇḍa (the eighth). 9. With seven sons Aditi approached the former generation (of gods): she again produced Mārttāṇḍa for birth as well as for death.[94]

[91] Compare R.V. iv. 42, 5. . . . Indraḥ iyarmi reṇum abhibhūtyojāḥ.

[92] Yatayaḥ.—This word is taken by Böhtlingk and Roth s.v. as the name of an ancient family connected with the Bhṛigus, R.V. viii. 3, 9; viii. 6, 18, to whom some connection with the formation of the world is ascribed in x. 72, 7 (the verse before us). The word also occurs in R.V. vii. 13, 1, where it is applied to Agni (Vaiśvanarāya yataye matīnām). The second of the verses quoted by B. and R. (viii. 6, 18) is as follows: ye Indra yatayas tvā Bhṛigavo ye cha tushṭuvuḥ | mama id ugra śrudhi havam | "Indra, the Yatis, and the Bhṛigus, who praised thee:—hear, o fiery god, my invocation." Here a family of men may be meant, as also in viii. 3, 9 (yena yatibhyo Bhṛigave dhane hite). In one of the few verses of the Sāma-veda which are not found in the R.V., viz. ii. 304, (but which is not referred to in B. and R.'s Lexicon, although the parallel passage in the A.V. ii. 5, 3, which has some different readings, is cited) the words Yati and Bhṛigu both occur: Indras turāshāṇ Mitro na jaghāna Vṛittraṁ Yatir na | bibheda Balam Bhṛigur na sasāhe śatrūn made somasya | "The impetuous Indra slew Vṛittra as (did) Mitra, as (did) the Yati; he pierced Bala as (did) Bhṛigu; he overcame his enemies in the exhilaration of the soma-juice." The parallel passage of the A.V. (in Roth and Whitney's ed.) reads yatīr na, the accusative feminine, instead of yatir na, the nom. masc. The Lexicon also refers to the Ait. Br. vii. 28 (quoted in the 1st vol. of this work (2nd ed.) pp. 437 f.), where Indra is said to have abandoned the Yatis to wolves; and to other passages in which the same legend in noticed.

[93] Compare A.V. viii. 9, 21: ashṭa-yonir Aditir ashṭa-putrā | In the Taitt. Araṇyaka i. 13, 1, the Earth is said to have had eight births, eight sons, and eight husbands (ashṭayonīm ashṭaputrām ashṭapatnīm imām mahīm).

[94] The 8th and 9th verses are quoted in the Taittirīya Araṇyaka i. 13, 2, 3; where the reading of the last line of verse 9, is as follows: prajāyai mṛityave tat parā mārttāṇḍam ābharat | The commentator explains the last verse thus: "Aditi approached her husband preparatory to the procreation of her sons, and with a view to their birth; and she abandoned Mārttāṇḍa that he might die" (tad-utpādanārtham "pūrvyaṁ yugam" tad utpatti-pūrva-kālīnam pati-saṁyogam "prajāyai" prajotpatty-artham "upaprait" prīti-pūrvakam prāptavatī | . . . Mārttāṇḍākhyam ashṭamam putram "parābharat" parityaktavatī iti yat tat "mṛityave" mṛityu-nimittam | Mārttāṇḍo hi mṛityor eva hetur na prajābhivṛiddheḥ]), and he adds that "Mārttāṇḍa means one in consequence of whose birth the egg has become dead" (mṛitam aṇḍaṁ yadīya-janmanā sa Mārttāṇḍaḥ); according to the Smṛiti: mṛite 'ṇḍe jāyate yasmād Mārttāṇḍaḥ sa udāhṛitaḥ | "He is called Mārttāṇḍa because he was

Yāska has the following remarks on verse 4 of this hymn in the Nirukta, xi. 23:

Ādityo Dakshaḥ ity āhur Āditya-madhye cha stutaḥ | Aditir Dākshāyaṇī "Aditer Daksho ajāyata Dakshād u Aditiḥ pari" iti cha | tat katham upapadyeta | samāna-janmānau syātām iti | api vā deva-dharmeṇa itaretara-janmānau syātām itaretara-prakṛitī |

"Daksha is, they say, an Āditya (or son of Aditi), and is praised among the Ādityas. And Aditi is, on the other hand, the daughter of Daksha (according to this text), 'Daksha sprang from Aditi, and Aditi from Daksha.' How can this be possible? They may have had the same origin; or, according to the nature of the gods, they may have been born from each other, and have derived their substance from each other."[95] born when the egg was dead." See also the 549th line of the Harivaṁsa quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 11, note. The S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, iii. 1, 3, 3 (already quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 12), has the following explanation of the 8th verse: Ashṭau ha vai putrāḥ Aditeḥ | yāṁs tv etad devāḥ Ādityāḥ ity ēchakshate sapta ha eva te | avikṛitaṁ ha ashṭamaṁ janayāṅchakāra Mārttāṇḍam | sandegho ha eva āsa yāvān eva ūrdhvas tāvāṁs tiryañ purusha-sammitaḥ ity u ha eke āhuḥ | 4. Te u ha ete ūchur devāḥ Ādityāḥ "yad asmān anu ajanimā tad amuyā iva bhūd hanta imaṁ vikaravāma" iti taṁ vichakrur yathā ayam purusho vikṛitaḥ | tasya yāni māṁsāni saṅkṛitya sannyāsus tato hastī samabhavat | . . . Yam u ha tad vichakrus sa Vivasvān Ādityas tasya imāḥ prajāḥ | "Aditi had eight sons. But there were only seven (of them) whom men call the Āditya deities. For she bore the eighth, Mārttāṇḍa, undeveloped into any distinctions of shape (without hands, feet, etc.—Comm.), and quite smooth and uniform, as broad as he was long, or of the size of a man, according to some. The Āditya gods said 'If in his nature he does not resemble us, it will be fatal; come let us shape him.' They did so as this man is shaped. The flesh which they cut off him, and threw away, became an elephant. . . . He whom they so shaped was the Āditya Vivasvat, of whom come these creatures." The passage of the Taitt. Sanh. vi. 5, 6, 1, quoted in the 1st vol. of this work p. 26, also alludes to Aditi's second parturition having resulted in an abortive egg (vyṛiddham āṇḍam).

Another instance of the same reciprocal generation is found in R.V. x. 90, 5: Tasmād Virāḍ ajāyata Virājo adhi Pūrushaḥ | "From him (Purusha) sprang Virāj; and from Virāj (sprang) Purusha."

[95] In his Illustrations of the Nirukta (p. 151) Professor Roth thus translates the 4th and 5th verses of this hymn: "Bhū (the world) was born, and from her opened womb sprang the Regions; from Aditi (Eternity) was born Daksha (spiritual power), and from Daksha again Aditi. 5. Yes, Aditi was born, o Daksha, she who is thy daughter; after her sprang forth the gods, the blessed possessors of immortality." He then proceeds: "Daksha, (spiritual power) is the male energy, which generates the gods in eternity. As Bhū (the world, or being) and space are the principles of the finite, so both of these are the originators of divine life."

Daksha and Aditi are connected in two other texts:

x. 5, 7. Asach cha sach cha parame vyoman Dakshasya janmann Aditer upasthe | Agnir naḥ prathamajāḥ ṛitasya pūrve āyuni vṛishabhaś cha dhenuḥ | "(A principle) not existing (actually), but existing (potentially) in the highest heaven, in the creative potency of Daksha and in the womb of Aditi,—Agni (became) in a former age the first born of our ritual, and is both a vigorous bull and a cow." [96]

x. 64, 5. Dakshasya vā Adite janmani vrate rājānā Mitrā-varuṇā ā vivāsasi | "Thou, o Aditi, dost tend the two kings Mitra and Varuṇa after the production and by the will of Daksha." [97]

Though the above passage, x. 72, 4, 5, represents Daksha as at once the father and the son of Aditi, the older Vedic mythology, as we shall see from R.V. ii. 27, 1, in the next section, describes him as one of the Ādityas, and consequently as her son. There are, however, two other passages, vi. 50, 2, and vii. 66, 2, in which the epithet Daksha-pitṛi is applied to the gods, and a third, viii. 25, 5, in which two of the Ādityas are styled sūnū dakshasya sukratū. What is the signification of these epithets? The first of the passages, vi. 50, 2, is as follows:

Sujyotishaḥ sūrya Daksha-pitṛīn anāgastve śumaho vīhi devān | dvijanmāno ye ṛitasāpaḥ satyāḥ svarvanto yajatāḥ Agni-jihvāḥ | "O mighty Sūrya, visit in sinlessness the resplendent gods, the sons of Daksha, [or possessors of powers], who have two births, are holy, true, celestial, adorable, and have Agni on their tongues."

vii. 66, 2. Yā dhārayanta devāḥ śūdakshā Daksha-pitarā | asuryāya pramahasā | "Which two wise gods (i.e. Mitra and Varuṇa), the mighty sons of Daksha,—[or possessors of powers],—the deities have established to exercise divine rule."

In the Taittirīya Sanhitā, i. 2, 3, 1 (p. 309 in Bibl. Ind.), the same epithet is applied to the gods: Ye devaḥ manojātāḥ manoyujaḥ sudakshāḥ Dakshapitaras te naḥ pāntu | "May those deities who are mind-born, mind-exerting, intelligent, who have Daksha for their father,[98] protect and deliver us," etc.

[96] See Langlois' version. Müller (Trans. of the R.V. i. 234) renders the first line only, and does not advert to the second.

[97] See Müller's version in his Trans. of the R.V. i. p. 234. In his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 151, Roth translates the line "And thou, o Aditi, who after their production by Daksha, and by his command, servest the two kings Mitra and Varuṇa," etc.

[98] The commentator explains the word Daksha-pitaraḥ as = Dakshaḥ prajāpatir utpādako yeshām te, "those of whom the Prajāpati Daksha is the generator."

UNIVERSITY OF

Doubt may be thrown on the propriety of taking Daksha in the preceding passages to represent a person, from the fact that in R.V. viii. 25, 5, Mitra and Varuṇa are not only called the "strong sons of Daksha" (sūnū Dakshasyâ sukratū), but also the "grandsons of mighty strength" (napātā śavaso mahaḥ). In his interpretation of vi. 50, 2, Sāyaṇa explains Daksha-pitṛīn as Dakshaḥ pitāmaho yeshāṁ te | "they of whom Daksha is the progenitor." In the second passage vii. 66, 2, however, he takes the same compound to signify the preservers, or lords of strength" (balasya pālakau svāminau vā). The epithet "son of strength" (sahasasputra, sahasaḥ sūnu) is applied to Agni viii. 49, 2; viii. 60, 11; viii. 64, 3; and śavasaḥ putra "son of might" to Indra in viii. 79, 3, and viii. 81, 14. In viii. 58, 4, Indra is called the "son of truth" (sūnuṁ satyasya); and the gods are called "sons of immortality" in vi. 52, 9 (sūnavaḥ amṛitasya), and in x. 13, 1 (amṛitasya putrāḥ). Professor Roth in his Lexicon assigns to dakshapitaraḥ the sense of "preserving, possessing, bestowing powers;" and supports his view by quoting various other texts of the R.V. This signification is approved by Dr. Kuhn in his review of this article. Professor Müller translates the word by "fathers of strength," Trans. of R.V. i. 235 f.

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 4, 4, 2, Daksha is identified with Prajāpati, or the creator."[99]

The part which he plays in the later mythology, founded, no doubt, on the Vedic texts which I have quoted, may be seen by consulting Professor Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, Dr. Hall's edition, vol. i. pp. 100, 108 ff.: vol. ii. pp. 9–26, and vol. iii. p. 230. According to the first account he is one of Brahmā's mind-born sons (p. 100), and marries Prasūti (p. 108), who bears him twenty-four daughters, among whom Aditi is not specified. In the second account, however (vol. ii. p. 26), Aditi is mentioned as one of his sixty daughters who, along with Diti, Danu, and ten others, is said to have been given in marriage to Kaśyapa, to whom she (Aditi) bore the twelve Ādityas (p. 27. See also the M. Bh. Ādi-parva, 3135.) According to the third account (vol. iii. p. 230), Aditi is said to be the daughter of Daksha, and the mother of Vivasvat, the Sun. In a passage in one of the recensions of the Rāmāyaṇa (Schlegel, i. 31, Calc. ed. i. 29), in the Mahābhārata, [99] See the 4th vol. of this work, p. 24. In the sequel of the passage in the S'. P. Br., ii. 4, 4, 6, a person named Daksha, the son of Parvata, is mentioned.

and in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, viii. 16, 1 ff., Aditi is described as the wife of Kaśyapa, and the mother of Vishṇu in his dwarf incarnation. (See the 4th vol. of this work, p. 116 ff.)

An older authority, however, the Vāj. Saṃhitā, gives quite a different account of the relation of Aditi to Vishṇu, as it (xxix. 60 = Taitt. S. vii. 5, 14, 1) represents her to be his wife (Adityai Vishṇu-patnyai charuḥ.[100] In the following passage of the Taittirīya Saṃhitā iv. (p. 34*a* of the India Office MS.) also she is similarly described: Vishṭambho divo dharuṇaḥ pṛithivyā asyeśānā jagato Vishṇu-patnī | viśva-vyachāḥ ishayantī subhūtiḥ śivā no astu Aditir upasthe | "Supporter of the sky, sustainer of the earth, sovereign of this world, wife of Vishṇu, may the all-embracing and powerful Aditi, filling us with vigour, be auspicious to us (abiding) in her lap."

[100] In A.V. vii. 46, 3, Sinīvālī seems to be called the wife of Vishṇu (Vishṇoḥ patnī). Another goddess is said in Taitt. Br. iii. 1, 2, 6, to be the wife of the same god (Mahīm devīm Vishṇupatnīm).

SECTION IV.

THE ĀDITYAS.

The sons of Aditi specified in R.V. ii. 27, 1, are these six: Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, Varuṇa, Daksha, and Aṁśa (Imāḥ giraḥ Ādityebhyo ghṛitasnūḥ sanād rājabhyo juhvā juhomi | śṛiṇotu Mitro Aryamā Bhago nas tuvijāto Varuṇo Daksho Aṁśaḥ |). In ix. 114, 3, the Ādityas are spoken of as seven in number, but their names are not mentioned (devāḥ ādityāḥ ye sapta tebhiḥ somābhiraksha naḥ).[101] In x. 72, 8, 9, as we have already seen, it is declared that Aditi had eight sons, of whom she only presented seven to the gods, casting out Mārttāṇḍa, the eighth, though she is said to have afterwards brought him forward. Here, again, the names of the rest are omitted. In A.V. viii. 9, 21, also, as quoted above, p. 38, Aditi is said to have had eight sons. Sūrya is, in a few places, spoken of as an Āditya, viz. in R.V. i. 50, 12 (ud agād ayam Ādityaḥ); i. 191, 9 (ud apaptad asau sūryaḥ . . . Ādityaḥ); viii. 90, 11;[102] and as an Āditeya (this word equally means 'son of Aditi'), identified with Agni, he is said (x. 88, 11),[103] to have been placed by the gods in the sky. In viii. 18, 3, Savitṛi is named along with Bhaga, Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman, four of the Ādityas, after that class of deities had been celebrated generally in the preceding verse. Sūrya or Savitṛi therefore appears to have a certain claim to be considered the seventh Āditya (compare A.V. xiii. 2, 9, and 37, where the sun is called the son of Aditi, Aditeḥ putraḥ and Adityāḥ putram). We have seen above (pp. 13 f., note 19) that Indra also is in one passage (R.V. vii. 85, 4), [101] See the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 101 ff., where these and many other passages relating to the Ādityas are quoted.

[102] The last-mentioned text is as follows: Baṇ mahān asi Sūrya baḷ Āditya mahān asi | . . . . Baṭ Sūrya śravasā mahān asi | "O great art thou, Sūrya! O son of Aditi, thou art great! . . . . O Sūrya, in renown thou art great," etc.

[103] Yaded enam adadhur yajniyāso divi devāḥ Sūryam Āditeyam. See Nirukta ii. 13; vii. 29. In x. 37, 1, however, the Sun is called the Son of the Heaven (divas putrāya suryāya); and there as well as elsewhere he is called the eye of Mitra and Varuṇa.

addressed as an Āditya along with Varuṇa.[104] In A.V. viii. 2, 15, the Sun and Moon are called Ādityas (tattra tvā "dityau rakshatāṁ sūrya-chandramasāv ubhau |). In A.V. ix. 1, 4, the golden-hued Madhukaśā is said to be the mother of the Ādityas, and the daughter of the Vasus (Mātā" dityānāṁ duhitā Vasūnām . . . . hiraṇya-varṇā Madhukaśā).

In the Ṭaittirīya Veda (quoted by Sāyaṇa on R.V. ii. 27, 1) the Ādityas are said to be eight in number: Mitra, Varuṇa, Dhātṛi, Aryaman, Aṁśu, (sic) Bhaga, Indra, and Vivasvat. Here five names correspond with those given in R.V. ii. 27, 1, while Daksha is omitted, and three names are added, Dhātṛi, Vivasvat (who may be identified with Sūrya), and Indra.

The same names are given in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 9, 1 (a passage already cited in the 1st. vol. of this work, p. 27, but repeated here for facility of reference):

Aditiḥ putrakāmā Sādhyebhyo devebhyo brahmaudanam apachat | tasyai uchheshaṇam adaduḥ | tat prāśnāt | sā reto 'dhatta | tasyai Dhātā cha Aryamā cha ajāyetām | sā dvitīyam apachat | 2. Tasyai uchheshaṇam adaduḥ | tat prāśnāt | sā reto 'dhatta tasyai Mitraś cha Varuṇaś cha ajāyetām | sā tṛitīyam apachat | tasyai uchheshaṇam adaduḥ | tat prāśnāt | sā reto 'dhatta | tasyai Aṁśaś cha Bhagaś cha ajāyetām | sā chaturtham apachat | tasyai uchheshaṇam adaduḥ | tat prāśnāt | sā reto 'dhatta | tasyai Indraś cha Vivasvāṁś cha ajāyetām |

"Aditi, being desirous of sons, cooked a brahmaudana oblation for the gods the Sādhyas. They gave her the remains of it, which she ate. She conceived, and Dhātṛi and Aryaman were born to her." The same thing is done a second time, when she brings forth Mitra and Varuṇa, —a third time, when she bears Aṁśa and Bhaga,—and a fourth time, when she gives birth to Indra and Vivasvat. (Comp. the passage from the Taitt. Sanh. vi. 5, 6, 1, quoted in the 1st vol. of this work, pp. 26 f.) In one place (iii. 1, 3, 3), already quoted in p. 50, the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa speaks of the Ādityas as becoming eight by the addition of Mārttāṇḍa; but in two other passages (vi. 1, 2, 8; xi. 6, 3, 8), quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 102, as being twelve in number. In the first of these two latter texts they are said to have sprung from twelve drops generated by Prajāpati (in which case they could not have been sons of Aditi), and in the second they are identified with the twelve months.[105] In the later Indian literature they are always said to be twelve (see the passages quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 101–106).

[104] Although in their Sanhitā text both Müller and Aufrecht read Ādityā, they both give Ādityā the dual as the reading of the Pada text.

Professor Roth (in the Journ. Germ. Or. Society, vi. 68 f.) has the following observations on the Ādityas: "There (in the highest heaven) dwell and reign those gods who bear in common the name of Ādityas. We must, however, if we would discover their earliest character, abandon the conceptions which in a later age, and even in that of the heroic poems, were entertained regarding these deities. According to this conception they were twelve sun-gods, bearing evident reference to the twelve months. But for the most ancient period we must hold fast the primary signification of their name. They are the inviolable, imperishable, eternal beings. Aditi, eternity, or the eternal, is the element which sustains them and is sustained by them." See above, (p. 37). Further on he adds: "The eternal and inviolable element in which the Ādityas dwell, and which forms their essence, is the celestial light. The Ādityas, the gods of this light, do not therefore by any means coincide with any of the forms in which light is manifested in the universe. They are neither sun, nor moon, nor stars, nor dawn, but the eternal sustainers of this luminous life, which exists, as it were, behind all these phenomena."

In some of the hymns were the Ādityas (under which name Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman seem chiefly, if not exclusively, to be intended), are celebrated (see especially ii. 27), they are characterized by the epithets "bright" (śuchayaḥ), "golden" (hiraṇyayāḥ), "pure" (dhārapūtāḥ), "sinless" (avṛijīnāḥ), "blameless" (anavadyāḥ), "holy," (ritāvānaḥ) "strong" (kshattriyāḥ, viii. 56, 1), "kings," "resistless" (arishṭāḥ), "vast" (uravaḥ), "deep" (gabhīrāḥ), sleepless" (asvapnajaḥ), "unwinking" (animishāḥ),[106] "many-eyed" (bhūryakshāḥ, ii. 27, 3), "far-observing" (dīrghadhiyaḥ), "fixed in their purpose" (dhṛitavratāḥ). Distant things are near to them, ii. 27, 3 (sarvaṁ rājabhyaḥ paramā

[105] In the S'. P. Br. iii. 5, 1, 13, a dispute between the Ādityas and Angirases regarding a sacrifice is mentioned. (Comp. Taitt. Br. iii. 9, 21, 1). In the same work, (the S'p. Br.) xii. 2, 2, 9, it is said that these two classes of beings (the Ādityas and Angirases) were both descendants of Prajāpati, and that they strove together for the priority in ascending to heaven. In A.V. xii. 3, 43 f., and xix. 39, 5 also they are connected with one another.

[106] This is a characteristic of the gods in general.

chid anti), they uphold and preserve things both moving and stationary (dhārantayaḥ ādityāso jagat sthāḥ devāḥ viśvasya bhuvanasya gopāḥ | ibid.), they see the good and evil in men's hearts, and distinguish the honest man from the deceitful, ii. 27, 3 (antaḥ paśyanti vṛijanā uta sādhu | viii. 18, 15, pākatrā sthana devāḥ hṛitsu jānītha martyam | upa dvayuṁ cha advayuṁ cha), they are holy and awful, and haters of falsehood and punish sin, ii. 27, 4 (ṛitāvānaś chayamānāḥ ṛiṇāni), vii. 60, 51 (ime chetāro anṛitasya bhūreḥ), vii. 52, 2; vii. 66, 13, which they are entreated to forgive, ii. 27, 14; ii. 29, 5; averting from the worshipper the consequences of the transgressions of others as well as of his own, vii. 52, 2; viii. 47, 8; or transferring those penalties of sin, whether open or secret, to the head of Trita Āptya, viii. 47, 13 (yad āvir yad apīchyaṁ devāso asti dushkṛitam | Trite tad viśvam Āptye āre asmad dadhātana);[107] and they spread nooses for their enemies, ii. 27, 16 (yāḥ vo māyāḥ abhidruhe yajatrāḥ pāśāḥ ādityāḥ ripave vichṛittāḥ). They are supplicated for various boons, for protection, offspring, guidance, light, long life, etc. (see R.V. ii. 27, 5–7, 10, 11, 14; viii. 18, 22. In viii. 47, 2, they are said to know how to remove transgressions, and are besought to extend their protection to their worshipper, as birds spread their wings over their young (vida devāḥ aghānām Ādityāso apākṛitim | pakshā vayo yathā upari vi asme śarma yachhata | 3. Vi asme adhi śarma tat pakshā vayo na yantana).[108] Their servants are protected by them as a warrior is when encased in his armour, viii. 47, 8 (yushme devāḥ api smasi yudhyantaḥ iva varmasu), and then no shaft, however sharp or heavy, can strike them (ibid. 7: na taṁ tigmaṁ chana tyajo na drāsad abhi taṁ guru | yasmai u śarma arādhvam | See Müller, Trans. p. 255).

The Ādityas regarded as a class of gods are not, however, characterized so specifically in the hymns, as two of the individual deities who bear that general designation, I mean Varuṇa and Mitra; and I shall, therefore, proceed to give a fuller account of the two latter, (with whose names that of Aryaman is sometimes associated), omitting any further reference to Bhaga and Aṁśa, who are rarely mentioned, and to Daksha, of whom something has been already said. Sūrya and Savitṛi will be treated separately.

[107] Roth, s.v. Trita Āptya, says this god is conceived as dwelling in the remote distance, removed from view, and that it is in consequence of this that evil is sought to be transferred to him.

[108] Compare Psalms, xvii. 8; xxxvi. 7; lxi. 4; lxiii. 7; xci. 4.

SECTION V.

MITRA AND VARUṆA.

(1) General idea of these two gods.

These two deities are very frequently found in conjunction. Varuṇa is also often separately celebrated; Mitra but seldom. Their frequent association is easily explained if the commentators are right in understanding Mitra to represent the day, and Varuṇa the night. Thus Sāyaṇa says on R.V. i. 89, 3: "Mitra is the god who presides over the day, according to the Vedic text, 'the day is Mitra's'" (aharabhimāninaṁ devam | "Maitraṁ vai ahar" iti śruteḥ); and again, "Varuṇa is derived from the root vṛi, to cover; he envelops the wicked in his snares; and is the god who rules over the night, according to the text, 'the night is Varuṇa's[109]'" (vṛiṇoti | pāpakṛitaḥ svakīyaiḥ pāśair āvṛiṇoti iti rātry-abhimāni-devo Varuṇaḥ | śrūyate cha "Vāruṇī rātrir" [Taitt. Br. i. 7, 10, 1] iti |). In the same way the commentator on the Taittirīya Sanhitā, i. 8, 16, 1 (Bibl. Ind. vol. ii. p. 164), affirms that the "word Mitra denotes the sun" (Mitra-śabdasya sūryavāchitvāt), and that the "word Varuṇa signifies one who envelops like [109] See also his note on i. 141, 9, where he gives the same explanation regarding Mitra and Varuṇa, and adds that Aryaman is the god who goes between the other two (Aryamā ubhayor madhya-varttī devaḥ). According to his note on i. 90, 1, Aryaman is the sun who makes the division of day and night (Aryamā aho-rātra-vibhāgasya karttā sūryaḥ). Compare also his note on ii. 38, 8, where he says that Varuṇa is represented as giving resting-places to creatures after sunset, because he carries on the affairs of the night (Yoniṁ sthānaṁ nimishi nimeshe Savitur astasamaye sati viśramārtham prāṇibhyaḥ prayachhati | Varuṇasya rātrer nirvāhākatvāt). In i. 35, 1, Mitra and Varuṇa are invoked along with Agni, Night and Savitṛi: "I invoke first Agni for our welfare; I invoke hither Mitra and Varuṇa to our aid; I invoke Night who gives rest to the world; I invoke the divine Savitṛi to our assistance" (hvayāmi Agnim prathamaṁ svastaye hvayāmi Mitrā-varuṇāv ihāvase | hvayāmi rātrīṁ jagato niveśanīm hvayāmi devaṁ Savitāram ūtaye).

darkness" (Varuṇa-śabdasya andhakāra-vad āvaraka-vāchitvāt), according to the text (above given, in p. 58, of the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 7, 10, 1), "the day is Mitra's and the night is Varuṇa's." In another part of the Taittirīya Sanhitā, vi. 4, 8, we read: Na vai idaṁ divā na naktam āsīd avyākṛitam | te devāḥ Mitrā-varuṇāv abruvan "idaṁ no vivāsayatām" iti | .... Mitro 'har ajanayad Varuṇo rātrim | "This world had neither day nor night, but was (in that respect) undistinguished. The gods said to Mitra and Varuṇa, 'Make a separation.' .... Mitra produced the day, and Varuṇa the night." (See the same Sanhitā ii. 1, 7, 4.) In R.V. viii. 41, 3, it is said of Varuṇa, "The conspicuous god has embraced the nights, by his wisdom he has established the days, and everything perfectly" (sa kshapaḥ parishasvaje ni usro māyayā dadhe sa viśvam pari darśataḥ |). In his note on another passage (R.V. vii. 87, 1) Sāyaṇa says that it is the setting sun which is called Varuṇa, who by his departure creates the nights (Astaṁ gachhan sūryaḥ eva Varuṇaḥ ity uchyate | sa hi sva-gamanena rātrīr janayati |). The Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, xii. 9, 2, 12, says: "This (terrestrial) world is Mitra; the other (the celestial) world is Varuṇa" (ayaṁ vai loko Mitraḥ | asau Varuṇaḥ |)

(2) Their chief characteristics.

The following are some of the principal characteristics of these gods, as represented in the Rig-veda. Varuṇa is, sometimes at least, visible to the mental eye of his worshippers. Thus, in i. 25, 18, the rishi says: Darśaṁ nu viśva-darśataṁ darśaṁ ratham adhi kshami | "I beheld him who is visible to all; I beheld his chariot upon the ground." In vii. 88, 2, also, the poet exclaims: Adha nu asya sandṛiśaṁ jaganvān Agner anīkaṁ Varuṇasya maṁsi | "When I have obtained a vision of Varuṇa, I have regarded his lustre as resembling that of Agni."[110] Mighty and fixed in purpose, he sits in his abode exercising sovereignty (i. 25, 10: Ni shasāda dhritavrato Varuṇaḥ pastyāsu ā | samrājyāya sukratuḥ |). He is arrayed in golden mail,[111] and surrounded by his messengers or angels (i. 25, 13: Bibhrad drāpiṁ hiraṇyayaṁ Varuṇo vasta nirṇijam |

[110] See Roth's article on "The highest gods of the Arian races," Journ. Germ. Or. Society, vi. 71.

[111] Golden mail is also assigned to Savitṛi (iv. 53, 2).

pari spaśo ni shedire). His house, at which the worshippers are said to have arrived, has a thousand doors (vii. 88, 5: Bṛihantam mānam Varuṇa svadhāvaḥ sahasradvāraṁ jagama gṛihaṁ te). Again he is described as occupying, along with Mitra, a stable palace supported by a thousand columns[112] (ii. 41, 5: Rājānā anabhidruhā dhruve sadasi uttame | sahasrasthūṇe āsate | v. 62, 6: Rājanā kshattram chṛiṇīyamānā sahasrasthūṇam bibhṛithaḥ saha dvaú |). The two deities ascend their chariot, which is drawn by horses, and is golden-coloured at the break of day, and takes the hue of iron at the setting of the sun (v. 62, 8, already quoted in p. 42).[113] Mounted on their car, and soaring in the highest empyrean, they behold all things in heaven and earth (v. 62, 4, 8; v. 63, 1: Ṛitasya gopāv adhi tishṭhato ratham satyadharmāṇā parame vyomani). Varuṇa is said to be farsighted (uruchakshas, i. 25, 5, 16; viii. 90, 2); and thousand-eyed (sahasrachakshas, vii. 34, 10). In one place mention is made of his golden-winged messenger (hiraṇyapaksham Varuṇasya dūtam, x. 123, 6), and elsewhere the sun is called the eye of Mitra and Varuṇa (chakshur Mitrasya Varuṇasya, vii. 61, 1; vii. 63, 1; x. 37, 1). Along with Aryaman, another of the Ādityas, these two gods are called sun-eyed (sūrachakshasaḥ, vii. 66, 10). They are also denominated supāṇī, the beautiful or skilful-handed. Varuṇa is frequently spoken of as a king (rājā Varuṇaḥ, i. 24, 7, 8; iv. 1, 2; v. 40, 7; vii. 64, 1; x. 103, 9; x. 173, 5); as king of all (x. 132, 4); as king of all, both gods and men (ii. 27, 10: tvaṁ viśveshāṁ Varuṇa asi rāja ye cha ḍevāḥ asura ye cha marttāḥ |); as king of the universe (viśvasya bhuvanasya, v. 85, 3), and of all that exists (sato asya, vii. 87, 6); as an universal monarch (samrāṭ, i. 25, 10; ii. 28, 6; v. 85, 1; vi. 68, 9; viii. 42, 1); as a self-dependent ruler svarāṭ, ii. 28, 1). The same epithets of king and universal monarch are also applied in other places to Mitra and Varuṇa conjointly (as in i. 71, 9; i. 136, 1, 4; i. 137, 1; v. 62, 6; v. 63, 2, 3, 5; v. 65, 2; v. 68, 2; vii. 64, 2; viii. 23, 30; viii. 25, 4, 7, 8; viii. 90, 2; x. 65, 5).[114]

[112] Compare Ovid. Met. ii. 1 ff. Regia Solis erat sublimibus alta columnis, etc. His golden house is, according to A.V. vii. 83, 1, built in the waters (apsu te rājan Varuṇa gṛiho hiraṇyayo mitaḥ).

[113] I follow Roth here in understanding uditā sūryasya not of the rising (as the phrase generally means), but of the setting of the sun. It is thus only that the iron colour of the chariot becomes intelligible.

[114] The same deities with Aryaman are called kings in i. 41, 3; and kings of men

Power, martial strength, or sovereign authority, kshattra, is also constantly predicated of one or both of these deities; and they as well as the Ādityas generally are denominated the strong, or martial, gods, kshattriyāḥ (as in i. 24, 6; i. 25, 5; i. 136, 2; v. 66, 2; v. 67, 1; v. 68, 1, 3; vi. 49, 1; vi. 51, 10;[115] vi. 67, 5, 6; vii. 34, 11; vii. 64, 2; viii. 25, 8; viii. 56, 1; viii. 90, 2). They are also designated as rudrā, the terrible (v. 70, 2, 3); as asurā, the divine (vii. 36, 2; viii. 25, 4; viii. 27, 20); as the divine and lordly deities (asurā tāv aryā) among the gods (vii. 65, 2). The epithet asura, divine, is frequently applied to Varuṇa in particular (as in i. 24, 14; ii. 27, 10; v. 85, 5, 6; viii. 42, 1), though it is also given to other deities of the Vedic pantheon.

Another word employed to express their divine power, or wisdom, is māyā;[116] and Varuṇa is sometimes called the māyin, the possessor of this attribute (vi. 48, 14; vii. 28, 4; x. 99, 10; x. 147, 5). While in some places (iii. 61, 7; v. 63, 4) this quality (māyā) is ascribed to the two deities themselves, in other verses of the last quoted hymn (v. 63, 3, 7) they are said to cause the heaven to rain, and to uphold their ordinances, through the power (māyayā) of the divine being (asurasya). It might appear as if the word asura denoted here some great deity distinct from, and superior to, Mitra and Varuṇa, through whose strength they acted; but in other places, as we have already seen, the term asura is distinctly used as an epithet of Varuṇa and the other Ādityas.

(3) Functions and attributes of Varuṇa.

The grandest cosmical functions are ascribed to Varuṇa. Possessed of illimitable resources (or knowledge), this divine being has meted out, (or fashioned), and upholds, heaven and earth; he dwells in all worlds as sovereign ruler (viii. 42, 1: Astabhnād dyām asuro viśvavedāḥ amimīta varimāṇam pṛithivyāḥ | āsīdad viśvā bhuvanāni samrāḍ viśvā it tāni Varuṇasya vratāni), indeed, the three worlds are em-

(rājānaś charshaṇīnām) in x. 26, 6. In vii. 66, 11, it is said: "The kings Mitra, Varuṇa, and Aryaman, who established the year, the month, and the day, etc., enjoy unrivalled dominion (ye vi dadhuḥ śaradam māsam ād ahar yajnam aktum cha ād ṛicham | anāpyaṁ Varuṇo Mitro Aryamā kshatraṁ rājānaḥ āśata).

[115] In these two last passages Agni shares with Mitra and Varuṇa the epithet of sukshatra.

[116] It is also ascribed to other deities: see Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v.

braced within him (vii. 87, 5: tisro dyāvo nihitāḥ antar asmin tisro bhūmīḥ); he made the golden and revolving sun to shine in the firmament (ibid. gritso rājā Varuṇaś chakre etaṁ divi prṇkhaṁ hiraṇyayaṁ śubhe kam | comp. v. 85, 2). See also vi. 70, 1; vii. 86, 1; vii. 87, 6; viii. 41, 4, 5, 10. The wind which resounds through the atmosphere is his breath (vii. 87, 2: āśmā tē vāto rajaḥ ā navīnot). He has opened boundless paths for the sun,[117] and has hollowed out channels for the rivers, which flow by his command (i. 24, 8: Uruṁ hi rājā Varuṇaś chakāra sūryāya panthām anu etave u | ii. 28, 4: Pra sīm Ādityo asṛijad vidharttā ṛitaṁ sindhave Varuṇasya yanti | vii. 87, 1: Radat patho Varuṇaḥ sūryāya praa rṇāṁsi samudriyā nadīnām). By his wonderful contrivance the rivers pour their waters into the one ocean, but never fill it[118] (v. 85, 6: imāṁ u nu kavitamasya māyām mahīṁ devasya nakir ādadhārsha | ekaṁ yad udnā na prinanti enīr āsinchantīr avanayaḥ samudram). His ordinances are fixed and unassailable[119] (iii. 54, 18: Adabdhāni Varuṇasya vratāni). They rest on him, unshaken, as upon a mountain (ii. 28, 8: Tve hi kam parvate na śritāni aprachyutāni dūḷabha vratāni | See also i. 25, 6, 10; i. 44, 14; i. 141, 9; ii. 1, 4; viii. 25, 2, where the word dhṛita-vrata, "he whose laws are fixed," is found); through their operation, the moon walks in brightness, and the stars which appear in the nightly sky mysteriously vanish in daylight (i. 24, 10: Amī ye ṛikshāḥ nihitāsaḥ uchchā naktaṁ dadṛiśre kuha chid divā īyuḥ | adabdhāni Varuṇasya vratāni vichākaśach chandramā naktam eti). Neither the birds flying in the air, nor the rivers in their sleepless flow, can attain a knowledge of his power or his wrath (i. 24, 6: Na hi te kshatraṁ na saho na manyuṁ vayaś chana amī patayantaḥ āpuḥ | na imāḥ āpo animishaṁ charantīḥ). His messengers behold both worlds (vii. 87, 3: Pari spaśo Varuṇasya smadishṭāḥ ubhe paśyanti rodasī sumeke | See also i. 24, 13; vi. 67, 5). He knows the flight of birds in the sky, the path of ships on the ocean, the course of the far-travelling wind, and beholds all the [117] In vii. 60, 4, Mitra, Varuṇa, and Aryaman are said to open out paths for the sun (yasmai ādityāḥ adhvano radanti ityādi).

[118] See Roth on "The highest gods of the Arian races," p. 71. Compare Ecclesiastes, i. 7: "All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again."

[119] See Roth in the Journ. Amer. Or. Society, iii. 341; and Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 534, note 2.

secret things that have been, or shall be done (i. 25, 7: Veda yo vīnām padam antarikshena patatām | veda nāvaḥ samudriyaḥ | 9. Veda vātasya vartanim uror ṛishvasya bṛihataḥ | 11. Yo viśvāni adbhutā chikitvān abhi paśyati | kṛitāni yā cha kartvā). No creature can even wink without him (ii. 28, 6: Na hi tvad āre nimishaś chana īśe). He witnesses men's truth and falsehood (vii. 49, 3: Yāsāṁ rājā Varuṇo yāti madhye satyānṛite avapaśyan janānām). He instructs the rishi Vasishṭha in mysteries (vii. 87, 4: Uvācha me Varuṇo medhirāya triḥ sapta nāmā aghnyā bibhartti). But his secrets and those of Mitra are not to be revealed to the foolish (na vāṁ minyāni achite abhūvan).

In the sixteenth hymn of the fourth book of the Atharva-veda, his power and omniscience are thus celebrated:

1. Bṛihann esham adhishṭhātā antikād iva paśyati | yaḥ stāyan manyate charan sarvaṁ devāḥ idaṁ viduḥ | 2. Yas tishṭhati charati yaś cha vanchati yo nilāyaṁ charati yaḥ pratankam | dvau sannishadya yad mantrayete rājā tad veda Varuṇas tṛitīyaḥ | 3. Uteyam bhūmir Varuṇasya rājnaḥ utāsau dyaur bṛihatī dūre-antā | uto samudrau Varuṇasya kukshī utāsminn alpe udake nilīnaḥ | 4. Uta yo dyām atisarpāt parastād na sa muchyātai Varuṇasya rājnaḥ | divaḥ spaśaḥ pracharantīdam asya sahasrākshāḥ ati paśyanti bhūmim | 5. Sarvaṁ tad rājā Varuṇo vi chashṭe yad antarā rodasī yat parastāt | sankhyātāḥ asya nimisho janānām akshān iva śvaghnī ni minoti tāni | 6. Ye te pāśāḥ Varuṇa sapta sapta tredhā tishṭhanti vishitāḥ rushantaḥ | sinantu sarve anṛitaṁ vadantaṁ yaḥ satyavādī ati taṁ sṛijantu |

"1. The great One who rules over these worlds beholds as if he were close at hand. When any man thinks he is doing aught by stealth, the gods know it all; 2. (and they perceive) every one who stands, or walks, or glides along secretly, or withdraws into his house, or into any lurking-place.[120] Whatever two persons, sitting together, devise, Varuṇa the king knows it, (being present there as) a third.[121] 3. This earth, two, belongs to the king Varuṇa, and that vast sky whose ends are so remote. The two oceans [the aerial and terrestrial][122] are Varuṇa's stomachs; he resides in this small pool of water. 4. He [120] The general sense is clear; but the meaning of some of the words is uncertain.

[121] In R.V. x. 11, 1, Agni is compared to Varuṇa in omniscience; which seems to show that this is an attribute in which Varuṇa was regarded as pre-eminent. With verses 1 and 2, compare Psalm cxxxix. 1–4, and St. Matthew xviii. 20.

[122] Compare Genesis, i. 7, and Psalm cxlviii. 4.

who should flee far beyond the sky, would not there escape from Varuṇa the king.[123] His messengers, descending from heaven, traverse this world; thousand-eyed, they look across the whole earth. 5. King Varuṇa perceives all that exists within heaven and earth and all that is beyond. The winkings of men's eyes are all numbered by him.[124] He handles[125] (all) these (things) as a gamester throws his dice. 6. May thy destructive nooses, o Varuṇa, which are cast seven-fold, and three-fold, ensnare the man who speaks lies, and pass by him who speaks truth."[126]

Varuṇa is represented as having unlimited control over the destinies of mankind. He is said to have a hundred, a thousand remedies, and is supplicated to shew his wide and deep benevolence, and drive away [123] With this verse compare verses 7–10 of the Psalm cxxxix.

[124] Compare St. Matthew x. 30.

[125] Roth, s.v. thinks ni minoti here may mean "observes." See also his remarks in Jour. Germ. Or. Society, vii. 607, where the sense of superintending is assigned.

[126] The hymn is concluded by two verses, containing imprecations. After giving a German translation of the whole in his Dissertation on the Atharva-veda, p. 19 f. (Tübingen, 1856) Professor Roth remarks as follows: "There is no hymn in the whole Vedic literature which expresses the divine omniscience in such forcible terms as this; and yet this beautiful description has been degraded into an introduction to an imprecation. But in this, as in many other passages of this Veda, it is natural to conjecture that existing fragments of older hymns have been used to deck out magical formulas. The first five or even six verses of this hymn might be regarded as a fragment of this sort." This hymn has also been translated by Professor Müller, see "Chips," i. 41 f. I have attempted the following paraphrase in English verse:

"The mighty Lord on high, our deeds, as if at hand, espies:
The gods know all men do, though men would fain their deeds disguise.
Whoever stands, whoever moves, or steals from place to place,
Or hides him in his secret cell,—the gods his movements trace.
Wherever two together plot, and deem they are alone,
King Varuṇa is there, a third, and all their schemes are known.
This earth is his, to him belong those vast and boundless skies;
Both seas within him rest, and yet in that small pool he lies.
Whoever far beyond the sky should think his way to wing,
He could not there elude the grasp of Varuṇa the king.
His spies descending from the skies glide all this world around,
Their thousand eyes all-scanning sweep to earth's remotest bound.
Whate'er exists in heaven and earth, whate'er beyond the skies,
Before the eyes of Varuṇa, the king, unfolded lies.
The ceaseless winkings all he counts of every mortal's eyes:
He wields this universal frame, as gamester throws his dice.
Those knotted nooses which thou fling'st, o god, the bad to snare,—
All liars let them overtake, but all the truthful spare."

evil and sin (i. 24, 9: śataṁ te rājan bhishajaḥ sahasram urvī gabhīrā sumatis te astu | bādhasva dūre nirṛitim parāchaiḥ kṛitaṁ chid enaḥ pra mumugdhi asmat); to untie, like a rope, and remove sin (ii. 28, 5: vi mach śrathaya raśanām iva āgaḥ; v. 85, 7, 8: yat sīm āgaś chakṛima śiśrathas tat); he is entreated not to steal away, but to prolong, life (i. 24, 11: mā naḥ āyuḥ pra moshīḥ | i. 25, 12: pra naḥ āyūṁshi tārishat); and to spare the suppliant who daily transgresses his laws (i. 25, 1: yach chid hi te viśo yathā pra deva Varuṇa vratam minīmasi dyavi dyavi | mā no badhāya hatnave jihīḷānasya rīradhaḥ). In many places mention is made of the bonds, or nooses, with which he seizes and punishes transgressors (i. 24, 15; i. 25, 21; vi. 74, 4; x. 85, 24, and A.V. iv. 16, 6, as quoted above).[127] Mitra and Varuṇa conjointly are spoken of in one passage (vii. 65, 3) as being barriers against falsehood, furnished with many nooses, which the hostile mortal cannot surmount (bhūripāśā anṛitasya setū duratyetū ripave martyāya); and in another place (vii. 84, 2) Indra and Varuṇa are described as binding with bonds not formed of rope (setṛibhir arajjubhiḥ sinīthaḥ). On the other hand Varuṇa is said to be gracious even to him who has committed sin (vii. 87, 7: yo mṛiḷayāti chakrushe chid āgaḥ). He is the wise guardian of immortality (viii. 42, 2: dhīram amṛitasya gopām), and a hope is held out that he and Yama reigning in blessedness shall be beheld in the next world by the righteous (x. 14, 7:[128] ubhā rājānā svadhayā madantā Yamam paśyāsi Varuṇaṁ cha devam).

[127] Agni, however, is also prayed to loose his worshipper's bonds R.V. v. 2, 7 (evāsmād Agne, ni mumugdhi pāśān); and in vii. 104, 13, Indra's fetters (Indrasya praśitiḥ) are mentioned. In A.V. xix. 66, 1, the Asuras, masters of magical arts, who go about with iron nets, iron bonds, and hooks, are referred to (ayo-jālāḥ Asurāḥ māyino ayasmayaiḥ pāśair ankino ye charanti).

[128] In the Journal of the German Oriental Society for 1855, pp. 237 ff., Professor Weber communicates from the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa (xi. 6, 1, 1 ff.) a legend regarding Varuṇa and his son Bhṛigu. The latter had esteemed himself superior to his father in wisdom, and was desired by him to visit the four points of the compass, where he witnesses certain visions of retribution in the other world. Prof. Weber accompanies this legend with some very interesting remarks. Among other things, he observes that the legend is shewn to be ancient from the high position which it assigns to Varuṇa, who appears to be conceived as the lord of the universe, seated in the midst of heaven, from which he surveys the places of punishment situated all round him. Varuṇa, he adds, is represented in the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa xiii. 3, 6, 5, as having the form of a fair, bald, toothless, (with projecting teeth?), and yellow-eyed old man.

The attributes and functions ascribed to Varuṇa impart to his character a moral elevation and sanctity far surpassing that attributed to any other Vedic deity. This appears not only from the passages to which I have already referred, but also from the two hymns (vii. 86, and vii. 89) translated by Professor Müller in his Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 540 f., and Chips, i. 39 ff.; in which the rishi, who is said to be Vasishṭha, while palliating his sins, implores the god's forgiveness, and entreats that his life may be spared.[129] I shall quote a part of the first and the whole of the second:

R.V. vii. 86, 3. Pṛichhe tad eno Varuṇa didṛikshu upo emi chikitusho vipṛichham | samānam it me kavayaś chid āhur ayaṁ ha tubhyaṁ Varuṇo hṛiṇīte | 4. Kim āgaḥ āsa Varuṇa jyeṣṭhaṁ yat stotāraṁ jighāṁsasi sakhāyam | pra tad me vocho dūḷabha svadhāvo ava tvā anenāḥ namasā turaḥ iyām | 5. Ava drugdhāni pitryā sṛija no ava yā vayaṁ chakṛima tanūbhiḥ | ava rājan paśutṛipaṁ na tāyuṁ sṛija vatsaṁ na dāmno Vasishṭham | 6. Na sa svo daksho Varuṇa dhrutiḥ sā surā manyur vibhīdako achittiḥ | asti jyāyān kanīyasaḥ upāre svapnaś chana id anṛitasya prayotā |

"Seeking to perceive that sin, o Varuṇa, I inquire; I resort to the wise to ask. The sages all tell me the same; it is Varuṇa who is angry with thee. 4. What great sin is it, Varuṇa, for which thou seekest to slay thy worshipper and friend? Tell me, o unassailable and self-dependent god; and, freed from sin, I shall speedily come to thee with adoration. 5. Release us from the sins of our fathers,[130] and from those which we have committed in our own persons. O king, release Vasishṭha like a robber who has fed upon cattle; release him like a calf from its tether. 6. It was not our will, Varuṇa, but some seduction, which led us astray,—wine,[131] anger, dice, or thoughtlessness. The stronger perverts the weaker. Even sleep occasions sin."

[129] On the character of Varuṇa as a moral governor, see Roth, Journ. Germ. Or. Society, vi. 71 ff.; a paper by the same author in the Journ. Amer. Or. Society, iii. 340 ff.; and his reply to Weber in the Journ. Germ. Or. Society, vii. 607.

[130] Compare A.V. v. 30, 4, and Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa iii. 7, 12, 3, 4: yad mayi mātā garbhe sati enaś chakāra yat pitā | Agnir mā tasmād enasaḥ | yadā pipesha mātāram pitaram putraḥ pramudito dhayan | ahiṁsitau pitarau mayā tat | "May Agni (free) me from the sin which my mother or father committed, when I was in the womb. If I bruised my mother or father while sucking, delighted, when an infant, may my parents not have been injured thereby."

[131] We see from this that wine was drunk by the Vedic rishis. Compare viii. 2,

vii. 89, 1. Mo shu Varuṇa mṛiṇmayaṁ gṛihaṁ rājann ahaṁ gamam | mṛiḷa sukshatra mṛiḷaya | 2. Yad emi prasphurann iva dṛitir na dhmāto adrivaḥ | mṛiḷa ityādi | 3. Kratvaḥ samahe dīnatā pratīpaṁ jagama śuche | 4. Apām madhye tasthivāṁsam tṛishṇā 'vidaj jaritāram | 5. Yat kincha idaṁ Varuṇa daivye jane abhidroham manushyāś charāmasi | achittī tat tava dharmā yuyopima mā nas tasmād enaso deva rīrishaḥ |

"Let me not, o king Varuṇa, go to the house of earth.[132] Be gracious, o mighty god, be gracious. 2. I go along, o thunderer, quivering like an inflated skin; be gracious, etc. 3. O bright and mighty god, I have transgressed through want of power, be gracious, etc. 4. Thirst has overwhelmed thy worshipper when standing even in the midst of the waters; be gracious, etc. 5. Whatever offence this be, o Varuṇa, that we mortals commit against the people of the sky (the gods): in whatever way we have broken thy laws by thoughtlessness, be gracious, o mighty god, be gracious."

In another place (vii. 88, 4 ff.) the same rishi alludes to his previous friendship with Varuṇa, and to the favours the god had formerly conferred upon him, and enquires why they had now ceased:

4. Vasishṭhaṁ ha Varuṇo nāvi ādhād ṛishim chakāra svapāḥ mahobhiḥ | stotāraṁ vipraḥ sudinatve ahnām yād nu dyāvas tatanan yād ushasaḥ | 5. Kva tyāni nau sakhyā babhūvuḥ sachāvahe yad avṛikam purā chit | bṛihantam mānaṁ Varuṇa svadhāvuḥ sahasradvāraṁ jagama gṛihaṁ te | 6. Yaḥ āpir nityo Varuṇa priyaḥ san tvām agāṁsi kṛiṇavat sakhā te | mā te enasvanto yakshin bhujema yandhi sma vipraḥ stuvate varūtham |

"Varuṇa placed Vasishṭha on his boat: by his power the wise and mighty deity made him a rishi to offer praise in an auspicious period of his life, that his days and dawns might be prolonged. 5. Where[133] are those friendships of us two? Let us seek the harmony which (we enjoyed) of old. I have gone, o self-sustaining Varuṇa, to thy vast and spacious house with a thousand gates. 6. He who was thy friend, intimate, thine own, and beloved, has committed offences against thee: Let not us who are guilty reap the fruits of our sin. Do thou, a wise god, grant protection to him who praises thee."

12, and x. 107, 9, where it is said that the liberal man gains for himself, among other desirable things, a draught of wine (antaḥpeyam surāyāḥ).

[132] Compare A.V. v. 30, 14: mā nu bhūmi-gṛiho bhuvat.

[133] Compare Psalms lxxxix. 49, and xxv. 6.

(4) Conjoint functions and attributes of Mitra and Varuṇa.

The same or nearly the same functions and attributes as are ascribed to Varuṇa are also attributed to him and Mitra conjointly. They uphold and rule over the earth and sky, the shining and the terrestrial regions, and place the sun in the heavens (v. 62, 3; v. 69, 1, 4: trī rochanā Varuṇa trīn uta dyūn trīṇi dhārayatho rajāṁsi | v. 63, 7; vi. 67, 5; vii. 61, 4; x. 132, 2). They are the guardians of the world (viśvasya bhuvanasya gopā | viśvasya gopā | yūyaṁ viśvam pari pātha | ii. 27, 4; v. 62, 9; vii. 51, 2; viii. 25, 1; x. 126, 4). By their ordinance the great sky shines (yayor dhāma dharmaṇā rochate bṛihat | x. 65, 5). They discharge the rain (v. 62, 3: ava vṛishṭiṁ sṛijatam jīradānū | v. 63, 1–3: dyāṁ varshayatho asurasya māyayā). Their godhead is beyond the ken of the skies, or of rivers (i. 151, 9: na vāṁ dyāvo ahabhir nota sindhavo na devatvam paṇayo nānaśur magham). They (together with Aryaman) are awful deities, haters and dispellers of falsehood (i. 152, 1; vii. 66, 13: ṛitavānaḥ ṛitajātāḥ ṛitāvṛidho ghorāso anṛita-ḷvishaḥ). They carry out their fixed purposes, which are unobstructed even by the immortal gods (v. 63, 7; v. 69, 4: na vāṁ devāḥ amṛitāḥ ā minanti vratāni Mitrā-varuṇā dhruvāṇi). They make the foolish wise (vii. 60, 6, 7: achetasaṁ chich chitayanti dakshaiḥ); they know heaven and earth (vii. 60, 7: ime divo animishā pṛithivyāś chikitvāṁsaḥ). They look down from heaven observing men as if herds of cattle (adhi yā bṛihato divaḥ abhi yūtheva paśyataḥ | See also verses 9 and 16, and R.V. vii. 60, 3). They are described as righteous, and as proſnoters of religious rites (or truth or righteousness) ṛitāvṛidhā, ṛitāvānā, ṛitajātā, ṛitaspṛiśā, ṛitasya gopau (i. 2, 8; i. 23, 5; i. 136, 4; ii. 27, 4; v. 63, 1; v. 65, 2; v. 67, 4; vii. 64, 2; vii. 66, 13; viii. 23, 30; viii. 25, 8), as the lords of truth and light (ṛitasya jyotishas patī | i. 23, 5). They, with the other Ādityas, avenge sin and falsehood (chayamānāḥ ṛiṇāni | chetāro anṛitasya bhūreḥ | ii. 27, 4; vii. 60, 5): the man who neglects their worship is seized with consumption (i. 122, 9: jano yo Mitrā-varuṇāv abhidhrug apo na vāṁ sunoti akshṇayādhruk | svayaṁ sa yakshmaṁ hṛidaye ni dhatta). They are besought along with Aditi to remove the trespasses of their worshippers (ii. 27, 14: Adite Mitra Varuṇota mṛila yad vo vayaṁ chakṛima kach chid āgaḥ); and along with Aryaman to give deliverance from evil (x. 126, passim).[134]

(5) Hymn addressed to Mitra only.

Mitra alone is celebrated in iii. 59. The following are some of the verses:

1. Mitro janān yātayati bruvāṇo Mitro dadhāra pṛithivīm uta dyām | Mitraḥ kṛishṭīr aṅimishā 'bhi chaṣṭe Mitrāya havyaṁ ghṛitavaj juhota | 2. Pra sa Mitra marto astu prayasvān yas te Āditya śikshati vratena | na hanyate na jīyate tvā-ūto nainam aṁho aśnoty antito na dūrāt | 4. Ayam Mitro namasyaḥ suśevo rājā sukshatro ajanishṭa vedhāḥ | tasya vayam Mitrasya sumatau syāma | 5. Mahān ādityo namasā upasadyo yātayajjano gṛiṇate suśevaḥ | 7. Abhi yo mahinā divam Mitro babhūva saprathāḥ | abhi śravobhiḥ pṛithivīm | 8. Mitrāya pancha yemire janāḥ abhishṭi-śavase sa devān viśvān bibhartti |

"1. Mitra, uttering his voice, calls men to activity.[135] Mitra sustains the earth and the sky. Mitra with unwinking eye beholds (all) creatures. Offer to Mitra the oblation with butter. 2. Mitra, son of Aditi, may the mortal who worships thee with sacred rites, have food. He who is protected by thee is neither slain nor conquered. Calamity does not reach him from near or from far. 4. This Mitra has been born adorable, blessed, a king, strong, and wise. May we abide in his favour. 5. This great Āditya, who rouses men to exertion (see v. 1), who is favourable to his worshipper, is to be approached with reverence. 7. The vast Mitra who by his greatness transcends the sky, and the earth by his glory. 8. The five classes of men have done homage to Mitra the powerful helper, who sustains all the gods."

(6) Professor Roth's remarks on Mitra and Varuṇa.

In his paper on "The highest gods of the Arian races" (Journ. of the German Oriental Society, vi. p. 70 f.), Professor Roth has the following ingenious and interesting observations on Mitra and Varuṇa: "Within the circle of the Ādityas there subsists the closest connection between Mitra and Varuṇa, who are invoked more frequently together than Varuṇa is invoked singly. We find only one hymn in which Mitra is invoked by himself (iii. 59). The fact that this dual invocation is preserved in the Zend Avesta, in regard to Ahura and Mithra, though the position of both has become entirely altered, and Mithra is not even reckoned among the Amshaspands,—this fact proves how close the ancient connection of the two was, when it has been maintained even after the reason for it had ceased. . . . . The essential character of the two gods, as distinguished from one another, is nowhere distinctly expressed in the hymns, and was in fact originally one which could not be defined with intellectual precision. But the stage of religious culture which lies before us in the Rig-veda, enables us to distinguish this difference as one already existing, viz., that Mitra is the celestial light in its manifestation by day, while Varuṇa, though the lord of light and of all time, yet rules especially over the nightly heaven. A hymn of Vasishṭha (vii. 36, 2) says: 'One of you (Varuṇa) is the lord, and unassailable guide, and he who is called Mitra, (i.e. the friend) calls men to activity' (ino vām anyaḥ padavīr adabdho janaṁ cha Mitro yatati bruvāṇaḥ). Here so much at least is declared (and the same thing is expressed in nearly the same words in other places), that the light of day, which awakens life, and brings joy and activity into the world, is the narrower sphere of Mitra's power; though, however, Varuṇa is not thereby relegated to the night alone, for he continues to be the lord and the first.

[134] Like other gods, and in particular Indra, they are represented as drinking the soma-juice, i. 136, 4; i. 137, 1 ff.; iv. 41, 3; iv. 42, 6; v. 64, 7; v. 71, 3; v. 72, 1–3; vi. 68, 10.

[135] With this verse Roth (Illustrations of Nirukta, x. 22, p. 140) compares R.V. v. 82, 9, where it is said: "Savitṛi, who causes all creatures to hear his sound, and impels them." Comp. v. 5 of the present hymn; and vii. 36, 2, referred to by Roth in the passage about to be quoted.

"Though therefore such representations as are expressed in Indian exegesis, (as for instance, when Sāyaṇa says on R.V. vii. 87, 1, that Varuṇā is the setting sun), are far too narrow and one-sided, they still contain some truth; and we may guess by what process they are to be developed. If Varuṇa is, as his name shews, that one among the lucid Ādityas whose seat and sphere of authority is the bright heaven, in whose bosom is embraced all that lives, and therefore also the remotest boundary, beyond which human thought seeks nothing further, then is he also one who can scarcely be attained either by the eye or by the imagination. By day the power of vision cannot discover this remotest limit, the bright heaven presents to it no resting place. But at night this veil of the world, in which Varuṇa is enthroned, appears to approach nearer, and becomes perceptible, for the eye finds a limit. Varuṇa is closer to men. Besides, the other divine forms which, in the clouds, the atmosphere, the rays of light, filled the space between the earth and yonder, immeasurable outermost sphere, have disappeared: no other god now stands between Varuṇa and the mortal who gazes at him."

(7) The Indian Mitra and the Zoroastrian Mithra.

Whatever may be the the success of the attempts made to identify any other of the Indian and Iranian gods with one another, there can at least be no doubt, from the correspondence of the two names, that the Vedic Mitra and the Mithra of the Zend Avesta were originally the same deity. Accordingly, the late Dr. F. Windischmann, in his Dissertation on the Persian Mithra,[136] regards it as established that this god was known, and common, to the old Arian race before the separation of its Iranian from its Indian branch, though the conception of his character was subsequently modified by Zoroastrian ideas. That Mithra was worshipped in Persia in and previous to the age of Herodotus, is proved, as Windischmann remarks, by the common use of such names as Mitradates and Mitrobates. Herodotus himself (i. 131) speaks of Mitra, not as a god, but as a goddess (Ἐπιμεμαθήκασι δὲ καὶ τῇ Οὐρανίῃ θύειν, παρά τε Ἀσσυρίων μαθόντες καὶ Ἀραβίων· καλέουσι δὲ Ἀσσύριοι τὴν Ἀφροδίτην Μύλιττα, Ἀράβιοι δὲ Ἀλιττά, Πέρσαι δὲ Μίτραν. See Rawlinson's note, in loco, in his translation of Herodotus). But Xenophon (Cyrop. viii. 5, 53; Œc. iv. 24), and Plutarch (Artax. 4, and Alexand. 30) describes the Persians as swearing by the god Mitra. And Plutarch, in his treatise on Isis and Osiris, chap. xlvi. tells us that Zoroaster conceived of Mithra as standing intermediate between the deities Oromazes, the representative of light, and Areimanius, the representative of darkness and ignorance.[137] It is unnecessary to say anything further here of the Persian Mithra, the eventual introduction of whose worship into the West is matter of history.

[136] Mithra, ein Beitrag zur Mythengeschichte des Orients, in the Abhandlungen für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, Leipzig, 1857. See pp. 54 ff.

[137] Ibid, p. 56. This passage is also quoted in the 2nd vol. of this work, p. 471.

(8) Is there any historical connection between Varuṇa and Ahura-Mazda?

Varuṇa also, in the opinion of certain writers, is connected, at least indirectly, with the Ahura Mazda of the old Persian mythology; and in support of this it may be alleged,—(1) that the name of Asura, the divine being, is frequently applied to Varuṇa, as an epithet; (2) that the class of Indian gods called Ādityas, of whom Varuṇa is the most distinguished, bears a certain analogy to the Amshaspands of the Zend mythology, of whom Ahura Mazda is the highest; and (3) that a close connection exists between Varuṇa and Mitra, just as, according to Professor Roth (see above), Ahura and Mithra are frequently associated in the Zendavesta, though the position of the two has otherwise become altered, and Mithra is not even reckoned among the Amshaspands. Other scholars, however, think that there is not sufficient proof of Varuṇa and Ahura Mazda being connected with one another.

I shall state the opinion of Professor Roth in regard to the connection of Varuṇa with Ahura Mazda more fully in the next Section, where reference will be made to the same writer's views regarding the relation of Indra to Varuṇa.

(9) Varuṇa connected with the element of water even in the Rig-veda.

Though Varuṇa is not generally regarded in the Rig-veda as the god of the ocean, he is yet in the following passages connected with the element of water, both in the atmosphere and on the earth, in such a way as may have led to the conception of his character and functions which is fully established in the later mythology.

i. 161, 14. Divā yānti Maruto bhūmyā Agnir ayaṁ Vāto antarikṣheṇa yāti | adbhir vāti Varuṇaḥ samudrair yushmāñ ichhantaḥ śavasaḥ napātaḥ | "Desiring you, ye sons of strength, the Maruts proceed through the sky, Agni along the earth, this Vāta (wind) through the atmosphere, and Varuṇa along the waters, the ocean" (adbhiḥ samudraiḥ).[138]

vii. 49, 2. Yāḥ āpo divyāḥ uta vā sravanti khanitrimāḥ uta vā yāḥ svayaṁjāḥ | samudrārthāḥ yāḥ śuchayaḥ pāvakās tāḥ āpo devīr iha mām avantu | 3. Yāsāṁ rājā Varuṇo yati madhye satyānṛite avapaśyan

[138] See Bollensen in Or. and Occid. 2, 467.

janānām | madhuśchutaḥ śuchayaḥ—| 4. Yāsu rājā Varuṇo yāsu Somo viśve devāḥ yāsu ūrjam madanti | Vaiśvānaro yāsu Agniḥ pravishṭas tāḥ āpaḥ—|[139] "May the waters which are celestial, and those which flow, those for which channels are dug, and those which are self-produced, those which are proceeding to the ocean and are bright and purifying, preserve me! 3. May those (waters) in the midst of which king Varuṇa goes, beholding the truth and falsehood of men, which drop sweetness and are bright and purifying, preserve me! 4. May those waters in which Varuṇa, Soma, and all the gods are exhilarated by food, into which Agni Vaiśvānara has entered," etc. etc.

vii. 64, 2. Ā rājānā mahaḥ ṛitasya gopā sindhupatī kshatriyā yātam arvāk | iḷāṁ no Mitrāvaruṇā uta vṛishṭim ava divaḥ invataṁ jīradānū |[140] "Mitra and Varuṇa, ye two kings, protectors of the great ceremonial, strong lords of the sea (or of rivers) come hither; send us food and rain from the sky," etc.

In the second of these texts, vii. 49, 3, the waters, in the midst of which Varuṇa is said to move, "beholding the truth and falsehood of men," seem to be rather aerial than oceanic, as the former, from their position above the earth, would appear to afford to the god (when anthropomorphically regarded) a more convenient post of observation than the latter. And in vii. 64, 2, the epithet sindhupatī, "lords of the sea," (or "of rivers," nadyāḥ pālayitārau, Sāyaṇa), is applied not only to Varuṇa but to Mitra also, who is not, that I am aware of, ever connected with the sea, even in later mythology. If we add to this, that these two gods are here solicited to send food and rain from the sky, it may result that they are called sindhupatī, as supplying the aerial waters by which terrestrial streams are filled. On the other hand the 2nd verse of the hymn just quoted, vii. 49, 2, with which however Varuṇa is not directly connected, must be understood (as Professor Müller remarks, Transl. of R.V. i. p. 46) of terrestrial waters. Though, as we have seen above, Sāyaṇa does not generally style Varuṇa the god of the sea, but, in conformity with older conceptions, the deity who presides over the night, he does, in his explanation of [139] See Prof. Müller's remarks on the word samudra, Trans. of R.V. i. 44 ff. where this verse is quoted and translated.

[140] Taitt. S. vi. 4, 3, 3, says: Mitrāvaruṇau vai apām netārau | "Mitra and Varuṇa are the leaders of the waters."

R.V. i. 161, 14, and viii. 58, 12, call him the jalābhimānī devaḥ, "the deity presiding over the waters."

In viii. 41, 8, Varuṇa appears to be called a hidden ocean (samudro apīchyaḥ).

viii. 58, 12. Sudevo asi Varuṇa yasya te septa sindhavaḥ | anuksharanti kākudaṁ sūrmyaṁ sushirām iva | "Thou art a glorious god, Varuṇa, into whose jaws the seven rivers flow, as into a surging abyss."[141]

Varuṇa is also connected with the sea or with the rivers, which he is said to inhabit, as soma (the plant) does the woods, in ix. 90, 2 (vanā vasāno Varuṇo na sindhūn); and in Vāj. Sanh. x. 7, it is said that "Varuṇa, the child of the waters, made his abode within the most motherly waters as in his home" (Pastyāsu chakre Varuṇaḥ sadhastham apāṁ śiśur matṛitamāsu antaḥ). See also the third verse of the sixteenth hymn of the A.V. quoted above.

In the following texts of the Atharva-veda, Varuṇa is connected with the waters:

A.V. iii. 3, 3. Adbhyas tvā rājā Varuṇo hvayatu somas tvā hvayatu parvatebhyaḥ | "May king Varuṇa call thee from the waters, and Soma from the mountains."

iv. 15, 12. Apo nishinchann asuraḥ pitā naḥ śvasantu gargarāḥ apāṁ Varuṇa | "Our divine father shedding the waters—may the streams of water breathe, o Varuṇa."

v. 24, 4. Varuṇo 'pām adhipatiḥ | 5. Mitrāvaruṇau vṛishtyāḥ adhipatī | "Varuṇa the lord of the waters." 5. "Mitra and Varuṇa the lords of rain."

vii. 83. 1. Apsu te rājan Varuṇa gṛiho hiraṇyayo mitaḥ | "Thy golden house, o Varuṇa, is in the waters."[142]

[141] See Roth's Illustrations of Nirukta, pp. 70 f.

[142] The Taitt. S. v. 5, 4, 1, says: āpo Varuṇasya patnayaḥ asan | tā Agnir abhyadhyāyat | tāḥ samabhavat | tasya retaḥ parāpatat | tad iyam abhavat | yad dvitīyam parāpatat tad asāv abhavat | iyaṁ vai virāḍ asau svarāṭ | "The waters are the wives of Varuṇa. Agni regarded them with desire. He consorted with them. His seed fell. It became this (earth). That which fell the second time became that (sky). This (earth) is virāj, that (sky) is svarāj." The Varāha Purāṇa, sect. 121 (Aufrecht, Catal. p. 59*b*) speaks of Varuṇa being universally known as the guardian of the ocean (sarve lokāḥ hi jānanti Varuṇaḥ pāti sāgaram). The Skanda Purāna, sect. 12 (Aufrecht, Cat. p. 69*a*), relates that Varuṇa was formerly the son of Kardama, and bore the name of Suchishmat; and that he is said to have obtained the sovereignty of the sea by worshipping Śiva.

(10) Explanations by Professors Roth and Westergaard of the process by which Varuṇa came to be regarded as the regent of the sea.

Professor Roth gives (in a paper read in October, 1851, and published in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vi. 73) the following statement of the process by which he conceives that Varuṇa came in later times to be regarded as the god of the sea.

"The hymns of the Veda give already indications of this development, since Varuṇa is in one place brought into the same connection with the waves of the sea, as Storm and Wind are with the atmosphere and the heaven, and as Agni is with the earth (i. 161, 14, translated above), and it is elsewhere said of him that he sinks into the sea (vii. 87, 6), while in another passage the rivers are described as streaming towards him (viii. 58, 12). When, on the one hand, the conception of Varuṇa as the all-embracing heaven had been established, and, on the other hand, the observation of the rivers flowing towards the ends of the earth and to the sea had led to the conjecture that there existed an ocean enclosing the earth in its bosom, then the way was thoroughly prepared for connecting Varuṇa with the ocean. Another side of the affinity between the celestial and oceanic Varuṇa may be expressed in the words of Alexander von Humboldt, which perfectly coincide with the ancient Indian view: 'The two envelopments of the solid surface of our planet, viz., the aqueous and the atmospheric, offer many analogies to each other, in their mobility, in the phenomena of their temperature, and in the fact that their parts admit of being displaced: the depth both of the ocean and of the atmosphere is unknown to us.'"

On the same subject Professor Westergaard remarks (in a paper originally published in 1852, and translated by Professor Spiegel from the Danish, and published in Weber's Indische Studien, vol. iii.): "The Zend word Varena corresponds also etymologically, on the one hand, to the Greek οὐρανός, and, on the other, to the Indian Varuṇa, a name which in the Vedas is assigned to the god who reigns in the furthest regions of the heaven, where air and sea are, as it were, blended; on which account he has, in the later Indian mythology, become god of the sea, whilst in the Vedas he appears first as the mystic lord of the evening and the night." And he adds: "Possibly the Iranian Varena, in opposition to Yima's home on the remotest mountains of the east, denotes, originally, the distant western region of the heaven and the air, where, every evening, the sun and light conceal themselves, and so much the rather as the epithet Varenya, derived from Varena, is in the Zenda-vesta applied only to the evil spirits of darkness" (p. 415 f.).

(11) Correspondence of Varuṇa with the Greek Οὐρανός.

We have already seen that Varuṇa corresponds in name to the Οὐρανός of the Greeks. "Uranos," as Professor Müller observes,[143] "in the language of Hesiod, is used as a name for the sky; he is made or born that he should 'be a firm place for the blessed gods.'[144] It is said twice that Uranos covers everything (v. 127), and that when he brings the night, he is stretched out everywhere, embracing the earth.[145] This sounds almost as if the Greek mythe had still preserved a recollection of the etymological power of Uranos. For Uranos is in the Sanskrit Varuṇa, and is derived from a root, Var, to cover; Varuṇa being in the Veda also a name of the firmament, but especially connected with the night, and opposed to Mitra, the day."

The parallel between the Greek Uranos and the Indian Varuṇa does not, as we have already seen, hold in all points. There is not in the Vedic mythology any special relation between Varuṇa and Pṛithivī, the Earth, as husband and wife, as there is between Uranos and Gaia in the theogony of Hesiod; nor is Varuṇa represented in the Veda, as Uranos is by the Greek poet, as the progenitor of Dyaus (Zeus), except in the general way in which he is said to have formed and to preserve heaven and earth.

[143] Oxford Essays for 1856, p. 41; Chips, ii. 65.

[144] Hesiod Theog. 126:—

Γαῖα δέ τοι πρῶτον μὲν ἐγείνατο ἶσον ἑαυτῇ
Οὐρανὸν ἀστεροέντ', ἵνα μιν περὶ πάντα καλύπτοι,
Ὄφρ' εἴη μακάρεσσι θεοῖς ἕδος ἀσφαλὲς ἀεί.

Compare Ait. Br. iv. 27, quoted above.

[145] Ibid, v. 176:—

Ἦλθε δὲ Νύκτ' ἐπάγων μέγας Οὐρανός, ἀμφὶ δὲ Γαίῃ
Ἱμείρων φιλότητος ἐπέσχετο καί ῥ ἐτανύσθη Πάντῃ.

(12) Varuṇa, as represented in the hymns,—a metrical sketch.

Lo, reared of old by hands divine,
High towers in heaven a palace fair;
Its roof a thousand columns bear;
A thousand portals round it shine.

Within, enthroned in godlike state,
Sits Varuṇa in golden sheen;
To work his will, with reverent mien,
His angel hosts around him wait.

When I beheld this vision bright,
I deemed the god was clad in flame,—
Such radiance from his presence came,
And overpowered my aching sight.

Each morn, when Ushas starts from sleep,
He mounts his car, which gleams with gold:
All worlds before him lie unrolled,
As o'er the sky his coursers sweep.

He, righteous lord, the sceptre wields,
Supreme, of universal sway,
His law both men and gods obey;
To his degree the haughtiest yields.

He spread the earth and watery waste;
He reared the sky; he bade the sun
His shining circuit daily run;
In him the worlds are all embraced.

By his decree the radiant moon
Moves through the nightly sky serene,
And planets sparkle round their queen;—*
But whither have they fled at noon?

* In Indian mythology the moon is a god, not a goddess; but I have in this line adhered to customary English poetical phraseology.

The rivers flow at his behest,
And yet—admire his wondrous skill—
The ocean-bed they cannot fill,
Although their currents never rest.

The path of ships across the sea,
The soaring eagle's flight, he knows,†
The course of every wind that blows,
And all that was or is to be.

Descending, ceaseless, from the skies,
His angels glide this world around;
As far as earth's remotest bound,
All-scanning, range their thousand eyes.

This mighty lord who rules on high,
Though closely veiled from mortal gaze,
All men's most secret acts surveys;
He, ever far, is ever nigh.

Two think they are not overheard
Who sit and plot, as if alone;
Their fancied secrets all are known,
Unseen, the god is there, a third.

Whoe'er should think his way to wing,
And lurk, unknown, beyond the sky,
Yet could not there elude the eye
And grasp of Varuṇa, the King.

For all within the vast expanse
Of air that heaven and earth divides,
Whate'er above the heaven abides,
Lies open to his piercing glance.

† Compare Proverbs, xxx. 18: "There be three things which are too wonderful for me; yea, four which I know not: 19. The way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid."

The ceaseless winkings all he sees,
And counts, of every mortal's eyes:
In vain to wink a creature tries,
Unless the god the power decrees.

To thoughtful men who truth discern,
And deeply things divine explore,
The god reveals his hidden lore;
But fools his secrets may not learn.

He marks the good and ill within
The hearts of men—the false and true
Discerns with never-erring view:
He hates deceit, chastises sin.

His viewless bonds, than cords and gyves
More hard to burst, the wicked bind;
In vain, within their folds confined,
To cast them off the sinner strives.

And yet the god will not refuse
His grace to one who 'inly moans,
When fetter-bound, his errors owns,
And for forgiveness meekly sues.

But where is, lord, thy friendship now?
Thine ancient kindness, o, restore;
May we, so dear to thee of yore,
No longer dread thy frowning brow.

Thine ire we did not madly brave,
Nor break thy laws in wanton mood;
We fell, by wrath, dice, wine, subdued:
Forgive us, gracious lord, and save.

Absolve us from the guilt, we pray,
Of all the sins our fathers wrought, ‡
And sins which we commit by thought, §
And speech, and act, from day to day.

From dire disease preserve us free,
Nor doom us to the house of clay
Before our shrivelling frames decay:
A good old age yet let us see.

In vain shall hostile shafts assail
The man thy shielding arm defends;
Secure, no wrong he apprehends,
Safe, as if cased in iron mail.

As mother birds their pinions spread
To guard from harm their cowering brood,
Do thou, o lord, most great and good,
Preserve from all the ills we dread.

‡ See Exodus, xx. 5, Deuteronomy, v. 9, and Ezekiel, xviii. 1 ff.
§ Rig-veda, x. 37, 12.

SECTION V.

INDRA.[146]

According to the Greek geographer Strabo, the Indians, as known to him by the report of other writers, "worshipped Jupiter Pluvius, the river Ganges, and the gods of country.[147] This Jupiter Pluvius was, no doubt, Indra. Although at the period to which Strabo's information refers, this god, in all probabilty, no longer occupied the same prominent position as of old; he was, as Professor Roth remarks,[148] the favourite national deity of the Aryan Indians in the Vedic age. More hymns are dedicated to his honour than to the praise of any other divinity.

(1) His origin and parents; his wife.

Although, however, his greatness is celebrated in the most magnificent language, he is not regarded as an uncreated being. As I have already noticed, he is distinctly spoken of in various passages as being born, and as having a father and a mother.

Thus it is said of him:

iii. 48, 2. Yaj jāyathās tad ahar asya kāme aṁśoḥ pīyūsham apibo girishṭhām | taṁ te mātā pari yoshā janitrī mūhaḥ pitur dame āsinchad agre | 3. Upasthāya mātaram annam aiṭṭa tigmam apaśyad abhi somam ūdhaḥ |

"On the day that thou wast born, thou didst, from love of it, drink the mountain-grown juice of the soma-plant. Of old, the youthful [146] Strabo, xv. 1, 69, p. 718, quoted by Lassen, Indische Alterthumskunde, ii. 698: Λέγεται δὲ καὶ ταῦτα παρὰ τῶν συγγραφέων, ὅτι σέβονται μὲν τὸν ὄμβριον Δία οἱ Ἰνδοὶ, καὶ τὸν Γάγγην ποταμὸν, καὶ τοὺς ἐγχωρίους δαίμονας.

[147] In my account of Varuṇa there is little of importance that had not been previously said by Professor Roth; but in this description of Indra there is a larger collection of particulars than I have noticed to have been brought together elsewhere.

[148] In his Lexicon, s.v. Indra.

mother who bore thee, satiated thee with it in the house of thy mighty father. 3. Approaching his mother, he desired sustenance; he beheld the sharp-flavoured soma on her breast."

Again in iv. 17, 4. Suvīras te janitā manyata Dyaur Indrasya karttā svapastamo 'bhūt | yaḥ īm jajāna svaryaṁ suvajram anapachyutaṁ sadaso na bhūma | . . . . 17. Kiyat svid Indro adhi eti mātuḥ kiyat pitur janitur yo jajāna | "Thy father was, as the Sky thought, a most stalwart being; the maker of Indra, he who produced the celestial thunderer, immovable as the earth,—he was a most skilful workman. 17. How much does Indra regard his mother, how much the father who begat him?"[149]

iv. 18, 1. Ayam panthāḥ anuvittaḥ purāṇo yato devāḥ udajāyanta viśve | ataś chid ā janishīshṭa pravriddho mā mātaram amuyā pattave kaḥ | 5. Avadyam iva manyamānā guhā 'kar Indram mātā vīryeṇa nyṛishṭam | atha ud astṛāt svayam atkaṁ vasānaḥ ā rodasī apṛiṇaj jāyamānaḥ | 10. Gṛishṭiḥ sasūva sthaviraṁ tavāgām anādhṛishyaṁ vṛishabhaṁ tumram Indram | arīḷhaṁ vatsaṁ charathāya mātā svayaṁ gātum tanve ichhamānaṃ | 11. Uta mātā mahisham anvanenad amī tvā jahati putra devāḥ | athābravīd vṛittram Indro hanishyan sakhe Vishṇo vitarāṁ vi kramasva | 12. Kas te mātaram vidhavām achakrat śayuṁ kaś tvām ajighāṁsat charantam | kas te devo adhi mārḍīke āsīd yat pitaram prākshiṇāḥ pādagṛihya |

"This has been traversed as the ancient path, through which all the gods were born; through this let the grown (embryo) be produced; let him not vainly cause his mother to perish.[150] 5. Regarding it (his birth) as a fault, the mother concealed Indra, who was full of vigour. Then he himself arose, clothed with a robe, and filled both worlds as soon as he was born. 10. His mother, (like) a cow, bore Indra, an unlicked calf, strong, robust, unassailable, vigorous, and lusty, in order [149] Professor Müller, Lectures ii. 430, translates the first of these verses thus: Dyu, thy parent, was reputed strong; the maker of Indra was mighty in his works; he (who) begat the heavenly Indra, armed with the thunderbolt, who is immovable as the earth, from his seat:" 'and the 12th verse as follows: "Indra 'somewhat excels his mother and the father who begat him.'" Of the Maruts also it is said v. 60, 5, that Rudra, their father, was young and an excellent workman (yuvā pitā svapāḥ Rudraḥ eshām. The next hymn of the same Maṇḍala, iv. 18, makes repeated reference to Indra's birth and parents.

[150] For the Commentator's explanation of this obscure hymn see Professor Wilson's Translation, note 1.

that he might range abroad, and desiring full scope for himself. 11. And his mother affectionately regarded her mighty son, saying, 'those gods forsake thee, my son.' Then said Indra, preparing to slay Vṛittra, 'Friend Vishṇu, stride boldly forward.' 12. Who made thy mother a widow? Who sought to slay thee lying or moving? What god stood by thee in the fray when thou didst crush thy father, seizing him by the foot?"

vii. 20, 5. Vṛishā jajāna vṛishaṇam raṇāya tam u chin nārī naryaṁ sasūva | "A vigorous (god) begot him, a vigorous (son) for the battle: a heroic female (nārī) brought him forth, a heroic (son)," etc. Again, vii. 98, 3. Jajnāna ḥ somaṁ sahase papātha pra te mātā mahimānam uvācha | "When born, thou didst drink the soma-juice to (gain) strength: thy mother declared thy greatness." x. 73, 1. Janishṭhāḥ ugraḥ sahase turāya mandraḥ ojishṭho bahulābhimānaḥ | avardhann Indram Marutaś chid attra mātā yad vīraṁ dadhanad dhanishṭhā | "Thou wast born fierce to exercise impetuous strength; exulting, fiery, full of confidence. The Maruts here augmented Indra when his opulent mother brought forth the hero." x. 120, 1. Tad id āsa bhuvaneshu jyeshṭhaṁ yato jajne ugras tveshanṛimṇaḥ | "That was the highest (being) in the world from which this fierce and impetuous (god) was born," etc. x. 134, 1. Ubhe yad Indra rodasī āpaprātha ushāḥ iva | mahāntaṁ tva mahīnāṁ saṁrājaṁ charshaṇīnāṁ devī janitrī ajījanad bhadrā janitrī ajījanat | "When thou, Indra, didst fill the two worlds like the Dawn, a divine mother bore thee, a gracious mother bore thee, the great monarch of the great people" (the gods?). In x. 101, 12, as we have already seen, he is called the son of Nishṭigrī. This word, as I have already noticed, p. 13, note 9, is treated by the commentator as a synonym of Aditi; but though Indra is always regarded as an Āditya in the later mythology, and is even addressed in that character, along with Varuṇa, in vii. 85, 4 (yaḥ ādityā śavasā vāṁ namasvān), he is not commonly described as such in other parts of the Rig-veda.[151]

In the A.V. iii. 10, 12, we read: Ekāshṭakā tapasā tapyamānā jajāna garbham mahimānam Indram | tena devāḥ ashahanta śatrūn hantā dasyūnām abhavat S'achipatiḥ | "Ekāshṭakā, practising austere-fervour, bore [151] In iv. 26, 1, he appears to be identified with Manu and Sūrya, and in viii. 82, 1, 4, and x. 89, 2, with Sūrya. In ii. 30, 1, he receives the epithet of Savitṛi.

as a child the glorious Indra. By him the gods conquered their enemies; the lord of Sachi (or of might) became the slayer of the Dasyus."

In the next verse Ekāshṭakā is called the mother of Soma, as well as of Indra, and the daughter of Prajāpati. In A.V. vi. 38, the mother of Indra is invoked, but her name is not given. According to the M.Bh. Ādip. 3136, Indra is one of the sons of Kaśyapa and Dākshāyaṇī, i.e. the daughter of Daksha, or Aditi. See also viii. 45, 4, 5; viii. 66, 1, 2, which will be quoted further on. In viii. 58, 4, he is called the son of truth (sūnuṁ satyasya).

In another place (iii. 49, 1) he is said to have been produced by the gods, as a destroyer of enemies (ghanaṁ vṛitrāṇāṁ janayanta devāḥ | See also ii. 13, 5, and iii. 51, 8).

In the Purusha Sūkta (R.V. x. 90, 13) Indra is said to have sprung, along with Agni, from the mouth of Purusha (mukhād Indraś cha Agniś cha); and he is one of several gods said, in ix. 96, 5 (Somaḥ . . . janitā Indrasya), to have been generated by Soma. In one of the latest hymns (x. 167, 1) he is declared to have conquered heaven by austerity (tvaṁ tapaḥ paritapya ajayaḥ svaḥ).[152]

[152] In one of the short stories about the gods, of which it and the other Brāhmaṇas are full, the S'atap. Br. xi. 1, 6, 14, says of Indra: Tāḥ vai etāḥ Prajāpater adhi devatāḥ asṛijyanta Agnir Indraḥ Somaḥ Parameshṭhī prājāpatyaḥ | 15. Tāḥ sahatrāyusho jajnire | tāḥ yathā nadyai pāram parāpaśyed evaṁ svasya āyushaḥ pāram parāchakhyuḥ | 14. "These gods were created from Prajāpati, viz. Agni, Indra, Soma, and Parameshṭhin Prājāpatya. 15. These were born with a life of a thousand (years). Just as a man can look across to the other bank of a river, they looked across to the end of their life." Again the Taitt. Br. ii. 2, 3, 3, says of Indra: Prajāpatir devāsurān asṛijata | sa Indram api na asṛijata | taṁ devāḥ abruvann "Indraṁ no janaya" iti | so 'bravīd "yathā 'haṁ yūshmāṁs tapasā 'sṛikshi evam Indraṁ janayadhvam" iti | te tapo 'tapyanta | te ātmann Indram apaśyan | tam abruvan "jāyasva" iti | so 'bravīt "kim bhāgadheyam abhi janishye" iti | "ṛitūn saṁvatsarān prajāḥ paśūn imān lokān" ity abruvan | ityādi | "Prajāpati created gods and Asuras, but he did not also create Indra. The gods said to him: 'Create Indra for us.' He replied: 'As I have created you through austere-fervour (tapas), so do you generate Indra.' They practised austere-fervour. They saw Indra within themselves. They said to him, 'Be born.' He said, 'To what lot shall I be born?' They said to him, 'To the seasons, the years, the creatures, the beasts, these worlds,' etc. The same Brāhmaṇa, ii. 2, 10, 1, tells us that Prajāpati created Indra last of the gods, and sent him to be the lord of the other deities. The gods said to him, 'Who art thou?' 'We are superior to thee.' He reported their reply to Prajāpati, and asked for the splendour which resided in Prajāpati, in order that he might become the chief of the gods, etc."

In vi. 59, 2, Indra and Agni, as we have already seen, p. 14, are said to be twin brothers, having the same father, and whose mothers are, the one here, the other there. (The sense of this is not very evident, unless it simply mean that the mothers are different.) In x. 55, 1, his brother's children are mentioned (ud astabhnāḥ Pṛithivīm Dyām abhīke bhrātuḥ putrān maghavan tjtvishāṇaḥ). Heaven and Earth seem to be intended. If so, who is their father? In vi. 55, 5, Pūshan is called Indra's brother (bhrātā Indrasya).

Even as an infant Indra is said to have manifested his warlike tendencies. "As soon as he was born, the slayer of Vṛittra (Indra) grasped his arrow, and asked his mother, 'Who are they that are renowned as fierce warriors?'" (viii. 45, 4, ā bundāṁ vṛittrahā dade jātaḥ pṛichhad vi mātaram | ke ugrāḥ ke ha śṛiṇvire | viii. 66, 1. Jajnāno hi śatakratur vi pṛichhad iti mātaram | ke ugrāḥ ke ha śṛiṇvire |). His worshipper says of him: 1, 102, 8. Aśatrur Indra janushā sanād asi | "Thou, Indra, art of old by nature without an enemy." Compare i. 176, 1. S'atrum anti na vindasi | x. 133, 2, Aśatrur Indra jajnishe).

In i. 82, 5, 6, Indra's wife is alluded to. 5. Tena jāyām upa priyām mandāno yāhi | 6. Sam u patnyā amadaḥ | "Go exhilarated to thy dear wife." "Be exhilarated with thy wife."

In another place iii. 53, 4 ff., the poet describes the perplexity he fancies Indra must feel in choosing between the attractions of home and those his worshippers have to offer in the way of soma-libations. 4. Jāyā id astam maghavan sā id u nyonis tad it tvā yuktāḥ harayo vahantu | yadā kadā cha sunavāma somam Agnis tvā dūto dhanvāti achha | 5. Parā yāhi maghavann ā cha yāhi Indra bhrātar ubhayatra te artham | yatra rathasya bṛihato nidhānaṁ vimochanam vājino rāsabhasya | 6. Apāḥ somam astam Indra pra yāhi kalyāṇīr jāyā suraṇaṁ gṛihe te | yatra rathasya bṛihato nidhānaṁ vimochanaṁ vājino dakshiṇāvat |

(Prajāpatir Indram asṛijata anujāvaraṁ devānām | tam prāhiṇot "parehi | eteshaṁ devānām adhipatir edhi" iti | taṁ devāḥ abruvan "kas tvam asi vayaṁ vai tvat śreyāṁsaḥ smaḥ" iti | so 'bravīt "'kas tvam asi vayaṁ vai tvat śreyāṁsaḥ smaḥ' iti mā devāḥ abruvann" iti | atha vai idaṁ tarhi Prajāpatau haraḥ asīd (2) Yad asminn āditye | tad enam abravīd "etad me prayachha | atha śham eteshāṁ devānām adhipatir bhavishyāmi" iti |). Compare the Taittirīya Sanhitā vi. 6, 11, 2, where Indra is said to have become chief of the gods in virtue of a ceremony which Prajāpati communicated to him. See also the same work vii. 2, 10, 2. In another place vii. 3, 6, 6, he is said to have obtained from Prajāpati the panchadaśarātra vajra, whereby he was enabled to overcome the Asuras, of whom he had previously been afraid, and to attain prosperity.

4. "A wife, Indra, is one's home; she is a man's dwelling; therefore let thy horses be yoked, and carry thee thither. But whenever we pour forth a libation of soma, then may Agni hasten to call thee. 5. Depart, Indra; come hither, brother Indra; in both quarters thou hast inducements. Whenever thy great chariot halts, thy steed is unharnessed. 6. Depart, Indra, to thy home; thou hast drunk the soma; thou hast a lovely wife, and pleasure in thy house. Wherever thy great chariot halts, it is proper that thy steed should be unharnessed."

In a few passages (i. 22, 12; ii. 32, 8; v. 46, 8; x. 86, 11, 12) mention is made of a goddess Indrāṇī, who, from her name, must be the spouse of Indra. In the first three places she is invoked together with other goddesses, among whom we find Agnāyī and Varuṇānī, the wives of Agni and Varuṇa. In x. 86, 11, 12, a little more is told of Indrāṇī. Thus in verse 11, the speaker says: Indrāṇīm āsu nārishu subhagām aham aśravam | nahi asyāḥ aparaṁ chana jarasā marate patiḥ | "I have heard that among all these females Indrāṇī is the most fortunate; for her husband shall never at any future time die of old age."[153] The Aitareya Brahmaṇa, iii. 22, alludes to a wife of Indra, called Prāsahā (te devāḥ abruvann iyaṁ nai Indrasya priyā jāyā vāvātā Prāsahā nāma). See Professor Haug's Translation, p. 194.

The Śatap. Br. xiv. 2, 1, 8, says: "Indrāṇī is Indra's beloved wife, and she has a head-dress of all forms" (Indrāṇī ha vai Indrasya priyā patnī | tasyāḥ ushṇīsho viśvarūpaṭamaḥ).

[153] I am unable to say to whom the obscene verses (6 and 7) of this hymn refer. In Taitt. Br. ii. 4, 2, 7, she is thus portentously described: Indrāṇī devī subhagā supatnī ud aṁśena pati-vidyē jigāya | triṁśad asyāḥ jaghnaṁ yojanāni | upasthe Indraṁ sthaviram bibhartti | Professor Weber, Ind. Stud. iii. 479, quotes from the Kāṭhaka, 13, 5, a short passage, stating that Indra was enamoured of a Dānavī, called Vilistengā, and that he lived among the Asuras, taking the form of a female when among females, of a male among males; and that finding himself, as it were, seized by Nirṛiti, he resorted to a certain oblation as a remedy," etc. (Indro vai Vilistengāṁ Dānavīm akāmayata | so 'sureshv acharat strī eva strīshu bhavan pumān puṁsu | sa Nirṛiti-gṛihītaḥ iva amaṇyata | sa etam aindrā-nairṛitam apaśyat |) In the Atharva-veda, vii. 38, 2, a female says to the man she wishes to love her: Yena ā nichakre āsurī Indraṁ devebhyas pari | tena ā ni kurve tvām ahaṁ yathā te 'sāni supriyā | "In order that I may be beloved by thee, I overcome thee with this plant, wherewith the Asura female drew Indra down from among the gods."

(2) His attributes physical and mental.

A variety of vague and general epithets are lavished upon Indra. He is distinguished as youthful, ancient, strong, agile (nṛitu i. 130, 7; ii. 22, 4; vi. 29, 3; viii. 24, 9, 12; viii. 57, 7; viii. 81, 3), martial, heroic, bright, undecaying, all-conquering, lord of unbounded wisdom, and irresistible power and prowess, wielder of the thunderbolt, etc., etc. (i. 4, 8; i. 16, 9; i. 30, 6, 15; i. 61, 1; i. 81, 2, 7; i. 84, 2; i. 100, 12; i. 102, 6; i. 165, 6; ii. 21, 1–3; iii. 30, 3; iii. 32, 7; iii. 45, 2; iii. 46, 1; vi. 18, 4; vii. 20, 4; vii. 22, 5; viii. 81, 8; viii. 84, 7 ff.; x. 103, 1 ff). "He has vigour in his body, strength in his arms, a thunderbolt in his hand, and wisdom in his head" (ii. 16, 2. Jaṭhare somaṁ tanvi saho maho haste vajram bharati śīrshaṇi kratum | viii. 85, 3. Indrasya vajraḥ āyaso nimiślaḥ Indrasyo bāhvor bhūyishṭham ojāḥ | Indrasya śīrshan kratavo nireke): He assumes the most beautiful forms, and is invested with the ruddy lustre of the sun" (x. 112, 3. haritvatā varchasā sūryasya śreshṭhaiḥ rūpais tanvaṁ sparśayasva). The Vedic poets have also described to us a few of the features, as they conceived them, of his personal appearance. One of the epithets which are most frequently applied to him is suśipra, or śiprin, in the interpretation of which Sāyaṇa wavers between "the god with handsome cheeks or nose" (he suśipra śobhana-hano śobhana-nāsika vā). (i. 9, 3; i. 29, 2; i. 81, 4; i. 101, 10;[154] iii. 32, 3; iii. 36, 10; viii. 32, 4, 24; viii. 33, 7; viii. 55, 4; x. 105, 5),[155] and the "god with the beautiful helmet" (śobhana-śirastrāṇopeto yadvā śobhana-hanumān | iii. 30, 3; viii. 17, 4; viii. 81, 4; viii. 82, 12).[156]

In viii. 65, 10, he is said to have agitated his jaws when rising in strength after drinking the soma poured out from a ladle (uttishṭhann ojasā saha pitvī śipre avepayaḥ | somam Indra chamū sutam). He is also called hari-śipra, the ruddy-jawed (x. 96, 4, 9, 12); hari-keśa, the ruddy- or golden-haired (x. 96, 5, 8); hari-śmaśāru,[157] the ruddy- or golden-bearded, or moustached (x. 96, 8; x. 23, 4). His beard is violently agitated when he is exhilarated, or puts himself in motion (ii. 11, 17, pradodhuvat śmaśrushu prīṇānaḥ; x. 23, 1, pra śmaśru dodhuvat).[158] His whole appearance is ruddy or golden (hari-varpas, x. 96, 1 ff., where the changes are rung upon the word haṛi). He is sometimes also described as hiraṇyaya, golden (i. 7, 2; viii. 55, 3), and as having golden arms (hiraṇya-bāhu, vii. 34, 4); and sometimes as of an iron hue, or frame (āyasa) (i. 56, 3; x. 96, 4, 8). His arms are long and far-extended (vi. 19, 3, pṛithū karasnā bahulā gabhastī; viii. 32, 10, sṛipra-karasna; viii. 70, 1, mahāhastin).[159] But his forms are endless; he can assume any shape at will (iii. 38, 4, viśvarūpo amṛitāni tasthau; iii. 48, 4, yathāvaśaṁ tanvaṁ chakre esha; iii. 53, 8, rūpaṁ rūpaṁ maghavā bobhavīti māyāḥ kṛiṇvānas tanvam pari svām; vi. 47, 18, rūpaṁ rūpam pratirūpo babhūva tad asyą rūpam pratichakshaṇāya | Indro māyābhiḥ pururūpaḥ īyate).

[154] Compare i. 30, 11.

[155] A note on this word will be given in the Section on the Maruts.

[156] In R.V. vi. 46, 3, Indra is styled sahasra-mushka, which Sāyaṇa interprets mille membra genitalia habens; and adds the following gross explanation from the Kāushītakī Brāhmaṇa: yām kāṁ cha striyaṁ sambhavann Indro bhoga-lolupatayā svaśaśīre parvaṇi parvaṇi śephān sasarjja iti kaushītakibhir āmnātam | On viii. 19, 32, however, where the same epithet occurs, applied, as Sāyaṇa considers, to Agni, he explains it as meaning "having great brilliancy" (mushṇanti tamāṁsy apaharanti iti mushkāni tejāṁsi | bahutejaskam).

(3) His chariot and horses.

Carrying in his hand a golden whip (kaśā hiraṇyayī, viii. 33, 11), he is borne on a shining golden car, with a thousand supports (vi. 29, 2, ā rathe hiraṇyaye rathesthāḥ; viii. 1, 24 f., rathe hiraṇyaye; viii. 58, 16, ā rathaṁ tishṭha hiraṇyayaṁ sahasrapādam), which moves more swiftly than thought (x. 112, 2, yas te ratho manaso javīyān ā Indra tena somapeyāya yāhi), and is drawn by two[160] tawny (harī, ruddy, or [157] I suppose this is the same as hiri-śmaśru applied to Agni in R.V. x. 46, 5 (instead of which the Sāma-veda in the parallel passage reads hariśmaśru. In R.V. ii. 2, 5, Agni is called hiriśipra, which Sāyaṇa interprets to mean either haraṇa-śīla-hanu, "he whose jaws carry away," or dīptoshṇīsha, "with flaming head-dress."

[158] A beard is also assigned to Pūshan, who similarly shakes it (x. 26, 7).

[159] In a verse which does not occur in the Rig-veda, the Sāma-veda, ii. 1219, thus describes Indra's arms: Indrasya bāhū sthavirau yuvānāv anādhṛishyau supratīkāv asahyau | tau yunjīta prathamau yoge āgate yābhyāṁ jitam asurāṇāṁ saho mahat | "When the occasion arrives may Indra employ first those arms strong, youthful, unassailable, well-shaped, unconquerable, with which the great power of the Asuras was overcome."

[160] In ii. 18, 4-7 Indra is invited to come with two, four, six, eight, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, sixty, seventy, eighty, ninety, or a hundred horses (compare viii. 1, 9) to drink the soma-juice. In iv. 46, 3, a thousand horses are said to convey golden) steeds, snorting, neighing, and irresistible (i. 30, 16, śaśvad Indraḥ popruthadbhir jigāya nānadadbhiḥ śāśvasadbhir dhanāni; i. 81, 3, madachyutā harī),[161] with flowing golden manes, keśinā (i. 10, 3; i. 82, 6; viii. 17, 2; hiraṇya-keśyā, viii. 32, 29; viii. 82, 24), with hair like peacock's feathers (iii. 45, 1 (=A.V. vii. 117, 1), ā haribhir yāhi mayūra-romabhiḥ), and peacock's tails (mayūraśepyā, viii. 1, 25), which rapidly traverse vast distances (ii. 16, 3, yad āśubhiḥ patasi yojanā puru), and transport him as a hawk is borne by its wings (viii. 34, 9, ā tvā madachyutā harī śyenam paksheva vakshataḥ). His car and horses appear to have been formed by the Ṛibhus (i. 111, 1, Takshan rathaṁ suvṛitaṁ vidmanā 'pasas takshan harī Indravāhā vṛishaṇvasū | takshan pitṛibhyām ṛibhavo yuvad vayaḥ; v. 31, 4, anavas te ratham aśvāya takshan). The following are some of the other texts which refer to Indra's chariot and horses: i. 6, 2; i. 16, 1, 2 (where the horses are called sun-eyed, sūrachakshasaḥ); i. 55, 7; i. 84, 6; i. 101, 10; ii. 11, 6; viii. 13, 11, 27; x. 44, 2. He is also said to be borne by the horses of the Sun (x. 49, 7, ahaṁ sūryasya pari yāmi āśubhiḥ pra etaśebhir vahamānaḥ ojasā), or by those of Vāta, the wind (x. 22, 4–6, yujāno aśvā Vātasya dhunī devo devasya vajrivaḥ).[162] The same deity, Vāyu, the wind, is said to have Indra for his charioteer, or companion in his car (iv. 46, 2; iv. 48, 2, Indra-sārathi; vii. 91, 6, Indra-vāyū sarathaṁ yātam arvāk). The horses of Indra are declared to be yoked by the power of prayer (i. 82, 6, yunajmi te brahmaṇā keśinā harī; ii. 18, 3, harī nu kam rathe Indrasya yojam āyai sūktena vachasā navena; iii. 35, 4, brahmaṇā te brahmayujā yunajmi harī sakhāyā sadhamādā āśū; viii. 1, 24, brahmayujo harayaḥ; viii. 17, 2, brahmayujā harī; viii. 2, 27; viii. 45, 39, ā te etā vachoyujā harī gṛibhṇe; viii. 87, 9, yunjanti harī ishirasya gāthayā urau rathe uruyuge | Indravāhā vachoyujā), which is no doubt only another mode of saying that it is in con-

Indra and Vāyu (compare vi. 47, 18). In viii. 1, 24, Indra's horses are said to be a thousand and a hundred. From such a text as iii. 35, 7, where Indra is informed that food has been provided for his horses, as well as soma-juice to fill his own belly (verse 6), it would appear that the worshipper had a perfect assurance of the god's presence. In another place, however (x. 114, 9), the enquiry is made (among several others denoting difficulty and mystery), "Who has perceived the two horses of Indra?" (*harī Indrasya ni chikāya kaḥ svit | *).

[161] On the sense of the word madachyut see Müller's Trans. of the R.V. i. 118 f.

[162] Compare Psalms, 18, 10; 104, 3.

sequence of the importunity of his worshippers that he makes ready his chariot to come and receive their oblations and fulfil their desires.

(4) His thunderbolt and other weapons and instruments.

The thunderbolt of Indra is generally described as having been fashioned for him by the Indian Hephaistos, Tvashṭṛi, the artificer of the gods (i. 32, 2: Tvashṭā asmai vajraṁ svaryaṁ tataksha; i. 61, 6, asmai id u Tvashṭā takshad vajraṁ svapastamaṁ svaryaṁ raṉāya; i. 85, 9, Tvashṭā yad vajraṁ sukṛitaṁ hiraṉyayaṁ sahasrabhṛistiṁ svapāḥ avarttayat | v. 31, 4, Tvashṭā vajraṁ dyumantam takshat; vi. 17, 10, adha Tvashṭā te mahe ugra vajraṁ sahasrabhṛishṭiṁ vavṛitat śatāśrim | x. 48, 3, mahyaṁ Tvashṭā vajram atakshad āyasam); but according to other texts it appears to have been made and given to Indra by Kāvya Uśanas (i. 121, 12, yaṁ te Kāvyaḥ Uśanā mandinaṁ dād vṛittrāhaṉam pāryaṁ tataksha vajram; v. 34, 2, sahasrabhṛishṭim Uśanā vadhaṁ yamat).[163] Its natural mode of production is alluded to in viii. 89, 9, where it is said: "The thunderbolt lies in the (aerial) ocean, enveloped in water" (samudre antaḥ śayate udnā vajro abhīvṛitaḥ). This thunderbolt is sometimes styled golden, hiraṉyaya (i. 57, 2; i. 85, 9; viii. 57, 3; x. 23, 3), sometimes ruddy, harita (x. 96, 3); but it is also described as being of iron, āyasa (i. 52, 8; i. 80, 12; i. 81, 4; i. 121, 9; viii. 85, 3; x. 48, 3; x. 96, 3; x. 113, 5); sometimes it is represented as four-angled, chaturaśri (iv. 22, 2), sometimes as hundred-angled, śatāśri (vi. 17, 10), sometimes as hundred-jointed, śataparvan (i. 80, 6; viii. 6, 6; viii. 65, 2; viii. 78, 3),[164] and sometimes as having a thousand points, sahasrabhṛishṭi (i. 80, 12; i. 85, 9; v. 34, 2; vi. 17, 10). Indra is in one place (i. 55, 1) represented as sharpening his thunderbolt, as a bull his horns (śiśīte vajraṁ tejase na vaṁsagaḥ). In viii. 59, 2, the thunderbolt put into Indra's hand is compared to the sun placed in the sky (dive na sūryaḥ). In other passages this god is spoken of [163] The Ait. Br. iv. 1, says: devāḥ vai prathamena ahnā Indrāya vajraṁ samabharan | taṁ dvitīyena ahnā asinchan | tṛitīyena ahnā prāyachhan | taṁ chaturthe ahan prāharat | "The gods provided the thunderbolt for Indra by the first day's (ceremony). By the second day's they moistened it. By the third day's they gave it to him. On the fourth day he hurled it." See Prof. Haug's Trans. p. 255.

[164] Compare A.V. iv. 37, 8: bhīmāḥ Indrasya hetayaḥ śatabhṛishṭīr ayasmayīḥ; and the next verse, which is the same, with the substitution of hiraṉyayīḥ for ayasmayīḥ; and A.V. viii. 5, 15.

as armed with a bow and arrows (viii. 45, 4; viii. 66, 6, 11; x. 103, 2, 3). His arrows are described as golden (viii. 66, 11), as having a hundred points, and as being winged with a thousand feathers (viii. 66, 7). Indra is also declared to carry a hook (aṅkuśa). Thus in viii. 17, 10, it is said: dīrghas te astu aṅkuśo yena vasu prayachhasi | yajamānāya sunvate | "May the hook be long wherewith thou reachest wealth to the worshipper who offers oblations." And similarly in Atharva-veda, vi. 82, 3, yas te aṅkuśo vasudāno bṛihann Indra hiraṇyayaḥ | tenā janīyate jāyām mahyaṁ dhehi śachīpate | "With that great golden hook of thine which confers wealth, o lord of power (Indra), reach a wife to me who am longing for one."[165] Another text in which this word occurs is R.V. x. 134, 6 (= Sāmā-veda ii. 441): dīrgham hi aṅkuśaṁ yathā śaktim bibharshi mantumaḥ | pūrveṇa maghavan padā ajo vayāṁ yathā | "Thou, o wise (Indra), carriest a long hook like a spear, and (holdest fast therewith), as a goat (catches) a branch with its fore foot." The word is also found in x. 44, 9: "I carry to thee this well-made goad, wherewith, o magnificent god, thou mayest rend the Śaphāruj demons"[166] (imam bibharmi sukṛitaṁ te aṅkuśaṁ yena ārujāsi maghavan śaphārujaḥ).

Another instrument of warfare, a net, is assigned to Indra in the A.V. viii. 8, 5 ff.: antarikshaṁ jālam āsīj jāladaṇḍā diśo mahīḥ | tenābhidhāya dasyūnāṁ śakraḥ senām apātayat | 6. Bṛihad hi jālaṁ bṛihataḥ śakrasya vājinīvataḥ | tena śatrūn abhi sarvān nyubja yathā na muchyātai katamaśchana eshām | 7. Bṛihat te jālam bṛihataḥ Indra śūra sahasrārghasya śatavīryasya | tena sahasram ayutam ni arbudaṁ jaghāna śakro dasyūnām abhidhāya senayā | 8. ayaṁ loko jālam āsīt śakrasya mahato mahān | tenāham Indraṣjālena amūṁs tamasā 'bhi dadhāmi sarvān |

[165] In these passages I follow Roth's explanation of aṅkuśa, as given in his Lexicon, s.v. In his translation of this passage from the A.V. in Indische Studien v. 241, Professor Weber understands the word (aṅkuśa) of a goad with which cattle are driven. In A.V. vii. 115, 1, Ill fortune, Pāpī Lakshmī, is said to be drawn or driven away with an iron hook (ayasmayena aṅkena).

[166] I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht for pointing out the sense of this verse, as well as of the preceding. Śaphāruj seems to mean a demon, or an animal that destroys with its hoofs. The word occurs also in x. 87, 12, where it is an epithet of Yātudhāna, a demon, and appears to refer to some goblin which was conceived to tear with its hoofs.

"The air was a net, and the great quarters of the sky the poles of the net. With it Śakra (or the powerful god) enveloped the army of the Dasyus, and cast them down. 6. Great is the net of the great Śakra, bestower of food. With it so overwhelm all the foes that not one of them may escape. 7. Great is thy net, o heroic Indra, who art great, and a match for a thousand, and equalling the strength of a hundred foes. Śakra, with his host, slew a thousand, ten thousand, a hundred millions of the Dasyus, enveloping them in it. 8. This world was the great net of the great Śakra. With this net of Indra I envelope them all in darkness." [167]

(5) His love of soma-juice.

Invoked by his mortal worshippers, Indra obeys the summons, and speedily arrives in his chariot to receive their offerings. He finds food provided for his horses (iii. 35, 7, stīrṇaṁ te barhíḥ sutaḥ Indra somaḥ kṛitā dhānā attave te haríbhyaṁ), and large libations of soma-juice are poured out for himself to quaff. He becomes exhilarated by these libations, which are also frequently described as stimulating his warlike disposition and energies, and fitting him for his other functions, even for supporting the earth and sky (ii. 15, 2: avaṁśe Dyām astabhāyad bṛihantam . . . . sa dhārayat Pṛithivīm paprathat cha somasya tā made Indraś chakāra). The following are a few of the numerous passages which refer to this worship of Indra: i. 4, 8; i. 32, 3; i. 80, 1 f.; i. 84, 1 (where the poet hopes the draught may fill him with strength, as the sun fills the air with his rays: ā tvā pṛiṇaktu indriyaṁ rajaḥ sūryo na raśmibhiḥ), 4 (where it is said to be an "immortal stimulant"—amartyam madam); ii. 15, 1, 2; ii. 19, 1 f.; ii. 21, 1; iii. 36, 3; iii. 40, 1 ff.; iii. 42, 1 ff.; vi. 23, 1, 5, 6; vi. 27, 1 f.; vi. 29, 4; vii. 22, 1 f.; vii. 29, 1 f.; viii. 3, 1; viii. 81, 5, 6; x. 104, 1 ff.; etc., etc. The gods are described as all hastening eagerly to partake of this beverage, viii. 2, 18 (yanti pramādam atandrāḥ); viii. 58, 11: apād Indro apād Agnir viśve devāḥ amatsata | "Indra has drunk, Agni has drunk; all the gods have become exhilarated;" [168]

[167] Compare A.V. xix. 66, 1: ayojālāḥ asurāḥ māyino 'yasmayaiḥ pāśair ankino ye charanti | tāṁs te randhayāmi harasā Jātavedaḥ sahasrabhṛishṭiḥ sapatnān praminan yāhi vajraḥ.

[168] Ait. Br. vi. 11: mādyanti iva vai madhyandine devatāḥ sam eva tṛitīya-savane

but Indra is particularly addicted to the indulgence, i. 104, 9, somakāmaṁ tvā āhuḥ; i. 175, 5, śushmintamo hi te madaḥ; ii. 14, 1, kāmī hi vīraḥ sadam asya pītiṁ juhota vṛishṇe tad hi esha vashṭi; vii. 33, 2, dūrād Indram anayann ā sutena; viii. 2, 4, Indraḥ it somapāḥ ekaḥ Indraḥ sutapāḥ viśvāyuḥ | antar devān martyāṁś cha | "Indra is the only drinker of soma, a drinker of libations, of full vitality, among gods and men;" viii. 4, 12, idaṁ te annaṁ yujyaṁ samukshitaṁ tasya ihi pradrava piba | "This thy favourite nutriment has been poured out; run and drink of it;" viii. 6, 40, vṛittrahā somapātamaḥ; viii. 50, 2, somakāmaṁ hi te manaḥ | Indeed, it would appear to be to him an absolute necessary of life, as his mother gave it to him to drink on the very day of his birth (iii. 32, 9, sadyo yaj jāto apibo ha somam | 10. tvaṁ sadyo apibo jātaḥ Indra madāya somam parame vyoman; iii. 48, 2, 3, already quoted, p. 77; vi. 40, 2, asya piba yasya jajñānaḥ Indro madāya kratve apibaḥ; vii. 98, 3, jajñānaḥ somaṁ sahase papātha pra te mātā mahimānam uvācha). He is said to have drunk at one draught thirty bowls of soma (viii. 66, 4, ekayā prātidhā 'pibat sākaṁ sarāṁsi triṁśatam | Indraḥ somasya kāṇukā. See Nirukta, v. 11; compare R.V. vi. 17, 11; and viii. 7, 10). His worshippers invite him in the most naïf manner to drink boldly (vi. 47, 6, dhṛishat piba kalaśe somam Indra); to drink like a thirsty stag (viii. 4, 10, ṛiśyo na tṛishyann avapānam āgahi piba somān vaśān anu), or a bull roaming in a waterless waste (v. 36, 1, dhanvacharo na vaṁsagas tṛishāṇas chakamānaḥ pibatu dugdham aṁśum | compare viii. 33, 2, kadā sutaṁ tṛishāṇaḥ okaḥ āgamaḥ Indra svabdīva vaṁsagaḥ, and fill his belly, or his two bellies, which are compared to two lakes, by copious potations; and he speaks in similar language of having accepted the invitation[169] (i. 8, 7; i. 104, 9; ii. 11, 11 (sutāsaḥ pṛiṇantas te kukshī vardhayantu); ii. 14, 10; ii. 16, 2; iii. 35, 6 (dadhishva imaṁ jaṭhare indum Indra); iii. 36, 7, 8 (hradāḥ iva kukshayaḥ somadhānāḥ); iii. 40, 5; iii. 47, 1 (ā sinchasva jaṭhare madhvaḥ ūrmim); iii. 51, 12 (pra te aśnotu kukshyoḥ); viii. 12, 23 (saro na prāsi udaram); viii. 2, 1 (supūrṇam udaram); viii. 17, 5–8 (ā te sinchāmi kukshyoḥ); viii. 67, 7; viii. 81, 22–24;

mādayante, which Professor Haug translates: "The gods get drunk, as it were, at the mid-day libation, and are then consequently at the third libation in a state of complete drunkenness."

[169] The soma-juice was also drunk by the worshippers themselves, and its effects on

x. 28, 2 ; x. 43, 7 ; x. 104, 2 ; A.V. ii. 5, 1 ff. ; vi. 2, 1 ff. The soma-draughts are said to resort to him as birds to a leafy tree ; and to flow to him as waters to the ocean, or rivulets to a lake; and his worshippers are then said to magnify him as grain is developed by showers of rain, x. 43, 4 (Vayo na vṛikshaṁ supalāśam āsadan somāsaḥ Indram mandinaś chamūshadaḥ | 7. Āpo na sindhum abhi yat samakṣharan somāsaḥ Indram kulyāḥ iva hradam | vardhanti viprāḥ maho asya sadane yavaṁ na vṛishṭir divyena dānunā). He is also spoken of as eating the flesh of bulls, or buffaloes, at the same time that he drinks the draughts of soma (x. 28, 3, adriṇā te mandinaḥ Indra tūyān sunvanti somān pibasi tvam eshām | pachanti te vṛishabhān atsi teshām). Three hundred are mentioned in v. 29, 7 f., one hundred in viii. 66, 10, and one in x. 27, 2. Indra is besought to taste the offering presented, and to take delight in the hymns addressed to him, as an ardent lover desires his mistress (iii. 52, 3 = iv. 32, 16 : puroḷāśaṁ cha no ghaso joshayāse giraś cha | vadhūyur iva yoshaṇām).

The sensations of the god after drinking the soma-juice are thus described in Rig-veda x. 119 : 1. iti vai iti me mano gām aśvaṁ sanuyām iti | kuvit soṇasya apām iti | 2. pra vātāḥ iva dodhataḥ un mā pītāḥ ayaṁsata | kuvid ity ādi | 3. un mā pītāḥ ayaṁsata ratham aśvāḥ ivāśavaḥ | kuvit—| 4. upa mā matir asthita vāśrā putram iva priyam | kuvit—|

some of them are occasionally described. Thus in vi. 47, 3, it is said : "This (soma), when drunk, impels my voice; it awakes the ardent thought" ayam me pītaḥ udiyartti vācham ayam manīshām uśatīm ajīgaḥ). In viii. 48, 3, its elevating effect is still more distinctly told in these words, apāma somam amṛitāḥ abhūma aganma jyotir avidāma devān | kiṁ nūnam asmān kṛiṇavad arātiḥ kim u dhūrttir amṛita marttyasya, which may be rendered as follows :—

We've quaffed the soma bright,
And are immortal grown ;
We've entered into light,
And all the gods have known.
What mortal now can harm,
Or foeman vex us more ?
Through thee, beyond alarm,
Immortal god, we soar.

Compare the curious parallel to this (already noticed in the 3rd Vol. of this work, p. 265) in the satirical drama of Euripides, the Cyclops, 578, ff., where Polyphemus exclaims in his drunken exaltation :

Ὁ δ' οὐρανός μοι συμμεμιγμένος δοκεῖ
Τῇ γῇ φέρεσθαι, τοῦ Διός τε τὸν θρόνον
Λεύσσω τὸ πᾶν τε δαιμόνων ἁγνὸν σέβας.

5. ahaṁ tashṭeva vandhuram pary achāmi hṛidā matim | kuvit—| 6. na hi me akshipach chana achhāntsuḥ pancha kṛishṭayaḥ | kuvit—| 7. na hi me rodasī ubhe anyam pakshaṁ chana prati | kuvit—| 8. abhi dyām mahinā 'bhavam abhīmām pṛithivīm mahīm | kuvit — | 9. hantāham pṛithivīm imāṁ ni dadhānīha veha vā | kuvit — | 10. osham it pṛithivīm ahaṁ janghanānīha vēha vā | kuvit —| 11. divi me anyaḥ paksho adho anyam achīkṛisham | kuvit —| 12. aham asmi mahāmaho abhinabhyam udīshitaḥ | kuvit — | 13. gṛiho yāmi arankṛito devebhyo havyavāhanaḥ | kuvit somasya apām iti | [170]

"I have verily resolved to bestow cows and horses: I have quaffed the soma. 2. The draughts which I have drunk impel me like violent blasts: I have quaffed the soma. 3. The draughts which I have drunk impel me as fleet horses a chariot: I have quaffed the soma. 4. The hymn (of my worshipper) has hastened to me, as a cow to her beloved calf: I have quaffed the soma. 5. I turn the hymn round about in my heart, as a carpenter a beam: I have quaffed the soma. 6. The five tribes of men appear to me not even as a mote: I have quaffed the soma. 7. The two worlds do not equal even one half of me: I have quaffed the soma. 8. I surpass in greatness the heaven and this vast earth: I have quaffed the soma. 9. Come, let me plant this earth either here or there: I have quaffed the soma. 10. Let me smite the earth rapidly hither or thither: I have quaffed the soma. 11. One half of me is in the sky, and I have drawn the other down: I have quaffed the soma. 12. I am majestic, elevated to the heavens: I have quaffed the soma. 13. I go prepared as a minister, a bearer of oblations to the gods: I have quaffed the soma."

The hymns, prayers, and worship addressed to Indra are described as stimulating his energies and increasing his vigour (i. 52, 7: brahmāṇi Indra tava yāni vardhanā); i. 54, 8; i. 80, 1; ii. 11, 2 (ukthair vavṛidhānaḥ); ii. 12, 14 (yasya brahma vardhanaṁ yasya somaḥ); iii. 32, 12 f. (yajno hi te Indra vardhano bhūt; yaḥ stomebhir vavṛidhe pūrvyebhir yo madhyebhir uta nūtanebhiḥ); iii. 34, 1 (brahmajūtas tanvā vavṛidhānaḥ); v. 31, 10 (Indra brahmāṇi tavishīm avardhan); vi. 21, 2; vi. 44, 13; viii. 6, 1, 21, 31, 35; viii. 13, 16 (Indraṁ var-

[170] I learn from a note to Professor Roth's Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 101, that, according to Sāyaṇa, there was a legend that Indra, in the form of a quail, drank soma, was seen by the ṛishi, and sang his own praise in this hymn.

dhantu no giraḥ Indraṁ sutāsaḥ indavaḥ) ; viii. 14, 5, 11 (yajnaḥ Indraṁ avardhayat) ; viii. 82, 27 ; viii. 87, 8 (vār na tvā yavyābhir vardhanti śūra brahmāṇi) ; x. 50, 4 (bhuvas tvam Indra brahmaṇā mahān) ; x. 120, 5 (chodayāmi te āyudhā vachobhiḥ saṁ te śiśāmi brahmāṇā vayāṁsi), and the worshippers (as well as the gods) are said to place the thunderbolt in his hands and to assist its efficacy (i. 63, 2, ā te vajraṁ jaritā bāhvor dhāt) ; ii. 20, 8 (tasmai tavasyam anu dāyi satrā Indrāya devebhir arṇasātau | prati yad asya vajram bāhvor dhur hatvī dasyūn puraḥ āyasīr ni tārīt) ; iii. 32, 12 (yajnas te vajram Ahihatye āvat). The other deities, too, are described as infusing divine strength into Indra[171] (i. 80, 15, tasmin nṛimṇam uta kratuṁ devāḥ ojāṁsi sam dadhuḥ) ; vi. 20, 2 (divo na tubhyam anu Indra satrā asuryaṁ devebhir dhāyi viśvam) ;[172] x. 48, 3 (mayi devāso avṛijann api kratum) ; x. 113, 8 ; x. 120, 3, compare x. 56, 4 ; viii. 15, 8 (tava Dyaur Indra pauṁsyam Pṛithivī vardhati śravaḥ), and as placing him in the van (i. 55, 3, viśvasmai ugraḥ karmaṇe purohitaḥ) ; i. 131, 1 (Indraṁ viśve sajoshaso devāso dadhire puraḥ) ; vi. 17, 8 (adha tvā viśve puraḥ Indra devāḥ ekaṁ tavasaṁ dadhire bharāya) ; viii. 12, 22 (Indraṁ Vṛittrāya hantave devāso dadhire puraḥ | see also v. 25). Compare Taitt. Br. ii. 8, 3, 8 ; Taitt. S. ii. 2, 11, 6, and A.V. vii. 84, 2 : apānudo janam amitrāyantam uruṁ devebhyo akṛiṇor u lokam. He is impelled and fortified by the Maruts ; iii. 32, 4 (yebhir Vṛittrasya ishito viveda amarmaṇo manyamānasya marma) ; iii. 35, 9 (yān ābhajo marutaḥ Indra some ye tvām avardhann abhavan gaṇas te) ; iii. 47, 3 (yān ābhajo maruto ye tvā 'nv ahan Vṛittram adadhus tubhyam ojaḥ | see also v. 4) ; vi. 17, 11 ; viii. 7, 24 ; x. 73, 1, 2 ; x. 113, 3 (viśve te atra marutaḥ saha tmanā avardhann ugra mahimānam indriyam).[173]

[171] Indra on his side again is said to give divine power to the other gods (vi. 36, 1 : yad deveshu dhārayathāḥ asuryam).

[172] Sāyaṇa understands devebhiḥ of the worshippers : stotraiḥ stūyamānā devatā balavatī bhavati, "a deity when lauded by hymns becomes strong."

[173] Indra, however, in a dispute with the Maruts (to which I shall again advert in the section on those deities), claims to have slain Vṛittra by his own might, i. 165, 8 : vadhīm vṛittram marutaḥ indriyeṇa svena bhāmena tavisho babhūvān ; compare vii. 21, 6, where the same thing is said of him by his worshipper : svena hi Vṛittraṁ śavasā jaghantha na śatrur antam vividad yudhā te ; and x. 138, 6 : etā tyā te śrutyāni kevalā yad ekaḥ ekam akṛiṇor ayajnam. Compare viii. 79, 5 ; viii. 86, 9 ; viii. 87, 3. In v. 30, 5, all the gods are said to be afraid of him (atas chid Indrād abhayanta devāḥ). In another place, too (viii. 7, 31), the Maruts are asked "what

With Bṛihaspati as his ally he overthrew all the enemies of the gods who assailed him, viii. 85, 15 (viśo adevīr abhi ācharantīr Bṛihaspatinā yujā Indraḥ sasāhe).

Thus exhilarated and encouraged, ii. 15, 1 (*trikadrukeshu apibat they were seeking when they deserted Indra, and who could then trust in their friendship" kad ha nūnam kadhapriyo yad Indram ajahātana | ko vaḥ sakhitve ohate | Prof. Müller, Trans. R.V. i. p. 68, takes kadhapriyaḥ as two words, and renders the verse thus: "What then now? where is there a friend, now that you have forsaken Indra? Who cares for your friendship?") Compare iv. 18, 11, quoted above (p. 78 f.), where Indra's mother complains that the gods were abandoning her son, and where he calls upon Vishṇu to display his valour. But we are elsewhere, viii. 85, 7, told, on the contrary, that all the other gods who had been Indra's allies, terrified by the blast of Vṛittra's breath, deserted Indra and fled, while the Maruts, it must be supposed, stood firm, as Indra is advised to make friends with them, and then he should conquer all hostile armies (vṛittrasya tvā śvaśathād īshamāṇāḥ viśve devāḥ ajahur ye sakhāyaḥ | Marudbhir Indra sakhyaṁ te astu atha imāḥ viśvāḥ pṛitanāḥ jayāsi). The commentator, however (perhaps because he found it necessary, for dogmatical reasons, to reconcile these conflicting statements) interprets viii. 7, 31 differently, and makes it mean, "When did you desert Indra? i.e. never," and quotes the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa iii. 20, which says that the Maruts did not abandon him. I shall cite this passage at greater length than Sāyaṇa gives it, as it forms a comment on the other text just adduced, viii. 85, 7: Indro vai Vṛitraṁ hanishyan sarvāḥ devatāḥ abravīd anu mā upatishṭhadhvam upa mā āhvayadhvam" iti | "tathā" iti | taṁ hanishyantaḥ ādravan | so 'ved "māṁ vai hanishyantaḥ ādravanti | hanta imān bhīshayai" iti | tān abhi prāśvasīt | tasya śvasathād īshamāṇāḥ viśve devāḥ adravan | maruto ha enaṁ na ajahuḥ "prahara bhagavo jahi vīrayasva" ityeva enam etāṁ vāchaṁ vadantaḥ upātishṭhanta | tad etad ṛishiḥ paśyann abhyanūvācha | . . . . iti | so 'ved "ime vai kila me sachivāḥ | ime mā kāmayanta | hanta imān asminn ukthe ābhajai" iti | "Indra, when about to slay Vṛittra, said to all the gods: 'Follow close after me and support me.' They said, 'We will.' They ran forward to slay Vṛittra. Vṛittra considered: 'They are running forward to kill me: come, let me frighten them.' He accordingly blew a blast upon them, when all the gods ran away precipitately from the blast of his breath. But the Maruts did not forsake Indra. They stood by him, crying, 'Smite, o god, slay, play the hero.' Seeing this, the ṛishi uttered the words of R.V. viii. 85, 7. Indra understood: 'These Maruts are my allies. They love me. Come, I shall give them a share in this uktha.'" In R.V. i. 32, 14, Indra himself is said to have become frightened as if at the approach of an avenger(?), after he had slain Ahi, and to have crossed ninety-nine rivers, and the aerial spaces, when flying like a terrified falcon (aher yātāraṁ kam apaśyaḥ Indra hṛidi yat te jaghrusho bhīr agachhat | nava cha yad navatiṁ cha sravantīḥ śyeno na bhīto ataro rajāṁsi). Compare Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 547. The Aśvins and Sarasvatī are also said to have assisted Indra (R.V. x. 131, 4, 5 = Vāj. Sanh. x. 33, 34). "You two, Aśvins, lords of splendour, drinking together the delightful draught (of soma), protected Indra in his achievments against the Asura Namuchi. 5. As parents a son, so ye two, Aśvins, by your wisdom and your energy, delivered thee, O Indra. When thou, O magnificent (Indra), didst drink the delightful draught (of soma), Sarasvatī waited upon thee with her powers." (3. Yuvaṁ surāmam Aśvinā Namuchāv āsure sachā | vipipānā sutasya asya made Ahim Indro jaghāna); ii. 19, 2 (asya mandāno madhvo vajrahastaḥ ahim Indro arṇovṛitaṁ vi vṛiśchat); vi. 47, 1, 2; x. 112, 1 (Indra piba pratikāmaṁ sutasya . . . . | harshasva hantave śūra śatrūn),— Indra hurries off, escorted by troops of Maruts, and sometimes attended by his faithful comrade Vishṇu (i. 22, 19, Indrasya yujyo sakhā);

śubhaspatī Indraṁ karmasu āvatam | 5. putram iva pitarā Aśvinā ubhā Indra āvathuḥ kāvyair daṁsanābhiḥ | yat surāmaṁ vi apibaḥ śachībhiḥ sarasvatī tvā maghavann abhishṇak.) A story is told by the commentator on the Vāj. Sanh. x. 33, to explain these lines. Namuchi, it seems, was a friend of Indra; and taking advantage of his friend's confidence, he drank up Indra's strength along with a draught of wine and soma. Indra then told the Aśvins and Sarasvatī that Namuchi had drunk up his strength. The Aśvins and Sarasvatī, in consequence, gave Indra a thunderbolt in the form of foam, with which he smote off the head of Namuchi. The Aśvins then drank the soma, mixed with blood and wine, from the belly of Namuchi, and transferred it pure to Indra; and by transferring it they delivered Indra. The story is taken from the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa xii. 7, 3, 1 ff. (p. 934 Weber's ed.) and is the original version of those adduced by me elsewhere (Vol. IV. 222 and 420). As given in the Brāhmaṇa, it runs thus: "The Asura Namuchi carried off Indra's strength (indriya), the essence of food, and the draught of soma, together with wine. He (Indra) hastened to the Aśvins and Sarasvatī, and said, 'I have sworn to Namuchi, I will neither slay thee by day or by night; neither with club, nor with bow; neither with the palm of my hand (pṛithena), nor with fist; neither with dry, nor with moist; and he has carried off that (strength, etc.) of mine; will ye recover it for me?' They answered: Let us have a share in it, and we will recover it.' Indra replied: 'It shall be common to us all; recover it therefore.' Then the Aśvins and Sarasvatī anointed the thunderbolt with the foam of the waters, saying, 'It is neither dry nor moist." With that Indra struck off the head of Namuchi, when night was passing into dawn, and the sun had not yet risen, when (as he said) 'it was neither day nor night.' . . . . When his head had been cut off, the soma remained mixed with blood; and they loathed it. But having perceived this draught of the two somas, according to the text, 'King Soma, when poured out, is nectar,' they with this made the other mixed fluid palatable, and swallowed it" (Indrasya indriyam annasya rasaṁ somasya bhakshaṁ surayā āsuro Namuchir aharat, so 'śvinau cha sarasvatīṁ cha upādhāvat "śepāno śmi Namuchaye na tvā divā na naktaṁ hanāni na daṇḍena na dhanvanā na pṛithena na mushṭinā na śushkeṇa na ārdreṇa atha me idam ahārshīt | idam me ājihīrshatha" iti | te 'bruvann "astu no 'trāpy atha āharāma" iti | "saha na etad atha āharata" ity abravīd iti | tāv aśvinau cha Sarasvatī cha apām phenaṁ vajram asinchan "na śushko na ārdraḥ" iti | tena Indro Namucher āsurasya vyushṭāyāṁ rātrau anudite āditye "na divā na naktam" iti śiraḥ udavāsayat | . . . tasya śīrshamś chhinne lohita-miśraḥ somo 'tishṭhat | tasmād abībhatsanta | te etad andhasor vipānam apaśyan "somo rājā 'mṛitaṁ sutaḥ" iti tena enam svadayitvā ātmann adadhata | See also S'atap. Br. xii. 7, 1, 10, and xii. 8, 3, 1, quoted by the Commentator on Vaj. S. 19, 12, where it is said that "the gods instituted a remedial sacrifice; the Aśvins were the physicians, and so also was Sarasvatī with speech: they imparted strength to Indra" devāḥ yajnam atanvata bheshajam bhishajā 'śvinā | vāchā sarasvatī bhishag Indrāya indriyāṇi dadhataḥ). See also verses 15, 18, 34, 80–83, 88–90, 93, 95; and section 20, 56–69, 73–76, 90.

i. 85, 7[174] (Vishṇur yad ha āvad vṛishaṇam madachyutam; iv. 18, 11 (quoted above p. 78 f.); vi. 20, 2 (ahiṁ yad vṛittram apo vavṛivāṁsaṁ hanṛ ṛijīshin Vishṇunā sachānaḥ); viii. 89, 12 (Sakhe Vishṇo vitarāṁ vikramasva Dyaur dehi lokaṁ vajrāya vishkabhe | hanāva vṛittram ityādi).[175] vii. 99, 4, 5 (Indrā-vishṇū dṛiṁhitāḥ S'ambarasya nava puro navatiṁ cha śnathishṭaṃ), to encounter the hostile powers in the atmosphere who malevolently shut up the watery treasures in the clouds. These demons of drought, called by a variety of names, as Vṛittra,[176] Ahi, [174] Benfey, however, refers this passage, i. 85, 7, not to Indra, but to the soma.

[175] Compare i. 156, 5; vi. 17, 11; viii. 12, 27; viii. 66, 10; x. 113, 2, in which passages (as well as in separate hymns, i. 155; vi. 69), Indra and Vishṇu are connected. The S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa has the following story about Indra and Vishṇu, v. 5, 5, 1 ff:—"Formerly Vṛittra had within him all the Ṛik, Yajush and Sāman verses. Indra was anxious to discharge a thunderbolt at him (2), and said to Vishṇu: 'I will shoot a thunderbolt at Vṛittra; follow after me.' 'So be it,' said Vishṇu, 'I will follow thee; smite him.' Indra then aimed a thunderbolt at Vṛittra, who was alarmed at it, and said (3), 'I have this (source of) strength; let me give it up to thee; but do not smite me.' So he gave him the Yajush verses. Indra then aimed a second thunderbolt at him (4), when he said, 'I have this (source of) strength; let me give it up to thee; but do not smite me.' So he gave the Ṛik verses. Indra then aimed a third thunderbolt at him (5), when he said, I have this (source of) strength; let me give it up to thee; but do not smite me.' So he gave him the Sāman verses. . . . . (7) Indra lifted up the thunderbolt; Vishṇu followed him." (Vṛittre ha vai idam agre sarvam āsa yad ṛicho yad yajūṁshi yat sāmāni | tasmai Indro vajram prājihīrshat | 2. sa ha Vishṇum uvācha "Vṛittrāya vai vajram praharishyāmi | anu mā tishṭhasva" iti | "tathā" iti ha Vishṇur uvācha "anu tva sthāsye prahara" iti | tasmai Indro vajram udyayāma | sa udyatād vajrād Vṛittro bibhayāṅchakāra | 3. sa ha uvācha "asti vai idam vīryam | tad nu te prayachhāni | mā tu me prahārshīr" iti | tasmai yajūṁshi prāyachhat | tasmai dvitīyam udyayāma | 4. sa ha uvācha "asti vai idaṁ vīryaṁ tad nu te prayachhāni | mā tu me prahārshīr" iti | tasmai ṛichaḥ prāyachhat | tasmai tṛitīyam udyayāma | 5. [sa ha uvācha] "asti vai idaṁ vīryam | tad nu te prayachhāni | mā tu me prahārshīr" iti | tasmai sāmāni prāyachhat | 7. . . Indro hi vajram udayachhad Vishnur anvatishṭhata.) There is a similar story in the Taitt. Sanh. vi. 5, 1, 1. Agni is in several places (i. 109, 5, 7, 8; iii. 12, 4, 6; x. 65, 2) associated with Indra as a thunderer, a destroyer of Vṛittra, and an overthrower of cities. Varuṇa, too, is in one place (iv. 41, 4) joined with Indra as a thunderer.

[176] Vṛittra's mother Dānu also was, along with her son, slain by Indra, and when slaughtered lay over him, like a cow over her calf (i. 32, 9, nīchāvayāḥ abhavad Vṛittraputrā Indro asyāḥ ava vadhar jabhāra | uttarā sūr adharaḥ puttraḥ āsīd Dānuḥ śaye sahavatsā na dhenuḥ). Seven Dānus are mentioned in R.V. x. 120, 6 (=Nirukta, xi. 21) ā darshate śavasā sapta Dānūn | "He cleaves by his force the seven Dānus." Roth, in his illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 150, remarks on this passage: "Seven is an indefinite number applied to the demons of the air and clouds, who appear under the manifold names of Namuchi, Kuyava, S'ushṇa, S'ambara, Varchin, etc., the Dānus or Dānavas, to whom in i. 32, 9, a mother called Dānu is assigned." The S'ushṇa, Namuchi, Pipru, S'ambara, Uraṇa, etc., etc. (i. 121, 9, 10; ii. 14, 4 ff.; viii. 32, 2, 3), armed, on their side also, with every variety of celestial artillery (i. 32, 13, na asmai vidyud na tanyatuḥ sishedha na yām miham akirad hrādunīṁ cha),[177] attempt, but in vain, to resist the onset of the gods.[178] Heaven and earth quake with affright at the crash of Indra's thunder, i. 80, 11 (ime chit tava manyave vepete bhiyasā mahī | yad Indra vajrinn ojasā Vṛittram marutvān avadhīḥ | 14. abhishṭane te adrivo yat sthāḥ jagāt cha rejate); ii. 11, 9 (arejetāṁ rodasī bhiyāne kanikradato vṛishṇo asya vajrāt | 10. aroravīd vṛishṇo asya vajraḥ); vi. 17, 9 (adha dyauś chit te apa sā nu vajrād dvitā 'namad bhiyasā svasya manyoḥ), and even Tvashṭṛi himself, who forged the bolts, trembles at the manifestation of their wielder's anger, i. 80, 14 (Tvashṭā chit tava manyave Indra vevijyate bhiyā). The enemies of Indra are speedily pierced and shattered by the discharge of his iron shafts, i. 32, 5 (ahan Vṛittraṁ vṛittrataraṁ vyaṁśam Indro vajreṇa mahatā vadhena | skandhāṁsīva kuliśena vivṛikṇā ahiḥ śayate upapṛik pṛithivyāḥ), i. 57, 6; i. 61, 10; ii. 19, 3; x. 89, 7 (jaghāna Vṛittraṁ svadhitir vaneva), and even by their very sound, vi. 27, 4 (etat tyat te indriyam acheti yenāvadhīr varaśīrshasya śeshaḥ | vajrasya yat te nihatasya śushmāt svanāt chid Indra paramo dadāra); viii. 6, 13 (yad asya manyur adhvanīd vi vṛittram parvaśo rujan | apaḥ samudram airayat). The waters, released from their imprisonment, descend in torrents to the earth, fill all the rivers, and roll along to the ocean, i. 32, 2 (vāśrāḥ iva dhenavaḥ syandamānāḥ anjaḥ samudram uva jagmur āpaḥ | 12. avāsṛijaḥ sarttave sapta sindhūn); i. 57, 6; i. 61, 10; i. 103, 2 (vajreṇa hatvā nir apaḥ sasarja); ii. 11, 2; ii. 12, 12; ii. 14, 2; ii. 15, 3 (vajreṇa khāni atṛiṇad nadīnām); ii. 19, 3 (Indro arṇo apām prairayad Ahihā 'chha samudram); iii. 32, 6; iv. 17, 1; v. 32, 1 (adardar utsam asṛijo vi khānī tvam arṇavān badbadhānān aramṇāḥ | mahāntam Indra parvataṁ vi yad vaḥ sṛijo vi dhārāḥ ava Dānavaṁ han); vi. 30, 4; viii. 65, 3;

S'atap. Br. i. 6, 4, 18, says that Indra is the sun and Vṛittra the moon (tad vai esha eva Indro yaḥ esha tapati | atha esha eva vṛittro yat chandramāḥ).

[177] Sāyaṇa understands this line of the lightnings, etc., fashioned by Vṛittra's magical power to destroy Indra (Indraṁ nisheddhuṁ Vṛittro yān vidyud-ādīn māyayā nirmitavān te sarve 'py enam nisheddhum aśaktāḥ).

[178] Vṛittra is said, in ii. 30, 3 (according to Sāyaṇa's explanation of the line), to have rushed upon Indra, clothed in a cloud, but to have been overcome (mihaṁ vasānaḥ upa hi īm adudrot).

x. 133, 2. The gloom which had overspread the sky is dispersed, and the sun is restored to his position in the heavens (i. 32, 4; i. 51, 4, Vṛittraṁ yad Indra śavasā avadhīr Ahiṁ ād it sūryaṁ divi ārohayo dṛiśe);[179] i. 52, 8 (āyachhathāḥ bāhvor vajram āyasam adhārayo divi ā sūryaṁ dṛiśe); ii. 19, 3. Constant allusions to these elemental conflicts occur in nearly every part of the Rig-veda (i. 4, 8; i. 32, 1 ff.; i. 52, 2 ff.; i. 54, 4 ff.; i. 80, 1 ff.; i. 103, 2 ff.; ii. 11, 5 ff.; v. 32, 1 ff.; x. 89, 7; x. 113, 6), and the descriptions are sometimes embellished with a certain variety of imagery. The clouds are represented as mountains, or as cities or fortresses of the Asuras, ii. 14, 6 (yaḥ śataṁ S'ambarasya puro bibheda aśmanā iva pūrvīḥ); viii. 17, 14 (bhettā purāṁ śaśvatīnām); viii. 87, 6 (tvaṁ hi śaśvatīnām Indra darttā purām asi), which are variously characterized as the autumnal (puraḥ śāradīḥ, i. 131, 4; vi. 20, 10), the moving (puraṁ charishṇvam, viii. 1, 28), and the iron (āyasīḥ, ii. 20, 8) or stone-built (iv. 30, 20, śatam aśmanmayīnām purām Indro vyāsyat | Divodāsāya dāśushe)[180] cities of the Asuras (or atmospheric demons), which Indra overthrows (i. 51, 5; i. 63, 7; i. 103, 3; i. 130, 7; i. 174, 8; ii. 19, 6; ii. 20, 7; iii. 12, 6; iv. 26, 3; iv. 30, 13; viii. 82, 2; x. 89, 7). He casts down his enemies when he discovers them on the aerial mountains (i. 32, 2, ahann Ahiṁ parvate śiśriyāṇam); i. 130, 7 (Atithigvāya S'ambaraṁ girer ugro avātirat); ii. 12, 11 (Yaḥ S'ambaram parvateshu kshiyantaṁ chatvāriṁśyāṁ śaradi anvavindat); iv. 30, 14 (uta dāsam kaulitaram bṛihataḥ parvatād adhi | avāhann Indraḥ S'ambaram); vi. 26, 5; or hurls them back when they attempt to scale the heavens (ii. 12, 12 yo Rauhiṇam asphurad vajra-bāhur dyām ārohantam); viii. 14, 14 (māyābhir utsisṛipsataḥ Indro dyām āruruksshataḥ | ava dasyūn adhūnuthāḥ). One of them he crushes under his foot, 1, 51, 6 (Arbudaṁ ni kramīḥ padā), or pierces with ice, viii. 32, 26 (himena avidhyad Arbudam). He strikes off the head of Namuchi with the foam of the waters,[181]

[179] Sāyaṇa understands the last words to mean that Indra freed the sun which had been hidden by Vṛittra (Vṛittreṇa āvṛitaṁ sūryaṁ tasmād vṛittrād amūmuchaḥ). In i. 32, 4, and ii. 19, 3, Indra is said to have generated the sun; which may refer to an actual creation, and not to a mere bringing into view. In x. 89, 2, Indra seems to be identified with the sun (sa sūryaḥ), and to have destroyed the black darkness by his light (kṛishṇā tamāṁ si tvishyā jaghāna).

[180] Possibly these may be ordinary terrestrial cities; and the same may be the case in regard to the cities alluded to in some of the texts next to be cited.

[181] See above, in a preceding note.

viii. 14, 13 (apām phenena namucheḥ śiraḥ Indra udavartayaḥ). One of his opponents, Uraṇa, is described as a monster, with ninety-nine arms, ii. 14, 4 (yaḥ Uraṇaṁ jaghāna nava chakhvāṁsaṁ navatiṁ cha bāhūn); and another as having three heads and six eyes, x. 99, 6 (sa id dāsam tuviravam patir dan shaḷakshaṁ triśīrshāṇam damanyat).

The growth of much of the imagery thus described is perfectly natural, and easily intelligible, particularly to persons who have lived in India, and witnessed the phenomena of the seasons in that country. At the close of the long hot weather, when every one is longing for rain to moisten the earth and cool the atmosphere, it is often extremely tantalizing to see the clouds collecting and floating across the sky day after day without discharging their contents.[182] And in the early ages when the Vedic hymns were composed, it was an idea quite in consonance with the other general conceptions which their authors entertained, to imagine that some malignant influence was at work in the atmosphere to prevent the fall of the showers, of which their parched fields stood so much in need. It was but a step further to personify both this hostile power and the beneficent agency by which it was at length overcome. Indra is thus at once a terrible warrior and a gracious friend, a god whose shafts deal destruction to his enemies, while they bring deliverance and prosperity to his worshippers. The phenomena of thunder and lightning almost inevitably suggest the idea of a conflict between opposing forces; even we ourselves, in our more prosaic age, often speak of the war or strife of the elements. The other appearances of the sky, too, would afford abundant materials for poetical imagery. The worshipper would at one time transform the fantastic shapes of the clouds into the chariots[183] and horses of his god, and at another time would seem to perceive in their piled-up masses the cities and castles which he was advancing to overthrow.

(5) Indra's greatness.

In numerous places of the Rig-veda, the highest divine functions and attributes are ascribed to Indra. A collection of the most striking [182] In viii. 6, 1, Indra is compared to, and therefore distinguished from, Parjanya, the rain-god (mahān Indro yaḥ ojasā Parjanyo vṛishṭimān iva | stomair Vatsasya vavṛidhe). In viii. 82, 1, 4, he is identified with Sūrya, the Sun.

[183] Compare Psalm 104, 3; Isaiah 19, 1; Daniel 7, 13; Matth. 24, 30; 26, 64; Habakkuk 3, 8; Bréal, Hercule et Cacus, 171 f.

of these passages will be found in the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 85–94. I subjoin some additional texts:

i. 61, 14. Asya id u bhiyā girayaś cha dṛilhāḥ dyāvā cha bhūmā janushas tujete | "Through fear of him when he is born, the stable mountains, and heaven and earth, are agitated."

i. 100, 1. : . . . maho divaḥ pṛithivyāś cha samrāṭ | . . . . 15. Na yasya devāḥ devatā na marttāḥ āpaś chana śavaso antam āpuḥ | "The monarch of the great heaven and of the earth . . . . 15. of whose might neither gods by their divine insight, nor men, nor waters have attained the limit."[184]

i. 101, 5. Yo viśvasya jagataḥ prāṇatas patiḥ | "He (Indra) who is the lord of the whole moving and breathing (world)," etc.

i. 165, 9. Anuttam ā te maghavan nakir nu na tvāvān asti devatā vidānaḥ | na jāyamāno naśate na jāto yāni karishyā kṛiṇuhi pravṛiḍḍha | "There is nothing unconquered by thee: no one like thee is known among the gods. No one to be born, or yet born, can rival thee. Do, great god, whatever thou willest do." (Compare iv. 18, 4.)

i. 173, 6. Pra yad itthā mahinā nṛibhyo asti arāṁ rodasī kakshye na asmai | "Since Indra is so superior to men, heaven and earth do not suffice for his girdle," etc.

ii. 17, 5. Sa prāchīnān parvatan dṛiṁhad ojasā adharāchīnam akarod apām apaḥ | adhārayat pṛithivīṁ viśvadhāyasam astabhnād māyayā dyām avasrasaḥ | "He has settled the ancient mountains by his might; he has directed downwards the action of the waters. He has supported the earth, the universal nurse. By his skill he has propped up the sky from falling."

iii. 30, 5 (quoted above, p. 30). "When thou, O Maghavan, didst grasp even these two boundless worlds, they were but a handful to thee."[185]

iii. 34, 2. Indra kshitīnām asi mānushīṇāṁ viśām daivīnām asi pūrvayāvā | "Indra, thou art the leader of the human races, and of the divine people. 7. Yudhendro mahnā varivaś chakāra devebhyaḥ | "In battle and by his power he has acquired wealth for the gods."

iii. 46, 2. Eko viśvasya bhuvanasya rājā | 3. Pra mātrābhiḥ ririche rochamānaḥ pra devebhir viśvato apratītaḥ | pra majmanā divaḥ Indraḥ

[184] See Benfey's Translation in Orient and Occident ii. 518.

[185] Compare Isaiah xl, 12.

pṛithivyāḥ pra uror maho antarikshād ṛijīshī | "Thou, who alone art the king of the whole world, etc. . . . . 3. Indra luminous, has surpassed all measures; in every respect unequalled, he has surpassed the gods; the impetuous deity has surpassed in greatness the heaven and the earth, and the broad and vast atmosphere."

iv. 17, 2. Tava tvisho janiman rejata Dyauḥ rejad Bhūmir bhiyasā svasya manyoḥ | "At the birth of thee, the glorious one, the heaven trembled, and the earth, through fear of thy wrath," etc. (Compare iv. 22, 3, 4).

iv. 18, 4. Nahi nu asya pratimānam asti antar jāteshu uta ye janitvāḥ | "He has no parallel among those born or who are to be born."

v. 30, 5. Paro yat tvam paramaḥ ājanishṭhāḥ parāvati śrutyaṁ nāma bibhrat | ataś chid Indrād abhayanta devāḥ | "When thou wert born, the highest and supreme, bearing a name renowned afar, the gods were then afraid of Indra," etc.

v. 42, 6. Marutvato apratītasya jishṇor ajūryataḥ pra bravāma kṛitāni | na te pūrve maghavan na aparāso na vīryaṁ nūtanaḥ kaś chana āpa | "Let us declare the deeds of the unrivalled, victorious, undecaying god, who is attended by the Maruts. Neither have former nor later (beings), nor has any recent (being) attained to thy valour." [186]

vi. 24, 8. Na vīḷave namate na sthirāya na śardhate dasyujūtāya stavān | ajrāḥ Indrasya girayaś chid ṛishvāḥ gambhīre chid bhavati gādham asmai | "When lauded, he does not bow before the strong, nor the firm, nor the presumptuous, impelled by the Dasyu. Mountains, though lofty, are plains to Indra, and in that which is deep he finds a bottom." Compare viii. 82, 10.

vi. 30, 1, quoted above, p. 30 f. "Indra has surpassed the heaven and the earth. The two worlds are but equal to the half of him." (Comp. x. 119, 7.)

vi. 30, 5. Rājā 'bhavo jagataś charshaṇīnāṁ sākaṁ sūryaṁ janayan dyām ushāsam | "Thou hast become the king of things moving, and of men, generating at once the Sun, the Heaven, the Dawn." (Compare iii. 49, 4.)

viii. 6, 15. Na dyāvaḥ Indram ojasā na antarikshāṇi vajriṇam | na

[186] In viii. 70 3, it is said that Indra, like a terrific bull, cannot be stopped either by gods or men when he wishes to be generous (na tvā śūra devāḥ na marttāso ditsantam | bhīmaṁ na gāṁ vārayante).

vi vyachanta bhūmayaḥ | "Neither heavens, nor atmospheres, nor earths, have equalled Indra the thunderer in might."

viii. 12, 30. Yadā sūryam amuñ divi śukraṁ jyotir adhārayaḥ | ād it te viśvā bhuvanāni yemire | "When thou (Indra) didst place yonder sun a brilliant light in the sky, then all worlds submitted to thee." (Compare vi. 30, 2.)

viii. 14, 9. Indreṇa rochanā divo dṛiḷhāni dṛiṁhitāni cha | sthirāṇi na parāṇude | "By Indra the lights of the sky have been fixed and established. Those which are established he has not removed."

viii. 15, 2. Yasya dvibarhaso bṛihat saho dadhāra rodasī | girīn ajrān apaḥ svar vṛishatvanā | "Of which mighty god the great vigour supported the two worlds, the mountains, plains, waters, and heavens."

viii. 51. 7. Viśve te Indra vīryaṁ devāḥ anu kratuṁ daduḥ | "All the gods, Indra, yield to thee in vigour and strength."

viii. 78, 2. Devās te Indra sakhyāya yemire | "The gods, o Indra, sought after thy friendship." (Compare viii. 87, 3.)

viii. 82, 5. Yad vā pravṛiddha satpate "na marai" iti manyase | uto tat satyam it tava | "That which thou, o powerful lord of the good, expectest, 'I shall not die,' proves true." (Compare x. 86, 11, quoted above, p. 82.)

viii. 85, 4. Manye tvā yayniyaṁ yajniyānām manye tvā chyavanam achyutānām | manye tvā satvanām Indra ketum manye tvā vṛishabhaṁ charshaṇīnām | . . . . 6. Tam u shṭavāma yaḥ imā jājāna viśvā jātāni avarāṇi asmāt | . . . . 9. Anayudhāso asurāḥ adevāś chakreṇa tān apa vapa ṛijīshin | "I regard thee, Indra, as the most adorable of the adorable, the caster down of the unshaken,[187] the most distinguished of living things, the chief of beings. . . . . 6. Let us praise this Indra who produced these (worlds): all beings are inferior (or subsequent) to him. . . . . 9. The Asuras are without weapons and are no gods: sweep them away with thy wheel." (Compare vi. 18, 10), where he is said to consume the Rakshases with his bolt as fire a dry forest: Agnir na śushkaṁ vanam Indra hetī raksho ni dhakshi aśanir na bhīmā).

viii. 86, 14. Tvad viśvāni bhuvanāni vajrin dyāvā rejete pṛithivī cha bhīshā | "All worlds, thunderer, both heaven and earth, tremble through fear of thee."

x. 44, 8. Girīn ajrān rejamānān adhārayad Dyauḥ krandad anta-

[187] The Maruts are said to have the same power (i. 64, 3).

rikshāṇi kopayat | "He sustained the quaking mountains and plains: the sky resounded; he shook the atmosphere," etc. (Compare ii. 12, 2.)

x. 54, 1. Tāṁ su te kīrttim maghavan mahitvā yat tvā bhīte rodasī ahvayetām | prāvo devān . . . . 2. Yad acharas tanvā vavṛidhāno balāni Indra prabruvāṇo janeshu | māyā it sā te yāni yuddhāni āhur na adya śatruṁ na purā vivitse | 3. Kaḥ u nu te mahimanaḥ sámasya asmat pūrve ṛishayo antam āpuḥ | yad mātaraṁ cha pitaraṁ cha sākam ajanayathās tanvāḥ svāyāḥ | 6. Yo adadhāj jyotishi jyotir antar yo asṛijad madhunā sam madhūni | "(I celebrate), Maghavan, thy glory in that through thy greatness the terrified worlds invoked thee. Thou didst deliver the gods, etc. . . . . 2. When thou didst march on increasing in thy magnitude, proclaiming thy strength amongst men, thy combats which they describe were (the proofs of) thy power; neither now nor before dost thou know of any enemy. 3. Which of all the seers before us have found out the end of all thy greatness? seeing that thou didst produce at once the father and the mother (heaven and earth)[188] from thine own body. 6. He placed light in light, and imparted to sweet things their sweetness."

x. 89, 4. Yo akṣheṇeva chakriyā śachībhir vishvak tastambha pṛithivīm uta dyām | 10. Indro divaḥ Indraḥ īśe pṛithivyāḥ Indro apām Indraḥ it parvatānām | "(Indra) who by his powers holds asunder Heaven and Earth, as the two wheels of a chariot are kept apart by the axle. Indra rules over the sky, Indra rules over the earth, Indra rules over the waters, and Indra rules over the mountains," etc.

x. 102, 12. Tvaṁ víśvasya jagataś chakshur Indrāsi chakshushaḥ | "Thou, Indra, art the eye of all moving things that see."

x. 138, 6. Māsāṁ vidhānam adadhāḥ adhi dyavi tvayā vibhinnam bharati pradhim pitā | "Thou (Indra) hast ordained the (course of the) months in the heaven: the father (the sky) has a circumference divided by thee."

In some places (iv. 19, 2; iv. 21, 10) Indra is called samrāṭ, or universal monarch, in other places (iii. 46, 1; iii. 49, 2; vii. 82, 2; viii. 12, 14) svarāṭ, a self-dependent sovereign. In viii. 6, 41, he is called "an ancient rishi, ruling alone by his might" (ṛishir hi pūrvajāḥ asi ekaḥ īśānaḥ ojasā). In i. 174, 1; viii. 79, 6, he is designated as asura, "the divine."

[188] See above p. 30.

The preceding passages afford a fair specimen of the language in which Indra is most commonly celebrated in the hymns. It will be observed that the attributes which are ascribed to him are chiefly those of physical superiority, and of dominion over the external world. In fact he is not generally represented as possessing the spiritual elevation and moral grandeur with which Varuṇa is so often invested.

(6) Indra's relations with his worshippers.

There are, however, many passages in which Indra's close relations with his worshippers are described, and a few in which an ethical character is attributed to him. Faith in him is confessed, or enjoined in the following texts:

i. 55, 5. Adha chana śrad dadhati tvishīmate Indrāya vajraṁ nighanighnate vadham | "Men have faith in the fiery Indra when he hurls again and again his destroying thunderbolt."

i. 102, 2. Asme sūryā-chandramasā abhichakshe śraddhe kam Indra charato vitarturam | "Sun and moon move alternately, o Indra, that we may behold, and have faith."

i. 103, 5. Tad asya idam paśyata bhūri pushṭam śrad Indrasya dhattana vīryāya | "Behold this his great abundance, and have faith in the prowess of Indra."

i. 104, 6. Mā antarām bhujam ā ririsho naḥ śraddhitaṁ te mahate indriyāya | 7. Adha manye śrat te asmai adhāyi vṛishā chodasva mahate dhanāya | "6. Do not injure our future production: we have put faith in thy great power. 7. I surely believe that faith has been reposed in thee: vigorous god, advance us to great wealth."

i. 108, 6. Yad abravam prathamaṁ vāṁ vṛiṇāno ayaṁ somo asurair no vihavyaḥ | tāṁ satyām śraddhām abhi ā hi yātam atha somasya pībataṁ sutasya | "Since I said at first, when supplicating you twain (Indra and Agni) 'this soma is to be offered by us for[189] the divine beings;' come now, in consideration of this true faith, and drink the poured-out soma."

In vi. 28, 5, the poet says: Imāḥ yāḥ gāvaḥ sa janāsaḥ Indraḥ ichhāmi id hṛidā manasā chid Indram | "These cows, o men, are Indra: I desire Indra with my heart and soul."

In ix. 113, 2, truth, faith, and austere-fervour are enjoined on the [189] See Benfey's Translation and note, Orient und Occident, iii. 142.

worshipper: ṛitavākena satyena śraddhayā tapasā sutaḥ Indrāya Indo parisrava | "Poured out with holy words, with truth, with faith, with austere-fervour, o Soma, flow for Indra."

x. 160, 3. Yaḥ uśata manasā somam asmai sarvahṛidā devakāmaḥ sunoti | na gāḥ Indras tasya parādadāti ityādi | "Indra does not abandon the cattle of the man who loves the gods, and with a longing soul and with all his heart pours out libations of soma-juice."

And the reality of his existence and power is asserted in opposition to faithless or sceptical doubts in the following:

ii. 12, 5. Yaṁ sma pṛichanti kuha seti ghoram uta īm āhur na esho asti iti enam | so aryaḥ pushṭīr vijaḥ iva[190] āmināti śrad asmai dhatta sa janāsaḥ Indraḥ | "That dreadful being, of whom they ask 'where is he,' and of whom they say 'he is not' [or, 'this is not he'], he carries away the wealth of the foe, as a gamester the stakes; put faith in him, he, o men, is Indra."

vi. 18, 3. Asti svid nu vīryaṁ tat te Indra na svid asti tad ṛituthā vi vochaḥ | 4. Sad id hi te tuvijātasya manye sahaḥ sahishṭha | "3. Does that prowess belong to thee, Indra, or does it not? tell us truly. 4. Thy strength, o thou strongest of beings, who art great by nature, is really existing."

viii. 89, 3. Pra su stomam bharata vājayantaḥ Indrāya satyaṁ yadi satyam asti | "na Indro asti" iti nemaḥ u tvaḥ āha kaḥ īṁ dadarśa kam abhi stavāma | 4. ayam asmi jaritaḥ paśya meha viśvā jātāni abhi asmi mahnā | "3. Present to Indra a hymn soliciting food, a true hymn, if he truly exists. 'Indra does not exist,' says some one; 'who has seen him? whom shall we praise?' 4. 'I am here, o worshipper' (exclaims Indra); 'behold me here. I surpass all creatures in greatness.'"

Indra is the friend, and even the brother, of his present worshippers, as he was the friend of their forefathers, ii. 18, 3; ii. 20, 3; iii. 53, 5 (ā cha yāhi Indra bhrātaḥ, "come, brother Indra"); iv. 17, 18; iv. 23, 6; vi. 18, (pratnaṁ sakhyam, "ancient friendship"); vi. 21, 5 (idā hi te vevishataḥ purājāḥ pratnāsaḥ āsuḥ purukṛit sakhāyaḥ, "for now men resort to thee continually, and the ancients born of old were thy friends")[191]; 8 (tvaṁ hi āpiḥ pradivi pitṛīṇāṁ śaśvad babhūtha |

[190] The words vijaḥ iva are explained by Sāyaṇa as = udvejakaḥ eva san, "being a vexer."

[191] See the 3rd vol. of this work, p. 221. The passage is differently rendered by Benfey, Gloss. to S. V. p. 76, col. 1.

"For thou wast always a friend of our fathers"); vi. 45, 1, 7; vii. 21, 9; viii. 4, 7; viii. 45, 1 ff., 16, 18; viii. 50, 11; viii. 57, 11 (Yasya te svādu sakhyaṁ svādvī praṇītiḥ | "Thou whose friendship is sweet and sweet thy guidance"); viii. 81, 33; viii. 82, 3; viii. 86, 7; viii. 89, 2; x. 22, 1 f.; x. 23, 7 (mā kir naḥ enā sakhyā vi yaushus tava cha Indra Vimadasya cha ṛisheḥ | "Let not these friendly relations of ours, of thee, o Indra, and the rishi Vimada, be dissolved"); x. 42, 11 (Indraḥ purastād uta madhyato naḥ sakhā sakhibhyo varivaḥ kṛinotu | "May Indra, a friend, grant riches to us his friends before and in the middle"). He chooses for his intimate the man who presents offerings, but desires no friendship with him who offers no libations (x. 42, 4: Atra yujaṁ kṛiṇute yo havishmān na asunvatā sakhyaṁ vashṭi śūraḥ). He is reminded that he has friends while his adorers are friendless (viii. 21, 4: Vayaṁ hi tvā bandhumantam abandhavo viprāsaḥ Indra yemima). He is not only a friend, but a father, and the most fatherly of fathers (iv. 17, 17: Sakhā pitā pitṛitamaḥ pitṛīṇām). As such he is invoked by men (x. 48, 1: Māṁ havante pitaraṁ na jantavaḥ | Compare 1, 104, 9, and vii. 32, 3, 26). He is both father and mother (viii. 87, 11: Tvaṁ hi naḥ pitā vaso tvam mātā śatakrato babhūvitha | compare viii. 1, 6). In one place (viii. 81, 32) the adoring poet exclaims: "Thou art ours and we are thine" (tvam asmākaṁ tava smasi). He is the helper of the poor (viii. 69, 3: radhra-chodanam); the only helper to whom his worshipper has recourse (ibid. 1: na hi anyam balā 'karam marḍitāram). He alone among the gods has a love for mortals (vii. 23, 5: eko devatrā dayase hi martyān), and is their helper (i. 84, 19: na tvad anyo maghavann asti marḍitā Indra bravīmi te vachaḥ | viii. 55, 13: na hi tvad anyaḥ puruhūta kaśchana maghavann asti marḍitā); all men share in his benefits (viii. 54, 7: yat chid hi śaśvatāṁ asi Indra sādhāraṇas tvam). He is the deliverer and the advocate (or comforter) of his servants (viii. 85, 20: sa prāvitā maghavā no 'dhivaktā), and their strength (vii. 31, 5: tve api kratur mama). He is a wall of defence (viii. 69, 7: Indra dṛihyasva pūr asi). His friend is never slain or conquered (x. 152, 1: na yasya hanyate sakhā na jīyate kadā chana).[192]

[192] The same is said of Mitra, iii. 59, 2, and of the Maruts, v. 54, 7. Compare vii. 20, 6; vii. 32, 14; viii. 16, 5; viii. 52, 11. In viii. 69, 4, he is prayed to guard his worshipper's chariot, and to bring it forward from the rear into the van (Indra

His powerful arms are resorted to for protection (vi. 47, 8 : ṛishvā te Indra sthavirasya bāhū upa steyāma śaraṇā bṛihantā). He is invoked as a mighty protector and deliverer easy to be entreated (ibid. 11 : trātāram Indram avitāram Indraṁ have have suhavaṁ śūram Indram). The worshippers assume that Indra, though far off, is not afflicted with deafness, but hears distinctly their invocations (viii. 45, 17 : uta tvā abadhiraṁ vayaṁ śrutkarṇaṁ santam ūtaye | dūrād iva havāmahe). His right hand is grasped by suppliants for riches (x. 47, 1 : Jagṛibhma te dakshiṇam Indra hastaṁ vasūyavo vasupate vasūnām). The loving praises of his worshippers, uttered from the soul, proceed to him as messengers, and touch his heart (x. 47, 7 : vanīvāno mama dūtāsaḥ Indraṁ stomāś charanti sumatīr iyānāḥ | hṛidispṛiśo manasā vachyamānāḥ). The imploring poet with his hymn seizes the skirts of the god's robe, as a son his father's (iii. 53, 2 : pitur na putraḥ sicham ārabhe te Indra svādishṭhayā girā śachīvaḥ). He is clasped by the ardent hymns of his votaries as a husband is embraced by his loving wives (i. 62, 11 : patiṁ na patnīr uśatīr uśantam spṛiśanti tvā śavasāvan manīshāḥ | i. 186, 7 : tam īṁ giro janayo na patnīḥ surabhishṭamaṁ narāṁ ṇasanta | x. 43, 1 : achha me Indram matayaḥ svarvidaḥ sadhrīchīr viśvāḥ uśatīr anūshata | pari shvajante janayo yathā patim maryaṁ śundhyum maghavānam ūtaye | Comp. ii. 16, 9).[193] The hymns run to him and lick him, as cows their calves (x. 119, 4 : upa mā matir asthita vāśrā putram iva priyam | i. 186, 7 : uta naḥ īm matayo aśvayogāḥ śiśuṁ na gāvas taruṇaṁ rihanti). He is entreated not to be lazy like a priest (viii. 81, 30 : mo shu brahmeva tandrayur bhava vājānām pate); and not to allow other worshippers to arrest his horses when conveying him to the abode of the suppliants who would satisfy him with soma-libations, but to overleap the bonds by which all other candidates for his favour seek to confine him as fowlers to snare a bird, and to pass quickly by them as he would over a barren desert (ii. 18, 3 : Mo su tvām attra bahavo hi viprāḥ ni rīraman yajamānāso anye | iii. 25, 5 : mā te harī vṛishaṇā vītapṛishṭhā ni ṛīraman yajamānāso anye | pra no ratham ava pas'chāt chit santam adrivaḥ | purastād enam me kṛidhi | compare verses 5 and 6). See ii. 27, 12.

[193] In vii. 104, 6, the worshipper prays that his hymn may cling around Indra and Soma as a girth clasps a horse (pari vām bhūtu viśvataḥ iyam matiḥ kakshyā 'śveva vājinā).

ati āyāhi śaśvato vayaṁ te araṁ sutebhiḥ kṛiṇavāma somaiḥ | iii. 45, 1: ā mandrair Indra haribhir yāhi mayūraromabhiḥ | mā tvā kechin ni yaman viṁ na pāśinaḥ ati dhanva iva tān ihi | x. 160, 1: tīvrasya abhivayasaḥ asya pāhi sarvarathā vi harī iha muncha | Indra mā tvā yajamānāsaḥ anye ni rīraman ṭubhyam ime sutāsaḥ). He is the king of things moving, of men, and of all terrestrial things; and out of this abundance he bestows wealth on the man who brings oblations to him (vii. 27, 3: Indro rājā jagataś charshaṇīnām adhi kshami vishurūpam yad asti | tato dadāti dāśushe vasūni chodad rādhaḥ upastutaś chid arvāk). Both his hands are full of riches (vii. 37, 3: ubhā te pūrṇā vasunā gabhastī). He is a magazine replenished with wealth, whom the worshipper urges to liberality (x. 42, 2: kośaṁ na pūrṇaṁ vasunā niṛishṭam ā chyāvaya maghadeyāya śūram). Manifold aids shoot out from him as branches from a tree (vi. 24, 3: vṛikshasya nu te puruhūta vayāḥ vi ūtayo ruruhur Indra pūrvīḥ). He is asked to shower satisfying wealth on his adorers, as a man with a hook shakes down ripe fruit from a tree (iii. 45, 4: vṛiksham pakvam phalam ankī iva dhūnuhi Indra sampāraṇaṁ vasu). Compare ix. 97, 53. Neither gods nor men can arrest him in his course when he is bent on liberality, as a terrific bull cannot be stopped, viii. 70, 3 (na hi tvā śūra devāḥ na martāso ditsantam | bhīmaṁ na gāṁ vārayante). Compare viii. 33, 8, and iv. 16, 14. His friendship is indestructible: he is prayed to be a cow to the man who desires one, and a horse to the man seeking a horse (vi. 45, 26: dūṇāśaṁ sakhyaṁ tava gaur asi vīra gavyate | aśvo aśvāyate bhava). He gives wives to those who had none (v. 31, 2: amenāṁś chij janivataś chakartha | iv. 17, 16: janīyanto janidām akshitotim ā chyāvayāmaḥ). He richly rewards his faithful servants and adorers (ii. 12, 6: yo radhrasya choditā yaḥ kṛiśasya yo brahmaṇo nādhamānasya kīreḥ | 14: yaḥ sunvantam avati yaḥ pachantaṁ yaḥ śaṁsantaṁ yaḥ śaśamānam ūtī | ii. 19, 4: so apratīni manave purūṇi Indro dāśad dāśushe | ii. 22, 3: dātā rādhaḥ stuvate kāmyaṁ vasu). The days dawn prosperously on the man who says "come, let us pour out libations to Indra" (v. 37, 1: tasmai amṛidhrāḥ ushaso vi uchhān yaḥ "Indrāya sunavāma" ity āha). The king in whose house the god drinks soma mixed with milk suffers no calamity, marches at the head of his hosts, slays his enemy, and lives tranquilly at home, in the enjoyment of happiness (ibid. 4: na sa rājā vyathate yasminn Indras tivraṁ somam pibati gosakhāyam | ā satvanair ajati hanti vṛittraṁ ksheti kshitīḥ subhago nāma pushyan | Compare the next verse). His friend is handsome, possesses horses and cows, rides in a chariot, and enjoys always a life of opulence, and goes radiant into the assembly (viii. 4, 9: aśvī rathī surūpaḥ id gomān id Indra te sakhā | śvātrabhājā[194] vayasā sachate sadā chandro yāti sabhām upa). Indra is gladdened by the praises of the pious man, whether learned or unlearned (viii. 50, 9: avipro vā yad avidhad vipro vā Indra te vachaḥ | sa pra mandat tvāyā. Compare viii. 81, 12). He is prayed to deliver to-day, to-morrow, next day, and every day, and both by day and night (viii. 50, 17: adya adya śvaḥ śvaḥ Indra trāsva pare cha naḥ | viśvā cha no jaritṛīn satpate ahā divā naktaṁ cha rakshishaḥ | Compare viii. 53, 6). The god is, however, sometimes naïvely importuned to be more prompt in his liberality. "Gracious are thy hands, o Indra (the poet cries in iv. 21, 9), beneficent thy fingers, bestowers of wealth on thy worshipper; why, then, dost thou sit still? Why dost thou not gladden us? Why dost thou not delight in giving?" bhadrā te hastā sukṛitota pāṇī prayantārā stuvate rādhaḥ Indra | kā te nishattiḥ kim u no mamatsi kim na ud ud u harshase dātave u). Again in x. 42, 3, he is asked: "Why do they call thee generous, o opulent god? Sharpen me, for I hear thee to be a sharpener; let my hymn be productive, o mighty god; bring to us good fortune and riches" (kim anga tvā maghavan bhojam āhuḥ śiśīhi mā siśayaṁ tvā śṛiṇomi | apnasvatī mama dhīr astu śakra vasuvidam bhagam Indra ābhara naḥ). The god is even told that the poet, if in his place, and possessed of the ample resources which he alone commands, would shew himself more bountiful, and would not abandon his worshipper to poverty, but would daily lavish on him cows and other property (vii. 32, 18: yad Indra yāvatas tvam etāvad aham īśīya | stotāram id didhisheya radāvaso na pāpatvāya rāsīya | 19. S'iksheyam in mahayate dive dive rāyaḥ ā kuhachidvide |[195] viii. 14, 1. Yad Indra aham yathā

[194] On the sense assigned by the Indian writers to śvātra see my art. on the interpretation of the Veda, in Journ. R.A.S. for 1866, p. 378.

[195] These verses, with the entire hymn in which they occur, are translated by Prof. Max Müller in his Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 543 ff. The word kuhachidvide is there rendered "to whosoever it be," and it is there mentioned in a note that "according to the commentator kuhachidvid means 'wherever he be.'" Prof. Müller adds: it may perhaps mean the ignorant. Prof. Roth follows Sāyaṇa in his explanation. A similar appeal is made to Agni in viii. 19, 25: yad Agne martyas tvaṁ syām aham tvam īśīya vasvaḥ ekaḥ it | stotā me goshakhā syāt | śiksheyam asmai ditseyaṁ śachīpate manīshiṇe | yad ahaṁ gopatiḥ syām).

Indra supplies the place of armour, and is a champion who fights in the van, vii. 31, 6 (tvaṁ varma sapratha̱ḥ puroyodhaś cha vṛittrahan | tvayā pratibruve yujā). He is supplicated for all sorts of temporal blessings, as wealth in cows, horses, chariots, health, understanding, sweetness of voice (svādmānaṁ vāshaḥ), prosperous days, long life extending to a hundred years (ii. 21, 6; iii. 36, 10; vii. 27, 5; x. 47, 1 ff.). In iv. 32, 17 ff. the worshipper states his wishes more in detail; asks Indra to give him a thousand yoked horses, a thousand jars of soma, hundreds of thousands of cows; acknowledges that he had received ten golden jars, and urges the god not to be sparing, but to bestow abundantly in conformity with his character for liberality (sahasraṁ vyatīnāṁ yuktānām Indram īmahe | śataṁ somasya khāryaḥ | 18. Sahasrā te śatā vayaṁ gavām ā chyāvayāmasi | asmatrā rādhaḥ etu te | 19. Daśa te kalaśānāṁ hiraṇyānām adhīmahi | bhūridāḥ asi Vṛittrahan | 20. Bhūridāḥ bhūri dehi no mā dabhram bhūri ā bhara | bhūri gha id Indra ditsasi | 21. Bhūridāḥ hi asi śrutaḥ purutrā śūra Vṛittrahan | ā no bhajasva rādhasi). Among other boons, Indra is asked to bestow victory in war, which depends upon his will, and for which he is invoked by both the hostile armies (ii. 12, 8: yaṁ krandasī saṁyatī vihvayete pare avare ubhayāḥ amitrāḥ | 9, yasmād na ṛite vijayante janāsaḥ yaṁ yudhyamānāḥ avase havante). In x. 103, 8 ff. (= S.V. ii. 1206 ff., and Vaj. S. xvii. 40 ff.) he, in company with other gods, mitramaho amartya | sahasaḥ sūnav āhuta | na tvā rāsīya abhiśastaye vaso na papātvāya santya | na me stotā amatīvā na durhitaḥ syād Agne na pāpayā | "Wert thou, Agni, a mortal, and were I an immortal, o invoked son of might, I would not abandon thee to malediction or misery;—my worshipper should not be poor nor distressed nor wretched." And again in viii. 44, 23, the same god is thus addressed: Yad Agne syām ahaṁ tvam tvaṁ vā gha syāḥ aham | syus te satyāḥ ihāśishaḥ | "Were I thou, Agni, and wert thou I, thy aspirations should be fulfilled." (In the former passage viii. 19, 25, a word, mitramahas, occurs which shews the uncertainty of Sāyaṇa's interpretations. He there explains it anukūla-dīptiman, "he whose light is favourable." In i. 44, 12, he renders it mitrāṇām pūjaka; in i. 58, 8, anukūla-dīptiman in ii. 1, 5, hita kāri-tejaḥ; in vi. 2, 11, anukūle-dīpte; in vi. 5, 4, anukūla-dīpte mitrāṇām madayitar vā; in vii. 5, 6, mitrāṇām pūjayitaḥ; in viii. 44, 14, mitrāṇām pūjanīya; in viii. 49, 7, mitrāṇām asmākam pūjaka tejo vā. Prof. Roth s.v. thinks it perhaps means "rich in friends.") See also i. 38, 4, 5, in Prof. Max Müller's Trans. of the R.V. pp. 65 and 70 f., and my art. on the interpretation of the Veda, Journ. R.A.S. for 1866, pp. 371, and 381 f. Compare also x. 33, 8.

who seem to be conceived as present with their hosts, as invisible allies of their worshippers, is thus addressed: 8. Indraḥ āsām netā Bṛihaspatir Dakshiṇā Yajnaḥ puraḥ etu Somaḥ | devasenānām abhibhanjatīnāṁ jayantīnām Maruto yantu agram | 9. Indrasya vrishṇo Varuṇasya rājnaḥ Adityānām marutāṁ śardhaḥ ugram | mahāmanasām bhuvanachyavānāṁ ghosho devānāṁ jayatām ud asthāt | 10. Ud dharshaya maghavann āyudhāni ut satvanām māmakānām manāṁsi | uḍ vṛittrahan vājinām vājināni ud rathānaṁ jayatāṁ yantu ghoshāḥ | 11. Asmākam Indra samṛiteshu dhvajeshu asmākam yāḥ ishavas tāḥ jayantu | asmākaṁ vīrāḥ uttare bhavantu asmān u devāḥ avata haveshu | 12. (= Nir. ix. 33) Amīshāṁ chittam pratilobhayantī gṛihāṇā angāni Apve[196] parehi | abhi prehi nirdaha hṛitsu śokair andhenāmitrās tamasā sachantām | 8. "May Indra be the leader of these (our armies), may Bṛihaspati, Largess, Sacrifice, and Soma march in front; may the host of Maruts precede the crushing, victorious armies of the gods. 9. May the fierce host of the vigorous Indra, of king Varuṇa, of the Ādityas, and the Maruts (go before us); the shout of the great-souled, conquering, world-shaking gods has ascended. 10. Rouse, o opulent god, the weapons, rouse the souls of our warriors, stimulate the power of the mighty men; may shouts arise from the conquering chariots. 11. May Indra be ours when the standards clash; may our arrows be victorious; may our strong men gain the upperhand; preserve us, o gods, in the fray. 12. Bewildering the hearts of our enemies, o Apvā,[197] take possession of their limbs and pass onward; come near, burn them with fires in their hearts; may our enemies fall into blind darkness."[198]

Indra controls the destinies of men, and is described as acting in an arbitrary manner, in vi. 47, 15, where it is said of him: pādāv iva praharann anyam anyam kṛiṇoti pūrvam aparaṁ śachībhiḥ | 16. Śriṇve vīraḥ ugram ugraṁ damāyan anyam anyam ati nenīyamānaḥ | edhamāna-dviḷ ubhayasya rājā choshkūyate viśaḥ Indro manushyān | 17. Parā pūrveshāṁ sakhyā vṛiṇakti virtarturāṇo aparebhir eti | "Like one moving (changing

[196] The S.V. reads Aghe.

[197] Apvā is said in the Nirukta vi. 12, to mean "disease or fear," vyādhir vā bhayaṁ vā. Roth, s.v. says the word means a disease. In the improvements and addition to his Lexicon, vol. v., he refers to the word as denoting a goddess, and quotes Ind. Studien iii. 203, and ix. 482.

[198] This passage is translated by Prof. Benfey in his Sāma-veda. Compare A.V. iii. 19, 6 ff. and viii. 8, 1 ff.

the positions of) his feet in walking, so Indra puts one and now another man first and last. 16. This hero is renowned as subduing every fierce man, and as advancing now one and now another. The enemy of the prosperous,[199] the king of both (worlds), Indra protects the men who are subject to him. 17. He abandons his friendships with (his) former (favourites), and consorts with others in turn."

In the following verses (viii. 45, 32) the poet seems to express disappointment at the inadequate manifestation of Indra's power, while he at the same time entreats his grace and forgiveness: dabhraṁ chid hi tvāvataḥ kritaṁ śrinve adhi kshami | jigātu Indra te manaḥ | 33. Taved u tāḥ sukīrttayaḥ asann uta praśastayaḥ | yad Indra mṛiḷayāsi naḥ | 34. Mā naḥ ekasminn āgasi mā dvayor uta trishu | vadhīr mā śūra bhūrishu | 35. Bibhaya hi tvāvataḥ ugrād abhiprabhanginaḥ | dasmād aham ritīshahaḥ | 32. "Little has been heard of as done upon earth by one such as thou art: let thy soul turn (to us), o Indra. 33. Let those renowns and those praises of thine be proved true by thy shewing mercy on us,

[199] "Who do not offer libations," say Yāska and Sāyaṇa (asunvataḥ). This line is explained by Prof. Roth in his Illustration of the Nirukta, p. 90. Or have we here the idea that the gods were jealous of human prosperity? which, as is well known, prevailed among the Greeks, and is expressed in the message of Amasis to Polycrates, as related by Herodotus, iii. 40: ἐμοὶ δὲ ἀι σαὶ μεγάλαι εὐτυχίαι οὐκ ἀρέσκουσι τὸ θεῖον ἐπισταμένῳ ὡς ἔστι φθονερόν. "But thy great prosperity does not please me, as I know that the Deity is envious." See Mr. Blakesley's note in loco, and Herodotus, i. 32, and vii. 46, where the same sentiment recurs. Prof. Wilson in the Introduction to the 3rd vol. of his Trans. of the R.V. remarks on this passage: "He (Indra) is also represented in the same hymn as of a capricious temperament, neglecting those who serve him, and favouring those who pay him no adoration (p. 473, verse 17); a notion somewhat at variance with a doctrine previously inculcated, that the ceremonial worship of Indra is able to atone for the most atrocious crimes (p. 289, note)." See the note last referred to, which relates to R.V. v. 34, 4. But is this a correct deduction from the passage when properly interpreted? The verse is as follows: Yasya avadhīt pitaraṁ yasya mātaraṁ yasya śakro bhrātaraṁ na atah īshate | veti id u asya prayatā yatankaro na kilbishād īshate vasvaḥ ākaraḥ | "The powerful god does not flee from the man whose father, or mother, or brother he has slain. The restrainer (or, according to Roth, s.v. perhaps, avenger) desires such a man's offered (gifts); this god, the source of riches, does not flee from sin." Sāyaṇa says the person, whose relations the god slays, is one who neglects his worship, and whom he chastises and then reinstates in his favour (ayajvānaṁ śikshayitvā niyojayati). If, however, Indra is merely punishing the ungodly, can it be intended in the word kilbishāt in the last clause of the verse to impute to him any guilt? It may perhaps be meant that he does not fear to punish the offender against him. In verses 3, 5, and 6 of the hymn the godly man who offers libations is said to prosper, while the irreligious incurs the god's displeasure.

o Indra. 34. Slay us not for one sin, nor for two, nor for three, nor for many, o hero. 35. I am afraid of one so terrible, so crushing, so destroying, such a queller of resistance as thou art."[200] Indra is the enemy of the irreligious, whom he punishes and destroys. i. 131, 4: S'āsas tam Indra martyam ayajyum | "Thou, Indra, hast punished him who does not worship thee; ii. 12, 10: yaḥ śaśvato mahi eno dadhānān amanyamānān śarvā jaghāna | "who slew with his bolt those who are great sinners, and do not regard him; viii. 14, 15: asunvām Indra saṁsadaṁ vishūchīṁ vi anāśayaḥ | somapāḥ uttaro bhavan | "Thou, Indra, a soma-drinker, who art above all, hast destroyed and scattered the assembly which offers no libations." (Compare the passages quoted in Vol. i. pp. 259 ff.; and in my article on the Indian priests in the Vedic age, Jour. R.A.S., for 1866, pp. 286 ff.)[201] He hears and sees all things, and looks upon the wrath of men, himself uncontrolled (viii. 67, 5: viśvaṁ śṛiṇoti paśyati | 6. Sa manyum martyānām adabdho nichikīshate). He protects his faithful servants and leads them into an ample space, into celestial light and security (vi. 47, 8: uruṁ[202] no lokam anu neshi vidvān svarvaj jyotir abhayaṁ svasti); and in one place, viii. 58, 7, the hope is held that they shall ascend with him to a home in the solar sphere, and there drink nectar thrice seven times in the abode of their friend (ud yad bradhnasya vishṭapaṁ gṛiham Indraś cha ganvahi | madhvaḥ pītvā sachevahi triḥ sapta sakhyuḥ pade).

[200] The sense of verse 134 f. is thus given by Prof. Roth in his Illustrations of the Nirukta (iv. 2) p. 38: "The poet prays Indra not to destroy him for one or more sins (verse 34), says that he is afraid of one so powerful as the god (verse 35), and entreats him to avert from him the loss of a friend or a son (verse 36). He then makes the god answer in the verse before us (37): 'Who, o mortals,' said Indra, 'without being provoked as a friend, has ever destroyed his friend? Who must flee from me?'"

[201] Compare R.V. viii. 21, 14 (=S.V. ii. 740): nakiḥ revantaṁ sakhyāya vindase pīyanti tvā surāśvaḥ | yadā kṛiṇoshi nadanuṁ samūhasi ād it piteva hūyase), which is thus rendered by Prof. Müller (Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 543 f.): "Thou never findest a rich man to be thy friend; wine-swillers despise thee. But when thou thunderest, when thou gatherest (the clouds), then thou art called like a father." Benfey renders the verse somewhat differently, thus: "Thou never takest for a friend the man who is merely rich; he who is inflated with wine is a burthen to thee: with a mere sound thou smitest them, and then thou art supplicated like a father."

[202] Compare viii. 57, 13. In A.V. vii. 84, 2, Indra is said to have repelled the hostile man, and opened an ample space for the gods (apānudo janum amitrāyantam uruṁ devebhyaḥ akṛiṇor u lokam).

Indra, more than any other god,[203] is invoked as a patron of the Āryas, and as their protector against their enemies earthly, or aerial: i. 51, 8: Vi jānīhi āryān ye cha dasyavo barhishmate randhaya śāsad avratān | śākī bhava yajamānasya choditā viśvā it te sadhamādeshu chākana | "Distinguish between the Āryas and those who are Dasyus; subject the lawless to the man who offers oblations; be a powerful helper of him who sacrifices; all these things I desire at thy festivals."[204] (See also the following verse.)

i. 103, 3: sa jātubharmā[205] śraddadhānaḥ ojaḥ puro vibhindann acharad vi dāsīḥ | vidvān vajrin dasyave hetim asya āryaṁ saho vardhaya dyumnam Indra | "Wielding the thunderbolt, and confident in his prowess, he strode onward, shattering the cities of the Dasyus. Thunderer, knowing (each), hurl thy bolt against the Dasyu, and augment the force and glory of the Ārya." i. 130, 8: Indraḥ samatsu yajamānam āryam prāvad viśveshu śatamūtir ājishu . . . . | manave śāsad avratān tvachaṁ kṛishṇām arandhayat | "Indra, commanding a hundred modes of succour, protected in all the battles the sacrificing Ārya: chastising the lawless, he subjected the black skin to Manu (or the Āryan man)." ii. 11, 18: apāvṛiṇor jyótir āryāya ni savyataḥ sādi dasyur Indra | "Thou hast disclosed the light to the Ārya; the Dasyu was placed on the left side." iii. 34, 9: sasāna atyān uta sūryaṁ sasāna sasāna purubhojasam gām | hiraṇyayam uta bhogaṁ sasāna hatvī dasyūn pra āryaṁ varṇam āvat | "Indra has given horses,

[203] Other gods, however, are also referred to as protectors of the Āryas. In i. 117, 21 (Nir. vi. 25) it is said of the Aśvins: abhi dasyuṁ bakureṇa ā dhamantā uru jyotir chakratur āryāya | "Sweeping away the Dasyu with the thunderbold, ye have created a great light for the Ārya." Prof. Roth thinks bakura means a wind instrument, Illust. of Nir. p. 92, and Lexicon s.v. Prof. Benfey follows Sāyaṇa in rendering it by thunderbolt. In vi. 21, 11, it is said of all the gods: ye agnijihvāḥ ṛitasāpaḥ āsur ye manuṁ chakrur uparaṁ dasāya | "Those (gods) who, fire-tongued, and frequenting religious rites, have made Manu's race (or the Āryan man) superior to the Dāsa." In vii. 100, 4, it is said of Vishṇu: vi chakrame pṛithivīm esha etām kshetrāya Vishṇur manushe daśasyan | "This Vishṇu strode over this earth, bestowing it as a domain on Manu's race." And in viii. 92, 1, it is said of Agni: upo shu jātam āryasya vardhanam Agniṁ nakshanta no giraḥ | "Our hymns have reached Agni, who was born the promoter of the Ārya."

[204] See Professor Benfey's Translation in Orient und Occident, i. 408.

[205] Sāyaṇa says this means either "he whose weapon is the thunderbolt," or "the nurturer of creatures." Benfey, Or. und Occ. iii. 132, renders the compound "born-warrior."

has given the sun, has given the prolific cow, and he has given golden wealth: destroying the Dasyus, he has protected the Āryan colour." iv. 26, 2: aham bhūmim adadām āryāya ahaṁ vṛishṭiṁ dāśushe martyāya | "I have given the earth to the Ārya, and rain to the worshipping mortal." vi. 18, 3: tvaṁ ha nu tyad adamāyo dasyūn ekaḥ kṛishṭīr avanor āryāya | "Thou didst then subdue the Dasyus, and gavest the people to the Ārya." ṛi. 25, 3: ābhir viśvāḥ abhiyujo vishūchir āryāya viśaḥ avatārīr dāsīḥ | "With these succours thou hast subjected all the distracted hostile Dasyu peoples to the Ārya." viii. 24, 27: yaḥ ṛikshād aṁhaso muchad yo vā āryāt sapta sindhushu | vadhar dāsasya tuvinṛimṇa nīnamaḥ | "Who delivered from great straits; who, o god of mighty force, didst in (the land of) the seven rivers turn away from the Ārya the weapon of the Dasyu." viii. 87, 6: tvaṁ hi śaśvatīnām Indra dartā purām asi | hantā dasyor manor vṛidhaḥ patir divaḥ | "Thou, Indra, art the destroyer of unnumbered cities; the slayer of the Dasyu; the prosperer of the (Āryan) man; the lord of the sky." x. 49, 2: aham Śushṇasya śnathitā vadhar yamaṁ na yo rare āryaṁ nāma dasyave | "I, the smiter, have stayed the weapon of Śushna; I do not abandon the Āryan race to the Dasyu." x. 86, 19: ayam emi vichākaśad vichinvan dāsam āryam | "I come beholding and distinguishing the Dāsa and the Ārya." (I am unable, however, to say who is the speaker here.)[206]

[206] Indra with Agni is, however, besought in vi. 60 to slay all enemies, Āryas as well as Dasyus; hato vṛittrāṇi āryā hato dāsāni satpatī | hato viśvā apa dvishaḥ). In x. 38, 3, Indra alone is similarly addressed: Yo no dāsaḥ āryo vā purushṭuta adevaḥ Indra yudhaye chiketati | asmābhir te sushahāḥ santu śatravas tvayā vayaṁ tān vanuyāma sangame | "Whatever ungodly man, o much-lauded Indra, whether a Dāsa or an Ārya, designs to fight with us,—may all such enemies be easy to overcome; may we slay them in the conflict." And in x. 102, 3, it is said: antar yachha jighāṁsato vajram Indra abhidāsataḥ | dāsasya vā maghavann āryasya vā sanutar yavaya vadham | "Arrest, o Indra, the bolt of the destroyer who seeks to slay us; avert far from us the stroke, whether of Dāsa or of Ārya." Indra and Varuṇa are invoked for the same object in vii. 83, 1: Dāsā cha vṛittrā hatam āryāṇi cha sudāsam Indrā-varuṇā 'vasā 'vatam | "Slay both Dāsa and Ārya enemies; protect Sudās with your succour, o Indra and Varuṇa." So too in x. 83, 1, Manyu (personified Wrath) is prayed: sāhyāma dāsam āryaṁ tvayā yujā sahskṛitena sahasā sahasvatā | "May we, with thee for our ally, overcome the Dāsa and the Ārya, with force-impelled, vigorous, energy." Perhaps ii. 11, 19 (sanema ye te ūtibhis taranto viśvāḥ spṛidhaḥ āryeṇa dasyūn) may have the same sense. In x. 65, 11, certain bountiful deities are spoken of as generating prayer, the cow, the horse, plants, trees, the earth, the mountains, the waters, as elevating the sun in the sky, and as spreading Āryan insti-

(7) Apparent mutual incongruity of some of the preceding representations of Indra.

The reader who is not familiarly acquainted with the hymns of the Veda, either in the original, or by translations, may think that he perceives an incompatibility between the conceptions of the god, which he will find in the different parts of the preceding sketch. And, according to our idea, no doubt, there is an incompatibility. The naïf familiarity with which Indra is treated in some places seems irreconcilable with the lofty ideas of his greatness which other portions express. And more particularly the sensual character, which is generally attributed to the god, appears to be in opposition to the moral perfection which is elsewhere described as an essential feature of his nature. But however incompatible, according to our ideas, they may seem to be, both of these sets of representations occur side by side, in the same hymns; and we must account for their co-existence and juxtaposition by supposing that the ancient Indian poets regarded the deity who was the object of their adoration as anthropopathically partaking, in a higher degree, of the elements, sensuous as well as intellectual and moral, which, on the evidence of their own consciousness, they knew to be equally constituent parts of their own nature. It must be further borne in mind that these ancient authors did not connect the same low associations as we now connect with the sensuous, or even sensual, principle in the character of the god which is exemplified in his love for the exhilarating draughts of his favourite beverage. This is clearly shewn by the high rank which, as we shall hereafter see, they assigned to Soma himself, as the deity in whom this intoxicating influence was personified, and by the power which they ascribed to him of conferring immortality upon his votaries.

And that these apparently incongruous conceptions are not the products of different minds in various stages of development, but of the same poets, may be seen from the following instances. In ii. 15, 2, Indra is said to have fulfilled some of his grandest functions under the influence of the soma-juice: avaṁśe dyām astabhāyad bṛihantam ā rodasī apṛiṇad tutions upon the earth (brahma gām aśvaṁ janayantaḥ oshadhīr vanaspatīn pṛithivīm parvatān apaḥ | sūryaṁ divi rohayantaḥ sudānavaḥ āryā vratā visṛijantaḥ adhi kshami).

antarikṣham | sa dhārayad pṛithivīm paprathach cha somasya tā made Indraś chakāra | "He fixed the heaven in empty space; he filled the two worlds and the air; he supported the earth and spread it out; these things Indra did in the exhilaration of the soma." Similarly in viii. 36, 4, Janitā divo janitā pṛithivyāḥ piba somam madāya kaṁ śatakrato | "Generator of Heaven, generator of the Earth, drink soma to exhilarate thee, o god of mighty force." In viii. 87, 5, as we have seen above, p. 112, Indra is said to hear and see everything. In the seventh verse of the same hymn we are told that the belly of him, the impetuous actor, the slayer of Vṛittra, and drinker of soma, is full of vigour (kratvaḥ it pūrṇam udaram turasya asti vidhataḥ | vṛittraghnaḥ somapāvnaḥ). And in viii. 81, 6, it is said of him: asya pītvā madānāṁ devo devasya ojasā | viśvā 'bhi bhuvanā 'bhavat | "Drinking, a god, of the exhilarating draughts of this god (Soma), he, by his energy, overcame all beings (or worlds)."

(8) Professor Roth's theory of the supersession of the worship of Varuṇa by that of Indra.

Professsor Roth is of opinion that Varuṇa belongs to an older dynasty of gods than Indra, and that during the Vedic age the high consideration originally attaching to the former was in course of being transferred to the latter. In support of his position that Varuṇa's worship was then declining, he urges the circumstance that, in the tenth book of the Rig-veda, which contains the latest productions of that period, there is not a single entire hymn addressed to this deity.[207]

[207] See the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vi. 73; and Böhtlingk and Roth's Sanskrit and German Lexicon, s.v. Indra. Professor Whitney adopts the same view (Journ. Amer. Orient. Society, iii. 327). Windischmann, in his Mithra, p. 54, extends the same remark to that god also. The passage is translated in the 2nd vol. of this work, p. 295. Although, however, there is no hymn in the tenth Maṇḍala addressed exclusively to Varuṇa, there are two, the 126th, of eight verses, and the 185th, of three verses, in which he is invoked along with two of the other Ādityas, Mitra and Aryaman. In only two verses of the former of these hymns is reference made to any other god, viz., to Rudra, the Maruts, and Agni in the verse 5, and Agni in verse 8. Varuṇa is also invoked, or referred to, along with other deities, in numerous single verses of the 10th Maṇḍala, viz., in 8, 5; 10, 6; 11, 1; 12, 8: 14, 7; 30, 1; 31, 9; 35, 10; 36, 1, 3, 12, 13; 37, 1; 51, 2, 4; 61, 17; 63, 9; 64, 5, 12; 65, 1, 5, 8, 9; 66, 2; 70, 11; 75, 2; 83, 2; 84, 7; 85, 17, 24; 89, 8, 9; 93, 4; 97, 16; 98, 1; 99, 10; 103, 9; 109, 2; 113, 5; 123, 6; 124, 4, 5, 7; 125, 1; 130, 5; 132, 2: 147, 5; 167, 3; 173, 5. See the index to Langlois's French translation of the R.V.

I give the substance of his interesting observations:—

The supersession of the one god by the other Roth considers to be a result, or feature, of the gradual modification which the old Arian religion soon began to undergo after it had been transplanted into India. The more supersensuous or spiritual elements of this religion he thinks were preserved, though in a peculiar and somewhat altered form, in the Persian creed, which, at the same time, rejected almost entirely the gods representing the powers of nature, whom it had also inherited from an earlier age. The Indian faith, as found in the Rig-veda, has, on the contrary, according to Roth, begun already to give the preference to these latter deities, to transfer to them an ever-increasing dignity and honour, to draw down the divine life into nature, and to bring it ever closer to man. Proof of this is especially to be found in the development of the myth regarding Indra, a god who, in the earlier period of Arian religious history, either had no existence, or was confined to an obscure province. The Zend legend assigns to another god the function which forms the essence of the later myth concerning Indra. This god Trita, however, disappears in the Indian mythology of tho Vedic age, and is succeeded by Indra. And not only so, but towards the end of this period Indra begins to dislodge even Varuṇa himself, the highest god of the ancient creed, from the position which is shewn, partly by historical testimonies, and partly by the very conception of his character, to belong to him, and becomes, if not the supreme god, at least the national god, whom his encomiasts strive to elevate above the ancient Varuṇa. This process was completed in the post-vedic period, as is shewn already in the Brāhmaṇas and other works of the same era. Indra becomes the chief of the Indian heaven, and maintains this place even in the composite system which adopted into itself the three great gods. The course of the movement was therefore this, that an old god, common to the Arians (i.e. the Persians and Indians), and perhaps also to the entire Indo-Germanic race, Varuṇa-Ormuzd-Uranos, is thrown back into the darkness, and in his room Indra, a peculiarly Indian, and a national god, is intruded. With Varuṇa disappears at the same time the ancient character of the people, while with Indra there was introduced in the same degree a new character, foreign to the primitive Indo-Germanic nature. Viewed in its internal aspect, this modification of the religious conceptions of the Aryas consists in an ever-increasing tendency to attenuate the supersensuous, mysterious side of the creed, until the gods, who were originally the highest and most spiritual, have become unmeaning representatives of nature, Varuṇa being nothing more than the ruler of the sea, and the Ādityas merely regents of the sun's course. This process of degradation naturally led to a reaction. (See the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vi. 76 f.)

The superior antiquity of Varuṇa to Indra may no doubt (as intimated in the passage just quoted), be argued from the fact already noticed of the coincidence of the name of the former with that of the Greek Οὐρανός, which goes some way to prove that a deity of this name was worshipped by the entire Indo-Germanic race before its western branches were separated from the eastern, whilst we shall look in vain for any traces of the name Indra in the Greek mythology.

(9) Supersession of Dyaus by Indra, according to Professors Benfey and Bréal.

It is, however, as I have already intimated, p. 34, the opinion of other writers that Indra was rather the successor of Dyaus than of Varuṇa. Thus in a note (occasioned by the word sthātar) to his translation of R.V. i. 33, 5 (Orient und Occident, i. 48, 1862), Professor Benfey writes: "It may be distinctly shewn that Indra took the place of the god of the heaven, who in the Vedas is invoked in the vocative as Dyaush pitar (R.V. vi. 51, 5). This is proved by the fact that this phrase is exactly reflected in the Latin (Diespiter? and Jupiter (for Dyouspiter) and in the Greek Ζεῦ πατὲρ (which is consequently to be taken for Ζεὺς πατὲρ), as a religious formula fixed, like many others, before the separation of the languages. When the Sanskrit people left the common country where for them, as well as for the other kindred tribes, the brilliant radiance of heaven (divant, part. from div, to shine . . .) appeared to them, in consequence of the climate there prevailing, as the holiest thing, and settled in the sultry India, where the glow of the heaven is destructive, and only its rain operates beneficently, this aspect of the celestial deity must have appeared the most adorable, so that the epithet Pluvius in a certain measure absorbed all the other characteristics of Dyaush pitar. This found its expression in the name Ind-ra, in which we unhesitatingly recognize a word (which arose in some local dialect, and was then diffused with the spread of the worship) standing for sind-ra, which again was derived from syand, 'to drop.' . . .[208] The conceptions which had been attached to Dyaus, Jous, Ζεύς, were then transferred to Indra, and accordingly we find the epithet stator,' which in Latin is attached to Juppiter, applied to him." In this view Professor Benfey is followed by M. Michel Bréal, in his "Hercule et Cacus," p. 101. After giving in Section V. an account of the myth of Indra and Vṛittra, this able writer proceeds in the following section to explain its formation. I translate a few sentences from p. 101: "The first thing which ought to strike us is that the hero of the myth is not the same in the Indian, as in the classical mythology. The name Indra has nothing in common with Zeus; further Indra is an exclusively Indian god, created at an epoch when the ancestors of the European races had been already separated from their brothers in Asia; in reading the Vedas we are in some sort spectators of his first appearance, which nearly coincides with the composition of the earliest hymns. But we have already said that the Vedic mythology is extremely floating, that the attributes of one god are easily transferred to another, and that in place of Indra, other gods are often invoked as the conquerors of Vṛittra. We are authorized then to think that in this myth Indra occupies the place of some more ancient divinity. The name of this god, which we may give with perfect certainty, is Dyaus, or Dyaushpitar, the Heaven, father of beings. Dyaus is the first god of the Indo-European nations: maintained in his supreme rank by the Greeks and Latins, he has fallen from it in the Vedas, although he is there sometimes invoked, chiefly in company with the goddess Pṛithivī (the Earth)."

[208] Professor Müller assigns the same sense to Indra, in his Lectures on Language, ii. 430, note, where he writes: Indra, a name peculiar to India, admits but of one etymology, i.e. it must be derived from the same root, whatever that may be, which in Sanskrit yielded indu, drop, sap. It meant originally the giver of rain, the Jupiter pluvius, a deity in India more often present to the mind of the worshipper than any other. Cf. Benfey, Orient und Occident, vol. i. p. 49." Professor Roth, in his Lexicon, s.v. thinks the word comes from the root in or inv, with the suffix r, preceded by epenthetic d, and means "the overcomer," "the powerful." The old Indian derivations may be found, as he remarks, in Nir. x. 8. See also Sāyaṇa on R.V. i. 34, referred to by Roth, Illust. of Nir., p. 136.

But whatever may be the case as regards Dyaus, the increasing popularity of Indra may, no doubt, as Professor Roth supposes, have tended also to eclipse the lustre of Varuṇa.

(10) Opinions of Professors Roth, Whitney, Spiegel, and Dr. F. Windischmann, on the question whether Varuṇa and Ahura Mazda are historically connected.

If Professor Roth's opinion,[209] that there is not merely an analogy, but an actual historical connection between the Ādityas and the Amshaspands of the Zend Avesta, be well founded, it will be made out that Varuṇa, who is one of the Ādityas, must have been worshipped by the Aryans before the separation of the Persian from the Indian branch of that family. And this conclusion will be confirmed if we adopt the suggestion of Professor Whitney,[210] that Ahura-Mazda is a development of Varuṇa.

I learn, however, from a communication with which I have lately been favoured by Professor Spiegel, of Erlangen, that that eminent Zend scholar is unable to recognize any similarity between Ahura-Mazda and Varuṇa, and considers the connection of the Amshaspands with the Ādityas to be very doubtful.[211] The late Dr. Windischmann [209] Journ. Germ. Orient. Society, vi. 69, 70.

[210] Journal of the American Oriental Society, iii. 327. "Ahura Mazdā, Ormuzd, himself is," he writes, "as is hardly to be doubted, a development of Varuṇa, the Ādityas are correlatives of the Amshaspands, there even exists in the Persian religion the same close connection between Ahura Mazdā and Mithra as in the Indian between Mitra and Varuṇa." There is no doubt that the term Asura, "spirit," which is frequently applied to Varuṇa and to Mitra, and also to Indra and others of the Vedic gods, is the same word which, in its Zend form, Ahura, makes up, with the addition of Mazda, the appellation of the supreme and benevolent deity of the Iranian mythology. Professor Müller regards the names Ahuro Mazdāo as corresponding to the Sanskrit Asuro-medhas, the "wise spirit" (Lectures on the Science of Language, first series, 1st edition, p. 195). See also Professor Benfey's Glossary to the Sāmaveda (1848) s.v. medhas, from which it appears that that scholar had adopted the same identification, and considers the existing reading of R.V. viii. 20, 17, asurasya vedhasaḥ, to be a corruption of asurasya medhasaḥ. But vedhas occurs elsewhere as an epithet of the gods, e.g. of Vishṇu in i. 156, 2, 4. In the last of these verses he is styled mārutasya vedhasaḥ.

[211] In regard to Ahura-Mazda and the Amshaspands, Professor Spiegel has, as he informs me, collected all the positive information he could obtain in the Avesta, in the Introduction to the 3rd vol. of his translation, pp. iii. ff.

also, as Professor Spiegel informs me, held Ahura Mazda to be a purely Iranian god (Zoroastrische Studien, p. 122). And such of the grounds for regarding Varuṇa as an older deity than Indra as might otherwise have been derived from the Zend Avesta, would be a good deal weakened if we could look upon the Indra or Andra of the Zend books as standing for the same god who was known in India under the former name (see Spiegel's Avesta, i. 10), and as representing a deity who had at one time been an object of worship common both to the Indian and Persian Aryans, but who after the separation of the two tribes was degraded by the latter into an evil spirit. For while Indra would thus be proved to have been known before the period of that separation, he might also have been at one time a god held by both divisions of the Āryas in high consideration as well as Varuṇa. I learn, however, from Professor Spiegel, that the materials afforded by the Zend books in reference to this name are not sufficient to afford a basis for any positive conclusions.[212]

(11) Whether there are any passages in the hymns which decisively shew that Indra was superseding Varuṇa.

Beyond the fact noticed by Roth, that Varuṇa is much less frequently mentioned in the last than in the earlier books of the Rig-veda, I have not observed in the hymns themselves anything that can

[212] The identification of Andra with Indra was, as Professor Spiegel tells me, first proposed by Burnouf (Yaśna 526 ff.), where a translation is given of the passage in which Andra is mentioned. It is rendered thus by Spiegel himself, in his Avesta, i. 176: "I fight with Indra, I fight with S'auru, I fight with the Dāeva Naoghaithi, to drive them away from the dwelling, the village, the castle, the country." The name Indra or Andra, as Prof. Spiegel further informs me, occurs only in one other passage (Westergaard, Zendavesta, p. 475), which he (Prof. S.) believes to be interpolated. It contains merely the name, and consequently throws no further light on the position of the god in the Avesta. The information found in the later Parsee books regarding Indra or Andra is also meagre (compare Spiegel's Avesta, ii. 35). On this subject Professor Spiegel makes the following remarks, in the Introduction to the 3rd vol. of his Avesta, p. lxxxi.: "It is said by some that the Andra of the Avesta is the Indra of the Vedas, that Nāoghaithya answers to Nāsatyas, and Saurva to Sarva. Here from a real fact a quite incorrect conclusion is drawn. The names are the same in both religious systems; but how far the things resemble each other can never be shown in the same manner as the similarity of Soma and Haoma, etc.; for the Avesta tells us nothing more than the name of any of the beings in question."

be construed as a decisive proof that the worship of Indra was superseding that of Varuṇa during the period of their composition. It is true that even in the earlier parts of the Veda the number of hymns addressed to the former god is much greater than that in which the latter is celebrated. But I have not discovered any expressions which would distinctly indicate that the popularity of the one was waning, and that of the other increasing. There are, however, some passages which, though they do not afford any clear indications in support of such a supposition, are, at all events, not inconsistent with its correctness. Thus there are several hymns in which Indra is associated with Varuṇa[213] as an object of celebration, and where the two are described as acting in concert, viz., i. 17; iv. 41; iv. 42; vi. 68; vii. 82; vii. 83; vii. 84; vii. 85; etc.; and this association of the two might have arisen from the worshippers of Indra desiring to enhance the dignity of that god by attaching him to the older and more venerable deity. In vii. 34, 24, Varuṇa is said to have Indra for his friend (Varuṇaḥ Indrasakhā), but this cannot well bear the interpretation that some of their worshippers had been in the habit of regarding them as rivals and enemies, as in i. 22, 19, Vishṇu is called the intimate friend of Indra (Indrasya yujyaḥ sakhā). Indra and Varuṇa are called the two monarchs, samrājā, and the supporters of all creatures[214] (i. 17, 1, 2); fixed in their designs, dhṛita-vratā (vi. 68, 10). Varuṇa is supplicated along with Indra to discharge a gleaming and violent thunderbolt against the worshippers' enemy (didyum asminn ojishṭham ugrā ni vadhishṭaṁ vajram, iv. 41, 4), though in most other places (see above) Indra alone is regarded as the thunderer. In vii. 82, 2, it is said that one of the two, Varuṇa, is called samrāṭ, monarch (as he is in various places, see above, p. 60), and the other, Indra, is called svarāṭ, independent ruler (iii. 46, 1, and elsewhere; see i. 61, 9, above); and their separate relations and functions are described in other parts of this and the following hymns, vii. 82, 5: Indrā-varuṇā yad imāni chakrathur viśnā jātāni bhuvanasya majmanā | kshemeṇa Mitro Varuṇaṁ duvasyati Marudbhir ugraḥ śubham anyaḥ īyate | 6 Ajāmim aryaḥ śnathayantam ātirad dabhrebhir anyaḥ pra vṛiṇoti bhūyasaḥ | "Indra

[213] In A.V. iv. 25, 1, 2, Varuṇa and Vishṇu are worshipped together.

[214] Dharttārā charshaṇīnām. The same epithet is applied to Mitra and Varuṇa in v. 67, 2; and Varuṇa is called charshaṇī-dhṛit, "supporter of creatures," in iv. 1, 2.

and Varuṇa, when ye formed all these creatures of the world by your power, Mitra waits upon Varuṇa with tranquility, whilst the other fierce (god i.e. Indra) is resplendent along with the Maruts. 6. The one overcomes the destructive enemy; the other with few repels many." vii. 83, 9: Vṛittrāṇi anyaḥ samitheshu jighnate vratāni anyaḥ abhi rakshate sadā | "The one (Indra) loves to slay enemies in battle; the other (Varuṇa) always maintains his ordinances." vii. 84, 2: Pari no heḷo Varuṇasya vṛiyāḥ uruṁ naḥ Indraḥ kṛiṇavad u lokam | "Do thou remove from us the wrath of Varuṇa; may Indra open to us an ample space." vii. 85, 3: Krishṭīr anyo dhārayati praviktāḥ vṛittrāṇi anyaḥ apratīni hanti | "The one sustains the separate creatures; the other slays unequalled enemies." So, too, their joint action is described in other verses. Thus they are said to have dug the channels of the rivers, to have impelled the sun in the sky (vii. 82, 3: anu apāṁ khāni atṛintam ojasā ā sūryam airayataṁ divi prabhum), and to have made all creatures (ibid. 5). All the other gods are said to have infused strength and vigour into these two in the highest heaven (ibid. 2: viśve devāsaḥ parame vyomani saṁ vām ojo vṛishaṇā sam balaṁ dadhuḥ). These passages are consistent with the supposition that the two gods were felt to have been rivals, and that the author of the hymn sought to reconcile their conflicting claims, but they are not conclusive, for Vishṇu and Indra are also joined together in the same way in some hymns, i. 155; vi. 69; vii. 99, 4 ff. (see the 4th Vol. of this work, pp. 64, 71, 74 ff.); as are also Agni and Indra in others, i. 21; i. 108; i. 109; iii. 12; v. 86; vi. 59; Indra and Vāyu in iv. 46-48; Indra and Pūshan in vi. 57; Indra and Soma in vi. 72; vii. 104.

A number of verses occur in different parts of the Rig-veda (viz. i. 133, 1; iv. 23, 7; v. 2, 3, vii. 18, 16; x. 27, 6; x. 48, 7) in which the epithet anindra, "one who is no worshipper of Indra," is employed; but it does not appear that it is applied to persons who were not worshippers of Indra in particular, as distinguished from other Āryan gods, but either to the aboriginal tribes, who did not worship either him or any other Āryan god, or to irreligious Āryas, or rather, perhaps generally, to evil spirits as the enemies of Indra. In other places (as I have above noticed, p. 104,) we find sceptical doubts expressed regarding Indra.

The twelfth hymn of the second book is devoted to the glorification of Indra. The first and second verses are as follows: 1. Yo jātaḥ eva prathamo manasvān devo devān kratunā paryabhūshat | yasya śushmād rodasī abhyasetāṁ nṛimṇasya mahnā sa janāsaḥ Indraḥ | 2. Yaḥ pṛithivīṁ vyathamānām adṛiṁhad yaḥ parvatān prakupitān aramṇāt | yo antarikshaṁ vimame varīyo yo dyāṁ astabhnāt sa janāsaḥ Indraḥ | "1. He who, as soon as born, the first, the wise, surpassed the gods in force: at whose might the two worlds trembled, through the greatness of his strength, he, o men, is Indra. 2. He who fixed the quivering earth, who settled the agitated mountains, who meted out the vast atmosphere, who established the sky,—he, o men, is Indra." The following verses all end in the same way, by declaring that Indra is he who had performed the several acts, or possessed the various powers, which they specify. This might appear as a polemical assertion, against gainsayers, of Indra's claims to recognition as a fit object of worship.[215]

In x. 48, 11, Indra is introduced as saying: Ādityānāṁ Vasūnāṁ rudriyāṇāṁ devo devānāṁ na mināmi dhāma | te mā bhadrāya śavase tatakshur aparājitam astṛitam ashāḷham | "I, a god, do not assail the rank (or glory) of the Ādityas, the Vasus, or the sons of Rudra, who have fashioned me for glorious power, and made me unconquerable, irreversible, and unassailable."

In viii. 51, 2, it is said: Ayujo asamo nṛibhir ekaḥ kṛishṭīr ayāsyaḥ | purvīr ati pra vavṛidhe viśvā jātāni ojasā ityādi | 7. Viśve te Indra vīryaṁ devāḥ anu kratuṁ daduḥ | 12. Satyam id vai u taṁ vayam Indraṁ stavāma nānṛitam | mahān asunvato vadho bhūri jyotīṁshi sunvataḥ | "2. Without a fellow, unequalled by men, Indra, alone, unconquered, has surpassed in power many tribes and all creatures. 7. All the gods yield to the Indra in valour and strength. 12. May we praise Indra truly and not falsely: great destruction falls upon him who pours out no libations to Indra,[216] while he who does offer them is blessed with abundant light."

In iv. 30, 1 ff. Indra is described as having no superior or equal (Nakir Indra tvad uttaro na jyāyān asti Vṛittrahan | nakir eva yathā

[215] There is another hymn (x. 86), each verse of which ends with the words "Indra is superior to all;" but the drift of the hymn is too obscure to admit of my determining whether it has any polemical tendency or not.

[216] This sentiment appears to be repeated from i. 101, 4.

tvam), and as having alone conquered all the gods in battle. And in vii. 21, 7, it is said that even the former gods subordinated their powers to his divine glory and kingly dignity (devāś chit te asuryyāya pūrve anu kshattrāya mamire sahāṁsi). In the following passages (formerly quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 85 ff.), it is said that all of the gods are unable to frustrate the mighty deeds and counsels of Indra (ii. 32, 4); that no one, whether god or man, either surpasses or equals him (vi. 30, 4); that no one, celestial or terrestrial, has been born, or shall be born, like to him (vii. 32, 23); and that by battle he has acquired ample space (or wealth) for the gods (vii. 98, 3). It is even said (i. 101, 3) that Varuṇa and Sūrya are subject to the command of Indra (yasya vrate Varuṇo yasya Sūryaḥ); and in x. 89, 8, 9, the latter is besought to destroy the enemies of Mitra, Aryaman, and Varuṇa (thereby evincing, of course, his superiority to those three gods) (pra ye Mitrasya Varuṇasya dhāma yujaṁ na janāḥ minanti Mitram | 9. Pra ye Mitram pra Aryamaṇaṁ durevāḥ pra sangiraḥ pra Varuṇam minanti | ni amitreshu vadham Indra tumraṁ vṛishan vṛishāṇam arushaṁ śiśīhi).

All these texts, however, which are so laudatory of Indra, may be paralleled in the Rig-veda, not only by similar ones referring to Mitra and Varuṇa (as we have seen above), but also by a farther set of texts, in which other gods are magnified in the same style of panegyric. This is in accordance with the practice of the Indian poets to exaggerate[217] (in a manner which renders them often mutually inconsistent) the attributes of the particular deity who happens at the moment to be the object of celebration. Thus in ii. 38, 9, it is said that neither Indra, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, nor Rudra can resist the ordinance of Savitṛi (na yasya Indro Varuṇo na Mitro vratam Aryamā na minanti Rudraḥ); and in vii. 38, 4, that the divine Aditi, and the kings Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman unite to magnify the same deity (abhi yaṁ devī Aditiḥ gṛiṇāti savaṁ devasya Savitur jushāṇā | abhi samrājo Varuṇo gṛiṇanti abhi Mitrāso Aryamā sajoshāḥ). Again, in i. 156, 4, it is declared that king Varuṇa and the Aśvins submit to the power of Vishṇu (tam asya rājā Varuṇas tam Aśvinā kratum sachante Mārutasya vedhasaḥ). In i. 141, 9, Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman are said to triumph through Agni when he blazes forth (tvayā hi Agne Varuṇo dhṛitavrato Mitraḥ śāśadre Aryamā). In iv. 5, 4, the same god is besought to consume those enemies who menace the stable abodes[218] of Varuṇa and the wise Mitra (pra tān Agnir babhasat . . . pra ye minanti Varuṇasya dhāma priyā Mitrasya chetato dhruvāṇi). If, therefore, we were to infer from passages like i. 101, 3 (which declares Varuṇa and Sūrya to be subject to Indra), that the worship of Indra was beginning to gain ground on that of Varuṇa, we should have, in like manner, to conclude from the other texts just cited, that the worship of Savitṛi, or Vishṇu, or Agni, was beginning to supersede that of all the other deities who are there subordinated to them, not excepting Indra himself.

[217] See Müller's Anc. Ind. Lit. pp. 532 ff.

(12) Indra as represented in the hymns;—a metrical sketch.

In the following verses I have endeavoured to combine in one picture the most salient and characteristic points in the representations of Indra, which are contained in the hymns. It will be seen that some parts of the sketch are translations, nearly literal, of verses occurring there; that other portions are condensed summaries of epithets, or descriptions, which are by far too numerous and too similar to each other to be all reproduced in detail; and that a third class of passages contains an amplification, and not an approximate rendering, of the texts of the original on which they are founded.

(1) Invitation of Indra to the sacrifice.

Hear, Indra, mighty Thunderer, hear,
Bright regent of the middle sphere;
List while we sweetly sing thy praise,
In new, and well-constructed, lays,
Hymns deftly framed by poet skilled,
As artizans a chariot build.
Come, Indra, come, thou much-invoked,
Our potent hymn thy steeds has yoked;
Thy golden car already waits
Thy pleasure at thy palace-gates:

[218] Ordinances.—Roth, s.v. dhāman.

Friend Indra, from the sky descend,
Thy course propitious hither bend;
Come straight, and may no rival priest
Prevail to draw thee from our feast.
Let no one catch thee unawares,
Like bird the artful fowler snares.
All is prepared; the Soma draught
Is sweet as thou hast ever quaffed;
And we will feed with corn, and tend,
Thy coursers at their journey's end.
But, Indra, though of us thou thinkest,
And our libations gladly drinkest,
We, mortal men, can only share
A humble portion of thy care.
We know how many potent ties
Enchain thee in thy paradise.
Thou hast at home a lovely wife,
The charm and solace of thy life;
Thou hast a ceaseless round of joys,
Which all thy circling hours employs—
Joys such as gods immortal know,
Unguessed by mortals here below.
But, brother Indra, come, benign,
Accept our gifts, thou friend divine.
Come, Indra, come in eager haste,
Our hymns to hear, our food to taste,
Like lover lured by female charms,
Who rushes to his mistress' arms.
Accept our sweet and grateful song;
Come, we will not detain thee long.

(2) Indra's birth.

Hear, Indra, while thy birth we sing,
The deeds, thy greatness, glorious king.
Old father Sky[219] and mother Earth
Both quaked, confounded at thy birth.

[219] Dyaus = Ζεύς.

The Sky exclaimed, at that great sight,
"Thy father was a stalwart wight;
Of most consummate skill was he,
The god whose genius fashioned thee."
This infant of unrivalled force
Sprang forth from a transcendant source.
A blessed mother bore the child,
And fondly on her offspring smiled,
Foretelling then, with pride and joy,
The might and glory of the boy.
He needed not a tedious length
Of autumns to mature his strength;
His force he felt as soon as born,
And laughed all hostile powers to scorn.
Grasping his deadly shafts, in pride
Of prowess, thus the infant cried:—
"Where, mother, dwell those warriors fierce Whose haughty hearts these bolts must pierce?"
And when thy father proved thy foe,
Thy fury, Indra, laid him low.
Who vainly sought thy life to take,
When thou didst sleep, when thou didst wake?
Who, Indra, in his vengeful mood,
Thy mother doomed to widowhood?
What god stood by, thy wrath to fire,
When, seizing by the foot thy sire,
Thou smot'st him dead, in youthful ire?

(3) Indra's arrival.

Fulfilling now our ardent prayer,
The god approaches through the air.
On, on, he comes, majestic, bright,
Our longed-for friend appears in sight.
His brilliant form, beheld afar,
Towers stately on his golden car.
Fair sunlike lustre, godlike grace,
And martial fire illume his face.

Yet not one form alone he bears,
But various shapes of glory wears,
His aspects changing at his will,
Transmuted, yet resplendent still.
In warlike semblance see him stand,
Red lightnings wielding in his hand.
The heavenly steeds, his shining team,
With all the peacock's colours gleam.
Resistless, snorting, on they fly,
As swift as thought, across the sky;
And soon bring nigh their mighty lord,
To us, his friends, a friend adored.
Now Indra from the sky descends;
Yes, yes, to us his way he wends.
Although we see him not, we know
He now is present here below.
Within our hallowed precincts placed,
He longs our grateful feast to taste.

(4) Indra invited to drink the Soma draught.

Thou, Indra, oft of old hast quaffed
With keen delight our Soma draught.
All gods the luscious Soma love,
But thou all other gods above.
Thy mother knew how well this juice
Was fitted for her infant's use.
Into a cup she crushed the sap,
Which thou didst sip upon her lap.
Yes, Indra, on thy natal morn,
The very hour that thou wast born,
Thou didst those jovial tastes display
Which still survive in strength to-day.
And once, thou prince of genial souls,
Men say thou drainedst thirty bowls.
To thee the soma-draughts proceed,
As streamlets to the lake they feed,
Or rivers to the ocean speed.

Our cup is foaming to the brim
With Soma pressed to sound of hymn.
Come, drink, thy utmost craving slake,
Like thirsty stag in forest lake,
Or bull that roams in arid waste,
And burns the cooling brook to taste.
Indulge thy taste, and quaff at will;
Drink, drink again, profusely swill,
Drink, thy capacious stomach fill.

(5) Praise of Soma.

This Soma is a god; he cures
The sharpest ills that man endures.
He heals the sick, the sad he cheers,
He nerves the weak, dispels their fears,
The faint with martial ardour fires,
With lofty thoughts the bard inspires,
The soul from earth to heaven he lifts;
So great and wondrous are his gifts.
Men feel the god within their veins,
And cry in loud exulting strains:
"We've quaffed the Soma bright,
And are immortal grown;
We've entered into light,
And all the gods have known.
What mortal now can harm,
Or foeman vex us more?
Through thee beyond alarm,
Immortal god, we soar."
The gods themselves with pleasure feel
King Soma's influence o'er them steal;
And Indra once, as bards have told,
Thus sang in merry mood of old:—

(6) Indra's drinking-song.

"Yes, yes, I will be generous now,
And grant the bard a horse and cow:

I've quaffed the soma-draught.
These draughts impel me with the force
Of blasts that sweep in furious course:
I've quaffed the soma-draught.
They drive me like a car that speeds,
When whirled along by flying steeds.
These hymns approach me fondly now,
As hastes to calf the mother-cow.
I turn them over as I muse,
As carpenter the log he hews.
The tribes of men, the nations all,
I count as something very small.
Both worlds, how vast soe'er they be,
Don't equal even the half of me.
The heaven in greatness I surpass,
And this broad earth, though vast her mass,
Come, let me as a plaything seize,
And toss her wheresoe'er I please.
Come, let me smite with vigorous blow,
And send her flying to and fro.
My half is in the heavenly sphere,
I've drawn the other half down here.
How great my glory and my power!
Aloft into the skies I tower.
I'm ready now to mount in air,
Oblations to the gods to bear:
I've quaffed the Soma-draught.[220]

(7) Indra drinks the libation.

And not in vain the mortal prays,
For nothing loth the god obeys,
The proffered bowl he takes;
Well trained the generous juice to drain,
He quaffs it once, he quaffs again,
Till all his thirst he slakes.

[220] This "drinking song" is a translation, as we have already seen, p. 91, nearly literal, of the 119th hymn of the 10th Book of the Rig-veda.

And soon its power the Soma shows,
Through Indra's veins the influence flows,
With fervour flushed he stands;
His forehead glows, his eyes are fired,
His mighty frame with force inspired,
His towering form expands.
He straightway calls his brave allies,
To valorous deeds exhorts, and cries—
"Stride, Vishṇu, forward stride;
Come, Maruts, forth with me to war,
See yonder Vṛittra stands afar,
And waits the coming of my car;
We soon shall crush his pride."

(8) Indra, attended by the Maruts, sets out to encounter Vṛittra.

Amid the plaudits, long and loud,
Which burst from all the heavenly crowd,
Charmed by the sweet and magic sound
Of hymns pronounced by bards renowned,
Viewed by admiring troops of friends,
The valiant god his car ascends.
Swept by his fervid bounding steeds,
Athwart the sky the hero speeds.
The Marut-hosts his escort form,
Impetuous spirits of the storm.
On flashing lightning-cars they ride,
And gleam in warlike pomp and pride:
Each head a golden helmet crests,
And glittering mail adorns their breasts;
Spears on their shoulders rest, their hands
Bear arrows, bows, and lightning-brands.
Bright tinkling anklets deck their feet,
And thought than they is not more fleet;
Like lions' roar their voice of doom;
With iron force their teeth consume.
The hills, the earth itself, they shake,
All creatures at their coming quake;

Their headlong fury none can stay,
All obstacles are swept away.
The forest's leafy monarchs tall
Before their onset crashing fall,
As when in fierce destructive mood
Wild elephants invade a wood.

(9) Indra's conflict with Vṛittra.

Who is it that, without alarm,
Defies the might of Indra's arm;
That stands and sees without dismay
The approaching Maruts' dread array;
That does not shun, in wild affright,
The terrors of the deadly fight?
'Tis Vṛittra,[221] he whose magic powers
From earth withhold the genial showers,
Of mortal men the foe malign,
And rival of the race divine,
Whose demon hosts from age to age
With Indra war unceasing wage,
Who, times unnumbered, crushed and slain,
Is ever newly born again,
And evermore renews the strife
In which again he forfeits life.
Perched on a steep aerial height,
Shone Vṛittra's stately fortress bright.
Upon the wall, in martial mood,
The bold gigantic demon stood,
Confiding in his magic arts,
And armed with store of fiery darts.
And then was seen a dreadful sight,
When god and demon met in fight.
His sharpest missiles Vṛittra shot,
His thunderbolts and lightnings hot
He hurled as thick as rain.

221 The demon who personifies drought, and is also called S'ushṇa and Ahi.

The god his fiercest rage defied,
His blunted weapons glanced aside,
  At Indra launched in vain.
When thus he long had vainly toiled,
When all his weapons had recoiled,
His final efforts had been foiled,
  And all his force consumed,—
In gloomy and despairing mood
The baffled demon helpless stood,
  And knew his end was doomed.
The lightnings then began to flash,
The direful thunderbolts to crash,
  By Indra proudly hurled.
The gods themselves with awe were stilled
And stood aghast, and terror filled
  The universal world.
Even Tvashṭri sage, whose master-hand
Had forged the bolts his art had planned,
  Who well their temper knew,— Quailed when he heard the dreadful clang
That through the quivering welkin rang,
  As o'er the sky they flew.
And who the arrowy shower could stand,
Discharged by Indra's red right hand,—
The thunderbolts with hundred joints,
The iron shafts with thousand points,
Which blaze and hiss athwart the sky,
Swift to their mark unerring fly,
And lay the proudest foemen low,
With sudden and resistless blow,
Whose very sound can put to flight
The fools who dare the Thunderer's might?
And soon the knell of Vṛittra's doom
Was sounded by the clang and boom
  Of Indra's iron shower;
Pierced, cloven, crushed, with horrid yell,
The dying demon headlong fell

Down from his cloud-built tower.
Now bound by Sushṇa's spell no more,
The clouds discharge their liquid store;
And, long by torrid sunbeams baked,
The plains by copious showers are slaked;
The rivers swell, and sea-ward sweep
Their turbid torrents broad and deep.
The peasant views, with deep delight
And thankful heart, the auspicious sight.
His leafless fields, so sere and sad,
Will soon with waving crops be clad,
And mother Earth, now brown and bare,
A robe of brilliant green will wear.
And now the clouds disperse, the blue
Of heaven once more comes forth to view.
The sun shines out, all nature smiles,
Redeemed from Vṛittra's power and wiles;
The gods, with gratulations meet,
And loud acclaim, the victor greet;
While Indra's mortal votaries sing
The praises of their friend and king.
The frogs, too, dormant long, awake,
And floating on the brimming lake,
In loud responsive croak unite,
And swell the chorus of delight.

(10) Indra's greatness.

What poet now, what sage of old,
The greatness of that god hath told,
Who from his body vast gave birth
To father Sky and mother Earth;
Who hung the heavens in empty space,
And gave the earth a stable base;
Who framed and lighted up the sun,
And made a path for him to run;
Whose power transcendent, since their birth
Asunder holds the heaven and earth,

As chariot-wheels are kept apart
By axles framed by workmen's art?
In greatness who with Him can vie,
Who fills the earth, the air, the sky,
Whose presence unperceived extends Beyond the world's remotest ends?
A hundred earths, if such there be,
A hundred skies fall short of thee;
A thousand suns would not outshine
The effulgence of thy light divine.
The worlds, which mortals boundless deem,
To thee but as a handful seem.
Thou, Indra, art without a peer
On earth, or yonder heavenly sphere.
Thee, god, such matchless powers adorn,
That thou without a foe wast born.
Thou art the universal lord,
By gods revered, by men adored.
Should all the other gods conspire,
They could not frustrate thy desire.
The circling years, which wear away
All else, to thee bring no decay;
Thou bloomest on in youthful force,
While countless ages run their course.
Unvexed by cares, or fears, or strife,
In bliss serene flows on thy life.

(11) Indra's relations to his worshippers.

Thou, Indra, art a friend, a brother,
A kinsman dear, a father, mother.
Though thou hast troops of friends, yet we Can boast no other friend but thee.
With this our hymn thy skirt we grasp,
As boys their father's garments clasp;
Our ardent prayers thy form embrace,
As women's arms their lords enlace;

They round thee cling with gentle force,
Like saddle-girth around a horse.
With faith we claim thine aid divine,
For thou art ours, and we are thine.
Thou art not deaf; though far away,
Thou hearest all, whate'er we pray.
And be not like a lazy priest,
Who battens at the dainty feast,
Sits still in self-indulgent ease,
And only cares himself to please.
Come, dole not out with niggard hand
The brilliant boons at thy command.
Thy gracious hands are wont to grant
Profusely all thy servants want.
Why is it, then, thou sittest still,
And dost not now our hopes fulfil?
If I were thou, and thou wert I,
My suppliant should not vainly cry.
Wert thou a mortal, I divine,
In want I ne'er would let thee pine.
Had I, like thee, unbounded power,
I gifts on all my friends would shower.
Shed wealth, as trees, when shaken, rain
Their ripe fruit down upon the plain.
Thy strong right hand, great god, we hold
With eager grasp, imploring gold.
Thou canst our longings all fulfil;
If such shall only be thy will.
Like headlong bull's, thy matchless force
Strikes all things down that bar thy course.
Art thou to gracious acts inclined?
Then who shall make thee change thy mind?
Abundant aids shoot forth from thee,
As leafy boughs from vigorous tree.
To wifeless men thou givest wives,
And joyful mak'st their joyless lives.

Thou givest sons, courageous, strong,
To guard their aged sires from wrong.
Lands, jewels, horses, herds of kine,—
All kinds of wealth are gifts of thine.
Thy friend is never slain; his might
Is never worsted in the fight.
Yes, those who in the battle's shock,
Thine aid, victorious god, invoke,
With force inspired, with deafening shout
Of triumph, put their foes to rout.
Thou blessest those thy praise who sing,
And plenteous gifts devoutly bring;
But thou chastisest all the proud,
The niggard, and the faithless crowd,
Who thine existence doubt, and cry
In scorn, "No Indra rules on high."
The rich can ne'er thy favourites be,
The rich who never think of thee.
When storms are lulled, and skies are bright,
Wine-swillers treat thee with despite.
When clouds collect and thunders roar,
The scoffers tremble and adore.
No deed is done but thou dost see;
No word is said unheard by thee.
The fates of mortals thou dost wield;
To thy decree the strongest yield.
Thou dost the high and fierce abase,
The lowly raisest in their place.
But thy true friends secure repose,
By thee redeemed from all their woes,
From straits brought forth to ample room,
To glorious light from thickest gloom.
And thou dost view with special grace,
The fair-complexioned Aryan race,
Who own the gods, their laws obey,
And pious homage duly pay.

Thou giv'st us horses, cattle, gold,
As thou didst give our sires of old.
Thou sweep'st away the dark-skinned brood,
Inhuman, lawless, senseless, rude,
Who know not Indra, hate his friends,
And spoil the race which he defends.
Chase, far away the robbers chase,
Slay those barbarians black and base;
And save us, Indra, from the spite
Of sprites that haunt us in the night,
Our rites disturb by contact vile,
Our hallowed offerings defile.
Preserve us, friend, dispel our fears,
And let us live a hundred years.
And when our earthly course we've run,
And gain'd the region of the Sun,
Then let us live in ceaseless glee,
Sweet nectar quaffing there with thee.

SECTION VII.

PARJANYA.

The following hymn, R.V. v. 83, affords a picturesque description of Parjanya, the thundering rain-god:

v. 83, 1. Achha vada tavasaṁ gīrbhir ābhiḥ stuhi Parjanyaṁ namasā āvivāsa | kanikradad vṛishabho jīradānuḥ reto dadhāti oshadhīshu garbham | 2. Vi vṛikshān hanti uta hanti rakshaso viśvam bibhāya bhuvanam mahāvadhāt | uta anāgāḥ īshate vṛishṇyāvato yat Parjanyaḥ stanayan hanti dushkṛitaḥ | 3. Rathīva kaśayā 'śvān abhikshipann āvir dūtān kṛiṇute varshyān aha | dūrāt siṁhasya stanathāḥ ud īrate yat Parjanyaḥ kṛiṇute varshyaṁ nabhaḥ | 4. Pra vātāḥ vānti patayanti vidyutaḥ ud oshadhīr jihate pinvate svaḥ | irā viśvasmai bhuvanāya jāyate yat Parjanyaḥ pṛithivīṁ retasā 'vati | 5. Yasya vrate pṛithivī namnamīti yasya vrate śaphavaj jarbhurīti | yasya vrate oshadhīr viśvarūpāḥ sa naḥ Parjanya mahi śarma yachha | 6. Ḍivo no vṛishṭim Maruto rarīdhvam pra pinvata vṛishṇo aśvasya dhārāḥ | arvāṁ etena stanayitnunā ā ihi apo nishinchann asuraḥ pitā naḥ | 7. Abhi kranda stanaya garbham ā dhāḥ udanvatā pari dīya rathena | dṛitiṁ su karsha nishitam nyañcam samāḥ bhavantu udvato nipādāḥ | 8. Mahāntaṁ kośam ud acha nishincha syandantāṁ kulyāḥ vishitāḥ purastāt | ghṛitena dyāvā-pṛithivī vi undhi suprapāṇam bhavatu aghnyābhyaḥ | 9. Yat Parjanya kanikradat stanayan haṁsi dushkṛitaḥ | prati idaṁ viśvam modate yat kincha pṛithivyām adhi | 10. Avarshīr varsham ud u su gṛibhāya akar dhanvāni ati etavai u | ajījanaḥ oshadhīr bhojanāya kam uta prajābhyo avido manīshām |

1. "Address the powerful (god) with these words; laud Prajanya; worship him with reverence: the procreative and stimulating fructifier, resounding, sheds his seed and impregnates the plants. 2. He splits the trees, he destroys the Rakshases; the whole creation is afraid of the mighty stroke; even the innocent man flees before the vigorous god, when Parjanya thundering smites the evil doers.[222] 3. Like a charioteer urging forward his horses with a whip, the god brings into view his showery scouts. From afar the lion's roarings arise, when Parjanya charges the clouds with rain. 4. The winds blow, the lightnings fall, the plants shoot up; the heaven fructifies; food is produced for all created things, when Parjanya, thundering, replenishes the earth with moisture. 5. Parjanya, before whose agency the earth bows down, at whose operation all hoofed cattle quiver; by whose action plants (spring up) of every form; do thou grant us thy mighty protection. 6. Grant to us, Maruts, the rain of the sky; replenish the streams of the procreative horse; come hither with this thy thunder, our divine father, shedding waters. 7. Resound, thunder, impregnate, rush hither and thither with thy watery chariot. Draw on forward with thee thy opened and inverted water-skin; let the hills and dales be levelled. 8. Raise aloft thy vast water-vessel, and pour down showers; let the discharged rivulets roll on forward; moisten the heaven and earth with fatness; let there be well-filled drinking-places for the cows. 9. When thou, Parjanya, resounding and thundering, dost slay the evil-doers, the whole universe rejoices, whatever lives upon the earth. 10. Thou hast shed down rain; now desist; thou hast made the waterless wastes fit to be traversed; thou hast generated plants for food, and thou hast fulfilled the desires of living creatures."[223]

Parjanya is also celebrated in two other hymns of the Rig-veda, viz., vii. 101, 102. The latter consists of only three verses, and the former is less spirited and poetical than that which I have translated. It assigns to Parjanya, however, several grander epithets and functions than are found in the other, as it represents this deity as the lord of all moving creatures (vii. 101, 2: yo viśvasya jagato devaḥ īśe); declares [222] There does not seem to be any sufficient reason to understand evildoers here, and in verse 9, of the cloud demons, who withold rain, or simply of the malignant clouds, as Sāyaṇa in his explanation of verse 9 (pāpakṛito meghān) does. The poet may naturally have supposed that it was exclusively or principally the wicked who were struck down by thunderbolts. Dr. Bühler thinks the cloud-demons are meant (Orient und Occident, i. 217, note 2).

[223] This last clause is translated according to Professor Roth's explanation, s.v. manīshā. Wilson, following Sāyaṇa, renders "verily thou hast obtained laudation from the people," and Dr. Bühler gives the same sense: "thou hast received praise from the creatures." Prajābhyaḥ may of course be either a dative or ablative.

that all worlds (or creatures), and the three spheres abide in him (ibid. 4: yasmin viśvāni bhuvanāni tasthus tisro dyāvaḥ); that in him is the soul of all things moving and stationary[224] (ibid. 6: tasminn ātmā jagataś tastushaś cha); and designates him as the independent monarch (ibid. 5: svarāje). In vii. 102, 1, he is called the son of Dyaus or the Sky (Divas putrāya). Parjanya is also mentioned in various detached verses in the R.V., viz. iv. 57, 8; v. 63, 4, 6; vi. 52, 6; vii. 35, 10; viii. 6, 1; viii. 21, 18; ix. 2, 9; ix. 22, 2; x. 66, 6; x. 98, 1, 8; x. 169, 2. In vi. 49, 6; vi. 50, 12; x. 65, 9; x. 66, 10, he is conjoined with Vāta the wind (Parjanya-vātā, Vātā-parjanyā), and in vi. 52, 16, with Agni (Agniparjanyau). In ix. 82, 3, he is called the father of the great leafy plant soma (Parjanyaḥ pitā mahishasya parṇinaḥ | compare ix. 113, 3).

Parjanya forms the subject of two papers by Dr. G. Bühler, the one in English in the Transactions of the London Philological Society for 1859, pp. 154 ff., and the other in German in Benfey's Orient und Occident, vol. i. (1862) pp. 214 ff. The latter of these papers is not however, a translation of the former. The former contains an English version of the hymns R.V. v. 83; vii. 101, and vii. 102; to which the German article adds a translation of A.V. iv. 15, a hymn consisting of sixteen verses. The English paper contains a comparison of Parjanya with the Lithuanian god Perkunas, the god of thunder, which is not reproduced in the German essay. Dr. Bühler holds Parjanya to have been decidedly distinct from Indra (Transact. Phil. Soc. p. 167, and Or. und Occ. 229). In the English paper he says (p. 161): "Taking a review of the whole, we find that Parjanya is a god who presides over the lightning, the thunder, the rain, and the procreation of plants and living creatures. But it is by no means clear whether he is originally a god of the rain, or a god of the thunder." He inclines however to think that from the etymology of his name, and the analogy between him and Perkunas, he was originally the thunder-god (pp. 161–167). In his German essay, his conclusion is (p. 226) that Parjanya is "the god of thunderstorms and rain, the generator and nourisher of plants and living creatures."

[224] Compare i. 115, 1, where the same thing is said of Sūrya.

SECTION VIII.

VĀYU.

Vāyu, the wind, as we have already seen, is often associated with Indra. See also i. 2, 4; i. 14, 3; i. 23, 2; i. 135, 4 ff. (ā vāṁ ratho niyutvān vakshad avase abhi prayāṁsi sudhitāni vītaye vāyo havyāni vītaye | pibatam madhvo andhasaḥ pūrvapeyaṁ hi vāṁ hitam | "Let your car with team of horses bring you to our aid; and to the offerings which are well-arranged for eating; Vāyu, the oblations (are well-arranged) for eating. Drink of the soma, for to you twain belongs the right to take the first draught;" and see the next verse); i. 139, 1; ii. 41, 3; iv. 46, 2 ff.; iv. 47, 2 ff.; v. 51, 4, 6 f.; vii. 90, 5 ff.; vii. 91, 4 ff.; x. 65, 9; x. 141, 4. The two gods appear to have been regarded by the ancient expositors of the Veda as closely connected with each other; for the Nairuktas, as quoted by Yāska (Nirukta, vii. 5), while they fix upon Agni and Sūrya as the representatives of the terrestrial and celestial gods respectively, speak of Vāyu and Indra in conjunction, as deities, either of whom may represent those of the intermediate sphere: Tisraḥ eva devatāḥ iti Nairuktāḥ Agniḥ pṛithivī-sthāno Vāyur vā Indro vā antarikshа-sthānaḥ sūryo dyu-sthānaḥ | "There are three gods according to the Nairuktas, viz., Agni, whose place is on earth, Vāyu, or Indra, whose place is in the air, and Sūrya, whose place is in the heaven," etc.

Vāyu does not occupy a very prominent place in the Rig-veda. If we except the allegorical description in the Purusha Sūkta, x. 90, 13, where he is said to have sprung from the breath of Purusha (prāṇād Vāyur ajāyata), or unless we understand vii. 90, 3 (rāye nu yaṁ jajnatuḥ rodasī ime | "He whom the two worlds generated for wealth") to assert that he was produced by heaven and earth, I am aware of no passage where the parentage of Vāyu is declared. He is, however, said to be the son-in-law of Tvashṭṛi (viii. 26, 21 f. tava Vāyo ṛitaspate Tvashṭur jāmātar adbhuta | avāṁsi ā vṛiṇīmahe | 22. Tvashṭur jāmātaraṁ vayaṁ īśānaṁ rāyaḥ īmahe | sutāvanto Vāyuṁ dyumnā janāsaḥ | 21. "We ask thy succours, o Vāyu, lord of rites, wondrous son-in-law of Tvashṭṛi. 22. We men offering libations resort to Vāyu, Tvashṭṛi's son-in-law, the lord of wealth, and seek for splendour"); but his wife's name is not given.[225] But few epithets are applied to him. He is called darśata, "sightly," "beautiful," or "conspiuous" (i. 2, 1), and supsarastama, "most handsome in form" (viii. 26, 24). He is naturally described as krandad-ishṭi, "rushing noisily onwards" (x. 100, 2). Together with Indra, he is designated as touching the sky, swift as thought, wise, thousand-eyed (divispṛiśā, manojavā, viprā, sahasrākshā, i. 23, 2, 3). He moves in a shining car, drawn by a pair of red or purple horses (i. 134, 3: Vāyur yunkte rohitā Vāyur aruṇā), or by several teams of horses, chandreṇa rathena, niyutvatā rathena (iv. 48, 1; i. 134, 1; i. 135, 4; iv. 47, 1), His team is often said to consist of ninety-nine, of a hundred, or even of a thousand horses, yoked by his will, i. 135, 1, 3 (sahasreṇa niyutā | niyudbhiḥ śatinībhiḥ | sahasriṇībhiḥ |); ii. 41, 1 (sahasriṇo rathāsaḥ); iv. 48, 4, 5 (vahantu tvā manoyujo yuktāso navatir nava); vii. 91, 6; vii. 92, 1, 5. As before mentioned (p. 85), Indra and Vāyu frequently occupy the same chariot, iv. 46, 2; iv. 48, 2 (Indra-sārathiḥ | Vāyo); vii. 91, 5 (Indravāyū sarathaṁ yātam arvāk), which has its framework of gold, which touches the sky, and is drawn by a thousand horses, iv. 46, 3, 4 (ā vāṁ sahasraṁ harayaḥ Indravāyū abhi prayaḥ | vahantu somapītaye | rathaṁ hiraṇyavandhuram[226] Indravāyū svadharam | ā hi sthātho divispṛiśam). Vāyu, like the other gods, is a drinker of soma. In fact, he alone, or in conjunction with Indra, was, by the admission of the other gods, entitled to the first draught of this libation, i. 134, 1; i. 135, 1, 4 (tubhyaṁ hi pūrvapītaye devāḥ devāya yemire | 4. Pūrvapeyaṁ hi vāṁ hitam); iv. 46, 1 (tvaṁ hi pūrvapāḥ asi); v. 43, 3; vii. 92, 2 (pra yad vāṁ madhvaḥ agriyam bharanti adhvaryavaḥ); viii. 26, 25.[227] It is

[225] Sāyaṇa gives no help. He merely says: eshā kathā itihāsādibhir avagantavyā | "This story is to be learned from the Itihasas, etc." In the Section on Tvashṭṛi we shall see that according to R.V. x. 17, 1 f. he had a daughter called Saraṇyu, who was the wife of Vivasvat; but Vivasvat is not identical with Vāyu.

[226] Regarding the word vandhura see a note in the Section on the Aśvins.

[227] On this subject we find the following story in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 25:

remarkable that Vāyu is but rarely connected with the Maruts or deities of the storm; but in one place (i. 134, 4) he is said to have begotten them from the rivers of heaven (ajanayo Maruto vakshaṇābhyo divaḥ ā vakshaṇābhyaḥ); and in another place (i. 142, 12) to be attended by Pūshan, the Maruts and the Viśve devas (Pūshaṇvate Marutvate viśvadevāya Vāyave).

The following hymns are addressed to Vāta (another name of the god of the wind). The imagery in the first is highly poetical:

x. 168, 1. Vātasya nu mahimānam rathasya rujann eti stanayann asya ghoshaḥ | divispṛig yāti aruṇāni kṛiṇvann uto eti pṛithivyāḥ reṇum asyan | 2. Sam prerate anu vātasya vishṭhāḥ ā enaṁ gachhanti samanaṁ na yoshāḥ | tābhiḥ sayuk sarathaṁ devaḥ īyate asya viśvasya bhuvanasya rājā | 3. Antarikshe pathibhir īyamāno na ni viśate katamach chana ahaḥ | apāṁ sakhā prathamajāḥ ṛitāvā kva svij jātaḥ kutaḥ ābabhūva | ātmā devānām bhuvanasya garbho yathāvaśaṁ charati devaḥ eshaḥ | ghoshāḥ id asya śṛiṇvire na rūpaṁ tasmai Vātāya havishā vidhema |

"1. (I celebrate) the glory of Vāta's chariot; its noise comes rending and resounding. Touching the sky, he moves onward, making all things ruddy: and he comes propelling the dust of the earth. 2. The gusts (?) of the air rush after him, and congregate in him as womon in an assembly. Sitting along with them on the same car, the god, who is king of this universe, is borne along. 3. Hasting forward, by paths in the atmosphere, he never rests on any day. Friend of the waters, first-born, holy, in what place was he born? whence has he sprung? 4. Soul of the gods, source of the universe, this deity moves as he lists.[228] His sounds have been heard, but his form is not (seen): this Vāta let us worship with an oblation."

Devāḥ vai Somasya rājno 'grapeye na samapādayann "aham prathamaḥ pibeyam" "aham prathamaḥ pibeyam" ity eva akāmayanta | te sampādayanto 'bruvan "hanta ājim iyāma sa yo naḥ ujjeshyati sa prathamaḥ somasya pāsyati" iti | "tathā" iti | te ājim ayuḥ | teshām ājiṁ yatām abhisṛishṭānāṁ Vāyur mukham prathamaḥ pratyapadyata atha Indro 'tha Mitrāvaruṇāv atha Aśvinau | so 'ved Indro Vāyum ud vai jayati iti tam anu parāpatat | sa ha "nāv atha ujjayāva" iti | sa "na" ity abravīd "aham eva ujjeshyāmi" iti | "tṛitīyam me 'tha ujjayāva" iti | "na" iti ha eva abravīd "aham eva ujjeshyāmi" iti | "turīyam me 'tha ujjayāva iti | "tathā" iti | taṁ turīye 'tyājata | tat turīya-bhāg Indro 'bhavat tribhāg Vāyuḥ | tau saha eva Indravāyū udajayatāṁ saha Mitrāvaruṇau saha Aśvinau | "The gods did not agree in regard to the first draught of king Soma; but each of them desired, 'Let me drink first,' 'let me drink first." But coming to an arrangement, they said: 'Come, let us run a race, and the victor shall first drink the Soma.' 'Agreed,' said they all. They ran a race accordingly; and when they started and ran, Vāyu first reached the goal, then Indra, then Mitra and Varuṇa, and last the Aśvins. Indra thought he might beat Vāyu, and he followed him closely; and said 'Let us two now be the victors.' 'No,' rejoined Vāyu, 'I alone shall be the winner.' 'Let us so win together that I shall have a third (of the draught),' said Indra. 'No,' said Vāyu, 'I alone shall be the winner.' 'Let us so win together that I shall have the fourth,' continued Indra. 'Agreed,' said Vāyu. He gave him a right to the fourth, so Indra has one share out of four and Vāyu three. So Indra and Vāyu won together, as did Mitra and Varuṇa, and the two Aśvins respectively." See the story of another similar settlement by a race in the Ait. Br. iv. 7 f.

x. 186, 1. Vātaḥ ā vātu bheshajaṁ śambhu mayobhu no hṛide | 2. Pra naḥ āyūṁshi tārishat | uta Vāta pitā 'si naḥ uta bhrātā uta naḥ sakhā | sa no jīvātave kṛidhi | 3. Yad ado Vāta te gṛihe amṛitasya nidhir hitaḥ | tato no dehi jīvase |

"1. Let Vāta, the wind, waft to us healing,[229] salutary, and auspicious, to our heart: may he prolong our lives. 2. And, Vāta, thou art our father, our brother, and our friend: cause us to live. 3. From the treasure of immortality, which is deposited yonder in thy house, o Vāta, give us to live."

Here the same property is ascribed to Vāta which is elsewhere ascribed to Rudra, that of bringing healing.

[228] Compare St. John's Gospel, iii. 8: The wind bloweth where it listeth," etc.
[229] Compare i. 89, 4.

SECTION IX.

THE MARUTS.

(1) Their parentage, epithets, characteristics, and action.

The Maruts, or Rudras, the gods of the tempest,[230] who form a large troop of thrice sixty (viii. 85, 8: triḥ shashṭis tvā Maruto vavṛidhānāḥ), or of only twenty-seven (i. 133, 6: trisaptaiḥ śūra satvabhiḥ),[231] are the sons of Rudra and Pṛiśni[232] (Rudrasya maryāḥ | Rudrasya sūnavaḥ | Rudrasya sūnūn | Rudrasya putrāḥ | idam pitre marutām uchyate vachaḥ | pitar marutāṁ . . . Rudra | Pṛiśniṁ vochanta mātaram | adha pitaram ishmiṇaṁ Rudraṁ vochanta | yuvā pitā svapāḥ Rudraḥ eshāṁ sudughā Pṛiśniḥ sudinā marudbhyaḥ | Pṛiśnimātaraḥ | asūta Pṛiśnir mahate raṇāya tvesham ayāsām Marutāṁ anīkam | Gomātaraḥ | Gaur dhayati Marutāṁ śravasyur mātā maghonām |),[233] or the speckled cow (i. 64, 2; i. 85, 1 f.; i. 114, 6; i. 168, 9; ii. 33, 1; ii. 34, 2;

[230] Prof. Benfey, in a note to R.V. i. 6, 4, says that the Maruts (their name being derived from mar, 'to die,') are personifications of the souls of the departed.

[231] See also A.V. xiii. 1, 3, where the same smaller number is given: trishaptāso marutaḥ svādusammudaḥ. Sāyaṇa interprets the words of R.V. viii. 28, 5, saptānāṁ sapta ṛishṭayaḥ | "The seven have seven spears," by saying that it refers to an ancient story of Indra severing the embryo of Aditi into seven parts, from which sprang the Maruts according to the Vedic text: "The Maruts are divided into seven troops." The same story is told at greater length by Sāyaṇa on R.V. i. 114, 6, where, however, it is said to be Diti, mother of the Asuras, whose embryo Indra severed first into seven portions, each of which he then subdivided into seven. See the 4th vol. of this work, p. 256.

[232] This word is regarded as a personification of the speckled clouds in Roth's Illustrations of Nirukta, x. 39, p. 145. In his Lexicon the same scholar says that like other designations of the cow, the word is employed in various figurative and mythical references, to denote the earth, the clouds, milk, the variegated or starry heaven. On ii. 34, 2, Sāyaṇa refers (as an alternative explanation) to a story of Rudra, as a bull, begetting the Maruts on Pṛiśni, the Earth, in the form of a cow.

[233] The Taittirīya Saṁhitā, ii. 2, 11, 4, says: Pṛiśniyai vai payaso maruto jātāḥ | "The Maruts were born from Pṛiśni's milk."

v. 42, 15; v. 52, 16; v. 60, 5; v. 59, 6; vi. 50, 4; vi. 66, 3; vii. 56, 1; viii. 7, 3, 17; viii. 20, 17; viii. 83, 1). They are, however, said to be like sons to Indra (sa sūnubhir na Rudrebhiḥ, i. 100, 5); and they are also called sindhu-mātaraḥ, children of the ocean, whether we suppose this to be the aerial or terrestrial sea (x. 78, 6), and sons of Heaven, divas-putrāsaḥ (x. 77, 2), and Divo maryāḥ, iii. 53, 13; v. 59, 6. See Müller's Trans. of R.V. p. 93. In v. 56, 8, mention is made of the chariot of the Maruts "in which Rodasī stood bringing enjoyments, in company with the Maruts" (ā yasmin tasthau suraṇāni bibhratī sachā marutsu Rodasī). On this Sāyaṇa remarks that Rodasī is the wife of Rudra and mother of the Maruts; or that Rudra is the Wind (Vāyu), and his wife the intermediate or aerial goddess. (Rodasī Rudrasya patnī marutām mātā | yadvā Rudro Vāyuḥ | tat-patnī mādhyamikā devī). They are frequently associated with Indra, as we have already seen;—(compare the expressions which describe them as his allies and friends, and as increasing his strength and prowess, at the same time that they celebrate his greatness: Marutvantam Indram | Indra-jyeṣhṭhāḥ marud-gaṇāḥ | sakhibhiḥ svebhir evaiḥ | ye te śushmaṁ ye tavishīm avardhann archantaḥ Indra marutas te ojaḥ | piba Rudrebhiḥ saganaḥ | ye tvā anu ahan Vṛittram adadhus tubhyam ojaḥ | archanti tvā Marutaḥ pūtadakhās tvam eshām ṛishir Indrāsi dhīraḥ | Rudrāsaḥ Indravantaḥ | ayam Indro Marut-sakhā | Bṛihad Indrāya gāyata marutaḥ | i. 23, 7, 8; i. 100, 1 ff.; i. 101, 1, ff.; iii. 32, 2, 4; iii. 35, 9; iii. 47, 1, ff.; iii. 51, 7 ff.; v. 29, 1, 2, 6; v. 57, 1; vii. 32, 10; vii. 42, 5; viii. 36, 1 ff; viii. 52, 10; viii. 65, 1 ff; viii. 78, 1 ff.; viii. 85, 7 ff.; x. 73, 1; x. 99, 5; x. 113, 3);—but they are also celebrated separately in numerous hymns (as i. 37; i. 38; i. 39; i. 64; i. 85; i. 86; i. 87; i. 88; i. 166, which, with others, are rendered into English and illustrated in the 1st vol. of Professor Müller's Translation of the R.V.; see also i. 167; i. 168; v. 52; v. 53; v. 54; v. 55; v. 56; vii. 56; vii. 57; vii. 58, etc.) They are favourite deities of some of the rishis, and are often praised in highly poetical strains. They are like blazing fires, free from soil, of golden or tawny hue, and of sunlike brilliancy (ye agnayo na śośuchann idhānāḥ | areṇavaḥ | hiraṇyāsaḥ | sūryatvachaḥ | aruṇapsavaḥ | vi. 66, 2; vii. 59, 11; viii. 7, 7). They are also compared to swans with black plumage (haṁsāso nīla-pṛishṭhāḥ, vii. 59, 7); and are sometimes said to be playful as children or calves (krīḷanti

krīḷāḥ | śiśūlāḥ na krīḷayaḥ sumātaraḥ | vatsāso na prakrīḷinaḥ | i. 166, 2; vii. 56, 16; x. 78, 6). They are thus apostrophized in v. 54, 11: aṁseshu vaḥ ṛishṭayaḥ patsu khādayo vakshassu rukmāḥ Maruto rathe śubhaḥ | agnibhrājäso vidyuto gabhastyoḥ śiprāḥ śīrshashu vitatāḥ hiraṉyayīḥ | "Spears rest upon your shoulders, ye Maruts; ye have anklets on your feet, golden ornaments on your breasts, lustre in your cars, fiery lightnings in your hands, and golden helmets[234] placed upon your

[234] In ii. 34, 3, the epithet of hiraṇya-śiprāḥ is applied to these deities. This Sāyaṇa explains by suvarṇamaya-śirastrāṇāḥ, "with golden helmets." That one sense of śiprā (feminine) is "a head-dress, or a helmet," is settled by the verse in the text, v. 54, 11, where the words are śiprāḥ śīrshasu vitatāḥ hiraṇyayīḥ, "golden helmets are stretched or (placed) upon your heads;" and also by viii. 7, 25, where it is said, śiprāḥ śīrshan hiraṇyayīḥ . . . vyanjata śriye, "they displayed for ornament golden helmets on their heads." In the first of these passages, Sāyaṇa interprets śiprāḥ as meaning a 'turban,' in the second a 'helmet.' It thus appears that śiprāḥ, in these texts at least, must mean something external to the head, and not a feature of the face as śipra is often interpreted, when applied to Indra. Thus suśipra is explained by Sāyaṇa on i. 9, 3, as meaning śobhana-hano śobhana-nāsika vā, "having handsome jaws, or a handsome nose;" since Yaska, he says, makes śipra to mean one or other of these two parts of the face (Nirukta, vi. 17). The same explanation is given by Sāyaṇa on i. 29, 2; i. 81, 4; and i. 101, 10. On iii. 30, 3, however, the same commentator says: śipra-śabdena śirastrāṇam abhidhīyate | śobhana-śirastrāṇopetaḥ | yadvā śobhana-hanumān | "By the word śipra, a helmet is signified. Suśipra therefore means 'having a handsome helmet,' or it means 'having handsome jaws.' On iii. 32, 3; iii. 36, 10; viii. 32, 4, 24; viii. 33, 7; viii. 55, 4; he returns to the latter interpretation. On viii. 17, 4; viii. 81, 4; viii. 82, 12; he again gives the alternative explanation as on iii. 30, 3. Professor Aufrecht has favoured me with a note on the subject of the word śipra and its derivatives, of which the following are the most important parts: Śipra in the dual means jaws (i. 101, 10; iii. 32, 1; v. 36, 2; viii. 65, 10; x. 96, 9; x. 105, 5). Śipravat means "having large jaws" (vi. 17, 2). Śiprin means the same, and is used only of Indra (i. 29, 2; i. 84, 1; iii. 36, 10, etc. etc.). Śipriṇī, as Professor Aufrecht considers, means "a draught (imbibed by the jaws);" and he translates i. 30, 11, thus: "(Partake, our friend, wielder of the thunderbolt, of the draughts of us thy friends the soma-drinkers, thou who art fond of Soma." Śipruṇīvat (x. 105, 5) will thus be "he who possesses the draught." Śiprāḥ in v. 54, 11, and viii. 7, 25, are "visors," the two parts of which are compared to two jaws. Ayaḥ-śipra, used of the Ṛibhus (iv. 37, 4) will consequently mean "having iron visors." The word occurs in other compounds, to which I need not here refer. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the armour of India to know whether anything like a visor was or is used by warriors in that country. It is, however, customary for the Hindus in particular circumstances (as for protection from the heat, and also from the cold, and for purposes of disguise) to wear their turbans not only wrapped horizontally round their heads, but also to tie another cloth perpendicularly under their chins and over the tops of their heads, thus enclosing the sides of their faces. This is called in the vernacular Hindī ḍhāṭhā bāndhnā. The word ḍhaṭhā is explained in Shakespear's Hindustani Dictionary, s.v. as "a handkerchief tied over the turband and over the ears."

heads." Compare i. 64, 4; i. 166, 10; ii. 34, 2, 3 (dyāvo na stṛibhiś chitayanta khādinaḥ | "adorned with rings, they were conspicuous like the sky with its stars"); v. 53, 4 (where, in addition to their ornaments and their weapons, they are said to have been decorated with garlands: ye anjishu ye vāśīshu svabhānavaḥ srakshu rukmeshu khādishu | śrāyāḥ ratheshu dhanvasu); v. 55, 1; v. 57, 5, 6 (every glory is manifested in their bodies: viśvā vaḥ śrīr adhi tanūshu pipiśe); v. 58, 2 (khādihastam); vii. 56, 11, 13 (aṁseshu vo Marutaḥ khādayaḥ[235] | "on your shoulders, Maruts, are rings"); viii. 7, 25; viii. 20, 4 (śubhrakhādayaḥ), 11, 22; x. 78, 2. They are armed with golden weapons, and with lightnings, dart thunderbolts, gleam like flames of fire, and are borne along with the fury of boisterous winds (vidyunmahaso naro aśmadidyavo vātatvisho Marutaḥ, v. 54, 3); viii. 7, 4, 17, 32 (vajrahastaiḥ . . . maṛudbhiḥ . . . hiraṇyavāśībhiḥ); x. 78, 2, 3 (vātāso na ye dhunayo jigatnavo agnīnāṁ na jihvāḥ virokinaḥ); they split Vṛittra into fragments (viii. 7, 23: vi vṛittram parvaśo yayuḥ); they are clothed with rain (varshanirṇijaḥ, v. 57, 4); they create darkness even during the day, with the rain-clouds distribute showers all over the world, water the earth, and avert heat: i. 38, 9 (divā chit tamaḥ kṛiṇvanti parjanyena udavāhena | yat pṛithivīṁ vyundanti); v. 54, 1 (śardhāya mārutāya . . . gharma-stubhe); v. 55, 5 (ud īrayatha Marutaḥ samudrato yūyaṁ vṛishṭiṁ varshayatha purīshiṇaḥ); viii. 7, 4 (vapanti maruto miham | 16. ye drapsāḥ iva rodasī dhamanti anu vṛishṭibhiḥ).[236] They open up a path for the sun, viii. 7, 8 (sṛijanti raśmim ojasā panthāṁ sūryāya yātave). They cause the mountains, the earth, and both the worlds to quake, i. 39, 5 (pra vepayanti parvatān); i. 87, 3 (rejate bhūmiḥ); v. 54, 1, 3 (parvatachyutaḥ); v. 60, 2 f. (vo bhiyā pṛithivī chid rejate parvataś chit | parvataś chin mahi vṛiddho bibhāya divaś chit sānu rejate svane vaḥ); vii. 57, 1 (ye rejayanti rodasī chid urvī); viii. 7, 4; viii. 20, 5. They rend trees, and, like wild elephants, they devour the forests, i. 39, 5; i. 64, 7 (vi vinchanti vanaspatīn | mṛigāḥ iva hastinaḥ

[235] On the sense of the word khādi see Müller's Trans. of the R.V. p. 102 and 218.

[236] In a hymn of the A.V. iv. 27, verse 3, the Maruts are said to give an impulse to the milk of cows, the sap of plants, the speed of horses (payo dhenūnāṁ rasam oshadhīnāṁ javam arvatāṁ kavayo ye invatha); and in the 4th verse they are described as raising the waters from the sea to the sky, and as discharging them from the sky on the earth (apaḥ samudrād divam udvahanti divas pṛithivīm abhi ye sṛijanti).

khādatha vanā). They have iron teeth (ayodaṁshṭrān, i. 88, 5); they roar like lions (siṁhāḥ iva nānadati, i. 64, 8); all creatures are afraid of them, i. 85, 8 (bhayante víśvā bhuvanā marudbhyaḥ. Their weapons are of various descriptions—spears, bows, quivers, and arrows (vāśīmantaḥ ṛishṭimantaḥ | ishumanto nishanginaḥ), i. 37, 2; v. 57, 2. Their coursers are swift as thought (manojuvaḥ, i. 85, 4). They ride, with whips in their hands (kaśāḥ hasteshu, i. 37, 3; i. 168, 4), in golden cars (hiraṇyarathāḥ, v. 57, 1), with golden wheels (hiraṇyebhiḥ pavibhiḥ | hiraṇya-chakrān, i. 64, 11; i. 88, 5), drawn by ruddy and tawny horses (with which the chariots are said to be winged), and flashing forth lightnings, or formed of lightning, i. 88, 1, 2 (ā vidyunmadbhiḥ rathebhir ṛishṭimadbhir aśvaparṇaiḥ | aruṇebhiḥ piśangair aśvaiḥ); iii. 54, 13 (vidyudrathāḥ Marutaḥ ṛishṭimantaḥ); v. 57, 4 (piśangāśvāḥ aruṇāśvāḥ). The animals by which these chariots are described as being drawn are designated in some places by the epithet pṛishatīḥ (i. 37, 2; i. 39, 6; i. 85, 5; viii. 7, 28), which Professor Wilson—following Sāyaṇa on Rig-veda, i. 37, 2[237]—renders by "spotted deer." But in i. 38, 12, the horses (aśvāsaḥ) of the Maruts are spoken of, as is also the case in viii. 7, 27, where they (the horses) are called hiraṇya-pāṇibhiḥ, "golden-footed;" though in the next verse (28) the pṛishatīḥ are again spoken of, as well as a prashṭiḥ rohitaḥ, which we find also in i. 39, 6, and which Sāyaṇa understands to denote either a swift buck, or a buck yoked as a leader to the does. In i. 87, 4, the troop of Maruts itself receives the epithet pṛishad-aśva, "having spotted horses." This is, indeed, explained by Sāyaṇa in the sense of "having does marked with white spots instead of horses;"[238] but in his notes on v. 54, 2, 10, and v. 55, 1, where the Maruts' horses are again spoken of (na vo aśvāḥ śrathayanta | īyante aśvaiḥ suyamebhir āśubhiḥ), he does not repeat this explanation. In v. 55, 6, where the Maruts are described as having yoked pṛishatīḥ (feminine) as horses (aśvān, masculine,) to their chariots, Sāyaṇa says we may either understand "spotted mares," or suppose the word "horse" to stand for doe (pṛishatīḥ . . . pṛishad-varṇāḥ vaḍavāḥ | sārangī vā atra aśva-śabda-vāchyā). In his note on pṛishatībhiḥ in ii. 34, 3, he says they may be either does marked with white spots, or mares; and he interprets pṛishatīḥ in v. 57, 3, by aśvāḥ, mares. Professor Aufrecht, who has favoured me with a note on the subject of the word pṛishatīḥ, is of opinion that, looking to all the passages where it occurs in connection with the Maruts, it must mean mares.[239] Perhaps it is best to hold with Professor Müller (Trans. of R.V. i. p. 59) that the Vedic poets admitted both ideas, as we find "that they speak in the same hymns, and even in the same verse, of the fallow deer, and also of the horses of the Maruts."

[237] Pṛishatyo vindu-yuktāḥ mṛigyo Maruḍ-vāhana-bhūtāḥ | "pṛishatyo Marutām" iti Nighaṇṭāv uktatvāt.

[238] Benfey, in his translation of this verse (Orient und Occident, ii. 250) retains the sense of antelopes. In vii. 56, 1, the Maruts are styled svaśvāḥ, "having good horses," which Sāyaṇa explains śobhana-vāhāḥ, "having good carriers."

In the following verses, viii. 83, 9 ff., high cosmical functions are ascribed to the Maruts: ā ye viśvā pārthivāni paprathan rochanā divaḥ | Marutaḥ somapītaye | 10. Tyān nu pūtadakshaso divo vo Maruto huve asya somasya pītaye | 11. Tyān nu ye vi rodasī tastabhur Maruto huve | asya somasya pītaye | 12. Tāṁ nu Mārutaṁ gaṇaṁ girishṭhāṁ vṛishaṇaṁ huve | asya somasya pītaye | 9 and 10. "I invite to drink this soma the Maruts who stretched out all the terrestrial regions, and the luminaries of the sky; I call from the heaven those Maruts of pure [239] Professor Aufrecht has pointed out a number of passages regarding the sense of the words pṛishad-aśva and pṛishat, as Rāyamukuṭa on Amara, the Vāj. Sanh. xxiv. 11, 18; S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, v. 5, 1, 10, and v. 5, 2, 9. He has also indicated another verse of the Rig-veda (v. 58, 6), where pṛishatībhis in the feminine is joined with aśvaiḥ in the masculine (where Professor Müller, Trans. of R.V. i. 59, would translate, "when you come with the deer, the horses, and the chariots"); and remarks that viii. 54, 10, 11, could not mean that the ṛishi received a thousand antelopes. (The words are these: dātā me pṛishatīnāṁ rājā hiraṇyavīnām | mā devāḥ maghavā rishat | 11. Sahasre pṛishatīnām adhi śchandram bṛihat pṛithu | śukraṁ hiraṇyam ādade | "O gods, may the bountiful king, the giver to me of the gold-decked pṛishatīs, never perish! 11. I received gold, brilliant, heavy, broad, and shining, over and above a thousand pṛishatīs (probably speckled cows)." Sāyaṇa represents Indra as the bountiful patron here, and makes the worshipper pray to the gods that Indra may not perish, an erroneous interpretation, surely. Professor Roth appears, from a remark under the word eta (vol. i. p. 1091 of his Dict.) to have at one time regarded pṛishatyaḥ as a kind of deer. In his explanation of this latter word itself, however (in a later part of his Lexicon, which perhaps had not reached me when this note was first written), he says that it is a designation of the team of the Maruts; and according to the ordinary assumption of the commentators, which, however, is not established either by the Nirukta, or by any of the Brāhmaṇas known to us, denotes spotted antelopes. There is nothing, however, he goes on to say, to prevent our understanding the word (with Mahīdhara on Vāj. Sanh. ii. 16) to mean spotted mares, as mention is frequently enough made of the horses of the Maruts.

power. 11. I call to drink this soma those Maruts who held apart the two worlds. 12. I call to drink this soma that vigorous host of Maruts which dwells in the mountains."

The Maruts or Rudras (like their father Rudra; see the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 253, 259, 261, 263 f., 333 ff.), are in one hymn, viii. 20, 23, 25, supplicated to bring healing remedies, which are described as abiding in the Sindhu, the Asiknī, the seas, and the hills (maruto mārutasya naḥ ā bheshajasya vahata | yad Sindhau yad Asiknyāṁ yat samudreshu . . . yat parvateshu bheshajam).

(2) Relations of the Maruts to Indra;—the rival claims of the two parties.

Professor Wilson is of opinion (Rig-veda ii., Indroduction p. vii. and notes pp. 145 and 160), that in a few hymns some traces are perceptible of a dispute between the votaries of the Maruts and those of Indra in regard to their respective claims to worship. Thus in hymns 165 and 170 of the first book of the Ṛig-veda we find dialogues, in the first case between Indra and the Maruts, and in the second between Indra and Agastya, in which the rival pretensions of these deities appear. Indra asks, i. 165, 6: kva syā vo Marutaḥ svadhā āsīd yan mām ekam samadhatta Ahihatye | ahaṁ hi ugras tavishas tuvishmān viśvasya śatror anamaṁ vadhasnaiḥ | 7. Bhūri chakartha yujyebhir asme samānebhir vṛishabha pauṁsyebhiḥ | bhūrīṇi hi kṛiṇavāma śavishṭha Indra kratvā Maruto yad vaśāma | 8. Vadhīṁ Vṛittram marutaḥ indriyeṇa svena bhāmena | "Where was your inherent power, ye Maruts, when ye involved me alone[240] in the conflict with Ahi? It was I who, fierce, strong, and energetic, overturned my enemies with my shafts." The Maruts rejoin: "7. Vigorous god, thou hast done great things with us for thy helpers, through our equal valour; for, O strong Indra, we Maruts by our power can perform many great exploits when we desire." Indra replies: "8. By my own prowess, Maruts, I slew Vṛittra, mighty in my wrath," etc.

Of hymn i. 170, the Nirukta says, i. 5, that "Agastya, having prepared an oblation for Indra, desired to give the Maruts also a share in it. On which Indra came and complained." (Agastyaḥ Indrāya havir nirupya Marudbhyaḥ sampraditsāṁ chakāra | sa Indraḥ etya

[240] See above, p. 93, note.

paridevayānchakre). The Maruts reply, i. 170, 2: kiṁ naḥ Indra jighāṁsasi bhrātaro marutas tava | tebhiḥ kalpasva sādhuyā mā naḥ samaraṇe vadhīḥ | 3. Kiṁ no bhrātar Agastya sakhā sann ati manyase | vidma hi te yathā mano asmabhyam in na ditsasi | "Why dost thou seek to kill us, Indra? The Maruts are thy brothers. Act amicably towards them. Do not kill us in the fray." [241] Indra then says to Agastya, v. 3. "Why dost thou, brother Agastya, being our friend, disregard us? For we know how thy mind is. Thou wilt not give us anything."—See Roth's Elucidations of Nirukta, p. 6.) In i. 171, 4, also, the rishi, after imploring the favour of the Maruts, says to them apologetically: asmād ahaṁ tavishād īshamāṇaḥ Indrād bhiyā Maruto rejamānaḥ | yushmabhyaṁ havyā niśitāni āsan tāni āre chakṛima mṛiḷata naḥ | "I fled, trembling through fear of the mighty Indra. Oblations were prepared for you; we put them away; be merciful to us." (Compare R.V. iv. 18, 11; viii. 7, 31, and viii. 85, 7, quoted above, pp. 92 ff., note.) See Professor Muller's translation of i. 165, and the full illustrations he gives of its signification in his notes, pp. 170 ff., 179, 184, 186, 187, 189. This hymn is referred to in the following short story from the Taitt. Brāhmaṇa, ii. 7, 11, 1: Agastyo marudbhyaḥ ukshṇaḥ praukshat | tān Indraḥ ādatta | te enaṁ vajram udyatya abhyāyanta | tān Agastyaś chaiva Indraś cha kayāśubhīyena aśamayatām | tān śāntān upāhvayata yat kayāśubhīyam bhavati śāntyai | tasmād ete aindrāmārutāḥ ukshāṇaḥ savanīyāḥ bhavanti | trayaḥ prathame 'hann ālabhyante | evaṁ dvītīye | evaṁ tṛitīye | pancha uttame 'hann ālabhyante | "Agastya was immolating bulls to the Maruts. These bulls Indra carried off. The Maruts ran at him brandishing a thunderbolt. Agastya and Indra pacified them with the kayāśubhīya" (referring to R.V. i. 165, 1, of which the first verse begins with the words kayā śubhā). "Indra invited them to the ceremony when pacified, for the kayāśubhīya is used for pacification. Hence these bulls are to be offered both to Indra and the Maruts. Three are sacrificed on the first day, as many on the second and third; on the last day five are immolated."

In the following passages (some of which have been already quoted) the Maruts are said to worship Indra, viz., iii. 32, 3; v. 29, 1, 2, 6; viii. 3, 7; viii. 78, 1, 3.

[241] See Roth on the sense of this text, s.v. kalp.

SECTION X.

SŪRYA.

(1) The two sun-gods separately celebrated in the hymns.

The great powers presiding over day and night are, as we have seen above, supposed by the Indian commentators to be personified in Mitra and Varuṇa. But these deities, and especially Varuṇa, as described in the Veda, are far more than the mere representatives of day and night. They are also recognized as moral governors, as well as superintendents of physical phenomena. There are two other gods (also, as has been already noticed, p. 54, reckoned in a few passages as belonging to the Ādityas), who are exact personifications of the sun,[242] vjz., Sūrya and Savitṛi.[243] It is under these two different appellations that the sun is chiefly celebrated in the Rig-veda; and although it may be difficult to perceive why the one word should be used in any particular case [242] In the Homeric hymn to Helios, verses 8'ff., the sun is thus described:

ὃς φαίνει θνητοῖσι καὶ ἀθανάτοισι θεοῖσιν ἵπποις ἐμβεβαώς· σμερδνὸν δ' ὄγε δέρκεται ὄσσοις χρυσέης ἐκ κόρυθος· λαμπραὶ δ' ἀκτῖνες ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἀιγλῆεν στίλβουσι, παρὰ κροτάφων τε παρειαὶ λαμπραὶ ἀπὸ κρατὸς χαρίεν κατέχουσι πρόσωπον τηλαυγές· καλὸν δὲ περὶ χροῒ λάμπεται ἕσθος λεπτουργὲς, πνοιῇ ἀνέμων· ὑπὸ δ' ἄρσενες ἵπποι
* * * * * *
ἔνθ' ἄρ ὄγε στήσας χρυσόζυγον ἅρμα καὶ ἵππους ἐσπερίος πέμπῃσι δι' οὐρανοῦ Ὠκεανόνδε.

[243] Regarding the Greek ideas of the divinity of the sun, moon, and stars, the reader may compare the passages of Plato cited or referred to by Mr. Grote, Plato, iii. pp. 384, 414, 418, 449, 452, 497. One of these passages, from the Laws vii. p. 821, is as follows:—Ὦ ἀγαθοί, καταψευδόμεθα νῦν ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν Ἕλληνες πάντες μεγάλων θεων, Ἡλίου τε ἅμα καὶ Σελήνης. Again in the Epinomis p. 984, mention is made of the visible deities, by which the stars are meant: θεοὺς δὲ δὴ τοὺς ὁρατούς, μεγίστους καὶ τιμιωτάτους καὶ ὀξύτατον ὁρῶντας παντῃ, τοὺς πρώτους τὴν τῶν ἄστρων φύσιν λεκτέον, κ.τ.λ.

rather than the other, the application of the names may perhaps depend upon some difference in the aspect under which the sun is conceived, or on some diversity in the functions which he is regarded as fulfilling. Different sets of hymns are, at all events, devoted to his worship under each of these names, and the epithets which are applied to him in each of these characters are for the most part separate. In some few places, both these two names, and occasionally some others, appear to be applied to the solar deity indiscriminately, but in most cases the distinction between them is nominally, at least, preserved.

The principal hymns, or portions of hymns, in praise of, or referring to, Sūrya are the following:—i. 50, 1–13; i. 115, 1–6; iv. 13, 1–3; v. 40, 5, 6, 8, 9; v. 45, 9, 10; v. 59, 5; vii. 60, 1–4; x. 37, 1 ff.; x. 170. He is treated of in Nirukta, xii. 14–16.

(2) Sūrya's parentage, relations to the other gods, epithets, and functions.

In x. 37, 1, Sūrya is styled the son of Dyaus (Divas putrāya Sūryāya śaṁsata). In x. 88, 11, he is called the son of Aditi (Sūryām Āditeyam), and by the same title in viii, 90, 11 (Baṇ mahān asi Sūrya baḷ Āditya mahān asi); but in other places he appears to be distinguished from the Ādityas, as in viii. 35, 13 ff. (sajoshasā Ushasā Sūryeṇa cha Ādityair yātam Aśvinā). Ushas (the Dawn) is in one place said to be his wife (Sūryasya yoshā, vii. 75, 5), while in another passage, vii. 78, 3, the Dawns are, by a natural figure, said to produce him (ajījanan sūryaṁ yajnam agnim) along with Sacrifice and Agni, and in a third text, to reveal all the three (prāchikitat sūryaṁ yajnam agnim). Sūrya is described as moving on a car, which is sometimes said to be drawn by one and sometimes by several, or by seven, fleet and ruddy horses or mares[244] (i. 115, 3, 4; vii. 60, 3: ayukta sapta haritaḥ sadhastād yāḥ īṁ vahanti sūryaṁ ghṛitāchīḥ); vii. 63, 2 (yad etaśo vahanti dhūrshu yuktaḥ; compare ix. 63, 7: ayukta sūraḥ etaśam pavamānaḥ); x. 37, 3; x. 49, 7. His path is prepared by the Ādityas, Mitra, Aryaman, and Varuṇa, i. 24, 8 (uruṁ hi rājā Varuṇaś chakāra sūryāya panthām anu etavai u); vii. 60, 4 (yasmai Ādityāḥ adhvano radanti Mitro Aryamā Varuṇaḥ sajoshāḥ); vii. 87, 1. Pūshan goes [244] Indra is said to traverse the sky with the sun's horses (ahaṁ Sūryasya pari yāmi āśubhiḥ pra etaśebhir vahamānaḥ ojasā, x. 49, 7). Compare Ovid's description of Phaethon's horses, Metam. ii. 153.

as his messenger with his golden ships, which sail in the aerial ocean, vi. 58, 3 (yās te Pūshan nāvaḥ antaḥ samudre hiraṇyayīr antarikshe charanti | tābhrir yāsi dūtyaṁ sūryasya). He is the preserver and soul of all things stationary and moving, i. 115, 1 (sūryaḥ ātmā jagatas tastushaścha); vii. 60, 2 (viśvasya sthātur jagataścha gopāḥ), the vivifier (prasavitā)[245] of men, and common to them all, vii. 63, 2, 3 (sādhāraṇaḥ sūryo mānushāṇām | ud u eti prasavitā janānām). Enlivened by him men pursue their ends and perform their work, vii. 63, 4 (nūnaṁ janāḥ sūryeṇa prasūtāḥ ayann arthāni kṛiṇavann apāṁsi). He is far-seeing, all-seeing, beholds all creatures, and the good and bad deeds of mortals,[246] i. 50, 2, 7; vi. 51, 2; vii. 35, 8; vii. 60, 2; vii. 61, 1; vii. 63, 1, 4; x. 37, 1 (sūrāya viśvachakshase | paśyan janmāni sūrya | sūryaḥ uru-chakshāḥ | ṛiju marteshu vṛijinā cha paśyan | abhi yo viśvā bhuvanāni chashṭe | dūredṛiśe). He is represented as the eye of Mitra and Varuṇa, and sometimes of Agni also, i. 115, 1; vi. 51, 1; vii. 61, 1; vii. 63, 1; x. 37, 1 (chakshur Mitrasya Varuṇasya Agneḥ | chakshur Mitrasya Varuṇasya | namo Mitrasya Varuṇasya chakshase). In one passage, vii. 77, 3, Ushas (the Dawn) is said to bring the eye of the gods, and [245] This word and others derived from the same root su or sū, are, as we shall shortly see, very frequently applied to Savitṛi. In x. 66, 2, the gods are said to be Indra-prasūtāḥ.

[246] The same thing is naturally and frequently said of the sun in classical literature. Thus Homer says, Iliad, iii. 277:

ἠέλιός θ᾽ ὃς πάντ᾽ ἐφορᾷς καὶ πάντ᾽ ἐπακούεις· κ.τ.λ.

and again in the Iliad, xiv. 344 f.:

οὐδ᾽ ἂν νῶι διαδράκοι ἠέλιός περ,
οὔτε καὶ ὀξύτατον πέλεται φάος εἰσοράασθαι·

And in the Odyssey, viii. 270 f.:

ἄφαρ δὲ οἱ ἄγγελος ἦλθε
Ἥλιος, ὅ σφ᾽ ἐνόησε μιγαζομένους φιλότητι.

So too Æschylus in the Prometheus Vinctus:

καὶ τὸν πανόπτην κύκλον ἡλίου καλῶ.

And Plutarch, Isis and Osiris, 12:

Τῆς Ῥέας φασὶ κρύφα τῷ Κρόνῳ συγγενομένης αἰσθόμενον ἐπαράσασθαι τὸν Ἥλιον·

So too Ovid, Metamorph. iv. 171 f.:

Primus adulterium Veneris cum Marte putatur Hic vidisse deus: videt hic deus omnia primus.

and verses 195 ff.:

qui que omnia cernere debes,
Leucotheen spectas: et virgine figis in una quos mundo debes oculos.

lead on the bright and beautiful horse, by which the sun seems to be intended (devānāṁ chakshuḥ subhagā vahantī śvetaṁ nayantī sudṛiśīkam aśvam; compare vii. 76, 1: kratvā devānām ajanishṭa chakshuḥ).[247] In x. 85, 1, it is said that while the earth is upheld by truth, the sky is upheld by the sun (satyenottabhitā bhūmiḥ sūryeṇottabhitā dyauḥ). He rolls up darkness like a hide, vii. 63, 1 (charmeva yaḥ samvivyak tamāṁsi). By his greatness he is the divine leader (or priest) of the gods, viii. 90, 12 (mahnā devānām asuryaḥ purohitaḥ). In viii. 82, 1, 4, he is identified with Indra, or vice versâ, Indra with him. In x. 170, 4, the epithets viśvakarman, the architect of the universe, and viśvadevyavat, possessed of all divine attributes, are applied to him (as in viii. 87, 2, Indra also is styled viśvakarman and viśvadeva). In vii. 60, 1, and vii. 62, 2, he is prayed at his rising to declare men sinless to Mitra, Varuṇa, etc. (yad adya Sūrya bravo anāgāḥ udyan Mitrāya Varuṇaya satyam).

(3) Subordinate position sometimes assigned to him.

In many passages, however, the dependent position of Sūrya is asserted. Thus he is said to have been produced, or caused to shine, or to rise, or to have his path prepared, etc., by Indra, ii. 12, 7 (yaḥ Sūryaṁ yaḥ Ushasaṁ jajāna); iii. 31, 15 (Indro nṛibhir ajanad dīdyānaḥ sākaṁ Sūryam ushasaṁ gātum Agnim); iii. 32, 8 (jajāna Sūryam ushasam); iii. 44, 2 (sūryaṁ haryann arochayaḥ); iii. 49, 4 (janitā sūryasya); vi. 17, 5; vi. 30, 5; viii. 78, 7 (ā sūryaṁ rohayo divi);[248] viii. 87, 2; x. 171, 4 (tvaṁ tyam Indra sūryam paśchā santam puras kṛidhi); by Indra and Soma, vi. 72, 2 (ut sūryaṁ nayatho jyotishā saha); by Agni, x. 3, 2; x. 156, 4 (Agne nakshatram ajaram ā sūryaṁ rohayo divi | dadhaj jyotir janebhyaḥ); by the Ushases (Dawns), [247] In v. 59, 3, 5, and x. 10, 9, the eye of the sun is spoken of; and in x. 16, 3, the affinity of the eye to the sun is indicated. In A.V. v. 24, 9, the sun is said to be the lord of eyes (sūryaś chakshushām adhipatiḥ), and in A.V. xiii. 1, 45, he is said to see beyond the sky, the earth, and the waters, and to be the one eye of created things (sūryo dyāṁ sūryaḥ pṛithivīṁ sūryaḥ āpo 'tipaśyati | sūryo bhūtasya ekaṁ chakshur āruroha divam mahīm).

[248] In his note on this passage (viii. 78, 7) Sāyaṇa relates a legend, that formerly the Paṇis had carried off the cows of the Angirases, and placed them on a mountain enveloped in darkness, when Indra, after being lauded by the Angirases, and supplicated to restore the cows, caused the sun to rise that he might see them.

vii. 78, 3 (ajījanan sūryaṁ yajnam agnim); by Soma, vi. 44, 23 (ayaṁ sūrye adadhāj jyotir antaḥ); ix. 63, 7; ix. 75, 1; ix. 86, 29 (tava jyotīṁshi pavamāna sūryaḥ); ix. 96, 5 (janitā sūryasya); ix. 97, 41; ix. 107, 7; ix. 110, 3); by Dhātṛi, x. 190, 3 (sūryā-chandramasau Dhātā yathāpūrvam akalpayat); by Varuṇa, i. 24, 8; vii. 87, 1 (quoted above); by Mitra and Varuṇa, iv. 13, 2 (anu vrataṁ Varuṇo yanti Mitro yat sūryaṁ divi ārohayanti); v. 63, 4, 7 (sūryam ā dhattho divi); Indra and Varuṇa, vii. 82, 3 (sūryam airayatañ divi prabhum); by Indra and Vishṇu, vii. 99, 4 (uruṁ yajnāya chakrathur u lokaṁ janayantā sūryam ushasam aynim), and by the Angirases through their rites, x. 62, 3 (ye ṛiteṇa sūryam ārohayan divi aprathayan pṛithivīm mātaraṁ vi). In passages of this description the divine personality of the sun is thrown into the background: the grand luminary becomes little more than a part of nature, created and controlled by those spiritual powers which exist above and beyond all material phenomena. The divine power of Mitra and Varuṇa is said to be shown in the sky, where Sūrya moves a luminary and a bright agent [or instrument] of theirs; whom again they conceal by clouds and rain, v. 63, 4 (māyā vām Mitrāvaruṇā divi śritā sūryo jyotiś charati chitram āyudham | tam abhreṇa vṛishṭyā gūhatho divi). He is declared to be god-born, x. 37, 1; to be the son of the sky, ibid. (devajātāya ketave Divas putrāya Sūryāya); to have been drawn by the gods from the ocean where he was hidden (x. 72, 7, see above, p. 48); to have been placed by the gods in heaven, x. 88, 11 (yadā id enam adadhur yajniyāso divi devāḥ sūryam āditeyam), where he is identified with Agni; and to have sprung from the eye of Purusha, x. 90, 13 (chakshoḥ sūryo ajāyata).[249] He is also said to have been overcome and despoiled by Indra, x. 43, 5 (saṁvargaṁ yan maghavā sūryam jayat),[250] who, in some obscure verses is alluded to as having carried off one of the wheels of his chariot, i. 175, 4; iv. 28, 2; iv. 30, 4; v. 29, 10.

(4) Translation of a hymn to Sūrya.

I subjoin, with a translation, the greater part of the picturesque, if somewhat monotonous, hymn, i. 50: Ud u tyaṁ jātavedasaṁ devaṁ

[249] In the A.V. iv. 10, 5, the sun is said to have sprang from Vṛittra (Vṛittrāj jāto divākaraḥ).

[250] See the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 92 f.

vahanti ketavaḥ | dṛiśe viśvāya sūryam | 2. Apa tye tāyavo yathā nakshattrā yanti aktubhiḥ | sūrāya viśvachakshase | 3. Adṛiśram asya ketavo vi raśmayo janān anu | bhrājanto agnayo yatha | 4. Taraṇir viśvadarśato jyotishkṛid asi sūrya | viśvam ā bhāsi rochanam | 5. Pratyāṅ devānāṅ viśaḥ pratyaṅṅ ud eshi mānushān | pratyaṅ viśvaṅ svar dṛiśe | 6. Yena pāvaka chakshasā bhuraṇyantaṅ janān anu | ◦ tvaṁ Varuṇa paśyasi | 7. Vi dyām eshi rajas pṛithu ahā mimāṇo aktubhiḥ | paśyan janmāni sūrya | 8. Sapta tvā harito rathe vahanti deva sūrya | śochishkeśaṁ vichakshaṇa | 9. ayukta sapta śundhyuvaḥ sūro rathasya naptyaḥ | tābhir yati svayuktibhiḥ | 10. Ud vayaṁ tamasas pari jyotish paśyantaḥ uttaram | devaṁ devatrā sūryam aganma jyotir uttamam |

1. "The heralds[251] lead aloft this god Sūrya, who knows all beings, (manifesting him) to the universal gaze. 2. (Eclipsed) by thy rays, the stars slink away, like thieves, before thee the all-beholding luminary. 3. His rays revealing (his presence) are visible to all mankind, flaming like fires. 4. Traversing (the heavens), all-conspicuous, thou createst light, o Sūrya, and illuminatest the whole firmament. 5. Thou risest in the presence of the race of gods, of men, and of the entire heaven, that thou mayest be beheld. 6. With that glance of thine wherewith, o illuminator, o Varuṇa, thou surveyest the busy race of men,[252] 7. thou, o Sūrya, penetratest the sky, the broad firmament, measuring out the days with thy rays, spying out all creatures. 8. Seven ruddy mares bear thee onward in thy chariot, o clear-sighted Sūrya, the god with flaming locks. 9. The sun has yoked the seven brilliant mares, the daughters of the car; with these, the self-yoked, he advances. 10. Gazing towards the upper light beyond the darkness, we have ascended to the highest luminary, Sūrya, a god among the gods."[253]

[251] In his translation of R.V. i. 166, 1, Professor Müller renders ketu by herald (see pp. 197, and 201), a sense which suits the verse before us very well.

[252] See Professor Benfey's translation, and note (Orient und Occident, i. p 405), and the passage of Roth's Abhandlungen (Dissertations on the literature and history of the Veda) p. 81 f., to which he refers; and in which that writer regards the reading janān as standing for janām, the acc. sing., the last syllable being lengthened on account of the metre.

[253] I subjoin a metrical translation of these verses:

1. By lustrous heralds led on high,
The omniscient Sun ascends the sky,
His glory drawing every eye.

The Atharva-veda contains a long hymn to Sūrya, xiii. 2, partly made up of extracts from the Rig-veda.

The Mahābhārata (iii. 166 ff.) also has a hymn to the same god, in which he is styled "the eye of the world, and the soul of all embodied creatures," v. 166 (tvam bhāno jagataś chakshus tvam ātmā sarva-dehinām); the source of all beings, the body of observances performed by those who practise ceremonies, the refuge of the Sānkhyas, the highest object of Yogins, the unbolted door, the resort of those seeking emancipation, etc., etc.; v. 166 f. (tvaṁ yoniḥ sarva-bhūtānāṁ tvaṁ āchāraḥ kriyāvatām | tvaṁ gatiḥ sarva-sānkhyānāṁ yoginām tvam parāyaṇam | anāvṛitārgaladvāraṁ tvam gatis tvam mumukshatām); and his celestial chariot (divyaṁ ratham) is referred to (v. 170). He is also, we are told, said by those who understand the computation of time, to be the beginning and end of that period of a thousand yugas known as the day of Brahmā (yad aho Brahmaṇaḥ proktaṁ sahasra-yuga-sammitam | tasya tvam ādir antaś cha kālajnaiḥ samprakīrttitaḥ); the lord of the Manus, of their sons, of the world sprung from Manu, and of all the lords of the Manvantaras. When the time of the mundane dissolution has arrived, the Samvarttaka fire, which reduces all things to ashes, issues from his wrath (vv. 185 f.; compare the 1st vol. of this work, pp. 43 f. and 207).

2. All-seeing Sun, the stars so bright,
Which gleamed throughout the sombre night,
Now scared, like thieves, slink fast away,
Quenched by the splendour of thy ray.
3. Thy beams to men thy presence shew;
Like blazing fires they seem to glow.
4. Conspicuous, rapid, source of light,
Thou makest all the welkin bright.
5. In sight of gods, and mortal eyes,
In sight of heaven thou scal'st the skies.
6. Bright god, thou scann'st with searching ken
The doings all of busy men.
7. Thou stridest o'er the sky; thy rays
Create, and measure out, our days;
Thine eye all living things surveys.
8. 9. Seven lucid mares thy chariot bear,
Self-yoked, athwart the fields of air,
Bright Sūrya, god with flaming hair.
10. That glow above the darkness we Beholding, upward soar to thee,
For there among the gods thy light
Supreme is seen, divinely bright.

SECTION XI.

SAVITṚI.

(1) His epithets, characteristics, and functions.

The hymns which are entirely or principally devoted to the celebration of Savitṛi are the following: i. 35; ii. 38; iv. 53; iv. 54; v. 81; v. 82; vii. 37; vii. 45; x. 149; with many detached passages and verses, such as i. 22, 5–8; iii. 56, 6, 7; iii. 62, 10–12, etc., etc.

The epithets, characteristics, and functions of this god, as described in the Rig-veda, are as follows:

He is pre-eminently the golden deity, being hiraṇyāksha, golden-eyed (i. 35, 8); hiraṇya-pāṇi,[254] hiraṇya-hasta, golden-handed (i. 22, 5; i. 35, 9, 10; iii. 54, 11; vi. 50, 8; vi. 71, 4; vii. 38, 2; S.V. i. 464; Vaj. S. i. 16; iv. 25; A.V. iii. 21, 8; vii. 14, 2; vii. 115, 2;[255] hiraṇya-jihva, golden-tongued (vi. 71, 3); sujihva, beautiful-tongued (iii. 54, 11; vii. 45, 4); mandra-jihva, pleasant-tongued (vi. 71, 4). He invests himself with golden or tawny mail (piśangaṁ drāpim, iv. 53, 2); and assumes all forms (viśvā rūpāṇi prati mūnchate kaviḥ, v. 81, 2). He is also harikeśa, the yellow-haired (x. 139, 1). Luminous in his aspect, he ascends a golden car, drawn by radiant, brown, white-footed, horses; and beholding all creatures, he pursues an ascending and descending path, i. 35, 2–5; vii. 45, 1 (hiraṇyayena Savitā rathena devo yāti bhuvanāni paśyan | yāti devaḥ pravatā yāti udvatā yāti śubrābhyāṁ yajato haribhyām | kṛiśanair viśvarūpaṁ

[254] See the tasteless explanations of this epithet given by the commentator and the Kaushītakī Brāhmaṇa, as mentioned in Rosen's and Wilson's notes on i. 22, 5; and see also Weber's Ind. Studien, ii. 306. The same epithet is given to Savitṛi in the Vāj. Sanhitā, i. 16, where see the commentary. Savitṛi is also called pṛithupāṇi, broad-handed (ii. 38, 2), and supāṇi, beautiful-handed (iii. 33, 6; vii. 45, 4). Tvashṭṛi, too, is called supāṇi (iii. 54, 12), as are also Mitra and Varuṇa (iii. 56, 7).

[255] According to the A.V. i. 33, 1, he, as well as Agni, was born in the golden-coloured waters (hiraṇyavarṇāḥ śuchayaḥ pāvakāḥ yāsu jātaḥ Savitā yāsu Agniḥ).

hiraṇya-śamyaṁ yajato bṛihantam ā asthād rathaṁ savitā chitrabhānuḥ | vi janān śyāvāḥ śitipādaḥ akhyan rathaṁ hiraṇyapraïgaṁ vahantaḥ | savitā suratno antarikshaprāḥ vahamāno aśvaiḥ). Surrounded by a golden lustre, hiraṇyayīm amatim (iii. 38, 8; vii. 38, 1; vii. 45, 3), he illuminates the atmosphere, and all the regions of the earth, i. 35, 7, 8; iv. 14, 2; iv. 53, 4; v. 81, 2 (vi suparṇo antarikshāṇi akhyat | ashṭau vi akhyat kakubhaḥ pṛithivyāḥ | ūrdhvaṁ ketuṁ savitā devo aśrej jyotir viśvasmai bhuvanāya kṛiṇvan | adābhyo bhuvanāni prachākaśat | vi nākam akhyat Savitā). His robust and golden arms,[256] which he stretches out to bless, and infuse energy into, all creatures, reach to the utmost ends of heaven, ii. 38, 2; iv. 53, 3, 4; vi. 71, 1, 5; vii. 45, 2 (viśvasya hi śrushṭaye devaḥ ūrdhvaḥ pra bāhavā pṛithupāṇiḥ sisarti | pra bāhū asrāk Savitā savīmani | ud u sya devaḥ Savitā hiraṇyayā bāhū ayaṁsta savanāya sukratuḥ | ud asya bāhū śithirā bṛihantā hiraṇyayā divo antān anashṭām). In one place, however (vi. 71, 4), he is called ayohanu, the iron-jawed, though even there the commentator says that ayas, which ordinarily means iron, is to be rendered by gold. His ancient paths in the sky are said to be free from dust, i. 35, 11 (ye te panthāḥ Savitaḥ pūrvyāso areṇavaḥ sukṛitāḥ antarikshe). He is called (like Varuṇa and others of the gods) asura, a divine spirit (i. 35, 7, 10; iv. 53, 1). His will and independent authority cannot be resisted by Indra, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, Rudra, or by any other being, ii. 38, 7, 9; v. 82, 2 (nakir asya tāni vratā devasya Savitur minanti | na yasya Indro Varuṇo na Mitro vratam Aryamā na minanti Rudraḥ | asya hi svayaśastaraṁ Savituḥ kach chana priyam | na minanti svarājyam). He observes fixed laws, iv. 53, 4; x. 34, 8; x. 139, 3 (vratāni devaḥ Savitā 'bhirakshate | Savitā satyadharmā). The other gods follow his lead, v. 81, 3 (yasya prayāṇam anu anye id yayur devāḥ). The waters and the wind obey his ordinance, ii. 38, 2 (āpaś chid asya vrate ā nimṛigrāḥ ayaṁ chid vāto ramate parijman). His praises are celebrated by the Vasus, by Aditi, by the royal Varuṇa, by Mitra, and by Aryaman, vii. 38, 3, 4 (api stutaḥ Savitā devo astu yaḥ ā chid viśve Vasavo gṛiṇanti | abhi yam devī Aditir gṛiṇāti savaṁ devasya

[256] Indra, too, is called hiraṇya-bāhu, golden-armed, vii. 34, 4. Agni is said to raise aloft his arms like Savitṛi, i. 95, 7. In vii. 79, 2, the Dawns are said to send forth light as Savitṛi stretches out his arms. In i. 190, 3, also the arms of Savitṛi are alluded to. In vii. 62, 5, Mitra and Varuṇa are supplicated to stretch out their arms.

Savitur jushāṇā | abhi samrājo Varuṇo gṛiṇanti abhi Mitrāso Aryamā sajoshāḥ). He is lord of all desirable things, and sends blessings from the sky, from the atmosphere, and from the earth, i. 24, 3; ii. 38, 11 (īśānāṁ vāryāṇām | asmabhyaṁ tad divo adbhyaḥ pṛithivyās tvayā dattaṁ kāmyaṁ rādhaḥ ā gāt | śaṁ yat stotṛibhyaḥ āpaye bhavāti uruśaṁsāya Savitar jaritre). He impels the car of the Aśvins before the dawn, i. 34, 10 (yuvor hi pūrvaṁ Savitā ushasho ratham ṛitāya chitraṁ ghṛitavantam ishyati). He is prajāpati,[257] the lord of all creatures, the supporter of the sky and of the world, and is supplicated to hasten to his worshippers with the same eagerness as cattle to a village, as warriors to their horses, as a cow to give milk to her calf, as a husband to his wife, iv. 53, 2; iv. 54, 4; x. 149, 1, 4[258] (Divo dharttā bhuvanasya prajāpatiḥ | Savitā yantraiḥ pṛithivīm aramṇād askambhane Savitā dyām adṛiṁhat | 4. Gāvaḥ iva grāmaṁ yuyudhir ivāśvān vāśrena vatsaṁ sumanāḥ duhānā | patir iva jāyām abhi no ni etu dhartā divaḥ Savitā viśvavāraḥ). In v. 82, 7, he is called viśvadeva, "in all attributes a god." He measured (or fashioned) the terrestrial regions, v. 81, 3 (yaḥ parthivāni vi mame). He bestows immortality on the gods, iv. 54, 2 = Vāj. Sanh. xxxiii. 54 (devebhyo hi prathamaṁ yajniyebhyo amṛitatvaṁ suvasi bhāgam uttamam), as he did on the Ṛibhus, who by the greatness of their merits attained to his abode, i. 110, 2, 3 (charitasya bhūmanā agachhata Savitur dāśusho gṛiham | tat Savitā vo amṛitatvam āsuvat). In x. 17, 4, he is prayed to convey the departed spirit to the abode of the righteous (yatrāsate sukṛito yatra te yayus tatra tvā devaḥ Savitā dadhātu). He is supplicated to deliver his worshippers from sin, iv. 54, 3 (achittī yach chakṛima daivye jane . . . . | deveshu cha Savitar mānusheshu cha tvaṁ no attra suvatād anāgasaḥ).

Savitṛi is sometimes called apāṁ napāt, son of the waters (x. 149, 2), an epithet which is more commonly applied to Agni.

[257] In the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 6, 4, 1 (p. 117), it is said, Prajāpatiḥ Savitā bhūtvā prajāḥ asṛijata, "Prajāpati, becoming Savitṛi, created living beings." On the relation of Savitṛi and Prajāpati see Weber, "Omina und Portenta," pp. 386, 392; and the passage of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xii. 3, 5, 1, where it is said that people are accustomed to identify Savitṛi with Prajāpati, Yo hy eva Savitā sa Prajāpatir iti vadantaḥ, etc., etc.

[258] It is not clear whether it is Savitṛi or the aerial ocean (samudra) from which earth, atmosphere, and sky are said in x. 149, 2, to have sprung. See the 4th vol. of this work, p. 96.

(2) Passages in which the origin of his name seems to be alluded to.

The word Savitṛi is defined by Yāska (Nirukta, x. 31 as meaning sarvasya prasavitā, but he does not explain in what sense prasavitā is to be taken. The root su or sū, from which it is derived, has three principal significations, (1) to generate or bring forth; (2) to pour forth a libation; and (3) to send or impel. When treating of derivatives of this root as applied to Savitṛi, Sāyaṇa sometimes gives them the sense of sending or impelling, and sometimes of permitting or authorizing (anujñā). In a few places he explains the root as meaning to beget. (Thus on i. 113, 1, he renders prasūtā by utpannā, and savaḥ by utpattiḥ). The word prasavitṛi, as well as various other derivatives of the root su, are introduced in numerous passages of the Rig-veda relating to the god Savitṛi, with evident reference to the derivation of that name from the same root, and with a constant play upon the words,[259] such as is unexampled in the case of any other deity.

The following are some of the passages of the Rig-veda in which these derivatives occur:

i. 124, 1. Devo no atra Savitā nu artham prāsāvīd dvipat pra chatushpad ityai | "The god Savitṛi hath impelled (or aroused) both two-footed and four-footed creatures to pursue their several objects."

i. 157, 1. Prāsāvīd devaḥ Savitā jagat pṛithak | "The god Savitṛi has aroused each moving thing" (comp. i. 159, 3).

v. 81, 2 (=Vāj. San. xiii. 3). Viśvā rūpāṇi prati munchate kaviḥ prāsāvīd bhadram dvipade chatushpade | vi nākam akhyat Savitā varenyo anu prayāṇam Ushaso virājati | 5. Uta īśishe prasavasya tvam ekaḥ id uta Pūshā bhavasi deva yāmabhiḥ | "The wise (Savitṛi) puts on (or, manifests) all forms. He hath sent prosperity to biped and quadruped. Savitṛi, the object of our desire, has illuminated the sky. He shines after the path of the Dawn." 5. "Thou alone art the lord of vivifying power, and by thy movements, o god, thou becomest Pūshan, (or the nourisher)."

i. 110, 2. Saudhanvanāsaś charitasya bhūmanā ayachhata Savitur

[259] See Roth's Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 76. I cannot form an opinion whether this feature in the hymns in question affords any sufficient ground for regarding them as artificial in character, and consequently as comparatively late in their origin.

dāśusho gṛiham | 3. Tat Savitā vo amṛitatvam āsuvat | "Sons of Sudhanvan (Ṛibhus), by the greatness of your deeds ye arrived at the house of the bountiful Savitṛi. 3. Savitṛi bestowed on you (āsuvat) that immortality."

i. 159, 5. Tad rādho adya Savitur vareṇyaṁ vayaṁ devasya prasave manāmahe | "That desirable wealth we to-day seek through the favouring impulse of the divine Savitṛi."

ii. 38, 1. Ud u syaḥ devaḥ Savitā savāya śaśvatamaṁ tad-apāḥ vahnir asthāt | "The god Savitṛi hath arisen to impel (or vivify) us, he who continually so works, the supporter."

iii. 33, 6 (Nir. ii. 26). Devo anayat Savitā supāṇis tasya vayam prasave yāmaḥ urvīḥ | "The god Savitṛi hath led (us, i.e. the waters); by his propulsion we flow on broadly."

iii. 56, 6. Trir ā divaḥ Savitaḥ vāryāṇi dive dive āsuva trir no ahnaḥ | 7. Trir ā divaḥ Savitā soshavīti rājānā Mitrāvaruṇā supāṇī | "Thrice every day, o Savitṛi, send us desirable things from the sky. 7. Thrice Savitṛi continues to send down (these things to us) from the sky; and so also do the fair-handed Mitra and Varuṇa."

iv. 53, 3. Pra bāhū asrāk Savitā savīmani niveśayan prasuvann aktubhir jagat | 6. Bṛihatsumnaḥ prasavitā niveśano jagataḥ sthātur ubhayasya yo vaśī | sa no devaḥ Savitā śarma yachhatu | "Savitṛi hath stretched out his arms in his vivifying energy (savīmani[260]), stablishing and animating all that moves by his rays. 6. May that god Savitṛi, who bestows great happiness, the vivifier, the stablisher, who is lord both of that which moves and of that which is stationary, bestow on us protection."

iv. 54, 3. Achittī yach chakṛima daivye jane dīnair dakshaiḥ prabhūtī purushvatā | deveshu cha Savitar mānusheshu cha tvaṁ no atra suvatād anāgasaḥ | "Whatever (offence) we have committed by want of thought, against the divine race, by feebleness of understanding, by violence, after the manner of men, and either against gods or men, do thou, o Savitṛi, constitute (suvatāt) us sinless."

v. 82, 3. Sa hi ratnāni dāśushe suvāti Savitā Bhagaḥ | 4. Adya no devaḥ Savitaḥ prajāvat sāvīḥ saubhagam | parā dushvapnyaṁ sava | 5. Viśvāni deva Savitar duritāni parā suva yad bhadraṁ tan naḥ āsuva | 6. Anāgasaḥ Aditaye devasya Savituḥ save | viśvā vāmāni dhīmahi |

[260] This word also occurs in Sāma-veda, i. 464.

7. Ā viśvadevaṁ satpatiṁ sūktair adya vṛiṇīmahe | satyasavaṁ Savitāram | "May he, Savitṛi, who is Bhaga, (or the protector, bhaga), send wealth to his worshipper. 4. Send (sāvīḥ) to-day, o divine Savitṛi, prosperity with progeny: send away (parā-suva) sleeplessness (compare x. 37, 4, where a similar expression (apa suva) is employed in the case of Sūrya). 5. Send away, o divine Savitṛi, all calamities; send (āsuva) us what is good. 6. May we, becoming sinless towards Aditi, through the influence (sava) of the divine Savitṛi, possess all things desirable. 7. We seek to-day, with hymns, for Savitṛi, who possesses true energy (satya-sava[261]), and all divine attributes, the lord of the good."

vi. 71, 1. Ud u syaḥ devaḥ Savitā hiraṇyayā bāhū ayaṁsta savanāya sukratuḥ | 2. Devasya vayaṁ Savituḥ savīmani śreshṭhe syāma vasunaś cha dāvane | yo viśvasya dvipado yaś chatushpado niveśane prasave chāsi bhūmanaḥ | 6. Vāmam adya Savitar vāmam u śvo dive dive vāmam asmabhyaṁ sāvīḥ | "The potent god Savitṛi hath stretched out his golden arms to vivify (or impart energy). 2. May we share in the excellent vivifying power (compare x. 36, 12) of the god Savitṛi, and in the bestowal of wealth by thee, who continuest to stablish and vivify the entire two-footed and four-footed world. 6. Send to us to-day, Savitṛi, what is desirable; send it to us to-morrow, and every day."

vii. 38, 2. Ud u tishṭha Savitaḥ . . . ā nṛibhyo marttabhojanaṁ suvānaḥ | 4. Abhi yaṁ devī Aditir gṛiṇāti savaṁ devasya Savitur jushāṇā | abhi samrājo Varuṇo gṛiṇanti abhi Mitrāso Aryamā sajoshāḥ | "Rise, Savitṛi, . . . sending (āsuvānaḥ) to men the food which is fit for mortals. 4. Whom (i.e. Savitṛi) the goddess Aditi praises, welcoming the vivifying power of the divine Savitṛi, whom Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman laud in concert."

vii. 40, 1. Yad adya devaḥ Savitā suvāti syāma asya ratnino vibhāge | "May we partake in the distribution (of wealth) which the opulent god Savitṛi shall send to-day."

vii. 45, 1. Ā devo yātu Savitā suratno antarikṣha-prāḥ vahamāno aśvaiḥ | haste dadhāno naryā purūṇi niveśayan cha prasuvan cha bhūma | 3. Sa gha no devaḥ Savitā sahāvā sāvishad vasupatir vasūni | "May the [261] The same epithet is applied to him in x. 36, 13. It occurs also in the Sāmaveda, i. 464.

god Savitṛi approach, rich in treasures, filling the atmosphere, borne by horses, holding in his hand many gifts suitable for men, stablishing and vivifying the world. 3. May the powerful god Savitṛi, lord of wealth, send us riches."

viii. 91, 6. Āsavaṁ Savitur yathā Bhagasyeva bhujiṁ huve | Agniṁ samudravāsasam | "I invoke the sea-clothed Agni, as (I invoke) the vivifying power (savam[262]) of Savitṛi and the bounty of Bhaga."

x. 35, 7. Śreshṭham no adya Savitar vareṇyam bhāgam āsuva sa hi ratnadhāḥ asi | "Send us to-day, o god Savitṛi, a most excellent and desirable portion, for thou art the possessor of riches."

x. 36, 14. Savitā naḥ suvatu sarvatātim | "May Savitṛi send (suvatu) all prosperity," etc.

x. 100, 8. Apa amīvāṁ Savitā sāvishad nyak | "May Savitṛi remove (apasāvishat) sickness."

x. 139, 1. Sūryaraśmir harikeśaḥ purastāt Savitā jyotir ud ayān ajasram | tasya Pūshā prasave yāti vidvān sampaśyan viśvā bhuvanāni gopāḥ | "Invested with the solar rays, with yellow hair, Savitṛi raises aloft his light continually from the east. In his energy (prasave) the wise Pūshan marches, beholding all worlds, a guardian."

Compare A.V. v. 24, 1; vii. 14, 1, 3; vii. 15, 1.

The preceding passages will suffice to show the extent to which this play on words is carried in the hymns addressed to Savitṛi.

Derivatives from the same root are, as we have already seen, also applied to Sūrya, as prasavitā and prasūtaḥ, in R.V. vii. 63, 2 and 4; and apasuva in x. 37, 4; to Indra (haryaśva-prasūtāḥ, iii. 30, 12); to Varuṇa (parāsuva, ii. 28, 9); and to Mitra, Aryaman, Savitṛi, and Bhaga (suvātī, vii. 66, 4). In vii. 77, 1, Ushas (the Dawn) is said to rouse (prasuvantī) all living creatures into motion. In viii. 18, 1, the impulse, vivifying power, or favouring aid (savīmani) of the Ādityas is referred to.

(3) Savitṛi, sometimes distinguished from, sometimes identified with, Sūrya.

Savitṛi is sometimes expressly distinguished from Sūrya. Thus he is said in i. 35, 9, to approach, or (according to Prof. Benfey's rendering) to bring Sūrya (veti sūryam);[263] in i. 123, 3, to declare men sinless towards Sūrya[264] (devo no attra Savitā damūnāḥ anāgaso vochati Sūryāya); and in v. 81, 4, to combine with the rays of Sūrya (uta Sūryasya raśmibhiḥ samuchyasi). In explanation of the last passage, Sāyaṇa remarks, that before his rising the sun is called Savitṛi, and from his rising till his setting Sūrya (udayāt pūrvabhāvī Savitā | udayāstamayavarttī Sūryaḥ iti). And similarly, Yāska says, Nirukta xii. 12: tasya kālo yadā dyaur apahatatamaskā ākīrṇaraśmir bhavati | "the time of Savitṛi's appearance is when darkness has been removed, and the rays of light have become diffused over the sky." If so, his action must also extend to a later period of the day, as in vii. 66, 4, he is prayed along with Mitra (the god of the day) and Aryaman and Bhaga, to vivify the worshipper after the rising of the sun (yad adya sūre udite anāgāḥ Mitro Aryamā | suvāti Savitā Bhagaḥ). Again, in x. 139, 1, Savitṛi is termed sūrya-raśmi, "invested with the rays of Sūrya;" and in the 8th and 10th verses of vii. 35 (verse 8: śam naḥ Sūryaḥ uruchakshāḥ | 10: śaṁ no devaḥ Savitā trāyamāṇaḥ), as well as in x. 181, 3 (Dhātur dyutānāt Savituś cha Vishṇor ā Sūryād abharan gharmam ete), the two gods are separately mentioned, unless we are to suppose (but apparently without reason) that in the last passage the writer means to identify all the four gods who are there named, viz. Dhātṛi, Savitṛi, Vishṇu, and Sūrya. In i. 157, 1 also, where several gods are mentioned besides Sūrya and Savitṛi, the last two appear to be distinguished: abodhi Agnir jmaḥ udeti Sūryo vi Ushāś chandrā mahī āvo archishā | ayukshātām Aśvinā yātave ratham prāsāvīd devaḥ Savitā jagat pṛithak | "Agni has awoke from the earth: Sūrya rises; the great and bright Ushas has dawned with her radiance; the Aśvins have yoked their car to go; Savitṛi has vivified each moving creature." In other texts, however, the two names appear to be employed indiscriminately to denote the same deity, viz. in iv. 14, 2 (ūrdhvaṁ ketum Savitā devo aśrej jyotir viśvasmai bhuvanāya kṛiṇvan | ā aprāḥ dyāvā-pṛithivī antarikshaṁ vi Sūryo raś-

[262] In i. 164, 26, and ix. 67, 25, particularly in the latter passage, sava may mean a libation of soma. Compare brahmasavaiḥ in ix. 67, 24.

[263] Sāyaṇa remarks here that, though the godhead of Savitṛi and Sūrya is identical, they may yet, from their representing different forms, be spoken of as respectively approaching and approached (yadyapi savitṛi-sūryayor ekadevatātvaṁ tathāpi mūrtti-bhedena gantṛi-gantavya-bhāvaḥ).

[264] As in another place (x. 12, 8), he is supplicated, along with Mitra and Aditi, to declare the worshippers sinless towards Varuṇa.

mibhiś chekitānaḥ); x. 158, 1 (Sūryo no divas pātu . . . | 2. Josha Savitaḥ . . . | 3. Chakshur no devaḥ Savita . . . | 5. Susandṛiśaṁ tvā vayam prati paśyema Sūrya). In i. 35, 7, also the name Sūrya may be employed as synonymous with Savitṛi, which is found in the other verses of the hymn, although, as we have already seen, the two deities appear to be distinguished in verse 9. See also i. 124, 1[e]; and vii. 63, 1–4 (when the word Sūrya is used in verses 1, 2, and 3, and Savitṛi in verse 4, and where the functions expressed by the derivatives of the root su, which, as we have seen, are most generally assigned to Savitṛi, are in verses 2 and 4 predicated of Sūrya).

In v. 81, 4 and 5 (uta Mitro bhavasi deva dharmabhiḥ | 5. Uta Pūshā bhavasi deva yāmabhiḥ), Savitṛi is identified with Mitra and Pūshan, or is, at least, described as fulfilling the proper function of those gods. And similarly in v. 82, 1, 3, and vii. 38, 1, 6 (unless with Prof. Roth, s.v. we take Bhaga as a simple epithet), Savitṛi seems to be identified with the god of that name. On the other hand, he is clearly distinguished from these and other deities, in such texts as iii. 54, 11, 12; vi. 49, 14; vi. 50, 1, 13; viii. 18, 3; viii. 91, 6; x. 139, 1.

The word Savitṛi is not always a proper name; but is sometimes used as an epithet. Thus in ii. 30, 1, it seems to express an attribute of Indra; and in iii. 55, 19, and x. 10, 5 (devas Tvashṭā savitā viśvarūpaḥ), to be, as well as viśvarūpa, an epithet of Tvashṭṛi. As applied to this god, it probably means rather the generator, than the vivifier.

SECTION XII.

PŪSHAN.

I commence my description of this deity by translating the account given of him in the Sanskrit and German Lexicon of Messrs. Böthlingk and Roth, vol. iv. p. 854 f.

(1) Functions and epithets of Pūshan.

"Pūshan is a protector and multiplier of cattle (paśupā) and of human possessions in general (pushṭimbhara, R.V. vi. 3, 7). As a cowherd he carries an ox-goad (vi. 53, 9; vi. 58, 2) and he is drawn by goats (ajāśva). In character he is a solar deity,[265] beholds the entire universe, and is a guide on roads and journies (i. 42, 1; x. 17, 6; x. 59, 7; x. 85, 26; A.V. vi. 73, 3), and to the other world (pathaspati, prapathya (x. 17, 3, 5; A.V. xvi. 9, 2; xviii. 2, 53). He is called the lover of his sister Sūryā (vi. 55, 4, 5; vi. 58, 4). He aids in the revolutions of day and night (i. 23, 13–15); and shares with Soma the guardianship of living creatures (Soma-pūshaṇau, ii. 40, 1 ff.). He is invoked along with the most various deities, but most frequently with Indra (Indrā-pūshaṇau, i. 162, 2; vii. 35, 1), and Bhaga (iv. 30, 24; v. 41, 4; v. 46, 2; x. 125, 2. Compare Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa xi. 4, 3, 3; Kāty. Śr. v. 13, 1). His most remarkable epithets, in addition to those above specified, are āghṛiṇi, kapardin, karambhād, dasra, dasma, dasmavarchas, narāśaṁsa (R.V. i. 106, 4; x. 64, 3) vimucho napāt, vimochana. Compare especially the hymns R.V. vi. 53–58; x. 26." The reader can also consult the remarks on this god given in the Introductions to Professor Wilson's translation of the Rig-veda, vol. i. p. xxxv. and vol. iii. p. xii.

The hymns which are exclusively devoted to the celebration of

[265] In Nir. vii. 9, where R.V. x. 17, 3, is quoted, Yāska explains the words bhuvanasya gopāḥ there applied to Pūshan, by sarveshām bhūtānāṁ gopāyitā ādityaḥ | "the sun, the preserver of all beings."

Pūshan are i. 42; i. 138; vi. 53–56; vi. 58; and x. 26. In ii. 40, he is invoked along with Soma, and in vi. 57, in company with Indra. The single or detached verses of other hymns in which he is mentioned are numerous. In addition to the epithets above specified by Professor Roth, I note the following, and others will be found, in the hymns which are translated below: agohya, not to be hidden (x. 64, 3); anarvan, resistless (vi. 48, 15); abhyardhayajvan, bringing blessings (vi. 50, 5);[266] asura, divine (v. 51, 11); kshayadvīra, ruler of heroes (i. 106, 4); tavyas, strong, and tura, vigorous (v. 43, 9); tuvijāta, of powerful nature (i. 138, 1); purandhi, wise (ii. 31, 4); purūvasu, abounding in wealth (viii. 4, 15); mantumat, wise in counsel (i. 42, 5); mamhishṭha, most bountiful (viii. 4, 18); mayobhū, beneficent (i. 138, 2); vājin, bestower of food (i. 106, 4); śakra, powerful, (viii, 4, 15); viśvadevya, distinguished by all divine attributes (x. 92, 13); viśvasaubhaga, bestowing all blessings (i. 42, 6); viśvavedas, knowing all things (i. 89, 6); hiraṇyavāśīmattama, skilful wielder of a golden spear (i. 42, 6); and Soma is said to be like Pūshan an impeller of the soul (dhījavana). He is the lord of all things moving and stationary, the inspirer of the soul, an unconquerable protector and defender, and is besought to give increase of wealth, i. 89, 5 (tam īśānaṁ jagatas tastushas patiṁ dhiyaṁjinvam avase hūmahe vayam | Pūshā no yathā vedasām asad vṛidhe rakshitā pāyur adabdhaḥ svastaye | compare ii. 1, 6). He is besought to maintain his friendship steadfast like a skin without holes and well filled with curds; he is declared to transcend mortals, and to be equal to the gods, in glory; and is prayed to protect his servants in battle and to defend them as of old, vi. 48, 18 (dṛiter iva te avṛikam astu sakhyam | achhidrasya dadhanvataḥ supūrṇasya dadhanvataḥ | 19. Paro hi martyair asi samo devair uta śriyā | abhi khyaḥ Pūshan pṛitanāsu nas tvam ava nūnaṁ yathā purā). He is said to regard, and to see clearly and at once, all creatures, iii. 62, 9 (yo viśvā abhi vipaśyati bhuvanā saṁ cha paśyati | sa naḥ Pūshā 'vitā bhuvat), and in x. 139, 1, is associated with Savitṛi and is described as moving onward under his impulse, and as knowing and perceiving all creatures, a guardian (tasya Pūshā prasave yāti vidvān sampaśyan viśvā bhuvanāni gopāḥ). He is connected with the marriage ceremonial in x. 85, 26 and 37, being besought to take the bride's hand and lead her away (verse 26. Pūshā tvā ito nayatu hastagṛihya), and to bless her in her conjugal relation (37. tām Pūshan śivatamām ā ṛayasva);[267] and in another place he is prayed to give his worshippers their share of damsels, ix. 67, 10 (avitā no ajāśvaḥ Pūshā yāmani yāmani ā bhakshad kanyāsu naḥ). According to Professor Roth (as quoted above) Pūshan is not only the tutelary god of travellers, but also, like Savitṛi and Agni, and the Greek Hermes, a ψυχοπομπός, who conducts departed spirits on their way to the other world, and in proof of this, as we have seen, he refers to R.V. x. 17, 3, 5, and two passages from the A.V. These texts are as follows: R.V. x. 17, 3 ff. (verses which, as I learn from Professor M. Müller's article on the funeral ceremonies of the Brahmāns,[268] p. xi. ff., are directed to be recited during the cremation of the body): Pūshā tvā itaś chyāvayatu pra vidvān anashṭapaśur bhuvanasya gopāḥ | sa tvā etebhyaḥ pari dadat pitṛibhyo Agnir devebhyaḥ suvidatriyebhyaḥ | 4. Āyur viśvāyuḥ pari pāsati tvā Pūshā tvā pātu prapathe purastāt | yatrāsate sukṛito yatra te yayus tatra tvā devaḥ Savitā dadhātu | 5. Pūshā imāḥ āśāḥ anu veda sarvāḥ so asmān abhayatamena neshat | svastidāḥ āghṛiṇiḥ sarvavīro aprayuchhan puraḥ etu prajānan | 6. Prapathe pathām ajanishṭa Pūshā prapathe divaḥ prapathe pṛithivyāḥ | ubhe abhi priyatame sadasthe ā cha parā cha charati prājanan | "3. May Pūshan convey thee away hence, the wise, the preserver of the world, who loses none of his cattle; may he deliver thee to these fathers; and may Agni (entrust thee) to the gracious gods. 4. May life, full of vitality, protect thee: May Pūshan convey thee onward on thy distant road; May Savitṛi place thee where the righteous abide, in the place whither they have gone. 5. Pūshan knows all these regions: may he conduct us in perfect security; blessing, glowing, all-heroic, may he go before us, watchful and understanding. 6. Pūshan was born to move on distant paths, on the far road of heaven and the far road of earth. He goes to and returns from both the beloved abodes."

[266] "Spenden entgegenbringend" (Roth). Yāska (Nir. vi. 6) explains the compound as abhyardhayan yajati, "one who increasing, worships," and Sāyaṇa expands this into "prospering his worshippers" (stotṛīn abhyardhayan samṛiddhān kurvan yo yajati dhanena pūjayati tādṛiśaḥ); Roth, in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 75, inclines to the same interpretation.

[267] See Weber's Ind. Stud. v. 186, and 190.

[268] Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. ix., at the end.

A.V. xvi. 9, 2. Tad Agnir āha tad u Somaḥ āha Pushā mā dhāt sukṛitasya loke | "Agni says, and Soma says, 'may Pūshan place me in the world of righteousness.'"

A.V. xviii. 2, 53. Agnīshomā pathikṛitā syonaṁ devebhyo ratnaṁ dadhathur vi lokam | upa preshyatam Pūshaṇaṁ yo vahāti ajayānaiḥ pathibhis tattra gachhatam | "Agni and Soma, makers of paths, ye have prepared for the gods, as a treasure, a beautiful world; go thither and send hither to us Pūshan, who shall conduct us by direct roads." [269]

In R.V. i. 23, 13 f. the glowing Pūshan is prayed to bring hither, like a lost beast, the supporter of the sky, who is surrounded by brilliant grass; [270] and is said to have found the king so designated, who had been concealed (ā Pūshan chitrabarhisham āghṛiṇe dharuṇaṁ divaḥ āja nashṭaṁ yathā paśum | 14. Pūshā rājānam āghṛiṇir apagūḷhaṁ guhā hitam | avindach chitrabarhisham).

In one passage, i. 23, 8, the other gods are designated by the appellation of pūsharāti, "bestowers of Pūshan's gifts," or "having Pūshan as their chief giver."

(2) Hymns addressed to Pūshan.

I shall now translate some of the hymns addressed to Pūshan, from which it will appear that the character of this god is not very distinctly defined; and that it is difficult to declare positively what province of nature or of physical action he is designed to represent, as is at once manifest in the case of Dyaus, Pṛithivī, Agni, Indra, Parjanya, and Sūrya:

i. 42, 1. Eam Pūshann adhvanas tira vi aṁho vimucho napāt | sakshva deva pra nas puraḥ | 2. Yo naḥ Pūshann agho vṛiko duśśevaḥ ādideśati | apa sma tvam patho jahi | 3. Apa tyam paripanthinam mushīvāṇaṁ huraśchitam | dūram adhi sruter aja | 4. Tvaṁ tasya dvayāvino aghaśaṁsasya kasya chit | padā 'bhi tishṭha tapushim | 5. Ā tat te dasra mantumaḥ Pūshann avo vṛiṇīmahe | yena pitṛīn achodayaḥ | 6. Adha no

[269] Prof. Roth, s.v. takes ajayānaiḥ as = anjoyānaiḥ.

[270] Professor Roth understands this epithet chitrabarhis to mean "having glittering straw," or "having around him straw in the form of jewels," and applies it to the moon. Prof. Benfey, following Sāyaṇa, considers that Soma is the deity intended, and renders the word chitrabarhis by "reposing on a rich covering." The reference seems obscure.

viśvasaubhaga hiraṇyavāśīmattama | dhanāni sushaṇā kṛidhi | 7. Ati naḥ saśchato naya sugā naḥ supathā kṛiṇu | Pūshann iha kratuṁ vidaḥ | 8. Abhi suyavasaṁ naya na navajvāro adhvane | Pūshann . . . | 9. S'agdhi pūrdhi pra yaṁsi cha śiśīhi prāsi udaram | Pūshann . . . | 10. Na Pūshaṇam methāmasi sūktair abhi gṛiṇīmasi | vasūni dasmam īmahe | "1. Conduct us, Pushan, over our road; remove distress, son of the deliverer;[271] go on before us. 2. Smite away from our path the destructive and injurious wolf which seeks after us. 3. Drive away from our path the waylayer, the thief, the robber. 4. Tread with thy foot upon the burning weapon of that deceitful wretch, whosoever he be. 5. O wonder-working and wise Pūshan, we desire that help of thine wherewith thou did favour our fathers. 6. O god, who bringest all blessings, and art distinguished by thy golden spear, make wealth easy of acquisition. 7. Convey us past our opponents; make our paths easy to traverse; gain strength for us here. 8. Lead us over a country of rich pastures; let no new trouble (beset our) path. 9. Bestow, satiate, grant, stimulate us, fill our belly. 10. We do not reproach Pūshan, we praise him with hymns; we seek riches from the wonder-working god."[272]

The next hymn alludes at the beginning to Pūshan in his character of tutelary god of travellers (comp. vi. 49, 8; x. 17, 3, 6; x. 59, 7; x. 92, 13); but it is chiefly occupied with the poet's aspirations after a liberal patron, and with attempts to inflame the god's indignation against the niggards with whom he considered himself to be surrounded.

[271] Vimucho napāt. Professor Benfey follows Sāyaṇa in loco in taking this to mean "offspring of the cloud" (jala-vimochaka-hetor meghasya puttra). The Indian commentator, however, assigns another sense to the phrase in v. 55, 1, where it recurs, and where he explains it as "the son of Prajāpati, who at the creation sends forth from himself all creatures" (vimunchati sṛishṭi-kāle svasakāśat sarvāḥ prajāḥ visṛijati iti vimuk Prajāpatiḥ | tasya puttra). In R.V. viii. 4, 15 f. Pūshan is called vimochana, the "deliverer," which Sāyaṇa interprets "deliverer from sin" pāpād vimochayitaḥ). Perhaps vimucho napāt means the same thing. Compare the words vi te munchantāṁ vimucho hi santi, A.V. vii. 112, 3; and śavaso napāt, and the other similar phrases quoted above in p. 52. In preparing my version of this hymn I have had the aid of Benfey, as well as of Sāyaṇa.

[272] Professor Benfey refers here to a preceding note of his own on R.V. i. 41, 8, the sense of which is as follows: "I believe that this refers to a practice which we still find among barbarous, and even among partially civilized, races, of believing that they can compel their gods, by insults, and by blows inflicted on their images, to grant their desires, or if this be not accomplished, of thinking that they thereby take their revenge."

vi. 53, 1. Vayam u tvā pathas pate rathaṁ na vājasātaye | dhiye Pūshann ayujmahi | 2. Abhi no naryaṁ vasu vīram prayata-dakshiṇam | vāmaṁ gṛihapatim naya | 3. Aditsantaṁ chid āghṛiṇe Pūshan dānāya chodaya | paṇeś chid vi mrada manaḥ | 4. Vi patho vājasātaye chinuhi vi mṛidho jahi sādhantām ugra no dhiyaḥ | 5. Pari tṛindhi paṇīnām ārayā hṛidayā kave | athem asmabhyaṁ randhaya | 6. Vi Pūshann ārayā tuda paṇer ichha hṛidi priyam | athem asmabhyaṁ randhaya | 7. Ā rikha kikirā kṛiṇu paṇīnaṁ hṛidayā kave | athem . . . | 8. Yām Pūshan brahmachodinīm ārām bibharshi āghṛiṇe | tayā samasya hṛidayam ā rikha kikirā kṛiṇu | 9. Yā te ashṭrā goopaśā āghṛiṇe paśusādhanī | tasyās te sumnam īmahe | 10. Uta no goshaṇim dhiyam aśvasām vājasām uta | nṛivat kṛiṇuhi vītaye |

"1. Pūshan, we have attached thee, lord of roads, to our hymn, as a chariot (is yoked) for the acquisition of food. 2. Bring to us wealth suitable for men, and a manly estimable householder, who shall bestow on us gifts. 3. Impel to liberality, o glowing Pūshan, even the man who would fain bestow nothing: soften the soul even of the niggard. 4. Open up paths by which we may obtain food; slay our enemies; let our designs succeed, o glorious god. 5. O wise god, pierce the hearts of the niggards with an awl; and then make them subject to us. 6. Pierce them with an awl, o Pūshan; seek (for us) that which is dear to the niggard's heart; and then make them subject to us. 7. Penetrate and tear the hearts of the niggards, o wise god, and then subject them to us. 8. With that prayer-stimulating goad which thou carriest, glowing Pūshan, penetrate and tear the heart of every such man. 9. From that goad of thine, which is furnished with leathern thongs,[273] and guides cattle, we seek for prosperity. 10. Grant that our hymn may produce for us cattle, horses, food, for our enjoyment abundantly."

vi. 54, 1. Sam Pūshan vidushā naya yo anjasā 'nuśāsati | yaḥ eva idam iti bravat | 2. Sam u Pūshṇā gamemahi yo gṛihān abhiśāsati | ime eva iti cha bravat | 3. Pūshṇaś chakraṁ na rishyati na kośo ava padyate | no asya vyathate paviḥ | 4. Yo asmai havishā 'vidhat na tam Pūshā 'pi mṛishyate | prathamo vindate vasu | 5. Pūshā gāḥ anu etu naḥ Pūshā rakshatu arvataḥ | Pūshā vājaṁ sanotu naḥ | 6. Pūshann anu pra gāḥ

[273] See Bohtlingk and Roth, s.v. goopaśa.

ihi yajamānasya sunvataḥ | asmākaṁ stuvatām uta | 7. Mākir neśat mākīṁ rishat mākīṁ saṁ śāri kevaṭe | atha arishṭābhir ā gahi | 8. S'ṛiṇvantam Pūshaṇaṁ vayam iryam anashṭa-vedasam | īśānaṁ rāyaḥ īmahe | 9. Pūshan tava vrate vayaṁ na rishyema kadāchana | stotāras te iha smasi | 10. Pari Pūshā paṛastād hastaṁ dadhātu dakshiṇam | punar no nashṭam ājatu |

"1. May we, o Pūshan, meet with a wise man who shall straightway direct us, and say 'so it is.'[274] 2. May we meet with Pūshan,[275] who shall point out a house, and shall say 'it is this.' 3. Pūshan's wheel is not shattered, nor does its box fall, nor is its rim broken. 4. Pūshan is not hostile to the man who offers him an oblation; that man is the first to obtain wealth. 5. May Pūshan follow our kine; may he protect our horses; may he give us food. 6. Pūshan, follow the kine of the worshipper who offers soma-libations, and of us when we do the same. 7. Let nothing be lost, or injured, or fall into a pit; but come to us with (the cows) all safe. 8. We seek after Pūshan who hears us, the alert, who never loses property, who is lord of wealth. 9. Pūshan, may we, through thy appointment, never fall into calamity; we are here, thy worshippers. 10. May Pūshan stretch out his right hand far and wide, and drive hither our lost property."

vi. 55, 1. Ehi vāṁ vimucho napād āghṛiṇe saṁ sachāvahai | rathīr ṛitasya no bhava | 2. Rathītamaṁ kaparddinam īśānaṁ rādhaso mahaḥ | rāyaḥ sakhāyam īmahe | 3. Rāyo dhārā 'si āghṛiṇe vasoḥ rāśir ajāśva | dhīvato dhīvato sakhā | 4. Pūshaṇaṁ nu ajāśvam upa stoshāma vājinam | svasur yo jāraḥ uchyate | 5. Mātur didhishum abravaṁ svasur jāraḥ śṛiṇotu naḥ | bhrātā Indrasya sakhā mama | 6. Ā ajāsaḥ Pūshaṇaṁ rathe niśṛimbhās te janaśriyam | devaṁ vahantu bibhṛataḥ |

"1. Come hither, glowing god, the deliverer, may we meet; be the charioteer of our rite. 2. We seek riches from thee, the most skilful of charioteers, the god with braided hair, the lord of great wealth, and our friend. 3. Thou art a stream of opulence, a heap of riches, o glowing deity, drawn by goats, and the friend of every devout contemplator.

[274] Sāyaṇa says that this verse is to be muttered by a man seeking for lost property (nashṭa-dhanam anvichhatā etaj japyam), and refers to Gṛihya Sūtras, iii. 9. He understands the wise man of one who shall point out the mode of recovering such property.

[275] See Prof. Wilson's note in loco. Sāyaṇa explains: "May we by [the favour of] Pūshan meet with a man who shall shew us the house in which our lost cattle are.'

4. Let us praise Pūshan, the god drawn by goats, the giver of food, who is called the lover of his sister.[276] 5. I address the husband of his mother;[277] may he hear us, the lover of his sister, the brother of Indra, and my friend. 6. May the surefooted[278] goats, supporting Pūshan, the god who visits mankind, bring him hither upon his chariot."

vi. 56, 1. Yaḥ enam ādideśati "karambhād" iti Pūshaṇam | na tena devaḥ ādiśe | 2. Uta gha sa rathītamaḥ sakhyā satpatir yujā | Indro vṛitrāṇi jighnate | 3 (Nir. ii. 6). Uta adaḥ parushe gavi sūraś chakraṁ hiraṇyayam | ni airayad rathītamaḥ | 4. Yad adya tvā purushṭuta bravāma dasra mantumaḥ | tat su no manma sādhaya | 5. Imaṁ cha no gaveshaṇaṁ sātaye sīshadho gaṇam | ārāt Pūshann asi śrutaḥ | 6. Ā te svastim īmahe āreaghām upāvasum | adya cha sarvatātaye svaś cha sarvatātaye |

"1. By him who designates Pūshan by saying 'this is the eater of meal and butter,' the god cannot be described. 2. Indra too, the lord of the good, the most skilful of charioteers, seeks to slay his enemies in company with his friend. 3. And this most skilful charioteer drove that golden wheel of the sun through the speckled cloud.[279] 4. Accomplish for us, o wonder-working and wise deity, that desire which we shall address to thee to-day. 5. And direct this exploring band of ours to the attainment of their object: for, Pūshan, thou are renowned afar. 6. We seek thy blessing, which drives away calamity, and brings opulence near, for full prosperity to-day, and for full prosperity to-morrow."

vi. 57, 1. Indrā nu Pūshaṇā[280] vayaṁ sakhyāya svastaye huvema vājasātaye | 2. Somam anyaḥ upāsadat pātave chamvoḥ sutam | karambham[281]

[276] Ushas, according to Sāyaṇa; and Sūryā, according to Prof. Roth. See the last verse of vi. 58, below.

[277] Sāyaṇa renders mātuḥ by nirmātryāḥ rātreḥ, "the constructress, Night."

[278] Roth, s.v. says niśṛimbha perhaps means "sicher auftretend;" Wilson renders "harnessed;" Sāyaṇa niśrathya sambadhya hartāraḥ. All seems guess work.

[279] Prof. Roth translates this verse as follows in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 19: "Er hat dort durch den krausen Wolkenzug der Sonne goldenes Rad hindurchgelenkt, der trefliche Fuhrmann (Pūschan). "He has guided the golden wheel of the sun through the curled train of clouds, the excellent driver (Pūshan)." In his Lexicon he renders the word parusha by "variegated," etc.

[280] Compare iii. 57, 2, and vi. 17, 11, where Pūshan and Vishṇu are said to have purified three bowls of Soma for Indra (Pūshā Vishṇus trīṇisa rāṁsi dhāvan vṛitrahaṇam madiram aṁśum asmai).

[281] iii. 52 7.

anyaḥ ichhati | 3. Ajāḥ anyasya vahnayo harī anyasya sambhṛitā | tābhyāṁ vṛittrāṇi jighnate | 4. Yad Indro anayad rito mahīr apo vṛishantamaḥ | tatra Pūshā 'bhavat sachā | 5. Tām Pūshṇaḥ sumatiṁ vayāṁ vṛikshasya pra vayām iva | Indrasya cha ā rabhāmahe | 6. Ut Pūshaṇaṁ yuvāmahe abhīśūn iva sārathiḥ | mahyai Indraṁ svastaye |

"1. Let us invoke Indra and Pūshan to be our friends, to bless us and to grant us food. 2. Of these two gods, the one (Indra) comes to drink the soma poured out from the ladles, and the other (Pūshan) desires meal and butter. 3. Goats convey the one, and two harnessed brown horses the other: borne by them he seeks to slay his enemies. 4. When the most vigorous Indra brought the great flowing waters, Pūshan was there with him. 5. We lay hold of that goodwill of Pūshan and of Indra, as we seize the branch of a tree. 6. We stir up Pūshan and Indra to bring us great prosperity, as a charioteer shakes his reins."

vi. 58, 1 (= S.V. i. 75). Śukraṁ te anyad yajataṁ te anyad vishurūpe ahanī dyaur ivāsi | visvāḥ hi māyāḥ avasi svadhāvo bhadrā te Pūshann iha rātir astu | 2. Ajāśvaḥ paśupāḥ vājapastyo dhiyaṁjinvo bhuvane viśve arpitaḥ | ashṭrām Pūshā śithirām udvarīvṛijat sanchakshāṇo bhuvanā devaḥ īyate | 3. Yās te Pūshan nāvo antaḥ samudre hiraṇyayīr antarikshe charanti | tābhir yāsi dūtyaṁ sūryasya kāmena krita[282] śravaḥ ichhamānaḥ | 4. Pūshā subandhur divaḥ ā pṛithivyāḥ ilaspatir maghavā dasmavarchāḥ | yaṁ devāso adaduḥ Sūryāyai kāmena kṛitaṁ tavasaṁ svancham |

"1. One of thine (appearances) is bright, the other is venerable; thy two periods are diverse; thou art like Dyaus: for, o self-dependent god, thou exercisest all wondrous powers. Q Pūshan, may thy gifts be beneficent. 2. Borne by goats, guardian of cattle, lord of a house overflowing with plenty, an inspirer of the soul, abiding within the whole creation, Pūshan has grasped his relaxed goad; the god moves onward beholding all creatures. 3. With those golden ships of thine, which sail across the aerial ocean, thou actest as the messenger of the Sun, desiring food, o god, subdued by love. 4. Pūshan is the close associate of [or the bond uniting?] heaven and earth, the lord of nourishment, the magnificent, of wondrous lustre. Him, vigorous and rapid, subdued by love, the gods gave to Sūryā."

[282] See next verse, and vi. 49, 8, where the same phrase occurs.

In ii. 40, Soma and Pūshan are celebrated conjointly as the generators of wealth, of heaven and earth, and the born preservers of the world, and as made by the gods the centre-point of immortality (Somapūshaṇā jananā rayīṇāṁ jananā divo jananā pṛithivyāḥ | jātau viśvasya bhuvanasya gopau devāḥ akṛiṇvann amṛitasya nābhim, verse 1); they hide the hated darkness (imau tamāṁsi gūhatām ajushṭhā, ibid. 2); they impel the chariot with seven wheels which traverses the air, but is not all-pervading, which revolves in all directions, is yoked by the mind, and shines with seven rays (Somāpūshaṇā rajaso vimānaṁ saptachakraṁ ratham aviśvamínvam | vishuvṛitam manasā yujyamānaṁ taṁ jinvatho vṛishaṇā pancharaśmim, verse 3); the one of them (Pūshan) is said to make his abode in the heaven, the other (Soma) on the earth and in the air (divi anyo sadanaṁ chakre uchchā pṛithivyām anyo adhi antarikshe, verse 4); the one (Soma) to have generated all creatures, and the other (Pūshan) to move onward beholding the universe (viśvāni anyo bhuvanā jajāna viśvam anyo abhichakshāṇaḥ eti, verse 5).

In the concluding verse of R.V. i. 138, the poet tells Pūshan that he seeks with gentle hymns to attract his attention, and that he does not treat the god with haughtiness or contempt, or reject his friendship (o su tvā vavṛitīmahi stomebhir dasma sādhubhiḥ | na hi tvā Pūshann atimanye āghṛiṇe na te sakhyam apahnuve).

In x. 26, he is said to be the fulfiller of prayers, and the stimulator of sages (matīnaṁ cha sādhanaṁ viprāṇāṁ cha ādhavam, verse 4); to be the promoter[283] of sacrifices, to impel the horses of chariots, to be a rishi friendly to men, and a protecting friend of the wise man (pratyardhir yajnānāṁ aśvahayo rathānām | ṛishiḥ sa yo manurhito viprasya yavayat-sakhaḥ, verse 5), the unshaken friend, born of old, of every suppliant (viśvasya arthinaḥ sakhā sanojāḥ anapachyutaḥ).

[283] Prof. Roth, s.v. thinks the word pratyardhi, which occurs also in x. 1, 5, may mean "entitled to the half of," "having an equal share in." Compare abhy-ardhayajvan above, p. 172, and note.

SECTION XIII.

USHAS.

This goddess, who corresponds to the Ἠώς (Æolic Αὐώς) of the Greeks, and to the Aurora of the Latins, is a favourite object of celebration with the poets of the Rig-veda, and the hymns addressed to her are among the most beautiful—if not the most beautiful—in the entire collection. The following are those which are specially dedicated to her honour, viz., i. 48; i. 49; i. 92; i. 113; i. 123; i. 124; iii. 61; iv. 51; iv. 52; v. 79; v. 80; vi. 64; vi. 65; vii. 75–81; x. 172. She is also invoked or referred to in numerous detached verses.

To give an idea of the manner in which Ushas is described and celebrated, I shall quote the larger portion of three hymns, of which the second and third are more remarkable than the first (introducing here and there some parallel passages from other quarters), and I shall afterwards give a summary of the principal attributes and functions which are attributed to her.

(1) Three hymns to Ushas.

i. 48, 1. Saha vāmena naḥ Ūsho vi uchha duhitar Divaḥ | saha dyumnena bṛihatā vibhāvari rāyā devi dāsvatī | 2. Aśvavatīr gomatīr viśvasuvido bhūrī chyavanta vastave | udīraya prati mā sūnṛitāḥ ushaś choda rādho maghonām | 3. Uvāsa ushāḥ uchhāt cha nu devī jīrā rathānām | ye asyāḥ ācharaṇeshu dadhrire samudre na śravasyavaḥ | 4. Ūsho ye te yāmeshu yunjate mano dānāya sūrayaḥ | attrāha tat kaṇvaḥ eshāṁ kaṇvatamo nāma gṛiṇāti nṛiṇām | 5. Ā gha yosheva sūnarī ushāḥ yāti prabhunjatī | jarayantī vṛijanam padvad īyate ut pātayati pakshiṇaḥ | 6. Vi yā sṛijati samanaṁ vi arthinaḥ padaṁ na veti odatī | vayo nakis te paptivāṁsaḥ āsate vyushṭau vājinīvati | [i. 124, 12 = vi. 64, 4. Ut te vayaś chid vasater apaptan naraś cha ye pitubhājo vyushṭau | see also i. 48, 9]. i. 48, 7. Esha ayukta parāvataḥ sūryasyodayanād adhi | śataṁ rathebhiḥ subhagā ushāḥ iyaṁ vi yāti abhi mānushān | 8. Viśvam asyāḥ nanāma

chakshase jagaj jyotish kṛiṇoti sūnarī | apa dvesho maghonī duhitā divaḥ ushāḥ uchhad apa sridhaḥ | 9. Ushaḥ ā bhāhi bhānunā chandreṇa duhitar divaḥ | āvahantī bhūri asmabhyaṁ saubhagaṁ vyuchhantī divishṭishu | 10. Viśvasya hi jīvanam prāṇanaṁ tve vi yad uchhasi sūnari | sā no rathena bṛihatā vibhāvari śrudhi chitramaghe havam | [i. 49, 1. Usho bhadrebhir ā gahi divaś chid rochanād adhi | vahantu aruṇapsavaḥ upa tvā somino gṛiham | 2. Supeśasaṁ sukkaṁ rathaṁ yaṁ adhyasthāḥ ushas tvam | tena suśravasaṁ janam prāva adya duhitar divaḥ | vi. 65, 2. Vi tad yayur aruṇayugbhir aśvaiś chitraṁ bhānti ushasaś chandrarathāḥ | vii. 75, 6. Prati dyutānām arushāso aśvāś chitrāḥ adṛiśrann ushasaṁ vahantaḥ | yāti śubhrā viśvapiśā rathena |]. i. 48, 12. Viśvān devān ā vaha somapītaye antarikshād ushas tvam |

"1. Dawn on us with prosperity, o Ushas, daughter of the sky, with great glory, o luminous and bountiful goddess, with riches. 2. (These dawns) bringing horses and cows, and all-bestowing, have oftentimes hastened to shine.[284] Awake for me joyful voices (or hymns)[285] o Ushas, and send us the wealth of the magnificent. 3. Ushas has dawned (before); let her now dawn (again), the goddess who impels our chariots, which at her arrivals are borne forward, like wealth-seekers in the ocean.[286] 4. Kaṇva, the chief of his race, here celebrates the name of those wise men who at thy approaches, o Ushas, direct their thoughts to liberality. 5. Like an active woman, Ushas advances cherishing[287] (all things); she hastens on arousing footed creatures,[288] and [284] The word vastave is so rendered by Benfey. See his translation, in loco, and his Glossary to the Sāma-veda, s.vv. ush, and vas, and vastu; and Roth s.v. ush. 2.

[285] Benfey renders sūnṛitāḥ here by "Herrlichkeiten," 'glorious things;' but in i. 92, 7, and i. 113, 12, he translates the same word by "beautiful hymns." A note on it by Professor Aufrecht will be found further on.

[286] The sense of dadhrire in this clause is not very clear. Prof. Wilson renders after Sāyaṇa: "chariots, which are harnessed at her coming; as those who are desirous of wealth send ships to sea." Prof. Benfey explains: "carts, which roll at her approach, like wealth-seekers in the sea;" i.e., as he adds in a note: "The waggons full of wealth are driven hither by the dawn; they are so full as to reel and swing about." It is difficult to see how this sense can be extracted from the words.

[287] Sāyaṇa makes prabhuñjatī = prakarsheṇa sarvam pālayantī. Benfey renders it "ruling," and Roth s.v. "rendering service."

[288] Professors Benfey and Bollensen (Orient und Occident, ii. 463) both explain jarayantī here in the sense of "setting in motion," or "arousing," the former deriving it from the root jar, "to hasten," and the latter from jar = gar, "to wake."—See Bollensen's remarks in pp. 463–465. In other places, as we shall see, and as he allows, it must be rendered "making old."

makes the birds fly aloft. 6. She sends forth both the active and the beggars (to their occupation); lively, she loves not to stand still; the flying birds no longer rest after thy dawning, o bringer of food.[289] [i 124, 12. The birds fly up from their nests, and men seeking food, leave their homes.] 7. She has yoked (her horses) from the remote rising-place of the sun; this auspicious Ushas advances towards men with a hundred chariots. 8. Everything that moves bows down before her glance; the active goddess creates light; by her appearance the magnificent daughter of the sky drives away our haters; Ushas has repelled our enemies. 9. Shine forth, Ushas, daughter of the sky with brilliant radiance, bringing to us abundant prosperity, dawning upon our devotions. 10. In thee, when thou dawnest, o lively goddess, is the life and the breath of all creatures; resplendent on thy massive car hear our invocation. [i. 49, 1. Come, Ushas, even from the light of the sky, by auspicious (paths); let the ruddy (horses) bring thee to the house of the offerer of soma. 2. Protect to-day, o Ushas, daughter of the sky, the prosperous man with that beautifully formed and pleasant chariot on which thou standest. vi. 65, 2. They went apart with their ruddy-yoked horses; the Dawns on the luminous cars shine brilliantly. vii. 75, 6. The bright and ruddy steeds were beheld bearing onward the shining Ushas. The lustrous goddess moves in a chariot beautified with all sorts of ornaments]. i. 48, 12. Ushas, bring all the gods to drink our soma."

i. 92, 1 (=S.V. ii. 1105). Etāḥ u tyāḥ Ushasaḥ ketum akrata pūrve 'rdhe rajaso[290] bhānum anjate | nishkṛiṇvānāḥ āyudhānīva dhṛishṇavaḥ prati gāvo arushīr yanti mātaraḥ | 2 (= S.V. ii. 1106). Ud apaptann aruṇāḥ bhānavo vṛithā svāyujo arushīr gāḥ ayukshata | akrann ushāso vayunāni pūrvathā ruśantam bhānum arushīr aśiśrayuḥ | 3 (=S.V. ii. 1107). Archanti nārīr apaso na vishṭibhiḥ samānena yojanena ā parāvataḥ | ishaṁ vahantīḥ sukṛite sudānave viśvā id aha yajamānāya sunvate | 4. Adhi peśāṁsi vapate nṛitūr iva apornute vakshaḥ usreva barjaham | jyotir viśvasmai bhuvanāya kṛiṇvatī gāvo na vrajaṁ vi ushāḥ [289] vājinīvatī is explained by Yāska, Nir. xi. 26, and xii. 6, by annavatī; and by Sāyaṇa on R.V. i. 3, 10, by annavat-kriyāvatī, "mistress of rites possessing food." These senses of the word seem uncertain.

[290] Compare i. 124, 51: pūrve 'rdhe rajaso aptyasya gavāṁ janitrī akṛita pra ketum | "The mother of the cows has displayed her signal in the eastern part of the watery firmament."

āvar tamaḥ | [i. 123, 10. Kanyeva tanvā śāśadānā eshi devi devam iyakshamāṇam | saṁsmayamānā yuvatiḥ purastād āvir vakshāṁsi kṛiṇushe vibhātī | 11. Susankāśā mātṛimṛishṭeva yoshā āvis tanvaṁ kṛiṇushe dṛiśe kam | i. 124, 4 (=Nirukta, iv. 16). Upo adarśi śundhyuvo na vaksho nodhāḥ ivāvir akṛita priyāṇi | admasad na sasato bodhayantī śaśvattamā āgāt punar eyushīnām | 7 (=Nir. iii. 5). Abhrātā iva puṁsaḥ eti pratīchī garttārug iva sanaye dhanānām[291] | jāyeva patye uśatī suvāsāḥ ushāḥ hasreva ni riṇīte apsaḥ | v. 80, 5. Eshā śubhrā na tanvo vidānā ūrdhveva snātī dṛiśaye no asthāt | vi. 64, 2. Āvir vakshaḥ kṛiṇushe śumbhamānā devi rochamānā mahobhiḥ | compare v. 80, 46]. i. 92, 5. Prati archiḥ ruśad asyāḥ adarśi vi tishṭhate bādhate kṛishṇam abhvam[292] | svaruṁ na peśo vidatheshu anjan chitraṁ divo duhitā bhānum aśret | 6. Atārishma tamasas pāram asya ushāḥ uchhantī vayunā kṛiṇoti | śriye chhando na smayate vibhātī supratīkā saumanasāya ajīgaḥ | 7. Bhāsvatī netrī sūnṛitānāṁ divaḥ stave duhitā Gotamebhiḥ | prajāvato nṛivato aśvabudhyān usho goagrān upa māsi vājān | 8. Ushas tam aśyāṁ yaśasaṁ suvīrāṁ dāsapravargaṁ rayim aśvabudhyam | sudaṁsasā śravasā yā vi bhāsi vājaprasūtā subhage bṛihantam | 9. Viśvāni devī bhuvanā 'bhichakshya pratīchī chakshur urviyā vibhāti | viśvaṁ jīvaṁ charase bodhayantī viśvasya vāchaṁ avidat manāyoḥ | 10. Punaḥ punar jāyamānā[293] purāṇī samānaṁ varṇam abhi śumbhamānā | śvaghnīva kṛitnur vijaḥ āmināna martasya devī jarayantī āyuḥ | 11. Vyūrṇatī divo antān abodhi upa svasāraṁ sanutar yuyoti | praminatī manushyā yugāni yoshā jārasya chakshasā vibhāti | [i. 115, 2. Sūtyo devīm Ushashaṁ rochamānām maryo na yoshām abhi eti paśchāt | vii. 75, 4. Divo duhitā bhuvanasya patnī | 5. Vājinīvatī sūryasya yoshā]. i. 92, 12. Paśūn na chitrā subhagā prathānā sindhur na kshodaḥ urviyā vi aśvait | aminatī daivyāni vratāni sūryasya cheti raśmibhir dṛiśānā | 13. Ushas tat chitram ābhara asmabhyaṁ vājinīvati | yena tokaṁ cha tanayaṁ cha dhāmahe | 14. Usho adyeha gomati aśvāvati vibhāvari | revad asme vi uchha sūnṛitāvati | 15. Yukshva hi vājinīvati aśvān adya aruṇān ushaḥ | atha no viśvā saubhagāni āvaha |

[291] Compare R.V. ix. 96, 20.

[292] Compare iv. 51, 9 : Gūhantīḥ abhvam asitaṁ ruśadbhir śukrās tanūbhiḥ śuchayaḥ | "The bright lucid Dawns concealing the black abyss with their radiant bodies."

[293] Compare i. 123, 2 : Uchchā vi akhyad yuvatiḥ punarbhūḥ | "The youthful (goddess) born anew, has shone forth on high." iii. 61, 1 : Purāṇī devi yuvatiḥ purandhir anu vrataṁ charasi | "Thou, o goddess, old, (and yet) young, wise, movest at thy will."

"1. These Dawns have become conspicuous; they display their lustre in the eastern hemisphere; like bold warriors drawing forth their weapons, the ruddy mother-cows advance. 2. The rosy beams have flashed up spontaneously; they have yoked the self-yoked ruddy cows. The Dawns, as of old, have brought us consciousness; the red cows have assumed a brilliant lustre. 3. Like women active in their occupations, they shine from afar along a common track, bringing sustenance to the pious and liberal worshipper, and all things to the man who offers libations of soma. 4. Ushas, like a dancer, puts on her gay attire; she displays her bosom as a cow its udder: creating light for all the world, she has dissipated the darkness, as cattle (abandon) their stall.[294] [i. 123, 10. Like a maid triumphing[295] in her (beautiful) form, thou, goddess, advancest to meet the god who seeks after thee (the sun); smiling, youthful, and resplendent, thou unveilest thy bosom in front. 11. Like a fair girl adorned by her mother, thou displayest thy body to the beholder. i. 124, 4. She has been beheld like the bosom of a bright maiden.[296] Like Nodhas,[297] she has revealed things that we love. Awaking the sleepers like an inmate of the house, she has come, the most perpetual of all the females who have returned. 7. As a woman who has no brother appears in presence of (another) man, as a man mounted on a chariot goes forth in pursuit of wealth, as a loving wife shews herself to her husband, so does Ushas, as it were, smiling, reveal her form.[298] v. 80, 5. She displays her person like a fair [294] "As cattle of their own accord go quickly to their own cowpen"—Sāyaṇa. "As cows open their stall"—Benfey. See his note in loco.

[295] The word so rendered is śaśadānā.—Sāyaṇa explains it "becoming manifest." The word, however, as appears from the context, as well as other passages in which it occurs, i. 33, 13; i. 116, 2; i. 124, 6; i. 141, 9; vii. 98, 4; vii. 104, 24; x. 120, 5, has evidently the sense assigned to it by Roth, in Illust. of Nir. p. 83, where he renders it by "triumphing," in i. 33, 13, and x. 120, 5. In the passage before us he makes it mean "distinguished by beauty." Benfey explains it by "triumphing" in i. 33, 13, and i. 116, 2. His translation of the R.V. does not extend beyond the 118th hymn of the 1st Maṇḍala.

[296] Sāyaṇa, following Yāska, explains śundhyuvo na yakshaḥ, as the "rays on the breast of the sun," or as "the breast of a particular white water bird." Roth, Illust. of Nir. p. 44, translates "as the breast of a pure virgin."

[297] This is the name of a Rishi. Roth thinks it may be an appellative here. Müller, Trans. of R.V. i. p. 107, thinks it may have the general meaning of poet.

[298] Roth, Illust. of Nir. p. 25, says "The sense of the verse appears to be: "as a brotherless maiden, who after her father's death has no longer any home, turns more woman, like one rising out of the water in which she has been bathing. vi. 64, 2. Thou, full of brightness, displayest thy bosom, o goddess, shining in thy glory]. i. 92, 5. Her bright ray has been perceived; it extends and pierces the black abyss. The daughter of the Sky has assumed a brilliant glow, like the decorations of the sacrificial post on festivals. 6. We have crossed over this darkness; Ushas dawning restores consciousness; radiant, she smiles like a flatterer seeking his own advantage; fair in her aspect, she has awakened all creatures to cheerfulness. 7. The shining daughter of the skies, leader of cheerful voices (or hymns),[299] has been lauded by the Gotamas. Ushas, thou distributest resources in offspring, men, horses, and kine. 8. Blessed Ushas, thou who, animated by strength, shinest forth with wonderful riches, may I obtain that renowned and solid wealth, which consists in stout sons, numerous slaves, and horses. 9. Directing her eyes towards all creatures, the goddess shines before them far and wide. Rousing into motion every living thing, she notices the voice of every adorer. 10. Born again and again, though ancient, shining with an ever uniform hue, (she goes on) wasting away the life of mortals, carrying it away as a clever gambler the stakes.[300] 11. She is perceived revealing the ends of the sky; she chases far away her sister (Night). Wearing out the lives of men, the lady shines with the light of her lover (the sun). [i. 115, 2. The sun follows the shining goddess Ushas, as a man, coming after, approaches a woman. vii. 75, 4. Daughter of the Sky, mistress of the world, food-providing wife of the sun.] i. 92, 12. The bright, and blessed goddess has widely diffused her rays, as if she were driving forth cattle in various directions, or as a river boldly to men, as a warrior on a chariot goes forth proudly to conquer booty (comp. ix. 96, 20), as a decorated wife in presence of her husband, so Ushas unveils before the eyes of men all her beauty, smiling as it were in the sure consciousness of its overpowering effect." This explanation seems to express well the import of the word sāśadānā as interpreted in a previous note.

[299] See above, note 285.

[300] Sāyaṇa takes śvaghnī for a "fowler's wife" (vyādha-strī), and vijaḥ for "birds." See Wilson in loco. Benfey takes vijaḥ for "dice," and explains the clause as denoting a cunning gambler who tampers with the dice, by shaving them down. See his note. Bollensen, Orient und Occident, ii. 464, translates: "as a fortunate gamester carries off the gains." The phrase vijaḥ iva ā mināti occurs again in R.V. ii. 125, where Sāyaṇa takes vijaḥ for udvejakaḥ, "a vexer." So uncertain are his explanations!

rolling down its floods; maintaining the ordinances of the gods, she is perceived, made visible by the rays of the sun. 13. Ushas, provider of food, bring us that brilliant fortune whereby we may possess offspring. 14. Ushas, resplendent, awaking cheerful voices (or hymns), dawn richly upon us to-day, bringing cows and horses. 15. Yoke to-day, Ushas, thy ruddy steeds, and then bring us all blessings."

i. 113, 1 (=S.V. ii. 1099; Nir. ii. 19). Idaṁ śreshṭhaṁ jyotishāṁ jyotir āgāt chitraḥ praketo ajanishṭa vibhvā | yathā prasūtā Savituḥ savāya eva rātrī Ushase yonim araik | [i. 124, 8 Svasā svasre jyāyasyai yonim araig apaiti asyāḥ pratichakshya iva] i. 113, 2 (= S.V. ii. 1100; Nir. ii. 20). Ruśadvatsā ruśatī śvetyā āgād araig u kṛishṇa sadanāni asyāḥ | samānabandhū amṛite anūchī dyāvā varṇaṁ charataḥ āmināne | 3 (= S.V. ii. 1101). Samāno adhvā svasror anantas tam anyā 'nyā charato devaśishṭe | na methete na tashṭhatuḥ sumeke naktoshāshā samanasā virūpe | 4. Bhāsvatī netrī sūnṛitānām acheti chitrā vi duro naḥ āvaḥ | prārpya jagad vi u no rāyo akhyad ushāḥ ajīgar bhuvanāni viśvā | [i. 48, 1·5. Usho yad adyā bhānunā vi dvārāv ṛiṇavo divaḥ | ityādi] i. 113, 5. Jihmaśye charitave maghonī ābhogaye ishṭaye rāye u tvam | dabhram paśyadbhyaḥ urviyā vi chakshe ushāḥ ajīgar bhuvanāni viśvā | 6. Kshattrāya tvaṁ śravase tvam mahīyai ishṭaye tvam artham iva tvam ityai | visadṛiśā jīvitā 'bhipra-chakshe ushāḥ ajīgar bhuvanāni viśvā | 7. Eshā divo duhitā pratyadarśi vyuchhantī yuvatiḥ śukravāsāḥ[301] | viśvasyeśānā pārthivasya vasvaḥ usho adyeha subhage vi uchha | 8. Parāyatīnām anu eti pāthaḥ āyatīnām prathamā śaśvatīnām | vyuchhantī jīvam udīrayantī ushāḥ mṛitaṁ kaṁ chana bodhayantī | [i. 123, 8. Sadṛiśīr adya sadṛiśīr id u śvo dīrghaṁ sachante Varuṇasya dhāma | anavadyās triṁśataṁ yojanāni ekaikā kratūm pari yanti sadyaḥ | 9. Jānatī ahnaḥ prathamasyo nāma śukrā kṛishṇād ajanishṭa śvitīchī | ṛitasya yoshā na mināti dhāma ahar ahar nishkṛitam ācharantī] i. 113, 9. Usho yad agniṁ samidhe chakartha vi yad āvaś chakshasā sūryasya | yad mānushān yakshyamāṇān ajīgas tad deveshu chakṛishe bhadram apnaḥ | 10. Kiyati ā tat samayā bhavāti yāḥ vyūshur yāś cha nūnaṁ vyuchhān | anu pūrvāḥ kṛipate vāvaśānā pradīdhyānā josham anyābhir yāti | 11. Īyus te ye pūrvatarām apaśyan vyuchhantīm ushasam martyāsaḥ | asmābhir u nu pratichakshyā abhūd ā u te yanti

[301] Compare vii. 77, 2: Viśvam pratīchī saprathāḥ ud asthād ruśad vāso bibhratī śukram aśvait.

ye aparīshu paśyān | 12. Yāvayaddveshā ritapāḥ ṛitejāḥ sumnāvarī sūnṛitā īrayantī | sumangalīr bibhratī devavītim ihādya Ushāḥ śreṣṭhatamā vi uchha | 13. S'aśvat purā ushāḥ vi uvāsa devī atho adya idaṁ vi āvo maghonī | atho vi uchhād uttarān anu dyūn ajarā 'mṛitā charati svadhābhiḥ | 14. Vi anjibhir divaḥ ātāsu adyaud apa kṛishṇāṁ nirṇijaṁ devī āvaḥ | prabodhayantī aruṇebhir aśvair ā ushāḥ yāti suyujā rathena | 15. Āvahantī poshyā vāryāṇi chitraṁ ketuṁ kṛiṇute ċhekitānā | īyushīnām upamā śāśvatīnāṁ vibhātīnām prathamā ushāḥ vi aśvait | [i. 124, 2. Aminatī daivyāni vratāni praminatī manushyā yugāni | īyushīnām upamā śaśvatīnām āyatīnām prathamā ushāḥ vy adyaut |] i. 113, 16. Ud īrdhvaṁ jīvo asur naḥ āgād apa prāgāt tamaḥ ā jyotir eti | araik panthāṁ yātave Sūryāya aganma yatra pratirante āyuḥ | 17. Syūmanā vāchaḥ ud iyartti vahniḥ stavāno rebhaḥ ushaso vibhātīḥ | adya tad uchha gṛiṇate maghoni asme āyur ni didīhi prajāvat | 18. Yāḥ gomatīr ushasaḥ sarvavīṛāḥ vyuchhanti dāśushe martyāya | vāyor iva sūnṛitānām udarke tāḥ aśvadāḥ aśnavat somasutvā | 19. Mātā devānām Aditer anīkaṁ yajnasya-ketur bṛihatī vi bhāhi | praśastikṛid brahmaṇe no vi uchha ā no jane janaya viśvavāre | 20. Yat chitram apnaḥ ushaso vahanti īyānāya śaśamānāya bhadram | tan no Mitro Varuṇo māmahantām Aditiḥ sindhuḥ Pṛithivī uta ᶜDyauḥ |

"1. "This light has arrived, the greatest of all lights; the glorious and brilliant illumination has been born. Inasmuch as she (Ushas) has been produced for the production of Savitṛi, the Night has made way for Ushas. [i. 124, 8. The sister (Night) has made way for her elder sister (Ushas); and departs, after she has, as it were, looked upon her]. i. 113, 2. The fair and bright Ushas, with her bright child (the Sun) has arrived; to her the dark (Night) has relinquished her abodes; kindred to one another, immortal, alternating, Day and Night go on changing colour. 3. The same is the never-ending path of the two sisters, which they travel, commanded by the gods. They strive not, they rest not, the prolific Night and Dawn, concordant, though unlike. 4. The shining Ushas, leader of joyful voices (or hymns), has been perceived; she has opened for us the doors (of the sky): setting in motion all moving things, she has revealed to us riches; Ushas has awakened all creatures. [i. 48, 15. Ushas, as thou hast by thy light opened to us the two doors of heaven, etc.] i. 113, 5. (Arousing) the prostrate sleeper to move, (impelling) another to enjoyment, to the pursuit of wealth, (enabling) those who see but a little way, to see far; Ushas has awakened all creatures. 6. (Arousing) one to seek royal power, another to follow after fame, another for grand efforts, another to pursue as it were his particular object,—Ushas awakes all creatures to consider their different modes of life. 7. She, the daughter of the sky, has been beheld breaking forth, youthful, clad in shining attire: mistress of all earthly treasures, auspicious Ushas, shine here to-day. 8. Ushas follows the track of the Dawns that are past, and is the first of the unnumbered Dawns that are to come, breaking forth, arousing life, and awaking every one that was dead. [i. 123, 8. Alike to-day, alike to-morrow, they observe the perpetual ordinance of Varuṇa. Spotless, they each instantaneously shoot forward thirty yojanas, their destined task.[302] 9. Knowing the indication of the earliest day, the bright, the lucid (goddess) has been born from the black (gloom). The female does not transgress the settled ordinance, coming day by day to the appointed place.] i. 113, 9. Inasmuch as thou hast made Agni to be kindled, hast shone forth by the light of the sun, and hast awakened the men who are to offer sacrifice, thou hast done good service to the gods. 10. How great is the interval that lies between[303] the Dawns which have arisen, and those which are yet to arise? Ushas yearns longingly after the former Dawns, and gladly goes on shining with the others (that are to come). 11. Those mortals are gone who saw the earliest Ushas dawning; we shall gaze upon her now; and the men are coming who are to behold her on future morns. 12. Repelling foes, protecting right (or rites), born in right (or rites), imparting joy, stimulating joyful voices (or hymns), bringing good fortune, promoting the feast of the gods, rise on us, Ushas, the best (of all Dawns). 13. Perpetually in former days did the divine Ushas dawn; and now to-day the magnificent goddess beams upon this world: undecaying, immortal, she marches on by her own will. 14. She has shone forth with her splendours on the borders of the sky; the bright goddess has chased away the dark veil of [302] See Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. kratu.

[303] samayā means "near," according to Sāyaṇa. Prof. Müller, Trans. p. 220, considers it to signify "together," "at once." The rendering I have given is that of Professor Aufrecht.

night; arousing the world, Ushas advances in her well-yoked car, drawn by ruddy steeds. 15. Bringing with her abundant boons, revealing herself, she displays a brilliant lustre. Ushas has shone forth, the last of the numerous Dawns which are past, and the first of those which are coming. [i. 124, 2. Maintaining the ordinances of the gods, but wasting away the lives of men, Ushas has shone forth, the last of the numerous former dawns, and the first of those that are coming.] i. 113, 16. Arise! our life, our breath, has come; darkness has departed; light arrives; Ushas has opened up a path for the sun to travel: we have reached the point where men prolong their days. 17. The priest, the poet, celebrating the brightening Dawns, arises with the web[304] of his hymn; shine therefore, magnificent Ushas, on him who praises thee; gleam on us with life and offspring. 18. May he who offers libations of soma obtain such Dawns as rise upon the liberal mortal, (Dawns) rich in kine, in (sons) all stalwart, and in horses, at the end of his hymns which resound like the wind.[305] 19. Mother of the gods, manifestation of Aditi, forerunner of the sacrifice, mighty Ushas, shine forth! Arise, bestowing approbation on our prayer; giver of all boons, increase our progeny.[306] 20. May Mitra, Varuṇa, Aditi, the Ocean, the Earth, and the Sky, bestow upon us those brilliant and excellent resources which the Dawns bring to the man who offers sacrifice and praise."

(2) Relations of Ushas to the other deities.

Ushas, as we have seen, is constantly described as the daughter of the Sky (duhitā Divaḥ, as in i. 30, 22; i. 48, 1, 8, 9; i. 92, 5, 7; i. 183, 2; iv. 30, 8; vii. 67, 2; viii. 47, 14 f.; divijāḥ in vii. 75, 1).[307] She is also called the sister of Bhaga and the kinswoman of Varuṇa, i. 123, 5 (Bhagasya svasā Varuṇasya jāmiḥ). She is also the sister of [304] Syūmanā is taken by Sāyaṇa as an accusative plural and construed with vāchaḥ in the sense of "hymns sewed together," or "connected." Professor Benfey takes it as the instrumental singular of syūman, and renders, "with the web of the word." Professor Aufrecht confirms this view, referring to R.V. iii. 61, 4.

[305] See Benfey in loco, and Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. udarka, where sūnṛita is explained of hymns.

[306] Professor Aufrecht proposes to translate jane ā janaya by "give us prominence among men." Sāyaṇa explains the words by "settle us in the country" (janapade ābhimukhyena prādurbhāvaya | avasthāpaya.

[307] In i. 46, 1, she is called "the beloved of the Sky" (priyā Divaḥ).

Night, i. 113, 2, 3; x. 127, 3, and in i. 124, 8, the elder sister. Night is also in one place, x. 127, 8, called the daughter of the Sky. The two sisters are frequently conjoined in the duals naktoshasā and ushasānaktā or otherwise, i. 13, 7; i. 90, 7; i. 96, 5; i. 122, 2; i. 186, 4; ii. 2, 2; ii. 3, 6; ii. 31, 5; iv. 55, 3; v. 41, 7; vii. 2, 6; vii. 42, 5; ix. 5, 6; x. 36, 1; x. 70, 6; x. 110, 6. In vii. 2, 6, they are compared to two great celestial females (yoshaṇe divye mahī na ushasānaktā), and in ii. 31, 5, they are characterized as the two blessed goddesses who are seen alternately[308] and impel all moving things (uta tye devī subhage mithūdṛiśā ushasānaktā jagatām apījuvā | stushe |). Ushas is also, as was to be expected, frequently brought into connection with the Sun. As we have seen above, he is called her lover, i. 92, 11, or if with Roth, s.v. jāra, we should understand this of Agni, the Sun is indubitably described as going after Ushas as a man after a woman, in i. 115, 2, quoted above. He is said to follow her track, v. 81, 2 (savitā anu prayāṇam ushaso vi rājati); and she is represented as bringing the eye of the gods and leading on the beautiful white horse (the sun), vii. 77, 3. She is declared to be the mistress of the world and the wife of the sun, vii. 75, 5 (bhuvanasya patnī | vājinīvatī sūryasya yoshā), as the Dawns, in the plural, are said to be in iv. 5, 13 (kadā no devīr amṛitasya patnīḥ sūro varṇena tatanann ushasaḥ). In iii. 61, 4, Ushas is said to be svasarasya patnī, which Sāyaṇa renders wife of the Sun or the Day.[309] In vii. 78, 3, the Dawns are even said to generate the sun, sacrifice and Agni (ajījanan sūryaṁ yajnam agnim). Ushas and Agni are also frequently brought into conjunction, fire being always kindled for sacrificial purposes at dawn. He is called her lover, and is said to appear with, or before the dawn, i. 69, 1; i. 124, 1, 11; iii. 5, 1; iv. 13, 1; iv. 14, 1; vii. 8, 1; vii. 9, 1, 3; vii. 10, 1; vii. 67, 2; vii. 77, 1; vii. 78, 2; viii. 43, 5; x. 1, 1; x. 8, 4; x. 35, 6; x. 122, 7.[310] In one place he is represented as going to meet her as she comes, and to beg for riches (iii. 61, 6. āyatīm Agne Ushasaṁ vahātīṁ vāmam eshi draviṇam bhikshamāṇaḥ). In vii. 6, 5, Agni is said to have made the Dawns, the spouses of the noble god (yo aryapatnīr ushasaś chakāra), which Sāyaṇa understands of the sun. Ushas is also often connected with the Aśvins, the time of whose manifestation, as we shall hereafter see, is regarded by Yāska as being between midnight and sunrise, i. 44, 2; i. 180, 1; iii. 20, 1; vii. 69, 5; vii. 72, 3, 4; viii. 9, 18; x. 41, 1. They are said to associate with her, i. 183, 2 (Divo duhitrā Ushasā sachethe); and she is said to be their friend, iv. 52, 2 (sakhā 'bhūd Aśvinor Ushāḥ | 3. Uta sakhā 'si Aśvinoḥ). In viii. 9, 17, she is called upon to awaken them (pra bodhaya Usho Aśvinā). Her hymn is said to have awoke them, iii. 58, 1 (Ushasaḥ stomo Aśvināv ajīgaḥ). Again, however, we are told that when the Aśvins' car is yoked, the daughter of the sky is born, x. 39, 12 (yasya yoge duhitā jāyate Divaḥ). In one place, x. 85, 19, the moon is said to be born again and again, ever new, and to go before Ushas as the herald of the day (navo navo bhavati jāyamāno ahnāṁ ketur ushasām eti agram). Indra is said to have created, or lighted up, Ushas, ii. 12, 7 (yaḥ sūryaṁ yaḥ Ushasaṁ jajāna); ii. 21, 4; iii. 31, 15; iii. 32, 8; iii. 44, 2 (haryann ushasam archayaḥ); vi. 17, 5. He is, however, sometimes represented as assuming a hostile attitude towards her. In ii. 15, 6, he is said to have crushed her chariot with his thunderbolt (vajreṇa anaḥ Ushasaḥ sampipesha). The same thing is repeated in iv. 30, 8 ff. (where the poet, with the want of gallantry which was so characteristic of the ancients, does not hesitate to admire the manliness and heroism of Indra in overcoming a female): Etad gha id uta vīryyam Indra chakartha pauṁsyam | striyaṁ yad durhaṇāyuvaṁ vadhīr duhitaram Divaḥ | 9. Divaś chid gha duhitaram mahān mahīyamānām | Ushasam Indra sam pinak | 10 (= Nirukta, xi. 47). Apa Ushāḥ anasaḥ sarat sampishṭād aha bibhyushī | ni yat sīm śiśnathad vṛishā | 11 (= Nir. xi. 48). Etad asyāḥ anaḥ śaye susampishṭaṁ vipāśi ā | sasāra sīm parāvataḥ | "8. This, Indra, was a deed of might and manliness which thou didst achieve, that thou didst smite the daughter of the sky, a woman who was bent on evil. 9. Thou Indra, a great (god), didst crush Ushas, though the daughter of the sky, who was exalting herself. 10. Ushas fled away in terror from her shattered car, when the vigorous (Indra) had crushed it. 11. This chariot of hers lies broken and dissolved, while she herself has fled afar off." These verses are translated in his Illustrations of the Nirukta by Roth, who adduces R.V. x. 138, 5, as referring to the same myth: Indrasya vajrād abibhed abhiśnathaḥ prākrāmat śundhyūr ajahād Ushāḥ anaḥ | "The bright Ushas was afraid of the destructive thunderbolt of Indra; she departed and abandoned her chariot." And in x. 73, 6, it is said that Indra destroyed certain foes like the chariot of Ushas (avāhann Indraḥ Ushaso yathā anaḥ).

[308] So Professor Roth understands mithūdṛiśā. Sāyaṇa makes it "looking at each other."

[309] Roth, however, Illustr. of Nirukta, p. 56, says svasara (neuter) means only customary road, place of abode, court for cattle, but he does not advert to this passage.

[310] In x. 3, 3 (=S.V. ii. 898), Agni appears to be the lover of his sister, the Night. See Benfey's trans. of the S.V. ii. 898.

Soma is said to have made the Dawns bright at their birth, vi. 39, 3, (śuchijanmanaḥ Ushasaś chakāra), and to have formed them the wives of a glorious husband, vi. 44, 23 (ayam akṛiṇod ushasaḥ supatnīḥ). Bṛihaspati is said to have discovered Ushas, the Sun, etc., x. 67, 5, (Bṛihaspatir Ushasaṁ Sūryaṁ gām arkaṁ viveda), and to have repelled the darkness by light, x. 68, 9 (so arkeṇa vi babādhe tamāṁsi).

The early fathers, who were wise and righteous, and companions of the gods in their festivities, are said to have possessed efficacious hymns wherewith they discovered the hidden light, and generated Ushas, vii. 76, 4 (te id devānāṁ sadhamādaḥ āsann ṛitāvānaḥ kavayaḥ pūrvyāsaḥ | gūḷhaṁ jyotir pitaro anvavindan satyamantrāḥ ajanayann Ushāsam).

(3) Epithets, characteristics, and functions of Ushas.

The Nighaṇṭu, i. 8, gives sixteen names of Ushas, which seem to be almost entirely epithets, viz. vibhāvarī (the resplendent), sūnarī (the beautiful), bhāsvatī (the shining), odatī (the flowing, gushing, from the root ud, according to Professor Roth, s.v.), chitrāmaghā (possessed of brilliant riches), arjunī (the white), vājinī, vājinīvatī (the bringer of food), sumnāvarī (the giver of joy), ahanā, dyotanā (the bright), śvetyā (the fair-coloured), arushī (the ruddy), sūnṛitā, sūnṛitāvatī, sūnṛitāvarī (the utterer of pleasant or sacred voices).[311] Some of these epithets are of frequent occurrence in the hymns, and there are also many others to be found there, such as maghonī (the magnificent), subhagā (the fortunate), aruṇapsu (the ruddy), ṛitāvarī (the righteous), ṛitapā (the preserver of right or of order), ṛitejā (born in right, or order), śuchi (bright), hiraṇyavarṇā (gold-hued), devī (the goddess, or the divine), amṛitā (the immortal), raṇvasandṛik (of pleasant aspect), sudṛiśīkasandṛik (the same), supratīkā (the brilliant), satyaśravasī (possessed of real wealth, or renown), dānuchitrā (bringing brilliant gifts), ghṛitapratīkā (shining like butter), indratamā (most similar to Indra), i. 30, 20; i. 48, 1, 2, 7, 10; i. 92, 6–9, 14, 15; i. 113, 2, 12, 13; i. 123, 4, 6; i. 134, 4; iii. 61, 2, 5; iv. 55, 9; v. 59, 8; v. 80, 1; vii. 75, 5; vii. 77, 2; vii. 78, 4; vii. 79, 3; vii. 81, 1; viii. 62, 16.

[311] Professor Aufrecht thinks that this word sūnṛita is to be explained as follows: He considers it to be a derivative from nṛit, "to be in motion," compounded with su. Its first meaning is 'movable' (sūnṛitā maghāni, R.V. vii. 57, 6), then 'brisk,' 'alert' (sūnṛita, predicated of Indra, viii. 46, 20; sūnṛite of Ushas, iv. 55, 9; i. 123, 5; 124, 10; viii. 9, 17). As a feminine substantive in the plural it means either 'activity,' or, with a supplied gir, "lively voices" (sūnṛitānāṁ girām, iii. 31, 18); netrī sūnṛitānām is Ushas as a stimulator, or rather, leader (χορηγός) of joyful voices (of birds, etc.); sūnṛitā īrayantī is just the same. Professor Aufrecht is of opinion that the words vāyor iva sūnṛitānām udarke, in R.V. i. 113, 18, should not be rendered as I have done in p. 190, above, but translated thus: "when fervent voices arise like the rising of the wind (ortu vocum velut ortu venti)." Udarka he

Ushas is borne onward on a shining chariot, of massive construction, richly decorated and spontaneously yoked (rathena bṛihatā,—supeśasā,—viśvapiśā,—śośuchatā,—jyotishmatā,—svadhayā yujyamānena), i. 48, 10; i. 49, 2; i. 123, 7; iii. 61, 2; v. 80, 2; vii. 75, 6; vii. 78, 1, 4; from the distant east, i. 92, 1; i. 124, 5. She is also said to arrive on a hundred chariots, i. 48, 7. She is drawn by ruddy horses (aruṇebhir aśvaiḥ), i. 30, 22; i. 49, 1; i. 92, 15; i. 113, 4; iii. 61, 2; iv. 51, 5; v. 79, 1 ff.; vii. 75, 6, or by cows or bulls of the same colour, Nighaṇṭu i. 15; R.V. i. 92, 2; i. 124, 11; v. 80, 3; and traverses rapidly a distance of thirty yojanas, i. 123, 8. Like a beautiful young woman dressed by her mother, a richly decked dancing girl, a gaily attired wife appearing before her husband, or a female rising resplendent out of the bath,—smiling, and confiding in the irresistible power of her attractions, she unveils her bosom to the gaze of the beholder, i. 92, 4; i. 123, 10; i. 124, 4 ff.; v. 80, 4, 5; vi. 64, 2. She dispels the darkness, disclosing the treasures it had concealed; she illuminates the world, revealing its most distant extremities. She is the life and breath of all things, causing the birds to fly forth from their nests, visiting every house, and like an active housewife arousing her household, awakening the five races of men, yea all creatures, as if from death, and sending men forth to the pursuit of their several occupations, regards as derived from ud and the root ṛi, and as meaning "rising," "motion upward," and compares R.V. iii. 8, 5. Devayāḥ vipraḥ udiyartti vācham, "The pious priest raises his voice;" and vi. 47, 3. Ayam me pītaḥ udiyartti vācham, "This soma, when drunk, raises my utterance." I note that sūnṛitā is invoked as a goddess (devī) in R.V. i. 40, 3, and x. 141, 2.

i. 48, 5, 8, 10; i. 49, 4; i. 92, 11; i. 113, 8, 16; i. 123, 4, 6; i. 124, 12; ii. 34, 12; vii. 76, 1; vii. 79, 1 f.; vii. 80, 1, and rendering good service to the gods, by causing all worshippers to awake, and the sacrificial fires to be kindled, i. 113, 9. She is, however, entreated to arouse only the devout and liberal worshipper, and to leave the ungodly niggard to sleep on in unconsciousness, i. 124, 10; iv. 51, 3. She is young, being born anew every day, and, yet she is old, nay immortal, and wears out the lives of successive generations, which disappear one after another, while she continues undecaying, i. 92, 9 ff.; i. 113, 13, 15; i. 123, 2; i. 124, 2; vii. 18, 20.

The worshippers, however, sometimes venture to take the credit of being more alert than Ushas, and of awaking her instead of being awakened by her (prati stomair abhutsmahi, iv. 52, 4; vii. 68, 9; vii. 81, 3; x. 88, 19; and this the Vasishṭhas claim to have been the first to do by their hymns, vii. 80, 1 (prati stomebhir ushasam Vasishṭhāḥ gīrbhir viprāsaḥ prathamāḥ abudhran); and in one place she is solicited to make no delay, that the sun may not scorch her like a thief or an enemy, v. 79, 9 (vi uchha duhitar Divo mā chiraṁ tanuthāḥ apaḥ | na it tvā stenaṁ yathā ripuṁ tapāti sūro archishā). She is prayed to bring the gods to drink the libations of Soma, i. 48, 12. Agni and the gods generally are described as waking with Ushas (usharbudhaḥ), i. 14, 9; i. 44, 11; i. 92, 18; iii. 2, 14; iv. 6, 8; vi. 4, 2; vi. 15, 1; ix. 84, 4.

As we have already seen from the hymns which have been translated, she is frequently asked to bring, or dawn (as in former times) on the worshipper with, various sorts of wealth, children, slaves, etc., to afford protection, and to prolong life, i. 30, 22; i. 48, 1 ff., 9, 11, 15; i. 92, 8, 13 ff.; iv. 51, 7; vii. 41, 7; vii. 75, 2; vii. 77, 5; to revolve like a wheel ever new, iii. 61, 3; to confer renown and glory on the liberal benefactors of the poet, v. 79, 6 f. (comp. i. 48, 4); to drive away sleeplessness to Trita Āptya, viii. 47, 14–16.

The worshippers in one place ask that they may obtain from her riches, and stand to her in the relation of sons to a mother (vii. 81, 4: tasyās te ratnabhājaḥ īmahe vayaṁ syāma mātur na sūnavaḥ).

In x. 58, 8, the souls of the departed are said to go to the sun and to Ushas.

Ushas, as represented in the hymns,—a metrical sketch.

In the following verses I have attempted to reproduce the most striking ideas in the hymns to Ushas, which have been quoted above. It will be seen on comparison that there is little in these lines of which the germ will not be found in the originals, though some of the ideas have been expanded and modified.

Hail, Ushas, daughter of the sky,
Who, borne upon thy shining car
By ruddy steeds from realms afar,
And ever lightening, drawest nigh :—

Thou sweetly smilest, goddess fair,
Disclosing all thy youthful grace,
Thy bosom bright, thy radiant face,
And lustre of thy golden hair ;—

(So shines a fond and winning bride,
Who robes her form in brilliant guise,
And to her lord's admiring eyes
Displays her charms with conscious pride ;—

Or virgin by her mother decked,
Who, glorying in her beauty, shews
In every glance, her power she knows
All eyes to fix, all hearts subject ;—

Or actress, who by skill in song
And dance, and graceful gestures light,
And many-coloured vestures bright,
Enchants the eager, gazing throng ;—

Or maid who, wont her limbs to lave
In some cool stream among the woods,
Where never vulgar eye intrudes,
Emerges fairer from the wave) ;—

But closely by the amorous sun
Pursued, and vanquished in the race,
Thou soon art locked in his embrace,
And with him blendest into one.

Fair Ushas, though through years untold
Thou hast lived on, yet thou art born
Anew on each succeeding morn,
And so thou art both young and old.

As in thy fated ceaseless course
Thou risest on us day by day,
Thou wearest all our lives away
With silent, ever-wasting, force.

Their round our generations run:
The old depart, and in their place
Springs ever up a younger race,
Whilst thou, immortal, lookest on.

All those who watched for thee of old
Are gone, and now 't is we who gaze
On thy approach; in future days
Shall other men thy beams behold.

But 't is not thoughts so grave and sad
Alone that thou dost with thee bring,
A shadow o'er our hearts to fling;—
Thy beams returning make us glad.

Thy sister, sad and sombre Night
With stars that in the blue expanse
Like sleepless eyes mysterious glance,
At thy approach is quenched in light;—

And earthly forms, till now concealed
Behind her veil of dusky hue,
Once more come sharply out to view,
By thine illuming glow revealed.

Thou art the life of all that lives,
The breath of all that breathes; the sight
Of thee makes every countenance bright,
New strength to every spirit gives.

When thou dost pierce the murky gloom,
Birds flutter forth from every brake,
All sleepers as from death awake,
And men their myriad tasks resume.

Some, prosperous, wake in listless mood,
And others every nerve to strain
The goal of power or wealth to gain,
Or what they deem the highest good.

But some to holier thoughts aspire,
In hymns the race celestial praise,
And light, on human hearths to blaze,
The heaven-born sacrificial Fire.

And not alone do bard and priest
Awake;—the gods thy power confess
By starting into consciousness
When thy first rays suffuse the east;

And hasting downward from the sky,
They visit men devout and good,
Consume their consecrated food,
And all their longings satisfy.

Bright goddess, let thy genial rays
To us bring stores of envied wealth
In kine and steeds, and sons, with health,
And joy of heart, and length of days.

SECTION XIII.

AGNI.

Agni is the god of fire, the Ignis of the Latins,[312] the Ogni of the Slavonians. He is one of the most prominent deities of the Rig-veda, as the hymns addresed to him far exceed in number those which are devoted to the celebration of any other divinity, with the sole exception of Indra.

(1) His functions.

Agni is not, like the Greek Hephaistos, or the Latin Vulcan, the artificer of the gods (an office which, as we shall presently see, is in the Veda assigned to Tvashṭṛi), but derives his principal importance from his connection with the ceremonial of sacrifice. He is an immortal (amṛita, amartya) i. 44, 6; i. 58, 1; ii. 10, 1, 2; iii. 2, 11; iii. 3, 1; iii. 11, 2; iii. 27, 5, 7; vi. 9, 4; vii. 4, 4; viii. 60, 11; x. 79, 1, who has taken up his abode among mortals as their guest (atithi), i. 44, 4; i. 58, 6; ii. 4, 1; iii. 2, 2; iv. 1, 20; v. 1, 8; v. 8. 2; v. 18, 1; vi. 2, 7; vi. 15, 1, 4; vii. 8, 4; viii. 73, 1; x. 1, 5; x. 91, 2; x. 92, 1. He is the domestic priest, purohita, ṛitvij, hotṛi, brahman, who wakes with the dawn (usharbudh), or even before the dawn (ushasaḥ purohitam) i. 1, 1; i. 12, 1; i. 13, 1, 4; i. 26, 7; i. 36, 3, 5; i. 44, 7, 12; i. 45, 7; i. 58, 1, 6; i. 60, 4; i. 68, 4, (7); i. 76, 2, 4; i. 127, 1; i. 141, 12; i. 149, 4, 5; ii. 5, 1; ii. 6, 6; ii. 9, 1; iii. 7, 9; iii. 10, 2, 7; iii. 11, 1; iii. 14, 1; iii. 19, 1; iv. 1, 8; v. 11, 2; v. 26, 7; vi. 15, 1, 4, 16; vi. 16, 1; vii. 7, 5; vii. 10, 5; vii. 11, 1; vii. 16, 5, 12; viii. 44, 6; viii. 49, 1; ix. 66, 20;[313] x. 1, 6; x. 92, 2, appointed [312] On the worship of fire among the Greeks and Romans see the volume of M. Fustel de Coulanges, entitled "La Cité Antique," pp. 21 ff.

[313] In this verse he is called a rishi, as well as a priest, common to the five races (pañchajanyaḥ purohitaḥ).

both by men and gods, who concentrates in his own person, and exercises in a higher sense, all the various sacrificial offices which the Indian ritual assigned to a number of different human functionaries, the adhvaryu, hotṛi, potṛi, neshṭṛi, praśāstṛi, etc. (i. 94, 6; ii. 1, 2; ii. 5, 2 ff.; iv. 9, 3, 4; x. 2, 1 (piprīhi devān uśato yavishṭha vidvān ṛitūn ṛitupate yajeha | ye daivyāḥ ṛitvíjas tebhir Agne tvaṁ hotṛīṇām asi āyajishṭhaḥ | "satiate and worship here the longing gods, o most youthful deity, knowing the proper seasons, and along with the divine priests, for thou, Agni, art the most adorable of hotṛis"); x. 92, 8–11 (Agniṁ hotāram paribhūtamam matim, "Agni, the wise; the most eminent of hotṛis." He is a sage, the divinest among sages (asuro vipaśchitām, iii, 3, 4), intimately acquainted with all the forms of worship, the wise director, the successful accomplisher, and the protector, of all ceremonies, who enables men to serve the gods in a correct and acceptable manner, in cases where this would be beyond their own unaided skill, i. 1, 4 (Agne yaṁ yajnam adhvaraṁ víśvataḥ paribhūr asi | sa id deveshu gachhati | "Agni, that sacrifice which thou encompassest on every side goes to the gods"); i. 31, 1 (tvam Agne prathamo Angirāḥ ṛishir devo devānām abhavaḥ śivaḥ sakhā | "Agni, thou art the first rishi Angiras, a god, the auspicious friend of gods"); iii. 3, 3 (vidathasya sādhanam | "The accomplisher of the ceremony"); iii. 21, 3 (ṛishiḥ śreshṭhaḥ samidhyase yajnasya prāvitā bhava | "Thou art lighted, a most eminent rishi; protect the sacrifice"); iii. 27, 2 (vipaśchitaṁ yajnasya sādhanam | 7. Purastād eti māyayā vidathāni prachodayan | 2. "The sage, the accomplisher of the sacrifice. 7. He goes before, by his wondrous power promoting the ceremonies"); vi. 14, 2 (vedhastamaḥ ṛishiḥ); vii. 4, 4 (kavir ákavishu prachetāḥ | "Wise among the foolish; and intelligent"); x. 2, 4 (yad vo vayam pramināma vratāni vidushām devāḥ avidushṭarāsaḥ | Agnis tad víśvam ā ṛiṇāti vidvān yebhir devān ṛitubhiḥ kalpayāti | 5. Yat pākatrā manasā dīnadakshāḥ na yajnasya kránvate martyāsaḥ | Agnis tad hotā kratuvid vijānan yajishṭho devān rituśo yajāti | 4. "Agni, knowing what seasons to assign to the gods, rectifies all those mistakes which we ignorant men commit against your prescriptions, o ye most wise gods. 5. Those matters relating to the sacrifice which we mortals of feeble intellects, with our imperfect comprehension, do not understand, may Agni, the venerated priest who knows all these points, adjust, and worship the gods at the proper time"); x. 91, 3 (Agne kaviḥ kāvyena asi viśvavit). To him the attention of the worshippers is turned, as men's eyes are to the sun, v. 1, 4 (Agnim achha devayatām manāṁsi chakshūṁshi iva sūrye saṁ charanti). He is the father, king, ruler, banner, or outward manifestation,[314] and superintendent of sacrifices and religious duties (ketuṁ yajnānām | pitā yajnānāṁ | ketur adhvarāṇām | rājānam adhvarasya | adhyakshaṁ dharmaṇām imam | īśe yo viśvasyāḥ devavīteḥ, iii. 3, 3, 4; iii. 10, 4; iii. 11, 2; iv. 3, 1; vi. 2, 3; viii. 43, 24; x. 1, 5; x. 6, 3). He is also the religious leader or priest of the gods (sadyo jāto vi amimīta yajnam Agnir devānām abhavat purogāḥ | Agnir devo devānām abhavat purohitaḥ, x. 110, 11; x. 150, 4. He is a swift (raghupatvā,[315] x. 6, 4) messenger, moving between heaven and earth, commissioned both by gods[316] and by men to maintain their mutual communications, to announce to the immortals the hymns, and to convey to them the oblations, of their worshippers, or to bring them down from the sky to the place of sacrifice (sa devān ā iha vakshati | Agniṁ dūtaṁ vṛiṇīmahe | imam ū su tvam asmākaṁ saniṁ gāyatraṁ navyāṁsam Agne deveshu pravochaḥ | devāsas tvā Varuṇo Mitro Aryamā saṁ dūtam pratnam indhate | dūto viśām asi | patir hi adhvarāṇām Agne dūto viśām asi | yad devānām mitramahaḥ purohito 'ntaro yāsi dūtyam | tvāṁ dūtam aratiṁ havyavāhaṁ devāḥ akṛiṇvann amṛitasya nābhim | imaṁ no yajnam amṛiteshu dhehi | antar īyase arushā yujāno yushmāṁś cha devān viśaḥ ā cha martān | tvām Agne samidhānaṁ yavishṭhya devāḥ dūtaṁ chakrire havyavāhanam | tvāṁ viśve sajoshasaḥ devāso dūtam akrata | tvām dūtam Agne amṛitaṁ yuge yuge dadhire

[314] His father begot him (janitā tvā jajāna) to be the revelation and brilliant banner of all sacrifices. With the phrase, janitā tvā jajāna, compare the expressions in x. 20, 9, also relating to Agni, and in iv. 17, 4, relating to Indra.

[315] Compare the raghuvartaniṁ ratham of the Aśvins, R.V. viii. 9, 8.

[316] Taitt. Sanh. ii. 5, 8, 5. Agnir devānāṁ dūtaḥ asīd Uśanā Kāvyo 'surāṇām | "Agni was the messenger of the gods Kāvya Uśanas of the asuras." Ibid. ii. 5, 11, 8. Agnir devānāṁ dūtaḥ āsīd Daivyo 'surāṇām | "Agni was the messsenger of the gods, Daivya of the Asuras." Taitt. Br. ii. 4, 1, 6. ā tantum Agnir divyaṁ tatāna | tvaṁ nas tantur uta setur Agne | tvam panthāḥ bhavasi devayānaḥ | tvayā Agne pṛishṭhaṁ vayam āruhema | atha devaiḥ sadhamādam mademā | "Agni stretched out the celestial bond; thou art our bond and our bridge, o Agni; thou art the path leading to the gods. By thee may we ascend to the summit of heaven, and live in hilarity among the gods."

pāyum ugraṁ devāsaś cha martāsaś cha jāgriviṁ vibhuṁ viśpatiṁ namasā ni shedire | devān ā sādayad iha | dūto devānām asi martyānām antar mahāṁś charasi rochanena yaṁ tvā devāḥ dadhire havyavāham puruspṛiho mānushāso yajatram | i. 12, 1, 2, 4, 8; i. 27, 4; i. 36, 3, 4, 5; i. 44, 2, 3, 5, 9, 12; i. 58, 1; i. 74, 4, 7; i. 188, 1; ii. 6, 6, 7; ii. 9, 2; ii. 10, 6; iii. 5, 2; iii. 6, 5; iii. 9, 8; iii. 11, 2; iii. 17, 4; iii. 21, 1, 5; iv. 1, 8; iv. 2, 3; iv. 7, 8; iv. 8, 2, 4; v. 8, 6; v. 21, 3; vi. 15, 8–10; vii. 11, 4; vii. 16, 4; vii. 17, 6; viii. 19, 21; viii. 23, 18, 19; viii. 39, 1, 9; viii. 44, 3; x. 4, 2; x. 46, 10; x. 91, 11; x. 122, 7). Being acquainted with the innermost recesses of the sky (iv. 8, 2. Sa hi veda vasu-dhitim mahān ārodhanaṁ divaḥ | sa devān ā iha vakshati | 4. Sa hotā sa id u dūtyaṁ chikitvān antar īyate |), he is well fitted to act as the herald of men to summon the gods to the sacrifices instituted in their honour. He comes with them seated on the same car (iii. 4, 11; vii. 11, 1, ā viśvebhiḥ sarathaṁ yāhi devaiḥ), or in advance of them (ā devānām agrayāvā iha yātu | x. 70, 2); and shares in the reverence and adoration which they receive (i. 36, 4; ii. 2, 1). He brings Varuṇa to the ceremony, Indra from the sky, the Maruts from the air (x. 70, 11, ā Agne vaha Varuṇam ishṭaye naḥ Indraṁ divo Maruto antarikshāt). He makes the oblations fragrant, x. 15, 12 = Vāj. S. xix. 66 (Tvam Agne īḷito jātavedo avāḍ havyāni surabhīni kṛitvī). Without him the gods experience no satisfaction (vii. 11, 1, na ṛite tvad amṛitāḥ mādayante). He himself offers them worship (vii. 11, 3; viii. 91, 16; x. 7, 6). He is sometimes described as the mouth and the tongue through which both gods and men participate in the sacrifices (ii. 1, 13. tvām Agne ādityāsaḥ āsyaṁ tvāṁ jihvāṁ śuchayaś chakrire kave | 14. Tve Agne viśve amṛitāsaḥ adruhaḥ āsā devāḥ havir adanti āhutam | tvayā martāsaḥ svadante āsutim). He is elsewhere asked to eat the offerings himself (iii. 21, 1 ff.; iii. 28, 1-6. Agne vīhi puroḷāsam āhutam), and invited to drink the soma-juice (i. 14, 10; i. 19, 9; i. 21, 1, 3. Viśvebhiḥ somyam madhu Agne Indreṇa Vāyunā piba).

The 51st hymn of the tenth book contains a dialogue between Agni and the other gods, in which they give utterance to their desire that he would come forth from his dark place of concealment in the waters and the plants, and seek to persuade him to appear and convey to them the customary oblations (verse 5: ehi manur devayur yajnakāmo arankṛitya tamasi ksheshi Agne | sugān pathaḥ kṛiṇuhi devayānān vaha hav- yāni sumanasyamānaḥ). After he has expressed the grounds of his reluctance and apprehension (verses 4, 6),[317] he is induced by the promise of long life and a share in the sacrifice to accede to their request (verse 6. Kurmas te āyur ajaraṁ yad Agne yathā yukto jātavedo na rishyāḥ | atha vahāsi sumanasyamāno bhāgaṁ devebhyo havishaḥ sujāta). In the next following hymn (the 52nd) Agni proclaims himself the master of the ceremonies, declares himself ready to obey the commands of the gods, solicits a share in the sacrifice for himself, and asks how and by what path he can bring them the oblations (verse 1. Viśve devāḥ śāstana mā yathā iha hotā vṛito manavai yan nishadya | pra me brūta bhāgadheyaṁ yathā vo yena pathā havyaṁ vo vahāni | 2. Ahaṁ hotā ni asīdaṁ yajīyān viśve maruto mā junanti). Agni is the lord, protector, and leader of the people, viśpati, viśāṁ gopā, viśām puraetā (i. 12, 2; i. 26, 7; i. 31, 11; i. 96, 4; ii. 1, 8; iii. 11, 5); the king or monarch of men (rājā kṛishṭīnām asi mānushīṇām | rājānam | samrājaṁ charshaṇīnām | viśāṁ rājanam | i. 59, 5; ii. 1, 8; iii. 10, 1; v. 4, 1; vi. 7, 1; vii. 8, 1; viii. 43, 24). He is also the lord of the house, gṛihapati, dwelling in every abode (yaḥ pancha charshaṇīr abhi ni shasāda dame dame kavir gṛihapatir yuvā | i. 12, 6; i. 36, 5; i. 60, 4; v. 8, 2; vii. 15, 2). He is a brilliant guest in every house; dwells in every wood

[317] Verse 6 is as follows: Agneḥ pūrve bhrātaro artham etam rathīvādhvānam anu āvarīvuḥ | tasmād bhiyā Varuṇa dūram āyam gauro na kshepnor avije jyāyāḥ | "Agni's former brothers have sought this goal, as a charioteer passes along a road. But fearing this journey, o Varuṇa, I went to a distant place, and trembled like a wild bull which quakes at the sound of the huntsman's bowstring." It is clear from verse 7, that Agni means that his brothers had never returned, and that he fears a similar fate. The following passage of the Tait. Sanh., ii. 6, 6, 1, seems to be founded on this verse: Agnes trayo jyāyāṁso bhrātaraḥ āsan | te devebhyo havyaṁ vahantaḥ prāmīyanta | so 'gnir abibhed itthaṁ vāva sya ārtim ārishyati iti sa nilāyata | so 'paḥ praviśat | taṁ devatāḥ praisham aichhan | tam matsyaḥ prābravīt | tam aśapad "dhiyādhiyā tvā vadhyāsur yo mā prāvochaḥ" iti | tasmād matsyaṁ dhiyādhiyā ghnanti | śaptaḥ hi | tam anvavindan | tam abruvann "upa naḥ āvarttasva havyaṁ no vaha" iti | so 'bravīd "varaṁ vṛiṇai yad eva gṛihītasya āhutasya bahiḥparidhi skandāt tan me bhrātṛīṇām bhāgadheyam asad" iti | "Agni had three elder brothers, who died while carrying oblations to the gods. Agni feared lest he should incur the same fate, and accordingly he disappeared, and entered into the waters. The gods sought to discover him. A fish pointed him out. Agni cursed the fish,—'Since thou hast pointed me out, may men slay thee whenever they will.' Men in consequence slay a fish at their pleasure, because it was cursed. (The gods) found Agni, and said to him, 'Come to us and bring us our oblations.' He replied, 'Let me ask a favour; let whatever part of the presented oblations falls outside of the sacred enclosure be the share of my brothers.'"

like a bird; friendly to mankind, he despises no man; kindly disposed to the people, he lives in the midst of every family, x. 91, 2 (sa darśatáśrīr atithir gṛihe gṛihe vane vane śiśriye takvavīr iva | janañ janañ janyo nātimanyate viśaḥ a ksheti viśyo viśañ viśam). He is a father, mother, brother, son, kinsman, and friend (ā hi sma sūnave pitā āpir yajati āpaye sakhā sakhye varenyaḥ | tvam pitā 'si nas tvañ vayaskṛit tava jāmayo vayam | tvañ jāmir janānām Agne mitro asi priyaḥ | sakhā sakhibhyaḥ īḍyaḥ | tvām Agne pitaram ishṭibhir narāḥ tvām bhrātrāya śamyā tanūrucham | tvam putro bhavasi yas te 'vidhat | pitā mātā sadam in mānushāṇām | Agne bhrātaḥ | Agnim manye pitaram Agnim āpim Agnim bhrātaram sadam it sakhāyam | i. 26, 3; i. 31, 10, 14, 16; i. 75, 4; i. 161, 1; ii. 1, 9; vi. 1, 5; v. 4, 2; viii. 43, 16; viii. 64, 16; x. 7, 3); and some of his worshippers claim with him a hereditary friendship (i. 71, 10. Mā no Agne sakhyā pitryāṇi pra marshishṭhāḥ). He drives away and destroys Rakshases or Asuras (bādhasva dvisho rakshaso amīvāḥ | pra Agnaye viśvaśuche dhiyamdhe asuraghne | Agniḥ rakshāñsi sedhati | iii. 15, 1; vii. 13, 1; vii. 15, 10; viii. 23, 13; viii. 43, 26; x. 87, 1; x. 187, 3). In hymn x. 87, he is invoked to protect the sacrifice (verse 9. tīkshṇena Agne chakshushā raksha yajñam), and to consume the Rakshases and Yātudhānas with his iron teeth and by the most terrible manifestations of his fury (verse 2. Ayodañshṭro archishā yātudhānān upa spṛiśa jātavedaḥ samiddhaḥ | verse 5. Agne tvachañ yātudhanasya bhindhi hiñsrā 'śanir harasā hantu enam | verse 14. Parā śṛiṇīhi tapasā yātudhānān parā 'gne raksho harasā śṛiṇīhi |).

(2) Agni's births, and triple existence.

Various, though not necessarily inconsistent, accounts are given in the hymns of the birth of Agni. Sometimes a divine origin is ascribed to him, while at other times his production, or at least his manifestation, is ascribed to the use of the ordinary human appliances. Thus he is said to have at first existed potentially but not actually in the sky, x. 5, 7 (quoted above in p. 51); to have been brought from the sky, or from afar, by Mātariśvan[318] (ā anyañ [Agniñ] divo Mata-

[318] In Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. Mātariśvan is said (1) to denote a divine being, who, as the messenger of Vivasvat, brings down from heaven to the Bhṛigus Agni, who had before been concealed; and (2) to be a secret name of Agni; and it is remarked that the word cannot be certainly shewn by any text to be in the Vedic riśvā jabhāra | sa jāyamānaḥ parame vyomani āvir Agnir abhavan Mātariśvane | i. 60, 1; i. 93, 6; i. 143, 2; iii. 5, 10; iii. 9, 5; vi. 8, 4); to have been generated by Indra between two clouds or stones (yo aśmanor antar agniṁ jajāna, ii. 12, 3); to have been generated by Dyaus, x. 45, 8 (Agnir amṛito abhavad vayobhir yad enaṁ Dyaur janayat suretāḥ); to be the son of Dyaus and Pṛithivī, iii. 2, 2; iii. 25, 1 (Agne Divaḥ sūnur asi prachetas tanā Pṛithivyāḥ uta viśvavedāḥ); x. 1, 2; x. 2, 7 (yaṁ tvā Dyāvāpṛithivī yaṁ tvā āpas Tvashṭā yaṁ tvā suja nimā jajāna); x. 140, 2; whom he magnified, or delighted, at [or by] his birth, iii. 3, 11 (ubhā pitarā mahayann ajāyata Agnir Dyāvāpṛithivī bhūriretasā). His production is also said to be due to the waters (x. 2, 7; x. 91, 6),[319] and to Tvashṭṛi (i. 95, 2; x. 2, 7). He is elsewhere said to have been generated by the Dawns, vii. 78, 3 ([Ushaso] ajījanan sūryaṁ Yajnam Agnim); by Indra and Vishṇu, vii. 99, 4 ([Indrāvishṇū] uruṁ Yajnāya chathathur u lokaṁ janayanta Sūryam Ushasam Agnim); generated or hymns, a synonyme of Vāyu. I add some observations on the same subject, which had been made at an earlier period by Professor Roth, in his illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 112, where he is elucidating R.V. vi. 8, 4 ("Mātariśvan, the messenger of Vivasvat, brought Agni Vaiśvānara from afar"): "The explanation of Mātariśvan as Vāyu" (which is given by Yāska) "cannot be justified by the Vedic texts, and rests only upon the etymology of the root śvas. The numerous passages where the word is mentioned in the Rig-veda exhibit it in two senses. Sometimes it denotes Agni himself, as in the texts i. 96, 3, 4; iii. 29, 4 (11 ?); x. 114, 1, etc.; at other times, the being who, as another Prometheus, fetches down from heaven, from the gods, the fire which had vanished from the earth, and brings it to the Bhṛigus, i. 60, 1; i. 93, 6; iii. 2, 13; iii. 5, 10; iii. 9, 5. To think of this bringer of fire as a man, as a sage of antiquity, who had laid hold of the lightning, and placed it on the altar and the hearth, is forbidden by those texts which speak of him as bringing it from heaven, not to mention other grounds. As Prometheus belongs to the superhuman class of Titans, and is only by this means enabled to fetch down the spark from heaven, so must Mātariśvan be reckoned as belonging to those races of demigods, who, in the Vedic legends, are sometimes represented as living in the society of the gods, and sometimes as dwelling upon earth. As he brings the fire to the Bhṛigus, it is said of these last, that they have communicated fire to men (e.g., in i. 58, 6), and Agni is called the son of Bhṛigu (Bhṛigavāṇa). Mātariśvan also must be reckoned as belonging to this half-divine race." .... "It may also be mentioned that the same function of bringing down fire is ascribed in one text (vi. 16, 13) to Atharvan, whose name is connected with fire, like that of Mātarisvan; and also that the sisters of Atharvan are called Mātariśvarīs in x. 120, 9." See my article on Manu in vol. xx. of the Journ. R.A.S., p. 416, note. In one place (vii. 15, 4) Agni is called the falcon of the sky (divaḥ śyenāya).

[319] A.V. i. 33, 1. Hiraṇyavarṇāḥ śuchayaḥ pāvakāḥ yāsu jātaḥ Savitā yāsu Agniḥ | yāḥ Agnīṁ garbhaṁ dadhire suvarṇās tāḥ naḥ āpaḥ śaṁ syonāḥ bhavantu.

fashioned by the gods, vi. 7, 1 f. (janayanta devāḥ); viii. 91, 17 (taṁ tvā 'jananta mātaraḥ kaviṁ devāso angiraḥ); x. 46, 9 (devās tatakshur manave yajatram); as a light to the Ārya, i. 59, 2 (taṁ tvā devāso janayanta devaṁ vaiśvānara jyotir id āryāya); or placed by the gods among the descendants of Manu, i. 36, 10; ii. 4, 3 (Agniṁ devāso mānushīshu vikshu priyaṁ dhuḥ ksheshyanto na mitram); vi. 16, 1; viii. 73, 2. Yet although the son, he is also the father of the gods, i. 69, 1 (bhuvo devānām pitā putraḥ san). In viii. 19, 33, the superiority of the Fire-god to all other fires is shewn by their being declared to be dependent on him like branches of a tree (yasya te Agne anye agnayaḥ upakshito vayāḥ iva); vii. 1, 14 (sa id Agnir agnīn ati asti anyān).

Agni is in some passages represented as having a triple existence, by which may be intended his threefold manifestations, as the sun in heaven, as lightning in the atmosphere, and as ordinary fire in the earth, although the three appearances are elsewhere otherwise explained. In x. 88, we have the following verses:

6 (= Nir. vii. 27). Mūrdhā bhuvo bhavati naktam Agnis tataḥ Sūryo jāyate prātar udyan | 8. Sūktavākam prathamam ād id Agnim ād id havir ajanayanta devāḥ | sa eshāṁ yajno abhavat tanūpās taṁ Dyaur veda tam Pṛithivī tam āpaḥ | 10 (= Nir. vii. 28). Stomena hi divi devāso Agnim ajījanan śaktibhiḥ rodasiprām | tam ū akṛiṇvan tredhā bhuve kaṁ sa oshadhīḥ pachati viśvarūpāḥ | 11 (= Nir. vii. 29). Yaded enam adadhur yajniyāso divi devāḥ Sūryam āditeyam | yadā charishṇū mithunāv abhūtām ād it prāpaśyan bhuvanāni viśvā |

"6. Agni is by night the head of the earth: then he is born as the Sun rising in the morning.[320] 8. The gods produced first the hymn, then Agni, then the oblation. He was their protecting sacrifice: him Dyaus knows, him Pṛithivī, him the Waters. 10. With a hymn by their powers the gods generated Agni who fills the worlds: they formed him for a threefold existence: he ripens plants of every kind. 11. When the adorable gods placed him, Sūrya the son of Aditi, in the sky, when the moving twins came into being, then they (the gods) beheld all creatures."

[320] It appears from Professor Aufrecht's abstract of the contents of the Matsya-purāṇa that, in section 115, the sun is said to enter into Agni during the night, and Agni into the sun by day. Catalogue of Bodl. Sanskrit MSS., p. 41*a*. The Ait. Br. viii. 28, says: ādityo vai astaṁ yann Agnim anupraviśati | so 'ntardhīyate | .... Agnir vai udvān Vāyum anupraviśati | so 'ntardhīyate | .... Vāyor Agnir jāyate prāṇād hi balād mathyamāno 'dhijāyate | .... Agner vai ādityo jāyate | "The sun, when setting, enters into Agni and disappears .... Agni, when blowing upwards, enters Vāyu, and disappears .... Agni is produced from Vāyu, for when attrition is taking place, he is born from breath as force. The sun is produced from Agni."

According to Yāska (Nir. vii. 27) it is intended in verse 6 to represent the sun as identical with Agni ("tataḥ sūryo jāyate prātar udyan" sa eva). The same writer tells us (Nir. vii. 28) that according to his predecessor Śākapūṇi the threefold existence of Agni, referred to in verse 8, is his abode on earth, in the atmosphere, and in heaven ("tredhā" bhāvāya "pṛithivyām antarikshe divi" iti Śākapūṇiḥ), and adds that a Brāhmaṇa declares his third manifestation to be the Sun ("yad asya divi tṛitīyaṁ tad asāv ādityaḥ" iti hi brāhmaṇam). The constantly moving twins, mentioned in verse 11, are Ushas and the Sun according to Yāska (Nir. vii. 29. Sarvadā sahachāriṇāv Ushāś cha Ādityaś cha). Agni would thus be identified not only with Sūrya the celestial, but with Indra or Vāyu, the aerial or atmospheric deity, according to passages of the Nirukta vii. 5, already quoted in p. 8; and with Vishṇu, if we adopt the interpretation of that deity's three steps given by Śākapūṇi in Nir. xii. 19, as expounded by the commentator Durgāchārya, viz. that Vishṇu abides on earth as terrestrial fire, in the atmosphere in the form of lightning, and in the sky as the Sun ("Pṛithivyām antarikshe divi" iti Śakapūṇiḥ | pārthivo 'gnir bhūtvā pṛithivyāṁ yat kinchid asti tad vikramate tad adhitishṭhati | antarikshe vaidyutāmanā divi Sūryātmanā).[321] In R.V. x. 45, 1, = Vāj. S. xii. 18, (see also verse 2) a threefold origin is ascribed to Agni, the first from the heaven, the second from us (i.e. apparently from the earth), and the third from the waters, which may mean the atmosphere[322] (Divas pari prathamaṁ jajne Agnir asmad dvitīyam pari jātavedāḥ | tṛitīyaṁ apsu).[323] The same three abodes of Agni are perhaps referred to[324] in x. 56, 1 = S.V. i. 65 (idaṁ te ekam paraḥ u te ekam tṛitīyena jyotishā saṁ viśasva). In iii. 26, 7 (=Vāj.S. xviii. 66), he is called arkas tridhātuḥ, a threefold light,[325]

[321] Quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 56.

[322] See above, p. 39, note 73. See Comm. on Vāj. S. xii. 18.

[323] A.V. xii. 1, 20. Agnir divaḥ ā tapati Agner devasya uru antarikṣam | Agnim martāsaḥ indhate havyavāhaṁ ghṛitapriyam | "Agni glows from the sky; to Agni belongs the broad air; men kindle Agni, the bearer of oblations, the lover of butter." Compare A.V. xiii. 3, 21, and xviii. 4, 11.

[324] So the Scholiast on the Sāma-veda understands the verse, as I learn from Professor Benfey's note to his translation, p. 216.

[325] Compare A.V. viii. 39, 9.

in v. 4, 8 trishadhastha (according to Sāyaṇa=trishu divyādishu sthāneshu sthita), occupying three abodes, and in viii. 39, 8 tripasthya, having three homes. In i. 95, 3, he is said to have three births, one in the ocean, another in the sky, and a third in the waters (trīṇi jānā paribhūshanti asya samudre ekaṁ divi ekam apsu), which Sāyaṇa understands 1st of the submarine fire (vaḍavānala), 2nd of the sun, and 3rd of the lightning. He is elsewhere called dvijanman, having two births, i. 60, 1; i. 140, 2; i. 149, 2, 3, which Sāyaṇa explains either as born of the Heaven and Earth, or from two sticks, or because he has one birth from the sticks and a second when he is formally consecrated; but is said in one of these passages to dwell in the three lights (abhi . . . trī rochanāni . . . asthāt).

In ii. 9, 3, two places of birth only are mentioned—an upper (parame janman), and a lower (avare sadasthe)—which Sāyaṇa interprets of the sky and the atmosphere; and in viii. 43, 28, in like manner, only two are alluded to, the celestial, and that in the waters (yad Agne divijāḥ asi apsujāḥ vā),

In x. 91, 6, as we have already seen, his generation is ascribed only to the waters, the mothers. (Compare iii. 1, 3; iii. 9, 4.)

In A.V. iv. 39, 2, the earth is said to be a cow, and Agni her calf (Pṛithivī dhenus tasyāḥ Agnir vatsaḥ). In verses 4 and 6, Vāyu is said to be the calf of the air, and Sūrya of the sky.

In different passages the process of friction,[326] by which the god is [326] See Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, i. 16, and Professor Haug's translation, pp. 35 ff. I add here a sentence or two from this work (Ait. Br. i. 16) to illustrate what the texts above quoted say of the power of Agni to hallow all sacrifices, although in the present case a special rite is referred to: sā eshā svargyā āhutir yad Agnyāhutiḥ | yadi ha vai apy abrāhmaṇokto yadi duruktokto yajate atha ha eshā āhutir gachhaty eva devān na pāpmanā saṁsṛijyate | "The Agni oblation is that which conducts to heaven. Even if a man who is called a no-Brāhman, or a person of bad reputation, perform it, still this oblation goes to the gods, and is unaffected by the sin (of the performer)." See Professor Haug's translation, p. 38, note 17. The S'atapatha Brāmaṇa, ii. 3, 3, 1, relates that Agni, when created by Prajāpati, began to burn everything, and threw the world into confusion. Thereupon the creatures who then existed sought to crush him. Not being able to bear this, he came to a man and said, "I cannot endure this; let me enter into thee. Having generated me, nurse me; and if thou wilt do this for me in this world, I will do the same for thee in the next. The man agreed (sa yatra Agniṁ sasṛije sa idaṁ jātaḥ sarvam eva dagdhuṁ dadhre | ity eva āvilam eva | tāḥ yās tarhi prajāḥ āsus tāḥ ha enaṁ sampeshṭuṁ dadhrire | so 'titikshamāṇaḥ purusham eva abhyeyāya | 2. Sa ha uvācha "na vai aham idaṁ titikshe hanta tvā pravisāni | tam mā janayitvā bibhṛihi | sa yathaiva māṁ tvam asmin loke jana- daily generated by his worshippers, is described or alluded to. In iii. 29, 1 ff., it is said: astīdam adhimanthanam asti prajananaṁ kṛitam | etāṁ viśpatnīm ābhara Agnim manthāma pūrvathā | 2. (=S.V. i. 79) Araṇyor nihito jātavedāḥ garbhaḥ iva sudhito garbhiṇīshu | dive dive īḍyo jāgṛivadbhir havishmadbhir manushyebhir Agniḥ | 3. (=Vāj. S. xxxiv. 14) Uttānāyām ava bhara chikitvān sadyaḥ pravītā vṛishaṇaṁ jajāna | "This process of friction, of generation, has begun; bring this mistress of the people (the lower araṇi, or wood for friction); let us rub out Agni as heretofore.[327] 2. This god is deposited in the two pieces of yitvā bharishyasi evam eva ahaṁ tvām amushmin loke janayitvā bharishyāmi" iti | "tathā" iti taṁ janayitvā abhibhaḥ). Herodotus, iii. 16, tells us what the Egyptians thought of Agni: Αἰγυπτίοισι δὲ νενόμισται τό πῦρ θηρίον εἶναι ἔμψυχον, πάντα δὲ αὐτὸ κατεσθίειν τά περ ἂν λάβῃ, πλησθὲν δὲ αὐτὸ τῆς βορῆς συναποθνήσκειν τῷ κατέσθιομένῳ.

[327] Hence, perhaps, it is that he is called dvi-mātā, born of two parents (i. 31, 2). As regards dvi-janmā having a double birth (i. 60, 1; i. 140, 2; i. 149, 4, 5,) see above. He is also called bhūrijanmā, having many births (x. 5, 1). In R.V. i. 95, 2, he is said to be produced by the ten young women, i.e. the ten fingers (daśa imaṁ tvashṭur janayanta garbham atandrāso yuvatayaḥ). See Roth, Illustrations of Nirukta, p. 120; Benfey's Orient und Occident, ii. 510; and Roth's Lexicon, s.vv. tvashṭri and yuvati. In iii. 29, 3, he is called the son of Iḷā, whatever sense we ascribe to this word. In regard to the persons or families by whom the sacrificial fire is supposed to have been first kindled, and the rites of Āryan worship introduced, viz., Manu, Angiras, Bhṛigu, Atharvan, Dadhyanch, etc., see my paper on "Manu, the progenitor of the Āryan Indians," in vol. xx. Journ. R.A.S., pp. 410–416. I subjoin some of the passages there quoted: i. 36, 19. Ni tvām Agne manur dadhe jyotir janāya śaśvate | "Manu has placed thee (here) a light to all (generations of) men." vii. 2, 3. Manushvad Agnim Manunā samiddhaṁ sam adhvarāya sadam in mahema | "Let us, like Manu, ever attract to the sacrifice Agni, who was kindled by Manu." x. 63, 7. Yebhyo hotrām prathamām āyeje Manur samiddhāgnir manasā sapta hotṛibhiḥ | te Ādityāḥ abhayaṁ śarma yachhata | "O ye Ādityas, to whom Manu, when he had lighted Agni, presented, in company with seven hotri priests, with his heart, the first oblation, bestow on us secure protection." x. 69, 3. Yat te Manur yad anīkaṁ Sumitraḥ samīdhe Agne tad idaṁ navīyaḥ | "That lustre of thine, o Agni, which Manu, which Sumitra kindled, is the same which is now renewed." viii. 43, 13. Uta tvā Bhṛiguvat śuche Manushvad Agne āhuta | Angirasvad havāmahe | "Like Bhṛigu, like Manush, like Angiras, we invoke thee who hast been summoned to blaze." vi. 16, 13. Tvām Agne pushkarād adhi Atharvā nir amanthata | 14. Tam u tvā Dadhyaṅṅ ṛishiḥ putraḥ īdhe Atharvaṇaḥ | 13. "Agni, Atharvan drew thee forth from the lotus leaf. 14. Thee, Dadhyanch, the son of Atharvan, kindled." x. 21, 5. Agnir jāto Atharvaṇā vidad viśvāni kāvyā | bhuvad dūto Vivasvataḥ | "Agni, produced by Atharvan, knows all sciences. He has become the messenger of Vivasvat." i. 58, 6. Dadhush ṭvā Bhṛigvo mānusheshu ā | "The Bhṛigus have placed thee among men." x. 46, 2. Imaṁ vidhanto apāṁ sadasthe paśuṁ na nashṭam padair anu gman | guhā chatantam uśijo namobhir ichhanto dhīrāḥ Bhṛigavo avindan | "Worshipping, and desiring him with obeisances, wood, as the embryo in pregnant women. Agni is daily to be lauded by men bringing oblations and awaking (early). 3. Skilled [in the process], bring [the upper piece of wood] into contact with the lower, lying recumbent: being impregnated, she speedily brings forth the vigorous (Agni)."[328] Compare R.V. i. 68, 2, where it is noticed as remarkable that a living being should spring out of dry wood (śushkād yad deva jīvo janishthāḥ); iii. 23, 2, 3; vii. 1, 1; x. 49, 1, 5; x. 7, 5. He is produced from the two sticks as a new-born infant, v. 9, 3 (uta sma yaṁ śiśuṁ yathā navaṁ janishṭha araṇī); viii. 23, 25 (sūnuṁ vanaspatīnām). Strange to say, cries the poet, addressing himself to both worlds, the child, as soon as born, begins with unnatural voracity to consume his parents, and is altogether beyond his mortal worshipper's comprehension, x. 79, 4 (tad vām ṛitaṁ rodasī prabravīmi jāyamāno mātarā garbho atti | nāhaṁ devasya martyaś chiketa). But when born he is like the wriggling brood of serpents, difficult to catch, v. 9, 4 (uta sma durgṛibhīyase putro na hvāryāṇām). Wonderful is his growth, and his immediate activity as a messenger, seeing he is born of a mother who cannot suckle him, x. 115, 1 (chitraḥ it śiśos taruṇasya vakshatho na yo mātarāv apyeti dhātave | anūdhāḥ yadi jījanad adha cha nu vavaksha sadya mahi dūtyaṁ charan); but he is nourished and developed by the oblations of clarified butter which are poured into his mouth, and which he consumes, iii. 21, 1 (*stokānām agne medaso ghṛitasya hotaḥ prāśāna | "*Agni, invoker of the gods, eat these portions of fat and butter;" see also verses 2 and 3); v. 11, 3 (ghṛiteṇa tvā avardhayan); v. 14, 6; viii. 39, 3 (Agne manmāni tubhyaṁ kaṁ ghṛitaṁ na juhve āsani); viii. 43, 10, 22; x. 69, 1 f.; x. 118, 4, 6, and A.V. i. 7, 2 (Agne tailasya prāśāna).

In iii. 26, 7, he himself exclaims "butter is my eye" (ghṛitaṁ me chakshuḥ).

the wise and longing Bhṛigus have followed him with their steps, like a lost animal, and have found him concealed in the receptacle of the waters." In viii. 23, 17. Kāvya Uśanas is said to have established Agni to be a priest for men (Uśanā Kāvyas tvā ni hotāram asādayat | ḍyajiṁ tvā manave jātavedasam).

[328] The ancient Indians regarded the upper piece of wood as the male, and the lower as the female, factors in the generation of Agni. See the 3rd vol. of this work, p. 46, note 52.

(3) His epithets and characteristics.

His epithets are various, and for the most part descriptive of his physical characteristics. He is sarpirāsuti, ghṛitānna, butter-fed (ii. 7, 6; vii. 3, 1; x. 69, 2); ghṛita-nirṇik, butter-formed (iii. 17, 1; iii. 27, 5; x. 122, 2); ghṛita-keśa, butter-haired (viii. 49, 2); ghṛita-pṛishṭha, butter-backed (v. 4, 3; v. 37, 1; vii. 2, 4; x. 122, 4); ghṛitapratīka, gleaming with butter (iii. 1, 18; v. 11, 1; x. 21, 7); ghṛita-yoni, issuing from butter (v. 8, 6, compare ii. 3, 11); drvanna, fed by wood (ii. 7, 6); dhūma-ketu, having smoke for his mark, signal, or ensign (i. 27, 11; i. 44, 3; i. 94, 10; v. 11, 3; viii. 43, 4; viii. 44, 10; x. 4, 5; x. 12, 2); he sends up his smoke like a pillar to the sky, iv. 6, 2 (metā iva dhūmaṁ stabhāyad upa dyām); vii. 2. 1 (upa spṛiśa divyaṁ sānu stūpaiḥ); vii. 3, 3; vii. 16, 3 (ud dhūmāso arushāso divispṛiśaḥ [asthuḥ]; his smoke is waving, his flame cannot be seized, viii. 23, 1 (charishṇudhūmam agṛibhītaśochisham); he is driven by the wind, and rushes through the woods like a bull lording it over a herd of cows, i. 58, 4, 5 (vane ā vātachodito yūthe na sāhvān ava vāti vaṁsagaḥ); i. 65, 8. He is a destroyer of darkness, i. 140, 1 (tamohan), and sees through the gloom of the night, i. 94, 7 (rātryāś chid andho ati deva paśyasi). The world, which had been swallowed up and enveloped in darkness, and the heavens, are manifested at his appearance, and the gods, the sky, the earth, the waters, the plants rejoice in his friendship, x. 88, 2 (gīrṇam bhuvanaṁ tamasā 'pagūḷham āviḥ svar abhavaj jāte Agnau | tasya devāḥ pṛithivī dyaur utāpo araṇayann oshadhīḥ sakhye asya). He is chitra-bhānu, chitra-śochiḥ, of brilliant lustre or blaze (i. 27, 6; ii. 10, 2; v. 26, 2; vi. 10, 3; vii. 9, 3; vii. 12, 1; viii. 19, 2), ūrdhva-śochis, upward-flaming (vi. 15, 2), śukra-śochiḥ, bright-flaming (vii. 15, 10; viii. 23, 20), pāvaka-śochis,[329] with clear flames (viii. 43, 31), śukra-varṇa, śuchi-varṇa, bright coloured (i. 140, 1; v. 2, 3), śochishkeśa, with blazing hair

[329] Agni is also styled śīraśochis in viii: 60, 10 (=S.V. ii. 904), 14 (=S.V. i. 49), and śīra in vii. 43, 31. On the last place Sāyaṇa explains śīra as sleeping or lying in the sacrifices (yajneshu śayanīyaśīlam). On viii. 60, 10, he makes the compound word = aśana-śīla-jvālam, "he whose flame pervades." On the 14th verse he takes it as = śayana-svabhāva-rochishkam, "he whose brilliance has the character of lying or sleeping." In both places Professor Benfey renders it "gleaming like lightning." Professor Roth, Illustr. of Nir., p. 42, thinks śīra may mean "piercing."

(i. 45, 6; iii. 14, 1; iii. 17, 1; iii. 27, 4; v. 8, 2; v. 41, 10), hari-keśa, with tawny hair (iii. 2, 13), golden-formed (iv. 3, 1; x. 20, 9, hiraṇya-rūpaṁ janitā jajāna), and hiri-śmaśru, with golden beard (v. 7, 7). He carries sharp weapons, tigmaheti, tigmabhṛishṭi (iv. 4, 4; iv. 5, 3), he has sharp teeth, tigmajambha (i. 79, 6; i. 143, 5; iv. 5, 4; iv. 15, 5; viii. 19, 22), burning teeth, tapurjambha (i. 58, 5; viii. 23, 4), brilliant teeth, śuchidant (v. 7, 7), golden teeth, hiraṇyadant (v. 2, 3), iron grinders, ayodaṁshṭra (x. 87, 2), and sharp and consuming jaws (viii. 49, 13; x. 79, 1 (tigmāḥ asya hanavaḥ | nānā hanū vibhṛite sam bharete asinvatī bapsatī bhūri attaḥ). According to one passage, he is footless and headless (apād aśīrshā, iv. 1, 11), and yet he is elsewhere said to have a burning head, tapurmūrdhā (vii. 3, 1), three heads and seven rays, trimūrdhānaṁ saptaraśmim (i. 146, 1; ii. 5, 2), to be four-eyed, chaturaksha (i. 31, 13), thousand-eyed, sahasrāksha (i. 79, 12), and thousand-horned, sahasraśṛinga (v. 1, 8).[330] He is kṛishṇādhvan, kṛishṇavarttani, kṛishṇa-pavi, i.e. his path and his wheels are marked by blackness (ii. 4, 6; vi. 10, 4; vii. 8, 2; viii. 23, 19); he envelopes the woods, consumes and blackens them with his tongue (i. 143, 5; v. 41, 10; vi. 60, 10, archishā vanā viśvā parishvajat | kṛishṇā karoti jihvayā); x. 79, 2, asinvann atti jihvayā vanāni); he is all-devouring, viśvād (viii. 44, 26); driven by the wind, he invades the forests, and shears the hairs of the earth, i. 65, 4 (ibhyān na rājā vanāni atti | yad vātajūto vanā vi asthād Agnir ha dāti romā pṛithivyāḥ), like a barber shaving a beard, x. 142, 4 (yadā te vāto anuvāti śochir vapteva śmaśru vapasi pra bhūma). He causes terror, like an army let loose, i. 66, 8 (seneva sṛishtā amaṁ dadhāti); i. 143, 5; x. 142, 4 (yad udvato nivato yāsi bapsat pṛithag eshi pragardhinīva senā). His flames roar like the waves of the sea, i. 44, 12 (yad devānām mitramahaḥ purohitao antaro yāsi dūtyam | sindhor iva prasvanitāsaḥ ūrmayo Agner bhrājante archayaḥ). He sounds like thunder, vii. 3, 6 (divo na te tanyatur eti śushmaḥ); x. 45, 4 (ākrandad Agniḥ stanayann iva Dyauḥ[331]); viii. 91, 5; he roars like

[330] In one place (viii. 19, 32) Agni is called sahasra-mushka, which the commentator explains by bahu-tejaska, having many flames. The same epithet is, as we have seen, applied in R.V. vi. 46, 3, to Indra, where Sāyaṇa makes it equivalent to sahasra-śepha, mille membra genitalia habens.

[331] It is to be observed that in this passage Dyaus, and not Indra, is described as the thunderer. See above p. 118 f., the reference to the question whether Dyaus had been superseded by Indra.

the wind, ibid. (huve vātasvanaṁ kavim Parjanya-krandyaṁ sahaḥ | Agniṁ samudravāsasam[332]); like a lion, iii. 2, 11 (nānadan na siṁhaḥ); and when he has yoked his red, wind-driven horses to his car, he bellows like a bull, and invades the forest-trees with his flames; the birds are terrified at the noise when his grass-devouring sparks arise, i. 94, 10 (yad ayukthāḥ arushā rohitā rathe vātajūtā vṛishabhasyeva te ravaḥ | ād invasi vanino dhūmaketūnā | 11. Adha svanād uta bibhyuḥ patatriṇo drapsāḥ yat te yavasādo vi asthiran). He is resistless as the resounding Maruts, and as the lightnings of heaven, i. 143, 5 (na yo varāya Marutām iva svanaḥ seneva sṛishṭā divyā yathā 'śaniḥ). He has a hundred manifestations, and shines like the sun, i. 149, 3 (sūro na rurukvān śatātmā); vii. 3, 6. His lustre is like the rays of the dawn and the sun, x. 91, 4 (ā te chikitre ushasām iva etayaḥ arepasaḥ sūryasyeva raśmayaḥ), and like the lightnings of the rain-cloud, ibid. 5 (=S.V. ii. 332, tava śriyo varshyasyeva vidyutaḥ); and he is borne on a chariot of lightning, iii. 14, 1 (vidyudratha), on a luminous car, i. 140, 1 (jyotīratha),[333] i. 141, 12 (chandraratha); iii. 5, 3; v. 1. 11 (ā adya ratham bhānumo bhānumantam Agne tishṭha); on a brilliant, x. 1, 5 (chitraratha), golden, iv. 1, 8 (hiraṇyaratha), on an excellent or beautiful car, iii. 3, 9 (sumadratha); iv. 2, 4 (suratha). This chariot is drawn by horses or mares characterized as butter-backed (ghṛitapṛishṭha), wind-impelled (vātajūta), beautiful (svaśva), ruddy (rohit), tawny (arusha), active (jīrāśva), assuming all forms (viśvarūpa), and mind-yoked (manoyuj), and by other epithets (i. 14, 6, 12; 1. 45, 2; i. 94, 10; i. 141, 12; ii. 4, 2; ii. 10, 2; iv. 1, 8; iv. 2, 2, 4; iv. 6, 9 (ṛijumushka!); vi. 16, 43; vii. 16, 2; viii. 43, 16; x. 7, 4; x. 70, 2 f.), which he yokes in order to summon the gods, i. 14, 12 (tābhir devān ihāvaha); iii. 6, 6 (ṛitasya vā keśinā yogyābhir ghṛitasnuvā rohitā dhuri dhishva | athāvaha devān deva vidvān | 9. Ā ebhir [devaiḥ] Agne sarathaṁ yāhi arvāṅ); viii. 64, 1 (yukshā hi devahūtamān aśvān Agne rathīr iva).

[332] Here it will be noted, he is also said "to be clothed with, or enveloped by, the ocean." The same epithet had also occurred in the preceding verse (=S.V. i. 18), where the rishi is also said to invoke the bright god, as did Aurva, Bhrigu, and Apnavāna (Aurvabhṛiguvat śuchim Apnavāna-vad ā huve Agniṁ samudra-vāsasam).

[333] The same epithet is applied to the gods in general in x. 63, 4.

(4) High divine functions assigned to him.

The highest divine functions are ascribed to Agni. He is called the divine monarch (samrājo asurasya), and declared to be strong as Indra, vii. 6, 1 (Indrasyeva pra tavasas kṛitāni vande). Although (as we have seen above) he is described in some passages as the offspring of heaven and earth, he is said in other places to have stretched them out, iii. 6, 5 (tava kratvā rodasī ā tatantha); vii. 5, 4; to have spread out the two worlds like two skins, vi. 8, 3 (vi charmanīva dhishaṇe avartayat); to have produced them, i. 96 4 (janitā rodasyoḥ); vii. 5, 6 (bhuvanā janayan); to have, like the unborn, supported the earth and sky with true hymns, i. 67, 3 (ajo na kshāṁ dadhāra pṛithivīṁ tastambha dyām mantrebhiḥ satyaiḥ); to have, by his flame, held aloft the heaven, iii. 5, 10 (ud astambhīt samidhā nākam rishvaḥ); to have kept asunder the two worlds, vi. 8, 3 (vi astabhnād rodasī mitro adbhutaḥ); to have formed the mundane regions and the luminaries of heaven, vi. 7, 7 (vi yo rajāṁsi amimīta sukratur vaiśvānaro vi divo rochanā kaviḥ); vi. 8, 2; to have begotten Mitra, x. 8, 4 (janayan Mitram), and caused the sun, the imperishable orb, to ascend the sky, x. 156, 4 (Agne nakshatram ajaram ā sūryaṁ rohayo divi); to have made all that flies, or walks, or stands, or moves, x. 88, 4[334] (sa patatri itvaraṁ sthāḥ jagad yat śvātram agnir akṛiṇod jātavedāḥ); to adorn the heaven with stars, i. 68, 5 (pipeśa nākaṁ stṛibhir damūnāḥ). He is the head (mūrddhā) and summit (kakud) of the sky, the centre (nābhi) of the earth (i. 59, 2); compare verse 1; vi. 7, 1; viii. 44, 16; x. 88, 5; he props up men like a pillar, i. 59, 1 (sthūṇeva janān upamid yayantha); iv. 5, 1 (anūnena bṛihatā vakshathena upa stabhāyad upamin na rodhaḥ). His greatness exceeds that of heaven and all the worlds, i. 59, 5 (Divaś chit te bṛihato jātavedo vaiśvānara pra ririche mahitvam); iii. 3, 10 (Jātaḥ āpṛiṇo bhuvanāni rodasī Agne tā viśvā paribhūr asi tmanā); iii. 6, 2.[335] He, the destroyer of cities, has achieved famous exploits [334] This half verse (x. 88, 4) is quoted in Nirukta, v. 3. Durga, the commentator on the Nirukta, explains the words by saying that Agni subjects all things to himself at the time of the mundane dissolution. The gods are said in the same hymn (x. 88, 7,) to have thrown into Agni an oblation accompanied by a hymn, and in verse 9, this oblation is said to have consisted of all creatures or all worlds (bhuvanāni viśvā).

[335] Epithets of this description may have been originally applied to some other god to whom they were more suitable than to Agni, and subsequently transferred to him by his worshippers in emulation of the praises lavished on other deities.

of old, vii. 6, 2 (purandarasya gīrbhir ā vivāse Agner vratāni pūrvyā mahāni). Men tremble at his mighty deeds, and his ordinances and designs cannot be resisted, ii. 8, 3 (yasya vratam̃ na mīyate); ii. 9, 1 = Vāj. S. xi. 36 (adabdhavrata-pramatir . . . Agniḥ); vi. 7, 5; viii. 44, 25; viii. 92, 3 (yasmād rejante kṛishṭayaś charkṛityāni kṛiṇvataḥ). Earth and heaven and all beings present and future obey his commands; vii. 5, 4 (tava tridhātu pṛithivī uta dyaur vaiśvānara vratam Agne sachanta); A.V. iv. 23, 7 (yasya idam pradiśi yad rochate yaj jātam̃ janitavyam̃ cha kevalam | staumi Agniṁ nāthito johavīmi). He conquered wealth, or space, for the gods in battle, i. 59, 5 (yudhā devebhyo varivaś chakartha); and delivered them from calamity, vii. 13, 2 (tvam̃ devān abhiśaster amunchaḥ). He is the conqueror of thousands (sahasrajit), i. 188, 1. All the gods fear and do homage to him when he abides in darkness, vi. 9, 7 (viśve devāḥ anamasyan bhiyānās tvām Agne tamasi tasthivām̃sam). He is celebrated and worshipped by Varuṇa, Mitra, the Maruts, and all the 3,339 gods, iii. 9, 9 (trīṇi śatā trī sahasrāṇi Agniṁ triṁśach cha devāḥ nava chāsaparyan); iii. 14, 4 (Mitraś cha tubhyam̃ Varuṇaḥ sahasvo Agne viśve Marutaḥ sumnam archan); x. 69, 9 (devāś chit te amṛitāḥ jātavedo mahimānam̃ Vādhryaśva pra vochan). It is through him that Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman triumph, i. 141, 9 (tvayā hi Agne Varuṇo dhṛitavrato Mitraḥ śāśadre Aryamā sudānavaḥ). He knows and sees all worlds, or creatures, iii. 55, 10 (Agnis tā viśvā bhuvanāni veda); x. 187, 4 (yo viśvā 'bhipaśyati bhuvanā sam̃ cha paśyati).[336] He knows the recesses of heaven, iv. 8, 2, 4 (vidvān ārodhanam̃ divaḥ), the divine ordinances and the races or births of of gods and men, i. 70, 1, 3 (ā daivyāni vratā chikitvān ā mānushasya janasya janma | etā chikitvo bhūmā ni pāhi devānām̃ janma martāmś cha vidvān); iii. 4, 11; vi. 15, 13; the secrets of mortals, viii. 39, 6 Agnir jātā devānām Agnir veda martānām apīchyam); and hears the invocations which are addressed to him, viii. 43, 23 (tam̃ tvā vayam̃ havāmahe sṛiṇvantam̃ jātavedasam). He is asura, "the divine," iv. 2, 5; v. 12, 1; v. 15, 1; vii. 2, 3; vii. 6, 1.

[336] These same words are in iii. 62, 9, applied to Pūshan: See above, p. 172.

(5) Agni's relations to his worshippers.

The votaries of Agni prosper, they are wealthy and live long, vi. 2, 4, 5 (samidhā yas te āhutiṁ niśitim martyo naśat | vayāvantaṁ sa pushyati kshayam Agne śatāyusham); vi. 5, 5 (yas te yajnena samidhā yaḥ ukthair arkebhiḥ sūno sahaso dadāśat | sa martyeshu amṛita prachetāḥ rāyā dyumnena śravasā vi bhāti); vi. 10, 3; vi. 13, 4; vi. 15, 11; vii. 11, 2; viii. 19, 5, 6; viii. 44, 15; viii. 73, 9. He is the deliverer (compare viii. 49, 5) and friend of the man who comes to him with fine horses and gold, and a chariot full of riches, and delights to entertain him as a guest, iv. 4, 10 (yas tvā svaśvaḥ suhiraṇyo Agne upayāti vasumatā rathena | tasya trātā bhavasi sakhā yas te ātithyam ānushag jujoshat); and grants protection to the devoted worshipper who sweats to bring him fuel,[337] or wearies his head to serve him, iv. 2, 6 (yas te idhmaṁ jabharat sishvidāno mūrdhānam vā tatapate tvāyā | bhuvas tasya svatavān pāyur Agne). He watches with a thousand eyes over the man who brings him food and nourishes him with oblations, x. 79, 5 (yo asmai annaṁ tṛishu ādadhāti ājyair ghṛitair juhoti pushyati | tasmai sahasram akshabhir vi chakshe). He bestows on his servant a renowned, devout, excellent, incomparable son, who confers fame upon his father,[338] v. 25, 5 (Agnis tuviśravastamaṁ tuvibrahmāṇam uttamam | atūrtaṁ śrāvayatpatim putraṁ dadāti dāśushe). He gives riches, which he abundantly commands, i. 1, 3 (Agninā rayim aśnavat); i. 31, 10 (tvam Agne pramatis tvam pitā 'si nas tvaṁ vayaskṛit tava jāmayo vayam | saṁ tvā rāyaḥ śatinaḥ saṁ sahasriṇaḥ suvīraṁ yanti vratapām adābhya); i. 36, 4 (viśvaṁ so Agne jayati tvayā dhanaṁ yas te dadāśa martyaḥ). The man whom he protects and inspires in battle conquers abundant food, and can never be overcome, i. 27, 7 f. = S.V. ii. 765 f. (yam Agne pṛitsu martyam avāḥ vājeshu yaṁ junāḥ | sa yantā śaśvatīr ishaḥ | 8. Nakir asya sahantya paryetā kayasya chit). No mortal enemy can by any wondrous power gain the mastery over him who sacrifices to this god,

[337] In viii. 91, 19 f. the rishi informs Agni that he has no cow which would yield butter for oblations, and no axe to cut wood withal, and that therefore his offering is such as the god sees; and he begs him to accept any sorts of wood he may throw into him (na hi me asti aghnyā na svadhitir vananvati | atha etādṛig bharāmi te | 20. Yad Agne kāni kāni chid ā te dārūṇi dadhmasi tā jushasva yavishṭhya).

[338] Such is the sense assigned by Sāyaṇa to the epithet śrāvayat-patim.

viii. 23, 15 (na tasya māyayā chana ripur īśīta martyaḥ | yo Agnaye dadāśa havyadātibhiḥ). He also confers, and is the guardian and lord of, immortality, i. 31, 7 (tvaṁ tam Agne amṛitatve uttame marttaṁ dadhāsi); vii. 7, 7 (amṛitasya rakshitā); vii. 4, 6 (īśe hi Agne amṛitasya bhūreḥ). He was made by the gods the centre of immortality, iii. 17, 4 (amṛitasya nābhiḥ). His worshippers seek him with glad hearts, viii. 43, 31 (hṛidbhir mandrebhir īmahe). In a funeral hymn Agni is supplicated to warm with his heat the unborn part[339] of the deceased, and in his auspicious form to carry it to the world of the righteous, x. 16, 4 (ajo bhāgas tapasā taṁ tapasva taṁ te śochis tapatu taṁ te archiḥ | yās te śivās tanvo jātavedas tābhir vahainaṁ sukṛitām u lokam).[340] He carries [339] Professor Aufrecht thinks that this is not the sense of the words, and that they mean: "The goat (with whose skin the dead is covered) is thy share; that consume with thy heat; that be consumed with thy flash and flame," etc.; and compares Āśvalāyanaś Gṛihya Sūtras iv. 2, 4; 3, 20; and Kātyāyanaś Śrauta Sūtras, xxv. 7, 34. I gather from the fact that this passage is cited in the Lexicon of Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth under aja 1, c (where the sense of goat is assigned to the word), that they are of the same opinion as Professor Aufrecht. I think, however, that the rendering I have followed is more agreeable to the context. In the preceding verses 1 and 2, Agni had been besought not so to burn the body of the deceased as to destroy it (compare R.V. i. 162, 20), but after having sufficiently "cooked" the man (yadā śṛitaṁ kṛiṇavaḥ), to send him to the Fathers. In verse 3, the different elements of which the body, when living, was composed, are commanded to return to the sources from which they were at first derived; and then in the verse before us (as I understand it), the god is besought to warm the man's unborn part, and convey it to the world of the righteous. In the text there is no word answering to "thy," which has, therefore, to be supplied by those who understand aja of a goat. It is more natural to suppose that it is the soul of the departed man than that of a goat which is to be conveyed to the world of the righteous; (although I am aware that Manu, v. 42, declares that cattle which are sacrificed go to heaven, and the same is said of the sacrificial horse in R.V. i. 162, 21, and i. 163, 12 f.); and in the following verse (x. 16, 5) it is evidently the man who is said to have been offered to Agni, and whom Agni is besought to dismiss to the Fathers. My rendering has the support of Professor Müller (Journ. of Germ. Or. Soc., vol. ix. p. xv.), who translates ajo bhāgaḥ by "das ew'ge Theil," the eternal part, and of M. Langlois, who renders it "une portion immortelle." These verses, x. 16, 1-5, will be found quoted at length in the section on Yama.

[340] Some further verses of this hymn will be quoted in the section on Yama. In verse 9, the kravyād Agni, the consumer of carrion, or of the dead, is spoken of as an object to be repelled. In the Vāj. S. i. 17, Agni is prayed to drive away two of his own forms, the āmād and the kravyād, and to bring the sacrificial fire (apa Agne Agnim āmādaṁ jahi nish kravyādam sedha | ā devayajaṁ vaha), where the commentator says that three Agnis are mentioned, the one which devours raw flesh (āmād) which is the common culinary fire (laukiko 'gniḥ), the second the funereal (kravyāt | śavadāhe kravyam māṁsam atti iti kravyāt chitāgniḥ), and the third the men across calamities, as in a ship over the sea, or preserves from them, iii. 20, 4 (parshad viśvā 'ti duritā gṛiṇantam); v. 4, 9 (viśvāni no durgahā jātavedaḥ sindhuṁ na nāvā duritā 'ti parshi); vii. 12, 2 (sa mahnā viśvā duritāni sahvān | sa no rakshishad duritād avadyāt). All blessings issue from him as branches from a tree, vi. 13, 1 (tvad viśvā subhaga saubhagāni Agne vi yanti vanino na vayāḥ). He is like a water-trough in a desert, x. 4, 1 (dhanvann iva prapā asi Agne). All treasures are congregated in him, x. 6, 6 (saṁ yasmin viśvā vasūni jagmuḥ); he commands all the riches in the earth, the upper and lower oceans, the atmosphere, and the sky, vii. 6, 7 (ā devo dade budhnyā vasūni vaiśvānaraḥ uditā sūryasya | ā samudrād avarād ā parasmād ā Agnir divaḥ ā pṛithivyāḥ); x. 91, 3 (vasur vasūnāṁ kshayasi tvam ekaḥ id dyāvā cha yāni pṛithivī cha pushyataḥ). He is, in consequence, continually supplicated for all kinds of boons, riches, food, deliverance from enemies and demons, poverty, nakedness, reproach, childlessness, hunger, i. 12, 8, 9; i. 36, 12 ff.; i. 58, 8, 9; ii. 4, 8; ii. 7, 2, 3; ii. 9, 5; iii. 1, 21; iii. 13, 7; iii. 16, 5; iv. 2, 20; iv. 3, 14; iv. 11, 6; v. 3, 11; vi. 1, 12 f.; vi. 4, 8; vi. 5, 7; vi. 6, 7; vii. 1, 5, 13, 19. He is besought to protect his worshippers with a hundred iron walls, vi. 48, 8; vii. 3, 7 (śatam pūrbhir āyasībhir ni pāhi); vii. 16, 10; to be himself such a fortification with a hundred surrounding walls, vii. 15, 14 (adha mahī naḥ ayasī anādhṛiśhṭo nṛipītaye | pūr bhava śatabhujiḥ); i. 189, 2; to consume their enemies like dry bushes, iv. 4, 4 (ni amitrān oshatāt tigmahete | yo no arātiṁ samidhāna chakre nīchā taṁ dhakshi atasaṁ na śushkam); to strike down the malevolent as a tree is destroyed by lighting, vi. 8, 5 (pavyeva rājann aghaśaṁsam ajara nīchā ni vṛiścha vaninaṁ na tejasā). Compare A.V. iii. 1, 1; iii. 2, 1; vi. 120, 1. He is invoked in battle, viii. 43, 21 (samatsu tvā havāmahe), in which he leads the van, viii. 73, 8 (puroyāvānam ājishu). He is prayed to forgive whatever sin the worshipper may have commited through folly, and to make him guiltless towards Aditi, iv. 12, 4 (yat chid hi te purushutrā yavishṭha achittibhiś chakṛima kach chid āgaḥ | kṛidhi su asmān Aditer anāgān vi enāṁsi śiśratho vishvag Agne); viii. 93, 7 (yat sīm āgaś chakṛiṇa tat su mṛila tad Aryamā sacrificial (yāgayogyaḥ). Compare Vaj. San. xviii. 51 f. The Taitt. Sanh. ii. 5, 8, 6, mentions another threefold division of fire: Trayo vai agnayo havyavāhano devānāṁ kavyavāhanaḥ pitṛīṇāṁ saharakshāḥ asurāṇām.

Aditiḥ śiśrathantu; see above pp. 46 and 47); and to avert Varuṇa's wrath, iv. 1, 4 (tvaṁ no Agne Varuṇasya vidvān devasya heḷo ava yāsiśīshṭhāḥ).

In two passages, as we have already seen (p. 108, note), the worshipper naively says to Agni (as Indra's votary says to him), viii. 44, 23, "If I were thou, and thou, Agni, wert I, thy aspirations should be fulfilled;" and viii. 19, 25 f., "If, Agni, thou wert a mortal, and I, o thou who art rich in friends, were an immortal, (26) I would not abandon thee to wrong or to penury. My worshipper should not be poor, nor distressed, nor miserable."

In viii. 92, 2, Agni called Daivodāsa (Daivodāso 'gniḥ), from which it would appear that king Divodāsa claimed him especially as his tutelary god. In the same way he is called in viii. 19, 32 (samrājaṁ Trāsadasyavam), and in x. 69, 1 ff., he is called Agni Badhryasva, apparently because a sage of that name had kindled him. Compare the epithet Kauśika applied to Indra in R.V. i. 10, 11, and the first vol. of this work, pp. 347 ff.

Agni is occasionally identified with other gods and different goddesses, Indra, Vishṇu, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman, Anśa, Tvashṭṛi, Rudra, Pūshan, Savitṛi, Bhaga, Aditi, Hotrā, Bhāratī, Iḷā, Sarasvatī, ii. 1, 3–7, and 11 (tvam Agne Indro vṛishabhaḥ satām asi tvaṁ Vishṇur urugāyo namasyaḥ, etc.); iii. 5, 4; v. 3, 1; vii. 12, 3; x. 8, 5.[341] All gods are comprehended in him, v. 3, 1 (tve viśve sahasas putra devāḥ); he surrounds them as the circumference of a wheel does the spokes, v. 13, 6 (Agne nemir arān iva tvaṁ devān paribhūr asi); compare i. 141, 9. Varuṇa is in one place spoken of as his brother, iv. 1, 2 (sa bhrātaram Varuṇam Agne ā vavṛitsva).

Agni is associated with Indra[342] in different hymns, as i. 108 and 109; iii. 12; vi. 59 and 60; vii. 93 and 94; viii. 38 and 40. The two gods are said to be twin brothers, having the same father, and having their mothers here and there,[343] vi. 59, 2 (see above, pp. 14 and 81), to be both thunderers (vajriṇā), slayers of Vṛittra or of foes (vṛittrahaṇā), and shakers of cities, iii. 12, 4, 6 (Indrāgnī navatim puro dāsapatnīr adhunutam | sākam ekena karmaṇā); vi. 59, 3; vi. 60, 3; vii. 93, 1, 4; viii. 38, 2.[344] They are also invited together to come and drink soma (vii. 93, 6; viii. 38, 4, 7–9), and are together invoked for help, vii. 94, 7 (Indrāgnī avasā ā gatam asmabhyaṁ charshaṇīsahā). In one place, i. 109, 4, they are called aśvinā, "horsemen." (See Müller, as quoted at the foot of the page). Agni is elsewhere said to exercise alone the function usually assigned to Indra, and to slay Vṛittra and destroy cities, i. 59, 6 (Vaiśvānaro dasyum Agnir jaghanvān adhūnot kāshṭhāḥ ava S'ambaram bhet); i. 78, 4 (tam u tvā vṛittrahantamam yo dasyūn avadhūnushe | dyumnair abhi pra noṇumaḥ); vi. 16, 14, 39, 48 (vṛittrahaṇam purandaram | Agne puro rurojitha); vii. 5, 3; vii. 6, 2; viii. 63, 4. He is also described as driving away the Dasyus from the house, thus creating a large light for the Ārya, vii. 5, 6 (tvaṁ dasyūn okasaḥ ājaḥ uru jyotir janayann āryāya, compare i. 59, 2, and x. 69, 6), as the promoter of the Ārya, viii. 92, 1 (āryasya vardhanam Agnim), and as the vanquisher of the irreligious Paṇis, vii. 6, 3 (ni akratūn grathino mṛidhravāchaḥ paṇīn aśrāddhān avṛidhān ayajñān | pra pra tān dasyūn Agnir vivāya pūrvaś chakāra aparān ayajyūn),—although it is Indra who is most frequently represented in the hymns as the patron and helper of the sacred race, and the destroyer of their enemies. On the other hand, in viii. 38, 1, where the two gods are called two priests (yajñasya ṛitvijā), Indra is made to share in the character peculiar to Agni.[345] In hymn i. 93, Agni and Soma are celebrated in company.

[341] Another verse where Agni is identified with other gods is i. 164, 46. Indram Mitraṁ Varuṇam Agnim āhur atho divyaḥ sa suparṇo garutmān | ekaṁ sad viprāḥ bahudhā vadanti Agnim Yamam Mātariśvānam āhuḥ | "They call him Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, Agni; then there is that celestial, well-winged bird. Sages name variously that which is but one; they call it Agni, Yama, Mātariśvan." Compare A.V. xiii. 3, 13: sa Varuṇaḥ sāyam Agnir bhavati sa Mitro bhavati prātar udyan | sa Savitā bhūtvā antarikṣheṇa yāti sa Indro bhūtvā tapati madhyato divaṁ | "Agni becomes Varuṇa in the evening; rising in the morning he is Mitra; becoming Savitṛi he moves through the air; becoming Indra he glows in the middle of the sky."

[342] See Müller's Lectures on Language. Second series, pp. 495 f.

[343] The word so rendered is ihehamātarā. Sāyaṇa says it means that their mother Aditi is here and there, i.e. everywhere. Roth, s.v. understands it to mean that the mother of the one is here, of the other there, i.e. in different places. Compare iheha jāte R.V. v. 47, 5. See Müller's Lectures on Language ii. 495.

[344] Compare A.V. iv. 23, 5; vii. 110, 1 f.

[345] Compare the words attributed to Indra in x. 119, 13 above, p. 91.

(6) Agni,—a metrical sketch.

Great Agni, though thine essence be but one,
Thy forms are three; as fire thou blazest here,
As lightning flashest in the atmosphere,
In heaven thou flamest as the golden sun.

It was in heaven thou hadst thy primal birth;
By art of sages skilled in sacred lore
Thou wast drawn down to human hearths of yore,
And thou abid'st a denizen of earth.

Sprung from the mystic pair,[346] by priestly hands
In wedlock joined, forth flashes Agni bright;
But,—o ye Heavens and Earth, I tell you right,—
The unnatural child devours the parent brands.

But Agni is a god: we must not deem
That he can err, or dare to reprehend
His acts, which far our reason's grasp transcend:
He best can judge what deeds a god beseem.

And yet this orphaned god himself survives:
Although his hapless mother soon expires,
And cannot nurse the babe, as babe requires,—
Great Agni, wondrous infant, grows and thrives.

Smoke-bannered Agni, god with crackling voice
And flaming hair, when thou dost pierce the gloom
At early morn, and all the world illume,
Both Heaven and Earth and gods and men rejoice.

In every home thou art a welcome guest;
The household's tutelary lord; a son,
A father, mother, brother, all in one;
A friend by whom thy faithful friends are blest.

[346] The two pieces of fuel by the attrition of which fire is produced, which, as we have seen above, are represented as husband and wife.

A swift-winged messenger, thou callest down
From heaven, to crowd our hearths, the race divine,
To taste our food, our hymns to hear, benign,
And all our fondest aspirations crown.

Thou, Agni, art our priest, divinely wise,
In holy science versed; thy skill detects
The faults that mar our rites, mistakes corrects,
And all our acts completes and sanctifies.

Thou art the cord that stretches to the skies,
The bridge that spans the chasm, profound and vast,
Dividing Earth from Heaven, o'er which at last
The good shall safely pass to Paradise.

But when, great god, thine awful anger glows,
And thou revealest thy destroying force,
All creatures flee before thy furious course,
As hosts are chased by overpowering foes.

Thou levellest all thou touchest; forests vast Thou shear'st like beards which barber's razor shaves,
Thy wind-driven flames roar load as ocean-waves,
And all thy track is black when thou hast past.

But thou, great Agni, dost not always wear
That direful form; thou rather lov'st to shine
Upon our hearths with milder flame benign,
And cheer the homes where thou art nursed with care.

Yes, thou delightest all those men to bless,
Who toil, unwearied, to supply the food
Which thou so lovest, logs of well-dried wood,
And heaps of butter bring,—thy favourite mess.

Though I no cow possess, and have no store
Of butter,—nor an axe fresh wood to cleave,
Thou, gracious god, wilt my poor gift receive,—
These few dry sticks I bring; I have no more.

Preserve us, lord, thy faithful servants save
From all the ills by which our bliss is marred;
Tower like an iron wall our homes to guard,
And all the boons bestow our hearts can crave.

And when away our brief existence wanes,
When we at length our earthly homes must quit,
And our freed souls to worlds unknown shall flit,
Do thou deal gently with our cold remains;

And then thy gracious form assuming, guide
Our unborn part across the dark abyss
Aloft to realms serene of light and bliss,
Where righteous men among the gods abide.

SECTION XIV.

TVASHṬṚI.

This god, who in the later mythology is regarded as one of the Ādityas,[347] but as we have seen (in the section on those deities) does not bear that character in the hymns of the Rig-veda, is the Hephaistos, or Vulcan, of the Indian pantheon, the ideal artist, the divine artizan, the most skilful of workmen, who is versed in all wonderful and admirable contrivances, x. 53, 9 (Tvashṭā māyāḥ ved apasām apastamaḥ). He sharpens the iron axe of Brahmaṇaspati, ibid. (śiśite nūnam paraśuṁ svāyasaṁ yena vriśchād etaśo Brahmaṇaspatiḥ); and forges the thunderbolts of Indra,[348] i. 32, 2 (Tvashṭā asmai vajraṁ svaryaṁ tataksha); i. 52, 7; i. 61, 6; i. 85, 9; v. 31, 4; vi. 17, 10; x. 48, 3; which are described as golden (hiraṇyaya) i. 85, 9, or of iron (āyasa) x. 48, 3, with a thousand points (sahasrabhṛishṭi) and a hundred edges (śatāśri), i. 85, 9; vi. 17, 10 (see above, p. 86). He is styled supāṇi, sugabhasti, the beautiful-, or skilful-handed, iii. 54, 12; vi. 49, 9; svapas, sukṛit, the skilful worker, i. 85, 9; iii. 54, 12; viśvarūpa,[349] the omniform, or archetype, of all forms, i. 13, 10; iii. 55, 19;[350] x. 10, 5; and savitṛi, the vivifier, iii. 55, 19; x. 10, 5. He imparts generative power and bestows offspring,[351] i. 142, 10 (tan nas turīpam adbhutam puru vā

[347] See the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 103 ff.

[348] According to R.V. i. 121, 3, Indra himself (?) is said to have fashioned the thunderbolt (takshad vajram).

[349] In iii. 38, 4, the epithet viśvarūpa is applied to another god,—Indra according to Sāyaṇa.

[350] Quoted in Nirukta x. 34. See Roth's illustrations of that work, p. 144, where the word savitṛi is said to be an epithet of Tvashṭṛi.

[351] In A.V. vi. 81, 3, Tvashṭṛi is said to have bound the amulet which Aditi wore when she was desirous of offspring, on the arm of a female, in order that she might bear a son (yam parihastam abibhar Aditiḥ putrakāmyā | Tvashṭā taṁ asyāḥ ā badhnād yathā putraṁ janād iti). In A.V. xi. 1, 1, Aditi is said to have cooked a brahmaudana oblation when desirous of sons (Aditir nāthitā iyam brahmaudanam pachati putrakāmā). See the 1st vol. of this work, p. 26.

aram puru tmanā | Tvashṭā poshāya vi syatu rāye nābhā no asmayuḥ); iii. 4, 9 = vii. 2, 9 (tan nas turīpam adha poshayitnu deva Tvashṭar vi rarāṇaḥ syasva | yato vīraḥ karmaṇyaḥ sudakṣho yuktagrāvā jāyate devakāmaḥ); vii. 34, 20 (ā yan naḥ patnīr gamanti achha Tvashṭā supāṇir dadhātu vīrān); compare Vāj. Sanh. xxi. 20; xxii. 20; xxvii. 20; and A.V. ii. 29, 2. He forms husband and wife for each other, even from the womb, R.V. x. 10, 5 (garbhe nu nau janitā dampatī kar devas Tvashṭā savitā viśvarūpaḥ); A.V. vi. 78, 3 (Tvashṭā jāyām ajanayat Tvashṭā asyai tvām patim). He developes the seminal germ in the womb, and is the shaper of all forms, human and animal, R.V. i. 188, 9 (Tvashṭā rūpāṇi hi prabhuḥ paśūn viśvān samānaje); viii. 91, 8 (Tvashṭā rūpeva takshyā); x. 184, 1 (Vishṇur yonim kalpayatu Tvashṭā rūpāṇi piṁśatu); A.V. ii. 26, 1; v. 26, 8; ix. 4, 6 (Tvashṭā rūpāṇāṁ janitā paśūnām); Vāj. S. xxxi. 17; Taitt. Saṁh. i. 5, 1, 2; i. 6, 4, 4; vi. p. 65*a* (of India Office MS. Tvashṭā vai retasaḥ siktasya rūpāṇi vikaroti | tam eva vṛishaṇam patnīshv apisṛijate so 'smai rūpāṇi vikaroti); Śatapatha Br. i. 9, 2, 10 (Tvashṭā vai siktaṁ reto vikaroti); xiii. 1, 8, 7. Compare ii. 2, 3, 4; iii. 7, 3, 11. He has produced and nourishes a great variety of creatures; all worlds (or beings) are his, and are known to him; he has given to the heaven and earth and to all things their forms, iii. 55, 19 (devas Tvashṭa savitā viśvarūpaḥ puposha prajāḥ purudhā jajāna | imā cha viśvā bhuvanāni asya); iv. 42, 3 (Tvashṭeva viśvā bhuvanāni vidvān); x. 110, 9 (yaḥ imé dyāvāpṛithivī janitrī rūpair apiṁśad bhuvanāni viśvā). The Vāj. S. xxix. 9, says: Tvashṭā vīraṁ devakāmaṁ (comp. R.V. iii. 4, 9, quoted above) jajāna Tvashṭur arvā jāyate āśur áśvaḥ | Tvashṭedaṁ viśvam bhuvanaṁ jajāna' | "Tvashṭṛi has generated a strong man, a lover of the gods.' From Tvashṭṛi is produced a swift horse. Tvashṭṛi has created the whole world." He bestows long life, R.V. x. 18, 6 (iha Tvashṭā sujanimā sajoshāḥ dīrgham āyuḥ karati jīvase vaḥ); A.V. vi. 78, 3 (Tvashṭā sahasram āyūṁshi dīrgham āyur karotu vām). He puts speed into the legs of a horse, Vāj. S. ix. 8 = A.V. vi. 92, 1 (ā te Tvashṭā patsu javaṁ dadhātu). In ii. 23, 17, he is said to be skilled in all Sāma-texts and to have created Brahmaṇaspati above all creatures (viśvebhyo hi tvā bhuvanebhyas pari Tvashṭā 'janat sāmnaḥ sāmnaḥ kaviḥ), and is said, along with heaven and earth, the waters, and the Bhṛigus, to have generated Agni, x. 2,

7; x. 46, 9 (Dyāvā yam Agnim pṛivithī janishṭām āpas Tvashṭā Bhṛigavo yaṁ sahobhiḥ); compare i. 95, 2.[352] He is master of the universe (bhuvanasya sakshaṇi), ii. 31, 4; a first-born protector and leader, ix. 5, 9 (Tvashṭāram agrajāṁ gopām puroyāvānam ā huve); compare i. 13, 10. He is a companion of the Angiṛases, x. 70, 9 (yad Angirasām abhavaḥ sachābhūḥ), and knows the region of the gods (devānām pāthaḥ upa pra vidvān uśan yakshi). He is supplicated to nourish the worshipper and protect his sacrifice. He is draviṇodas, the bestower of blessings, and suratna, possessed of abundant wealth, x. 70, 9, and x. 92, 11; and is asked, like other gods, to take pleasure in the hymns of his worshippers, and to grant them riches, vii. 34, 21 f. (prati naḥ stomaṁ Tvashṭā jusheta | Tvashṭā sudātro vi dadhātu rāyaḥ).

Tvashṭṛi is in several passages connected with the Ṛibhus, who, like him, are celebrated as skilful workmen (see Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v.), who fashioned Indra's chariot and horses, made their own parents young, etc., i. 111, 1 (takshan rathaṁ suvṛitam vidmanā 'pasas takshan harī Indravāhā vṛishaṇvasū | takshan pitṛibhyām Ṛibhavo yuvad vayaḥ), i. 161, 7; iv. 33, 3; iv. 35, 5; iv. 36, 3; and are spoken of by Sāyaṇa (on i. 20, 6) as Tvashṭṛi's pupils (takshaṇa-vyāpāra-kuśalasya Tvashṭuḥ śishyāḥ Ṛibhavaḥ). These Ṛibhus are said to have made into four a single new sacrificial cup which Tvashṭṛi had formed (i. 20, 6. uta tyaṁ chamasaṁ navaṁ Tvashṭur devasya nishkṛitam | akartta chaturaḥ punaḥ | i. 110, 3). This exhibition of skill is said to have been performed by command of the gods, and in consequence of a promise that its accomplishment should be rewarded by their exaltation to divine honours, i. 161, 1–5, (verse 2, yadi eva karishyatha sākaṁ devair yajniyāso bhavishyatha). Tvashṭṛi is in this passage represented as becoming ashamed and hiding himself among the goddesses when he saw this alteration of his work, verse 4 (yadā 'vākhyat chamasān chaturaḥ kṛitān ād it Tvashṭā gnāsu antar ni ānaje), and as resenting this change in his own manufacture as a slight to himself, and as having in consequence sought to slay his rivals, verse 5 (hanāma enān iti Tvashṭā yad abravīt chamasaṁ ye devapānam anindishuḥ). In another place (iv. 33, 5, 6), on the contrary, he is said to have applauded their design, and admired the brilliant results of their skill (vibhrājamānāṁs chamasān ahā iva avenat Tvashṭā chaturo dadṛiśvān).[353]

[352] Who is the being who claims, in x. 125, 1 f. to sustain Tvashṭṛi and other gods (aham somam āhanasam bibharmi ahaṁ Tvashṭāram)?

In x. 66, 10, the Ṛibhus are spoken of as the supporters of the sky (dhartāro divaḥ Ṛibhavaḥ suhastāḥ).

In ii. 1, 5, Agni is identified with Tvashṭṛi, as he is also, however, with many other gods in other verses of the same hymn. In i. 95, 5, Agni appears to be designated by the word Tvashṭṛi. In vi. 47, 19, where Tvashṭṛi is spoken of as yoking his horses and shining resplendently (yunjāno haritā rathe bhūri Tvashṭeha rājati), the commentator supposes that Indra is referred to.[354]

(2) Tvashṭṛi's daughter and her wedding.

In x. 17, 1 f. Tvashṭṛi is said to have given his daughter Saraṇyū in marriage to Vivasvat: "Tvashṭā duhitre vahatuṁ kṛiṇoti" iti idaṁ viśvam bhuvanam sameti | Yamasya mātā paryuhyamānā maho jāyā Vivasvato nanāśa | apāgūhann amṛitām martyebhyaḥ kṛitvī savarṇām adaḍur Vivasvate | utāśvināv abharad yat tad āsīd ajahād u dvā mithunā Saraṇyūḥ | "Tvashṭṛi makes a wedding for his daughter. (Hearing) this the whole world assembles. The mother of Yama, the wedded wife of the great Vivasvat, disappeared. 2. They concealed the immortal (bride) from mortals. Making (another) of like appearance, they gave her to Vivasvat. Saraṇyū bore the two Aśvins, and when she had done so, she deserted the two twins." These two verses are quoted in the Nirukta, xii. 10 f., where the following illustrative story is told: Tatra itihāsam ācakshate | Tvāshṭṛī Saraṇyūr Vivasvataḥ Ādityād yamau mithunau janayānchakāra | sā savarṇām anyām pratinidhāya [353] See the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 30, pp. 210 f. of Professor Haug's translation. The Ṛibhus had by their austere fervour, it is there said, conquered for themselves a right to partake in the soma libations among the gods (Ṛibhavo vai deveshu tapasā somapītham abhyajayan), which, however, they were only allowed to do along with Savitṛi (=Tvashṭṛi ?), to whom Prajāpati had said, These are thy pupils; do thou alone drink with them; tava vai ime antevāsās tvam eva ebhiḥ sampibasva); and with Prajāpati. The gods, however, it is said, loathed these deified mortals on account of their human smell (tebhyo vai devāḥ apa eva abībhatsanta manushya-gandhāt; and accordingly placed two Dhāyyās (particular verses) between themselves and the Ṛibhus.

[354] On the obscure passage, i. 84, 15, where the name of Tvashṭṛi is mentioned, the reader may consult Wilson's translation and note, Professor Roth's explanation in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 49, and Professor Benfey's version in his Orient and Occident, ii. 245 f.

āśvaṁ rupaṁ kṛitvā pradadrāva | sa Vivasvān Ādityaḥ āśvaṁ eva rūpaṁ kṛitvā tām anusṛitya sambabhūva | tato 'śvinau jajñāte savarṇāyām Manuḥ | "Saraṇyū, the daughter of Tvashṭṛi, bore twins to Vivasvat, the son of Aditi. She then substituted for herself another female of similar appearance, and fled in the form of a mare. Vivasvat in like manner assumed the shape of a horse, and followed her. From their intercourse sprang two Aśvins, while Manu was the offspring of Savarṇā (or the female of like appearance)." See Roth's interpretation of R.V. x. 17, 1 ff. and remarks thereon, in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, iv. 424 f.; and the same writer's translation, in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 161, of a passage of the Bṛihaddevatā, quoted by Sāyaṇa on R.V. vii. 72, 2, relating the same story about Vivasvat and Saraṇyū which is given in the Nirukta. That passage is as follows: Abhavad mithunaṁ Tvashṭuḥ Saraṇyūs Triśirāḥ saha | sa vai Saraṇyūm prāyachhat svayam eva Vivasvate | tataḥ Saraṇyvāṁ jāte te Yamayamyau Vivasvataḥ | tāv apy ubhau yamāv eva hy āstām Yamyā cha vai Yamaḥ | Sṛishṭvā bharttuḥ parokshaṁ tu Saraṇyūḥ sadṛiśīṁ striyam | nikshipya mithunau tasyām aśvā bhūtvā prachakrame | avijñānād Vivasvāṁs tu tasyām ajanayad Manum | rājarshir āsīt sa Manur Vivasvān iva tejasā | sa vijñāya apakrāntāṁ Saraṇyūm ātmarūpiṇīm | Tvāshṭrīm prati jagāmāśu vājī bhūtvā salakshaṇaḥ | Saraṇyūs tu Vivasvantaṁ vijñāya hayarūpiṇam | maithunāyopachakrāma tāṁ sa tattrāruroha saḥ | tatas tayos tu vegena śukraṁ tad apatad bhuvi | upājighrat cha sā tv aśvā tat śukraṁ garbha-kāmyayā | āghrāṇa-mātrāt śukraṁ tat kumārau sambabhūvatuḥ | Nāsatyaś chaiva Dasraś cha yau stutāv aśvināv api | "Tvashṭṛi had twin children, (a daughter) Saraṇyū, and (a son) Triśiras. He gave Saraṇyū in marriage to Vivasvat, to whom she bore Yama and Yamī, who also were twins. Creating a female like herself without her husband's knowledge, and making the twins over in charge to her, Saraṇyū took the form of a mare, and departed. Vivasvat, in ignorance, begot, on the female who was left, Manu, a royal rishi, who resembled his father in glory. But discovering that the real Saraṇyū, Tvashṭṛi's daughter, had gone away, Vivasvāt followed her quickly, taking the shape of a horse of the same species as she. Recognizing him in that form she approached him with the desire of sexual connection, which he gratified. In their haste his seed fell on the ground, and she, being desirous of offspring, smelled it. From this act sprang the two Kumāras (youths) Nāsatya and Dasra, who are lauded as Aśvins (sprung from a horse)."

In R.V. viii. 26, 21 f., as we have already seen, p. 144, Vāyu also is spoken of as Tvashṭṛi's son-in-law. Whether Vāyu's wife was different from Saraṇyū, or whether there is a discrepancy between this story and the one just referred to about Vivasvat, does not appear.

Tvashṭṛi is represented as having for his most frequent attendants the wives of the gods, i. 22, 9 (Agne patnīr iha ā vaha devānām uśatīr upa | Tvashṭāraṁ somapītaye); ii. 31, 4; ii. 36, 3; vi. 50, 13; vii. 35, 6; x. 64, 10; x. 66, 3. This, according to Professor Roth, s.v., results from the fact that it is in the wombs of females that his creative action is principally manifested.

In x. 49, 10, he is spoken of as if he were a deity of some importance, though inferior to Indra, since the latter is said to place in the rivers a lucid element, which even Tvashṭṛi, though a god, could not do (ahaṁ tad āsu dhārayaṁ yad āsu na devaś chana Tvashṭā adhārayad rúśat).

(3) Hostility of Indra and Tvashṭṛi.

Indra is occasionally represented as in a state of hostility with Tvashṭṛi and his son.[355] Thus in iii. 48, 4, it is said that Indra overcame him, and carried off his soma-juice, which he drank from the cups (Tvashṭāram Indro janushā 'bhibhūya āmushya somam apibat chamūshu), and in iv. 18, 3, that the same god drank off the soma in his house (Tvashṭur gṛihe apibat somam Indraḥ). In explanation of these allusions, the commentator, who in his note on iii. 48, 4, calls Tvashṭṛi an Asura (Tvashṭṛināmakam asuram), refers to the Taittirīya Sanhitā, ii. 4, 12, 1, where it is related that Tvashṭṛi, whose son had been slain by Indra, began to perform a soma-sacrifice in the absence of the latter, and refused, on the ground of his homicide, to allow him to assist at the ceremony; when Indra interrupted the celebration, and drank off the soma by force (Tvashṭā hataputro vīndraṁ somam āharat | tasminn Indraḥ upahavam aichhata | taṁ na upāhvayata "putram me

[355] In i. 80, 14 (see above, p. 96), it is said that even Tvashṭṛi trembles at Indra's wrath when he thunders. But this trait is merely introduced to indicate the terrific grandeur of Indra's manifestations. In Vāj. Sanh. xx. 44, Tvashṭṛi is said to have imparted vigour to Indra (Tvashṭā dadhat śushmam Indrāya vṛishṇe).

'vadhīr" iti | sa yajna-veśasaṁ kṛitvā prāsahā somam apibat | These words are repeated in ii. 5, 2, 1). Compare Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 6, 3, 6 ff.; v. 5, 4, 7 ff.; xii. 7, 1, 1; xii. 8, 3, 1 ff.

The son of Tvashṭṛi is mentioned in two passages of the Rig-veda. In x. 8, 8, it is said: Sa pitryāṇi āyuḍhāni vidvān indreshitaḥ Āptyo abhy ayudhyat | triśīrshāṇaṁ saptaraśmim jaghanvān Tvāshṭrasya chin niḥ sasṛije Trito gāḥ | 9. Bhūri id Indraḥ udinakshantam ojo avābhinat satpatir manyamānam | Tvāshṭrasya chid Viśvarūpasya gonām ācha-krāṇas trīṇi śīrshā parā vark | "This Trita Āptya, knowing his paternal weapons, and impelled by Indra, fought against the three-headed and seven-rayed (monster), and slaying him, he carried off the cows even of the son of Tvashṭṛi. 9. Indra, the lord of the good, pierced this arrogant being, who boasted of his great force; seizing the cows, he struck off the three heads even of Viśvarūpa the son of Tvashṭṛi (or of the omniform son of Tvashṭṛi)." (Compare ii. 11, 19). A loud-shouting monster with three heads and six eyes, perhaps identical with the son of Tvashṭṛi, is also mentioned in x. 99, 6, as having been overcome by Indra or Trita (sa id dāsaṁ tuviravam patir dan shaḷakshaṁ triśīrshāṇam damanyat | asya Trito nu ojasā vṛidhāno vipā varāham ayoagrayā han).

Viśvarūpa is frequently mentioned in later works.

According to the Taittirīya Sanhitā, ii. 5, 1, 1 ff., he was the priest of the gods, while he was sister's son (no further genealogy is given) of the Asuras.[356] He had three heads, called respectively the soma-

[356] I subjoin a passage from the same Sanhitā, vi. 4, 10, 1 (p. 49 of India Office MS., No. 1702), relating to the gods and Asuras, their original equality in goodness and power, and their respective priests. Bṛihaspatir devānām purohitaḥ āsīt śaṇḍāmarkāv asurāṇām | brahmaṇvanto devāḥ āsan brahmaṇvanto 'surāḥ | te 'nyonyaṁ nāśaknuvann abhibhavitum | te devāḥ śaṇḍāmarkāv upāmantrayanta | tāv abrūtām "varam vṛiṇāvahai grahāv eva nāv atrāpi gṛihyetām" iti | tābhyām etau śukrāmanthināv agrihṇan | tato devāḥ devāḥ abhavan parā 'surāḥ | yasyaivam vidushaḥ śukrāmanthinau gṛihyete bhavaty atmanā parā asya bhrātṛivyo bhavati | tau devāḥ apanudya atmana Indrāyājuhuvuḥ | ityādi | "Bṛihaspati was the priest of the gods, Śaṇḍa and Marka the priests of the Asuras. The gods were devout and so were the Asuras. Neither could overcome the other. The gods invited Śaṇḍa and Marka, who said, 'Let us ask a favour; let draught also be offered to us.' The gods, in consequence, allowed to them the śukra and manthin draughts, and by doing so became gods, and the Asuras were worsted. The man who knows this and acts accordingly prospers himself and his enemy succumbs. The gods sent away Śaṇḍa and Marka and offered up themselves to Indra." Compare the Śat. Br. iv. 2, 1, 4 ff. According to the Kāṭhaka 25, 7, quoted in Indische Studien

drinker, the wine-drinker, and the food-eater. He declared in public that the sacrifices should be shared by the gods only, while he privately recommended that they should be offered to the Asuras. For, as the author of the Brāhmaṇa remarks, it is customary for people in public to promise every one a share, whereas it is only those to whom the promise is privately made who obtain its fulfilment. Indra was alarmed lest his dominion should by this procedure of Viśvarūpa be overturned, and he accordingly smote off his heads with a thunderbolt. The three heads were turned into birds, the one called Soma-drinker became a Kapinjala (or Francoline partridge), the Wine-drinker a Kalavinka (or sparrow), and the Food-eater a Tittiri (or partridge), etc. (Viśvarūpo vai Tvāshṭraḥ purohito devānām āsīt svasrīyo 'surāṇām | tasya trīṇi śīrshāṇy āsan somapānaṁ surāpānam annādanam | sa pratyakshaṁ devebhyo bhāgam avadat paroksham asurebhyaḥ | sarvasmai pratyaksham bhāgaṁ vadanti | yasmai eva parokshaṁ vadanti tasya bhāgaḥ uditaḥ | tasmād Indro 'bibhed īdṛiṅ vai rāshṭram paryāvarttayati iti tasya vajram ādāya śīrshāṇy achhinat | yat somapānam āsīt sa kapinjalo 'bhavat | yat surāpānaṁ sa kalavinkaḥ | yad annādanaṁ sa tittiriḥ). The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa tells the story in some respects at greater length, i. 6, 3, 1 ff.: Tvashṭur ha vai puttras triśīrshāḥ shaḍakshaḥ āsa | tasya trīṇy eva mukhāny āsus tad yad evaṁrūpaḥ āsa tasmād Viśvarūpo nāma | 2. Tasya somapānam eva ekaṁ mukham āsa | surāpāṇam ekam | anyasmai aśanāya ekam | tam Indro didvesha tasya tāni śīrshāṇi prachichheda | 3. Sa yat somapānam āsa tataḥ kapinjalaḥ samabhavat | tasmāt sa babhrukaḥ iva babhrur iva hi somo rājā | 4. Atha yat surāpāṇam āsa tataḥ kalavinkaḥ samabhavat | so 'bhimādyatkaḥ iva vadati | abhimādyann iva hi surām pītvā vadati | 5. Atha yad anyasmai aśanāya āsa tatas tittiriḥ samabhavat | tasmāt sa viśvarūpatamaḥ iva | santy eva ghṛitastokāḥ iva tvad madhustokāḥ iva tvat parṇeshv āśchutitāḥ | evaṁrūpaṁ hi sa tena aśanam āvayat | 6. Sa Tvashṭā chukrodha "kuvin me putram avadhīd" iti so 'pendram eva somam ājahre | sa yathā 'yaṁ somaḥ prasutaḥ evam apendraḥ eva āsa | 7. Indro ha vai īkshānchakre

iii. 467 (compare Aśv. Śrauta Sūtras, i. 4, 9), the gods had four hotṛi priests, Bhūpati, Bhuvanapati, Bhūtānāmpati, and Bhūta, of whom the first three died from discharging their duty, when the fourth became afraid and fled, etc. Professor Weber compares the story about Agni, quoted above, p. 203, from the Taitt. S. On the original equality of the gods and Asuras see the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 51 ff., and note 22, p. 15, above.

"idaṁ vai mā somād antaryanti" iti | sa yathā balīyān abalīyasaḥ evam anupahūtaḥ eva yo dronakalaśe śukraḥ āsa tam bhakshayānchakāra | sa ha enaṁ jihiṁsa | so 'sya viśvaṁñ eva prāṇebhyo dudrāva mukhād ha eva asya atha sarvebhyo 'nyebhyaḥ prāṇebhyaḥ | 8. Sa Tvashṭā chukrodha "kuvid me 'nupahūtaḥ somam abhakshad" iti | sa svayam eva yajnaveśasaṁ chakre | sa yo dronakalaśe śukraḥ pariśishṭaḥ āsa taṁ pravarttayānchakara "Indra-śatrur vardhasva" iti .... | 10. Atha yad abravīd Indra-śatrur vardhasva" iti tasmād u ha enam Indraḥ eva jaghāna | atha yad ha śaśvad avakshad "Indrasya śatrur vardhasva" iti śaśvad u ha sa eva Indram ahanishyat | "Tvashṭṛi had a son with three heads and six eyes, who had three mouths; and hence was called Viśvarūpa (Omniform). 2. One of his mouths was the Soma-drinker, the second the Wine-drinker, and the third was destined for consuming other things. Indra hated this Viśvarūpa, and cut off his three heads. 3. From the Soma-drinker sprang a Kapinjala (Francoline partridge); and hence this bird is brown, because king Soma is of that colour. 4. From the Wine-drinker sprang a Kalavinka (sparrow); and in consequence this bird utters sounds like a drunkard, just as a person does who has drunk wine. 5. From the third mouth sprang a Tittiri (common partridge), which in consequence has the greatest variety of colours, for drops of ghee and of honey seem to be sprinkled in different places on its wings: for by this mouth he (Viśvarūpa) received such sorts of food. 6. Tvashṭṛi was incensed; and saying "He has killed my son," he offered a libation of soma to the gods, excluding Indra. 7. Indra perceived that he was excluded from partaking the soma, and as a stronger acts towards a weaker being, he without invitation drank off the purified soma in the vessel. But it affected him injuriously; it issued from his mouth and then from all the other outlets of his body. 8. Tvashṭṛi was angry that Indra had drunk the soma without invitation; and himself broke off the sacrifice, employing the soma which was left in the vessel (in another rite) using the formula 'Thou of whom Indra is the enemy, flourish!' 10. As he used the words accented so as to produce this sense, Indra slew him. Had he said 'Flourish, enemy of Indra,' he would have slain Indra, instead of Indra slaying him."

The version of the same legend from the Kāṭhaka, 12, 10, in Indische Studien, iii. 464, gives some other particulars; Indra was afraid that Viśvarūpa was going to become everything ("all this": sa Indro 'man- yatâ "ayaṁ vâva idam bhavishyati), and he accordingly prevailed on a carpenter to run and cut off his heads, which the artizan accordingly did with his axe (sa takshāṇaṁ tishṭhantam abravīd "ādhava asya imāni śīrshāṇi chhindhi" | tasya takshā upadrutya paraśunā śīrshāṇy achhinat).

Compare the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 6, 3, 1 ff.; v. 5, 4, 2 ff.; and the Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, 228 ff.

In the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, section 77, Tvashṭṛi is identified with Viśvakarman and Prajāpati. Compare verses 1, 10, 15, 16, 34, 36, 38, and 41. Professor Weber (Omina und Portenta, p. 391 f.) refers to a passage of the Adbhutādhyāya of the Kauśika Sūtras, where Tvashṭṛi is identified with Savitṛi and Prajāpati.

SECTION XV.

THE AS'VINS.

(1) The character and parentage of the Aśvins, their relations to Sūrya, their attributes and accompaniments.

The Aśvins seem to have been a puzzle even to the oldest Indian commentators. Yāska thus refers to them in the Nirukta, xii. 1:

Atha ato dyusthānāḥ devatāḥ | tāsām Aśvinau prathamāgāminau bhavataḥ | Aśvinau yad vyaśnuvāte sarvaṁ rasena anyo jyotishā anyaḥ | "Aśvair aśvināv" ity Aurṇabhāvaḥ | tat kāv Aśvinau | "Dyāvāpṛithivyāv" ity eke | "ahorātrāv" ity eke | "Sūryāchandramasāv" ity eke | "rājānau puṇyakṛitāv" ity aitihāsikāḥ | tayoḥ kālaḥ ūrddham ūrdhvarātrāt prakāśībhāvasya anuvishhṭambham anu | tamobhāgo hi madhyamo jyotirbhāgaḥ ādityaḥ | 5. Tayoḥ kālaḥ sūryodayaparyantaḥ |

"Next in order are the deities whose sphere is the heaven; of these the Aśvins are the first to arrive. They are called Aśvins because they pervade (vyaśnuvāte) everything, the one with moisture, the other with light. Aurṇabhāva says they are called Aśvins, from the horses (aśvaiḥ, on which they ride). Who, then, are these Aśvins? 'Heaven and Earth,'[357] say some; 'Day and Night,' say others; 'The Sun and Moon,' say others; 'Two kings, performers of holy acts,' say the legendary writers. Their time is subsequent to midnight, whilst the manifestation of light is delayed; [and ends with the rising of the sun, ibid. xii. 5]. The dark portion [of this time] denotes the intermediate (god = Indra?), the light portion Āditya (the Sun)."[358]

[357] Compare S. P. Br. iv. 1, 5, 16, Atha yad "Aśvināv" iti imē ha vai dyāvāpṛithivī pratyaksham aśvinau | ime hi idaṁ sarvaṁ āśnuvātām | "The Heaven and Earth are manifestly the As'vins, for they (Heaven and Earth) have pervaded everything."

[358] See the different interpretation given by Professor Goldstücker, at the close of this section. The words are obscure.

Professor Roth, on the strength of this passage, considers that Yāska identifies the two Aśvins with Indra and the Sun (Illustrations of Nirukta, p. 159).[359]

In the Journal of the German Oriental Society, iv. 425, the same author thus speaks of these gods: "The two Aśvins, though, like the ancient interpreters of the Veda, we are by no means agreed as to the conception of their character, hold, nevertheless, a perfectly distinct position in the entire body of the Vedic deities of light. They are the earliest bringers of light in the morning sky, who in their chariot hasten onward before the dawn, and prepare the way for her."[360]

In a passage of the R.V., x. 17, 2 (quoted above in the section on Tvashṭṛi, p. 227), the Aśvins are represented as the twin sons of Vivasvat and Saraṇyū. They are also called the sons of the sky (divo napātā) in R.V. i. 182, 1; i. 184, 1;[361] x. 61, 4; and in i. 46, 2, sindhumātarā, the offspring of the Ocean[362] (whether aerial or terrestrial).

The Taitt. S. vii. 2, 7, 2, says that the Aśvins are the youngest of the gods (aśvinau vai devānām ānujāvarau).

In i. 180, 2, the sister of the Asvins is mentioned, by whom the commentator naturally understands Ushas (svasṛisthānīyā svayaṁsāriṇī vā ushāḥ). In vii. 71, 1, and elsewhere (see above, p. 188, 191), Ushas is called the sister of Night, whilst in i. 123, 5, she is said to be the sister of Bhaga and Varuṇa.

The Aśvins are in many parts of the Rig-veda connected with Sūryā, the youthful daughter of the sun (called also Urjānī in one

[359] R.V. i. 181, 4, is, according to Roth, quoted by Yāska in illustration of his view: "Born here and there these two have striven forward (?) with spotless bodies according to their respective characters. One of you, a conqueror and a sage, [is the son] of the strong one (?); the other is born onward, the son of the sky" (ihehajātā samavāvaśītām arepasā tanvā nāmabhiḥ svaiḥ | jishṇur vām anyaḥ sumakhasya sūrir divo anyaḥ subhagaḥ putraḥ ūhe). Compare Roth's transl. in Illustrations of Nirukta, p. 159.

[360] For some speculations of Professor Müller and Weber, on the Aśvins, see the lectures of the former, 2nd series, p. 489 f., and the Indische Studien of the latter, vol. v. p. 234.

[361] In i. 181, 4, only one of them is said to be the son of the sky. See note 369, above.

[362] On this the commentator remarks that, although it is the Sun and Moon that are sprung from the sea, yet the same epithet applies equally to the Aśvins who, in the opinion of some, are identical with the former (yadyapi sūrya-chandramasāv eva samudrajau tathāpy Aśvinoḥ keshāṁchit mate tadrūpatvāt tathātvam).

place, i. 119, 2, as Sāyaṇa understands it, sūryasya duhitā),[363] who is represented as having, for the sake of acquiring friends, chosen them for her two husbands, i. 119, 5 (ā vām patitvaṁ sakhyāya jagmushī yoṣhā 'vṛiṇita jenyā yuvām patī); iv. 43, 6 (tad ū shu vām ajiraṁ cheti yānaṁ yena patī bhavathaḥ Sūryāyāḥ); vii. 69, 3 (vi vaṁ ratho vadhvā yādamānaḥ antān divo bādhate varttanibhyām); x. 39, 11, na taṁ rājānāv Adite kutaś chana na aṁhaḥ aśnoti duritaṁ ṇakir bhayam | yam Aśvinā suhavā rudravarttanī puroratha kṛiṇuthaḥ patnyā saha | "Neither distress, nor calamity, nor fear from any quarter assails the man whom ye Aśvins, along with [your] wife, cause to lead the van in his car;"[364] and as loving to ascend their chariot, i. 34, 5; i. 116, 17; i. 117, 13 (yuvo rathaṁ duhitā sūryasya saha śriyā Nāsatyā 'vṛiṇīta); i. 118, 5 (ā vāṁ rathaṁ yuvatis tishṭhad atra jushṭvī narā duhitā Sūryasya); iv. 43, 2; v. 73, 5 (ā yad vāṁ Sūryā rathaṁ tishṭhat, etc.); vi. 63, 5 f.; vii. 68, 3; vii. 69, 4; viii. 8, 10; viii. 22, 1; viii. 29, 8.[365]

R.V. i. 116, 17, is as follows: ā vāṁ rathaṁ duhitā sūryasya kārshmevātishṭhad arvatā jayantī | viśve devāḥ anv amanyanta hṛidbhiḥ "saṁ śriyā Nāsatyā sachethe" | "The daughter of the sun stood upon your chariot, attaining first the goal, as if with a race-horse. All the gods regarded this with approbation in their hearts (exclaiming) 'Ye, o Nāsatyas, associate yourselves with good fortune.'" On this passage Sāyaṇa remarks as follows: Savitā sva-duhitaraṁ Sūryākhyām Somāya rājne pradātum aichhat | tāṁ Sūryāṁ sarve devāḥ varayāmāsuḥ | te anyonyam ūchur "Ādityam avadhiṁ kṛitvā ājiṁ dhāvāma yo asmākam ujjeshyati tasya iyam bhavishyati" iti | tatra Aśvināv udajayatām | sā cha Sūryā jitavatas tayoḥ ratham āruroha | "atra Prajāpatir vai somāya rājne duhitaram prāyachhad" ityādikam brāhmaṇam anusandheyam | "Savitṛi had destined his daughter Sūryā to be the wife of king Soma. But all the gods were anxious to obtain her hand, and resolved that the victor in a race which they agreed to run, with the sun for their goal, should get her. She was accordingly won by the Aśvins, and ascended their chariot." Sāyaṇa goes on to quote the commencement of the story, as told in the Brāhmaṇa. The words agree with those which introduce a reference to Sūryā's marriage to Soma in Ait. Br. iv. 7, but the story there told (of which an abstract will be found in a note further on) does not coincide with that of which the commentator gives a summary.

[363] Professor Roth, s.v., takes the word for a personification of ūrjā, "nourishment."

[364] The construction of the words patnyā saha, "with wife," is not however very clear, as they may perhaps refer to the wife of the worshipper.

[365] See also A.V. vi. 82, 2.

Allusion is also made to Sūryā in connection with the Aśvins in x. 85, 9, where, however, they no longer appear as her husbands,—a fact which seems to involve a contradiction between the passages cited above, and this: 9. Somo vadhūyur abhavat Aśvinā 'stām ubhā varā | Sūryāṁ yat patye śaṁsantīm manasā Savitā 'dadāt | 14. Yad Aśvinā pṛichhamānāv ayātaṁ trichakreṇa vahatuṁ Sūryāyāḥ | viśve devāḥ anu tad vām ajānan putraḥ pitarāv avṛiṇīta Pūshā | "Soma was the wooer, the Aśvins were the two friends of the bridegroom,[366] when Savitṛi gave to her husband Sūryā, consenting in her mind. 14. When ye came, Aśvins, to the marriage procession of Sūryā, to make enquiries, all the gods approved, and Pushan,[367] as a son, chose you for his parents."

The daughter of the Sun is connected with the Soma plant in ix. 1, 6 (punāti te parisrutaṁ somaṁ sūryasya duhitā | "The Daughter of the Sun purifies thy distilled soma," etc; and in ix. 113, 3, she is said to have brought it after it had been expanded by the rain (parjanyavṛiddham mahishaṁ taṁ sūryasya duhitā "bharat).

If we look on Soma as the plant of that name, the connection between him and Sūryā is not very clear; but if Soma be taken for the moon, as he evidently appears to be in x. 85, 3 ("When they crush the plant, he who drinks fancies that he has drunk Soma; but no one tastes of him whom the priests know to be Soma;")[368] it is not unnatural, from the relation of the two luminaries, that he should have been regarded as son-in-law of the sun.

The Aśvins are described as coming from afar, from the sky or from the lower air, and are besought to allow no other worshippers to stop

[366] Compare A.V. xi. 8, 1, "When Manyu brought his bride from the house of Sankalpa, who were the bridegroom's friends?" etc. (yad Manyur jāyām āvahat Sankalpasya gṛihād adhi | ke āsan janyāḥ ke varāḥ kaḥ u jyeshṭhavaro 'bhavat).

[367] Weber asks (Ind. S. v. 183, 187,) whether Pūshan here is not meant to designate Soma, the bridegroom. In vi. 58, 4, the gods are said to have given Pūshan to Sūryā. See above p. 179.

[368] See at the close of the next section on Soma, and Weber's Ind. Stud. v. 179.

them, i. 22, 2 (divispṛiśā); i. 44, 5 (ā no yātaṁ divo achha pṛithivyāḥ mā vām anye ni yaman devayantaḥ); viii. 5, 30 (tena no vājinīvasū parāvataś chid āgatam); viii. 8, 3, 4, 7 (4. Ā no yātaṁ divas pari antarikshāt); viii. 9, 2; viii. 10, 1; viii. 26, 17; or as being in, or arriving from, different unknown quarters, whether above or below, far or near, and among different races of men, i. 184, 1; v. 73, 1 (yad adya sthaḥ parāvati yad arvāvati); v. 74, 10 (aśvinā yad ha karhi chit śuśruyātam imaṁ havam); vii. 70, 3; vii. 72, 5 (ā paśchātād nāsatyā ā purastād ā aśvinā yātam adharād udaktāt | ā viśvataḥ); viii. 10, 5 (yad adya aśvināv apāg yat prāk stho vājinīvasū | yad Druhyavi Anavi Turvaśe Yadau huve vām atha mā āgatam); viii. 62, 5. Sometimes the worshipper enquires after their locality, v. 74, 2, 3; vi. 63, 1; viii. 62, 4 (kuha sthaḥ kuha jagmathuḥ kuha śyeneva petathuḥ). In one place (viii. 8, 23,) they are said to have three stations (trīṇi padāni Aśvinor āviḥ santi guhā paraḥ). The time of their appearance is properly the early dawn, when they yoke their horses to their car and descend to earth to receive the adorations and offerings of their votaries, i. 22, 1 (prātaryujā vi bodhayāśvinau); i. 184, 1; iv. 45, 2; vii. 67, 2; vii. 69, 5; vii. 71, 1–3; vii. 72, 4; vii. 73, 1; viii. 5, 1, 2; viii. 9, 17; x. 39, 12; x. 40, 1, 3; x. 41, 1, 2; x. 61, 4). I cite a few of these texts: vii. 67, 2. Aśochi Agniḥ samidhāno asme upo adṛiśran tamasaś chid antāḥ | acheti ketur ushashaḥ purastāt śriye divo duhitur jāyamānaḥ | 3. Abhi vāṁ nūnam aśvinā suhotā stomaiḥ sishakti nāsatyā vivakvān | "Agni, being kindled, has shone upon us; even the remotest ends of the darkness have been seen; the light in front of Ushas, the daughter of the sky, has been perceived, springing up for the illumination (of all things). 3. Now, Aśvins, the priest invokes you with his hymns," etc.

viii. 5, 1. Dūrād iheva yat satī aruṇapsur aśiśvitat | vi bhānuṁ viśvadhā 'tanat | 2. Ṇṛivad dasrā manoyujā rathena pṛithupājasā | sachethe Aśvinā Ushasam | "When the rosy-hued Dawn, though far away, gleams as if she were near at hand, she spreads the light in all directions. 2. Ye, wonder-working Aśvins, like men, follow after Ushas in your car which is yoked by your will, and shines afar."

viii. 9, 17. Pra bodhaya Ushaḥ Aśvinā | "Wake, o great and divine Ushas, the Aśvins," etc.

x. 39, 12. Ā tena yātaṁ manaso javīyasā rathaṁ yaṁ vām Ribhavaś

chakrur Aśvinā | yasya yoge duhitā jāyate Divaḥ ubhe ahanī sudine vivasvataḥ | "Come, Asvins, with that car swifter than thought which the Ṛibhus fashioned for you, at the yoking of which the daughter of the sky (Ushas) is born, and day and night become propitious to the worshipper."

x. 61, 4. Kṛishṇā yad goshu aruṇīshu sīdad Divo napātāv Aśvinā huve vām | "When the dark [night] stands among the tawny cows (rays of dawn), I invoke you, Aśvins, sons of the Sky."

In i. 34, 10, Savitṛi is said to set their shining car in motion before the dawn (yuvor hi pūrvaṁ Savitā ushaso ratham ṛitāya chitraṁ ghṛitavantam ishyati).

In other passages their time is not so well defined. Thus, in i. 157, 1, it is said: abodhi Agnir jmaḥ udeti sūryo vi Ushāś chandrā mahī āvo archishā | ayukshātām aśvinā yātave ratham prāsāvīd devaḥ Savitā jagat pṛithak | "Agni has awoke; the sun rises from the earth; the great and bright Ushas has dawned with her light; the Aśvins have yoked their car to go; the divine Savitṛi has enlivened every part of the world," where both the break of dawn and the appearance of the Aśvins appear to be made simultaneous with the rising of the sun. The same is the case in vii. 72, 4: vi cha id uchhanti aśvinā ushasaḥ pra vām brahmāṇi kāravo bharante | ūrdhvam bhānuṁ Savitā devo aśred bṛihad agnayaḥ samidhā jarante | "The Dawns break, Aśvins; poets offer to you prayers; the divine Savitṛi has assumed his lofty brilliance; fires crackle mightily, (fed by) fuel."

In v. 76, 3, the Aśvins are invited to come at different times, at morning, mid-day, and sunset (uta ā yātam sangave prātar ahno madhyandine uditā sūryasya); and in viii. 22, 14, it is similarly said that they are invoked in the evening as well as at dawn. It need not, however, surprise us that they should be invited to attend the different ceremonies of the worshippers, and therefore conceived to appear at hours distinct from the supposed natural periods of their manifestation.

It may seem unaccountable that two deities of a character so little defined, and so difficult to identify, as the Aśvins, should have been the object of so enthusiastic a worship as appears from the numerous hymns dedicated to them in the R.V. to have been paid to them in ancient times. The reason may have been that they were hailed as the precursors of returning day, after the darkness and dangers of the night. In some passages (viii. 35, 16 ff.) they are represented as being, like Agni, the chasers away of evil spirits (hataṁ rakshāṁsi); vii. 73, 4 (rakshohaṇā).

The Aśvins are said to be young, yuvānā (vii. 67, 10), ancient, pratnā (vi. 62, 5), beautiful, valgū (vi. 62, 5; vi. 63, 1), honey-hued, madhuvarṇā (viii. 26, 6), lords of lustre, śubhas patī (viii. 22, 14; x. 93, 6), bright, śubhrā (vii. 68, 1), of a golden brilliancy, hiraṇya-peśasā (viii. 8, 2), agile, nṛitū (vi. 63, 5), fleet as thought, manojavasā (viii. 22, 16) swift as young falcons, śyenasya chij javasā nūtanena ā gachhatam (v. 78, 4), possessing many forms, purū varpāṁsi Aśvinā dadhānā (i. 117, 9), wearing lotus garlands, pushkarasrajā (x. 184, 2, and A.V. iii. 22, 4, Śatap. Br. iv. 1, 5, 16), strong, śakrā (x. 24, 4), mighty, puruśakatamā (vi. 62, 5), terrible, rudrā (v. 75, 3; x. 93, 7), possessed of wondrous powers, māyinā or māyāvinā (vi. 63, 5; x. 24, 4), and profound in wisdom, gambhīrachetasā (viii. 8, 2). They rush onward excitedly, madachyutā[369] (viii. 22, 16; viii. 35, 19), and traverse a golden, hiraṇyavartanī, or terrible, rudravartanī, path (v. 75, 3; viii. 5, 11; viii. 8, 1; viii. 22, 1, 14; x. 39, 11).[370]

The car, golden, or sunlike, in all its various parts and appurtenances, wheels, fellies, axle, pole, reins, etc., i. 180, 1 (hiraṇyayāḥ vām pavayaḥ); iv. 44, 4, 5 (hiraṇyayena rathena); v. 77, 3 (hiraṇyatvaṅ rathaḥ); viii. 5, 28, 29, 35 (rathaṁ hiraṇyavandhuraṁ hiraṇyābhīśum Aśvinā | ā hi sthātho divispṛiśam | 29. hiraṇyayī vāṁ rabhir īshā aksho hiraṇyayaḥ | ubhā chakrā hiraṇyayā); viii. 8, 2 (rathena sūryatvachā); viii. 22, 9, on which they ride, flying as on bird's wings, i. 183, 1 (yenopayāthaḥ sukṛito duroṇaṁ tridhātunā patatho vir na parṇaiḥ), was formed by the Ribhus, x. 39, 12 (see above, p. 238), and is singular in its formation, being three-wheeled (trichakra), and triple in some

[369] Professor Roth, s.v., renders this epithet by "moving in excitement," etc., and Professor Müller, Trans. of R.V. i. p. 118, translates it, when applied to Indra, his horses, or the Aśvins, by "furiously or wildly moving about."

[370] Two epithets very commonly applied to them are dasrā and nāsatyā. The former term is explained by Sāyaṇa to signify destroyers of enemies, or of diseases (note on i. 3, 3), or beautiful (on viii. 75, 1). Professor Roth, s.v., understands it to signify wonder-workers. The second word, nāsatyā, is regarded by Sāyaṇa, following one of the etymologies given by Yāska (vi. 13), as equivalent to satyā, truthful. If this is the sense, satyā itself might as well have been used. In the later literature Dasra and Nāsatya were regarded as the separate names of the two Aśvins. See Müller's Lectures, 2nd series, p. 491.

other parts of its construction, its fellies, supports, etc. (trivṛit | trivandhura | trayaḥ pavayaḥ | trayaḥ skambhāsaḥ skabhitāsaḥ ārabhe),[371] i. 34, 2, 9; i. 47, 2; i. 118, 1, 2; i. 157, 3; vii. 71. 4; viii. 74, 8; x. 41, 1.

This car moves lightly (raghuvarttani), viii. 9, 8, and is swifter than thought (manaso javīyān rathaḥ), i. 117, 2; i. 118, 1; v. 77, 3; vi. 63, 7; x. 39, 12, or than the twinkling of an eye (nimishaś chij javīyasā rathena), viii. 62, 2. It is decked with a thousand ornaments and banners (sahasra-ketu, sahasra-nirṇij), i. 119, 1; viii. 8, 11, 14, and has golden reins, viii. 22, 5. It is sometimes said to be drawn by a single ass, as the word rāsabha[372] is, in one place at least, i. 34, 9, expressly explained by the commentator (aśvasthānīyasya gardabhasya),[373] i. 34, 9; i. 116, 2; viii. 74, 7; but more frequently by birds, or bird-like, fleet-winged, golden-winged, falcon-like, swan-like horses, i. 46, 3 (yad vāṁ ratho vibhish patat); i. 117, 2 (rathaḥ svaśvaḥ); i. 118, 4 (ā vāṁ śyenāso aśvinā vahantu rathe yuktāso āśavaḥ patangāḥ); i. 180, 1 (suyamāsaḥ aśvāḥ); i. 181, 2 (ā vām aśvāsaḥ śuchayaḥ . . . . vahantu); iv. 45, 4 (haṁsāso ye vām madhumanto asridho hiranyaparṇāḥ); v. 74, 9; v. 75, 5 (vibhiś Chyavānam Aśvinā ni yāthaḥ); vi. 63, 6, 7 (ā vāṁ vayaḥ

[371] The word vandhura is variously explained by Sāyaṇa as nīḍabandhanādhārabhūtam (on i. 34, 9), unnatānatarūpa-bandhana-kāshṭham (on i. 47, 2), veshṭitam sāratheḥ sthānam (on i. 118, 1), sārathyāśraya-sthānam (on i. 157, 3), sārathyadhishṭhāna-sthānam (on vii. 71, 4), and trivandhura as triphalakāsanghaṭitena (on viii. 74, 8). The epithet would thus mean either (1) having three perpendicular pieces of wood, or (2) having a triple standing place or seat for the charioteer. In i. 34, 2, the chariot is said to have three props fixed in it to lay hold of (trayaḥ skambhāsaḥ skabhitāsaḥ ārabhe), which the commentator says were meant to secure the rider against the fear of falling when the chariot was moving rapidly. This explanation would coincide with one of the senses assigned to vandhura. In i. 181, 3, their chariot is called śṛipra-vandhuraḥ, which, according to the commentator, is = vistīrṇa-purobhāgaḥ, "having a wide fore-part."

[372] See the legend in the Aitareya Brahmana, p. 270–273 of Dr. Haug's translation. It is there related, iv. 7–9, that at the marriage of Soma and Sūryā, the gods ran a race to determine to which of them the āśvina śastra should belong. The Aśvins gained it, though some other deities gained a share. Agni ran the race in a car, drawn by mules (aśvatarī-rathena Agnir ājim adhāvat), Ushas in one drawn by ruddy bulls (gobhir aruṇair Ushāḥ ājim adhāvat), Indra in one drawn by horses (aśvarathena Indraḥ ājim adhāvat), while the Aśvins carried off the prize in a car drawn by asses (gardabha-rathena Aśvinā udajayatām). Compare R.V. i. 116, 2, where the ass is said to have won.

[373] Prof. Benfey in a note on i. 116, 2, while agreeing in this sense, refers also to iii. 53, 5, where as well as in viii. 74, 3, Sāyaṇa explains the word as meaning a neighing or snorting horse.

aśvāso vahishṭhāḥ abhi prayo nāsatyā vahantu); vii. 69, 7; viii. 5, 7, 22, 33, 35 (tūyaṁ śyenebhir āśubhiḥ | yātam aśvebhir Aśvinā | yad vām ratho vibhish patāt | ā iha vām prushitapsavo vayo vahantu parṇinaḥ | dravatpāṇibhir aśvaiḥ); x. 143, 5. They carry a honied whip (kaśā madhumatī), i. 122, 3; i. 157, 4,[374] and their car traverses the regions (pra vāṁ ratho manojavāḥ iyartti tiro rajāṁsi), vii. 68, 3.

The Aśvins are fancifully represented in i. 34, 1 ff. as doing, or as being requested to do, a variety of acts thrice over, viz. to move thrice by night and thrice by day, (verse 2) to bestow nourishment thrice at even and at dawn, (verse 3) to bestow wealth thrice, (verse 5) to aid the devotions of the worshippers thrice, (ibid.) to bestow celestial medicaments thrice, and earthly thrice (verse 6), etc.

They are elsewhere (ii. 39, 1 ff.) compared to different twin objects; to two vultures on a tree, to two priests reciting hymns (verse 1), to two goats, to two beautiful women (mene iva tanvā śumbhamāne), to husband and wife (verse 2), to two ducks, chakravākā (verse 3), to two ships which transport men, to two protecting dogs (verse 4), to two eyes, two hands, two feet (verse 5), to two sweetly-speaking lips, two breasts yielding nourishment, two nostrils, two ears (verse 6), to two swans, two falcons, two deer, two buffaloes, two wings of one bird (sākaṁyujā śakunasyeva pakshā), etc., etc., v. 78, 1–3; viii. 35, 7–9; x. 106, 2 ff.

They are the guardians of the slow and the hindmost, and of the female who is growing old unmarried; they are physicians[375] and restore the blind, the lame, the emaciated, and the sick, to sight, power of locomotion, health, and strength, i. 34, 6; i, 116, 16; i. 157, 6; viii. 9, 6, 15; viii. 18, 8; viii. 22, 10; viii. 75, 1; x. 39, 3, 5 (amājuraś chid bhavatho yuvam bhago anāśoś chid avitārā apamasya chit | andhasya chit nāsatyā kṛiśasya chid yuvām id āhur bhishajā rutasya chit); x. 40, 8. See also A.V. vii. 53, 1, where it is said that the Aśvins are the physicians of the gods, and warded off death from the wor-

[374] See below the section on the "progress of the Vedic religion, etc." Indra has a golden whip, viii. 33, 11.

[375] In Taitt. Br. iii. 1, 2, 11, the As'vins are called the physicians of the gods, the bearers of oblations, the messengers of the universe, the guardians of immortality (yau devānām bhishajau havyavāhau viśvasya dūtāv amṛitasya gopau); and in that and the preceding paragraph (10) they are connected with their own asterism (nakshatra), the As'vayuj.

shipper (pratyauhatām aśvinā mṛityum asmad devānām Agne bhishajā śachībhiḥ).

They place the productive germ in all creatures, and generate fire, water and trees, i. 157, 5 (yuvaṁ ha garbhaṁ jagatīshu dhattho yuvaṁ viśveshv bhuvaneshu antaḥ | yuvam Agniṁ cha vrishaṇāv apaś cha vanaspatīn aśvināv airayethām). They are connected with marriage, procreation, and love, x. 184, 2 (= A.V. v. 25, 3: garbhaṁ te aśvinau devāv ā dhattām pushkarasrajā); x. 85, 26 (aśvinā tvā pravahatāṁ rathena | gṛihān gachha gṛihapatnī yathā 'saḥ); A.V. ii. 30, 2 (saṁ chen nayātho aśvinā kāminā saṁ cha vakshathaḥ | "When, ye, Aśvins, bring together two lovers," etc.); vi. 102, 1; xiv. 1, 35 f.; xiv. 2, 5. See Weber's Indische Studien v. 218, 227, 234.

(2) Legends regarding various persons delivered or favoured by the Aśvins.

The following are a few of the modes in which the divine power of the Aśvins is declared in different hymns to have been manifested for the deliverance of their votaries.

When the sage Chyavāna had grown old, and had been forsaken, they divested him of his decrepit body, prolonged his life, and restored him to youth, making him acceptable to his wife, and the husband of maidens, i. 116, 10 (jujurusho nāsatyā uta vavrim prāmunchataṁ drāpim iva Chyavānāt | prātiratāṁ jahitasyāyur dasrā ād it patim akṛiṇutaṁ kanīnām); i. 117, 13 (yuvaṁ Chyavānam Aśvinā jarantam punar yuvānaṁ chakrathuḥ śachībhiḥ); i. 118, 6; v. 74, 5 (pra Chyavānāj jujurusho vavrim atkaṁ na munchathaḥ | yuvā yadi kṛithaḥ punar ā kāmam ṛiṇve vadhvaḥ); vii. 68, 6; vii. 71, 5; x. 39, 4.

This legend is related at length in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa in a passage which will be cited further on.

In the same way they renewed the youth of Kali[376] after he had grown old, x. 39, 8 (yuvaṁ viprasya jaraṇām upeyushaḥ punaḥ Kaler akṛiṇutaṁ yuvad vayaḥ); compare i. 112, 15, where they are said to have befriended him after he had married a wife (Kaliṁ yābhir vittajāniṁ duvasyathaḥ).

[376] The family of the Kalis is mentioned, viii. 55, 15.

They brought on a car to the youthful Vimada[377] a bride named Kamadyū, who seems to have been the beautiful wife of Purumitra, i. 112, 19 (yābhiḥ patnīr Vimadāya nyūhathuḥ | here wives are mentioned in the plural); i. 116, 1 (yā arbhagāya Vimadāya jāyāṁ senājuvā nyūhatuḥ); x. 65, 12 (Kamadyuvam Vimadāya ūhathuḥ); i. 117, 20 (yuvaṁ śachībhir Vimādāya jāyāṁ ni ūhathuḥ Purumitrasya yoshām); x. 39, 7 (yuvaṁ rathena Vimadāya śundhyuvaṁ ni ūhathuḥ Purumitrasa yoshaṇām). Sāyaṇa, on i. 117, 20, makes yoshām = kumārīm, by which he appears to intend the daughter of Purumitra, who he says was a king. But yoshā seems more frequently to denote a wife.

They restored Vishṇāpū, like a lost animal, to the sight of Viśvaka, son of Kṛishṇa, their worshipper, who, according to the commentator, was his father, i. 116, 23 (avasyate stuvate kṛishṇiyāya ṛijūyate nāsatyā śachībhiḥ | paśuṁ na nashṭam iva darśanāya Vishṇāpvaṁ dadathur Viśvakāya); i. 117, 7; x. 65, 12.

The names both of Viśvaka and Vishṇāpū occur in R.V. viii. 75, 1–3, a hymn addressed to the Aśvins; and the commentator (as one explanation of the passage) connects the reference there made to the former with the legend before us (on which, however, the hymn itself throws no light).

Another act recorded of the Aśvins is their intervention in favour of Bhujyu, the son of Tugra, which is obscurely described in the following verses in R.V. i. 116, 3 ff. (Tugro ha Bhujyum Aśvinā udameghe rayiṁ na kaśchit mamṛivān avāhāḥ | tam ūhathur naubhir ātmanvatībhir antarikshaprudbhir apodakābhiḥ | 4. Tisraḥ kshapas trir ahā ativrajadbhir nāsatyā Bhujyum ūhathuḥ patangaiḥ | samudrasya dhanvann ārdrasya pāre tribhiḥ rathaiḥ śatapadbhiḥ shaḷaśvaiḥ | 5. Anārambhaṇe tad avīrayethām anāsthāne agrabhaṇe samudre | yad aśvinā ūhuthur Bhujyum astam śatāritrāṁ nāvam ātasthivāṁsam | "Tugra abandoned Bhujyu in the water-cloud, as any dead man leaves his property. Ye, Aśvins, bore him in animated water-tight ships, which traversed the air. 4. Three nights and three days did ye convey him in three flying cars, with a hundred feet and six horses, which crossed over to the dry land beyond the liquid ocean. 5. Ye put forth your vigour in the ocean, which offers no stay, or standing-place, or support, when ye bore Bhujyu to his home, standing on a ship propelled by a hundred oars." R.V. i. 117, 14 f. (yuvam Bhujyum arṇaso niḥ samudrād vibhir ūhathur ṛijrebhir aśvaiḥ | 15. Ajohavīd aśvinā Taugryo vām proḷhaḥ samudram avyathir jaganvān | nish ṭam ūhathuḥ suyujā rathena manojavasā vṛishaṇā svasti | "Ye conveyed Bhujyu out of the liquid ocean with your headlong flying horses. 15. The son of Tugra invoked you, Aśvins. Borne forward, he moved without distress over the sea. Ye brought him out with your well-yoked chariot swift as thought." Again in i. 182, 5 ff. it is said: yuvam etaṁ chakrathuḥ sindhushu plavam ātmanvantam pakshiṇaṁ Taugryāya kam | 6. Avaviddhaṁ Taugryam apsu antar anārambhaṇe tamasi praviddham | chatasro nāvo jaṭhalasya jushṭāḥ ud aśvibhgām ishitāḥ pārayanti | 7. Kaḥ svid vṛiksho nishṭhito madhye arṇaso yaṁ Taugryo nādhitaḥ paryashvajat | parṇā mṛigasya pataror ivārabhe ud aśvinā ūhathuḥ śromatāya kam | "Ye (Aśvins) made this animated, winged, boat for the son of Tugra among the waters .... 6. Four ships,[378] eagerly desired, impelled by the Aśvins, convey to the shore Tugrâ, who had been plunged in the waters, and sunk in bottomless darkness. 7. What was that log, placed in the midst of the waves, which, in his straits, the son of Tugra embraced, as the wings of a flying creature, for support?" In vii. 68, 7, Bhujyu is said to have been abandoned by his his malevolent companions in the middle of the sea (uta tyam Bhujyum Aśvinā sakhāyo madhye jahur durevāsaḥ samudre). The story is also alluded to in i. 112, 6, 20; i. 118, 6; i. 119, 4; i. 158, 3; vi. 62, 6; vii. 69, 7; viii. 5, 22; x. 39, 4; x. 40, 7; x. 65, 12; x. 143, 5.

[377] A rishi of this name is mentioned, R.V. viii. 9, 15; x. 20, 10; x. 23, 7; and a family of Vimadas in x. 23, 6.

Again, when Viśpalā's leg had been cut off in battle, like the wing of a bird, the Aśvins are said to have given her an iron one instead, R.V. i. 112, 10; i. 116, 15 (charitraṁ hi ver ivāchhedi parṇam ājā Khelasya paritakmyāyām | sadyo janghām āyasīṁ Viśpalāyai dhane hite sartave praty adhattam); i. 117, 11; i. 118, 8; x. 39, 8.[379]

They restored sight to Rijrāśva, who had been made blind by his cruel father, for slaughtering one hundred and one sheep, and giving them to a she-wolf to eat, the she-wolf having supplicated the Aśvins on behalf of her blind benefactor, i. 116, 16; i. 117, 17 f. (śatam meshān vṛikye māmahānaṁ tamaḥ praṇītam aśivend pitrā | ā akshī

[378] The sense of jaṭhala is not clear.

[379] Compare the word viśpalāvasū in R.V. i. 182, 1, ṛijrāśve aśvināv adhattaṁ jyotir andhāya chakrathur vichakshe | 18. Sunam andhāya bharam ahvayat sā vṛikīr aśvinā "vṛishaṇā narā" iti | jāraḥ kanīnaḥ iva chakshadānaḥ Ṛijrāśvaḥ śatam ekaṁ cha meshān). A person called Rijrāśva is mentioned with others in i. 100, 17, as praising Indra.

They restored Parāvṛij (or an outcast), who was blind and lame, to sight and the power of walking, i. 112, 8 (yābhiḥ śachībhir vṛishaṇā Parāvṛijam pra andhaṁ śroṇaṁ chakshase etave kṛithaḥ). Parāvṛij is connected with Indra in ii. 13, 12, and ii. 15, 7.

The rishi Rebha has been hidden by the malignant, bound, overwhelmed in the waters (a well, according to the commentator,) for ten nights and nine days, and abandoned till he was nearly, if not entirely, dead. The Aśvins drew him up as soma-juice is raised with a ladle, i. 112, 5 (yābhiḥ Rebhaṁ nivṛitaṁ śitam adbhyaḥ ud Vandanam airayataṁ svar dṛiśe); i. 116, 24 (daśa rātrīr aśivena nava dyūn avanaddhaṁ śnathitam apsu antaḥ | viprutaṁ Rebham udani pravṛiktam un ninyathuḥ somam iva sruveṇa | Compare i. 117, 12); i. 117, 4 (aśvaṁ na gūḷham Aśvinā durevair ṛishiṁ narā vṛishaṇā Rebham apsu | taṁ saṁ rinīthe viprutaṁ daṁsobhiḥ); i. 118, 6; i. 119, 6; x. 39, 9 (yuvaṁ ha Rebhaṁ ṛishaṇā guhā hitam ud airayatam mamṛivāṁsam Aśvinā).

Vandana also was delivered by them from some calamity, the nature of which does not very clearly appear from most of the texts, and restored to the light of the sun, i. 112, 5; i. 116, 11; i. 117, 5; i. 118, 6. In x. 39, 8, they are said to have raised him out of a pit[380] (yuvaṁ Vandanam ṛiśyadād ud ūpathuḥ). According to i. 119, 6, 7, however, he would appear to have been restored from decrepitude, as a chariot is repaired by an artizan (pra dīrghena Vandanas tāri āyushā | 7. Yuvaṁ Vandanaṁ nirṛitaṁ jaraṇyayā rathaṁ na dasrā karaṇā saminvathaḥ).

So, too, the Aśvins bestowed wisdom on their worshipper Kakshīvat, of the family of Pajra; and performed the notable miracle of causing a hundred jars of wine and honied liquor to flow forth from the hoof of their horse as from a sieve, i. 116, 7 (Yuvaṁ narā stuvate Pajriyāya kakshīvate aradatam purandhim | kārotarāt śaphād aśvasya vṛishṇaḥ śataṁ kumbhān asinchataṁ surāyāḥ); i. 117, 6 (tad vāṁ narā śāṁsyam Pajriyena kakshīvatā nāsatyā parijman | śaphād aśvasya vājino janāya śataṁ kumbhān asinchatam madhūnām).

[380] The word ṛiśyada is explained by Messrs Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v., as a pit for snaring deer.

When invoked by the popular sage Atri Saptavadhri, who, with his companions, had been plunged by the malice and arts of evil spirits into a gloomy and burning abyss,[381] they speedily came to his assistance, mitigated the heat with cold, and supplied him with nutriment so that his situation became tolerable, if not agreeable, till they eventually extricated him from his perilous position, i. 112, 7; i. 116, 8 (himenāgniṁ ghraṁsam avārayethām pitumatīm ūrjam asmai adattam | ṛibīse Atrim aśvinā 'vanītam unninyathuḥ sarvaganaṁ svastī); i. 117, 3 (ṛishiṁ narāv aṁhasaḥ pānchajanyam ṛibīsad atrim munchatho ganena | minantā dasyor aśivasya māyāḥ); i. 118, 7; i. 119, 6; v. 78, 4–6 (Atrir yad vām avarohann ṛibīsam ajohavīd nādhamānevā yoshā | śyenasya chij javasā nūtanena āgachhatam aśvinā śantamena); vii. 71, 5; viii. 62, 3, 7–9; x. 39, 9 (yuvam ṛibīsam uta taptam Atraye omanvantaṁ chakrathuḥ Saptavadhraye). In x. 80, 3, the deliverance of Atri is ascribed to Agni (Agnir Atriṁ gharme urushyad antaḥ).

They listened to the invocation of the wise Vadhrimatī, and gave her a son called Hiranyahasta, i. 116, 13; i. 117, 24 (Hiranyahastam Aśvinā rarāṇā putraṁ narā Vadhrimatyai adattam); vi. 62, 7; x. 39, 7.

They gave a husband to Ghoshā when she was growing old in her father's house, i. 117, 7 (Ghoshāyai chit pitṛishade duroṇe patiṁ juryantyai aśvināv adattam); x. 39, 3, 6; x. 40, 5; and, according to the commentator on i. 117, 7, cured her of the leprosy with which she had been afflicted.

They caused the cow of Sayu, which had left off bearing, to yield milk, i. 116, 22; i. 117, 20 (adhenuṁ dasrā staryaṁ vishaktām apinvataṁ śayave Aśvinā gam); i. 118, 8; i. 119, 6; x. 39, 13.

They gave to Pedu a strong, swift, white horse, animated by Indra, and of incomparable Indra-like prowess, which overcame all his enemies, and conquered for him unbounded spoils, i. 116, 6; i. 117, 9 (purū varpāṁsi Aśvinā dadhānā ni Pedave ūhathur āśum aśvam | sahasrasāṁ vājinam apratītam ahihanaṁ śravasyaṁ tarutram); i. 118, [381] See Professor Roth's explanation of the words ṛibīsa and gharma, s.vv., and his illustrations of Nirukta, vi. 36.

9 (yuvañ śvetam Pedave Indrajūtam ahihanam Aśvinā 'dattam aśvam); i. 119, 10 (Indram iva charshaṇīsaham); vii. 71, 5; x. 39, 10.

Finally, to say nothing of the succours rendered to numerous other persons (i. 112, 116, 117, 118, 119,) the Aśvins did not confine their benevolence to human beings, but are also celebrated as having rescued from the jaws of a wolf a quail by which they were invoked (i. 116, 14; i. 117, 16; i. 118, 8; x. 39, 13 (vṛikasya chid vārtikām antar āsyād yuvañ śachibhir grasitām amunchatam).

The deliverances of Rebha, Vandana, Parāvṛij, Bhujyu, Chyavāna, and others are explained by Professor Benfey (following Dr. Kuhn and Professor Müller), in the notes to his translations of the hymns in which they are mentioned, as referring to certain physical phenomena with which the Aśvins are supposed by these scholars to be connected. But this allegorical method of interpretation seems unlikely to be correct, as it is difficult to suppose that the phenomena in question should have been alluded to under such a variety of names and circumstances. It appears, therefore, to be more probable that the rishis merely refer to certain legends which were popularly current of interventions of the Aśvins in behalf of the persons whose names are mentioned. The word Parāvṛij (in i. 112, 8), which is taken by the commentator for a proper name, and is explained by Professors Müller[382] and Benfey as the returning, or the setting, sun, is interpreted by Professor Roth in his Lexicon, s.v., as an outcast.

(3) Connection of the Aśvins with other deities.

In viii. 26, 8, the Aśvins are invoked along with Indra (Indra-nāsatyā), with whom they are also connected in x. 73, 4, and on whose car they are in one place said to ride, while at other times they accompany Vāyu, or the Ādityas, or the Ṛibhus, or participate in the strides of Vishṇu, viii. 9, 12 (yad Indreṇa sarathañ yātho Aśvinā yad vā Vāyunā bhavathaḥ samokasā | yad Ādityebhir Ṛibhubhir yad vā Vishṇor vikramaṇeshu tishṭhathaḥ). In i. 182, 2, they are said to possess strongly the qualities of Indra (Indratamā) and of the Maruts

[382] Lectures on Language, second series, p. 512.

(Maruttamā). In x. 131, 4, 5, they are described as assisting Indra in his conflict with the Asura Namuchi (see above, p. 93 f., note), and as vigorous slayers of Vṛittra, or of enemies, vṛitrahantamā (viii. 8, 22). They are eagerly longed for (?) by the other gods when they arrive, x. 24, 5 (viśve devāḥ akṛipanta samīchyor nishpatantyoḥ).

(4) Relations of the Aśvins to their worshippers.

The Aśvins are worshipped with uplifted hands, vi. 63, 3 (uttānahasto yuvayur vavanda), and supplicated for a variety of blessings, for long life and deliverance from calamities, i. 157, 4 (prāyus tārishṭaṁ niḥ rapāṁsi mṛikshaṭam); for offspring, wealth, victory, destruction of enemies, preservation of the worshippers themselves, of their houses and cattle, vii. 67, 6; viii. 8, 13, 15, 17; viii. 9, 11, 13; viii. 26, 7; viii. 35, 10 ff. They are exhorted to overwhelm and destroy the niggard who offers no oblations, and to create light for the wise man who praises them, i. 182, 3 (kim atra dasrā kṛiṇuthaḥ kim āsāthe jano yaḥ kaśchid ahavir mahīyate | ati kramishṭaṁ juratam paṇer asuṁ jyotir viprāya kṛiṇutaṁ vachasyave).

No calamity or alarm from any quarter can touch the man whose chariot they place in the van, x. 39, 11[383] (na taṁ rājānāv adite kutaśchana na aṁho aśnoti duritaṁ nakir bhayaṃ | yam aśvinā suhavā rudravartanī puroratham kṛiṇuthaḥ patnyā saha). The rishi addresses them as a son his parents, vii. 67, 1 (sūnur na pitarā vivakmi). In x. 39, 6, a female suppliant, who represents herself as friendless and destitute, calls on them to treat her as parents do their children, and rescue her from her misfortunes (iyaṁ vām ahve śṛiṇutaṁ me Aśvinā putrāyeva pitarā mahyaṁ śikshatam | anāpir ajnā asajātyā amatiḥ purā tasyāḥ abhiśaster ava spṛitam). In another place, viii. 62, 11, they seem to be reproached with being as tardy as two old men to respond to the summons of their worshipper (kim idaṁ vām purāṇavaj jarator iva śasyate | "Why is this praise addressed to you as if you were old men and worn out?"). In vii. 72, 2, the rishi represents himself as having hereditary claims on their consideration, and a common bond of union[384] (yuvor hi naḥ sakhyā pitryāṇi samāno bandhur uta tasya vittam).

[383] Compare the request preferred to Indra to bring forward the chariot of his worshipper from the rear to the front (viii. 69, 4 f.).

The Aśvins are described as being, like the other gods, fond of the soma-juice (iii. 58, 7, 9; iv. 45, 1, 3; viii. 8, 5; viii. 35, 7–9), and are invited to drink it with Ushas and Sūrya, viii. 35, 1 ff.

(5) Legend of Chyavana and the Aśvins, according to the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa and the Mahābhārata.

The following version of the legend relating to the cure of Chyavana by the Aśvins (to which allusion is made in the passage of the R.V. quoted above) is found in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iv. 1, 5, 1 ff.:

1. Yatra vai Bhṛigavo vā Angiraso vā svargaṁ lokaṁ samāśnuvata tat Chyavano vā Bhārgavaś Chyavano vā Āngirasaś tad eva jīrṇiḥ kṛityārūpo jahe | 2. S'aryāto ha vai idam Mānavo grāmeṇa chachāra | sa tad eva prativeśo niviviśe | tasya kumārāḥ krīḍantaḥ imaṁ jīrṇiṁ kṛityārūpam anarthyam manyamānāḥ loshṭair vipipishuḥ | 3. Sa S'āryātebhyaś chukrodha | tebhyo 'sanjnāṁ chakāra pitā eva putreṇa yuyudhe bhrātā bhrātrā | 4. S'aryāto ha īkshānchakre yat "kim akaraṁ tasmād idam āpadi" iti | sa gopālāṁś cha avipālāṁś cha saṁhvayitavai uvācha | 5. Sa ha uvācha "ko vo adya iha kinchid adrākshīd" iti | te ha ūchuḥ "purushaḥ eva ayaṁ jīrṇiḥ kṛityārūpaḥ śete | tam anarthyam manyamānāḥ kumārāḥ loshṭair vyapikshann" iti | sa vidānchakāra "sa vai Chyavanaḥ" iti | 6. Sa rathaṁ yuktvā Sukanyāṁ S'āryātīm upādhāya prasishyanda | sa ājagāma yatra ṛishir āsa tat | 7. Sa ha uvācha "ṛishe namas te | yan na avedishaṁ tena ahiṁsisham | iyaṁ Sukanyā | tayā te apahnuve | sanjānītām me grāmaḥ" iti | tasya ha tataḥ eva grāmaḥ sanjajne | sa ha tataḥ eva S'aryāto Mānavaḥ udyuyuje "na id aparaṁ hinasāni" iti | 8. Aśvinau ha vai idam bhishajyantau cheratuḥ | tau Sukanyām upeyatuḥ | tasyām mithunam īshāte | tan na jajnau | 9. Tau ha ūchatuḥ "Sukanye kam imaṁ jīrṇiṁ kṛityarūpam upaśeshe | āvām anuprehi" iti | sā ha uvācha "yasmai mām pitā adād na taṁ [384] The commentator explains this of a common ancestry by saying, in accordance with later tradition, that Vivasvat and Varuṇa were both sons of Kas'yapa and Aditi, and that Vivasvat was the father of the As'vins, while Varuṇa was father of Vasishṭha, the rishi of the hymn. See the 1st volume of this work, pp. 329 f., note 114.

jîvantaṁ hâsyâmi" iti | tad ha ayam ṛishir âjajnau | 10. Sa ha uvâcha "Sukanye kiṁ tvâ etad avochatâm" iti | tasmai etad vyâchachakshe | sa ha vyâkhyâtaḥ uvâcha "yadi tvâ etat punar bruvataḥ sâ tvam brûtâd 'na vai susarvâv iva stho na susaṁriddhâv iva atha me patiṁ nindathaḥ' iti | tau yadi tvâ bruvataḥ 'kena âvam asarvau svaḥ kena asaṁriddhâv' iti | sâ tvam brûtât 'patiṁ nu me punar yuvânaṁ kurutam atha vâṁ vakshyâmi' iti" | tâṁ punar upeyatus tâṁ ha etad eva ûchatuḥ | 11. Sâ ha uvâcha "na vai susarvâv iva stho na susaṁriddhâv iva atha me patiṁ nindathaḥ" iti | tau ha ûchatuḥ "kena âvam asarvau svaḥ kena asaṁriddhâv" iti | sâ ha uvâcha "patiṁ nu me punar yuvânaṁ kurutam atha vâṁ vakshyâmi" iti | 12. Tau ha ûchatur "etaṁ hradam abhyavahara | sa yena vayasâ kamishyate tena udaishyati" iti | taṁ hradam abhyavajahâra | sa yena vayasâ chakame tena udeyâya | 13. Tau ha ûchatuḥ "Sukanye kena âvam asarvau svaḥ kena asaṁriddhâv" iti | tau ha ṛishir eva pratyuvâcha "kurukshetre amî devâḥ yajnaṁ tanvate | te vâṁ yajnâd antaryanti | tena asarvau sthas tena asaṁriddhâv" iti | tau ha tataḥ eva Âśvinau preyatuḥ | tâv âjagmatur devân yajnaṁ tanvânân stute bahishpavamâne | 14. Tau ha ûchatur "upa nau hvayadhvam" iti | te ha devâḥ ûchur "na vâm upahvayishyâmahe | bahu manushyeshu saṁsṛishtam achârishṭam bhishajyantâv" iti | 15. Tau ha ûchatur viśîrshṇâ vai yajnena yajadhve" iti | "kathaṁ viśîrshṇâ" iti | "upa nau hvayadhvam atha vo vakshyâvaḥ" iti | "tathâ" iti | tâ upâhvayanta tâbhyâm etam âśvinaṁ graham agṛihṇaṁs tâv adhvaryû yajnasya abhavatâm | tâv etad yajnasya śiraḥ pratyadhattâm |

"When the Bhṛigus or the Angirases had reached the heavenly world, Chyavana of the race of Bhṛigu, or Chyavana of the race of Angiras, having magically assumed a shrivelled form, was abandoned. Saryâta, the descendant of Manu, wandered over this [world] with his tribe. He settled down in the neighbourhood [of Chyavana]. His youths, while playing, fancied this shrivelled magical body to be worthless, and pounded it with clods. Chyavana was incensed at the sons of Saryâta. He created discord among them, so that father fought with son, and brother with brother. Saryâta bethought him, 'what have I done, in consequence of which this calamity has befallen us?' He ordered the cowherds and shepherds to be called, and said, 'Which of you has seen anything here to-day?' They replied, 'This shrivelled magical body which lies there is a man. Fancying it was something worthless, the youths pounded it with clods.' Saryāta knew then that it was Chyavana. He yoked his chariot, and taking his daughter Sukanyā, drove off, and arrived at the place where the rishi was. He said, 'Reverence to thee, rishi; I injured thee because I did not know. This is Sukanyā, with her I appease thee. Let my tribe be reconciled.' His tribe was in consequence reconciled; and Saryāta of the race of Manu departed thence "lest," said he, "I might do him some other injury." Now the Aśvins used to wander over this world, performing cures. They approached Sukanyā, and wished to seduce her; but she would not consent. They said to her, 'Sukanyā, what shrivelled magical body is this by which thou liest? follow us.' She replied, 'I will not abandon, while he lives, the man to whom my father gave me.' The rishi became aware of this. He said, 'Sukanyā, what was this that they said to thee?' She told it to him. When informed, he said, 'If they address thee thus again, say to them, 'Ye are neither complete nor perfect, and yet ye speak contemptuously of my husband!' and if they ask, 'In what respect are we incomplete and imperfect?' then reply, 'Make my husband young again, and I will tell you.' Accordingly they came again to her, and said the same thing. She answered, "Ye are neither complete nor perfect, and yet ye talk contemptuously of my husband!' They enquired, 'In what respect are we incomplete and imperfect?' She rejoined, 'Make my husband young again, and I will tell you.' They replied, 'Take him to this pond, and he shall come forth with any age which he shall desire.' She took him to the pond, and he came forth with the age that he desired. The Aśvins then asked, 'Sukanyā, in what respect are we incomplete and imperfect?' To this the rishi replied, 'The other gods celebrate a sacrifice in Kurukshetra, and exclude you two from it. That is the respect in which ye are incomplete and imperfect.' The Aśvins then departed and came to the gods who were celebrating a sacrifice, when the Bahishpavamāna[385] text had been recited. They said, 'Invite us to join you.' The gods replied, 'We will not invite you, for ye have wandered about very familiarly among men,[386] per-[385] See Haug's Ait. Br. ii. p. 120, note 13.

[386] In the Mahābhārata, S'āntip. v. 7589 f. it is said that the As'vins are the S'ūdras of the gods, the Angirases being the Brahmans, the Ādityas the Kshatriyas, forming cures.' The Aśvins rejoined, "Ye worship with a headless sacrifice.' They asked, 'How [do we worship] with a headless [sacrifice]?' The Aśvins answered, 'Invite us to join you, and we will tell you.' The gods consented, and invited them. They received this Āśvina draught (graha) for the Aśvins, who became the two adhvaryu priests[387] of the sacrifices, and restored the head of the sacrifice." As regards the cutting off of the head of the sacrifice see the passages quoted in the 4th volume of this work, pp. 109 ff.

The Taittirīya Sanhitā vi. 4, 9, 1, gives the following brief notice of the story of the Aśvins replacing the head of the sacrifice, with an addition not found in the Śatap. Br.:

Yajnasya śiro 'chhidyata | te devāḥ aśvināv abruvan "bhishajau vai sthaḥ | idaṁ yajnasya śiraḥ pratidhattam" iti | tāv abrūtāṁ "varaṁ vṛiṇāvahai grahaḥ eva nāv atrāpi gṛihyatām" iti | tābhyām etam āśvinam agṛihnan | tato vai tau yajnasya śiraḥ pratyadhattām | yadāśvino gṛihyate yajnasya nishkṛityai tau devāḥ abruvann "apūtau vai imau manushyacharau bhishajāv" iti | tasmād brāhmaṇena bheshajaṁ na kāryam | apūto hy esho 'medhyo yo bhishak | tau bahishpavamānena pavayitvā tabhyām etam āśvinam agṛihnan |

"The head of the sacrifice was cut off. The gods said to the Aśvins, 'You are physicians; replace this head of the sacrifice.' The Aśvins replied, 'Let us ask a favour: allow a libation for us also to be received in this ceremony.' They, in consequence, received for them this Āśvina oblation, when they replaced the head of the sacrifice. When this Āśvina libation had been received for the sake of rectifying the sacrifice, the gods said of the Aśvins, 'These two are unclean, going among men as they do, as physicians.' Hence, no Brāhman must act as a physician, since a person so acting is unclean and unfit to sacrifice. They purified the Aśvins by the Bahishpavamāna; and then received for them the Āśvina libation." Compare the Ait. Br. i. 18, pp. 41 ff. of Professor Haug's translation.

A story, varying in some particulars, is narrated in the Mahābhārata, and the Maruts the Vaiśyas. With the objection made against the Aśvins of too great familiarity with mortals, compare the numerous instances of help rendered to their worshippers, which have been quoted above from the R.V., and which may have given rise to this idea.

[387] Compare S. P. Br. viii. 2, 1, 3.

Vanaparva, 10,316 ff. The original text is too lengthy to be cited, but I shall give its substance. We are there told that the body of Chyavana, when performing austerity in a certain place, became encrusted with an ant-hill; that king Śaryāti came then to the spot with his 4000 wives and his single daughter Sukanyā; that the rishi, seeing her, became enamoured of her and endeavoured to gain her affections, but without eliciting from her any reply. Seeing, however, the sage's eyes gleaming out from the ant-hill, and not knowing what they were, the princess pierced them with a sharp instrument, whereupon Chyavana became incensed, and afflicted the king's army with a stoppage of urine and of the other necessary function. When the king found out the cause of the infliction, and supplicated the rishi for its removal, the latter insisted on receiving the king's daughter to wife, as the sole condition of his forgiveness. Sukanyā accordingly lived with the rishi as his spouse. One day, however, she was seen by the Aśvins, who endeavoured, but without effect, to persuade her to desert her decrepit husband, and choose one of them in his place. They then told her they were the physicians of the gods, and would restore her husband to youth and beauty, when she could make her choice between him and one of them. Chyavana and his wife consented to this proposal; and, at the suggestion of the Aśvins, he entered with them into a neighbouring pond, when the three came forth of like celestial beauty, and each asked her to be his bride. She, however, recognized and chose her own husband. Chyavana, in gratitude for his restoration to youth, then offered to compel Indra to admit the Aśvins to a participation in the Soma ceremonial, and fulfilled his promise in the course of a sacrifice which he performed for king Śaryāti. On that occasion Indra objected to such an honour being extended to the Aśvins, on the ground that they wandered about among men as physicians, changing their forms at will; but Chyavana refused to listen to the objection, and carried out his intention, staying the arm of Indra when he was about to launch a thunderbolt, and creating a terrific demon, who was on the point of devouring the king of the gods, and was only prevented by the timely submission of the latter.[388]

[388] See the similar account of Chyavana's power in the passage from the Anuśāsana parva quoted in the 1st vol. of this work, second edition, p. 470 f.

(6) Remarks on the Aśvins by Professor Goldstücker.

I have been favoured by Professor Goldstücker with the following note on the Aśvins :—

The myth of the Aśvins is, in my opinion, one of that class of myths in which two distinct elements, the cosmical and the human or historical, have gradually become blended into one. It seems necessary, therefore, to separate these two elements in order to arrive at an understanding of the myth. The historical or human element in it, I believe, is represented by those legends which refer to the wonderful cures effected by the Aśvins, and to their performances of a kindred sort; the cosmical element is that relating to their luminous nature. The link which connects both seems to be the mysteriousness of the nature and effects of the phenomena of light, and of the healing art at a remote antiquity. That there might have been some horsemen or warriors of great renown who inspired their contemporaries with awe by their wonderful deeds, and more especially by their medical skill, appears to have been also the opinion of some old commentators mentioned by Yāska, for some "legendary writers," he says, took them for "two kings, performers of holy acts;" and this view seems likewise borne out by the legend in which it is narrated that the gods refused the Aśvins admittance to a sacrifice on the ground that they had been on too familiar terms with men. It would appear then that these Aśvins, like the Ṛibhus, were originally renowned mortals, who, in the course of time, were translated into the companionship of the gods; and it may be a matter of importance to investigate whether, besides this a priori view, there are further grounds of a linguistic or grammatical character for assuming that the hymns containing the legends relating to these human Aśvins are posterior or otherwise to those descriptive of the cosmical gods of the same name.

The luminous character of the latter can scarcely be matter of doubt, for the view of some commentators—recorded by Yāska,—according to which they were identified with "heaven and earth," appears not to be countenanced by any of the passages known to us. Their very name, it would seem, settles this point, since aśva, the horse, literally, "the pervader," is always the symbol of the luminous deities, especially of the sun. The difficulty, however, is to determine their position amongst these deities and to harmonize with it the other myths connected with them. I may here, however, first observe that, though Yāska records opinions which identify the Aśvins with "day and night," and "sun and moon," the passage relied upon by Professor Roth to prove that Yāska himself identified them with Indra and Āditya (the sun), does not bear out any such conclusion. For the passage in question, as I understand it, means: "their time is after the (latter) half of the night when the (space's) becoming light is resisted (by darkness); for the middlemost Aśvin (between darkness and light) shares in darkness, whilst (the other), who is of a solar nature (āditya), shares in light." There is this verse relating to them: "In nights," [389] etc. Nor does Durga, the commentator on Yāska, attribute to the latter the view which Professor Roth ascribes to him. His words, as I interpret them, are: "'their time is after the (latter) half of the night when the (space's) becoming light is resisted,' (means) when, after the (latter) half of the night, darkness intersected by light makes an effort against light, that is the time of the Aśvins. . . . . Then the nature of the middlemost (between them) is a share in that darknesss which penetrates into light; and the solar one (āditya) assumes that nature which is a share in the light penetrating into darknesss. These two are the middlemost and the uppermost: this is the teacher's (i.e. Yāska's) own opinion, for, in order to substantiate it, he gives as an instance the verse 'Vasātishu sma,'" [390] etc.

[389] Nir. xii. 1, tayoḥ kālaḥ ūrdhvam ardharātrāt prākāśībhāvasyānuvishṭambham anu (the last word is omitted in Durga MS. I. O. L., No. 206) tamobhāgo hi madhyamo jyotirbhāga ādityaḥ; tayor eshā bhavati Vasātishu sma, etc.

[390] Durga I. O. L., No. 206: Tayoḥ kāla ūrdhvam ardharātrāt prakāśībhāvasyānu vishṭambham | jyotishā vyatibhidyamānam ūrdhvam ardharātrāt tamo yadā jyotir anu vishṭabhnāti so 'śvinoḥ kālaḥ | [tataḥ prabhṛiti sandhistotraṁ purodayād āśvinam, udite sauryāṇi] | tatra yat tamo 'nuvishṭaṁ (the MS. of Professor Müller, Lect. 2nd series, p. 490, reads 'nupravishṭam) jyotishi tadbhāgo madhyamasya rūpam (the MS. of Prof. M. ibid.: tadbhāgo madhyamaḥ | tan madhyamasya rūpam): yaj jyotis tamasy anuvishṭaṁ (the same, ibid. anupravishṭam) tadbhāgam tadrūpam ādityaḥ | tāv etau madhyamottamāv iti svamatam ācharyasya | yataḥ samarthanāyodāharati tayor eshā bhavati Vasātishu smeti. Professor Roth, in his illustrations of Nirukta, xii. 1, very correctly observes that the verse quoted by Yāska (vāsatishu sma, etc.) does not bear out the view that the Aśvins are Indra and Āditya; but the proper inference to be drawn from this circumstance would seem to be, not that Yaska quoted a verse irrelevant to his view, but that Professor Roth attributed to him a view which he had not entertained, and that it may be preferable to render Āditya, as proposed above, "the solar (Aśvin)," or the Aśvin of a solar nature.

To judge, therefore, from these words, it is the opinion of Yāska that the Aśvins represent the transition from darkness to light, when the intermingling of both produces that inseparable duality expressed by the twin nature of these deities. And this interpretation, I hold, is the best that can be given of the character of the cosmical Aśvins. It agrees with the epithets by which they are invoked, and with the relationship in which they are placed. They are young, yet also ancient, beautiful, bright, swift, etc; and their negative character—the result of the alliance of light with darkness—is, I believe, expressed by dasra, the destroyer, and also by the two negatives in the compound nāsatya (na + a-satya), though their positive character is again redeemed by the ellipsis of "enemies, or diseases," to dasra, and by the sense of nāsatya, not un-true, i.e. truthful. They are the parents of Pūshan, the sun; for they precede the rise of the sun; they are the sons of the sky, and again the sons of Vivasvat and Saraṇyū. Vivasvat, I believe, here implies the firmament "expanding" to the sight through the approaching light; and though Saraṇyū is to Professor Müller one of the deities which are forced by him to support his dawn-theory, it seems to me that the etymology of the word, and the character of the myths relating to it, rather point to the moving air, or the dark and cool air, heated, and therefore set in motion, by the approach of the rising sun. The Aśvins are also the husbands or the friends of Sūryā, whom I take for the representative of the weakest manifestation of the sun; and I believe that Sāyaṇa is right when, by the sister of the Aśvins, he understands Ushas, the dawn. The mysterious phenomenon of the intermingling of darkness —which is no longer complete night—and of light—which is not yet dawn—seems to agree with all these conceptions, and with the further details of a cosmical nature, which are so fully given in the preceding paper.

SECTION XVI.

SOMA.

Reference has been already made to the important share which the exhilarating juice of the soma-plant assumes in bracing Indra for his conflict with the hostile powers in the atmosphere, and to the eagerness of all the gods to partake in this beverage.

Soma is the god who represents and animates this juice, an intoxicating draught which plays a conspicuous part in the sacrifices of the Vedic age. He is, or rather was in former times, the Indian Dionysus or Bacchus. Not only are the whole of the hymns in the ninth book of the Rig-veda, one hundred and fourteen in number, besides a few in other places, dedicated to his honour, but constant references to the juice of the soma occur in a large proportion of the other hymns. It is clear therefore, as remarked by Professor Whitney (Journal of the American Oriental Society, iii. 299), that his worship must at one time have attained a remarkable popularity. This circumstance is thus explained by the writer to whom I have referred: "The simple-minded Arian people, whose whole religion was a worship of the wonderful powers and phenomena of nature, had no sooner perceived that this liquid had power to elevate the spirits, and produce a temporary frenzy, under the influence of which the individual was prompted to, and capable of, deeds beyond his natural powers, than they found in it something divine: it was to their apprehension a god, endowing those into whom it entered with godlike powers; the plant which afforded it became to them the king of plants; the process of preparing it was a holy sacrifice; the instruments used therefor were sacred. The high antiquity of this cultus is attested by the references to it found occurring in the Persian Avesta;[391] it seems, however, to have received a new impulse on Indian territory."

[391] See Dr. Windischmann's Essay on the Soma-worship of the Arians, or the

(1) Quotation from Euripides relating to the Greek god Dionysus.

As illustrating the sentiments which gave rise to the adoration of Dionysus, the Grecian Soma, I shall introduce here some verses from the Bacchae of Euripides, 272.ff., in which the philosophical poet puts into the mouth of the prophet Teiresias a vindication of the worship of the new god, against the ridicule which had been thrown upon him by Pentheus, together with a statement of the reasons which justified his deification, and a rationalistic explanation of a current myth regarding him :

Οὗτος δ' ὁ δαίμων ὁ νέος ὃν σὺ διαγελᾷς οὐκ ἂν δυναίμην μέγεθος ἐξειπεῖν ὅσος καθ' Ἑλλάδ' ἔσται· δύο γὰρ, ὦ νεανία, τὰ πρῶτ' ἐν ἀνθρώποισι, Δημήτηρ θεὰ,
Γῆ δ' ἐστίν· ὄνομα δ' ὁπότερον βούλει κάλει·
αὕτη μὲν ἐν ξηροῖσιν ἐκτρέφει βροτούς·
ὁ δ' ἦλθεν ἐπὶ τἀντίπαλον, ὁ Σεμέλης γόνος, βότρυος ὑγρὸν πῶμ' εὑρὼν, κεἰσηνέγκατο θνητοῖς, ὃ παύει τοὺς ταλαιπώρους βροτοὺς λύπης, ὅταν πλησθῶσιν ἀμπέλου ῥοῆς, ὕπνον τε, λήθην τῶν καθ' ἡμέραν κακῶν, δίδωσιν, οὐδ' ἔστ' ἄλλο φάρμακον πόνων.
οὗτος θεοῖσι σπένδεται θεὸς γεγὼς, ὥστε διὰ τοῦτον τἀγάθ' ἀνθρώπους ἔχειν.
καὶ καταγελᾷς νιν, ὡς ἐνερράφη Διὸς μηρῷ· διδάξω σ' ὡς καλῶς ἔχει τόδε.
ἐπεί νιν ἥρπασ' ἐκ πυρὸς κερδυνίου
Ζεὺς, εἰς δ' Ὄλυμπον βρέφος ἀνήγαγεν νεὸν,
Ἥρα νιν ἤθελ' ἐκβαλεῖν ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ,
Ζεὺς δ' ἀντεμηχανήσατ', οἷα δὴ θεός.
ῥήξας μέρος τι τοῦ χθόν' ἐγκυκλουμένου αἰθέρος ἔθηκε τόνδ' ὅμηρον ἐκδιδοὺς Διόνυσον Ἥρας νεικέων· χρόνῳ δέ νιν βροτοὶ τραφῆναι φασιν ἐν μηρῷ Διὸς, ὄνομα μεταστήσαντες, ὅτι θεᾷ θεὸς
Ἥρᾳ ποθ' ὡμήρευσε, συνθέντες λογον.
μάντις δ' ὁ δαίμων ὅδε· τὸ γὰρ βακχεύσιμον καὶ τὸ μανιῶδες μαντικὴν πολλὴν ἔχει· ὅταν γαρ ὁ θεὸς εἰς τὸ σῶμ' ἔλθῃ πολύς, λέγειν το μέλλον τοὺς μεμηνότας ποιεῖ.

translated extracts from it in the 2nd vol. of this work, p. 469 ff.; and the extract there given, p. 474, from Plutarch de Isid. et Osir, 46, in which the soma, or as it is in Zend, haoma, appears to be referred to under the appellation ὄμωμι. See also on the fact of the soma rite of the Indians being originally identical with the haoma ceremony of the Zoroastrians, Haug's Aitareya Brâhmana, Introd., p. 62.

Ἄρεώς τε μοῖραν μεταλαβὼν ἔχει τινὰ.
στρατὸν γὰρ ἐν ὅπλοις ὄντα κἀπὶ τάξεσι φόβος διεπτόησε, πρὶν λόγχης θιγεῖν· μανία δὲ καὶ τοῦτ' ἐστὶ Διονύσου πάρα, κ.τ.λ.

"I cannot express how great this young god, whom thou ridiculest, is destined to become in Greece. For, young man, there are two things which are the foremost among men, the goddess Demeter, who is the Earth;—call her by whichever name thou pleasest;—who nourishes mortals with dry food. But he, the son of Semele, took the contrary course. He discovered and introduced among men the liquid draught of the grape, which puts an end to the sorrows of wretched mortals,—when they are filled with the stream from the vine,—and induces sleep, and oblivion of the evils endured by day. Nor is there any other remedy for our distresses. He, born a god, is poured out in libations to gods, so that through him men receive good. And thou ridiculest him by saying that he was sewn up in the thigh (μηρῷ) of Zeus. But I shall shew thee how this is rendered reasonable. When Zeus rescued the infant from the lightning-flame, and brought him to Olympus, Hera wished to expel him from heaven. But Zeus, like a god, counteracted this design. Detaching a portion of the aether which encircles the earth, he gave this as a hostage (ὅμηρον) to Hera, so delivering Dionysus from her hostility; and in course of time, because he became a hostage to Hera, men began to say,—changing the word, and inventing a fable,—that he had been reared in the thigh of Zeus. And this god is a prophet. For Bacchic excitement and raving have in them great prophetic power. When this god enters in force into the body, he causes men to rave and foretell the future. And he also partakes of the character of Ares (Mars). For panic (sometimes) terrifies a force of armed men drawn up in battle array, before the actual clashing of the hosts. This madness too is derived from Dionysus." [392]

[392] In an earlier part of the same play, verses 200 ff. the following protest against free enquiry in religious matters is put by the poet into the mouth of Teiresias, who says to Cadmus:

οὐδὲν σοφιζόμεσθα τοῖσι δαίμοσι.
πατρίους παραδοχὰς, ἃς θ' ὁμήλικας χρόνῳ ἐκτήμεθ', οὐδεὶς αὐτὰ καταβαλεῖ λόγος, οὐδ' εἰ δι' ἄκρων τὸ σοφὸν ηὑρηται φρενῶν.

"In things that touch the gods it is not good
To suffer captious reason to intrude.

(2) Prevalence and enthusiastic character of the ancient Soma-worship.

Professor Haug, in his work on the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (Introd. p. 60), thus writes of the soma sacrifice: "Being thus," (i.e. through the oblation of an animal) "received among the gods, the sacrificer is deemed worthy to enjoy the divine beverage, the soma, and participate in the heavenly king, who is Soma. The drinking of the soma-juice makes him a new man; though a new celestial body had been prepared for him at the Pravargya ceremony, the enjoyment of the soma beverage transforms him again; for the nectar of the gods flows for the first time in his veins, purifying and sanctifying him."

With the decline of the Vedic worship, however, and the introduction of new deities and new ceremonies, the popularity of Soma gradually decreased, and has long since passed away; and his name is now familiar to those few Brahmans only who still maintain in a few places the early Vedic observances.

The hymns addressed to Soma were intended to be sung while the juice of the plant, said to be produced on Mount Mūjavat, R.V. x. 34, 1 (somasyeva Maujavatasya bhakshaḥ),[393] from which he takes his name (the asclepias acida or sarcostemma viminale) was being pressed out and purified.[394] They describe enthusiastically the flowing forth and filtration of the divine juice, and the effects produced on the worshippers, and supposed to be produced on the gods,[395] by partaking of the beverage. Thus the first verse of the first hymn of the ninth book runs > Traditions handed down from sire to son

> Since time itself began its course to run
> By reasonings never can be undermined,
> Though forged by intellects the most refined."

To this the advocates of a critical investigation into the truth of ancient beliefs might reply in the words of the Messenger in the Helena of the same poet, verses 1617 f. (though their original application was different):

> σώφρονος δ' ἀπιστίας
> οὐκ ἔστιν οὐδὲν χρησιμώτερον βροτοῖς.
>
> "Nought can to men more useful be,
> Than prudent incredulity."

[393] Mūjavan parvataḥ, "Mūjavat is a hill," Nir. ix. 8. See also Vāj. S. iii. 61, and commentary.

[394] See the process as described by Windischman, after Dr. Stevenson, in the 2nd volume of this work, p. 470.

[395] See Ait. Br. vi. 11, quoted above, p. 88, note 168.

thus: Svādishṭhayā madishṭhayā pavasva Soma dhārayā Indrāya pātave sutaḥ | "O Soma, poured out for Indra to drink, flow on purely in a most sweet and most exhilarating current." In vi. 47, 1, 2, the juice is described as sweet, honied, pungent, well-flavoured, and exhilarating. No one can withstand Indra in battle when he has drunk it (svādush kilāyam madhumān utāyaṁ tīvraḥ kilāyaṁ rasavān utāyam | uto nu asya papivāṁsam Indraṁ na kaśchana śṛhate āhaveshu | ayaṁ svādur iha madishṭhaḥ āsa). When quaffed, it stimulates the voice, and calls forth ardent conceptions (ibid. verse 3). In a verse (viii. 48, 3,) already quoted above (p. 90, note), in the account of Indra, the worshippers exclaim: "We have drunk the soma, we have become immortal, we have entered into light, we have known the gods. What can an enemy now do to us, or what can the malice of any mortal effect, o thou immortal god?"

(3) How the soma-plant was brought to the earth.

The plant is said to have been brought by a falcon, i. 80, 2 (somaḥ śyenābhṛitaḥ); iii. 43, 7 (ā yaṁ te [Indrāya] śyenaḥ uśate jabhāra); viii. 71, 9; from the sky, iv. 26, 6 (ṛijīpī śyeno dadamāno aṁśum parāvataḥ śakuno mandram madam | somam bharad dādṛihāno devavān divo amushṇād uttarād ādāya); viii. 84, 3; by a well-winged bird, or Suparṇa, to Indra, viii. 89, 8 (divaṁ suparṇo gatvāya somaṁ vajriṇe ābharat); or from a mountain, i. 93, 6 (amathnād anyam (somam) pari śyeno adreḥ), where it had been placed by Varuṇa, v. 85, 2 (divi sūryam adadhāt somam adrau). In iii. 48, 2; v. 43, 4; ix. 18, 1; ix. 62, 4; ix. 85, 10; ix. 98, 9, it is called girishṭhā (found on a mountain). In another place, ix. 113, 3, it is declared to have been brought by the daughter of the sun from the place where it had been nourished by Parjanya, the rain-god, when the Gandharvas took it, and infused into it sap (Parjanya-vṛiddham mahisham taṁ sūryasya duhitā 'bharat | taṁ gandharvāḥ praty agṛibhṇan taṁ some rasam ādadhuḥ). In ix. 82, 3, as we have seen above, p. 142, Parjanya is said to be the father of Soma; and in A.V. xix. 6, 16, the god is said to have sprung from Puruśha (rājnaḥ Somasya . . . . jātasya Purushād adhi).

In other passages a Gandharva is connected with the soma-plant, the sphere (pada) of which he is said to protect, and all the forms of which he is said to manifest, ix. 83, 4; ix. 85, 12[396] (gandharvaḥ itthā padam asya rakshati | ūrdhvo gandharvo adhi nāke asthād viśvā rūpāṇi pratichakshāṇo asya). The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa has the following story regarding the mode in which the gods obtained soma from the Gandharvas, i. 27. Somo vai rājā gandharveshv āsīt | taṁ devāś cha ṛishayaś cha abhyadhyāyan "katham ayam asmān somo rājā āgachhed" iti | sā Vāg abravīt "strīkāmāḥ vai gandharvāḥ | mayā eva striyā bhūtayā paṇayadhvam" iti "Na" iti devāḥ abruvan "kathaṁ vayaṁ tvad ṛite syāma" iti | sā 'bravīt "krīṇīta eva | yarhi vāva vo mayā artho bhavitā tarhy eva vo 'ham punar āgantāsmi" iti | "tathā" iti | tayā mahāṇagnyā bhūtayā Somam rājānam akrīṇan[397] "King Soma was among the Gandharvas. The gods and rishis desired him, and said 'How shall we get him to come to us?' Vāch said, 'The Gandharvas are fond of females; buy him in exchange for me turned into a female.' They answered, 'No: how can we live without thee?' She rejoined, 'Buy him, and whenever you have occasion for me I shall return to you.' They agreed, and bought king Soma with Vāch turned into a female, quite naked [i.e. unchaste]." See Professor Haug's translation of this Brāhmana, p. 59, and compare pp. 201 ff.; 294; and 400.

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa iii. 2, 4, 1 ff., it is related that the soma existed formerly in the sky, whilst the gods were here (on earth). They desired to get it, that they might employ it in sacrifice. The Gāyatrī flew to bring it for them. While she was carrying it off the Gandharva Vibhāvasu robbed her of it.' The gods became aware of this, and knowing the partiality of the Gandharvas for females (compare iii. 9, 3, 20, and A.V. iv. 37, 11 f.), they sent Vāch, the goddess of speech, to get it from them, which she succeeded in doing (Divi vai somaḥ āsīt | atha iha devāḥ | te devāḥ akāmayanta "ā naḥ somo gachhet

[396] See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon under the word Gandharva.

[397] The Taitt. Br. vi. 1, 6, 5 (pp. 90 ff. of Indian Office MS.), tells the same story, but says that they turned Vāch into a woman one year old; and that after she had gone they induced her to come back by singing (the Gandharvas, whom she had left, meanwhile reciting a prayer, or incantation), and hence women love a man who sings (tam somam āhriyamāṇam gandharvo Viśvāvasuḥ paryamushṇāt | .. te devāḥ abruvan "strīkāmāḥ vai gandharvāḥ striyā nishkrīṇāma" iti | te Vācham striyam ekahāyanīm kṛitvā tayā, nirakrīṇan | sā rohid-rūpam kṛitvā gandharvebhyo 'pakramya atishṭhat | tad rohito janma | te devāḥ abruvan "apa yushmad akramīn na asmān upāvarttate vihvayai" iti | brahma gandharvāḥ avadann | agāyan devāḥ | sā devān gāyataḥ upāvarttata | tasmād gāyantam striyaḥ kāmayante | kāmukā enam striyo bhavanti ya evam veda).

tena āgatena yajemahi" iti | .... 2. Tebhyo gāyatrī somam achha apatat | tasyai āharantyai gandharvo Viśvāvasuḥ paryamushṇāt | te devāḥ aviduḥ "prachyuto vai parastāt somaḥ | atha no na āgachhati | gandharvāḥ vai paryamoshishur" iti | te ha ūchur "yoshit-kāmāḥ vai gandharvāḥ | Vācham eva ebhyaḥ prahiṇavāma | sā naḥ saha somena āgamishyati" iti | tebhyo Vācham prāhiṇvan sā enān saha somena āgachhat. And in xi. 7, 2, 8, it is said: "The soma existed in the sky. The Gāyatrī became a bird, and brought it" (divi vai Somaḥ āsīt taṁ gāyatrī vayo bhūtvā "harat). See also the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iii. 4, 3, 13, and iii. 6, 2, 2–18, towards the close of which passage, as well as in iii. 9, 3, 18, the Gandharvas are spoken of as the guardians of the soma (somarakshāḥ); and Taitt. Sanh. vi. 1, 6, 1, 5.

(4) Soma's wives.

The Taitt. Sanh., ii. 3, 5, 1, relates that Prajāpati had thirty-three daughters whom he gave to king Soma. Soma, however, frequented the society of Rohiṇī only. This aroused the jealousy of the rest, who returned to their father. Soma followed, and asked that they should go back to him, to which, however, Prajāpati would not agree till Soma had promised to associate with them all equally. He agreed; but again behaved as before, when he was seized with consumption, etc. (Prajāpates trayastriṁśad duhitaraḥ āsan | tāḥ Somāya rājne 'dadāt | tāsāṁ Rohiṇīm upait | tāḥ īrshyantīḥ punar agachhan | tāḥ anvait | tāḥ punar ayāchata | tāḥ asmai na punar adadāt | so 'bravīd "ṛitam amīshva yathā samāvachhaḥ upaishyāmi atha te punar dāsyāmi" iti | sa ṛitam āmīt | tāḥ asmai punar adadāt | tāsāṁ Rohiṇīm eva upait | yakshma ārchhat). In the Taitt. Br. ii. 3, 10, 1 ff., another story is told of Soma. Prajāpati created him; and after him the three Vedas, which he took into his hand. Now, Sītā Sāvitrī loved Soma, while he loved Śraddhā. Sītā came to her father Prajāpati, and, saluting him, asked to be allowed to approach him with her complaint. She loved Soma, she said, while he loved Śraddhā. Prajāpati made for her a paste formed of a sweet smelling substance, to which he imparted potency by the recitation of certain formulas, and then painted it upon her forehead. She then returned to Soma, who invited her to approach him. She desired him to promise her his society, and to tell her what he had in his hand; whereupon he gave her the three Vedas; and in consequence women always ask for some gift as a price for their embraces, etc. The Brāhmaṇa goes on to recommend the use of the same paste, prepared with the same formulas, as a specific for producing love or good will (Prajāpatiḥ Somaṁ rājānam asṛijata | taṁ trayo vedāḥ anv asṛijyanta | tān haste 'kuruta | atha ha Sītā Sāvitrī Somaṁ rājānaṁ chakame | Śraddhām u sa chakame | sā ha pitaram Prajāpatim upasasāra | taṁ ha uvācha "namas te astu bhagavaḥ | upa tvā ayāni (2) pra tvā āpadye | Somaṁ vai rājānaṁ kāmaye Śraddhām u sa kāmayate" iti | tasyai u ha sthāgaram alankāraṁ kalpayitvā daśahotāram purastād vyākhyāya chaturhotāraṁ dakshiṇataḥ panchahotāram paśchāt shaḍdhotāram uttarataḥ saptahotāram uparishṭāt sambhāraiś patnibhiś cha mukhe alankṛitya | 3. Asya arddhaṁ vavrāja | tāṁ ha udīkshya uvācha "upa mā varttasva" iti | taṁ ha uvācha "bho gantuṁ (the commentator explains the phrase as if he read bhogaṁ tu) me ākakshva | etan me ākakshva yat te pāṇāv" iti | tasyai u trīn vedān pradadau | tasmād u ha striyo bhogam eva hārayante).

(5) Properties ascribed to the soma-juice or its presiding deity.

The juice of this plant is said to be an immortal[398] draught, i. 84, 4 (jyeshṭham amartyam madam) which the gods love, ix. 85, 2 (daksho devānām asi hi priyo madaḥ); ix. 109, 15 (pibanti asya viśve devāso gobhiḥ śrītasya nṛibhiḥ sutasya),[399] to be medicine for a sick man, viii. 61, 17 (tad āturasya bheshajam). All the gods drink of it, ix. 109, 15 (pibanti asya viśve devāsaḥ). The god who is its personification is said to clothe whatever is naked, and to heal whatever is sick; through him the blind sees, and the lame walks abroad, viii. 68, 2 (abhy ūrṇoti yan nagnam bhishakti viśvaṁ yat turam | pra īṁ andhaḥ khyat niḥ śroṇo bhūt); x. 25, 11. He is the guardian of men's bodies, and occupies their every member, viii. 48, 9 (tvaṁ hi nas tanvaḥ soma gopāḥ gātre gātre nishasattha nṛichakshāḥ).

[398] This means, according to Sāyaṇa, that it has no deadly effects, like other intoxicating drinks (somapānajanyo vadho madāntara-vat māraka na bhavati ity arthaḥ).

[399] The Taitt. Br. i. 3, 3, 2, says that soma is the best nourishment of the gods, and wine of men, and ibid. 4, that soma is a male and the wine a female, and the two make a pair (etad vai devānām paramam annaṁ yat somaḥ etad manushyāṇām yat surā | 4. Pumān vai somaḥ strī surā | tan mithunam).

(6) Divine powers attributed to Soma.

A great variety of divine attributes and operations are ascribed to Soma. As Professor Whitney observes, he is "addressed as a god in the highest strains of adulation and veneration; all powers belong to him; all blessings are besought of him, as his to bestow" (Journ. Amer. Or. Soc. iii. 299). He is said to be asura, divine (ix. 73, 1; ix. 74, 7), and the soul of sacrifice, ātmā yajñasya (ix. 2, 10; ix. 6, 8). He is immortal, amṛita (i. 43, 9), and confers immortality on gods and men, i. 91, 1, 6, 18; viii. 48, 3, quoted above, p. 90, note; ix. 106, 8 (tvām devāso amṛitāya kam papuḥ); ix. 108, 3 (tvaṁ hi anga daivyā pavamāna janimāni dyumattama amṛitatvāya ghoshayaḥ); ix. 109, 3 (eva amṛitāya mahe kshayāya sa śukro arśha divyaḥ pīyūshaḥ).[400] In a passage (ix. 113, 7 ff.) where the joys of paradise are more distinctly anticipated and more fervently implored than in most other parts of the Rigveda, Soma is addressed as the god from whom the gift of future felicity is expected. Thus it is there said: yatra jyotir ajasraṁ yasmin loke svar hitam | tasmin māṁ dhehi pavamāna amṛite loke akshite | yatra rājā Vaivasvato yatrāvarodhanaṁ divaḥ | yatrāmūr yahvatīr āpas tatra mām amṛitaṁ kṛidhi | 7. "Place me, o purified god, in that everlasting and imperishable world where there is eternal light and glory. O Indu (soma), flow for Indra. 8. Make me immortal in the world where king Vaivasvata (Yama, the son of Vivasvat,) lives, where is the innermost sphere of the sky, where those great waters flow." The three following verses may be reserved for the section on Yama.

Soma exhilarates Varuṇa, Mitra, Indra, Vishṇu, the Maruts, the other gods, Vāyu, Heaven and Earth, ix. 90, 5 (matsi Śoma Varuṇam matsi Mitram matsi Indram Indo pavamāna Vishṇum | matsi śardho mārutam matsi devān matsi mahām Indram Indo madāya); ix. 97, 42 (matsi Vāyum ishṭaye rādhase cha matsi Mitrā-varuṇā pūyamānaḥ | matsi śardho mārutam matsi devān matsi Dyāvā-pṛithivī deva Soma). Both gods and men resort to him, saying that his juice is sweet, viii. 48, 1 (viśve yaṁ devāḥ uta martyāso madhu bruvanto abhi sancharanti). By him (but see p. 270) the Ādityas are strong, and the earth vast, x. 85, 2 (somena Ādityāḥ balinaḥ somena pṛithivī mahī). He is the friend, [400] In regard to the manner in which the gods acquired immortality, see the S'atap Br. ix. 5, 1, 1 ff. quoted above p. 14, note 21.

helper, and soul of Indra, iv. 28, 1 (tvā yujā tava tat soma sakhye Indro apo manave sasrutas kaḥ | 2. Tvā yujā ni khidat Sūryasya Indraś chakraṁ sahasā sadyaḥ Indo); ix. 85, 3 (ātmā Indrasya bhavasi); x. 25, 9 (Indrasyendo śivaḥ sakhā), whose vigour he stimulates, ix. 76, 2 (Indrasya śushmam īrayan), and whom he succours in his conflicts with Vṛitra, ix. 61, 22 (yaḥ Índram āvitha Vṛitrāya hantave). He rides in the same chariot with Indra, Indreṇa saratham (ix. 87, 9; ix. 103, 5). He has, however, winged mares of his own, and a team like Vāyu, ix. 86, 37 (īśānaḥ imā bhuvanāni vīyase yujānaḥ Indo haritaḥ suparṇyaḥ); ix. 88, 3 (vāyur na yo niyutvān ishṭayāmā). He ascends his filter in place of a car, and is armed with a thousand-pointed shaft, ix. 83, 5; ix. 86, 40 (pavitra-rathaḥ sahasrabh ṛishṭiḥ). His weapons which, like a hero, he grasps in his hand, ix. 76, 2 (śūro na dhatte āyudhā gabhastyoḥ), are sharp and terrible, ix. 61, 30 (bhīmāni āyudhā tigmāni), and his bow swift-darting, ix. 90, 3 (tigmāyudhaḥ kshipradhanvā). He is the slayer of Vṛitra, vṛitrahan, or vṛitrahantama (i. 95, 5; ix. 24, 6; ix. 25, 3; ix. 28, 3; x. 25, 9), and, like Indra, the destroyer of foes, and overthrower of cities, ix. 61, 2; ix. 88, 4 (Indro na yo mahā karmāṇi chakrir hantā vṛitrāṇām asi Soma pūrbhit). In ix. 5, 9, he appears to receive the epithet of prajāpati, lord of creatures. He is the creator and father of the gods, ix. 42, 4 (krandan devān ajījanat); ix. 86, 10 (pitā devānāṁ janitā vibhuvasuḥ); ix. 87, 2 (pitā devānāṁ janitā sudakshaḥ); ix. 109, 4; the generator of hymns, of Dyaus, of Pṛithivī, of Agni, of Sūrya, of Indra, and of Vishṇu, ix. 96, 5 (Somaḥ pavate janitā matīnāṁ janitā Divo janitā Pṛithivyāḥ | janitā Agner janitā Sūryasya janitā Indrasya janitota Vishṇoḥ). He dispels the darkness, i. 91, 22 (tvaṁ jyotishā vi tamo vavartha); ix. 66, 24 (śukraṁ jyotir ajījanat | kṛishṇā tamāṁsi janghanat), lights up the gloomy nights, vi. 39, 3 (ayaṁ dyotayad adyuto vi aktūn); and has created and lighted up the sun, the great luminary common to all mankind, vi. 44, 23 (ayaṁ sūrye adadhāj jyotir antaḥ); ix. 61, 16 (pavamāno ajījanad divaś chitraṁ na tanyatum | jyotir vaiśvānaram bṛihat); ix. 97, 41 (ajanayat sūrye jyotir Induḥ); ix. 107, 7 (ā sūryaṁ rohayo divi); ix. 110, 3 (ajījano hi pavamāna Sūryam). He stretched out the atmosphere, i. 91, 22 (tvam ā tatantha uru antarikshaṁ); vi. 47, 3 f.; and in concert with the Fathers (Pitṛis), the Sky and the Earth, viii. 48, 13 (tvaṁ Soma pitṛi-

bhiḥ saṁvidāno anu dyāvāpṛithivī ā tatantha). He is the upholder of the sky and the sustainer of the earth, keeping the two apart, vi. 44, 24 (ayaṁ dyāvāpṛithivī vi skabhāyat); vi. 47, 5 (ayam mahān mahatā skambhanena ud dyām astabhnād vṛishabho marutvān); ix. 87, 2 (vishṭambho divo dharuṇaḥ pṛithivyāḥ); ix. 89, 6; ix. 109, 6. He produced in the sacrifices the two divine worlds, which are kindly disposed to men, ix. 98, 9 (sa vāṁ yajneshu ṛānavī Indur janishṭa rodasī | devo devī). He is king of gods and men, ix. 97, 24 (rājā devānām uta martyānām), elevated over all worlds [or beings] like the divine sun, ix. 54, 3 (ayaṁ visvāni tishṭhati punāno bhuvanopari | somo devo na sūryaḥ). All creatures are in his hand, ix. 89, 6 (viśvāḥ uta kshitayo haste asya).[401] His laws are like those of king Varuṇa, i. 91, 3; ix. 88, 8 (rājno nu te Varuṇasya vratāni); and he is prayed to forgive their violation, and to be gracious as a father to a son, and to deliver from death, viii. 48, 9 (yat te vayam pramināma vratāni sa no mṛila sushakhā deva vasyaḥ); x. 25, 3 (uta vratāni Soma te pra aham mināmi pākyā | adha piteva sūnave vi vo made mṛila no abhi chid vadhād vivakshase). He is thousand-eyed, ix. 60, 1, 2 (sahasra-chakshas), and sees and knows all creatures, and hurls the irreligious into the abyss, ix. 73, 8 (vidvān sa viśvā bhuvanā 'bhi paśyati ava ajushtān vidhyati karte avratān); and guards the lives of all moving beings as a cowherd tends his cattle, x. 25, 6 (paśuṁ na Soma rakshasi purutrā vishṭhitaṁ jagat | samākṛiṇoshi jīvase vi vo made viśvā sampaśyan bhuvanā vivakshase). He is the chief and most fiery of the formidable, the most heroic of heroes, the most bountiful of the beneficent, and as a warrior he is always victorious,[402] ix. 66, 16 (mahān asi [401] Compare some additional passages quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 98 f.

[402] In ix. 96, 16, 19, his weapons are referred to; in vi. 44, 22, he is said to have robbed his malignant father of his weapons and his magical devices (ayaṁ svasya pitur āyudhāni Indur amushṇād aśivasya māyāḥ). It is related in the Ait. Br. i. 14, that there was formerly war between the gods and the Asuras. They fought together in the east, south, west, and north, and in all these quarters the Asuras were victorious. In the north-east, however, the gods were not overcome, for that is "the unconquerable region." The gods ascribed their former defeats to the fact of their having no king, and agreed to make Soma their monarch, after which they were victorious on all the points of the compass (Devāsurāḥ vai eshu lokeshu samayatanta | tataḥ etasyām prāchyāṁ diśi ayatanta | tāṁs tato 'surāḥ ajayan | .... te udīchyāṁ prāchyām diśi ayatanta | te tato na parājayanta | sā eshā dig aparājitā | .... te devāḥ abruvann "arājatayā vai no jayanti | rājānaṁ karavāmahai" iti | "tathā" iti | te somaṁ rājānam akurvan | te somena rājnā sarvāḥ diśo 'jayan).

soma jyeshṭhaḥ ugrāṇām Indo ojishṭhaḥ | yudhvā san śaśvad jigetha | 17. Yaḥ ugrebhyaś chid ojīyān śūrebhyaś chit śūrataraḥ | bhūridābhyaś chid mamhīyān). He conquers for his worshippers cows, chariots, horses, gold, heaven, water,—a thousand desirable things, ix. 78, 4 (gojin naḥ somo rathajid hiraṇyajit svarjid abjit pavate sahasrajit), and every thing, viii. 68, 1 (viśvajit). He is a wise rishi, viii. 68, 1 (ṛishir vipraḥ kāvyena); strong, skilful, omniscient, prolific, glorious, i. 91, 2 (tvaṁ Soma kratubhiḥ sukratur bhūs tvaṁ dakshaiḥ sudaksho viśvavedāḥ | tvaṁ vṛishā vṛishatvebhir mahitvā dyumnebhir dyumnī abhavo nṛichakshāḥ). He is the priest of the gods, the leader of poets, a rishi among sages, a bull among wild animals, a falcon among kites, an axe in the woods, ix. 96, 6 (brahmā devānām padavīḥ kavīnām ṛishir viprāṇām mahisho mṛigāṇām | śyeno gṛidhrāṇāṁ svadhitir vanānām). He is an unconquerable protector from enemies; i. 91, 21 (ashāḷhaṁ yutsu pṛitanāsu paprim); x. 25, 7 (tvaṁ naḥ Soma viśvato gopāḥ adābhyo bhava | sedha rājann apa sridhaḥ). If he desires that his votaries shall live, they do not die, i. 91, 6 (tvaṁ cha soma no vaśo jīvātuṁ na marāmahe). In viii. 48, 7, he is prayed to prolong their lives, as the sun the days (Soma rājan pra naḥ āyūṁshi tārīr ahānīva sūryo vāsarāṇi). In x. 59, 4, he is prayed not to abandon the worshipper to death (mo shu naḥ soma mṛityave parā dāḥ). The friend of a god like him cannot suffer, i. 91, 8 (na rishyet tvātavaḥ sakhā). The friendship and intimacy of such a god is eagerly desired, ix. 66, 18 (vṛiṇīmahe sakhyāya vṛiṇīmahe yujyāya). In x. 30, 5, he is said to rejoice in the society of the waters, as a man in that of beautiful young women (yābhiḥ somo modate harshate cha kalyāṇībhir yuvatibhir na maryaḥ).

(7) Soma associated with other gods.

Soma is associated with Agni as an object of adoration in i. 93, 1 ff. In verse 5 of that hymn those two gods are said to have placed the luminaries in the sky (yuvam etāni divi rochanāni Agniś cha Soma sukratū adhattam). In the same way Soma and Pūshan are conjoined in ii. 40, 1 ff., where various attributes and functions of a magnificent character are ascribed to them. Thus, in verse 1, they are said to be the generators of wealth, and of heaven and earth, to have been born the guardians of the whole universe, and to have been made by the gods the centre of immortality (jananā rayīnāṁ jananā divo jananā pṛithivyāḥ | jātau viśvasya bhuvanasya gopau devāḥ akṛiṇvann amṛitasya nābhim). The one has made his abode in the sky, and the other on the earth, and in the atmosphere (verse 4). The one has produced all the worlds, and the other moves onward beholding all things (verse 5) (4. Divi anyaḥ sadanaṁ chakre uchchā pṛithivyām anyo adhi antarikshe | 5. Viśvāni anyo bhuvanā jajāna viśvam anyo abhichakshāṇaḥ eti). In vi. 72, and vii. 104, Soma and Indra are celebrated in company. In the first of these hymns they are said to dispel darkness, to destroy revilers, to bring the sun and the light, to prop up the sky with supports, and to have spread out mother earth (verse 1. Yuvaṁ Sūryaṁ vividathur yuvaṁ svar viśvā tamāṁsi ahataṁ nidaś cha | 2. Vāsayathaḥ ushāsam ut sūryam nayatho jyotishā saha | upa dyāṁ skambhathuḥ skambhanena aprathatam pṛithivīm mātaraṁ vi). In vii. 104, their vengeance is invoked against Rākshases, Yātudhānas, and other enemies.

Hymn vi. 74, is dedicated to the honour of Soma and Rudra conjointly. The two gods, who are said to be armed with sharp weapons (tigmāyudhau tigmāhetī) are there supplicated for blessings to man and beast, for healing remedies, and for deliverance from sin (śaṁ no bhūtaṁ dvipade śaṁ chatushpade | etāni asme viśvā tanūshu bheshajāni dhattam | ava syatam munchatam yan no asti tanūshu baddham kṛitam eno asmat).

(8) Soma in the post-vedic age a name of the moon.

In the post-vedic age the name Soma came to be commonly applied to the moon and its regent. Even in the Rig-veda, some traces of this application seem to be discoverable. Thus in x. 85, 2 ff. (which, however, Professor Roth regards as of comparatively modern date: Ill. of Nir. p. 147), there appears to be an allusion to the double sense of the word: 2. Somenādityāḥ balinaḥ Somena pṛithivī mahī | atho nakshatrāṇām eshām upasthe Somaḥ āhitaḥ | 3. Somaṁ manyate papivān yat sampiṁshanti oshadhim | Somaṁ yam brahmāṇo vidur na tasyāśnāti kaśchana | 4. Āchhadvidhānair gupito bārhataiḥ Soma rakshitaḥ | grāvṇām it śṛinvan tishṭhasi na te aśnāti pārthivaḥ | 5. Yat tvā devāḥ prapibanti tataḥ āpyāyase punaḥ | Vāyuḥ Somasya rakshitā samānām māsaḥ ākṛitiḥ |

"2. By Soma the Ādityas are strong; by Soma the earth is great; and Soma is placed in the centre of these stars. 3. When they crush the plant, he who drinks regards it as Soma. Of him whom the priests regard as Soma (the moon) no one drinks. 4. Protected by those who shelter thee, and preserved by thy guardians,[403] thou, Soma, hearest the sound of the crushing-stones; but no earthly being tastes thee. 5. When the gods drink thee, o god, thou increasest again. Vāyu is the guardian of Soma: the month is a part of the years."[404] In the Atharva-veda the following half-verse occurs, xi, 6, 7: Somo mā devo munchatu yam āhuś chandramāḥ iti | "May the god Soma free me, he whom they call the moon." And in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 6, 4, 5; xi. 1, 3, 2; xi. 1, 3, 4, and xi. 1, 4, 4, we have the words: Esha vai Somo rājā devānām annaṁ yat chandramāḥ | "This king Soma, who is the moon, is the food of the gods." Similarly in xi. 1, 3, 5: chandramāḥ vai Somo devānām annam | "Soma is the moon, the food of the gods." See also i. 6, 3, 24: Sūryaḥ eva āgneyaḥ | chandramāḥ saumyaḥ | "The sun has the nature of Agni, the moon of Soma;" and xii. 1, 1, 2: Somo vai chandramāḥ | "Soma is the moon." In v. 3, 3, 12, and in ix. 4, 3, 16, Soma is said to be the king of the Brāhmans (Somo 'smākam brāhmaṇānāṁ rājā). In the Vishṇu Purāṇa (book i. chap. 22, p. 85 of Wilson's translation, vol. 2, Dr. Hall's ed.) the double character of Soma is indicated in these words: "Brahmā appointed Soma to be monarch of the stars and planets, of Brāhmans and of plants, of sacrifices and of austere devotions" (nakshattra-grahaviprāṇāṁ vīrudhāṁ chāpy aśeshataḥ | Somaṁ rājye dadau Brahmā yajnānaṁ tapasām api).

[403] The word so rendered is bārhataiḥ. In the Lexicon of Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v., its sense is said to be doubtful. Professor Weber (Ind. St. v. 178 ff. where these verses, with the rest of the hymn in which they occur, is translated and annotated) renders it "lofty ones" (Erhabene). Langlois makes it "overseers." The moon is mentioned again in verses 18 and 19. In R.V. viii. 71, 8, Soma sparkling in the cups is compared to the moon shining on the waters (yo apsu chandramāḥ iva somaś chamūshu dadriśe | piba id asya tvam īśishe). See Professor Benfey's note on R.V. i. 84, 15, in his Orient and Occident, ii. 246.

[404] Weber and Langlois take māsaḥ for a nominative. Böhtlingk and Roth cite the passage under mās, thus making it a genitive.

SECTION XVII.

BṚIHASPATI AND BRAHMAṆASPATI.

I will commence my description of this god with a translation of the account given of him in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon: "Bṛihaspati, alternating with Brahmaṇaspati, is the name of a deity in whom the action of the worshipper upon the gods is personified. He is the suppliant, the sacrificer, the priest, who intercedes with the gods on behalf of men, and protects them against the wicked. Hence he appears as the prototype of the priests, and the priestly order; and is also designated as the purohita of the divine community." The ancient Indian conception of this deity is more fully explained in Professor Roth's dissertation on "Brahma and the Brahmans,"[405] in the first volume of the Journal of the German Oriental Society, pp. 66 ff., where the author well points out the essential difference between the original idea represented in this god and those expressed in most of the other and older divinities of the Veda, consisting in the fact that the latter are personifications of various departments of nature, or of physical forces, while the former is the product of moral ideas, and an impersonation of the power of devotion. From this paper I extract the following remarks: "Brahma, on the other hand [in contradistinction to deva], has an entirely different point of departure, and significance. Its original sense, as easily discovered in the Vedic hymns, is that of prayer; not praise or thanksgiving, but that species of invocation which, with the force of the will directed to the god, desires to draw him to the worshipper, and to obtain satisfaction from him. It denotes the impetuous supplication which was natural to that ancient faith, and which sought, as it were, to wrest from the god the boon which it demanded" (p. 67). "Immediately derived from this neuter noun brahma is the name of the god Brahmaṇaspati, who is, in many respects, a remarkable deity. His entire character is such as does not belong to the earliest stage of the Vedic mythical creations, but points to a second shape which the religious consciousness endeavoured to take, without, however, being able actually to carry it fully into effect. The entire series of the principal divinities of the Veda belongs to the domain of natural symbolism, which appears here more decided, unmixed, and transparent than perhaps among any other people of the Indo-germanic race, but which, on this account, is also less rich in references to other departments of life, and has not been able to get beyond a certain uniformity. But Brahmaṇaspati is one of the divine beings who do not stand immediately within the circle of physical life, but form the transition from it to the moral life of the human spirit. In him, the lord or protector of prayer, is seen the power and dignity of devotion, the energetic action of the will upon the gods who are the personifications of natural objects, and immediately upon nature. And it may still be plainly perceived in what manner this god, as a new-comer, was introduced into the circle of mythological beings already established, and could only find a place by the side of the other gods, or by supplanting them.[404]

[405] Portions of this paper were long ago translated by me in the Benares Magazine.

"Indra is the highest god of the Vedic faith, or, at least, the one whose action has the most immediate bearing on the welfare of men. He is the god of the friendly noon-day firmament, which, after all obscurations, again shines anew, on which the fertility of the earth and the tranquility and enjoyment of human existence depend. And the prayer which most frequently recurs in the Veda, and is addressed to Indra, is that he will counteract the attempts of the cloud-demon who threatens to carry away the fertilizing waters of the sky, or holds them shut up in the caverns of the mountains, will pour forth those waters, fertilize the earth, and bestow nourishment on men and cattle. Now, if the essence of the god Brahmaṇaspati really expresses, as the name imports, the victorious power of prayer, then we should find him in this circle of myths, more than in any other. And in point of fact he does appear along with Indra in that conflict of his against the fiend, and that too in such a way that a department of labour is assigned to him, which, in most of the other hymns, is appropriated exclusively to Indra. And, finally, in some few passages, it is he who, all alone, breaks through the caverns of Bala, in order to bring to light the concealed treasures of the fertilizing water, or, according to the figurative language employed, the cows with abundant milk" (pp. 71 ff.).

[404] "All the gods whose names are compounded with pati ('lord of'—) must be reckoned among the more recent, e.g. Vāchaspati, Vāstoshpati, Kshetrasya pati. They were the products of reflection.

After quoting R.V. ii. 24, 3 f. (which will be cited below) Professor Roth proceeds: "It is therefore brahma, prayer, with which the god breaks open the hiding place of the enemy. Prayer pierces through to the object of its desire, and attains it. And if now we should seek to discover, in the natural phenomenon to which reference is made, viz. in the storm, that force which so mightily breaks through the hostile bulwarks, it is the lightning alone which can be the outward symbol of the victorious god. Brahmaṇaspati is, therefore, called the 'shining,' the 'gold-coloured' (v. 43, 12). The thunder is his voice" (p. 74). Again: "Brahmaṇaspati's domain extends still further; it reaches as far as the efficacy of invocation. He succours also in battle (R.V. vi. 73, 2)" (p. 74). "And, finally, a widely extended creative power is ascribed to him in the remarkable verses of a hymn of the tenth mandala (68, 8 ff.) attributed to Ayāsya of the race of Angiras" (p. 75).

(1) Passages in which Bṛihaspati and Brahmaṇaspati are celebrated.

I subjoin one entire hymn and portions of some others, which will illustrate the characteristics ascribed to Brahmaṇaspati in the Rigveda, and will shew how that name alternates with Bṛihaspati in different verses of the same composition.

R.V. ii. 23, 1. Gaṇānāṁ tvā gaṇapatiṁ havāmahe kaviṁ kavīnām upamaśravastamam | jyeshṭharāj̣aṁ brahmaṇām Brahmaṇas pate ā naḥ śṛiṇvann ūtaye sīda sadanam | 2. Devāś chit te asurya prachetaso Bṛi̇haspate yajniyam bhāgam ānaśuḥ | usrāḥ iva sūryo jyotishā maho viśveshām ij janitā brahmaṇām asi | 3. Ā vibādhya parirapas tamāṁsi cha jyotishmantaṁ ratham ṛitasya tishṭhasi | Bṛihaspate bhīmam amitradambhanaṁ rakshohaṇaṁ

gotrabhidaṁ svarvidam | 4. Sunītibhir nayasi trāyase janaṁ yas tubhyaṁ dāśād na tam aṁho aśnavat | brahmadvishas tapano manyumīr asi Bṛihaspate mahi tat te mahitvanam | 5. Na tam aṁho na duritaṁ kutaśchana nārātayas titirur na dvayāvinaḥ | viśvāḥ id asmād dhvaraso vi bādhase yaṁ sugopāḥ rakshasi Brahmaṇaspate | 6. Tvaṁ no gopāḥ pathikṛid vichakshaṇas tava vratāya matibhir jarāmahe | Bṛihaspate yo no abhi hvaro dadhe svā tam marmartu duchhunā harasvatī | 7. Uta vā yo no marchayād anāgaso arātīvā martaḥ sānuko vṛikaḥ | Bṛihaspate apa taṁ vartaya pathaḥ sugaṁ no asyai devavītaye kṛidhi | 8. Trātāraṁ tvā tanūnāṁ havāmahe avaspartar adhivaktāram asmayum | Bṛihaspate devanido ni barhaya mā durevāḥ uttaraṁ sumnam un naśan | 9 (=Nir. iii. 11). Tvayā vayam suvṛidhā Brahmaṇaspate spārhā vasu manushyā ā dadīmahi | yāḥ no dūre taḷito yāḥ arātayo abhi santi jambhaya tāḥ anapnasaḥ | 10. Tvayā vayam uttamaṁ dhīmahi vayo Bṛihaspate papriṇā sasninā yujā | mā no duśśaṁso abhidipsur īśata pra suśaṁsāḥ matibhis tārishīmahi | 11. Anānudo vṛishabho jagmir āhavaṁ nishṭaptā śatrum pṛitanāsu sāsahiḥ | asi satyaḥ ṛiṇayāḥ Brahmaṇaspate ugrasya chid damitā vīḷuharshiṇaḥ | 12. Adevena manasā yo rishyaṇyati śāśām ugro manyamāno jighāṁsati | Bṛihaspate mā praṇak tasya no vadho ni karma manyuṁ durevasya śardhataḥ | 13. Bhareshu havyo namasopasadyo gantā vājeshu sanitā dhanam dhanam | viśvāḥ id aryo abhidipsvo mṛidho Bṛihaspatir vi vavarha rathān iva | 14. Tejishṭhayā tapanī rakshasas tapa ye tvā nide dadhire dṛishṭavīryam | āvis tat kṛishva yad asat te ukthyam Bṛihaspate vi parirapo ardaya | 15. Bṛihaspate ati yad aryo arhād dyumad vibhāti kratumaj janeshu | yad dīdayat śavasā ṛitaprajāta tad asmāsu draviṇam dhehi chitram | 16. Mā naḥ stenebhyo ye abhi druhas pade nirāmiṇo ripavo 'nneshu jagṛidhuḥ | ā devānām ohate vi vrayo hṛidi Bṛihaspate na paraḥ sāmno viduḥ | 17. Viśvebhyo hi tvā bhuvanebhyas pari Tvashṭā 'janat sāmnaḥ sāmnaḥ kaviḥ | sa ṛiṇachid ṛiṇayāḥ Brahmaṇaspatir druho hantā mahaḥ ṛitasya dhartari | 18. Tava śriye vi ajihīta parvato gavāṁ gotram udasṛijo yad Angiraḥ | Indreṇa yujā tamasā parivṛitam Bṛihaspate nir apām aubjo arṇavam | 19. Brahmaṇaspate tvam asya yantā sūktasya bodhi tanayaṁ cha jinva | viśvaṁ tad bhadraṁ yad avanti devāḥ bṛihad vadema vidathe suvīrāḥ |

Although the translation which I subjoin is very imperfect, and I am uncertain as to the sense of many words and phrases occurring in it, the general sense is clear and undoubted:

"We invoke thee, Brahmaṇaspati, the commander of hosts,[405] the wise, the most highly renowned of sages, the monarch of prayers; do thou hear us, and take thy place on our hearth, bringing succour. 2. Even the gods have, o divine Bṛihaspati, obtained the worshipful portion of thee, who art wise: as the great sun by his light generates rays, so art thou the generator of all prayers. 3. Overcoming demons and darkness, thou standest upon the luminous, awful, foe-subduing, rakshas-slaying, cow-pen-cleaving, heaven-reaching, chariot of the ceremonial. 4. By thy wise guidance thou leadest and preservest men; no calamity can befal him who offers gifts to thee; thou vexest, and overcomest the wrath of, the enemy of devotion; this, o Bṛihaspati, constitutes thy greatness. 5. No calamity or misfortune from any quarter, neither foes nor deceivers, can overwhelm the man—(thou repellest from him all evil spirits)—whom thou, a sure protector, dost guard, o Brahmaṇaspati. 6. Thou art the wise guardian who opens for us a way; with hymns we pay homage to thy sovereign power. Bṛihaspati, may his own hot ill luck destroy the man who devises evil against us. 7. Whatever hostile mortal, powerful[406] and rapacious, assails us who are innocent, do thou, Bṛihaspati, turn him away from our path, and enable us easily to reach the feast of the gods. 8. We invoke thee, o deliverer, who art the protector of our bodies, and our partial patron; destroy, o Bṛihaspati, the revilers of the gods; let not the wicked attain high prosperity. 9. May we through thee, our prosperer, o Brahmaṇaspati, acquire enviable riches profitable for men. Crush the foes, whether far or near, who assail us [and make them] destitute. 10. Through thee, o Bṛihaspati, a liberal and generous friend, may we obtain the highest vigour. Let not our malicious enemy gain the mastery over us; may we who are friendly in our intentions overcome them by our hymns. 11. Stubborn, strong, he enters into the battle, he vexes the foe, he overpowers him in conflict. Thou, Brahmaṇaspati, art a real avenger of guilt, a subduer even of the fierce and vehemently passionate man. 12. Let us not be struck by the shaft of the man who, with ungodly mind, seeks to injure us, who, esteeming himself fierce, seeks to slay (any of thy) worshippers;

[405] Compare the epithet sarvagaṇa in v. 51, 12.

[406] Sānuka = samuchhrita, according to Sayaṇa.

we repel the rage of the presumptuous and malicious man. 13. Bṛihaspati, who is to be invoked in battles, to be worshipped with reverence, who frequents conflicts, who bestows all our wealth, has overturned like chariots all the malicious enemies who seek to wrong us. 14. Consume with thy sharpest burning bolt the rakshases who have mocked at thee, whose prowess is well proved; manifest that power of thine which shall be deserving of praise; destroy the demons. 15. Bṛihaspati, whose essence is sacred truth, bestow upon us that brilliant wealth which shall excel that of our foe, which appears brilliant, and possesses strength, which shines with power. 16. Do not (abandon) us to the robbers who hold the position of our assailants, persistent enemies, who greedily desire our food; — such a man in his heart contemplates the abandonment of the gods; — they do not, o Bṛihaspati, know the excellence of the sāman. 17. For Tvashṭṛi, who knows all sāman-verses, has generated thee to be above all beings. Brahmaṇaspati is the avenger and punisher of guilt, the slayer of the injurious man in the interest of the upholder of the great ceremonial. 18. When thou, Angiras, didst open up the cow-pen, the mountain yielded to thy glory; with Indra as thine ally, thou, Bṛihaspati, didst let loose the stream of the waters, which had been covered with darkness. 19. Brahmaṇaspati, thou art its controller; take notice of our hymn and prosper our offspring; all that the gods protect is successful. May we, blest with strong men, speak with power at the festival."

R.V. ii. 24, 1. Semām aviddhi prabhṛitiṁ yaḥ īśishe ayā vidhema navayā mahā girā | yathā no mīḍhvān stavate sakhā tava Bṛihaspate śishadhaḥ sotā no matim | 2. Yo nantvāni anamad ni ojasā utādardar manyunā śambarāṇi vi | prāchyāvayad achyutā Brahmaṇaspatir ā chāviśad vasumantaṁ vi parvatam | 3. Tad devānāṁ devatamāya kartvam aśrathran dṛilhā avradanta vīḷitā | ud gāḥ ājad abhinad brahmaṇā valam agūhat tamo vi achakshayat svaḥ | 4 (= Nir. x. 13). Aśmāsyam avatam Brahmaṇaspatir madhudhāram abhi yam ojasā 'tṛiṇat | tam eva viśve papire svardṛiśo bahu sākaṁ sisichur utsam udriṇam | . . . . 8. Ṛitajyena kshipreṇa Brahmaṇaspatir yatra vashṭi pra tad aśnoti dhanvanā | tasya sādhvīr ishavo yābhir asyati nṛichakshaso dṛiśaye karṇayonayaḥ |

1. "Do thou who rulest receive this our offering [of praise]; let us worship thee with this new and grand song; as thy bountiful friend among us celebrates thee, do thou also, Bṛihaspati, fulfil our desire. 2.

Brahmaṇaspati, who by his power brought low the things which should be overthrown, and by his wrath split open the clouds, has also cast down the things which were unshaken, he has penetrated the mountain which was full of riches. 3. This was an exploit fit for the most godlike of the gods to achieve; firm things were loosened, and strong things yielded to him; he drove forth the cows, by prayer he split Vala, he chased away the darkness, and revealed the sky.[407] 4. All the celestials drank of the stone-covered fountain, yielding a sweet stream, which Brahmaṇaspati split open; they poured out together an abundant supply of water. . . . . 8. Wherever Brahmaṇaspati desires, thither he reaches with his well-stringed, swift-darting bow. Excellent are his arrows wherewith he shoots; they are keen-eyed to behold men, and drawn back to the ear."

iv. 50, 1. Yas tastambha sahasā vi jmo antān Bṛihaspatis trishadastho raveṇa | tam pratnāsaḥ ṛishayo dīdhyānāḥ puro viprāḥ dadhire mandrajihvam | 4. Bṛihaspatiḥ prathamaṁ jāyamāno maho jyotishaḥ parame vyoman | saptāsyas tuvijāto raveṇa vi saptaraśmir adhamat tamāṁsi | 5. Sa sushṭubhā sa ṛikvatā gaṇena Valaṁ ruroja phaligaṁ raveṇa | Bṛihaspatir usriyāḥ havyasūdaḥ kanikradad vāvaśatīr udājat | 6. Eva pitre viśvadevāya vṛishṇe yajñair vidhema namasā havirbhiḥ | Bṛihaspate suprajāḥ vīravanto vayaṁ syāma patayo rayīnām | 7. Sa id rājā pratijanyāni viśvā śushmeṇa tasthāv abhi vīryeṇa | Bṛihaspatiṁ yaḥ subhṛitam bibharti valgūyati vandate pūrvabhājam |

"1. Contemplating Bṛihaspati with the pleasant tongue, who occupies three abodes, and by his power and his voice holds apart the ends of the earth, the ancient rishis placed him in their front. . . . . 4.[408] Bṛihaspati, when first born from the great light in the highest heaven, seven-faced, mighty in nature, seven-rayed, blew asunder the darkness with his voice. 5. With the lauding, hymning band he by his voice broke through Vala, the cloud. Bṛihaspati, shouting, drove forth the butter-yielding, loudly-lowing cows. 6. Thus let us worship the vigorous father, who is possessed of all divine attributes, with sacrifices, and reverence, and oblations. May we, Bṛihaspati, have abundant offspring, vigorous sons, and be lords of riches. 7. That king who maintains Bṛihaspati in abundance, who praises and magnifies him as (a deity) entitled to the first distinction, overcomes all hostile powers by his force and valour."

[407] This and the following verse are translated in p. 73 of the article of Professor Roth, quoted at the commencement of this section.

[408] Verses 4 ff. are translated by Professor Roth in pp. 79 f. of the article quoted at the beginning of this section.

x. 68, 6. Yadā Valasya pīyato jasum bhed Bṛihaspatir agnitapobhir arkaiḥ | dadbhir na jihvā parivishṭam ādad āvir nidhīn akṛinod usriyāṇāṁ | 7. . . . . āṇḍeva bhittvā śakunasya garbham ud usriyāḥ parvatasya tmanā "jat | 8 (= Nir. x. 12). Aśnāpinaddham madhu pary apaśyad matsyaṁ na dīne udani kshiyantam | nish ṭaj jabhāra chamasaṁ na vṛikshād Bṛihaspatir viraveṇa vikṛitya | 9. Soshām avindat saḥ svaḥ so Agniṁ so arkeṇa vi babādhe tamāṁsi | Bṛihaspatir govapusho Valasya nir majjānaṁ na parvaṇo jabhāra |

"When Bṛihaspati clove with fiery gleams the defences of the malignant Vala, as the tongue devours that which has been enveloped by the teeth, he revealed the treasures of the cows. 7. . . . As if splitting open eggs, the productions of a bird, he by his own power drove out the cows from the mountain. 8. He beheld the sweet liquid enveloped by rock, like a fish swimming in shallow water; Bṛihaspati brought it out, like a spoon from a tree, having cloven (Vala) with his shout. 9. He discovered the Dawn, the Sky, Agni; with his gleam he chased away the darkness; Bṛihaspati smote forth, as it were, the marrow from the joints of Vala, who had assumed the form of a bull."

i. 40, 5. Pra nūnam Brahmaṇaspatir mantraṁ vadati ukthyam | yasminn Indro Varuṇo Mitro Aryamā devāḥ okāṁsi chakrire | 6. Tam id vochema vidatheshu śambhuvam mantraṁ devaḥ anehasam | "5. Brahmaṇaspati now utters a laudatory hymn, in which Indra, Varuṇa, Mitra, the gods, have taken up their abode. 6. This spotless hymn, bringing good fortune, may we, o gods, utter on the festivals." [409]

i. 190, 1. Anarvāṇaṁ vṛishabham mandrajihvam Bṛihaspatiṁ vardhaya navyam arkaiḥ | gāthānyaḥ surucho yasya devāḥ āśṛinvanti navamānasya martāḥ | 2. Tam ṛitviyāḥ upa vāchaḥ sachante sargo yo na devayatām asarji | "1. Magnify Bṛihaspati, the irresistible, the vigorous, the pleasant-tongued, who ought to be praised with hymns, a shining leader of songs to whom both gods and men listen when he utters praise. 2. To him proceed well-ordered words, like a stream of devout men which has been set in motion."

[409] In the dissertation quoted above, p. 74, Professor Roth remarks on these verses: "The thunder is his (Brahmaṇaspati's) voice. This voice of thunder, again, as the voice of the superintendent of prayer, is by a beautiful transference brought into connection with the prayer which, spoken on earth, finds, as it were, its echo in the heights of heaven."

v. 43, 12. Ā vedhasam nīlapṛishṭham bṛihantam Bṛihaspatiṁ sadane sādayadhvam | sādadyonim dame ā dīdivāṁsaṁ hiraṇyavarṇam arushaṁ sapema | "Seat on the sacrificial ground the wise, the dark-backed, the mighty Bṛihaspati. Let us reverence the golden-hued ruddy god who sits on our hearth, who shines in our house."

z. 98, 7. Devaśrutaṁ vṛishṭivaniṁ rarāṇo Bṛihaspatir vācham asmai ayachhat | "Bṛihaspati, fulfilling (his desire), gave him (Devāpi) a hymn seeking for rain, which the gods heard."

(2) Parentage and attributes of the god.

Brahmaṇaspati, or Bṛihaspati, appears to be described in vii. 97, 8, as the offspring of the two Worlds, who magnified him by their power (devī devasya rodasī janitrī Bṛihaspatiṁ vavṛidhatur mahitvā); whilst in ii. 23, 17, he is said to have been generated by Tvashṭṛi (see above). He is called a priest, x. 141, 3 (brahmāṇaṁ cha Bṛihaspatim); is associated with the Ṛikvans, or singers (vii. 10, 4; x. 14, 3; compare x. 36, 5; x. 64, 4); is denominated an Āngirasa (iv. 40, 1; vi. 73, 1; x. 47, 6); is the generator, the utterer, the lord, the inspirer, of prayer (ii. 23, 1, 2; i. 40, 5; x. 98, 7), who by prayer accomplishes his designs (ii. 24, 3); and mounting the shining and awful chariot of the ceremonial, proceeds to conquer the enemies of prayer and of the gods (ii. 23, 3 f., 8). He is the guide, patron, and protector of the pious, who are saved by him from all dangers and calamities (ibid. verses 4 ff.); and are blessed by him with wealth and prosperity (ibid. 9 f.). He is styled the father of the gods, ii. 26, 3 (devānām pitaram); is said to have blown forth the births of the gods like a blacksmith (see above, p. 48); to be possessed of all divine attributes, viśvadevya, or viśvadeva (iii. 62, 4; iv. 50, 6); bright, śuchi (iii. 62, 5; vii. 97, 7); pure, śundhyu (vii. 97, 7); omniform, viśvarūpa (iii. 62, 6); possessed of all desirable things, viśvavāra (vii. 10, 4; vii. 97, 4); to have a hundred wings, śatapatra (vii. 97, 7); to carry a golden spear, hiraṇyavāśī (ibid.; compare ii. 24, 8, where a bow and arrows are assigned to him); to be a devourer of enemies, vṛitrakhāda (x. 65, 10; comp. vi. 73, 3); a leader of armies along with Indra, etc., Indraḥ āsāṁ netā Bṛihaspatir Dakshiṇā (x. 103, 8), and armed with an iron axe, which Tvashṭṛi sharpens, śiśīte nūnam paraśuṁ svāyasaṁ yena vṛiśchād etaśo Brahmaṇaspatiḥ (x. 53, 9); clear-voiced, śuchikranda (vii. 97, 5); a prolonger of life, pratarītā 'si āyushaḥ (x. 100, 5); a remover of disease, amīvahā (i. 18, 2); opulent, revat, vasuvit; an increaser of the means of subsistence, pushṭivardhana (i. 18, 2). Plants are said to spring from him, yāḥ oshadhīḥ . . . . Bṛihaspatiprasūtāḥ (x. 97, 15, 19). He is said in one place to be conveyed by easy-going ruddy horses, taṁ śagmāso arushāso aśvāḥ Bṛihaspatiṁ sahavāho vahanti (vii. 97, 6).

In one place he is said to have heard the cries of Trita, who had been thrown into a well and was calling on the gods, and to have rescued him from his perilous position, i. 105, 17 (Tritaḥ kūpe avahito devān havate ūtaye | tat śuśrāva Bṛihaspatiḥ kṛiṇvann aṁhūraṇād uru).

His exploits in the way of destroying Vala, and carrying off the heavenly kine, or releasing the imprisoned waters of the sky, have been sufficiently explained, in the quotation I have made above from Professor Roth's Essay, as well as in the texts which have been translated. He is further, as we have seen, described as holding asunder the ends of the earth (iv. 50, 1).

(3) Whether Bṛihaspati and Brahmaṇaspati are identifiable with Agni.

Brahmaṇaspati and Bṛihaspati are regarded as names of Agni by M. Langlois, in his translation of the Rig-veda, vol. i. p. 249 (note 36), p. 254 (note 83), p. 578 (note 1), and index, vol. iv., under the words.[410] Professor Wilson also, in the introduction to the 1st vol. of his translation, p. xxxvii., writes as follows: "Brahmaṇaspati, also, as far as we can make out his character from the occasional stanzas addressed to him, seems to be identifiable with Agni, with the additional attribute of presiding over prayer. The characteristic properties of this divinity, however, are not very distinctly developed in this portion of the Veda" (see also the notes in pp. 41, 111, 152). In the introduction to his second volume, p. ix. however, Professor Wilson says that, as described in the 2nd ashṭaka of the R.V., Bṛihaspati, "when treated of separately, is identical with Indra, by his attributes of sending rain (p. 199) and wielding the thunderbolt (p.

[410] M. Langlois spells Bṛihaspati, Vṛihaspati.

284); but he is hymned indiscriminately with Brahmaṇaspati, who is styled the lord of the Gaṇas, or companies of divinities, and also, which is in harmony with his former character, chief or most excellent lord of mantras or prayers of the Vedas (p. 262); he also, in some of his attributes, as those of dividing the clouds, and sending rain, and recovering the stolen kine (p. 268) is identical with Indra, although with some inconsisteney he is spoken of as distinct from, although associated with, him (p. 270); but this may be a misconception of the scholiast, etc." Finally, Professor Müller (Transl. of R.V. i. 77) states his opinion that "Brahmaṇaspati and Bṛihaspati are both varieties of Agni, the priest and purohita of gods and men, and as such he is invoked together with the Maruts, etc.," as he had previously remarked that Agni also is. The verse to which this note refers, R.V. i. 38, 13, is as follows: achha vada tanā girā jarāyai brahmaṇaspatim agnim mitraṁ na darśatam, which Professor Müller renders thus: "Speak out for ever with thy voice to praise the lord of prayer, Agni, who is like a friend, the bright one."

This identification, in the strict sense, of Brahmaṇaspati with Agni is supported by some texts, but opposed to others. Of the former class are the following:

ii. 1, 3. Tvam Agne Indro vṛishabhaḥ satām asi tvaṁ Vishṇur urugāyo namasyaḥ | tvam brahmā rayivid brahmaṇaspate | "Thou, Agni, art Indra, the most vigorous of the good; thou art the wide-striding and adorable Vishṇu; thou, o Brahmaṇaspati (or lord of prayer), art a priest (brahmā), the possessor of wealth, etc." Here, although Agni is also identified with Indra and Vishṇu, as he is with other deities in the following verses, the connection between him and Brahmaṇaspati is shown to be more intimate and real by the fact that both the latter word and Agni are in the vocative. In the next passage also Bṛihaspati, as well as Mātariśvan may be regarded as an epithet of Agni, iii. 26, 2. Taṁ śubhram Agnim avase havāmahe vaiśvānaram mātariśvāham ukthyam | Bṛihaspatim manusho devatātaye vipraṁ hotāram atithiṁ raghushyadam | "We call to our succour the bright Agni, the friend of all mankind; Mātariśvan, who is worthy to be hymned; Bṛihaspati, the wise invoker, the guest, swiftly-moving, that he may come to a man's worship of the gods."

The verse above quoted, v. 43, 12, is also alternatively explained of Agni by Sāyaṇa in his remarks: athavā iyam Āgneyī | bṛihataḥ parivṛidhasya karmaṇaḥ svāmī iti Bṛihaspatir Agnir uchyate | tathā nīlavarṇa-dhūma-pṛishṭhatva-sadana-sādana-hiraṇyavarṇatvādi-lingair apy Agnir eva Bṛihaspatiḥ | "Or, Agni is the subject of the verse. By Bṛihaspati, the lord of the grand ceremonial, Agni is denoted. And, further, it is also shown by the marks of having a back of dark-coloured smoke, of being placed on the sacrificial ground, of having a golden hue, etc., that Bṛihaspati is Agni." And in ii. 2, 7, Agni is besought to make Heaven and Earth favourable to the worshipper by prayer, brahmaṇā (prāchī dyāvāpṛithivī brahmaṇā kridhi). Further, Agni (see above pp. 199 f.), as well as Brahmaṇaspati and Bṛihaspati, is called a priest, and both are designated as Angiras, or Āngirasa.

On the other hand, however, Brahmaṇaspati or Bṛihaspati is elsewhere distinguished from Agni. Thus in x. 68, 9, Bṛihaspati is said to have found out Ushas, the heaven, and Agni, and by a hymn to have chased away the darkness (saḥ ushām avindat saḥ svaḥ so agnim so arkeṇa vi babādhe tamāṁsi). In vii. 10, 4, Agni is asked to bring Bṛihaspati along with Indra, Rudra, Aditi, etc. In the following texts, where a number of different gods are invoked or named together, Agni is mentioned separately from Brāhmaṇaspati or Bṛihaspati, iii. 20, 5; iv. 40, 1; v. 51, 12 f.; vii. 41, 1; vii. 44, 1; ix. 5, 11; x. 35, 11; x. 65, 1; x. 130, 4; x. 141, 3.

SECTION XVIII.

YAMA AND THE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.

(1) References to immortality in the earlier books of the Rig-veda.

It is in the ninth and tenth books of the Rig-veda that we find the most distinct and prominent references to a future life. It is true that the Ṛibhus, on account of their artistic skill, are said, in some texts in the earlier books, to have been promised, and to have attained, immortality and divine honours (see above p. 226, and R.V. iv. 35, 3, where it is said: atha aita Vājāḥ amṛitasya panthāṁ gaṇaṁ devānām Ṛibhavaḥ suhastāḥ | "Then, skilful Vājas, Ṛibhus, ye proceeded on the road of immortality, to the assemblage of the gods;" and verse 8: ye devāso abhavata sukṛityā śyenāḥ iva id adhi divi nisheda | te ratnaṁ dhāta śavaso napātaḥ Sandhanvanāḥ abhavata amṛitāsaḥ | "Ye who through your skill have become gods, and like falcons are seated in the sky, do ye, children of strength, give us riches; ye, o sons of Sudhanvan, have become immortal."). This, however, is a special case of deification, and would not prove that ordinary mortals were considered to survive after the termination of their earthly existence. There are, however, a few other passages which must be understood as intimating a belief in a future state of happiness. Thus Agni is said in i. 31, 7, to exalt a mortal to immortality (tvaṁ tam Agne amṛitatve uttame martaṁ dadhāsi); and to be the guardian of immortality (adabdho gopāḥ amṛitasya rakshitā). And the same power is ascribed to Soma in i. 191, 1: tava praṇītī pitaro naḥ Indo deveshu ratnam abhajanta dhīrāḥ | "By thy guidance, o Soma, our sage ancestors have obtained riches among the gods;" and again, in verse 18: apyāyamāno amṛitāya Soma divi śravāṁsi uttamāni dhishva | "Soma, becoming abundant to (produce) immortality, place (for us) excellent treasures in the sky."[411] Some other passages to the same effect are the following: i. 125, 5. Nākasya pṛishṭhe adhi tishṭhati śrito yo pṛiṇāti sa ha deveshu gachhati | 6. Dakshiṇāvatām id imāni chitrā dakshiṇāvatāṁ divi sūryāsaḥ | dakshiṇāvanto amṛitam bhajante dakshiṇāvantaḥ pratiranteāyuḥ[412] | "5. The liberal man abides placed upon the summit of the sky; he goes to the gods. 6. These brilliant things are the portion of those who bestow largesses; there are suns for them in heaven; they attain immortality; they prolong their lives. i. 154, 5. Tad asya priyam abhi pātho[413] aśyāṁ naro yatra devayavo madanti | urukramasya sa hi bandhur itthā Vishṇoḥ pade parame madhvaḥ utsaḥ | "May I attain to that his (Vishṇu's) beloved abode where men devoted to the gods rejoice; for that is the bond of the wide-striding god—a spring of honey in the highest sphere of Vishṇu." i. 179, 6. Ubhau varṇāv ṛishir ugraḥ puposha satyāḥ deveshu āśisho jagāma | "The glorious rishi practised both kinds[414]: he realised his aspirations among the gods." In v. 4, 10, the worshipper prays: prajābhir Agne amṛitvam aśyām | "May I, Agni, with my offspring, attain immortality."[415] In v. 55, 4, the Maruts are besought to place their worshippers in the condition of immortality (uto asmān amṛitatve dadhātana). v. 63, 2: vṛishṭiṁ vāṁ rādho amṛitatvam īmahe | "We ask of you twain (Mitra and Varuṇa) rain, wealth, immortality." vii. 57, 6. Dadāta no amṛitasya prajāyai | which Professor Roth, s.v. prajā, explains: "add us

[411] Professor Benfey, however, translates differently: "take possession of the highest renown in heaven."

[412] The same idea is repeated in x. 107, 2 (uchhā divi dakshiṇāvanto asthur ye aśvadāḥ saha te sūryeṇa | hiraṇyadāḥ amṛitatvam bhajante vāsodāḥ soma pra tirante āyuḥ | "The givers of largesses abide high in the sky; the givers of horses live with the sun; the givers of gold enjoy immortality; the givers of raiment prolong their lives."

[413] The same word which is here employed, pāthas, occurs also in iii. 55, 10: Vishṇur gopāḥ paramam pāti pāthaḥ priyā dhāmāni amṛitā dadhānaḥ | "Vishṇu, a protector, guards the highest abode, occupying the beloved, imperishable regions." See also i. 162, 2; x. 70, 9, 10. In i. 163, 13, the horse which had been immolated is said to have gone to the highest abode, to the gods (upa prāgāt paramaṁ sadastham arvāñ achā pitaram mātaraṁ cha | adya devān jushṭatamo hi gamyāḥ). In ii. 23, 8, mention is made of uttaraṁ sumnam "the highest happiness," and in ii. 25, 5, of the "happiness of the gods" (devānāṁ sumne); but it does not appear whether heaven is meant. In i. 159, 2, Heaven and Earth seem to be declared to provide large immortality for their offspring (uru prajāyāḥ amṛitam).

[414] Sāyaṇa explains abhau varṇau by "pleasure and austerity" kāmaṁ cha tapaś cha).

[415] See, however, Sāyaṇa's glow and Wilson's note, in loco, where the immortality referred to is explained as immortality through offspring, and as consisting in an unbroken succession of descendants, the immortality of a mortal (amṛitatvaṁ santatyavichheda-lakshaṇam | "prajām anu prajāyate tad u te martya amṛitam" iti hi śrutiḥ).

to (the number of) the people of eternity, i.e. to the blessed." vii. 76, 4. Te id devānāṁ sadhamādaḥ āsann ṛitāvānaḥ kavayaḥ pūrvyāsaḥ | "They were the companions of the gods,—those ancient righteous sages." viii. 58, 7. Ud yad bradhnasya vishṭapaṁ gṛiham Indraś cha ganvahi | madhvaḥ pītvā sachevahi triḥ sapta sakhyuḥ pade | "When we two, Indra and I, go to the region of the sun, to our home, may we, drinking nectar, seek thrice seven in the realm of the friend." Compare viii. 48, 3, quoted above in p. 90, note: We have drunk the Soma; we have become immortal; we have entered into light; we have known the gods."

Vāta is also declared to have a store of immortality in his house (te gṛihe amṛitasya nidhir hitaḥ). But this verse occurs in a late hymn (the 186th) of the tenth Maṇḍala. In the same Book, x. 95, 18, the promise is made by the gods to Purūravas, the son of Iḷā, that though he was a mortal, when his offspring should worship them, with oblations, he should enjoy happiness in Svarga, heaven (iti tvā devāḥ ime āhur Aila yathem etad bhavasi mṛityubandhuḥ | prajā te devān havishā yajāti svarge u tvam api mādayāse).

(2) References to the Fathers, the souls of departed ancestors, in the earlier books of the Rig-veda.

The following passages appear to refer to the souls of deceased ancestors conceived of as still existing in another world:

i. 36, 18. Agninā Turvaśaṁ Yadum parāvataḥ Ugradevaṁ havāmahe | "Through Agni we call Turvaśa, Yadu, and Ugradeva from afar." iii. 55, 2. Mó shū no atra juhuranta devāḥ mā pūrve Agne pitaraḥ padajnāḥ | "Let not the gods injure us here, nor our early Fathers who know the realms." vi. 52, 4. Avantu mām Ushaso jāyamānāḥ avantu mā sindhavaḥ pinvamānāḥ | avantu mā parvatāso dhruvāso avantu mā pitaro devahūtau | "May the rising Dawn, the swelling rivers, the firm mountains, protect me; may the Fathers protect me in my invocation to the gods." vi. 75, 10. Brāhmaṇāsaḥ pitaraḥ somyāsaḥ śive no Dyāvāpṛithivī anehasā | Pūshā naḥ pātu duritād ṛitāvṛidhaḥ | "May the Brāhmans, Fathers, drinkers of Soma, may Heaven and Earth be propitious to us. May Pūshan, the promoter of sacred rites, preserve us from calamity." vii. 35, 12. Sam naḥ satyasya patayo bhavantu

śaṁ no arvantaḥ śam u santu gāvaḥ | śaṁ naḥ Ṛibhavaḥ sukṛitaḥ suhastāḥ śaṁ no bhavantu pitaro haveshu | "May the lords of truth be propitious to us, and so may the horses and kine; may the skilful Ṛibhus, dexterous of hand, may the Fathers, be propitious to us in our invocations." viii. 48, 13. Tvaṁ Soma pitṛibhiḥ saṁvidāno anu dyāvāpṛithivī ā tatantha | "Thou, Soma, in concert with the Fathers, hast extended the Heaven and Earth."

I may also introduce here a few detached texts on the same subject from the ninth and tenth books: ix. 83, 3. Māyāvino mamire asya māyayā nṛichakshasaḥ pitaro garbham ādadhuḥ | "By his wondrous power, the skilful have formed, the Fathers, beholders of men, have deposited the germ." x. 68, 11. Abhi śyāvaṁ na kṛiśanebhir aśvaṁ nakshatrebhiḥ pitaro dyām apiṁśan | "The Fathers have adorned the sky with stars, as a bay horse is decorated with pearls (?)." x. 88, 15. Dve srutī aśṛiṇavam pitṛiṇām aham devānām uta martyānām | "I have heard of two paths for mortals, that of the Fathers, and that of the gods." [416] x. 107, 1. Mahi jyotiḥ pitṛibhir dattam āgāt | "The great light given by the Fathers has arrived."

In the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, and in the Purāṇas, the Fathers (Pitṛis) are represented as being a distinct order of beings from men, as may be gathered from their being separately created. See the 1st vol. of this work, pp. 23 f., 37, 58, 79 f.

(3) Hymns relating to Yamá and the Fathers.

I now come to the passages in the ninth and tenth books to which I first alluded: and, owing to the great interest and importance of the subjects to which they refer, I shall first quote the most essential parts of them at length, and then supply a summary of the conclusions which they assert or involve.

I shall begin with the brief account of Yama's parentage in the seventeenth hymn, already quoted above, p. 227, and the dialogue betwixt him and his twin sister Yamī, in the tenth hymn of the tenth book.

R.V. x. 17, 1. "Tvashṭṛi makes a marriage for his daughter. (Hearing) this, this whole world assembles. The mother of Yama, becoming [416] See the 1st vol. of this Work, p. 434.

wedded, the wife of the great Vivasvat, disappeared. 2. They concealed the immortal (bride) from mortals. Making (another) of similar form, gave her to Vivasvat. And she bore the Aśvins when that happened. Saraṇyū abandoned the two pairs of twins." [417]

The following hymn contains a dialogue between Yama and his twin sister Yamī, in which, according to Professor Roth, she is to be considered as urging a matrimonial union between them for the continuation of the human species, of which, in the opinion of that writer, they appear to have been regarded as the earliest pair.[418] In verse 4, they are declared to have been the offspring of the Gandharva and his wife.

R.V. x. 10, 1.[419] O chit sakhāyam sakhyā vavṛityāṁ tiraḥ puru chid arṇavaṁ jaganvān | pitur napātam ā dadhīta vedhāḥ adhi kshami prataraṁ dīdhyānaḥ | 2. Na te sakhā sakhyaṁ vashṭi etat salakshmā yad vishurūpā bhavāti | mahas putrāso asurasya vīrāḥ divo dharttāraḥ urviyā pari khyan | 3. Uśanti gha te amṛitāsaḥ etad ekasya chit tyajasam martyasya | ni te mano manasi dhāyi asme janyuḥ patis tanvam ā viviśyāḥ | 4. Na yat purā chakṛima kad ha nūnam ṛitā vadanto anṛitaṁ rapema |

[417] After this section was first written I received Professor Max Müller's second series of Lectures on the Science of Language. The learned and ingenious author there discusses at length the meaning of the myths regarding Vivasvat, Saraṇyū, and their offspring (pp. 481 ff., and 508 ff.). He understands Vivasvat to represent the sky, Saraṇyū the dawn, Yama originally the day, and Yamī, his twin sister, the night (p. 509). I shall briefly refer, as I proceed, to some of his further explanations, leaving the reader to consult the work itself for fuller information.

[418] See Professor Roth's remarks on Yama in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, iv. 426, and in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, iii. 335 f. "They are," he says, "as their names denote, twin brother and sister, and are the first human pair, the originators of the race. As the Hebrew conception closely connected the parents of mankind by making the woman formed from a portion of the body of the man, so by the Indian tradition they are placed in the relationship of twins. This thought is laid by the hymn in question in the mouth of Yamī herself, when she is made to say: 'Even in the womb the Creator made us for man and wife.'" Professor Müller, on the other hand, says (Lect., 2nd ser., p. 510): "There is a curious dialogue between her (Yamī) and her brother, where she (the night) implores her brother (the day) to make her his wife, and where he declines her offer, 'because,' as he says, 'they have called it a sin that a brother should marry his sister.'" Again, p. 521, "There is not a single word in the Veda pointing to Yama and Yamī as the first couple of mortals, as the Indian Adam and Eve. . . . If Yama had been the first created of men, surely the Vedic poets, in speaking of him, could not have passed this over in silence." See, however, the passage from the A.V. xviii. 3, 13, to be quoted further on.

[419] This hymn is repeated in the A.V. xviii. 1, 1 ff. I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht for some improvements in my translation.

Gandharvo apsu apyā cha yoshā sā no nābhiḥ paramaṁ jāmi tan nau | 5. Garbhe nu nau janitā dampatī kar devas Tvashṭā savitā viśvarūpaḥ | nakir asya praminanti vratāni veda nāv asya pṛithivī uta dyauḥ | 6. Ko asya veda prathamasya ahnaḥ kaḥ īṁ dadarśa kaḥ iha pra vochat | bṛihan Mitrasya Varuṇasya dhāma kad u bravaḥ āhano vīchyā nṛīn | 7. Yamasya mā Yamyāṁ kāmaḥ āgan samāne yonau sahaśeyyāya | jāyā iva patye tanvaṁ ririchyāṁ vi chid vṛiheva[420] rathyā iva chakrā | 8. Na tishṭhanti na hi mishanti ete devānāṁ spaśaḥ iha ye charanti | (=Nir. v. 2) anyena mad āhano yāhi tūyaṁ tena vi vṛiha rathyā iva chakrā | 9. Rātrībhir asmai ahabhir daśasyet Sūryasya chakshur muhur un mimīyāt | divā pṛithivyā mithunā sabandhū Yamīr Yamasya bibhṛiyād ajāmi | 10. (=Nir. iv. 20) Ā gha tā gachann uttarā yugāni yatra jāmayaḥ kṛiṇavann ajāmi | upa barbhṛihi vṛishabhāya bāhum anyam ichhasva subhage patim mat | 11. Kim bhrātā asad yad anātham bhavāti kim u svasā yan Nirṛitir nigachhāt | kāma-mūtā bahu etad rapāmi tanvā me tanvaṁ sam pipṛigdhi | 12. Na vai u te tanvā tanvaṁ sam papṛichyām pāpam āhur yaḥ svasāraṁ nigachhāt | anyena mat pramudaḥ kalpayasva na te bhrātā subhage vashṭi etat | 13. (=Nir. vi. 28) Bato bata asi Yama naiva te mano hṛidayaṁ cha avidāma | anyā kila tvāṁ kakshyā iva yuktam pari shvajāte libujeva vṛiksham[421] | 14. (=Nir. xi. 34) Anyam u shu tvaṁ Yami anyaḥ u tvām pari shvajāta libujeva vṛiksham | tasya vā tvam manaḥ ichha sa vā tava adha kṛiṇushva saṁvidaṁ subhadrām |

[Yamī says] "O that I might attract a friend to friendly acts. May the sage (Yama?), after traversing a vast ocean, receive a grandson to his father, and look far forward over the earth.[422] 2. (Yama.) Thy friend does not desire this intimacy that (his) kinswoman should become (as) an alien. The heroes, the sons of the great Spirit, the supporters of the sky, look far and wide around (see verse 8). 3. (Yamī.) The immortals desire this of thee, (they desire) a descendant left behind by the one sole mortal. Let thy soul be united to mine. As a husband, penetrate the body of (thy) wife. 4. (Yama.) Shall we (do) now what we have never done before? Shall we who (have been) speakers of righteousness, utter unrighteousness? The [420] Compare A.V. vi. 90, 1; vi. 127, 3.

[421] Compare A.V. vi. 8, 1.

[422] This verse occurs with variations in the Sāma-veda, i. 340. The sense of it, as well as some others, is obscure. If the sage (vedhas) mean Yama, his father may be Vivasvat, or the Gandharva, and the grandson of the latter may be the son whom Yamī was desirous to bear to her twin brother (Yama). Compare the first half of verse 3.

Gandharva in the (aerial) waters, and his aqueous wife[423]—such is our source, such is our high relationship. 5. (Yamī.) The divine Tvashṭṛi, the creator, the vivifier, the shaper of all forms, made as husband and wife, (while we were yet) in the womb.[424] No one can infringe his ordinances. Earth and heaven know this of us. 6. (Yama.) Who knows this first day? Who has seen it? Who can declare it? Vast is the realm of Mitra and Varuṇa. What wilt thou, o wanton woman, say in thy thoughtlessness (?) to men? 7. (Yamī.) The desire of Yama has come upon me, Yamī, to lie with him on the same couch. Let me, as a wife, bare my body to my husband. Let us whirl round like the two wheels of a chariot. 8. (Yama.) These spies of the gods who range throughout this world stand not still, neither do they wink. Depart, quickly, wanton woman, with some other man than me. Whirl round with him like the two wheels of a chariot. 9. (Yamī.) Though she should wait upon him by night and by day, still the eye of the sun would open again. Both in heaven and earth twins are closely united. Let Yamī treat Yama as if she were not his sister. 10. (Yama.) Later ages shall come when kinsmen and kinswomen shall do what is unbecoming their relation. Spread thy arm beneath a male. Desire, o fair one, another husband than me. 11. (Yamī.) How can a man be a brother, when (a woman) is left without a helper? And what is a sister, when misery (is allowed to) come upon her? Overcome by desire, I am thus importunate. Unite thy body with mine. 12. (Yama.) I will not unite my body with thine. They call him a sinner who sexually approaches his sister. Seek thy gratification with some other than me. Fair one, thy brother desires not this.[425] 13. (Yamī.)[426] Thou art weak, alas, o Yama; we perceive not [423] Compare Müller's Lectures, 2nd. series, p. 483. He takes Gandharva for Vivasvat, and his aqueous wife (Apyā Yoshā) for Saraṇyū, in accordance with Sāyaṇa.

[424] In like manner Tvashṭṛi is said, A.V. vi. 78, 3, to have formed a husband and wife for each other. See above, p. 225; also viii. 72, 8.

[425] The Atharva-veda (xviii. 1, 13, 14) expands this verse into two: na te nāthāṁ Yaṃi atrāham asmi na te tanūṁ tanvā sam paprichyām | anyena mat pramudaḥ kalpayasva na te bhrātā subhage vashṭi etat | 14. Na vai u te tanūṁ tanvā sam paprichyām pāpam āhur yaḥ svasāraṁ nigachhāt | asaṁyad etad manaso hṛido me bhrātā svasuḥ śayane yat śayīya | "I am not in this thy helper, o Yamī; I will not unite my body with thine. Seek thy gratification with some other than me. Fair one, thy brother desires not this. I will not unite my body with thine. They call him a sinner who sexually approaches his sister. This is abhorrent to my soul and heart, that I, a brother, should lie on my sister's bed."

[426] This verse is quoted and explained in Nirukta, vi. 28.

any soul or heart in thee. Another woman shall enlace and embrace thee like a girdle, or as a creeping plant a tree. 14. (Yama.) Thou shalt embrace another man, o Yamī, and another man thee, as a creeping plant a tree. Do thou desire his heart, and he thine. Make then a fortunate alliance." [427]

The next hymn I quote is addressed to Yama.

R.V. x. 14, 1 (= A.V. xviii. 1, 49. Nir. x. 20). Pareyivāṁsam pravato mahīr anu bahubhyaḥ panthām anupaspaśānam | Vaivasvataṁ saṅgamanaṁ janānāṁ Yamaṁ rājānaṁ havishā duvasya | [A.V. xviii. 3, 13. Yo mamāra prathamo martyānāṁ yaḥ preyāya prathamo lokam etam | Vaivasvataṁ saṅgamanaṁ janānāṁ Yamaṁ rājānaṁ havishā saparyata] [428] | 2. Yamo no gātum prathamo viveda naishā gavyūtir apabhartavai u | yatra naḥ pūrve pitaraḥ pareyur enā jajnānāḥ pathyāḥ anu svāḥ | 3. Mātalī Kavyair Yamo Angirobhir Bṛihaspatir Ṛikvabhir vavṛidhānaḥ | Vāṁś cha devāḥ vavṛidhur ye cha devāḥ svāhā anye svadhayā anye madanti | 4. Imaṁ Yama prastaram ā hi sīda Angirobhiḥ pitṛibhiḥ saṁvidānaḥ | ā tvā mantrāḥ kavi-śastāḥ vahantu enā rājan havishā mādayasva | 5. Angirobhir āgahi yajniyebhir Yama Vairupair iha mādayasva | Vivasvantaṁ huve yaḥ pitā te asmin yajne barhishi ā nishadya | 6. Angiraso naḥ pitaro Navagvāḥ Atharvāṇo Bhṛigavaḥ somyāsaḥ | teshāṁ vayaṁ sumatau yajniyānām api bhadre saumanase syāma | 7. Prehi prehi pathibhiḥ pūrvyebhir yatra naḥ pūrve pitaraḥ pareyuḥ | ubhā rājānā svadhayā madantā Yamam paśyāsi Varuṇaṁ cha devam | 8. Sangachhasva pitṛibhiḥ saṁ Yamena ishṭāpūrttena parame vyoman | hitvāya avadyam punar astam ehi sangachhasva tanvā suvarchāḥ | 9. Apeta vīta vi cha sarpatāto asmai etam pitaro lokam akran | ahobhir adbhir aktubhir vyaktaṁ Yamo dadāti avasānam asmai | 10. Ati drava Sārameyau śvānau chaturakshau śabalau sādhunā pathā | atha pitṛīn suvidatrān upehi Yamena ye sadhamādam madanti | 11. Yau te śvānau Yama rakshitārau chaturakshau pathirakshī nṛichakshasau | tābhyām

[427] It appears from Professor Aufrecht's Catalogue of the Bodleian Sanskrit MSS. p. 82, that the Narasiṁha Purāṇa, i. 13, contains a dialogue between Yama and Yamī; but I am informed by Dr. Hall, who has looked at the passage, that the conversation does not appear to be on the same subject as that in the hymn before us.

[428] Compare A.V. vi. 28, 3: Yaḥ prathamaḥ pravatāṁ āsasāda bahubhyaḥ panthām anupaspaśānaḥ | yo asya īśe dvipado yaś chatushpadas tasmai Yamāya namo astu mṛityave | "Reverence to that Yama, to Death, who first reached the river, spying out a path for many, who is lord of these two-footed and four-footed creatures."

enam pari dehi rājan svasti cha asmai anamīvaṁ cha dhehi | 12. Urūṇasāv asutṛipā udumbalau Yamasya dūtau charato janān anu | tāv asmabhyaṁ dṛiśaye sūryāya punar dātām asum adyeha bhadram | 13. Yamāya somam sunuta Yamāya juhuta haviḥ | Yamaṁ ha yajño gachhati agnidūto arankṛitaḥ | 14. Yamāya ghṛitavad havir juhota pra cha tishṭhata | sa no deveshu ā yamad dīrgham āyuḥ pra jīvase | 15. Yamāya madhumattamaṁ rājñe havyaṁ juhotana | idaṁ namaḥ ṛishibhyaḥ pūrvajebhyaḥ pūrvebhyaḥ pathikṛidbhyaḥ |

"Worship with an oblation King Yama, son of Vivasvat, the assembler of men, who departed to the mighty streams,[429] and spied out the road for many. [Compare Atharva-veda, xviii. 3, 13: 'Reverence ye with an oblation Yama, the son of Vivasvat, the assembler of men, who was the first of men that died, and the first that departed to this (celestial) world.'] 2. Yama was the first who found for us the way. This home is not to be taken from us. Those who are now born (follow) by their own paths to the place whither our ancient fathers have departed. 3. Mātalī magnified by the Kavyas, Yama by the Angirases, and Bṛihaspati by the Ṛikvans—both those whom the gods magnified, and those who (magnified) the gods—of these some are gladdened by Svāhā, and others by Svadhā. 4. Place thyself, Yama, on this sacrificial seat, in concert with the Angirases and Fathers. Let the texts recited by the sages bring thee hither. Delight thyself, o king, with this oblation. 4. Come with the adorable Angirases; delight thyself here, Yama, with the children of Virūpa.[430] Seated on the grass at this sacrifice, I invoke Vivasvat, who is thy father. 6. (Nir. xi. 19.) May we enjoy the good will and gracious [429] This is the rendering of the words pravato mahīr anu, adopted by Roth in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 138. In support of this sense of mighty (celestial) waters, he refers to R.V. ix. 113, 8 (which I shall quote further on), and to verse 9 of this hymn. In his article on the story of Jemshīd, in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, iv. 426, he had translated the words, "from the deep to the heights;" and Dr. Haug, in his "Essays on the Sacred Language, etc., of the Parsees," p. 234, similarly renders, "from the depths to the heights." In the Atharva-veda, xviii. 4, 7, however, where the same words occur, tīrthais taranti pravato mahīr iti yajñakṛitaḥ sukṛito yena yanti ("They cross by fords the great rivers, [by the road] which the virtuous offerers of sacrifice pass,") they seem more likely to mean the mighty streams. Compare Professor Müller's Lectures, ii. 515.

[430] Virūpa is mentioned in R.V. i. 45, 3; viii. 64, 6; and the Virūpas in iii. 53, 6, and x. 62, 5 f. See the 3rd vol. of this work, p. 246 and note.

benevolence of those adorable beings, the Angirases, our Fathers, the Navagvas, the Atharvans, the Bhṛigus, offerers of soma. 7. Depart thou,[431] depart by the ancient paths (to the place) whither our early fathers have departed. (There) shalt thou see the two kings, Yama and the god Varuṇa, exhilarated by the oblation (svadhā), (or, exulting in independent power). 8. Meet with the Fathers, meet with Yama,[432] meet with the [recompense of] the sacrifices thou hast offered[433] in the highest heaven. Throwing off all imperfection again go to thy home.[434] Become united to a body, and clothed in a shining [431] The following verses (as appears from Professor Müller's Essay on the funeral rites of the Brahmans, Journal of the German Oriental Society, for 1855, p. xi.) are addressed at funerals to the souls of the departed, while their bodies are being consumed on the funeral pile.

[432] The A.V. xviii. 2, 21 is as follows: 21. Hvayāmi te manasā manaḥ ihemān gṛihān upa jujushānaḥ ehi | sam̃ gachhasva pitṛibhiḥ sam̃ yamena syonās tvā vātāḥ upa vāntu śagmāḥ | 22. Ut tvā vahantu Maruto udavāhāḥ udaprutaḥ | ajena kṛiṇvantu śītam̃ varsheṇokshantu bāl iti | 23. Ud ahvam āyur āyushe kratve dakshāya jīvase | svān gachhatu te mano adhā pitṛīn upa drava | "With my soul I call thy soul; come with delight to these abodes; meet with the Fathers, meet with Yama; may delightful, pleasant breezes blow upon thee. 22. May the water-bringing, water-shedding Maruts bear thee upward, and creating coolness by their motion, sprinkle thee with rain. 23. . . . . May thy soul go to its own (kindred), and hasten to the Fathers."

[433] The phrase ishṭāpūrta is explained by Dr. Haug (Ait. Br. ii. p. 474, note). Ishṭa, he says, means "what is sacrificed," and āpūrtta, "filled up to." "For all sacrifices go up to heaven, and are stored up there to be taken possession of by the sacrificer on his arrival in heaven." The words before us will therefore mean "rejoin thy sacrifices which were stored up." The Atharva-veda, xviii. 2, 20, expresses the sentiment here referred to by Dr. Haug in these words: svadhāḥ yās chakṛishe jīvam̃s tās te santu madhuśchutaḥ | "May the oblations which thou offeredst while alive (now) drop thee honey." And in A.V. xi. 1, 36, it is said: etaiḥ sukṛitair anu gachema yajnam̃ nāke tishṭhantam adhi saptaraśmau | "With these good deeds may we follow the sacrifice which abides in the heaven with seven rays." Compare A.V. vi. 122, 4: yajnam̃ yantam manasā bṛihantam anvārohāmi tapasā sayoniḥ | upahūtāḥ Agne jarasaḥ parastāt tṛitīye nāke sadhamādham madema | "With my soul I ascend after the great sacrifice as it goes, dwelling together with my austere fervour; may we, Agni, invited, enjoy a festival in the third heaven beyond (the reach of) decay." And A.V. vi. 123, 2: anvāgantā yajamānaḥ svasti ishṭāpūrtam̃ sma kṛiṇutāvir asmai | 4. Sa pachāmi sa dadāmi sa yaje sa dattād mā yūsham | 5. Viddhi pūrtasya no rāyn sa deva sumanā bhava | 2. "The sacrificer will follow in peace; show him what he has offered. 4. I cook, I give, I offer oblations; may I not be separated from what I have given. 5. O king, recognise what we have bestowed; be gracious." Compare A.V. iii. 29, 1.

[434] Müller (in the Essay just referred to, p. xiv.) translates this verse thus: "Leave evil there, then return home, and take a form," etc. This rendering appears to make the departed return to this world to resume his body, though in a glorified state, form.[435] 9. Go ye, depart ye, hasten ye from hence.[436] The Fathers have made for him this place. Yama gives him an abode[437] distinguished by days, and waters, and lights. 10. By an auspicious path do thou hasten past the two four-eyed brindled dogs, the offspring of Saramā. Then approach the benevolent Fathers who dwell in festivity with Yama (compare A.V. xviii. 4, 10). 11. Intrust him,[438] o Yama, to thy two four-eyed, road-guarding, man-observing watch-dogs; and bestow on him prosperity and health. 12. The two brown messengers of Yama, broad of nostril and insatiable, wander about among men.[439] May they give us again to-day the auspicious breath of life, that we may behold the sun. 13. Pour out the soma to Yama, offer him an oblation. To Yama the sacrifice proceeds when heralded by Agni and prepared. 14. Offer to Yama an oblation with butter, and be active. May he grant us to live a long which does not seem to bring out a good sense. Roth, on the other hand (in Journ. Germ. Or. Society, iv. 428), connects the word punaḥ with what precedes, and renders the verse thus: "Enter thy home, laying down again all imperfection," etc.

[435] The A.V. xviii. 2, 24, says: mā te mano mā 'sor mā 'ngānām mā rasasya te | mā te hāsta tanvaḥ kinchaneha | 25. Mā tvā vṛikshaḥ sam bādhishṭa mā devī pṛithivī mahī | lokam pitṛishu vitvā edhasva Yamarājasu | 26. Yat te angam atihitaṁ parāchair apānaḥ prāṇo yaḥ u vāte paretaḥ | tat te sangatya pitaraḥ sanīḍāḥ ghāsād ghāsam punar ā veśayantu | "Let not thy soul nor anything of thy spirit (asu), or of thy members, or of thy substance, or of thy body, disappear. 25. Let no tree vex thee, nor the great divine earth. Having found an abode among the Fathers, flourish among the subjects of Yama. 26. Whatever member of thine has been removed afar, or breath of thine has departed in the wind, may the combined Fathers reunite them all with thee."

[436] These words, according to Professor Müller, are addressed to evil spirits.

[437] Avasānam. Compare A.V. xviii. 2, 37, where Yama is said to recognise those who are his own: dadāmi asmai avasānam etad yaḥ esha āgād mama ćhed abhūd iha | Yamaś chikitvān pṛiti etad āha mamaisha rāye upa tishṭhatām iha | "I give this abode to this man who has come hither, if he is mine. Yama, perceiving, says again, 'He is mine, let him come hither to prosperity.'"

[438] See Roth, Journal German Oriental Society, iv. 428, at the foot, and his explanation of pari dehi, s.v. dā (see also x. 16, 2; and A.V. viii. 2, 20, 22). Müller, on the other hand (p. xiv.), translates: "Surround him, Yama, protecting him from the dogs," etc.

[439] The two dogs of Yama are also mentioned in A.V. viii. 1, 9, where one of them is said to be black (śyāma) and the other spotted (śabala). In A.V. viii. 2, 11, the messengers of Yama, who wander among men, are spoken of in the plural, without being described as dogs (Vaivasvatena prahitān Yama-dūtāṁś charato 'pa sedhāmi sarvān). In A.V. v. 30, 6, they are spoken of as two: dūtau Yamasya mā 'nugāḥ adhi jīvapurā ihi | "Do not follow Yama's two messengers; come to the cities of the living." In A.V. viii. 8, 10 f. also the messengers of Death and Yama are mentioned.

life among the gods. 15. Offer a most honied oblation to king Yama. Let this salutation (be presented) to the earliest-born, the ancient rishis, who made for us a path."

Hymn 15 of the same Maṇḍala is addressed to the Fathers, or departed ancestors, who, as we have already seen, are conceived to be living in a state of blessedness in the other world, though in some places, as we shall see, some of them are conceived to have other abodes. I will quote some verses from it, which will show still further their enjoyments, powers, and prerogatives:—

x. 15, 1. Ud īratām avare ut parāsaḥ ud madhyamāḥ pitaraḥ somyāsaḥ | asuṁ ye īyur avṛikāḥ ṛitajnās te no avantu pitaro haveshu | 2. Idam pitṛibhyo namo astu adya ye pūrvāso ye uparāsaḥ īyuḥ | ye pārthive rajasi ā nishattāḥ ye vā nūnaṁ suvṛijanāsu vikshu | . . . . 5. Upahūtāḥ pitaraḥ somyāso barhishyeshu nidhishu priyeshu | te ā gamantu te iha śruvantu adhi bruvantu te avantu asmān | 6. Āchya jānu dakshiṇato nishadya imaṁ yajnam abhi gṛiṇīta viśve | mā hiṁsishṭa pitaraḥ kena chin no yad vaḥ āgaḥ purushtutā karāma | 7. Āsīnāso aruṇīnām upasthe rayiṁ dhatta dāśushe martyāya | putrebhyaḥ pitaras tasya vasvaḥ pra yachhata te ihorjaṁ dadhāta | 8. Ye naḥ pūrve pitaraḥ somyaso anūhire somapīthaṁ vasishṭhāḥ | tebhir Yamaḥ saṁrarāṇo havīṁshi uśann uśadbhiḥ pratikāmam attu | . . . . 10. Ye satyāso haviradoḥ havishpāḥ Indreṇa devaiḥ sarathaṁ dadhānāḥ | ā Agne yāhi sahasraṁ devavandaiḥ paraiḥ pūrvaiḥ pitṛibhir gharmasadbhiḥ | 11. Agnishvāttāḥ pitaraḥ ā iha gachhata sadaḥ sadaḥ sīdata suprāṇītayaḥ | atta havīṁshi prayatāni barhishi atha rayiṁ sarvavīraṁ dadhātana | . . . . 13. Ye cheha piṭaro ye cha neha yāṁś cha vidma yāṁś cha na pravidma | tvaṁ vettha yati te jātavedaḥ svadhābhir yajnaṁ sukṛitaṁ jushasva | 14. Ye agnidagdhāḥ ye anagnidagdhāḥ madhye divaḥ svadhayā mādayante | tebhiḥ svarāḷ asunītim etāṁ yathāvaśaṁ tanvaṁ kalpayasva |

"1 (=V. S. 19, 49; Nir. 11, 18). Let the lower, the upper, and the middle Fathers, the offerers of soma, arise. May these Fathers, innocuous, and versed in righteousness, who have attained to (higher) life (asu)[440] protect us in the invocations. 2 (=V. S. 19, 68). Let this reverence be to-day paid to the Fathers who departed first, and who (departed) last, who are situated in the terrestrial sphere,[441] or who are [440] Compare the word asura, "Spirit," and asunīti, in verse 14, below.

[441] Compare A.V. xviii. 2, 49: Ye naḥ pituḥ pitaro ye pitāmahāḥ ye āvivišur uru now among the powerful races (the gods). . . . . 5 (=V. S. 19, 57). Invited to these favourite oblations placed on the grass, may the Fathers, the offerers of soma, come; may they hear us, may they intercede for us, and preserve us. 6 (=V. S. 19, 62). Bending the knee, and sitting to the south, do ye all accept this sacrifice. Do us no injury, o Fathers, on account of any offence which we, after the manner of men, may commit against you. 7 (=V. S. 19, 63). Sitting upon the ruddy [woollen coverlets], bestow wealth on the mortal who worships you. Fathers, bestow this wealth upon your sons, and now grant them sustenance. 8 (=V. S. 19, 51). May Yama feast according to his desire on the oblations, eager, and sharing his gratification with the eager Vasishṭhas, our ancient ancestors, who presented the soma libation. 10. Come, Agni, with a thousand of those exalted ancient Fathers, adorers of the gods, sitters at the fire, who are true, who are eaters and drinkers of oblations, and who are received into the same chariot with Indra and the gods. 11 (=V. S. 19, 59). Come hither, ye Agnishvātta Fathers; occupy each a seat, ye wise directors; eat the oblations[442] which have been arranged on the grass, and then bestow wealth on us, with all our offspring[443] . . . . 13. Thou knowest, o Jātavedas, how many those Fathers are who are here and who are not here, those whom we know and do not know; accept antarikṣham | ye ākshiyanti pṛithivīm uta dyāṁ tebhyaḥ pitṛibhyo namasā vidhema | "Let us worship with reverence those Fathers who are the fathers, and those who are the grandfathers, of our father; those who have entered into the atmosphere, or who inhabit the earth or the sky." See also A.V. xviii. 3, 59.

[442] According to the A.V. xviii. 2, 28, evil spirits sometimes come along with the Fathers: ye dasyavo pitṛishu pravishṭāḥ jnātimukhāḥ ahutādaś charanti | parāpuro nipuro ye bharanti Agnir tān asmāt pra dhamāti yajnāt | "May Agni blow away from this sacrifice those Dasyus who have no share in the oblations, whether they wear gross or subtile bodies, who come, entering among the Fathers, with the faces of friends." Compare V. S. ii. 30, and commentary.

[443] Compare A.V. vi. 41, 3: mā no hāsishur ṛishayo daivyāḥ ye tanūpāḥ ye nas tanvas tanūjāḥ | amartyāḥ martyān abhi naḥ sachadhvam āyur dhatta prataraṁ jīvase naḥ | "Let not the divine rishis, who are the protectors of our bodies, forsake us. Do ye who are immortal, visit us who are mortals; put into us vitality that we may live longer." A.V. viii. 8, 15: Gandharvāpsarasaḥ sarpān devān puṇyajanān pitṛīn | dṛishṭān adṛishṭān ishṇāmi yathā senām amūṁ hanan | "I incite the Gandharvas, Apsarases, serpents, gods, those holy men the Fathers, the seen and the unseen, that they may destroy this army." According to the Mahābhārata, Sabhāparvan, 461, there are seven troops of Pitṛis or Fathers, four embodied (mūrttimantaḥ) and three bodiless (aśarīriṇaḥ).

the sacrifice well offered with the oblations. 14 (=V. S. 19, 60). Do thou, o self-resplendent god[444]—along with those (Fathers) who, whether they have undergone cremation or not, are gladdened by our oblation—grant us this (higher) vitality (asunīti),[445] and a body according to our desire."

A funeral hymn addressed to Agni[446] (x. 16) also contains some verses which illustrate the views of the writer regarding a future life:

x. 16, 1. Mā enam Agne vi daho mā 'bhi śocho ma 'sya tvachaṁ chikshipo mā śarīram | yadā śṛitaṁ kṛiṇavo Jātavedo athem enam pra hinutāt pitṛibhyaḥ | 2. S'ṛitaṁ yadā karasi Jātavedo athem enam pari dattāt pitṛibhyaḥ | yadā gachhāti asunītim etām atha devānām vaśanīr bhavāti | 3. Sūryaṁ chakshur gachhatu vātam ātmā dyāṁ cha gachha pṛithivīṁ cha dharmaṇā | apo vā gachha yadi tatra te hitam oshadhīshu prati tishṭha śarīraiḥ | 4. Ajo bhagas tapasā taṁ tapasva taṁ te śochis tapatu taṁ te archiḥ | yās te śivās tanvo Jātavedas tābhir vahainaṁ sukṛitām u lokam | 5. Ava sṛija punar agne pitṛibhyo yas te āhutaś charati svadhābhiḥ | āyur vasānaḥ upa vetu śeshaḥ sangachhatāṁ tanvā Jātavedaḥ | 6. Yat te kṛishṇaḥ śakunaḥ ātutoda pipīlaḥ sarpaḥ uta vā śvāpadaḥ | Agnis tad viśvam agadaṁ kṛiṇotu Somaś cha yo brāhmaṇān āviveśa |

"1. Do not, Agni, burn up or consume him (the deceased); do not [444] As Agni is addressed in the two preceding verses, it might have been supposed that he is referred to in this epithet of self-resplendent (svarāṭ), or sovereign ruler, especially as the same function is assigned to him in x. 16, 5, as is assigned to the deity addressed in this verse. But the commentator on the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, 19, 60 (where the verse occurs, with most of the others in this hymn, though not in the same order), understands it of Yama; as does also Professor Roth (see s.v. asunīti) in the passage of the A.V., where it occurs along with asunīti. See next note.

[445] This word also occurs in the second verse of the next, the 16th hymn. In R.V. x. 59, 5, 6, it appears to be employed as the personification of a god or goddess. Professor Müller, Journ. R.A.S. vol. ii. (1866), p. 460, note 2, however, considers that "there is nothing to show that Asunīti is a female deity." "It may be a name for Yama, as Professor Roth supposes; but it may also be a simple invocation, one of the many names of the deity." He himself renders it "guide of life," ibid. In A.V. xviii. 3, 59, it is joined with svarāṭ: ye naḥ pituḥ pitaro ye pitāmahāḥ ye āviviśur uru antarikshaṁ | tebhyaḥ svarāḍ asunītir no adya yathāvaśaṁ tanvaḥ kalpayāti | "May the monarch (or self-resplendent being) who bestows vitality fashion for the fathers and grandfathers of our father, who have entered the wide atmosphere, and for us today, bodies according to our desire."

[446] According to Professor Müller (Funeral Rites of the Brāhmans, p. xi. f.) some verses from this hymn are repeated after those from hymn 14, while the remains of the departed are being burnt.

dissolve his skin, or his body.[447] When thou has matured[448] him, o Jātavedas, then send him to the Fathers. 2. When thou maturest him, Jātavedas, then consign him to the Fathers. When he shall reach that state of vitality, he shall then fulfil the pleasure of the gods. 3. Let his eye go to the sun,[449] his breath to the wind. Go to the sky, and to the earth, according to (the) nature (of thy several parts); or go to the waters, if that is suitable for thee; enter into the plants with thy members. 4. As for his unborn part, do thou (Agni) kindle it with thy heat; let thy flame and thy lustre kindle it; with those forms of thine which are auspicious convey it to the world of the righteous.[450] 5. Give up again, Agni, to the Fathers, him who

[447] Compare A.V. xviii. 4, 10–13. In the sixty-fourth verse of the same hymn it is said: yad vo Agnir ajahād ekam angam pitṛilokaṁ gamayan jātavedāḥ | tad vaḥ punar ā pyāyayāmi sāngāḥ svarge pitaro mādayadhvam | "Whatever limb of you Agni Jātavedas left behind, when conveying you to the world of the Fathers, that I here restore to you. Revel in heaven, ye Fathers, with (all) your members."

[448] Compare A.V. xviii. 4, 12.

[449] In A.V. viii. 2, 3, a man dead, or in danger of dying, is addresed in these words: vātāt te prāṇam avidaṁ sūryāch chakshur ahaṁ tava | yat te manas tvayi tad dhārayāmi saṁ vitsva angair vada jihvayā ālapan | "I have obtained thy breath from the wind, thine eye from the sun; I place in thee thy soul (manas); have sensation in thy limbs; speak, uttering (words) with thy tongue." Compare A.V. v. 24, 9: Sūryaś chakshushām adhipatiḥ | "Sūrya is the superintending lord of the eyes;" and A.V. xi. 8, 31: Sūryaś chakshur Vātaḥ prāṇam purushasya vi bhejire | "Sūrya occupied the eye, and Vāta (the wind) the breath of Purusha (or man)." See also A.V. xix. 43, 2, 3. Compare further Plato, Repub. vi. 18, where Socrates says of the eye: Ἀλλ' ἡλιοειδέστατόν γε οἶμαι τῶν περὶ τὰς αἰσθήσεις ὀργάνων. "I regard it [the eye] as of all the organs of sensation, possessing the most affinity to the sun." Eur. Suppl. 532 f. Ὅθεν δ' ἕκαστον εἰς τὸ σῶμ' ἀφίκετο, ἐνταῦθ' ἀπῆλθε, πνεῦμα μὲν πρὸς αἰθέρα, τὸ σῶμα δ' ἐς γῆν· "But each element of the body has departed to the quarter whence it came, the breath to the aether, the body itself to the earth." A similar idea is expressed in a verse of Goethe, which I had formerly read, and for a copy of which, with the context, I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht. The passage occurs in the introduction to the Farbenlehre (Ed. 1858, vol. xxxvii. p. 5), and is as follows: "Hierbei erinnern wir uns der alten ionischen Schule, welche mit so groszer Bedeutsamkeit immer wiederholte: nur von gleichem werde Gleiches erkannt; wie auch der Worte eines alten Mystikers, die wir in deutschen Reimen folgendermaszen ausdrücken möchten:

Wär' nicht das Auge sonnenhaft,
Wie könnten wir das Licht erblicken?
Lebt' nicht in uns des Gottes eigne Kraft,
Wie könnt' uns Göttliches entzücken?

Jene unmittelbare Verwandtschaft des Lichtes und des Auges wird niemand laügnen, aber" u.s.w.

[450] In AV. xviii. 2, 36, Agni is entreated to burn mildly, and to spend his fury on the comes offered to thee with oblations. Putting on life, let him approach (his) remains; let him meet with his body, o Jātavedas. 6. Whatever part of thee any black bird, or ant, or serpent, or beast of prey, has torn, may Agni restore to thee all that, and Soma who has entered into the Brāhmans." Compare Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, xviii. 51. Agnim yunajmi śavasā ghṛitena divyaṁ suparṇam vayasā bṛihantam | tena vayaṁ gamema bradhnasya vishṭapam so ruhāṇāḥ adhi nākam uttamam | 52. Imau te pakshāv ajarau patatriṇau yābhyāṁ rakshāṁsi apahaṁsi Agne | tābhyām patema sukṛitām u lokaṁ yatra ṛishayo jagmuḥ prathamajāḥ purāṇāḥ | 51. "With power and with butter I attach Agni, the celestial bird, mighty in energy: through him may we go to the sphere of the sun, ascending the sky to the highest heaven. 52. Borne by those thine undecaying, flying pinions, wherewith thou, Agni, slayest the Rakshases, may we soar to the world of the righteous, whither the ancient, earliest-born rishis have gone."

In various parts of the A.V. Agni is similarly addressed. Thus in vi. 120, 1. Yad antarikshaṁ pṛithivīm uta dyām yan mātaram pitaraṁ vā jihiṁsima | ayaṁ tasmād gārhapatyo no Agnir ud in nayāti sukṛitasya

woods and on the earth (śaṁ tapa mā 'ti tapo Agne mā tanvaṁ tapa | vaneshu śushmo astu te pṛithivyām astu yad haraḥ). The Taittrīya Brāhmaṇa has the following passage: iii. 10, 11, 1: Kaś chid ha vai asmāl lokāt pretya ātmānaṁ veda "ayam aham asmi" iti | kaśchit svaṁ lokaṁ na pratijānāti agnimugdho ha eva dhūma-tāntaḥ svaṁ lokaṁ na pratijānāti | atho yo ha eva etam agniṁ sāvitram veda sa eva asmāl lokāt pretya ātmānaṁ veda "ayam aham asmi" iti | sa svaṁ lokam pratijānāti esha u cha eva enam tat sāvitraḥ svarṇaṁ lokam abhi vahati | "One man departing from this world knows himself that 'this is I myself.' Another does not recognize his own world. Bewildered by Agni, and overcome by smoke, he does not recognize his own world. Now he who knows this Agni Sāvitra, when he departs from this world knows himself, 'that this is I myself.' He recognizes his own world. This Sāvitra carries him to the heavenly world." A few lines further on it is said that the days and nights suck up in the next world the treasure of the man who does not possess a particular sort of knowledge, whilst he who knows Agni Sāvitra finds his treasure not sucked up (tāni ha anevaṁvidusho amushmin loke śevadhim dhayanti | .... atha yo ha eva etam agniṁ sāvitraṁ veda tasya ha eva ahorātrāṇi amushmin loke śevadhiṁ na dhayanti). The Taitt. Br. ii. 4, 2, 6, says of Agni: Pratnaṁ sadastham anupaśyamānaḥ ā tantum Agnir divyaṁ tatāna | tvaṁ nas tantur uta setur Agne tvam panthāḥ bhavasi ādvayānaḥ | tvayā 'gne prishṭhaṁ vayam āruhema atha devaiḥ sadhamādam madema | "Agni, exploring the ancient abode, has extended the celestial cord. Thou, Agni, art our cord, and our bridge; thou art the path which conducts to the gods. By thee may we ascend to the summit (of heaven), and there live in joyful fellowship with the gods." The same Brāhmaṇa says in another place, i. 5, 2, 6, that the stars are the houses of the gods, and that whoever knows this possesses houses (devagṛihāḥ vai nakshatrāṇi | yaḥ evaṁ veda gṛihī eva bhavati).

lokam | "Whatever injury we have done to air, earth, or sky, to father or mother, may Agni Gārhapatya (delivering) us from that, convey us up to the world of righteousness." xii. 2, 45. Jīvānām āyuḥ pra tira tvam Agne pitṛīṇāṁ lokam api gachhantu ye mṛitāḥ | "Do thou, Agni, prolong the lives of living creatures; and may those who are dead go to the world of the Fathers." xviii. 3, 71. Ārabhasva jātavedas tejasvad haro astu te | śarīram asya sanḍaha athainaṁ dhehi sukṛitām u loke | "Seize him, Agni, let thy heat be powerful; burn his body; then place him in the world of the righteous." xviii. 4, 9. Pūrvo 'gnis tvā tapatu śam purastād śam paśchāt tapatu gārhapatyaḥ | dakshiṇāgnis te tapatu śarma varma uttarato madhyato antarikshād diśo diśo Agne paripāhi ghorāt | 10. Yūyam Agne śantamābhis tanūbhir ījānam abhi lokaṁ svargam | aśvāḥ bhūtvā pṛishṭivāho vahātha yatra devaiḥ sadhamādam madanti | "May the eastern fire warm thee propitiously in front (or to the east), and the gārhapatya fire behind (or to the west); may the southern fire warm thee, as thy defender and protector: Agni, preserve from everything dreadful on the north, in the middle, from the air, and from every side. 10. Do ye (the various forms of) Agni, become horses, and carry the sacrificer on your backs in your most gracious forms to heaven, where men hold festival with the gods."

(4) Summary of the conceptions conveyed in the preceding quotations.

I shall now extract from these texts and others a summary of the conceptions which they convey.

Yama is the son of Vivasvat (ix. 113, 8; x. 14, 1 [=A.V. xviii. 1, 49]; x. 14, 5; x. 58, 1; x. 60, 10), and of Saraṇyū, the immortal daughter of Tvashṭṛi (x. 17, 1, 2). He is elsewhere said, as Professor Roth considers[451] (see above), to have been one of the original pair of human beings (x. 10, 2), and to have sprung from the Gandharva, a deity of the atmosphere, and his wife (x. 10, 4). In the same hymn (passim) he is declared to have resisted the solicitations of his twin-sister Yamī to form a sexual union with her for the continuation ot the species.[452] He was the first of mortals who died, and discovered the way to the other world; he guides other men thither, and assembles them in a home, which is secured to them for ever (x. 14, 1, 2; A.V. vi. 28, 3; xviii. 1, 49, 50; xviii. 3, 13).[453] In one place he is represented as carousing with the gods under a leafy tree, R.V. x.

[451] Journal of the German Oriental Society, iv. 426; Journal of American Oriental Society, iii. 335; Illustrations of Nirukta, p. 138. As Professor Müller denies (see above, p. 288) that Yama was regarded by the Vedic poets as the first man, he explains as follows (Lectures, 2nd Series, p. 514 ff.) the process by which he came to be transformed into the monarch of the dead: "Let us imagine, then," he says, "as well as we can, that yama, twin, was used as the name of the evening, or the setting sun, and we shall be able perhaps to understand how in the end Yama came to be the king of the departed and the god of death. As the East was to the early thinkers the source of life, the West was to them Nirṛiti, the exodus, the land of

death. The sun, conceived as setting or dying every day, was the first who had trodden the path of life from East to West—the first to show us the way when our course is run, and our sun sets in the far West.". . . . "That Yama's character is solar might be guessed from his being called the son of Vivasvat. Vivasvat, like Yama, is sometimes considered as sending death. R.V. viii. 67, 20: 'May the shaft of Vivasvat, o Ādityas, the poisoned arrow, not strike us before we are old!"' [And in A.V. xix. 9, 7, it is said: "May Mitra, may Varuṇa, may Vivasvat, may the Ender (death) be favourable to us (śaṁ no Mitraḥ śaṁ Varuṇaḥ śaṁ Vivasvān śaṁ Antakaḥ). On the other hand Vivasvat is sometimes spoken of as preserving from Yama. Thus in A.V. xviii. 3, 62, it is said: Vivasvān no amṛitatve dadhātu paraitu mṛityur amṛitaṁ naḥ aitu | imān rakshatu purnshān ā jarimṇo mo shu eshām asavo Yamaṁ guḥ | "May Vivasvat place us in a state of immortality. May death pass away, and deathlessness come to us. May he preserve these men from decay. May their spirits not depart to Yama."—J.M.] . . . . "His (Yama's) own seat is called the house of the gods (x. 135, 7); and these words follow immediately on a verse in which it is said: 'the abyss is stretched out in the East, the outgoing is in the West." (In a note the following are referred to as additional passages to be consulted, viz., R.V. i. 116, 2; vii. 33, 9; ix. 68, 3, 5; x. 12, 6; x. 13, 2, 4; x. 53, 3; x. 64, 3; x. 123, 6.) "These indications, though fragmentary, are sufficient to show that the character of Yama, such as we find it in the last book of the Rig-veda, might well have been suggested by the setting sun, personified as the leader of the human race, as himself a mortal, yet as a king, as the ruler of the departed, as worshipped with the fathers, as the first witness of an immortality to be enjoyed by the fathers," etc. I may remark that in the S'atap. Br. xiv. 1, 3, 4, Yama is identified with the sun; but he is, a little further on, xiv. 2, 2, 11, similarly identified with Vāyu.

[452] See Professor Roth's observations on this dialogue in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, iii. 335 f.

[453] See Professor Roth's remarks on these passages in the Journals, etc., above referred to. In the Journal of the German Oriental Society, iv. 427, he remarks on these hymns: "We here find, not without astonishment, beautiful conceptions on immortality, expressed in unadorned language with child-like conviction. If it were necessary, we might here find the most powerful weapons against the view which has lately been revived, and proclaimed as new, that Persia was the only birthplace of the idea of immortality, and that even the nations of Europe had derived it from that quarter; as if the religious spirit of every gifted race was not able to arrive at it by its own strength."

135, 1[454] (yasmin vṛikshe supalāśe devaiḥ sampibate Yamaḥ). He is a king, and dwells in celestial light, in the innermost sanctuary of heaven, ix. 113, 7, 8 (see above, p. 226, and below, where the passage will be quoted at greater length), where the departed behold him associated in blessedness with Varuṇa (x. 14, 7). He grants luminous abodes in heaven to the pious (x. 14, 9), who dwell with him in festive enjoyment (x. 14, 8, 10). In the A.V. xviii. 2, 32, he is said to be superior to Vivasvat, and to be himself surpassed by none (Yamaḥ paro 'varo Vivasvān tataḥ paraṁ na ati paśyāmi kinchana).

In the Rig-veda Yama is nowhere represented (as he is in the later Indian mythology)[455] as having anything to do with the future punishment of the wicked. In fact, the hymns of that Veda contain, as far as I am aware, no prominent mention of any such penal retribution; but the passages which appear to recognize the existence of a Tartarus will be quoted further on. Nevertheless, Yama is still to some extent an object of terror. In x. 14, 10–12, he is represented as having two insatiable dogs, with four eyes and wide nostrils, which guard the road to his abode, and which the departed are advised to hurry past with all possible speed. These dogs are said to wander about among men as his messengers (x. 14, 12), no doubt for the purpose of summoning them to the presence of their master, who is in another place, x. 165, 4, identified with death, and is described as sending a bird as the herald of doom (yasya dūtaḥ prahitaḥ esha etat tasmai Yamāya namo astu [454] In A.V. xviii. 4, 3, the Ādityas are said to feast on honey in heaven (madhu bhakshayanti).

[455] According to the Purāṇas, "Yama fulfils the office of judge of the dead, as well as sovereign of the damned; all that die appearing before him, and being confronted with Chitragupta, the recorder, by whom their actions have been registered. The virtuous are thence conveyed to Swarga, or Elysium, whilst the wicked are driven to the different regions of Naraka, or Tartarus." (Wilson, Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 216 of Dr. Hall's ed. vol. 2). Chitragupta is described in the following tasteless and extravagant style in the Vṛihannāradīya Purāṇa, quoted in Professor Aufrecht's Catalogue of the Bodl. Sansk. MSS., p. 10, note: Pralayāmbuda-nirghosho anjanādri-samaprabhaḥ | vidyut-prabhāyudhair bhīmo dvātriṁśad-bhuja-saṁyutaḥ | yojana-traya-vistāro raktāksho dīrghanāsikaḥ | daṁshṭrā-karāla-vadano ravāpītulya-vilochanaḥ | mṛityu-jvarādibhir yuktaś chitragupto vibhīshaṇaḥ | "The dreadful Chitragupta, with a voice like that issuing from the clouds at the mundane dissolution, gleaming like a mountain of collyrium, terrible with lightning-like weapons, having thirty-two arms, as big as three yojanas, red-eyed, long-nosed, his face furnished with grinders and projecting teeth, his eyes resembling oblong ponds, bearing death and diseases."

mṛityave, compare A.V. vi. 29, 1 ff.). And in a verse of the A.V. (xviii. 2, 27), death is said to be the messenger of Yama, who conveys the spirits of men to the abode of their forefathers. In another place (R.V. x. 97, 16) deliverance is sought from the bonds of Yama, as well as those of Varuṇa (munchantu mā śapathyād atho Varuṇyād uta | atho Yamasya paḍbīśāt, see also A.V. viii. 7, 28). In R.V. i. 38, 5, too, where it is said (mā vo mṛigo ṇa yavase jaritā bhūd ajoshyaḥ | pathā Yamasya gād upa) "Let not thy worshipper be disregarded like a wild animal in a pasture, or go along the road of Yama," Yama is equivalent to death. In the following verse (already quoted) of the A.V. vi. 28, 3, also, Yama is identified with Mṛityu (death): "Reverence be to Yama, death, who first reached the river, spying out the road for many, who is lord of these two-footed and four-footed creatures." (This verse coincides in part with R.V. x. 14, 1, quoted above.) Compare also A.V. v. 30, 12; vi. 63, 2.)

When the remains of the deceased have been placed upon the funeral pile, and the process of cremation has begun, Agni, the god of fire, is prayed not to scorch or consume the departed, not to tear asunder his skin or his limbs, but after the flames have done their work, to convey to the Fathers the mortal who has been presented to him as an offering. The eye of the departed is bidden to go to the sun; his breath to the wind; and his different members to the sky, the earth, the waters, or the plants, according to their several affinities. As for his unborn part (ajo bhāgaḥ), Agni is supplicated to kindle it with his heat and flame, and, assuming his most auspicious form, to convey it to the world of the righteous (x. 16, 1–5; Vāj. Sanh. xviii. 51 f.).[456] Before, however, this unborn part can complete its course from earth to the third heaven, it has to traverse a vast gulf of darkness.[457] Leaving behind on earth all that is evil and imperfect, and [456] In the S'atap. Br. xi. 2, 1, 1, a man is said to be thrice born; first from his father and mother, the second time through sacrifice, and the third time when, after death and cremation, he once more emerges into life (trir ha vai purusho jāyate | etan nu eva mātuś cha adhi pituś cha agre jāyate | atha yaṁ yajnaḥ upanamatisa yad yajate tad dvitīyaṁ jāyate | atha yatra mriyate yatra enam agnāv abhyādadhati sa yat tataḥ saṁbhavati tat tṛitīyaṁ jāyate).

[457] A.V. ix. 5, 1. Ā naya etam ā vahabhasva sukṛitāṁ lokam api gachhatu prajānan | tīrivā tamāṁsi bahudhā mahānti ajo nākam ākramatāṁ tṛitīyam | 3. Pra pado 'va nenigdhi duścharitaṁ yat chachāra śuddhaiḥ śaphair ā kramatām prajānan | tīrtvā tamāṁsi bahudhā vipaśyann ajo nākam ākramatāṁ tṛitīyam | From the contents of proceeding by the paths which the fathers trod (R.V. x. 14, 7), the spirit, invested with a lustre like that of the gods, A.V. xi. 1, 37 (yena devāḥ jyotishā dyām udāyan brahmaudanam paktvā sukṛitasya lokam | tena geshma sukṛitasya lokaṁ svar ārohanto abhi nākam uttamam), soars to the realms of eternal light (ix. 113, 7,) in a car, or on wings (A.V. iv. 34, 4), on the undecaying pinions wherewith Agni slays the Rakshases (Vāj. Sanh. xviii. 52), wafted upwards by the Maruts, fanned by soft and gentle breezes, and refrigerated by showers (A.V. xviii. 2, 21 ff.); recovers there its ancient body in a complete (A.V. xviii. 2, verse 2 (where the aja is said to be carried to Indra as his share), and from the mention of "hoofs" in verse 3, I am now led to think that these verses refer to a goat, and not to the unborn spirit (both being denoted by the word aja), although some of the expressions seem more properly applicable to the latter than to the former. In any case, however, the verses prove that any being proceeding from earth to heaven has to traverse a region of darkness before he can reach his destination. I translate as follows: "Convey him; carry him; let him, understanding, go to the world of the righteous. Crossing the gloom, in many directions immense, let the goat ascend to the third heaven. . . . . 3. Wash his feet if he has committed wickedness: understanding, let him ascend with cleansed hoofs. Crossing the gloom, gazing in many directions, let the goat ascend the third heaven." Compare R.V. i. 50, 10 (= A.V. vii. 53, 7) quoted above in the Section on Sūrya, p. 160. In the Vāj. Sanh. xxxi. 18, also, the great Purusha, of sun-like brightness (āditya-varṇa), is said to dwell above the darkness (tamasaḥ parastāt). See also Manu, iv. 242. The commentator, on this latter passage, however, as well as Roth, s.v. tamas, understands the phrase dustaram tamas, "darkness hard to cross," as referring to hell. Compare the phrases adhamam tamas and andhaṃ tamas, to be adduced further on. The word aja seems to have the sense of "the unborn" in different passages of the R.V., and in A.V. x. 7, 31 (see Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v., 2, aja); but it may have the sense of "goat" throughout the whole of A.V. ix. 5, though B. and R. adduce verse 7 as one of the places where it means "unborn." That verse, however, may be rendered thus: "The goat is Agni; they call the goat light; they say that a goat is to be given by a living man to the priest. A goat, when given in this world by a believing man, disperses the gloom afar (Ajo Agnir ajam u jyotir āhur ajaṃ jīvatā brahmaṇe deyam āhuḥ | ajas tamāṃsi apa hanti dūram asmin loke śraddadhānena dattaḥ)." In the same way it is said, in verse 10: Ajas trināke tridive tṛiprishṭhe nākasya pṛishṭhe dadivāṃsaṃ dadhāti | panchaudano brahmaṇe dīyamānaḥ | "The aja panchaudana, given to a priest, places him who bestows it in the third heaven, in the third sky, on the third summit, on the top of the heaven," and in verse 21: "This aja panchaudana is an illimitable offering." In the A.V. xviii. 2, 48, there are said to be three heavens: "The watery (udanvatī) heaven is the lowest, the pīlumatī is the intermediate heaven, and the third is the pradyaus, in which the Fathers dwell" (udanvatī dyaur avamā pīlumatīti madhyamā | tṛitīyā ha pradyaur iti yasyām pitaraḥ āsate). This agrees with the mention of the third heaven in A.V. ix. 5, 1. Three skies (tisro dyāvaḥ) are also mentioned in R.V. vii. 101, 4; and in R.V. vii. 104, 11, three earths (tisraḥ

24 ff.[458] and glorified form,[459] meets with the forefathers who are living in festivity with Yama, obtains from him, when recognized by him as one of his own (A.V. xviii. 2, 37), a delectable abode (R.V. x. 14, 8–10), and enters upon a more perfect life (R.V. x. 14, 8; x. 15, 14; x. 16, 2, 5), which is crowned with the fulfilment of all desires (ix. 113, 9, 11), is passed in the presence of the gods (x. 14, 14), and employed in the fulfilment of their pleasure (x. 16, 2).

(5) Further quotations from the hymns on the subject of paradise and future punishment.

In the following passages of the A.V. an expectation is expressed that the family relations will be maintained in the next world :—

xii. 3, 17: Svargaṁ lokam abhi no nayāsi saṁ jāyayā saha putraiḥ

pṛithivīr adho astu viśvāḥ). Professor Roth, s.v. div. refers to other passages, among which is R.V. v. 60, 6. Yad uttame Maruto madhyame vā yad vā avame subhagāso divi stha | "Whether, fortunate Maruts, ye are in the highest, middle, or lowest, sky." The A.V. iv. 20, 2, says there are three heavens and three earths (tisro divas tisraḥ pṛithivīḥ); and A.V. vi. 21, says there are three earths, of which our earth (bhūmi) is the highest (or best) (imāḥ yās tisraḥ pṛithivīs tāsāṁ ha bhūmir uttamā).

[458] In A.V. ix. 5, 22–26, it is said that the man who bestows an aja panchaudana, illuminated by largesses (dakshiṇā-jyotisham: compare hiraṇya-jyotisham, A.V. x. 9, 6), shall not have his bones broken, or his marrow sucked out, but shall be introduced whole and entire (into heaven): verse 23 (na tasyāsthīni bhindyāt na majjño nirdhayet | sarvam enaṁ samādāya idam idam pra veśayet | 26. Svargaṁ lokam aśnute yo 'jam panchaudanaṁ dakshiṇājyotishaṁ dadāti). These passages, in which the departed are said to recover their bodily organization in all its completeness, form a striking contrast to the representations in the Homeric poems regarding the unsubstantial nature of the ghosts of the departed. The passage of the Odyssey, xi. 488, is well known, in which Achilles tells Ulysses that he would rather be the slave of a poor man on earth than rule over all the departed. I find, however, the following remarks of Professor Weber (Ind. Stud. ii. 206,) on the words yathā svapne tathā pitṛiloke, "as in a dream so in the world of the Fathers," Kaṭha Upanishad, vi. 5. "This is evidently a popular conception, according to which the souls of the Fathers, like those in the Grecian Hades, experience no waking, but only a kind of dreamy life. I have as yet found this idea (which at a later period entirely disappears) only in the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, xii. 9, 2, 2, where the following explanation of Vāj. Sanh, 20, 16: yadi jāgrad yadi svapne enāṁsi chakṛima vayam [if we have committed sins, sleeping or waking] is given; manushyāḥ vai jāgaritam pitaraḥ suptam | manushya-kilvishāch cha enam pitṛikilvishāch munchati | ['Men are what is awake; the Fathers what is asleep. He frees him from the sins of men, and those of the Fathers.']"

[459] In regard to the celestial body, see Roth, in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol. iii., p. 343.

syāma | "Do thou conduct us to heaven; let us be with our wives[460] and children."

vi. 120, 3: Yatra suhārdaḥ sukṛito madanti vihāya rogaṁ tanvāḥ svāyāḥ | aśloṇāḥ angair ahrutāḥ svarge tatra paśyema pitarau cha putrān | "In heaven, where our virtuous friends enjoy blessedness, having left behind the infirmities of their bodies, free from lameness or distortion of their limbs, may we behold our parents and our children." (Compare A.V. iii. 28, 5 f.)

ix. 5, 27: Yā pūrvam patiṁ vittvā athānyaṁ vindate patim | pañchaudanaṁ cha tāv ajaṁ dadāto na vi yoshataḥ | 28. Samānaloko bhavati punarbhuvā 'paraḥ patiḥ | yo 'jam pañchaudanaṁ dakshiṇājyotishaṁ dadāti | "When a woman has had one husband before, and gets another, if they present the aja panchaudana offering, they shall not be separated. 28. A second husband dwells in the same world with his re-wedded wife, if he offers the aja panchaudana, etc."

xviii. 2, 23: Svān gachhatu te manaḥ adha pitṛīn upa drava | "Let thy soul (manas) go to its own; and hasten to the fathers."

The enjoyments of this future state are said, in R.V. ix. 113, 7 ff., to be conferred by the god Soma, and are described as follows:

7. Yatra jyotir ajasraṁ yasmin loke svar hitam | tasmin māṁ dhehi pavamāna amṛite loke akshaye Indrāyendo parisrava | 8. Yatra rājā Vaivasvato yatrāvarodhanaṁ divaḥ | yatrāmūr yahvatīr āpas tatra mām amṛitaṁ kṛidhi | 9. Yatrānukāmaṁ charaṇaṁ trināke tridive divaḥ | lokāḥ yatra jyotishmantas tatra mām amṛitaṁ kṛidhi | 10. Yatra kāmāḥ nikāmās cha yatra bradhnasya vishṭapam | svadhā cha yatra tṛiptis cha tatra mām amṛitaṁ kṛidhi | 11. Yatrānandāś cha modāś mudaḥ pramudaḥ āsate | kāmasya yatrāptāḥ kāmās tatra mām amṛitaṁ kṛidhi |

7. "Place me, o purified (Soma), in that imperishable and unchanging world, where perpetual light and glory are found. 8. Make me immortal (in the realm) where king Vaivasvata (Yama) dwells, where the sanctuary of the sky exists, and those great waters (flow). 9. Make me immortal in the third heaven, in the third sky, where action is unrestrained,[461] and the regions are luminous. 10. Make me [460] In the later Indian writings the widow who burns herself on her husband's funeral pile is supposed to rejoin him in Svarga. See the texts cited by Colebrooke, Essays, i. 116 f.

[461] "In heaven he acts according to his pleasure" (kāmachāro 'sya svarge loke bhavati).—Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 2, 9.

immortal in the world where there are pleasures and enjoyments,—in the sphere of the sun,—where ambrosia and satisfaction are found. 11. Make me immortal in the world where there are joys, and delights, and pleasures, and gratifications; where the objects of desire are attained."

The pleasures here referred to are most probably to be understood as of a sensual kind.[462] Such at least is the prospect held out in the following passage of the Atharva-veda, iv. 34, 2:[463]

A.V. iv. 34, 2. Anasthāḥ pūtāḥ pavanena śuddhāḥ śuchayaḥ śuchim api yanti lokam | naishāṁ śiśnam pradahati jātavedāḥ svarge loke bahu straiṇam eshām | 3. Vishṭāriṇam odanaṁ ye pachanti nainān avartiḥ sachate kadāchana | āste Yame upa yāti devān saṁ gandharvair madate somyebhiḥ | 4. Vishṭāriṇam odanaṁ ye pachanti nainān Yamaḥ pari mushṇāti retaḥ | rathī ha bhūtvā rathayāne īyate pakshī ha bhūtvā 'ti divaḥ sameti | "Boneless,[464] pure, cleansed by the wind, shining, they [462] Roth is, however, of a different opinion. He says (Journ. Amer. Orient. Soc. iii. 343): "The place where these glorified ones are to live is heaven. In order to show that not merely an outer court of the divine dwellings is set apart for them, the highest heaven, the midst or innermost part of heaven, is expressly spoken of as their seat. This is their place of rest; and its divine splendour is not disfigured by any specification of particular beauties or enjoyments, such as those with which other religions have been wont to adorn the mansions of the blest .... There they are happy: the language used to describe their condition is the same with which is denoted the most exalted felicity." He then quotes the verses of ix. 113, 7 ff. already adduced, and adds: "what .... shall be the employment of the blest, in what sphere their activity shall expend itself; to this question ancient Hindu wisdom sought no answer. The words used in verse 11 of hymn ix. 113 to denote the gratifications of paradise, viz: anandāḥ, modāḥ, pramudaḥ, are employed in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 4, 6, 5 f., to signify sexual enjoyment on earth (prajāpatiḥ striyāṁ yaśo mushkayor adadhāt sapam | kāmasya tṛiptim ānandaṁ tasyāgne bhājayeha mā | modaḥ pramodaḥ ānando mushkayor nihitaḥ sapaḥ | sṛiṣṭeva kāmasya tṛipyāni dakshiṇānām pratigrahe).

[463] Compare S'atap. Br. x. 4, 4, 4. Yad u ha vai evamvit tapas tapyate ā maithunāt sarvam ha asya tat svargam lokam abhisambhavati | "When a man, knowing this, practises austere fervour, he retains in heaven all his functions, even to that of sexual intercourse."

[464] Though the connection is merely verbal, I quote here a passage from the Taitt. Sanh. vi. p. 10, of India Office MS., No. 1702: Brahmavādino vadanti kasmāt satyād anasthikena prajāḥ pravīyante 'sthanvatīr jāyante iti | yad hiraṇyam ghṛite 'vadhāya juhoti tasmād anasthikena prajāḥ pravīyante 'sthanvatīr jāyante | "Those versed in sacred science ask on what principle it is that creatures are generated by a boneless substance, and yet are born with bones? It is because the sacrificer places gold in the fire when he casts into it his oblation, that creatures propagated by a boneless substance are born with bones."

go to a shining region; Agni[465] does not consume their generative organ; in the celestial sphere they have abundance of sexual gratification.[466] 3. Want never comes upon those who cook the vishṭārin oblation. (Such a man) abides with Yama, goes to the gods, and lives in blessedness with the Gandharvas, the quaffers of soma. 4. Yama does not steal away the generative power of those who cook the vishṭārin oblation. (Such a man) becomes lord of a chariot on which he is borne along; becoming winged, he soars beyond the sky." In that region the faithful are also promised ponds filled with clarified butter, honey, wine, milk, and curds (verse 6).[467]

It is clear, in fact, that in the Vedic age the gods themselves were not regarded as possessing a purely spiritual nature, but as subject to the influence of various sensual appetites. We have formerly seen how constantly they are represented as delighting in the soma-juice, and in the exhilaration which it produced. Yama is described as carousing with the gods (R.V. x. 135, 1), the Ādityas as eating honey (A.V.

[465] This, no doubt, alludes to the fire of the funeral pile.

[466] Compare Mahābhārata, xii. 3657: Varāpsaraḥ-sahasrāṇi śūram āyodhane hatam | tvaramāṇā 'bhidhāvanti "mama bhartā bhaved" iti | "Thousands of handsome Apsarases run up in haste to the hero who has been slain in battle (exclaiming) 'be my husband.'" And again, v. 3667: Abhīrūṇām iṁe lokāḥ bhāsvanto hanta paśyata | pūrṇāḥ gandharvakanyābhiḥ sarvakāma-duho 'kshayāḥ | "Behold, these shining worlds belong to the fearless, filled with maidens of the Gandharvas, and yielding all kinds of enjoyments." In like manner, the Kaṭha Upanishad, i. 25, refers to the Apsarases: Ye ye kāmāḥ durlabhāḥ martya-loke sarvān kāmāṁś chhandataḥ prārthayasva | imāḥ rāmāḥ sarathāḥ satūryāḥ na hi īdṛiśāḥ lambhanīyāḥ manushyaiḥ | ābhir mat-prattābhiḥ parichārayasva | "Ask at thy will, says Yama to Nachiketas, all those pleasures which are difficult to be had in the world of mortals, those fair ones with their cars and instruments of music,— for such as they are not to be obtained by men; receive them from me, and allow thyself to be waited on by them." (The brief germ of this fine Upanishad, I may remark,— though the fact had been before noted by Professor Weber,—is to be found in the Taitt. Br. iii. 11, 8, 1-6). See also the Kaushitakī Upanishad, as translated by Weber, Ind. Stud. i. 398, and Cowell, Bibliotheca Ind. p. 147.

[467] See the S'atap. Br. xiv. 7, 1, 32 ff. (=Bṛih. Ārany. Up. pp. 817 ff.), where it is said that the enjoyments of the Fathers are a hundred times greater than those of a man who lives in perfect prosperity, is the lord of others, and enjoys all human pleasures (sa yo manushyāṇāṁ rāddhaḥ samṛiddho bhavati anyeshām adhipatiḥ sarvair mānushyakaiḥ kāmaiḥ sampannatamaḥ sa manushyāṇām paramaḥ ānandaḥ | 33. Atha ye śatam manushyāṇām ānandāḥ sa pitṛiṇām ekaḥ ānandaḥ). In the same way, the enjoyments of the Karmadevas, those beings who have attained the rank of gods by their merits, are a hundred times greater than those of the Fathers, and again the enjoyments of the gods by nature (ājānadevāḥ) are a hundred times greater than those of the Karmadevas, etc.

xviii. 4, 3), and the Fathers as indulging in festivity or revelry (sadhamādam madanti) with Yama (R.V. x. 14, 10: compare A.V. xviii. 4, 10). Indra is said in R.V. iii. 53, 6 (see above, p. 81 f.) to have a handsome wife, and pleasure, in his house. In two verses of the A.V. xiv. 2, 31 f., the young bride is encouraged to ascend the nuptial couch, and become the mother of children, by the consideration that the gods had been the first to enter into the married state and indulge in carnal intercourse with their spouses (ā roha talpam sumanasyamānā iha prajām janaya patye asmai | 32. Devāḥ agre samapadyanta patnīḥ samaspṛiśanta tanvas tanūbhiḥ). In A.V. iv. 37, 11 f., the Gandharvas, a class of gods, who are described as hairy, like dogs and monkeys, but as assuming a handsome appearance to seduce the affections of earthly females, are called upon to desist from this unbecoming practice, and not to interfere with mortals, as they had wives of their own, the Apsarases (priyo dṛiśe iva bhūtvā gandharvaḥ sachate striyam | tam ito nāśayāmasi brahmaṇā vīryāvatā | 12. Jāyāḥ id vo apsarasaḥ gandharvāḥ patayo yūyam | apa dhāvata amartyāḥ martyān mā sachadhvam). Compare verses 2–4 and 7 of the same hymn and A.V. xiv. 2, 35). If even the gods were imagined by the authors of these hymns to have such a decided element of carnality in their nature, it is scarcely to be supposed that these same poets, or their contemporaries, or immediate predecessors, should have risen to the conception of a purely spiritual heaven as the reward of a virtuous life upon earth.[468]

In one passage of the A.V. iii. 29, 3, immunity from taxation seems to [468] It may be objected that the texts which I have cited from the A.V. furnish no proof of the meaning of those in the Rig-veda, as the former collection is of later date than the latter. But (1) the hymns of the A.V. are probably not much posterior to those of the ninth and tenth books of the R.V., with which I have been dealing; and (2) the state of opinion reflected in the texts of the A.V. need not be supposed to have originated contemporaneously with its expression in these particular hymns, but was probably handed down from a previous period. We ought not to be too incredulous as to the early existence, in an elementary form, of ideas which appear at first sight to bear the character of a later age. Thus we find in the A.V. x. 8, 43, a reference to three qualities (guṇas) as enveloping the lotus with nine gates (puṇḍarīkaṁ navadvāraṁ tribhir guṇebhir āvṛitam), and there is perhaps no reason to doubt that here the three guṇas, so well known in later cosmogonies, are referred to. Rajas and tamas, two of these qualities, are mentioned together, A.V. viii. 2, 1 (rajas tamo mā upagāḥ). The "name" and "form" (nāma and rūpa) celebrated by the Vedantists, are also alluded to in A.V. x. 2, 12, and xi. 7, 1 (uchhishṭe nāma rūpāṁ cha).

be held out as a boon to be anticipated in the next world. It is there said that the offerer of a black-footed sheep "ascends to the sky where no tribute is paid by the weak to the stronger" (yo dadāti śitipādam aviṁ lokena sammitam | sa nākam abhyārohati yatra śuklo [śulkaḥ ?] na kriyate abalena balīyase), and in verse 5 it is promised that a person of the same description shall "live for ever in the sun and moon" (pradātā upa jīvati sūrya-māsayor akshitam).

The virtues for which men are admitted to the realms of the blessed are thus described in hymn 154 of the tenth book of the R.V. 1. Somaḥ ekebhyaḥ pavate ghṛitam eke upāsate | yebhyo madhu pradhāvati tāṁś chid evāpi gachhatāt | 2. Tapasā ye anādhṛishyās tapasā ye svar yayuḥ | tapo ye chakrire mahas tāṁś chid—| 3. Ye yudhyante pradhaneshu śūrāso ye tanūtyajaḥ | ye vā sahasradakshiṇās tān—| 4. Ye chit pūrve ṛitasāpaḥ ṛitāvānaḥ ṛitāvṛidhaḥ | pitṝn tapasvato Yama tān—| 5. Sahasranīthāḥ kavayo ye gopāyanti sūryam | rishīn tapasvato Yama tapojān api gachhatāt | "Soma is purified for some; others seek after clarified butter. Let him (the deceased) depart to those for whom the honied beverage flows. 2. Let him depart to those who, through rigorous abstraction (tapas), are invincible, who, through tapas, have gone to heaven; to those who have performed great tapas. 3. Let him depart to the combatants in battles, to the heroes who have there sacrificed their lives, or to those who have bestowed thousands of largesses. 4. Let him depart, Yama, to those austere ancient Fathers who have practised and promoted sacred rites. 5. Let him depart, Yama, to those austere rishis, born of rigorous abstraction, to those sages, skilled in a thousand sciences, who guard the sun."[469] (Compare A.V. xix. 43, 1 ff.)

R.V. i. 125, 5, and x. 107, 2, which have been already quoted above, p. 285, also proclaim the rewards of liberality, a virtue which the Brāhmans, who are its object, have always been forward to extol. (Compare also verse 8 of the hymn last referred to.)

The Fathers who have attained to the heavenly state are described as being objects of adoration to their descendants. They are said to be of different classes, upper, intermediate, and lower, or those who inhabit the heaven (or sky), the air, and the earth (R.V. x. 15, 1; A.V. xviii. 2, 49), while in the verse preceding the one last quoted (A.V. xviii. 2, [469] These verses form part of the funeral liturgy of the Brahmans. See Müller, on the funeral rites of the Brahmans, p. xi.

48), we are told that there are three heavens, of which the Fathers occupy the third or highest. Their different races are mentioned by name, viz., Angirases, Vairūpas, Navagvas, Atharvans, Bhṛigus, Vasishṭhas, etc. (R.V. x. 14, 4–6; x. 15, 8). Though not all known to their worshippers, they are known to Agni (x. 15, 13). Their descendants offer them worship and oblations (x. 15, 2, 9), supplicate their good will (x. 14, 6), deprecate their wrath on account of any offences which may have been committed against them (x. 15, 6), entreat them to hear, intercede for, and protect their votaries (x. 15, 5), and to bestow upon them opulence, long life, and offspring, (x. 15, 7, 11; A.V. xviii. 3, 14: Parāyata pitaraḥ ā cha yāta ayaṁ vo yajño madhunā samaktaḥ | datto asmabhyaṁ draviṉeha bhadraṁ rayiṁ cha naḥ sarvavīraṁ dadhāta; xviii. 4, 62: Āyur asmabhyaṁ dadhataḥ prajāṁ cha rāyaś cha poshair abhi naḥ sachadhvam). They are represented as thirsting for the libations prepared for them on earth (x. 15, 9); and they are invited to come with Yama, his father Vivasvat, and Agni, and feast with avidity, and to their hearts' content, on the sacrificial food (x. 14, 4, 5; x. 15, 9). They accordingly arrive in thousands, borne on the same car with Indra and the other gods, and range themselves in order on the sacrificial ground (x. 15, 10, 11).[470] Wonderful powers are ascribed to them, as in Agni is prayed (A.V. xviii. 2, 28), to blow away the evil spirits who intrude into their hallowed society in the guise of friends. In R.V. x. 68, 11, it is said that "the Fathers have adorned the sky with stars, as a dark horse with golden ornaments, and have placed darkness in the night, and light in the day" (abhi śyāvaṁ na kṛiśanebhir aśvaṁ nakshatrebhiḥ pitaro dyām apiṁśan).

With these ideas compare those entertained by the Romans about the Manes (see Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology, s.v.), and the opinions of the unreformed Christian Churches about the powers and prerogatives of the saints.

The following texts refer indistinctly to some punishment (whether annihilation or some penal infliction) of the wicked:

R.V. iv. 5, 5: Abhrātaro na yoshaṇo vyantaḥ patiripo na janayo durevāḥ | pāpāsaḥ santo anṛitāḥ asatyāḥ idam padam ajanata gabhīram |

[470] Compare, on the offerings to the Pitṛis, Colebrooke's Essay on the Religious Ceremonies of the Hindus. Mis. Essays, i. 180 ff.

"This deep abyss has been produced (for those who), being sinners, false, untrue, go about like women without brothers, like wicked females hostile to their husbands."

R.V. vii. 104, 3: Indrāsomā dushkṛito vavre antar anārambhaṇe tamasi pravidhyatam | yathā nātaḥ punar ekaśchanodayad ityādi | 17. Pra yā jigāti khargaleva naktam upa druhā tanvaṁ gūhamānā vavrān anantān ava sā padīshṭa ityādi | "Indra and Soma, dash those malicious (Rakshases) into the abyss, into bottomless darkness, so that not even one of them may get out," etc. 17. "May that injurious Rākshasī, who goes about at night like an owl, concealing herself, fall into the bottomless abysses."

But these last texts form part of a hymn which refers to evil spirits.

R.V. ix. 73, 8: Vidvān sa viśvā bhuvanā 'bhi paśyati avajushṭān vidhyati karte avratān | "Knowing, he (Soma) beholds all worlds; he hurls the hated and irreligious into the abyss" (karte).

In x. 152, 4, Indra is prayed to consign to the lower darkness the man who injures his worshipper (yo asmān abhi dāsati adharaṁ gamayā tamaḥ: compare A.V. i. 21, 2); and in A.V. viii. 2, 24, the nethermost darkness is mentioned (na vai tatra mriyante no yanti adhamaṁ tamaḥ), "They do not die there, nor go to the nethermost darkness." See also A.v. ix. 2, 4, 9, 10, and 17; x. 3, 9; xii. 3, 49; xiii. 1, 32, where similar phrases occur (associated in one place, x. 3, 9, with asūrttam rajas, the distant (?) atmosphere); and R.V. x. 103, 12, and A.V. xviii. 3, 3, where the expression andham tamas, "blind darkness," is found.[471] But it is not clear that in these passages the words denote a place of punishment. In A.V. v. 30, 11, it is said to a sick man: udehi mṛityor gambhīrāt kṛishṇāch chit tamasas pari | "Rise up from deep death, even from the black darkness." In A.V. viii. 1, 10, tamas is used by itself, apparently for the state of the dead; and in A.V. viii. 2, 2, "the light of the living" (jīvatām jyotiḥ) is mentioned. In the preceding verse, 1, rajas and tamas are joined: "do not depart to the atmosphere and darkness" (rajas tamo mopagāḥ mā pra meshṭhāḥ). In A.V, xii. 4, 36, however, the adjective form of the ordinary word for hell (nāraka loka) occurs; and that region is threatened as the future abode of the man whose offence is there specified (athāhur nārakaṁ lokaṁ nirundhānasya yāchitām).

[471] Manu, viii. 94, connects andham tamas with hell, saying that a lying witness goes to hell in "blind darkness."

In the following passages of the Mahābhārata (xii. 6969 f.) hell and darkness (tamas) are identified: Anṛitaṁ tamaso rūpaṁ tamasā nīyate hy adhaḥ | tamo-grastāḥ na paśyanti prakāśaṁ tamasā vṛitāḥ | 6970. Svargaḥ prakāśaḥ ity āhur narakaṁ tamaḥ eva cha | "Falsehood is the embodiment of darkness (tamas): by darkness a man is carried downwards. Those who are seized by darkness, being enveloped in darkness, do not see the light. Heaven they say is light (prakāśa), and hell is darkness (tamas)."[472]

In one of the passages which have been quoted above (x. 16, 4) the "unborn part" of man is spoken of as being conveyed by Agni to "the world of the righteous." It will be observed that the word here employed is different from ātman, the term which at a later period was invariably used to denote the immaterial soul; and that this same word ātman occurs in the preceding verse in the sense of breath, as we must infer from the fact of its being bidden to mingle with the wind, the element to which it is akin. In some other passages of the Rig-veda we find the word manas employed for the soul, or the living principle which exists after death. Thus in x. 58, 1, it is said: Yat te Yamaṁ Vaivasvatam mano jāgāma dūrakam | tat te āvarttayāmasi iha kshayāya jīvase | "Thy soul, which has gone afar to Yama Vaivasvata, we bring back hither to dwell and to live." In the verses which follow, the soul is said to be brought back from a great many other places, the heaven, the earth, the four quarters of the sky, the ocean, the waters, the planets, the sun, the dawn, the past, the future, etc. And again in x. 60, 10, we find the same word employed: Yamād ahaṁ Vaivasvatāt Subandhor manaḥ ābharam | jīvātave na mṛityave atho arishṭatātayé | "I have brought the soul of Subandhu that it may live and not die, but be secure." Compare A.V. v. 3, 6, 13; vi. 53, 2; viii. 1, 3; viii. 2, 3; and Vāj. Sanh. iii. 53–56. Ātman is, however, used in some parts of the Rig-veda for the animating principle, as where the sun is called the soul of all things moving and stationary (i. 115, 1), or where Soma is called the soul of sacrifice (ix. 2, 10; ix. 6, 8), and of Indra (ix. 85, 3).

[472] Compare Vishṇu Purāṇa, ii. 6, 40: "Heaven is that which delights the mind; hell is that which gives it pain; hence, vice is called hell; virtue is called heaven" (manaḥ-prīti-karaḥ svargo narakas tad-viparyayaḥ | naraka-svarga-saṅjñe vai pāpa-puṇye dvijottama).

(6) Quotations from later works regarding a future existence.

I shall now adduce some passages from other Indian works of a later date, such as the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the epic poems, and the Purāṇas, to show how far the opinions which their authors entertained coincide with those representations of a future life which I have extracted from the Rig-, Yajur-, and Atharva-vedas.

In the 9th vol. of the Journal of the German Oriental Society (pp. 237 ff.) Professor Weber has communicated a legend from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, on penal retribution after death, to which he has prefixed some interesting remarks on the history of Indian opinion regarding the vanity of personal existence, and the desire to escape from the perpetual cycle of births to which that opinion conducts. He remarks that, owing to the fragmentary nature of the surviving documents of Indian literature, we are not yet in a position to trace with any distinctness the rise and growth of the doctrine of transmigration; though he considers it to admit of no doubt that the tenet in question was gradually developed in India itself, and not introduced from any foreign country. (See Professor Benfey's remarks on this subject in his Orient und Occident, vol. iii. pp. 169 f.) In the hymns of the Rig-veda, Prof. Weber goes on to observe, there is no trace discoverable of the metempsychosis, or of any disgust with personal existence. On the contrary, they manifest a cheerful enjoyment of life, and the most earnest desire for its prolongation in this world, as well as its continuation in the next. "So too," Professor Weber proceeds, "in the Brāhmaṇas, immortality, or at least longevity, is promised to those who rightly understand and practise the rites of sacrifice, while those who are deficient in this respect depart before their natural term of life (purā ha āyushaḥ)[473] to the next world, where they are weighed in a balance (xi. 2, 7, 33)[474] and receive good or evil according to [473] Compare R.V. x. 37, 6: bhadraṁ jīvanto jaraṇām aśīmahi; Śatap. Br. xi. 8, 3, 6: sarvam āyur eti ā ha eva jarāyai jīvati; Śatap. Br. x. 4, 3, 1, where the expression purā jarasaḥ is found; as it is also in R.V. viii. 56, 20, and A.V. v. 30, 17; x. 2, 30; xi. 3, 56. Purā ha' āyusho mriyate occurs in Śatap. Br. ii. 1, 4, 9: na purā āyushaḥ svakāmī preyāt in x. 2, 6, 7; and sarvam āyur eti in x. 2, 6, 19. See also Taitt. Sanh. iii. 2, 1, 2. Compare Psalm lv. 24: "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days;" Psalm ciii. 25, and Jeremiah xvii. 11.

[474] The passage (xi. 2, 7, 33) to which Weber has referred runs as follows: Atha ha eshā eva tulā yad dakshiṇo vedyantaḥ | sa yat sādhu karoti tad antarvedi atha their deeds. The more sacrifices any one has offered, the more ethereal is the body he obtains, or, as the Brāhmaṇa expresses it (x. 1, 5, 4),[475] the more rarely does he need to eat. In other passages, again (iv. 6, 1, 1: xi. 1, 8, 6; xii. 8, 3, 31),[476] it is promised as the highest reward, that the pious man shall be born in the next world with his entire body (sarvatanūr eva sāngaḥ). Here the high estimation of yad asādhu tad bahirvedi tasmād dakshiṇaṁ vedyantam adhispriśya iva āśīta | tulāyāṁ ha vai amushmin loke ādadhati | yatarad yaṁsyati tad anveshyati yadi sādhu vā asādhu vā iti | atha yaḥ evaṁ veda asmin ha eva loke tulām ārohati | ati amushmin loke tulādhānam muchyate sādhukṛityā ha eva asya yachhati na pāpakṛityā | "For in the next world they place (his good and evil deeds) in a balance. Whichever of the two shall outweigh (the other), that he shall follow, whether it be good or evil. Now, whosoever knows this places himself in the balance in this world, and is freed from being weighed in the next world; it is by good deeds and not by bad that (his scale) outweighs."

[475] x. 1, 5, 4: Atha ato yajnavīryāṇām eva | sāyam prātar ha vai amushmin loke agnihotra-hud aśnāti tāvatī ha tasmin yajne ūrg ardhamāse ardhamāse daśapūrṇamāsa-yājī chaturshu chaturshu māseshu chāturmāsya-yājī shaṭsu shaṭsu paśubandha-yājī saṁvatsare saṁvatsare somayājī śate śate saṁvatsareshu agnichit kāmam aśnāti kāmaṁ na | tad ha etad yāvat śatam saṁvatsarās tāvad amṛitam anantam aparyantam | sa yo ha etad evam veda evaṁ ha eva asya etad amṛitam anantam aparyantam bhavati | tasya yad api ishīkayā iva upahanyāt tad eva asya amṛitam anantam aparyantam bhavati | "Then as regards the powers of the sacrifices. In the next world the offerer of an Agnihotra eats morning and evening. So much nourishment resides in that sacrifice. The performer of the Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice eats every fortnight, the performer of the Chāturmāsya every four months, the performer of the Paśubandha every six months, the offerer of the Soma every year, whilst the kindler of fire eats every hundred years, or abstains at his pleasure. This means, that during this period of a hundred years he enjoys an immortal, unending, and unlimited life. He who so knows this enjoys in the same way this immortal, unending, and unlimited existence. Whatever part of him is separated, even as if by a straw, becomes immortal, unending, and unlimited."

[476] iv. 6, 1, 1: Sa ha sarvatanūr eva yajamāno 'mushmin loke saṁbhavati | "This sacrificer is born with his whole body (sarvatanūḥ) in the next world." xi. 1, 8, 6: Esha ha vai yajamānasya amushmin loke atmā bhavati yad yajnaḥ | sa ha sarvatanūr eva yajamāno amushmin loke saṁbhavati yaḥ evaṁ vidvān niskrītyā yajate | "This sacrifice becomes in the next world the soul of the sacrificer. The sacrificer who, knowing this, sacrifices with an expiation, is born with his whole body in the next world." xii. 8, 3, 31: Pra iva vai esha lokāṁś cha devatāś cha viśati yaḥ sautrāmaṇyā 'bhishichyate | tad etad avāntarām ātmānam upahvayate tathā kṛitsnaḥ eva sarvatanūḥ sāngaḥ saṁbhavati | "He who is consecrated by the Sautrāmaṇī enters the worlds, and among the gods. He then .... and is born entire, with his whole body and limbs." In the A.V. xi. 3, 32, and 49, it is said: Esha vai odanaḥ sarvāngaḥ sarvaparuḥ sarvatanūḥ | sarvāngaḥ eva sarvaparuḥ sarvatanūḥ saṁbhavati yaḥ evaṁ veda | "This odana (boiled rice) is complete in its limbs, joints, and body. He who knows this is born complete in limbs, joints, and body."

individual existence culminates, and a purely personal immortality is involved. It is evidently in connection with this that the loss of a dead man's bones is regarded by his friends as disgraceful, as the severest punishment of arrogance (xi. 6, 3, 11; xiv. 6, 9, 28);"[477] since, according to the custom prescribed by the Sūtras, the bones should be collected after cremation.

[The following passage from the same work (x. 4, 3, 9,) is not inconsistent with the above view. According to the story, the gods become immortal without parting with their bodies; and although men were not to enjoy immortality without "shuffling off their mortal coil," a subsequent resumption of their bodies in a glorified state is not thereby excluded: 9. Sa mṛityur devān abravīd "Atha eva sarve manushyāḥ amṛitāḥ bhavishyanti atha ko mahyam bhāgo bhavishyati" iti | te ha ūchur "na atoḥ 'paraḥ kaśchana saha śarīreṇa amṛito 'sad yadā eva tvam etam bhāgaṁ harāsai | atha vyāvṛitya śarīreṇa amṛito 'sad vidyayā vā karmaṇā vā" iti | yad vai tad abruvan "vidyayā vā karmaṇā vā" iti | eshā ha eva sā vidyā yad Agnir etad u ha eva tat karma yad Agniḥ | 10. Te ye evaṁ etad vidur ye vā etat karma kurvate mṛitvā punaḥ sambhavanti | te sambhavantaḥ eva amṛitatvam abhisambhavanti | atha ye evaṁ na vidur ye vā etat karma na kurvate mṛitvā punaḥ sambhavanti te etasya eva annam punaḥ punar bhavanti |

"Death said to the gods (who had become immortal by performing certain rites), 'in the very same way all men (also) shall become immortal; then what portion will remain for me?' The gods replied, [477] xi. 6, 3, 11: Sa ha uvācha "anatipraśnyām mā devatām atyaprākshīḥ purāitithyai marishyasi na te asthīni chana gṛihān prāpsyanti" iti | sa ha tathaiva mamāra | tasya ha apy anyad manyamānāḥ parimoshiṇo asthīny apajahruḥ | tasmād na upavādī syāt | "Do not scrutinize too far the deity which ought not to be too far scrutinized. Thou shalt die before such a time; not even thy bones shall reach thy home. So he died; and robbers carried off his bones, taking them for something else. Wherefore let no man be contentious." xiv. 6, 9, 28 (=Bṛihad Āranyaka Upanishad, iii. 9, 26; p. 210 f. of Roer's English translation): Taṁ tvā aupanishadam purusham pṛichhāmi taṁ ched me na vivakshyasi mūrdhā te vipatishyati" iti | taṁ ha Śākalyo na mene | tasya ha mūrdhā vipapāta | tasya ha apy anyad manyamānāḥ parimoshiṇo asthīny apajahruḥ | "I ask thee regarding this Purusha of the Upanishads. If thou shalt not explain him to me, thy head shall fall off. Śākalya did not understand this Purusha. So his head fell off; and robbers carried off his bones, taking them for something else." (Compare 1 Kings xiii. 22, and Jeremiah viii. 1, 2). See also the story of Atyaṁhas Āruṇi and Plaksha Dayyāmpāti in Taitt. Br. iii. 10, 9, 3–5.

'Henceforward no other being shall become immortal with his body, when thou shalt have seized that part (the body).[478] Now, every one who is to become immortal through knowledge, or by work, shall become immortal after parting with his body.' This which they said, 'by knowledge or by work,' means that knowledge which is Agni, that work which is Agni. 10. Those who so know this, or who perform this rite, are born again after death; and by being so born, they attain immortality. Whilst those who do not so know, or who do not perform this rite, are indeed born again after death, but become again and again his (death's) food." See the 4th vol. of this Work, pp. 48 ff., where this passage is given with its context.]

Professor Weber proceeds: "But whereas, in the oldest times, immortality in the abodes of the blessed, where milk and honey flow (xi. 5, 6, 4)[479] is regarded as the reward of virtue or wisdom, whilst the sinner or the fool is, after a short life, doomed to the annihilation of his personal existence, the doctrine of the Brāhmaṇas is that after death all are born again in the next world, where they are recompensed according to their deeds, the good being rewarded, and the wicked punished (vi. 2, 2, 27; x. 6, 3, 1; xi. 7, 2, 23)."[480]

[478] It appears, however, from the Taitt. S. vi. (p. 67*a* of the Indian Office MS.), that men were also conceived of as getting to heaven without dying. Brahmavādino vadanti "kim tad yajne yajamānaḥ kurute yena jīvan suvargam lokam eti" iti | jīvagraho vai esha yad adābhyo 'nabhishutasya gṛihṇāti | jīvantam eva enam survargam lokam gamayati | "Men versed in sacred science say 'What does the sacrificer perform in the sacrifice by which he ascends to heaven alive?' This adābhya libation is an offering of the living [Soma, i.e. of the plant uncrushed, according to Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. jīvagraha]; (the priest) offers this without pouring it out; and conveys the worshipper alive to heaven."

[479] xi. 5, 6, 3 f. (See the 3rd vol. of this work, where this passage is cited in the original with its context): "Study of the Vedas is the Brahma-sacrifice. . . . . The man who, knowing this, daily practises the study of the Vedas, conquers thrice as vast a region—and that, too, undecaying—as the region which he conquers who bestows this whole earth filled with wealth. Wherefore study of the Vedas is to be practised. 4. Verses of the Ṛik. are oblations of milk to the gods. He who, knowing this, daily studies the Rig-veda, does in fact satisfy the gods with oblations of milk; and they, when satisfied, satisfy him with prosperity, with breath, with generative power, with completeness in his being, with all excellent possessions. (Compare S'atap. Br. xi. 5, 7, 6, and A.V. iv. 34, 6, 7.)

[480] vi. 2, 2, 27: Tasmād āhuḥ kṛitaṁ lokam purusho 'bhi jāyate | "Hence they say that a man is born into the world which he has made." x. 6, 3, 1: Atha khalu kratumayo 'yam purushaḥ | sa yāvatkratur ayam asmāl lokāt praiti evaṁkratur ha amuṁ lokam pretya abhisambhavati | "Now truly this man is composed of

[The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, however, also expresses the conception of a higher state than that of desire and gratification, in a passage (x. 5, 4, 15) where it is said: 15. So 'sya esha sarvasya antam eva ātmā | sa esha sarvāsām apām madhye | sa esha sarvaiḥ kāmaiḥ sampannaḥ | āpo vai sarve kāmāḥ | sa esha akāmaḥ sarvakāmo na hy etaṁ kasyachana kāmaḥ | 16. Tad esha śloko bhavati "vidyayā tad āroha'nti yatra kāmāḥ parāgatāḥ | na tatra dakshiṇāḥ yanti nāvidvāṁsaś 'apasvinaḥ" iti | na ha eva taṁ lokaṁ dakshiṇābhir na tapasā 'nevaṁvid aśnute | evaṁvidāṁ ha eva sa lokaḥ |

"This soul is the end of all this. It abides in the midst of all the waters. It is supplied with all objects of desire. For the waters are all the objects of desire.[481] This (soul) is free from desire, and (yet) possesses all the objects of desire, for it desires nothing. 15. On this subject there is this verse: 'By knowledge men ascend to that condition in which desires have passed away. Thither gifts do not reach, nor austere devotees who are destitute of knowledge.'[482] For a person who does not possess this knowledge does not attain that world by gifts or by rigorous abstraction. It pertains only to those who have such knowledge."][483] sacrifice. So many sacrifices as he has performed when he departs from this world, with so many is he born in the other world after his death."

[481] Compare Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 2, 6: Apsu vai sarve kāmāḥ śritaḥ | "In the waters all objects of desire are contained."

[482] This verse is quoted in S'ankara's Commentary on the Brahma Sūtras, pp. 911 and 952, of the edit. in Bibl. Ind.

[483] In another passage a curious contrast is drawn between two different kinds of sacrificers, the ātmayājin and the devayājin, S'atap. Br. xi. 2, 6, 13: ātmayājī sreyān | devayājī ity ātmayājī iti ha brūyāt | sa ha vai ātmayājī yo veda "idam me anena angaṁ saṁskriyate idaṁ me anena angam upadhīyate" iti | sa yathā 'his tvacho nirmuchyeta evam asmād martyāt śarīrāt pāpmano nirmuchyate sa ṛiṅmayo yajurmayaḥ sāmamayaḥ āhutimayaḥ svargaṁ lokam abhi sambhavati | atha ha sa devayājī yo veda devān eva aham idaṁ yaje devān samarpayāmi iti sa yathā śreyase pāpīyān baliṁ hared vaiśyo vā rājne baliṁ hared evaṁ sa sa ha na tāvantam lokaṁ jayati yāvantam itaraḥ | "He who sacrifices to himself is superior. A man should say, 'There is a worshipper who sacrifices to the gods,' and 'another who sacrifices to himself.' He who understands that by such and such [a rite] such and such a one of his members is rectified, and that by such and such another rite such and such another of his members is restored,—he is the person who sacrifices to himself; he is freed from this mortal body, from sin (or misery), as a serpent is freed from its worn-out skin, and acquiring the nature of the Ṛik, Yajush, and Sāman, and of Sacrifice, he attains to heaven. 2. On the other hand, he who understands that with such and such an oblation he worships the gods, and offers it up to them, is like an inferior Professor Weber adds in a note: "According to a very ancient conception, the soul, after being breathed forth from the body, ascends to the abodes of the blessed on the wings of the air, of the wind (Ἑρμείας ψυχοπομπός),[484] having itself been changed into an aerial form. With this is connected the later idea of the resolution of the senses of the dying into fire, sun, moon, wind, and the regions of the sky[485] (x. 3, 3, 8; xiv. 6, 2, 13), and the still more modern and systematic notion of their being resolved into the five elements. In one place (i. 9, 3, 10)[486] I find the idea that the rays of the sun are themselves the pious who presents tribute to a superior, or as a Vaiśya brings tribute to a king; and he does not conquer for himself so great a world as the other does." Professor Aufrecht inclines to think that there is no such difference between the sense of ātmayājin here and in Manu, xii. 91, as is indicated in the Lexicon of Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth, and that in the passage before us ātman must be taken in the Vedantic sense, and the compound explained to mean "he who sacrifices in himself, that is, in his own individuality, as an integral part of the universal soul," quoting Kullūka on Manu, xii. 91, in proof of this sense. He also refers to S'atap. Br. x. 3, 2, 13 (kiṁ chhandaḥ kā devatā ūnātiriktāni iti | nyūnāksharā chhandaḥ āpo devatā ūnātiriktāni | sā eshā ātmavidyā eva | etanmayo ha etāḥ devatāḥ etam ātmānam abhisambhavati), which I translate: "What the metre, what deity are the things which are defective or superfluous? The nyūnāksharā (metre with deficient syllables) is the metre; the waters are the deity representing the things which are defective or superfluous. This is the knowledge of soul. He who is composed of this attains to these deities, to this soul." Here the knowledge of soul in the Vedantic sense may be referred to. But in the previous passage the ātmayājin is represented, not as attaining to soul, but to heaven, a destination which he who has a knowledge of soul in the Vedantic sense no longer desires.

[484] Compare A.V. xviii. 2, 21 f., quoted above.

[485] x. 3, 3, 8: Sa yadā evaṁvid asmāl lokāt praiti vāchā eva Agnim apyeti chakshushā Ādityam manasā Chandraṁ śrotreṇa Diśaḥ prāṇena Vāyum | sa etānmayaḥ eva bhūtvā etāsām devatānāṁ yāṁ yāṁ kāmayate sā bhūtvā ilayati | "Whoever departs from this world knowing this goes with his voice to fire (Agni), with his eye to the sun (Āditya; compare R.V. x. 16, 3, quoted above), with his mind (manas) to the moon, with his ear to the regions, with his breath (prāṇa) to the wind (Vāyu; compare R.V. x. 16, 3). Having attained the nature of these, and become any one of these deities that he desires, he rests." xiv. 6, 2, 13 (=Bṛih. Āraṇy. Up. p. 542 f.): Yatra asya purushasya mṛitasya agnim vāg apyeti vātam prāṇas chakshur ādityam manaś chandraṁ diśaḥ śrotram pṛithivīṁ śarīram ākāśam ātmā oshadhīr lomāni vanaspatīn kesāḥ apsu lohitaṁ cha retaś cha nidhīyate kva ayaṁ tadā purusho bhavati | "When the voice of the departed soul goes to fire, his breath to the wind, his eye to the sun, his mind to the moon, his hearing to the regions, his body to the earth, his soul to the æther, the hairs of his body to the plants, the hairs of his head to the trees, his blood and his seminal fluid to the waters,—where then is this spirit?"

[486] i. 9, 3, 10: Yaḥ esha tapati tasya ye raśmayas te sukṛitaḥ | atha yat param bhāḥ Prajāpatir vā svargo vā lokaḥ | "The rays of him who shines (the sun) are the pious. The light which is above is Prajāpati, or the heavenly world."

(sukṛitas); and in another (vi. 5, 4, 8)[487] the conception that the stars are the lights of the righteous who go to heaven. With this the similar statement in the Indralokāgamana may be compared."

The following are some other passages of the Brāhmaṇas (not cited by Professor Weber) regarding future rewards. In the Śatap. Br. xi. 6, 2, 2, 3, it is said: "He who sacrifices thus obtains perpetual prosperity and renown, and conquers for himself an union[488] with these two gods (Āditya and Agni), and an abode in the same sphere." (See the original passages with the context in the 1st vol. of this Work, pp. 426 ff.) In the same work (ii. 6, 4, 8) it is said that those who offer particular sacrifices become Agni, Varuṇa, or Indra, and attain to union, and to the same spheres, with those gods respectively (sa yad vaiśvadevena yajate Agnir eva tarhi bhavaty Agner eva sāyujyaṁ salokatāṁ jayati | atha yad Varuṇapraghāsair yajate Varuṇaḥ eva tarhi bhavati ityādi). And in the same way the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 10, 11, 6 f., states that the possessors of particular kinds of knowledge attain to union with Āditya (the Sun), and to union, and to the same spheres, with Agni, with Vāyu, with Indra, with Bṛihaspati, with Prajāpati, and with Brahmā. In the same work, iii. 10, 9, 11, mention is made of a certain sage who, through his knowledge, became a golden swan, went to heaven, and attained to union with the sun (Ahīno ha Āśvatthyaḥ sāvitraṁ vidānchakāra | 11. Sa ha haṁso hiraṇmayo bhūtvā svargaṁ lokam iyāya ādityasya sāyujyam). The Śatap.

[487] vi. 5, 4, 8: Ye hi janāḥ puṇyakṛitaḥ svargaṁ lokaṁ yanti teshām etāni jyotīṁshi | "These (the stars) are the lights of the practisers of holy acts who go to heaven." The passage of the Indralokāgamana (Mbh. iii. 1745 ff.), referred to by Professor Weber, is as follows: Na tatra sūryaḥ somo vā dyotate nacha pāvakaḥ | 1746. Svayaiva prabhayā tatra dyotante puṇyalabdhayā | tārārūpāṇi yānīha dṛiśyante dyutimanti vai | 1747. Dīpavad viprakṛishṭatvāt tanūni sumahānty api | tāni tatra prabhāsvanti rūpavanti cha Pāṇḍuvaḥ | 1748. Dadarśa sveshu dhishṇyeshu dīpavanti svayā 'rchishā | tatra rājarshayaḥ siddhāḥ vīrāścha nihatāḥ yudhi | 1751. Ete sukṛitinaḥ pārtha sveshu dhishṇyeshv avasthitāḥ | 1752. Yān dṛishṭavān asi vibho tārārūpāṇi bhūtale | "The sun shines not there (in Indra's heaven), nor the moon, nor fire. There the righteous shine by their own light, acquired by their own virtue. Arjuna beheld there, shining in their own spheres, luminous and beautiful, those bright forms of the stars which, when seen from the earth, appear from distance to be as small as lamps, although they are very vast." "These," as Arjuna's conductor explained to him, "were the righteous occupying their own spheres, whom, when on earth, he had seen in the sky in the form of stars."

[488] The word sāyujya, "close union," here used, seems to prepare the way for laya and mukti, "dissolution," or "absorption," into the supreme spirit.

Br. xi. 4, 4, 1, also speaks of union with Brahmā: Shaḍ vai Brahmaṇo dvāraḥ Agnir Vāyur Āpaś Chandramāḥ Vidyud Ādityaḥ | 21. Sa yaḥ upadagdhena havishā yajate Agninā sa ha Brahmaṇo dvāreṇa pratipadyate | so 'gninā Brahmaṇo dvāreṇa pratipadya Brahmaṇaḥ sāyujyaṁ salokatāṁ jayati | "There are six doors to Brahma, viz., Agni, Vāyu, the Waters, the Moon, Lightning, the Sun. 2. He who sacrifices with a burnt offering, arrives by Agni, as the door to Brahmā; and having so arrived, he attains to a union with Brahmā, and abides in the same sphere with him." In A.V. xix. 7, 1, 1, a Brahmaloka is mentioned. [For the Puranic idea of the world of Brahma, see Wilson's Vishṇu Purana, 4to. ed., p. 48, note 3, and p. 213, note 3 (or, for the first of these passages, Professor Hall's 8vo. ed., vol. i. p. 98), and for the second, vol. ii. p. 228, of the same edition.]

In the Śatap. Br. xi. 5, 6, 9, it is declared that a man who reads the Vedas in a particular manner is "freed from dying again, and attains to a sameness of nature with Brahmā (Brahmaṇaḥ sātmatām). Even if he cannot read with much power, let him read one sentence relating to the gods." (See the original passage with the context in the 3rd vol. of this Work, pp. 18 ff.)

The following curious passage is from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 44: Sa vai esha na kadāchana astam eti na udeti | taṁ yad astam eti iti manyante ahnaḥ eva tad antam itvā atha ātmānaṁ viparyasyate rātrīm eva avastāt kurute ahaḥ parastāt | atha yad enam prātar udeti iti manyante rātrer eva tad antam itvā atha ātmānam viparyasyate ahar eva avastāt kurute rātrīm parastāt | sa vai esha na kadāchana nimrochati | na ha vai kadāchana nimrochati etasya ha sāyujyaṁ sarūpatāṁ salokatām aśnute yaḥ evaṁ veda yaḥ evaṁ veda |

"The Sun neither ever sets or rises. When people think he sets he (only) turns himself round, after reaching the end of the day, and makes night below and day above. Then when people think he rises in the morning he (only) turns himself round after reaching the end of the night, and makes day below and night above. In truth, he never sets. The man who knows this, that the sun never sets, enjoys union and sameness of nature with him, and abides in the same sphere." [489]

[489] See Prof. Haug's Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, ii. p. 242. I differ from that scholar in translating parastāt, "above," and not "on the other side." Compare Ind. Stud. ix. p. 278. See also Vishṇu Purāṇa, ii. 8; p. 241 of Dr. Hall's edition of Wilson's Translation, vol. ii.

In another passage (ii. 17) the same work declares how far heaven is from earth: Sahasram anūchyaṁ svargakāmasya | sahasrāśvīne vai itaḥ svargo lokaḥ | "He who desires heaven should repeat a thousand (verses). For the heavenly world is distant from hence a thousand days' journey on horseback."

In the Śatap. Br. vi. 6, 2, 4, it is said that the door of heaven (svarga-loka) is situated in the north-eastern regions (yad u eva udaṅ prāṁ tishṭhan | etasyāṁ ha diśi svargasya lokasya dvāram), while that by which the heaven of the Fathers is entered, lies to the south-east (prāchīṁ cha dakshiṇāṁ cha | etasyāṁ ha diśi pitṛilokasya dvāram, ibid. xiii. 8, 1, 5).[490]

In the legend on future retribution, quoted by Weber, as above stated, from the same Brāhmaṇa (xi. 6, 1, 1 ff.) it is related that Bhṛigu, the son of Varuṇa, visited, by his father's command, the four points of the compass, where he saw men being cut into pieces and eaten by other men, who, when questioned by Bhṛigu, declared that they were revenging on their victims the treatment which they had received at their hands in the other world (on earth). These victims are allegorically explained in the Brāhmaṇa as representing the trees, animals, plants, and waters employed in sacrifice. But Professor Weber is of opinion that the story is an old popular legend regarding the penal retribution executed by the former sufferers themselves on those who had oppressed them while on earth, and that the narrative had been appropriated by the priests and introduced into the Brāhmaṇa to relieve the monotony of its tedious disquisitions, and explained in the manner I have stated.

I return to Professor Weber's discussion of the doctrine of the Brāhmaṇas regarding a future state.

"The Brāhmaṇas, however," he continues, "are not explicit in regard to the duration of these rewards and punishments; and it is here that we have to seek the origin of the doctrine of transmigration. To men of the mild disposition and reflective spirit of the Indians, it would not appear that reward and punishment could be eternal. They would conceive that it must be possible by atonement and purification to become absolved from the punishment of the sins committed in this short life. And in the same way they could not imagine that the reward of virtues practised during the same brief period could continue for ever. The dogma of transmigration answered plainly to both of these suppositions, though in another respect it could scarcely do so; for where was either a beginning or an end to be sought? The spirit of inquiry sought to escape from this dilemma by systematic refinements (sonderung), but only became more hopelessly entangled; and at length it was only extricated by cutting the knot, by succumbing to the influence of the aspiration after complete redemption from the bondage of the world, and of individual existence; so that that destiny, which was in earlier times regarded as the greatest punishment, was now recognized as the highest reward. This mode of cutting the knot is the work of Buddha and Buddhism; and the best proof that the fundamental substance of the Brāhmaṇas is pre-Buddhistic is (apart from all other evidence) to be found in this, that they do not recognize the existence of the dilemma in question, that they know nothing of the contempt of life to which we have alluded, but rather express with directness and naïveté a fresh and genuine love of existence, and a yearning after immortality. It is only some passages of the Bṛihadāraṇyaka and of the Chhāndogya Upanishad, which form an exception to this assertion; and on that account they must be held evidently to belong to the period immediately preceding Buddha's appearance, or even to that which followed it."

[490] See Weber, in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, ix. 243, 308.

It does not quite agree with the conclusion here announced that the passage I have quoted above from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 5, 6, 9, appears to speak of union with Brahma;—unless Brahmā, and not Brahma, is meant, and unless the word sātmatā is to be understood in some other sense than the later one of absorption into his essence.

Though Indra, Varuṇa, and other gods are represented in the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas as leading a sensual and immoral life,[491] and though the Apsarases, or celestial nymphs, are expressly declared to be courtezans,[492] form the subject of most voluptuous descriptions,[493] and are [491] See the 4th vol. of this Work, p. 41.

[492] Ibid. p. 394; and Rāmāyaṇa, i. 45, 35 (ed. Schlegel), and i. 46, 2 (Gorresio).

[493] See Mahābhārata, iii. 1821 ff.; Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, xxvi. 16 ff. (Bombay ed.).

represented as being sent by the gods from time to time to seduce austere sages into unchastity, and are promised, as we have already seen, as the companions of warriors in a future life,—yet the pictures drawn of paradise in those works are not always of such a gross character. In the account of the highest stage of heavenly blessedness contained in the Mahābhārata, iii. 15441 ff., there is no promise of any sensual gratification held out. It appears (vv. 15407–15487) that a sage named Mudgala had lived a life of poverty, piety, and self-restraint, offering hospitality to thousands of Brahmans, according to his humble means, with the grain which he gleaned like a pigeon (kāpotīṁ vṛittim āsthitaḥ), and which (like the widow of Zarephath's oil) never underwent diminution, or rather increased again when it was required (verse 15413: brīhidroṇasya tad hy asya dadato 'nnam mahātmanaḥ | śishṭam mātsaryahīnasya vardhaty atithidarśanāt). At length another holy man, called Durvāsas, famous in Indian tradition for his irascible temper, came to prove Mudgala's powers of endurance; and six times devoured all the food which the hospitable saint possessed. Finding that the temper of his host was altogether unaffected by these trials, Durvāsas expressed the highest admiration of his virtue, and declared that he would go bodily to heaven. As he spoke these words a messenger of the gods arrived in a celestial car, and called upon Mudgala to ascend to a state of complete perfection. The sage, however, desired first to learn the advantages and drawbacks of the heavenly state, and the messenger proceeded to tell him (vv. 15441 ff.) first what kind of people go there, viz., those who have performed austerities or celebrated great sacrifices, the truthful, the orthodox, the righteous, the self-restrained, the meek, the liberal, the brave, etc. These celestial abodes were, he said, shining, glorious, and filled with all delights. There is seen the vast golden mountain Meru, and the holy garden Nandana, etc., where the righteous disport. There hunger, thirst, weariness, cold, heat, fear, are unknown; there is nothing disgusting or disagreeable; the scents are delightful; the sounds are pleasant to the ear and mind; there is no sorrow, nor lamentation, nor decay, nor labour, nor envy, nor jealousy, nor delusion. There the blessed are clothed with glorious bodies, which are produced by their works, and not generated by any father or mother. Their garlands are fragrant and unfading; they ride in aerial cars. Beyond these regions there are, however, others of a higher character—those to which the rishis, who have been purified by their works, proceed. Still further on are those where the Ṛibhus, who are gods even to the gods, dwell, and where there is no annoyance occasioned by women (strī-kṛitas tāpaḥ),[494] or by envy arising from the sight of worldly grandeur. The blessed there do not subsist on oblations, nor do they feed upon ambrosia; they have celestial and not coarse material bodies. These eternal gods of gods do not desire pleasure; they do not change with the revolutions of Kalpas (great mundane ages). How can they then be subject either to decay or death? They experience neither joy, nor pleasure, nor delight, neither happiness nor suffering, neither love nor hatred. That highest state, so difficult to attain, and which is beyond the reach of those who seek after pleasure (agamyā kāma-gocharaiḥ), is desired even by the gods. This celestial felicity, the messenger says, is now within Mudgala's reach,—the fruit of his good deeds. The speaker next, according to his promise, explains the drawbacks of the heavenly state. As the fruit of works done on earth is enjoyed in heaven, whilst no other new works are performed there from which new rewards could spring, this enjoyment is cut off from its root, and must therefore come to an end (verse 15468 : kṛitasya karmaṇas tatra bhujyate yat phalaṁ divi | na chānyat kriyate karma mūla-chhedena bhujyate). For this world is the place for works, while the other is the place for reward (verse 15475 : karmabhūmir iyam brahman phalabhūmir asau matā). This loss of gratifications to which the heart has become devoted, and the dissatisfaction and pain which arise in the minds of those who have sunk to a lower estate, from beholding the more brilliant prosperity of others, is intolerable. To this must be added the consciousness and the bewilderment of those who so descend, and the fear of falling which they experience when their garlands begin to fade. Such are the defects which attach to all existence till it is absorbed in Brahma. But the state of those who have fallen from heaven is not altogether without compensation. As a result of their previous good deeds they are born in a condition of happiness; though, if they are not vigilant, they sink still lower. Having given this explanation, the messenger of the gods invites Mudgala to accompany him to paradise. The saint, however, after consideration, replies that he can have nothing to do with a state of happiness which is vitiated by so great defects, and the termination of which is followed by so great misery. He has therefore no desire for heaven; and will seek only that eternal abode where there is no sorrow, nor distress, nor change. He then asks the celestial messenger what other sphere there is which is free from all defects. The messenger replies, that above the abode of Brahmā is the pure eternal light, the highest sphere of Vishṇu, who is regarded as the supreme Brahma. Thither none can proceed who are devoted to objects of sense, or who are the slaves of dishonesty, avarice, anger, delusion, or malice; but only the unselfish, the humble, those who are indifferent to pain and pleasure, those whose senses are under restraint, and those who practise contemplation and fix their minds on the deity. The sage then dismissed the messenger of the gods, began to practise ascetic virtues, becoming indifferent to praise and blame, regarding clods, stones, and gold as alike. Pure knowledge led to fixed contemplation; and that again imparted strength and complete comprehension, whereby he attained supreme eternal perfection, in the nature of quietude [nirvāṇa] (jnānayogena śuddhena dhyānanityo babhūva ha | dhyānayogād balaṁ labdhvā prāpya buddhim anuttamām | jagāma śāśvatīṁ siddhim parāṁ nirvāṇa-lakshaṇām).[495]

[494] Compare Plato, Republic, i. 4.

The difference between the results of meritorious works and of knowledge, so familiar to the religious philosophy of the Hindus, is clearly set forth in the following verses of the Mahābhārata, xii. 8810 ff.:

Karmaṇā badhyate jantur vidyayā tu pramuchyate | tasmāt karma na kurvanti yatayaḥ pāradarśinaḥ | 8811. Karmaṇā jāyate pretya mūrtimān shoḍaśātmakaḥ | vidyayā jāyate nityam avyaktaṁ hy avyayātmakam | 8812. Karma tv eke praśaṁsanti svalpabuddhi-ratāḥ narāḥ | tena te deha-jālāni ramayantaḥ upāsate | 8813. Ye sma buddhim parām prāptāḥ dharma-naipuṇa-darśinaḥ | na te karma praśaṁsanti kūpaṁ nadyām pibann iva | 8814. Karmaṇaḥ phalam āpnoti sukhaduhkhe bhavābhavau | vidyayā tad avāpnoti yatra gatvā na śochati | 8815. Yatra gatvā na mriyate yatra gatvā na jāyate | na punar jāyate yatra yatra gatvā na varttate | 8816. Yatra tad Brahma parāmam avyaktam achalaṁ dhruvam | avyākṛitam anāyāsam amṛitaṁ chāviyogi cha |

[495] See the other passages quoted, s.v., by Böhtlingk and Roth, from Brāhmanical writings where this word is used. Its employment by Buddhists to express the highest destiny of mundane creatures is well known.

"By works a creature is bound; by knowledge he is liberated; wherefore devotees gifted with perfect insight perform no works. Through works a creature is born again after death, with a body (of one or other) of sixteen descriptions; by knowledge he becomes the Eternal, Imperceptible, and Undecaying. Some men of little understanding eulogise works, and so embrace with delight the entanglements of corporeal existence. But those who have reached the highest intelligence, and a perfect comprehension of righteousness, do not commend works, as a person drinking from a river thinks little of a well. The results which a man obtains from works are pleasure and pain, prosperity and adversity; by knowledge he gains that condition in which his griefs are at an end, in which he dies not, in which his birth is not repeated, from which he does not return; in which that supreme Brahma exists imperceptible, unchanging, etc., etc."

(7) Yama, and a future life,—a metrical sketch.

To great king Yama homage pay,
Who was the first of men that died,
That crossed the mighty gulf, and spied
For mortals out the heavenward way.

No power can ever close the road
Which he to us laid open then,
By which in long procession men
Ascend to his sublime abode.

By it our fathers all have passed;
And that same path we too shall trace,
And every new succeeding race
Of mortal men, while time shall last.

The god assembles round his throne
A growing throng, the good and wise—
All those whom, scanned with searching eyes,
He recognizes as his own.

Departed mortal,[496] speed from earth
By those old ways thy sires have trod;
Ascend, behold the expectant god
Who calls thee to a higher birth.

First must each several element
That joined to form thy living frame
Flit to the region whence it came,
And with its parent source be blent.

Thine eye shall seek the solar orb,
Thy life-breath to the wind shall fly,
Thy part ethereal to the sky;
Thine earthy part shall earth absorb.

Thine unborn part shall Agni bright
With his benignest rays illume,
And guide it through the trackless gloom
To yonder sphere of life and light.

On his resplendent pinions rise,
Or soar upon a car aloft,
By Wind-gods fanned with breezes soft,
Until thou enterest paradise.

And calmly pass, without alarm,
The four-eyed hounds that guard the road
Which leads to Yama's bright abode:
Their master's friends they dare not harm.

All imperfections leave behind:
Assume thine ancient frame once more,—
Each limb, and sense, thou hadst before,—
From every earthly taint refined,

[496] The dead are thus addressed at funeral ceremonials.

And now with heavenly glory bright,
With life intenser, nobler, blest,
With large capacity to taste
A fuller measure of delight.

Thou there once more each well-known face
Shalt see of those thou lovedst here:
Thy parents, wife, and children dear,
With rapture shalt thou soon embrace.

The Fathers, too, shalt thou behold,
The heroes who in battle died,
The saints and sages, glorified,
The pious, bounteous, kings of old.

The gods whom here in humble wise
Thou worshippedst with doubt and awe,
Shall there the impervious veil withdraw
Which hid their glory from thine eyes.

The good which thou on earth hast wrought,
Each sacrifice, each pious deed,
Shall there receive its ample meed;
No worthy act shall be forgot.

In those fair realms of cloudless day,
Where Yama every joy supplies,
And every longing satisfies,
Thy bliss shall never know decay.

(8) Nachiḱétas, an ancient theosophic story, metrically rendered from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, and the Kaṭha Upanishad.

As an illustration of the preceding remarks of Professor Weber (in pp. 314 ff.), on the subject of transmigration, and generally of the later doctrine of the Upanishads on the nature and destiny of the soul, I introduce here a free metrical translation of the story of Nachikétas, as told briefly in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 11, 8, 1 ff., and in a greatly developed form in the Kaṭha Upanishad. An English translation of this Upanishad, by Dr. Roer, will be found in the Bibliotheca Indica, vol. xv. published in 1853, pp. 99 ff., and a German version in Windischmann's work, entitled "die Philosophie im Fortgang der Weltgeschichte," pp. 1706 ff.:

Desiring heaven, a sage of old
With sacrifice the gods adored;
Devoting to the priests his hoard
Of slowly-gathered goods and gold.

His son, young Nachikétas, stood,
And saw the gifts his father brought
To give the priests: "My sire," he thought,
"His vow has not made fully good."

"Thou hast not all, my father, given Thou hadst to give," he calmly said;
"One offering more must yet be made,
If thou wouldst hope to merit heaven."

"To whom shall I be given, my sire?"
His father deemed the question vain;
Once more he asked, and yet again.
"To Death," his father cried in ire.

He rose to go to Death's abode;
A Voice addressed him from the air,
"Go, seek Death's house, and enter there
What time its lord shall be abroad:

"Three nights within his mansion stay,
But taste not, though a guest, his food;
And when, in hospitable mood
He comes and asks thee, thou shalt say:—

"'I in thy house three nights have past.'
When next he asks, 'What didst thou eat?'
Say, 'First thy children were my meat,
Thy cattle next, thy merits last.'" [497]

The youth that heavenly Voice obeyed,
And dwelt three nights in Death's abode;
When questioned by his host, the god,
He answered as the Voice had said.

Disturbed that thus his youthful guest
Had not been fitly entertained,
The god, to make amends constrained,
The stranger humbly thus addressed:—

"I bow before thee, reverend child;
I pray thee, crave a boon of me."
"My father let me, living, see,"
The boy replied, "and reconciled."

To whom the god—"I grant thy prayer;
But ask a second boon," replied.
"May my good works," the stripling cried,
Of bliss an endless harvest bear."

This, too, according, Death desired
He yet one boon would choose, the last.
"When men away from earth have past,
Then live they still?" the youth inquired.

"To solve this question, dark and grave,
Was even for gods too hard a task:
This boon, I pray thee, cease to ask,
My son," said Death, "another crave."

[497] By these words, according to the Indian commentator, it is intimated that the host who leaves his guest without food for one night, loses his children; that by a similar neglect on the second night, he loses his cattle; and that, finally, he forfeits the reward of his merits in a future life, if the guest is allowed to fast during the third night.

Youth Nachikétas, undeterred,
Rejoined, "The boon I choose, bestow;
Who can like thee the answer know?
No boon with this may be compared."

Death said, "Ask all thine heart's desire;
Sons long-lived, cattle, gold, demand,
Elect a wide domain of land,
And length of days from me require;

"Or seek what earth cannot supply—
The love of witching heavenly brides,
And all celestial joys besides;
But into death forbear to pry."

The youth rejoined, "The force of man
Is frail, and all excess of joys
His feeble organs soon destroys:
Our longest life is but a span.

"Wealth cannot satisfy; all zest
Of pleasure flies before thy face;
Our life depends upon thy grace:
Once more, of boons I crave the best;

"For who, with deathless youth though crowned,
And godlike force, if wise, would deign
To spend an endless life in vain
In carnal joy's disturbing round?"

When thus the stripling had withstood,
Though proffered by a god, the lure
Of sensual bliss, and craved the pure
Delight of transcendental good;

Then Death, who knew the unborn soul
And being's essence, taught the youth
The science of the highest truth,
Through which is reached the final goal:

"Two things for men's regard contend—
The good, the pleasant; he who woos
The good is blest; while they who choose
The pleasant miss the highest end.

"The wise between the two discern,
The pleasant spurn, the good embrace,
But fools the pleasant vainly chase;
To love the good they cannot learn.

"The first take knowledge for their guide;
The last by ignorance are led:
Far, far, diverge the paths they tread,
The chasm that parts their goals is wide.

"The fools who ignorance obey,
Conceive they much have learnt and know,
But roam, unwitting where they go,
As blind men, led by blind men, stray.

"Absorbed in sordid cares or strife,
The men whom earthly passions fire
To no sublimer aims aspire,
Nor dream of any future life.

"Of all the objects men can know,
The highest is the soul, too high
For common mortals to descry,
Whose eyes are dazed by outward show.

"Some men have never learnt this lore,
And some, whom sages seek to teach,
Possess no faculty to reach
That sacred doctrine's inner core.

"O skilled and wonderful, my son,
Is he the soul who gains and knows!
This subtile science only those
Can teach who think the soul as one.

"The sage whose spirit's gaze intense
This God, the Soul (from fleshly eyes Impenetrably veiled) descries,
No longer dotes on things of sense.

"Derived from no anterior source,
The soul, unborn, exempt from all
The accidents which life befall,
Holds on its everlasting course.

"The smiter thinks that he can slay,
The smitten fears that he is slain:
The thoughts of both alike are vain;
The soul survives the murderous fray.

"Steel cannot cut, nor cleave, nor tear,
Nor fire consume, nor water wet,
Nor winds e'er dry it up, nor yet
Aught else its deathless essence wear.

"A man casts from him on the shelf
His garments old, and newer takes;
So bodies worn the soul forsakes,
And new assumes, unchanged itself.[498]

"The man who learns the soul to be Minute, yet infinitely vast,
He, by his Maker's grace, at last
Its majesty attains to see.

"It travels far and wide, at rest;
Moves everywhere, although asleep;
Say, who but I the secret deep
Of this mysterious god has guessed?

[498] The ideas in this and the preceding verse are taken from the Bhagavadgītā.

"By reasoning, thought, or many books,
This hidden soul is sought in vain;
That man alone the soul may gain
On whom the soul with favour looks.

"Elected thus, the sage believes His oneness with the One supreme,
Awakes for ever from the dream
Which uninstructed men deceives;

"And soon from imperfection purged,
And freed from circling life and death,
He calmly yields his vital breath,
And in the sovereign Soul is merged.[499]

[499] In the last two verses I have stated the Vedantic doctrine more explicitly than it is expressed in the Kaṭha Upanishad.

SECTION XXI.

MINOR DIVINITIES.

TRITA ĀPTYA, AHIRBUDHNYA, AND AJA EKAPĀD.

The following account of the deity, Trita, is given in the Lexicon of Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. :—

"Trita is the name of a Vedic god, who appears principally in connection with the Maruts, Vāta or Vāyu, and Indra, and to whom, as to these other deities, combats with demons, Tvāshṭra, Vṛitra, the Serpent, and others are ascribed. He is called Āptya, and his abode is conceived of as remote and hidden: hence arises the custom of wishing that evil may depart to him. He bestows long life. Several passages show the lower and certainly later view of Trita, that he fights with the demons under the guidance and protection of Indra, and thus lead to the conception of a rishi Trita (Nirukta, iv. 6)."

Reference has been already made to Trita (a) in p. 117, where Professor Roth's opinion, that he was an ancient god superseded by Indra, is quoted, (b) in p. 230, where two texts (R.V. x. 8, 8, and x. 99, 6), relating to his conflicts with the three-headed demon, are cited, and (c) in p. 195, where a prayer to Ushas, to drive away sleeplessness to Trita Āptya (R.V. viii. 47, 14 ff.) is adduced.

Some of the other detached verses relating to this divinity (to whom no separate hymn is dedicated) are the following: i. 52, 5; i. 105, 9; i. 163, 2 f.; i. 187, 1; ii. 11, 19 f., etc.

Ahirbudhnya is, according to the Lexicon of Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v., budhnya, "the Dragon of the deep, who is reckoned among the deities of the middle sphere." The deep in which he resides is the atmospheric ocean.

Aja Ekapād is, according to the same authorities, s.v., "the One-footed Impeller, probably a storm-god; according to the commentators he represents the sun." See Roth's Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 165. These two gods, like Trita, are merely mentioned in detached verses.

SECTION XX.

THE GODDESSES MENTIONED IN THE VEDIC HYMNS.

Of the goddesses mentioned in the Rig-veda some have been noticed already in former parts of this volume, viz., Pṛithivī (pp. 21 ff.); Aditi, the mother of the Ādityas, and representative of the universe (pp. 35 ff.); Diti, her counterpart (p. 42 f.); Nishṭigrī, the mother (pp. 13 and 79), and Indrāṇī (p. 82), the wife of Indra;[500] Pṛiśni, the mother of the Maruts (p. 147); Ushas (pp. 181 ff.); and Sūryā, the daughter of the Sun, and spouse of the Aśvins, or of Soma (pp. 335 ff.). Various other goddesses are also celebrated in the hymns of the Rig-veda, such as Agnāyī, Varuṇānī, Rodasī, Rākā, Sinīvālī, Śraddhā (Faith), Aramati, and the Apsarases, whose names, however, occur but rarely; and Sarasvatī, with her cognates, who receive considerably greater prominence.

In R.V. i. 22, 11, the goddesses, wives of the heroes (the gods), with uncut wings, are besought to protect and bless the worshipper (abhi no devīr avasā mahaḥ śarmaṇā nṛipatnīḥ | achhinnapatrāḥ sachantām). Compare Vāj. S. xi. 61, and Śatap. Br. vi. 5, 4, 8).

(1) Sarasvatī.

Sarasvatī is a goddess of some, though not of very great, importance in the Rig-veda. As observed by Yāska (Nirukta, ii. 23) she is celebrated both as a river and as a deity[501] (tatra Sarasvatī ity etasya nadīvad devatāvach cha nigamāḥ bhavanti). As an instance of the former character, he refers to R.V. vi. 61, 2, which I shall quote further on. She was no doubt primarily a river deity, as her name, "the watery," [502] clearly denotes, and in this capacity she is celebrated in a few separate passages. Allusion is made in the hymns, as well as in the Brāhmaṇas (Ṛishayo vai Sarasvatyāṁ satram āsata | ityādi | Ait. Br. ii. 19; Haug, vol. ii. p. 112) to sacrifices being performed on the banks of this river and of the adjoining Dṛishadvatī; [503] and the Sarasvatī in particular seems to have been associated with the reputation for sanctity, which, according to the well-known passage in the Institutes of Manu (ii. 17 f., quoted in the 2nd vol. of this work, p. 416 f.), was ascribed to the whole region, called Brahmāvartta, lying between these two small streams, and situated immediately to the westward of the Jumna. The Sarasvatī thus appears to have been to the early Indians what the Ganges (which is only twice named in the Rig-veda) became to their descendants.[504] Already in R.V. i. 3, 10 (where, however, she is perhaps regarded as the goddess of sacrifice) she is described as "the purifier" (pāvakā naḥ Sārasvatī); and in R.V. x. 17, 10 = Vāj. San. 4, 2; A.V. vi. 51, 2 (after Sarasvatī has been mentioned, verses 7–9), the waters are thus celebrated: Āpo asmān mātaraḥ śundhayantu ghṛitena no ghṛitāpvaḥ punantu | viśvaṁ hi ripram pravahanti devīr ud id ābhyaḥ śuchir ā pūtaḥ emi | "May the Waters, the mothers, cleanse us, may they (the waters) who purify with butter, purify us with butter; for these goddesses bear away defilement; I come up out of them pure and cleansed." When once the river had acquired a divine character, it was quite natural that she should be regarded as the patroness of the ceremonies which were [502] Sarasvatī saraḥ ity udaka-nāma sartes tad-vatī (Nirukta, ix. 26). The Brahmavaivartta-purana, ii. 5, as referred to in Professor Aufrecht's Cat. p. 23, col. 2, has a legend that the Sarasvatī was changed into a river by an imprecation of the Gangā. In the A.V. vi. 100, 1, three Sarasvatīs are spoken of, but no explanation is given of their difference.

[500] Indrāṇī says, in R.V. x. 86, 9: "This mischievous creature lusts after me, as if I had no husband or sons, and yet I am the wife of Indra, and the mother of a hero," etc. (avīrām iva mām ayaṁ śarārur abhi manyate | utāham asmi vīriṇī Indrapatnī). Indrāṇī, as we have seen above, p. 82, is mentioned in the Taitt. Br. ii. 4, 2, 7, from which it appears that different goddesses had been competitors for the hand of Indra, and that Indrāṇī has been chosen because she surpassed them all in voluptuous attractions. In the same work, ii. 8, 8, 4, Vāch is said to be the wife of Indra.

[501] See also Sāyaṇa on R.V. i. 3, 12: Dvividhā hi Sarasvatī vigrahavad-devatā nadī-rūpā cha.

[503] R.V. iii. 23, 4: "I place thee, Agni, on the abode of Iḷā (compare iii. 29, 4), on the most excellent spot of the earth, on the most auspicious of days. Shine, so as to enrich us, in a place of human resort, on the banks of the Dṛishadvatī, the Āpayā, the Sarasvatī" (ni tvā dadhe vare ā pṛithivyāḥ iḷāyās pade sudinatve ahnām | Dṛishadvatyām mānushe Apayāyāṁ Sarasvatyāṁ revaḍ Agne didīhi).

[504] It is clear from the passages quoted in the 2nd vol. of this Work, p. 415 ff. that the Sarasvatī continued in later times also to be regarded as a sacred river, but this character was shared by other Indian streams, if not by them all.

celebrated on the margin of her holy waters, and that her direction and blessing should be invoked as essential to their proper performance and success. The connection into which she was thus brought with sacred rites may have led to the further step of imagining her to have an influence on the composition of the hymns which formed so important a part of the proceedings, and of identifying her with Vāch, the goddess of speech. At least, I have no other explanation to offer of this double character and identification.

Sarasvatī is frequently invited to the sacrifices along with several other goddesses, Iḷā, Bhāratī, Mahī, Hotrā, Varūtrī, Dhishaṇā (i. 13, 9; i. 142, 9; i. 188, 8; iii. 4, 8; v. 5, 8; ix. 5, 8; x. 110, 8), who, however, were never, like her, river nymphs, but personifications of some department of religious worship, or sacred science. She is also frequently invoked along with other deities (ii. 30, 8; iii. 54, 13; v. 42, 12; vii. 35, 11; viii. 38, 10; ix. 81, 4; x. 65, 1, 13; x. 141, 5).

In many of the passages[505] where Sarasvatī is celebrated, her original character is, as I have intimated, distinctly preserved. Thus in two places she is mentioned along with rivers, or fertilizing waters: vi. 52, 6 (Sarasvatī sindhubhiḥ pinvamānā); x. 30, 12 (āpo revatīḥ kshayatha hi vasvaḥ kratuṁ cha bhadram bibhṛithāmṛitaṁ cha | rāyaś cha stha svapatyasya patnīḥ Sarasvatī tad gṛiṇate vayo dhāt | "Ye, opulent waters, command riches; ye possess excellent power and immortality; ye are the mistresses of wealth and progeny; may Sarasvatī bestow this vitality on her worshipper"); and in x. 64, 9; x. 75, 5 f., she is specified along with the other well-known streams which are there named, the Sarayu, the Sindhu, the Gangā, the Yamunā, the Sutudri, etc. In vii. 96, 2, and viii. 21, 18, reference is made to the kings and people living along her banks (Chitraḥ id rāja rājakāḥ id anyake yake

[505] Sāyaṇa understands i. 3, 12 (maho arṇaḥ sarasvatī pra chetayati ketunā | dhiyo viśvāḥ virājati), of the river, and explains it thus: "The Sarasvati, by her act (of flowing), displays a copious flood." Roth, in his Illustrations of the Nirukta (xi. 26), p. 152, translates, "A mighty stream is Sarasvatī; with her light she lightens, illuminates all pious minds." He, however, regards the commencing words as figurative, and not as referring to the river. Benfey renders: "Sarasvatī, by her light, causes the great sea to be known; she shines through all thoughts." He understands the "great sea" as the universe, or as life, which he says is often designated in common Sanskrit also by the word sāgara. The conceptions of Sarasvatī as a river, and as the directress of ceremonies, may be blended in the passage.

Sarasvatīm anu). In vi. 61, 10, and vii. 36, 6, she is spoken of as having seven sisters, as one of seven rivers, and as the mother of streams (saptasvasā | sarasvatī saptathī sindhumātā). In another place she is said to pour on her fertilizing waters, to surpass all other rivers, and to flow pure from the mountains to the sea, vii. 95, 1 (pra kshodasā dhāyasā sasre eshā Sarasvatī dharuṇam āyasī pūḥ | prabābadhānā rathyeva yāti viśvāḥ apo mahinā sindhur anyāḥ | 2. Ekā achetat Sarasvatī nadīnāṁ śuchir yātī giribhyaḥ ā samudrāt | rāyaś chetantī bhuvanasya bhūrer ghṛitam payo duduhe nāhushāya); to be the swiftest of floods (apasām apastamā), vi. 61, 13; and in vi. 61, 2 and 8, to tear away, like a digger of the roots of plants, the bases of the mountains on her banks with her impetuous and resounding current (iyaṁ śushmebhir bisa-khā ivārujat sānu girīṇāṁ tavishebhir ūrmibhiḥ | 8. Yasyāḥ ananto ahrutas tveshaś charishṇur arṇavaḥ | amaś charati roruvat). In ii. 41, 16, she is called the best of mothers, of rivers, and of goddesses (ambitame, nadītame, devītame).

In vii. 96, 4–6, a river god, called Sarasvat, is assigned as a consort to Sarasvatī, who rolls along his fertilizing waters, and is invoked by the worshippers who are seeking for wives and offspring, as well as for plenty and protection (janīyanto nu agravaḥ putrīyantaḥ sudānavaḥ | Sarasvantaṁ havāmahe | 5. Ye te Sarasvaḥ ūrmayaḥ madhumanto ghṛitaśchutaḥ | tebhir no avitā bhava | 6. Pīpivāṁsaṁ Sarasvataḥ stanaṁ yo viśvadarśataḥ | bhakshīmahi prajām isham).

In v. 43, 11, Sarasvatī is called upon to descend from the sky, from the great mountain,[506] to the sacrifice (ā no divo bṛihataḥ parvatād ā sarasvatī yajatā gantu yajnam); and in vi. 49, 7, where she is called the daughter of the lightning (pāvīravī kanyā)[507] and the wife of a hero (vīra-patnī),[508] she is supplicated to combine with the spouses of the gods to afford secure protection to the worshipper (gnābhir achhidraṁ śaraṇam sajoshāḥ durādharshaṁ gṛiṇate śarma yaṁsat). In these two passages the poet may perhaps be considered as assigning a celestial origin to the river as the offspring of thunder and rain.

[506] Sāyaṇa says that Mādhyamikī Vāch, or the goddess Vāch, who resides in the region intermediate between heaven and earth, is here intended.

[507] See Roth, s.v., and compare x. 65, 13. Professor Müller, in Kuhn and Schleicher's Beiträge, etc., iii. 448, assigns to pāvīravī the sense of "thundering."

[508] Sāyaṇa says her husband is Prajāpati. Would it not rather be Sarasvat?

In vi. 61, 11 f., she is said to fill the terrestrial regions and the air (āpaprushī pārthivāni uru rajo antarikṣham), and to occupy three abodes (trisadashthā), and to have seven parts or be sevenfold (sapta-dhātu).

When regarded as a river nymph, Sarasvatī is further described as an iron barrier or fortress, and a support, vii. 95, 1 (quoted above), as bestowing wealth, fatness, and fertility, vii. 95, 2, and is besought to listen to the prayer of her worshippers at their sacrifices, ibid. 4 (uta syā naḥ Sarasvatī jushāṇā upaśravat subhagā yajne asmin), to receive their praises, to shelter and protect them like a tree, ibid. 5 (prati stomaṁ Sarasvati jushasva | tava śarman priyatame dadhānāḥ upa stheyāma śaraṇaṁ na vṛikṣham), and to grant reputation to the unrenowned, ii. 41, 16 (aprāśastāḥ iva smasi praśastim amba nas kṛidhi). In vi. 61, 14, the rishi prays that he may not be removed from her to regions which are strange (mā tvat kshetrāṇi araṇāni ganma).

In vi. 61, 1, she is represented as having given to Vadhryaśva a son, Divodāsa, a canceller of his debts (iyam adadād rabhasam ṛiṇachyutaṁ Divodāsaṁ Vadhryaśvāya dāśushe).

It is difficult to say whether in any of the passages in which Sarasvatī is invoked, even in those where she appears as the patroness of holy rites, her character as a river goddess is entirely left out of sight. In R.V. x. 17, 8, she is described as coming to the place of sacrifice in the same chariot with the oblations and the forefathers (Sarasvati yā sarathaṁ yayātha svadhābhir devi pitṛibhir madantī), and as an object of adoration; but, as in a following verse (the 10th), already quoted, the Waters also are invoked, it would seem that the goddess was there regarded as connected with the river. She is elsewhere represented as unctuous with butter, and as stimulating, directing, and prospering the devotions of the worshippers, i. 3, 10, 11; ii. 3, 8; vi. 61, 4 (chodayantī sūnṛitānām chetantī sumatīnāṁ yajñaṁ dadhe Sarasvatī | Sarasvatī sādhayantī dhiyaṁ naḥ | pra no devī Sarasvatī . . . . . dhīnām avitrī avatu). She affords secure protection, conquers enemies (ii. 30, 8; vi. 49, 7), and destroys the revilers of the gods (vi. 61, 3). She is dreadful, moves along a golden path,[509] and is a destroyer of Vṛitra,

[509] Hiraṇyavarttini. Sāyaṇa explains varttini as chariot, and the compound as meaning "having a golden chariot." The same word occurs again, applied to a river, in viii. 26, 18, where Sāyaṇa makes it mean "having a golden path," i.e. golden banks. The words rudra-varttani, "whose path is dreadful," and ghṛita-

vi. 61, 7 (ghorā hiraṇyavartaniḥ | vṛitraghnī). The worshipper seeks to suck prosperity and riches of all description from her prolific breasts,[510] i. 89, 3; i. 164, 49 (yas te stanaḥ śaśayo yo mayobhūr yena viśvā pushyasi vāryāṇi | yo ratnadhāḥ vasuvid yaḥ sudatraḥ Sarasvati tam iha dhātave kaḥ); viii. 21, 17; x. 17, 8, 9; ix. 67, 32; she is the receptacle of all the powers of life, and bestows offspring, ii. 41, 17 (tve viśvā Sarasvati śritā āyūṁshi devyām | . . . . prajāṁ devi didiḍḍhi naḥ). In x. 184, 2, she is associated with the deities who assist procreation (garbhaṁ dhehi Sarasvati). In ii. 1, 11, Agni is identified with her, and several other goddesses.

In R.V. x. 131, 5 (=Vāj. S. x. 34) where the Aśvins are said to have defended Indra, Sarasvatī also is declared to have waited upon him. And in Vāj. S. xix. 12, it is said, "The gods celebrated a healing sacrifice; the Aśvins physicians, and Sarasvatī too a physician, through speech, communicated vigour to Indra" (see above, p. 94, note). The Aśvins and Sarasvatī are also connected with each other in Vāj. S. xix. 12, 15, 18, 34, 80–83, 88–90, 93–95; xx. 56–69, 73–76, 90. In xix. 94, it is said that "Sarasvatī, wife of the Aśvins, holds a well-formed embryo in her womb. Varuṇa, king in the waters, produced Indra for glory, by the aqueous fluid, as if by a sāma verse," xix. 94 (Sarasvatī yonyāṁ garbham antar Aśvibhyām patnī sukṛitam bibharti | apāṁ rasena Varuṇo na sāmnā Indraṁ śriyai janayann apsu rājā).

It does not appear that in the R.V. Sarasvatī is identified with Vāch. For some passages of that collection, in which the latter goddess is celebrated, I refer to the 3rd vol. of this Work, pp. 253 ff., and to a later section of this volume.

In the later mythology, as is well known, Sarasvatī was identified with Vāch, and became under different names the spouse of Brahmā, and the goddess of wisdom and eloquence, and is invoked as a Muse. In the Mahābhārata she is called the mother of the Vedas (Śāntiparva, verse 12920), and the same is said of Vāch in the Taitt. Br. ii. 8, varttani, "whose path is unctuous," are also applied to different deities in the Rig-veda. Kṛishṇa-varttani, "he whose path is marked by blackness," is an epithet of Agni, in viii. 23, 19, and the sense of that term is fixed by the use of the synonym kṛishṇādhvan. The substantive varttani occurs in vii. 18, 16; vṛijina-varttani, i. 31, 6.

[510] Compare Ait. Br. iv. 1, at the end, where her two breasts are said to be truth and falsehood.

8, 5,[511] where (and in the preceding par. 4,) she is also said to be the wife of Indra, to contain within herself all worlds, and to have been sought after by the rishis who composed the Vedic hymns (ṛishayo mantra-kṛitaḥ), as well as by the gods, through austerity.

In the S'āntiparva, verse 6811, it is related that when the Brahmarshis were performing austerities, prior to the creation of the universe, "a voice derived from Brahmā entered into the ears of them all; the celestial Sarasvatī was then produced from the heavens."[512]

(2) Āpas, the Waters, and the Rivers.

A verse (x. 17, 10) has been already cited, in p. 338, in which the purifying virtue of the Waters is extolled; and there is another passage, i. 23, 22 (= x. 9, 8), in which the power of cleansing the worshipper from the sins of violence, cursing, and falsehood is ascribed to them (idam āpaḥ pra vahata yat kincha duritam mayi | yad vā aham abhidudroha yad vā śepe utānṛitam). They are said, in two passages, already cited in p. 205, to have given birth to Agni; a few separate hymns, vii. 47; vii. 49; x. 9, are devoted to their honour; and in numerous detached verses they are invoked along with other deities. I cite a hymn in which the Sindhu (Indus) and other rivers are celebrated:—

R.V. x. 75, 1: Pra su vaḥ āpo mahimānam uttamaṁ kārur vochāti sadane vivasvataḥ | pra sapta sapta tredhā hi chakramuḥ pra sṛitvarīṇām ati Sindhur ojasā | 2. Pra te 'radad Varuṇo yātave pathaḥ Sindho yad vājān abhi adravas tvam | bhumyāḥ adhi pravatā yāti sānunā yad eshām agraṁ jagatām irajyasi | 3. Divi svano yatate bhūmyā upari anantaṁ śushmam ud iyarti bhānunā | abhrād iva prastanayanti vṛishṭayaḥ Sindhur yad eti vṛishabho na roruvat | 4. Abhi tvā Sindho śiśum in na

[511] In the S'atap. Br. vii. 5, 2, 52, it is said, "Mind is the ocean. From mind, the ocean, the gods, with Vāch for a shovel, dug out the triple science (i.e. the three Vedas). Wherefore this verse (śloka) has been uttered" (see the 3rd vol. of this Work, p. 9, etc. In the Bhīshma-p. of the M. Bh. verse 3019, Achyuta (Krishna) is said to have created Sarasvatī and the Vedas from his mind. In the Vana-p. verse 13432, the Gāyatrī is called the mother of the Vedas.

[512] Compare the verse quoted by S'ankara on the Brahma sūtras (see the 3rd vol. of this Work, pp. 16 and 104), from a Smṛiti: "In the beginning a celestial voice, formed of the Vedas, eternal, without beginning or end, was uttered by Svayambhū, from which all activities have proceeded."

mātaraḥ vāśrāḥ arshanti payaseva dhenavaḥ | rājeva yudhvā nayasi tvam it sichau yad āsām agram pravatām inakshasi | 5 (=Nir. ix. 26). Imam me Gange Yamune Sarasvati S'utudri stomaṁ sachata Parushṇi ā | Asiknyā Marudvṛidhe Vitastayā Ārjīkīye śṛiṇuhi ā Sushomayā | 6. Tṛishṭāmayā prathamaṁ yātave sajūḥ Susartvā Rasayā S'vetyā tyā | tvaṁ Sindho Kubhayā Gomatīm Krumum Mehatnvā sarathaṁ yābhir īyase | 7. Ṛijītī enī ruśatī mahitvā pari jraṇāṁsi bharate rajāṁsi | adabdhā Sindhur apasām apastamā aśvā na chitrā vapushī iva darśatā | 8. Svaśvā Sindhuḥ surathā suvāsāḥ hiraṇyayī sukṛitā vājinīvatī | ūrṇāvatī yuvatiḥ śīlamāvatī utādhi vaste subhagā madhuvṛidham | 9 (=Nir. vii. 7). S'ukhaṁ rathaṁ yuyuje Sindhur aśvinam tena vājaṁ sanishad asminn ājau | mahān hi asya mahimā panasyate adabdhasya svayaśaso virapśinaḥ |

"1. Waters, let the poet declare your transcendant greatness in the abode of the worshipper. Each set of seven [streams] has followed a threefold course. The Sindhu surpasses the other rivers in impetuosity. 2. Varuṇa hollowed out the channels of thy course, o Sindhu, when thou didst rush to thy contests. Thou flowest from [the heights of] the earth over a downward slope, when thou leadest the van of these streams. 3. A sound struggles onward in the sky above the earth. [The current] exerts an infinite force with a flash. Showers thunder as if [falling] from a cloud; when the Sindhu rolls on, it roars like a bull. 4. To thee, o Sindhu, the [other streams] rush, as lowing mother-cows with their milk to their calves. Like a warrior king [in the centre of his army] thou leadest the two wings of thy host when thou strugglest forward to the van of these torrents. 5. Receive favourably this my hymn, o Gangā, Yamunā, Sarasvatī, S'utudri, Parushṇi; hear, o Marudvṛidhā, with the Asiknī, and Vitastā, and thou, Arjīkīyā with the Sushomā. 6. Unite first in thy course with the Tṛishṭāmā, the Sasartū, the Rasā, and the S'vetī; thou [meetest] the Gomatī, and the Krumu with the Kubhā, and the Mehatnū, and with them are borne onward as on the same car. 7. Flashing, sparkling, gleaming, in her majesty, the unconquerable, the most abundant of streams, beautiful as a handsome spotted mare, the Sindhu rolls her waters over the levels. 8. Mistress of a chariot, with noble horses, richly dressed, golden, adorned, yielding nutriment, abounding in wool, youthful, rich in plants,[513] gracious, she traverses [a land]

[513] On the word śīlamāvatī and the following words of the line in which it occurs, yielding sweetness [?]. 9. The Sindhu has yoked her pleasant chariot drawn by horses. By it may she grant us vigour in this struggle: for greatly celebrated is the glory of that unconquered, illustrious, and much-lauded [chariot].

In one place, vi. 50, 7, the Waters are said to be remedial and the mothers of all things fixed and moving (yūyaṁ hi stha bhishajo mātṛitamāḥ viśvasya sthātur jayato janitrīḥ).

(3) The Apsarases.

These goddesses have been already mentioned in the section on Yama, p. 309, and will be further adverted to below.

In the passage of the R.V. vii. 33, 10 ff., quoted in the 1st vol. of this work, p. 320, the Rishi Vasishṭha is said to have sprung from an Apsaras, Urvaśī. In the dictionary of Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth the Apsarases are described as female beings of a ghost-like description, whose abode is in the atmosphere. They are the wives of the Gandharvas, have the power of changing their forms, love playing at dice, and impart good luck. According to the A.V. the Apsarases are feared like other ghostly beings, and enchantments are employed against them; especially because they cause madness.

Professor Goldstücker, s.v. says: "Originally these divinities seem to have been personifications of the vapours which are attracted by the sun, and form into mist or clouds." (See full details in his article.)

(4) Agnāyī, Varuṇānī, etc.

Excepting Pṛithivī, Aditi, and Ushas, most of the other goddesses mentioned in the Rig-veda are, as I have already intimated, p. 337, of very little importance. Agnāyī, Varuṇānī, Aśvinī, and Rodasī,[514] the wives of Agni, Varuṇa, the Aśvins, and Rudra respectively (Nirukta, ix. 33 f.; xi. 50; xii. 46), are only alluded to in a few passages, R.V. i. 22, 12; ii. 32, 8; v. 46, 8; vi. 50, 5; vi. 66, 6; vii. 34, 22. No distinct functions are assigned to them, and they do not occupy positions at all corresponding to the rank of their husbands, with whom in fact they are never associated. The insignificance of these goddesses forms a striking contrast to the prominent place assumed by the spouses of Śiva and Vishṇu, especially the former, in the later mythology. Nirṛiti is the goddess of destruction.

I subjoin Sāyaṇa's note, for a copy of which I am indebted to Professor Max Müller: x. 75, 8: śīlamāvatī sirāṇi yayoshadhyā rajjubhūtayā bhadhyante (badhyante ?) sā śīlameti nigadyate kṛishīvalaiḥ | tādṛigoshadhyupetā utāpi cha subhagā sindhur madhuvṛidham madhuvardhakam nirguṇḍyādi adhivaste āchhādayati tasyās tīre nirguṇḍyādīni bahūni santi.

[514] According to Sāyana (on i. 167, 5) Rodasī is marut-patnī vidyud vā, "The wife of the Maruts, or Lightning."

(5) Araṇyānī.

Araṇyānī (Nir. ix. 29, 30) is the goddess of forest solitude. She is celebrated in R.V. x. 146, which I shall translate in a succeeding section.

(6) Rākā, Sinīvālī, and Gungū.

Rākā, Sinīvālī, and Gungū (whom Sāyaṇa, on ii. 32, 8, identifies with Kuhū), are three other goddesses mentioned in the R.V. (the first in ii. 32, 4, 5, 8; v. 42, 12; the second in ii. 32, 6 ff.; x. 184, 2; and the third in ii. 32, 8). Sāyaṇa (on ii. 32, 4) says that Rākā is the full moon.[515] She is, however, closely connected with parturition, as she is asked to "sew the work" (apparently the formation of the embryo) "with an unfailing needle, and to bestow a son with abundant wealth," ii. 32, 4 (sīvyatv apaḥ sūchyā achhidyamānayā dadātu vīraṁ śatadāyam ukthyam). Sinīvālī and Kuhū are (as we are told by Yāska, Nir. xi. 31) wives of the gods according to the mythologists (nairuktāḥ), and the two nights of the new moon (amāvāsye) according to the ritualists (yājnikāḥ), Sinīvālī being the earlier, and Kuhū the later. Sinīvālī is, however, also connected with parturition, being called pṛithushṭhukā, "the broad-loined (or "bushy-haired"), bahusūvarī, "the prolific;" subāhu, "the handsome-armed;" svanguri, "the handsome-fingered, being supplicated for progeny, ii. 32, 6, 7 (prajāṁ devi dididḍhi naḥ), and asked to bestow pregnancy, x. 184, 2 (garbhaṁ dhehi Sinīvāli); A.V. v. 25, 3; vi. 11, 3. Yāska quotes from the Taitt. Br. iii. 3, 11, a verse regarding Kuhū, whose name does not occur in the Rig-veda. See also the account of Anumati in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v.

(7) S'raddhā.

Personifications of abstract ideas are not uncommon in the Rig-veda, one hymn of which (x. 151) is addressed to Śraddhā, or religious faith. By her, it is said, verse 1 (=Nir. ix. 31), "the (sacrificial) fire is [515] On these goddesses see Weber's Ind. Stud. v. 228 ff. and 237.

kindled, and by her the oblation is offered up" (śraddhayā 'gniḥ samidhyate śraddhayā hūyate haviḥ). She is asked to prosper the liberal worshippers of the gods (verses 2, 3), and to impart faith; and is said to be an object of adoration in the morning, at noon, and at sunset (verse 5). In the Vāj. Sanhitā, xix. 30, it is said that faith (śraddhā) is obtained by gifts, and truth by faith (dakshiṇā śraddhām āpnoti śraddhayā satyam āpyate). In xix. 77 of the same work it is declared that "Prajāpati, beholding, made a distinction between the forms of truth and falsehood, connecting disbelief with the latter, and faith or belief with the former" (dṛishṭvā rūpe vyākarot satyānṛite Prajāpatiḥ | aśraddhām anṛite 'dadhāt śraddhām satye Prajāpatiḥ). This declaration, that truth is the only proper object of faith, has a far deeper signification than this ancient writer could possibly have assigned to it, viz., that it is the ultimate truth, and not the so-called orthodoxy of any proposition, which can alone entitle it to reception.

S'raddhā is also celebrated in the Taitt. Br., ii. 8, 8, 6 f., where the above hymn of the Rig-veda is repeated; and she is there further said to dwell among the gods, to be the universe (śraddhā devān adhivaste śraddhā viśvam idaṁ jagat), and the mother of Kāma. (See the next Section). In the same Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 3, 1, we are told that through S'raddhā a god obtains his divine character, that the divine S'raddhā is the support of the world, that she has Kāma (or the fulfilment of desire) for her calf, and yields immortality as her milk; that she is the firstborn of the religious ceremonial, and the sustainer of the whole world; and she, who is the supreme mistress of the world, is besought to bestow immortality on her worshippers (śraddhayā devo devatvaṁ aśnute | S'raddhā pratishṭhā lokasya devī | . . . . Kāmavatsā amṛitaṁ duhānā | S'raddhā devī prathamajā ṛitasya | viśvasya bhartrī jagataḥ pratishṭhā | tāṁ S'raddhāṁ havishā yajāmahe | sā no lokam amṛitaṁ dadhātu īśānā devī bhuvanasyādhipatnī). In the Śatap. Br., xii. 7, 3, 11, she is called the daughter of Sūrya;[516] an appellation which is repeated in the M. Bh. Śāntiparva, verse 9449,[517] where she [516] See what is said of the daughter of Sūrya above, in connection with the Aśvins.

[517] In this passage a great deal is said in praise of S'raddhā. The gods, it appears, had decided that the offerings of a niggardly student of the Veda and a liberal usurer were of equal value. But Prajāpati determined that they were wrong (see the same sentiment, in nearly the same words, in Manu, iv. 224 ff.), and that the liberal man's oblation, being purified by his faith, was to be accepted, whilst the other man's, being is styled the daughter of Vivasvat (S'raddhā Vaivasvatī), as well as of Sūrya and Savitṛi (Sūryasya duhitā and Sāvitrī). (See above, p. 264 f., the story of Soma loving S'raddhā. See also the definition given of Aramati in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v.)

(8) Lakshmī and S'rī.

Lakshmī is not found in the Rig-veda, in the sense which the word bears in the later mythology, of a goddess personifying good fortune, though the word itself occurs in x. 71, 2,[518] in a kindred signification. In the A.V., however, we have the following hymn, which speaks of a plurality of Lakshmīs, some good and some bad: vii. 115, 1: Pra patetaḥ pāpi Lakshmi naśyetaḥ prāmutaḥ pata | ayasmayena ankena dvishate tvā sajāmasi | 2. Yā mā Lakshmīḥ patayālūr ajushṭā abhichaskanda vandaneva vṛishsham | anyatrāsmat Savitas tām ito dhāḥ hiraṇyahasto vasu no rarāṇaḥ | 3. Ekaśataṁ Lakshmyo martyasya sākaṁ tanvā janusho 'dhi jātāḥ | tāsām pāpishṭhāḥ nir itaḥ pra hiṇmaḥ śivāḥ asmabhyaṁ jātavedo ni yachha | 4. Etāḥ evā vyākaraṁ khile gāḥ nishṭhitāḥ iva | ramantām puṇyāḥ Lakshmīr yāḥ pāpīs tāḥ anīnaśam | "Fly away hence, o unlucky (or miserable) Lakshmī, perish hence, fly away from thence: with an iron hook we fasten thee to our enemy. 2. Savitṛi, do thou who art golden-handed, bestowing on us wealth, send away from us to some other quarter the flying and hateful Lakshmī, who mounts upon me as a creeper[519] upon a tree. 3. A hundred Lakshmīs are born together with the body of a mortal at his birth. Of these we vitiated by his unbelief, was to be rejected. Unbelief, it is added, is the greatest of sins, but faith takes away sin (devāḥ vittam amanyanta sadṛiśaṁ yūjna-karmaṇi | śrotriyasya kaḍaryasya cadānyasya cha vārdhusheḥ | mīmāṁsitvobhaẏaṁ devāḥ samam annam akalpayan | Prajāpatis tān uvācha "vishamaṁ kritam" ity uta | śraddhā-pūtaṁ vadānyasya hatam aśraddhayetarat | . . . . aśraddhā paramam pāpaṁ śraddhā papapramochanī). A similar sentiment is expressed in the Vana-parva, 13461 ff.: "The doubter enjoys neither this world nor the next, nor any gratification. Those ancient sages who possess true knowledge have said that faith is a sign of final liberation. . . . . Abandoning fruitless (lit. dry) argumentations adhere to the s'ruti and the smṛiti" (nāyaṁ loko 'sti na paro na sukhaṁ saṁśaẏātmanaḥ | ūchur jñānavido vṛiddhāḥ pratyayo mokshạ-lakshaṇam | śushka-tarkam parityajya āśrayasva śrutiṁ smṛitim).

[518] In the words bhadrā eshām lakshmī nihitā adhi vāchi, "an auspicious fortune is attached to their words."

[519] Vandanā. This word does not occur in Wilson's Dictionary, but I find there vandā in the sense of a creeping plant.

chase away hence the most unlucky. Do thou, Jātavedas, retain for us those which are fortunate. 4. Thus I divide them like cows standing upon barren ground. May those Lakshmīs which are auspicious rest here. Those which are unlucky I destroy." (The expression puṇyā Lakshmī occurs also in A.V. xii. 5, 6.)

In the Vāj. S. xxxi. 22 (S'rīś cha te Lakshmīś cha patnyau), S'rī and Lakshmī are said to be the two wives of Āditya, according to the commentator's explanation. In the Śatap. Br. xi. 4, 3, 1, S'rī is described as issuing forth from Prajāpati when he was performing intense austerity, with a view to the creation of living beings. Beholding her then standing resplendent and trembling,[520] the gods were covetous of her, and proposed to Prajāpati that they should be allowed to kill her, and appropriate her gifts. He replied that she was a female, and that males did not generally kill females. They should therefore take from her her gifts without depriving her of life. In consequence, Agni took from her food; Soma, kingly authority; Varuṇa, imperial authority; Mitra, martial energy; Indra, force; Brihaspati, priestly glory; Savitṛi, dominion; Pūshan, splendour; Sarasvatī, nourishment; and Tvashṭṛi, forms. S'rī then complained to Prajāpati that they had taken all these things from her. He told her to demand them back from them by sacrifice (Prajāpatir vai prajāḥ sṛijamāno 'tapyata | tāsmāt śrāntāt tepānāt S'rīr udakrāmat | sā dīpyamānā bhrājamānā lelāyantī atishṭhat | tāṁ dīpyamānām bhrājamānāṁ lelāyantīm devāḥ abhyadhyāyan | 2. Te Prajāpatim abruvan "hanāma imām ā idam asyāḥ dadāmahai" iti | sa ha uvācha "strī vai eshā yat S'rīḥ | na vai strīyaṁ ghnanti uta tvā asyāḥ jīvantyāḥ eva ādadata" iti | 3. Tasyāḥ Agnir annādyam ādatta Somo rājyaṁ Varuṇaḥ sāmrājyam Mitraḥ kshatram Indro balam Bṛihaspatir brahmavarchasam Savitā rāshṭram Pūshā bhagaṁ Sarasvatī pushṭiṁ Tvashṭā rūpāṇi | 4. Sā Prajāpatim abravīt "ā vai me idam adishata" iti | sa ha uvācha "yajñena enān punar yāchasva" iti).

[520] Lelāyantī. As fixing the sense of this word Professor Aufrecht refers me to S'atap. Br. p. 136; Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Up. p. 737; Muṇḍaka Up. pp. 274, 276; and S'vetās'vatara Up. p. 332.

SECTION XXI.

PROGRESS OF THE VEDIC RELIGION TOWARDS ABSTRACT CONCEPTIONS OF THE DEITY.[521]

In a passage which I have already quoted above (p. 8), Yāska, the author of the Nirukta, informs us (vii. 5) that previous writers of the school to which he himself belonged (the Nairuktas) reduced the deities mentioned in the Vedas to three, viz., "Agni, whose place is on the earth; Vāyu or Indra, whose place in the air; and Sūrya, whose place is in the sky;" and asserted that "these deities severally receive many appellations in consequence of their greatness, or of the diversity of their functions, as the names of hotṛi, adhvaryu, brahman, and udgātṛi, are applied to one and the same person [according to the particular sacrificial office which he happens to be fulfilling]." In the preceding section (vii. 4) Yāska had, however, declared that, in reality, "owing to the greatness of the deity, the one Soul is celebrated as if it were many. The different gods are separate members of the one Soul. And some say that the rishis address their praises according to the multiplicity of natures in the [celestial] existences. And from the universality of their nature the gods are mutually produced from each other, and possess the natures of one another (see R.V. x. 7, 4 f. above, p. 48, and Nir. xi. 23, quoted in the 4th vol. of this Work, p. 11); they are produced from works; they are produced from soul. It is soul that is their chariot, soul their horses, soul their weapon, soul their arrows; soul is a god's all"[522] (māhātmyād devatāyāḥ ekaḥ ātmā bahudhā stūyate | ekasya ātmano 'nye devāḥ pratyangāni bhavanti | api cha sattvānām prakṛiti-bhūmabhir ṛishayaḥ stuvanti ity āhuḥ | prakṛiti-sārvanāmnyāch cha itaretara-janmāno bhavanti itaretara-prakṛitayaḥ

[521] In various parts of the translations occurring in this section I received valuable assistance from Professor Aufrecht.

[522] This passage is quoted at length in the 4th vol. of this Work, pp. 131–136.

karmajanmānaḥ ātmajanmānaḥ | ātmā eva eshāṁ ratho bhavaty ātmā aśvāḥ ātmā āyudham ātmā ishavaḥ ātmā sarvaṁ devasya). These, however, are the views of men who lived after the compilation of the Brāhmaṇas, at a period when reflection had long been exercised upon the contents of the hymns, and when speculation had already made considerable advances. In the oldest portions of the hymns themselves we discover few traces of any such abstract conceptions of the Deity. They disclose a much more primitive stage of religious belief. They are, as I have already remarked, the productions of simple men who, under the influence of the most impressive phenomena of nature, saw everywhere the presence and agency of divine powers, who imagined that each of the great provinces of the universe was directed and animated by its own separate deity, and who had not yet risen to a clear idea of one supreme creator and governor of all things (pp. 5 f.). This is shown, not only by the special functions assigned to particular gods, but in many cases by the very names which they bear, corresponding to those of some of the elements or of the celestial luminaries. Thus, according to the belief of the ancient rishis, Agni was the divine being who resides and operates in fire, Sūrya the god who dwells and shines in the sun, and Indra the regent of the atmosphere, who cleaves the clouds with his thunderbolts and dispenses rain. While, however, in most parts of the Rig-veda, we not only find that such gods as Agni, Indra, and Sūrya are considered as distinct from one another, but that various other divinities, more or less akin to these, but thought of as fulfilling functions in some respects distinguishable from theirs (such as Parjanya, Vishṇu, Savitṛi, Pūshan, etc.) are represented as existing along side of them, there are other hymns in which a tendency to identification is perceptible, and traces are found of one uniform power being conceived to underlie the various manifestations of divine energy. Thus in the texts quoted in a former section (pp. 206 ff.), Agni is represented as having a threefold existence, by which may be intended, first, in his familiar form on earth; secondly, as lightning in the atmosphere; and thirdly, as the sun in the heavens. In other passages, where the same god is identified with Vishṇu, Varuṇa, Mitra, etc. (see p. 219), it is not clear whether this identification may not arise from a desire to magnify Agni rather than from any idea of his essential oneness with other deities with whom he is connected (see also R.V. i. 141, 9; v. 3, 1 f.; v. 13, 6). In another hymn, iv. 42, 3, too, where Indra appears to be represented as the same with Varuṇa (aham Indro Varuṇaḥ, etc.; compare the context), the design of the writer may have been to place the former god on a footing of equality with the latter. There are, however, other passages in the earlier books of the Rig-veda which suffice to show that the writers had begun to regard the principal divinities as something more than mere representatives or regents of the different provinces of nature. As I have already shown (pp. 61 ff., 98 ff., 158, 163 f., 214 f.), Varuṇa, Indra, Sūrya, Savitṛi, and Agni are severally described (in strains more suitable to the supreme deity than to subaltern divinities exercising a limited dominion) as having formed and as sustaining heaven and earth, and as the rulers of the universe;[523] and Varuṇa, in particular, according to the striking representation of the hymn preserved in the A.V. (iv. 16) (though this composition may be of a somewhat later date), is invested with the divine prerogatives of omnipresence and omniscience. Although the recognized co-existence of all these deities is inconsistent with the supposition that their worshippers had attained to any clear comprehension of the unity of the godhead, and although the epithets denoting universal dominion, which are lavished upon them all in turn, may be sometimes hyperbolical or complimentary—the expressions of momentary fervour, or designed to magnify a particular deity at the expense of all other rival objects of adoration,—yet these descriptions no doubt indicate enlarged and sublime conceptions of divine power, and an advance towards the idea of one sovereign deity. When once the notion of particular gods had become expanded in the manner just specified, and had risen to an ascription of all divine attributes to the particular object of worship who was present for the time to the mind of the poet, the further step would speedily be taken of speaking of the deity under such new names as Viśvakarman and Prajāpati, appellations which do not designate any limited function connected with any single department of nature, but the more general and abstract notion of divine power operating in the production and government of the universe.

It is, perhaps, in names such as these that we may discover the point [523] The same functions are ascribed to Vishṇu and to Rudra. See the 4th vol. of this Work, pp. 84 and 338.

of transition from polytheistic to monotheistic ideas. Both these two terms, which ultimately came to designate the deity regarded as the creator, had been originally used as epithets of Indra and Savitṛi, in the following passages:—R.V. iv. 53, 2, "Savitṛi, the supporter of the sky and the lord of creatures" (divo dharttā bhuvanasya prajāpatiḥ).[524] viii. 87, 2, "Thou, Indra, art most powerful; thou hast caused the sun to shine; thou art great, the universal architect, and possessest all godlike attributes" (tvam Indra abhibhūr asi tvaṁ sūryam arochayaḥ | viśvakarmā viśvadevo mahān asi).[525]

(1) Texts of a more decidedly monotheistic or pantheistic character.

I shall now adduce those passages of the Rig-veda in which a monotheistic or a pantheistic tendency is most clearly manifested. Of some of these texts I shall only state the substance, as I have formerly treated of them in detail elsewhere.

The following verse from a long hymn of an abstruse and mystical character (i. 164, 46, as already quoted in p. 219, note), though considered by Yāska (Nir. vii. 18) to have reference to Agni, and by Kātyāyana and Sāyaṇa (who, however, also quotes Yaska's opinion) to have Sūrya in view, may nevertheless be held to convey the more general idea that all the gods, though differently named and represented, are in reality one—πολλῶν ὀνομάτων μορφὴ μία: "They call him Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, Agni; and (he is) the celestial, well-winged Garutmat. Sages name variously that which is but one: they call it Agni, Yama, Mātariśvan."[526] (See Colebrooke's Essay, i. 26 f.; Weber's Ind. Stud. v. p. iv.)

[524] So, too, Soma is called prajāpati, "lord of creatures" (R.V. ix. 5, 9).

[525] So, too, in R.V. x. 170, 4, Sūrya is called viśvakarman and viśvadevyavat, and Savitṛi is styled viśvadeva in v. 82, 7, see above, p. 164. Svayambhū, "the self-existent," occcurs as an epithet of Manyu (personified Wrath) in R.V. x. 83, 4. See below the sub-section on Kāla, Time.

[526] To the same effect is another text, R.V. x. 114, 5: Suparṇam viprāḥ kavayo vachobhir ekam santam bahudhā kalpayanti | "The wise in their hymns represent under many forms the well-winged (deity), who is but one." Somewhat in the same way it is said, A.V. xiii. 3, 13 (already quoted in p. 219, note): "Agni becomes in the evening Varuṇa (the god of night), and Mitra, when rising in the morning. Becoming Savitṛi, he moves through the atmosphere, and becoming Indra, he burns along the middle of the sky." In xiii. 4, 1 ff., Savitṛi is identified with a great many other deities. The words asya devasya . . . . vayāḥ Vishṇoḥ, in

R.V. i. 89, 10 (quoted above in pp. 43 f.), suggests, on the other hand, a pantheistic sense, as it asserts all things to be the manifestations of one all-pervading principle: "Aditi is the sky, Aditi is the air, Aditi is the mother and father and son. Aditi is all the gods and the five classes of men. Aditi is whatever has been born. Aditi is whatever shall be born."[527] Reference will be again made further on to the hymn in which Aditi is described as one of the great powers to which the creation is due.

In some of the representations of the character and functions of Tvashṭṛi, the divine artizan, who shaped the heaven and earth, we have an approach to the idea of a supreme creator of the universe (see above p. 225).

There is considerable variety in the methods by which the later poets of the R.V. attempt to conceive and express the character of the Supreme Being and his relations to the universe, as will be seen from the following details:—

(2) Viśvakarman.

The 81st and 82nd hymns of the tenth book of the Rig-veda are devoted to the celebration of Viśvakarman, the great architect of the universe (see above, p. 32, and the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 4 ff.); so that the word which, as we have seen, had formerly been used as an epithet of Indra, had now become the name of a deity, if not of the Deity. In these hymns Viśvakarman is represented as the one all-seeing god, who has on every side eyes, faces, arms, and feet, who, when producing heaven and earth, blows[528] them forth with his arms

R.V. vii. 40, 5, are interpreted by Sāyaṇa to mean "[The other gods] are branches of this . . . . god Vishṇu;" but the words between brackets are not in the original. In R.V. ii. 35, 8, all other beings are said to be branches of Apāmnapāt (vayāḥ id anyā bhuvanāni asya). I observe that in his lectures on the "Science of Language," 2nd series, p. 508, Professor Müller understands the words with which all the verses of R.V. iii. 55, conclude (mahad devānām asuratvam ekam) to signify, "The great divinity of the gods is one," which might be understood as if they asserted all the gods to be manifestations of one supreme deity. The clause, however, need not mean anything more than that the divine power of the gods is unique.

[527] Compare Æschylus, fragment 443, translated by Professor Müller, "Science of Language," ii. 441: Ζεύς ἐστιν ἀιθὴρ, Ζεὺς δὲ γῆ, Ζεὺς δ' οὐρανός· Ζεύς τοι τὰ πάντα χὤτι τ ὦνδ' ὑπέρτερον. The Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 3, 1, says that the self-existent Brahma is "son, father, and mother."

[528] This image is repeated in R.V. x. 72, and may have been borrowed from R.V. iv. 2, 17.

and wings,—as the father, generator, disposer, who knows all worlds, gives the gods their names, and is beyond the comprehension of mortals. In one of the verses (the 4th) of the first of these hymns, the poet asks: "What was the forest, what was the tree, out of which they fashioned heaven and earth? Inquire with your minds, ye sages, what was that on which he took his stand when supporting the world?" This verse is repeated in the Taitt. Br. ii. 8, 9, 6 (and comes in immediately after the end of R.V. x. 129, which is quoted in the same place). The compiler of the Brāhmaṇa replies to the question which the original poet had left unanswered, by saying: "Brahma was the forest, Brahma was that tree, out of which they fashioned heaven and earth. Sages, with my mind I declare to you, he took his stand upon Brahma when upholding the world" (see above, p. 32, note 57).

(3) Hiraṇyagarbha.

Another name under which the Deity is celebrated in the Rig-veda, with all the attributes of supremacy, is Hiraṇyagarbha. In the 121st hymn of the tenth book this god is said to have arisen (samavarttata) in the beginning, the one lord of all beings, who upholds heaven and earth, who gives life and breath, whose command even the gods obey, who is the god over all gods, and the one animating principle (asu) of their being. (See the 4th vol. of this Work, pp. 13 ff.)

(4) Brahmaṇaspati, Daksha, and Aditi.

In another hymn (R.V. x. 72; already quoted in pp. 48 f.), the creation of the gods is ascribed to Brahmaṇaspati (see also p. 280, above), who blew them forth like a blacksmith;[529] while the earth is said to have sprung from a being called Uttānapad; and Daksha and Aditi were produced from one another by mutual generation. The gods, though formed by Brahmaṇaspati, did not, it is said, come into existence till after Aditi, but appear to have had some share in the formation or development of the world.

The hymn is almost entirely of a mythological character, the only attempt at speculation it contains being the declaration that entity sprang from nonentity. The manner in which the author endeavours, [529] See pp. 32 and 354.

by the introduction of different names, and the ascription to them of various agencies, to explain the process of creation, forms a striking contrast to the sublime vagueness and sense of mystery which characterize the following composition (R.V. x. 129).[530]

(5) Nonentity, Entity, and the One, R.V. X. 129.

1. Na asad āsīd no sad āsīt tadānīṁ nāsīd rajo no vyoma paro yat | kim āvarīvaḥ kuha kasya śarmann ambhaḥ kim āsīd gahanaṁ gabhīram | 2. Na mṛityur asīd amṛitaṁ na tarhi na rātryāḥ ahnaḥ āsīt praketaḥ | ānīd avātaṁ svadhayā tad ekaṁ tasmād ha anyad na paraḥ kinchanāsa | 3. Tamaḥ āsīt tamasā gūḷham agre apraketaṁ salilaṁ sarvam ā idam | tuchhyena ābhu apihitaṁ yad āsīt tapasas tad mahinā 'jāyataikam | 4. Kāmas tad agre samavarttatādhi manaso retaḥ prathamaṁ yad āsīt | sato bandhum asati niravindan hṛidi pratīshya kavayo manīshā | 5 (=Vāj. Sanh. xxxiii. 74). Tiraśchīno vitato raśmir eshām adhaḥ svid āsīd upari svid āsīt | retodhāḥ āsan mahimānaḥ āsan svadhā avastāt prayatiḥ parastāt | 6. Ko addha veda kaḥ iha pra vochat kutaḥ ājātā kutaḥ iyaṁ visṛishṭiḥ | arvāg devāḥ asya visarjanena atha ko veda yataḥ ābabhūva | 7. Iyaṁ visṛishṭir yataḥ ābabhūva yadi vā dadhe yadi vā na | yo asyādhyakshaḥ parame vyoman so anga veda yadi vā na veda |

"1. There was then neither nonentity nor entity: there was no

[530] This hymn has been already translated by Mr. Colebrooke and Professor Müller, as well as in the 4th vol. of this Work, p. 4. I have now endeavoured to improve my own version, and otherwise to illustrate the sense of the hymn. The following is a metrical rendering of its contents:—

"Then there was neither Aught nor Nought, no air nor sky beyond.
What covered all? Where rested all? In watery gulf profound?
Nor death was then, nor deathlessness, nor change of night and day.
That One breathed calmly, self-sustained; nought else beyond It lay.
Gloom hid in gloom existed first—one sea, eluding view.
That One, a void in chaos wrapt, by inward fervour grew.
Within It first arose desire, the primal germ of mind,
Which nothing with existence links, as sages searching find.
The kindling ray that shot across the dark and drear abyss,—
Was it beneath? or high aloft? What bard can answer this?
There fecundating powers were found, and mighty forces strove,—
A self-supporting mass beneath, and energy above.
Who knows, who ever told, from whence this vast creation rose?
No gods had then been born,—who then can e'er the truth disclose?
Whence sprang this world, and whether framed by hand divine or no,— It's lord in heaven alone can tell, if even he can show."

atmosphere, nor sky above. What enveloped [all]? Where, in the receptacle of what [was it contained]? Was it water, the profound abyss? 2. Death was not then, nor immortality: there was no distinction of day or night. That One[531] breathed calmly, self-supported; there was nothing different from, or above, it. 3. In the beginning darkness existed, enveloped in darkness. All this was undistinguishable water.[532] That One which lay void, and wrapped in nothingness, was developed by the power of fervour. 4. Desire first arose in It, which was the primal germ of mind; [and which] sages, searching with their intellect, have discovered in their heart to be the bond which connects entity with nonentity. 5. The ray [or cord][533] which stretched across these [worlds], was it below or was it above? There were there impregnating powers and mighty forces, a self-supporting principle beneath, and energy aloft.[534] 6. Who knows, who here can declare, whence has sprung, whence, this creation? The gods are subsequent[535] to the development of this [universe]; who then knows whence it arose? 7. From what this creation arose, and whether [any one] made it or not,—he who in the highest heaven is its ruler, he verily knows, or [even] he does not know."

I am not in possession of Sāyaṇa's commentary on this hymn; but the scholiast on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (see also the explanation of verse 4, in commentary on Taitt. Āraṇy. p. 142) in which the hymn is

[531] Compare R.V. i. 164, 6, "What was that One in the form of the unborn which supported these six worlds?" (vi yas tastambha shaḷ imā rajāṁsi ajasya rūpe kim api svid ekam). In Vālakhilya, x. 2, it is said: eka evāgnir bahudhā samiddaḥ ekaḥ sūryo viśvam anu prabhūtaḥ | ekaivoshāḥ sarvam idaṁ vi bhāti ekaṁ vai idam vi babhūva sarvam ↑ "There is one Agni, kindled in many places; one mighty Sūrya who extends over all things; one Ushas who illuminates this entire world;—this one has been developed into the all."

[532] In the M. Bh. S'āntip. 6812 ff., it is said that from the æther "was produced water, like another darkness in darkness; and from the foam of the water was produced the wind" (tataḥ salilam utpannaṁ tamasīvāparaṁ tamaḥ | tasmāch cha salilotpīḍād udatishṭhata mārutaḥ).

[533] Professor Aufrecht has suggested to me that the word raśmi may have here the sense of thread, or cord, and not of ray.

[534] Does this receive any illustration from R.V. i. 159, 2 (quoted above, p. 21), which speaks of the "thought (manas) of the father" (Dyaus), and of the "mighty independent power (mahi svatavas) of the mother" (Earth)?

[535] Compare x. 72, 2, 3, quoted above, p. 48, and x. 97, 1, where certain plants are said to be anterior to the gods, by three yugas (yāḥ oshadhīḥ pūrvāḥ jātāḥ devebhyas triyugam purā).

repeated (ii. 8, 9, 3 ff.), explains it in conformity with the philosophical ideas of a later period. From such sources we have no right in general to expect much light on the real meaning of the ancient Vedic poets. The commentator in question, who is obliged to find in the words of the infallible Veda a meaning consistent with the speculations believed to be orthodox in his own age, interprets the first verse as follows, in terms which, indeed, after all, may not be far from correctly expressing its general purport: Yadā pūrvasṛishṭiḥ pralīnā uttarasṛishṭiś cha na utpannā tadānīm sadasatī dve api nābhūtām | nāmarūpavibhāgānabhivyaktatvena spashṭapratīyamānam jagat "sat-"śabdena uchyate naravishāṇādisamānam śūnyam "asad" ity uchyate | tadubhayam nāsīt | kintu kāchid avyaktāvasthā āsīt | sā cha vispashṭavābhāvād na satī jagadutpādakatvena sadbhāvād nāpy asatī | "In the interval between the absorption of the previous, and the production of the subsequent, creation, there was neither entity nor nonentity. The world at the time when, by possessing both 'name' and 'form,'[536] it is clearly manifested, is designated by the word 'entity,' while a void which may be compared to such non-existing things as a 'man's horns,' etc., is called 'nonentity.' Neither of these states existed; but there was a certain unapparent condition, which, from the absence of distinctness, was not an 'entity,' while from its being the instrument of the world's production, it was not a 'nonentity.'"

A much older commentary on this verse, probably one of the oldest extant, is the following passage from the Śatap. Br. x. 5, 3, 1: na iva vai idam agre asad āsīd na iva sad āsīt | āsīd iva vai idam agre na iva āsīt | tad ha tad manaḥ eva āsa | 2. Tasmād etad ṛishiṇā 'bhyanūktam "na asad āsīd no sad āsīt tadānīm" iti | na iva hi sad mano na iva asat | 3. Tad idam manaḥ sṛishṭam āvirabhūshad niruktataram mūrtataram | tad ātmānam anvaichhat | tat tapo 'tapyata | tat prāmūrchhat | tat shaṭtriṁśataṁ sahasrāṇy apaśyad ātmano 'gnīn arkān manomayān manaśchitaḥ ityādi | "In the beginning this [universe] was not either, as it were, nonexistent, nor, as it were, existent. In the beginning this universe was, as it were, and was not, as it were. Then it was only that mind. Wherefore it has been declared by the rishi (in the verse before us), 'There was then neither nonentity nor entity;' for mind was, as it were, neither entity nor nonentity. 2. Then this mind, being developed, wished to become manifested, more revealed, more embodied. It sought after itself; it practised austere fervour. It swooned. It beheld 36,000 of its own fires, suns, formed of mind, placed by mind, etc." Mind then creates voice, voice creates breath, breath creates eye, eye creates ear, ear creates work (or ceremony), and work creates fire.

[536] These Vedāntic terms name and form occur (as observed in the Section on Yama, p. 309) in the Atharva-veda, x. 2, 12: "Who placed in him (Purusha) name, magnitude, and form?" and in xi. 7, 1: "In the remains of the sacrifice (uchhishṭa) name and form, in the remains of the sacrifice the world, is comprehended." The original texts will be found further on in the subsections on Purusha and Uchhishṭa. See Śatap. Br. xi. 2, 3, 1 ff., to be quoted below, in the subsection on Brahma.

These ideas of entity and nonentity[537] seem to have been familiar to the later Vedic poets, as in R.V. x. 72 (noticed above, and translated in the section on Aditi, p. 48), we find it thus declared (verses 2, 3), that in the beginning nonentity was the source of entity: "In the earliest age of the gods entity sprang from nonentity; in the first age of the gods entity sprang from nonentity." In the A.V. x. 7, 10 (which will be quoted in the subsection on Skambha), it is said that both nonentity and entity[538] exist within the god Skambha; and in verse 25 of the same hymn: "Powerful indeed are those gods who sprang from nonentity. Men say that that nonentity is one, the highest, member of Skambha."[539] The Taittirīya Upanishad also (Bibliotheca Indica, p. 99) quotes a verse to the effect: "This was at first nonentity. From that sprang entity" (asad vai idam agre āsīt | tato vai sad ajāyata).

The author of the Chhāndogya Upanishad probably alludes to some of these texts when he says (vi. 2, 1 f. Bibl. Ind. p. 387 f.): Sad eva somya idam agre āsīd ekam eva advitīyam | tad ha eke āhur "asad eva [537] The Taitt. Aranyaka. i. 11, 1 (Bibl. Ind. p. 84), ascribes the development of existence from nonexistence to the seven rishis, etc. (asataḥ sad ye tatakshur ṛishayaḥ sapta Atriś cha yat | sarve trayo Agastyaś cha).

[538] Another verse of the A.V. xvii. 1, 19, says: "Entity is founded (pratishṭhitam) on nonentity; what has become (bhūta) is founded on entity. What has become is based (āhitam) on what is to be, and what is to be is founded on what has become" (asati sat pratishṭhitaṁ sati bhūtam pratishṭhitaṁ | bhūtaṁ ha bhavye āhitam bhavyam bhūte pratishṭhitam).

[539] This phrase (see above, p. 51) is also applied to Agni in R.V. x. 5, 7, where it is said that that god, being "a thing both asat, nonexistent (i.e. unmanifested), and sat, existent (i.e. in a latent state, or in essence), in the highest heaven, in the creation of Daksha, and in the womb of Aditi (comp. R.V. x. 72, 4 f.), became in a former age idam agre āsīd ekam eva advitīyaṁ tasmād asataḥ saj jāyeta" | 2. Kutas tu khalu somya evaṁ syād iti ha uvācha katham asataḥ saj jāyeta iti | sat tv eva somya idam agre āsīd ekam eva advitīyam | tad aikshata bahu syām prajāyeya iti | "This, o fair youth, was in the beginning existent (or entity) (sat), one without a second. Now some say, 'This was in the beginning non-existent (or non-entity) (asat), one without a second; wherefore the existent must spring from the non-existent.' 2. But how, o fair youth, he proceeded, can it be so? How can the existent spring from the non-existent? But, o fair youth, this was in the beginning existent, one without a second. That [entity] thought, 'Let me multiply and be produced.'" [540]

There does not appear to be any discrepancy between the statement in R.V. x. 129, 1, "There was then neither nonentity nor entity," and the doctrine of the Chhāndogya Upanishad, for in the second verse of the hymn, also, a being designated as the One is recognized as existing, which may be regarded as answering to the primal entity of the Upanishad; while the original non-existence of anything, whether nonentity or entity, asserted in the first verse, may merely signify, as the commentator on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa explains, that there was as yet no distinct manifestation of the One. In like manner the A.V. x. 7. 10, 25 (quoted above), does not assert the absolute priority of nonentity, but affirms it to be embraced in, or a member of, the divine being designated as Skambha. The Chhāndogya Upanishad has, however, a greater appearance of being at variance with itself, iii. 19, 1 (asad evedam agre āsīt tat sad āsīt), and with the Taittirīya Upanishad, as well as with verses 2 and 3 of the 72nd hymn of the tenth book of the R.V., above cited, which assert that entity sprang from nonentity. If these verses are to be taken literally and absolutely, we must suppose the poet to have conceived the different creative agents whom he names, Brahmaṇaspati, Uttānapad, Daksha, and Aditi, to have sprung out of nothing, or from each other, or to be secondary manifestations of the entity which was the first product of nonentity. If, however, with the commentators, we take "nonentity" to denote merely an undeveloped state, there will be no contradiction.

the first-born of our ceremonial, and is both a bull and a cow." In A.V. xi. 7, 3, it is said that the uchhishṭha (remains of the sacrifice) is both san and asan (masculine).

[540] See English trans. p. 101, which I have not followed.

The first movement in the process of creation as conceived in the hymn (R.V. x. 129) is this: the One, which in the beginning breathed calmly, self-sustained, is developed by the power of tapas, by its own inherent heat (as Professor Müller explains, Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 561), or by rigorous and intense abstraction (as Professor Roth understands the word; see his Lexicon, s.v.).[541] This development gave occasion

[541] Roth's interpretation is supported by a text in the A.V. x. 7, 38 (see further on in the subsection on Skambha), as well as by numerous passage in the Brāhmaṇas. Thus in S'atap. Br. xi. 5, 8, 1 (quoted in the 3rd vol. of this work, p. 4), Prajāpati, who is described as being the universe, is said to have desired (akāmayata) to propagate himself, and to have striven and practised rigorous abstraction (tapo 'tapyata). And in the same Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 7, 1, 1 (cited in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 25), the self-existent Brahma himself is similarly related to have practised tapas, and when he found that that did not confer infinity, to have offered himself in sacrifice. The gods are also said to have attained heaven and their divine character by tapas (see above, p. 15, and the 4th vol. of this work, pp. 20, 21, 24, and 288). Compare also the Taitt. Up. ii. 6, where it is said: Sa tapo 'tapyata | sa tapas taptvā idaṁ sarvam asṛijata yad idaṁ kincha | "He (the supreme Soul) desired, 'Let me be multiplied and produced.'" He performed tapas, and having done so, he created all this." In his commentary on this passage, S'ankara explains that, in conformity with another Vedic text, knowledge is called tapas, and that, as the supreme Soul has no unsatisfied desires, no other sense would be suitable; and that the phrase means "He reflected upon the construction, etc., of the world which was being created" (tapaḥ iti jnānam uchyate | "yasya jnānamayaṁ tapaḥ" iti śruty-antarād āpta-kāmatvāch cha itarasya asambhavaḥ eva | "sa tapo 'tapyata" tapas taptavān sṛijyamāna-jagad-rachanādi-vishayām ālochanām akarod ātmā ity arthaḥ). It is true that all these passages from the Brāhmaṇas are of a later date than the hymn, but the R.V. itself, x. 167, 1, says that Indra gained heaven by tapas (see above, p. 14), where the word can only mean rigorous abstraction. The word is also found in R.V. ix. 113, 2, where soma-juice is said to be poured out with hallowed words, truth, faith, and tapas (ṛitavākena satyena śraddhayā tapasā sutaḥ); and in x. 83, 2, 3, where Manyu (wrath personified) is besought to protect, or to slay enemies, along with tapas, (tapasā sajoshāḥ, or tapasā yujā). This view of the word is also supported by Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 3, 1: "Let us worship with an oblation that first-born god, by whom this entire universe which exists is surrounded (paribhūtam)—the self-existent Brahma, which is the highest tapas. He is son, father, mother. Tapas was produced as the first object" (yenedaṁ vis'vam paribhūtaṁ yad asti prathamajaṁ devaṁ havishā vidhema | svayambhu Brahma paramaṁ tapo yat | sa eva putraḥ sa pitā sa mātā | tapo ha yaksham prathamaṁ sambabhūva). In the Mahābhārata, S'āntiparva, 10836, Prajāpati is said to have created living beings by tapas, after having entered on religious observances, or austerities (vratāni). Tapas is also mentioned as the source from which creatures were produced, A.V. xiii. 1, 10. Compare Bhāgavata Purāna, ii. 9, 6, 7, 19, 23, and iii. 10, 4 ff. Tapas is connected with an oblation of boiled milk in a passage of the A.V. iv. 11, 6: yena devāḥ svar āruruhur hitvā śarīram amṛitasya nābhim | tena geshma sukṛitasya lokaṁ gharmasya vratena tapasā yas'asyavaḥ | "May we, renowned, attain to the world of righteousness by that ceremony of offering boiled milk, by tapas, whereby the

to desire (Kāma) which immediately took possession of the One, and is described as the first germ of mind, and the earliest link[542] between nonentity and entity. The poet then goes on to speak of impregnating powers, and mighty forces, of receptive capacities, and active energies; but confesses himself unable to declare how the universe was produced. The gods themselves having come into existence at a later stage of creation, were not in a position to reveal to their worshippers the earlier part of the process of which they had not been witnesses. The gods ascended to heaven, the centre of immortality, having left behind their body." But xi. 5, 5, connects tapas with heat: "The Brahmachārin, born before Brahma, dwelling (or clothed) in heat, arose through tapas" (pūrvo jāto Brahmaṇo brahmachārī gharmaṁ vasānas tapasodatishṭhat. In A.V. vii. 61, tapas is connected with Agni. In A.V. xvii. 1, 24, tapas means the heat of the sun. Tapas is mentioned along with karman in A.V. xi. 8, 2, and is said to have been produced from it (ibid. v. 6).

[542] The commentator on the Taitt. Br. ii. 8, 9, 5 (p. 928 of Calcutta edition, in Bibl. Ind.) says: kāmasya sarva-vyavahāra-hetutvaṁ Vājasaneyinaḥ samāmananti atho khalv āhuḥ "kāmamayaḥ evāyam puruṣhaḥ" iti | Vyāso 'pi smarati "kāma-bandhanam evedaṁ nānyad astīha bandhanam" iti | asmad-anubhave 'pi tathā dṛiśyate | sarvo hi purushaḥ prathamaṁ kinchit kāmayitvā tadartham prayata-mānaḥ sukhaṁ duḥkhaṁ vā labheta | "The Vājasaneyins record that desire is the cause of all action, and say: 'this Purusha is himself actuated by desire' (Bṛihadār. Up. p. 854). And Vyāsa too declares in his smṛiti, 'That which binds this world is desire; it has no other bond.' The same thing, too, is seen within our own observation; for it is only after a man has first desired something that he will strive after it, and so experience pleasure or pain." In numerous passages of the Brāhmaṇas and Upanishads (as in those quoted in the last note), we are told that the first step in the creation was that Prajāpati or Brahma "desired" (akāmayata). In his remarks on the passage of the Taittirīya Upanishad, quoted in the last note, S'ankara considers it necessary to explain that the supreme Soul is not subject to the dominion of desire, as if, like men, he had any wish unfulfilled, or were subject to the influence of any desirable objects external to himself, or were dependent on other things as instruments of attaining any such external objects; but on the contrary, is independent of all other things, and himself, with a view to the interests of living beings, originated his desires which possess the characteristics of truth and knowledge (or true knowledge), and from being a part of himself, are perfectly pure (kāmayitṛitvād asmad-ādi-vad anāptakāmaṁ chet | na | svātantryāt | yathā 'nyān paravaśīkṛitya kāmādi-doshāḥ pravarttayanti na tathā Brahmaṇaḥ pravarttakāḥ kāmāḥ | kathaṁ tarhi satya-jnāna-lakshaṇāḥ svātmabhūtatvād viśuddhāḥ | na tat Brahma pravarttyate | teshāṁ tu tat-pravarttakam Brahma prāṇi-karmapekshayā | tasmāt svātantryaṁ kāmeshu Brahmaṇaḥ | ato na anāptakāmam Brahma sādhanāntarānapekshatvāch cha | kincha yathā 'nyeshām anātmabhūtāḥ dharmādi-nimittāpekshāḥ kāmāḥ svātma-vyatirikta-kārya-karaṇa-sādhanāntarāpekshāchcha [-āś cha?] na tathā Brahmaṇo nimittādy-apekshatvam). I shall below treat further of Kāma, as a deity, and of his correspondence with the Greek Ἔρως, as one of the first principles of creation.

very gods being at fault, no one on earth is able to say what was the origin of the world, and whether it had any creator or not. Even its ruler in the highest heaven may not be in possession of the great secret.

Such a confession of ignorance on the part of a Vedic rishi could not, however, be taken in its obvious and literal sense by those who held the Veda to have been derived from an omniscient and infallible source. And in consequence the commentator on the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa is obliged to explain it away in the following fashion:—

Atra kechid āgamam upekshya sva-sva-buddhi-balād anyathā 'nyathā utprekshante | tathā hi paramāṇavo mūlakāraṇam iti Kāṇāda-Gautamādayo manyante | svatantram achetanam pradhānaṁ jagato mūlakāraṇam iti Kapila-prabhṛitayaḥ | śūnyādito jagad-utpattir iti Mādhyamikāḥ | jagato kāraṇam eva nāśti svabhāvātaḥ eva avatishṭhate iti Lokāyatikāḥ | te sarve 'pi bhrāntāḥ eva | "ko addha veda" jagat-kāraṇaṁ ko nāma purushaḥ sākshād avagachhati | anavagatya cha "kaḥ iha pravochat" svayam adṛishṭvā ko nāma jagat-kāraṇam īdṛig iti vaktuṁ śaknoti | ko 'yam atra vaktavyāṁśaḥ iti chet | uchyate | iyaṁ vividhā sṛishṭiḥ "kutaḥ ājātā" ta(ka?)smād upādāna-kāraṇāt sarvataḥ utpannā punarapi kuto nimittād utpannā iti tad idam upādānaṁ nimittaṁ cha vaktavyaṁ tach cha vaktum aśakyam | kuto 'śaktir iti chet | uchyate | kiṁ devāḥ etad brūyuḥ kuto 'nyaḥ kaśchid manushyaḥ | na tāvad devāḥ vaktuṁ śaktāḥ te hy asya jagato vividhasṛishṭer "arvāg" eva vidyante na tu sṛishṭeḥ pūrvaṁ te santi | yadā devānām api īdṛiśī gatis tadānīṁ "yataḥ" jagad "ābabhūva" tat kāraṇaṁ vaktum anyaḥ "ko" vā "veda" | devāś cha manushyāś cha sṛishṭeḥ prāg anavasthānād na tāvat pratyakshena paśyanti tadānīṁ svayam eva abhāvād nāpy anumātuṁ śaktās tad-yogyayor hetudṛishṭāntayor abhāvāt | tasmād atigambhīram idam paramārtha-tattvaṁ vaidika-samadhigamyam ity abhiprāyaḥ | .... iyaṁ dṛiśyamānā bhūta-bhautika-rūpā vividhā sṛishṭir yataḥ upādānakāraṇād "ābabhūva" sarvataḥ utpannā tad upādānakāraṇaṁ yadi vā kinchit svarūpaṁ dhṛitvā 'vatishṭhate yadi vā tasya svarūpam eva nāsti tam imaṁ nirṇayaṁ yaḥ Parameśvaro 'sya jagato "'dhyakshaḥ" svāmī "so anga veda" sa eva veda yadi vā so 'pi na veda | īśitṛīśitavyādi-laukika-vyavahāra-dṛishṭyā "so anga veda" ity uktam | yatra tv asya sarvam ātmā eva abhūt kena kam paśyed ityādi-sarva-vyavahārātīta-paramārtha-dṛishṭyā "yadi vā na veda" ity uktam | ato manushyādishu tad-vedana-śankā 'pi dūrāpetā |

"There are certain persons who contemn revelation, and propound different theories of creation by their own reason. Thus the followers of Kaṇāda and Gautama, etc., consider atoms to be the ultimate cause of the world. Kapila and others say that an independent and unconscious Pradhāna is the cause. The Mādhyamikas declare that the world rose out of a void, etc. The Lokāyatikas say that the universe has no cause at all, but exists naturally. All these speculators are in error. Our hymn asks what mortal knows by actual observation the cause of the world? and not having himself had ocular proof, how can any one say it was so and so? The points to be declared are the material and instrumental causes of the universe, and these cannot be told. The reason of this impossibility is next set forth. Can the gods give the required information? Or, if not, how can any man?' The gods cannot tell, for they did not precede, but are subsequent to, the creation. Since the gods are in this predicament, who else can know? The purport is, that as neither gods nor men existed before the creation, and cannot therefore have witnessed it, and as they are at the same time unable to conclude anything regarding it, from the absence of any adequate reason or illustrative instance, this great mystery can only be understood by those versed in the Vedas....The last verse of the hymn declares that the ruler of the universe knows, or that even he does not know, from what material cause this visible world arose, and whether that material cause exists in any definite form or not. That is to say, the declaration that 'he knows' is made from the stand-point of that popular conception which distinguishes betweeen the ruler of the universe and the creatures over whom he rules; while the proposition that 'he does not know' is asserted on the ground of that highest principle which, transcending all popular conceptions, affirms the identity of all things with the supreme Soul, which cannot see any other existence as distinct from itself. [The sense of this last clause is, that the supreme Soul can know nothing of any object being created external to itself, since no such object exists]. "A fortiori, the supposition that such beings as men could possess this knowledge is excluded."

It would, however, be absurd to imagine that the simple author of the hymn entertained any such transcendental notions as these. He makes no pretensions to infallibility, but honestly acknowledges the perplexity which he felt in speculating on the great problem of the origin of the universe.[543]

As a further illustration, both of the more ancient and the later ideas of the Indians regarding the creation of the world, and the manner in which the supreme Spirit, previously quiescent, was moved to activity, I add another passage from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 2, 9, 1, with some of the commentator's remarks. The text of the Brāhmaṇa runs thus:[544] "This [universe] was not originally anything. There was neither heaven, nor earth, nor atmosphere. That being nonexistent (asat), resolved, 'Let me be.' That became fervent (or practised rigorous abstraction, atapyata). From that fervour (or abstraction) smoke was produced. That became again fervent. From that fervour fire was produced. That became again fervent. From that fervour light was produced." And so on,—flame, rays, blazes, etc., being generated by a repetition of the same process. (It may perhaps be considered that the manner in which the word tapas is used in this passage is favourable to the idea that in R.V. x. 129, 3, it signifies heat rather than rigorous abstraction.)

Ibid. ii. 2, 9, 10: Asato 'dhi mano 'sṛijyata | manaḥ Prajāpatim asṛijata | Prajāpatiḥ prajāḥ asṛijata | "From the nonexistent mind (manas) was created. Mind created Prajāpati. Prajāpati created offspring."

The commentator's explanation of the first part of this passage is in substance as follows: "Before the creation no portion existed of the world which we now see. Let such a state of nonexistence be supposed. It conceived the thought, 'Let me attain the condition of existence.' Accordingly, this state of things is distinctly asserted in the Upanishad (the Taittirīya, see above, p. 359): 'This was originally nonexistent. From it existence was produced.' Here, by the word 'nonexistent,' a state of void (or absolute nullity), like that expressed in the phrase 'a hare's horns,' is not intended; but simply a state in which name and form were not manifested. Hence the Vājasaneyins repeat the text: 'This was then undeveloped; let it be developed through name and form.' Earth, the waters, etc., are [543] Similar perplexity is elsewhere expressed on other subjects by the authors of the hymns. See the 3rd vol. of this Work, pp. 279 f.

[544] The words of the original will be found in the 1st vol. of this work, pp. 27 f.

'name.' Hardness and fluidity, etc., are 'form.'" The words "undeveloped" and "developed" are then defined, and Manu, i. 5, is quoted in proof. The supposition that the passage before us can be intended to denote a void is next contravened by adducing the text of the Chhāndogya Upanishad above quoted, where that theory is referred to and contradicted. "In the Aitareya Upanishad (at the beginning) it is declared: 'Soul alone was in the beginning this [universe]. Nothing else was active.' Hence the negation in our text, 'This [universe] was not originally anything,' refers to the world, consisting of name and form, framed by the Supreme Spirit, and is not to be understood absolutely. Designated by the word 'nonexistent' (asat), because devoid of name and form, but still (really) existing (sat), the principle [called] the Supreme Spirit, impelled by the works of the creatures absorbed in It, conceived a thought in the way of a reflection, 'Let me be manifested as existent in the shape of name and form.' As a man in a deep sleep awakes that he may enjoy the fruit of his works, so the thought of causing all living creatures to enjoy the fruit of their works arose in the Supreme Spirit. Possessed by such a thought, that principle [called] the Supreme Spirit, practised rigorous abstraction (tapas) as a means of creating name and form. Here tapas does not mean any such thing as the kṛichchhra or chāndrāyaṇa penances, or the like; but denotes consideration regarding the particular objects which were to be created. Wherefore writers of the Atharva-veda school record the text: 'He who is omniscient, all-understanding, whose tapas consists of knowledge.' From the fact that this tapas has nothing of the character of any penance, it may be properly regarded as denoting the reflection of a being who, though unembodied, is yet omnipotent," etc., etc. "From the supreme God, being such as has been described, in conformity with his volition, a certain smoke was produced," etc., etc.

(Yad idaṁ sthāvara-jangama-rūpaṁ bhūlokādirūpaṁ cha jagad idānīṁ dṛiśyate tat kimapi sṛishṭeḥ pūrvaṁ naiva āsīt | tat tādṛiśam asad-rūpam eva varttamānāṁ syāt | sad-rūpatām prāpnuyām ity etādṛiśam mano 'kuruta | tathā cha upanishadi pūrvam asad-rūpam paśchāt sad-rūpatotpattiś cha viṣpashṭam āmnāyate "asad vai idam agre asīt tato vai sad ajāyata" iti | atra "asat-"śabdena na śaśa-vishāṇādi-samānaṁ śūnyatvaṁ vivakshitaṁ kiṁ tarhy anabhivyakta-nāma-rūpatvam | ataḥ eva Vājasaneyinaḥ samāmananti "tad ha idaṁ tarhy avyākṛitam āsīt | tad nāma-rūpābhyām eva vyākriyeta" iti | bhūmir āpaḥ ityādikaṁ nāma kāṭhinya-dravādikaṁ rūpam | . . . . Aitareyinas tv adhīyate "ātmā vai idam ekaḥ eva agre āsīd na anyat kinchana mishad" iti | tasmād "naiva kinchana āsīd" ity ayaṁ nishedhaḥ Paramātma-nirmita-nāma-rūpātmaka-jagad-vishayo na tu kṛitsna-vishayaḥ | nāma-rūpa-rahitatvena "asat"-śabda-vāchyaṁ sad eva svasthitam Paramātma-tattvaṁ svātmany antarhita-prāṇi-karmapreritam sad nāma-rūpākāreṇa āvirbhaveyam iti paryālochana-rūpam mano 'kuruta | yathā gāḍha-nidrām prāptasya purushasya karma-phala-bhogāya prabodhaḥ utpadyate tathā sarvān prāṇinaḥ sva-sva-karma-phalam bhojayitum īdṛiśo vichāraḥ Paramātmanaḥ prādurabhūt | tathāvidha-vichāra-yuktaṁ tat Paramātma-tattva-rūpaṁ nāma-rūpa-sṛishti-sādhana-rūpaṁ tapo 'kuruta | na atra tapaḥ kṛichchhra-chāndrāyaṇādi-rūpam | kintu srashṭavya-padārtha-viśesha-vishayam paryālochanam | ataḥ eva Ātharvaṇikāḥ āmananti "yaḥ sarvajnaḥ sarvavid yasya jnānamayaṁ tapaḥ" iti | kṛichchhrādi-rūpatvābhāvād aśarīrasya api sarva-śakti-yuktasya paryālochanam upapannam | . . . . tādṛiśāt tasmāt Parameśvarāt sva-sankalpānusāreṇa kaśchid dhūmaḥ udapadyata |)

(6) Purusha.

Another important, but in many places obscure, hymn of the Rig-veda, in which the unity of the Godhead is recognized, though in a pantheistic sense, is the 90th of the tenth book, the celebrated Purusha Sūkta,[545] which is as follows:

1. Sahasraśīrshāḥ Purushaḥ sahasrākshaḥ sahasrapāt | sa bhūmiṁ viśvato vṛitvā aty atishṭhad daśāngulam | 2. Purushaḥ evedaṁ sarvaṁ yad bhūtaṁ yach cha bhavyam | utāmṛitatvasyeśāno yad annenātirohati | 3. Etāvān asya mahimā ato jyāyāṁś cha Pūrushaḥ | pādo 'sya viśvā

[545] Translations of this hymn (which is also given with slight variations in Vāj. S. 13, 1–16, and A.V. 19, 6, and 7, 5, 4) will be found in Mr. Colebrooke's Miscel. Ess. i. 167 (see also the note in p. 309 of the same volume), as also in the 1st vol. of this Work, 9 ff; (into French) in the Preface to Burnouf's Bhāgavata Purāṇa, vol. i. pp. cxxxi. ff. (where see the notes); and (into German) in Professor Weber's Ind. Stud. ix. 5 ff. I have now endeavoured to supply some further illustrations of the ideas in the hymn. I have passed over several obscurities on which I have been unable to throw any light. The first two verses are given in the Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, iii. 14, 15, where the commentary may be consulted.

bhūtāni tripād asyāmṛitaṁ divi | 4. Tripād ūrddhvaḥ ud ait Purushaḥ pādo 'syehābhavat punaḥ | tato vishvaṅ vyakrāmat sāśanānaśane abhi | 5. Tasmād Virāḷ ajāyata Virājo adhi Pūrushaḥ | sa jāto aty arichyata paśchād bhūmim atho puraḥ | 6. Yat Purusheṇa havishā devāḥ yajnam atanvata | vasanto asyāsīd ājyaṁ grīshmaḥ idhmaḥ śarad haviḥ | 7. Taṁ yajnam barhishi praukshan Purushaṁ jātam agrataḥ | tena devāḥ ayajanta sādhyāḥ ṛishayaś cha ye | 8. Tasmād yajnāt sarvahutaḥ sambhṛitam pṛishadājyam | paśūṁs tāṁś chakre vāyavyān āranyān grāmyāś che ye | 9. Tasmād yajnāt sarvahutaḥ richaḥ sāmāni jajnire | chhandāṁsi jajnire tasmād yajus tasmād ajāyata | 10. Tasmād aśvāḥ ajāyanta ye ke cha ubhayādataḥ | gāvo ha jajnire tasmāt tasmāj jātāḥ ajāvayaḥ | 11. Yat Purushaṁ vi adadhuḥ katidhā vi akalpayan | mukhaṁ kim asya kau bāhū kā ūrū pādau uchyete | 12. Brāhmaṇo 'sya mukham āsīd bāhū rājanyaḥ kṛitaḥ | ūrū tad asya yad vaiśyaḥ padbhyāṁ śūdro ajāyata | 13. Chandramāḥ manaso jātaś chakshoḥ Sūryo ajāyata | mukhād Indraś cha Agniś cha prāṇād Vāyur ajāyata | 14. Nābhyāḥ āsīd antarikshaṁ śīrshṇo dyauḥ samavartata | padbhyām bhūmir disaḥ śrotrāt tathā lokān akalpayan | 15. Saptāsyāsan paridhayas triḥ sapta samidhaḥ kṛitāḥ | devāḥ yad yajnaṁ tanvānāḥ abadhnan Purusham paśum | 16. Yajnena yajnam ayajanta devās tāni dharmāṇi prathamāni āsan | te ha nākam mahimānaḥ sachanta yatra pūrve śādhyāḥ santi devāḥ |

"1. Purusha has a thousand heads (a thousand arms, A.V.), a thousand eyes, and a thousand feet. On every side enveloping the earth, he transcended [it] by a space of ten fingers. 2. Purusha himself is this whole[516] [universe], whatever has been, and whatever shall be. He is also the lord of immortality, since through food he expands.[517] 3. Such is his greatness; and Purusha is superior to this. All existing things are a quarter[518] of him, and that which is immortal

[516] Compare S'atap. Br. iv. 2, 2, 1: Sarvaṁ hy ayam ātmā; "for this soul is everything."

[517] The sense of the last clause is obscure. It may also mean, according to the commentators on the Vāj. S. and the S'vetās'v. Upan. "(he is also the lord of) that which grows by food." According to the paraphrase in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (see below), it means, "seeing he has transcended mortal nutriment." The parallel passage of the A.V. (19, 6, 4) reads, "he is also the lord of immortality, since he became united with another (yad anyenābhavat saha).

[518] Compare A.V. x. 8, 7, and 13: "7. With the half he produced the whole world; but what became of that which was the [other] half of him? (ardhena viśvam bhuvanaṁ jajāna yad asya ardhaṁ kva tad babhūva). 13. Prajāpati moves within in the sky is three quarters of him. 4. With three quarters Purusha mounted upwards. A quarter of him again was produced here below. He then became diffused everywhere among things animate and inanimate. 5. From him Virāj was born, and from Virāj, Purusha.[549] As the womb; though unseen, he is born in many forms. With the half he produced the whole world; but the [other] half of him, what sign is there of it?" Compare also A.V. x. 7, 8, 9, which, as well as portions of A.V. x. 8, will be found quoted and translated further on, in the subsection on Skambha.

[549] The commentator on the Vāj. San. (where, as I have said, this hymn is also found) explains this reciprocal generation of Virāj from Purusha, and again of Purusha from Virāj, by saying, in conformity with Vedantic principles, that Virāj in the form of the mundane egg sprang from Ādi-Purusha (primeval Purusha), who then entered into this egg, which he animates as its vital soul or divine principle (tataḥ | tasmād ādipurushād Virāṭ brahmāṇḍa-deho 'jāyata | . . . . tam eva deham adhikaraṇaṁ kṛitvā Purushas taddehābhimānī ekaḥ eva pumān ajāyata | sarva-vedānta-vedyaḥ Paramātmā sva-māyayā Virāḍ-deham brahmāṇḍa-rūpaṁ sṛishṭvā tatrā jīvarūpeṇa praviśya brahmāṇḍābhimānī devatātmā jīvo 'bhavad ity arthaḥ). According to Manu, i. 8–11 (see the 1st vol. of this Work, pp. 35 f.) the supreme Deity first created the waters, in which he placed an egg, from which again he himself was born as Brahmā, also called Nārāyaṇa. This male (Purusha), created by the eternal, imperceptible, first Cause, is, as verse 11 repeats, called Brahmā. Brahmā by his own thought split the egg (verse 12). After various other details regarding the creation, the writer goes on to say (verse 32) that Brahmā divided his own body into two halves, of which one became a male (Purusha), and the other a female, in whom he produced Virāj. This male (Purusha) Virāj again creates Manu himself (verse 33). We here see that the word male, or Purusha, is applied by Manu to three beings—viz., first, to Brahmā (verse 11); second, to the male formed by Brahmā from the half of his own body (verse 32); and thirdly, to Virāj, whom Brahmā, or his male half, produced from the female who was made out of the other half of his body (see also Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 105, note, in Dr. Hall's edition). Another explanation of the verse is, however, to be obtained by comparing the similar passage in R.V. x. 72, 4: "Daksha sprang from Aditi, and Aditi from Daksha" (quoted above, p. 48), together with the observation of Yāska (Nirukta, xi. 23, also quoted above in page 50), that this startling declaration may be explicable on the ground that these two deities had the same origin, or, in conformity with a characteristic of their divine nature, may have been produced from each other, and have derived their substance from each other. (See also Nirukta, vii. 4, quoted above, p. 350, where the author repeats the same idea regarding the nature of the gods). Compare also A.V. xiii. 4, 29 ff., where Indra is said to be produced from a great many different phenomena or elements, and they reciprocally from him (sa vai ahno ajāyata tasmād ahar ajāyata). The Śatap. Br. (xiii. 6, 1, 2) understands Virāj in the passage before us to signify not any male power, but the metre of that name: "The Virāj has forty syllables. Hence he (Purusha) obtains the Virāj, according to the text, 'From him sprang Virāj, and from Virāj Purusha.'" This is that Virāj. From this Virāj, therefore, it is that he begets Purusha the sacrifice." Virāj occurs again in the R.V. ix. 96, 18, and x. 130, 5, as feminine and as the name of a metre. It is also found in x. 159, 3, and x. 166, 1, as well as in i. 188, 5, where it is an soon as born he extended beyond the earth, both behind and before.[550] 6. When the gods offered up Purusha as a sacrifice, the spring was its clarified butter, summer its fuel, and autumn the [accompanying] adjective. In the A.V. it is of frequent occurrence, and sometimes is an epithet, and sometimes denotes the metre of that name. Thus in ix. 2, 5 (compare Vāj. Sanh. 17, 3, and S'atap. Br. ix. 2, 1, 19), it is said, "That daughter of thine, o Kāma, is called the Cow, she whom sages denominate Vāch Virāj" (see below, the subsection on Kāma, and Ind. Stud. ix. 478; compare R.V. viii. 90, 16: vachovidaṁ Vācham .... devīṁ devebhyaḥ pary eyushīṁ gām | "The goddess Vāch .... the cow, who has come from the gods"). Again in viii. 9, 1: vatsau Virājaḥ salilād udaitām | 2. Vatsaḥ kāmadugho Virājaḥ | .... 7. Virājam āhur brahmaṇaḥ pitaraṁ tāṁ no vi dhehi yatidhā sakhibhyaḥ | 8. Yām prachyutām anu yajñāḥ prachyavante upatishṭhante upatishṭhamānām | yasyāḥ vrate prasave yaksham ejati sā Virāḍ ṛishayaḥ parame vyoman | 9. Aprāṇā eti prāṇena prāṇatīnāṁ Virāṭ Svarājam abhyeti paśchāt | "The two calves of Virāj rose out of the water. 2 .... The desire-bestowing calf of Virāj." It is shortly afterwards (verse 7) strangely said that Virāj, though spoken of in the feminine gender, is the "father of brahman," whether that mean the deity or devotion. "They say that Virāj is the father of devotion. Bring her to us thy friends in as many forms (as thou canst). 8. She whom, when she advances, sacrifices follow, and stand still when she stands; she, by whose will and energy the living being moves, is Virāj in the highest heaven. 9. Without breath, she moves by the breath of breathing females. Virāj follows after Svarāj," etc. The calf of Virāj is mentioned again in xiii. 1, 33. In viii. 10, 1, it is said of her: Virāḍ vai idam agre āsīt tasyāḥ jātāyāḥ sarvam abibhed "iyam eva idam bhavishyati" iti | 2. Sā udakrāmat sā gārhapatye vyakrāmat | gṛihamedhī gṛihapatir bhavati yaḥ evaṁ veda | "Virāj was formerly all this [universe]. Everything was afraid of her when she was born, lest she herself should become this. 2. She ascended. She entered the Gārhapatya fire. He who knows this becomes master of a house," etc. And in ix. 10, 24, we read: Virāḍ vāg virāṭ pṛithivī virāḍ antarikshaṁ virāṭ prajāpatiḥ | virāṇ mṛityuḥ sādhyānām adhirājo babhūva, etc. "Virāj is Vāch, is the earth, and the air, is Prajāpati, is Death, the ruler of the Sādhyas," etc. S'atap. Br. xiii. 2, 5, 3: Prajāpatir Virājam asṛijat sā 'smāt sṛishṭā pārāchy ait | sā 'śvam medhyam prāviśat | "Prajāpati created Virāj. She being produced from him went away and entered into the sacrificial horse." In reading these passages we should bear in mind the great power attributed by the Vedic writers to hymns and metres. See Weber's Ind. Stud. viii. 8–12; and vol. iii. of this Work, pp. 275 ff. On the virtues of the Virāj in particular, see Weber, as above, pp. 56 ff. In the following texts the word may be a masculine name or an epithet: A.V. xi. 5, 16. "The āchārya is a brahmachārin; the brahmachārin is Prajāpati. Prajāpati shines (vi rājati). He became the resplendent, powerful Indra." So also in iv. 11, 7; xiii. 3, 5; xi. 5, 7; and viii. 5, 10, where Virāj precedes or follows the words Prajāpati and Parameshṭhin. In xi. 4, 12, Virāj is identified with Prāṇa. In the Bṛihad Ār. Up. Virāj is called the wife of Purusha. (See p. 217 of Dr. Röer's translation. In R.V. x. 159, 3 (atho me duhitā virāṭ), and x. 166, 1 (virājam gopatim gavām), the word seems to be an epithet.

[550] In the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ii. 6, 15 ff., the preceding verses of our hymn are paraphrased as follows: sarvam Purushaḥ evedam bhūtam bhavyam bhavach cha yat | tenedam āvṛitaṁ viśvaṁ vitastim adhitishṭhati | 16. Svadhishṭhyam pratapan Prāṇo oblation. 7. This victim, Purusha born in the beginning, they immolated on the sacrificial grass; with him as their offering, the gods, Sādhyas, and Rishis sacrificed. 8. From that universal oblation were produced curds and clarified butter. He (Purusha) formed those aerial creatures, and the animals, both wild and tame. 9. From that universal sacrifice sprang the hymns called Ṛich and Sāman, the metres, and the Yajush. 10. From it were produced horses, and all animals with two rows of teeth, cows, goats, and sheep. 11. When they divided Purusha, into how many parts did they distribute him? What was his mouth? What were his arms? What were called his thighs and feet? 12. The Brāhman was his mouth;[551] the Rājanya became his arms; the Vaiśya was his thighs; the Śūdra sprang from his feet. 13. The moon was produced from his soul; the sun from his eye; Indra and Agni from his mouth; and Vāyu from his breath. 14. From his navel came the atmosphere; from his head arose the sky; from his feet came the earth; from his ear the four quarters: so they formed the worlds. 15. When the gods, in performing their sacrifice, vahiś cha pratapaty asau | evaṁ Virājam pratapaṁs tapaty antar vahiḥ pumān | 17. So 'mṛitasyābhayasyeśo martyam annaṁ yad atyagāt | mahimaisho tato brahman Purushasya duratyayaḥ | 18. Pādeshu sarva-bhūtāni Puṁsaḥ sthitipado viduḥ | amṛitaṁ kshemam abhayaṁ trimūrdhno 'dhāyi mūrdhasu | 19. Pādās trayo vahiś chāsann aprajānāṁ ye āśramāḥ | antas trilokyās tv aparo gṛihamedho 'vṛihad-vrataḥ | 20. Śṛitī vichakrame vishvañ sāśanānaśane ubhe | yad avidyā cha vidyā cha Purushas tūbhayāśrayaḥ | 21. Yasmād aṇḍaṁ Virāḍ jajñe bhūtendriya-guṇātmakaḥ | tad-dravyam atyagād viśvaṁ gobhiḥ sūryaḥ ivātapan | 15. "Purusha himself is all this which has been, shall be, and is. By him this universe is enveloped, and yet he occupies but a span. 16. That Prāṇa [explained by the commentator as the sun], while kindling his own sphere, kindles also that which is without it. So, too, Purusha, while kindling Virāj, kindles whatever is within and without him. 17. He is the lord of immortality and security, since he has transcended mortal nutriment. Hence, O Brahman, this greatness of Purusha is unsurpassable. 18. The wise know all things to exist in the feet [or quarters] of Purusha, who has the worlds for feet [or quarters]: immortality, blessedness, and security, abide in the heads of the three-headed. 19. Three quarters, viz., the abodes of ascetics, are beyond the three worlds; while the remaining quarter, the abode of householders who have not adopted a life of celibacy, is within them. 20. Purusha has traversed both the two separate paths, that of enjoyment and abstinence, that is, of ignorance and knowledge; for he is the receptacle of both. 21. From him was produced an egg, consisting of the elements and senses and three qualities. Purusha penetrated through its entire substance, as the sun warms with his rays." There is a good deal about Purusha in the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad. See pp. 217, 220–228, 233, 250, 252, 267, of Dr. Roer's English translation.

[551] Kaushītakī Brāhmaṇa Upanishad, ii. 9, quoted in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 10, note.

bound Purusha as a victim, there were seven pieces of wood laid for him round the fire, and thrice seven pieces of fuel employed. 16. With sacrifice the gods worshipped the Sacrifice. These were the first institutions. These great beings attained to the heaven where the gods, the ancient Sādhyas, reside." [552]

There are two other hymns of the Ṛig-veda besides the Purusha Sūkta in which the Deity is represented as either the agent, the object, or the subject of sacrifice. In x. 81, 5, Viśvakarman is said to sacrifice himself, or to himself; and in verse 6, to offer up heaven and earth. And in x. 130 (where, in verse 2, Pumān may be equivalent to Purusha), it is said (verse 3) either that the gods sacrificed to the [supreme] god, or that they offered him up.[553]

In the Nirukta, x. 26,[554] a legend, having reference to R.V. x. 81, is quoted to the effect that Viśvakarman, the son of Bhuvana, first of all offered up all worlds in a sarvamedha, and ended by sacrificing himself. And in the Śatap. Br. xiii. 7, 1, 1, the same thing is related of the self-existent Brahma himself, who, finding that he could not by austere fervour attain to the infinitude which he desired, re-[552] This verse is = i. 164, 50, where see Sāyaṇa's interpretation and Mahīdhara's on Vāj. S. 31, 16; also Nir. 12, 41.

[553] The rendering in these passages depends on the exact sense assigned to the word yaj. See the 4th vol. of this Work, pp. 7–9. The Taitt. Sanh. Asht, vi. p. 41 of India Office MS., says: Yajnena vai Prajāpatiḥ prajāḥ asṛijata | "Prajāpati created living beings by sacrifice." In the Taitt. Br. 3, 9, 22, 1, it is said: "The gods slaughtered father Prajāpati as a victim. They then fasted, saying: 'In the morning we shall offer sacrifice.'" Prajāpatiṁ vai devāḥ pitaram paśum bhūtam medhāya ālabhanta | tam ālabhya upāvasan | prātar yashṭāshmahe iti.

[554] Vol. iv. of this work, p. 7; see also p. 309; and Mahābhārata Śāntip., verse 241: viśvarūpo Mahādevūḥ sarvamedhe mahāmakhe | juhāva sarva-bhūtāni tathaivātmānam ātmanā | "The omniform Mahādeva sacrificed all creatures in a great all-oblation, and then offered himself by himself." In the Śatap. Br. xi. 1, 8, 2, it is said that "Prajāpati gave himself to the gods, and became their sacrifice. For sacrifice is the food of the gods. He then created sacrifice as his own image (or counterpart). Hence they say that 'Prajāpati is sacrifice;' for he created it as his own image" (tebhyaḥ Prajāpatir ātmānam pradadau | Yajno ha eshām āsa | Yajno hi devānām annam | 3. Sa devebhyaḥ ātmānam pradāya atha etam ātmanaḥ pratimām asṛijata yad yajnam | tāsmād āhuḥ "Prajāpatir yajnaḥ" iti | ātmano hy etam pratimām asṛijata). In the M. Bh. Śāntip. 9616, also, it is said that Prajāpati formed the sacrificial victims, and sacrifice itself, and with it worshipped the gods. The Śatap. Br. says, elsewhere, xiv. 3, 2, 1, "This which is sacrifice is the soul of all beings and of all gods" (sarveshāṁ vai esha bhūtānāṁ sarveshāṁ devānām ātmā yad yajnaḥ).

solved to offer up himself in created things, and created things in himself, and having done this, attained to pre-eminence, self-effulgence, and supreme dominion (see the 4th vol. of this work, p. 25). It is evident that the author of this passage had not attained to that clear conception of the self-sufficiency and omnipotence of a self-existent Being which later Indian writers acquired.[555]

In the hymn before us the gods are distinctly said (in verses 6, 7, and 15) to have offered up Purusha himself as a victim. And in the Bhāgavata Purāna, ii. 6, 21-26,[556] which is a paraphrase of this passage, Brahmā is made to say that he derived the materials of sacrifice from Purusha's members, and immolated that being, the lord himself.

It is not very easy to seize the precise idea which is expressed in the latter part of this singular hymn, the Purusha Sūkta. It was evidently produced at a period when the ceremonial of sacrifice had become largly developed, when great virtue was supposed to reside in its proper celebration, and when a mystical meaning had come to be attached to the various materials and instruments of the ritual as well as to the different members of the victim. Penetrated with a sense of the sanctity and efficacy of the rite, and familiar with all its details, the priestly poet, to whom we owe the hymn, has thought it no profanity to represent the supreme Purusha himself as forming the victim, whose immolation by the agency of the gods gave birth, by its transcendent power, to the visible universe and all its inhabitants.[557]

The two following verses in the Vājasaneyi Sanhita refer to Purusha:

xxxi. 18 (= Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, iii. 8): vedāham etam Purusham mahāntam āditya-varṇam tamasaḥ parastāt | tam eva viditvā 'ti mṛityum eti nānyaḥ panthāḥ vidyate ayanāya | "I know this great Purusha, resplendent as the sun, above the darkness. It is by knowing him

[555] The word svayambhū does not, however, always signify self-existence in the absolute sense. Thus Kaśyapa is in A.V. xix. 53, 10, called svayambhū, and is yet said to have sprung from Kāla (time). (See the subsection on Kāla, further on.)

[556] See the 4th vol. of this Work, p. 9.

[557] Dr. Haug, when treating of the importance attached to sacrifice by the Brahmans, remarks (Pref. to Ait. Ar. p. 73): "The creation of the world itself was even regarded as the fruit of a sacrifice performed by the Supreme Being." If the learned author here refers to the Purusha Sūkta it would have been more exact to say that the creation was regarded as the fruit of an immolation of the Supreme Being. But his remark may be justified by the other passages I have cited.

that a man overpasses death. There is no other road to go."[558] (The Purusha Sūkta occupies verses 1–16 of the same section in which this verse is found.)

xxxii. 2: sarve nimeshāḥ jajnire vidyutaḥ Purushād adhi | nainam ūrdhvaṁ na tiryancham na madhye parijagrabhat | "All winkings of the eye have sprung from Purusha, the resplendent. No one has embraced him either above, or below, or in the middle."[559]

The A.V. contains a long hymn (x. 2) on the subject of Purusha, which does not throw much light on the conception of his character, but contains a number of curious ideas. The Deity being conceived and described in this hymn as the Man, or Male (Purusha)—the great archetype and impersonation of that active energy of which men are the feeble representatives upon earth—the poet has been led to imagine the object of his adoration as invested with a visible form, and with members analogous to those of the human frame; and he then goes on to speculate on the agency by which the different portions of Purusha's body could have been constructed, and the source from which he could have derived the various attributes through which he formed the universe, and ordained the conditions under which its several departments exist. The minute questions regarding the members of Purusha with which the hymn opens may have been suggested to the author by an observation of the curious structure of the human body, and by the wonder which that observation had occasioned. Throughout the hymn Purusha is not represented as a self-existent, self-sufficient Being, but as dependent on other gods for his various powers and attributes. The details are too tedious, and in some places too obscure, to admit of my giving them in full, but I shall state the substance, and adduce the most important parts more or less in extenso. The hymn begins thus:—

[558] Compare A.V. vii. 53, 7: "Ascending from the darkness to the highest heaven we have reached the sun, a god among the gods, the uppermost light" (ud vayaṁ tamasas pari rohanto nākam uttamam | devaṁ devatrā sūryam aganma jyotir uttamam [compare R.V. i. 50, 10, quoted above in p. 160).

[559] The following verse, given in the Nirukta, ii. 3, is from the S'vetās'vatara Upanishad, iii. 9: "This entire universe is filled by that Purusha to whom there is nothing superior, from whom there is nothing different, than whom no one is more minute or more vast, and who alone, fixed like a tree, abides in the sky" (yasmāt paraṁ nāparam asti kinchid yasmād nāṇīyo ṇa jyāyo 'sti kaśchit | vṛikshaḥ iva stabdho divi tishṭhaty ekas tenedam pūrṇam Purusheṇa sarvam).

1. Kena pārshṇī ābhṛite Purushasya kena māṁsaṁ samblhṛitaṁ kena gulphau | kenāngulī peśanīḥ kena khāni . . . . | 2. Kasmān nu gulphāv adharāv akṛiṇvann ashṭhīvantāv uttarau Pūrushasya | . . . . 4. Kati devāḥ katame te āsan ye uro grīvāś chikyuḥ Pūrushasya | kati stanau vyadadhuḥ kaḥ kaphauḍau kati skandhān kati pṛishṭīr achinvan | 6. Kaḥ sapta khāni vi tatarda śīrshaṇi karṇāv imau nāsike chakshaṇī mukham | . . . . 9. Priyāpriyāṇi bahulā svapnaṁ sambādha-tandryaḥ | ānandān ugro nandāṁś cha kasmād vahati Pūrushaḥ | ārtir avartir nirṛitiḥ kuto nu Purushe 'matiḥ | rādhiḥ samridhiḥ | . . . . 12. Ko asmin rūpam adadhāt ko mahmānaṁ cha nāma cha | gātuṁ ko asmin ko ketuṁ kaś charitrāṇi Pūrushe | 13. Ko asmin prāṇam avayat ko apānaṁ vyānam u | samānam asmin ko devo adhi śiśrāya Pūrushe | 14. Ko asmin yajnam adadhād eko devo adhi Pūrushe | ko asmin satyaṁ ko 'nṛitaṁ kuto mṛityuḥ kuto 'mṛitam | 15. Ko asmai vāsaḥ paryadhāt ko asyāyur akalpayat | balaṁ ko asmai prāyachhat ko asyākalpayaj javam | 16. Kenāpo anvatanuta kenāhar akarod ruche | ushasaṁ kena anvaindha kena sāyambhavaṁ dadhe | 17. Ko asmin reto nyadadhāt tantur ātāyatām iti | medhāṁ ko asminn adhyauhat . . . . | 18. Kena imām bhūmim aurnot kena paryabhavad divam | kenābhi mahnā parvatān kena karmāṇi Pūrushaḥ | 24. Keneyam bhūmir vihitā kena dyaur uttarā hitā | kenedam ūrdhvaṁ tiryak cha antarikshaṁ vyacho hitam | 25. Brahmaṇā bhūmir vihitā Brahma dyaur uttarā hitā | Brahmedam ūrdhvaṁ tiryak cha antarikshaṁ vyacho hitam | . . . . 28. Ūrdhvo nu sṛishṭās tiryaṅ nu sṛishṭāḥ sarvāḥ diśaḥ Purushaḥ ā babhūva | puraṁ yo Brahmaṇo veda yasyāḥ Purushaḥ uchyate | 29. Yo vai tām Brahmaṇo veda amṛitenāvṛitām puram | tasmai Brahma cha brāhmāś cha chakshuḥ prāṇam prajāṁ daduḥ | 30. Na vai taṁ chakshur jahāti na prāṇo jarasaḥ purā | puraṁ yo Brahmaṇo veda yasyāḥ Purushaḥ uchyate | 31. Ashṭāchakrā navadvārā devānām pūr ayodhyā | tasyāṁ hiraṇyayaḥ kośaḥ svargaḥ jyotishāvṛitaḥ | 32. Tasmin hiraṇyaye kośe tryare tripratishṭhite | tasmin yad yaksham ātmanvat tad vai brahma-vido viduḥ | 38. Prabhrājamānāṁ hariṇīm yaśasā samparīvṛitām | puraṁ hiraṇyayīm Brahma āviveśāparājitām |

"1. By whom were the heels of Purusha produced? By whom was his flesh brought together? By whom were his ancles, by whom were his fingers and his muscles, made? By whom the apertures of his body? . . . 2. From what did they construct his ancles below and his knees above?" After similar question about his legs, thighs, trunk, etc., the author proceeds: "4. How many and who were the gods who joined together the chest and the neck of Purusha? How many formed his breasts, who his elbows? (?) How many connected his shoulders and ribs? . . . . 6. Who opened the seven apertures in his head, these ears, nostrils, eyes, and mouth? . . . ." "Whence," asks the poet (verse 9), "does the glorious Purusha bring many things pleasant and unpleasant, sleep, fear, fatigue, and various kinds of enjoyments? 10. How do suffering, distress, evil, as well as success and opulence, exist in Purusha? . . . . 12. Who assigned to him form,[560] magnitude, name,[560] motion, and consciousness, (13) and what god put into him the different vital airs? 14. What one god placed in him sacrifice, truth, and falsehood? Whence come death and immortality? 15. Who clothed him with a garment? Who created his life? Who gave him strength and speed? 16. Through whom did he spread out the waters, cause the day to shine, kindle the dawn, bring on the twilight? 17. Who placed in him seed, that the thread (of being) might be continued? Who imparted to him understanding? . . . . 18. Through whom did he envelope the earth, surround (or transcend) the sky, surpass by his greatness the mountains and all created things? 24. By whom was this earth made, and the sky placed above? By whom was this expanse of atmosphere raised aloft and stretched across? 25. The earth was made by Brahma, and Brahma is placed above as the sky. Brahma is the expanse of atmosphere, raised aloft and stretched across. 28. Purusha, who is on high, has pervaded all the regions which are extended aloft and across (quoted with variations in Taitt. Ār. i. 27, 3, p. 168). He who knows the city (pur) of Brahma from which Purusha is named, (29) who knows that city of Brahma, invested with immortality; to him Brahma and Brahma's sons have given sight, [560] Here, as above noticed (p. 166, note), we have the nāma and rūpa of the Vedantists. Compare Taitt. Brāh. ii. 2, 7, 1: Prajāpatiḥ prajāḥ asṛijata | tāḥ sṛishṭāḥ samashkṛishyan (in p. 444 'the word is printed samaślishyan) | tāḥ rūpeṇa anuprāviśat | tasmād āhuḥ "rūpaṁ vai Prajāpatir" iti | tāḥ nāmnā 'nuprāviśat | tasmād āhur "nāma vai Prajāpatir" iti | "Prajāpati created living beings. They, however, were in a shapeless state. He entered into them with form. Hence, men say 'Prajāpati is form.' He entered into them with name. Hence, men say 'Prajāpati is name.'" Compare the same Brāhmaṇa, iii. 10, 5, 1, and iii. 12, 7, 5. See M. Langlois' note on the word nāma in R.V. x. 73, 8, vol. iv. p. 493 of his translation of the Rig-veda.

and breath, and progeny. 30. Neither sight nor breath abandons before [the term of natural] decay the man who knows the city of Brahma, from which Purusha is named. 31. Within that impregnable city of the gods (compare puram devānām amṛitam hiraṇyam, A.V. v. 28, 11; and Mahābhārata, xiv. 987 ff.), which has eight circles (compare A.V. xi. 4, 22) and nine gates, there exists a golden receptacle, celestial, invested with light. 32. Those acquainted with Brahma (divine science, or the Deity) know that living being which resides in this golden receptacle with three spokes, and triple supports.[561] 33. Brahma has entered into the impregnable golden city, resplendent, bright, invested with renown."

In the Śatap. Br. xiii. 6, 1, 1 (see vol. iv. of this Work, p. 25), the word Nārāyaṇa is coupled with Purusha, and it is said that this being desired to surpass all beings, and become himself the entire universe, and that he accomplished his object by celebrating the Purushamedha sacrifice. Purusha Nārāyaṇa is again mentioned in the same Brāhmaṇa (xii. 3, 4, 1) as receiving instruction from Prajāpati: Purushaṁ ha Nārāyaṇam Prajāpatir uvācha "yajasva yajasva" iti | sa ha uvācha "'yajasva yajasva' iti vāva tvam mām āttha | trir ayakshi | Vasavaḥ prātaḥ-savanena aguḥ Rudrāḥ mādhyandinena savanena Ādityās tṛitīya-savanena atha mama yajña-vāstv eva yajña-vāstāv eva aham āsa" iti | sa ha uvācha "yajasva eva | ahaṁ vai te tad vakshyāmi yathā te ukthāni maṇir iva sūtre otāni bhavishyanti sūtram iva vā maṇāv" iti | "Prajāpati said to Purusha Nārāyaṇa, 'Sacrifice, sacrifice.' He replied, 'Thou sayest to me, Sacrifice, sacrifice. I have sacrificed thrice. By the morning oblation the Vasus came, by the mid-day oblation the Rudras came, and by the third oblation the Ādityas came to my place of sacrifice, where I was.' Prajāpati rejoined, 'Sacrifice; I will tell thee how thy hymns shall be strung like a gem on a thread, or as a thread in a gem.'"

[561] One line of A.V. x. 8, 43 (quoted in the next subsection), is identical with one line of this verse, though the other line is different. The whole runs thus: "The knowers of brahma know that living being which resides in the lotus with nine gates, invested with the three qualities" (tribhir guṇebhir āvṛitam). Roth, s.v. guṇa, translates the last three words by "triply enveloped," and refers in support of this sense to verses 29 and 32 of the hymn before us, and to Chhāndogya Upanishad, viii. 1, 1. It is possible, however, that there may be here a first reference to the three guṇas afterwards so celebrated in Indian philosophical speculation.

(7) Skambha and Brahma.

In the following hymn of the A.V. (x. 7) the Supreme Deity appears to be celebrated under the appellation of Skambha (or Support).[562] Though it is rather tedious, I shall translate it nearly in full, as these ancient guesses after truth no doubt contain the germ of some of the later speculations on the same topics. In the first part (verses 1–6, 10–12) Skambha is considered (like Púrusha, with whom he seems to be identified, verse 15) as a vast embodied being, co-extensive with the universe, and comprehending, in his several members, not only the different parts of the material world, but a variety of abstract conceptions, such as austere fervour (tapas), faith, truth, and the divisions of time. He is distinct from, and superior to, Prajāpati, who founds the worlds upon him (verses 7, 8, 17). The thirty-three gods are comprehended in him (verses 13, 22, and 27), and arose out of nonentity, which forms his highest member, and, as well as entity, is embraced within him (verses 10, 25). The gods who form part of him, as branches of a tree (verse 38), do him homage, and bring him tribute (verse 39). He is identified with Indra (in verses 29 and 30); and perhaps also with the highest Brahma, who is mentioned in verses 32–34, 36, and in the first verse of the next hymn, x. 8, 1. In verse 36, however, this Brahma is represented as being born (or, perhaps, developed) from toil and tapas, whilst in x. 8, 1, the attributes of the Supreme Deity are assigned to him. In compositions of this age, however, we are not to expect very accurate or rigorous thinking, or perfect consistency:—

1. Kasminn ange tapo asyādhi tishṭhati kasminn ange ṛitam asya adhy āhitam | kva vratañ kva śraddhā 'sya tishṭhati kasminn ange satyam asya pratishṭhitam | 2. Kasmād angād dīpyate agnir asya kasmād angāt pavate mātariśvā | kasmād angād vi mimīte 'dhi chandramāḥ mahaḥ Skambhasya mimāno angam | 3. Kasminn ange tishṭhati bhūmir asya kasminn ange tishṭhati antarikshaṃ | kasminn ange tishṭhati āhitā dyauḥ kasminn ange tishṭhati uttaraṃ divaḥ | 4. Kva prepsan dīpyate ūrdhvo agniḥ kva prepsan pavate mātariśvā | yatra prepsantīr abhi yanti āvṛitaḥ

[562] This word occurs in R.V. viii. 41, 10: sa dhāma pūrvyaṃ mame yaḥ skambhena vi rodasī ajo na dyāṃ adhārayat | "He formed the first abode, he who with a prop (skambha) held apart the two worlds, like the unborn."

Skambhaṁ tam brūhi katamaḥ svid eva saḥ | 5. Kva ardhamāsāḥ kva yanti māsāḥ saṁvatsareṇa saha saṁvidānāḥ | yatra yanti ṛitavo yatra ārtavāḥ Skambham tam brūhi—| 6. Kva prepsantī yuvatī virūpe ahorātre dravataḥ saṁvidāne | yatra prepsantīr abhiyanti āpaḥ Skambham—| 7. Yasmin stabdhvā Prajāpatir lokān sarvān adhārayat | Skambham—| 8. Yat paramam avamaṁ yach cha madhyamam Prajāpatiḥ sasṛije viśvarūpam | kiyatā Skambhaḥ praviveśa tatra yan na prāviśat kiyat tad babhūva | 9. Kiyatā Skambhaḥ praviveśa bhūtaṁ kiyad bhavishyad anu āśaye 'sya | ekaṁ yad angam akṛinot sahasradhā kiyatā Skambhaḥ praviveśa tatra | 10. Yatra lokāṁś cha kośāṁś cha apo brahma janāḥ viduḥ | asach cha yatra sachchāntaḥ Skambhaṁ tam brūhi katamaḥ svid eva saḥ | 11. Yatra tapaḥ parākramya vrataṁ dhārayaty uttaram | ṛitaṁ cha yatra śraddhā cha āpo brahma samāhitā Skambham—| 12. Yasmin bhūmir antarikshaṁ dyaur yasminn adhyāhitā | yatrāgniś chandramāḥ sūryo vātas tishṭhanti ārpitā Skambham—| 13. Yasya trayastriṁśad devāḥ ange sarve samāhitāḥ | Skambham—| 14. Yatra ṛishayaḥ prathamajāḥ ṛichaḥ sāma yajur mahī | ekarshir yasminn ārpitaḥ Skambham—| 15. Yatrāmṛitaṁ cha mṛityuś cha Purushe 'dhi samāhite | samudro yasya nādyaḥ Purushe 'dhi samāhitā Skambham—| 16. Yasya chatasraḥ pradiśo nādyas tishṭhanti prathamāḥ | yajno yatra parākrāntaḥ Skambham—| 17. Ye Purushe Brahma vidus te viduḥ Parameshṭhinam | yo veda Parameshṭhinaṁ yaś cha veda Prajāpatim | jyeṣṭhaṁ ye brāhmaṇaṁ vidus te Skambham anu saṁviduḥ | 18. Yasya śiro Vaiśvānaraś chakshur Angiraso 'bhavan | angāni yasya Yātavaḥ Skambham—| 19. Yasya brahma mukham āhur jihvām madhukaśām uta | virājam ūdho yasyāhuḥ Skambham—| 20. Yasmād ṛicho apātakshan yajur yasmād apākashan | sāmāni yasya lomāni atharvāṅgiraso mukham | Skambham—| 21. Asachchhākhām pratishṭhantīm paramam iva janāḥ viduḥ | uto san manyante 'vare ye te śākhām upāsate | 22. Yatrādityāś cha Rudrāś cha Vasavaś cha samāhitāḥ | bhūtaṁ cha yatra bhavyaṁ cha sarve lokāḥ pratishṭhitāḥ | Skambham—| 23. Yasya trayastriṁśad devāḥ nidhiṁ rakshanti sarvadā | nidhiṁ tam adya ko veda yaṁ devāḥ abhirakshathā | 24. Yatra devāḥ brahmavido Brahma jyeshṭham upāsate | yo vai tān vidyāt pratyakshaṁ sa brahmā veditā syāt | 25. Bṛihanto nāma te devāḥ ye 'sataḥ parijajnire | ekaṁ tad angaṁ Skambhasya asad āhuḥ paro janāḥ | 26. Yatra Skambhaḥ prajanayan purāṇaṁ vyavartayat | ekaṁ tad angaṁ Skambhasya purāṇam anu saṁviduḥ | 27. Yasya trayastriṁśad devāḥ ange gātrā vi bhejire | tān vai trayastriṁśad devān eke brahmavido viduḥ | 28. Hiraṇyagarbham paramam anatyudyaṁ janāḥ viduḥ | Skambhas tad agre prāsinchad hiraṇyaṁ loke antarā | 29. Skambhe lokāḥ Skambhe tapaḥ Skambhe 'dhy ṛitam āhitam | Skambha tvā veda pratyaksham Indre sarvaṁ samāhitam | 30. Indre lokāḥ Indre tapaḥ Indre 'dhy ṛitam āhitam | Indram (Indra?) tvā veda pratyakshaṁ Skambhe sarvam pratishṭhitam | 31. Nāmnā nāma johavīti purā sūryāt puroshasaḥ | yad ajaḥ prathamaṁ sambabhūva sa ha tat svarājyam iyāya yasmān nānyat param asti bhūtam | 32. Yasya bhūmiḥ pramā antariksham utodaram | divaṁ yaś chakre mūrdhānaṁ tasmai jyeshṭhāya Brahmaṇe namaḥ | 33. Yasya Sūryaś chakshuś chandramāś cha punar navaḥ | Agniṁ yaś chakre āsyaṁ tasmai—| 34. Yasya vātaḥ prāṇāpānam chakshur Angiraso 'bhavan | diśo yaś chakre prajnānīs tasmai jyesṭhāya Brahmaṇe namaḥ | 35. Skambho dadhāra dyāvā-pṛithivī ubhe ime Skambho dadhāra urv antariksham | Skambho dadhārā pradiśaḥ shaḍ urvīḥ Skambhaḥ idaṁ viśvam bhuvanam ā viveśa | 36. Yaḥ śramāt tapaso jāto lokān sarvān samānaśe | Somaṁ yaś chakre kevalaṁ tasmai jyeshṭhāya Brahmaṇe namaḥ | 37. Kathaṁ vāto nelayati kathaṁ na ramate manaḥ | kim āpaḥ satyam prepsantīr nelayanti kadāchana | 38. Mahad yaksham bhuvanasya madhye tapasi krāntaṁ salilasya pṛishṭhe | tasmin śrayante ye u ke cha devāḥ vṛikshasya skandhaḥ paritaḥ iva śākhāḥ | 39. Yasmai hastābhyām pādābhyām vāchā śrotreṇa chakshushā | yasmai devāḥ sadā balim prayachhanti vimite 'mitam | Skambhaṁ tam brūhi katamaḥ svid eva sa | 40. Apa tasya hataṁ tamo vyāvṛittaḥ sa pāpmanā | sarvāṇi tasmin jyotīṁshi yāni trīṇi Prajāpatau | 41. Yo vetasaṁ hiraṇyayaṁ tishṭhantaṁ salile veda | sa vai guhyaḥ Prajāpatiḥ |

"1. In what member of his does austere fervour stand? In which is the ceremonial contained? In what parts do religious observance and faith abide? In what member is truth established? 2. From what member does Agni blaze? From which does Mātariśvan (the wind) blow? From which does the moon pursue her course, traversing the mighty body of Skambha? 3. In what member does the earth reside? In which the atmosphere? In which is the sky placed, and in which the space above the sky? 4. Whither tending, does the upward fire blaze? Whither tending, does the wind blow? Tell who is that Skambha to whom the paths tend, and into whom they enter. 5. Whither tending, do the half-months and the months, in concert with the year, proceed? Tell who is that Skambha to whom the seasons and other divisions of the year advance. 6. Whither tending, do the two young females of diverse aspects, the day and the night, hasten in unison? Tell who is that Skambha to whom the waters tend and go? 7. Who is that Skambha on whom Prajāpati has supported and established all the worlds? 8. How far did Skambha penetrate into that highest, lowest, and middle universe, comprehending all forms, which Prajāpati created? And how much of it was there which he did not penetrate? 9. How far did Skambha penetrate into the past? and how much of the future is contained in his receptacle? How far did Skambha penetrate into that one member which he separated into a thousand parts? 10. Tell who is that Skambha in whom men recognize the worlds and receptacles, the waters and divine thought [as existing], and within whom are non-entity and entity; (11) in whom austere fervour (tapas), energizing, maintains its highest action (vratá), in whom the ceremonial, faith, the waters, and divine science are comprehended; (12) in whom earth, atmosphere, sky, fire, moon, sun, and wind are placed; (13) in whose body all the thirty-three gods are contained;[563] (14) in whom the earliest Rishis, the Rik, the Sāman, the Yajush, the earth, and the one Rishi reside; (15) that Purusha, in whom immortality and death are comprehended; who has the ocean within him as his veins; (16) that Skambha, of whom the four regions are the primeval arteries, and in whom sacrifice displays its energy. 17. They who know the divine essence (brahma) in Purusha, know Parameshṭhin.[564] He who knows Parameshṭhin, and he who knows Prajāpati — they who know the highest divine mystery (brāhmaṇa)[565] know in consequence Skambha. 18. Tell who is that Skambha of whom Vaiśvānara (Agni) is the head, the Angirases the eye, and the Yātus (demons) are the limbs; (19) of whom they say divine knowledge (brahma) is the mouth, the Madhukaśá[566] the tongue, and the Virāj the udder; (20) from whom they [563] See Dr. Haug's Essay on the sacred language of the Parsees, p. 233.

[564] Son of Prajāpati according to S'atap. Br. xi. 1, 6, 14, 16; gives sacrifice to Prajāpati, Taitt. S. i. 6, 9, 2. See Comm. there, p. 914.

[565] See verses 20, 33, and 37 of A.V. x. 8, to be quoted below.

[566] I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht for an explanation of this word, and an indication of some passages in which it is mentioned. In R.V. i. 22, 3, and i. 157, 4, hewed off the Rik verses, and cut off the Yajus; of whom the Sāma verses are the hairs, and the Atharvāngirases (i.e. the Atharva-veda) the mouth.[567] 21. Men regard the branch of nonentity,[568] which is prominent, as if it were paramount; and inferior men, as many as worship thy branch, regard it as an entity. 22. Tell who is that Skambha in whom the Ādityas, Rudras, and Vasus are contained, on whom the past, the future, and all worlds are supported; (23) whose treasure the thirty-three gods continually guard. Who now knows the treasure which ye guard, o gods? 24. Where the gods, the knowers of sacred science (brahma), worship the highest divine essence (brahma);—the priest (brahmā) who knows these [gods] face to face will be a sage. 25. Mighty indeed are those gods who have sprung from nonentity. Men say that that nonentity is one, the highest, member of Skambha (compare v. 10, above). 26. Where Skambha generating, brought the Ancient (purāṇa) into existence, they consider that that Ancient is one member of Skambha, (27) in whose members the thirty-three gods found their several bodies. Some the Aśvins are said to have a honied whip, kaśā madhumatī, with which they are besought to sprinkle the worshippers, or their sacrifice. The Maruts are also said, in R.V. i. 37, 3, and i. 168, 4, to have whips, though they are not said to be honied. In the Nighaṇṭu, however, the sense of speech is ascribed to Kaśā; and a mystical signification is also assigned to the word madhu, honey, which Dadhyanch is said, R.V. i. 116, 12, and i. 117, 22, to have made known to the Aśvins. This is explained by Sāyaṇa on these two passages as meaning that he gave them a Brāhmaṇa revealing the Madhuvidyā; and Mahīdhara, on Vāj. S. 7, 11, understands the kaśā madhumatī as referring to this mystic lore. This Madhukaśā is celebrated at considerable length in A.V. ix. 1, where it is said that she "sprang from the sky, the earth, the air, the sea, fire, and wind," and that "all creatures, worshipping her who dwells in immortality, rejoice in their hearts" (divas pṛithivyāḥ antarikshāt samudrād agner vātād madhukaśā vi jajne | tāṁ chāyitvā amṛitaṁ vasānāṁ hṛidbhih prajāḥ prati nandanti sarvāḥ). In verses 3, 10, she is said to be the "brilliant grand-daughter of the Maruts" (Marutām ugrā naptiḥ), and in verse 4, to be the "mother of the Ādityas, the daughter of the Vasus, the life of creatures, and the centre of immortality" (mātā "dityānāṁ duhitā Vasūnām prāṇaḥ prajānām amṛitasya nābhiḥ).

[567] Compare A.V. ix. 6, 1: "He who clearly knows Brahma, of whom the materials of sacrifice are the joints, the Rik-verses are the backbone, the Sāma-verses the hairs, the Yajus is said to be the heart, and the oblation the covering" (yo vidyād Brahma parūṁshi yasya sambhārāḥ ṛicho yasya anūkyam | sāmāni yasya lomāni yajur hṛidayam uchyate paristaraṇam id haviḥ).

[568] The sense of this verse is obscure, and it does not seem to be very closely connected either with what precedes or with what follows. I have adopted partly the rendering suggested by Professor Aufrecht.

possessors of sacred knowledge know those thirty-three gods. 28. Men know Hiraṇyagarbha [569] to be supreme and ineffable. Skambha in the beginning shed forth that gold (hiraṇya, out of which Hiraṇyagarbha arose) in the midst of the world. 29. In Skambha are contained the worlds, austere fervour, and the ceremonial. Skambha, I clearly know thee to be contained entire in Indra. 30. In Indra are contained the worlds, austere fervour, and the ceremonial. Indra, I clearly know thee to be contained entire in Skambha. 31. (The worshipper) repeatedly invokes the [god who bears the one] name by the name [of the other god] before the sun, before the dawn.[570] When the Unborn first sprang into being, he attained to that independent dominion, than that which nothing higher has ever been. 32. Reverence be to that greatest Brahma, of whom the earth is the basis, the atmosphere the belly, who made the sky his head, (33) of whom the sun and the ever-renewed moon are the eye; who made Agni his mouth, (34) of whom the wind formed two of the vital airs, and the Angirases the eye, who made the regions his organs of sense.[571] 35. Skambha established both these [worlds], earth and sky, the wide atmosphere, and the six vast regions; Skambha pervaded this entire universe. 36. Reverence to that greatest Brahma who, born from toil and austere fervour (tapas), penetrated all the worlds, who made soma for himself alone.[572] 37. How is it that the wind does not rest? How is not the soul quiescent? Why do not the waters, seeking after truth, ever repose? 38. The great being [is] absorbed in austere fervour in the midst of the world, on the surface of the waters. To him all the gods are joined, as the branches around the trunk of a tree. 39. Say who is that Skambha to whom the gods, with hands, feet, voice, ear, eye, present continually an unlimited tribute.[573] 40. By him darkness is dispelled; he is free from evil; in him are all the three luminaries which reside in Prajāpati. 41. He [570] The meaning of this, as suggested by Professor Aufrecht, is, that by invoking Indra, the worshipper really worships Skambha.

[569] See above, p. 355.

[571] Compare Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, vol. v. p. 1616, s.v. prajnāna.

[572] Such is the sense according to Roth, s.v. kevala.

[573] Compare A.V. x. 8, 15 .... "the great being in the midst of the world: to him the rulers of realms bring tribute" (mahad yaksham bhuvanasya madhye tasmai baliṁ rāshṭrabhṛito bharanti).

who knows the golden reed standing in the waters is the mysterious Prajāpati." [574]

I have been favoured with the following note on the subject of A.V. x. 7, by Professor Goldstücker, whom I consulted as to the sense of verse 21 and the idea conveyed by the word Skambha, which forms the subject of the hymn:—

"The sense of skambha is, in my opinion, the same as that given in your Original Sanskrit Texts, vol. iv. pp. 17, 18—skambh and stambh being merely phonetic varieties of the same dhātu — and skambha, therefore, the same as stambha. It is the 'fulcrum,' and in the Atharva-veda hymns, x. 7 and 8, seems to mean the fulcrum of the whole world, in all its physical, religious, and other aspects. The object of the hymn being to inquire what this fulcrum is, from the answer given to the various questions it seems to follow that it is there imagined to be the primitive deity, or the primitive Veda, the word brahman in the neuter implying both. From this primitive Veda, not visibly but really (sat) existing, not only all the gods, worlds, religious rites, etc. (verses 1, 2 ff., 19 ff.) were derived, but also the existing three Vedas (v. 14) and the Atharvan were 'fashioned' (verse 20). This skambha is, therefore, also jyeshṭham brahma (verses 24, 32, 33, 34, 36,—8, 1), and it has a corresponding preæval jyeṣṭham brāhmaṇam (verse 17). Hence, while he who knows the (existing) Veda, has also a knowledge of Brahmā,—he who knows Brahmā and also Prajāpati, and (hence) possesses a knowledge of the preæval Brāhmaṇa portion (of the preæval Veda), may infer (anu) from such knowledge a knowledge of the Skambha or that of the preæval Veda itself (verse 17). This preæval Veda is the 'treasure' which is kept by the gods only (verse 23); hence, the Atharva-veda priest (brahmā), who has a knowledge of those god-guardians of the preæval Veda, has the knowledge (or, he who has such a knowledge, is a (true) Atharva-veda priest, verse 24). From this, then, it would likewise follow that the existing [574] In the R.V. x. 95, 4, 5 (compare Nirukta, iii. 21) and S'atap. Br. xi. 5, 1, 1, the word vaitasa has the sense of membrum virile. Are we to understand the word vetasa (reed) in the same sense here, as denoting a Linga? The words vetaso hiraṇyayaḥ are also found in R.V. iv. 58, 5: "I beLold the streams of butter (ghṛita); in the midst of them is the golden reed (hiraṇyayo vetasaḥ)," which the commentator interprets as meaning ap-sambhavo 'gnir vaidyutaḥ, the "fire of the lightning produced in the aerial waters."

three Vedas are merely portions of the præval Veda, whence they were derived, or, to adhere to the metaphor, branches of that tree-fulcrum (compare verse 38); and, moreover, that while skambha is the reality, these branch vedas are not the reality, though those who do not understand the Skambha, may take them for such (verse 21). 'Some people think that the existing branch (i.e. the existing Vedas—compare verse 20), which is not the reality (asat), is, as it were (iva), the highest (paramam) Veda; on the other hand, those (people) inferior (to the former), who believe that it is the reality (sat), worship thy branch (i.e. those later Vedas).' Here the word iva, in my opinion, implies that the janāḥ of the first half verse have still a doubt, and, therefore, do not identify both the præval and the existing Vedas; whereas, those people introduced with uto (uta-u) are more ignorant in assuming for certain such an identity, and therefore proceed to a practical worship of those Vedas."

I quote in addition some verses from the hymn next in order, A.V. x. 8:—

Yo bhūtaṁ cha bhavyaṁ cha sarvaṁ yaś chādhitishṭhati | svar yasya cha kevalaṁ tasmai jyeshṭhāya Brahmaṇe namaḥ | 2. Skambheneme vishṭabhite dyauś cha bhūmiś cha tishṭhataḥ | Skambhaḥ idaṁ sarvam ātmanvad yat prāṇad nimishach cha yat . . . . | 11. Yad ejati patati yach cha tishṭhati prāṇad aprāṇad nimishach cha yad bhuvat | tad dadhāra pṛithivīm viśvarūpaṁ tat sambhūya bhavaty ekam eva | 12. Anantaṁ vitatam purutrā anantam antavach cha ā samante | te nākapālaś charati vichinvan vidvān bhūtam uta bhavyam asya | 13. Prajāpatiś charati garbhe antar adṛiśyamāno bahudhā vi jāyate | ardhena viśvam bhuvanaṁ jajāna yad asya ardhaṁ katamaḥ sa ketuḥ . . . . | 16. Yataḥ Sūryaḥ udeti astaṁ yatra cha gachhati | tad eva manye 'haṁ jyeshṭhaṁ tad u nātyeti kinchana . . . . | 20. Yo vai te vidyād araṇī yābhyāṁ nirmathyate vasu | sa vidvān jyeshṭham manyeta sa vidyād brāhmaṇam mahat . . . . | 34. Yatra devāścha manushyāścha arāḥ nābhāv iva śritāḥ | apāṁ tvā pushpam pṛichhāmi yatra tan māyayā hitam . . . . 37. Yo vidyāt sūtraṁ vitataṁ yasminn otāḥ prajāḥ imāḥ | sūtraṁ sūtrasya yo vidyāt sa vidyād brāhmaṇam mahat | 38. Vedāhaṁ sūtraṁ vitataṁ yasminn otāḥ prajāḥ imāḥ | sūtraṁ sūtrasyāhaṁ veda atho yad brāhmaṇaṁ mahat . . . . | 43. Puṇḍarīkaṁ navadvāraṁ tribhir guṇebhir āvṛitam | tasmin yad yakṣham ātmanvat tad vai brahmavido viduḥ | 44. Akāmo dhīro amṛitaḥ

svayambhūḥ rasena tripto na kutaśchanonaḥ | tam eva vidvān na bibhāya mṛityor ātmānaṁ dhīram ajaraṁ yuvānam |

"1. Reverence to that greatest Brahma who presides over the past, the future, the universe, and whose alone is the sky. 2. These two [worlds], the sky and the earth, exist, supported by Skambha. Skambha is all this which has soul, which breathes, which winks . . . . 11. That which moves, flies, stands, which has existed breathing, not breathing, and winking; that omniform (entity) has established the earth; that, combined, is one only. 12. The infinite extended on many sides, the infinite and the finite all around,—these two the ruler of the sky proceeds discriminating, knowing the past and the future of this (universe). 13. (=Vāj. San. 31, 19) Prajāpati moves within the womb. Though unseen, he is born in many forms. With the half [of himself] he produced the whole world. What trace is there of the [other] half of him? . . . . 16. I regard as the greatest That whence the sun rises, and That where he sets; That is not surpassed by anything . . . . 20. He who knows the two pieces of firewood from which wealth is rubbed out, he, so knowing, will understand that which is the greatest; he will know the great divine mystery (brāhmaṇa) . . . . 34. I ask thee regarding that flower of the waters, in which gods and men are fixed as spokes in the nave of a wheel,—where that was placed by [divine] skill (māyā) . . . . 37. He who knows that extended thread on which these creatures are strung, who knows the thread of the thread,—he knows that great divine mystery (brāhmaṇa). 38. I know that extended thread on which these creatures are strung. I know the thread of the thread, and hence, too, that which is the great divine mystery . . . . 43. The possessors of divine science (brahma) know that being within the lotus with nine gates, which is enveloped by the three qualities (guṇas).[575] 44. Knowing that soul (ātman) calm, undecaying, young, free from desire, immortal, self-existent, satisfied with the essence, deficient in nothing, a man is not afraid of death."

Some verses in the two preceding hymns speak of the highest, or greatest, Brahma, in whatever sense that term is to be understood.

I am unable to state whether Brahma in the sense of the supreme [575] See note in p. 377.

Deity occurs elsewhere in the Atharva-veda, unless it be in the following passage (xi. 8, 30 ff.): yāḥ āpo yās cha devatāḥ yā Virāḍ Brahmaṇā saha | śarīram Brahma prāviśat śarīre 'dhi Prajāpatiḥ | 31. Sūryaś chakshur vātaḥ prāṇam purushasya vi bhejire | athāsyetaram ātmānaṁ devāḥ prāyachhann Agnaye | 32. Tasmād vai vidvān purusham idam Brahmeti manyate | sarvēṣ hi asmin devatāḥ gāvo goshṭhe ivāsate | "The waters, the gods, Virāj (feminine) with Brahma [entered into man]. Brahma entered his body; Prajāpati [presides] over his body. 31. Sūrya occupied the eye, and Vāta the breath of the man. Then the gods gave his other soul to Agni. 32. Wherefore one who knows the man thinks, 'this is Brahma;' for all the gods are in him, as cows in a cowhouse."

In the Vāj. San. xxiii. 47, we find the following words: kiṁ svit Sūrya-samaṁ jyotiḥ kiṁ samudra-samaṁ saraḥ | .... 48. Brahma Sūrya-samaṁ jyotir dyauḥ samudra-samaṁ saraḥ | "What light is equal to the sun? What lake is equal to the sea?" To which the following verse gives the answer: "Brahma (neuter) is a light equal to the sun. The sky is a lake equal to the sea." The commentator explains Brahma in this passage as standing either for the three Vedas or the supreme Brahma.

In Śatap. Br. x. 6, 5, 9, it is stated in a genealogy of teachers that "Tura Kāvasheya sprang from Prajāpati, and Prajāpati from Brahma, who is self-existent" (Turaḥ Kāvasheyaḥ Prajāpateḥ Prajāpatir Brahmaṇaḥ | Brahma svayambhu). In another passage, already quoted, from the same work (xiii. 7, 1, 1) Brahma (in the neuter), the self-existent, is described as performing tapas, and as sacrificing himself. Ibid. x. 4, 19, a verse is quoted from some hymn which begins, "I celebrate the one great imperishable Brahma who was and is to be" ("Bhūtam bhavishyat prastaumi mahad Brahmaikam aksharam").

Again, in the same work, xi. 3, 3, 1, the same being is represented as giving over other creatures, except the Brahmachārin, or religious student, to death (Brahma vai mṛityave prajāḥ prāyachhat | tasmai brahmachāriṇam eva na prāyachhat). And in xi. 2, 3, 1 ff., there is another text, which is interesting not merely as introducing Brahma, but as containing what is probably one of the oldest extant expositions of the conception of nāma and rūpa (name and form) as comprehending the whole of the phenomenal universe. These two words, as is well known, became at a later period technical terms of the Vedānta philosophy. The passage runs as follows :—

Brahma vai idam agre āsīt | tad devān asṛijata |tad devān sṛishṭvā eshu lokeshu vyārohayad asminn eva loke Agniṁ Vāyum antarikshe divy eva Sūryam | 2. Atha ye ataḥ ūrdhvāḥ lokāś tad yāḥ ataḥ ūrdhvāḥ devatās teshu tāḥ devatāḥ vyārohayat saḥ | yathā ha eva ime āvirlokāḥ imāś cha devatāḥ evam u ha eva te āvirlokās tāścha devatāḥ yeshu tāḥ devatāḥ vyārohayat | 3. Atha Brahma eva parārdham agachhat | tat parārdhaṁ gatvā aikshata "kathaṁ nv imān lokān pratyaveyām" iti | tad dvābhyām eva pratyavaid rūpeṇa chaiva nāmnā cha saḥ | yasya kasya cha nāma asti tan nāma | yasya u api nāma nāsti yad veda rūpeṇa "idam rūpam" iti tad rūpam | etāvad vai idaṁ yāvad rūpaṁ chaiva nāma cha | 4. Te ha ete Brahmaṇo mahatī abhve | sa yo ha ete Brahmaṇo mahatī abhve veda mahad ha eva abhvam bhavati | 5. Te ha ete Brahmaṇo mahatī yakshe | sa yo ha ete Brahmaṇo mahatī yakshe veda mahad ha eva yaksham bhavati | tayor anyataraj jyāyo rūpam eva | yad hy api nāma rūpam eva tat | sa yo hy etayor jyāyo veda jyāyān ha tasmād bhavati yasmāj jyāyān bubhūshati | martyāḥ ha vai agre devāḥ āsuḥ | sa yadā eva te Brahmaṇā āpur atha amṛitāḥ āsuḥ | sa yam manasaḥ āghārayati | mano vai rūpam | manasā hi veda "idaṁ rūpam" iti | tena rūpam āpnoti | atha yaṁ vāchaḥ āghārayati | vāg vai nāma | vāchā hi nāma gṛihṇāti | tena u nāma āpnoti | etāvad vai idaṁ sarvaṁ yāvad rūpaṁ chaiva nāma cha | tat sarvam āpnoti | sarvaṁ vai akshayyam | etena u ha asya akshayyaṁ sukṛitam bhavaty akshayyo lokaḥ |

"1. In the beginning Brahma was this [universe]. He created gods. Having created gods, he placed them in these worlds, viz., in this world Agni, in the atmosphere Vāyu, and in the sky Sūrya ; (2) and in the worlds which were yet higher he placed the gods who are still higher. Such as are these visible worlds and these gods,—even such were those (higher) visible worlds in which he placed those (higher) gods, and such were those gods themselves. 3. Then Brahma proceeded to the higher sphere (parārddha—explained by the commentator to mean the Satya-loka, the most excellent, and the limit, of all the worlds). Having gone to that higher sphere, he considered 'How now can I pervade all these worlds?' He then pervaded them with two things—with form and with name. Whatever has a name, that is name. And then that which has no name—that which he knows by its form, that 'such is its form'—that is form. This [universe] is so much as is (i.e. is co-extensive with) form and name. 4. These are the two great magnitudes (abhve) of Brahma. He who knows these two great magnitudes of Brahma becomes himself a great magnitude. 5. These are the two great manifestations of Brahma. He who knows these two great manifestations of Brahma becomes himself a great manifestation. Of these two one is the greater. viz., form; for whatever is name is also form. He who knows the greater of these two becomes greater than him than whom he wishes to become greater. 6. The gods were originally mortal, but when they were pervaded by Brahma they became immortal. By that which he sends forth from his mind (mind is form; for by mind he knows, 'This is form')—by that, I say, he obtains form. And by that which he sends out from his voice (voice is name; for by voice he seizes name)—by that, I say, he obtains name. This universe is so much as is (i.e. is co-extensive with) form and name. All that he obtains. Now that all is undecaying. Hence he obtains undecaying merit, and an undecaying world."

Compare with this the passages of the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, which will be found at pp. 75 ff. and 165 ff. of Dr. Roer's translation (Bibliotheca Indica, vol. ii. part 3), and the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, iii. 2, 8, p. 164 of English version.

Brahma is also mentioned in the following texts of the Taitt. Br. ii. 8, 8, 9 :—

Brahma devān ajanayat | Brahma viśvam idaṁ jagat | Brahmaṇaḥ kshattraṁ nirmitam | Brahma brāhmaṇaḥ ātmanā | antar asminn ime lokāḥ | 10. Antar viśvam idaṁ jagat | Brahmaiva bhūtānāṁ jyeshṭham | tena ko 'rhati sparddhitum | Brahman devās trayastriṁśat | Brahmann Indra-prajāpatī | Brahman ha viśvā bhūtāni | nāvīvāntaḥ samāhitā |

"Brahma generated the gods. Brahma [generated] this entire world. From Brahma[576] the Kshattriya is formed. Brahma in his essence is the Brāhman.[577] Within him are all these worlds. 10. Within him is this entire universe. It is Brahma who is the greatest of beings. Who [576] Here there is an allusion to the other sense of brahma as devotion, the peculiar function of the Brahman caste.

[577] "For," says the commentator, "in the Brahman's body the supreme Brahma is manifested."

can vie with him? In Brahma the thirty-three gods,—in Brahma, Indra and Prajāpati,—in Brahma all beings are contained, as in a ship."

Again, it is said (iii. 12, 3, 1, quoted above, p. 361, note): "Let us worship with oblations the first-born god, by whom the entire universe which exists is surrounded,—the self-existent Brahma, who is the supreme austere fervour (tapas). It is he who is son, he who is father, he who is mother. Tapas came into existence the first object." Brahma is also mentioned in iii. 12, 9, 7 (where, however, he is described as coming into existence): viśvasṛijaḥ prathamāḥ satram āsata | sahasrasamam prasute nayantaḥ | tato ha jajne bhuvanasya gopāḥ | hiraṇmayaḥ śakunir Brahma nāma | yena sūryas tapati tejaseddhaḥ . . . . | na avedavid manute tam bṛihatam | "The earliest creators of the universe were engaged in a sacrifice for a thousand years . . . . Thence sprang the protector of the world, the golden bird called Brahma, by whom the sun glows, kindled with flame . . . . No one ignorant of the Veda comprehends that great being." Compare Taitt. Br. ii. 8, 9, 6 (quoted above, p. 355), in which Brahma is said to be the forest and the tree out of which the worlds were constructed, and as the basis on which the creator took his stand when upholding the universe.

(8) Prajāpati.

As I have observed above (p. 353), the word prajāpati, "lord of creatures," was originally employed as an epithet of Savitṛi and Soma, as it also was of Hiraṇyagarbha (R.V. v. 121, 10). It afterwards, however, came to denote a separate deity, who appears in three places of the Rig-veda, x. 85, 43 (ā naḥ prajāṁ janayatu Prajāpatiḥ); x. 169, 4; x. 184, 1 (ā sinchatu Prajāpatiḥ), as the bestower of progeny and cattle. This god is also mentioned in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, in a verse (xxxi. 19) which comes in after one in which the great Purusha is celebrated (see above, p. 373). The verse is as follows: Prajāpatiś charati garbhe antar ajāyamāno bahudhā vijāyate | tasya yonim paripaśyanti dhīrās tasmin ha tasthur bhuvanāni viśvā | "Prajāpati moves within the womb. Though he does not become born, he is yet born in many shapes. The wise behold his womb. In him all the worlds stand."[578] Another verse of the V. S. in which he [578] The first half of this verse, as we have seen, is also found in the A.V. x. 8, 13, is referred to is this (xxxii. 5): "Yasmâj jâtaṁ na purâ kinchanaiva yaḥ âbabhûva bhuvanâni viśvâ | Prajâpatiḥ prajayâ saṁrarâṇas trîṇi jyotîṁshi sachate sa shoḍaśî | "He before whom nothing was born, who pervades all worlds, Prajâpati, rejoicing with his offspring, is joined with the three luminaries, as the sixteenth."

Prajâpati is frequently alluded to in the Atharva-veda. Several of these passages have been already cited above, as x. 7, 7, 17, 40, 41; x. 8, 13. Some of the others which I have observed are the following: In xi. 3, 52, he is said to have formed thirty-three worlds out of the oblation of boiled rice (etasmâd vai odanât trayastriṁśataṁ lokân niramimîta Prajâpatiḥ). In xi. 4, 12, he is identified with Prâṇa, or breath (prâṇam âhuḥ Prajâpatim). In xi. 5, 7, he is said, along with Parameshṭhin, to have been generated by the Brahmachârin, or religious student. In xi. 7, 3, he is declared to exist in the Uchhishṭa, or remnant of the sacrifice. And in xix. 53, 8, 10, he is said to have been produced by Kâla, or Time. Most of these passages will be quoted at length further on. It will be seen that in this Veda he is not generally regarded as the supreme or primal deity.

On the subject of Prajâpati, I have elsewhere (in vols. iii. 4; iv. 19–24, and 47–51) brought together a considerable number of passages from the Śatapatha Brâhmaṇa, of which I shall here only repeat the substance, adding any further references which I may have noticed as occurring elsewhere. Prajâpati is sometimes identified with the universe, and described (in the same way as Brahma, or entity, or non-entity are in other places) as having alone existed in the beginning, as the source out of which the creation was evolved, Śatap. Br. ii. 2, 4, 1; vii. 5, 2, 6;[579] xi. 5, 8, 1. (See vol. i. p. 24; vol. iii. p. 4; vol. iv. p. 24.) The same is the case in some other texts adduced by Professor Weber in his Ind. Stud. ix. 477 f., where, however, Vâch is associated with Prajâpati "as his companion in concert with whom, and through with the different reading of adṛiśyamânaḥ, "not being seen," for ajâyamânaḥ, "not being born." The second line runs thus in the A.V.: "With the half he produced the whole world. But what trace is there of his [other] half?"

[579] Śatap. Br. vii. 5, 2, 6: Prajâpatir vai idam agre âsîd ekaḥ eva | so 'kâmayata "annaṁ sṛijeya prajâyeya" iti sa prâṇebhyaḥ eva adhi paśûṁ niramimîta manasaḥ purushaṁ chakshusho 'śvam prâṇâd gâṁ śrotrâd aviṁ vâcho 'jam | tad yad enân prâṇebhyo 'dhi niramimîta tasmâd âhuḥ "prâṇâḥ paśavaḥ" iti | mano vai prâṇânâm prathamam | tad yad manasaḥ purushaṁ niramimîta tasmâd âhuḥ "purushaḥ pra-

whom, he completes his work of creation." [580] Thus it is said in the Kāṭhaka, xii. 5 (and xxvii. 1): Prajāpatir vai idam āsīt | tasya Vāg dvitīyā āsīt | tām mithunaṁ samabhavat | sā garbham adhatta | sā asmād apākrāmat | sā imāḥ prajāḥ asṛijata | sā Prajāpatim eva punaḥ prāvishat | "Prajāpati was this universe. Vāch was a second to him. He associated sexually with her; she became pregnant; she departed from him; she produced these creatures; she again entered into Prajāpati." Again, in the Panchaviṁśa Br. xx. 14, 2, we are told: "Prajāpatir vai idam ekaḥ āsīt | tasya vāg eva svam āsīd vāg dvitīyā | sa aikshata 'imām eva Vāchaṁ visṛijai' | iyaṁ vai idam sarvam vibhavantī eshyati'" iti | sa vāchaṁ vyasṛijata | sā idaṁ sarvaṁ vibhavantī ait | sā ūrdhvā udātanod yathā apāṁ dhārā santatā evam | "Prajāpati alone was this universe. He had Vāch too as his own, as a second to him. He considered 'Let me send forth this Vāch. She will traverse and pervade all this.' He sent her forth: she traversed and pervaded all this: she extended aloft, diffused like a stream of water." In other texts of the Śatap. Br., however, Prajāpati is not represented as the source of creation, but only as one of the subsequent and subordinate agents, created by the gods, vi. 1, 1, 5 (vol. iv. of this work, p. 19 f.), or as springing out of an egg generated by the primeval waters, xi. 1, 6, 1 ff. (vol. iv. 21 f.). He is elsewhere said to have offered sacrifice in order to produce the creation, ii. 4, 4, 1 (vol. iv. 24), and to have been himself half mortal and half immortal, x. 1, 3, 2; x. 1, 4, 1 (vol. iv. p. 47); mortal in his body, but immortal in his breath, and to have performed tapas for a thousand years, to get rid of sin or suffering, pāpman, x. 4, 4, 1 (vol. iv. 51).

thamaḥ paśūnāṁ vīryavattamaḥ" iti | mano vai sarve prāṇāḥ | manasi hi sarve prāṇāḥ pratishṭhitāḥ | tad yad manasaḥ purushaṁ niramimīta tasmād āhuḥ "purushaḥ sarve paśavaḥ" iti purushyasya hy eva ete sarve bhavanti | "Prajāpati alone was at first this [universe]. He desired, "May I create food, and become reproduced.' He fashioned animals from his breaths, a man from his soul, a horse from his eye, a cow from his breath, a sheep from his ear, a goat from his voice. Inasmuch as he created these (animals) from his breaths, they say that 'the breaths are the animals.' The soul (manas) is the first of the breaths; and since he fashioned man from his soul, they say that 'man is the first and strongest of animals.' The soul is all the breaths, for they are all supported in it. Since then he fashioned man from his soul, they say, 'man is all the animals,' for they are all his."

[580] I observe that Professor Weber speaks here of the waters (āpaḥ), the non-existent (asat), and Brahman as each denoting primeval matter (Urmaterie).

Prajāpati may thus be said to have two characters, which, however, are not not kept distinct in the Brāhmaṇa. On the one hand, he is the result of one of the efforts of the Indian intellect to conceive and express the idea of deity in the abstract, as the great first cause of all things; while, on the other hand, he is sometimes described as only a secondary and subordinate divinity, and even treated as only one of the thirty-three deities (as in Śatap. Br. xi. 6, 3, 5. See above, p. 11; and Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. Prajāpati). In the Brāhmaṇa itself (xiv. 1, 2, 18) we have the following text, which expresses two different aspects under which the god was regarded, though, perhaps, these are not identical with the two points of view which I have stated:—Prajāpatir vai esho yajno bhavati | ubhayaṁ vai etat Prajāpatir niruktaś cha aniruktaścha parimitaś cha aparimitaś cha | tad yad yajushā karoti yad eva asya niruktam parimitaṁ rūpaṁ tad asya tena saṁskaroti | atha yat tūshṇīṁ yad eva asya aniruktam aparimitaṁ rūpam tad asya tena saṁskaroti | "Prajāpati is this sacrifice. Prajāpati is both of these two things, declared and undeclared, limited and unlimited. Whatever he (the priest) does with the Yajus text, with that he consecrates that form of Prajāpati which is declared and limited. And what he (the priest) does silently, with that he consecrates the form of Prajāpati, which is undeclared and unlimited." Compare the Maitrī Upanishad, vi. 3 (p. 83 of Professor Cowell's ed.): dve vāva Brahmaṇo rūpe mūrtaṁ cha amūrtaṁ cha | yan mūrtaṁ tad asatyam | yad amūrtaṁ tat satyam | "There are two forms of Brahma, the embodied and the unembodied. The former is unreal, the latter real."

(9) Prāṇa.

A great variety of other deities, of the most heterogeneous character, are celebrated in the Atharva-veda as the possessors of divine power. Though scarcely to be regarded as instances of an abstract conception of the deity, the representations of these gods may be adduced here as illustrations of the later stages of the luxuriant and multiform Vedic mythology and speculation. One of these deities is Prāṇa, life or breath, to whom a hymn (xi. 4) is dedicated, of which the following is a specimen. In some verses he seems to be identified with Parjanya (see above, pp. 140 f.):—

1. Prāṇāya namo yasya sarvam idaṁ vaśe | yo bhūtaḥ sarvasyeśvaro yasmin sarvam pratishṭhitam | 2. Namas te Prāṇa krandāya namas te stanayitnave | namas te Prāṇa vidyute namas te Prāṇa varshate | 3. Yat Prāṇaḥ stanayitnunā abhikrandati oshadhīḥ (compare A.V. viii. 7, 21) | pravīyante garbhān dadhate atho bahvīr vi jāyante | 4. Yat Prāṇaḥ ṛitāv āgate abhikrandati oshadhīḥ | sarvaṁ tadā pramodate yat kincha bhūmyām adhi | 5. Yadā Prāṇo abhyavarshād varsheṇa pṛithivīm mahīm | paśavas tat pra modante "maho vai no bhavishyati" | 6. Abhivrishṭāḥ oshadhayaḥ Prāṇena samavādiran | "āyur vai naḥ prātītaraḥ sarvāḥ naḥ surabhīr akaḥ" | 7. Namas te astu āyate namo 'stu parāyate | namas te Prāṇa tishṭhate āsīnāyota te namaḥ | 9. Yā te Prāṇa priyā tanūr yā te Prāṇa preyasī | atho yad bheshajaṁ tava tasya no dhehi jīvase | 10. Prāṇaḥ prajāḥ anu vaste pitā putram iva priyam | Prāṇo ha sarvasyeśvaro yach cha prāṇati yach cha naḥ | 11. Prāṇo mṛityuḥ Prāṇas takmā Prāṇaṁ devāḥ upāsate | Prāṇo ha satyavādinam uttame loke ā dadhat | 12. Prāṇo Virāṭ Prāṇo Deshṭrī Prāṇaṁ sarve upāsate | Prāṇo ha sūryaś chandramāḥ Prāṇam ahuḥ Prajāpatim | . . . . 15. Prāṇam āhur Mātariśvānaṁ Vāto ha Prāṇaḥ uchyate | Prāṇe ha bhūtam bhavyaṁ cha Prāṇe sarvam pratishṭhitam | 16. Ātharvaṇīr āṅgirasīr daivīr manushyajāḥ uta | oshadhayaḥ prajāyante yadā tvam Prāṇa jinvasi | . . . . 18. Yas te Prāṇa idaṁ veda yasmiṁś chāsi pratishṭhitaḥ | sarve tasmai baliṁ harān amushmin loke uttame | 19. Yathā Prāṇa balihṛitas tubhyaṁ sarvāḥ prajāḥ imāḥ | eva tasmai baliṁ harān yas tvā śṛiṇavat suśravaḥ |

"Reverence to Prāṇa, to whom this universe is subject, who has become the lord of all, on whom all is supported. 2. Reverence, Prāṇa, to thy shout, to thy thunder, to thy lightning, and to thyself when thou rainest. 3. When Prāṇa calls aloud to the plants with thunder, they are impregnated, they conceive, they produce abundantly. 4. When the season has arrived, and Prāṇa calls aloud to the plants, then everything rejoices, which is upon the earth (compare R.V. v. 83, 10, above, p. 140). 5. When Prāṇa has watered the great earth with rain, then the beasts rejoice, and [think] that they shall have strength. 6. When watered by Prāṇa, the plants burst forth [saying], 'Thou hast prolonged our life, thou hast made us all fragrant.' 7. Reverence to thee, Prāṇa, coming, and to thee going, and to thee standing, and to thee sitting . . . . 9. Communicate to us thy dear form, thy dearest, with thy healing power, that we may live. 10. Prāṇa clothes the creatures, as a father his dear son. Prāṇa is the lord of all, both of what breathes and what does not breathe. 11. Prāṇa is death, Prāṇa is fever. The gods worship Prāṇa. Prāṇa places the truth-speaker in the highest world. 12. Prāṇa is Virāj, Prāṇa is Deshṭrī. All worship Prāṇa. Prāṇa is sun and moon. They call Prajāpati Prāṇa . . . . 15. They call Mātariśvan Prāṇa; the Wind is called Prāṇa. The past, the future, everything is supported upon Prāṇa. 16. The plants of Atharvan, of Angiras, of the gods, and of men, grow when thou, Prāṇa, quickenest . . . . 18. Whoever, o Prāṇa, knows this [truth] regarding thee, and on what thou art supported—all will offer him tribute in that highest world. 19. As, o Prāṇa, all these creatures offer thee tribute, so shall they offer tribute in that highest world to him who hears thee with willing ears.' "

(10) Rohita.

Rohita, probably a form of the Fire and of the Sun (though he is also distinguished, in the hymn I am about to quote, from both these gods), is another deity who is highly celebrated in the Atharva-veda, where one hymn (xiii. 1) and parts of others are appropriated to his honour. The following are some of the verses in which his power is described, xiii. 1, 6:—

6. Rohito dyāvā-pṛithivī jajāna tatra tantum Parameshṭhī tatāna | tatra śiśriye Ajaḥ Ekapādo aḍriṁhad dyāvā-pṛithivī balena | 7. Rohito dyāvā-pṛithivī aḍriṁhat tena svaḥ stabhitaṁ tena nākaḥ | tenāntarikshaṁ vimitā rājamsi tena devāḥ amṛitatvam avindan | 13. Rohito yajnasya janitā mukhaṁ cha Rohitāya vāchā śrotreṇa manasā juhomi | Rohitaṁ devāḥ yanti sumanasyamānāḥ | . . . . 14. Rohito yajnaṁ vyadadhād Viśvakarmaṇe tasmāt tejāṁsi upa mā imāny āguḥ | . . . . 25. Yo Rohito vṛishabhas tigmaśringaḥ pari Agnim pari Sūryam babhūva | yo vishṭabhnāti pṛithivīṁ divaṁ cha tasmād devāḥ adhi śrishṭiḥ śrijante | 26. Rohito divam āruhad mahataḥ pari arṇavāt | sarvāḥ ruroha Rohito ruhaḥ | 37. Rohite dyāvā-pṛithivī adhi śrite vasujiti gojiti | . . . . 55. Sa yajnaḥ prathamo bhūto bhavyo ajāyata | tasmād ha jajne idaṁ sarvaṁ yat kincha idaṁ virochate Rohiteṇa ṛishiṇā "bhṛitam |

"Rohita produced heaven and earth: there Parameshṭhin stretched the cord. There Aja Ekapāda was sustained. He established heaven and earth by his force. 7. Rohita established heaven and earth; by him the sky was supported, by him the heaven. By him the atmosphere, by him the regions were meted out. Through him the gods obtained immortality. 13. Rohita is the generator, and the mouth of sacrifice. To Rohita I offer my oblation with voice, ear, and mind. To Rohita the gods resort with gladness .... 14. Rohita offered a sacrifice to Viśvakarman. From it these fires have reached me..... 25. The gods frame creations out of that Rohita who is a sharp-horned bull, who surpasses Agni and Sūrya, who props up the earth and the sky. 26. Rohita ascended the sky from the great ocean; he ascended all ascents.[581] 37. In Rohita, who is the conqueror of wealth and cows .... the heaven and earth are sustained .... 55. He first became the sacrifice, both past and future. From him sprang all this whatever there is which shines, developed by Rohita, the rishi."

In the second hymn of the same book, in which the sun is celebrated, Rohita is also named in the following verses:—

39. Rohitaḥ kālo abhavad Rohito 'gre Prajāpatiḥ | Rohito yajnānām mukhaṁ Rohitah svar ābharat | 40. Rohito loko abhavad Rohito 'tyatapad divam | Rohito raśmibhir bhūmiṁ samudram anu saṁ charat | 41. Sarvāḥ diśaḥ samacharad Rohito 'dhipatir divaḥ | divaṁ samudram ād bhūmiṁ sarvam bhūtaṁ vi rakshati |

"39. Rohita became Time; Rohita formerly became Prajāpati. Rohita is the mouth of sacrifices. Rohita produced the sky. 40. Rohita became the world; Rohita shone beyond the sky; Rohita traversed the earth and ocean with his rays. 41. Rohita traversed all the regions. Rohita is the ruler of the sky. He preserves heaven, ocean, and earth—whatever exists."

And yet the gods are said to have generated Rohita (A.V. xiii. 3, 23: yad Rohitam ajanayanta devāḥ).

(11). Uchhishṭa.

In the hymn which follows divine power is ascribed to the remains of the sacrifice (Uchhishṭa):

A.V. xi. 7, 1: Uchhishṭe nāma rūpaṁ cha uchhishṭe lokaḥ āhitaḥ |

[581] Here, as well as in verses 8 and 9, there is a play on the connection of Rohita with the root, ruh, to "ascend," or "grow."

uchhishṭe Indraś cha Agniś cha viśvam antaḥ samāhitam | 2. Uchhishṭe dyāvā-pṛithivī viśvam bhūtaṁ samāhitam | āpaḥ samudraḥ Uchhishṭe chandramāḥ vātaḥ āhitāḥ | 3. Sann Uchhishṭe asaṁś chobhau mṛityur vājaḥ Prajāpatiḥ | . . . . 4. . . . Brahma viśvasṛijo daśa | nābhim iva sarvataś chakram Uchhishṭe devatāḥ śritāḥ | . . . . 14. Nava bhūmīḥ samudrāḥ Uchhishṭe 'dhi śritāḥ divaḥ | ā suryo bhāti Uchhishṭe ahorātre api tan mayi | 15. Upahavyaṁ Vishūvantam ye cha yajñāḥ guhā hitāḥ | bibhartti bhartā viśvasya Uchhishṭo janituḥ pitā | 16. Pitā janitur Uchhishṭo asoḥ pautraḥ pitāmahaḥ | sa kshiyati viśvasya īśāno vṛishā bhūmyām atighnyaḥ | 17. Ṛitaṁ satyaṁ tapo rāshṭraṁ śramo dharmaś cha karma cha | bhutām bhavishyad Uchhishṭe vīryam lakshmīr balam bale | . . . . 20. Ardhamāsāś cha māsāścha ārtavāḥ ṛitubhiḥ saha | Uchhishṭe ghoshaṇīr āpaḥ stanayitnuḥ śrutir mahī | śarkarāḥ sikatāḥ aśmānaḥ oshadhayo vīrudhas triṇā | 21. Abhrāṇi vidyuto varsham Uchhishṭe saṁśritā śritā | . . . . 23. Yach cha prāṇati prāṇena yach cha paśyati chakshushā | Uchhishṭāj jajnire sarve divi devāḥ diviśritaḥ | 24. Ṛichaḥ sāmāni chhandāṁsi purāṇaṁ yajushā saha | Uchhishṭāj—| 25. Prānāpānau chakshuḥ śrotram akshitiś cha kshitiś cha yā | Uchhishṭāj—| 26. Ānandāḥ modāḥ pramudo abhīmoda-mudaś cha ye | Uchhishṭāj—| 27. Devāḥ pitaro manushyāḥ gandharvāpraraśaś cha ye | Uchhishṭāj |

"In the Uchhishṭa (remains of the sacrifice) are contained name, form,[582] the world, Indra and Agni, the universe, (2) heaven and earth, all that exists, the waters, the sea, the moon, and the wind. 3. In the Uchhishṭa are both the existent and the non-existent (san, asaṁś cha, masculine), death, food (or strength), Prajāpati .... 4. Brahma, the ten creators of all things,[583] the gods, are fixed on all sides to the Uchhishṭa as [the spokes] of a wheel to the nave." So, too, the Rik, Sāman, Yajus, the hymns, the different sorts of sacrifices, and parts of the ceremonial, etc., are comprehended in it (verses 5–13). "14. Nine earths, oceans, skies, are contained in the Uchhishṭa. The sun shines in the Uchhishṭa, and in me the Uchhishṭa are day and night. 15. The Uchhishṭa (masculine), the sustainer of the universe, the father of the generator, upholds the Upahavya, the Vishūvat, and [582] See verse 12 of the hymn to Purusha, A.V. x. 2, above.

[583] Are these the ten Maharshis mentioned by Manu, i. 34 f.? In A V. xi. 1, 1, 3, mention is made of the seven Rishis, the makers of all things (bhūta-kṛitaḥ). See also A.V. xii. 1, 39; and the 1st vol. of this work, pp. 37 and 41, notes.

the sacrifices which are secretly presented. 16. The Uchhishṭa, the father of the generator, the grandson of spirit (asu), the primeval parent, the lord of the universe, the bull, dwells triumphant (?) on the earth. 17. Ceremonial, truth, rigorous abstraction, dominion, effort, righteousness and works, past, future, strength, prosperity, force, reside in the Uchhishṭa, which is force (compare x. 7, 1, above). 20. In the Uchhishṭa are embraced the resounding waters, thunder, the great śruti, pebbles, sand, stones, plants, grass, (21) clouds, lightnings, rain. 23. From the Uchhishṭa sprang whatever breathes and sees, with all the celestial gods, (24) the Ṛich and Sāman verses, metres, Purāṇas, and Yajus, two of the vital airs (prāṇa and apāna), the eye, the ear, imperishableness, perishableness, (26) pleasures, enjoyments, (27) the Fathers, men, Gandharvas, and Apsarases." (Compare A.V. xi. 3, 21.)

(12) Sacrificial Implements, etc., etc.

Similar divine powers are ascribed to different sacrificial ladles in A.V. xviii. 4, 5 : "The Juhū has established the sky, the Upabhṛit the atmosphere, and the Dhruvā the stable earth" (Juhūr dadhāra dyām upabhṛid antarikṣham dhruvā dadhāra pṛithivīm pratishṭhām). In R.V. vi. 51, 8, it is said of namas, "adoration," that it has supported the earth and the sky, and rules the gods" (namo dadhāra pṛithivīm uta dyām | namo devebhyo namaḥ īśe eshām). See also A.V. iv. 35, 3–6, where the odana oblation is said to support heaven and earth, etc.; A.V. xix. 32, 9, where a similar power is ascribed to the sacrificial grass; and A.V. x. 10, 4, 26, 30, 34, where wonderful attributes are predicated of the Vaśā (cow).

(13) Anumati.

In a hymn to Anumati (according to Professor Roth the goddess of good will, as well as of procreation), A.V. vii. 20, she is thus identified with all things (verse 6): "Anumati was all this [universe], whatever stands or walks, and everything that moves. May we, o goddess, enjoy thy benevolence; for thou, Anumati, dost favour us" (anumatiḥ sarvam idam babhūva yat tiṣṭhati charati yad u cha viśvam ejati | tasyās te devi sumatau syāma Anumate anu hi manṣase naḥ).

(14) The Ox, or Kettle.

In A.V. iv. 11, 1, a divine power is ascribed to the "Ox," which, however, Professor Aufrecht thinks can only be regarded as a metaphorical ox, as it has an udder (verse 4), and gives milk; and he supposes a kettle with four legs, the Gharma, to be intended. As that vessel was used for boiling milk and other materials for sacrificial purposes, the allusions in this hymn to milk become intelligible; and possibly the four-legged kettle may, by its form, have suggested the figure of an ox.

1. Anaḍvān dadhāra pṛithivīm uta dyām anaḍvān dadhāra uru antarikṣham | anaḍvān dadhāra pradiśaḥ shaḍ urvīr anaḍvān viśvam bhuvanam ā viveśa | 2. Anaḍvān Indro sa paśubhyo vi chashṭe trayān śakro vi mimīte adhvanaḥ | bhūtam bhavishyad bhuvanā duhānaḥ sarvā devānāṁ charati vratāni | 3. Indro jāto manushyeshu antar gharmas taptaś charati śośuchānaḥ | . . . . 5. Yasya neśe yajnapatir na yajno na asya dātā īśe na pratigrahītā | yo viśvajid viśvabhṛid viśvakarmā gharmaṁ no brūta katamaś chatushpāt |

"The ox has established the earth and the sky; the ox has established the broad atmosphere; the ox has established the six vast regions; the ox has pervaded the entire universe. 2. The ox is Indra. He watches over the beasts. As Śakra (or mighty) he measures the threefold paths. Milking out the worlds, whatever has been or shall be, he performs all the functions of the gods. 3. Being born as Indra among men, the kindled and glowing kettle works . . . . 5. That which neither the lord of the sacrifice nor the sacrifice rules, which neither the giver nor the receiver rules, which is all-conquering, all-supporting, and all-working,—declare to us the kettle, what quadruped it is."

(15) The Brahmachārin.

The hymn to be next quoted ascribes very astonishing powers to the Brahmachārin, or religious student. Some parts of it are obscure, but the translation I give, though imperfect, will convey some idea of the contents:—

A.V. xi. 5, 1: Brahmachārī ishnaṁś charati rodasī ubhe tasmin devāḥ sammanaso bhavanti | sa dadhāra pṛithivīṁ divaṁ cha sa āchāryaṁ tapasā pipartti | 2. Brahmachāriṇam pitaro devajanāḥ pṛithag devāḥ

anusaṁyanti sarve | gandharvāḥ enam anvāyan trayastriṁśat triśatāḥ shaṭsahasrāḥ | sarvān sa devān tapasā piparti | 3. Āchāryaḥ upanayamāno brahmachāriṇaṁ kṛiṇute garbhe antaḥ | taṁ rātrīs tisraḥ udare bibharti taṁ jātaṁ drashṭum abhisaṁyanti devāḥ | 4. Iyaṁ samit pṛithivī dyaur dvitīyā utāntarikshaṁ samidhā pṛiṇāti | brahmachārī samidhā mekhalayā śramena lokāṁs tapasā piparti | 5. Pūrvo jāto Brahmaṇo brahmachārī gharmaṁ vasānas tapasodatishṭhat | tasmāj jātam brāhmaṇam Brahma jyeshṭhaṁ devāś cha sarve amṛitena sākam | 6. Brahmachārī eti samidhā samiddhaḥ kārshṇaṁ vasāno dīkshito dirghaśmaśruḥ | sa sadyaḥ eti pūrvasmād uttaraṁ samudraṁ lokān sangṛibhya muhur ācharikrat | 7. Brahmachārī janayan brahma apo lokam Prajāpatim Parameshṭhinaṁ Virājam | garbho bhūtvā amṛitasya yonāv Indro ha bhūtvā asurāṁs tatarda | 8. Āchāryas tataksha nabhasī ubhe ime urvī gambhīre pṛithivīṁ divam cha | te rakshati tapasā brahmachārī tasmin devāḥ sammanaso bhavanti | 9. Imām bhūmim pṛithivīm brahmachārī bhikshām ā jabhāra prathamo divaṁ cha | te kṛitvā samidhāv upāste tayor ārpitā bhuvanāni viśvā | 10. Arvāg anyaḥ paro anyo divaspṛishṭhād guhā nidhī nihitau brāhmaṇasya | tau rakshati tapasā brahmachārī tat kevalaṁ kṛiṇute brahma vidvān | 16. Āchāryo brahmachārī brahmachārī Prajāpatiḥ | Prajāpatir vi rājati virāḍ Indro 'bhavad vaśī | 17. Brahmacharyeṇa tapasā rājā rāshṭraṁ vi rakshati | āchāryo brahmacharyeṇa brahmachāriṇam ichhate | 18. Brahmacharyeṇa kanyā yuvānaṁ vindate patim | anaḍvān bramacharyeṇa aśvo ghāsaṁ jigīshati | 19. Brahmacharyeṇa tapasā devāḥ mṛityum apāghnata | Indro ha brahmacharyeṇa devebhyaḥ svar ābharat | 20. Oshadhayo bhūtabhavyam ahorātre vanaspatiḥ | saṁvatsaraḥ saha ṛitubhis te jātāḥ brahmachāriṇaḥ | 21. Pārthivāḥ divyāḥ paśavaḥ āraṇyāḥ grāmyāś cha ye | apakshāḥ pakshiṇaś cha ye te jātāḥ brahmachārinaḥ | 22. Pṛithak sarve prājāpatyāḥ prāṇān ātmasu bibhrati | tān sarvān brahma rakshati brahmachāriṇi ābhṛitam . . . . 26. Tāni kalpayad brahmachārī salilasya pṛishṭhe tapo 'tishṭhat tapyamānaḥ samudre |

"The Brahmachārin works, quickening both worlds. The gods are joyful in him. He has established the earth and the sky. He satisfies his āchārya (religious teacher) by tapas. 2. The Fathers, the heavenly hosts, all the gods separately, follow after him, with the 6333 Gandharvas. He satisfies all the gods by tapas. 3. The āchārya, adopting him as a disciple, makes him a Brahmachārin even in the womb, and supports him in the belly for three nights. When he is born the gods assemble to see him. 4. This piece of fuel is the earth (compare verse 9), the second is the sky, and he satisfies the air with fuel.[584] The brahmachārin satisfies the worlds with fuel, with a girdle, with exertion, with tapas. 5. Born before Brahma, the Brahmachārin arose through tapas, clothed with heat. From him was produced divine knowledge (brāhmaṇa), the highest Brahma,[585] and all the gods, together with immortality. 6. The Brahmachārin advances, lighted up by fuel, clothed in a black antelope's skin, consecrated, long-bearded. He moves straightway from the eastern to the northern ocean, compressing the worlds, and again expanding them. 7. The Brahmachārin, generating divine science, the waters, the world, Prajāpati, Parameshṭhin, Virāj, having become an embryo in the womb of immortality, having become Indra, crushed the Asuras. 8. The Āchārya has constructed both these spheres, broad and deep, the earth and the sky. The Brahmachārin preserves them by tapas. In him the gods are joyful. 9. It was the Brahmachārin who first produced this broad earth and the sky as an alms. Making them two pieces of fuel (compare verse 4), he worships. In them all creatures are contained. 10. The two receptacles of divine knowledge are secretly deposited, the one on this side, the other beyond the surface of the sky. The Brahmachārin guards them by tapas. Wise, he appropriates that divine knowledge as his exclusive portion . . . . 16. The Brahmachārin is the Āchārya, the Brahmachārin is Prajāpati; Prajāpati shines (vi rājati); the shining (Virāj) became Indra, the powerful. 17. Through self-restraint and tapas a king protects his dominions. Through self-restraint an Āchārya seeks after a Brahmachārin. 18. By self-restraint a damsel obtains a young man as her husband. By self-restraint an ox and a horse seek to gain fodder. 19. By self-restraint and tapas the gods destroyed death. By self-restraint Indra acquired heaven [584] See Āśvalāyana's Gṛihya Sūtras, ed. Stenzler, pp. 12 ff., where the initiation of the Brahmachārin, or religious student, is described. Part of the ceremony is that he throws fuel (samidh) on the fire, which he invokes with texts. This ritual is probably alluded to in the hymn before us. The Brahmachārin is also mentioned in R.V. x. 109, 5, where he said to be one member of the gods (sa devānām bhavati ekam angam).

[585] The words brahma jyeshṭham, employed in A.V. x. 7, 32 ff., and x. 8, 1, appear to designate a personal being (see above). The same may be the case here.

from [or for] the gods. 20. Plants, whatever has been, whatever shall be, day and night, trees, the year, with the seasons, have been produced from the Brahmachārin. 21. Terrestrial and celestial beings, beasts, both wild and tame, creatures without wings and winged, have been produced from the Brahmachārin. 22. All creatures which have sprung from Prajāpati have breath separately in themselves; all of these are preserved by divine knowledge (brahma), which is produced in the Brahmachārin . . . . 26. These things the Brahmachārin formed; on the surface of the water he stood performing tapas[586] in the sea."

The Taitt. Br. iii. 10, 11, 3, tells a story illustrative of the great virtue ascribed to brahmacharyya, or religious self-restraint:—

Bharadvājo ha tribhir āyurbhir brahmacharyam uvāsa | taṁ ha jīrṇiṁ sthaviraṁ śayānam Indraḥ upavrajya uvācha "Bharadvāja yat te chaturtham āyur dadyāṁ kim etena kuryāḥ" iti | "brahmacharyam eva enena chareyam" iti ha uvācha | taṁ ha girirūpān avijnātān iva darśayānchakāra | teshāṁ ha ekaikasmād mushṭim ādade | sa ha uvācha "Bharadvāja" ity āmantrya "vedāḥ vai ete | anantāḥ vai vedāḥ | etad vai etais tribhir āyurbhir anvavochathāḥ | atha te itarad ananūktam eva | ehi imaṁ viddhi | ayaṁ vai sarvavidyā" iti |

"Bharadvāja practised brahmacharyya during three lives. Indra, approaching him when he was lying decayed and old, said: 'Bharadvāja, if I give thee a fourth life, what wilt thou do with it?' He answered: 'I will use it only to practise brahmacharyya.' He showed him three objects, as it were unknown, in the shape of mountains. From each of these he took a handful. He said, addressing him: 'Bharadvāja, these are the Vedas; the Vedas are infinite. This is what thou hast recited during these three lives. But other things have remained undeclared by thee. Now learn this (Agni Sāvitra). This is universal knowledge.'"

(16) Kāma.

We have already seen above, that in R.V. x. 129, 4, desire is said to have been the first movement that arose in the One after it had come into life through the power of fervour or abstraction. This Kāma, or desire, not of sexual enjoyment, but of good in general, is celebrated in the following curious hymn (A.V. ix. 2) as a great power [586] Compare A.V. x. 7, 38, quoted above.

superior to all the gods; and is supplicated for deliverance from enemies. Desire, as the first step towards its own fulfilment, must be considered as here identified with successful desire, or with some deity regarded as the inspirer and accomplisher of the wishes of his votaries:—[587]

1. Sapatna-hanam ṛishabham ghṛitena Kāmaṁ śikshāmi havishā ājyena | nīchaiḥ sapatnān mama pādaya tvam abhishṭuto mahatā vīryeṇa | 2. Yad me manaso na priyaṁ na chakshusho yan me babhasti[588] nābhinandati | tad dushshvapynam pratimunchāmi sapatne Kāmaṁ stutvā ud aham bhideyam | 3. Dushshapnyaṁ Kāma duritaṁ cha Kāma apra-

[587] In A.V. iii. 29, 7, some light is thrown upon the process by which Kāma came to be regarded as a deity. We there read: "Who hath given this, and to whom? Kāma has given it to Kāma (i.e. the inspirer, or fulfiller, of desire, has given it to desire). Kāma is the giver (i.e. the inspirer, or fulfiller, of desire); Kāma is the receiver. Kāma has entered into the ocean. Through Kāma I receive thee, Kāma, this is thine" (kaḥ idaṁ kasmai adāt kāmaḥ kāmāya adāt | kāmo dātā kāmaḥ pratigrahītā kāmaḥ samudram ā viveśa | kāmena tvā pratigṛihṇāmi kāma etat te). This verse is, I find, quoted by Mr. Colebrooke, Mis. Ess. i. 210, as a text forming part of the Indian marriage ritual. See also Taitt. Br. ii. 2, 5, 5f. The allusion here made to Kāma entering the ocean recalls the fact that Agni is often said to be produced from or exist in the waters (R.V. x. 2, 7; x. 51, 3; x. 91, 6; A.V. i. 33, 1; iii. 21, 1). And in A.V. iii. 21, 4, Kāma is distinctly identified with Agni: "The god (Agni), who is omnivorous, whom they call Kāma, whom they call the giver and the receiver, who is wise, strong, pre-eminent, unconquerable;—to these Agnis let this oblation be offered" (yo devo viśvād yam u kāmam ahur yaṁ dātaram pratigrihṇantam āhuḥ | yo dhīraḥ śakraḥ paribhūr adābhyas tebhyo agnibhyo hutam astv etat). See also S.V. ii. 1060 (=A.V. vi. 36, 3; Vāj. Sanh. xii. 117) agniḥ priyeshu dhāmasu kāmo bhūtasya bhavyasya | saṁrāḍ eko virājati | "Agni, Kāma, the one monarch of things past and future, shines in his dear abodes." See also Taitt. Sanh. ii. 2, 3, 1. Agnaye Kāmāya "To Agni Kāma, etc." See also the passages cited by Professor Weber, Ind. Stud. v. 225, f. In some parts of the hymn before us, (A.V. ix. 2) the same identification of Kāma with Agni appears to be made. Thus in v. 1, Kāma, and in v. 8, Kāma and other gods, are said to be worshipped with butter, an oblation especially appropriate to Agni. In vv. 4 and 9, Agni is called upon to burn the dwellings of the worshipper's enemies, whom Kāma had just been besought to destroy. Again, in v. 25, the auspicious bodies, or manifestations (tanvaḥ) of Kāma are referred to just as those of Agni are in other hymns (as, R.V. x. 16, 4: A.V. xviii. 4, 10; comp. Vāj. S. xvi. 2). On the other hand, however, Agni is specified separately from Kāma in v. 6; and in v. 24, Kama is represented as superior to Agni, as well as to Vāta, Sūrya, and Chandramas (the moon). In v. 9, Indra and Agni are mentioned along with Kāma, though the verb with which these gods are connected is in the dual. But although in these verses Agni and Kāma are distinguished from each other, Kāma may be there looked upon as a superior form of the other deity.

[588] Compare Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. bhas.

jastām asvagatām avartim | ugraḥ īśānaḥ prati muncha tasmin yo asmabhyam aṁhūraṇā chikitsāt | 4. Nudasva Kāma praṇudasva Kāma avarttim yantu mama ye sapatnāḥ | teshāṁ nuttānām adhamā tamāṁsi Agne vāstūni nirdaha tvam | 5. Sā te Kāma duhitā dhenur uchyate yām āhur Vāchaṁ kavayo Virājam | tayā sapatnān pari vriṅdhi ye mama pari enān prāṇaḥ paśavo jīvanaṁ vṛiṇaktu | . . . . 7. Viśve devāḥ mama nātham bhavantu sarve devāḥ havam ā yantu me imam | 8. Idam ājyad ghṛitavaj jushāṇāḥ Kāma-jyeshṭhāḥ iha mādayadhvam | kṛiṇvanto mahyam asapatnam eva | 9. Indrāgnī Kāma sarathaṁ hi bhūtvā nīchaiḥ sapatnān mama pādayāthaḥ | teshām pannānām adhamā tamāṁsi Agne vāstūni anu nirdaha tvam | 10. Jahi tvaṁ Kāma mama ye sapaṭnāḥ andhā tamāṁsi ava pādayainān | nirindriyāḥ arasāḥ santu sarve mā te jīvishuḥ katamach chanāhaḥ | 11. Avadhīt Kāmo mama ye sapatnāḥ uruṁ lokam akarad mahyam edhatum | mahyaṁ namantām pradiśaś chatasro mahyaṁ shaḍ urvīr ghṛitam ā vahantu | 12. Te adharānchaḥ pra plavantāṁ chhinnā naur iva bandhanāt | na sāyaka-praṇuttānām punar asti nivartanam | . . . . 16. Yat te Kāma śarma trivarūtham udbhu brahma varma vitatam anativyādhyaṁ kṛitam | tena sapatnān—| 17. Yena devāḥ asurān prāṇudanta yenendro dasyūn adhamaṁ tamo ninaya | tena tvaṁ Kāma mama ye sapatnās tān asmāl lokāt pra ṇudasva dūram | 19. Kāmo jajne prathamo nainaṁ devāḥ āpuḥ pitaro na martyāḥ | tatas tvam asi jyāyān viśvahā mahāṁs tasmai te Kāma namaḥ it kṛiṇomi | 20. Yāvatī dyāvā-pṛithivī varimṇā yāvad āpaḥ sishyadur yāvad Agniḥ | tataḥ—| 21. Yāvatīr diśaḥ pradiśo vishūchīr yāvatīr āśāḥ abhichakshaṇāḥ divaḥ | tataḥ—| 22. Yāvatīr bhṛingāḥ jatvaḥ kurūravo yāvatīr vaghāḥ vṛikshasarpyo babhūvuḥ | tataḥ—| 23. Jyāyān nimishato 'shi tishṭhato jyāyān samudrād asi Kāma Manyo—| 24. Na vai Vātaś chana Kāmam āpnoti nāgniḥ sūryo nota chandramāḥ | tataḥ—| 25. Yās te śivās tanvaḥ Kāma bhadrāḥ yābhiḥ satyam bhavati yad vṛiṇīshe | tābhis tvam asmān abhisaṁviśasva anyatra pāpīr apa veśaya dhiyaḥ |

"1. With oblations of butter I worship Kāma, [589] the mighty slayer of enemies. Do thou, when laúded, beat down my foes by thy great might. 2. The sleeplessness which is displeasing to my mind and eye, [589] In the Taitt. Br. ii. 8, 8, 8, S'raddhā, or faith, is said to be the mother of Kāma (śraddhāṁ kāmasya mātaram). This, however, the commentator explains as signifying merely that she is the means of obtaining all desired rewards, since no action takes place unless men have faith (sā iyam ichhā viśvāsa-vyatirekena kasyāpi vyavahārasya abhāvād "Kāmasya mātaram" kāmyamānaphalasya utpādikām).

which harasses and does not delight me, that sleeplessness I let loose upon my enemy. Having praised Kāma, may I rend him. 3. Kāma, do thou, a fierce lord, let loose sleeplessness, misfortune, childlessness, homelessness, and want, upon him who designs us evil. 4. Send them away, Kāma, drive them away; may they fall into misery, those who are my enemies. When they have been hurled into the nethermost darkness, do thou, Agni, burn up their dwellings. 5. That daughter of thine, Kāma, is named the Cow, which sages call Vāch Virāj. By her drive away my enemies. May breath, cattle, life, forsake them. . . . 7. May all the gods be my defence; may all the gods attend upon this my invocation. 8. Ye [gods], of whom Kāma is the highest, accepting this oblation of butter, be joyful in this place, granting me deliverance from my enemies. 9. Indra, Agni, and Kāma, mounted on the same chariot, hurl ye down my foes; when they have fallen into the nethermost darkness, do thou, Agni, burn up their dwellings. 10. Kāma, slay my enemies; cast them down into thick (literally, blind) darkness. Let them all become destitute of power and vigour, and not live a single day. 11. Kāma has slain my enemies, has made for me wide room and prosperity. May the four regions bow down to me, and the six worlds bring fatness. 12 (=A.V. iii. 6, 7). Let them (my enemies) float downwards like a boat severed from its moorings. There is no return for those who have been put to flight by our arrows . . . . 16. With that triple and effectual protection of thine, o Kāma, that spell (brahma), which has been extended [in front of us as] armour, and made impenetrable, do thou drive away, etc. (as in v. 5). 17. Do thou, Kāma, drive my enemies far from this world by that [same weapon, or amulet] wherewith the gods repelled the Asuras, and Indra hurled the Dasyus into the nethermost darkness.[590] (Verse 18 is nearly a repetition of verse 17.) 19. Kāma was born the [590] In A.V. viii. 5, 3, mention is made of a jewel or amulet, "by which Indra slew Vṛittra, overcame the Asuras, and conquered heaven and earth, and the four regions" (anenendro maṇinā vṛittram ahann anenāsurān parābhāvayad manīshī). And in A.V. viii. 8, 5 ff. we are told of another instrument of offence belonging to Indra, in addition to the thunderbolt, arrows, and hook, described in the R V. (see above, p. 87 f.) viz., a net. 5. "The air was his net; and the great regions the rods for extending the net. Enclosing within it the host of the Dasyus, S'akra overwhelmed it. 7. Great is the net of thee who art great, O heroic Indra! . . . . Within it enclosing them, S'akra slew a hundred, a thousand, ten thousand, a hundred millions of Dasyus, with his army."

first. Him neither gods, nor Fathers, nor men, have equalled. Thou art superior to these, and for ever great. To thee, Kāma, I offer reverence. 20. Wide as are the heaven and earth in extent; far as the waters have swept; far as Agni [has blazed];—thou art yet superior to these (as in verse 19). 21. Great as are the regions and the several intermediate regions, the celestial tracts, and the vistas of the sky,—thou art yet superior, etc. 22. As many bees, bats, reptiles, vaghās (?), and tree-serpents as there are, thou art yet superior, etc. 23. Thou art superior to all that winks, or stands,—superior to the sea, O Kāma, Manyu. Thou art superior, etc. 24. Even Vāta (the Wind) does not vie with Kāma, nor does Agni, nor Sūrya, nor Chandramas (the Moon). Thou art superior, etc. 25. With those auspicious and gracious forms of thine, o Kāma, through which that which thou choosest becomes real,—with them do thou enter into us, and send malevolent thoughts away somewhere else."

A.V. xix. 52, is another hymn addressed to the same deity.

It is well known that Greek mythology connected Eros, the god of love, with the creation of the universe, somewhat in the same way as Kāma is associated with it in R.V. x. 129, 4 (see above, p. 357). Thus Plato says in the Symposium (sec. 6):

Γονῆς γὰρ Ἔρωτος οὔτ' εἰσὶν οὔτε λέγονται ὑπ' οὐδενὸς οὔτε ἰδιώτου οὔτε ποιητοῦ, ἀλλ' Ἡσίοδος πρῶτον μὲν χάος φησὶ γενέσθαι,

"αὐτὰρ ἔπειτα
γαῖ' εὐρύστερνος, πάντων ἕδος ἀσφαλὲς αἰεί, ἠδ' Ἔρος."

Φησὶ μετὰ τὸ χάος δύο τούτω γενέσθαι, γῆν τε καὶ Ἔρωτα. Παρμενίδης δὲ τὴν γένεσιν λέγει, "πρώτιστον μὲν Ἔρωτα θεῶν μητίσατο παντων." Ἡσίοδῳ δὲ καὶ Ἀκουσίλεως ὁμολογεῖ. οὕτω πολλαχόθεν ὁμολογεῖται ὁ Ἔρως ἐν τοῖς πρεσβύτατοις εἶναι.

"Eros neither had any parents, nor is he said by any unlearned man or by any poet to have had any. But Hesiod declares that chaos first arose, and 'then the broad-bosomed earth, ever the firm abode of all things, and Eros.' He says that, after chaos, these two things were produced, the earth and Eros. Parmenidēs, too, speaks thus of the creation, 'He devised Eros the first of all the gods.' And Acusilaus also agreed with Hesiod. From so many quarters is Eros admitted to be one of the oldest deities." (See the article Eros in Dr. Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology, and the authorities there referred to.)

In another hymn of the A.V. (iii. 25), Kāma, like the Eros of the Greeks, and Cupid of the Latins, is described as the god of sexual love. The commencement of it is as follows:

Uttudas tvā· uttudatu mā dhṛithāḥ śayane sve | ishuḥ Kāmasya yā bhīmā tayā vidhyāmi tvā hṛidi | 2. Ādhīparṇām Kāma-śalyām ishuṁ sankalpa-kulmalām | tāṁ susannatāṁ kṛitvā Kāmo vidhyatu tvā hṛidi | 3. Yā plīkānaṁ śoshayati Kāmasyeshuḥ susannatā | . . . . tayā vidhyāmi tvā hṛidi |

"1. May the disquieter disquiet thee. Do not rest upon thy bed. With the terrible arrow of Kāma I pierce thee in the heart. 2. May Kāma, having well directed the arrow which is winged with pain, barbed with longing, and has desire for its shaft, pierce thee in the heart. 3. With the well-aimed arrow of Kāma, which dries up the spleen, ... I pierce thee in the heart." [591]

(17) Kāla, or Time.

In the next two remarkable hymns we find an altogether new doctrine, as Time is there described as the source and ruler of all things:—

A.V. xix. 54:[592] 1. Kālo aśvo vahati saptaraśmiḥ sahasrāksho ajaro bhūriretāḥ | tam ā rohanti kavayo vipaśchitas tasya chakrā bhuvanāni viśvā | 2. Sapta chakrā vahati Kālaḥ esha saptāsya nābhīr amṛitaṁ nu akshaḥ | sa imā viśvā bhuvanāni arvāṅ Kālaḥ sa īyate prathamo nu devaḥ | 3. Pūrṇaḥ kumbho adhi Kāle āhitas taṁ vai paśyamo bahudhā nu santam | sa imā viśvā bhuvanāni pratyaṅ Kālaṁ tam āhuḥ parame vyoman | 4. Sa eva sam bhuvanāni ābharat sa eva sam bhuvanāni paryait | pitā sann abhavat putraḥ eshāṁ tasmād vai nānyat param asti tejaḥ | 5. Kāl' 'mum divam ajanayat Kālaḥ imāḥ pṛithivīr uta | Kālena bhūtam bhavyaṁ cha ishitaṁ ha vi tishṭhate | 6. Kālo bhūmim asṛijata Kāle tapati sūryaḥ | Kāle ha viśvā bhūtāni Kāle chakshur vi paśyati | 7. Kāle manaḥ Kāle prāṇaḥ Kāle nāma samāhitam | Kālena sarvāḥ

[591] This hymn is translated by Professor Weber in his Indische Studien, v. 224 ff., from whose version I have derived assistance.

[592] A great deal is said about the potency of Kāla, or Time, in the S'ānti-parva of the Mahābhārata, vv. 8106, 8112, 8125 ff., 8139–8144, 8758, 9877 f., 10060.

nandanti āgatena prajāḥ imāḥ | 8. Kāle tapaḥ Kāle jyeshṭhaṁ Kāle Brahma samāhitam | Kālo ha sarvasyeśvaro yaḥ pitā "sīt Prajāpateḥ | 9. Teneshitaṁ tena jātaṁ tad u tasmin pratishṭhitam | Kālo ha Brahma bhūtvā bibharti Parameshṭhinam | 10. Kālaḥ prajāḥ asṛijata Kālo agre Prajāpatim | Svayambhūḥ Kaśyapaḥ Kālāt tapaḥ Kālād ajāyata |

"1. Time carries [us] forward, a steed, with seven rays, a thousand eyes, undecaying, full of fecundity. On him intelligent sages mount; his wheels are all the worlds. 2. This Time moves on seven wheels; he has seven naves; immortality is his axle. He is at present all these worlds. Time hastens onward, the first god. 3. A full jar is contained in Time. We behold him existing in many forms. He is all these worlds in the future. They call him Time in the highest heaven. 4. It is he who drew forth the worlds, and encompassed them. Being the father, he became their son. There is no other power superior to him. 5. Time generated the sky and these earths. Set in motion by Time, the past and the future subsist. 6. Time created the earth; by Time the sun burns; through Time all beings [exist]; through Time the eye sees. 7. Mind, breath, name, are embraced in Time. All these creatures rejoice when Time arrives. 8. In Time rigorous abstraction, in Time the highest, in Time divine knowledge, is comprehended. Time is lord of all things, he who was the father of Prajāpati. 9. That [universe] has been set in motion by him, produced by him, and is supported on him. Time, becoming divine energy, supports Parameshṭhin. 10. Time produced creatures; Time in the beginning [formed] Prajāpati. The self-born[593] Kaśyapa sprang from Time, and from Time [sprang] rigorous abstraction (tapas)."

A.V. xix. 54, 1. Kālād āpaḥ samabhavan Kālād brahma tapo diśaḥ | Kālenodeti Sūryo Kāle ni viśate punaḥ | 2. Kālena vātaḥ pavate Kālena [593] The word which I have rendered "self-born" is svayambhū. This term must in certain cases be rendered by "self-existent," as in Manu i. 6, 11, where it is applied to the undeveloped primeval Deity, the creator of Brahmā. In other places, however, Brahmā himself, the derived creator, is called svayambhū, as in M. Bh. S'antip. v. 7569, though he had previously (in v. 7530) been declared to have been born in a lotus sprung from the navel of Sankarshaṇa, the first-born offspring (v. 7527) of Vishṇu. The same epithet is applied to Brahmā in the Bhāg. Pur. iii. 8, 15. But in fact, Svayambhū is well known to be one of the synonyms of Brahmā, though that god is nowhere represented as an underived, self-existent being. This word must therefore be regarded as not necessarily meaning anything more than one who comes into existence in an extraordinary and supernatural manner.

Pṛithivī mahī | Dyaur mahī Kāle āhitā | 3. Kāle ha bhūtam bhavyaṁ cha mantro ajanayat purā | Kālād ṛichaḥ samabhavan yajuḥ Kālād ajāyata | 4. Kāle yajñaṁ samairayan devebhyo bhāgam akshitam | Kāle gandharvāpsarasaḥ Kāle lokāḥ pratishṭhitāḥ | 5. Kāle 'yam angirāḥ divo atharvā chādhi tishṭhataḥ | imaṁ cha lokam paramaṁ cha lokam puṇyāṁś cha lokān vidhṛitīś cha puṇyāḥ | 6. Sarvān lokān abhijitya brahmaṇā Kālaḥ sa īyate paramo nu devaḥ |

"1. From Time the waters were produced, together with divine knowledge, tapas, and the regions. Through Time the sun rises and again sets. 2. Through Time the wind blows; through time the earth is vast. The great sky is embraced in Time. 3. Through Time the hymn formerly produced both the past and the future. From Time sprang the Rik verses. The Yajus was produced from Time. 4. Through Time they created the sacrifice, an imperishable portion for the gods. On Time the Gandharvas and Apsarases, on Time the worlds are supported. 5, 6. Through Time this Angiras and Atharvan rule over the sky. Having through divine knowledge conquered both this world, and the highest world, and the holy worlds, and the holy ordinances, yea all worlds, Time moves onward as the supreme god."

Rohita is identified with Kāla, A.V. xiii. 2, 39.

The conception of Kāla in these hymns is one which, if taken in its unmodified shape, would have been esteemed heretical in later times.[594] Thus, among the several forms of speculation which are mentioned at the commencement of the Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, for the purpose, no doubt, of being condemned as erroneous, is one which regards Kāla, or Time, as the origin of all things. The line in which these different systems are mentioned is as follows: kālaḥ svabhāvo niyatir yadṛichchhā bhūtāni yoniḥ purushaḥ. It is the verse referred to in the following note of Professor Wilson, in vol. i. p. 19 of his Vishṇu Purāṇa (Dr. Hall's ed.): "The commentator on the Moksha Dharma (a part of the Śānti-parva of the M. Bh.) cites a passage from the Vedas, which he understands to allude to the different theories of the cause of creation (then follows the line just quoted); time, inherent nature, consequence of acts, self-will, elementary atoms, matter and spirit, asserted severally by the astrologers, the Buddhists, the Mīmānsakas, the logicians, the Sānkhyas, and the Vedāntins." [595]

[594] The M. Bh., however, Anuśāsana-parva, verses 51–56, makes Mṛityu, or death, declare that all nature, all creatures, the world itself, all actions, cessations and changes, derive their essential character from Time, while the gods themselves, including Vishṇu, are, time after time, created and destroyed by the same power (sarve kālena sṛijyante hriyante cha punaḥ punaḥ).

The Maitrī Upanishad also celebrates Kāla, vi. 14 f., declaring that the sun is its source (sūryo yoniḥ kālasya). We find there the following verse: kālāt sravanti bhūtāni kālād vṛiddhim prayānti cha | kāle chāstaṁ niyachhanti kālo mūrtir amūrtimān | "By Time creatures waste, by Time they increase; in Time they set: Time is a formless form." The writer proceeds: Dve vāva Brahmaṇo rūpe Kālaś cha Akālaś cha | atha yaḥ prag Ādityāt so 'kālo 'kālaḥ | atha yaḥ Ādityādyaḥ sa Kālaḥ sakālaḥ | "There are two forms of Brahma, Time and No-time. That which is before the sun is No-time, devoid of parts; and that which is subsequent to the sun is Time, with parts."

Manu (i. 24) declares Kāla (Time) to have been one of the things created by Brahmā. But though not admitted as itself the origin of all things, Kāla is, nevertheless, recognized by the author of the Vishṇu Puraṇa as one of the forms of the Supreme Being. See pp. 18, 19, and 25, of Dr. Hall's edition of Wilson's Vishṇu Puraṇa, and the note in p. 19, already referred to, where Professor Wilson says, "Time is not usually enumerated in the Puraṇas as an element of the 'first cause;' but the Padma Purāṇa and the Bhāgavata agree with the Vishṇu in including it. It appears to have been regarded, at an earlier date, as an independent cause." See the Bhag. Pur. iii. 5, 34–37; iii. 8, 11 ff.; iii. 10, 10–13; iii. 11, 1 ff.; iii. 12, 1 ff. We thus find the authors of the Purāṇas interweaving with their own cosmogonies all the older elements of speculation which they discovered in the Vedas; and, by blending heretical materials with others which were more orthodox, contriving to neutralize the heterodoxy of the former.

(18) General remarks on the preceding passages.

A few general observations are suggested by a consideration of the principal passages which have been quoted in this section.

[595] "Κρόνος was also," adds Prof. Wilson, "one of the first generated agents in creation, according to the Orphic theogony."

I. The conceptions of the godhead expressed in these texts are of a wavering and undetermined character. It is clear that the authors had not attained to a distinct and logical comprehension of the characteristics which they ascribed to the objects of their adoration. On the one hand, the attributes of infinity, omnipotence, omnipresence, are ascribed to different beings, or to the same being under the various names of Purusha, Skambha, Brahma, Hiraṇyagarbha, etc. (R.V. x. 90, 1 ff.; x. 121, 1 ff. A.V. x. 7, 10, 13, 31–33; x. 8, 1). And yet in other places these same qualities are represented as subject to limitations, and these divine beings themselves are said to expand by food, to be produced from other beings (as Purusha from Virāj), to be sacrificed, to be produced from tapas, or to perform tapas (R.V. x. 90, 2, 4, 7. A.V. x. 2, 12 ff., 26; x. 7, 31, 36, 38).

II. In these passages divine power is variously conceived, sometimes as the property of one supreme person, as Purusha, Skambha, etc.; while in other places it is attached (1) to some abstraction, as Kāma (Desire), Kāla (Time), or (2) to some personification of energies residing in living beings, as Prāṇa (Life or Breath), or (3) of the materials (Uchhishṭa) or the implements (juhū, upabhṛit, etc.) of sacrifice, or is ascribed (4) to the vehicles of adoration, to hymns and metres, such as the Virāj, which is said (A.V. viii. 10 1) to have been identical with the world, or (5) to the guardian of sacred science, and future minister of religious rites, the Brahmachārin. It need occasion no surprise that the young priest should be regarded as invested with such transcendent attributes, when even the sacrifices which he was being trained to celebrate, the hymns and metres in which he invoked the gods, and the very sacrificial vessels he handled were conceived to possess a supernatural potency.

We find here a singular variety in the elements of thought and feeling which have concurred to give birth to this crude congeries of ideas, in which the real centre of divine power is obscured, while a multitude of inferior objects are magnified into unreal proportions, and invested with a fictitious sanctity. But these extraordinary representations reveal to us in the Indians of the Vedic age a conception of the universe which was at once (a) mystical or sacramental, (b) polytheistic, and (c) pantheistic; (a) everything connected with religious rites being imagined to have in it a spiritual as well as a physical potency; (b) all parts of nature being separately regarded as invested with divine power; and yet (c) as constituent parts of one great whole.

(19) Whether polytheism or monotheism was the earliest form of the Aryan religion: opinions of Messrs. Pictet, Pfleiderer, Scherer, Réville, and Roth on this subject.

I shall add some remarks on the relation of the Vedic polytheism to the earlier religion, which we may suppose to have prevailed among the primitive Aryans.

M. Adolphe Pictet, in his work "Les Origines Indo-Européennes," vol. ii., has lately discussed the question whether that religion was from the first a polytheism, embracing the principal powers of nature, as comparative philology shows it to have been about the time of the separation of the different branches of the race, or whether it had been originally monotheistic.

He thinks that as a polytheism, such as we find existing at the dawn of Aryan history, could only have been developed gradually, it must have been preceded by a more simple system (p. 651). This inference he supports by the remark that the names of most of the gods in the Aryan mythology correspond with those of the great objects of nature, designated by some of their most characteristic attributes. But as these natural objects have derived their appellations from their physical qualities alone, they could not originally, at the time when they received their names, have been regarded as divinities. If nature-worship had prevailed among the Aryans from the commencement, some trace of this fact must have been preserved in their language, which, however, manifests nothing but the most complete realism as regards the epithets applied to natural phenomena. As it thus appears that the great objects of nature could not have been regarded as divine at the time when the language was formed, the Aryans could not originally have been polytheistic. It is not, however, to be imagined that a race so highly gifted should, even at this early period, have been destitute of all religious sentiments and beliefs. But if not polytheists, they must have been monotheists. This conclusion M. Pictet corroborates by referring to the most ancient names of the deity, such as Deva, etc., which he regards as in their origin unconnected with natural objects or phenomena. This primitive monotheism of the Aryans he supposes to have arisen from the necessity which they instinctively felt to refer the production of the world to one first Cause, which they would naturally place, not on earth, their own familiar abode, but in the mysterious and inaccessible heavens. This supreme being would thus be called Déva, or the celestial; and as the heaven which he inhabited was one, so would He himself also be conceived of as an Unity. This primitive monotheism, however, could not have been very clearly defined, but must have remained a vague, obscure, and rudimentary conception. It would not otherwise be easy to understand how it should have degenerated into polytheism. But as the idea of God remained veiled in this mysterious obscurity, it became necessary for the worshippers to seek for some divinities intermediate between Him and themselves, through whom they might approach Him; and to explain the multiplicity of phenomena (which they were not as yet sufficiently enlightened to derive from the uniform action of one central will), by regarding them as regulated by a plurality of divine agents. At first, however, the polytheism would be simple, and the subordinate deities composing the pantheon would be considered as the ministers of the one supreme deity. Such may have been the state of things when the different branches of the Aryans separated. The polytheistic idea, however, when once it had begun to work, would tend constantly to multiply the number of divinities, as we see it has already done in the Vedic age. So great, however, is the power exercised over the human mind by the principle of unity, that the idea of one Supreme Being, though obscured, is never lost, but is always breaking forth like a light from the clouds in which it is enveloped. The traces of monotheism which are found in the Rig-veda may, perhaps, M. Pictet thinks, be reminiscences of the more ancient religion described above, though the pantheistic ideas observable, whether in the myths or in the speculations of the same hymn-collection, are the results of a new tendency peculiar to the Indian intellect. While, however, the Indians thus eventually fell into pantheism, the Iranians had, at an earlier period, embraced a reformed system, not dualistic, as is commonly supposed, but monotheistic; and the religious separation which then took place between the two tribes may have had its origin in a reaction of one section of the nation against the growing polytheism, and a recurrence to the principles of the old monotheism, of which the remembrance had not been altogether lost (pp. 708 ff.).

I scarcely think that M. Pictet's theory regarding the character of the primitive religion of the Aryans is borne out by the arguments which he adduces in its support.

1. It may be quite true that the complicated polytheism which we find in the hymns of the Rig-veda, or even the narrower system which we may suppose to have existed at the separation of the Indian and Iranian tribes, could only have been the slowly-developed product of many centuries; but this does not prove that a simpler form of nature-worship, embracing a plurality of gods, might not have existed among the ancestors of these tribes from the beginning of their history. I can see no reason for the conclusion that monotheism must necessarily have been the starting-point of the system.

2. Again, the fact that the great objects of external nature, the sky, the earth, the sun, were designated in the oldest Aryan language by names descriptive merely of their physical characteristics, supposing it to be admitted, would not suffice to establish M. Pictet's inference that no divine character was attributed to those objects at the time when they were named. Though we suppose that the sky (dyu or div) derived its appellation from its luminous appearance, the earth (pṛithivī or mahī) from its breadth or vastness, and the sun (sūrya or savitṛi) from its brightness (Pictet, ii. 667) and fecundating power, it does not follow that, though familiarly called by these names, they were not at the same time regarded as living powers, invested with divine attributes. How strong soever may have been the religious feelings of the primitive Aryans, however lively their sense of the supernatural, and however forcibly we may therefore imagine them to have been impelled to deify the grand natural objects by which they were surrounded and overawed, it is obvious that the physical impressions made by those objects on their senses would be yet more powerful (in proportion as they were more frequent and more obtrusive); and that consequently the sky, earth, sun, etc., even though regarded as deities, would naturally be called by names denoting their external characteristics, rather than by other appellations descriptive of the divine attributes they were supposed to possess.

If an etymological argument of this sort were to be considered as settling the question, we might in like manner insist that, because the word Varuṇa means (or is supposed to mean) the enveloper, it must therefore in the beginning have designated the sky alone (as the corresponding word οὐρανός afterwards did in Greek), and could not have been the name of a divinity. But this conclusion, however it may appear to be confirmed by Greek usage, receives no support from the most ancient Indian literature, in which the word is never employed for sky.

In such inquiries, moreover, it is unsafe to build too much on etymologies, many of which are in themselves extremely uncertain.

I will quote some remarks bearing upon this subject from Dr. Otto Pfleiderer's book, "Die Religion, ihr Wesen und ihre Geschichte," ii. 45 ff. (Leipzig, 1869), received while this work was passing through the press: "We thus see that in this original form of piety" (the conception of heaven and earth as the principal divinities), "there already exist general powers, to which the devout spirit is directed, powers which, in consequence of their relative infinitude, were well calculated to present and render comprehensible, to the childlike spirit, the idea of absolute infinity. It is on this account that purely moral emotions were possible in this original form of religion, and connected with that divine worship, although we are not, therefore, in any way led to assume that men had any thought of a divine being distinguished from heaven and earth, in the form, for instance, of a creative god, enthroned in the heavens. From the fact that, in our own case, the idea of a God can be only awakened and symbolized by, but never identified with, the visible infinity of heaven and earth, we can draw no conclusion as to the original period of humanity: for to the childlike contemplation of the earliest races, the heaven and earth were not, what they are for us, for the educated understanding, a system of finite causes standing in a relation of orderly reciprocal action to each other; but living beings, endowed with soul, acting, after the manner of men, with knowledge and will, to whom consequently men could quite properly pray with the firm belief that they would be heard, and their wishes granted. Such a primeval childlike naïf prayer we find in the Vedas: 'Father Heaven, gracious mother Earth, brother Fire, ye shining ones, have compassion on us' (see above, p. 22, note 32).

The Athenians prayed at a still later time: 'Rain, rain, O dear Zeus, down upon the cultivated lands and fields of the Athenians,' on which Max Müller strikingly remarks that this prayer is clearly addressed to the (sensible atmospheric) sky, though the mere addition of 'dear' in 'O dear Zeus,' is sufficient to change the sky into a personal being. The same is the case with a primeval Chinese prayer: 'O blue Heaven, look down upon the proud, and have compassion on the wretched.' The contents of this prayer presuppose a spiritual being, which, however, is by the adjunct 'blue' easily identified with the visible vault of heaven. Max Müller (Science of Language, ii. 413 ff.) here raises the question whether the identity of the word for heaven and for god is to be explained (1) by supposing that the word at first merely expressed the conception of the sensible object heaven, and that the appellative noun so fixed was transferred to the idea, which arose afterwards, of God, as a being enthroned in the highest heaven, as one of the possible names of this as yet nameless being; or (2) by supposing that the conception of heaven and that of God existed separately from the first in the human consciousness, and were only in consequence of their resemblance (the tertium comparationis: clearness, elevation, infinity) both expressed by the same word with the signification of shining. In both these modes of explanation the relation between god and heaven appears to be considered in a fashion too external, and too much resulting from reflection. We must therefore rather conceive it thus: Called into being by the sensuous impression of the shining, lofty, boundless heaven, the sense of the Divine Being was stirred into activity in the human spirit, and whilst the imagination, which moulded speech, expressed that sensuous impression by the word heaven, it at the same time and in the same indivisible act expressed the devout movement of the spirit by the same word, as the name of the (highest) god. The distinction which we now make between these two things, and which is the main cause of the difficulty we experience in understanding mythology, had not begun to be made by the imagination of the earliest men, who, when they pronounced the word 'heaven,' applied it in thought to a living, animated, and active being, and when they uttered the word 'God,' applied it to the visible, clear, blue heaven."

On the subject before us I will also quote some remarks by two recent French writers. The first of these is M. Edmond Scherer, an acute theologian and accomplished critic, who, in a review of M. Pictet's work, thus expresses himself:—

"M. Pictet distinguishes in the religion of the Aryans two elements, contrary in appearance, (1) a monotheism pure and elevated, which conceives the Deity as a being distinct from the world; (2) a polytheism resulting from the personification of natural objects, and which, by attributing life to these objects, creates an entire mythology. This apparent contradiction M. Pictet explains by a development. He thinks the human mind must have proceeded from the simple to the complex, from unity to diversity; that polytheism has arisen from the need of seeking other beings intermediate between the Supreme Being and man, and that it has thus been able to establish itself without destroying altogether the first or monotheistic idea. We are thus brought back to the problem with which M. Renan has dealt in his studies on the Semitic races, although with this difference, that M. Renan opposed the Semitic, as the genius of monotheism, to the Arya, as the genius of polytheism. Perhaps in both cases the difficulty arises from regarding as absolute an opposition which is merely relative. There never has been, and doubtless there never will be, either a pure polytheism or a pure monotheism. Thus religions can only be defined or characterised by the predominance of the one of the two elements over the other; and their history consists less in successive phases, in their passing from one form to the other, than in the coexistence and the struggle of two principles answering to two requirements of the human soul which are equally imperious."—(Mélanges d'Histoire Religieuse, pp. 35 f.)

On the same subject another distinguished theologian of the critical school, M. Albert Réville, writes as follows in the "Revue des Deux Mondes" (Feb., 1864, p. 721 f.):—

"If we had before us positive facts attesting that the march of the human mind has been such (as M. Pictet describes), we should only have to surrender, and admit, contrary to all probability à priori, that man, while still sunk in the most profound ignorance, was better able to grasp religious truths than he was at the epoch when he began to reflect and to know. But have these facts any existence? So long as none can be alleged which have a demonstrative force, ought we not to hold to the hypothesis, confirmed by so many analogies, of a gradual elevation of religion (as of all the other spheres in which the human mind moves), from the simplest elements to the most sublime conceptions?" Again: "It is evident, and fully admitted by M. Pictet, that our ancestors were polytheists before their separation; but at that period this polytheism was not of yesterday. It had already had a history; and it is a matter of course that, in the historical development of a polytheistic religion, there must have been, as it were, guesses, germs, presentiments of monotheism. From the moment when a plurality of divine beings is recognised, a community of divine nature between them all is also admitted. In this way arise such epithets as 'luminous,' 'adorable,' 'living,' 'mighty,' which in course of time become substantives, like our word 'Dieu' itself. The sky, personified, and become an object of adoration, speedily usurps the characteristics of a supreme Deity, elevated above all others, and master of an irresistible weapon, the thunderbolt. Thus in most mythologies the sky is what it is in that of the Greeks, the Jupiter, the sovereign father of gods and men. In short, it is clear that the human mind, in proportion as it observes and reflects, rises more and more towards monotheism, in obedience to that imperious law, hidden in the depths of its being, which leads it to the logical pursuit of unity. But this movement is very slow, greatly retarded by the force of tradition and habit, and we ought not to place at the beginning that which can only be found at the very end of the process."

I shall conclude with an extract from Professor R. Roth's Essay on the "Highest gods of the Aryan races," (Journal of the German Oriental Society, vi. 76 f.), in which that able writer, while holding that the religion of those tribes in its earlier stages contained a more spiritual element, which was eventually preserved in a modified form by the Zoroastrian creed, recognizes, as also embraced in that elder religion, a system of nature-worship which afterwards became the most prominent element in the Indian mythology. We must, therefore, regard Roth also as opposed to M. Pictet's theory of a primitive monotheism. The greater part of this passage has been already given in a former section, pp. 117 f.; but it is advisable that the larger portion of it should be repeated here, with the addition of the introductory paragraph, from the bearing of the whole upon the present discussion.

"But that which still further enhances the interest of this inquiry, and is of especial importance in reference to the primitive period, is the peculiar character attaching to the conception of the Ādityas. The names of these deities (with a certain reservation in regard to that of Varuṇa) embrace no ideas drawn from physical nature, but express certain relations of moral and social life. Mitra, 'the friend,' Aryaman, Bhaga, Anśa, the gods who 'favour,' 'bless,' 'sympathize,' and Daksha, 'the intelligent,' are pure spirits, in whom the noblest relations of human intercourse are mirrored, and so appear (i.e. the relations appear) as emanations of the divine life, and as objects of immediate divine protection. But if the earliest Aryan antiquity thus beheld in its highest gods, not the most prominent manifestations of physical nature, but the conditions of moral life and society, and consequently esteemed these moral blessings more highly than anything connected with the wants and enjoyments of sense, we must ascribe to that age a high spiritual capacity, whatever may have been its deficiency in the constituents of external civilization.

"These considerations throw some light on the principles and character of the two Aryan religions which have sprung from one and the same source. The religion of Ormuzd holds fast, while it shapes, after its own peculiar fashion, the supersensuous element called into existence by the higher order of gods belonging to the common ancient creed, and eventually rejects almost entirely the deities representing the powers of nature, which, as well as those of the former class, it had inherited from the earliest period. The Vedic creed, on the other hand, is preparing to concede the highest rank to the latter class (the representatives of the powers of nature), to transfer to them an ever increasing honour and dignity, to draw down the divine life into nature, and bring it ever closer to man. The proof of this is especially to be found in the myth regarding Indra, a god who, in the earlier period of Aryan religious history, either had no existence, or was confined to an obscure province. The Zend legend attributes to another deity the function which forms the essence of the later myth regarding Indra. This god Trita, however, disappears from the Indian mythology in the course of the Vedic age, and Indra succeeds him. And not only so, but towards the end of this period Indra begins to push aside even Varuṇa himself, the highest god of the ancient creed, from the position which is shown, partly by historical testimonies, and partly by the very conception of his character, to belong to him, and becomes, if not the supreme god, at least the national god, whom his encomiasts strive to elevate above the ancient Varuṇa." . . . . "Thus the course of the movement is, that an ancient supreme deity, originally common to the Aryans (i.e. the ancestors of the Persians and Indians), and perhaps also to the entire Indo-Germanic race, Varuṇa-Ormuzd-Uranos, is thrown back into the darkness, and in his room Indra, a peculiarly Indian, and a national god, is introduced. With Varuṇa disappears at the same time the old character of the people, while with Indra a new character, foreign to the primitive Indo-Germanic nature, is in an equal measure brought in. Viewed in its internal essence, this modification in the religious conceptions of the Aryans consists in an ever-increasing tendency to attenuate the supersensuous, mysterious side of their creed, till at length the gods who were originally the highest and the most spiritual have become unmeaning representatives of nature, and Varuṇa is nothing more than the ruler of the sea, while the Ādityas are the mere regents of the sun's course.

"When the higher and more spiritual elements in the Indian creed had thus become so greatly reduced, it was inevitable that a reaction should ensue," etc.

Although, towards the close of the preceding passage, Professor Roth speaks of an "ancient supreme deity" (ein alter . . . . oberster Gott) as "originally common to the Aryans," it is evident from the entire context that he does not regard this deity as their only object of adoration, since he recognizes the existence of a plurality of gods. In the previous part of his dissertation, too, Roth speaks (p. 70) of the close relation in the Vedic era between Varuṇa and another god, Mitra,—a relation which he holds to have subsisted from an earlier period. And at p. 74, he refers to the activity and dignity of Varuṇa being shared by the other Ādityas, though no separate provinces can be assigned to them, while he is the first of the number, and represents in himself the powers of the whole class. If this description apply to the ancient Aryan religion, it cannot be properly said to have been monotheistic, though one deity may have been more prominent than the rest.

SECTION XXII.

MISCELLANEOUS HYMNS FROM THE RIG- AND ATHARVA-VEDAS.[596]

The hymns of the Rig-veda are, as is well known, almost entirely of a religious character, designed, or at least, adapted, for recitation at the worship of the various popular deities, or at some of the ceremonials connected with various important events in the domestic or public life of the ancient Indians. Among these, however, are interspersed a few of a different description, which, from the wide celebrity they had acquired, were carefully preserved by the descendants of their authors, or by other interested persons, and have been incorporated in the great collection of sacred songs. Some of these productions, like the colloquy of Yama and Yamī (translated above in pp. 282 ff.), the very obscure conversation between the hero Purūravas and the Apsaras Urvaśī (R.V. x. 95),[597] and the Vrishākapi hymn (R.V. x. 86), derived their importance from the interlocutors being personages regarded as divine, or ranked among the ancestors of the human race. Others, like the 72nd, the 90th, and the 129th hymns of the 10th Book (also quoted above in pp. 48 f., 367 ff., and 356 f.) were venerated from the nature of the topics which they handled, or the depth or gravity of the speculations which they contain. Others, again, such as the hymns referred to by Professor Roth, in his dissertation "on the historical matter contained in the Rig-veda,"[598] would possess an [596] I have again to acknowledge the valuable aid which I have received from Professor Aufrecht in rendering some of the more difficult parts of the hymns translated in this section.

[597] Professor Max Müller's Essay on Comparative Mythology, in the Oxford Essays for 1856, reprinted in his "Chips from a German Workshop," vol. ii., contains a translation of this myth, as narrated in the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa. The Brāhmaṇa, however, only quotes and illustrates the easiest verses of the hymn (R.V. x. 95), making no reference to its most obscure and difficult portions. Some of the verses not cited in the Brāhmaṇa are explained by Professor Müller. See also Roth's Illustrations of the Nirukta, pp. 153 ff. and 230.

[598] Sur Litteratur und Geschichte des Weda, p. 87.

interest for the descendants of the contending priestly races to whose rivalries they made allusion, and might even be valued for the purposes of imprecation to which they could be applied.[599] And those compositions which celebrate the liberality of different princes to their domestic priests would naturally be handed down with care by the successors of those favoured individuals.

In the following Section I shall adduce some other hymns, both from the Rig- and the Atharva-vedas, which are only in part of a religious character, and possess a greater general interest than the bulk of those with which they are associated, from the references which they make to human character, dispositions, feelings, passions, and circumstances; from the light which they throw on the progress of sacerdotal pretensions, or from some other feature of their contents. In some of these hymns it will be seen that a considerable amount of shrewdness and worldly wisdom is expressed in a sententious form.

(1) Hymn to Araṇyāṇī, R.V. x. 146.

The first hymn which I shall adduce, addressed to the goddess of forest solitude, is distinguished by the poetical feeling which pervades it, and the natural manner in which the emotions arising from the situation there described are depicted, though some of the allusions which it contains are difficult to explain or comprehend. It is repeated in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 5, 5, 6 f., and interpreted by the Commentator on that work. (See also Roth's Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 132).

1. Araṇyāni Araṇyāni asau yā preva naśyasi | kathā grāmaṁ na gachhasi na tvā bhīr iva vindati | 2. Vṛishāravāya vadate yad upāvati chichchikaḥ | āghāṭibhir iva dhāvayann Araṇyānir mahīyate | 3. Uta gāvaḥ ivādanti uta veśmeva dṛiśyate | uto Araṇyāniḥ sāyaṁ śakaṭīr iva sarjati | 4. Gām angaisha ā hvayati dārv angaisho apāvadhīt | vasann Araṇyānyāṁ sāyam akrukshad iti manyate | 5. Na vai Araṇyānir hanti anyaś chen nābhigachhati | svādoḥ phalasya jagdhvāya yathākāmaṁ nipadyate | 6. Anjanagandhāṁ surabhim bahvannām akṛishīvalām | prāham mṛigāṇām mātaram Araṇyānim asaṁsisham |

[599] See the 1st vol. of this work, pp. 327 and 143.

1. "Araṇyānī, Araṇyānī, thou who seemest to lose thyself there, why dost thou not ask [the way to] the village? Does not terror seize thee (at thy solitude)? 2. When the chichchika (a bird) answers to the roar of bulls when it is uttered, flying about as if with cymbals, then Araṇyānī rejoices. 3. And the cows seem to eat, and the house appears to be seen, and at evening Araṇyānī seems to discharge the carts. 4. One man calls to his cow, another fells a tree; a man dwelling in the forest (in Araṇyānī) fancies that she [or some one] has screamed. 5. Araṇyānī is not [herself] murderous, if no one else (a tiger, etc.) assails; but, after eating of sweet fruit, a man rests there at his pleasure. 6. I laud Araṇyānī, the mother of wild beasts, the unctuous-scented, the fragrant, who yields abundance of food, though she has no hinds to till her."

The following is a free metrical version of the first, fifth, and sixth verses of this hymn:—

1. Thou seemest, goddess, here to stray
Forlorn among these trackless woods,
These dark and dreary solitudes.
Why dost thou not inquire the way
That leads to cheerful human haunts?
Is there nought here thy courage daunts?

5. Herself this goddess does not slay,
Although she nurtures murderous beasts:
On luscious fruits the traveller feasts,
Supplied by her, and goes his way.

6. Rich-scented, fragrant, full of flowers,
Her realm with various food is filled;
For though by hinds she is not tilled,
She drinks in sap from heavenly showers.

The next hymn which I shall quote refers to the great variety by which the aims and pursuits of different men are characterized. It is distinguished by a vein of naïf observation, not unmingled with satire; and is curious as disclosing to us the occupations pursued by the poet's father and mother, though it makes no reference to the class to which they belonged.

(2) Rig-veda, IX. 112.

1. Nānānāṁ vai u no dhiyo vi vratāni janānām | takshā rishṭaṁ rutam bhishag brahmā sunvantam ichhati Indrāya Indo parisrava | 2. Jaratībhir oshadhībhir parṇebhiḥ śakunānām | kārmāro aśmabhir dyubhir hiraṇyavantam ichhati—| 3. Kārur ahaṁ tato bhishag upalaprakshiṇī nanā | nānādhiyo vasūyavo anu gāḥ iva tasthima—| 4. Aśvo volhā sukhaṁ rathaṁ hasanām upamantriṇaḥ | śepo romanvantau bhedau vār in maṇḍūkaḥ ichhati—|

"1. We different men have all our various imaginations and designs. The carpenter seeks something that is broken, the doctor a patient, the priest some one who will offer libations. O Indu (Soma), flow forth for Indra.[600] 2. With dried-up sticks, with birds' feathers, with metals, and fire [?] the artizan continually seeks after a man with plenty of gold. O Indu, etc., etc. 3. (=Nirukta, vi. 6) I am a poet, my father is a doctor, and my mother is a grinder of corn. With our different views, seeking to get gain, we run after [our respective objects] as after cattle.[601] O Indu, etc. 4. The draught horse desires an easy-going carriage; merry companions a laugh; the female sex the male; and frogs a pond. O Indu," etc.

I add a free metrical rendering of these verses:—

Men's tastes and trades are multifarious,
And so their ends and aims are various.
The smith seeks something cracked to mend;
The leech would fain have sick to tend.
The priest desires a devotee,
From whom he may extract his fee.

[600] This last clause, which is repeated at the end of each of the verses, and transforms the hymn into an address to Soma, is perhaps a later addition to an older song; as it seems to have no connection with the other parts of the verses to which it is attached.

[601] The three preceding verses are translated by Roth, in his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 74.

Each craftsman makes and vends his ware,
And hopes the rich man's gold to share.
My sire 's a leech; and I a bard;
Corn grinds my mother, toiling hard.
All craving wealth, we each pursue,
By different means, the end in view,
Like people running after cows,
Which too far off have strayed to browse.
The draught-horse seeks an easy yoke,
The merry dearly like a joke,
Of lovers youthful belles are fond,
And thirsty frogs desire a pond.

(3) Rig-veda, x. 34.

The next hymn, which may possibly be the production of one who lays before us the sad results of his own bitter experience, describes with great vividness, graphic power, and truth of observation, the seductions and miseries of gambling, which we see were as acutely felt by their victims in those early ages as they are in these later times.

1 (=Nirukta, ix. 8). Prāvepāḥ mā bṛihato mādayanti pravātejāḥ iriṇe varvṛitānāḥ | somasya iva Maujavatasya bhaksho vibhīdako jāgrivir mahyam achhān | 2. Na mā mimetha na jihīḷe eshā śivā sakhibhyaḥ uta mahyam āsīt | akshasya aham ekaparasya hetor anuvratām apa jāyām arodham | 3. Dveshṭi śvaśrūr apa jāyā ruṇaddhi na nāthito vindate mardhitāram | aśvasya iva jarato vasnyasya nāhaṁ vindāmi kitavasya bhogam | 4. Anye jāyām pari mṛiśanti asya yasya agṛidhad vedane vājī akshaḥ | pitā mātā bhrātaraḥ enam āhur na jānīmo nayata baddham etam | 5. Yad ādīdhye na davishāṇi ebhiḥ parāyadbhyo ava hīye sakhibhyaḥ | nyuptāś cha babhravo vācham akrata emi id eshāṁ nishkṛitaṁ jāriṇī iva | 6. Sabhām eti kitavaḥ pṛichhamāno jeshyāmi iti tanvā śūśujānaḥ | akshāso asya vi tiranti kāmam pratidīvne dadhatāḥ ā kṛitāni | 7. Akshāsaḥ id ankuśino nitodino nikṛitvānas tapanās tāpayishṇavaḥ | kumāradeshṇāḥ jayataḥ punarhaṇo madhvā sampṛiktāḥ kitavasya barhaṇā | 8. Tripanchāśaḥ krīḷati vrātaḥ eshāṁ devaḥ iva savitā satyadharmā | ugrasya chid manyave na namante rājā chid ebhyo namaḥ it kṛiṇoti | 9. Nīchā vartante upari sphuranti ahastāso hastavantaṁ

sahante | divyāḥ angārāḥ iriṇe nyuptāḥ śītāḥ santo hṛidayaṁ nir dahanti | 10. Jāyā tapyate kitavasya hīnā mātā putrasya charataḥ kva svit | ṛiṇāvā bibhyad dhanam ichhamāno anyeshām astam upa naktam eti | 11. Striyaṁ dṛishṭvāya kitavaṁ tatāpa anyeshāṁ jāyāṁ sukṛitaṁ cha yonim | pūrvāhṇe aśvān yuyuje hi babhrūn so agner ante vṛishalaḥ papāda | 12. Yo vaḥ senānīr mahato gaṇasya rājā vrātasya prathamo babhūva | tasmai kṛiṇomi na dhanā ruṇadhmi daśāham prāchīs tad ṛitaṁ vadāmi | 13. Akshair mā dīvyaḥ kṛishim it kṛishasva vitte ramasva bahu manyamānaḥ | tatra gāvaḥ kitava tava jāyā tad me vi chashṭe Savitā 'yam aryaḥ | 14. Mitraṁ kṛiṇudhvaṁ khalu mṛilata no mā no ghoreṇa charatābhi dhṛishṇu | ni vo nu manyur viśatām arātir anyo babhrūṇām prasitau nu astu |

"1. The tumbling, air-born [products] of the great Vibhīdaka tree (i.e. the dice) delight me as they continue to roll on the dice-board. The exciting dice seem to me like a draught of the soma-plant growing on mount Mūjavat. 2. She (the gamester's own wife) never quarrelled with or despised me. She was kind to me, and to my friends. But I, for the sake of the partial dice, have spurned my devoted spouse. 3. My mother-in-law detests me; my wife rejects me. In his need [the gamester] finds no comforter. I cannot discover what is the enjoyment of the gambler any more than I can perceive what is the happiness of a worn-out hack horse. 4. Others pay court to the wife of the man whose wealth is coveted by the impetuous dice. His father, mother, brothers, cry out, 'We know nothing of him; take him away bound.' 5. When I resolve not to be tormented by them, because I am abandoned by my friends who withdraw from me,—yet as soon as the brown dice, when they are thrown, make a rattling sound, I hasten to their rendezvous, like a woman to her paramour.[602] 6. The gamester comes to the assembly, glowing in body, and asking himself, 'shall I win?' The dice inflame his desire, by making over his winnings to his opponent. 7. Hooking, piercing, deceitful, vexatious, delighting to torment, the dice dispense transient gifts, and again ruin the winner; they appear to the gambler covered with honey. 8. Their troop of fifty-three disports itself [disposing men's destinies] like the god Savitṛi, whose ordinances never fail. They bow not before the wrath even of the fiercest. The king himself makes obeisance to them. 9. They roll downward; they bound upward. Having no hands, they overcome him who has. These celestial coals, when thrown on the diceboard, scorch the heart, though cold themselves. 10. The destitute wife of the gamester is distressed, and so too is the mother of a son who goes she knows not whither. In debt and seeking after money, the gambler approaches with trepidation the houses of other people at night. 11. It vexes the gamester to see his own wife, and then to observe the wives and happy homes of others. In the morning he yokes the brown horses (the dice); by the time when the fire goes out he has sunk into a degraded wretch. 12. He who is the general of your band, the first king of your troop,—to him I stretch forth [my] ten [fingers] toward the east [in reverence]:[603] I do not reject wealth, but I declare that which is right (when I say): 13. Never play with dice: practice husbandry; rejoice in thy property, esteeming it sufficient. 'There, o gamester, are thy cows; [this is] thy wife;'—so the adorable Savitṛi addresses me. 14. Be friendly [o dice]; be auspicious to us; do not bewitch us powerfully with your enchantment. Let your wrath and hostility abate. Let others be subject to the fetters of the brown ones (the dice)."

[602] These words are quoted in Nirukta, xii. 7.

The following is an attempt freely to reproduce, in verse, the spirit of this composition:—

These dice that roll upon the board,
To me intense delight afford.
Sweet Soma-juice has not more power
To lure me in an evil hour.
To strife and wrangling disinclined,
My gentle wife was always kind:
But I, absorbed in maddening play,
Have chased this tender spouse away.
She now, in turn, my person spurns;
Her mother's wrath against me burns:
Distressed and vexed, in vain I plead,
For none will help me in my need.

[603] Compare A.V. v. 28, 11, and Vāj. Sanh. xvi. 64.

As wretched as a worn-out hack's,
The gamester's life all joyance lacks.
His means by play away are worn,
While gallants court his wife forlorn.
His father, mother, brothers shout,
"The madman bind, and drag him out."
At times, the scorn of every friend,
I try my foolish ways to mend,
Resolve no more my means to waste
On this infatuated taste:
But all in vain:—when, coming near,
The rattle of the dice I hear,
I rush, attracted by their charms,
Like lady to her lover's arms.
As to his game the gambler hies,
Once more his hopes of winning rise;
And loss but more his ardour fires;
To try his luck he never tires.
The dice their victims hook and tear,
Disturbing, torturing, false though fair.
The transient gains they yield to-day
Are all to morrow swept away.
These sportive dice, a potent band,
The destinies of men command.
They laugh to scorn the fierce man's frown;
Before them doughty kings bow down.
They downward roll, they upward bound,
And, handless, men with hands confound.
They scorch the heart like brands, these dice,
Although themselves as cold as ice.
The gambler's hapless wife is sad;
His mother mourns her wayward lad.
In want, at night he seeks relief
By graceless shifts, a trembling thief.
He groans to see his wretched wife,
And then the happy wives and life
Of others, free from care and strife.

His bad career, with morning light
Begun, in ruin ends by night.
To him, the chief who leads your bands,
Ye Dice, I lift my suppliant hands;
"I hail thy gifts when thou art kind,
But crave thy leave to speak my mind.
Forgive me, king of all the dice,
If thus I give my friend advice:
'Abandon play, and till the soil,
For this shall better pay thy toil.
Well-pleased with what thou hast, forbear
To crave of wealth an ampler share.'"
"Thy wife, thy kine,—in these rejoice,"
Thus cries a god with warning voice.
Be gracious, Dice, we now implore;
Bewitch us with your spells no more.
From us withdraw, to us be kind,
And others with your fetters bind.

That the passion for gambling prevailed very extensively at the time when the hymns of the Rig- and Atharva-vedas were composed is clear from various other allusions to the practice which we find there. Thus in R.V. vii. 86, 6, dice are mentioned along with wine, anger, thoughtlessness, etc., as causes of sin (see above, p. 66). The following verses from the Atharva-veda prove the same point:—

A.V. vii. 50, 1. Yathā vṛiksham aśanir viśvāhā hanti aprati | evāham adya kitavān akshair badhyāsam aprati | 2. Turāṇām aturāṇām viśām avarjushīṇām | samaitu viśvato bhago antarhastaṁ kṛitam mama |

"1. As the lightning every day strikes the tree irresistibly, so may I to-day irresistibly smite the gamesters with the dice. 2. May the wealth of the rich and of the poor unresistingly be collected from every side into my hand as winnings."

vii. 109, 1. Idam ugrāya babhrave namo yo aksheshu tanūvaśī | ghṛitena kaliṁ śikshāmi sa no mṛiḍāti īdṛiśe | 2. Ghṛitam Apsarābhyo vaha tvam Agne pāṁsūn akshebhyaḥ sikatāḥ apaś cha | yathābhāgaṁ havyadātiṁ jushāṇāḥ madanti devāḥ ubhayāni havyā | 3. Apsarasaḥ sadhamādam madanti havirdhānam antarā sūryaṁ cha | tāḥ me hastau saṁsṛijantu ghṛitena sapatnam me kitavaṁ randhayantu | 4. Ādinavam

pratidīvne ghṛitena asmān abhi kshara | vṛiksham ivāśanyā jahi yo asmān pratidīvyati |

"1. This reverence be paid to the brown [die], who is ruler among the dice. With butter I worship the Kali; may he thus be auspicious to us. 2. Bring, o Agni, butter to the Apsarases, but dust, sand, and water to the dice. Seeking oblations according to their several shares, the gods delight in both offerings. 3. The Apsarases hold a festival between the oblation and the sun. May they anoint my hands with butter, and overwhelm the gamester who is my opponent. 4. Dispense bad luck to our adversary, but moisten us with butter. Strike, as lightning does a tree, the man who plays against us."

vi. 118, 1. Yad hastābhyāṁ chakṛima kilbishāṇi akshāṇāṁ gaṇam upalipsamānāḥ | Ugrampaśye Ugrajitau tad adyāpsarasāv anu dattām ṛiṇaṁ naḥ |

"1. Whatever sins we have committed with our hands, seeking to obtain the host of dice,—remit to us to-day that debt, ye Apsarases Ugrampaśyā and Ugrajit."

iv. 38, 1. Udbhindatīṁ sanjayantīm apsarām sādhudevinīm | glahe kṛitāni kṛiṇvānām apsarāṁ tām iha huve | 2. Vichinvatīm ākirantīm apsarām sādhudevinīm | glahe kṛitāni gṛihṇānām apsarām—| 3. Yā āyaiḥ pariṇrityati ādadānā kṛitaṁ glahāt | sā naḥ kṛitāni śīshatī prahām āpnotu māyayā | sā naḥ payasvatī aitu mā no jaishur idam dhanam | 4. Yāḥ akśheshu pramodante śuchaṁ krodhaṁ cha bibhrati | ānandinīm pramodinīm apsarāṁ tām iha huve |

"1. I invoke hither the skilfully-playing Apsaras who cuts up and conquers, and gets gains in the game of dice. 2. I invoke hither the skilfully-playing Apsaras who collects and scatters, and receives gains in the game of dice. 3. May she who dances about with the dice, when she wins by gaming, grant gain to us, and obtain success through her skill. May she come to us with abundance of food. Let them not conquer this money of ours. 4. I invoke hither the joyful and exulting Apsaras — those [goddesses] who delight in dice, and who cherish grief and anger."

It will be seen from these verses that the Apsarases are intimately connected with gambling. In A.V. ii. 2, 4, they are said to be "fond of dice," and soul-bewitching" (akshakāmāḥ manomuhaḥ).

The next two hymns which I proceed to quote are in praise of generosity. The first of them celebrates liberality to the destitute in general; the second eulogizes the same virtue when exhibited in giving presents to priests.

(4) Rig-veda, x. 117.

1. Na vai u devāḥ kshudham id vadhaṁ dadur utāśitam upa gachhanti mṛityavaḥ | uto rayiḥ pṛiṇato nopa dasyati utāpṛiṇan mardḥitāraṁ na vindate | 2. Yaḥ ādhrāya chakamānāya pitvo annavān san raphitāya upajagmushe | sthiram manaḥ kṛiṇute sevate purā uto chit sa mardḥitāraṁ na vindate | 3. Sa id bhojo yo gṛihave dadāti annakāmāya charate kṛiśāya | aram asmai bhavati yāmahūtā utāparīshu kṛiṇute sakhāyam | 4. Na sa sakhā yo na dadāti sakhye sachābhuve sachamānāya pitvaḥ | apa asmāt preyād na tad oko asti pṛiṇantam anyam araṇaṁ chid ichhet | 5. Pṛiṇīyād in nādhamānāya tavyān drāghīyāṁsam anu paśyeta panthām | o hi vartante rathyā iva chakrā anyam anyam upa tiṣṭhhanta rāyaḥ | 6. Mogham annaṁ vindate aprachetāḥ satyam bravīmi vadhaḥ it sa tasya | na aryamaṇam pushyati no sakhāyaṁ kevalāgho bhavati kevalādī | 7. Kṛishann it phālaḥ āśitaṁ kṛiṇoti yann adhvānam apa vṛinkte charitraiḥ | vadan brahmā avadato vanīyan pṛiṇann āpir apṛiṇantam abhi syāt | 8. Ekapād bhūyo dvipado vichakrame dvipāt tripādam abhi eti paśchāt | chatushpād eti dvipadām abhisvare sampaśyan panktīr upatiṣṭhamānaḥ | 9. Samau chid hastau na samaṁ vivishṭaḥ sammatarā chid na samaṁ duhāte | yamayoś chid na samā vīryāṇi jnātī chit santau na samam pṛiṇītaḥ |

"1. The gods have not ordained hunger to be our destruction. Even those who are full-fed are overtaken by various forms of death (lit. deaths). The prosperity of the liberal man never decays; while the illiberal finds no comforter. 2. He who, himself well provided with sustenance, hardens his heart against the poor man who approaches him, starving, and who has long courted him, desirous of food, such a man meets with none to cheer him. 3. He is the bountiful man who gives to the lean beggar who comes to him craving food. Success attends that man in the sacrifice, and he secures for himself a friend in the future. 4. He is no friend who bestows nothing on his friend who waits upon him, seeking for sustenance. Let every one depart from such a man; his house is no home,—and look out for some one else who is liberal, even though he be a stranger. 5. Let the powerful man be generous to the suppliant; let him look down the long path [of futurity]. For, oh, riches revolve like the wheels of a chariot: they come, now to one, now to another.[604] 6. In vain the fool obtains food: I tell the truth; it becomes his destruction (comp. v. 1). He nourishes neither his friend nor his companion. He who keeps his food to himself has his sin to himself. 7. The ploughshare furrowing the ground brings men plenty. A man moving onward with his feet accomplishes his journey. A priest who speaks is more acceptable than one who is silent. A kinsman who is beneficent excels one who is stingy. 8. A one-footed being advances faster than a two-footed. The two-footed comes after the three-footed. The four-footed follows in the rear of the two-footed, and moves on observing his steps. 9. The two hands, though alike, do not perform an equal amount of work. Two cows with the same mother do not yield the same quantity of milk. Two men, though twins, have not the same strength. And two others, though kinsmen, are not equally liberal."

The following is a free metrical rendering of some of these verses:—

The gods have not ordained that we Should die of want; the lean and weak
  Are not death's only prey; the sleek
Themselves must soon his victims be.

The man endowed with ample pelf
  Who steels his heart, in selfish mood,
  Against the poor who sue for food
Shall no consoler find himself.

[604] It is curious to find in so ancient a composition this now trite comparison of the changes of fortune to the revolutions of a wheel. The same idea occurs in the Mahābhārata, iii. 15489: "After happiness, suffering, and after suffering, happiness, visit a man in succession, as the spokes of a wheel [revolve round] the nave" (sukhasyānantaraṁ duḥkhaṁ duḥkhasyānantaraṁ sukham | paryāyeṇopasarpante naraṁ nemim arāḥ iva). Compare Śatap. Br. x. 2, 6, 19: pānāt pipāsā śriyai pāpmā (poverty from prosperity) jyotishas tamo 'mṛitād mṛityur ni ha vai asmād etāni sarvāṇi varttante. | "To drinking succeeds thirst, to prosperity wretchedness, to light darkness, and to immortality death: so that all these things constantly revolve in a circle." According to Herodotus, i. 207, Crœsus said to Cyrus: "If thou knowest that even thou art human, and rulest over mortals, learn first this lesson, that in the affairs of men there is a wheel which, by its revolution, renders it impossible for the same persons always to enjoy prosperity."

No friend is he who coldly spurns
  Away his needy friend forlorn:
  He, thus repulsed, in wrath and scorn
To some more liberal stranger turns.

Relieve the poor while yet ye may;
  Down future time's long vista look,
  And try to read that darkling book;
Your riches soon may flit away.

Ye cannot trust their fickle grace;
  As chariot wheels, in ceaseless round,
  Now upward turn, now touch the ground,
So riches ever change their place.

The man whose friend receives no share
  In all his good, himself destroys:
  Who thus alone his food enjoys
His sin alone shall also bear.

(5). Rig-veda, x. 107.

1. Āvir abhūd mahi māghonam eshām viśvam jīvaṁ tamaso nir amochi | mahi jyotiḥ pitṛibhir duttam āgād uruḥ panthāḥ dakshiṇāyāḥ adarśi | 2. Uchchā divi dakshināvanto asthur ye aśvadāḥ saha te sūryeṇa | hiraṇyadāḥ amṛitatvam bhajante vāsodāḥ Soma pratirante āyuḥ | 3. Daivī pūrttir dakshiṇā devayajyā na kavāribhyo na hi te pṛiṇanti | atha narāḥ prayata-dakshiṇāso avadya-bhiyā bahavaḥ pṛiṇanti | . . . . 5. Dakshiṇāvān prathamo hūtaḥ eti dakshiṇāvān grāmaṇīr agram eti | tam eva manye nṛipatiṁ janānāṁ yaḥ prathamo dakshiṇām ārivāya | 6. Tam eva ṛishiṁ tam u brahmāṇam āhur yajnanyaṁ sāmagām ukthaśasam | sa śukrasya tanvo veda tisro yaḥ prathamo dakshiṇayā rarādha | 7. Dakshiṇā 'śvaṁ dakshiṇā gāṁ dadāti dakshiṇā chandram uta yad hiraṇyam | dakshiṇā 'nnaṁ vanute yo naḥ ātmā dakshiṇāṁ varma kṛinute vijāṇan | 8. Na bhojāḥ mamrur na nyartham īyur na rishyanti na vyathante ha bhojāḥ | idaṁ yad viśvam bhuvanaṁ svaścha etat sarvaṁ dakshiṇā ebhyo dadāti | 9. Bhojāḥ jigyuḥ surabhiṁ yonim agre bhojāḥ jigyur vadhvaṁ yā suvāsāḥ | bhojāḥ jigyur anāhpeyaṁ sūrāyāḥ bhojāḥ jigyur ye ahūtāḥ prayanti | 10. Bhojāya aśvaṁ sam mṛijanti āśum bhojāya āste kanyā śumbhamānā | bhojasya idam pushkaraṇīva veśma parishkṛitaṁ devamānā iva chitram | 11. Bhojam aśvāḥ sushṭhuvāho vahanti suvṛid ratho varttate dakshiṇāyāḥ | bhojaṁ devāso avata bhareshu bhojaḥ śatrūn samanīkeshu jetā |

"1. The great liberality of these men has been manifested. The whole living [world] has been liberated from darkness. The great light given by the Fathers[605] has arrived. The broad path of Largess has been beheld. 2. The givers of gifts abide aloft in the sky; the bestowers of horses live with the Sun; the givers of gold attain immortality; the bestowers of raiment prolong their lives. 3. A gift is a satisfaction of the gods, an offering to the deities, and [proceeds] not from the illiberal; they bestow nothing; and many men who bestow largesses are bountiful merely through fear of reproach . . . . . 5. The giver of gifts, invited, advances first: he walks in the front as leader.[606] I regard as the king of men him who first presented a gift. 6. They call him a rishi, a priest, a reverend chanter of hymns and reciter of verses,—he knows the three forms of the resplendent (Agni),—the man who was the first to crown [his religious service] with a gift. 7. Largess bestows a cow, a horse, and gleaming gold. Largess bestows food, which is our life. The wise man makes largess-giving his breastplate. 8. Bountiful men neither die nor fall into calamity; they suffer neither wrong nor pain. Their liberality confers on them this whole world as well as heaven. 9. The bountiful conquer for themselves first, a pleasant abode, a well-dressed wife, and a draught of wine; they conquer those who walk before them, uninvited. 10. A fleet horse is trained for the generous man; he obtains a brilliant damsel for his portion; this house of his resembles a lotus-pond, beautiful, embellished like the palaces of the gods. 11. The liberal man is borne along by rapid horses. The car of largess rolls forward on easy wheels. Preserve, ye gods, the bountiful man in battle. He overcomes his enemies in the fight."

[605] Compare R.V. x. 68, 11. "The Fathers have adorned the sky with stars . . . . and placed darkness in the night, and light in the day" (see above, p. 287).

[606] Compare R.V. iv. 50, 8 f. where the prosperity and honour which attend a prince who retains and cherishes a domestic priest are described. See Professor Wilson's translation, and note on v. 9, in p. 214; and Roth's Art. on Brahma and the Brāhmans, Journ. Germ. Or. Society, i. 77 ff. See also the hymn from the A.V. iii. 19, quoted in the 1st vol. of this work, p. 283.

Verses 8 ff. may be thus freely rendered :—

The liberal does not mourn or die ;
No pain or care his life annoys;
This world is his with all its joys,
And future bliss beyond the sky.

He owns a princely palace bright,
And dwells in godlike pomp and pride;
A richly decked and winning bride
Sits fair and blooming by his side,
And fills his heart with love's delight.

With plenteous stores of corn and wine
Supplied, a merry life he leads;
Swift o'er the plain his chariot speeds,
Whirled on by prancing, snorting, steeds;
He smites his foes by aid divine.

The hymn which I cite next has been already translated by Professor Max Müller in his Anc. Sansk. Lit., pp. 494 f., where he thus remarks on it: "The 103rd hymn of the 7th Mandala, which is called a panegyric of the frogs, is clearly a satire on the priests; and it is curious to observe that the same animal should have been chosen by the Vedic satirist to represent the priests, which, by the earliest satirist of Greece, was selected as the representative of the Homeric heroes."

(6) Rig-veda, VII. 103.

1. Saṁvatsaram śaśayānāḥ brāhmaṇāḥ vrata-chāriṇaḥ | vācham Parjanya-jīvitām pra maṇḍūkāḥ avādishuḥ | 2. Divyāḥ āpo abhi yad enam āyan dṛitiṁ na śushkaṁ sarasī śayānam | gavām aha na māyur vatsinīnām maṇḍūkānāṁ vagnur atra sam eti | 3. Yad īm enān uśato abhy avarshīt tridivyāvataḥ prāvṛishi āgatāyām | akhkhalīkṛitya pitaraṁ na putro anyo anyam upa vadantam eti | 4. Anyo anyam anu gṛibhṇāti enor apāṁ visarge yad amandishātām | maṇḍūko yad abhivṛishṭaḥ kanishkan pṛiśniḥ sampṛinkte haritena vācham | 5. Yad eshām anyo anyasya vāchaṁ śāktasyeva vadati śikshamāṇaḥ | sarvaṁ tad eshām samṛidheva parva yad suvāco vadathana adhi apsu | 6. Gomāyur eko ajamāyur ekaḥ pṛiśnir eko haritaḥ ekaḥ eshām | samānaṁ nāma bibhṛito virūpāḥ purutra

vācham pipiśur vadantaḥ | 7. Brāhmaṇāso atirātre na some saro na pūrṇam abhito vadantaḥ | saṁvatsarasya tad ahaḥ pari shṭha yan maṇḍūkāḥ prāvṛishīṇam babhūva | 8. Brāhmaṇāsaḥ somino vācham akrata brahma kṛiṇvantaḥ parivatsarīṇam | adhvaryavo gharmiṇaḥ sishvidānāḥ āvir bhavanti guhyāḥ na ke chit | 9. Devahitiṁ jugupur dvādaśasya ṛituṁ naro na pra minanti ete | saṁvatsare prāvṛishi āgatāyāṁ taptāḥ gharmāḥ aśnuvate visargam | 10. Gomāyur adād ajamāyur adāt pṛiśnir adād harito no vasūni | gavām maṇḍūkāḥ dadataḥ śatāni sahasrasāve pratirante āyaḥ |

"1. These vow-fulfilling Brāhmans, the frogs, after lying quiet for a year, have now uttered their voice, stimulated by Parjanya (the rain-god). 2. When the waters from the sky fell upon them, as they lay like a dry skin[607] in the (dried-up) pond, the voice of the frogs rises in concert, like the lowing of cows which have calves. 3. When, on the arrival of the autumn, rain fell upon them, when they were ardently desiring it and parched with thirst, the one croaking approaches, like a son his father, another who is calling out. 4. One of them seizes the other, when they are delighted with the discharge of the waters; when the speckled frog, soaked, and leaping upwards, joins his voice to that of the green one. 5. When the one repeats the sounds of the other, as a pupil the words of his teacher, your every limb seems in full vigour, as ye make a loud noise upon the waters. 6. One lows like a cow, another bleats like a goat; one of them is speckled, another green. Having a common name, they vary in appearance, and modulate their voices diversely as they croak. 7. Like Brāhmans at the Atirātra somarite, like (priests) talking round a full bowl, ye frogs surround the pond on this day of the year which is the day of autumn. 8. The soma-offering Brāhmans raise their voices, performing their annual devotions; these adhvaryus, sweating with their hot oblations [or their kettles] issue forth like persons who have been hidden. 9. They have observed the divine ordinances of the year; these creatures do not disregard the season; when autumn has arrived these heated kettles obtain their release. 10. The frog who lows, and the one who bleats, the speckled and the brown, have bestowed on us riches:

[607] Prof. Müller renders dṛiti by "fish." I prefer the more common signification of "skin."

giving us hundreds of cows, the frogs prolong our lives in the season of a thousand shoots."

I have attempted to give the substance of this hymn very freely in the following verses :—

As Brâhmans, who a vow fulfil,
The frogs had now a year been still.
Like dried and shrivelled skins they lay,
Faint, parched with heat for many a day,
Expecting, long in vain, the showers
Withheld by Air's malignant powers.
But autumn comes; Parjanya rains
In copious streams, and floods the plains.
Clouds veil the sun, the air is cool,
The ponds, long empty, now are full.
There float the frogs, their bodies soak;
Afar is heard their merry croak.
Well drenched, they jump aloft in glee,
And join in noisy colloquy.
They leap upon each others' backs,
And each to t' other cries co-ax.
As teachers first call out a word,
Then boys repeat what they have heard,
Just so the frogs croak out once more
What other frogs had croaked before.
Sounds diverse issue from their throats,
Some low like cows, some bleat like goats,
Though one in name, of various sheen,
For one is brown, another green.
As Brâhmans at a Soma-rite
Around the bowl in talk unite,
This day the frogs their pond surround,
And make the air with noise resound.
These priests, the frogs, their voices raise,
And sing their annual hymn of praise.
As priests who sweated o'er a pot
Soon quit the fire they find too hot,

The frogs, so long oppressed by heat,
Emerge in haste from their retreat.
From rules divine they never swerve,
But all the seasons' laws observe.
When autumn comes, their sufferings cease,
From scorching heat they find release.
The frogs that bleat, and those that low,
Brown, green, on men all wealth bestow.
The kine that on our pastures graze,
We owe to them, with length of days.

It is possibly an echo of this production that we find in a description of autumn in the Harivaṁśa, v. 8803, where the poet compares the noise made by a frog, after his rest of sixteen half months, along with his wives, to the recitation of the Rig-veda by a Brāhman surrounded by his pupils (plavangamaḥ shoḍasa-pakṭhaśāyī[608] virauti goshṭhaḥ saha kāminībhiḥ | ṛicho dvijātiḥ priya-satya-dharmā yathā svaśishyaiḥ parivāryamāṇaḥ). On this verse the late M. Langlois somewhat naïvely remarks as follows, in a note to his French translation of the Hariv. vol. ii. p. 132 : Dans nos moeurs rien n' égalerait l' impertinence d'une comparaison dans laquelle une grenouille serait assimilée à un respectable ecclésiastique. Les Indiens, à ce qu' il paraît, ne voyaient dans telle espèce de rapprochement aucune teinte d' impiété."

The next hymn breathes a social spirit, and a disposition to profit by the improving influences of the company of cultivated men, combined, however, with a vainglorious desire to shine at their expence.

(7). Atharva-veda, VII. 12.

1. Sabhā cha mā samitiś cha avatām Prajāpater duhitarau samvidāne | yenāsangachhai upa mā sa śikshāt chāru vadāni pitaraḥ saṅgateshu | 2.

[608] There seems to be no doubt that this word refers to the frog's eight months quiescence since the close of the preceding rainy season. M. Langlois, who had before him the reading shoḍaśa-paksha-śāryyī, was naturally puzzled by it, and renders it, "La grenouille, dont les flancs sont comme sillonnés par les seize côtes," and he adds a note to the following effect: "Il me semble que, par cette épithète un peu obscure, l' intention de l' auteur est de dépeindre les seize côtes de la grenouille, devenues plus apparentes à la suite des chaleurs de l'été qui ont du l' affaiblir."

Vidma te sabhe nāma narishṭā nāma vai asi | ye te ke cha sabhāsadas te me santu savāchasaḥ | 3. Eshām ahaṁ samāsīnānāṁ varcho vijñānam ādade | asyāḥ sarvasyāḥ saṁsado mām Indra bhaginaṁ kṛiṇu | 4. Yad vo manaḥ parāgataṁ yad baddham iha veha vā | tad vaḥ āvartayāmasi mayi vo ramatām manaḥ |

"1. May Assembly and Meeting, the two daughters of Prajāpati, concurrently preserve me. May every one whom I meet resort to me; may I speak agreeably, o fathers, in the assemblies. 2. Assembly, we know thy name; thy name is conversation. Let all the members of the company converse with me. 3. I appropriate the glory and the knowledge of these men who are seated here. Indra, make me the most distinguished in all this assembly. 4. If your thoughts have turned elsewhere, or are enchained here or there, we cause them to return: let them delight in me."

The hymn of which I next give the first four verses contains a prayer, or incantation, for concord in a family.

(8). Atharva-veda, III. 30.

1. Sahṛidayaṁ sāmmanasyam avidveshaṁ kṛiṇomi vaḥ | anyo anyam abhi haryata vatsaṁ jātam ivāghnyā | 2. Anuvrataḥ pituḥ putro mātrā bhavatu sammanāḥ | jāyā patye madhumatīm vāchaṁ vadatu śantivān | 3. Mā bhrātā bhrātaraṁ dvikshad mā svasāram uta svasā | samyanchaḥ savratāḥ bhūtvā vāchaṁ vadata bhadrayā | 4. Yena devāḥ na viyanti no cha vidvishate mithaḥ | tat kṛiṇmo brahma vo gṛihe saṇjñānam purushebhyaḥ |

"1. I impart to you concord, with unity of hearts and freedom from hatred: delight one in another, as a cow at the birth of a calf. 2. May the son be obedient to his father, and of one mind with his mother: may the wife, at peace with[609] her husband, speak to him honied words. 3. Let not brother hate brother, nor sister sister: concordant and united in will speak to one another, with kind words. 4. We perform in your house an incantation, creating concord among its inmates, and one through which the gods will not desert you, nor mutual hatred exist."[610]

[609] I am unable to give an explanation of the word śantivān, which, though masculine in form, seems to agree with jāyā.

The four hymns of the Atharva-veda which follow contain incantations designed to save persons suffering under dangerous diseases, and on the point of death, from death; or rather perhaps to try to recall their spirits after their separation from the body. They supply various illustrations of the conceptions entertained by the Indians of the period when they were composed, regarding the vital principle, the relations of the different senses to the several elements, the deities by whom men's tenure of life was regulated, the power of incantations to arrest the approach of doom, and other kindred particulars. Some of the ideas which we shall meet here have already occurred in the section on Yama.

(9). Atharva-veda, v. 30.

1. Āvatas te āvataḥ parāvatas te āvataḥ | ihaiva bhava mā nu gāḥ mā pūrvān anu gāḥ pitrīn asum badhnāmi te dṛiḍham | 2. Yat tvā 'bhicheruḥ purushaḥ svo yad araṇo janaḥ | unmochana-pramochane ubhe vāchā vadāmi te | 3. Yad dudrohitha śepishe striyai puṁse achittyā | unmo—| 4. Yad enaso mātṛikṛitāt śeshe pitṛikṛitāt cha yat | unmo—| 5. Yat te mātā yat te pitā jāmir bhrātā cha sarjataḥ | pratyak sevasva bheshajaṁ jaradashṭiṁ kṛiṇomi tvā | 6. Ihaidhi purusha sarveṇa manasā saha | dūtau Yamasya mā 'nugāḥ adhi jīvapurā ihi | 7. Anuhūtaḥ punar ehi vidvān udayanam pathaḥ | ārohaṇam ākramaṇaṁ jīvato jīvato 'yanam | 8. Mā bibher na marishyasi jaradashṭiṁ kṛiṇomi tvā | niravocham ahaṁ yakshmam angebhyo 'ngajvaraṁ tava | 9. Angabhedo angajvaro yaś cha te hṛidayāmayaḥ | yakshmaḥ śyenaḥ iva prāpaptad vāchā sādhaḥ parastarām | 10. Ṛishī Bodhapratībodhāv asvapno yaś cha jāgriviḥ | tau te prāṇasya goptārau divā naktaṁ cha jāgṛitām | 11. Ayam Agnir upasadyaḥ iha sūryaḥ udetu te | udehi mṛityor gambhīrāt kṛishṇāt chit tamasas pari | 12. Namo Yamāya namo astu mṛityave namaḥ pitṛibhyaḥ uta ye nayanti | utpāraṇasya yo veda tam agnim puro dadhe asmai arishṭatātaye | 13.

[610] Three hymns of the Atharva-veda, viz. iii. 19; v. 18, and v. 19, together with two verses (the 8th and 9th) of v. 17, which formed part of this section, as it originally appeared in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1866, pp. 33 ff., are omitted here, as they have subsequently been quoted in the first volume of this work, 2nd Edition, pp. 280-287.

Aitu prāṇaḥ aitu manaḥ aitu chakshur atho balam | śarīram asya saṁ vidāṁ tat padbhyām prati tishṭhatu | 14. Prāṇenāgne chakshushā saṁ sṛijemaṁ samīraya tanvā sam balena | vettha amṛitasya mā nu gāt mā nu bhūmigriho 'bhuvat | 15. Mā te prāṇaḥ upadasat mo apāno 'pi dhāyi te | sūryas tvā 'dhipatir mṛityor udāyachhatu raśmibhiḥ | 16. Iyam antar vadati jihvā baddhā panishpadā | tvayā yakshmaṁ niravochaṁ śataṁ ropīś cha takmanaḥ | 17. Ayaṁ lokaḥ priyatamo devānām aparājitaḥ | yasmai tvam iha mṛityave dishṭaḥ purusha jajnishe | sa cha tvā 'nu hvayāmasi mā purā jaraso mṛithāḥ |

"1. From thy vicinity, from thy vicinity, from a distance, from thy vicinity [I call] to thee: remain here; do not follow, do not follow, the early Fathers. I firmly hold back thy breath. 2. Whatever incantations any kinsman or stranger has uttered against thee, —with my voice I declare thy release and deliverance from them all. 3. Whatever hurt thou hast done, or curse thou hast spoken, in thy folly, against woman or man, with my voice, etc. 4. If thou liest there in consequence of any sin committed by thy mother, or thy father,[611] with my voice, etc. 5. Receive the medicine which thy father, mother, sister and brother offer to thee. I make thee long-lived. 6. Remain here, o man, with thy entire soul; do not follow the two messengers of Yama;[612] come to the abodes of the living. 7. Return when called, knowing the outlet of the path, the ascent, the advance, the road of every living man. 8. Fear not; thou shalt not die; I make thee long-lived. I have charmed out of thy members the consumption by which they are wasted. 9. The consumption

[611] Compare a curious passage from the Taittirīya Brāhmana iii. 7, 12, 3 f., already quoted in p. 66: "May Agni deliver me from any sin which my mother may have committed when I was in her womb, or which my father may have committed. May my parents have received no injury from me, when I, a son, in sucking, squeezed my mother and father in my delight." Compare also R.V. vii. 86, 5, quoted above in the same page, as well as the following texts: R.V. vi. 51, 7, Mā vaḥ eno anyakṛitam bhujema mā tat karma yat chayadhve | "May we not suffer [the penalty of] sin committed by others, or do that which you will punish, o Vasus!" vii, 52, 2, Mā vo bhujema anyajātam eno mā tā karma vasavo yat chayadhve | of nearly identical sense with the preceding text. x. 37, 1[8]. Yad no devāś chakṛima jihvayā guru manaso vā prayutī devaheḷanam | arāvā yo no abhi duchhunāyate tasmin tad eno vasavo ni dhetana | "If we have committed against you any grievous offence, o gods, with our tongues, or through thoughtlessness, transfer (the guilt of) that sin to the enemy who regards us with malice."

[612] See the section on Yama, p. 294.

which racks and wastes thy limbs, and sickens thy heart, has flown away to a distance like a hawk, overcome by my word. 10. The two sages, Alert and Watchful, the sleepless and the vigilant, these the guardians of thy life, are awake both day and night. 11. May this adorable Agni rise here to thee as a sun. Rise up from deep death,[613] yea, even from black darkness.[614] 12. Reverence to Yama, reverence to Death, reverence to the Fathers, and to those who guide us. I place in front of this [sick] man, for his security, Agni, who knows how to carry him across. 13. Let his breath, let his soul, let his sight come, and then his strength; let his body acquire sensation, and stand firm upon its feet. 14. Provide him, Agni, with breath, and with sight; restore him, furnished with a body, and with strength.[615] Thou hast the knowledge of immortality; let him not depart, or become a dweller in a house of clay. 15. Let not thy inhaled breath cease; let not thy exhaled breath vanish. Let the sun, the lord, raise thee up from death by his rays. 16. This tongue speaks within, bound, convulsive. By thee I have charmed away the consumption, and the hundred torments of the fever. 17. This world is the dearest, unconquered by the gods. To whatever death thou wast destined when thou wast born, o man,—we call after thee, do not die before thou art worn out by old age."

(10) Atharva-veda, VII. 53.

1. Amutrabhūyād adhi yad Yamasya Bṛihaspate abhiśaster amunchaḥ | pratyauhatām Aśvinā mṛityum asmad devānām Agne bhishajā śachībhiḥ | 2. Saṁ kramatăm mā jihītaṁ śarīram prāṇāpānau te sayujāv iha stām | śataṁ jīva śaraḍo vardhamāno Agnis te gopāḥ adhipāḥ vasishṭhaḥ | 3. Āyur yat te atihitam parāchair apāṇaḥ prāṇaḥ punar ā tāv itām | Agnis tad āhār nirṛiter upasthāt tad ātmani punar āveśayāmi te | 4. Mā imam prāṇo hāsīd mo apāno avahāya parā gāt | sapta ṛiskibhyaḥ enam paridadāmi te enaṁ svasti jarase vahantu | 5. Praviśatam prāṇāpānāv anaḍvāhāv iva vrajam | ayaṁ jarimṇaḥ śevadhir arishṭaḥ iha vardhatām | 6. Ā te prāṇaṁ suvāmasi parā yakshmaṁ suvāmi te | āyur no viśvato

[613] Compare the ἀπὸς ὀλεθρος of Homer.

[614] Already quoted in the section on Yama, p. 312.

[615] Compare the section just referred to, p. 297 ff.

dadhad ayam Agnir varenyaḥ | 7. Ud vayaṁ tamasas pari rohanto nākam uttamam | devaṁ devatrā sūryam aganma jyotir uttamam |

"1. Bṛihaspati, thou hast delivered us from dwelling in the realm of Yama, from the curse. The Aśvins,—they who, o Agni, are the two physicians of the gods,—they have repelled death from us by their powers. 2. Continue associated, ye two breaths, inspired and expired; forsake not his body: may they, united, remain with thee here. Live prosperously a hundred autumns. Agni is thy brilliant protector and lord. 3. May thy life, which has been dissipated afar, may thy breaths, come back to thee again. Agni has snatched it from the lap of Nirṛiti (Destruction): and I introduce it again into thyself. 4. Let not his inspiration abandon him, nor his expiration quit him and depart. I commit him to the seven Rishis; may they carry him on in health to old age. 5. Enter into him, ye two breaths, like two steers forcing their way into a cow-pen. May this man flourish here, an unmolested depositary of old age. 6. We restore thy breath. I drive away consumption from thee. May this excellent Agni sustain our life on every side. 7. Ascending from the darkness to the uppermost heaven, we have reached, among the gods, the god Sūrya, the highest luminary."

(11) Atharva-veda, VIII. 1.

1. Antakāya mṛityave namaḥ prāṇāḥ apānāḥ iha te ramantām | ihāyam astu purushaḥ sahāsunā sūryasya bhāge amṛitasya loke | 2. Ud enam Bhago agrabhīd ud enaṁ Somo aṁśumān | ud enam Maruto devāḥ ud Indrāgnī svastaye | 3. Iha te asur iha prāṇaḥ ihāyur iha te manaḥ | ut tvā Nirṛityāḥ pāśebhyo daivyā vāchā bharāmasi | 4. Utkrāma ataḥ purusha mā 'va patthāḥ mṛityoḥ paḍbīśam avamunchamānaḥ | mā chhitthāḥ asmāl lokād agneḥ sūryasya sandṛiśeḥ | 5. Tubhyaṁ vātaḥ pavatām mātariśvā tubhyaṁ varshantu amṛitāni āpaḥ | sūryas te tanve śaṁ tapāti tvām mṛityur dayatām mā pra meshṭhāḥ | 6. Udyānaṁ te puruṣha nāvayānam jīvātuṁ te dakshatātiṁ kṛiṇomi | ā hi rohemam amṛitaṁ sukhaṁ ratham atha jivrir vidatham ā vadāsi | 7. Mā te manas tatra gād mā tiro bhūd mā jīvebhyaḥ pra mado mā 'nugāḥ pitṛīn | viśve devāḥ abhi rakshantu tveha | 8. Mā gatānām ā dīdhīthāḥ ye nayanti parāvatam | ā roha tamaso jyotir ehy ā te hastau rabhāmahe | 9. S'yāmaś

cha tvā mā śabalaś cha preshitau Yamasya yau pathirakshī śvānau | arvāñ ehi mā vi dīdhyo mā 'tra tishṭha parāñmanāḥ | 10. Mā etam panthām anu gāḥ bhīmaḥ esha yena pūrvaṁ na īyatha tam bravīmi | tamaḥ etat purusha mā pra patthāḥ bhayam parastād abhayaṁ te arvāk | 11. Rakshantu tvā agnayo ye apsu antā rakshatu tvā manushyāḥ yam indhate | vaiśvānaro rakshatu jātavedāḥ divyas tvá mā dhāg vidyutā saha | 12. Mā tvā kravyād abhi maṁsta ārāt saṁkasukāt charaṇ | rakshatu tvā Dyauḥ rakshatu Pṛithivī sūryaś cha tvā rakshatāṁ chandramāś cha | antarikshaṁ rakshatu devahetyāḥ | 13. Bodhaś cha tvā Pratībodhaś cha rakshatām | Asvapnaś cha tvā Anavadrāṇaś cha rakshatām | Gopāyaṁś cha tvā Jāgriviś cha | 14. Te tvā rakshantu te tvā gopāyantu tebhyo namas tebhyaḥ svāhā | 15. Jīvebhyas tvā samude Vāyur Indro Dhātā dadhātu Savitā trāyamāṇaḥ | mā tvā prāṇo balaṁ hāsīd asuṁ te 'nu hvayāmasi | 16. Mā tvā jambhaḥ saṁhanur mā tamo vidad mā jihvā barhiḥ pramayuḥ kathā syāḥ | ut tvā Ādityāḥ Vasavo bharantu ud Indrāgnī svastaye | 17. Ut tvā Dyaur 'ut Pṛithivī ut Prajāpatir agrabhīt | ut tvā mṛityor oshadhayo somarājñīr apīparan | 18. Ayaṁ devāḥ ihaivāstu ayam mā 'mutra gād itaḥ | imaṁ sahaśravīryeṇa mṛityor utpārayāmasi | 19. Ut tvā mṛityor apīparaṁ saṁ dhamantu vayodhasaḥ | mā tvā vyastakeśyo mā tvā agharudo rudan | 20. Āhārsham avidaṁ tvā punar āgāḥ punarṇavaḥ | sarvāngaḥ sarvaṁ te chakshuḥ sarvam āyuś cha te 'vidam | 21. Vyavāt te jyotir abhūd apa tvat tamo akramīt | apa tvad mṛityuṁ nirṛitim apa yakshmaṁ ni dadhmasi |

"1. Reverence to Death the Ender! May thy inhaled and exhaled breaths gladly rest here. May this man remain here united with his spirit in the domain of the sun, in the world of deathlessness. 2. Bhaga and Soma with his filaments, the divine Maruts, Indra, and Agni, have raised him up to health. Here is thy spirit, here thy breath, here thy life, here thy soul. We rescue thee from the bonds of Nirṛiti by a divine utterance. 4. Rise up hence, o man. Casting off the fetters of death, do not sink downward. Do not depart from this world, from the sight of Agni and the Sun., 5. May the Wind, Mātariśvan, blow for thee; may the waters shower immortality (or ambrosia) on thee; may the Sun shine healingly upon thy body; may Death pity thee; do not die. 6. Thou must ascend, o man, and not descend; I give thee life and perceptive power. Mount this pleasant and imperishable car, then, when aged, thou shalt declare a festival. 7. Let not thy soul go away thither, let it not disappear; do not wander away from the living; do not follow the Fathers. May all the gods preserve thee. 8. Do not long after the departed, who conduct men afar. Ascend from the darkness; come into the light. We lay hold of thy hands. 9. Let not the two dogs sent by Yama,[616] the black and the brindled [seize thee]. Come hither; do not hesitate; do not remain here with averted mind. 10. Do not follow this path; it is terrible; I speak of that by which thou hast not hitherto gone. This, o man, is darkness; do not enter it. Beyond, thou hast fear; on this side, thou hast security. 11. May the fires which are in the waters preserve thee; may the fire which men kindle preserve thee; may Jātavedas Vaiśvānara (the fire, which is common to all men) preserve thee; let not the celestial fire, together with the lightning, consume thee. 12. Let not the flesh-devouring fire[617] seek to harm thee; go far from that wicked one. May the sky, the earth, the sun, and moon, preserve thee; may the air protect thee from the bolt of the gods. 13. May Wakeful and Watchful, may Sleepless and Wakeful preserve thee. May Guardian and Vigilant protect thee. 14. May they protect and guard thee. To them be reverence. 15. May Vāyu, Indra, Dhātṛi, and Savitṛi the deliverer, restore thee to converse with the living. Let not breath and strength abandon thee; we call back thy spirit. 16. Let not any destructive demon, let not darkness find thee .... May the Ādityas and Vasus, with Indra and Agni, raise thee up to health. 17. The sky, the earth, Prajāpati have rescued thee. The plants with Soma their king, have delivered thee from death. 18. Let this man remain here, o gods; let him not depart hence to the other world. We rescue him from death with a charm of boundless efficacy. 19. I have delivered thee from death; may the vigorous breathe upon thee.[618] Let not the she-devils with dishevelled hair, or those that howl dreadfully, yell at thee. 20. I have snatched thee; I have caught thee; thou hast returned renewed, and perfect in thy members: I have obtained thy entire eye, and thy entire life. 21.

[616] See A.V. v. 30, 6, above.

[617] There are three kinds of fire, the kravyād, or funeral (here referred to), which devours dead bodies, the culinary (śamād), and the sacrificial. See the Vāj. S. i. 17, and the commentary there, and above, p. 217, note.

[618] See the 4th verse of the next hymn.

[Life] has breathed upon thee. Light has come to thee. Darkness has departed from thee. We remove from thee death, Nirṛiti and consumption."

(12) Atharva-veda, VIII. 2.

1. Ārabhasva imām amṛitasya śrushṭim achhidyamānā jaradashṭir astu te | asuṁ te āyuḥ punar ā bharāmi rajas tamo mopagāḥ mā pra meshṭhāḥ | 2. Jīvatāṁ jyotir abhyehi arvāṅ ā tvā harāmi śataśāradāya | avamunchan mṛityupāśān aśastiṁ drāghīyaḥ āyuḥ prataraṁ te dadhāmi | 3. Vātāt te prāṇam avidaṁ sūryāch chakshur ahaṁ tava | yat te manas tvayi tad dhārayāmi saṁ vitsva angair vada jihvayā "lapan | 4. Prāṇena tvā dvipadāṁ chatushpadām agnim iva jātam abhi saṁ dhamāmi | namas te mṛityo chakshushe namaḥ prāṇāya te 'karam | 5. Ayaṁ jīvatu mā mṛita imaṁ samīrayāmasi | kṛiṇomi asmai bheshajam mṛityo mā purushaṁ vadhīḥ | 6. Jīvalaṁ naghārishāṁ jīvantīm oshadhīm aham | trāyamāṇāṁ sahamānāṁ sahasvatīm iha huve asmai arishṭatātaye | 7. Adhi brūhi mā "rabhathāḥ sṛijemaṁ tavaiva san sarvahāyāḥ ihāstu | Bhavāśarvau mṛiḍataṁ śarma yachhatam apasidhya duritaṁ dhattam āyuḥ | 8. Asmai mṛityo adhi brūhi imaṁ dayasva ud ito 'yam etu | arishṭaḥ sarvāngaḥ suśruj jarasā śatahāyanaḥ ātmanā bhujam aśnutām | 9. Devānāṁ hetiḥ pari tvā vṛiṇaktu pārayāmi tvā rajasaḥ ut tvā mṛityor apīparam | ārād agniṁ kravyādaṁ nirūhan jīvātave te paridhiṁ dadhāmi | 10. Yat te niyānaṁ rajasam mṛityo anavadharshyam | pathaḥ imaṁ tasmād rakshanto brahmāsmai varma kṛiṇmasi | 11. Kṛiṇomi te prāṇāpanau jarām mṛityum dīrgham āyuḥ svasti | Vaivasvatena prahitān yamadūtāṁś charato 'pa sedhāmi sarvān | 12. Ārād arātim nirṛitim paro grāhiṁ kravyādaḥ piśāchān | raksho yat sarvaṁ durbhūtaṁ tat tamaḥ ivāpa hanmasi | 13. Agnes te prāṇam amṛitād āyushmato vanve jātavedasaḥ | yathā na rishyāḥ amṛitaḥ sajūr asas tat te kṛiṇomi tad u te samṛidhyatām | 14. Śive te stāṁ Dyāvāpṛithivī asantāpe abhiśriyau | śaṁ te sūryaḥ ā tapatu śaṁ vāto vātu te hṛide | Śivāḥ ābhi ksharantu tvā āpo divyāḥ payasvatīḥ | 15. Śivās te santv oshadhayaḥ ut tvā "hārsham adharasyāḥ uttarāṁ pṛithivīm abhi | tatra tvā "dityau rakshatām Sūryāchandramasāv ubhā | 16. Yat te vāsaḥ paridhānaṁ yāṁ nīviṁ kṛiṇushe tvam | śivaṁ te tanve tat kṛiṇmaḥ saṁsparśe 'rūkshṇam astu te | 17. Yat kshureṇa marchayatā sutejasā vaptā vapasi keśaśmaśru | śumbhan mukham mā naḥ āyuḥ pra moshīḥ | 18. Śivau te stāṁ

vrīhi-yavāv abalasāv adomadhau | etau yakshmaṁ vi bādhete etau munchato aṁhasaḥ | 19. Yad āśnāsi yat pibasi dhānyaṁ kṛishyāḥ payaḥ | yad ādyaṁ yad anādyaṁ sarvaṁ te annam avishaṁ kṛiṇomi | 20. Ahne cha tvā rātraye cha ubhābhyām pari dadmasi | arāyebhgo jighatsubhyaḥ imam me pari rakshata | 21. S'atáṁ te ayutaṁ hāyanān dve yuge trīṇi chatvāri kṛiṇmaḥ | Indrāgnī viśve devās te anumanyantām ahṛiṇīyamānāḥ | 22. S'arade tvā hemanṭāya vasantāya grīshmāya pari dadmasi | varshāṇi tubhyaṁ syonāni yeshu vardhante oshadhīḥ | 23. Mṛityur īśe dvipadām mṛityur īśe chatushpadām | tasmāt tvām mṛityor gopater udbharāmi sa mā bibheḥ | 24. So 'ṛishṭa na marishyasi na marishyasi mā bibheḥ | na vai tatra mriyante no yanti adhamaṁ tamaḥ | 25. Sarvo vai tatra jīvati gaur aśvaḥ purushaḥ paśuḥ | yatredam brahma kriyate paridhir jīvanāya kam | 26. Pari tvā pātu samānebhyo abhichārāt sabandhubhyaḥ | amamrir bhava amṛito atijīvo mā te hāsishur asavaḥ śarīram | 27. Ye mṛityavaḥ ekaśataṁ yāḥ nāshṭrāḥ atitāryāḥ | munchantu tasmāt tvāṁ devāḥ agner vaiśvanarād adhi | 28. Agneḥ śarīram asi pārayishṇuḥ rakshohā 'si sapatnahā | atho amīva-chātanaḥ pūtudrur nāma bheshajam |

"1. Seize this boon of immortality; may long life, which cannot be cut off, be thine. I restore to thee breath and life; do not depart to the mist (rajas) or to darkness (tamas); do not die. 2. Come hither to the light of the living; I rescue thee that thou mayest survive a hundred autumns. Loosing the bands of death and imprecation, I lengthen out thy existence. 3. I have recovered thy breath from the wind, thine eye from the sun.[619] I place in thee thy soul. Receive sensation in thy limbs. Speak, articulating with thy tongue. 4. I blow upon thee with the breath of bipeds, and of quadrupeds, as on Agni when he is born (i.e. on fire when kindled). I have paid reverence, o Death, to thine eye, and to thy breath. 5. Let this man live and not die. We restore him. I make for him a remedy. Death, do not kill the man. 6. I invoke for his safety a vivifying . . . . , living, delivering, strong, and powerful plant. 7. Befriend him; do not seize him; let him go; though he is thine only, let him abide here with all his strength; o Bhava and Sarva, be gracious; grant deliverance; remove evil and confer life. 8. Befriend him, Death, pity him; let him arise. Unharmed, with all his limbs, hearing perfectly, till his time of decay, let him obtain enjoyment during a life of a hundred years. 9. May the shaft of the gods pass thee by; I bring thee across from the mist (see v. 1); I have rescued thee from death. Removing far away the flesh devouring Agni, I draw round thee a circle (see R.V. x. 18, 4) that thou mayest live. 10. Preserving him from that misty egress of thine, o Death, which no one may escape by menaces, we make prayer a protection for him. 11. I give thee thy breaths, death at thy full age,[620] long life and health. I drive away all the messengers of Yama, who roam about, sent by the son of Vivasvat. 12. We remove afar Evil, Nirṛiti, Grāhi, and flesh-devouring Piśāchas, and hurl all wicked Rakshases, as it were into darkness. 13. I ask thy life from the immortal, living, Agni, Jātavedas. I procure that thou mayest suffer no injury, that thou mayest also be immortal. May this be the fortunate result. 14. May heaven and earth in unison be auspicious and innocuous to thee. May the sun shine and the wind blow pleasantly to thy heart. May the celestial streaming waters drop down upon thee favourably. 15. May the plants be auspicious to thee. I have raised thee from the lower to the upper earth. There may both the sons of Aditi, the Sun and the Moon,[621] preserve thee. 16. Whatever garment for clothing, or whatever girdle thou makest for thyself, we cause it to be agreeable to thy body; may it be soft to thy touch. 17. When, as a barber, thou shavest our hair and beard with a sharp and cleansing razor, while cleansing our face, do not rob us of our life. 18. Let the rice and barley be auspicious to thee, causing no consumption or other ailment. These two (grains) destroy consumption, and deliver from calamity. 19. Whatever thou eatest or drinkest, the grain derived from husbandry, or liquid, whatever is or is not to be eaten—all that food I render for thee free from poison. 20. We commit thee to both the Day and the Night; preserve him for me from the goblins who seek to devour him. 21. We allot to thee a hundred, ten thousand, years, two, three, four, ages (yugas).[622] May Indra and Agni, may all [620] Compare A.V. xix. 24, 4, 5, 8.

[619] See above in the section on Yama, p. 298.

[621] The Moon is not in the Vedas generally reckoned among the Ādityas. See above, p. 54 f.

[622] It would be difficult to say how great a duration is here denoted by this word; but it must be one of great length, if the long periods of years, which are mentioned just before, may be taken as any indication. See the first vol. of this work, pp. 45 f.

the gods regard thee favourably, without hostility. 22. We commit thee to autumn, winter, spring, summer. May the rains be pleasant to thee, in which the plants grow up. 23. Death rules over bipeds; death rules over quadrupeds. From that Death the ruler I rescue thee; do not fear. 24. Thou, who art uninjured, shalt not die; thou shalt not die; do not fear. They do not die there; they do not go to the nethermost darkness, (25) every thing lives there, cow, horse, man, beast, in the place where this prayer is used, the bulwark of life. 26. May it preserve thee from curse from thy equals and friends. Be undying, immortal, long-lived; let not thy breaths abandon thy body. 27. May the gods deliver thee from those hundred deaths, from those dangers which are surpassable, and from that Agni Vaiśvānara (fire of the funeral pile?). 28. Thou, the medicament named Pūtudru (Butea frondosa), art the body of Agni, the deliverer, the slayer of Rakshases, and of rivals, and thou art the chaser away of diseases."

SECTION XXIII.

BRIEF NOTES ON SOCIETY AND LIFE IN THE VEDIC AGE, AS REPRESENTED IN THE HYMNS.

In the Introductions to the first three Volumes of his translation of the Rig-veda (vol. i. pp. xl ff.; vol. ii. pp. xv ff.; vol. iii. xiv ff.), Professor Wilson has adduced from the hymns a variety of facts illustrative of the social and political condition of the people of India, and of the advance which they had made in civilization at the period when those hymns were composed. I propose in this section to bring forward such further particulars, connected with the same subjects, as I have noticed in the hymns, without excluding the topics already elucidated by Professor Wilson.

It is not only the facts which are directly stated or implied, in regard to the various subjects of inquiry, which may be understood as supplying the requisite information. References of a corresponding character made to the gods, their dwellings, dress, ornaments, chariots, weapons, etc., may (as in such a stage of religious progress, more especially, men frame their gods after their own image magnified and idealized) be taken as applicable, mutatis mutandis, to their worshippers.

(1.) Country occupied by the Vedic people, their villages and cities.

The country originally occupied in India by the Vedic people was the tract watered by the seven rivers, the modern Panjāb; but they gradually extended themselves to the eastward and southward; and in R.V. iv. 36, 18 reference is made to two enemies living beyond (i.e. no doubt east of) the Sarayu (uta tyā sadyaḥ āryā Sarayor Indra pārataḥ Arṇachitrarathā 'vadhīḥ). For details I refer to the second volume of this work, pp. 373 ff. This country was no doubt in part cultivated, as we shall see that frequent references are made to agriculture. But probably large tracts were covered by forests, which are sometimes referred to. See the references to Agni consuming the woods, above (p. 212); and the hymn to Araṇyānī, quoted in p. 422.

As in our own day, in the north-west provinces of India and the Panjab, the houses, in places remote from the hills, and where the soil is alluvial, without any supply of stone, were no doubt constructed of mud.[623] Villages (grāma) are mentioned in R.V. i. 114, 1 (viśvam pushṭam asmin grāme anāturam | "may everything in this village be fat and healthy"); i. 44, 10 (asi grāmeshu avitā | "Thou (Agni) art the protector in (our) villages"); i. 149, 4 (gāvaḥ iva grāmam | "as cattle come to a village"); and x. 146, 1 quoted above.

Cities or fortified places (pur) are also constantly mentioned. In one place it is said that Indra demolished a hundred cities of stone in favour of the liberal Divodāsa, iv. 30, 20, that (śatam aśmanmayīnām purām Indro vi āsyat | Divodāsāya dāśushe). Even if we should suppose this was a mythological reference to the aerial cities of the Asuras (comp. x. 67, 3), it might be received as evidence that they had as their prototypes stone-built cities on the earth, a circumstance in itself by no means improbable in tracts of country bordering on the hills, where stone is abundant. Iron cities or fortifications (puraḥ āyasīḥ) are mentioned in R.V. i. 58, 8; ii. 20, 8; iv. 27, 1; vii. 3, 7; vii. 15, 14; vii. 95, 1; viii. 89, 8; x. 101, 8, where the reference is either figurative or purely fanciful and mythological. Cities with a hundred enclosures or fortifications (śatabhujī) are referred to in i. 166, 8; vii. 15, 14; and although they are only alluded to as figurative expressions of the means of protection afforded by the gods, they no doubt suggest the idea of forts, consisting apparently of a series of concentric walls, as actually existing in the country at the time.

(2) Religious worship.

Let the reader try to conceive himself as living 3000 years ago or upwards in the province of India which has been above described. At that period the Indo-Aryans had for some time been settled in that region, and had begun to consider it as their home, though they were still molested by the barbarous tribes of another stock, and of a ruder religion, who had been previously in possession of the country, and naturally looked upon the intruders with dislike and dread. Conscious of their own superiority, and strong in their faith in the protection of their ancestral gods, the Aryans regarded these aboriginal tribes and their savage rites and character with abhorrence not unmingled with apprehension. We shall therefore suppose one of the small outlying village settlements of the Aryans to be situated on the edge of a forest, part of which has been cut down, cleared, and cultivated. The population has already multiplied to a considerable extent, and (as we shall see further on) a division of labour has been long established. The more thoughtful and contemplative class has now devoted itself to the worship of the gods; the more enterprizing and warlike members of the community have assumed authority over the rest; the great mass of the people follow the occupations of trade and husbandry; while a gradually increasing number of the adjoining barbarians is becoming incorporated in the growing society as slaves or handicraftsmen of the lowest description.

[623] Bricks (ishṭakā) are frequently mentioned in the Brāhmaṇas as used for the construction of vedis, or altars, but they may have been unbaked.

Returning home in the evening through the forest, a member of one of the priestly families, who is at the same time of a poetical temperament, experiences emotions such as are sketched in the hymn to Araṇyānī, which is quoted above in p. 422. Anxious to propitiate the favour of the gods, and to worship them all with the customary ceremonies, he is frequently found watching during the night (not without apprehension of attack from the aboriginal tribes lurking in the adjoining thickets, or from the howling goblins with which his imagination peoples the surrounding darkness), and looking for the signs by which he supposes the earliest appearance of the deities who usher in the day to be indicated. The hymns which are addressed to these divinities, the two Aśvins and to Ushas (the Dawn), at least those which salute the arrival of the latter, do not spring from devotion alone, but are the product of a deep poetical feeling, and a delicate imaginative power. The Aśvins are the first to appear, the time of their manifestation being (as we have seen, p. 234) defined as that between midnight and the earliest manifestation of light; and their supposed advent is hailed with suitable hymns. Then, as the first streaks of the ruddy dawn become visible in the east, the poet breaks out into an enthusiastic burst of devotion to the lovely goddess Ushas, who every morning renews her youth. Preparation is now made for the birth of the sacred Agni, who springs into life as soon as the physical instruments of his generation are brought into contact, is then duly lauded by his votary, and is imagined immediately to proceed as a messenger to summon the gods to whom sacrifice is to be offered by their worshipper. Soon after Sūrya (the sun) shoots up above the horizon, darting his rays across the firmament, and illuminating everything with his splendour; and receives, under a variety of forms or epithets, the adoration of the delighted poet. In the hot season, when the ground has been parched by long drought, and all eyes are turned to the gathering clouds in the hope that they will soon discharge their watery treasures, Parjanya, the raingod, is besought to send rain; and Indra, the regent of the firmament, and the storm-gods, the Maruts, are supplicated to fulfil the functions which the imagination of their worshippers has assigned to them, of combating the malignant demons of the atmosphere, and compelling them to yield up the waters which they keep shut up in the clouds. The other gods, or a select number of them, are then invoked. Along with the recitation of hymns and prayers, various sorts of oblations are offered up at different periods of the day, to the several deities.

(3) Did the Vedic Indians make images of their gods?

Professor Müller (Chips from a German Workshop, i. 38) answers this question in the negative. "The religion of the Veda," he says, "knows of no idols. The worship of idols in India is a secondary formation, a later degradation of the more primitive worship of ideal gods." On the other hand, Dr. Bollensen finds in the hymns clear references to images of the gods (Journal of the German Oriental Society, xxii. 587 ff.). He writes, "From the common appellation of the gods as divo naras, 'men of the sky,' or simply naras (lares?), 'men,' and from the epithet nṛipeśas,[624] 'having the form of men,' R.V. iii. 4, 5, we may conclude that the Indians did not merely in [624] Professor Roth s.v. says that according to Sāyaṇa the word means "having the form of men," but perhaps signifies "formed, or adorned by men."

imagination assign human forms to their gods, but also represented them in a sensible manner. Thus in R.V. ii. 33, 9, a painted image of Rudra is described: sthirebhir angaiḥ pururūpaḥ ugraḥ babhruś śukrebhiḥ pipiśe hiraṇyaiḥ | 'With strong limbs, many-formed, awful, brown, he is painted with shining golden colours.' R.V. i. 25, 13 (where it is said of Varuṇa, that, 'wearing a golden coat of mail, he veils himself in his radiance; spies sit round him') appears also to refer to a sensible representation." . . . . "Still clearer appears the reference to representations in the form of an image in v. 52, 15: nū manvānaḥ eshāṁ devān aścha (the editions of Professor Müller and Aufrecht both read achhā) | 'I now pray to the gods of these (Maruts).' Here it seems that the Maruts are distinguished from their gods, i.e. from their images." . . . . "Besides the common expression vapus, tanu, rūpa ['body' and 'form'], there is in the oldest language one which properly denotes an image of the gods, viz., sandṛiś." Much more is added in support of the same view. It is perhaps premature to attempt to decide on the validity of these proofs till it is seen what can be urged on the opposite side.

(4) Kings and principalities.

Kings are frequently mentioned in the hymns, i. 40, 8; i. 126, 1; iii. 43, 5; v. 37, 4; x. 33, 4, etc. In i. 85, 8, the Maruts are said to be of awful aspect, like kings (rājānāḥ iva tvesha-sandṛiśaḥ). The country occupied by the Aryas was no doubt peopled by various tribes[625] and divided into numerous principalities. In R.V. i. 126, 1, a king called Bhāvya is celebrated, who dwelt on the banks of the Sindhu, or Indus (amandān stomān prabhare manīshā Sindhāv adhi kshiyato Bhāvyasya | yo me sahasram amimīta savān atūrto rājā śravaḥ ichhamānaḥ). In viii. 21, 18, Chitra and other chiefs are alluded to as living near the Sarasvatī (Chitraḥ id rājā rājakāḥ anyake yake Sarasvatīm anu). Ten kings are alluded to as having fought against Sudās, vii. 33, 3; vii. 83, 6 ff. (see the 1st vol. of this work, pp. 319, 323 f.). Numerous names of kings occur in the Rig-veda. The meetings, whether friendly or hostile, of princes are alluded to, x. 97, 6 (rājānaḥ samitāv iva). In vii. 18, 2, Indra is represented as living in the society of his wives like a king, or dwelling amid lights, as a king among his wives, as Sāyaṇa explains: (rājeva hi janībhiḥ ksheshi eva ava dyubhiḥ), which appears to indicate the existence of royal polygamy. In x. 40, 3, the Aśvins are said to come to the libations like two kings' sons (rājaputreva savanā 'va gachhataḥ). When Mitra and Varuṇa are represented in ii. 41, 5; v. 62, 6, and vii. 88, 5 (see above, p. 60), as occupying a great palace with a thousand pillars and a thousand gates, we may suppose that this is but an exaggerated description of a royal residence, such as the poets had seen.[626] And in the same way we may imagine that the description of Varuṇa in i. 25, 10, 13 (above, p. 59), as sitting in his house, arrayed in golden mail or raiment, surrounded by his messengers and exercising sovereignty, was suggested by the ceremonial of a contemporary Rājā's court. It appears from R.V. iv. 50, 8 (quoted in the 1st vol. of this work, p. 247), that it was regarded as eminently beneficial for a king to entertain a family priest: and in point of fact we find that the liberality of different princes to the rishis or priests by whom they were attended is celebrated in numerous passages (see the 1st vol. of this work, p. 259, and my article "On the relations of the priests to the other classes of Indian society in the Vedic age," Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, for 1866, pp. 272 ff., where the names of numerous royal patrons are specified). The amount and variety of the presents lavished by these kings upon their spiritual advisers, consisting of cows, sometimes amounting to thousands (v. 30, 12 ff.), horses, chariots, lumps of gold (vi. 47, 23), dresses (daśāsvān daśa kośān daśa vastrā 'dhibhojanā | daśo hiranyapiṇḍān Divodāsād asānisham | daśa rathān prashṭimataḥ śataṁ gāḥ atharvabhyaḥ Aśvathaḥ Pāyave dadāt), and elegantly-adorned female slaves (viii. 46, 33, adha syā yoshaṇā mahī pratīchī Vaśam Aśvyam | adhirukmā vi nīyate), even although we should suppose,—as we probably must,—that there is a great amount of exaggeration in the passages referred to, viz., i. 126, 1 ff.; v. 27, 2; v. 30, 12 ff.; v. 33, 8 ff.; v. 61, 10; vi. 27, 8; vi. 47, 22 ff.; vi. 63, 9 f.; vii. 18, 22 ff.; viii. 3, 21 ff.; viii. 4, 19 ff.; viii. 5, 37 ff.; viii. 6, 46 ff.; viii. 19, 36 f.; viii. 21, 17 f.; viii. 24, 29 f.; viii. 46, 21 ff.; viii. 54, 10 ff.; viii. 57, 14; x. 33, 4 ff.; x.

[625] See Roth, Zur Litteratur und Geschichte des Weda, pp. 131 ff.

[626] A.V. iii. 12, and ix. 3 contain prayers for the stability of a house at the time of its construction.

62, 6 ff.; x. 93, 14 f., is still a proof that very considerable wealth was possessed by these princes. One chieftain, Kaśu, son of Chedi, is even said to have given to the rishi ten kings, brilliant as gold, viii. 5, 38 (yo me hiraṇya-sandṛiśo daśa rājno amaṁhata).

Towards the close of the Rig-veda two hymns occur (x. 173 and 174) in which blessings are invoked on a king. I shall quote the first, x. 173:—

1. Ā tvā 'hārsham antar edhi dhruvaḥ tishṭhāvichāchalih | viśas tvā sarvāḥ vānchantu mā tvad rāshṭram adhi bhraśat | 2. Ihaivaidhi māpa chyoshṭhāḥ parvataḥ ivāchāchalih | Indraḥ iveha dhruvas tishṭha iha rāshṭram u dhāraya | 3. Imam Indro adīdharad dhruvaṁ dhruveṇa havishā | tasmai Somo adhi bravat tasmai u Brahmaṇaspatiḥ | 4. Dhruvā dyaur dhruvā pṛithivī dhruvāsaḥ parvatāḥ ime | dhruvaṁ viśvam idaṁ jagad dhruvo rājā viśām ayam | 5. Dhruvaṁ te rājā Varuṇo dhruvaṁ devo Bṛihaspatiḥ | dhruvaṁ te Indraś cha Agniś cha rāshṭraṁ dhārayatāṁ dhruvam | 6. Dhruvaṁ dhruveṇa havishā abhi Somam mṛiśāmasi | atho te Indraḥ kevalīr viśo balihṛitas karat |

"I have brought thee forward; remain in the midst; continue firm and immovable; may all thy subjects desire thee! may thy dominion not fall away from thee! 2. Remain here; do not fall; continue immovable as a mountain; abide here as firm as Indra; support here the realm. 3. Indra with a firm oblation has held him firm; may Soma, may Brahmaṇaspati, take his part. 4. Firm is the sky, firm the earth, firm these hills, firm is the whole world, and this prince is a firmly-established king over his subjects. 5. May king Varuṇa, may the divine Bṛihaspati, may Indra and Agni firmly maintain thy rule! 6. We urge the firm Soma with a firm oblation. And now may Indra make thy subjects devoted to thee alone, and bringers of tribute."

Mention is also made of rulers or governors under the title of pūrpati, lord of a city or fortified place (i. 173, 10), and grāmaṇī ruler of a village, or tribe, or band of men. The latter word occurs in x. 62, 11: sahasradāḥ grāmaṇīr ma rishan manuḥ sūryeṇāsya yātamānā etu dakshiṇā | "Let not this man (Sāvarṇi), the leader of the people, suffer calamity: let his largess extend to the sun;"[627] and in x. 107, 5, dakshiṇāvān grāmaṇīr agram eti | "The bestower of largesses walks in the front as a leader" (see above, p. 434).

[627] See the context in my paper on the priests in the Vedic age, Jour. R.A.S. for 1866, p. 276.

(5) Different ranks in society,—rich and poor.

As may be concluded from the facts already stated, we find in the hymns a distinct reference to rich and poor as existing in the community. See R.V. x. 117, quoted above in page 431, where the existence of both classes is distinctly recognized, and liberality on the part of the wealthy is recommended. In x. 107, 10, the house of the donor of largesses is compared to a lotus pond, and is said to be embellished like a palace of the gods (above, p. 434, and compare x. 135, 7). In viii. 4, 9, the man who is a friend of Indra is said to have horses, chariots, cows; to be handsome, to enjoy vigorous vitality, and to come resplendent into the assembly (aśvī rathī surūpaḥ id gomāṇ id Indra te sakhā | śvātrabhājā vayasā sachate sadā chandro yāti sabhām upa).

(6) Domestic relations and life and morals.

There are in the hymns distinct traces of the existence of polygamy, though it was no doubt the exception, and monogamy the rule. In some places the husband appears to be described as having only one wife, if we may judge from the fact that the latter is mentioned in the singular. Thus in i. 124, 7, Ushas is said to display her form, as if smiling, as a loving and well-dressed wife does to her husband (jāyā iva patye uśatī suvāsāḥ Ushāḥ hasrā iva ni riṇīte apsaḥ; compare iv. 3, 2, and x. 71, 4). And in i. 105, 2, it is said ā jāyā yuvate patim | "The wife embraces her husband." In other places a plurality of wives is more or less distinctly intimated. Thus in i. 62, 11: patiṁ na patnīr uśatīr uśantam spṛiśanti tvā śavasāvan manīshāḥ | "Our hymns touch thee, o strong god, as loving wives a loving husband;" i. 71, 1: upa pra jinvann uśatīr uśantam patiṁ na nityaṁ janayaḥ saṇīḷāḥ | svasāraḥ | "The loving sisters [i.e. fingers] have stirred up the loving [Agni], as wives dwelling together their own husbands;"[628] i. 105, 8 (=x. 33, 2): sam mā tapanti abhitaḥ sapatnīr iva parśavaḥ | "My ribs" (or, according to the Nirukta and Sāyaṇa, the sides of the well) "press painfully on me all around, like rival wives (literally,

[628] I should observe that both Sāyaṇa and Professor Benfey construe the epithet saṇīḷāḥ "dwelling together, or in one house" with svasāraḥ "the sisters," and not with janayaḥ "wives."

co-wives);" i. 186, 7: tam īṁ giro janayo na patnīḥ surabhishṭamaṁ narāṁ nasanta | "Hymns haste to him the most pleasing of heroes, as women who are wives;" vii. 26, 3: janīr iva patir ekaḥ samāno ni mamṛije puraḥ Indraḥ su sarvāḥ | "Indra took to him all the cities, as (one) common husband his wives;" x. 43, 1: pari shvajante janayo yathā patim | "[The hymns] embrace [Indra] as wives a husband." The Śatap. Br. ix 1, 4, 6, distinctly avows the principle of polygamy, and states the origin of the practice after its own fashion: Puṁse pūrvasmai juhoti atha strībhyaḥ | pumāṁsaṁ tad-vīryeṇa atyādadhāti | ekasmai iva puṁse juhoti bahvībhyaḥ iva strībhyaḥ | tasmād apy ekasya puṁso bahvyo jāyāḥ bhavanti | ubhābhyāṁ vashaṭkāreṇa cha svāhākareṇa cha puṁse juhoti svāhākareṇa eva strībhyaḥ | pumāṁsam eva tad-vīryeṇa atyādadhāti | "He sacrifices to the man first, then to the women. He exalts the man in consequence of his vigour. He sacrifices to the man as to one, and to the women as to many. Hence also one man has many wives. He sacrifices to the man both with the vashaṭkāra and the svahakāra, to the women with the latter alone. He exalts the man in consequence of his vigour." It seems to have been considered a misfortune for a woman to be left an old maid in her father's house (see the case of Ghoshā, above, p. 247). It would lead me too far to attempt to give any description of the marriage ceremonial, for which I must refer the reader to Weber's Indische Studien, v. 177 ff. (see also R.V. x. 109). Women appear to have been permitted to marry a second time, according to A.V. ix. 5, 27 f., quoted above, in the section on Yama, p. 306 (see also the 1st vol. of this work, pp. 281 ff.). In i. 124, 7, Ushas is said to show herself, as a female, without a brother (her natural protector), is said to show herself to a man (abhrāteva puṁse eti pratīchī). Wicked liars are compared, in iv. 5, 5, to women without brothers, and evil-disposed wives hostile to their husbands (abhrātaro na yoshaṇo vyantaḥ patiripo na janayo durevāḥ | pāpāsaḥ santaḥ anṛitāḥ asatyāḥ idam padam ajanata gabhīram).

The eleventh and twelfth verses of R.V. x. 27, are as follows:— yasyānakshā duhitā jātu āsa kas tāṁ vidvān abhimanyeta andhām | kataro menim prati tam muchāte yaḥ īṁ vahāte yaḥ īṁ vā pareyāt | 12. kiyatī yoshā maryato vadhūyoḥ pariprītā panyasā vāryeṇa | bhadrā vadhūr bhavati yat supeśāḥ svayaṁ sā mitraṁ vanute jane chit | 11. "Who knowingly will desire the blind daughter of any man who has one?

Or who will hurl a javelin at him who carries off or woos such a female? 12. How many a woman is satisfied with the great wealth of him who seeks her! Happy is the female who is handsome: she herself loves [or chooses] her friend among the people." May we not infer from this passage that freedom of choice in the selection of their husbands was allowed, sometimes, at least, to women in those times? The Svayamvara, or selection of ther own husbands by kings' daughters, appears, from the Mahābhārata, to have been a common practice in later times. See the well-known story of Nala and Damayantī.

A passage has been quoted above (p. 82 note) from the Taitt. Br. ii. 4, 2, 7, the commencement of which, though not altogether clear, may be translated thus: "The divine and fortunate Indrāṇī, wife of an excellent husband, was victorious by a part, in the acquisition of a husband." Did young women at that time compete for husbands?

The following allusion to the relations of a widow with her deceased husband's brother occurs in a verse addressed to the Aśvins, x. 40, 2 (=Nir. iii. 15): Kuha svid doṣhā kuha vastor Aśvinā kuhābhipitvaṁ karataḥ kuhoshataḥ | ko vāṁ śayutrā vidhaveva devaram maryaṁ na yoshā kṛiṇute sadasthe ā | "Where are you by night, Aśvins, and where by day? where do you alight? where have you dwelt? who drays you to his house, as a widow does her brother-in-law to the couch, or as a woman does a man?" In his Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 32, Professor Roth refers, in elucidation of this comparison, to Manu, ix. 69, 70, where it is enjoined that in certain circumstances a widow shall be married to her deceased husband's brother. In verse 60 it is ruled that the union shall only subsist until one son has been procreated. It will thus be seen that the ancient law of India corresponded in this respect with that of the Jews, as expounded in Deuteronomy, xxv. 5: compare St. Matthew, xxii. 24 ff. This custom appears to be referred to in the somewhat obscure verse before us.

By the kindness of Professor Max Müller I am enabled to give Sāyana's explanation of the verse:—Kiṁcha vāṁ yuvāṁ ko yajamānaḥ "sadhasthe" sahasthāne vedy-ākhye "ākṛiṇute" | paricharaṇārtham ātmābhimukhīkaroti | tatra dṛishṭāntam darśayati | "śayutrā" śayane "vidhaveva" yathā mṛitabhartṛikā nārī "devaraṁ" bhartṛibhrātaram abhimukhīkaroti | "maryaṁ na" yathā cha sarvam manushyaṁ "yoshā" sarvā nārī sambhoga-kāle 'bhimukhīkaroti tadvad ity arthaḥ | "what worshipper places you in his own presence at the altar to serve you? He illustrates this. As a woman whose husband is dead places her husband's brother before her on the bed, or a woman at the time of sexual connection places a man before her." Then follows a quotation from the Nirukta iii. 15, on the same verse.

On the occasion of the marriage ceremonial, a wish is expressed in the bride's favour that she may be a queen over her father-in-law, her mother-in-law, her husband's sister, and his brothers, x. 85, 46 (samrājnī śvaśure bhava samrājnī śvaśrvām bhava | nanāndari samrājnī bhava samrājnī adhi devṛishu). In viii. 2, 20 reference is made to an unamiable son-in-law (aśrīraḥ iva jāmātā); but it is not very clear what he is intended to illustrate. In i. 109, 2, the poet says he has heard that Indra and Agni are more liberal than an inferior son-in-law, or a wife's brother (aśravaṁ hi bhūridāvattarā vāṁ vijāmātur uta vā gha syāḷāt). Yāska (Nir. vi. 9) explains the word vijāmātṛi of a person who is not complete in all necessary requisites (asusamāptāj jāmātuḥ); and adds that the people of the south always speak of this word as denoting a man who has purchased his wife (vijāmātā iti śaśvad dakshiṇājāḥ krītāpatim āchakshate | asusamāptaḥ iva varo 'bhipretaḥ).

Allusions to conjugal infidelity and sexual immorality are not wanting. In x. 34, 4, reference seems to be made to the gambler's wife being the object of other men's intrigues (anye jāyām pari mṛiśanti asya yasya agṛidhad vedane vājī akshaḥ | see above, p. 426). In x. 40, 6, mention is made of a woman resorting to her rendezvous (nishkṛitaṁ na yoshaṇā) comp. x. 34, 5 (nishkṛitaṁ jāriṇī iva)[629] which, if a married woman is meant, implies an adulterous connection. In ii. 29, 1, Mitra and Varuṇa are prayed to remove the worshipper's sin, as a woman who bears a child secretly puts it away (āre mat karta rahasūr ivāgaḥ).[630] In i. 167, 4, we find the words parā śubhrāḥ

[629] These words (nishkṛitaṁ na yoshaṇā) prove either conjugal infidelity, if yoshaṇā or jāriṇī mean a married woman, or if they refer to an unmarried female, it would shew that young lovers made assignations, and therefore that women had more liberty, and were not confined as in later times. In i. 167, 3, occur the words guhā charantī manusho na yoshā | "Like a man's wife moving or acting secretly." Sāyana, however, refers them only to the privacy of the female apartments. See Wilson in loco.

[630] See Professor Wilson's translation and note in loco, and Introduction to vol. ii. p. xvii.

ayāso yavyā sādhāraṇyeva Maruto mimikshuḥ | which Professor Wilson, following Sāyaṇa, renders "The radiant, ever-moving, Maruts have mingled with (their) associate (lightning), like (youths) with common women." The words are quoted by Professor M. Müller, translation of R.V. i. 176, but without any explanation on the point under consideration.

In ix. 67, 10 ff. the poet prays, and twice repeats the prayer, that Pūshan would protect him in all his goings, and provide him with a supply of damsels (avitā no ajāśvaḥ Pūshā yāmani yāmani ā bhakshat kanyāsu naḥ | 11. ayaṁ somaḥ kapardine ghṛitaṁ na pavate madhu | ā bhakshat kanyāsu naḥ | 12. ayaṁ te āghṛiṇe suto ghṛitaṁ na pavate śuchi | ā bhakshat kanyāsu naḥ). The general opinion of the poet's contemporaries in regard to the female sex appears to be intimated in the following words put into the mouth of Indra, viii. 33, 17. Indraś chid gha tad abravīt striyāḥ aśāsyam manaḥ | uto aha kratuṁ raghum | "Indra declared that the mind of a woman was ungovernable and her temper fickle."

In Vālakhilya 8, 3, mention is made of a gift of one hundred slaves (śataṁ dāsān ati srajaḥ). In R.V. viii. 46, 32, Professor Roth conjectures (s.v. dāsa) that the correct reading is śatam dāsān | "I received a hundred slaves." (See my article on the priests in the Vedic age, Jour. R.A.S. for 1866, p. 275). Compare the word dāsa-pravarga in R.V. i. 92, 8, quoted above in p. 184, and translated in p. 186.

As regards the morals of the people, in other respects than those which relate to the relations of the sexes, it may be mentioned that untruth is condemned in a verse already quoted, iv. 5, 5, and the gods are said (i. 152, 1; vii. 49, 3; vii. 84, 2) to punish lying. Frequent mention is made of the friendship borne by the gods to their votaries, which seems to imply the existence of a similar special relation of affection between some of their worshippers. See also hymn x. 71, translated in the third volume of this work, p. 256. In x. 117 (as I have already noticed, p. 455) beneficence to the poor is commended.

(7) Dress, ornaments, etc.

References are made in various places to well-dressed females, iv. 3, 2; x. 71, 4 (jāyeva patye uśatī suvāsāḥ); x. 107, 9, or to elegant, well-made garments, v. 29, 15 (vastreva bhadrā sukṛitā). From these passages and others relating to jewels, as in viii. 46, 33, quoted above, p. 455, we may gather that considerable attention was already paid to personal decoration. We derive from them no information regarding the shape or materials of the clothing worn, further than may be learnt from the mention of sheep and of wool in certain texts (as i. 126, 7; vi. 15, 16; x. 75, 8). But it is difficult to conceive that cotton (which, as I learn from Professor J. H. Balfour, is supposed to have been indigenous in India), though not mentioned in the hymns, should have been unknown when they were composed, or not employed for weaving the light cloth which is necessary in so warm a climate. The form of the garments was probably much the same as among the modern Hindus, unless it be that some innovations may have been introduced by the Mohammedans. A turban or head-dress (ushṇīsha)[631] is mentioned in the A.V. xv. 2, 1.

Two of the Vedic deities, Rudra and Pūshan, are said to wear their hair wound or braided spirally upwards into the form of a shell, as the word "kapardin" in R.V. i. 114, 1, 5; vi. 55, 2; and ix. 67, 11, is explained in the dictionary of Professors Böhtlingk and Roth; and in vii. 83, 8, the same epithet is applied to the Tṛitsus (the tribe to which Vasishṭha belonged) (śvityancho yatra namasā kapardinaḥ ṭṛitsavaḥ).[632] In x. 114, 3, a young female, handsome and brilliant (it does not clearly appear who she is, as the passage is obscure and enigmatical) is said to wear four of these braids (chatushkapardā yuvatiḥ supeśāḥ ghṛitapratīkā vayunāni vaste). And in vii. 33, 1, the priests of the family of Vasishṭha are said to have their hair-knots on the right of their heads and to be robed in white (śvityancho mā dakshiṇatas-kapardāḥ ityādi; comp. vii. 83, 8 already quoted).[633] In various passages already cited (pp. 149 f.) the Maruts are said to wear different sorts of ornaments, which were probably similar to what were worn by the poet's countrymen or countrywomen.

[631] In regard to the word śipra see above, p. 149.

[632] See the rude picture of the god S'iva at the beginning of the Bombay edition of the Linga Purāna. But Wilson s.v. kaparda, explains it merely as "braided hair."

[633] See Roth Zur Lit'. u. Geschio'hte des Weda, p. 120.

(8) Food and drink.

In the Rig-veda (see i. 23, 15; i. 66, 3; i. 117, 21, etc.) frequent mention is made of yava, which in later Sanskrit means barley; but according to the Lexicon of Messrs. Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. appears to have, in early times, denoted corn in general. Rice (vrīhi) according to the same authority is not referred to in the Rig-veda, but is named in the Artharva-veda, as well as barley, and māsha (beans) and tila (sesamum orientale); see vi. 140, 2 (vrīhim attaṁ yavam attam atho māsham atho tilam). Parched corn (dhānā) is mentioned in several places of the R.V., as i. 16, 2; iii. 35, 3; iii. 52, 5; vi. 29, 4, as an offering to the gods; and in iii. 35, 7, is said to be provided as food for Indra's horses. Cakes (apūpa) and meal mixed with curds or butter (karambha) are said to be offered to the gods, iii. 52, 7; vi. 57, 2. Fruit (phala) is mentioned in iii. 45, 4 (see above, p. 107); i. 146, 5. Plants (oshadhi, vīrudh) are frequently alluded to, and are even invoked vi. 49, 14; vii. 34, 23; vii. 35, 5; x. 97, 1 ff., where some of them are spoken of as produced three ages before the gods; verse 1 [yāḥ oshadhīḥ pūrvāḥ jātāḥ devebhyas triyugam purā]; and are said in verse 4 to be divine [devīḥ]; in verses 3 and 15 to be some of them flowering and productive and fruit-bearing, and others not [pushpavatīḥ prasūvarīḥ | yāḥ phalinīr yāḥ aphalāḥ apushpāḥ yāś cha pushpinīḥ], and in verses 11 and 12 to drive away disease. Medicaments (bheshaja) are also frequently referred to. The cutting up of flesh, apparently for sacrificial purposes, is mentioned in one place, i. 161, 10 (māṁsam ekaḥ piṁśati sūnayā "bhṛitam). In i. 164, 43 reference is made to the cooking of a bull as being a primeval institution (ukshāṇam pṛiśnim apachanta vīrās tāni dharmāṇi prathamāni āsan | comp. x. 27, 2; x. 28, 3).[633] In v. 29, 7; viii. 12, 8; viii, 66, 10, mention is made of the gods cooking or eating large numbers of buffaloes (see above, p. 90). From the fact of these animals being offered in sacrifice, it may perhaps be inferred that they also formed a portion of human food. Intoxicating liquors are mentioned in the hymns. As regards [633] See the "general note" appended to Sir W. Jones's translation of Manu; and Manu xi. 59, where gobadha is mentioned as an upapātaka, or minor sin. See also verse 108.

the soma-juice, see above, p. 89, note 169. Wine, surā, (though it does not appear from what material it was distilled)[635] was also in use, as appears from several passages already quoted, viz. i. 116, 7 (p. 246) and vii. 86, 6 (p. 66); and x. 107, 9 (p. 434). It is also mentioned in viii. 2, 12, hṛitsu pītāso yudhyante durmadāso na surāyām | "When drunk they (the soma-draughts) contend in thy stomach, as men maddened with wine." Swillers of wine, surāśvaḥ, are mentioned in viii. 21, 14, as we have seen above (p. 112, note 201). In i. 191, 10, we find the following words: Sūrye visham ā sajāmi dṛitiṁ surāvato gṛihe | "I place the poison in the sun, like a [wine]skin in the house of a keeper of wine." See also Vāj. Sanh. xix. 5, 7; Śatap. Br. xii. 7, 3, 8, and 12; xii. 8, 1, 16; commentary on Vāj. S. xix. 44; and A.V. xiv. 1, 35 f. (translated in Weber's Ind. Stud. v. 197). In regard to the light in which wine drinking was regarded in later times the reader may consult Manu, xi. 54, 90, 93-97, 148 f., 249.

(9) Professions and trades.

In R.V. ix. 112, as we have already seen (p. 424), the variety in men's tastes and pursuits is described, and some of their different occupations are mentioned, viz., those of carpenter, physician, priest, blacksmith (compare x. 72, 2), poet, and female grinder of corn. That man is said to be a skilled physician, and both a slayer of Rakshases and a repeller of diseases, by whom all plants are collected, like kings in an assembly, x. 97, 6 (yatraushadhīḥ samagmata rājānaḥ samitāv iva | vipraḥ sa uchyate bhishag rakshohā 'mīva-chātanaḥ). The construction of chariots is often alluded to, and the skill shown in the composition of hymns is described as a fabrication, and compared to the art of the carriage-builder, i. 61, 4; i. 62, 13; i. 130, 6; i. 171, 2; ii. 19, 8; ii. 35, 2; iv. 16, 20; v. 2, 11; v. 29, 15; v. 73, 10; vi. 32, 1; x. 39, 14, etc. (see the 3rd vol. of this work, pp. 233, 235 f., 241). The Ribhus are, as we have already seen (p. 226), celebrated for their ability as workers in wood and metal, which further indicates the existence and appreciation of such skill at the period in question. Skill in the manufacture of weapons of war and other sharp-edged [635] In Manu xi. 94, it is said to be of three kinds, gauḍī, paishṭī, mādhvī, distilled from molasses, meal, or the flowers of the madhu plant.

implements must have been common, as spears (vāśī), swords or knives (asi), axes (paraśu, svadhiti), are constantly mentioned, i. 162, 20; x. 79, 6; x. 86, 18; ix. 96, 6; i. 127, 3; vii. 104, 21; x. 28, 8; x. 53, 9; vi. 3, 5; vi. 47, 10; viii. 91, 19. Weaving, it is scarcely necessary to say, was universally practised, as we learn from the references already quoted to cloth, and from the metaphorical use of the verb ve, "to weave," for the composition of hymns, etc. Thus in i. 61, 8: (devapatnīr Indrāya arkam ahihatye ūvuḥ | "The wives of the gods wove a hymn to Indra on his slaughter of Ahi)," vii. 33, 9 and 12 (see the 3rd vol. of this work, p. 247); x. 130, 1 (ibid. p. 277 f.). The warp and woof (tantu and otu) are both mentioned in vi. 9, 1 and 2: nāhaṁ tantuṁ na vijānāmi otum ityādi | "I know not the warp and I know not the woof," etc. (These two verses are translated by Professor Benfey in the Glossary to his Sāma-veda, p. 76; see also A.V. xiv. 2, 51). The art of boat- or ship-building was well known, as appears from the frequent mention made of boats or ships (nau or plava), i. 116, 3; i. 182, 5 f.; i. 131, 2; ii. 39, 4; viii. 42, 3; viii. 72, 3; ix. 70, 10, propelled by oars, x. 101, 2 (nāvam aritraparaṇīm). Ships are even spoken of as going to sea (see above, p. 244 f., and i. 25, 7, nāvaḥ samudriyaḥ; vii. 88, 3 f.). The Aśvins are said to have conveyed Bhujyu in a ship with a hundred oars (śatāritrāṁ nāvam). Rope-making also must have been practised, as ropes are mentioned, i. 162, 8, or their absence referred to, ii. 13, 9; vii. 84, 2. Working in leather must also have been common, as hides (charman, i. 85, 5; vi. 8, 3; vii. 63, 1), and skins for holding water or wine (dṛiti) are constantly referred to, i. 191, 10; iv. 45, 1, 3; v. 83, 7; vi. 48, 18; vii. 89, 2; vii. 103, 2; viii. 5, 19. Agriculture, as we have already seen (p. 427), is recommended to the gambler in x. 34, 13, and in the hymn to Araṇyānī, x. 146, 6 (above, p. 423), the goddess is said to be untilled by husbandmen (akṛishīvala). R.V. iv. 57, is a hymn in which the Kshetrasya pati, or deity who is the protector of the soil or of husbandry, is addressed, and a blessing is invoked on field operations, and their instruments, and on the cultivators (kīnāśa). Compare x. 117, 7. Urvarā, cultivated and fertile land, is mentioned in various places. Watercourses (kulyā), which may or may not have been artificial, are alluded to in iii. 45, 3, and x. 43, 7 (samakṣharan somāsaḥ Indraṁ kulyāḥ iva hradam), as leading to ponds or lakes; and waters which are expressly referred to as flowing in channels which had been dug up for them, are mentioned in vii. 49, 2 (yāḥ āpo divyāḥ uta vā sravanti khanitrimāḥ uta vā yāḥ svayamjāḥ); and from this it is not unreasonable to infer that the irrigation of lands under cultivation may have been practised. In the Rig-veda we have, as Professor Müller observes (Transl. i. 223 f.), clear allusions to shaving, x. 142, 4, where Agni is said to shave the earth, as a barber does a beard (see above, p. 212). In viii. 4, 16, as interpreted by Professor Roth, the worshippers pray that the god would sharpen them like the edge of scissors (saṁ naḥ śiśīhi bhurijor iva kshuram). On the prevalence of debt, see Professor Wilson's observations in the Introduction to his translation of the Rig-veda, vol. ii. p. xvii., and compare R.V. x. 34, 10, quoted above, in p. 427.

(10) Amusements.

Gaming was a frequent amusement of the early Indians, as we learn from the hymn x. 34, which has been given at length above, p. 426, (comp. vii. 86, 6); and from the frequent illustrations derived from the practice; see i. 92, 10; ii. 12, 4; ii. 29, 5; iv. 20, 3; v. 85, 8; viii. 45, 38; x. 42, 9; x. 43, 5.

Dancers, or actors (nṛitū), seem to have afforded entertainment at the same period; as we may gather from i. 92, 4, where Ushas is said to display herself like a professional person of this sort, who decks himself with ornaments (see above, p. 185). In x. 18, 3,[636] allusion is made to the living going forth to dance and to laugh after a funeral (prāncho agāma nṛitaye hasāya). Drums (dundubhi) are mentioned in R.V. i. 28, 5; vi. 47, 29, 31; and a hymn in the A.V. v. 20, is addressed to this musical instrument. According to Professor Roth (see s.v. and Illustrations of Nirukta, p. 92) the word bakura, which occurs in i. 117, 21 (and is explained by Sāyaṇa as a thunderbolt) probably means a martial wind instrument.

(11) Crime.

Thieves or robbers (tāyu, taskara, stena, paripanthin, mushīvan, huraśchit) are mentioned in some passages as infesting the highways, or [636] See Professor Roth's translation of the verse in Z. D. M. G. viii. 468, and Professor Müller's in the same Journal ix. p. xvi.

stealing secretly (see above, p. 174 f.; i. 50, 2: apa tye tāyavo yathā nakshatrā yanti aktubhiḥ | "The stars depart before the sun's rays, like thieves," i. 65, 1; i. 191, 5 (ete u tye praty adṛiśran pradoshaṁ taskarāḥ iva | "They have been seen in the evening like thieves"); ii. 28, 10; iv. 38, 5 (uta sma enaṁ vastramathiṁ na tāyum anu krośanti kshitayo bhareshu | "Men cry after him in battles as after a thief stealing clothes"); v. 15, 5; v. 52, 12; vi. 12, 5; vii. 55, 3; vii. 86, 5: viii. 29, 6; x. 4, 6.

(12) Animals, tame or wild, mentioned in the hymns.

The mention of kine and horses[637] (both in prayers to the gods to bestow them in abundance, and in the details of gifts conferred upon poets or priests) is too frequent to require further specification. Sheep (avi, avikā, urā, mesha) are also frequently referred to, i. 43, 6; i. 51, 1; i. 52, 1; i. 116, 16; viii. 2, 2; viii. 34, 3; ix. 6, 1; x. 95, 3; and goats (aja, chhāga) in i. 162, 3 f.; and x. 90, 10. Allusion is made in x. 27, 17 to the cooking of a fat ram (pīvānam mesham apachanta vīrāḥ). In Vālakhilya viii. 3, reference is made to the gift of a hundred ewes (śatam ūṛṇāvatīnām). In i. 126, 7 the ewes of the Gandhāris are spoken of as famous for their wool (romaśā Gandhārīṇām iva avikā). Dogs are often alluded to. In ii. 39, 4 the two Asvins are compared to two dogs (śvānā iva). The mythological dogs of Yama have been already referred to (in p. 294). A long-tongued dog which brought no good is mentioned as an object of dread to be driven away, ix. 101, 1 and 13 (apa śvānam śnathishṭana sakhāyo dīrghajihvyam | apa śvānam arādhāsaṁ hata makhaṁ na Bhṛigavaḥ). Apes, kapi, (x. 86, 5), boars, varāha (viii. 66, 10; x. 28, 4), buffaloes, mahisha (see above, p. 90 and 463), deer, mṛiga (i. 38, 5; i. 105, 8), ṛiśya (viii. 4, 10), jackals and foxes, kroshṭṛi, lopāśa, x. 28, 4, and wolves, sālāvṛika (x. 95, 15), lions, siṁha (x. 28, 4; iv. 16, 14), wolves, vṛika, vṛikī, i. 116, 16; viii. 55, 8, as devouring sheep, viii. 34, 3 (urāṁ na dhūnute vṛikaḥ), and deer, i. 105, 8 (vṛiko na tṛishṇajam mṛigam). Elephants also are possibly mentioned under the designation of mṛiga vāraṇa viii. 33, 8; x. 40, 4 (vāraṇa being an elephant in later [637] In viii. 2, 2 allusion is made to be a horse being washed in a river (aśvo na nikto nadīshu).

Sanskrit); certainly under that of mṛiga hastin (the wild animal with the hand or trunk) i. 64, 7; iv. 16, 14. These texts are as follows: mṛigāḥ iva hastinaḥ khādatha vanā | "Ye (Maruts), like elephants, devour the woods;[638] iv. 16, 14: mṛigo na hastī tavishīm ushāṇaḥ siṁho na bhīmaḥ āyudhāni bibhrat "[Indra] consuming force like an elephant: like a terrible lion, carrying weapons; viii. 33, 8 (= S.V. ii. 1047); dānā mṛigo na vāraṇaḥ purutrā charathaṁ dadhe | which is thus rendered by Professor Roth, s.v. dāna, 2, "After feasting he runs hither and thither like a beast of prey."[639] x. 40, 4: yuvām mṛigeva vāraṇā mṛiganyavo doshā vastor havishā ni hvayāmahe | "We invoke you twain [Aśvins] night and day, as hunters [seek to catch] two wild animals."[640] In the first three of these passages the elephant (if meant in the third) is referred to merely as a terrible wild beast; in the fourth there is an allusion to the hunting of wild animals, and if elephants are intended, we may perhaps infer that, at the period when that verse was composed, they had begun to be tamed. There seems no reason to doubt that in A.V. ix. 3, 17, a female elephant is meant by hastinī: "Thou, hall (or house), standest on the earth with feet like a female elephant" (mitā pṛithivyāṁ tishṭhasi hastinīva padvatī). The author of this verse appears to have been accustomed to look familiarly at the animal close at hand. In the following verse from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, viii. 23 (quoted by Professor Roth s.v.) elephants are said by him and Professor Haug (transl. p. 26) to be understood by Sāyaṇa as intended by the word mṛiga: hiraṇyayena parivṛitān kṛishṇān śukladato mṛigān | Mashṇāre Bharato 'dadāt śataṁ badvāni sapta cha | "Bharata bestowed in Mashnāra one hundred and seven great herds of black, white-toothed wild animals, decked with gold." In many passages, i. 138, 2; viii. 5, 37; viii. 6, 48; viii. 46, 22 and 31, we find the word ushṭra, which, in later Sanskrit, denotes a camel; but according to Professor Roth (see s.v.) it means in the hymns a buffalo or a humped bull. Professor Aufrecht also informs me that in his opinion it signifies the latter. In one of the passages (viii. 6, 48)

[638] See Professor Müller's trans. of R.V. i. pp. 99 f.

[639] Profesor Benfey, Sāmaveda, Transl. p. 288, renders the half verse thus: "Like drops from a rutting elephant, falls in many places his moisture of blessing."

[640] Sayaṇa makes vāraṇā = śārdūlau, "tigers." Compare viii. 55, 8, where vāraṇa seems to be an epithet of vṛika, "wolf."

the oxen are said to form a team of four yoked together (ushṭrān chaturyujaḥ). Various birds are mentioned, peacocks, mayūra (i. 191, 14; iii. 45, 1; viii. 1, 25): pigeons, kapota[641] (i. 30, 4; x. 165, 1 ff.) falcons, śyena, vultures, gṛidhra (ii. 39, 1), ducks, chakravāka (ii. 39, 3), āti (x. 95, 9), swans, haṁsa (i. 163, 10; vii. 59, 7), quails, vartikā (i. 112, 8). Serpents are of course frequently mentioned, and in one place, ix. 86, 44, reference is made to their casting their slough (ahir na jūrṇām ati sarpati tvacham).

(13) War, armies, armour, and weapons.

Wars, as we have already seen (see above, p. 109 f., 454), are frequently mentioned in the Rig-veda. Some verses have also been quoted, in p. 110, from R.V. x. 103, a hymn in praise of Indra's prowess, at the close of which he and other deities are supplicated to confound the enemies of his worshippers, and cause the arms of the latter to triumph. R.V. vi. 75, is another remarkable composition of a warlike character in praise of armour, of the bow, etc. The following are a few of the verses, which are spirited:—

1. Jīmūtasyeva bhavati pratīkaṁ yad varmī yāti samadām upasthe | anāviddhayā tanvā jaya tvaṁ sa tvā varmaṇo mahimā pipartu | 2. Dhanvanā gāḥ dhanvanā "jiṁ jayema dhanvanā tīvrāḥ samado jayema | dhanuḥ śatror apakāmaṁ kṛiṇotu dhanvanā sarvāḥ pradiśo jayema | 3. Vakshyantīved ā ganīganti karṇam priyaṁ sakhāyam parishasvajānā | yosheva śinkte vitatā 'dhi dhanvan jyā iyaṁ samane pārayantī | . . . . 6. Rathe tishṭhan nayati vājinaḥ puro yatra yatra kāmayate sushārathiḥ | abhīśūnām mahimānam panāyata manaḥ paśchād anu yachhanti raśmayaḥ | 7. Tīvrān ghoshān kṛiṇvate vṛishapāṇayaḥ aśvāḥ rathebhiḥ saha vājayantaḥ | avakrāmantaḥ prapadair amitrān kshiṇanti śatrūn anapavyayantaḥ |

"1. There appears like the lustre of a cloud when the mailed warrior stalks into the heart of the combat. Conquer with an unscathed body; let the might of thine armour protect thee. 2. With the bow may we conquer cattle; with the bow may we conquer in the struggle for the mastery; with the bow may we conquer in the sharp conflicts; the bow frustrates the desire of our enemy; with the bow [641] Professor Roth suggests s.v. that kapota may not always mean a pigeon, as the bird it denotes is sometimes connected with the owl (ulūka) and is regarded as unlucky. In x. 165, 1, it is called the messenger of Nirṛiti or Evil.

may we conquer all the regions around. 3. The bowstring approaches close to the bowman's ear, as if to speak to and embrace a dear friend; strung upon the bow, it twangs like the scream of a woman, and carries the warrior safely through the battle . . . . 6. Standing on the chariot the skilful charioteer directs the horses whithersoever he wills; laud the power of the reins, which from behind control the impulse [of the horses]. 7. The strong-hoofed steeds, rushing on with the chariots, utter shrill neighings; trampling the foe with their hoofs, they crush them, never receding."

The following is a free metrical rendering of the preceding verses:

1. When, cased in mail, the warrior proud
   Stalks on defiant to the front,
   To bear the raging battle's brunt,
   We seem to see a flashing cloud.
   Bold warrior, may thine armour bright
   Preserve thee scatheless in the fight!

2. May I the foeman's malice foil
   With this my all-subduing bow!
   May I, triumphant, lay him low,
   And all his goods and cattle spoil!
   This bow our foes with ruin whelms,
   And conquers all surrounding realms.

3. The bowstring to the bowman's ear
   Approaches close, as if to speak:
   Its twang is like a woman's shriek:
   It guards the warrior's soul from fear.

6. See, yonder on the chariot stands
   The dauntless charioteer, whose skill
   His horses onward drives, whose will
   Their movements to and fro commands.
   The reins (their wondrous power extol!)
   Although behind, the steeds control.

7. The impetuous coursers shrilly neigh,
   As forward to the fight they rush:
   Their trampling hoofs our foemen crush;
   They never shun the murderous fray.

In three hymns of the 8th Maṇḍala, 39, 40, and 41, each verse (except the last of hymn 40) ends with the words nabhantām anyake same | "may all aliens or enemies perish;" and one verse, viii. 40, 7, contains a prayer for victory over hostile combatants, and for their destruction (asmākebhir nṛibhir vayaṁ sāsahyāma pṛitanyato vanuyāma vanushyataḥ). Hymn x. 133 contains prayers to Indra for victory and protection, and each of the first six verses concludes with the same terms nabhantām anyakeshāṁ jyākāḥ adhi dhanvasu | "May the bowstrings of our enemies be snapped upon their bows."

War chariots are mentioned, as we have just seen, in vi. 75, 6 f.; and also in x. 103, 10 (see above, p. 110). I am not aware that any means exist of ascertaining the form of their construction. They seem to have been drawn by two horses, and were probably formed so as to carry two persons, a charioteer and a combatant; at least, this may be conjectured both from the nature of the case, the practice of other countries, and from the fact of two or more deities being described as occupying the same car, in the cases of Indra and Vāyu (above, p. 144), of Agni and the other gods (p. 202), and of Sūryā and the Aśvins (p. 236). The different parts and appurtenances of the Aśvins' chariot are alluded to above (p. 240 f., and note), and had no doubt their counterparts in those of their worshippers (see also above the account of Mitra and Varuṇa's chariot, in p. 42). The charioteer was, no doubt, like the Maruts (p. 151), furnished with a whip. Foot soldiers are mentioned in A.V. vii. 62, 1, where Agni is said to conquer the most powerful opponents, as a combatant on a chariot overcomes men fighting on foot (ayam Agniḥ satpatir vṛiddha-vṛishṇo rathīva pattīn ajayat purohitaḥ). Banners are alluded to as borne in battle, R.V. x. 103, 11 (see above, p. 110), and in vii. 83, 2 (yatra naraḥ samayante kṛitadhvajaḥ | "where men bearing ensigns meet in battle, etc"). Senānī, "the leader of an army," is metaphorically applied to one of the host of dice, x. 34, 12 (yo vaḥ senānīr mahato gaṇasya). As regards the size of the armies, the Vedic poets are familiar with large numbers, at least as regards the hosts of the Dasyus, whether we are to take these as aboriginal tribes or mythological foes in the clouds. In i. 53, 9, 60,000; in iv. 16, 13, 50,000; and in iv. 30, 21, 30,000, are mentioned as destroyed by Indra. The battle of Sudās with the ten kings has been already referred to (above, p. 454). Defensive armour or mail (varman), is mentioned in vi. 75, 1, already quoted, and is referred to in numerous other passages, as vi. 75, 18 (marmāṇi te varmaṇā chhādayāmi | "I protect thy vital parts with armour"), and 19; vi. 27, 6. Varuṇa and Savitṛi are each of them mentioned as being clad in golden or yellow mail (as the word drāpi is interpreted by Sāyaṇa; Müller, in Ancient Sansk. Lit., 536; and Benfey, in R.V. i. 25, 13;[642] while Roth, s.v., explains it, perhaps with more probability, as meaning "robe"), i. 25, 13 (bibhrad drāpiṁ hiraṇyayaṁ Varuṇo vaste nirṇijam); iv. 53, 2 (pišangaṁ drāpim pratimunchate kaviḥ). Various kinds of warlike weapons have already been mentioned above in subsection (9), p. 464 f. See also the accounts of the weapons assigned to Indra in p. 86 f., and of the arms and armour of the Maruts in p. 149 f. and notes.

(14) Poetry and speculation.

The elaborate character of the metres in which the hymns are composed has been adverted to by Professor Wilson, in the Introduction to the 2nd vol. of his translation of the Rig-veda. As regards the occasional beauty and variety of the illustrative imagery employed, and the moral depth of many of the reflections, I may refer to the hymns to Ushas translated above in section xiii. The hymn on the variety of human pursuits, ix. 112, that on gambling, x. 34, and the one on beneficence, x. 117 (all translated in the preceding section, pp. 424 ff.), may be cited as instances of close and acute observation of human life. The speculations on creation in x. 129 (above, p. 356) and in x. 82 and 83 (p. 354), indicate the beginnings of philosophical reflection. As an instance of picturesque expression I may quote the epithet ṛiṛikshakeśa, as applied to mountains, in v. 41, 11: āpaḥ oshadhīr uta no avantu dyaur vanā girayo vṛikshakeśāḥ | "May the Waters, the Plants, the Sky, the Woods, the Mountains with their tresses of trees, preserve us."

In R.V. x. 70, 10, quoted in the 1st vol. of this work, p. 254, and in A.V. vii. 12, quoted above, in p. 438, allusion is made to social meetings, which appear to have been of a literary or learned character.

[642] In R.V. i. 116, 10, however, Benfey renders it by robe, or garment, as he does also in S.V. ii. 368 = R.V. ix. 100, 9 (trans. of S.V. p. 256). In his glossary s.v. drāpi, he translates it by coat of mail, where it occurs in R.V. ix. 86, 14.

(15) Conclusion.

Although the hymns of the Rig-veda exhibit a simpler, a less advanced, a less definitely fixed and developed, stage of religious belief and conceptions than we meet with in the works of the earliest Greek poets, and a system of ideas widely diverse both from the mythological forms, and the theosophic opinions, of the later Indian pantheon, and of subsequent speculation, and although some of the customs and practices of that early age were different from those which prevailed in later times, it would be a mistake to suppose that, in the former period, the condition of society was of a very primitive description. On the contrary, the preceding inquiry has brought into view many signs of a considerable progress in civilization, and in even a certain sort of refinement, as then existing. (Compare the remarks of Professor Wilson, in the Introduction to the second volume of his Translation of the Rig-veda, p. xvii.)

APPENDIX.

Page 15, line 7.

See A.V. iv. 11, 6 (quoted in p. 361, at the foot), where the gods are said to have "ascended to heaven, leaving their bodies behind."

Page 15, line 11.

In the two following passages the poets seem to claim affinity with the gods.

viii. 27, 10: asti hi vaḥ sajātyam riśādaso devāso asti āpyam | 14. Devāso hi sma manave samanyavo viśve sākaṁ sarātayaḥ |

viii. 72, 7: adhi naḥ Indra eshāṁ Vishṇo sajātyānām | ita Maruto Aśvinā | 8. Pra bhrātṛitvaṁ sudānavo adha dvitā samānyā | mādur garbhe bharāmahe |

Page 18, line 11.

Compare the Taitt. Sanh., Ashṭ. 6, p. 18 of MS. 1702 of India Office Library: Devāsurāḥ saṁyattāḥ āsan | te devāḥ mitho vipriyāḥ āsan | te anyonyasmai jyaishṭhyāya tishṭhamānāḥ panchadhā vyakrāmann Agnir Vasubhiḥ Somo Rudrair Indro Marudbhir Varuṇaḥ Ādityair Bṛihaspatir Viśvairdevaiḥ | te amanyanta "asurebhyo vai idam bhrātṛivyebhyo radhyāmo yan mitho vipriyāḥ smaḥ | yāḥ naḥ imāḥ priyās tanuvas tāḥ samavadyāma ha etābhyaḥ sa nirṛichhād yaḥ nāḥ prathamo 'nyonyasmai druhyād" iti | tasmād yaḥ satānūnaptṛīṇām prathamo druhyati sa ārttim ārchhati | yat tānūneptram samavadyati bhrātṛivyābhibhūtyai bhavaty ātmanā parā 'sya bhrātṛivyo bhavati ityādi |

"The gods and Asuras contended together. The gods were hostile to one another. Striving with one another for the superiority, they parted into five divisions, Agni with the Vasus, Soma with the Rudras, Indra with the Maruts, Varuṇa with the Ādityas, and Bṛihaspati with the Viśvedevas. They then reflected: 'We are subject to our enemies, the Asuras, because we are hostile to one another. Let us unite our dear bodies; and whoever shall first show enmity to another, let him be separated from his body.' Hence, any one among persons who have bound themselves together by an oath, who first commits an injury falls into calamity. When a man joins in the oath tānūnaptra for the purpose of overcoming his enemies, he conquers, and his adversary is overcome."

The same story is told in other words in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, and I quote the words to show how these narratives are varied in the different Brāhmaṇas:

Ait. Br. 1, 24: Te devāḥ abibhayur "asmākaṁ vipremāṇam anu idam asurāḥ ābhavishyanti" iti | te vyutkramya amantrayanta | Agniḥ Vasubhir udakrāmad Indro Rudrair Varuṇaḥ Ādityair Bṛihaspatir Viśvair devaiḥ | te tathā vyutkramya amantrayanta | te 'bruvan "hanta yāḥ eva naḥ imāḥ priyatamās tanvas tāḥ asya Varuṇasya rājño gṛihe sannidadhāmahai | tābhir eva naḥ sa na sangachhātai yo naḥ etad atikrāmād yaḥ ālulo bhavishād" iti | "tathā" iti | Te Varuṇasya rājño gṛihe tanūḥ sannyadadhata | te yad Varuṇasya rājño gṛihe tanūḥ sannyadadhata tat tānūnaptram abhavat | tat tānūnaptrasya tānūnaptratvam | tasmād āhur "na satānūnaptriṇe drogdhavyam" iti | tasmād u Asurāḥ na anvābhavanti |

I quote Professor Haug's translation of this passage: "The Devas were afraid, surmising the Asuras might become aware of their being disunited, and seize their reign. They marched out in several divisions and deliberated. Agni marched out with the Vasus and deliberated. Indra did so with the Rudras; Varuṇa with the Ādityas; and Bṛihaspati with the Viśve Devas. Thus all, having severally marched out, deliberated. They said, 'Well, let us put these our dearest bodies in the house of Varuṇa the king (i.e. water); he among us who should, out of greediness, transgress this (oath, not to do anything which might injure the sacrifice), he shall no more be joined with them. They put their bodies in the house of Varuṇa. This putting of their bodies in the house of Varuṇa the king, became their Tānūnaptram (joining of bodies). Thence they say: none of those joined together by the Tānūnaptram ceremony is to be injured. Thence the Asuras could not conquer their (the gods') empire (for they had all been made inviolable by this ceremony)."

Page 65, line 13.

Setū must mean "bonds," not "barriers." See the quotation next following in the text, viz., vii. 84, 2; and compare R.V. ix. 73, 4, and x. 67, 4; and the word setra, rendered "a ligament, a fetter," in Wilson's Sanskrit Dictionary.

Page 103, line 10.

Compare R.V. i. 61, 2; i. 157, 6; viii. 1, 31; viii. 2, 37; x. 147, 1, where faith or heart-felt worship to Indra or the Aśvins is expressed, or enjoined.

Page 105, line 11.

So in R.V. viii. 59, 7, it is said: na sīm adevaḥ āpad ishaṁ dīrghāyo martyaḥ | "o long-lived god, the godless man obtains no food."

Page 108, line 8.

Indra is himself declared to be a priest and a rishi, viii. 16, 7 (Indro brahmā Indraḥ ṛishiḥ).

Page 118, line 19.

See also Professor Max Müller's Lectures on the Science of Language, ii. 427.

Page 178, line 6.

Karambhād. See Weber's Indische Studien, ii. 306, and the Taittirīya Sanhitā, ii. 6, 8, 4 f.: Tat Pūshṇe paryaharan | tat Pūshā prāśya dato 'ruṇat | tasmāt Pūshā prapishṭa-bhāgaḥ | adantako hi | "They gave it to Pūshan; and he, in eating it, pushed out his teeth. Hence, Pūshan has ground meal for his share in the oblation; for he is toothless." See the later story about how Pūshan lost his teeth, in the 4th vol. of this work, p. 168, 322.

Page 217, line 10 from the foot.

I have to thank Professor Müller for sending me a copy of Sāyaṇa's note on the verse, R.V. x. 16, 4. It is as follows:—

Ajaḥ janana-rahitaḥ śarīrendriyādi-bhāga-vyatiriktaḥ antara-purusha-lakshaṇo yo bhāgas tẹ Agne te ṭvadīyena tapasā tapanena taṁ tādṛiśam bhāgam tapasva tapanaṁ kuru | Tathā ṭe tava śochiḥ śokahetur ṭvālā-viśeshaḥ tam bhāgam tapatu saṁskarotu | tapaḥ-śochir-archiḥ-śabdānāṁ

santānāya tāratamyena bhedaḥ | He jātavedaḥ te tava yās tanvo mūrtayaḥ śivāḥ sukha-hetavaḥ tanu-tāpa-pradāḥ tābhir eva tanūbhiḥ pretaṁ sukṛitāṁ śobhana-karma-kāriṇāṁ lokaṁ sthānaṁ vaha prāpaya |

Of this I will translate only so much as refers to the important phrase ajo bhāgaḥ | "'Aja' is the portion characterized as the inner man, devoid of birth, and of bodily senses and other parts."

Professor Aufrecht has favoured me with a statement of some further grounds in support of his opinion as quoted in my note to p. 217. He urges (1) that the goat is sacrificed to Agni (āgneyam ajam, Śatap. Br. vi. 2, 1. 5, and Tāṇḍya Br. i. 8, 4, agnaye 'jam); (2) that it would be absurd to ask Agni to burn or warm the unborn part, that is, to do a material act to a thing beyond the reach of material influence; (3) that in the Rig-veda bhāga is never used for part (pars), but only for share (sors); (4) that tap means only to burn, to consume by heat, not to warm; (5) that vātam ātmā gachhatu | "let the soul go to the wind," had preceded in verse 3; so that there was no further occasion to refer to the man's immaterial part.

In regard to what is urged by Professor Aufrecht under his fifth head, I refer to what I have said on the sense of ātman in p. 313.

Page 220, line 3; and 267, line 16.

On the sense of vṛitra and vṛitrahan see Professor Spiegel's remarks in Kuhn's Beiträge zur Vergleichenden Sprachforschung, vi. 388 f.

Page 228, line 12 from the bottom.

In reference to this myth Professor Aufrecht refers me to Dr. Kuhn's Zeitschrift, i. 442, and to Professor Roth's explanation of it, ibid. p. 444.

Page 264, line 14.

Compare Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iv. 7 ff., referred to above, p. 241, note 372. The story begins as follows:—

Prajāpatir vai Somāya rājne duhitaram prāyachhat Sūryāṁ Sāvitrīm | tasyai sarve devāḥ varāḥ āgachhan | "Prajāpati gave his daughter Sūryā Sāvitrī in marriage to king Soma. All the gods came as the bridegroom's friends."

Page 269, line 14.

In ix. 92, 5, it is said that Soma protected the (Āryan) man and repelled the Dasyu (Somaḥ prāvad manum dasyave kar abhīkam).

Page 288, line 4.

The Taitt. San. vi. 1, 4, 3, has the following story about Yama:—Devāś cha vai Yamaś cha asmin loke 'spardhanta | sa Yamo devānām indriyaṁ vīryam ayuvata | tad Yamasya 4. Yamatvam | te devāḥ amanyanta "Yamo vai idam abhūd yad vayaṁ smaḥ" iti | te Prajāpatim upādhāvan | sa etau Prajāpatir ātmanaḥ uksha-vaśau niramimīta | te devāḥ Vaishnāvarunīṁ vaśām ālabhanta Aindram ukshāṇam | taṁ Varuṇenaiva grāhayitvā Vishṇunā Yajnena prāṇudanta | Aindreṇaiva asya indriyam avṛinjata |

"The gods and Yama contended in this world. Yama took away the vigour and energy of the gods. This is his characteristic. The gods reflected, 'Yama has become the same as we are.' They hastened to Prajāpati, who formed from himself this bull and this cow. The gods sacrificed the cow to Vishṇu and Varuṇa, and the bull to Indra," etc.

Page 345, line 7.

In R.V. x. 30, 10, the Waters are called the mothers and the mistresses of the world (rishe janitrīr bhuvanasya patnīr apo vandasva).

Page 361, line 3.

In R.V. x. 190, right (or the ceremonial), and truth, night, the ocean, etc., are said to have sprung from tapas: Ṛitaṁ cha satyaṁ cha abhīddhāt tapaso 'dhi ajāyata | tato rātrī ajāyata tataḥ samudro arṇavaḥ | 2. Samudrād arṇavād adhi saṁvatsaro ajāyata | ahorātrāṇi vidadhat viśvasya mishato vaśī | 3. Sūryā-chandramasau Dhātā yathāpūrvam akalpayat | divaṁ cha pṛithivīṁ cha antarikśam atho svaḥ |

"Right and truth sprang from fervid tapas; and thence sprang the night and the liquid ocean. 2. From the liquid ocean sprang the year; and it, the lord of all things that see, made the day and night. Dhātṛi (or the Disposer) made the sun and moon as before; and the sky, the earth, the air, and the heaven."

Page 453, line 8 from the foot.

See also Professor H. H. Wilson's Preface to his translation of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. i. pp. iii. f. (Dr. Hall's edit.).

INDEX.

A

Achilles, 305
Achyuta, 343
Aditi, 13, 35 ff., 156, 163, 224, 228, 355, 360, 369
Ādityas, 11, 38 f., 48 ff., 54 ff., 70
Aeschylus, quoted 25, 44, 157, 354
Agastya, 153
Aghā, 110
Agnāyī, 82, 337, 345
Agni, 8, 13 f., 35, 51, 63, 65, 199 ff., 269, 281 ff., 297 ff., 403, et passim
Agni Daivodāsa, 219
Agni Gārhapatya, 300
Agnihotra, 315
Agni Sāvitra, 299, 402
Agnishvāttas 296
Ahi, 93, 95, 97
Ahirbudhnya, 336
Ahura, mazda, 70, 72, 120

Aitareya Āraṇyaka—
p. 73 — 23
— 84 —359
i. 13, 2, 3—49

Aitareya Brāhmaṇa—
i. 14—268
— 16—208
— 24—475
ii. 17—322
— 18— 11
— 25—144
iii. 20— 93
— 30—227
— 44—321
iv. 1— 86
— 7-9—241, 477
— 27— 23
vi. 11— 88
viii. 23—468

Aja Ekapād, 336, 396
Ājānadeva, 18
Aja panchaudana offering, 304, 306
Ajobhāgaḥ, 217, 297 f., 313, 476 f.
Ambikā, 1
Aṁśa, 13, 54 ff., 419
Amshaspand, 70, 120
Anaxagoras, 28
Andra, 121
Angiras, 200, 209, 274, 277, 395, 409
Angirases, 23, 56, 226, 251 f., 292 f., 311
Anumati, 398
Anuyāja, 11
Apāmnapāt, 354
Āpas (the Waters), 343
Aphrodite, 3, 25
Apnavāna, 213
Apsarases, 44, 308, 345, 409, 430
Apvā, 110
Apyā yoshā, 290
Aramati, 337
Araṇyānī, 346, 422 f.
Arbuda, 97
Ares, 3, 260
Aristotle's Politics, i, 2, 7, quoted 5
Ārjīkīyā, 344
Aryaman, 13, 47, 54 ff., 58, 60, 62, 68, 125, 163
Āryas, 113 f., 220
Asiknī, 344
Asunīti, 297
Asuras, 18, 44, 65, 82, 97, 101, 147, 204, 230, 268, 401, 405
Āśvalayānas Grihya-sūtras, quoted, 217, 401
Āśvalayānas Śrauta-sūtras, quoted 231

Aśvins, 93 f., 113, 125, 145, 164, 192, 234 ff.
Āśvina libation, 253
Aśvinī, 345
Atharvan, 209, 395, 409
Atharvans, 293, 311
Atharva-veda—
i.
7, 2—210
30, 3— 10
33, 1—205
ii.
5, 3— 49
30, 2—243
iii.
3, 3— 74
10, 12— 79
21, 4—403
25, 1 ff.—407
29, 3—309
— 7—403
30, 1 ff.—439
iv.
10, 5—159
11, 1 ff.—399
— 7—361
15, 12— 74
16, — 63
20, 2—305
23, 6— 14
27, 3—150
34, 2 ff.—307
37, 11 f.—309
38, 1 ff.—431
39, 2—208
v.
24, 4— 74
— 9—158, 298
25, 3—243
30, —440
— 6—294
— 11—312

Atharva-veda continued—
vi.
21, 1—305
28, 3—291
36, 3—403
41, 3—296
78, 3—225
81, 3—224
92, 1—225
118, 1—430
120, 1—299
— 2— 41
— 3—306
122, 4—293
123, 2, 4—293
140, 2—463

vii.
6, 2— 36
12, —438
20, 6—398
50, 1 f.—429
53, —442
— 7—374
62, 1—471
83, 1— 74
109, 1 ff.—429
115, —348

viii.
1, —443
2, —446
— 1 f.—309, 312
— 3—298
— 11—294
— 24—312
5, 3—405
8, 5 ff.—87, 405
— 15—296
9, 1, 7 ff.—370
— 21— 49
10, 1 ff.—370

ix.
2, —402
— 5—370
3, 17—468
5, 1, 3—303
—7, 10—304
—22 ff.—305
—27 f. —306
10, 24—370

x.
2, —374
7, —378
—32 ff.—401
8, —385
— 1—401

Atharva-veda continued—
—7, 13—368, 390
— 43—309, 377
9, 12— 10

xi.
1, 1—224
— 36—293
— 37—304
3, 52—391
4, —393
4, 12—391
5, —399
— 5—362
— 19— 15
6, 7—396
7, —396
— 1—309
— 3—360
—22, 27— 13
8, 1—237
—30 ff.—387

xii.
1, 10— 30
— 20—207
2, 45—300
3, 17—305
4, 36—312

xiii.
1 —395
— 3—147
— 7— 15
— 45—158
2, —161
—39 ff.—396
3, 13—219, 353
— 23—396
4, 1 ff.—353

xiv.
2, 31 f.—309

xvi.
9, 2—174

xvii.
1, 19—359

xviii.
1, 13 f.—290
2, 20 ff.—293
—24 ff., 37—294
— 28—296
— 32—302
— 36—298
— 48—304
— 49—295
— 53—174

Atharva-veda continued—
3, 13—291
— 14—311
— 59—297
— 62—301
— 71—300
4, 3—302
— 5—398
— 7—292
— 9 f.—300
— 62—311
— 64—298

xix.
6, 4—368
9, 7—301
53 —407
54 —408
66, 1—65, 88
Atithigva, 97
Ātman, 386
Ātmayājin, 318
Atri Saptavadhri, 247
Atyaṁhas Āruṇi, 316
Aurora, 181
Aurva, 213
Ayāsya, 274

B.

Bacchus, 258
Bahishpavamāna, 253
Bhagavadgītā, 334
Bhaga, 13, 54 ff., 168, 170, 190, 419
Bhāgavata Purāṇa, viii. 16, 1 ff.—53
Bharadvāja, 402
Bharata, 468
Bhāratī, 219, 339
Bhāvya, 454
Bhṛigu, 209, 213, 322
Bhṛigus, 10, 49, 225, 251, 293, 311
Bhujyu, 244, 248
Bhūpati, Bhūta, Bhūtānāmpati, and Bhuvana, 231
Bhuvana, 3, 2
Brahmā, 325 f., 355, 376, 378 ff., 401
Brahmā, 16, 161, 321, 326, 369, 384
Brahmachārin, 399 ff.
Brahmaloka, 321
Brahmaṇaspati, 13, 38, 224 f., 272 ff., 355, 360
Brāhmans, 286, 299, 324, 371

Brahma-sūtras, 16
Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad, 12, 316, 319, 323
Bṛihaspati, 23, 93, 193, 272 ff., 292

C.

Chaos, 24
Chāturmāsya, 315
Chaturviṁśatirātra, 15
Chhāndogya Upanishad, 323; vi. 2, 1—359.
Chitra, 454
Chitragupta, 302
Chyavāna, 243
Chyavāna, 250
Cyclopes, 24

D.

Dadhyanch, 209
Daksha, 13, 48, 50 ff., 80, 355, 360, 369, 419
Dākshāyaṇī, 80
Dānavas, 95
Dāṇavī, 82
Dānu, 95
Dānus, 95
Dāsa, 114
Dasra. 240
Dasyus, 100, 113 f., 220
Dawn, 181 ff.
Demeter, 26 f., 260
Deshṭrī, 395
Devāpi, 280
Devayājin, 318
Dhātṛi, 71, 54, 159, 169
Dhishaṇā, 339
Dhruvā, 398
Diodorus Siculus quoted, 26
Dionysus, 258 f.
Diti, 13, 42, 147
Divodāsa, 97, 219, 341, 451
Durga, 214, 256
Durvāsas, 324
Dyaus, 7, 11, 21 ff., 39, 76, 100, 118 ff., 142, 156, 205, 212, 267, 357
Dyaushpitar, 33, 118 f.

E.

Earth, 7, 11, 13, 21 ff., 40, 76, 102. See Pṛithivī.
Egyptian cosmogony, 26
Ekāshṭakā, 79 f.
Elephants, 467 f.
Eros, 406
Euripides quoted, 26, 28, 90, 259, 298

F.

Fathers (Pitṛis) 267, 286 ff., 398

G.

Gaia, 76
Gandharva, 289 f.
Gandharvas, 13, 44, 262 ff., 296, 308 f., 398, 400
Gangā, 339, 344
Ganges, 77, 338
Gāyatrī, 263
Ghoshā, 247, 458
Gēmētēr, 26
Gmā, 34
Go, 34
Goethe quoted, 298
Gomatī, 344
Gotamas, 186
Guṇas (the three), 309, 377
Gungū, 346

H.

Habakkuk, 3, 8—98
Hades, 305
Harivaṁśa, 8803—438
Heaven, 7, 11, 13, 21 ff., 102. See Dyaus.
Helios, 145
Hell, 312
Hephaistos, 86, 199, 224
Here, 24, 260
Hermes, 173
Herodotus quoted, 111, 209, 432
Hesiod quoted, 24, 76, 406
Hiraṇyagarbha, 1, 31 f., 354, 383, 390, 411
Hiraṇyahasta, 247
Homer quoted, 157
Homeric hymns quoted, 24, 155
Hotrā, 339

I.

Ignis, 199
Iḷā, 339
Indra, 8, 13, 17, 30 f., 77 ff., 192, 229, 266
Indrāṇī, 82, 337
Isaiah, 19, 1—98

J.

Jemshid, 1
Jmā, 34
Juhū, 398, 411
Jumnā, 338
Jupiter Pluvius, 77

K.

Kakshīvat, 246
Kāla, 391, 407 ff., 411
Kālī, 243
Kali (one of the dice), 430
Kalpas, 325
Kāma, 347, 362, 402 ff., 411
Kamadyū, 244
Kaṇāda, 364
Kapardin, 462
Kapila, 364
Kaśyapa, 52 f., 80, 373, 408
Kaṭha Upanishad, 308, 330
Kāṭhaka quoted—
3, 15— 82
12, 5—392
12, 10—232
Kaushītakī Upanishad, 308, 371
Kāvya Uśanas, 86, 201, 210
Kavyas, 292
Kronos, 24
Krumu, 344
Kshattriyas, 252, 389
Kshetrasyapati, 465
Kuhū, 344
Kurukshetra, 252
Kuyava, 95

L.

Lakshmī, 348
Linga, 384
Lokāyatikas, 364
Lucretius quoted, 28 f.

M.

Madhukaśā, 381
Madhuvidyā, 382
Mādhyamikas, 364
Mādhyamikī Vāch, 340
Maghavan, 99, 102
Mahābhārata—

i.
3135—52

iii.
171, 14019, 15465—11

vi.
3019—343

xii.
241 —372
1184 — 15
3657, 3667 —308
6811 —343
6812 ff.—357
7527, 7530 —408
8810 ff.—326
8106, 8125 ff., 8139 ff., 9877 f., 10060 } 407
9449 ff.—347
9616 —372
10836 —361

xiii.
51 ff.—409
7102 — 11

xiv.
987 ff.—377
1444 — 15
Mahādeva, 372
Mahī, 339
Maitrī Upanishad quoted, 393, 410
Manes, 311
Manu, i. 6 ff. referred to, 369, 408
—— i. 24—410
Manu, Manush, 10, 79, 113, 161, 206, 209, 228, 250
Manus, 161
Manvantaras, 161
Manyu, 237, 361, 406
Marka, 230
Mārkandeya purāṇa, 233
Mārttānḍa, 49
Marudvṛidhā, 344
Maruts, 10, 12, 79, 92 ff., 110, 147 ff., 215, 285
Mātalī, 292
Mātariśvan, 204 f., 219, 380, 395
Matsyapurāṇa, sect. 116—206
Matthew, St., quoted—24, 30; 26, 64—98
Mehatnū, 344
Meru, 324
Mithra, 70 ff., 120
Mitra, 13, 37, 39, 47, 51 f., 54 f., 58 ff., 120, 125, 156 f., et passim
Mitradates, 71
Mitrobates, 71
Moon, 270, 391
Mudgala, 324
Mūjavat, 261, 426
Muṇḍaka Upanishad, 389
Mushnāra 468

N.

Nachiketas, 308, 329
Naighaṇṭuka, 9
Nairuktas, 17, 143
Namuchi, 93 ff., 249
Nandana, 324
Naoghaithi, 121
Narasiṁha purāṇa, 291
Nāsatya, 240
Nāsatyas, 10
Navagvaś, 293, 311
Nighaṇṭu, 193 f.
Nigliḍ, 188
Nirṛiti, 82
Nirṛitis, 19
Nirukta—
ii. 3—374
vi. 9—460
Nirukta continued—
vii. 1— 9
— 5—8, 143, 350
— 9—171
— 27 ff.—207
ix. 26—338
x. 26—372
xi. 23— 50
xii. 1—234
—10 f.—227
— 19—207
— 35— 39
— 41— 17
Nirvāna, 326
Nishṭi, 13
Nishṭigrī, 13, 79
Nodhas, 185
Nonentity, 356

O.

Ogni, 199
Oromazes, 71
Ouranos, 25, 33, 75 f.
Ovid quoted, 60, 157

P.

Paṇis, 220
Parameshṭhin, 381, 391, 395, 401, 408
Parameshṭhin Prājāpatya, 80
Parāvṛij, 246
Parjanya, 23, 38 f., 98, 140 ff., 174, 262, 393, 436
Parushṇi, 344
Paśubandha, 315
Pedu, 247
Perkunas, 142
Pipru, 96
Piśāchas, 448
Pitṛis, 44 (see Fathers).
Plaksha Dayāmpāti, 316
Plato quoted, 155, 298, 406
Plutarch referred to, 71
—— quoted, 157
Polyphemus, 90
Poseidon, 31
Pradhāna, 364
Prajāpati, 11, 15, 56, 80, 164, 233, 264, 319, 352, 372, 376, 381, 387, 390 ff., 401, 408, 439

Prāṇa, 393 ff.
Prāsahā, 82
Pṛiśni, 39, 147
Pṛithivī, 7, 11, 21 ff., 119
Psalms quoted, 85
Purāṇa, 398
Purumitra, 244
Purūravas, 286, 421
Purusha, 31, 50, 80, 143, 316, 367 ff.
Pūshan, 31, 81, 84, 168, 171 ff., 257, 269, 462

R.

Rājanya, 371
Rākā, 346
Rākshasas, 44
Rakshases, 101, 204, 270, 299
Rasā, 344
Rebha, 246
Ribhus, 85, 166, 226, 284
Rig-veda quoted—

Maṇḍala i.

1, 3—216
— 4—200
3, 10—338
— 12—339
20, 6—226
22, 1—238
— 9—229
— 11—337
— 19— 94
23, 13—174
— 22—343
24, 1 f.— 45
—6, 8, 10— 62
— 8—156
—„ 9, 11— 65
— 15— 46
25, 1, 12— 65
—7, 9, 11— 63
—10, 13, 18—59, 472
27, 7 f.—216
— 13— 12
30, 16— 85
31, 1—200
— 7—217, 284
— 10—216
32, 2—86, 96 f., 224
— 5, 13— 96
— 9— 95
— 14— 93

Rig-veda continued—
34, 10—164, 239
— 11— 9
35, 1— 52
— 2 ff.—162 f.
36, 4—216
— 18—286
— 19—209
38, 5—303
— 9—150
— 13—282
39, 5—150
40, 5 f.—279
42, —174
43, 2— 35
44, 5—238
— 10—451
— 12—212
45, 2— 10
46, 3—241
48, —181
50, —159
— 2—467
— 12— 54
51, 4, 6— 97, — 8—113
52, 7— 91
— 8— 97
55, 1— 86
— 3— 92
— 5—103
58, 4 f.—211
— 6—209
59, 1, 5—214 f.
— 2—206
— 6—220
61, 6— 86
— 8—465
— 14— 99
62, 11—106, 457
63, 2— 92
64, 7—150, 468
— 8, 11—151
65, 4—212
66, 8—212
67, 3—214
68, 2—210
— 5—214
69, 1—206
70, 1, 3—215
71, 1—457
72, 9— 40
78, 4—220
80, 14— 96
— 15— 92
82, 5, 6—81, 85
84, 1— 88
— 4—265

Rig-veda continued—
34, 19—105
85, 7— 95
— 8—151, 454
— 9— 86
87, 3—150
88, 1 f.—151
89, 5—172
— 10—43, 354
91, 1, 18—284
—2, 6, 8, 21—269
— 22—267
92, —183
93, 1 ff.—269 f.
94, 7—211
— 10 f.—213
95, 2—109
— 3—208
100, 1— 99
101, 3—125
— 5—199
102, 2—103
— 8— 81
103, 2— 96
— 3—113
— 5—103
104, 6 f.—103
105, 2—457
— 7, 8—457, 467
— 17—281
108, 6—103
109, 2—460
— 4— 89
110, 2 f.—164
111, 1—86, 226
112, 5, 8—246
— 15—243
— 19—244
113, —187
— 18—193
114, 1—451
115, 1—157
116, 1, 3 ff., 23—244
— 7—246
— 8—247
— 10—243
— 15—245
— 17—236
— 24—246
117, 3, 6, 7, 9, 20, 24—247
— 4—246
— 9—240
— 13—236, 243
—14 f., 17 f.—245
— 20—244
— 21—113
118, 4—241
— 5—236

Rig-veda continued—
118, 6—243
— 9—247
119, 5—236
— 6 f.—246
121, 12— 86
122, 9— 68
123, 2—184
— 3—169
— 5—190
124, 1—165
— 7—457 f.
125, 5 f.—285
126, 1—454
— 7—467
130, 7— 97
— 8—113
131, 1—31, 92
— 4—112
133, 6—147
134, 3—144
— 4—145
135, 1, 3, 4—143 f.
136, 3— 36
138, 1—180
139, 11— 10
141, 9—125, 215
142, 10—224
142, 12—145
143, 5—213
149, 3—213
— 4—451
151, 9— 68
154, 5—285
156, 4—125
157, 1—165, 169, 239
— 4—249
— 5—243
159, 1 f.— 21
— 5—166
160, 2 ff.—22, 30
161, 1 ff.—226
— 10—463
— 14— 72
162, 22— 46
163, 13—285
164, 6—357
— 43—463
— 46—219
— 49—342
— 50— 17
165, 6 ff.— 15
— 8— 92
— 9— 99
166, 12— 36
167, 3—460
— 4—460
170, 2 ff.—154

Rig-veda continued—
171, 4—154
173, 6— 99
175, 5— 89
176, 1— 81
179, 6—285
180, 1—240 f.
181, 2—241
— 3—240
— 4—235
182, 3—241
— 5 ff.—245
183, 2—192
184, 2—243
185, 1— 32
— 3— 36
186, 7—106, 458
188, 9—225
190, 1 f.—279
191, 5—467
191, 9— 54
— 10—464

Mandala ii.

1, 3 ff.—219, 282
— 13 f.—202
2, 7—283
4, 3—206
8, 3—215
9, 1—215
11, 7— 84
— 9 f.— 96
— 11— 89
— 14— 91
— 18—113
— 19—114
12, 1 f.—124
— 3—205
— 5—104
— 6, 14—107
— 7—158, 192
— 8 f.—109
— 10—112
— 11 f.— 97
14, 1— 89
— 4— 98
— 6— 97
15, 1— 93
— 2—88, 115
— 3— 96
— 6—192
16, 2— 83
— 3— 85
17, 5— 99
18, 3—85, 106
19, 2— 94

Rig-veda continued—
19, 3— 96
— 4—107
20 8— 92
22, 3—107
23, —274
— 17—225
24, 1 ff., 8—277
26, 3—280
27, 1— 54
— 3 f.— 56 f.
— 10— 60
— 14—46, 68
— 16— 57
28, 4, 8— 62
— 5— 65
— 6— 63
29, 1—460
31, 5—191
32, 4, 6 f.—346
33, 9—454
34, 2 f.—150
35, 8—354
38, 1—166
— 2, 7, 9, 11—163 f.
— 9—125
39, 1 ff.—242
40, 1 ff.—31, 180
41, 5— 60
— 16—341
— 17—342

Mandala iii.

2, 11—212
3, 3 f.—200
— 10—214
— 11—205
4, 9—225
5, 10—214
6, 5—214
— 6, 9—10, 213
8, 5—194
9, 9—12, 215
12, 4, 6—220
14, 4—215
20, 4—218
21, 1—210
— 3—200
23, 4—338
25, 1—205
— 5—106
26, 2—282
— 7—210
27, 2, 7—200
29, 1 ff.—209
30, 5—30, 99

Rig-veda continued—
31, 15—158
32, 4— 92
— 8—158
— 9 f.— 89
— 12 f.— 91 f
33, 6—166
34, 1— 91
— 2— 99
— 8— 30
— 9—113
35, 4— 85
— 6— 89
— 7— 88
— 9— 92
36, 7 f.— 89
38, 4— 84
43, 7—262
44, 2—158, 192
45, 1, 4—85, 107
46, 2 f.— 99
47, 1— 89
— 3— 92
48, 2 f.— 77
— 4—84, 229
49, 1— 80
51, 12— 89
52, 3— 90
53, 2—106
— 4 ff.— 81
— 5—104
— 8— 82
54, 5— 19
— 13—151
— 18— 62
— 19 f.— 40
55, —354
— 2—286
— 10—215, 285
— 19—225
56, 1— 18
— 6—166
58, 1—192
59, — 69
61, 4, 6—191
62, 9—172

Mandala iv.

1, 2, 4—219
2, 6—216
— 11— 43
4, 4—218
— 10—216
5, 1—214
— 4—126
— 5—311, 458

Rig-veda continued—
5, 13—191
6, 2—211
8, 2, 4—202, 215
12, 4—46, 218
13, 2—159
14, 2—169
16, 14—468
17, 2—31, 100
— 4, 17—78, 105
— 16—107
18, 1, 5, 10 ff.—78
— 3—229
— 4—100
— 12— 16
21, 9—108
26, 2—114
— 6—262
28, 1 f.—267
30, 1—124
— 3, 5— 18
— 8 ff.—192
— 14, 20—97, 451
32, 16— 90
— 17 ff.—109
33, 5 f.—226
— 11— 20
35, 3, 8—284
36, 18—450
38, 5—467
41, 4—122
42, 3—225
43, 6—236
45, 4—241
46, 1, 3 f.—144
48, 4 f.—144
50, 1, 4 ff.—278
51, 9—184
52, 2—192
— 4—195
53, 2—164, 353, 472
— 3, 6—166
54, 2—14, 164
— 3—164, 166
56, 3— 30

Mandala v.

1, 4—201
— 11—213
2, 7— 65
3, 1—219
4, 9—218
— 10—285
9, 3 f.—210
13, 6—219
25, 5—216

Rig-veda continued—
29, 15—462
30, 5—92, 100
31, 2—107
— 4—85 f.
— 10— 91
32, 1— 96
34, 2— 86
— 4—111
36, 1— 89
37, 1, 4—107
41, 11—472
42, 6—100
43, 11—340
— 12—280
46, 3— 41
48, 18 f.—172
52, 15—454
53, 4—150
54, 1, 3—150
— 11—149
55, 1—151
— 4—285
— 5—150
57, 6—150
60, 2 f.—150
62, 3— 68
— 6— 60
— 8—42, 60
63, 1— 60
— 2—285
— 3— 68
— 4—159
69, 1, 4— 68
— 3— 36
73, 1—238
— 5—236
74, 5—243
— 10—238
75, 5—241
— 10—286
76, 3—239
78, 4 ff.—247
79, 9—195
81, 2—191
— 2, 3—162 ff.
— 4, 5—169 f.
82, 2 ff.—163, 166
— 6— 47
83, —140
85, 2—162
— 6— 62
— 7 f.— 65

Mandala vi.

2, 4 f.—216
5, 5—216

Rig-veda continued—
7, 1 f.—206
— 4— 14
— 7—214
8, 3—214
— 5—218
9, 1 f.—465
— 7—215
13, 1—218
14, 2—200
16, 13, 14, 39, 48—209, 220
17, 8— 92
— 9— 96
— 10— 86
— 11—178
18, 3—104, 114
— 10—101
19, 3— 84
20, 2— 92, 95
21, 4— 85
— 5, 8—104
— 11—113
24, 3—107
— 7— 15
— 8—100
25, 3—114
27, 4— 96
28, 5—103
29, 2— 82
30, 1, 5— 30, 100
36, 1— 92
39, 3—193, 267
40, 2— 89
44, 23—159, 193, 267
— 22, 24—268
45, 26—107
47, 1 f.—262
— 3—90, 194
— 5—268
— 6— 89
— 8, 11—106, 112
— 15 ff.—110
— 18— 82
— 19—227
— 23—455
49, 7—340
50, 2— 51
— 7—345
51, 5—22, 41
— 7—441
52, 4—286
— 6—339
53 & 54 —176
55, —177
56 & 57 —178
58, —179
— 3—157
59, 11 f.—13 f.

Rig-veda continued—
60, 6—114
61, 1, 2, 7, 8, 11 f.—340 ff.
63 6 f.—241
71, 1 f., 6—167
72, 1, 2—158, 270
74, 1, 3—270
75, 1 ff., 6 f.—469
— 18—472

Maṇḍala vii.

1, 14—206
2, 1—211
— 3—209
— 6—191
— 9—225
3, 6—212
— 7—218
4, 4—200
— 6—217
5, 4—215
— 6—220
6, 1—214
— 2—215
— 3—220
— 5—191
— 7—218
11, 1—202
12, 2—218
13, 1— 49
— 2—215
15, 12— 43
— 14—218
16, 3—211
18, 2—454
20, 5— 79
21, 6— 92
— 7— 17, 125
23, 3— 31
— 5—105
26, 3—458
27, 3—107
30, 1— 12
31, 5—105
— 6—109
32, 18 f.—108
33, 2— 89
— 1—462
34, 2— 32
— 20—225
— 21 f.—226
35, 8, 10—169
— 12—286
36, 2— 70
37, 3—107
38, 2, 4—167
— 3—163

Rig-veda continued—
38, 4—47, 125
39, 2— 20
40, 1—167
— 5—354
45, 1—162, 167
49, 2— 72, 466
— 3— 63
52, 2—441
56, 13—150
57, 1—150
— 6—285
58, 12— 74
60, 1—158
— 2—157
— 3—156
— 4— 62, 156
— 5— 57
— 6 f.— 68
61, 5— 63
63, 1—158
— 2—156 f.
64, 2— 72
65, 3— 65, 476
66, 2— 51
— 4—169
— 11— 61
— 13— 68
67, 2 f.—238
68, 3—242
— 7—245
69, 3—236
72, 2—249
— 4—239
— 5—238
75, 5—191
76, 1—158
— 4—193, 286
77, 2—187
— 3—157
78, 3—156, 159, 191, 205
80, 1—195
81, 4—195
82, 2 f.—123, 159
— 5 f.—122
83, 1—114
— 2—471
— 8—462
— 9—123
84, 2—65, 123
85, 3—123
86, 3 ff.— 66
87, 1, 2, 3, 5— 62
— 4— 63
— 7— 47, 65
88, 2— 59
— 4 ff.— 60, 67
89, 1 ff.— 67

Rig-veda continued—
90, 3—143
91, 5—144
— 6— 85
92, 2—144
93, 7— 47, 218
94, 7—220
95, 1 ff.—340 f.
96, 4 ff.—340
97, 6—281
— 8— 23, 280
98, 3— 79, 89
99, 4 f.—95, 159, 205
100, 4—113
101, 1, 2, 4 ff.—141 f.
103, —435
104, 3—312
— 6—106

Maṇḍala viii.

2, 4— 89
— 12—464
— 18— 20, 88
— 20—460
4, 9—108, 457
— 10, 12— 89
— 16—466
5, 1 f., 30—238
— 7—242
— 28 f.—240
— 38—456
6, 1— 98
— 5— 30
— 13— 96
— 15—100
— 18— 49
— 38— 31
— 40— 89
— 41—102
7, 4, 8, 23—150
— 25—149 — 31— 92
8, 4, 23—238
9, 12—248
— 17—192, 238
12, 14— 47
— 22— 92
— 30—101
13, 16— 91
14, 1—108
— 5, 11— 92
— 9—100
— 13— 98
— 14— 97
— 15—112
15, 2—100
— 8— 92

Rig-veda continued—
16, 7—476
17, 5 ff.— 89
— 10— 87
— 14— 97
18, 15— 57
19, 25—108
— 32—219
— 33—206
20, 23, 25—153
21, 4—105
— 14—112
— 18—339, 454
22, 16—240
23, 1—211
— 15—217
— 17—210
24, 27—114
25, 3— 38
26, 21—144, 229
27, 10—474
28, 1— 10
— 4— 18
29, 7— 19
30, 2— 10
— 3— 19
31, 15 f— 20
32, 26— 97
33, 2— 89
— 8—468
— 17—461
34, 9— 85
— 3—467
35, 3— 10
— 13 ff.—156
36, 4—116
39, 3—210
— 6—215
40, 7—471
41, 10—378
42, 1— 61
— 2— 65
43, 13—209
— 21—218
— 23—215
— 31—217
44, 23—109
45, 4— 81
— 17—106
— 32 ff.—111
— 39— 85
46, 32—461
— 33—455
47, 2, 8— 57
— 9— 38
— 13— 57
48, 1—266
— 3— 19, 90

Rig-veda continued—
48, 7—269
— 9—265
— 13—267, 287
50, 2— 89
— 9, 17—108
51, 2, 7, 12—124
— 7—101
54, 7—105
— 10 f.—152
55, 13—105
57, 11—105
58, 7—112, 286
— 11— 88
— 16— 82
59, 5— 30
— 7—476
61, 17—265
62, 2—241
— 4—238
— 11—249, 268
64, 1—213
65, 10— 83
66, 1— 81
— 4— 89
67, 3—156
— 5 f.—112
— 7—116
— 10—173
— 20—301
68, 1—268
— 2—265
69, 1, 3, 4, 7—105
70, 3—100, 107
71, 8—271
72, 7 f.—474
78, 2—100
— 7—158
80, 11, 14— 96
81, 6—116
— 30—106
— 32—105
82, 5—101
— 12— 31
83, 9 ff.—152
85, 3— 83
— 4, 6, 9—100
— 7, 15— 93
— 8—147
— 20—105
86, 14—101
87, 2—353
— 6—114
— 8— 92
— 11—105
89, 3 f.—104
— 8—262
— 9— 86

Rig-veda continued—
90, 11— 54, 156
— 12—158
— 15— 38
— 16—370
91, 4 f.—213
— 6—168
— 8—225
— 17—206
— 19 f.—216
92, 1—113, 220
— 2—219
— 3—215

Mandala ix.

1, 1—261
— 6—237
4, 6—225
5, 9—226
42, 4—267
54, 3—268
61, 16, 22, 30—267
66, 16 f.—268
— 18—269
— 24—267
67, 10 ff.—461
73, 8—268, 312
76, 2—267
78, 4—269
82, 3—142
83, 3—287
85, 2—265
— 3—267
— 12—263
86, 10, 37, 40—267
— 29—159
— 44—469
87, 2—13, 267 f.
— 6— 97
— 9— 85
88, 3 f.—267
89, 6—268
— 12— 95
90, 3—267
— 5—266
91, 22—267
92, 4— 11
— 5—477
96, 5— 13, 267
— 6—269
97, 24—268
— 41—267
— 42—266
— 55— 41
98, 9— 31, 268
101, 1, 13—467

Rig-veda continued—
106, 8— 14, 266
107, 7—267
108, 3—266
109, 3—266
— 15—265
110, 3—267
112, —424
113, 2—103, 361
— 3—237
— 7 ff.—266, 306
114, 3— 54

Mandala x.

2, 1, 4 f.—200
— 7— 24, 205
4, 1—218
5, 7— 51
6, 6—218
8, 8 f.—230
9, 6—343
10, —288
— 5—176, 225
12, 8— 47
14, —291
— 7— 65
15, —295
— 12—202
16, 1 ff.—297
— 4—217, 476
17, 1 ff.—227, 287
— 3 ff.—164, 173
— 8—241
— 10 ff.—338
18, 3—466
— 6—225
20, 9—212
21, 5—209
22, 4 ff.— 85
23, 7—105
24, 5—249
25, 3, 6—268
— 7—269
— 9—267
26, 4 f.—180
27, 11 f.—458
— 17—467
28, 3— 90
29, 6— 30
30, 5—269
— 10—478
— 12—339
31, 3— 19
— 7— 32
33, 2—457
— 8 f.— 19

Rig-veda continued—
34, —425
— 1—261
— 4 f.—460
35, 7—168
36, 2 f.— 41
— 14—168
37, 1—156, 159
— 6—314
— 12—441
38, 3—114
39, 3, 5—242
— 6, 11—249
— 8—243, 246
— 9—246 f.
— 11—236
— 12—192, 238
— 13—248
40, 2—459
— 3—455
— 4—468
— 6—460
41, 3— 59
42, 2—107
— 3—108
— 4, 11—105
43, 1—106, 458
— 4, 7— 90, 465
— 5—159
44, 8—101
— 9— 87
45, 1—207
— 4—212
— 8—205
46, 2—209
— 9—206, 226
47, 1, 7—106
48, 1—105
— 3— 86, 92
— 11—124
49, 2— 39, 114
— 7— 85, 156
— 10—229
50, 4— 92
51, 4 ff.—202 f.
52, 1 f.—203
53, 9—224, 281
— 10— 14
54, 1 ff., 6—102
— 3— 30
55, 1— 81
56, 1—207
58, 1—313
59, 4—269
60, 10—313
61, 4—239
62, 3—159
— 11—456

Rig-veda continued—
63, 2 f.—38 f.
— 7—209
— 10— 41
64, 2— 19
— 5— 51
65, 5— 68
— 9— 39
— 11—114
— 12—244
— 15— 19
66, 10—227
67, 5—193
68, 6 ff.—193, 279, 283
— 11—287, 311
69, 3—209
— 9—215
70, 2, 11—202
— 9—226
71, 2—348
— 4—461
72, — 48, 355
— 2 f.— 17
73, 1— 79
— 6—193
75, —343
78, 3—150
79, 1 f.—212
— 4—210
— 5—216
80, 3—247
81 & 82—354
81, 2 f.— 32
83, 1—114
— 2 f.—361
85, 1—158
— 2 ff.—266, 270
—3, 9, 14—237
— 4— 79
— 19—192
— 26, 37—173, 243
— 43—390
— 46—460
86, 9—337
— 11 f.— 82
— 19—114
87, 2, 5, 14—204
88, 2—211
— 4—214
—6, 8, 10 f.—206
— 11— 54, 179
— 15—287
89, 2— 97
— 4—102
— 7— 96
— 8 f.—125
— 10— 31, 102
90, —367

Rig-veda continued—
90, 5— 50
— 14— 31
91, 2—204
— 3—201, 218
— 4 f.—213
— 8 ff.—200
93, 6—262
95, 18—286
97, 1, 3 ff.—13, 357, 463
— 6—454, 464
— 15, 19—281, 463
— 16—303
98, 7—280
99, 6— 98, 230
100, 5—281
— 8—168
101, 12— 13
102, 3—114
— 12—102
103, 8 ff.—109, 281
107, —433
— 1—287
— 2—285
109, 4— 17
— 5—401
110, 9— 31, 225
— 11—201
112, 1— 94
— 2— 84
— 3— 83
113, 3— 92
114, 2— 19
— 3—462
— 5—353
115, 1—210
117, —431
— 1— 19
119, — 90
— 4—106
120, 1— 79
— 5— 92
— 6— 95
121, 9— 31
123, 6— 60
125, 1—226
129, — 5, 356
— 1— 32
— 6— 13
131, 4— 92
133, —471
— 2— 81
134, 1— 79
— 6— 87
135, 1—302
138, 5—193
— 6— 92, 102
139, 1—168, 172

Rig-veda continued—
141, 3—280
142, 4—212
146, —422
149, 1, 4— 31, 164
150, 4—201
151, 1 ff.—346
152, 1—105
— 4—312
154, —310
156, 4—158, 214
158, 1 ff.— 8, 170
159, 4— 14
160, 1—107
— 3—104
165, 4—302
167, 1— 14, 80
168, 1 ff.—145
171, 4—158
173, —456
181, 3—169
184, 1—225, 390
— 2—342, 346
186, 1—146
187, 4—215
190, —478
— 3— 31, 159
Rijrāśva, 245
Rikvans, 292
Rivers, 343
Rodasī, 148, 345
Rohiṇī, 264
Rohita, 395 f.
Rudra, 1, 125, 146 ff.
Rudras, 11, 124, 147 ff.

S.

Sādhyas, 17, 55, 372
S'ākalya, 316
S'ākapūṇi, 207
S'akra, 88
Sāma-veda—
i. 299— 38
— 340—289
ii. 1060—403
— 1219— 84
Samvartaka fire, 161
S'ambara, 95 f.
S'aṇḍa, 230
Sankarshana, 408
Sānkhya kārikā quoted, 16
S'aphāruj, 87
Saramā, 294
Śaranyū, 227, 237, 257, 288
Sarasvat, 340

Sarasvatī, 93 f., 219, 337 ff., 454
Sarayu, 339, 450
S'aryāta, 251
S'aryāti, 254
S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa—

i.
1, 1, 7— 20
— 9, 1— 55
6, 4, 18— 96
9, 3, 10—319

ii.
1, 4, 9—314
2, 1, 19— 41
3, 3, 1—208
4, 2, 1— 15
— 2— 52
6, 4, 8—320

iii.
1, 3, 3— 50
2, 4, 1—263

iv.
1, 5, 1—250
— 16—234
5, 7, 2— 11
6, 1, 1—315

v.
3, 1, 4— 41
4, 2, 52—343
—5, 1— 95

vi.
2, 2, 27—317
5, 4, 8—320
6, 2, 4—322

vii.
5, 2, 6—391

ix.
1, 4, 6—458
5, 1, 1— 14

x.
1, 5, 4—315
2, 6, 7—314
— 19—314
3, 2, 13—319
3, 3, 8—319
4, 1, 9—387
—3, 1—314
—3, 9—315
—4, 4—307

S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa continued—
5, 3, 1—358
—4, 15—318
6, 3, 1—317
—5, 9—387

xi.
1, 6, 14— 80
—8, 2—372
— 6—315
2, 1, 1—303
—3, 1—387
—6, 13—318
—7, 33—314
3, 3, 1—387
4, 3, 1—349
—4, 1—321
5, 6, 3—317
— 9—321
6, 2, 2—320
—3, 11—316
8, 3, 6—314

xii.
3, 4, 1—377
—5, 1—164
7, 3, 1— 94
8, 3, 31—315

xiii.
6, 1, 1—377
7, 1, 1—372, 387

xiv.
1, 2, 18—393
2, 1, 8— 52
—2, 2— 13
3, 2, 1—372
6, 2, 13—319
—9, 28—316
7, 1, 32—308
Savitṛi, 31, 43, 47, 54, 125, 155, 162 ff., 353
Sautrāmaṇī, 315
S'ayu, 247
Sindhu, 153, 339, 344, 454
Sinīvālī, 53, 346
Skambha, 378 ff.
Soma, 13, 31, 94, 110, 121, 140, 180, 237, 258 ff., 306
Soma-juice, 88 ff., 237
S'raddhā, 264, 346, 404
S'rī, 349
Strabo quoted, 77
Subandhu, 313
Sudās, 454, 471
Sudhanvan, 284
S'ūdra, 371
Sukanyā, 252, 254
Sumitra, 209
S'unas'sepa, 45
Sūrya, 13, 54, 125, 143, 155 ff., 298
Sūryā, 171, 178 f., 236 f., 257
Susartū, 344
S'ushṇa, 95 f.
S'utudri, 339, 344
Svadhā, 292
Svāhā, 292
Svarāj, 370
Svarga, 286, 302
Svayambhū, 353, 408
S'vetās'vatara Upanishad, 409
S'vetī, 344

T.

Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa—

i.
3, 2, 2—265
5, 2, 6—299
6, 4, 1—164

ii.
2, 3, 3— 80
— 7, 1—376
—9, 1, 10—33, 365
— 10, 1—80, 264
4, 1, 6—201
— 2, 6—299
— 7—36, 82
— 6, 5—307
8, 8, 5—342
— 6—347
— 8—404
— 9—389
— 9, 6—32, 355

iii.
1, 2, 1—242
7, 12, 3f.—66, 441
9, 22, 1—372
10, 9, 11—320
— 11, 1—299
— 6—320
11, 8, 1—329
12, 2, 6—318
— 3, 1—15, 44, 347, 361
— 9, 7—390

Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, Commentary on, quoted, 358, 362 f., 365
Taittirīya Sanhitā—

i.
2, 3, 1— 51
8, 16, 1— 58

ii.
2, 3, 1—403
3, 5, 1—11, 264
5, 1, 1—230
— 8, 5—201
— 6—218
—11, 8—201
6, 8, 4—476

iv.
p. 34*a* — 53

v.
5, 4, 1— 74
p. 34*a* — 15

vi.
1, 3, 6— 17
1, 4, 3—478
1, 6, 5—263
4, 3, 3— 73
— 8, — 59
— 9, 1—253
— 10, 1—230
6, 11, 2— 81
p. 10, —307
p. 18, —474
p. 41, —372
p. 65*a* —225
p. 67*a* —317

vii.
2, 7, 2—235
4, 2, 1— 15
Tapas, 80, 361, 366
Tṛishṭāmā, 344
Trita, 117, 419
Trita Āptya, 195, 230, 336
Tritsus, 462
Tugra, 244 f.
Tura Kāvasheya, 387
Turvaśa, 286
Tvāshṭra, 336
Tvashṭṛi, 31, 38, 86, 96, 144, 205, 224 ff., 281, 287, 290

U.

Uchhishṭa, 13, 391, 396 ff.
Ugrajit, 430
Ugradeva, 286
Ugrampaśyā, 430
Upabhṛit, 398
Upahavya, 397
Urana, 96, 98
Urvaśī, 345, 421
Ushas, 13, 157, 178, 181 ff., 238
Uttānapad, 41, 360

V.

Vāch, 263, 340, 342, 370, 392, 405
Vāchaspati, 273
Vadhrimatī, 247
Vadhryaśva, 341
Vairūpas, 311
Vaiśya, 371
Vājas, 284
Vājasaneyi Sanhitā—
1, 17—217
7, 11—382
10, 16— 42
13, 43— 35
19, 12— 94
23, 47 f.—387
29, 9—225
— 60— 53
31, 18—373
— 19—390
— 22—349
32, 2—374
— 5—391
Vala, 279
Vālakhilya—
8, 3—461, 467
9, 2— 11
10, 2—357
Vandana, 246
Varchin, 95
Varena, 75
Varuṇa, 1, 4, 13, 32 f., 37 ff., 46 f., 54 f., 58 ff., 110, 116 ff., et passim.
Varuṇānī, 345
Varūtrī, 339
Vasishṭha, 70, 345
Vasishṭhas, 195, 296, 311
Vāstoshpati, 273
Vasus, 11, 22, 124, 163
Vāta, 39, 85, 142, 145
Vāyu, 8, 39, 85, 143 ff., 206, 229
Vibhāvasu, 263
Vibhīdaka, 426
Vilistengā, 82
Vimada, 105, 244
Virāj, 50, 369, 387, 395, 401, 405
Virūpa, 292
Vishṇāpū, 244
Vishṇu, 1, 13, 29, 53, 79, 95, 113, 122, 125, 169, etc.
Vishṇupurāṇa, 52, 271, 313
Vishūvat, 397
Viśpalā, 245
Viśvaka, 244
Viśvakarman, 1, 32, 352, 354, 372, 396
Viśvarūpa, 230
Vitastā, 344
Vivasvat, 50, 52, 55, 144, 205, 227, 235, 257, 266, 288, 301
Vṛihannāradīya Purāṇa, 302
Vṛishākapi hymn, 421
Vṛitra, 79, 81, 95 ff., 119, 220, 267
Vulcan, 199

W.

Waters, 343

X.

Xenophon referred to, 71

Y.

Yadu, 286
Yama, 65, 219, 227, 266, 284 ff., 353, 421, 442 f.
Yamī, 228, 287 ff., 421
Yamunā, 339, 344
Yātudhanas, 9, 204, 270
Yima, 75

Z.

Zendavesta, 71, 120, 419
Zeus, 4, 21, 33, 45, 261

THE END.

STEPHEN AUSTIN, PRINTER, HERTFORD.

LINGUISTIC PUBLICATIONS

OF

TRÜBNER & CO.,

8 AND 60, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

Ahlwardt.—COLLECTION OF ANCIENT ARABIAN POETS; Published with Critical and Bibliographical Notes, and with an Index of Variations in the Text, etc. By W. AHLWARDT, Professor of Oriental Languages at the University of Greifswald. Crown 8vo. cloth. (In the press.)

Alabaster.—THE MODERN BUDDHIST: Being the Views of a Siamese Minister of State on his own and other Religions. Translated, with Remarks, by HENRY ALABASTER, Interpreter of H.B.M. Consulate-General in Siam, &c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo. [In the press.

Alcock.—A PRACTICAL GRAMMAR of the JAPANESE LANGUAGE. By Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, Resident British Minister at Jeddo. 4to. pp. 61, sewed. 18*s.*

Alcock.—FAMILIAR DIALOGUES in JAPANESE, with English and French Translations, for the use of Students. By Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK. 8vo. pp. viii. and 40, sewed. Paris and London, 1863. 5*s.*

Alger.—THE POETRY OF THE ORIENT. By WILLIAM ROUNSEVILLE ALGER, 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 337. 9*s.*

Andrews.—A DICTIONARY OF THE HAWAIIAN LANGUAGE, to which is appended an English-Hawaiian Vocabulary, and a Chronological Table of Remarkable Events. By LORRIN ANDREWS. 8vo. pp. 560, cloth. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

Arabic, Persian, and Turkish Books (A Catalogue of). Printed in the East. Constantly for sale by Trübner and Co., 8 and 60, Paternoster Row, London. CONTENTS.—Arabic, Persian, and Turkish Books printed in Egypt.—Arabic Books printed in Oudh.—Persian Literature printed in Oudh.—Editions of the Koran printed in Oudh.—Arabic Books printed at Bombay.—Persian Books printed at Bombay.—Arabic Literature printed at Tunis.—Arabic Literature printed in Syria. 16mo. pp. 68. Price 1*s.*

Asher.—ON THE STUDY OF MODERN LANGUAGES IN GENERAL, and of the English Language in particular. An Essay. By DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. 12mo. pp. viii. and 80, cloth. 2*s.*

Asiatic Society.—JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, from the Commencement to 1863. First Series, complete in 20 Vols. 8vo., with many Plates. Price £10; or, in Single Numbers, as follows:—Nos. 1 to 14, 6*s.* each; No. 15, 2 Parts, 4*s.* each; No. 16, 2 Parts, 4*s.* each; No. 17, 2 Parts, 4*s.* each; No. 18, 6*s.* These 18 Numbers form Vols. I. to IX.—Vol. X., Part 1, op.; Part 2, 5*s.*; Part 3, 5*s.*—Vol. XI., Part 1, 6*s.*; Part 2 not published.—Vol. XII., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XIII., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XIV., Part 1, 5*s.*; Part 2 not published.—Vol. XV., Part 1, 6*s.*; Part 2, with Maps, 10*s.*—Vol. XVI., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XVII., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XVIII., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XIX., Parts 1 to 4, 16*s.*—Vol. XX., 3 Parts, 4*s.* each.

Asiatic Society.—Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland. New Series. Vol. I. In Two Parts. pp. iv. and 490. Price 16*s.*

Contents.—I. Vajra-chhedikâ, the "Kin Kong King," or Diamond Sûtra. Translated from the Chinese by the Rev. S. Beal, Chaplain, R.N.—II. The Páramitá-hridaya Sûtra, or, in Chinese, "Mo-ho-pô-ye-po-lo-mih-to-sin-king," i.e. "The Great Páramitá Heart Sûtra." Translated from the Chinese by the Rev. S. Beal, Chaplain, R.N.—III. On the Preservation of National Literature in the East. By Colonel F. J. Goldsmid.—IV. On the Agricultural, Commercial, Financial, and Military Statistics of Ceylon. By E. R. Power, Esq.—V. Contributions to a Knowledge of the Vedic Theogony and Mythology. By J. Muir, D.C.L., LL.D.—VI. A Tabular List of Original Works and Translations, published by the late Dutch Government of Ceylon at their Printing Press at Colombo. Compiled by Mr. Mat. P. J. Ondaatje, of Colombo.—VII. Assyrian and Hebrew Chronology compared, with a view of showing the extent to which the Hebrew Chronology of Ussher must be modified, in conformity with the Assyrian Canon. By J. W. Bosanquet, Esq.—VIII. On the existing Dictionaries of the Malay Language. By Dr. H. N. van der Tuuk.—IX. Bilingual Readings: Cuneiform and Phœnician. Notes on some Tablets in the British Museum, containing Bilingual Legends (Assyrian and Phœnician). By Major-General Sir H. Rawlinson, K.C.B., Director R.A.S.—X. Translations of Three Copper-plate Inscriptions of the Fourth Century A.D., and Notices of the Châlukya and Gurjjara Dynasties. By Professor J. Dowson, Staff College, Sandhurst.—XI. Yama and the Doctrine of a Future Life, according to the Rig-Yajur-, and Atharva-Vedas. By J. Muir, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D.—XII. On the Jyotisha Observation of the Place of the Colures, and the Date derivable from it. By William D. Whitney, Esq., Professor of Sanskrit in Yale College, New Haven, U.S.—Note on the preceding Article. By Sir Edward Colebrooke, Bart., M.P., President R.A.S.—XIII. Progres of the Vedic Religion towards Abstract Conceptions of the Deity. By J. Muir, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D.—XIV. Brief Notes on the Age and Authenticity of the Work of Aryabhata, Varâhamihira, Brahmagupta, Bhattotpala, and Bhâskarâchârya. By Dr. Bhâu Dâjî, Honorary Member R.A.S.—XV. Outlines of a Grammar of the Malagasy Language. By H. N. Van der Tuuk.—XVI. On the Identity of Xandrames and Krananda. By Edward Thomas, Esq.

Vol. II. In Two Parts. pp. 522. Price, 16*s.*

Contents.—I. Contributions to a Knowledge of Vedic Theogony and Mythology. No. 2. By J. Muir, Esq.—II. Miscellaneous Hymns from the Rig- and Atharva-Vedas. By J. Muir, Esq.—III. Five hundred questions on the Social Condition of the Natives of Bengal. By the Rev. J. Long.—IV. Short account of the Malay Manuscripts belonging to the Royal Asiatic Society. By Dr. H. N. van der Tuuk.—V. Translation of the Amitâbha Sûtra from the Chinese. By the Rev. S. Beal, Chaplain Royal Navy.—VI. The initial coinage of Bengal. By Edward Thomas, Esq.—VII. Specimens of an Assyrian Dictionary. By Edwin Norris, Esq.—VIII. On the Relations of the Priests to the other classes of Indian Society in the Vedic age. By J. Muir, Esq.—IX. On the Interpretation of the Veda. By the same.—X. An attempt to Translate from the Chinese a work known as the Confessional Services of the great compassionate Kwan Yin, possessing 1000 hands and 1000 eyes. By the Rev. S. Beal, Chaplain Royal Navy.—XI. The Hymns of the Gaupâyanas and the Legend of King Asamâti. By Professor Max Müller, M.A., Honorary Member Royal Asiatic Society.—XII. Specimen Chapters of an Assyrian Grammar. By the Rev. E. Hincks, D.D., Honorary Member Royal Asiatic Society.

Vol. III. In Two Parts. pp. 516. With Photograph. 22*s.*

Contents.—I. Contributions towards a Glossary of the Assyrian Language. By H. F. Talbot.—II. Remarks on the Indo-Chinese Alphabets. By Dr. A. Bastian.—III. The poetry of Mohamed Rabadan, Arragonese. By the Hon. H. E. J. Stanley.—IV. Catalogue of the Oriental Manuscripts in the Library of King's College, Cambridge. By Edward Henry Palmer, B.A., Scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society; Membre de la Société Asiatique de Paris.—V. Description of the Amravati Tope in Guntur. By J. Fergusson, Esq., F.R.S.—VI. Remarks on Prof. Brockhaus' edition of the Kathâsarit-sâgara, Lambaka IX. XVIII. By Dr. H. Kern, Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Leyden.—VII. The source of Colebrooke's Essay "On the Duties of a Faithful Hindu Widow." By Fitzedward Hall, Esq., M.A., D.C.L. Oxon. Supplement: Further detail of proofs that Colebrooke's Essay, "On the Duties of a Faithful Hindu Widow," was not indebted to the Vivâdabhangârnava. By Fitzedward Hall, Esq.—VII. The Sixth Hymn of the First Book of the Rig Veda. By Professor Max Müller, M.A., Hon. M.R.A.S.—IX. Sassanian Inscriptions. By E. Thomas, Esq.—X. Account of an Embassy from Morocco to Spain in 1690 and 1691. By the Hon. H. E. J. Stanley.—XI. The Poetry of Mohamed Rabadan, of Arragon. By the Hon. H. E. J. Stanley.—XII. Materials for the History of India for the Six Hundred Years of Mohammadan rule, previous to the Foundation of the British Indian Empire. By Major W. Nassau Lees, LL.D., Ph.D.—XIII. A Few Words concerning the Hill people inhabiting the Forests of the Cochin State. By Captain G. E. Fryer, Madras Staff Corps, M.R.A.S.—XIV. Notes on the Bhojpurî Dialect of Hindî, spoken in Western Behar. By John Beames, Esq., B.C.S., Magistrate of Chumparun.

Vol. IV. In Two Parts. pp. 521.

Contents.—I. Contribution towards a Glossary of the Assyrian Language. By H. F. Talbot. Part II.—II. On Indian Chronology. By J. Fergusson, Esq., F.R.S.—III. The Poetry of Mohamed Rabadan of Arragon. By the Hon. H. E. J. Stanley.—IV. On the Magar Language of Nepal. By John Beames, Esq., B.C.S.—V. Contributions to the Knowledge of Parsee Literature. By Edward Sachau, Ph.D.—VI. Illustrations of the Lamaist System in Tibet, drawn from Chinese Sources. By Wm. Frederick Mayers, Esq., of H.B.M. Consular Service, China.—VII. Khuddaka Pâtha, a Pâli Text, with a Translation and Notes. By R. C. Childers, late of the Ceylon Civil Service.—VIII. An Endeavour to elucidate Rashiduddin's Geographical Notices of India. By Col. H. Yule, C.B.—IX. Sassanian Inscriptions explained by the Pahlavi of the Bombay Sanscrit Series—continued. Already published.

3. PANCHATANTRA II. AND III. Edited, with Notes, by G. BÜHLER, Ph.D. Pp. 86, 14, 2. 5s. 6d.

4. PANCHATANTRA I. Edited, with Notes, by F. KIELHORN, Ph.D. Pp. 114, 53. 6s. 6d.

Boyce.—A GRAMMAR OF THE KAFFIR LANGUAGE.—By WILLIAM B. BOYCE, Wesleyan Missionary. Third Edition, augmented and improved, with Exercises, by WILLIAM J. DAVIS, Wesleyan Missionary. 12mo. pp. xii. and 164, cloth. 8s.

Bowditch.—SUFFOLK SURNAMES. By N. I. BOWDITCH. Third Edition, 8vo. pp. xxvi. and 758, cloth. 7s. 6d.

Brice.—A ROMANIZED HINDUSTANI AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY. Designed for the use of Schools and for Vernacular Students of the Language. Compiled by NATHANIEL BRICE. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 357. 8s.

Brinton.—THE MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD. A Treatise on the Symbolism and Mythology of the Red Races of America. By DANIEL G. BRINTON, A.M., M.D. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 308. 10s. 6d.

Brown.—THE DERVISHES; or, ORIENTAL SPIRITUALISM. By JOHN P. BROWN, Secretary and Dragoman of the Legation of the United States of America at Constantinople. With twenty-four Illustrations. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 415. 14s.

Brown.—CARNATIC CHRONOLOGY. The Hindu and Mahomedan Methods of Reckoning Time explained: with Essays on the Systems; Symbols used for Numerals, a new Titular Method of Memory, Historical Records, and other subjects. By CHARLES PHILIP BROWN, Member of the Royal Asiatic Society; late of the Madras Civil Service; Telugu Translator to Government; Senior Member of the College Board, etc.; Author of the Telugu Dictionaries and Grammar, etc. 4to. sewed, pp. xii. and 90. 10s. 6d.

Brown.—SANSKRIT PROSODY AND NUMERICAL SYMBOLS EXPLAINED. By CHARLES PHILIP BROWN, Author of the Telugu Dictionary, Grammar, etc., Professor of Telugu in the University of London. Demy 8vo. pp. 64, cloth. 3s. 6d.

Buddhaghosha.—BUDDHAGHOSHA'S PARABLES: translated from Burmese by Captain H. T. ROGERS, R.E. With an Introduction containing Buddha's Dhammapadam, or, Path of Virtue; translated from Pali by F. MAX MÜLLER. 8vo. pp. 378, cloth. 12s. 6d.

Burgess.—SURYA-SIDDHANTA (Translation of the): A Text-book of Hindu Astronomy, with Notes and an Appendix, containing additional Notes and Tables, Calculations of Eclipses, a Stellar Map, and Indexes. By Rev. EBENEZER BURGESS, formerly Missionary of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions in India; assisted by the Committee of Publication of the American Oriental Society. 8vo. pp. iv. and 354, boards. 15s.

Callaway.—IZINGANEKWANE, NENSUMANSUMANE, NEZINDABA, ZABANTU (Nursery Tales, Traditions, and Histories of the Zulus). In their own words, with a Translation into English, and Notes. By the Rev. HENRY CALLAWAY, M.D. Volume I., 8vo. pp. xiv. and 378, cloth. Natal, 1866 and 1867. 16s.

Callaway.—THE RELIGIOUS SYSTEM OF THE AMAZULU.

Part I. Unkulunkulu; or, the Tradition of Creation as existing among the Amazulu and other Tribes of South Africa, in their own words, with a translation into English, and Notes. By the Rev. Canon CALLAWAY, M.D. 8vo. pp. 126, sewed. 4s.

Part II.—Amatongo; or, Ancestor Worship, as existing among the Amazulu, in their own words, with a translation into English, and Notes. By the Rev. CANON CALLAWAY, M.D. 8vo. pp. 127, sewed. 4s.

Canones Lexicographici; or, Rules to be observed in Editing the New English Dictionary of the Philological Society, prepared by a Committee of the Society. 8vo., pp. 12, sewed. 6d.

Carpenter.—The Last Days in England of the Rajah Rammohun Roy. By Mary Carpenter, of Bristol. With Five Illustrations. 8vo. pp. 272, cloth. 7s. 6d.

Carr.—ఆంధ్రలోకోక్తిచంద్రిక. A Collection of Telugu Proverbs, Translated, Illustrated, and Explained; together with some Sanscrit Proverbs printed in the Devnâgarî and Telugu Characters. By Captain M. W. Carr, Madras Staff Corps. One Vol. and Supplemnt, royal 8vo. pp. 488 and 148. 31s. 6d.

Catlin.—O-Kee-Pa. A Religious Ceremony of the Mandans. By George Catlin. With 13 Coloured Illustrations. 4to. pp. 60, bound in cloth, gilt edges. 14s.

Chalmers.—The Origin of the Chinese; an Attempt to Trace the connection of the Chinese with Western Nations in their Religion, Superstitions, Arts, Language, and Traditions. By John Chalmers, A.M. Foolscap 8vo. cloth, pp. 78. 2s. 6d.

Chalmers.—The Speculations on Metaphysics, Polity, and Morality of "The Old Philosopher" Lau Tsze. Translated from the Chinese, with an Introduction by John Chalmers, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, xx. and 62. 4s. 6d.

Charnock.—Ludus Patronymicus; or, the Etymology of Curious Surnames. By Richard Stephen Charnock, Ph.D., F.S.A., F.R.G.S. Crown 8vo., pp. 182, cloth. 7s. 6d.

Charnock.—Verba Nominalia; or Words derived from Proper Names. By Richard Stephen Charnock, Ph. Dr. F.S.A., etc. 8vo. pp. 326, cloth. 14s.

Chaucer Society's Publications. First Series.

A Six-Text Print of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, in parallel columns, from the following MSS.:—1. The Ellesmere. 2. The Hengwrt, 154. 3. The Cambridge Univ. Libr. Gg. 4, 27. 4. The Corpus Christi College, Oxford. 5. The Petworth. 6. The Lansdowne, 851.—Part I. The Prologue and Knight's Tale. (Each of the above Texts are also published separately.)

Second Series.

1. On Early English Pronunciation, with especial reference to Shakespeare and Chaucer, containing an investigation of the Correspondence of Writing with Speech in England, from the Anglo-Saxon period to the present day, preceded by a systematic notation of all spoken sounds, by means of the ordinary printing types. Including a re-arrangement of Prof. F. J. Child's Memoirs on the Language of Chaucer and Gower, and Reprints of the Rare Tracts by Salesbury on English, 1547, and Welch, 1567, and by Barcley on French, 1521. By Alexander J. Ellis, F.R.S., etc., etc. Part I. On the Pronunciation of the xivth, xvith, xviith, and xviiith centuries. 10s.
2. Essays on Chaucer; His Words and Works. Part I. 1. Ebert's Review of Sandras's E'tude sur Chaucer, considére comme Imitateur des Trouvères, translated by J. W. Van Rees Hoets, M.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and revised by the Author.—II. A Thirteenth Century Latin Treatise on the Chilindre: "For by my chilindre it is prime of day" (Shipmannes Tale). Edited, with a Translation, by Mr. Edmund Brock, and illustrated by a Woodcut of the Instrument from the Ashmole MS., 1522.
3. A Temporary Preface to the Six-Text Edition of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. Part I. Attempting to show the true order of the Tales, and the Days and Stages of the Pilgrimage, etc., etc. By F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

Childers.—Khuddaka Patha. A Páli Text, with a Translation and Notes. By R. C. Childers, late of the Ceylon Civil Service. 8vo. pp. 32, stitched. 1s. 6d.

Childers.—A PÁLI-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, with Sanskrit Equivalents, and with numerous Quotations, Extracts, and References. Compiled by R. C. CHILDERS, late of the Ceylon Civil Service. [In preparation.

Chronique DE ABOU-DJAFAR-MOHAMMED-BEN-DJARIR-BEN-YEZID TABARI. Traduite par Monsieur HERMANN ZOTENBERG. Vol. I., 8vo. pp. 608, sewed. 7*s.* 6*d.* (To be completed in Four Volumes.)

Colenso.—FIRST STEPS IN ZULU-KAFIR: An Abridgement of the Elementary Grammar of the Zulu-Kafir Language. By the Right Rev. JOHN W. COLENSO, Bishop of Natal. 8vo. pp. 86, cloth. Ekukanyeni, 1859. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Colenso.—ZULU-ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By the Right Rev. JOHN W. COLENSO, Bishop of Natal. 8vo. pp. viii. and 552, sewed. Pietermaritzburg, 1861. 15*s.*

Colenso.—FIRST ZULU-KAFIR READING BOOK, two parts in one. By the Right Rev. JOHN W. COLENSO, Bishop of Natal. 16mo. pp. 44, sewed. Natal. 1*s.*

Colenso.—SECOND ZULU-KAFIR READING BOOK. By the same. 16mo. pp. 108, sewed. Natal. 3*s.*

Colenso.—FOURTH ZULU-KAFIR READING BOOK. By the same. 8vo. pp. 160, cloth. Natal, 1859. 7*s.*

Colenso.—Three Native Accounts of the Visits of the Bishop of Natal in September and October, 1859, to Upmande, King of the Zulus; with Explanatory Notes and a Literal Translation, and a Glossary of all the Zulu Words employed in the same: designed for the use of Students of the Zulu Language. By the Right Rev. JOHN W. COLENSO, Bishop of Natal. 16mo. pp. 160, stiff cover. Natal, Maritzburg, 1860. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Coleridge.—A GLOSSARIAL INDEX to the Printed English Literature of the Thirteenth Century. By HERBERT COLERIDGE, Esq. 8vo. pp. 104, cloth. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Colleccao de Vocabulos e Frases usados na Provincia de S. Pedro, do Rio Grande do Sul, no Brasil. 12mo. pp. 32, sewed. 1*s.*

Contopoulos.—A LEXICON OF MODERN GREEK-ENGLISH AND ENGLISH MODERN GREEK. By N. CONTOPOULOS.
Part I. Modern Greek-English. 8vo. cloth, pp. 460. 12*s.*
Part II. English-Modern Greek. 8vo. cloth, pp. 582. 15*s.*

Dennys.—CHINA AND JAPAN. A complete Guide to the Open Ports of those countries, together with Pekin, Yeddo, Hong Kong, and Macao; forming a Guide Book and Vade Mecum for Travellers, Merchants, and Residents in general; with 56 Maps and Plans. By WM. FREDERICK MAYERS, F.R.G.S. H.M.'s Consular Service; N. B. DENNYS, late H.M.'s Consular Service; and CHARLES KING, Lieut. Royal Marine Artillery. Edited by N. B. DENNYS. In one volume. 8vo. pp. 600, cloth. £2 2*s.*

Döhne.—A ZULU-KAFIR DICTIONARY, etymologically explained, with copious Illustrations and examples, preceded by an introduction on the Zulu-Kafir Language. By the Rev. J. L. DÖHNE. Royal 8vo. pp. xlii. and 418, sewed. Cape Town, 1857. 21*s.*

Döhne.—THE FOUR GOSPELS IN ZULU. By the Rev. J. L. DÖHNE, Missionary to the American Board, C.F.M. 8vo. pp. 208, cloth. Pietermaritzburg, 1866. 5*s.*

Early English Text Society's Publications.

1. EARLY ENGLISH ALLITERATIVE POEMS. In the West-Midland Dialect of the Fourteenth Century. Edited by R. MORRIS, Esq., from an unique Cottonian MS. 16*s.*
2. ARTHUR (about 1440 A.D.). Edited by F. J. FURNIVALL, Esq., from the Marquis of Bath's unique M.S. 4*s.*

Early English Text Society's Publications—continued.

3. Ane Compendious and Breue Tractate concernyng ye Office and Dewtie of Kyngis, etc. By William Lauder. (1556 A.D.) Edited by F. Hall, Esq., D.C.L. 4*s.*
4. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (about 1320-30 A.D.). Edited by R. Morris, Esq., from an unique Cottonian MS. 10*s.*
5. Of the Orthographie and Congruitie of the Britan Tongue; a treates, noe shorter than necessarie, for the Schooles, be Alexander Hume. Edited for the first time from the unique MS. in the British Museum (about 1617 A.D.), by Henry B. Wheatley, Esq. 4*s.*
6. Lancelot of the Laik. Edited from the unique MS. in the Cambridge University Library (ab. 1500), by the Rev. Walter W. Skeat, M.A. 8*s.*
7. The Story of Genesis and Exodus, an Early English Song, of about 1250 A.D. Edited for the first time from the unique MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, by R. Morris, Esq. 8*s.*
8. Morte Arthure; the Alliterative Version. Edited from Robert Thornton's unique MS. (about 1440 A.D.) at Lincoln, by the Rev. George Perry, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln. 7*s.*
9. Animadversions uppon the Annotacions and Corrections of some Imperfections of Impressiones of Chaucer's Workes, reprinted in 1598; by Francis Thynne. Edited from the unique MS. in the Bridgewater Library. By G. H. Kingsley, Esq., M.D. 4*s.*
10. Merlin, or the Early History of King Arthur. Edited for the first time from the unique MS. in the Cambridge University Library (about 1450 A.D.), by Henry B. Wheatley, Esq. Part I. 2*s.* 6*d.*
11. The Monarche, and other Poems of Sir David Lyndesay. Edited from the first edition by Johne Skott, in 1552, by Fitzedward Hall, Esq., D.C.L. Part I. 3*s.*
12. The Wright's Chaste Wife, a Merry Tale, by Adam of Cobsam (about 1462 A.D.), from the unique Lambeth MS. 306. Edited for the first time by F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A. 1*s.*
13. Seinte Marherete, þe Meiden ant Martyr. Three Texts of ab. 1200, 1310, 1330 A.D. First edited in 1862, by the Rev. Oswald Cockayne, M.A., and now re-issued. 2*s.*
14. Kyng Horn, with fragments of Floriz and Blanucheflur, and the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin. Edited from the MS. in the Library of the University of Cambridge and the British Museum, by the Rev. J. Rawson Lumby. 3*s.* 6*d.*
15. Political, Religious, and Love Poems, from the Lambeth MS., No. 306, and other sources. Edited by F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A. 7*s.* 6*d.*
16. A Tretice in English breuely drawe out of þ booke of Quintis essencijs in Latyn, þ Hermys þ prophete and king of Egipt after þ flood of Noe, fader of Philosophris, hadde by reuelacioun of an aungil of God to him sente. Edited from the Sloane MS. 73, by F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A. 1*s.*
17. Parallel Extracts from 29 Manuscripts of Piers Plowman, with Comments, and a Proposal for the Society's Three-text edition of this Poem. By the Rev. W. Skeat, M.A. 1*s.*
18. Hali Meidenhead, about 1200 A.D. Edited for the first time from the MS. (with a translation) by the Rev. Oswald Cockayne, M.A. 1*s.*
19. The Monarche, and other Poems of Sir David Lyndesay. Part II., the Complaynt of the King's Papingo, and other minor Poems. Edited from the First Edition by F. Hall, Esq., D.C.L. 3*s.* 6*d.*
20. Some Treatises by Richard Rolle de Hampole. Edited from Robert of Thornton's MS. ab. 1440 A.D., by Rev. George G. Perry, M.A. 1*s.*

Early English Text Society's Publications—continued.

21. MERLIN, OR THE EARLY HISTORY OF KING ARTHUR. Part II. Edited by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, Esq. 4*s.*
22. THE ROMANS OF PARTENAY, OR LUSIGNEN. Edited for the first time from the unique MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge, by the Rev. W. W. SKEAT. M.A. 6*s.*
23. DAN MICHEL'S AYENBITE OF INWYT, or Remorse of Conscience, in the Kentish dialect, 1340 A.D. Edited from the unique MS. in the British Museum, by RICHARD MORRIS, Esq. 10*s.* 6*d.*
24. HYMNS OF THE VIRGIN AND CHRIST; THE PARLIAMENT OF DEVILS, and Other Religious Poems. Edited from the Lambeth MS. 853, by F. J. FURNIVALL, M.A. 3*s.*
25. THE STACIONS OF ROME, and the Pilgrim's Sea-Voyage and Sea-Sickness, with Clene Maydenhod. Edited from the Vernon and Porkington MSS., etc., by F. J. FURNIVALL, Esq., M.A. 1*s.*
26. RELIGIOUS PIECES IN PROSE AND VERSE. Containing Dan Jon Gaytrigg's Sermon; The Abbaye of S. Spirit; Sayne Jon, and other pieces in the Northern Dialect. Edited from Robert of Thorntone's MS. (ab. 1460 A.D.) by the Rev. G. PERRY, M.A. 2*s.*
27. MANIPULUS VOCABULORUM: a Rhyming Dictionary of the English Language, by PETER LEVINS (1570). Edited, with an Alphabetical Index, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY. 12*s.*
28. THE VISION OF WILLIAM CONCERNING PIERS PLOWMAN, together with Vita de Dowel, Dobet et Dobest. 1362 A.D., by WILLIAM LANGLAND. The earliest or Vernon Text; Text A. Edited from the Vernon MS., with full Collations, by Rev. W. W. SKEAT, M.A. 7*s.*
29. OLD ENGLISH HOMILIES AND HOMILETIC TREATISES. (Sawles Warde, and the Wohunge of Ure Lauerd: Ureisuns of Ure Louerd and of Ure Lefdi, etc.) of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries. Edited from MSS. in the British Museum, Lambeth, and Bodleian Libraries; with Introduction, Translation, and Notes. By RICHARD MORRIS. First Series. Part I. 7*s.*
30. PIERS, THE PLOUGHMAN'S CREDE (about 1394). Edited from the MSS. by the Rev. W. W. SKEAT, M.A. 2*s.*
31. INSTRUCTIONS FOR PARISH PRIESTS. By JOHN MYRC. Edited from Cotton M.S. Claudius A. II., by EDWARD PEACOCK, Esq., F.S.A., etc., etc. 4*s.*
32. THE BABEES BOOK, Aristotle's A B C, Urbanitatis, Stans Puer ad Mensam, The Lytille Childrenes Lytil Boke. THE BOKES OF NURTURE of Hugh Rhodes and John Russell, Wynkyn de Worde's Boke of Kervynge, The Booke of Demeanor, The Boke of Curtasye, Seager's Schoole of Vertue, etc., etc. With some French and Latin Poems on like subjects, and some Forewords on Education in Early England. Edited by F. J. FURNIVALL, M.A., Trin. Hall, Cambridge. 15*s.*
33. THE BOOK OF THE KNIGHT DE LA TOUR LANDRY, 1372. A Father's Book for his Daughters, Edited from the Harleian MS. 1764, by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A., and Mr. WILLIAM ROSSITER. 8*s.*
34. OLD ENGLISH HOMILIES AND HOMILETIC TREATISES. (Sawles Warde, and the Wohunge of Ure Lauerd: Ureisuns of Ure Louerd and of Ure Lefdi, etc.) of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries. Edited from MSS. in the British Museum, Lambeth, and Bodleian Libraries; with Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by RICHARD MORRIS. First Series. Part 2. 8*s.*
35. SIR DAVID LYNDESAY'S WORKS. Part 3. The Historie of ane Nobil and Wailzeand Squyer, WILLIAM MELDRUM, umqvhyle Laird of Cleische and Bynnis, compylit be Sir DAVID LYNDESAY of the Mont alias Lyoun King of Armes. With the Testament of the said Williame Meldrum, Squyer, compylit alswa be Sir Dauid Lyndesay, etc. Edited by F. HALL, D.C.L. 2*s.*

Early English English Text Society's Publications—continued.

36. MERLIN, OR THE EARLY HISTORY OF KING ARTHUR. A Prose Romance (about 1450–1460 A.D.), edited from the unique MS. in the University Library, Cambridge, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY. With an Essay on Arthurian Localities, by J. S. STUART GLENNIE, Esq. Part III. 1869. 12*s*.

37. SIR DAVID LYNDESAY'S WORKS. Part IV. Ane Satyre of the thrie estaits, in commendation of vertew and vitvperation of vyce. Maid be Sir DAVID LINDESAY, of the Mont, alias Lyon King of Armes. At Edinbvrgh. Printed be Robert Charteris, 1602. Cvm privilegio regis. Edited by F. HALL, Esq., D.C.L. 4*s*.

38. THE VISION OF WILLIAM CONCERNING PIERS THE PLOWMAN, together with Vita de Dowel, Dobet, et Dobest, Secundum Wit et Resoun, by WILLIAM LANGLAND (1377 A.D.). The "Crowley" Text; or Text B. Edited from MS. Laud Misc. 581, collated with MS. Rawl. Poet. 38, MS. B. 15. 17. in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge, MS. Dd. 1. 17. in the Cambridge University Library, the MS. in Oriel College, Oxford, MS. Bodley 814, etc. By the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. 10*s*. 6*d*.

39. THE "GEST HYSTORIALE" OF THE DESTRUCTION OF TROY. An Alliterative Romance, translated from Guido De Colonna's "Hystoria Troiana." Now first edited from the unique MS. in the Hunterian Museum, University of Glasgow, by the Rev. GEO. A. PANTON and DAVID DONALDSON. Part I. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Extra Series.

1. THE ROMANCE OF WILLIAM OF PALERNE (otherwise known as the Romance of William and the Werwolf). Translated from the French at the command of Sir Humphrey de Bohun, about A.D. 1350, to which is added a fragment of the Alliterative Romance of Alisaunder, translated from the Latin by the same author, about A.D. 1340; the former re-edited from the unique MS. in the Library of King's College, Cambridge, the latter now first edited from the unique MS. in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. By the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, M.A. 8vo. sewed, pp. xliv. and 328. £1 6*s*.

2*a*. ON EARLY ENGLISH PRONUNCIATION, with especial reference to Shakespeare and Chaucer; containing an investigation of the Correspondence of Writing with Speech in England, from the Anglo-Saxon period to the present day, preceded by a systematic Notation of all Spoken Sounds by means of the ordinary Printing Types; including a re-arrangement of Prof. F. J. Child's Memoirs on the Language of Chaucer and Gower, and reprints of the rare Tracts by Salesbury on English, 1547, and Welch, 1567, and by Barcley on French, 1521. By ALEXANDER J. ELLIS, F.R.S. Part I. On the Pronunciation of the XIVth, XVIth, XVIIth, and XVIIIth centuries. 8vo. sewed, pp. viii. and 416. 10*s*.

3. CAXTON'S BOOK OF CURTESYE, printed at Westminster about 1477–8, A.D., and now reprinted, with two MS. copies of the same treatise, from the Oriel MS. 79, and the Balliol MS. 354. Edited by FREDERICK J. FURNIVALL, M.A. 8vo. sewed, pp. xii. and 58. 5*s*.

4. THE LAY OF HAVELOK THE DANE; composed in the reign of Edward I., about A.D. 1280. Formerly edited by Sir F. MADDEN for the Roxburghe Club, and now re-edited from the unique MS. Laud Misc. 108, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, by the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, M.A. 8vo. sewed, pp. lv. and 160. 10*s*.

5. CHAUCER'S TRANSLATION OF BOETHIUS'S "DE CONSOLATIONE PHILOSOPHIE." Edited from the additional MS. 10,340 in the British Museum. Collated with the Cambridge Univ. Libr. MS. Ii. 3. 21. By RICHARD MORRIS. 8vo. 12*s*.

6 THE ROMANCE OF THE CHEVELERE ASSIGNE. Re-edited from the unique manuscript in the British Museum, with a Preface, Notes, and Glossarial Index, by HENRY H. GIBBS, Esq., M.A. 8vo. sewed, pp. xviii. and 38. 3*s*.

Early English Text Society's Publications—continued.

7. On Early English Pronunciation, with especial reference to Shakspere and Chaucer; containing an investigation of the Correspondence of Writing with Speech in England, from the Anglo-Saxon period to the present day, preceded by a systematic Notation of all Spoken Sounds by means of the ordinary Printing Types; including a re-arrangement of Prof. F. J. Child's Memoirs on the Language of Chaucer and Gower, and Reprints of the rare Tracts by Salesbury on English, 1547, and Welsh, 1567, and by Barcley on French, 1521. By Alexander J. Ellis, F.R.S., etc., etc. Part II. On the Pronunciation of the xiiith and previous centuries, of Anglo-Saxon, Icelandic, Old Norse and Gothic, with Chronological Tables of the Value of Letters and Expression of Sounds in English Writing. 10*s.*

8. Queene Elizabethes Achademy, by Sir Humphrey Gilbert. A Booke of Precedence, The Ordering of a Funerall, etc. Varying Versions of the Good Wife, The Wise Man, etc. Maxims, Lydgate's Order of Fools, A Poem on Heraldry, Occleve on Lords' Men, etc., Edited by F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Trin. Hall., Camb. With Essays on Early Italian and German Books of Courtesy, by W. M. Rossetti, Esq., and E. Oswald, Esq. 8vo. 13*s.*

9. The Fraternitye of Vacabondes, by John Awdeley (licensed in 1560-1, imprinted then, and in 1565), from the edition of 1575 in the Bodleian Library. A Caueat or Warening for Commen Cursetors vulgarely called Vagabones, by Thomas Harman, Esquiere. From the 3rd edition of 1567, belonging to Henry Huth Esq., collated with the 2nd edition of 1567, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and with the reprint of the 4th edition of 1573. A Sermon in Praise of Thieves and Thievery, by Parson Haben or Hyberdyne, from the Lansdowne MS. 98, and Cotton Vesp. A. 25. Those parts of the Groundworke of Conny-catching (ed. 1592), that differ from Harman's Caueat. Edited by Edward Viles & F. J. Furnivall. 8vo. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Edda Saemundar Hinns Froda—The Edda of Saemund the Learned. From the Old Norse or Icelandic. Part I. with a Mythological Index. 12mo. pp. 152, cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.* Part II. with Index of Persons and Places. By Benjamin Thorpe. 12mo. pp. viii. and 172, cloth. 1866. 4*s.*; or in 1 Vol. complete, 7*s.* 6*d.*

Eger and Grime; an Early English Romance. Edited from Bishop Percy's Folio Manuscript, about 1650 A.D. By John W. Hales, M.A., Fellow and late Assistant Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge, and Frederick J. Furnivall, M.A., of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. 1 vol. 4to. (only 100 copies printed), bound in the Roxburgh style. pp. 64. Price 10*s.* 6*d.*

Eitel.—Handbook for the Student of Chinese Buddhism. By the Rev. E. J. Eitel, of the London Missionary Society. In 1 vol. 8vo. [In the press.

Elliot.—The History of India, as told by its own Historians. The Muhammadan Period. Edited from the Posthumous Papers of the late Sir H. M. Elliot, K.C.B., East India Company's Bengal Civil Service, by Prof. John Dowson, M.R.A.S., Staff College, Sandhurst. Vols. I. and II. With a Portrait of Sir H. M. Elliot. 8vo. pp xxxii. and 542, x. and 580, cloth. 18*s.* each.

Elliot.—Memoirs on the History, Folk-Lore, and Distribution of the Races of the North Western Provinces of India; being an amplified Edition of the original Supplementary Glossary of Indian Terms. By the late Sir Henry M. Elliot, K.C.B., of the Hon. East India Company's Bengal Civil Service. Edited, revised, and re-arranged, by John Beames, M.R.A.S., Bengal Civil Service; Member of the German Oriental Society, of the Asiatic Societies of Paris and Bengal, and of the Philological Society of London. In 2 vols. demy 8vo., pp. xx., 370, and 396, cloth. With two Lithographic Plates, one full-page coloured Map, and three large coloured folding Maps. 36*s.*

Ethnological Society of London (The Journal of the). Edited by Professor HUXLEY, F.R.S., President of the Society; GEORGE BUSK, Esq., F.R.S.; Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., F.R.S.; Colonel A. LANE FOX, Hon. Sec.; THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., Hon. Sec.; HYDE CLARKE, Esq.; Sub-Editor; and Assistant Secretary, J. H. LAMPREY, Esq. Published Quarterly.

No. I. April, 1869. 8vo. pp. 88, sewed. 3s.

CONTENTS OF THE APRIL NUMBER, 1869.—Flint Instruments from Oxfordshire and the Isle of Thanet. (Illustrated.) By Colonel A. Lane Fox.—The Westerly Drifting of Nomads. By H. Howorth.—On the Lion Shilling. By Hyde Clarke.—Letter on a Marble Armlet. By H. W. Edwards.—On a Bronze Spear from Lough Gur, Limerick. (Illustrated.) By Col. A. Lane Fox.—On Chinese Charms. By W. H. Black.—Proto-ethnic Condition of Asia Minor. By Hyde Clarke.—On Stone Implements from the Cape. (Illustrated.) By Sir J. Lubbock.—Cromlechs and Megalithic Structures. By H. M. Westropp.—Remarks on Mr. Westropp's Paper. By Colonel A. Lane Fox.—Stone Implements from San José. By A. Steffens.—On Child-bearing in Australia and New Zealand. By J. Hooker, M.D.—On a Pseudo-cromlech on Mount Alexander, Australia. By Acheson.—The Cave Cannibals of South Africa. By Layland.—Reviews: Wallace's Malay Archipelago (with illustrations); Fryer's Hill Tribes of India (with an illustration); Reliquiæ Aquitanicæ, etc.—Method of Photographic Measurement of the Human Frame (with an illustration). By J. H. Lamprey.—Notes and Queries.

No. II. July, 1869. 8vo. pp. 117, sewed. 3s.

CONTENTS OF THE JULY NUMBER.—Ordinary Meeting, March 9, 1869 (held at the Museum of Practical Geology), Professor Huxley, F.R.S., President, in the Chair. Opening Address of the President.—On the Characteristics of the population of Central and South India (Illustrated). By Sir Walter Elliot.—On the Races of India as traced in existing Tribes and Castes (With a Map). By G. Campbell, Esq.—Remarks by Mr. James Fergusson.—Remarks by Mr. Walter Dendy.—Ordinary Meeting, January 23rd, 1869. Professor Huxley, F.R.S., President, in the Chair. On the Lepchas. By Dr. A. Campbell, late Superintendent of Darjeeling.—On Prehistoric Archæology of India (Illustrated). By Colonel Meadows Taylor, C.S.I., M.R.A.S., M.R.I.A., etc.—Appendix I. Extract from description of the Pandoo Coolies in Malabar. By J. Babington, Esq. (Read before the Literary Society of Bombay, December 20th, 1820. Published in Volume III. of the Society's Transactions).—Appendix II. Extract from a letter from Captain, now Colonel, A. Doria, dated Camp Katangrich, April 12th, 1852.—On some of the Mountain Tribes of the North Western frontier of India. By Major Fosbery, V.C.—On Permanence of type in the Human Race. By Sir William Denison.—Notes and Reviews.—Ethnological Notes and Queries.—Notices of Ethnology.

No. III. October, 1869. pp. 137, sewed. 3s.

CONTENTS OF THE OCTOBER NUMBER.—On the Excavation of a large raised Stone Circle or Barrow, near the Village of Wurreegaon, one mile from the military station of Kamptee, Central Provinces of India (Illustrated). By Major George Godfrey Pearse, Royal Artillery.—Remarks by Dr. Hooker on Dr. Campbell's paper.—North-American Ethnology: Address of the President.—On the Native Races of New Mexico (Illustrated). By Dr. A. W. Bell.—On the Arapahoes, Kiowas, and Comanches. By Morton C. Fisher.—The North-American Indians: a Sketch of some of the hostile Tribes; together with a brief account of General Sheridan's Campaign of 1868 against the Sioux, Cheyenne, Arapahoe, Kiowa, and Comanche Indians. By William Blackmore.—Notes and Reviews: The Ethnological Essays of William Ewart Gladstone. Inventus Mundi, the Gods and Men of the Homeric Age. By the Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone. (The Review by Hyde Clarke, Esq.)—Notes and Queries.—Classification Committee.

No. IV. January, 1870. pp. 98. 3s.

CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY (1870) NUMBER.—On New Zealand and Polynesian Ethnology: On the Social Life of the ancient Inhabitants of New Zealand, and on the national character it was likely to form. By Sir George Grey, K.C.B.—Notes on the Maories of New Zealand and some Melanesians of the south-west Pacific. By the Bishop of Wellington.—Observations on the Inhabitants and Antiquities of Easter Island. Ky J. L. Palmer.—On the westerly drifting of Nomades from the fifth to the nineteenth century. Part II. The Seljuks, Ghazdevides, etc. By H. H. Howorth, Esq.—Settle Cave Exploration.—Index.—Contents.—Report of the Council. List of Fellows.

Facsimiles of Two Papyri found in a Tomb at Thebes. With a a Translation by SAMUEL BIRCH, LL.D., F.S.A., Corresponding Member of the Institute of France, Academies of Berlin, Herculaneum, etc., and an Account of their Discovery. By A. HENRY RHIND, Esq., F.S.A., etc. In large folio, pp. 30 of text, and 16 plates coloured, bound in cloth. 21s.

Furnivall.—EDUCATION IN EARLY ENGLAND. Some Notes used as Forewords to a Collection of Treatises on "Manners and Meals in the Olden Time," for the Early English Text Society. By FREDERICK J. FURNIVALL, M.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge, Member of Council of the Philological and Early English Text Societies. 8vo, sewed, pp. 74. 1s.

Gesenius' Hebrew Grammar. Translated from the 17th Edition. By Dr. T. J. CONANT. With grammatical Exercises and a Chrestomathy by the Translator. 8vo. pp. xvi. and 364, cloth. 10s. 6d.

Gesenius' Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, including the Biblical Chaldee, from the Latin. By EDWARD ROBINSON. Fifth Edition. 8vo. pp. xii. and 1160, cloth. 1l. 5s.

Goldstücker.—A DICTIONARY, SANSKRIT AND ENGLISH, extended and improved from the Second Edition of the Dictionary of Professor H. H. WILSON, with his sanction and concurrence. Together with a Supplement, Grammatical Appendices, and an Index, serving as a Sanskrit-English Vocabulary. By THEODOR GOLDSTÜCKER. Parts I. to VI. 4to. pp. 400. 1856-1863. 6s. each.

Goldstücker.—A COMPENDIOUS SANSKRIT-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, for the Use of those who intend to read the easier Works of Classical Sanskrit Literature. By THEODOR GOLDSTÜCKER. Small 4to. pp. 900, cloth. [In preparation.

Goldstücker.—PANINI: His Place in Sanskrit Literature. An Investigation of some Literary and Chronological Questions which may be settled by a study of his Work. A separate impression of the Preface to the Facsimile of MS. No. 17 in the Library of Her Majesty's Home Government for India, which contains a portion of the MANAVA-KALPA-SUTRA, with the Commentary of KUMARILA-SWAMIN. By THEODOR GOLDSTÜCKER. Imperial 8vo. pp. 268, cloth. 12s.

Grammatography.—A MANUAL OF REFERENCE to the Alphabets of Ancient and Modern Languages. Based on the German Compilation of F. BALLHORN. Royal 8vo. pp. 80, cloth. 7s. 6d.

The "Grammatography" is offered to the public as a compendious introduction to the reading of the most important ancient and modern languages. Simple in its design, it will be consulted with advantage by the philological student, the amateur linguist, the bookseller, the corrector of the press, and the diligent compositor.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Afghan (or Pushto).	Czechian (or Bohemian).	Hebrew (current hand).	Polish.
Amharic.	Danish.	Heŭ2w (Judæo-Ger- [man).	Pushto (or Afghan).
Anglo-Saxon.	Demotic.	Hungarian.	Romaic (Modern Greek)
Arabic.	Estrangelo.	Illyrian.	Russian.
Arabic Ligatures.	Ethiopic.	Irish.	Runes.
Aramaic.	Etruscan.	Italian (Old).	Samaritan.
Archaic Characters.	Georgian.	Japanese.	Sanscrit.
Armenian.	German.	Javanese.	Servian.
Assyrian Cuneiform.	Glagolitic.	Lettish.	Slavonic (Old).
Bengali.	Gothic.	Mantshu.	Sorbian (or Wendish).
Bohemian (Czechian).	Greek.	Median Cuneiform.	Swedish.
Búgis.	Greek Ligatures.	Modern Greek (Romaic)	Syriac.
Burmese.	Greek (Archaic).	Mongolian.	Tamil.
Canarese (or Carnâtaca).	Gujerati (or Guzzeratte).	Numidian.	Telugu.
Chinese.	Hieratic.	Old Slavonic (or Cyrillic).	Tibetan.
Coptic.	Hieroglyphics.	Palmyrenian.	Turkish.
Croato-Glagolitic.	Hebrew.	Persian.	Wallachian.
Cufic.	Hebrew (Archaic).	Persian Cuneiform.	Wendish (or Sorbian).
Cyrillic (or Old Slavonic).	Hebrew (Rabbinical).	Phœnician.	Zend.

Grey.—HANDBOOK OF AFRICAN, AUSTRALIAN, AND POLYNESIAN PHILOLOGY, as represented in the Library of His Excellency Sir George Grey, K.C.B., Her Majesty's High Commissioner of the Cape Colony. Classed, Annotated, and Edited by Sir GEORGE GREY and Dr. H. I. BLEEK.

Vol. I. Part 1.—South Africa. 8vo. pp. 186. 7s. 6d.
Vol. I. Part 2.—Africa (North of the Tropic of Capricorn). 8vo. pp. 70. 2s.
Vol. I. Part 3.—Madagascar. 8vo. pp. 24. 1s.
Vol. II. Part 1.—Australia. 8vo. pp. iv. and 44. 1s. 6d.
Vol. II. Part 2.—Papuan Languages of the Loyalty Islands and New Hebrides, comprising those of the Islands of Nengone, Lifu, Aneitum, Tana, and others. 8vo. p. 12. 6d.
Vol. II. Part 3.—Fiji Islands and Rotuma (with Supplement to Part II., Papuan Languages, and Part I., Australia). 8vo. pp. 34. 1s.
Vol. II. Part 4.—New Zealand, the Chatham Islands, and Auckland Islands. 8vo. pp. 76. 3s. 6d.
Vol. II. Part 4 (continuation).—Polynesia and Borneo. 8vo. pp. 77-154. 3s. 6d.
Vol. III. Part 1.—Manuscripts and Incunables. 8vo. pp. viii. and 24. 2s.
Vol. IV. Part 1.—Early Printed Books. England. 8vo. pp. vi. and 266.

Grey.—MAORI MEMENTOS: being a Series of Addresses presented by the Native People to His Excellency Sir George Grey, K.C.B., F.R.S. With Introductory Remarks and Explanatory Notes; to which is added a small Collection of Laments, etc. By CH. OLIVER B. DAVIS. 8vo. pp. iv. and 228, cloth. 12s.

Griffith.—SCENES FROM THE RAMAYANA, MEGHADUTA, ETC. Translated by RALPH T. H. GRIFFITH, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, pp. 200. 5s.

CONTENTS.—Preface—Ayodhya—Ravan Doomed—The Birth of Rama—The Heir apparent—Manthara's Guile—Dasaratha's Oath—The Step-mother—Mother and Son—The Triumph of Love—Farewell!—The Hermit's Son—The Trial of Truth—The Forest—The Rape of Sita—Rama's Despair—The Messenger Cloud—Khumbakarna—The Suppliant Dove—True Glory—Feed the Poor—The Wise Scholar.

Grout.—The Isizulu: a Grammar of the Zulu Language; accompanied with an Historical Introduction, also with an Appendix. By Rev. Lewis Grout. 8vo. pp. lii. and 432, cloth. 21*s.*

Haug.—Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsees. By Martin Haug, Dr. Phil. Superintendent of Sanskrit Studies in the Poona College. 8vo. pp. 278, cloth. [Out of print.

Haug.—A Lecture on an Original Speech of Zoroaster (Yasna 45), with remarks on his age. By Martin Haug, Ph.D. 8vo. pp. 28, sewed. Bombay, 1865. 2*s.*

Haug.—Outline of a Grammar of the Zend Language. By Martin Haug, Dr. Phil. 8vo. pp. 82, sewed. 14*s.*

Haug.—The Aitareya Brahmanam of the Rig Veda: containing the Earliest Speculations of the Brahmans on the meaning of the Sacrificial Prayers, and on the Origin, Performance, and Sense of the Rites of the Vedic Religion. Edited, Translated, and Explained by Martin Haug, Ph.D., Superintendent of Sanskrit Studies in the Poona College. etc., etc. In 2 Vols. Crown 8vo. Vol. I. Contents, Sanskrit Text, with Preface, Introductory Essay, and a Map of the Sacrificial Compound at the Soma Sacrifice, pp. 312. Vol. II. Translation with Notes, pp. 544. £3 3*s.*

Haug.—An Old Zand-Pahlavi Glossary. Edited in the Original Characters, with a Transliteration in Roman Letters, an English Translation, and an Alphabetical Index. By Destur Hoshengji Jamaspji, High-priest of the Parsis in Malwa, India. Revised with Notes and Introduction by Martin Haug, Ph.D., late Superintendent of Sanscrit Studies in the Poona College, Foreign Member of the Royal Bavarian Academy. Published by order of the Government of Bombay. 8vo. sewed, pp. vi. and 132. 15*s.*

Haug.—The Religion of the Zoroastrians, as contained in their Sacred Writings. With a History of the Zend and Pehlevi Literature, and a Grammar of the Zend and Pehlevi Languages. By Martin Haug, Ph.D., late Superintendent of Sanscrit Studies in the Poona College. 2 vols. 8vo. [In preparation.

Heaviside.—American Antiquities; or, the New World the Old, and the Old World the New. By John T. C. Heaviside. 8vo. pp. 46, sewed. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Hepburn.—A Japanese and English Dictionary. With an English and Japanese Index. By J. C. Hepburn, A.M., M.D. Imperial 8vo. cloth, pp. xii., 560 and 132. 5*l.* 5*s.*

Hernisz.—A Guide to Conversation in the English and Chinese Languages, for the use of Americans and Chinese in California and elsewhere. By Stanislas Hernisz. Square 8vo. pp. 274, sewed. 10*s.* 6*d.*

The Chinese characters contained in this work are from the collections of Chinese groups, engraved on steel, and cast into moveable types, by Mr. Marcellin Legrand, engraver of the Imperial Printing Office at Paris. They are used by most of the missions to China.

Hincks.—Specimen Chapters of an Assyrian Grammar. By the late Rev. E. Hincks, D.D., Hon. M. R. A. S. 8vo., pp. 44, sewed. 1*s.*

History of the Sect of Maharajahs; or, Vallabhacharyas in Western India. With a Steel Plate. 8vo. pp. 384, cloth. 12*s.*

Hoffmann.—Shopping Dialogues, in Japanese, Dutch, and English. By Professor J. Hoffmann. Oblong 8vo. pp. xiii. and 47, sewed. 3*s.*

Howse.—A Grammar of the Cree Language. With which is combined an analysis of the Chippeway Dialect. By Joseph Howse, Esq., F.R.G.S. 8vo. pp. xx. and 324, cloth. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Hunter.—A Comparative Dictionary of the Languages of India and High Asia, with a Dissertation, based on The Hodgson Lists, Official Records, and Manuscripts. By W. W. Hunter, B.A., M.R.A.S., Honorary Fellow Ethnological Society, of Her Majesty's Bengal Civil Service. Folio, pp. vi. and 224, cloth. £2 2*s.*

Ikhwánu-s Safá.—Ikhwánu-s Safá; or, Brothers of Purity. Describing the Contention between Men and Beasts as to the Superiority of the Human Race. Translated from the Hindustání by Professor J. Dowson, Staff College, Sandhurst. Crown 8vo. pp. viii. and 156, cloth. 7*s.*

Inman.—Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Times; or, an attempt to trace the Religious Belief, Sacred Rites, and Holy Emblems of certain Nations, by an interpretation of the names given to children by Priestly authority, or assumed by prophets, kings and hierarchs, By Thomas Inman, M.D., Liverpool. 2 vols. 8vo. pp. l. and 1028, cloth, illustrated with numerous plates and woodcuts. £3.

Jaeschke.—A Short Practical Grammar of the Tibetan Language, with special Reference to the Spoken Dialects. By H. A. Jaeschke, Moravian Missionary. 8vo. sewed, pp. ii. and 56. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Jaeschke.—Romanized Tibetan and English Dictionary, each word being re-produced in the Tibetan as well as in the Roman character. By H. A. Jaeschke, Moravian Missionary. 8vo. pp. ii. and 158, sewed. 5*s.*

Justi.—Handbuch der Zendsprache, von Ferdinand Justi. Altbactrisches Woerterbuch. Grammatik Chrestomathie. Four parts, 4to. sewed, pp. xxii. and 424. Leipzig, 1864. 24*s.*

Kafir Essays, and other Pieces; with an English Translation. Edited by the Right Rev. the Bishop of Grahamstown. 32mo. pp. 84, sewed. 2*s* 6*d.*

Kalidasa.—Raghuvansa. By Kalidasa. No. 1. (Cantos 1-3.) With Notes and Grammatical Explanations, by Rev. K. M. Banerjea, Second Professor of Bishop's College, Calcutta; Member of the Board of Examiners, Fort-William; Honorary Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, London. 8vo. sewed, pp. 70. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Kern.—The Brhat-Sanhitá; or, Complete System of Natural Astrology of Varâha-Mihira. Translated from Sanskrit into English by Dr. H. Kern, Professor of Sanskrit at the University of Leyden. 8vo. pp. 50, stitched, Part I. 2*s.* [Will be completed in Nine Parts.

Khirad-Afroz (The Illuminator of the Understanding). By Maulaví Hafízu'd-dín. A new edition of the Hindústání Text, carefully revised, with Notes, Critical and Explanatory. By Edward B. Eastwick, F.R.S., F.S.A., M.R.A.S., Professor of Hindústání at the late East India Company's College at Haileybury. 8vo. cloth, pp. xiv. and 321. 18*s.*

Kidd.—Catalogue of the Chinese Library of the Royal Asiatic Society. By the Rev. S. Kidd. 8vo. pp. 58, sewed. 1*s.*

Kistner.—Buddha and his Doctrines. A Biographical Essay. By Otto Kistner. Imperial 8vo., pp. iv. and 32, sewed. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Koran (The). Arabic text, lithographed in Oudh, A.H. 1284 (1867). 16mo. pp. 942, bound in red goatskin, Oriental style, silver tooling. Price 7*s.* 6*d.*

The printing, as well as the outer appearance of the book, is extremely tasteful, and the characters, although small, read very easily. As a cheap edition for reference this is preferable to any other, and its price puts it within the reach of every Oriental scholar. It is now first imported from India.

Laghu Kaumudí. A Sanskrit Grammar. By Varadarája. With an English Version, Commentary, and References. By James R. Ballantyne, LL.D., Principal of the Snskrit College, Benares. 8vo. pp. xxxvi. and 424, cloth. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

Legge.—The Chinese Classics. With a Translation, Critical and Exegetical, Notes, Prolegomena, and Copious Indexes. By James Legge, D.D., of the London Missionary Society. In seven vols. Vol. I. containing Confucian Analects, the Great Learning and the Doctrine of the Mean. 8vo. pp. 526, cloth. £2 2*s.*—Vol. II., containing the Works of Mencius. 8vo. pp. 634, cloth. £2 2*s.*—Vol. III. Part I. containing the First Part of the Shoo-King, or the Books of T. Aug, the Books of Yu, the Books of Hea, the Books of Shang, and the Prolegomena. Royal 8vo. pp. viii. and 280, cloth. £2 2*s.*—Vol. III. Part II. containing the Fifth Part of the Shoo-King, or the Books of Chow, and the Indexes. Royal 8vo. pp. 281—736, cloth. £2 2*s.*

Legge.—The Life and Teachings of Confucius, with Explanatory Notes. By James Legge, D.D. Reproduced for General Readers from the Author's work, "The Chinese Classics," with the original Text. Second edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 338. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Leitner.—The Races and Languages of Dardistan. By G. W. Leitner, M.A., Ph.D., Honorary Fellow of King's College London, etc.; late on Special Duty in Kashmir. 4 vols. 4to. [In the press.

Leland.—Hans Breitmann's Party. With other Ballads. By Charles G. Leland. Eighth Edition. Square, pp. xvi. and 74, sewed. 1*s.*

Leland.—Hans Breitmann's Christmas. With other Ballads. By Charles G. Leland. Second edition. Square, pp. 80, sewed. 1*s.*

Leland.—Hans Breitmann as a Politician. By Charles G. Leland. Second edition. Square, pp. 72, sewed. 1*s.*

Lesley.—Man's Origin and Destiny, Sketched from the Platform of the Sciences, in a Course of Lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute, in Boston, in the Winter of 1865-6. By J. P. Lesley, Member of the National Academy of the United States, Secretary of the American Philosophical Society. Numerous Woodcuts. Crown 8vo. pp. 392, cloth. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Lobscheid.—English and Chinese Dictionary, with the Punti and Mandarin Pronunciation. By the Rev. W. Lobscheid, Knight of Francis Joseph, C.M.I.R.G.S.A., N.Z.B.S.V., etc. Folio, pp. viii. and 2016. In Four Parts. £8 8*s.*

Lobscheid.—Chinese and English Dictionary, Arranged according to the Radicals. By the Rev. W. Lobscheid, Knight of Francis Joseph, C.M.I.R.G.S.A., N.Z.B.S.V., &c. 1 vol. imp. 8vo. double columns, pp. 800. [In the press.

Ludewig (Hermann E.)—The Literature of American Aboriginal Languages. With Additions and Corrections by Professor Wm. W. Turner. Edited by Nicolas Trübner. 8vo. fly and general Title, 2 leaves; Dr. Ludewig's Preface, pp. v.—viii.; Editor's Preface, pp. iv.—xii.; Biographical Memoir of Dr. Ludewig, pp. xiii.—xiv.; and Introductory Biographical Notices, pp. xiv.—xxiv., followed by List of Contents. Then follow Dr. Ludewig's Bibliotheca Glottica, alphabetically arranged, with Additions by the Editor, pp. 1—209; Professor Turner's Additions, with those of the Editor to the same, also alphabetically arranged, pp. 210—246; Index, pp. 247—256; and List of Errata, pp. 257, 258. Handsomely bound in cloth. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Manava-Kalpa-Sutra; being a portion of this ancient Work on Vaidik Rites, together with the Commentary of Kumarila-Swamin. A Facsimile of the MS. No. 17, in the Library of Her Majesty's Home Government for India. With a Preface by Theodor Goldstücker. Oblong folio, pp. 268 of letter-press and 121 leaves of facsimiles. Cloth. £4 4*s.*

Manipulus Vocabulorum; A Rhyming Dictionary of the English Language. By Peter Levins (1570) Edited, with an Alphabetical Index by Henry B. Wheatley. 8vo. pp. xvi. and 370, cloth. 14*s.*

Manning.—An Inquiry into the Character and Origin of the Possessive Augment in English and in Cognate Dialects. By James Manning, Q.A.S., Recorder of Oxford. 8vo. pp. iv. and 90. 2*s.*

Markham.—Quichua Grammar and Dictionary. Contributions towards a Grammar and Dictionary of Quichua, the Language of the Yncas of Peru; collected by Clements R. Markham, F.S.A., Corr. Mem. of the University of Chile. Author of "Cuzco and Lima," and "Travels in Peru and India." In one vol. crown 8vo., pp. 223, cloth. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Marsden.—NUMISMATA ORIENTALIA ILLUSTRATA. The Plates of the Oriental Coins, Ancient and Modern, of the Collection of the late William Marsden, F.R.S., etc., etc., engraved from drawings made under his direction. 4to. pp. iv. (explanatory advertisement). cloth, gilt top. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

Mason.—BURMAH: its People and Natural Productions; or Notes on the Nations, Fauna, Flora, and Minerals of Tenasserim, Pegu, and Burmah; with Systematic Catalogues of the known Mammals, Birds, Fish, Reptiles, Mollusks, Crustaceans, Annalids, Radiates, Plants, and Minerals, with Vernacular names. By Rev. F. MASON, D.D., M.R.A.S., Corresponding Member of the American Oriental Society, of the Boston Society of Natural History, and of the Lyceum of Natural History, New York. 8vo. pp. xviii. and 914, cloth. Rangoon, 1860. 30*s.*

Mason.—A PALI GRAMMAR, on the Basis of Kachchayano. With Chrestomathy and Vocabulary. By FRANCIS MASON, D.D., M.R.A.S. and American Oriental Society. 8vo. sewed, pp. iv., viii., and 214, 31*s.* 6*d.*

Mathuráprasáda Misra.—A TRILINGUAL DICTIONARY, being a comprehensive Lexicon in English, Urdú, and Hindí, exhibiting the Syllabication, Pronunciation, and Etymology of English Words, with their Explanation in English, and in Urdú and Hindí in the Roman Character. By MATHURÁPRASÁDA MISRA, Second Master, Queen's College, Benares. 8vo. pp. xiv. and 1330, cloth. Benares, 1865. £2 2*s.*

Medhurst.—CHINESE DIALOGUES, QUESTIONS, and FAMILIAR SENTENCES, literally translated into English, with a view to promote commercial intercourse and assist beginners in the Language. By the late W. H. MEDHURST, D.D. A new and enlarged Edition. 8vo. pp. 226. 18*s.*

Megha-Duta (The). (Cloud-Messenger.) By Kálidása. Translated from the Sanskrit into English verse, with Notes and Illustrations. By the late H. H. WILSON, M.A., F.R.S., Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford, etc., etc. The Vocabulary by FRANCIS JOHNSON, sometime Professor of Oriental Languages at the College of the Honourable the East India Company, Haileybury. New Edition. 4to. cloth, pp. xi. and 180. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Memoirs read before the ANTHROPOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON, 1863-1864. 8vo., pp. 542, cloth. 21*s.*

Memoirs read before the ANTHROPOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON, 1865-6. Vol. II. 8vo., pp. x. 464, cloth. 21*s.*

Merx.—GRAMMATICA SYRIACA, quam post opus Hoffmanni refecit ADALBERTUS MERX, Phil. Dr. Theol. Lic. in Univ. Litt. Jenensi Priv. Docens. Particula I. Royal 8vo. sewed, pp. 136. 7*s.*

Moffat.—THE STANDARD ALPHABET PROBLEM; or the Preliminary Subject of a General Phonic System, considered on the basis of some important facts in the Sechwana Language of South Africa, and in reference to the views of Professors Lepsius, Max Müller, and others. A contribution to Phonetic Philology. By ROBERT MOFFAT, junr., Surveyor, Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. 8vo. pp. xxviii. and 174, cloth. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Molesworth.—A DICTIONARY, MÁRATHI and ENGLISH. Compiled by J. T. MOLESWORTH, assisted by GEORGE and THOMAS CANDY. Second Edition, revised and enlarged. By J. T. MOLESWORTH. Royal 4to. pp. xxx. and 922, boards. Bombay, 1857. £3 3*s.*

Morley.—A DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE of the HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS in the ARABIC and PERSIAN LANGUAGES preserved in the Library of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland. By WILLIAM H. MORLEY, M.R.A.S. 8vo. pp. viii. and 160, sewed. London, 1854. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Morrison.—A Dictionary of the Chinese Language. By the Rev. R. Morrison, D.D. Two vols. Vol. I. pp. x. and 762; Vol. II. pp. 828, cloth. Shanghae, 1865. £6 6*s.*

Muhammed.—The Life of Muhammed. Based on Muhammed Ibn Ishak By Abd El Malik Ibn Hisham. Edited by Dr. Ferdinand Wüstenfield. One volume containing the Arabic Text. 8vo. pp. 1026, sewed. Price 21*s.* Another volume, containing Introduction, Notes, and Index in German. 8vo. pp. lxxii. and 266, sewed. 7*s.* 6*d.* Each part sold separately.

The text based on the Manuscripts of the Berlin, Leipsic, Gotha and Leyden Libraries, has been carefully revised by the learned editor, and printed with the utmost exactness.

Muir.—Original Sanskrit Texts, on the Origin and History of the People of India, their Religion and Institutions. Collected, Translated and Illustrated by John Muir, Esq., LL.D., Ph.D. Vol. I.: Mythical and Legendary Accounts of the Origin of Caste, with an Enquiry into its existence in the Vedic Age. Second edition, re-written and greatly enlarged. 8vo., pp. xx. and 532, cloth. 21*s.*

Muir.—Original Sanskrit Texts, on the Origin and History of the People of India, their Religion and Institutions. Collected, Translated, and Illustrated, by John Muir, Esq., LL.D., Ph.D., Bonn. Volume III., The Vedas: Opinions of their Authors, and of later Indian Writers, on their Origin, Inspiration, and Authority. Second edition, enlarged. 8vo. pp. xxxii. and 312, cloth. 16*s.*

Muir.—Original Sanskrit Texts on the Origin and History of the People of India, their Religion and Institutions. Collected, Translated into English, and Illustrated by Remarks. By John Muir, Esq., LL.D., Ph.D., Bonn. Vol. IV. Comparison of the Vedic with the later representation of the principal Indian Deities. 8vo. pp. xii. and 440, cloth. 15*s.* [A New Edition of Vol. II. is in preparation.

Muir.—Original Sanskrit Texts, on the Origin and History of the People of India, their Religions and Institutions. Collected, Translated into English, and Illustrated by Remarks. By John Muir, Esq., LL.D., Ph.D., Bonn. Vol. V.: Contributions to a Knowledge of Vedic Mythology. [In the press.

Müller.—The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmins, as preserved to us in the oldest collection of religious poetry, the Rig-Veda-Sanhita, translated and explained. By F. Max Müller, M.A., Fellow of All Souls' College; Professor of Comparative Philology at Oxford; Foreign Member of the Institute of France, etc., etc. In 8 vols. Volume I. 8vo. pp. clii. and 264. 12*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—A Handbook of Modern Arabic, consisting of a Practical Grammar, with numerous Examples, Dialogues, and Newspaper Extracts, in a European Type. By F. W. Newman, Emeritus Professor of University College, London; formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. Post 8vo. pp. xx. and 192, cloth. London, 1866. 6*s.*

Newman.—The Text of the Iguvine Inscriptions, with interlinear Latin Translation and Notes. By Francis W. Newman, late Professor of Latin at University College, London. 8vo. pp. xvi. and 54, sewed. 2*s.*

Notley.—A Comparative Grammar of the French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese Languages. By Edwin A. Notley. Crown oblong 8vo. cloth, pp. xv. and 396. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Oriental Text Society.—(The Publications of the Oriental Text Society.)

1. Theophania; or, Divine Manifestations of our Lord and Saviour. By Eusebius, Bishop of Cæsarea. Syriac. Edited by Prof. S. Lee. 8vo. 1842. 15*s.*
2. Athanasius's Festal Letters, discovered in an ancient Syriac Version. Edited by the Rev. W. Cureton. 8vo. 1848. 15*s.*

Rig-Veda Sanhita.—A Collection of Ancient Hindu Hymns. Constituting the First Ashtaka, or Book of the Rig-veda; the oldest authority for the religious and social institutions of the Hindus. Translated from the Original Sanskrit. By the late H. H. Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., etc. etc. etc. Second Edition, with a Postscript by Dr. Fitzedward Hall. Vol. I. 8vo. cloth, pp. lii. and 348, price 21*s.*

Rig-veda Sanhita.—A Collection of Ancient Hindu Hymns, constituting the Fifth to Eighth Ashtakas, or books of the Rig-Veda, the oldest Authority for the Religious and Social Institutions of the Hindus. Translated from the Original Sanskrit by the late Horace Hayman Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., etc. Edited by E. B. Cowell, M.A., Principal of the Calcutta Sanskrit College. Vol. IV., 8vo., pp. 214, cloth. 14*s.*
A few copies of Vols. II. and III. still left. [V. and VI. in the press.

Sâma-Vidhâna-Brâhmana (The). With the Commentary of Sâyana. Edited, with Notes, Translation, and Index, by A. C. Burnell, M.R.A.S., Madras Civil Service. In 1 vol. 4to. [In preparation.

Schele de Vere.—Studies in English; or, Glimpses of the Inner Life of our Language. By M. Schele de Vere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Virginia. 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 365. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Schlagintweit.—Buddhism in Tibet. Illustrated by Literary Documents and Objects of Religious Worship. With an Account of the Buddhist Systems preceding it in India. By Emil Schlagintweit, LL.D. With a Folio Atlas of 20 Plates, and 20 Tables of Native Prints in the Text. Royal 8vo., pp. xxiv. and 404. £2 2*s.*

Schlagintweit.—Glossary of Geographical Terms from India and Tibet, with Native Transcription and Transliteration. By Hermann de Schlagintweit. Forming, with a "Route Book of the Western Himalaya, Tibet, and Turkistan," the Third Volume of H., A., and R. de Schlagintweit's "Results of a Scientific Mission to India and High Asia." With an Atlas in imperial folio, of Maps, Panoramas, and Views. Royal 4to., pp. xxiv. and 293. £4.

Shápurjí Edaljí.—A Grammar of the Gujarátí Language. By Shápurjí Edaljí. Cloth, pp. 127. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Shápurjí Edaljí.—A Dictionary, Gujarati and English. By Shápurjí Edaljí. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xxiv. and 874. 21*s.*

Sherring.—The Sacred City of the Hindus. An Account of Benares in Ancient and Modern Times. By the Rev. M. A. Sherring, M.A., LL.D.; and Prefaced with an Introduction by Fitzedward Hall, Esq., D.C.L. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxxvi. and 388, with numerous full-page illustrations. 21*s.*

Sophocles.—A Glossary of Later and Byzantine Greek. By E. A. Sophocles. 4to., pp. iv. and 624, cloth. £2 2*s.*

Sophocles.—Romaic or Modern Greek Grammar. By E. A. Sophocles. 8vo. pp. xxviii. and 196. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Stratmann.—A Dictionary of the English Language. Compiled from the writings of the xiiith, xivth, and xvth centuries. By Francis Henry Stratmann. Second Edition. 8vo. cloth, pp. x. and 694.
[In preparation.

Stratmann.—An Old English Poem of the Owl and the Nightingale. Edited by Francis Henry Stratmann. 8vo. cloth, pp. 60. 3*s.*

The Boke of Nurture. By John Russell, about 1460–1470 Anno Domini. The Boke of Kernynge. By Wynkyn de Worde, Anno Domini 1513. The Boke of Nurture. By Hugh Rhodes, Anno Domini 1577. Edited from the Originals in the British Museum Library, by Frederick J. Furnivall, M.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge, Member of Council of the Philological and Early English Text Societies. 4to. half-morocco, gilt top, pp. xix. and 146, 28, xxviii. and 56. 1867. 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*

The Vision of William concerning Piers Plowman, together with Vita de Dowel, Dobet et Dobest, secundum wit et resoun. By WILLIAM LANGLAND (about 1362-1380 anno domini). Edited from numerous Manuscripts, with Prefaces, Notes, and a Glossary. By the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, M.A. pp. xliv. and 158, cloth, 1867. Vernon Text; Text A. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Thomas.—EARLY SASSANIAN INSCRIPTIONS, SEALS AND COINS, illustrating the Early History of the Sassanian Dynasty, containing Proclamations of Ardeshir Babek, Sapor I., and his Successors. With a Critical Examination and Explanation of the Celebrated Inscription in the Hájiábad Cave, demonstrating that Sapor, the Conqueror of Valerian, was a Professing Christian. By EDWARD THOMAS, Esq. 8vo. cloth, pp. 148, Illustrated. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Thomas.—A NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION OF THE COINS OF THE PATHÁN SULTÁNS OF DEHLI, A.D. 1193—1554. Chiefly re-written, amplified, and enriched with new Specimens from the collections of Mr. E. C. Bayley, the late Col. Stacey, Mr. C. Freeling, and the latest acquisitions of Col. S. C. Guthrie; aided by contributions from the independent researches of Gen. A. Cunningham, and supplemented by selections from the Dynastic Inscriptions extant on various local Monuments. One vol. 8vo., with Eight Copper-plate Engravings and numerous Woodcuts, By EDWARD THOMAS, late of the East India Company's Bengal Civil Service. [Nearly ready.

Thomas.—ESSAYS ON INDIAN ANTIQUITIES: following up the Discoveries of James Prinsep, with specimens of his Engravings, and selections from his useful Tables, and embodying the most recent investigations into the History, Palæography, and Numismatics of Ancient India. By EDWARD THOMAS, late of the East India Company's Bengal Civil Service. In 2 vols. 8vo., profusely illustrated. [In preparation.

Thomas.—THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF CREOLE GRAMMAR. By J. J. THOMAS. Port of Spain (Trinidad), 1869. One vol. 8vo. boards, pp. viii. and 155. 12*s.*

Tindall.—A GRAMMAR AND VOCABULARY OF THE NAMAQUA-HOTTENTOT LANGUAGE. By HENRY TINDALL, Wesleyan Missionary. 8vo., pp. 124, sewed. 6*s.*

Van der Tuuk.—OUTLINES OF A GRAMMAR OF THE MALAGASY LANGUAGE. By H. N. VAN DER TUUK. 8vo., pp. 28, sewed. 1*s.*

Van der Tuuk.—SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE MALAY MANUSCRIPTS BELONGING TO THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY. By H. N. VAN DER TUUK. 8vo., pp. 52. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Vishnu-Purana (The); a System of Hindu Mythology and Tradition. Translated from the original Sanskrit, and Illustrated by Notes derived chiefly from other Puráṇas. By the late H. H. WILSON, M.A., F.R.S., Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford, etc., etc. Edited by FITZEDWARD HALL. In 6 vols. 8vo. Vol. I. pp. cxl. and 200; Vol. II. pp. 343; Vol. III. pp. 348: Vol. IV., pp. 346 cloth. Price 10*s.* 6*d.* each.

[Vols. V. and VI. in the press.

Wade.—YÜ-YEN TZÚ-ERH CHI. A progressive course designed to assist the Student of Colloquial Chinese, as spoken in the Capital and the Metropolitan Department. In eight parts, with Key, Syllabary, and Writing Exercises. By THOMAS FRANCIS WADE, C.B., Secretary to Her Britannic Majesty's Legation, Peking. 3 vols. 4to. Progressive Course, pp. xx. 296 and 16; Syllabary, pp. 126 and 36; Writing Exercises, pp. 48; Key, pp. 174 and 140, sewed. £4.

Wade.—WÉN-CHIEN TZŬ-ERH CHI. A series of papers selected as specimens of documentary Chinese designed to assist Students of the language, as written by the officials of China. In sixteen parts, with Key. Vol. I. By THOMAS FRANCIS WADE, C.B., Secretary to Her Britannic Majesty's Legation at Peking. 4to., half-cloth, pp. xii. and 455; and iv, 72, and 52. £1 16*s.*

NOTICE: Return or renew all Library Materials! The Minimum Fee for each Lost Book is $50.00.

The person charging this material is responsible for its return to the library from which it was withdrawn on or before the Latest Date stamped below.

Theft, mutilation, and underlining of books are reasons for disciplinary action and may result in dismissal from the University.
To renew call Telephone Center, 333-8400

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

UNDERGRADUATE LIBRARY

L161—O-1096

BOUND BY

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA
294.1M8901868 C001 V005
ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS ON THE ORIGIN AN 3 0112 014311697