AL. CANCELL^S. AL. MAR. R. CAITHNES. LYNLY^TGOW. KINGORNE. LOTHEANE.

High Treason—Resisting the King's Lieutenant and his Forces —Rebellion in Orkney, &c.

[THE proceedings which were adopted against PATRICK EARL OF ORKNEY, in the years 1610 and 1611, have already been noticed in a former part of this Collection ;² and as THE REBELLION IN ORKNEY, as a matter of history, has been recorded in almost every History of Scotland, it is unnecessary here to enter into any minute detail or recapitulation. Owing to the relationship which existed between the Earl of Orkney and the King, and the high favour in which that Nobleman had long stood with his Majesty, every device appears to have been resorted to, on the part of the Privy Council and the Lord Advocate, for the purpose of enabling the Earl to prove his innocence of the former accusations of cruel Oppression and Tyranny, which had been brought against him by the wretched inhabitants of Orkney and Shetland, after they had submitted, as long as was consistent with human nature, to endure such barbarous treatment. The Earl was accordingly confined in Edinburgh Castle ; and in the meantime, the Privy Council deputed the Bishop of Orkney to enquire into the truth of these serious charges, and to report to them within a reasonable time.

Owing to his attempts to escape from ward in Edinburgh Castle, the Earl of Orkney was conveyed, as a state prisoner, to the Castle of Dumbarton ; where it was considered he would be in more sure custody, and would, besides, be farther removed from the intrigues in which it had long been conjectured he was busily engaged. Notwithstanding of the vigilance of his keepers, he contrived to instruct his ‘ bafe son,’ ROBERT STEWART, one of the subjects of the following Trial, to proceed to Orkney, under the pretence of uplifting the rents which were due by his tenants, but, in reality, his design was to seize upon the Castle of Kirkwall and other strengths in Orkney, which had been confided to the custody of the Bishop, the Sheriff, &c., to raise the standard of Rebellion, and, finally, to throw off his allegiance to the Crown of Scotland. The Earl had anticipated that, by means of the money to be thus raised, he would easily overcome the fidelity of his keepers, or otherwise provide the means of his own escape. Having ordered ammunition and other supplies to be procured from Norway, he calculated, that in those remote regions, which were rendered almost inaccessible during many months in the year, at that period, when the art of navigation was at so low an ebb, he might assume the despotic rule of these Islands, as an independent Prince.

The successful termination of the Earl of Caithness's Commission of Lieutenancy, the capture of the Castle of Kirkwall, and all his remaining strongholds, the capitulation and unconditional surrender of Robert Stewart and the other rebels, together with the subsequent execution of the ringleaders in this Rebellion, for ever dispelled the absurd reveries and the wicked plots of this guilty man, who was doomed, in February 1615, to forfeit his life upon the scaffold. Reference is here generally made to his two Trials, for the sake of brevity.

It only remains to state, that Calderwood, in his MS. Church History,³ preserves the following notice of the Execution of these unhappy and deluded criminals.—(Jan. 6, 1615.) ‘ ROBERT STEWART, fone naturall to the Erle of Orkney, with other five of his complices, convicted of treasonable taking, keeping, and defending of the Castle of Kirkwall and the strengths in Orkney, were hanged at the market croffe of Edinburgh, and died penitent. The said Robert confessed his father, the Earle, who then was wardit in the Castle of Edinburgh, commandit him to doe that which he did ; but granted he gave him a contrare-mand, before he entered in executione. The Gentleman, not exceeding 22 years of age, was pitied of the people, for his tall stature and comely countenance.’

As the details of this Rebellion are entirely unknown to the public, the Editor has the pleasure of laying before his readers a mass of Original State Papers, Dispatches, Examinations, Confessions, and other interesting Documents, which he has appended to this Trial, and to that of the Earl of Orkney, Feb. 1, 1615. As usual, the sources from which these Illustrations have been procured are noted ; and it is hoped, that the whole will be considered as an acceptable addition to the history of that period.]

Jan. 5, 1615.—ROBERT STEWART, bafe sone to Patrik, lait Erle of Orkney ;¹ Thomas Blak, alias Dowglas, funtyme Chalmerlane and Bailjic to the said Erle ; Archibald Murray, wricht in Birsay ; Andro Mairtene, funtyme fervand and secretar to the said lait Erle ; Alexander Layng, also his fervand ; and Thomas Layng, indueller in Kirkwall.

APPENDIX OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS,

ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE TRIAL OF ROBERT STEWART AND OTHERS.

I. MINUTES OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL OF SCOTLAND.

(1.) Jan. 14, 1614.—ROBERT STEWART, bafe sone to THE ERLE OF ORKNAY, being brocht befor THE COUNSELL, for geiveing of fuitrie not to repair to these boundis, without HIS MATIES Licence; THE BISCHOPPE OF ORKNAY hes gevin his word and promeis for him; and the Counfell hes tane his awin aithe and promeis, that he fall not repair to the saidis boundis. And this courfe is tane be the Bischopis advyse and speciall procurement.

(2.) Jun. 28, 1614.—THE ERLE OF ORKNAYIS bafe sone having latlie gone to Orkney, aganis his faith and promise maid to the Counfall in the contrair; and he having tane with him some foulldiouris, and furpryfit the Place of Birfwall (Birfay) in Orkney, THE COUNSALL, vpoun the first informatioun maid to thame thairof, directed charges aganis him for randereng of the Houfe; and with that, thair wes ane Proclamatioun direct, prohibiting all his MATIES subiectis to supplie him with onie necesfairis, or to mak payment to him of ony of the dewtyis of Orkney or Zetland. The chaarges for rander- ing of the Houfe being execute aganis him, he immediatlie caufes found his trumpet vpon the heid of the Houfe, and difcharges xxx or xl fchote of mufcat at the Officer and witneffes, as wes this day affirmit in prefens of the Counfall be Sir James Stewart of Killith.¹ Whairvpon THE COUNSALL has exped ane Commiffione to him, in ample forme, for perfute and affadging of the Houfe, with all kynd of force and wearlyk ingyne.

(3.) Jul. 28, 1614.—THE ERLE OF ORKNAY his bafe fone, accompanyed with three or four fcore of perfones, doeth yett contivne there foolifche courfes in Orknay, and fill keepes the Houfe of Birfay. There hes beene fome conference in THE COUNSALL anent the fuppreffing of his infolenceis; and it is thoght be the moft parte of the Counfale, that Sir James Stewart, in refpect he is Schiref, Judge, and Chalmerlane of the countrie, fhould be employed in that bufynes. The queftion ftandes anent the forme, how Sir James fhall go there, and how he fhallbe accompanyed? Some ar of oppinion that the forces of the countrey ar fufficient to fuppres this REBELLION, althoght the authoures wer ten tymes mo in number. Otheres ar of oppinion, that it is hard for Sir James Stewarte to hazard him felf with the countrey people; and that it is expedient that he have three fcore men, vnder wages, to attend vpon him. THE COUNSALE, at there nixt meeting, ar to tak fome courfe in this bufynes.

(4.) Jul. 29, 1614.—SENCE the wrytting of the Notes aboue written, there is fure aduerteifment come from ORKNAY, that the faide Erle his bafe fone hes fuppryed the Church and Steple of Kirkwall, and the Girnell-houfe, (whiche ar places of gryte ftrengh,) and that the Scheref-depute hes retereed him felf to the Cafle, where he is inclofed be the Bafarde; and that there is a publick and oppen REBELLION professed and avowed in that countrey. THE COUNSALE, beeing informed heer-of, this morning airtie (the 29 of this instant) thay convened in the Over Counfale-hous; and Sir James Stewart beeing at lengthe hard anent his refolution and purpofe in this bufynes, he hes vnder-tane to go there in perfone, and to adventur and hazard his owne lyff in the fuppreffeing of this REBELLION. He hes gotten a Commiffion to tak vp fyve hundrethe men, vnder wages, and he is verie bufye to amaffe this companyee togidder, at the leaft fa mony as vpon the fuddane he may gett; and both be found of trumpett and ftryking of drwm, warning is geven to all fuche as will ferue to adreaffe thame felves to him, to inroll there names and refane there pay. He is of oppinion that within three or four dayes he fhall have iij^e thouldiours in reddynes, whome he entendes to fend away be fea with the firft occafion. He is to go him felue, be land, accompanyed with fuch voluntares of his kin, frendthip, and acquentance, as he may enduce to go with him; of whome he is of opinion to mak vp a companyee of three or four hundrethe men. The Lord Lovat hes promefed him the affiftance of two or three hundreth hable footemen, well furnifhed in all thinges neceffar. There is a ample Commiffion of Lieutenandrie and Jufticiarie exped vnto him, for the perfute of the lymmaris, with fyre and fworde. PROCLAMATIONES ar exped againes all betweene sextie and faxteine yeeres, within the boundes off Caithnes, Sutherland, and Orknay, to go forward with Sir James, and to affist him in this feruice; and a other Proclamatiōe, prohibiteing the refatt, fupplee, or furnitheiing of thir Rebelles with ony thing comfortable or neceffar vnto thame; with a promefe of pardoun to fuche of thir Rebelles (who ar not cheef), that will leave the Bafard, addrefse thame felues to Sir James, and do feruice worthie of favour.

All fchippes and velhelles bowne to Orknay ar stayed, till Sir James and his company be imbarked and away.

Sir James will, God willing, have his whole forces togidder to fett fordwart, him felf be land, and his footemen be fea, within fyve or fax dayes; and aduerteifment fhallbe fra tyme to tyme fend vpe, of the progres of his proceidings, and of his fuccelle in his feruice.

(5.) Jul. 7, 1614.—INFORMATIOUN being maid to fume of THE COUNSALL, that ane poit-boy was cum frome Orkney with Lettres to the lait ERLE OF ORKNEY, and that he was to returne agane with ane anfuer to theis Lettres, directioun was gevin for the feircheing of him: Lyikas, he was apprehendit vpoun the fyft of this instant within this Burgh, and producet befor the Counfull, with ane number of Letteris, the most pairt of thame direct to Caitnes men. Becaus the poit-boy was to go towardis Orkney, that way, he was verie straitlie examinat vpoun many particularis; whois DEPOSITIOUN, with the copie of that Letter fend be the Erle to his sone Robert,¹ is heir incloist, immediatlie vpoun his examinatioun. Thrie of the Gaird was directed to Dumbartane to mak feirche for the Erle his wryttis; and to bring frome thence one Sharp, the Erle his fervand, by whome his Letteris is writtin. They departed frome this Burgh vpoun Twyfsday the fyft of this instant, about ten of the klok at night, and come to the Castell of Dumbartane the morne thairefter, about fyve of the klok in the efternone, bot could not have entrie; being anfuert be fum fervandis frome the wall-heid, that the Constabill was in Edinburgh, and that one Robert Knok, wha had the charge of the Hous vnder the Constabill, was in the Toun of Dumbartane; and whill his return the zettis could not be opined. The Gaird, vpoun this refusall, going to the Toun, they forgadered,² in the mid-way betuix the Castell and the Toun, with the said Robert Knok; vnto whome they haveing impaired thair Commissioun and warrand, he tauld thame plainlie, that thair was no entrie to be had, that night, within the Castell; and appoynted thame the morne, at awght of the klok. They haveing preceisslie keipit that tyme, and come to the Castell-zett, thair was many idill ceremonies vsed, befor they could haue entrie; and at laft, being ressaued within the Castell, Sharp was amiffing, and had eskaiped; and feirche being maid for the Letteris and wryttes, thair was ane number of comptis and wryttes gottin, bot serving nothing to the purpois.

Thair is an ampill COMMISSIOUN past and exped to Sir James Stewart, Shereff of Orkney, and his deputtis, for the perfute and affaidgeing of the House of Birsay, with fyre and sword, and for apprehending Robert Stewart, and exhibitioun of him befor THE COUNSALL.

(6.) Aug. 3, 1614.—COMMISSIONIS being past and expeid to Sir James Stewart of Killeith, for suppressing of THE REBELLIONE IN ORKNEY; and he being in the preparatioune of his forces to haue gone thair for that eirand; and promise being maid to him, be the Lord Lovatt, of fum thrie or four hundrethe Hiland-menne, to haue assisted him in that seruice; fum Gentlemen of the Cuntrey of Orkney, being heir, and feiring that siche a number of peple as wald accompany Sir James wald be a greit burdyn to the pure cuntrey, and that they wald appease the cuntrey people at thair pleasure, they thairfore delt with Robert Monteith of Eglefshaw to mak ane ouerture to THE COUNSALL, for doing of this seruice, with les charges to HIS MA^{TIE} and greittare ease to the cuntrey nor possible could be done be Sir James. ROBERT MONTEITH being admittit to audience, he hes offerit and vndertane, in respect of the freindschipe and assurance whilk he will find in the cuntrey, to do this seruice, with the supplie of threescore fouldiouris allanerlie,³ and ane Herald and Trumpett, at HIS MA^{TIES} charges, with ane ship to transport, he hes vndertane to recover the hail Houses and strentes tane and hauldin in that cuntrey aganis HIS MA^{TIE}; and outhere to apprehend the Rebellis, or then to put theme of the cuntrey: He hes vndertane, yf ony Houses or strentes be assadged, to raise the seage within fourty-aucht houris aftir his cumming in the cuntrey. And for the performance of thir his OFFERIS, he hes offered the Erle of Caitnes and James Sincler of Murchill cautionouris.

Sir James Stewart being hard vpoun the Offeris maid be Robert Monteith, he hes willinglie aggreit that the charge of the seruice be committit vnto him. Whilk accordingle is done; and he is to imbarck with his forces betuix and the tent of this instant; and he hes presentlie fend away fum of the Gentlemen of the cuntrey, to haue the hail cuntrey in reddines to attend⁴ his landing.

(7.) Aug. 24, 1614.—THE EARLE OF CAITHNES,¹ with two shippes well provyded with all warrelyk prouifion, made faile towards ORKNAY, vpon the xx of this instant, haveing the wynd verie faurable; and it is looked that he wes in Orknay vpon the 22 of this instant, in the morning. How fone ony aduerteifment shall come from him, or ony others in that countrey, HIS MAIESTIE shall gett notice thereof, with all convenient diligence.

(8.) Oct. 5, 1614.—DIRECTION is geven to the Captane of the Guarde, to send tuelf of his company to Dumbartane, and to bring frome thence, to this burghe, THE EARLE OF ORKNAY. And direction is gevin to the Shiref of Dumbartane to assift the convoy of the Earle from Dunbartane to the Falkirk, where the Shireff of Linlithgow is to receaue him, and to mak his convoy frome thence to this burghe.

(9.) Nov. 17, 1614.—THE ERLE OF CAITHNES, having left THE LAIRD OF RATTER, his brother, as depute for him, in the Officeis of JUSTICIARIE and SHEREFSHIP of ORKNAY; and having gevin directioun to him to demolishe the Castell of Kirkwall, conforme to the Warrant of the Counfall send to him for that effect, the said Laird of Ratter, by his Petitioun, gevin in this day to THE COUNSALL, meant him self,² that he wes a Gentleman of small moyene,³ having nouthor landis nor rentis in Orknay; and that his remaining thair vnder the burdeyne and chearge of the saidis Officeis, wald draw him, in shorte tyme, to spend all his rentes, to his greit hurt and inconvenient; besydes the neglect of his awin affaires and busynes, at home. And thairfoir, his desyre was, that he might vnderstand, vpoun what conditione he fould remaine in that cuntry, and vpoun whose chargeis and expenffis the Houfe fould be dimolished? His Petitioune being hard and deulie considerit, THE LORDES hes allowit vnto him ane hundreth markes monethlie, dureing his aboade in that cuntry, for his charges and expenffis. And tutching the dimoleifching of the Houfe, thay haue ordanit him to do the turne, and the expenffis that he fall bestow thairvpone, according as the same falbe verified and testified be the Bishop of Orknay, vnder his hand, falbe repayit vnto him be the Thefourare Depute.⁴ And whereas, the remaning of the Laird of Ratter in that cuntry, wilbe chargeable to HIS MAIESTIE, the cuntry being now reasonable weele satled, without appeirance of ony new commotioun or trouble; thairfoir, his Maieftie wold be pleasit to resolue vpone some course, anent the Governament of that cuntry, and whom his Maieftie will putt in the trust of that charge; to the effect that, vpoun the significatioun of his Maiefties pleasour thairanent, the Counfall may tak ordour, and gif directioun thairin accordinglie.

II. DISPATCHES FROM THE EARL OF CAITHNESS, &c. TO THE KING AND SECRETARY OF STATE,⁵ &c.

(10.) LETTER, the Earl of Caithness to Lord Binning. (Aug. 25, 1614.)⁶

RIGHT HONORABIL MY VERIE GOODE LORD,

PLEIS your lo. We arryved at Castell Sinclair vpoun the 22 of this instant; whair I stayit that night, and aduerteifed the Caithnes men to be reddie to follow me to Orknay, when I suld command theme. I imbarked with me about threttie of theme, and cam to Selwik, within tuo myles to Kirkwall, vpoun the 23, about sex eftir none.

The 24 I sent the Herald with Notairis, Messingeris, and Witneffes to mak proclamatioune at Kirk-

¹ The procrastinating conduct and vacillation of THE PRIVY COUNCIL, in a matter which bore such a formidable aspect at its commencement, says very little for their ability or zeal, in the discharge of their important trust. The only apology which can be framed for them, is the circumstance of their subserviency to THE KING, who was resident at so great a distance, and without whose fiat they dared not take any important step. ² Made supplication and complaint; humbly remonstrated. ³ Means; fortune. From Fr. moyen. ⁴ In the Books of the Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, Gen. Register House, the following entry occurs, under date April, 1615. wall; who wes presentlie taikin, as he entered the Towne, most iniuriouſſie and diſpytfullie abuſed, bothe in word and deid; the Letters taikin frome him be Robert; and him ſelf, with ane Miniſter, and all otheris that accompanied him, keipit in diuerſe houſes, all that day, till the evening; to whiche they, the ſame day, did ad this alſo, that to the number of thrie hundreth menne, with diſplayed enſigne, did fort¹ out of the Towne, and maid prouocatione to me, whair I lay vpoun the ſhip-board. For that the Proclamacione (were) thus impedit, I wes forced vpoun the 25 to wreitt diuerſe Letteres, and ſend throuche the cuntrey, to aduerteis and command the Gentlemen and vtheris to reſort to me; in whome, for the moſt part, I did not find that reddie willingnes whiche I expected; ſo that I wes forcit to ſend to Caithnes, for ſupplie of my owne menne; who, cuming to me vpoun the 26, and having then aſſembled about two hundreth of the cuntrey menne, we tuik land; and at the ſame tyme, about ten houris, we landit the battering peice with hir careage, whiche, by great force of men, and ſome difficulties throuche the deipnes of the foyll, wes presentlie, and with all poſſibill diligence, drawin neir tuo myles, towardis the Towne; and the ſame day, about thrie aſtirnone, planted at Weyland, within ane half quarter of myle to the Caſtell. We merched in good ordour, with colouris diſplayed; and as we approached, the Rebellis ſorted out,¹ boasting that they wold fight with ws, thought we had bein tuentie to one; and having their Ordinance in reddines to haue played vpoun ws from the Caſtell, Stepill, and Tour of the 3eardis, and diſchargeing one or tuo of the ſame againſt ws, ſo ſoone as we cam vnder their fight, I commandit the Cannoners² to flute at the Caſtell; who did their part ſo weil, that be the ſecund ſchott one of the turrettis vpone the heade of the Houſe wes pearſed and almoſt beaten down, to the great terrour of the Traitouris; and other thrie being fhott, one aſtir another, did all hit, bot not hurt ſo muche.

In the meantyme the Rebellis being provoking and braking ws vpoun the Ball-ley, to the number of ſex ſcoir men, our Captanes and fouldiouris went directlie, and with goode courage, toward theme—and without ony reſiſtance or hurt did compel theme to retreat ſchamefullie. In whiche flight, about fyve of preſſed poore menne of the cuntrey did abandon theme.

The Captanes, fouldiouris, and Gentlemen of the cuntrey, with thair menne, did presentlie follow theme at their heillis, entered the towne the ſame night about ſex houris, incloſed theme in their holdis, and now poſſeſſes the Towne. That night I ludged about the Ordinance, and guairdit it and our ſelfis with the reſt of our menne.

This day we ar buſie about the landing of the great Peice of Ordinance, that we may batter bothe the Caſtell and the other Houſes, which annoyes ws and our men in the Towne; and mak our ſeruce the ſchorter.

The Rebellis ar moſt obſtinate, and maliciouſſie reſolued to hold out to the deathe, thought I have ſent Miniſteris and their owne freindis to inſtruct, admoniſh, and threattin theme.

Their is heir no bread, nor drink, nor vther victuallis to be had for pryce, prayer, or command; ſo that I muſt ather ſeik preſent releif of ſome victuall from Caithnes, or ſuffer the fouldiouris to ſtarue for want. And if they fall endure and continew in thair obſtinacie, as they haue wowed to do, thair will not be pouder, leid, billettis, nor matche to ſerue for this ſeruce; in the which I ſie great dangeris, and manie more difficulties then I culd ſoiſie.

In reſpect whairof, I will intreat your goode lo. to acquent my Lord Theſaurer and remanent Counſallouris; and with all cair and diligence prouyde, betyme, that money, pouder, pillettis, and chieffie ſum reaſonabill quantitie of victuall, whiche can not be had heir, may be ſent to be diſpenſed and ſold to the fouldiouris and vtheris that haue neid, vpoun reaſonabill pryce; whairby our great neceſſities may be ſupplied, with litle or no hurt to his Ma^{ties} money.

As thingis fallis out, ſo fall your lo. be aduerteiſed from tyme to tyme. And now, after the trew (12.) *The Erle of Cathnes LETTER to the Secretar,*⁷ ressuued 10 Oct. 1614.

MY VERRIE SPECIALL GOOD LORD,

IN respect your Letter, daitit from Edr the fyfte of September, and come in my hands the fourteint of this instante, declaring your lo. diligence for expeding of all necessars for this seruice, quich I haif more nor neid for daylie, I and all that is heir with me hes hote seruice with thir most bluidie and barbarous Rebeles and Traitouris. They haue killed four, and the last is ane Willeam Iruine, ane Orkney Gentleman,⁸ one quho, since his deathe, I haue hard was ane inoyenour, and ane greit freind to the Traitour. God is just in his judgementis, for amongs ws all standing by him he is schote dead, vponne the nyntente of this month, at twa houres in the efter none; ane cuntrie man of myne schote through the arme; and ane fouldiert schott behind beneth the bak; and one flaine in the Castell. All this is done this last dayis skirmishe. Thair is not one day that I am idle, except the Sabothe. My lord, I will assure your lo. thay ar most desperat and cruell Tratours, and (this) is ane verrie strong hould, and nothing can do to thame except the cannone.

Quhair your lo. hes fett doune in your Letter of his Maties advyse, that I fould be spairing to grant pardone to notorions Rebellis and malefactoures, my lord, God forbid þat I fould tak vponne me to grante ony pardone to ony quho hes so heighlie offendit his sacred Matie. Befoir his Matie were not repairit, to his honour, be all the lyffes of thir bluidie Tratoures that is within this diuilisch Castle, I (wald) rather be buried. MY MOST SPECIALL GOOD LORD,

I RESSAUIT your Letter, datit at Edinburgh the twentie, &c. and cam in my handis the fourte of October. Befor the reffett of your lo. Letter, I wrait greit lenth of the hail proceedingis heir, and of the ending of this feruice that God of his mercy hes maid to come, vtherways nor any man expectit. My lord, war not I vfed the mater fo cannelie,⁵ and maid Patrik Halcro to fail thame that was thair in the Caftell, it wald haue bene ane longfum faidge; for I protest to God the Hous hes neuir bene biggit by⁶ the confente of the Diuil; for it is one of the strongeft houlds in Britane, without fellow. I fie be HIS MATIES Letter direct vnto your lo^s of his intentione to Robert Stewart, quhilk I thank God I haue nather fend to him, bot this, and vpoune that condition he cam out: Quhilk conditionne was in this forme, gif he wald come furth and put himfelf simpliciter in his Maties will, to difpone vpoune him at his Maties pleafour, I fould keip and preferue him from euerie danger of my folkis, till his Maties pleafour and will wer knawin. He defyrit that I wald promife vpoune my honour to preferue him, till I brocht him to his Matie. That I plainlie refufit; for I faid I could not promeis that my felfe might haue acces to his Matie, without the fpeciall licence of the Lordis of his Maties moft honourable PRIUIE COUNSELL. To conclud, he plainlie fubmittit him felf to his Maties will. Bot befor he did this, Patrik Halcro had left him, and faid plainlie to him, in the Caftle, 'he wald geive it ouer.' Quhich maid him come out, vpoune the foirfaidis conditiones, and no vtherways. As I fall anfuer to God, Robert Stewart hes no farder of me; for I fpak with him, and fmellit that he wald neuir geiv over that Hous to be Torterit, and to be compellit to reveill vpoune his father, to be his wrak. I finding this, I defyrit, gif he wald let Patrik Halcro cum oute and fpeik with me, vpoune that fam plaidge that was in for him. He plainlie refufit. I feing it fo, I maid me to be weill contentit with his anfweir, and faid, 'I wald go fordwart with the fiedge.' (23.) ANDRO MAIRTENIS Confessioun.

AT KIRKWALL, the xiiij day of September, 1614, I, ANDRO MAIRTINE, being examined be my Lord Liuetennent,¹ and my Lord Bifchop of Orknay,² anent my intelligence of the causis quhy Robert Stewart, sone naturall to Patrik Erle of Orknay, come to Orknay in this last fomer?—Be quhais directione he came heir?—And for quhat purpose?—Hes anfuered as followis:

FIRST, that quhen I spak with him in Birsay, he schew to me ane Commiffioun, subferyuit be his father, to mak compt with all the Tak-men of the cuntrie, and reffauie payments of all reffis,³ and debitis justlie awand to his father be thame, of the crope sex hundreth and ten (1610), and all yeiris preceding the comeing of my Lord Bifchope to Orknay; with powar also to medle and intromett with all his father's bestiall and moveables, and to dispone thairon. I speirit gif he had ony vther thing ado?—and he said, 'Yis'—bot he wald not tell me. ITEM, I saw ane Letter that came frae his father to him, be Patrik Murray, beirar, haueand this claufe in it—'That gif he sped not weill heir, that he sould addres himself to Murkle, to remane quhill tyme seruit better;' bot I remember not of the rest of the contentes. ITEM, anent any conditione betuixt him and Patrik Halero, throw his fatheris directione, I am na way vpoune that secreet; bot it appeiris thair be sum wrettin conditione amangs thame; becaus I saw gritt anger, with a fear betuixt thame, for wanting of ane Letter that was a missing among hands, and Patrik fend out ane boy to the Toune to mak inquisitione for it; bot qubither thay gat it or not, I knaw not. And I saw thame ryue⁴ my Lords subfcriptione from ane Letter, and thay caist the body of it in the fyre, and kept the subfcriptione. ITEM, about the . . . day of September efter, as the Cannone was twyfe schott in the night at the yrne yett, it patt ane greit feir in thair hartes. Then Robert speirit at me on the morne, quhat I thoct of it? And I said, that 'all was lyk to go wrong.'—'This is a fair matter,' said he, (speikand of his father,) 'thair was neur thing lukkit weill yit quhilk he devyfit—God gif I had neur kend his turnis!' ITEM, quhan the commounaris wer trauelland for peax, I advyfit Robert to offer cautioune for his personal comperance befor the Lordis of Counsell, gif the Lieuetennant wald geife him libertie to go to Edinburgh. He anfuert to me, and said, that 'he wald not do so—for the Counsell wold vse him with Tortouris, quhill he reveillit his fatheris interesse in this mater—and that wold he neur doe!' Heirvpoun, I collectit, that all quhilk this yung man hes done, wes be the counsell of his father; quhilk is a great pitie, except it pleas God and his Ma^{tie} to be mercifull to him. And as for my being with him, I wold neur haue bene a nycht in his companie, giue I could haue had meit and drink any vther way, as all the cuntrie knawis quhat necessitie and miserie I was reductit vnto, be pouertie. ITEM, I remember that a great number of this cuntrie men hundit him till folies, and maid ANE BAND of Concurrence and Assistance to him, quhilk he caufit me to wryte; and a gritt number subferyuit the same, quhen I was not with him; bot the contentes of the Band and subfcriptiones ar in his awin keiping, and my memorie cannot serue me to remember on the particulars; bot the writt will declare.

Rebellion in Orkney—Tyranny and Oppreſſion—High Treason, &c.

[PATRICK EARL OF ORKNEY, the infatuated and ambitious individual, whoſe guilty life at length terminated ignominiouſly upon the ſcaffold, was nearly related to King James VI., and at one period ſtood high in favour with his prince. As the particulars of the crimes for which his life was forfeited to the offended Laws of his country are rehearſed in his former Trial,³ and in that of his natural ſon, ROBERT STEWART,⁴ reference is made to theſe Caſes, and to the illuſtrative Papers appended to them. The various Hiſtories of Scotland may alſo be conſulted, in which the fact of THE REBELLION IN ORKNEY is very briefly noticed, owing to the want of proper materials.

Although his crimes were of a very remarkable deſcription, and indicative of a cruel and blood-thirſty diſpoſition, it muſt not be ſuppoſed that this Nobleman was a rude and unpoliſhed barbarian, wholly unſkilled in the modes of civilized life. On the contrary, much of his earlier life had been ſpent at Court; and his daring crimes and overweening ambition alone prevented him from riſing to the high-eſt eminence, as a Courtier. Like many other unlucky Courtiers of that age, he ſeems to have been obſcured by the prevailing ſtar of that corrupt and worthleſs favourite, Kerr or Carr, Earl of Somerſet, who ſecretly undermined him, and embraced every opportunity of blaſting his character and fame, in the King's eſtimation. Having thus fallen into diſgrace at Court, the Earl of Orkney appears to have commenced a reckless warfare againſt all civilized ſociety, and to have formed the mad project of eſtabliſhing himſelf as an independent and deſpotic Prince, in his Iſland Kingdoms of Orkney and Shetland; and in due time he had alſo reſolved upon entirely ſhaking off the yoke of allegiance to the Crown of Scotland.

Having retired to Orkney, he committed ſuch exceſſes, that, within a very few years after the acceſſion of King James VI. to the Engliſh throne, the oppreſſed people of Orkney preſented numerous ſupplications for redreſs, and loudly complained of their intolerable grievances. Theſe complaints were directed to the Privy Council, (who appear to have been unable to afford any formidable check to his deſpotic cruelty,) as well as to the King himſelf. Sharp remonſtrances were at firſt uſed, but with little effect; and at length the Earl's oppreſſions became ſo formidable in their character and degree, that the Lord Advocate found it neceſſary, in order to quiet the clamours of the people, to bring him to public Trial. Still, however, it appears to have been thought poſſible that he might be reclaimed; and the King uſed every means to delay matters coming to fatal extremities. Contrary to general expectation, the effects of long impriſonment ſeemed only to aggravate the rancour of his cruel diſpoſition. He employed all his time in meditating projects for his eſcape from confinement, ſo that he might wreſt his Castles out of the hands of the constituted authorities; and then boldly to defy the King and the Privy Council of Scotland, after having declared his independence of the kingdom of Great Britain.

The most effectual check which was given to these mad projects, was the sequestration of his revenues, and the withholding from the Earl all supplies, excepting such as were necessary for his bare maintenance, as a state prisoner. This rigorous step, however, appears to have been carried too far, and to have suggested to the Earl the idea of sending his 'bafe son,' Robert Stewart, to Orkney; where, after he had uplifted his 'bygone rents,' &c., he might secretly convey a considerable portion of them to him, to enable him to bribe his guards. When thus provided, he directed his son to use every endeavour to obtain possession of the Castle of Kirkwall, and of the other strengths formerly belonging to the Earl; leaving it to himself to effect his escape from Dumbarton Castle, to which he had been conveyed for greater security. So jealous were the Privy Council of the machinations of this restless and ambitious Nobleman, that after long petitioning, and causing him to endure great privations, it was not until Jan. 28, 1614, that they allowed him, out of his large revenues, the paltry alimēt of '4 lib. Scotts per diem!'

Robert Stewart did, no doubt, succeed in his rash attempt; but in that he was mainly favoured by the accidental circumstance of the high unpopularity of the Sheriff; who, on account of his oppressive conduct and cruel exactions, was detested by the inhabitants so deeply, that, in order to get rid of his thralldom, they even consented to join 'the Bastard' in his treasonable schemes, judging, perhaps, that so long an imprisonment, and such severe discipline in the school of adversity, must necessarily have changed the temper and habits of their natural and rightful lord, whose return they were led by Robert confidently to expect. This feeling was very strongly marked in the 'Band of Affociation, subserived by the Rebellis in Orknay,' which is given in the Appendix. In that interesting document, 'the frequent entrantis of extraniers,'² 'the corruption of the Lawes, partialitie of Judges, the greid of officeris, and oppreffion of Magiftratis,' are dwelt upon as intolerable grievances.

The expedition of GEORGE, fifth EARL OF CAITHNESS, the King's Lieutenant, eventually succeeded; and the ringleaders in the Rebellion, as has already been seen, were executed by that person, who, it will be remembered, had formerly rendered himself infamous by his treacherously delivering up his kinsman, John Lord Maxwell, to government, after having lured him to Castle-Sinclair, under the mask of friendship and protection.³ The reader will find, from Documents preserved in the Appendix, that the Earl of Caithness intruded himself into this Commission, by eagerly volunteering his services to the Privy Council, so as, if possible, to ingratiate himself with his Sovereign, by quelling a Rebellion which had excited the observation and alarm even of the Court of England.⁴ It is not a little interesting, among all his specious pretexes, to detect and expose the secret springs which appear to have actuated that selfish and cold-blooded Nobleman in undertaking so repulsive an expedition as that against the Rebels in Orkney. Under the mask of patriotism, zeal for his Majesty's honour, and his pretended desire for restoring the peace of the country, it is not difficult to discover the basest motives of hereditary and personal revenge and deadly feud against the fallen Earl of Orkney; as well as a secret design to procure the whole, or at least, a considerable portion, of his extensive territories, as a reward for his patriotic services. But a little research enables us to perceive, that a rooted hatred had long existed between the Earls of Caithness and Orkney, which had frequently broken out into open strife. As an extraordinary instance of the spirit of wanton cruelty and mischief in which these hostilities were

² The natives of Orkney, having long been accustomed to be judged by the laws of Denmark, were peculiarly offended at the introduction of foreign laws, judges, and settlers in their country, which was the policy too suddenly adopted by the Sheriff and other officers to civilize the people. So strongly did they resent these and the other aggressions of the foreigners, that they gladly forwarded the Bastard's views for the expulsion of their hated taskmasters.

³ See this Collection, Vol. III., 33, &c. Gordon's Hist. of Sutherland, p. 301.

carried on by the former, a quaint, but striking passage may be cited, from the graphic pen of Sir Robert Gordon;¹ who states, that in the year 1608, some of the Earl of Orkney's servants had been forced to land in the country of Caithness, 'by a contrarie wind and vehement storme of weather. First, the Earle of Catteynes maid them drunk; then, in a mocking iest, he caused sheave the one syd of their beards and one syd of their heads; last of all, he constrayned them to tak their weshell, and to goe to sea in that stormie tempest! The poor men, feareing his farther crueltie, did choyse rather to committ themselves to the mercie of the fenfeles elements and raging waves of the sea, then abyd his furie. So they entered the stormie Seas of Pentlay-Firth (a fearfull and dangerous arme of Sea between Catteynes and Orknay), whence they escaped the furie thereof, by the providence and assistance of God, who had compassion on them, in this lamentable and desperat case, and directed ther course; so that they landed saiflie in Orknay. This affront and indignitie wes highlie taken (not without just reason) by the Earle of Orknay, who complained therof to THE KING and his Counsell. His MAIESTIE did write to the Councill of Scotland to punilh the Earle of Catteynes seveirly, after dew tryall, as having committed a fact against his authoritie. But when both the Earles of Catteynes and Orknay came to Edinburghe, readie to informe one against another, they aggredid all their privatt quarrells, by the mediation of freinds, lest they should reveile too much of either's doings! So this controversie was past over with silence; and some acknowledgement was maid by the Earle of Catteynes to the Earle of Orknay, as a satisfaction for abusing his servants,' &c.

The intriguing Earl of Caithness at length brought ruin upon himself and his family, by endeavouring 'to mak the Lord Forbes wearie of his landis in Catteynes.' This benevolent purpose he tried to effect by constant oppression of his tenants and servants, in virtue of his office of Sheriffship, which he had obtained from the Earl of Huntlie, on his marriage with Lady Jean Gordon, his sister. He secretly caused incendiaries burn all the corns standing in the corn yards of Sansett, in November 1615; and, to remove suspicion from himself, industriously rumoured abroad, that the Fire-raising had been done by Mackay's tenants, with whom the Forbeses were then at feud. The matter, however, having soon been disclosed by the actual perpetrators, the Earl was closely prosecuted; and he only obtained his Remission² after a long interval, 1st, By engaging to satisfy his numerous creditors; 2dly, by resigning into the King's hands the Sheriffship and Justiciary of Caithness; 3dly, by engaging to present to justice the malefactors whom he had employed to burn the corns; and, lastly, to resign to the Bishop of Caithness the House of Strabister, with certain Feu-lands of that Bishopric, amounting to the yearly value of 2000 merkis Scots, in augmentation of the Bishop's scanty revenues. His son, Lord Berriedale, was imprisoned for these debts for above five years; but the Earl himself obtained a 'superse-dere,' or protection from legal 'diligence,' from the Privy Council. The creditors, however, 'apprized,' or sequestrated, all his lands. He was denounced Rebel in 1621, and his own son, Lord Berriedale, applied for and obtained a Commission to pursue his father! After five years' imprisonment, he was released for that purpose, on finding due caution to return to ward after having executed his Commission. In September 1623, Lord Berriedale and Sir Robert Gordon, the King's Commissioners, having taken the field against the Earl of Caithness, he precipitately fled to Orkney, intending to go thence to Norway and Denmark. Castle Sinclair, and his other Castles of Aerigell and Keasse, were immediately taken possession of in the King's name; and the Commissioners succeeded in pacifying the country of Caithness.

George, fifth Earl of Caithness, after having passed a miserable life, died, a victim of disappointed ambition, and in comparative obscurity, in Caithness, in the month of February, 1643, at the advanced age of 78.

¹ Hist. of the Family of Sutherland, p. 258. ² The author of the History of King James the Sext, p. 391, says he became in the King's will, who decreed thus: to pay to the party offended 2000 merks; to renounce his pension of 1000 crowns; to renounce his Sheriffship; and that he 'sould caus the Bishop be ansuerit of his spirituall dewtie ther; and sould redres all quarrells and faultis to peax.'

But to return from this digression, the only person among the Rebels, whose life was saved, was PATRICK HALCRO. He had been instrumental in bringing about a surrender of the Castle of Kirkwall, and had proved the means of preventing much bloodshed, which otherwise must have been occasioned, had the Rebels persisted in their Treason.¹ The advisers of the Crown, therefore, recommended him as a fit object of mercy; and more especially on account of the terms which he had proposed to the King's Lieutenant, at the time of the surrender.

It has formerly been observed, in reference to THE EARL OF ORKNEY, that he had originally been in high favour with the King; and that, in point of exterior, he was a person of courtly manners and polished address. So anxious was the King for his release, that certain Lords of the Secret Council were empowered to offer him the keepership and profits of either of the Royal Palaces of Holyroodhouse, Linlithgow, Stirling, or Falkland, with Ten Thousand pounds of rent, on condition that he should renounce all right to the Earldom of Orkney, and resign the same in the King's hands. But so infatuated and blindly perverse was the Earl, and so intent was he on accomplishing the objects of his visionary ambition, that he absolutely refused these conditions; having, previously to that time, instructed his son to hazard the mad attempt for which they both forfeited their lives. An anonymous author,² already quoted, has given a most faithful and remarkable portrait of the princely habits and lavish expenditure of Patrick Earl of Orkney, when he resided in his own territories, surrounded by his vassals and dependents. His sketch cannot fail to be generally interesting. "He had a princelie and royall renew; and indeid behavit himself ther with fik foueraintie, and geve³ I durft fay the playne veritie, rather tyranicallie, be the shaddow of Dence Lawis,⁴ different and more rigorous nor⁵ the Municipall or Criminall Lawis of the rest of Scotland; wherby, no man of rent or purfe mycht enjoy his propertie in Orknay, without his speciall favour; and the same deir boght. Wherby it followit, that fitchit and forgeit faultis was fo devyfit aganis manie of them, that they wer compellit, be emprefonment and finall rewaird, to resigne ther heritable tytlis unto him; and geve he had a steve⁶ purfe and no rent, then was sum cryme devyfit aganis him, wherby he was compellit to lose ather half or hail therof, geve not lyff and all beyd! And his pomp was fo great ther, as he went never from his Castell to the Kirk, nor abrod utherwayis, without the convoy of fiftie muscateers and uthir gentlemen of convoy and gaird. And siclyk, before denner and supper, ther wer thrie trumpetters that foundit still till the meat of the furst service was fet at table; and siclyk, at the second service; and consequentlie, efter the grace. He had also his ships directit to the Sea, to intercep Pirats, and collect tribut of uncouth fibers,⁷ that came yearlie to these Seyis. Wherby he maid fik collectioun of gret gunnis and uthir weapons for weare, as no Hous, Palice, or Castell, yea all in Scotland wer not furneist with the lyk; and yit all this provisoun was spulzeit, in his awen tyme, be the violent hand of the Erle of Caithnes."

It only remains to the Editor to state, that this haughty Earl, according to Archbishop Spotswood,⁸ 'took his Sentence impatiently;' on which account, 'some Preachers were desired to confer with him, and to dispose his minde towards death. But they, finding him irrefolute, intreated for a delay of the Execution; which was granted to the sixth day of February. At which time, he was brought unto the Scaffold, guarded by the Magistrates of the City, and in the sight of many people beheaded.' *Calderwood*⁹ gives a fuller account of his death, in these terms. (Feb. 1, 1615.) 'PATRIK EARLE OF ORKNEY was arraigned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh; and be ane Inqueist of the Nobles and Barrones, was convict of Treafone, for the late REBELLION IN ORKNAY. It was thought, that if he had not,

The wifer and elder sort of the Nobilitie with-drew themselves from his Assise. He had sent to the Court to obtaine favour; but no appearance of returning ane answer. The Ministers, finding him soe ignorant, that he could skarfe rehearse the Lord's prayer, intreated the Counsell to delay his Executione some few dayes, till he were better informed, and received the Lord's Supper. Their Petitione was assisted with the request of some Noblemen, and granted. Soe he communicate upon the Lord's day, the 5th of February; and was beheaded, at the Market-crosse of Edinburgh, upon Monday the 6 of Februar; when Sir Robert Ker, Earle of Rochester, was decourted. The King laid the blame of his death on him; but late, as his custome was, when matters was past remedie! It was observed that this moneth is fatall to the King's blood.

convenient space, na delay fould be grantit, in respect his lordschip can pretend na ignorance of the crymes contenit in his Dittay, feing he hes bene dyuerfe tymes examinat thairupoun be the Lordis of Secreit Counfall, vpon the verritie thairof.

THE JUSTICE, with advyse of the Affeffouris, Repellis the pannellis allegeance ; bot, ex gratia, Grantis ane half hour to the pannel and his prelocoutouris to be advyfit thairupoun.—Quhairupoun my Lord Aduocat askit instrumentis.

The pannell, with his prelocoutouris, haifing ressaunt vp the Dittay, and removet thame felffis apairt to the Counfall-hous to be advyfet thairupoun, returnet within the space grantit to thame for that effect ; and Declairit, that thai wald nawayis impunge or dispute aganis the relevancie of the Dittay : And as to the verritie of the crymes contenit thairintill, speciallie the directiones allegit gevin to hes vni^q^{le} sone, Robert, to practize the Rebellioun lybellit, denyis any sic directioun : And gif any command may be inferrit gevin to his sone, it was nawayis to commit any fact or deid to the offence of his Maiestie, or his heines autoritie ; bot to pas over to Orknay, and to tak intromissioun with his Houffis, guidis, and geir being thairintill, vpon mere ignorance and simplicitie ; nawayes thinking that ony sic command fould infer Treffone, or ony vther cryme or offence aganis his gracious Souerane. And, thairfoir, fleing fra all forder defence of his awin innocencie, hes his refudge to his Maiesteis grace and mercie : And, as of befoir, craves God and his Maiestie pardoun for his oversight and negligence on this poynt ; and in all humilitie and submissioun cumis in (his) hienes Will for the famyn : And ratifeis his former Depositioun, in everie point.

THE JUSTICE referrit the said Dittay to the tryell of the honourabill perfones of Assyse vnder writtin, quha war lauchfullie sunmond to that effect.

APPENDIX OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS,
ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE TRIAL OF PATRICK, EARL OF ORKNAY.¹

(1.) LETTER, THE KING to the Privy Council of Scotland, 'anent the oppressed People of Orkney.'²

RIGHT trustie and weilbeloveitt cofines and counfallouris, We greitt 3ow weell. HAVEING red that 3our Lettre, sent with pe COMMISSIOUNE defyreit by those oppresfit peopill, complemantis vpone THE ERLL OF ORKNAY; houfoevir, the same is groundit only vpone civil Horningis, and that the Commissiounne conteanes leveying of menne, befeiging of houffis, reassing of fyre, and dispenfatiounne for Slaughter in the vseing of it, togidder with a WARRANT of concurrence for the country peopill of CAITHNES, which is thocht man³ breid a farther wnquyetnes; and that the lyk Commissiounnes hes not bene grantit, except quhair the REBELLIOUN wes for a criminall caus: 3IT, haveing dewlie considderit the miserie of the poore distresfit peopill, whose hard fameilshing estait is worfe than death; the numberis of thame, whiche is a great presumptiounne that fume of thame hes over iust caus; thair continowall outcryis and exclamatiounnes heir, to the gritt scandell of our kingdome and COUNSELL thair, as if Oppressioun wer tollerated thairin, and that the Counfall wer cairles to remedy it: And then, THE ERLL OF ORKNAYIS awin contempteous Rebelliounne, nevir preassing either to satisfie the pairtie, or relax him self fra the borne: The contenowance of whiche disobediace, albeit for a civeill caus, can have na better constructiounne of ws, than that it is becum of the natur of a criminall. WE, vpone the respectis foirfaidis, being loath that the distresfid fould not have the benefeit of our releiff, and the proud and rebellious not feill the weight of our iust wreath and indignatioun, have concludit to grant the said Commissioun, in forme as it is defyrit, and hes signed and sent heirwith wnto 3ow: Bot, as We have evir bene unwilling to condem ony pairtie unhard, and pairwith loth to cut aff a member quhair pair is any hope of recoverie pairof, We heve thocht meit to will 3ow, by oppin Proclamatioun, chairge THE ERLL OF ORKNAY to compeir befoir 3ow the secund day of Marche nixto-cum, for to give all dew and ressonable fatisfacioun that may be iustlie demandit of him be ony who presently ar complemantis one him, so as We be no farder troubleid and importuned with thair Petitiones;⁴ with certificatioun to him and⁵ he fail of his appeirance that day, that not only the foirfaid Commissiounne salbe grantit to those quho presentlie desyres the same, in suche forme as it is socht, bot thay, in the executiounne pairof, salbe assistid with our power and autoritie, both be sea and land, for the punishing of his Rebelliounne. AND if he do cum pair, at the day foirfaid, 3ow fall tak sum good ordour that he may be furthcummand,⁶ until such tyme that he have either cleirit or fatisfeit all compleaneres aganes him. AND in cais of his not compeirance, 3ow fall thane expedid this present Commissiounne, and delyver it to the pairteis futtareis;⁷ and 3ow fall give until thame suche Warrands for concurrence of the cuntry, or quhatevir ellis may funder the prosequutting of the Commissiounne. For doing quhairof, thir presentis falbe 3our sufficient Warrant. And willing 3ow to be cairfull in the spedie directiounne of this Proclamatiounne, as 3ow wald eschew our reprooff, ffor ony neglect of tyme pairin, WE bid 3ow fairwell. ² From a Copy preserved by Lord Haddington in his MS. Collection of State Papers. ³ Must. ⁴ The number of Supplications and complaints from THE PEOPLE OF ORKNEY to THE KING himself was very great: but he delayed taking any step until importuned to grant this Commission; which, though at length he subscribed, was clogged with the additional delay of ordering the Privy Council to charge the Earl of Orkney, of new, to appear before them; so as, if possible, to divert the Earl from his criminal courses. But he had long contemned the Proclamations and charges of the Council; and this new charge would merely appear to him as a fresh proof of their imbecility; and as he could 'call the King his cousin,' so he hoped that the Council would not dare to molest him in his Island Kingdom. ⁵ If. ⁶ Forthcoming. ⁷ Suitors; petitioners.

(2.) NOTE OF THE CONFERENCE *had be the Secretare and Aduocat¹ with the Erle of Orknay.*²

MY Lord Aduocat and I repaired to the Castell of Ed^r to THE ERLE OF ORKNAY, and declaired to him that We had commandement from HIS MA^{TIE} to examine him, vpon the causes of THE REBELLION OF ORKNAY. He declaired, that he wes innocent and ignorant thair of. That *Sir James Stewart*³ came to the Castell of Ed^r to him, and schew that his sone Robert wes gone to Orknay, whoes actiones thair might breid offence to HIS MA^{TIE} and danger to the Erle; who answered, that want of meanes had forced Robert to gang thair, to vplift sum reftis⁴ of the Tennantis dewties auchtand to the Erle, to help to supplie the Erles wantis and his owne. That since it wes evill tane, he wald wryte to Robert, that he might retire furth of Orknay, desyring that Sir James wald cause convoy his Letter to his sone, and command his doaris to giue ouerflight to Robert to transport him self to Caithnes. That he neuer wrait any vther Letter to Robert since he went to Orknay.

It being replied be ws, that efter Robert had tane BIRSA, and disobeyed the chaarge vsed be the Sheref-depute to rander that Houfe, vnder the payne of Treason, he had writtin to the Erle, who, having ressaued his Letter from Duncane Mitchell, Poist, he had writtin bak to him with the said Poist. He denyed the wryting of any such Letter to his sone; and when he saw his seruand, John Schairp, of mynd to wryte to Robert with that Poist, he had dischaarged him to wryte; and that Schairp had desyred him not to find fault, that he might fend his owne privat Letter, answering to that which he had ressaued from Robert; bot that nather Schairp nor Mitchell, being broglt to his presence, wald say any thing to the contrarie of this his declaration: Which is the substance of all that he wald say to ws in that poynt; adding, that no thing proceeding from him had occasioned THE REBELLION; bot that the extreame rigour vsed be Mr John Finlason to the cuntrie people, and the wrong intended be Mr John to the cuntriemen, who, with great haifard of thair lyves, had forced THE PIRATES,⁵ and tane thame and thair schip, had disposed thame to REBELLION. And that thay had perswaded Robert to assist thame aganis Mr John Finlason, and to be head to thame in thair interpryfes.

Being demanded, what condicion he had made to Patrik Halcro, for his joyning in this Rebellion? Denyed that he knew him familiarlie, or even had to do with him; and that no thing had moved Halcro to mell in these turnes bot his great affection borne to Robert, his sone. Farder, we could not induce him to grant, in ony circumstance, of the proceedingis of his sone in his Rebellioun. We declaired to him, that what he concealed of the cariage of this interpryse wald be detected be his sone Robert, John Schairp, and Mitchell, who wer all in handis. He answered, that he wes confident that thay could say no farder nor he had declaired to ws.

(3.) EXAMINATION of Patrick Earle of Orkney, and Re-Examination of John Schairp and Duncan Mitchell.

Demandit, yf he write ane Letter to his sone Robert, with Duncane Mitchell, poift, and what wes the contentis of the Letter? Deponis, that he rememberis that he caufit wryte ane Letter to Robert with the said Duncane Mitchell, when the Depouner wes caryed fra the Castell of Edinburgh to Dunbartane, bot he rememberis not of the contentis of the Letter; nather knowis he yf he subferyuit the Letter, or how it wes directit on the bak.

Demandit, quhat verball directioun he gaif to Duncane Mitchell, the poift, to cary to his sone Robert at that tyme? Denyis that he gaif him ony verball directioun, bot onlie to desyre his sone to gett him money.

Grantis, that Duncane Mitchell broght him ane anfuer fra Robert, bearing, that he had tane the Houfe of Birsay, becaus the Schereff perfewit him. And that he had no other place of refudge to keepe him in; and that his man Downy Lyell wes hurt.

Denyis, that he fend ony directioun to his sone with Duncane Mitchell anent the taking of Birsay, or that he had ony conference with Mitchell at his bak-coming fra Orkney, anent Robertis taking of Birsay, or anent the perfute of the Schereff.

Demandit, yf he wryte to Patrik Halcro to tak *Barnard Steuartis*¹ lyffe? Denyis the same.

Grantis, that Patrik Halcro come to Dunbartane, and the Depounair mett with him thair. And denyis, that thair wes ony speeche or conference with thame, bot generall wordis; and fayis, that he nevir spak sax wordis to Patrik Halcro.

Demandit, yf he had ony conference with Barnard Steuarte, anent his sone Robertis going to Orkney? Deponis, he neuir conferrit with him vpoun that subieect.

Demandit, yf he caufit his man Johnne Schairp wryte ony Memorialis to his sone Robert? or yf the Memorialis contenit a directioun to his sone to fend to Norroyay for poulder? Denyis, that ony fuch Memorialis wer writtin be him, or at his directioun; and the depouner rememberis not of ony Memorialis writtin be him to Robert.

Demandit, yf he had ony conference with his sone Robert, at ony tyme, for geving ouer of the Castell of Kirkwall to the Bifchope? Deponis, that he fand fault with his sone that he had gevin ouer the Houfe, without taking Inventair, vnder the Bifchopis hand, of the goodis within the Houfe. And he had no other caus of offence aganis his sone, for that earand.

Denyis, that euir he had ony conference with his sone, after the geving ouer of this Houfe to the Bifchope, anent the taking of the Houfe agane; or that he bad his sone prove any prettye man, yf the Houfe come in his handis agane.

Demandit, yf he gaif ony directioun to Johnne Schairp to wryte ane Letter to his sone Robert, willing him to follow his Memorialis? The depouner rememberis not of ony fuche Letter.

Demandit, yf he wryte ane Letter to his sone Robert, willing him to trye the cuntrey people, yf thay wald tak his parte? Denyis the writting of ony fuche Letter.

Demandit, quhat directioun he gaif to Johnne Schairp to carye to Orkney? Deponis, that he directit him not to Orkney, bot fend and directit him heir to his Majestis Counsell, with Letteris to the Erll of Glencairne, to do² for him at the Counsellis handis. And fayis, planelie, that the said Johnne Schairp had no directioun from the depounair to go to Orkney; and that the said Johnne being coming to this burgh, and getting informatioun at the Cowde-bridge that Duncane Mitchell wes tane, and that the said Johne wald be tortourit yf he come to the Counsell, the said Johne thairvpoun tooke occasioun to efchew.¹

² To act or procure for him.

Demandit, yf he caufit mak ane bed for his sone Robert, in his awne chalmer, within the Castell of Edinburghe, tua nightis afoir his going to Orkney? Deponis, that he caufit to mak his bed in his chalmer, becaus the wyfe of the Houfe quhair he lay, in the Castell, wes grite with childe and at the poynte of hir delyuerye.

Denyis, that he gaif directioun to Johne Schairp to write ane Letter in his awin name to Robert Stewart, to shaw him, yf he come heir that he wald be hangit.

Demandit, quhat he meaned be that pairt of his Letter writtin to his sone Robert, quhilk Letter wes gottin vpoun Duncane Mitchell, quhairby he allowit of the forme and tennour of Robertis Letter writtin to him? Deponis, that he meaned no thing, bot allowit that Robert had writtin the simple treuthe.

Demandit, quhat wes his meaneing in the other poynte of the Letter, bearing, ‘ thair is other materis heir to think vpoun nor fuche thinges as thay. I beleve HIS MAIESTIE thinkis litle of these materis?’ Deponis, that the deathe of the Prince,² and the trouble quhairin the Counte Palatyne³ wes lyke to be, through the invasioun of the Spaniard, maid the depouner to beleve that his Maieftie had other thingis to think vpoun nor⁴ Orkney. And tuicheing that poynte of the Letter, beareing, that ‘ yf his sone come heir, the Tolbuthe wald be his best,’ the depouner meaned no thing, bot that he wald be wardit, bothe for his debt and taking of the Houfe. And grantis, that the Letter bearing thir headis wes all writtin be the depouneris directioun.

Denyis, that euer he had conference with Patrik Halero, or fend ony worde or message to him con- teneing a promeis of rewarde, yf he wald affist Robert, his bafe sone, in his REBELLION.

JOHNE SCHAIRP, re-examinat, deponis, that afoir he come oute of Dunbartane, he knew that the Gaird wes seikand him; and the Erll of Orkney tauld to the depouner, that the Gaird wes seikand him. And deponis, that the Erll, in plane termes, directit him to go to Orkney; and sayis, that the Erll gaif to the depouner ane Letter, directit to the Erll of Glencairne, purpoillie to haif showne the fame to the souldiouris of the Castell of Dunbartane, yf he had benee stayit be thame, and to mak thame to vnderstand that the Erll of Orkney had directit him heir to the Counsell. And sayis, that the Erll of Orkney forbad the depouner, in ony cause, to gang to Edinburghe; bot to gang to Dundee, and swa to Orkney.

THE ERLL OF ORKNEY, being confrontit with Johne Schairp, vpoun that poynte of his Deposition, tuitcheing the directioun gevin to Schairp to go to Orkney, and tuitcheing the occasioun of the Letter writtin to the Erll of Glencairne, the Erll is direct contrair to Schairp, in that poynte; and Schairp abydis constantlie be his Deposition.

(9.) DEPOSITIONS of James Lyoun, bafe sone to the Master of Glamis, Mr Michael Mair, and Duncan M^cClellane.

AT EDINBURGH, the nyutene day of Nouember, 1614. In prefence of my Lordis Chancellour, Secretair, Clerk of Register, and Aduocat.

JAMES LYOUN, bafe sone to the late Mr of Glamis,¹ folemmelie fworne and demandit, Yf at ony tyme he paff to Dunbartane to vifite the Erll of Orkney? Deponis, that in fommer bigane two yeir, the Erll of Orkney fend Mr Michael Mair, then his Secretarie, to the depouner, he being in the heade of the Cannogait for the tyme, with a commiffioun, defyring the depouner to come to him to Dunbartane. Wherupoun the depouner raid with him to Dunbartane. And at his comeing thair, the Erll layed to his chairge, yf he wald affist him to brek warde oute of the Caffell of Dunbartane? And at the first, the depouner refusit to haif ony dealing in that mater. Bot being earniftlie delt with be the Erll, and mony fair promiffes maid by the Erll to him, in end the depouner yeildit to do his best endevoiris to help the Erll to efchape, and to convoy him to Orkney. And deponis, that the faid Mr Michael Mair wes vpoun the Erllis counfaill, in this mater; and proponit the fame to the depouner, in the way, as they wer ryding to Dunbartane. And after the depouner had imbraceit this condition, he and the faid Mr Michael had diners conferences and fpeeches, anent the meanes and poffibilityis to effectuat thair interprife. And deponis, that the faid Mr Michael was imployit be the Erll to deale with the Laird of Cluny, to imbarck him in this interprife. And the faid Mr Michael, with the depouner, had fpeeches with Cluny vpoun that fubiect, at the Town of Leithe, on the Linkis; and the

Laird promeift to gif his affiftance and furtherance in that mater. And for this effect, they appointit a tryift and meeting to be at Striuling, vpoun the Satterday thairefter, and the depouner and Mr Michaell mett vpoun Satterday, at night, at Striuling; and Cluny came not quhill Sunday, in the moirning, bot fend his man Dauid Gairdin thair, vpoun the Satterday, to excufe his abfence. And when thay mett altogidder vpoun the Sunday, thay reafouned vpoun the meanes how to gett the Earll out of the Caftell; and refolued to tak him ouer the wall by a cord, and ane instrument of irne,¹ whiche the depouner caufit mak. And Mr Michaell promeift to prepair the tow.² And it wes aggreit that when all thingis wer in reddynes for the Erllis efchaip, he fould proceid as yf he had fome earand ad in the Houfe, and fend his three Keeparis, one efter another, for difpatche of his earandis; and then he fould come away. And thay aggreit to bring fome horffis to Dunbuk-Hill, to haif convoyit the Erll and his companie away; and ane horfe fould haif bene broght to the Caftell-wall, for the Erll him felf; and Cluny fould haif broght thir horffis to Glasgow, bot Cluny broght not the horffes with him. And the depouner raid to Dunbartane, and the faid Mr Michaell tauld the Erll that the depouner was come, and all thingis wer prepairit and in reddynes for his efchaiping. And then the Erll began to fant; and maid choife, rather to fuborne the Portair nor³ to haifard to come over the wall; and fo delt with the Portair vpoun that fubiect; who reveillit the fame to the Laird of Buchannane, who had the charge of the Houfe for the tyme.

Deponis, that at Martymes, in the yeir foirfaid, the faid Mr Michaell Mair come of new to the depouner, he being in the heade of the Cannogait for the tyme, with a commiffioun frome the Erll to come Weft to him agane to Dunbartane. And the depouner refufit to go Weft, faying, that ‘ he wald mell no forder with the Erll, nor in nane of his courfes.’ To whome Maifter Michaell anfuert, ‘ I fee this man (meaneing he the Earle) hes not the grace of God in him; I will lykewayis haif no forder dealling with him!’

Deponis, that after Robert Steuart, bafe fone to the Erll of Orkney, wes come out of Orkney, and fred of warde for keeping of the Caftell of Kirkwall aganis the Bifhop of Orkney, the depouner, in deling with Robert in this Toun, delt with him that he wald mak his addrefse to Courte; and thair vfe his credite to gett his Maiefteis fauour: And fays, that Robert wes willing to haif gone to Courte, bot maid his excufe vpoun the want of money, and his faderis offence aganis him for geving ouer of the Houfe of Kirkwall; and Robert intreated the depouner to ryde with him to Dunbartane, and to interceid for him with his fader, bothe for his fauour and fome money: And the depouner yeildit to ryde with him, and thay raid togidder to Dunbartane, and stayed thair bot ane night. And the depouner knawis not yf the Erll fpak with Robert that night. And vpoun the morne, the Erll directit the depouner with a Letter to the Erll of Caffillis,⁴ being in Carrick for the tyme, for fome money. And Robert Steuart raid with the depouner to Carrick. And when thay come bak agane to Dunbartane, *the Erll*⁵ wald not looke vpoun Robert, calling him ‘ Feble vnworthie beaft!’ vfeing mony imprecationis and curffes aganis him for geving over of the Houfe, faying, he ‘ wes the wraick of him and his eftate!’ And the depouner being reddy to come away frome Dunbartane, the faid Robert come to him to the Toun of Dunbartane, defiring him to go againe and fpeeke his fader in his fauouris, and to tell him that he wald tak fome disperat courfe, and go oute of the cuntrey, yf he could not procure his fauour. Wherupoun, the depouner went bak agane to the Caftell, and eirniſſlie delt with the Erll in Robertis fauour; bot the Erll could not with patience heir of him, bot gaif oute mony inveciue and difpytefull fpeecheis aganis him, calling him ‘ Fals, feble beaft,’ for geving ouer of his Houfe. And in end, the depouner haueing promiseit in Robertis name, that Robert wald do ony thing the Erll wald command him, the Erll thairvpoune become to be more calme, and to gif eare to the depounnaris speeches in Robertis fauour. Wherupoun, the depouner broghte Robert to the Erle, and tauld to the Erll, that Robert wald do ony thing that the Erll wald bid him; to whome the Erll anfuert, that Robert had not a spirite nor courage to follow ony interprife; and Robert haueing craved of the Erll his fader, that he might haif a ryght of the landis of Westraue or Steanehoufe, the Earll wald yeild to gif him no thing, quhill first he had repairit the wrang he had done, in giving oner of his Houfe; and by recouering of the same agane, to play the pairt of a man. And the Erll haueing desirit the depouner that he wold gif him his worde and promiseis, in Robertis name, that Robert sould go to Orknay and recouer the Houffis agane, the depouner refusit to gif his promiseis or word, saying, 'Robert wald speke and promiseis for him felf!' Whairupoun Robert, in the depounnaris audience, promiseit to the Erll to go to Orknay, and to tak in the Houffis agane. And then the Erll acceptit of him, saying, he 'sould want no thing, and that he wald aduance him so far as he might. And so, the depouner haueing aggreit the Erll with Robert, the depouner left thame. And as he wes comeing away, Duncane M^cClellane, the Erllis poist, followit the Depouner to the Toun of Dunbartane, willing him to go bak agane to my Lord; and the depouner refusit to go bak, because he vnderstoode that the purposis of his bak-calling wes to haif delt with him to haif gone with Robert to Orknay. And the depouner fearing at that tyme with James Annand, sometyme the Erllis seruand, in Dunbartane Towne, the said James askit of the depouner, 'yf he had aggreit the fader and the sone?' And the depouner anfuert, 'thay wer aggreit,' and that 'Robert must neidis go to Orknay, or thair wilbe no lyffe for him!' To whom James replyit, 'The Erll is ane unhappie man! He knawis Robert can do no goode in Orknay. His purposis is to bring him to the scaffolde, and to bring the sclander of his bloode vpoun the King!' And vpoun the morne, the depounair raid fra Dunbartane towards Edinburghe; and M^cClellane, the poist, come to Edinburghe with him. And within tuentie dayis thairefter, Robert Steuart come to Edinburghe, and lichtit at Henry Raes houfe, and askit of him whair the depouner wes? And Henry Rae broght Robert to the depouner in George Lafonis houfe in the heade of Peblis-wynd, quhair the depouner ludgeit; and Robert tauld to the depouner that he had vndirtane the interprife of Orknay, and wes resolut to go thair. And the depouner asking of him, how he wald be prouydit and furneist with money? Robert tauld him, that he had a Letter frome his fader to one Johnne Smithe, his fader's mercheant in S^t Androis, to aduance him iij^c merkis of siluer. Whairupoun Robert and the depouner past to S^t Androis to haif gevin the money, and haueing stayed thair aucht dayis, Johnne Smith refusit to gif the money, vnles he had a Band vnder the Erllis hand, for the haill moneyis he was awand him afoir, including thairin the siluer now to be gevin, with the annuell¹ of the haill. And deponis, that thay onlie reslauit at that tyme fra Johnne Smithe xx lib. to defray thair chargeis. Deponis forder, that at thair comeing oute of S^t Androis, M^cClellane, the poist, come to Robert with Letteris fra the Erll his fader; and the depouner saw and red ane of the Letteris, whilk wes a lang Memorandum, full of iniunctiones how Robert sould carye him felf in Orknay, bothe anent the taking of the Houffis, the intronissiou with the Erllis rentis, and what men he sould putt oute of the cuntrey. And the depouner rememberis weele of ane speciall poynte of the Memorandum, to witt, that Robert sould send the Erllis creare,² laidnit with beare and salt goodis, to Brein, in Norroway, and thair sell the same, and by poulder³ and bullett with the money that sould be gottin thairfoir. And that, aboue all thingis, Robert sould see that the Houffis wer weele furneist. And M^cClellane come bak with thame to Leithe. And deponis, that then thay raid to Dunbartane, and Robert stayed at the smithis houfe outwith the Toun, and the depouner raid fordwart towardis the Casfell. And the Erll, being aduerteist that thay wer come to the smithis houfe, he send Johnne Burne, his seruand, to haif stayit thame at the smithis houfe. And the depouner forgaddering with Johnne Burne, in the way betuix the smithis houfe and the Casfell,

Johnne Burne delt with the depouner to go bak, saying thay had done evill to come, ffor the Counsell wald be in suspicioun that thay had some purposis for thair going to Orknay. And he tauld the depouner, that they wald not gett access to the Erll, yitt the depouner wald not be stayed, bot come fordwart to the Casfell-yett, and craveing entrie, he wes anfuert ower the wall be one Robert Knox, who had the charge of the Houfe, that he wald not gett entree. Whairupoun, the depouner come bak, and being in ane grite anger, becaufe he could not gett entrie, he said to Johnne Burne, that he fould reveill all thair practizeis to the Counsell, feeing he could not get payment of the moneyis addebtit be the Erll to him. Deponis, that Johnne Burne askit of the depouner, yf he had prouidit ony men, in Angus, to tak with him to Orknay? And the depouner maid him to beleve, that he had prouidit some men in Angus, who wer goode fellowis, to haif gone thair. And the depouner named some of their names: And he did this purpoillie, to haif gottin payment of his moneyis.

Deponit, that Johnne Burne haveing showne to the Erll the depounaris discontentment for the want of his moneyis, and that he had avowit to reveill thair interprife, the Erll, fearing the reveilling and discouerie thair of, fend to the depouner with the said Johnne Burne xx f. Sterling; quhilk being refusit be the depouner, the Erll fend vther xx f. to him.

Deponis, that when he come bak to the smithis houfe, he said to Robert, ' he perfavit that the Erll had no vther courfe bot to bring him to the scaffold!' And Robert, waging his head, with a grite fighe, anfuert, ' I feare it falbe fwa!'

(10.) MAISTER MICHAELL MAIR, seruand to Mr Johnne Scott, Directour of the Chancellarie; fworne, and demandit, ' yf he knowis of ony purposis that the Erll of Orknay had to brek warde? Deponis, he knowis that thair wes some speeches betuix the Erll, the Laird of Clunye, and James Ljoun, vpon that subiect.

THE DEPOSITION maid be James Ljoun, in that pairt thair of concerning the Erll of Orknay his purposis to brek warde, and the conferenceis, meetingis, and resolutionis tane thairant, betuix the Laird of Clunye, James Ljoun, and the depouner, being red to the said Mr Michael; and he being demandit, yf the same wes trew? Deponis, that he acknowledgeit the Deposition to be trew, as it wes writtin, except in that parte thair of concerning the suborning of the Portair, whair of the depouner knowis no thing. In ceteris conformis.

(11.) DUNCANE M^cCLELLANE, poist to the Erll of Orknay, fworne, and demandit yf he knowis ony thing of the Erll of Orknay his purpoillis anent THE REBELLIOUN IN ORKNAY? Deponis, he knowis na thing thair of, and denyis that euir he hard ony conference or speeche betuix the Erll, Johnne Burne, James Ljoun, and Robert Stewart, or ony of thame, anent the Erll his purposis to brek warde, or anent the fending of Robert to Orknay.

Grantis, that the Erll of Orknay fend the depouner with tua Letteris to Robert Stewart and James Ljoun, and the depouner come to this toun to haif gottin thame heir; and missing thame heir, he past to S^t Androis, and forgadderit with thame comeing oute of the Toun, and delyuerit the Letteris to thame. And fayis, that Robert Stewart and James Ljoun tauld to the depouner, ' yf thay had gottin siluer in S^t Androis, that thay wald haif gone to Orknay; bot seeing thay gatt not siluer, thay could not go.' And the depouner, haucing gone bak to Dunbartane with this anfuert, the Erll fell oute in bitter speecheis aganis Robert, calling him ' Fals, feble knaife!' ' Villaine!' and ' Pultrone!' And ' he fould hang him with his awne hand!'

Deponis, that he had the conference betuix Robert Stewart and James Ljoun be the way, as thay come frome S^t Androis, to witt, yf thay had gottin siluer in S^t Androis, that thay wald haif gone to Orknay and tane the Erlls Houffis. And the depouner tauld thir speecheis to the Erll, when he come bak to Dunbartane; wher at the Erll wes heichlie commovit, saying, ' Robert was ane feble beaft,'— and ' Or¹ he wer not hangit, he fould hang him with his awne hand; becaus vnworthelie he had left his Houffis, and had not grace to win thame agane!'

Deponis, that at this same tyme, James Lyoun said to the depouner, 'Yff we go to Orknay, no man shall haif the credite¹ of carying our Letteris to and fra, bot yow.'

Feb. 28.—TRIAL OF JOHN OGILVIE, JESUITE.

[THE proceedings adopted against the ROMAN CATHOLICS and JESUITS, at different periods, after the time of the Reformation of Religion in Scotland, form a prominent part of the Ecclesiastical and Political History of the Country. Owing to the obscure and repulsive appearance of the Criminal Records, much valuable information has necessarily escaped the observation of the historian; but although the subject is one long since forgotten, it appears to the Editor to belong to the duty he imposed upon himself when he undertook the present Collection, to rescue from oblivion all those Trials which have preserved entire the memory of such events.

Among the most remarkable of those persecutions may be reckoned the Case of JOHN OGILVIE, a Jesuit, of Scottish extraction, who was a son of Walter Ogilvie of Drum. After an absence of twenty-two years in foreign countries, he returned to Scotland, in the month of May 1615, for the purpose of promoting the growth of the Roman Catholic Religion. There is little doubt that he was one of those enthusiastic individuals, who, at the imminent risk of fortune, and of life itself, scrupled not to lend himself a willing instrument for the accomplishment of some daring, dangerous, and destructive plot, which at that time characterised the whole of the ever-restless and ambitious proceedings of the followers of the Church of Rome, from the date of the formidable, but presumptuous, attempt of the Spanish Armada, and of the Gunpowder Plot, downwards. During the reign of KING JAMES, both before and after his accession to the English throne, seldom did a year pass over without some rumours of fresh attempts of the Jesuits against his life, or against the Religion, as by Law established, in England. There can be no doubt, from a perusal of the State Papers and Histories of this period, that some new attempt on the part of Spain and her auxiliaries was about to ripen into action, when the early detection and execution of numerous emissaries of the Society of Jesus frustrated its execution.

Without occupying more space, the Editor has merely to mention, that a Special Commission having been granted to THE PROVOST AND BAILIES OF GLASGOW, within whose jurisdiction Ogilvie was taken, his Trial is not recorded in the Books of Adjournal, but was reported by the Commissioners and their Assessors to the Privy Council, from whom their powers directly emanated. There cannot be a doubt that the Report of this Case was drawn up for publication, with the view of being extensively circulated in England. The phraseology is carefully revised, so as to be perfectly intelligible to an English reader; and though imprinted at Edinburgh by Andro Hart, immediately after the Trial took place, it must have been revised by some person skilled in the English Law, and familiar with its technicalities and practice.

The present reprint has been taken from a copy of the valuable Original Edition; in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates, Edinburgh.

Calderwood, a determined enemy to Episcopacy, has preserved the following curious memorials of these events, in his MS. History of the Church of Scotland,¹ which the Editor has thought worthy of being inserted in this place:—

Oct. 1614. 'ABOUT the beginning of October, MR JOHN OGILBIE, the Jesuit, was apprehendit in Glasgou. He had seduced fundry young men, and of the better fort of the people; and said Masse, in fundry places, within Toun. When the (ARCH) BISCHOP (OF GLASGOW)² challenged him for his hardneffe,³ he answered, that "he hoped to have more freedome, ere it were long." Wherupon, the Bishop buffeted him!

' About the beginning of November, THE (ARCH) BISHOP OF ST ANDREWS⁴ sone, Mr Alexander

Gledfanes, apprehended Moffett, a Messe-Preift, at St Andrewes; who was waired before the Lords of Secret Counsell upon the 10 of December, and was waired in the Cafle of Edinburgh. Some things the Bifhops behoved to doe againft PAPISTS, for honefties fake, leaft they fhould feeme to be advanced to perfecute Minifters profefling purity of Difcipline and God's worfhip.

Upon the 6 of December, 13 or 14 of the Inhabitants of Glafgow were convicted for hearing of Maffe, and Refetting a Maffe-Preift, in Court holden be the Bifhops and thrie of the (Council), who hed gotten Commiffione, at the King's directione, to try. The brute¹ went, that they were to be headed, drawn, and quartered; but they were in no danger. OGILBIE, the Jefuit, was brought in to Edinburg, and examined be the Bifhop and fome of the Lords of Secret Counsell, to move to confefle where he had been refett, where he had faid Messe, &c. He was not fuffered to take fleep fome nights and dayes together! His braines being lightfome, fecrets were drawn out of him, but came not to the knowledge of the people. Moffett, the Preift, was examined be the Bifhop of St Andrewes and his affociats.

About the middft of Januare (1615), a Warrant was fent from THE KING to fine fome of the receipters of OGILBIE the Jefuit, and hearers of Messes, in Glafgow; and to banifhe fome others of them out of the King's dominiones. About the end of Januar, THE KING fent down a courfe to be vfed in trying of JESUITS, their refetters, and hearers of Messe. This feemed rather a hindrance to the executioun of justice upon the perfones prefently guiltie, then to mean in earnest the repreffing of Papifts.

Upon the laft of February, OGILBIE the Jefuit, one of the Ogillies of the Houfe of Drummure, was arraigned and pannalled before the Proveift and Bailliffes of Glasgou, the King's Judges in that part. At his Examination, before fome of the Counsell and the Bifhop, he being afked, whither THE KING, being excommunicat be THE POPE, the Pope might depofe him, and loofe his fubjects from the Oathe of allegeance? Answered, and fubfcribed his answers with his hand, that he thought THE KING and his Counsell no competent Judges to him, in that matter; and therfor, would not directly anfwere them touching it, but before THE POPE, his ordinar Judge, and his fubftitutes! For this his declinator, he was convicted, in prefence of findry Noblemen, appointed be THE KING to be prefent. He avouched, boldly, that he regarded not the Acts of Parliament nor THE KING's authority, foe farre as they were repugnant to THE POPES authority! Yett had he fmall courage when he come to the Scaffold—died heartlefse and comfortlefse—could not commend himfelfe to God, at the Minifter's defire—but did it after the defire of the hangman.

Some interpreted this Executione to have proceeded rather of a care to bless THE KING's Governement, then of any fincere hatred of the Popilh Religione. Some denied that it was done to be a terrour to the fincerer fort of the Miniftry, not to decline THE KING's authority, in ony caufe whatfoever.² He was the firft Preift or Jefuit that was executed, fince the Baffard Bifhop of St Andrewes was hanged.³

May. Many times before, because his face was diffigured, he had his night-bonnet drawn down to his nose, when the minifters of St Andrewes enquired, "If they fhould pray for him publicly?" he answered, "It was not yett time!" Soe he was never prayed for publicly, but the fame day that he departed; and that was done without his knowledge. Unwilling was he to die, or to fuffer any honest man of the Miniftrie near him, either to waken his confcience, or comfort him. At the defire of his wife and children, he fubfcribed fome few lines, wherein he approved the prefent courfe, to procure the King's favour to them. His flesh fell off him in lumps. Notwithstanding of the great rent of his Bifhoprick, he died in the debt of tuentie thousand pounds. This man was both ambitious and covetous. Papifts and bainous offenders were winked at, for bribes given to his fervants and dependers. In his firft diocefan Synod of Fife he fat in pomp with his velvet cufhion before him, and his Clerk, Mr John Mitchellfonne, befide him.—Mr George Gladftains, BISHOP OF ST ANDREWES, was buried, upon the feventh of June, in St Andrewes. A cannabie (canopy) of blacke velvet was caried above the coffine, be foure men, and yett the corpes was not in the coffin, but buried foone after his death. Mr William Couper (BISHOP OF GALLOWAY) made his ifnerall-fermone, full of vile flattery and lyes, and knowne to be sae be the people, and therfor was he derided. It was reported that THE KING bestowed ten thousand merkes upon his buriell.—Caldewood's Church Hist. MS. Adv. Lib.

The anonymous author of 'THE HISTORIE OF KING JAMES THE SEXT'¹ shortly, but forcibly, narates these transactions, in the following terms:—'DURING this same time and year, in the citie of Glasgou, ther hapnit a man, callit MR JOHNNE OGILBIE, Jesuit, to be apprehendit ther, be the Archebischop and his men, becaus he was tryit² sufficientlie to have fayed Mess^e ther, to sum inhabitants and citizens of that toun; and famonie as wer tryit, wer all empreafonit in the Castell of Dumbartane, ther to remayne upoun ther awin expensis; and thereftir relaxit, and confynit for a pecuniall soume, for contravening the Act of Parliament; and fand caution, under great fowmes of money, ather³ of them, not to commit the lyk fault or cryme agayne. The Jesuit, in the meyne tyme, was convoyit to Edinburgh, and ther keapit in strait waird, and a gaird of men, be the space of eight dayis, with small sustentatioun; and compellit and withhaldin, perforce, from sleep, to the great perturbatioun of his brayne, and to compell him ad delirium!⁴ And being convoyit therfra to Glasgou agane, certen temporall questions wer objected unto him, as naymlie, geve⁵ THE KING was heid of THE KIRK, within his awin dominions, or nocht? To the whilk he answered, "No," &c., and so, consequently, to uther thrie. For the whilks, he was put to the cognitioun of a juré, and be them fund giltie of Treasoun and Leze-Majestie; and so was condamnit to be hangit to the death; whilk was also accomplisht.'

The enquiring reader is referred, for farther particulars, illustrative of this singular subject, to the various Collections of State Papers, and to the Histories of Scotland, especially Spotswood's History, where the matter is fully discussed by the Archbishop, who, it may be kept in mind, was one of the Assessors, and the leading examiner, in Ogilvie's Trial. The Editor appends to this remarkable TRACT the Examinations of all the persons suspected of having joined Ogilvie, in the celebration of Mass, &c., including the declinator of the Jesuit himself, which he has taken from an attested copy, preserved in the Denmylne Collection of MSS., Advocates' Library.]

Human nature could not long stand so exquisite a torture. The suspected parties were often driven into a state of delirium; and in many instances, they must have been glad to confess any thing which may have been proposed by their examiners, to escape from a life held by such a miserable tenure. ⁵ If.

those, who desire to be informed of his behaviour, during the time of his imprisonment, and at his arraignment and execution, as to obviate the misreports of the enemies of true Religion, who wrest and draw all things, without respect of truth, to their owne advantage. It is knowne within these few yeeres, Henry Garnet and Edward Oldcorne, English Jesuites, being called in question, for that prodigious and damnable Powder-treason; although it was proved by cleare evidences and their own confessions, vnder their owne handes, that they were speciall authors and actors in it, and for the same were executed by publicke justice, not in a corner, but in the open cities of London and Worcester; yet (such is the shamelesse impudencie of that sect) by printed apologies they haue bene iustificed; and, which is more, inserted in a Catalogue of their Martyrs, set fourth at Rome, anno 1608, by the licence and permission of their superiours. By which maner of doing, what may be expected, in this particular, at their handes, any man may easlie perceiue. Euery thing they are about to doe, (bee it neuer so great a mischief,) they cloake with the mantle of Religion: and if the statutes of the kingdome ouer-take any of them, either for practises against the King, or sowing the seed of rebellion amongst the subiectes, it must bee supposed (forsooth) they suffer all for religion. Now were it so, and that, according to the law, for Masse saying they were punished to the death, they could not glorie in it, nor rightly challenge the crowne of martyrdom, their Masse beeing a vile and idolatrous seruice, flatly disagreeing with the faith of Christ, and trueth of the Gospell. But it is not so; albeit wee haue such statutes, for the restraint of Masse abomination within this kingdome, they are not able to instance any one, who, for the transgressing thereof, to this houre hath suffered. His Majesties proceedings with them haue bene more gentle: where death might haue bene inflicted, milder courses haue bene taken: imprisonment for some short time, and banishment fourth of the realme, haue bene the sharpest punishments; so vnwilling was his Highnesse to force, or once to seeme to force, the consciences of any men whatsoever. And to say that which trueth is, if this vnhappy miscreant, who nowe hath his reward, had not discovered his traiterous minde, openly disauowing his Majesties authoritie, and stood to the maintaining of the Popes power, for dethroning kings, and freeing subjects from their oathes of allegiance, hee had felt no harder measure then others, although the circumstances of his fault were much greater; but his peruerse speeches, and insolent carriage beyond all credite, his sowing of doctrines tending to open rebellion, the hande of Iustice could not forbear. What was it, in the hearing of multitudes of people to affirme, 'that he would returne or abide in the kingdome, contrary to the lawes, and his Maiesties commandements? to value his Highnesse authoritie with his old hatte, and the Acts of our Parliament with a rotten figge? to say, it was treason to sweare with the oath of allegiance to the King, and that his Maiestie, by vsurping the Popes power, had lost the right of the kingdome?' Yet these, and diuers other more treasonable speeches, he vttered at his arraignment, which are set down in the processe, so far as could be remembered; for all could not be kept in mind. I am perswaded, the honest minded of those of his own profession will in their hearts condemne, and judge him iustly to haue suffered; for, praised be God, the Jesuits arte hath not so farre preuailed, in planting such opinions in the hearts of people, but euen amongst the aduersaries themselves, they are many that doe no wise approue their seditious and proditorie doctrines. And here, to all our Catholickes (they will be so called) in this kingdome, if nothing further may be obtained, and that still they wil lye in that superstition, wherein they haue bene nuzled, I wish at least so much wisdom, as to beware of Jesuites policie, and not to thinke their practises the cause of the Catholicke Church. It is not religion, as one hath well obserued, they strue for, but souerainitie. It will not content them to haue the Romish faith and ceremonies embraced; the crownes of kings, their scepters and subjects, must all be at the Popes deuotion. This is their speciall worke, and the effect of their blinde obedience, that speciall vowe, I meane, which they, besides the three vowes common to other orders, vow and sweare at their receptions. To this point runs all their seruice, to make the Pope the lord of all the earth; emperours, kings, and princes his dependants; to be remoued, altered, changed, deposed, and killed, when it pleaseth his holines to giue commiffion. Mariana, a Jefuit, counteth it a wholesome meditation for Kings, to think they may be killed, not only lawfully, but with glory and commendation to the doers. And Cæſar Baroniys, in his Annales,¹ recites a brieue of Pope Vrban the Second, ſent to Godfrede, Biſhop of Luca, wherein hee declares, that they are not to be eſteemed murderers, who, burning with the zeale of their Catholicke mother, kills excommunicates. The words of the Refeript are theſe: Non illos homicidas arbitramur, qui aduerſus excommunicatos, zelo catholice matris ardentes, eorum quoſlibet trucidaffe contigerit. Bellarmine, that great Doctor, in his controuerſie, De Romano Pontifice,² hath theſe expreſſe words, Papa poteſt mutare regna, et uni auferre atq. alteri conferre, tanquam ſummus princeps ſpiritualis ſi id neceſſarium fuerit ad animarum ſalutem. That is, the Pope, as chiefe ſpiritual prince, may change kingdomes, and take them away from one, and giue them to another, if it be neceſſarie for the ſauing of ſoules. But Franciſcus Suarius, in his late booke intituled, Deſenſio Fidei Catholice, goes beyond all this, ſaying, that any, to whom the Pope permits the doing, may kill or expell the King, who is by ſentence deprived, or, which is all one, if he be declared to haue committed the crime, which by law deſerues that penaltie; and if the Pope neglect to giue power, the lawfull ſucceſſour may take the execution to himſelfe; and if he faile, the community of the kingdome ſucceedes in that right; to wit, to kill and expell him. His wordes are theſe: Poſt ſententiam condemnatoriam regis, de regni priuatione, latam per legitimam poteſtatem, vel quod perinde eſt, poſt ſententiam declaratoriam criminis habentis talem pœnam ipſo iure impoſitam, poteſt ille qui ſententiam tulit, vel cui ipſe commiſerit, regem priuare regno, etiam illum interficiendo, ſi aliter non potuerit. In the ſame place:³ Si Papa regem deponat, ab illis tantum poterit expelli, vel interfici quibus ipſe id commiſerit. Quod ſi nulli executionem imperet, pertinebit ad legitimum in regno ſucceſſorem, vel ſi nullus inventus fuerit, ad regnum ipſum ſpectabit. And that no man ſhould thinke this his priuate opinion, amongſt the approbations prefixed to the worke, yee haue, in cenſura Academiæ Complutenſis, this ſaide: Nihil eſt in toto hoc opere à noſtro omnium ſenſu diſcordans, quum de hac re ſit omnium noſtrum eadem vox, idem animus, eadēque ſententia. That is, there is nothing in all this worke, which is not agreeable with our mind, ſeeing herein we haue all one voice, one opinion, and one iudgement. Nowe if this bee the minde of all, it is high time they were all met with, and that celeris pœna, by a preſent diſpatch. The knightes templars, erected, as is thought, by the princes of France, to preferue their conqueſt in the Holy Land, when, by keeping the rules of their inſtitution in the firſt yeeres, they had purchaſed a great reputation of holynesse, and thereby drawne to themſelues an infinite wealth, became at laſt intolerable to kinges, and by one uniforme conſent, in the Councell of Vienna, were condemned, and the order abolifhed. The order was of a longer ſtanding by much then our Jefuites, but to kinges nothing ſo dangerous. The writers that mention them, do not agree vpon the cauſes of their generall hatred, and leaue the reader in ſuſpenſe, whether iuſtly they merited extermination or not: But poſteritie ſhall haue an aduantage in vnderſtanding the doctrine of Jefuites by their printed bookes, and their ſeditious practiſes, by the attempts they haue made againſt the eſtates and liues of princes. Secta hæc rebellis eſt, et nocens regibus. A rebellious ſect they are, and hurtfull enemies to kinges, cruel affaſins, teaching diſloyaltie, and plotting the deaths of princes, which all Evrope, and thou, France, by the reſt, can teſtifie. O kinges, when ſhall ye awake, and take it in your harts to fulfil Gods decree? When ſhall yee vindicate your crownes from the vniuſt uſurpations of the prieſt of Rome? Shal the diſgrace and violence done to ſome of your ſacred perſons for euer thus lye vnauenged? We know it ſhall not: But God hath his day, who will patiently attend. In the meane time, I ſhall with the Catholikes of this kingdome to conſider and looke more deeply in their profeſſion, then they yet haue done. The myſteries of the Romiſh Religion are not ſeene at the firſt. Surely, ſome of our Papiſtes doe not know them, eſpecially that principle, which bindes them to obey the Pope againſt al the world. Suarius¹ hath taught them, that it is to be held as an article of faith, that the Pope hath power to depoſe kings; and that hee who denyes this power to the Pope, denyes the Catholicke faith. By this is there no meane left to bee a Catholike, and remaine the Kings loyall ſubiect. To beleue the Popes power is ſuch, is vndenyable treaſon: To reſuſe it, is to renounce Catholick religion; which laſt, I perſwade myſelfe all true and naturall Scots will chooſe, and of the choiſe ſhall it neuer repent them. I beſeech God to open their eyes that are cloſed, and giue vs all to be contented with the Scriptures of God, which, by themſelues, are able to perfect vs vnto euery good worke. Farewell.

A TRVE RELATION of the Proceedings againſt IOHN OGILVIE, a Ieſuit, eſpecially at his Arraignement and Execution, which was at Glaſgow, the laſt of Februarie, beeing on Tueſday, 1615.

IOHN OGILVIE, alias WATSON, (for, according to the maners of his ſect, he was multinominis, a man of diuers names,) came into Scotland at Martimes 1613, and making his reſidence for the moſt part of that winter in the north parts of Scotland, tooke his journey to England a litle before Eaſter. Where, giuing out to ſome of his countrey-men, that he had a ſupplication for ſome wrongs to preſent to his Maieſtie, hee attended the Court ſome two moneths; and falling in acquaintance with a gentleman of the Weſt countrey, after his pretended buſineſſe was done, or the occaſion diſappointed, he returned into Scotland with the ſaide gentleman, in the beginning of Iune thereafter. Vpon this familiaritie, and other intelligences giuen him, he came to Glaſgow in Auguſt following; and finding a kinder receipt by certaine perſons in that citie, (who for that crime haue ſince bene juſtly condemned,) then either he expected, or became them to haue granted, he made ſome haunt and reſort thither at fundry times, till at laſt he was detected, and, by the direction of the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, who at that time kept his reſidence within the citie, apprehended and committed to priſon. It was the fourth of October, a litle after foure of the clocke in the afternoone, when perceaued to bee ouertaken ſomewhat in company, his examination was differed to the morrow after. There was found with him two or three litle bookes, containing directions for confeſſioun; his budget being in the houſe where he kept at night, was conuoyed out of the way by one of his familiars, and preſented the next day after, ſearch beeing made by the magiſtrates of the citie, therein was found his Maſſe garments, chalice, altar, and the reſt of that ſtuffe, with letters not fit at this time to bee divulgate. Amongſt others, a war-rand to diſpenſe with thoſe who poſſeſt church-liuings, after this tenor, quo ad diſpenſationem de bonis eccleſiaſticis poteris diſpenſare ut retineant quæ poſſident, dummodo in pios uſus aliquid impendant pro iudicio Confeſſarii diſpenſan-

tis. Hee had in the famin maile diuerſe Reliques, peeces of wood, bones, and a tuſte of Ignatiſ hair, the founder of the Ieſuites order, which I thinke was his chiefeſt ieuell.

In his examination, which was the next morning, before the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, the Biſhop of Argyle, the Lords Fleming, Boyde, and Killyth, the Proueſt of the citie of Glaſgow, S. Walter Stewart and S. George Elphingſton, knights, he confeſſed his true name to be Iohn Ogilvie; that he was borne in the North of Scotland, and had bene foorth of the countrey 21 yeeres; that hee liued at Grats, in a colledge of the Ieſuites, and was receiued in their order; that he returned into Scotland by the command of his ſuperiour, and was to ſtay there vntill hee were recalled, if no other impediment ſhould offer. Being required to giue his oath, that he ſhould declare nothing but trueth, in ſuch things as ſhould be demanded; he answered, ‘that he would take oath, but with ſome exceptions, namely, if hee were demanded in any thing that touched his eſtate and life, or that might endanger theſe or any of them, he would not anſwere, likewise if the ſame tended to the preiudice of others.’ And when it was replied, that, his exceptions being admitted, his oath was as good as no oath, ſeeing any queſtions that could be propoſed, would concerne ſome of theſe, he was induced at laſt to giue a ſimple oath, which he did vpon his knees; and riſing vp from the ground, ſaid, ‘I will neither lie nor æquiuoate, but what I ſay ſhalbe truth; and what I am aſked, if I find it impertinent for me to anſwere, I will ſay nothing, or declare plainly I will not tel.’

Then being inquired of his comming in Scotland, the time and buſines he came to do, answered, ‘his buſines was to ſaue ſoules.’ Touching the time when he came into Scotland, answered, ‘In the Iune before.’ where hee was deprehended to æquiuoate, notwithstanding of his proteſtation; for he meant of his laſt comming, and was aſked concerning the firſt. But the time at that examination was not vnderſtood. Being inquired of the places where he had bene receiued, denied to tel; and if he had ſaid Maſſe in any place, he answered, ‘hee would not ſay any thing that might worke preiudice to himſelfe or others:’ and becauſe he had profeſſed that hee would not lie, the reply he commonly made to ſuch queſtions, was, ‘I will not tell you.’

The Lordes, finding him thus obſtinate, returned him to a chamber in the Caſtle, which was prepared for him, nothing lacking that was requiſite for one of his qualitie; and there hee was kept to the 8 of December. Now and then conference was giuen him by diuers of the Miniſters, in all which, heate and choler was eſpyed much to ouer-rule him. The ſchole diſtinctions he had in readineſſe, and thereby, when hee could not ſhift the argument, made ſemblance to euade. But of Holy Scripture (as he ſeemed not to be well acquainted therewith), he made little reckoning, denying it still, after the Iesuites maner, to bee the onely rule of faith.

The 12 of Decenber, he was presented at Edinburgh, before the Lords Commissioners, appointed by his Maiesties Miffiue for his examination and tryall; namely, the Lord of Binning, Secretary, the Lord of Killyth, Sir Gidion Murray, Thefaurer-deputie, and Sir William Oliphant, his Maieftes Atturney-Generall; to whom he answered in al that was proponed, as of before at Glasgou. There, the letters intercepted with him were presented, which he acknowledged to be his; yet beeing demanded, touching certain particulars contained in them, he denied to giue ther lordships any satisfaction: And howbeit there was no perswasion omitted, that might haue induced any good nature to a better resolution, it auailed not. So as their lordships, perceiuing nothing but a pertinacious refusing in him to answer to points most reasonable, and withall apprehending his stay at Court, in the last summer, to haue bene for some worfe seruice then he could speede in, determined, according to the power giuen them, to extort by torments another confession: which being intimated to him, and he replying that he was ready to suffer what they pleased, it was thought fit to proue him with the most easiest forme of tryall that could be used. And here, it being remembered, that in the tryal of some criminal persons, it was found that nothing helped more to find out the trueth of the faults wherewith they were charged, than the with-holding of their naturall rest; it was aduised, that he should be kept without sleepe for some nights, which was accordingly done: and during which time it was perceiued, that hee remitted much of his former obstinacie, and falling to discouer certaine of his receauers in Edinburgh, gaue hope, that, by gentle usage, hee would bee drawne to giue their lordships contentment.

In the meane time, Christmasse approaching, at which time there is an ordinarie cessation from the affaires of Counsell and Sessioun, the Archbishop of Glasgou, beeing to repaire homewards, and vnwilling to discharge himselfe of that prisoner, till hee might at leasure worke him to a better minde, obtained the fauour of their L. to retaine him, in his companie, for a fourth-night after, or till hee shoulde returne himselfe to Edinburgh.

It pleased his Ma. in this time, whilest he was remaining at Glasgou, to send a Commission to the Archbishop of Glasgou, the Lord Bishop of Argyle, the Lord Fleming, S^r George Elphingston, and Iames Hammilton, Prouest of the citie of Glasgou, for trying the said Iesuit his opinion, touching his Highness royal power, and the Popes claimed iurisdiction, maintained by Bellarmine, Suarius, and others of that sort. The questions were these:

1. Whether the Pope be iudge, and haue power, in spiritualibus, ouer his Ma-ieftie, and whether that power will reach ouer his Maieftie, euen in temporalibus, if it be in ordine ad fpiritualia, as Bellarmine affirmeth ?

2. Whether the Pope haue power to excommunicate Kings, (efpecially fuch as are not of his church,) as his Maieftie ?

3. Whether the Pope haue power to depofe Kings, by him excommunicated ; and in particular, Whether he haue power to depofe the King his Maiefty ?

4. Whether it be no murther to flay his Maiefty, being fo excommunicated and depofed by the Pope ?

5. Whether the Pope haue power to affoyle fubiects from the oath of their borne and natural allegiance to his Maieftie ?

Vpon the 18 day of Ianuarie, the foresaid queftions being red diftinctly vnto him, and he required to declare his opinion thereanent, answered as followeth :

To the firft, ‘ That hee thought the Pope of Rome Iudge to his Maieftie, and to haue power ouer him, in fpiritualibus, if the King be a Christian :’ and where it is asked, if that power will reach ouer his Maieftie, in temporalibus ? hee fayes, ‘ hee is not obliged to declare his opinion therein, except to him that is Iudge in controverfies of religion, which hee acknowledges to be the Pope, or fome one hauing authoritie of him.’

To the fecond hee answereth, ‘ that the Pope hath power to excommunicate his Maieftie :’ and where it is faid, that the King is not of the Pope his church, hee faith, ‘ that all who are baptized, are vnder the Popes power.’

To the third, where it is asked, if the Pope haue power to depofe his Maieftie, beeing excommunicated ? Answereth, ‘ that hee will not declare his mind, except to him that is Iudge, in controuerfies of religion.’

To the fourth, whether it bee lawfull to flay his Maieftie, being excommunicated and depofed by the Pope ? Answereth, ut fupra.

To the fifth, whether the Pope hath power to affoyle fubiects from their borne and naturall allegiance to his Maieftie ? Answereth, ut fupra.

In all thefe Articles, he was particularly reſoned with by the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow, Mr Robert Boyd, Principal of the College, a man of rare erudition, and Mr Robert Scot, one of the Miniſters of the citie ; where it was alſo ſignified vnto him, that it concerned him in no leſſe then his life, what anſwere he ſhould make ; if he ſhould ſtand obſtinate in theſe he had giuen, he might know what fauour was to be expected for his other crimes. Not the leſſe, ratifying all that formerly was ſaid, hee added this further, ‘ that he condemned the oathes of ſupremacie and allegiance proponed to be ſworne in England,’ and would needes haue the writer to inferſt thoſe wordes ; to all which hee put his hand, ſubſcribing thus,

IOHANNES OGILVEUS, Societatis Ieſu.

Theſe anſweres beeing ſent to his Maieſtie, vnder the teſtification of the foresaide Commiffioners, his highneffe gaue order to the Lordes of the Priuie Counsell, for his triall; which was appointed to be at Glasgou, the last of Februarie. Immediately after, the Archbishop of Glasgou directed the Prouest and Baylies of the citie vnto him, to signifie that Tuesday following was appointed for his arraignment; and that hee would not bee accused for Masse saying, or any thing else that concerned his profession, but for the answers that hee had made to the demands propofed to him by his Maiesties Commiffioners. They declared also, that if hee should, vpon better resolution, recall those answeres, and apply himselfe to giue his Maiestie satisfaction, in other points, which of deutie hee was obliged vnto, the said Archbishop would vse his credite with his highneffe and the Lordes of the Priuie Counsell, for his safetie. His answer was, ‘ that he thanked his lordship, for the good will and kindneffe offered; but he was so little minded to recall any thing hee had said, as when hee came to the place, hee would make a commentarie vpon his answeres.’

The Ministers of Glasgou, accompanied with Maister Williame Struthers, one of the Ministers of Edinburgh, did also visite him, some two dayes before, aduising him to the same purpose, and offering him their best counsell and comfort. His answer was, ‘ That he had resolved what to doe; and if hee stood in neede of their comfort, hee should aduertise.’

The Earle of Lowthiane, trusting by conference to bring him to a better minde, went vnto him at diuers tymes, using many persuasions to draw him from his obstinate course: but nothing could preuaile with him, as in the proceedings ye shall perceiue.

THE ARAIGNMENT of JOHN OGILVIE, on Tuesday the last of Februarie, in the town-house of GLASGOW, before Iames Hammilton, Prouest of Glasgou, Iames Bell, Coline Campbell, and Iames Bradwood, Baylies of the citie, Iustices appointed by speciall commission for that busines, by the Lordes of Priuie Counsell. The foresaid IUDGES being assisted by the honourable LORDS there present:—John Archbishop of Glasgou, James Marques of Hammilton, Robert Earle of Lowthiane, William Lord Sanquhar, John Lord Fleming, Robert Lord Boyde, and Sir Walter Stewart, Baylie deputie of the regalitie of Glasgou.

ON Tuesday, the last of Februarie, a litle after 11 of the clocke, in the forenoone, the Court beeing set, Mr William Hay of Baro, Commissar of Glasgou, deputed by speciall commission from Sir William Oliphant of Newtoun, his Majesties Atturney Generall, produced the Inditement following: together with the citation used against those who were to passe vpon the jurie, and the roll of their particular names, subscribed with his hand, according to the custome obserued in those cases.

THE INDITEMENT of JOHN OGILVIE, IESUIT, after the forme of the law of Scotland.—JOHN OGILVIE, by your subscription, a Priest of the late execrable order of IESUITS, you are indited and accused, That, forasmuch as God, the author of all righteous gouvernement, hauing established Kings and Magistrats his lieutenants vpon earth, for repressing of violence, oppression, and vice, and the promoting of pietie and justice, hath, in his particular grace and fauor, blessed this countrey with a more ancient, iust, and permanent descent of lawfull Kings, than any other nation of the world; and extended our felicitie beyond the happines of our antecessors, by the justice, wisdom, and clemencie of his Maiesteis prosperous reigne; and hath not onely rewarded his Maiesteis zeale and righteoufnes with wealth and peace, but also honoured and strengthened him with the accession of the most mightie and flourishing kingdomes of England, France, and Ireland. Which visible fauours, proceeding directly from Gods most bountifull hand, moued the whole Estates of this kingdome, assembled in the Parliament holden at Perth, the 9 of Iulie, 1606, To acknowledge his Maiesties soveraigne authoritie, princely power, royall prerogatiue, and priuilege of his crowne, ouer all estates, persons, and causes whatsoeuer, within the kingdome: And all in one voice, faithfully promise to maintaine, defend, obey, and aduance the life, safetie, honour, dignitie, soueraigne authoritie, and prerogatiue royall of his sacred Maiestie, and priuiledges of his crowne: And to withstand all persons, powers, and estates, who should presume, preasse, or intend any wayes to impugne, hurt, or impair, the same: As also, his Maiestie, with aduise of the whole estates of this kingdome, in the Parliament holden at Edinburgh, the 22 day of May, anno 1584, ratified, approued, and perpetually confirmed, his Majesties royall power and authoritie ouer all estates, as well spiritual as temporall, within this realme: And statuted and ordained, that his Highnesse, his heyres and successouris, by themselves and their Counselles, were, and in all times comming should bee, Iudges, competent to all persons, his Highnesse subjectes, of whatsoeuer estate, degree, function, or condition that euer they be of, spiritual or temporall, in all matters wherein they or any of them should be apprehended, summoned, or charged to answere vnto such things as should be inquired of them, by our said soueraign Lord and his Counsell: And that none of them, who should be apprehended, called, or summoned, to the effect foresaid, should presume or take in hand to decline the iudgement of his Highnesse, his hayres and successours, or their Counsell, in the premisses, vnder the paine of treason: And likewise, by the 48 Act of King Iames the First his Parliament, and diuers other Parliaments thereafter, it is ordained, that all the King his lieges liue and be gouerned vnder the Kings lawes and statutes, and vnder no lawes of other countries and realmes, vnder the paines of treason, and others; (as is) particularly expressed in the Acts before mentioned, and other lawes of this kingdome. Notwithstanding whereof, it is of trueth and veritie, that you, hauing renounced your naturall allegiance and deutie to your natie and righteous King, and cast off all reuerence, respect, and obedience to his foueraigne authoritie and lawes, and dedicated your mind and actions to the vnlawfull obedience of forraine powers, aduersaries to his Majestie; and resolving, so farre as in you lieth, to seduce his Majesties subjectes from the faith and allegiance due to his Majestie, repaired to his countrey, in the moneth of Iune last past, or thereabout, and by your conferences, intifements, auricular confessions, Masse-saying, and other subtile and craftie meanes, indeuoured your selfe, not onely to corrupt many of his Maiesties lieges, in religion, but also to peruert them from their duetifull obedience due to his Majestie, till you were discouered and apprehended by the Archbishop of Glasgou; who, with diuers his Maiesties Counsellors, and others his good subjectes, used all Christian and charitable meanes to bring you to the sense of your hainous offences, and desire of amendment thereof: But they, losing all their well-intended labours, were (in respect of your peruerse obstinacie) commanded by his Majestie, to enter to your examination, and the tryall of your hainous crimes and transgressions. And especially, the saide Archbishop of Glasgou, and many others of good rauke and qualitie adjoined to him, by his Majestie, for your examination, hauing, vpon the 18 day of Ianuarie last, called you before them, to examine you vpon some particuler interrogatories, prescribed by his Majestie to be demanded of you, as directly concerning his Majesties moste sacred person, life, crowne, and estate. And chiefly, you beeing demanded by them, whether the Pope hath power to depose Kings, beeing excommunicated? And in particular, if he haue power to depose the Kings Majestie, our foueraigne, being excommunicated by him? You answered, treasonably, that you woulde not declare your mind, except to him that is iudge in the controuersies of religion, whom (by your answere made to the latter part of the first interrogatorie, demanded of you that day) you declared to be the Pope, or any hauing authoritie from him: Albeit, by the Acts of Parliament, and lawes of this Realme, made in the yeeres of God 1560 and 1567, it is statuted and ordained, that the Bishop of Rome (called the Pope) shall haue no iurisdiction nor authoritie within this Realme, in any time comming: And thereby, not onely declined treasonably his Maiesties iurisdiction, allowing of the Popes iurisdiction, which is discharged by Acts of Parliament, as said is; but hath committed most damnable and high treason, in not acknowledging that the Pope hath no power to depose his Maiestie, who, holding his crowne and authoritie absolutely, fouerainly, and immediatly of God, may not be deposed by any earthly person, power, or authoritie. And thereafter, being demanded, If it be lawfull to slay his Majesty, being excommunicated and deposed by the Pope?

you answered, ut supra; which was, that you woulde not declare your mind till you were before the Pope, or others hauing authoritie from him: Thereby, not onely declining, treasonably, his Maiesties iurisdiction and authoritie royall; but by your not answering clearely, that it is altogether vnlawfull, damnable, and diabolicall, once to thinke that it is lawfull to slay his most sacred Majestie, you haue committed most hainous, pernicious, and vnpardonable treason. And lastly, being demanded, If the Pope had power to assoile his Majesties borne subiectes from their naturall alleageance? you answered, ut supra: and thereby, both declined, treasonably, his Highnes iurisdiction and authoritie royall, in refusing to answere before his Maiesties Counsellers and Commiſſioners foresaid, in one matter, meerey concerning his royal power ouer his people, and their subiection to his Maiestie: and also committed wilfull and detestable treason, in not acknowledging, professedly and presently, that none on earth had power to assoile his Maiesteis subiects from their naturall subiection and alleageance to him. But that it may bee knowne that your treason proceeded of forethought felonie and obstinate resolution, you freely and vnrequiredly did adde to your foresaid answeres, this damnable conclusion, that you condemned the oathes of supremacie and alleageance giuen to his Maiestie, by his subiects, in his Dominions; wherby it is apparent, that your erand to this Countrie hath beene, to infect his Highnesse subiects with the poison of your pestilent and treasonable opinion foresaid, to the subuerſion of Religion, ouerthrow of his Maiesties authoritie and crown, and destruction of his most sacred person. And albeit, the course of all his Maiesties life and reigne, hath manifested how vnwilling hee hath euer beene to use the seueritie of his Lawes against those who hath said and heard Masse, and otherwise controuened the Acts of Parliament made against idolatrous papistrice, and practisers thereof, within this Kingdome; desiring rather to reclaime them, by instruction, from their errorrs, to the knowledge and profession of the trueth: And when he found them obdurat, and of desperate resolution, relieuing the countrie of the dangerous progresse of their courses, by their imprisonment and banishment, whereof you had such experience, in the persones of your owne complices, condemned for their manifest crymes, as might verie probable haue made you to haue expected the like; if anie memorie of your natiue duetie and borne alleageance had possessed your mind: But you, being altogether destitute thereof, by the three last articles of your Depositions aboue written, you haue so plainly discouered, that you professedly approue the meanes, and wish the effect, of the ouer-throwe of his Maiesties estate, the destruction of his Highnesse person, and seduction of his natiue subiectes from their subiection and duetifull obedience; that thereby, and by euery one of your foresaid answeres, you haue committed moſte hainous, detestable, and vnpardonable treason, and deseruedly incurred the most rigorous paines therof to be executed vpon your body, lands, and goods, with all extremities, to the terrour of others.

THE Inditement being read, Maister William Hay, substitute for his Maiesties Attorney, opened the same, to the effect following.—Albeit the Inditement of it selfe be cleare enough, and representeth sufficiently to my Lordes Iustices, their honourable Lordships heere assisting, and to your selfe, Iohn Ogilvie, who standes there accused, the weight and gravitie of the crime by you committed, yet I shall resume it to you in few words, that your answeres may be the more distinct, and without mistaking.

You are not accused of saying Masse, nor of seducing his Maiesteis subjectes to a contrarie religion, nor of any point touching you in conscience, properly; but for declining his Maiesties authoritie, against the lawes and statutes of the land, and for maintaining treasonable opinions; such as we, of this Realme, haue not heard by any auowed. The statutes, mentioned in your Inditement, make it treason not to answer the Kings Maiestie, or his Counsell, in any matter which shall be demanded: You beeing examined by my Lord Archbishop of Glasgow, and other honourable persons adioyned to him, by his Maiesties special Commission, refused to answer vnto diuers interrogatories proponed to you by their Lordships; and, at the same time, professedly auouched the Pope of Rome his iurisdiction, which, by the Lawes of the countrie, is many yeeres since plainly discharged: Therefore, haue you incurred the penaltie contained in the statutes, and the same ought and should be executed vpon you.

It is further laid vnto your charge, that you, being demanded in the particulars, namely, Whether the Pope hath power to depose the Kings Maiestie, our soueraigne? Secondly, Whether it be lawfull to slay his Maiestie, being deposed by the Pope? Thirdly, Whether the Pope hath power to assoile his Maiesties subjects from their naturall allegiance, or not? You denied to giue any answer, touching any of these points, except yee were inquired thereof by the Pope, or others hauing authoritie from him; and so not acknowledging that his Maiesties crowne and authoritie is held immediatly and souerainely of God, the author of all gouernement; that it is detestable, once to thinke, that his sacred Maiestie may bee lawfully killed; and that no man hath power to assoile his Maiesties subjectes from their naturall allegiance to his Highnesse: You haue, in these points, and euery one of them, committed most hainous treason; for the which, what you say in your own defense, I see not. And yet further, that it may be seene, how desperate your resolution is, in al these points, although you were not required concerning the oaths of supremacy and allegiance giuen to his Maiestie by his subjectes, ye freely, and out of your owne motiues, condemned these oathes, as impious and vnlawfull. Thereby hath it appeared, what a wicked and treasonable mind you foster against his Maiestie, our soueraigne. If you should deny it, heere are your answeres, subscribed with your owne hand, which ye cannot but acknowledge; them I desire to bee read, as likewise the feuerall statutes of Parliament, which you are alledged to haue transgressed; and thereafter, since his Maiestie is pleased that the ordinarie course of tryall be kept vnto you, you shall haue libertie to say for your selfe, either against the relevancie of the Inditement, or verification produced, what you thinke best.

Then were read the statutes of Parliament, mentioned in the Inditement, and the said Iohn Ogilvies answeres to the demands proponed vnto him; which he acknowledged for his owne, and the subscription thereto subioyned: after which, hauing licence of the Court to say what he coulede for himselfe, he spake to this effect:—‘ First, vnder protestation that I doe no way acknowledge this iudgement, nor receiue you, that haue that Commission there produced, for my iudges, I deny any point laid against me to be treason: for if it were treason, it would bee treason in all places, and in all kingdomes; but that,’ saith he, ‘ is knowne not to be so. As for your Actes of Parliament, they are made by a number of partiall men, the best of the land not agreeing with them, and of matters not subiect to their forum, or iudicatorie, for which I will not giue a rotten figge!’

‘ Where I am thought an enemy to the Kings Maiesties authoritie, I knowe none other authoritie he hath, but that which he received from his predecessors, who acknowledged the Pope of Rome his iurisdiction. If the King,’ saith he, ‘ will be to me as his predecessors were to mine, I will obey and acknowledge him for my King; but if he doe otherwise and play the runnegate from God, as he and you all doe, I will not acknowledge him, more than this old hatte!’

Heere the Archbishop of Glasgow interrupted his speech, desiring him to deliuer his mind in a greater calme, and with more reuerent speeches of his Maiestie (for he vttered those things in a vehement passion, and as one transported with fury); hee remembered him, that hee was accused vpon his life, before iudges that were authorized by his Maiesties Commission: to decline the iudgement, or raile against his Maiesties authoritie, was bootlesse, and in a man of his profession, being an Ecclesiasticke, very scandalous. He should rather take another course to amend what he had offended in, and recall his former answeres, if they had not proceeded from a deliberate purpose; or if hee were resolute to maintaine them, to doe it with reason, and in a moderate sort; that this were his best, either for iustifying himselfe, and the opinions he held, or for mouing the Iudges, and their Lordships that were assisting, to commiserat his case: he aduertised him withall, to be more temperate in his speeches concerning his Majestie, otherwise he would not be licenced thus to offend.

To this, Ogilvie made some little answer, 'That hee would take the aduertisement, and speake more coldly:' howbeit, hee would neuer acknowledge the iudgement, nor thinke they had power to sit on his life, but said, 'And for the reuerence I doe you, to stand bare-headed before you, I let you know it is, ad redemptionem vexationis, et non ad agnitionem Iudicii.

The Aduocate here insisted, that seeing all his answeres tended to decline the iudgement, and that hee brought no reason why the Inditement should not goe to a tryall, that the Iurie should be chosen and sworne at the Barre, according to the custome.

THE NAMES OF THE IURIE.

Sir Geo. Elphinston of Blythwood,	Hew Crawford of Iordane-hill,	John Dunlop of Powmilne,
Sir Thomas Boyd of Bonethaw,	John Carchore of that Ilk,	John Stewart, burges of Aire,
Sir J ^r Edmeston of Dunraith, elder,	Hew Kennedy, prouest of Aire,	John Dumbar, burges there,
James Murehead of Lachope,	William Makarrel of Hill-houfe,	James Johnston, burges there,
James Robertson of Ernock,	James Blaire, baylie of Aire,	John Cunningham of Rawes.

It was allowed the prisoner to challenge any of the fore-named persons, and to oppose vnto their admiffion: who said, 'He had but one exception for them all: they were either enemies to his cause, or friendes; if enemies, they could not bee admitted vpon his triall, and if they were his friends, they should stand prisoners at the Barre with him.'

The Iurie, being knowne to be all discrete and substantiall persons, were instantly sworne and admitted.

Then was the Inditement read againe, in the hearing of the Iurie, and the evidences shewed them for verification thereof, which ofbefore were produced. And the prisoner, beeing of new remembred to say what hee woulde for himselfe, for the better information of the Iurie, spake these things following:

'I wish these Gentlemen to consider well what they doe. I cannot bee tried nor iudged by them; and whatsoever I suffer here, it is by way of iniurie, and not of iudgment. Iniuria est, non iudicium. I am accused of treason, bot haue done none offence, neither will I begge mercy.'

'This is strange,' sayeth the Archbishop, 'you haue done none offence, and yet you are come in his Maiesties kingdome, and hath laboured to peruert his Highnesse subjects; both of these are against the law: In this haue ye not offended?'

'Not,' he answereth; 'I came by commandement, and if I were even now fourth of the kingdome, I should returne: neither doe I repent any thing, but that I haue not been so busie as I should, in that which yee call peruerting. I hope to come to Glasgou againe, and to doe more good in it. If all the haire of mine head were priestes, they should all come into the kingdome.'

'And doe you not,' sayeth the Archbishop, 'esteeme it a fault to goe against the King his commandement, especially in this point of discharging you his kingdom. If a King haue any power within his kingdome, it seemes hee may rid himselfe and his countrey of those with whom he is offended; and it fauoures of great rebellion to say otherwise.'

To this Ogilvie replied, 'I am a subiect as free, as the King is a King: he cannot discharge me, if I be not an offender, which I am not.' And being asked, for what offences he might be discharged by the King? Answered, 'in the cafes of theft and murther.'

'All this while,' said the Archbishop, 'you come not to answere any thing to the points of your Inditement. Why did you decline his Maiesties authoritie, and refused to shew your opinion anent the Pope his power in deposing Kings, and loosing subiects from their oath of allegiance? And when it was asked you, if it were lawfull to slay the King, being deposed and excommunicated by the Pope, which any loyall hearted subiect will abhorre to think of, why did you not simply condemne it as vnlawfull? For in that you doe not condemne it, you shewe your selfe of the opinion of the rest of your sect, who in their bookes maintaine, that it is both lawfull and commendable to slay Kings, if the Popes commission goe fourth once for it.'

'For the declining of the Kings authoritie,' sayeth he, 'I will doe it still in matters of religion, for with such matters hee hath nothing to doe; neither haue I done any other thing, but that which the Ministers did at Dundie; they would not acknowledge his Maiesties authoritie, in spirituall matters, more than I; and the best Ministers of the land are still of that minde, and if they be wise, will continue so.'

The Archbishop replied, 'that he was mistaken, both in the place and matter; for it was not at Dundie, but Aberdein, where eight Ministers, meeting to a General Assëmbly, contended not against the Kinges authoritie, but that the Assëmbly called to that place and time, could not be discharged by his Maiesties Commissioner: Neither should the fact of a few, taken at the worst, be esteemed the deed of the whole. These haue bene punished for their offences, and some of them haue confessed their errour, and bene graciously pardoned by his Maiestie: All good Ministers professe otherwise, and our religion teacheth us to acknowledge his Maiestie, our onely supreme iudge, in all causes. The King is keeper of both Tables, and his place beares him not onely to the ruling of his subiects in iustice, and preferuing equitie amongst them; but euen to maintaine religion and Gods pure worship, of which he should haue principal care. Your lord, the Pope, hath not onely denied this authoritie to Kings, which God giueth them, but usurpeth to himselfe a power of deposing and killing, when he is displeas'd; and it were the lesse to be regarded, if this his usurpation had gone no further then your pennes; but you haue entred, by this pretended right, the throats of the greatest Kings, as your practise vpon the two last Henries of France beares witnesse. You are not able to lay such imputation vpon vs, nor our profession, which teaches, that, next vnto God Almightye, all men are bound to feare, serue, and honour their Kings. But what answere you, touching these demandes? Hath the Pope power to depose the King? Or is it not murther to kill him, being deposed by the Pope?

'I refused of before,' said hee, 'to answere such questions, because in answering, I should acknowledge you iudges in controuersies of religion, which I doe not. I will not cast holy things to dogges.'

'And is it,' said the Archbishop, 'a point of faith, that the Pope may depose his Maiestie? Or do you think it a controuersie in religion, Whether his Maiestie (whom God saue) may be lawfully killed or not?'

To this Ogilvie replied, 'It is a question amongst the Doctors of the Church, and many hold the affirmatiue, not improbably: A Councill hath not yet determined the point; and if it shall be concluded by the Church, that the Pope hath such power, I will giue my life in defence of it, and if I had a thousand liues, I would bestowe them that way, if they will make an article of faith of it.' Being vrged to declare his owne opinion, especially in that point, whether it were murther to kill his Maiestie, being deposed by the Pope, he answered, 'that he would not say it were vnlawfull, though he should saue his life by it.' Then going on with a long speech of the Pope his power, affirmed the King to be subject to him, by the vertue of Christes saying to Peter, Pasce oves meas. 'That if the King offended against the Catholicke Church, the Pope might punish him aswell as a shepheard or the poorest fellow in the countrey. That in abrogating the Popes authoritie, the estates of Parliament had gone beyond thair limites, and that the King, in vsurping the Popes right, had lost his owne. Nam qui rapit jus alienum,' sayeth hee, 'perdit jus ad suum.'

Being asked touching the oath of allegiance, why he did condemne it, and the famine being read vnto him, he said, 'It was a damnable oath, against God and his trueth, and that it was treason to sweare it; because it brought the Kings person and state in danger; since this kingdome,' sayeth he, 'was Christian, the Popes supreme power was alwayes acknowledged; this being cast off, (as we see in the Act of your Parliament,) against all reason and conscience, and subiectes forced to sweare to a matter so vnlawfull, what maruell that attemptes and dangerous courses be taken against him? Iustissima lex est, ut quæ agit aliquis, talia patiatur. But would the King leaue off his vsurping vpon the Pope, hee might liue without feare, aswell as the King of Spaine, or any other Christian prince.' And with this hee intermixed some speeches, of his owne seruice, and the seruice of other Iesuits done to his Maiestie, whereof hee saide, 'Neither Bishop, nor

Minister, nor all the Bishops and Ministers in his Maiesties kingdomes, had done or could doe the like.'

The further hee proceeded in speaking, his speeches still grew to bee the more intollerable; therefore the Archbishop of Glasgow, willing him to make an end, did close all with some wordes to the Iurie, to this effect. Gentlemen, and others, who are named vpon this Affise, though I minded to haue saide nothing, but fitten heere a witnesse of the proceeding, I haue bene forced, by his proud and impudent speeches, somewhat to replie; and must, with your patience, say a little more. It is this same day, two and twentie weekes past, that this prisoner fell into mine handes; since that time hee hath had leifure to thinke enough what course was fittest for himself to take, for satisfiing his Maiestie, whome he had offended: neither hath he lacked counsel and aduise, the best that we could giue him. Besides, hee hath found on our parte nothing but courteous dealing, and better intertainment then (I must now say it) hee hath deserued. Mine owne hopes were, that hee would haue followed another course then I see hee hath taken, and not stande to the answeres which hee made to those demandes, which were moued vnto him by his Maiesties Commiffioners, and you haue seene: But if his answeres at the first were treasonable, they are nowe so little bettered, as in all your hearinges, hee hath vttered speeches moste detestable, made a commentarie worse then the text was, and shewed himselfe to carrie the minde of an arrant and desperate tratour. You perceiue, he obscures not his affection towards the Kinges Majestie, our foueraigne, in all his speeches; preferring the Pope to his Majestie: And, which is more intollerable, affirmeth the Kinges Maiestie to haue lost the right of his kingdome, by vsurping vpon the Pope. Hee will not say it is vnlawfull to kill his Maiestie; hee sayeth, it is treason for subiectes to sweare the oath of alleageance; and meaneth so much, in his last wordes, as the Kinges Maiesties life and estate cannot bee assured, except hee render himselfe the Popes vassall.

Thus hath hee left you little to doe: except that his Majesties pleasure is, the ordinarie forme bee kept with him, you shoulde neuer neede once to remoue: all his speeches haue bene so stuffed with treason, that I am sure the patience of the Noble-men, and others heere present, hath bene much prouoked.

In al that he hath said, I can marke but two things alledged by him, for the Popes authoritie ouer Kinges: the wordes of our Sauour to Saint Peter, Pasce oues meas, Feede my sheepe; and the subjection of Kinges, especially of our Kinges, since the kingdome became Christian, to the Pope. For the wordes of our Sauour, howe little they serue his purpose, I haue no neede to tell you. To feed the sheepe of Christ, is not, I hope, to depose Kinges from their estates, nor to inflame the heartes of subiectes against princes: much lesse to kill and dispatch.

them : Wee are better taught then to bee deceiued with such glosses. Saint Peter made neuer that sense of those wordes, and teacheth vs a farre other doctrine, in his first Epistle, fift chapter, and second and third verse.

I will not spende time with such purpose, onely this I muste saye, that whatsoever was Saint Peters prerogatiue, the Pope of Rome hath nothing to doe with it : for hee cannot bee Saint Peters successour, that hath forsaken his doctrine, and gone against his practise directly, both in that and other points of Christian faith. And for the antiquitie of his usurped power, I may justly say, that Master Ogilvie is not well seene in antiquitie, or then speaketh against his knowledge, when he saith, that this power of the Pope was euer acknowledged by Christian Kinges : The Bishops of Rome, for many yeeres, made no such claime, neither did Emperours or Kinges euer dreame of such subjection : Long it was ere the Pope of Rome came to the height of commanding Kinges, and not till hee had oppressed the church, vnder the pretext of Saint Peters keyes, bearing downe all the Bishops within Christendome : which hauing done, then hee made his inuasion vpon princes, and that by degrees. The histories of all ages make this plaine, and the resisting hee found by Kinges in their kingdomes, testifieth that they neuer acknowledged his superioritie. Of our owne, howbeit, as wee lye farre from his feat, so had wee lesse businesse, and fewer occasions of contradiction ; yet can I make it seene, in diuers particulars, when any question fell out anent the prouision of Bishops and Archbishops to their places, the Bulles of Rome were so little respected, as the Kinges predecessors haue always preferred and borne out their owne choice, and the interdictions made upon the realme, by these occasions, not without some imputation of weaknesse to the Sea Apostolicke, haue bene recalled. The superstitions of Rome were amongst vs last embraced, and with the first, by the mercies of God, shaken off : Whatsoever you bragge of your antiquitie, it is false, both in this and all the pointes of your profession else, which I could cleare, if this time or place were fitting. But to you of this Iurie, I haue this only more to say, you are to inquire vpon the veritie of the Inditement, whether such and such things as are alledged to be committed by him, haue bene so or not ? You haue his subscription, which hee acknowledgeth ; you heare him selfe, and how hee hath moste treasonably disauowed his Majesties authoritie : It concernes you onely to pronounce, as you shall find verified by the speeches that you haue heard, and the testimonies produced. For the rest, the Iustices knowe sufficiently what to doe, and will serue God and his Majestie, according to the Commission giuen them.

Maister William Hay, Aduocate for his Majestie, asked instrumentes vpon the prisoners treasonable speeches vttered in the hearing of the Iurie, and his ratification of the former answeres made to his Maiesties Commissioners : Likewise, for the further clearing of the Inditement, repeated the Actes of Parliament mentioned in the said Inditement, with the Act of Priuie Counsell, made anent his Maiesties supremacie, and the oath of allegiance: And desired the Iurie deeply to weigh and consider the peruerse and diuelish disposition of the partie accused, to the effect they might, without scruple, proceede in his conuiction. And according to his place, protested for Wilfull Errorr, if they should acquite him of any point contained in the saide Inditement.

[VERDICT.] The persons named vpon the Iurie remoued to the higher house, which was prepared for them; and hauing elected Sir George Elphinstone chancellor, all in one voice, found the prisoner GUILTY of the whole Treasonable crimes contained in the Inditement.—[SENTENCE.] Which being reported by the saide Sir George Elphinston, and confirmed by the whole Iurie, then returned into the Court, Judgement was giuen, by direction of the Iustices, That the saide Iohn Ogilvie, for the Treasons by him committed, should be HANGED and QUARTERED.

THE Archbishop of Glasgow demanded, if Ogilvie would say any thing else?

Ogilvie answered, ‘No, my lord, but I giue your lordship thankes for your kindnesse, and will desire your hand.’

The Archbishop said, ‘If you shall acknowledge your faulte done to his Maiestie, and craue God and his Highnesse pardon, I will giue you both hand and heart, for I wish you to die a good Christian.’

Then Ogilvie asked, ‘If he should be licensed to speake vnto the people?’

The Archbishop answered, ‘If you will declare, that you suffer according to the Law, justly for your offence, and craue his Maiestie pardon for your treasonable speeches, you shall be licensed to say what you please; otherwise you ought not to be permitted.’

Then saide hee, ‘God haue mercie vpon mee!’ And cryed alowd, ‘If there be heere anie hidden Catholickes, let them pray for me; but the prayers of hereticks I will not haue.’ And so the Court arose.

[OGILVIE’S conduct at the time of his EXECUTION.]

AFTER iudgement was giuen, by the space of some three houres, he remained in the place where he was conuicted, hauing leasure graunted him to prepare himselfe for death. Hee continued a while vpon his knees at prayer, with a colde devotion; and when the houre of execution approached, his handes being tied by the executioner, his spirits were perceiued much to faile him. In going towards the scaffold, the throng of people was great, and he seemed much amazed; and when he was vp, Master Robert Scot and Master William Struthers, Ministers, very grauely and christianly exhorted him to a humble acknowledgement of his offence, and if any thing troubled his mind, to disburthen his conscience. In matters of religion, they faide, they would not then enter, but prayed him to resolue and fettle his minde, and seeke mercie and grace from God, through Iesvs Christ, in whom onely saluation is to bee found. Ogilvie answered, ‘ That he was prepared and resolued.’ Once he said, ‘ That he died for religion ;’ but vttered this so weakly, as scarce he was heard by them that stood by vpon the scaffold. Then addressing himselfe to execution, he kneeled at the ladder foot, and prayed. Master Robert Scot, in that while, declaring to the people, that his suffering was not for any matter of religion, but for haynous treason against his Maiestie, which hee prayed God to forgiue him. Ogilvie, hearing this, faide, ‘ He doeth me wrong.’ One called Iohn Abircrumbie, a man of little wit, replied, ‘ No matter, Iohn, the moe wrongs the better.’ This man was seene to attend him carefully, and was euer heard asking of Ogilvie some token before his death ; for which, and other businesse he made with him, he was put off the scaffold.

Ogilvie ending his prayer, arose to goe vp the ladder, but strength and courage, to the admiration of those who had seene him before, did quite forsake him ; he trembled and shaked, sayng, he would fall, and could hardly bee helped vp on the top of the ladder : He kissed the hang-man, and said, Maria, Mater gratiæ, ora pro me ; Omnes Angeli, orate pro me ; Omnes Sancti, Sanctæque, orate pro me : but with so low a voice, that they which stood at the ladder foote, had some difficultie to heare him.

The executioner willed him to commende his soule to God, pronouncing these wordes vnto him, ‘ Say, Iohn, Lord haue mercy on mee ! Lord receiue my soule !’ which he did, with such feebleness of voice, that scarcely hee could be heard : Then was hee turned off, (his left foot for a space taking holde of the ladder, as a man vnwilling to die,) and hung till hee was dead. His quartering, according to the iudgement giuen, was for some respectes not used, and his body buried in a place that is kept for male-factors.

THIS was the ende of that vnhappy man, in whose death, any man that had eyes might see what a gracelesse and comfortlesse religion Poperie is : The power of religion manifesteth it selfe chiefly in the houre of death : The sight of a reconciled God, the assurance and perswasion of fauour through Christ, furnissheth spirite and boldnesse, and maketh a man willing to depart and quite this life : But Popish religion teacheth vncertainetie of saluation, and leadeth a man to other fauours, who can neither helpe nor comfort, in the houre of death. What maruaile, that men, who leane to such rotten and vnprofitable helps, lacking and disappointed of the assistance they hoped for, shewe a faint and cowardly minde at their last !

This onely I haue further to aduertife, that fince his execution, wee haue vnderftood, by fome perfons who vifited him, at times, during his imprifonment, that, amongft other his fpeeches with them, hee faid this, ‘ That if hee had efcaped his apprehenfion at this time, and liued till Whitfunday next, hee fhould haue done that which all the Bifhops and Minifters, both in England and Scotland, fhoulde neuer haue helped ! And, if hee might haue liued at libertie vnto that time, hee woulde willingly haue bene drawne in peeces with horfes, and haue giuen his bodie to haue bene tormented ! Whereof, what fhall any man collect, but that this villane was about fome desperate enterprife ?

God, that in mercie hitherto detected and difappointed the malicious devices of the wicked againft his Church, continue with vs his fauour, and giue vs to depend ftedfaftly on his prouidence. And to all the enemies of God and the King, let it befall, which wee haue feene vpon this wicked and accursed perfon. Amen.

Uttering “Tressonable, Blasphemous, and Damnable Speiches” against the King.

[THE Trial of JOHN FLEMING, elder, in Cockburnspath, which follows, is so remarkable in its nature, and the Sentence of death pronounced upon the unfortunate pannel, is so frightfully disproportioned to the pretended crime for which he stood charged, that, did it not occur in the authentic Records of a Supreme Tribunal, and were it otherwise unvouched, no honourable mind could for an instant admit the probability of its truth. Had mention been made of this fact in any private correspondence of the period, or in contemporary Memoirs or Annals, it would have been at once discredited by all, as an unprincipled libel on the character of our British Solomon! Unhappily, however, for the character of King James VI, the event here recorded is too true, and there can be no doubt that it did actually occur. The names of other victims to the same insane ideas of justice, are inscribed, in characters of blood, on the pages of our Criminal Records. It is unnecessary to recapitulate such instances, at any length, in this place. It is enough merely to refer the reader to the Cases of Dil-soun, Aug. 3, 1596;¹ Tennent, Oct. 10, 1600;² Cornuall, Apr. 25, 1601,³ and Ross, executed Sep. 10, 1618.⁴]

High Treason—Taking and Detaining the Castle of Dynnievaig—Resisting King's Lieutenant, &c.

[As the Editor has already entered so fully into the subject of THE REBELLION IN ILAY by Sir James Maconeill, &c., it is unnecessary to occupy further space here ; more especially as Mr Gregory's Historical Researches, already far advanced, are exclusively devoted to the elucidation of such points.¹

The following interesting memorials have been preserved by Calderwood, in his MS. Church History,² which the Editor believes will prove an acceptable illustration of this subject. They have been discovered since the former sheets were sent to press. 'SIR JAMES M^cKONNELL escaped out of the Castle of Edinburgh, where he had been wairdit the space of eighteen years, upon the 24 of Maij, the day after Angus Ooge, his brother, and eight or nine of his complices, were brought to Edinburgh. It was thought that he escaped not without the privity of these who had credit. In the beginning of July, he entered in Ila, with a number of men of THE ISLES, and, within three or four dayes after his landing, took the Castle, slew the Captain and other three or four. His forces increasng, he went out of and spoiled the lands belonging to the Earl of Argyle, compelled the tenants to pay him their maills and duties, and keepest about him five or six hundreth men. Upon the eight of July, Angus Oge, brother to Sir James M^cKonnell, and his complices, were hanged at the Market Crofs of Edinbr. They affirmed that George Grahame assured them, in the Chancellours and Counsell's name, that they would procure the Kings favour and safety, both of their lives and lands, if they would render the pledges ; and desired them to keep the Houfe till the King's favour were obtained, or elis they had not made resistance to the King's Lievtennant. Because the said George was not troubled by the Counsell or any other, the people thought hard of it.—Aug. 16. The Earl of Argile came to Edinburgh, sent from Court be THE KING to passe upone Sir James M^cKonnell. He had Commiffione to warne and raise the Sherifdomes nixt adjacent, and to wage shouldiers, upon the King's charges. One of THE KING's Ships, and four pinnages, were sent by Sea, with cannon, musket, powder, bullet, picke, and corflet. The Counsell gave their directione, upon the thrid of August. About the middest of September, their forces drawing near to others,³ Coline Campbell of Kilberrie, and some with him, were surprisid and taken be Coll Mackgilespicke and his followers. Mr Donald Campbell, that Gentleman of the Houfe of Caddell, accompanied with six or seven hundreth men, went out of Argiles Campe, and surprisid, in a suddane, Col Mackgilespick and his companye ; killed some, tooke others, and hanged some. Col him self and the most part hardlie escaped. Sir James, and so many as might flie with him, fled out of Kintire to ILA. All his followers could not flee, because Mr Donald Campbell had ceased (seized) upon many of the boats. Argile, finding it dangerous to remaine long in the fleikls, winter drawing one, for it now was midd-October, and his company dissolving, practised with Mackgilespicke. Col rendered THE CASTLE OF DUNNIVEGE, Coline Campbell of Kilberrie, and himself to the Earle.

A number of ORIGINAL PAPERS are appended to this Trial, which, in addition to those already furnished, afford ample and suitable illustrations of this remarkable passage of History. But for Mr Gregory's work, the Editor would have deemed it his duty to have made still further researches. To that gentleman's History, reference is made for the minuter particulars attending that subject, and, in general, for all other topics connected with the Fends and Insurrections which took place in the Isles and West-Highlands.]

Treasonable Resetting of Jesuits and Trafficking Papists, &c.

[AFTER the details which have already been given in the Case of OGLIVIE,¹ it seems unnecessary to occupy farther space in attempting to elucidate the present Trial. It must, however, be interesting to the reader that there should be preserved, in this place, some remarks made by Calderwood, in his larger MS. History,² which strongly depict the popular feeling, in relation to these State prosecutions against the Jesuits.

‘William Sinclair, Robert Wilkie, (and) Cruikshanks were convicted, upon the fourteen of August, for Resetting the Jesuits above named, and hearing of Massé. The day following, betwix four and five afternoone, they were brought furth, with their hands bound, to the Scaffold, sett up beside the Crosse, and a gallows in it, according to the custome of Executione. While a great multitude of the people was gazing to see the Executione, there was a Warrant presented to the Magistrats of Edinburgh, to stay the Execution; soe they were carried back again to their wairds. The people thought this forme of dealing rather mockery then punishment!’]

Barbarous Slaughter and Maiming of Sheep—Oppression, &c.

[THE following Case is altogether unparalleled, even in the annals of Border or Highland revenge. On account of its fngularity, it has been confidered neceffary to make some investigation into the subject, for the information of the curious enquirer. The story is so forcibly told in the proceedings before the Criminal Court, that the Editor shall not weaken its effect by attempting to rehearse the facts in this place. It is enough for the purposes of this Collection, that the reader is informed, that the property of Howpaslot, an esate of one of the most ancient branches of the name of Scott, having, by some means, come into the temporary possession¹ of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, a powerful Border Baron, who had distinguished himself by the activity with which he aided the suppression of the disturbances on the Marches, the Lady Howpaslot appears to have been roused into fury at the very idea of the domains of her ancestors coming into the hands of a Douglas. She therefore instantly held a council of war in the Town of Hawick, of which Drumlanrig was the Superior, in the month of April, 1615, at which she and her friend, Jean Scott of Satchells, presided. The bravos and ruffians who figure in this Trial, and of whom every Clan had a few to do their worst work, at once undertook to execute the orders of these infuriated females, and, as will be seen by the subsequent proceedings, they succeeded in effectually preventing Drumlanrig from ‘pleniffing,’ or stocking, the farms. These villains greedily engaged to maim and destroy the whole of the sheep which had been brought to the grounds; and this cruel and barbarous act they performed in a manner almost too horrible to be related.

Sir James Douglas did not long survive the perpetration of this atrocious fact, having died Oct. 16, 1615. He was succeeded by his son Sir William, who was afterwards created Viscount of Drumlanrig, Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers, Apr. 1, 1628; and Earl of Queensberry, Jun. 13, 1633. Sir William actively pursued these heartless ruffians, and was successful in bringing all of them to deserved punishment. In the Appendix to this Trial, the reader will find a characteristic Letter from this Nobleman to his kinsman, Murray of Lochmaben, the Original of which the Editor has fortunately discovered in the Advocates’ Library.

In an interesting communication from SIR WALTER SCOTT, Bart., on the subject of this Trial, with which the Editor has been favoured, some interesting particulars are detailed, regarding THE SCOTTS of the Border. No apology need be made for enriching these pages with the following extract:—

‘OUR Name were very clannish. I have, for the time, in my possession, a BAND or ASSOCIATION between Sir Walter Scott of Branholm, knight, Laird of Buccleuch, and about fifty of the most important men of his kin and Clan, [dated 3d June, 1589.] It proceeds upon an Association made to the same purpose by SIR WALTER SCOTT, the father of the Chief, and is calculated to secure against any Clansman taking any “room” or possession over the head of another of the Name. Any one who was accused of having done so, bound himself to stand by the award of five men, to be mutually chosen, bearing the Name of Scott. Even if the Chief should encroach upon the possessions of any inferior person of the Name, he declares he will submit the cause, in like manner, to four persons of the Name of Scott; which shows an independence on the part of the Clansmen which I was not prepared for. The BAND is the property of my cousin and relative, William Scott, Esquire, of Raeburn. It seems to have been calculated to prevent kinsmen from going to law with each other, and to secure a species of justice within the Clan, to the advancement of the “guid and godlie purposes” of their Chief. The “guid and godlie purpofe” of the Cordiner and the Suchler seems to have been intended for the same reason. HOWPASLOT was an old inheritance of the Scotts, and, on whatever grounds Douglas possessed it, returned to the Name again. Douglas, you are aware, was Lord of Hawick, to which Buccleuch afterwards succeeded.

‘Of the people mentioned in the Trial, I know little. Satchells is probably the place of the name, lying on the Ale or Teviot, now part of John Corse Scott of Synton’s property. The individual termed

¹ It is by no means unlikely that Howpaslot was ‘conquest’ by means of Wadset, Apprising, or other legal ‘Diligence;’ for it is certain, that it was but a short period in the occupation of the Laird of Drumlanrig or his Tenants. The summary mode by which his ‘guidis’ were disposed of, may have precipitated his bringing these matters to a close, and his accepting of a pecuniary accommodation.

William Scott, called in Satchells, may have been the father of Walter Scott of Satchells, the Historian of the Clan, terming himself,

An old Souldier, and no Scholler,
And one that can write nane,
But juft the letters of his name.'

The singular work here quoted by SIR WALTER SCOTT, a copy of which is in the Editor's Collection, is titled, 'A TRUE HISTORY of feveral honourable FAMILIES of the right honourable NAME OF SCOT in the Shires of Roxburgh and Selkirk, and others adjacent. Gathered out of Ancient Chronicles, Histories, and Traditions of our Fathers, by Capt. Walter Scot. EDINBURGH, printed by the Heir of Andrew Anderfon, Printer to his moft sacred Majesty, City, and Colledge, 1688.' It was composed by the author at the very advanced age of Eighty-eight! He states that he was fifty-seven years in active service, abroad and in Scotland, having entered the army at the age of twenty-nine. Although he boasts of being illiterate, he seems to have had much of the spirit of a staunch Member of the Roxburghe, Bannatyne, or Maitland Clubs—for he concludes his extraordinary work with the following 'L'Envoye.'

'Therefore be gone my Book, stretch forth thy VVings and fly
Amongst the Nobles and Gentility:
Thou'rt not to fell to Scavengers and Clowns,
But given to worthy persons of Renown!
The Number's few I've printed, in regard
My Charges have been great, and I hope Reward;
I cauf'd not print many above twelve-score,
And the Printers are engaged that they shall print no more!'

The Editor, thinking that the Original CONTRACT or BAND OF ASSOCIATION between the heads of the powerful FAMILIES of the NAMES of KER and SCOTT, will prove most acceptable, as preserving the memory of times so powerfully depicted by Sir Walter Scott in many of his works, he has, after examining the ancient Records, procured a transcript, which is also appended to the present Trial. So able an abstract of the renewal of this 'Band' has been given by Sir Walter Scott, that it has not been deemed necessary to apply for liberty to present the reader with a copy of it.]

OBJECTIONS against certain Assisors passing upon the Inquest.

It is allegit aganis Thomas Wauche, that he can nocht be ressaunt vpon this Assyse, becaus he duellis nocht within the foure-halvis-about. Anfueries, aucht to be repellit, in respect he duellis within the Kingdome of Scotland, and he is summond to pas vpon the tryall of ane haynous cryme.—The Justice admittis him vpon the Assyse.

It is allegit aganis Johne Coluile, that he can nocht pas vpon this Assyse, becaus he is tennent to my Lord of Angus, quha is cum to Ed^r at the desyre of the Laird of Drumlangrig to assist this persute. Anfueries, aucht to be repellit, in respect the Erle of Angus nocht present, nather as persfewer or defender.—‘Admittis.’

It is allegit aganis Gilbert Greirfoun, that he can nocht be admittit, becaus he is tennent to the Laird of Lag, quha is present at the bar, assisting the Laird of Drumlangrig in this persute. Anfueries, aucht to be repellit, in respect he is ane sewar and na removeable tennent.—The Justice, vpon the geving of Gilbert Greirfones ayth, that he is ane fsewar, and that he gais na partiall counsell, in preiudice of the pannell, admittis him vpon this Assyse.

It is allegit aganis Robert Phillope, that he can nocht pas vpon this Assyse, becaus he is the Laird of Drumlangrigis pensfioner.—The Justice, in respect of Robert Phillipis ayth, gevin be him, that he is nocht Drumlangrigis pensfioner, and that he hes na guid deid of him, bot as ane vther gentilman of the cuntrie respectis and honouris him, Ressaues him vpoun the Assyse.

It was, eftir his admissioun and ressaueing, allegit be Laurence Scott, in name of the pannell, that Robert Phillope can nocht pas vpon this Assyse, becaus he is Bailzie Clerk to the Laird of Drumlangrigis Regalitie. Anfueries, he can nocht be declynet nor put af the Assyse, eftir his ayth tane, and purgatioun of partiall counfall; speciallie, feing it is vpon tryell of ane cryme, quhilk is factum obsecrum et clandestinum.—The Justice ordanis him to remane ane Assyfour.

THAIREFTIR, the Dittay being of new red, in presens and audience of the Assyse, with the Taikynes producet be the persfewer for verificatioun thair of, it is allegit be Mr Thomas Nicolfone, in name of George Scott, Walter and Ingrem Scottis, that the Taikynnis producet and red for cleiring of the Dittay, sould nawayis be respectit be the persfones of Inqueist, nather ar the fadis Taikynnis concluding argumentis to verifie the Dittay. And ffirst, the Depositiones maid be Jok Scott, callit the Suckler, sould nawayis be respectit, becaus he being apprehendit for the samyn fact, and haifing confessit him self to be socius eiusdem criminis, his Deposition can nocht work aganis ony honest man quha is innocent; and thairfoir sould nocht be respectit. Secundo, as to the Taikin foundit vpon George Scottis dog, albeit the samyn be na grund to infer the Slauchter of the schein lybellit, 5it he denyis it. Tertio, the Taikin for slaying and querrelling of James Douglas inferris nathing; becaus he was nocht bund to confes or schaw him any test quhair he was the nycht of the slaying of the fcheip; and as to the Taikin it felf, denyis the famyn. Quarto, concerning his Depofitioun maid be him, quhair he was the tyme of the Juftice Court of Jedburgh; the famyn inferris nathing for probatioun of the Dittay; And as to his contrair Depofitioun, that he was in Hawik, it can nawayis infer him to be culpable of the cryme. And allegis, that the hail former Taikynnis previs na thing aganis Walter and Ingrem Scottis. Item, the laft taikin anent Walter and Ingrem, that thay war tryet the tyme of thair taking, gif thair knew Jok the Suckler; thair granting or nocht granting thairof can nawayis infer thame to be giltie of the fact.

THE Laird of Drumlanerig, being fuorne, and his aithe tane thairof, gif¹ he hes juft caufe to perfew the pannell for the crymes contenit in the Dittay, as giltie and culpable thairof? Declairit, that this Dittay is fuorne to him to be of veritie, be honeft and credible men, viz. that George, Walter, and Ingrem war thre of thame that was at the flaughter of his fcheip, in maner fpecifeit in the Dittay: And thairfoir, be his ayth, declairit that he hes juft caus to perfew thame, as doaris of fic ane odious fact. And as to Jok Scott, callit the Suckler, he hes alfo hard of his meitting and keiping tryftis with thame in that matter; bot, in respect he is nocht certanelie informet that he was at the doing of the deid, he can nocht perfew him as ane principall committer: And finallie, declairit, that gif he war nocht perfuaidit, in his confcience, that the faidis George, Wattie, and Ingrem Scottis war the fpecial flayeris of the fcheip, (be quhais directioun the famyn was done, remittis that to thame felffis,) he wald nocht haif followit thame thairfoir.—Quhairvpon my lord Aduocat askit instrumentis.

My Lord Aduocat, for preving of the Dittay, repeittis the Laird of Drumlanrigis ayth and Declaratioun: Producet the Depofitiones of Jok Scott, callit the Suckler; and repeittis his ratificatioun thairof in judgement, and constant affirmatioun of the veritie thairof in the vtheris thre faces:² And lykwayis, repeitis the Actis of Parliament red, quhairvpon the Dittay is foundit: And defyres the Affyfe to confidder the haynoufnes of the cryme; and Proteftis for Wilfull Error aganis thame, gif thay Acquit the pannell thairof.

VERDICT. The Affyfe, all in ane voce, be the mouthe of the faid Thomas Wauche of Schawis, chancellor, fband, pronuncet, and declairit the faidis George Scott, Walter Scott, and Ingrem Scott, to be ffylet, culpable, and convict of the actual flaying of the faid Laird of Drumlanrigis fcheip, in maner fpecifeit in the Dittay: AND fielyk, fband, pronuncet, and declairit the faid Jok Scott, callit the Suckler, to be Culpable, ffylet, and convict of being vpon the counfell and foirknawlege of the fact aboue writtin, and in keiping of dyuerfe tryftis and meattings with the vther thre, conforme to his awin Depofitioun: And Clengis

II. "CONTRACT BETUOX THE SCOTTIS AND THE KERRIS."

(It has already been noticed, in the Introduction to the present Trial, that the Editor has been fortunate enough to discover the Original BAND or CONTRACT referred to by Sir Walter Scott, preserved in Record of Deeds,² Mar. 23, 1564. This remarkable and interesting document is preceded by a solemn entry in the Register, in these words. "In presens of the Lordis of Counsale, compeirit (SIR) WALTER SCOTT of Branchholme, with his Curatouris vnderwrittin, personalie, except ane nobill and mychté lord, James Duke of Chatteaulrault, quha compeirit be Maister David Borthuik, his procuratt, one that ane pairt; and SIR WALTER KER of Cesfurde, kny^t, for him self, and takand the burding vpoune him for his barnis, and the remanent of his kynd frendis, specifeit and contentit in the Contract vnderwrittin, personalé, on that vther pairt; and gais in the samyn, subscriuit with thair handis, as followis; and desirit the samyn to be insert in the Bukis of Counsale, and to haue the strenth of ane Act and Decreit of the Lordis thairof, and thai to interpone thair auctoritie to the samyn," &c.

It is only necessary, farther, to refer the reader to the valuable annotations of Sir Walter Scott, appended to 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel,' for a perfect knowledge of the deadly Feuds which had so long raged between two of the greatest Border Families, the SCOTTS and KERRS, to 'staunch' which was the professed object of the present BAND.)

(THE Editor believes that little apology will be deemed requisite for once more encroaching on the limits of this work, in his desire to preserve, in this place, the following remarkable document, the original of which is deposited in the General Register House, Edinburgh. The reader will readily perceive, that it is chiefly from an extensive perusal of such original and authentic Papers, that he can expect to arrive at a minute knowledge of the internal state of Scotland during the darkest periods of our History.)

All business of importance was of old transacted by churchmen or notaries; the office of which last was frequently performed by priests, who thereby added considerable emoluments to the revenues of their monastery.

It must be confessed, that this very remarkable Document gives rather an unfavourable view of the state of the Borders at the commencement of the reign of King James VI.; but reference to other 'Bands' and State Papers, which are faithfully conveyed to the public in the works of Sir Walter Scott, Redpath's Border History, and similar sources of information, prove the picture to be correct and unexaggerated. The influence of THE KING and his Lieutenants was but small, when opposed by the more powerful Barons; who could, in an incredibly short space of time, by means of their signal-fires, &c. alarm the country, and gather a prodigious force, with which they could easily overwhelm the royal troops. The usual policy of the Crown, therefore, was to appoint, as WARDENS OF THE MARCHES, the most stirring spirits of the time; who, vain of their 'brief authority,' were enjoined into the measures of the King and Council, and thus preserved 'guid rewle' on the Border. The private Feuds of the several Clans were also turned by the Government to good account; and by means of such 'Bands' as the present, the more unruly tribes were kept in check.

Egyptians or Gipsies contemptuously repairing and abiding within the Realm.

[THE following is one of the instances of the persecution of the once formidable race of GIPSIES, whose numbers were so considerable, as to excite the legislature to make various enactments for their banishment and extirpation. Notice of this pursuit has been preserved in the Denmylne MSS. Adv. Library, among various Minutes of the Proceedings of the Privy Council of Scotland, in the following brief memorandum. August 28, 1616. “ ANENT that mater of EGIPTIANIS, now lyand in the Tolbuith of Edinburgh, thay war only convict for contraveining the Act of Parliament, in not departing furth of the Kingdome ; and no vther cryme was layed to thair charge, and no cryme is knawin whairvpon thay may be challengit. The Counsell, according to HIS MA^{TIES} direction, hes gewin Warrant for staying the pronouncing of Dome, till HIS MA^{TIES} farder pleasour be knawin.”

The Editor has found no other trace of the fate of these unhappy creatures ; but it is hoped that the King contented himself with ordering their banishment from the country, under the usual certification.]

[THE particulars of this very remarkable and keenly contested Case² are so fully narrated in the proceedings which follow, and in the various Histories of the Family of Gordon and Sutherland, that it is unnecessary for the Editor to add any thing farther. It only seems proper to give, in this place, the following notice from the MS. Collections of Sir James Balfour, preserved in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates; which, though only relating to the preliminary arrangements, forcibly shows the spirit with which such matters were conducted, even before the Supreme Criminal Tribunal of the kingdom, where the parties were connected with noble and powerful families.—August 28, 1616. ‘THIS day being appointit to THE LAIRD OF GEICHT, Johnne Gordon, Sheref-depute of Aberdein, and the rest of thair complices, for thair compeirance before the Justice and his deputis, in the Tolbuith of Edinburgh, to vnderly the lawis for the slaughter of vmq^{le} Frances Hay; the Sheref-depute, accompanied with sum Gentilmen of the name of Gordon, and vtheris, came to this burgh, with outwarde shew, and apperance to have presented himselff to his tryell; and by his Petition, gewin in this day to the Counsell, he craved Licence to sum Gentilmen of his name to accompany and assist him at the Bar: Which was grantit to sex perfonen selected and maid choise of be himselff. The Erle of Erroll came lykwayes heir, for perfute of that mater, he haveing procurit ane Licence from the Counsell, convenit at Aberdene, for his cuming heir; with condition that he fould keip his lodging, and not come furth thair of, without the Counsellis Warrant. PRELOCUTOURIS in defence, Mr Alexander Peiblis, Johnne Belfis, Mr Robert Fairlie, Aduocatis. PRELOCUTOURIS in perfute, Sir George Home of Manderstoun, Sir Williame Oliphant of Newtoun. PERSEWARIS, Sir Williame Oliphant of Newtoun, kny^t, for his hienes intreis; Sir Johnne Home of North Beruik, kny^t, as Donatour to the Waird of the said Adame French mariage, for his intreis.

The Aduocat, with Sir Johnne Home of North Beruik, kny^t, as persewaris, produces the fummondis. Eftir reiding thairof, the Aduocat produces, for Sir Johnne Home of North Beruik his intreis, the Gift of the said Waird and Mariage of Adame Frenche of Thornydykis.

The Pannell, befor farder proces, desyres my lord Justice to heir Adame French of Thornydykis, presentlie in Judgement, quha is the persone allegit ravischet and tane away, to mak his awin Declaratioun of the forme and maner thairof; and thaireftir, thay fall cun to thair Defencis in the cause.—My lord Aduocat Disassentis to ony Declaratioun to be maid be the said Adame Frenche, in this matter; and desyres the pannell to cun to thair awin allegences, quhy the fact lybellit fould nocht pas to ane Assyse.

THE Justice Ordanis the pannell to propone thair defensis aganis the lybell and relevancie thairof.

Adame Frenche of Thornydykis, being personallie present, disassentis fra this perfute; and thairupoun askit instrumentis.

It is allegit be my lord Aduocat, that the disassenting of Adame Frenche fould nocht be respectit, becaus he is naither persewar nor defender in the caus; and the Aduocat, with the persewar, haifing sufficient intreis for the King, may persew.—It is ansuerit, that my Lord Aduocatis ansuer touching the perfute, movet be his lordschip and Sir Johnne Home, nawayis can stay this young Gentilman to disassent thairfra, sed valeat cum processu quantum valere potest.

It is allegit be the pannell and thair prelocutouris, that Sir Johnne Home hes na intreis to persew this caus, being criminall; becaus his only intreis is as Donatour to the waird and marriage of Adame Frenche; quhilk Gift, per se, can geve him na intreis to persew criminallie, becaus, be the Gift of Waird, he hes nather intreis in personam neque in rem: In personam, becaus this young Gentilman, befor the intending of this caus, was past fourtene yeiris compleit, and hes electit and chosin Curatouris to him, for administratioun of his persone: In rem, he has na intreis, becaus howbeit it may appear be the Gift producet, that Sir Johnne Home is Donatour to the Waird of this young Gentilman, yet, in rei veritate, res aliter se habet, as Sir Johnne Home will nocht deny, and as fall be maid cleir to the Judge ; in fa far as (at) the tyme of v^mq^{le} Robert French deceis, father to this young Gentilman, haifing tua father-brether¹ on lyfe, viz., James and Johnne Frenches ; James haifing ane cair of the bairnes educatioun and standing of the hous, delt for the Gift of the Waird and Mariage, to the vtilitie of the bairne ; bot, becaus he was nocht hable to discharge that administratioun of the bairne as become him, in respect of dyuerse trubbillis and cummoris² he come vnto, he makis chose of the said (Sir) Johnne Home of North Beruik, as ane trustie freind to him and the bairne, borrowis his name to the said Gift, and infertis his name thairintill ; nocht that the said Sir Johnne fould rype³ any commoditie thairof, bot vseing the said Sir Johnnes name, nocht being hable to discharge the office him selff. For cleiring⁴ of this, it is of verritie, that nocht-withstanding of the inserting of the said Sir Johnnes name in the Gift, the said v^mq^{le} James French intromettit with the haill leving pertening to the said bairne, during his lyftyme, keipit the said bairne in his custodie, at leift was in the custodie of his guidfchir on the mother fyde,⁵ within the place of Hardiesmylne, and that but⁶ interruption, challenge, or questioun made be the said Sir Johnne, anent the custodie of the bairne, or vplifting of the maillis⁷ and deuteis of his leveing : For forder qualificatioun of this argument, it is lykwayis of verritie, that eftir the deceis of the said v^mq^{le} James Frenche, v^mq^{le} Johnne Frenche, younger brother to the said James, being seruet and retouret air⁸ to the said v^mq^{le} James his brother, nocht only intromettit with the said v^mq^{le} James his leving, bot lykwayis with the haill rentis of the said bairnes leving, Tutorio nomine, the said v^mq^{le} Johnne being seruet and retouret Tutour to him ; quhairby it is cleir that this Gift of Waird of the said minor can gif the said Sir Johnne no intreis to perfew this cause, his name being only borrowit to it, as said is. Lyk as, thair is actioun depending at the instance of the bairne and his Curatouris befor the Lordis of Seffioun aganis the said Sir Johnne for his intromiffioun with the maillis and deuteis of his landis, and for transferring and translating of the Gift of the Waird in the persone of the minor, as tane to his awin behuif, and the said Sir Johnnes name only borrowit thairto. And fa, haifing nather entreis in personam neque in rem minoris, his Gift can geve him na intreis to perfew this caus. Secondlie, albeit it war grantit, as it is nocht, that the Gift was tane to the behuif, utilitie, and proffeit of the said Sir Johnne, yet the Gift of the Waird can geve the said Sir Johnne na intereis to perfew this caus, being ane Criminall persute, without the expres concurse, assistance, and rathabitoun of the said minor him selff, aganis quhome the Rapt lybellit is allegit to be committit; quha nocht only refuiffis to concur and affist the faid Sir Johnne; bot, be the contrair, compeiris with the defenderis, and affistis thame; affirneing all that was done be thame, to be lauchfullie done, and quhat was done to him was at his awin defyre, and be his awin speciall confent.

It is anfuerit, be my lord Aduocat, and the faid Sir Johnne Home, that the faid Sir Johnnes entreis is sufficientlie qualifeit and instructit for perfute of the actioun lybellit, feeing it is lybellit that he is Donatour to the Waird and marriage of Adame Frenche, aganis quhome the hail wrongis lybellit war committit, being our fouerane lordis frie lege; and that the custodie and keiping of minoris, quhais landis fallis in our fouerane lordis handis be reffone of Waird, properlie pertenis to the Donatour of the Waird and Mariage: Lyk as, it is expresse qualifeit in the faid Summondis, that the faid minor was in the faid Sir Johnnes possessioun mony yeiris befor the tyme lybellit, furth of quhais possessioun it was nocht lauchfull to the defenderis nor nane of thame to mell¹ with him, in maner lybellit, nor tak him furth of his possessioun: Lyk as, complent being made of befor be the faid Sir Johnne, befor the Lordis of Secretit Counfell, aganis the speciall persones his away-takeris, viz. Williame Home and Williame Moffet, the faid Sir Johnne was ffund to be ane pairtie compliner to call for exhibitioun of the faid bairne; in quhais favour ane sentence was gevin and pronuncet, ffinding and declairing that the saidis Williame Home and Williame Moffet had committit ane verrie grit offence and ane most pernicious and wicket preparatiue and example, in trayning and taking away the faid Adame Frenche out of the faid Toun of Hadingtoun, quhair he was placet at the scole be the faid Sir Johnne; in respect quhair of, the faid Sir Johnne hes indoutit rycht and intreis to persew the actioun lybellit; and speciallie, to informe and concur with our fouerane lordis Aduocat, quha hes speciall entreis be him selff, in his hienes name, to persew the crymes lybellit. As ffor the impertinent² discourse, that the richt of the Waird was tane to the behove of the bairne be the advyse of vmq^{le} James and Johnne Frenches his father-brether, that alledgeance is nather releveant nor instructit; and sa, na respect aucht to be had thairto: And yit, to anfuer to the first pairt, anent James intromissioun, the allegeance is altogidder irrelevant; for albeit he had intromettit, that establisches na richt of the Waird in his persone, bot the Donatour had sufficient intreis to persew the intromitteris with the maillis and douteis of the Waird landis: And, to mak the matter mair manifest, James deceift within fyftene dayis efter Robert his brother: Lyk as, vmq^{le} Johnne was ane actuall seruand to the faid Sir Johnne, during his lyfytyme, eftir the dait of the faid Gift. And as to the last pairt of the secund allegeance, beiring that the faid Adame French difassentis fra the perfute, and concurris with the defenderis, affirmyng that all [that] was done to be done of his awin consent, it is anfuerit, as of befor, that his disaffenting fra the persute can nocht preiudge ony of the persewaris: And as to the last pairt of the said allegeance, quhilk appeiris to be proponit aganis the intreis, it is rather affirmatioun that the said Sir Johnne hes intreis nor¹ oppositioun aganis the samyn; and gif it fall pleis the pannell to propone it, as ane defenſe in the cause, thay fall haif ane direct anfuer; ffor, be the proponing of that allegeance, it is grantit that the Donatour hes intreis; and that he is Donatour, it is verifeit be the Gift producet: Bot to mak this matter cleir, it is anfuerit directlie, that ane cryme being committit aganis pairteis quha hes intreis, the Confessioun of the pairtie offendit can nevir tak away thair intreis, nather yit the Kingis intreis efter committing of the cryme, ffor, albeit wrang had bene done to ane maior,² and the maior wald renunce the actioun, that can nawayis preiudge the Kingis Maieſteis intreis, nor na vther pairtie quha is preiudget; as is cleir in the haill article of the Cod. L. vnica Codice de Raptu Virginum, et Lege Raptores, C. de Episcopis et Clericis: And to mak this matter the mair cleir, it is speciallie declairit be the Act of Parliament maid in October 1612, that the declaratioun of the persone ravischet fall nawayis preiudge the Kingis Maieſtie of his intreis to persew the committer of the cryme: And to cleir this matter forder, the said Adame Frenche, eftir his away-taking, be ane Letter, all writtin and subſcryuit with his awin hand, grantit and confessit that he was tane away aganis his will and vndone; as the Letter heirwith producet beiris.

To the quhilkis it is anfuerit be the pannell, that the allegeances proponit be thame aganis the said Sir Johnne Homes intreis standis relevant, nochtwithſtanding of my Lord Aduocattis anfuer; becaus the defendaris affirmes constantlie, that of the Law nor Practique of Scotland, the Donatour of the Waird or Mariage of ony persone hes na actioun criminall competent to him for ony wrang done to the minor, without the concurſe of the minor quha is offendit, bot that the Gift of the Waird inferis to the Donatour only ciuile actioun, per ſe: And howbeit the keiping of the minor during the Waird pertenis to the Donatour, yit gif the minor be past xiiij yeiris, et ſic ſui juris, divertis him ſelf willinglie out of the companie of the Donatour, paſſis forwardis to the electioun of his curatouris, thair is na actioun competent of the law to the Donatour, for exhibitioun and delyvering to him of the minor. Lyk as, Williame Home being ſummoned befor the Counſell, for exhibitioun of the said Adame Frenche, and being be Ordinance of the ſaidis Lordis, thaireftir, ſequeſtrat in the handis and cuſtodie of James Archbiſchope of Glasgow, vpon ane Supplicatioun gevin in be the said Adame him ſelf to the saidis Lordis, the saidis Lordis, be thair Decreit, Ordanit the said Adame to be put to libertie to pas and repas at his plesour, nochtwithstanding of the Gift of the Waird disponit to the said Sir Johnne Home, quhais entreis could be na impediment to stay the said Adames libertie: Lyk as, conforme to the said Decreit, being put to libertie, he frelie, volunterlie, and willinglie repairit to the Place of Eist Nisbet, quhairin he hes remanit sensyne, as to ane speciall freind; and, gif neid beis, the said Adame, be his awin Declaratioun, will declair his intentioun of passing to Eist Nisbet. And for instructing thair of, produces the bairnes grevis,¹ to be considerit be my lord Justice, desyring the samyn to be red as ane speciall pairt of the proces. As to the Letter producet be my lord Aduocat, the said Adame denyis the same altogidder to be his hand writt, and thairfoir na respect fould be had thairto: Lyk as, the said Adame being personallie present, Judicialle declairis he can nocht wryte; and this Letter producet be my Lord Aduocat was writtin by² his knowlege in the Guidman of Manderstones hous, the tyme of his sequestratioun; and in case it war his hand writt, it could mak na faith in judgement, being direct be ane minor. As to the Act of Parliament producet, quhilk is in anno 1612, the alledgeance foundit thairupoun militatis nawayis in this eirand, nather is this perfute foundit vpon that Act of Parliament; and quhan as my lord Aduocat foundis a perfute thairupoun, it fall haif the awin ansuer.³ Igitur, &c.

The Aduocat, for him self, and for the partie, repeittis his former ansueris, with this additioun, that the minor being in the Donatouris possessioun of his Waird and Mariage, lyk as, he was be the space of fyve yeiris befor the Rapt lybellit, could nocht haif been tane out of his possessioun, in maner contenit in the Summondis; and the away-takeris of him aucht to be pwneist according to the desyre of the Summondis. As to the impertinent discourse, that the Waird was tane to the behuif of the bairne, thair is nathing producet to verrifie the samyn; and albeit it war verifeit, it is altogidder irrelevant, in respect of the former ansuer; and specialle, in respect that the Defenderis had na intreis, in maner lybellit, to haif mellit with the minor: And quhairas thair is mentioun maid of the electioun of his Curatouris, thair was na Curatouris chosin the tyme of the committing of the crymes lybellit, quhilk was done in November 1615, the Curatouris being alledged chosin in Julij thaireftir, 1616. And quhair mentioun is maid of the bairnes libertie and sequestratioun, that is nawayis pertinent to this purpos, in respect of the lybell. Igitur, &c.

It is allegit be the pannell, that the electioun of the Curatouris be Adame Frenche in July 1616, is sufficient, nochtwithstanding of his away-taking of befoir; and that be reffone that howbeit the Curatouris was nocht chosin befoir the allegit Rapt, yit he was maior befor the allegit Rapt, past fourtene yeiris of age, &c. Igitur, &c.—It is anfuert thairto be my lord Aduocat and the persewar, that na respect aucht to be had, quhidder he was past xiiij yeiris of age the tyme of the committing of the crymes or nocht, quha being at that tyme in the custodie and keiping of the Donatour to the Waird, and na curatouris chosin to him, the defenderis had na intres to haif mellit with him, as is lybellit. And quhair it is allegit, that the Missiue uset and producet for the said Adame, aucht nocht to be respectit, in respect of his minoritie; it is anfuert, that the samyn aucht to be respectit, being all writtin and subseryuit with his awin hand: And to convert that argument aganis the defenderis, na respect aucht to be had to his Declaratioun, nather be word or writ this day, in respect of his minoritie. As to the Testimoniall producet for his age, na respect aucht to be had thairto, for the reffones aboue writtin, speciallie, in respect he was baptizet the xij of November, 1601, and was tane away in November 1615, sua that it is nocht constant¹ thairby, quhidder he was past xiiij yeiris or nocht the tyme of the Rapt lybellit. Igitur, &c.

It is allegit for the Defenderis, that the Dittay is nawayis relevant to infer aganis thame any criminall perfute, nather can thay pas to the knowlege of ane Inqueist thairfoir; becaus the fact contenit in the Dittay, it is vel Raptus vel Plagium: Raptus, of the Law, it is nocht; becaus raptus et raptura of the Law is only concerning Virginis, and nocht more. Cap. de Raptu Virginum, toto titulo:—Bot quhidder it be vel Raptura vel Plagium, yit the Dittay is nocht relevant, becaus ad crimen Plagii vel Raptura, oportet accedat et interveniat vis et violentia: Oportet de jure ut deportatur de loco in locum, clandestinè, violenter, and that his freindis and kinefmen be debarrit fra haifing acces to him, quhairby he is depryvet of the libertie of ane frie ledge: Bot sa it is, that nane of thir perticuleris, without the quhilkis the Dittay can nocht be relevant, is set down in this Dittay; ffor first, thair is no violence nor violent fact set down thairin; it is nocht lybellit that he was violentlie, quyetlie, and clandestanlie transpoirtit fra place to place; or that he was detenit, quasi in carcere; or that he was debarrit fra his freindis, or fra haifing acces to his freindis, or thay to him; bot be the contrair, it is affirmet in the Dittay, that he frelie, volunterlie, and willinglie past with Williame Home, his mother-brother,² out of the Hous of Mr Williame Bowie, quhilk inferris a frie away-cuming, being with his mother-brother, and nerrest of his kyn, haifing na kyn of the father syde knawin to him: And sa, the Dittay is altogidder irrelevant. As to that pairt of the Dittay, beiring that the remanent defenderis are airt and pairt thairof, thay can nocht pas to ane Assyse vpone that point of the Dittay; becaus, gif thair be nocht

It is anfuert be the perfewaris, for verifeing of thair Sunmondis, and haill memberis thairof, that the famyn is verrie relevantlie confauct, and aggreis with the Lawis and practique of the realme of Scotland, Ciuile, and Commoun Law, and Lawis of all Nationis maist ciuile, Ingland and ffrance; and thir anfuertis ar proponit be him to verifie all the memberis of the propositioun contenit in the Sunmondis, and to elyde¹ the exceptiones proponit be the pannell, baith for the principallis, and thais that ar callit for airt and pairt: And as to the ffirst member of the propositioun, the perfewaris alledges, that the famyn is fufficientlie verifeit be the haill article of the Cod. And albeit na violence war lybellit, yit thair is sufficient circumstances lybellit to infer the violence; beiring directlie, that quhan the said Adame Frenche defyret to be bak agane to Hadingtoun, the principall perfones defenderis, at the leif Williame Home, Alexander Cranstoun of Moriestoun, and Williame Moffet, of the speciall causing, counfalling, and devyfeing of the hail perfones contenit in the Summondis, had the said Adame in thair power, and tauld to him planelie that he fould nocht returne, bot that it behovet him to go to Eift Nisbet, to marie the Lairdis dochter; and this was done be thame, eftir that the said Adame was tane and apprehendit be the said Williame Home, (and) was craftillie movet, persuaidit, and intyset to pas with thame furth of Hadingtoun, of intentioun to haif visseit Margaret Haitlie, his guidame, and siferis, albeit that was nocht thair intentioun; bot that followit quhilk thay proponit to thame selffis frome the begynning, to keip him in thair handis quhill he war mareit with Eijl Nisbetis dochter: Lyk as, he was quyetlie and secreitlie convoyit and cayreit fra Hadingtoun to Rymmiltone-law, in the Merse, than the duelling-hous of the said Alexander Cranstoun of Moriestoune, and thairfra, be the said Williame Home, Alexander Cranstoun, Johnne Cranstoun, and Williame Moffet, to the Place of Eift Nisbet; and thairfra, furth of the realme of Scotland, to the Toun of Beruik in England, quhair he was secreitlie mareit clandestinè: Quhilk anfuere is sufficient to infer the conclusioun of the lybell, in respect of the circumstances contenit in the Dittay: And yit to mak the Dittay relevant, of the Law, albeit thair war na violence lybellit, quhan parteis are feducet and intyset, the cryme remanis capitall, as is contenit in the lybell; and alleges Godfredus, ad dictam Legem Raptors, et Bald ibidem; Farinacius de Delictis carnis, quest. 146, Tit. 16, numero 40; Chessa. de consuetudine Burgund. Rub. 1, pag. 57; Salicotus ad dictam Legem vnicam, Cod. de Raptu Virginum, quhais woirdis ar thir schortlie, ‘quod persuasio dolosa, in talibus, plus est quam violenta tractio.’ Forder, be ane expres Statute maide be Henrie the Third of France, it is ordanit, that quhosoever fall be fund to haif subornet or intyfit ane chyld, minor, and within xxv yeiris of age, without consent of thair parentis, or vtheris in quhais custodie thay ar, falbe pwneift to the daithe, without ony pardoun. This Law was set down, per expressum, in the grit Code of the said King Henrie, Lib. 60, Tit. 2°, Stat. 8°. Lyk as, in the sevint buik of Papon. de crimine Raptus, it is expresse ffund and declairit, that ane Woman, for seduceing or intyfeing of ane young man to marie hir dochter clandestinè, was condampnit to the daithe. Lyk as, be the Lawis of England, this cryme is pwneift with fyve yeiris impriffonement, and ane grit fyne at the Princes will; and this Law was set down quhair ony perfone is ravifchet fra thair parentis, tutouris, or guardianis: And of this Law mentioun is maid in the 555 leif of the Registar of the Lawis

And last, Ravifcheing is sa odious ane cryme in Scotland, that the samyn is exceptit furth of Remiffiones, as ane cryme maist haynous and detestable.—In respect of the quhilkis alledgeances, proponit for verificatioun of the propositioun contenit in the Summondis, the Dittay is relevant aganis the hail persones on pannell. And that pairt of the lybell, ‘airt and pairt,’ is verrie relevant aganis all persones, and speciallie appointit to be lybellit be Act of Parliament; and the Law is verrie expres in that, that all the persones that concurris and assistis the fact quhilk is capitall, ar all culpable as the committeris thairof: Bot in this caice, it is lybellit expresse, that Williame Home and William Moffet intyset and tranet¹ the said Adame furth of Hadingtoun, and convoyit him to Rymmiltounelaw, quhair he was ressaute be the said Alexander Cranstoun; quhilk Alexander and Johnne Cranstoun convoyit him thairfra to Eist Nisbet, and thairfra altogidder to Beruik, quhan he was mareit clandestinè, as said is, and ressaute be the said Laird of Eist Nisbet, and keipit be him quhill he mareit with his dochter, purpoissie done to preiudge the said Sir Johnne Home of the double availl of his Mariage; quhilk makis the hail pannell nocht only to be assisteris of the fact, bot airt and pairt, and direct doaris thairof. And to verifie that he was seducet, intyset, and cayreit away aganis his will, repeittis the foirsaid Letter, all writtin and subseryuit with his awin hand; and the Decreit gevin to the Secret Counfall, ffinding ane wrang done, be the away-taking of him. And thir argumentis ar proponit, nocht only to verifie the propositioun of the Summondis, bot also to clyde the exceptiones proponit be the persones on pannell aganis the relevancy of the Dittay.

To the quhilk it is ANSWERIT be the persones on pannell and thair prelocutouris, that the pannellis allegeance proponit aganis the irrelevancie of the Dittay standis relevant, nochtwithstanding of all the arguments proponit be my lord Aduocat aganis the samyn: ffor, as to the Lawis Ciuile, French Lawis, Inglis (Lawis, and) Municipall Lawis of this realme, thay ar verrie pertinentlie citit be my lord Aduocat, for confirmatioun of the propositioun of the Dittay, and to infer the conclusioun thairof, gif the subsumptioun war relevant, quhilk is factum; ffor it is nocht contravertit with² my lord Advocat, that Raptus Virginis, Ravifcheing of wemen, vel crimen Plagij, as the taking of his Maiesteis frie lege, is capitall of the Law, and may be criminallie perfewit at his Maiefteis Aduocattis instance; bot the queftioun in this judgement¹ is, quhidder gif this pannell haif committit ony of thir crymes, at the leift quhidder the famyn be relevantlie lybellit to infer the cryme cravet; ffor his lordfchip will nocht deny, that of the Law, to aither of thir crymes thair aucht to intervene vim et violentiam, and the remanent circumftances allegit be me ofbefoir, viz. Abductio per violentiam, Deportatio de loco in locum clandestinè, Seclusio parentum, quhairby nather of thame fould haif accets to the partie ravifchet, and detenit, and withaldin fra thair kyn and freindis, quafi et tanquam in carcere; fua that without thir circumftances concur in this caice, it can nather be Raptus nor Plagium; and consequentlie, thay can nocht pas to the knowlege of ane Affyfe thairfoir. As to the instances citet be my lord Aduocat, betuix Dumbrek and Mr Alex^r Gibfone, nixt betuix vniq^{le} Thomas Maifter of Glammis and the Erles of Huntlie, Craufurd, and Bothuell, thay militat nathing in this caice; ffor as to Dumbrek, he expreflie committit crimen Plagii, in taking of the Kingis Maiefteis frie lege, quyetlie and clandestinlie, by² all his freindis knowlege, be plane violence and force, being accompaneit with ten or tuelf perfones in hofteill and weirfair maner, with wappones prohibeit to be borne or worne, tranfpoirting of him from place to place vnder nycht, debarring his freindis to haif acces to him, and be carieing him to the Caftell of Harbottill, in England; fua that the pwneifchment inflictit vpon him was dew, accoirding³ to the fact. As to the fecund instance, anent the Maifter of Glames, it lykwayis far les militatis in this caice, ffor it is notour, as my lord Justice, his Affeffouris,⁴ and my lord Aduocat knawis rycht weill, that the Erles of Huntlie, Craufurd, and Bothuell, being banded againft the Kingis Maiefteis authoritie, deprehendit the faid Maifter of Glammis, in the Kingis Maiefteis high way, chaiffit him to the Hous of Kirkhill, and pat ffyre thairto, quhillk inferris crimen Plagij of the Law, and ane gritter puneifchment: And as to that part of the Dittay, beiring that the faid Adame was intyfet and feducet, that is nawayis relevant to infer ane cryme, ffor ffraud is nocht capitale, of⁵ the Municipall Law of this realme, nor yit accoirding to⁶ the practique of the fame: And as to the Lawis citet to infer the famyn to be crimen capitale, and speciallie the Law of the Maieftie, *Quon. for the argumentis, that he was, sui juris, past the age of xiiij yeiris, bot his being in companie with his kynsmen, can nocht infer ane Rapt, speciallie, quhair he is nocht detenit per vim nec violentiam fra the presens of his freindis. And quhair as, my lord Aduocat affirmes the Mariage to haif bene clandestine, and sa, nocht lauchfull, the contrair is affirmit—it was nocht clandestine; becaus thair preceidit Proclamatioun of Bandis,¹ the mariage was maid publictly in the paroch Kirk, within the town quhair the parentis of the Gentilwoman had residence, off the speciall consent and assent of the said Adame; the said Williame Home being present at the time of the geving of his consent, and in companie with him, being his mother-brother. And sua, thair being nathing qualifeit in the subsumptioun of the Dittay to infer ony violence, the pannell can nocht pas to the knowlege of ane Assyse thairfoir: ffor as to thais wordis set down in the Dittay, that thai wald nocht suffer him to pas bak agane, thair is nathing producet to instruct that point of the Dittay, nor na pairt thairof, tuicheing the allegit fact; ffor, be the Cowmone Law and diuerse Doctouris, sic as Julius Clarus, Baldus, Hostiensis, and remanent Doctouris treittand de crimine Plagij vel Raptu Virginis, thay conclud the samyn nawayis to be ane cryme quhairvpone ony pairtie may be accuset criminallie, except thair concur violence and violent deidis to that effect. This is cleir in the Cowmone Law, Digest. de Incendio, Rapina, et Naufragio, &c.; sua that the haill Doctouris and Cowmone Law concludis, that nunquam fit Raptus sine vi et violentia. Igitur, &c.

The Persewaris repeitis thair former ansueris, with the haill argumentis proponit for verificatioun of the propositioun of the Summondis: and lykwayis repeitis the Summondis, and haill pairtis thairof, quhillkis ar relevantlie lybellit, as ane direct ansuer to the last argument proponit. And as to the consent of the said Adame, ansueris as ofbefoir, that ane fact capitall being committit, the pairtie aganis quhome the samyn is done may mak na² confessioun nor declaratioun to the prejudice ather of the Kingis Maiestie, or the pairtie interreist.³ Igitur, &c.—To the quhilk it is ansuerit, that the pannell declairis, that as yet thai haif proponit na alledgeance vpone ony contrair Confessioun of the pairtie; bot gif ony sic allegeances he hes to propone, referues the samyn to be proponit suo loco: And thairupoun askit instrumentis.

Feb. 28.—THE lord Aduocat producet his Maiesteis WARRAND, anent the perfute of the pannell for the crymes contenit in the Summondis, daitit at Quhytehall, the 17 of ffebruare instant; and desyret the samyn to remane in proces.

Eftir reiding of the Dittay, it is allegit be the pannell and his prelocoutouris, that thair is dyuerse substantiall heidis contenit thairintill, quhilkis ar nawayis infert in the coppie gevin to thame be the Messinger executour of the Summondis; and producet the coppie, subseryuit be the Messinger, for verificatioun thairof: And in respect that na autentik coppie is delyuerit, desyres ane continuatioun of this dyet to the morne, to the effect thai may be advyset with the Dittay, and vpone thair Defenffis to be proponit be thame aganis the samyn.—It is ansuerit be my lord Aduocat, that the allegeance foirfaid aucht to be repellit, and na continuatioun fould be grantit, in respect of the Summondis and Executiounes thairof, producet, beiring ane autentik coppie to be delyuerit to the pannell: And forder, thair was na necessitie to charge the pannell, or to geve him ane coppie of the Summondis, bot only to his cautioneris, quha become fouertie for his entrie to vnderly the law for the crymes lybellit.

THE Justice Repellis the allegeance; in respect of my lord Aduocatis ansuer.

Thaireftir the pannell, nochtwithstanding of my lord Justice interlocutour, desyres ane convenient tyme to be grantit to thame to reid and consider the Summondis producet; and that thai may haif libertie to remoue thame selffis apart, to aduyse thairupoun.—Quhilk the Justice grantit; and ordanit the Summondis to be gevin vp to the pannellis prelocoutouris, to be advyset thairupoune.

It is allegit be Mr Thomas Nicolfoun, for the pairt of the pannell, that he did na wrang in taking of frances Hay privata autoritate; becaus it is of verritie, that vpone Fryday, the fyftene day of December, immediatlic preceeding the day of his allegit taking, quhilk was vpone the xvij day of the said month, the said vmq^{le} Frances Hay had flane vmq^{le} Adame Gordoun, brother to the pannell, for the quhilk he fled; and sa, the said Laird of Geicht, being the avenger of bluid, viz. the eldest brother of the said Adame, it was lauchfull to him to ferche and feik the malefactour, to the effect he mycht be presentit to the Justice: Lyk as, be Act of Parliament, maid in the dayis of King James the first, of worthie memorie, Parlamento sexto, cap. 89, the Scheref and hail cuntrie is commandit to ferehe and feik the man-flayer, being certifeit of the Slauchter; and fa, mekill mair mycht the avenger of bluid, be doing na wrang in the taking: Lyk as, eftir the taking of him, he presentit him to the Schereff but¹ ony hurt of fence, or iniurie done to him: And that it is lauchfull to ony of the people, alfweill as to the avenger of bluid, it is cleir, be ane verrie trew example; ffor gif ane Theif fteill ony mannis guidis, it is lauchfull to the perfone fra quhome the guidis ar ftowin, to convene his kyn and freindis, and raife the cuntrie, and perfew the Theiff fa lang as he is in fuga, ay and quhill he apprehend him, or put him out of the cuntrie; and this he may do but ony Warrant of ane Magiftrat; as is cleir and nottour be the daylie practique of the cuntrie: Ergo, in this cryme of Slauchter, quhilk is of far gritter importance than fteilling of guidis, it was lauchfull to ony of the people, multo magis the avenger of bluid, to apprehend the malefactour, and delyuer him to the Justice: And as it was lauchfull to the pannell to ferehe, feik, tak, and apprehend the malefactour, and delyuer him to the Justice, evin fa it was lauchfull to him to do the famyn with conuening of his freindis, (nawayis granting he did the famyn,) and with quhatfumeuir airmes; ffor vtherwayis, this abfurditie fould follow, that the malefactour fould efcap, and the innocent perfone fould be flane; in fa far as, gif the innocent perfone fall preife to apprehend the malefactour airmet with hagbutis and piftolettis, namelie, haifing the benefit of ane houfe, it war eafie for him to fla fie as focht him; and fa he fould nocht be apprehendit. Secundo, for this caus he did na wrang, becaus it is an reule of the Law, that conceffo aliquo extremo, conceduntur omnia media, per que pervenitur ad illud; than it is fubfument, gif it was lauchfull to tak the man-flayer, as is afoir provin, ergo, it was lauchfull to vfe all the midiffis² be the quhilk he fould be taken, baith of airmour and vtherwayis.

It is anfuerit be my lord Aduocat, to the firft pairt, anent the avenger of bluid, thair is nather Law nor reffone can mak the Laird of Geicht the avenger of bluid, bot only the Kingis Maieftie, his Justice, and vtheris haifing power and authoritie of his Maieftie. As for the argument proponit vpon the Act of Parliament maid in the dayis of King James the ffrift, the allegeance foundit thairupoun is altogidder irrelevant, impertinent, and altogidder repugnant and difconforme to the Act; be the quhilk, it is ftatute, that the Man-flayer fould be perfewit be the Schereff, and the cuntrie to concur; and gif the malefactour be tane be the Schereff, he fould be put in fure firmance, quhill³ the Law be done vpon him; and gif he be tane reid-hand,⁴ to be done with that fone.⁵ It is nevir allegit that the Schereff followit the allegit malefactour, nather that he was tane with reid-hand ; sua that the allegiance is altogether irrelevant, quhilk is founded vpon that Act, as direct repugnant thairto : And as to that pairt of the allegiance, beirand that the Laird of Geicht tuik and apprehendit the allegit malefactor, that alledgeance contenis ane grit absurditie, haifing nather Warrant, grund, nor fundament, nather of the Lawis of the realme, nor of the Ciuile Law ; feing, be the Lawis of this realme, the Schereff is appointit to follow the Man-slayer ; and be the Ciuile Law, it is nocht leifum¹ to ony privat man to tak and apprehend ony persone, without ane Commiffioun and Warrant frome the Magiftrat : Leg. Neminem, Cod. de exhibendis Reis, lib. 9, Tit. 3, Leg. vltima, Neminem exhibendum esse in iudicio precipimus, nisi de cuius exhibitione Iudex pronunciauerit. Item, Bartolus, ad dictam Legem : Et Domaderius, cap. 15, num. 40, idem asserit : Et toto titulo, Codice de Plagiariis : Et lege Raptores, de Episcopis et Clericis : Item, Julius Clarus, § finali quest. 31, in principio : Be the quhilkis premisses, it is cleir, that ane privat persone, and speciallie the pairtie, had na power to tak the allegit malefactor. As to the argument proponit vpon the example of the profecutioun and following of ane Theif, it is altogidder impertinent to this purpois ; feing the Theif is followit, in ipso actu, immediatlie eftir the committing of the cryme, with the guidis and geir of the followeris ; quhilk is permittit be the Lawis of this realme, be the Actis of Parliament maid thairanent, and the vniuersall consuetude of the same, it is lauchfull to ony man, in following of his awin guidis and geir, to apprehend the Thevis ; and albeit the Theif be slane in the following, the Slayer is maid frie be the lawis of the realme. It is absurditie to think that the Schereff him selff may follow ony man committer of the Slauchter, and instantlie put handis in him, at his awin hand, nisi in flagranti crimine, quhilk is nocht allegit in this caice ; and albeit he war tane in flagranti crimine, or reid-hand, as the Act of Parliament beiris, the Law ought to be done vpon him within that sone. And quhair it was allegit, that gif it war lauchfull to the Laird of Geicht to persew or tak him, it was lauchfull to tak him with convocatioun of our fouerane lordis legis, and with wapponis forbiddin ; it is ansuerit, that the first propositioun is altogidder absurd, in respect of the first ansuer maid be the persewaris ; and consequentlie, the taking with convocatioun of his sfireindis, and forbiddin wappones, feing he had na authoritie, nather to tak, nor beir forbidden wapponis : In respect quhairof, the first allegiance, and haill argumentis thairin contenit, aucht to be repellit.

It is duplyit for the pannell, that his allegiance proponit ofbefoir standis verrie relevant, nochtwithstanding of ony ansuer maid thairto ; and quhair the famyn is querrellit,² that thair is no law that makis the avenger of bluid, bot

the samyn pertenis only to the Kingis Maiestie, it is anfuert, that the pannell makis no questioun thairin quo ad executionem; bot the Law callis him the ane avenger of bluid, quia habet jus prosequendi secundum formam juris. As to that pairt, alledgeing the difconformitie betuix the allegeance and the Act of Parliament, it is duplyit, that thair ar verrie conforme; becaus be baith the Actis allegit, the Kingis haill legis ar commandit to concur and assist the taking of the malefactour with the Scheref, ergo, thair was na wrang done, feing the Schereff was in serching; and in respect that he could nocht serche in all pairtis; and the notoriety of the fact, and the maliefactouris fleing, being in fuga, and sa taking the cryme vpon him, quhatfoeuer was done be the pannell man be estemit as concurring with the Sher e speciallie, haifing respect, that the pannell tuik the malefactour but ony wrang or hurt of his body, or iniurie done to him, and referuit him saif but ony iniurie, quhill he was presentit to the Schereff, &c.¹

THE JUSTICE, with advyse of his Assessoris, Continewis all forder disputatioun in this mater to the morne, the first of March, 1617.—The Laird of Clwny again becomes his surety.

[Mr Alexander Coluile, Justice-Depute.]

DECLINATURE OF THE JUDGE.

Mar. 1.—IT is allegit be the pannell, that Mr Alexander Coluile can nocht be Judge in this cause, in respect he is fourtis of kyn to the Countes of Errole; my Lord of Arrole, hir husband, being persewar, viz. The said Mr Alex^r Coluiles grandame was ane dochter of the Houfe of Lochlevin, quha is ane; the said Mr Alexanderis guidfchir, tua; the said Mr Alexanderis father, thre; and him self the fourt: And referris the probatioun of this rekning to Mr Alexanderis awin ayth of verritie.—It is anfuert be my lord Aduocat, that this Declinatour can nocht be ressaunt this day, becaus Mr Alexander Coluile, being Justice-depute in this Judgement, quhilk is ane ordiner and Supreme Jurisdiction, na declinatour aucht to be proponit aganis him; at the leift, na kinreid² fould be ony caus to declyne him. Secundo, the declinatour can nocht now be ressaunt, becaus the Court being fenfit yesterday, he sitting as Judge, the persewaris and defenderis compeirand with thair prelocutouris, thair is ane Interlocutour pronuncet in this caus; and eftir pronouncing thair of, ane peremptour exceptioun (was) proponit be the pannell aganis ane member of the Dittay; eftir the quhilk, ane declinatour can nocht be proponit.

To the quhilk it is anfuert be the pannell, that the declinatour exceptioun standis relevant, nochtwithstanding of my lord Aduocattis twa answers; namelie, the ffirst beirand, that Mr Alexander is ane Ordiner Judge of this Court, creat, electit, and suorne; that pairt of the answer non relevat; becaus the creatioun and admissioun of Mr Alexander Coluile takis nocht away the pannellis exceptioun declinatour, ex superveniente causa, vpon consanguinitie of bluid to the perswar; ffor than it fould follow, that in an actioun persweit befor the Lordis of Sessioun, quha are supreme Judges of the land in ciuile cauffis, at the instance of ane persone, quhais brother is ane of the Lordis of Sessioun, it fould follow that he fould be Judge to his brother, perswer in the caus persweit be him aganis ane vther, quhilk can nocht be: As to the secund member of the answer, beirand, that the pannell can nocht be hard to propone this Declinatour this day, be resson that in ane Court haldin yisterday in the samyn caus, Mr Alexander sat as Judge, befor quhome the pannell proponit dyuerse exceptiones dilatour and peremptour, aftir the proponing quhair of, the pannell can nocht be hard to propone ony exceptioun declinatour, be resson that ane exceptioun declinatour is the first exceptioun fould be proponit in judgement; —to the quhilk it is answerit, that nochtwithstanding of the said secund answer, the exceptioun declinatour standis relevant aganis the said Mr Alexander Coluile, be resson thair was ane sufficient judgement and iudicatorie establischet yisterday by¹ the said Mr Alexander, to wit, Sir Williame Heart, ordiner Justice, quha sat in judgement, and pronuncet Interloquitour in this caus; sa that this exceptioun, gif it had bene proponit yisterday, could nocht be respectit, becaus the Judgement had bene ane perfyte Judgement without him, quhilk is nocht this day in this caice; and sua, be the presens yisterday of the said Sir Williame Heart, and his absence this day, the caice is alterit: In respect quhair of, the exceptioun standis relevant, nochtwithstanding of the answer. And forder, quhair it is answerit, that Mr Alexander Coluile is Justice-generall, in criminalibus, thair can no exceptioun of consanguinitie be proponit aganis him as depute, it has nather Law to sustene the answer, and it is aganis the daylie practise; ffor thair is na Judge in Scotland that hes that priuilege to sit in causa consanguinei, bot only the Lordis of Sessioun; quhilk is done of necessitie, for vtherways thair will be no judgement thair, quhilk is nocht in this caice,—ffor the removeing of ane only Judge may be suppleit be the sitting of ane vther, vbi non est penuria: And this was practizet in the grittest pannell that was in our dayis, betuix the Lairdis of Caddell and Ardkinglas, for the slauchter of the Laird of Caddell; in the quhilk, the Justice-depute was set,² as being depute to the Erle of Ergyle, quha bakit² the persute; lyk as, the Kingis Maiestie haveing chosin dyuerse Judges successiué eftir vtheris, thay war all declynit, pairtlie vpon consanguinitie with the Erle of Ergyle, and pairtlie as being pensioneris to sic as assistit the perfute; and namelie, Mr Thomas Henderfoun, Commiffar, was fet, becaus he was within greis¹-defendant with the Hous of Bafs; and Mr Thomas Nicol-foun, as pensioner to my Lord Ogilvie, quha fortifeit the perfute.

It is allegit be the perfewaris, that the declinatour aucht nawayis to be reffault for the refones proponit of befoir; and specialie, that this Court is a Supream Court in suo genere, viz. in criminalibus, and that the said Mr Alexander Coluile hes alreddie fittin and voittit in this caufe, eftir the proponeing of dilatour and peremptour exceptiones thairin, na declinatour exceptioun being proponit aganis him: And quhair it is allegit be Mr Alexander Peibles, that the Lordis of Sefsioun will be declynit, viz. ane brother may nocht judge in ane vther brotheris caus, nor the fone in the fatheris caus, et e contra; that is of verritie, in respect of ane special Act of Parliament maid thairanent; but in all vther cauffis, thair is na exceptioun, nather of affinitie nor confaguinitie, that will declyne ony of the Lordis of Sefsioun. As to the practique allegit concerning Arkinglas proces, that aucht nawayis to be respectit in this Judgement, becaus the Justice Generall was partie perfewer, and affisit the perfute, and fa nane of his deputis could fit; bot we ar nocht heir in that caice.

THE JUSTICE, with advyse of his Assessoris, continewis Interloquitour vpon the allegeances foirfaidis, and anfueris maid thairto, anent the declinatour proponit aganis him, to Tyfday nixt.—The Assyse wairnit apud Acta for thair compeirance the said day, ilk perfone vnder the pane of ffoure hundreth merkis.

DECLINATURE of two of the Assessors.

Mar. 4.—It is allegit be my lord Aduocat, that my Lord of Meidhoip can nocht be Assessor to the Justice in this caus, in respect my Lord Marques of Huntlie, and my Lord of Meidhopes wyfe, ar within greis-defendant, viz.: My Lord Marques is ane; his Lordschipis mother, the Countes of Huntlie, tua; and hir father, James Duik of Chattellerault, thrid; on the ane syde: And the Bischope of St Androis, brother to the Duik, ane; the Laird of Blair, his fone, tua; and my Lord of Meidhopes wyfe, the Laird of Blairis dochter, the thrid; on the vther syde. In respect quhairrof, he can nocht be Assessor.

It is lykwayis allegit be my Lord Aduocat aganis Sir Andro Hammiltoun of Reidhous, that his lordschip can nocht be Assessor to the Justice in this caufe; because my Lord Marques and he ar ferdis of kyn, and fa within greis-defendant, viz.: my Lord Marques is ane; his Lordschipis mother, the Countes of Huntlie, tua; James, Duik of Chattellerault, hir father, thred; and Beatoun, the Duikis mother, quha was sifter to the Laird of Creiche, fourt; on the first pairt:—And siclyk, the Laird of Creiche-Beatoun, brother to the Duikis mother, ane; the Lady Balcleuch, dochter to the said Laird of Creich, tua; my Lord of Reidhouse mother, the said Lady Balcleuches dochter, thrid; and my Lord of Slaughter—Demembration.

[THE Case which follows, affords one among numerous other instances, of the unhappy consequences resulting from the deadly feuds, which occurred almost daily; and strongly points out their prevalence in Scotland, to a very lamentable extent. Sir James Balfour, in his Annales,¹ states, that ‘the Young Laird of Cultmalindie-Bruce, in Perthshyre, killed Tofchoke Laird of Minewaird, sister sone to Sir James Campbell of Lawers, in the toune of Perth. Cultmalindy, the committer of the slaughter, fled.’ But Fleming, in his MS. Diary or Chronicle,² gives a much more minute detail of this affair, in the following passage, extracted from the Original MS. :—‘Vroun Midfomer-day, the xx of Junij, 1618 yeiris, at twa efternoon, (David) Tofcheoch of Monivaird younger flaine in the South-gait of Perth be Lourence Bruce younger of Cultmalindeis, his brother, and diuers thair affociates. Forging of an infamous Pasquil against the Scottish Nation, &c.

[THE CASE of MR THOMAS ROSS forms one of a series of sanguinary and barbarously vindictive acts of KING JAMES VI, which, unquestionably, must leave an indelible stain on his memory and character, as a despotic and cruel tyrant. It has already been frequently shown, in the course of this work, that whenever there occurred the slightest attack on his personal dignity, or any speech, lampoon, or other writing, at all infringing on his kingly prerogative, &c. his Majesty was relentless in the severity of the punishment, which he never failed to cause be inflicted on the luckless offender. As so many shocking Cases of this description have already been given in the present Collection, it is enough, without fatiguing the reader with any recapitulation, barely to refer him, among other cases of a similar nature, to the Trials of Dikson,¹ Aug. 3, 1569; Tennent,² Oct. 10, 1600; Cornwall, Apr. 25, 1601; and Fleming,⁴ May 17, 1615; which are the leading instances of the insane and blood-thirsty spirit above alluded to.

With regard to the facts attending the case of Mr Thomas Ross, there seems to be no reason for doubting that they occurred almost exactly as they are narrated in the abstract of the Dittay, which has been preserved in the Books of Adjournal. In case, however, that this example should prove infectious, the Record informs us, that the offensive papers were ‘gevin vp agane to my lord Aduocat,’⁵ to be destroyed—‘as nocht worthie to remane in ane Register, to offend the earis or eyis of the posteritie!’ Every search has been made in the Deumylne Collection of MSS., and other Collections in the Advocates’ Library, the Warrants of the Privy Council of Scotland, and other similar sources, but no trace can now be had of the Theses and Annexa, which must have proved very interesting and curious at this distance of time.

In order that the reader may have an opportunity of judging for himself, the Editor has made every enquiry in his power, for the purpose of elucidating this disgraceful and sanguinary page of the personal history of ‘the British Solomon.’ *Sir James Balfour*⁶ gives the following account of this extraordinary tragedy. “THE 20 of August, this 5eire, Mr Thomas Rosse, a brother of the House of Cragie, in Perthshyre, was sentenced by the Justice-Generall to losse his head,⁷ at the Croffe of Edinbrughe; and thereafter, the same head to be affixed one the jayle—for propofunge certane villanous and opprobrious Thefes, in defamatiōe of his anen natiue country and countreyemen, and affixing them on a Church-dore, in Oxford, before fermon, one a Tuefday; offring them to be publickly dispute, and himfelue (miferable wretche!) to defend them. This sentence was put in executione within 2 dayes thereafter.”⁸—Another authority⁹ narrates the proceeding thus. “MR THOMAS ROSS, Minister at Cargill, having been convicted by an Affize, at Edinburgh, of writing, at Oxford, in England, against the Scots Nation, was executed at Edinburgh.¹⁰ His right hand was first stricken off; thereafter, he was beheaded, quartered, and put upon the Ports. He was of the House of Craigie, being a son of John Ross, Laird of Craigie, and went to Court. He wrote very unnaturally, and whereof he was not wise, against the Scots Nation. He was conveyed to Scotland in a ship. Mr Thomas Ross was insane, and his infirmity was pled in his defence. He affixed to the door of St Mary’s Church, in Oxford, a Latin Thesis, in which were ten propositions; wherein he attempted to prove, that the English ought not to allow so many of the Scots to remain among them. The King was ridiculously incensed, and instead of confining him, as one in his condition needed to be, he sent him to Scotland, along with strict orders that he should suffer death.”

It seems very singular, when all circumstances are considered, that so remarkable an occurrence has been entirely passed over in silence by Spotswood and Calderwood, in their Church Histories.

There cannot be a doubt that Mr Thomas Ross was a man of an ancient, influential, and highly respectable Family; and the Editor believes, that having embraced Episcopacy, he had gone to prosecute his studies in Oxford. It would appear, from the preceding notices, that Ross had previously

¹⁰ “2 Sep. 1618. been Minister of Cargill; and as he is so designed in these accounts, it is likely that he had not been deprived of his living before the period of his execution. The conduct of KING JAMES in the whole of this matter, and his barbarous treatment of Ross, become altogether inexplicable, when it is considered, that at this very time, he was struggling to force Episcopacy upon the people of Scotland, as the permanent and established Religion of the country. In such circumstances, it seems strange indeed that he should have so rancorously pursued so zealous a convert to the forms and tenets of the Church of England, at the precise time that that person (a Minister, too, of the Kirk of Scotland) was doing every thing in his power to qualify himself for effectually pleading and maintaining the establishment of Episcopacy—a measure so near James's heart. Ross, however, had, for the indulgence of some mad and absurd frolic, written the Pasquil or Thesis in question, and affixed it to the Church-door of St Mary's, Oxford, as was then usual at all the great Universities in Europe, where public disputations were often held.¹ It was pleaded by the unfortunate man, that he had done so in a fit of insanity, which seems to have been credited by his contemporaries;—but all these circumstances combined, could not induce the King to save his life; on the contrary, they only inflamed his rage the more against poor Ross.

The only thing which can be urged in palliation of the rigorous sentence, which the King insisted on being put in execution, is, that at the time when KING JAMES succeeded to the English Throne, and for a long time after, the Scotch were peculiarly unpopular in England, and such swarms of needy adventurers had travelled southward, that not only were the greatest jealousy and hatred manifested on the part of the English, but it actually became necessary that a legislative enactment should be made, to prevent bloodshed and scenes of violence throughout the country. As remarkable instances of the rancorous feelings which existed against the Scotch, a curious passage may be cited from Calderwood,² which forcibly illustrates the state of the public mind, in England, upon this subject.—‘THE SCOTISHMEN lying at Court were in danger of their lives, be reafone of the great malice of the English conceived against them. Sir John Ramfay's brother smote the Lord Montgomeries brother on the face, with a rod, for a lie given him at a Horse-race. There were present about ane hundredth Scottish-men, all in danger to be maffaced, if the English had not been stayed by a Counfellow. James Maxwell, one of the Gentlemen of the King's Chamber, pulled ane Englishman's eare till it bleade. Oure countrymen durst not repair foe frequently to the Exchange or Comedies as they did before. The Lord of Kinloffe was in great danger at a Comedie, but was convoyed secretly away be ane aged gentleman, who was weill acquent with his father. This lybell was affixed in open places,—

‘THE SCOTS DOE WHIPPE OUR NOBLEMEN WITH RODS—THEY KILL OUR FENCERS TRATROUSLY UNDER TRUST.’

‘The Lord Sanquhar indeid hired two Scottishmen to kill ane English fencer, who, six or seaven years before, had putt furth his eye at fencing! They killed him in an Innes, whilles he was putting the cupe to his head. To content the English, the King consented that Sanquhar should be hanged. For the greater contempt of our Nobility, he was hanged among a number of Theaves!’

It is barely possible that the King may have discovered certain indications at Court, which, in a manner, forced him to sacrifice Ross, for the purpose of checking in the bud any future attempts at fomenting these national jealousies. This, however, is merely matter of conjecture, and the only plausible apology which can be adduced for the perpetration of so tyrannical an act.

A very extraordinary instance of the same insane rage upon the part of the King, we learn from a rare Poem, entitled, a 'Counter-buffe to Lyfimachus, Junior, calling himself a Jesuite;' quarto, 1640, pp. 16;¹ where the fate of STERCOVIUS, a Pole, is alluded to. That stranger had unhappily appeared in Scotland in the dress of his native country, which attracted the attention of the idle, and brought down upon him the derision and abuse of the populace.

' Hither he came, clade all in antique fort,
Where seen in streets the subject of a sport,
He foone became to childifh gazers, who
With skriecks and clamours hifs him to and fro,
Till forced he was with flame and speed to pack him,
And to his feet and loathsome cabin take him !'

Nettled at such rude and inhospitable treatment, he published 'a Legend of Reproaches' against the Scottish Nation, shortly after his return home; which, having reached the ears of his 'most sacred Majesty,' he procured the arrest and execution of the hapless STERCOVIUS! This out-herods Herod, with a vengeance! The death of this Pole was accomplished at an expense to the King of no less a sum than six hundred pounds sterling—an immense sum in those days. The instrument whom JAMES employed was one Mr Patrik Gordon,² a subject of Scotland, then resident in Poland. With a dexterity for which the sapient James was celebrated, he attempted to extort the price of this innocent man's blood from the Royal Burghs of Scotland! It is believed, however, that he was foiled in that attempt, by the Privy Council declaring themselves incompetent judges of the matter.³

In a very curious Collection, privately printed at Edinburgh, 1828, 'A Third Book of Scottish Pasquils,'⁴ the cases of Ross and Stercovius are particularly noticed; and a copious extract from the 'Counterbuffe' is there given. That singular Poem introduces Ross's story thus—which is enough for our present purpose.

. . . . ' A Scot of ancient race,
A scholler, too, as thou art, lived a space
In England's Court; and for some private hate,
A Pasquill did against his country wreat,
As thou haft done in fouler fort; more full
Of vild aspersions from thy phrantick skull!
Well, then, King James of lasting memorie, who Could not brook that any calummie
Should be asperft upon his native land—
After some tryall there, he gave command
The Lybeller should home go, and sustaine
Of doome unpartiall laws th' unpitied paine.
And here being tryed, judged, and adjudged, they fand
That he should lose his head and faultie hand;
Which straight was done, in public view—and fo
I thinke the matter with thyself will go !'

THE FAMILY OF ROSS OF CRAIGIE, near Perth, were probably a branch of the Family of the ancient Earls of Ross, and were reckoned among the most respectable Families in the shire. Many

¹ A copy is in the valuable Collection of David Laing, Esquire. ² Probably the author of the 'History of the Valiant Bruce,' in heroic verse. particulars concerning them are to be found in History so early as the reign of Robert Bruce, and in the records of the Religious Houses at Perth, to which they were benefactors. Nisbet, in the Appendix to his second Volume,¹ gives a list of some of the distinguished Families in the Kingdom to whom they were allied.²

It cannot be disguised, that however honourably born this family may have been, various members of it figured in Books of Adjournal, and others of them suffered the last punishment of the Law, for their crimes. JOHN ROISE of Craigie, James and Williame Roise, his brothers, John Roise, servant to v^mq^{le} James Roise in Maitlandis, Lancelot Moncrief, servant to the Laird of Craigy, were, along with William Lord Ruthven, Henry Lord Methven, and others, brought to the bar of the Court of Justiciary, Nov. 12, 1571, for Oppression, Hamesucken, Convocation of the Lieges to the number of two hundred armed persons, besieging the Place of Dupplin, &c.³ This appears to have proceeded entirely from one of those deadly Feuds which were unhappily so common in Scotland at that time. Their antagonist was Laurence Lord Oliphant. But the most atrocious instance which the Editor can at present recollect, occurs in Fleming's Chronicle,⁴ under date Apr. 8, 1608; where it is recounted, that 'PATRIK EVIOT, brother-german to the Laird of Balhousie, wes murtherit in Blelok be his wife, JONET ROSS, quha wes air to the Lairdship of Craigie and Kynfawnes, both. He wes schote with ane gun in his bed, sleiping, be James McNair. Thairefter, they wer both taikin and execute—and brunt, efter they wer hangit, in the Playfeild of Perth, the 17 of Majj, 1608. The heid and arme putt wp on the Castell-Gawill-Port.' It will be recollected how narrow an escape Patrick Eviot, the husband of Jonet Ross, had previously made, when he was attacked by Sir Henry Lindsay of Carreston.⁵

After the death of JONET ROSS, the heiress of Craigie, (who seems to have wished to transfer, by marriage, her large estates to her blood-stained paramour, James McNair,) her uncle, Robert Ross, succeeded to the Estate of Craigie. The Laird of Balhousie at this time was Colin Eviot. The Reverend Mr Scott informs us, that "Patrick, his brother, had suffered trouble and loss by a sentence of Parliament, for the friendship he had expressed to the Earl of Gowrie, in 1600. The Eviots had been proprietors of the lands of Balhousie and Muirton, near Perth, for more than three hundred years. They were great benefactors to the Religious Houses, especially to the Black Friars' Monastery, at Perth; and some of the younger sons of the Family were in Clerical Orders. Colin Eviot was succeeded by his son Patrick, who, before 1618, had sold the lands of Balhousie to John Matheu, and was himself designed Patrick Eviot of Muirton. He was married, and had children."

The reader's indulgence is requested for the minuteness and prolixity of this Notice; which, however, has proceeded from the Editor's anxiety to throw all the light in his power on so extraordinary a Trial.]

Nov. 4.—WALTER SCOTT, sone to Johnne Scott in Newark.

¹ The following extraordinary composition has fortunately been preserved among the Denmylne MSS., Advocates' Library—but the King's 'Warrant and directioun' has probably been too pithy to have been filed by that obsequious courtier the 'Secreter,' even in his private Collection, as being considered too strong meat for posterity! Having the fear of his Majesty before his eyes, he perhaps felt that his own head and hand might be called on to answer for disobeying the strict injunctions given him.

MOST SACRED SOUERANE,

THE furious wrethe MAISTER THOMAS ROS, wes, according to your MAIESTIES commandement, put to his tryall, and convicted of the haynous crymes conteaned in his diuelish Pasquil, produced for verificatioun of his guiltines, to the Assyse. The Dome is delaied till your MA^{TIE} be pleased to signifye your royall determination in it.

His malitious frenesie is so mixed with presumption of his owne wourth, as he thinkis the vfe of his learning and eloquence necessar to the world; and that his passioun having furneissed so much stuf, in so bad a pourpose, he is able, in ane subiect so wourthie and true as the commendation of your Royall guiftes of bodie and mynd, and most princelie actions, to kythe miracles in dew publeiffing thairof! To this sence, he spak in judgement: And leaning to your MAIESTIES euer gracious clemencie, multiplied exemples of diuine and humane Histories, to the commendatioun of the famous Princeis who had gracioullie pardoned heigh offences; adding exemples of manie, who being transported be passion to madnes, had thairefter recovered thair fetled judgement, and done great and wourthie materis; promising no les of him self.

Your MAIESTIES Aduocat has wyfelie considered, that the infame of his Dittay meritis not to be infert in the Register of the Adiornall. Always I haue sent to James Douglas the copie of the proces, that when your MA^{TIE} desyres to sie it, he may haue it reddie, and may conceale it from all vthers. So exspecting the signification of your MAIESTIES farder pleafour, anent this vnnaturall and furious foole, I besek God long to preferue your MAIESTIE in perfection of all honour, happines, and contentment.

Your most sacred Maiefteis most humble, faithfull, and bund subiect and seruant,

TO THE KINGIS most sacred MAIESTIE.

Dilaitit of airt and pairt of the hurting, wounding, and mutilatioun of Adame Dalgleifche, sone and appeirand air to Johnne Dalgleifche of Deuchar, of thre fingeris of his left hand; committit in the moneth of August, 1617 yeiris, at Muriefones-hill, beyde the burgh of Selkirk, vpon fet purposis, prouifoun, and foirthocht felonie.

PERSEWARIS, Adame Dalgleifche, Sir Williame Oliphant, kny^t.
PRELOCOUTOUR in defence, Mr Thomas Nicolfone, Aduocat.

It is allegit be the pannell and his prelocoutour, that this matter can nocht be put to ane Assyse; becaus, gif ony hurt or mutilatioun was gevin be him to the persewer, nocht granting the samyn, it was done in his awin defence; infasar as, vpon the sevint of August 1617, the pannell was set vpon be Adame Dalgleifche, persewar, neir to the toun of Selkirk, and was crewallie hurt be him: ffor the quhilk, the said Adame, vpon the xxvj day of Marche 1618, being summond befor the Scheref of Selkirk and his deputis, to vnderly the Law for the hurting and wounding of the said Walter Scott, defender, in the heid, to the effusioun of his bluid in grit quantitie, was, be ane Assyse of xv sworne men, fund gyltie, and convict of the bluid and bluid-wyte: And productet the Rolment of Court, for verificatioun thairof, vnder the subscriptionn of Alexander Wilkiefoun, clerk of the said Schereff-Court. Secundo, the Dittay is nawayis relevant to pas to the knowlege of ane Assyse, becaus mutilatio est tantum amputatio membri; and thair is na member cuttit af, ffor the persewaris haill hand, and fingeris thairof, ar yit extant be occulour inspectioun; and he is able to move his hand and fingeris, and to grip thairwith.

It is ansuerit be the persewaris, that the allegeances foirfaidis aucht to be repellit, in respect of the summondis and Dittay productet; with ane Testimoniall of the Chirurganes, subscryuit be the Deacone and thre of his bretherene, testiefeing the mutilatioun, togidder with the persewaris awin mutilat hand, mutilat in thre fingeris thairof schawin judiciallie to the Judge. And as to the Rolment of Court productet, na respect fould be had thairto, the samyn being altogidder null and repugnant to the lawis of this realme; be the quhilk, ane Sentence is gevin out in ane Criminall matter, the pairtie accused nocht compeirand, convictand him of ane cryme; quhairas, be the Law, (he nocht being present nor compeirand,) he aucht nocht to haif bene put to ane Assyse; bot the maist that could haif bene done be the Schereff in that Judicatorie, was allanerlie, to haif vnlawit him in pena contumacie: And albeit the Schereff and his depute wald geve out his or thair Testimoniall, that the said Adame Dalgleifche, quha is mutilat, was the persewar, na respect fould be had thairto, becaus that is na pairt of thair office: And thairfoir, na respect fould be had to the Rolment of Court.

To the quhilks, it is replyit be the pannell, that the Rolment of Court is sufficient to instruct his allegeance; becaus, quhatevir the pannell did, it was in his awin defence, in respect of the forme of proceeding vsset in the Scheref Court, quhilk is, to put the pairtie accusset to ane Assyse, albeit he be absent and compeiris nocht; always,¹ it is sufficient to instruct that pairt, that he is convict of the bluid and bluid-wyte, and was contumax,² and compeirit nocht; quhairupoun he tuik the cryme vpon him: And as for that pairt of the allegeance maid be the pannell, that the taking away of the finger is nocht amputatio membri, becaus the finger is nocht membrum, bot pars membri, as sayis BALDUS, Leg. non sunt liberi, ff. de statu hominum,—whois wordis ar, Nota, digitus non dicitur membrum sed pars officialis membri; et sic amputans digitum non dicitur amputare membrum: And BARTOL. Confilio 201, sayis, Queritur numque digitus sit membrum? Respondetur quod non, sed potius pars siue officium membri; per Legem, non sunt liberi, ff. de statu hominum.—Tertio, the persewar is nocht mutilat in thais thre fingeris, becaus he is able to grip with thame and hald; and sa thay ar nocht vnprofitable.—Last, thair can na payne of the body be inflictit, albeit the thre fingeris was mutilat, as is allegit; becaus na pane corporall can follow, feing na death followit; bot only ane arbitrarie and pecuniall payne, to be modifeit be the Judge.

It is ansuerit be the persewaris, to that pairt of the allegeance proponit, that the cutting af of ane finger is nocht mutilatioun, it is nocht pertinent to this purpois; becaus the persewar compleinis that he is mutilat of thre fingeris, quhilk ar nocht cut aff, bot mutilat and maid vnhable, quhairby he hes nocht the full and rycht vse, nather of his thre fingeris, nor yit of that hand: And as for the mutilatioun it self, and verritie thair of, it is verifeit be oculour inspectioun, and be the Chirurges Testimoniall producet: And quhair it is allegit, that the Rolment of Court producet, is only vsset bot to verifie that the persewar is culpable of the bluid and bluid-wyte, repeitis the ansuer maid thairto of befoir, with this eik,³ that the Schereff had na power to put him to ane Assyse, he nocht compeirand; sa that the Declaratioun maid be the Inqueist, aucht nawayis to be respectit: And as to the Schereff, he had nocht power to geve ony Declaratioun thairupoun; and the parteis contumacie and absence is na cause to convict him of the bluid or bluid-wyte; and becaus of his absence, he could be na forder convict bot in payment of the vnlaw; sua that, in respect of the premisses, na respect aucht to be had to the Rolment of Court or ony pairt thair of: And albeit a pairtie be contumax and compeir nocht, that contumacie convictis him nocht of the cryme; vtherwayis, gif ane pairtie war contumax, it war nocht neidfull to put him to ane Assyse of new, quhilk war ane grit absurditie; feing, findrie persones being summoned to compeir befoir the Justice Generall and vtheris Judges in Criminall causses, thay purge thair contumacie, and offer thame selfis to ane tryell; and cowmonlic thay ar clanget be the Assyse; as was ffund in this Judgment, betuix Cunninghame and Wylie. And as to the Doctouris of the Law allegit, na respect aucht to be had thairto in this Judicatorie, in respect of the inviolable practique obseruet within this realme; quhairin, mutilatioun of ony part of ane mannis persone, be the quhilk he is frustrat of the rycht vse thairof, is put to ane Assyse determinatioun; the Justice advyfes and resolues vpon the pwneischment, be advyse of the Lordis of Secreit Counsell.

THE perfewar Restrictis this Lybell to the mutilatioun of the thre last fingers of his left hand allanerlie.

It is forder allegit be the pannell, that he can nocht be put to ane Assyse for the mutilatioun lybellit; in respect, gif ony hurt or mutilatioun be gevin to the perfewar, it was done be the perfewar him self, in drawing of his awin fuord the tyme lybellit; quhilk he has dyuerse tymes confessit to Andro Scott Chirurgane, and vtheris; and desyres the perfewaris ayth to be tane thairupoun.

The perfewar, being solemnlie fuorne vpon the last allegiance, anent the mutilatioun be him self with his awin fuord; he, be his grit aith, denyit the samyn; and affirmet that he was mutilat be Walter Scott, defender, and na vther: Quhairupoun my lord Aduocat askit instrumentis.

THE JUSTICE ffindis the Dittay relevant; and remittis the samyn to the tryell of ane Assyse.

The perfewar, be his grit ayth, swore the Dittay to be of verritie: Quhairupoun my lord Aduocat askit instrumentis. And in respect thairof, and of the Chirurganes Testimoniall producet, with the evidence of the mutilatioun, be sehawing of the perfewaris mutilat fingeris, Protestis for Wilfull Errour, gif the Assyse acquit.—The pannell repeittis the allegiances maid be him of befoir, now to the Assyse, speciallie, that pairt thairof, that the cryme was committit in his awin defence, and that he was perfewit be the perfewar, and is convict thairof, and of the bluid and bluid-wyte, as the Rolment of Court beiris.

VERDICT. The Assyse, be the mouth and declaratioun of James Wauch in Selkirk, chancellor, fand the said Walter Scott to be ffylet, culpable, and convict of the mutilatioun of the said Adam of thre fingeris of his said left hand, in manner and at the tyme specifeit in the said Dittay.

It is allegit be the pannell, that na proces can be grantit at Johnne Meldrumis instance, becaus he is rebell and at his Maiesteis horne; and producet fyve feuerall Hoirningis for verifeing thair of.—My lord Aduocat declairis he infistis in the perfute for the Kingis Maiesteis intreis aganis the pannell, quha had na power to tak and detene the said Johnne, in maner lybellit.

It is allegit be the pannell, that gif the Dittay war trew, (nocht grantand the samyn,) that thai did na wrang in taking and detening of the said Johnne Meldrum, becaus the tyme of his taking, he was rebell and at the horne; and repeittis the Hoirningis producet for instructing thair of: And as the pannell could nocht be callit for Slauchter of ane rebell at that tyme, far les can thai be perfewit for his taking.—It is anfuerit be my lord Aduocat, as perfewer, that the exception aucht to be repellit; ffirst, becaus he infistis vpon the hail lybell coniunctim, as ane cryme to infer the conclusioun thairin contenit, viz. taking and detening of Johnne Meldrum in privato carcere, as the lybell beiris: Secundo, adheirand to the first anfuer, geveand¹ the said Johnne had bene rebell, the pannell had na Warrant to tak or apprehend him, thay nor nane of thame being Magistrattis, haifand na Jurisdictioun, power, nor commissioun; feing the pannell could nevir haif bene accuset for suffering a rebell to pas vp and down the cuntrie, nather warthayastRICTIT of the Law² to tak him, nather mycht thay tak him.

It is duplyit be the pannell, that the exceptioun standis relevant, nochtwithstanding of the anfuer, insafar as the Kingis Maiesteis rebell can haif na benifeit of his Maiesteis Lawis; and thairfoir, as nocht being the Kingis frie leige, it was lauchfull to the pannell to tak him; and in the Law it is cleir, quod capere Bannitum vnicuique permittitur, L. finali Cod. de Maleficis et Machematicis; Baldus in Lege prima, Cod. de Summa Trinitate: And the resson of the Law is, quia Bannitus habetur pro fugitivo; et fugitivum quilibet potest capere; Bald. in Lege qui bonis, Cod. qui bonis cedere: And it was nevir practizet in this Judicatorie, that Hoirning being obiectit and producet, ather for hurting, slaying, or taking of ony man, proces was grantit. And it being now opposit, that the persone tane was the Kingis Rebell, the pairtie perfewit was nevir, nor can nevir be put to the knowlege of ane Assyse. Lykas, it is allegit, that the Laird of Drumlangrig, being accuset for taking of Kirkmichell, was nocht put to ane Assyse. It is forder eikit to the allegeance, that the pannell had ane speciall intreis to tak him, becaus he was rebell and at the horne for nocht removeing fra his landis of Woidheid, quhilkis landis of Woidheid he violentlie possessit, and opprest the tennentis. Lyk as, the said Thomas Meldrum of Iden, finding the said Johnne Meldrum to be nyne or ten tymes his Maiesteis rebell, and haifing letteris of Captioun to tak and apprehend him, the said Johnne being ane fugitiue and ane howlat,¹ nocht appeirand in the day; and it being cum to the pannellis knowlege, the tyme lybellit, that he was cum, vnder filence of nycht, and enterit withiin the houffis, the pannell, vpon suddantie, being adverteist by the spyis, nocht haifing the occaßioun² of ane meßfingier, was forcet of neceßitie, propter periculum fuge, to pas him felf, with his awin domeßtik fervandis, and to feafe vpon the faid Johnne, of intentioun to exhibeit him to Jußtice, he being his Maießeis rebell for cauffes Criminall, fic as for invading the Guidman of Harthill, &c., as the Hoirningis beiris: Lyk as, with all convenient dilligence, the pannell brocht the faid Johnne Meldrum to Edinburghe, of intentioun to exhibeit him to jußtice; and in the meane tyme, he being feafit vpon and put in waird, at the inßtance of dyuerße perßones, baith for dett, ryottis, and oppreßiones. Quhair vpon the pannell meanit him felf³ to the Lordis of Secreit Counfell; quha, be thair Warrant and directioun, vpon the xxj of Maij, 1612, Ordanit the faid cautioun for obferveing his Maießeis peace, and his perßonall compeirance, quhan euir he fould be charget thairto, vnder the pane of V^m (5000) merkis, as the Ordinance, heirwith producet, beiris. Sua that the pannell, being in proßeçione proprie injurie, for freithing⁴ him felf and his tennentis of ane manifeßt oppreßfour, et quum latitabat tanquam fugitivus, as faid is, he was in optima fide to tak him; and nather the captor nor detentioun can be comptit criminall, becaus it is lauchfull, cuilibet ex populo, to tak ane notorious malefactour, and to exhibeit him to jußtice; and his detentioun is nocht culpa, becaus he was preßentit to jußtice.

It is anßuerit be my lord Aduocat to the firßt pairt of the Duply, that he repeitis his former anßuer; for albeit ane rebell may nather perßew nor defend in judgement, that is na reaßone quhairfoir everie privat man fould tak him at his awin hand, and detene him in his privat hous, as is fet down in the lybell. Quhair the defender wald compair ane rebell cum bannito, nocht grantand to the Law allegit, quhilk makis na mentioun de Bannito, ffor Bannitus was properlie callit he quha tranßgreßsit aganis the Empyre or the Eßtait. As to the allegeance proponit aganis all the perßeweris rebelliones, thair is nocht ane proponit for ane criminall caufe perßewit criminallie; and as to the haill ciuile Hoirningis, repeittis as of befoir. And quhair it is allegit, that he was rebell at the inßtance of Thomas Meldrum him felf, ane of the pannell, for nocht removeing fra his landis of Woidheid, it is anßuerit, that albeit he was partie aganis him, that gave him na authoritie to tak him at his awin hand, fpeciallie being duelling and remaning in his awin hous, and vpon his awin heritage of Ordley, and nawayis being fugitiue fra his Maießeis lawis at that tyme. As to the Hoirning vßet aganis him, at the inßtance of his Maießeis Aduocat for the tyme, the Guidman of Hearthill

As to the Letteris of Captioun producet, na refpect fould be had thairto, becaus thair is ane executioun producet; quhairupoun I tak instrumentis, defyreing the hail blankis thairintill to be feoirit; and allegis, that na refpect fould be had thairto, becaus the Letteris of Captioun ar nocht direct to him, nor to nane of the perfones that concurret with him in the taking of the faid Johnne Meldrum: Lyk as, na refpect aucht to be had to the faidis Letteris of Captioun, becaus thair is na executioun producet. As to the Warrant of the Secret Counfell, producet, the perfewar acceptis the famyn, and alledges that this Warrant, gevin vpon the xxj of Maij, 1612, could be na Warrant to the perfones on pannell, nor nane of thame, to haif tane him vpon the aucht day of Maij preceeding, and to haif keipit him in privatis carceribus to the faid xxj day, quum carcer est meri imperij, et non competit privato; and ane Ordiner Judge hes nocht power to keip ane perfone tane in privato domo attour¹ the fpace of xxiiij houris. Sua, infiftand vpon the hail lybell coniunctlie; as is confauet, the hail argumentis proponit for the pannell aucht to be repellit.

It is forder exceptit be the pannell, that with the Hoirningis producet, and allegeances foundit vpon the rebellious of the perfewar, the defender did na wrang to tak or detene the perfewar, for the reffones foirfaidis. And quhair it is allegit, that he mycht nocht detene him, quia carcer est meri imperii; ffirft, it is allegit, that quhan ane rebell is tane ad hunc finem, to present him to the Judge Ordiner, thair is na wrang done, quhilk is in this caice; as is decydit in the Law laillie allegit, *quod ait Pretor, Si debitorum ff. My lord Aduocat, anfuerand to the first pairt of the secund allegeance, sayis, that the persewer is formallie contrair to the pannell, and that the lybell contenis ane sufficient Criminall caus, to put the pannell to the knowlege of ane Assyse; And quhair it is allegit, that the pannell brocht the persewer and presentit him to ane Judge, desyres the pannell to condiscend vpon the name of the Judge to quhome he was presentit; ffor it is treuthe, that quhan he was brocht to Ed^r, he brocht him to the calsay,¹ and than tuik instrumentis of his setting to libertie; and thairefter, certane of his creditouris, be vertew of Captioun, tuik him and pat him in waird. And quhan it is allegit that the taking of perfones and keeping of thame in privatis carceribus is nocht capitall, the direct contrair is of verritie; becaus the said cryme is nocht only capitall, bot, be the rigour of the Law, is tressonable; as was decydit befor the Justice General aganis the Erles of Huntlie and Crafurd, ffor taking of the Majster of Glames. As to the practique of the Laird of Drumlanrig, in that caice it was alleget, for defence of Drumlanrig, that Kirkmichell was tane be vertew of Letteris of Captioun, direct to the Schereff of Nidisdail, and na Interlocutour was pronuncet in that cause, becaus the persewar past fra the persute thairof, pro loco et tempore. In respect quhairof, the lybell standis relevant; and, nochtwithstanding of the saidis allegeances maid be the pannell in the contrair, sould be put to the knowlege of ane Assyse.

Slaughter in Single Combat, or Duel, while in Foreign Service.

[THE following Trial is one which possesses considerable interest and importance, as well from the light which it throws on the application of the LAWS OF DUELLING, in Scotland and in the Low Countries, as from the rank and situation of the parties implicated. Captain Harry Bruce, who had subsequently been employed to superintend the martial exercises of CHARLES, PRINCE OF WALES, afterwards the unfortunate KING CHARLES I, was rigorously pursued, by the vindictive and mercenary spirit of the relatives of Captain John Hamilton, in the Supreme Criminal Tribunal of Scotland, after he had long before been honourably acquitted by Court Martial in Flanders—under the impression, no doubt, that they would either extort a large sum of money from this new Court favourite, or procure his ruin or death. The DUEL OR SINGLE COMBAT referred to in this case, and into which Bruce had been dragged by the rashness and insolence of his antagonist, had taken place no less than about seventeen years previous to those proceedings !

The reader may here be referred to the Case of “Capitan Johne Rig, Archeour of the Gaird of France,” in a former part of this Collection, Vol. II., p. 382.]

AND twitching the matter it self, the treuth is, as was clerlie verifeit befor the *Counsell of Weiris*¹ establifhed be the saidis Esfaitis, for trying and censuring of matteris of this kynd, that the said Capitane Harie was dyuerse tymes challenget to the Combat be the said vmq^{le} Capitane Johnne Hammiltoun, nochtwithstanding of the mony offeris maid be the said Capitane Harie to geve him all dew satisfacioun and resson, in the matter contravertit betuix thame, that, in respectiue termes of consideratioun, could be craved ; bot the moir the said Capitane Harie eschewit his Challenge, he was so much the moir earnest in following of the fame, objecting vnto the said Capitane Harie the reproche of cowardice, and protestting to abuse him, in his private revenge, accoirdinglie : And so, the said Capitane Harie, finding him self interest and tuiched in so heigh a poynt of credeit and reputatioun, quhilk being anes lost, was nevir to be recoverit, bot wald cary with him to the grave ane infamous imputatioun, and an ignominious spott of vnworthie cowardice ; and haifing respect, pairwithall, to his birth and parentage, quhilk he was lothe to blemishe, in a matter of this kynd ; and aboue all thingis, haveing eur befor his eis the equitie of his caus, with ane full and constant assureance, that God, who is pe trew sercheour of the heart, and vpon quhois devyne Providence the event of such duellis dependis, wald iustifie his pairt, in that uniuert Challenge quhilk was revertit vpon him, he acceptit and vndertuik the Challenge, quhairin it plesit God to iustifie and cleir the equitie of his caus, by making the said vmq^{le} Capitane Johnne to vnderly the dew desert of his error and raschenes : Quhairvpon, the said Capitane Harie, being callit befor the said Counsell of Weir, and the forme and circumstances of pe samyn being narowlie examined and ryped vp be thame, the qualitie of the said Capitane Harie and pe said vmq^{le} Capitane Johnne, thair perones being sborne and actuall Officeris in the airmie, making thame subiect vnto the said Counsell of Weir, and punisheable be the lawis of that Esfait ; thay stand, that pe said Capitane Harie had done nothing vnbeseeameing the deutie of a fouldiour, suppointit with the testimonie of a good conscience : And pairfoir, restoitit him to his place and charge, quhairin he serued with good credeit dyuerse zeiris pairrestir. AND quhair as, he looked that this forme of tryell, vsed aganis him be the said Counsell of Weir, who wer only Judges to him in this caice, fould haif securet and warranted him frome any new persute, zit the sifter and freindis² of the said vmq^{le} Capitane Johnne callit him, for pe same Slauchter, befor his Maiesteis Justice, in the sax hundreth and fyve zeir of God ;³ quhair of informatioun being send vnto him frome hence, he maid his addres to HIS MAIESTIE, aquentit his hienes with the perticuleris of this matter, and all that proceidit pairin ; quho, eftir consideratioun pair of, nocht only vtterit his discontentment that any such matteris fould haif bene walknit heir, bot HIS MAIESTIE was gracioullie plesit to grant vnto the said Capitane Harie his Remission for that deid, and wrait a Letter vnto the Lordis of his Maiesteis Previe Counsell ffor discharginge the Justice to meddle in that matter : Quhilk Remission and Letter being delyuerit to the lair Erle of Dumbar, and presentit vnto the saidis Lordis, as some of thame rememberis ; the sleuth and negligence of those who war trusted with the said Capitane Harie his effairis, sufferit his Letteris to perrishe ; and the matter has eur restit and sleipt sensyne till now. APPENDIX TO THE TRIAL OF CAPTAIN HARIE BRUCE.

[SEVERAL Cases have already occurred in the course of this Collection, illustrative of the state of the Law and practice, in Scotland, as to DUELLING, interchanging of CARTELS, and Slaughters committed in SINGLE COMBAT. The preceding Trial is one of much interest ; and the subject led the Editor to make some enquiries into various affairs of honour, which had happened about the same period of this King's reign. Among others which have hitherto been noticed in this work, none appear to have excited greater interest than the quarrel between the sons of LORD CRANSTOUN and of SIR GEDEON MURRAY, which had nearly terminated in the most fatal manner. Although unconnected with the Case of Captain Harie Bruce, the following documents throw much light upon the opinions and practices of the Nobility and gentry in feuds and affairs of honour. It has been thought proper to preserve them in this place, as a memorial of transactions which tend to give a complexion and character to the spirit and genius of those times.]

I. LETTER from the Privy Council of Scotland to King James VI., relative to the CHALLENGE, &c. between the sons of LORD CRANSTOUN and of SIR GEDEON MURRAY.¹

PLEAS YOUR MOST EXCELLENT AND SACRED MA^{TIES},

AS WE hope that your highnes hathe long since vnderstood of sum CHALLENGE OF COMBAT betuix the secound sone of THE LORD CRANSTOUN and SIR GEDEON MURRAY his sone, begun betuix the yowthes, vpon licht cawffis of verie small moment; and of the ordour taken be ws for preventing thame meiting, and calling of thame to there ansuer; and of the cowrfe taken for there reconcilioun, whiche wes done in prefens of the hole COUNSALL, wheirby all probabilitie of forder Challenging betuix the pairteis then, in appeirans, wes removed; so when, vpon privie information maid to ws, sum fear was apprehendit of a new breache betuix the pairteis, by interchangeing of CARTELLIS privilye betuix thame selfis, whowever we wald have bene forye that the folyeis of the childrene, or the hard event which follow fuche accidentis, fuld have empairod or diminifched the love and affectioun which heirtofoir haith bene and doeth still continew betuix there parentis, (bothe of quhome haithe worthelie deferved, and have behaved thame selfis most dewtfullye and faythfullye as thay have bene employed in your Maties fervis,) yit heirin we war so muche more justlie moved to advert to fuche a noveltye, that efter a reconcilioun once maid befor your Maties COUNSELL, ather the keiping of your highnes peace fuld be so lytle regairdit, or the ordour takin by ws for the observeing therof so far contemned, as that any durft presume or attempt any new querrelling. Wheirvpon both the fatheris wer charged to compeir, and bring with thame and exhibite there sones; whiche being accoirdinglie and dewtfullye obeyit by bothe of thame, efter a verye hard and exact tryall² takin, in regaird of the vnwillingnes of aither³ of the yowthes, vpon thair first questioneing, to confes what new maiter haid passid betuix thame; at last, it being found that THE LORD CRANSTOUNIS sone wes the Challenger, by a CARTELL, wrettin efter the reconcilioun maid; we therwpon committed him cloise prisoner in the Casile of Blaknes. The other, whowever, being provoked, yit, in regaird he did obscure and conceale it, (being some presumptioun that he intendit to keip the meiting, and so to mak a breache of your Maties peace,) wes adiudget to be committed in Ed^r Casfell, in frie waerde, haveing haid fredome granted vnto him furth thairof within xlviij houris, and confyned within this Burgh and a myle about the same; where as, the said Lord Cranstounis sone, thir fourtene dayes past, haveing lyn cloise prisoner in Blaknes, and in the mean whyle making suite often by Bill⁴ to be releived, confessing, in most humble maner, his offence, and offering all satisfacioun that fuld be injoynd be ws, wes, by directioun, brocht from the place of his imprisonment by the Liettenant of your MA^{TIES} GAIRD, and presented befor ws; where, in the presence of Sir Gedeon Murray and his sone, he did humblye, vpon his knies, craive pardoun of your MA^{TIES} for the offence done, and did intreat ws to be suitters for the same to your sacred highnes, on his behalf; haveing heirwithe confessed, also, the great wrong he haid done vnto your Maties COUNSELL, in preswming to renew ony Challenge efter reconciliounes maid; and theirwith vttering most apparent signes of inward forrow for offending of his so loveing father, vnto whome he knew this his bypast behaviour wes so distastefull, as without ony intercessioun he culd expect at his handes no favour. He then to the partie challanged, in prefence of bothe fathers, did there confes the wrong he haid done him, offering him what satisfioun he wald demand; and did there protest, that howevir, in his yowthfull folye, he haid aferyved the last reconcilioun as a maiter extorted by constraint or command of THE COUNSELL, that yit nottheles this his present aggriment wes of meire affectioun, whiche he intendit all bypast eylist¹ abolished to continew heirefter.

There wes sum jealousye in this mater takin by SIR GEDEON, as that the LORD CRANSTOUN, whowevir not a direct vrger of his sone to this Challenge, haid nottheles intendit to tak some advantage, to the preiudice of the credite and honour of him and his sone; and by the speiches delyvered by SIR GEDEON in our preiudice, we did conceave no lefs: Bot yit, that this impressioun, not being cleirit, might tak no deiper roote, we then did questioun THE LORD CRANSTOUN theirow; who, in presence of SIR GEDEON, by his great oathe, vnrequyred, did protest that he wes so far from countenauncing or allowing of his sones actioun and cariage in this busynes, as on the contrarye, these fevin yeiris past, no incident whatfoever that haid interveynd haid so muche greivit him; and that he did assure him self that SIR GEDEON wes no les in confieence perswadit, since he haid foirwarned him, immediatlie vpon his knowledge of the first Challenge; and vpon his sones depairtour the last tyme frome him, suspecting the humour of the yowthe, and yit, vpon his confieence, nocht knowing of any thing intendit, did of new certifie SIR GEDEON of his fearis. Whiche declaratioun, being delivered with so great attestations by one not muche accustomed to sweiring, did not onlye remove all feruipule and jealousye frome SIR GEDEON, as he then affirmed, but left none of the beholderis vnsatisfyed, and fullie perswadit of that Noble-mannis innocencye. THE COUNSELL, havinge taken ane verye striet and exact tryall of all circumstanceis whiche might inferre any the least suspitioun of THE LORD CRANSTOUNIS allowanee, airte, pairte, or connivence at his sonis actioun, in the examining wherof, the farder that we did drywe we still fand the father the more cleare of all imputatioun; and, in our judgement, SIR GEDEON is fullye perswadit theirow; lykas, in our presence he did profess no lefs. And howevir, that heirvpon all pairteis, bothe eldar and younger, wer reconceiled, yit, becaws of the offence done to your MATIES by JAMES CRANSTOUN, in pressing to renew any querrell, efter aggriment ones maid in presence of COUNSELL, we have theirvpon adiudget the said James Cranstoun, that betuix and the first of October nixt, he fall depairt your MATIES dominiones, and remaine furthe of the same, and naway returne bak, vntill that your MATIES speciall Licence and Warrant be purchest; and have takin sovertye and cawtioun, bound vnder a great fowme, for that effect. AND becaws there wilbe a necessitie of provisoun to be maid by the father for the sones furneing, in his going beyond See, therefore we have committed him prifoner in his father's owin keiping, vntill the tyme of his depairture; who is to refraine, endureing that space, his sone of all sache libertye, wheirbye any furder harme might be feared.

AND albeit the reconcilioun and aggriment wes fullye maid, so as in our judgementis there did not remayne the least scruple of any furder grudge amonges the pairteis, yit the noveltye of the caice, and the hairme whiche the impunitye thairof might produce, if vpon this example, others who haif bene formerlye reconceilit, wald now preise to renew and reviuie there olde querrellis, we culd nocht, in our dewtye to your MATIE, suffer this to go vnpunished; whiche moved ws, (however earnestlie and humblye entreated by SIR GEDEON MURRAY to recall our Sentence and determinatioun aganis the said James Cranstoun,) nottheles, for ane exemplarye punishment, and efferyng² of others to commit³ the lyk insolence, to continew our resolutioun takin in the maiter for his BANISCHEING, as said is. As lykwayis, ather of the two fathers bund and obleist, not onlye for these there sones, betuix whome this CHALLENGE hes past, bot for all others of there sones come to mannis aige, everie ane of thame vnder the payne of Ten Thowfsand merkis, that thay fall keip your MATIES peace, that no CARTELLIS falbe sent by the one to the other; and that the pairtye vnto whome any falbe sent, fall immediatlie, with all possible diligence, acquaint the Counsell with the CHALLENGE sent to him ; otherwayes the payne forsaide to be incurrit. And hoiping that nothing heirin is left vndone, whichè in sic a caise wes requisite, and fullye expecting your MA^{TIES} good allowance and favorable constructure of our proceedingis, wischeing thay may prove good mettall when thay come to the tryall of the trew tuitchestone, vnto whome we do most humblye pray for the continuance of all happines, We doe rest

MOST GRATIOUS AND SACRED SOUERANE,

We ressaue your MAIESTEIS Letter, twitcheing your MA^{TIES} censure² of that lait committit ryott be THE ERLL OF LOTHEANE, and anent the fyne whilk your MAIESTIE wold haif to be imposed vpon him for that caus ; whairin, as your MAIESTEIS most excellent and rair wisdome in the censuring of that mater so iuditiously, by the circomstanceis sett down in your MAIESTEIS Lettre, and the directioun gevin be your MAIESTIE anent the pvnishing thairof, is verye weeel warrandit with infallible groundis of iustice and reafoun ; yitt, becaus siche heich fynes in ryottis of this qualitey hathe not bene vsuall to be imposed vpon any personis heir, we wilbe bauld to intreate your MAIESTEIS fauour, for a mitigatioun of the fyne to Thrie Thousand merkis, whiche in all oure opinionis is answerable⁵ to the qualitey of the offence committed. He is full prisouner, and fall so continew whill the pairtye in some measour ressaue satisfioun. And howeur this ouersight, by⁴ all oure expectationis, hes fallen oute in his persone, we hoip that this your MAIESTEIS censure of him, will mak him moir consideratlie and respectiuelie to looke to his future cariage and behaviour.

AND whereas your MAIESTIE doeth mervell that no tryale hes bene tane be ws of the infolencie committit be THE LORD OF CRANSTONIS sones aganis THE ERLE OF LOTHEANE, it will pleis your MAIESTIE we did nevir heir of any complaint in that mater, the pairtye being silent, and no informatioun gevin be him thairin : Alwayes,⁵ we haif causit demand of him, yf he will persew? He hes promiseit to gif informatioun to your MAIESTEIS Aduocat, and to furneis probatioun ; whairin we shall tak siche exact tryall, and accordingleie inflict such pvnishment as the course of iustice, in siche a caise, requireth. And so, praying God to blisse your Maieftie with all contentment and happyues, we rest for ever,

THE JUSTICE Ordanit the faid Sir Walter to sitt down with him, with the remanent Assessoris.

THE Dittay being red, and the ffirst Article thair of, concerning hir laying on of ane grevous feiknes vpon Cuthbert Greg, couper, burges of Glefgow, be Sorcerie and Witchcraft, and aff-taking of the faid feiknes be the lyk devillifche and vnlouchfull meanes; as the ffirst Article beiris; quhilk the pannell haillilie denyit.—It is thaireftir allegit be Mr Alexander Peiblis, as prelocoutour for the pannell, that the Dittay and ffirst Article thair of can nawayis be put to the knowlege of ane Assyse; becaus it is nocht lybellit, nor fet down in the Dittay, that the fact lybellit was done be the pannell, or the feiknes inflictit be hir. Nixt, it is nocht lybellit quibus mediis, quibus modis, et quibus malis artibus, the samyn was accomplifchet; becaus Witchcraft can nocht be accomplifchet as Witchcraft, bot¹ be characteris, signes, croces, poyfonet watteris, poyfonet asches, poyfonet oyles, powderis, figures, pictouris, poyfonet herbis, ruittis, vennemous oyles, woirdis, speiches, by incalling and invocatioun of the name of Sathan, quha, at the accomplifchment quhairof, hes promiseit to geve his prefens to thame; without the quhilkis, or ony of thame, Witchcraft can nocht be accomplifchet: Nather is it lybellit, that this fact and deid allegit is committit be the pannell, be ony of thir meanis: And fa, that Article can nocht pas to ane Assyse.—To the quhilk it is anfuerit be my lord Aduocat, that the allegiance aucht to be repellit, in respect of the lybell and hail poyntis thairrof, tane conjunctim; be the quhilk it is affirmet positiue, that this feiknes was laid on be the pannell vpone Cuthbert Greg, be hir Sorcerie and Witchcraft; and he purget, and releuit, and restoirit to his helth be hir Sorcerie and Witchcraft: And fa, the Dittay, as relevant in that poynt, fould pas to ane Assyse.

It is forder allegit be the pannell and hir prelocutouris, that the woirdis ‘laying on and taking af’ ar altogidder generall, and can nocht pas to ane Assyse, nevir condiscending in speciall quhat was done; as is fet down in the former definition of Witchcraft.—To the quhilk it is anfuerit be the perfewaris, that thair is no necessitie to condiscend vpone the forme of the on-laying and af-taking of feiknesses, quhidder be woirdis, signes, croces, and vtherwayis, the perfewaris nawayis being previe thairto, nather can thai be vrget to condiscend thairupoun, feing the Witches, practizeris of that vnlauchfull and godles meane, ar best acquentit with the poyntis of thair awin craft: And thairfoir, it being lybellit, relevantlie, that, be hir Sorcerie and Witchcraft, the feiknes was baith laid on and tane af be hir, the samyn fould pas to the knowlege of ane Assyse, as relevant.

It is forder allegit be Mr Thomas Nicolfone, as prelocutour for the pannell, that of the Law multa indicia debilia nunquam faciunt indicium indubitatum, quia nunquam ea que natura sunt dubia possunt facere rem indubitatum; ut multa integra vnum sanum, multa non alba vnum album. This is the opinioun of Pharinacius, and of Delrio in his 5 sect. pag. 728; at the leift, except that thair war ane coherence and necessar subordinatioun of illa multa indicia. Bot sa it is, in this poynt of dittay, thair is confuset feuerall articles, quhilkis, per se, ar indicia debilia; and thair is na coherence amangis thame selffis, in sa far as the promiseing to do him ane evill turne, and the subsequent feiknes, ar nawayis coherent, nather can the ane follow vpone the vther. SECUNDO, circumstantie indictionum sine quibus ad inquisitionem non proceditur sunt quis, quando, ubi, cum quibus, quomodo circumstantia, quomodo est huic x sui, vt quibus instrumentis factum esse dicatur, vt sint pulveres, vnguina determina mortuorum. And quhair it appeiris to be allegit in the reply, that de medijs non potest constare, becaus they are knawin only to the Witches and thair Maister, thair is heirin ane manifest equivocatioun, in sa far as be the determinatioun of the hail traiteris de Veneficijs, hec duo sunt disperata signa media; it is grantit sine medijs, condiscending vpon medijs, a lybell may stand relevant; becaus hec SATANA stragemata quibus ille naturaliter vtatur medijs sunt plerumque incognita; bot of all necessitie, to the lybelling of ane deid of Witchcraft, accedere oportet superstitionem vt dicatur surpassè res aliquas facta vel verba que sapiant incantationem vel dicatur nominatim exercuisse actum aliquem qui ex communi maleficiorum praxi ad malificium dirigitur. This is DELRIO's opinioun, ceitting the hail treiteis de Veneficijs, in his thrid sect. pag. 711; et libro 5, sect. 16, pag. 774. And the premisses, sa authorizet be the hail learnet wryteris, ar of infallible verritie; for this reasone, becaus thair can be na deid of Witchcraft lybellit relevantlie, bot man¹ be sa lybellit, as it is possible, per rerum naturam, to the Assyse to cognosce thairupovn; bot it is subsumet, that except sum sensible actioun or signe, or vther thing be lybellit, it is impossible to the Assyse to cognosce thairupoun, quia nihil est in anima quod non sit prius in sensu.

The persewaris repeittis thair former ansuer, foundit vpon the hail memberis of the Dittay, tane coniunctim; quhilkis memberis coheris verrie pertinentlie—a promise to inflict the seiknes, and laid on—the on-laying of the seiknes, be Inchantment, as the Dittay beiris—and the taking be the hand of the persone vizeit with the seiknes, and releifing him thairof be moveing of hir lips, &c.: And as for the tryell of the Assyse, the deidis ar verrie publict and knawin; and referris the verritie thairof to the Depositiones of the Witneses alreddie tane, and to be tane in that matter, and to the Assyse awin knowlege.—The pannell adheris to thair former exceptioun, vncondiscending in speciall, quibus modis, quibus medijs, et quibus malis artibus to infer Witchcraft.

The pannell quarrellis that pairt of the lybell be the quhilk it is said, that scho inflicted the seiknes be Witchcraft, nocht condiscending quhat maner of Witchcraft was vsed for inflicting thairof. And quhair it is said, that the memberis coheris, becaus of a promise and the effect following, the pannell oppones the authority of Pharinatius, confirmet be Delrio, in the 718 page of his 3 sect.; quhair it is said, immo mine² delictum subsecutum inimicia non sufficiunt ad penam sortilegij; quia huiusmodi indicia sunt tantum remota. As lykwayis, a stronger authoritie, pag. 717; quhair it is affirmet, and bakit with resson,³ in thir termes, mine subsecute damno—et si male fame sit minans indicium, sunt insertum ratio potest enim pars offensa alios habere inimicos qui hoc tegmine preter scelus perpetrarunt: Nather is thair necessitie to affirme alium fecisse; becaus the possibilitie of ane instance aganis ane generall reule evinces the incertantie thairof: Additur, quod in criminalibus nunquam ex presumptionibus proceditur ad condemnationem, sed probationes debent esse luce meridiana clariores. And as to the vther pairt, concerning the af-taking of the feiknes, thair is na deid lybellit bot ordinarie deidis of vizeiting a patient, be a freind or a phifitioun, to wit, graipping of the pulfes or chaikill-bane and breift, quhilk is the steiring of the spreittis-vitall, and is the ordiner behauour vset and practizet be the visitouris of ony patient; and becaus that eftir thais ordiner remedeis the patient arraise, and that scho maid him to ryfe, est elenchus dilirij. And forder, the pannellis former authorities man¹ be respectit, becaus thair is na contrair practeis producet.—My lord Aduocat repeitis his former anfuere.

THE Secund Article of Dittay being red, and the said Margaret being accuset thairby, viz. that vpone a discord fallin out betuix hir and Johne Robertoun, querriour, a thre yeir syue, scho thraitnet and avowit to be avengit vpone his flesche; quhairvpon a difeis was inflictit be hir vpon him, quhairin he yit continewis, and that be hir Sorcerie and Witchcraft practizet be hir vpon him.—It is allegit be the pannell, aganis the said secund Article of Dittay, that the samyn is nawayis relevant anent Johne Robertoun; being altogidder coincident with the former Article, and cayreing thairwith far les probabilitie nor² the former; ffor thair is na member thairof relevant to infer Witchcraft, for sa mekill thairof as consistis in fact, tuiching Robertoun his inhabilitie to work this thre yeir bygane, throw the inhabilitie of his feiknes, quhilk is manifest fals in the self: ffor it is evident, be oculer inspectioun, to luik to him presentlie at the bar, that he hes sufficient strench of body to work: As also, it fall be verifeit, gif neid beis, that he, being an querriour of his craft,³ hes wrocht, thir dyuerse yeiris bygane, to dyuerse persones, namelie, to Sir George Elphingstoun of Blitheswoid, George Andersone in Woildsyde, and to the pannell, be wyuning of stanes furth of the querrell;⁴ and repeitis the former allegeance maid aganst the first Article. Igitur, &c.—To the quhilk it is anfuereit be the persewaris, that the allegeance aucht to be repellit, in respect of the Dittay, quhilk is relevant in it self. And as to that point consistin in facto, the persewar referris the tryell thairof to the Witnesses producet and to be producet, and to the persones of Assyse, quaha aucht to cognosce vpon the hail poyntis of Dittay, consistin in facto.

It is forder allegit be Mr Thomas Nicolfone, that the said secund poynt of Dittay is altogidder irrelevant; becaus of the Law, indicium minarum et damni subsequenti, quhilk is the only substance of this point, and is nawayis relevant of the Law, quoties delictum ex intervallo dicitur subsequuntum; bot sa it is, in this Dittay, it is lybellit, that the thraitning of Johne Robertoun, and the inflicting of the difeis, was within this yeir and this half, quhilk is ex intervallo; And quhair as, it appearis that this feiknes is inflicted immediatlie eftir ane vther thraitning maid to the wyfe of Johnne Robertoun, nullo modo relevat; becaus vt mine et damnum subsecutum faciunt indicium, oportet vt sit eadem persona cui mine et damnum dicuntur inferri; sa that the thraitning to the wyfe, and inflicting feiknes vpon hir husband, is na relevant poynt. Item, mine et damnum subsecutum nullum omnino faciunt indicium, nisi mine fuerint specificate, seu de eodem quod subsecutum est in specie; ffor ane general thraitning to do ane evill turne, nocht condiscending vpon the speciall evill turne, can haif na coherence with ane speciall skaith following thairaftir, to mak it venefice; becaus mine et damnum subsecutum ar comptit aliquale indicium maxime respectu predictionis, as ane maner of fute-faying; and that can be comptit na fute-faying quhilk ony man could lykways foirtell by¹ ane Witche, viz. predicere de genere et subsecutum esse speciem.—My lord Aduocat adheris to his former ansuer.

THE Thrid Article of Dittay, anent ane discord that fell out betuix the pannell and Jonet Harper, and of ane thraitning and vow maid to mak the said Jonet Harper in a worfe cais nor² hir poyfonet swyne; and anent ane feirfull feiknes quhairin scho schortlie thaireftir fell be the pannellis Sorcerie, Incantation, and Witchcraft—It is allegit be the pannell and his prelocoutouris, that the thrid Article is nawayis relevant, nevir condiscending quhat maner of Inchantment scho was bewitched with, and be quhat factis and deidis this was done, and quhat was vsæt be the pannell for that effect.—It is ansuerit be my lord Aduocent, that the allegeance aucht to be repellit, in respect of the Dittay.

THE ffourth Article of Dittay, anent the pannell hir being within Alexander Vallange hous, quhair scho fell in ane grit and suddane feiknes; and hir sending for vmq^{le} Cristiane Grahame, ane notorious Witche, and consulting with hir for hir relief of that feiknes; and eftir the said Cristiane hir cuning, of the pannellis passing out of the said Alexander Vallange hous to hir awin buith, with the said Cristiane, quhair scho was charmet and curet; and thaireftir the same feiknes, be devillerie and Witchcraft, cassin vpon Alexander Vallange bairne; and anent the said Cristiane Grahame hir cuning with the pannell to the bairne, and cureing hir, be taking af agane of the said feiknes; and for airt and part of the af-taking and on-laying of feiknes, and of af-taking the samyn agane af the said bairne with the said Cristiane; and consulting and practizeing of Witchcraft with hir for that effect, &c. The samyn being red, and the pannell indytit thairof—It is allegit be the pannell and hir prelocoutouris; aganis the said fourt Article, that the first part thairof is nawayis relevant, beiring that scho contractit ane suddane diseise, and for cureing thairof, send for Cristiane Grahame, ane notorious Witche, except it had bene expresse lybellit, that the tyme the pannell fend for hir, scho was ane notorious Witche, of the pannellis knowlege, and that scho fend for hir as ane notorious Witche, ad hunc effectum, to cure hir of that difeis: And it is nocht lybellit nather, that quhan Cristiane come, the pannell consultit with hir as with ane Witche; ffor, it is supponit¹ that ane Notter² war hangit for ane ffals Instrument, and he had gevin the excipient ane Seifing tuentie yeiris afoir, is that Seifing, gevin sa lang befoir, ffalfe? Na mair can that be ane poynt of Dittay, the pannellis sending for Cristiane Grahame, except scho was knawin to hir at that tyme to be ane Witche. The secund member is nawayis relevant, beiring that scho curet the pannell in the buithe, for that makis ane contradictiounne, that scho was deidlie diseaset quhan scho come, and thaireftir raife and past to the buithe, and thair was curet. The thrid member is nawayis relevant, beiring that the pannellis feiknes was cassin on the bairne, being lybellit that the samyn was done be the pannell, or be Cristiane Grahame, or be ane or vther of ws (thame). The fourt member is nawayis relevant, becaus it is confessit in the Dittay, that the pannell was curet in the buithe; and thaireftir come out of the buithe to the hous, and cuist it on the bairne: Gif the pannell was curet in the buith, quhair was the feiknes? Hoc est impossibile. As to the rest of the poyntis of that Article, that scho come down to the hous, vnset for, quhair the bairne was; that can be na poynt of Witchcraft. That the pannell declairit it was the feiknes scho had, non relevat, except it had bene verifeit and tryit³ that hir self had bene bewitched. And as for that member thairof, desyreing to fend for Cristiane Grahame to help her, non relevat to infer Witchcraft, except scho had knawin the said Cristiane to be ane notorious Witche. As to the rest of that Article, quhilk the pannell alto-gidder denyis, vpon hir aith and conscience, quhan the judge demandis hir; and albeit it war grantit, yit it is na poynt of Witchcraft, bot rather Blasphemie, and blasphemous speiches, quhilk can nocht coheir with this lybell of Witchcraft; bot is content, quhan evir scho fall be tryit and fund giltie, to vnderly the pwneischment of the lawis of the cuntrie. That poynt of the Dittay, that Cristiane Grahame come at the pannellis desyre and curet the bairne, is nocht relevant to infer the cryme of Witchcraft aganis the pannell, except the samyn had bene done at hir speciall command, malis artibus et veneficis artibus, for the hailing of hir. fould mak hir (him), within few dayis, nocht of habilitie to wyn ane caik of breid?' Denyis that he hard sic woirdis—bot only that scho fould 'do him ane evill turne.' Sayis, he saw Cuthbert Greig, the tyme of his feiknes, fueitting and brocheing¹ in ane vncouth feiknes, fairlie handillit, quhairby he was nocht able to gang; bot knawis nocht how lang he swat, or abaid in that estait. Demandit, gif he saw Margaret Wallace cum in to Cuthbert, at ony time of his feiknes? Declairis, he saw hir nocht within that hous; and forder, knawis nocht anent that first Article of Dittay.

Margaret Dynning, the spous to Andro Lennox, suorne and examinat vpon the first Article, concerning Cuthbert Greg, and desyret to tell the treuth, sa far as she knawis thairanent; Depones, that the tyme of Cuthbertis feiknes, the deponer and Margaret Montgomerie, with Margaret Wallace, past all thre togidder vp to Cuthbertis hous, to visseit him, the tyme of his feiknes; at thair in-cumming, declairis, scho saw Margaret Montgomerie, with Margaret Wallace, pass to his bed-syde quhairin he lay, and that the said Margaret Wallace sat down with hir bak to him, the deponer hir self nocht being able to wyn ben the hous, becaus of the thrang of peopill in the hous, at that tyme: And forder knawis nocht.

FOR the Second poynt of Dittay, concerning Johnne Robertoun, querriour, desyres the said Johnne Robertoun, as persewar, his ayth to be tane, and that poynt of Dittay to be suorne be him, gif he has just caus to persew the pannell as giltie thairof? Quha, being solemplie suorne, declairit, that the said Margaret Wallace avowit 'to be avengit vpon his ffeische!' And that schortlie thaireftir, conforme to the Dittay, the feiknes was laid vpon him; and thairfoir, hes just caus to persew the said Margaret, for that poynt: And eikis² thairto, that sen the making of that vow be hir, he was nevir able to wyn him self fyve f. (shillings.) Quhairvpon my lord Aduocat askit instrumentis.

Chairles Pollok being productet, and suorne vpon the secund Article of Dittay, anent the said Johnne Robertoun, querriour; declairis, he knawis na thing thairof, except allanerlie, that he saw him hevelie diseasit.

As to the Thrid Article of Dittay, referris the notorietye of the pannellis giltines thairof to the Affyse.

FOR verificatioun of the ffourt Article, my lord Aduocat productet Cristiane Grahames Depositioun, tane be my lord Archebischope of Glesgow. As also, produces Marioun Mitchell, the spous of Johnne Hunter, and desyres hir to be examinat, and her Depositioun to be writtin.

FOR preveing of the Nynt Article of Dittay, produces Robert Dykes, Johnne Pincartoun, Thomas Wilkyne, and Johnne Thomefone, as Witneffes, defyreing thair Depositiones to be tane, for the Affyfe better informatioun.

Robert Dyhis, maltman in Ruglen, mareit, fuorne and examinat, in prefens of the Judges, Affyfouris, and pairtie, in judgement, vpone the Nynt Article, to declair the verritie, and purget of partiall counfell, Depones, that at command of vmq^l Allane Spens, the deponer come to Johnne Dynning, and defyret ane ficht of his elwand,¹ and, conforme to the Dittay, the ellwand was brokin; and a fyftene dayis thaireftir, or thairby, the faid Allane Spens being in Glesgow, and fleing ane fchoure,² come befoir Johnne Dynningis buthe-dur,³ quhair the deponer hard Margaret Wallace, Johnne Dynningis wife, fay thir woirdis to Allane, ‘ Away, deboifchet knave!’ Depones, the faid Allane Spens fell feik; bot knawis nocht how fone eftir thais woirdis war spokin this feiknes fell⁴ to him. Declairis, he come in to him the tyme of his feiknes, and faw him hevelie difeasit with continuall fueitting.

Thomas Wilkyne, burges of Ruthirglene, mareit, fuorne in prefens of pairtie, Judges, and Affyfouris, in judgement, Depones, he knawis nocht Margaret Wallace, befoir his cuning to Edinburgh. As to that Article of Dittay concerning Allane Spens feiknes, declairis, he was hevelie difeasit with ane fuddane and grevous feiknes, quhairof he deceiffit; bot knawis nocht quhat or quha war the causeris thairof.

Johnne Thomefone, burges of Ruthirglene, mareit, and fuorne vpone the nynt Article of Dittay red to him in judgement, in prefens of the pairteis, Judges, and Affyfouris, is conforme to the faid Thomas Wilkyne.

Johnne Pincartoun, fuorne and demandit vpone the nynt Article, quhat he knawis thairintill? Depones, he was narrest dur nychtbour⁵ to Allane Spens, and faw Johnne Dynningis elwand brokin, at quhilk tyme the faid Johnne Dynning and Allane Spens war likelie to go by the earis for breking of the faid elwand. Declairis, that he hard Margaret Wallace, fcho being present with hir husband, fay to him, ‘ Go your wayis joy, let him allane,’ (meaning be Allane Spens,) ‘ I fall tak ane amendis thairof!’ Sayis he knew that Allane Spens fell in ane hevie difeas, bot knawis nocht quhat was the caus thairof.

FOR verificatioun of the Tent Article of Dittay, my lord Aduocat vfes the aithe and declaratioun of Alexander Boig in Garboillis, perfewar thairof, and defyres that Article to be fuorne be him to the Affyfe, for thair better informa-

OBJECTIONS be the Pannell to hir pretendit CONFESSIOUN, and haill Probatoun adducet.

Mar. 22.—IT IS OBJECTIT be the pannell and hir prelocutouris aganis hir pretendit Confessioun, maid be hir befor the Lordis of Secreit Counsell, that the samyn can preve nathing of the haill Dittay, nor na pairt thairof. And as to that pairt of hir allegit Confessioun, quhair as scho confessit 'that scho was content, in caice it fould be provin that scho was in Cuthbert Gregis hous, to grant the haill Dittay!' Anfueris thairto, that is na Confessioun of the Dittay, nor of na pairt thairof; ffor the Dittay is set down vpon Witchcraft, and that the pannell practizet Witchcraft vpon the persones contenit in the Dittay, be Sorcerie and Inchantment; scho hes nocht confessit the samyn be hir Deposition, nor na pairt thairof; sua that hir Deposition can be na probatioun of Witchcraft, nor of practizing thairof; bot only, that gif it fall be provin aganis hir, hir being in Gregis hous, quhilk scho hes denyit, scho hes thairin committit onlie a lie, and being perfewit and provin, is content to vnderly the pwneifchment appointit aganis Leafing-makeris. Secundo, be the Confessioun contenit in hir

Deposition befor the Counsell, scho is only content, gif that haill Article be provin aganis hir, than to confes all the rest to be trew; bot albeit it be provin that scho was in the hous, it is nocht confessit thairby that scho was ane Witche. Tertio, it is nawayis provin be the Deposition productet, that scho was within the hous, becaus thair is only ane woman productet as a Witnes to verifie the same. It is forder allegit, that thair can be na probatioun vpon that hir Confessioun maid befor the Counsell, becaus the samyn is na poynt of Dittay.

It is ansuerit be the persewaris, as to the obiection maid aganst the Deposition maid be the pannell befor the Counsell, that obiection aucht nocht to be respectit, in respect of the Judicial Confessioun maid befor the Lordis of Counfall, quhilk bindis hir; be the quhilk it is manifest, that scho hes denyt the treuth, in respect of the probatioun led be dyuerse of the Witneses productet, verifeing hir to haif bene in Gregis hous the tyme of his seiknes, quhilk the persewaris referris to the Inqueistis knowlege and Witnes Deposition. And desyres it may be rememberit to the Assyse, quhat sentence was gevin aganis Patrik Cheyne, vpon the lyk Deposition.

It is forder allegit be the pannell, that the Deposition maid befor my Lord of Glesgow, the samyn can mak na fayth, in respect his Lordschip had na warand to that effect.—It is ansuerit be the persewaris to that obiection, that the samyn aucht to be repellit, in respect of my Lord of Glesgowis Judicial Declaration maid be his Lordschip, that he had ane special Letter direct to him be the Lordis of Secret Counsell, for taking of the saidis Depositiones, and of the article subioynet to hir Depositiones subscriuit be the Clerk of Counsell.

It is allegit be the pannell, that nather the first nor secund Deposition of Cristiane Grahame can be respectit: ffirst, becaus it is nather hir principall Deposition, nor Extract thairof; nocht the principall, becaus it is nocht subscriuit be hir, nocht the Extract, becaus nocht (subscriuit) be ane Clerk of Court: Secundo, can preve nathing, becaus it is maid, scho nocht being suorne to that effect: Tertio, it is maid be the partie being absent aganis quhome it is deponit, quha, gif scho had bene requyret, wald haif compeirit, and offerit to haif bene confrontit with hir; quha, gif scho had bene confrontit, wald haif denyt the samyn: Lyk as, scho cum of set purpos to the Tolbuth, befor hir Conviction, and offerit hir selff to haif bene confrontit, quhilk was denyt. Last, hir Deposition can work nathing aganis the pannell, being ane condampnet persone; and the Deposition aucht nawayis to be respectit, except it war instantlie verifeit be the proces, that befor the making of the said Deposition, or the tyme of the making thairof, that the said Cristian Grahame had confessit the haill poyntis of Dittay than laid to hir charge: ffor as the woirdis ar confaet, thay ar spokin be comparifone, that eftir scho had denyt the poyntis of Dittay laid to hir charge, and declairit hir self to be altogidder innocent thairof, and the pannell being at that tyne ane honest woman, sua repute and haldin, seho sayis, ‘ seho was als frie of Witchcraft as seho or ony vther in the toun !’ Forder, the Confessioun can nocht be respectit, becaus it is nocht maid befor ane Judge haifing power to tak her Confessioun, thair being na Commissioun producet for taking of the said Confessioun. Nixt, the Deposition beiris nocht that seho was ony wayis interrogat or speirit¹ at, and is nocht maid in judgement, becaus the Assyse was than incloset, being than hir Judges. Last, it beiris nocht that this pannell was airt or pairt of ony Sorcerie, bot of sic deidis as seho did, and confessit to haif done : And referris to the Assyse, hir Confessioun, that seho was innocet of all. And as to the worfettis,² thay ar na pairt of Witchcraft, be reveing³ or drawing thame furth of hir purse.

It is ansuerit thairto be the persewaris, that the obiectiones maid aganis the tua Depositiones producet is nawayis relevant, and is nocht to be respectit be the Assyse, becaus the samyn is subscriuit be my Lord Archbifchope of Glesgow, as Lord of the Regalitie, and quha was present the hail tyme of Cristiane Grahames tryell, nocht onlie as Lord of the said Regalitie, bot also as being ane of the Lordis of his Maiesteis Previe Counfall ; and thairby, be vertew of his office and autoritie, haifing sufficient power to tak cognitioun of quhatfumeuir ryote or offence committit to ony of his Maiesteis subiectis, be quhatfumeuir maner of way, within that pairt of his dyocie,⁴ or ony pairt of the kingdome. Igitur, &c. — To the quhilk it is ansuerit be the pannell, that the Deposition was nocht subscriuit be my Lord of Kilsythe, to quhome the Commissioun was grantit, bot is allanerlie subscriuit be the Proveist and Bailleis of Glesgow, quha ar pairteis : Lyk as presentlie, at the dyteing heiroy, Gabriell Cunninghame, standing at the bar, hes professit him self to be a partie and informer to my lord Aduocat. Last, her Deposition can nocht be respectit, becaus seho alleges hir self to be participant of the same cryme ; and sa hir Deposition, of the Law, can mak na fayth, except seho had confessit seho had maid hir Deposition or Confessioun eftir tortour.

To the quhilk it is ansuerit be the persewaris, that the saidis Depositiones ar subscriuit be the Proveist and Bailleis of Glasgou, quha war a pairt of the Commissioneris nominat and appointit to the tryell of the said Cristiane Grahame, as also subscriuit be vther tua men of grit credeit, viz. Mr Johnne Bell and Mr Robert Scott, Ministeris of Glasgou, quhais subseriptiones ar sufficient to geve autoritie to the Depositiones, as evir has bene fund in this judgement, in all matteris of Witchcraft, and specialie, in the proces of Euphame Mcalzeane, Barbara Naper, and Agnes Sampson. The last pairt aucht nocht to be respectit, in respect scilicet criminis ar ressaunt and admittit in all crymes of Tressone, Erracie,¹ and Withecraft.

Quhairvnto the pannell and hir prelocutouris anfuers to thais tua memberis of my lord Aduocattis anfuers, that the tua Ministeris befor quhome Cristiane Grahame hir Depositioun was maid, that thai war honest men, it is nocht denyit; bot it followis nocht, becaus thay are honest men, thairfoir thay had power to tak hir Depositioun, in ane matter concerning hir lyfe, without Commissioun. For anfuers to the proces allegit aganis Euphame Mcalzeane, Barbara Naper, &c., agreis thairto, in regaird thay war examinat be Mr James Carmichell, to quhome speciall Commissioun was gevin for that effect. Last, it is declairit be the pannell, that evin in the cryme of Erracie or Lese-maestie, a pairtner of ane cryme² is nocht to be credited without tortour; and repeittis the tortouring of Sprote in Tressone, becaus he was partiner of the Tressone.

It is objectit be the pannell and hir prelocutouris, aganis the Depositioun maid be Margaret Grahame, dochter to Cristiane Grahame, befor the Commissar of Glesgow, it can nocht be respectit; first, becaus it is not maid judiciallie, befor ane Judge haifing power to that effect: Secundo, befor ane Commissar, without ane Commissioun, quha had na power in matteris of Withecraft, and vtheris concerning lyfe and daithe: Tertio, was nocht requyret Witnes befor ane Judge haifing Commissioun, nor sworne to that effect: Quarto, hir Depositioun can nocht be respectit, in respect of hir age, scho nocht being past xvij³ yeiris: Quinto, in all hir Depositiones, nevir a word deponet that scho knew Margaret Wallace to be ane Witche, or a practizer of Withecraft; bot only that hir mother and scho past to the zaird togidder, tynt hir pantoun, quhilk was put one agane be Cristiane Grahame, &c.: And quhair, it is affirmet in the Depositioun, that scho tuik ane schooe, and pat in sum seidis thairin, that is nocht lybellit, and can nocht be respectit, becaus nathing followit thairupoun: La/z, na Depositioun can be respectit at all, of ony persone, as Witnes, bot only sic as ar producet in Judgement,⁴ to the effect the pannell may object aganis thame, quhidder thay may depone aganis hir or nocht. And thairfoir, of all Law, it is inviolablie obseruet, that na faith is gevin to Testimoniallis, bot as Witnessis, in a matter of fourtie schillingis.

It is anfuersit be the perswar, as to the allegance and objectioun aganis Margaret Grahame, the samyn aucht to be repellit, it being tane befor ane Judge-Ordiner, judiciallie, viz. the Commissar of Glesgow: And as to hir age, scho hes deponet scho is past xiiij yeiris, quhilk is referrit to the Assyse knowlege; and that than scho mycht haif mareit lauchfullie, mekill mair to beir witnessing in obscure factis, sic as ony thing concerning vmq^{le} Cristiane Grahame and Margaret Wallace, quhais companie scho resoirtit daylie. And forder, the perfewar referris to the Assyse knowlege, quhat thay know of hir Depositione; and speciallie, gif it was grantit befor my Lord of Glesgow, the pannell hir self, and sum of the Inqueist: And forder, producet the dome and sentence of convictioun to the Assyse, quhair the Proveist and Bailleis of Glesgow war Commisioneris appointit and set for tryell of Cristiane Grahame, and sa had power to ressaue Cristiane Grahames ayth, for haifing Commiffioun thairto.

It is anfuertit be the pannell, as to that pairt of the anfuertit anent Margaret Grahames age, the Deposition producet beiris na sic thing.—My lord Aduocat, for anfuertit thairto, declairis, he produces ane vther Deposition of hiris of the same dait, beiring hir former age: Quhilk is referrit to the Assyse.

Item, the pannell anfuertis to that poynt, anent the production of Cristiane Grahames Sentence of Convictioun, that the pannell acceptis the same; and protestis that the perfewaris repetitioun thairto, for instructing of the Assyse, anent that alledgeance proponit be the pannell, that Cristiane Grahames Deposition, beiring Margaret Wallace to be airt and pairt of all confest be hir to haif done, preves nawayis hir to be gilty of Witchcraft; becaus the convictioun producet, beiris hir to haif denyit all the poyntis of the lybell anent Witchcraft; and scho confesses that scho was pairt-taker of sic thingis as scho confesses hir self to haif done, it man (myself) be of na deidis impoirting Witchcraft.—The last objectioun proponit be the pannell is nocht to be respectit, in respect of Cristiane Grahames Confessioun and convictioun producet; quhairin scho is convict of tua poyntis, conforme to hir awin Confessioun, viz. the secund and fourt poyntis of Dittay quhairupone scho was indytit.—It is anfuertit be the pannell, that the said convictioun proccidis vpon the admitting of the hail Articles thairto to the knowlege of ane Assyse, sua that the finding of hir gilty of ony of the Articles is nocht the grund of the sentence of Convictioun; ffor thais tua Articles, a pairt quhairto scho is convict, was nocht relevant without the hail Articles had bene admittit; and forder, thir tua poyntis quhairto Grahame is convict, is na poynt of our Dittay.

It is objectit be the pannell aganis Marioun Mures Deposition, subseryuit be my Lord of Glesgow, the samyn can nocht be respectit, for the ressones foirsaidis; with this additioun, that gif the said Marioun Mure war now producet as Witnes at the bar, scho wald be repellit; for this resson, becaus be the Deposition it is confest that scho is father-sister to the bairne quha is alleget to haif bene bewitched or curet be the pannell, as being within degreis-defending to the said bairne mentionet in the Dittay. And forder, it is objectit, that scho had gevin partiall counfall in the caus, quhilk defens is tane fra us be production of ane Testimoniall, and nocht hir selff. SENTENCE was pronounced in conformity to this Warrant.

'Rapt and Ravishing'—(Forcible Abduction)—Adultery.

[THE following brief notice of an ancient Crim. con. Case, affords a specimen of the mode in which affairs of gallantry were managed in the Western Islands and Highlands of Scotland. Sir LAUCHLAN M^cFINGANE (MACKINNON) of Strathardill, having fallen in fancy with Mary M^cConnell (MacDonald), the wife of Ranald of Benbecula, makes the best use of his winning arts, and carries off the lady, by violence, from her husband. It would appear, from the charge of Adultery being also preferred against this knight errant, that the consent of the lady had in all probability been previously obtained to the arrangement. Ranald M^cAllan V^cEan, the injured husband, was brother to Donald M^cAllan M^cEan, CAPTAIN OF CLANRANALD, and grandfather of Donald MacDonald of Benbecula, who became Captain of Clanranald, anno 1725. This gay and captivating deceiver, Sir Lauchlan, was one of several Hebridian Chiefs, who had been knighted by KING JAMES VI, in the latter part of his reign, to ensure their more ready acquiescence in the schemes so zealously projected by him, for the civilization of their semi-barbarous tribes. A Gift of his Escheat was granted by the King, Dec. 12, 1622.¹

The Editor begs to refer the reader to the forthcoming work of Mr GREGORY, already alluded to, for more copious illustrations of matters connected with the Hebrides and West Highlands.]

ably are, the Editor believes it would be difficult to point out a Case possessing incidents of such varied and frightful interest, as those brought forward, so prominently, in the following Trial. It is not his intention, in this place, to recapitulate the leading facts of the present truly horrible Case. He has not been able to throw much additional light upon the facts recorded in the Books of Adjournal from contemporary documents. All that he at present deems worthy of remark is, that tradition has preserved pretty accurate outlines of the general features of this 'Romance of real life' in the district where they occurred—an additional proof, were such requisite, of the fidelity with which historical and extraordinary events are handed down, from father to son, in THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND.

The only Paper which the Editor has discovered, illustrative of the other side of the question, is the 'SUPPLICATION,' preserved among the Warrants of PRIVY COUNCIL, which is appended to this Trial. That document is given here as an act of common fairness to the CLAN MACFARLANE. The reader is left to draw his own conclusions as to the relative demerits and guilt of the several parties.]

vpone ws with all þair force; and or evir we preift to perfew thame, thay gaif me, the said George, ane deidlie straik, whairat thay strak me deid¹ to the grund, and in the opinioun of the rest of my companie I was a deid man; and thay hurt and woundit vther thre of ws: And sua, we finding no longer tyme, with furetie, to be beholdaris and sufferaris, we tuik ws to our just and lauchfull defence, quhairin the vnhappie lymmer was worthielie flane, and his sone, who vnhappielie was in companie with him, and who maid the first onfet with his hacquebut or euir we knew quhat he was, was lykwayis killed; the fader being rebell and at the horne for þe Murthour foirsaid, and he and his quhole bairnis being þe most notorious lymmeris of that Clan. AND howeuir it may be obiectit, for þe pairt of þe young man, that he was nocht acceffour to þe Murthour foirsaid, and that he sould nocht be pwneift for his fatheris deid, it is of treuth that continewallie sen þe fader was rebell for the Murthour foirsaid, the said Duncane, his sone, remanit and attendit vpone him, was airt and pairt with him in all his thevische and wicked deidis; and in affisting and taking pairt with his fader aganis ws, in our just and lauchfull defence, was flane: At quhose lyke-walk, that nycht, the ox foirsaid, stowin be þe fader and þe sone, was flane and eittin.

THIS being the trew and simple discourse of all that hes past in this bussines, We humblie present the samyn to your Lo. consideratioun, quhairby your Lo. may perfaue how mischantlie² and barbaruslie the innocent and hermeles Gentilman was murdreift and flane, and quhilke was þe ground and occasioun of the succeding slauchteris; quhairin, becaus þair is grit appeirance of disorder to arryfe, to the disturbance and brek of þe peace of þe countrey, seing THE CLAN-FARLANE gois about þair privat revenge, and our freindis [THE BUCHANANS] on þe vþer pairt, will be cairfull of þair awin defence: We will humlie beseik your Lo. to tak suche course and ordour heiranent, as your Lo. sall think fitteft for the peace of þe Countrey; and we, for our pairtis, will be willing to vnderly quhateuir your Lo., in honnour and justice, sall preseryve to ws. And becaus this can nocht be done vpone the suddane, bot will requyre some tyme and lafouir to be tane ordour with and fatled; We most humlie beseik your Lordschipis to geve command to þe Justice, Justice-Clerk, and þair deputis, to DESERT þe said dyet, and to desist and ceis fra all proceeding aganis ws thairin, or calling of our cautioneris for our entrie; dischargeing thame þairof, and of þair offices in that pairt: Quhairanent þir presentis sall be þair Warrant.

¹ This Case is most important, as being the first on Record, where the Lord Advocate voluntarily admits of WITNESSES being examined before THE ASSISE, in relation to facts arising out of the assertions contained in the Dittay. The practice formerly was for the Advocate, as public prosecutor, previous to framing the Dittay, to examine the pannell and such witnesses as could be obtained, immediately after the commission of the crime, before the Lords of Privy Council, or a Commissioner; and the Declarations, Confessions, and other evidence so produced, were founded upon in Court. They were there held as conclusive, and not liable to be redargued by leading of fresh evidence at the time of the Trial. The want of attention to this circumstance, or rather the ignorance of the ancient mode of procedure in matters Criminal, would induce any one, at first sight, to form a very erroneous estimate of the policy, and more particularly of the administration of our Laws. The notion seems anciently to have been, that it was an act of flagrant contempt in a pannel to dispute the validity of the evidence led before so high a tribunal as that of the Privy Council, and probably in the face of his own repeated Confessions or Declarations, on being examined, previous to trial. The Justice, therefore, repelled any attempt on the part of Counsel for the pannel bringing forward Witnesses in proof of his innocence; until, at length, the voice of the country prevailed, and THE ASSISE WERE MADE JUDGES OF THE LAW AS WELL AS OF THE FACT. It is not a little singular to observe here, that one of the Assise (the very Justice of the Peace in the vault of whose house the alleged suicide took place, and who was afterwards chosen Chancellor of the Assise) is brought forward as the principal evidence, along with three of his servants!

cognitioun in fauouris of this perfewar, anent the tryell of this mater.—It is anſuerit be the Aduocat, the allegiance is nawayis relevant to ſtay thame to be admittit vpon this Affyſe; becaus, quhatevir was done be thame in raiſeing and ſichting of the corpis, was done be command of the Bailleis of Edinburghe.

Robert Young, perfewar, being ſuorne, gif he has juſt cauſe to perfew this Dittay as it is ſett down, declairit, that he has juſt cauſe to perfew, vpon this reaſone only, becaus he, haifing gottin knowlege of James Maynes daith, and cuming to the Grange to vnderſtand the forme thair of, and haifing ſeane the deid corpis, deſyret Mr Johnne Cant to keip him vnbureit quhill the morne at nyne houris, that his wyfe and freindis (nicht) come to ſie him; quhilk the ſaid Mr Johnne promeiſt ſould be done; and nochtwithſtanding thair of, he was bureit, be the pannellis ſervandis, lang befor ſex houris in the moirning: And thairfoir, in reſpect of his buriall, ſecretly, by¹ promeis, he had juſt cauſe to perfew the pannell, as giltie of the ſaid James Maynes daithe.

The Aduocat takis inſtrumentis of the ſueiring of the Affyſe, and of the production of the defunctis claithes be the relict, all cuttit be the pannell, the tyme contenit in the Dittay: And proteſtis, in caice thay acquit, for Wilfull Errour.—The pannell proteſtis in the contrair, gif thay ffyle; and that the Witneſſes may be tryit for preving that the only cauſe of the defunct his daithe procedit fra his putting violent handis in his awin perſone, be his feirfull and crewall hanging him ſelf, and thairby deuoiring him ſelf to daith, within ane laich volt of the Grange, pertening to Mr Johnne Cant, ane of the Affyſe, eftir the pannell had apprehendit him in his peiſe, and tane him with tua grit wallat-full of ſcheillit beanis, ſtowing be him af his peiſe-rig, and brocht him to the ſaid Mr Johnne Cant, as Juſtice of Peace, to haif remanit with him vnto the tyme he had bene tryit and pwneift for the ſaid Thift. And for cleiring of the veritie of the foirſaid allegiance to the ſaid Affyſe, deſyret the Witneſſes following, all preſent at the bar, viz. the ſaid Mr Johnne Cant, ane of the Affyſe; Robert Stark, James Scott, and James Wallace, his thre ſervandis; James Borthuik, indueller in Edinburghe; James M^cCorne, in the Seanis; Williame Mure, ſervand to Robert Young, ane of the perſewaris, and Johnne Girdwoid, alſo his ſervand, to be callit vpon and examinat be the ſaid Affyſouris, eftir thair inchoiſeing.²

II. LETTER, *the Privy Council to the King, as to Deadly Feud between the Earls of Eglinton and Glencairn, and Lord Sempill, &c.*¹ Aug. 27, 1606.

MOST SACRED SOUERANE,

ACCORDING to 3our hienes directioun, signified vnto ws by 3our MA^{TIES} faithfull counsellour THE ERLL OF DUMBAR, we did call and conuene befor the Counfell the ERLIS EGLINTOUN and GLENCAIRNE, and THE LORD SEMPILL, with a nwmer of thair freindis, whome we knew to haue cheifest interes in the present FEED standing betuix thame, and efter that we had declairit vnto thame the greit paines and travellis whiche 3our sacred MAIESTIE took in 3our awin persone, for extinguifcheing of the name and memorie of DEIDLIE FEEDIS, what good succes had followed vpoun 3our MAIESTIES travellis, in fum of the greittest FEEDIS of this kingdome, and how that 3our MA^{TIE} had now recommendit vnto THE COUNSELL the removing this FEED, whiche hes bene of so long continuance, and be reffoun of pe minoritie of THE ERLL OF EGLINTOUN could not whill now tak effect, we bardinit thame with a Submissioun, conforme to the Act of Parliament. The ERLL OF GLENCAIRNE pretendit that thair wes a quarrell betuix him and EGLINTOUN, and that a Submissioun wes vnecessar; and, in end, he directlie refusit to submitt, becaus the Submissioun imported aganis him of the Slauchter of vmq^{le} THE ERLL OF EGLINTOUN, which he wald never tak vpoun him; bot offeris him redly to tak tryall of the lawis for that Slauchter; whiche tryall, in his pairt, aucht to preceid the Submissioun. We rememberit him of ane Submissioun subfcriyvit be himself in this sam matter, agreable, in evrie word, to that whiche wes now desirit when this matter wes last in handis afoir THE COUNSELL, in Februar 1604. Bot he, standing vpoun his innocencie of that Slauchter, refusit to submitt. EGLINTOUN maid no refusall, bot pretending some excuse vpoun the schortnes of the wairning, he only craved a continuatioun to be advifit with his freindis, becaus this wes the first tyme that ever he wes chairgit in this matter, for his MAIESTIE; and THE LORD SEMPILL verrie frelie, for 3our MA^{TIES} satisfacioun and obedience, without ony ceremonie, offerit to submitt. We have grauntit vnto EGLINTOUN, with his awin consent, the 20 day of November nixt, to be advyfit with his freindis, and to come prouydit in this matter. We have no assurance of THE ERLL OF GLENCAIRNES obedience, bot we hope that he will conforme himself to 3our MA^{TIES} plesour: And THE LORD SEMPILL will be obedient.

We had lykwayis in hand the proces of GLASGOW, whairin we haue fund verrie greit infolence and ryatt committit be MYNTO and a number of the commonis of the toun; and hes committit the personnes guiltie to waird within the burgh of Linlithgow, whill 3our MA^{TIES} plesour be knawin.

This is all we haue done at this meiting, wherof we haue thocht meet to mak 3our sacred MA^{TIE} acquainted; to the effect 3our hienes may give directioun thairin, as 3our MA^{TIE} fall think good; which we fall prosequute and follow out. And sua, praying God to blifs 3our sacred MAIESTIE with a long, happy, and prosperous reigne, We rest

3our Ma^{ties} maist humble and obedient subiectis and fervandis.²

PAPERS IN FARTHER ILLUSTRATION OF THE TRIAL OF MR THOMAS ROSS.
(See Vol. III., p. 445.)

[THE circumstances attending the Case of MR THOMAS ROSS are so very remarkable in their nature, that it was deemed proper to institute a still more rigorous search after the grounds and Warrants upon which his almost unexampled Trial was founded. After having carefully examined the Acts of the Privy Council, and many other authentic sources, the Editor has the satisfaction of having at length discovered the identical copy of his Trial, which had been transmitted to Court, for the information of KING JAMES VI. Besides the proceedings which have already been printed, it contains a translation of the offensive THESIS and ANNEXA, which, as has already been seen, were ordered to be taken up by the public prosecutor, and upon no account to enter the Records. Annexed to it are the DEPOSITIONS of the unhappy man, which, in expectation of a free pardon, he voluntarily emitted before the Privy Council of Scotland. The original draught of the KING's Letter to the Secret Council, to bring him to Trial and execution; and, in compliance with the King's known wish, their cruel recommendation, that Ross should suffer an ignominious death, have also been obtained. These interesting documents were found in a Volume of Sir James Balfour's invaluable MS. Collections, in the Advocates' Library, which had accidentally been mislaid when the Editor conducted the former enquiry.

The reader has here the painful satisfaction of finding, that the conduct of KING JAMES and his COUNCILLORS was still more inexcusable than had at first been conjectured. It is now clearly proved, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the PASQUILL, or THESIS in question, had not been printed or industriously disseminated by its unhappy author; but that it had merely been affixed on the door of the College,—that, de facto, no person had read it, excepting the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, to whom it had been brought by a student,—that this student, instantly on the Thesis having been hung up, had only perused a few lines of the Paper, and brought it, without delay, to his superior,—and that, after the examination, confession, and imprisonment of ROSS, the Vice-Chancellor had transmitted the THESIS to Court, requesting instructions how the poor man should be disposed of.

² The torture of the boots. The younger Auchindrane was put to the torture, which he bore with remarkable fortitude.

That Ross was insane, as well as in the most abject poverty, there can now be no doubt. Altogether, indeed, his Case is one of the most pitiable on record.

It only remains to the Editor to state, that he is indebted to GEORGE SMYTHE, Esquire, Advocate, for the following authentic information, regarding THE FAMILY OF ROSS of Craigie, at and shortly previous to the period of Mr Thomas Ross's execution, Sep. 10, 1618. Such additional notices and evidence as have fallen under the Editor's observation are inserted in the foot-notes, along with the verifications of Mr Smythe's memoranda.

‘ I. JOHN ROSS OF CRAIGIE appears to have been the father of (1.) John Ross of Craigie. (2.) James Ross of Creytoun, who acquired certain lands at the East end of Forgundenny from Walter Oliphant of Newton, in Feb. 1539.¹ He married Marjory Stewart; by whom he left a daughter, Janet,² who married Patrick Lyndfay of Dowhill.³ (3.) Thomas Ross of Maitlands, who was killed at the battle of Pinkie.⁴ Grissell Duncanson, his relict, afterwards married Alexander Crichton of Forgound.⁵ His son, James, was killed in an affray with the Oliphants, Nov. 12, 1571.⁶

‘ II. JOHN ROSS OF CRAIGIE was infest in the Lands of Hilton Malar, Sep. 17, 1539.⁷ He was served Tutor-at-law to Janet Ross, his niece, Mar. 17, 1543.⁸ He is mentioned by KNOX, in his History of the Reformation,⁹ along with “the pensionars of the Prelates, Oliver Sinclair, and utheris, who were faithful to them in all things,” and informed them of all proceedings at Court. He married Isobel Liddell,¹⁰ who had previously borne a number of children to Patrick Hepburn, Bishop of Moray, so notorious for his gallantries. He was killed at Pinkie, and left four sons and three daughters.¹¹ (1.) Thomas. (2.) John. (3.) James, who had a Charter of the Lands of Pitheveles to him and Catharine Mcgie, relict of umq^le Alexander Menzies of that Ilk, his spous, Apr. 7, 1566.¹² He afterwards married Janet Robertson, relict of umq^le Thomas Fowlis, burges of Perth.¹³ He left no issue; for his brother, John, was served heir to him, Nov. 3, 1582.¹⁴ (4.) William. (5.) Barbara. (6.) Alison. (7.) Grissell.

‘ III. THOMAS ROSS of Craigie married Jean Hepburn; by whom he had one daughter, Margaret,¹⁵ who married John Seytoun, apparent of Lathrisk. Jean Hepburn was infest in the lands of Hilton Malar, in liferent. After the death of Thomas Ross, she married Peter Oliphant of Turings.¹⁶

‘ IV. JOHN ROSS of Craigie succeeded, as heir of entail, to the lands of Craigie, upon the death of Thomas. He married Agnes Hepburn; and had by her, (1.) Patrick, who married Beatrix Charterhouse (Charteris.) She was infest in the lands of Hilton Malar, in liferent, Apr. 9, 1575.¹⁷ After his death, which took place before that of his father, his relict married Robert Leckie, apparent of Kypdarroch.¹⁸ (2.) Mr Robert Ross,¹⁹ who was infest in the estate of Craigie, and was designed “fiar of Craigie” before his father's death, which took place about 1601.²⁰ He married Margaret Eviot. He seems to have sold the lands of Craigie to Mr David Moncreif, son of William Moncreif of that Ilk, before 1620. (3.) Mr Thomas Ross, the unfortunate subject of the preceding Trial. (4.) Andrew.²¹

To these notices, the following additional information may be annexed.

V. MR ROBERT ROSS of Craigie, above mentioned, seems, from entries in the Kirk Session Records of Perth, to have been reduced to a state of the utmost poverty and destitution. Mr James Scott, in his Extracts from these Records, has the following melancholy entry:—‘ On the 21st of November, 1620, Andrew Ross, in name of Mr Robert Ross, sometime of Craigie, his brother, produced before the Session the said Mr Robert's Supplication, showing his present misery, and divers diseases wherewith he is vexed, craving support. Three pounds were taken out of the Thesaurie and delivered to the said Andrew, to give this brother.’¹

The Editor has not been fortunate enough to obtain any material information regarding the personal history of Mr Thomas Ross. From his own DEPOSITIONS,² however, it is abundantly clear, that he must have endured great privations while in England. In that document he actually asserts, in the most solemn manner, that he was driven, by his desperate circumstances, to adopt the unhappy step which ultimately proved the cause of his destruction, in the vain hope, that the wit and talent he had thus exhibited in so bad a cause, would not only plead his apology with the King and Court, but become the means of his future advancement. Mr Scott merely remarks, as in reference to this matter, that ‘ it appears, from a Supplication to the [Kirk] Session, a considerable time before, that Mr Thomas Ross had been a long time in the Prison of Edinburgh.’

In conclusion of the disagreeable subject, it is only necessary to add one other entry, from the Kirk Session Records of Perth. It is pleasant to remark, that that charitable body had all along acted in the kindest manner towards this truly unfortunate family; and farther, that they appear to have been actuated by the same pious feelings, in numerous other cases of a similarly distressing description.—‘ Jan. 9, 1621. Mr John Guthrie, Minister, reported, that he had given thirty shillings, which he had received from the Thesaurie, to Andrew Ross, to bear his expenses, when he passed to the visitation of [his brother] unquhil Mr Thomas Ross, before his execution.’³

The Editor has failed in tracing the period when Ross was admitted a Master of Arts, and at what University, although he was politely assisted in his enquiries by the REVEREND DR LEE, who gave him access to the Rolls of the Universities of St Andrews and Glasgow. He fears he has already encroached too much on the limits of this work, and now leaves the reader to draw his conclusions as to the usage and cruel fate of the unfortunate Mr Thomas Ross.]

IV. Followis the tennour of THE DEPOSITIONES of Mr Thomas Roifs.

AT EDINBURGH, the ellevint day of Auguft, 1618. In prefens of Sir Williame Oliphant of Newtoun, his Maiefteis Aduocat.

MR THOMAS ROISS, humblet on his kneis, and deiplic fuorne vpone his folempne oathe, fays, that he will declair the treuthe in all and everie thing that fall be demandit of him. Demandit, yf THE THESIS, and APPENDICES pair of, producet and fehawin vnto him, and writtin on thre fydis of paper, be his awin hand-writt ? Depones and grantis, that thay ar his awin hand-writt—and that na vther perfone wrait ane word or Lettir pair of.

Demandit, quhat moved him to wryte them ? Depones, that he, being ane gentilman borne, depryved of all benifeit that he nicht expect of his fatheris eftait, and being reducet to the extreme point of miferie and povertie, and haveing reflauct mony infupportable iniureis of his cuntrie men, at Courte ; he, being efchamed to beg, and difdaneing to steill, and haveing no meanis quhairby to intertene⁵ him felf, ffinding no comfote nor releif of his contriemen at Courte, he pairfoir, being in difpair and mad, out of his diftemperat humour and frenyfie, and fair aganis his heart, without ony fetled refolutionn, and without ony purpois to do evill, bot to fehaw the greif of his heart, and to move pitie and compaffioun towardis him, wrait thir THESES ; thinking, that the wryting pair of, in this his mad humour and difpofitioun, wald raper procure pitie nor⁶ wraithe, at HIS MA^{TIES} handis ; and that God, peradventure, wald moue HIS MA^{TIES} heart, who is a prudent and wyfe Prince, to think that the deponer was drevin, vpone plane miferie and neceffitie, to wryte thame ; and pat pairfoir HIS MA^{TIE} wald pitie his diftres and miferie, and help him : And he apprehendit that fome weill-myndit Courtiours wald interceid for him, and fehew HIS MA^{TIE} that he quho had done fo weill vpone a evill fubieect, wald do far better vpone a goode fubieect, gif he war employed ; bot, yf it fould pleis God to move HIS MA^{TIE} to think vtherwayis of this matter, and to tak it in evill pairt, it behooved the deponer to abyde Godis will and the KINGIS MA^{TIES}.

Demandit, quhat he did with thir THESES, eftir the wryting thair of ? Deponis, that he affixt thame on a dur of the Kirk, callit ST MARIES KIRK, at OXFURDE, vpone Twifday, being a preiching day, in the moneth of July laft, immediatlie as the people war diffolueing frome the Sermone, and as DOCTOR GODWENE, VICE-CHANCELOUR of the VNIUERSITIE of OXFURD, was cuming out of the Kirk. And depones, that immediatlie eftir pai war affixt, ane man, quhome the deponer knowis nocht, tooke thame down, and cayreid thame to pe Vice-Chancellor. And grantis, that THE THESES now producet and fehowne vnto him ar pe fame verrie Thefes, and that fame Paper quhilk he wrait and affixt, as faid is.

Demandit, yf at ony tyme afoir pe wryting of THE THESES he was in conference with ony perfones pairanent ? Depones, that ane moneth afoir the affixeing of THE THESES, he was in conference with pe Vice-Chancellor ; and regrated vnto him his hard eftait and conditioun, and the vnthankfulnes of his cuntrie men, the Courtiours, quho wer his gritt vnfreindis.⁷ And he fehew the Vice-Chancellor that he had a purpois to go to France, and intreited him that he mycht haif a *viaticum*⁸ to transfpoint him. Quhairvnto the Vice-Chancellor 5eildit. Bot the deponer being efchamed to go through the Colledges to collect the fame, he reffaut only foure or fyve pund Sterling, and fendit it as he gat it; quhairas, gif he had reffaut all that wald haif bene gevin, in caice he had tane panes to go throuche the Colledges to haif collectit it; or yf he had gottin ony viaticum frome HIS MA^{TIE}, he wald nocht haif writtin thir THESES, bot wold haif gone to France.

Grantis also, that he regraited the vnkynd deilling of the Scottis Courtiouris towardis him, to Sir Harie Schaveill, Principall of Eittin Colledge, befyde Wyndfoir; bot denyis, vpon his gritt aithe, that he impaired his purpois to wryte THE THESES, outh^r to the Vice-Chancellor or to him.

Demandit, be whosé advyse he wrait thir THESES? Or, yf he had conference with ony perfone thairanent? Depones, vpon his grit oathe, that he had no advyse, counfall, nor informatioun gevin to him in that matter; bot being at Greenwich, a littill eftir he went to Oxurde, he adrest him selff to one of THE KINGIS Chaipaines, quho is a heiche² tall man, and was walking in Grenewitche Hall for þe tyme. His name he knowis nocht. And he intreated the Chaipaine to tell THE KINGIS MA^{TIE}, that he was borne away; and that he had long waited on, without ony help or suppoirt; and that he was now drevin to grit povertie; and that he wald pray God for the weifair of HIS MA^{TIE} and his childrene—bot, for his cuntriemen, the Courtiouris, quha had bene so vnthankful vnto him, he fould rather be lyk Martius Coriolanus vnto tham, nor³ Themistocles.

Grantis also, that afoir his passing to Oxurde, he forgaderit with on Johnne Line, Scottifman, a taillour, duelland in Titler streit; and that he tauld him, that wer not for þe respect and reuerance that he cayreid to HIS MA^{TIE}, he was halflingis myndit (yf he gat nocht some suppoirt to carye him to France) to fett vp some THESES, aither in Oxurde or in France, against the Scottis Courtiours, and that it was goode for THE KING to fend some of thame away. And the deponer desyret Johnne Line to acquet THE KINGIS MA^{TIE} heirwith, be Petitioun; and he craved Johnne Lynes advyce, how he might efchew the wryting of these THESES; bot Johnne Lyn had no advyce in the matter. And sayis, vpon his grit oathe, that he nevir reveillit forder of this matter to ony perfone, bot so far as he hes confest, concerning the Chaipaine and Johnne Lyn. And denyis, vpon his oathe, that evir he gave out or disperfit ony coppeis of thir THESES.

Demandit, yf at ony tyme eftir he had meditat vpon the wryting of THE THESES, and afoir his affixing of the same, he communicat the matter to ony perfones, or schew þe THESES vnto thame? Depones, that he only reveillit the matter to his oift⁴ in Oxurde, callit Johnne Ewing, taillour, and to his wyffe, in this maner, to wit, that he was going to wryte something quhairof the haill scollaris of Oxurde wald schortlie get knowlege, and wald heir of it; thairfoir, let me be quyet a quhyle, and lett no man truble me. And this was xxiiij houres afoir þe affixing of the THESES.

Demandit, how it was knowne that he had writtin and affixt the THESES? Depones, that the Vice-Chancellor knew his hand-writt, and fend for the deponer within a quarter of ane hour eftir the affixing of the same, and askit of the deponer, 'Gif he had writtin thame?' Quhilk the deponer grantit. Quhairvpon the Vice-Chancellor fend him prifoner to the Castell of Oxurde; quhair he was straitlie keipit ten dayis; till thre Scottifmenne of the Gaird war fend to bringe him to Courte. Denyis that, during his abode in Oxurde Castell, he had speiche with ony perfones anent this matter, bot⁵ with his keipparis and vtheris prifoneris; quho askit of him, the cause quhairfoir he was wairdit? To quhome he anfuerit, becaus he had writtin some littill thing aganis his cuntrie-men, the Courtiours, advyfeing THE KING to fend some of thame hame.

Depones, that quhen he come to Courte, he was putt in a Inne, befyde Charing Croce, quhair he stayed thre nychtis and two dayis; and that he was examinat be the Duke of Lennox,⁶ the Marqueis

DOCUMENTS RELATIVE TO THE 'EGYPTIANIS,' OR GIPSIES.

[IN many parts of the preceding Volumes, TRIALS have been inserted, from time to time, regarding the remarkable Asiatic people, commonly known in early times, in Scotland, by the name of EGYPTIANS. It seemed to the Editor to be desirable to afford to the enquiring reader some traces of their wanderings in Scotland, during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; and for that purpose, he has examined as many of the earlier Records as his opportunities have, at present, permitted.

It is sufficient, for the purposes of this Collection, to remind the reader, that, from whatever country that singular race took their origin, (which, though there be much room for difference of opinion on the general question, was assuredly Oriental,) and whatever the causes may have been which prompted their emigration, or occasioned their expulsion, from their native soil, this wandering people first made their appearance in Europe early in the fifteenth century. They succeeded, in spite of numerous decrees of expulsion and persecution, in making good their settlement in various kingdoms, and especially in the countries of Poland, Germany, Hungary, France, Spain, Italy, England, and Scotland. It is very remarkable, that, although they have now been resident in Christendom for nearly four hundred years, they have preserved themselves as a separate and peculiar race, in all the countries where they have sojourned; and have all along been characterised by their distinctive manners, customs, language, and superstitions, which have been kept almost pure and unimpaired, from the date of their first emigration. Indeed, few instances have occurred, in any country, where any considerable portion of them have steadily settled in towns, or followed any

² Alexander, Viscount of Fentoun, eldest son of Sir Thomas Erskine of Gogar, created Earl of Kellie, Mar. 12, 1619; and father of Thomas, second Earl of Kellie. Obit, Feb. 1633.

⁵ MR THOMAS ROSS, present Minister at Cargill, obtained a GIFT, under the Privy Seal, of THE VICARAGE OF CARGILL, with the fruits, rents, teinds, &c., and 'with the Manse and gleib thairof,' lying within the diocese of Dunkeld, and sheriffdom of Perth; 'during all the dayis of his lyftyme.'—Register of Presentations to Benefices, Vol. III, Jul. 26, 1606.

sedentary or useful handicraft. On the contrary, they have literally wandered from place to place, seldom remaining above a few days in one spot, "living in tents," and subsisting by plunder or knavery.

In those kingdoms, where they have effected a steady footing, they have all along been distinguished by the name of BOHEMIANS, GITANOS, ZINGARI or CINGARI, ZIGEUNERS, TZINGANYS, GIPSIES, and EGYPTIANS.

As so much has been written regarding the origin and history of the Gipsies, by *Hoyland, Grellmann, &c.*¹ it is only necessary to premise these facts, in the briefest manner. The reader will find several very curious and interesting essays on the history of the Scottish Gipsies, written in a popular and entertaining form, in the two first volumes of Blackwood's Magazine, and also in the Encyclopædias. The Editor has just been informed, that a work is at present preparing for publication, which professes to embrace all that is known regarding the history of these wanderers, especially in the various districts of Scotland, which renders it still less necessary to enlarge in this place.

It may be remarked, that in the fifteenth century, THE EGYPTIANS uniformly, in the numerous countries to which they migrated, gave themselves out to be Christian Pilgrims—and their leaders assumed the titles of KINGS, DUKES, COUNTS, or LORDS of LITTLE EGYPT; from which country they always pretended they had been expelled by the Saracens, on account of their RELIGION. Certain it is, that at present they appear to profess no religious belief whatever, and they lead the most immoral lives, and herd together like hordes of savages, in a promiscuous state, wholly unknown to any other race now extant in Europe, living "without God and without hope in the world." With their characteristic cunning, it is likely that this assumption of the appearance of Pilgrims was only in accordance with the superstitious and prevailing customs of the times. Under this character they had the address to impose upon almost all the Sovereigns of Europe, and obtained passports and privileges from them; and even THE POPE himself was not protected from their artifices, by his boasted infallibility.

In examining the Books of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, the following entries occur. They are here laid before the reader, without further comment.

‘ 1530. Item, to THE EGIPTIANIS that danfit before THE KING, in Halyrudhous, xl. f.’

These are the only early notices the Editor has hitherto met with, in that valuable Record. It is very probable, however, that some of them have no reference to Egyptians. A variety of other documents have been obtained from the Records of the Privy Seal, &c., which follow this brief and imperfect notice.]

[IN reference to the preceding entry in the Record, it may be interesting to insert the following singular Letter from Mr Alexander Colville, Justice-Depute, to Viscount Annan, which has been recovered from Sir James Balfour's MS. Collections, on account of its throwing some farther light on those important appointments; and besides, it is a curious document, and is highly characteristic of the parties concerned, and of the spirit of those times. It has also been thought proper to present to the reader a notice which occurs in the Books of Adjournal, containing the appointment of Sir George Elphingstoun of Blytheswood, knight, as Sir Archibald Napier's successor, in the first year of the reign of KING CHARLES I.]

REMARKABLE EXAMINATIONS AND CONFESSIONS OF PERSONS ACCUSED OF WITCHCRAFT, SORCERY, &c.

[AMONG the circumstances which peculiarly characterize the earlier Criminal proceedings of SCOTLAND, as well as those of ENGLAND, FRANCE, and GERMANY, &c., none are more prominent than the unmitigated rigour with which the profession as well as the practice of Witchcraft, Sorcery, and Necromancy, were punished. The hecatombs of innocent victims, whose lives were sacrificed to satisfy the gloomy superstitions of Nations termed Christian and civilized, but who, in reality, were only emerging from a state of semi-barbarism, sufficiently attest the justice of this observation.

After the period of the Reformation from Popery, the Legislators of those countries which had embraced the new Religion, seemed to vie with each other in the zeal which they manifested in 'rooting out from the land' every vestige of the professors of these 'works of darkness.' In Scotland, as the reader has already had sufficient opportunity of remarking, great exertions were made during the reign of KING JAMES VI, when hundreds of helpless creatures were destroyed, under form of law,—for those who were tried before THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY bore a very small proportion to the very great numbers who were tried and condemned by the LORDS OF REGALITIES, BARON BAILIES, and by the ROYAL COMMISSIONERS. A very striking fact, mentioned by Baron Hume in his valuable Commentaries,¹ may be here briefly noted, that 'no fewer than fourteen Commissions² for Trial of Witches were granted, for different quarters of the country, in one sederunt, of the 7th of November, 1661; which year seems to have been the most fertile period of this sort of accusation!' It is proper to remark, that such Commissioners had very ample powers granted to them; for their Commissions were expressly conceived for the examination and trial, &c. of so many persons, nominatim, and a large blank was commonly left for the insertion of such other persons as might be 'de-laited,' or accused, during their sittings. Besides this, their jurisdiction extended over considerable districts of country. As one unhappy creature was almost universally induced to accuse several others of the same crime for which he or she was to suffer, and as the evidence taken in one Trial was held to be conclusive in other cases, where the pannels were thus proved to be 'notour Witches,' it was competent for these Commissioners to try any number of persons, and to 'justify them to the death;' a practice which they were by no means slack of performing.

Many very painful Trials for Witchcraft, &c. have already been laid before the reader; but perhaps there cannot be adduced a more touching proof of the nefarious wickedness which must have been perpetrated in Scotland, during the reign of KING JAMES VI, than the following memorandum, which is preserved by Thomas, Earl of Haddington, (a noted instrument of the King in all cases, of whatever description,) in his Minutes of Privy Council proceedings.³ He relates, under date December 1, 1608,—'THE ERLE OF MAR declairit to THE COUNSALL, that fiv wemen wer tane in Broichtoun, as WITCHES; and being put to ane Affyfe,¹ and convict, albeit thay perfeverit constant in thair denyell to the end, 5it thay wer BURNIT QUICK,² eftir sic ane crewell maner, that sum of thame deit in despair, renunceand³ and blasphemand; and vtheris, HALF BRUNT, brak out of the fyre, and wes cast in QUICK in it agane, quhill⁴ thay wer brunt to þe deid.

It is hardly necessary to remind the reader, that matters were no better in ENGLAND; where, as he must perfectly recollect, the most shocking atrocities were perpetrated, during the reigns of CHARLES I and CHARLES II, and also under the Puritans of OLIVER CROMWELL's time. The infamous proceedings, publicly authorized, of HOPKINS the Witch-finder, and other worthless impostors, who pretended to be able, by certain cruel means practised by them, to detect real and counterfeit Witches, are also well known, and are highly calculated to bring discredit on the judicial proceedings of any country. Upon the evidence of these wretches, added to that of the ignorant and superstitious peasantry, and of the equally superstitious Clergy of those times, the lives of hundreds were wantonly sacrificed, to satisfy their diseased appetite for the marvellous; while other misguided individuals, conscientiously no doubt, thought, that by acting thus, they were 'doing God service.'

SIR WALTER SCOTT having so largely discussed this extraordinary subject in his recent work on Demonology and Witchcraft,⁵ it would be as presumptuous as it is unnecessary for the Editor to enter farther into the matter. In that curious and able work, the learned author, in his usual felicitous style, notices numerous Examinations and Confessions of persons accused of Witchcraft, in Scotland, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Of these, the most remarkable documents unquestionably are the Confessions of ISSOBELL GOWDIE and of JANET BREADHEAD; which, indeed, may safely be pronounced to be by far the most unique and wonderful, in the Records of this, and perhaps of any other country. The Editor has been induced, in compliance with the repeated desire of literary friends, contrary to his own private opinion, to annex to this work the CONFESSIONS of these unhappy women, and a few other similar EXAMINATIONS. Such declarations were commonly taken before Presbyteries, or certain Special Commissioners, who usually ranked among their number the leading Clergy of those districts where their hapless victims resided. The details of all such cases, and, in particular, those which are now annexed, are repulsive and shocking to every well-regulated mind; but, as recording the superstitions and crimes common at the period in question to all the civilized nations of Europe, they will by many be deemed, in some measure at least, of historical importance; although at same time, it must be confessed, they afford a lamentable exhibition of the human mind, at its lowest ebb of degradation.]

IV. CONFESSION of Jonet Watstone; and *Notices relative to Christiane Wilstone and Jonet Paisloun, all accused of Witchcraft, June 1661.*²

JONET WATSTONE confessed, that in Apryle last bypast, or thairby, shoe being at the buriell of the Lady Dalhousie,³ ther was ane rix-dollar given to Jean Bughane, to be pairted among a certain number of poore folks, wherof shoe was one. And the said Jean Bughane did run away with the said money, so that schoe gott no pairt of it. And schoe come home to hir awne house, being verrie grieved and angrie at it, wished to have a mendse of Jean Bughane. Vpone the which THE DEIVILL apeired vnto her, in the liknes of ane prettie boy, in grein clothes; and asked, ‘What aild her? And what amendse shoe wold have, he should give her.’ And at that tyme THE DEIVILL gaive hir his markis; and went away from her in the liknes of ane blak doug:—And constantlie, for three dayis thairefter, ther was a great bee come to her; and vpon ane morning, when shoe was cheinging her schirt, it did fit down vpon her shoulder, (shoe being naked,) wher shoe had one of the markis.

As also, about the tyme of the last Baille-ffyre night, shoe was at a Meitting in Newtoun-dein with THE DEAVILL, who had grein clothes vpon him, and ane blak hatt vpon his head; wher schoe denyd Christ, and took her self to be the servant of THE DEIVILL. Wherfor shoe acknowledged that schoe was, from her heart, forrowfull for the doeing of it. And likewise, he then gave her a new name, and called her ‘WEILL-DANCING JENOT’—and promised her money at the nixt Meitting.

And also, that vpon ane vther night, THE DEIVILL was verie heavie vpon her in her bed. As also, schoe confessed that Bessie Moffit, Elspeth Grahame, and Jenot Mikeljohn come to her house, and tooke her away to that Meating; when they all danced together: At which tyme, when schoe renuned her baptifme, THE DEIVILL laid his hand vpon her head, and bad her ‘give all ower to him that was vnder his hand,’ and shoe did so. Quhilk haill premiffes shoe confessed, in preffens of the vnder subferyvers, without compulsione.

As I wes goeing betuix the townes² of Drumdewin and the Headis, I met with THE DIVELL, and ther covenanted, in a maner, with him; and I promeisit to meit him, in the night time, in the Kirk of Aulderne; quhilk I did. And the first thing I did ther that night, I denyed my baptifme, and did put the on of my handis to the crowne of my head and the vther to the sole of my foot, and then renuncet all betuixt my two handis, ower to the Divell. He wes in the Readeris dask, and a blak book in his hand.³ Margret Brodie, in Aulderne, held me vp to the Divell to be baptifed be him; and he marked me in the shoulder, and fuked owt my blood at that mark, and spowd it in his hand, and, sprinkling it on my head, said, 'I baptise thé, JANET, in my awin name!' And within a quhill we all remoowed. The nixt tym that I met with him ves in the New Wardis of Inshoch, and haid carnall cowpulation and dealling with me. He wes a meikle, blak, roch⁴ man, serie cold; and I found his nature als cold within me as spring-wall-water. Somtymes he haid buitis and sometymes shoes on his foot;⁵ but still his foot ar forked and cloven. He vld be somtymes with ws lyk a dear, or a rae. Johne Taylor and Janet Breadhead, his vyff,⁶ in BelmaKeith, Douglas, and I my self, met in the Kirk-yaird of Nairne, and ve raised an vnchristened child owt of its greff; and at the end of Bradleyis corn-field-land, just opposit to the Milne of Nairne, we took the said child, with the nailis⁷ of our fingeris and toes, pikles of all fortis of grain, and blaidis of keall,⁸ and haked⁹ thaim all verie small, mixed altogither; and did put a pairt therof among the muk-heapes¹⁰ of Bradleyes landis, and therby took away the ffruit of his cornes, &c.; and we pairted it among two of our COEVENS.¹¹ When we tak cornes at Lambes,¹² we tak bot abowt two sheawes, whan the cornes ar full; or two stokis of keall, or therby, and that giwes ws the fruit of the corn-land, or keall-yaird, whair they grew:¹³ And it may be, we will keip yt while Yewll or Pace,¹⁴ and than devyd it amongft ws. Ther ar threttein perfones in my COVEN.¹⁵

The last tyme that ovr COVEN met, we, and an vther COVEN, wer dauncing at the Hill of Earfeat; and befor that, betwixt Moynes and Borgholl; and befor that we ves beyond the Meikle-burne; and the vther COVEN being at the Downie-hillis, we went from beyond the Meikle-burne, and went besydl them, to the howffis at the Wood-end of Inshoch; and within a qwhyll went hom to our howffis. Befor Candlmas, we went be-east Kinloffe, and ther we yoaked an plewghe of paddokis.¹⁶ THE DIVELL held the plewgh, and Johne Yowng in Mebefowne, our Officer, did drywe the plewgh. Paddokis did draw the plewgh, as oxen; quwickens wer sowmes,¹⁷ a riglen's horne wes a cower,¹⁸ and an piece of an riglen's horne wes an fok. We went two feuerall tymes abowt; and all we of the COEVEN went still wp and downe with the plewgh, prayeing to THE DIVELL for the fruit of that land, and that thistles and brieris might grow ther.

When we goe to any hous,¹⁹ we tak meat and drink; and we fill wp the barreillis with ovr oven²⁰

⁴ Rough; hairy; hirsute. ⁵ Throughout this Confession, foot is used for feet. ⁶ See her Confession, which follows this, (No. VIII.) ⁷ Parings of the nails. ¹³ This symbolical mode of taking the fruit, crop, or produce of land, &c., is frequently alluded to in Witch-Trials. The soil apparently bore only straw and empty ears; but the real produce was, in due season, conveyed to the barns of the enchanter. The milk of a dairy was taken by means of a hair tether, rope, or halter, passing under the door, and attached to one of the stalls where the cattle stood, &c. The Witch procured the entire produce by 'milking the tether!' Another method is afterwards recited in this CONFESSEON. ¹⁴ Until Christmas or Easter. ¹⁵ The number thirteen is still proverbially called 'the Devil's dozen;' in Scotland. ¹⁶ Yoked a plough of frogs. ¹⁷ Dog-grass, or quick-grass, served for soymes or soams; being the traces, chains, or iron links, by which, of old, the oxen were yoked to the plough. ¹ Besoms; brooms. ² Alexander Stewart, fourth Earl of Moray. ³ THE following remarkable circumstances were communicated to the ingenious John Aubrey, Esq., F. R. S., by one Stewart, a tutor in the family of JAMES, second LORD DUFFUS; from whose recital, Stewart states, he had it, and that his lordship had it from his father, Alexander, first Lord Duffus, who had, in like manner, heard the tradition from William Sutherland of Duffus, grandfather of James, Lord Duffus, who died about the year 1626. It closely corresponds with the particu-lars contained in the Depositions of Isobel Gowdie and Janet Broadhead, in reference to this branch of FAIRY SUPER-STITION. As Aubrey's work is now exceedingly scarce, little apology is required for quoting the interesting commu-nication, which he has, fortunately, preserved at length:—

‘As soon as I read your letter of May 24, (1694,) I called to mind a story which I heard long ago, concerning one of the LORD DUFFUS (in the shire of Murray) his predecessors; of whom it is reported that, upon a time, when he was walking abroad in the fields, near to his own house, he was suddenly carried away, and found the next day at Paris, in THE FRENCH KING’S cellar, with a silver cup in his hand. That, being brought into THE KING’S presence, and questioned by him, “Who he was?”—and “how he came thither?” He told his name, his country, and the place of his residence; and that on such a day of the month (which proved to be the day immediately preceding), being in the fields, he heard the noise of a whirlwind, and of voices crying “HORSE AND HATTOCK!” (this is the word which THE FAIRIES are said to use when they remove from any place;) whereupon he cried “HORSE AND HATTOCK!” also; and was immediately caught up and transported through the air, by THE FAIRIES, to that place: Where, after he had drank heartily, he fell asleep, and before he awoke, the rest of the company were gone, and had left him in the posture wherein he was found. It is said THE KING gave him the cup which was found in his hand, and dismissed him.

‘This story (if it could be sufficiently attested) would be a noble instance for your purpose; for which cause I was at some pains to enquire into the truth of it, and found the means to get the present Lord Duffus's opinion thereof; which shortly is, that there has been and is such a tradition; but he thinks it fabulous. This account of it his Lordship had from his father, who told him that he had it from his father, the present Lord’s grandfather. There is yet an old silver cup in his lordship’s possession still, which is called “THE FAIRY CUP,”—but has nothing engraven upon it except the arms of the Family.

‘The gentleman by whose means I came to know the Lord Duffus's sentiment of the foregoing story, being tutor to his lordship’s eldest son, told me another little passage of the same nature, whereof he was an eye-witness. He reports, that when he was a boy at school, in the town of FORRES, yet not so young but that he had years and capa-city both to observe and remember that which fell out, he and his school-fellows were, upon a time, whipping their tops in the Churchyard, before the door of the Church. Though the day was calm, they heard a noise of a wind, and, at some distance, saw the small dust begin to arise and turn round; which motion continued advancing till it came to the place where they were: Whereupon they began to bless themselves. But one of their number (being, it seems, a little more bold and confident than his companions) said, “HORSE AND HATTOCK WITH MY TOP!” And imme-diatly they saw the top lifted up from the ground, but could not see what way it was carried, by reason of a cloud of dust which was raised at the same time. They sought for the top all about the place where it was taken up, but in vain; and it was found afterwards in the Churchyard, on the other side of the Church. Mr Stewart (so is the gentleman called) declared to me that he had a perfect remembrance of this matter.—Aubrey’s Miscellanies, p. 209.

⁴ Like; even as; in like manner.

⁵ And; if.

⁶ The children in the kirkyard of Forres (see the preceding Note on HORSE AND HATTOCK) appear to have been adepts in this branch of the Fairy creed; which was, no doubt, familiar to all classes of the peasantry of Scotland, as numerous traces of it are to be found in various districts, at the remotest distance from each other.

⁷ The above details are, perhaps, in all respects, the most extraordinary in the history of WITCHCRAFT of this or of any other country. Any comment would only weaken the effect of such very remarkable descriptions. ⁸ It is a thousand pities that the learned Examinators have so piously declined indul-ging the world with the detailed description of these illustrious personages. Under the singularly descriptive powers of Isobel Gowdie, much might have been learned of FAIRY-LAND and its Mythology.

When we tak away any coves milk, we pull the tow, and twyn it and plaitt it in the vrong way, in the Divellis name; and we draw the tedder (fua maid) in betuixt the coves hinder foot,¹ and owt betuixt the coves forder foot, in the Divellis name; and therby tak with ws the kowes milk. We tak sheips milk ewin fo. The way to tak or giev bak the milk again, is to cut that tedder. Whan we tak away the strenth of anie perfonen eall,² and givies it to an vther, we tak a litle qwantitie owt of each barrell or stand of eall, and puts it in a flowp, in the Divellis nam; and, in his nam, with owr awin handis, puttis it amongft an vtheris eall, and gives her the strenth and substans and heall of hir neightbouris eall. The fowrth Sprit is called 'MAK HECTOR,' quho [waitis wpon Jean] Martein, dawghter to the said Margret Wilson; he is a young-lyk Devill, clothed still in grafs-[green. Jean Martein is] MAIDEN to the Coven that I am of; and hir nikname is 'OVER THE DYKE WITH IT,' becaus THE DIVILL [always takis the] Maiden in his hand nix him, quhan ve dance Gillatrypes;⁷ and quhan he vold lowp from he and she will fay, 'Ower the dyk with it!' The nam of the fyft Sprit is 'ROBERT THE [RULE,' and he is still clothed in] fadd-dun, and seimis to be a Comander of the rest of the Spritis; and he waitis wpon Margret Brodie, in Alderne. [The name of the saxt Sprit] is called 'THEIFF OF HELL WAIT WPON HIR SELFE,' and he waitis also on the said Bessie Wilson. The name of the sevint [Sprit is called] 'THE READ REIVER,' and he is my owin Spirit, that waitis on my felse, and is still clothed in blak. The aucht Spirit [is called] 'ROBERT THE JACKIS,' still clothed in dune, and seimes to be aiged. He is ane glaiked gowked Spirit! The woman's [nikname] that he waitis on, is 'ABLE AND STOWT!'⁸ The nynt Spirit is called 'LAING,' and the woman's nikname that he waitis wpon is 'BESSIE BAULD.'⁹ The tenth Spirit is named 'THOMAS A FEARIE,' &c.¹⁰—Ther wilbe many vther Divellis, waiting wpon [our] MAISTER DIVELL; bot he is bigger and mor awfull than the rest of the Divellis, and they all reverence him. I will ken them all, on by on, from vtheris, quhan they appeir lyk a man.

¹ His Latin docquet, with his motto, 'Amor meus cruci fixus. 1661,' are affixed. It is unnecessary to preserve this, as it is in common form. ² As in preceding Deposition. ³ The same preamble is repeated, with the account of her baptism and carnal dealing, &c., in similar terms as in her preceding Confession. ⁴ The DEIL's dozen. ⁵ Ever; always. ⁶ This paper is unluckily very much mutilated at the ends of the lines; which mutilation commences here. Where the sense can be made out, the words are conjecturally supplied, within brackets; if not, a small blank is left in this transcript. ⁷ Probably a dance then popular among the vulgar. ⁸ Viz. Bessie Hay. ⁹ Viz. Elspet Nishie. ¹⁰ Issobell, as usual, appears to have been stopped short here by her interrogators, when she touched on such matters.

Quhen we reafe the wind, we tak a rag of cloth, and weitts¹ it in water; and we tak a beetle² and knokis the rage³ on a stane, and we fay thryfe ower,

‘ I KNOK this ragg wpon this stane,
To raise the wind, in THE DIVELLIS name;
It fall not lye⁴ vntill I please againe!’

[Whan] we wold lay the wind, we dry the ragg, and fay (thryfe ower,)

‘ WE lay the wind in THE DIVELLIS name,
[It fall not] ryfe quhill we (or I) lyk to reafe it againe!’

And if the wind will not lye instantlie [after we fay this,] we call wpon ovr Spirit, and fay to him, ‘ THIEFFE! THIEFFE! conjure the wind, and caws it to [lye].’

We haw no power of rain, bot ve will reafe the wind quhan ve pleas.—He maid vs believ [.] that ther wes no GOD befyd him.

As for Elf-arrow-heidis, THE DIVELL shapes them with his awin hand, [and syne deliueris thame] to Elf-boyes, who whyttis and dightis⁵ them with a sharp thing lyk a paking neidle; bot [quhan I wes in Elf-land?] I saw them whytting and dighting them. Quhan I wes in the Elfes howffis, they will haw werie them whytting and dighting; and THE DIVELL gives them to ws, each of ws fo many, quhen Thes that dightis thaim ar litle ones, hollow, and bofs-baked!⁶ They speak gowftie⁷ lyk. Quhen THE DIVELL gives them to ws, he fayes,

‘ SHOOT thes in my name,
And they fall not goe heall hame!’

And quhan ve shoot these arrowes (we fay)—

‘ I SHOOT yon⁸ man in THE DIVELLIS name,
He fall nott win heall hame!
And this falbe alfwa trw;
Thair fall not be an bitt of him on lieiw!’⁹

We haw no bow to shoot with, but spang¹⁰ them from of the naillis of our thowmbes. Som tymes we will misse; bot if thay twitch,¹¹ be it beaft, or man, or woman, it will kill, tho’ they haid an jack¹² wpon them. Qwhen we goe in the shape of an haire, we fay thryfe ovr:

‘ I SALL goe intill ane haire,
With sorrow, and sych, and meikle caire;
And I fall goe in THE DIVELLIS nam,
Ay whill I com hom [againe!]’

And instantlie we start in an hair. And when we wold be owt of that shape, we vill fay:

‘ HAIRE, [haire, God fend thé caire!]
I am in an hairis liknes juft now,
Bot I falbe in a womanis liknes ewin [now.]’

When we vold goe in the liknes of an cat, we fay thryfe ower,

‘ I SALL goe [in till ane catt,]
[With forrow, and sych, and a blak]shot!
And I fall goe in THE DIVELLIS nam,
Ay quhill I com hom againe!’

⁶ Boss also signifies hollow, or empty. Perhaps this expresses that these Elves were diminutive and hump-backed creatures resembling the trows or trolls of FAIRY SUPERSTITION; whose propensities are uniformly described as being malignant, and hostile to mankind. ⁷ Roughly; crossly; gruffly. ⁸ Yonder. The preceding and following rhymes are probably unique, even in the history of TRIALS for WITCRAFT, and show, in a very forcible manner, the criminality of the bigoted, though learned and well-intentioned, individuals who dragged forward such wretches to public trial and an ignominious death. ⁹ On life; alive. ¹⁰ Jerk. ¹¹ Touch. ¹² A coat of mail; defensive armor.

And if ve [wold goe in ane craw, then] we fay thryfe ower :

‘ I SALL goe intill a craw,
With forrow, and fych, and a blak [thraw !
And I fall goe in the Divellis nam,]
Ay quhill I com home again !’

And quhen ve vold be owt of thes shapes, we fay :

‘ CATT, catt, (or craw, craw,) [God] fend thé a blak fhott ! (or blak thraw !)
I wes a catt (or craw) juft now,
Bot I falbe [in a woman’s liknes evin now.]

Catt, catt, (or craw, craw,) God fend the a blak shot ! (or a blak thraw !)

Giff we, in the [shape of an catt, an craw, an] haire, or any vther liknes, &c., go to any of our neighbouris howffis, being Witches, we will [fay,]

[‘ I (or we) CONJURE] thé Goe with ws (or me) !’

And presentlie they becom as we ar, either cats, hearis, crowes, &c., and goe [with ws whither we wold. Quhan] we wold ryd,¹ we tak windle-ftrawes, or been-ftakes,² and put them betwixt owr foot,⁵ and fay thryfe,

‘ [HORSE] and hattok; horfe and goe,
Horfe and pellattis, ho ! ho !’⁴

And immediatlie we flie away whair [eur we wold] ; and least our husbandis fould mis vs owt of owr beddis, we put in a boofom, or a thrie [leggit stoole beyde thame,] and fay thryfe ower,

‘ I LAY down this boofom (or stool,) In THE DIVELLIS name,

‘ [I] PUTT owt this beeff in THE DIVELLIS nam,
That meikle silver and good pryce com hame !’

I did ewin so [qubeneuir I putt] furth either horfe, noat,⁶ vebs,⁷ or any vther thing to be fold, and still⁸ put in this feather, and said the [samu wordis thryfe] ower, to caws the comodities sell weil, &c. thryfe ower, ¹ Ride. ² Bean-stalks. ³ For feet. ⁴ See Note to ‘ Horse and hattock,’ p. 604. ⁵ There is a tradition in MORAYSHIRE, that Witches could not appear in the shape of a dove or a lamb ; the one being emblematical of THE HOLY SPIRIT, the other being the emblem of the AGNUS DEI. Perhaps the hiatus might not improperly have been so supplied. ⁶ Nolt, cattle. ⁷ Webs of cloth. ⁸ Uniformly ; constantly ; always. ⁹ After this fragment, a considerable portion of the MS. is unfortunately torn off. It is probable that the two first lines of the next Charm are mutilated. ¹⁰ It has been often remarked by the Editor, in the course of the numerous WITCH TRIALS which occur in this Collection, that a great proportion of the charms, in use to be repeated by these unhappy women, were actually paraphrases of portions of the Mass-Book—and in some cases, such as in the Case of ANNIE SAMSON, there appears to have been used doggrel versions of THE CREED, &c. ! Others were taken from ancient popular rhymes and songs, such as the above fragment, ‘ Our Lord to hunting he is gone,’ &c., which, unfortunately, is mutilated.

And this we say thryfe over, straiking¹ the for, and it becomes heall. 2^{di}, For the BEAN-SHAW,² or pain in the heance,³—‘ WEE ar heir thrie Maidens charming for the bean-straw; þe man of the Middle-earth, blew beaver, land-feaver, maneris of flooris, the Lord fleigged⁴ the Feind with his holy candles and yeird foot stione!—Thair she fittis, and heir she is gon!—Let hir nevir com heir again!’—3^{di}, For THE FEAVERIS, we say thryfe over, ‘ I FORBID the qwaking-feavers, the fea-feaveris, the land-feaveris, and all the feaveris that ewir God ordained, owt of the head, owt of the heart, owt of the bak, owt of the fydis, owt of the kneysis, owt of the thieghes, fra the pointis of the fingeris to the nebes⁵ of the toes; owt fall the feaveris goe, [fom] to the hill, fom to the hap, fom to the stione, some to the stok. In Saint Peiteris nam, Saint Paullis nam, and all the Saintis of Hevin: In the nam of THE FATHER, THE SONE, and of THE HALIE GOST!’⁶—AND when we took the frwit of the fishes from [the] fisheris, we went to the shore, befor the boat wold com to it; and we wold say, on the shoredfyd, thrie feuerall tymes ower,

‘ THE fisheris ar gon to the sea,
And they vill bring hom fishe to me;
They will bring them hom intill the boat,
Bot they fall get of thaim bot the smaller fort!’

So we either steall a fish, or buy a fish, or get a fish from them [for nowght,] an or ma.⁷ And with that we haw all the fruit of the heall⁸ fishes in the boat; and the fishes that the fishermen tham selues will haw, will be bot froath, &c.

The first woyag that ewer I went with the rest of owr COVENS wes [to] Plewghlandis; and thair we shot an man betuix the plewgh-filtis, and he presentlie fell to the ground, wpon his neife⁹ and his mowth; and than THE DIVELL gaw me an arrow, and cawfed me shoot an woman in that feildis; quhilk I did, and she fell down dead.¹⁰ In Winter 1660, quhen Mr Harie Forbes, Minister at Alderne, wes feik, we maid an bagg of the gallis, flesh, and guttis of toadis, pickles of bear,¹¹ pairings of the naillis of fingeris and toes, the liewer of ane hair, and bittis of clowtis. We steipit this all together, all night among watter, all haked¹² throw vther. And whan we did put it among the water, SATAN wes with ws, and learned ws the wordis following, to say thryfe ower. They ar thus,

‘ HE is lying in his bed,—he is lyeing feik and fair;
Let him lye intill his bed two monethis and [thrie] dayes mair!
2^{di}, Let him lye intill his bed,—let him lye intill it feik and fore;
Let him lyne untill his bed monthis two [and] thrie dayes mor!
3^{di}, He fall lye intill his bed, he fall lye in it feik and fore;
He fall lye intill his bed [two monethis and] thrie dayes mor!’

Quhan we haid learned all thes wordis from THE DIVELL, as said is, we fell all down [wpon owr] kneis, with owr hear down ower owr showlderis and eyes, and owr handis lifted wp, and owr eyes

² The boneshave or boneshaw, signifies the SCIATICA. From an amusing, published specimen of THE EXMOOR DIALECT, Devonshire, it appears, that the term is also known in England. The peasantry of that district use a singular Charm for its cure. ‘ The patient must lie upon his back, on the bank of the river or brook of water, with a straight staff by his side, between him and the water; and must have the following words repeated over him, viz.

“ Boneshave right—Boneshave straight—
As the water runs by the stave—Good for Boneshave!”

They are not to be persuaded but that this ridiculous form of words seldom fails to give them a perfect cure.’ Exmoor Scolding. P. 8. Note.

⁶ It appears

very singular to us who live in the Nineteenth Century, that SATAN should have taught his servants to invoke THE SAINTS, and even THE HOLY TRINITY. The charms recited by his disciples are usually fragments of ancient Monkish rhymes; and most of them were such as many good Roman Catholics of the lower orders, even in these times, would not scruple to use, for the supposed cure of their bodily ailments.

(3.) ISSOBELL GOWDIES THIRD CONFESSION.

AT AULDERNE, the fyftein day of May, 1662 yeiris, IN prefence of Master HARIE FORBES, Minister of the Gospell at Alderne, Mr HEW ROSSE, Minister at Nairn; JOHNE INNES of Edingeth; HEW HAY of Newtown; Mr ALEX DUNBAR, Schoolmaster and Session Clerk of Alderne; GEORGE PHINNEY, in Kirkmichaell; and Johne Weir, and Androw Easie in Alderne; and many vtheris, WITNESSIS to THE CONFESSION efter sett down, spoken furth of the mouth of ISSOBELL GOWDIE, spous to Johne Gilbert in Lochloy.

THE quhilk day, in prefence of me, JOHNE INNES, Notar Publict, and Witnesfes all vnder subserywand, the said ISSOBELL GOWDIE, appeiring to be most penetent for hir abominable finnes of Witchcraft, most ingenwoslie procedit in hir CONFESSION therof, in maner efter following; to witt. First, as I wes goeing betwixt the townis of Drumdevin and the Headis, THE DIVELL met with me, and thair I covenanted with him, and promiseit to meit him, in the night tym, in the Kirk of Alderne; quhilk I did. He stood in the Readeris dask, and an blak book in his hand; quhair I cam befor him, and renuncet JESUS CHRIST and my baptisme; and all betuixt the soale of my foot and the crown of my head, I gaw frielie wp and ower to THE DIVELL. Margaret Brodie, in Alderne, held me wp to THE DIVELL, wntill he re-baptised me, and marked me in the shoulder, and with his mouth sucked out my blood at that place, and spowted it in his hand, and sprinkling it wpon my head and face, he said, ‘I baptise ye, JANET, to my self, in my own nam!’ Within a whyll thereafter we all removed. And within few dayes he cam to me, in the New Wardis of Inshoch, and ther haid carnall cowpulation with me. He wes a werie meikle blak roch man. He will lye als hewie wpon ws, quhan he hes carnall dealling with ws, lyk an malt-secke. His memberis ar exceiding great and long; no mans memberis ar so long and bigg as they ar. He wold be amongst ws lyk a weath horfe amongst mears. He wold lye with ws in prefence of all the multitud; neither haid we nor he any kynd of shame; bot especiallie he hes no shame with him at all. He wold lye and hawe carnall dealling with all, at euerie tym, as he pleafed. He wold haw carnall dealling with ws in the shap of a deir or any vther shap that he wold be in. We wold never refuse him. He wold com to my hows-top in the shap of a crow, or lyk a deir, or in any vther shap, now and then. I wold ken his woice, at the first heiring of it, and wold goe furth to him and haw carnall cowpulation with him. The youngeft and l wstieft women will haw werie great pleafour in their carnall cowpulation with him, yea much mor than with their awin husbandis; and they will haw a exceiding great desir of it with him, als much as he can haw to them, and mor; and never think shame of it. He is abler for ws that way than any man can be (Alace! that I fould compair him to ane man!) onlie he ves heavie lyk a malt-seck; a ludg nature, verie cold, as yce.

He wold fend me now and then to Aulderne fom earandis to my neightbouris, in the shap of ane hair. I wes on morning, abowt the break of day, going to Aulderne in the shap of ane hair, and Patrik Papleyis ferwandis, in Kilhill, being going to ther labouring, his houndis being with them, ran efter me, being in the shap of ane haire. I ran werie long, bot wes forcet, being wearie, at last to take my own hous. The dore being left open, I ran in behind ane chift, and the houndis followed in; bot they went to the vther fyd of the chift; and I was forcet to run furth agane, and wan into ane vther hows, and thair took leafour to fay,

‘HAIR, hair, God fend th  cair!
I am in a hearis liknes now,
Bot I fall be ane voman ewin now!
Hair, hair, God fend th  cair!’

And so I returned to my owin shap, as I am at this instant, again. The dowgis will fom tymes get fom byttis¹ of vs, quhan ve ar in hairis,² bot will not get ws killed. Quhan ve turn owt of a hairis liknes to owr awin shap, we will haw the byttis, and rywis, and scrattis³ in owr bodies. Quhan we vold be in the shap of cattis, we did nothing but cry and wraw,⁴ and rywing, and as it ver, wirrieing on ane vther; and quhan ve com to owr awin shap again, ve will find the scrattis and rywes on our skins, werie for. Quhan on of vs or mor ar in the shap of catis, and meitt with ony vtheris owr neightbouris, we will fay,

‘DIVELL SPEID TH —GOE THOW WITH ME!’

And immediatlie they will turne in the shap of ane catt, and goe with ws. Quhan we wilbe in the shap of crowes, we will be larger than ordinar crowes, and will sitt wpon brenches of treis. We went in the shap of rewkis⁵ to Mr Robert Donald Jones hows, THE DIVELL, and Johne Taylor, and his wyff, went in at the kitchen chimney, and went down wpon the crowk.⁶ It wes about Lambes,⁷ in anno 1659; they opened ane vindow, and (we) went all in to the hows, and gott beiffe and drink thair; bot did no more harme.—We went in to the Downie-hillis; the hill opened, and we cam to ane fair and lairge brow rowme, in the day tym. Thair ar great bullis rowtting and skoylling ther, at the entrie, quhilk feared me.⁸

Bot that quhich troubles my confcience most, is the killing of severall perfones, with the arrows quhich I gott from THE DIVELL. The first woman that I killed wes at the Plewgh-landis; also I killed ane⁹ in the East of Murrey, at *Candlmas*¹⁰ last. At that tyme Bessie Wilson, in Aulderne, killed on thair; and Margaret Wilson, ther, killed ane vther; I killed also James Dick in Canniecaill: Bot the death that I am most of all forrie for, is the killing of William Bower, in the Milltowne of Moynes; Margaret Brodie killed ane voman, washing, at the Burne of Tarres; Bessie Wilson killed ane man at the Bushe of Strutheris; Bessie Hay in Aulderne killed ane prettie man called Dunbar, at the Eist end of the Towne of Forres, as he was coming owt at an gait; Margaret Brodie in Alderne killed on David Blak, in Darnvay. Janet Breadhead, spows to Johne Taylor, told me, a litle befor she wes apprehendit, that Margaret Wilfone in Alderne shot Alexander Huchcon, in Alderne; Janet Breadheid shot Johne Falconer, in the Park. The most of ws all wer ther, at that tyme. Bessie Wilfone killed on William Man, at Burgie; Margaret Wilfone killed on Johne Lee, and Janet Breadheid killed a fuy¹ at Burgie; Bessie Wilfone in Alderne, on an first Monday of the Reath, took a bagg maid of hairis lieweris,² the flesh, guttis and gallis of toadis, naillis of fingeris and toes, and fwinged it on an young man called Thomas Reid, and he died. Bessie and Margaret Wilfones in Alderne, Johne Taylor and his wyff, Margrat Brodie and I, and THE DIVELL, wer together, and Mr Harie Forbes, Minister at Alderne, goeing to Moynes. THE DIVELL gaw Margret Brodie an arrow to shoot at him, quhilk the did; bot it cam short; and the Divell cawfed tak it wp again. We desiret to shoot again, bot the Divell said, ‘No; we wold not gett his lyff at that tyme!’ The Divell cawfed me to shoot at the Laird of Park,³ as he was croceing the Burne of the Boath; bot I missed him.

We wold goe to feuerall howflis, in the night tym. We wer at Candlmas last in Graingehill,⁴ quhair we got meat and drink anewgh. THE DIVELL sat at the heid of the table, and all the COVEN abowt. That night he desirit Alexander Elder, in Earlseat, to say the grace befor meat, quhilk he did; and is thus:

‘WE eat this meat in THE DIVELLIS nam,
With forrow, and fych,⁵ and meikle flame;
We fall destroy hows and hald;
Both sheip and noat in till the fald.
Litle good fall come to the fore
Of all the rest of the litle store!’

And than ve began to eatt. And quhan ve laid endit eatting, we looked steadfastlie to THE DIVELL, and bowing owrfelwes to him, we said to the Divell,

‘We thank thé owr Lord for this!’ &c.

The wordis which we spak, quhan we maid the pictur, for distroyeing of the Laird of Parkis meall-children, wer thus:

‘IN THE DIVELLIS nam, we powr in this water among this mowld (meall),⁷
For lang duyning and ill heall;
We putt it into the fyre,
That it may be brunt both flik and stowre.
It falbe brunt, with owr will,
As any flikle⁸ wpon a kill.’

THE DIVELL taught ws the wordis; and quhan ve haid learned them, we all fell downe wpon owr bare kneysis, and owr hair abowt owr eyes, and owr handis lifted wp, looking steadfast wpon THE DIVELL, still saying the wordis thryfe ower, till it wes maid. And then, in THE DIVELLIS nam, we did put it in, in the midst of the fyre. Efter it had skrukned⁹ a litle befor the fyre, and quhan it wes read lyk a coale, we took it owt in THE DIVELLIS nam. FIRST, I knew nothing of Witchcraft wntill I wes mari[et with] my husband, Johne Taylor; andsit wes he, and Elspet Nishie, his mother, that entyfed me to that craft. And the first [thing] that we did wes, we maid some drowgries,⁶ of dowgs flesh and sheipis flesh, against Johne Hay, in the Mure; and therby took away his cornes, and killed his horse, noat,⁷ theip, and vther guidis;⁸ and layed it abowt his hows, to tak away his awin lyffe; and therefter, he shortlie died. Onlie my mother-in-law and my husband did this, to learne me; and this wes my first [lesson] from them, &c.⁹ When they gott me to consent to this craft; first, they haid me to the Kirk of Nairne, in the nycht [tyme;] and THE DIVELL wes in the Readeris dask, and an book in his hand. And at that meitting, Bessie Wilfone, in Auld[erne;] Margret Wilfone, spows to Donald Callam, thair; Margret Brodie, thair; Barbara Friece, ther; Helen Inglis, spows to William [. . . .] thair; Janet Burnet, thair; Elspet Makbeith, thair; Elspet Nishie, spows to Johne Mathew, in Aulderne; Mariore Taylor, [spous] to Robert Barrie, ther; Bessie Hay, ther; Archibald Man, ther; Mariorie

Johne Taylor, my husband, wes then Officer; bot Johne Yowng, in Mebestoune, is now Officer to my COE[VEN.] Quban I cam first ther, THE DIVELL called tham all be thair names, on the book; and my husband, than [OFFICER,]¹ called thame at the dore. And when that was done, Bessie Wilfon, in Aulderne, fat down nixt THE DIVELL;² [Bessie] Hay, thair, fat nixt him, on the vther sid; Janet Burnet fat nixt hir; and Elspet Nishie, spows to the said Johne [Mathew,] fat nixt Bessie Wilfon, hir mother. She wes THE MAIDEN to hir motheris Coeven. All the rest fat downe [as] they to cam.³

The nixt thing, efter quhat wes done that night, THE DIVELL lay with them all abowt. And then for me, my husband presented me, and he and Margrat Wilfon, in Aulderne, held me vp to THE [DIVELL to] be baptifed: And efter I haid put my on hand to the foallis of my foot, and the vthir hand to the [crown of] my head, and renunced my baptifme, and all betuixt my two handis to the Divell, the Divell [marked me] in the shoulder, and fuked out my blood with his mowth, at that place; he spowted it in his hand, and [sprinkled it] on my head. He baptifed me thairvith, in his awin nam, 'CHRISTIAN.' And than immediatlie thairefter, [they all returned] each to ther awin howffis. Within fyw dayes thairefter, he cam to me to my hows, quban my hub[and] was furth, in the morning, at the plewgh, to sie the mark quich he gaw me; and he did lye with me in the naked [bed,] and haid carnall cowpulation with me; and gaw me ane piece of money, lyk a testain. He was a meikle, roch, blak man, cloven footed, werie cold; and I fand his nature within me als cold as spring-well-water. He promeisit to sie me again, within eight dayes, quhill he did, and haid carnall cowpulation with me again, and gaw me an vthir piece of money, lyk the first; bot they both turned read,⁴ and I got nothing for thaim. He cam again within twantie dayes, and still⁵ once in the twantie dayes, and lay with me at each tym continually.

[We] met in the place of Darnvay⁶ nixt that, and thair we did eat and drink, &c. Efter that, we vold still meit [euerie] ten, twelve, or twantie dayes continwally.

Whan we haid Great Meittingis, Walter Ledy, in Penick, my [huf]band, and Allexander Elder, nixt to THE DIVELL, wer Ruleris; and quban ther wold be but fewar, I my self, the deceassit Jean Suthirland, Bessie Hay, Bessie Wilfone, and Janet Burnet wold rule thaim. bagg, and he steiring it still¹ abowt with his handis. We wer wpon our kneyes, owr hair about owr eyes, and owr handis lifted up, and ve looking stedfastlie wpon THE DIVELL, praying to him, repeating the vordis quhich he learned vs, that it fould kill and destroy the Lairdis of Park and Lochloy, and thair meall-children and posteritie. And then we cam to Inshoch, in the night tym, and skatered it wpon, and down, abow, and about the gait, and vther places quhair the Lairdis and thair fones wold most haunt; and then ve, in the lyknes of crowes and rewkis flood abow the gait, and in the treis oposit to the gait. It wes apointed so, that if any of them fould twitch² or tramp wpon any of it, als veill as it or any of it to fall on thaim, it fould strik thaim with byllis,³ &c. and kill them: Quhilk it did; and they fhortlie died. We did it to mak that hows airles.⁴ It wold wrong non els bot they. And it wes Keathren Sowter, that wes brunt,⁵ that [shot] William Hay, the last Laird of Parkis brother, for⁶ on Gilbert Kinley. It wes only that bagg that wes the death of both the last Lairdis of Park.

Alfo, four yeir since, I and my husband, Iffobell Gowdie, spows to Johne Gilbert, in Lochloy, and Bessie and Margret Wilsones, in Alderne, maid [a pictur] of clay, lyk the Laird of Parkis eldest sone. My husband brought hom the clay in his plaid [newk. It] wes maid in my hows; and THE DIVELL him self with ws. We brak the clay werie small, lyk meil, [and] sifted it with a siew, and powred in vater amongst it, with wordis that THE DIVELL learned vs, [in the DI]VELLIS nam. I brought hom the water, in a pig,⁷ out of the Rud-wall.⁸ We wer all wpon owr [kneyes,] and our hair about owr eyes, and owr handis lifted vp to THE DIVELL, and owr eyes stedfast looking [vpon him,] praying, and saying wordis which he learned ws, thryfe ower, for destroyeing of this⁹ Lairdis [meall] children, and to mak his hows airles. It wes werie fore wrowght, lyk rye-bowt. It was about the bignes of a feadge or pow. It was just maid lyk the bairne; it wanted no mark of any mail child, such as heid, face, eyes, nose, mouth, lippes, &c., and the handis of it folded downe by its fydis. It wes putt to the fyre, first till it scrunked,¹⁰ and than a cleir fyre about it, till it wes hard. And then we took it owt of the fyre, in THE DIVELLIS nam; and we laid a clowt abowt it, and did lay [it] vp on a knag, and sometimes vnder a chift. Each day we vold water it, and then rost and bek¹¹ it; and turn it at the fyre each other day, whill¹² that bairne died; and then layed it vp, and stejred¹³ it not wntill the nixt bairne wes borne: And then, within half an yeir efter that bairn wes borne, [we] took it owt again out of the cradle and clowt, and vold dip it now and than among water, and beck [it] and rost it at the fyre, each other day once, as ve did against the vther that wes dead, wntill that bairn [died] alfo. ALL quhilkis of the premisses, swa spokin and willinglie Confessit and declarit furth of the mouth of the said JANET BRED[HEID,] in all and be all thingis as is abow sett downe, I, the said JOHNE INNES, Notar Publict, haw writtine thir presentis, and with THE WITNESSES abownamet, in farder testimonie and witnessing of the premisses to be of veritie, We haw subscrivuit the famen with our handis, [day, month,] yeir, and place abow specifit.

DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF GOWRIE'S CONSPIRACY.

(See VOL. II. pp. 299 to 313.)

WHEN the Editor was in the progress of completing his collection of materials for illustrating the truth of the EARL OF GOWRIE'S CONSPIRACY against KING JAMES VI, one of the Volumes of Sir James Balfour's MSS. had been misplaced. Since that time, however, the Editor has had the advantage of again inspecting that truly valuable repertory of historical information, and now submits a few more of those highly interesting Papers, which, he is happy to notice, place the conduct of the celebrated Mr Robert Bruce in a much more favourable point of view. In justice to the memory of that eminent individual, it has been thought proper to insert them in this Appendix. Throughout the protracted controversy between Bruce and THE KING, the latter, obviously, had the worst of the argument—and tyrannically put down his able but dauntless and pertinacious antagonist by a most unlawful stretch of arbitrary power, after he failed in all his attempts at foiling him with his own weapons.

The relentless persecution of Bruce must, assuredly, be accounted an additional blemish in the character of KING JAMES VI, by every unprejudiced person. The reader is once more referred to the text, and to the documents and authorities formerly quoted, in reference to this subject.

No. IX.

BOND by JOHN fifth EARL OF CASSILLIS, to his Brother HEW KENNEDY, commonly called THE MASTER OF CASSILLIS, to pay him and his accomplices 1200 merks yearly, &c. to commence from the date of their taking the Life of THE LAIRD OF AUCHINDRAYNE.

(See VOL. III. pp. 124, 581, &c.)

[In the preceding Collection, and also in the 'Historical and Genealogical Account of the principal FAMILIES of the Name of KENNEDY,' recently published,² all the incidents then discovered relative to the accumulated acts of villainy perpetrated by THE LAIRD OF AUCHINDRAYNE and his son have already been disclosed. The public being likewise in possession of the leading features of this extraordinary case, from the graphic pen of SIR WALTER SCOTT, who has prefixed an introductory notice to his dramatic poem, 'AUCHINDRAIN, or the Ayrshire Tragedy,' it is altogether unnecessary to attempt even a brief sketch of their lives and crimes in this place.

The Historical Account above referred to, and the present Collection, contain a great variety of Documents which have been brought forward, alike to illustrate the Trials of the Lairds of Auchindrane, and the extraordinary state of society and manners in the important district of Carrick and the adjoining shires. But no Papers which have hitherto been discovered appear to the Editor to afford so striking a picture of the savage state of barbarism into which that country must have been sunk, as the following BOND by the EARL OF CASSILLIS to his brother and heir apparent, Hew Master of Cassillis. The uncle of these young men, Sir Thomas Kennedy of Culzean, Tutor of Cassillis, as the reader will recollect, was murdered, May 11th, 1602, by Auchindrayne's accomplices.

The MASTER OF CASSILLIS, for many years previous to that event, was in terms of open personal hostility to his brother. During all that period, however, the Master maintained habits of the closest intimacy with Auchindrayne and his dissolute associates, and actually joined him in various hostile enterprises against his brother the Earl.³ The occurrence of the Laird of Culzean's Murder was embraced by their mutual friends as a fitting opportunity to effect a permanent reconciliation between the brothers; "bot (as 'the Historie' quaintly informs us) the cuntry thocht that he wald not be ertainist in that cause, for the auld luiff betwix him and Auchindrayne."⁴ The unprincipled Earl, (whose sobriquet, and that of some of his ancestors, was King of Carrick, to denote the boundless sway which he exercised over his own vassals and the inhabitants of that district,) relying on his brother's necessities, held out the infamous bribe contained in the following Bond, to induce his brother, the Master of Cassillis, to murder his former friend, the old Laird of Auchindrayne. Though there be honour among thieves, it would seem that there is none among assassins; for the younger brother insisted upon having the price of blood assured to him by a written document, drawn up in the form of a regular BOND!

Judging by the Earl's former and subsequent history, he probably thought that, in either event, his purposes would be attained, by "killing two birds with one stone." On the other hand, however, it is but doing justice to the Master's acuteness, and the experience acquired under his quondam preceptor Auchindrayne, that we should likewise conjecture that, on his part, he would hold firm possession of his BOND, to be used as a checkmate against his brother, should he think fit afterwards to turn his heel upon him, or attempt to betray him into the hands of justice.

The following is a correct copy of the Bond granted by the Earl, as transcribed from the original.]

GENERAL INDEX.

GENERAL INDEX

TO CRIMINAL TRIALS, &c.

DURING THE REIGNS OF

KINGS JAMES IV AND V, MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS, AND KING JAMES VI.

* * THE reader, in consulting the following INDEX, is requested to remark, that owing to the Editor's having been under the necessity of sending the TRIALS which occurred during the reign of KING JAMES VI. to press, before the introductory portions of this work were compiled, it became requisite for him to page the earlier reigns in Vol. I. thus, * 1, * 2, &c. In order to avoid the annoyance and trouble of consulting separate INDICES of persons and matters, the Editor has bestowed a great deal of time and labour in constructing an extremely copious GENERAL INDEX, which he may venture to say embraces every circumstance contained in the work, which is at all likely to be esteemed interesting and useful to the historian, lawyer, antiquary, or genealogist. The most prominent of the ancient words and phrases, and the leading historical facts, superstitions, &c., have also been incorporated, so as to render the work more acceptable, and also as useful as possible to the public, as a book of reference.
