Echoing the era's Protestant evangelicalism and traditions of black religiosity, Truth credited some of her most bold and independent actions and views to divine support. Isabella saw her father, James, only twice after Elizabeth's death. One visit occurred when she was around thirteen, a time when Isabella felt especially burdened by abusive slavers, the Nealys, who repeatedly whipped her for speaking only Dutch. She attributes James's role in her subsequent purchase by John J. Dumont to divine intervention. Isabella stayed with Dumont for about sixteen years—the majority of her enslaved adult life. While with Dumont, Isabella married a fellow bondsman named Thomas and bore five children. During this period, as Truth told her biographer, young Isabella created a sanctuary in a wooded area near a small stream, where she regularly meditated.

In late 1826 (six months before the state of New York's emancipation statute), Isabella prayed for divine guidance and left enslavement one morning before daybreak, taking her infant daughter along with her. Sheltered by Isaac Van Wagener, who paid twenty-five dollars for her and her daughter, Isabella soon began taking charge of her life. This was most apparent in her bold socioreligious activism. Though her religiosity generally was hybridized, while living with the Van Wageners Isabella practiced Methodist "holiness," including simple living, abstaining from alcohol, and avoiding anger. During this period she had a conversion experience that, consistent with such accounts by other enslaved persons, seems to mark a significant turning point in Isabella's sense of empowerment. When her son (also named Peter) was sold to slavers in Alabama, Isabella determined to have him returned. Sure that "God would help me get him" (1968 [1878], p. 45) she entered a complaint with a grand jury, sought assistance from Quakers, raised funds, and hired an attorney. She prevailed in her efforts, and Peter was returned to her custody.

Shortly after this incident, Isabella left her familiar surroundings and went to New York City with son Peter, who eventually took a career at sea. For the next sixteen years, she worked as a house servant to support herself. She attended services at the famous John Street Methodist Church, then moved to the all-black Zion Church, and eventually joined the extremist Robert Matthias's sect, a commune that practiced a more intense form of holiness. The Matthias group eventually collapsed, however, both fiscally and socially.

On June 1, 1843, Isabella changed her name to Sojourner and left New York City, saying she was following divine direction to go east and preach against enslavement. She joined the millennialist Millerite sect and became known for inspiring and cogent speaking. Sojourner honed her socioreligious rhetoric through a relationship with the cooperative Northampton (Massachusetts) Association for Education and Industry, an egalitarian commune that advocated free expression and supported women's rights, abolition, temperance, and vegetarianism. Uniting with the group in the fall of 1843, and remaining with them over the next several years, Sojourner had access to abolitionist and suffragist lecturers, including Frederick Douglass.

At Northampton, Sojourner began to express her religious piety in a decidedly social manner, as she began to speak more forcefully against slavery and to advocate women's suffrage. It was during this period that she took the surname Truth. When the association dissolved in 1846, she followed Douglass's example and published the narrative of her life. Income from the project allowed her to purchase her first home.

Sojourner Truth began giving antislavery speeches in 1844, first at Northampton and subsequently in New York. Invited by William Lloyd Garrison, she later joined the antislavery lecture circuit, speaking and selling her narrative. Her reputation as a compelling lecturer grew, and by 1846 Truth regularly addressed antislavery and women's rights gatherings, making frequent use of the Bible to argue for both. Truth delivered her famous and oft repeated "Ain't I a Woman" speech at the 1851 Akron, Ohio, women's rights convention. In the speech, recorded from observers' memories, Truth rebutted social and religious objections to women's rights. Pointing out the hard work and difficulties of her life as a woman, and observing that Christ came "from God and a woman," Truth countered arguments against female suffrage based on women's fragility and Christ's maleness. Celebrated for its powerful response to hecklers and incisive critique of a narrowly defined womanhood, this speech sealed Truth's reputation. Although she was illiterate, Truth demonstrated intellectual independence. She had scriptures read to her by children whom, she said, did not seek to interpret what they read. In a prescient 1853 speech, Truth included racial and gender analysis of the character Esther from Christian and Hebrew scripture to argue for full citizenship of white women and all black persons.

With outbreak of the Civil War, Truth moved to Washington, D.C., where she assisted blacks fleeing to the nation's capitol. In 1867, Truth began an effort to match newly freed persons with potential employers in New York and Michigan. She also initiated a petition drive calling on Congress to settle freed people on western lands. Congress never acted on the petition, however. Truth died at her home in Battle Creek, Michigan, in 1883.

SEE ALSO Black Feminism in the United States.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gilbert, Olive, and Frances W. Titus. 1968 (1878). The Narrative of Sojourner Truth. New York: Arno Press.
- Painter, Nell Irvin. 1993. "Sojourner Truth." In Black Women in America: An Historical Encyclopedia. Vol. 2, edited by Darlene Clark Hine. New York: Carlson.
- . 1996. Sojourner Truth: A Life, A Symbol. New York: W. W. Norton.
- Stanton, Elizabeth Cady, Susan B. Anthony, and Matilda Joslyn Gage, eds. 1881. History of Woman Suffrage. Vol. 1. New York: Fowler and Wells.

Rosetta E. Ross

TURNER, HENRY McNEAL 1834–1915

Henry McNeal Turner was a major late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century African-American religious leader. In a long and varied career, he was a Civil War soldier, recruiter, and chaplain; a Freedmen's Bureau official; a spellbinding orator; a political organizer; an editor; and a bishop in the African Methodist Episcopal (AME)

Church. He also became one of the most outspoken advocates of reparations-funded African-American emigration to the African continent as a solution to the problem of racial justice in the United States.

Henry McNeal Turner was born on February 1, 1834, in antebellum South Carolina to Sarah Greer and Hardy Turner. Because both of his parents were born free, Turner was never enslaved. As a teenager he worked as a messenger and janitor in an Abbeville, South Carolina, law office. His white employers illegally and secretly taught him to read and write when they realized that his uncanny ability to recall a large amount of information perfectly could be useful to them. He thus became a secret legal courier. Known to outsiders only as a janitor, he was in reality conveying memorized documents for the firm.

Turner was permitted to sit in the rear of a white Methodist church on Sundays, but in 1858, at the age of twenty-four, Turner felt "called" to preach to black Methodists in Baltimore, Maryland, and Washington, D.C. He became a protégé of Bishop Daniel Payne, a highly educated black churchman. Payne's colleagues introduced Turner to theology and the Hebrew, Latin, and Greek languages, which were then associated with advanced Bible study.

Nowhere in the slave-holding South did Turner's photographic memory and extraordinary education shield him from the daily racism faced by all blacks. Embittered by the racial situation prior to the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861, Turner had become convinced that America would never do full justice to its African-derived population. However, his vigorous recruiting of free blacks for the Union earned him a commissioned army chaplaincy, a first for a person of color. When the war ended Turner joined the Freedmen's Bureau as an organizer, but quit his post because of the appalling racism of the bureau's field leadership. He quickly formed scores of Equal Rights Leagues, building up a political base that elected him to the Georgia state legislature in 1868, along with twenty-two other blacks. However, the white Democratic Party majority interpreted the Fifteenth Amendment as giving blacks only the right to vote and not to hold office, and they removed Turner and his fellow African Americans from their seats the following year. In Turner's last speech in office he asserted full equality in public and private life for blacks, stating "I claim the honor of having been the instrument of convincing hundreds—yea thousands—of white men that to reconstruct [Georgia] under the measures of the United States Congress was the safest and best course for the interest state." One of these measures, of course, was the Fourteenth Amendment, which made blacks citizens and guaranteed equal protection of the laws. The expulsion of Turner and his colleagues did accelerate the adoption of the Fifteenth Amendment, which prohibits state action in denying anyone the right to vote on account of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Because of his rather bold views on racial inequality, Turner received death threats from groups such as the Ku Klux Klan, which at the time was headed by Georgia's governor.

Through his remaining Republican Party connections, Turner became the postmaster in Macon, Georgia, in 1869, but resigned under the cloud of politically inspired allegations of sexual improprieties. He then received an appointment as Collector of Customs in Savannah. His religious activities, meanwhile, elevated him to the office of bishop in the AME Church in 1880. He ordained a woman as a deacon in 1885 (a first), and that same year he wrote The Genius and Theory of Methodist Polity, which contains some of his progressive views of religion and race.

In 1883 Turner became one of the first black leaders to raise the issue of enslavement reparations. He argued that America's blacks should collectively ask the government for $100 million to facilitate their relocation to the African continent. In The Civil Rights Cases (1883), the U.S. Supreme Court held that the Civil Rights Act of 1875, which protected individuals from discrimination and violence based on race, applied only to state action and not to acts of private individuals, such as Ku Klux Klan members. This decision reinforced Turner's belief that emigration was the only chance blacks had to live free of white racism.

Between 1891 and 1898, Turner visited Africa no fewer than four times, beginning with an organizing conference promoting Methodism in Sierra Leone. He saw Africa as a land of economic opportunity for black émigrés from a nation slowly eroding their citizenship rights. In 1892 he launched Voice of Missions, a monthly newspaper that promoted black migration. He assured his 4,000 readers that "I will keep you informed about the improvements being made in Africa, such as building railroads. . . . I will tell you about mines of silver, gold and diamonds that have been . . . and are being discovered and what the nations of the earth doing in parceling out the domain of the great continent regardless of the right or wrong involved in the case" (Redkey 1969, pp. 177–178). He also warned of the increased European presence in Africa, saying "it means the capture of the only spot on the globe the black man can ever hope to be in power and demonstrate the ability of self-government" (Redkey 1969, p. 180).

In addition to Voice of Missions, Turner was the editor of the AME Christian Recorder, which also promoted the idea of emigration. In 1894 Turner helped to organize the International Migration Society, which raised sufficient funds to charter two vessels to carry blacks to Africa. The Horsa departed for Liberia on March 19, 1895, and the Laurada left on March 2, 1896. The ships carried a total of 500 individuals. Turner then began promoting his denomination among blacks in Cuba and Central and South America, hoping that a common Protestant activist regional movement would promote ideas of pan-African independence and freedom in that part of the black diaspora. His advocacy of African Americans migrating to Africa anticipated Marcus Garvey's United Negro Improvement Association, which promoted a Back-to-Africa movement in the 1920s. Always in search of a better place to live, Turner died on May 8, 1915, while traveling in Toronto, Canada.

SEE ALSO Black Reconstruction.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hood, James W. 1895. One Hundred Years of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. New York: A.M.E. Zion Book Concern.
- Jackson, John G. 1970. Introduction to African Civilizations. Secaucus, NJ: Citadel Press.
- McPherson, James M. 1964. The Struggle for Equality: Abolitionists and the Negro in the Civil War and Reconstruction. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Mitchell, Michele. 2004. Righteous Propagation: African Americans and the Politics of Racial Destiny after Reconstruction. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Redkey, Edwin S. 1969. Black Exodus: Black Nationalist and Back-to-Africa Movements, 1890–1910. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Wilmore, Gayraud. 1986. Black Religion and Black Radicalism, 2nd ed. Maryknoll, NY: Orbis Books.

Morris G. Henderson

TURNER, NAT 1800–1831

Nat Turner was born on October 2, 1800, in Southampton County, Virginia. After living as a slave for thirty-one years, he led the most significant rebellion in the history of American slavery. Nat Turner's Revolt, launched in southern Virginia in August 1831, attempted to overthrow the slave regime that had dominated Chesapeake society for more than 150 years. Local militia crushed the uprising, and violent reprisals spread across the region, resulting in the massacre of hundreds of enslaved Africans. For southern whites, Turner's Revolt underscored the high costs and constant risks of preserving race slavery indefinitely. For black and white abolitionists in the North, the rebellion reinforced the idea, later espoused by John Brown, that enslaved southerners were willing and able to rebel, needing only weapons and outside support. For black Virginians, "Nat Turner's War" was seen as the first major armed conflict in the long struggle to end slavery.

Five days after Turner was born, Virginia authorities executed Gabriel Prosser, a slave blacksmith who had plotted an uprising in nearby Richmond. As a boy, Nat must have heard stories about this legendary rebel. Turner's African-born mother, it is believed, saw her intelligent son as "intended for some great purpose." She noted "certain marks" on his head and chest, and she marveled when he related events that had occurred before his birth. The precocious boy built up a strong faith, combining African beliefs from his mother's world with the Christian faith of his first master, Benjamin Turner. He learned to read, memorized passages of scripture, and felt that he was specially chosen to destroy the oppressive slave system.

As a young man, Nat Turner took a wife, though evidence regarding Cherry Turner remains sketchy. More certain is the fact that he began to experience personal spiritual revelations. He claimed that once, while plowing in a field with his mind wandering in prayer, he was addressed by the same "Spirit" that "spoke to the prophets in former days" (Greenberg 2003, p. 46). In a powerful vision, Turner "saw white spirits and black spirits engaged in battle, and the sun was darkened—the thunder rolled in the Heavens, and blood flowed in streams." Other visions suggested that it was time for Nat to take up that yoke himself "and fight against the Serpent" (Greenberg 2003, pp. 46–48).

By the time he reached his mid-twenties, Turner had belonged to three masters. When his latest owner, Thomas Moore, died in 1828, Nat became the property of the man's nine-year-old son, Putnam Moore. In 1830, Putnam Moore's widowed mother married a local carriage maker named Joseph Travis.

When a solar eclipse occurred in February 1831, Nat interpreted the dramatic event as a sign that he must commence his work. He laid plans with others to act on the holiday of July 4, but when he fell ill the date was allowed to pass. Then, on August 13, when a summer haze changed the color of the sun, Turner took this as an additional sign. He notified a handful of trusted slave collaborators to join him for a meeting on August 21, a Sunday.

The conspirators gathered in the woods near the Travis homestead, and within hours they moved through the vicinity, killing white inhabitants regardless of age or sex. After securing more horses and weapons, they planned to march on Jerusalem, the county seat, and take the arsenal, which would give them a substantial beachhead. According to the Richmond Enquirer, Turner made it clear that "indiscriminate slaughter was not their intention after they obtained a foothold, and was resorted to in the first instance to strike terror and alarm. Women and children would afterwards have been spared, and men too who ceased to resist" (Higginson 1861, p. 177).

Several hours after midnight, Turner and five others launched their violent offensive, attacking the home of Turner's master and killing the Travis household, then proceeding on to other farmsteads to wreak similar vengeance. By Monday night, sixty or seventy African Americans had joined the cause, and on Tuesday morning Turner's army set out for Jerusalem. Behind them at least fifty-seven whites of all ages had been killed over a stretch of twenty miles.

When some rebels stopped to refresh themselves at a farm three miles from Jerusalem, the pause proved fatal. The militia managed to attack the insurgents, who were off guard and poorly armed. Turner never regained the initiative, and with his supporters killed or dispersed, he went into hiding. By midweek, the militia had received reinforcements from Richmond; frightened and vindictive white soldiers and volunteers launched a harsh and indiscriminate offensive throughout the region. One cavalry company slaughtered forty blacks in two days, and they mounted more than a dozen severed heads atop poles as public warnings. But Turner himself evaded authorities for six weeks.

After an enormous manhunt, authorities captured the rebel leader in a local swamp on October 30. Turner was tried on November 5 and executed on November 11, 1831. Days before the public hanging, a young lawyer named Thomas Ruffin Gray managed to interview the insurgent in his jail cell, and he later published the account as The Confessions of Nat Turner. The text has a ring of truth and provides much of what is known about Turner and his motives.

Turner's uprising forced Virginia's legislature to consider openly, if briefly, a proposal for gradual emancipation. It revived the colonization movement, which many whites saw as a way to remove dangerous bondsmen and reduce the free black community. The uprising also prompted tighter restrictions on black preaching and greater caution regarding slave access to the Gospel. Among African Americans, Turner became, and has remained, both a martyr and a folk hero.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Davis, Mary Kemp. 1999. Nat Turner before the Bar of Judgment: Fictional Treatments of the Southampton Insurrection. Baton Rouge: Louisiana State University Press.
- Greenberg, Kenneth S. 1996. The Confessions of Nat Turner and Related Documents. Boston: Bedford Books.
- , ed. 2003. Nat Turner: A Slave Rebellion in History and Memory. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Higginson, T. W. "Nat Turner's Insurrection." The Atlantic Monthly 8: 46 (August 1861): 173–187.
- Oates, Stephen B. 1975. The Fires of Jubilee: Nat Turner's Fierce Rebellion. New York: Harper and Row.
- Tragle, Henry Irving. 1971. The Southampton Slave Revolt of 1831: A Compilation of Source Material, Including the Full Text of "The Confessions of Nat Turner." Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press.
- Wood, Peter H. 1988. "Nat Turner: The Unknown Slave as Visionary Leader." In Black Leaders of the Nineteenth Century, edited by Leon Litwack and August Meier, 21–40. Urbana: University of Illinois Press.

Peter H. Wood

U

---

UNDEREMPLOYMENT

It is difficult to estimate the percentage of the world population that is jobless. Unemployment, underemployment, informal employment, and the ratio of employment to the total population are all indicators that measure employment instability. Because the use of such measures varies across countries and organizations, it is important to provide information on a number of key labor market indicators to better assess global joblessness (International Labour Organization 2007a).

To illustrate, the adult unemployment rate captures the proportion of the labor force that is not working but is looking for work (ages twenty-five and older). The “youth unemployment rate” applies to those unemployed persons between the ages of fifteen and twenty-four. Although unemployment is a commonly used indicator of joblessness, a large proportion of the non-working population is not captured with this measure. For example, the unemployment rate does not count “discouraged workers.” Discouraged workers are those persons who are no longer included in the labor force, as they have essentially given up trying to find work. Nor does the unemployment rate represent the proportion of the labor force that is underemployed. According to the International Labour Organization (ILO) (2007b), the underemployed represent those “whose hours of work are insufficient in relation to an alternative employment situation in which the person is willing and available to engage.” Finally, another key labor market indicator, the ratio of employment to the total population, is often used to assess employment opportunities at the global level and is thought to provide a better estimate of joblessness than that measured by the unemployment rate alone. This measure, however, also fails to capture the underemployed. Hence, to adequately capture global joblessness, employment opportunities and trends, it is important to provide information on unemployment, underemployment, and the ratio of employment to the total population.

ECONOMIC GLOBALIZATION AND UNDEREMPLOYMENT

Economic globalization constitutes the process of increasing economic interdependence across borders. With greater economic integration comes the potential for greater market productivity and efficiency. The process of globalization is observed in the growth of international trade, the rise in transnational corporations and investments, and in the unrestrained cross-border movement of capital and goods. As predicted by economists and other policy analysts, globalization has contributed to worldwide economic gains. Yet a closer look at the social dimension of globalization reveals an unequal distribution of these benefits within and across countries.

Although international economic growth and development have the potential to promote employment and decrease poverty and exclusion around the world, the evidence to date suggests that the opposite has occurred. Macroeconomic policies that enhanced global economic integration failed to sufficiently consider the national and international implications for countries with an unequal distribution of wealth. Moreover, global economic policy did not address how to increase or improve employment for the majority of workers, nor did such policies seek to remedy gender- or birth-ascribed labor market inequality. Consequently, world economic growth has been realized through globalization; however, inter- and intra-country inequality persists among the core and periphery, developed, transitioning, and underdeveloped countries, and across distinct social groups. In other words, a strong global gross domestic product (GDP) did not correspond to a reduction in global joblessness or poverty. Persistent and increasing unemployment, underemployment, informal employment, and poverty are observed in all countries, regardless of development. Moreover, such employment uncertainty associated with the global economy is further stratified by gender (Heintz 2006) and by birth-ascribed characteristics and features associated with subgroup membership (including race, ethnicity, nativity, caste, legal status).

Underemployment

HOW GLOBALIZATION AFFECTS EMPLOYMENT AND POVERTY

With growing interdependence comes greater vulnerability across borders. The SARS outbreak in Asia, the spread of HIV/AIDS in sub-Saharan Africa, Russia, and the Ukraine, the impact of 9/11 in the United States, the Iraq War and other armed conflicts and violence, have all had a negative, if temporary, effect on regional economies (Harasty and Schmidt 2004). In the global economy, regional events affect the global marketplace. For example, the volatility of markets in Latin America and Asia have slowed global economic growth, and the global tourism and travel industry has been negatively impacted by 9/11 and the subsequent War on Terror. Thus, global economic stability is correlated with national economic and non-economic crises and events.

In contrast, macroeconomic policies favoring globalization, such as freer trade and markets, government deregulation, and the emphasis on private over public sector oversight, have succeeded in increasing global productivity and efficiency. In 2006, International Monetary Fund (IMF) estimates report a slow but steady growth in global output and global labor productivity. For example, global output grew by 5.2 percent and global labor productivity grew by 3.4 percent (International Labour Office 2007b). It appears, then, that globalization benefits the economy by promoting strong worldwide economic development. Yet macroeconomic policies geared toward globalization have emphasized the unrestrained flow of capital and goods. Hence, global economic policies with a social dimension, such as increasing the cross-border flow of labor, enhancing or improving employment opportunities, or policies that attempt to reduce inter- and intra-national poverty or inequality across race, class, and gender, have not been pursued. Although it is reasonable to expect that global economic growth would likely enhance employment opportunities and reduce poverty around the world, the lack of macroeconomic policies that address these specific concerns has resulted in an increase in joblessness around the world. Employment trends between 1996 and 2006 suggest that on the whole, globalization has had a negative impact on employment outcomes and has increased poverty.

Day Laborers Await the Announcement of Day Jobs, San Francisco, 2002. Informal employment is on the increase. Here potential workers wait to hear if there is a job available for that day. AP IMAGES.

JOBLESSNESS

In 2006, global unemployment reached an all-time high of 195.2 million persons (6.3%), and world underemployment was estimated at between 25 and 30 percent (Köhler 2004; ILO 2007). Correspondingly, the world's employment-to-population ratio declined between 1993 and 2006 (to 61.4%, down from 62.6% in 1996 and 63.3% in 1993). The persistent decline in the employment-to-population ratio coupled with the rise in unemployment and underemployment suggests that the demand for jobs in the global economy has outstripped the supply of jobs that are available (Heintz 2006; ILO 2007b). Furthermore, the employment-to-population ratio and the unemployment and underemployment rate are stratified within and across countries. Poorer, underdeveloped countries face greater unemployment and underemployment than richer, developed countries. Moreover, underemployment is a far more prevalent and pressing problem than unemployment in underdeveloped countries (Köhler 2004). In particular, North Africa and the Middle East report the highest unemployment rate and the lowest employment-to-population ratio (12.2% and 47.3%, respectively) (ILO 2007b). Such findings reflect the limited employment options for women in these countries, the prominence of and dependence on the production of oil in the region (and which generates relatively few jobs), and population growth (ILO 2007b). In the United States, underemployment is associated with “the underclass,” typified by U.S.-born black men who experience extreme and concentrated poverty and joblessness in America’s inner-city neighborhoods. Observers note that underemployment in the United States is more likely to occur among women than men, ethnic and racial minorities than non-Hispanic whites, and immigrants than the U.S.-born (De Jong and Madamba 2001).

POVERTY

Nations experience poverty differently. For example, Latin America has experienced the largest gap between the rich and the poor in the less developed world. In particular, indigenous people in Latin America are disproportionately more likely to experience extreme poverty, as they make up only 10 percent of the population of Latin America but constitute the majority of the poor. In the developed world, the gap between the rich and poor is greatest in the United States. In the United States, the wealthiest 1 percent of the population is richer than the combined bottom 40 percent. The inequality gap between these two groups is widening rather than narrowing over time. Moreover, although global poverty is on the decrease, from 15.1 percent in 1993 to 12.7 percent in 2004, regional disparities remain. For example, rapid growth in China and East Asia have led to poverty reduction, but similar changes have not been realized in sub-Saharan Africa or the transition economies of Central Asia and Europe. Additionally, poverty is stratified by gender, race and ethnicity, and nativity. For example, female-headed households experience poverty at a greater rate than their male counterparts. Racial or ethnic minority status intersects with gender to heighten inequality. For example, approximately 40 percent of black and Latino female-headed households experience poverty in the United States. Moreover, immigrants are more likely to live in poverty than U.S.-born residents (17.1% compared to 11.8%, respectively).

Global poverty is difficult to measure. Rough estimates suggest that extreme poverty, the number of people worldwide who live on less than two dollars a day, has approached 1.4 billion persons, or about one-fifth of the world’s population (ILO 2007b). Other estimates put this number at closer to 3 billion people. Children make up a third of this total population. According to figures generated by UNICEF, approximately 30,000 children die each day due to extreme poverty, about 11 million children under five years of age each year (Shah 2006). They “die quietly in some of the poorest villages on earth, far removed from the scrutiny and the conscience of the world. Being meek and weak in life makes these dying multitudes even more invisible in death” (UNICEF 2005). Notably, these staggering numbers actually reflect a decline in poverty that has occurred in the early years of the twenty-first century. This is due, in part, to the concerted effort by the United Nations and other international organizations to highlight and combat global poverty. Additionally, the proportion of the global labor force that is female is on the rise, which further contributes to the decline in poverty. Women are more likely to experience poverty because their work is generally low-skilled, low-wage, and insecure; however, at the level of the household, women’s wages make a positive contribution to total income. The wages women contribute to the household often alleviate the risk of extreme poverty, especially in countries where women’s work compensates for the increase in male unemployment (Heintz 2006).

Poverty is related to employment outcomes; therefore, an increase in unemployment or underemployment is often associated with an increase in poverty. Since unemployment and underemployment are on the rise, a substantial segment of the global population is vulnerable to falling below the poverty line. Growing joblessness coupled with a lack of productive and decent work in the formal sector of the global economy has led to a rise in informal employment. Informal work is generally low-skilled and low-wage, often located in the service sector, agriculture, or the non-durable manufacturing industry (Heintz 2006).

LABOR MARKET SEGMENTATION

National labor markets are stratified by gender and one or more birth-ascribed characteristics rooted in race, caste, ethnicity, nativity, or indigenous status, among others. The international labor market is a macrocosm of such structural inequality. For example, in the United States, globalization has ushered in a restructuring of the economy that is characterized by a decline in good-paying jobs in durable goods manufacturing and the aerospace and defense industries. At the same time, there has been a rise in low-wage, low-skilled jobs in non-durable goods manufacturing, such as in the garment or electronics industry, and the service industry. Hence, although jobs at the bottom and at the top of this “hourglass economy” remain plentiful, the “narrowing middle” forces occupational segregation and constrains intergenerational mobility, especially among racial and ethnic minority groups. Additionally, recent immigration policy reforms, such as the Hart-Cellar Act of 1965, the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, and the Immigration Act of 1990, have dramatically increased legal immigration to the United States. Alongside legal immigration, illegal immigration by Mexican and Central American migrants continues unabated (Valdez 2005). Such economic and demographic changes have spurred a wage and work gap between non-Hispanic whites and ethnic and racial minorities that persists into the twenty-first century. For example, native-born ethnic and racial minorities are more likely to be unemployed and underemployed; native-born and foreign-born Latinos, regardless of legal status, are concentrated among the working poor. For men, such occupations include labor-intensive work in the construction or service industries. For women, occupations include domestic work or factory work in sweatshop-like conditions in the garment industry. Other industrialized nations face similar patterns of stratification across subgroups. In Japan, for instance, foreign-born men from Brazil and Pakistan work in occupations characterized as “dirty, dangerous, and difficult,” while Filipinas are relegated to work in hostess bars and other occupations in the “entertainment” industry.

Underemployment

INFORMAL EMPLOYMENT

Informal employment in developed and underdeveloped countries and in rural and urban settings is on the increase for men and women, as “lean” and “just in time” production techniques decrease the number of jobs that are available in formal employment. Informal employment constitutes non-standard work that is low-skilled and low-wage, often requires excessive hours of work, is generally inflexible and insecure, and lacks protections, regulations, and benefits that more formal employment guarantees. Women engage in informal employment to a greater degree than men. In less developed countries, the majority of non-agricultural women’s labor takes place in the informal sector. In developed countries, the highest percentage of informally employed women occurs in sub-Saharan Africa (84%).

The disproportionate number of women working in the informal sector relative to men is due, in large part, to gender inequality in developed and especially underdeveloped countries. For example, women in underdeveloped nations may work for subcontractors assembling work at home for a fixed price or work as unpaid family workers in family-owned enterprises. In developed nations, women’s informal employment includes domestic work, work in the entertainment industry, factory work, “home work,” and unpaid family work. Because such informal labor market practices lack the protections found in more formal employment such as childcare support or sick leave, and because women are more likely to engage in this type of work, women are more likely to experience poverty than men; this has been termed the “feminization of poverty.”

Additionally, women’s non-market work—unpaid labor that contributes to the maintenance of the household—is crucial for its socioeconomic stability. The time expended in non-market unpaid work is largely non-negotiable, however, and the hours left available for paid market work are compromised by such household responsibilities. The combination of unpaid non-market work and the fewer hours left available for wage-work, and the likelihood that such work will be located in the informal sector, results in the devaluation of women’s work. This “feminization of labor” characterizes the majority of women’s work in developed and developing nations (Heintz 2006).

Finally, in underdeveloped, post-colonial countries, the exploitation of children, women, and indigenous workers occurs at the national and international level. Outsourcing by developed countries leads to increased employment opportunities in less developed countries, but the factory or service jobs that are generated are labor intensive and low paying. In 2004, the ILO reported that one in six of the world’s children (ages five to seventeen) engages in child labor, which may include forced labor, prostitution, or work that is hazardous and dangerous (Harasty and Schmidt 2004). Moreover, sex tourism in Southeast Asia, the Dominican Republic, and the Caribbean promotes the exploitation of women and children from underdeveloped countries by Westerners. For example, Thailand’s sex tourism industry generates 4.3 billion U.S. dollars annually, which accounts for 3 percent of Thailand’s GDP.

FAIR GLOBALIZATION

Research on globalization has emphasized the possibility of “fair globalization” (Halonen 2005). Fair globalization seeks to promote economic growth and development while at the same time improving employment opportunities and reducing poverty. Rather than suggesting that a fair globalization is ethical, moral, or idealistic, scholars, activists, and organizations argue that the observed economic growth that has been attributed to globalization cannot be sustained without a population of decently employed workers. In other words, macroeconomic policies that facilitate economic internationalization need to expand beyond policies that promote the unrestrained cross-border flow of capital and goods. Additional policies are required that would ensure decent and productive work. The ILO (2007) defines “decent and productive work” as “opportunities for women and men to obtain decent and productive employment in conditions of freedom, equity, security and human dignity.” Such work is not produced in the informal sector but must be created in the formal sector. Policies in the early twenty-first century that target the social dimension of globalization are taking root, such as the United Nation’s Millennium Declaration, which seeks to halve world poverty and achieve universal primary education by 2015, and the ILO’s commitment to worldwide decent and productive employment as well as their strategic and aggressive policy to end child labor.

The attention being paid to the contradictions of globalization and global economic growth on the one hand and rising joblessness and poverty on the other, may have the desired effect. Macroeconomic policies may begin to address the unequal distribution of resources across developed and underdeveloped countries, if only to sustain future global economic growth. Whether such policy changes at the international (or national) level can address socioeconomic stratification at the national level is less clear, since gender and birth-ascribed stratification appears to be an endemic, structural feature of labor markets.

SEE ALSO Poverty; Social Problems; Undocumented Workers.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

De Jong, Gordon F., and Anna B. Madamba. 2001. “A Double Disadvantage? Minority Group, Immigrant Status, and Underemployment in the United States.” Social Science Quarterly 82 (1): 117–130.

Halonen, H. E. Tarja. 2005. “A Fair Globalization.” Globalizations 2 (2): 250–253.

Harasty, Claire, and Dorothea Schmidt. 2004. Global Employment Trends. Geneva: International Labour Organization. Available from <http://www.ilo.org>.

Heintz, James. 2006. “Globalization, Economic Policy and Employment: Poverty and Gender Implications.” Employment Strategy Papers, Employment Policy Unit, International Labour Office. Available from <http://www.ilo.org/publns>.

International Labour Organization. 2007a. Key Labor Market Indicators. Geneva: Author. Available from <http://www.ilo.org>.

———. 2007b. Global Employment Trends, updated. Geneva: Author. Available from <http://www.ilo.org>.

Köhler, Gernot. 2004. “The Global Stratification of Unemployment and Underemployment.” Centro Argentino de Estudios Internacionales, Programa Teoría de las Relaciones Internacionales. Available from <http://www.caei.com.ar/es/programas/teoria/t12.pdf>.

Shah, Anup. 2006. “Global Issues: Social, Political, Economic and Environmental Issues that Affect Us All.” Available from <http://www.globalissues.org>.

UNICEF. 2005. The State of the World’s Children. Available from <http://www.unicef.org/sowc05/english/index.html>.

Valdez, Zulema. 2005. “Two Sides of the Same Coin? The Relationship Between Socioeconomic Assimilation and Entrepreneurship Among Mexicans in Los Angeles.” In Latino Los Angeles: Transformations, Communities, and Activism, edited by Enrique C. Ochoa and Gilda L. Ochoa. Tucson: University of Arizona Press.

Zulema Valdez

UNDOCUMENTED WORKERS

Undocumented workers are foreign-born workers who lack the legal documentation required to work in the country in which they live. As outlined by Charles Kelly in a 1977 article, these individuals may have crossed a national border without going through the required inspection process, they may have entered with counterfeit documents, or they may have overstayed legitimate tourist or working visas. In the United States, an undocumented worker is someone who is foreign born, is not a permanent resident, and is not a U.S. citizen. An undocumented worker can be deported for being in violation of U.S. migration and naturalization law and for not possessing permission to work in the United States. These workers, like others in a country illegally, are often referred to as “illegal aliens,” or “illegal immigrants.”

TRACKING UNDOCUMENTED WORKERS

Because of their clandestine status, it is usually difficult to know exactly how many undocumented immigrants there are in a specific country or region. Demographers have created statistical methods to estimate how many undocumented immigrants exist in a population. According to estimates made by Jeffrey Passel, a researcher with the Pew Hispanic Center in Washington D.C., there were 11.1 million undocumented immigrants living in the United States in 2005. Of these, 7.2 million were unauthorized migrants employed in March 2005, accounting for about 4.9 percent of the civilian labor force. The other 3.9 million were home-stay woman and children. The same report showed that undocumented workers made up a larger share of the workers in certain occupational categories, including 24 percent of all workers employed in farming occupations, 17 percent in cleaning (or janitorial occupations), 14 percent in construction, and 12 percent in food preparation (Passel 2005, p.1). Passel also found that in 2005 undocumented immigrants made up 30 percent of the foreign-born population in the United States and were largely from Latin America, with most unauthorized migrants coming from Mexico.

Undocumented Workers

In 2005 there were 6.2 million undocumented immigrants from Mexico in the United States. Passel's study found that between 60 and 75 percent of the more than 11.1 million undocumented immigrants in the United States entered the country illegally and without inspection, in most cases entering across the 2,000 mile U.S.-Mexican border. The other 25 to 40 percent entered legally and subsequently overstayed visas or violated the terms of their admission. If a foreign national enters a country legally and then overstays a visa or violates the terms of admission, he or she automatically becomes an undocumented immigrant. If the same person gets a job, then he or she becomes an undocumented worker.

GLOBALIZATION AND WORKER PATTERNS

The forces of globalization and market competition have encouraged the hiring of undocumented workers worldwide. By employing such workers, companies can compete more easily in the global market economy and make more profits. Increased profits are made by paying low wages to undocumented workers (in many cases under the minimum wage); by not investing in safety measures or appropriate working equipment, which can be very expensive, and therefore forcing the undocumented workers to labor under dangerous conditions; by not paying overtime; by denying workers benefits such as health insurance; and by paying them under the table.

For these reasons, such employers generally avoid investigating whether documents presented at the time of hiring are authentic. Workers are supposed to be asked by employers at the time of hire to provide proof that they are allowed to work in the United States. Foreign workers can present a Permanent Resident Card (also called a Green Card) or a working permit (or working visa), as well as a Social Security card. Some employers, however, just take a copy of the Permanent Resident Card and the social security card from the prospective worker and file it in their records, just in case they are investigated by immigration authorities. They can then demonstrate that they were given documentation, and that this documentation suggested that the worker was authorized to work in the United States.

Most undocumented workers, however, can buy fake documentation from counterfeiters in the informal markets of global cities for just a few hundred dollars. In most cases, Social Security numbers are made-up numbers, but in other instances they match the numbers of real citizens. According to a 2005 New York Times article by Eduardo Porter, as many as three quarters of the undocumented workers in the United States pay payroll taxes, contributing between $6 billion and $7 billion in Social Security funds that they will be unable to claim later in life.

IMMIGRATION LAW

In an attempt to control undocumented immigration, the U.S. Congress passed the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act (IRCA), which awarded amnesty to and legalized the status of more than three million undocumented immigrants. At the same time, a new federal law, known as the Employers Sanctions Provisions of IRCA, Immigration and Nationality Act, Section 274a, prohibited employers from hiring undocumented workers and threatened them with large fines if they did so. As a result, many companies changed their strategies of hiring undocumented workers directly, and instead subcontracted out the work. Thus, the employer could not be blamed for having undocumented workers on their premises. If they are caught, the company could (and still can) argue that they had merely hired the subcontractor and that they were not aware of the legal status of the workers.

In 2005 several Wal-Mart stores were accused of hiring undocumented workers. Wal-Mart authorities were not able to argue lack of knowledge of the problem because federal agents had taped a conversation that showed that Wal-Mart executives knew that the subcontractors they used had hired illegal immigrants. Moreover, an article carried by the Associated Press and other sources revealed the conditions that undocumented workers faced at Wal-Mart: "Many of the janitors—from Mexico, Russia, Mongolia, Poland and a host of other nations—worked seven days or nights a week without overtime pay or injury compensation, said attorney James L. Linsey. Those who worked nights were often locked in the store until the morning, Linsey said" (Associated Press 2005, p. 1). This is a damning illustration of the conditions faced by undocumented workers in America.

U.S. immigration law has opened the doors for numerous immigrants to enter the country, but this door is mainly open to skilled workers. Unskilled workers have very few options when applying for a visa, with the result that most such workers have to enter the country illegally. According to Rob Paral, a Research Fellow with the Immigration Policy Center, only one category of visas in U.S. immigration and naturalization policy is targeted to low-skilled workers, and only 5,000 of these are issued per year. Most visas are reserved for high-skilled occupations, and 130,000 of these are allowed per year. According to Timothy Hatton and Jeffrey Williamson, the authors of Global Migration and the World Economy (2005), high-skilled workers find it much harder to mask an illegal status and secure illegal employment that fully exploits their skills. Low-skilled jobs, however, are less likely to require the licenses, certifications, and other documentation that might reveal legal status. They also point out that the wage differential between the countries of origin and destination is much larger for low-skilled work than for high-skilled work. It does not come as a surprise, therefore, that undocumented low-skilled workers are disproportionately represented in current immigration flows.

Rebuilding New Orleans, 2006. Following Hurricane Katrina, large numbers of undocumented workers, such as this laborer from Mexico, came to the region and performed much of the clean-up work. MARIO TAMA/GETTY IMAGES.

Undocumented workers are protected by labor rights in the United States and several other countries around the world. According to the Workers' Rights Handbook, examples of the kind of labor rights that undocumented workers may be awarded include the right to get paid at least the minimum wage, to get paid overtime, to receive workmen's compensation insurance, and the right to organize. Unfortunately, in most cases, undocumented workers do not fight for their labor rights even when they are violated due to the fear of losing their job or getting deported if they complain.

UNDOCUMENTED WORKERS WORLDWIDE

The phenomenon of undocumented migration and undocumented workers is not unique to the United States. Globalization and the demand for cheap labor in the global market economy have created an underground demand for undocumented workers all around the world, especially in the most developed nations. Structural adjustment programs in developing nations and the expansion of free trade have caused thousands of workers around the world to be displaced from their jobs, leading to very high rates of unemployment. Sometimes referred to as a new form of slave labor, undocumented workers in developed nations are paid low wages for doing jobs in which they work under unsafe conditions, are not given any labor-related benefits, and are often forced to work for long hours without being paid overtime, among other abuses. Even conservative estimates claim that the number of undocumented immigrants around the world is about 10 million (see Skeldon 2000). Nation-states all around the world are currently fighting the problem of undocumented workers, who some claim displace citizens from jobs and lower wages in the country of destination.

The majority of undocumented immigrants around the world enter the country of destination illegally through the use of a smuggler, who either smuggles the person into the country or finances the cost of undocumented entry. The cost of smuggling can range from a few hundred dollars to several thousand dollars depending on the place of origin of the migrant, method of smuggling (by earth, by air, or by sea), and how strict the border enforcement has become at the port of entry. In 2007, smuggler costs to get into the United States were on average between $1,500 to $3,000 for Mexicans and $5,000 to $10,000 for Central Americans (Flores, 2007). According to Ko-Lin Chin (1999), author of Smuggled Chinese: Clandestine Immigration to the United States, the fees paid by the Chinese range from $30,000 to $60,000. Family and friends often cover the cost of the smuggling fees at the time of arrival to the United States. In other instances, the debt the worker incurs is taken out of the wages earned when the immigrant begins to work in some kind of shop or restaurant that is owned by intermediaries of the smuggler. If the money was provided by family and friends, very rarely the debt is forgiven. In most instances, undocumented workers spend large amounts of time (several months or years) after their arrival trying to pay back their debt for smuggling fees.

Undocumented workers are less likely to bring family members with them because of the dangerous circumstances under which they are smuggled, and because they are more likely to get caught if they travel with family members. Thus, undocumented workers with family members in the country of origin are more likely to move more frequently back and forth between the two countries. In the case of the United States, tighter border enforcement has not helped to reduce the flow of undocumented immigrants, but it has increased the rates charged by smugglers and redirected illegal crossings to nontraditional ports of entry. These changes have resulted in a death toll of about 400 deaths per year since the border was militarized in 1993 (see Massey et al. 2002). Tighter border enforcement has also helped to increase the number of undocumented workers who stay longer in the United States, because it is more difficult for undocumented workers to continue with their traditional circulatory flow. Despite internal immigration enforcement laws, such as those enacted by the U.S. Congress, governments tend to poorly enforce their immigration laws due to political and economic factors. Moreover, the demand for workers to fill jobs not easily filled by native-born or documented workers only reinforces the dynamics of undocumented immigration, despite border enforcement.

IMMIGRANT WORKERS AND RACISM

In addition to high levels of exploitation, undocumented workers face high levels of racial discrimination. In most nations around the world, undocumented workers tend to be members of racial minorities. As in the case of the United States, where numerous undocumented workers look Hispanic or Latino, in other places around the world undocumented workers are easy to spot, and they can then be subjected to racial profiling and discrimination. In Germany, Turkish undocumented workers are often visually distinctive, and African undocumented workers are easily spotted in Spain because of their physical features and the color of their skin. Racial discrimination associated with undocumented migration status is considered a new form of racism, especially in the United States.

Anti-immigrant sentiment in the United States reached new heights during 2006, leading to millions of undocumented immigrants marching in the streets of major U.S. cities and protesting immigration laws that threatened to convert those who offer help to undocumented immigrants into felons. As a result of the nationwide protests, hundreds of new immigration laws curtailed the ability of employers to hire undocumented workers, forcing the police to inquire about the legal status of those who they detain, and allowing landlords to deny renting to undocumented immigrants. In most instances, these local laws have been revoked in federal courts given that such laws have been declared to be unconstitutional and according to federal law, only the federal government and not the local government can inquire about immigration status of any person (Rubinkam 2007). In addition, a 700-mile-long fence along the U.S.-Mexican border was approved by the Congress and signed by President George W. Bush. Other bills have been debated in Congress, including one that would award amnesty to millions of undocumented immigrants. A backlash against illegal immigration all over the United States has caused thousands of workers to be deported, so that families have been suddenly separated and children terrorized when they returned home from school to find that their parents had been taken away. Despite the deportations and the new laws, there is no sign that the flow of undocumented workers to the United States and other developed countries will come to an end any time soon.

SEE ALSO Underemployment.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Associated Press. "Wal-Mart Mops Up Immigrant Flap." 2005. Washington, DC: CBS News, March 18. Available from <http://www.cbsnews.com>.
- Baumer, Bennett. 2006. "Far-Right Bill Targets Immigrants, Punishes Helpers." Newstandard News, March 8. Available from <http://newstandardnews.net/content>.
- Capps, Randolph, and Michael E. Fix. 2005. "Undocumented Immigrants: Myths and Reality." Washington, DC: Urban Institute. Available from <http://www.urban.org/>.
- Chin, Ko-Lin. 1999. Smuggled Chinese: Clandestine Immigration to the United States. Philadelphia: Temple University Press.
- Flores, Nadia Y. 2007. "International Migration from El Salvador." Texas A&M University, Department of Sociology, College Station, Texas. Working Paper.
- Friebel, Guido, and Sergei Guriev. 2004. Smuggling Humans: A Theory of Debt-financed Migration. Bonn, Germany: Institute for the Study of Labor. Available from <http://www.iza.org>.
- Friends of Farmworkers. "Workers' Rights Handbook." Available from http://friendsfw.org/Undocumented\_Rights.
- Hatton, Timothy J., and Jeffrey G. Williamson. 2005. Global Migration and the World Economy: Two Centuries of Policy and Performance. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press.
- International Organization for Migration. 2003. World Migration Report: Managing Migration; Challenges and Responses for People on the Move. Geneva: International Organization for Migration.
- Kelly, Charles B. 1977. "Counting the Uncountable: Estimates of Undocumented Aliens in the United States." Population and Development Review 3 (4): 473-481.
- Massey, Douglas S., Jorge Durand, and Nolan J. Malone. 2002. Beyond Smoke and Mirrors: Mexican Immigration in an Era of Economic Integration. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.
- Paral, Rob. 2006. "No Way In: U.S. Immigration Policy Leaves Few Legal Options for Mexican Workers." Immigration Policy in Focus 4 (5). Available from <http://www.aifl.org/ipc/nowayin.asp>.
- Passel, Jeffrey. 2005. "Size and Characteristics of the Unauthorized Migrant Population in the U.S." Washington, DC: Pew Hispanic Center. Available from <http://pewhispanic.org/reports>.
- Porter, Eduardo. 2005. "Illegal Immigrants Are Bolstering Social Security with Billions." New York Times, April 5.
- Rubinkam, Michael. 2007. "PA. Immigrant Law Voided: Judge Strikes Down Hazleton's Tough New Anti-Illegal Immigration Law." The Associated Press, July 26, 2007. Available from http://biz.yahoo.com/ap/070726/illegal\_immigrants\_crackdown.html?.v=1.
- Skeldon, Ronald. 2000. Myths and Realities of Chinese Irregular Migration. Migration Research Series 1. Geneva: International Office of Migration.

Nadia Y. Flores

UNESCO STATEMENTS ON RACE

The establishment of the United Nations (UN) following World War II led to a surge in declarations, conventions, and organizations aimed at promoting human rights and equality. The legacy of Nazism and the failure of the League of Nations galvanized the UN to formulate two critical postwar documents: the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948), and the Genocide Convention (1948). The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) was established in 1945 to “embody a genuine culture of peace.” It was within this international atmosphere that UNESCO, as one of its early public acts, issued a Statement on Race in 1950.

Racism was the essence of Nazism, and the defeat of that regime provided an opportunity to pursue an egalitarian agenda. Despite the defeat of Nazism, racism in the late 1940s remained a powerful ideology. Segregation in the United States was in full force, and southern racism was yet to be challenged politically. UNESCO took up the challenge and established a committee of experts that published the 1950 Statement on Race, which declared that there was no scientific basis or justification for racial bias (The New York Times, July 18, 1950). The publication created a controversy that, in various forms, has lasted ever since. Nevertheless, the publication of the statement marked the emergence of a new scientific orthodoxy that continues into the twenty-first century. This persistence is most remarkable given the ongoing changes in the study of the life sciences. But perhaps as noteworthy is how the specific makeup of the committee fanned the controversy, for while the subject matter reputedly dealt with issues of physical anthropology and biology, the scientists on the UNESCO committee were largely social scientists. The question of whether race is a biological phenomena or a social construct was, and remains, controversial.

The 1950 UNESCO statement was revolutionary. Although during the previous two decades significant shifts had taken place in scientific perspectives concerning the biology of race, the claim of biological equality advanced in the statement was unprecedented as a declaration by an official public body. The committee asserted human equality based on four premises: (1) the mental capacities of all races are similar, (2) no evidence exists for biological deterioration as a result of hybridization, (3) there is no correlation between national or religious groups and any particular race, and (4) “race was less a biological fact than a social myth,” and that biology proved the “universal brotherhood of man.” The first three, viewed from the perspective of half a century later, have become part of the mainstream, or at least part of liberal orthodoxy. But the fourth claim presented an epistemologically radical position. The “brotherhood of man” had a subversive ring to it at the beginning of the cold war, and the positive assertion about equality based on science remains controversial today. In 1950, many viewed this claim to be the weaker point of the statement, and it was subject to widespread criticism.

During the prewar years, the scientific community had moved from racist positions to a primarily agnostic understanding of the relation between racial biology and social manifestations. Biologists, anthropologists, and psychologists all contributed to a critique that delegitimized previously held racist theories, especially those associated with eugenics in the first quarter of the century. Among the prominent scientists who shaped this antiracist shift were Franz Boas (1858–1942) and his students, including Ruth Benedict and Margaret Mead in the United States, and biologists such as J. B. S. Haldane, Julian Huxley, Lancelot Hogben, and Lionel Penrose in England. It was Penrose who played a major role in undermining the positivists’ claims regarding racial differences, by showing that in many cases mental ability resulted from a combination of biology-genetics and environment, including pathological causes. Penrose showed that the idea that there was an explicit clear correlation between genetics and IQ could not be proven. The critics, with some exceptions, tended to be outsiders or socially marginal to the scientific community because of their ethnicity, gender, or politics. Even those who were at the heart of the British elite, such as Huxley and Haldane, were outsiders by their professional position or politics. In other words, it was Jews, women, and leftists who predominated in the ranks of those critical of racist viewpoints. From the vantage point of early twenty-first century, the substance of the critics writing on race would be considered to fall among those who believe in deep and biological racial divides. In other words, the theories supported by anti-racist scientists in the 1940s would be considered now by many to be racist. What made them “critics” was that their relative position opposed the conventions of their time. The whole spectrum of scientific understanding of racial differentiation has shifted.

Among this group was Ashley Montagu (1905–1999), who was born to a Jewish immigrant family in London and later migrated to the United States. Informally part of the Boasian network in New York during the thirties, Montagu never achieved the academic prestige to which he aspired. As an outsider, however, he was to play a major role in the public understanding of the science of race. His most famous book, Man’s Most Dangerous Myth: The Fallacy of Race was first published in 1942.

UNESCO’s expert committee on race was created by the UNESCO Fourth General Conference, which called for the collection of scientific data on race problems and for an educational campaign to disseminate scientific knowledge of race. UNESCO's Director-General at the time was Julian Huxley, who had criticized unfounded racist claims for fifteen years and was the coauthor of the book We Europeans, probably the first book to argue for the use of the term ethnic as a replacement for race. This change in terminology was seen as a way to counter scientific and, in particular, Nazi racism. Perhaps even more important to the formation of the committee was the Brazilian anthropologist Arthur Ramos, who headed the Social Sciences Department of UNESCO. He determined the composition of the committee, which reflected his interest in the social sciences and thus challenged the more conventional view of race as a biological category. Montagu turned out to be the only committee member who was a physical anthropologist and had biological expertise. He was therefore chosen to be the rapporteur. In hindsight, it is clear that this choice increased the likelihood of a controversial statement. Montagu was more of an outspoken critic than a consensus builder, and his personal social qualities were not universally admired. His clear and often outspoken position on race was not unknown to the committee, so it would be wrong to assume that their findings were not embraced by the committee as a whole.

In the following decades, Montagu would publish extensively on numerous aspects of social relations, arguing against racism and other forms of discrimination and in favor of egalitarianism. At times, however, he took his analysis and claims further than his peers felt comfortable supporting. In 1950, neither the scientific community nor the public were ready to treat race as a social construction, but UNESCO's statement was destined to redraw the lines of the debate.

The draft statement of the expert committee was sent out to various international scientists, most of whom were sympathetic to its antiracist viewpoint and had participated in previous public declarations. Their replies underscore both the scientific and political concerns of what can be said about race scientifically, as well as what ought to be said politically. The internal concerns regarding the composition of the committee led UNESCO primarily to solicit the opinion of biologists. The prevailing responses to the draft criticized the positivist view put forth in the statement about the "universal brotherhood of man." Despite behind-the-scenes politicking, Montagu, as rapporteur, was able to keep this phrase in the final text. Once the statement was published, the result, as expected, was widespread criticism. Among the critics were prominent conservative and racist scientists such as Cyril Darlington, Ronald Fisher, and Ruggles Gates, but also less vehement sympathizers. In general, the debate was largely confined to small scientific circles, but the statement's effectiveness was damaged by exaggerated assertions that lacked scientific backing.

The press coverage was not extensive, but the scientific turmoil troubled UNESCO at a time when it was struggling to establish political and professional credentials. Consequently, it was pressured to establish a second committee comprising geneticists and physical anthropologists. In an effort to keep a façade of continuity, the new expert committee also included Montagu, and the new statement was presented as an explication of the first statement, not as revision. The new rapporteur was Leslie Clarence Dunn, one of the foremost developmental geneticists, who also published popular text book on biology, and wrote on race, and the focus shifted to biology and physical anthropology. Several of the new members were among the commentators on the draft of the first statement whose opinions were not incorporated into that statement. Among the prominent new members were John Burton Sanderson Haldane, and Solly Zuckerman. Haldane was a Communist who formulated his antiracism as an anti-Nazi stand. While not always sensitive to racial offense, his egalitarianism was explicit and political. Zuckerman's Jewishness made his position on race more egalitarian than might have been expected from his centrist political position. The committee was far from monolithic, yet it had a strong antiracist and egalitarian commitment. It published its "Statement on the Nature of Race and Race Differences" in June 1951, with its authors highlighted as being "Physical Anthropologists and Geneticists." It was sent to ninety-six scientists for comments before publication. In addition to the statement, UNESCO printed eight booklets on various aspects of race, and these served as more detailed mini-statements. The industry of scientific antiracism was thus beginning to take shape, moving beyond individual efforts and becoming institutionalized.

An examination of the differences between the first and the second statements displays a wide spectrum of attitudes on the concept of race among scientists in the early 1950s. While most commentators refrained from negating the biological basis for intelligence outright, they became comfortable assigning racial differences to social factors. Race was losing its scientific (i.e., biological) credibility, but it remained a powerful force in popular culture and society. The confusion among these categories has never really been resolved in the public discourse. Although the 1950 statement was primarily sociological, it offered an explanation of the mechanism of racial differentiation through evolution, denied "race" had any concrete meaning, and advocated replacing the concept of race with an "ethnic" framework. The 1951 statement was more tentative, recognized that race mixture (the term at the time for the population descended from recognizable two races) existed "for an indefinite but a considerable time,” and argued that while the process of racial differentiation is unknown, many populations could be classified anthropologically in racial terms. The controversial declaration of the first statement on the biological evidence for universal brotherhood was ignored in the second statement.

The two statements contributed to a new dogma and to confusion about race. They emphasized what is unknown by science about race and pointed to the lack of positivist knowledge of what race is. By asserting that many populations can be classified racially, but then being unable to say much about such a classification, these statements were bound to lead to public confusion. So while the impact of the statements on policy has been questioned by historians, their influence has been significant, if indirect. They were part of a trend by scientists to renounce racial prejudices as lacking a scientific basis. UNESCO continued to fight racism and publish periodically on race, while scientists by and large switched their focus to environmentalism. Over the years, different organizations have pronounced on race, including the American Anthropological Association (AAA), the American Association of Physical Anthropologists (AAPA), and the American Sociological Association.

The 1998 statement on race by the AAA for example, illustrates how little had changed since 1950. The AAA statement (which followed the AAPA's statement) hardly differed in substance from the early UNESCO statements. The focus of the critique of the claims of racial differentiation remained on intragroup variability—differences within the group as opposed to between the group and any group it borders—which has been the main argument against racism since the 1930s. For example, if skin color is the variable to be examined, whites are more different among themselves than from the nearest non whites. The difference between Nordic and any darker skin whites is bigger than between the latter ones and light skin blacks. The principle distinction is true, regardless where one choose to draw the boundaries. It similarly applies to other characteristics. This viewpoint advocates that intragroup differences are far wider than intergroup distinctions. This has been recognized by writers since the 1920s, yet it was presented by the AAA as the central claim for a denial of the significance of race. Beyond this observation, the statement focused on the history of race as a reflection on the science of race. This particular history by the AAA amounted to a sharp criticism of race thinking over time, coupled with an inability to describe any “correct” aspects of race that would explain racial differences.

Another angle to view the transformation of scientific thinking can perhaps be viewed from those who were perceived as right wing conservatives. It is their ongoing explication of racial differences as an explanation of human behavior that provided the motivation for the more recent statements on race. Each of these anti-racist statements aimed to slay the dragon of racism once and for all. Among these scientists, even the hereditarians and racialists, who since the late sixties and early seventies reasserted themselves in claims about the correlation of race and science, followed by the debate over sociobiology, were far less deterministic than even the egalitarians of the earlier period. Their scientific claims were dismissed, but it is historically instructive to see how much the whole spectrum shifted against an epistemology of stable or identifiable races.

UNESCO published additional statements on race over the years, authored by leading scientific figures who pronounced on various questions with the persistent goal of advocating human equality. The dissonance between popular views that race matters in a certain biological sense and the scientific inability to clarify what these differences might be has left scientists criticizing misconceptions without being able to offer an alternative sets of positivistic beliefs. Thus, scientific dissonance is the dominant aspect of the debate. This is illustrated by the National Cancer Institute (NCI) statement, which posits that “race is not a biologically determined classification. Race is a product of our social and political history.” This dissonance leads to explicit confusion within the NCI statement itself, which also states that “Despite the fact that race is not a tenable biological classification, there are valid reasons to retain it as an indicator of health outcomes” (1997).

Race persist in popular representations, but cannot be clearly captured by scientific definitions and studies. The need to name a race and to have a clear demarcation of the group conflicts with the wide human diversity that does not avail itself for such clear demarcations. The dissonance is a subject of popular and academic confusion, as the word race conveys different things in distinct discourses and in specific contexts. UNESCO's efforts to clarify it has done much to articulate an official anti-racist position, but did not succeeded in bringing the debate to an end.

SEE ALSO Montagu, Ashley.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- American Anthropological Association. “American Anthropological Association Statement on ‘Race.’” Available from <http://www.aaanet.org/stmts/racepp.htm>.
- American Association of Physical Anthropologists. 1996. “AAPA Statement on Biological Aspects of Race.” Available from <http://www.physanth.org/positions/race.html>.
- Barkan, Elazar. 1992. The Retreat of Scientific Racism. Cambridge, U.K.: Cambridge University Press.
- Barkan, Elazar. 1996. “The Politics of the Science of Race: Ashley Montagu and UNESCO's Anti-Racist Declarations.”

- In Race and Other Misadventures, edited by Larry T. Reynolds and Leonard Lieberman, 96–105. Dix Hills, NY: General Hall.
- Metraux, Alfred. 1950. "UNESCO and the Racial Problem." International Social Science Bulletin 2: 384–390.
- Montagu, F. M. Ashley. 1942. Man's Most Dangerous Myth: The Fallacy of Race. New York: Columbia University Press.
- . 1972 (1951). Statement on Race, 3rd ed. London: Oxford University Press.
- National Cancer Institute. 1997. "The Meaning of Race in Science—Considerations for Cancer Research." Available from <http://deainfo.nci.nih.gov/advisory/pcp/09apr97.htm>.
- UNESCO. 1952. The Race Concept; Results of an Inquiry. Paris: UNESCO.
- UNESCO. 1961. Race and Science: The Race Question in Modern Science. New York: Columbia University.

Elazar Barkan

UNITED FARM WORKERS UNION

The United Farm Workers of America (UFW) is a predominantly Mexican farm labor union operating primarily in California, but also in Arizona, Texas, Washington, and Florida. The organization first emerged in 1965 under the leadership of César Chávez. During the height of its activities in the 1960s and 1970s, the UFW was able to improve working conditions for farmworkers and was part of a broader movement for the social and political inclusion of people of Mexican origin into American society.

During the 1960s, a plethora of political advocacy organizations emerged in the United States pressing for social and political change. This time period is most often associated with the civil rights and antiwar movements, but women, gay and lesbian persons, Native Americans, and Latinos were also active in pressing for change throughout the country. The UFW was part of this social-movement cycle.

The emergence of the UFW in the 1960s was predicated on a long history of Mexican American political mobilizations, dating to the early part of the twentieth century. During the 1930s there were significant instances of farm labor insurgency throughout California (Daniel 1981, González 1999, L. Majka 1992). However, despite widespread labor mobilization, labor unions were unable to significantly alter their situation due to their extreme political and social marginalization.

A major obstacle to farm-labor mobilization during the 1940s and 1950s was the Bracero Program. From 1942 to 1964, the United States imported Mexican guest workers, referred to as "braceros," to work in agriculture. Originally conceived in response to domestic labor shortages during World War II, the Bracero Program proved highly profitable, and growers successfully lobbied to have the program extended after the war. Because braceros were neither permanent nor American, they were a highly malleable low-wage labor force. Their widespread use throughout the industry depressed wages for domestic workers and made labor organizing exceedingly difficult. Farm-labor advocacy during this period was aimed at government legislation to terminate the program. Ernesto Galarza and the National Farm Workers Union worked closely with a wide variety of urban liberals, churches, and other progressive organizations to repeal Public Law 78, which authorized the program, and in 1964 Congress rescinded authorization to renew the program. The end of the Bracero Program initiated a new era in farm labor mobilization.

César Chávez started the National Farm Workers Association (NFWA), the organizational precursor of the UFW, in Delano, California, in 1962. The organization was originally intended to be a farm-labor-based social services and advocacy group with a broad range of goals for political and economic justice. It was only in 1965, when it joined forces with the AFL-CIO-affiliated Filipino Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee (AWOC) that the organization explicitly became a farm labor union.

In 1965 the AWOC, led by Larry Itliong, demanded Coachella Valley grape growers in Southern California increase their wages. After a strike, growers agreed to the increase. Later in the growing season, AWOC workers demanded similar wage increases from growers in Delano. When growers began using Mexican scab labor, AWOC approached the NFWA for support. Although Chávez was initially reluctant, the organizations agreed to work together to better the lives of farmworkers. By 1970 the UFW was able to sign 150 contracts with growers producing 85 percent of California's grapes. The campaign was successful because of an effective public boycott, and because of links the UFW was able to build to a variety of progressive organizations and elites sympathetic to the farmworker cause.

In 1966 the AWOC and the NFWA officially merged to form the UFW. The new organization affiliated with the AFL-CIO. This relationship proved to be beneficial, as labor groups throughout the country and abroad provided financial support to the UFW. The union also forged links with clerics, church groups, students, civil rights activists, and political figures such as Robert Kennedy. During this period, Chávez began the first of several fasts, inspired by the non-violent tactics of the Indian nationalist leader Mahatma Gandhi. The UFW also participated in marches to the state capital, which were influenced by civil rights marches in the South. The public support received by these widely publicized events helped the UFW to counter the efforts of California agribusiness and their political allies, and they eventually won favorable contracts with grape growers.

United Farm Workers Rally, 2002. The United Farm Workers of America (UFW) works to improve working conditions for farm laborers. AP IMAGES.

The use of Mexican cultural symbols has been central to UFW organization and strategy. It is notable that the grape boycott was started on September 16, 1965, Mexican Independence Day. The UFW emblem, a black eagle on the middle of a red background, is a reference to the eagle found on the Mexican flag. During strikes, marches, and other public events, images of Our Lady of Guadalupe, the patron saint of Mexico, and Emiliano Zapata, a revolutionary war hero who fought for peasant land rights, are prominently displayed. After the death of Chávez in 1993, he too has become a symbol for the movement.

In 1979 the union moved its headquarters from Delano to La Paz, a small town in the Tehachapi Mountains of California. The union suffered internal strife during this period, and several high-ranking officers left the organization. In the decade that followed, the UFW retreated from the fields and began to focus its efforts on direct-mailing techniques to call attention to the plight of farmworkers, especially the negative effects of pesticides. Scholars have pointed to a hostile political environment, and the increasingly effective anti-union strategies of agribusiness to account for the decreased activities of the union during this time period (Mooney and Majka 1995, Majka and Majka 1992).

When César Chávez died in 1993, his son-in-law, Arturo Rodriguez, took over as head of the organization.

With Rodriguez at the helm, the UFW started to organize in the fields again. This effort began in 1996 with a campaign to organize strawberry workers on California's Central Coast, an enterprise that met with mixed results. The UFW has also moved into urban areas, organizing factories and buying low-income housing. The organization has also continued its political advocacy work, leading some critics to charge that it is neglecting its farmworker roots. While the UFW no longer has as many workers under contract as it did in the late 1970s, its work to increase the social and political well-being of farmworkers continues to be substantial. It is a major political advocacy organization, not only for farmworkers but for all Mexican Americans.

SEE ALSO Chávez, César Estrada; Day Laborers, Latino; Farmworkers; Galarza, Ernesto; Immigrant Domestic Workers; Labor Market, Informal; Undocumented Workers.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Daniel, Cleo. 1981. Bitter Harvest: A History of California Farmworkers 1870–1941. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- González, Gilbert G. 1999. Mexican Consuls and Labor Organizing: Imperial Politics in the American Southwest. Austin: University of Texas Press.
- Levy, Jacques. 1975. César Chávez: Autobiography of La Causa. New York: W.W. Norton.
- London, Joan, and Henry Anderson. 1970. So Ye Shall Reap: The Story of César Chávez and the Farm Workers' Movement. New York: Apollo Editions.
- Majka, Theo J., and Linda C. Majka. 1992. "Decline of the Farm Labor Movement in California: Organizational Crisis and Political Change." Critical Sociology 19: 3–36.
- Martin, Philip L. 2003. Promise Unfulfilled: Unions, Immigration, and the Farm Workers. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- Mooney, Patrick H., and Theo J. Majka. 1995. Farmers' and Farm Workers' Movements: Social Protest in American Agriculture. New York: Twayne.

Gilbert Felipe Mireles Jr.

UNITED KINGDOM RACIAL FORMATIONS

The United Kingdom comprises the historic kingdoms of England and Scotland, the principality of Wales, and the province of Northern Ireland. The United Kingdom is also known as Great Britain, or simply as Britain. In 2006, for the first time in British history, the total population of the United Kingdom surpassed 60 million. In terms of contemporary ethnic affiliation, according to the National Statistics Office, Table 1 indicates the various nomenclatures that served to categorize the British population for the 2001 Census. The table shows that

Population of the United Kingdom: By Ethnic Group, April 2001
United Kingdom
	Total population		Non-White
	(Numbers)	(Percentages)	population
			(Percentages)
White	54,153,898	92.1	-
Mixed	677,117	1.2	14.6
Indian	1,053,411	1.8	-
Pakistani	747,285	1.3	16.1
Bangladeshi	283,063	0.5	6.1
Other Asian	247,664	0.4	5.3
All Asian or Asian British	2,331,423	4.0	50.3
Black Caribbean	565,876	1.0	12.2
Black African	485,277	0.8	10.5
Black Other	97,585	0.2	2.1
All Black or Black British	1,148,738	2.0	24.8
Chinese	247,403	0.4	5.3
Other ethnic groups	230,615	0.4	5.0
All minority ethnic population	4,635,296	7.9	100.0
All population	58,789,194	100	-

SOURCE: National Statistics website: www.statistics.gov.uk.
Crown copyright material is reproduced with permission of the Controller of HMSO.

Table 1.

people of color made up 7.9 percent of the population at the beginning of the twenty-first century.

The story of “ethnic diversity” in the United Kingdom is not completely told by census figures, however, as they give a rather static or homogenous view of white ethnicity. Since the earliest times, many peoples with varied histories, beliefs, languages, and cultures have settled in Britain, from the Neolithic, Bronze, and Iron Ages (5000 BC–100 BC), to the Roman Britain era (55 BC–410 AD). In short, Picts, Celts, Romans, Saxons, Angles, Danes, Jutes, Vikings, and Normans are key historical cultural groups that led to the “normative” white ethnic categories now known as the English, Scottish, Welsh, and Irish. Thus, the ethnic heritage of the United Kingdom is one of deep-rooted cultural mixture. In modern times, contemporary white British ethnicities have continued to blend with the arrival of eastern European migrants after the break-up of the Soviet Union. Crucially, from a white ethnic historical perspective alone, racial formation in the United Kingdom is complex, fluid, and deeply mongrelized.

PEOPLES OF AFRICAN DESCENT AND BRITAIN

The British Empire, in both its colonial and postcolonial histories, has arguably the most responsibility for the majority of settlement by people of African heritage in Britain. After all, it was this colonial presence that pushed millions of Africans into what is now referred to as the African Diaspora.

However, there is evidence of an African presence in Britain during the Roman era. Noted British historians, such as James Walvin, have found archeological evidence for a legion of African soldiers. These were not enslaved individuals, and some were high-ranking officers within the Roman army. Coming up the centuries, we find that in 1596 Queen Elizabeth I was “discontented” with there being “too many negars and blackamoores in the realm” (Bygott 1992, p. 18).

Therefore, African descent has longevity on mainland Britain, yet it can be deemed a contentious presence in the minds of certain social forces in the power structure from the sixteenth century onward. But it is in the era of Empire, enslavement, and colonialism that people of African descent arrived from the North American continent after the American War of Independence. These were the African Americans that fought with the British and then emigrated to England and its Caribbean colonies.

Cities like Bristol, Cardiff, and Liverpool were built mostly with the profits of the transatlantic slave trade. Slavery in the British colonies was formally abolished in 1833, but the sea routes of the “Black Atlantic” continued to bring peoples of African heritage to the mother country. The numbers were not large, but there is evidence of black communities in London, Bristol, and Liverpool from the mid-1800s onward. These communities developed in a time of overt racism, for the proliferation of a popular culture that celebrated the British Empire also deemed subjected peoples to be inferior. This is the backdrop to black presence in Britain in the twentieth century.

THE WORLD WARS AND THE POSTWAR ERA

The United Kingdom looked to its colonies for funding, munitions workers, and soldiers during both world wars. West African, African Caribbean, and Indian volunteers worked for the British war effort in various capacities. India alone had almost four million individuals enrolled in all services. During World War II, two and a half million Indians, the largest volunteer army in history, put their lives at risk for the British Empire.

Once World War II ended, there was a need for labor in the United Kingdom to help rebuild the economy. It was mostly African Caribbean workers that were recruited to fill the jobs that most whites would not do. After World War II came the “laissez-faire” era of migration to Britain. Due to the need for labor, racism was not as prevalent in the late 1940s and early 1950s. A booming economy also made it a less discriminatory environment for black workers. However, this was not to last. By the late 1950s, political forces were to emerge to curtail the African Caribbean and Asian migration to Britain. African Caribbeans were often deemed the “reserve army of labor,” and they were thought to be only a transient, not a permanent, working group. However, many thousands of African Caribbean migrants decided to stay and raise families in Britain. By the end of the 1950s, the black presence in Britain was largely defined as a social problem, though the issue of white racism was rarely raised in mainstream circles.

In terms of the contemporary generation of peoples of African descent in the United Kingdom, the majority of social indicators point to there being major disparities between them and their white counterparts in terms of education and employment opportunities. Whites are twice as likely to gain employment, and young black men are more likely to be excluded from schools. Moreover, Home Office figures for 2003 reveal, in terms of the criminal justice system, that young black men in England and Wales represented about 12 percent of the total prison population, while black women represented a staggering 19 percent of the total prison population. Given the fact that peoples of African descent are only 2 percent of the overall British population, there is some way to go to achieve racial equity in prison confinement.

ASIANS IN BRITAIN

The label “Asian,” in relation to the United Kingdom context, most often refers to migrants and their children from the South Asian countries of Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka. However, the term also includes those peoples of Asian descent who previously resided in the African nations of Kenya, Tanzania, and Uganda. Asians came to the United Kingdom mainly in two periods: During the 1950s they came from their original homelands, and in the 1970s they came as refugees from these African nations. Finally, there are approximately 250,000 Chinese in the United Kingdom, though they are not usually considered in the same cultural reference as South Asians.

COLOR-CODED IMMIGRATION LEGISLATION

By 1960, with the threat of immigration legislation becoming more severe—in the form of laws that prevented black migrants from entering Britain—migration from the Caribbean, Pakistan, and India rose sharply. This ushered in the 1962 Commonwealth Immigrants Act. Basically, this immigration legislation meant that British colonial subjects were no longer “free” to enter Britain, that there was now no automatic right of entry. A system of employment

Recorded “Race” Riots in the United Kingdom
1919	Liverpool and Cardiff experience anti-Black riots
1948	Liverpool anti-Black riots
1958	London, Nottting Hill anti-Black riots
1972	Liverpool anti-Black riots
1981	Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and other cities experience urban rioting, mainly among young Blacks and the Police
1985	Liverpool experience sporadic urban rioting in Toxteth/Liverpool 8
2001	Asians revolt in Bradford, Oldham, and Leeds

Figure 1.

vouchers was introduced, whereby migrants were “ranked” by skill and usefulness to the nation. Further immigration legislation in 1965, 1968, 1971, and 1981 effectively determined entry and the right to stay in Britain on racial grounds. Immigration policy was basically “color-coded,” and only migrants from former colonial territories such as Australia, New Zealand, or Gibraltar—or those colonies that happened to be mainly white in ethnic terms—were secure in their rights to entry and stay in Britain. Throughout the 1980s, immigration legislation became more stringent for people of color, but evermore lax for white migrants.

ANTIRACIST AND ANTIDISCRIMINATION LAWS

During this period, antiracist and antidiscrimination laws focusing on “race” also emerged to offset prejudice and racism toward people of color in the United Kingdom. Arguably, the most pertinent of these laws are the 1976 Race Relations Act and the 2000 Race Relations Amendment Act. Basically, under the Race Relations Act, it is unlawful to discriminate against a person on the grounds of “race, colour, nationality (including citizenship), or ethnic or national origin” (Commission for Racial Equality). The key areas in which the legislation applies are the fields of employment, housing, health, education, and other public authorities associated with social welfare provision. Public authorities now have a statutory obligation to eradicate unlawful discriminatory practices. It is difficult to gauge the effectiveness of such laws in British society, and most social indicators in the mid-2000s show a rise, not a decline, in prejudice and racism, according to the Commission for Racial Equality. Moreover, commentators have long argued that these antiracist laws are generally “toothless” in terms of bringing to justice the perpetrators of racialized discriminatory practices. Finally, for the United Kingdom to have the Race Relations Act, which deems racial discrimination illegal, at the same time that there are overtly racist British immigration and Neville Lawrence Speaks at a News Conference, 1997. After the death of teen Stephen Lawrence at the hands of racist youths, there was a public inquiry that led to the Macpherson Report, which concluded that there was institutionalized racism throughout the British police force, and in other public institutions. AP IMAGES.

asylum policies is somewhat contradictory. At the very least, it sends conflicting messages to the British public.

STEPHEN LAWRENCE AND THE MACPHERSON REPORT

The murder of Stephen Lawrence in April 1993 is seen as a watershed in dealing with the problem of race in Britain. Stephen Lawrence was an 18-year-old middle-class black man when he was killed by five white racist youths. He was stabbed to death at a London bus stop, and it was later found that the police failed to adequately deal with the murder scene in a professional manner. For instance, they let Lawrence die in a pool of blood without giving him immediate medical assistance, and they also let vital clues about the identity of his killers slip by. Stephen's parents, Doreen and Neville Lawrence, campaigned vigorously for social justice, and in 1997 there was a public inquiry that led to the Macpherson Report, released in 1999. In the report, Sir William Macpherson acknowledged that there was "institutionalized racism" throughout the British police force and in other public institutions. His recommendations for the prevention of racism led to a call for greater multicultural education. This would include the following: a value for cultural diversity would be put into the National Curriculum; Local Educational Authorities (LEAs) would need to promote antiracist strategies; LEAs would be inspected and monitored to see how antiracist policy was being implemented; both the police and local governments would promote cultural diversity initiatives. These recommendations had widespread publicity, and numerous "targets" for improving cultural diversity were established in these institutions. Only time will tell, however, if significant improvement occurs.

NEW IMMIGRANTS AND ASYLUM SEEKERS, 1990s–2000s

By the 1990s, immigration policy was turned more toward the asylum seeker, particularly those associated with the wars in Somalia and Sierra Leone and the breakup of the old Yugoslavia. Increasingly, the British public was bombarded by the right-wing press with the idea of “asylum seeking spongers” who were out to exploit the welfare state. This created a “moral panic” against asylum seekers not seen since the days of the anti-immigrationist Enoch Powell in the late 1960s. The era of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher (1979–1990) and her successor John Major (1990–1997) created what could be deemed a “xenophobic Britain,” particularly by the 1990s. The 1993 Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act established the right of asylum seekers to appeal a denial of asylum, but it also gave the Home Office stronger powers to deport those seeking asylum. Many thousands have not been allowed into Britain under this law. Under Prime Minister Tony Blair’s tenure (1997–2007), a continued regression regarding asylum seekers occurred. The Home Office revealed in 2003 that the majority of applications for asylum come from Somalia, Iraq, Zimbabwe, Iran, and Afghanistan. In 2005, the Commission for Racial Equality in the United Kingdom stated that applications had reached a thirteen-year low, indicating the increasing difficulty such individuals have in entering Britain. Finally, Home Office figures reveal that around 375,000 people from eastern Europe came to work in the United Kingdom between 2004 and 2007, and the number of foreign workers in the United Kingdom stood at 1.5 million in 2007, or one in every twenty-five workers. This represents the largest group of migrants to the United Kingdom since the 1950s and 1960s.

Overall, in the context of black and Asian minorities in Britain, there is a definite difference in the experiences of these groups in British society. For example, Indians tend to be more affluent than Bangladeshi and Pakistani settlers. Asians also fair better in British schools compared to African Caribbean pupils and, in some instances, white ethnic groups. With these racial nuances becoming more and more clear in social analysis, racial formation in the United Kingdom will continue to offer both complexity and enduring racialized inequalities. Crucially, although people of color represent about 8 percent of the British population, their collective impact has had a tremendous impact on how the United Kingdom, in keeping with its past, continues to develop via both migrant and indigenous peoples. British racism is part of the experience that people of color have contended with and continue to contend with.

SEE ALSO Africa: British Colonies; Colonialism, Internal; Racial Demographics in the Western Hemisphere; Racial Formations; Social Welfare States; White Racial Identity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

British Government Home Office. <http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/>.

- Bygott, David. 1992. Black and British. Oxford, U.K.: Oxford University Press.
- Christian, Mark. 2005. “The Politics of Black Presence in Britain and Black Male Exclusion in the British Education System.” Journal of Black Studies 35 (3): 327–346.
- Commission for Racial Equality (UK). <http://www.cre.gov.uk/>.
- Fryer, Peter. 1984. Staying Power: The History of Black Peoples in Britain. London: Pluto Press.
- Modood, Tariq, et al. 1997. Ethnic Minorities in Britain: Diversity and Disadvantage—Fourth National Survey of Ethnic Minorities. London: Policy Studies Institute.
- National Office for Statistics (UK). <http://www.statistics.gov.uk/focuson/migration/>.

Mark Christian

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

A constitution is a formal statement of the central governing principles of a nation. Generally, a constitution will set forth the structure, powers and duties of the government and state the rights of the government’s citizens. The United States Constitution is considered the first modern constitution produced by the European Enlightenment and a model for virtually all subsequently written constitutions. However, the Constitution was written by men who were deeply influenced by the racial ideology of the day and who were also committed to protecting the significant economic benefits that were provided by the enslavement of African people. As a result, the United States inherited a political system that, due to its compromises over slavery, would allow race to remain a divisive political issue for much of the country’s existence.

THE FRAMERS AND THEIR TIMES

In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, when the American colonies were established and a new nation was beginning to develop, notions of white supremacy and the inherent inferiority of Africans were widely held. The framers of the Constitution were no different in this respect from their fellow colonists. Thomas Jefferson, in his Notes on the State of Virginia (1787), mused that blacks “are inferior to whites in the endowments of both body and mind,” and viewed Africans as less capable than whites in reason, imagination, and emotional capacity. Benjamin Franklin, admitting in Observations Concerning the Increase of Mankind (1755) that he was “partial to the Complexion” of his own race, wondered, “Why increase the Sons of Africa, by Planting them in America, where we have so fair an Opportunity, by excluding all Blacks and Tawneys [by which he meant Indians], of increasing the lovely White and Red [by which he meant only “Saxons” and “English”]?”

The United States Constitution, as originally framed and ratified, made no overt textual reference to race. Several provisions had direct or indirect racial significance, however, insofar as they accommodated the institution of slavery. The Constitutional Convention in 1787 represented an effort to overcome the perceived shortcomings of the earlier Articles of Confederation and form a more viable union. The primary impediment to this process was slavery. In his notes, James Madison described slavery as the principal source of division at the convention, eclipsing even the conflict between large and small states over political representation.

Although the slavery question was not part of the Convention's agenda, it lurked in the background of almost every major issue decided at the Convention and occasionally burst out into the open. The desire on the part of large states to replace the uniform representation of the Confederation Congress with proportional representation could not be resolved without considering the slavery issue. Although the enslaved could not vote, Southerners viewed them as a kind of property that deserved protection in the allocation of government power. Furthermore, the sparsely populated South was reluctant to join a governmental scheme that would leave them as the junior partner to the more populated North. Slavery also figured largely in the debate over Congress's power to tax and regulate commerce. Southern delegates sought to protect slavery by restricting Congress's ability to use its commerce and taxing powers to eliminate slavery or make it less profitable.

The interest in a more viable political and economic union was dispensable to some Southern delegates if it did not accommodate slavery. Opposition to slavery among Northern delegates melted when confronted with the intensity of this agenda. As Thurgood Marshall put it in a 1987 speech: "The record of the framers' debates on the slave question is especially clear: the Southern states acceded to the demands of New England states for giving Congress broad power to regulate commerce, in exchange for the right to continue the slave trade" (1987, p. 2).

ACCOMMODATIONS OF SLAVERY

The new union was predicated on federal acquiescence in slavery and the reservation of self-determination for each state. The document itself was drafted in terms that did not use the words slavery or Negroes or Africans, whether out of embarrassment or political expediency. But the concerns of the slaveholding regions were addressed in various ways. Proportionate representation in the House of Representatives and factoring of direct taxes was based on a population count that recognized a slave as three-fifths of a person. Congressional regulation of American participation in the international slave trade was prohibited until 1808. A fugitive slave clause was adopted as the basis for federal legislation that enabled slave owners to recapture runaway slaves without any legal process.

Other provisions in the Constitution accommodated slavery indirectly. Sections of the Constitution requiring the federal government to put down rebellions or to protect states from "domestic violence" clearly contemplated federal aid in event of a slave rebellion. Article I, Section 9, prohibiting federal taxes on exports, prevented an indirect tax on slavery through the taxation of exports produced by slaves. Article I, Section 10, likewise prevented states from taxing exports or imports. The establishment of an electoral college incorporating the slave-state weighted scheme of proportional representation in Congress meant that Southern states had greater influence on the selection of a president than they would have had with direct popular elections. Finally, the amendment process was cast in the South's favor. The three-fourths majority requirement for amendments made it difficult to amend the constitution without the agreement of slaveholding states, and those provisions of the Constitution permitting the slave trade and requiring direct taxes on slaves at a reduced three-fifths rate could not be amended at all until 1808.

The accommodation of slavery was a key to brokering the union's founding. It was a model of political resolution that continued through the first half of the nineteenth century, but with diminishing returns. Northern concessions to the slavery agenda were inspired in part by Southern acquiescence in the nation's first stage of territorial expansion. The Northwest Ordinance, which created the territories of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Ohio, explicitly prohibited slavery. Southern delegates also fostered the sense that slavery was a dying system.

Far from being terminal, slavery grew during the nation's early years. Congress in 1808 prohibited American participation in the international slave trade. The impact of this action was limited by the federal government's inability to patrol the nation's shores effectively and the continuing demand for slaves. Territorial expansion and fugitive slave controversies ultimately undid original expectations that the union could accommodate slave and nonslave states. The creation of each new territory and admission of each new state generated increasingly acrimonious debate and sectional antagonism. Congress responded to these episodes by recycling the methods of resolution first used by the nation's founders. Among the most notable of these efforts was the Missouri Compromise, which in 1820 established a permanent geographical boundary between slave and nonslave states and territories.

Each new resolution of the slavery issue, however, merely prefaced an escalation of the controversy.

Westward expansion increased each side's fear that the other would gain the upper hand. Adding to the volatile mix was the abolitionist movement, which emerged in the 1830s and antagonized the South to the point that the movement was criminalized.

THE CIVIL WAR

By the 1840s the failure to address slavery at the founding was bearing threatening consequences. In Prigg v. Pennsylvania (1842), the Court invalidated a state enactment that prohibited a slave owner from capturing a fugitive slave without due process of law. It found specifically that the antikidnapping law conflicted with federal law permitting slave owners to enter a free state, capture, and remove runaway slaves. This decision sensitized the North to its complicity in slavery. For the South, the federal government's exclusive interest in fugitive slave matters suggested the potential for slavery to become a matter of national rather than state resolution.

As sectional antagonism and distrust mounted, the political system became increasingly challenged in its ability to manage the slavery issue. The creation of new territories and states by the 1850s had become a particularly high-stakes venture, as evidenced by the chicanery and violence in connection with the admissions of Kansas and Nebraska into the union. With the political process gridlocked on the issue of slavery, it eventually turned to the Supreme Court for a resolution. The Court responded with a decision that proved to be disastrous.

In Dred Scott v. Sandford (1856), the Court found that no person of African descent (slave or otherwise) could be a citizen of the United States or the beneficiary of rights under the federal Constitution. This determination was grounded in the notion that African Americans were inferior, had "no rights that white men are bound to respect," and could be justly and lawfully reduced to slavery. Chief Justice Roger B. Taney maintained further that Congress had no power to regulate slavery in the territories and that the right to own slaves was constitutionally protected.

Northern reaction to the Court's ruling was profoundly negative but generally did not reflect any premise of racial equality. To the contrary, racial segregation and discrimination were common aspects of the Northern cultural landscape. These sentiments were shared by President Lincoln, who observed that "when you cease to be slaves, you are far removed from being placed on an equality with the white man. . . . I cannot alter it if I could. It is a fact" (quoted in Fehrenbacher 1978, Introduction).

Lincoln ignored the Court's decision and midway through the Civil War issued the Emancipation Proclamation. Congress repealed fugitive slave legislation in 1862, and the Thirteenth Amendment (1865) formally prohibited slavery. The scholar Derrick Bell describes Dred Scott as "the most frequently overturned decision in history" (1973, p. 21). This observation reflects the reality that, although repudiating the Dred Scott ruling, the Thirteenth Amendment did not foreclose racist ideology as a driver of policy. Slavery, once outlawed, was superseded by the Black Codes, which established a comprehensive set of race-based burdens on opportunity, residence, travel, assembly, voting, and other activities.

EARLY CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

With the end of the Civil War, the issues dividing North and South returned to the political process. President Andrew Johnson, who took office upon Lincoln's assassination, adopted the position that the Thirteenth Amendment only abolished slavery. Despite Johnson's narrow view of the Thirteenth Amendment, Congress used it as authority to adopt the nation's first civil rights legislation. The Civil Rights Act of 1866 prohibited racial discrimination in civil rights or immunities and guaranteed that all persons, regardless of race, would have the same rights to make and enforce contracts, sue or be sued, inherit, purchase, lease, sell, and hold property, and be subject to like punishment.

President Johnson's veto of the law was overridden but evidenced the legislation's fragile foundation. To secure the enactment's long-term vitality, and consistent with concern that the Thirteenth Amendment was a limited source of authority, the Reconstruction Congress framed the Fourteenth Amendment, proposed in 1866 and ratified in 1868. This provision established that state citizenship derives from federal citizenship, not the reverse as the Dred Scott Court had indicated. It provided that the states could not abridge the privileges and immunities of federal citizenship, deprive a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny a person equal protection of the laws. The amendment also empowered Congress to enforce its terms by appropriate legislation.

Missing from the Fourteenth Amendment, as initially framed, was any protection for the right to vote. Despite initial resistance to including this right in its postwar agenda, Congress eventually saw it as a means of accelerating movement toward reconstruction. The Fifteenth Amendment thus was framed and ratified, in 1870, with the expectation that the right to vote would provide the ultimate protection against political hostility toward former slaves.

The Court's ruling in Strauder v. West Virginia (1879) represented the first use of the Fourteenth Amendment to invalidate a racially discriminatory state law. The Court in this case found the exclusion of Thirteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The Thirteenth Amendment formally prohibited slavery. The Black Codes, however, established a comprehensive set of race-based burdens on opportunity, residence, travel, assembly, voting, and other activities. NATIONAL ARCHIVES & RECORDS ADMINISTRATION.

African Americans from juries unconstitutional. In striking down the enactment, the Court described the Fourteenth Amendment as prohibiting laws that singled out a group for legal discrimination, implied inferiority in civil society, lessened their enjoyment of rights others enjoy, or reduced persons to the condition of a subject race. The equal protection clause, as the Court saw it, ensured that state law would be the same for all persons regardless of their race. But the Court quickly narrowed this expansive view of the Fourteenth Amendment's scope.

Four years later, in the Civil Rights Cases (1883), the Court invalidated the Civil Rights Act of 1875 on grounds it exceeded Congress's regulatory authority under the Fourteenth Amendment. This legislation prohibited discrimination in public accommodations. The Court, however, determined that racial distinctions in this context were customary, and the legal system could not be used to reach "mere discriminations."

The Civil Rights Cases and the Supreme Court's subsequent jurisprudence created a constitutional environment accommodating toward racial discrimination. The key to enacting laws that differentiated on the basis of race was to present them (and have them accepted) as enactments that did not imply inferiority and were consistent with societal norms. Laws designed to establish and maintain separation on the basis of race emerged throughout the South in the late 1880s. These enactments candidly aimed to segregate, protect racial integrity, preserve white supremacy, and minimize cross-racial interaction. Such legislation actually was modeled on enactments in the North that traditionally had mandated racial segregation in education and other contexts. In Plessy v. Ferguson (1896), the Court noted these historical realities in determining that prescriptive racial segregation was constitutional.

The Plessy decision concerned a state law mandating separate but equal accommodations on passenger trains. Although acknowledging that the Fourteenth Amendment established absolute equality of the races under the law, the Court found that the amendment did not eliminate distinctions on the basis of color, enforce social (as opposed to political) equality, or require commingling of the races on terms that were unsatisfactory to either. It viewed official segregation as a reasonable exercise of the state's police power that accounted for the public's comfort, peace, and good order. The Court also determined that segregation did not constitute oppression of a particular group but an accommodation of custom and tradition. Responding to arguments that segregation implied inferiority in civil society, the Court attributed any such understanding to a misplaced interpretation by "the colored race." Justice Marshall Harlan, in a dissenting opinion, criticized the Court for denying segregation's true nature. He maintained that the Constitution forbids any "caste" system and is "color-blind."

A SYSTEM OF RACIAL ADVANTAGE

Prescriptive segregation became a dominant system of racial management that defined opportunity and advantage comprehensively on the basis of group status. For several decades after Plessy, the separate but equal doctrine maintained a formal concern for equality but in reality drove a system of racial advantage (and disadvantage). In Cumming v. Richmond County Board of Education (1899), the Court upheld a school board's closure of an all-black high school on grounds its financial resources were limited. This outcome previewed a legacy of extreme funding disparities in public education. South Carolina in 1915, for instance, spent ten times more money on educating white students than black students. In Gong Lum v. Lee (1927), the Court rejected arguments that a child of Chinese descent could attend a school reserved for whites.

During the 1930s, federal and state courts began to take a harder look at segregation. This development arose out of the litigation strategy of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), which challenged obvious inequalities such as funding or lack of higher education opportunities altogether. In these cases, states operating single-race graduate and professional schools typically were given the choice of establishing parallel institutions for nonwhites or allowing nonwhites to matriculate.

The constitutional foundation for segregation also was weakened by evolving standards of judicial review. The Court in United States v. Carolene Products Co. (1938) found that prejudice against discrete and insular minorities impaired the political system's ability to protect minorities from hostile legislation. It thus signaled a readiness to evaluate laws enacted against groups that were excluded from the political process. In Korematsu v. United States (1944), the Court officially embraced a strict standard of review for laws that differentiated on the basis of race. The Korematsu case concerned the relocation of persons of Japanese descent from the West Coast during World War II. In the face of scant evidence of Japanese-American disloyalty, the Court deferred to alleged national security concerns in upholding the federal government's action. It observed, however, that any legal restriction burdening the civil rights of a particular racial group are "immediately suspect" and must be subjected "to the most rigid scrutiny." The Korematsu case was sharply criticized after the war and led to an official apology and reparations for internment camp survivors and their families in 1988.

In the years between the Korematsu ruling and the invalidation of segregated public education in Brown v. Board of Education (1954), states operating racially identifiable schools poured substantial resources into equalization. Even if equality of funding could be hypothetically demonstrated, however, the Court was willing to identify inequality with respect to intangible factors such as a school's reputation. In Sweatt v. Painter (1950), it determined that segregated legal education would remain unequal even if tangible differences were eliminated. The Court accordingly ordered desegregation of the University of Texas School of Law. It reached a similar conclusion in McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education (1950), when it found degrading restrictions on an African American admitted to an all-white graduate program—such as being forced to observe lectures from the hallway—unacceptable.

BROWN V. BOARD AND ITS AFTERMATH

The constitutional death knell for racially segregated schools was struck in Brown v. Board of Education (1954). Key to the outcome in this case was the Court's sense that it could not correlate modern law or understandings to the period in which the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted or segregation initially was upheld. It noted that public education had become a primary determinant of personal development and success and referenced psychological data showing that segregation had a detrimental effect on African-American children. The Court concluded that racial segregation in public education inherently was unequal.

Because the equal protection guarantee by its terms applied to the states but did not apply to the federal government itself, the Court turned to the Fifth Amendment due process clause as the basis for invalidating segregated schools in the District of Columbia. In Bolling v. Sharpe (1954) the Court determined that school segregation had no reasonable relationship to a legitimate government objective and thus constituted an arbitrary deprivation of liberty under the due process clause.

Having declared segregation unconstitutional, the Court faced the challenge of framing a remedy that would dismantle it. Knowing that resistance was likely, the Court in Brown v. Board of Education II (1955) announced that desegregation should take place "with all deliberate speed." This Court solicited input from the states that would be most affected by this ruling. Reaction to the desegregation mandate, however, generally was characterized as resistance, delay, evasion, and hostility.

Although the Brown decision technically governed segregation in public education, its logic extended to the entire public sector. In short order, segregation was invalidated in a variety of public settings. Even as desegregation became the law of the land, many states maintained their laws prohibiting interracial marriage. In Loving v. Virginia (1967), the Court reviewed an antimiscegenation law that the state justified on the grounds of applying it even-handedly. Despite this purported symmetry, the Court concluded that the law was grounded in racist ideology that conflicted with the central meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The elimination of laws that formally classified on the basis of race did not account for all causes or conditions of racial disadvantage. Against this backdrop, a key issue of the 1970s was whether an equal protection claim could be established on the basis of disparate impact alone. In Washington v. Davis, the Court determined that a plaintiff must provide evidence of discriminatory purpose to establish an equal protection claim. This requirement reflected the Court's concern that a focus on effect alone would put a broad range of legitimate laws at risk.

Discerning a discriminatory purpose was simple when racial segregation was officially prescribed. When not manifest, illegal motive is difficult to prove. Dating back to Yick Wo v. Hopkins (1887), the Court has recognized that laws that are racially neutral on their face also must be assessed with respect to their application. In Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp (1978) the Court identified several other factors that may be relevant to determining discriminatory motive. Potential cues include statistical disparities, patterns, or effects that are inexplicable except on grounds of race, legislative history, and departures from normal procedures.

The Court seldom has found discriminatory purpose on the basis of circumstantial evidence. In McCleskey v. Kemp (1987) the Court upheld the Georgia death penalty despite a showing of significant disparities in its application to whites and nonwhites. This case arose against the backdrop of a dual system of criminal justice in Georgia. As Justice Brennan noted in a dissenting opinion, defense lawyers invariably would factor race into the advice they gave clients with respect to accepting or rejecting a plea agreement. The Court was unmoved by statistical disparities that, in its words, "[appear] to correlate to race." However, in a voting rights case, Shaw v. Reno (1993), the Court found that an oddly configured congressional district could not be understood as anything but racially motivated. The white plaintiffs in Shaw had alleged that the majority black district had been created in violation of the equal protection rights of white voters.

The Court's embrace of a discriminatory motive requirement represented a critical juncture in equal protection doctrine. Discriminatory intent is difficult to prove when not evidenced on the face of the law. The net result is that judicial relief other than for the most egregious forms of racial discrimination is difficult to find, and racial discrimination motivated by unconscious racism cannot be remedied at all.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

The Court's first substantive ruling on affirmative action, Regents of the University of California v. Bakke (1978), concerned a preferential admissions program at the University of California at Davis Medical School that set aside sixteen of one hundred spots for minority applicants. There was no majority opinion in the case and the justices split on whether the admissions plan passed constitutional muster. Justice Powell provided the deciding vote. He found that the program violated Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, but maintained that race could be a limited factor in the admission process.

Powell's opinion proved to be particularly influential on the eventual contours of affirmative action jurisprudence. Key points that he articulated, and that the Court eventually embraced, were that racial preferences should be strictly scrutinized and cannot be justified on the basis of societal (as opposed to particularized and proven) discrimination. Powell introduced the notions that affirmative action must be scrutinized for its potential to stereotype or stigmatize, and quotas are impermissible except in extraordinary circumstances. He also maintained that diversification of a student body represents a compelling interest that may justify the factoring of race as one of several considerations in the admission process.

A decade after Bakke, the Court remained divided on affirmative action and, in particular, the standard of review that should govern its analysis. A strict scrutiny standard measures whether the government regulatory interest is "compelling" and the regulatory means are "narrowly tailored" toward the regulatory objective. An intermediate standard of review assesses whether the regulatory interest is "important" and the regulatory means are "substantially related" to the regulatory objective. In Richmond v. J. A. Croson Co. a majority of the Court for the first time embraced strict scrutiny as the appropriate standard of review. At issue in Croson was a municipal program that set aside 30 percent of construction contracts to minority business enterprises. Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for a plurality of four justices, maintained that "searching inquiry" was necessary to determine the true purpose of a racial classification and "smoke out" illegitimate uses of race. Strict scrutiny further ensured that the regulatory means closely fit the regulatory goal and guarded against motives based on illegitimate prejudice or stereotype.

Even if a government's intentions were good, O'Connor contended, racial classifications carried the risk of stigmatic harm and potential for promoting notions of racial inferiority and racial politics. Although acknowledging the nation's history of discrimination, she saw a greater risk in maintaining the relevance of race and opportunity for competing and immeasurable claims to relief from every disadvantaged group. Justice Antonin Scalia, in a concurring opinion, provided the fifth vote for strict scrutiny. He urged an even more rigorous analytical model that would allow race to be factored only when necessary to eliminate systems of unlawful discrimination.

The strict scrutiny standard announced in Croson applied to affirmative action programs adopted by states. Left open was the possibility that, given Congress's power to enforce the Fourteenth Amendment through appropriate legislation, a different standard might govern federal affirmative action programs. Despite some conflicting cases before and after Croson, the Court in Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Peña (1995) concluded that federal affirmative action programs should be reviewed pursuant to the same strict scrutiny criterion governing state programs. The federal government, like the states, must demonstrate some instance of racial discrimination (for which it is responsible) as a basis for race-conscious remedial action.

The uniform application of strict scrutiny to governmental actions, whether they were intended to improve the condition of historically subjugated groups (and thus incidentally harmed the white majority), or intended to subjugate a particular group, is referred to as "formal equality" or "colorblindness." Following Croson and Adarand, colorblindness has become the centerpiece of the Supreme Court's constitutional jurisprudence of race. Using colorblind analysis, federal courts treat all governmental racial classifications in the same way—courts will evaluate a rule attempting to integrate a housing project in the same manner that they would a rule seeking housing segregation. On the surface, this even-handedness appears fair. However, critics of color-blindness have pointed out that failing to distinguish between oppressive acts and remedial ones when applying strict scrutiny makes it difficult for governments to take affirmative steps to advance racial justice. Consequently, existing racial disparities become locked in as the constitutional status quo. Critics of color-blindness seek to erode this roadblock, as they see it, in constitutional development by focusing judicial attention on result-determined measures of equality and away from process-based ones like formal equality. Other scholars have expressed interest in moving away from the Fourteenth Amendment as a measure of constitutionality and reinvigorating the Thirteenth Amendment's prohibition against the "badges and incidents of slavery" as a way to legitimate a government's efforts at racial remediation.

SEE ALSO Affirmative Action; Brown v. Board of Education; Civil Rights Acts; Color-Blind Racism; Dred Scott v. Sandford; Peonage Cases; Voting Rights Act of 1965.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bell, Derrick. 1973. Race, Racism, and American Law. Boston: Little Brown.

- . 1987. And We Are Not Saved: The Elusive Quest for Racial Justice. New York: Basic Books.
- Branch, Taylor. 1988. Parting the Waters: America in the King Years, 1954–63. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Carter, Stephen L. 1991. Reflections of an Affirmative Action Baby. New York: Basic Books.
- Delgado, Richard. 1996. The Coming Race War?: And Other Apocalyptic Tales of America after Affirmative Action and Welfare. New York: New York University Press.
- Fairman, Charles. 1987. History of the Supreme Court of the United States, Vols. 6–7: Reconstruction and Reunion, 1864–88. New York: Macmillan.
- Farrand, Max, ed. 1966. The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, rev. ed. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Fehrenbacher, Don E. 1978. The Dred Scott Case: Its Significance in American Law and Politics. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Finkelman, Paul. 1981. An Imperfect Union: Slavery, Federalism, and Comity. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Hyman, Harold M. 1973. A More Perfect Union: The Impact of the Civil War and Reconstruction on the Constitution. New York: Knopf.
- , and William M. Wiecek. 1982. Equal Justice under Law: Constitutional Development, 1835–1875. New York: Harper and Row.
- Jordan, Winthrop D. 1968. White over Black: American Attitudes toward the Negro, 1550–1812. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Kaczorowski, Robert J. 2005. The Politics of Judicial Interpretation: The Federal Courts, Department of Justice, and Civil Rights, 1866–1876. New York: Fordham University Press.
- Kluger, Richard. 2004. Simple Justice: The History of Brown v. Board of Education and Black America's Struggle for Equality, rev. ed. New York: Knopf.
- Lawrence III, Charles R., and Mari J. Matsuda. 1997. We Won't Go Back: Making the Case for Affirmative Action. Boston: Houghton Mifflin.
- Lively, Donald E. 1992. The Constitution and Race. New York: Praeger.
- Marshall, Thurgood. 1987. "Reflections on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution." Harvard Law Review 101 (1): 1–5.
- Sowell, Thomas. 1984. Civil Rights: Rhetoric or Reality? New York: Morrow.
- Taylor, Jared. 1992. Paved with Good Intentions: The Failure of Race Relations in Contemporary America. New York: Carroll and Graf.

Donald E. Lively

URBAN LEAGUE

The National Urban League is a Progressive Era organization formed in New York City in 1911. It grew out of the cooperative efforts of black and white social reformers, who founded the organization and its precursors to confront the economic and social problems of African Americans, particularly those in the nation's northern cities. Many observers have noted that the Urban League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) essentially divided up the task of advancing the interests of African Americans, with the NAACP fighting for legal rights and the Urban League focusing on providing blacks with a stake in the American economy. Colloquially, the Urban League was often called the "State Department" of African-American affairs, while the NAACP was known as the "War Department."

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

The Urban League emerged as a response to the lack of economic opportunity for African-American men in U.S. cities. New York City became the focal point for this effort because it had the largest population of African Americans of any city outside of the South. During the first decade of the twentieth century, the city's black population increased by 50 percent, and by 1910 there were about 75,000 blacks living there. This pattern of growth in the black population would be repeated in New York and other major cities as well during the Great Migration of the 1910s and 1920s. By 1930, for example, the black population of Harlem, New York, had grown to 165,000. In Chicago, the black population grew from 44,000 in 1910 to 110,000 in 1920. Cities such as Cleveland and Detroit saw similar growth rates. Most of those moving to these northern cities came in search of economic opportunity and to try to escape the blatant and legal racism of the Jim Crow South. With the growth of the black population in these cities, the Urban League grew to twenty-seven affiliates by 1919, all but one (in St. Louis, Missouri) east of the Mississippi River. While most were in the Northeast industrial corridor, a few appeared in cities in the South, such as Atlanta. In the first decade of the twenty-first century, the Urban League has 115 affiliates in thirty-four states and the District of Columbia, with 50,000 members and an annual budget of $45 million.

One of the major problems this burgeoning black population experienced was a lack of jobs, particularly in the professions and the industrial sector. Black men were often unable to find work because they lacked job training and skills, and because of entrenched discrimination in the labor force. Because they were unable to find work, their wives were often forced into the labor market, for women were able to find employment in domestic service and similar sectors. During this period it is estimated that 59 percent of black women in New York held jobs outside the home (in contrast to white women, whose labor participation rate was 24.6 percent, and foreign-born women at 27.2 percent). Additionally, blacks had the lowest percentage of home ownership of any U.S. city with a black population of 2,500 or more, a death rate one and a half times that of whites, and an illiteracy rate twelve times that of whites (Weiss 1974, p. 12). Meanwhile, the increased mechanization of labor often forced black men out of those jobs they were able to secure, while the labor unions, eager to protect the jobs of white men against both blacks and new waves of foreign immigrants, remained resistant to admitting African-American members.

EARLY HISTORY

The Urban League was formed from the consolidation of a number of organizations, including the Committee for Improving the Industrial Condition of Negroes in New York (CIICN), founded in 1906; the National League for the Protection of Colored Women (NLPCW), formed in 1905; and the Committee on Urban Conditions Among Negroes, formed in 1910. The chief goals of the CIICN, reflecting the ideology of Booker T. Washington, were to provide blacks with industrial and commercial training and then provide them access to jobs. For instance, it persuaded the New York Board of Education to offer evening programs in vocational education in black neighborhoods.

The NLPCW, with chapters in New York, Baltimore, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Washington, D.C., was particularly concerned about the large proportion of black women in domestic service—in New York City, some 90 percent of working black women—who typically labored long hours for low and sometimes uncertain pay. Many of these women had been lured North by unscrupulous labor agents in the South, who preyed on them by offering them hopes of prosperity that almost always went unfulfilled. They arrived in the cities with no place to stay, no money, and no job. Members of the NLPCW met these women at train stations, provided them with lodging, and developed a network of social agencies that provided them with help and information.

Although the Urban League was formally founded in 1911, its members often trace its founding to 1910 and the formation of the Committee on Urban Conditions, the Urban League's most immediate precursor. That year, the leaders of the three leading organizations met with the goal of joining forces and consolidating their efforts. After some initial resistance from the Committee on Urban Conditions, the organizations agreed to join, and on October 16, 1911, the National League on Urban Conditions Among Negroes was born. The organization took its current name, the National Urban League, in 1920. The NLPCW and the Committee on Urban Conditions remained as standing subagencies of the Urban League.

The principal goals of the Urban League were to provide employment opportunities in the private sector, break down the color line in organized labor, and promote vocational and occupational education. For the first two decades of its existence, its focus remained primarily on the private sector. The organization struggled financially, and not all of its programs, such as scholarships for undergraduates to study social work at black colleges, were entirely successful. The league did, however, succeed in persuading colleges and universities to include economics, sociology, and urban studies in their curricula, and it was able to place a large number of black social workers in social service agencies. Additionally, the league promoted such welfare services as charitable agencies, settlement houses, and immigrant-aid societies. It also promoted such values as proper dress, sanitation, personal hygiene, health, punctuality, and homemaking skills, and it sponsored summer camps, daycare centers, kindergartens, community centers, and the like.

Reliable data about the number of job placements attributable to the Urban League are hard to find. Some African-American men obtained industrial jobs because of labor shortages during World War I, while others obtained jobs without the help of the Urban League. Nevertheless, the organization did succeed in finding decent jobs for thousands of workers, particularly during the boom years of the 1920s. It was also successful in opening up industrial plants that had previously been closed to African Americans. The organization claimed, for example, to have placed some 15,000 workers in Chicago in 1920. In connection with these efforts, the league stressed the scientific investigation of the conditions of urban blacks, much of it reported in its journal, Opportunity: Journal of Negro Life, which was published from 1923 until 1949. This focus on investigation has continued in the league's current flagship publication, Opportunity Journal; an annual report titled The State of Black America, published since 1976; and the organization's twenty-year retrospective volumes, the last published in 1990.

NEW GOALS

With the coming of the Great Depression in the 1930s, the Urban League turned more of its attention to the public sector. It sought to have blacks included in the federal recovery and relief programs of the New Deal. By the 1940s and 1950s it was successfully attacking segregation in the defense industries and the military, though its primary mission remained education rather than civil rights. The civil rights movement of the 1950s and 1960s, however, led to calls for a change in the Urban League's mission. Under the leadership of Whitney Young, the league shifted its focus to civil rights and played an integral part in organizing the 1963 March on Washington and the 1968 Poor People's Campaign. The league called for a domestic "Marshall Plan" (the plan for financing the reconstruction of Europe after World War II), and it sponsored voter registration drives, help for black veterans, open-housing campaigns, adoption programs for hard-to-place black children, and similar projects. Young also initiated such programs as the Street Academy, which helped prepare high school dropouts for college, and New Thrust, a program that developed the leadership skills of urban blacks with a view to identifying and solving urban social problems.

Urban League

This emphasis on a more activist approach continued into the 1970s, under the leadership of Vernon Jordan, and beyond. In the 1970s the federal government contracted with the Urban League to provide social welfare programs and government employment. The organization continues to work closely with Congress and other federal agencies to address such social problems as poverty, failing schools, teenage pregnancy, crime, gun violence, and households headed by single women. Affiliated organizations such as the Urban League of Young Professionals of Pittsburgh tap the leadership skills of African-American professionals to solve urban problems.

SEE ALSO Civil Rights Movement; Labor Market; NAACP; Poverty; Social Problems; Washington, Booker T.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hamilton, Charles V. 1976. The Struggle for Political Equality. New York: National Urban League.
- Moore, Jesse Thomas, Jr. 1981. A Search for Equality: The National Urban League, 1910–1961. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press.
- Parris, Guichard, and Lester Brooks. 1971. Blacks in the City: A History of the National Urban League. Boston: Little Brown.
- Weiss, Nancy J. 1974. The National Urban League: 1910–1960. New York: Oxford University Press.

Michael J. O'Neal

V

---

VESEY, DENMARK

c. 1767–1822

The man later known as Denmark Vesey was born around 1767, probably on the Caribbean island of St. Thomas. Captain Joseph Vesey, a Carolina-based slaver, purchased the boy in September or October of 1781 as part of a cargo of 390 bondpeople. During the passage to the French colony of Saint Domingue (present-day Haiti), Vesey noticed the child's "beauty, alertness and intelligence" and employed him as a cabin boy. But when his ship, the Prospect, reached Cap François, the captain decided he "had no use for the boy" and turned him over to his colonial agents. Either traumatized by his new life in Saint Domingue or feigning illness, the child began to display "epileptic fits." As a result, Vesey was forced to take the child back when he returned to Cap François on April 23, 1782. The fits promptly ceased, and Vesey decided to keep him as a servant.

Charleston authorities later described the child as a person of "superior power of mind & the more dangerous for it." Vesey, however, saw only the value of a tall, muscular boy already conversant in two languages. He gave the boy a new name, Telemaque, who in Homer's tale was the wandering son of Odysseus; over time, Carolina bondmen either punned or corrupted the name into "Denmak," which then became "Denmark."

In the spring of 1783, following the British evacuation of South Carolina, Vesey settled into Charleston as a ship chandler. At some point during this period, Denmark married his first wife, an enslaved woman named Beck. She may have been Denmark's senior, because she already had a daughter, Sarah, from a previous relationship. Beck had several masters over the course of her life, but she remained married to Denmark long enough to give birth to at least three of his children. Toward the end of his life, Vesey married again. His last wife, Susan, was born a slave around 1795 but was free by 1821, when tax collectors listed her under the name of "Susan Vesey" and characterized her as a "free negro." She was the only woman to carry his surname. Some historians have speculated that Vesey practiced polygamy, although no evidence exists to support the theory. In a time of high female mortality, especially among urban bondwomen, Vesey could easily have united with the several women his friend Monday Gell later spoke of and yet remain monogamous.

On September 30, 1799, Denmark happened upon a handbill announcing the "East-Bay Lottery." He bought a ticket and won the top prize of $1,500, a princely sum at the time, particularly for a slave. Joseph Vesey and his wife, Mary Clodner, agreed to sell him his freedom for $600, and on December 31, 1799, the thirty-three year old Denmark was at last free.

Chained to the South by family ties, Denmark remained in the city and apprenticed himself to a carpenter, an easy trade to learn and a lucrative business in Charleston, which was expanding up the peninsula. At the same time, he adopted "Vesey" as a surname, probably as a linguistic tie to an established businessman. He threw his enormous energies into his business, and, according to one former slave, labored "every day at de trade of carpenter" and "soon became much [re]spected" and "esteem[ed] by de white folks." But because of competition from white carpenters, free Mulattoes (whose fathers provided business contacts) and enslaved craftsmen (who lived with their masters and paid no rent), Vesey barely maintained a modest income. Despite published claims made in 1822 that he died a rich man worth nearly $8,000, there is no evidence that Vesey ever owned a single piece of property. His rented home, at 20 Bull Street, was owned by Benjamin Ireland, a white carpenter.

Although Vesey was briefly a practicing Presbyterian, around 1818 he joined the city's new African Methodist Episcopal congregation. Formed when 4,376 slaves and free blacks resigned from the Methodist fold because church authorities voted to construct a hearse house above a black cemetery, the African Church, as both whites and blacks called it, quickly became the center of Charleston's enslaved community. Sandy Vesey also joined, as did four of Vesey's closest friends—Peter Poyas, a literate ship carpenter; Monday Gell, an African-born Ibo who labored as a harness maker; Rolla Bennett, the manservant of Governor Thomas Bennett; and Jack Pritchard, a fellow carpenter. The temporary closure of the church by city authorities in June 1818, and the arrest of 140 congregants, one of them presumably Vesey himself, only reinforced the determination of black Carolinians to maintain a place of independent worship. In 1820 several "Negroes was taken up" for holding a late-night service at the church, and city authorities warned Reverend Morris Brown that they would not tolerate class leaders conducting instructional "schools for slaves," as "the education of such persons was forbidden by law." The "African Church was the people," Monday Gell replied. He and Pritchard had considered insurrection in 1818, "and now they had begun again to try it."

At the age of fifty-one, Vesey briefly thought about emigrating to the English colony of Sierra Leone. But as Beck's children remained slaves, Vesey resolved instead to orchestrate a rebellion, followed by a mass exodus from Charleston to Haiti, where President Jean-Pierre Boyer had recently encouraged black Americans to bring their skills and capital to his beleaguered republic. Vesey did not intend to tarry in Charleston long enough for white military power to present an effective counterassault. "As soon as they could get the money from the Banks, and the goods from the stores," Rolla insisted, "they should hoist sail" for Saint Domingue and live as free men. Vesey planned the escape for nearly four years. His chief lieutenants included Poyas, Gell, and Rolla Bennett. Vesey's inner circle also included "Gullah" Jack Pritchard, an East African priest purchased in Zinguebar in 1806. Although there are no reliable figures for the number of recruits, Charleston alone was home to 12,652 slaves in 1820, along with 10,653 whites and 1,475 free blacks (Wade 1964). Pritchard, probably with some exaggeration, boasted that he had 6,600 recruits on the plantations across the Cooper and Ashley Rivers. The plan called for Vesey's followers to rise at midnight on Sunday, July 14 (Bastille Day), slay their masters, and sail for Haiti and freedom. As one southern editor later conceded: "The plot seems to have been well devised, and its operation was extensive."

The plot unraveled in June 1822 when two slaves, including Rolla's friend George Wilson revealed the plan to their owners. Mayor James Hamilton called up the city militia and convened a special court to try the captured insurgents. Vesey was captured at the home of Beck, his first wife, on June 21, and he was hanged on the morning of Tuesday, July 2, together with Rolla, Poyas, and three other rebels. In all, thirty-five slaves were executed. Forty-two others, including Sandy Vesey, were sold outside the United States; some, if not all, became slaves in Spanish Cuba. Denmark Vesey's son Robert lived to rebuild the African Church in the fall of 1865.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Egerton, Douglas R. 1999. He Shall Go Out Free: The Lives of Denmark Vesey. Madison, WI: Madison House Publishers.
- Freehling, William W. 1994. The Reintegration of American History: Slavery and the Civil War. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Lofton, John. 1964. Insurrection in South Carolina: The Turbulent World of Denmark Vesey. Yellow Springs, OH: Antioch Press.
- Paquette, Robert L. 2002. "Jacobins of the Lowcountry: The Vesey Plot on Trial." William and Mary Quarterly 59 (1): 185–192.
- Wade, Richard C. 1964. Slavery in the Cities: The South 1820–1860. New York: Oxford University Press.

Douglas R. Egerton

VIOLENCE AGAINST INDIGENOUS PEOPLE, LATIN AMERICA

"You nobles are greatly burdened; the story of your hardships is no joke. It is a tale of partings, of endless deprivations, and of people being left by the roadside because there they had been knifed—as it was at Balcab, where you runners were cut up while on foot on the road, and as it was in the scrub forest, where the runners went along afraid of being raped, of being forced to assume a shameful burden by the foreigners, the abuse of all the foreign dogs together empowered by the possession of steel to lift skirts."

"You! Man! Your clothes to the dogs!"

The cab residents were lifted up and hung like pigs; they suspended them like swine.

"Your clothes, man!"

They had also abused the women in this way: “Woman! Your clothes! Off with your petticoat!” This was the nature of the burden.

What has been told here happened not once, nor twice, but many times; on countless occasions these things were done to our lords here on the road to Calkini” (Restall 1998, p. 91–92).

This account of the experiences endured by the mid-sixteenth-century Yucatec Maya nobility, given in 1541 by the fifteen-year-old Alonso Canche, does not test modern expectations of what is meant by the term violence, which is generally conceived of in terms of physical acts. Yet a charting of such physical violence over the past 500 years would, for one thing, take volumes, and, as Michael Taussig provides a reminder, it would also be insufficient, for words on a page can never transmit adequately the experiences engendered by violence. What is more, any attempt to make the violence in Canche’s account more familiar by noting the parallels between the rapes of men and women in his times and those that occur in modern cultures would fail to capture the racial character of the centuries of violence against indigenous people.

There is, however, a second level of the meaning of violence. That is, one can consider the types of conceptual or ideological violence that make physical violence acceptable or even advocated in the first place. Here, one confronts the way in which the violator justifies and legitimizes his act, the process by which violence becomes possible to begin with. This rationale will not, however, be found in the writings of indigenous authors, for such records were not widely circulated and so did not have an impact on the overall sensitivity toward indigenous people. One must therefore turn to those records that did get widely read and replicated by secondary authors, and thus contributed to an overall “outside” perspective of indigenous people. From this perspective, the main contributions to the racialization of indigenous people since the time of European contact can be recognized. Specifically, one can then confront an external ideological definition of racial difference coupled with the potential for substantial external economic gain that has enabled physical violence against indigenous people.

Such interplay is illustrated by Hernán Cortés’s sixteenth-century letters to Charles V, the Holy Roman Emperor. Concerning his activities in the Aztec capital, Tenochtitlan, Cortés gave a conflicted description of local folk: “I will say only that these people live almost like those in Spain, and in as much harmony and order as there, and considering that they are barbarous and so far from the knowledge of God and cut off from all civilized nations, it is truly remarkable to see what they have achieved in all things” (Pagden 1986, p. 108). Much as, his companion in arms, Bernal Díaz del Castillo marveled at his first view of Tenochtitlan, comparing it to a dream, Cortés appreciated much of what he encountered. Yet his sixteenth-century Spanish sensibilities, anchored to Christian and Aristotelian ideologies, forced him to downplay an observationally derived appreciation in favor of ideological deprecation.

Indeed, the extent to which Christian and Greek philosophies justified racial violence (and from which Cortés consciously and subconsciously drew) took center stage in the Great Debate at Valladolid between Juan Ginés de Sepúlveda and Bartolomé de las Casas in 1551. Sepúlveda argued that indigenous people were to be considered natural slaves who would benefit from conquest, irrespective of whether or not they were first evangelized. Las Casas, on the other hand, championed the idea that the role of the Spaniards was to convert indigenous people to Christianity—that political or economic interests should take a back seat to spiritual demands. The fact that Las Casas enjoyed favorable royal appointments after the debate, along with the decree of Charles V’s successor regarding forced labor in the Peruvian silver mines, might be interpreted retrospectively as signs that the concerns of indigenous people had been vindicated. A written diplomacy that took shape within the post-debate period, evidenced in Philip II’s decree concerning the racialized maintenance of the Potosi mines’ economic salience, also supports this view:

“Given that the mines of Peru cannot be exploited using Spanish laborers, since those who are there will not work in them, and as it is said that slaves cannot withstand the work, owing to the nature and coldness of the land, it appears necessary to employ Indians. Though these are not to be forced or compelled, as has already been ordered, they must be attracted with all just and reasonable means, so that there will be the required number of laborers for the mines. To this end, it seems that great care must be given to the settlement of large numbers of Indians in nearby towns and estates, so that they might more easily apply themselves to the work involved” (Cole 1985, p. 5).

Whereas there is a hint here as to the unenviable position of being subject to “settlement,” it would appear that indigenous Andeans were not only to be respected, but that they also might stand to gain financially from the mining operations.

This statement, however, serves to demonstrate the complexity of the continued racialization process of indigenous people, which cannot entirely be traced back to a hierarchically driven ideology. On the contrary, ideology and local sensibilities were amalgamated into local variants that produced strikingly similar experiences for the indigenous people subject to them, regardless of the degree to which they saw themselves as diverse in culture or identity. That such an amalgam existed in the Peruvian mines during the late sixteenth and entire seventeenth centuries is readily attested, for example, by eyewitness accounts. At the close of the sixteenth century, Fray José de Acosta wrote:

“They labor in these mines in perpetual darkness, not knowing day from night. And since the sun never penetrates to these places, they are not only always dark but very cold, and the air is very thick and alien to the nature of men; so that those who enter for the first time get as sick as at sea—which happened to me in one of these mines, where I felt a pain at the heart and a churning in the stomach. The [laborers] always carry candles to light their way, and they divide their labor in such a way that some work by day and rest by night, and others work by night and rest by day. The ore is generally hard as flint, and they break it up with iron bars. They carry the ore on their backs up ladders made of . . . twisted rawhide joined by pieces of wood . . . so that one man may climb up and another down at the same time. These ladders are twenty meters long, and at the top and bottom of each is a wooden platform where the men may rest. . . Each man usually carries on his back a load of twenty-five kilograms of silver ore tied in a cloth, knapsack fashion; thus they ascend, three at a time. The one who goes first carries a candle tied to his thumb, . . . thus, holding on with both hands, they climb that great distance, often more than 300 meters—a fearful thing, the mere thought of which inspires dread” (Cole 1985, p. 24).

The climbing of fifteen sequential six-story buildings with a fifty-pound load on one’s back in the conditions described by Acosta may in itself constitute a type of violence, but the treatment of indigenous Andeans beyond the job description resolves any ambiguity. Engaging in a continued textual diplomacy, Viceroy Francisco de Toledo dictated at the time that mine laborers should be restricted to making two trips per day, but by the 1580s they were making more than ten times that. Moreover, indigenous laborers were “whipped, beaten, [and] struck with rocks” on their way to completing their individual daily quotas of nineteen loads, “despite the fact that quotas themselves had been prohibited by the viceroy” (Cole 1985, p. 24).

So the words spoken in Europe, even the decrees sent from Spain, would not overturn or unmake the stereotyping of racialized indigenous people or the persistent racialization (and its effects) in the Western Hemisphere en route to economic gain. The triumvirate of physical violence, racialized ideology, and economic gain worked together to engender violence, even after such governmental mandates as the post-debate upholding of the New Laws of 1542. Las Casas advocated for the new laws, which notably prohibited enslavement and mistreatment of indigenous peoples. These laws spurred a revolt that led to most of them being revoked on October 20, 1545.

The violence extended to indigenous families as well as entire communities. Jeffrey Cole gives an account of the degree of exploitation suffered by the mine laborers’ families: “If a [laborer] died in the hospital . . . his wife and children were forced to hire a . . . substitute to serve in his stead. Hospitalized [laborers] and their families were further preyed upon by priests, who charged exorbitant sums for religious services and demanded devastating compensation for funerals” (Cole 1985, p. 31). The number of young men leaving their hometowns in order to avoid conscriptions further disturbed community life. The fact that indigenous voices were not heard in the “Great Debate,” and that they played no positive role in shaping local sensibilities in Potosi regardless of purported royal sentiment, thus facilitated their continued racialization.

The discord between official declaration and local adaptation played out along racial lines as clearly in nineteenth- and early twentieth-century Colombia as in seventeenth- and eighteenth-century Peru. For example, Michael Taussig notes that, in reference to the extraction of rubber, authorities balked at the local use of the word conquistar to describe the interactions between representatives of the British Rubber Company and indigenous Amazonians. Joaquin Rocha, though, sent a ready response in his report of 1905:

“When a tribe of savages is encountered which nobody knew about or which has never had contact with whites, then it is said that they have been conquered by the person who manages to trade with them so that they will work rubber, will plant food, and will build a house for him to live in their midst. Thus entering into the great and common labor of the whites, these Indians are brought into civilization” (Taussig 1987, pp. 24–25).

With the exception of substituting “whites” for “Spaniards,” the reader will be challenged to find any way in which this statement differs from the underlying assumptions, motivations, expectations, or racializations of Europeans seeking financial gain from the Western Hemisphere during prior centuries. Moreover, the masking of indigenous experiences with euphemisms belies the eyewitness account provided by Roger Casement in 1912:

“The number of Indians killed either by starvation—often purposely brought about by the destruction of crops over whole districts or inflicted as a form of death penalty on individuals who failed to bring in their quota of rubber—or by deliberate murder by bullet, fire, beheading, or flogging to death, and accompanied by a variety of atrocious tortures, during the course of these 12 years, in order to extort these 4,000 tons of rubber cannot have been less than 30,000, and possibly came to many more” (Taussig 1987, p. 20).

Again, racialization is a tool of foreign economic venture, and the same rhetoric is marshaled, leading to the same methods of physical violence. Indeed, there may be few master narratives still recognized by the postmodern academy, but one would be hard pressed to find anything so coherent or enduring as the story of violence against indigenous people in the Western Hemisphere.

Yet caution is needed here so as not to take this as a demonstration that to be indigenous is to be violated, or to be violated uniformly. Rather, it shows that among the countless indigenous experiences, those that have included encounters with colonialism, statehood, or globalization have been accompanied by a process of racialization that incorporates a propensity for violence.

On the other hand, to be indigenous is, in many ways, to recognize the groundedness of meaning in a community’s locale. The very approach of European and European-derivative cultures to indigeneity, however, has explicitly violated this groundedness. The setting has not mattered, nor has the difference in goods, whether it be fabled gold, silver ore, or rubber trees. The racialization process has resulted in indigenous experiences that are independent of location, which is perhaps the greatest violence committed against them. The very fact that Aymara speakers from the Andes, Maya speakers of the Yucatan Peninsula, and Chumash speakers of the California Pacific Coast were all referred to in official documents simply as indios lays bare the role of indigenous peoples in European economic and religious ventures.

Taking violence now can thus be seen as a forced infringement on an individual’s or a community’s sovereignty. In this case, it becomes apparent that the racialization of indigenous peoples, through economic pressure and ideological irresponsibility, has been facilitated by a violence of representation. Namely, indigenous people have had no voice in representations of themselves, either as individuals or as a culture. These representations have consistently come from others, either in “travelers’ tales,” in records of the Inquisition that found their way into general histories, or in the tales of anthropologists from the nineteenth-century through the present day. The percentage of media representations of indigenous culture by indigenous people most likely does not register as a whole number. Are these not forced impositions on indigenous communities? And have they not facilitated the construction of racial images?

The issue of violence, thus defined is among the most important confronting indigenous attempts at cultural revival, of sovereignty and of the redress of human rights violations. Numerous coalitions have attempted to overcome this predicament for centuries (several by taking up arms), but the latest such attempt, that of the Ejército Zapatista de Liberación Nacional (EZLN, or Zapatista Army of National Liberation) in Chiapas, Mexico, carries with it an opportunity unavailable to previous groups relative to the factors discussed here. Namely, the indigenous Maya of the EZLN have used radio and the Internet to create their own voices and create representations of themselves. The degree to which this effort is successful may well impact the potential for future indigenous attempts at cultural revival, political representation, and civil rights advances.

SEE ALSO Blackness in Latin America; Indigenismo in Mexico; Indigenous; Latin American Racial Transformations; Mexicans; Occupational Segregation; Zapatista Rebellion.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cole, Jeffrey A. 1985. The Potosí Mita 1573–1700: Compulsory Indian Labor in the Andes. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- Pagden, Anthony. 1986. Hernán Cortés: Letters from Mexico. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Restall, Matthew. 1998. Maya Conquistador. Boston: Beacon Press.
- Taussig, Michael. 1987. Shamanism, Colonialism, and the Wild Man: A Study in Terror and Healing. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

Gerardo V. Aldana

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN AND GIRLS

Violence against women and girls has come to be recognized as a major social problem with serious consequences for individuals, their families, communities, and society as a whole. Commonly understood to include sexual assaults, stalking, sexual harassment, and abuse by intimate partners and household members, the forms of violence that women and girls experience have particular dynamics that make the impact particularly profound.

According to the National Institute for Justice, 25 percent of women in the United States will experience abuse by their husbands or live-in intimate partners in their lifetimes, at a rate of approximately 1.5 million per year (Tjaden and Theonnes 2000). In terms of sexual assault, one in six women are raped each year, more than 86,000 children are molested, and anywhere from 30 to 70 percent of women experience sexual harassment that includes physical threats of abuse (Tjaden and Theonnes 1998). Studies of women in dating relationships, including same-sex relationships, reveal similar rates of violence, both physical and sexual in nature. Even in situations where the intimate relationship has ended, the abuse often continues, as in the case of women who are stalked by people they had a previous relationship with (Broaddus and Merrill 1998, Butler 1999).

When talking about these forms of abuse against women and girls, researchers and advocates are referring to situations that are far more menacing than simple arguments or fights between partners or annoying unwanted physical or sexual encounters. The kind of violence that is captured in the aforementioned statistics is profoundly serious, for the problems are not merely a series of isolated incidents, but rather a pattern of aggressive behavior that tends to escalate over time, leaving women in serious peril. For example, nearly one-third of all women murdered in the United States are murdered by current or former intimate partners; violence is the leading cause of death for women in some age groups; sexual assault is a major reason that adult women give for attempting suicide; child sexual abuse is a strong precursor to later problems with truancy, drugs; and alcohol; and stalking and sexual harassment cost women millions of dollars each year as they attempt to flee dangerous living and work situations (Cecil and Matson 2001, Baynard et al. 2002, Violence Policy Center 2004).

It is also important to recognize that the types of violence discussed here are decidedly gendered; the victims are overwhelmingly women and those who inflict intimate partner violence, those who rape, and those who are engaged in extreme forms of stalking are typically men (Bachman 1994). There are some exceptions to this, however, including same-sex violence and the abuse of frail elderly men by women who are their caretakers. The overall pattern, however, is one that firmly establishes women and girls as the primary targets of these forms of violence.

Emotional and psychological abuse reinforces physical and sexual assaults. Women who are physically assaulted are often made to feel like the abuse is their fault; children who are molested are isolated from other people as a way to increase the terror they feel; rape victims suffer greatly from the insults and the shame that accompany the physical aspect of the assault; and the general denial and minimization that enables abuse to continue is particularly painful for those who experience it over time.

Paradoxically, despite these serious consequences, violence against women is still casually accepted in some social spheres. The physical abuse of women that is normalized in mainstream movies, images of rape, and other forms of degradation of women can easily be found in popular music, and jokes about wife abuse and incest can be overheard in everyday conversations. This social acceptance of violence against women and girls is linked to their relative diminished social status (in terms of economic and cultural power). This explains why institutions have been slow to respond to these problems, why communities have not held accountable those who use violence, and why so many of the women and girls who experience violence have been forced or coerced into silence and submission.

Since the 1980s, however, great strides have been made to give voice to these problems. Advocates and activists have challenged the underlying gender dynamics that give rise to violence against women and girls, and they have attempted to change those institutions that are obligated to protect vulnerable members of society. In the early twenty-first century, there are shelters for battered women, rape crisis centers, prevention programs for children, and a range of other services designed to provide services and support to victims. Legal and legislative changes have heightened sanctions for those who use violence, and a growing body of research has established prevalence rates, the consequences of abuse, and the best practices to respond to these problems. Elected officials, well-known celebrities, and everyday citizens take a stand against violence against women, and both public and private donors support the work. Due in great part to grassroots feminist activism, the problem of violence against women is understood differently than it once was, and it is safe to say that hundreds of thousands of women and girls are safer in the early 2000s than they were before the advent of the social movement that responded to the problems of violence against women.

Race and racism have also figured into the understanding of and responses to the problem of violence against women in important ways. The rate of violence against women and girls reported in most communities of color is higher than the national average (Buchanan and Ormerod 1992, McNutt et al. 1999). A closer analysis of this statistic reveals that this difference is linked to variables such as income, age, employment status, the presence of children in the household, and social factors such as the presence of weapons, the use of drugs and alcohol, the availability of services, and the effectiveness of prevention messages (Honeycutt, Marshall, and Weston 2001; Taylor 2002). That is, the rates of violence against women of color might actually not differ that much from those of white women if other variables are controlled.

Furthermore, when violence occurs, institutions do not respond to needs of women of color as readily, resources are not sufficiently allocated to communities of color to ensure women's safety, and law enforcement agencies have not necessarily proven themselves to be agents of assistance in disadvantaged neighborhoods. Without opportunities for safe housing, good health care, or employment, women of color who experience violence are often left with few options but to remain in dangerous relationships and situations (Donovan and Williams 2002).

Many scholars and activists point to these and other social factors to explain why women of color are at particular risk, and they have challenged the antiviolence movement and related institutions dedicated to justice and safety to expand their attention to look at violence against women of color. In so doing, women of color, with support from male allies, have made significant contributions to the work to end violence against all women by challenging racial and patriarchal privilege and promoting the kind of broad-based social changes that ending violence against all women and children will require.

SEE ALSO Feminism and Race; Pornography; Rape; Social Problems.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bachman, Ronet. 1994. Violence against Women: A National Crime Victimization Survey Report. Washington, DC: U.S. Department of Justice, Bureau of Justice Statistics.
- Banyard, Victoria, Linda M. Williams, Jane A. Siegal and Carolyn M. West. 2002. "Childhood Sexual Abuse in the Lives of Black Women: Risks and Resilience in a Longitudinal Study." Women & Therapy 25 (3/4): 45–58.
- Broadus, Toni, and Gregory Merrill. 1998. Annual Report on Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Transgender Domestic Violence. San Francisco: National Coalition on Anti-Violence Programs.
- Buchanan, Nicole T., and Alayne J. Ormerod. 2002. "Racialized Sexual Harassment in the Lives of African American Women." Women & Therapy 25 (3/4): 105–121.
- Butler, Lola. 1999. "African American Lesbians Experiencing Partner Violence." In A Professional's Guide to Understanding Gay and Lesbian Domestic Violence: Understanding Practice Interventions, edited by Joan C. McClennen and John Gunther, 50–57. Lewiston, NY: Edwin Mellen Press.
- Cecil, Heather, and Steven C. Matson. 2001. "Psychological Functioning and Family Discord among African American Adolescent Females with and without a History of Childhood Sexual Abuse." Child Abuse and Neglect 25: 973–988.
- Donovan, Roxanne, and Michelle Williams. 2002. "Living at the Intersection: The Effects of Racism and Sexism on Black Rape Survivors." Women & Therapy 25 (3/4): 95–105.
- Honeycutt, Todd C., Linda L. Marshall, and Rebecca Weston. 2001. "Towards Ethnically Specific Models of Employment, Public Assistance, and Victimization." Violence Against Women 7 (2): 126–140.
- McNutt, Louise-Anne, Michelle van Ryn, Carla Clark, and Idelle Fraiser. 1999. "Partner Violence and Medical Encounters: African-American Women's Perspectives." American Journal of Preventive Medicine 19 (4): 264–269.
- Richie, Beth. 1996. Compelled to Crime: The Gender Entrapment of Black Battered Women. New York: Routledge.
- Taylor, Janette Y. 2002. "The Straw that Broke the Camel's Back: African American Women's Strategies for Disengaging from Abusive Relationships." Women & Therapy (3/4): 79–94.
- Tjaden, Patricia, and Nancy Theonnes. 1998. "Stalking in America: Findings from the National Violence Against Women's Survey, Research in Brief." (NCJ 169592).

Washington DC: U.S. Department of Justice, National Institute of Justice.

———. 2000. Extent, Nature, and Consequences of Intimate Partner Violence: Findings for the National Violence against Women Survey. (NCJ 181867). Washington, DC: U.S. Government Printing Office.

Violence Policy Center. 2004. When Men Murdered Women: An Analysis of 2002 Homicide Data: Females Murdered by Males in Single Victim/Single Offender Incidents. Washington, DC: Violence Policy Center. Available from <http://www.vpc.org/studies/dv4cont.htm>.

Beth E. Richie

VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 1965

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 is generally considered to be one of the most significant pieces of federal civil rights legislation ever passed by the United States Congress. The Act has helped African Americans to exercise their right to vote and engage in political participation, overcoming almost a century of poll taxes, literacy tests, intimidation, and violence that served as obstacles to the Fifteenth Amendment's guarantee of a right to vote throughout the South. Though still contested on various fronts, the legislation has changed the American political landscape in significant ways, affecting small town and city governments as well as Congress.

Many historians and political scientists view the vote as the most important form of conventional political participation, and American civil rights leaders thought that the franchise was the most accessible and effective means of advancing the struggle for racial equality. According to James Button, in Blacks and Social Change: Impact of the Civil Rights Movement in Southern Communities (1989), "the assumption was that voting rights would pave the way for all other changes, since the franchise is the normal method by which demands of citizens are fulfilled" (p. 5). Many expected that through electing blacks and moderate whites to office, progress in the political realm would also enable African Americans to make important gains in areas such as education, employment, housing, and public services. Moreover, it was believed that the vote would have both a symbolic and practical effect on democratic practices, because it would provide a sense of viable citizenship and improved self-esteem. Finally, a reliance on federal rights and intervention would not only provide leverage to bargain over state and local resources, it would also insulate blacks from state-sanctioned or condoned violence and terror.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF THE STRUGGLE TO VOTE

Passed as one of the Reconstruction amendments following the Civil War, the Fifteenth Amendment provides that “the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.” Each of these amendments also granted Congress the power to enforce the amendments by appropriate legislation. However, after the Hayes-Tilden Compromise of 1877, blacks were effectively disenfranchised through an interlocking system of discriminatory laws and widespread violence. In 1890, for example, Mississippi held a convention to write a new constitution. The spirit of the convention was captured by one white leader, who exclaimed, “We came here to exclude the Negro, from voting.”

Under this new constitution, voters in Mississippi had to pay a poll tax two years before an election. Blacks at the bottom of the socioeconomic scale rarely had the funds to pay the tax, however. In addition, the state required all voters to pass a literacy test, though 60 percent of black men could not read at the time. What is worse, clerks, who were always white, would require blacks to interpret the most difficult passages of the test, while whites were routinely tested on uncomplicated passages. In 1898, Louisiana introduced a new device into its constitution, the “grandfather clause,” which allowed anyone to register whose “grandfather” was qualified to vote before the Civil War. This benefited only whites, of course, because only white citizens could vote before the Civil War. In 1902, Mississippi passed a law that made political parties private organizations outside the authority of the Fifteenth Amendment. Because whoever won the Democratic primary almost always won the general election, this permitted Democratic parties in Southern states to openly exclude blacks from membership in the only party that mattered in the South. This voting regime was referred to as the white primary. Another method used to prevent African-Americans from voting was felony disenfranchisement, or withholding the right to vote from persons convicted of felony offenses. Several Southern states enacted felon disenfranchisement laws and carefully selected “disenfranchising crimes” to disqualify a disproportionate number of black voters.

The white primary, the grandfather clause, the poll tax, the literacy test, and felon disenfranchisement are simply the most well-known methods of disenfranchisement. Other inventive methods included transferring the power to determine voter qualifications to “private,” all-white political clubs, giving newly enfranchised blacks only two weeks to register, and property ownership requirements. As late as 1940, as a direct result of these interlocking discriminatory laws and schemes, only 35 percent of blacks were registered to vote in the confederate states, with only 1 percent being registered in Mississippi. It was not until 1944, in the Supreme Court case of Smith v. Allwright, that the “white primary” was effectively struck down. The poll tax was not struck down until 1966, in Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections.

THE IMPORTANCE OF DIRECT- ACTION PROTEST IN THE 1960s

The activism of the civil rights movement was of central importance in assuring the right to vote. During the 1960s, direct action protests, marches, and sit-ins emerged as major instruments of political change. Indeed, during the summer of 1964, known as “Freedom Summer,” thousands of civil rights activists conducted an intensive voter-registration campaign in the Southern states. The activists focused on Mississippi, because in 1962 only 6.7 percent of African Americans in the state were registered voters, the lowest percentage in the nation.

The activities of the civil rights workers were met with threats, protests, and brutal violence. In June 1965, for example, three young civil rights workers—James Chaney (an African American) and two white co-workers, Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner—were murdered near Philadelphia, Mississippi. Earlier, in March 1965, more than 600 peaceful civil rights marchers were beaten by Alabama state troopers and local sheriff’s officers as they crossed the Edmund Pettus Bridge in Selma on their way to Montgomery. These incidents and others sparked national outrage and helped generate support for voting-rights enforcement. The national attention helped to spur President Lyndon B. Johnson to urge Congress to pass strong voting-rights legislation, which became the Voting Rights Act that was signed by President Johnson on August 6, 1965.

CONTESTED INTERPRETATIONS OF THE VOTING ACT

The Voting Rights Act generally prohibits the denial or abridgement of the right to vote because of one’s race or color through the imposition of voting qualifications or prerequisites. Sections 5 and 2 of the act have generated the most controversy. Section 5 provides for extensive federal oversight and intervention to assure compliance, requiring federal approval, or “preclearance,” of changes in voting procedures in areas with a history of discrimination (primarily, but not exclusively, Southern states and subdivisions). Section 2 prohibits any “voting qualification . . . which results in a denial . . . of the right . . . to vote on account of race or color.” It assures that minority votes will not be diluted, or submerged within majority white districts, in ways that deny minority voters “an equal opportunity to participate in the electoral process and to elect representatives of their choice” (Thornburg v. Gingles, 478 U.S. 30 [1986]).

Voting Rights Act of 1965. President Lyndon Johnson gives Martin Luther King Jr. one of the pens used to sign the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The Act is generally considered to be one of the most significant pieces of federal civil rights legislation ever passed by the United States Congress. THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

Additionally, the Act was amended in 1975 to prohibit voting qualifications that would deny the right of any citizen to vote because he or she is a member of a language minority. As a result, covered states and political subdivisions must now supply bilingual or multilingual assistance or other materials or information relating to the electoral process. Importantly, the preclearance provisions of Section 5 and the protections for language minorities must be renewed periodically by Congress. Civil rights groups expect opponents will vigorously contest renewal when the issue is next before Congress in 2007.

COURTS AND THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT

In interpreting the Voting Rights Acts, courts have focused predominately on two issues: whether various voting procedures deny minority voters access to the ballot, and whether various political representation plans dilute minority votes to the point that members of minority groups cannot elect the candidate of their choice.

In 1980, in City of Mobile v. Bolden, a challenge to the city’s at-large voting scheme, the Supreme Court held that Section 2 of the act would not afford relief in vote-dilution cases unless there was proof of intentional discrimination. But it was virtually impossible to provide such proof, and vote-dilution claims came to a virtual standstill after this decision. However, in 1982 Congress not only extended Section 5 for twenty-five years, it also amended Section 2 to prohibit discriminatory effects even in the absence of intent.

In 1986, in Thornburg v. Gingles, the Supreme Court construed the amended Section 2 for the first time. In a case involving a legislative redistricting plan of multimember districts in North Carolina, the Court held that minority plaintiffs can successfully establish a vote-dilution claim if they show that their community is sufficiently large and geographically compact enough to make up a majority in a single member district, that the group is politically cohesive, and that the white majority's bloc voting will defeat the minority candidate. After Thornburg v. Gingles, and throughout the 1980s, black voters were able to press for black majority districts, and candidates of their choice, who were usually black, were consequently voted into office.

However, with the decision in Shaw v. Reno (1993), the Supreme Court announced a new voting rights jurisprudence based on color-blindness. In the case, white plaintiffs challenged a North Carolina redistricting plan on the grounds that majority-black district lines deliberately segregated voters into separate districts on the basis of race, violating their constitutional right to participate in a "color-blind" electoral process. Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the 5-4 majority, found that the district was so bizarrely drawn that it could not be understood as anything other than an effort to separate voters into different districts on the basis of race. Such a district, according to O'Connor, reinforced racial stereotypes and threatened to undermine the U.S. system of representational democracy by signaling to elected officials that they represented a particular racial group rather than their constituency as a whole. Shaw broke new ground, evidencing a judicial hostility to race based districting to empower blacks and to protect them from illegal gerrymandering and vote dilution.

Yet in spite of these cases, race conscious redistricting per se is not unconstitutional, although it is now weighed against the normative interests of rights that inhere in individuals. The Supreme Court thus set the stage for individualized color blindness to triumph over group-based race consciousness. In the context of vote dilution, this is a peculiar jurisprudence because, as Chandler Davidson (1984) observes, vote dilution is a racialized group phenomenon: "It occurs because the propensity of an identifiable group to vote as a bloc waters down the voting strength of another identifiable group. . . . [O]ne individual acting alone could not dilute the vote of another individual or of a group of individuals."

After the Shaw line of cases, increased attention has been paid to alternatives such as influence districts, cumulative voting, and proportional representation. Out of necessity, perhaps, the next chapters in the struggle for political participation by African Americans and other ethnic minorities may focus on these approaches.

SEE ALSO Civil Rights Acts; Civil Rights Movement; Language; Social Psychology of Racism.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bell, Derrick. 2004. Race, Racism and American Law, 5th ed. New York: Aspen Publishers.
- Button, James W. 1989. Blacks and Social Change: Impact of the Civil Rights Movement in Southern Communities. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press.
- Davidson, Chandler, ed. 1984. Minority Vote Dilution. Washington, DC: Howard University Press.
- Grofman, Bernard, ed. 1998. Race and Redistricting in the 1990s. New York: Agathon Press.
- Issacharoff, Samuel, Pamela S. Karlan, and Richard H. Pildes. 2001. The Law of Democracy: Legal Structure of the Political Process, 2nd ed. Westbury, NY: Foundation Press.
- Keyssar, Alexander. 2000. The Right to Vote: The Contested History of Democracy in the United States. NY: Basic Books.

John O. Calmore

W

---

WAGNERIAN MUSIC

Taken solely as a musician, Richard Wagner (1813–1883) must be placed in the most elite rank of Western composers, alongside Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven. Nonetheless, his politics, philosophy, and theory of history are inseparable from nineteenth-century anti-Semitism. Identifying the exact nature and extent of Wagner's hostility to Jewish people, and the effects of this hostility on his art, is complicated by the fact that bigotry is always irrational. Moreover, anti-Semitism has cultural, religious, and pseudo-racial manifestations. It is undeniable that each of these forms of anti-Semitism is reprehensibly present in Wagner's writings, but there is no consensus as to whether they are detectable in any of his operas.

In Wagner's theory of the musical stage was that all components of an opera must express an aesthetic system and a political and cultural philosophy. He believed that by writing his own texts, designing his own scenarios, and dictating elaborate stage directions, he could impose eternal control over the meanings that he considered essential to his works of art. Yet despite all his efforts, Wagner's works, no less than those of less deliberate composers, have been subjected to the subsequent interpretations of producers, audiences, and critics. It requires no particular inventiveness to discover anti-Semitism in Wagner's public and private utterances, but it is a more difficult matter to pinpoint precise expressions of anti-Semitism in the music or texts of his operas.

Wagner shamelessly expressed anti-Semitism in his infamous essay, Das Judentum in der Musik (1850). The common translation of this work, "Judaism in Music," seems to imply a religious element, but Wagner's purposes were more sweeping than that, and a more accurate translation might be "Jewishness in Music." Wagner was hostile towards all aspects of Jewish heritage, which he viewed as an alien and destructive force in German culture, and indeed in all European civilization. Wagner's anti-Semitism was not so much religious as racial and ethnic. Although he was contemptuous of bourgeois Christianity, he nonetheless accepted the traditional Christian view of the Jewish people as hoarders of money that was "slimy with the blood of countless generations." He confessed to an "involuntary repellant" for the "nature and personality of the Jews," who, he insisted, were responsible for a corruption of the public taste in the arts.

But if it was Wagner's intention to communicate anti-Semitism by strictly musical devices he seems to have failed in the meritless task. For while it is certain that the texts of his operas communicated idiosyncratic philosophical messages, the most careful searchers have failed to detect specific anti-Semitic references in his lyrics. Scholars debate whether certain of his characters were intended to personify any of the pejorative Jewish racial or cultural stereotypes that were all too prevalent in nineteenth century Europe, but they have offered little specific direct evidence of any such characterization. Finally, while Wagner, especially in Die Meistersinger, clearly contributed to a theory of what the Nazis later called entartete musik (degenerate music), it is unclear whether he attempted to incorporate his theoretical anti-Semitism into any of his musical compositions. His works do not contain travesties or pejorative depictions of Jewish liturgical music, which he disparages in Das Judentum. Although Wagner expressed patronizing or hostile attitudes towards Jewish composers such as Felix Mendelssohn and Giacomo Meyerbeer, his attacks never took the form of a cheap musical parody.

Wagner desired that his music should express not only emotions, but complicated philosophical principles as well, and particularly the revolutionary ideals, radical moral values, and spiritual strivings that he associated with the German race. Like the classical Aristotelean critics and his contemporary composers of “tone poems,” Wagner believed that music imitated emotional states, and he believed that he could communicate precise spiritual messages by assigning them to specific musical phrases, which he called “leitmotifs.”

Musical notes, like words, can be used as symbols and arbitrarily assigned to specific referents, and a musical phrase, like a word phrase, can symbolize anything one chooses to attribute to it. A Hakenkreutz (swastika), for example, may have entirely different meanings to a Navaho, a Hindu, or a Jew. Likewise, pictures on canvas or actions on stage may have equivocal references. Wagner sought to exert maximum control over how the symbolic elements of his art would be perceived by reinforcing the occurrences on stage with words and music, imagining that he could prevent any distortion of his meanings. It is from his predictable failure to triumph over ambiguity that the greatest strength and beauty of Wagner’s art, as well as its evil misuses, have arisen. Wagner’s romanticized historiography included three mythical Germanic worlds. The first of these, comprising his four-opera cycle Der Ring des Nibelungen, had its sources in ancient pagan myths, including the Norse Volsunga Saga and the medieval German epic Das Nibelungenlied, from which he freely adapted his texts. The mythical sources of the operas Tannhäuser, Parsifal, and Lohengrin were in the Grail myths of late medieval Christianity. A third source, reflected most prominently in the setting of Die Meistersinger, was Wagner’s idealized view of the organic German town, the Burgertum of the late Middle Ages and early renaissance. Each of these worlds clearly offers a setting to display grandiose conceptions of Germanic identity, and each of them is readily employable to racist, ethnocentric or anti-Semitic ends.

The mythology of the Ring Cycle presents a world in opposition to both Old and New Testament traditions. It is an attempted revitalization of pagan Germanic myth and an attempt to discover in it the uncompromised barbarian vigor and primitive virtues praised by the Roman historian Tacitus in his depiction of Germanic tribes. These virtues, which Wagner expressed through the eponymous hero of his opera Siegfried, included fearlessness in battle, the sanctity of oaths, and an absolute loyalty to the king.

In addition to its savage heroes, the world of Der Ring is populated by gods, giants, and dwarfs. Some people have seen in Wagner’s dwarfs the embodiment of a vicious stereotype of the Jewish people as hoarders and manipulators of wealth. In Das Judentum in der Musik, Wagner wrote negatively about Jewish bankers, then proceeded to describe Jewish musicians with the same scurrilous imagery that he assigns to the subterranean dwarfs of Das Rheingold. He described the work of Jewish composers, for example, as a “worm-befretted carcass.” Two years earlier, in an 1848 prospectus for Der Ring des Nibelungen, he had similarly characterized the gold-hoarding dwarfs as being “like worms in the dead body” of German art.

Wagner’s chosen people, the Wälsungs, are a race with no perceptible virtue other than the warrior trait of physical courage, loyalty to their chief, and a somewhat ambiguous reverence for women (clouded by an extreme possessiveness and a tendency to regard women as trophies). Wagner’s superman, Siegfried, is not a noble savage, but a virile barbarian who, like his father, is beyond Christian notions of good and evil. He shares these traits, presumably, with the Übermensch of Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche, and one can see in him the precursor of the Hitler youth—tall, blonde, handsome, rash, unreflective, and controlled by forces he is incapable of contemplating.

Wagner’s racial attitudes are often confused with those of Nietzsche, who, like Wagner, heralded the coming of a new “superman,” unconstrained by the supposedly tenderhearted values of bourgeois Christianity. But where Nietzsche’s philosophy placed supreme value on the individual will, Wagner celebrated the collective German Volksgeist, or “national character.” Nietzsche expressed an admiration for certain cultural values that he associated with Jewish people, and he was equally hostile to the Jewish and the Christian religious heritage. Wagner’s racial nationalism viewed the Jews as an inferior, unredeemable race who could play no role in the German nationalism he celebrated. But Nietzsche opposed racial anti-Semitism and the herd mentality of vulgar German nationalism. Thus, Wagner found himself in the contradictory position of trying to reconcile barbarian lawlessness with nationalistic communalism. The supermen of the Ring cycle—Siegfried and his son Siegfried—are antisocial outlaws as well as symbols of ethnic purity, tribal loyalty, and racial spirit.

Wagner’s use of Grail mythology is more notable for its sexism than for its anti-Semitism. It centers on chaste knights whose holiness is often proven by their renunciation of sensual females, as in the examples of Parsifal and Tannhäuser. The opera Lohengrin combines familiar elements of classical, Germanic, and Hebraic mythology. A young woman is commanded by her husband and champion that she must never ask his name. When natural curiosity finally overcomes her, he reveals that he is Lohengrin, son of Parsifal, and a keeper of the Grail.

Adolf Hitler Unveils a Monument to Richard Wagner, 1934. Nineteenth-century composer Richard Wagner's musical treatment of alleged Germanic folklore fanned the flames of racism in Germany and contributed to the success of the Nazi movement.
© HULTON-DEUTSCH COLLECTION/CORBIS.

He then leaves her, returning to his sacred vigil at Mounserat, and she dies of grief. There is nothing anti-Semitic about this, unless one accepts the proposition that there is no place for Jews within the mythology of medieval Christianity, other than that of the Wandering Jew. But the only person in any of Wagner's operas with the name "Wanderer" is Wotan, the king of the gods and the progenitor of the Germanic master race, the Wälsung.

Die Meistersinger is the only Wagner opera that is not dominated by supernatural forces. Set in the sixteenth century, it involves a songfest and two competitions, one for a musical prize, the other for the hand of a beautiful young woman. There are two heroes, one of them the historical Hans Sachs, a shoemaker and poet. The other is Walther, a young knight who, somewhat incongruously, is not associated with any sort of practical hand trade, but who demonstrates his craftsmanship by composing a masterful song. Reminiscent of Marxism in its conception, the opera envisions a world before the rise of industrial capitalism and a time before workers were alienated from their labor. The villain of the opera is the unattractive character of Beckmesser, in whom some critics have seen a caricature of the Jewish bourgeoisie. There is no internal evidence for this interpretation, although in his blind attempts to adhere to rules that he does not understand, he resembles the fabrications of Das Judentum. Some critics have seen in Beckmesser's unimaginative interpretation of the guild's formal rules, and in the horrid cacophonies he produces, an intentionally grotesque travesty on Jewish religious music.

The hostility of many audiences, Jewish and non-Jewish, to Wagner stems largely from the fact that he was much admired by Hitler. Indeed, his operas came to symbolize German racial and artistic supremacy to the Nazis. Since the destruction of the Third Reich, Wagner's music has been associated in the popular mind with both fascism and Western imperialism. During the 1970s, for example, the most familiar of his musical themes, The Ride of the Walküres, accompanied the depiction of a helicopter attack on a Vietnamese village in Francis Ford Coppola's film Apocalypse Now.

Wagner did not publicly disclose his anti-Semitism in the first anonymously published edition of Das Judentum, which was released in 1850, but in the 1869 edition he restated his views shamelessly. It would seem, therefore, that if he had intended to portray the Dwarf Nibelungs as symbols of a supposedly Jewish capitalism, or Beckmesser as a symbol of decadent Jewish art, he could have done so openly and without any qualms. Yet when one compares Wagner's abstract anti-Semitic blathering to his formulations of German myth in the prospectus for Der Ring, and then compare those to the texts of his operas, it is easy enough to find continuities. It is thus perfectly understandable that, given Wagner's unsavory anti-Semitic attitudes and the deployment of them by the Nazi generation, there is a continuing hostility to any performance of his works in Israel. Despite the fact that some Jewish musicians and conductors insist that there are no specific expressions of anti-Semitism in his music, there are many persons, both Jewish and non-Jewish, whose appreciation of his music will always be diminished by the composer's avowed anti-Semitism.

SEE ALSO Anti-Semitism.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Katz, Jacob. 1986. The Darker Side of the Genius. Hanover, NH: Published for Brandeis University Press by University Press of New England.
- Meyer, Michael. 1991. The Politics of Music in the Third Reich. New York: Peter Lang.
- Rose, Paul Lawrence. 1992. Wagner: Race and Revolution. New Haven: Yale University Press.
- Weiner, Marc A. 1995. Richard Wagner and the Anti-Semitic Imagination. Lincoln, NE: University of Nebraska Press.

Wilson J. Moses

WALKER, DAVID

c. 1796–1830

David Walker was born free in Wilmington, New Hanover County, North Carolina, to a free black woman and an enslaved man. Walker was one of fewer than two dozen free blacks in the city, most of whom labored side by side with the enslaved in the city's port economy. Accounting for nearly 60 percent of New Hanover County's total population, African Americans on the Lower Cape Fear were dominant as workers in the maritime trades, into which they infused their specialized knowledge and cultural heritage. Highly concentrated in the population, they also shaped institutions such as the church. Walker likely encountered the Methodist faith here, which was strong in Wilmington. Church membership offered Wilmington African Americans—particularly free blacks such as Walker—opportunities to gain leadership skills, discuss troubles confronting them, and learn of the situations of blacks in other locations. This was particularly true of enslaved blacks working with seamen, whose vessels traveled up and down the Atlantic coastline and abroad.

LIFE IN CHARLESTON

Moving to another seaport city—Charleston, South Carolina—sometime in the 1810s, Walker found a much larger black population, numbering more than 3,600 in 1820 and constituting almost three-quarters of the city's residents, and a complex urban economy. Established a century earlier by English slaveholders from Barbados, Charleston had an almost Caribbean pattern of racial relations, featuring important social distinctions between Caucasians, white-appearing free black elites, and dark free African American and enslaved black masses. A product of complex racial histories that privileged the descendants of mixed-race unions, this multi-tiered racial caste system (whites, free black elites, nonelite free blacks, and the enslaved) at times fostered class divisions among African Americans that likely informed Walker's concern with black disunity.

Charleston also offered a rich institutional life for the city's large free black population, which numbered nearly 1,400 in 1820. In 1817 the city became home to a congregation of the newly founded African Methodist Episcopal (AME) Church, the first independent black church in the nation. Walker was clearly influenced by, and likely participated in, this rare autonomous black institution in the heart of the plantocracy. Another institution, the Brown Fellowship Society, likely imparted a subtler but just as critical influence on Walker. Begun in 1790 as a burial society, the institution catered only to Charleston's free mulatto ("colored" or "brown") elite. Inspired by these experiences, Walker later wrote clearly about the class and status divisions that undermined the unity of African-descended people in America.

During his time in Charleston, Walker could not have been unaffected by the prosecution of African Americans involved in Denmark Vesey's alleged plot to lead a slave revolt involving thousands. Vesey, a free black man, conspired with enslaved African Americans and other free blacks to rise up on July 14, 1822—a date commemorating the French Revolution's Bastille Day—and take over the city before fleeing to the black Caribbean nation of Haiti. Betrayed by two slaves, the plan never came to fruition. White authorities responded with a brutal campaign of repression, during which forty-three of Vesey's followers were deported and thirty-five hanged, including Vesey himself. In the wake of this repression, Walker may have decided to move north.

LIFE IN BOSTON

After moving to Boston by 1825, Walker encountered a community of African Americans numbering around 1,000, most of whom were economically and socially depressed. On Brattle Street, Walker opened a clothing business, which became a locus of black organizing, and married Eliza Butler, a member of Boston's African American middle class. As his business grew, he took on roles of community leadership. He became a Prince Hall Mason, a member of Samuel Snowden's Union United Methodist Episcopal Church, and an agent for Freedom's Journal, the first black newspaper in America. Walker was also a cofounder of the Massachusetts General Colored Association (MGCA), a pioneer black antislavery and racial uplift group established in 1826.

In meetings of the MGCA, often in his store, Walker developed the ideas that would coalesce into his most significant historical contribution, a revolutionary seventy-six-page pamphlet titled David Walker's Appeal, in Four Articles, Together with a Preamble, to the Coloured Citizens of the World, but in Particular, and Very Expressly, to Those of the United States of America. First published in late 1829 by a sympathetic Boston printer, the Appeal went through three quick editions, each featuring minor changes, the last being published in June 1830. Understanding the incendiary nature of his work, Walker relied on friends and sympathizers in the shipping trades to distribute the Appeal to southern ports, going so far as to smuggle copies in the lining of sailors' clothing.

Four themes dominated Walker's concerns in the Appeal. The first was that American slavery constituted the gravest moral violation in the history of the world, a crime that demanded immediate abolition. "We, (coloured people of these United States) are the most degraded, wretched, and abject set of beings that ever lived since the world began," Walker charged. Following this, he asserted that God's judgment would fall upon the country for slavery unless the institution was immediately abolished. God would redeem the nation once slavery and prejudice were extirpated. Relying on a long tradition of American jeremiad, Walker admonished the nation about the consequences of countenancing slavery. "Americans!!," he railed, "I warn you in the name of the Lord . . . to repent and reform, or you are ruined!!!"

Walker declared that African Americans had a duty to awaken themselves politically. Primarily, this meant conscious efforts to forge a much needed unity, defined by the goal of self-liberation, among scattered black populations. Walker repeatedly stressed the importance of unity among African Americans. "Remember that unless you are united," he wrote, "keeping your tongues within your teeth, you will be afraid to trust your secrets to each other, and thus perpetuate our miseries under the Christians!!!!" Walker thus called upon black people themselves to play the foremost role in dismantling the mechanisms of their oppression. While violence served as one possible means, more important was the effort to uplift the black population through a rigorous campaign of self-education. This promised not simply to combat the ignorance caused by slavery and racism but also to expose the long history of wrongs done to blacks. "For colored people to acquire learning in this country, makes tyrants quake and tremble on their sandy foundation," Walker believed; the words of educated African Americans would make blacks' oppressors "know that their infernal deeds of cruelty will be made known to the world."

Contemporary black thinkers such as William J. Watkins of Baltimore and Samuel Cornish of New York and Freedom's Journal, had expounded on themes similar to those Walker expressed in the Appeal. Unlike earlier black expressions of discontent, the pamphlet was revolutionary because of its uncompromising rhetoric and strident tone. Walker replaced the supplication characteristic of an earlier phase of black protest with a new militancy. In considering the prospect of revolt against slaveholders, for example, Walker cautioned his black readers, "Do not trifle, for they will not trifle with you. . . . If there is an attempt made by us, kill or be killed." Thus, employing a strident rhetorical style, more common to street-corner exhortation than learned discourse, Walker sought above all to energize his listeners. He clearly accomplished this among the southern white authorities who sought to suppress the work—by seizing copies of it when they could, initiating laws banning distribution of antislavery literature, and offering rewards for its author's apprehension. Walker's untimely death in 1830 was rumored to have been caused by these forces of reaction, though it is also likely that he fell victim to consumption.

While the Appeal helped inspire the conservative defense of slavery, it played an even more important role in the history of radical antislavery thought. Walker's pamphlet helped drive white reformers such as William Lloyd Garrison to espouse the immediate abolition of slavery, though most white abolitionists distanced themselves from Walker's militancy. Black activists such as Henry Highland Garnet consciously incorporated Walker's themes into their own radicalism. The Appeal thus served as a comprehensive model for much later black protest thought, both modeling a tradition of black self-help designed to command whites' respect and serving as a form of pragmatic black nationalism built on the political unity of all people of African descent. In the end, David Walker's life and thought heralded the birth of a militant tradition of racial politics, in which a marginalized people sought to sway the "public mind" through the use of the printed word.

SEE ALSO Vesey, Denmark.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PRIMARY WORKS

Walker, David. 1965 (1829). David Walker's Appeal, in Four Articles, Together with a Preamble, to the Coloured Citizens of the World, but in Particular, and Very Expressly, to Those of the United States of America. Edited by Charles M. Wiltse. New York: Hill and Wang.

———. 2000. David Walker's Appeal to the Coloured Citizens of the World. Edited by Peter P. Hinks. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press.

SECONDARY WORKS

Aptheker, Herbert. 1965. One Continual Cry: David Walker's Appeal to the Colored Citizens of the World, 1829–1830, Its Setting & its Meaning, Together with the Full Text of the Third, and Last, Edition of the Appeal. New York: Humanities Press.

Garnet, Henry Highland. 1848. Walker's Appeal, With a Brief Sketch of His Life. By Henry Highland Garnet. And Also Garnet's Address to the Slaves of the United States of America. New York: J.H. Tobitt.

Hinks, Peter P. 1997. To Awaken My Afflicted Brethren: David Walker and the Problem of Antebellum Slave Resistance. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press.

Horton, James Oliver, and Lois E. Horton. 1979. Black Bostonians: Family Life and Community Struggle in the Antebellum North. New York: Holmes and Meier.

Patrick Rael

WASHINGTON, BOOKER T. 1856–1915

Booker Taliaferro Washington, a black educator, orator, and leader, was born a slave in Franklin County, Virginia, on April 5, 1856. His mother, Jane, was a cook, and his father was a white man who has remained unidentified. After emancipation in 1865, Booker, his mother, and his brother moved to Malden, West Virginia, where, with his stepfather, he worked in salt and coal mines and as a houseboy for the mine owners, General Lewis Ruffner and his wife Viola. In 1872, after acquiring a rudimentary education at public schools and from Mrs. Ruffner, Washington enrolled in the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, in Virginia.

Founded to educate former slaves, the school taught habits of rectitude, hard work, and service along with industrial and liberal arts. Washington flourished at what was essentially a high school, and after graduation he was invited to teach at his alma mater.

In 1881, Washington accepted a position as principal for a new state-funded school for blacks in Tuskegee, Alabama. Modeling the school after Hampton, Washington built Tuskegee into a showcase of industrial education and black self-help. Although the idea of industrial education was not original with Washington, he became its most ardent and noted black advocate. By century's end, Tuskegee boasted an endowment of nearly two million dollars, more than one hundred buildings, a faculty of nearly two hundred black men and women, and an international student body.

In 1895, Washington was catapulted to national prominence when he delivered a five-minute speech at the Atlanta Cotton States and International Exposition. His "Atlanta Compromise" speech summarized the program of education, self-help, and racial cooperation that he had pursued at Tuskegee. Whites concluded that Washington offered a palatable resolution of the nation's "Negro problem," namely black acquiescence to white supremacy in social, political, and economic matters. Washington himself believed that he was striking a bargain with whites, not surrendering to them. In return for white aid for greater educational and economic opportunity, he set aside black claims for civil and political equality in the South. Accommodating to, but not endorsing, racial segregation, Washington proposed, "In all things that are purely social, we can be as separate as the fingers, yet one as the hand in all things essential to mutual progress."

His widely published speech caught the attention of white philanthropists, who selected Washington to serve as the conduit through which charitable donations reached black institutions across the nation. His influence soon extended to national politics, and two U.S. presidents, Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft, discussed race relations with him and solicited his advice regarding patronage appointments. Washington simultaneously extended his influence over black institutions by founding the National Negro Business League in 1900 to foster black entrepreneurship, by subsidizing newspapers and organizations, and by undermining groups that were hostile to him. By the turn of the century, no meeting or discussion on racial topics was complete without an appearance or a comment by Washington.

Washington's rise to leadership was symptomatic of the deteriorating status of African Americans at the end of the nineteenth century. Increasingly denied meaningful political participation in the South, blacks had few mechanisms to select black leaders who could be assured of recognition by whites. Whites, not blacks, effectively selected the leaders who spoke on behalf of blacks. In Washington's case, connections, ambition, and circumstances, rather than a democratic process, anointed him a race leader. Yet his power remained tenuous because it derived from white patronage, which could never be taken for granted.

Booker T. Washington and President Theodore Roosevelt, 1901. Both presidents Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft discussed race relations with Washington and sought his advice on patronage appointments. © CORBIS.

Constrained by the source of his power, Washington elected to use furtive means to challenge white supremacy. While voicing only tepid opposition to the disenfranchisement of southern blacks, he secretly funded legal challenges to constitutions in Louisiana and Alabama that restricted black voting. His private behavior, including a controversial meal with Theodore Roosevelt in the White House in 1901, also periodically breeched racial conventions, demonstrating that, despite his talk about the races being as distinct as fingers on a hand, he acceded to segregation only out of expediency.

Washington's power over black institutions inevitably bred resentment among African Americans, however. As early as 1892, Washington alienated black clergy by suggesting that they were unfit to lead the black community, and his emphasis on industrial education irked black proponents of liberal arts education. In addition, his dismissal of electoral politics outraged black politicians who were struggling to retain their offices and influence in the face of disenfranchisement. In 1903, Washington's perceived persecution of William Monroe Trotter, a black editor and civil rights activist in Boston, drew out other critics, including Ida B. Wells-Barnett, who fumed about his restrained denunciations of lynching; W. Calvin Chase, a Washington D.C. editor, who criticized Washington's alleged "political dictatorship"; and W. E. B. Du Bois, who offered a comprehensive criticism of Tuskegee and its creator. A year later, Du Bois and other militants gathered at Niagara Falls, Canada, where they founded the so-called Niagara Movement. By 1909 they had forged a coalition of white racial liberals, reform-minded social workers, socialist radicals, and black militants into the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

Washington eyed the NAACP warily, and his relationship with the organization soon deteriorated into open and permanent competition. An even greater threat to Washington's power was the election of Woodrow Wilson, a southern-born Democrat, who rapidly expanded the segregation of federal offices. No longer able to use his influence in the nation's capitol to reward allies and punish critics, and no longer able to control the black press as he once had, Washington was dismayed in 1913 when the NAACP turned to the issue of black education and organized an association of black industrial and secondary schools.

In the final years of his life, despite his deteriorating health, Washington maintained a punishing regimen of speaking engagements, meetings, and fund-raising tours. He seemingly became impatient with the obstacles that impeded his program and became more outspoken in his condemnation of lynching, segregation, and disenfranchisement. By 1912, Washington's increasingly strident denunciations of racial injustice surprised even his blacks critics. The optimism that had made his earlier pronouncements seem far too optimistic was replaced by a new urgency. Finally, on November 14, 1915, his body gave out and he died of "nervous exhaustion and arteriosclerosis." Appropriately, he was buried in a cemetery on the grounds of Tuskegee, the institution and cause to which he had devoted his life.

Washington was married three times. He married his first wife, Fannie N. Smith, in 1882. They had one child, Portia M. Washington, before Fannie's death in 1884. A year later, Washington married Olivia A. Davidson, a teacher at Tuskegee who subsequently served as assistant principal at Tuskegee. Before her death in 1889, she and Washington had two sons, Booker T. Washington Jr. and Ernest Davidson Washington. In 1893, Washington married Margaret James Murray. As Washington achieved international prominence, Murray likewise emerged as a leading figure in various women's organizations. They had no children together. Murray died in 1925.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brundage, W. Fitzhugh. 2003. Booker T. Washington and Black Progress: "Up from Slavery" 100 Years Later. Gainesville: University Press of Florida.
- Denton, Virginia Lantz. 1993. Booker T. Washington and the Adult Education Movement. Gainesville: University Press of Florida.
- Harlan, Louis R. 1972. Booker T. Washington: The Making of a Black Leader, 1856-1901. New York: Oxford University Press.

———. 1983. Booker T. Washington: The Wizard of Tuskegee, 1901–1915. New York: Oxford University Press.

———, ed. 1972–1983. The Booker T. Washington Papers. 14 vols. Urbana: University of Illinois Press.

Washington, Booker T. 1901. Up from Slavery: An Autobiography. New York: Doubleday.

W. Fitzhugh Brundage

WATSON, THOMAS E. 1856–1922

Thomas E. Watson was a southern politician who rose to fame on the intersecting paths of class and race. In his early years he was a powerful spokesman for populism and the poor; later he combined economic radicalism with extreme Negro-, Jew-, and Catholic-baiting. His career carried him from Thomson, Georgia, where he was born on September 5, 1856, to the Georgia State Legislature, the U.S. House of Representatives, and the U.S. Senate.

In his youth Watson attended local schools, then a small Baptist college. He began studying law while teaching school, was admitted to the bar in 1875, and became a success as a trial lawyer. He was elected to the Georgia State Legislature in 1882, where he supported public education for children of both races and opposed the convict lease system. As the agrarian rebellion of the mid-1880s spread, he adopted as his own the platform of the Farmers' Alliance, which included abolition of national banks and opposition to the crop-lien system. He was elected to Congress in 1890 as a Democrat from Georgia's Tenth District, but upon entering Congress he shifted his allegiance to the new People's (Populist) Party then emerging on a program of nationalization of transportation and communication, a graduated income tax, direct election of senators, the eight-hour workday, free coinage of silver, and other reforms. In Georgia, he led the fight for an interracial movement of the poor: At one point during the election campaign of 1892, when a black Populist campaigner was threatened with lynching, Watson called upon Populists to rally to the man's defense. Two thousand white farmers marched to the Thomson village courthouse under arms, where they heard speeches by the black Populists and by Watson, who declared, "We are determined in this free country that the humblest white or black man that wants to talk our doctrine shall do it." As one historian put it, "The spectacle of white farmers riding all night to save a Negro from lynchers was rather rare in Georgia." "Watson has gone mad," howled the conservative press (Woodward 1963, p. 240).

Watson's call for unity of black and white poor was widely perceived as the most subversive aspect of his teachings. In an article in Arena, he wrote: "Now the People's Party says to these two men, 'You are kept apart that you may be separately fleeced of your earnings. You are made to hate each other because upon that hatred is rested the keystone of the arch of financial despotism which enslaves you both'" (Woodward 1963, p. 220). One editor wrote, "The South and especially the tenth district is threatened with anarchy and communism" because of "the direful teachings of Thomas E. Watson" (Woodward 1963, p. 223). At the same time, there were fissures in the coalition, due in part to the differences in standing between black wage laborers and white farm owners. When the Colored Farmers' Alliance proposed to call a strike of black cotton pickers, the president of the (white) alliance denounced it as an effort "to better their condition at the expense of their white brethren" (Woodward 1963, p. 219).

Watson ran for reelection in 1892 and again in 1894 but was defeated both times because of fraud and violence; in one election his opponent received a majority of 13,780 votes in a county with only 11,240 eligible voters. Nevertheless, the Populists made gains nationally, polling 1,471,000 votes in the congressional elections of 1894 and gaining several governorships. The party gained support in urban areas, where radical sentiments increased in the wake of the depression of 1893 and the 1894 Pullman strike, and hoped to replace the Democrats as one of the two national parties.

In 1896, the national Democratic Party, feeling the heat of Populism, nominated William Jennings Bryan for president on a platform of free coinage of silver. Whereas free silver had always been a Populist demand, it had been only one of many; now the party was confronted with a dilemma—to go with Bryan or hold out for the complete platform. At its St. Louis convention the party split, some voting to support Bryan ("fusion"), others to remain independent ("mid-road"). Watson resisted fusion, but as a compromise he agreed to accept the Populist nomination for vice president on a ticket headed by Bryan.

The election, won by Republican William McKinley, was a debacle for Populism, leaving its supporters embittered and leading to the party's demise. Watson withdrew from politics, turning his attention to writing histories, biographies, and a novel. In 1904 he returned to politics with a new idea: The so-called Negro Question had always been his nemesis. If, he reasoned, the black vote could be eliminated as a factor in elections, poor whites would no longer be afraid to vote their interests and the banker-industrialists dominating the New South could be overturned. Hence, he endorsed the disfranchisement of black voters by any means necessary. In 1905 Watson asked in a widely distributed statement, "What does Civilization owe to the Negro? Nothing!! NOTHING!!! (Woodward 1963, p. 380). By 1913 when blacks were lynched at a rate of one per week, he wrote that "Lynch law is a good thing; it showed that a sense of justice yet lives among the people"

(Woodward 1963, p. 432). The violence of his language propelled him to the front ranks of southern white-supremacist demagogues. He also launched attacks against the Catholic Church, which he accused of serving a foreign power, and against Jews, whom he saw as representatives of northern capitalist interests. His stirring up popular resentment of Jews led to the 1915 lynching of Leo Frank in Atlanta.

For fifteen years after his return he dominated Georgia politics, continuing to present himself as a champion of poor whites. He opposed U.S. entry into World War I, declaring it a war fought to safeguard Morgan's loans to Britain: "Where Morgan's money went, your boy's blood must go" (Woodward 1963, p. 455). In 1920 he got himself elected to the U.S. Senate, where he supported the Bolshevik Revolution and opposed U.S. intervention in Russia. He denounced the League of Nations as an imperialist alliance and fought against increased military appropriations. To the supporters of a standing army, he asked, "Whom, then, do you fear? You are afraid of your own proletariat. . . . Such men as Mellon, and Hoover, and Elbert Gary, and J. P. Morgan . . . these vast combinations of capital want a standing army in order to beat down the dissatisfied" (Woodward 1963, p. 480).

Watson died on September 26, 1922. "Between seven and ten thousand people were said to have attended the funeral services at [his home in Georgia]. . . . Most conspicuous among the floral tributes was a cross of roses eight feet high, sent by the Ku Klux Klan" (Woodward 1963, p. 486).

SEE ALSO Southern Politics, 1883-1915.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Adam, Anthony, and Gerald Gaither. 2004. Black Populism in the United States: An Annotated Bibliography. Westport, CT: Praeger.
- Gaither, Gerald. 1977. Blacks and the Populist Revolt: Ballots and Bigotry in the "New South." Tuscaloosa: University of Alabama Press.
- McMath, Robert C. 1993. American Populism: A Social History, 1877-1898. New York: Hill and Wang.
- Perman, Michael. 2001. Struggle for Mastery: Disfranchisement in the South, 1888-1908. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Woodward, C. Vann. 1963 (1938). Tom Watson: Agrarian Rebel. New York: Oxford University Press.

Noel Ignatiev

WELLS-BARNETT, IDA B. 1862-1931

Ida Bell Wells-Barnett, a journalist, suffragist, and civil rights activist, was best known for launching the nation's first anti-lynching campaign in 1892. Born on July 16, 1862, in Holly Springs, Mississippi, Wells began her activist career in 1883 when she sued the Chesapeake, Ohio and Southwestern Railway in Memphis, after being refused a first-class seat in a ladies' car. Although Wells ultimately lost the case in 1887, she was the first black plaintiff to challenge a separate coach case before a state supreme court after the U.S. Supreme Court invalidated the civil rights act of 1875.

On March 9, 1892, the lynching of three black men in Memphis, including Thomas Moss—a close friend of Wells and the president of a co-op grocery that successfully competed with a white-owned store—was the catalyst for Wells's life-long career as an anti-lynching activist. Her efforts began with a boycott of the city's streetcars and calls for blacks to leave Memphis for new territories then opening up for settlement in Oklahoma. Whereas she was not the first to protest lynchings, conservatively estimated to number nearly five thousand between 1880 and 1930, Wells was the first to grasp its full significance in a period that saw the emergence of the New South and the anxieties that accompanied rapid industrial growth and urbanization. This period witnessed challenges to traditional gender roles, the assertiveness and economic success of the post-slavery generation of African-Americans, and the popular dissemination of "scientific" texts that posited that peoples of African descent were biologically predetermined to regress into primitivism and hypersexual behavior. Allegations that black men were raping white women allowed lynchings to be carried out with impunity. Wells, using the methods of investigative journalism, statistics on lynching published annually by the Chicago Tribune, and, on occasion, detective agencies, provided evidence that the charge of rape was primarily used as a pretext to lynch either defiant blacks or those, such as Thomas Moss, who challenged the economic status quo.

The most provocative aspect of Wells's campaign, however, was her insistence that many of the accusations of rape were actually consensual sexual relationships between black men and white women. After she published an editorial on May 21, 1892, reflecting this view in the Memphis Free Speech—a militant weekly she co-owned—white Memphians destroyed her newspaper and forced Wells into exile. From New York, she continued to write anti-lynching editorials for the New York Age, published by T. Thomas Fortune. These became the basis for her 1892 pamphlet, Southern Horrors, which was the first comprehensive analysis of lynching. It documented the fact that only about a third of black victims were actually accused of rape, much less guilty of it.

An analog to Wells's findings was the continued sexual coercion of black women by white men of all social strata. In sum, her conclusions critiqued the congealing late-nineteenth-century ideology of white supremacy by challenging the myth of (sexually) pure white womanhood, the hypersexuality of black women and men, the integrity of the “best white men,” and the pseudoscience of social Darwinism, which was used to confirm the superiority of white civilization.

Wells’s anti-lynching discourse also challenged the conservative ideology of elite African-American leaders who believed that racial violence was spurred by lower-class whites against criminally prone blacks. These leaders believed that racism would cease with evidence of increasing black economic and social progress, rather than militant protest. Southern Horrors, on the other hand, called for armed self-defense, civil disobedience, and an insurgent black laboring class. Wells’s activist strategy also included appeals to progressives, both black and white, to mobilize against lynching and pass a federal anti-lynching law.

In 1893 and 1894, Wells took her campaign to the British Isles, where she was able to rally the support of prominent journalists and denominational church leaders, as well as members of Parliament, anti-imperialist organizations, and feminist groups. A number of these individuals formed the London Anti-Lynching Society, which was headed by John Douglas Sutherland Campbell, the Duke of Argyll. Their criticism of lynching practices was instrumental in making racial violence an issue in the United States that could no longer be ignored.

When Wells returned to America, she attempted to foment an interracial, nationwide movement against lynching. Anti-lynching committees were formed in numerous cities, and Wells received important endorsements from numerous organizations and religious bodies. But Wells, a polarizing figure whose views were too radical for many reformers, both white and black, failed to get the economic support to sustain an independent movement. Nevertheless, after 1892 the number of lynchings never again reached the high of 241 that was recorded that year, and her campaign can be credited for the passage of anti-lynching laws in southern states, including Georgia, Texas and South Carolina, between 1893 and 1897. Wells’s activism was also a catalyst for the formation of the National Association of Colored Women (NACW) in 1896: the first secular, nationwide organization of African-American women. Its motto, “lifting as we climb,” informed its activities, which included community betterment, suffrage, and anti-lynching work.

In 1895, Wells married Ferdinand L. Barnett, a like-minded militant lawyer in Chicago, and four children were born to the couple between 1896 and 1904. In a chapter of her autobiography, Crusade for Justice, Wells-Barnett wrote of her “divided duty” between motherhood and activism, but she continued to campaign against racial violence and to establish important institutions and organizations to empower black men and women, both in Illinois and nationally. Wells-Barnett founded the Ida B. Wells Club, the first women’s club in Chicago to become a part of the NACW; the Alpha Suffrage Club, the first black women’s suffrage club in Chicago; and the Negro Fellowship League, a settlement house. In 1909 she was among the “founding forty” of the organization that later became known as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP).

However, Wells-Barnett’s militant strategies were more in tune with the nationalism of Marcus Garvey and the militancy of the Boston editor Monroe Trotter—both of whom she allied with—than with the NAACP. Nevertheless, she provided the model for the organization’s own belated campaign against lynching and it was the NAACP’s public lobbying effort to pass a federal anti-lynching law in 1922 that established it as the premiere civil rights organization in the country. During the mid-1920s, Wells-Barnett was instrumental in the successful campaign to mobilize black support in Chicago to establish a branch of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and Maids in the city. In 1930, a year before her death, Wells-Barnett became the first black woman to run for an Illinois state senate seat. Both in theory and practice, Wells-Barnett’s campaign against lynching and activism for black empowerment were harbingers for the late twentieth-century movements against racism and sexism. She died in Chicago on March 25, 1931, at the age of sixty-eight.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bates, Beth Tomkins. 2001. Pullman Porters and the Rise of Protest Politics in Black America, 1925–1945. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Bruce, Philip A. 1889. The Plantation Negro as a Freeman. New York: G.P. Putnam’s Sons.
- Brundage, W. Fitzhugh. 1993. Lynching in the New South: Georgia and Virginia, 1880–1930. Urbana: University of Illinois Press.
- Giddings, Paula J. 1984. When and Where I Enter: The Impact of Black Women on Race and Sex in America. New York: William Morrow.
- McMurry, Linda O. 1998. To Keep the Waters Troubled: The Life of Ida B. Wells. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Salem, Dorothy. 1990. To Better Our World: Black Women in Organized Reform. Brooklyn, NY: Carlson.
- Schechter, Patricia A. 2001. Ida B. Wells-Barnett and American Reform, 1880–1930. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Shaler, Nathaniel S. 1884. “The Negro Problem.” Atlantic Monthly (November): 696–709.
- Wells, Ida B. 1969. Southern Horrors (1892) and The Red Record (1894). Reprinted in On Lynchings: Southern Horrors, A Red Record, Mob Rule in New Orleans. New York: Arno Press.

———. 1970. Crusade for Justice: The Autobiography of Ida B. Wells, edited by Alfreda M. Duster. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

———. 1990 (1893). "Lynch Law in All Its Phases." Reprinted in Ida B. Wells-Barnett: An Exploratory Study of An American Black Woman, 1893–1930, edited by Mildred I. Thompson, pp. 171–187. Brooklyn, NY: Carlson.

Zangrando, Robert L. 1980. The NAACP Crusade against Lynching, 1909–1950. Philadelphia: Temple University Press.

Paula J. Giddings

WHITE, WALTER FRANCIS 1893–1955

Walter Francis White, born on July 1, 1893, in Atlanta, Georgia, was at the critical age of sixteen when the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) was founded in 1909. He was positioned to play a vital role in its future. He grew up in a middle-class family; his father, George, a postman, and his mother, Madeline, a school teacher, were both so light in complexion they could pass for white. Walter himself had blue eyes and blond hair, which sometimes belied his African-American ancestry.

His family complexion offered him little comfort: It was considered "too light" by blacks and "suspiciously too dark" by whites. The family often walked rather than rode in public transportation—if they rode in the black conveyances, blacks would mistake them for white, and vice versa. But there was one major advantage for a political activist: White was the perfect person to infiltrate and investigate the atrocities of the Ku Klux Klan (KKK).

Walter White learned about the violence of racism at an early age. At thirteen, he found himself standing in front of his home with his father, with guns cocked trying to protect their property from a white mob intent on burning all the homes in black neighborhoods. This was the Atlanta race riot of 1906.

With no high schools for blacks in Atlanta at the time, Walter attended the private high school established within the campus of Atlanta University. When he graduated from Atlanta University in 1916, his first job out of college was selling life insurance for Standard Life, a major African-American company in Atlanta. He organized the first chapter of the NAACP in Atlanta and used its leverage to force the city of Atlanta to improve public facilities for African Americans. Because of the effectiveness of his efforts in Atlanta, James Weldon Johnson, the first African-American general secretary of the NAACP and author of the song "Lift Every Voice and Sing," secured a position for White as assistant to the organization's chief administrative officer in 1918.

White came to the NAACP with some knowledge and experience of the social situation of blacks in the Deep South. In 1919 White was sent to investigate what was known as the Elaine race riot in Phillips County, Arkansas. White published his undercover findings about the riot in the Daily News, the Chicago Defender, the Nation, and the NAACP's Crisis magazine. He went on to investigate more than forty-one lynchings, eight race riots, and dozens of KKK cross burnings, posing as a white reporter who wanted to give the South's side of the story. At one point he was even invited to join the Ku Klux Klan. One southern sheriff gave him a badge and a gun and took him along on hunts for blacks. As the NAACP executive secretary, White tried relentlessly—and unsuccessfully—to persuade congressmen to pass an anti-lynching law. Anti-lynching laws that were proposed in the House of Representatives were reported out of committee, passed by the full House, and ultimately defeated via filibusters in the Senate. Southern senators, in particular, argued that anti-lynching laws violated state's rights.

In Helena, Arkansas, while White was on his way to interview Negroes jailed for joining a sharecroppers' union, he learned that a mob planned to ambush and lynch him. The white conductor of the northbound train wondered why White (who was now desperate to get out of town) would leave and thus miss the execution of plans to lynch a Negro passing through town. This episode formed the basis for his book Rope and Faggot: A Biography of Judge Lynch, published in 1929. In 1926 White had published The Fire in the Flint and Flight, and later he wrote What Caused the Detroit Riot? (1943), A Rising Wind (1945), an autobiography, A Man Called White (1948), Civil Rights: Fifty Years of Fighting (1950), and How Far the Promised Land? (1955).

In addition to pushing for anti-lynching measures and writing books, White was involved in various initiatives throughout his tenure as head of the NAACP. He met many of the influential writers of the Harlem Renaissance and assisted in breaking down barriers for them. White also worked tirelessly to bring about civil rights legislation. When President Herbert Hoover nominated John P. Parker, who had publicly renounced voting rights for blacks, to the Supreme Court, White testified before the Senate Judicial Committee and launched a letter-writing campaign against his nomination. Parker's nomination was defeated in the Senate; Hoover, however, refused to remove Parker from consideration and consequently alienated many blacks. His action contributed to the Democrat Franklin D. Roosevelt's winning the nomination for president in 1932. White developed a strategy to attack racial discrimination at its roots when he started to fight for blacks' right to vote and to be admitted to professional and graduate schools in state universities, and for equal pay for black teachers in public schools.

White urged President Roosevelt to extend Social Security benefits to agricultural and domestic workers and to amend the National Labor Relations Act to prohibit union discrimination. He supported A. Philip Randolph's March on Washington campaign in 1940 and 1941. He took on racial stereotypes in the entertainment industry and helped to quell race riots in Detroit and Harlem. In the last ten years of his life, White witnessed the outlawing of restrictive covenants in real estate deeds—for which the NAACP had fought for more than thirty years—and the landmark Brown v. Board of Education case, which desegregated public schools on May 17, 1954.

His accomplishments notwithstanding, White was not without his critics. He clashed with W. E. B. Du Bois because, like other leading black intellectuals, some of whom were critical of the NAACP, he opposed his notion of "black economic self-determination," believing it was contrary to the integrationist aims of the NAACP. Other critics argued that White was too close to FDR's New Deal and was not able to parlay his support for FDR's initiatives into tangible gains for the NAACP. There were also those who believed White's autocratic leadership style caused him not to recognize other organizations and leaders as potential allies. However, White's body of work shows a man dedicated and committed to bringing all blacks fully into the mainstream of American life. Where his efforts failed, it was not because of lack of commitment to his causes but because the obstacles were insurmountable at the time. Congress never had any intention to pass a federal law against lynching, for example, despite the moral clarity of White's position.

White was the recipient of several awards and honors throughout his long tenure at the NAACP, including a Guggenheim Fellowship early in his career and the 1937 Spingarn Medal. And because of his indefatigable work against lynching, Time magazine named him its "man of the year" in 1938. White died of a heart attack on March 21, 1955, in New York at the age of sixty-two.

SEE ALSO Ku Klux Klan; NAACP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Black, Allida M. 1996.  Casting Her Own Shadow: Eleanor Roosevelt and the Shaping of Postwar Liberalism. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Cortner, Richard C. 1988. A Mob Intent on Death: The NAACP and the Arkansas Riot Cases. Middleton, CT: Wesleyan University Press.
- Fleming, Robert. 2007. "A Heinous Act: Lynching Is America's Dirty Secret of Racial Injustice and Hatred." Black Issues 9 (1).
- Waldron, Edward E. 1978. Walter White and the Harlem Renaissance. Port Washington, NY: Kennikat Press.

White, Walter Francis. [1948] 1995. A Man Called White: The Autobiography of Walter White. Athens: University of Georgia Press.

Russell Mootry Jr.

WHITE CITIZENS' COUNCIL AND THE COUNCIL OF CONSERVATIVE CITIZENS

The first White Citizens' Council (officially known as the Citizens' Council or, as a group, the Citizens' Councils of America) was formed in Indianola, Mississippi, in July 1954 following the Brown v. Board of Education Supreme Court decision that initiated school desegregation. Branches of this white supremacist organization soon formed in other states. Most active in Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Mississippi, where Robert Patterson emerged as a leading figure, Citizens' Councils were established throughout southern states, in most major U.S. cities, and in many northern states. Membership peaked at around 250,000 in 1957. Citizens' Councils often became the focal points for the massive resistance to desegregation, and organizing rallies were held to protest against university integration.

Participants claimed that they were not extremists, and they distanced themselves from groups like the Ku Klux Klan. Indeed, Councils generally pursued the maintenance of racial segregation through courts and legislatures. Active in state and local elected offices, Citizens' Council members were often perceived to be the "uptown Klan," or a white supremacist organization populated by supposedly respectable members of society (e.g., scholars, doctors, politicians) who sought measures sustaining racial segregation through legal means. A newspaper, The Citizens' Council, was regularly produced, containing articles that reiterated racist stereotypes and depicted African Americans as innately inferior. Contributors asserted the need for states' rights, segregated schools, and bans on interracial marriage to maintain racial integrity. By the mid-1960s, with desegregation progressing under federal authority, Citizens' Councils lost support and influence, and they were all but moribund by the 1970s.

The Council of Conservative Citizens (CCC) was founded in 1985 from the remnants of the Citizens' Councils, and many members of the earlier groups joined, most notably Robert Patterson. Headquartered in Missouri, the CCC opposes school desegregation, interracial marriage and race mixing, affirmative action, welfare programs, and immigration. It advocates states' rights and Confederate heritage. One consistent theme in CCC publications, Web sites, and its Citizens' Informer newsletter is the gruesome description of interracial crime, particularly that committed by blacks against whites in the United States and elsewhere.

The CCC argues that race is a fundamental aspect of the human condition and that blacks and whites have innate differences in physical and mental abilities. These differences are supposedly irreconcilable—whites are intelligent, for example, while blacks are predisposed to violent behavior. In every instance, white supremacy is affirmed by CCC studies and affiliated scholars who use pseudo-scientific and statistical evidence to prove black inferiority. CCC leaders include Gordon Lee Baum, a former Citizens' Council organizer, and syndicated columnist Samuel Francis. Some high-ranking Republican Party members—such as Senator Trent Lott of Mississippi (1988–), Representative Robert L. Barr of Georgia (1995–2003), and Governor Kirk Fordice of Mississippi (1992–2000) had connections to the CCC. These politicians typically expressed solidarity with the organization before bad publicity forced them to apologize. Others, such as Governor Haley Barbour of Mississippi (2004–), attended CCC events but did not subsequently retract their association. In addition to its positions on race, the CCC professes patriotism; Christianity; the centrality of people of European descent to the foundation, future, and identity of the United States; opposition to international treaties and bodies such as the United Nations and North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA); and animosity toward homosexuality.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bartley, Numan V. 1969. The Rise of Massive Resistance: Race and Politics in the South during the 1950's. Baton Rouge: Louisiana State University Press.
- McMillen, Neil R. 1971. The Citizens' Council: Organized Resistance to the Second Reconstruction, 1954–1964. Urbana: University of Illinois Press.
- Potok, Mark. 1999. "Sharks in the Mainstream: Racism Underlies Influential 'Conservative' Group." Southern Poverty Law Center Intelligence Report 93: 16–21. Available from <http://www.splcenter.org/intel/intelreport/article.jsp?aid=360>.

Euan Hague

WHITE RACIAL IDENTITY

White racial outlook (WRO) theories are considered some of the most influential psychological variables when studying whites' views of self and of persons of color. They offer a framework from which to understand views of race and ethnicity in a racialized society. These theories grew from previous research on black racial identity models, and they provide ways of assessing and predicting white racial attitudes. They are important because racial information may interfere with or enhance cross-racial interactions. Further refinements in an understanding of racial attitudes can help modify these attitudes. In essence, instead of stating that a white individual is racist or not, white racial outlook theories suggest that attitudes that whites have cannot be so simply categorized, although these attitudes may have components of racism embedded within them.

These theories also enhance some of the social-psychological literature, including theories of symbolic or modern racism. The majority of whites in the United States are less likely to behave in the overtly racist ways that whites did prior to the civil rights movement, though traces of such racism may be present covertly. Rather than measure racism as a unidimensional, bipolar construct (i.e., racist or not racist), WROs can delineate nuances of racial attitudes. These WRO theories offer a means to determine whether whites understand the sociopolitical realities of race, and they help explain why a person may behave in a racist fashion in one setting but not in another. They have been examined to determine how whites cognitively and behaviorally structure racial information across a wide range of situations, such as consultation environments, counseling dyads, and multicultural competence training. This brief introduction includes two major theories of white racial outlook, their assumptions, their instruments used to measure them, and their relationships to racism.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF WRO THEORY

A brief introduction to the origin of WROs as an offshoot of black racial identity theory can help one to understand their development. In the late 1960s and early 1970s, William Cross Jr. and others developed stage models of black racial identity (understanding self-concept as both a black individual and as part of the black community) as a means of understanding the development blacks go through to live within a white-dominated society. This was an era in which a variety of historically oppressed groups became more vocal politically and socially, including the gay community, the American Indian community, and the black community. Pride movements, including Black Pride, were becoming prominent. From this era, more psychological research into black attitudes developed, with Cross developing his "Nigrescence" model. In this model, levels of black racial identity were presented that highlighted attitudes toward both the in-group (other black Americans) and out-groups (predominantly white Americans). The model has since been updated, and other prominent researchers, such as Janet Helms (1995), have presented their own models of black racial identity. Helms devised her model of black racial identity in the early 1980s, and she later formulated white racial identity models from that original black identity model.

White Racial Identity

TYPES OF WROs

There are a few white racial outlook models but the psychological literature focuses primarily on two, the White Racial Identity (WRI) model and the White Racial Consciousness (WRC) model. The two are built on different theoretical philosophies, have different assumptions, and have different means of measuring and understanding racial attitudes. Helms's WRI model rests on the assumption that whites are aware of what being white means to them and that they move through a series of developmental ego statuses (or stages)—from being oblivious to racial issues to becoming comfortable with whiteness—while simultaneously accepting other racial groups. Whites grow up privileged in society and learn to recognize themselves as privileged, though often unconsciously. In order to protect this privilege, whites distort race-related reality, which contributes to racism. Helms indicated that in order for whites to not be racist, their two primary developmental issues are to abandon the entitlement and privileges they receive from society and adopt to a nonracist white identity. In fact, in part because of her work in this area, there has been new psychological research literature focusing on white privilege.

Essentially, whites must begin to understand that they are given benefits in society simply because they are white, while also recognizing that persons of color are not afforded those same benefits. After recognizing these benefits, they can begin to achieve a nonracist identity. Helms's white racial identity theory states that racial identity develops through a sequential process in which more mature ego differentiations occur as statuses mature. The differentiation occurs through various information processing strategies, which are used to incorporate racial information and can be either dominant or nondominant. Helms highlighted that because of the dominant-nondominant theoretical component, whites generally do not fit into only one status prior to moving into another status. In essence, when a white individual comes across racial information the ego selects the status that is dominant depending on the situation and environment.

The White Racial Identity (WRI) Model. The WRI comprises six statuses, with the first three (Contact, Disintegration, Reintegration) reflecting movement toward the abandonment of a racist identity, while the last three (Pseudo-independence, Immersion/Emersion, and Autonomy) are reflective of movement and acceptance of a nonracist identity. Abandoning racist ideology begins with the Contact status, in which whites are unaware of societal or individual racism and are satisfied with the racial status quo. The Disintegration status arises because of racial anxiety and ambivalence, often resulting from an event that causes a person to question previous views of race. During this status, people must reconsider their racial viewpoints, and they can either eventually maintain the status quo or move toward greater involvement with persons of other races and racial information in general. Movement into the Reintegration status is underscored by denigrating other racial groups and idealizing one's own racial group.

Accepting a nonracist ideology begins with Pseudo-independence, which is highlighted by an intellectualized approval of other racial groups, although full acceptance is not accomplished. Those moving into the Immersion/Emersion status begin to understand the benefits and privileges that have impacted and influenced them simply for being white. At this status, some people begin to join activist groups against oppression; at the very least they begin to understand their role living in a racist society. Finally, those that attain the Autonomy status have an appreciation for other racial groups, understand the sociopolitical realities within society, but also have an appreciation for being white. Their racial worldview is more complex and they are willing to renounce racial privileges.

In order to assess WRI, the White Racial Identity Attitude Scale (WRIAS, or RIAS-W) was developed. While there appears to be some psychometric evidence validating the WRI theory, John Behrens (1997), Jane Swanson and colleagues (1994), and others have found that the WRIAS does not seem to measure the WRI model well. They argue that the instrument is merely a unidimensional, bipolar racism scale that simply measures the racist and nonracist attitudes of white Americans toward black Americans. It is still used by WRI researchers, however.

The White Racial Consciousness (WRC) Model. An alternative model was developed in the early 1990s by Wayne Rowe and colleagues (1994, 2002) as a reaction to the WRI model, called the White Racial Consciousness (WRC) model. Readers will notice both similarities and differences with the WRI, as both present views of "whiteness." The WRC framers believed that whites do not move through the identity developmental statuses devised by Helms, instead arguing that whites learn racial information in the same manner as other information. The theoretical and functional structure is embedded with a sociocognitive approach, is theoretically simpler, and conforms more to the racial attitude research historically highlighted by social-psychological researchers. Essentially, the WRI discusses white identity while the WRC discusses white attitudes. The WRC focuses on the present attitude type determined through attitude formation, and it presumes that racial attitudes are learned in much the same way as other attitudes. It does not focus on the underlying psychological mechanisms that drive the attitude types.

The model is measured by the Oklahoma Racial Attitude Scale (ORAS) and includes four attitude types: Dominative, Integrative, Conflictive, and Reactive. Briefly, the Dominative attitude is reflected in ethnocentric attitudes, with individuals believing that the white race is either superior or rationalizing the oppression of groups of color. Integrative types feel comfortable with racial issues and recognize white privilege and racial oppression. Conflictive types are opposed to overt racism and discrimination yet have difficulty with programs designed to assist those who have been historically oppressed. Finally, Reactive individuals are aware of white privilege yet hold onto white guilt over past and current oppression, taking on a parental attitude toward groups of color. Thus, the Dominative and Conflictive attitude types are considered racist, whereas the Integrative and Reactive types are considered nonracist.

WRO theories have relevance toward racial issues within the therapeutic relationships, business relationships, or various trust issues within a community, among others. Researchers working in this area can explore multiple possibilities that can yield fruitful rewards. Whether at the individual level or the group level, there are many racial concerns within the United States and other countries, and more study of WROs can help individuals in politics, business, education, and therapy appreciate the racial barriers and racial assets needed to understand racial identities.

SEE ALSO Aversive Racism; Symbolic and Modern Racism.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Behrens, John T. 1997. "Does the White Racial Identity Attitude Scale Measure Racial Identity?" Journal of Counseling Psychology 44: 3–12.
- Cross, William, E., Jr. 1971. "The Negro-to-Black Conversion Experience." Black World 20 (9): 13–27.
- , and Beverly J.V. Vandiver. 2001. "Nigrescence Theory and Measurement: Introducing the Cross Racial Identity Scale (CRIS)." In Handbook of Multicultural Counseling, 2nd ed., edited by Joseph G. Ponterotto, et al., 371–393. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage.
- Helms, Janet E. 1995. "Update on Helms's Racial Identity Models." In Handbook of Multicultural Counseling, 2nd ed., edited by Joseph G. Ponterotto, et al., 181–198. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage.

- LaFleur, N. Kenneth, Wayne Rowe, and Mark M. Leach. 2002. "Reconceptualizing White Racial Consciousness." Journal of Multicultural Counseling & Development 30 (3): 148–152.
- Leach, Mark M., John T. Behrens, and N. Kenneth LaFleur. 2002. "White Racial Identity and White Racial Consciousness: Similarities, Differences, and Recommendations." Journal of Multicultural Counseling and Development 30 (2): 66–80.
- Rowe, Wayne, Sandra K. Bennett, and Donald R. Atkinson. 1994. "White Racial Identity Models: A Critique and Alternative Proposal." The Counseling Psychologist 22 (1): 129–146.
- Rowe, Wayne, John T. Behrens, and Mark M. Leach. 1995. "Racial/Ethnic Identity and Racial Consciousness: Looking Back and Looking Forward." In Handbook of Multicultural Counseling, 2nd ed., edited by Joseph G. Ponterotto, et al., 218–235. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage.
- Swanson, Jane L., David M. Tokar, and Lori E. Davis. 1994. "Content and Construct Validity of the White Racial Identity Attitude Scale." Journal of Vocational Behavior 44: 198–217.

Mark M. Leach

WHITE SETTLER SOCIETY

The term white settler society refers to a group of societies that sprang up as a result of the great European expansion into other regions of the globe from the late fifteenth century onward. The white settler societies established by the British, French, Portuguese, Spanish, German, and Dutch conquerors in the Americas, Africa, and Australasia all established forms of white racial dominance in the course of their development. They also provided important incubators for the development of theories and practices of racism, sometimes producing their own racial theorists and theories, as occurred in the United States. Examples of the latter would include the scientist and physical anthropologist Dr. Samuel George Morton (1799–1851) who wrote the influential book Crania Americana (1839), arguing that Negroes belonged to a separate species, and his disciples Josiah C. Nott and George Glidden, who championed polygenism in their book Types of Mankind (1854). In the middle of the nineteenth century, experiences of colonization in Australia, including attempts to "civilize" Australian Aborigines, contributed to the development of theories of "polygenism"—the belief in separate origins for different groups of people, and thus the inherent separation of human "races"—as news from the Australian colonies filtered back to racial theorists like Robert Knox at the imperial center.

White settler societies were different from other types of colonies. D. K. (David Kenneth) Fieldhouse, in his classic study The Colonial Empires (1965), classified the varying colonial situations found across the globe under four major categories: occupation, mixed settlement, plantation, and pure settlement. During the Age of Expansion, European colonizers exploited the more densely populated and organized societies of Africa and Southeast Asia for labor and material goods and then used them as a market for surplus European goods. In these colonies of occupation, the primary aim (and opportunity) was not to settle European populations (though this usually occurred to some extent), nor was it to impose a European political and legal framework over the territory and its indigenous populations (though, again, this happened to a lesser or greater extent). As George M. Fredrickson, the comparative historian of racism, points out, “the new European overlords could profit most handily by skimming a surplus ‘off the top’ without systematically destroying the traditional cultures, modes of production, or forms of local governance.” As a consequence these colonies “did not undergo a radical and thoroughgoing social reorganization to reflect the hegemony of a substantial and permanent white status group” (1988, p. 219). In the era of decolonization after World War II, these societies, including important examples such as India and Indonesia, threw off their colonial shackles and reinvented themselves as independent nations.

However, social reorganization, as well as the establishment of permanent white status groups, was exactly what happened in the colonies of settlement (the other three categories). Here, European colonizers primarily sought the land itself, and not indigenous labor or goods, both for exploitation and to provide space for an expansion of the European population. In societies such as South Africa and America (hybrids of the plantation and mixed settlement types), the Latin American countries (mixed settlement), the sugar islands of the West Indies (plantation), and Australia (pure settlement), the goal was to set up European-style societies in new lands, under the assumption that this represented the spread of civilization.

The term white settler society covers a diverse range of societies and racial formations. South Africa has a minority white population and a much larger black African population. This was an important factor in the setting up of the racist apartheid system in the second half of the twentieth century. As in other parts of southern Africa including Rhodesia (later Zimbabwe) and Kenya, these white settler societies were structured in particular ways because they formed small white enclaves administering and dominating much larger black African populations. Whites in these situations developed strict regimes of racial separation and segregation. As the twentieth century wore on they became increasingly fearful of what their long suppressed black populations might have in store for them, should they ever achieve equality and democratic rights. They also tended to develop rigid and conservative colonial cultures, determined not to let themselves be “contaminated” by the indigenous African populations that lived alongside them, or by the environment, which was often seen as a potential source of degeneration to Europeans.

White settler societies were also shaped by the different types of terrain and people they encountered. For example, they would be influenced by the lifestyle of the original inhabitants. Confronting largely nomadic peoples in sparsely settled lands (rather than settled agriculturists), colonists in Australia and Canada developed large white-majority societies with small indigenous populations, which were supplanted and peripheral to the emerging capitalist mode of production. After World War II, however, as a result of mass immigration, these societies increasingly became ethnically diverse, and in the early twenty-first century they have significant non-white immigrant populations along with the white majority population.

The United States also supplanted indigenous populations and developed into a large white-majority society, but one with a large minority black population as a result of the slave trade, in addition to a large mixed Hispanic population as a result of the annexation of territory that formerly belonged to Mexico and both legal and illegal immigration. Like Canada and Australia, the United States is ethnically diverse, and it is often referred to as the world’s largest multicultural society.

Brazil, Argentina, and Mexico, as a result of the circumstances of their colonization—including their use of both local labor and imported slaves, as well as their adoption of Spanish and Portuguese attitudes and laws about intermarriage—developed large mixed, or mestizo, populations alongside their white populations. This had significant implications for their particular racial formations. Race boundaries tended to be less rigid than they were in South Africa or the United States, for example. Brazil, which had imported millions of slaves up until the nineteenth century, developed a large black African immigrant population and an elaborate racial classification system. This provided ample opportunities for racial “passing,” which allowed lighter-colored people to move up the racial hierarchy in ways less possible in the United States, with its “one-drop rule.” Here, after emancipation and the erection of Jim Crow laws, the one-drop rule meant that having even one drop of African blood classified a person as black.

As racist theories consolidated during the nineteenth century, white settler societies found a compelling justification for maintaining white rule. Many racial myths that have since been discredited found a powerful resonance in these societies. In the white settler colonies of the British Empire, the myth of Anglo-Saxon superiority among the hierarchy of races was used to justify or explain the continuing domination of white over black in the United States, Australia, Canada, Kenya, and Rhodesia. Immigration policies aimed at keeping nonwhite peoples out of white settler societies were also established. During the gold rushes of the nineteenth century, California and some Australian colonies enacted restrictions on Chinese immigration. Australia's immigration restriction of all nonwhites, commonly known as the "White Australia" policy, lasted from the beginning of the twentieth century until the early 1970s.

It is sometimes argued that the white settler societies arising from Spanish and Portuguese colonization—such as Brazil, Argentina, and Mexico—were less concerned with race and a racial hierarchy. Rules regarding intermarriage between the "races" were either lax or absent, resulting in large mixed-race populations. Some authors, however, have questioned this view, suggesting that Brazil, Mexico, and Argentina were in fact deeply racialized societies in which an intricate color coding structured social relations, privilege, and status (see Menchaca 2001, Wolfe 2001). White racial myths were also prevalent in these societies.

White settler societies had mixed fortunes as they moved beyond explicitly racist and discriminatory social formations in the second half of the twentieth century. The nightmares that some white South Africans had regarding how those they had tortured and suppressed might exact their revenge has not played out in the post-apartheid era. Since the 1990s, however, many whites have left South Africa. At the same time, the plight of white farmers in Zimbabwe became increasingly untenable under the repressive Mugabe regime from the late 1990s onwards, also leading to whites leaving the country. The fate of such white colonial enclaves was to largely disappear or find reduced significance as the societies reverted to black majority rule.

The United States had long struggles with racial segregation during the twentieth century, and the nation still bears the scars of its turbulent racial history. However, as a majority white society, it survived and prospered (unlike Rhodesia and Kenya) in the same era that saw the collapse of scientific racism and the delegitimization of various forms of racial discrimination. Australia, which still called itself White Australia at the end of the 1960s, has been peacefully transformed into a relatively harmonious multicultural society, as has Canada. In the last decades of the twentieth century, both Canada and Australia sought accommodations with the indigenous peoples they had supplanted, granting them rights they had previously been denied. These nations also removed the last vestiges of official racial discrimination. The white settler societies of Mexico, Argentina, and Brazil have had far more turbulent histories following decolonization, including military coups, revolutions, and economic instability.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Crapanzano, Vincent. 1985. Waiting: The Whites of South Africa. New York: Random House.
- Denoon, Donald. 1983. Settler Capitalism: The Dynamics of Development in the Southern Hemisphere. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Fieldhouse, D. K. 1982. The Colonial Empires: A Comparative Survey from the Eighteenth Century, 2nd ed. London: Macmillan.
- Fredrickson, George M. 1988. "Colonialism and Racism." In The Arrogance of Race: Historical Perspectives on Slavery, Racism, and Social Inequality, edited by George M. Fredrickson, 216–235. Middleton, CT: Wesleyan University Press.
- . 1997. The Comparative Imagination: On the History of Racism, Nationalism, and Social Movements. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Gossett, Thomas. 1997 (1963). Race: The History of an Idea in America. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Hartz, Louis. 1964. The Founding of New Societies: Studies in the History of the United States, Latin America, South Africa, Canada, and Australia. New York: Harcourt, Brace & World.
- Horsman, Reginald. 1981. Race and Manifest Destiny: The Origins of American Racial Anglo-Saxonism. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Jordan, Winthrop D. 1968. White over Black: American Attitudes toward the Negro, 1550–1812. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Kennedy, Dane. 1987. Islands of White: Settler Society and Culture in Kenya and Southern Rhodesia, 1890–1939. Durham, NC: Duke University Press.
- Markus, Andrew. 1979. Fear and Hatred: Purifying Australia and California, 1850–1901. Sydney: Hale & Iremonger.
- Menchaca, Martha. 2001. Recovering History, Constructing Race: The Indian, Black, and White Roots of Mexican Americans. Austin: University of Texas Press.
- Wolfe, Patrick. 2001. "Land, Labor, and Difference: Elementary Structures of Race." The American Historical Review 106 (3): 866–905.

Anthony Moran

WILKINS, ROY 1901–1981

The grandson of former slaves from Holly Springs, Mississippi, Roy Ottoway Wilkins was born August 30, 1901, in St. Louis, Missouri. As soon as he learned how to write, he dropped his middle name, the name of the doctor who delivered him. His mother died from tuberculosis when he was four years old; a brother and sister died from the same disease. After the death of his mother, Wilkins's father, who worked in a brick kiln, could not care for him and his siblings. As a result, they went to live with his maternal aunt Elizabeth and uncle Sam Williams in a lower income, integrated neighborhood in St. Paul, Minnesota. He was generally spared the blatant racism often encountered by African Americans in the southern states.

After graduating from Mechanic Arts High School, Wilkins entered the University of Minnesota. He worked his way through college by taking jobs as a stockyard worker and Pullman car waiter. He also worked as a journalist and night editor with the Minnesota Daily and became editor of the St. Paul Appeal, an African American weekly newspaper. He was a member of the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). After graduating from the University of Minnesota in 1923 with a degree in sociology and a minor in journalism, Wilkins became editor of the Kansas City Call, another African American weekly. He married social worker Aminda "Minnie" Badeau in 1929; they had no children.

In Kansas City he first came face-to-face with racism. There he discovered that even having good manners was a crime for black men. Wilkins recounted a story of an incident when he offered his seat on a streetcar to an elderly white woman. Her response to another white passenger was that she was not so old that she would take a seat from a "nigger." Wilkins indicated that he quickly changed from a "soft shell boy to a well-armed Kansas City slicker." He began to use the pages of the Call to attack white racism. For example, he used the paper to wage a campaign against racist Missouri senator Henry J. Allen, who was subsequently defeated. When he moved the paper from simply generating sensational stories to bringing attention to segregation issues, circulation went from 4,000 to 20,000. This made the Call the second largest African American weekly in the country, after the Chicago Defender.

Wilkins continued to be actively involved in the local NAACP, serving as secretary of the Kansas City branch. Those activities and Wilkins's work on the newspaper exposing segregation brought him to the attention of Walter White, executive director of the NAACP. In 1931, White recruited Wilkins to serve as assistant secretary of the organization in New York.

One of Wilkins's first assignments was to investigate lynching and African American working conditions in the South. In 1932 he traveled incognito to the river camps set up along the Mississippi River to investigate the slave-labor-like conditions facing black convicts on federally controlled flood projects. His report, Mississippi Slave Labor, led to Congress enacting reform measures that improved the working conditions in levee labor camps. From that point forward, Wilkins was at the forefront of the NAACP's efforts at addressing lynching, fair housing, equal employment opportunity, and integration. When W. E. B. Du Bois left the NAACP in 1934, Wilkins became editor of The Crisis, the official magazine of the organization. He served in that role until 1949.

After White's death in 1955, Wilkins became executive secretary of the NAACP. By this time he was known to have an excellent reputation as an articulate advocate for civil rights. One of his first actions was to assist activists in Mississippi who were facing a credit squeeze by the racist White Citizens' Council. Dr. T. R. M. Howard, a physician and local race relations activist, was the head of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership in Mound Bayou, Mississippi. He proposed to Wilkins that black businesses and organizations should move their accounts to a black-owned bank. Wilkins backed the proposal. By the end of 1955, approximately $280,000 had been deposited in Tri-State Bank of Memphis, Tennessee. The bank then made loans to African Americans who had been turned down by white banks. The venture proved to be successful.

Wilkins's leadership coincided with the beginnings of the civil rights movement. One year after the organization's victory in the landmark 1954 Supreme Court case Brown v. Board of Education, Rosa Parks, a member and former secretary of the Montgomery, Alabama, branch of the NAACP, refused to yield her seat on a segregated bus to a white rider. As a result, a one-day boycott against the transit system was initiated. The boycott lasted a year and catapulted to fame Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. King, then pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, spearheaded the Montgomery movement. Shortly after the Supreme Court ruled in Gayle v. Browder (1956) that segregation on city buses was unconstitutional, King founded the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), an association of scores of black churches. This organization became a competitor to the NAACP, its membership consisting of groups of churchgoers, whereas NAACP membership was individual, reflecting the NAACP's legalist approach to racial issues. Wilkins had to contend with King's belief that change would occur mainly through direct community action. Wilkins continued to promote the NAACP's mission to fight segregation through legal challenges and legislation. However, he did work hand-in-hand with the SCLC on all major civil rights activities.

Wilkins participated in all the major events during the turbulent years of the 1960s. He helped to organize the 1963 March on Washington and appeared on the cover of Time magazine on August 30, 1963, just two days after the momentous march. He participated in the Selma to Montgomery march in 1965 and the March Against Fear in 1966. He led the NAACP in its efforts to secure support for and passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the 1965 Voting Rights Act. In his role as executive director (the title changed from secretary to director in 1964), Wilkins was the individual who testified on behalf of the organization before Congress and consulted with presidents.

Wilkins not only directly consulted with all presidents from John F. Kennedy to Jimmy Carter but also had knowledge of the actions of presidents going back to Franklin Roosevelt. He analyzed the role that presidents played in responding to the NAACP's agenda. He felt that Roosevelt was overrated, pointing to the fact that the New Deal's social security program excluded farmers and domestics, the two areas of employment in which African Americans were most heavily represented. He gave more credit to Harry Truman, who, he felt, risked his reelection by throwing the full authority of the federal government behind a call for civil rights for all American citizens. Wilkins felt that Dwight Eisenhower was guilty of moral abdication in his tardy intervention in the Little Rock, Arkansas, Central High School desegregation case. Wilkins acknowledged that while John Kennedy improved the moral climate, he was evasive when it came to action. In his view, Lyndon Johnson was the most sincere and passionate advocate of civil rights. Richard Nixon was indifferent and set back the cause of civil rights, despite having introduced the concept of affirmative action.

As the civil rights movement gave way to the militancy of the Black Power movement, Wilkins was often criticized by black militants as leading an organization that was antiquated. Stokely Carmichael of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) was especially critical of Wilkins and the NAACP. He and others saw Wilkins as a "knee-bowing supplicant" who was out of touch with the needs of the community. Wilkins saw the militants as young firebrands whose defiance in white America was "desperate lunacy." He continued to appeal to the conscience of America, stating that America was as much the land of African Americans as of any other group. He held that African Americans help build and defend the nation and had every right to participate in society on all levels. The NAACP under his leadership provided financial and legal support for community-action programs in urban areas that were sponsored by the very organizations that criticized his leadership.

In addition to his NAACP duties, Wilkins was an adviser to the War Department during World War II. He chaired the American delegation to the International Conference on Human Rights in Teheran and was president of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights. For his work in civil rights Wilkins was awarded the Spingarn Medal by the NAACP in 1964, and he received the coveted Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1967 from President Johnson.

Wilkins retired from the NAACP at age seventy-six in 1977. He was succeeded by Benjamin Hooks. Wilkins died September 8, 1981, in New York. His autobiography, Standing Fast: The Autobiography of Roy Wilkins, was published posthumously in 1982. In 1986, on behalf of Congress, President Ronald Reagan presented his widow, Aminda Wilkins, the Congressional Gold Medal to commemorate Wilkins's contributions to the cause of human liberty. He was also the twenty-fourth African American honored with a commemorative stamp as part of the U.S. Postal Service's Black Heritage series. The stamp was unveiled January 24, 2001, in Minneapolis.

SEE ALSO NAACP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "The Awful Roar." 1963. Time. August 30. Available from <http://www.time.com/time/magazine/article/0,9171,940696,00.html>
- Minnesota Historical Society. 2007. "Roy Wilkins." Available from www.mnhs.org/library/tips/history\_topics/129wilkins.htm.
- Reagan, Ronald. 1986. "Remarks at the Presentation Ceremony for the Congressional Gold Medal Honoring Roy Wilkins." Available from www.reagan.utexas.edu/archives/speeches/1986/11686d.htm.
- Wilkins, Roy, and Tom Mathews. 1982. Standing Fast: The Autobiography of Roy Wilkins. New York: Viking.
- Williams, Juan. 1987. Eyes on the Prize: America's Civil Rights Years, 1954-1965. New York: Viking Penguin.

Mamie E. Locke

WOMANISM

One of the most destructive manifestations of racism is the erasure of the cultures and experiences of people of color and the presumption that whiteness is dominant and normative. In the United States, the experiences of black people have been the particular targets of such erasures. In the aftermath of the civil rights movement, white women activists, including some who participated in the civil rights movement, sparked a feminist movement that challenged patriarchy and generated new modes of thinking about gender and women's experience. In the words of one black feminist critique, however, "all the women are white." Consistent with American racial hierarchies, white women's experiences provided the foundation for feminist thought; the problem of racism was presumed to be subsumed within the problem of patriarchy.

A NEW WORD FROM ALICE WALKER

The term womanist was created in 1981 by novelist, poet, essayist, critic, and feminist Alice Walker. The term provided the foundations for a theory of black women's history and experience that highlighted their significant roles in community and society. Heavily appropriated by black women scholars in religious studies, ethics, and theology, womanist became an important tool for approaching black women's perspectives and experiences from a standpoint that was self-defined and that resisted the cultural erasure that was and still is such a destructive component of American racism.

Critical of the ways in which white feminists used their own experiences to interpret black women's experiences, Walker first used the term in a review of Jean Humez's book, Gifts of Power: The Writings of Rebecca Jackson, Black Visionary, Shaker Eldress. Shakers built a religious movement that required its members to be celibate. On becoming a Shaker, Rebecca Cox Jackson left her husband and assumed a life of celibacy. Because Jackson traveled with a woman partner, similar to many black women missionaries and evangelists of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, Humez chose to call Jackson's lifestyle "lesbian."

Walker objected to Humez's imposition of a term that was not grounded in Jackson's definition of the situation. Walker questioned "a non-black scholar's attempt to label something lesbian that the black woman in question has not" (p. 81). Within the essay, Walker laid the foundations of her definition by rejecting a term for women's culture based on an island (Lesbos) and insisting that black women, regardless of how they were erotically bound, would choose a term "consistent with black cultural values" that "affirmed connectedness to the entire community and the world, rather than separation, regardless of who worked and slept with whom" (pp. 82–83).

A CONCEPT GROUNDED IN BLACK WOMEN'S EXPERIENCE

Humez's choice of labels was an example of the ways white feminists perpetuated an intellectual colonialism. This intellectual colonialism reflected the differences in power and privilege that characterized the relationships between black and white women. The term womanist was Walker's attempt to provide a word, a concept, and a way of thinking that allowed black women to name and label their own experiences. For Walker, the invention of the term was an act of empowerment and resistance, thus addressing and challenging the dehumanizing erasure that is a perpetual problem in a racist society.

In 1983, Walker provided an elaborate, dictionary-style definition of the term in her collection of essays, In Search of Our Mothers' Gardens: Womanist Prose (pp. xi–xii). This book of essays, which included her review of Gifts of Power, provided a more extensive view of her understandings of the experiences and history of black women as a distinctive dimension of human experience and a powerful cultural force. Her definition can be viewed as a philosophical overview of her work in novels, short stories, essays, and poetry.

First, Walker defines a "womanist" as a "black feminist or feminist of color." Clearly Walker includes the liberationist project of feminism in her definition. However, that liberationist project, as her definition goes on to demonstrate, should be grounded in the history and culture of the black women's experience.

Walker gives the term an etymology rooted in the African American folk term womanish, a term African American mothers often used to criticize their daughters' behavior. "Womanish" meant that girls were acting too old and engaging in behavior that could be sexually risky and invite attention that was harmful. Walker, however, subverts "womanish" and uses it to highlight the adult responsibilities that black girls often assumed in order to help their families and liberate their communities. Jackson lost her mother at age thirteen and helped raise her brothers and sisters along with one of her brother's children. As a civil rights worker in Mississippi Freedom Schools, Walker taught women whose childhoods ended early, limiting their educations. Walker also observed the participation of young people in civil rights demonstrations and was aware of the massive resistance of children in such places as Birmingham and Selma, Alabama. Walker describes the term "womanish" as an opposite of "girlish," subtly hinting that the pressures of accelerated development are facts of black female life not apprehended by white women's experiences. "Womanist" implied a desire to be "Responsible. In charge. Serious" (p. xi).

A womanist, according to Walker, loves other women and prefers women's culture, a very antipatriarchal orientation. However, womanists evince a commitment "to survival and wholeness of entire people, male and female." A womanist is "not a separatist, except periodically, for health" and, as a "universalist," she transcends sources of division, especially those dictated by color and class (p. xi). Walker subverts the antagonisms of class and color, often overemphasized by black nationalists, as differences among family members. A womanist also evinces a determination to act authoritatively on behalf of her community. Walker evokes very specific black women role models such as Mary Church Terrell, a clubwoman whose politics transcended color and class, and Harriet Tubman, famous for her exploits on the Underground Railroad and Civil War battlefields.

Finally, Walker offers a description of black women's culture that is at odds with some major emphases in white culture. Walker's key word is "love," and she links it to spirituality, creative expression, and political activism. Her definition includes a love of "food and roundness" that stands in stark contrast to the body images and gender norms of the dominant culture, a culture that celebrates pathologically thin white women and socially produces eating disorders. Walker emphasizes self-love, “Loves herself, regardless,” a direct challenge to the self-hatred that is a consequence of racism (p. xi).

FROM WOMANIST TO WOMANISM

Although womanist has not displaced the terms feminist and feminism, the womanist idea resonated with many black women as a grounded and culturally specific tool to analyze black women’s experiences in community and society. Walker’s idea was particularly useful for black women in religious studies and theology, where the confrontation between black and white theologies, in the context of liberation theologies, was particularly vibrant and direct. In normative disciplines such as ethics, theology, and biblical studies, the idealism and values in Walker’s idea were especially helpful. Katie Geneva Cannon, author of Black Womanist Ethics (1988), Jacqueline Grant, author of White Women’s Christ and Black Women’s Jesus: Feminist Christology and Womanist Response (1989), and Renita Weems, author of Just a Sister Away: A Womanist Vision of Women’s Relationships in the Bible (1988), utilized Walker’s perspective to explore the relationship of African American women’s experiences to the construction of ethics, to theological and christological ideas, and to the meaning and importance of biblical stories about women. Their work laid a foundation for an explosion of womanist analysis in religious studies and elsewhere.

Scholars using womanist analysis challenged not only black male theologians to expand their analysis of gender but also pushed white female theologians to expand their analysis of race. Walker’s idea also inspired other culturally specific forms of analysis such as “Mujerista theology” among Latina theologians. In a “roundtable” among feminist scholars in 1989, Cheryl Sanders questioned the usefulness of Walker’s idea, because she gave “scant attention to the sacred.” The points and counterpoints in that roundtable emphasized the wide-ranging invitation to analysis and criticism contained in Walker’s idea.

Although bell hooks in Talking Back: Thinking Feminist, Thinking Black (1989) suggested that some women use the term “womanist” to avoid asserting they are “feminist,” the issue is more complex. For many black women who were self-identified as feminists, the emphases of late-twentieth-century white feminists did not match their own concerns and experiences. Feminist ethicist Barbara Andolsen offered an analysis of racism in the feminist movement. In Daughters of Jefferson, Daughters of Bootblacks: Racism in American Feminism (1986), she pointed to areas of disagreement between black women who identified specifically as black feminists and white feminists. She identified work, rape, beauty, and gender separatism as sources of conflict between black and white feminists. Walker’s definition of womanist and her larger body of writings directly engage all of these issues.

Although Walker did not indicate a desire to create a womanist movement, the term womanism was a natural extension of womanist. Walker’s writings and ideas, however, emphasized black women’s creativity, enterprise, and community commitment, and “womanist” links these specifically to feminism. Womanism is identified as both the activism consistent with the ideals embedded in Walker’s definition and the womanist scholarly traditions that have grown up in various disciplines, especially religious studies. “Womanism is,” as Stacey Floyd Thomas (2006) points out, “revolutionary. Womanism is a paradigm shift wherein Black women no longer look to others for their liberation” (p. 1).

SEE ALSO African Diaspora; Black Consciousness; Black Feminism in Brazil; Black Feminism in the United Kingdom; Black Feminism in the United States; Feminism and Race; Pan-Africanism.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Andolsen, Barbara Hilkert. 1986. “Daughters of Jefferson, Daughters of Bootblacks”: Racism and American Feminism. Macon, GA: Mercer University Press.
- Cannon, Katie Geneva. 1988. Black Womanist Ethics. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press.
- Floyd-Thomas, Stacey, ed. 2006. Deeper Shades of Purple: Womanism in Religion and Society. New York: New York University Press.
- Grant, Jacquelyn. 1989. White Women’s Christ and Black Women’s Jesus: Feminist Christology and Womanist Response. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press.
- hooks, bell. 1989. Talking Back: Thinking Feminist, Thinking Black. Boston: South End Press.
- Mitchem, Stephanie. 2002. Introducing Womanist Theology. Maryknoll, NY: Orbis Books.
- Sanders, Cheryl. 1989. “Roundtable Discussion: Christian Ethics and Theology in Womanist Perspective.” Journal of Feminist Studies in Religion 5 (2): 83–112.
- Walker, Alice. 1983. In Search of Our Mothers’ Gardens: Womanist Prose. San Diego, CA: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich.
- Weems, Renita J. 1988. Just a Sister Away: A Womanist Vision of Women’s Relationships in the Bible. San Diego, CA: LuraMedia.

Cheryl Townsend Gilkes

WOODSON, CARTER G.

SEE Association for the Study of Negro Life and History.

WORKFARE AND WELFARE

Workfare in its narrowest definition is mandatory “work for benefits”—for government cash and services. In its strongest and broadest applications it is part of a larger array of means-tested benefits that are prominent in the Anglo-American democracies but most developed in the United States. The American welfare system consists of inadequate benefits and income for poor families, significant inequities in the flow of cash and services, heavy reliance on means testing, and extensive monitoring for welfare fraud, which inspires an expensive, time-consuming apparatus of investigation and surveillance—a bewildering array of programs and agencies that recipients must negotiate when they need help. Although much exaggerated, some work disincentives are part of the welfare system, especially America’s unique avoidance of national health insurance (welfare recipients who receive Medicaid targeted to the poor eventually lose coverage if they go to work). Added to inadequacy, inequity, punitiveness, and inefficiency is an unfortunate lack of fiscal and policy control. All this constitutes a welfare mess that makes the nonworking, nonaged, nondisabled poor highly visible and unpopular, easy targets for scapegoating (Wilensky 2002, ch. 10). The mobilization of fear and resentment, in turn, provokes mass backlash against “welfare” and recurrent attempts to reform public assistance under such tough-sounding slogans as “workfare” and “end welfare as we know it.” It also blocks the formation of a stable congressional coalition to fund the alternative policies most rich democracies have adopted, especially family policies and active labor-market policies.

For several centuries of modernization every generation has discovered its own undeserving poor or “dangerous classes.” Modern debates about the causes of poverty—personal moral failure or lack of opportunity—are as old as the English Poor Laws of the sixteenth century. The welfare reform bill of 1996 (“Temporary Assistance for Needy Families”) is merely one more episode in a long cycle of crackdowns on the poor followed by reforms to ease up a bit. Even the harshest of them all, the British Poor Law of 1834, was quickly followed by strong criticism. The critics noted that it did not distinguish between the nonworking poor who receive poor relief and the more deserving poor who did not; or that it undermined incentives to obey the work ethic; or that it lumped together the worthy and unworthy in a miserable poorhouse, where criminals, alcoholics, women, mothers, children, infants, the aged, and the sick were jammed together and where brutality and corruption were common. Serving later as Conservative prime minister from 1874 to 1880, Benjamin Disraeli complained that the Poor Law Reform Bill of 1834 made it “a crime to be poor”—an idea echoed by today’s liberals who are repelled by the “conservative” urge to punish the poor for their poverty. The principles of Elizabethan poor law—direct aid for the unemployed, work (or the workhouse or almshouse, or prison) for the able bodied, and local administration that would keep welfare benefits below the lowest wage and thus provide incentives to work—persist to this day in the United States (Handler 1995, pp. 12 ff.).

This never-ending cycle is most prominent in the Anglo-American democracies, which rely most heavily on means-tested benefits targeted to the poor (Wilensky 2002, Table 8.3). The cycle occurs around a long-term upward trend toward more cash and services for the poor as modern democracies became quite rich, but there is no doubt that since the mid-1990s the United States has been in a phase of getting tough on welfare. The welfare reforms of 1996 and 2006, accenting workfare, are the latest expression of that mood.

In the intensity of political fuss about it, the welfare mess is peculiarly American, but in its broad outlines it is shared by several other countries that rely heavily on means-tested programs and have high rates of poverty (United Kingdom, Canada, Ireland, and Switzerland). The American welfare mess is perpetuated first by politicians who use welfare mothers (in the public image they are racial minorities) as convenient scapegoats who are somehow responsible for problems of racial conflict, crime, family breakup, illegitimacy, budget deficits, and moral rot; and second, by the limited political capacity to reduce poverty by other more universal means—by education, active labor-market and family policies, and fiscal policy. It will last as long as the United States maintains a high rate of poverty and inequality and succumbs to polarized politics in government.

For decades workfare advocates have marketed a misleading stereotype of an epidemic of teenage sexuality, pregnancy, and parenthood—a picture of very young, black, never-married mothers, living in an inner-city ghetto, who are permanently welfare dependent and receive generous benefits, an incentive to have many children who will perpetuate welfare dependency across generations. This picture has been widely circulated in a spate of books sponsored by neoconservative think tanks (e.g., Charles Murray’s 1984 Losing Ground). Research, however, has shown that welfare benefits in the United States are anything but generous; on average they have eroded while eligibility rules tightened. Neither the level nor the trend of welfare benefits has any relation to fertility rates. In fact, in size and fertility trend welfare families are like nonwelfare families. In attitudes, welfare mothers embrace the work ethic as much as the nonwelfare population. The welfare population is heterogeneous in race and ethnicity, physical and mental health, and the number and age of children. About half of welfare mothers are white, about a third are black, a fifth Hispanic.

Very few are teenagers, though most are young. Poor single mothers with enormous deficits in human capital are over-represented among welfare recipients. What welfare parents frequently pass on to their children is not welfare status but poverty and all its pathologies.

DOES WORKFARE WORK?

Because work-for-benefits—the core of 1996 welfare reform—has a long history and in one form or another has been evaluated systematically since the late 1970s (e.g., Friedlander and Gueron 1992, Table 4.1), it is possible to summarize what has become a consensus of the experts. By the single criterion of cutting the rolls, workfare with strong sanctions—certain time limits for all welfare benefits if work is not obtained—can be effective. For instance, if the sole concern is removing people from the rolls under a deadline, considerable success can be achieved with a week or two of orientation, followed by sanctions if any job at all is refused. A credible threat to cut off welfare will also encourage a substantial percentage of welfare recipients who already work off the books to disappear from the rolls. If at the same time the country is blessed with an economy that is booming (as it was in the 1993–1999 period), the result is a fine cost/benefit ratio for such tough workfare rules—so long as one does not follow the people who have moved from welfare to work too long or worry about how much they earn. But if the aim is to prepare the typical welfare family (a mother with young children, little education, little job experience, and other handicaps) for stable employment in the real world of work and not merely perpetuate the longstanding pattern of alternating or simultaneous low-wage temporary work and welfare, policy-makers must get serious about expensive education and training, placement, wage subsidies, job creation, counseling, child care, housing, transportation, rehabilitation of those on drugs or alcohol or who are mentally ill, and more.

Some of the most sophisticated evaluation research ever done has been focused on these programs. Using a variety of methods and research designs, mostly social experiments where a group exposed to a particular workfare program is compared to a randomly selected control group, an army of researchers has descended upon these welfare clients to assess outcomes. (See especially the reports, summaries, and critical assessments by the Manpower Demonstration Research Corporation and academic researchers: Gueron and Pauly 1991; Handler and Hasenfeld 1991, chapter 5; Burghardt et al. 1992; Friedlander and Gueron 1992; Greenberg and Wiseman 1992; Bane and Ellwood 1994; Riccio, Friedlander, and Freedman 1994; Friedlander and Burtless 1995; Cong. Rec. 1995; Nightingale, Smith, and Haveman 1995; Harris 1996; Besharov, Germanis, and Rossi, 1997; Miller et al. 1997; Blank 2006; and Jencks 2005.)

Here is a brief summary of findings on which almost all researchers agree:

1. In implementing work-focused mandates, states show substantial variation in their degree and kind of success.
2. If researchers compare welfare recipients who are subjected to (varied) welfare-to-work mandates with control groups who are not and measure the respective earnings gains over anywhere from a few months to five years, the workfare programs on average do show modest relative earnings gains for the workfare participants.
3. Obviously, different program packages have different outcomes. Especially effective in decreasing welfare spending are short-term measures. Job clubs, a week or two of charm school (how to dress, how to show deference and enthusiasm in an interview, etc.), and a little help in job search can move many people into jobs quickly (on average raising the percentage of people who find a job by a modest five percentage points); it can also save taxpayers money. But such quick solutions do not improve job quality and job stability, nor succeed with the more disadvantaged. In varying amounts, some workfare programs add more expensive skills training, basic education, counseling, job creation, and other work supports. These appear to produce better jobs for some people and probably make a greater long-term difference in earnings. Workfare does not work on the cheap.
4. The population targeted by welfare-to-work programs has many unfavorable characteristics for steady long-term employment. Nationally and for the past twenty-five years of study, most who get jobs do not keep them. There are four major sources of this instability: (1) The job pays close to the minimum wage—and the former or current welfare recipient cannot support a family on it. (2) Jobs are dead end because most welfare recipients lack education, basic literacy and numeracy, and skills necessary for moving up. Gary Burtless (1995, pp. 77–78) found that among twenty-five-year-old respondents to the National Longitudinal Survey of Youth who had received welfare in all of the previous twelve months, 72 percent scored in the bottom quarter of the Armed Forces Qualification Test. Judith Gueron (1995, p. 5) notes that a survey of people who were targeted for the JOBS program “shows that between a quarter and half lacked prior work experience, at least a third had extremely low literacy skills, and more than a quarter said they could not participate . . . because they or their child had a health or emotional problem.” The survey excludes AFDC recipients who were not currently subject to the

New York Workfare Program, 1995. New York has the largest workfare program in the United States. Instead of a paycheck workers receive welfare benefits. AP IMAGES.

JOBS work mandate because of still worse handicaps. (3) There are well-known disincentives built into the system—the welfare recipients typically lose Medicaid and related benefits when they leave welfare, and their low-wage, high-turnover jobs seldom provide any or adequate benefits. (4) Labor markets turn down in an industry, area, or national slump. Workfare programs do almost nothing about (1), (2), and (4), and the resources are seldom available to do much about (3)—anything beyond limited assistance for child care and health care for a transition period only. Researchers agree that a substantial portion of the welfare population is simply unemployable without very expensive, long-term help, if then.

If one examines the characteristics of the minority who exit from welfare, stay off welfare, and hold stable jobs for as long as a few years, one can see why it is so hard to break the revolving-door pattern of welfare dependency. In these successful cases, the best evidence shows an interaction of education, marriage opportunity and stability, and stability of employment (Harris 1996; Wilson 1996; Jencks 2005; and Duncan, Huston, and Weisner 2007). Even a modest amount of education improves the welfare mother's chances of securing stable work. Both education and work increase her chances of marrying or cohabiting with a partner who works. Education and partnering to a stable worker, in turn, improve the mother's chances to stay off welfare, gain additional education, and maintain employment. The combined income and mutual help under these unfortunately rare circumstances often moves the family above the poverty line. Such transitions from welfare to relatively stable work are rare because only a small minority of welfare recipients combine the necessary education, job opportunity, and the opportunity to marry a working partner (Harris 1996, pp. 420–423).

5. The final conclusion from the workfare evaluations is that staffing is weak for the purpose of training, job development, placement, and work support. At the root of the problems is America's lack of an active labor-market policy—for example, training and rehabilitation, placement, counseling, work-study programs, mobility incentives, wage subsidies, and job creation (Wilensky 2002, pp. 100–108, 706–707).

Almost all welfare-to-work programs in the past twenty-five years have had conflicting goals. It is misleading to declare victory when the welfare rolls have declined. Consider these obvious conflicts: The number of families on welfare can be reduced at the same time that total welfare costs increase if the reduction is achieved by providing the necessary apparatus of support. Both the costs and the rolls can be decreased by further impoverishing poor children and their parents while increasing the long-run costs of foster care, homelessness, malnutrition, family violence, crime, the criminal-justice system, and prisons (see Wilensky 2002, ch. 14, for evidence of these connections). Some women who have competitive advantages can be forced to take minimum-wage jobs without the necessary support and thereby increase child neglect. In short, the goals of reducing the rolls and cost cutting, dominant in “welfare reform” since the mid-1990s, conflict with the goals of reducing child poverty, moving welfare recipients into stable jobs with above-poverty earnings and prospects for advancement, and improving the economic base for stable family life and even marriage.

THE POLITICS OF MEANS-TESTED POLICIES

What explains the limited funding and impact of workfare is the politics of American “welfare” in particular and of means-tested programs in general. For understanding national differences in poverty reduction and the politics of the welfare state, Wilensky has found that a gross distinction between complex, most-visible means tests and simple, least-visible income tests is most useful. Means testing refers to (1) noncategorical benefits targeted to the poor via a stiff income and/or assets test; (2) applied by welfare administrators with substantial discretion; (3) with a high probability of stigma. “Income-testing” is the opposite. It is categorical as a social right with copayments graded by income bracket and, because it is private and invisible, has no stigma.

Means testing is characteristic of the United States, Britain, and other fragmented and decentralized democracies (Canada, Ireland, Switzerland). In contrast are most “corporatist” democracies of continental Europe with more centralized, consensual bargaining arrangements among government, labor, management, and strong political parties, especially those with cumulative labor-left power. They avoid overreliance on means tests and instead accent universalistic social policies and simpler income tests. They implement the two policy packages that are most effective in avoiding the welfare mess—family policies and active labor-market policies targeted to everyone. They have long maintained high standards for primary and secondary schools and have paid attention to the connections between education, work, low-income housing, transportation, and other infrastructure problems. They all have national health insurance. Almost all have family policies that help all working parents to balance the demands of the labor market and parenting (e.g., child care, including universal preschool and day-care centers, before- and after-school leisure centers; short workdays for parents, parental leave, home help or long-term care for the frail elderly, pensions with flexible retirement). In other words, these countries have recognized that the long list of measures needed to move people from welfare out of poverty, and, where possible, to work, is the same as the list of policies needed to improve the lives of the nonwelfare population—the working poor and the celebrated “middle class.” The benevolent side-effect of universal social policies has been to prevent the political mobilization of the middle class white voters with high school or part-college education against the poor (see Wilensky 2002, pp. 375–378).

The alternative, aggressively pursued by the United States, is to accent stiff means tests for scores of separate, uncoordinated programs; to develop a large, expensive, intrusive apparatus of surveillance and harassment of the poor; and to make the welfare poor dramatically visible, the target of mass resentment and political scapegoating, and thereby make certain that funding for welfare reform will be meager and the maze of programs, ineffective.

NATIVISM AND TAX-WELFARE BACKLASH

In a systematic study of tax revolts in nineteen rich democracies, it proved impossible to separate antitax, anti-social spending, antibureaucratic protest movements and parties from nativist, xenophobic, or racist protests; these two themes appear together in all the high-scoring countries (Wilensky 2002, pp. 373–378). When Hollywood actor Ronald Reagan swept California in the 1966 gubernatorial election, he sounded not only the familiar antitax, anti-social spending, antibureaucratic themes but at the same time baited welfare mothers. He brought the house down when he asserted that welfare recipients are on a “prepaid lifetime vacation plan.” (A careful survey experiment shows that voters hear these as code words for black welfare poor; see Gilens 1996.) In 1970, after four years in office, Governor Reagan ran and won on the same slogans: “We are fighting the big-spending politicians who advocate a welfare state, the welfare bureaucrats whose jobs depend on expanding the welfare system, and the cadres of professional poor who have adopted welfare as a way of life” (The Wall Street Journal, October 9, 1970). As president, Reagan repeatedly referred to mythical “welfare queens” as symbols of welfare fraud and abuse. That movement culminated in eight years of the Reagan presidency and ultimately a Republican takeover of Congress in 1994 with identical campaign themes—antitax, antispending, antibureaucracy combined with the complaint that immigrants and other poor racial and linguistic minorities were creating immense burdens of welfare and crime. Populist right politicians in the United States and abroad have sounded these themes for decades.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

The history of welfare reform in the United States since the 1960s is one of increasingly tough talk about the evils of welfare dependency or the need to “make the tough decisions” to save money combined with strident demands that states and localities put huge numbers of welfare recipients to work. The reform of 1996 cut the rolls in half by 2000. But it was not typically accompanied by the upfront money and staff to make work mandates even modestly effective in improving the lives of welfare mothers and their children. Only in a few states or urban areas with booming economies that have greatly increased spending and support services are there hints of success in both reducing poverty and expanding job opportunity for welfare recipients.

Neither welfare nor workfare can be done on the cheap. The outcome of “welfare-to-workfare” policies for those who entered the programs since 1996 is typically a move from welfare poverty to unstable working poverty. The politics of welfare reform continues to block adequate funding of support services for both workfare and welfare, although workfare has for a time reduced grand-scale scapegoating of racial minorities in congressional debate.

This article is based, in part, on Wilensky, 2002, chapters 8, 10, 14, and 18.

SEE ALSO Education, Racial Disparities; Labor Market; Nativism; Social Welfare States; Underemployment.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bane, Mary Jo, and David Ellwood. 1994. Welfare Realities: From Rhetoric to Reform. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Besharov, Douglas J., Peter Germanis, and Peter H. Rossi. 1997. Evaluating Welfare Reform: A Guide for Scholars and Practitioners. College Park, MD: School of Public Affairs, University of Maryland.
- Blank, Rebecca M. 2006. "What Did the 1990s Welfare Reform Accomplish?" In Poverty, the Distribution of Income and Public Policy, edited by Alan J. Auerbach, David Card, and John M. Quigley. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.
- Burghardt, John, Anu Rangarajan, Anne Gordon, and Ellen Kisker. 1992. Evaluation of the Minority Female Single Parent Demonstration. Summary Report. Vol. 1. Princeton, NJ: Mathematica Policy Research.
- Burtless, Gary. 1995. "Employment Prospects of Welfare Recipients." In The Work Alternative: Welfare Reform and the Realities of the Job Market, edited by Demetra Smith Nightingale and Robert H. Haveman, 71–106. Washington DC: Urban Institute Press.
- Duncan, Greg J., Aletha C. Huston, and Thomas S. Weisner. 2007. Higher Ground: New Hope for the Working Poor and Their Children. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.
- Friedlander, Daniel, and Gary Burtless. 1995. Five Years After: The Long-Term Effects of Welfare-to-Work Programs. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.
- Friedlander, Daniel, and Judith M. Gueron. 1992. "Are High-Cost Services More Effective than Low-Cost Services?" In Evaluating Welfare and Training Programs, edited by Charles F. Manski and Irwin Garfinkel, 143–198. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Gilens, Martin. 1996. "Race Coding' and White Opposition to Welfare." American Political Science Review 90 (3): 593–604.
- Greenberg David, and Michael Wiseman. 1992. What Did the Work-Welfare Demonstrations Do? Discussion Paper #969-92. Institute for Research on Poverty, University of Wisconsin–Madison.
- Gueron, Judith M., and Edward Pauly. 1991. From Welfare to Work. New York: Russell Sage Foundation.
- Handler, Joel F. 1995. The Poverty of Welfare Reform. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- , and Yeheskel Hasenfeld. 1991. The Moral Construction of Poverty: Welfare Reform in America. Newbury Park, CA: Sage.
- Harris, Kathleen Mullan. 1996. "Life After Welfare: Women, Work, and Repeat Dependency." American Sociological Review 61 (3): 407–426.
- Jencks, Christopher. 2005. "What Happened to Welfare?" New York Review of Books December 15: 76–81, 86.
- Miller, Cynthia, Virginia Knox, Patricia Auspos, et al. 1997. Making Welfare Work and Work Pay: Implementation and 18-Month Impacts of the Minnesota Family Investment Program. Manpower Demonstration Research Corporation, State of Minnesota, Department of Human Services.
- Murray, Charles A. 1984. Losing Ground: American Social Policy, 1950–1980. New York: Basic Books.
- Nightingale, Demetra Smith, and Robert H. Haveman, eds. 1995. The Work Alternative: Welfare Reform and the Realities of the Job Market. Washington, DC: Urban Institute.
- Riccio, James, Daniel Friedlander, and Stephen Freedman. 1994. GAIN: Benefits, Costs, and Three-Year Impacts of a Welfare-to-Work Program: California's Greater Avenues for Independence Program. New York: Manpower Demonstration Research Corporation.
- Testimony of Judith M. Gueron, president, Manpower Demonstration Research Corporation, before the U.S. Senate Committee on Finance. Congressional Record, 104th Cong., 1st sess., March 20. Washington, DC: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1995.
- Wilensky, Harold L. 2002. Rich Democracies: Political Economy, Public Policy, and Performance. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Wilson, William J. 1996. When Work Disappears: The World of the New Urban Poor. New York: Knopf.

Harold L. Wilensky

Z

---

ZAPATISTA REBELLION

The Zapatista rebellion began on January 1, 1994, in the southern state of Chiapas, Mexico. Considered by many to be the first postmodern revolution, the Zapatista movement is a powerful example of the response capacity of indigenous peoples to racism and colonialist indigenismo in an era of neoliberalism and globalization. It is more than coincidence that the same day that the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) took effect between the United States of America, Canada, and Mexico, the Zapatista Army for National Liberation (Ejército Zapatista de Liberación Nacional, or EZLN) emerged on the national political scene with the shout “Ya Basta!” (Enough!). This cry served as a reminder that Mexico would not enter into the First World through NAFTA, as the Mexican government proposed, without first paying its historical debt to the indigenous peoples of the nation.

The answer of the Mexican state to the conflict that soon raged in Chiapas was a program of genocide against the EZLN, their communities, and their supporters, as well as the instigation of a low-intensity war in the Mexican indigenous regions, located mainly in the states of Guerrero, Oaxaca, Tabasco, and Chiapas. The main obstacle to solving the conflict in Chiapas has been the lack of commitment on the part of the Mexican State and the major Mexican political parties to accept the multiculturalism of Mexico. This has been evident in their reticence to implement the San Andrés Accords, a set of agreements signed by the EZLN and the federal government in 1996.

In 2001 the Mexican Congress enacted constitutional reforms addressing indigenous rights and culture.

But because these reforms did not directly address issues important to the indigenous groups, such as autonomy and free determination, the indigenous peoples as subjects of public right, lands and territories, the use and enjoyment of natural resources, the election of municipal authorities and the right to regional association, they have been indicted by the EZLN as treason and a mockery of previous agreements. In 2005, in the Sixth Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, the EZLN announced that it would begin a new stage in the history of the indigenous movement, in which a permanent dialogue with Mexican civil society would be sought.

THE ROOTS OF THE REBELLION

The Zapatista rebellion must be framed historically within the long and complex process of cultural resistance of the Mayan peoples, beginning with the European invasion in the sixteenth century. The deep causes of the rebellion are multiple and complex, but their deep roots undoubtedly lie in a long history of colonialism, social exclusion, and ethnic and racial discrimination.

Nevertheless, the postmodern conflict in Chiapas is closely related to the neoliberalism adopted by Mexico in the early 1980s, which brought about a social crisis and aggravated the difficult living conditions of the indigenous peoples in Mexico. The implemented neoliberal policies bet the Mexican future on an ambitious modernization project that included the thinning of the state, with minimal state intervention, a free market, and commercial openings through the signing of NAFTA. Nevertheless, the neoliberal policies applied by the government of Carlos Salinas de Gortari (1988–1994) did not include the indigenous peoples of Mexico in this modernization. This ontological blindness showed the homogenizing and exclusionary face of Mexico, and it constituted a serious mistake that had enormous political, economic, and social costs for Mexican society as a whole.

Zapatista Poster, 1992. The causes of the Zapatista Rebellion are rooted in a long and complex process of cultural resistance of the Mayan peoples, beginning with the European invasion in the sixteenth century. KARIM DAHER. LIASON AGENCY.

The Zapatista rebellion displayed the country's amnesia about indigenous peoples, the flaws of the neoliberal modernization project, and the weaknesses of the Mexican financial system. The Mexican stock market's dependency on offshoring (the relocation of business processes from one country to another) and foreign financial investments was revealed, and the resultant political instability migrated to other countries, causing the Mexican peso crisis and the loss of confidence of foreign investors in a number of Central and South American countries (this spread of capital flight to other nations has been dubbed the "tequila effect").

Among the causes of the Zapatista rebellion, several specialists have pointed to the drop in coffee prices in 1989, the dismissal of public policies in education, health and food, the weakness of the benefactor state (Mexico), and the signing of NAFTA in 1993. The EZLN was founded on November 17, 1983, in the Lacandon jungle of Chiapas, by older militants of various political organizations in Mexico. It was the fidelity of the EZLN to the revolutionary political ideology of the legendary Emiliano Zapata, the campesino leader during the Mexican Revolution (1910–1920), that led the group to anoint themselves the "Zapatistas." But the Spanish writer Manuel Vázquez Montalván points out that there was apparently little receptivity and support for the EZLN in the Mayan towns at first.

THE "ENCOUNTER BETWEEN TWO WORLDS"

In 1992 the International Union for the Scientific Study of Population (IUSSP) sponsored a Conference on the Peopling of Americas in Veracruz, Mexico. Prior to this inquiry into the "Encounter between Two Worlds," the Mexican government considered it prudent to implement constitutional amendments with the implicit purpose of addressing the challenge of the Mexican indigenous movement. In 1991, President Salinas sent a legal initiative to the Mexican Congress, asking them to make an addition to Article 4 of the Political Constitution of Mexico. This constitutional addition, approved by the Mexican Congress in July 1991, defines Mexican nation as pluricultural and declares that Mexican law system will protect and promote indigenous peoples and cultures. The addition to Article 4 was approved by the Mexican Congress in July 1991. The government of Mexico also ratified the International Labour Organization (ILO) Convention 169 concerning Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries, the foremost international instrument dealing specifically with the rights of indigenous peoples. ILO Convention 169 took effect in September 1991.

These constitutional reforms and agreements did not stop the impetus of the indigenous movement, which was well organized and united around the "Campaign for 500 Years of Indigenous, Afro-American, and Popular Resistance." This campaign was proposed in the "Bogota Declaration," during the continental encounter for peasants-indigenous organizations, an important meeting that took place in Bogota, Colombia in October 1989. The Mexican Council for 500 Years of Indigenous Resistance organized many demonstrations around the country. On October 12, 1992, in San Cristobal de las Casas, Chiapas, leaders of the indigenous organizations demolished the sculpture of Diego de Mazariegos, the Spanish conqueror of Chiapas, because they considered it to be an offense against the dignity of their peoples.

The indigenous movement also declared that the reforms to Article 4 of the constitution were limited to recognizing the existence of the indigenous peoples in Mexico, but that their ethnic rights were still unrecognized (Ruiz 1999). The indigenous leaders felt that their indigenous laws were in essence reduced to mere “uses and customs,” that their religious practices were equated with “witchcraft and beliefs,” and that their ejidos (communal lands) were being sold off or transferred away due to the agrarian reforms. With respect to ILO Convention 169, the indigenous organizations declared their support for the ratification, though they considered the convention very limited with respect to the indigenous people’s demands. According to the indigenous organizations, ILO Convention 169 puts many “padlocks” on the recognition of their political status and on their autonomy claims within international law.

ZAPATISTA REBELLION

On May 27, 1993, the Mexican army, while conducting a routine military exercise in Chiapas Jungle found, by chance, Las Calabazas, a military advance post of the EZLN. The EZLN had built several military posts around Chiapas Jungle in strategic geographic localizations, far away from the mayor cities. These military posts stored food and guns, and operated a training camp. The government of Mexico hid this information from the public in order to avoid risking negotiations for the NAFTA agreement. Thus, the Mexican army and its military intelligence were being reinforced in Chiapas, while the government was obtaining information about the organization of the EZLN, which had been founded in 1983.

The quietly organized EZLN, composed mainly of young people from various indigenous groups, including the Tzotzil, Tzeltal, Chol, and Tojolabal, staged their first armed action at 5 a.m. on January 1, 1994. Several hundred Zapatistas, many armed only with useless “guns of wood” or machetes, took control of five municipalities in the state of Chiapas: San Cristóbal de las Casas, Altamirano, Ocosingo, Chana, and Las Margaritas. They released about 200 prisoners and took Absalon Castellanos, the former governor of Chiapas, as a hostage. They also demanded the resignation of officials of the federal and state government and that democratic elections be held. The spokesman for the rebels was a shadowy figure nicknamed Subcomandante Marcos (all of the members of the EZLN wore masks during their military actions). Since the actions of 1992, Marcos has published numerous articles and books outlining his views.

The demands of the Zapatistas were outlined in the First Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle. Not only did they ask for indigenous peoples’ rights to be respected, they also enumerated several demands regarding work, land, housing, food, health, education, independence, freedom, democracy, justice and peace (Collier 1999, p. 156). The Mexican government, in response to what they considered a conflict originated by a “group of 200 insurgents led by foreign professionals,” launched a military campaign that lasted twelve days, during which the Mexican army recovered control of the city of San Cristobal de Las Casas and the rest of the municipalities. The fighting was fierce, however. In Ocosingo, the Mexican army killed hundreds of unarmed Zapatistas and civilians. The newspaper La Jornada denounced the discovery of five Zapatistas who had been murdered with their hands tied, the “disappearance” of communitarian leaders, and several attacks on journalists and members of the International Red Cross, all in violation of international law.

Subcomandante Marcos, leader of the Zapatista Army for National Liberation (Ejército Zapatista de Liberación Nacional, or EZLN), 2006. Overall, nearly 20,000 indigenous people have been displaced by the conflict in Chiapas. AP IMAGES.

The Mexican army, in the subsequent months, increased their armed forces in the area to more than 17,000 soldiers, in order to encircle the region of the Lacandon jungle. The events in Chiapas grabbed attention in the national news, and many were surprised to learn that Chiapas had the worst Human Development Index in Mexico, despite producing 35 percent of the electrical energy of the country, possessing large fuel deposits, and providing the national market with precious wood, meat, coffee, flowers, fruits, vegetables, and other products. In general, Chiapas was one of the richest Mexican states in natural resources, but its people were among the poorest.

Zapatista Rebellion

A LOW-INTENSITY CONFLICT

On January 16, 1994, just when the Zapatistas had diffused themselves into the Lacandon jungle, the Mexican government announced a general amnesty and cease-fire. President Salinas named Manuel Camacho Solis as the Commissioner for Peace and Reconciliation. The first peace dialogues took place in the Catholic diocese of San Cristóbal de las Casas, and Bishop Samuel Ruiz became a fundamental figure in this process because of the enormous respect he enjoyed as an advocate for indigenous rights. As a good-will gesture, the EZLN, with the intermediation of the International Red Cross, released Absalón Castellanos on February 17, 1994. The government released several Zapatistas in return.

The EZLN released the Second Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle on June 10, 1994. In this declaration they informed the people about the worsening of the conflict in Chiapas and called Mexicans “to a civic and peaceful effort. This was the National Democratic Convention, which was to achieve the profound changes that the nation demanded.” The EZLN emphasized that its movement members were Mexicans and not aliens, and in its demonstrations they displayed the Mexican flag with pride and sang the national anthem.

On December 1, 1994, Ernesto Zedillo Ponce de León, a leader of the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), became president of Mexico. The dialog between EZLN and the Mexican government with Bishop Ruiz as a negotiator was broken in July, when the EZLN rejected the government proposals. The new government launched a new military campaign in Chiapas and increased its military forces in the region. However, on December 19, 1994, the EZLN broke the military encirclement of thirty-eight independent municipalities. The new government then initiated a mass media campaign, declaring that the Zapatistas were terrorists. In addition, orders were given for the apprehension of Rafael Sebastián Guillén Vicente, who was believed to be subcommander Marcos.

The counterinsurgency effort now took the form of a permanent low-intensity conflict. Six paramilitary groups were created to help the Mexican army search for the insurgents' infrastructure and divide the EZLN from the indigenous communities. These paramilitary groups were located in strategic areas of the military encirclement, and their members were affiliated with the PRI and the Cardenista Front for the National Reconstruction (FCRN).

THE SAN ANDRÉS ACCORDS

At the beginning of 1995, the EZLN released the Third Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, which summoned Mexican society to form a national liberation movement and “to install a transitional government, a new constitutional body, a new constitution, and the destruction of the system of the Party-State.”

In March, the Mexican Congress approved the Law for the Dialogue, Reconciliation and Peace with Dignity in Chiapas. A cease-fire was ordered, as well as an end to military hostilities against the EZLN. Negotiations were then initiated, centered on indigenous rights and culture, democracy and justice, welfare and development, and women's rights. The meetings took place in the Municipality of San Andrés Larraínzar with the Commission for Agreement and Pacification of the Mexican Congress (COCOPA) and the National Mediation Intermediation Commission (CONAI) acting as intermediaries. The first meetings finished in September 1996. The EZLN then called for an international and national referendum, in which more than a million people participated. These developments led to the signing of the San Andrés Accords on February 16, 1996. These accords laid the groundwork for further negotiations on indigenous rights, conservation of natural resources on Native territories, political participation, and the autonomy of the indigenous communities. However, in September 1996, due to the lack of movement on these issues by the governmental delegation, the EZLN left the negotiations.

The Zapatistas, in an effort to pressure the government, organized the Zapatour, in which thousands of Zapatistas traveled from Chiapas to Mexico City. The purpose was to inform Mexican civil society and the international public of the human rights violations in Chiapas and the manipulation of media information. In February 2001, twenty-four ski-masked Zapatista leaders, including Subcomandante Marcos, left Chiapas, followed by a caravan of supporters. They arrived in Mexico City fifteen days later and were greeted by throngs of supporters.

The EZLN also organized the First Intercontinental Encounter for Humanity and Against Neo-liberalism, which took place in Chiapas in July 1996. Indigenous organization leaders from five continents were present, as well as diverse intellectuals, politicians, and civil society members.

In the Fourth Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, released on January 1, 1996, the EZLN announced the creation of the Zapatista Front of National Liberation (FZLN) as their political organization. On December 22, 1997, a massacre was committed in Acteal, Chiapas, by PRI members and cardenistas. As reported by the Peace Brigades International and SIPAZ, a Web site created to monitor the conflict in Chiapas:

On Monday, December 22, an armed group of supporters of the ruling PRI (Institutional Revolutionary Party) massacred 45 displaced indigenous persons who had sought refuge from earlier violence in Acteal in the county of Chenalho in the Chiapas highlands. The victims were Zapatista supporters or members of the peasant organization “the Bees” (Sociedad Civil Las Abejas, a group with politics similar to the Zapatistas but which does not support armed struggle). They were attending Mass in the Catholic church when the shooting started. . . . [T]he attackers included at least 60 heavily armed men. . . . The Mexican Red Cross reported 45 deaths, including nine men, 21 women, 14 children and one baby. Nineteen others were wounded. (Peace Brigades International 1996)

The following day, during a mass funeral, the community identified forty-three suspects and the police arrested them. In the aftermath of the massacre, President Zedillo affirmed in a national message that it was a deplorable act that undermined the unity of all Mexicans.

The Chiapas governor, Roberto Albores Guillén, was accused of giving little social and economic aid to the indigenous communities. In response, Governor Guillén proposed a law initiative on indigenous rights and culture. Meanwhile Protestant Christian groups started a defamation campaign against Samuel Ruiz. Though canon law required Ruiz to resign his position as bishop in 1999, when he turned seventy-five, he has continued to advocate for indigenous rights.

In July 1998, the EZLN published the Fifth Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, which contained a summons to a “national consultation concerning the legal initiative on indigenous rights” of COCOPA. Moreover, they insisted that CONAI and Mexican civil society to take part in this process of consultation.

THE FALL OF THE PRI

The historical inability of the Mexican state to achieve a social consensus on indigenous rights only worsened the conflict in Chiapas, leading to the first electoral defeat of the PRI in the presidential elections since 1928. The EZLN stayed away from the 2000 electoral process, and they called for Mexican society to abstain from voting.

The new president, Vicente Fox of the National Action Party (PAN), had promised during his electoral campaign resolve the conflict in Chiapas in 15 minutes. EZLN demanded, before it would resume the peace process, the fulfillment of “three signals”: the San Andrés accords, the freedom of EZLN prisoners, and the closure of the seven military posts. Luis H. Alvarez was appointed head of COCOPA, and Fox sent the Senate his proposed COCOPA Law, which recommended constitutional changes to address the demands for indigenous rights.

It was in this context that the Zapatour arrived in Mexico City, with the Zapatistas chanting the slogan “Never More a Mexico Without Us,” a clear reference to the exclusionary policies and racism of the Mexican state. Nevertheless, the Mexican Congress made numerous changes to the COCOPA initiative, which became known as the Indigenous Rights Law, essentially removing many of the elements important to the indigenous community. The EZLN indicated their complete disapproval, arguing that the changes represented a treasonous action. On September 6, 2002, the Supreme Court of Justice rejected the complaints filed by various indigenous organizations against the Congress’s actions on constitutional reform. As a result, the reforms were enacted. A possible explanation for the inability of the Mexican state to adequately address the calls for indigenous rights include the racism of the state in failing to recognize multiculturalism. It might also be related to the Plan Puebla Panamá, a large-scale development plan designed to promote regional integration in the nine southern states of Mexico. The plan has been criticized by indigenous groups because they feel it impels the United States, Mexico, and the Central American countries to obtain control of strategic natural resources in the Mesoamerican region. Any political and territorial autonomy of the indigenous peoples over these natural resources would therefore hinder this plan.

In the following months the conflict in Chiapas lost the attention of the public due to Zapatista silence caused by military harassment, and a governmental abandonment of this population in resistance. After a long silence, during which many political analysts speculated that Comandante Marcos had left the country, the EZLN again “took over” the city of San Cristóbal de las Casas on January 1, 2003. Following this demonstration of their continued determination and power, they left the city peacefully.

During 2004, in the Municipality of Zinacantan, the Zapatistas and members of the Democratic Revolution Party (PRD), which controls the municipality, came into conflict over access to water. Dozens of Zapatistas were hurt and 125 Zapatista families were displaced from the community of Jechvo as a consequence. Overall, nearly 20,000 indigenous people have been displaced by the conflict in Chiapas.

THE SIXTH DECLARATION OF THE LACANDON JUNGLE

In 2005, after a long consultation process, the EZLN distributed the Sixth Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, in which they announced the decision of Zapatista communities to bet their future on the utopia of political participation with Mexican civil society. The EZLN decided to channel their efforts in alliance with other social movements, particularly with Mexican “workers, campesinos teachers, students, employees . . . the workers of the city and the countryside.” Nevertheless, the EZLN has recently criticized certain political candidates and exhibited a loss of interest in the electoral process and a loss of confidence in Mexican civil society.

There are several possibilities for the future regarding this conflict. On one hand, it is evident that the EZLN will reinforce the “other campaign” that it launched as a new strategy based on listening in order to seek alliances with the Mexican civil society. The EZLN’s role in Mexican politics during the electoral period has been cautious, though decisive in Chiapas. On the other hand, the Mexican government has again diminished the Chiapas conflict and the indigenous people’s demands. It would not be a surprise to see new popular movements or rebellions occurring in Mexico in the near future.

SEE ALSO Mayan Genocide in Guatemala; Violence against Indigenous People, Latin America.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Canal 6 de Julio. 1998. Acteal Masacre de Muerte. Documentary video. Mexico: Canal 6 de Julio
- Collier, George. 1994. Basta! Land and the Zapatista Rebellion in Chiapas. Oakland, CA: Food First.
- Ejército Zapatista de Liberación Nacional (EZLN). Available from <http://www.ezln.org/>. The texts of the six Declarations of the Lacandon Jungle can be found at <http://www.ezln.org/documentos>.
- Holloway, John, and Eloína Peláez, eds. 1998. Zapatista!: Reinventing Revolution in Mexico. London: Pluto Press.
- García de León, Antonio. 1989. Resistencia y utopía. Memorial de agravios y crónica de revueltas y profecías acaecidas en la provincia de Chiapas durante los últimos 500 años de su historia. Mexico City: Editorial ERA.
- Muñoz Ramírez, Gloria. 2003. EZLN: 20 y 10, el fuego y la palabra. Mexico City: Desarrollo de Medios.
- Ordóñez, Carlos Salvador. 1996. “Derechos humanos de los pueblos indios.” In Etnicidad y Derecho un diálogo postergado entre científicos sociales, edited by José Ordóñez. Mexico City: Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México.
- Peace Brigades International. 1996. “Massacre in Acteal (Chenalho), Chiapas—Paramilitary group kills 45 Tzotzil Indians.” Available from <http://www.peacebrigades.org/ern/enchiapas.html>.
- Ruiz Hernández, Margarito. 1999. “La Asamblea Nacional Indígena Plural por la Autonomía. (ANIPA) Proceso de construcción de una propuesta legislativa autonómica nacional.” In México Experiencias de Autonomía Indígena, edited by Aracely Burguete Cal y Mayor. Copenhagen, Denmark: Grupo Internacional de Trabajo Sobre Asuntos Indígenas.
- Servicio Internacional para la Paz (SIPAZ). “Brief History of the Conflict in Chiapas.” Available from http://www.sipaz.org/fini\_eng.htm.
- Vázquez Montalván, Manuel. 2001. Marcos: El señor de los espejos. Madrid, Spain: Aguilar.

Womack, John, ed. 1999. Rebellion in Chiapas: An Historical Reader. New York: New Press.

Carlos Salvador Ordóñez

ZIONISM

Zionism is the political movement created to foster the establishment of a Jewish state. It is based on the idea that Jews, wherever they live, constitute a single people. It developed in Europe in the late nineteenth century against a backdrop of rising nationalism and anti-Jewish sentiment, especially in areas ruled by the czar, where the greatest number of Jews lived, but also in France, where the Dreyfus case revealed widespread resentment of Jews, even in a modern democracy where they were comparatively assimilated. Because it defines Jew not by religious observance, language, place of birth, or culture, but by descent, Zionism is an ideology of race.

To many early Zionists, the location of the future Jewish state was of no importance; among the areas contemplated were Argentina and Uganda. The first World Zionist Congress, organized by Theodore Herzl and held in Basel, Switzerland, in 1897, set its sights on Palestine in order to draw upon the religious tradition that holds that with the coming of the Messiah, Jews will be reunited there and the kingdom of God will be accomplished for the whole of humankind.

MODERN PALESTINE

In 1868 there were 13,000 Jews in Palestine, out of an estimated population of 400,000; the majority were religious pilgrims supported by charity from overseas. In 1882 the Frenchman Baron Edmond de Rothschild, combining philanthropy and investment, began to support Jewish settlers from eastern Europe who were brought to Palestine to build a plantation system along the model the French had set up in Algeria. By 1895 the number of Jews had grown to 50,000; they spoke Yiddish, Arabic, Persian, Georgian, and other languages. Hebrew was a liturgical language, spoken in daily life by no one. As late as 1907, Jews made up only 80,000 out of a population of 700,000.

In 1917, Lord Balfour, the British foreign minister, seeking support for Britain’s efforts in World War I, issued a declaration expressing sympathy with efforts to establish a Jewish homeland in Palestine, then under British rule. He also vowed that such a homeland would not harm the interests of the Arab majority. The Zionists seized upon this statement, interpreting it to mean support for a Jewish state. At the time of the Balfour Declaration, Jews constituted less than 10 percent of the population and owned 2.5 percent of the land in Palestine.

The problem of building a Jewish society amid an overwhelmingly non-Jewish majority came to be known as the “conquest of land and labor.” The Zionists formed a corporation, known as the Jewish National Fund (JNF), which acquired land in the name of the Jewish people. They leased this land only to Jews, who were not allowed to sublet it. Leases from the JNF specifically prohibited the employment of non-Jewish labor on JNF plots. In some cases, when land was bought from absentee landlords, the Arab peasants who resided on and worked the land were expelled. The effort to establish a Jewish monopoly extended to industry, and the Zionists formed an institution, the Histadrut, to organize Jewish workers and exclude Arabs from competing with them in the labor market.

Despite these policies, and the encouragement of the British government, in the thirty years following the Balfour Declaration the majority of the world’s Jews showed no interest in settling in Palestine. In the years between 1920 and 1932, only 118,000 Jews moved to Palestine, less than 1 percent of world Jewry. Even after the rise of Hitler, Jews in Europe did not choose Palestine. Out of 2.5 million Jews who fled Europe between 1935 and 1943, scarcely 8.5 percent, about 200,000 persons, went to Palestine. Almost two million went to the Soviet Union, 182,000 to the United States, and 67,000 to Britain—in spite of strict quotas on admissions in the latter two countries.

U.S. and British limitations on the number of Jews admitted coincided with Zionist policy, as enunciated by David Ben-Gurion, the first prime minister of Israel: “If I knew that it would be possible to save all the children in Germany by bringing them over to England, and only half by transporting them to Eretz Yisrael [the Land of Israel], then I would opt for the second alternative. For we must weigh not only the life of these children, but also the history of the People of Israel” (Brenner 1983, pp. 149–150). The policy of attaching more importance to the establishment of Israel than to the survival of the Jews (which was consistent with the Zionist rejection of assimilation) led the Zionists to collaborate with the Nazis (with whom they shared the belief that Jews were a racial community based on blood) in promoting Jewish emigration to Palestine.

THE BIRTH OF ISRAEL

The triumph of Zionism was made possible by the millions left homeless in Europe at the end of World War II, the continued restrictions on immigration to the United States and Britain, and the sympathy Jews had won as victims of Nazi persecution. After Britain announced its intention in 1947 to relinquish its control over Palestine, the United Nations voted to divide Palestine into Arab and Jewish states—awarding the Jewish state 54 percent of the territory, notwithstanding the fact that Jews owned no more than 7 percent of the land. Although 75,000 Jews had moved to Israel between 1945 and 1948, Jews still were a minority in the country. Even before the proclamation of the State of Israel, the Zionists had begun driving out Arab residents. The attack on the Palestine village of Deir Yassin in April 1948, in which Zionist paramilitary forces under the command of the future prime minister Menachem Begin massacred more than 250 Palestinian civilians, thereby sending a message to others that they should depart, is the best-known example of how this population transfer was brought about. Some fled bombing attacks from British planes directly aiding the Israelis. In the war that ensued, the Zionist forces, trained and equipped by Britain and with additional arms from other countries, were easily able to defeat the outnumbered and outgunned forces of Jordan, Egypt and four other Arab states, whose rulers had already accepted the partition of Palestine.

Jewish Landownership in Palestine, 1947.

The war ended with the Zionists in control of 80 percent of Palestine; more than 750,000 Arabs were driven from their homes. Some went to neighboring countries; others became refugees in their own country. These people and their descendants make up the Palestinian refugee problem—one fourth of the total number of refugees in the world. Although the United Nations has repeatedly demanded they be allowed to return, the Israeli government has refused.

The founding of the State of Israel meant the destruction by the Zionists of nearly 400 Arab villages. In a famous speech before students at the Israeli Institute of Technology in Haifa in 1969, Moshe Dayan, the Israeli defense minister from 1967 through 1974, stated:

Jewish villages were built in place of Arab villages. You do not even know the names of these Arab villages, and I do not blame you because geography books no longer exist. Not only do the books not exist, the Arab villages are not there either. Nahal arose in the place of Mahlul; Kibbutz Gvat in the place of Jibta; Kibbutz Sarid in the place of Huneifis; and Kebar Yehusha in the place of Tal al-Shuman. There is not a single place built in this country that did not have a former Arab population (Davis 1987, p. 108).

The first census of the state of Israel, conducted in 1949, counted 650,000 Jews and 150,000 Arabs. The legal foundation for a racial state was laid down in two laws passed the following year. The first, the Law of Return, permitted any Jew, from anywhere in the world, the right to immigrate to Israel and acquire citizenship. The second was the Absentee Property Law, which confiscated the property of Arabs no longer residing on the land over which they held title. Arab refugees living inside Israel were termed “present absentees” and prohibited from returning to their property. Those who attempted to do so were termed “infiltrators,” and some were shot in the attempt. Confiscated lands have since become Israel Lands, leased only to Jews and accounting for the vast majority of new Jewish settlements.

The state of Israel does not belong, even in theory, to those who reside on its territory, but has been held by Israeli courts to be the “sovereign state of the Jewish people,” wherever they may exist. Consistent with this self-conception, the state has never defined its borders or even declared the existence of an Israeli nationality.

JEWISH PRIVILEGES IN ISRAEL

Under Israeli law, anyone born of a Jewish mother is Jewish, unless such a person converts to another religion. The rationale for this departure from the Judaic code is that such persons weaken Jewish national identity because of their tendency to intermarry. At the same time, the State of Israel, eager to increase the numbers of loyal residents, has extended the Right of Return to persons who lack a Jewish mother but have an affiliation with Jewish identity by marriage or inheritance through the male line. Such persons are registered as “under consideration.” In addition, a few individuals have gained Jewish status by converting to Judaism and having their conversion officially approved.

Jew in Israel is an assigned identity. Among the privileges attached to it, in addition to immigration and land acquisition, are citizenship, housing preferences, education and employment opportunities, political participation, and preferred treatment within the justice system.

Citizenship. Jews who immigrate to Israel become citizens automatically. Arabs seeking citizenship must meet a series of requirements, with final discretion resting with the minister of the interior. This applies also to Arabs born in what is now Israel but who resided elsewhere for any period of time. Arab noncitizens who marry citizens receive only residency status, not citizenship. As one scholar has stated, “citizenship is almost never granted to non-Jews” (Adalah 1998, pp. 24–28).

Housing. The government of Israel openly discriminates in housing. The Supreme Court has ruled that an Arab seeking to buy a home in a Jewish district could legally be barred from doing so on the grounds that the apartments were intended to help Jews overcome the effects of discrimination under British rule. Rates for government-subsidized mortgages are at least one-third lower for Jews than for non-Jews. The authorities restrict the development of Arab towns by denying them expansion permits, while permits are granted to Jewish towns with smaller populations. Building licenses are routinely denied to Arabs, and obstacles are placed in the way of Arabs when they seek to build homes. Of 429 localities designated as National Priority A Areas under the National Planning and Building Law, only four are Arab. As a result, Arabs have been forced into overcrowded areas in mixed cities and into unrecognized towns lacking such basic services as running water, sewers, and electricity. Residents of these areas live under constant threat of being evicted and having their homes demolished.

Education and Family Policy. The country operates what is essentially a segregated school system. Significant gaps exist between Jewish and Arab schools at every level from early childhood to higher education. The Ministry of Education exercises control over the curriculum for Arab schools and secular Jewish schools, while granting autonomy to Jewish religious schools. The curriculum, even in Arab schools, stresses Jewish history and culture and ignores the history and culture of the indigenous Palestinians. Because Arabs do not serve in the armed forces, they are not eligible for financial benefits, including scholarships, loans, and child allowances available to those who serve. The Supreme Court has ruled, however, that paying subsidies to Jewish students who study in religious schools and are exempt from military service, while denying them to Arab students who do not serve, is not discriminatory.

Employment. The Histadrut was born as a combination labor union and cooperative society for Jewish workers. For many years it was the dominant institution in Israeli society and served as the mass base for the governing Labour Party. In recent years, as the Israeli economy has evolved, the Histadrut has faded in importance, but its legacy remains, as Jewish workers dominate the advanced sectors of the economy and Arab workers constitute a low caste. Further, Arab workers are increasingly being displaced by Thais and Filipinos, partly in response to the growth of the Palestinian resistance.

Political Participation. No party that denies the existence of Israel as a Jewish state is permitted to contest elections. It is against the law even to display symbols and sing anthems of anti-Zionist groups. Furthermore, the major parties have made it clear that no governing coalition can depend on the support of the Arab community (which makes up 20% of the population), and no important decision relating to the future of the Jewish state can be taken without a Jewish majority in parliament. Thus, the non-Jewish minority is prevented not merely from seeking to overturn its second-class status through parliamentary means, but even from throwing its weight on the scale when Jewish opinion is divided.

The Justice System. The state does not provide comparative information on sentencing of Jews and Arabs convicted of criminal offenses, but an examination of court records shows great disparities in sentencing as well as indictments. Israeli courts, up to the Supreme Court, have consistently ruled that discrimination between Arabs and Jews is legitimate given the founding of Israel as a state for Jews. In one representative case, a Jewish settler was convicted of shooting an Arab child. The judge sentenced him to a suspended jail term of six months plus community service. In response to critics, the judge declared, "It is wrong to demand in the name of equality, equal bearing and equal sentences to two offenders who have different nationalities who break the laws of the State. The sentence that deters the one and his audience, does not deter the other and his community" (Adalah 1998, pp. 17–21).

The types of discrimination noted above apply within the so-called "Green Line"—the area of the Israeli state as set up in 1948. In 1967, Israel occupied East Jerusalem, the West Bank of the Jordan River, the Sinai Peninsula, and the Gaza Strip, restoring the territorial integrity of Palestine, which had been an administrative unit for centuries, first under Ottoman and later under Palestinians Walk Past Israel's Controversial Separation Barrier in Jerusalem, 2007. In 2002 the Israeli government, citing the need to maintain internal security, began building a thirty-foot-high concrete-and-barbed-wire Separation Barrier throughout historic Palestine. AP IMAGES.

British rule, except for the two decades after 1948. After 1967 the system of military administration first established in 1948, which had been partially lifted within Israel in 1966, was imposed on the remainder of Palestine, and the area was opened for Jewish settlement, with state subsidies for settlers.

In the early twentieth century there are 500,000 Jews residing in the West Bank. They live in fortified towns surrounded by soldiers, are served by their own services and utilities, and are connected by a network of roads for Jews only. Arab cities and towns are isolated from each other by hundreds of checkpoints and motorways on which Arabs are forbidden to travel. In 2002, the Israeli government, citing the need to maintain internal security, began building a thirty-foot-high concrete-and-barbed-wire structure snaking through historic Palestine. Although the barrier was, in theory, to follow the Green Line (except for East Jerusalem, which was officially annexed to Israel), it became an opportunity for new Jewish expansion. In 2003, the military commander of the West Bank signed an order declaring all land between the Wall and the Green Line closed to all but Israeli citizens.

DEMOCRACY IN ISRAEL

Since the founding of the State of Israel, its defenders have had difficulty reconciling the reality of a Jewish state with a vision of democracy. Some have dealt with the matter by rejecting democracy as a goal for non-Jews. Among this number is Ariel Sharon, who became prime minister in 2001; Sharon stated, "Our grandparents did not come here to build a democratic state. They came to build a Jewish state." Others have denied any contradiction, insisting on both the Jewish and democratic character of the state. For these people, the occupation of the West Bank and Gaza has posed new ideological problems: If the Arabs living within the State of Israel, comprising one-fifth of the population of Israel, can be said to be second-class citizens, the 3.5 million Arabs residing in the territories occupied after 1967 must be regarded as stateless people with no representation or legal rights whatever. Under pressure from internal critics and international opinion, the Zionist authorities have accepted the principle of a separate state on some part of historic Palestine. The problem, then, has become how to maximize the area to become part of the Jewish state while minimizing the numbers of indigenous Palestinians within it. To this end, Zionist authorities have continued to expand the Jewish settlements (to strengthen their claims to additional land in anticipation of a settlement) while evicting indigenous Palestinians, destroying villages, and making life difficult for those who remain.

Zionist authorities have since withdrawn from Gaza, a six-by-twenty-eight mile strip of land that is home to 1.4 million indigenous Palestinians, mostly refugees from 1948 or 1967 and their descendants. They have removed 7,500 Jewish settlers (1.7 percent of the total number of settlers in the territories occupied by Israel after 1967), but have left the area surrounded by barbed-wire electric fences and guard towers. All traffic and commerce into and out of Gaza are controlled by Israel, as are the airspace and water resources. There are even plans for an offshore fence to provide Israel with full control of its coastal boundary.

Meanwhile, the expulsion of Palestinians from the West Bank continues without interruption. It appears that the dream of one of the principal architects of the Jewish state is close to being realized: As Joseph Weitz, former chairman of the Israel Land Authority, stated, "Among ourselves it must be clear that there is no place in our country for both peoples together. The only solution is Eretz Israel, or at least the western half of Eretz Israel, without Arabs, and there is no other way but to transfer the Arabs from here to the neighboring countries, transfer all of them, not one village or tribe should remain."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Adalah: The Legal Center for Arab Minority Rights in Israel. 1998. Equal Rights and Minority Rights for the Palestinian

Arab Minority in Israel: A Report to the UN Human Rights Committee on Israel's Implementation of Articles 26 and 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Shfaram, Israel: Adalah. Available from <http://www.arabhra.org/publications/reports/PDF/lccpr98.pdf>.

Al-Qawuqji, Fauzi. 1972. "Memoirs, 1948 Part 1." Journal of Palestine Studies 1 (4): 27–58.

Brenner, Lenni. 1983. Zionism in the Age of the Dictators. Westport, CT: Lawrence Hill.

Davis, Uri. 1987. Israel: An Apartheid State. London: Zed Books.

Finkelstein, Norman. 2003. Image and Reality of the Israel-Palestine Conflict, 2nd ed. London: Verso.

Khalidi, Walid. 1988. "Plan Dalet: Master Plan for the Conquest of Palestine." Journal of Palestine Studies 18 (1): 4–33.

Menuhin, Moshe. 1965. The Decadence of Judaism in Our Time. New York: Exposition Press.

Morris, Benny. 1988. The Birth of the Palestinian Refugee Problem, 1947–1949. Cambridge, U.K.: Cambridge University Press.

Qumsiyeh, Mazin B. 2004. Sharing the Land of Canaan: Human Rights and the Israeli-Palestinian Struggle. London: Pluto Press.

Segev, Tom. 1999. One Palestine, Complete: Jews and Arabs under the British Mandate. Translated by Haim Watzman. New York: Henry Holt.

Shlaim, Avi. 1988. Collusion across the Jordan: King Abdullah, the Zionist Movement and the Partition of Palestine. Oxford: Clarendon Press.

———. 1995. "The Debate about 1948." International Journal of Middle Eastern Studies 27: 287–304.

van Creveld, Martin. 1998. The Sword and the Olive: A Critical History of the Israeli Defense Force. New York: Perseus.

Noel Ignatiev

ZOOT SUIT RIOTS

The "Zoot Suit Riots" occurred in Los Angeles from roughly June 3 to June 13, 1943. Although there were few reported serious injuries and property damage was minimal relative to other major twentieth-century civil disturbances, this event represents an especially violent episode in the history of race and racism in the United States.

During the Zoot Suit Riots, white servicemen, some of whom were accompanied by civilians, attacked "zooters," or youths wearing zoot suits. In particular, they targeted zoot-clad Mexican Americans, who were sometimes known as pachucos and pachucas. For at least ten days, servicemen from across Southern California, and some from as far away as Las Vegas, Nevada, poured into Los Angeles and roamed the streets of downtown, Chinatown, Chavez Ravine, East Los Angeles, and Watts in search of their prey. In some instances, they stopped and boarded streetcars, burst into movie houses and private homes, and set upon people of color regardless of their attire. When they apprehended zooters, they sometimes sheared their hair and stripped them of their distinctive clothing. All the while, the police turned a blind eye to the rampaging servicemen but arrested zooters.

By 1943 the zoot suit had become a symbol of youthful rebellion, working-class style, racial difference, and even un-Americanism. With its excessive use of fabric, the masculine version of the zoot suit—which usually consisted of a long coat, billowing trousers that tapered at the ankle, a long watch chain that sometimes extended from the waist to the calves, a pair of thick-soled shoes, and in some instances, a broad-brimmed hat—represented an affront to wartime rationing measures. Female zooters often wore dark lipstick, a skirt that exposed the knees, and either a V-neck or cardigan sweater or a long coat similar to that of their male counterparts. Some wore the masculine version of the zoot suit. In addition, both female and male zooters wore their hair in a distinctive style. Many female zooters used foam inserts known as “rats” to lift their hair into a high bouffant, while their male counterparts often combed their hair in a pompadour on top and a ducktail in back. With his relatively long hair and flamboyant costume, the black or brown male zooter appeared to be the antithesis of the clean-cut and uniformed white serviceman. Female zooters, meanwhile, especially those who cross-dressed, defied conventional standards of feminine beauty and decency.

During World War II, the zoot look peaked in popularity in the United States among working-class youths of various races and ethnicities, many of whom were jazz and jitterbug aficionados. As they entered the wartime consumer-wage economy, these young men and women flaunted their new-found spending power on the street and in places of leisure, such as ballrooms, movie houses, and billiard halls. Across the Atlantic, French youths known as les zazous adopted a look similar to that of American zooters, and after World War II a variation of the zoot suit spread to youths in Britain.

Despite its widespread popularity, the zoot suit came to be associated in Los Angeles with racial minorities, especially Mexican Americans. Law enforcement and the mainstream press branded Mexican-American zooters juvenile delinquents in the wake of what became known as the Sleepy Lagoon incident. This event took place the night of August 1, 1942, and involved an alleged gang fight and murder at a swimming hole in Los Angeles. During the Grand Jury hearing that followed, Captain Edward Duran Ayres of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department argued that by virtue of their Aztec blood, Mexican Americans were intrinsically more violent than, and therefore biologically inferior to, white Americans. Ironically, as the United States combated Nazi eugenics and anti-Semitism abroad, the Ayres report blatantly espoused biological racism on the home front. Furthermore, it equated Mexicans with “Orientals” and, by extension, the Japanese enemy. Like Japanese Americans, Mexican Americans exceeded the putative black-white binary of American racial identity. Bilingual and bicultural, many of these racial and cultural hybrids embodied an alien ambiguity during a period of heightened jingoism, xenophobia, and paranoia.

Servicemen During the Zoot Suit Riots. During the Zoot Suit Riots in 1943, white servicemen attacked youths wearing zoot suits in Los Angeles. © BETTMANN/CORBIS.

During the Sleepy Lagoon investigation and trial, Los Angeles's dominant newspapers fomented anti-Mexican hysteria by publishing stories about violent, marijuana-addicted, sexually depraved, zoot-clad Mexican-American youths. In doing so, they rendered the zoot suit a hallmark of Mexican-American juvenile delinquency and sexual pathology. Angeleno newspapers continued to publish sensationalist stories about predatory pachucos and loose pachucas in the days and weeks prior to the Zoot Suit Riots. On the eve of the outbreak of violence, they reported that pachucos harassed and raped women, notably sailors' wives and girlfriends.

The Zoot Suit Riots were the culmination of a series of altercations between pachucos, pachucas, and servicemen, many of whom were stationed in neighborhoods with high concentrations of Mexican Americans. As a contest over public space, the riots revealed a latent anxiety concerning Mexican Americans' place on city streets and in the nation. Prior to World War II, Mexicans in the United States were a primarily immigrant, poor, rural, and relatively invisible population. However, the exigencies of war pulled them and their American-born children into a stratified urban proletariat. In their showy ensembles, second-generation pachucas and pachucos were especially conspicuous. Moreover, the riots expressed anxiety regarding the fluidity of gender and sexuality. As servicemen “depantsed” male zooters and cut their hair, they forced their victims to conform to a narrow definition of heterosexual and American manhood.

Zoot Suit Riots

The Zoot Suit Riots ended after the Navy barred sailors from Los Angeles. Although city officials adamantly denied that the riots were racist, members of the committee convened by Governor Earl Warren to investigate the event maintained that “race prejudice” had been a factor. Across the United States, violence continued to erupt in urban centers with relatively high concentrations of African Americans, such as Detroit, New York, and Philadelphia, during the summer of 1943.

Within Chicano studies, the Zoot Suit Riots continue to receive considerable attention. Scholars, artists, and activists have looked to the riots as a turning point in Mexican-American history, and to the pachuco as an icon of Chicano resistance and style.

SEE ALSO Chicano Movement; Mexicans.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Alvarez, Luis. 2005. “Zoot Violence on the Home Front: Race, Riots, and Youth Culture during World War II.” In Mexican Americans and World War II, edited by Maggie Rivas-Rodríguez, 141–175. Austin: University of Texas Press.
- Escobar, Edward J. 1999. Race, Police, and the Making of a Political Identity: Mexican Americans and the Los Angeles Police Department, 1900–1945. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Mazón, Mauricio. 1984. The Zoot Suit Riots: The Psychology of Symbolic Annihilation. Austin: University of Texas Press.
- McWilliams, Carey. 1968 (1948). North from Mexico: The Spanish-speaking People of the United States. New York: Greenwood Press.
- Pagán, Eduardo Obregón. 2003. Murder at the Sleepy Lagoon: Zoot Suits, Race, and Riot in Wartime L.A. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Ramírez, Catherine S. 2002. “Crimes of Fashion: The Pachuca and Chicana Style Politics.” Meridians: Feminism, Race, Transnationalism 2 (2): 1–35.

Catherine S. Ramírez

Annotated Filmography

Compiled by Antoinette Jackson, Ph.D., University of South Florida. Note from author: In addition to consulting with numerous friends and colleagues and perusing my own library of sources (as well as the Internet), I found the following sources very informative: California Newsreel, which produces and distributes cutting edge, social justice films that inspire, educate, and engage audiences (founded in 1968, California Newsreel is the oldest nonprofit, social issue documentary film center in the country); First Run/Icarus Films; The Black Film Center and Archive, Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana; the Journal of Chicano Studies; the 1998 Aztlan Film Institute's list of top 100 films; Third World Newsreel; Women Make Movies, a multi-cultural, multiracial, nonprofit media arts organization that facilitates the production, promotion, distribution, and exhibition of independent films and videotapes by and about women; and the Independent Television Service (ITVS), which brings to local, national, and international audiences high-quality, content-rich programs created by a diverse body of independent producers. ITVS programs take creative risks, explore complex issues, and express points of view seldom seen on commercial or public television. ITVS programming reflects voices and visions of underrepresented communities and addresses the needs of underserved audiences, particularly minorities and children.

FEATURE AND SHORT FILMS

Adangaman (French and Bambara). 2000. Directed by Roger Gnoam M'bala. Abyssa Film. M'bala's film provides an African perspective of the seventeenth-century slave trade.

Avalon. 1990. Directed by Barry Levinson. Baltimore Pictures. An autobiographical story of a family of eastern European Jewish immigrants to the United States who settle in Baltimore, Maryland, at the beginning of the twentieth century. Avalon explores themes of assimilation, modernity, and the change faced by an immigrant family in America.

BabaKiueria. 1986. Directed by Don Featherstone. A satirical made-for-TV film made by the Australian Aboriginal community to commemorate the bicentennial of British rule. The 29-minute film is in fact a role-reversal study, presenting a fictional past in which indigenous Australians invade BabaKiueria, a land of stereotypical European Australians.

Bamboozled. 2000. Directed by Spike Lee. In this satire of the TV industry, a failing network hits the ratings jackpot by marketing an old-time black minstrel show, complete with reconstructed racist stereotypes.

The Battle of Algiers (French, Italian, English, and Arabic). 1967. Directed by Gillo Pontecorvo. Casbah Films. The story of the Algerian struggle to gain independence from French colonialism.

The Birth of a Nation. 1915. Directed by D. W. Griffith. David W. Griffith Corporation. A Civil War and Reconstruction era drama and an enormously popular film in its day, this controversial classic dramatizes the racial beliefs and fears of whites in America following the Civil War through the racist portrayals of stereotypes and caricatures of blacks (primarily played by white actors in blackface), framed against a backdrop of "white heroes" (i.e., the Ku Klux Klan).

Black and White in Color (Noirs et blancs en couleur). 1976. Directed by Jean-Jacques Annaud. France 3 Cinéma. A clever satire, this French film looks at World War I imperialism, the impact of colonialism, and the ideology of racial superiority through an array of characters stationed at an African trading post run by French colonials. It won an Academy Award for Best Foreign Picture.

Blood of the Condor (Quechua and Spanish). 1969. Directed by Jorge Sanjinés. Ukamau Group. The classic film Blood of the Condor (Yawar mallku) is set in Bolivia and focuses on actual events that occurred in a Quechua community in 1968. People who appear to be U.S. Peace Corps volunteers establish a medical and birth-control clinic in which women are sterilized without their knowledge or consent. Violence ensues, and viewers are taken from the highlands and the exploration of race relations within the village to urban La Paz, where the treatment of indigenous people seeking help is explored.

La Boca del Lobo. (The Lion's Den). 1988. Directed by Francisco J. Lombardi. Inca Film. Based on true incidents that took place in the mountain town of Chuspi, Peru, between 1980 and 1983, the film examines a violent struggle between the Peruvian military and the Shining Path guerrillas. A Quechua community in highland Peru is caught in the middle of the violence, graphically illustrating the conflation of "Indian" and "subversive" and the relationship between gender and racism. In Spanish.

The Brother from Another Planet. 1984. Directed by John Sayles. Anarchist's Convention Films. Sayles's satire literalizes race by presenting "the brother" as an alien who looks very much like a black man and has landed in Harlem, New York.

Brother to Brother. 2004. Directed by Rodney Evans. Miasma Films. This drama about famous faces from the Harlem Renaissance (e.g., Langston Hughes, Zora Neale Hurston) provides an inspiring story about racial politics and sexuality in twentieth-century urban America. The film won a Special Jury Prize at the Sundance Film Festival.

Chronicle of the Years of Embers (Chronique des années de braise). 1975. Directed by Mohamed Lakhdar-Hamina. Algeria's struggle for independence from French colonial rule is the subject of this Arabic-language film. The story follows a peasant's migration from his drought-stricken village to his eventual participation with the Algerian resistance movement, just prior to the outbreak of the Algerian War of Independence. The film won the prestigious Palme d'Or at Cannes in 1975.

The Colored Museum. 1991. Directed by Andrew Carl Wilk and George C. Wolfe. Public Broadcasting Service (PBS). A critical satire that addresses the impact of slavery on America from the perspective of African Americans impacted by the baggage, burden, and struggles that the legacy of slavery has brought to bear on issues of identity.

Crash. 2005. Directed by Paul Haggis. Bull's Eye Entertainment. Several stories interweave during two days in Los Angeles, as a collection of interrelated characters experience the impact of race and racial stereotypes on day-to-day relationships and encounters, sometimes with tragic results. The film won the Academy Award for Best Picture.

Cry Freedom. 1987. Directed by Richard Attenborough. Marble Arch Productions. Set in the late 1970s during the apartheid era in South Africa, Cry Freedom is based on the true story of newspaper editor David Woods's investigation into the death of nationalist leader Steve Biko, who was murdered while in police custody.

The Crying Game. 1992. Directed by Neil Jordan. British Screen Productions. Provides a look into colonial and postcolonial British subjectivity, including smart intersections with race, class, sexuality, and gender.

Daughters of the Dust. 1991. Directed by Julie Dash. American Playhouse. An excellent film that honors African ancestry and spirituality in America by telling the story of the Gullah people of the Sea Islands off the South Carolina and Georgia coast. Gullah culture is explored by focusing on one family's history and experiences.

A Day Without a Mexican. 2004. Directed by Sergio Arau. Eye on the Ball Films. A satirical look at what would happen if all the Latinos suddenly disappeared from California.

Days of Glory (Indigènes). French and Arabic. 2006. Directed by Richid Bouchareb. Tessalit Productions. During World War II, four North African men enlist in the French army to liberate that country from Nazi oppression and fight French discrimination.

Do the Right Thing. 1989. Directed by Spike Lee. 40 Acres & A Mule Filmworks. On a hot day in the predominantly black Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood of Brooklyn, New York, an eruption of racial tensions is prompted by a chain of interrelated events.

Driving Miss Daisy. 1989. Directed by Bruce Beresford. Majestic Films International. When an elderly Jewish widow living in Atlanta in the 1950s finds she can no longer drive, her son hires a black driver. Although she is highly resistant at first, the two slowly become friends. The film chronicles nearly twenty years of racial history in the U.S. South through their life experiences of traveling together. Based on Alfred Uhry's Pulitzer Prize-winning play, the film won the Academy Award for Best Picture.

The End of Violence (English and Spanish). 1997. Directed by Wim Wenders. Ciby Pictures. When a wealthy director is forced to go into hiding, his life becomes enmeshed with the lives of the workers he encounters and lives with for a time. The film deals - with issues of race, class, and the invisibility of Mexican workers.

- Final Solution. 2001. Directed by Cristóbal Krusen. Integrity Media. Based on the life of the Afrikaner racist named Gerrit Wolfaardt, Final Solution deals with the final days of apartheid in South Africa. The film has a religious message of redemption and a story line that appeals to a broad audience.
- Forgiveness. 2004. Directed by Ian Gabriel. Giant Films. A complex film on the theme of truth and reconciliation. A former South African policeman seeks forgiveness from the family of an ANC activist that he tortured and killed.
- Gandhi. 1982. Directed by Richard Attenborough. Carolina Bank. A chronicle of the life of Mohandas “Mahatma” Gandhi, from his beginnings as a South African–educated lawyer through his historic, galvanizing struggle to free India from British colonial rule.
- God’s Stepchildren. 1938. Written, produced, and directed by Oscar Micheaux. Micheaux Film Corporation. A look at issues of racial passing and other intraracial power dynamics.
- Having Our Say: The Delany Sisters’ First 100 Years. 1999. Directed by Lynne Littman. Columbia TriStar Television. A made-for-TV movie based on the true story of Sadie and Bessie Delany, who lived well beyond the age of 100 after having built successful careers at a time when most women—and most African Americans—were being denied opportunities in the United States due to segregation, racism, and sexism.
- Hotel Rwanda (English and French). 2004. Directed by Terry George. Kigali Releasing Limited. A tragic accounting of the Rwanda genocide, which claimed an estimated 800,000 lives. The film tells the story of one man’s courage in the face of ethnic violence when two arbitrarily defined ethnic groups, the Tutsis and Hutus, are pitted against one another.
- Hush-a-Bye Baby. 1990. Directed by Margo Harkin. Channel 4 Television Corporation (Great Britain). The tale of a fifteen-year-old girl in Northern Ireland who discovers she is pregnant after her boyfriend is locked up in a British prison.
- I Am Joaquin (English and Spanish). 1969. Directed by Luis Valdez. A graphic presentation of one of the most influential poems of the Chicano movement, this 20-minute film is a first-person narrative of independence that exposes viewers to leading figures and major events in Mexican and Chicano history.
- Illusions. 1982. Written and directed by Julie Dash. Dash’s short film explores the illusions perpetuated by the Hollywood studio system in terms of stereotypes of race, gender, and class. The story revolves around two women who pass for white in the film industry in the 1940s.
- Imitation of Life. 1934. Directed by John M. Stahl. Universal. A tragic look into the social realities of race in America, focusing on the story of a mother and daughter engaged in the politics of “passing for white” and the toll it takes on their relationship. Nominated for three Academy Awards. The film was remade in 1959, when it was directed by Douglas Sirk.
- Inch’Allah dimanche (French and Arabic). 2001. Directed by Yamina Benguigui. ARP Sélection. In the aftermath of World War II, France attempted to replenish its weakened work force by recruiting men from North Africa. In the mid-1970s, the French government relaxed its immigration policy to allow the families of the Algerian men to join them. This film is a moving story of Zouina, a woman who leaves her homeland with her three children to join her husband in France, where he’s been living for the past ten years. It underscores the sense of isolation and vulnerability that the immigrant family experienced upon their arrival at a time when racial integration was virtually nonexistent.
- Jungle Fever. 1991. Directed by Spike Lee. 40 Acres & A Mule Filmworks. A successful married African American architect begins an interracial romance with an Italian American woman who is hired as a temporary secretary by his firm. The lovers come under intense pressure from family and friends as a result of their relationship. The term jungle fever is used in the film to refer to the sexual attraction between two different races.
- Killer of Sheep. 1977. Directed by Charles Burnett. An award-winning film shot in the Los Angeles neighborhood of Watts in the 1970s. It is a richly descriptive black-and-white art film about the lives of poor black people in America that reaches beyond stereotypical profiles.
- Lagaan: Once Upon a Time in India. 2001. Directed by Ashutosh Gowariker. An examination of race and imperialism in colonial India. Set in the latter half of the nineteenth century, “Lagaan” looks at the adversities and injustice perpetrated by the British upon the innocent peasants who face extraordinary circumstances with fortitude and dignity.
- Living in Paradise (Vivre au paradis). 1998. Directed by Bourlem Guerdjou. 3B Productions. Set in France in 1961–1962, this film depicts the conditions of life of Algerian immigrant workers in France during the last days of French colonial rule in Algeria. In French and Arabic.

Lone Star. 1996. Directed by John Sayles. Castle Rock. In the Texas border town of Frontera, people of differing ethnicities face difficult social problems as they grapple with questions of race, ethnicity, history, identity, economic and political power, education, and the future of the town. The plot is set in motion by the discovery of the remains of the town's former sheriff.

The Long Walk Home. 1990. Directed by Richard Pearce. New Vision Pictures. A dramatization of the events in Montgomery, Alabama, in 1955–1956, when blacks boycotted public transportation. It highlights the friendship, courage, and determination of two women (a maid and her employer) facing racial tensions in the American South.

The Lunch Date. 1989. Directed by Adam Davidson. In a cafe, a white woman walks away from her table to get silverware. When she returns, she sees a black man eating her lunch. What ensues in this classic short tells a simple but powerful story about race, racial stereotyping, and wrong assumptions.

Malcolm X. 1992. Directed by Spike Lee. 40 Acres & A Mule Filmworks. Award-winning biography of Malcolm X, documenting the numerous transformations the famous African American leader went through during his life. Beginning with his birth as Malcolm Little, the son of a minister killed by the Ku Klux Klan, the film explores his life as a gangster, his religious conversion to the Nation of Islam, and his pilgrimage to the city of Mecca. Malcolm's struggle to overcome the impact and challenges of racism in America, on both a personal and public leadership level, is explored.

Men With Guns. 1997. Directed by John Sayles. Anarchist's Convention Films. A retired physician seeks to learn the result of a health-care project in the provinces of a Spanish-speaking country where indigenous peoples live with the challenges of improper medical care. Issues of race, place, and class are examined through the life-and-death struggle between government and guerrilla forces.

Mississippi Masala. 1991. Directed by Mira Nair. Black River Productions. An Indian family, after being expelled from Uganda when Idi Amin takes power, moves to Mississippi, where an Indian daughter falls in love with a black man. Tensions erupt as everyone deals with issues of race, ethnicity, and the power of love.

Monster's Ball. 2001. Directed by Marc Forster. Lee Daniels Entertainment; Lionsgate Films. An inter-generational look at the toil racism, racist thinking, and hatred have on one family and those they encounter. An embittered prison guard, Hank, lives with his aging racist father and his own twenty-something son. Hank's interracial affair with the widow of an inmate he helped prepare for death in the electric chair forces him to reevaluate how deeply prison work and his father's hatred have affected his life.

Mother India (Hindi). 1957. Directed by Mehboob Khan. Mehboob Productions; British Film Institute. One of the first great epics of Indian cinema, Mother India has had a profound influence in Bollywood and beyond. The film is an epic drama of human struggle, including gendered dialogues on colonialism and nationalism in the early twentieth century.

My Family (Mi Familia). 1995. Directed by Gregory Nava. American Playhouse. A story about three generations of a Mexican American family that emigrated from Mexico to Los Angeles beginning in the 1930s. The family members face challenges of ethnic bigotry, assimilation, acculturation, and past family problems.

El Norte 1983. Directed by Gregory Nava. American Playhouse. This epic film tells the story of a Guatemalan brother and sister who fled persecution at home and journeyed north with dreams of finding a new home in the United States. They are treated as illegal aliens in a country whose economy functions on the cheap labor that they provide. El Norte explores the conflicting experiences, including racial and ethnic challenges, faced by people trying to achieve the "American Dream."

Once Upon a Time When We Were Colored. 1995. Directed by Tim Reid. BET Pictures. The lives and day-to-day experiences of an African American family are examined from the perspective of a young male member of a family growing up in the U.S. South during the period of racial segregation.

Pièces d'Identités (Pieces of Identity). French and Wolof. 1998. Produced and directed by Mweze Ngangura. Films Sud; California Newsreel. On the surface this is the timeless story of an old king, his beautiful daughter, and the Prince Charming who rescues them. At the same time, it raises the troubling issues of identity facing people of African descent in the diaspora during the late twentieth century. The film shows both the daily indignities Africans face at the hands of racist police and ordinary citizens as well as decent white citizens who help the king along his journey.

Please Don't Bury Me Alive (English and Spanish). 1976. Produced and directed by Efraín Gutiérrez. An important example of regional filmmaking, this bicultural and bilingual narrative expanded the way that films are made. It profiles barrio life in South Texas while dramatizing the challenges facing a young Chicano in the spring of 1972 during the Chicano movement. The film is described as being as significant to paradigm development as "race movies" were for black audiences from the 1920s to the 1940s.

- Pride. 2007. Directed by Sunu Gonera. Lionsgate Films. Based on true events, the film, set in 1973, tells the story of Jim Ellis, a college-educated African American who lands a job with the Philadelphia Department of Parks and Recreation. Driven by his love of competitive swimming, he proceeds to restore the abandoned recreational pool hall in the poor Philadelphia neighborhood where he works to restore its former level of beauty and functionality. Jim fights city officials, who mark the facility for demolition, and racism within and outside the community to recruit and transform a motley team of novices into capable swimmers in time for the upcoming state championships.
- Quilombo. 1986. Directed by Carlos Diegues. CDK; Embrafilme; Société des Etablissements L. Gaumont. Palmares is a seventeenth-century quilombo, a settlement of escaped slaves in northeast Brazil. In 1650, plantation slaves revolt and head for the mountains, where they find others led by the aged seer Acotirene. She anoints one of them, who becomes Ganga Zumba, a legendary king. For years, his warriors hold off Portuguese raiders.
- Rabbit-Proof Fence. 2002. Directed by Phillip Noyce. Australian Film Commission. A tale of Aboriginal defiance in the face of racism and racist practices in Australia in the 1930s, told through the lives of three young girls.
- A Raisin in the Sun. 1961. Directed by Daniel Petrie. This adaptation of Lorraine Hansberry's award-winning and highly acclaimed play examines African American life in the 1950s. It profiles the life of a black family in a Chicago South Side tenement, particularly their hopes of escaping the bigoted and oppressive environment in which they live.
- Real Women Have Curves. 2002. Directed by Patricia Cardoso. HBO Independent Productions. Ana, a first generation Mexican American teenager on the verge of becoming a woman, lives in the predominately Latino community of East Los Angeles. Freshly graduated from high school, she receives a full scholarship to Columbia University and is torn between her mainstream ambitions and her cultural heritage. The film highlights issues of race, place, and ethnic identity in America.
- Roots. 1977. Directed by Marvin J. Chomsky, John Erman, David Greene, and Gilbert Moses. David L. Wolper Productions. The famous TV miniseries is a saga of African American life based on the writer Alex Haley's family history. The story begins with the abduction of Kunta Kinte from his African village. He is then sold into slavery and taken to America. Throughout the series, notable events in U.S. history, such as the Revolutionary and Civil Wars, slave uprisings, and emancipation, serve as a background to the life experiences of Kunte Kinte's family.
- Rosewood. 1997. Directed by John Singleton. New Deal Productions. The film depicts the horrific attack of a racist lynch mob on an African American community in the 1920s, when a black town in Florida was burned to the ground.
- Ruby Bridges. 1998. Directed by Euzhan Palcy. Marian Rees Associates. The true story of Ruby Bridges, a six-year-old African American girl who helped to integrate the all-white schools of New Orleans in 1960.
- Sankofa. 1993. Written, directed, and produced by Haile Gerima. Channel Four Films (U.K.). The legacy of slavery is revisited in the present by a black woman's visit to a slave castle as a tourist and model on a film shoot in Ghana, West Africa. This movie by the Ethiopian-born Gerima offers a powerful look at the brutality and cruelty of slavery in America and the role Africans in America played in working together to fight the conditions imposed upon them.
- Schindler's List. 1993. Directed by Steven Spielberg. Amblin Entertainment; Universal Pictures. Spielberg's film is based on the true story of a Czech businessman, Oskar Schindler, who used Jewish labor to start a factory in Nazi-occupied Poland. As World War II progresses, and the fate of Jews under Hitler's regime becomes more and more clear, Schindler's motivations switch from profit to sympathy and he is able to save over 1,100 Jews from death in the gas chambers.
- School Daze. 1988. Directed by Spike Lee. 40 Acres & A Mule Filmworks. A comedic look at black college life. Two groups clash over the Greek fraternity system and issues of self-identity and self-esteem.
- Seguin. 1979. Directed by Jesús Salvador Treviño. KCET Los Angeles. A PBS American Playhouse drama that was broadcast nationally, this film tells the controversial story of Juan Seguin, who fought on the side of the Anglo-Americans against Mexican General Santa Ana at the battle of the Alamo. Seguin is portrayed as a hero of the revolution in Texas who later becomes a victim of racial and cultural prejudice.
- Smoke Signals. 1998. Directed by Chris Eyre. Based on characters in Sherman Alexie's short story collection, The Lone Ranger and Tonto Fistfight in Heaven, the film tells the story of Victor Joseph and Thomas Builds-the-Fire, who live on an Indian reservation in Idaho. When Victor's father dies in Arizona, the two young men set out to retrieve his ashes and belongings. Along the way they do some soul searching regarding their identity as "Indians" in America.

Sunshine State. 2002. Directed by John Sayles. Anarchist's Convention Films. Explores the implications of corporations buying property in a Florida beach town. Race, gender, and class are major factors in the tensions that arise as local residents confront corporate real estate developers in an effort to preserve the rich history and heritage of the community.

To Kill a Mockingbird. 1962. Directed by Robert Mulligan. Brentwood Pictures. An award-winning film based on Harper Lee's Pulitzer Prize-winning book of 1960. Atticus Finch, a lawyer in a racially divided Alabama town in the 1930s, agrees to defend a young black man who is accused of raping a white woman.

Tsotsi (Zulu, Xhosa, Afrikaans, English). 2005. Directed by Gavin Hood. UK Film & TV Production Company PLC. Based on a novel by the South African writer Athol Fugard, Tsotsi is an extremely violent yet poignant look at one boy's life as a thug in a township in South Africa. It tells the story of a tiny fraction of township life in South Africa, contrasting the boy's life with that of an upper-middle-class family in South Africa.

Watermelon Woman. 1996. Directed by Cheryl Dunye. Dancing Girl; First Run Features. An exploration of cinematic representations of black women that refute racist stereotypes. The film provides a fresh, contemporary, and challenging look at issues of racism, sexism, gender, and sexuality by following the story of one woman's quest to trace the life and history of a fictional 1930s black woman film star. It won awards at the Berlin International Film Festival, the Cretiel International Festival of Women's Cinema, the New York International Lesbian and Gay Film Festival, and the Torino International Gay and Lesbian Film Festival, among others.

West Side Story. 1961. Directed by Jerome Robbins and Robert Wise. Mirisch Corporation; United Artists. An adaptation of the classic romantic tragedy Romeo and Juliet. The feuding families are transformed into two warring New York City gangs in the 1950s: the white Jets, led by Riff, and the Puerto Rican Sharks, led by Bernardo. Racial and ethnic tension escalates to a point where neither can coexist with any form of understanding, and violence ensues. Then Riff's best friend (and former Jet) Tony and Bernardo's younger sister Maria meet at a dance and fall in love, with tragic consequences. Like the Broadway musical on which it is based, the movie asks whether love can overcome racial and ethnic stereotypes.

DOCUMENTARIES

A. Philip Randolph: For Jobs and Freedom. 1996. Directed by Dante James. WETA Washington D.C. James's film takes viewers on a tour of twentieth-century civil rights and labor history in the United States as it chronicles Randolph's efforts to build a more equitable society. Randolph believed that economic rights were the key to advancing civil rights. In response to the race riots of 1919, Randolph helped form the National Association for the Promotion of Labor Unionism among Negroes, and he was asked to help them organize the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. In 1963 Randolph participated in the March on Washington and introduced Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. at the rally that ended the march.

Afro-Punk: The "Rock n Roll Nigger" Experience. 2003. Directed by James Spooner. Afro-Punk explores racial identity within the punk scene and the experience of being a minority inside a minority community.

The Agronomist. 2003. Directed by Jonathan Demme. Clinica Extetico. An examination of the inspiring life and tragic death of the pioneering Haitian radio journalist and human-rights activist Jean Dominique.

American Red and Black: Stories of Afro-Native Identity. 2006. Directed by Alicia Woods. Native Voices. This 39-minute documentary follows a self-identified African American as she researches and reflects on her Native American heritage. Topics such as the relationship between art and ethnic identity and racism within communities of color are explored through discussions with Afro-Natives from around the United States.

Ancestors in the Americas: Coolies, Sailors, Settlers. 1996. Directed by Loni Ding. CET Productions. TV documentary. The untold story of how Asians (e.g., Filipinos, Chinese, Asian Indians) first arrived in the Americas. Film crosses centuries and oceans from the sixteenth-century Manila-Acapulco trade to the Opium Wars and nineteenth-century plantation coolie labor in South America and the Caribbean. Loni Ding's documentary looks at the enormous contributions made by Asian peoples in the development of North and South America, contributions that go beyond the stereotypical notions that the Asians were only laborers, launderers, and owners of exotic restaurants.

At the River I Stand. 1993. Directed by David Appleby, Allison Graham, and Steven Ross. California Newsreel. A documentary recounting the two months leading to Martin Luther King Jr.'s death in 1968, focusing on the 65-day strike of 1,300 Memphis sanitation workers. Issues of race, class, economic disparities, and civil rights in America are underscored.

Baadasssss Cinema. 2002. Directed by Isaac Julien. Independent Film Channel (IFC). An exploration of the "blaxploitation" genre, with film excerpts and interviews. This documentary is a good introduction to

- white-black relationships in the United States in the late 1960s.
- Beah: A Black Woman Speaks. 2003. Directed by Lisa Gay Hamilton. Clinica Estetico. In 1999, the actress Lisa Gay Hamilton sat down with the activist, poet, and fellow actress Beah Richards for a series of frank, thought-provoking conversations. The resulting documentary film presents the hard-earned wisdom of a remarkable artist and activist who has confronted the challenges of race, class, gender, growing-up, and living in America. The film also explores the deep and tender relationship that developed between the two women. Beah won the Documentary Jury Prize at the 2003 American Film Institute (AFI) International Film Festival.
- Beat of Distant Hearts: The Art of Revolution in Western Sahara (English and Arabic). 1999. Directed by Danielle Smith. Dakkuma Productions. Beat of Distant Hearts tells the story of the Saharawis, a formerly nomadic people who have been under Spanish colonial rule for ninety years. They were forced to flee their homeland when Morocco was invaded in 1975, but they have sought to keep their culture alive while carrying on their fight to gain the independence of Western Sahara, the last colony in Africa. The film explores their collective experience of exile, loss, and war, offering insights into how the work of poets, singers, and painters has played a role in the struggle for freedom by colonized people.
- bell hooks: Cultural Criticism and Transformation. 1997. Directed by Sut Jhally. Media Education Foundation. This two-part video of a lecture by the writer and activist bell hooks challenges how people look at and interpret the various and varying forms and processes of representation of themselves and others as encountered in everyday life. The lecture is illustrated with clips from films and music videos.
- Bethlehem Diary. 2001. Directed by Antonia Caccia. First Run Icarus Films. Bethlehem Diary was filmed during Christmas in Bethlehem in the year 2000. The town was expecting five million visitors to celebrate the end of the millennium, but the streets are deserted, the hotels shut, the shops empty. The Israeli army has closed off Bethlehem since the second Intifada began the previous September. The film looks at two middle-class Palestinian families and a human rights lawyer during this tumultuous period. It shows their struggles to live under curfew and closure, with their every move monitored by the Israeli army.
- Beyond Freedom: The South African Journey. 2006. Directed by Jacquie Trowell. Big World Cinema. This short documentary creatively utilizes animation to profile a cross-section of South Africans talking about their struggles to modernize or just plain survive in their post-apartheid nation.
- Black and Gold: The Latin King and Queen Nation. 2000. Directed by Richard Rowley and Jacqui Soohen. Big Noise Films. In 1994 the Latin Kings, a powerful street gang in New York City, became the Latin King and Queen Nation. This film documents the emergence of an important political voice as the group, which claims to have abandoned its criminal past, dedicates itself to working toward change in the community and in America.
- Black Indians: An American Story 2000. Directed by Chip Richie. Rich-Heape Films. A documentary film that presents the rarely told story of the relationship between Native Americans and African Americans. It profiles how the histories of these two groups are intertwined and examines the challenges facing them at the beginning of the twenty-first century. This story literally begins with the birth of America, in the presence of the mixed-race Boston Massacre martyr Crispus Attucks, and it includes the tragic aspects of the nineteenth century, including through the Seminole Wars and the expulsion of the Cherokee nation on the infamous Trail of Tears.
- Black Is, Black Ain't. 1994. Directed by Marlon Riggs. Independent Television Service (ITVS). An upfront examination of racism, sexism, and homophobia within the black community. The film challenges African Americans to define what is black, black enough, or too black.
- The Black Press: Soldiers without Swords. 1998. Directed and produced by Stanley Nelson. California Newsreel. The first documentary to provide an in-depth examination of the history and contributions of African American newspapers, which have existed in almost every major U.S. city since the early 1800s.
- Black Russians (English). 2001. Directed by Kara Lynch. Third World Newsreel. A look at the lives of contemporary Afro-Russians in Soviet Russia. The interplay of two ideological currents that shaped the twentieth-century world—race and communism—is explored.
- Black Women in Brazil (Mulheres Negras). 1986. Directed by Silvana Afram. Women Make Movies. This film exposes viewers to a critical examination of the racially segregated caste system of Brazil, as seen from the perspective of black women in Brazil coping with the system through their music and religion.
- Blind Spot: Hitler's Secretary (German). 2002. Directed by André Heller and Othmar Schmiderer. Dor Film Productions. In 1942, at the height of World War II,

Adolf Hitler hired the 22-year-old Traudl Junge as his private secretary. As the Nazi regime teetered on the brink of destruction, Junge became a firsthand witness to Hitler's plunge into delusion, apathy, and depression. After more than a half-century of silence, in this documentary film, Junge sheds new light on the private life of Adolf Hitler, underscoring the horror of racist policies and practices in Germany and throughout eastern Europe.

The Borinqueneers. 2007. Produced and directed by Noemi Figueroa Soulet. El Pozo Productions; Public Broadcasting Service. This PBS documentary tells the story of the Puerto Rican 65th Infantry Regiment, the only all-Hispanic unit in the history of the U.S. Army.

The Boys of Baraka. 1995. Directed by Heidi Ewing and Rachel Grady. Loki Films. A documentary about the lives of four boys who are transported from a crime-ridden Baltimore, Maryland, neighborhood to a boarding school in Kenya. Issues of race, place, and economic status are profiled and explored through the daily activities of these boys.

Brother Outsider: The Life of Bayard Rustin. 2003. Directed by Nancy Kates and Bennett Singer. California Newsreel. Rustin was there at most of the important events of the civil rights movement, but always in the background. This film examines why this was so in this vivid drama about one of the most enigmatic figures in twentieth-century American history. Rustin was one of the first "Freedom Riders," an adviser to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and A. Philip Randolph, and an organizer of the 1963 March on Washington. Intelligent, gregarious, and charismatic, Rustin was denied his rightful place in the limelight primarily because he was gay.

Brothers and Others. 2002. Directed by Nicolas Rossier. Baraka Productions. A documentary on the impact of the September 11th tragedy on Muslims and Arabs living in America. The film follows a number of immigrants and American families as they struggle in the heightened climate of hate, FBI and INS investigations, and economic hardships that erupted in America following the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Chasing Daybreak. 2006. Directed by Justin Leroy. MAVIN Foundation. Five self-identified mixed-raced individuals take a road trip across America, intent on engaging people in discussions on the social realities of race and racism. The film raises questions about the role of a mixed-race movement and the eradication of racism in America.

Chicano! History of the Mexican-American Civil Rights Movement. 1996. Series produced by Hector Galán. NLCC Educational Media and Galán Productions. A four-part documentary series dealing with Mexican American struggles to achieve equality and full rights as citizens of the United States. It address issues concerning land, labor, education, and political empowerment that took place between 1965 and 1975, a pivotal period of the Mexican American civil rights movement.

Chicana. 1979. Directed by Sylvia Morales. Women Make Movies. The history of Chicana and Mexican women from pre-Columbian times to the present is chronicled in this 23-minute film. Women's role in Aztec society, their participation in the 1810 struggle for Mexican independence, their contributions to the 1910 Mexican revolution, and their leadership and activism in contemporary civil rights causes are all given attention.

The Chicano Collection. 2005. Directed by Tamara Hernandez. Produced to accompany "The Chicano Collection," an exhibition of Hispanic art, the film describes the personal journeys and viewpoints of the twenty-six featured artists and their struggle for acceptance by American art museums.

Chinatown. 1997. Directed by Felicia Lowe. PBS/KQED. Although it focuses on one neighborhood, this documentary is in many ways the story of all Chinese in America. For decades, San Francisco's Chinatown was the largest community of Chinese outside Asia, and yet it was a neighborhood that was forced to be independent, even isolated, from the rest of society. Its residents were barred from even the basic rights of citizenship. Even so, Chinatown's residents have managed to create a thriving community that is the second most popular destination for visitors to San Francisco (after the Golden Gate Bridge).

Chisholm '72: Unbought & Unbossed. 2004. Directed by Shola Lynch. Realside Productions. Shirley Chisholm's 1972 bid for the Democratic presidential nomination is chronicled in this film. Chisholm was the first black woman to run for president of the United States, and the politics of race, gender, class, and differential access to wealth and power in the United States are underscored in this film, which was nominated for the Grand Jury Prize at the Sundance Film Festival.

The Civil War. 1990. Directed by Ken Burns. American Documentaries, Inc.; Florentine Films; WETA Washington. This groundbreaking miniseries traces the course of the U.S. Civil War from the abolitionist movement through all the major battles to the death of President Abraham Lincoln and the beginnings of Reconstruction. A very vivid profile of American culture and of its bloodiest confrontations over issues of race, power, and place.

- Classified People (French). 1987. Directed by Yolanda Zauberman. Obsession. By detailing the nature of racial classification and segregation in South Africa, Classified People provides a penetrating look at the arbitrary mechanics of apartheid.
- Color Adjustment. 1992. Directed by Marlon Riggs. California Newsreel. An examination of the racist images perpetuated by the film industry, Color Adjustment provides an analysis of the evolution of television's earlier, unflattering portrayal of blacks from 1948 until 1988.
- Color of Fear. 1994. Directed by Lee Mun Wah. StirFry Seminars. A small group of men from different ethnic groups come together to discuss issues of racism prevalent in American society.
- Color of Fear 2: Walking Each Other Home. 1998. Directed by Lee Mun Wah. StirFry Seminars. In this sequel to The Color of Fear, a small group of men from different ethnic groups come together to talk about racism in American society. The film explores in greater depth the relationships among the men, as well as answering the question, "What can whites do to end racism?"
- The Color of Honor. 1989. Directed by Loni Ding. Center for Educational Telecommunications (CET). Portrays the complex variety of responses of Japanese American men during World War II. While reviled and interned in their home country for their ethnic heritage, they were also confronted with the rise of fascism abroad. Some wanted to prove they were loyal Americans and fought bravely in the highly decorated Japanese American 442nd Regimental Combat Unit, which liberated European towns, while some felt they could not in good conscience serve in the U.S. Armed Forces as long as their families were "interned" in violation of the Constitution they were supposed to defend.
- The Color of Olives (Arabic). 2006. Directed by Carolina Rivas; produced by Daoud Sarhandi. Arab Film Distribution. A chronicle of the life of a Palestinian family who live surrounded by the infamous West Bank Wall. Their daily lives are dominated by electrified fences, locks, and a constant swarm of armed soldiers. As their dramas unfold, one glimpses their constant struggles and the small, endearing details that sustain them: including olive trees, two small donkeys, and their many friendships. The film contemplates the effects of racial segregation, the meaning of borders, and the absurdity of war.
- Community Voices: Exploring Cross-Cultural Care Through Cancer. 2001. Directed by Jeannie Greene and Kim Newell. Harvard Center for Cancer Prevention.
- An examination of how issues of race, class, and culture impact health, health-care delivery, and access to health care. The film asks how people can work together to provide high-quality care to diverse individuals and communities.
- The Cry of Reason. 1987. Directed by Robert Bilheimer. Tracks the personal and social odyssey of the Reverend Beyers Naude as he moves from being a member of the Afrikaner secret society that invented apartheid to becoming a student of anti-apartheid activist Steve Biko. Naude commits himself to the liberation of South Africa's black population.
- Cuban Roots/Bronx Stories. 2000. Directed by Pam Sporn. Third World Newsreel. An intimate portrayal of a black Cuban immigrant family living in the Bronx. Three siblings recount their family's reasons for leaving Cuba, yet they grow to appreciate some aspects of the revolution through their exploration of the radical black and Latino movements of the 1960s and 1970s in the United States.
- Desire. 2005. Directed by Julie Gustafson. Women Make Movies. A diverse group of young women in New Orleans—two teenagers from the Desire housing projects, a single mother from the working-class suburb of Belle Chasse across the river, and two girls from the most prestigious private high school in New Orleans—made short films about their own desires for this documentary study of race and class. The intimate dramas of their changing lives are portrayed, as is the coming of age of the filmmaker, who is forced to rethink her role in the production of the film.
- Divided We Fall: Americans in the Aftermath (English and Punjabi). 2006. Directed by Sharat Raju. New Moon Productions. Valarie Kaur, a college student, drove across America in the aftermath of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, trying to discover stories that did not make the evening news. The resulting film documents hate crimes against Sikhs, Muslims, and others, and it examines how Americans react to the perceived "Other" in times of war.
- The End of the Nightstick: Confronting Police Brutality in Chicago. 1993. Produced and directed by Peter Kuttner, Cyni Moran, and Eric Scholl. First Run/Icarus Films. Investigates and documents institutional racism, brutality, and cover-ups in Chicago's police department.
- The Essential Blue-Eyed. 1999. Produced and directed by Bertram Verhaag. California Newsreel. Documents the experiments of the teacher and activist Jane Elliott, as she divides a multiracial group of Midwesterners on the basis of eye color and then subjects the blue-eyed members to a regime of humiliation and contempt.

In just a few hours into the experiment, a noticeable difference between the two groups appears. In particular, the blue-eyed members are clearly disoriented and unsure of themselves. Elliott's method is based on her belief that people can best be motivated to fight discrimination by experiencing it themselves, if only for a few hours in a controlled environment.

Ethnic Notions. 1986. Directed by Marlon Riggs. California Newsreel. An Emmy-winning documentary, Ethnic Notions traces the evolution of racial consciousness in America. It critically examines deep-rooted stereotypes in American history and dramatizes the impact that these ideas and imagery have had in terms of fueling antiblack prejudice.

The Eyes of the Rainbow. 1997. Directed by Gloria Rolando. A documentary by the independent video group Imágenes del Caribe, this film depicts the life of Assata Shakur, the Black Panther and Black Liberation Army leader who escaped from prison and was given political asylum in Cuba.

Eyes on the Prize. 1987. Directed by Henry Hampton. Blackside and the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS). This award-winning 14-hour television series covers all of the major events of the civil rights movement in the United States from 1954 to 1985.

Farm: Life Inside Angola Prison. 1998. Directed by Liz Garbus, Wilbert Rideau, and Jonathan Stack. Gabriel Films. A profile of life among inmates at Louisiana State Penitentiary, one of America's largest maximum security prisons. The film won numerous awards, including the Grand Jury Prize at the Sundance Film Festival.

Farmingville. 2004. Directed by Catherine Tambini and Carlos Sandoval. The story of the hate-based attempted murder of two Mexican day laborers in Farmingville, New York. Issues of racism, fear, and violence in an American community are explored.

February One: The Story of the Greensboro Four. 2003. Produced by Rebecca Ceresse, with Steven Channing serving as executive producer. Video Dialog. A documentary about the day that four college freshmen changed the course of American history. The film tells the story of the 1960 Greensboro lunch counter sit-ins that revitalized the civil rights movement.

500 Dunam on the Moon (Arabic, French, and Hebrew). 2002. Directed by Rachel Leah Jones. RLJ Productions. The movie tells the story of Ayn Hawd, a Palestinian village that was converted into a Jewish artists' colony in 1953 with the help of Romanian artist Marcel Janco. The village, which was renamed Ein-Hod, had been destroyed during the 1948 war.

Forget Baghdad: Jews and Arabs—The Iraqi Connection (Arabic, English, and Hebrew). 2002. Directed by Samir Naqqash. Dschoint Ventschr Film-produktion AG. The forgotten story of four Baghdadi-Jews, all former members of the Iraqi Communist Party, who were forced to emigrate at Israel's founding. The four elderly protagonists were influenced in their youth by the internationalism of the Iraqi Communist Party, but in the early 1950s their Jewish identity put them at odds with rising Arab nationalism. The divided identities and confusion of these four men's lives tell a much larger tale of global, political, and cultural disorder. Winner of the 2002 Locarno Jury Prize.

4 Little Girls. 1997. Directed by Spike Lee. HBO Films. A historical documentary about the 1963 bombing of the 16th Street Baptist Church in Birmingham, Alabama. The film underscores the tragic result of race hatred in an American context.

Frantz Fanon: Black Skin, White Mask. 1996. Directed by Isaac Julien. Normal Films. A film biography that explores the life of Frantz Fanon, the preeminent theorist of anticolonial movements. Fanon's two major works, Black Skin, White Masks and The Wretched of the Earth, are pioneering studies of the psychological impact of racism on both the colonized and the colonizer.

Freedom Bags. 1990. Directed by Stanley Nelson. Abena Productions. The story of African American women who migrated from the rural South during the first three decades of the twentieth century. Trying to escape the racism and poverty of the post-Civil War South, they headed north, but because of their limited education, most could find jobs only as domestics.

Freedom on My Mind. 1994. Directed by Connie Field and Marilyn Mulford. Tara Releasing. This story about the Mississippi freedom movement in the early 1960s looks at how a small group of young activists changed history. The film was an Academy Award nominee for Best Documentary Feature, and it won the best documentary prize from both the American Historical Association and the Organization of American Historians.

From One Blood: The Story of Gerrit Wolfaardt. 2003. Directed by Cristóbal Krusen. Mix Holdings. A documentary about the life of Afrikaner Gerrit Wolfaardt and his transformation from a life of hate, in which he devised a plan to rid South Africa of "The Black Danger" during apartheid, to one of redemption, in which he preaches a message of racial reconciliation to audiences in South Africa and the United States. The film includes scenes from Final Solution (also profiled here), a feature film based on his life.

- From Swastika to Jim Crow. 2000. Directed by Lori Cheatle and Martin D. Taub. Pacific Street Films. The period in American history from the 1930s to the rise of the civil rights and Black Power movements serves as the background to this previously untold story of the many German Jewish professors who, having been expelled from their homeland by the Nazis, found new lives and careers at all-black colleges and universities in the South.
- Generations of Resistance. 1980. Directed by Peter Davis. Sveriges Radio. The history of black resistance to white rule in South Africa is chronicled, from its origins in the Bambata Rebellion of 1906 through the founding of the African National Congress to the ultimate abolition of apartheid.
- Half of Anything. 2006. Directed by Jonathan S. Tomhave. Native Voices. Four interview subjects (Christina Entrekina, Deborah Bassett, John Trudell, and Sherman Alexie) share insights about American Indian identity in this 24-minute film.
- Hands on the Verdict: The 1992 Los Angeles Uprising. 1992. Directed by Elizabeth Canner and Julia Meltzer. Los Angeles Video Activists. This short film probes the issues of racism, economic disparity, and police brutality surrounding the civil unrest that took place after the verdict in the Rodney King case. It opens with a collage of rough footage of the Rodney King beating, the 1992 Los Angeles riots, and the 1965 Watts riot.
- The Hero (O Herói). Portuguese. 2005. Directed by Zézé Gamboa; Produced by Fernando Vendrell. David & Golias. The story of Angola, a nation torn apart by forty years of uninterrupted anticolonial and civil warfare, as it tries to reconstruct itself. The story is told from the perspective of the lives of a veteran who has lost his leg, a prostitute who has lost a child, and an orphaned boy. It takes place in the city of Luanda, which is trying to absorb the millions of people displaced by civil strife and global economic change. Winner of Grand Prize at the World Dramatic Competition during the 2005 Sundance Film Festival.
- Hoop Dreams. 1994. Directed by Steve James. KTCA Minneapolis. Two African American students in Chicago have dreams of becoming professional basketball players and are recruited by a predominantly white high school with an outstanding basketball program. This chronicle of their experiences raises issues about race, class, economic divisions, educational opportunities, and values in American society.
- Ida B. Wells: A Passion for Justice. 1989. Produced and directed by William Greaves. California Newsreel. The life and times of Ida B. Wells-Barnett are examined in this 53-minute film. Wells was an African American journalist, activist, and suffragist who fought against the plague of lynching in the post-Reconstruction period.
- If You Only Understood (Spanish). 1998. Written and directed by Rolando Diaz. A Cuban film director's search for an actress to star in his new musical comedy exposes issues of racism and other conflicts in the Cuban society. (Spanish title: Si me comprendieras.)
- In Search of History: The Night Tulsa Burned. 1999. Weller-Grossman Productions; The History Channel. A section of Tulsa, Oklahoma, known as Greenwood, was dubbed the "Black Wall Street" in 1920, but this upper-middle-class neighborhood was destroyed in 1921 by the worst racial uprising in the history of America. This film chronicles the complete destruction of Greenwood by an angry mob of white men.
- In the White Man's Image. 1991. Directed by Christine Lesiak. Public Broadcasting Service ("American Experience" series). A chronicle of the efforts of Captain Richard Pratt to transform Native Americans into members of the mainstream white culture. Pratt began the Carlisle School for Indians in 1879, and it lasted into the late 1930s.
- The Inner Tour (English, Arabic and Hebrew). 2001. Directed by Ra'anan Alexandrowicz. Zeitgeist Films. A documentary about a diverse group of Palestinians living in the West Bank. Through a quirk in the law, they are allowed to become tourists and visit their homeland for the first time since the occupation. They take a three-day bus tour in 2000 across the "Green Line" and go inside the heart of Israel. One of the men uses a map of Palestine to refresh his memory of where the Arab villages were in 1948 that have been replaced by Jewish settlements. The Inner Tour shows how differently both sides view the same thing, as one side calls the land Israel while the other calls it Palestine.
- International Sweethearts of Rhythm. 1986. Produced and directed by Greta Schiller and Andrea Weiss. Jezebel Productions. This 30-minute film looks at issues of race and racism in America through the story of a multiracial all-women jazz band of the 1940s.
- The Intolerable Burden. 2002. Directed by Chea Prince. Public Domain, Inc.; Center for the Study of Southern Culture. In Drew, Mississippi, in 1965, the sharecroppers Matthew and Mae Bertha Carter are committed to obtaining a quality education for their children. The film examines the conditions of segregation prior to 1965, the hardships the family faced during desegregation, and the massive white resistance to a plan to provide equality in education.
- Iraq in Fragments (Kurdish and Arabic). 2006. Directed by James Longley. Daylight Factory. Ethnic tensions and issues of identity in Iraq are explored in Longley's

- film. The three principal groups in Iraq—Sunnis, Shiites, and Kurds—are profiled in this examination of the divisive forces that are tearing the country apart. Young Mohammed, a Sunni, works at an auto shop and drifts in and out of school; The Shiite leader Moqtada al-Sadr ruthlessly enforces Islamic Law in the country's southern region; and a family of Kurdish farmers struggles to survive.
- James Baldwin: The Price of the Ticket. 1990. Directed by Karen Thorsen. Nobody Knows Productions; California Newsreel. James Baldwin (1924–1987) was a major twentieth-century American author, a civil rights activist, and a critical voice calling on Americans, black and white, to confront racism as a shared tragedy. Baldwin was black, gifted, and gay, which gave him a unique insight into American culture. The film chronicles his formative years and explores his retreats in Paris, the South of France, Istanbul, and Switzerland—places where Baldwin was able to write away from the racial tensions of America.
- Japanese American Women: A Sense of Place. 1992. Directed by Rosanna Yamagiwa Alfano and Leita Hagemann. Women Make Movies. The stereotype of the polite, docile, exotic Asian woman is shattered in this 28-minute documentary, in which a dozen women speak about their experiences as part of the “model minority.” The film explores the ambivalent feelings the women have toward both Japan and the United States.
- Jazz. 2001. Directed by Ken Burns. British Broadcasting Corporation; Florentine Films; WETA Washington. This PBS film series explores the history of the major American musical form. It tracks its development in African American culture, its rise to prominence with its golden age of popularity spanning from the 1920s to the mid-1940s, and its popular decline and the rise of vital new subgenres.
- Jefferson's Blood. 2000. Produced and directed by Thomas Lennon. WGBH Boston; Frontline. This PBS documentary examines the life of Thomas Jefferson and follows the descendants of Jefferson and his enslaved African mistress, Sally Hemings, as they undergo DNA testing, search out their family history, and try to sort out their place along America's blurred color line.
- John Henrik Clarke: A Great and Mighty Walk. 1996. Directed by St. Clair Bourne. Black Dot Media. Documentary about the black scholar and activist John Henrik Clarke (1915–1998), who discusses representations of African and African-descendent people throughout history, using newsreel footage to highlight his views.
- July '64. 2006. Directed by Carvin Eison. ImageWordSound; WXXI-TV. The night of Friday, July 24th, 1964, started off normally enough in Rochester, New York, but by the next morning the way that race relations in the North were looked at would never be the same again. July '64 examines the underlying causes of the Rochester riots and the urban unrest that swept through black communities in America that summer and in the years that followed.
- Last Chance for Eden. 2002. Directed by Lee Mun Wah. StirFry Seminars. This two-part documentary is about a small group of men and women who get together to have an open conversation about racism and sexism and its impact on their lives, especially with respect to the workplace.
- Last Grave at Dimbaza. 1974. Directed by Chris Curling and Pasco Macfarlane. First Run/Icarus Films. A rare exposé of everyday life in South Africa during the period of apartheid. Filmed throughout South Africa, including the black townships and desolate bantustans, this film portrays the stark contrasts between living and working conditions for the majority populace of 18 million blacks and the 4 million whites who rule over them.
- The Lemon Grove Incident. 1985. Directed by Frank Christopher. KPBS Television; California Council for the Humanities; Corporation for Public Broadcasting. This film focuses on one of the earliest cases of desegregation in U.S. history. It profiles the response of the Mexican American community in Lemon Grove, California, to a 1930 school board attempt to create a segregated school for Mexican Americans.
- Life and Debt. 2001. Produced and directed by Stephanie Black. Tuff Gong Pictures. The stories of individual Jamaicans, whose strategies for survival and day-to-day existence are determined by the United States and other foreign economic agendas, are the subject of Life and Debt. Issues of race, place, class, and nationality are examined through a look into the complexity of international lending, structural adjustment policies, and free trade. The film utilizes excerpts from the writer Jamaica Kincaid's “A Small Place” (1987).
- The Life and Times of Sara Baartman. 1998. Directed by Zola Maseko. First Run/Icarus Films. This documentary tells the story of a Khoi Khoi woman who was taken from South Africa, labeled the “Hottentot Venus,” and exhibited as a freak across Britain.
- A Litany for Survival: The Life and Work of Audre Lorde. 1995 Directed by Ada Gay Griffin and Michelle Parkerson. Independent Television Service. The film provides an examination of race, gender, class, sexism,

- and sexuality in America through a profile of the African American poet Audre Lorde.
- Living in America: A Hundred Years of Ybor City. 1987. Directed by Gayla Jamison. The multicultural community of Ybor City, in Tampa, Florida, was founded in the 1880s when Cuban, Spanish, and Italian immigrants arrived to work in the area's thriving cigar factories. In this film, older residents reminisce about their vibrant ethnic enclaves, especially the lively social clubs that provided not only entertainment but medical care for their members. The film also highlights how life for black Cubans differed in terms of experiences and memories in Ybor.
- Long Night's Journey into Day (English and Afrikaans). 2000. Directed by Deborah Hoffmann and Frances Reid. Reid-Hoffman Productions. Four stories of apartheid in South Africa are examined in the context of the post-apartheid Truth and Reconciliation Commission. The film asks if there can be forgiveness when the truth is finally known.
- Looking for Langston. 1988. Directed by Isaac Julien. British Film Institute. A poetic look at high-society gay black men during the Harlem Renaissance in America. Issues of race, class, and sexuality are highlighted in this film meditation on the work and life of the poet Langston Hughes.
- Lost Boys of Sudan (English, Arabic, Dinka, and Swahili). 2003. Directed by Megan Mylan and Jon Shenk. Actual Films. A comment on the myth of the American dream, the film follows the incredible journey that two teenage Sudanese refugees make from their African homeland to America. They confront extreme cultural differences, including issues of race, place, class, and ethnicity in American society. Winner of a 2004 Independent Spirit Award.
- Lumumba. (French and Lingala). 2000. Directed by Raoul Peck. Canal+; Zeitgeist Films. This film tells the true story of the rise to power and brutal assassination of Patrice Lumumba, the formerly vilified and later esteemed leader of the independent Congo. It examines racism, colonialism, and the fight for political and economic power and control in Africa.
- The Maids! 1985. Directed by Muriel Jackson. Women Make Movies. A short documentary film that looks at the division of labor from a race, gender, and class perspective through an exploration of the history of African American women's labor in domestic service.
- Maids and Madams. 1986. Directed by Mira Hamermesh. Shot in South Africa, this powerful yet historic documentary examines complex relationships between black household workers and white employers during the apartheid era.
- Mama, I'm Crying. 1987. Directed by Betty Wolpert and Joyce Seroke. The story of two women, one black, the other white, who grew up at the same time in South Africa and return home and grapple with the reason some blacks no longer think that nonviolence is the way to fight apartheid. Their differing perspectives on life make it seem as if they were brought up in two different countries.
- Mandela. 1996. Directed by Angus Gibson and Jo Menell. Clinico Estetico; Island Pictures. A full-length documentary looking at the life of Nelson Mandela and his fight to end apartheid in his homeland of South Africa. Filmed during the seven months leading up to the historic 1994 presidential election in South Africa, the film features exclusive interviews and narration from Mandela himself.
- Master Race. 1997. Directed by Jonathan Lewis. WGBH Boston; British Broadcasting Corporation. Part of the documentary TV film series "People's Century," the film chronicles the rise of Nazism in Germany and the persecution of those identified as being black, Jewish, Gypsy, or homosexual in Germany from the 1930s onward. The story is told through accounts of both those that were and were not part of the Final Solution instituted by Hitler as a strategy for creating and maintaining his vision of a master race.
- Mayan Voices: American Lives. 1994. Directed by Olivia Carrescia. First Run/Icarus Films. Set in Indiantown, Florida, Mayan Voices profiles the lives and experiences of Mayan families (from Guatemala) in the United States and the impact of these new immigrants on a predominantly white community.
- Mighty Times: The Legacy of Rosa Parks. 2002. Directed by Robert Houston. Tell the Truth Pictures. This Academy Award-nominated short revisits this familiar historical event of December 1, 1955, when Rosa Parks's act of defiance in refusing to give up her seat on a bus to a white person sparked the Montgomery Bus Boycott, while it also finds new stories that introduce new heroes of the civil rights era.
- Mirrors of Privilege: Making White Visible. 2006. Produced and directed by Shakti Butler. World Trust Educational Services. Features the experiences of white women and men who have worked to gain insight into what it means to challenge notions of racism and white supremacy in the United States.
- Mirrors of the Heart: Race and Identity. 1993. Produced and Directed by Lourdes Portillo. WGBH Boston. Part 4 of a 10-part PBS series examining the shifting social, political, and economic forces at work in South America, Central America, and the Caribbean. The film explores issues of race and ethnicity from the - perspective of identity and social standing in Bolivia, Haiti, and the Dominican Republic.

- Mississippi Triangle. 1984. Directed by Christine Choy, Worth Long, and Allan Siegel. Third World Newsreel. Explores the triracial configuration of black, white, and Chinese in the Mississippi Delta.
- Mother Ireland. 1998. Directed by Anne Crilly. Derry Film and Video Collective. Leading Irish feminists trace the images of women in Irish history (e.g., “Mother Ireland,” “The Old Woman”) and their impact on women’s lives. Particular focus is placed on aspirations for freedom, the revolutionary struggles for independence from England, and the movements for unification of the country.
- Motherland: A Genetic Journey. 2003. Directed by Archie Baron. Takeaway Media Productions; British Broadcasting Corporation. A documentary on genetic testing and the meaning of genes, race, identity, and geography. Three black individuals reconnect with the precise population groups from which their ancestors were separated by slavery.
- Mumia Abu-Jamal: A Case for Reasonable Doubt? 1997. Directed by John Edginton. Otmoor Productions. A documentary film about Mumia Abu-Jamal, a black nationalist and journalist in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, who was convicted in 1982 of killing a Philadelphia police officer and sentenced to death. His trial was marked by controversial prosecution and defense tactics and charges of racism.
- New Orleans. 2007. Directed by Stephen Ives. Insignia Films Production; American Experience; Louisiana Public Broadcasting. A portrait of one of America’s most distinctive cities, a small French settlement surrounded by water that ultimately would become the home of America’s biggest party, Mardi Gras, and its most original art form, jazz. The site of explosive struggles with both integration and segregation, New Orleans has been a proving ground for national ideas about race, class, and equality in America.
- New Orleans Black Indians: A Case Study in the Arts. 1983. Insight Media. This documentary, part of the “Faces of Culture” film series, explores the Black Indian tribes of New Orleans as they carry out a century-old tradition of participation in the pre-Lenten Mardi Gras celebration.
- Paris is Burning. 1991. Directed by Jennie Livingston. Off White Productions. An exploration of race, class, and gender in America, the film chronicles the ball culture of New York City and the poor, African American, and Latino gay and transgendered communities involved in it.
- Paul Robeson: Here I Stand. 1999. Directed by St. Clair Bourne. Part of the “American Masters” television series, the film includes archival film footage (speeches, Broadway and musical concert performances) of the athlete, singer, scholar, and political activist Paul Robeson.
- A Place of Rage. 1991. Directed by Pratibha Palmer. Women Make Movies. Prominent black women (such as June Jordan, Angela Davis, Alice Walker, and Trinh T. Minh-Ha) discuss issues of race and racial discrimination in American culture, including the impact of racial discrimination on American society. The film also includes historical footage of the 1960s civil rights movement.
- Postville: When Cultures Collide. 2001. Iowa Public Television. When Hasidic Jews from New York establish a kosher slaughterhouse in predominantly Lutheran Postville, issues of diversity surface in the rural Iowa town. Eventually, more Jews, then Hispanics and eastern Europeans, make Postville their home. The film is an excellent study of racial, ethnic, cultural, and religious diversity, as profiled through the experiences of one small heterogeneous population.
- A Question of Color. 1993. Directed by Kathe Sandler. Independent Television Service. This documentary confronts a subject considered taboo by many African Americans, namely the disturbing feelings many people harbor about themselves and their appearance. Sandler examines the often subconscious world of “color consciousness,” a caste-like system based on how closely skin color, hair texture, and facial features conform to a European ideal.
- Race: The Floating Signifier. 1997. Directed by Sut Jally. Media Education Fund. The film features the Jamaica-born sociologist and racial theorist Stuart Hall, who argues against the biological interpretation of racial difference and asks the viewer to consider the cultural processes by which visual differences in appearance are ascribed specific classifications that are considered natural.
- Race: The Power of an Illusion. 2003. California Newsreel. A film series (three hour-long episodes) that questions the very idea of race as a biological fact, suggesting instead that a belief in race is a false paradigm, while acknowledging that race still matters. It illustrates that just because race does not exist in biology does not mean it is not a social reality that shapes life chances and opportunities.
- Race Is the Place. 2005. Produced and directed by Raymond Telles and Rick Tejada-Flores. Paradigm Productions; KERA TV Dallas-Fort Worth; Independent Television Service. A visual and verbal critique on race in - America from a wide variety of artists, poets, rappers, performance artists and stand-up comics. The film combines racially charged clips from old movies with interviews and performances. ITVS Community hosted a national broadcast of Race Is the Place on the “Independent Lens” series on November 22, 2005.

- The Return of Sarah Baartman. 2003. Produced and directed by Zola Maseko. First Run/Icarus Films. Looks at the tragic impact of racism and imperialism by chronicling the return of the remains of Sara Baartman, a black woman who had been exhibited as a freak in the early nineteenth-century Europe. Her remains were returned to South Africa from France, where they had been kept at the Museum of Man. Sara’s repatriation involved years of lobbying by people in South Africa.
- The Rise and Fall of Jim Crow. 2002. Series produced by Richard Wormser. WNET New York. This four-part film series offers a comprehensive look at race relations in America between the Civil War and the civil rights movement. It documents a brutal era in American history, marked by the growing refusal of many southern states to grant slaves freed in the Civil War equal rights with whites. Winner of the 2003 Peabody Award and the 2003 IDA Achievement Award.
- The Road to Brown. 1990. Directed by William Elwood and Mykola Kulish. California Newsreel. Focuses on segregation and the brilliant legal campaigning against it that helped launched the civil rights movement in America. It is also a moving tribute to Charles Hamilton Houston, an avid and highly effective opponent of Jim Crow.
- A Seat at the Table: Struggling for American Indian Religious Freedom. 2004. Directed by Gary Rhine. Kifaru Productions. Rhine’s film consists of eight segments, each one dealing with an important obstacle to American Indian religious freedom. The film includes commentary from Native leaders, as well as sequences shot in threatened Indian sacred sites and scenes from the Third Parliament of the World’s Religions in Cape Town, South Africa.
- Shake Hands with the Devil: The Journey of Roméo Dallaire. 2005. Directed by Peter Raymont. White Pine Pictures (Canada). Over 800,000 men, women, and children were massacred in the small African country of Rwanda. The victims were mainly Tutsis, murdered by their Hutu neighbors. The UN peacekeeping mission was headed by the Canadian general Roméo Dallaire, who had only a handful of soldiers and was ordered not to use force to protect Rwandans from the mass slaughter. This documentary film is based on Dallaire’s best-selling book, and it follows Dallaire as he comes to grips with the events that came to haunt him, including his struggles with top UN officials, expedient Belgian policymakers, and Clinton administration officials who ignored his pleas for reinforcements.
- Shalom Y’all. 2003. Directed by Brian Bain. National Center for Jewish Film. This documentary chronicles Jewish life in the American South. It is a record of the travels of the filmmaker Brian Bain, a third generation Jew from New Orleans, who sets out on a 4,200-mile road trip through the American South in a vintage Cadillac.
- Shattering the Silences: The Case for Minority Faculty. 1997. Directed by Stanley Nelson. California Newsreel. This film tells the stories of four pioneering scholars—an African American, a Latino, a Native American, and an Asian American—at predominantly white universities. It shows in concrete terms how a diverse faculty enriches and expands traditional disciplines and contributes to a more inclusive campus.
- Skin Deep: Building Diverse Campus Communities. 1995. Directed by Francis Reid. Iris Films. The eye-opening journey of a diverse group of college students as they confront each other’s racial prejudices.
- Strange Fruit. 2002. Produced and directed by Joel Katz. Oniera Films. An exploration of the history and legacy of the Billie Holiday classic “Strange Fruit.” The song’s evolution tells a dramatic story of America’s past, using one of the most influential protest songs ever written as its epicenter. The saga brings viewers face to face with the terror of lynching as it spotlights the courage and heroism of those who fought for racial justice, even though doing so meant risking ostracism or even death.
- Still Black, at Yale. 2004. Produced by Monique Walton and Andia Winslow. Examines issues of race and racism at universities in America with a specific focus on critiquing what it means to be black at an Ivy League school. The filmmakers were inspired by the 1974 student-made documentary Black at Yale.
- Stolen Ground. 1993. Directed by Lee Mun Wah. StirFry Seminars. Six Asian American men come together to talk about their struggles against racism in America. They also address the myth of the “model minority” and the pressures of blending into the American culture.
- Struggles in Steel: A Story of African-American Steelworkers. 1996. Directed by Tony Buba and Raymond Henderson. Braddock Films; California Newsreel. The story of the African American struggle for equality in the U.S. steel industry, based in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. In a series of interviews intermixed with archival footage and stills, the film shows how these workers faced and overcame discrimination that came - from white workers, the big steel companies, and even from their own unions.

- Sun, Moon & Feather. 1989. Directed by Bob Rosen and Jane Zipp. A short musical comedy and documentary about three Native American sisters growing up in Brooklyn during the 1930s and 1940s.
- Tales from Arab Detroit. 1995. Directed by Joan Mandell. Issues of race, place, and identity in America are underscored in this documentary on the Arab community in Detroit. The film concentrates primarily on the Muslim experience.
- A Time for Burning. 1967. Directed by Bill Jersey and Barbara Connell. Quest Productions. Reverend William Youngdahl's move from an integrated Lutheran church in New Jersey to an all-white congregation in Omaha, Nebraska, in 1965 is the subject of this film. It uncovers quiet acts of racism and issues of institutionalized racism in America.
- Todos Santos: The Survivors. 1989. Directed by Olivia Carrescia. First Run/Icarus Films. The film focuses on postwar Guatemala and the colonization projects of the highlands. It examines the civil war of the 1980s, as well as the subsequent establishment of civil patrols, giving a general portrait of racism in the country.
- Tongues Untied. 1989. Directed by Marlon Riggs. CAC Productions; MTR Productions; Frameline. Riggs examines the black gay experience and looks at issues of racism and homophobia in America.
- Transitions: Destruction of a Mother Tongue. 1991. Produced and directed by Darrell Kip and Joe Fisher. Native Voices Public Television Workshop. Explores the relationship between language, thought, and culture. The film chronicles the disappearance of the Blackfeet tribal language during the period from 1890 to 1990 and analyzes the impact of the loss of culture and language on Native communities.
- Trouble Behind. 1990. Produced and directed by Robbie Henson. California Newsreel. Henson's film examines the disturbingly common occurrence of racism in America today. The origins of today's racism are sought by looking into the history of a seemingly typical small town—Corbin, Kentucky, the home of Kentucky Fried Chicken.
- Twelve Disciples of Mandela (Afrikaans and English). 2006. Directed by Thomas Allen Harris. Chimpanzee Productions. A look into the organizational and psychological dynamics of liberation movements in general, and of the African National Congress (ANC) in South Africa in particular. A concise overview of the ANC's struggle for an end to apartheid is set against the background of the pan-African movement, the rise of black nationalism in the United States, and the dream of a shared identity among all people of the African descent.
- Two Towns of Jasper. 2002. Directed by Whitney Dow and Marco Williams. Independent Television Service; Two-Tone Productions. A feature-length documentary about the 1998 racially motivated murder of James Byrd Jr. in Jasper, Texas.
- Unchained Memories: Readings from the Slave Narratives. 2003. Directed by Ed Bell. HBO. Selections from the extensive Federal Writers' Project Slave Narrative Collection are read by various actors, interspersed with archival photographs, music, films and period images.
- Unforgivable Blackness: The Rise and Fall of Jack Johnson. 2004. Directed by Ken Burns. Florentine Films; WETA Washington. In this film Burns tells the story of Jack Johnson, the first African American heavyweight boxing champion of the world, whose dominance over his white opponents spurred furious debates and race riots in the early twentieth century.
- W. E. B. Du Bois: A Biography in Four Voices. 1996. Directed by Louis J. Massiah. Scribe Video Center; California Newsreel. A portrait of an important African American sociologist, W. E. B. Du Bois, who grew up in America during the period of segregation. He went on to study at Harvard and wrote about the challenges black people faced inhabiting and navigating within spaces dominated by white cultural norms. The film demonstrates Du Bois's broad internationalist perspective and underscores why his thoughts about the future of race in America were considered ahead of his time.
- Wall. 2004. Directed by Simone Bitton. Lifesize Entertainment. A cinematic meditation on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, in which the filmmaker blurs the lines of hatred by asserting her double identity as both Jew and Arab. Bitton conducts interviews with those on both sides of the wall being built around the West Bank by Israel.
- Watermarks. 2004. Directed by Yaron Zilberman. HBO. Watermarks is the story of the champion women swimmers of the legendary Jewish sports club, Hakoah Vienna. Hakoah ("The Strength") was founded in 1909 in response to the notorious Aryan Paragraph, which forbade Austrian sports clubs from accepting Jewish athletes. In 1938 the Nazis shut down the club, but the swimmers all managed to flee the country before the war. Sixty-five years later, Zilberman met the members of the swimming team and arranged for them to have a reunion in their old swimming pool in Vienna.

The Way Home: Race, Gender, and Class in America.

1998. Produced and directed by Shakti Butler. Over the course of eight months, sixty-four women from a cross-section of cultures (indigenous, African American, Arab, Asian, European American, Jewish, and Latina) and racial identifications share their experience of racism in America. The candid conversations in this documentary film are enriched by an abundance of photographs, dance, and music.

What's Race Got to Do With It? Social Disparities and Student Success.

2006. Written, produced, and directed by Jean Cheng. California Newsreel. This documentary film goes beyond identity politics, celebratory history, and interpersonal relations to consider social disparities and their impact on student success in today's post-civil rights world.

When the Levees Broke: A Requiem in Four Acts.

2007. Directed by Spike Lee. 40 Acres & A Mule Filmworks, in collaboration with HBO. A heart-rending portrait of New Orleans in the wake of the destruction of Hurricane Katrina, Lee's film tells the personal stories of those who endured this harrowing ordeal and survived to tell the tale of misery, despair and triumph. Issues of race, class, and place in America are illustrated via the stories people tell about this tragic experience.

Without Reservations: Notes on Racism in Montana.

1995. Native Voices Public Television. Racism against Native Americans is viewed through the eyes of an Indian teacher, a Native American man working in the police department, and an interracial couple.

Women of Islam: Veiling and Seclusion.

2004. Directed by Farheen Umar. While traveling through Pakistan, Iran, Turkey, and the United States, Farheen Umar talks with Muslim women and challenges the assumptions about the practice of wearing veils. This documentary explores the origins of certain stereotypes and confronts misconceptions about the tradition of covering in Muslim society.

Yo Soy Chicano (Spanish).

1972. Directed by Jesús Salvador Treviño. One of the first nationally broadcast documentaries profiling Mexican American history, from the time of the Spanish Conquest through the early 1970s, when critical Chicano social issues and struggles came to the fore.

Young Soul Rebels.

1991. Directed by Isaac Julien. British Film Institute. Issues of race, gender, sexuality, and nationality are explored in this profile of a black gay British male in London in 1977.

List of Primary Sources

- Tears of the Indians*
- Tecumseh's Confrontation of Indiana Governor William Henry Harrison in August, 1810*
- "American Slavery As It Is"*
- Dred Scott v. Sandford (excerpts)*
- Black Codes of Mississippi*
- Geronimo's Defense of Himself and His Actions to U.S. Army General George Crook in 1886*
- Booker T. Washington's "Atlanta Compromise" Speech*
- Plessy v. Ferguson (excerpts)*
- "Lynch Law in America" (excerpt)*
- "Unity of the Human Race"*
- Protocols of the Elders of Zion*
- The Platform of the Niagara Movement*
- Statement of Mr. William Joseph Simmons, of Atlanta, Georgia*
- Correspondence Regarding the Tuskegee Syphilis Experiment*
- Regulation for the Elimination of the Jews from the Economic Life of Germany, November 12, 1938*
- "Concentration Camp: U.S. Style"*
- Executive Order 9981—Establishing the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services*
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights, December 10, 1948*
- Brown v. Board of Education (excerpt)*
- The Long Shadow of Little Rock: A Memoir (excerpt)*
- The 1963 Inaugural Address of Governor George C. Wallace (excerpt)*
- Civil Rights Act of 1964 (excerpts)*
- Malcolm X's "The Ballot or the Bullet" Speech*
- Martin Luther King Jr.'s "The American Dream"*
- "Black Power—Its Relevance to the West Indies"*
- Lusaka Manifesto, 1969*
- Declaration of Sanctions against South Africa by the U.S. Congress*
- "The State of Native America"*
- "Growing Up in Mississippi"*
- Nelson Mandela's Address to the People of Cape Town, Grand Parade, on the Occasion of His Inauguration as State President*
- Report on Rwanda from Amnesty International*
- Report on Crimes against Humanity in Guatemala*
- "Darfur: A 'Plan B' to Stop Genocide?"*

TEARS OF THE INDIANS

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION The Spanish conquistadors were not known for their kind treatment of the natives they found in the Americas. Bartolome De Las Casas was a missionary priest who first went to Cuba in 1502 where his military services were rewarded with an Encomienda, or an estate complete with his own serfs—Native Cubans, or “Indians.” In 1513 he was ordained a priest—claimed to be the first ordination in the Americas. The following year he renounced any claim he had over his serfs and began a series of voyages back and forth to Spain to seek out settlers who would come to Cuba to establish towns where Spaniard and Indian could live in harmony, as equals. He stirred up controversy with his Brief Report on the Destruction of the Indians (also known as Tears of the Indians) a passionate, and what some thought to be an exaggerated, report of Spanish atrocities against the natives. In 1523 he retreated from his public life into a Dominican monastery as a friar, but emerged again in Spain in 1540. At that time, he helped get laws passed that prohibited slavery among the natives of the Americas and help preserve their rights. He returned to Spain in 1547 where he would live out his life until his death in 1566. He spent those last years speaking and writing on behalf of the natives.

OF THE ISLAND OF CUBA.

In the year 1511, they went over into the Island of Cuba, which extends as far in length as it is from Valladolid to Rome, in which there were many fair Provinces, inhabited with an infinite number of people, where the humanity and clemency of the Spaniards was not only as little as it had been in other places, but their cruelty and rage much greater. In this Island many things were done worthy of observation. A certain Lord of great power among them by name Hathvey, who had fled over to Cuba, that he might avoid either death or perpetual captivity, hearing by some of the Indians that the Spaniards were also come into this Island, having assembled the Indians together, he began as followeth:

Countrymen and Friends, you are not ignorant of the rumour by which we understand that the Spaniards are come among us, neither am I now to tell you how they have used the inhabitants of Hapti (so they call Hispaniola, in the Indian language) you know it by a sad experience: nor can we hope to finde them more merciful then they did. Then quoth he, Countrymen do you know the Errand which brings them hither? To whom they replied, that was unknown to them, yet they further replied, that they were well assured of the cruel nature of the Spaniard. Then quoth he, Ile tell ye the cause of their coming. They do worship some covetous and unsatisfied Deity, and to content the greedy worship of that Celestial Power, they require many things from us, using all their endeavour to murther and enslave us. Which having said, taking up a little Chest filled with Gold, he proceeded in these words: Behold here the God of the Spaniards; and therefore if you think fitting, let us daunce and sing before this their God, Perhaps we may thereby appease his rage, and he will then command the Spaniards to let us alone: Who with an unanimous shout cryed out all, Well said, well said; and so they went to dauncing round this box, not ceasing till they had sufficiently wearied themselves. Then the Lord Hathvey going on with his speech, quoth he, If we do keep this God till he be taken from us, we shall be surely slain, and therefore I think it expedient for us to cast it into the River; so his counsell being followed, the Chest was cast into the River.

When the Spaniards had landed in this Island, this Noble man that had sufficient Tryal of their manner, avoided them as much as he could, still flying from them and defending himself by force of armes upon all occasions. But at length being taken, for no other reason, but because he fled from those that sought his life, and defended himself that he might not be tormented to death, he was by the Spaniards burnt alive. While he was tyed to the stake, there came to him a Monk of the Order of St. Francis, who began to talk to him of God and of the Articles of our Faith, telling him, that the small respite which the Executioner gave him was sufficient for him to make sure his salvation if he believed. Upon which words after Hathvey had a little while paus'd, he asked the Monk if the door of heaven was open to the Spaniards, who answering, Yes to the good Spaniards. Then replied the other, Let me go to Hell that I may not come where they are.

It happened once that the Citizens of a very fair City distant about twelve miles from the place where we were, came forth of the City to do us honour, and to submit themselves to the King of Castile, but they being returned home, the Governour of the Spaniards about the middle of the night as they were sleeping in their bed, and least suspecting any such thing, sent a company who came suddenly upon them, and set fire upon their houses, burning up both men, women and children, here some they murdered, others whom they spared, they tormented to make them tell where they had hid their Gold, after which they made them their slaves, having first marked them in the body: and immediately as soon as the fire was spent, they ran to finde out the Gold. At that time the Spaniards got above ten hundred thousand Crowns of Gold, out of which the King, scarce had three hundred thousand sent him; there were slain in this place eight hundred thousand people; and those other Tyrants that came afterwards, emptied the Island of those that remained.

Among all the notorious enormities committed by the foresaid Governour, there is one not to be omitted: a certain noble Indian presenting him, perhaps more for fear than love, a present of above nine thousand Crowns, the Spaniards not content with this, tied him to a stake, and stretching out his Legs, put fire to them, requiring a greater sum of Gold, who not able to endure the torment sent home for three thousand more; notwithstanding the Spaniards with a fresh rage began to torment him again, but seeing that he was able to give them no more, they kept him so long over the fire till his marrow dropt from the soles of his feet, whereof he died. These were the torments wherewith they murdered not only the common People, but the Peers and Lords of those Nations.

Sometimes it would happen, that a Band of Spaniards ranging abroad would light upon a mountain where the Indians were fled for protection from their cruelty, where they immediately fell upon the Indians, killing the Men, and taking the Women and Virgins captive; & when a great company of the Indians pursued them with weapons for the recovery of their Wives and Children, they resolving not to let go their prey, when the Indians came near them, immediately with the points of their swords ran the poor Women and Children through the bodies. Upon which the wretched Indians beating their breasts for grief would now and then burst forth in these words, O perverse men, O cruel Spaniards, What will ye kill helpless women?

There was the house of a Noble man distant from Panama above 15 miles; he was by name called Paris, and he was very wealthy in Gold; to him the Spaniards came, and by him they were entertained like Brothers, he giving to the Captain, as a present, fifteen thousand Crowns; who by that perceiving that he must of necessity have a very great treasure, feigned a departure, but about the middle of the night returning, again entred the City, set it on fire, sacrificing the poor people to the flames. Hence they took away about fifty or sixty thousand Crowns. The Noble man escaping, gathered together what force he could and made after the Spaniards, who were gone away with no lesse than a hundred and forty thousand Crowns of his own Treasure; when he had overtaken them, he fell upon them, and having slain above fifty of the Spaniards, he recovered his Gold again. The rest saved themselves by flight. But not long after the Spaniards returned with greater force upon the Noble man and having routed him, made slaves of all his people.

TECUMSEH'S CONFRONTATION OF INDIANA GOVERNOR WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON IN AUGUST, 1810

SOURCE Tecumseh, in a conversation with Governor W. H. Harrison in 1810, in I Have Spoken: American History Through the Voices of the Indians. Edited by Virginia Irving Armstrong. Swallow Press Inc., 1971. Copyright © 1971. Reproduced by permission.

INTRODUCTION Born around 1768, just a few years before Americans declared their independence from the British, Shawnee Indian chief Tecumseh learned to be a warrior at an early age. He treasured his native land of Ohio and what would become the state of Indiana. He loved the valleys of the Ohio, Allegheny, and Monongahela Rivers. As a young man he fought alongside the British in the Revolutionary War against the Americans. He mistrusted the Americans and despised their bid to take more and more land away from his tribe and other native tribes. He believed that the land belonged to all tribes. He was angry that the treaties individual tribes were making with the white people were not only a bid to steal their land but undermined what he believed should be a union of all Native Americans. When Harrison defeated him at Tippecanoe and more lands escaped into the hands of the Americans, Tecumseh would never forget or forgive them. He died during the War of 1812 at the Battle of Thames (near Detroit) fighting for the British.

Houses are built for you to hold councils in; Indians hold theirs in the open air. I am a Shawnee. My forefathers were warriors. Their son is a warrior. From them I take my only existence. From my tribe I take nothing. I have made myself what I am. And I would that I could make the red people as great as the conceptions of my own mind, when I think of the Great Spirit that rules over us all. . . . I would not then come to Governor Harrison to ask him to tear up the treaty. But I would say to him, "Brother, you have the liberty to return to your own country."

You wish to prevent the Indians from doing as we wish them, to unite and let them consider their lands as the common property of the whole. You take the tribes aside and advise them not to come into this measure. . . . You want by your distinctions of Indian tribes, in allotting to each a particular, to make them war with each other. You never see an Indian endeavor to make the white people do this. You are continually driving the red people, when at last you will drive them onto the great lake, where they can neither stand nor work.

Since my residence at Tippecanoe, we have endeavored to level all distinctions, to destroy village chiefs, by whom all mischiefs are done. It is they who sell the land to the Americans. Brother, this land that was sold, and the goods that was given for it, was only done by a few. . . . In the future we are prepared to punish those who propose to sell land to the Americans. If you continue to purchase them, it will make war among the different tribes, and, at last I do not know what will be the consequences among the white people. Brother, I wish you would take pity on the red people and do as I have requested. If you will not give up the land and do cross the boundary of our present settlement, it will be very hard, and produce great trouble between us.

The way, the only way to stop this evil is for the red men to unite in claiming a common and equal right in the land, as it was at first, and should be now—for it was never divided, but belongs to all. No tribe has the right to sell, even to each other, much less to strangers. . . . Sell a country! Why not sell the air, the great sea, as well as the earth? Did not the Great Spirit make them all for the use of his children?

How can we have confidence in the white people?

When Jesus Christ came upon the earth you killed Him and nailed him to the cross. You thought he was dead, and you were mistaken. You have Shakers among you and you laugh and make light of their worship.

Everything I have told you is the truth. The Great Spirit has inspired me.

“AMERICAN SLAVERY AS IT IS”

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION In 1839 Theodore D. Weld of New York, an ardent abolitionist, and The American Anti-Slavery Society wanted to stir up sentiments around the United States against what they considered the inhumane act of slavery. The group had been founded in Philadelphia in 1833 following the violent 1831 rebellion led by a slave named Nat Turner. That coupled with other slave uprisings and the policies of President Andrew Jackson, which southerners believed a threat to their way of life, created increasing anxiety among slaveholders. Though there were about 200 slave uprisings between 1776 and 1860, the year before the start of the Civil War, the Turner rebellion had been the one that brought fear into the lives of the southern slaveholders. With the bloody violence still fresh, the anti-abolitionist movement was pressed into arguing not simply the illegality of slavery. They wanted to appeal to people regarding the horrid conditions under which slaves were forced to live—from the unending brutal labor forced on them to the poor quality of life and sustenance they were known to endure. By personalizing the nature of the cause, just as a prosecutor might address a jury, this and other similar writings served to stir up widespread emotion. For those in the North, anti-slavery sentiment only grew. For those in the South, defending their way of life as slaveholders rose to a fevered pitch. Another 22 years would pass before the Civil War would begin. This “trial” places the burden on the readers to reach the only conclusion the abolitionists thought they could reach.

READER, YOU are empaneled as a juror to try a plain case and bring in an honest verdict. The question at issue is not one of law, but of act—“What is the actual condition of slaves in the United States?”

A plainer case never went to jury. Look at it. TWENTY SEVEN HUNDRED THOUSAND PERSONS in this country, men, women, and children, are in SLAVERY. Is slavery, as a condition for human beings, good, bad, or indifferent?

We submit the question without argument. You have common sense, and conscience, and a human heart—pronounce upon it. You have a wife, or a husband, a child, a father, a mother, a brother or a sister—make the case your own, make it theirs, and bring in your verdict.

The case of Human Rights against Slavery has been adjudicated in the court of conscience times innumerable. The same verdict has always been rendered—“Guilty;” the same sentence has always been pronounced “Let it be accursed;” and human nature, with her million echoes, has rung it round the world in every language under heaven. “Let it be accursed. . . .”

As slaveholders and their apologists are volunteer witnesses in their own cause, and are flooding the world with testimony that their slaves are kindly treated; that they are well fed, well clothed, well housed, well lodged, moderately worked, and bountifully provided with all things needful for their comfort, we propose—first, to disprove their assertions by the testimony of a multitude of impartial witnesses, and then to put slaveholders themselves through a course of cross-questioning which will draw their condemnation out of their own mouths.

We will prove that the slaves in the United States are treated with barbarous inhumanity; that they are overworked, underfed, wretchedly clad and lodged, and have insufficient sleep; that they are often made to wear round their necks iron collars armed with prongs, to drag heavy chains and weights at their feet while working in the field, and to wear yokes and bells, and iron horns; that they are often kept confined in the stocks day and night for weeks together, made to wear gags in their mouths for hours or days, have some of their front teeth torn out or broken off, that they may be easily detected when they run away; that they are frequently flogged with terrible severity, have red pepper rubbed into their lacerated flesh, and hot brine, spirits of turpentine etc., poured over the gashes to increase the torture; that they are often stripped naked, their backs and limbs cut with knives, bruised and mangled by scores and hundreds of blows with the paddle, and terribly torn by the claws of cats, drawn over them by their tormentors; that they are often hunted with blood-hounds and shot down like beasts, or torn in pieces by dogs; that they are often suspended by the arms and whipped and beaten till they faint, and when revived by restoratives, beaten again till they faint, and sometimes till they die; that their ears are often cut off, their eyes knocked out, their bones broken, their flesh branded with red hot irons; that they are maimed, mutilated and burned to death, over slow fires. All these things, and more, and worse, we shall prove . . .

Dred Scott v. Sandford (excerpts)

We shall show, not merely that such deeds are committed, but that they are frequent; not done in corners, but before the sun; not in one of the slave states, but in all of them; not perpetrated by brutal overseers and drivers merely, but by magistrates, by legislators, by professors of religion, by preachers of the gospel, by governors of states, by “gentlemen of property and standing,” and by delicate females moving in the “highest circles of society.”

We know, full well, the outcry that will be made by multitudes, at these declarations; the multiform cavils, the flat denials, the charges of “exaggeration” and “falsehood” so often bandied, the sneers of affected contempt at the credulity that can believe such things, and the rage and imprecations against those who give them currency. We know, too, the threadbare sophistries by which slaveholders and their apologists seek to evade such testimony. If they admit that such deeds are committed, they tell us that they are exceedingly rare, and therefore furnish no grounds for judging of the general treatment of slaves; that occasionally a brutal wretch in the free states barbarously butchers his wife, but that no one thinks of inferring from that, the general treatment of wives at the North and West.

They tell us, also, that the slaveholders of the South are proverbially hospitable, kind, and generous, and it is incredible that they can perpetrate such enormities upon human beings; further, that it is absurd to suppose that they would thus injure their own property, that self-interest would prompt them to treat their slaves with kindness, as none but fools and madmen wantonly destroy their own property; further, that Northern visitors at the South come back testifying to the kind treatment of the slaves, and that slaves themselves corroborate such representations. All these pleas, and scores of others, are build in every corner of the free States; and who that hath eyes to see, has not sickened at the blindness that saw not, at the palsy of heart that felt not, or at the cowardice and sycophancy that dared not expose such shallow fallacies. We are not to be turned from our purpose by such vapid babblings. In their appropriate places, we proposed to consider these objections and various others, and to show their emptiness and folly.

DRED SCOTT V. SANDFORD (EXCERPTS)

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Supreme Court Justice Roger Brooke Taney led his Court to a decision in 1856 that would become a final impetus in the movement toward the Civil War. Dred Scott was the slave of an Army surgeon, John Emerson, who had moved from Missouri, a slave state, to Illinois, a free state. Scott also moved with his owner into the Wisconsin Territory where slavery was prohibited by the Missouri Compromise. Three years after Emerson's death in 1843, Scott sued his widow for his freedom. His argument was that since he had lived in a free state and a free territory, he should be a free man. A Missouri state circuit court agreed with him. The Missouri Supreme Court reversed that decision. Because Scott was now the property of John F.A. Sandford of New York and did not live in Missouri, his lawyers successfully transferred the case to federal court. Both the lower federal court and the U.S. Supreme Court in an appeal decided against Scott's case. Not only did the decision deny that any African American could claim U.S. citizenship. It declared an act of Congress unconstitutional for only the second time in history. In 1868 when Congress adopted the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution extending citizenship to former slaves, the Dred Scott decision was overturned.

In 1835, Dred Scott, born a slave in Virginia, became the property of John Emerson, an Army doctor, in the slave state of Missouri. From there, he was taken into the free state of Illinois and later to the free territory of Minnesota.

In 1847, Scott instituted suit in the circuit court of the St. Louis County, Missouri, arguing that he should be given his freedom by virtue of his having resided on free soil. After nine years, his case was certified to the United States Supreme Court, where five of the nine justices, were Southerners.

In delivering his opinion, Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney declared that, by virtue of both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, African Americans could not be regarded as citizens of the United States. Moreover, the Court could not deprive slaveholders of their right to take slaves into any part of the Union, North or South. In effect, therefore, the Missouri Compromise, as well as other antislavery legislation, was declared to be unconstitutional.

Under the terms of the Missouri Compromise, Missouri was allowed to join the Union with a slave population of almost 10,000; Maine was admitted as a free state. However, the compromise also prohibited the expansion of slavery into any part of the Louisiana Territory north of Latitude 36 degrees, 30 minutes N. It was here, into Illinois and the territory of Wisconsin, that Dred Scott's master brought him, and in 1846 Scott sued his master for his freedom.

After numerous delays, trials, and retrials, the case reached the United States Supreme Court in 1856. Hearing this case, the Court was not only faced with the question as to whether Scott was a free man, as a result of his sojourn in a free territory, but it also had to consider whether Congress had the authority under the Constitution to outlaw slavery in the territories. Although, each of the nine justices delivered a separate opinion, the opinion of Chief Justice Roger Brook Taney has been generally accepted as the Court's ruling on the matter.

The question is simply this: Can a negro, whose ancestors were imported into this country and sold as slaves, become a member of the political community formed and brought into existence by the constitution of the United States, and as such become entitled to all the rights, and privileges, and immunities, guaranteed by that instrument to the citizen? . . .

The words "people of the United States" and "citizens" are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the "sovereign people," and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty. The question before us is, whether the class of persons described in the plea in abatement compose a portion of this people, and are constituent members of this sovereignty? We think they are not, and that they are not included, and were not intended to be included, under the word "citizens" in the constitution, and can therefore claim none of the rights and privileges which that instrument provides for and secures to citizens of the United States. On the contrary, they were at that time considered as a subordinate and inferior class of beings, who had been subjugated by the dominant race, and, whether emancipated or not, yet remained subject to their authority, and had no rights or privileges. . . .

It is not the province of the court to decide upon the justice or injustice, the policy or impolicy, of these laws. The decision of that question belonged to the political or law-making power; to those who formed the sovereignty and framed the constitution. The duty of the court is, to interpret the instrument they have framed, with the best lights we can obtain on the subject, and to administer it as we find it, according to its true intent and meaning when it was adopted.

In discussing this question, we must not confound the rights of citizenship which a State may confer within its own limits, and the rights of citizenship as member of the Union. It does not by any means follow, because he has all the rights and privileges of a citizen of a State, that he must be a citizen of the United States. He may have all of the rights and privileges of the citizen of a State, and yet not be entitled to the rights and privileges of a citizen in any other State. For, previous to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, every State had the undoubted right to confer on whomsoever it pleased the character of citizen, and to endow him with all its rights. But this character of course was confined to the boundaries of the State, and gave him no rights or privileges in other States beyond those secured to him by the laws of nations and the comity of States. Nor have the several States surrendered the power of conferring these rights and privileges by adopting the constitution of United States. . . .

It is very clear, therefore, that no State can, by any act or law of its own, passed since the adoption of the constitution, introduce a new member into the political community created by the constitution of the United States. It cannot make him a member of this community by making him a member of its own. And for the same reason it cannot introduce any person, or description of persons, who were not intended to be embraced in this new political family, which the constitution brought into existence, but were intended to be excluded from it.

The question then arises, whether the provisions of the constitution, in relation to the personal rights and privileges to which the citizen of a State should be entitled, embraced the negro African race, at that time in this country, or who might afterwards be imported, who had then or should afterwards be made free in any State; and to put it in the power of a single State to make him a citizen of the United States, and endue him with the full rights of citizenship in every other State without consent? Does the constitution of the United States act upon him whenever he shall be made free under the laws of a State, and raised there to the rank of a citizen, and immediately clothe him with all the privileges of a citizen in every other State, and in its own courts?

Dred Scott v. Sandford (excerpts)

The court thinks the affirmative of these propositions cannot be maintained. And if it cannot, the plaintiff in error could not be a citizen of the State of Missouri, within the meaning of the constitution of the United States, and, consequently, was not entitled to sue in its courts.

It is true, every person, and every class and description of persons, who were at the time of the adoption of the constitution recognized as citizens in the several States, became also citizens of this new political body; but none other; it was formed by them, and for them and their posterity, but for no one else. And the personal rights and privileges guaranteed to citizens of this new sovereignty were intended to embrace those only who were then members of the several State communities, or who should afterwards by birthright or otherwise become members, according to the provisions of the constitution and the principles on which it was founded. . . .

In the opinion of the court, the legislation and histories of the times, and the language used in the declaration of independence, show, that neither the class of persons who had been imported as slaves, nor their descendants, whether they had become free or not, were then acknowledged as a part of the people, nor intended to be included in the general words used in that memorable instrument. . . .

. . . The government of the United States had no right to interfere for any other purpose but that protecting the rights of the owner, leaving it altogether with the several States to deal with this race, whether emancipated or not, as each State may think justice, humanity, and the interests and safety of society, require. . . .

The act of Congress, upon which the plaintiff relies, declares that slavery and involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, shall be forever prohibited in all that part of the territory ceded by France, under the name of Louisiana, which lies north of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes north latitude and not included within the limits of Missouri. And the difficulty which meets us at the threshold of this part of the inquiry is whether Congress was authorized to pass this law under any of the powers granted to it by the Constitution; for, if the authority is not given by that instrument, it is the duty of this Court to declare it void and inoperative and incapable of conferring freedom upon anyone who is held as a slave under the laws of any one of the states. . . .

We do not mean . . . to question the power of Congress in this respect. The power to expand the territory of the United States by the admission of new states is plainly given; and in the construction of this power by all the departments of the government, it has been held to authorize the acquisition of territory, not fit for admission at the time, but to be admitted as soon as its population and situation would entitle it to admission. It is acquired to become a state and not to be held as a colony and governed by Congress with absolute Authority; and, as the propriety of admitting a new state is committed to the sound discretion of Congress, the power to acquire territory for that purpose, to be held by the United States until it is in a suitable condition to become a state upon an equal footing with the other states, must rest upon the same discretional. . . .

But the power of Congress over the person or property of a citizen can never be a mere discretionary power under our Constitution and form of government. The powers of the government and the rights and privileges of the citizen are regulated and plainly defined by the Constitution itself. . . .

These powers, and others, in relation to rights of person, which it is not necessary here to enumerate, are, in express and positive terms, denied to the general government; and the rights of private property have been guarded with equal care. Thus the rights of property are united with the rights of person and placed on the same ground by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, and property without due process of law. And an act of Congress which deprives a citizen of the United States of his liberty of property, without due process of law, merely because he came himself or brought his property into a particular territory of the United States, and who had committed no offense against the law, could hardly be dignified with the name of due process of law. . . .

It seems, however, to be supposed that there is a difference between property in a slave and other property and that different rules may be applied to it in expounding Constitution of the United States. And the laws and usages of nations, and the writings of eminent jurists upon the relation of master and slave and their mutual rights and duties, and the powers which governments may exercise over it, have been dwelt upon in the argument.

But, in considering the question before us, it must be borne in mind that there is no law of nations standing between the people of the United States and their government and interfering with their relation to each other. The powers of the government and the rights of the citizen under it are positive and practical regulations plainly written down. The people of the United States have delegated to it certain enumerated powers and forbidden it to exercise others. It has no power over the person or property of a citizen but what the citizens of the United States have granted. And no laws or usages of other nations, or reasoning of statesmen or jurists upon the relations of master and slave, can enlarge the powers of the government or take from the citizens the rights they have reserved. And if the Constitution recognizes the right of property of the master in a slave, and makes no distinction between that description of property and other property owned by a citizen, no tribunal, acting under the authority of the United States, whether it be legislative, executive, or judicial, has a right to draw such a distinction or deny to it the benefit of the provisions and guaranties which have been provided for the protection of private property against the encroachments of the government.

Now, as we have already said in an earlier part of this opinion, upon a different point, the right of property in a slave is distinctly and expressly affirmed in the Constitution. The right to traffic in it, like an ordinary article of merchandise and property, was guaranteed to the citizens of the United States, in every state that might desire it, for twenty years. And the government in express terms is pledged to protect it in all future time if the slave escapes from his owner. That is done in plain words—too plain to be misunderstood. And no word can be found in the Constitution which gives Congress a greater power over slave property or which entitles property of that kind to less protection than property of any other description. The only power conferred is the power coupled with the duty of guarding and protecting the owner in his rights.

Upon these considerations it is the opinion of the court that the act of Congress which prohibited a citizen from holding and owning property of this kind in the territory of the United States north of the line therein mentioned is not warranted by the Constitution and is therefore void; and that neither Dred Scott himself, nor any of his family, were made free by being carried into this territory; even if they had been carried there by the owner with the intention of becoming a permanent resident. . . .

BLACK CODES OF MISSISSIPPI

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Following emancipation, and particularly after the end of the Civil War, many states, particularly those in the South, wanted to impose restrictions on the activities of the freed slaves. Many white people were uncomfortable with the new role of African Americans. They did not want them to find a place at the same social level as whites. Thus they created "codes" such as these imposed in Mississippi. What seemed to be recognition of these freed slaves' civil rights were in fact a way to achieve the goal of keeping African Americans socially and economically disadvantaged. The vagrancy laws were especially harsh. These were designed to make it easy to fine or arrest those African Americans who might not be used to their new lives or be gainfully employed—something that was not easy to achieve in the post-Civil War South, where feelings against freed slaves tended toward animosity.

AN ACT TO CONFER CIVIL RIGHTS ON FREEDMEN, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Section 1. All freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, in all the courts of law and equity of this State, and may acquire personal property, and chuses in action, by descent or purchase, and may dispose of the same in the same manner and to the same extent that white persons may: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not be so construed as to allow any freedman, free negro or mulatto to rent or lease any lands or tenements except in incorporated cities or towns, in which places the corporate authorities shall control the same.

Section 2. All freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes may intermarry with each other, in the same manner and under the same regulations that are provided by law for white persons: Provided, that the clerk of probate shall keep separate records of the same.

Section 3. All freedmen, free negroes or mulattoes who do now and have herebefore lived and cohabited together as husband and wife shall be taken and held in law as legally married, and the issue shall be taken and held as legitimate for all purposes; and it shall not be lawful for any freedman, free negro or mulatto to intermarry with any white person; nor for any person to intermarry with any freedman, free negro or mulatto; and any person who shall so intermarry shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof shall be confined in the State penitentiary for life; and those shall be deemed freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes who are of pure negro blood, and those descended from a negro to the third generation, inclusive, though one ancestor in each generation may have been a white person.

Section 4. In addition to cases in which freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes are now by law competent witnesses, freedmen, free negroes or mulattoes shall be competent in civil cases, when a party or parties to the suit, either plaintiff or plaintiffs, defendant or defendants; also in cases where freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes is or are either plaintiff or plaintiffs, defendant or defendants. They shall also be competent witnesses in all criminal prosecutions where the crime charged is alleged to have been committed by a white person upon or against the person or property of a freedman, free negro or mulatto: Provided, that in all cases said witnesses shall be examined in open court, on the stand; except, however, they may be examined before the grand jury, and shall in all cases be subject to the rules and tests of the common law as to competency and credibility.

Section 5. Every freedman, free negro and mulatto shall, on the second Monday of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, and annually thereafter, have a lawful home or employment, and shall have written evidence thereof as follows, to wit: if living in any incorporated city, town, or village, a license from the mayor thereof; and if living outside of an incorporated city, town, or village, from the member of the board of police of his beat, authorizing him or her to do irregular and job work; or a written contract, as provided in Section 6 in this act; which license may be revoked for cause at any time by the authority granting the same.

Section 6. All contracts for labor made with freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes for a longer period than one month shall be in writing, and a duplicate, attested and read to said freedman, free negro or mulatto by a beat, city or county officer, or two disinterested white persons of the county in which the labor is to be performed, of which each party shall have one: and said contracts shall be taken and held as entire contracts, and if the laborer shall quit the service of the employer before the expiration of his term of service, without good cause, he shall forfeit his wages for that year up to the time of quitting.

Section 7. Every civil officer shall, and every person may, arrest and carry back to his or her legal employer any freedman, free negro, or mulatto who shall have quit the service of his or her employer before the expiration of his or her term of service without good cause; and said officer and person shall be entitled to receive for arresting and carrying back every deserting employee aforesaid the sum of five dollars, and ten cents per mile from the place of arrest to the place of delivery; and the same shall be paid by the employer, and held as a set off for so much against the wages of said deserting employee: Provided, that said arrested party, after being so returned, may appeal to the justice of the peace or member of the board of police of the county, who, on notice to the alleged employer, shall try summarily whether said appellant is legally employed by the alleged employer, and has good cause to quit said employer. Either party shall have the right of appeal to the county court, pending which the alleged deserter shall be remanded to the alleged employer or otherwise disposed of, as shall be right and just; and the decision of the county court shall be final.

Section 8. Upon affidavit made by the employer of any freedman, free negro or mulatto, or other credible person, before any justice of the peace or member of the board of police, that any freedman, free negro or mulatto legally employed by said employer has illegally deserted said employment, such justice of the peace or member of the board of police issue his warrant or warrants, returnable before himself or other such officer, to any sheriff, constable or special deputy, commanding him to arrest said deserter, and return him or her to said employer, and the like proceedings shall be had as provided in the preceding section; and it shall be lawful for any officer to whom such warrant shall be directed to execute said warrant in any county in this State; and that said warrant may be transmitted without endorsement to any like officer of another county, to be executed and returned as aforesaid; and the said employer shall pay the costs of said warrants and arrest and return, which shall be set off for so much against the wages of said deserter.

Section 9. If any person shall persuade or attempt to persuade, entice, or cause any freedman, free negro or mulatto to desert from the legal employment of any person before the expiration of his or her term of service, or shall knowingly employ any such deserting freedman, free negro or mulatto, or shall knowingly give or sell to any such deserting freedman, free negro or mulatto, any food, raiment, or other thing, he or she shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars and not more than two hundred dollars and costs; and if the said fine and costs shall not be immediately paid, the court shall sentence said convict to not exceeding two months imprisonment in the county jail, and he or she shall moreover be liable to the party injured in damages: Provided, if any person shall, or shall attempt to, persuade, entice, or cause any freedman, free negro or mulatto to desert from any legal employment of any person, with the view to employ said freedman, free negro or mulatto without the limits of this State, such costs; and if said fine and costs shall not be immediately paid, the court shall sentence said convict to not exceeding six months imprisonment in the county jail.

Section 10. It shall be lawful for any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, to charge any white person, freedman, free negro or mulatto by affidavit, with any criminal offense against his or her person or property, and upon such affidavit the proper process shall be issued and executed as if said affidavit was made by a white person, and it shall be lawful for any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, in any action, suit or controversy pending, or about to be instituted in any court of law equity in this State, to make all needful and lawful affidavits as shall be necessary for the institution, prosecution or defense of such suit or controversy.

Section 11. The penal laws of this state, in all cases not otherwise specially provided for, shall apply and extend to all freedman, free negroes and mulattoes. . . .

AN ACT TO REGULATE THE RELATION OF MASTER AND APPRENTICE, AS RELATES TO FREEDMEN, FREE NEGROES, AND MULATTOES

Section 1. It shall be the duty of all sheriffs, justices of the peace, and other civil officers of the several counties in this State, to report to the probate courts of their respective counties semiannually, at the January and July terms of said courts, all freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes, under the age of eighteen, in their respective counties, beats, or districts, who are orphans, or whose parent or parents have not the means or who refuse to provide for and support said minors; and thereupon it shall be the duty of said probate court to order the clerk of said court to apprentice said minors to some competent and suitable person on such terms as the court may direct, having a particular care to the interest of said minor: Provided, that the former owner of said minors shall have the preference when, in the opinion of the court, he or she shall be a suitable person for that purpose.

Section 2. The said court shall be fully satisfied that the person or persons to whom said minor shall be apprenticed shall be a suitable person to have the charge and care of said minor, and fully to protect the interest of said minor. The said court shall require the said master or mistress to execute bond and security, payable to the State of Mississippi, conditioned that he or she shall furnish said minor with sufficient food and clothing; to treat said minor humanely; furnish medical attention in case of sickness; teach, or cause to be taught, him or her to read and write, if under fifteen years old, and will conform to any law that may be hereafter passed for the regulation of the duties and relation of master and apprentice: Provided, that said apprentice shall be bound by indenture, in case of males, until they are twenty-one years old, and in case of females until they are eighteen years old.

Section 3. In the management and control of said apprentices, said master or mistress shall have the power to inflict such moderate corporeal chastisement as a father or guardian is allowed to infliction on his or her child or ward at common law: Provided, that in no case shall cruel or inhuman punishment be inflicted.

Section 4. If any apprentice shall leave the employment of his or her master or mistress, without his or her consent, said master or mistress may pursue and recapture said apprentice, and bring him or her before any justice of the peace of the county, whose duty it shall be to remand said apprentice to the service of his or her master or mistress; and in the event of a refusal on the part of said apprentice so to return, then said justice shall commit said apprentice to the jail of said county, on failure to give bond, to the next term of the county court; and it shall be the duty of said court at the first term thereafter to investigate said case, and if the court shall be of opinion that said apprentice left the employment of his or her master or mistress without good cause, to order him or her to be punished, as provided for the punishment of hired freedmen, as may be from time to time provided for by law for desertion, until he or she shall agree to return to the service of his or her master or mistress: Provided, that the court may grant continuances as in other cases: And provided further, that if the court shall believe that said apprentice had good cause to quit his said master or mistress, the court shall discharge said apprentice from said indenture, and also enter a judgment against the master or mistress for not more than one hundred dollars, for the use and benefit of said apprentice, to be collected on execution as in other cases.

Section 5. If any person entice away any apprentice from his or her master or mistress, or shall knowingly employ an apprentice, or furnish him or her food or clothing without the written consent of his or her master or mistress, or shall sell or give said apprentice spirits without such consent, said person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction there of before the county court, be punished as provided for the punishment of persons enticing from their employer hired freedmen, free negroes or mulattoes.

Section 6. It shall be the duty of all civil officers of their respective counties to report any minors within their respective counties to said probate court who are subject to be apprenticed under the provisions of this act, from time to time as the facts may come to their knowledge, and it shall be the duty of said court from time to time as said minors shall be reported to them, or otherwise come to their knowledge, to apprentice said minors as hereinbefore provided.

Section 9. It shall be lawful for any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, having a minor child or children, to apprentice the said minor child or children, as provided for by this act.

Section 10. In all cases where the age of the freedman, free negro, or mulatto cannot be ascertained by record testimony, the judge of the county court shall fix the age. . . .

AN ACT TO AMEND THE VAGRANT LAWS OF THE STATE

Section 1. All rogues and vagabonds, idle and dissipated persons, beggars, jugglers, or persons practicing unlawful games or plays, runaways, common drunkards, common night-walkers, pilferers, lewd, wanton, or lascivious persons, in speech or behavior, common railers and brawlers, persons who neglect their calling or employment, mispend what they earn, or do not provide for the support of themselves or their families, or dependents, and all other idle and disorderly persons, including all who neglect all lawful business, habitually mispend their time by frequenting houses of ill-fame, gaming-houses, or tippling shops, shall be deemed and considered vagrants, under the provisions of this act, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, with all accruing costs, and be imprisoned, at the discretion of the court, not exceeding ten days.

Section 2. All freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes in this State, over the age of eighteen years, found on the second Monday in January, 1866, or thereafter, with no lawful employment or business, or found unlawfully assembling themselves together, either in the day or night time, and all white persons assembling themselves with freedmen, free negroes or mulattoes, or usually associating with freedmen, free negroes or mulattoes, on terms of equality, or living in adultery or fornication with a freed woman, freed negro or mulatto, shall be deemed vagrants, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding, in the case of a freedman, free negro or mulatto, fifty dollars, and a white man two hundred dollars, and imprisonment at the discretion of the court, the free negro not exceeding ten days, and the white man not exceeding six months.

Section 3. All justices of the peace, mayors, and aldermen of incorporated towns, counties, and cities of the several counties in this State shall have jurisdiction to try all questions of vagrancy in their respective towns, counties, and cities, and it is hereby made their duty, whenever they shall ascertain that any person or persons in their respective towns, and counties and cities are violating any of the provisions of this act, to have said party or parties arrested, and brought before them, and immediately investigate said charge, and, on conviction, punish said party or parties, as provided for herein. And it is hereby made the duty of all sheriffs, constables, town constables, and all such like officers, and city marshals, to report to some officer having jurisdiction all violations of any of the provisions of this act, and in case any officer shall fail or neglect any duty herein it shall be the duty of the county court to fine said officer, upon conviction, not exceeding one hundred dollars, to be paid into the county treasury for county purposes.

Section 4. Keepers of gaming houses, houses of prostitution, prostitutes, public or private, and all persons who derive their chief support in the employments that militate against good morals, or against law, shall be deemed and held to be vagrants.

Section 5. All fines and forfeitures collected by the provisions of this act shall be paid into the county treasury for general county purposes, and in case of any freedman, free negro or mulatto shall fail for five days after the imposition of any or forfeiture upon him or her for violation of any of the provisions of this act to pay the same, that it shall be, and is hereby, made the duty of the sheriff of the proper county to hire out said freedman, free negro or mulatto, to any person who will, for the shortest period of service, pay said fine and forfeiture and all costs: Provided, a preference shall be given to the employer, if there be one, in which case the employer shall be entitled to deduct and retain the amount so paid from the wages of such freedman, free negro or mulatto, then due or to become due; and in case freedman, free negro or mulatto cannot hire out, he or she may be dealt with as a pauper.

Section 6. The same duties and liabilities existing among white persons of this State shall attach to freedmen, free negroes or mulattoes, to support their indigent families and all colored paupers; and that in order to secure a support for such indigent freedmen, free negroes, or mulattoes, it shall be lawful, and is hereby made the duty of the county police of each county in this State, to levy a poll or capitation tax on each and every freedman, free negro, or mulatto, between the ages of eighteen and sixty years, not to exceed the sum of one dollar annually to each person so taxed, which tax, when collected, shall be paid into the county treasurer's hands, and constitute a fund to be called the Freedman's Pauper Fund, which shall be applied by the commissioners of the poor for the maintenance of the poor of the freedmen, free negroes and mulattoes of this State, under such regulations as may be established by the boards of county police in the respective counties of this State.

Section 7. If any freedman, free negro, or mulatto shall fail or refuse to pay any tax levied according to the provisions of the sixth section of this act, it shall be prima facie evidence of vagrancy, and it shall be the duty of the sheriff to arrest such freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or such person refusing or neglecting to pay such tax, and proceed at once to hire for the shortest time such delinquent taxpayer to any one who will pay the said tax, with accruing costs, giving preference to the employer, if there be one.

Section 8. Any person feeling himself or herself aggrieved by judgment of any justice of the peace, mayor, or alderman in cases arising under this act, may within five days appeal to the next term of the county court of the proper county, upon giving bond and security in a sum not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred and fifty dollars, conditioned to appear and prosecute said appeal, and abide by the judgment of the county court; and said appeal shall be tried de novo in the county court, and the decision of the said court shall be final. . . .

GERONIMO'S DEFENSE OF HIMSELF AND HIS ACTIONS TO U.S. ARMY GENERAL GEORGE CROOK IN 1886

SOURCE Vanderwerth, W. C. From Indian Oratory: Famous Speeches by Noted Indian Chieftains, University of Oklahoma Press, 1971. Copyright © 1971 University of Oklahoma Press. Reproduced by permission.

INTRODUCTION Geronimo was born in 1829, near the headwaters of New Mexico's Gila River. The United States was a young nation whose western territories were still being settled. In the Apache homeland of the Chiricahua mountain range in what is now southwestern Arizona, the Native Americans were still engaged in a centuries' long struggle with the Spanish who had been there since the 1500s. By Geronimo's time, white settlers were also beginning to encroach upon his people's land. In 1858, Mexicans killed his mother, wife, and children. His pain and anger then led him into a series of raids against white settlers in the region. Geronimo then retreated peacefully into a reservation in Arizona. It was not until the U.S. government attempted to force the Chiricahua Apaches to move to a reservation in New Mexico that Geronimo's refusal took him into a ten-year guerrilla war against both the Mexicans and the Americans. More often than not, even after several captures he would head back into the safe hideout of the mountains with his followers, continually eluding capture. In 1886 he was finally cornered by U.S. troops and threatened with a move to a Florida reservation if the Apache raids did not stop. He delivered this defense to U.S. Army General George Crook when he met and realized that surrender might be the only option. Some thought this was his own version of the truth rather than the remarks of an innocent man. Regardless of the debate over the objectiveness of his point of view,, his speech worked.

He lived out his life in peace, long enough to attend the presidential inauguration ceremonies of Theodore Roosevelt in 1905. He died in 1909 and is buried at Ft. Sill, Oklahoma.

I want to talk first of the causes which led me to leave the reservation. I was living quietly and contented, doing and thinking of no harm, while at the Sierra Blanca. I don't know what harm I did to those three men, Chato, Mickey Free, and Lieutenant Davis. I was living peaceably and satisfied when people began to speak bad of me. I should be glad to know who started those stories. I was living peaceably with my family, having plenty to eat, sleeping well, taking care of my people, and perfectly contented. I don't know where those bad stories first came from. There we were doing well and my people well. I was behaving well. I hadn't killed a horse or man, American or Indian. I don't know what was the matter with the people in charge of us. They knew this to be so, and yet they said I was a bad man and the worst man there; but what harm had I done? I was living peaceably and well, but I did not leave on my own accord. Had I left it would have been right to blame me; but as it is, blame those men who started this talk about me.

Some time before I left an Indian named Wodiskay had a talk with me. He said, "They are going to arrest you," but I paid no attention to him, knowing that I had done no wrong; and the wife of Mangus, Huera, told me that they were going to seize me and put me and Mangus in the guardhouse, and I learned from the American and Apache soldiers, from Chato, and Mickey Free, that the Americans were going to arrest me and hang me, and so I left.

I would like to know now who it was that gave the order to arrest me and hang me. I was living peaceably there with my family under the shade of the trees, doing just what General Crook had told me I must do and trying to follow his advice. I want to know now who it was ordered me to be arrested. I was praying to the light and to the darkness, to God and to the sun, to let me live quietly with my family. I don't know what the reason was that people should speak badly of me. I don't want to be blamed. The fault was not mine. Blame those three men. With them is the fault, and find out who it was that began that bad talk about me.

I have several times asked for peace, but trouble has come from the agents and interpreters. I don't want what has passed to happen again. Now, I am going to tell you something else. The Earth-Mother is listening to me and I hope that all may be so arranged that from now on there shall be no trouble and that we shall always have peace. Whenever we see you coming to where we are, we think it is God—you must come always with God. From this on I do not want that anything shall be told you about me even in joke. Whenever I have broken out, it was always been on account of bad talk. From this on I hope that people will tell me nothing but the truth. From this on I want to do what is right and nothing else and I do not want you to believe any bad papers about me. I want the papers sent you to tell the truth about me, because I want to do what is right. Very often there are stories put in the newspapers that I am to be hanged. I don't want that any more. When a man tries to do right, such stories ought not to be put in the newspapers.

I don't know what the reason was that people should speak badly of me. . . . From this on I want to do what is right and nothing else. . . . There are very few of my men left now. They have done some bad things but I want them all rubbed out now and let us never speak of them again. There are very few of us left. We think of our relations, brothers, brothers-in-law, father-in-law, etc., over on the reservation, and from this on we want to live at peace just as they are doing, and to behave as they are behaving. Sometimes a man does something and men are sent out to bring in his head. I don't want such things to happen to us. I don't want that we should be killing each other.

What is the matter that you don't speak to me? It would be better if you would speak to me and look with a pleasant face. It would make better feeling. I would be glad if you did. I'd be better satisfied if you would talk to me once in a while. Why don't you look at me and smile at me? I am the same man; I have the same feet, legs, and hands, and the sun looks down on me a complete man. I want you to look and smile at me.

I have not forgotten what you told me, although a long time has passed. I keep it in my memory. I am a complete man. Nothing has gone from my body. From here on I want to live at peace. Don't believe any bad talk you hear about me. The agents and the interpreter hear that somebody has done wrong, and they blame it all on me. Don't believe what they say. I don't want any of this bad talk in the future. I don't want those men who talked this way about me to be my agents any more. I want good men to be my agents and interpreters; people who will talk right. I want this peace to be legal and good. Whenever I meet you I talk good to you, and you to me, and peace is soon established; but when you go to the reservation you put agents and interpreters over us who do bad things. Perhaps they don't mind what you tell them, because I do not believe you would tell them to do bad things to us. In the future we don't want these bad men to be allowed near where we are to live. We don't want any more of that kind of bad talk. I don't want any man who will talk bad about me, and tell lies, to be there, because I am going to try and live well and peaceably. I want to have a good man put over me.

While living I want to live well. I know I have to die sometime, but even if the heavens were to fall on me, I want to do what is right. I think I am a good man, but in the papers all over the world they say I am a bad man; but it is a bad thing to say so about me. I never do wrong without a cause. Every day I am thinking, how am I to talk to you to make you believe what I say; and, I think, too, that you are thinking of what you are to say to me. There is one God looking down on us all. We are all children of the one God. God is listening to me. The sun, the darkness, the winds, are all listening to what we now say.

To prove to you that I am telling you the truth, remember I sent you word that I would come from a place far away to speak to you here, and you see us now. Some have come on horseback and some on foot. If I were thinking bad, or if I had done bad, I would never have come here. If it has been my fault, would I have come so far to talk to you? I have told you all that has happened. I also had feared that I should never see Ka-e-te-na again, but here he is, and I want the past to be buried. I am glad to see Ka-e-te-na. I was afraid I should never see him again. That was one reason, too, why I left. I wish that Ka-e-te-na would be returned to us to live with his family. I now believe what I was told. Now I believe that all told me is true, because I see Ka-e-te-na again. I am glad to see him again, as I was told I should. We are all glad. My body feels good because I see Ka-e-te-na, and my breathing is good. Now I can eat well, drink well, sleep well, and be glad. I can go everywhere with good feeling. Now, what I want is peace in good faith. Both you and I think well and think alike.

Well, we have talked enough and set here long enough. I may have forgotten something, but if I remember it, I will tell you of it tonight, or tomorrow, or some other time. I have finished for today, but I'll have something more to say bye and bye.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON'S "ATLANTA COMPROMISE" SPEECH

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Born into slavery and deprived of an education until after the Emancipation Proclamation, when he and his family were freed, Booker T. Washington understood the value of education. He would eventually rise to great prominence as an educator and play a key role in the founding of the Tuskegee Institute. Known for his genteel manner and criticized by many for being too accommodating, Washington still secretly funded anti-segregationist groups. In this speech, delivered at the Atlanta Exposition in 1895, Washington recognized that the early years of freedom for his people were a struggle without all of the chances the white Americans had at their disposal for climbing up out of poverty. He told the people that day that it would be in the South where these freed slaves should find their best opportunity and that the leaders in the South should recognize the remarkable resource of willing workers they had right in front of them. When the movie The Birth of a Nation opened in 1915, he spoke out with many others who protested the stereotype of the African American that the movie portrayed. He died just a few months later.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Board of Directors and Citizens:

One-third of the population of the South is of the Negro race. No enterprise seeking the material, civil, or moral welfare of this section can disregard this element of our population and reach the highest success. I but convey to you, Mr. President and Directors, the sentiment of the masses of my race when I say that in no way have the value and manhood of the American Negro been more fittingly and generously recognized than by the managers of this magnificent Exposition at every stage of its progress. It is a recognition that will do more to cement the friendship of the two races than any occurrence since the dawn of our freedom.

Not only this, but the opportunity here afforded will awaken among us a new era of industrial progress. Ignorant and inexperienced, it is not strange that in the first years of our new life we began at the top instead of at the bottom; that a seat in Congress or the State Legislature was more sought than real estate or industrial skill; that the political convention or stump speaking had more attractions than starting a dairy farm or truck garden.

A ship lost at sea for many days suddenly sighted a friendly vessel. From the mast of the unfortunate vessel was seen a signal: "Water, water; we die of thirst!" The answer from the friendly vessel at once came back: "Cast down your bucket where you are." A second time the signal, "Water, water; send us water!" ran up from the distressed vessel, and was answered: "Cast down your bucket where you are." And a third and fourth signal for water was answered: "Cast down your bucket where you are." The captain of the distressed vessel, at last heeding the injunction, cast down his bucket, and it came up full of fresh, sparkling water from the mouth of the Amazon River. To those of my race who depend on bettering their condition in a foreign land, or who underestimate the importance of cultivating friendly relations with the Southern white man, who is their next door neighbor, I would say: "Cast down your bucket where you are"—cast it down in making friends in every manly way of the people of all races by whom we are surrounded.

Cast it down in agriculture, mechanics, in commerce, in domestic service, and in the professions. And in this connection it is well to bear in mind that whatever other sins the South may be called to bear, when it comes to business, pure and simple, it is in the South that the Negro is given a man's chance in the commercial world, and in nothing is this Exposition more eloquent than in emphasizing this chance. Our greatest danger is, that in the great leap from slavery to freedom we may overlook the fact that the masses of us are to live by the productions of our hands, and fail to keep in mind that we shall prosper in proportion as we learn to dignify and glorify common labor, and put brains and skill into the common occupations of life; shall prosper in proportion as we learn to draw the line between the superficial and the substantial, the ornamental gewgaws of life and the useful. No race can prosper till it learns that there is as much dignity in tilling a field as in writing a poem. It is at the bottom of life we must begin, and not at the top. Nor should we permit our grievances to overshadow our opportunities.

To those of the white race who look to the incoming of those of foreign birth and strange tongue and habits for the prosperity of the South, were I permitted, I would repeat what I say to my own race, "Cast down your bucket where you are." Cast it down among the 8,000,000 Negroes whose habits you know, whose fidelity and love you have tested in days when to have proved treacherous meant the ruin of your firesides. Cast down your bucket among those people who have, without strikes and labor wars, tilled your fields, cleared your forests, builded your railroads and cities, and brought forth treasures from the bowels of the earth, and helped make possible this magnificent representation of the progress of the South. Casting down your bucket among my people, helping and encouraging them as you are doing on these grounds, and, with education of head, hand and heart, you will find that they will buy your surplus land, make blossom the waste place in your fields, and run your factories. While doing this, you can be sure in the future, as in the past, that you and your families will be surrounded by the most patient, faithful, law-abiding, and unresentful people that the world has seen. As we have proved our loyalty to you in the past, in nursing your children, watching by the sick bed of your mothers and fathers, and often following them with tear-dimmed eyes to their graves, so in the future, in our humble way, we shall stand by you with a devotion that no foreigner can approach, ready to lay down our lives, if need be, in defense of yours, interlacing our industrial, commercial, civil, and religious life with yours in a way that shall make the interests of both races one. In all things that are purely social we can be as separate as the fingers, yet one as the hand in all things essential to mutual progress.

Plessy v. Ferguson (excerpts)

There is no defense or security for any of us except in the highest intelligence and development of all. If anywhere there are efforts tending to curtail the fullest growth of the Negro, let these efforts be turned into stimulating, encouraging, and making him the most useful and intelligent citizen. Effort or means so invested will pay a thousand percent interest. These efforts will be twice blessed—'blessing him that gives and him that takes.'

There is no escape through law of man or God from the inevitable:

"The laws of changeless justice bind
Oppressor with oppressed;
And close as sin and suffering joined
We march to fate abreast."

Nearly sixteen millions of hands will aid you in pulling the load upwards, or they will pull against you the load downwards. We shall constitute one-third and more of the ignorance and crime of the South, or one-third its intelligence and progress; we shall contribute one-third to the business and industrial prosperity of the South, or we shall prove a veritable body of death, stagnating, depressing, retarding every effort to advance the body politic.

Gentlemen of the Exposition, as we present to you humble effort at an exhibition of our progress, you must not expect over much. Starting thirty years ago with ownership here and there in a few quilts and pumpkins and chickens (gathered from miscellaneous sources), remember the path that has led from these to the invention and production of agricultural implements, buggies, steam engines, newspapers, books, statuary, carving, paintings, the management of drug stores and banks, has not been trodden without contact with thorns and thistles. While we take pride in what we exhibit as a result of our independent efforts, we do not for a moment forget that our part in this exhibition would fall far short of your expectations but for the constant help that has come to our educational life, not only from the Southern States, but especially from Northern philanthropists, who have made their gifts a constant stream of blessing and encouragement.

The wisest among my race understand that the agitation of questions of social equality is the extremist folly, and that progress in the enjoyment of all the privileges that will come to us must be the result of severe and constant struggle rather than of artificial forcing. No race that has anything to contribute to the markets of the world is long in any degree ostracized. It is important and right that all privileges of the law be ours, but it is vastly more important that we be prepared for the exercise of those privileges. The opportunity to earn a dollar in a factory just now is worth infinitely more than the opportunity to spend a dollar in an opera house.

In conclusion, may I repeat that nothing in thirty years has given us more hope and encouragement, and drawn us so near to you of the white race, as this opportunity offered by the Exposition; and here bending, as it were, over the altar that represents the results of the struggle of your race and mine, both starting practically empty-handed three decades ago, I pledge that, in your effort to work out the great and intricate problem which God has laid at the doors of the South, you shall have at all time the patient, sympathetic help of my race; only let this be constantly in mind that, while from representations in these buildings of the product of field, of forest, of mine, of factory, letters, and art, much good will come, yet far above and beyond material benefits will be that higher good, that let us pray God will come, in a blotting out of sectional differences and racial animosities and suspicions, in a determination to administer absolute justice, in a willing obedience among all classes to the mandates of law. This, coupled with our material prosperity, will bring into our beloved South a new heaven and a new earth.

PLESSY V. FERGUSON
(EXCERPTS)

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION In 1878 the Supreme Court had ruled in Hall v. DeCuir that states could not outlaw segregation in transportation modes such as streetcars or railroads. In 1896, after an African American man named Homer Adolph Plessy was arrested for refusing to ride in the "colored" railroad coach while traveling from New Orleans to Covington, Louisiana, he challenged the arrest. Once again, "separate but equal" was claimed to be the law of the land when Justice Billings Brown ruled that it was a reasonable use of state power, and that in this case, the Fourteenth Amendment providing for equal protection was not meant to abolish social or racial distinctions to the point of forcing a mingling together of the races. Until 1954 and the ruling of Brown v. Board of Education racial discrimination would continue to find legal support in the highest court of the United States.

Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case turns upon the constitutionality of an act of the General Assembly of the state of Louisiana, passed in 1890, providing for separate railway carriages for the white and colored races. . . .

The constitutionality of this act is attacked upon the ground that it conflicts both with the Thirteenth Amendment of the Constitution, abolishing slavery, and the Fourteenth Amendment, which prohibits certain restrictive legislation on the part of the states.

1. That it does not conflict with the Thirteenth Amendment, which abolished slavery and involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, is too clear for argument. Slavery implies involuntary servitude—a state of bondage; the ownership of mankind as a chattel, or at least the control of the labor and services of one man for the benefit of another, and absence of a legal right to the disposal of his own person, property, and services. . . .

A statute which implies merely a legal distinction between the white and colored races—a distinction which is founded in the color of the two races, and which must always exist so long as white men are distinguished from the other race by color—has no tendency to destroy the legal equality of the two races, or reestablish a state of involuntary servitude. Indeed, we do not understand that the Thirteenth Amendment is strenuously relied upon by the plaintiff in error in this connection.

2. By the Fourteenth Amendment, all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are made citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside; and the states are forbidden from making or enforcing any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, or shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person within their jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. . . .

The object of the amendment was undoubtedly to enforce the absolute equality of the two races before the law, but in the nature of things it could not have been intended to abolish distinctions based upon color, or to enforce social, as distinguished from political, equality, or a commingling of the two races upon terms unsatisfactory to either. Laws permitting, and even requiring, their separation in places where they are liable to be brought into contact do not necessarily imply the inferiority of either race to the other, and have been generally, if not universally, recognized as within the competency of the state legislatures in the exercise of their police power. The most common instance of this is connected with the establishment of separate schools for white and colored children, which has been held to be a valid exercise of the legislative power even by courts of states where the political rights of the colored race have been longest and most earnestly enforced. . . .

So far, then, as a conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment is concerned, the case reduces itself to the question whether the statute of Louisiana is a reasonable regulation, and with respect to this there must necessarily be a large discretion on the part of the legislature. In determining the question of reasonableness it is at liberty to act with reference to the established usages, customs, and traditions of the people, and with a view to the promotion of their comfort, and the preservation of the public peace and good order. Gauged by this standard, we cannot say that a law which authorizes or even requires the separation of the two races in public conveyances is unreasonable or more obnoxious to the Fourteenth Amendment than the acts of Congress requiring separate schools for colored children in the District of Columbia, the constitutionality of which does not seem to have been questioned, or the corresponding acts of state legislatures.

We consider the underlying fallacy of the plaintiff's argument to consist in the assumption that the enforced separation of the two races stamps the colored race with a badge of inferiority. If this be so, it is not by reason of anything found in the act, but solely the colored race chooses to put that construction upon it. The argument necessarily assumes that if, as has been more than once the case, and is not unlikely to be so again, the colored race should become the dominant power in the state legislature, and should enact a law in precisely similar terms, it would thereby relegate the white race to an inferior position. We imagine that the white race, at least, would not acquiesce in this assumption. The argument also assumes that social prejudices may be overcome by legislation and that equal rights cannot be secured to the Negro except by an enforced commingling of the two races. We cannot accept this proposition. If the two races are to meet upon terms of social equality, it must be the result of natural affinities, a mutual appreciation of each other's merits, and a voluntary consent of individuals. . . . Legislation is powerless to eradicate racial instincts or to abolish distinctions based upon physical differences, and the attempt to do so can only result in accentuating the difficulties of the present situation. If the civil and political rights of both races be equal, one cannot be inferior to the other civilly or politically. If one race be inferior to the other socially, the Constitution of the United States cannot put them upon the same plane.

Plessy v. Ferguson (excerpts)

It is true that the question of the proportion of colored blood necessary to constitute a colored person, as distinguished from a white person, is one upon which there is a difference of opinion in the different states, some holding that any visible admixture of black blood stamps the person as belonging to the colored race . . . others that it depends upon the preponderance of blood . . . and still others that the pre-dominance of white blood must only be in the proportion of three-fourths. . . . But these are questions to be determined under the laws of each state and are not properly put in issue in this case. Under the allegations of his petition it may undoubtedly become a question of importance whether, under the laws of Louisiana, the petitioner belongs to the white or colored race.

The judgment of the court below is therefore, Affirmed.

In respect of civil rights, common to all citizens, the Constitution of the United States does not, I think, permit any public authority to know the race of those entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of such rights. Every true man has pride of race, and under appropriate circumstances with the rights of others, his equals before the law, are not to be affected, it is his privilege to express such pride and to take such action based upon it as to him seems proper. But I deny that any legislative body or judicial tribunal may have regard to the race of citizens when the civil rights of those citizens are involved. Indeed, such legislation, as that here in question, is inconsistent not only with that equality of rights which pertains to citizenship, national and state, but with the personal liberty enjoyed by everyone within the United States.

The Thirteenth Amendment does not permit the withholding or the deprivation of any right necessarily inhering in freedom. It not only struck down the institution of slavery as previously existing in the United States, but it prevents the imposition of any burdens or disabilities that constitute badges of slavery or servitude. It decreed universal civil freedom in this country. This Court has so adjudged. But that amendment having been found inadequate to the protection of the rights of those who had been in slavery, it was followed by the Fourteenth Amendment, which added greatly to the dignity and glory of the American citizenship, and to the security of personal liberty, by declaring that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside," and that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." These two amendments, if enforced according to their true intent and meaning, will protect all the civil rights that pertain to freedom and citizenship. Finally, and to the end that no citizen should be denied, on account of his race, the privilege of participating in the political control of his country, it was declared by the Fifteenth Amendment that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

These notable additions to the fundamental law were welcomed by the friends of liberty throughout the world. They removed the race line from our governmental systems.

It was said in argument that the statute of Louisiana does not discriminate against either race but prescribes a rule applicable alike to white and colored citizens. But this argument does not meet the difficulty. Everyone knows that the statute in question had its origin in the purpose, not so much to exclude white persons from railroad cars occupied by blacks, as to exclude colored people from coaches occupied by or assigned to white persons. Railroad corporations of Louisiana did not make discrimination among whites in the matter of accommodation for travelers. The thing to accomplish was, under the guise of giving equal accommodation for whites and blacks, to compel the latter to keep to themselves while traveling in railroad passenger coaches. No one would be wanting in candor as to assert the contrary. The fundamental objections, therefore, to the statute is that it interferes with the personal freedom of citizens. If a white man and a black man choose to occupy the same public conveyance on a public highway, it is their right to do so, and no government, proceeding alone on grounds of race, can prevent it without infringing the personal liberty of each.

It is one thing for railroad carriers to furnish, or to be required by law to furnish, equal accommodations for all whom they are under a legal duty to carry. It is quite another thing for government to forbid citizens of the white and black races from traveling in the same public conveyance, and to punish officers of railroad companies for permitting persons of the two races to occupy the same passenger coach. If a state can prescribe, as a rule of civil conduct, that whites and blacks shall not travel as passengers in the same railroad coach, why may it not so regulate the use of the streets of its cities and towns as to compel white citizens to keep on one side of a street and black citizens to keep on the other? Why may it not, upon like grounds, punish whites and blacks who ride together in streetcars or in open vehicles on a public road or street? Why may it not require sheriffs to assign whites to one side of a courtroom and blacks to other? And why may it not also prohibit the commingling of the two races in the galleries of legislative halls or in public assemblages convened for the consideration of the political questions of the day? Further, if this statute of Louisiana is consistent with the personal liberty of citizens, why may not the state require the separation in railroad coaches of native and naturalized citizens of the United States, or of Protestants and Roman Catholics?

The answer given as the argument to these questions was that regulations of the kind they suggest would be unreasonable and could not, therefore, stand before the law. Is it meant that the determination of questions of legislative power depends upon the inquiry whether the statute whose validity is questioned is, in the judgment of the courts, a reasonable one, taking all the circumstances into consideration? A statute may be unreasonable merely because a sound public forbade its enactment. But I do not understand that the courts have anything to do with the policy or expediency of legislation. The white race deems itself to be the dominant race in this country. And so it is, in prestige, in achievements, in education, in wealth, and in power. So, I doubt not, it will continue to be for all time, if it remains true to its great heritage and holds fast to the principles of constitutional liberty. But in view of the Constitution, in the eye of the law, there is in this country no superior, dominant, ruling class of citizens. There is no caste here. Our Constitution is color-blind and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens. In respect of civil rights all citizens are equal before the law. The humblest is the peer of the most powerful. The law regards man as a man and takes no account of his surroundings or of his color when his civil rights, as guaranteed by the supreme law of the land, are involved. It is, therefore, to be regretted that this high tribunal, the final expositor of the fundamental law of the land, has reached the conclusion that it is competent for a state to regulate the enjoyment by citizens of their civil rights solely upon the basis of race. . . .

The sure guarantee of the peace and security of each is the clear, distinct, unconditional recognition by our governments, national and state, of every right that inheres in civil freedom, and of the equality before the law of all citizens of the United States without regard to race. State enactments, regulating the enjoyment of civil rights, upon the basis of race, and cunningly devised legitimate results of the war, under the pretense of recognizing equality of rights, can have no other result than to render permanent peace impossible, and to keep alive a conflict of races, the continuance of which must do harm to all concerned. . . .

The arbitrary separation of citizens, on the basis of race, while they are on a public highway, is a badge of servitude wholly inconsistent with the civil freedom and the equality before the law established by the Constitution. It cannot be justified upon any legal grounds.

If evils will result from the commingling of the two races upon public highways established for the benefit of all, they will be infinitely less than those that will surely come from state legislation regulating the enjoyment of civil rights upon the basis of race. We boast of the freedom enjoyed by our people above all other peoples. But it is difficult to reconcile that boast with a state of the law which, practically, puts the brand of servitude and degradation upon a large class of our fellow-citizens, our equals before the law. The thin disguise of “equal” accommodations for passengers in railroad coaches will not mislead anyone, nor atone of the wrong this day done. . . .

I am of opinion that the statute of Louisiana is inconsistent with the personal liberty of citizens, white and black, in that state, and hostile to both the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States. If laws of like character should be enacted in the several states of the Union, the effect would be in the highest degree mischievous. Slavery, as an institution tolerated by law, would, it is true, have disappeared from our country, but there would remain a power in the states, by sinister legislation, to interfere with the full enjoyment of the blessings of freedom; to regulate civil rights, common to all citizens, upon the basis of race, and to place in a condition of legal inferiority a large body of American citizens, now constituting a part of the political community called the People of the United States, for whom, and by whom through representatives, our government is administered. Such a system is inconsistent with the guarantee given by the Constitution to each state of a republican form of government, and may be stricken down by congressional action, constitutional or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.

For the reasons stated, I am constrained to withhold my assent from the opinion and judgment of the majority. . . .

“LYNCH LAW IN AMERICA” (EXCERPT)

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION In 1900 America, lynching seemed to be the law of the land, rather than the “national crime” as Ida B. Wells-Burnett announced in this article she published for a national audience. Because of legalized discrimination and segregation, violence toward African Americans seemed to flourish. Any number of excuses were made when groups of angry white men took it upon themselves to lynch an African American. One of them was a common claim of violence against white women—an accusation which was seldom met with any solid proof. As Wells-Burnett pointed out, the bulk of the crimes did not match the claims that were made as it was, let alone the number of those that were falsified. This woman, who became known as the most influential black female activist in the country, even petitioned President William McKinley in 1898 after an African American postmaster in South Carolina was lynched. As she also noted, lynching was not only a crime of the South. Lynchings were going on all over the country, and she provided statistics to back up her claims. The terrible reality was that in 1900, these crimes against African Americans would only begin to get worse before the struggle for civil rights was successful.

“Lynch Law in America” (excerpt)

Our country's national crime is lynching. It is not the creature of an hour, the sudden outburst of uncontrolled fury, or the unspeakable brutality of an insane mob. It represents the cool, calculating deliberation of intelligent people who openly avow that there is an “unwritten law” that justifies them in putting human beings to death without complaint under oath, without trial by jury, without opportunity to make defense, and without right of appeal. . . .

. . . These advocates of the “unwritten law” boldly avowed their purpose to intimidate, suppress, and nullify the negro's right to vote. In support of its plans the Ku-Klux Klans, the “red-shirt” and similar organizations proceeded to beat, exile, and kill negroes until the purpose of their organization was accomplished and the supremacy of the “unwritten law” was effected. Thus lynchings began in the South, rapidly spreading into the various States until the national law was nullified and the reign of the “unwritten law” was supreme. Men were taken from their homes by “red-shirt” bands and stripped, beaten, and exiled; others were assassinated when their political prominence made them obnoxious to their political opponents; while the Ku-Klux barbarism of election days, reveling in the butchery of thousands of colored voters, furnished records in Congressional investigations that are a disgrace to civilization.

The alleged menace of universal suffrage having been avoided by the absolute suppression of the negro vote, the spirit of mob murder should have been satisfied and the butchery of negroes should have ceased. But men, women, and children were the victims of murder by individuals and murder by mobs, just as they had been when killed at the demands of the “unwritten law” to prevent “negro domination.” Negroes were killed for disputing over terms of contracts with their employers. If a few barns were burned some colored man was killed to stop it. If a colored man resented the imposition of a white man and the two came to blows, the colored man had to die, either at the hands of the white man then and there or later at the hands of a mob that speedily gathered. If he showed a spirit of courageous manhood he was hanged for his pains, and the killing was justified by the declaration that he was a “saucy nigger.” Colored women have been murdered because they refused to tell the mobs where relatives could be found for “lynching bees.” Boys of fourteen years have been lynched by white representatives of American civilization. In fact, for all kinds of offenses—and, for no offenses—from murders to misdemeanors, men and women are put to death without judge or jury; so that, although the political excuse was no longer necessary, the wholesale murder of human beings went on just the same. A new name was given to the killings and a new excuse was invented for so doing.

Again the aid of the “unwritten law” is invoked, and again it comes to the rescue. During the last ten years a new statute has been added to the “unwritten law.” This statute proclaims that for certain crimes or alleged crimes no negro shall be allowed a trial; that no white woman shall be compelled to charge an assault under oath or to submit any such charge to the investigation of a court of law. The result is that many men have been out to death whose innocence was afterward established; and to-day, under this reign of the “unwritten law,” no colored man, no matter what his reputation, is safe from lynching if a white woman, no matter what her standing or motive, cares to charge him with insult or assault.

It is considered a sufficient excuse and reasonable justification to put a prisoner to death under this “unwritten law” for the frequently repeated charge that these lynching horrors are necessary to prevent crimes against women. The sentiment of the country has been appealed to, in describing the isolated condition of white families in thickly populated negro districts; and the charge is made that these homes are in as great danger as if they were surrounded by wild beasts. And the world has accepted this theory without let or hindrance. In many cases there has been open expression that the fate meted out to the victim was only what he deserved. In many other instances there has been a silence that says more forcibly than words can proclaim it that it is right and proper that a human being should be seized by a mob and burned to death upon the unsworn and the uncorroborated charge of his accuser. No matter that our laws presume every man innocent until he is proved guilty; no matter that it leaves a certain class of individuals completely at the mercy of another class; no matter that it encourages those criminally disposed to blacken their faces and commit any crime in the calendar so long as they can throw suspicion on some negro, as is frequently done, and then lead a mob to take his life; no matter that mobs make a farce of the law and a mockery of justice; no matter that hundreds of boys are being hardened in crime and schooled in vice by the repetition of such scenes before their eyes—if a white woman declares herself insulted or assaulted, some life must pay the penalty, with all the horrors of the Spanish Inquisition and all the barbarism of the Middle Ages. The world looks on and says it is well.

Not only are two hundred men and women put to death annually, on the average, in this country by mobs, but these lives are taken with the greatest publicity. In many instances the leading citizens aid and abet by their presence when they do not participate, and the leading journals inflame the public mind to the lynching point with scare-head articles and offers of rewards. Whenever a burning is advertised to take place, the railroads run excursions, photographs are taken, and the same jubilee is indulged in that characterized the public hangings of one hundred years ago. There is, however, this difference: in those old days the multitude that stood by was permitted only to guff or jeer. The nineteenth century lynching mob cuts off ears, toes, and fingers, strips off flesh, and distributes portions of the body as souvenirs among the crowd. If the leaders of the mob are so minded, coal-oil is poured over the body and the victim is then roasted to death. This has been done in Texarkana and Paris, Tex., in Bardswell, Ky., and in Newman, Ga. In Paris the officers of the law delivered the prisoner to the mob. The mayor gave the school children a holiday and the railroads ran excursion trains so that the people might see a human being burned to death. In Texarkana, the year before, men and boys amused themselves by cutting off strips of flesh and thrusting knives into their helpless victim. At Newman, Ga., of the present year, the mob tried every conceivable torture to compel the victim to cry out and confess, before they set fire to the faggots that burned him. But their trouble was all in vain—he never uttered a cry, and they could not make him confess.

This condition of affairs were brutal enough and horrible enough if it were true that lynchings occurred only because of the commission of crimes against women—as is constantly declared by ministers, editors, lawyers, teachers, statesmen, and even by women themselves. It has been to the interest of those who did the lynching to blacken the good name of the helpless and defenseless victims of their hate. For this reason they publish at every possible opportunity this excuse for lynching, hoping thereby not only to palliate their own crime but at the same time to prove the negro a moral monster and unworthy of the respect and sympathy of the civilized world. But this alleged reason adds to the deliberate injustice of the mob’s work. Instead of lynchings being caused by assaults upon women, the statistics show that not one-third of the victims of lynchings are even charged with such crimes. The Chicago Tribune, which publishes annually lynching statistics, is authority for the following:

In 1892, when lynching reached high-water mark, there were 241 persons lynched. . . .

Of this number, 160 were of negro descent. Four of them were lynched in New York, Ohio, and Kansas; the remainder were murdered in the South. Five of this number were females. The charges for which they were lynched cover a wide range. They are as follows:

Rape .....	46
Murder .....	58
Rioting .....	3
Race Prejudice .....	6
No cause given .....	4
Incendiarism .....	6
Robbery .....	6
Assault and battery .....	1
Attempted rape .....	11
Suspected robbery .....	4
Larceny .....	1
Self-defense .....	1
Insulting women .....	2
Desperadoes .....	6
Fraud .....	1
Attempted murder .....	2
No offense stated, boy and girl .....	2

In the case of the boy and girl above referred to, their father, named Hastings, was accused of the murder of a white man. His fourteen-year-old daughter and sixteen-year-old son were hanged and their bodies filled with bullets; then the father was also lynched. This occurred in November, 1892, at Jonesville, La.

Indeed, the record for the last twenty years shows exactly the same or a smaller proportion who have been charged with this horrible crime. Quite a number of the one-third alleged cases of assault that have been personally investigated by the writer have shown that there was no foundation in fact for the charges; yet the claim is not made that there were no real culprits among them. The negro has been too long associated with the white man not to have copied his vices as well as his virtues. But the negro resents and utterly repudiates the efforts to blacken his good name by asserting that assaults upon women are peculiar to his race. The negro has suffered far more from the commission of this crime against the women of his race by white men than the white race has ever suffered through his crimes. Very scant notice is taken of the matter when this is the condition of affairs. What becomes a crime deserving capital punishment when the tables are turned is a matter of small moment when the negro woman is the accusing party.

“Unity of the Human Race”

But since the world has accepted this false and unjust statement, and the burden of proof has been placed upon the negro to vindicate his race, he is taking steps to do so. The Anti-Lynching Bureau of the National Afro-American Council is arranging to have every lynching investigated and publish the facts to the world, as has been done in the case of Sam Hose, who was burned alive last April at Newman, Ga. The detective's report showed that Hose killed Cranford, his employer, in self-defense, and that, while a mob was organizing to hunt Hose to punish him for killing a white man, not till twenty-four hours after the murder was the charge of rape, embellished with psychological and physical impossibilities, circulated. That gave an impetus to the hunt, and the Atlanta Constitution's reward of $500 keyed the mob to the necessary burning and roasting pitch. Of five hundred newspaper clippings of that horrible affair, nine-tenths of them assumed Hose's guilt—simply because his murderers said so, and because it is the fashion to believe the negro peculiarly addicted to this species of crime. All the negro asks is justice—a fair and impartial trial in the courts of the country. That given, he will abide the result.

But this question affects the entire American nation, and from several points of view: First, on the ground of consistency. Our watchword has been “the land of the free and the home of the brave.” Brave men do not gather by thousands to torture and murder a single individual, so gagged and bound he cannot make even feeble resistance or defense. Neither do brave men or women stand by and see such things done without compunction of conscience, nor read of them without protest. Our nation has been active and outspoken in its endeavors to right the wrongs of the Armenian Christian, the Russian Jew, the Irish Home Ruler, the native women of India, the Siberian exile, and the Cuban patriot. Surely it should be the nation's duty to correct its own evils!

Second, on the ground of economy. To those who fail to be convinced from any other point of view touching this momentous question, a consideration of the economic phase might not be amiss. It is generally known that mobs in Louisiana, Colorado, Wyoming, and other States have lynched subjects of other countries. When their different governments demanded satisfaction, our country was forced to confess her inability to protect said subjects in the several States because of our State-rights doctrines, or in turn demand punishment of the lynchers. This confession, while humiliating in the extreme, was not satisfactory; and, while the United States cannot protect, she can pay. This she has done, and it is certain will have to do again in the case of the recent lynching of Italians in Louisiana. The United States already has paid in indemnities for lynching nearly a half million dollars. . . .

Third, for the honor of Anglo-Saxon civilization. No scoffer at our boasted American civilization could say anything more harsh of it than does the American white man himself who says he is unable to protect the honor of his women without resort to such brutal, inhuman, and degrading exhibitions as characterize “lynching bees.” The cannibals of the South Sea Islands roast human beings alive to satisfy hunger. The red Indian of the Western plains tied his prisoner to the stake, tortured him, and danced in fiendish glee while his victim writhed in the flames. His savage, untutored mind suggested no better way than that of wreaking vengeance upon those who had wronged him. These people knew nothing about Christianity and did not profess to follow its teachings; but such primary laws as they had they lived up to. No nation, savage or civilized, save only the United States of America, has confessed its inability to protect its women save by hanging, shooting, and burning alleged offenders.

Finally, for love of country. No American travels abroad without blushing for shame for his country on this subject. And whatever the excuse that passes current in the United States, it avails nothing abroad. With all the powers of government in control; with all laws made by white men, administered by white judges, jurors, prosecuting attorneys, and sheriffs; with every office of the executive department filled by white men—no excuse can be offered for exchanging the orderly administration of justice for barbarous lynchings and “unwritten laws.” Our country should be placed speedily above the plane of confessing herself a failure at self-government. This cannot be until Americans of every section, of broadest patriotism and best and wisest citizenship, not only see the defect in our country's armor but take the necessary steps to remedy it.

“UNITY OF THE HUMAN RACE”

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION This 1902 article, written by J.W.

Sanders for the African Methodist Episcopal Church Review, and other articles like this were crucial to spreading the word to African Americans on key social and religious issues. The church itself had been founded in 1787 by a group of African American Methodists who were protesting racial segregation. During the Reconstruction period following the Civil War, from 1865 to 1867, this group's political involvement helped elect more than fifty church members to public office in the state legislatures of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, and other states. By the time Sanders addressed the key issue of racial division, unrest among African Americans was reaching another level. Frustration over segregation and discrimination based on racism grew as prejudice and acts of violence against them increased. His argument was that a concept of unity among all people was at the heart of redemption for all—socially, politically, and morally.

One might at first thought say, “What does it matter if a Chinaman disclaims any genetic connection with a Malay? or, if perchance, a Caucasian denies having any racial connection whatever with the Negro, as is often done?” It matters much every way. In the first place, we observe there are two forces playing ceaselessly on the hearts of the children. One, an internal force, we will call inspiration the second, the external power of friendly environment. Now, the proper conception of the truth of the “oneness of man” leads to the encouragement of peoples who are down, by causing the exercise of the brotherly instincts of the dominant race: the improper conception leads to the paralysis of every aspiration of the lower races to rise from a state of inferiority. It means either that I am to be recognized as a man and brother, and thus be offered every inducement and encouragement to scale the heights, or that by all the strength of a dominant race I am to be held in subjection and made subservient to those who rule.

Now, if you will for a moment consider, you will readily discover that the full acceptance of the “unity of man” does not obtain among the vanguard of the nations whose potent influence dominates the earth.

There are nine millions of Afro-Americans in this country, and they are popularly considered inferior to others in mental, moral and spiritual power. And this inferiority is not looked upon as an accident of birth, or as resulting, from a lack of opportunities, but is viewed as the unchangeable status of a race under the ban of God's displeasure. Nor should there arise in the souls of the sons of Ham thoughts and longings never so lofty, is it to be considered for a moment that the dark-skinned child of fate—who was to fair-skinned Israel, “but a hewer of wood and drawer of water”—should ever aspire, even after the year of jubilee, to purify himself and walk into the congregation and take his seat with others. They say God has set barriers in nature with a “Thus far shalt thou come, but no farther.”

So that no Negro need expect to develop that culture, refinement, Christian grace and elegance necessary to exact from the proud Caucasian a hearty reception to places of honor. We are to inquire whether the color of a man's skin and the texture of his hair, which are the two chief marks of difference in a physiological sense, are the results of climatic influences, or are they indicative of a different order of being? I have heard it preached that Negroes have no brain to speak of, could only learn enough to serve their masters. They had no souls; Christ did not die for them; it was nonsense to talk of the stocky mothers with dark skins and thick lips having any racial connection with the white race. Dr. John Miley has given us the benefit of exhaustive research. He says, at some length. “Let us compare notes along two general lines. First—Physical; Second—Mental; and if we find that the differences along these lines are only superficial, and the result of environment or circumstances, then the objections raised against the doctrine of the unity of man will fall to the ground.” This is largely a question of science, says he, or, at least, we must go to science for a knowledge of the facts. The unity of the human race is a question of the unity of species. Definitions setting forth the idea of species greatly differ, but the following will cover the idea we wish to convey approximately—“Species is a collection of individuals more or less resembling each other, which may be regarded as having descended from a single pair by an uninterrupted and natural succession of families.” Herein is found two fundamental facts: First—Resemblance; Second—Genetic connection. The idea of genetic connection is the deeper idea.

There are wide variations, particularly in size, form and color. We are to inquire, whether these variations are consistent with a common parentage. While some hold four or five, up to sixty, different origins of the human family, the weight of scientific authority is for a unity of origin. This question of species is common to the manifold forms of vegetable and animal life. Fixation of racial types is no disproof of unity. There are numerous instances of physiological change as a result of new conditions. Let us cite a few: 200 years ago the Irish were driven from Armagh and the South of Down, and have become prognathous like the Australians. The Yankees are descendants of the English, and yet they have a type of their own. Certain tribes of Indians have permanently changed the shapes of their heads by bandaging them in infancy. The Jews are confessedly of one origin, and yet we have the Polish Jews who are light-haired, and the dark Jew of the Nile Valley. Again, the Portuguese, who settled in East India in the sixteenth century, are now as dark as the Hindus themselves. Also we find that Africans become lighter as they go up the Aluvial River banks to higher ground; and, on the contrary, the coast tribes, who drive out the Negroes of the interior and take their territory, end by becoming Negroes themselves. Hence, we argue that there is a oneness of races in physical characteristics. The distinctions are superficial and the result of local influences. The human body is one in chemical elements, one in anatomical structure, one in physiological construction, one in pathological susceptibilities, one in psychological endowment. Of course, you could set in wide contrast the barbaric Negro against the Christian Caucasian, but lo and behold! there are differences almost as great even among the same Caucasian race. But that is understood to be only accidental, or superficial. There are the same sensibilities, with their marvelous adjustments to manifold relations of mind in all; the same moral and religious nature. While it may sink to barbarism and idolatry in the white man, it may rise to the highest moral and Christian life in the Mongolian and the Negro. Here is a vast law of nature, that like shall produce like. Throughout the different orders of created beings this great law holds good; and nature sets bars in the way of the infraction of this law, both in animal and vegetable life. The law of hybridity contravenes when sacrilegious hands are laid on this law to disturb its orderly workings, so that strict sterility is seen when an attempt is made to bring together different species, as in the case of the horse and the mule. [Genesis] "And God said let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind whose seed is in itself upon the earth, and it was so." Now, if science speaks to me in her many toned and yet harmonious voices that in all essential physical points all races of men are one, if the voice of psychology tells me that all men, in mental endowments, are one, and if the voice of revelation tells me that there is no respect of persons with God, I have but to buckle on my armor and move up the line, in spite of all powers that oppose. But I have not introduced a witness in this case, which, perhaps, is the most convincing of all, for it is found in the chambers of one's own soul. It is that of consciousness. A voice within speaks to each man upon whom the light of God's truth has shone and tells him that the same God who circled the heavens upon which to sit, has made each man—all men—to work out for himself a glorious destiny; and this voice is so convincing that, though a dozen kings should meet a peasant and should decry the noble aspirations swelling his breast methinks the humble man would smile at the usurpers and would turn from them feeling that in true dignity and inherent worth he was on a par with the mightiest potentate beneath the sun. I must understand, however, if I am to achieve any noble results in life, it must be through earnest personal efforts. We must work, work, work as a race, and we shall gradually rise in the scale of being.

"The planets at their Maker's will Move onward in their cars,

For Nature's wheel is never still:
Progressive as the stars,
The moments fly on lightning's wing:
And life's uncertainty, too—
We've none to waste on foolish things,
There's work enough to do."

PROTOCOLS OF THE ELDERS OF ZION

SOURCE Segel, Benjamin W. From "Appendix: The First Protocol," in A Lie and a Libel: The History of the Protocols of the Elders of Zion. Edited and translated by Richard S. Levy. University of Nebraska Press, 1995. Copyright © 1926 by Welt-Krieg, Welt-Revolution, Welt-Verschwörung, Welt-Oberregierung. Translation copyright © 1995 by the University of Nebraska Press. All rights reserved. Reproduced by permission of the University of Nebraska Press.

INTRODUCTION The author of this text would have had people believe that Russian Jewish elders got together in a secret meeting in the late 1880s and produced these Protocols. They were the outline of how the Jews would take over the world—or at least how they would come into power to control the media and finance. Published in 1903 these principles were used to help spur on anti-Semitic sentiment and fuel all of the unfounded fears that the Jewish people were out to exploit and manipulate non-Jews. They would satisfy their own greed for wealth and power ultimately by playing on the greed and weaknesses of others. Some believe that this document was written by a Russian-French journalist named Matvei Golovinski in the 1890s. No one has ever found the irrefutable answer to the question. Refutations of the Protocols emerged early, though a series of articles in the the Times of London in 1921 offered the best case for fraud. Much of the document was shown to be plagiarized from a piece known as The Dialogue in Hell Between Machiavelli and Montesquieu that was a satire and was not meant to foster anti-Semitism. Despite the widespread knowledge that it was a fraud, it was circulated by those opposed to the Russian Revolution in 1905—believed to be circulated by the czar's army as a tool against the Jews. After 1920 it gained popularity in Germany with the rise of Nazism.

THE FIRST PROTOCOL

I have framed the basic principles of our league, in general and in particular, without regard to scientific considerations. I describe our doctrines and our system as it appears to us and to non-Jews.

I assert that men with evil motives outnumber those with good character. In the administration of the state, therefore, more can be achieved by force and unscrupulousness than by scientific discussions. Every man strives for power; every individual wants to be master of his own decisions and deeds; each would be master of himself (a dictator), if only he could. This striving after power is so strong that there is scarcely a man who would not be ready to sacrifice the common good for his own personal advantage.

What instincts rule over the beasts of prey that feed upon the blood of men? What have been their actions and desires through all time? Since the rise of human society, beasts of prey in human form have seized raw, blind force for themselves. From this I conclude that force alone is the determining factor, no matter that it be veiled and disguised. Thus it follows that the basic law of existence rests wholly on the idea: Right is based on force, on strength.

The Idea of Freedom—Freethinking

Civil freedom is an idea, a concept, but not a fact. This idea transforms itself as soon as the power of a nation is suppressed and strangled, as soon as a party striving after dominance seeks to force its will upon the countermovement. This task becomes essentially easier when the opponent is himself contaminated with a false concept of “freedom” and yields his power on account of this incorrect notion. On this is based the victory of our doctrine: when the reins slide along the ground and leadership is lacking, the accomplished licentiousness ends quickly, for a new hand draws in the reins. A new domination steps into the place of the old, which was robbed of its power by freethinking.

Gold, Faith in God, Self-government

In our day, when the genuine freethinkers govern the state, the power of gold is the sole determining factor. There was a time when faith in God governed. The concept of freedom was still without system. No one understood how to exploit it for his purposes. No nation can exist for even the shortest time when it does not create a rational self-government, without which it sinks into licentiousness. From this moment there enters inner divisiveness, issuing in economic battles in the wake of which governments fall; gradually mob rule takes the rudder.

Domination of Money

A government finding itself under the influence of internal upheavals, or one that is at the mercy of external enemies because of the disordered conditions in its own land, must be undoubtedly consigned to oblivion. Then it is in our power. The dominance of money, over which we alone dispose, extends a straw to the government that it must grasp for good or ill if it wants to keep from sinking helplessly into the abyss.

To those freethinkers who believe such considerations to be immoral, I say: every realm has two enemies. If it is allowable to employ immoral methods in the struggle against the external enemy, for example, concealment of intentions or a sudden attack, attacking at night or with overwhelming superiority of forces, can one say it is morally impermissible to use such methods against the worst [internal] enemy, the destroyer of social harmony and economic well-being?

The Masses and Lawlessness

Can a man of sound and logical intelligence hope to rule the masses of a nation successfully if he merely employs rational principles and logical arguments when the possibility of contradiction exists in the people? Would an even half-way intelligent people be thereby easier to govern? If such a man relied exclusively on minor measures—on old customs, traditions, sentiments, and emotional dogmas, the masses would divide and reject such a government. For the masses have no sense for rational exhortation. Every action of the masses depends upon an accidental or artificially constructed majority. Ignorant of the artifices of statecraft, they are carried along into foolish decisions, and thus the seed of lawlessness is planted within the state.

Statecraft and the Moral Law

Statecraft and the moral law have not the slightest to do with one another. A ruler who wants to rule by the moral law understands nothing about statecraft and is never for a moment secure upon his throne. He who would rule must labor with slyness, cunning, evil, hypocrisy. High moral character—openness, honor, honesty—these are the reefs of statecraft upon which the best will founder because the enemy makes use of different and truly more effective measures. Let these character traits be the hallmarks and principles of non-Jewish realms. We can never under any condition labor with such wrong-headed principles.

Our right lies in strength. “Strength” is a limited expression, not a universally valid concept. The word in itself never signifies more than: “Give me what I want so that it may be clear and self-evident to all the world that I am stronger than you.”

Where does right begin? Where does it end? In a state where power is badly managed and laws and governors are rendered impersonal by freethinking [civil] rights, I shall create a new right. [I shall] demolish all institutions according to the right of the stronger, lay hands upon the law, transform all governing bodies, and become master of them. The power of these rights shall voluntarily transfer to us—because of freethinking.

Protocols of the Elders of Zion

The Invulnerability of Jewish Freemasonry

While at present all the powers have begun to totter, ours will be more invulnerable than any of the others because it will be invisible. Thus it shall remain unshakable until that time when it has become so empowered that no act of violence can repress it.

Out of the transitory calamities that we must now cause, there will emerge the benefaction of an unshakable government that shall reestablish the regulated development of national existence, undisturbed by freethinking. The results justify the means. Thus we shall direct our plans less by attention to the good and moral than by the necessary and useful.

Before us lies a plan, the lines of which are drawn according to the rules of war. We cannot deviate from it without endangering the labor of many centuries.

The Masses Are Blind

To achieve the goal of common efforts, we must learn to grasp the worthlessness, inconstancy, and vacillation of the masses. We must realize their incapacity to understand the questions of state life and their own welfare. We must comprehend that the great masses of the people are blind and wholly without understanding and that they willy-nilly stagger from right to left, backward and forward. A blind man cannot lead the blind without leading them into the abyss. Consequently, even the “inquisitive” and creative among the masses can never perform as leaders in governing the states. Even when they supposedly possess some intelligence, they are still not fit to act as trailblazers and leaders of the masses. They will attain to no other goal than the ruin of the entire people.

Only a personality educated to self-mastery from youth can recognize and act upon the great tendencies and principles of statecraft.

Party Strife

A people that delivers itself to the upstarts from out of the masses destroys its own structure by party battles, by the struggle for the leading positions of power, by the hunting after honors and dignities, and by the disorders and movements arising from all this. Is it possible that the masses can judge without prejudice, peacefully and matter-of-factly, that they can guide the destiny of the land without regard to purely personal interests? Can they defend the realm against external foes? That is senseless, for to distribute governance of the state among so many personalities, so many heads from out of the masses, will sacrifice its unity and it will become non-viable and powerless.

Only under the leadership of a self-controlled personality can the state be directed in full clarity and good order; only thus can the whole body politic labor in peace. From this it follows that the most appropriate form of the state for a country is found when the direction lies in the hands of a single responsible personality. Without unqualified power, no state system can thrive upon a moral basis. This basis cannot rest upon the masses but rather on the competent leader, be he who he may. The masses consist of barbarians who bring their coarseness and barbarity to bear at every opportunity. As soon as the masses seize power for themselves, they fall into lawlessness, the highest degree of barbarity.

Alcohol, Humanism, Vice

Observe the drunkards, befogged by alcohol. They believe themselves to possess the right to unlimited pleasure, which they confuse with the concept of freedom. From that idea we take leave for all time. The non-Jewish peoples are befogged with alcohol; their youths are infatuated with humanism and premature vices. To these they have been led by our agents, administrators, teachers, servants, governesses to the rich, educational institutions, and so forth, as well as by our women in pleasure resorts and public houses. Among these I also count the so-called society ladies, who willfully ape the example of vice and ostentation.

Principles of the Jewish Freemason Lodges

Our slogan is Power and Artifice! Power alone wrests the victory in questions of state, that is, when it is in the possession of personalities who have something to say in the state. Force forms the basis, but cunning and fraud work as the means to power for such governments as are not willing to lay their crowns at the feet of the representatives of a new power. These are the only means to the goal that hovers before us. Therefore, we must not shrink from bribery, fraud, or treason if they serve for the attainment of our plans. In statecraft we must be clever enough not to shrink from uncanny methods, if power and subjection be achieved thereby.

Terror

Our realm, which is founded on the paths of peaceful conquest, will replace the terrors of war with less visible but all the more effective punishments. It must institute a reign of terror in order to compel blind, unconditional obedience. Stern, pitiless, and ruthless measures are the best props of state power. Not alone for advantage but above all in the name of duty and for the sake of victory, we must hold firmly to the employment of force and cunning. . . . It is not only in the scientific evaluation of means, but above all in their ruthless and merciless application that our predominance, our superiority, shall be secured. It shall suffice to know that we are merciless and that we understand how to compel obedience.

Liberty, Equality, Fraternity

Already in antiquity we allowed the call for Liberty, Equality, Fraternity to echo from the ranks of the peoples. Since that time, these words have been endlessly repeated in the most varied disturbances and upheavals. Sometimes the intentions have been honorable, to bring actual well-being and true freedom of the personality to the world; sometimes it has just been to satisfy the vanity of the masses. Not even the intelligent and clever non-Jews have recognized the inner contradictions in these words. They have not said that there can be no equality, no freedom in nature. All of nature rests upon the inequality of forces, characteristics, peculiarities. Nature is subject to eternal laws. It is clear that the masses are a blind force, and the chosen upstarts are as blind as the masses themselves. The initiated, even if he is a fool, can govern, while the uninitiated, even when he is high-minded, can understand nothing about statecraft. All these things are forgotten by the non-Jews.

Principle of Princely Government

[On the non-Jews] depended the principle of princely government. The father bequeathed his knowledge of statecraft to the son, so that it was known only to members of the dynasty and none could betray the secrets to the peoples ruled over. In time the sense of the true content of statecraft was lost in the transmission, and this contributed to the success of our cause.

Abolishing the Privileges of the Non-Jewish Nobility

In all the corners of the world, with the help of our secret societies, the slogan Liberty, Equality, Fraternity led gigantic crowds to our ranks and carried our banners to victory. Those words were the worms that gnawed at the welfare of non-Jews, everywhere undermining peace, calm, community, common values, and thereby destroying the foundation of their domination. Gentlemen, you see the consequences that have served the triumph of our cause. They gave us the possibility of playing out the highest trump: the annihilation of noble privilege, or, better said, the actual system of non-Jewish noble dominance, which has been the only means of defense of the non-Jewish peoples and states against us.

The New Nobility

On the ruins of the old blood and family nobility we have set the nobility of our educated and at its tip, the money nobility. The standard of this new nobility lies in wealth, which depends upon us, and in the teachings disseminated by our secret associations.

Calculating Human Weaknesses

Our triumph was made all the easier in that we could exploit people useful to us by working on the most impressionable side of human intelligence: with consideration to money, greed, and the insatiable desire for gain. If we seize upon the right moment, all the extraordinarily numerous human weaknesses are suited to paralyze the powers of decision making. Those who best understand how to exploit human weaknesses are thus enabled to enslave the wills of men.

The concept of freedom made it possible to convince the masses that the government was nothing more than the deputies for those who possessed the land, that is, the people. The people therefore felt competent to change [governments] as one would change gloves.

Changes in the parliament delivered it into our power. It is elected or not, at our discretion.

THE PLATFORM OF THE NIAGARA MOVEMENT

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Not all African Americans were as willing to compromise on the issue of race relations as was Booker T. Washington—the person many considered a traitor to his race, even if he did eventually become more militant. In 1904, one group of African Americans got together behind closed doors at Carnegie Hall in New York to develop the Committee of Twelve for the Advancement of the interest of the Negro Race, but it soon fell apart due to the conflicts among themselves. The next year W. E. B. Du Bois and William M. Trotter brought together another group that included Frederick L. McGhee and C.E. Bentley, and 59 well-known business men. They gathered in western New York. Then 29 of them went to the Canadian side of Niagara Falls and joined together in what they would call the Niagara Movement. Because of Washington's opposition and the support he had from so many African Americans, this organization did not last long. By 1910, Du Bois turned his energies to the new organization, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). The platform of the Niagara Movement was an expression of the frustration and anger of African Americans who wanted to end Jim Crow and other acts of discrimination and inequality.

“THE PLATFORM OF THE NIAGARA MOVEMENT”

The second annual meeting of the so-called Niagara Movement was held recently at Harper's Ferry. This is a movement of negroes for negro rights. It represents the more political and the more assertive spirit in the negro race, under the leadership of Dr. Du Bois, as the Tuskegee Movement under the leadership of Dr. Washington represents the more industrial and the more pacific spirit. It is probably not unjust to say that something of the quality of the Niagara Movement is indicated by the fact that its leaders chose this year Harper's Ferry for its place of assemblage, and in its closing utterance the assembly declared, “Here, on the scene of John Brown's Martyrdom, we reconsecrate ourselves, our honor, our property, to the final emancipation of the race which John Brown died to make free.” Its adopted platform comprises five principles: (1) The right to vote: “We want full manhood suffrage, and we want it now, henceforth, and forever.” (2) Condemnation of all race discrimination in public accommodations: “Separation in railway and street cars, based simply on race and color, is un-American, undemocratic, and silly.” (3) Freedom of social intercourse: “We claim the right of freemen to walk, talk, and be with them that wish to be with us. No man has a right to choose another man's friends, and to attempt to do so is an impudent interference with the most fundamental human privilege.” (4) Equality in the enforcement of laws: “Justice even for criminals and outlaws;” “Congress to take charge of Congressional elections;” “the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments enforced.” (5) “The National Government to step in and wipe out illiteracy in the South;” an undying hostility to “any proposal to educate black boys and girls simply as servants and underlings, or simply for the use of other people.”

“THE PLATFORM OF THE OUTLOOK”

We can best state our views respecting these demands by putting with them what appear to us to be the just and reasonable bases for the settlement of the so-called race issue. Those bases we should state somewhat as follows: (1) Manhood suffrage, provided the manhood comes first and the suffrage afterwards. The ballot is not a natural right, like the right to the protection of person and property; it is a prerogative to be given only to those, black or white, who have furnished some evidence that they possess the intellectual and moral qualifications to use the ballot for the benefit of the community. But it should be based on personal qualifications, not on race or color. (2) It is better for both races that they have their separate schools and separate churches. It is no more an injustice to the black race than to the white race to provide separate cars for them, if the accommodations are equally good for both races. (3) Social fellowship cannot be restrained by law, neither can it be claimed as a right. In general, the way to secure social recognition is not to demand it. (4) The demand for the equality of law enforcement is wholly just. The demand for Congressional charge of Congressional elections is wholly unnecessary. Congress has already charge of Congressional elections. It has the right to reject any Representative on evidence that his election has been accomplished by corruption, fraud, violence, or threatening of any description, and it ought to exercise this right far more vigorously than it has been accustomed to do. (5) We want the National Government to “wipe out illiteracy in the South,” and we protest against any “proposal to educate black boys and girls simply as servants and underlings;” but we also affirm as a truth of universal applicability that the end of all education should be to fit the pupil for the work which it is probable he will have to do, for the service which he will probably have to render. We add the demand for the open door of industrial opportunity to all men, black and white, and insistence upon the principle that every man shall fit himself, as his first duty to the community, to render the best service of which, taking account of his training and his inheritance, he is capable. On the whole, we think the Niagara Movement would be more useful if it demanded more of the negro race and put less emphasis on its demands for the negro race.

“THE NEGRO PROBLEM: BOOKER WASHINGTON'S PLATFORM”

In The Outlook of last week we gave a summary of the platform adopted at the second annual meeting of the so-called Niagara Movement held at Harper's Ferry under the special leadership of Dr. Du Bois. It is instructive to compare with this platform the address by Dr. Booker Washington before the meeting of the National Negro Business League, of which he is President, held last week at Atlanta, Georgia. This address may fairly be regarded as embodying the platform of this League; and just as the Niagara Movement stands for the more political and assertive spirit in the negro race, so the National Business League, as represented in Dr. Washington's address, stands for the industrial and pacific spirit. Dr. Washington expressed this tersely when he said, “Let constructive progress be the dominant note among us in every section of America: an inch of progress is worth more than a yard of faultfinding.” He declared that “while the world may pity a crying, whining race, it seldom respects it.” As to the progress actually made, he pointed out that in Georgia alone the negroes own $20,000,000 worth of taxable property, and that in the whole country, at a conservative estimate, the negro is now paying taxes upon over $300,000,000 worth of property, while in the Southern States negroes are conducting thirty-three banks. In fact, Dr. Washington believes that there is practically no section of the South where encouragement cannot be found for the negro farmer, mechanic, merchant, and even banker, with reasonable opportunity for prosperity, and he reaffirms his formerly expressed opinion that the Southern States offer the best permanent abode for the negro. He would welcome immigration, for he believes that healthy competition is much needed in the South, and that the salvation of his race is to be found "not in our ability to keep another race out of the territory, but in our learning to get as much out of the soil, out of our occupations or business, as any other race can get out of theirs." Dr. Washington spoke strongly and plainly as to crime on the part of the negro; he admitted the seriousness of the problem, did not hesitate to say that the large number of crimes committed by members of his race was deplorable, but challenged his hearers to show instances of crime committed by graduates of the educational institutions, or, with rare exceptions, by negroes who own their homes, are taxpayers, have regular occupation, and have received education. From these facts he argued that "ignorance will always mean crime, and crime will mean an unwieldy burden fastened about the neck of the South." The crime of lynching was equally denounced. Dr. Washington said: "Let us bear in mind that every man, white or black, who takes the law into his hands to lynch or burn or shoot human beings supposed to be or guilty of crime is insulting the executive, judicial, and lawmaking bodies of the State in which he resides. Lawlessness in one direction will inevitably lead to lawlessness in other directions. This is the experience of the whole civilized world." The trend and force of Dr. Washington's address might almost be summed up in this sentence: "The more I study our conditions and needs, the more I am convinced that there is no surer road by which we can reach civic, moral, educational, and religious development than by laying the foundation in the ownership and cultivation of the soil, the saving of money, commercial growth, and the skillful and conscientious performance of any duty with which we are intrusted." Comparing this utterance with the platform quoted last week, it will be seen that they are not antagonistic, but that they differ in spirit. One makes demands for the negroes, the other lays its demands upon the negro; one emphasizes his rights, the other his duties; one complains of the wrongs the white inflicts upon the negro, the other asks for co-operation between the white and the negro. We see far more hope for the negro in the spirit of the Business Men's League than in that of the Niagara Movement.

STATEMENT OF MR. WILLIAM JOSEPH SIMMONS, OF ATLANTA, GEORGIA

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION *The original Ku Klux Klan was born in the South during the humiliating period of Reconstruction following defeat in the South's bid to secede. It was first created as a social club in Tennessee in 1865 but quickly became an organization that set out to intimidate patrolling Union soldiers and newly freed African Americans who might intend to act as free men with the same rights as white men. Already by 1871, the U.S. Congress grew concerned about their activities and held hearings that led to passage of anti-Klan legislation. President Ulysses S. Grant even dispatched troops to the areas where Klan activity was rampant. These measures were apparently successful and the original organization faded into distant memory. In 1915, with increasingly tense social, political, and cultural relations, and with the premiere of D.W. Griffith's movie The Birth of a Nation, and its cultural stereotypes, a new Ku Klux Klan arose. A Georgia veteran of the Spanish-American War named William Joseph Simmons, known as the "Colonel," though only a self-proclaimed one, gained inspiration at the movie's Atlanta premiere. He decided the time was right to begin another Klan movement. This time the group not only targeted African Americans but other groups such as Catholics, Jews, and other recent immigrants. Once again, as in 1871, Congress took notice and held hearings to determine what dangers this new Klan posed. Simmons' testimony offers insight to the organization.*

My name is William Joseph Simmons, residing in Atlanta, Ga. They call me "Colonel," largely out of respect. Every lawyer in Georgia is called "Colonel," so they thought that I was as good as a lawyer, so they call me that. However, since that matter has been called into question. I am a veteran of the Spanish-American War. I am a past commander of my Spanish-American war veterans' post. I am a past national aid-de-camp of the Spanish-American War Veterans' Association and also a past provisional division commander. I was at one time the senior colonel in command of five regiments and colonel of my own regiment of the uniform rank of the Woodmen of the World, and I was known as "Colonel." I have used that title on certain literature of the klan for the reason that there are three other "W.J. Simmonses" in Atlanta, and for some time our mail got confused. It is merely a designation. They accord it to me as an honor and I appreciated it, but at no time and in no place have I arrogated to myself the fact that I was a colonel of the Army. I served there, but I was under a colonel and I found out how the colonels do. . . .

Statement of Mr. William Joseph Simmons, of Atlanta, Georgia

Twenty years ago I received the inspiration to establish a fraternal, patriotic, secret order for the purpose of memorializing the great heroes of our national history, inculcating and teaching practical fraternity among men, to teach and encourage a fervent, practical patriotism toward our country, and to destroy from the hearts of men the Mason and Dixon line and build thereupon a great American solidarity and a distinctive national conscience which our country sorely stands in need of.

At that time I was a mere young man and knew that my youth and immature thought would not permit me to successfully launch the movement, so I kept my own counsel all through 15 subsequent years, working, thinking, and preparing my head and heart for the task of creating this institution for the interest of our common country and for the promotion of real brotherhood among men. To this work and to this end I dedicated my life and all my energies, after being thoroughly convinced that there was a place for such a fraternal order and that the order could and would fill that place.

It was in the month of October, 1915, that I decided to launch the movement. . . .

Through the dark hours of struggle and bitter sacrifice incident to the launching of this movement, for over nine long months I had an average of one meal a day. I have fought a good fight. I have truly kept the faith, and God permitting me, Mr. Chairman, I shall finish my course, with love toward all, with malice toward none. I shall pursue the right as God shall give me a vision of the right.

If the Knights of the Ku-Klux Klan has been a lawless organization, as has been charged, it would not have shown the remarkable growth it has, for in the klan is as fine a body of representative citizens as there is in the United States. In each community where there is a klan will be found members from the lending citizens, men who stand at the forefront in their cities. These men would not stand for lawlessness.

It has been charged that the klan is a gigantic swindle, run solely to enrich a few of the inside ring. I, as the executive head of the klan, have received during the past six years altogether approximately $12,000, an average of $2,000 per year. I can not be in any wise accurate in these figures, because I have not run it up, but I may state just here that for two or three years I received not a penny, only what I could get out and do myself. I have also a home, purchased by klan members, but not by the klan, but by voluntary subscriptions of 25 cents and 50 cents and a dollar. This home is not completely paid for, and I knew nothing of this until it was given to me as a complete surprise as a birthday remembrance on the 6th day of last May by members of the klan from every section of the country.

And I may add just here, from what has been presented for my information regarding the home in which I now reside, that property is in the hands of a board of trustees who are looking after it; and they told me, "When we get the home paid for then the deed will be made to you; but we do not want you to bother with that until it is all paid for." A board of trustees is handling that home.

The secretary, treasurer, and other officials of the klan receive salaries lower than they would receive from business institutions for their ability and for the work that each of them does. I introduce here, marked "Exhibit B," the pay roll and salaries paid and the expenses of the klan.

If the klan was seeking to enrich a few insiders the money would go into our pockets. Instead, we are spending the surplus money of the klan in the education of young men and women who are the very foundation of the Nation. . . .

The charge has been made that the klan takes the law into its own hands; that it terrorizes private citizens in many communities by lawless acts against person and property. These charges are untrue. I state, Mr. Chairman, that klans can not take action on anything outside of their lodge rooms or ceremonial duties unless they have an order, so to speak, written and signed by myself. That is a law in the klan to keep anyone within our membership from doing things—in other words, holding them in control—that contravene the law. Before God and this honorable committee, I have never authorized nor signed any kind of instructions that could in any way be construed as a violation of the law or to be carried out in violation of the law of my country.

There have been only a few instances where lawless acts have been alleged against individual members of the klan. You will notice I say "alleged," and there is a possibility that if individual members of the klan have committed acts of lawlessness that those same men were members of other fraternal orders, and should the other fraternal orders be condemned? No. In these instances the charter in that community was revoked or suspended, although the acts of the individual members were not the acts of the klan as a body and were condemned by all those disbanded klan members. The charter was revoked or suspended, as we have no room in our organization for those who take the law into their own hands, because to do so violates a most solemn oath. Individual members of other organizations have committed and been charged with outrages and crimes, but that does not condemn the whole order, as an order, of lawlessness. . . .

The klan does not countenance nor will it tolerate any lawless acts by its members. Instead we teach respect for the law, love of country, and a closer fellowship of service. I here introduce, marked Exhibit G, and will read later, the ritual, oath, and other secret books and works of the klan. In the oath attention is called to the section where all klan members swear to uphold and respect the law of the United States, the State, county, and city where the members live. No man who would break his solemn oath by taking the law into his own hands is worthy of membership in any organization or worthy to be a citizen of our glorious country.

The charge has also been made that the klan as an organization gives an opportunity for evil-minded persons to threaten others, to satisfy their private grudges, and to commit outrages, using the klan as a cloak. This charge is absurd on its face when an examination of the records for the past 10 years will show that there were as many of these so-called outrages committed before the klan was organized as since its organization. . . .

I noticed some time ago that the klan was charged with outrages, or, rather, an outrage against a Negro in Arkansas, and I state to you as an honorable man that that particular outrage occurred in Arkansas 18 months before we had one member in Arkansas.

It has been charged that this organization incites to riot. Can that charge be substantiated? No; because no man can place his finger on any spot on the map of the United States in which a klan has been organized and well established where there has ever been a riot, racial or otherwise, and in every town where riots have occurred there is no klan there or was not there at the time of the riots.

The charge has also been made that the klan is organized for the purpose of assisting the enforcement of the law. Nothing to substantiate this charge has been produced, and there is no room in the United States for any organization organized for any such purpose. The law is supreme, and if we were organized for any such absurd purpose the klan would not have lived a year and could not have grown as it has.

The charge is made that we are organized to preach and teach religious intolerance, and especially that we are anti-Roman Catholic, anti-Jew, and anti-Negro. The conduct of the klan proves this absolutely untrue. Many alleged outrages have been attributed to the klan, but none of these were against Roman Catholics, Jews, and Negroes per se, and none were committed by the klan. It is indeed strange that if we organized to persecute the Roman Catholics, Jews, and Negroes that nothing has been done against them. In the United States the question is not and should never be whether a citizen is a Protestant, a Roman Catholic, a Jew, or a Negro, but whether he is a loyal American.

Since the fight against the klan we have been offered and urged to use, by those who are anti-Roman Catholic and not members of the klan, possibly the greatest existing mass of data and material against the Roman Catholics and Knights of Columbus. In this material, so we are told, there are affidavits and other personal testimony attributing to the Roman Catholics and Knights of Columbus in American more outrages and crimes than the klan has ever been charged with. Included in these charges against the Roman Catholics and Knights of Columbus are murder, whipping, tar and feathers, and crimes of all natures.

If the klan was anti-Roman Catholic we would have certainly used the material offered us, but the offer was received, although those making it are anxious that this evidence be presented to Congress. If the klan is to secure members on an anti-Roman Catholic, anti-Jew, and anti-Negro appeal, we do not want such members, and have never secured them in this way. Discussions involving any man's religious beliefs are never allowed in a meeting of the klan. If it ever occurs and the fact is made known to the proper officials of the klan, those who indulge in it, even the presiding officers who permit it, are rigidly penalized.

CORRESPONDENCE REGARDING THE TUSKEGEE SYPHILIS EXPERIMENT

SOURCE Journal of Chronic Disease, v. 26, 1973. Copyright © 1973 Elsevier Inc. Reproduced with permission from Elsevier. <http://www.sciencedirect.com/science/journal/00219681>.

INTRODUCTION When this experiment was begun in the early 1930s, African American males were recruited from Macon County, Alabama, because that county had the highest rate of untreated syphilis in a multi-county area that was being studied by the United States Public Health Service. Penicillin was not yet available. Doctors at the time noted that these men with syphilis might seek treatment in the primary stage of the disease but did not return until they were in stage three of the disease when symptoms were apparent. The racial stereotype was that African American males were genetically

Regulation for the Elimination of the Jews

endowed with a greater sex drive than males of other races. And because of the high rates of the disease, the scientific community held the widespread belief that the disease was different in African Americans and treatment was not effective. When the experiment was exposed in the early 1970s, outrage prevailed among the public. Once penicillin was available after World War II, the Tuskegee subjects did not receive it when it was known that it was effective in treating the disease. Hugh S. Cumming, a doctor from Virginia, and later a part of the Public Health Service was ultimately responsible for this study going forward. Both racism and the refusal to admit a mistaken hypothesis—likely due to that racism—compromised the health and cost the lives of many African Americans.

*“This text has been suppressed
due to author restrictions”*

REGULATION FOR THE ELIMINATION OF THE JEWS FROM THE ECONOMIC LIFE OF GERMANY, NOVEMBER 12, 1938

SOURCE Regulation for the Elimination of the Jews from the Economic Life of Germany (1938): Goring, Hermann. From “Regulation for the Elimination of the Jews from the Economic Life of Germany, November 12, 1938,” in Documents on the Holocaust. Edited by Yitzhak Arad, Israel Gutman, and Abraham Margalio. Ktav Publishers House, 1982, in association with Yad Vashem. Reproduced by permission of Yad Vashem.

INTRODUCTION Only three days before the issuance of this regulation one of the most horrific events of Nazi terror occurred: On November 9, 1938, a night that would come to be known as Kristallnacht, or more commonly in English as, “Night of Broken Glass,” brought widespread rioting throughout Germany against the Jewish communities. A Jewish student named Herschel Grynszpan living in Paris had asked and received an audience by a diplomat at the German embassy there. The diplomat was Ernst vom Rath. When he came in to receive Grynszpan, the student shot him, and vom Rath died two days later. Grynszpan was angered by the knowledge that the Nazis had ordered the expulsion of the approximately 18,000 Polish Jews from Germany, on October 27, his family among them—even though his father had lived in Hanover since 1911. These Jews had been taken back to the Poland in railway cattle cars and were forced to exist in appalling conditions, according to a postcard Grynszpan’s father had sent to him. This incident was used as the justification for the riots against the Jews, the removal of the economic capabilities of the German Jews, and eventually, their elimination from life there altogether.

On the basis of the regulation for the implementation of the Four Year Plan of October 18, 1936 (Reichsgesetzblatt, I, p. 887), the following is decreed:

§ 1

1) From January 1, 1939, Jews (§ 5 of the First Regulation to the Reich Citizenship Law of November 14, 1935, Reichsgesetzblatt, I, p. 1333) are forbidden to operate retail stores, mail-order houses, or sales agencies, or to carry on a trade [craft] independently.

2) They are further forbidden, from the same day on, to offer for sale goods or services, to advertise these, or to accept orders at markets of all sorts, fairs or exhibitions.

3) Jewish trade enterprises (Third Regulation to the Reich Citizenship Law of June 14, 1938—Reichsgesetzblatt, I, p. 627) which violate this decree will be closed by police.

§ 2

1) From January 1, 1939, a Jew can no longer be the head of an enterprise within the meaning of the Law of January 20, 1934, for the Regulation of National Work (Reichsgesetzblatt, I, p. 45).

2) Where a Jew is employed in an executive position in a commercial enterprise he may be given notice to leave in six weeks. At the expiration of the term of the notice all claims of the employee based on his contract, especially those concerning pension and compensation rights, become invalid.

§ 3

1) A Jew cannot be a member of a cooperative.

2) The membership of Jews in cooperatives expires on December 31, 1938. No special notice is required.

§ 4

The Reich Minister of Economy, in coordination with the ministers concerned, is empowered to publish regulations for the implementation of this decree. He may permit exceptions under the Law if these are required as the result of the transfer of a Jewish enterprise to non-Jewish ownership, for the liquidation of a Jewish enterprise or, in special cases, to ensure essential supplies.

Berlin, November 12, 1938

Plenipotentiary for the Four Year Plan

GÖRING

Field Marshal General

“CONCENTRATION CAMP: U.S. STYLE”

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Designated as a measure for national security, President Franklin Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066 on February 19, 1942, about two months following the Japanese attack at Pearl Harbor. Over the next several months, more than 110,000 people of Japanese ancestry, many of them American citizens or native-born Americans were removed from their homes by force and relocated to camps further inland, from the western mountain states to Arkansas. By June of 1942 these Japanese Americans were being housed in camps where conditions were less than adequate and sometimes squalid. Ted Nakashima, who wrote this article for The New Republic on June 15, 1942, alerted all of America to the plight of these loyal American citizens.

Unfortunately in this land of liberty, I was born of Japanese parents; born in Seattle of a mother and father who have been in this country since 1901. Fine parents, who brought up their children in the best American way of life. My mother served with the Volunteer Red Cross Service in the last war my father, an editor, has spoken and written Americanism for forty years.

Our family is almost typical of the other unfortunates here at the camp. The oldest son, a licensed architect, was educated at the University of Washington, has a master's degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and is a scholarship graduate of the American School of Fine Arts in Fontainebleau, France. He is now in camp in Oregon with his wife and three-months-old child. He had just completed designing a much needed defense housing project at Vancouver, Washington.

The second son is an M.D. He served his internship in a New York hospital, is married and has two fine sons. The folks banked on him, because he was the smartest of us three boys. The army took him a month after he opened his office. He is now a lieutenant in the Medical Corps, somewhere in the South.

I am the third son, the dumbest of the lot, but still smart enough to hold down a job as an architectural draftsman. I have just finished building a new home and had lived in it three weeks. My desk was just cleared of work done for the Army Engineers, another stack of 391 defense houses was waiting (a rush job), when the order came to pack up and leave for this resettlement center called “Camp Harmony.”

Mary, the only girl in the family, and her year-old son, “Butch,” are with our parents—interned in the stables of the Livestock Exposition Buildings in-Portland.

Now that you can picture our thoroughly American background, let me describe our new home.

The resettlement center is actually a penitentiary—armed guards in towers with spotlights and deadly Tommy guns, fifteen feet of barbed-wire fences, everyone confined to quarters at nine, lights out at ten o'clock. The guards are ordered to shoot anyone who approaches within twenty feet of the fences. No one is allowed to take the two-block-long hike to the latrines after nine, under any circumstances.

The apartments, as the army calls them, are two-block-long stables, with windows on one side. Floors are shiplaps on two-by-fours laid directly on the mud, which is everywhere. The stalls are about eighteen by twenty-one feet; some contain families of six or seven persons. Partitions are seven feet high, leaving a four-foot opening above. The rooms aren't too bad, almost fit to live in for a short while.

The food and sanitation problems are the worst. We have had absolutely no fresh meat, vegetables or butter since we came here. Mealtime queues extend for blocks; standing in a rainswept line, feet in the mud, waiting for the scant portions of canned wieners and boiled potatoes, hash for breakfast or canned wieners and beans for dinner. Milk only for the kids. Coffee or tea dosed with saltpeter and stale bread are the adults' staples. Dirty, unwiped dishes, greasy silver, a starchy diet, no butter, no milk, bawling kids, mud, wet mud that stinks when it dries, no vegetables—a sad thing for the people who raised them in such abundance. Memories of a crisp head of lettuce with our special olive oil, vinegar, garlic and cheese dressing.

Today one of the surface sewage-disposal pipes broke and the sewage flowed down the streets. Kids play in the water. Shower baths without hot water. Stinking mud and slops everywhere.

Can this be the same America we left a few weeks ago?

As I write, I can remember our little bathroom—light coral walls. My wife painting them, and the spilled paint in her hair. The open towel shelving and the pretty shower curtains which we put up the day before we left. How sanitary and clean we left it for the airlines pilot and his young wife who are now enjoying the fruits of our labor.

It all seems so futile, struggling, trying to live our old lives under this useless, regimented life. The senselessness of all the inactive manpower. Electricians, plumbers, draftsmen, mechanics, carpenters, painters, farmers—every trade—men who are able and willing to do all they can to lick the Axis. Thousands of men and women in these camps, energetic, quick, alert, eager for hard, constructive work, waiting for the army to do something for us, an army that won't give us butter.

I can't take it! I have 391 defense houses to be drawn. I left a fine American home which we built with our own hands. I left a life, highballs with our American friends on week-ends, a carpenter, laundry-truck driver, architect, airlines pilot—good friends, friends who would swear by us. I don't have enough of that Japanese heritage “gaman”—a code of silent suffering and ability to stand pain.

Oddly enough I still have a bit of faith in army promises of good treatment and Mrs. Roosevelt's pledge of a future worthy of good American citizens. I'm banking another $67 of income tax on the future. Sometimes I want to spend the money I have set aside for income tax on a bit of butter or ice cream or something good that I might have smuggled through the gates, but I can't do it when I think that every dollar I can put into “the fight to lick the Japs,” the sooner I will be home again. I must forget my stomach.

What really hurts most is the constant reference to us evacuees as “Japs.” “Japs” are the guys we are fighting. We're on this side and we want to help.

EXECUTIVE ORDER 9981—ESTABLISHING THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON EQUALITY OF TREATMENT AND OPPORTUNITY IN THE ARMED SERVICES

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Though African Americans had fought in every battle since before the start of the American Revolution, into the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and both World Wars, they were not considered equal to whites in their military service to the country. The valor of African Americans in World War II was not recognized with the Medal of Honor for actions during the war for 51 years when the first African American was finally so honored. President Harry Truman believed such discrimination among courageous military veterans was not tolerable. In 1948 his order established equal treatment and opportunity in the military and mandated that no one in the military should be discriminated against because of race. He lost the entire southern wing of the Democratic Party when they left the convention and nominated J. Strom Thurmond, then governor of South Carolina, as their candidate for president. Executive Order 9981 ended segregation in the armed forces and created a new working cooperation between the U.S. Department of Justice and the NAACP as the struggle for civil rights moved further into the courts of the nation.

WHEREAS it is essential that there be maintained in the armed services of the United States the highest standards of democracy, with equality of treatment and opportunity for all those who serve in our country's defense:

NOW, THEREFORE, by virtue of the authority vested in me as President of the United States, by the Constitution and the statutes of the United States, and as Commander in Chief of the armed services, it is hereby ordered as follows:

1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the President that there shall be equality of treatment and opportunity for all persons in the armed services without regard to race, color, religion or national origin. This policy shall be put into effect as rapidly as possible, having due regard to the time required to effectuate any necessary changes without impairing efficiency or morale.

2. There shall be created in the National Military Establishment an advisory committee to be known as the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services, which shall be composed of seven members to be designated by the President.

3. The Committee is authorized on behalf of the President to examine into the rules, proced[ed]ures and practices of the armed services in order to determine in what respect such rules, procedures and practices may be altered or improved with a view to carrying out the policy of this order. The Committee shall confer and advise with the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, and shall make such recommendations to the President and to said Secretaries as in the judgment of the Committee will effectuate the policy hereof.

4. All executive departments and agencies of the Federal Government are authorized and directed to cooperate with the Committee in its work, and to furnish the Committee such information or the services of such persons as the Committee may require in the performance of its duties.

5. When requested by the Committee to do so, persons in the armed services or in any of the executive departments and agencies of the Federal Government shall testify before the Committee and shall make available for the use of the Committee such documents and other information as the Committee may require.

6. The Committee shall continue to exist until such time as the President shall terminate its existence by Executive order.

UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS, DECEMBER 10, 1948

SOURCE Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948): "Universal Declaration of Human Rights," in General Assembly of the United Nations, Resolution 217 A (III), December 10, 1948. Copyright © 1948 United Nations. The United Nations is the author of the original material. Reproduced by permission

INTRODUCTION In the wake of the atrocities of World War II, many prominent leaders throughout the world saw the need to outline the basic principles of human rights. The United Nations was in its infancy. The reality that six million Jews had died during Adolf

Universal Declaration of Human Rights, December 10, 1948

Hitler's Holocaust was a horror that would never fade. More than one million of them were children not yet teenagers. The rights of these Jewish people were systematically stripped away through careful planning. When all was in place, it led to extermination. Others suffered indignation as well, and the people behind the declaration wanted to ensure that it did not happen again—or if it did, that there would be recourse. Among those who were instrumental in its drafting were Eleanor Roosevelt, widow of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt; René Cassin of France; Charles Malik of Lebanon; Dr. P.C. Chang of China; and, Director of the United Nations' Human Rights Division, John Humphrey.

PREAMBLE

WHEREAS recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

WHEREAS disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people,

WHEREAS it is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse, as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law,

WHEREAS it is essential to promote the development of friendly relations between nations,

WHEREAS the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and have determined to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

WHEREAS Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in co-operation with the United Nations, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

WHEREAS a common understanding of these rights and freedoms is of the greatest importance for the full realization of this pledge,

NOW, THEREFORE,

The General Assembly

Proclaims this Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and every organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction.

ARTICLE 1.

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.

ARTICLE 2.

Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration without distinction of any kind, such as race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

Furthermore, no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the county or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty.

ARTICLE 3.

Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person.

ARTICLE 4.

No one shall be held in slavery or servitude; slavery and the slave trade shall be prohibited in all their forms.

ARTICLE 5.

No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 6.

Everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

ARTICLE 7.

All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.

ARTICLE 8.

Everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted him by the constitution or by law.

ARTICLE 9.

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention, or exile.

ARTICLE 10.

Everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, in the determination of his rights and obligations and of any criminal charge against him.

ARTICLE 11.

1. Everyone charged with a penal offense has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defense.

2. No one shall be held guilty of any penal offense on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offense, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the penal offense was committed.

ARTICLE 12.

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence nor to attacks upon his honor and reputation.

Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

ARTICLE 13.

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each state.

2. Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.

ARTICLE 14.

1. Everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution.

2. This right may not be invoked in the case of prosecutions genuinely arising from non-political crimes or from acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 15.

1. Everyone has the right to a nationality.

2. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality.

ARTICLE 16.

1. Men and women of full age, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion, have the right to marry and to found a family. They are entitled to equal rights as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution.

2. Marriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses.

3. The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the state.

ARTICLE 17.

1. Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.

2. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

ARTICLE 18.

Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.

ARTICLE 19.

Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

ARTICLE 20.

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.

2. No one may be compelled to belong to an association.

ARTICLE 21.

1. Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives.

2. Everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his country.

3. The will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government; this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures.

ARTICLE 22.

Everyone, as a member of society, has the right to social security and is entitled to realization, through national effort and international cooperation and in accordance with the organization and resources of each state, of the economic, social and cultural rights indispensable for his dignity and the free development of his personality.

Brown v. Board of Education (excerpt)

ARTICLE 23.

1. Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favorable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment.

2. Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.

3. Everyone who works has the right to just and favorable remuneration ensuring for himself and his family an existence worthy of human dignity, and supplemented, if necessary, by other means of social protection.

4. Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

ARTICLE 24.

Everyone has the right to rest and leisure, including reasonable limitation of working hours and periodic holidays with pay.

ARTICLE 25.

1. Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services, and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.

2. Motherhood and childhood are entitled to special care and assistance. All children, whether born in or out of wedlock, shall enjoy the same social protection.

ARTICLE 26.

1. Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages. Elementary education shall be compulsory. Technical and professional education shall be made generally available and higher education shall be equally accessible to all on the basis of merit.

2. Education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It shall promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups, and shall further the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace.

3. Parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children.

ARTICLE 27.

1. Everyone has the right freely to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in scientific advancement and its benefits.

2. Everyone has the right to the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary, or artistic production of which he is the author.

ARTICLE 28.

Everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration can be fully realized.

ARTICLE 29.

1. Everyone has duties to the community, in which alone the free and full development of his personality is possible.

2. In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.

3. These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 30.

Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any state, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein.

BROWN V. BOARD OF EDUCATION (EXCERPT)

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Segregation and discrimination did not end for African Americans with the Thirteenth Amendment to free the slaves. Nor did it end with the Fourteenth or Fifteenth Amendments that guaranteed due process and equal protection, as well as the right to vote despite the color of one's skin. Laws known as "Jim Crow" created a legal segregation that did not provide equality for African Americans, only more ways to keep them subjugated. Schooling was especially unequal as inadequate schools for African Americans were inferior. Many southern states had no college facilities that allowed African Americans to attend at all. In 1954, nearly a century following the Civil War, an African American elementary school student named Linda Brown, living in Topeka, Kansas, would change the direction of American education when she applied to attend the all-white public school that was closer to her home than the African American public school she was expected to attend. When she was denied admission under the auspices of Kansas state law allowing "separate but equal" facilities, she and her parents took the Board of Education to court—with the help of their NAACP attorney and future U.S. Supreme Court Justice, Thurgood Marshall.

Mr. Chief Justice Warren delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases come to us from the States of Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia, and Delaware. They are premised on different facts and different local conditions, but a common legal question justifies their consideration together in this consolidated opinion.

In each of the cases, minors of the Negro race, through their legal representatives, seek the aid of the courts in obtaining admission to the public schools of their community on a nonsegregated basis. In each instance, they had been denied admission to schools attended by white children under laws requiring or permitting segregation according to race. This segregation was alleged to deprive the plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws under the Fourteenth Amendment. In each of the cases other than the Delaware case, a three-judge federal district court denied relief to the plaintiffs on the so-called "separate but equal" doctrine announced by this Court in Plessy v. Ferguson...

The plaintiffs contend that segregated public schools are not "equal" and cannot be made "equal," and that hence they are deprived of the equal protection of the laws. Because of the obvious importance of the question presented, the Court took jurisdiction. Argument was heard in the 1952 Term, and reargument was heard this Term on certain questions propounded by the Court.

Reargument was largely devoted to the circumstances surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868. It covered exhaustively consideration of the Amendment in Congress, ratification by the states, then existing practices in racial segregation, and the views of proponents and opponents of the Amendment. This discussion and our own investigation convince us that, although these sources cast some light, it is not enough to resolve the problem with which we are faced. At best, they are inconclusive. The most avid proponents of the post-War Amendments undoubtedly intended them to remove all legal distinctions among "all persons born or naturalized in the United States." Their opponents, just as certainly, were antagonistic to both the letter and the spirit of the Amendments and wished them to have the most limited effect. What others in Congress and the state legislatures had in mind cannot be determined with any degree of certainty.

An additional reason for the inconclusive nature of the Amendment's history, with respect to segregated schools, is the status of public education at that time. In the South, the movement toward free common schools, supported by general taxation, had not yet taken hold. Education of white children was largely in the hands of private groups. Education of Negroes was almost nonexistent, and practically all of the race were illiterate. In fact, any education of Negroes was forbidden by law in some states. Today, in contrast, many Negroes have achieved outstanding success in the arts and sciences as well as in the business and professional world. It is true that public school education at the time of the Amendment had advanced further in the North, but the effect of the Amendment on Northern States was generally ignored in the congressional debates. Even in the North, the conditions of public education did not approximate those existing today. The curriculum was usually rudimentary; ungraded schools were common in rural areas; the school term was but three months a year in many states; and compulsory school attendance was virtually unknown. As a consequence, it is not surprising that there should be so little in the history of the Fourteenth Amendment relating to its intended effect on public education.

In the first cases in this Court construing the Fourteenth Amendment, decided shortly after its adoption, the Court interpreted it as proscribing all state-imposed discriminations against the Negro race. The doctrine of "separate but equal" did not make its appearance in this Court until 1896 in the case of Plessy v. Ferguson, supra, involving not education but transportation. American courts have since labored with the doctrine for over half a century. In this Court, there have been six cases involving the "separate but equal" doctrine in the field of public education. In Cumming v. County Board of Education... and Gong Lum v. Rice... the validity of the doctrine itself was not challenged. In more recent cases, all on the graduate school level, inequality was found in that specific benefits enjoyed by white students were denied to Negro students of the same educational qualifications. Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada...; Sipuel v. Oklahoma...; Sweatt v. Painter...; McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents... In none of these cases was it necessary to re-examine the doctrine to grant relief to the Negro plaintiff. And in Sweatt v. Painter, supra, the Court expressly reserved decision on the question whether Plessy v. Ferguson should be held inapplicable to public education.

Brown v. Board of Education (excerpt)

In the instant cases, that question is directly presented. Here, unlike Sweatt v. Painter, there are findings below that the Negro and white schools involved have been equalized, or are being equalized, with respect to buildings, curricula, qualifications and salaries of teachers, and other “tangible” factors. [In the Kansas case, the court below found substantial equality as to all such factors. In the South Carolina case, the court below found that the defendants were proceeding “promptly and in good faith to comply with the court’s decree.” In the Virginia case, the court below noted that the equalization program was already “afoot and progressing”; since then, we have been advised, in the Virginia Attorney General’s brief on reargument, that the program has now been completed. In the Delaware case, the court below similarly noted that the state’s equalization program was well under way. Our decision, therefore, cannot turn on merely a comparison of these tangible factors in the Negro and white schools involved in each of the cases. We must look instead to the effect of segregation itself on public education.

In approaching this problem, we cannot turn the clock back to 1868 when the Amendment was adopted, or even to 1896 when Plessy v. Ferguson was written. We must consider public education in the light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation. Only in this way can it be determined if segregation in public schools deprives these plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws.

Today, education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments. Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditures for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democratic society. It is required in the performance of our most basic public responsibilities, even service in the armed forces. It is the very foundation of good citizenship. Today it is a principal instrument in awakening the child to cultural values, in preparing him for later professional training, and in helping him to adjust normally to his environment. In these days, it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education. Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms.

We come then to the question presented: Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other “tangible” factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does.

In Sweatt v. Painter, supra, in finding that a segregated law school for Negroes could not provide them equal educational opportunities, this Court relied in large part on “those qualities which are incapable of objective measurement but which make for greatness in a law school.” In McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents, supra, the Court, in requiring that a Negro admitted to a white graduate school be treated like all other students, again resorted to intangible considerations: “. . . his ability to study, to engage in discussions and exchange views with other students, and, in general, to learn his profession.” Such considerations apply with added force to children in grade and high schools. To separate them from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone. The effect of this separation on their educational opportunities was well stated by a finding in the Kansas case by a court which nevertheless felt compelled to rule against the Negro plaintiffs: Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the colored children. The impact is greater when it has the sanction of the law; for the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the negro group. A sense of inferiority affects the motivation of a child to learn. Segregation with the sanction of law, therefore, has a tendency to [retard] the educational and mental development of negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racial[ly] integrated school system. [A similar finding was made in the Delaware case: “I conclude from the testimony that in our Delaware society, State-imposed segregation in education itself results in the Negro children, as a class, receiving educational opportunities which are substantially inferior to those available to white children otherwise similarly situated.”] Whatever may have been the extent of psychological knowledge at the time of Plessy v. Ferguson, this finding is amply supported by modern authority. Any language in Plessy v. Ferguson contrary to this finding is rejected.

We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of “separate but equal” has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs and others similarly situated for whom the actions have been brought are, by reason of the segregation complained of, deprived of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. This disposition makes unnecessary any discussion whether such segregation also violates the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Because these are class actions, because of the wide applicability of this decision, and because of the great variety of local conditions, the formulation of decrees in these cases presents problems of considerable complexity.

On reargument, the consideration of appropriate relief was necessarily subordinated to the primary question—the constitutionality of segregation in public education. We have now announced that such segregation is a denial of the equal protection of the laws. In order that we may have the full assistance of the parties in formulating decrees, the cases will be restored to the docket, and the parties are requested to present further argument on Questions 4 and 5 previously propounded by the Court for the reargument this Term. The Attorney General of the United States is again invited to participate. The Attorneys General of the states requiring or permitting segregation in public education will also be permitted to appear as amici curiae upon request to do so by September 15, 1954, and submission of briefs by October 1, 1954.

It is so ordered.

THE LONG SHADOW OF LITTLE ROCK: A MEMOIR (EXCERPT)

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Even three years after the sweeping decision of Brown v. Board of Education, many people throughout the country were not willing to accept it, least of all in the South. Daisy Bates was an African American woman, born in Arkansas, who in 1952 had become president of the Arkansas branch of the NAACP. Her role as an advocate for the nine students who chose to challenge the system in 1957 and enter the all-white Central High School in Little Rock, Arkansas, gained her a place in history. In this account, she recalls one of those young people, Evelyn Eckford, who had walked into the school alone. Without a phone at home, Eckford had not known that the others were meeting several blocks ahead to walk into school together. Her face and name entered into everyone's home across the United States. How she handled the scary mob and public attention that awaited her that September morning remains a remarkable story.

Elizabeth, whose dignity and control in the face of jeering mobsters had been filmed by television cameras and recorded in pictures flashed to newspapers over the world, had overnight become a national heroine. During the next few days' newspaper reporters besieged her home, wanting to talk to her. The first day that her parents agreed she might come out of seclusion, she came to my house where the reporters awaited her. Elizabeth was very quiet, speaking only when spoken to. I took her to my bedroom to talk before I let the reporters see her. I asked how she felt now. Suddenly all her pent-up emotion flared.

"Why am I here?" she said, turning blazing eyes on me. "Why are you so interested in my welfare now? You didn't care enough to notify me of the change of plans—"

I walked over and reached out to her. Before she turned her back on me, I saw tears gathering in her eyes. My heart was breaking for this young girl who stood there trying to stifle her sobs. How could I explain that frantic early morning when at three o'clock my mind had gone on strike?

In the ensuing weeks Elizabeth took part in all the activities of the nine—press conferences, attendance at court, studying with professors at nearby Philander Smith College. She was present, that is, but never really a part of things. The hurt had been too deep.

On the two nights she stayed at my home I was awakened by the screams in her sleep, as she relived in her dreams the terrifying mob scenes at Central. The only times Elizabeth showed real excitement were when Thurgood Marshall met the children and explained the meaning of what had happened in court. As he talked, she would listen raptly, a faint smile on her face. It was obvious he was her hero.

Little by little Elizabeth came out of her shell. Up to now she had never talked about what happened to her at Central. Once when we were alone in the downstairs recreation room of my house, I asked her simply, "Elizabeth, do you think you can talk about it now?"

She remained quiet for a long time. Then she began to speak.

"You remember the day before we were to go in, we met Superintendent Blossom at the school board office. He told us what the mob might say and do but he never told us we wouldn't have any protection. He told our parents not to come because he wouldn't be able to protect the children if they did.

"That night I was so excited I couldn't sleep. The next morning I was about the first one up. While I was pressing my black and white dress—I had made it to wear on the first day of school—my little brother turned on the TV set. They started telling about a large crowd gathered at the school. The man on TV said he wondered if we were going to show up that morning. Mother called from the kitchen, where she was fixing breakfast, 'Turn that TV off!' She was so upset and worried. I wanted to comfort her, so I said, 'Mother, don't worry.'

"Dad was walking back and forth, from room to room, with a sad expression. He was chewing on his pipe and he had a cigar in his hand, but he didn't light either one. It would have been funny, only he was so nervous.

The 1963 Inaugural Address of Governor George C. Wallace (excerpt)

“Before I left home Mother called us into the living-room. She said we should have a word of prayer. Then I caught the bus and got off a block from the school. I saw a large crowd of people standing across the street from the soldiers guarding Central. As I walked on, the crowd suddenly got very quiet. Superintendent Blossom had told us to enter by the front door. I looked at all the people and thought, ‘Maybe I will be safer if I walk down the block to the front entrance behind the guards.’

“At the corner I tried to pass through the long line of guards around the school so as to enter the grounds behind them. One of the guards pointed across the street. So I pointed in the same direction and asked whether he meant for me to cross the street and walk down. He nodded ‘yes.’ So, I walked across the street conscious of the crowd that stood there, but they moved away from me.

“For a moment all I could hear was the shuffling of their feet. Then someone shouted, ‘Here she comes, get ready!’ I moved away from the crowd on the sidewalk and into the street. If the mob came at me I could then cross back over so the guards could protect me.

“The crowd moved in closer and then began to follow me, calling me names. I still wasn’t afraid. Just a little bit nervous. Then my knees started to shake all of a sudden and I wondered whether I could make it to the center entrance a block away. It was the longest block I ever walked in my whole life.

“Even so, I still wasn’t too scared because all the time I kept thinking that the guards would protect me.

“When I got right in front of the school, I went up to a guard again. But this time he just looked straight ahead and didn’t move to let me pass him. I didn’t know what to do. Then I looked and saw that the path leading to the front entrance was a little further ahead. So I walked until I was right in front of the path to the front door.

“I stood looking at the school—it looked so big! Just then the guards let some white students go through.

“The crowd was quiet. I guess they were waiting to see what was going to happen. When I was able to steady my knees, I walked up to the guard who had let the white students in. He too didn’t move. When I tried to squeeze past him, he raised his bayonet and then the other guards closed in and they raised their bayonets.

“They glared at me with a mean look and I was very frightened and didn’t know what to do. I turned around and the crowd came toward me.

“They moved closer and closer. Somebody started yelling, ‘Lynch her! Lynch her!’

“I tried to see a friendly face somewhere in the mob—someone who maybe would help. I looked into the face of an old woman and it seemed a kind face, but when I looked at her again, she spat on me.

“They came closer, shouting, ‘No nigger bitch is going to get in our school. Get out of here!’

“I turned back to the guards but their faces told me I wouldn’t get help from them. Then I looked down the block and saw a bench at the bus stop. I thought, ‘If I can only get there I will be safe.’ I don’t know why the bench seemed a safe place to me, but I started walking toward it. I tried to close my mind to what they were shouting, and kept saying to myself, ‘If I can only make it to the bench I will be safe.’

“When I finally got there, I don’t think I could have gone another step. I sat down and the mob crowded up and began shouting all over again. Someone hollered, ‘Drag her over to this tree! Let’s take care of the nigger.’ Just then a white man sat down beside me, put his arm around me and patted my shoulder. He raised my chin and said, ‘Don’t let them see you cry.’

“Then, a white lady—she was very nice—she came over to me on the bench. She spoke to me but I don’t remember now what she said. She put me on the bus and sat next to me. She asked me my name and tried to talk to me but I don’t think I answered. I can’t remember much about the bus ride, but the next thing I remember I was standing in front of the School for the Blind, where Mother works.

“I thought, ‘Maybe she isn’t here. But she has to be here!’ So I ran upstairs, and I think some teachers tried to talk to me, but I kept running until I reached Mother’s classroom.

“Mother was standing at the window with her head bowed, but she must have sensed I was there because she turned around. She looked as if she had been crying, and I wanted to tell her I was all right. But I couldn’t speak. She put her arms around me and I cried.”

THE 1963 INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR GEORGE C. WALLACE (EXCERPT)

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION As a respected circuit judge in Alabama, George Wallace—with a fairly liberal record on the issue of race relations—entered the 1958 gubernatorial race. Declining to use the staunch segregationist tactics of his opponent who enjoyed the endorsement of the Ku Klux Klan, he was soundly defeated. When he ran again for that seat and was elected in 1962, he was true to his vow never to be defeated that way again. His platform of racial segregation defied federal pressure to integrate public facilities. He was determined that it was a states' right issue. With that stand, he became a national symbol of what the South represented in the minds and hearts of the Southerners who supported him. His inaugural address in January of 1963 further fueled the flames of his notoriety. Many nightly news reports on the problems of the struggle for civil rights included an angry and self-righteous George Wallace, as he defined the opposition for federal civil rights legislation. His stance led him to run for the presidency in 1968 and again in 1972, when an attempted assassination left him paralyzed.

This is the day of my Inauguration as Governor of the State of Alabama. And on this day I feel a deep obligation to renew my pledges, my covenants with you ... the people of this great state.

General Robert E. Lee said that "duty" is the sublimest word on the English language and I have come, increasingly, to realize what he meant. I SHALL do my duty to you, God helping ... to every man, to every woman ... yes, to every child in this state. I shall fulfill my duty toward honesty and economy in our State government so that no man shall have a part of his livelihood cheated and no child shall have a bit of his future stolen away.

I have said to you that I would eliminate the liquor agents in this state and that the money saved would be returned to our citizens ... I am happy to report to you that I am now filling orders for several hundred one-way tickets and stamped on them are these words ... "for liquor agents ... destination: ... out of Alabama." I am happy to report to you that the big-wheeling cocktail-party boys have gotten the word that their free whiskey and boat rides are over ... that the farmer in the field, the worker in the factory, the businessman in his office, the housewife in her home, have decided that the money can be better spent to help our children's education and our older citizens ... and they have put a man in office to see that it is done. It shall be done. Let me say one more time. ... no more liquor drinking in your governor's mansion.

I shall fulfill my duty in working hard to bring industry into our state, not only by maintaining an honest, sober and free-enterprise climate of government in which industry can have confidence ... but in going out and getting it ... so that our people can have industrial jobs in Alabama and provide a better life for their children.

I shall not forget my duty to our senior citizens ... so that their lives can be lived in dignity and enrichment of the golden years, nor to our sick, both mental and physical ... and they will know we have not forsaken them. I want the farmer to feel confident that in this State government he has a partner who will work with him in raising his income and increasing his markets. And I want the laboring man to know he has a friend who is sincerely striving to better his field of endeavor.

I want to assure every child that this State government is not afraid to invest in their future through education, so that they will not be handicapped on every threshold of their lives.

Today I have stood, where once Jefferson Davis stood, and took an oath to my people. It is very appropriate then that from this Cradle of the Confederacy, this very Heart of the Great Anglo-Saxon Southland, that today we sound the drum for freedom as have our generations of forebears before us done, time and time again through history. Let us rise to the call of freedom-loving blood that is in us and send our answer to the tyranny that clanks its chains upon the South. In the name of the greatest people that have ever trod this earth, I draw the line in the dust and toss the gauntlet before the feet of tyranny ... and I say ... segregation today ... segregation tomorrow ... segregation forever.

The Washington, D.C. school riot report is disgusting and revealing. We will not sacrifice our children to any such type school system—and you can write that down. The federal troops in Mississippi could be better used guarding the safety of the citizens of Washington, D.C., where it is even unsafe to walk or go to a ballgame—and that is the nation's capitol. I was safer in a B-29 bomber over Japan during the war in an air raid, than the people of Washington are walking to the White House neighborhood. A closer example is Atlanta. The city officials fawn for political reasons over school integration and THEN build barricades to stop residential integration—what hypocrisy!

Let us send this message back to Washington by our representatives who are with us today ... that from this day we are standing up, and the heel of tyranny does not fit the neck of an upright man ... that we intend to take the offensive and carry our fight for freedom across the nation, wielding the balance of power we know we possess in the Southland. ... that WE, not the insipid bloc of voters of some sections ... will determine in the next election who shall sit in the White House of these United States ... That from this day, from this hour ... from this minute ... we give the word of a race of honor that we will tolerate their boot in our face no longer. ... and let those certain judges put that in their opium pipes of power and smoke it for what it is worth.

Hear me, Southerners! You sons and daughters who have moved north and west throughout this nation. ...

we call on you from your native soil to join with us in national support and vote . . . and we know . . . wherever you are . . . away from the hearths of the Southland . . . that you will respond, for though you may live in the farthest reaches of this vast country . . . your heart has never left Dixieland.

And you native sons and daughters of old New England's rock-ribbed patriotism . . . and you sturdy natives of the great Mid-West . . . and you descendants of the far West flaming spirit of pioneer freedom . . . we invite you to come and be with us . . . for you are of the Southern spirit . . . and the Southern philosophy . . . you are Southerners too and brothers with us in our fight.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964 (EXCERPTS)

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION Quiet acts of civil disobedience in the 1950s gave way to huge—sometimes violent—demonstrations and vocal protest that erupted by the early 1960s mostly throughout the southern United States. African Americans were joined in their struggle by Americans of other races to launch what was to be a final attack on the legalized discrimination that occurred especially in the South in every area from voting rights, to employment, to education, to access to public facilities—everything from restrooms, to lunch counters, to buses. The national nightly news broadcasts carried stories of arrests, boycotts, and even murder of civil rights movement workers. In the summer of 1963, the March on Washington drew thousands of people and culminated in Martin Luther King Jr.'s now famous speech "I Have a Dream." It was in this climate that President John F. Kennedy first initiated the Civil Rights Act that same year. By July 2, 1964 when President Lyndon B. Johnson signed it into law, it contained eleven different titles covering all aspects of what every American could expect as a right. It also served as the mandate from which the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission was created.

TITLE I—VOTING RIGHTS

Sec. 101. Section 2004 of the Revised Statutes (42 U.S.C. 1971) . . . is further amended as follows: . . .

. . . "No Person acting under color of law shall—"

"(A) In determining whether any individual is qualified under State law or laws to vote in any Federal election, apply any standard, practice, or procedure different from the standards, practices, or procedures applied under such law or laws to other individuals within the same county, parish, or similar political subdivision who have been found by State officials to be qualified to vote;"

"(B) deny the right of any individual to vote in any Federal election because of an error or omission on any record or paper relating to any application, registration, or other act requisite to voting, if such error or omission is not material in determining whether such individual is qualified under State law to vote in such election; or"

"(C) employ any literacy test as a qualification for voting in any Federal election unless (i) such test is administered to each individual and is conducted wholly in writing, and (ii) a certified copy of the test and of the answers given by the individual is furnished to him within twenty-five days of the submission of his request made within the period of time during which records and papers are required to be retained and preserved pursuant to title III of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 (42 U.S.C. 1974–74e; 74 Stat. 88). . . ."

Sec. 201. (a) All persons shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, and accommodations of any place of public accommodation, as defined in this section, without discrimination or segregation on the ground of race, color, religion, or national origin.

(b) Each of the following establishments which serves the public is a place of public accommodation within the meaning of this title if its operations affect commerce, or if discrimination or segregation by it is supported by State action:

- (1) any inn, hotel, motel, or other establishment which provides lodging to transient guests, other than an establishment located within a building which contains not more than five rooms for rent or hire and which is actually occupied by the proprietor of such establishment as his residence;
- (2) any restaurant, cafeteria, lunchroom, lunch counter, soda fountain, or other facility principally engaged in selling food for consumption on the premises, including, but not limited to, any such facility located on the premises of any retail establishment; or any gasoline station;
- (3) any motion picture house, theater, concert hall, sports arena, stadium or other place of exhibition or entertainment; and

- (4) any establishment (A)(i) which is physically located within the premises of any establishment otherwise covered by this subsection, or (ii) within the premises of which is physically located any such covered establishment, and (B) which holds itself out as serving patrons of such covered establishment. . . .

(e) The provisions of this title shall not apply to a private club or other establishment not in fact open to the public, except to the extent that the facilities of such establishment are made available to the customers or patrons of an establishment within the scope of subsection (b).

Sec. 206. (a) Whenever the Attorney General has reasonable cause to believe that any person or group of persons is engaged in a pattern or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment of any of the rights secured by this title, and that the pattern or practice is of such a nature and is intended to deny the full exercise of the rights herein described, the Attorney General may bring a civil action in the appropriate district court of the United States. . . .

TITLE IV—DESEGREGATION OF PUBLIC EDUCATION

Sec. 407. (a) Whenever the Attorney General receives a complaint in writing—

- (1) signed by a parent or group of parents to the effect that his or their minor children, as members of a class of persons similarly situated, are being deprived by a school board of the equal protection of the laws, or
- (2) signed by an individual, or his parent, to the effect that he has been denied admission to or not permitted to continue in attendance at a public college by reason of race, color, religion, or national origin and the Attorney General believes the complaint is meritorious and certifies that the signer or signers of such complaint are unable, in his judgment, to initiate and maintain appropriate legal proceedings for relief and that the institution of an action will materially further the orderly achievement of desegregation in public education, the Attorney General is authorized, after giving notice of such complaint to the appropriate school board or college authority and after certifying that he is satisfied that such board or authority has had a reasonable time to adjust the conditions alleged in such complaint, to institute for or in the name of the United States a civil action in any appropriate district court of the United States against such parties and for such relief as may be appropriate. . . .

TITLE VI—NONDISCRIMINATION IN FEDERALLY-ASSISTED PROGRAMS

Sec. 601. No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance. . . .

TITLE VII—EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

Sec. 703. (a) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—

- (1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or

- (2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

(b) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employment agency to fail or refuse to refer for employment, or otherwise to discriminate against, any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, or to classify or refer for employment any individual on the basis of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

(c) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for a labor organization—

- (1) to exclude or to expel from its membership, or otherwise to discriminate against, any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin;

- (2) to limit, segregate, or classify its membership, or to classify or fail or refuse to refer for employment any individual, in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities, or would limit such employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee or as an applicant for employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or

Malcolm X's "The Ballot or the Bullet" Speech

(3) to cause or attempt to cause an employer to discriminate against an individual in violation of this section.

(d) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for any employer, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining, including on-the-job training programs to discriminate against any individual because of his race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in admission to, or employment in, any program established to provide apprenticeship or other training.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, (1) it shall not be an unlawful employment practice for an employer to hire and employ employees, for an employment agency to classify, or refer for employment any individual, for a labor organization to classify its membership or to classify or refer for employment any individual, or for an employer, labor organization, or joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining programs to admit or employ any individual in any such program, on the basis of his religion, sex, or national origin in those certain instances where religion, sex, or national origin is a bona fide occupational qualification reasonably necessary to the normal operation of that particular business or enterprise. . . .

Sec. 705. (1) There is hereby created a Commission to be known as the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which shall be composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. . . .

American community. When Earl Little was run over by a streetcar, many determined it was no accident—instead, that it was likely a murder by the Black Legion, a hate organization targeting African Americans. Malcolm told his favorite teacher in junior high that he wanted to be a lawyer. He was told that it was an unrealistic goal for someone of his race. He knew violence and crime and spent time in prison, where he converted and became a Muslim with the Nation of Islam. He would eventually change his name to reflect his dissatisfaction with having the name of a man who had once owned his family. This exchange in Cleveland in 1964 occurred just about a year before he was assassinated. He expressed his anger at the oppression he believed white people imposed on his race, explaining that he is not “anti-white” but anti-exploitation. He warned that in the political year of 1964, there was the vote, or the possibility that the country could explode in the violence of that exploitation and oppression. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 was enacted that summer. And cities around the country began to explode in violence for several summers to come.

*“This text has been suppressed
due to author restrictions”*

MALCOLM X'S “THE BALLOT OR THE BULLET” SPEECH

SOURCE Breitman, George (ed.), From Malcolm X Speaks: Selected Speeches and Statements. Copyright 1965, 1989 by Betty Shabazz and Pathfinder Press. Reprinted by permission.

INTRODUCTION Malcolm X was born Malcolm Little into a hard life that knew little good of white people. His father, Earl Little, became a member of the United Negro Improvement Association (UNIA) and would eventually be identified as a chief in the movement. As a young child Malcolm's family home in Lansing, Michigan was burned down, probably due to backlash against his father's increasing activity in the African

*“This text has been suppressed
due to author restrictions”*

*“This text has been suppressed
due to author restrictions”*

*“This text has been suppressed
due to author restrictions”*

*“This text has been suppressed
due to author restrictions”*

MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.’S “THE AMERICAN DREAM”

SOURCE King, Martin Luther, Jr. “The American Dream,” http://www.stanford.edu/group/King/sermons/65704\_The\_American\_Dream.html. Copyright 1963 Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., copyright renewed 1991 by Coretta Scott King. Reproduced by arrangement with the Estate of Martin Luther King, Jr., c/o Writers House as agent for the proprietor New York, NY.

INTRODUCTION It was a year after the passage of the Civil Rights Act that the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. addressed his congregation in Atlanta. The day was July 4, 1965—the perfect day to talk about rights and equality. On that particular day as he was heading to the airport in Washington, D.C., to fly to Atlanta, his aide, Andrew Young, pointed out that it was an interesting coincidence that they should be passing by the Jefferson Memorial on Independence Day. Dr. King had forgotten that it was the holiday. It was then that he decided he would preach in that spirit of the founding fathers and talk more about what he saw as the ongoing task for African Americans, and a struggle that was not yet ended even if the legal battles had. The Jewish philosopher Martin Buber had just died, and he offered inspiration to Dr. King, too. He reminded people why segregation was wrong—that segregation “substitutes an ‘I-It’ relationship for the ‘I-Thou’ relationship and relegates persons to the status of things.” King recaptured some of the power of his 1963

“I Have a Dream” speech by repeating his own version of what an “American Dream” should be.

I planned to use for the textual basis for our thinking together that passage from the prologue of the book of Job where Satan is pictured as asking God, “Does Job serve thee for nought?” And I’d like to ask you to allow me to hold that sermon [“Why Serve God?”] in abeyance and preach it the next time I am in the pulpit in order to share with you some other ideas. This morning I was riding to the airport in Washington, D.C., and on the way to the airport the limousine passed by the Jefferson monument, and Reverend Andrew Young, my executive assistant, said to me, “It’s quite coincidental that we would be passing by the Jefferson Monument on Independence Day.” You can get so busy in life that you forget holidays and other days, and it had slipped my mind altogether that today was the Fourth of July. And I said to him, “It is coincidental and quite significant, and I think when I get to Atlanta and go to my pulpit, I will try to preach a sermon in the spirit of the founding fathers of our nation and in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence.” And so this morning I would like to use as a subject from which to preach: “The American Dream.” (Yes, sir)

It wouldn’t take us long to discover the substance of that dream. It is found in those majestic words of the Declaration of Independence, words lifted to cosmic proportions: “We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by God, Creator, with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness.” This is a dream. It’s a great dream.

The first saying we notice in this dream is an amazing universalism. It doesn’t say “some men,” it says “all men.” It doesn’t say “all white men,” it says “all men,” which includes black men. It does not say “all Gentiles,” it says “all men,” which includes Jews. It doesn’t say “all Protestants,” it says “all men,” which includes Catholics. (Yes, sir) It doesn’t even say “all theists and believers,” it says “all men,” which includes humanists and agnostics.

Then that dream goes on to say another thing that ultimately distinguishes our nation and our form of government from any totalitarian system in the world. It says that each of us has certain basic rights that are neither derived from or conferred by the state. In order to discover where they came from, it is necessary to move back behind the dim mist of eternity. They are God-given, gifts from His hands. Never before in the history of the world has a sociopolitical document expressed in such profound, eloquent, and unequivocal language the dignity and the worth of human personality. The American dream reminds us, and we should think about it anew on this Independence Day, that every man is an heir of the legacy of dignity and worth.

Now ever since the founding fathers of our nation dreamed this dream in all of its magnificence—to use a big word that the psychiatrists use—America has been something of a schizophrenic personality, tragically divided against herself. On the one hand we have proudly professed the great principles of democracy, but on the other hand we have sadly practiced the very opposite of those principles.

But now more than ever before, America is challenged to realize its dream, for the shape of the world today does not permit our nation the luxury of an anemic democracy. And the price that America must pay for the continued oppression of the Negro and other minority groups is the price of its own destruction. (Yes it is) For the hour is late. And the clock of destiny is ticking out. We must act now before it is too late.

And so it is marvelous and great that we do have a dream, that we have a nation with a dream; and to forever challenge us; to forever give us a sense of urgency; to forever stand in the midst of the "isness" of our terrible injustices; to remind us of the "oughtness" of our noble capacity for justice and love and brotherhood.

This morning I would like to deal with some of the challenges that we face today in our nation as a result of the American dream. First, I want to reiterate the fact that we are challenged more than ever before to respect the dignity and the worth of all human personality. We are challenged to really believe that all men are created equal. And don't misunderstand that. It does not mean that all men are created equal in terms of native endowment, in terms of intellectual capacity—it doesn't mean that. There are certain bright stars in the human firmament in every field. (Yes, sir) It doesn't mean that every musician is equal to a Beethoven or Handel, a Verdi or a Mozart. It doesn't mean that every physicist is equal to an Einstein. It does not mean that every literary figure in history is equal to Aeschylus and Euripides, Shakespeare and Chaucer. (Make it plain) It does not mean that every philosopher is equal to Plato, Aristotle, Immanuel Kant, and Friedrich Hegel. It doesn't mean that. There are individuals who do excel and rise to the heights of genius in their areas and in their fields. What it does mean is that all men are equal in intrinsic worth. (Yes)

You see, the founding fathers were really influenced by the Bible. The whole concept of the imago dei, as it is expressed in Latin, the "image of God," is the idea that all men have something within them that God injected. Not that they have substantial unity with God, but that every man has a capacity to have fellowship with God. And this gives him a uniqueness, it gives him worth, it gives him dignity. And we must never forget this as a nation: there are no gradations in the image of God. Every man from a treble white to a bass black is significant on God's keyboard, precisely because every man is made in the image of God. One day we will learn that. (Yes) We will know one day that God made us to live together as brothers and to respect the dignity and worth of every man.

This is why we must fight segregation with all of our nonviolent might. (Yes, sir; Make it plain) Segregation is not only inconvenient—that isn't what makes it wrong. Segregation is not only sociologically untenable—that isn't what makes it wrong. Segregation is not only politically and economically unsound—that is not what makes it wrong. Ultimately, segregation is morally wrong and sinful. To use the words of a great Jewish philosopher that died a few days ago, Martin Buber, "It's wrong because it substitutes an 'I-It' relationship for the 'I-Thou' relationship and relegates persons to the status of things." That's it. (Yes, sir) . . .

And I tell you this morning, my friends, the reason we got to solve this problem here in America: Because God somehow called America to do a special job for mankind and the world. (Yes, sir; Make it plain) Never before in the history of the world have so many racial groups and so many national backgrounds assembled together in one nation. And somehow if we can't solve the problem in America the world can't solve the problem, because America is the world in miniature and the world is America writ large. And God set us out with all of the opportunities. (Make it plain) He set us between two great oceans; (Yes, sir) made it possible for us to live with some of the great natural resources of the world. And there he gave us through the minds of our forefathers a great creed: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men (Yes, sir) are created equal." . . .

I submit to you when I took off on that plane this morning, I saw men go out there in their overalls. (Yes, sir, Every time) I saw them working on things here and there, and saw some more going out there to put the breakfast on there so that we could eat on our way to Atlanta. (Make it plain) And I said to myself that these people who constitute the ground crew are just as significant as the pilot, because this plane couldn't move if you didn't have the ground crew. (Amen) I submit to you that in Hugh Spaulding or Grady Hospital, (Preach it) the woman or the man who goes in there to sweep the floor is just as significant as the doctor, (Yes) because if he doesn't get that dust off the floor germs will begin to circulate. And those same germs can do injury and harm to the human being. I submit to you this morning (Yes) that there is dignity in all work (Have mercy) when we learn to pay people decent wages. Whoever cooks in your house, whoever sweeps the floor in your house is just as significant as anybody who lives in that house. (Amen) And everybody that we call a maid is serving God in a significant way. (Preach it) And I love the maids, I love the people who have been ignored, and I want to see them get the kind of wages that they need. And their job is no longer a menial job, (No, sir) for you come to see its worth and its dignity.

Are we really taking this thing seriously? "All men are created equal." (Amen) And that means that every man who lives in a slum today (Preach it) is just as significant as John D., Nelson, or any other Rockefeller. Every man who lives in the slum is just as significant as Henry Ford. All men are created equal, and they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, rights that can't be separated from you. [clap] Go down and tell them, (No) "You may take my life, but you can't take my right to life. You may take liberty from me, but you can't take my right to liberty. You may take from me the desire, you may take from me the propensity to pursue happiness, but you can't take from me my right to pursue happiness." (Yes) "We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights and among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness." (Yes, sir) . . .

And I would like to say to you this morning what I've tried to say all over this nation, what I believe firmly: that in seeking to make the dream a reality we must use and adopt a proper method. I'm more convinced than ever before that nonviolence is the way. I'm more convinced than ever before that violence is impractical as well as immoral . . . We can stand up before our most violent opponent and say: We will match your capacity to inflict suffering by our capacity to endure suffering. We will meet your physical force with soul force. (Make it plain) Do to us what you will and we will still love you. We cannot in all good conscience obey your unjust laws, because noncooperation with evil is as much a moral obligation as is cooperation with good and so throw us in jail. (Make it plain) We will go in those jails and transform them from dungeons of shame to havens of freedom and human dignity. Send your hooded perpetrators of violence into our communities after midnight hours and drag us out on some wayside road and beat us and leave us half-dead, and as difficult as it is, we will still love you. (Amen) Somehow go around the country and use your propaganda agents to make it appear that we are not fit culturally, morally, or otherwise for integration, and we will still love you. (Yes) Threaten our children and bomb our homes, and as difficult as it is, we will still love you. (Yeah) . . .

We have a great dream. (Great dream) It started way back in 1776, and God grant that America will be true to her dream.

About two years ago now, I stood with many of you who stood there in person and all of you who were there in spirit before the Lincoln Monument in Washington. (Yes) As I came to the end of my speech there, I tried to tell the nation about a dream I had. I must confess to you this morning that since that sweltering August afternoon in 1963, my dream has often turned into a nightmare; (Lord) I've seen it shattered. . . . I've seen my dream shattered as I've walked the streets of Chicago (Make it plain) and seen Negroes, young men and women, with a sense of utter hopelessness because they can't find any jobs. And they see life as a long and desolate corridor with no exit signs. And not only Negroes at this point. I've seen my dream shattered because I've been through Appalachia, and I've seen my white brothers along with Negroes living in poverty. (Yeah) And I'm concerned about white poverty as much as I'm concerned about Negro poverty. (Make it plain)

So yes, the dream has been shattered, (Amen) and I have had my nightmarish experiences, but I tell you this morning once more that I haven't lost the faith. (No, sir) I still have a dream (A dream, Yes, sir) that one day all of God's children will have food and clothing and material well-being for their bodies, culture and education for their minds, and freedom for their spirits. (Yes)

I still have a dream this morning: (Yes) one day all of God's black children will be respected like his white children.

I still have a dream this morning (Yes) that one day the lion and the lamb will lie down together, and every man will sit under his own vine and fig tree and none shall be afraid.

I still have a dream this morning that one day all men everywhere will recognize that out of one blood God made all men to dwell upon the face of the earth.

I still have a dream this morning (Yes, sir) that one day every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill will be made low; the rough places will be made plain, and the crooked places straight; and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.

I still have a dream this morning (Amen) that truth will reign supreme and all of God's children will respect the dignity and worth of human personality. And when this day comes the morning stars will sing together (Yes) and the sons of God will shout for joy.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men (All right) are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, (Yes, sir) that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness."

We open the doors of the church now. If someone needs to accept Christ, (Yes, sir) this is a marvelous opportunity, a great moment to make a decision. And as we sing together, we bid you come at this time by Christian experience, baptism, watch care. But come at this moment, become a part of this great Christian fellowship and accept Christ (Yes, sir) as your personal savior.

“BLACK POWER—ITS RELEVANCE TO THE WEST INDIES”

SOURCE Rodney, Walter. From The Groundings with My Brothers. Copyright © 1969. Reprinted by permission of Bogle L'Ouverture Publishers Ltd.

INTRODUCTION Walter Rodney was a Guyanese historian who had received his Ph.D. from the School of Oriental and African Studies at the University of London in 1966, the time of the rise of the political movement of Black Power, not only in the United States but throughout the world. The islands of the West Indies ended the practice of slavery nearly thirty years before the start of the U.S. Civil War; but as with its American counterparts, the legacy of slavery lingered on long after freedom. One hundred years later, just before the start of World War II, the black people of the West Indies revolted. Still under British rule, the living conditions for the poor black people were horrendous. Over twenty years after that, with conditions for black people still suffering, Rodney fueled the flames of unrest with his speeches against white imperialism. After he was expelled, rioting ensued in Kingston and the university closed temporarily. These are some of his words that helped enflame a movement.

About a fortnight ago I had the opportunity of speaking on Black Power to an audience on this campus. At that time, the consciousness among students as far as the racial question is concerned had been heightened by several incidents on the world scene—notably, the hangings in Rhodesia and the murder of Dr. Martin Luther King. Indeed, it has been heightened to such an extent that some individuals have started to organize a Black Power movement. My presence here attests to my full sympathy with their objectives.

The topic on this occasion is no longer just “Black Power” but “Black Power and You.” Black Power can be seen as a movement and an ideology springing from the reality of oppression of black peoples by whites within the imperialist world as a whole. Now we need to be specific in defining the West Indian scene and our own particular roles in the society. You and I have to decide whether we want to think black or to remain as a dirty version of white. (I shall indicate the full significance of this later.)

Recently there was a public statement in Scope where Black Power was referred to as “Black supremacy.” This may have been a genuine error or a deliberate falsification. Black Power is a call to black peoples to throw off white domination and resume the handling of their own destinies. It means that blacks would enjoy power commensurate with their numbers in the world and in particular localities. Whenever an oppressed black man shouts for equality he is called a racist. This was said of Marcus Garvey in his day. Imagine that! We are so inferior that if we demand equality of opportunity and power that is outrageously racist! Black people who speak up for their rights must beware of this device of false accusations. Is it intended to place you on the defensive and if possible embarrass you into silence. How can we be both oppressed and embarrassed? Is it that our major concern is not to hurt the feelings of the oppressor? Black people must now take the offensive—if it is anyone who should suffer embarrassment it is the whites. Did black people roast six million Jews? Who exterminated millions of indigenous inhabitants in the Americas and Australia? Who enslaved countless millions of Africans? The white capitalist cannibal has always fed on the world's black peoples. White capitalist imperialist society is profoundly and unmistakably racist.

The West Indies have always been a part of white capitalist society. We have been the most oppressed section because we were a slave society and the legacy of slavery still rests heavily upon the West Indian black man. I will briefly point to five highlights of our social development: (1) the development of racialism under slavery; (2) emancipation; (3) Indian indentured labour; (4) the year 1865 in Jamaica; (5) the year 1938 in the West Indies.

SLAVERY

As C.L.R. James, Eric Williams and other W.I. scholars have pointed out, slavery in the West Indies started as an economic phenomenon rather than a racial one. But it rapidly became racist as all white labour was withdrawn from the fields, leaving black to be identified with slave labour and white to be linked with property and domination. Out of this situation where blacks had an inferior status in practice, there grew social and scientific theories relating to the supposed inherent inferiority of the black man, who was considered as having been created to bring water and hew wood for the white man. This theory then served to rationalise white exploitation of blacks all over Africa and Asia. The West Indies and the American South share the dubious distinction of being the breeding ground for world racialism. Even the blacks became convinced of their own inferiority, though fortunately we are capable of the most intense expressions when we recognise that we have been duped by the white men. Black power recognises both the reality of the black oppression and self-negation as well as the potential for revolt.

EMANCIPATION

By the end of the 18th century, Britain had got most of what it wanted from black labour in the West Indies. Slavery and the slave trade had made Britain strong and now stood in the way of new developments, so it was time to abandon those systems. The Slave Trade and Slavery were thus ended; but Britain had to consider how to squeeze what little remained in the territories and how to maintain the local whites in power. They therefore decided to give the planters £20 million compensation and to guarantee their black labour supplies for the next six years through a system called apprenticeship. In that period, white society consolidated its position to ensure that slave relations should persist in our society. The Rastafari Brethren have always insisted that the black people were promised £20 million at emancipation. In reality, by any normal standards of justice, we black people should have got the £20 million compensation money. We were the ones who had been abused and wronged, hunted in Africa and brutalised on the plantations. In Europe, when serfdom was abolished, the serfs usually inherited the land as compensation and by right. In the West Indies, the exploiters were compensated because they could no longer exploit us in the same way as before. White property was of greater value than black humanity. It still is—white property is of greater value than black humanity in the British West Indies today, especially here in Jamaica.

INDIAN INDENTURED LABOUR

Britain and the white West Indians had to maintain the plantation system in order to keep whites supreme. When Africans started leaving the plantations to set up as independent peasants they threatened the plantation structure and therefore Indians were imported under the indenture arrangements. That was possible because white power controlled most of the world and could move non-white peoples around as they wished. It was from British-controlled India that the indentured labour was obtained. It was the impact of British commercial, military and political policies that was destroying the life and culture of 19th century India and forcing people to flee to other parts of the world to earn bread. Look where Indians fled—to the West Indies! The West Indies is a place black people want to leave, not to come to. One must therefore appreciate the pressure of white power on India which gave rise to migration to the West Indies. Indians were brought here solely in the interest of white society—at the expense of Africans already in the West Indies and often against their own best interests, for Indians perceived indentured labour to be a form of slavery and it was eventually terminated through the pressure of Indian opinion in the homeland. The West Indies has made a unique contribution to the history of suffering in the world, and Indians have provided part of that contribution since indentures were first introduced. This is another aspect of the historical situation which is still with us.

1865

In that year Britain found a way of perpetuating White Power in the West Indies after ruthlessly crushing the revolt of our black brothers led by Paul Bogle. The British Government took away the Constitution of Jamaica and placed the island under the complete control of the Colonial Office, a manoeuvre that was racially motivated. The Jamaican legislature was then largely in the hands of the local whites with a mulatto minority, but if the gradual changes continued the mulattoes would have taken control—and the blacks were next in line. Consequently, the British Government put a stop to the process of the gradual takeover of political power by blacks. When we look at the British Empire in the 19th century, we see a clear difference between white colonies and black colonies. In the white colonies like Canada and Australia the British were giving white people their freedom and self-rule. In the black colonies of the West Indies, Africa and Asia, the British were busy taking away the political freedom of the inhabitants. Actually, on the constitutional level, Britain had already displayed its racialism in the West Indies in the early 19th century when it refused to give mulattoes the power of Government in Trinidad, although they were the majority of free citizens. In 1865 in Jamaica it was not the first nor the last time on which Britain made it clear that its white “kith and kin” would be supported to hold dominion over blacks.

1938

Slavery ended in various islands of the West Indies between 1834 and 1838. Exactly 100 years later (between 1934–38) the black people in the West Indies revolted against the hypocritical freedom of the society. The British were very surprised—they had long forgotten all about the blacks in the British West Indies and they sent a Royal Commission to find out what it was all about. The report of the conditions was so shocking that the British government did not release it until after the war, because they wanted black colonials to fight the white man’s battles. By the time the war ended it was clear in the West Indies and throughout Asia and Africa that some concessions would have to be made to black peoples. In general, the problem as seen by white imperialists was to give enough power to certain groups in colonial society to keep the whole society from exploding and to maintain the essentials of the imperialist structure. In the British West Indies, they had to take into account the question of military strategy because we lie under the belly of the world's imperialist giant, the U.S.A. Besides, there was the new and vital mineral bauxite, which had to be protected. The British solution was to pull out wherever possible and leave the imperial government in the hands of the U.S.A., while the local government was given to a white, brown and black petty-bourgeoisie who were culturally the creations of white capitalist society and who therefore support the white imperialist system because they gain personally and because they have been brainwashed into aiding the oppression of black people.

Black Power in the West Indies means three closely related things: (i) the break with imperialism which is historically white racist; (ii) the assumption of power by the black masses in the islands; (iii) the cultural reconstruction of the society in the image of the blacks.

I shall anticipate certain questions on who are the blacks in the West Indies since they are in fact questions which have been posed to me elsewhere. I maintain that it is the white world which has defined who are blacks—if you are not white then you are black. However, it is obvious that the West Indian situation is complicated by factors such as the variety of racial types and racial mixtures and by the process of class formation. We have, therefore, to note not simply what the white world says but also how individuals perceive each other. Nevertheless, we can talk of the mass of the West Indian population as being black—either African or Indian. There seems to have been some doubts on the last point, and some fear that Black Power is aimed against the Indian. This would be a flagrant denial of both the historical experience of the West Indies and the reality of the contemporary scene.

When the Indian was brought to the West Indies, he met the same racial contempt which whites applied to Africans. The Indian, too, was reduced to a single stereotype—the coolie or labourer. He too was a hewer of wood and a bringer of water. I spoke earlier of the revolt of the blacks in the West Indies in 1938. That revolt involved Africans in Jamaica, Africans and Indians in Trinidad and Guyana. The uprisings in Guyana were actually led by Indian sugar workers. Today, some Indians (like some Africans) have joined the white power structure in terms of economic activity and culture; but the underlying reality is that poverty resides among Africans and Indians in the West Indies and that power is denied them. Black Power in the West Indies, therefore, refers primarily to people who are recognisably African or Indian.

The Chinese, on the other hand, are a former labouring group who have now become bastions of white West Indian social structure. The Chinese of the People's Republic of China have long broken with and are fighting against white imperialism, but our Chinese have nothing to do with that movement. They are to be identified with Chiang-Kai-Shek and not Chairman Mao Tse-tung. They are to be put in the same bracket as the lackeys of capitalism and imperialism who are to be found in Hong Kong and Taiwan. Whatever the circumstances in which the Chinese came to the West Indies, they soon became (as a group) members of the exploiting class. They will have either to relinquish or be deprived of that function before they can be re-integrated into a West Indian society where the black man walks in dignity.

The same applies to the mulattoes, another group about whom I have been questioned. The West Indian brown man is characterised by ambiguity and ambivalence. He has in the past identified with the black masses when it suited his interests, and at the present time some browns are in the forefront of the movement towards black consciousness; but the vast majority have fallen to the bribes of white imperialism, often outdoing the whites in their hatred and oppression of blacks. Garvey wrote of the Jamaican mulattoes—“I was openly hated and persecuted by some of these coloured men of the island who did not want to be classified as Negroes but as white.” Naturally, conscious West Indian blacks like Garvey have in turn expressed their dislike for the browns, but there is nothing in the West Indian experience which suggests that browns are unacceptable when they choose to identify with blacks. The post-1938 developments in fact showed exactly the opposite. It seems to me, therefore, that it is not for the Black Power movement to determine the position of the browns, reds and so-called West Indian whites—the movement can only keep the door open and leave it to those groups to make their choice.

Black Power is not racially intolerant. It is the hope of the black man that he should have power over his own destinies. This is not incompatible with a multiracial society where each individual counts equally. Because the moment that power is equitably distributed among several ethnic groups then the very relevance of making the distinction between groups will be lost. What we must object to is the current image of a multi-racial society living in harmony—that is a myth designed to justify the exploitation suffered by the blackest of our population, at the hands of the lighter-skinned groups. Let us look at the figures for the racial composition of the Jamaican population. Of every 100 Jamaicans,

76.8% are visibly African 0.8% European
1.1% Indian

“Black Power—Its Relevance to the West Indies”

- 0.6% Chinese
- 91% have African blood
- 0.1% Syrian
- 14.6% Afro-European
- 5.4% other mixtures

This is a black society where Africans preponderate. Apart from the mulatto mixture all other groups are numerically insignificant and yet the society seeks to give them equal weight and indeed more weight than the Africans. If we went to Britain we could easily find non-white groups in the above proportions—Africans and West Indians, Indians and Pakistanis, Turks, Arabs and other Easterners—but Britain is not called a multi-racial society. When we go to Britain we don't expect to take over all of the British real estate business, all their cinemas and most of their commerce as the European, Chinese and Syrian have done here. All we ask for there is some work and shelter, and we can't even get that. Black Power must proclaim that Jamaica is a black society—we should fly Garvey's Black Star banner and we will treat all other groups in the society on that understanding—they can have the basic right of all individuals but no privileges to exploit Africans as has been the pattern during slavery and ever since.

The present government knows that Jamaica is a black man's country. That is why Garvey has been made a national hero, for they are trying to deceive black people into thinking that the government is with them. The government of Jamaica recognises black power—it is afraid of the potential wrath of Jamaica's black and largely African population. It is that same fear which forced them to declare mourning when black men are murdered in Rhodesia, and when Martin Luther King was murdered in the U.S.A. But the black people don't need to be told that Garvey is a national hero—they know that. Nor do they need to be told to mourn when blacks are murdered by White Power, because they mourn every day right here in Jamaica where white power keeps them ignorant, unemployed, ill-clothed and ill-fed. They will stop mourning when things change—and that means a revolution, for the first essential is to break the chains which bind us to white imperialists, and that is a very revolutionary step. Cuba is the only country in the West Indies and in this hemisphere which has broken with white power. That is why Stokely Carmichael can visit Cuba but he can't visit Trinidad or Jamaica. That is why Stokely can call Fidel “one of the blackest men in the Americas” and that is why our leaders in contrast qualify as “white.”

Here I'm not just playing with words—I'm extending the definition of Black Power by indicating the nature of its opposite, “White Power,” and I'm providing a practical illustration of what Black Power means in one particular West Indian community where it had already occurred. White power is the power of whites over blacks without any participation of the blacks. White power rules the imperialist world as a whole. In Cuba the blacks and mulattoes numbered 1,585,073 out of a population of 5,829,029 in 1953—i.e., about one quarter of the population. Like Jamaica's black people today, they were the poorest and most depressed people on the island. Lighter-skinned Cubans held local power, while real power was in the hands of the U.S. imperialists. Black Cubans fought alongside white Cuban workers and peasants because they were all oppressed. Major Juan Almeida, one of the outstanding leaders of Cuba today, was one of the original guerillas in the Sierra Maestra, and he is black. Black Cubans today enjoy political, economic and social rights and opportunities of exactly the same kind as white Cubans. They too bear arms in the Cuban Militia as an expression of their basic rights. In other words, White Power in Cuba is ended. The majority of the white population naturally predominates numerically in most spheres of activity but they do not hold dominion over blacks without regard to the latter's interests. The blacks have achieved power commensurate with their own numbers by their heroic self-efforts during the days of slavery, in fighting against the Spanish and in fighting against imperialism. Having achieved their rights they can in fact afford to forget the category “black” and think simply as Cuban citizens, as Socialist equals and as men. In Jamaica, where blacks are far greater in numbers and have no whites alongside them as oppressed workers and peasants, it will be the black people who alone can bear the brunt of revolutionary fighting.

Trotsky once wrote that Revolution is the carnival of the masses. When we have that carnival in the West Indies, are people like us here at the university going to join the bacchanal?

Let us have a look at our present position. Most of us who have studied at the U.W.I. are discernibly black, and yet we are undeniably part of the white imperialist system. A few are actively pro-imperialist. They have no confidence in anything that is not white—they talk nonsense about black people being lazy—the same nonsense which was said about the Jamaican black man after emancipation, although he went to Panama and performed the giant task of building the Panama Canal—the same nonsense which is said about W.I. unemployed today, and yet they proceed to England to run the whole transport system. Most of us do not go to quite the same extremes in denigrating ourselves and our black brothers, but we say nothing against the system, and that means that we are acquiescing in the exploitation of our brethren. One of the ways that the situation has persisted especially in recent times is that it has given a few individuals like you and ... [me] ... a vision of personal progress measured in terms of front lawn and the latest model of a huge American car. This has recruited us into their ranks and deprived the black masses of articulate leadership. That is why at the outset I stressed that our choice was to remain as part of the white system or to break with it. There is no other alternative.

Black Power in the W.I. must aim at transforming the Black intelligentsia into the servants of the black masses. Black Power, within the university and without must aim at overcoming white cultural imperialism. Whites have dominated us both physically and mentally. This fact is brought out in virtually any serious sociological study of the region—the brainwashing process has been so stupendous that it has convinced so many black men of their inferiority. I will simply draw a few illustrations to remind you of this fact which blacks like us at Mona prefer to forget.

The adult black in our West Indian society is fully conditioned to thinking white, because that is the training we are given from childhood. The little black girl plays with a white doll, identifying with it as she combs its flaxen hair. Asked to sketch the figure of a man or woman, the black schoolboy instinctively produces a white man or a white woman. This is not surprising, since until recently the illustrations in our textbooks were all figures of Europeans. The few changes which have taken place have barely scratched the surface of the problem. West Indians of every colour still aspire to European standards of dress and beauty. The language which is used by black people in describing ourselves shows how we despise our African appearance. “Good hair” means European hair, “good nose” means a straight nose, “good complexion” means a light complexion. Everybody recognises how incongruous and ridiculous such terms are, but we continue to use them and to express our support of the assumption that white Europeans have the monopoly of beauty, and that black is the incarnation of ugliness. That is why Black Power advocates find it necessary to assert that BLACK IS BEAUTIFUL.

The most profound revelation of the sickness of our society on the question of race is our respect for all the white symbols of the Christian religion. God the Father is white, God the Son is white, and presumably God the Holy Ghost is white also. The disciples and saints are white, all the Cherubim, Seraphim and angels are white—except Lucifer, of course, who was black, being the embodiment of evil. When one calls upon black people to reject these things, this is not an attack on the teachings of Christ or the ideals of Christianity. What we have to ask is “Why should Christianity come to us all wrapped up in white?” The white race constitute about 20 per cent of the world’s population, and yet non-white peoples are supposed to accept that all who inhabit the heavens are white. There are 650 million Chinese, so why shouldn’t God and most of the angels be Chinese? The truth is that there is absolutely no reason why different racial groups should not provide themselves with their own religious symbols. A picture of Christ could be red, white or black, depending upon the people who are involved. When Africans adopt the European concept that purity and goodness must be painted white and all that is evil and damned is to be painted black then we are flagrantly self-insulting.

Through the manipulation of this media of education and communication, white people have produced black people who administer the system and perpetuate the white values—“white-hearted black men,” as they are called by conscious elements. This is as true of the Indians as it is true of the Africans in our West Indian society. Indeed, the basic explanation of the tragedy of African/Indian confrontation in Guyana and Trinidad is the fact that both groups are held captive by the European way of seeing things. When an African abuses an Indian he repeats all that the white men said about Indian indentured “coolies”; and in turn the Indian has borrowed from the whites the stereotype of the “lazy nigger” to apply to the African beside him. It is as though no black man can see another black man except by looking through a white person. It is time we started seeing through our own eyes. The road to Black Power here in the West Indies and everywhere else must begin with a revaluation of ourselves as blacks and with a redefinition of the world from our own standpoint.

LUSAKA MANIFESTO, 1969

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION The struggle went on for years. On March 21, 1960, in Sharpeville, in the Union of South Africa, police shot into a peaceful demonstration that was held against pass laws for Africans as a part of apartheid regulations. Sixty-nine men, women, and children were killed and about 200 were wounded. Four days later, 29 African and Asian representatives at the United Nations called for an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider this situation. By the summer, boycotts of South African goods were implemented in countries all over the world, and labor groups refused to service South African cargo ships. Nine years later, in April of 1969, the Fifth Summit Conference of East and Central African States in Lusaka adopted a Manifesto on Southern Africa, and the UN General Assembly—with resolution 2505—welcomed the Lusaka Manifesto on Southern Africa and called it to the attention of nations around the world. This determination of human equality would be one of only many steps in the fight to end apartheid.

1. When the purpose and the basis of State's international policies are misunderstood, there is introduced into the world a new and unnecessary disharmony. Disagreements, conflicts of interest, or different assessments of human priorities, which already provoke and excess of tension in the world, and disastrously divide mankind at a time when united action is necessary to control modern technology and put it to the service of man. it is for this reason, that discovering world misapprehension of our attitudes and purposes in relation to Southern Africa, we the leaders of East and Central African States meeting at Lusaka, 16th April. 1969, have agreed to issue this Manifesto.

2. By this Manifesto we wish to make clear, beyond all shadow of doubt, our acceptance of the belief that all men are equal, and have equal rights to human dignity and respect, regardless of colour, race, religion, or sex. We believe that all men have the right and the duty to participate, as equal members of the society, in their own government. We do not accept that any individual or group has any right to govern any other group of sane adults, without their consent, and we affirm that only the people of a society, acting together as equals, can determine what is, for them, a good society and a good social, economic, or political organization.

3. On the basis of these beliefs we do not accept that any one group within a society has the right to rule any society without the continuing consent of all the citizens. We recognize that at any one time there will be, within every society, failures in the implementation of these ideals. We recognize that for the sake of human affairs, there may be transitional arrangements while a transformation from group inequalities to individual equality is being effected. but we affirm that without an acceptance of these ideals-without a commitment to these principles of human equality and self-determination-there can be no basis for peace and justice in the world.

4. None of us would claim that within our own States we have achieved the perfect social, economic, and political organization which would ensure a reasonable standard of living for all our people and establish individual security against avoidable hardship or miscarriage of justice. On the contrary, we acknowledge that within our own States the struggle towards human brotherhood and unchallenged human dignity is only the beginning. It is on the basis of our commitment to human equality and human dignity, not on the bases of achieved perfection, that we take our stand of hostility towards the colonialism and racial discrimination which is being practised in Southern Africa. It is on the basis of their commitment to these universal principles that we appeal to other members of the human race for support.

5. If the commitment to these principles existed among the States holding power in Southern Africa, any disagreements we might have about the implementation, or about isolated acts of policy, would be matters affecting only our individual relationships with the States concerned. If these commitments existed, our States would not be justified in the expressed and active hostility towards the regimes of Southern Africa such as we have proclaimed and continue to propagate.

6. The truth is, however, that in Mozambique, Angola, Rhodesia, South-West Africa, and the Republic of South Africa, there is an open and continued denial of the principles of human equality and national self-determination. This is not a matter of failure in the implementation of accepted human principles. The effective Administrations in all these territories are not struggling towards these difficult goals. They are fighting the principles; they are deliberately organizing their societies so as to try to destroy the hold of these principles in the minds of men. It is for this reason that we believe the rest of the world must be interested. For the principle of human equality, and all that flows from it, is either universal or it does not exist. the dignity of all men is destroyed when the manhood of any human being is denied.

7. Our objectives in Southern Africa stem from our principle of human equality. We are not hostile to the Administrations of these States because they are manned and controlled by white people. We are hostile to them because they are systems of minority control which exists as a result of, and in the pursuance of, doctrines of human inequality. What we are working for is the right of self-determination for the people of those territories. We are working for a rule in those countries which is based on the will of all people, and an acceptance of the equality of every citizen.

8. Our stand towards Southern Africa thus involves a rejection of racialism, not a reversal of the existing racial domination. We believe that all the peoples who have made their homes in the countries of Southern Africa are Africans, regardless of the colour of their skins; and we would oppose a racist majority government which adopted a philosophy of deliberate and permanent discrimination between its citizens on the grounds of racial origin. we are not talking racialism when we reject the colonialism and apartheid policies now operating in those areas; we are demanding an opportunity for all of the people in these States, working together as equal individual citizens to work out for themselves the institutions and systems of government under which they will, by general consent, live together and work together to build a harmonious society.

9. As an aftermath of the present policies, it is likely that different groups within these societies will be self-conscious and fearful. The initial political and economic organizations may well take account of these fears, and this group self-consciousness. But how this is to be done must be a matter exclusively for the peoples of the country concerned, working together. No other nation will have the right to interfere in such affairs. All that the rest of the world has a right to demand is just what we are now asserting—that the arrangements within any State which wishes to be accepted into the community of nations must be based on acceptance of the principles of human dignity and equality.

10. To talk of the liberation of Africa is to say two things: First, that the peoples in the territories still under colonial rule shall be free to determine for themselves their own institutions of self-government. Secondly, that the individuals in Southern Africa shall be freed from an environment poisoned by the propaganda of racialism, and given an opportunity to be men—not white men, brown men, yellow men, or black men.

11. Thus the liberation of Africa for which we have been struggling does not mean a reversed racialism. Nor is it an aspect of African Imperialism. As far as we are concerned the present boundaries of what will be free and independent African States. There is no question of our seeking or accepting any alterations to our own boundaries at the expense of these future free African nations.

12. On the objective of liberation thus defined, we can neither surrender nor compromise. We have always preferred and we still prefer, to achieve it without physical violence. We would prefer to negotiate rather than destroy, to talk rather than to kill. We do not advocate violence; we advocate an end to the violence against human dignity which is now being perpetrated by the oppressors of Africa. If peaceful progress to emancipation were possible, or if changed circumstances were to make it possible in the future, we would urge our brothers in the resistance movements to use peaceful methods of struggle even at the cost of some compromise on the timing of change. But while peaceful progress is blocked by actions of those at present in power in the States of Southern Africa, we have no choice but to give to the peoples of those territories all the support of which we are capable in their struggle against their oppressors. This is why the signatory states participate in the movement for the liberation of Africa, under the aegis of the Organization of African Unity. However, the obstacle to change is not the same in all the countries of Southern Africa, and it follows therefore, that the possibility of continuing the struggle through peaceful means varies from one country to another.

13. In Mozambique and Angola, and in so-called Portuguese Guinea, the basic problem is not racialism but a pretence that Portugal exists in Africa. Portugal is situated in Europe; the fact is that it is a dictatorship is a matter for the Portuguese to settle. But no decree of the Portuguese dictator, nor legislation passed by any Parliament in Portugal, can make Africa part of Europe. The only thing which could convert a part of Africa into a constituent unit in a union which also includes a European State would be the freely expressed will of the people of that part of Africa. There is no such popular will in the Portuguese colonies. On the contrary, in the absence of any opportunity to negotiate a road to freedom, the peoples of all three territories have taken up arms against the colonial power. They have done this despite the heavy odds against them, and despite the great suffering they know to be involved.

14. Portugal, as a European State, has naturally its own allies in the context of ideological conflict between West and East. However, in our context, the effect of this is that Portugal is enabled to use her resources to pursue the most heinous war and degradation of man in Africa. The present Manifesto must, therefore, lay bare the fact that the inhuman commitment of Portugal in Africa and her ruthless subjugation of the people of Mozambique, Angola and the so-called Portuguese Guinea, is not only irrelevant to the ideological conflict of power-politics, but it is also diametrically opposed to the politics, the philosophies and the doctrines practised by her Allies in the conduct of their own affairs at home. The peoples of Mozambique, Angola, and Portuguese Guinea are not interested in Communism or Capitalism; they are interested in their freedom. They are demanding an acceptance of the principles of independence on the basis of majority rule, and for many years they called for discussions on this issue. Only when their demand for talks was continually ignored did they begin to fight. Even now, if Portugal should change her policy and accept the principle of self-determination, we would urge the Liberation Movements to desist from their armed struggle and to co-operate in the mechanics of a peaceful transfer of power from Portugal to the peoples of the African territories.

15. The fact that many Portuguese citizens have immigrated to these African countries does not affect this issue. Future immigration policy will be a matter for the independent Governments when these are established. In the meantime we would urge the Liberation Movements to reiterate their statements that all those Portuguese people who have made their homes in Mozambique, Angola, or Portuguese Guinea, and who are willing to give their future loyalty to those States will be accepted as citizens. And an independent Mozambique, Angola, or Portuguese Guinea may choose to be as friendly with Portugal as Brazil is. That would be the free choice of a free people.

16. In Rhodesia the situation is different in so far as the metropolitan power has acknowledged the colonial status of the territory. Unfortunately, however, it has failed to take adequate measures to reassert its authority against the minority which has seized power with the declared intention of maintaining white domination. The matter cannot rest there. Rhodesia, like the rest of Africa, must be free, and its independence must be on the basis of majority rule. If the colonial power is unwilling or unable to effect such a transfer of power to the people, then the people themselves will have no alternative but to capture it as and when they can. And Africa has no alternative but to support them. The question which remains in Rhodesia is therefore whether Britain will reassert her authority in Rhodesia and then negotiate the peaceful progress to majority rule before independence. In so far as Britain is willing to make this second commitment, Africa will co-operate in her attempts to reassert her authority. This is the method of progress which we would prefer; it would involve less suffering for all the people of Rhodesia, both black and white. But until there is some firm evidence that Britain accepts the principle of independence on the basis of majority rule and is prepared to take whatever steps are necessary to make it a reality, then Africa has no choice but to support the struggle for the people's freedom by whatever means are open.

17. Just as a settlement of the Rhodesian problem with a minimum of violence is a British responsibility, so a settlement in South West Africa with a minimum of violence is a United Nations responsibility. By every canon of international law, and by every precedent, South West Africa should by now have been a sovereign, independent State with a Government based on majority rule. South West Africa was a German colony until 1919, just as Tanganyika, Rwanda and Burundi, Togoland, and Cameroon were German colonies.

It was a matter of European politics that when the Mandatory System was established after Germany had been defeated, the administration of South West Africa was given to the white minority Government of South Africa, while the other ex-German colonies in Africa were put into the hands of the British, Belgian, or French Governments. After the Second World War every mandated territory except South West Africa was converted into a Trustee Territory and has subsequently gained independence. South Africa, on the other hand, has persistently refused to honour even the international obligation it accepted in 1919, and has increasingly in South West Africa the inhuman doctrines and organization of apartheid.

18. The United Nations General Assembly has ruled against this action and in 1966 terminated the Mandate under which South Africa had a legal basis for its occupation and domination of South West Africa. The General Assembly declared that the territory is now the direct responsibility of the United Nations and set up an ad hoc Committee to recommend practical means by which South West Africa would be administered, and the people enabled to exercise self-determination and to achieve independence.

19. Nothing could be clearer than this decision—which no permanent member of the Security Council voted against. Yet, since that time no effective measures have been taken to enforce it. South West Africa remains in the clutches of the most ruthless minority government in Africa. Its people continue to be oppressed and those who advocate even peaceful progress to independence continue to be persecuted. The world has an obligation to use its strength to enforce the decision which all the countries co-operated in making. If they do this there is hope that the change can be effected without great violence. If they fail, then sooner or later the people of South West Africa will take the law into their own hands. The people have been patient beyond belief, but one day their patience will be exhausted. Africa, at least, will be unable to deny their call for help.

20. The Republic of South Africa is itself an independent Sovereign State and a member of the United Nations. It is more highly developed and richer than any other nation in Africa. On every legal basis its internal affairs are a matter exclusively for the people of South Africa. Yet the purpose of the law is people and we assert that the actions of the South African Government are such that the rest of the world has a responsibility to take some action in defence of humanity.

21. There is one thing about South African oppression which distinguishes it from other oppressive regimes. The apartheid policy adopted by its Government, and supported to a greater or lesser extent by almost all its white citizens, is based on a rejection of man's humanity. A position of privilege or the experience of oppression in the South African society depends on the one thing which it is beyond the power of any man to change. It depends upon a man's colour, his parentage, and his ancestors. If you are black you cannot escape this categorization; nor can you escape it if you are white. If you are a black millionaire and a brilliant political scientist, you are still subject to the pass laws and still excluded from political activity. If you are white, even protests against the system and an attempt to reject segregation, will lead you only to the segregation and the comparative comfort of a white jail. beliefs, abilities, and behavior are all irrelevant to man's status; everything depends on race. Manhood is irrelevant. The whole system of government and society in South Africa is based on the denial of human equality. And the system is maintained by a ruthless denial of the human rights of the majority of the population and thus, inevitably of all.

22. These things are known and are regularly condemned in the Councils of the United Nations and elsewhere. But it appears that to many countries international law takes precedent over humanity; therefore no action follows the words. Yet even if international law is held to exclude active assistance to the South African opponents of apartheid, it does not demand that the comfort and support of human and commercial intercourse should be given to a government which rejects the manhood of most of humanity South Africa should be excluded from the United Nations Agencies, and even from the United Nations itself. It should be ostracized by the world community. It should be isolated from world trade patterns and left to be self-sufficient if it can be. The South African Government cannot be allowed both to reject the very concept of mankind's unity, and to benefit by the strength given through friendly international relations. And certainly Africa cannot acquiesce in the maintenance of the present policies against people of African descent.

23. The signatories of this Manifesto assert that the validity of the principles of human equality and dignity extend to the Republic of South Africa just as they extend to the colonial territories of Southern Africa. Before a basis for peaceful development can be established in this continent, these principles must be acknowledged by every nation, and in every State there must be a deliberate attempt to implement them.

24. We re-affirm our commitment to these principles of human equality and human dignity, and to the doctrines of self-determination and non-racialism. We shall work for their extension within our own nations and throughout the continent of Africa.

DECLARATION OF SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA BY THE U.S. CONGRESS

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION After years of battle in the U.S. Congress and decades of debate over whether or not the United States should issue sanctions against South Africa for their apartheid policy, in 1986 the fighting was over. African American leaders had been calling for sanctions since the late 1940s when the policies were put into place. The Council on African Affairs began as early as 1946 to organize famine relief campaigns, legal defense funds, sit-ins, and demonstrations at South African embassies, and even petitioned the United Nations. Until 1986 when the United States finally joined in the campaign to end apartheid through these sanctions and up until 1994 when democracy for all people was realized in free elections, many United States citizens petitioned, demonstrated, and pleaded that the government take a stand. African Americans continued to charge that the United States was reluctant because its own policies for so long legalized racism.

TITLE I — POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES WITH RESPECT TO ENDING APARTHEID

Policy Toward the Government of South Africa

Sec. 101. (a) United States policy toward the Government of South Africa shall be designed to bring about reforms in that system of government that will lead to the establishment of a nonracial democracy.

(b) The United States will work toward this goal by encouraging the Government of South Africa to —

(1) repeal the present state of emergency and respect the principle of equal justice under law for citizens of all races

(2) release Nelson Mandela, Govan Mbeki, Walter Sisulu black trade union leaders, and all political prisoners;

(3) permit the free exercise by South Africans of all races of the right to form political parties, express political opinions, and otherwise participate in the political process;

(4) establish a timetable for the elimination of apartheid laws

(5) negotiate with representatives of all racial groups in South Africa the future political system in South Africa, and

(6) end military and paramilitary activities aimed at neighboring states.

(c) The United States will encourage the actions set forth in subsection (b) through economic, political, and diplomatic measures as set forth in this Act. The United States will adjust its actions toward the Government of South Africa to reflect the progress or lack of progress made by the Government of South Africa in meeting the goal set forth in subsection (a).

Declaration of Sanctions against South Africa by the U.S. Congress

Policy Toward the African National Congress, etc.

Sec 102. (a) United States policy toward the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress, and their affiliates shall be designed to bring about a suspension of violence that will lead to the start of negotiations designed to bring about a nonracial and genuine democracy in South Africa.

(b) The United States shall work toward this goal by encouraging the African National Congress and the Pan African Congress, and their affiliates, to —

(1) suspend terrorist activities so that negotiations with the Government of South Africa and other groups representing black South Africans will be possible;

(2) make known their commitment to a free and democratic post-apartheid South Africa —

(3) agree to enter into negotiations with the South African Government and other groups representing black South Africans for the peaceful solution of the problems of South Africa —

(4) reexamine their ties to the South African Communist Party.

(c) The United States will encourage the actions set forth in subsection (b) through political and diplomatic measures. The United States will adjust its actions toward the Government of South Africa not only to reflect progress or lack of progress made by the Government of South Africa in meeting the goal set forth in subsection 101(a) but also to reflect progress or lack of progress made by the ANC and other organizations in meeting the goal set forth in subsection (a) of this section.

Policy Toward the Victims of Apartheid

Sec 103. (a) The United States policy toward the victims of apartheid is to use economic, political, diplomatic, and other effective means to achieve the removal of the root cause of their victimization, which is the apartheid system. In anticipation of the removal of the system of apartheid and as a further means of challenging that system, it is the policy of the United States to assist these victims of apartheid as individuals and through organizations to overcome the handicaps imposed on them by the system of apartheid and to help prepare them for their rightful roles as full participants in the political, social, economic, and intellectual life of their country in the post-apartheid South Africa envisioned by this Act.

(b) The United States will work toward the purposes of subsection (a) by —

(1) providing assistance to South African victims of apartheid without discrimination by race, color, sex, religious belief, or political orientation, to take advantage of educational opportunities in South Africa and in the United States to prepare for leadership positions in a post-apartheid South Africa;

(2) assisting victims of apartheid;

(3) aiding individuals or groups in South Africa whose goals are to aid victims of apartheid or foster nonviolent legal or political challenges to the apartheid laws;

(4) furnishing direct financial assistance to those whose nonviolent activities had led to their arrest or detention by the South African authorities and (B) to the families of those killed by terrorist acts such as “necklacings”;

(5) intervening at the highest political levels in South Africa to express the strong desire of the United States to see the development in South Africa of a nonracial democratic society;

(6) supporting the rights of the victims of apartheid through political, economic, or other sanctions in the event the Government of South Africa fails to make progress toward the removal of the apartheid laws and the establishment of such democracy; and

(7) supporting the rights of all Africans to be free of terrorist attacks by setting a time limit after which the United States will pursue diplomatic and political measures against those promoting terrorism and against those countries harboring such groups so as to achieve the objectives of this Act.

Policy Toward Other Countries in South Africa

Sec 104. (a) The United States policy toward the other countries in the Southern African region shall be designed to encourage democratic forms of government, full respect for human rights, an end to cross-border terrorism, political independence, and economic development.

(b) The United States will work toward the purposes of subsection (a) by —

(1) helping to secure the independence of Namibia and the establishment of Namibia as a nonracial democracy in accordance with appropriate United Nations Security Council resolutions;

(2) supporting the removal of all foreign military forces from the region;

(3) encouraging the nations of the region to settle differences through peaceful means;

(4) promoting economic development through bilateral and multilateral economic assistance targeted at increasing opportunities in the productive sectors of national economies, with a particular emphasis on increasing opportunities for nongovernmental economic activities;

(5) encouraging, and when necessary, strongly demanding, that all countries of the region respect the human rights of their citizens and noncitizens residing in the country, and especially the release of persons persecuted for their political beliefs or detained without trial;

(6) encouraging, and when necessary, strongly demanding that all countries of the region take effective action to end cross-border terrorism; and

(7) providing appropriate assistance, within the limitations of American responsibilities at home and in other regions, to assist regional economic cooperation and the development of interregional transportation and other capital facilities necessary for economic growth.

Policy Toward Frontline States

Sec 105. It is the sense of the Congress that the President should discuss with the governments of the African "frontline" states the effects on them of disruptions in transportation or other economic links through South Africa and of means of reducing those effects.

Sec. 106. (a)(1) United States policy will seek to promote negotiations among representatives of all citizens of South Africa to determine a future political system that would permit all citizens to be full participants in the governance of their country. The United States recognizes that important and legitimate political parties in South Africa include several organizations that have been banned and will work for the unbanning of such organizations in order to permit legitimate political viewpoints to be represented at such negotiations. The United States also recognizes that some of the organizations fighting apartheid have become infiltrated by Communists and that Communists serve on the governing boards of such organizations.

(2) To this end, it is the sense of the Congress that the President, the Secretary of State, or other appropriate high-level United States officials should meet with the leaders of opposition organizations of South Africa, particularly but not limited to those organizations representing the black majority. Furthermore, the President, in concert with the major allies of the United States and other interested parties, should seek to bring together opposition political leaders with leaders of the Government of South Africa for the purpose of negotiations to achieve a transition to the post-apartheid democracy envisioned in this Act.

(b) The United States will encourage the Government of South Africa and all participants to the negotiations to respect the right of all South Africans to form political parties, express political opinions, and otherwise participate in the political process without fear of retribution by either governmental or nongovernmental organizations. It is the sense of the Congress that a suspension of violence is an essential precondition for the holding of negotiations. The United States calls upon all parties to the conflict to agree to a suspension of violence.

(c) The United States will work toward the achievement of agreement to suspend violence and begin negotiations through coordinated actions with the major Western allies and with the governments of the countries in the region.

(d) It is the sense of the Congress that the achievement of an agreement for negotiations could be promoted if the United States and its major allies, such as Great Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, and West Germany, would hold a meeting to develop a fourpoint plan to discuss with the Government of South Africa a proposal for stages of multilateral assistance to South Africa in return for the Government of South Africa implementing —

(1) an end to the state of emergency and the release of the political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela;

(2) the unbanning of the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress, the Black Consciousness Movement, and all other groups willing to suspend terrorism and to participate in negotiations and a democratic process

(3) a revocation of the Group Areas Act and the Population Registration Act and the granting of universal citizenship to all South Africans, including homeland residents; and

(4) the use of the international offices of a third party as an intermediary to bring about negotiations with the object of the establishment of power-sharing with the black majority.

Policy Toward International Cooperation on Measures to End Apartheid

Sec. 107. (a) The Congress finds that —

(1) international cooperation is a prerequisite to an effective anti-apartheid policy and to the suspension of terrorism in South Africa; and

(2) the situation in South Africa constitutes an emergency in international relations and that action is necessary for the protection of the essential security interests of the United States.

(b) Accordingly, the Congress urges the President to seek such cooperation among all individuals, groups, and nations.

Policy Toward Necklacing

Sec. 108. It is the sense of the Congress that the African National Congress should strongly condemn and take effective actions against the execution by fire, commonly known as “necklacing”, of any person in any country.

Declaration of Sanctions against South Africa by the U.S. Congress

United States Ambassador to Meet with Nelson Mandela Sec. 109. It is the sense of the Senate that the United States Ambassador should promptly make a formal request to the South African Government for the United States Ambassador to meet with Nelson Mandela.

Policy Toward the Recruitment and Training of Black South Africans by United States Employers

Sec. 110. (a) The Congress finds that —

(1) the policy of apartheid is abhorrent and morally repugnant;

(2) the United States believes strongly in the principles of democracy and individual freedoms;

(3) the United States endorses the policy of political participation of all citizens;

(4) a free, open, and vital economy is a primary means for achieving social equality and economic advancement for all citizens; and

(5) the United States is committed to a policy of securing and enhancing human rights and individual dignity throughout the world.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that United States employers operating in South Africa are obliged both generally to actively oppose the policy and practices of apartheid and specifically to engage in recruitment and training of black and colored South Africans for management responsibilities.

TITLE III — MEASURES BY THE UNITED STATES TO UNDERMINE APARTHEID

Prohibition on the Importation of Krugerrands

Sec. 301. No person, including a bank, may import into the United States any South African krugerrand or any other gold coin minted in South Africa or offered for sale by the Government of South Africa.

Prohibition on the Importation of Military Articles

Sec. 302. No arms, ammunition, or military vehicles produced in South Africa or any manufacturing data for such articles may be imported into the United States. . . .

Prohibition on Computer Exports to South Africa

Sec. 304. (a) No computers, computer software, or goods or technology intended to manufacture or service computers may be exported to or for use by any of the following entities of the Government of South Africa:

(1) The military.

(2) The police.

(3) The prison system.

(4) The national security agencies.

(5) ARMSCOR and its subsidiaries or the weapons research activities of the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research.

(6) The administering authorities for controlling the movements of the victims of apartheid.

(7) Any apartheid enforcing agency.

(8) Any local, regional, or homelands government entity which performs any function of any entity described in paragraphs (1) through (7).

(b)(1) Computers, computer software, and goods or technology intended to service computers may be exported, directly or indirectly, to or for use by an entity of the Government of South Africa other than those set forth in subsection (a) only if a system of end use verification is in effect to ensure that the computers involved will not be used for any function of any entity set forth in subsection (a).

(2) The Secretary of Commerce may prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this section.

Prohibition on Loans to the Government of South Africa

Sec. 305. (a) No national of the United States may make or approve any loan or other extension of credit, directly or indirectly, to the Government of South Africa or to any corporation, partnership or other organization which is owned or controlled by the Government of South Africa. . . .

Prohibition on Air Transportation with South Africa

Sec. 306. (a) (1) The President shall immediately notify the Government of South Africa of his intention to suspend the rights of any air carrier designated by the Government of South Africa under the Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Union of South Africa Relating to Air Services Between Their Respective Territories, signed May 23, 1947, to service the routes provided in the Agreement.

(2) Ten days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall direct the Secretary of Transportation to revoke the right of any air carrier designated by the Government of South Africa under the Agreement to provide service pursuant to the Agreement.

(3) Ten days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President shall direct the Secretary of Transportation not to permit or otherwise designate any United States air carrier to provide service between the United States and South Africa pursuant to the Agreement. . . .

Prohibitions on Nuclear Trade with South Africa

Sec 307. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law —

(1) the Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall not issue any license for the export to South Africa of production or utilization facilities, any source or special nuclear material or sensitive nuclear technology, or any component parts, items, or substances which the Commission has determined, pursuant to section 109b. of the Atomic Energy Act, to be especially relevant from the standpoint of export control because of their significance for nuclear explosive purposes. . . .

Prohibition on Importation of Uranium and Coal from South Africa

Sec. 309. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no — (1) uranium ore, (2) uranium oxide (3) coal, or (4) textiles produced or manufactured in South Africa may be imported into the United States.

(b) This section shall take effect 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Prohibition on New Investment in South Africa

Sec. 310. (a) No national of the United States may, directly or through another person, make any new investment in South Africa.

(b) The prohibition contained in subsection (a) shall take effect 45 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) The prohibition contained in this section shall not apply to a firm owned by black South Africans.

Termination of Certain Provisions

Sec 311. (a) This title and sections 501(c) and 504(b) shall terminate if the Government of South Africa —

(1) releases all persons persecuted for their political beliefs or detained unduly without trial and Nelson Mandela from prison;

(2) repeals the state of emergency in effect on the date of enactment of this Act and releases all detainees held under such state of emergency;

(3) unbans democratic political parties and permits the free exercise by South Africans of all races of the right to form political parties, express political opinions, and otherwise participate in the political process;

(4) repeals the Group Areas Act and the Population Registration Act and institutes no other measures with the same purposes; and

(5) agrees to enter into good faith negotiations with truly representative members of the black majority without preconditions.

(b) The President may suspend or modify any of the measures required by this title or section 501(c) or section 504(b) thirty days after he determines, and so reports to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, that the Government of South Africa has —

(1) taken the action described in paragraph (1) of subsection (a),

(2) taken three of the four actions listed in paragraphs (2) through (5) of subsection (a), and

(3) made substantial progress toward dismantling the system of apartheid and establishing a nonracial democracy, unless the Congress enacts within such 30-day period, in accordance with section 602 of this Act, a joint resolution disapproving the determination of the President under this subsection.

(c) It is the policy of the United States to support the negotiations with the representatives of all communities as envisioned in this Act. If the South African Government agrees to enter into negotiations without preconditions, abandons unprovoked violence against its opponents, commits itself to a free and democratic post-apartheid South Africa under a code of law; and if nonetheless the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress, or their affiliates, or other organizations, refuse to participate; or if the African National Congress, the Pan African Congress or other organizations —

(1) refuse to abandon unprovoked violence during such negotiations; and

(2) refuse to commit themselves to a free and democratic postapartheid South Africa under a code of law, then the United States will support negotiations which do not include these organizations.

Policy Toward Violence or Terrorism

Sec. 312. (a) United States policy toward violence in South Africa shall be designed to bring about an immediate end to such violence and to promote negotiations concluding with a removal of the system of apartheid and the establishment of a non-racial democracy in South Africa.

(b) The United States shall work toward this goal by diplomatic and other measures designed to isolate those who promote terrorist attacks on unarmed civilians or those who provide assistance to individuals or groups promoting such activities.

“The State of Native America”

(c) The Congress declares that the abhorrent practice of “necklacing” and other equally inhumane acts which have been practices in South Africa by blacks against fellow blacks are an affront to all throughout the world who value the rights of individuals to live in an atmosphere free from fear of violent reprisals. . . .

Source: U.S. Statutes at Large 100 (1986): 1086.

“THE STATE OF NATIVE AMERICA”

SOURCE Means, Russell. From “The State of Native America,” in Native American Reader: Stories, Speeches and Poems. Edited by Jerry D. Blanche. The Denali Press, 1990. Copyright © 1990 by Jerry D. Blanche. Reproduced by permission of the publisher.

INTRODUCTION By the time Russell Means, an Oglala Sioux, delivered this address in 1988, he had made a name for himself. When he came to prominence in the late 1960s and early 1970s, he made his goal that of the “reinstitution of pride and self-dignity of the Indian in American.” He wanted more for his own tribal people, and all Native Americans, than the stereotypes perpetrated in America for centuries—that of the savage with no culture except that which could be given up for what was thought to be a superior white man’s culture. He joined the American Indian Movement, or AIM, founded by activist Clyde Bellecourt and others on the belief that if the federal government were allowed to continue to supervise Native American affairs it would mean the end of their people, and of their culture. For decades the Bureau for Indian Affairs, as the federal agency was known, had less than a sterling record in managing the lives of Native Americans on the reservations. Assimilation was the rule rather than cultural respect of the people who had settled in this country centuries before white men came to explore.

What I said is, “Hello, my relatives. I am an ally, and I come from Yellow Thunder Camp in our very sacred holy land, the Black Hills.”

Back in 1968–70, the state of the American Indian nations in the Americas of the Western Hemisphere was unchanged from 1492. That’s in 1968, 1969, and 1970. This is now 1988, and it still remains unchanged from 1492. In 1492 we were considered an “expendable peoples” by Columbus and the governments of Europe, including the Roman Catholic Church. It wasn’t until 1897, thirty-two years after the conclusion of the Civil War, that the Catholic Church declared us to be human beings. Until then, the Marine Corps of the Catholic Church, the Jesuits and the Franciscans, considered us to be “beasts of burden.” And now they’re going to canonize, make into a saint, Father Serra, a slaveowner, a murderer. That is the state of the American Indian nations. The pope is going to canonize an Indian murderer, an Indian slaveowner, Father Serra, who established these missionary outposts for the Marine Corps, I mean the Catholic Church, along the western coast of Mexico and California.

We are an “expendable people.” Go down to Brazil and you will see the government forcibly relocating and allowing miners and forestry employees to massively murder Indian people. Go to Paraguay where they still have bounties on the Aiche. Go to Chile, where Pinochet is officially starving the Mapuche to get their remaining lands. Go to Costa Rica, where Weyerhaeuser is removing Indian people so they can get at their forests. Go to Nicaragua, where the entire government effort has not only relocated but mass murdered, and it continues to this day, the Indian people. Both the left or the right excuse it and would rather deal with dope dealers. Go to Mexico. Go to Alaska. Go to Canada. Come right here to the United States of America, where this government right here today, at this very moment, is relocating and starving to death and completely destroying an Indian nation, the Navajo, in Arizona. Forced relocation, the same thing the Sandinistas are doing.

Welcome to the Americas. Welcome to the Americas, my home, where the dust that you kick up as you walk is made up of the bones of my ancestors. Welcome. For what you have appropriated and for what we have given to you, I will tell you.

Sixty percent of the world’s foodstuffs comes from us. Eighty percent of what the average American eats every day comes from us. Non-Indians are continually asking me, “What’s some traditional Indian food?” What did you eat today? Did you go to a salad bar? That’s all ours.”

We domesticated and developed, for instance, over ten thousand species of potatoes. So when the Europeans came over here, what did they take back? One species. So when the blight hit their potato crop, they had nothing to fall back on, and consequently, we got a lot of Kennedys coming over here. When the blight hit one of our potato crops, we had 9,999 to fall back on. And they call me primitive!

Sewage systems we gave to the Europeans. When Cortez and Pizarro and Coronado and all the rest of the conquistadors were over here destroying Indian people and our records, some of the people with them recognized that, hey, these Indians have sewage systems. Let’s take it back to Europe and clean up Berlin and Rome and London and Madrid and Brussels, Paris. And voilà! In less than a generation the amount of disease and the plague that was rampant in Europe dramatically was reduced to less than one percent than what it had been before. Because of the introduction of sewage systems that we gave to the world.

I could go on and on and on. The medicines the advent of pasteurization, named after Louis Pasteur. B.S.! In his own writings he credits the Indians!

Welcome to natural childbirth. The Lamace method. A Frenchman comes over here, studies the Indian way of giving birth, goes back to France, writes it up, and you call it the Lamaze method.

Welcome to the Americas. Welcome. The finest medicines in the world developed here. Developed here! Welcome to the Americas. From quinine to penicillin. Welcome. Codeine.

Welcome to the Americas. But instead of the Europeans, the Asians, the Africans, the Middle Easterners, the Far Easterners, instead of saying “thank you,” we are still an “expendable people.” Does anyone talk about majority rule in Ecuador or Bolivia or Peru or Panama or the Northwest Territories of Canada or Guatemala? No. You don’t hear about majority rule. Because those are Indians, campesinos peasants. Do you see at the family of nations a red person sitting around the table with the family of nations? We are the only color of the human race not allowed to participate in the international community. That’s an insult to your own humanity! Think about it! Look around! Your own humanity is being insulted! You live in this modern day and age when an entire people is not even considered to be a part of the international community.

Welcome to the Americas. The states of the American Indian peoples. You blithely continue on in life without an acknowledgement of Colorado or of any of the forty states whose names are derived from the origin of the Indian language. It’s amazing how people are not saying “thank you.”

[In] 1968 and 1969, 1970, Indians that protested back east were wearing Plains Indians outfits. American Indian people were attending conferences in ties, shined shoes and suits and bouffant hairdos, with pearl earrings on the women. They were afraid to wear beadwork, afraid to wear silver and turquoise. They were embarrassed to announce to the world that they are proud of who they are. I was fortunate to be in the vanguard of a cultural revolution that took place in the late 1960s and 1970s. That cultural revolution enabled our pride and self-dignity to once again become the criteria of what the American Indian nations are all about. It succeeded beyond our wildest plans and expectations, hopes or dreams.

When I sat in Minneapolis with Clyde Bellecourt and Dennis Banks in 1969 and we took the American Indian movement into a national and then international organization, I remember when we attended Indian conferences and they wouldn’t allow us to speak because we looked “ridiculous” in headbands and beadwork and moccasins and we had a drum with us. Our own people. When Dr. Alfonso Ortiz, a Pueblo Indian from New Mexico, who is a doctor of anthropology at the University of New Mexico, was up in his three-piece suit at the National Indian Education Association, of which I was on the board at the time, he was giving the keynote address at a banquet. The American Indian Movement. We came in. I was sitting up there on the dais with him, and the American Indian Movement came in with all their headbands and all their beadwork and their drum, and we stood, Indian people, at each exit, and wouldn’t allow these other Indians in their ties and gowns to leave because they tried to leave. We sang Indian at that conference, the National Indian Education Association, NIEA, which now is somehow wallowing in the left-brain, right-brain arguments. That was the state of the American Indian nations in 1970. The Indian people embarrassed about who they are.

It’s changed that cultural revolution. We had to challenge the United States government militarily, and we won again! Again! Because we were right and we’re still right.

But understand the state of the American Indian nations. Because we know. You see, at the advent of the opening up of half the world to the rest of the world, we allowed disease and overpopulation of Europe to dramatically decrease, as I said, in the matter of a generation. There were diseases that were rampant and incurable in Europe: the plague, everything. They instituted sewage systems and the population density went from thirty-five per square mile in 1492 down to seven in less than a century because of the opening of the Western Hemisphere and the cleaning up of the environment.

What happened? The disease was contained. The diseases were contained. But have you all learned? What’s the disease today that’s incurable? AIDS. The revolution comes around again, but this time there is no more Western Hemisphere, no more Indians. Because we already told those moon Indians, “Watch out, they’re coming.” There’s no other place to go.

The message is the same: clean up. You want to cure AIDS? Clean it up. You want to cure all the other diseases, the cancers, every one that pops up every day? Clean up. As Chief Seattle said, “Continue to contaminate your bed and one night you will suffocate in your own waste.”

The state of the American Indian nations, that cultural revolution I was talking about of the 1970s. Here’s the beauty of that experience: our traditional people gained respect. Our culture gained respect. And we're still struggling. We're now embarking on an economic revolution. The Red Nations of the Western Hemisphere.

But let me tell you something about the state of the American Indian nations. There is Indian activism in virtually every Indian community. Wherever there's more than one Indian, there's activism. That goes whether it's Seattle University, the Navajo, Nicaragua, Argentina, Chile, Alaska, Canada—everywhere we live. And it's infected the world. Because of our cultural revolution the onslaught and attack on indigenous peoples worldwide is now pervasive.

They're getting our own people to call themselves “Native American.” They're getting our own people to teach in universities like this about “we come from China.” Understand that we do not come from China. That is a racist, a very racist concept that began with Thomas Jefferson, and he only wrote about it in passing, because of our physical characteristics. In fact, the reverse is true. Geologists know it's impossible for us to have migrated from the Western Hemisphere west. Because during the Ice Ages, the ice corridors that were formed along the northwest coasts of the Western Hemisphere made it impossible to migrate from here to the west, or, as the Europeans call it, the Far East. I could never figure that one out. In fact, those same ice corridors made migration from here going west possible. Geologists know this.

Where are the anthropologists around here? Don't they ever visit with geologists? The archaeologists, the official grave robbers of intellectual institutions such as this? Any high school students that have aspirations towards robbing graves, I would suggest that it is one of the most disrespectful professions and dishonorable professions, if you want to call it that, in the world today. There are federal laws protecting grave robbers. What kind of ghouls are archaeologists?

I live at Canyon de Chelly, on the Navajo for aeons. Canyon de Chelly is part of a whole tourist route to go see where Indians used to live. Cliff-dwellers, they're called. The Anasazi people, they're called by “anthros” and “archies.” And these peoples, the Diné, the Hopi, all indigenous peoples of that area, the Zuni, the Pueblos, the Apache, those ruins that are in the sides of the cliffs. We never go there. We have respect for that. We have respect. But day in and day out tourists, non-Indian tourists are trampling all over those cliff dwellings. Every day of the year. They call them cliff-dwellers. They want to know what happened. But you know that archaeologists and anthropologists will not consult with Indian people because that would prejudice their findings. So they have come to the conclusions by robbing some of our graves, and this is the most recent, that we were cannibals because these bones were all broken up and in mass graves in a mass area.

Of course, these graves are about six or seven thousand years old. They didn't take into account any earthquakes or a coyote or two hanging around digging up the earth or moles or worms, etc. They didn't even go over to the Hopi and say, “Hey guys, how do you bury your people?” They came to the conclusion we're cannibals. I retorted that if I used the same criteria as anthropologists and archeologists of these learned institutions, I will go to a Christian gravesite, dig up a grave, find a body in a coffin, and say, “Aha! Aha! The white man is saving his dead for future famines! They have found a way to preserve food.” That's how ridiculous this grave-robbing has become in the alleged intellectual community. We have our own people believing this. In the same institutions not even protesting it!

I am sick and tired of the state of the American Indian. We had a beautiful cultural revolution, but you know what happens? The government and all institutions are making it even harder for us to know who we are. You see, in this country, the United States of America, the Indian people, we can be anything we want to be. Anything. We can even become archaeologists. But we can't be Indian. It's against the law in this country to be Indian. We can't pray. The last six decisions of the Supreme Court concerning our freedom of religion all denied it. The last Rehnquist decision totally obliterated our right to freedom of religion. In the name of “progress.”

We do not have the right to pray in the Black Hills. I know. We are still in court. I have argued. I'm the only non-lawyer ever to argue before a U.S. Court of Appeals. I argued on behalf of the Yellow Thunder Camp against the Black Hills National Forest for their refusal to allow us to pray in the Black Hills according to our ways. But we as Indian people are not allowed, and I'm going to give you a view of what American Indian people are doing to themselves, because we've become our own worst enemy.

Understand this about the U.S. government: they practice and perfect their colonialism on us, here, in the backyard of America, and then export it to the world. If you don't believe it, look at the West Bank, look at South Africa, look at Borneo, look at the Philippines, etc. Then look at yourselves, look in the mirror. What do we think? We cannot, we do not have self-determination. It's called “self-administration,” and that's my term. We get to administer someone else's policies.

Do you think Indian people are standing up? No. Do you know who they consider our leaders? The one's who suck off of Uncle Sam. Those are our alleged leaders, who are leaders by permission from the federal government. They're not my leader. Understand colonialism, where you're not allowed a choice of who your leaders are going to be. In fact, it insults your intelligence so much you refuse to participate in the society. Is that why only forty-five percent of Americans vote? Because they refuse opportunity, they refuse choices?

We still have a lot to give to the world. To be independent. We're not allowed to know who our heroes are. Our Indian children, every day, are bombarded with white and black heroes on TV and in school. And that's good, for the white children and the black children, and that didn't come without struggle. But our children, and you think our fancy, educated Indians are doing anything about making sure that their heroes are known to our own children? No. The only heroes they know, and that's because of us, AIM, are the ones from the last century.

What about our heroes from the first decade of this century? Or the second decades? Or the twenties? We had heroes, local and national heroes. And in the thirties, and the forties, and the fifties and the sixties and the seventies and the eighties. Our children don't know the names. In 1950 all the sports media in this country got together and they voted on who was the finest athlete in the first half century. You think they voted Jesse Owens? No! Jim Thorpe. They did it again in 1975.

Who was the finest athlete America produced in the first three-quarters of the twentieth century? Jim Thorpe won again, overwhelmingly so, both times. I go around the Indian nation. I ask Indian teenagers and I ask Indian little kids. Just last week, I asked my daughter, who's in the third grade, "Who's Jim Thorpe?" "I don't know." And yet, one of the high schools on my reservation is called the Thorpes. Nobody on my reservation knows who Jim Thorpe is. None of the children.

I said, "Who's Billy Mills?" He won the 10,000 meters at Tokyo. He's from my reservation. None of the kids know who Billy Mills is. That was just in 1964, for crying out loud.

I say, "Who's the first Indian ever to run for president of the United States?" First I ask, "Who was the first Indian to become vice president of the United States of America?" Charles Curtis. [Curtis served with Herbert Hoover from 1929 until 1933.] Everybody knows that, right? My own kids, other Indian kids don't know that.

I said, "Who's the first Indian ever to run for president of the United States?" I asked my daughter. She didn't know. I said, "It's your dad." [During the 1980s, Means ran for president on two different occasions, once as the Libertarian candidate.]

But you see? I tell my own people: "Quit your complaining. You want to complain to somebody? Look in the mirror. And be a little bit independent."

But Indians and non-Indians: You're penalized today for being independent. If you're not part of the masses, you're penalized. Think about it. In every aspect of your life. Just look at the tax structure if you don't believe.

The state of the American Indian nations. I'm sick and tired of our own people. There's an entire people now in North Carolina who have Indian blood in their veins and want to be federally recognized. To me that's the abomination of what Indian people are. They actually believe that if you're federally recognized by the United States government, that somehow is a positive development. To me it is the most negative.

The Mikasukis, the Seminoles, the ones who defeated the United States of America not once, but twice, the ones that had every Indian killed by the United States of America in that Seminole war, who have never been defeated by the United States government, cost the United States government then a million dollars. This is back in the early 1800s, when a million dollars was a million dollars. Now a million dollars in those terms is about 120 million, OK?

Imagine, in a war where for every death you cause it cost you 120 million dollars. Those Seminoles, the Mikasukis, who still live in the Everglades, back in the 1960s, when Buffalo Tiger was looking for federal recognition and got it, half of his nation refused to be enrolled in the federal government, refused to go along with him. They said, "No, that would legitimize the United States government. The United States government isn't legal."

These primitives, who refuse to be enrolled with their national ID number, refuse to recognize the United States of America, that is who our Indian leaders are. Not somebody funded by the federal government, funded by you all. You're the taxpayers. Funded by you. That's not my leader.

One thing about Indian people, and I just want to give you a small glimpse of who we are. Indian people are not tourists. We have homes that we never leave, and those that do are no longer Indian because they have no more connection.

Understand what that connection is. It's that dust I talked about earlier, that dust that comes from our Mother Earth. And only out of respect can you regain that. The Indian people are fooling themselves, not only in their culture, they've dropped their culture so they can call it a "powwow circuit," and they can dress any way they want to be, to the point where they fight their own people and are dependent on the federal government.

I come from the poorest county in the United States of America, the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. The poorest county. I moved away from there last year to the home of my wife, a Navajo, Diné. Because that culturally is the way we do things. The man always moves to where the woman is from.

In fact, because we are a matrilineal society, if we had the disrespect enough to take another's last name, it would be the woman's last name, not the man's. Because the male lives a shorter life than the female. So it's a natural sense that the man would go where the woman is from so that because the man, when we leave this earth, then our wife and children are around their relatives and friends. So they'll always be in friendly society, never be alone.

But we have a home. We don't have to look for zen. We don't have to look for Franciscans, you know. We have a way of life. We do not have a religion, we have a way of life. Our way of life is made up of one word: it's called “respect.” But it means a lot more. Respect for our relatives' visions. When you understand that everything lives and that everything is sacred and the further you get away from what is natural the less important life becomes.

When you get yourselves locked into the asphalt jungles and there is no life, then even the human being's life is no longer important. My son, who is three years old, we live out on the Diné land in the desert, and I take him to the anthills and I show him and we sit there and we watch the ant people and I tell him about the ant people: “Have respect. Don't walk on their homes.” He says, “Well, Reba does it.” Reba's our horse. I say, “Reba's part of the earth. We know better.”

If you have respect for the ant people then you'll have respect for people in Hiroshima. If you have respect for the ant people then you will have respect for people in Nicaragua or South Africa or anywhere else in the world.

The state of the Indian nation. Do you know the names of these mountains that are so beautiful right here, that you're so proud of you even put them on your license plates? When I moved down to Navajo, my wife didn't take me around. Just every time we traveled around she'd tell me the name of that mountain and that mountain and its history and whose land this is and what family has lived on that land and why.

This is the state of the Indian nations, but we're losing that because our educated Indians who have bought the white man's way will not allow our children to know our own heroes, our contemporary heroes, and what is beautiful and natural and respectful.

The state of the Indian nations. It's important that you know that you cannot break a branch when you're a child because you're breaking the arm of a living being. It's important to understand and be thankful for rain and not curse it because you have to walk in it. And to love the winter, not because you can ski on it, but because it makes you strong as a person, as an individual.

If you know who you are I know who we are because I know the sacred colors. I know that pink stands for medicine. So I ask why? So my elders tell me. You go into the medicinal plants, all that plants that are good for you, inside the bud, not available to the naked eye. It's pink. Poisonous plants do not have that pink. Remember that when you're out there. We don't want to go there. But you tell those Russell people that if they ever come to the United States and have a meeting, maybe we will attend.”

Understand the beauty of that. Talk about individual sovereignty, independence. That was the ultimate statement. Here were all these educated Indians in the United States, Canada and the rest of the hemisphere, all the ones with their degrees, all the ones that like this kind of thing, we're hopping, including myself. I wasn't going, but I was all excited about it.

That really sat me down to look at what we are. All of that materialism, all of that ego tripping, didn't mean a thing to these old people. All of these fancy titles after all of these fancy people that were putting on this tribunal. If they ever decide, they'll never have a tribunal over here.

“If those Russell people ever have a meeting over here, then maybe we'll come.” I think that is the ultimate statement of sovereignty, individual sovereignty.

The state of the American Indian nations is an exciting state. I see that what goes around comes around. I understand that, because everything that is holy and sacred and good is round. Understand that also. That's part of the male-female balance. The sun is round, the moon is round. Walk up on a hill and you'll see that our sacred grandmother, the Mother Earth, is round. Everything sacred is round. So what goes around comes around.

Our people accomplished a socioeconomic phenomenon in the 1970s, in one decade, in less than fifteen years, not only in the United States of America but in Canada and the rest of the Western Hemisphere.

It's an exciting time to live, and we're fighting, but I'm sick and tired of the educated Indian, because to me they're not educated. They've educated their wisdom out. It's good. I have confidence in people who have education. I have one; my children are getting theirs. I advocate Indians to go on to institutions of higher learning. I hold seminars on it to those that will listen. Drug abuse and alcohol abuse.

But understand that I know what oppression is. I know what sacrifice is. Understand that peoples who come from the barrio, the reservation, the ghetto, we know oppression. So we know how to struggle. We know what sacrifice is. Ask any mother. It’s really that simple. Any mother.

So it’s an exciting time. And I see it’s time now to go to my own people, slap them in the face and hear them say, “Thank you. I needed that.”

Because we did it once before, as I told you, at that convention at the NIEA. Understand that we’re not through yet.

The sanctity of life is too precious to allow this society to continue to be disrespectful. I have grandchildren, nine grandchildren, and I fought so that my sons and my daughters would have a better way. And I’m not going to allow my sons and daughters to be satisfied so that their sons and daughters get back in the same old rut.

I’m not going to allow these pseudo-Indians who call themselves leaders, who the white man calls leaders. They’re an insult to you and to me and to your government to allow these tribal governments to continue.

Understand that you are the next tribal peoples. You’re going to be the new Indians of the twenty-first century. You’re already feeling the squeeze. Understand. I know the beauty of the male-female balance. I know my creation story, and those that continue to suck off of Uncle Sam are my enemy and the enemy of everyone. It’s not just limited to Indians. Maybe to all Native Americans, huh? The state of the Native American.

So I’ll leave you with the words of Chief Seattle, and I quote part of his letter and speech to the then-president of the United States of America. He said, “Wave follows wave, and tribe follows tribe. It’s the order of nature, and regret is useless. Your time of decay may be distant, but it will surely come. For even the white man’s god who walked and talked with him as friend with friend could not escape our common destiny. We may be brothers after all. We shall see.”

Thank you.

“GROWING UP IN MISSISSIPPI”

SOURCE Sue, Sam. From “Growing Up in Mississippi,” in Asian American Experiences in the United States. Edited by Joann Faung Jean Lee. McFarland &

Company, Inc., 1991. Copyright © 1991 Joann Faung Jean Lee. All rights reserved. Reproduced by permission of McFarland & Company, Inc., Box 611, Jefferson NC 28640. www.mcfarlandpub.com.

INTRODUCTION The population of small southern towns was—and into the early years of the twenty-first century, continued to be—divided mostly between two races: African Americans and whites. What would it be like if you were of another race, considered a community member only marginally? What if the only other Asian people to date in high school were your cousins? In this essay, Chinese American Sam Sue describes his experiences in such a town in Mississippi. His family’s grocery store primarily served the African American community, as did the other Chinese businesses in town. That often created friction among the Asian community and the African American community since business owners were thought to cheat their poor customers. The fact that physical features betrayed race in such a way to make someone undesirable was not made any better when even one’s own heritage was lost by such a vast distance from the larger communities. In this case, other Chinese or Asian Americans present in the urban areas of other states were not present there in that small Mississippi. What does it mean when the first time the author even ate in a Chinese restaurant was in the far away city of Cleveland, Ohio?

“There is this shot in the opening scene of the movie, Mississippi Burning, where you see two water fountains. One is broken, and chipped, and water is dripping from it. The other is modern, and shining. A white guy goes up to the nice one, and the black kid goes up to the old one. I remember saying to myself, ‘If I was in the scene, where would I drink?’

“As a kid, I remember going to the theatre and not really knowing where I was supposed to sit. Blacks were segregated then. Colored people had to sit upstairs, and white people sat downstairs. I didn’t know where I was supposed to sit, so I sat in the white section, and nobody said anything. So I always had to confront those problems growing up. So these experiences were very painful.

“I guess I was always considered marginal with whites and blacks, though I think I got along better with blacks. I really didn’t have any childhood friends. I just felt I had nothing in common with them. And I guess I felt there was this invisible barrier. I stayed mostly with my family—I have two older brothers and one older sister.

“I lived in a town called Clarksdale. At the time, there were twenty-five thousand to thirty thousand people there. In the sixties at the height, there were maybe forty to fifty Chinese families in town. Quite a number.

“Growing Up in Mississippi”

They used to have Chinese parties, and gatherings, and the funny thing about it was they all sort of came from the same village, or district.

“Chinese church was more of a social, rather than a religious event. I always hated the gatherings. I was basically ashamed of being Chinese. I think that’s probably true for a lot of Chinese Americans—on the East and West Coasts. Whether they will acknowledge it is something else. But I think there is a lot of self-hatred, induced by society, culture, and circumstance. So I hated to go to these Chinese parties. Besides, it’s not like you could date any Chinese girls, because they were all your cousins.

“I was lucky, in that the school I went to was mostly white, because our store was near the center of town, and the school was across the way. But most of the Chinese families lived in black areas so they went to black schools, and the kids got harassed a lot by the blacks. There was a lot of resentment against the Chinese by the blacks, because some of the Chinese families would rip off blacks, because it was part of giving store credit to the black farmers—they got surcharged excessively. Or they might be charged for things they didn’t purchase.

“I didn’t date at all—not in high school. It was totally unheard of. I remember very painful experiences of asking white girls to see if they were interested or anything, and them mumbling some excuse about being busy that night. But you knew what was going on. My cousin, for instance, had to take his cousin to the senior prom. I didn’t think that kind of thing would be a good thing for me, so I didn’t go to my senior prom. My reaction at the time to the dating scene was total alienation. I never considered dating a black girl. I don’t know if it was racism, but I just felt there was no commonality. Because even though one wasn’t accepted as a white at the time, dating a white was seen as going up—that was the thinking then. And I think Chinese women had it harder. I think it was okay for a Chinese man to date a non-Chinese, but not for a Chinese woman to go out with anything but a Chinese. Part of that was that Asian women are presumed to be exotic and submissive, and that’s a common theme that runs through the stereotype images.

“Northerners see a Southern accent as a signal that you’re a racist, you’re stupid, or you’re a hick. Regardless of what your real situation is. So I reacted to that by adapting the way I speak. If you talked to my brother, you would definitely know he was from the South. But as for myself, I remember customers telling my dad, “Your son sounds like a Yankee.” I think I had a Southern drawl, but it wasn’t pronounced. I also mimicked Northern accents because I was so alienated. Maybe I had this deep alienation, even as a kid. I used to read the Times. I’d see this stuff on the television. I grew up on the “Bowery Boys.” The television and the radio were my links to civilization. I’d be waiting for eight P.M. to roll around, so that I could reach radio waves from Chicago or even New York. It was like Radio Free Europe for me.”

Family: “My role model when I was growing up was my older brother because he was going to college when I was in elementary school. He was bilingual, so he was sort of the link for me between the old and the new country.

“My brother went to Ole Miss (University of Mississippi), and at one point, he was the first Chinese on campus invited to join an all-white fraternity. He was also in the ROTC. Actually it wasn’t many years after that that they took away my father’s and my oldest brother’s citizenship. It was ironic—here he was teaching American government. He was about as American as you can get, and it sort of opened his eyes. Being denaturalized meant he was deportable, so he and my dad had to get waivers, and reapply for citizenship—doing the test again. So they had to be naturalized twice.

“There was a confession period for those who came into the country illegally. Many Chinese confessed, and things were okay. But what bugs me is my dad confessed, and he was nailed to the wall. He came into the U.S. illegally in the 1930s. Later on, he brought my mother and my oldest brother from China. The government took away his citizenship by virtue of him coming here on false papers. He was denaturalized in 1965. That meant what the government gave, it could take away. I mean, Sue is not my real family name. I think it is Jiu.”

The Family Store: “Dad said he went to Mississippi because that’s where a good number of Chinese from his village had moved to. We, like other Chinese in Mississippi, ran a ‘mom and Pop’ grocery store. Anything from shotgun shells to fresh meats to corn chop and hog shorts. (Corn chop is feed for chicken, and hog shorts are grain for hogs.)

“My father would open his store about nine thirty in the morning, and close it about ten at night. We would eat after the store closed. We all ran the store, seven days a week. Only on Christmas would he close for half a day. He wouldn’t even close the store when my brother got married. I had to run the store. I didn’t want to go to Florida for my brother’s wedding and let Dad stay home. So I let him go.

“It was a very rural area, and a number of Chinese had done well doing this. I guess economically they fit in to the area because their clientele were mostly black, rural farmers. I guess the black rural farmers couldn’t get credit from white storekeepers. I guess that they presumed Chinese store keepers filled a need—providing credit to black farmers who couldn’t otherwise get it. I remember for years on end, my father keeping records of people who owed him money. And that’s what a lot of other Chinese did too. They filled that function.

“Our store was a social place, people would hang out on Friday, payday. So black customers would be hanging out, drinking beer, and eating sandwiches. It would be packed, with blacks and red necks. It was a place for them to meet.

“My dad didn’t have much time to spend with me, so most of the time I would talk to the customers. We would kid around. I’d ask them, ‘How’d your skin go so black? And they would tell you stories to kid you. ‘Oh, I rolled down this river bank and got all this mud on me, and couldn’t get it off.’ And I used to believe that stuff, and I thought blacks were really different. A lot of the blacks in our store chewed tobacco, so you’d think their spit was browner than white people’s. But on a real gut level, you knew that people were treated different. And it’s sort of weird on my parents’ level, because on one hand they would make friends with a lot of black people, then on another, they would say racist things about them.

“Back then, the amount of poverty blacks suffered was profound. It doesn’t come close to the experience of blacks in urban centers today. You’re talking about people who didn’t have running water, or who only got it recently. My father used to sell kerosene because people used it to light their lamps. I remember people using Clorox bleach to purify the water. It had chlorine in it, so they would let it sit in the water and kill the germs. Blacks were at the very low end of the scale, and the Chinese were sort of in between. We didn’t really fit in. Very rich, aristocratic whites, were at the top end. Chinese really didn’t have a place in society. Economically they were better than the blacks, but on a social scale, they didn’t amount to very much. I think blacks saw us as Jews. We were in the same position as Jews were in the town. We all sort of played marginal, economic roles. There were quite a few Jews in town. They weren’t accepted by blacks or whites either. I don’t think whites knew what to make of us.

“Buying a store in California or some other urban center was expensive, whereas buying a store in Mississippi was cheap, so that’s why a lot of Chinese families moved there. But you have to remember that there were still racial restrictions. A lot of the Chinese couldn’t buy property, or had difficulty buying it. By the time my father paid off the mortgage, the owner said, ‘I am not going to convey the title to you.’ My understanding was that we had to threaten to sue him to get it.”

Housing: “We had to live in the back of our store. It was tenement-like conditions, though we didn’t know it at the time. I didn’t know how poor we were until I left. Everyone slept in one big room. There was a kitchen in the back. We used to use the place to store goods too, so there would be boxes all around. If you went into the living room, you’d be sitting on a box of laundry detergent. We lived that way until 1970. It was only then that we could consider buying a house. We thought of buying a house in 1966, but it didn’t work out. It was a white neighborhood, and the day before closing, we received a telephone call. Someone said, ‘If you buy that house, we will burn it.’ And we knew it was one of the neighbors calling. One of the Chinese families knew who had called—it was a Pepsi Cola distributor. Many of the Chinese families were so upset about what had happened that they boycotted Pepsi Cola for a long while. We didn’t buy the house. The attitude was, if we’re not wanted there, we just won’t move there. Getting a house in a white neighborhood—it wasn’t only impossible—there was no choice. You could either buy a house somewhere, if you could find an owner that would sell it to you, or you could buy property on the outskirts of town and build a house—which is what many Chinese families ended up doing. This way, there were no problems from neighbors because there weren’t any neighbors.

“Eventually, my family decided to buy a plot of land and build our home on the outskirts of town near some other Chinese families. We had to get a white man to buy the property and convey the title to us because certain property owners would not sell to Chinese families—and this was as recent as 1970.”

Parents: “My father came to the United States in the 1930s from the Hoi Ping district of Canton. Like many Chinese of his generation, he went to California first. He didn’t bring my mother. She came later. He worked in a restaurant with several other relatives around the San Francisco area. He said he borrowed money to come over, and the people working in the restaurant, including himself, were working to try to pay off his debt. They also wanted to save enough to go back to Hong Kong or China to get their wives. Eventually he did go back to China for my mother and my oldest brother.

“My dad was sixteen when he came to this country. He learned his English from customers, which would be blacks, or white rednecks. He did not finish school. He just finished the third or fourth grade in China. A friend of mine did a documentary on the Chinese in Mississippi, and she stayed with my dad in his home. She interviewed him, but never used the interview. She said his English was so strange that she would have had to use subtitles with it. He is a Chinese man who can speak English very poorly and does so with a black southern English dialect. It’s quite difficult to understand. I can understand him, but it is difficult to communicate with him. And the gap gets even further when you want to get beyond the really simple language. Mom was less able to speak English than the others. One common thread that runs through many Asian lives is that parents spend so much time working for the future of their children, that they don't devote enough time to emotional needs. Either the parents are working and can't be there, or if they are at home, they are so tired they can't devote themselves to the children.

“Growing Up in Mississippi”

“The thing with Chinese parents is they make you feel like you owe them for the rest of your life—even when they're in the grave. My mother died when I graduated from college in 1977. My father made me feel terrible because he wanted me to work in the store even after I graduated. They had this idea that they were going to pass the store on to me, as stupid as it was. And they knew it was stupid. By the 1970s, the Chinese stores were declining due to mechanization. People used to be cotton pickers and we would sell these leather things for their knees so that when they crouched down they wouldn't have sore knee-caps. But with the advent of such things as cotton-picking machines and large supermarkets, it spelled doom for the Chinese store keepers. Also, kids my age didn't want to stay. Many chose to move to some urban area, such as Atlanta.

“My parents retired in 1978. But two months before the store officially closed, my mom died. It was a double shock for my dad. He not only lost his wife, but also his way of life. He had opened the store at nine AM and closed at ten PM, seven days a week. He did this for thirty years. He never went on trips. He just worked at the store. He felt there was nothing else.

“My dad is still in Mississippi. It's his life. He's been there since the Depression. It is all he knows. We actually tried to move him, but he is so attached to the area—not that he has affection for it, only that he's used to it—he feels it is home. There are still some Chinese there, though most have died, or moved away.”

A Monolingual Chinese American: “I didn't learn how to use chopsticks until I left Mississippi. We never used chopsticks at home. I didn't even have any idea of what a Chinese restaurant was until I went to college. My first encounter with a Chinese restaurant was in Cleveland, Ohio. There just weren't any near where I was growing up.

“I can't speak the language, and you feel intimidated by it when you go into restaurants. Like you keep ordering the same dishes because those are the only dishes you can order. You feel that since you are Chinese, you should be able to speak to other people that look like you. Sometimes they have mistaken me for a juk-kok [foreign-born Chinese] and started talking to me; I can't understand a word.

“I don't feel Chinese, and I'm not. I identify myself as Asian American. I feel Chinese to some extent, but not necessarily to the extent of knowing much about Chinese culture or tradition. When I was in college, I met these Asian studies majors, and there was a certain amount of resentment in that they could speak the language and know the culture but they didn't know what it was like to be Chinese in a white society. They may have had a superficial understanding of the culture and language, but at the time I sort of felt they were expropriating our culture, and I felt very possessive about Asian women. It's like when I walk outside, I know I will be treated differently. It's not something I like saying. It's not even a political statement. It's just seeing reality. I'm not looking for, or am I supersensitive to, being treated as a Chinese person, or a nonwhite person, but it's there. It's even here in New York.

“One senses it in my profession as an attorney. You're arguing a case before a judge. And the other guy is white, and he's been around. The moment he walks in the office, it's like he says to the judge or the clerk, ‘How's so and so?’ But when I come in, it's like this stranger walks in—you don't belong here. But when he walks in, it's like family. I feel like I just walked into the wrong club—a place I don't belong.

“I never worked for a large firm. I never had the inclination to do that. It wasn't only a political choice, I really had nothing to talk to them about. There is this sort of Waspish mentality in the profession. I now work in a small Asian law firm. All the jobs I've had since college have been associated with Asian stuff.

“I don't have a burning desire to learn Chinese at this point, though it would be helpful in my work and in certain aspects of my life.

“If I went to China, I would be an American, and that is what I am in that context. So many of my views, as much as I may want to deny it, are American. If I were in a foreign country, I would be homesick. In terms of adopting American culture and values I'm an American. But in terms of feeling there is a difference, then I'm still Asian or Chinese. I feel different. Ask me what I feel different about, and I can't really say. It's not only that people may or may not treat you differently. It's that I am different.

“I left Mississippi in 1973. There was no future for me there. I was so alienated that even if I thought there was something concrete to be done there, I have such bad feelings for the place I wouldn't go back. Being Chinese in Mississippi was definitely a handicap.

NELSON MANDELA'S ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF CAPE TOWN, GRAND PARADE, ON THE OCCASION OF HIS INAUGURATION AS STATE PRESIDENT

SOURCE Public Domain.

INTRODUCTION By 1990 when he was released from his last 26 years in prison, Nelson Mandela had spent most of his adult life fighting against the injustice of apartheid. Born the son of a Tembu Tribe Chief, he was well-educated, having qualified for the practice of law in 1942. He joined the African National Congress (ANC) in 1944. Once the National Party established its sweeping apartheid policies Mandela began resisting them and the government. From 1956 until 1961, when he was finally acquitted, he was on trial for treason. When the ANC was banned in 1960, he presented the case for establishing a military wing within the body. For his actions, Mandela was arrested with other leaders of his resistance and brought to trial in 1963 for plotting to overthrow the government. On June 12, 1964, he was sentenced to life imprisonment along with eight of the other accused. Until 1982, he was housed at Robben Island Prison, off Cape Town; then he was moved to Pollsmoor Prison, on the mainland. Ironically, he became more famous and more respected in prison and gained strength from many supporters throughout the world. When he was released from prison in 1990, he began to work even harder to accomplish his long-held goals. In 1993 he was given the Nobel Peace Prize. And in 1994 he was standing before the world as he was inaugurated as state president.

Cape Town, 9 May 1994

Mr Master of Ceremonies,

Your Excellencies,

Members of the Diplomatic Corps,

My Fellow South Africans:

Today we are entering a new era for our country and its people. Today we celebrate not the victory of a party, but a victory for all the people of South Africa.

Our country has arrived at a decision. Among all the parties that contested the elections, the overwhelming majority of South Africans have mandated the African National Congress to lead our country into the future. The South Africa we have struggled for, in which all our people, be they African, Coloured, Indian or White, regard themselves as citizens of one nation is at hand.

Perhaps it was history that ordained that it be here, at the Cape of Good Hope that we should lay the foundation stone of our new nation. For it was here at this Cape, over three centuries ago, that there began the fateful convergence of the peoples of Africa, Europe and Asia on these shores.

It was to this peninsula that the patriots, among them many princes and scholars, of Indonesia were dragged in chains. It was on the sandy plains of this peninsula that first battles of the epic wars of resistance were fought.

When we look out across Table Bay, the horizon is dominated by Robben Island, whose infamy as a dungeon built to stifle the spirit of freedom is as old as colonialism in South Africa. For three centuries that island was seen as a place to which outcasts can be banished. The names of those who were incarcerated on Robben Island is a roll call of resistance fighters and democrats spanning over three centuries. If indeed this is a Cape of Good Hope, that hope owes much to the spirit of that legion of fighters and others of their calibre.

We have fought for a democratic constitution since the 1880s. Ours has been a quest for a constitution freely adopted by the people of South Africa, reflecting their wishes and their aspirations. The struggle for democracy has never been a matter pursued by one race, class, religious community or gender among South Africans. In honouring those who fought to see this day arrive, we honour the best sons and daughters of all our people. We can count amongst them Africans, Coloureds, Whites, Indians, Muslims, Christians, Hindus, Jews — all of them united by a common vision of a better life for the people of this country.

It was that vision that inspired us in 1923 when we adopted the first ever Bill of Rights in this country. That same vision spurred us to put forward the African Claims in 1946. It is also the founding principle of the Freedom Charter we adopted as policy in 1955, which in its very first lines, places before South Africa an inclusive basis for citizenship.

In 1980s the African National Congress was still setting the pace, being the first major political formation in South Africa to commit itself firmly to a Bill of Rights, which we published in November 1990. These milestones give concrete expression to what South Africa can become. They speak of a constitutional, democratic, political order in which, regardless of colour, gender, religion, political opinion or sexual orientation, the law will provide for the equal protection of all citizens.

They project a democracy in which the government, whomever that government may be, will be bound by a higher set of rules, embodied in a constitution, and will not be able govern the country as it pleases.

Democracy is based on the majority principle. This is especially true in a country such as ours where the vast majority have been systematically denied their rights. At the same time, democracy also requires that the rights of political and other minorities be safeguarded.

In the political order we have established there will regular, open and free elections, at all levels of government — central, provincial and municipal. There shall also be a social order which respects completely the culture, language and religious rights of all sections of our society and the fundamental rights of the individual.

The task at hand on will not be easy. But you have mandated us to change South Africa from a country in which the majority lived with little hope, to one in which they can live and work with dignity, with a sense of self-esteem and confidence in the future. The cornerstone of building a better life of opportunity, freedom and prosperity is the Reconstruction and Development Programme.

This needs unity of purpose. It needs in action. It requires us all to work together to bring an end to division, an end to suspicion and build a nation united in our diversity.

The people of South Africa have spoken in these elections. They want change! And change is what they will get. Our plan is to create jobs, promote peace and reconciliation, and to guarantee freedom for all South Africans. We will tackle the widespread poverty so pervasive among the majority of our people. By encouraging investors and the democratic state to support job creating projects in which manufacturing will play a central role we will try to change our country from a net exporter of raw materials to one that exports finished products through beneficiation.

The government will devise policies that encourage and reward productive enterprise among the disadvantaged communities — African, Coloured and Indian. By easing credit conditions we can assist them to make inroads into the productive and manufacturing spheres and breakout of the small-scale distribution to which they are presently confined.

To raise our country and its people from the morass of racism and apartheid will require determination and effort. As a government, the ANC will create a legal framework that will assist, rather than impede, the awesome task of reconstruction and development of our battered society.

While we are and shall remain fully committed to the spirit of a government of national unity, we are determined to initiate and bring about the change that our mandate from the people demands.

We place our vision of a new constitutional order for South Africa on the table not as conquerors, prescribing to the conquered. We speak as fellow citizens to heal the wounds of the past with the intent of constructing a new order based on justice for all.

This is the challenge that faces all South Africans today, and it is one to which I am certain we will all rise.

REPORT ON RWANDA FROM AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

SOURCE “Rwanda: Mass murder by government supporters and troops in April and May 1994,” Amnesty International © 1994 Amnesty International. Reproduced by permission.

INTRODUCTION The United Nations peacekeeping forces were already in Rwanda in 1993 to help support efforts toward peace that were finally occurring between the Hutu government and the invading guerillas of the Tutsi-led Rwandese Patriotic Front (RPF). These forces were ill-equipped, lacking enough weapons, ammunition, vehicles, and other necessary supplies. It has been reported that one man had attempted to warn the United Nations about a plan to exterminate the Tutsis at a more alarming rate than the Nazis had exterminated the Jews. In the spring of 1994, that warning proved true. Gangs of errant soldiers and kids with machetes organized by the Hutu government began a slaughter that was hard for the world to absorb—almost as it sat back and watched. These forces killed at least 800,000 in 100 days. Amnesty International called for action that would prevent further abuse. For the decade following this horrific event, the United States and the rest of the world’s powers could not escape the accusations of neglect.

Mass murder by government supporters and troops in April and May 1994

1. INTRODUCTION

At the start of April 1994 Rwanda was plunged into the most tragic part of its recorded history yet. By early May 1994 it was estimated that 200,000 people or more, most of them members of the minority Tutsi ethnic group, had been killed in countrywide massacres. More than 300,000 Rwandese have fled to neighbouring countries, most of them to Tanzania, and others to Burundi, Uganda and Zaire. About two million others are reported to be displaced inside the country. Many of those who have fled from their homes are said to be the lucky ones, but a significant proportion have severe injuries. In many cases entire families are reported to have been annihilated. Stories abound of severely traumatized children who are sole survivors of their families.

Virtually all the killers belong to the majority Hutu ethnic group, to which President Juvénal Habyarimana, the head of state whose killing on 6 April 1994 precipitated the massacres, also belonged. Those directing the killings are principally supporters of the former single ruling party, the Mouvement républicain national pour la démocratie et le développement (MRND), Republican National Movement for Democracy and Development, particularly members of its youth wing, known locally as Interahamwe ("They who attack together"). From the mid-1970s until 1991 Rwanda's Constitution stipulated that all Rwandese citizens were members of the MRND by birth. During the past two years, the MRND has been allied to the Coalition pour la défense de la république (CDR), Coalition for the Defence of the Republic, an exclusively Hutu political party. CDR's youth wing, known locally as Impuzamugambi ("They who have the same goal"), has orchestrated a violent campaign against any Hutu supporting sharing power with the Tutsi-dominated rebel Rwandese Patriotic Front (RPF), and all Tutsi.

In the months preceding President Habyarimana's death, Amnesty International had received reports that government authorities and the armed forces were supplying military weapons to Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi. These have subsequently been used in their killing spree. The Presidential Guard is reported to have been in charge of military training of the Interahamwe and Impuzamugambi to constitute a militia responsible to the armed forces as well as to MRND and CDR officials closely associated with President Habyarimana. The current massacres in Rwanda are being carried out mainly by supporters or sympathizers of MRND and CDR, in conjunction with members of the security forces, particularly those of the Presidential Guard, the Gendarmerie, the regular army and local government police. Most killings are politically-motivated: to destroy the population groups viewed as potential supporters of the RPF and the multi-ethnic parties opposed to the MRND and CDR.

The massacres began soon after President Habyarimana of Rwanda and President Cyprien Ntaryamira of Burundi were killed on 6 April when their plane was brought down by a rocket. The two presidents were returning to Kigali from a regional summit in neighbouring Tanzania to discuss ways to end political crises in Burundi and Rwanda. The massacres are still continuing a month and a half later.

There have been similar waves of massacres, albeit on a much smaller scale, since October 1990 when the RPF launched a war from neighbouring Uganda to overthrow the government. Soon after the war began the MRND government called on its supporters to help government forces fight the enemy — the RPF, locally known as Inkotanyi, and its supporters. "The enemy" was used synonymously in government propaganda for the Tutsi ethnic group in general, members of which were attacked solely because they belong to the same ethnic group as most RPF combatants. Hutu identified by President Habyarimana's supporters as being sympathetic to sharing power with Tutsi have also been targeted. Tutsi throughout Rwanda, even in parts where there has been no armed conflict, have been subjected to extreme violence and massacres by government supporters for no obvious reason other than their ethnic origin.

In late October and November 1990 many Tutsi were killed in the northeastern Mutara region where the RPF began its attacks. Surviving Tutsi in the area fled to Uganda. Many Tutsi in other parts of the country were trapped between members of the security forces and Hutu gangs led by local officials. In Kigali mass detentions were carried out at the end of October 1990; most of the more than 7,000 people detained in Kigali were Tutsi.

In October 1990, just after the RPF's first attacks, more than 300 Tutsi were killed in Kibilira district (commune), in Rwanda's northwestern prefecture of Gisenyi. Responding to criticism by human rights groups, the government arrested two local government officials accused of masterminding massacres, but released them without trial within a few weeks. Immediately after the RPF briefly occupied the northwestern town of Ruhengeri in January 1991, members of the security forces and Hutu gangs, again with local officials, massacred as many as 1,000 or more Tutsi of the Bagogwe clan in Gisenyi and Ruhengeri prefectures. The clan had taken no particular part in the fighting, but its members were singled out for attack solely because of their ethnic origin. Former President Habyarimana originated from the area, which is dominated by Hutu. Anti-Tutsi propaganda had been particularly fierce there. Central government authorities imposed a news blackout on the region for several months and took no action against those responsible, denying to Amnesty International and others that any killings had occurred.

In March 1992 Hutu in Bugesera region, south of the capital, Kigali, killed as many as 300 Tutsi after the government-owned radio had broadcast what it said was the text of a tract, claiming that the RPF was planning to assassinate prominent Hutu politicians and that it had the support of the Parti libéral (PL), Liberal Party. The radio broadcasts reportedly hinted that the Hutu should defend themselves against the enemy and, as on other previous and subsequent occasions, the “enemy” was understood to refer to the Tutsi in general. Following an international out-cry, the government reported that several dozen suspected killers had been arrested. They were soon to be released without any independent investigation to establish responsibility. The only trial reported by the authorities was that of a soldier accused of shooting dead a 55-year-old Italian woman missionary who was helping Tutsi victims at Nyamata Roman Catholic church. The trial appears to have occurred due to foreign pressure and even then the authorities claimed the shooting was accidental. The soldier was sentenced to one-year’s imprisonment.

Opponents of talks with the RPF who still dominated the former ruling party and the military stepped up the violence against the Tutsi and members of opposition political parties during the first half of 1993, as there were indications that peace talks between the government and the RPF might produce an agreement. The MRND and CDR rejected any agreement to share power with the RPF, and therefore to share power with the Tutsi. The peace talks began to move forward when, after the MRND formed a government with opposition political parties in 1992, the then Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, both of whom came from parties in opposition to the President, represented the government at the negotiations in the northern Tanzanian town of Arusha. Prime Minister Dismas Nsengiyaremye repeatedly accused President Habyarimana of obstructing the peace talks and condoning political violence. In July 1993 this conflict resulted in the replacement of Dismas Nsengiyaremye by Agathe Uwilingiyimana as Prime Minister. The talks culminated in the signing of a peace agreement on 4 August 1993 and a formal end to the fighting. The Organization of African Unity (OAU) played a significant role in facilitating the talks and drafting of various agreements and sent military observers, the OAU Neutral Military Observer Group (NMOG), to monitor the various cease-fires between the parties to the conflict. Towards the end of 1993, after some months delay, a United Nations (UN) peace-keeping force known as United Nations Assistance Mission in Rwanda (UNAMIR) was deployed to help implement the peace agreement. NMOG was subsequently integrated into UNAMIR. The state-controlled radio and subsequently a privately-owned radio known as Radio-Télévision Libre des Mille Collines (RTL) were used to denounce the peace talks.

The violence continued and the authorities delayed implementing the terms of the peace accord. By the start of 1994 the UN and the international community in general were expressing concern at the government’s failure to implement it. The UN Security Council warned that it would withdraw UNAMIR if the stalemate continued. By the beginning of April 1994 it appeared that opponents of the peace accord could not hold out much longer and that the peace accord was going to be implemented. Since President Habyarimana’s death on 6 April, blamed on the RPF by government sources, there have been many claims that it was opponents of multi-ethnic power-sharing among the President’s own supporters who were behind the killing, as they were the only ones who would benefit from a disruption to the peace process.

After the President’s death, the power-sharing arrangement between political parties was set aside and an interim government led by the former speaker of the National Assembly, Théodore Sindikubwabo, was set up. The interim government blamed the killing of President Habyarimana on the RPF and Belgian troops serving with UNAMIR. It evidently had no intention of implementing the peace accord. This and the massacres which started on 7 April led to a resumption of the war between the RPF and government troops. By this time, pro-government militia had been prepared and armed for a “final assault” on the Tutsi. These massacres appear to have been prepared to deprive the RPF of any support. During an operation characteristic of a coup d’état the Presidential Guard moved quickly to kill the Prime Minister and the President of the Cour de cassation, Cassation Court, both of them Hutu, with some semblance of constitutional authority. The new authorities and the military mobilized their supporters against the “enemy” Tutsi and also against Hutu who they suspected of being allies of the RPF — that is to say, critics and opponents of the MRND and CDR.

The initial killings by the armed forces set the militia killing machine in motion. Government and military authorities appear to have been involved at the highest level in the massacres, with the intention of destroying anyone identified as a supporter or a potential supporter of the RPF; the logic of the authorities’ own propaganda was to designate every Tutsi as a potential threat. The subsequent campaign of killings was consequently committed with genocidal intent.

Genocide is a crime against humanity and, whether committed in time of peace or time of war, is a crime under international law (see Chapter 5 below). Genocide is defined in international law<sup>(1)</sup> not just as killing on a massive scale, but as killing or a number of other acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group. The Convention provides for the punishment of those who carry out genocide and also for those who conspire to commit genocide or engage in public incitement to commit genocide, and those who attempt to commit genocide or are accomplices in it. Furthermore the Convention provides for the punishment not only of rulers and public officials who commit genocide, but also of private individuals. Rwanda has been obliged since the country acceded to the Convention in 1975(2) to implement its provisions in law and practice.

The genocidal intent that became apparent through the systematic mass murder of Rwanda's Tutsi was part of a larger picture of political murder. The overall picture was one of a political drive to wipe out all sectors of the population deemed present or future threats to those in power — and one dimension of this threat, the Tutsi, were defined by their ethnicity. The targeting of the Tutsi minority for destruction, as the principal designated enemy, was a major part of this political program of murder. The systematic hunting down and murder of those associated with Rwanda's multi-ethnic opposition parties, Hutu and Tutsi alike, provided a political dimension behind the larger campaign of murder along ethnic lines that has outraged world public opinion.

All of the deliberate and arbitrary killings perpetrated on the authority of Rwanda's armed forces and de facto government since 6 April 1994 are gross violations of human rights law. The orchestrated targeting and murder of a huge proportion of the victims along strictly ethnic lines, moreover, requires the international community to meet special obligations under international law above and beyond its permanent commitments to suppress extrajudicial executions and other violations of the right to life.

A first step is to examine the evidence of an intent to commit genocide by the leaders that have dominated Rwanda's government and armed forces since 6 April and the institutions acting on their behalf or at their behest. To this end, the public smearing of the Tutsi minority indiscriminately as "the enemy", evidence that regular and irregular forces were armed and deployed with an explicit mission to destroy the Tutsi population, and the incitement and mass mobilization of the Hutu population by these forces in attacks on the Tutsi minority appear to show such an intent.

2. THE SLAUGHTER OF TUTSI AND THEIR "ACCOMPLICES"

Within hours of the death of President Habyarimana, units of the security forces, MRND and CDR supporters in Kigali and other parts of the country were out on a hunt for Tutsi. Hutu who supported political parties which accept power sharing were also targeted. Within a few days of the start of the killings, massacres were occurring all over the country. The victims were surrounded in their homes and villages. Those who managed to escape from their homes thought the killers would respect churches, but they were tragically wrong. In fact, the confines of church buildings and compounds where many sought refuge appear to have made it impossible for them to escape. Members of the security forces and civilian gangs associated with them followed those fleeing. In most cases when the killers met resistance and could not use traditional weapons, such as clubs and machetes, they first used grenades and then firearms, including automatic weapons. Weakened or dying victims would then be finished off with knives and machetes. Only areas effectively controlled by the RPF appear to have been spared the worst of the carnage.

2.1 Killings of opposition leaders and critics in Kigali

The initial victims in Kigali were Hutu and Tutsi opposition leaders, some of whom were government officials, human rights activists and other prominent Tutsi. These individuals were well-known and their killing appears to have been planned well in advance by the military. There have been persistent, but unconfirmed reports that a list of the victims had already been established by some security force commanders in conjunction with MRND and CDR leaders. The first reported victims were Prime Minister Agathe Uwilingiyimana, several other government ministers and the President of the Cassation Court, Joseph Kavaruganda. Before she was appointed Prime Minister in mid-1993 Agathe Uwilingiyimana, who was then Minister of Education, had been assaulted by men believed to be members of the security forces. There had also been a grenade attack on the house of Joseph Kavaruganda in 1993. The death of President Habyarimana appears to have provided the killers with a special opportunity to eliminate these officials. The coordinated nature of the attacks and the high profile of the regular army in them suggested considerable planning.

The security forces also launched a hunt for human rights activists who had already been persecuted in previous months and years because of their criticisms of human rights violations. Some of them, such as Monique Mujawamariya and Alphonse Nkubito managed to escape. Alphonse Nkubito, who is also a high-ranking public prosecutor, had survived a grenade attack in November 1993. He had been branded a traitor and supporter of the RPF when in late 1990 he ordered the release of Tutsi detained arbitrarily in the aftermath of the RPF's first attacks. Other human rights activists, such as Fidèle Kanyabugoyi, a Tutsi, and Ignace Ruhatana, a Hutu, were not able to escape and were killed. Fidèle Kanyabugoyi, a member of a human rights group known as KANYARWANDA, had previously been detained for his human rights activities in 1992 and 1993. He had collected information about the massacre in early 1991 of Bagogwe in northwestern Rwanda. Ignace Ruhatana was among some 30 people tried by the State Security Court in early 1991 on charges of collaboration with the RPF, simply because he had been found with documents critical of President Habyarimana and the government. He was among the few who were acquitted.

Following the first round of killings, soldiers then attacked a Roman Catholic centre in Kigali known as Centre spirituel christus and extrajudicially executed about 17 Tutsi, mostly priests and nuns. The killings were not random. European priests and nuns were locked in a dining room while the Tutsi were being killed. Those killed included Father Chrysologue Mahame, aged 67 and Father Patrick Gahizi, aged 48. The victims appear to have been targeted solely because they were Tutsi, many of them with a prominent social position.

These killings were swiftly followed by a hunt for Tutsi and Hutu who were known to support the politicians who had been killed. Militia set up roadblocks in Kigali and its suburbs. Each individual passing through these roadblocks had to produce an identity card which indicates the ethnic origin of its bearer. Being identified as or mistaken for a Tutsi meant immediate and summary execution. The killers made no attempt to conceal the killings — or hide the bodies after the fact, as witnessed by journalists and other foreign nationals. There was no evidence that either central government or local government authorities or senior army officers opposed the killings by those acting on their authority. Quite the contrary, the evidence suggests the de facto authorities and top armed forces leaders had ordered and directed even this early stage of the murder campaign. This conclusion can be drawn in part from the systematic manner in which particular opposition leaders were hunted down and killed, the consistent, coordinated nature of the road-block operations, and the persistent pattern by which Tutsi in general and specific Hutu identified with the opposition were screened out and killed. This suggests orchestration, not mere acquiescence by higher authorities. Evidence of similar coordinated action was to emerge countrywide in the weeks to come. Some Tutsi were trapped and tried to hide within Kigali. Many were quickly found and killed. For example, some Tutsi tried to hide at the stores of the Belgian Red Cross at Gikondo. Soldiers followed them there on 8 April and forced them out. Most were hacked to death while a few were shot dead. Bodies were scattered all around the store, apparently because the victims were killed as they tried to run away from their killers. Another massacre in Gikondo is reported to have taken place at the Methodist church. An unspecified number of Tutsi were reportedly killed there and at least 40 seriously injured.

Wounded civilians tried to seek medical attention at Kigali hospital, but many were killed either before they arrived there or in the hospital itself. For example, soldiers bayoneted to death two men inside the hospital on 11 April. Four days later, seven more patients were killed in the same hospital. The staff at the hospital were powerless to save the victims and the authorities took no action either to prevent further killings or to investigate those which had occurred.

On 17 April more than 100 Tutsi were killed by soldiers and militia at Nyanza, south of Kigali. They had been part of a group of some 2,000 Tutsi who were reportedly intercepted by soldiers and militia as they walked to seek refuge at Amahoro stadium in Kigali where some UNAMIR troops were camped. The attackers hacked some Tutsi with machetes in order to compel them to walk to a place where they would be slaughtered. On reaching Nyanza hill the victims were made to sit down before grenades were hurled at them. A witness saw a pile of at least 100 bodies and said many others were in houses nearby.

2.2 Massacres in northern and eastern Rwanda

Most of the massacres in eastern Rwanda appear to have taken place in the premises of churches where Tutsi and Hutu government opponents had sought refuge. For example, more than 800 people were reportedly killed on 11 April by government supporters and soldiers at Kiziguro Roman Catholic church, Murambi district of Byumba prefecture. Journalists and RPF fighters recovered about 10 survivors from a mass grave near the church. The attackers first forced the Spanish missionaries there to leave, before the killings began. One of the survivors, Jean Bushejja, said he and some others were forced to carry about 800 bodies into the mass grave. When they had finished carrying the bodies the attackers then turned on them and he threw himself into the grave to escape being hacked to death.

Hundreds more were killed by Interahamwe and gendarmes at Rukara Roman Catholic mission in Kibungo prefecture's Rukara district. The missionaries there reportedly asked a local government official to help protect the Tutsi hiding from militia. The official instead decided to cut the water supply to the mission. The missionaries were subsequently forced to leave as the Interahamwe and gendarmes attacked, hurling grenades through the windows of the church and finishing off others with guns and machetes. Similar killings of hundreds more were reported at Gahini Protestant church in Rukara district where many bodies were reportedly dumped in a pit latrine.

2.3 Massacres in Cyangugu prefecture

Massacres in Cyangugu prefecture in the southwest have been some of the most horrific and extensive. Interahamwe have been able to call on the support of the military when they have met resistance. Many Tutsi fled from their homes early on to escape being killed and took refuge at churches and a stadium in Cyangugu town. Many were killed there. Others were herded into administrative centres where they were systematically killed.

Soon after the killings began, Tutsi fled to Mibirizi Roman Catholic parish in Cyimbogo district. Militia attacked them there, apparently led by a businessman and the recently elected mayor (Bourgmestre) of Cyimbogo. The victims resisted and on 9 April the Prefect (governor of Cyangugu prefecture) and Roman Catholic Bishop of Cyangugu visited the area to appeal for an end to the attacks. On 18 April the attackers returned armed with grenades, machine guns and other automatic weapons which they used against the men who were putting up resistance. The attackers also received militia reinforcements from neighbouring Bugarama district. When most of the Tutsi men had been killed or injured, the attackers entered the church compound and killed all males they could lay their hands on, including babies. There were apparently some survivors and the attackers returned two days later. Only just over 300 women and children remained out of the original number of more than 2,000 people who had taken refuge at the church. The Prefect was apparently urged to open the border with neighbouring Zaire to allow potential victims to escape, but he reportedly refused saying that he had received orders to keep it closed. Thousands were also reportedly massacred by militia at Mushaka, Nyamasheke and Nkaka Roman Catholic parishes.

On 14 April three Tutsi Josephite monks in the company of Cyangugu's Roman Catholic bishop, Thadée Ntihinyirwa, were killed at a roadblock mounted by militia about six kilometres from Nyamasheke parish. The bishop was attempting to evacuate them and several other members of the clergy from the parish. The following day, the militia attacked and killed an unspecified number of Tutsi and Hutu members of the opposition sheltering at the parish.

When the killings began about 5,000 Tutsi and Hutu members of the opposition gathered at Cyangugu stadium where they hoped they would be protected by the authorities from attacks. Amnesty International has received reports that individuals were then regularly picked out by militia and members of the security forces and killed while soldiers at the stadium stood by. On 29 April some tried to escape but militia and local police hurled several grenades at them and opened fire, killing an unspecified number. Those who managed to escape risked being killed as they approached the nearby border with Zaire which the Rwandese authorities had closed. Humanitarian organizations were prevented from visiting the stadium and the Prefect, Emmanuel Bagambiki, failed to facilitate access.

2.4 Massacre at Mukarange parish, Rwamagana district

More than 3,000 people, most of them Tutsi but including Hutu members of opposition political parties, were killed at Mukarange Roman Catholic parish in Kibungo prefecture's Rwamagana district in the east of the country. The victims were first herded into the parish main hall and grenades were hurled at them through windows. An estimated 2,500 were killed there. Some 500 or more tried to run but were mowed down with machine gun fire in the church compound. About 1,000 were reportedly herded towards Lake Muhazi and the attackers continued to shoot them. Only an estimated 50 survived by using banana stems as rafts to cross the lake. A journalist reported that he stopped counting when he reached 3,005 corpses.

2.5 Massacres of hospital patients and orphans in Butare

The programmatic killing campaign has shown no respect for any of the traditional places of special protection or refuge in Rwanda. Churches were the most common traditional places of refuge to be horrifically violated, turned, as in Mukarange parish, into lethally enclosed killing grounds. Hospitals and orphanages followed. The only explanation was that the authorities intended the murder squads to seek out and kill their perceived enemies wherever they were. The sick and the children of the Tutsi were part of the designated enemy.

On 23 April government troops and militia killed about 170 patients and some staff at Butare hospital. The patients were being cared for by doctors of Médecins sans frontières (MSF), an international non-governmental humanitarian organization. Shocked by these killings of defenceless patients, MSF decided to leave the hospital. The authorities, who had reportedly given assurances to MSF that there would be no attacks on the hospital, took no action against the attackers or to protect any other potential victims. From the hospital the killers proceeded to a nearby camp for the displaced where they reportedly killed an unknown number of people.

On 1 May people thought to comprise members of the security forces and militia attacked and killed 21 orphans and 13 local Red Cross workers in Butare. The orphans had just been evacuated from Kigali to Butare where it was thought they would be safe. The only plausible explanation for these killings can be the ethnic origin of the victims, reinforcing the impression that the killers acted with genocidal intent. Killings in Butare took place after the Tutsi Prefect of Butare had been replaced in mid-April 1994. He and members of his family were reported to have been subsequently killed.

3. KILLINGS BY THE RPF AND ITS SUPPORTERS

In addition to the massacres by soldiers, militia and others in areas under nominal government control, Amnesty International has also received reports of deliberate and arbitrary killings of government supporters by RPF combatants and by civilians in the areas under RPF control, although not on anything like the same scale. Before April 1994 such killings had occurred in various parts of northern Rwanda. For example, at the start of 1993 there were reports that the RPF killed about 300 Hutu supporters of the government in northwestern Rwanda to avenge massacres of Tutsi. Some Hutu were reportedly shot at that time when they refused to leave their homes and flee to Uganda.

Particularly in the last week, there have been some reports of such killings by RPF combatants since 6 April 1994. In one reported incident in mid-April 1994 an unspecified number of suspected Interahamwe were arrested by the RPF and tied in a manner known in Uganda as kandoya or “three-piece tying”, with the victim’s arms tied above the elbow behind the back(3). One of the prisoners called Kayiranga was then killed when he was kicked in the chest and head. He reportedly died as he pleaded for mercy. An eye-witness reported that he did not stay to witness the fate of the others. It is likely that this incident was not an isolated one. Hutu fleeing from eastern Rwanda to Tanzania in early May 1994 alleged that they were fleeing from attacks by the RPF. They claimed that some Hutu had been killed and houses burned in their villages.

One RPF commander was reported to have told the press in April 1994 that RPF combatants kill Interahamwe when they encounter them. Amnesty International is concerned that such a statement from a senior RPF commander indicates that some prisoners and militia may have been executed by the RPF in violation of basic humanitarian principles.

4. RESPONSIBILITY AND PURPOSE OF THE MASSACRES

Information available to Amnesty International suggests that by early April 1994 the authorities had prepared their supporters both materially and psychologically to carry out the massacres which started on 7 April. Since 1990 the authorities had repeatedly told Rwanda’s Hutu population that the RPF was fighting to reinstall a Tutsi monarchy that had been overthrown in 1959 and to seize their (Hutu) land. Political rallies and radio addresses had been used to convey the message that all Tutsi were enemies of the Hutu and supporters of the RPF. Indeed the authorities continually reinforced this interpretation, as virtually no action was ever taken against people who killed or committed other abuses against Tutsi civilians.

Many attacks by government supporters were incited, ordered or condoned by the authorities. Each time it only took a radio broadcast calling on government supporters (Hutu) to “take up arms against the enemy” for a massacre of Tutsi to result. Since April 1994 the same pattern has been repeated on a massive scale.

Interahamwe militia were created and armed by leaders of the MRND. Addressing a public rally in Ruhengeri on 15 November 1992 former President Habyarimana denied that Interahamwe were involved in violence. He claimed that the militia were being falsely accused by government and judicial authorities who belonged to the opposition. He said that he did not need the army to support him during electoral campaigns, as he and Interahamwe were united.

A few days earlier, at a meeting attended by the President in Gisenyi, Léon Mugesera, an official of the MRND, called for the extermination of the Tutsi. He reportedly said that Tutsi should either voluntarily return to what he claimed was their ancestral country of origin, Ethiopia, or be thrown into Rwanda’s main river, Nyabarongo, which leads to Lake Victoria and indirectly to the Nile, flowing north(4). He allegedly said that the Tutsi should return to Ethiopia, like Ethiopia’s Jewish or Falasha community had returned to Israel.

In December 1990 a journalist known to be close to top government officials published what he called the “Ten commandments” calling for hatred of Tutsi. The commandments urged Hutu to mistrust Tutsi and to have no pity on them, warning that “The Batutsi are thirsty for blood and power and want to impose their hegemony on the Rwandese people by the gun”(5). No action was taken by the authorities in connection with this article, although many other journalists were detained around the same time because they criticized government officials or their policies, without calling for violence.

In addition to killings of Tutsi and opponents of the government which occurred from October 1990 onwards, it was clear by the start of 1994 that MRND and CDR leaders were preparing for a large-scale offensive of some sort. They were arming their supporters and training them in the use of military weapons. In February 1994 UNAMIR officials protested against the existence of training camps and the massive distribution of arms to civilians at a time when the government and the RPF were supposed to be preparing for demobilization of their combatants. In this way, it seems, the ground was prepared for the massacres under the very eyes of representatives of the international community.

The Prime Minister appointed after President Habyarimana’s death was reported to have called on government supporters around the country to collect arms from Kigali.

On 30 April the government-controlled radio called on people to take up arms against the enemy all over the country.

Immediately the massacres began, RTLM radio began broadcasting messages calling on the militia to step up fighting the enemy. This radio had continued operating throughout the period since 6 April, broadcasting calls for ethnic hatred and killings; they appear to constitute public incitement to commit genocide when taken in the context of the orgy of killings.

Members of the interim government have neither acknowledged the scope of the mass killing nor called on their supporters to stop attacking defenceless civilians, despite the international outcry. On 28 April the Minister of Foreign Affairs said that only about 10,000 people had been killed, countering estimates that as many as 100,000 had already died in the massacres. He and the Minister of Commerce told journalists that the only way to stop the killings was for the RPF to stop fighting government forces. They appeared to justify massacres of Tutsi on the grounds that the Hutu population was fighting to stop the Tutsi in the RPF from taking power. In mid-May 1994 the leader of Interahamwe, Robert Kajuga, told Radio France International that the killings were spontaneous and that the Hutu only fought in self-defence. He added that there was collaboration between Interahamwe and the armed forces, and that his militia were helping the army to defend the country.

5. CONCLUSION

Amnesty International is gravely concerned that the Rwandese armed forces and government appear to be responsible for inciting, perpetrating and condoning mass killings, particularly of members of the Tutsi ethnic group. The majority of the victims were killed while unarmed or were trapped in churches and other public places where they hoped they would be protected. The killings went far beyond people suspected of supporting the RPF and targeted any Tutsi of both sexes and all ages. In some cases described above women and girls were spared(6). Statements made by government and other officials since October 1990 were evidently meant to incite Hutu to kill all Tutsi, with apparent genocidal intent. Virtually no one who has incited or perpetrated violence against Tutsi has been brought to justice, mainly because those in positions of responsibility at all levels either supported or condoned these acts. Indeed some Hutu who advocated peaceful and equal co-existence with Tutsi paid with their lives, or those of their relatives. These elements support a conclusion that the killings were planned and orchestrated principally to wipe out the Tutsi ethnic group in Rwanda.

Amnesty International is calling on the relevant bodies of the United Nations to take prompt action to prevent further human rights abuses in Rwanda and also urgently set up a mechanism to investigate and establish whether genocide has been (and is still being) committed in Rwanda and, if so, to identify those authorities who have ordered, incited, encouraged or condoned it. Those identified as responsible for mass killings or genocide should be tried by a competent and impartial court of law. These recommendations are spelled out in more detail in Amnesty International's appeal to the UN entitled, A call for UN human rights action on Rwanda and Burundi.

REPORT ON CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY IN GUATEMALA

SOURCE "Guatemala Appeal Case: Crimes against humanity remain unpunished in Guatemala," Amnesty International, AI Index: AMR 34/035/2006 (Public) November 17, 2006. Reproduced by permission.

INTRODUCTION For 36 years Guatemala was at war—inside itself. During the internal armed conflict, more than 200,000 people had "disappeared" or were killed. Most of the victims—with some reports stating the figure as high as 83 percent—were of Mayan ancestry. The war came to an end in 1996. When the 1998 United Nations-sponsored Commission for Historical Clarification concluded its study, it attributed at least 93 percent of the human rights violations to government forces. Five years after the conflict ended, in May 2001, twenty indigenous communities presented allegations of war crimes and genocide, against General Jose Efraim Rios Montt and others. Because of the problems of the Guatemalan court system, several of the cases had to be taken to Spain to be tried. As a result of obstruction and a lack of cooperation from many of those accused, the endeavor was not always successful.

On 6 May 2001 twenty-one indigenous communities affiliated with the Association for Justice and Reconciliation (AJR), legally represented by the Center for Human Rights Legal Action (CALDH), presented allegations to the Public Prosecutor's Office against General José Efraim Ríos Montt and others for war crimes, genocide and crimes against humanity committed during Guatemala's internal armed conflict that lasted for 36 years and ended with the signing of the Peace Accords in December 1996.(1)

PROLONGED DELAYS IN THE FIVE-YEAR INVESTIGATION

After the complaint was filed with the Public Prosecutor's Office, a special prosecutor took testimony from approximately 114 eyewitnesses to the massacres (this includes testimonies in the separate case against Lucas García(2) and others). However, the special prosecutor was transferred in December 2004 and a second special prosecutor was appointed in July 2005, but in June 2006 he, too, was transferred. Two months later, yet a third special prosecutor was appointed.(3)

Unfortunately, the office of the attorney general has failed to make progress over the past five years to investigate vigorously the extremely grave allegations. In addition to the repeated changes of special prosecutors and delays in replacing them disrupting the continuity of the investigation, there are a number of other reasons for the slowness of the criminal investigation:

- Apart from testimonies from eyewitnesses, few other lines of investigation have been pursued. Amnesty International understands that no serving or former military officers have been subpoenaed to provide testimony;
- The Defence Ministry refused requests by the Public Prosecutor's Office to hand over military documents due to "state security" and the special prosecutors have not attempted to obtain court orders compelling them to produce the documents during in camera hearings with safeguards for any legitimate security concerns;
- There have been numerous dilatory appeals by General Efraín Ríos Montt and the others on procedural questions;
- Some courts lack independence from the political branches of government and can be susceptible to political pressure. There is no effective system to strengthen their independence and protect those judges and lawyers who are threatened.(4)

THE CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION IN SPAIN AND THE EXTRADITION REQUEST

Given the stagnation of the case in the Guatemalan judicial system, the lack of political will of the government in supporting measures to end impunity for past human rights violations, in 1999 the Nobel Peace Prize-winner Rigoberta Menchú filed cases of genocide, torture and murder in Spanish courts.

The Spanish National Court (Audiencia Nacional) took jurisdiction of the case in 2006, after Spain's Constitutional Court (Tribunal Constitucional) ruled in 2005 that Spanish courts can exercise universal jurisdiction over crimes under international law committed during Guatemala's internal armed conflict.

National Court Judge Santiago Pedraz carried out a fact-finding trip to Guatemala in June 2006 but was forced to return empty-handed due the "obstructionism" and lack of cooperation of those accused of atrocities and of the Guatemalan judicial system.

However, despite these obstructions, on 7 July 2006 Judge Santiago Pedraz charged several former Guatemalan military officers, including Ríos Montt, with genocide, torture, and other crimes against humanity, and issued international arrest warrants for their involvement in atrocities committed under their command responsibility.

According to international law, no state has a better claim than any other to initiate an investigation and, if there is sufficient admissible evidence, a prosecution for crimes committed against the entire international community. Indeed, in certain cases, any state may exercise such jurisdiction even if the territorial state has commenced an investigation or even a prosecution or has reached a final judgment. It is crucial that investigations on human rights violations and prosecution of those responsible are not hampered by political consideration. Amnesty International is calling on the Guatemalan authorities to comply with Guatemala's obligations under international law by ensuring the judicial process initiated on 6 May 2001 in Guatemala against General Efraín Ríos Montt and others for crimes against humanity is carried out in a prompt, impartial and effective manner while also supporting the legal process initiated by judge Santiago Pedraz in the Spanish Courts. If it does not carry out such an investigation in accordance with international standards, then it should promptly extradite the accused to Spain.

Background information

In 1998 the UN-sponsored Commission for Historical Clarification (a 'Truth Commission') concluded that over 200,000 people had 'disappeared' or were killed during the internal armed conflict which ended in 1996. Of the victims it could document and identify, 83 percent were of Mayan origin. Some 93 percent of human rights violations were attributed to government forces.(5) General José Efraín Ríos Montt headed the Government of Guatemala from March 1982 to August 1983, which corresponds to one of the highest peaks in human rights violations of the 36-year internal armed conflict. These included killings, rape, torture, enforced disappearances and genocide perpetrated against the indigenous population.

“DARFUR: A ‘PLAN B’ TO STOP GENOCIDE?”

SOURCE Justin Raimondo, “What About Darfur? The Case Against Intervention,” www.antiwar.com, May 1, 2006. Reproduced by permission.

INTRODUCTION The conflict in Darfur, the Sudan, began in 2003 when one rebel group claimed that Khartoum was neglecting the region and favoring the Arabs over the black African natives. Ongoing tension has long existed between the nomadic Arabs who wanted to maintain their grazing rights and the farmers from Fur, Massaleet, and Zagawa. Two main rebel groups, the Sudan Liberation Army (SLA) and the Justice and Equality Movement (JEM) attempted peace talks, but ethnic divisions continued to create problems. A military group known as Janjaweed was accused of trying to “cleanse” vast areas of the black population and claims of genocide have been made, though the United Nations has indicated that no blatant acts of genocide have occurred—even though the deaths have been staggering at no fewer than 200,000 people, according to what little can be determined. In a country whose landscape is often harsh and unforgiving, it has been a war that created refugees in camps where people have been able to find little peace. In testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in April 2007, Andrew S. Natsios, the President’s Special Envoy to Sudan discussed the conflict and possible solutions.

Andrew S. Natsios, President’s Special Envoy to Sudan

Testimony Before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee

Washington, DC

April 11, 2007

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee. I appreciate the opportunity to be here with you today to discuss how the United States (U.S.), together with the United Nations (UN) and our international partners, is addressing the crisis in Darfur.

A great deal has happened since I last gave testimony — some of it frustrating, some of it hopeful — but what has not changed is the Administration’s firm commitment to ending the violence and responding to the immeasurable suffering of the people of Darfur. The only U.S. interest in Darfur is a peaceful end to the crisis. Our goals are to provide life-saving humanitarian assistance to the millions of people who have been affected by violence; to promote a negotiated, political settlement to the conflict within the framework of the Darfur Peace Agreement; to support the deployment of a robust African Union (AU)/UN hybrid international peacekeeping force; and to ensure the successful implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA). We have no military or economic interests in Darfur and we oppose any effort by any group to separate Darfur from Sudan. While we have a relationship with the Sudanese government on counter-terrorism issues, this relationship has not prevented us from elevating humanitarian and human rights concerns to a pre-eminent position in our policy toward Sudan. As a country and as a government we are appalled by the atrocities that have occurred in Darfur including those in 2003 and 2004 when some of the worst violence occurred, and the United States has made solving conflict in this region a priority.

This is the third war in Darfur in just over twenty years, but it is by far the most destructive in terms of lives lost and people displaced. The current war is not a ‘simple’ conflict between Arab and African tribes, but a much more complex dispute fueled by drought and desertification, disputes over land rights, competition between nomadic herders and farmers, and longstanding marginalization of Darfur by the Government in Khartoum. The Sudanese government’s disastrous decision to arm, direct, and pay Northern Arab tribes, now called the Janjaweed, as their proxies in the war against Darfur’s rebels led to genocide and resulted in the deaths of hundreds of thousands of innocent civilians and the destruction of their villages and livelihoods.

Since then, the security situation on the ground has continued to evolve and has become increasingly chaotic. The Government of Sudan (GOS) is using the same strategies against Darfur that Sadiq al-Mahdi first developed and used against the south in the 1980s. By manipulating pre-existing tribal divisions, creating militias drawn from the youngest and most disenfranchised members of Arab tribes, forcing people from their homes, and separating them from their traditional leaders, the government has created a lawless environment where banditry and violence are on the increase as rebel groups and tribal structures fragment and begin to fight amongst themselves. We are now seeing more examples of Arab on Arab violence in Darfur, localized tribal conflicts, and looting, extortion, and hijacking by rebel groups. In January and February of this year, 80,000 people have been forced from their homes and into camps because of violence. In addition, regional political agendas are being played out in Darfur and violence and refugees are spilling across borders into Chad and the Central African Republic.

Against this backdrop, however, there are some small signs of hope and progress. Credible reports from Darfur indicate that there has been a slow, steady decrease in civilian casualties since January 2007 and direct fighting between the Sudan Armed Forces (SAF) and non-signatory rebel groups has virtually ceased in the past months. When I visited Sudan in October and again in December 2006, a broad range of GOS officials appeared to believe that they could solve their ‘Darfur problem’ through military means. This policy has proven to be a disaster as government troops have taken a beating at the hands of rebels and as they have lost weapons and equipment to rebel forces. I have stressed to Khartoum and the rebels that a military solution is not possible, as have our allies. Several regional powers have also begun to play a positive role. Most notably, in late February 2007 Libya brokered an agreement between Chad and Sudan to reduce hostility along their common border. Unfortunately, this appears to have unraveled in recent days and we note with great concern the recent attacks inside Chad against civilians in the villages of Tiero and Morena and escalating violence along the border.

“Darfur: A ‘Plan B’ to Stop Genocide?”

However, these types of constructive efforts are welcome and we encourage Libya and other regional powers to work closely with the UN and AU on these initiatives.

Perhaps most heartening, groups inside Darfur are beginning to push back against the terrible violence they have seen over the past four years. The Nazir of the Southern Rizegat, the leader of an Arab tribe in South Darfur, has remained neutral over the course of the conflict despite attempts to draw him in. In other parts of Darfur, there are indications that Arab and African tribes are trying to rebuild cooperation, with a few scattered reports of groups returning looted livestock to the original owners and beginning to meet and trade in traditional markets.

We will continue to watch the security situation very closely. If the government and rebel groups continue to exercise restraint between now and the end of the rainy season, there will have been a full 20 weeks of relative quiet, enough time to restart political negotiations. If, however, either side breaks the fragile calm that appears to be holding between government and rebel forces inside Darfur — directly or through their proxies — we will take this as a clear signal that the parties to the conflict are not serious about the peace process and will respond in the strongest possible terms.

The current security environment has had an extremely negative impact on humanitarian operations in Darfur and eastern Chad. The U.S. Government’s (USG) first and most urgent priority is to ensure the continued delivery of life-saving humanitarian assistance to the two and a half million internally displaced persons (IDPs) and refugees living in camps in Darfur and eastern Chad. While civilian deaths may have declined in recent months, people are still being forced from their homes and nearly 80,000 new IDPs have flowed into camps in January and February of this year. The U.S. has called upon all actors in Darfur — including the government, the Arab militias, the rebel signatories and the non-signatories — to cease all interference in the delivery of humanitarian aid. Representatives from NGOs have told me that there are now so many rebel groups in Darfur, it has become virtually impossible to negotiate deals for safe passage of workers and supplies. The number of security incidents against humanitarian agencies has increased, with more than a dozen local Sudanese staff killed, one expatriate woman sexually assaulted, and approximately 120 vehicles hijacked over the course of 2006. Much of this violence, particularly the theft of vehicles and supplies, has been perpetrated by rebels who seem more intent on stealing and looting than representing the people of Darfur. In my trips to the region I have met repeatedly with rebel leaders and have insisted that this type of activity cease immediately. While none of the rebels took responsibility for incidents, this message was clearly heard and we have seen a slight decrease in vehicle hijackings over the past few months, although the number remains unacceptably high.

Relief efforts are also being slowed by bureaucratic obstacles and continual harassment by the Government of Sudan. Visas and travel permits are routinely delayed or denied and humanitarian goods languish in customs for months. This seriously undermines the ability of aid workers to deliver needed supplies and services to civilians in the camps. We have pressed the government continually on this point, stressing that they should facilitate — not block — the delivery of humanitarian relief. During my recent trip to Sudan in March, I met with President Bashir and insisted that his government lift burdensome bureaucratic restrictions on relief workers. He gave his verbal assurance that this would happen and U.S. pressure, together with that of other donors, led to a breakthrough agreement signed March 28 between the Government of Sudan and United Nations that should significantly improve humanitarian access. If the agreement is implemented as written, it will signal the Sudanese government’s intention to improve the humanitarian environment for aid agencies.

I should mention that despite difficult and dangerous conditions, humanitarian workers have done a remarkable job of providing life-saving assistance to two and a half million IDPs and refugees in Darfur and eastern Chad. This is currently the largest humanitarian relief operation in the world and the U.S. is the single largest donor of humanitarian assistance. We have contributed more than $2.6 billion in assistance to Sudan and eastern Chad in FY 2005 and FY 2006 and have provided more than 72% of all humanitarian assistance to Sudan. USAID is sending 40,000 metric tons of food aid to Darfur every month and the U.S. provided 50% of the appeal by the UN World Food Program in 2006. In addition to food, the U.S. is providing shelter, water, sanitation, health, and hygiene programs for those in need. We are also working to protect vulnerable populations such as women and children by improving physical safety and providing immediate services to victims of violence. Given the extremely rugged conditions in Darfur, this assistance is saving lives every day and we need to recognize the tremendous work the humanitarian community is doing.

The only way to achieve long term progress in Darfur is to promote a political settlement among all the parties to the conflict within the framework of the Darfur Peace Agreement, and this is where we are now focusing our attention. We strongly support a leadership role for the United Nations and African Union and stand ready to support the important work of Special Envoys Jan Eliasson and Dr. Salim Ahmed Salim. We believe that the UN and the AU can play a critical role in keeping the attention of the international community focused on a negotiated settlement and can help channel disparate initiatives into a coordinated peace process. This will help minimize duplication and confusion and will guard against ‘forum shopping’ by parties to the conflict. Again, these are issues that I raised in my most recent visit to Sudan in March and I received expressions of support for negotiations — without preconditions — from the Government of Sudan, including President Bashir. It remains to be seen whether the GOS will make good on these statements, but there appears to be a growing consensus among key members of the ruling coalition that a peace agreement with non-signatory rebel groups may be the only way out of the current crisis.

As the central basis for negotiations, the U.S. supports the Darfur Peace Agreement (DPA) signed by the GOS and the faction of the Sudan Liberation Movement headed by Minni Minawi (SLM/MM) on May 5, 2006. Despite some limitations, the DPA is a good agreement that outlines ways to address the root causes of the conflict, creates space for the delivery of humanitarian aid, and gives international forces a robust mandate to protect civilians and humanitarian workers. In further negotiations among non-signatories and the GOS, we support adding amendments, annexes, or clarifications to the DPA. What we do not support is starting from scratch and spending another year negotiating a new agreement that will likely be worse for the rebel movements and the people of Darfur. We have made this point to all parties involved.

We recognize, however, that implementation of the DPA has been slow and this has made rebel groups reluctant to join the political process. We have called repeatedly on the government to implement key portions of the agreement, including disarmament of Arab militias and empowerment of the Transitional Darfur Regional Authority. One of our most important tasks is to bolster the position of Minni Minawi, the sole rebel signatory to the DPA, in order to show that embracing peace yields dividends. He has been marginalized by the government on key decisions related to Darfur and the package of reintegration assistance promised to his troops under the DPA has materialized very slowly, if at all. Most recently, a violent and deadly March 24 attack by the GOS on a house run by SLM/MM in Khartoum and the fatal ambush of a senior commander in Darfur, only serves to raise questions about the seriousness of the GOS commitment to a negotiated peace. Non-signatory factions might ask why they should sign the Darfur Peace Agreement if the GOS continues to brutalize parties to the agreement.

The number of rebel groups now operating in Darfur also complicates a negotiated settlement. As I mentioned earlier, the GOS has played a major role in splintering opposition movements into factions and has attempted to buy off one group at a time rather than pursuing a broader peace through transparent negotiation with all parties. This tactic of divide and conquer creates inequality, dissatisfaction and mistrust among rebel factions, delaying or preventing the creation of a unified political position. Surrounding countries have also exacerbated divisions by providing support for rebel groups in pursuit of their own geopolitical agendas. As a result, we now confront a confusing array of rebel factions, the number of which fluctuates up to as many as fifteen at any given time. Rebel leaders frequently appear more focused on their own ambitions than on the well-being of people in Darfur. No peace agreement would have been possible in Southern Sudan had there been multiple rebel factions each with a different political agenda.

In January I met with rebel leaders to gain their perspective and to deliver a strong message from the U.S. government that they need to unify politically and support humanitarian operations. I stressed that while the people of the United States are appalled by the atrocities committed against the people of Darfur, the rebels should not translate that into support for their political movements, many of which are personality based and the goals of which are obscure. I have urged them to renounce the violent overthrow of the government of Sudan, which some have been publicly advocating, and which is an impediment to peace negotiations. I urged them to be flexible and practical about their demands in any upcoming negotiations; they will not get everything they ask for.

We have begun to see a number of good, new initiatives that feed into broader UN and AU efforts to negotiate a political settlement. One particularly promising initiative that the U.S. strongly supports is the process being led by First Vice President Salva Kiir, who is also the President of Southern Sudan. With the blessing of Khartoum, Vice President Kiir has consulted with Darfur’s tribal leaders, community groups, and non-signatory rebel leaders in order to find a workable solution to the Darfur crisis. The Sudan People’s Liberation Movement (SPLM) can play an important role in advising the Darfur non-signatory groups since they have the experience and credibility that comes from successfully negotiating the Comprehensive Peace Agreement with Khartoum.

“Darfur: A ‘Plan B’ to Stop Genocide?”

Recently, international attention has focused on the need for an enhanced peacekeeping capacity in Darfur. The African Union peacekeepers have done, and continue to do, an admirable job under extremely difficult conditions, but a more robust force is needed. African Union troops have come under increasing attack, with the most recent incident resulting in the death of five Senegalese peacekeepers in Northern Darfur. Two Nigerian peacekeepers were killed earlier in March. Missions that were once carried out as a matter of course, for example protection details for women leaving IDP and refugee camps in search of firewood, have now been halted and the threat of increased rapes and attacks is very real. The USG has provided over $350 million in support to the approximately 7,700 strong AMIS force since FY04. This includes construction and operation of 34 base camps, maintenance of vehicles and communications equipment, pre-deployment equipment and training, and strategic airlift. However, the AU has reached the limit of its capabilities, and a robust force with the command and control of the UN is desperately needed in order to function effectively and minimize the risk of atrocities in the future. The AU itself has called for a transition of the African Union Mission in Sudan (AMIS) to a United Nations operation.

Transition of the current African Union Mission in Sudan to a more robust hybrid AU/UN peacekeeping operation remains a policy priority for the United States. UN Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 1706 of 31 August 2006 has a robust mandate, including the protection of civilians, and remains the touchstone for the U.S. position on peacekeeping in Darfur. In November 2006, the UN and AU convened a high level meeting in Addis Ababa where key players, including the Government of Sudan and the five permanent members of the UN Security Council, agreed to a three-phase plan that would culminate in a hybrid AU/UN peacekeeping force of 20,000 troops and police under UN command and control.

This plan was reconfirmed at an AU Peace and Security Council meeting in Abuja and by a UN Security Council Presidential Statement (PRST). Sudan has repeatedly told us over the past months that they agree to the Addis framework; and the PRST was done at their specific behest. However, in a March 6 letter that President Bashir sent to UN Secretary General Ban Ki-Moon, he essentially rejected the Addis Agreement’s Phase II Heavy Support Package, effectively also scuttling the third phase or hybrid force. Furthermore, he stated: “Command and control after provision of the support packages is the responsibility of the African Union, with the necessary support from the United Nations.” UN command and control of the hybrid operation was agreed to by all parties in Addis, including Sudan, as an essential component of any force. This is not negotiable.

We are very concerned with President Bashir’s letter rejecting major portions of the heavy support package. We are hopeful that an April 9 meeting in Addis Ababa signals that the GOS is willing to reconsider its position. We trust that the GOS will honor its commitments and move swiftly to implement all remaining phases of this agreement, including a vigorous joint AU/UN peacekeeping force under UN command and control. The U.S. government strongly opposes any efforts by the Sudanese government or others to renegotiate, once again, the agreement reached in Addis Ababa on November 16, 2006. The failure to implement the Addis framework is not acceptable and will soon be met, as we have long stated, with a more confrontational approach.

I would like to add a word about international pressure on Khartoum. In January, I made a visit to China where I had positive meetings with several key officials, including State Councilor Tang Jiaxuan and Assistant Foreign Ministers Cui Tiankai and Zhai Jun. The Chinese have been largely supportive of our efforts to resolve the Darfur situation through peaceful means and have been publicly encouraging Khartoum to allow the AU/UN hybrid force as agreed to in Addis. We confirmed with them our position that our interests in Darfur are solely humanitarian and we have no economic or military interests behind our policies. We also made it clear that we are not pursuing regime change in Sudan unless the people vote for a new government in free and fair elections agreed to under the Comprehensive Peace Agreement framework. China’s Ambassador to the UN Wang Guangya played a vital and constructive role in helping to broker the Addis compromise. During his recent visit to Khartoum, Chinese President Hu Jintao encouraged Bashir to show flexibility and allow the AU/UN hybrid force to be deployed. While we welcome and encourage China’s efforts to apply diplomatic pressure on the Government of Sudan, we look to Beijing to join with the international community in applying more forceful measures, should Khartoum remain intransigent. China’s substantial economic investment in Sudan gives it considerable potential leverage, and we have made clear to Beijing that the international community will expect China to be part of the solution.

Similarly we are pleased with the emergence of broad international support for the humanitarian needs of people in Darfur. Many countries in Africa and around the world have echoed UNSCR 1706 and called publicly for Khartoum to admit UN peacekeepers and abandon its futile effort to impose a solution by force. During my October trip, I also made a stop in Egypt where I met with the Egyptian Foreign Minister Abul Gheit and Secretary General of the Arab League, Amr Moussa. Mr. Moussa and the Arab league have recently played a much more active role in urging the Sudanese government to take a more constructive approach to the Darfur crisis.

Despite all this, the regime in Khartoum continues to find the weapons it needs for conflict, to find markets for its products, and to find investors. So while I have conveyed a real appreciation here today for many international efforts to push Sudan in the right direction, I also want to be quite clear: the world needs to do more. Congress, individual activists, and the huge array of committed non-governmental organizations can and should continue to shine a spotlight on Khartoum’s enablers.

While our primary topic today is Darfur, the crisis there must be seen in the context of our overall policy goals in Sudan; ensuring the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement and supporting the democratic transformation of Sudan through free and fair elections in 2009. Unless there is progress on these two broader goals, there is little chance that we will be able to find a lasting solution to the crisis in Darfur. The international community needs to recognize the fact that southern Sudan is at a cross roads. The CPA has created a fragile peace between the north and the south after two decades of conflict during which more than 2.4 million people died and four million were displaced. However, over the next year, several important steps must be taken to ensure that the CPA succeeds. Armed militias still threaten the security of southern Sudan. These groups must be demobilized or integrated into the SAF or the SPLA, and the withdrawal of the Sudanese Armed Forces from all areas of the south must stay on schedule. The southern economy is finally growing, but north-south boundary disputes, including the lack of implementation of the Abyei Border Commission’s decision, and a lack of transparency in oil contracts keep the south from getting its full share of oil revenues. The pilot census must proceed in order to lay the foundation for elections in 2009, and legislative reforms — including the election law — must be passed. Without international action to energize implementation of the CPA, the most likely outcome will be two Sudans, not John Garang’s vision of a united “New Sudan”.

Should the CPA collapse it is likely that security issues will be the cause. At ceremonies to celebrate the CPA’s second anniversary on January 9th, Salva Kiir, the first Vice President of the Government of National Unity and the President of the Government of southern Sudan, accused the Sudan Armed Forces (SAF) of deliberately violating the security provisions in the CPA. South of Juba and along the border between northern and southern Sudan, other armed groups associated with the central government remain a serious and destabilizing problem in the South. In Malakal, a state capital on the Nile, such tension led to combat in early December 2006; only the aggressive and timely intervention of United Nations Mission in Sudan (UNMIS) troops prevented the violence from spreading. I visited Malakal just after the incident to show the support of the U.S. government for the UN’s efforts to stabilize the situation.

It is my belief that one of the most important efforts we are undertaking in southern Sudan is to support the transformation of the Sudan People’s Liberation Army (SPLA) into a smaller, more professional military force. This will offset outside efforts to destabilize the GOSS through militias or other armed groups. The discipline and competence afforded by modern, professionally trained troops and officers will prove a stabilizing factor in Southern Sudan. At the same time, the UN, U.S. and other partners need to press forward with reform of the police and criminal justice sector so that local conflict does not escalate, thus requiring an SPLA response. Reform of the security sector in Sudan is proceeding, although more slowly than we would like. According to UNMIS, the UN Mission in Southern Sudan, SAF redeployment from southern Sudan is verified at 68 percent but further progress is hindered by delays in other security related requirements, such as the formation of units composed equally of SAF and SPLA troops known as Joint Integrated Units (JIUs). SPLA redeployment from the transitional areas along the north/south border is mostly complete but is being held up due to a delay in the formation of the Joint Integrated Units. CPA security provisions need to be implemented now or conflict is likely to erupt in several areas around oil rich Abyei and near Juba. Joint Integrated Units have been assigned locations in the main towns but are without proper training or support. Contrary to the provisions of the CPA, companies in these battalions remain in separate units for both housing and training. The SPLA is gradually downsizing into a professional army, but still needs proper training, facilities and administration for the downsized force. The U.S. plans to financially and materially support this important process of providing strategic training and mentoring to the SPLA at key levels. This assistance will not include any weapons or weapons systems and is specifically provided for under the CPA.

“Darfur: A ‘Plan B’ to Stop Genocide?”

Economic issues divide the north and south. The Sudanese economy is growing at a rate of 12% per year. Their Gross Domestic Product will double in the next six years if current growth rates are maintained, after having already doubled over the last five years through a combination of growth and currency appreciation. Wealth is concentrated in greater Khartoum (in the Arab triangle between Dongola, El Obeid, and Kasala) while other regions of the country remain impoverished and neglected. Under the CPA, the Government of National Unity is required to begin making sizeable increases in the budgets and revenues in 2007 to impoverished provinces throughout the country. These provinces have yet to see the benefits of oil revenues. The Parliament has approved these expanded provincial budgets, however the money has not yet been sent to the provinces by the Ministry of Finance.

The U.S. is a major partner for aid, but not for trade. Unilateral economic sanctions are a central element in the U.S. economic policy toward Sudan. As a result, the United States has negligible trade with Sudan and minimal investment in the country. At the same time, Sudan has built stronger economic ties with China, India Malaysia and Gulf Arab states and substantial trade continues with Japan and Europe. The Darfur Peace and Accountability Act (DPAA) and the President’s Executive Order 13412 modified the U.S. comprehensive sanctions regime against Sudan under Executive Order 13067 by easing many restrictions with respect to the Government of Southern Sudan, and certain other geographic areas, though Sudan, and specifically the Government of Sudan, is still subject to significant sanctions under U.S. law.

On the surface, Sudan’s political reform has moved forward. The National Congress Party (NCP) and the Sudan People’s Liberation Movement (SPLM) formed the Government of National Unity (GNU), organized the parliament and distributed positions at senior levels of government as they had agreed in the CPA (though civil service reform is still outstanding). The SPLM established the Government of Southern Sudan in Juba, with a limited number of positions for its NCP partners, and likewise set up the ten state governments in the south. The new government in Juba is still a weak institution in its infancy, especially in such areas as service delivery, financial management and human resource development. In recent months, however, I am happy to note that President Salva Kiir has taken steps to confront the issue of corruption in his government. In the past weeks he took decisive action to counter corruption among GOSS officials with alleged involvement in mismanagement of resources, which we believe was a needed step in improving the management of the GOSS.

Below the surface, there has been little political transformation. Whether in Khartoum or in Juba, military officers are in charge. The NCP uses the instruments of state power, particularly the security services, to limit the scope for opposition parties and to manipulate the public agenda. It would be seriously challenged in a genuinely free and fair election. The SPLM, which has broad popular support in southern Sudan, has made impressive first steps to establish itself in the north but has never faced elections itself.

There remains a major risk that elections will not be held on time. The CPA specifies that before elections, a census will be conducted throughout Sudan, but arrangements for the census are falling behind schedule. If the elections are to be held as scheduled, the census must be expedited.

Despite these serious shortcomings, there has been some progress under the CPA. Peace is holding in the south for the first time in twenty-four years. The GOS has transferred over $1 billion in oil revenues to the new GOSS. Designed by both the north and the south, the new Sudanese Pound has been introduced as the new common currency. A new government has been created in the south, commerce is thriving, the economy is growing, displaced people are returning to their ancestral homes and farms, and 75% of the 40,000 militias (most created by the GOS during the war) have been demobilized or merged into either the northern or southern armies. There is no famine in southern Sudan. We should not underestimate these achievements or the benefits of peace and increased economic growth for the average southern family. These are not insignificant achievements, but these achievements are fragile and at risk because of a failure to carry out all of the provisions of the CPA.

Overall, the situation has more cause for alarm than for reassurance. U.S. policy intended the CPA to be a turning point for Sudan’s transformation from an authoritarian state to a more just and democratic state that can be a partner for stability and security in a dangerous part of the world. Sudan is now at the halfway mark between signature of the peace accord and its first major turning point, national elections. The Assessment and Evaluation Commission (AEC), set up to monitor CPA implementation, has only a muffled voice because both the NCP and SPLM must agree to any of its decisions. The ruling National Congress Party, which has been alarmed by this trend, has done little to create the atmosphere for Southerners to want to remain in Sudan: the continuing conflict in Darfur and the tactics used by the central government there only confirm Southern fears that nothing has really changed in Khartoum. The CPA needs renewed, high level international political attention. Along these lines, the United States strongly supports the proposal being considered for an East African summit through the regional Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) to re-assemble the heads of state in the region involved in supporting the initial CPA agreement, to review progress to date and define steps needed to accelerate implementation.

These are our objectives: to provide life-saving humanitarian assistance to the millions of people who have been displaced from their homes and affected by violence in Darfur; to promote a negotiated, political settlement to the conflict that is agreed to by all parties within the framework of the Darfur Peace Agreement; to support the deployment of an AU/UN hybrid international peace-keeping force to protect civilians and ensure continued humanitarian access; and to ensure the successful implementation of the CPA. However, if we find the Sudanese government is obstructing progress on these objectives, the United States government will change its policy and will pursue more coercive measures. The burden is on the Sudanese government to show the world that it can meet and implement the commitments it has already made.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee for your time and interest in this important matter.

Index

Boldface page numbers refer to the main entry on the subject. Italic page numbers refer to illustrations. Tables and figures are specifically denoted with an italic t or an italic f respectively.

A

- AAA (Agricultural Adjustment Act), 2:365
AAFS (American Academy of Forensic Sciences), 1:491
AAI (Arab American Institute), 1:122
Aaliyah, 1:475
Aaron, Cooper v., 2:340
Aaron, Hank, 1:154, 157
AASS. See American Anti-Slavery Society
AAUG (Association of Arab-American University Graduates), 1:122
ABAKO, 1:21
Abascal, Ralph, 2:65
ABB (African Blood Brotherhood), 1:50
Abbas, Mahmoud, 1:114
Abbot, Senda Berenson, 1:158
Abductions of Australian Aboriginal children, 1:134, 137
‘Abdullahi, Khalifa, 2:60
Abernathy, Ralph David, 2:214, 215, 219
ABFA (American Board of Forensic Anthropology), 1:491
Ability testing, 2:3–4, 188
ABL (American Basketball League), 1:159
Abolition movement, 1:1–10, 6
Allen, Richard, 1:71–72
American Anti-Slavery Society, 1:72–75
antebellum era, 1:334–335
Birney, James Gillespie, 1:172–174
Brown, John, 1:249–250
chronology, 3:58–59
Cuffe, Paul, 1:373–374
Douglass, Frederick, 1:413–414
Forten, James, 1:493
Garnet, Henry Highland, 2:12–13
Garrison, William Lloyd, 2:14–15
Great Chain of Being, 2:69
Haiti, 2:76
Phillips, Wendell, 2:406–407
Quakers, 3:57
Remond, Charles Lenox, 2:489
Review of the Debate in the Virginia Legislature of 1831 and 1832 (Dew), 1:402–403 revival of the spirit of, 2:336 Revolutionary era, 3:58 state laws, 3:58–59
Truth, Sojourner, 3:168–169
Walker, David, 3:213–214
women’s rights, 1:471
Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Commission (ATSIC), 1:137
Aboriginal peoples
Canada, 1:266–267
genocide definition, 2:44
Aborigine peoples, Australian, 1:133–1:139, 2:491
Aborigines Progressive Association, 1:135 Abortion
adolescents, 1:11
body politics, 1:228–229
reproductive rights, 2:495
reproductive technologies, 2:497–498
Abourezk, James, 1:487, 2:292
Absentee Property Law (Israel), 3:242
Absolutism, 3:51–52
Abstinence-only programs, 1:10
Abstract liberalism, 1:349
Abuses, human rights border crossings, 1:231–232
Bracero Program, 1:244–245
Abyssinian Baptist Church, 2:425
Acaau, Jean-Jacques, 2:76
Academia de Lenguas Mayas, 2:288
Academic writing, 2:52
Academy Awards
McDaniel, Hattie, 2:477
Southern Poverty Law Center films, 3:94
Academy of Natural Sciences, 2:313
ACC (Atlantic Coast Conference), 1:481
Access to health care disparities, 2:83–84, 295
hypertension and coronary heart disease treatment, 2:141 mortality and social class, 3:69
Native Americans, 2:86–87
Accommodationism
Niagara Movement, 2:336, 368, 369
Washington, Booker T., 2:335, 3:214–215

- Acculturation, 1:375
 Aceyalone, 2:484
 Achievement gap, 1:426
 Acholonu, Catherine, 1:64
 ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union), 2:152, 3:18
 Acosta, José de, 3:202
 Acquisition of slaves, 3:46–47
 ACS. See American Colonization Society
 Act for the Protection of American Indian Arts and Crafts, 1:224 Action group, 1:24
 Adams, Diana, 1:391
 Adams, Henry, 3:37
 Adams, John Quincy, 1:264
 Adams, Numa P. G., 2:208
 Adams College, 1:119
 Adaptation and skin color, 3:41
Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 1:15, 16, 3:195
 ADC (Aid to Dependent Children), 3:80
 ADC (American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee), 1:122
 Addams, Jane, 2:336
La Adelitas de Aztlán, 2:253
 Ademoyega, Adewale, 1:27
 Adjaye, Joseph K., 1:205
 Adolescent Family Life Act, 1:10
 Adolescent female sexuality, 1:10–13, 3:230
 Adolescents
   African Americans, 2:21
   Latina immigrants, 2:150
   See also Teenage mothers
 Adoula, Cyrille, 1:21
 Advertising
   incendiary language, 2:241
   Native Americans, use of, 3:126
 Aesop, 3:53
 Aesthetics, 2:105
 AFDC (Aid to Families with Dependent Children), 2:319
 Affirmative action, 1:14–18
   Arab Americans, exclusion of, 1:123
   aversive racism, 1:142
   Brazil, 1:248, 1:249
   Chicano movement, 1:291
   cultural racism, 1:381–382 higher education admissions, 1:421 higher education hiring, 1:423
   Malaysia, 2:332
   Regents of California v. Bakke, 1:15, 16, 2:340, 3:195
   United States Constitution, 3:195
 Afonja, Simi, 1:64
 Africa
   heritage travel, 3:141–143
   HIV and AIDS, 2:97
   hominids, 2:118
   “Out of Africa” hypothesis, 2:395–397
   Rustin, Bayard, 2:511
   slave trade ideology, 3:45–52
   slavery in, 3:54 states and the slave trade, 3:66
   triangular slave trade, 3:160–162
   See also African diaspora; Pan-Africanism Africa: Belgian colonies, 1:18–22, 19
 Africa: British colonies, 1:22–28, 25
 Africa: French colonies, 1:28–34, 30
 Africa: German colonies, 1:34–39, 36
 Africa: Italian colonies, 1:39–43, 41
 Africa: Portuguese colonies, 1:43–47, 45
Africana: The Encyclopedia of the African and African American Experience, 1:130
 African American history
   Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, 1:126–132
   Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:418–419
 African American towns, 1:211
The African American Travel Guide (Robinson), 3:140
 African American vernacular English, 2:238, 484
 African Americans
   abolition movement, 1:3, 5–8
   adolescent female sexuality, 1:10
   American Negro Academy, 1:84–88
   antebellum black ethnology, 1:89–92
   Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, 1:126–132 athletic performance, 2:42–43
   baseball, 1:152–156
   basketball, 1:158–163, 159*t*
   The Birth of a Nation (film), 1:174–179
   black codes, 1:185–189
   blood quantum, 1:222–223
   body politics, 1:229
   boxing, 1:236, 238–242
   Caribbean immigrants, relations with, 1:271, 273–274
   citizenship, 1:315–320
   civil rights movement, 1:328–333
   Civil War, participation in the, 1:336–338 criminal justice system, 1:360–362
   dance, 1:390–393
   diseases, 1:408–411, 2:180
   “drapetomania,” 3:72–73
   exploitation, 1:450
   families, 1:455–457
   felony disenfranchisement, 1:468–469 female sexuality, 3:230
   football, 1:479–483
   Freedmen’s Bureau, 1:497–500
   Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, 2:7–8
   gangs and youth violence, 2:10–12
   gender identity, 2:20–21
   HIV and AIDS, 2:83, 98
   hypersexuality, 3:31–32, 218
   hypertension, 2:139–141 imprisonment, 1:364–365
   infant mortality, 2:175–176
   informal labor market, 2:236
   internalized racialism, 2:186–187
   Irish Americans, competition with, 2:201
   Kansas migration, 3:37–38
   Ku Klux Klan, 2:223
   League of Revolutionary Black Workers, 2:259–262
   lesbians, 2:263
   life expectancy, 2:265–266
   mortality rates, 2:84
   motherhood, 2:315–316
   NAACP, 2:335–342
   Nation of Islam and New Black Panther Party, 2:347
   New Deal, 2:366
   Olympic Games of 1904, 2:379
   Olympic Games of 1936, 2:384
   peonage cases, 2:405–406
   pornography, 2:419–420
   poverty, 2:421–422
   rap, 2:483
   reproductive rights, 2:494, 495–496
   Review of the Debate in the Virginia Legislature of 1831 and 1832 (Dew), 1:402–403
   Revolutionary era black population, 3:58
   second-class citizenship, 1:319–320 sexual exploitation of black women, 2:134
   sexuality, 3:31–32
   socioeconomic racial inequality, 3:74–75
   stereotype threat and racial stigma, 3:98–99 symbolic and modern racism, 3:111–116
   television, 3:124–126
   tokenism, 3:132–134
   tourism and national heritage, 3:134–143

- Tuskegee Syphilis Experiment, 2:290–291, 294, 295
- Urban League, 3:196–198
- Voting Rights Act of 1965, 3:205–208
- welfare stereotypes, 3:79–80
- World War I soldiers, 3:84
- See also* Black feminism; Black Reconstruction; Black soldiers; civil rights movement; Jim Crow era
- African Americans and U.S. Popular Culture* (Verney), 1:206
- African Association, 2:399
- African Blood Brotherhood (ABB), 1:50
- African-British persons, 3:185–189
- African colonization
- abolition movement, 1:3, 5
  - American Colonization Society, 1:75–80
  - Atlanta University conference, 2:335
  - Cuffe, Paul, 1:374
  - Delaney, Martin, 1:190
  - Dew, Thomas, 1:402, 403
  - Forten, James, 1:493
  - Garnet, Henry Highland, 2:13
  - Garrison, William Lloyd, 2:15
  - Pan-Africanism, 2:399–400
  - Singleton, Benjamin “Pap,” 3:38
  - Smith, James McCune, criticism by, 3:67
  - Trotter, William Monroe, opposition of, 3:168
  - Turner, Henry McNeal, 3:170
  - Walker, Moses Fleetwood, 1:153
- African culture
- black consciousness, 1:192–193
  - rap, 2:483
  - tobacco plantations, 2:409–410
- African diaspora, 1:47–51
- black consciousness, 1:192–193
  - cardiovascular disease, 2:141
  - dance, 1:391
  - transnationalism, 3:155–156
- African economic development, 1:51–56
- African Emigration Association, 2:399
- African enslavement, precolonial, 1:56–63, 59
- African feminisms, 1:63–65
- African Free School, 3:66
- African history, 1:477–478
- African Institution, 1:78
- African Methodist Episcopal (AME) Church
- abolition movement, 1:5
  - Allen, Richard, 1:71
- Turner, Henry McNeal, 3:169–170
- Vesey, Denmark, 3:200
- Walker, David, 3:212
- Wesley, Charles, 1:132
- African National Congress (ANC)
- Afrikaner Broederbond, 1:66
  - armed struggle, 1:107
  - Biko, Stephen, 1:168
  - British colonialism, 1:26
  - Mandela, Nelson, 2:281–282
  - neoliberalism, 1:102
  - nonviolent direct-action tactics, 1:100–101
  - post-apartheid era, 3:88–89
- African slaves, 2:163, 167
- African Travel Association, 3:141
- African Union
- Pan-Africanism, 2:401
  - Sudan, genocide in, 2:62
- African womanism, 1:64
- Africanism, 1:218, 276
- Africans
- abolition movement, 1:3
  - as commodities, 2:474
  - European view of, 3:45
  - Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, 2:6
  - intelligence tests, 2:193
  - Olympic Games of 1904, 2:379
  - plantations, 2:407–413
- Afrika Bambaataa, 2:96
- Afrikaner Broederbond, 1:65–67, 117, 118
- Afrikaner Weerstandbeweging (AWB), 1:66
- Afrikaners
- apartheid, 1:117–119
  - German colonialism, 1:38
  - nationalism, 3:86–87
- Afrikanervolkswag, 1:66
- Afro-American Council, 1:494
- Afrocentrism, 1:199, 2:400
- Agassiz, Louis, 2:196
- IQ, 2:189
  - polygenesis, 1:94, 2:373, 3:4
  - racial hierarchy, 2:462
  - white supremacy, 2:467
- Agon* (ballet), 1:391
- Agotes. See Cagots
- Agrarian Reform Law (Mexico), 2:168
- Agricultural Adjustment Act (AAA), 2:365
- Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee (AWOC), 3:184
- Agriculture
- Bracero Program, 2:1
  - braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:243–245
  - cheap labor, 2:229
  - farmworkers, 1:458–460
  - grape boycotts, 1:286
  - immigration reform, 2:152
  - Mexican immigrants, 1:234
  - Mexico, 2:168, 170–172
  - New Deal, 2:364–365
  - peonage cases, 2:405–406
  - plantations, 2:407–413
  - United Farm Workers, 3:184–185
  - Via Campesina, 3:153
  - white agrarian unrest, 3:91
  - See also* Farmers and farming; Farmworkers
- Aguiyi-Ironsi, Johnson, 1:27
- A-HeFT, 2:140
- Ahmed, Leila, 1:63
- Aid to Dependent Children, 3:80
- Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), 2:319
- Aidoo, Ama Ata, 1:64
- AIDS. See HIV and AIDS
- Aiken, William, Jr., 2:412
- Ailey, Alvin, 1:392
- AIM. See American Indian Movement
- Aina, Olabisi, 1:64
- “Ain’t I a Woman?” (Truth speech), 2:20, 3:168, 169
- Aiyê, Ilê, 1:194
- Ajayi-Soyinka, Omofolabo, 1:64
- Akintola, S. L., 2:400
- Alabama
- chain gangs, 1:283
  - peonage cases, 2:405
  - Scottsboro Boys, 3:16–20
- Alabama, Bailey v.*, 2:405
- Alabama Supreme Court, 3:19
- Alamo, 1:67–70, 68, 3:129
- Alamo Defenders’ Descendants Association, 1:69
- Alarcón, Norma, 2:226
- Alatorre, Soledad, 1:291
- Albania, 1:437, 1:438
- Albany Movement, 2:216
- Alcatraz occupation, 1:83, 107
- Alcohol and Native Americans, 3:103–105
- ALDH2 locus*, 2:131f
- Aldridge, Ira, 3:66
- Alexander, Neville, 1:168
- Alexander II, Czar, 1:111
- Alexander the Great, 1:461
- Alexander v. Holmes County Board of Education*, 1:253
- Algarín, Miguel, 2:428
- Algeria, 1:28–33, 2:388–389

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Ali, Muhammad, 1:192
Ali, Noble Drew, 2:347
'Ali Dinar, 2:60
Alianza Federal de las Mercedes, 1:106, 2:251, 252
Alien land laws, 1:70–71
All-American Girl (television show), 3:127
Allan, Tuzyline Jita, 1:64
“All-Asia Barred Zone,” 2:154
Alleles disease-predisposing, 2:130–131 feeble-mindedness, 3:7
  genes, as distinct from, 2:24 genetic variation, 2:31
  human genetics, 2:127, 128
  sickle cell anemia, 3:35–36
Allen, Debbie, 1:393
Allen, Ephraim, 2:14
Allen, Henry J., 3:226
Allen, Paula Gunn, 1:470, 2:263
Allen, Richard, 1:5, 71–72, 77
Allen, William, 1:204
Alliance for America, 1:104
Allison, Anthony C., 3:35
Allston, Robert F. W., 2:411
Alpha Phi Alpha, 1:132
Alpha Suffrage Club, 3:218
Alternative modernity, 2:244
Alurista, 1:145
Alvarez, Luis H., 3:239
Alviso, 2:1
Alvord, John W., 1:500
Amadeus (film), 2:275
Amadiume, Ifi, 1:64
Amazon region, 2:242, 244
Ambedkar, Bhimrao Ramji, 1:386–389, 2:9
AMEA (Association of MultiEthnic Americans), 2:326, 327
American Academy of Forensic Sciences (AAFS), 1:491
American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, 1:74
American Anthropological Association
  McGee, William John, 2:379
  Montagu, Ashley, 2:312
  Putnam, Carleton, condemnation of the work of, 3:12 statement on race, 3:14, 183
American Anti-Slavery Almanac, 1:7
American Anti-Slavery Society, 1:72–75, 74
  abolition movement, 1:7, 8
  Birney, James Gillespie, 1:172, 173
  Garrison, William Lloyd, 2:15
American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee (ADC), 1:122
American Association of Physical Anthropologists, 2:123, 312, 3:14, 183
American Basketball League (ABL), 1:159
American Board of Forensic Anthropology (ABFA), 1:491
American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), 2:152, 3:18
American Colonization Society, 1:75–81, 76†
  abolition movement, 1:5
  Birney, James Gillespie, 1:173
  Cuffe, Paul, 1:374
  Dew's criticism of, 1:403
  Forten, James, 1:493
  Garrison, William Lloyd, 2:15
  Pan-Africanism, 2:399
American Council on Education, 1:422
An American Dilemma (Myrdal), 1:251–252, 2:438, 454
American First Party, 2:351, 352
American G.I. Forum, 2:250, 303, 386, 387
American Indian Movement, 1:81–84, 83
  Alcatraz occupation, 1:107
  crime, 1:358
  federal recognition of Native Americans, 1:466
  forced sterilization, 1:487
American Indians. See Native Americans
American Klan organizations, 3:24
The American Mercury (magazine), 3:9
American Moral Reform Society, 1:7, 493
American Nazi Party, 2:349, 504–505
American Negro Academy, 1:84–88, 129
American Party, 2:359
American Presbyterian Congo Mission (APCM), 3:33–34
American Professional Football Association, 1:480
American Protective Association, 2:359
American School of Ethnology, 1:89, 92, 95
American Society of Free Persons of Colour, 1:7, 72
American Sociological Association, 3:183
American Tobacco Company, 2:509–510
American Unity League, 3:24
Americas, racial slave labor in the, 2:472–479
Amerindians, 3:63, 65, 162
Amherst College, 2:114–115
Amin, Idi, 1:27
Amin, Samir, 1:449
Amir, Yigal, 2:207
Amistad (film), 3:137
Amnesty International, 1:230, 231
Amos, Valerie, 1:49
Amputation, 2:296
Anastácia, 1:194
Anaya, Rudolfo A., 1:146
ANC (African National Congress). See African National Congress (ANC) Ancestry
  forensic anthropology, 1:488–489
  genes and genealogies, 2:22–24
“Ancient hatreds,” 1:436–437 Andean region
  interculturality, 2:244 mining operations, 3:201–202
  Napo Runa, 2:242
Anderson, Robert, 1:336
Anderson Bill, 2:451
Andrew, Governor, 1:181, 182
Andrew, John, 1:180, 337
Andrews, Adrienne R., 1:205
Angelou, Maya, 2:239
Anglo-Saxon Christian Congregation, 3:110
Angola, 1:46, 47, 192
Angolan children, 3:70
ANMA (Asociación Nacional México-Americana), 1:353, 2:250
Annaberg sugar mill, 3:136
Annan, Kofi, 1:51
Annexation of Texas, 1:69
Antebellum black ethnology, 1:89–93
Anthony, Susan B., 1:73, 471
Anthropological Society of London, 3:3
Anthropology
  blackness in Latin America, 1:218–219
  Boas, Franz, 1:225–228
  Broca, Paul, 2:464
  ethnocentrism, 1:440, 441
  Firmin, Anténor, 1:476–478, 2:77
  Garvey, Marcus, 2:17
  Italy, 1:40
  Montagu, Ashley, 2:312–313
  Morton, Samuel George, 2:313–314
  Native American remains, 2:352–353
  “Out of Africa” hypothesis, 2:391–397

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Anthropology, forensic, 1:488–492, 490
- Anthropology, history of, 1:93–97
- Anthropology Days, 2:379–381, 380, 381
- Anthropometry, 1:97–100, 98
- blood quantum, 1:222
  - cephalic index, 2:121
  - cranial index, 1:353–354
  - Firmin, Anténor, 1:476, 477
  - forensic anthropology, 1:490–491
  - German athletes, 2:383
  - Great Chain of Being, 2:71
  - Italian anthropologists, 1:40
  - Morton, Samuel George, 2:313–314
  - Native American remains, 2:352–353
  - nineteenth century, 2:189–190
  - polygenesis, 1:90, 226
  - racial hierarchy, 2:461–462
  - racial purity, 2:468–469
  - scientific racism, 3:3–4
- Anti-abolition movement, 1:8
- Anti-alien movements. See Nativism
- Anti-apartheid movement, 1:100–102
- Biko, Stephen Bantu, 1:167–169
  - impact of, 1:108
  - strikes, 1:107
- Anti-Asian sentiment, 1:401
- Anti-bias interventions, 1:142
- Anti-caste movements, 1:386–387, 388
- Anti-Catholic hostility, 2:358–359, 2:359
- Anti-Chinese sentiment, 1:308
- Anticolonialism
- African feminisms, 1:64–65
  - Caribbean activist intellectuals, 1:277
  - Césaire, Aimé, 3:155
- Anticolonization movement, 1:5–6
- Anti-communist sentiment, 1:298
- Antigambling groups, 1:104
- Anti-globalization, 1:269–270
- Anti-immigrationism
- capitalism, 1:269–270
  - movement, 2:185
  - Operation Gatekeeper, 2:385
  - Stoddard, T. Lothrop, 3:100
  - Tay-Sachs disease, 3:123–124
  - undocumented workers, 3:180
- Anti-Indian movement, 1:102–105
- Anti-lynching activism
- NAACP, 2:338
  - New Deal, 2:366
  - Wells-Barnett, Ida B., 2:486–487, 3:217–218
  - White, Walter Francis, 3:219
- Anti-Mexican sentiment
- Great Depression, 1:243–244
  - Texas Rangers, 3:129–130
- Antimiscegenation laws. See Miscegenation and antimiscegenation laws
- Anti-Peonage Act, 1:324
- Anti-Racism Action (ARA), 1:435
- Antiracist social movements, 1:105–108
- Anti-Semitism, 1:108–110, 110
- The Birth of a Nation* (film), 1:177
  - Christian Identity, 1:312–313
  - Duke, David, 1:420
  - Holocaust, 2:103–111
  - incendiary language, 2:240
  - Italy, 1:42–43
  - Jewish Defense League, 2:206–207
  - Ku Klux Klan, 2:223
  - Nation of Islam, 2:347
  - National States Rights Party, 2:351
  - Nazis, 2:361
  - New Black Panther Party, 2:348
  - Swift, Wesley, 3:110–111
  - Wagner, Richard, 3:209–212
- Anti-Semitism in Russia, 1:110–114, 112
- Anti-Semitism in the Arab world, 1:114–115
- Anti-slavery sentiment, 3:55
- Anti-slavery societies, 2:407, 3:59
- Anti-Vietnam War movement
- Baker, Ella, 1:148
  - Chicano Movement, 1:289–290, 2:252
- Antiwar films, 1:474–475
- Anti-Zionism, 1:112, 115
- Antoine, Caesar, 1:209
- Anzac Day, 1:138
- Anzaldúa, Gloria, 1:116–117
- body politics, 1:229
  - Chicana feminism, 1:287, 288
  - Chicano movement, 2:252
- Apaches, 2:164
- Apartheid, 1:117–120, 118
- Anti-apartheid movement, 1:101–102
  - cheap labor, 2:228
  - educational disparities, 1:426–427
  - ethnic cleansing, 1:436
  - HIV and AIDS, 2:98
  - Mandela, Nelson, 2:281–282
  - racial formations, 3:87–88
  - reparations, 2:492
  - scientific racism, 3:13
  - South Africa, 26
- APCM (American Presbyterian Congo Mission), 3:33–34
- Apologies
- atonement model of reparations, 2:492–493
  - vs.* reparations, 2:491
  - for slavery, 2:477
- Appalachians, 2:507–510
- Appiah, Kwame Anthony, 1:130
- Applications, job, 2:377
- Apportionment of diversity, 2:29–32, 2:30
- Appropriation in cultural studies, 1:206
- Aqualtune, 1:194
- Aquash, Anna Mae, 1:83
- Aquino, Benigno, 2:4
- ARA (Anti-Racism Action), 1:435
- Arab American Institute (AAI), 1:122
- Arab-Israeli conflict, 1:123
- Arab slave trade, 1:59
- Arab world, anti-Semitism in the, 1:114–115
- Arabs and Arab Americans, 1:120–124
- feminism, 1:63
  - French colonialism, 1:32–33
  - hate crimes, 2:81
  - Israel, 3:241–244
  - Muslims, 2:329–333
  - Sudan, 1:26
- Arafat, Yasser, 1:114
- Arawak, 2:242–243
- Archaeology, 1:488
- Arenas, Reinaldo, 2:18
- Arendt, Hannah, 2:53, 54, 435
- Argentina, 3:224, 225
- Argentine Workers' Center (CTA), 3:153
- Arguet, Manuel, 1:106
- Aristide, Jean-Bertrand, 1:277, 2:77
- Aristotle, 1:97, 478, 2:68
- Arkansas, 1:164–165
- Arkansas NAACP, 1:164
- Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp.*, 3:194
- Armattoe, Ralph, 2:400
- Armed resistance
- African National Congress, 2:281–282
  - antiracist social movements, 1:107
  - Brown, John, 1:250
  - Jewish Defense League, 2:206–207
  - race riots, 2:440
- Armenian genocide, 2:46, 47
- Armes, George, 1:255
- Army, U.S., 1:184, 2:190, 192, 192–193

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Army Medical Museum, 2:353
Arpino, Gerald, 1:391
Arranged marriages, 2:136
Arrest rate disparities, 1:365
Arrowsmith, Harold Noel, 2:504
Art
    Alamo, 1:69
    Chicana feminism, 1:287
    Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:419
The Art of War (film), 1:475
Articles of Confederation, 3:190
Artifacts, 3:140, 141
The Artificial Nigger (O'Connor), 1:393
Aryan Nations, 3:111
Aryanization, 1:284–285, 2:103–104
Asatru Folk Assembly, 2:212
Asbury, Francis, 1:2–3
“Ash 81” plan, 2:286
Ashkenazim, 3:101
Ashmun, Jehudi, 1:79–80
Asia
    African diaspora, 1:50
    Orientalism, 2:389–391
Asia Barred Zone, 1:120–121
Asian American feminism, 1:124–126
Asian American Justice Center, 1:171
Asian American Studies programs, 1:302
Asian Americans
    adolescent female sexuality, 1:12
    antimiscegenation laws, 1:212–213
    Asian American movement, 1:302
    censuses, 1:400, 401
    citizenship, 1:318
    lesbians, 2:263–264
    model minorities, 2:311–312
    motherhood, 2:316–317
    television, 3:126–127
Asian Americans and film, 1:473–476, 474
Asian dance, 1:390
Asian immigrants, 1:233–234, 267, 2:154–156, 3:187
Asian Sisters, 1:125
Asian Women’s Center, 1:125 Asians
    pornography, 2:419
    sexuality, 3:32
Asing, Norman, 1:309
Assets, persons as, 3:47–49
Assimilation
    Asian Americans, 2:311–312
    Australian Aborigin peoples, 1:134–135
    Chinese Americans, 1:297–298, 300, 301–302
    cultural deficiency theory, 1:375
    federal Native American policies, 2:356
    French colonial rule in Africa, 1:31
    Indian boarding schools, 2:157–159, 161
    intermarriage, 1:214
    machismo, 2:271–272
    Mexican Americans, 2:249, 386
    Mexican indigenous peoples, 2:301
    Native Americans, 2:51, 307–309, 501–502
    termination policy, 2:309–310
Assimilation theory of human evolution, 2:396
Assisted reproductive technologies, 2:498
Asociación Nacional México-Americana (ANMA), 1:353, 2:250
Association (historical concept), 1:31
Association for the Study of African American Life and History. See Association for the Study of Negro Life and History
Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, 1:126–132
Association of Arab-American University Graduates (AAUG), 1:122
Association of MultiEthnic Americans (AMEA), 2:326, 327
Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, 2:439
Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act (United Kingdom), 3:189
Asylum seekers. See Refugees
Atavism, 2:189
Athletic performance, genetics and, 1:162, 2:40–2:43, 3:144–151
Athletics, 2:41, 43
    African Americans, 1:332
    baseball, 1:152–157
    basketball, 1:158–163
    boxing, 1:236–242
    football, 1:479–483
    mascots, 1:83–84, 154
    Olympic Games of 1904, 2:378–381
    Olympic Games of 1936, 2:381–384
    scientific racism, 3:14–15
Atlanta compromise speech (Washington), 2:336, 368, 3:167, 214
Atlanta race riot, 2:431–432, 3:219
Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC), 1:481
Atlantic slave trade, 3:48, 160–163, 161
    African states, 3:66 beginning, 3:55 ideology, 3:44–52
    racial demographics, 2:443–447
    racialization of slavery, 3:63–64
    reparations, 2:491
    sugar industry, 2:475
    as transnationalism, 3:155
    See also Triangular slave trade
The Atlantic Slave Trade: A Census (Curtin), 2:474
ATM (August Twenty-Ninth Movement), 2:252
Atonement model of reparations, 2:492–493
ATSIC (Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Commission), 1:137
Attucks, Crispus, 1:200, 3:57–58
August Twenty-Ninth Movement (ATM), 2:252
Auld, Thomas, 1:413
Austin, Stephen F., 1:67, 3:129
Australia
    aboriginal children, removal of, 2:491
    genocide definition, 2:44
    Muslims, 2:332–333
    white settler society, 3:224, 225
Australia Day, 1:138
Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:133–139, 137, 2:491
Australoithecines, 2:118
Authenticity in cultural studies, 1:205–206
Autobiography of Malcolm X (Malcolm X and Haley), 2:280
Autoworkers, 2:259–262
Availability of slaves, 3:47
Aversive racism, 1:139–143, 141
    health consequences, 2:296 symbolic racism, relationship to, 3:115
Avery, Oswald T., 2:37
Awareness raising, 1:106
AWB (Afrikaner Weerstandbeweging), 1:66
Awe, Bolanle, 1:64
AWOC (Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee), 3:184
Awolowo, Obafemi, 1:24, 27
Ayles, Edward Duran, 3:245
Ayles, Eli, 1:79–80
Azikiwe, Nnamdi, 1:24
Azodo, Ada, 1:64

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Aztecs, 1:143, 463
 Aztlán, 1:143–146, 144, 2:251–252
Aztlán: Chicano Journal of the Social Sciences and the Arts, 1:145
Aztlán: Essays on the Chicano Homeland (Anaya and Lomeli), 1:146
Aztlán: The History, Resources, and Attractions of New Mexico (Ritch), 1:144
- B
- Baartman, Saartjie, 1:409, 2:112–114, 3:13, 14
 Babbage, Charles, 1:400
 Baby Gangsta, 2:483
 Bache, R. Meade, 2:3
 Bachman, John, 2:373
 “Backlash politics,” 2:238
 Back-to-Africa movement. See African colonization
 Bacon, Samuel, 1:79
 Bad mother, 2:318–319
 Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP), 1:388
 Bailey, Joseph Weldon, 2:434–435
Bailey v. Alabama, 2:405
 Baker, Charles “Doc,” 1:480
 Baker, Ella, 1:147–148, 252, 2:340, 512
 Baker, General, 2:261
 Baker, Howard, 2:220
 Baker, Snowy, 1:238–239
Bakke, Regents of California v., 2:340
 Balance of trade, 3:50–51
 Balanchine, George, 1:391
 Baldwin, James, 1:148–149
   civil rights movement, 1:331
   gay men, 2:18
   on racial progress, 3:132, 134
 Balewa, Abubakar Tafawa, 1:24
 Balfour Declaration, 3:240
 Balkans, 1:58
 Ball, Rudi, 2:384
 Ballard, Clergy, 2:433
 Ballet, 1:391, 1:392
 Ballethnic, 1:391
 Ballets Russes, 1:391
 Ballou, C. C., 2:440
 BAMCEF, 1:388
 Bank of Charleston, 2:477
 Bank of England, 2:477
 Banking, 3:74
 Banks, Dennis, 1:81
 Banks, Nathaniel, 1:181
 Bankson, John, 1:79
- Banneker, Benjamin, 1:89
 Bantu Education Act (South Africa), 1:100, 118–119, 3:87
 Banyarwanda, 2:57
 Baracca, 3:54
 Baraka, Amiri, 2:483
 Barbados, 2:446, 446*t*
 Barber, Jesse Max, 2:368
 Barbour, Haley, 3:221
 Barbujani, Guido, 2:31
 Barclays Bank, 2:477
 Barkeley, David, 3:83
 Barker, A. J., 2:351, 352
 Barnett, Miguel, 1:369
 Barnstorming, 1:160
 Baroja, Pio, 1:263
 Barr, Robert L., 3:221
 Barreiro, Jose, 1:368
 Barrera, Mario, 1:450
Barrios, 1:149–152, 151
 Barth, Fredrik, 3:118
 Bartmann, Sara, 2:485–486
 Barzun, Jacques, 3:10
 Basavanna, 1:386
 Baseball, 1:152–158, 155, 157
   civil rights movement, 1:332 integration of, 2:455
   scientific racism, 3:14–15
 al-Bashir, Omar, 2:62
 Basic Law of 1573, 1:463
 Basketball, 1:158–164, 159*t*, 160*t*, 161, 163, 3:15
 Bastian, Adolf, 1:225
 Batalla, Guillermo Bonfil, 2:169
 Batepá Massacre, 1:47
 Bates, Christopher (L. C.), 1:164, 165
 Bates, Daisy, 1:164–166, 165, 2:339–340
 Bates, Edward, 1:182
 Bates, Ruby, 3:18
 Bateson, William, 2:34
 Batista, Fulgencio, 1:370
 Battle of Adwa, 1:39
 Battle of the Crater, 1:183
 Battle of Kettle Hill, 1:258
 Battle of New Orleans, 3:82
 “Battle of Rhode Island,” 3:58
 Battle of San Juan Hill, 1:258
 Baum, Gordon Lee, 3:221
 Baur, Erwin, 2:488, 3:9
 Baylor, Elgin, 1:161
 Beadle, George, 2:37
 Beale, Frances, 3:27
 Beals, Melba Pattillo, 1:164
- Bean v. Southwestern Waste Management, Inc.*, 2:65
 Beasley, Tom, 1:237
 Beaumarchais, Pierre de, 2:275
 Beauregard, Pierre G. T., 1:336
A Beautiful Mind (film), 1:279 Beauty, standards of black femininity, 2:21
   Latina immigrants, 2:150
 Beauvoir, Simone de, 1:471
 Beckwourth, Jim, 1:200–201
 Bede, Venerable, 2:24–25
 Bedford-Stuyvesant Political League (BSPL), 1:311
 Bedjaoui, Mohammed, 2:401
 Beecher, Henry Ward, 1:238
 Beecher, Lyman, 2:406
 Beethoven, Ludwig van, 2:275
 Begin, Menachem, 3:241 Behavior
   assimilation, 1:375
   genetics, 1:446 health related, 3:68 racial link to, 2:461–462
 Belafonte, Harry, 1:271
 Belgian colonialism in Africa, 1:18–22, 19, 2:54–57, 3:33–34
 Bell, Cool Papa, 1:156
 Bell, Derrick, 1:254, 366
 Bell curve, 2:2
The Bell Curve (Herrnstein and Murray)
   athletic performance, 2:40 criticism of, 1:451
   eugenics, 1:446
   Herrnstein, Richard J., 2:90
   human biological variation, 2:124
   poverty, 2:508
   racial hierarchy, 2:462
   revival of Galton theories, 2:3
   scientific racism, 1:479, 3:13–14
   social class and intelligence, 2:191 stereotype threat as counterargument to, 3:99
 Bellán, Esteban Enrique, 1:156
 Bellocourt, Clyde and Vernon, 1:81
 Bello, Ahmadu, 1:24
 “Belonging,” 3:49
Beloved (film), 3:137
Belton v. Gebhart, 1:252
 Bendyshe, Thomas, 2:463
 Benedict, Ruth, 1:227, 3:181
 Benezet, Anthony, 1:2
 Benga, Ota, 3:11
 Ben-Gurion, David, 3:241
 Bennett, Augustus G., 1:182

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Bennett, Rolla, 3:200
 Bennett, Thomas, 3:200
 Benson, Stephen A., 1:80
 Bentham, Jeremy, 3:50
 Bentley, Charles E., 2:368
 Berbers, 1:32–33
Berea College v. Kentucky, 2:452
 Bergmann, Gretel, 2:384
 Bergman's rule, 3:147
 Berlin Conference, 1:35
 Berlin Olympics. See Olympic Games of 1936
 Bernal, John Desmond, 2:37
 Berube, Allan, 2:19
 Bestes, Peter, 3:58
 Bethel AME Church, 1:71, 72
 Bethel Baptist Church, 2:351
 Bethel Church Free Produce Society, 1:7
 Bethune, Mary McLeod, 1:131, 166–167, 2:366, 494
Better Luck Tomorrow (film), 1:476
Beulah (television show), 3:125
 Bevel, James, 2:219
 Beverly Cotton Manufactory, 2:476
 Beyala, Calixthe, 1:64
 B.G., 2:483
Bhakti movement, 1:386–387
 Bhopal disaster, 2:67
 Bibb, Henry, 1:7
 Bible
   anti-Semitism, 1:109
   curse of Noah, 3:62
   genesis and polygenesis, 2:24–26
   Great Chain of Being, 2:69
   monogenesis, 3:2–3
   science, 2:463–464
 Biculturalism, 2:303–304
 BiDil, 2:140
 B.I.G., Notorious, 2:97
 Bigler, John, 1:308, 309
 Biko, Stephen Bantu, 1:167–169
   black consciousness, 1:192
   British colonialism in Africa, 1:26
   funeral of, 1:169 oppression, effects of, 2:85
   South African racial formations, 3:88
 Bilingualism, 2:1–2, 303–304
 Binet, Alfred, 2:188, 191, 3:6
 Biochemical genetics, 2:36–37
 Biological anthropology, 1:226
 Biological degeneration, 1:442
 Biological evolution, 1:226
 Biological race criminal justice system, 1:362
   vs. demes, 1:399
   genetic variation, 2:33–34
   nonconcordance, 2:372
 Biological relatedness, 2:28–29
 Biological taxonomy, 3:1–2
 Biological variation, 2:121–126, 128–130, 3:103
 Biologists, 3:9
 Biology
   diabetes as a biocultural disease, 1:406
   Firmin, Anténor, 1:477
   racial classification, 1:400
 Biomedical research, 2:125
 Biracialism, 1:169–172
 Bird, Larry, 1:162
 Birdsell, Joseph B., 1:344
 Birkinau concentration camp, 2:291
 Birmingham protest, 2:216–217
 Birney, James Gillespie, 1:72, 1:172–174, 2:15
 Birth control, 2:493–495, 497
 Birth Control Federation of America, 2:494
The Birth of a Nation (film), 1:174–179, 175, 177
   Black Reconstruction, 1:208
   Dixon, Thomas, Jr., 1:412, 413
   NAACP, 2:337
   race riots, 2:436
   Second Klan, 3:21
   Trotter, William Monroe, opposition of, 3:168
Birth of a Race (film), 1:178
Birth of Texas, or Martyrs of the Alamo (film), 1:69 Birth weight, 2:174–177
 Birthright citizenship, 1:322
 Bisexual persons, 1:12–13
 Bismarck, Otto von, 1:34–35
Black British Feminism: A Reader (Mirza), 1:197
 “Black Cabinet,” 2:366
 Black Caribs, 1:202, 2:243
 Black churches, 1:205, 2:289
 Black Civil War soldiers, 1:179–185, 208, 255, 2:449, 489–490
 Black codes, 1:185–189, 1:208, 324, 3:191
 Black colonization. See African colonization
 Black communities, 1:211
 Black Community Programmes, 1:168
 Black consciousness, 1:168–169, 189–193
Black Cultural Traffic (Elam and Jackson), 1:205
Black Cultural Traffic (Osumare), 1:206
The Black Culture Industry (Cashmore), 1:205
 Black economic self-determination, 3:220
 Black ethnology, 1:89–93, 1:95–96
 Black feminism in Brazil, 1:193–195, 194
 Black feminism in the United Kingdom, 1:195–198
 Black feminism in the United States, 1:198–200
   Davis, Angela, 1:395
   Lorde, Audre, 2:270
   womanism, 3:227–229
Black Heritage Sites: An African American Odyssey and Finder's Guide (Curtis), 3:139 Black History Month, 1:132
 Black Indians, 1:200–203
 “Black Is Beautiful,” 1:229
 Black Legion, 2:276
 Black nationalism
   black consciousness, 1:191–192
   black feminism in the United States, 1:199
   Garvey, Marcus, 2:17
Black Noise: Rap Music and Black Culture in Contemporary America (Rose), 1:206 Black Panthers
   Davis, Angela, 1:394
   grass-roots programs, 1:107
   internal colonialism, 1:347
   League of Revolutionary Black Workers, work with the, 2:262
 Black People's Convention, 1:168
 Black popular culture, 1:203–207, 204
Black Popular Culture (Dent), 1:205
Black Power (Carmichael and Hamilton), 2:181 Black Power movement
   black consciousness, 1:191–192
   NAACP, 2:341
   transnationalism, 3:155
   Wilkins, Roy, criticism of, 3:227
 “Black Power” slogan, 2:218, 219
 Black racial identity, 2:187, 3:221–222
 Black Reconstruction, 1:207–211
   The Birth of a Nation (film), 1:174–179
   black Civil War veterans, 1:184
   civil rights legislation, 1:323–325
   Douglass, Frederick, 1:414
   Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:418
   Freedmen's Bureau, 1:497–500

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Plessy v. Ferguson*, 2:416
Tillman, Benjamin "Pitchfork," 3:131–132
- Black Reconstruction in America: 1860–1880* (Du Bois), 1:418
- Black redress movement, 2:491–492
- Black reparations, 2:491–492
- Black soldiers, 1:179–185, 3:81–85
Civil War, 1:208, 255, 2:449, 489–490
race riots, 2:440–441
Rhode Island Black Battalion, 3:58
Smith, James McCune, 3:67
World War II, 2:455
- Black Spades, 2:96
- Black Star Line*, 1:190
- Black Star Line Shipping Corporation, 2:16
- Black Victorian mythos, 3:141
- Black-white intermarriage, 1:211–217, 214, 216
Douglass, Frederick, 1:414
families, 1:457
Johnson, Jack, 1:239
legalization, impact of, 1:170–171
Prohibition of Mixed-Marriages Act (South Africa), 1:100
racial purity, 2:471–472
- Black women
domestic labor, 2:477–478
heart disease death rates, 3:69, 69*f* myth of hypersexuality, 3:218 sexual stereotypes, 3:31–32
sexuality, 2:485–486
Urban League, 3:196–197
womanism, 3:227–229
- Blackboard Jungle* (film), 1:332
- Blacke, James, 2:43
- Blackmun, Harry, 1:15, 16
- Blackness, 2:75–77, 3:52
- Blackness in Latin America, 1:217–222
- Blade Runner* (film), 1:475
- Blainville, Henri de, 2:113
- Blair, Tony, 2:477, 3:189
- Blair Education bill, 1:494–495
- Blake, Peter, 3:46
- Blake, William, 2:274, 275
- Blanke Bevrydingsbeweging, 1:66
- Blanke Volkstaat Party, 1:66
- Blanqueamiento*, 1:430
- Blauner, Robert, 1:450
- BLL (Buraku Liberation League), 1:260
- Blocksom, Augustus P., 2:434
- Blood
forensic anthropology, 1:490
genes and genealogies, 2:22–23
genetic markers, 2:28
heredity and social status, 1:408
limpieza de sangre policies, 2:167 racial serology, 2:27
skin color and blood type, 2:122, 2:122
- Blood group clines, 1:341, 1:342
- Blood pressure, 3:70
- Blood quantum, 1:222, 222–225
- "Bloodthirsty savage" stereotype, 2:354–355
- "Bloody Sunday," 1:333, 2:218
- Bloomer, Amelia, 1:73
- Blossom, Virgil, 1:164
- Blow, Peter, 1:415
- Blues singers, 2:263
- "Blue-vein societies," 2:325
- Blumenbach, Johann Friedrich, 2:463
anthropology, history of, 1:93
anthropometry, 1:97–98
five race categorization, 2:314, 461
folk classification, 1:478
racial classification, 1:400
racial formations, 2:459
racial hierarchy, 2:463–464, 3:2
- Blyden, Edward, 2:17
- Board of Education of Oklahoma City v. Dowell*, 1:253
- Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas, Brown v. See Brown v. Board of Education*
- Boarding schools, Indian, 1:12, 2:157–159, 160–161
- Boas, Franz, 1:225–228, 227
anthropology, history of, 1:96
antiracist sentiment, 3:181
cephalic index, 2:121
cultural anthropology, 1:218
culture, 3:6
Davenport, Charles, compared to, 3:8
Galton, Francis, criticism of, 2:3
Garvey, Marcus, criticism by, 2:17 immigrants, stature of, 1:98
Native American remains, 2:352–353
"primitive" as term, 1:440
- Bobo, Lawrence, 1:348–349
- Body politics, 1:228–230, 3:26
- Body proportions. See Anthropometry
- Body size, 3:147–148
- Boerestaat, 1:66
- Boere-Vryheidsbeweging, 1:66
- Boers, 3:86
- Boggs, Grace Lee, 1:125, 191
- "Bogota Declaration," 3:236
- Boldt Decision, 1:103
- Bolívar, Simón, 1:429–431
- Bolling v. Sharpe*, 1:252, 3:194
- Bolsheviks, 1:111
- Bonacich, Edna, 2:233
- Bonaparte, Napoleon, 2:76
- Bond, Julian, 2:341
- Bondage practices, African, 3:49–50
- Bonds, Adelia, 2:439–440
- Bonilla-Silva, Eduardo, 1:348, 349
- Bonner, T. D., 1:201
- Bonnischsen et al. v. United States*, 2:212
- Booth, John Wilkes, 1:339
- Border crossings, 1:230–232
- Border issues, 1:321–323
enforcement, 2:144
Operation Gatekeeper, 2:384–385
transnationalism, 3:156–157
undocumented workers, 3:180
- Border Patrol, 1:232–236, 235
border issues, 1:322
illegal aliens, 2:144
Operation Gatekeeper, 2:254, 384–385
Operation Wetback, 2:385–388
transnationalism, 3:156–157
- Borderlands/La Frontera: The New Mestiza* (Anzaldúa), 1:116
- Born to Rebel* (Mays), 2:289
- Borstein, Alexandria, 3:127
- Boshoff, Carl, 1:66
- Bosnia, 1:436
- Boston Associates, 2:477
- Boston Female Anti-Slavery Society, 1:7
- Boston Tea Party, 2:414
- Botha, Louis, 3:86
- Botiller et al. v. Dominguez*, 3:159
- Bouchard, Claude, 2:41
- Boulainvilliers, Henri de, 2:383
- Boulmerka, Hassiba, 3:149
- Boutros-Ghali, Boutros, 2:401
- Bowditch, Henry Pickering, 1:98
- Boxing, 1:236–243, 239, 242, 332
- Boycott, grape, 1:286, 2:251, 3:184
- Boyd, Todd, 1:206
- Boyer, Jean-Pierre, 2:76, 3:200
- Brace, C. Loring, 1:344, 2:371
- Bracero Program, 1:245
Galarza, Ernesto, 2:1
illegal aliens, 2:144, 386
overview, 1:244–245
politics of, 1:234–235 purpose, 1:459
Texas, exclusion of, 2:387

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Bracero Program, continued
transnationalism, 3:156
United Farm Workers, 3:184
- Braceros, 1:243–245, 245
- Brackins, Charlie, 1:481
- Brah, Avtar, 1:196
- Brahmo Samaj, 1:387
- Brain size. See Craniometry
- Brain trust, 1:302–304, 307
- Brass Ankles, 1:201
- Bravo, Estela, 1:192
- Brawley, Tawana, 2:102–103
- Brazil
abolition of slavery, 3:59
black consciousness, 1:192–193
education, 1:426–427, 1:427
HIV and AIDS, 2:99, 100 infant health, 3:69
population, 2:447*t*
quilombo, 1:105–106
racial demographics, 2:447
slavery, 3:63, 64
white settler society, 3:224, 225
- Brazil, black feminism in, 1:193–195, 194
- Brazilian racial formations, 1:245–249, 248
- Brazilian Women's Congress, 1:193
- Breakdancing, 2:96, 2:96
- Breare, Holly Beachley, 1:69
- Brecht, Bertolt, 1:240
- Breckinridge, John C., 1:335
- Brennan, William J., 1:15, 16, 2:282
- Breyer, Stephen, 1:15
- Bridges, Robert, 1:492
- Briggs, Aaron, 3:58
Briggs v. Elliott, 1:252
- Brigham, Carl, 2:192
- Bright, Johnny, 1:480
- Brignoni-Ponce, Felix Humberto, 1:235–236
- Brimlow, Peter, 1:322
- Brimmer, Andrew, 1:131
- Bringing Them Home* (report), 2:44
- Brinton, Daniel G., 1:226
- Briscoe, Marlin, 1:481
- Brissot, Jean-Pierre, 1:4
- British colonialism
American Indian policies, 2:306
Australia, 1:133–134, 136
capitalism, 1:268
Caribbean slaves, 1:275
Indian slavery, 2:165
language, 2:237
Native Americans as “savages,” 1:355
plantations, 2:409
racial demographics, 2:443–444
racial formations, 3:186
reservation system, 2:499–501
slave trade, 3:64
South Africa, 3:86
triangular slave trade, 3:162–163
white settler society, 3:224, 225
- British colonialism in Africa, 1:22–28, 24
- British-Israelism, 1:313
- British North America migration to, 2:444(*t*2:2)
racial demographics, 2:443–444
- British North America Act, 1:265
- British Poor Law of 1834, 3:230
- British Rubber Company, 3:202
- Broadway dance, 1:393
- Broca, Paul
anthropometry, 1:98
craniology, 3:4
Firmin, Anténor, and, 1:477
IQ, 2:189, 190
racial hierarchy, 2:464
Société d'Anthropologie de Paris, 3:3
- Broken Arrow* (film), 2:355
- Brooklyn Dodgers, 1:155
- Brooklyn Eagles, 1:154
- Brooks, Homer, 2:250
- Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and Maids, 3:218
- Brothers, Richard, 1:313
- Brown, Barney, 1:154
- Brown, Dee, 1:357
- Brown, Delores, 1:391
- Brown, Donald, 3:127
- Brown, Edgar, 2:366
- Brown, Henry Billings, 2:417
- Brown, James
black consciousness, 1:192
Herc, Kool, influence on, 2:95–96
rap, influence on, 2:483
- Brown, Jim, 1:481
- Brown, John, 1:249–250
abolition movement, 1:8
Civil War, 1:334, 335
heritage tourism, 3:140
racial slavery, 3:58
- Brown, Linda, 2:448
- Brown, Morris, 3:200
- Brown, Moses, 2:476, 3:58
- Brown, Orlando, 1:499
- Brown, Ron, 2:240
- Brown, Solomon, 3:140
- Brown, W. L., 1:344
- Brown, William L., Jr., 2:371
- Brown Berets, 1:289, 2:251, 253
- Brown Fellowship Society, 3:212
- Brown University, 2:477
- Brown v. Board of Education*, 1:250–255
civil rights movement, 1:331
Houston, Charles Hamilton, 2:114
Howard University Law School, 2:208
Marshall, Thurgood, 2:283
Mendez v. Westminster School District, citing of, 2:249
Montagu, Ashley, stance of, 2:313
NAACP, 2:339, 343
Plessy v. Ferguson, overturning of, 1:320
Roberts v. City of Boston as precursor, 2:448 segregation and the labor market, 2:232 segregation in schools, assault on, 2:455–456
United States Constitution, 3:194
White, Walter Francis, 3:220
- Brown v. Board of Education II*, 1:252, 3:194
- Browne, Irene, 1:472
- Brownell, Herbert, 2:386, 387
- Bruce, John Edward, 2:16
- Bruce, Lenny, 2:241
- Bruckmann, Friedrich, 1:284
- Brues, Alice, 1:344
- Brunswijk, Ronnie, 1:202
- Bryan, William Jennings, 3:6, 216
- Bryant, Paul “Bear,” 1:481
- BSP (Bahujan Samaj Party), 1:388
- BSPL (Bedford-Stuyvesant Political League), 1:311
- Buchanan, James, 1:336, 416
- Buchanan, Pat, 1:322, 3:112
- Buchanan, Thomas, 1:80
Buchanan v. Warley, 2:338, 454
- Buck v. Bell*, 1:445, 3:8
- Buddhism
Ambedkar, Bhimrao Ramji, 1:389
Burakumin, 1:261
- Buffalo Soldiers, 1:184, 255–259, 257, 3:83
- Buffon, Count de, 2:69–70, 3:2, 3
- Bulah v. Gebhart*, 1:252
- Bulkeley, Morgan, 2:435
- Bullard, Linda McLeever, 2:65
- Bullard, Robert D., 2:65
- Bunche, Ralph, 2:208, 401
- Buraku Liberation and Human Rights Research Institute, 1:262

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Buraku Liberation League (BLL), 1:260
Burakumin, 1:259–262
 Bureau and Institute of Ethnology, 2:78
 Bureau of American Ethnology, 1:96, 464, 2:379
 Bureau of Colored Troops, 1:180 Bureau of Indian Affairs
   assimilation, 2:307–308
   blood quantum, 1:224
   Native American identity, 3:164–165 recognition of Native Americans, 1:465–466
 Burger, Warren, 1:15
 Burgess, Ebenezer, 1:78–79
 Burlingame, Anson, 1:309
 Burlingame Treaty, 1:309, 310
 Burt, Cyril, 1:450, 451, 2:3, 3:12–13
 Burton, Scott, 2:434
Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee (Brown), 1:357
 Bush, George H. W., 2:458, 3:112
 Bush, George W., 1:300, 3:180
 “Bush Negroes,” 1:201, 202
 Busing, 1:253–254
 Busy Bee, 2:96
 Buthelezi, Gasha, 1:119
 Ibn Butlan, 3:62
 Butler, Benjamin F., 1:180
 Butler, Judith, 1:472
 Butler, Malcolm 3X, 2:279–280
 Butler, Richard, 1:312, 3:111
 Byrd, James, Jr., 2:348
- C
- Cabinet positions, 2:366
 Cabot, John, 2:307
 Cabot family, 2:476
 Caetano, Marcelo, 1:47
 Cagots, 1:263–264
 Cakewalk, 1:390, 1:390
 Caldwell, Charles, 1:94
 Caldwell, Elias B., 1:75
 Calhoun, John C., 1:94, 264–265, 2:314
 California
   alien land laws, 1:70–71
   Chinese immigration, 1:307–308
   farmworkers, 1:459
   hate crime laws, 2:79
   immigrants, 1:400
   language, 2:238, 239
   Mexican American rights, 1:353
   Proposition 187, 2:246
   Proposition 209, 1:17, 1:351
   racial segregation, 2:451
   Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 3:159
 California Civil Rights Initiative. See Proposition 209 (California)
 California Indian Legal Services (CILS), 2:357
 California-Mexico border, 2:384–385
 “The Call,” 2:336, 370
 Callahan, Judge, 3:19
 Camacho Solis, Manuel, 3:238
 Cameron, William J., 1:313
 Campaign finance, 1:299
 “Campaign for 500 Years of Indigenous, Afro-American, and Popular Resistance,” 3:236 “Campaign of Defiance of Unjust Laws,” 1:100–101
 Campanis, Al, 1:483, 3:14
 Campbell, Clive. See Herc, Kool
 Campbell, John Douglas Sutherland, 3:218
 Campbell, Sylvester, 1:391
 Campbell, Tunis, 1:208–211
 Camper, Pieter, 1:453, 2:71
 Campus climate, 1:422
 Canada
   forced sterilization, 1:485
   HIV and AIDS, 2:99
   indigenous peoples, 1:496
   Land Claims Agreement Act, 1:106
   multiculturalism, 2:321–323
   Native Americans, 1:467–468
   racial demographics, 2:444
   white settler society, 3:224, 225
Canada, Missouri ex rel. Gaines v., 2:339, 346
 Canadian Pacific Railway, 1:267
 Canadian racial formations, 1:265–267
 Canales, José Tomás, 3:130
 Canards. See Cagots
 Canary Islands, 3:54
 Canche, Alonso, 3:201
 Cannibal Law of 1503, 2:243
 Cannon, Katie Geneva, 3:229
 Canonical haplotypes, 2:131f
 Cão, Diogo, 1:20
 Cape Coast Castle, 3:141–143
 Capital deficiencies, 2:491
 Capitalism, 1:268–271
   Asian American feminism, 1:124, 125
   black feminism in the United Kingdom, 1:196
   Caribbean racial formations, 1:277
   cheap labor, 2:229
   cultural racism, 1:380
   educational disparities, 1:427
   exploitation, 1:449, 450
   labor market, 2:233
   racial slave labor, 2:476–477
   sexuality, 3:33
   slavery, 3:65
   triangular slave trade, 3:163
   underdevelopment, 1:52
Capitalism and Slavery (Williams), 2:474
 Caponi, Gena Dagel, 1:205
 Capt, San Jacinto, 3:111
 Captivity narratives, 2:354
 Cárdenas, Lázaro, 2:168, 170
 Cardenista Front for the National Reconstruction (FCRN), 3:238
 Cardiac catheterization, 2:295
 Cardiovascular responses, 2:296
 Cardoso, Fernando Henrique, 1:248–249
 CARECEN (Central American Resource Center), 2:254
 Carey, Lott, 1:79, 374
 Carey, Mariah, 1:172
 Carib people, 2:242–243
 Caribbean
   heritage tourism, 3:136–137
   HIV and AIDS, 2:97
   racial demographics, 2:445–446
   reverse migration, 1:48–49
   sex work, 3:25–26
   slavery, 3:64
 Caribbean immigration, 1:271–274, 273, 3:187
 Caribbean racial formations, 1:274–278
 Carlisle Indian School, 2:160
 Carlyle, Thomas, 1:443
 Carlyll, Hildred B., 3:122
Carmen Jones (film), 1:332
 Carmichael, Stokely
   Biko, Stephen, influence on, 1:192
   black consciousness, 1:192
   Caribbean immigration, 1:271
   institutional racism, 2:181
   internal colonialism, 1:347
   Wilkins, Roy, criticism of, 3:227
 Carnegie, Andrew, 3:5
 Carnegie Corporation, 2:357
 Carnegie Foundation, 1:131
 Carneiro, Suéli, 1:195
 Carney, William, 3:82
 Carnival, 1:49
 Carpentier, Georges, 1:240
 Carrier, Sarah, 2:441

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Carroll, Charles, 2:471
Carroll, Edward and Phenola, 2:7
Carroll, Henry, 1:75, 256
Carter, Dan T., 2:351, 3:19
Carter, Harlon, 2:387
Carter, J. E. Lindsay, 2:41
Carter, Jimmy
immigration, 2:152
King, Martin Luther, Jr., holiday, 2:220
Mays, Benjamin E., and, 2:290
Wilkins, Roy, and, 3:227
Carteret, George, 3:51
Carter's Grove plantation, 3:137
Carto, Willis, 2:349
Cartwright, Samuel, 3:72–73
Cary, Shadd, 1:7
CASA (Centro de Acción Social Autónomo), 1:291, 353, 2:252
Casa de Cultura da Mulher Negra, 1:194, 195
Casement, Roger, 3:202–203
Cashmore, Ellis, 1:205
Cashmore, Ernest, 1:348
Casinos, tribal, 1:104
Caste system
Dalits, 1:385–389
Mexico, 2:167
Castellanos, Rosario, 2:226
Castillo, Ana, 1:287
Castillo Armas, Carlos, 2:285
Castle, William E., 2:36
Castro, Fidel, 1:192, 370, 372
Castro, Raul, 1:372
Casual laborers. See Day laborers
Catherine the Great, 2:331
Catholic Welfare Conference, 1:244
Catholicism anti-Catholic nativism, 2:358–360
anti-Semitism, 1:109
Haitians, 2:76
Native American humanness, 2:25–26
Porres, Martin de, St., 2:420
Católicos por la Raza, 2:227
Cattell, James McKean, 2:188
Cattle theft, 3:129–130
Caucasians as racial classification, 2:461, 463
Caucasoids, 2:211
Cavalli-Sforza, L. Luca, 1:344, 2:32, 3:13
Cayton, Horace, 2:421–422
Caz, Grandmaster, 2:96
CDIBs (Certificates of Degree of Indian Blood), 1:224, 466–467
CDL (Christian Defense League), 3:111
Cedar Hill, 3:140
Celebrities, 2:239–241
Censorship, 2:240, 241
Census
biracialism, 1:169–172
Canada, 1:265, 267
demographics, 1:399–402
free black population in 1790 and 1810, 1:75
Haitian Americans, 2:77
Hispanic identification, 2:227, 257
Israel, 3:242
multiracial persons, 2:326–328
Native American identity, 3:164
self-identification, 2:460–461
Central America
Black Indians, 1:202–203
racial demographics, 2:446–447
Central American immigrants, 1:151–152
Central American Resource Center (CARECEN), 2:254
Central American solidarity movement, 2:254
Central Americans, 1:278–282, 280
Central Asian Muslims, 2:331
Central High School, 1:164–165, 2:339–340, 456, 3:227
Central Intelligence Agency, 1:21, 2:284–285
Central Pacific Railway Company, 1:309
Centralized states, 1:62
Centro de Acción Social Autónomo (CASA), 1:291, 353, 2:252
El Centro de la Raza, 2:227
Cephalic index, 1:226–227, 354, 2:121
CERA (Citizens Equal Rights Alliance), 1:104
CERD (International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination), 1:377, 470
Ceremonies, 1:441
Cerezo, Vicio, 2:288
Certificates of Degree of Indian Blood (CDIBs), 1:224, 466–467
Certificatory discrimination, 1:272
Cervantes, Lorna Dee, 1:287
Césaire, Aimé
African diaspora, 1:51
black consciousness movement, 1:169
Caribbean racial formations, 1:277
colonialism, 3:155
négritude, 1:219
Pan-Africanism, 2:400
Cespedes, Carlos Manuel de, 1:369
Cezar, Hendrik, 2:112–113
Chain gangs, 1:282–283, 283
Challe, Maurice, 2:388–389
Chamberlain, Houston Stewart, 1:284–285, 3:4
Chamberlain, Stuart, 2:487
Chamberlain, Wilt, 1:161
Chambers, John Graham, 1:237
Chambers, Robert, 3:5
Champagne, Duane, 3:126
Champollion, Jean-Francois, 1:477
Chan, Jackie, 1:475
Chandralekha, 1:393
Chaney, James, 1:333, 2:458, 3:206
Channing, Edward, 1:128
Chapman, Maria Weston, 1:72–74
Charity, 1:241
Charles V, 3:201
Charleston, Oscar, 1:156
Charleston, South Carolina, 2:495–496, 3:200, 212
Charlie Chan in Panama (film), 1:474
Charlottetown Accord, 1:266
Charter groups, 1:265–266
Chase, Henry, 3:139
Chase, Martha, 2:37
Chase, Salmon P., 1:187
Chase, W. Calvin, 3:215
Chávez, César Estrada, 1:285–286
Chicano movement, end of the, 2:252
Corona, Bert, and, 1:352
Huerta, Dolores, and, 2:116
La Raza, 2:227
Latino social movements, 2:251
United Farm Workers, 3:184–185
Chávez, Hugo, 1:431
Chavis, Benjamin F., 2:6, 340, 341
Cheap labor, 2:228–229, 233, 3:152–153, 176, 179
Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 1:356, 464, 2:307, 501
Cherokees, 1:356, 2:307
Chesapeake region, 2:409–410
Chesseman, Joseph, 1:80
Chew, Benjamin, 1:71
Cheyennes, 1:255–256
Chiang Kai-shek, 1:298
Chiapas, Mexico, 3:203, 235–240
Chicago Democratic Convention (1968), 2:78
Chicago movement, 2:218–219

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Chicago Race Riot of 1919, 2:440
 Chicago School of sociology,
 2:421–422
 Chicago World's Columbian
 Exposition, 1:225, 226
 Chicana feminism, 1:116, 1:286–289,
 2:226, 252–253
*Chicana Voices: Intersections of Class,
 Race, and Gender* (anthology), 1:288
 Chicana Welfare Rights Organization,
 2:253
 Chicano Anti-War Moratorium, 2:252
 Chicano movement, 1:289–291
 Aztlán, 1:145
 Corona, Bert, 1:352–353
 La Raza, 2:226–227
 overview, 2:250–252
 Chicano studies, 3:246
 Chicano Youth Liberation Conference,
 1:289
 Chicanos/Chicanas
 Aztlán, 1:143–146
 Chicano studies, 1:432–433
El Plan de Santa Barbara,
 1:432–433
 forced sterilization, 1:487
 gangs and youth violence, 2:10–12
 informal labor market, 2:236
 resistance, 2:302–303
 Child, Lydia Maria, 1:7, 72, 73, 74
 Child care, 2:148
 Child mortality, 2:412–413
 Children
 human trafficking, 2:134–138
 Indian boarding schools,
 2:157–159, 160–161
 labor exploitation, 3:176
 Native Americans, 2:51
 “Stolen generations,” 1:134, 137
 Children, racial disparities and status of, 1:291–297
 Children Now, 3:128
 Chillin Villain Empire, 2:484
 China, 1:486
 African diaspora, 1:50
 Muslims, 2:332
 “one-child policy,” 1:485
 Orientalism, 2:390
 China, racism in, 2:480–482
 China-U.S. relations, 1:297–300
 Chinatowns, 1:301–302
 Chinese Americans
 censuses, 1:400
 model minorities, 2:311–312
 poverty, 2:421
 segregation, 2:451
 vaudeville, 1:473
 Chinese Americans after World War II,
 1:300–304
 Chinese Americans and China-U.S. relations, 1:297–300
 Chinese athletes, 3:147–148
 Chinese diaspora, 1:304–307
 Chinese Equal Rights League, 1:309
 Chinese exclusion laws, 1:307–310
 China-U.S. relations, 1:298
 citizenship, 1:318
 as first immigration law, 2:154
 illegal aliens, 2:143
 intermarriage, 1:213
 Japanese immigrants, influence on,
 1:70
 model minorities, 2:311
 poverty, 2:421
 racial segregation, 2:451
 transnationalism, 3:156
 Chinese Hand Laundry Alliance
 (CHLA), 1:298
 Chinese immigration, 1:307–310, 319
 antimiscegenation laws, 1:212–213
 Australia, 1:133
 Cuba, 1:369
 Page Law, 2:497
 social stigma, 2:467
See also Chinese Americans and China-U.S. relations
 Chisholm, Shirley, 1:49, 271, 311–312
 Chistyakova, Galina, 3:148
 CHLA (Chinese Hand Laundry Alliance), 1:298
 Cho, Margaret, 3:127
 Chrestians. See Cagots
 Christian Defense League (CDL), 3:111
 Christian Identity, 1:312–315, 314,
 2:222, 504–505, 3:110
 Christian Nationalist Crusade, 3:111
 Christianity
 abolition movement, 1:2–3
 Arab Christians, 1:121
 ethnic cleansing, 1:438
 Holocaust, 2:104, 105
 Identity, response to, 1:314
 missionaries among American Indians, 2:305–310
 slavery, 2:25, 3:62
 Christophe, Henri, 2:76
 Christy, William, 1:256
 Chromosomes explained, 2:126
 heredity theory, 2:35
 Chronology
 civil rights acts, 1:327
 Civil War military disasters, 1:337
 racial slavery, 3:53–59
 Chrysler Corporation, 2:260–261, 262
 Chukukere, Gloria, 1:64
 Chukwuma, Helen, 1:64
 Church bombings, 1:333
 Church of Jesus Christ Christian, Aryan Nations, 3:111
 Church segregation, 2:448
 Churchill, Ward, 1:463
 Churchill, Winston, 2:43, 103
 Cienfuegos, Camilo, 1:370
 CIICN (Committee for Improving the Industrial Condition of Negroes in New York), 3:197
 CILS (California Indian Legal Services), 2:357
 CIOAC (Independent Confederation of Agricultural Workers and Indians), 2:169
 Circular No. 15, 1:497
 Cisneros, Sandra, 1:287 CISPES (Committee in Solidarity with the Salvadoran People), 2:254
 Cities
 Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:137
barrios, 1:149–152
 Chinatowns, 1:301
 day laborers, 1:395–396
 de facto segregation, 2:451
 Galarza, Earnest, 2:1
 gangs and youth violence, 2:9–12
 Haiti, 2:75–76
 Mexican Americans, 2:248
 Native Americans, 2:310
 occupational segregation, 2:377
 poverty, 2:421–424
 race riots, 2:439–440
 Second Great Migration, 1:330
 Second Klan, 3:22
 urban renewal, 2:424
 urban unrest, 3:81
The Citizens' Council (newspaper),
 3:220
 Citizens Equal Rights Alliance (CERA),
 1:104
Citizens' Informer (newsletter), 3:221
 Citizens Stand-Up Committee, 1:103
 Citizenship, 1:315–321, 321–323
 American Indians, 1:355–357
 Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:134
 black Civil War soldiers, 1:179–180
 Black Reconstruction, 1:208
 cultural racism, 1:382
Dred Scott v. Sandford, 1:415–418
 Fourteenth Amendment, 3:191
 Israel, 3:242
 Japanese Americans, 2:204

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Citizenship, continued
Puerto Ricans, 2:426, 427
Rwanda, 2:55, 57
- City of Mobile v. Bolden*, 3:207
- Civil disobedience
Anti-apartheid Movement, 1:100–101
antiracist social movements, 1:107
civil rights movement, 1:332–333
- Civil rights
Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:135–136
Cuffe, Paul, 1:374
data collection policies, 2:326
Douglass, Frederick, 1:414
Dred Scott v. Sanford, 1:417
Haiti, 2:76
Houston, Charles Hamilton, 2:114–115
Latinos, 2:256
Marshall, Thurgood, 2:282–284
Mays, Benjamin E., 2:289–290
Mexican Americans, 1:285–286
NAACP, 2:336–341, 342–346
National Afro-American League, 1:494
Northern segregation, 2:450
Plessy v. Ferguson, 2:416–418
- Civil Rights Act of 1866, 1:188, 189, 208, 324, 3:191
- Civil Rights Act of 1875, 1:210, 325, 3:193
- Civil Rights Act of 1957, 1:325, 2:340
- Civil Rights Act of 1960, 1:325
- Civil Rights Act of 1964
affirmative action, 1:15
civil rights movement, 1:333
King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:218
NAACP, 2:340
overview, 1:326–327
Powell, Adam Clayton, Jr., 2:425
racial desegregation, 2:458
Southern Poverty Law Center, 3:93
tokenism, 3:133
Wilkins, Roy, 3:226
women's rights, 1:471
- Civil Rights Act of 1965. See Voting Rights Act of 1965
- Civil Rights Act of 1991, 1:326, 2:341
- Civil rights acts, 1:323–328
- Civil Rights Cases*
Black Reconstruction, 1:210
civil rights acts, 1:325
Plessy v. Ferguson, as precursor to, 2:470
racial segregation, 2:450
southern politics, 3:90–91
United States Constitution, 3:193
- Civil Rights March of 1968, 2:457
- Civil Rights Memorial, 3:93, 94–95, 3:95
- Civil rights movement, 1:328–334
abolition movement, 1:9
Baker, Ella, 1:147–148
baseball, 1:152
Bates, Daisy, 1:164–165
black-white intermarriage, 1:213–214
Brown v. Board of Education, 1:252–253
Caribbean immigrants, 1:273–274
censuses, 1:401
civil rights acts, 1:325–326
critical race theory, 1:366–367
dance, 1:391
Hamer, Fannie Lou, 2:78–79
heritage tourism, 3:140
impact of, 1:108
internal colonialism, 1:346–347
King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:214–219
NAACP, 2:340
National States Rights Party, 2:351
Pan-Africanism, 2:400
Powell, Adam Clayton, Jr., 2:424–425 protest strategies, 1:107
Rustin, Bayard, 2:511–512
scientific racism, 3:12
Southern Poverty Law Center, 3:93–95
Urban League, 3:197–198
Voting Rights Act of 1965, 3:205–208, 206
welfare, 3:80–81
Wells-Barnett, Ida B., 3:217–218
White, Walter Francis, 3:219–220
Wilkins, Roy, 3:226–227
- Civil service, 2:160
- Civil suits. See Lawsuits
- Civil War, American, 1:181, 334–340, 338
abolition movement, 1:8
baseball, 1:153
black recruitment, 1:179–180, 2:489–490, 3:170
Confiscation Acts, 1:434
Garnet, Henry Highland, 2:13
heritage tourism, 3:138
soldiers of color, 3:82–83
tuberculosis, 1:409
- Civil War soldiers, black, 1:179–185, 208, 255, 2:449, 489–490
- Civil wars
Central America, 1:279–280, 1:280
Nigeria, 1:27
racial slavery, 3:59
Rwanda, 2:57
- Civilization
Christianity, as equated with, 2:306
as culture, 3:6
European notions of, 3:86
“Civilized” and “civilizing”
British Native American policies, 2:499
ethnocentrism, 1:440
French colonialism in Africa, 1:31
German colonialism in Africa, 1:38
missionaries among American Indians, 2:306–307
Native Americans, 2:160
“The Claims of the Negro Ethnologically Concerned” (Douglass), 1:92
The Clansman (Dixon)
The Birth of a Nation (film), 1:175
Black Reconstruction, 1:208
Dixon, Thomas, Jr., 1:412–413
racial purity, 2:471
Second Klan, 3:20
Trotter, William Monroe, opposition of, 3:168
- Clarendon County, South Carolina, 2:452
- Clark, Jim, 2:218
- Clark, Kenneth, 1:271, 347, 2:283, 339
- Clarke, Edward, 3:21, 22
- Clarkson, Thomas, 1:5
- Class issues. See Social class; Socioeconomic status
- Classical genetics, 2:35
- Classification. See Racial classification
- Classification, folk, 1:478–479
- Clay, Henry, 1:75, 78, 264
- Cleaver, Eldridge, 1:192
- Cleburne, Patrick R., 1:183
- Clemente, Roberto, 1:157
- Cleveland, Grover, 3:131
- Cleveland Indians, 1:155–156
- Clines, 1:340–341, 341–346, 342
Montagu, Ashley, 2:313
skin color, 3:39, 40f
- Clinton, Bill
apology for slavery, 2:477 campaign finance scandal, 1:299
environmental justice, 2:66
Flipper, Henry O., pardon of, 1:258
Grant, Bob, comments of, 2:240
Initiative on Race, 2:298
Operation Gatekeeper, 2:384 on violence and blackness, 1:236 welfare reform, 3:81
- Clovese, Joseph, 1:184
- Clusters, 1:341, 1:346
- Clyatt v. Untied States*, 2:405

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Coaches, 1:481–482
Cobo, José Martínez, 2:173
Coca-Cola Company, 2:67
Cockrel, Kenneth, 2:261, 262
Cockrill v. California, 1:70
COCOPA (Commission for Agreement and Pacification for the Mexican Congress), 3:238, 239
Le Code Noir, 3:42
“Code of the streets,” 2:273
Cody, Buffalo Bill, 2:354
Coe, Isabel, 1:136
Coe v. Commonwealth, 1:136
COFO (Council of Federated Organizations), 1:333
Cogoano, Quobna Ottobah, 1:5
Coke, Thomas, 1:2–3
Coker, Daniel, 1:5, 79, 374
Cokhamela, 1:386
Colbert, Jean Baptiste, 3:51
Cold war
    Chinese Americans, 1:298
    civil rights movement, 1:332–333
    Guatemala, 2:285
    nativism, 2:360
    Orientalism, 2:390–391
    scientific racism, 3:11–12
    South Africa, 1:101
Coleman, Benjamin, 1:2–3
Coleman, Elihu, 1:2, 3:57
Colescott, James, 3:24
Collective consciousness, 1:106
Collective economic power, 1:147–148
College basketball, 1:158, 159*t*, 161
College Board, 3:96, 97
College of William and Mary, 1:402
Collier, John, 2:309, 367
Collins, Colin, 1:168
Collins, Patricia Hill, 1:470, 2:18
Colombia
    Napo Runa, 2:242
    rubber workers, 3:202
Colonial America
    anthropology, 1:93–94
    citizenship, 1:315–317
    slave codes, 3:43
Colonialism, Belgian, in Africa, 1:18–22
Colonialism, British, in Africa, 1:22–28, 24
Colonialism, French, in Africa, 1:28–34, 30
Colonialism, German, in Africa, 1:34–39, 36
Colonialism, internal, 1:346–348, 1:358
Colonialism, Italian, in Africa, 1:39–43, 41
Colonialism, Portuguese, in Africa, 1:43–47, 45
Colonialism and imperialism
    African economic development, 1:53
    body politics, 1:230
    capitalism, 1:268–270
    Caribbean plantations, 1:274–276
    Chinese diaspora, 1:305
    Cuba, 1:368–369
    Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:419
    educational disparities, 1:425–426
    el mestizaje, 1:428–430
    exploitation, 1:449, 450, 2:134–135
    film depictions of Asian Americans, 1:474–475
    forced sterilization, 1:487–488
    genocide and ethnocide, 2:48–52
    globalization, roots of, 1:5
    Haiti, 2:76
    HIV and AIDS, 2:98
    Indian slavery, 2:163–166
    indigenous Mexicans, 2:166–167
    indigenous peoples, 2:173–174
    language, 2:237
    Napo Runa uprising, 2:242
    Native American treaties, 1:464
    Native Americans, 1:462, 463
    Old World diseases, 2:178
    polygenesis, 2:25–26
    poverty, 2:422–423
    Puerto Rico, 2:426–427
    race relations, 2:189
    race riots, 2:435
    racial formations, 2:459
    racial hierarchy, 2:464
    racial slave labor, 2:472–478
    reservation system, 2:499–501, 500, 501
    Rwanda, 2:54–57
    sexuality, 3:31–33
    slave trade ideology, 3:44–52
    slavery, 3:62
    social Darwinism, 3:5–6
    South African racial formations, 3:85–86
    Tillman, Benjamin “Pitchfork,” 3:132
    white settler society, 3:223–225
    Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235
Colonial soldiers, 1:33, 38
Colonial Williamsburg, 3:135, 137
Colonization. See African colonization
- Color lines
    blackness, 3:52
    racial classifications, 3:65
Color-blind racism, 1:348–352
    See also Cultural racism; Everyday racism
Color-blindness, legal, 2:418, 3:195
Colored Convention Movement, 1:77
Colored Farmers’ National Alliance and Cooperative Union, 3:91
Coltivo de Mulheres Negras da Baixada Santista, 1:195
Columbia University, 1:9, 226, 227
Columbian exchange, 2:473
Columbus, Christopher
    Arawak, 2:243
    blackness in Latin America, 1:217
    el mestizaje, 1:428
    Euro-African relations, 3:54
    gold, 2:473
    Indian slavery, 2:166
Columbus Day, 2:166, 227
Comanches, 2:164
Comas, Juan, 3:12
Combahee River Collective, 1:199, 2:487
Combe, Frederick, 2:434
Coming of Age in Samoa (Mead), 1:227–228
Comisión Femenil Mexicana Nacional, 1:288, 2:253
El Comité de Orgullo Homosexual Latino-Americano, 2:253
Comité de Unidad Campesina, 2:285
Commemorative stamps, 3:227
Commission for Agreement and Pacification of the Mexican Congress (COCOPA), 3:238, 239
Commission for Historical Clarification, 2:284, 285, 288
Commission for Racial Equality, 3:187, 189
Commission on Human Rights, U.N., 1:231
Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians (CWRIC), 2:204
Commissioned officers, 2:338
Committee for Improving the Industrial Condition of Negroes in New York (CIICN), 3:197
Committee in Solidarity with the Salvadoran People (CISPES), 2:254
Committee on Raza Rights, 2:227
Committee on Urban Conditions Among Negroes, 3:197
Committee to Free Los Tres, 1:291

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Commodities bodies as, 3:33 rights as, 3:47–50
triangular slave trade, 3:161
women as, 2:137, 138
- Commodity in cultural studies, 1:206
- Common In-group Identity Model, 1:142
- Commonwealth Immigrants Act (United Kingdom), 3:187
- Commonwealth v. Jennison*, 1:4
- Communism
Chicano movement, 1:291
egalitarianism, 3:11–12
Palmer raids, 2:360
- Communities
criminal justice system disparities, 1:362
transnationalism, 3:157
triracial isolates, 3:163–166
- Community development, 2:1
- Community education, 2:80
- Community organizing, 1:353
- Community Service Organization (CSO), 1:285–286, 353, 2:116, 251
- Company of Royal Adventurers, 3:51
- Comparable worth. See Pay equity
- Comparative method of anthropological study, 1:96, 226
- Compartet, Bertrand L., 1:313, 3:111
- Competition, 3:5
- Complete health, 2:84–85
- Complexions Dance, 1:393
- Comprehensive Anti-apartheid Act, 1:101
- Compromise of 1850, 1:335
- Compromise of 1877, 1:210
- Compromise of 1937, 3:19
- Comunidad de Orgullo Gay*, 2:253
- Comunidades y Pueblos en Resistencia*, 2:287
- CONAI (National Mediation Intermediation Commission), 3:238, 239
- Concentration camps, 2:108–111, 291
- La Conciencia mestiza*, 1:116
- Concubines, 3:61
- The Condition, Elevation, Emigration, and Destiny of the Colored People of the United States, Politically Considered* (Delany), 1:91, 190
- Condominium government, 1:26
- Condon, Nixon v.*, 2:338
- Condorcet, Marquis de, 1:4
- Cone, James, 1:192
- Confederacy of nations, 1:462
- Confederate Army, 1:183–184
- Confederate States of America, 1:336
- The Confessions of Nat Turner* (Gray), 3:172
- Confiscation Acts, 1:434
- Confucianism, 2:480
- Congestive heart failure, 2:140
- Congo, 1:18–22, 3:33–34
- Congo Reform Association (CRA), 3:34
- Congolese National Movement, 3:21
- Congregationalist Church, 1:73
- Congress of Berlin, 2:399
- Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO), 2:250
- Congress of Racial Equality (CORE)
Chicago movement, 2:219
civil rights movement, 1:331, 332–333
Rustin, Bayard, 2:511
- Congress of the Land Act, 3:159
- Congressional Black Caucus, 1:311
- Congressional Gold Medal, 3:227
- Congressional Medal of Honor
African Americans, 1:337–338
black soldiers, 1:184, 3:83
Buffalo Soldiers, 1:258
- Connor, Eugene “Bull,” 2:216–217, 218, 457
- Conquest. See Colonialism and imperialism
- Conscious rap music, 2:484
- Conservatism
cultural racism, 1:381–382 culture of poverty theory, 2:232 racial differences and human behavior, 3:183 symbolic racism, 3:112, 113
- Conservative Party (CP), 1:66
- Constantine, Emperor, 1:109
- Constitution, Australian, 1:134
- Constitution, Mexican, 2:168, 170, 3:239
- Constitution, South African, 1:118
- Constitution, United States. See United States Constitution
- Constitutional Convention, 3:190
- Consumer market, 2:478
- Contact hypothesis, 1:142, 3:77–78
- Contextual racism, 1:362
- Continental Army, 3:82
- Continuity, Principle of, 2:69
- Continuous variations, 1:341–346
- Contra war, 2:243–244
- Contrabands of war, 1:181
- Convention 169 (International Labour Organization), 3:236–237
- Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 2:43–44
- Conversion, religious Jews, 2:106
Native Americans, 2:306
- Convict lease program, 1:282
- Conyers, John, 2:219, 220, 493
- Coolidge, Calvin, 1:167
- Coolie system, 1:369
- Coon, Carleton, 2:26, 393, 3:4, 12
- Cooper, Anna J., 1:199
- Cooper, Chuck, 1:161
- Cooper, James Fenimore, 1:461, 2:354
- Cooper, Thomas, 1:2–3
- Cooper v. Aaron*, 2:340
- Cooptation, 1:108
- Coordinadora Nacional de las Viudas de Guatemala*, 2:288
- Coram nobis* lawsuits, 2:204
- Corbett, Jim, 1:238
- CORE. See Congress of Racial Equality (CORE)
- Cornish, Samuel Eli, 1:6, 7, 72, 3:213
- Corona, Bert, 1:291, 352–353, 2:252
- Coronary heart disease, 2:138–142
- Corporations with links to slavery, 2:477
- Corrigan v. Buckley*, 2:454
- Cortés, Hernán, 2:225, 3:201
- Cortez, Gregorio, 3:130
- Cortina, Juan, 3:129
- Cosatu, 1:102
- Cosby, Bill, 3:125
- The Cosby Show*, 3:125, 3:125
- Cosmic race, 1:430
- Cosmology, 1:462
- Costa Rica, 2:446
- Costner, Kevin, 2:355
- Cotera, Marta, 1:287
- Cotswold Agreement, 2:505
- Cotton
plantations, 2:410, 410–411, 476
racial slave labor, 2:472–473, 475–477
slavery, 3:57
- Cotton gin, 2:477, 3:59
- Coubertin, Pierre de, 2:380, 381
- Coughlin, Charles, 2:240, 3:111
- Council for Negro Women, 1:166
- Council of Conservative Citizens, 2:185, 3:220–221

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Council of Federated Organizations (COFO), 1:333
- Council of Nicaea, 2:325
- Counterculture, 2:415
- Counterinsurgency, Guatemalan, 2:285–288
- Counter-stereotypic associations, 1:142, 143
- Country discrimination, 1:272
- Court cases
- Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Peña*, 1:15, 16, 3:195
  - Alexander v. Holmes County Board of Education*, 1:253
  - Arlington Heights v. Metropolitan Housing Development Corp.*, 3:194
  - Bailey v. Alabama*, 2:405
  - Bean v. Southwestern Waste Management, Inc.*, 2:65
  - Belton v. Gebhart*, 1:252
  - Bere College v. Kentucky*, 2:452
  - Board of Education of Oklahoma City v. Dowell*, 1:253
  - Bolling v. Sharpe*, 1:252, 3:194
  - Bonnischsen et al. v. United States*, 2:212
  - Botiller et al. v. Dominguez*, 3:159
  - Briggs v. Elliott*, 1:252
  - Brown v. Board of Education II*, 1:252, 3:194
  - Buchanan v. Warley*, 2:338, 454
  - Buck v. Bell*, 1:445, 3:8
  - Bulah v. Gebhart*, 1:252
  - Cherokee Nation v. Georgia*, 1:356, 464, 2:307, 501
  - City of Mobile v. Bolden*, 3:207
  - Civil Rights Cases*, 1:210, 325, 2:450, 3:90–91
  - Chyatt v. United States*, 2:405
  - Cockrill v. California*, 1:70
  - Coe v. Commonwealth*, 1:136
  - Commonwealth v. Jennison*, 1:4
  - Cooper v. Aaron*, 2:340
  - Corrigan v. Buckley*, 2:454
  - Cumming v. Richmond County Board of Education*, 3:193
  - Davis v. County School Board of Prince Edward County*, 1:252
  - Elk v. Wilkins*, 1:318–319
  - Fong Yue Ting v. United States*, 1:310
  - Franklin v. State of South Carolina*, 2:338
  - Freeman v. Pitts*, 1:253
  - Frick v. Webb*, 1:70
  - Fujii v. State of California*, 1:71
  - Fullilove v. Klutznick*, 1:16
  - Gayle v. Browder*, 2:456, 3:226
  - Gong Lum v. Lee*, 3:193
  - Gratz v. Bollinger*, 1:16
  - Green v. County School Board of New Kent County*, 1:253
  - Griffin v. County School Board of Prince Edward County*, 1:253
  - Griggs v. Duke Power*, 1:326, 3:133
  - Grovey v. Townsend*, 2:338
  - Grutter v. Bollinger*, 1:16
  - Guinn v. United States*, 1:331, 2:338, 454, 3:92
  - Hall v. DeCuir*, 2:451
  - Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections*, 3:206
  - Hocutt v. Wilson*, 2:338
  - Hobri v. United States*, 2:204
  - Johnson v. McIntosh*, 1:356, 2:48–49, 51, 307
  - Katzenbach v. McClung*, 2:458
  - Korematsu v. United States*, 3:193
  - Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock*, 2:48, 162
  - Louisville, New Orleans & Texas Railway Co. v. Mississippi*, 2:451
  - Loving v. Virginia*, 1:170, 213–214, 3:194
  - McCleskey v. Kemp*, 3:194
  - McLaurin v. Board of Regents*, 1:252, 331, 2:339, 3:194
  - Mendez v. Westminster School District*, 2:249, 302, 451
  - Metro Broadcasting, Inc. v. Federal Communications Commission*, 1:16
  - Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada*, 1:251, 331, 2:339, 346, 454
  - Missouri v. Jenkins*, 1:253
  - Mitchell v. United States*, 2:454
  - Moore v. Dempsey*, 2:338
  - Morgan v. Virginia*, 2:216, 339, 454–455
  - Namba v. McCourt*, 1:71
  - Nixon v. Condon*, 2:338
  - Oyama v. California*, 1:71
  - Pace v. Alabama*, 2:450
  - Pearson v. Murray*, 1:251
  - People v. de la Guerra*, 3:159
  - Perez v. Lippold*, 2:451
  - Porterfield v. Webb*, 1:70
  - Powell v. Alabama*, 3:18
  - Powell v. McCormack*, 2:425
  - Prigg v. Pennsylvania*, 3:191
  - Regents of the University of California v. Bakke*, 1:15, 16, 2:340, 3:195
  - Richmond v. J. A. Croson Company*, 1:16, 3:195
  - Roberts v. City of Boston*, 2:448–449
  - Scottsboro Boys*, 3:16–20
  - Shaw v. Reno*, 3:194, 208
  - Shelley v. Kraemer*, 1:331, 2:344–345
  - Sipuel v. Oklahoma State Regents*, 1:252, 331, 2:346
  - Slaughterhouse Cases*, 1:325
  - Smith v. Allwright*, 1:331, 2:338, 344, 345, 3:206
  - Somerset v. Steuart*, 1:5
  - State of Montana v. Oakland*, 1:71
  - Strauder v. West Virginia*, 3:191, 193
  - Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education*, 1:253
  - Sweatt v. Painter*, 1:252, 331, 2:339, 345–346, 455, 3:194
  - Terrace v. Thompson*, 1:70
  - Thorn v. Gingles*, 3:207–208
  - United States v. Carolene Products Co.*, 3:193
  - United States v. Cruikshank*, 1:325
  - United States v. Fordice*, 2:343
  - United States v. Reynolds*, 2:405
  - University of Maryland v. Murray*, 2:283
  - Washington v. Davis*, 3:194
  - Webb v. O'Brien*, 1:70
  - Worcester v. Georgia*, 1:356, 2:554
  - Wysinger v. Crookshank*, 2:451
  - Yick Wo v. Hopkins*, 2:451, 3:194
- See also Brown v. Board of Education; Dred Scott v. Sandford; Plessy v. Ferguson
- Court cases, NAACP, 2:342–346
- Court of Private Land Claims, 3:159
- Courts, Freedmen's Bureau, 1:500
- Cover, Robert M., 1:366
- Cox, Oliver C., 2:438
- Cox Report, 1:299–300
- CP (Conservative Party), 1:66
- CRA (Congo Reform Association), 3:34
- Crania Aegyptiaca* (Morton), 2:314
- Crania Americana* (Morton), 1:222, 2:314, 461–462, 464
- Cranial index, 1:353–355, 491
- Craniometry
- anthropology, 1:97
  - anthropometry, 1:97–98
  - Firmin, Anténor, 1:476, 477
  - genetic variation, 2:31
  - German athletes, 2:383
  - Great Chain of Being, 2:71
  - intelligence, 2:189–190
  - Morton, Samuel George, 2:313–314
  - polygenesis, 1:90
  - racial hierarchy, 2:461–462
  - racial purity, 2:468–469
  - scientific racism, 3:3–4
- Creation stories, 1:462
- Creationism, 1:90
- Creativity Movement, 2:504, 505

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Creeks, 1:201
Crennel, Romeo, 1:482
Crenshaw, Kimberlé Williams, 1:367, 472, 2:18
Creolization, 1:48
Cribb, Tom, 1:237
Crichton, Michael, 1:475
Crick, Francis, 2:34, 37–38
Crime
    cultural racism, 1:382
    Ku Klux Klan, 2:223–224
    poor people, 3:72
    substance abuse and, 3:106
Crime and American Indians, 1:355–360, 357
Criminal justice system, 1:360–362, 361
    American Indians, 1:358
    chain gangs, 1:282–283
    Freedmen's Bureau, 1:500
    gangs and youth violence, 2:11
    German colonialism in Africa, 1:37
    institutional racism, 2:182
    Israel, 3:243
    Native Americans, 3:106
    racial segregation, 2:452
    United Kingdom, 3:187
Criminal surety laws, 2:405
Criminality, 1:362–365, 364, 2:189
Criola, 1:194
The Crisis (magazine), 2:336, 3:226
Critical legal studies, 1:366
Critical race theory, 1:365–368
Critical Resistance movement, 1:395
Croatia, 1:437
Crocker, Charles, 1:309
Crockett, Davy, 1:67, 2:508
Crogman, William H., 1:84–88
Cromwell, John W., 1:84–88, 85
Cronje, Geoffrey, 1:118
Croom, Sylvester, 1:482
Cross, William, Jr., 3:221
Crow Dog, Mary, 2:316
Crown property, 1:26
Crozer, Samuel, 1:79
CRT. See Critical race theory
Cruel and unusual punishment, 1:283
Crummell, Alexander, 1:84, 85, 129, 2:13, 3:66
Crusade Against Corruption, 2:352
Crusade for Justice, 1:289, 2:251, 252
Crusades, 3:54
Cruse, Harold, 1:346
Cruz, Celia, 1:271
CSO (Community Service Organization), 1:285–286, 353, 2:251
CTA (Argentine Workers' Center), 3:153
Cuba
    baseball, 1:156
    dance, 1:391
    population, 2:445*t*
    racial demographics, 2:445–446
    Spanish-American War, 1:258
Cuban Giants, 1:153
Cuban immigrants, 1:150, 272
Cuban Missile Crisis, 1:371
Cuban racial formations, 1:368–373
Cuban Revolution, 1:370–373
Cuffe, John, 3:58
Cuffe, Paul, 1:3, 373–374, 2:399, 3:58
Cuidad Juarez, Mexico, 2:254
Culberson, Charles, 2:434
Cultural anthropology
    blackness in Latin America, 1:218–219
    Boas, Franz, 1:225–228
Cultural construct, race as, 1:226
Cultural deficiency, 1:374–377, 2:232
Cultural determinism, 1:227–228
Cultural difference, 1:378–380
Cultural diversity. See Diversity
Cultural ethnocide, 2:309
Cultural evolution, 1:226, 2:468–469
Cultural genocide, 1:356, 357
Cultural integration, 2:301
Cultural mistrust, 2:299
Cultural nationalism
    Chicano movement, 2:252
    critical race theory, 1:367
Cultural pluralism, 1:375–376
Cultural racism
    black feminism in the United Kingdom, 1:197
    border issues, 1:322, 377–383
    social psychology of racism, 3:75
    See also Color-blind racism
Cultural relativism
    Boas, Franz, 1:227
    cultural racism, 1:378–379
    ethnocentrism, 1:441
Cultural symbols, 3:185
Culture
    African diaspora, 1:48, 49
    athletic performance, 3:149–150
    aversive racism, 1:140
    Aztlán, 1:143–146
    bias in intelligence tests, 2:196–197 civilization as, 3:6
    ethnic cleansing, 1:436
    ethnicity as construct of, 1:375
    French colonial representations of Africa, 1:29–31
    heterosexism and homophobia, 2:92–93
    Holocaust, 2:125
    intelligence tests, 2:193–195
    IQ, 2:124–125
    Latin American racial transformations, 2:241–245
    Latina immigrants, 2:150–151
    Mexico, 2:304
    Native Americans, 1:462, 2:51
    Orientalism, 2:389–391
    Puerto Ricans, 2:428
    Roma, 2:507
    sexuality, 3:31
    social psychology of racism, 3:74–78
    tradition, 1:206
    transnationalism, 3:155–156, 157
Culture of poverty, 1:378, 2:232, 422
    See also Cultural deficiency
Cultures of resistance, 1:105–106, 3:235
Cumia, Anthony, 2:241
Cumming v. Richmond County Board of Education, 3:193
Cumulative disadvantage, 2:175–176
Cuney-Hare, Maude, 1:204
Cunningham, Sam “Bam,” 1:481
Curriculum, 1:424
Curse of Ham. See Hamitic curse
Curtin, Edward, 2:415
Curtin, Philip D., 2:474
Curtis, Nancy C., 3:139
Cushing, Frank Hamilton, 2:415
Custer, George, 1:257
Cuvalier, François, 1:272
Cuvier, Georges, 2:70–71, 113, 486
Czarist Russia, 1:110–111
- ## D
- Da Ponte, Lorenzo, 2:275
Dadoo, Yusuf, 1:100–101
Da Silva, Benedita, 1:194, 1:194
Da Silva, Xica, 1:194
Dahomey, 3:66
Dalai Lama, 2:4
Daley, Richard, 2:218
Dalit Panther movement, 1:388
Dalits, 1:263, 1:385–389, 388
Daly, Mary, 1:470
Dance, 1:389–394, 390, 392

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Dance Theatre of Harlem (DTH), 1:391
- Dances with Wolves* (film), 2:355
- Dancing* (documentary), 1:393
- Dandara, 1:194
- Dandridge, Dorothy, 1:332
- Dandridge, Roy, 1:154, 156
- Daniken, Erich von, 1:463
- Danjuma, Theophilus, 1:27
- Danson, Ted, 2:240
- Darfur. See Genocide in Sudan
- Darlington, Cyril, 3:182
- Darrow, Clarence, 3:9
- Dart, Raymond, 2:118
- Darwin, Charles
  - biological evolution, 1:226
  - eugenics, 1:442, 444–445
  - Galton, Francis, influence on, 2:2
  - natural selection, 2:468
  - polygenesis, 2:373
  - species varieties, 3:102–103
  - survival of the fittest, 2:487, 3:7
  - unanswered questions, 2:35
- Data collection
  - Intelligence Project, 2:184
  - multiracial movement, 2:326–327
- Daughters of Bilitis, 2:262
- Daughters of the Republic of Texas (DRT), 1:67, 69
- Davenport, Charles
  - Boas, Franz, compared to, 3:8
  - eugenics, 3:9
  - racial purity, 2:466, 487
  - scientific racism, 3:6
  - subspecies, 3:103
  - Zeitschrift für Morphologie und Anthropologie*, 3:10
- David Walker's Appeal*, 3:213
- Davis, Allison, 2:208
- Davis, Angela, 1:199, 200, 394–395
- Davis, David Brion, 1:2
- Davis, Ernie, 1:481
- Davis, Jefferson, 1:183, 336
- Davis, John, 1:129
- Davis v. County School Board of Prince Edward County*, 1:252
- Dawes Act. See General Allotment Act
- Dawson, William L., 2:425
- Day, Leon, 1:154, 156
- Day laborers, Latino, 1:395–398, 397, 398, 2:235–236
- Dayan, Moshe, 3:242
- Daymond, M. J., 1:64
- Daytona Educational and Industrial Training School, 1:166–167
- De Cordova, Rudolph, 1:178
- De facto segregation, 2:450
- De Forest, John William, 1:499
- De Gaulle, Charles, 2:388–389
- De Jesus, Carolina Maria, 1:194
- De Klerk, F. W., 1:26, 66, 2:280, 281, 401, 3:88
- De la Cruz, Jessie, 2:251
- De l'égalité des races humaines* (Firmin), 1:476–477, 2:77
- Defense industry, 1:329
- De Zavala, Adina, 1:69
- De Zavala, Lorenzo, 1:69
- Dearborn Independent* (newspaper), 1:313
- Death marches, 2:111
- Death row, 1:361
- Deaths. See Mortality rates
- DeBow, James D. B., 2:373
- Debt relations, 1:269
- “Decade of Roma Inclusion,” 2:507
- Decategorization, 3:77–78
- Declaration of Human Rights, 1:230
- Declaration of Independence, 3:58
- “Declaration of Sentiments” (American Anti-Slavery Society), 1:7, 73
- Decolonization, 3:224
- Dees, Morris, 3:93, 94
- Def Jam, 2:483
- “Defiance Campaign,” 1:100–101
- Definitions
  - health, 2:81
  - indigenous, 2:173
  - pornography, 2:418–419
  - slavery, 3:60–61
- Del Castillo, Adelaida R., 1:287, 2:226
- Delanoë, Bertrand, 2:18
- Delany, Martin R.
  - black consciousness, 1:190
  - black ethnology, 1:89, 90, 91
  - black soldiers, 3:67
  - officer's commission, 1:182
  - Uncle Tom's Cabin*, objection to, 3:102
  - Union recruitment, 1:180
- Dellums, Ron, 1:101, 311
- Deloria, Vine, 1:463
- Delta Ministry, 2:78–79
- Demes, 1:398–399
  - See also* Subspecies
- Demetrius, 2:97
- Democracy
  - Brazil, 1:192
  - Caribbean, 1:277, 278
  - Israel, 3:244
- Democratic National Conventions, 1:191, 2:78, 218
- Democratic Party
  - African Americans, 2:366
  - Atlantic City convention, 1:148
  - campaign finance scandal, 1:299
  - civil rights plank, 2:455
  - Democratic Convention, 1964, 1:191
  - Hamer, Fannie Lou, 2:78
  - Irish Americans, 2:200–201
  - Populist Party and, 3:92
  - voting rights, 3:206
  - white primaries, 2:338, 344
- Democratic Revolution Party (PRD), 3:239
- Demographics, 1:399–402
  - Canada, 1:265
  - farmworkers, 1:460
  - Latina fertility, 2:245–246
  - white flight, 1:253
  - See also* Population
- Demographics, racial, 2:443–447
- Demonstrations and protests
  - affirmative action, 1:17
  - AIDS activists, 2:100
  - American Indian Movement, 1:82–84, 83
  - anti-apartheid, 1:100–101, 3:88–89
  - anti-caste movement, 1:388
  - antiglobalization protest, 1:270
  - anti-immigrationism, 3:180
  - anti-Indian movement, 1:103
  - antiracist social movements, 1:107
  - Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:136, 137, 138
  - The Birth of a Nation* (film), 1:178
  - Black Reconstruction, 1:210
  - Brown v. Board of Education*, 1:252–253
  - Caribbean immigration, 1:273
  - Chicano movement, 1:290, 2:252
  - Chinese Americans, 1:309
  - Civil Rights March of 1968, 2:457
  - civil rights movement, 1:332–333
  - Columbus Day protest in Venezuela, 1:431
  - desegregation in the South, 2:456–457
  - Double V campaign, 1:329
  - immigration laws, 2:302
  - Iraq War protest, 2:220
  - King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:215–219
  - March from Selma, 3:75
  - March on Washington movement, 1:329
  - Mayan protest march, 2:287
  - Mexican Council for 500 Years of Indigenous Resistance, 3:236
  - Muslims, 2:329

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Demonstrations and protests, continued
NAACP, 2:340
National State Rights Party, 2:351
New Black Panther Party, 2:348
Pretoria name change protest, 3:89
reparations, 2:492
Roma, 2:506
Rustin, Bayard, 2:513
Salt Marches, 2:7
school admissions policies, 2:182
sex workers, 2:135
Trotter, William Monroe, 3:167–168
United Farm Workers, 3:184–185, 185
Urban League, 3:197–198
Wilkins, Roy, 3:226
- Dempsey, Jack, 1:239, 240
Dempsey, Moore v., 2:338
- Dent, Gina, 1:205
- Denunciation, 1:262
- Department of Housing and Urban Development, U.S., 1:328
- Dependency theory of poverty, 2:422
- Dependent labor, 1:56, 3:49–50, 60–61
- Depo-Provera, 1:484
- Deportations
German Jews, 2:109
Holocaust, 2:111
illegal aliens, 2:144
as labor control, 2:155
Mexican migrant workers, 1:243
New Deal, 2:366
Operation Wetback, 2:387–388
statistics, 2:151
undocumented workers, 3:180
- DePriest, Oscar, 2:425
- Desai, Jayaben, 1:196
- Desai, Mahadev, 2:7
The Descent of Man (Darwin), 1:444
- Desegregation. See Racial desegregation
- Desertion rates, 1:183
- “De-skilling,” 2:228
- Deslandes, Charles, 1:5
- Dessalines, Jean-Jacques, 1:5, 2:76
- Determination of Rights and Unity of Menominee Shareholders (DRUMS), 2:310
- Detroit, Michigan, 2:259–262
- Detroit Riots of 1967, 2:260
- Dett, R. Nathaniel, 1:204
- Deukemejian, George, 1:286
- “Deukis system,” 2:135
- “Devadasi system,” 2:135
- Developing countries
cultural racism, 1:380–381
educational disparities, 1:426 export processing zones, 3:152
forced sterilization, 1:485
human trafficking, 2:134–138
informal labor market, 3:176
medical experimentation, 2:291–292
poverty, 2:423–424
reproductive rights, 2:496
sex work, 3:25–26
See also Third World countries
- Devil’s Tower, 2:310
- Dew, Thomas Roderick, 1:402–403
El Dia de la Raza, 2:227
- Diabetes, 1:403–407, 404, 2:87–88
- Diaghilev, Serge, 1:391
- Dialectical Society, 2:213
- Diamond, Jared, 2:372
- Diamonds, 3:86
- Diaz, José, 2:250
- Diaz, Porfirio, 2:168
- Diaz-Balart, Lincoln, 1:271
- Diaz-Balart, Mario, 1:271
- Díaz del Castillo, Bernal, 2:226, 3:201
- Dickens, William, 2:206
- Diet
rice plantations, 2:413
sickle cell anemia, 3:36
- Diffusionism, hegemonic, 1:218–219
- DiGiorgio Corporation, 1:286
- Digital divide, 1:424, 427
- Dihigo, Martin, 1:156, 157
- Diminutives, use of, 1:350
- “Dinah,” 3:58
- Dinkins, David, 2:240
- Direct appeal campaigns, 1:106–107
- Directors, film, 1:475–476
- Disabled persons
racial disparities, 1:295–296
T-4 Euthanasia Program (Germany), 2:107
- Disappearances, Maya, 2:285, 288
- Discordant variation, 2:370–372
- Discrimination
aversive racism, 1:139–143
black codes, 1:185–189
Buffalo Soldiers, 1:256–258
Burakumin, 1:259–262
Caribbean immigrants, 1:272–273
Chinese, 2:482
civil rights acts, 1:323–328
criminality, 1:363
Dalits, 1:386–387
by descent, 1:386 disparity vs., 1:361–362 employment, 2:404
everyday racism, 1:447–449
gangs and youth violence, 2:10
heterosexism and homophobia, 2:91–94
individual racism, 3:74
intelligence tests, 2:194
Irish Americans, 1:319
Israel, 3:241–244
labor market, 2:233
Latinos, 2:256–257
NAACP legal actions, 2:342–346
New Deal, 2:364–367
occupational segregation, 2:377
Plessy v. Ferguson, 2:416–418
Remond, Charles Lenox, 2:489
sexism, 3:27–30
social psychology of racism, 3:76
stress, 3:70
tokenism, 3:132
undocumented workers, 3:180
United Kingdom legislation, 3:187–188
United States Constitution, 3:194–195
- Discrimination in higher education, 1:421–425
- Disease-predisposing alleles, 2:130–131
- Disease resistance, 2:139
- Diseases, 1:407–422, 410
diabetes, 1:403–406
health disparities, 2:82–83
HIV and AIDS, 2:97–311
hypertension and coronary heart disease, 2:138–142 infectious disease susceptibility, 2:177–180
Mexico, 2:167
Old World, 2:50
racial purity, 2:470
rice plantations, 2:412
sickle cell anemia, 3:34–37
- Diseases, Tay-Sachs and “Jewish,” 3:121–124
- Disenfranchisement, felony, 1:468–470
- Disenfranchisement of blacks, 3:216
- Disparities
African American imprisonment, 1:364–365
color-blindness, legal, 3:195
criminal justice system, 1:360–362
education funding, 3:193
felony disenfranchisement, 1:468–469
imprisonment of Native Americans, 3:106
Israel, sentencing in, 3:243

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- occupational segregation, 2:377
 pay, 2:402–405
 poverty, 3:175
 prison population, 2:11
 United Kingdom criminal justice system, 3:187 wealth, 2:231–232
- Disparities, health, 2:86–88
 HIV and AIDS, 2:98–99
 hypertension and coronary heart disease, 2:139–141
 infant mortality and birth weight, 2:174–176 infectious diseases, 2:178–180
 life expectancy, 2:265–269
 medical racism, 2:296–297
 mental health care, 2:298–299
 morbidity and mortality, 3:68–71
 treatment, 2:81–85, 141, 293–294
- Disparities and status of children, 1:291–297
- Disparities in education, 1:421–423, 1:425–428, 427
- Displaced persons
 cheap labor, 2:228, 229
 human trafficking, 2:134–138
- Disproportionality in the criminal justice system, 1:360–362, 362–365, 3:106
- Distance education, 1:424
- Disturnell, John, 1:145
- Diversity
 affirmative action, 1:14
 families, 1:456–457
 feminism, 1:471–472
 higher education, 1:422–424
 television, 3:128
 United Kingdom, 3:188
- Dixiecrats, 2:455
- Dixon, George “Little Chocolate,” 1:238
- Dixon, Thomas, Jr., 1:412–413, 2:471
Birth of a Nation (film), 1:175, 179
The Clansman, 3:168
 Ku Klux Klan, 3:20
 racial purity, 2:471
- DJs, 2:95–97
- DNA, 2:127f
 explained, 2:126
 genetic distance, 2:27–28
 genetic markers, 2:28–29
 Neanderthals, 2:120
 racial differences, 2:38–39
 structure, 2:34, 37–38
- Do the Right Thing* (film), 1:475
- Doby, Larry, 1:154, 155, 155–156, 332
- Dobzhansky, Teodosius, 3:12
- Doctorate degrees, 1:421, 1:422
- “Doctors’ plot,” 1:112
- Doctrina de Seguridad Nacional*, 2:285
- Doctrine of discovery, 2:51, 173, 305–310
- Documentary films, 1:393
- Documented Indians, 1:467
- Dodge Revolutionary Union Movement (DRUM), 2:260–261
- Dog, Mary Crow, 1:82
- Doke, Joseph, 2:6
- Dolphyne, Florence Abena, 1:64
- Domestic Council Committee on Illegal Aliens, 2:152
- Domestic dependency, 1:464, 2:310, 501
- Domestic violence, 2:273, 3:30, 203–204
- Domestic workers
 informal labor market, 2:236
 sexual exploitation, 2:486
 slavery, 2:477–478
 Urban League, 3:196–197
- Domestic workers, immigrant, 2:146–148, 147
- Dominican Republic, 2:77
- Don Giovanni* (opera), 2:275
- Donald, Beulah Mae, 2:184, 3:94
- Donald, Michael, 2:183
- Donaldson, John, 1:238
- Donkova, Yordanka, 3:148
- Donnegan, William, 2:434
- Dorrell, Karl, 1:482
- Dorsey, Essie Marie, 1:391
- Dos Reis, Maria Firmina, 1:194
- Double V campaign, 1:329
- Double-helix DNA model, 2:37–38
- Douglas, John Sholto, 1:237
- Douglas, Stephen A., 1:8, 335
- Douglass, Charles, 1:153
- Douglass, Frederick, 1:413–415, 414
 abolition movement, 1:8, 3:59
 African colonization, 2:399
 American Anti-Slavery Society, 1:72, 73
 black consciousness, 1:190
 black ethnology, 1:89, 92, 95
 Brown, John, and, 1:250
 Civil War, 1:8, 337, 2:13
 emigration to Kansas movement, 1:335
 heritage tourism, 3:140
 Lincoln, Abraham, meeting with, 2:449
- military service and citizenship, 1:179–180
- Native American ancestry, 1:200
- Remond, Charles Lenox, clashes with, 2:489
- Smith, James McCune, and, 3:67
- Truth, Sojourner, and, 3:169
- Downing, George T., 1:180
- Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, 1:496, 2:173
- Draft riots, 1:338–339
- Drake, St. Clair, 1:271, 2:421–422
- Draper, Wickliffe, 1:446, 3:12
- “Drapetomania,” 3:72–73
- “Dream Team,” 1:162
- Dred: A Tale of the Great Dismal Swamp* (Stowe), 3:101, 102
- Dred Scott v. Sandford*, 1:317, 415–418
 abolition movement, 1:8
 citizenship, 1:316
 Civil Rights Act of 1866 as reversal of, 1:324
 Douglass, Frederick, 1:414
 Garnet, Henry Highland, 2:13
 racial slavery, 3:59
- Drew, Charles, 2:208
- Driscoll, Clara, 1:69
- DRT (Daughters of the Republic of Texas), 1:67, 69
- Drug offenses, 1:364, 365
- Drug use, 3:105–106
- DRUM (Dodge Revolutionary Union Movement), 2:260–261
- DRUMS (Determination of Rights and Unity of Menominee Shareholders), 2:310
- DTH (Dance Theatre of Harlem), 1:391
- Dual citizenship, 1:417
- Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:418–419
 African diaspora, 1:51
 American Negro Academy, 1:84
 black popular culture, 1:204–205
 Black Reconstruction, 1:208, 210–211
 Blair Education bill, 1:494
 Boas, Franz, work with, 1:96
 on Brown, John, 1:250
 Brownsville, Texas incident, 2:435
The Crisis, 2:336
 exploitation, 1:449
 extinction hypothesis, criticism of the, 1:408
 First Pan-African Conference, 1:478
 Freedmen’s Bureau, 1:499, 500
 Gandhi, Mohandas, invitation to, 2:7

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Du Bois, W. E. B., continued

- Garvey, Marcus, influence on, 2:17
  - Harvard University, 1:128
  - Louis-Schmeling boxing match, 1:241
  - McCarthyism, 1:332
  - NAACP, 2:249, 370
  - Niagara Movement, 2:335–336, 368, 3:92, 167
  - Pan-Africanism, 2:399–400
  - poor whites, 1:317
  - slavery, 3:155
  - United Nations, direct appeal to the, 1:107
  - vocationalism, 2:369
  - Washington, Booker T., criticism of, 2:431, 3:215
  - White, Walter Francis, clashes with, 3:220
  - Wilkins, Roy, replacement by, 3:226
  - World War I, 2:437
- Du Bois Institute, 2:474, 3:45
- Du Sable, Jean Baptiste Point, 1:271
- Du Toit, Brian M., 1:65
- Dube, John, 2:6
- Dubois, Eugene, 2:119
- Due process, 2:343, 3:194
- Duhring, Eugen, 1:114
- Duke, David, 1:419–420, 2:221, 3:112
- Duloo plantation, 3:136
- Duncan, Tim, 1:163
- Dungy, Tony, 1:482, 1:482
- Dunham, Katherine, 1:391
- Dunlop, Alexander, 2:113
- Dunn, Leslie Clarence, 3:182
- Dunn, Oscar J., 1:209
- Dunning, William, 1:174–175, 208
- Dunston, Georgia, 2:42
- Durán, Diego, 1:143
- Durham, W. J., 2:345
- Durkee, J. Stanley, 1:129
- Durkheim, Émile, 2:68
- Dutch colonialism
- “Bush Negroes,” 1:202
  - slave trade, 3:64
  - South Africa, 3:86
  - triangular slave trade, 3:162
- Dutch Reformed Church, 1:117
- Duvalier, François, 2:77
- Duvalier, Jean-Claude, 2:77
- Dworkin, Andrea, 2:418
- Dyer, Leonidas C., 2:338
- Dyer, Reginald, 2:6
- Dyer Bill (proposed), 2:338
- Dyke, Charles, 2:158
- Dyson, Michael Eric, 1:206

E

- East African runners, 2:41–42
- East Los Angeles high school blow-outs, 2:253
- East St. Louis race riot, 2:437
- Eastern Europe, 2:362
- Eastern European Jews, 3:8
- Eastland, James, 2:152
- Easton, Hosea, 1:90
- Ebenezer Baptist Church, 2:213, 215
- Ebonics, 2:238, 484
- Ebony* (magazine), 1:331
- Echelle des êtres*. See Great Chain of Being
- Eckford, Elizabeth, 1:164
- Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC), 1:496
- Economic development, African, 1:51–56
- Economic issues
  - African diaspora, 1:49
  - African National Congress, 1:102
  - anti-Indian movement, 1:103
  - Arab immigrants, 1:121
  - black self-determination, 3:220
  - British colonialism, 2:499–500
  - Calhoun, John C., 1:265
  - capitalism, 1:268–270
  - Caribbean racial formations, 1:277
  - Chinese diaspora, 1:306–307
  - college football, 1:483
  - Cuba, 1:371–372
  - ethnic cleansing, 1:438
  - exploitation, 1:449–450
  - feminism, 1:472
  - film and Asian Americans, 1:475
  - General Allotment Act, 2:308–309
  - German colonialism in Africa, 1:38
  - human trafficking, 2:136–137
  - illegal aliens, 2:145–146
  - indigenous Mexicans, 2:168
  - informal labor market, 2:234–237
  - Israel, 3:243
  - labor market, 2:229–233
  - market-oriented policies in Africa, 1:55
  - Mexico, 2:169–172
  - New Deal, 2:364–367
  - New Partnership for Africa’s Development, 2:401–402
  - Portuguese colonialism in Africa, 1:44
  - poverty, 2:420–424
  - precolonial Africa, 1:56
  - racial slave labor, 2:472–479
  - racialization of Latin American indigenous people, 3:203
  - slave trade, 3:50–51
  - slavery, 1:47–48, 3:56–57
  - subsistence servitude, 1:62–63
  - Sudan, genocide in, 2:60
  - Trans-Saharan slave trade, 1:58–60
  - triangular slave trade, 3:160–162
  - underemployment, 3:173–176
  - Urban League, 3:196–197
- Economic migrants, 1:306–307
- Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, 1:376
- Economic Reciprocity Initiative (ERI), 2:341
- ECOSOC (Economic and Social Council), 1:496
- Ecuador, 2:242
- Edgefield Real Estate and Homestead Association, 3:37
- Edison, Thomas, 2:354
- Editorial Law (Germany), 2:105
- Education, 1:294
  - adolescent female sexuality, 1:11
  - African economic development, 1:55
  - antebellum segregation, 2:448–449
  - Arab immigrants, 1:121
  - Asian Americans, 2:312
  - Bethune, Mary McLeod, 1:166–167
  - Blair Education Bill, 1:494–495
  - Brazilian racial formations, 1:247
  - Burakumin*, 1:261–262
  - California, 2:451
  - Caribbean racial formations, 1:276–277
  - civil rights movement, 1:331
  - cultural deficiency theory, 1:376
  - cultural racism, 1:379
  - Dalits, 1:388
  - forensic anthropology, 1:491–492
  - Freedmen’s Bureau, 1:500
  - funding disparities, 3:193
  - Houston, Charles Hamilton, 2:115
  - income, 2:230
  - Indian boarding schools, 2:157–159, 160–161, 309
  - institutional racism, 2:181–183
  - intelligence tests, 2:193–195, 197–198
  - Israel, 3:242–243
  - Jews, positive portrayals of, 1:115
  - language, 2:238–239
  - Latinos, 2:256–257
  - Mexican Americans, 2:1–2, 302
  - NAACP legal actions, 2:342–346, 343–346
  - Northern segregation, 2:450
  - Puerto Ricans, 2:428
  - racial disparities, 1:292, 1:293–296
  - racial segregation in the South, 2:452

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- segregation, 2:283, 338–340
 sexism, 3:28
 Smith, James McCune, 3:67
 standardized tests, 3:95–97
 substance abuse, 3:104
 United Kingdom, 3:188
- Education, higher, 1:421–425, 422
 affirmative action, 1:16–17
 apartheid, 1:119
 Asian American feminism, 1:125
 Brazilian affirmative action program, 1:249
 Chicana feminism, 1:288
 Chinese Americans, 1:302
El Plan de Santa Barbara, 1:432–433
 labor market, 2:233
 Latinos, 2:256–257
 NAACP legal actions, 2:345–346
 racial slave labor, 2:477
 segregation, 2:338–339, 452
 Tillman, Benjamin “Pitchfork,” 3:131
 World War II veterans, 1:330
- Education, racial disparities in, 1:425–428, 427
- Edwards, Harry, 2:40
 Edwards, Herman, 1:482
 Edwards, James, 1:331
 Edwards, Jonathan, 1:3, 463, 3:148
- EEOC (Equal Employment Opportunity Commission), 1:326
- Egalitarianism, 3:11–12
- Egan, Pierce, 1:237
- Egypt, 1:477, 3:53, 54
- Ehrlich, Paul, 1:344, 2:371
- Eichmann, Adolph, 2:109
- “Eight Americas,” 2:266, 267*t*
- Eighth Amendment, 1:283
- Eisenhower, Dwight D.
 Civil Rights Act of 1960, 1:325
 “Little Rock Nine,” 1:165
 Operation Wetback, 2:153, 386–387
 school desegregation, 2:340, 456
 Wilkins, Roy, assessment by, 3:227
- Ejército Guerrillero de los Pobres*, 2:285
- EJM (Environmental Justice Movement), 2:64–67
- El Guerrouj, Hicham, 3:148–149
- El mestizaje*, 1:116, 428–432, 429, 431
- El Plan de Santa Barbara*, 1:432–434
- El Plan Espiritual de Aztlán*, 1:433
- El Saadawi, Nwal, 1:63
- El Salvador, 1:279–280
- Elaine race riot, 2:439, 3:219
- Elam, Harry J., Jr., 1:205
- Election campaigns, 1:173–174
- Election Day massacre, 2:436–437
- Elitism, 3:51–52
- Elizabeth, Czarina, 1:110
- Elizabeth I, 3:51, 186
- Elizabeth II, 2:491
- Elk v. Wilkins*, 1:318–319
- Ellas*, 2:253
- Elliot, Robert B., 1:209, 210
- Ellis, Havelock, 2:18
- Ellison, Ralph, 1:331
- Elmira Castle, 3:141–142
- Eloff, Gerhardus, 1:118
- Elsholtz, Johann Siismund, 1:97
- Eltis, David, 2:474
- Emancipation
 African slaves, 1:48
 diseases, 1:408
 Islamic law, 3:61
 Southern United States, 1:187
- Emancipation Edict (Japan), 1:260
- Emancipation Proclamation, 1:180, 337, 434, 434–435
- Embargoes, 1:371–372
- Emergent culture, 2:244
- Emerson, Irene, 1:415
- Emerson, John, 1:415
- Emery, Lynne Fauley, 1:393
- Emigration
 German Jews, 2:106–107
 Haitian, 2:77
See also Migration
- Emmy Awards, 3:94
- Emotional abuse, 3:204
- Employer sanctions, 2:151–152
- Employment and occupations
 affirmative action, 1:14–15
 apartheid, 1:119
 Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:133–134
 black codes, 1:188
 Brazilian racial formations, 1:247
Burakumin, 1:260
 Caribbean immigrants, 1:272–273
 caste system, 1:385–386
 Chinese Americans, 1:303
 civil rights acts, 1:326
 Dalits, 1:388
 everyday racism, 1:448
 farmworkers, 1:458–460
 forensic anthropology, 1:491–492
 higher education faculty, 1:422–423
 illegal aliens, 2:144–146, 151–152
 immigrant domestic workers, 2:146–148
 institutional racism, 2:182–183
- Irish Americans, 2:200–201
- Israel, 3:243
- Latino day laborers, 1:395–397
- Mexican immigrants, 1:234
- New Deal, 2:365, 666
- occupational segregation, 2:375–378
- pay equity, 2:402–405
- racial segregation in the South, 2:453
- tokenism, 3:132–134
- undocumented workers, 3:177–180
- Urban League, 3:196–197
- welfare reform, 3:231–233
- World War II, discrimination during, 1:329
See also Occupational segregation
- Employment Equity Act (Canada), 1:267
- Encomenderos*, 2:167
- “Encounter between Two Worlds” (conference), 3:236
- Encuentro Femenil* (journal), 1:287
- Encyclopedia of the Negro* (Woodson), 1:130
- Engels, Friedrich, 1:268, 337
- Engineers, 1:302–303
- England. See British colonialism; United Kingdom
- English (language), 2:237, 249, 299
- English skinheads, 1:435
- Enlightenment
 eugenics, 1:442
The Magic Flute (opera), 2:275–276
 racial hierarchy, 2:463
 scientific racism, 1:93–94
 slavery, 1:2, 3:65
 United States Constitution, 1:399
- Enrolled Indians, 1:467
- Entertainment. See Popular culture
- Entine, Jon, 2:40, 3:15
- “Entitlements,” 3:80
- Entrepreneurship, 3:214
- Environment vs. genetics
 anthropometry, 1:98–99
 IQ, 2:88–89, 205–206
- Environmental issues, 2:64–68
 antebellum black ethnology, 1:91–92
 racial disparities, 3:72
- Environmental Justice Movement (EJM), 2:64–67
- Epidemics and pandemics
 infectious disease susceptibility, 2:177–180
 Native Americans, 2:50

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- EPZs (export processing zones), 3:152, 154
- Equal Employment Opportunity Act, 3:133
- Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), 1:326
- Equal Pay Act, 2:403
- Equal protection clause
Brown v. Board of Education, 2:343, 3:194
Plessy v. Ferguson, 2:417
Sweatt v. Painter, 2:346
United States Constitution, 3:193
- Equal Rights Leagues, 1:208, 2:370, 3:170
- Equal Suffrage League, 1:167
- Equal Treatment Law (Europe), 1:448–449
- Equality
Firman, Anténor, 1:476–478
Garrison, William Lloyd, 2:15
Phillips, Wendell, 2:406–407
- Equalization strategy, 1:251
- Equiano, Olaudah, 1:5, 3:46
- ERI (Economic Reciprocity Initiative), 2:341
- Eritrea, 1:40
- Eroticism, 2:270
- Erving, Julius, 1:161
- Esmeraldas Embassadors* (painting), 1:220, 1:221
- Espine, Vilma, 1:370
- Espinoza, Dionne, 2:253
- Espionage Act, 2:438
- Essentialism
Arab inferiority, 1:123
biological determinism, 1:380
critical race theory, 1:367
hypertension in blacks, 2:139
- Estrada Palma, Tomás, 1:370
- Ethiopia
abolition of slavery, 3:59
Italian colonialism, 1:39
- Ethnic cleansing, 1:436–440, 437, 2:45
See also Genocide
- Ethnic fraud, 1:224
- “Ethnic soldiering,” 2:243
- Ethnicity
Belgian Africa, 1:18–22
Caribbean plantation society, 1:276
Liberia, 1:80
Mexican Americans, 2:273
Mexican indigenous peoples, 2:303–304
Nigeria, 1:24
race as distinct from, 2:55
sweatshops, 3:108–109
UNESCO statements on race, 3:182
- Ethnicity, symbolic, 3:117–119
- Ethnocentrism, 1:440–441
Chinese, 2:480
folk classification, 1:478–479
nativism, 2:358–361
- Ethnocide, 2:48–52, 50, 2:309
- Ethnogenesis, 2:241–245
- Ethnography
Native Americans, 1:463–464
“playing Indian,” 2:415
- Ethnological Society of London, 3:3
- Ethnology, black, 1:89–93
- Ethnoracial cleansing, 1:439
- Ethnoracial diseases, 3:121–124
- Eugenics, 1:441–447
anthropometry, 1:98–99
birth control, 2:493–494
China, 2:481–482
forced sterilization, 1:484
Galton, Francis, 2:2–4
history, 2:36
medical experimentation, 2:291
racial hierarchy, 2:462
rassenhygiene, 2:487–488
reproductive technologies, 2:497
rural whites, 2:508
scientific racism, 3:7–10
Stoddard, T. Lothrop, 3:100
Tay-Sachs disease, 3:123
- Eurocentrism, 1:199, 455–456
- Europe
ethnic cleansing, 1:436
eugenics, 1:445
Great Chain of Being, 2:68–72
Muslims, 2:332–333
neo-Nazis, 2:362
racism, 2:181
reverse migration, 1:48
slavery, legacy of, 2:478
triangular slave trade, 3:160–162
tuberculosis, 2:179
- European colonialism
capitalism, 1:268–270
HIV and AIDS, 2:98
missionaries, 2:305–306
race relations, 2:189
racial formations, 2:459
racial hierarchy, 2:461
racial slavery, 3:54–57
sexuality, 3:31–33
slave trade ideology, 3:44–52
white settler society, 3:223–225
- European enslavement, 1:57–58
- European immigrants, 2:232
- European Roma Rights Centre, 2:507
- European supremacy
African economic development, 1:52–55
racial formations, 2:459–460
- Europeans
black women’s sexuality, 2:485–486
Indian slavery, 2:163–166
slavery and race, 3:60–66
- Euthanasia, 2:291, 488
- Evans, Hiram W., 3:22, 23, 3:23, 3:24
- Evans, Mrs. Lon, 2:434
- “Eve Theory.” See “Out of Africa” hypothesis
- Evers, Medger, 2:339
- Everyday racism, 1:447–449, 2:157
- Evian Conference, 2:106
- Evolution. See Human evolution; Primate evolution
- Der Ewige Jude* (film), 2:104, 108
- Executive Order 9066, 2:203, 204
- Executive Order 9981, 1:259, 3:84
- Executive Order 10,925, 1:14
- Executive Order 11,246, 1:15
- Executive Order 12,898, 2:66
- Exit exams, 1:295
- Exoduster movement, 1:211, 3:37–38
- Exoticization, 3:26
- Expansionism, 2:307
- Exploitation, 1:449–450
capitalism, 1:268–270
cheap labor, 2:228–229, 3:176
farmworkers, 1:458
human trafficking, 2:134–138
rural white, 2:510
sexual stereotypes, 3:32
slave codes, 3:44
slavery, 3:60
See also Sexual assault and exploitation
- Exploration
Belgian, 1:18
Portuguese, 1:20
slavery, 3:54, 63
- Export commodities, 2:475
- Export processing zones (EPZs), 3:152, 154
- Exposition of Negro Progress, 1:129
- Extended family, 2:316
- Extinction, 1:408, 410, 2:70–71
- Eyre, Chris, 2:355
- Eysenck, Hans, 1:450–451, 3:12–13
- Ezeigbo, Akachi, 1:64

F

- Facial angle, 1:453–455, 454f, 2:71
- Faculty, 1:422–423, 423, 492

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Fair globalization, 3:176–177
 Fair Housing Act, 1:327–328, 2:340, 341
 Fair housing legislation, 1:327–328
 Fair Labor Standards Act, 1:458, 3:108
 “Fair Share” agreements, 2:342
 Faisal of Saudi Arabia, 1:115, 2:278
 FAK (Federation of Afrikaner Cultural Organization), 1:65
 Fala Preta, 1:194
Falling Down (film), 1:475
 Families, 1:455–458
   African Americans, 2:20–21
   family studies, 3:7
   family unification, 1:383
   motherhood, 2:315–317
   motherhood, deficiency in, 2:317–320
   slavery, 3:61
   undocumented workers, 3:179
   workfare and welfare, 3:230–233
 Fanon, Frantz
   African diaspora, 1:50
   black consciousness movement, 1:169
   cultural racism, 1:380
   native violence, 2:54
   Pan-Africanism, 2:400
   transnationalism, 3:155
 Farinacci, Roberto, 1:42
 Farmer, James, 1:311, 331, 2:219
 Farmers and farming
   malaria, 3:36
   New Deal, 2:364–365
   See also Agriculture
 Farmworkers, 1:458–461, 460
   Chávez, César, 1:285–286
   Galarza, Ernesto, 2:1
   Huerta, Dolores, 2:116
   United Farm Workers, 2:251
   Wilson, Pete, 2:152
 Farrakhan, Louis, 2:341, 347
 Fascism, 1:39–43, 2:361
 Fatback Band, 2:483
 Fathers
   African Americans, 2:20–21
   families, 1:456
   reliance on fathers model, 2:319
 Faubus, Orval, 1:164, 252
 Fauset, Arthur, 1:96
 FBI, 2:278, 280
 FCC (Federal Communications Commission), 2:240
 FCRN (Cardenista Front for the National Reconstruction), 3:238
 FDI (foreign direct investment), 1:53
 Fearing, Maria, 3:33
 Federal Communications Commission (FCC), 2:240
 Federal Employment Practices Commission (FEPC), 1:329
 Federal government employment, 3:132, 167–168, 195
 Federal Housing Authority, 2:365
 Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC), 2:185
 Federal recognition of Native Americans, 1:461–468, 2:501
 Federated Council of Churches, 2:290
 Federation for American Immigration Reform, 2:246
 Federation of Afrikaner Cultural Organization (FAK), 1:65
 Feeble-mindedness, 3:6–7
 Fellowship of Reconciliation, 2:511
 Felony disenfranchisement, 1:468–470, 3:206
 Female Anti-Slavery Society of Salem, 1:7
 Female sexuality, adolescent, 1:10–13, 3:230
 Female-headed households, 2:318
 Femicide, 2:254
 Femininity, 2:21
 Feminism, 1:470–473
   Anzaldúa, Gloria, 1:116
   Baker, Ella, 1:148
   body politics, 1:228–229
   Chicanas, 2:253
   critical race theory, 1:366
   Cuba, 1:370
   cultural racism, 1:382
   Montagu, Ashley, 2:312
   motherhood, deficiency in, 2:320
   pornography, 2:418–419
   rape, 2:487
   sexism, 3:27–30
   violence against women and girls, 3:204
 Feminism, African, 1:63–65
 Feminism, Asian American, 1:124–126
 Feminism, Chicana, 1:286–289
 Feminism in Brazil, black, 1:193–195, 194
 Feminism in the United Kingdom, black, 1:195–198
 Feminism in the United States, black, 1:198–200
   Davis, Angela, 1:395
   Lorde, Audre, 2:270
   womanism, 3:227–229
 FEPC (Federal Employment Practices Commission), 1:329
 Ferguson, Bill, 1:135
 Ferguson, James, 3:22–23
Ferguson, Plessy v. See Plessy v. Ferguson
 Ferrera, America, 3:128, 3:128
 Fertility
   Latinas, 2:245–246, 248
   reproductive rights, 2:496
 Fetal origins hypothesis of diabetes, 1:405
 Fields, Edward R., 2:351–352
 Fierro de Bright, Josefina, 2:250
 Fifteenth Amendment
   black Civil War veterans, 1:184
   black codes, 1:189
   enactment, 3:191
   Turner, Henry McNeal, 3:170
   voting rights, 1:318, 324
   Voting Rights Act of 1965, 3:205, 206
 Fifth Amendment
   Brown v. Board of Education, 2:343, 3:194
 Fifth Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, 3:239
 54th Massachusetts Infantry, 1:180–182, 337, 2:489–490
 Figg, James, 1:237
 Fiji, 1:439
 Film
   African American heritage, 3:137
   African Americans, positive portrayals of, 1:331–332 black film companies, 1:178
   Central Americans, 2:254
   chain gangs, 1:282
   dance, 1:393
   Native Americans, 2:354–355
   pornography, 2:418–420
   rural whites, portrayals of, 2:510
   Southern Poverty Law Center, 3:94
 Film and Asian Americans, 1:473–476, 474
 Finberg, Matthew, 2:207
 Finch, John, 2:201
 Fingerprint patterns, 2:372
 Finley, Robert, 1:75, 78
Fire (film), 2:264
 Fires, industrial, 3:109–110
 Firmin, Anténor, 1:95–96, 476–478, 2:16, 77
 “Firmness 83” plan, 2:288
 First Annual Convention of the People of Colour, 1:72
 First Conference of Independent African States, 2:400
 First Great Migration, 1:330

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- First Intercontinental Encounter for Humanity and Against Neo-liberalism, 3:238
- First International Convention of the Negro Peoples of the World, 2:16
- First National People of Color Environmental Leadership Summit, 2:65–66
- First Pan-African Conference, 1:478
- First wave feminism, 1:471
- Fischer, Eugen, 2:488, 3:9, 11, 103
- Fishberg, Maurice, 3:123
- Fisher, Bernice, 1:331
- Fisher, Irving, 3:9
- Fisher, Ronald, 3:182
- Fishing rights, 1:103–104
- Fishwick, Marshall, 1:205
- Fitzgerald, F. Scott, 3:100
- Flaherty, Robert, 2:415
- Flavor of Love* (television show), 1:207
- Fleet-Boston, 2:477
- FLETC (Federal Law Enforcement Training Center), 2:185
- Flipper, Henry O., 1:184, 257–258
- Flippin, George A., 1:480
- FLN (Front de libération nationale), 2:388–389
- Flood, John, 1:238
- Flores, Francisca, 1:287
- Flores, Hector M., 2:250
- Flores, Richard R., 1:69
- Florida State University, 1:84
- Floyd, John, 1:402
- Flynn, James, 2:206
- Flynn Effect, 2:198
- FNLA (National Liberation Front in Angola), 1:46, 47
- Folk classification, 1:478–479
- Folklore, 2:105
- Follis, Charles, 1:480
- Fong Yue Ting v. United States*, 1:310
- Football (U.S.), 1:479–483, 482, 3:14
- Foraker, Joseph B., 2:435
- Forbes, George W., 3:167
- Force Bill, 1:264
- Forced contraception, 2:496
- Forced labor
- Anti-Peonage Act, 1:324
  - Portuguese colonialism in Africa, 1:44–46
- Forced removal of Native Americans. See Native Americans, forced removal of
- Forced sterilization, 1:483–486
- body politics, 1:229
  - eugenics, 1:445, 2:36, 494
  - Holocaust, 2:110
  - Mexican women, 2:252
  - Nazi Germany, 2:291, 3:10
  - overview, 2:292
  - The Passing of the Great Race* (Grant), 3:8
  - post-World War II era, 2:495
  - Puerto Rican women, 1:11
  - racial purity, 2:471–472
  - reproductive technologies, 2:497
- Forced sterilization of Native Americans, 1:12, 487–488, 2:316
- Ford, Gerald
- immigration reform, 2:152
  - Indian Self-Determination and Educational Assistance Act, 2:503
- Ford, Henry, 2:360
- Ford, John, 2:355
- Ford Foundation, 2:357
- Fordice, Kirk, 3:221
- Fordice, United States v.*, 2:343
- Foreign direct investment (FDI), 1:53
- Forensic anthropology, 1:488–492, 490
- Forensics, 2:28
- Forman, Murray, 1:206
- Fort Brown, Texas, 2:434–435
- Fort McKavett, Texas, 1:256
- Fort Pillow massacre, 1:338, 1:338
- Fort Sumter, 1:336
- Forten, Charlotte, 1:337–338
- Forten, James, 1:492–493
- abolition movement, 1:5, 72
  - anti-colonialism, 1:77
  - Garrison, William Lloyd, and, 1:6, 2:14
- Fortune, Timothy Thomas, 1:493–495, 2:16, 335
- Fortune 500* companies, 3:134
- Fortunoff Archive, 2:111
- Foster, Abby Kelley, 1:7
- Foster, Andrew “Rube,” 1:154, 156
- Foster, C. Edward, 2:224
- Foster, Willie, 1:156
- Fothergill, John, 1:5
- Foucault, Michel, 1:229–230, 2:18, 390, 421
- Foundations of the Nineteenth Century* (Chamberlain), 1:285
- Four humors, 2:463
- Fourteenth Amendment
- black codes, 1:188
  - Brown v. Board of Education*, 2:343
  - citizenship, 1:318, 322
  - civil rights aspects, 1:324
  - Civil Rights Cases*, 3:90
  - Dred Scott v. Sandford*, reversal of, 1:418
  - enactment of, 3:191
  - equal protection clause, 3:193
  - NAACP legal actions, 1:251–252
  - Plessy v. Ferguson*, 2:417
  - segregation, 2:283
- Fourth Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, 3:238
- Fourth World, 1:495–497
- Fowler, Bud, 1:153
- Fox, Vicente, 2:171, 3:239
- Fox Decision, 1:104
- Foxworthy, Jeff, 2:510
- France
- abolition movement, 1:4
  - Canadian colonization, 1:265
  - Organisation Armée Secrète, 2:388–389
  - poverty, 2:421
- Francis, Samuel, 3:221
- Francophones, 1:266, 267
- Frank, Andre Gunder, 1:449
- Frank, Barney, 2:18, 205
- Frank, Leo, 1:177
- Franklin, Benjamin, 1:3, 3:189
- Franklin, John Hope, 1:208, 2:208
- Franklin, Rosalind, 2:37
- Franklin v. State of South Carolina*, 2:338
- Fraternal organizations, 2:414
- Fraud, ethnic, 1:224
- Frazer, James, 1:440
- Frazier, E. Franklin, 2:208
- “Free Angela Davis” movement, 1:394–395
- Free Soil movement
- abolitionism, 1:8
  - American Anti-Slavery Society, 1:74
  - Birney, James Gillespie, opposition of, 1:174
  - Civil War, 1:334, 335
- Free trade agreements, 3:152–153
- Freedmen’s Bureau, 1:497–501, 498
- Black Reconstruction, 1:208–209
  - Delaney, Martin, 1:182
  - Turner, Henry McNeal, 3:170
- Freedom Charter, 2:281
- Freedom Farms Cooperative, 2:79
- Freedom of speech, 2:79
- Freedom Rides, 1:333, 2:216, 457
- Freedom Summer, 2:78, 218, 3:206

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Freedom's Journal* (newspaper), 1:6, 3:213
- Freeman, Alan D., 1:366
- Freeman, Derek, 1:228
- Freeman, Edward, 1:238
- Freeman, Elizabeth "Mumbet," 1:3
- Freeman, Sambo, 3:58
- Freeman v. Pitts*, 1:253
- Freire, Paolo, 1:169
- Frelimo (Liberation Front of Mozambique), 1:46
- French anthropology, 2:464
- French Canadians, 1:265–266, 3:145
- French colonialism
- Haiti, 2:76
  - Indian slavery, 2:164
  - plantations, 2:409
  - triangular slave trade, 3:162
- French colonies in Africa, 1:28–34, 30
- French feminism, 1:470–471
- French Revolution, 2:76
- Frente Negra Brasileira*, 1:192
- Freyre, Gilberto, 1:247
- Frick v. Webb*, 1:70
- Friedan, Betty, 1:471
- Friends of the Indian groups, 2:160
- Frobisher, Martin, 1:463, 2:26
- From Slavery to Freedom* (Franklin), 1:208
- Front de libération nationale* (FLN), 2:388–389
- Frost, William, 2:508
- Frye, Marilyn, 1:470
- FSLN (Sandinista National Liberation Front), 1:279–280
- Fugitive slave laws
- chronology of slavery, 3:59
  - Civil War, 1:335
  - Emancipation Proclamation, 1:434
  - Garnet, Henry Highland, 2:13
  - United States Constitution, 3:190–191
- Fujii v. State of California*, 1:71
- Fujimori, Alberto, 1:485
- Full Metal Jacket* (film), 1:475
- Fuller, William, 1:237
- Fullilove v. Klutznick*, 1:16
- Funding
- abortion, 2:498
  - Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, 1:129, 131
  - education, 3:193
  - Indian Health Service, 2:87
  - No Child Left Behind, 3:96
- Furrow, Buford, 1:314
- G
- Gafos. See Cagots
- Gahets. See Cagots
- GALA (Gay Latino Alliance), 2:253
- Galarza, Ernesto, 2:1–2, 3:184
- Gale, William Potter, 1:313, 3:111
- Galen, 2:463
- Gallico, Paul, 1:159
- Galloway, Abraham, 1:208
- Galton, Francis, 1:442, 2:2–4
- anthropometry, 1:98
  - eugenics, 1:441–444, 2:36
  - intelligence and sensory discrimination, 2:188
  - poverty and eugenics, 2:508
  - racial hierarchy, 2:462
  - rassenhygiene*, 2:487
  - scientific racism, 3:7
- Galvez, Bernardo de, 3:82
- Gambling, 1:104
- Ganatra, Nisha, 2:264
- Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, 2:4–9, 5, 7
- Dalits, 1:385, 387–388
  - King, Martin Luther, influence on, 2:213
- Gangs, 2:9–12, 3:106
- Angsta rap, 2:484–485
- Gans, Herbert, 3:117
- Gantt, Lucy, 3:33, 34
- Ganz, Marshall, 2:251
- Garcia, Lucas, 2:286
- García, Yolanda, 2:253
- Gardner, Anthony, 1:80
- Garfield, James, 2:13
- Garifuna, 1:201, 202–203, 281, 2:243, 243
- Garlington, Ernest A., 2:434
- Garment industry, 3:107–108
- Garnet, Henry Highland, 2:12–14
- abolition movement, 1:8
  - American Anti-Slavery Society, 1:72
  - anti-colonizationism, 1:78
  - Smith, James McCune, and, 3:66, 67
  - Union recruitment, 1:180
- Garretson, Freeborn, 1:71
- Garrett, Henry, 3:12
- Garrison, Lucy, 1:204
- Garrison, William Lloyd, 2:14–15
- abolition movement, 1:6–7, 3:59
  - American Anti-Slavery Society, 1:72, 74, 173
  - anti-colonizationism, 1:77
  - attempted lynching of, 2:406
  - Forten, James, advice to, 1:493
- Garnet, Henry Highland, praise of, 2:13
- The Liberator*, launch of, 1:73
- Remond, Charles Lenox, support by, 2:489
- Truth, Sojourner, and, 3:169
- Garro, Elena, 2:226
- Garvey, Amy Jacques, 2:16
- Garvey, Marcus, 2:15–17
- African diaspora, 1:50, 51
  - American Negro Academy, 1:86
  - anticolonialism, 1:1777
  - Back-to-Africa movement, 3:168, 171
  - black consciousness, 1:190–191
  - Caribbean immigrants, 1:271
  - Little, Earl, influence on, 2:276
  - Pan-Africanism, 2:399–400
  - radical movement, 2:435
  - Universal Negro Improvement Association, 1:88, 2:347
- Garza, Catarino, 3:130
- Gaston, Cito, 3:15
- Gates, Henry Louis, 1:130
- Gates, Ruggles, 3:12, 182
- Gault, Prentiss, 1:481
- Gavagan, Joseph A., 2:366
- Gay Latino Alliance (GALA), 2:253
- Gay men, 2:17–19, 19, 511–512
- Gayle v. Browder*, 2:456, 3:226
- Gayre, Robert, 3:12
- Gaza, 3:244
- GDP (gross domestic product), 3:151, 174
- Geary Act, 1:310
- Geledés, Instituto da Mulher Negra, 1:194–195
- Gell, Monday, 3:200
- Gender
- educational disparities, 1:295
  - inclusionism, 1:65
  - intersectionality, 1:198–200, 456f
  - occupational segregation, 2:375–377
  - sex work, 3:26
  - sexual hierarchy, 3:32–33
  - sexuality, 3:31
  - syphilis, 1:409
- Gender, Latina, 2:245–249
- Gender gap, 2:402–405, 2:403
- Gender ideology, 2:19–21
- Gender ratio, 3:61
- Gender reassignment, 2:93
- Gender relations
- sexism, 3:27–30
  - women immigrants, 2:149

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Gender roles, 2:271–274, 376
Gene flow, 2:391–397
Gene pool, 2:21–22
Gene trees, 2:392, 392*f*, 395
Genealogy. See Genes and genealogies
General Allotment Act
    Black Indians, 1:202
    blood quantum, 1:223
    citizenship, 1:319
    crime and American Indians, 1:356–357
    dismantling of Native economic systems, 2:308–309
    Indian Rights Association, 2:160–162
    reservation system, 2:502
Genes and genealogies, 2:22–24
Genesis, 2:24–27
Genetic code, 2:38
Genetic distance, 2:27–28, 33
Genetic markers, 2:28–29
Genetic variation, 2:29–34, 30, 33
    morbidity and mortality, 3:68
    “Out of Africa” hypothesis, 2:395
Genetics, history of, 2:34–40
Genetics, human, 2:126–134
    basketball, 1:162
    clines, 1:340–341, 341–345
    demes, 1:398–399
    diabetes, 1:405–406
    diseases, 1:411, 2:178–180
    disproving racial hierarchies, 2:464–465
    eugenics, 1:446, 3:7–10
    feeble-mindedness, 3:6–7
    forced sterilization, 1:487
    gene pool, 2:21–22
    genetic diversity pattern, 2:130*f* genetic selection, 2:498
    geography, 2:125
    heritability, 2:88–89
    human evolution, 2:120
    innate racial differences in intelligence, 2:195–198
    intelligence, 1:450–451, 2:124
    Jensen, Arthur, 2:206
    malaria protection, 2:412
    nonconcordant variation, 2:370–372
    “Out of Africa” hypothesis, 2:393–395
    physical anthropology, 3:10–11
    sickle cell anemia, 3:34–37
    skin color, 3:41
    Tay-Sachs disease, 3:121–123
Genetics and athletic performance, 2:40–43, 41, 41, 3:144–151
Genius, 2:2
Genius of Universal Emancipation (newspaper), 2:14
Genocide, 2:43–47, 44, 47, 48–52, 50
    African diaspora, 1:51
    Holocaust, 2:108–111, 361
    Rwanda, 1:21, 22
    terminology, 1:439
    Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235–240
    See also Ethnic cleansing
Genocide, Mayan, 2:284–289
Genocide in Rwanda, 1:34, 2:52–59, 55, 58
Genocide in Sudan, 2:47, 59–64, 61, 63
Genoves, Santiago, 3:12
Gentleman’s Agreement (film), 1:331
“Gentlemen’s Agreement,” 1:213, 2:154, 451
Gentrification, 1:301
Geography biomedical research, 2:125
    clusters, 1:346
    Darfur, 2:59–60
    forensic anthropology, 1:490
    genetics, 2:31–33, 39
    Haitian racial formations, 2:75–76
    human biological variation, 2:123
    nonconcordant variation, 2:371
    slavery, 2:472–474, 3:62
Georgia
    chain gangs, 1:282
    free labor experiment, 1:2
    slave codes, 3:42–43
Georgia Railroad and Banking Co., 2:477
Georgia State Legislature, 3:170
Gerardi, Juan, 2:288
German American Bund, 3:24
German colonialism in Africa, 1:34–39, 36
German Hygiene Museum, 2:383
German Sports Federation, 2:384
Germany
    Chamberlain, Houston Stewart, 1:284–285
    eugenics, 1:446, 3:9–10
    medical experimentation, 2:291
    Nazis, 2:361
    Olympic Games of 1936, 2:381–384
    rassenhygiene, 2:488
    reparations, 2:490
    Schmeling, Max, 1:240–241
    Stoddard, T. Lothrop, 3:101
    See also Holocaust
Geronimo, 2:379
Gestalt, 1:285
Ghaffar Khan, Abdul, 2:4
Ghana, 3:141–143
Ghettoization, 2:10–11
Ghettos, Jewish, 2:110
Ghézitains. See Cagots
Ghost Dance
    crime and American Indians, 1:357
    dance, 1:389–390
    ethnocide, 2:51
    federal recognition of Native Americans, 1:462–463
    Mooney, James, work of, 1:96
GI Bill. See Servicemen’s Readjustment Act
Gibson, Josh, 1:154–155, 156
Gibson, Mel, 2:241
Giesecke, Karl Ludwig, 2:274
The Gift of Black Folk (Du Bois), 1:204
Gifts of Power: The Writings of Rebecca Jackson, Black Visionary, Shaker Eldress (Humez), 3:228 Gill, Turner, 1:482
Gingrich, Newt, 1:299
Ginsburg, Ruth Bader, 1:15
Giovanni, Nikki, 2:483
Glazer, Nathan, 2:321
Gliddon, George
    Morton, Samuel G., and, 2:314
    Nott, Josiah, and, 2:372–373
    polygenesis, 1:94–95
    racial hierarchy, 2:462
    scientific racism, 3:3, 65
    white settler society, 3:223
G-loading, 2:206, 207
Global AIDS Alliance, 2:101
Global environment movement, 2:64–68
Global restructuring, 2:136–137
Global South, 2:423–424
Globalization
    African economic development, 1:51–55
    black popular culture, 1:206
    capitalism, 1:269–270
    cheap labor, 2:229
    China, 1:298–299
    Chinese diaspora, 1:306–307
    educational disparities, 1:426, 427
    human trafficking, 2:136–137
    labor market, 2:233
    Latino movements, 2:254
    New Partnership for Africa’s Development, 2:401–402 protest against, 1:270
    racial slave labor, 2:475–477
    sex work, 3:25–26
    sexuality, 3:32–33

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- slavery, 3:56
sweatshops, 3:108
underemployment, 3:173–176
undocumented workers, 3:178, 179–180
Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235
- Glory* (film), 1:337, 3:137
- Gobineau, Joseph-Arthur de
Chamberlain, Houston Stewart, influence on, 1:284
Firmin, Anténor, and, 1:95–96, 476, 2:77
Galton, Francis, similarity with, 2:2
Garvey, Marcus, criticism by, 2:16–17 nation-states, decline of, 2:487
Nott, Josiah, and, 2:372–373
racial hierarchy, 2:462
scientific racism, 3:4, 65
- Goddard, Henry, 2:191, 3:7
- Godse, Nathuram, 2:8–9
- Goebbels, Joseph, 2:108, 382, 3:101
- Goering, Hermann, 2:108
- Goethe, Johann Wolfgang, 1:285
- Gold
Australia, 1:133
Chinese diaspora, 1:305–306
Chinese immigrants, 1:308, 2:451
Congress of the Land Act, 3:159
precolonial Africa, 1:60–61
slave trade, 3:51
South Africa, 3:86
- Goldberg, Whoopi, 2:241
- Goldenweiser, Alexander, 1:227
- Goldman, Emma, 2:494
- Goldstein, Baruch, 2:207
- Gomez, Anna Nieto, 1:287
- Gómez, José Miguel, 1:370
- Gone with the Wind* (film), 2:477
- Gong Lum, 1:309
- Gong Lum v. Lee*, 3:193
- Gonzales, Rodolfo “Corky”
Chicano movement, 1:289, 291
El Plan de Santa Barbara, 1:433
La Raza, 2:227
Latino social movements, 2:251, 252
- González, Jorge, 1:145
- González, Lélia, 1:194
- Gonzo pornography, 2:419
- Good roads movement, 1:282
- Goodman, Andrew, 1:333, 2:458, 3:206
- Goodwin, Nat, 1:238
- Gordon, Bruce, 2:340, 341, 2:341
- Gore, Al, 1:299
- Gore, Albert, Sr., 2:456
- Goree Island, 3:142
- Goss, Joe, 1:238
- Gottlieb, Dina, 2:108
- Gottschild, Brenda Dixon, 1:393
- Government accountability, 2:358 slave trade interests, 3:51–52
- Gowon, Yakubu, 1:27
- Grace Church, 3:34
- Gradation, Principle of, 2:69
- Graffiti art, 2:95, 97
- Graham, Robert, 3:13
- Grail mythology, 3:210
- Grandfather clause, 3:90, 206
- Grandmaster Flash and the Furious Five, 2:484
- Grant, Bob, 2:241
- Grant, Frank, 1:153
- Grant, Jacqueline, 3:229
- Grant, Madison
eugenics, 1:445, 3:8
genetics, history of, 2:36
Gobineau, Arthur de, influence of, 3:4
Hitler, Adolf, influence on, 3:9
nativism, 3:100
racial purity, 2:471–472
- Grant, Ulysses S.
Civil War, 1:339
Jim Crow era, 2:491
Peace Policy, 2:308
- Grape boycott, 1:286, 2:251, 3:184
- Grass-roots programs, 1:107
- Gratz v. Bollinger*, 1:16
- Grauer, Rhoda, 1:393
- Graves, Bibb, 3:20
- Graves, Native American, 1:104, 2:352–353
- Gray, Fred, 2:215
- Gray, Thomas Ruffin, 3:172
- Great Chain of Being, 1:198, 2:68–73, 70, 72
- Great Depression
basketball, 1:160
braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:243–244
chain gangs, 1:282
New Deal, 2:364–367
Scottsboro Boys, 3:17–18
Social Security, 3:80
- The Great Gatsby* (Fitzgerald), 3:100
- Great Migration
poverty, 2:421
Powell, Adam Clayton, Jr., 2:425
race riots, 2:435, 437–439
sexual exploitation of black domestic workers, 2:486
- Great Pyramid Club, 3:110
- Great Rebellion, 2:259
- Greater Liberated Chicano, 2:253
- Greaves, Clinton, 1:258
- Greece, ancient
anthropometry, 1:97
slavery, 3:53, 62
taxonomy, 3:2
- Green, Dennis, 1:481
- Green, Ernest, 1:164, 165
- Green, Lorenzo Johnson, 1:132
- Green, Paddy, 1:237
- Green Cards, 3:178
- “Green Line,” 3:243
- Green v. County School Board of New Kent County*, 1:253
- Greene, Ann Terry, 2:406–407
- Greene, Lorenzo, 1:131
- Greenlee, Gus, 1:154
- Greg, William, 1:443
- Grégoire, Henri, 1:4
- Gregory, Dick, 2:241
- Grice, Hezekiah, 1:6
- Grier, Bobby, 1:481
- Grierson, William, 1:257
- Griffin, Marvin, 1:480–481
- Griffin v. County School Board of Prince Edward County*, 1:253
- Griffith, D. W., 1:174–179, 412, 413, 2:337, 3:21
- Griggs v. Duke Power*, 1:326, 3:133
- Grim, Clarence, 2:139
- Grimké, Angelina and Sarah, 1:7, 73, 74
- Grimké, Archibald H., 1:85
- Grimké, Francis J., 1:84, 86, 2:336
- Griots, 2:482–483
- Griswold, Erin W., 2:115
- Griswold v. Connecticut*, 2:495
- El Grito del Norte* (newspaper), 1:287, 2:253
- Gross domestic product (GDP), 3:151, 174
- Group Areas Act (South Africa), 1:100, 118, 119, 3:87
- Group-based race consciousness, 3:208
- Groups, 1:348–349, 3:76–78
African culture, 3:47–49
language, 2:237
- Grove v. Townsend*, 2:338
- Grupo de Ayuda Mutua*, 2:288
- Grutter v. Bollinger*, 1:16
- Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, 1:370
- The Guardian* (newspaper), 3:167

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Guatemala, 1:279–280, 280, 2:423
Guatemala, Mayan genocide in, 2:284–289
Guest-workers. See Bracero program
Guevara, Che, 1:370, 371
Guillebeaux, Tamara, 1:391
Guillén, Roberto Albores, 3:239
Guinn v. United States, 1:331, 2:338, 454, 3:92
Gulf War, 3:85
“Gullah” people, 1:201
“Gun-slave cycle,” 2:164–165
Gutiérrez, José Angel, 1:290, 291, 2:227, 252
Gutierrez, Luis V., 1:271
Gutiérrez, Luz, 1:290
Guyana, 1:276
Gypsies. See Roma
Gypsy population, 2:107–108
- ## H
- Haddon, Alfred Cort, 1:342, 3:10
Haeckel, Ernst, 2:72, 3:5
Haile Selassie, 1:42, 2:400, 425
Hair form, 1:345
Haiti
    abolition of slavery, 3:59
    democracy, 1:277
    emigration to the United States, 1:272
    Firmin, Anténor, 1:478
    racial demographics, 2:446
    Vodou, 1:276
Haitian immigrants, 1:273
Haitian racial formations, 2:75–78
Haitian Revolution, 1:275
    abolition movement, 1:4
    blackness in Latin America, 1:220–221
    capitalism, 1:269
Haldane, J. B. S., 3:181, 182
Haley, Alex
    Autobiography of Malcolm X, 2:280
    griots, 2:482–483
    heritage tourism, 3:137
    Rockwell, George Lincoln, interview of, 2:505
Haliwas, 1:201
Hall, George Cleveland, 1:129
Hall, Katie, 2:220
Hall, Prince, 1:3, 2:399
Hall of Fame (baseball), 1:156, 157
Hall of Fame (basketball), 1:161
Hall v. DeCuir, 2:451
Hallam, Mabel, 2:433
Hamburg Massacre, 3:131, 132
Hamer, Fannie Lou, 2:78–79, 218
Hamilton, Alexander, 1:3, 271
Hamilton, Charles, 1:347, 2:181
Hamilton, James, 3:200
Hamilton, William, 1:7
Hamites, 1:39–40
Hamitic curse, 1:91, 3:52, 62
Hamitic hypothesis, 2:56
Hammon, Jupiter, 1:3
Hammond, Bette, 2:246
Hammond, James Henry, 1:94
Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, 3:33, 214
Han dynasty, 2:481
Hancock, Ian, 2:506
Hand severing, 3:34
Hansberry, Lorraine, 1:331
Hanson, John Wesley, 2:380
Hapa Issues Forum (HIF), 2:326, 327
Harding, Warren, 3:100
Harijan, 1:385, 387
Harlan, John Marshall, 2:417–418, 3:193
Harlem, basketball in, 1:161
Harlem Renaissance
    Garvey, Marcus, 2:17
    lesbians, 2:263
    Pan-Africanism, 2:400
Harper, Francis Ellen Watkins, 1:7
Harper, Robert G., 1:78
Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 3:206
Harpers Ferry raid, 1:8, 250, 335, 3:140
Harris, Arthur, 2:431
Harris, James, 1:481
Harris, LaDonna, 1:83
Harris, William, 1:131
Harrison, Geoffrey, 3:12
Hart, Albert Bushnell, 1:128
Hart, D. A., 1:239
Hart-Celler Immigration Act, 2:155
Harvard Law School, 2:115
Harvard University
    Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:418
    Woodson, Carter Godwin, 1:128
Hastie, William H., 2:114, 338, 366
Hatcher, Richard, 2:220
Hatcher, Ron, 1:480
Hate crimes, 2:79–81, 80
Hate groups. See Specific organizations
Hatuey, 1:368
Hausmann, Georges-Eugène, 2:421, 424
Havana, Cuba, 1:370
Hawaii, 2:491
Hawkins, Henry, 3:33, 34
Hayek, Salma, 2:150
Hayer, Talmadge, 2:279–280
Hayes, Dennis Courtland, 2:341
Hayes, George E. C., 1:252
Hayes, Rutherford B., 1:177, 210, 309–310, 3:166
Hayes-Tilden Compromise, 1:325, 2:416, 3:206
Haynes, Lemuel, 1:3
Hays, Brooks, 1:165
Hazard, Walt, 1:161
Head shape. See Anthropometry
Health and safety
    African economic development, 1:55 behavior and life expectancy, 2:269
    Burakumin, 1:261
    day laborers, 1:397
    disease-predisposing alleles, 2:130–131
    infant mortality and birth weight, 2:174–176
    infectious disease susceptibility, 2:177–180
    life expectancy, 2:265–269
    medical racism, 2:292–297
    racial disparities, 1:292
    rice plantations, 2:412–413
    Tay-Sachs disease, 3:121–124
    workplace injuries, 2:236
Health care, 2:81–86, 84t hypertension and coronary heart disease, 2:140
    Native Americans, 3:105
Health care professionals, 2:293–294
Health insurance, 1:292, 2:83, 3:69
Heart disease, 3:68, 68f, 69f
Hegemonic diffusionism, 1:218–219
Hegemonic heterosexuality, 3:32
Heights, Dorothy, 1:252
Hellman, Milo, 3:10
Helms, Janet, 3:222
Helms, Jesse, 2:220
Hemoglobin S, 1:341, 343
Henderson, Douglas “Jocko,” 2:483
Henry the Navigator, 1:43, 217, 2:473
Hepburn, John, 1:2
Herc, Kool, 2:95–96
Hereditary Genius (Galton), 1:443–444, 2:2–3
Herero, 1:36–37, 2:53–54

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Heritability, 2:88–89
 Eysenck, Hans, 1:450–451
 Galton, Francis, 2:2
 Herrnstein, Richard J., 2:90
 intelligence, 2:197
 scientific racism, 3:6–7
See also Genetics
- Heritage tourism, 3:134–144
Hernandad Mexicana Nacional, 1:353
 Herodotus, 2:461
 Heron, Gil Scott, 2:483
 Herrick, James, 3:35
 Herrnstein, Richard J., 2:89–91
 eugenics, 1:446
 Eysenck, Hans Jurgen, criticism by, 1:451
 human biological variation, 2:124
 innate racial differences in intelligence, 2:195
 racial hierarchy, 2:462
 scientific racism, 1:479, 3:13–14
 social class and intelligence, 2:191
 stereotype threat, 3:99
- Hershaw, Lafayette M., 1:85
 Hershey, A. D., 2:37
 Herskovits, Melville, 1:218, 227
 Herstigte Nasionale Party (HNP), 1:66, 117–118
 Hertzog, James B., 3:86
 Herzl, Theodore, 3:240
 Heterosexism and homophobia, 2:91–94, 262
 Heterosexuality, 3:28, 32
 Heydrich, Reinhard, 2:108, 109, 110
 Hierarchies of oppression, 1:199
 Hierarchy of race. See Racial hierarchy
 HIF (Hapa Issues Forum), 2:326, 327
 Higginbotham, A. Leon, 1:366, 2:450
 Higginson, Thomas Wentworth, 1:8
 High school dropouts, 1:295
 Higher education. See Education, higher
Hijas de Cuauhtémoc (newspaper), 1:287–288, 2:253
 Hill, Anita, 2:487
 Hillbillies. See Rural white stereotyping
 Himes, Chester, 1:331
 Himmler, Heinrich, 2:109, 3:101
 Hinduism, 1:389, 2:9
 Hine, Edward, 1:313
 Hip-hop culture, 1:206–207, 2:95–97, 240, 273
See also Rap music
 Hippler, Fritz, 2:108
 Hippocrates, 1:97
 Hirabayashi, Gordon, 2:204
- Hirschfeld, Magnus, 2:18
 Hirsh, Emil, 2:336
 Hispanic Americans
barrios, 1:149–152
 as census classification, 2:257
 Ku Klux Klan, 2:223
 segregation, 2:451
 self-identification on Census forms, 2:461
 television, 3:127–128
 undocumented workers, 3:180
See also Chicanos/Chicanas; Latinos/Latinas; Mexican Americans
- Histadrut, 3:241, 243
Historia de las Indias de Nueva España e Islas de Tierra Firme (Durán), 1:143
 Historians, 1:393, 418–419
 Historic revisionism. See Revisionism
 Historic sites. See Tourism and national heritage Historically black colleges and universities campus climate, 1:422
 football, 1:480
 Freedmen's Bureau, 1:500
- History
 census, 1:400
 environmental justice movement, 2:65–66
 Hutu and Tutsi violence, 2:54–57
 two dimensions of, 1:218
See also Tourism and national heritage
- History of eugenics, 1:441–447
 History of genetics, 2:34–40
Hitchcock, Lone Wolf v., 2:48, 162
 Hitler, Adolf, 3:211
 anti-Semitism, 1:109
 boxing, 1:240
 Chamberlain, Houston Stewart, admiration of, 1:285
 eugenics, 3:9
 Holocaust, 2:104–105
 al-Husayni, Mohammed Amin, work of, 1:114
 medical experimentation, 2:291
 racial purity, 1:479
rasenhygiene, 2:488
 reservation system influence of the, 2:503
 Stoddard, T. Lothrop, meeting with, 3:101
 Wagner, Richard, admiration of, 3:211
- HIV and AIDS, 2:97–101
 African Americans, 2:83
 disparities, 2:180
- Haitians, 2:77
 Jones, Bill T., 1:392
 National States Rights Party, 2:352
 transnationalism, 3:156
 Zane, Arnie, 1:392
- HNP (Herstigte Nasionale Party), 1:66, 117–118
 Hoaxing, 2:101–103
 Hobbes, Thomas, 1:463
 Hoberman, John, 2:40
 Hochschild, Adam, 3:34
Hocutt v. Wilson, 2:338
 Hodge, Joseph “Black Joe,” 1:200
 Hoffman, Dustin, 2:355
 Hoffman, Frederick, 1:408
 Hogan, Larry, 1:156
 Hogben, Lancelot, 3:181
Hobri v. United States, 2:204
 Holbrook, Felix, 3:58
 Holder, Christian, 1:391, 1:392
 Holder, Wesley McD., 1:311
 Holloway, “Crush,” 1:154
 Holloway, John, 1:156
 Holm, Richard, 1:344, 2:371
 Holman, Nat, 1:159
 Holmes, Oliver Wendell, 1:445
- Holocaust, 2:103–112, 106, 108, 110
 anti-Semitism, 1:109
 denial of, 2:505
 eugenics, 1:446
 genocide, 2:43–45
 Nazis, 2:361
 reparations, 2:490
 Roma, 2:507
 Rwanda genocide compared to, 2:53
- The Holocaust Martyrs' and Heroes' Remembrance Authority, 2:111
 Holocaust Memorial Museum, 2:111, 3:138
 Holyfield, Evander, 1:236
 Home Missions Council, 2:309
Home of the Brave (film), 1:331
 Homeland Security measures, 2:333
 Homeownership, 1:292, 3:74, 196–197
 Hominids, 2:118–119, 392–397
Homo erectus, 2:119
Homo genus, 2:118–120, 392, 3:39–40
Homo habilis, 2:118–119, 120
Homo heidelbergensis, 2:119
Homo sapiens, 2:119, 3:40
 Homophobia. See Heterosexism and homophobia

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Homosexuals carnival, 2:264
families, 1:457
Intelligence Project, 2:185
Latinos/Latinas, 2:253
See also Gay men; Heterosexism and homophobia; Lesbians
- Honduras, 2:446
- Hooker, Ambrose, 1:257
- hooks, bell, 3:229
- Hooks, Benjamin, 2:340, 3:227
- Hooton, Earnest, 3:10, 12
- Hoover, Herbert, 2:364, 3:219
- Hoover, J. Edgar, 1:298, 2:280, 360, 438
- Hope, John, 1:85, 2:335
- Hopi Snake Dance* (film), 2:354–355
- Hopkins, Mark, 1:309
- Hopkins, Samuel, 1:3, 3:58
- Hopkinson, John, 1:77
- Hormones, 3:146–147
- Horton, James, 2:399, 3:18
- Horton, Willie, Jr., 3:113
- Hottentot Venus, 2:112–114, 113, 485–486
- House, Carrie, 2:263
- House Concurrent Resolution 108, 2:502
- House of Representatives, U.S.
black Civil War veterans, 1:184
Black Reconstruction, 1:209
Chisholm, Shirley, 1:311
Japanese Americans, 2:205
- House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC), 1:131, 332
- Housing
barrios, 1:149–152
basketball, 1:160
Caribbean immigrants, 1:272
Fair Housing Act, 1:327–328
home ownership, 3:74
Israel, 3:242
Native Americans, 3:105
post-World War II era, 1:330
poverty, 2:421
Puerto Ricans, 2:428
restrictive covenants, 2:338, 344–345
school desegregation, 1:253
segregation, 2:376
Shelley v. Kraemer, 2:344–345 wealth disparities, 2:231
- Houston, Charles Hamilton, 2:114–116
Brown v. Board of Education, 1:251
Howard University, 2:208
- Marshall, Thurgood, mentoring of, 2:283
NAACP, 2:338, 339, 342
NAACP Legal Defense Fund, 1:331
Shelley v. Kraemer, 2:345
- Houston, Sam, 1:68
- How Gay Stays White and What Kind of White It Stays* (Berube), 2:19
- Howard, John E., 1:75
- Howard, O. O., 1:209, 497–500
- Howard, T. R. M., 3:226
- Howard University
Association for the Study of African American Life and History, 1:129
Johnson, Mordecai Wyatt, 2:207–208
- Howard University School of Law
Houston, Charles H., 1:251
Johnson, Mordecai Wyatt, 2:208
Marshall, Thurgood, 2:283
- Howard University School of Religion, 2:289
- Howell, Clark, 2:432
- Howells, William Dean, 2:336
- HUAC (House Un-American Activities Committee), 1:131, 332
- Huang Di, 2:480
- Huang, John, 1:299
- Huaxia, 2:480–481
- Huerta, Dolores, 2:116, 2:251
- Hughes, Gregg, 2:241
- Hughes, Langston, 1:200, 2:400
- Human biological variation, 2:121–126
- Human capital theory, 2:376
- Human Development Index, 3:237
- Human evolution, 2:116–121
blood quantum, 1:223
China, 2:481
cranial index, 1:354
demes, 1:398–399
diabetes, 1:406
genetic distance, 2:27–28
geographic area, 2:125
Great Chain of Being, 2:69–72
Mendel, Gregor, 2:35
monogenesis, 1:226
“Out of Africa” hypothesis, 2:391–397 racial hierarchies, 2:467–468
racial purity, 2:468–469
skin and skin color, 3:39–41
subspecies, 3:102–103
- Human genetics. See Genetics, human
- Human Genome Project disease susceptibility, 2:179
history of genetics, 2:34 human and primate evolution, 2:117
- Human rights
Native American, 2:358
sex workers, 3:26
- Human rights and border crossings, 1:230–232
- Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission, 1:137
- Human Rights Watch, 1:230, 2:507
- Human status, 1:463, 2:25–26
- Human trafficking, 1:231, 2:134–138, 3:156, 179
- Hume, David, 1:2
- Humez, Jean, 3:228
- Humors, 2:463
- Humphrey, Hubert, 2:218
- Humphrey, R. M., 3:91
- Hunger, 1:293, 3:70
- Hunter, David, 1:180
- Hunting, 1:340
- Huntington, Collis P., 1:309
- Huntington, Samuel P., 1:322, 2:246, 247, 422–423
- Hurricane Katrina, 3:73, 73–74
- Hurston, Zora Neale, 1:96, 204, 2:478
- Hurtado, Osvaldo, 1:430
- al-Husayni, Mohammed Amin, 1:114
- Hussein, King, 1:115
- Hutu, 1:20–22, 2:54–59
- Huxley, Julian, 1:340, 341, 3:10, 181
- Huxley, Thomas, 2:71
- Hybridity, 1:206, 429, 430
- Hyde Amendment, 1:11, 2:498
- Hyer, Jacob, 1:237
- Hyer, Tom, 1:237
- Hypergamy, 1:215
- Hypermasculinity, 2:10
- Hypersexuality, 1:409, 3:31–32, 218
- Hypertension, 2:138–142
- Hypodescent, rule of, 2:324

I

“I Have a Dream” (speech), 2:217, 2:217, 2:457–458

Ice-T, 2:485

Ickes, Harold, 2:366

ICOMOS (International Council on Monuments and Sites), 3:134

Identification requirements, 2:107, 110, 111

Identity

black feminism in the United Kingdom, 1:197

blood quantum, 1:222–224

group identities, 3:78

multiracial, 2:323–329

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- symbolic ethnicity, 3:117–119
transnationalism, 3:157
- Identity cards, 1:20
- Idiong, Larry, 3:184
- Ifeajuna, Emmanuel, 1:27
- Ifill Gwen, 2:239
- I.G. Farben, 2:110
- Igbo Women's War, 1:269
- Ignorance, prejudice as root of, 1:418
- IHS. See Indian Health Service (IHS)
- ILD (International Labor Defense), 3:17–20
- Ileo, Joseph, 1:21
- ILGWU (International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union), 3:108
- Illegal aliens, 2:143–146, 145
Central Americans, 1:279
Chinese immigrants, 1:307
Corona, Bert, 1:353
farmworkers, 1:286
Immigration Reform and Control Act, 2:151–153
indigenous Mexicans, 2:172
informal labor market, 2:234–237
nativism, 2:360
Operation Gatekeeper, 2:384–385
Operation Wetback, 2:385–388
terminology, 1:321
transnationalism, 3:156–157
underemployment, 3:176
U.S. Border Patrol, 1:232–236
See also Undocumented workers
- ILO (International Labor Organization) indigenous rights, 2:170
- Imagining Indians* (documentary), 2:355
- Imam, Aisha, 1:64
- Imbecility, 1:484
- Immediatists, 1:5–6
- Immigrant domestic workers, 2:146–148, 147
- Immigrant Justice Project, 3:94
- Immigration, Caribbean, 1:271–274
- Immigration Act of 1917, 2:154
- Immigration Act of 1924, 2:360
- Immigration Act of 1965, 1:170
- Immigration Act of 1990, 3:176
- Immigration and immigrants, 2:155
anthropometry, 1:98–99
anti-immigration movement, 2:185
antimiscegenation laws, 1:212–213
Arab American, 1:120–121
Australia, 1:133–134
Boaz, Franz, studies of, 1:226–227 border crossings and human rights, 1:230–232
braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:243–245
Canada, 1:267
Caribbean immigrants in the United Kingdom, 1:196
censuses, 1:400, 2:257
Central Americans, 1:278–281
cheap labor, 2:228, 229
Chinese diaspora, 1:304–307
citizenship and border issues, 1:321–322
Corona, Bert, 1:353
cultural bias in intelligence tests, 2:196–197
cultural racism, 1:382, 383
eugenics, 1:445–446, 2:36
farmworkers, 1:458–460
illegal aliens, 2:143–146
Immigration Reform and Control Act, 2:151–153
indentured servants, 3:63
informal labor market, 2:234–237
intelligence tests, 2:191
IQ tests, 3:6
Irish Americans, 2:199–202
Italians and eastern European Jews, 3:8
Latina gender, reproduction, and race, 2:245–249
Latino day laborers, 1:395–398
Latino movements, 2:254
motherhood, 2:316–317
nativism, 2:358–359
Operation Gatekeeper, 2:384–385
Operation Wetback, 2:385–388 population statistics, 1:170
poverty, 2:421
quotas, 2:494
reproductive rights, 2:494
reproductive technologies, 2:497
sweatshops, 3:108–109
symbolic ethnicity, 3:119
transnationalism, 3:156–157
underemployment, 3:176
undocumented workers, 3:177–180
United Kingdom, 3:186–187, 188–189
U.S. Border Patrol, 1:232–236
See also Migration
- Immigration and Nationality Act, 1:318, 2:386
- Immigration and Naturalization Service, 2:385–388
- Immigration, race, and women, 2:148–151
- Immigration Reform and Control Act, 2:151–153, 3:176, 178
- Immigration Restriction Act of 1924. See Johnson-Reed Act
- Immigration to the United States, 2:153–156, 155
- Immorality Act (South Africa), 1:118
- Immortal Technique, 2:484
- Imperial British East Africa Company, 1:23
- Imperialism. See Colonialism and imperialism
- Implicit racism, 2:156–157, 3:115
- Improved Order of Red Men, 2:414
- Imus, Don, 2:239–241
- In Friendship, 2:512
- In Their Footsteps* (Chase), 3:139
- In Whose Honor* (film), 1:84
- INC (Indian National Congress), 1:387, 2:6, 8
- Incas, 1:463, 2:244
- Incendiary language, 2:239–241
- Inclusionism, 1:65
- Income
labor market, 2:230–231
mortality rates, 3:68f, 69, 69f
- Indentured labor
Caribbean, 1:275, 276
Cuba, 1:369
slavery, before, 3:55
whites, 3:63–64
- Independence Mall, 3:138
- Independence movements
Belgian colonies in Africa, 1:21–22
British colonies in Africa, 1:26–28
Cuba, 1:369
India, 2:8–9
Mexico, 2:167–168
Pan-Africanism, 2:400
Portuguese colonies in Africa, 1:46–47
Smith, James McCune, 3:67
Southeast Asia, 1:306
- Independent Confederation of Agricultural Workers and Indians (CIOAC), 2:169
- Independent variation, 2:370
- India
African diaspora, 1:50
brothels, 2:136
Dalits, 1:385–389
environment justice movement, 2:67
Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, 2:4–5, 6–9
lesbians, 2:264
sexual labor exploitation, 2:135
- Indian Act (Canada), 1:266, 496
- Indian boarding schools, 1:12, 2:157–159, 2:160–161, 309
- Indian Gaming Regulator Act, 1:104

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Indian Health Care Improvement Act, 2:86–87
- Indian Health Service (IHS), 1:12, 487, 2:86–87, 160
- Indian law, 2:356–358
- Indian National Congress (INC), 1:387, 2:6, 8
- Indian Naturalization Act, 1:319
- “Indian Princess” stereotype, 2:354–355
- Indian Removal Act
- crime, 1:356
  - ethnic cleansing, 1:436
  - federal recognition of Native Americans, 1:464
  - Jackson, Andrew, 1:94
  - missionaries, 2:307
  - Native American populations management, 2:501
  - segregation, 1:223
- Indian Reorganization Act
- blood quantum, 1:224
  - Collier, John, 2:367
  - federal recognition of Indians, 1:466
  - Indian Rights Association, 2:160, 162
  - missionaries, 2:309
  - success of, 2:502
- Indian Rights Association, 2:159–163
- Indian Self-Determination and Educational Assistance Act, 2:87, 503
- Indian slavery, 2:163–166, 164
- Indian Territory, 1:202
- Indian Trade and Intercourse Act, 2:306
- Indian volunteers in World War II, 3:186
- Indian Wars, 1:255–258
- Indians, Black, 1:200–203
- Indians, Mexico, 2:300–301, 303–304
- Indigenismo in Mexico, 2:166–173, 171, 3:235
- Indigenous peoples, 2:173–174
- Canada, 2:322–323
  - Cuba, 1:368
  - diseases, 2:178
  - enslavement, 3:65
  - ethnocide, 2:48–52
  - forced sterilization, 1:487–488
  - Fourth World, 1:495–496
  - labor exploitation, 3:176
  - Latin American racial transformations, 2:241–245
  - Latin American uprisings, 2:242
  - Mexico, 2:166–172, 300–301, 303–304
  - migrant workers, 1:459–460
  - missionaries among, 2:305–310
  - native violence, 2:54
  - Puerto Rico, 2:426–427
  - skin color, 3:40–41
  - slavery, 2:163–166
  - Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235–240
  - See also* Aborigine peoples
- Indigenous peoples of Latin America, violence against, 3:200–203
- Indirect racism, 1:362, 2:181
- Indirect rule, 1:24, 305
- Individual racism, 3:74
- Industrial education, 3:167
- Industrial Workers of the World (IWW), 3:153
- Industrialization
- human trafficking, 2:135–136
  - infant mortality, 2:174
  - poverty, 2:421
  - race riots, 2:435
  - racial slave labor, 2:475–477
  - triangular slave trade, 3:163
- Inequality
- language, 2:238
  - life expectancy, 2:265–269
- Infant mortality, 2:83, 84*t*, 86, 174–177
- Infectious disease susceptibility, 2:177–180
- Infertility, 2:498
- Informal labor market, 2:234–237
- In-group favoritism, 1:142
- Inikori, Joseph E., 2:474, 475
- Initiative on Race, 2:298
- Inner City Voice* (newspaper), 2:261
- Institute on Nonviolence and Social Change, 2:215
- Institutional heterosexism and homophobia, 2:92
- Institutional racism, 2:180–183
- Cuba’s elimination of, 1:372
  - football, 1:482–483
  - Jim Crow era, 2:102
  - labor market, 2:232–233
  - medicine, 2:294
  - social psychology, 3:74–75
  - transnational effects, 3:155
- Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), 2:169–170, 3:238, 239
- Institutional transformation, 1:423–424
- Integration. See Racial desegregation
- Integrationism, 3:220
- Intellectual colonialism, 3:228
- Intellectuals, 1:84–88
- Intelligence
- eugenics, 1:446
  - Eysenck, Hans Jurgen, 1:450–451
  - Galton, Francis, 2:2–4
  - heritability, 2:90
  - Morton, Samuel, 2:461–462
  - scientific racism, 3:6–7, 12
  - See also* IQ
- Intelligence Project, 2:183–186, 362, 3:94
- Intelligence Report* (magazine), 2:184–185, 3:94
- Intent and racism, 2:181–182
- Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, 2:286
- Interbreeding, 1:398–399
- Interconnected histories of women, 1:198–200
- Interculturality
- Latin American racial transformations, 2:244–245
  - mestizaje*, transformation of, 1:432
- Interdiocesan Project for the Recuperation of Historical Memory, 2:288
- Intergroup dynamics, 1:142, 3:76–78
- Intermarriage
- Burakumin*, 1:262
  - China, 2:481–482
  - German Jews, 2:106
  - See also* Black-white intermarriage
- Intermediate scrutiny, 1:15
- Internal colonialism. See Colonialism, internal
- Internal migration
- Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:137
  - poverty, 2:421
  - Powell, Adam Clayton, Jr., 2:425
  - race riots, 2:435, 437–439
  - sexual exploitation of black domestic workers, 2:486
  - Singleton, Benjamin “Pap,” 3:37–38
- Internal Security Act (South Africa), 3:87
- Internalized racialism, 2:84–85, 186–188, 339
- International AIDS Conference, 2:100
- International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur, 2:62
- International Conference on Human Rights, 3:227
- International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD), 1:377, 470
- International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, 1:230, 231

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- International Council on Monuments and Sites (ICOMOS), 3:134
- International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, 1:470
- International Criminal Court, 2:47, 61, 62
- International HapMap Project, 2:179
- International Hygiene Exhibition, 2:383
- International Indian Treaty Council, 1:84, 466
- International issues
- abolition movement, 1:4–5, 3:59
  - Anti-apartheid Movement, 1:101–102
  - capitalism, 1:269–270
  - children refugees, 1:293
  - disenfranchisement, 1:470
  - Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:419
  - educational disparities, 1:294–295, 425–428
  - environmental justice, 2:64, 67
  - feminism, 1:472
  - forced sterilization, 1:485
  - Fourth World, 1:495–496
  - hip hop, 1:206
  - HIV and AIDS, 2:97–101
  - immigrant domestic workers, 2:146–148
  - institutional racism, 2:183
  - labor organizing, 3:152–154
  - life expectancy, 2:267, 268*f*
  - patriarchy, 3:28
  - poverty, 2:422–424
  - reservation system, 2:503
  - same-sex marriage, 2:94
  - Sudan, genocide in, 2:62–63
  - undocumented workers, 3:179–180
  - welfare programs, 3:233
- International Labor Defense (ILD), 3:17–20
- International Labor Organization
- anti-apartheid movement, 1:101
  - Convention 169, 3:236–237
  - indigenous rights, 2:170
  - underemployment, 3:173
- International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union (ILGWU), 3:108
- International law, 2:61–62
- International Migration Society, 3:170
- International Military Tribunals, 2:111
- International Monetary Fund
- African economic development, 1:55
  - capitalism, 1:269
  - cultural racism, 1:381
  - global restructuring, 2:136
  - poverty, 2:422
  - sex work, 3:26
- International Olympic Committee, 2:378, 382
- International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), 3:153
- International Union for the Scientific Study of Population (IUSSP), 3:236
- International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, 2:250
- Internet
- awareness raising, 1:106
  - Burakumin*, defamation against, 1:261
  - neo-Nazis, 2:362–364
  - transnational labor organizing, 3:154
  - See also* Digital divide
- Internment, Japanese. See Japanese American internment
- Interpretation
- historical sites, 3:135
  - racism as contested interpretation, 3:73–74
- Interracial marriage. See Black-white intermarriage; Intermarriage
- Interracial sex
- Christian Identity, 1:313–314
  - Ku Klux Klan, 2:439
  - pornography, 2:419
- Interracialism, 2:341
- Intersectionality
- Anzaldúa, Gloria, 1:116
  - Asian American feminism, 1:126
  - black feminism in the United States, 1:198–200
  - critical race theory, 1:367
  - feminism, 1:472
  - gays and lesbians, 2:91
  - health disparities, 2:176
  - sexism, 3:27–30
  - sexuality, 2:18, 3:32–33
- Interstate commerce, 2:451–452
- Interstate Congress for Equal Rights and Responsibilities, 1:104
- Intimate partner violence. See Domestic violence
- Intragroup relations, 2:303
- Investment, economic, 1:53
- Invisibility, 1:280–281
- Involuntary ethnicity, 3:118
- Iolawole, Mary E. Modupe, 1:64
- I-Pride, 2:326
- IQ, 2:188–199, 190
- clines, 1:345
  - distribution of, 2:124
  - heritability, 2:88–89
- Herrnstein, Richard J., 2:90
- Jensen, Arthur, 2:205–206
- misuse of scientific information, 2:123–125
- scientific racism, 3:6–7, 12
- stereotype threat and racial stigma, 3:98–99
- Ireland
- British colonialism, 2:499–500
  - eugenics, 1:443
  - Remond, Charles Lenox, 2:489
- Irigaray, Luce, 1:470–471
- Irish Americans, 2:199–202, 200
- boxing, 1:238
  - discrimination against, 1:317
  - draft riots, 1:338–339
  - nativism, 2:359
  - stereotypes, 2:466–467
- Iroquois, 2:163
- Irvin, Monte, 1:154, 156
- Irwin, Lord, 2:7
- Isabella, Queen, 2:242
- Ishikawa, Kazuo, 1:261
- Islam. See Muslims
- Islamophobia, 2:323
- Isolation by distance, 2:32–33
- Israel, 1:114–115, 2:207
- Issei, 2:204
- Italian colonialism in Africa, 1:39–43, 41
- Italian immigrants, 3:8
- Italy, 2:111
- Itilong, Larry, 2:251
- ITUC (International Trade Union Confederation), 3:153
- IUSSP (International Union for the Scientific Study of Population), 3:236
- IWW (Industrial Workers of the World), 3:153
- J
- Jackson, Alexander L., 1:129
- Jackson, Andrew
- American Colonization Society, 1:75, 77
  - Battle of New Orleans, 3:82
  - Calhoun, John C., and, 1:264
  - genocide and ethnocide, 2:50
  - Indian Removal Act, 1:464, 2:307
  - Native American populations management, 2:501
  - policies, 1:94
  - Trail of Tears, 1:356
- Jackson, Antoinette, 3:137–138
- Jackson, Colin, 3:148

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Jackson, Helen Hunt, 1:466
Jackson, Jesse, 1:312, 2:219, 3:112
Jackson, John W., 1:153
Jackson, Jonathan, 1:394
Jackson, Kennell, 1:205
Jackson, Leroy, 1:480, 481
Jackson, Peter, 1:238
Jackson, William Tecumseh Sherman, 1:480 al-Jahiz, 2:331, 3:62
Jamaica
  eugenics, 1:443
  Morant Bay Rebellion, 1:276
  racial demographics, 2:445
James, C. L. R., 1:50, 277
James, Forrest "Fob," 1:283
James, Joe, 2:433
Jamestown, Virginia, 1:61, 355, 3:55
Janjaweed, 2:60, 61–62
Japan
  baseball, 1:157
  Burakumin, 1:259–262
  Chinese exclusion laws, 1:298
Japanese American internment, 2:451, 490, 491, 3:193
Japanese American redress movement, 2:203–205
Japanese Americans
  alien land laws, 1:70
  antimiscegenation laws, 1:212–213
  censuses, 1:400
  model minorities, 2:311–312
  segregation, 2:451
Japanese American Citizens League, 2:327
Jaramillo, Juan, 2:225
Jatis, 1:385
Jay, John, 1:3
Jay-Z, 2:96
JCNR (Joint Committee on National Recovery), 2:367
Jefferson, Thomas
  African colonization, 1:5, 75
  American Indians, 2:306
  black inferiority, 1:89, 185, 2:16, 3:189
  Declaration of Independence, 3:58
  Dew, Thomas, criticism by, 1:402 Enlightenment attitudes, 2:275
  heritage tourism, 3:138–139, 140
  Indian removal, 2:501
  Native American lands, 2:508
  Notes on the State of Virginia, 1:94 racism, 1:2, 3
  slaves, 1:317
  second-class citizenship, 1:319–320
  southern politics, 3:90–91
  white exploitation of black women, 2:439
Jeffreys, Sheila, 1:470
Jeffries, Jim, 1:239, 239
Jehossee Island, 2:411–413
Jelderks, John, 2:212
JEM (Justice for Equality Movement), 2:61, 62
Jenkins, Fats, 1:154
Jennings, Herbert Spencer, 3:9
Jennings, N. A., 3:130
Jennings, Robert, 2:290
Jensen, Arthur, 2:205–206
  compensatory education, 2:193
  Eysenck, Hans Jurgen, influence of, 1:450
  Herrnstein, Richard, and, 2:90
  IQ scores, racial differences in, 1:446, 2:195
  scientific racism, 3:12–13
Jesuits, 2:305–306
Jesup, Morris K., 1:226
Jesup North Pacific Expedition, 1:226
Jewett, George, 1:480
Jewish Chronic Disease Hospital, 2:291
Jewish Defense League (JDL), 2:206–207
Jewish National Fund (JNF), 3:241
Jewish nationalism, 2:207
Jews
  basketball players, 1:159
  Christian Identity, 1:312–313
  disease resistance, 2:179
  ethnic cleansing, 1:438
  German athletes, 2:383–384
  immigration restrictions, 3:8
  intelligence, 1:451
  Italian attitudes towards, 1:39
  Khazar theory, 3:100–101
  Palmer raids, 2:360
  rassenhygiene, 2:488
  Tay-Sachs disease, 3:121–124
  Zionism, 3:240–244
  See also Anti-Semitism; Holocaust
Jezebel stereotype, 3:31–32
Jim Crow era
  Black Reconstruction, 1:210
  chain gangs, 1:283
  civil rights acts, 1:325
  civil rights movement, 1:332–333
  institutional power, 2:102
  labor market, 2:232
  Mays, Benjamin E., 2:289
  NAACP legal actions, 2:342–343
  race riots, 2:432, 438–439
  racial purity, 2:470
  racial segregation, 2:452–455
  reparations, 2:491
  Scottsboro Boys, 3:16–20

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Johnson, Michael, 3:148
 Johnson, Mordecai Wyatt, 2:207–209, 289
 Johnson, Thomas 15X, 2:279–280
 Johnson, William Arthur, 1:480
 Johnson-Reed Act
   All-Asia Barred Zone, 2:154
   eugenics, 1:446
   genetics, history of, 2:36
   illegal aliens, 2:144
 Johnson-Sirleaf, Ellen, 1:54
Johnson v. McIntosh, 1:356, 2:48–49, 51, 307
 Joie, Chester, 3:58
 Joint Committee on National Recovery (JCNR), 2:367
 Joint Committee on Reconstruction, 1:189
 Joint rule, 1:26
 Jonas, Gerald, 1:393
 Jones, Absalom, 1:5, 71, 72
 Jones, Bill T., 1:392
 Jones, Claudia, 1:196
 Jones, Eugene Kinckle, 2:366
 Jones, John, 1:391
 Jones, Leroi, 1:271
 Jones, Mike, 1:483
 Jones, Peter, 1:168
 Jones, Ron, 1:283
 Jones-Haywood School of Ballet, 1:391
 Joplin, Scott, 1:174
 Jordan, Colin, 2:505
 Jordan, June, 1:271
 Jordan, Michael, 1:162, 163, 163
 Jordan, Vernon, 2:284, 3:198
 Jorde, Lynn, 2:31
 Jouhaud, Edmond, 2:388
Journal of Negro Life and History, 1:127, 129
 Journalistic writing, 2:52–53
 Journey of Reconciliation, 2:511
 Juarez, Benito, 2:168
Jubilee (Walker), 2:478
Das Judentum in der Musik (Wagner), 3:209 “Judicial enslavement,” 2:165
 Judicial review, 3:193
 Judimar School of Dance, 1:391
 Jurisdictional issues, 1:358
 Just wars, 2:243, 3:55
 Justice for Equality Movement (JEM), 2:61, 62
 Justice for Janitors, 1:107
 Justice system. See Criminal justice system
 JV and Elvis, 2:241
- K
- Kabila, Joseph, 1:22
 Kabila, Laurent, 1:22
 Kabyle Myth, 1:32–33
 Kach Party, 2:207
 Kader toy factory, 3:109
 Kagame, Paul, 1:22
 Kahane, Binyamin, 2:207
 Kahane, Meir, 2:206, 207
 Kahane Chai, 2:207
 Kaiser Wilhelm Institute of Anthropology, Human Heredity, and Eugenics, 3:9
 Kallenbach, Hermann, 2:6
 Kallikak family study, 3:7
 Kamelia, 3:22
 Kamin, Leon, 1:451, 3:13
 Kang Youwei, 2:481–482
Kansas City Call (newspaper), 3:226
 Kansas Colored Regiment, 1:180
 Kansas migration, 1:335, 3:37–38
 Kansas-Nebraska Act, 1:8, 335, 434
 Kant, Immanuel, 1:2, 285
 Karlmark, Gloria Ray, 1:164
 Kasavubu, Joseph, 1:21
Katzenback v. McClung, 2:458
 Kefauver, Estes, 2:456
 Keith, George, 1:2
 Kelly, Abby, 1:74
 Kelly, Grace, 2:200
 Kelly, Joseph, 2:440
 Kémény, Ferenc, 2:380
 Kendrew, John, 2:37
 Kennedy, Anthony, 1:15, 16
 Kennedy, Duncan, 1:366–367
 Kennedy, John F.
   affirmative action, 1:14
   Baker, Ella, and, 1:148
   civil rights acts, 1:326
   Cuban Missile Crisis, 1:371
   fair housing law, 1:327
   Irish Americans, 2:200
   Kennedy, Robert, appointment of, 2:216
   Malcolm X on the assassination of, 2:278
   March on Washington, 2:217
   Marshall, Thurgood, appointment of, 2:283
   Mays, Benjamin E., and, 2:290
   Wilkins, Roy, assessment by, 3:227
 Kennedy, Joseph C. G., 1:400
 Kennedy, Mifflin, 3:129
- Kennedy, Robert F.
   Corona, Bert, campaigning by, 1:353
   King, Martin Luther, Jr., and, 2:216, 219
   United Farm Workers, 2:251, 3:184
 Kennewick Man, 2:211–213, 2:353
 Kenya, 1:27
 Kenyan African Union, 1:27
 Kenyan runners, 2:41–42
 Kenyatta, Jomo, 1:27, 2:400
 Key, Francis Scott, 1:75
A Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin (Stowe), 3:102
 Keynes, John Maynard, 2:490
 Khama, Seretse, 1:119
 Khazar theory, 3:100–101
 Khoi Khoi, 2:112
 Kibei, 2:203
 Kickapoo Nation, 2:357
 Kidnappings, 2:285
 Killen, Edgar Ray, 2:352
 Kimba, Évariste, 1:21
 Kimber, John, 1:6
 Kin-based societies, 3:48–49
 Kinder, Donald, 1:348
 Kinetograph Department of the Edison Manufacturing Company, 1:474
 King, Alonzo, 1:391
 King, Coretta Scott, 2:214
 King, Deborah, 1:198
 King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:213–221, 215, 217, 220, 3:207
   African diaspora, 1:51
   assassination, 1:327
   Baker, Ella, work with, 1:148
   Biko, Stephen, influence on, 1:192
   black consciousness, 1:191
   civil rights movement, 1:252, 333 environmental activism, 2:65
   FBI surveillance of, 2:280
   Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, influence of, 2:4
   Grant, Bob, comments of, 2:240
   heritage tourism, 3:140
   on integration of baseball, 1:152
   Malcolm X, criticism of, 2:278
   March on Washington, 1:107, 2:340, 457–458
   Mays, Benjamin E., influence of, 2:290
   Montgomery bus boycott, 2:456, 3:226
   NAACP, 2:339
   Nobel Peace Prize, 2:401
   Pan-Africanism, 2:400

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

King, Martin Luther, Jr., continued
Requiem Canticles (ballet), 1:391
Rustin, Bayard, and, 2:512
King Philip's War, 2:165
Kingdom of Kongo, 1:20, 60
Kingsley Plantation, 3:139
Kinsey, Alfred, 2:18
Kipketer, Wilson, 3:145, 3:148
Kitcheyan, Kathleen, 3:105
Klaatsch, Hermann, 3:4
Klanwatch. See Intelligence Project
Klarman, Michael, 1:254
Kleagles, 3:21–22
Kluegel, James, 1:348
Knapp, Peter, 2:191
Knight, Thomas G., 3:18–19
Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. See
Second Klan
Knowles, Edward A., 2:435
Know-Nothings, 2:359
Knox, Frank, 1:258
Knox, Robert, 3:223
Koch, Marita, 3:148
Kochiyama, Yuri, 1:125
Kolawole, Mary, 1:64
Korean market, 2:311
Koretmatsu, Fred, 2:204
Korematsu v. United States, 3:193
Kostadinova, Stefka, 3:148
Kourou Accord, 1:202
Kraemer, Shelley v., 2:344–345
Kravets, Inessa, 3:148
Kristallnacht, 1:110, 2:107
Kristeva, Julia, 1:470
Kroeber, Alfred, 1:227
KRS-One, 2:484, 485
Krugel, Earl, 2:207
Ku Klux Klan, 1:314, 2:221–224, 222,
3:20–24
Bethune, Mary McLeod, threats against, 1:167
The Birth of a Nation (film),
1:175–178, 2:337
Black Reconstruction, 1:208, 209
Dixon, Thomas, Jr., 1:412–413
Duke, David, 1:419
Intelligence Project, 2:183–185
interracial sex, 2:439
Malcolm X, harassment of the family of, 2:276
murder of Chaney, Goodman, and Schwerner, 2:458
murder of civil rights workers, 2:181
NAACP, 2:335
nativism, 2:360

racial purity, 2:471
Southern Poverty Law Center,
3:93, 94
Swift, Wesley, 3:110
White, Walter Francis, 3:219
Ku Klux Klan Act, 1:177, 324–325
Kubrick, Stanley, 1:475
Kumari, Mayawati, 1:388
Kurosaki, Ryan, 1:157
Kwanzaa, 1:379, 2:244
Kwasniewski, Aleksander, 2:104
Kyi, Aung San Suu, 2:4
L
La Malinche, 2:225–226
La Peyrère, Isaac de, 3:2
La Raza, 2:226–227
La Raza Cómica, 1:430, 2:226–227
La Raza Law Students Association,
2:227
La Raza Lawyers, 2:227
La Raza Studies, 2:227
La Raza Unida, 1:290–291, 2:227, 251, 252
La Rock, Coke, 2:96
Labelle, Micheline, 2:75
Labor, cheap, 2:228–229, 3:152–153,
176, 179
Labor, racial slave, in the Americas,
2:472–479
Labor as wealth, 3:49
Labor camps, 3:226
Labor issues
African Americans, 1:316
Australian Aborigine peoples,
1:133–134
black codes, 1:188
braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:243–245
chain gangs, 1:282–283
Chávez, César, 1:285–286
Chinese immigrants, 1:305–306,
309, 369
Corona, Bert, 1:353
exploitation, 1:449–450
farmworkers, 1:458
Freedmen's Bureau, 1:499–500
Galarza, Ernesto, 2:1–2
global labor productivity, 3:174
Holocaust, 2:109, 110
Huerta, Dolores, 2:116
human trafficking, 2:134–138
immigrant domestic workers,
2:146–148
Irish Americans, 2:200–201
Latino day laborers, 1:395–398

League of Revolutionary Black
Workers, 2:259–262
Mexican immigrants, 1:234
Mexico, 2:172
Operation Wetback, 2:386, 387
peonage cases, 2:405–406
plantations, 2:407–413
Portuguese colonialism in Africa,
1:44–45
race riots, 2:437–439
racial purity, 2:469
racial segregation in the South,
2:453
slavery, 3:60–61
sweatshops, 3:107–110
transnationalism, 3:152–154, 156–157
triangular slave trade, 3:162
undocumented workers, 3:177–180
United Farm Workers, 3:184–185
United Kingdom, 3:186–187
Urban League, 3:196–197
Labor market, 2:229–234, 3:175
Labor market, informal, 2:234–237,
3:176
Labor organizing, transnational,
3:152–154
Labor unions
antiracist social movements, 1:107
cheap labor, 2:229
Corona, Bert, 1:353
Latino, 2:250
League of Revolutionary Black Workers, 2:259–262
race riots, 2:437–439
sweatshops, 3:108
transnational, 3:152–154, 156
Labour Party, 3:243
LaDuke, Winona, 1:83, 2:67
Lafayette, Marquis de, 1:4
Lafitau, Joseph François, 1:463
Lagailarde, Pierre, 2:388
Lagat, Bernard, 3:150
LaHood, Ray, 1:122
Lakota, 1:357
Lamarck, Jean-Baptiste, 1:400, 2:70, 381
Lammy, David, 1:49
Land Acts (South Africa), 1:101
Land Claims Agreement Act, 1:106
Land issues
alien land laws, 1:70–71
anti-Indian movement, 1:103–104
apartheid, 1:119
Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:136
Black Reconstruction, 1:208
blood quantum, 1:223

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Canadian aboriginal peoples, 1:266–267
 crown property, 1:26
 Freedmen's Bureau, 1:497
 General Allotment Act, 2:160, 161–162, 308–309, 502
 Indian Trade and Intercourse Act, 2:306
 Japanese immigration, 2:203
Johnson v. McIntosh, 2:307
 Mexico, 2:168–169, 170
 Native Americans, 1:356–357, 2:50–51
 reservation system, 2:500–503
 rural whites, 2:508
 South African racial formations, 3:87
 termination policy, 2:310
 Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 3:158–160
- Landis, Kennesaw Mountain, 1:155
 Lane, James H., 1:180
 Lane, Nathan, 2:18
 Lange, Elizabeth, 1:271
 Langston, John Mercer, 1:209
 Language, 2:237–239
   Boas, Franz, 1:226
   Canada, 1:266
   color-blind racism, 1:350–351
   ethnocentrism, 1:440–441
   Haiti, 2:76
   heterosexism and homophobia, 2:93
   Indian schools, 2:309 medical science, 1:407–408
   mental health care, 2:299
   Mexican indigenous peoples, 2:301
   Native Americans, 1:461–462, 2:51
   othering, 3:53
   Quebec, 2:323
   sexism, 3:28
   South Africa, 1:118–119
   voting rights, 3:207
- Language, incendiary, 2:239–241
Language, Rhythm, and Sound: Black Popular Cultures into the Twenty-First Century (Adjaye and Andrews), 1:205
- Lanier, Carlotta Walls, 1:164, 165
 Lapchick, Joe, 1:159
 Lapouge, Georges Vacher de, 3:5
 Lapsley, Samuel Norvell, 3:33
 Larson, Nella, 2:263
 Las Casas, Bartolomé de enslavement of indigenous peoples, 1:1, 463, 2:26, 167, 3:65 genocide chronicles, 2:49
   Hatuey, story of, 1:368
   New Laws, 3:202
   social impact of European colonialism, 3:162
   Valladolid debate, 3:201
- The Last Emperor, 2:484
The Last of the Mohicans (Cooper), 2:354
- Last Poets, 2:483
 LatCrit, 1:367
 Latent orientalism, 2:389
 Latin America
   el mestizaje, 1:428–432
   eugenics, 1:445
   genocide, 2:49
   immigrant domestic workers from, 2:148–151
   Native Americans, 1:463, 468
   sex work, 3:25–26
- Latin America, blackness in, 1:217–222
 Latin America, violence against indigenous people of, 3:200–203
 Latin American racial transformation, 2:241–245
 Latina gender, reproduction, and race, 2:245–249
 Latina lesbians, 2:263
Latinas Lesbianas Unidas, 2:253
 Latino day laborers, 1:395–398, 397, 398
 Latino social movements, 2:249–256
 Latinos/Latinas, 2:256–259
   adolescent female sexuality, 1:11
   barrios, 1:149–152
   baseball, 1:156–157
   census racial classification, 1:171–172
   Central Americans as sub-group of, 1:281
   Corona, Bert, 1:353
   cultural deficiency theory, 1:376
   dance, 1:389
   forced sterilization, 1:487
   Galarza, Ernesto, 2:1
   gangs and youth violence, 2:10–12
   gay men, 2:18
   illegal aliens, 2:144–146
   immigration, 2:154–156
   informal labor market, 2:235–236
   La Raza, 2:226–227
   machismo, 2:271–274
   motherhood, 2:316–317
   NAACP, 2:341
   New Deal, 2:366
   poverty, 2:422–423
   Puerto Ricans, 2:426–429
   undocumented workers, 3:180
- Laughlin, Harry, 3:10, 12
 Laumann, Edward O., 2:18
- Laura Spelman Memorial Fund, 1:131
 Lavalas, 2:77
 Law enforcement, 1:141
   American Indians, 1:358, 359
   cultural racism, 1:382
   gangs and youth violence, 2:11–12
   Intelligence Project, 2:185
- Law for Restitution of the German Civil Service, 2:105
 Law for the Dialogue, Reconciliation and Peace with Dignity in Chiapas (Mexico), 3:238
 Law for the Prevention of Genetically Diseased Progeny, 1:446
 Law for the Protection of German Blood and German Honor, 2:106
 Law of Return (Israel), 3:242
 Law to Prevent the Overcrowding of German Schools, 2:105
 Lawrence, Doreen, 3:188
 Lawrence, Neville, 3:188, 3:188
 Lawrence, Stephen, 3:188
 Laws of Burgos, 2:25–26
- Lawsuits
   environmental justice movement, 2:65
   Intelligence Project, 2:183–185
   Japanese internment, 2:204
   NAACP, 2:337, 338–340, 342–346
   Native American Rights Fund, 2:357–358
   reparations, 2:492
   Southern Poverty Law Center, 3:93–94
- Lay, Benjamin, 1:2
 Le Jeune, Paul, 2:26
 LEA (Local Educational Authorities), 3:188
 Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, 3:227
 League of Colored Ball Players, 1:153
 League of Gileadites, 1:250
 League of Nations, 1:107
 League of Revolutionary Black Workers, 2:259–262
 League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC), 2:249–250, 257, 386–387
 Leal, Luis, 1:145
 Learned societies, 1:84–88
Leatherstocking Tales (Cooper), 2:354
Lebensborn program, 1:446
 Leclerc, Charles, 2:76
 Lee, Ang, 1:475
 Lee, Barbara, 1:312
 Lee, Charles, 2:223

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Lee, Robert E., 1:183, 250, 336, 339
Lee, Spike, 1:475, 2:280
Legal color-blindness, 2:418, 3:195
Legal Indians, 1:467
Legal issues
    black codes, 1:185–189
    critical race theory, 1:365–366
    everyday racism, 1:448–449
    heterosexism and homophobia, 2:92
    Sudan, genocide in, 2:61–62
Legal Redress Committee, NAACP, 2:339
Legislation
    Absentee Property Law (Israel), 3:242
    Adolescent Family Life Act, 1:10
    Agrarian Reform Law (Mexico), 2:168
    Agricultural Adjustment Act, 2:365
    alien land laws, 1:70–71 anti-Caribbean immigration, 1:272
    Anti-Peonage Act, 1:324
    Asia Barred Zone, 1:120–121
    Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act (United Kingdom), 3:189
    Bantu Education Act (South Africa), 1:100, 118–119, 3:87
    Basic Law of 1573, 1:463
    Blair Education bill (proposed), 1:494–495
    British North America Act, 1:265
    British Poor Law of 1834, 3:230
    Cannibal Law of 1503, 2:243
    Chinese Exclusion Act, 2:154
    Civil Rights Act of 1866, 1:188, 189, 324, 3:191
    Civil Rights Act of 1875, 1:325
    Civil Rights Act of 1957, 1:325, 2:340
    Civil Rights Act of 1960, 1:325
    Civil Rights Act of 1991, 1:326
    civil rights acts, 1:323–328
    Commonwealth Immigrants Act (United Kingdom), 3:187
    Comprehensive Anti-apartheid Act, 1:101
    Confiscation Acts, 1:434
    Congress of the Land Act, 3:159
    Dyer Bill (proposed), 2:338
    Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, 1:376
    Editorial Law (Germany), 2:105
    Employment Equity Act (Canada), 1:267
    Equal Pay Act, 2:403
    Equal Treatment Law (Europe), 1:448–449
    Espionage Act, 2:438
    eugenics, 1:484
    Fair Housing Act, 1:327–328
    Fair Labor Standards Act, 1:458, 3:108
    Force Bill, 1:264
    Geary Act, 1:310
    General Allotment Act, 1:356–357, 2:160, 161–162
    Group Areas Act (South Africa), 1:100, 118, 119, 3:87
    Hart-Celler Immigration Act, 2:155
    hate crime laws, 2:79–80
    House Concurrent Resolution 108, 2:502
    Hyde Amendment, 1:11, 2:498
    Immigration Act of 1917, 2:154
    Immigration Act of 1990, 3:176
    Immigration and Nationality Act, 1:318
    Immigration Reform and Control Act, 2:151–153, 3:176, 178
    Immigration Restriction Acts, 1:99
    Immorality Act (South Africa), 1:118
    Indian Act (Canada), 1:266, 496
    Indian Gaming Regulator Act, 1:104
    Indian Health Care Improvement Act, 2:86–87
    Indian Removal Act, 1:356, 436, 464, 2:307
    Indian Reorganization Act, 1:466, 2:160, 162
    Indian Self-Determination and Educational Assistance Act, 2:503
    Indian Trade and Intercourse Act, 2:306
    Indigenous Rights Law (Mexico), 3:239
    Internal Security Act (South Africa), 3:87
    Johnson-Reed Act, 1:446, 2:36, 144, 154
    Kansas-Nebraska Act, 1:8, 335, 434
    Ku Klux Klan Act, 1:177, 324–325
    Land Acts (South Africa), 1:101
    Land Claims Agreement Act (Canada), 1:106
    Law for Restitution of the German Civil Service, 2:105
    Law for the Dialogue, Reconciliation and Peace with Dignity in Chiapas (Mexico), 3:238
    Law for the Prevention of Genetically Diseases Progeny, 1:446
    Law for the Protection of German Blood and German Honor, 2:106
    Law of Return (Israel), 3:242
    Law to Prevent the Overcrowding of German Schools, 2:105
    Lumbee Act, 3:165
    Menominee Restoration Act, 2:310
    Militia Act, 1:180, 182, 2:448
    Multiculturalism Act (Canada), 1:267, 2:321
    NAACP supported, 2:340, 341
    National Labor Relations Act, 2:365
    National Origins Act, 1:232–233
    Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, 2:211–212, 310, 352–353
    Natives Act of 1952 (South Africa), 1:101
    Natives' Land Act (South Africa), 3:86
    Native title act (Australia), 1:136
    Naturalization Act, 2:153
    No Child Left Behind Act, 3:96
    Northwest Ordinance, 1:4, 3:190
    Nuremberg Laws, 1:446
    Page Law, 2:143, 144, 497
    Pass Laws (South Africa), 3:87
    Patriot Act, 2:333
    Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act, 2:320, 3:81
    Population Registration Act (South Africa), 1:100, 101, 118, 3:87
    Prohibition of Mixed Marriages Act (South Africa), 1:100, 118, 3:87
    Proposition 187 (California), 1:353, 2:246, 385
    Proposition 209 (California), 1:17, 351
    Public Law 280, 2:502
    Puerto Rico Democracy Act (proposed), 2:429
    Puerto Rico Self-Determination Act (proposed), 2:429
    Quota Act, 2:154
    Reservation of Separate Amenities Act (South Africa), 3:87
    Riotous Assemblies Act (South Africa), 3:87
    Rodino Bill, 1:291
    Roybal Resolution, 2:258
    Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes Act (India), 1:386
    Sedition Act, 2:438
    Selective Service Act of 1917, 3:83
    Separate Amenities Act (South Africa), 1:101
    Separate Universities Act (South Africa), 1:119
    Snyder Act of 1921, 2:86
    Social Security Act, 2:365, 3:80
    Suppression of Communism Act (South Africa), 1:100, 3:87

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Treaties Statute, 1:356
 Unlawful Organizations Act (South Africa), 3:87
 Untouchability Act (India), 1:386
 Walker Law (New York), 3:24
 Welfare Reform Act, 1:10
See also Civil Rights Act of 1964; Fugitive slave laws; Voting Rights Act of 1965
- Legislative redistricting, 3:207–208
 Leibowitz, Samuel, 3:18–20
 Lemkin, Raphael, 1:439, 2:43–45, 103
 Lenz, Fritz, 2:488, 3:9
 Leonard, Buck, 1:156
The Leopard's Spots (Dixon), 1:412
 Leopold II, 1:18, 3:34
 Leprosy, 1:263
 Lesbians, 2:262–265, 264
   adolescents, 1:12–13
   Anzaldúa, Gloria, 1:116
   Chicana feminism, 1:288
   feminism, 1:470
   Latinas, 2:150
   Lorde, Audre, 2:270
   womanism, 3:228
 “Letter From the Birmingham Jail” (King), 2:216
Letters from a Man of Colour (Forten), 1:493
 Lettow-Vorbeck, Paul von, 1:38
 Levin, Joseph J., Jr., 3:93
 Levison, Stanley, 2:215, 512
 Lévi-Strauss, Claude, 1:228, 440
 Levitt, William, 1:330
 Lewis, Arthur, 1:49
 Lewis, Benjamin Robert, 1:90
 Lewis, John, 2:512
 Lewis, Marvin, 1:481
 Lewis, William Henry, 1:480
 Lewontin, Richard, 2:31, 3:13
Ley Lerdo, 2:168
 Li, Jet, 1:475
 Liberal legalism, 1:366
 Liberal multiculturalism, 2:322
 Liberal Party (Haiti), 2:76
 Liberal pluralism, 1:366
 Liberation Front of Mozambique (Frelimo), 1:46
 Liberationist project, 3:228
The Liberator (newspaper), 1:6, 73, 2:14
 Liberia
   Cuffe, Paul, 1:374
   Delaney, Martin, 1:190
   Forten, James, 1:493
   Pan-Africanism, 2:399
   See also African colonization
   Liberia, founding of, 1:75–81
   Liberia Exodus Joint Stock Steamship Company, 1:190
   Liberian Coat of Arms, 1:80
   “Liberty Bell,” 3:138
   Liberty Party, 1:74, 173–174
   Libraries, 3:140
   Library of Congress, 3:140
 Libya, 1:40
 Liebeskind, August, 2:274
El Lienzo de Tlaxcala, 2:225
 Life expectancy, 2:265–270, 266*f*
   racial disparities, 2:296
   slaves, 3:61
Light and Truth (Lewis), 1:90
 Lillard, Joe, 1:480, 481
 Limbaugh, Rush, 2:239
 Limestone Correctional Facility, 1:283
Limpieza de sangre, 2:167
 Lin, Justin, 1:476
 Lin, Maya, 3:93, 94
 Lincoln, Abraham
   abolition movement, 1:8–9
   African Americans, military performance of, 1:339 delegation sent to, to discuss black suffrage, 1:208
   Douglass, Frederick, meeting with, 2:449
   Dred Scott v. Sandford, 1:417–418
   Emancipation Proclamation, 1:434–435
   Irish Americans, 2:201
   presidential election, 1:335–336
   Stowe, Harriet Beecher, on meeting, 1:334–335
 Lincoln Motion Picture Company, 1:178
 Lindquist, Gustavus, 2:309
 Linearity, 2:68–72
 Lines Ballet, 1:391
 Lingo, Al, 2:351
 Linnaeus, Carolus
   anthropology, history of, 1:93
   biological taxonomy, 3:2
   class, order, genus, and species, 2:463 first racial classifications, 1:400
   Great Chain of Being, 2:69, 70 human “varieties,” 1:478
   racial formations, 2:459
   Systema Naturae, 1:453, 2:461
 Lippman, Walter, 3:9
 Lippo Group, 1:299
 Lipset, Seymour, 1:348
 Literacy, 1:427
 Literacy tests, 2:338, 3:206
- Literature
   African American writers, 1:331
   African diaspora, 1:49–50
   Central Americans, 2:254
   Dalits, 1:388
   Native Americans in, 2:354
 Lithuania, 2:104
 Little, Earl, 2:276
 Little, Mabel, 2:437
Little Big Man (film), 2:355
 Little Black Sambo, 1:204
 Little Friends Playgroup, 1:125
 Little Rock Nine. See Central High School
 Liu Xiang, 2:482
 Live-In Caregiver’s Programme, 2:148
 Living Legends, 2:484
 Livingstone, Frank B., 1:343, 346, 2:371, 3:35
 LLEGO (National Latina and Latino Lesbian and Gay Organization), 2:253
 Lloyd, John Henry “Pop,” 1:156
 Local agents (Freedmen’s Bureau), 1:498–499
 Local Educational Authorities (LEA), 3:188
 Local politics
   Black Reconstruction, 1:209–210
   Second Klan, 3:23
 Localized slavery, 3:53
 Locke, Alain
   American Negro Academy, 1:86
   anthropology, history of, 1:85
   Boas, Franz, work with, 1:96
   Howard University, 2:208
 Locke, John, 3:23, 51
 Lockman, Zachary, 2:391
 Lodge, Henry Cabot, 2:438
 Logan, Rayford, 1:131, 2:208
Lohengrin (opera), 3:210–211
 Lombroso, Cesare, 2:189
 Lomeli, Francisco A., 1:146
 London, Jack, 1:239
 London, England, 2:113–114
 London Agreement, 1:38
 London Missionary Society, 1:117
Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 2:48, 162
 Long, Crawford, 2:290
 Long, Richard, 1:393
 Longeaux y Vasquez, Enriqueta, 1:287, 3:27
 Longino, Helen, 2:418–419
 Longoria, Felix, 2:250, 3:84
 Longview Race Riot of 1919, 2:439
 López, Jennifer, 2:150

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- López, Yolanda, 1:287
López Tijerina, Reies, 1:106, 2:227, 251, 252
Lorde, Audre, 2:270
    feminism, 1:470
    intersectionality, 2:18, 3:28
    lesbianism, 2:263
Lorraine Hotel, 2:219
Los Alamos National Laboratory, 1:303–304
Los Angeles, California
    barrios, 1:151–152
    Chicano movement, 1:289–290
    gangs and youth violence, 2:9–12
    mural, 1:151
    Zoot Suit riots, 3:244–246
Lost Tribes, 1:313
Lott, Trent, 2:185, 3:221
Louis, Joe, 1:240–241, 1:242, 1:332
Louis XIV, 2:164, 3:51
Louisiana
    Le Code Noir, 3:42
    Indian slavery, 2:164
Louisiana Native Guards, 1:180–181
Louisiana Purchase International Exposition, 2:378–381
Louisville, New Orleans & Texas Railway Co. v. Mississippi, 2:451
Love, 3:228–229
Love, John L., 1:85
Lovejoy, Elijah, 1:8, 250, 2:406
Loving, Richard and Mildred, 1:214
Loving v. Virginia, 1:170, 213–214, 3:194
Low birth weight, 1:292, 2:175
Lowell, Francis Cabot, 2:477
Lowie, Robert, 1:227
Lowinsky, Naomi, 2:315
Loyalists Democrats of Mississippi, 2:78
Lucy, Autherine, 1:332
“Lucy” skeleton, 2:118
Ludke, Bruno, 2:504, 505
LULAC (League of United Latin American Citizens), 2:249–250, 257
Lulu, oder Die Zauberflöte (Liebeskind), 2:274
Lumbee Act, 3:165
Lumumba, Patrice, 1:21
Lundy, Benjamin, 2:14
Lutuli, Albert, 2:401
Lyell, Charles, 2:26
Lynch, Connie, 2:351
Lynching, 2:486
    awareness raising, 1:106
    civil rights acts, 1:325
    hoaxing, 2:102
    race riots, 2:436
    rape, 2:486
    Roosevelt, Franklin Delano, 2:366
    southern politics, 3:92
    Southern Poverty Law Center, 3:94
    Tillman, Benjamin “Pitchfork,” 3:132
    Watson, Thomas E., 3:216–217
    Wells-Barnett, Ida B., 3:217–218
    White, Walter Francis, 3:219
    Wilson, Woodrow, 2:337
Lynn, Richard, 1:446, 2:195, 464
- ## M
- Macaulay, Herbert, 1:24
Machismo, 2:271–274, 272
Mack, Myrna, 2:288
Mackinnon, Catherine, 2:418
Macklin, Edgar A., 2:435
MacLeod, Colin, 2:37
Macpherson, William, 3:188
Macpherson Report, 3:188
Macroeconomic policies, 3:174
Madagascar, 1:33
Madavo, Callisto, 2:401
Madison, James, 1:78, 264, 3:190
Mad TV (television show), 3:127
Magee, Ruchell, 1:394
Magic, 1:440
The Magic Flute, 2:274–276
Magubane, Bernard, 1:450
Mahin, Luiza, 1:194
Mainstream rap music, 2:483
Maji Maji uprising, 1:37
Major, John, 3:189
Major Crimes Act, 1:358
Major League Baseball, 1:155–156, 332
“Majors’ coup,” 1:27
Making Waves: An Anthology of Writings by and about Asian American Women (Asian Women United), 1:125–126
Malan, Daniel, 1:65, 100, 117
Malaria
    clines, 1:341, 343
    sickle cell anemia and, 3:35–36
    West Africa, 1:24–25
Malaysia, 2:332
Malcolm X, 2:276–280, 277, 279
    Biko, Stephen, influence on, 1:192
    black consciousness movement, 1:169
    Caribbean immigration, 1:271
    Garvey, Marcus, influence of, 2:17
    Garveyism, 1:191
    Nation of Islam, 2:347
    Pan-Africanism, 2:400
    rap, influence on, 2:483
    tokenism, 3:133
Malcolm X (film), 2:280
MALCS (Mujeres Activas en Letras y Cambio Social), 1:288, 2:253
Malinowski, Bronislaw, 1:440
Malthus, Thomas, 2:421, 494
MAM (Mexican American Movement), 1:353
Mama, Amina, 1:64, 196
Mammy (film role), 2:477
Manchus, 2:481
Mandela, Nelson, 1:102, 2:280–282, 281, 3:88
    African diaspora, 1:51
    Afrikaner Broederbond, 1:66
    AIDS, 2:100
    British colonies in Africa, 1:26, 28
    Castro, Fidel, thanks to, 1:192
    civil disobedience, 1:100
    HIV and AIDS, 2:100
    Pan-Africanism, 2:401
    presidency of, 3:88
    release of, 1:101
Maniaci, Bill, 2:207
Manifest Destiny, 1:222–223, 2:307
Manifest Orientalism, 2:389
Mankiller, Wilma, 1:83
Mankind Quarterly (journal), 3:12
Manley, Effa, 1:154, 156
Manley, Michael, 1:269
Mann, Woodrow, 1:165
Mann Act, 1:239
Man’s Most Dangerous Myth: The Fallacy of Race (Montagu), 2:313
Mansa Musa, 1:60
Manumission certificate, 1:186
Man-Yi, 2:480–481
Mao Zedong, 1:298
Maori, 2:491, 3:69
MAPA (Mexican American Political Association), 1:353, 2:251
Mar, M. Elaine, 2:317
Marcantonio, Vito, 1:325
March Against Fear, 2:340, 3:226
March from Selma, 3:75
March of Tears. See Trail of Tears
March on Washington, 1:326
    civil rights movement, 1:333
    desegregation in the South, 2:457–458
    economic oppression, 3:81
    King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:217
    Malcolm X, criticism of, 2:278

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- NAACP, 2:340
 as protest strategy, 1:107
 Rustin, Bayard, 2:511, 513
 Urban League, 3:197
 Wilkins, Roy, 3:226
- March on Washington campaign, 1:329, 3:220
- Marcos, Comandante, 3:239
- Marginality, 2:325–326
- Marin, Cheech, 2:254
- Marina, Doña, 2:225
- Mariscal, George, 2:251
- Marks, J. B., 1:100–101
- Marley, Bob, 1:106, 192–193, 276, 2:400
- Maroon communities
 African diaspora, 1:48
 Black Indians, 1:201–203
 blackness in Latin America, 1:219
 Caribbean racial formations, 1:276
 Garifuna, 2:243
 resistance, 1:106
- Marr, Wilhelm, 1:108
- Marriage
 Africa, 3:48–49
 arranged, 2:136
 Latina immigrants, 2:150
 slaves, 3:58
- The Marriage of Figaro* (opera), 2:275
- Marshall, George Preston, 1:480
- Marshall, John, 1:464, 2:307, 356, 501
- Marshall, Thurgood, 1:252, 2:282–284
 affirmative action, 1:15
 Constitution, on the intent of the framers of the, 3:190
 Houston, Charles Hamilton, mentoring of, 2:115
 Howard University Law School, 2:208
 Mays, Benjamin E., representation of, 2:289–290
Mendez v. Westminster School District, citing of, 2:249
 NAACP, 2:339, 342
 NAACP Legal Defense Fund, 1:331
Smith v. Allwright, 2:344
Sweatt v. Painter, 2:345–346
- Marson, Una, 1:196
- Martí, Jose, 1:271, 369
- Martinet, Louis A., 2:416
- Martínez, Demetria, 2:254
- Martinez, Mel, 1:271
- Martinez, Vilma S., 2:152
- Marx, Karl
 American Civil War, 1:337
 capitalism, 1:268
 exploitation, 1:449
- Marxism
 Chicano movement, 2:252
 labor market theory, 2:233
- Maryland, 3:64
- Marzel, Baruch, 2:207
- Masamakali, Changa, 1:189
- Masayesva, Victor, Jr., 2:355
- Mascots, athletic, 1:83–84
- Masculinity, 2:20
- Mashiani, Jan, 2:379
- Mason, George, 1:3
- Mass media. See Media
- Massachusetts
 Native Americans, 1:355
 slavery, 3:55
- Massachusetts Antislavery Society, 2:489
- Massachusetts General Colored Association (MGCA), 1:6, 3:213
- Massey, Douglas S., 1:146
- Masterkova, Svetlana, 3:149
- Matriarchy, 2:318–319
- Matsui, Hideki, 1:157
The Matzah of Zion (Tlas), 1:115
- Mau Mau rebellion, 1:27
- Mauss, Marcel, 2:68
- MAVIN Foundation, 2:327
- Maxwell, Bill, 2:240
- Maya
 cultural resistance, 3:235
 indigenismo in Mexico, 2:169–170
 media, use of, 3:203 violence towards, 3:201
- Mayan genocide in Guatemala, 2:284–289
- Mayawati, 1:388
- Mayer, Helene, 2:384
- Mayers, Frank, 1:237
- Mayfield, Earle B., 3:22–23
- Mays, Benjamin E., 2:208, 289–290
- Mays, Willie, 1:154, 156
- Mazrui, Ali, 1:49, 2:400
- Mazzoli, Romano, 2:152
- Mbeki, Thabo, 2:401, 401
- M'Bow, Amadou Mahar, 2:401
- McAfee, Leroy, 1:412
- McBryar, William, 1:258
- McCarran-Walter Act. See Immigration and Nationality Act
- McCarthy, Eugene, 1:332, 347, 2:219
- McCarthy, Joseph R., Jr., 2:360
- McCarthy, Tom, 1:256
- McCarthyism
 Chinese Americans, 1:298
 civil rights movement, 1:332
- Mexican American labor unions, 2:250
 Woodson, Carter G., 1:131
- McCarty, Maclyn, 2:37
- McCaskey, William S., 2:434
- McCleskey v. Kemp*, 3:194
- McCoy, Cecil, 2:338
- McCrummill, James, 1:7
- McDaniel, Hattie, 2:477
- McDonald, Henry, 1:480
- McDonald, William Jesse, 2:434
- McElroy, Wendy, 2:418
- McFadden, Patricia, 1:64
- McGee, Michael, 2:347
- McGee, William John, 2:379
- McGhee, Frederick, 2:368
- McGuirk, Bernard, 2:225
- McHenry, Jerry, 1:8
- McKay, Claude, 2:400
- McKinley, William, 3:216
- McLaurin v. Board of Regents*, 1:252, 331, 2:339, 3:194
- McLean, Evalyn Walsh, 1:241
- McLendon, John, 1:161
- McLeod, William Christie, 1:466
- McNelly, Leander, 3:130
- McSwain, Robert, 3:105
- McVeigh, Timothy, 1:314, 2:349
- Mead, Lawrence, 2:318
- Mead, Margaret, 1:227–228, 347, 3:181
- Meade, William, 1:78
- Means, Russell, 1:81, 83
- Means Coleman, R. R., 3:125
- Means-tested welfare programs, 3:80, 232–233
- Measurement modern racism scale, 3:114–115
 skin color, 3:38–39
See also Anthropometry;
 Craniometry
- MEChA (Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlán), 1:145, 289, 2:251
- Mechlin, Joseph, 1:80
- Media
 African Americans, portrayals of, 1:360
 antiblack racism, 2:438
 antiracial social movements, 1:106
 awareness raising, 1:106
 biracial Americans, 1:172
 heterosexism and homophobia, 2:92–93
 institutional racism, 2:183
 language, 2:238

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

Media, continued

machismo, 2:273
Mayan use of, 3:203
Mexican immigration, 2:386
Operation Wetback, 2:387
rural whites, portrayals of, 2:510
symbolic racism, 3:113
Media Matters for America, 2:240
Medical experimentation, 2:290–292, 294–295
Medical racism, 2:292–298
Medicine. See Diseases; Health and safety; Health care
Medina, Eliseo, 2:251
Medusa, 2:484
Meech Lake Accord, 1:266
Mehta, Deepa, 2:264
Mehta, Pherozechah, 2:5
Mein Kampf (Hitler), 2:104, 503
Die Meistersinger (opera), 3:211
Mejía Victores, Oscar, 2:287–288
Mel, Melle, 2:96
Melanin, 1:345, 477, 3:38–41
Mella, Julio Antonio, 1:370
Melungeons, 1:201, 3:165
Member of the Wedding (film), 1:332 Men
  black masculinity, 2:20–21
  hypersexuality, 1:409
  machismo, 2:271–274
Menchú, Rigoberta, 1:106, 2:288
Menchú, Vicente, 2:288
Mencken, H. L., 3:9
Mendel, Gregor, 2:34, 35, 382
Mendelian genetics, 2:22, 35, 3:7
Mendelssohn, Felix, 3:209–210
Méndez, José, 1:157
Méndez, Miguel, 1:146
Mendez v. Westminster School District, 2:249, 302, 451
Mendoza, Daniel, 1:237
Menendez, Robert, 1:271
Mengele, Joseph, 2:108
Menominee Restoration Act, 2:310
Menominees, 2:309–310
Menozzi, Paola, 1:344
Mental health, 2:298–300
Mental Health: Culture, Race, and Ethnicity (U.S. Surgeon General), 2:298
Mental health issues. See Psychological issues
Mental retardation, 1:295–296, 3:6–7
Mercantilism, 2:473, 499, 3:50–52
Mernissi, Fatima, 1:63

Merriam Report, 2:309
Merrick, Joseph, 2:312
Merton, Robert, 2:272
The Message (rap music), 2:484
Mestizaje. See El mestizaje
Mestizos, 2:168, 300–301
Metaphors, 1:407–408, 2:322
Metcalf, Jack, 1:103
Methamphetamine use, 3:105–106
Metric analysis in forensic anthropology, 1:490–491
Metro Broadcasting, Inc. v. Federal Communications Commission, 1:16
Metzger, Jon, 2:184
Metzger, Tom, 2:184, 347
Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, 2:327
Mexican American Movement (MAM), 1:353
Mexican American Political Association (MAPA), 1:353, 2:251
Mexican Americans
  censuses, 1:401
  civil rights issues, 1:285–286
  Corona, Bert, 1:352–353
  cultural deficiency theory, 1:376
  deportations, 2:366
  informal labor market, 2:235–236
  La Raza, 2:226–227
  Latino social movements, 2:249–256
  machismo, 2:271–274
  Operation Wetback, 2:153
  racism in the United States, 2:301–304 social construction of racism, 2:300 soldiers, 3:81–85
  terminology, 1:433
  Texas Rangers, 3:129–130
  Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 3:158–160
  United Farm Workers, 3:184–185
  Zoot Suit Riots, 3:244–246
  See also Chicana feminism; Chicano movement; Chicanos/Chicanas
Mexican American War, 1:8, 3:158–160
Mexican Council for 500 Years of Indigenous Resistance, 3:236
Mexican culture
  Anzaldúa, Gloria, 1:116
  Aztlán, 1:143–146
Mexican Farm Labor Program Agreement. See Bracero Program
Mexican feminism, 2:226
Mexican immigration and immigrants
  barrios, 1:152
  border crossings and human rights, 1:231

  braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:243–245
  cheap labor, 2:229
  farmworkers, 1:459
  illegal aliens, 2:144–145
  labor market, 2:232
  Latina gender, reproduction, and race, 2:245–249
  Operation Gatekeeper, 2:384–385
  Operation Wetback, 2:385–388
  overview, 2:301–304
  politics of immigration policy, 1:234
  transnationalism, 3:156–157 twentieth century, 2:154–156
  undocumented workers, 3:178
Mexican Revolution, 2:168
Mexican War, 3:82
Mexican Women in the United States (anthology), 1:287
“Mexicano,” 1:406
Mexicans, 2:300–305
Mexico
  Alamo, 1:67–70
  cross-border politics, 1:234–235
  labor, 3:108
  La Malinche, 2:225–226
  Operation Wetback, 2:386
  racial demographics, 2:444–445
  Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 3:158–160
  white settler society, 3:224, 225
  Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235–240
Mexico, indigenismo in, 2:166–173, 171
Meyerbeer, Giacomo, 3:210
MF Doom, 2:484
MFDP. See Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party (MFDP)
Mfume, Kweisi, 2:340, 341
MGCA (Massachusetts General Colored Association), 1:6, 3:213
Michaels, Aaron, 2:347
Micheaux, Oscar, 1:178
Middle Ages economics, 2:473
  Great Chain of Being, 2:68–72
  slavery, 3:54
Middle class
  Caribbean racial formations, 1:275, 277–278
  Chinese Americans, 1:301–302
  Haitian immigrants, 1:272
  mestizo, 2:168
  racial purity, 2:469–470
Middle-distance runners, 3:148–149

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Middle East
 anti-Semitism, 1:109, 114–115
 Orientalism, 2:389–391
 refugees, 1:138
 slave market, 1:58
- Middle Passage, 3:55
- Midwest Treaty Network, 1:104
- Migrant workers
 braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:243–245
 Chávez, César, 1:286
 domestic labor, 2:146–148
 farmworkers, 1:458–460
 U.S. Border Patrol, 1:234
- Migration
 border crossings and human rights, 1:230–232
 braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:243–245
 Central Americans, 1:278–279
 Exoduster movement, 1:211
 human trafficking, 2:134–138
 Israel, 3:241
 Ohio's black codes, 1:185–186
 Puerto Ricans, 2:428
See also African colonization;
 Immigration; Internal migration
- Migratory Labor Agreement, 1:244
- Military
 black Civil War soldiers, 1:179–184, 2:449
 border issues, 1:322
 Brownsville, Texas, incident, 2:434–435
 Buffalo Soldiers, 1:255–259
 Civil War, American, 1:336–338
 commissioned officers, 2:338
 Dalits, 1:387
 French African colonial soldiers, 1:33
 German African colonial soldiers, 1:38 integration, 1:329, 2:455
 Jews barred from Russian military, 1:111
 race riots, 2:440
 race-war movies, 1:474–475
 racial segregation under Woodrow Wilson, 2:454
 Rhode Island Black Battalion, 3:58
 segregation, 2:448
 soldiers of color, 3:81–85
- Militia Act, 1:180, 182, 2:448
- Mill, John Stuart
 Darwin, Charles, opinion of, 1:444 human nature, 1:443
The Subjection of Women, 1:471
- Mille Lacs Tea Party, 1:104
- Millennium African Recovery Plan, 2:401
- Millennium Declaration, 3:177
- Miller, Benjamin Meeke, 3:17
- Miller, Kelly, 1:85
- Million Man March, 2:347
- Million Youth March, 2:348
- Mills, Samuel J., 1:78–79
- “Mingo,” 3:58
- Minimization of racism, 1:350
- Minority languages, 2:237–239
- M'Intosh, Johnson v.*, 2:48–49, 51
- Miocene apes, 2:117–118
- Mirabeau, Honoré, 1:4
- Miscegenation and antimiscegenation laws
 Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:134
 citizenship, 1:316
 German colonialism in Africa, 1:37
 Italian colonialism in Africa, 1:40
 racial purity, 2:471–472
 South Africa, 1:118, 3:87
 United States Constitution, 3:194
- Misdiagnosis, 2:299
- Mis-Education of the Negro* (Woodson), 1:130, 1:130
- Misra, Joya, 1:472
- Mission statements in higher education, 1:424
- Missionaries
 Mexico, 2:167
 Sheppard, William, 3:33–34
- Missionaries among American Indians, 2:305–311
- Mississippi
 black codes, 1:188
 voting rights, 3:206
- Mississippi Farm Labor Union, 2:79
- Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party (MFDP)
 Baker, Ella, 1:148
 black consciousness, 1:191
 creation of, 2:218
 Hamer, Fannie Lou, 2:78
- Missouri Compromise, 1:335, 415–417, 3:190
- Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada*, 1:251, 331, 2:339, 346, 454
- Missouri v. Jenkins*, 1:253
- Mistrust, 2:299, 3:99
- Mitchell, Arthur W., 1:391, 2:425
- Mitchell, Bobby, 1:480, 481
- Mitchell, Cleaster, 2:439
- Mitchell, John, 2:336
- Mitchell v. United States*, 2:454
- Mitochondrial DNA, 2:27–28, 38, 127, 128<sup>f</sup>
- Mitochondrial Eve Theory. See “Out of Africa” hypothesis
- Mitterand, François, 1:34
- Mixed race persons. See Multiracial persons
- ML (Muslim League), 2:8
- Mobility, social. See Social mobility
- “Mobilization of bias,” 1:53
- Mobutu, Joseph, 1:21–22
- Mochi, Aldobrandino, 1:40
- Model minorities, 2:311–312
 Asian Americans, 1:125
 Chinese Americans, 1:301–302, 307
 cultural racism, 1:382
 Japanese Americans as, 2:204
- “Model Villages” campaign, 2:286–288
- Modern dance, 1:391–393
- Modern racism. See Symbolic and modern racism
- Modernization
 human trafficking, 2:135–136
 Mexico, 3:235–236
- Mohammed, Murtala, 1:27
- Moi, Arap, 1:27
- Molecular biological-genetic studies, 1:491
- Mollineaux, Tom, 1:237
- Money, 3:161
- Mongols, 2:481
- Monogenesis
 racial purity, 2:467–468
 scientific racism, 3:2–4
 slavery, 1:94
- Monolingualism, 2:238
- Monroe, James, 1:79, 264, 430
- Montagu, Ashley, 2:312–313, 3:10, 11, 181–182
- Monteagudo, José de Jesus, 1:370
- Montejo, Esteban, 1:369
- Montesquieu, Charles de. See Secondat, Charles-Louis de
- Montgomery, James, 1:337
- Montgomery, Olen, 3:16, 19
- Montgomery bus boycott
 Baker, Ella, 1:148
 King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:214–215
 racial segregation, 2:456
 Rustin, Bayard, 2:512
 Wilkins, Roy, 3:226
- Montgomery Improvement Association, 2:214–215
- Monticello, 3:138, 140
- Mooney, James, 1:96

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Moore, Basil, 1:168
Moore, David, 3:47
Moore, George, 1:237
Moore v. Dempsey, 2:338
Moorland, Jesse, 1:129
Mora, Pat, 1:287
Moraga, Cherrie
  body politics, 1:229
  Chicana feminism, 1:287, 288
  Chicano movement, 2:252–253
  La Malinche, 2:226
  This Bridge Called My Back, 2:253 Morality
  slavery, 3:55–56
  Sudan, genocide in, 2:62–63
Morant Bay Rebellion, 1:276
Morbidity, 3:68–71
Morehouse College, 2:213
Morel, E. D., 3:34
Moreno, Dorinda, 1:287, 288
Moreno, Luisa, 2:250
Morgan, Lewis Henry
  Australian Aborigine peoples,
  1:134
  cultural evolution, 1:226 federal recognition of Native Americans, 1:463
  “playing Indian,” 2:415
Morgan, Robin, 3:27
Morgan, Thomas Hunt, 2:35, 3:9
Morgan, Thomas Jefferson, 2:158
Morgan v. Virginia, 2:216, 339,
  454–455
Morocco, 1:28–29
Morphological analysis, 1:490
Morris, Gouverneur, 1:3
Morris, Olive, 1:196
Morrison, Toni, 2:263
Morrison, William, 3:33–34
Mortality and social class, 3:68–71
Mortality rates
  African Americans, 2:84
  border crossers, 1:322
  for coronary heart disease, 2:140
  disparities, 2:82
  heart disease death rates among black and white women, 3:69f heart disease death rates among white women, 3:68f
  Native Americans, 3:105
  “Negro problem,” 1:408
  rice plantations, 2:412–413
  tuberculosis, 1:410
  undocumented workers, 3:179
  See also Infant mortality
Morton, Samuel George, 2:313–315,
  3:4
  antebellum black ethnology,
  1:89–90, 92
  Crania Americana, 1:222
  craniometry, 1:98
  Hamitic Myth, 1:477
  Nott, Josiah, influence on,
  2:372–373
  physical anthropology, 2:352
  polygenesis, 1:94, 226
  racial hierarchy, 2:461–462, 464
  skull-volume measurements, 2:189
  white settler society, 3:223
  white supremacy, 2:467
Mosaic metaphor, 2:322
Moskowitz, Henry, 2:336
Moss, Thomas, 3:217
Motherhood, 1:456, 2:21, 2:315–317
Motherhood, deficiency in, 2:317–320
Motherism, 1:64
Mothers, workfare and welfare,
  3:230–231
Mothers of East Los Angeles, 2:253
Mother’s pension movement, 3:80
Mothershed-Wair, Thelma, 1:164
Motley, Marion, 1:480
Mott, F., 3:122
Mott, Lucretia, 1:7, 73, 74, 471
Mount Vernon, 3:138, 140
Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de
  Aztlán (MEChA), 1:145, 289, 2:251
Moynihan, Daniel Patrick, 1:375,
  2:318, 422
Moynihan Report, 1:375, 455
Mozambique, 1:45, 46–47, 47
Mozambique National Resistance
  (Renamo), 1:47
Mozart, Wolfgang Amadeus,
  2:274–276
MPLA (Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola), 1:46, 47
MSNBC, 2:241
MTV, 1:207
Mugabe, Robert, 1:27
Mugo, Micere, 1:64
Muhammad, 2:330
Muhammad, Elijah, 2:17, 277–278, 347
Muhammad, Fard, 2:347
Muhammad, Khallid Abdul, 2:347
La Mujer en Pie de Lucha (anthology),
  1:287
*Mujeres Activas en Letras y Cambio
  Social* (MALCS), 1:288, 2:253
“Mujerista theology,” 3:229
Mukhtar, Omar, 1:40
Mulatto, 2:469
  census racial classification,
  1:169–170, 400
  Haitian racial formations, 2:75–77
Muldoon, William, 1:238
Muller, Hermann, 3:9
Multicultural Act of 1988 (Canada),
  2:321
Multicultural Policy of 1971 (Canada),
  2:321
Multiculturalism, 2:321, 321–323
  Australia, 1:136
  cultural racism, 1:382
  era of, 1:379
Multiculturalism Act (Canada), 1:267
Multiethnicity, 1:133, 136, 2:327
Multiple identities
  Lorde, Audre, 2:270
  migrants, 1:299
Multiplier effect, 2:475
Multiracial identities, 2:323–329,
  2:328t, 3:163–166
Multiracial movement, 2:326–327
Multiracial persons
  African diaspora, 1:50
  Australian Aborigine peoples,
  1:134–135, 137
  as census category, 1:171
  censuses, 1:400, 401–402
  Christian Identity, 1:313–314
  eugenics, 2:36
  Italian colonialism in Africa, 1:42
  Nott, Josiah, 2:372, 373
  in popular culture and social science
  literature, 1:172
  self-identification on Census forms,
  2:461
  sex work, 3:26
  triracial isolates, 3:163–166
  Zambaje, 1:220
Multiregional evolution, 2:395–396
Muñoz, Rosalio, 1:290
Muñoz Marín, Luis, 2:427
Murakami, Masonori, 1:157
Murray, Anna, 1:413, 414
Murray, Charles
  The Bell Curve, 1:451
  Herrenstein, Richard J., and, 2:90
  human biological variation, 2:124 innate racial differences in intelligence, 1:446, 2:195
  racial hierarchy, 2:462
  scientific racism, 1:479, 3:13–14
  stereotype threat as counterargu-ment to The Bell Curve, 3:99

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Murray, Daniel Alexander Payne, 3:140
- Murray, Freeman H. M., 2:368
- Murray, Hugh C., 1:308
- Murs, 2:484
- Musa, Mansa, 3:49
- Muscle fibers, 2:40–42, 3:145–146
- Musée de l'Homme*, 3:13
- Museum of the Confederacy, 3:137
- Museums, 2:353
- Music
- African diaspora, 1:49
  - black popular culture, 1:204
  - transnationalism, 3:155
- Music, rap, 2:482–485
- Music, Wagnerian, 3:209–212
- Muslim League (ML), 2:8
- Muslim Mosque, Inc., 2:278
- Muslims, 2:329, 329–333
- anti-Semitism, 1:114
  - cultural racism, 1:382
  - enslavement of, 3:65
  - ethnic cleansing, 1:438
  - French colonial Africa, 1:32
  - hate crimes, 2:81
  - Organisation Armée Secrète, 2:389
  - slavery, 3:60, 61, 62
  - See also* Arabs and Arab Americans
- Mussolini, Benito, 1:39, 42, 2:111
- Muste, Abraham Johannes, 2:511
- Myrdal, Gunnar, 1:252, 348, 2:438, 454
- Myth of marginality, 2:423
- Mythology, 1:142–146, 3:210–211
- N
- NAAA (National Association of Arab Americans), 1:122
- NAACP, 2:335–342, 337, 342–346
- Afro-American Council, failure of the, 1:494
  - American Negro Academy, 1:87
  - anti-lynching activism, 2:366
  - Baker, Ella, 1:148
  - Bates, Daisy, 1:164
  - Bethune, Mary McLeod, 1:167
  - The Birth of a Nation* (film), 1:178
  - black rapist myth, 2:439
  - Brown v. Board of Education*, 1:251–252
  - census racial classifications, 1:171
  - check more than one format, 2:327
  - Chisholm, Shirley, 1:311
  - civil rights movement, 1:330–331
  - Don Imus, denunciation of, 2:240
  - Double V campaign, 1:329
  - Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:418
  - education segregation, assault on, 2:455–456
  - Houston, Charles Hamilton, 2:115
  - King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:214
  - League of United Latin American Citizens, comparison with, 2:249
  - Marshall, Thurgood, 2:282–283
  - mass membership, 2:436
  - Mays, Benjamin E., 2:290
  - Niagara Movement, 2:369, 3:92, 167
  - racial segregation in the South, 2:454
  - Scottsboro Boys, 3:18
  - segregation in education, assault on, 2:455–456
  - Southern Christian Leadership Conference, 2:216
  - United States Constitution, 3:193
  - Urban League, emergence of the, 3:196
  - Washington, Booker T., 3:215
  - White, Walter Francis, 3:219–220
  - Wilkins, Roy, 3:226–227
  - Woodson, Carter G., 1:130
- NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, 1:148, 331, 2:283, 338–339, 343
- NABBP (National Association of Base Ball Players), 1:152
- Nabrit, James, 1:252, 2:208
- NACW (National Association of Colored Women), 3:218
- NAFTA (North American Free Trade Agreement)
- Latino movements, 2:254
  - transnationalism, 3:157
  - Zapatista Rebellion, 3:236
- NAGPRA (Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act), 2:352–354
- NAI (New Africa Initiative), 2:401
- Naismith, James, 1:158, 161
- Namba v. McCourt*, 1:71
- Napo Runa, 2:242
- NARF. See Native American Rights Fund
- The Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, an American Slave* (Douglass), 1:413
- Narratives
- African American history, 3:140
  - African heritage travel, 3:142–143
  - critical race theory, 1:367
  - heritage tourism, 3:137–138
  - slave, 1:5, 8, 2:478, 3:140
- Nas, 2:96
- Nash, John, 1:279
- Nat Turner rebellion, 1:402
- Natal Indian Congress, 2:5
- Nation of Islam, 2:347–348
- heritage tours, 3:143
  - Malcolm X, 2:277–278
- National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders, 2:219
- National Afro-American League, 1:493, 494, 2:335
- National Agricultural Worker Survey (NAWS), 1:460
- National Alliance, 2:185, 348–350, 362–363
- National Alliance against Racist and Political Repression, 1:395
- National Assessment for Educational Progress, 3:96
- National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. See NAACP
- National Association for the Advancement of White People, 1:419
- National Association of Arab Americans (NAAA), 1:122
- National Association of Base Ball Players (NABBP), 1:152
- National Association of Black Journalists, 2:240
- National Association of Colored Women (NACW), 3:218
- National Association of Colored Women's Clubs, 3:140
- National Association of Mexican Americans (ANMA), 1:353, 2:250
- National Basketball Association (NBA), 1:161–162
- National Basketball League (NBL), 1:159
- National Black Power Summit and Youth Rally, 2:347
- National Black Women's Health Project, 2:495
- National Cancer Institute (NCI), 3:183
- National Chicano Moratorium Committee, 1:289, 290
- National Chicano Youth Liberation Conference, 1:145
- National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), 1:84, 161
- National Colored Base Ball League, 1:153
- National Commission for Scheduled Castes, 1:389
- National Commission on Adolescent Sexual Health, 1:10

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- National Committee for Buraku Liberation, 1:260
- National Congress of Indian Peoples, 2:169
- National Convention of Colored Citizens, 1:208
- National Convention of Nigerian Citizens, 1:24
- National Council of Black Women in São Paulo, 1:193
- National Council of Colored People, 3:67
- National Council of La Raza (NCLR), 2:1, 227
- National Council of Negro Women, 1:167, 3:140
- National Equal Rights League (NERL), 3:167
- National Farm Worker Association (NFWA), 2:251
- National Farm Workers Union, 3:184
- National Football League, 1:479–483
- National Guard, 1:164–165, 2:440
- National heritage, tourism and, 3:134–144
- National identity, 2:238
- National Indian Law Library, 2:357
- National Inquiry into the Separation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Children from Their Families, 2:44
- National Labor Committee (NLC), 3:152
- National Labor Relations Act, 2:365
- National language, 2:237–238
- National Latina and Latino Lesbian and Gay Organization (LLEGO), 2:253
- National League for the Protection of Colored Women (NLPCW), 3:197
- National Liberation Front in Angola (FNLA), 1:46, 47
- National Mediation Intermediation Commission (CONAI), 3:238, 239
- National Negro Business League, 3:214
- National Negro Congress, 2:425
- National Negro Convention, 2:13
- National Organization for European American Rights (NOFEAR), 1:419–420
- National Organization for Women (NOW), 2:240
- National origin, 2:257
- National Origins Act, 1:232–233, 2:203, 494
- National Park Service, 3:138, 139
- National Party (Haiti), 2:76
- National Party (South Africa)
apartheid, collapse of, 3:88–89 land policies, 3:87
- National Political Congress of Black Women (NPCBS), 1:311
- National Recovery Administration (NRA), 2:365
- National Resistance Army (NRA), 2:57
- National security, 1:297–298
- National Socialist Movement, 2:364
- National Socialist White People's Party, 2:349
- “National Stability 1985” plan, 2:288
- National States Rights Party, 2:351–352
- National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA), 1:46, 47
- National Union of South African Students (NUSAS), 1:168
- National Vanguard Books, 2:350
- National Welfare Rights Organization, 3:81
- National Women's Political Caucus, 2:78
- National Youth Alliance, 2:349
- Nationalism
Afrikaner, 1:118, 3:86–87
Caribbean, 1:277
Chicana feminism, 1:287
Chinese abroad, 1:297
Cuba, 1:369
ethnic cleansing, 1:437
film and Asian Americans, 1:475
Germany, 2:105
La Malinche, 2:226
Mexico, 2:168, 172
racial classifications, 3:65
Russia, 1:112
Rwanda, 2:57–59
Southeast Asia, 1:306
Wagner, Richard, 3:210
- Nationalist Party (South Africa), 1:100
- Nationalities, 2:244
- Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, 2:211–212, 310, 352–354
- Native American lesbians, 2:263
- Native American Rights Fund, 2:356–358, 357
- Native Americans, 2:308
adolescent female sexuality, 1:12
American Indian Movement, 1:81–84
anti-Indian movement, 1:102–105 antislavery efforts on behalf of, 1:1
- baseball, 1:153–154
blood quantum, 1:222–224
Buffalo Soldiers, 1:184
Bureau of American Ethnology, 1:96
censuses, 1:401
citizenship, 1:318–319
dance, 1:389–390
diabetes, 1:406
diseases, 2:178–180
environment justice movement, 2:67
ethnic cleansing, 1:436
forced sterilization, 1:229, 484–485, 2:292
genocide and ethnocide, 2:48–49, 49–52, 50
human status, 2:25–26
Indian boarding schools, 2:157–159
Indian Rights Association, 2:159–162
labor market, 2:232
missionaries among, 2:305–310
motherhood, 2:316
New Deal, 2:367
“playing Indian,” 2:414–415
racial formations, 2:460
reservation system, 2:499–503
slavery, 2:163–387
substance abuse, 3:103–106
television, 3:126
triangular slave trade, 3:162
triracial isolates, 3:163–166
- Native Americans, federal recognition of, 1:461–468
- Native Americans, forced removal of crime, 1:356
ethnic cleansing, 1:436
federal recognition of Native Americans, 1:464
genocide, 2:50
Jackson, Andrew, 1:94
missionaries, 2:307
Native American populations management, 2:501 as segregation, 1:223
- Native Americans, forced sterilization of, 1:487–488
- Native Americans, health disparities, 2:86–88, 87
- Native Americans, missionaries among, 2:305–310
- Native Americans and popular culture, 2:354–356
- Native title act (Australia), 1:136
- Natives Act of 1952 (South Africa), 1:101
- Natives' Land Act (South Africa), 3:86

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Nativism, 2:358–361
 cultural racism, 1:382
 reproductive technologies, 2:497
 Stoddard, T. Lothrop, 3:100
 Tay-Sachs disease, 3:123
- Natural history, 2:71
- Natural resources, 1:103, 104, 2:358
- Natural selection
 Darwin, Charles, 2:468
 demes, 1:398–399
 eugenics, 1:442, 2:35
 skin color, 2:32, 3:40, 41
- Natural slavery, 2:26
- Naturalization
 citizenship and race, 1:317–319
 color-blind racism, 1:349
- Naturalization Act, 1:317–318, 2:153
- Nature vs. nurture
 eugenics, 1:443
 intelligence, 2:197
- Nava, Gregory, 2:254
- Navarro, Ofelia Dominguez, 1:370
- Navy, U.S., 1:184, 2:429, 3:82
- NAWS (National Agricultural Worker Survey), 1:460
- Nazi Olympics. See Olympic Games of 1936
- Nazis
 anti-Semitism, 1:109
 Chamberlain, Houston Stewart, 1:284
 eugenics, 1:446, 3:9–10
 genocide, 2:43–45
 Holocaust, 2:103–111
 al-Husayni, Mohammed Amin, work of, 1:114
 Italian response to, 1:42
 Louis-Schmeling boxing match, 1:240–241
 medical experimentation, 2:291
rassenhygiene, 2:488
 reservation system influence of the, 2:503
 UNESCO statements on race, 3:181–183
 Wagner, Richard, admiration of, 3:211–212
- NBA (National Basketball Association), 1:161–162
- NBL (National Basketball League), 1:159
- NCAA (National Collegiate Athletic Association), 1:84, 161
- NCI (National Cancer Institute), 3:183
- NCLR (National Council of La Raza), 2:1, 227
- Neal, Mark Anthony, 1:206
- Neanderthal Genome Project, 2:120
- Neanderthals, 2:120
- Neel, James, 1:405, 3:10
- “Negative history,” 3:140
- Négritude*, 1:219, 2:77–78, 400
- The Negro a Beast* (Carroll), 2:471
- The Negro a Menace to American Civilization* (Shufeldt), 2:471
- “Negro Abraham,” 1:201
- Negro Baseball Leagues, 1:154–157, 332
- The Negro Family* (Moynihan), 1:455
- Negro Fellowship League, 3:218
- “Negro Fort,” 1:201
- Negro History Week, 1:130
- Negro National Convention, 2:489
- “Negro problem,” 1:408–410
- “Negro Project,” 2:494
- “Negro question,” 2:336
- Negro spirituals, 1:204
- Negro World* (newspaper), 2:16
- Negrofeminism, 1:65
- The Negro’s Church* (Mays and Nicholson), 2:289
- Nehru, Jawaharlal, 2:8, 9
- Neighborhood disadvantage, 2:176
- Nell, William Cooper, 1:8
- Neocolonialism
 capitalism, 1:269–270
 Cuba, 1:370
 sex work, 3:25
- Neo-Confederate movements, 2:185
- Neoliberalism
 African National Congress, 1:102
 cheap labor, 2:229
 Chinese diaspora, 1:307
 cultural racism, 1:381
 human trafficking, 2:136
 Mexican indigenous peoples, 2:169–170
 Mexico, 2:304
 poverty, 2:423–424
 Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235
- Neo-minstrelsy, 3:125
- Neo-Nazis, 2:361–364, 363
 Intelligence Project, 2:184, 185
 National Alliance, 2:348–350
 Rockwell, George Lincoln, 2:504–505
- Neoracism, 1:322
See also Cultural racism
- NEPAD (New Partnership for Africa’s Development), 2:401, 2:401–402
- NERL (National Equal Rights League), 3:167
- Net worth, 2:231
- Neto, Agostinho, 1:46
- Network model of human evolution, 2:394*f*
- New Africa Initiative (NAI), 2:401
- New Age movement, 2:415
- New Black Panther Party, 2:347–348, 348
- New Christian Crusade Church, 3:111
- New Deal, 2:364–368
 nativism, 2:360
 segregation, 2:454
 Social Security, 3:80
 White, Walter Francis, 3:220
- New England
 Indian slavery, 2:165
 Praying Towns, 2:306
 racial slave labor, 2:475–478
 Tammany Societies, 2:414
 textile industry, 3:57
- New England Anti-Slavery Society, 1:6–7
- New England Intercollegiate Basketball League, 1:158
- New Mexico, 3:159–160
- New Mexico Court of Land Claims, 3:159
- New Negro Art Theater Dance Group, 1:392
- New Negro movement, 1:86
- New Orleans race riot, 1:210, 2:431
- New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD), 2:401, 2:401–402
- New racism. See Cultural racism
- New Thrust program, 3:198
- New York City
 draft riots, 1:338–339
 Puerto Ricans, 2:428
 riot of 1900, 2:431
 Urban League, 3:196–197
- New York City Ballet (NYCB), 1:391
- New York Evening Post* (newspaper), 2:336
- New York Rens, 1:159–160
- New York Vigilance Committee, 1:8
- New Zealand, 2:491, 3:69
- Newark Eagles, 1:155
- Newcombe, Don, 1:155
- Newsome, Ozzie, 1:482
- Newspapers
 abolition movement, 1:6, 7
 antiblack racism, 2:438
 anti-Mexican hysteria, 3:245
 Chicana, 1:287, 2:253
 League of Revolutionary Black Workers, 2:261
See also Specific titles

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Newsweek* (magazine), 2:246, 247
Newton, James W., 2:434–435
Next Friday (film), 1:475
Nfah-Abbenyi, Juliana, 1:64
NFWA (National Farm Worker Association), 2:251
Niagara Movement, 2:368–370, 369
  Du Bois, W. E. B., 3:215
  NAACP, as catalyst for, 3:92
  Trotter, William Monroe, 3:167
Nicaragua
  migration, 1:279–280
  Miskitu people, 2:243–244
Nicholas V, Pope, 1:43, 2:305, 310
Nicholson, Joseph W., 2:289
Niebuhr, Reinhold, 2:213
Nieto-Gómez, Anna, 2:252, 253
Nietzsche, Friedrich, 3:210
Nigeria
  British colonialism, 1:24–25
  Igbo Women's War, 1:269
  oil exploration, 1:54
  postcolonial era, 1:27
Nighthawk, Steve, 1:469
"Nigrescence," 3:221–222
Niles, Jeremiah, 3:58
Niles, Nathaniel, 1:2–3
Niles, Silas, 3:58
Nineteenth century Chinese immigration and exclusion, 1:307–310
Nirenberg, Marshall, 2:38
Nisby, John, 1:480
Nisei, 2:203, 204
Nixon, E. D., 2:214, 215
Nixon, Richard
  Brownsville, Texas, incident, 2:435
  China policy, 1:298, 299
  Davis, Angela, and, 1:395
  King, Martin Luther, Jr., meeting with, 2:216
  Menominee Restoration Act, 2:310
  Native American self-determination, 2:503
  Wilkins, Roy, assessment by, 3:227
Nixon v. Condon, 2:338
Nkomo, Joshua, 1:119
Nkrumah, Kwame, 1:24, 2:400
NLC (National Labor Committee), 3:152
NLPCW (National League for the Protection of Colored Women), 3:197
Nnaemeka, Obioma, 1:64, 65
No Child Left Behind Act, 3:96
No Way Out (film), 1:331–332
Nobel-laureate sperm bank, 3:13
Nobel Prize
  black and African, 2:401
  King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:213, 218
  Mandela and de Klerk, 2:280, 2:281
  Morgan, Thomas Hunt, 2:35
Noble, John W., 1:178
Noble savage stereotype, 2:354–355
La Noche Triste, 2:225
NOFEAR (National Organization for European American Rights), 1:419–420
Nomo, Hideo, 1:157
Nonconcordant variation, 2:370–372, 371
Nonconscious preferences, 2:376
Nongovernmental organizations, 1:194–195, 2:341
Nonracialism
  Mandela, Nelson, 2:281–282
  South Africa, 3:88–89
Nonviolence
  Anti-apartheid Movement, 1:100–101
  Chávez, César, 1:285
  Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, 2:6–7
  Iraq War protest, 2:220
  Mandela, Nelson, 2:282
Non-western culture, 2:389–391
Nordic supremacy, 2:488, 3:8, 100
Noriega, Ramses, 1:290
Norplant, 1:484, 485
Norris, Clarence, 3:16, 19, 20
North Africa
  French colonialism, 1:29–30, 32–33
North America
  British Native American policies, 2:500
  diseases, 2:179
  el mestizaje, 1:432
  Muslims, 2:332–333
  racial demographics, 2:443–445
  reverse migration, 1:48
North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA)
  Latino movements, 2:254
  transnationalism, 3:157
  Zapatista Rebellion, 3:236
North-South divide, 1:54–55
North Star (newspaper), 1:414
North-Central Idaho Jurisdictional Alliance, 1:103
Northern Peoples Congress, 1:24
Northern United States
  abolition movement, 1:3–4
  black codes, 1:185–187
  racial segregation, 2:448–451
  racial slave labor, 2:475–477
  Second Great Migration, 1:328–329, 330
  Second Klan, 3:22
Northington, Nat, 1:481
Northwest Ordinance, 1:4, 3:190
Norton, Eleanor Holmes, 3:27
Notes on the State of Virginia (Jefferson), 1:94
Notorious B.I.G., 2:97
Nott, Josiah, 2:372–373
  polygenesis, 1:94, 2:314
  racial hierarchy, 2:462
  scientific racism, 3:3, 65
  white settler society, 3:223
  white supremacy, 2:467
NOW (National Organization for Women), 2:240
Noyes Academy, 2:13
La Nozze di Figaro (opera), 2:275
NPCBW (National Political Congress of Black Women), 1:311
NRA (National Recovery Administration), 2:365
NRA (National Resistance Army), 2:57
Ntlabathi, Gertrude, 2:281–282
Nucleic acids, 2:37
Nucleotide diversity, 2:127–128, 129f
Nullification Crisis, 1:264
Numerical taxonomy, 2:27
Nuremberg Laws, 1:446, 2:104–108
Nuremberg Trials, 2:44
Nursing education, 2:293–294
NUSAS (National Union of South African Students), 1:168
Nuyoricán, 2:428
NWA, 2:485
Nyabingi anticolonial resistance, 2:54
NYCB (New York City Ballet), 1:391
Nyere, Julius, 2:400
Nzeogwu, Chukwuma, 1:27
Nzinga Mbande, Queen, 3:47
- ## O
- OAU (Organization of African Unity), 2:279, 400–401
Obama, Barack, 2:458
Obasanjo, Olasegun, 2:62
Obeah, 1:276
Obote, Milton, 2:57, 400
Occasional Papers, 1:85–86
Occupation of Haiti, 2:77
Occupational segregation, 2:375–378

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Occupied lands, 1:107
 Ochoa, Severo, 2:38
 O'Connor, Flannery, 1:393
 O'Connor, John, 2:239
 O'Connor, Sandra Day
   affirmative action, 1:15, 16, 18
   legislative redistricting, 3:208
   strict scrutiny, 2:397
 Octaroons, 1:222
 October Revolution, 2:284
Ode to Joy, 2:275
 OEJ (Office of Environmental Justice), 2:66
 Offenders, hate crime, 2:80–81
 Offensive language, 2:238
 Office of Economic Opportunity, 1:376
 Office of Environmental Equity, 2:65
 Office of Environmental Justice (OEJ), 2:66
 Office of Management and Budget (OMB), 2:327
 Officers, military, 1:180–182
 Ogé, Vincent, 1:4, 2:76
 Oglethorpe, James, 1:2
 Ogunipe-Leslie, Molar, 1:64–65
 Ogunyemi, Chikwenye Okonjo, 1:64
 Ohio, 1:185–187
 Oil industry, 1:54, 2:169
 Oklahoma, 1:202, 2:491
 Oklahoma City Federal Building Bombing, 1:314, 2:184, 348, 349
 Oklahoma Racial Attitude Scale (ORAS), 3:223
 Okpara, Michael, 1:27
 Olajuwon, Hakeem, 1:161
 Old World diseases
   genocide and ethnocide, 2:50
   Mexico, 2:167
   population effects, 2:178
 Olid, Cristóbal de, 2:225
 Ollivant, Charles, 2:5
 Olmedo, Bartólome de, 2:225
 Olmsted, Frederick Law, 1:316
 Olympic Games
   basketball, 1:162–163
   track and field, 3:144–151, 150–151, 150t
 Olympic Games of 1904, 2:378–381, 379
 Olympic Games of 1936, 2:381–384, 383
 OMB (Office of Management and Budget), 2:327
Omblijo de Aztlán (anthology), 1:145
On and Off the Res' with Charlie Hill (film), 2:355
On the Equality of the Human Races (Firmin), 2:77
On the Natural Varieties of Mankind (Blumenbach), 1:93
 One Africa Productions, 3:143
 One Nation United, 1:104
 One-child policy, 1:485, 486
 One-drop rule
   biracialism, 1:170
   Brazil, 1:249
   censuses, 1:401
   genes and genealogy, 2:23
   multiracial identities, 2:324
   racial formations, 2:460
   white settler society, 3:224
Only the Ball Was White (Peterson), 1:156
 Opara, Chioma, 1:64
 Open Society Institute, 2:507
 Opera, 2:274–276, 3:209–212
 Operation Bootstrap, 2:427–428
 Operation Gatekeeper, 2:254, 384–385
 Operation Reinhard, 2:110
 Operation Wetback, 2:144, 153, 249, 385–388
 Operational taxonomic units (OTUs), 2:27
 Opium Wars, 2:481
 Oral history, 3:137–138
 ORAS (Oklahoma Racial Attitude Scale), 3:223
 The Order, 1:314
Ordnungspolizei, 2:109
 Organ transplants, 2:296
 Organisation Armée Secrète, 2:388–389
 The Organisation of Women of African and Asian Descent (OWAAD), 1:196
Organización del Pueblo en Armas, 2:285
 Organization of African Unity (OAU), 2:279, 400–401
 Organization of Afro-American Unity, 2:278
 Orientalism, 2:389–391, 2:422
The Origin of Races (Coon), 2:393
 Original Celtics, 1:159
 Original London Prize Ring rules, 1:237
 Origins of races, 3:2–3
 Orphans, 1:293
 Ortiz, Fernando, 1:368
 Osadebe, Dennis, 1:27
 Osawa, Sandra, 2:355
 Osborn, Henry Fairfield, 3:9
 Osumare, Halifu, 1:206
 Other
   Africa, representations of, 1:29
   Africans, 1:52
   Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:134, 136, 137
   folk classification, 1:478–479
   hoaxing, 2:101
   Japanese Americans, 2:203
   Jews, 2:104, 3:123
   language, 2:237, 238
   Native Americans, 1:355
   racial slavery, 3:53
   rural whites, 2:508
   sex work, 3:26
   slaves, 3:60
   television programming, 3:124
   United States, 1:116
 Otis, James, 1:2
 Ottoman Empire, 2:46
 OTUs (operational taxonomic units), 2:27
Our Bodies, Ourselves (Boston Women's Collective), 1:228
 "Out of Africa" hypothesis, 2:391–397
 Outsourcing, 2:233, 3:152
 Overton, Aida Reed, 1:390
 Ovington, Mary White, 1:178, 2:336, 370
 OWAAD (The Organisation of Women of African and Asian Descent), 1:196
 Owens, Jesse, 2:381, 383, 384, 3:14
 Oxley, Lawrence, 2:366
Oyama v. California, 1:71
 Oyewumi, Oyeronke, 1:64
P
 PAC (Pan Africanist Congress), 1:100, 101
Pace v. Alabama, 2:450
Pachucos, 3:244–246
 Pacific Northwest, 1:103
 Pacifist movement, 2:511
 Padilla, Gilbert, 2:251
 Page, Greg, 1:481
 Page Law, 1:213, 2:143, 144, 497
 PAIGC (Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde), 1:47
 Paige, Leroy "Satchel," 1:154, 156
 Paine, Thomas, 1:3
 Painter, Nell Irvin, 3:168
Painter, Sweatt v., 2:339, 345–346

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Palenques*, 1:369
Palestine, 3:241
    anti-Semitism in the Arab World, 1:115 barrier wall, 3:243
    Zionism, 3:240–241, 244
Palmares, Brazil, 1:105–106
Palmer, Alexander Mitchell, 2:438
Palmer, Peter, 3:57
Palmer raids, 2:360
Pan-Aboriginal protests, 1:137, 138
Pan-African Congress anti-apartheid sentiment, 1:26
    Biko, Stephen, 1:168
    capitalism alternatives, 1:270
    Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:419
Pan-Africanism, 2:399–402
    Firmin, Anténor, 1:96, 478
    Garvey, Marcus, 1:190, 2:15–17
Pan Africanist Congress, 1:100, 101
Panama, 2:446–447
Pan-Arab American organizations, 1:122
Pancoast, Henry Spackman, 2:160, 162
Pan-Ethnic identity, 2:227
Pan-Indianism, 1:462–463
Pan-indigenous identity, 1:459–460
Pan-Islamism, 2:331, 332
Pan-Turkism, 2:331, 332
Pariah caste, 1:386
Paris, France, 2:113–114, 3:13
Park, Robert E., 1:129, 2:326
Parker, Ely S., 1:463–464
Parker, James, 1:304
Parker, John J., 2:340
Parker, John P., 3:219
Parker, Richard, 1:335
Parker, Tony, 1:163
Parks, Rosa, 2:214–215, 456, 3:226
Parodies, dance, 1:390
Parsons, Richard, 2:458
Parti Québécois, 1:266
Partido Guatemalteco del Trabajo, 2:285
El Partido Independiente de Color (PIC), 1:370
Party for the Independence of Guinea and Cape Verde (PAIGC), 1:47
Party of Radical Political Abolitionists, 3:67
Pass Laws (South Africa), 1:101, 119, 3:86, 87
Passing, 2:325
Passing (Larson), 2:263
The Passing of the Great Race (Grant), 3:8
PASSO (Political Association of Spanish-Speaking Organizations), 2:251
Patel, Vallabhbhai, 2:8, 9
Paternalism, 1:37
Patler, John, 2:505
Patriarchy
    forced sterilization, 1:488
    Mexican Americans, 2:273
    sexism, 3:28
Patriot Act, 2:333
Patrullas de Autodefensa Civil, 2:286, 288
Patten, Jack, 1:135
Patterson, Haywood, 3:16, 18, 20
Patterson, James, 1:254
Patton, Robert, 1:188
Pay equity, 2:402–405, 403
Payne, Daniel Alexander, 3:67
Payne, James S., 1:80
Peabody, George Foster, 1:129
Peace, Giles, 3:57
Peace Commission of 1867, 2:308
Peace Policy, 2:308
Pearl, Minnie, 2:510
Pearl, Raymond, 3:9, 10
Pearson, Conrad, 2:338
Pearson, Karl, 2:4
Pearson v. Murray, 1:251
Peck, Gregory, 1:331
Pelley, William Dudley, 3:111
Peltier, Leonard, 1:83
Pennington, James, 1:8, 90–92
Pennsylvania Abolition Society, 1:3
Penrose, Charles W., 2:434
Penrose, Lionel, 3:181
Peonage cases, 2:405–406
People v. de la Guerra, 3:159
Peoples Political Party, 2:16
Pequots, 3:55
Percy, Earl, 1:237
Peregrinos de Aztlán (Méndez), 1:146
Perez, Emma, 2:252
Pérez de Arteaga, Juan, 2:225
Perez de la Riva, Juan, 1:368
Pérez-Torres, Rafael, 1:146
Perez v. Lippold, 2:451
Perlman, Janice, 2:423
PERM (Proper Economic Resource Management), 1:104
Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, United Nations, 1:496
Permanent Resident Cards, 3:178
Perpener, John, 1:393
Personal interests, 3:113
Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act (PRWORA), 2:320, 3:81
Perspectives of Black Popular Culture (Shaw), 1:205 Peru
    forced sterilization, 1:485
    literacy, 1:427
    mining operations, 3:201–202
    Napo Runa, 2:242
Perutz, Max, 2:37
Peterson, Robert, 1:156
Pétion, Alexandre, 2:76
Petry, Ann, 1:331
Pettman, Jan, 3:28
Phagan, Mary, 1:177
Pharmaceuticals ethnic drugs, 2:140
    forced sterilization, 1:484–485
    psychotropic medication, 2:298–299
Phelps, John W., 1:180
Phelps Stokes Fund, 1:129, 131
Phi Beta Kappa
    Houston, Charles Hamilton, 2:115
    Trotter, William Monroe, 3:167
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1:493, 3:138
Philadelphia Female Anti-Slavery Society, 1:7, 73
Philadelphia race riot of 1918, 2:439–440
Philanthropist (newspaper), 1:173
Philip II, 3:201
Philippine-American War, 1:184, 258, 474, 3:83
Phillip, Arthur, 1:133
Phillips, Wendell, 1:8, 72, 2:406–407
Phillips, William, 1:75
Phipps, Joseph, 3:34
Phylogeny, 2:393f
Physical anthropology
    Morton, Samuel George, 2:313–314
    scientific racism, 3:10–11
Physiology
    athletic performance, 3:147–148
    diabetes, 1:405
Piazza, Alberto, 1:344
PIC (El Partido Independiente de Color), 1:370
Pierce, William, 1:314, 2:348–350
Pig banks, 2:79
Pigmentation. See Skin color
Pike, James S., 1:174

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Piles, Robert, 1:2
 Pilgrimages, 2:278–279, 3:119
Pimp My Ride (television show), 1:207
 Pinckback, P. B. S., 1:209
 Pinckney, Charles, 3:137
 Pinder, Hiram, 1:256
 Pine Ridge Reservation, 1:82–83, 358
 Piñero, Miguel, 2:428
 Pinney, John, 1:80
 Pioneer Fund, 1:446, 3:12, 13
 Pitts, Helen, 1:414
 A Place for Us National, 2:326, 327
 Plains Indians, 1:389–390, 462–463
 Plan de San Diego, 3:130
 Plan de Sanchez, 2:286
El Plan Espiritual de Aztlán, 1:145, 289, 2:251
Plan Puebla Panamá, 3:239
 Planned Parenthood Federation of America, 2:494
 Plantations, 2:407–414, 410
   Caribbean history, 1:274–276
   cheap labor, 2:228–229
   heritage tourism, 3:135–136
   racial slave labor, 2:473
 Plato, 1:97
 Platt Amendment, 1:370
Playboy (magazine), 2:505
 “Playing Indian,” 2:414–416
 Plessy, Homer, 1:271
Plessy v. Ferguson, 2:416–418, 417 baseball, segregation in, 1:152
   Black Reconstruction, end of, 1:210
   Brown v. Board of Education and, 1:251
   Civil Rights Cases as precursor to, 2:470
   Gayle v. Browder as reversal of, 2:456
   Haitian immigrants, 1:272 impact on the labor market, 2:232
   NAACP, 2:335, 339, 346
   one-drop rule, 1:170
   racial segregation in the South, 1:325, 2:452
   southern politics, 3:90
   Sweatt v. Painter, 2:345
   United States Constitution, 3:193
 Pliny the Elder, 2:68
 Plummer, Clifford, 2:369
 Plymouth Colony, 1:355
 Poage, George, 2:379, 2:379
 Pogroms, 1:111, 1:112
 Poitier, Sidney, 1:271, 332
 Polak, Henry, 2:6
 Poland, 1:110, 2:104, 110, 110–111
 Police brutality
   antiracist social movements, 1:107
   Birmingham Protest, 2:216–217
   Centro de Acción Social Autónomo, 2:252
   Chicano movement, 1:290
 Political Association of Spanish-Speaking Organizations (PASSO), 2:251 Political cartoons
   Chinese immigrants, 1:319
   Plessy v. Ferguson, 2:417
   Progress of Civilization, 2:432
 Political Constitution of Mexico, 3:236
The Political Economy of Race and Class in South Africa (Magubane), 1:450
 Political lesbians, 2:262
 Political organizations, 1:61, 62
 Political parties
   Dalits, 1:388
   Nigeria, 1:24
   voting rights, 3:206
 Political repression, 1:298
 Political violence, 3:88
 Politics
   abolition movement, 1:8
   African diaspora, 1:49
   Arab Americans, status of, 1:123–124
   Black Reconstruction, 1:209–210
   Calhoun, John C., 1:264–265
   Caribbean immigrants, 1:274
   Caribbean racial formations, 1:276–277, 278
   censuses, 1:401
   Chicano movement, 1:290–291
   Chinese Americans, 1:299
   Chisholm, Shirley, 1:311–312
   Corona, Bert, 1:353
   Council of Conservative Citizens, 3:221
   cultural racism, 1:381–382
   Dalits, 1:387–388
   Duke, David, 1:419–420
   ethnic cleansing, 1:438–439
   felony disenfranchisement, 1:469
   feminism, 1:472
   Garrison, William Lloyd, 2:15
   Garvey, Marcus, 2:16
   Haiti, 2:77–78
   immigration policy, 1:233–235
   Irish Americans, 2:200–201
   Israel, 3:243
   Ku Klux Klan, 2:222
   League of Revolutionary Black Workers, 2:261–262
   Mandela, Nelson, 2:282
   means-tested welfare programs, 3:232–233
   Mexico, 2:169–170
   Orientalism, 2:390–391
   The Origin of Races (Coon), 2:393
   Second Klan, 3:22–23
   Sudan, genocide in, 2:60–61
   symbolic racism, 3:112–113
   Trotter, William Monroe, 3:167–168
 Politics, Southern, 3:90–93
 Politics and the Civil War, 1:334–340
 Polk, James, 1:174, 2:201
 Poll taxes, 3:206
 Pollard, Fritz, 1:481
 Pollution, 1:260–262
 Polo, Marco, 2:463
 Polygenesis, 2:24–27
   Jacksonian America, 1:94 vs. monogenesis, 1:89–92 Morton, Samuel G., 2:314
   nineteenth century, 2:189
   Nott, Josiah, 2:372–373
   racial purity, 2:467–468
   scientific racism, 3:2–4
   white settler society, 3:223
 Pombal, Marquis of, 1:43
 Poona Pact, 1:387
 Poor, Salem, 2:448
 Poor people
   abortion, 2:498
   morbidity and mortality, 3:67–71
   racial purity, 2:469–470
   reproductive rights, 2:494
   rural white stereotyping, 2:507–510
   social problems, 3:72
   social welfare states, 3:79–81
   Watson, Thomas E., 3:217
   women, 3:28
   workfare and welfare, 3:230–233
   See also Poverty
 Poor People’s Campaign, 2:219, 3:197
 Popular culture
   African Americans, portrayals of, 1:360
   multiracial persons, 1:172
   Orientalism, 2:390
   positive portrayals of African Americans, 1:331–332 rural whites, portrayals of, 2:510
   sexuality, 3:32
 Popular culture, black, 1:203–207
 Popular culture and Native Americans, 2:354–356
 Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA), 1:46, 47
 Popular sovereignty, 1:335

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

Population

- Arab Americans, 1:120
  - athletic performance, 3:151
  - Barbados, 2:446*t*
  - Boston, MA, black population in, 3:213
  - Brazil, 2:447*t*
  - Canada, 1:265, 267
  - Central American immigrants, 1:278–279
  - Charleston, SC, 3:200, 212
  - Chinese Americans, 1:300, 310
  - Cuba, 1:368, 2:445*t*
  - European colonists' impact on indigenous Americans, 3:162
  - Fourth World, 1:495–496
  - free black population in 1790 and 1810, 1:75
  - free blacks in antebellum North, 1:186
  - Gaza, 3:244
  - Haitian Americans, 2:77
  - Israel, 3:241, 242
  - Jehossee Island, 2:412
  - Jews in Germany, 2:106
  - Latina fertility, 2:245–246
  - Mexico, 2:171
  - multiracial persons, 2:328, 328*t*
  - Native Americans, 2:159–160
  - Puerto Rico, 2:427
  - racial demographics, 2:443–447
  - Revolutionary era black population, 3:58
  - Roma, 2:505
  - slavery, 2:474, 3:61
  - statistical discrimination, 1:272
  - United Kingdom, 3:185–186, 186*t*
See also Demographics
- ### Population control
- forced sterilization, 1:485
  - reproductive rights, 2:494–495
  - reproductive technologies, 2:497
- ### Population Registration Act (South Africa), 1:100, 101, 118, 3:87
- ### Populations
- IQ differences within, 2:89
  - taxonomic subspecies, 3:103
- ### Populations, genetic variation among, 2:21–22, 29–34, 30, 33, 129–130
- ### Populism, 3:91–92, 131, 216
- ### Pornography, 2:418–420, 3:33
- ### Porres, Martin de, St., 2:420
- ### Porterfield v. Webb, 1:70
- ### Portrayals
- African Americans, 1:331–332, 360
  - Alamo, 1:69
  - Arabs, 1:122
  - Asian Americans, 1:125

- The Birth of a Nation* (film), 1:174–179
  - Cubans, 1:369
  - Louis, Joe, 1:240
  - Mexican Americans, 2:272
  - rural whites, 2:510
  - symbolic racism, 3:113
  - television, 3:124–128
  - women, 3:30
- ### Portuguese colonialism
- blackness in Latin America, 1:217
  - Brazilian racial formations, 1:246
  - racial slave labor, 2:473
  - slave trade, 1:60–61, 3:160–162
  - slavery and race, 3:62
  - white settler society, 3:224, 225
- ### Portuguese colonialism in Africa, 1:43–47, 45
- ### Posse Comitatus, 3:111
- ### Post-apartheid era, 1:102, 3:89
- ### Postcolonial era
- African economic development, 1:51–55
  - Belgian Africa, 1:21–22
  - black feminism in the United Kingdom, 1:196
  - British Africa, 1:26–28
  - cultural racism, 1:380–381
  - Southeast Asia, 1:306
- ### Postcolonialism
- Mexico, 2:304
  - nationalism, 2:57–59
  - Pan-Africanism, 2:400–402
- ### Postmodern feminism, 1:197, 228, 470–471
- ### Post-Soviet era, 1:112–113
- ### Post-World War II era
- barrios*, 1:150–151
  - civil rights movement, 1:329–330
  - cultural racism, 1:377
  - medical experimentation, 2:291–292
  - Northern segregation, 2:450–451
  - physical anthropology, 3:10–11
  - reproductive rights, 2:494–495
  - symbolic ethnicity, 3:117
  - UNESCO statements on race, 3:181–183
  - United Kingdom racial formations, 3:186–187
- ### Post-World War II era, Chinese Americans in the, 1:300–304
- ### Potosi mines, 3:201
- ### Potsdam Protocol, 1:437
- ### Pou, Thomas, 2:352
- ### Poverty, 1:294, 2:421–424, 423
- African American children, 1:291–297

- agriculture, 2:364
  - Caribbean plantation society, 1:276
  - criminality, 1:364
  - cultural deficiency theory, 1:375–376
  - educational disparities, 1:428
  - forced sterilization, 1:485
  - racial disparities, 1:292
  - rates, 2:231
  - rural white stereotyping, 2:507–510
  - social problems, 3:72
  - social welfare states, 3:79–81
  - substance abuse, 3:104
  - underemployment, 3:175–177
  - women, 3:28
  - workfare and welfare, 3:230–233
See also Poor people
- ### Powderly, Terence V., 1:310
- ### Powell, Adam Clayton, Jr., 2:424–426, 2:494, 512
- ### Powell, Colin, 1:49, 271
- ### Powell, John Wesley, 1:95, 1:96
- ### Powell, Lewis F., 1:16
- ### Powell, Mike, 3:148
- ### Powell, Ozie, 3:16, 19
- ### Powell v. Alabama, 3:18
- ### Powell v. McCormack, 2:425
- ### Power
- discrimination, 2:181
  - language, 2:237–238
- ### Powers, Stephen, 3:129
- ### Poyas, Peter, 3:200
- ### Prah, Mansah, 1:64
- ### Pran, Dith, 1:475
- ### Prarthana Samaj, 1:387
- ### Prasad, Rajendra, 2:8
- ### Pratt, Geronimo Ji Jaga, 1:191
- ### Pratt, Richard Henry, 2:158, 160
- ### Praying Towns, 2:306
- ### PRD (Democratic Revolution Party), 3:239
- ### Precolonial African enslavement, 1:56–63, 59
- ### Pregnant women, 2:495–496
- ### Prejudice
- ignorance as root of, 1:418
  - implicit, 3:115
  - individual racism as different from, 3:74
  - reduction techniques, 3:77–78
  - social psychology of racism, 3:75–77
- ### Prejudice problématique, 1:349
- ### Prejudice-reduction techniques, 1:142–143
- ### Prenatal care, 1:292

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Prenatal crimes, 2:495–496
 Prenatal testing, 2:498
 Preschool education, 1:293–294
 Presidential elections, 1:173–174, 335–336
 President's Committee on Civil Rights, 2:450
 President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, 1:326
 PRI (Institutional Revolutionary Party), 2:169–170, 3:238, 239
 Price, John Wiley, 2:347
 Price, Victoria, 3:18
 Price-Mars, Jean, 2:77–78
Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 3:191
 Primary schooling, 1:294
 Primary-sector jobs, 2:230
 Primate evolution, 2:116–121
 Primates
   facial angle, 1:453
   subspecies, 3:103
 "Primitive" people, 1:440–441
Principia of Ethnology: The Origin of Races and Color (Delany), 1:91
Principles of Political Economy (Mill), 1:443
 Prisoners of war, 3:47, 62
 Prisons
   African Americans, 1:364–365
   Davis, Angela, 1:394–395
   HIV and AIDS, 2:83, 98
   Malcolm X, 2:276–278
   Native Americans, 3:106
   racial segregation, 2:452
   Southern Poverty Law Center, 3:94
   tuberculosis, 2:82
   United Kingdom, 3:187
 Pritchard, Jack, 3:200
 Pritchard, Laurie, 2:218
 Program of the March on Washington Movement, 1:329
 Progress, 2:69
 Progressive era
   Birth of a Nation (film), 1:174
   racial purity, 2:466
 Prohibition of Mixed Marriages Act (South Africa), 1:100, 118, 3:87
 Project Implicit, 2:157
 Project RACE, 1:171, 2:326–327
 Pronatalism, 2:497
 Propaganda, 2:107–108, 382–383
 Proper Economic Resource Management (PERM), 1:104
 Property crime, 1:363
 Property rights
   anti-Indian movement, 1:104
   Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:136
   dependent persons, 3:50
   Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 3:159–160
 Proportionate representation, 3:190
 Proposals for a New International Economic Order, 1:270
 Proposition 187 (California), 1:353, 2:246, 385
 Proposition 209 (California), 1:17, 351
 Proposition 227 (California), 2:239
 Prosser, Gabriel, 1:5, 3:171
 Prostitutes. See Sex work
 Protectorates, French, 1:28
 Proteins, 2:37, 38
 Protestants, 3:21–22
 Protests. See Demonstrations and protests
The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, 1:115
 PRWORA (Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act), 2:320, 3:81
 Pryor, Richard, 1:206
 Pseudoscience, 3:1
 Psychic unity, 1:225, 441
 Psychological abuse, 3:204
 Psychological issues
   Galton, Francis, 2:3–4
   implicit racism, 2:157
   intelligence tests, 3:6
   intermarriage, 1:214–215
   internalized racism, 2:84–85, 187 mental health and racism, 2:298–299 multiracial identity, 2:325–326, 328–329
   racial discrimination, impact of, 2:296 self-esteem and cultural racism, 3:75
   slavery, 1:316–317
   socioeconomic status, 3:69–70
   stereotype threat, 3:98–99
   white racial outlook theories, 3:221–223
 Psychosocial stress and life expectancy, 2:269
 Psychotropic medication, 2:298–299
 "Public charges," 2:155
 Public Enemy, 2:483, 484, 484, 485
 Public health
   Holocaust, 2:105
   Native Americans, 2:86–87
 Public housing
   gangs and youth violence, 2:11
   poverty, 2:421
 Public Law 94-311, 2:258
 Public Law 280, 2:502
 Public opinion
   American attitudes toward Arabs, 1:122 anti-Jewish attitudes, 3:110
   Arabs and Arab Americans, 1:120
   black-white interracial marriage, 1:213–214
   Puerto Rico, status of, 2:428–429 racial attitudes, 1:348
   Russian attitudes towards Jews, 1:113
   welfare recipients, 3:79
 Public welfare agencies, 2:92
 Puerto Rican National Left Movement, 2:254
 Puerto Rican Socialist Party, 2:254
 Puerto Rican Student Union, 2:254
 "The Puerto Rican Study," 2:428
 Puerto Ricans, 2:426–429, 427
   adolescent female sexuality, 1:11
   barrios, 1:150
   Caribbean immigration, 1:272
   cultural deficiency theory, 1:376
   forced sterilization, 1:487, 2:292
   independence movement, 2:254
 Puerto Rico Democracy Act (proposed), 2:429
 Puerto Rico Self-Determination Act (proposed), 2:429
 Pullman, George, 2:470
 Punch card technology, 2:503
 Punitive Expedition, 1:258
 Purity and pollution, 1:385–386
 Purity of blood doctrine, 2:167
 Purvis, Robert, 1:72
 Putin, Vladimir, 1:113
 Putnam, Carleton, 3:12
 Putnam, Frederic Ward, 1:225
- ## Q
- Qian Xuesen, 1:303
 Qin dynasty, 2:480
 Qing dynasty, 2:481
 Qu Yunxia, 3:150
 Quakers
   abolition movement, 1:2, 5, 7, 3:56, 57
   American Colonization Society, 1:76
 Quantitative methods in psychology, 2:4
 Quarter Blood Amendment Act, 1:224
 Quatrefages, Jean Louis Armand de, 1:477

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

Quebec, Canada, 1:266, 267, 2:322–323
Quebec separatist movement, 2:247
Queen Anne's War, 2:164
Queensberry rules, 1:237, 238
Queer movement, 2:253
Quinacrine, 1:485
Quota Act, 2:154
Quotas, immigration
  Brazil, 1:248, 249
  Chinese immigration, 1:298
  Dalits, 1:388
  Immigration Restriction Acts, 1:99
  U.S. Border Patrol, 1:233
Qur'an, 1:114, 115, 2:329–330

R

Rabin, Yitzhak, 2:207
Raby, Al, 2:218
Race
  clines as opposed to race, 1:344 ethnicity as distinct from, 2:55
  as health risk marker, 2:292–293
Race, slavery and, 3:60–66
Race and Resettlement Office (Germany), 2:103
Race branding, 2:54, 57
Race relations
  boxing, 1:241
  Brazil, 1:245–249
  color-blind racism, 1:348–352
  film and Asian Americans, 1:475
  Forten, James, 1:493
  internal colonialism, 1:346–348
  Malcolm X, 2:279
  pre-nineteenth century, 2:189
  Washington, Booker T., 3:214–215
  women immigrants, 2:150
Race Relations Act (United Kingdom), 3:187–188
Race riots
  draft riots, 1:338–339
  Irish Americans, 2:201–202
  over 24th Infantry, 3:83
  Springfield riot, 2:336, 370
  United Kingdom, 3:187*f*
  White, Walter Francis, 3:219
Race riots (U.S.), 1900–1910, 2:431–435
Race riots (U.S.), 1917–1923, 2:435–443, 437, 441
Race science, 3:123
“Race suicide,” 2:497
Race-based redistricting, 3:207–208
Race-war movies, 1:474–475
“The Races of Man” (Douglass), 1:92

Racial classification
  biracialism, 1:169–172
  Brazil, 1:245–249
  censuses, 1:399–402
  classificatory discrimination, 1:272–273 colonial era, 1:93
  cranial index, 1:354
  criteria for, 2:123
  el mestizaje, 1:429
  facial angle, 1:453
  fingerprint patterns, 2:372
  forensic anthropology, 1:490–491
  Great Chain of Being, 2:69
  Hispanic and Latino identifiers, 2:257
  Italian colonialism in Africa, 1:39
  Kang Youwei, 2:481–482
  Liberian ethnic groups, 1:80
  multiracial identities, 2:324 nationalism and racial classifications, 3:65
  racial hierarchy, 2:461–464
  skin color, 3:41
  slavery and racial categories, 3:64–65
  social categorization, 3:76
  South African racial classification, 3:87
  UNESCO statements on race, 3:182–183
  Virginia, 1:212
Racial cleansing, 2:77
Racial consciousness, 1:248
Racial democracy, 1:192, 247–248
Racial demographics, 2:443–447, 443*t*, 444*t*, 445*t*, 446*t*, 447*t*
Racial desegregation (U.S.), 2:447–459
  Bates, Daisy, 1:164–165
  after Brown v. Board of Education, 1:252–254
  Civil Rights Act of 1875, 1:325
  dance, 1:391, 393
  Eisenhower, Dwight D., 3:227
  football, 1:480–483
  Little Rock Nine, 2:339–340
  Mexican Americans, 2:302
  military, 1:259, 3:84
  NAACP Legal Defense Fund, 1:331
  scientific racism, 3:12
  sports, 1:332
  United States Constitution, 3:194
  U.S. Army, 1:184
Racial differences
  DNA, 2:38–39
  history of concepts of, 2:189–190
Racial formations, 2:459–461
  Arab Americans, 1:121–124
  transnationalism, 3:156

Racial formations, Brazilian, 1:245–249, 248
Racial formations, Canadian, 1:265–267
Racial formations, Caribbean, 1:274–278
Racial formations, Cuban, 1:368–373
Racial formations, Haitian, 2:75–78
Racial formations, South African, 3:85–90
Racial formations, United Kingdom, 3:185–189, 3:186*t*
Racial-genetic model of life expectancy inequalities, 2:268
Racial hierarchy, 2:461–465
  Blumenbach, Johann Friedrich, 3:2
  China, 2:481–482
  Firmin, Anténor, 1:476–477
  human origins, 2:468
Racial hygiene, 2:383, 487–488
Racial identity
  Caribbean immigrants, 1:271
  dance, 1:391
  internalized racialism, 2:187
  Pan-Africanism, 2:399
  triracial isolates, 3:163–166
Racial identity, white, 3:221–223
Racial ideology
  color-blind racism, 1:348–352
  Ku Klux Klan, 2:221–223
  slavery, 3:65
  South Africa, 3:85
Racial motivation theory, 1:214
Racial optimists and pesoptimists, 1:348
Racial profiling, 2:84, 332–333
Racial purity, 2:466–472
  anti-miscegenation laws, 1:212
  German colonialism in Africa, 1:37
  Hitler, Adolf, 1:479
Racial serology, 2:27
Racial slave labor, 2:472–479
Racial slurs, 2:48–49
Racial stigma, 3:98–99
Racial stories, 1:351
Racial testimonies, 1:351–352
Racialism, internalized, 2:186–188
Racialization
  Arab Americans, 1:121–124
  basketball, 1:160–161
  diabetes, 1:405–406
  French colonial Africa, 1:31–33
  illegal immigration, 1:235–236
  Latin American indigenous people, 3:203
  Latinos, 2:256
  naturalization, 1:317–318

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Puerto Ricans, 2:426
 rural whites, 2:508, 510
 sexuality, 3:33
 slavery, 3:63–64
 Tutsi, 2:56
- Racially mixed persons. See Multiracial persons
- Racism, 2:186
 Dew, Thomas Roderick, 1:402–403
 as disease, 2:85
 Duke, David, 1:419–420
 racialism as distinct from, 2:186–187
 as result/not cause of slavery, 1:62
 skinheads, 1:435
 slavery, 3:57
 women immigrants, 2:149
- Racism, China, 2:480–482
- Racism, implicit, 2:156–157
- Racism, institutional, 2:180–183
- Radical Republicans, 1:8, 174, 176
- Radical right, 2:183–185
- Radio, 2:239–241
- Rahier, Jean Muteba, 1:218
- Railroads
 Chinese immigrants, 1:267, 309
 German colonialism in Africa, 1:38
- Raimond, Julien, 1:4, 2:76
- Rain, Paul, 1:227–228
- Rainey, Gertrude “Ma,” 2:263
- Rainey, Joseph, 1:209, 210
- Rajagopalachari, Chakravarti, 2:8
- Rajah, M. C., 1:387
- Rajchandra, 2:5
- Rakim, 2:96
- Ralston, Robert, 1:75
- Ram, Kanshi, 1:388
- Ramirez, Ignacio, 2:226
- Rand, Howard B., 1:313
- Randall, Richard, 1:80
- Randolph, A. Philip
 civil rights movement, 1:252
 King, Martin Luther, meeting with, 2:216
 March on Washington campaign, 1:329, 3:220
 NAACP, 2:340
 National Negro Congress, 2:425
 radical movement, 2:435
 Rustin, Bayard, and, 2:511, 512
 World War I, 2:437
- Randolph, John, 1:75
- Rap music, 2:482–485
See also Hip-hop culture
- Rape, 2:485–487
 American Indians, 1:358*t*, 359
 Scottsboro Boys, 3:16–20
- Rassenhygiene, 2:487–488
- Rastafarian movement, 2:400
- Rauschenbusch, Walter, 2:213
- Raven Matrices, 2:198
- Ravidas, 1:386–387
- Ray, John, 2:70
- Raynal, Guillaume Thomas François, 1:4
- La Razón Mestiza* (newspaper), 1:287
- Reaction-time tests, 2:3
- Reagan, Ronald
 immigration reform, 2:152, 153
 King, Martin Luther, Jr., national holiday for, 2:220 Sandinistas, assault against the, 1:280
 tax revolts, 3:233
 Wilkins, Roy, recognition of, 3:227
- Rebellions
 abolition movement, 1:5
 Angola, 1:46
 Cuban slave rebellions, 1:368–369
 Herero uprising, 1:36–37
 Maji Maji uprising, 1:37
 Napo Runa, 2:242
 raid on Harpers Ferry, 1:335
 slave codes, 3:44
 slaves, 1:334
 Turner, Nat, 3:59, 171–172
 United States Constitution, 3:190
 Vesey, Denmark, 3:59, 200, 212–213
 Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235–240
- Reciprocity Treaty, 1:370
- Reconciliation, South African, 3:88–89
- Reconciliation March, 1:137
- Reconquest of Spain, 2:166
- Reconstruction. See Black Reconstruction
- Recruitment of black soldiers, 1:179–180, 2:489–490, 3:170
 Second Klan, 3:21
- Red Men organizations, 2:414
- Red Power, 1:466
- “Red Scare,” 2:438
- “Red Summer,” 2:436, 440
- Redbones, 1:201, 3:166
- Redfield, Robert, 2:271
- Reed, Oscar W., 2:434–435
- Reed, Stanley, 2:455
- Reed, Willis, 1:161
- Reel, Estelle, 2:158
- Reenactments, 2:414
- “Re-Encounter 84” plant, 2:288
- Reese, Jerry, 1:482
- “Refiguring Aztlán” (Pérez-Torres), 1:146
- Reflectance spectrophotometry, 3:38–39
- Reflective engagement, 1:366
- Reform
 caste system, 1:386–388
 felony disenfranchisement, 1:470
 immigration, 2:151–153
 Indian Boarding Schools, 2:157–158
 Indian Rights Association, 2:160
 welfare, 1:22–25, 3:81
- Refugees in Australia, 1:138
 Caribbean immigration, 1:272
 Central Americans, 1:278–281
 children, 1:293
 farmworkers, 1:459
 Jewish, 3:241
 Maya, 2:287
 Palestinian, 3:241–242
 sexual exploitation of women and girls, 2:135
 United Kingdom, 3:188–189
- Regeneración* (journal), 1:287, 2:253
- Regents of the University of California v. Bakke*, 1:15, 16, 2:340, 3:195
- Rehnquist, William, 1:15, 16
- Relethford, John, 2:31, 32
- Religion
 Ambedkar, Bhimrao Ramji, 1:389
 black feminism in Brazil, 1:193–194
 Caribbean racial formations, 1:276
 church segregation, 2:448
 dance, 1:392
 ethnic cleansing, 1:437–438
 ethnocentrism, 1:440, 441
 French colonial Africa, 1:31–33
 Holocaust, 2:104
 indigenous Mexicans, 2:167
 Ku Klux Klan, 2:222
 missionaries among American Indians, 2:305–310
 Native Americans, 1:462, 463, 2:51
 polygenesis vs. monogenesis, 1:90–91
 race relations, 2:189
 sexism, 3:28
 slavery, 3:60, 62
 Sudan, genocide in, 2:60
- Religious right, 2:185
- Religious studies, 3:229
- Relocation of Native Americans. See Native Americans, forced removal of
- Remedial justification for affirmative action, 1:14

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Remittances
African diaspora, 1:49
Cuba, 1:372
- Remond, Charles Lenox, 1:72, 78, 2:488–490
- Remond, Sarah Parker, 1:7
- Removal of Native Americans. See Native Americans, forced removal of
- Remus, Rastus, Revolution* (Fishwick), 1:205
- Renamo (Mozambique National Resistance), 1:47
- Renan, Ernest, 1:284
- Reorientation therapy, 2:93
- Reparations, 2:490–493, 492
African diaspora, 1:50
Japanese internment, 2:205
racial slave labor, 2:477
- Repatriation, 1:243–245, 2:352–353, 3:13, 14
- “Report on Colonization,” 1:77–78
- Report on the World Social Situation (United Nations), 1:426
- Representations of Africa, 1:29–31
Orientalism, 2:389–391
- Repression
antiracist social movements, 1:108
political, 1:298
South Africa, 3:88
- Reproduction, Latina, 2:245–249
- Reproductive genetic services, 1:446
- Reproductive rights, 2:493–496, 3:61
- Reproductive technologies, 2:496–499, 498
- Republic of Cuba, 1:370
- Republic of Texas, 1:68
- Republican Party
African Americans, 2:366
American Anti-Slavery Society, 1:74
Turner, Henry McNeal, 3:170
- Republican Party (India), 1:388
- Requiem Canticles* (ballet), 1:391
- El Rescate*, 2:254
- Research. See Scholarship and research
- Reservation of Separate Amenities Act (South Africa), 3:87
- Reservation system, 1:104, 358, 464, 2:499–503, 502
- Resistance
African, 3:34
African slaves, 1:48
American Indian Movement, 1:81–84
antiracist social movements, 1:105–108
Australian resistance to British colonialism, 1:133
Belgian colonialism, 1:18–19
Brown, John, 1:249–250
Brown v. Board of Education, 1:252–253
capitalism, 1:269
Caribbean social structure, 1:276
Chicanos, 2:302–303
Cuba, 1:368, 370–373
German colonialism in Africa, 1:36–37
hypodescent, 2:325
immigration, 1:321–322
Latin America, 1:218
missionaries, 2:167
Napo Runa, 2:242
Nyabingi anticolonial resistance, 2:54
Portuguese colonialism, 1:44–47 slave resistance, early, 3:56
slaves, 1:334
South Africa, 3:88
Turner, Nat, 3:171–172
Vesey, Denmark, 3:200
Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235–240
- Resistance Records, 2:350
- Resource distribution, 1:276, 278
- Restrictive covenants, 2:338, 344–345
- “Resurrection City,” 2:219
- Return to Aztlán: The Social Process of International Migration from Western Mexico* (Massey et al.), 1:146
- Retzius, Anders, 1:98, 354, 3:3
- Reunited National Party, 1:117–118
- Revelations* (dance), 1:392
- Revels, Hiram, 1:209
- Reverse migration, 1:48–49
- Reverse racism, 1:14, 2:303
- Review of the Debate in the Virginia Legislature of 1831 and 1832* (Dew), 1:402–403
- Revisionism, 1:313, 2:355
- Revolutionary Union Movements (RUMs), 2:259–262
- Revolutionary War, American
abolition movement, 1:3
slavery, 3:57–58
soldiers of color, 3:82
- Reynolds, United States v.*, 2:405
- Rhetorical incoherence, 1:350–351
- Rhode Island, 3:55
- Rhode Island Black Battalion, 3:58
- Rhoden, Dwight, 1:393
- Rhodes, Cecil, 1:23, 3:86
- Rhodes, James Ford, 1:174
- Riady, James, 1:299
- Ricardo, Edward, 3:50
- Rice plantations, 2:411–413, 413
- Rich, Adrienne, 1:470, 2:93, 262, 3:28
- Richards, Michael, 2:241
- Richardson, Desmond, 1:393
- Richardson, George, 2:433
- Richmond, Virginia, 1:211
- Richmond v. J. A. Croson Company*, 1:16, 3:195
- Rickey, Branch, 1:155, 2:455
- Rifle club movement, 3:131
- Rigaud, André, 2:76
- Rights as commodities, 3:47–50
- Riis, Jacob, 2:422
- Rincon, Bernice, 1:287
- Der Ring des Nibelungen* (Wagner), 3:210
- Rinley, Robert, 1:77
- Ríos Montt, Efraín, 2:286–287
- Riotous Assemblies Act (South Africa), 3:87
- Riots. See Race riots
- Rising Sun* (film), 1:475
- The Rising Tide of Color against White World-Supremacy* (Stoddard), 3:100–101
- Ritch, William G., 1:144
- Roberson, Willie, 3:16, 19
- Roberto, Holden, 1:46
- Roberts, Joseph Jenkins, 1:79, 80, 374
- Roberts, Sarah, 2:448–449
- Roberts, Terrence, 1:164
- Roberts v. City of Boston*, 2:448–449
- Robertson, James, 1:26
- Robeson, Paul, 1:332, 2:400, 450
- Robinson, Curtis, 2:183
- Robinson, Frank, 3:14–15
- Robinson, Jackie, 1:152, 154–155, 332, 480, 483, 2:455
- Robinson, Mrs. Jo Ann, 2:214
- Robinson, Wolon, 2:412, 413
- Robinson, Wyance C., 3:140
- Rocha, Joaquin, 3:202
- Rochambeau, Donatien, 2:76
- Rock Steady Crew, 2:96
- Rockefeller, John D., 3:5
- Rockefeller, Laurance, 3:136
- Rockefeller Foundation, 1:131, 2:488
- Rockwell, George Lincoln, 2:349, 503–505
- Roddy, Stephen R., 3:18
- Rodino, Peter, 2:151
- Rodino Bill, 1:291
- Rodney, Walter, 1:49, 50, 277, 2:474

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Rodriguez, Arturo, 3:185
 Rodriguez, David Sanes, 2:429
 Rodriguez Pizarro, Gabriela, 1:231–232
Roe v. Wade, 1:228, 2:495, 498
 Rogan, Bullet, 1:156
 Roker, Al, 2:240
 Roma, 2:505–507, 506
 Roman Empire, 1:57, 57–58, 3:53
 Roman law, 3:42
Romanus Pontifex, 2:305
Romeo Must Die (film), 1:475
 Roosevelt, Eleanor
   Bethune, Mary McLeod, friendship with, 1:167
   Louis-Schmeling boxing match, 1:241
   New Deal, 2:366
 Roosevelt, Franklin D.
   Bethune, Mary McLeod, appointment of, 1:167
   Federal Employment Practices Commission, 1:329
   Japanese internment, 2:203
   New Deal, 2:364–367
   repeal of Chinese exclusion laws, 1:298
   Scottsboro Boys, 3:20
   White, Walter Francis, and, 3:219–220
 Roosevelt, Theodore
   Brownsville, Texas incident, 2:434
   Chinese exclusion laws, 1:310
   eugenics, 1:445
   “Gentlemen’s Agreement,” 2:451
   Grant, Madison, praise of, 3:8
   racial purity, 2:466
   racist theories, 2:359
   soldiers of color, 3:83
   Washington, Booker T., and, 3:214, 215, 215
Roots (Haley), 2:482–483, 3:137
 Ros-Lehtinen, Ileana, 1:271
 Rose, Steven, 3:13
 Rose, Tricia, 1:206
 Rose, Wayne, 3:222
 Rosenberg, Alfred, 1:42, 285
 Rosenwald, Julius, 1:129
 Rosenwald fund, 1:409
 Rosewood, Florida, 2:102
 Rosewood Massacre, 2:441, 2:441–442
 Ross, Edward, 1:445
 Ross, Fred, 1:285
 Rothschild, Edmond de, 3:240
 Rough Riders, 1:258
 Royal African Company, 3:51, 64
 Royal Commission (Canada), 1:266, 2:321
 Roybal Resolution, 2:258
 Roye, Edward J., 1:80
 RPF (Rwandan Patriotic Front), 2:57–58
 Rubin, Irv, 2:207
 Rubin, Shelley, 2:207
 Rucker, Holcomb, 1:160–161
 Ruffner, Lewis and Viola, 3:214
 Rufino, Alzira, 1:195
 Ruggeri, Vincenzo Giuffrida, 1:40
 Ruggles, David, 1:8
 Ruggles, R. R., 3:4
 Ruiz, Samuel, 3:238
 Rule of hypodescent, 2:324
 Rum, 3:56–57
 RUMs (Revolutionary Union Movements), 2:259–262
 Run-DMC, 2:484
 Rupp, Adolph, 1:161
 Rural white stereotyping, 2:507–511, 509
 Rus, Jan, 2:303
 Rush, Benjamin, 1:2, 94
 Rush, Richard, 1:75
Rush Hour (film), 1:475
 Rushton, J. Philippe eugenics, history of, 1:446, 450
   IQ, 2:193, 195
   racial hierarchy, 2:462, 464
   scientific racism, 3:13
 Russell, Alfred H., 1:80
 Russell, Bill, 1:161
 Russell, David, 1:168
 Russia
   African diaspora, 1:50
   Muslims, 2:331
 Russia, anti-Semitism in, 1:110–114, 112
 Russian Orthodox Church, 1:111, 113
 Russian Revolution, 2:105
 Russians, 1:438–439
 Russwurm, John, 1:6, 374
 Rustin, Bayard, 1:331, 2:215, 2:511–513
   Baker, Ella, work with, 1:148
   Brown v. Board of Education, 1:252
 Rutgers University women’s basketball team, 2:239, 240
 Rwanda
   Belgian colonialism, 1:19–22
   ethnic cleansing, 1:436
   French intervention, 1:34
 Rwanda, genocide in, 2:46–47, 2:52–59, 55, 58
 Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF), 2:57–58
 Ryan, Paddy, 1:238
- ## S
- Sá da Bandeira, Marquis of, 1:43
 Saban, Nick, 1:483
 Sachs, Bernard, 3:122
 SAC (Southwest Athletic Conference), 1:481
 SACP (South African Communist Party), 1:100, 101
 Sacred sites, 2:310
 al-Sadat, Anwar, 1:115
 Said, Edward, 2:389–391, 422
 Saint-Hilaire, Geoffroy, 2:113
 Saints, 1:386–387, 2:420
 Sakata, Lenn, 1:157
 Salaman, Redcliffe N., 3:122–123
 Salan, Raoul, 2:388
 Salaries. See Wages and salaries
 Salazar, Ruben, 1:290, 2:252
 Salem, Peter, 2:448
 Salinas de Gortari, Carlos, 2:170, 3:235, 236, 237
 Salt Marches, 2:7
Salt of the Earth (film), 2:250
 Saltin, Bengt, 2:40
 Salvadoran immigrants, 1:278–281
 Same-sex marriage, 2:94
 San Andreas Accords, 2:170, 3:235, 238–239
 San Angelo, Texas, 1:256
 San Antonio, Texas, 1:152
 San Quentin, 1:361
 Sanchez, Celia, 1:370
 Sánchez, David, 1:289
 Sanchez, Sonia, 2:483
 Sanctions, 1:101
 Sanders, Cheryl, 3:229
 Sandiford, Ralph, 1:2
 Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN), 1:279–280
 Sandoval, Chela, 2:252
 Sanford, John F. A., 1:415
 Sanger, Margaret, 2:494
 Sansei, 2:204
 Santa Ana, Antonio López, 1:67–68
 Santa Barbara plan, 1:432–434
 Santa Maria, Haydee, 1:370
 São Tomé, 1:47
 Sapir, Edward, 1:227–228

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- SAPs (structural adjustment programs), 2:136
- Saramaka, 1:218
- Sarandon, Susan, 1:392
- Sarich, Vincent, 2:27
- Sarter, Caesar, 1:3
- SASO (South African Student Organization), 1:168, 192
- SAT (Scholastic Aptitude Test), 3:96, 97
- Satyashodhak Samaj, 1:387
- Saudi Arabia, 3:59
- Savage, Michael, 2:239
- Savages, 1:355, 2:306, 354–355
- Savimbi, Jonas, 1:46
- Sawyer, Reuben H., 1:313
- Scala naturae*. See Great Chain of Being
- Scalia, Antonin, 1:15, 16
- Scarborough, William S., 1:84–88
- Schaffer, Peter, 2:275
- Scheduled Castes and Schedule Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act (India), 1:386
- Scheduled Castes Party, 1:388
- Schenley Industries, 1:286
- Schikaneder, Emanuel, 2:274
- Schiller, Friedrich, 2:275
- Schmeling, Max, 1:240–241, 242
- Scholarship and research
- African American families, 1:456–457
  - anthropology, history of, 1:93–96
  - athletic performance, 2:40–41
  - black ethnology, 1:89–92
  - black feminism in the United States, 1:199–200
  - black popular culture, 1:203–207
  - black-white interracial marriage, 1:214–215
  - body politics, 1:229–230
  - campus climate, 1:422
  - critical race theory, 1:366–367
  - cultural deficiency theory, 1:374–376
  - folk classification, 1:478–479
  - Galton, Francis, 2:3–4
  - higher education faculty, 1:422–423
  - Holocaust, 2:111
  - lesbians, 2:264–265
  - life expectancy inequalities, 2:269
  - lynching, 3:217–218
  - multiracial identity, 2:328–329
  - Native American origins and identity, 1:463–464
  - Orientalism, 2:389–391
  - poverty, 2:421–422
  - sexuality, 2:18–19
  - slavery statistics, 2:474
  - welfare reform, 3:231–232
  - white racial outlook theories, 3:221–223
- Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), 3:96, 97
- Schomberg, Arthur, 1:271
- School of American Ballet, 1:391
- Schoolcraft, Henry Rowe, 1:464, 2:415
- Schoolly D, 2:485
- Schopenhauer, Arthur, 3:65
- Schultz, Adolph, 3:10
- Schuman, Howard, 1:348
- Schurz, Carl, 2:308
- Schwarzenegger, Arnold, 2:238
- Schwerner, Michael, 1:333, 448, 3:206
- Scientific racism
- anthropometry, 1:98
  - black ethnology, 1:89–92
  - Bureau of American Ethnology, 1:96
  - censuses, 1:400
  - eugenics, 1:442–443
  - Firmin, Anténor, 1:477
  - folk classification, 1:478–479
  - Garvey, Marcus, reaction of, 2:16–17
  - German athletes, 2:383
  - intelligence, 2:188
  - Italy, 1:40
  - Polygenesis, 2:373
  - racial purity, 2:467–468
  - slavery, 3:65–66
- Scientific racism, history of, 3:1–16
- Scientists, 1:302–304, 307, 2:463–464
- SCIRP (Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy), 2:152
- SCLC. See Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC)
- “Scorched Earth” campaign, 2:286
- Scott, Dred, 1:415–418, 416
- Scott, Emmett J., 1:178
- Scott, William, 1:415
- Scottsboro Boys, 3:16–20, 17
- Scottsboro Defense Committee, 3:18
- Scoville, Annie Beecher, 2:158
- Sea Island plantations, 2:411–413
- Sears, David, 1:348
- Seasonal workers, 1:243–245
- Secession of southern states
- abolition movement, 1:8
  - Phillips, Wendell, 2:407
- Second Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, 3:238
- Second Empire of France, 2:421
- Second Great Migration, 1:328, 330
- Second Klan, 3:20–24
- Secondat, Charles-Louis de, 1:1, 441
- Second-class citizens, 1:319–320, 2:249–250, 3:243
- Second-wave feminism, 1:228
- Secret Army Organization, 2:388–389
- Secret societies, 1:65–66
- Secretaria de la Paz*, 2:288
- Sedition Act, 2:438
- Segmentation theory of the labor market, 2:230
- Segregation
- apartheid, 1:117–119
  - barrios*, 1:150
  - baseball, 1:152
  - Brown v. Board of Education*, 1:250–254
  - California schools, 2:451
  - Citizens’ Councils, 3:220–221
  - civil rights acts, 1:325
  - civil rights movement, 1:328–333
  - dance, 1:391
  - de facto, 2:232
  - federal government employees, 3:167–168
  - federal workers, 3:132
  - Fortune, Timothy Thomas, 1:495
  - health disparities, 2:176
  - Holocaust, 2:105–106
  - Israel, 3:242
  - Italian colonialism in Africa, 1:40–42
  - Marshall, Thurgood, 2:283
  - Mexican Americans, 2:249, 302
  - Montgomery bus boycott, 2:214–215
  - NAACP, 2:335
  - NAACP legal actions, 2:338–340, 342–346
  - National States Rights Party, 2:351
  - The Origin of Races* (Coon), 2:393
  - passing, 2:325
  - Plessy v. Ferguson*, 2:416–418
  - Puerto Ricans, 2:428
  - race riots, 2:438–439
  - racial purity, 2:470
  - Remond, Charles Lenox, 2:489
  - residential, 2:231
  - scientific racism, 3:12
  - second class citizenship, 1:319–320
  - southern politics, 3:90–91
  - sports culture, 1:160–161
  - United States Constitution, 3:193–194
  - See also apartheid
- Segregation, occupational, 2:375–378
- Seguín, Juan N., 1:67–69

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Seko, Mobutu Sese. See Mobutu, Joseph
- Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy (SCIRP), 2:152
- Selective Service Act of 1917, 3:83
- Self-determination
Native Americans, 2:367, 502–503
Puerto Rico, 2:428–429
- Self-employment, 2:235
- Self-esteem, 3:75
- Self-help, 3:67
- Self-identification
Brazilians, 1:245–246
censuses, 1:401–402
Central American racial identity, 1:281
Chicanos, 1:145
Cubans, 1:372
gangs, 2:12
Hispanics, 2:227, 258
Indians, 1:467
multiracial persons, 2:328
U.S. Census, 2:460–461
- Self-sufficiency, 2:319–320
- Sells, Cato, 2:158
- Selma-to-Montgomery march, 1:333, 2:218, 340, 3:226
- Seminoles, 1:201
- Senate, U.S., 2:205
- Seneca Falls Convention, 1:471
- Senegal, 3:142
- Senghor, Léopold, 2:400
- Sensory discrimination, 2:188
- Separate Amenities Act (South Africa), 1:101
- Separate but equal doctrine
Brown v. Board of Education, 1:250–254
citizenship, 1:320
Marshall, Thurgood, 2:283
Plessy v. Ferguson, 1:272, 2:416–418
racial desegregation in the South, 2:451–456
Sweatt v. Painter, 2:345–346
unconstitutionality, 2:339
United States Constitution, 3:193
- Separate Development policy, 3:87
- Separate Universities Act (South Africa), 1:119
- Separatism
El Plan de Santa Barbara, 1:433
Francophones, 1:266, 267
Malcolm X, 2:277
Quebec, 2:247
Singleton, Benjamin “Pap,” 3:37, 38
- Sephardim, 3:101
- September 11th terrorist attacks
Arabs and Arab Americans, 1:120
border issues, 1:321
hate crimes, 2:81
Islamophobia, 2:323
racial profiling of Muslims, 2:333
- Sepúlveda, Juan Ginés de
“just” wars, 2:49
Valladolid debate, 1:1, 463, 2:26
violence against Latin American indigenous people, 3:201
- Serageldin, Ismail, 2:401
- Serbia, 1:437
- Serfdom, 1:58, 60
- Serology, 2:27
- Serrano, Jose, 1:271
- Servicemen’s Readjustment Act, 1:330, 2:455
- Settler communities. See White settler society
- Sewall, Samuel, 1:2, 3:57
- Seward, William H., 1:309
- Sex hormones, 3:146–147
- The Sex Question and Race Segregation* (Grimké), 1:85–86
- Sex selection, 1:446
- Sex work, 3:24–27, 25
body as a commodity, 3:33
Cuba, 1:370, 372
exploitation of women and children, 3:176
human trafficking, 2:134–138
- Sexism, 3:27–31, 29
lesbians, 2:262
The Magic Flute, 2:274–276
Wagner, Richard, 3:210–211
- Sexology, 2:18
- Sexual assault and exploitation black domestic workers, 2:486
black women, 2:439
human trafficking, 2:134–138
Native American girls, 1:12
Sudan, genocide in, 2:62
women immigrants, 2:149
See also Sex work; Violence against women and girls
- Sexual hierarchy, 3:32–33
- Sexuality, 3:31–33
black women, 2:485–486
disease, 1:408–409
Hottentot Venus, 2:113
interracial, 1:212–213
intersectionality in black feminism, 1:198–200
The Sex Question and Race Segregation (Grimké), 1:85–86
sex work, 3:26
Wells-Barnett, Ida B., 3:217–218
women immigrants, 2:150
- Sexuality, adolescent female, 1:10–13
- Sexually transmitted diseases, 1:408–409
- Shabazz, Malik Zulu, 2:348
- Shades of Glory* (Hogan), 1:156
- Shadow economy. See Informal labor market
- Shakur, Tupac, 2:96
- Shanberg, Sydney, 1:475
- Shannon, Randy, 1:482
- Shapiro, Harry, 3:103
- Sharkey, Jack, 1:240
- Sharkey, William L., 1:188
- Sharon, Ariel, 3:244
- Sharp, Granville, 1:2, 5
- Sharpeville Massacre, 1:101, 107, 3:88, 89
- Sharpton, Al, 2:102–103, 240
- Shaw, Harry B., 1:205
- Shaw, Lemuel, 2:449
- Shaw, Robert Gould, 1:337–338
- Shaw v. Reno*, 3:194, 208
- Shell, Art, 1:481
- Shelley v. Kraemer*, 1:331, 2:344–345
- Shepard, Matthew, 2:92
- Sheppard, William, 3:33–34, 140–141
- Sherman, William Tecumseh, 1:183, 339, 497
- Shi’ism, 2:330
- Ship building, 3:56
- Shiva, Vandana, 2:67
- SHOAH* (film), 2:104
- Shoah Foundation Institute for Visual History and Education, 2:111
- Shock jocks, 2:239–241
- Shockley, William, 3:13
- Shoemaker, Jacob, 3:58
- Shook, Karel, 1:391
- Shufeldt, Robert W., 2:471
- Sickle cell anemia, 1:410, 3:34–37, 36
clines, 1:341, 342–343
overview, 1:410–411
racial diseases, 3:122
trait, 2:122
- Sickles, Daniel E., 1:188
- Sidis, 1:50
- SIDS (sudden infant death syndrome), 2:174, 175
- Sierra Club, 2:185
- Sierra Leone
American Colonization Society, 1:78
Cuffe, Paul, 1:374
Pan-Africanism, 2:399
Turner, Henry McNeal, 3:170

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Signifyin(g), Sanctifyin', and Slam Dunking: A Reader in African American Expressive Culture* (Caponi), 1:205
- Silver, 3:51
- Simmons, Ruth, 2:477
- Simmons, William J., 1:176, 3:21, 22
- Simpson, Alan, 2:152
- Sims, James Marion, 2:290, 294
- Single mothers, 1:455–456
- Singleton, Benjamin “Pap,” 3:37–38
- Siofele, Joseph, 2:212
- Sipuel v. Oklahoma State Regents*, 1:252, 331, 2:346
- Sisterhood Is Powerful* (anthology), 3:27
- Sisulu, Walter, 2:281
- Sit-ins, 1:332, 2:340, 456–457
- Sitting Bull, 1:357
- Sixteenth Street Baptist Church, 2:217–218
- Sixth Declaration of the Lacandon Jungle, 3:235, 239–240
- Sixth Pan-African Congress, 2:400
- Skelly, Jack, 1:238
- Skin color, 3:38–42, 39f
- Brazilian racial formations, 1:245–249
  - Caribbean racial formations, 1:275, 276, 277
  - clines, 1:340–341, 345
  - Firmin, Anténor, 1:477
  - genetic variation, 2:31–32
  - human biological variation, 2:121, 122, 2:122
  - immigration laws, 2:153–154
  - internalized racialism, 2:187
  - Latinos, 2:256
  - Liberian government, 1:80
  - Mexican Americans, 2:303
  - Mexico, 2:301
  - Muslims, 2:331
  - nonconcordant variation, 2:370–372
  - UNESCO statements on race, 3:183
  - White, Walter Francis, 3:219
  - women immigrants, 2:149, 150
- Skinheads, 1:435
- Skinner, B. F., 2:89
- Skinner, Ezekiel, 1:80
- Skull measurements. See Craniometry
- SLA (Sudan Liberation Army), 2:61, 62
- Slater, Samuel, 2:476, 3:58
- Slaughterhouse Cases*, 1:325
- Slave barracoon, 3:54
- Slave codes, 3:42–44
- Slave communities, 1:105–106
- Slave labor, racial, 2:472–479
- Slave narratives
- abolition movement, 1:5, 8
  - African American history, 3:140
  - domestic work, 2:478
- Slave rebellions. See Rebellions
- Slave Songs of the United States* (Allen, Ware, and Garrison), 1:204
- Slave trade, 1:6, 49, 3:45, 50, 56, 61
- African diaspora, 1:47–48
  - African disembarked 1519–1867, 2:443t
  - heritage tourism, 3:137–143
  - Jamestown, Virginia, 1:61
  - Portuguese, 1:43
  - precolonial African enslavement, 1:56–63
  - racial demographics, 2:443–447
  - racialization of slavery, 3:63–64
  - reparations, 2:491
  - trans-Atlantic slave trade, 3:48
  - See also* Atlantic slave trade
- Slave trade, triangular, 3:160–163, 161
- Slave trade ideology, 3:44–53
- Slavery, 3:53–60
- African diaspora, 1:47–48
  - anthropology, 1:93–94
  - Brazil, 1:246
  - Calhoun, John C., 1:265
  - capitalism, 1:268
  - Caribbean plantations, 1:274–276
  - census, 1:399–400
  - cheap labor, 2:228–229
  - citizenship, 1:315–318
  - Civil War, American, 1:334–339
  - Cuba, 1:368–369
  - Darwin’s opposition to, 1:444
  - domestic labor, 2:477–478
  - Douglass, Frederick, 1:413–414
  - drapetomania, 3:72–73
  - Dred Scott v. Sandford*, 1:415–418
  - educational disparities, 1:425
  - Emancipation Proclamation, 1:434–435
  - exploitation, 1:449
  - families, 1:455
  - Freedmen’s Bureau, 1:497–500
  - Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, 2:7
  - Garnet, Henry Highland, 2:12–13
  - gender, 2:20
  - genes and genealogies, 2:22–23
  - genesis and polygenesis, 2:24–26
  - Great Chain of Being, 2:69
  - heritage tourism, 3:135–140
  - medical experimentation, 2:290, 294–295
  - Muslims, 2:331
  - plantations, 2:407–413
  - Portuguese colonialism, 1:43–44
  - race concept, 2:293
  - race science justifications, 1:98
  - racial demographics, 2:443–447
  - racial formations, 2:460
  - racial purity, 2:466, 467
  - rape, 2:486
  - reparations, 2:491
  - reproductive rights, 2:495
  - resistance, 1:105–106
  - Review of the Debate in the Virginia Legislature of 1831 and 1832* (Dew), 1:402–403
  - scientific racism, 3:2–3
  - sexual exploitation, 2:134–135, 3:25
  - sexuality, 3:31–32
  - social Darwinism, 2:231–232
  - Thirteenth Amendment, 1:323
  - Turner, Nat, 3:171–172
  - United States Constitution, 3:190–191
  - Valladolid debate, 3:201
  - Virginia, 1:61
  - See also* Abolition movement
- Slavery, Indian, 2:163–166, 164
- Slavery, precolonial African, 1:56–63, 59
- Slavery, racial, 3:53–60
- Slavery and race, 3:60–66
- Slavery hypertension hypothesis, 2:139–140
- Sleepy Lagoon Defense Committee (SLDC), 2:250
- Sleepy Lagoon incident, 3:245
- Slew, Jenny, 1:3
- Slocum, John, 1:374
- Small, Gail, 1:83
- Smallpox, 2:178
- Smalls, Robert, 1:209
- Smallwood, DeWitt “Woody,” 1:154
- Smith, Adam, 1:1, 3:50
- Smith, Al, 2:360
- Smith, Alfred E., 3:24
- Smith, Andrea, 1:487
- Smith, Bessie, 2:263
- Smith, Chad, 1:202
- Smith, Dean, 1:162
- Smith, Gerald L. K., 1:313, 3:111
- Smith, Gerrit, 1:250
- Smith, Gideon, 1:480
- Smith, Harry Clay, 2:335, 368
- Smith, Hilton, 1:156
- Smith, James McCune, 1:8, 91, 1:91, 3:66–67

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Smith, James S., 1:80
 Smith, John, 2:26, 3:55
 Smith, Lovie, 1:482
 Smith, M. Hoke, 2:432, 3:92
 Smith, Rick, 1:482
 Smith, Samuel Stanhope, 1:90, 94
 Smith, Susan, 2:101–102
 Smith, Thomas, 1:256
 Smith, Wendell, 1:156
 Smith, William French, 2:153
Smith v. Allwright, 1:331, 2:338, 344, 345, 3:206
 Smithsonian Institution, 1:96, 464, 3:135, 140
 Smugglers, human, 1:231
 Smuts, Jan, 1:117, 2:6, 3:86
 SNCC. See Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC)
 Snee Farm, 3:137
 Sniderman, Paul, 1:348
 Snyder, Jimmy “the Greek,” 1:160, 483
 Snyder Act of 1921, 2:86
 Social categorization, 3:76
 Social class
   Arab Americans, 1:120–124
   Brazilian racial formations, 1:247–248
   Dalits, 1:385–389
   dance and social mobility, 1:390
   el mestizaje, 1:431–432
   feminism, 1:472
   gender and race, intersectionality with, 1:456*f* Haitian racial formations, 2:75
   intelligence, 2:191
   intersectionality in black feminism, 1:198–200
   labor market, 2:233
   The Marriage of Figaro (opera), 2:275
   mestizo, 2:168
   Mexican Americans, 2:273, 303
   racial purity, 2:469–470
   sexual hierarchy, 3:32–33
   social Darwinism, 2:189, 3:4–6
   Tobacco Wars, 2:509–510
   womanism, 3:228
   See also Socioeconomic status
 Social class and mortality, 3:68–71
 Social construction race, 1:429
   sexuality, 2:18
 Social control, 3:28–30
 Social dance, 1:390
 Social Darwinism
   anti-Semitism, 1:109
   athletic performance, 2:42
   Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:134
   boxing, 1:238
   British colonialism, 1:23
   eugenics, 2:36
   forced sterilization, 1:484
   Galton, Francis, 2:2
   labor market, 2:231–232
   nineteenth century, 2:189, 190
   racial purity, 2:468–469, 470
   rasenhygiene, 2:487
   scientific racism, 3:4–6
 Social engineering, 3:87
 Social identity, 1:472
 Social issues
   aversive racism, 1:140
   critical race theory, 1:366
   diabetes, 1:404
   Haiti, 2:77
 Social mobility
   African Americans, 2:406
   boxing, 1:241–242
   cultural deficiency theory, 1:375–376
   Mexican Americans, 2:248
 Social movement unionism, 3:153–154
 Social movements, antiracial, 1:105–108
 Social problems, 3:71–74
 Social psychology of racism, 3:74–79, 221–223
 Social sciences, 1:146, 172
 Social Security, 2:365, 3:80
 Social services, 1:38
 Social structure, 1:60, 275–276, 3:115
 Social Transformation Including Women in Africa, 1:65
 Social welfare states, 3:79–81
 Socialism, 1:371
 Socialization and violence, 2:9–10
Société d'Anthropologie de Paris, 3:3
 Société des Amis des Noirs, 1:4
 Society for Effecting the Abolition of the Slave Trade, 1:5
 Society for Promoting the Manumission of Slaves, 1:3
 Society for the Relief of Free Negroes Unlawfully Held in Bondage, 1:3
Sociobiology: The New Synthesis (Wilson), 3:13
 Socioeconomic status
   adolescent female sexuality, 1:11
   disease, risk of, 2:82
   health disparities, 3:68–69
   interracial marriage, 1:215 life expectancy, 2:266, 267*t*, 268–269
   Mexican Americans, 2:303
   social psychology of racism, 3:74–75
   See also Social class
 Sociology
   biracial Americans, 1:172
   cultural deficiency theory, 1:374–376
   Du Bois, W. E. B., 1:418
   internal colonialism, 1:346–348
   poverty, 2:421–422
 Sociopolitical issues
   Arab Americans, 1:123
   precolonial Africa, 1:60
 Sockalexis, Louis, 1:153
 Sofola, Zulu, 1:64
 Solals, William J., 3:6
 Soldiers, black Civil War, 1:179–185
 Soldiers of color, 3:81–85, 84
 Soledad Brothers Defense Committee, 1:394
 Solicitors general, 2:283
 Somalia, 1:40
 Somerset, James, 1:5
Somerset v. Stewart, 1:5
 Somoza Debayle, Anastasio, 1:279
 Sons of Confederate Veterans, 2:185
 Sosa, Sammy, 1:271
 Sosa Riddell, Adaljiza, 2:226
 Sotomayor, Javier, 3:148
The Souls of Black Folk (Du Bois), 1:204, 418, 419
 Souter, David, 1:15
 South Africa
   Afrikaner Broederbond, 1:65–66
   anti-apartheid movement, 1:101–102
   apartheid, 1:117–119, 2:228
   Biko, Stephen Bantu, 1:167–169
   black consciousness, 1:192
   British colonialism, 1:26
   diseases, 2:179
   educational disparities, 1:426–427
   ethnic cleansing, 1:436
   exploitation, 1:450
   Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, 2:5–6, 8
   Garvey, Marcus, 1:190–191
   German colonialism, 1:38
   HIV and AIDS, 2:98, 100
   Hottentot Venus, 2:114
   hypertension, 2:138
   Mandela, Nelson, 2:280–282
   postcolonial era, 1:27–28
   reparations, 2:490, 492
   scientific racism, 3:13
   strikes, 1:107

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- South Africa, continued
white settler society, 3:224, 225
- South African Communist Party (SACP), 1:100, 101
- South African racial formations, 3:85–90
- South African Student Organization (SASO), 1:168, 192
- South America
Black Indians, 1:202–203
racial demographics, 2:447
- South Asia
children, selling of, 2:135
lesbians, 2:264
- South Carolina, 2:165, 411–413
- South Carolina Constitutional Convention, 3:131–132
- South End* (newspaper), 2:261
- South Pacific, 1:50
- South-South networking, 1:270
- Southall Black Sisters, 1:196
- Southeast Asia
children, selling of, 2:135
Chinese diaspora, 1:305
Muslims, 2:332
sex trade, 2:137
- Southeast Athletic Conference (SAC), 1:481
- Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC)
Chicago movement, 2:219
civil rights movement, 1:333
desegregation in the South, 2:457
King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:215–216
NAACP, 2:339
organization of, 2:456
Rustin, Bayard, 2:512
Wilkins, Roy, 3:226
- Southern Farmers' Alliance, 3:91
- Southern Horrors* (Wells-Barnett), 3:217–218
- “Southern Manifesto,” 2:456
- Southern politics, 3:90–93
- Southern Poverty Law Center, 1:283, 2:183–185, 362, 3:93–95
- Southern Publicity Association, 3:21
- Southern United States
black codes, 1:187–189
chain gangs, 1:282–283
Civil War, 1:334–339
college football, 1:480–481
Dixon, Thomas, writing of, 1:412–413
felony disenfranchisement, 1:469
Freedmen's Bureau, 1:497–500
lynching, 2:486–487
- NAACP legal actions, 2:338–340, 342–346
- National Afro-American League, 1:494
- National States Rights Party, 2:351–352
- New Deal, 2:365
- peonage cases, 2:405–406
- plantation system, 2:407–413
- Plessy v. Ferguson*, 2:416–418
- racial segregation, 2:451–458
- Review of the Debate in the Virginia Legislature of 1831 and 1832* (Dew), 1:402–403
- secession, 1:434, 2:407
- second-class citizenship, 1:319–320
- Second Klan, 3:22
- slave codes, 3:42–44
- tuberculosis, 1:409
- United States Constitution, 3:190–191
- Southwest Africa People's Organization, 1:107
- Southwest Council of La Raza, 2:227
- Southwestern United States, 2:232
- Sovereignty
Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:136
Puerto Rico, 2:428–429
See also Tribal sovereignty
- Soviet Union
anti-Semitism, 1:111–112
Cuba, relations with, 1:371
Holocaust, 2:109
- Soviet Union, former education, 1:426
ethnic cleansing, 1:438–439
- Soweto uprising, 3:88, 89
- Soyinka, Wole, 1:49
- Spain, 1:231–232
- Spanish-American War, 1:184, 258, 3:83
- Spanish colonialism antislavery efforts, 1:1
blackness in Latin America, 1:217–218, 220–221
Cuba, 1:368–369
diseases, 2:178
enslavement of indigenous peoples, 3:65
genocide, 2:49
Guatemala, 2:284
Indian slavery, 2:164
indigenous Mexicans, 2:166–167
La Malinche, 2:225
Latin America racial transformations, 2:242–244
Native American humanness, 2:25–26
- Puerto Rico, 2:426–427
racial demographics, 2:444–445
racial slave labor, 2:473
slave trade, 3:160–162
violence against Latin America's indigenous people, 3:200–201
white settler society, 3:224, 225
- Spanish-Speaking People's Congress, 2:249
- Spatial mismatch theory, 2:377
- Speakers of the House, 1:209
- Spear of the Nation, 2:281–282
- Special education, 1:295–296
- Special Force, Texas Rangers, 3:130
- Special Measures Law (Japan), 1:261
- Special Rapporteur of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights, 1:231
- Species evolution, 3:102–103
genetic distance, 2:27–28
Great Chain of Being, 2:68–72
polygenism, 2:372–373
- Speech, freedom of, 2:79
- Spelman, Elizabeth, 1:472
- Spencer, Herbert, 3:5, 3:5
- Spencer, Jon Michael, 1:206
- Spenser, Edmund, 2:499
- Speranzaeva, Ludmilla, 1:391
- Sperm bank, Nobel-laureate, 3:13
- Spigner-Littles, Dorscine, 1:189
- Spingarn, Arthur, 2:338, 494
- Spingarn, Joel, 2:338
- Spingarn Medal
Bethune, Mary McLeod, 1:167
Mays, Benjamin E., 2:290
White, Walter Francis, 3:220
Wilkins, Roy, 3:227
Woodson, Carter G., 1:130
- Split labor-market theory, 2:233
- Sports. See Athletics
- Sportsmen, 1:103
- Springfield riot, 2:336, 370, 432–433
- Sprinters, 3:145–146, 148
- Squire, Ephraim George, 2:373
- Srinivasan, Rattamalle, 1:387
- S/SPAWN (Steelhead/Salmon Protective Association and Wildlife Network), 1:103
- Stacking, 1:481
- Stalin, Joseph
anti-Semitism, 1:111–112
Muslims, 2:331
- Stamp Act, 1:3
- Stamps, James, 1:129
- Stance, Emanuel, 1:256

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Standardized tests, 3:95–98, 3:98–99
Standards for Education and Psychological Tests, 3:96
 Standards of review, 3:195
 Standing Rock Reservation, 1:358
 Stanford, Leland, 1:309
 Stanford-Binet test, 2:191
 Stanley, Henry Morton, 1:18
 Stanton, Elizabeth Cady, 1:73, 471
 Starace, Achille, 1:40
 State legislatures, 1:209
State of Montana v. Oakland, 1:71
State of South Carolina, Franklin v., 2:338
 State University of Rio de Janeiro, 1:249
 “Statement on Biological Aspects of Race” (American Association of Physical Anthropologists), 2:123
 Statements on race, UNESCO, 3:11, 181–184
 States’ rights, 1:264–265, 323–324
 Statistical discrimination, 1:272
 Statistics
   adolescent female sexuality, 1:10–11
   African American commissioned officers, 2:338
   African American population in the U.S., 2:444
   African colonization, 1:78
   Africans disembarked in slave trade, 1519–1867, 2:443*t*
   American Anti-Slavery Society membership, 1:8, 72
   American Colonization Society officers, 1:76, 76*t*
   Arab Americans, 1:120
   Asian Americans, 2:311
   Australian racially mixed persons, 1:135
   Barbados population, 2:446*t*
   baseball, 1:156
   black-white interracial marriage, 1:213, 215–216
   Boston, MA, black population in, 3:213
   Bracero Program participants, 1:244
   Brazilian population, 2:447*t*
   Brazilian racial self-identification, 1:246
   California population, 1:307
   Canadian immigration, 1:267
   Canadian population, 1:265
   censuses, 1:401
   Central American immigrants, 1:278–279
   Central American racial identity, 1:281
   Charleston, SC, black population in, 3:212
   Charleston population in 1820, 3:200
   Chinese American population, 1:300, 310
   Chinese labor in Cuba, 1:369
   Civil War, 1:338, 339
   Civil War casualties, 1:182–183
   Colored Farmers’ Alliance, 3:91
   cotton industry, 2:475
   crime and American Indians, 1:358*t* criminal justice system disparities, 1:360
   criminality, 1:362–364
   Cuban indigenous population, 1:368
   Cuban population, 2:445*t*
   day laborers, 1:396, 1:397
   deportation of Jews, 2:109
   deportations, 2:151
   diabetes, 1:404
   diseases, 2:178
   economic growth rates, 1:54–55 educational attainment of Arab Americans, 1:121 enslaved Africans, 3:65–66 farmworker population, 1:460 forced labor in Portuguese African colonies, 1:45–46 Fourth World population, 1:496
   free black population in 1790 and 1810, 1:75
   Freedmen’s Bureau educational programs, 1:500
   Garifuna population, 1:202–203
   Gaza population, 3:244
   Haitians in the United States, 2:77 hate crime, 2:80
   heart disease death rates among black and white women, 3:69*f* heart disease death rates among white women, 3:68*f*
   HIV and AIDS, 2:97, 98, 99–100
   Holocaust, #2:81, 2:103
   homeownership, 3:196–197
   Howard University students and faculty, 2:207–208
   illegal aliens, 2:145
   immigrant population, 1:170 income and educational attainment, 2:230
   indentured servants, 3:63
   Indian boarding schools, 2:158, 160–161
   Indian Health Service budget, 2:87
   Indian slavery, 2:165
   Industrial Workers of the World membership, 3:153
   infant mortality, 2:84*t*, 174–175 interracial marriages, 1:171
   IQ, 2:123, 124*f*
   Israel population, 3:242
   Japanese Americans in internment camps, 2:203
   Jehossee Island population, 2:412
   Jewish migration, 3:241
   Jewish population in Germany, 2:106
   Jews in Palestine, 3:240
   Kansas migration, 3:38
   labor force participation, 2:230
   labor market, 3:196
   Latina fertility rates, 2:248
   Latino educational attainment, 2:256–257 life expectancy, 2:266*f*, 267, 267*t*, 268*f*, 296
   Maji Maji uprising, 1:37
   median family income, 2:230–231
   Mexican immigrants, 1:234, 245
   Mexican indigenous population, 2:171
   Mexican land ownership, 2:168
   Middle Passage, 3:55
   migration to British America, 2:444
   multiracial persons, 2:328, 328*t*
   Muslims, 2:331
   NAACP membership, 2:337–338
   Nation of Islam membership, 2:278
   Native American deaths by warfare, 2:49
   Native American demographics, 3:104–105
   Native American infant mortality, 2:86
   Native American population, 2:159–160 occupations and wages, 2:375
   Operation Wetback, 2:388
   pay disparities, 2:402–404, 2:403 poverty rates, 2:231
   racial demographics, 2:443–447
   racial disparities, 1:291–296, 292
   racial hoaxes, 2:103
   Revolutionary era black population, 3:58
   Roma population, 2:505 school attendance, 2:449
   slave trade, 2:474, 3:45
   soldiers of color, 3:84–85
   South African political violence, 3:88
   Spain, refugees in, 1:231
   sports success, 1:241
   Sudan, genocide in, 2:63–64
   television characters, 3:127 track and field, 3:148*t*, 149*t*, 150*t*, 151*t*

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Statistics, continued
 undocumented workers, 3:177–178
 unemployment and underemployment, 3:174–175
 United Kingdom immigration, 3:189
 United Kingdom population, 3:185–186, 186*t*
 unskilled labor, 2:228
 Urban League job placements, 3:197
 U.S. Border Patrol apprehensions, 1:234–235 violence against women and girls, 3:203 wealth gap, 2:231
 welfare, 3:81
- Stature, 1:97–99, 345
 Stay-at-home mothers, 2:318
 Steady, Filomina Chioma, 1:64
 Stearnes, Turkey, 1:156
 Steele, Claude, 2:42, 3:97
 Steelhead/Salmon Protective Association and Wildlife Network (S/SPAWN), 1:103
 Steffens, Lincoln, 2:336
 Steggerda, Morris, 3:103
 Stephens, James, 1:5
 Stephenson, David C., 3:23, 24
 Stereotype threat, 3:98–99
 athletic performance, 2:42
 standardized tests, 3:97
- Stereotypes
 adolescent female sexuality, 1:10–11
 Arabs, 1:122
 Asian Americans, 1:12, 2:311–312
 aversive racism, 1:142, 143
The Birth of a Nation (film), 1:174, 176, 2:337
 black beauty, 2:21
 black popular culture, 1:207 black teenage, 3:230
 black women, 1:456
 Central Americans, 1:279
 Chinese Americans, 1:300
 dance, 1:389
 Dixon, Thomas, writing of, 1:412
 drunken Indian, 3:103–104 entertainment, 1:331
 gender, 2:20
 by health care professionals, 2:141
 HIV and AIDS, 2:99–100
 hoaxing, 2:101–102
 immigrant domestic workers, 2:147
 immigrants, 3:109
 indigenous peoples, 2:48
 internalized racialism, 2:186–187
 Irish immigrants, 2:466–467
 Jews, 3:123
 Latinas, 2:247
 Louis, Joe, portrayals of, 1:240
 machismo, 2:272–274
 Mexican Americans, 2:303
 Native Americans, 2:354–355
 occupational segregation, 2:376–377
 “playing Indian,” 2:414–415
 poor people, 3:79
 sexism, 3:28–30
 sexuality, 3:31–32
 social psychology of racism, 3:74–78
 television, 3:124–128
 welfare recipients, 3:73
- Stereotyping of rural whites, 2:507–511, 509
 Sterilization. See Forced sterilization
 Stern, Howard, 2:240
 Stevens, John Paul, 1:15, 16
 Stevens, Thaddeus, 1:209
 Steward, Theophilus, 1:85
 Stewart, Jimmy, 2:355
 Stewart, Maria, 1:6
 Stewart, Potter, 1:16
 Stiles, Ezra, 3:58
 Stillman, Charles, 3:129
 Stiwanism, 1:65
 Stockbridge, Massachusetts, 2:306–307
 Stocking, George W., Jr., 1:225
 Stoddard, T. Lothrop, 3:100–101
 Stokes, J. C. Phelps, 2:336
 “Stolen Children” report, 2:44
 “Stolen generation,” 1:134, 137
 Stone, Lucy, 1:7, 73
 Stoner, Jesse B., 2:25, 351–352
 Stonewall riots, 2:262
 Stop Treaty Abuse, 1:103
 Storey, Moorfield, 2:338
 Stormvalke, 1:66
 Story lines, 1:351
 Storytelling, 1:367
 Stovey, George, 1:153
 Stowe, Harriet Beecher, 1:8, 190, 334–335, 3:101–102
Strauder v. West Virginia, 3:191, 193
 Stravinsky, Igor, 1:391
 Street violence, 2:273
 Stress, 2:87–88, 138, 295–296, 3:70
 Strict scrutiny, 1:15–17, 3:195
- Strikes
 anti-apartheid movement, 1:100
 antiracist social movements, 1:107
 Dodge Revolutionary Union Movement, 2:260
 United Farm Workers, 2:251
- Stringer, C. Vivian, 2:240
 Strode, Woody, 1:480
 Structural adjustment programs (SAPs), 2:136
 Structural assimilation, 1:375
 Structural-constructivism, 2:269
 Structural violence, 2:82–83, 3:88
 Stuart, Charles, 2:102
 Stubbs, Aelred, 1:168
 Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC)
 Baker, Ella, 1:148
 black consciousness, 1:191–192
 Chicago Freedom movement, 2:219
 civil rights movement, 1:332–333 creation, 2:216
 Hamer, Fannie Lou, 2:78
 League of Revolutionary Black Workers, work with the, 2:262
- Students
 Chicana feminism, 1:287–288
 Chinese Americans, 1:302
 of color, 3:96–97
 discrimination in higher education, 1:421–422
- Studies, reports, and surveys
An American Dilemma (report), 1:251–252
 Cox Report, 1:299–300
 Kallikak family, 3:7
 Macpherson Report, 3:188
Mental Health: Culture, Race, and Ethnicity (U.S. Surgeon General), 2:298
 Merriam Report, 2:309
 Moynihan Report, 1:375
 National Agricultural Worker Survey (NAWS), 1:460
The Negro Family (Moynihan), 1:455
 “The Puerto Rican Study,” 2:428
 “Report on Colonization,” 1:77–78
To Secure These Rights (President’s Committee on Civil Rights), 1:251, 325
Voogdyskap en apartheid (Cronje), 1:118
- Studio Laboratory, 2:1–2
 Sturgis, Stokely, 1:71
Der Stürmer (newspaper), 2:107
 Subcomandante Marcos, 3:237, 3:237
 Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, 1:496

- Sub-economy. See Informal labor market
- The Subjection of Women* (Mill), 1:471
- Sub-Saharan Africa, 1:32
- Subsistence servitude, 1:62–63
- Subspecies, 2:370–372, 3:102–103
See also Demes
- Substance abuse, 3:103–107, 104
- Suburbs
occupational segregation, 2:377 school desegregation, 1:253
white flight, 1:330
- Sudan, 1:26
- Sudan, genocide in, 2:47, 2:59–64, 61, 63
- Sudan Liberation Army (SLA), 2:61, 62
- Sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS), 2:174, 175
- Suffrage
African Americans, 1:208
Black Reconstruction, 1:210
women, 1:471, 3:169
- Sugar Bowl, 1:480–481
- Sugar plantations
Cuba, 1:368–369
heritage tourism, 3:136–137
overview, 2:408–409
racial slave labor, 2:473, 475, 3:63–64
triangular slave trade, 3:160–161
- Sugarhill Gang, 2:483
- Sullivan, James, 2:378–380
- Sullivan, John L., 1:238
- Sullivan, “Yankee,” 1:237
- Sumerians, 1:97
- Summers, Freddie, 1:481
- Sumner, Charles, 1:209, 2:449
- Sumner, William Graham, 1:238, 3:5
- Sun Yat-sen, 2:332, 482
- Sunni Muslims, 2:330
- Super Bowl, 1:481, 482, 483
- Superexploitation, 1:449
- Superordinate identity, 3:78
- Supply-side theory, 2:397
- Suppression of Communism Act (South Africa), 1:100, 3:87
- Supreme Court affirmative action cases, 1:15–17
alien land laws, 1:70–71
chain gangs, 1:283
Marshall, Thurgood, 2:283
peonage cases, 2:405–406
See also Court cases
- Suriname, 1:201, 202, 218
- Survival of the fittest, 3:5, 7
- Susini, Jean-Jacques, 2:388
- Suttles, George “Mule,” 1:154
- Suzuki, Ichiro, 1:157, 1:157
- Swails, Stephen A., 1:181
- Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education*, 1:253
- Sweatshops, 1:197, 3:107–110, 109, 3:152
- Sweatt v. Painter*, 1:252, 331, 2:339, 345–346, 455, 3:194
- Sweeps, illegal immigration, 2:387–388
- Swift, Wesley, 1:313, 3:110–111
- Swing, Joseph, 2:387
- Swirl Inc., 2:327
- Symbolic and modern racism, 1:140, 348–349, 3:111–117, 112*f*, 114*f*
- Symbolic ethnicity, 3:117–119
- Symbolism, 1:477
- Syncretism, 2:167
- Syphilis, 1:408–409, 2:290–291
- Systema Naturae* (Linnaeus), 1:93, 453, 2:461
- T
- T-4 Euthanasia Program, 2:107
- Taft, William Howard, 2:369, 434, 3:214
- Tainos, 1:219, 2:243, 426
- Taki, 2:97
- Talented Tenth, 1:88, 2:368
- Taliaferro, George, 1:481
- Taliaferro, Lawrence, 1:415
- Tallmadge, Thomas De Witt, 1:238
- The Talmud Jew* (Duhring), 1:114
- Tambo, Oliver, 2:281
- Tammany Societies, 2:414
- Taney, Roger B., 1:94, 319, 320, 415–418
- TANF (Temporary Assistance for Needy Families), 3:80
- Tanton, John, 2:246
- Tap dance, 1:393
- Tape, Mamie, 1:309
- Tappan, Arthur, 1:72, 2:15
- Tappan, Lewis, 1:7, 72, 74, 173, 2:15
- Tariff of 1828, 1:264
- Tarr, Earl, 3:124
- Tatum, E. L., 2:37
- Taw, Len, 2:379
- Tax revolts, 3:233
- Taxes and tariffs
Calhoun, John C., 1:264
Chinese immigrants, 1:308
slave codes, 3:43
slavery, 3:57, 190
- Taxonomic subspecies, 3:103
- Taxonomy, biological, 3:1–2
- Taxonomy, numerical, 2:27
- Tay, Warren, 3:122
- Tay-Sachs disease, 1:345, 3:121–124, 123
- Tchen, John Kuo Wei, 2:390
- Teaching Tolerance, 3:93, 94
- Technology
digital divide, 1:424, 427 labor implications, 2:228
race riots, 2:435
sweatshops, 3:107
- Teenage mothers birth rates, 1:10–11, 11*t*, 12
family, 1:457
motherhood, deficiency in, 2:319
workfare and welfare, 3:230–231
- Teeth, 1:340, 345, 2:118
- Tejanos, 1:67–70, 3:129–130
- Telecommunications, 3:154
- Television, 3:124–129
Arabs, portrayals of, 1:122
black popular culture, 1:207
dance, 1:393
rural whites, portrayals of, 2:510
- Temporary Admissions Program, 1:244
- Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF), 2:320; 3:80
- Ten Tribes, 1:313
- Ten Years’ War, 1:369
- Tenayuca, Emma, 2:250
- Tennessee Real Estate and Homestead Association, 3:37
- Tenochtitlan, 1:144
- Tenth Cavalry, 1:255–259
- Terman, Lewis, 2:191, 3:6
- Termination and relocation, 2:309–310, 356, 502
- Terminology
African feminism, 1:64–65
Afro-Cuban, 1:372
anti-Semitism, 1:108
black, 1:196
blackness in Latin America, 1:219
Brazilian racial terms, 1:248
Chicano vs. Mexican American, 1:433, 2:251 citizen, 1:321 discrimination by descent, 1:386
ethnocentrism, 1:440–441
ethnocide, 2:48
Fourth World, 1:495
freedman, 1:201
genocide, 1:439, 2:43–44, 48
Gypsy vs. Roma, 2:506–507

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Terminology, continued
Harijan, 1:385, 387 hillbilly, 2:509
illegal aliens, 2:143
Indians, 1:461
Mexican as census classification, 2:257
Mexicano, 1:406
Middle Eastern, 1:123
nation, 1:465
Nuyorican, 2:428
racial slurs, 2:48–49
slaves, 3:62
socially derived group labels, 1:405–406 tribe, 1:465
womanism, 3:227–229
Terra nullius, 1:136, 2:500, 501
Terrace v. Thompson, 1:70
Terre Blanche, Eugene, 1:66
Terrell, Mary Church, 3:228
Terrorism, 1:324–325, 2:207
    See also September 11th terrorist attacks
Test cases, 2:214, 343
Test tube baby, 2:498
Testimonies, racial, 1:351–352
Testing, 2:188–199, 190
    Galton, Francis, 2:3–4
    high school exit exams, 1:295
    stereotype threat, 2:42
Testosterone, 3:147
Tests, standardized, 3:95–98, 3:98–99
Teters, Charlene, 1:83
Texas
    Alamo, 1:67–70
    Allwright, Smith v., 2:344
    annexation, 1:174
    Bracero Program, exclusion from the, 1:245
    farmworkers, 1:459
    Operation Wetback, 2:387–388
Texas Democratic Party, 2:338, 344
Texas Rangers, 3:129–131
Texas Western basketball team, 1:161
Textbooks, 2:183
Textile industry, 2:475–477, 3:57
Thailand
    industrial fire, 3:109
    Muslims, 2:332
    sex trade, 2:137
Thatcher, Margaret, 1:382, 3:189
That's the Joint!: The Hip-Hop Studies Reader (Forman and Neal), 1:206 Theatrical dance, 1:390–391
Their Eyes Were Watching God (Hurston), 2:478
Theodore, Grand Wizard, 2:96
Theology, 3:229
3rd South Carolina regiment, 1:182
Third-wave feminists, 1:228
Third World countries
    cultural racism, 1:380–381
    human trafficking, 2:134–138
    poverty, 2:423–424
    See also Developing countries
Thirteenth Amendment, 3:192
    Civil Rights Act of 1866, 3:191
    Lincoln, Abraham, 1:435
    Plessy v. Ferguson, 2:417
This Bridge Called My Back (Moraga and Anzaldúa), 1:229, 2:253
Thomas, Clarence, 1:15, 2:458, 487
Thomas, Clint, 1:154
Thomas, George H., 1:183
Thomas, Jefferson, 1:164, 165
Thomas, Lillian, 3:33
Thompson, Charles E., 2:208
Thorn v. Gingles, 3:207–208
Thorndike, Edward Lee, 2:3
Thornton, William, 1:75
Thorpe, Earl E., 1:131
Thorpe, Robert, 2:431
Threat and intergroup dynamics, 3:77
Three-fifths compromise, 1:399
Thrifty phenotype hypothesis, 1:405
Thrower, Willie, 1:481
Thunderbolt (newsletter), 2:351, 352
Thurman, Howard and Sue Bailey, 2:7
Thurman, Wallace, 2:208
Thurmond, Strom, 2:455, 458
Tidewater region, 2:409–410
TIE (Transnationals Information Exchange), 3:153–154
Tilden, Bill, 2:18
Tilden, Samuel J., 1:210
Till, Emmett, 1:191, 213, 319–320
Tillich, Paul, 2:213
Tillman, Benjamin “Pitchfork,” 2:336, 3:91, 131–132
Time (magazine), 2:246
Title VII, Civil Rights Act of 1964, 1:15, 326–327
Tlas, Mustafa, 1:115
Tlatelolco: La Plaza de las Tres Culturas, 1:289
To Secure These Rights (President's Committee on Civil Rights), 1:251, 325
Tobacco plantations, 2:409–410
Tobacco Wars, 2:509–510
Tobias, Phillip, 3:13
Tokenism, 1:422–423, 3:132–134
Tomlin, Mike, 1:482
Tonton Macoutes, 2:77
Tools, 2:119
Topinard, Paul, 1:97
Toppin, Edgar, 1:131
Torrienti, Cristóbal, 1:157
Tort model of reparations, 2:492
Toure, Amadou Toumani, 2:401
Tourgée, Albion, 2:416
Tourism
    Cuba, 1:372
    Native American sacred sites, 2:310
    sex work, 3:25–26
Tourism and national heritage, 3:134–144
Toussaint L'Ouverture, 1:4, 2:76
Townsend, Grovey v., 2:338
Toxic waste sites, 2:65
Toynbee, Arnold, 2:508
Track and field, 2:379, 3:144–152, 145
Tracking, educational, 3:97
Trading companies, 1:23–24, 3:51
Trafficking of persons. See Human trafficking “Trail of Broken Treaties” (protest), 1:82
Trail of Tears, 1:356, 2:50, 307
Traits, genetic, 2:123, 370–371
The Trans-atlantic Slave Trade (Du Bois Institute), 2:474
Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade Database, 3:45
Transculturation, 2:241–245
Transferable rights, 3:47–50
Transgendered persons, 1:12–13, 2:93
Transnational labor organizing, 3:152–154
Transnationalism, 3:155–157
    human trafficking, 2:136
    mothers, 2:316–317
    sexuality, 3:32–33
Transnationals Information Exchange (TIE), 3:153–154 Transportation
    desegregation, 2:456
    Montgomery bus boycott, 2:214–215
    Morgan v. Virginia, 2:216
    racial segregation, 2:451–452, 470
Trans-Saharan slave trade, 1:58–60
Traveler (ship), 1:374
Travis, William Barret, 1:68
Treaties and international agreements
    Burlingame Treaty, 1:309, 310

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Canadian aboriginal peoples, 1:266–267
- Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 2:43–44
- Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, 1:496, 2:173
- International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1:377, 470
- International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, 1:230, 231
- International Covenant of Civil and Political Rights, 1:470
- Migratory Labor Agreement, 1:244
- Native Americans, 1:464–465, 467–468
- Potsdam Protocol, 1:437
- Reciprocity Treaty, 1:370
- San Andreas Accords, 2:170, 3:235, 238–239
- sovereign domination, 1:356
- Treaty of 1891, 1:44
- Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 2:251, 307, 3:129, 158–160
- Treaty of Medicine Lodge, 2:162
- Treaty of Paris, 2:427
- Versailles Treaty, 1:38
- Treaties Statute, 1:356
- Treatment disparities
- cardiac catheterization, 2:295
  - health care professionals, 2:293–294
  - hypertension and coronary heart disease, 2:140
  - mental health care, 2:298–299
  - morbidity and mortality, 3:69
- Treaty of 1891, 1:44
- Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 2:251, 307, 3:129, 3:158–160
- Treaty of Medicine Lodge, 2:162
- Treaty of New Echota, 2:307
- Treaty of Paris, 2:427
- Treaty of Versailles, 2:490
- Treaty rights, Native American, 1:104
- Tredegar National Civil War Center, 3:138
- Tree models of evolution, 2:392, 392*f*, 468
- Trent, William J., 2:366
- Triangle Shirtwaist Factory fire, 3:110
- Triangular slave trade, 3:56–57, 3:160–163, 161
- Tribal casinos, 1:104
- Tribal recognition, 1:224, 461–468, 2:501
- Tribal sovereignty
- citizenship laws, 1:357–358
  - court cases, 1:356
  - federal nonrecognition of, 2:310
  - Native American Rights Fund, 2:356–358
  - Native American self-determination, 2:502–503
  - shift to domestic dependent status, 2:501
- Tribes
- ethnocentrism, 1:440–441
  - federal recognition, 1:465, 467
  - Rwanda, 2:55
- Tribute system, Chinese, 1:305
- Trickey, Miinijean Brown, 1:164, 165
- Triple oppression, 2:477
- Triracial isolates, 2:325, 3:163–166
- Trotter, James M., 1:204
- Trotter, William Monroe, 3:166–168
- Equal Rights League, 2:370
  - National Afro-American League, 1:494
  - Niagara Movement, 2:335, 368
  - Washington, Booker T., and, 3:215
- Trudeau, Pierre, 2:321
- Trujillo, Carla, 2:252
- Trujillo, Rafael, 2:77
- Truman, Harry S.
- Mays, Benjamin E., appointment of, 2:290
  - McCarran-Walter Act, 2:386
  - military desegregation, 1:184, 259, 2:455, 3:84
  - President's Committee on Civil Rights, 1:325
  - Wilkins, Roy, assessment by, 3:227
- Trumbull, Lyman, 1:434
- Truth, Sojourner, 1:7, 2:20, 3:168–169
- Truth and Reconciliation Commission, 2:492
- Tshombe, Moise, 1:21
- Tuberculosis, 1:409–410, 2:82–83, 178–179
- Tubman, Harriet, 1:250, 337, 3:228
- Tucker, Chris, 1:475
- Tulalip Indian Mission School, 2:309
- Tulsa race riot, 2:437, 2:437, 2:491
- Tunisia, 1:28
- Tunney, Gene, 1:239–240
- Turkey, 2:46
- Turks, 1:201
- Turner, Henry McNeal, 1:209, 211, 3:169–171
- Turner, Nat, 1:5, 73, 334, 3:59, 171–172
- The Turner Diaries* (Pierce), 2:348–350
- Tuskegee Airmen, 3:83
- Tuskegee Institute, 3:214
- Tuskegee syphilis experiment, 1:409, 2:290–291, 294, 294–295, 3:10
- Tutsi, 1:20–22, 2:54–59
- Tutu, Desmond, 2:401
- Twa, 1:20
- Twain, Mark, 3:34
- Twenty-five Point Program, 2:364
- Twenty-fourth Regiment, 1:259
- Twins studies
- Galton, Francis, 2:3
  - intelligence, 2:197
  - IQ, 2:89, 206
  - muscle-fiber distribution, 3:146
  - scientific racism, 3:12
- Two-spirit*, 2:263
- Tyler, Elizabeth, 3:21, 22
- Tyler, John, 1:264
- Taylor, Edward Burnett, 1:440
- Type 2 diabetes, 1:404–406
- Types of Mankind* (Gliddon), 1:94–95
- Tyson, Cicely, 1:271
- Tyson, Mike, 1:236
- Tzotzil Indians, 2:169, 2:171

U

- UAW (United Auto Workers), 2:259–260, 262
- UCAPAWA (United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing, and Allied Workers of America), 2:250
- UCM (University Christian Movement), 1:168
- UCR (Uniform Crime Reporting) Program, 2:80
- UFW. See United Farm Workers
- Uganda, 1:27, 2:57
- Ugly Betty* (television show), 3:128, 3:128
- Ulrichs, Karl Heinrich, 2:18
- Ultra violet radiation, 3:38–40
- Umeh, Marie, 1:64
- Umkhonto We Sizwe*, 2:281–282, 3:88
- Uncle Tom's Cabin* (Stowe), 1:8, 190, 334–335, 412, 3:101–102
- Undercounting, 1:401
- Underdevelopment, 1:52
- Underemployment, 3:173–177
- Underground economy. See Informal labor market

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- Underground Railroad, 3:139
antiracist social movements, 1:106
Brown, John, 1:250
heritage tourism, 3:138, 139
- Underground rap music, 2:483–484
- Underhill, John, 2:26
- Undivided Rights: Women of Color Organized for Reproductive Justice* (Silliman et al.), 1:487–488
- Undocumented migrants. See Illegal aliens
- Undocumented workers, 3:177–180, 179
See also Illegal aliens
- Unemployment. See Underemployment
- UNESCO
anti-apartheid movement, 1:101
educational disparities, 1:425
World Heritage sites, 3:141–143
- UNESCO statements on race, 3:11, 3:181–184
- UNIA. See Universal Negro Improvement Association (UNIA)
- Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca*, 2:287, 288
- UNIFEM (United Nations Development Fund for Women), 3:30
- Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) Program, 2:80
- Uninsured persons, 2:83
- Union Army. See Civil War, American; Recruitment
- UNITA (National Union for the Total Independence of Angola), 1:46, 47
- “Unitary status” and school desegregation, 1:253–254
- United Auto Workers (UAW), 2:259–260, 262
- United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing, and Allied Workers of America (UCAPAWA), 2:250
- United Church of Christ Commission for Racial Justice, 2:65
- United Colored Links, 3:38
- United Democratic Front, 1:101
- United Farm Workers, 3:184–185, 185
Chávez, César Estrada, 1:285–286
Chicano movement, end of the, 2:252
Huerta, Dolores, 2:116
Latino social movements, 2:251
women, 2:253
- United Kingdom
abolition movement, 1:5
boxing, 1:237
Canadian colonization, 1:265
cotton industry, 2:475
cultural racism, 1:382
Dalits, 1:387
eugenics, 1:445
exploitation, 1:449
financial institutions with links to slavery, 2:477
India, colonialism in, 2:6–9
Native Americans, 1:464
nativism, 2:358–359
Opium War, 2:481
Palestine, 3:240–241
poverty, 2:421
Remond, Charles Lenox, 2:489
Wells-Barnett, Ida B., 3:218
World Union of National Socialists Grand Council Meeting, 2:505
See also British colonialism
- United Kingdom, black feminism in the, 1:195–198
- United Kingdom racial formations, 3:185–189, 3:186*t*
- United Klans of America, 2:183–184
- United Nations
anti-apartheid movement, 1:101
Commission on Human Rights, 1:231
Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 2:43–44 direct appeals to, 1:107
Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, 2:173
Fourth World, 1:496
human rights of migrants, 1:230
International Commission of Inquiry on Darfur, 2:62
International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1:377
Millennium Declaration, 3:177
NAACP designation as nongovernmental organization, 2:341
Palestine, division of, 3:241
Palestinian refugees, 3:242
population control, 1:485
Statement on Race, 3:11
- United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), 3:30
- United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization. See UNESCO
- United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala, 2:288
- United Party, 1:117
- United Property Owners of Washington, 1:103
- United Service Organization, 3:11–12
- United States
African American population, 1790–2000, 2:444(t:3)
black consciousness, 1:190–192
border crossings and human rights, 1:231
braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:243–245
census, 1:399–402
cross-border politics, 1:234–235
Cuba, relations with, 1:369–370
day laborers, 1:396–397
Doctrine of Discovery, 2:306–310
educational disparities, 1:425–427
environmental justice movement, 2:65–67
eugenics, 1:445–446, 2:494, 3:10
exploitation, 1:450
forced sterilization, 1:484–485, 487–488
genocide and ethnocide, 2:49–52
Guatemala, intervention in, 2:284–285
Haitian occupation, 2:77
HIV and AIDS, 2:97, 98–99
infant mortality, 2:174–175
life expectancy, 2:265–269
multiculturalism, 2:322
multiracial identities, 2:323–329
neo-Nazis, 2:362–364
poverty, 2:421–423
Puerto Rico, 2:427–429
racial profiling of Muslims, 2:333
racial purity, 2:466–472
racialized dance, 1:389–390
reparations, 2:491–492
sickle cell anemia, 3:36
slavery, legacy of, 2:478–479
Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 3:158–160
triracial isolates, 3:163–166
tuberculosis, 2:179
undocumented workers, 3:180
white settler society, 3:224, 225
workfare and welfare, 3:230–233
See also U.S.
- United States, black feminism in the, 1:198–200
Davis, Angela, 1:395
Lorde, Audre, 2:270
womanism, 3:227–229
- United States, immigration to, 1:272–274, 2:153–156, 155
- United States, racial desegregation in the, 2:447–459
- United States colonialism, 2:293

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- United States Colored Troops, 1:180, 2:489–490, 3:82
- United States Constitution, 3:189–196, 192
census, 1:399–400
Native American relations, management of, 2:501
- United States v. Caroline Products Co.*, 3:193
- United States v. Cruikshank*, 1:325
- United States v. Fordice*, 2:343
- United States v. Reynolds*, 2:405
- United Transatlantic Society, 3:38
- Unity, 3:213
- Unity Movement, 1:168
- Universal Negro Improvement Association (UNIA)
American Negro Academy, 1:88
Back-to-Africa movement, 3:171
black consciousness, 1:190
Garvey, Marcus, 2:15–17
- Universal social policies, 3:233
- University Christian Movement (UCM), 1:168
- University of California, Santa Barbara, 1:432–433
- University of Chicago, 1:128
- University of Maryland Law School, 2:346
- University of Maryland v. Murray*, 2:283
- University of Natal, 1:168
- University of Texas Law School, 2:339, 345–346
- Unlawful Organizations Act (South Africa), 3:87
- Unskilled labor, 2:228, 3:178–179
- Untouchability (Offenses) Act (India), 1:386
- Untouchables, 1:263, 385–389, 2:8–9
- Upper Midwest United States, 1:103–104
- Urban issues. See Cities
- Urban League, 3:196–198
American Negro Academy, 1:87
Bethune, Mary McLeod, 1:167
Chisholm, Shirley, 1:311
Double V campaign, 1:329
- Uri, Connie, 1:487
- U.S. Agency for International Development, 2:291–292
- U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 2:211–212
- U.S. Border Patrol. See Border Patrol
- U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, 1:325
- U.S. Communist Party, 3:17–20
- U.S. General Accounting Office, 1:487
- U.S. News & World Report* (magazine), 2:246, 247
- U.S. Public Health Service, 1:409, 2:290–291, 295
- Us-them distinction, 1:478–479, 3:76–77
- Usher, Bishop James, 2:24–25
- V
- V. I. Kings, 2:484
- Vaikom Satyagraha movement, 1:387
- Valdez, Luis, 2:251
- Valentine, H. E., 2:338
- Valladolid debate, 1:1, 2:25–26, 3:201
- Vallières, Pierre, 1:265
- Van Lier, H. R., 1:117
- Vancier, Victor, 2:207
- Vancouver Indochinese Women's conference, 1:125
- Vandaman, James K., 3:92
- Vandervelde, Emile, 3:33–3434
- Vanhanen, Tatu, 2:464
- Vanishing Red Man theory, 2:353
- Vardaman, James K., 2:336
- Varnas*, 1:385, 387
- Varnun, General, 3:58
- Vasconcellos, Jose, 2:226–227
- Vatican, 2:491
- Vaudeville, 1:473
- Vedas, 1:385
- Velazquez, Nydia M., 1:271
- Venezuela, 1:429–430, 431–432
- Vera Cruz, Phillip, 2:251
- Vereniging van Oranjewerkers, 1:66
- Verney, Kevern, 1:206
- Versailles Treaty, 1:38
- Verwoerd, Hendrik, 1:66, 118, 119
- Vesey, Denmark, 1:5, 72, 334, 3:59, 199–200, 212–213
- Vesey, Robert, 3:200
- Vesey, Sandy, 3:200
- Vespucci, Amerigo, 1:461
- Veterans
black Civil War soldiers, 1:184, 255
Black Reconstruction, 1:208
French African colonial soldiers, 1:33
Mexican American, 2:303
race riots, 2:440–441
World War II, 1:329–330, 2:455
- VH-1, 1:207
- Via Campesina, 3:153
- Vicarious liability, 3:94
- Vick, Michael, 1:481
- Victims' compensation, 2:492
- Victims of hate crimes, 2:81
- “Victory 82” plan, 2:286–287
- Vieques, Puerto Rico, 2:429
- Vietnam War
Chicano Movement, 2:252
film, 1:474–475
King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:219
soldiers of color, 3:84–85
- Vigilantism, 1:175, 177
- Villa, Pancho, 1:352, 2:168
- Villaraigosa, Antonio, 1:290
- Villard, Oswald Garrison, 2:336, 370
- Vincent, Philip, 2:178
- Vindication of the Rights of Women* (Wollstonecraft), 1:471
- Violence
abolition movement, 1:8
African Americans, 1:363–364
African diaspora, 1:50–51
American Indians, 1:357–359, 358t
anti-apartheid movement, 1:100–101
anti-Indian movement, 1:103
Black Reconstruction, 1:210
capitalism, 1:269
Chicago movement, 2:219
children and teen victims, 1:293
Chinese Americans, 1:310
Christian Identity, 1:314
civil rights movement, 1:333
Dalits, 1:388–389
Jewish Defense League, 2:206–207
Ku Klux Klan, 2:223–224
machismo, 2:273
Second Klan, 3:21
sexism, 3:30
Sixteenth Street Baptist Church bombings, 2:217–218
skinheads, 1:435
Tobacco Wars, 2:509–510
Wells-Barnett, Ida B., 3:217–218
Zoot Suit Riots, 3:244–246
See also Race riots
- Violence against indigenous people of Latin America, 3:200–203
- Violence against women and girls, 3:203–205
immigrants, 2:149
Sudan, genocide in, 2:62
See also Sexual assault and exploitation
- Virchow, Rudolph, 1:225
- Virey, Julien-Joseph, 2:25, 71, 2:72
- “Virgin soil” epidemics, 2:177–179
- Virginia
anti-miscegenation laws, 1:212
blood quantum, 1:222, 223
citizenship, 1:316
involuntary sterilization, 1:445

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

Virginia, continued

- Nat Turner rebellion, 1:402
  - Native Americans, 1:355
  - refusal to integrate schools, 2:456
  - slave codes, 3:42–44
  - slavery, 1:61, 3:56, 64
- Visigoths, 1:263
- Visual acuity, 1:340
- Vitamin D, 3:40
- Viva Kennedy clubs, 2:251
- Vivisection, 2:291
- Vizcarrondo, Fortunato, 1:430
- Vocationalism, 2:369, 3:167
- Vodou, 1:276, 2:76, 78
- Vogt, Carl, 1:284
- Voice of Missions* (newspaper), 3:170
- The Voice of the Negro* (periodical), 2:368–369
- Voices from the Great Black Baseball Leagues* (Holloway), 1:156
- Voigt Decision, 1:103
- Volleyball, 1:163
- Voltaire, 1:2
- Voluntary departures, 2:144
- Voluntary ethnicity, 3:118
- Von Trotha, Lothar, 2:53–54
- Von Walter, Hubert, 3:40
- Vonderlehr, Raymond, 2:290–291
- Voogdyskap en apartheid* (Cronje), 1:118
- Vorster, John, 1:66
- Vos, M. C., 1:117
- Vote-dilution, 3:207, 208
- Voting issues, 2:344
- black Civil War veterans, 1:184
  - Chicano movement, 1:290
  - Civil Rights Act of 1960, 1:325
  - convicts, 1:362
  - disfranchisement of blacks, 3:216
  - felony disenfranchisement, 1:468–470
  - Fifteenth Amendment, 1:318, 324
  - Freedom Summer, 2:218
  - grandfather-clause, 3:90
  - Haiti, 2:76
  - Hamer, Fannie Lou, 2:78
  - NAACP, 2:338
  - registration, 1:107, 165
  - Smith v. Allwright*, 2:344
  - United States Constitution, 3:191
  - Voting Rights Act of 1965, 1:327
  - women, 3:29–30
- Voting Rights Act of 1965, 3:205–208
- Bloody Sunday, 1:333
  - Chinese Americans, 1:300
  - civil rights acts, 1:327
  - King, Martin Luther, Jr., 2:218

- NAACP, 2:340, 341
- Southern Poverty Law Center, 3:93
- Wilkins, Roy, 3:226

W

- Wachovia Bank, 2:477
- Wacquand, Loïc, 2:422
- Waddell, Moses, 1:264
- Wade, Aboulaye, 2:401
- Wages and salaries
- African American soldiers, 3:82
  - African Americans, 1:316
  - Australian Aborigine peoples, 1:133–134
  - black Civil War soldiers, 1:182
  - Bracero Program, 1:244
  - football, 1:483
  - immigrant domestic workers, 2:146–147
  - labor market, 2:230–231
  - New Deal, 2:365
  - occupational segregation, 2:375
  - pay equity, 2:402–405
  - peonage cases, 2:405–406
  - sweatshops, 3:108
  - women, 3:175
- Wagner, Richard, 1:284–285, 2:274, 3:209–212
- Wagnerian music, 3:209–212
- Walankar, Gopalnak Baba, 1:387
- Walcott, Derek, 1:49
- Walker, Alice, 1:64, 2:263, 3:227–229
- Walker, David, 3:212–214
- abolition movement, 1:6
  - American Anti-Slavery Society, 1:73
  - black consciousness, 1:190
  - Galloway, Abraham, influence on, 1:208
  - Garvey, Marcus, and, 2:16
  - Pan-Africanism, 2:399
- Walker, George, 1:390
- Walker, Margaret, 2:478
- Walker, Moses Fleetwood, 1:153
- Walker, Quock, 1:4
- Walker, Shaun, 2:350
- Walker, William, 1:182
- Walker, Wyatt T., 1:148, 2:217
- Walker Law (New York), 3:24
- Wall, O.S.B., 1:182
- Wallace, George, 1:252, 2:349, 351, 457, 3:20
- Wallace, Michele, 1:206
- Wallace, Mike, 2:278
- Wallace-Johnson, Isaac Theophilus Akunna, 2:400
- Wallerstein, Immanuel, 2:422
- Walley, Augustus, 1:258
- Walling, William, 2:336, 340
- Wal-Mart, 3:178
- Walters, Alexander, 1:494, 2:336
- Wannsee Conference, 2:109
- War captives, 2:163–165
- War Department, 1:180–182
- War movies, 1:474–475
- War of 1812, 1:264
- War of Banquan, 2:480
- War on Drugs, 1:365
- War on Poverty, 1:376, 3:81
- Ward, Samuel Ringgold, 1:8, 3:66
- Ware, Charles, 1:204
- Warfare
- genocide, 2:49–50
  - slavery, 3:62
- Wariner, Jeremy, 2:42
- Warley, Buchanan v.*, 2:338
- Warner, Daniel B., 1:80
- Warner, James, 2:351, 3:111
- Warren, Earl
- Anderson Bill, 2:451
  - Brown v. Board of Education*, 1:252, 2:455–456
  - Zoot Suit riots, 3:246
- Warsaw Ghetto, 2:110
- Washburn, Sherwood, 3:10–11
- Washington (state), 1:103
- Washington, Booker T., 3:214–216
- accommodationism, 2:335, 336
  - American Negro Academy, 1:85
  - Atlanta compromise speech, 3:92, 167
  - boxing, 1:239
  - Du Bois, W. E. B., criticism by, 1:418, 2:431
  - film, 1:178
  - Garvey, Marcus, influence on, 2:16
  - NAACP, criticism of the, 2:337
  - National Afro-American League, 1:494
  - Niagara Movement, 2:368
  - Sheppard, William, and, 3:33, 34
  - vocationalism, 2:369
- Washington, Bushrod, 1:75
- Washington, Denzel, 2:280
- Washington, Desiree, 1:236
- Washington, George
- African colonization, 1:75
  - American Indians, 2:306
  - baseball, 1:153
  - black troops, 3:58
  - heritage tourism, 3:138, 140
  - military segregation, 2:448
  - soldiers of color, 3:82

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Washington, Kenny, 1:480
 Washington, William, 1:480, 3:19
 Washington Redskins, 1:480, 3:14
Washington v. Davis, 3:194
 Waste sites, 2:65
 Water disputes, 1:104
 Waters, Ethel, 1:332
 Watkins, William, 1:6, 77, 256, 2:15, 3:213
 Watson, Diane, 1:351
 Watson, James D., 2:34, 2:37, 2:37–38
 Watson, John, 2:261, 262
 Watson, Thomas, 2:432, 3:91–92, 3:216–217
 Watts Poets, 2:483
 Wayne, John, 2:355
 WCL (World Confederation of Labour), 3:153
We Are All Multiculturalists Now (Glazer), 2:321 Wealth
   dependents, accumulation of, 1:56, 3:49–50 disparities, 2:231–232, 3:74–75
   labor issues, 2:438
 Weathering hypothesis, 2:175
 Weaver, James Baird, 3:92
 Weaver, Robert C., 2:366, 367
Webb v. O'Brien, 1:70
 Weber, Max, 1:268
 Webster, Daniel, 1:75
 Wechsler Intelligence Scale for Children, 3rd ed. (WISC-III), 2:196
 Weems, Charlie, 3:16, 19, 20
 Weems, Renita, 3:229
 Weidenreich, Franz, 2:395–396, 3:9
 Weiner, Joseph S., 3:11
 Weld, Theodore Dwight, 1:7, 72, 173
 Welfare, 3:230–234, 232
   forced sterilization, 1:485
   Freedmen's Bureau, 1:499
   motherhood, deficiency in, 2:319–320
   reform, 2:246, 319–320, 3:81
   reproductive rights, 2:496
   stereotypes, 3:73
 Welfare Reform Act, 1:10
 Wells, Robert W., 1:416
 Wells, Willie, 1:156
 Wells-Barnett, Ida B., 3:217–219
   anti-lynching activism, 1:106, 2:486–487
   black feminism, 1:199
   Fortune, Timothy Thomas, and, 1:494
   NAACP, 2:336
   race riots, 2:439
   Washington, Booker T., criticism of, 3:215
 Wells Brown, William, 1:8, 72, 73, 74
 Welsh, Herbert, 2:158, 160, 162
 Wen Ho Lee, 1:299, 300, 303–304
 Wenkommando, 1:66
 Wesley, Charles, 1:129, 131–132
 Wesley, John, 1:2
 West Africa, 1:58–63, 3:36, 64
 West African runners, 3:145–146
 West Bank, 3:243, 244
 West Indians, 1:272
 Western culture
   China, influence on, 2:481–482
   Muslims in, 2:332–333
   Orientalism, 2:389–391
 Western feminism, 1:64, 197
   See also White feminism
 Western films, 2:354–355; 3: 126
 Western United States
   alien land laws, 1:70–71
   segregation, 2:451
 Westoes, 2:164
 Westport, Massachusetts, 1:373
 Westward expansion, 3:190–191
 Wheatley, Phillis, 1:3
 Wheeler-Howard Act. See Indian Reorganization Act
Where Do We Go from Here? (King), 2:219
 White, Byron, 1:15, 16
 White, John, 1:463
 White, Walter Francis, 3:219–220
   civil rights movement, 1:329
   NAACP, 2:340, 342
   race riots, 2:432
   Wilkins, Roy, and, 3:18
 White Americans
   adolescent female sexuality, 1:10–11
   Arab Americans as, 1:120–121 as legitimate Americans, 2:247
   life expectancy, 2:265–266
   sickle-cell anemia, 1:410–411
   symbolic ethnicity, 3:117–119
 White Camelia Knights, 2:222, 223
 White Citizens' Council, 3:220–221, 3:226
 White Earth Equal Rights Committee, 1:104
 White feminism
   body politics, 1:229
   Chicana feminism and, 1:288
   erasure of race, 1:198 racism within, 3:27
   womanism as opposed to, 3:228–229
   See also Western feminism
 White flight, 1:253, 330
 White lesbians, 2:264–265
 White primaries, 2:282, 338, 344, 3:206
 White racial attitudes
   aversive racism, 1:139–143
   color-blind racism, 1:348–352
   white racial outlook theories, 3:221–223
 White Racial Consciousness (WRC) model, 3:222–223
 White racial identity, 3:221–223
   Asian Americans in film, 1:473–474
   Latinos, 2:258
 White racial outlook theories, 3:221–223
 White resistance, 1:252–253
 White servitude, 3:63–64
 White settler society, 3:223–225
   British colonialism, 1:24–26
   post colonial Africa, 1:47
   slave trade, 3:46
 White supremacy
   Afrikaners, 1:118
   American Negro Academy's occasional papers, 1:86
   The Birth of a Nation (film), 1:176
   Calhoun, John C., 1:265
   Chamberlain, Houston Stewart, 1:284–285
   Christian Identity, 1:312–314
   citizenship, 1:315–320
   Duke, David, 1:419–420
   Garvey, Marcus, 2:16–17
   immigration to the United States, 2:153–156
   institutional racism, 2:181–183
   Irish Americans, 2:200–201
   Italian colonialism in Africa, 1:42
   Ku Klux Klan, 2:221–224
   Mexico, 2:301
   National Alliance, 2:348–350
   National States Rights Party, 2:351–352
   Neo-Nazis, 2:361–364
   Nott, Josiah, 2:372–373
   plantation system, 2:407–408
   Rockwell, George Lincoln, 2:503–505 scientific reinforcement, 2:467
   southern politics, 3:92
   Stoddard, T. Lothrop, 3:101
   Tillman, Benjamin "Pitchfork," 3:131–132
   Watson, Thomas E., 3:216–217

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

Index

- White supremacy, continued
women immigrants, 2:149–150
- “White trash,” 2:509–510
- White women
feminism, 1:470–471
heart disease death rates, 3:68*f*, 69*f*
motherhood, 2:315
myth of purity, 3:218
race riots, 2:433–434, 439
rape, 2:486, 3:16–20
sexism, 3:29–30
sex work, 3:24–25
- Whiteness
Arab Americans, 1:123
naturalization, 1:319
- Whiteness and Irish Americans,
2:199–202
- Whites, stereotyping of rural,
2:507–511, 509
- Whitfield, George, 1:2
- Whitney, Eli, 2:477, 3:59
- Whorf, Benjamin Lee, 1:227
- Wichitas, 2:164
- Wichterich, Christa, 3:28
- Wicomb, Zoë, 1:64
- Wieland, Christoph Martin, 2:274
- Wiesel, Elie, 2:111
- Wiesman, Charles, 1:313
- Wilberforce, William, 1:5
- Wilberforce University, 1:132
- Wild West shows, 2:354
- Wilde, Oscar, 1:238
- Wilder, Douglas, 2:458
- Wilhelm Institute for Anthropology, Human Genetics, and Eugenics,
2:488
- Wilkins, Maurice, 2:37
- Wilkins, Roy, 2:216, 340, 512,
3:225–227
- Wilkinson, J. L., 1:156
- Willard, Jess, 1:239
- Williams, Anthony, 1:80
- Williams, Doug, 1:481, 3:14
- Williams, Egbert Austin, 1:390
- Williams, Eric, 1:47–48, 268, 277,
449, 2:474–475, 3:65
- Williams, Eugene, 3:16, 19
- Williams, Henry Sylvester, 1:478,
2:399
- Williams, Roger, 3:55
- Williams, Smokey Joe, 1:156
- Williams, Ted, 1:156
- Williams, Venus and Serena, 2:43
- Williamsburg, VA, 3:135, 137
- Willingham, Tyrone, 1:482, 483
- Willis, Benjamin, 2:218
- Willis, Bill, 1:480
- Wilmot, David, 1:8
- Wilson, Allan, 2:27
- Wilson, Billy, 1:391
- Wilson, Edward O., 1:344, 2:371, 3:13
- Wilson, George, 3:200
- Wilson, Harold, 1:382
- Wilson, Henry, 2:490
- Wilson, Hocutt v.*, 2:338
- Wilson, John, 1:313
- Wilson, Pete, 2:152, 246
- Wilson, William Julius, 2:422
- Wilson, Woodrow
The Birth of a Nation (film), 1:176,
2:337, 436
federal government employees, segregation of, 3:167–168 racial equality in articles of the League of Nations, 1:107
racial segregation, 2:454
racist theories, 2:359
on Southern white men, 3:20–21
Tillman, Benjamin “Pitchfork,” and, 3:132
Washington, Booker T., end of influence of, 3:215
- Winfield, Hemsley, 1:392
- Winfrey, Oprah, 1:200, 2:240
- Winrod, Gerald, 3:111
- Winthrop, John, 3:55
- WISC-III (Wechsler Intelligence Scale for Children, 3rd ed.), 2:196
- Wise, Stephen J., 2:336
- Wissler, Clark, 2:17
- Wittig, Monique, 1:470
- “Wobblies,” 3:153
- Wolfe, George C., 1:393
- Wollstonecraft, Mary, 1:471
- Womanism, 1:64, 199, 3:227–229
- Women
abolition movement, 1:7
African American families,
1:455–456
African economic development,
1:53–54
American Anti-Slavery Society,
1:73–74
American Indian Movement, 1:83
apartheid, 1:119
basketball, 1:158
black femininity, 2:21
Black Reconstruction, 1:211
cheap labor, 2:229
Chicano movement, 2:252–253
Colored Farmers’ Alliance members, 3:91
Cuban Revolution, 1:370
farmworkers, 1:460
gender roles, 2:271, 272
human trafficking, 2:134–138
hypersexuality, 1:409
immigrant domestic workers, 2:146–148
informal labor market, 2:236
non-market work, 3:176
poverty, 3:175
Second Klan, 3:22
sex work, 3:24–26
sexism, 3:27–30
sexual violence against black
women, 2:439
Sudan, genocide in, 2:62
tokenism, 3:133
tuberculosis, 1:409
See also Adolescent female sexuality;
Women of color
- Women Against Fundamentalism,
1:196
- Women and girls, violence against,
3:203–205
- Women immigrants, 2:148–151
- Women of color abortion, 2:498
feminism, 1:470–472
forced sterilization, 1:485, 487–488
immigrant domestic workers, 2:146
motherhood, 2:315–317
motherhood, deficiency in,
2:317–320
reproductive rights, 2:495
sex work, 3:25
sweatshops, 3:109
- Women of the Klan, 3:22
- Women’s movement, 3:27
- Women’s Political Council, 2:214
- Women’s rights
Garrison, William Lloyd, 2:15
Truth, Sojourner, 3:169
- Wonder, Stevie, 2:220
- Woo, John, 1:475
- Woods, Brent, 1:258
- Woods, Tiger, 1:50, 172, 200, 2:43, 2:43
- Woodson, Carter G., 1:128
American Negro Academy, 1:85, 87
Association for the Study of Negro
Life and History, 1:126–132
Boas, Franz, work with, 1:96
- Woolman, John, 1:2
- Woolworth’s, 2:456
- Wooten, Chuck, 2:261
- Worcester v. Georgia*, 1:356, 2:356
- Work, Hubert, 2:309

VOLUME 1: 1–502; VOLUME 2: 1–514; VOLUME 3: 1–246

- Work, John, 1:204
 Worker centers, 1:397
 Workfare, 3:230–234, 232
 Working class, 1:98–99
 Works Progress Administration, 1:148, 2:478
 World Bank
   African economic development, 1:55
   cultural racism, 1:381
   “Decade of Roma Inclusion,” 2:507
   global restructuring, 2:136
   poverty, 2:422
   sex work, 3:26
 World Confederation of Labour (WCL), 3:153 World Health Organization
   diabetes, 1:404
   health, definition of, 2:81 violence against women, 3:30
 World Heritage sites, 3:141–143
 World League of American Football, 1:483
 World Peace Congress, 2:13
 World Professional Basketball Tournament, 1:160
 World Romani Congresses, 2:507
 World-systems theory of poverty, 2:422
 World Trade Organization
   capitalism, 1:269
   cultural racism, 1:381
   transnational labor organizing, 3:152
 World Union of National Socialists, 2:505
 World War I
   German colonialism in Africa, 1:38
   race riots, 2:440–441
   reparations, 2:490
   soldiers of color, 3:83, 3:84
   Stoddard, T. Lothrop, 3:100
 World War II
   African Americans, 1:328–329
   anti-Semitism, 1:114
   black soldiers, 1:259
   braceros, repatriation, and seasonal workers, 1:244
   Chinese Americans, 1:298
   French African colonial soldiers, 1:33
   Israel, 3:241
   Japanese American internment, 2:203–204, 3:193
   Louis-Schmeling boxing match, 1:240–241
   military segregation, 2:455
   Nazis, 2:361
   reparations, 2:490
   soldiers of color, 3:83
   Zoot look, 3:245
 World Zionist Congress, 3:240
 World’s Anti-Slavery Convention, 2:489
 Wounded Knee, 1:82, 1:83, 1:357, 390
 Wovoka, 1:462
 Wowerit, Klaus, 2:18
 Wright, Andrew, 3:16
 Wright, Leroy, 3:16, 19
 Wright, Louis T., 2:340
 Wright, Richard, 1:49, 149, 331
 Wright, Theodore, 1:7
Wysinger v. Crookshank, 2:451
- X
 Xenophobia, 2:147–148, 166
 Xiang Liu, 3:148
 X-ray crystallography, 2:37
- Y
 Yad Vashem, 2:111
 Yan Di, 2:480
 Yandell, Louis, 1:409
 Yao Ming, 1:162
 Yellow star identification, 2:107, 110, 111
 Yeltsin, Boris, 1:113
 Yerkes, Robert, 2:192, 3:6
 Yick Wo, 1:309
Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 2:451, 3:194
 Yi-Di, 2:480–481
 Yiddish culture, 1:112
 YMCA (Young Men’s Christian Association), 1:158–159, 3:93
 Young, Charles, 2:454
 Young, Whitney, 2:512, 3:197–198
 Young Communist League, 2:511
 Young Lords Party, 2:254
 Young Men’s Christian Association (YMCA), 1:158–159, 3:93
 Young Negroes Cooperative League, 1:147
 Young Women’s Christian Association (YWCA), 1:148
 Youth Leadership Conference, 1:148
 Youth violence, 2:9–12
 Yuan Dynasty, 2:481
 Yugoslavia, former, 1:436, 437, 2:46–47
 YWCA (Young Women’s Christian Association), 1:148
- Z
Zambaje, 1:220, 2:244
Zami: A New Spelling of My Name (Lorde), 2:263, 270
 Zamora, Bernice, 1:287
 Zane, Arnie, 1:392
 Zapata, Emiliano, 2:168
 Zapatista Rebellion, 3:235–240, 236
   antiracial social movements, 1:106
   colonial legacy, 2:300
   indigenismo in Mexico, 2:169–171
   Internet, 2:34
   Latin American violence against indigenous peoples, 3:203
   Latino social movements, 2:254, 3:236
   roots of discontent, 2:303–304
Die Zauberflöte. See The Magic Flute
 Zedillo, Ernesto, 2:170, 3:238
Zeitschrift für Morphologie und Anthropologie (journal), 3:9–10
 Zeller, Marie-André, 2:388
 Zero Population Growth, 2:246
 Zhang Binglin, 2:482
 Zheng He, 2:332
 Zhongyuan culture, 2:480
 Zhou dynasty, 2:480
 Zimbabwe, 1:27, 3:224, 225
 Zionism, 3:122, 3:240–244
 Zollar, Jawole Willa Jo, 1:393
Zong incident, 1:5
 Zoot Suit Riots, 2:302–303, 3:244–246, 245
 Zubeir Pasha, 2:60
 Zuckerman, Solly, 3:182