PREFACE.

THE EDITOR has at length the satisfaction of having brought the present Collection of the earliest Criminal Proceedings in Scotland, of which authentic memorials are now preserved, to a conclusion. This task has occupied several years of laborious exertion, which, it must be admitted, has been severer than might at first have been anticipated; but, when the difficulties he had to grapple with, and the repulsive materials from which these volumes have been compiled, are candidly considered, it will readily be allowed that the undertaking required no ordinary exertion of application and perseverance.

It has all along been the Editor's anxious study to furnish the Public with a copious selection from these ancient Records, (the earliest, perhaps, as well as the most remarkable, in this department, of which any country in Europe can now boast,) in a scrupulously faithful and accurate manner, without using even the slightest liberty with the phraseology or structure of the original text. His editorial labours, therefore, have been confined chiefly to the selection of the most remarkable Cases, and the addition of such collateral historical and antiquarian illustrations as the nature of the subject seemed to demand, or his more important professional exertions, which, during the whole of this period, also happen to have been of a severe and laborious description, allowed him to make.

The present work was first suggested by the late lamented SIR WALTER SCOTT, whose attachment to the early history, literature, and antiquities of his native country are so universally known and appreciated, that his name may now be said to be indissolubly identified with them. The idea and plan of such a work as the present had, many years ago, occurred to that truly great man; and, at one period, he had himself contemplated the publication of the most remarkable of the ancient Criminal Cases of Scotland, combining the facts of each with all the correlative circumstances, worked up into a popular and narrative form. From this undertaking, however, he was diverted by his numerous avocations and literary engagements, but chiefly from the consideration that many years must necessarily have been consumed in acquiring all the requisite stock of materials and information, before he could commence the composition of such a work. Both previous to, and shortly after the institution of his favourite literary Association, the BANNATYNE CLUB, he encouraged the Editor to attempt the publication of the present Collection; but, being diffident of his adequacy to so important and extensive an undertaking as had at first been contemplated by SIR WALTER SCOTT, it was proposed by the Editor that he should, in the first place, carefully investigate the Records and MSS. belonging to the Court, and make pretty extensive Selections from the earlier portion of the reign of King James VI., in the manner that appeared to him likely to be the most accurate, and, at the same time, the most practically useful.

These Selections were accordingly made and subjected to the critical examination of Sir Walter Scott and of Thomas Thomson, Esq., Deputy Clerk Register of Scotland, now his successor as President of the Bannatyne Club, together with the outlines of the plan which seemed to be best calculated to make the proposed Collection as useful as possible, as a work of reference. With a few modifications, these learned individuals concurred in advising the publication of the work, in the form in which it is now found. The patronage of THE LORD JUSTICE-CLERK and the Lords Commissioners of the High Court of Justiciary, THE LORD PRESIDENT of the Court of Session, THE LORD CHIEF COMMISSIONER of the Jury Court, BARON HUME, and many other eminent individuals, whose names rank highest in the profession of the Law, as well as in the literature of this country, was liberally and readily granted in furtherance of the work.

The BANNATYNE and MAITLAND CLUBS, also, and many other literary and Antiquarian friends, having subscribed to the projected publication, the Editor felt that he could not, in gratitude, any longer decline undertaking the remaining risk and responsibility, great though they, from the outset, appeared to him to be. It was clear to all, however, that no adequate compensation could reasonably be expected for the expenditure of time and labour, and the large pecuniary advances which must necessarily be involved in the undertaking of so very extensive an engagement, unless many of the members of the principal Legal Bodies should come forward in support of the Editor, after the publication of the preliminary Parts of his projected work. This hope, unfortunately, has not hitherto been realized.

These explanations appear to the Editor to be in some measure called for, in consequence of his having been frequently and freely censured by many of his friends, as if he had rashly and unadvisedly incurred so very heavy a responsibility, and as if he had wilfully sacrificed so many years to intense application on pursuits so little likely to yield a corresponding return for the labour and expense bestowed. Without farther intruding on the reader's patience these personal concerns, he trusts he has shown satisfactorily, that he had the best grounds for expecting a more favourable result. In the face of at least the extreme probability of suffering considerable pecuniary loss, after the time when the first two or three Parts were published, he is conscious that he has in no wise shrunk from the fulfilment of any part of the obligations under which he conceived and felt himself to lie towards those who so liberally and disinterestedly came forward to support the present work, but has steadfastly brought it to a termination, under circumstances of considerable difficulty and discouragement.

It belongs to his subscribers and to the public to judge in what manner he has succeeded in redeeming his pledge, in faithfully laying before them these remarkable relics; and whatever disappointment he may unintentionally have occasioned, in the discharge of his difficult task as an impartial Editor, it will, he trusts, be imputed to no lack of zeal or industry on his part. In the course of any voluminous work of a historical or antiquarian cast, and especially one of the nature of the present, which embraces so wide and varied a range, it must naturally be expected that an Editor, notwithstanding the exercise of the utmost care and vigilance, must, in many instances, fall short in affording satisfactory elucidations of obscure historical events, local or provincial occurrences, and other incidents of a minute description, of long forgotten superstitions, and similar vestiges of former ages. The reader's indulgence is requested in all such instances. Even those whose previous studies and habits have not rendered the difficulty of conducting investigations of this description quite familiar, will, on reflection, perceive, that much patient industry must be exercised in ascertaining and settling even one solitary fact, or a single obscure or controverted point.

The grave nature of a work conducted on the plan of the present, it may be farther noticed, entirely precluded the possibility of reducing any portion of it into a "popular" form, so as in any manner to compete, in point of interest, with works of fiction, or the lighter and more fascinating literature of the day. Such a work may indeed still be considered as a desideratum; but, in the Editor's humble opinion, it would require to be executed by a master-mind, such as his who suggested this publication. The merit of a Collection on the present plan appears to be, that the reader should be presented with all the facts, circumstances, and details, in the graphic and masculine language of the times when they actually occurred. All the requisite materials are thus afforded for arriving at a sound opinion as to the real complexion and merits of the case—and it only remains farther for an Editor to put the reader in possession of such contemporaneous documents and State Papers, &c., from authentic sources, as may tend to throw additional light on the original, though frequently obscure and quaint, Record. Prefatory notices to the various remarkable Trials, and copious explanatory foot-notes, were likewise found to be necessary to aid the modern reader towards the better understanding of these Records : which, being expressed in the vernacular and now almost forgotten Scottish of centuries long gone by, evidently appeared to stand in need of occasional glosses.

It is, perhaps, hardly to be expected that the circulation of a work so quaint and antiquated as the present should be general or widely extended. The language alone is apt to deter many from patiently gleaning views of the state of society and manners of these periods, which are very imperfectly known or understood ; indeed to many they are only familiar through the medium of works of fiction and romance. But to the lawyer, the historian, the antiquary, and the genealogist, especially, this compilation will be found to be of considerable practical utility, as it abounds with ample materials for the prosecution of their favourite studies ; while, at the same time, the more general reader will at every turn meet with varied portraiture of national manners, customs, and the superstitions of bygone ages, which might in vain be searched for elsewhere.

The reader will find in the Appendices to the several reigns, and also scattered over the whole Collection, valuable Selections from the various PUBLIC RECORDS, and especially from those of the Privy Council, Great Seal, Privy Seal, Lord High Treasurer's Accounts, &c., in which are contained very important historical materials. The Editor has also deemed it proper to present a considerable body of State Papers, Original Letters, and similar illustrative documents, procured from various sources, which, as will be observed, have uniformly been specified.

It would be as presumptuous, as it seems uncalled for, to attempt an historical account of the origin and progress of the Criminal Tribunals of Scotland. These have already been so fully and satisfactorily treated of by Baron Hume and by the other Institutional writers, that any attempt to offer new or additional remarks were equally vain and fruitless.

On the suggestion of several friends, the binder has been directed to preserve the annexed NOTICES, which were originally prefixed to the various Parts of this work, for the purpose of exhibiting the order and manner of publication, as well as to account for the anomaly of postponing the printing of those Criminal proceedings which occurred during the earlier reigns of King James IV. and V., and Mary Queen of Scots, till the conclusion of the series.

To render consultation of the work as easy as possible by readers of every class, a very copious GENERAL INDEX has been constructed with great care and labour, and at a considerable additional expense.

A COLLECTION OF ANCIENT CRIMINAL TRIALS,

SELECTED FROM THE BOOKS OF ADJOURNAL OF THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY OF SCOTLAND, AND OTHER ORIGINAL RECORDS;

BY

ROBERT PITCAIRN,

WRITER TO HIS MAJESTY'S SIGNET, F.S.A. SCOT., AND HON. F.S.A. PERTH, &c.

THE importance of the RECORDS of the HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY IN SCOTLAND has hitherto been very little known, excepting to the comparatively few, who have made the investigation of the Legal Antiquities of Scotland a peculiar study. The difficulty experienced in deciphering these Ancient Registers, (which are scattered over a voluminous collection of Court Books, &c., and are nearly unintelligible to a great proportion even of those educated to the profession of the Law,) and the great labour and time to be expended in examining and selecting such portions as may be useful in practice to the Lawyer, or interesting to the lovers of History, Genealogy, and Antiquities, &c. as well as for the more popular purpose of general information and entertainment; have hitherto prevented any attempt at a regularly Chronological Series of our Ancient Criminal Trials and procedure.

The only portion of these valuable Records known to the public, has been imperfectly exhibited, in Collections of ABRIDGED CASES, by Mr Arnot, and Mr Maclaurin; and from occasional notices contained in our Institutional Writers. Mr Arnot's Abridgement of a few remarkable Cases, was professedly prepared by him to illustrate some of the more prominent features in the history, manners, customs, and superstitions of the people of Scotland; and not to exhibit an accurate or satisfactory digest of those interesting and important remains, as they are to be found in the Records. However entertaining and instructive Arnot's Compilation may be, in other respects, it gives only a partial, and, in many instances, far from a faithful transcript, even of the Trials of which he has presented a brief outline; and it may be safely said, that all have received a high colouring from his peculiar notions, both in politics and religion. Mr Maclaurin's Arguments and Decisions, on the other hand, were collected, with a view 'to the advancement of jurisprudence, and (to) be useful also to many gentlemen not bred to the law, who are called upon, by the constitution, to serve as jurymen.' Owing to the nature of his plan, he has noticed only fifteen cases which had occurred before the commencement of the eighteenth century.

The present Editor has been induced to undertake a Collection upon a more regular plan, and on a more extended scale, than have hitherto been attempted; and in this he is encouraged by the liberal sanction and countenance of the Right Honourable the LORD JUSTICE CLERK and of the LORDS COMMISSIONERS OF THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY, who have granted free access to all Books and Papers of the Court which it may be necessary to consult. He has also been honoured by the countenance of the Right Honourable the Lord President of the Court of Session, Baron Hume, the Keeper and Commissioners of the Society of Writers to his Majesty's Signet; and likewise of Sir Walter Scott, Baronet, the President, and Thomas Thomson, Esquire, Deputy-Clerk Register of Scotland, Vice-President of THE BANNATYNE CLUB (who, indeed, originally suggested the idea and plan of this work); by the support of the Members of that Club, of the Members of THE MAITLAND CLUB, recently formed in Glasgow for similar purposes, as well as of many whose names rank high in the profession of the Law, and in the literature of the country.

The earliest portion of the ANCIENT CRIMINAL RECORDS OF SCOTLAND now extant, commences so far back as 7th Nov. 1493, in the sixth year of the reign of KING JAMES IV.; and although at that remote period, and during the subsequent reigns of KING JAMES V. and QUEEN MARY, the memorials to be obtained are unfortunately brief, yet notices do frequently occur, both highly characteristic of the state of society, and illustrative of the history, jurisprudence, literature, institutions, language, manners, customs, and superstitious of those periods.

In the meantime, it has been arranged, that the Part to be first published, shall consist of a portion of the many interesting and important proceedings and Trials which occurred during the reign of KING JAMES VI.; and, after that Volume is concluded, Selections from the earlier portion of the Record will next be printed. By adopting this order of publication, an opportunity will be afforded, for more minutely investigating and illustrating the most ancient volumes of the Record; and, if the Collection be favourably received, and other circumstances permit, it is in contemplation to extend it to the commencement of the last Reign. Copious INDICES, Tables of the Justiciars of Scotland, a Glossary of obscure Law terms, and an Appendix containing illustrations, selected from the Records of Privy Council, the Privy Seal, and the Treasurer's Books of Scotland, and from other original documents, will accompany or be interspersed with the Collection.

It is proposed, that this work shall be published in Parts, consisting of not less than the third part of a Volume each, as speedily as may be consistent with strict accuracy, and with the Editor's professional engagements. The impression, which is to be limited, will be executed by Messrs BALLANTYNE & Company, in their best manner, from a new fount of types, upon paper manufactured expressly for the use of this work, by Messrs Dickinson & Company of London.

THE FIRST PART will be ready for delivery to Subscribers, early in the month of May next. Such progress has been made by the Editor in arranging the materials collected by him during a period of several years, that the remaining Parts will be published at regular intervals, until the Collection is completed.

The price of each Part, which shall contain two hundred pages of letter-press, not to exceed Fifteen shillings to Subscribers.

SUBSCRIPTIONS will be received by the Publishers, WILLIAM TAIT, 78, Prince's Street, and JOHN STEVENSON, 87, Prince's Street, to either of whom, or any of the Booksellers in Edinburgh, London, and Dublin, and in the principal towns throughout the United Kingdom, the names of Subscribers are requested to be forwarded, as early as convenient, so as to regulate the extent of the impression.

IN PRESENTING to the Public THE FIRST PART of the ensuing Collection of Criminal Trials, the Editor begs leave to acknowledge, with gratitude, the distinguished encouragement with which he has been honoured, from the first outset of the work, and without which he could not have persevered in so laborious a task, with any degree of satisfaction or confidence.

The compilation of this work was projected for the purpose of giving publicity to the most important portions of the Ancient Records of the Supreme Criminal Tribunal of Scotland, and of placing beyond the risk of destruction, the most interesting of the Causes Celebres of that Court ; materials of great value alike to the historian and the lawyer, and possessing no ordinary attractions for almost every class of readers. It therefore becomes necessary that all such Selections be exhibited with scrupulous accuracy and fidelity, which alone can stamp authenticity and value on any publication of this description.

To account for the apparent meagreness of the Part now published, it may be stated, that many of the public Records of Scotland during the minority of King James VI. are imperfect, and have perhaps been wilfully destroyed ; for, besides the disturbed state of the country, and other obvious causes, which might satisfactorily account for the loss of volumes of Registers, there is but too good reason to conjecture, that portions of the National Records were, in some instances, purposely suppressed by one or other of the prevailing factions. This circumstance has induced the Editor to be more copious in his extracts than he would otherwise have been ; as every gleanings may elucidate some historical point, or illustrate some features of national character, customs and manners, hitherto but imperfectly known.

At this period, the original ‘Books of Adjournal,’ properly so called, must have been carelessly kept; and the Clerk has recorded the proceedings of the Court in a very brief and unsatisfactory manner. In many instances, the ‘Minute Books’ alone have been preserved, from which the proper Record of the Court was usually framed, aided by the ‘Dittays,’ evidence of witnesses, and other productions. To the Editor it therefore seemed imperative to preserve all notices of any importance, even though they should be brief. The subsequent portions of the Record are much more perfect, and they greatly increase in interest as it advances.

With regard to the antiquity of the language, which must at first sight prove somewhat embarrassing, it may be remarked, that after the accession of King James VI. to the English Crown, it gradually assimilates itself to the dialect then used in England. In no case has the ancient orthography been altered, with the exception of the contractions, the retaining of which would have been useless, as well as extremely perplexing to a general reader.

The earliest existing Record of Justiciary, during the minority of King James VI., is preceded by this curious memorandum: ‘Nota. Fra the hinderend of August, 1568, to the secund day of Marche, in the famin yeir, na Dyettis of Justiciarie haldin, be reffoun of the peft and Regentis being in Inglande.’

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,

1st May, 1829.

THE EDITOR has been enabled to offer to the Public, the SECOND PART of the Criminal Trials, which occurred before the High Court of Justiciary, during the Reign of King James VI., sooner than he had anticipated ; and it is hoped, that this Livraison will prove greatly superior, in interest, to the Part already published, which embraces merely the earlier and more defective portion of the Records, in that King's minority.

After this time, the proceedings of the Supreme Criminal Tribunal of Scotland merely begin to assume a more regular form, and the Record to exhibit a pretty accurate abstract of the objections to the relevancy of the Indictments, and to mark many of the other peculiarities observable in the forms and pleadings before this Court.

It is proper to notice here, that it has been the settled plan of the present Collection, to give a scrupulously faithful view of the whole of the proceedings which took place in each of the Cases selected, in the precise form in which these occur in the Books of Adjournal ; excepting in various minute particulars, indispensably necessary to be adopted, for the sake of unity and of more lucid arrangement. No modern 'Reports,' it is conceived, however accurately they might be framed, could convey, whether to the Lawyer or the general enquirer, so clearly and so forcibly, the many peculiarities which are connected with these ancient proceedings ; and at the same time indicate the gradual steps, by which our present system and forms have been modelled. When these are very prolix or uninteresting, they shall no doubt be curtailed ; but this shall be done with a sparing hand, and in such a manner, as clearly to point out each of such departures from the Record.

Owing to an embarrassing hiatus in 'the Books of Adjournal,' arising through the loss of at least one large Volume of the Records of the Court of Justiciary, (from October 1591 to May 1596,) the Editor deemed it incumbent on him, to make pretty extensive researches into other Public Records of Scotland, of the same period. But, perhaps, in his anxiety to render this Collection as perfect as his opportunities and ability permit, he may have incurred the censure of some, whose pursuits do not usually lead them into such investigations. He trusts, however, that the space occupied by these illustrations of National History will not be grudged, and that the extracts he has made may be generally acceptable.

At the suggestion of some of his friends, the Editor has prepared, in illustration of this and the former Part, a Fac-simile plate, containing a few exact specimens of the MSS. from which the present Selections have been formed. Should these be generally considered as interesting, occasional Fac-similes of Royal Letters, &c. will be delivered, with each succeeding Fasciculus of this work.

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,

1st July, 1829.

SINCE the publication of the former Part of this work, the Editor has arranged and greatly enlarged a Collection of Original Papers, formed by him during the last two years, illustrative of the mysterious and hitherto inexplicable History of the CONSPIRACY of JOHN EARL OF GOWRIE and his brother, against King James VI. ; which will be found to embrace a body of valuable and authentic information, on every point connected with the transaction ; and a great portion of which is entirely new to the public, having been recovered from numerous Records, contemporary MSS. and similar original sources.

So much has been written, and conjectured, on that remarkable event, that, in presenting to the public, for the first time, correct transcripts of the various Criminal proceedings which were instituted after the Conspiracy, it appeared to be the duty of the Editor, to accompany them with a Collection of such authentic Documents as are still preserved ; and for that purpose, to use every exertion, in investigating the public Records, and all the repositories of MSS. to which he had access. The result has been highly satisfactory ; and it is hoped, that, from the discoveries now made, unquestionable materials are provided for elucidating this hitherto dark passage of Scottish History.

The Editor is of opinion, that the publication of these Papers, in their original form, is more in unison with the spirit of the present work, than had he drawn up a fresh Narrative or Dissertation, accompanied by proofs and illustrations. He has accordingly adopted this plan, so as to leave the reader to draw the obvious conclusion from the evidence now afforded. In every instance, the sources from which each of the Papers has been procured are carefully noted ; as it is essential, in matters of historical importance, to observe the minutest accuracy.

A concise and popular Account of Gowrie's Conspiracy has recently been published, in Constable's Miscellany, Vol. XLIII., by the Reverend MR PARKER

LAWSON, M.A. ; to which reference may be made for a clear outline and detail of the leading facts. The reader will also find much valuable information in MR MORISON'S ingenious and able paper, in the Transactions of the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth ; where he has incontestably proved the reality of the Conspiracy against King James VI., even from the facts then published ; having brought to the examination of the subject an impartial and unbiassed mind, with a perfect knowledge of the localities of the scene. The Editor would particularly refer the enquirer to Mr Morison's ' Summary of the Evidence on the Gowrie Conspiracy, with Plans of Gowrie House,' as a valuable companion in examining the history of this remarkable event.

The other portions of this Number will, it is hoped, be found superior in interest to the preceding Parts.

It was intended that this Part should have been accompanied by a fac-simile Plate of the SIGNATURES of the principal persons mentioned in the History of this Conspiracy, taken from Original Autographs ; but circumstances prevent this, until the publication of the next livraison. Another Plate, also, containing a fac-simile of the LETTERS of ROBERT LOGAN of Restalrig, recently discovered among the Warrants of Parliament, is in the course of being prepared. Both will be delivered with the ensuing Part, as early in January next as possible.

The Editor has again the pleasure of acknowledging the kindness of CHARLES KIRKPATRICK SHARPE, Esquire, who has liberally presented a curious Engraving, executed by himself, very closely resembling the original Wood-cuts in the curious Tract, reprinted at Part II., page 213, ' NEWES FROM SCOTLAND, declaring the damnable life of Doctor Fian, a notable Sorcerer,' &c. The binder is desired to insert this Plate in Volume I. to face page 213.

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,

12th October, 1829.

THE Collections relative to THE CONSPIRACY of JOHN EARL OF GOWRIE, and his brother, are concluded in the present PART. If the Editor has indulged in too copious Illustrations of this very remarkable historical event, he has been led into the error by the discovery of many important original documents, which, as he humbly conceives they tend to establish, beyond a doubt, the truth of this much controverted point of History, he deemed it his duty to present to the public, in this work.

Instead of attempting to sum up the evidence now laid before the Public, taken in connexion with the numerous Histories, Accounts, and Theories, already in print, the Editor leaves it to the reader to draw his own conclusions. He will consider his labours amply repaid, should the future Historian be thereby led to a clearer view of the origin, and progress, of the rash and ill-advised plot of these misguided but highly talented young Noblemen, and of the fatal catastrophe which so speedily overwhelmed them, in the premature execution of their mad attempt.

The natural restlessness, and irritability, of KING JAMES, and the very peculiar circumstances in which, on his return to the capital, after the tragical issue of the Conspiracy, he found himself placed, seem to have induced him to endeavour, to the utmost of his power, to counteract the almost unparalleled attempt made by the Ministers of Edinburgh; who greedily availed themselves of this opportunity, to inflame the public mind, and to turn the tide of popular feeling in favour of GOWRIE, who was universally idolized by the Presbyterian party, as their future leader, against the strenuous efforts then making, by James and the Court, for the permanent restoration of Episcopacy.

The steps taken by the King, for this purpose, were most injudicious; and they certainly proved the very means of spreading the disbelief of the Royal Narrative more widely. To this cause alone, indeed, may be attributed the scepticism which then prevailed, and which has so generally, even down to these times, occupied the public mind. His Majesty's advisers, by indiscreetly attempting to prove too much, and to leave no circumstance unexplained, afforded plausible grounds, for the deepest suspicions of the correctness of the whole statement. James, when too late, found this to be the case, and experienced, to his cost, the sagacity of Domitian's bitter reflection, as recorded by Suetonius, "conditionem Principum miserrimam aiebat, quibus de Conjuracione comperta non crederetur, NISI OCCISIS!"

The noted distich, which Calderwood, in his MS. Church History, states to have existed in his times, and which, he says, was painted above an ancient Chimney-piece in the Castle of Ruthven, (now called Hunting Tower), may perhaps be considered as worthy of memory.

VERA DIU LATITANT, SED, LONGO TEMPORIS USU,

A Fac-simile PLATE of the commencement, termination, and subscriptions, of three of the LETTERS of ROBERT LOGAN of RESTALRIG, which occur at Vol. II., page 322, accompanies this Part.

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,
25th January, 1830.

THE present PART of this Work will, it is hoped, prove more generally attractive, being of more diversified interest, than any of the preceding portions ; and the Editor believes he does not promise too much, when he adds, that the subsequent Parts must equally surpass the present, as well in point of curiosity as in historical importance.

After the accession of King James VI to the English throne, the Judicial proceedings in Scotland were necessarily conducted with greater minuteness, and were recorded with stricter accuracy, than formerly ; for the various public functionaries, in every department, were liable to be frequently called upon for full reports of individual Cases ; either to gratify his Majesty's craving for whatever was new and curious, or to enable him to judge of the expediency of pardoning or condemning the unhappy persons whose fate must needs be sealed by the unenviable exercise of his royal prerogative. To this circumstance, then, it may perhaps be attributed, that the Records of the Supreme Criminal Tribunal of Scotland, begin to be kept with greater clearness, and their authority and value to be proportionally enhanced.

In Cases of peculiar importance, the Editor has always been anxious to afford all the elucidation within the limited range of his reading and observation, by laying before the reader such illustrations as appeared to him necessary to the better understanding of those Trials ; and especially, to put the reader in possession of ORIGINAL and contemporaneous PAPERS, which generally afford the clearest and best explanation of the many remarkable events which so frequently occur in the course of this Work. He trusts that many of the Documents now for the first time presented to the public, from sources not generally accessible, may be deemed worthy the attention of the lover of History.

It is much to be regretted, that the tragical story of the Murder of SIR THOMAS KENNEDY of Culzean, knight, Tutor of Cassillis, &c. by the MURES OF AUCHINDRANE, which is now rendered imperishable by the pen of the greatest living writer, could not be inserted in the present Part, owing to the chronological arrangement of the book. The Editor did not, in the meantime, consider himself at liberty to publish that most extraordinary Trial as a separate volume; but, having his materials for PART VI in considerable forwardness, he is ready to publish that Fasciculus at a much earlier date than previously notified, should such be the desire of the public.

The present Series of Trials, during the reign of King James VI, will be completed in four additional Parts, making in all nine Parts, or three large Volumes. Owing to the difficulty of collecting the requisite materials, the publication of the leading trials which occurred in the reigns of King James IV, King James V, and Queen Mary, shall be deferred till after Part VIII is circulated. Should the Editor's health, and his professional engagements, then permit, a new Series of Trials, modelled into the shape of Reports, and in a more modern form than the present, will be commenced. The lengthened pleadings, &c. during, and subsequent to, the reign of Charles I, entirely preclude the idea of continuing the work in the original form; which, however useful and interesting such a mode of editing a book of this class may prove, during the earlier period of the history and practice of our Criminal Tribunals, would be cumbrous and useless at a more recent date, when there could be no excuse for continuing the obsolete, and now almost forgotten style of these pleadings, which could yield no pleasure, and but little additional information, to the general reader.

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,

12th April, 1830.

THE EDITOR has the satisfaction of presenting the present PART rather earlier than he had anticipated.

Since the last Fasciculus was circulated, he has been favoured with communications from several individuals, who have taken an interest in the progress of this Work, suggesting various improvements; but he is chiefly indebted to the Public Press, for numerous practical hints, of which, in preparing this portion of the Collection, he has amply availed himself.

Amongst other alterations of the original plan, the prefixing of Introductory Notices to leading and remarkable Cases, on a more extended plan than the Editor had at first deemed advisable, has now been adopted. The difficulty of collecting authentic materials for explaining and illustrating such obscure and long-forgotten events, has necessarily occasioned great additional research and expense; and had he not previously made pretty extensive inquiries relative to some of these Trials, and especially, the extremely interesting one of MURE OF AUCHINDRAYNE, this Part must have been delayed for some months longer.

In what manner these intended improvements have been executed, it does not become the Editor to judge. He sincerely wishes that this very arduous task had fallen into abler hands; but still has the pleasure of reflecting, that he has spared neither time nor labour in his endeavours to make the Work as complete as its proposed limits admit. Those who have had the greatest experience in carrying on researches of this description, will be the readiest to make all liberal and proper allowances, for such unavoidable defects as must be expected to accompany inquiries, in their nature so very extended and obscure.

The very remarkable Case of THE MURES OF AUCHINDRAYNE is one of such interest, that it may perhaps be fairly considered as altogether unparalleled in the annals of crime. That Trial, and the illustrative matter accompanying it, have necessarily occupied a large portion of this livraison ; but the Editor hopes it will prove as generally interesting, as the plots and crimes of these extraordinary men are unequalled.

In the course of his researches for elucidating the facts and events attending that Case, (which have been actively prosecuted during the last three years,) the Editor fortunately discovered, among the valuable MSS. belonging to the Faculty of Advocates, Edinburgh, an HISTORICAL and GENEALOGICAL ACCOUNT of the principal Families of THE NAME OF KENNEDY. This History illustrates, not only the lives and characters of the actors in that shocking tragedy, but the deadly FEUDS then prevalent in CARRICK, to an extent which could scarcely have been anticipated. Had the information to be obtained from these singular Memoirs been made use of in this Collection, it would have encroached too much upon the limits now assigned to it, and caused the suppression of other interesting Trials. The Editor therefore has, by the liberal permission of the Curators of the Advocates' Library, preferred publishing THE HISTORY OF THE KENNEDIES as a separate work ;—and, with this view, has, for a considerable time past, been engaged in preparing it. A limited impression only has been struck off ; and it is expected to be completed before the first of August next.

It is trusted, that, upon the whole, this PART will be found much more generally attractive than any of the preceding ; as it abounds in historical incidents, and in Trials of deep and universal interest.

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,
19th July, 1830.

IN the period embraced by the present PART, the principal Trials, of peculiar interest, which occurred before the High Court of Justiciary, were those against the ROMAN CATHOLICS and JESUITS, for hearing and celebration of the Mass, for maintaining the Supremacy of THE POPE, for declining THE KING's authority, and for devising treasonable Plots against the person of his Majesty, &c.

The REBELLION OF THE EARL OF ORKNEY, and his son, also occupied a prominent portion of the Criminal proceedings during this time; and the Editor has amassed a considerable collection of historical materials, illustrative of that remarkable treason; all of which are now, for the first time, laid before the public, being taken from original and authentic documents.

Another REBELLION IN THE WESTERN ISLANDS of Scotland was likewise suppressed within this time, relative to which the reader will also find that suitable illustrations have been given.

Besides these leading Trials, a number of very remarkable Cases occur in this PART for Murder, Fire-raising, Perjury, Slaughter and Houghing of Oxen and Sheep, &c., Piracy, Incest, Oppression, Witchcraft, Poisoning, Subornation of Witnesses, Uttering 'treasonable, blasphemous, and damnable speeches' against the King, Fire-raising in Coal-pits, Hamesucken, Mutilation and Demembration, Egyptians or Gipsies abiding within the realm, &c.

It is trusted that the present Number may be considered as important and interesting as any of those forming the preceding Volumes.

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,
25th October, 1830.

THE present PART closes this COLLECTION of the leading TRIALS which occurred before THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY, during the eventful reign of KING JAMES VI.

PART VIII. contains numerous Cases of considerable interest and novelty, and throws much light on various public transactions, and also on many of the private occurrences of the period immediately preceding the demise of that monarch. There are, however, so many remarkable Trials contained in it, that it would encroach too much on the limits of a brief notice, to recapitulate a few of the leading Cases.

Having collected a great mass of materials, in the course of preparing the present work for publication, the Editor has selected from them a number of ORIGINAL PAPERS, believing that they would be esteemed a suitable accompaniment to this concluding Volume. He has, therefore, printed them in an APPENDIX, which will be found materially to illustrate many of the preceding Trials. Among others, he has been so fortunate as to have discovered the only documents which remained to clear up the extraordinary Trial of MR THOMAS ROSS, a poor Clergyman of a very respectable family, but a maniac, who was mercilessly put to death, under form of Law, by the special warrant of King James VI, for writing a Pasquil against the Scottish Nation. This pasquinade, it may here be remarked, was neither printed nor in anywise circulated by the author, but was simply affixed to the door of St Mary's Church, Oxford; from which it was almost instantly taken down by a student, and delivered to the Vice Chancellor, who transmitted it, without delay, to Court.

The remainder of the APPENDIX will be delivered with the INTRODUCTORY PART, which embraces the Criminal procedure during the reigns of KING JAMES IV, KING JAMES V, and QUEEN MARY.

The Editor does not, at present, expect to finish that arduous undertaking until the month of November or December, 1831. It is his intention to prepare accurate Indexes, which will be delivered, along with Title-pages, &c. for the whole work. When concluded, the Collection will form THREE large VOLUMES.

In reply to several enquiries, the Editor begs to notify, that he purposes to close this COLLECTION OF TRIALS with PART IX.

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,
15th December, 1830.

SINCE the publication of the EIGHTH PART of this Collection, about the close of last year, the Editor has again carefully examined the entire Books and Papers of the High Court of Justiciary, from the earliest existing Criminal Records, in the reign of KING JAMES IV, down to the conclusion of the reign of MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Although the first view of these documents presented a most discouraging aspect, the Editor deemed it to be an imperative duty, not only to scrutinize every vestige of information to be obtained from them, but to undertake a very extensive and laborious examination of all the contemporary Records and other ancient MSS. which might be expected to illustrate so interesting a portion of the public and domestic History of this country.

The meagreness and imperfection of the historical materials of this eventful period of eighty years, so far as they have hitherto been laid before the public, are universally acknowledged. Every attempt therefore, however feeble, which tends to throw additional light on the Annals of Scotland, during these three remarkable reigns, must be considered of more or less importance, according to the authenticity and genuineness of the sources from whence the information has been procured, and the fidelity with which it is communicated.

In the prosecution of this humble, though extremely laborious and responsible task, the reader will find that the Editor has strictly adhered to the plan which he originally proposed, by communicating the result of these researches in the precise form in which the various entries are made in the Public Records.

Owing to the importance of the additional historical materials which have been discovered by the Editor, in the prosecution of these minute researches, he found it to be impracticable, consistently with his duty to the public, to condense the whole of these three reigns within the narrow compass of one PART, without at the same time entirely suppressing a great mass of valuable matter. Had he rashly adopted such a resolution, the present Collection would have been extremely imperfect and unsatisfactory, at those very periods, where, chiefly, a store of authentic and indisputable facts, drawn from the Public Records of the country, still remained to be greatly desiderated.

The concluding portion of the TRIALS which occurred during the reign of KING JAMES V, and those of the eventful reign of MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS, together with historical APPENDICES, a copious INDEX, &c., will be contained in a SUPPLEMENTARY PART. As the work is in a state of forwardness at press, it is expected that the SUPPLEMENT will be ready for publication in the month of February next, which will close the present arduous undertaking.

GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE,
1st November, 1831.

THE concluding portion of the present COLLECTION has occupied the anxious attention of the Editor, for a period of above twelve months beyond the time he had been led to anticipate, when the NINTH PART was published.

Fortunately, the Editor had, during the progress of this WORK, amassed a great variety of materials from authentic sources, illustrative of many important events connected with the history of the reigns of KING JAMES V. and MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS; which eventually have proved of much use, in elucidating the Criminal proceedings of these reigns. Besides availing himself of these, however, he found it necessary to consult many of the public Records, the MSS. in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates, and other Collections of original documents, which required a considerable expenditure of time, besides much minute, laborious, and persevering research.

The result of these investigations is now laid before the Public; and it is perhaps not too much for the Editor to hope, that, in the view of rendering this work as complete as possible, the Subscribers may concur with him in thinking, that the additional time, thus expended, has not been altogether unprofitably employed.

In fulfilment of the proposal made at the commencement of this arduous undertaking, a very copious and elaborate GENERAL INDEX is now given along with this Part, which will be found to comprehend all that is practically useful to those who are likely to consult this Collection, whether for general reading and information, or for purposes of legal, historical, antiquarian, or genealogical investigation.

Owing to the interest excited by the large Collections made by the Editor, and the body of evidence which has been published in some of the former Parts of this work, in reference to GOWRY'S CONSPIRACY, he has deemed it his duty to render the whole still clearer and more generally acceptable, by endeavouring to procure accurate Plans of the scene of that remarkable transaction. This he has fortunately been able successfully to accomplish, and that, too, from the most authentic source of information; as his friend MR DAVID MORISON, Secretary to the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth, had occasion, a few years ago, to get drawings and ground-plans made, from surveys and sketches taken on the spot, previous to the pulling down of Gowry House, in the year 1807, to make way for the Prison and County Buildings, in Perth. These Plans accompany Mr Morison's ingenious Dissertation, which has been published in that Society's Transactions. The ultimate views of THE RUTHVENS and their associates, in embarking in so hazardous a plot, will likely for ever remain as inexplicable a mystery as hitherto ; but whatever may be considered by the future historian to have been the probable schemes of these rash youths, it is perhaps not arrogating too much to affirm, that the field of enquiry may now be considered as greatly narrowed ; and that the circumstances, as well as the truth and reality of that Conspiracy, may henceforth be considered as matters of historical certainty.

To the politeness of FRANCIS GRANT, Esquire, S.A., the Editor is indebted for the use of the accompanying valuable engraving of GOWRY HOUSE, which was carefully prepared, under his own inspection, from the only authentic sketch of that memorable place which is known to exist.

With regard to the contents of this SUPPLEMENTARY PART, there will be found, in addition to many curious and valuable Trials of a miscellaneous description, a considerable accession of original historical materials, illustrative of the progress of THE REFORMATION OF RELIGION IN SCOTLAND ; a very important APPENDIX to the reign of KING JAMES V., compiled with the strictest care from the valuable Records of the Privy Seal, and the Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland ; proceedings against the PAPISTS, JESUITS, &c. ; and numerous original and interesting Documents relative to the Murders of DAVID RICCIO and KING HENRY DARNLEY, &c., many of which are now for the first time laid before the public.

Owing to the manner originally adopted in publishing this work, it has been found necessary to divide the FIRST VOLUME into TWO PARTS. Particular directions for the Binder are printed on the back of the prefixed Title, to prevent the possibility of mistakes being committed in the arrangement of the Book into separate Volumes.

CRIMINAL TRIALS

AND OTHER PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

THE earliest Volumes of the Criminal Records of Scotland, now extant, are the two ancient MSS. still preserved in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates, Edinburgh. It is probable they had been acquired by the Curators of that excellent institution, by purchase, at the sale of some Collector of the last century, into whose possession they must have found their way by very improper means, at a period when such documents were considered of no importance.

Although these Volumes chiefly consist of the proceedings of the Justice-aires of Lauder, Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Edinburgh, Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Air, and Wigton, yet as they abound in numerous particulars, highly illustrative of the history, manners, and habits of those portions of Scotland during the reign of KING JAMES IV, the Editor has considered it necessary to give at large every remarkable Case which occurs in them.

It may be noticed here, once for all, that the Books of Adjournal and Minute Books of the Supreme Criminal Tribunal of Scotland, as well as the Records of the Justice-aires, &c. at these remote periods, were kept in an obscure forensic Latin. This circumstance, added to the well-known difficulty of deciphering the ordinary MSS. of these centuries, and the fact of the Books now preserved being generally mere scrolls and memoranda, written with many contractions, and evidently during the hurry of the Court proceedings, have hitherto rendered the task of examining them, and presenting the public with the more important cases, a labour of a peculiarly irksome and repulsive kind. Fortunately, however, entries have in many instances been made in the forcible vernacular of the period, and original Warrants and Letters have also been recorded, or have been found, after diligent search, among the loose papers belonging to the Court. Many of these are alike curious as specimens of our language, and valuable as historical documents.

After deliberate consideration, it has been deemed proper, and most likely to be acceptable to the great bulk of readers, to give a close technical translation¹ of such portions of the Records as are conceived in Latin, excepting where very remarkable phrases or terms are made use of; but in all such cases the original expressions are given in foot-notes. In every instance, where the vernacular is employed, or where quotations are necessarily given, the same scrupulous fidelity has been observed as in the subsequent parts of this work.

High Treason — Intercommuning with the English, &c. — Fighting against the King at ‘the Field of Stirling.’

[In consequence of the loss of the early Volumes of the Books of Adjournal, it becomes necessary, in order to render the present Collection as complete as possible, to investigate from other authentic sources the proceedings which took place immediately after the accession of KING JAMES IV. Fortunately the Records of Parliament, of the Great and Privy Seals, and the Books of the High Treasurer of Scotland, afford some notices of the steps which were taken against the partisans of the deceased KING JAMES III. These shall be given here at length; but as the leading circumstances connected with them must of course be minutely discussed in Mr TYTLER’s correct and impartial History of Scotland, it is only further necessary to lay before the reader such documents as do not fall within the plan of that learned gentleman’s truly valuable work.

JAMES STEWART first EARL OF BUCHAN, whose sobriquet was Hearty JAMES, was the brother uterine of KING JAMES II. He married Margaret, the heiress of Sir Alexander Ogilvy of Auchterhouse, by whom he got that barony and the heritable sheriffship of the county of Forfar. On the fall of Lord Boyd, in 1471, he was made Lord High Chamberlain of Scotland; and, in 1473, went as ambassador to France. He was made Warden of the East Marches on his return. Having participated in ‘the Field of Stirling,’ he became obnoxious to the vengeance of the successful party; but he had the good policy to submit and sue for his Majesty’s clemency, which he obtained, and was received into his favour. Although he was subsequently charged with having entered into a conspiracy with John Ramsay, Lord Bothwell, and Sir Thomas Tod, in 1491, to deliver his Prince into the hands of KING HENRY VIII, the circumstance is rather unlikely, for he was no party to the Inden-

[JOHN ROOS or ROSS of Mountgreenan was Advocate to JAMES III. Warrant was granted, Jul. 2, 1488, for his apprehension, and he was at the same time summoned for the traiterous pursuit of the Prince (JAMES IV) to beyond the Bridge of Stirling, and for there making Burnings, 'hereschips,' and slaughters, on Jun. 10, being the day preceding the Battle of Sauchie. The Castle of Keir, to which the Prince had retired, was at the same time burnt by the King's adherents, with the Place of Airth, &c.²

There seems to be nothing additional worthy of mention, as to the Lord Advocate's case, excepting that he does not appear to have been restored to the King's confidence. His estates were conferred on Patrick Hume of Fastcastle; and James Henderson of Fordell succeeded to his important office of Lord Advocate.]

Regulations for the due Administration of Justice.

[ONE of the earliest public Acts of the first Parliament of King James IV² throws much valuable light on the energy and vigour recommended and enforced by the advisers of the young King, whose personal activity and zeal in the discharge of all the functions of the royal office are well known and acknowledged. It is preceded by the following brief resolution,³ which, as is generally allowed, he fulfilled even to the letter. 'It is avist and concludit, anent the furthe putting of justice throw all the Realme, that our fouerane lord SHALL RIDE IN PROPER PERSONE about to all his AIERIS: And þat his JUSTICE fall pas with his hienes, to minister justice, as beis thocht expedient to him and his Counsaile for the tyme.'

As the future proceedings frequently refer to the discharge of the important duties intrusted to the Lords and Barons named, it has been considered necessary to lay before the reader the particulars, which as usual are concisely stated.]

Forfeiture of the Earl of Lennox, his son the Master of Lennox, and Lord Lyle, recalled.

[SHORTLY after the coronation of James IV, the leaders of the party who had unsuccessfully opposed him while Prince, at the Field of Stirling, precipitately organized a Conspiracy against him, under the pretence of revenging the late King's death. For this purpose they hoisted the bloody shirt of James III as their standard, and appealed to the sympathies of the people. The attempt appears to have been premature, and proved abortive; for John Earl of Lennox, and Robert Lord Lyle, the Earl Marischall, Lords Forbes and Crichtoun, with the Master of Huntley, &c. were totally overthrown, in the month of October 1489, near Touch, at the Talla Moss, being about sixteen miles from the town of Stirling. THE KING, however, with singular leniency, speedily restored them to his favour, and spared their estates.

Reference may be made to Mr Tytler's valuable Historical work¹ for a full account of all these transactions, which are likewise related by Buchanan, Lesley, &c. which last authority states,² that 'ane greit number of the Lennox men wer flane, and findry of the Barronis, sic as the Lords (Lairds) of Kileroucht and utheris, tane and hangit thairfoir.'³ Sir James Balfour informs us, that this 'Laird of Kilerenche' was 'Chieffe of the Galbraithes.'⁴

It has been thought that the reader would prefer to have before him the King's warrant for recalling the Forfeitures which had taken place. The Act of Parliament itself may be seen in the new and valuable Edition of the Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, printed under the care of Thomas Thomson, Esquire, the present Deputy Clerk Register.]

³ This case took place on the same day with the preceding.

⁴ This fine was probably to the King. The parties would not be so easily dealt with. It may be taken for granted that all entries of similar ‘amerciaments’ and fines, in the Record, were merely to the Crown, in modum pœnæ, without reference to the ‘affythment’ or compensation to be made to the private party, which was matter of private negotiation or of reference to arbiters mutually chosen.

Felony done to the Laird of Blyth.

JAMES SPOTTISWODE, junior, and Robert Steill came in the King's will for the forethought felony done to James Weddale of Blyth. The Laird of Spottifwood became cautioner to satisfy the parties. Amerciated L.3 for each.

'Afflictio juvenis, pro Interfectione in octennio commissa.'

[The following case of a boy of eight years of age being punished by public flogging at the parish church of Legerwood, until blood should be drawn from him, is so remarkable, that the Editor has deemed it best to give the precise words of the Record, the force of which would be much weakened by any translation. In all similar instances, wherein the ordinary technical phraseology of the Books of Adjournal has been departed from, he has uniformly followed the same rule.]

² This name appears to be the same with that now known as Mounsey. It is a singular coincidence that Dr Mounsey, who sprung from the lowest origin in the vicinity of Lochmabane, lived to become proprietor of the estate of Rammerseales, &c. here described.

[THE following document will on all accounts be deemed interesting. It is thus entitled in the Record, 'Hæc est vera copia Respectuacionis Episcopi Glasguen., &c.' Notices of a very great many 'Speciale Respuyttis' of this description are to be found in the Register of the Privy Seal, but comparatively few are engrossed at length in the Register. The purpose of obtaining such Licenses was, not only that they should serve the individuals concerned as passports in foreign countries, but that they and their vassals might be fully protected in their persons and properties, until a reasonable time after their return to Scotland, (usually forty days.) This device effectually prevented them from being pursued criminally and put to the horn during their absence, and also operated as a bar to judgments passing against them by default in civil cases.

Notices of some similar Protections are preserved in the APPENDIX to the Trials during this and subsequent reigns.]

Treason — Wounding (Slaughter?) of the Laird of Craiganis.

[JOHN MASTER OF MONTGOMERY (or of EGLINTOUN, as he is styled in the Peerages) was the second, and then surviving son, of Hugh third Lord Montgomery, a distinguished nobleman, who had been a strenuous supporter of the Prince at the Field of Stirling, and for his services was afterwards created Earl of Eglintoun. The crime for which the Master was here summoned, was for the Wounding of William Cuninghame of Craigends. The Master of Eglintoun was killed on the streets of Edinburgh, April 28, 1520, in the memorable Feud between James first Earl of Arran and Archibald sixth Earl of Angus, best known by the sobriquet of Cleanse the Causeway.

The authority for the nature of the crime for which the Master was charged, is the following brief notice from Sir James Balfour's treatise, 'De jure Prælationis Nobilium Scotie.'⁴ 'ITEM, I find that Johne, Maister of Montgomerie, is summonit to underlay the lau and cenfur of Tressone, for the wounding of Villiam Cuninghame of Craiganis.']

[As the various Feuds, Treasons, &c. connected with the Isles fall to be treated of at large in Mr GREGORY’S History of the Hebrides, it is unnecessary to enter on the subject in this place. It may, however, be proper to remark, generally, that Macleod and Donald Ila’s fathers married two sisters. The former married Lady Katherine Campbell, in 1498, and the latter (Angus Macdonnel, natural son and heir of entail of John Earl of Ross and Lord of the Isles), Lady Mary Campbell, the seventh and fifth daughters of Colin first Earl of Argyle. In the Appendix to the Trials which occurred during the reign of King James IV, the reader will find many interesting notices in relation to this and other similar cases.]

[JOHN OIG¹ MACGILLEOUN or MACLEAN of Lochbuy was the son of Hector, and grandson of John Macgillecoun of Lochbuy, who lived in the reigns of King James II and III. John Oig married a daughter of Macdougall of Lorn, and was connected with the Macleods of Herries and Lewis, among which families there had been repeated intermarriages. The Indictment is not preserved; but it may pretty safely be inferred that his crime consisted in being art and part with Torquil Macleod and others, in attempting to set up the Bastard Donald de Yla as LORD OF THE ISLES.² This case was frequently continued; and owing to the deficiency of the Records, it does not appear whether or not it was insisted on. The probability, however, is, that he was restored to the King's favour. Among other notices which occur in the High Treasurer's books, there is expended, Jan. 21, 1506-7, as follows.—'Item, to MAKLANE OF LOCHBOY, xiiij lib.'³

Maclean, with his two eldest sons, are known to have been 'killed in a family Feud betwixt them and the Macleans of Dowart.'⁴ For the particulars of these Feuds, &c., the reader is referred to Mr GREGORY'S work before noticed.]

Common Theft and Pickery.

[FROM markings on the margin of the Record, it appears that the Sentence originally recorded against this infirm old Highlander had been 'SUSPEN.'; which marking was afterwards deleted, and 'SUBMERSUS' substituted; and finally, the latter was struck out, and 'BANNITUS' inserted, through the clemency, no doubt, of his Judge or the King. It may be interesting to remark here, that the punishment of death inflicted upon females, at this early period, and for more than two Centuries afterwards, was, universally, drowning; and in cases of very heinous crimes, burning at the stake. It was deemed highly indelicate and shocking to expose females to any other mode of execution than these, until the 'Maiden' was invented, when females of rank were sometimes beheaded. Owing to the helpless infirmity of this old man, it seems to have been considered an act of humanity to put him to death by drowning; but it is probable that the King, who was noted for kindness to the aged and infirm, had ordered his sentence to be commuted to Banishment.]

[As the following Case is the only one where the proceedings of an Assise, at so early a period, are fully detailed, the Editor has thought it proper to insert the original entry, in the precise terms in which it is made in the Record. This is likewise one of the few instances, which the Editor has met with, of twelve persons sitting on an Assise. Assises generally consisted of eleven, thirteen, fifteen, or more persons; but, excepting in a very few cases, they appear, from the earliest period, to have had an odd number. The purpose of this regulation obviously was, that, in the event of an equality of votes, for acquitting, or for finding the panel guilty, there might always be a decided majority; it being altogether inconsistent with the origin and nature of an Assise, that the Chancellor should be allowed the privilege of a casting Vote.

The case itself is rather remarkable, and more pains than usual have, evidently, been bestowed on the framing of the entry of the proceedings in the Record.]

Proclamation for regulating the Proceedings of the Justice-Aire of Jedburgh.

[THE following Document (which is given literally as it appears on the face of the Record) is highly interesting, being so minutely illustrative of the form of procedure before THE JUSTICIARS, at the AIRES held throughout the Kingdom. Although apparently framed for the Aire of JEDBURGHE, there seems no doubt that this PROCLAMATION was Circular, and addressed to every district of Scotland, and was probably adopted by all the Sheriffs and Baron-Bailies, in their Courts.

The occasional occurrence of such Papers as the present, which have evidently been preserved by mere accident, tends to impress the mind of the enquirer with the conviction that, however brief and disjointed the early Records of the Courts of Justiciary confessedly are, their proceedings must have been conducted with the strictest regard to form and solemnity.

It would appear that one of the practical uses of keeping any Record, beyond a mere list of the Cases which occurred at the Justice-Aires, was to enable the Clerks of Court to settle their Accounts for the fines and amerciements, &c. with the Lord High Treasurer, to whom they were answerable for all such sums. Beyond this there seems, originally, to have been no intention of keeping a regular record of the official proceedings of the Court, excepting the preservation of an accurate roll of those who were defaulters, or who had been put to the horn, or came in the King's will for offences committed by them. This circumstance sufficiently accounts for the brief manner in which all the entries are made in the early Books of Adjournal, at a time, too, when little importance was attached to the preservation of minute evidence, or of the details of procedure in each individual case.

As all the Dittays, confessions, and depositions were doubtlessly preserved, along with the Interlocutors of the Justiciars, the documents produced, and the Verdicts of the Assises, &c., the Clerks of Justiciary could readily furnish Extracts and Acts of Court, when required. In the absence of these materials, however, we have now very imperfect ideas of the precise details which took place in particular Trials. Hence the peculiar value of such documents as the following Proclamation, which has fortunately been preserved. It may be worthy of notice, that THE KING himself was present during the whole of this Aire, which indeed he bound himself to do in every instance by one of the earliest of the Acts of his Parliament, which was passed immediately after the period of his Coronation.]

'WE Command and charge, in our Soverane Lorde THE KINGIS name, and

Feud between the Maxwells and the Creichtons — Slaughter of the Laird of Kirkpatrick, while at the Worn, &c.

[THERE seems to be no doubt that the deadly Feud and Slaughter, which form the subject of the following solemn proceedings, arose out of the Battle between the MAXWELLS and CREICHTOUNS on the Sands of Dumfries, in the month of July, 1508. These families were indisputably the most powerful Barons of Nithsdale, and had long been at enmity with each other. The vigorous measures adopted by KING JAMES IV had for a considerable time restrained them from proceeding to personal hostilities, but at length they suddenly broke out into open violence, having apparently challenged each other to the field, to decide their quarrel by force of arms. Bishop Lesley gives a short but striking account of this affair, which it is thought proper to quote here.—‘Thair wes a gret gadding the xxx day of Julij, betuix the LORD MAXWELL and the LORD CREYCHTOUN OF SANCHAR, quhair the Lord Creychtoun⁵ was chaiffit with his company fra Drumfreis, and the Laird of Dolyell and the young (Laird) of Crauchlay flane, with divers utheris, quhairof thair appered greit deidly feid and bludithed; bot THE KING tuk sic ordour, partlie be justice and partely be aggrement, that the hole cause was suddanlye quyeted and stanchid.’⁶

Robert, third Lord Maxwell, fell at the fatal Field of Flodden. On the other hand, his antagonist, Robert, second Lord Crichton of Sanquhar, ancestor to the Earls of Dumfries, survived many years. His son, William, the third Lord Crichton of Sanquhar, was stabbed to death in the house of the Governor of Scotland, the Duke of Chatelherault, by the Lord Sempill; and his great grandson, Robert, the sixth Lord, was executed at Great Palace Yard, Westminster, Jun. 29, 1612, for being accessory to the far-famed Murder of John Turner, a Fencing-master, who had thrust out one of his eyes, while they were practising together, with his foil.⁷

SIR WILLIAM DOUGLAS of Drumlangrig, one of the parties more immediately concerned in the present case, was likewise a very powerful Baron, being an ancestor of the noble house of Queensberry. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar, and fell at Flodden, Sep. 9, 1513.

So great a sensation did this case make, that it was evidently the immediate cause of the subsequent ‘Act anent the Resflet of Rebellis,’ &c., to which the reader is particularly referred.]

Quarto, 1830, p. 78. ⁷ It is asserted that his lordship bore his misfortune patiently, until, happening to be at the court of Henry the Great of France, the King enquired ‘How he had lost his eye?’ ‘By the thrust of a sword,’ replied his lordship.—‘Does the man yet live?’ rejoined the King. From that hour he is reported to have determined on putting Turner to death—who not being his equal, he resorted to the horrible expedient of assassination, which was effected by a fellow of the name of Robert Carlyle, who, with the assistance of an accomplice, pistolled the unfortunate fencing-master.—See State Trials and Peerages, &c.

Slaughter of the Laird of Corsintoun.

[THE following Case is of a kind which, unhappily, was but too frequent in the district where the Slaughter took place, and, indeed, prevailed over a large portion of Scotland. The reader is referred to The Historie of the Kennedyis,⁴ for illustrations of a similar nature ; which curious fragment the Editor has recently published, being anxious to preserve from the risk of destruction by fire, &c. so remarkable a memorial of the History of a populous and powerful district of this country, at no very remote period.

Having enquired into the subject of the Slaughter of the Laird of Corsintoun, little more information can now be obtained than what is contained in the following interesting paper, which has been recovered from the valuable Register of the Privy Seal.⁵

GENERAL REMISSION to the Lairds of Lefnorijs and Skellingtoun, &c. for the Slaughter of the Laird of Corsintoun.

Slaughter.

THOMAS PORTAR, convicted of art and part of the cruel Slaughter of John Makmyane.—BEHEADED.

Oppression — Stouthreif — Convocation.

(Die Jovis, ir die Itineris.)—GILCRIST MAKKINZE, in Killas, permitted to compound for art and part of the forethought felony and ‘Hamefukkin,’ done to one M^ccarbere, dochter, spouse of Andrew M^cylbride, and striking her: Item, for the Stouthreif of vj cows and oxen furth of Kirkin^brek, from the Tenants of the Laird of Ardwell: Item, for the Oppression done to Duncan M^ceullane in holding goods and his wife from his society and company: Item, for forethought felony done to Andrew M^cullocht of Ardwell, and searching for him for his slaughter: Item, for Convocation of the lieges in great numbers, contrary to the Acts of Parliament, and for the forethought felony and Oppression done to Sir David Kemydy kn^t. drawing his sword and wishing to slay him: Item, of common Oppression of the lieges, by common ‘brigancie’ and otherwise.—The Laird of Killuffer¹ became surety to satisfy the parties.

APPENDIX,
ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE TRIALS WHICH OCCURRED DURING THE REIGN OF KING JAMES IV.

I. ILLUSTRATIONS SELECTED FROM THE REGISTER OF THE PRIVY SEAL OF SCOTLAND.

THE historical value of the Public Records of Scotland has long been universally admitted ; but comparatively few are qualified, and still fewer are inclined, to undergo the extreme drudgery of wading through a mass of ancient MS. volumes in quest of original and authentic information. The task which the Editor had imposed upon himself seemed to demand of him greater exertions than could reasonably be expected of any author whose opportunities were less limited. In this view, and to redeem his pledge, he has carefully examined the entire Records of the Privy Seal, and the Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer, so far as they embrace the period of these early reigns ; and without enlarging on the obvious value of the new materials thus collected, he now begs to lay before the reader the result of an anxious and careful scrutiny. In accomplishing this desirable object, the limits of this work have necessarily been considerably encroached on, but it is hoped no one will deem the labour mispent, or the additional space thus occupied misemployed. The Editor only grudges that he could avail himself, in this work, of so small a portion of the information which these invaluable Registers afford.

The reader is once more referred to MR TYTLER'S truly valuable Historical work, in illustration of such passages as do not occur in the ordinary Histories of Scotland.

Jul. 2, 1488.—Respite to PATRIK OF DUNBAR, sone and apperand are to Patrik Dunbar of Kinkunqubare, Ferguse M^ddowell, Johnne M., and Johnne Smythe, for art and parte of þe Slauchter of vmqubile Patrik Mackowloche (M^cCulloche) : For ix 5eris to cume to indure.

Apr. 6, 1495.—Remission to CUTHBERT GORDOUNE, for þe Forthocht selony done be him

II. ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE REIGN OF KING JAMES IV, SELECTED FROM THE ACCOUNTS OF THE LORD HIGH TREASURER OF SCOTLAND.

[THE value, in a historical point of view, as well as the extreme curiosity, of the Accounts of THE LORD HIGH TREASURER OF SCOTLAND, is known only to the comparatively few individuals who have found leisure, perseverance, and opportunity to consult their truly remarkable contents; for hitherto no connected view of them has been made public.

In attempting a brief selection from the interesting stores of information which is to be gleaned from these Volumes, the Editor has felt it extremely difficult to refrain from the insertion of much extraneous matter of intense interest. The frequent deviations from the strict plan and spirit of this Appendix, in which he has indulged, will show the reader the value of the materials contained in the Treasurer's Accounts. It is hoped, however, that ample selections may one day be printed at the Public expense, under the Record Commission; for no private individual can ever be expected to undertake the labour and cost of such a work, which, however valuable in itself, could never be expected to defray even a moderate share of the outlays which must necessarily be expended in the publication of such a work.

To save occupying additional space, the reader is referred, generally, to the preceding TRIALS, which are more or less illustrated by the following Extracts. For the sake of those whose pursuits have not led them to the examination of such matters, a few brief notes are added, which, it is hoped, will prove not

It does not appear what terms were made. ⁸ There are many inſtances in the ſame Record of plays having been performed before the KING and Court, at this very early period. ⁹ At this time the SPANISH AMBASSADOR WAS RESIDENT AT COURT; and it is probable that there was another Embaſſy from ENGLAND. ¹⁰ Monkeys, apes. It is proper, however, to remark, that the word likewiſe ſignifies trinkets or toys; and alſo jests or drolleries. THE KING had a conſiderable collection of wild beaſts preſented to him at different times, and probably kept a regular MENAGERIE for his amuſement: A former gift with which Gentill John had been entrusted was two spaniels. ¹¹ There was regularly an offering of this ſort each NEW YEAR’S morning, and commonly a ‘ caudill.’ ¹² EPIPHANY, the Maniſtation of our Saviour to the Gentiles; TWELFTH-DAY. ¹³ Offering. ¹⁴ This perſonage was THE KING elected on Twelfth-night, being the individual in whoſe portion of the cake a Bean was found. The ſame practice ſtill prevails in England, but a ring is now uſed in place of the bean. See Brand’s Popular Superſtitions, (Ellis’s Edit.) *Dr Jamieson’s Dict. v. ¹ At this time THE KING was at the SIEGE OF NORHAM. A number of payments occur for carriage of guns, 'gun-ſtanis,' 'ledin pellokis,' 'irne pellokis' (cannon-balls), &c. ² Went. ³ A great favourite of the King's, who ſeems to have encouraged JAMES IV in HORSE-RACING, betting, &c. ⁴ Watch; waulk. ⁵ Dispersion.

⁶ Lues Venerea. On Oct. 2, following, there is another payment 'to thaim that hed the grantgore in Liulithquho, and many others occur of the ſame deſcription. ⁷ JAMES IV. returned by 'Kyle,' 'Kilmarno,' and 'Glasgo,' to 'Striue-lin.'

⁸ There are numerous payments to him, both before and after this date. ⁹ In the CHAPEL ROYAL at Stirling. ¹⁰ Porteons-Roll. ¹¹ This was likely one of JAMES's attempts in leech-craft, to couchl the eyes for cataract. The phraſeology is moſt ominous of 'evil ſucceſs.'

¹² The Poet. The frequent payments to POETS, MINSTRELS, &c. &c. in almoſt every page of theſe Accounts, abundantly refutes the calumnie charge brought againſt King James IV, for having neglected DUNBAR and others. His expenditure, on the contrary, was extremely lavish; and conſidering the ſtate of his finances, may ſafely be termed prodigal. A ſlight inſpection of theſe intereſt-ing accounts will more than ſatisfy the moſt prejudiced reader, that ſuch reports have ariſen ſolely from idle ſurmises.

¹³ On Dec. 20, another quarter's penſion is entered, 'quhilk was payit to him after he com furth of ENGLAND.'

¹⁴ This is one, out of hundreds of ſimilar inſtances of the King's urbanity. JOHNE, however, ſeems to have been more than match for his Maſtey.

¹⁵ This unqueſtionably fixes the day of the Marriage; which, with the total diſregard to Chronological detail which diſfigures the pages of our earlier Hiſtorians, has been hitherto doubtful. The Editor has, perhaps, drawn too largely on the entries under this date, but their extreme curioſity will amply plead his apology.

² The enquiring reader is referred for an extremely interesting and minute contemporaneous account of THE MARRIAGE OF JAMES IV, and of the Journey of his QUEEN, MARGARET, daughter of HENRY VII of England, to Scotland, by JOHN YOUNG, Somerset Herald, who was an eyewitness of the whole proceedings. Leland's Collectanea, IV, 258.—See also Fabian's Chronicles, II, 232. Hall's Chron. Lesley, Buchanan, and Drummond. The forthcoming volume of Mr Tytler's History (V.), will doubtlessly give the whole details, in his usual masterly style.

⁹ A great many payments are made to this rope-dancer and his man, who were pensioned by the King.

¹ See YOUNG'S Account, in Leland's Coll., before referred to.² Dried meadow bay, or gorse.In numerous other instances it is entered as 'rasches to the chalmers,' viz. rushes.³ Trusses, bundles.⁴ Loads.⁵ Timbrels; perhaps a pair of Kettle-drums. King James IV was an expert musician, and there are frequent entries of various kinds of instruments having been purchased for his own use.⁶ In Walpole's Catalogue of Painters, an artist of the name of JOHN MAYNARD is stated to have assisted Toregiano, as a Painter, in the planning of the Monument to be erected for Henry VII. Perhaps the Seal-Engraver of Henry VIII, JOHN DE MAYNE, was the same individual. The only Painter who is said by Walpole to have been employed by Henry VII, was John Mabuse, or Mabuesius; but it is by no means likely that he could be the person. MAYNARD, therefore, it is thought, was the Painter who accompanied the Marriage train, in charge of the Portraits presented by the KING of ENGLAND to his son-in-law. So far as the Editor knows, there are now no traces of his works in Scotland.⁷ It is probable that this PAINTER remained in Scotland in full employment for two months, for under date Nov. 10, 1503, occurs this entry of a propyne to 'Mynour ye Englise Payntour, quhen he passit away, l Fr. cr., xxx li.'⁹ Bow-maker.¹⁰ The above are given as specimens of the entries of this sort, which are very numerous.

¹ The number of minstrels belonging to the King's household at this period, was thirty-one. Their names and salaries are regularly stated. ² Fr. entertainment; vulgarly 'belly cheer.' ³ Ribbed arrows or quarrells for his cross-bows. It may, however, imply that they were barbed, though that was an unusual shape for quarrells, which were square in the points. Had the word been written berit or boirit, it would signify sounding or whistling arrows. ⁴ Mixed, of various sorts. ⁵ The King seems to have been hawking, almost daily, near Linlithgow, Falkland, &c. On Nov. 15, there is a curious entry, 'ITEM, to ane man passit in ane Loch, and rasit dukis (wild-ducks) to ye Halkis, be the Kingis command, ij s. iiij d.' The water dog was evidently to pick up the game brought down by the 'boltis.' ⁶ Such payments are very frequent. ⁷ Scabbards. ⁸ The BARRACE or LISTS for the Tournament. ⁹ Hatchet, or axe-shaft? ¹⁰ Motley; party-coloured; black and white. ¹¹ Moorish or black drummer. A Morian. ¹² On the margin, 'for gisaris.' ¹³ A silver drinking-cup. ¹⁴ This affords a very remarkable instance of the manners of the times, and of the revels sanctioned by long usage during the daft days.—The KING himself mingled freely in all the sports, and gained for himself the love and admiration of his people, being remarkably dexterous in all amusements, games, and manly exercises. ¹⁵ Spoiled; robbed.

¹ There are many payments to this person, who appears to have been in great favour with THE KING. ² The King shortly after this returned to Edinburgh, and went to the North. ³ Highlanders. ⁴ Trussed or packed up the man's head, to be fixed on the Ports of some burgh or castle. ⁵ Thirty dozen. ⁶ Morrice-dancers. ⁷ It has already been remarked how liberal the King was in his establishment of this sort, which consisted of musicians from various countries. Besides his usual French and Italian Minstrels, he kept an Organist, e. g. 1512-13, Feb. 15. ⁸ Item, to Guilzeame, Organar, Frencheman, and his v complices, French Menstralis, xxv li. v s.' Juliana Drummond and the Italians had a payment of xxxv li. the same day for their quarter's wages. ⁹ Wantonnes. ¹⁰ She is elsewhere called 'the auld Queen,' and 'callit ye Quene of Mail.' ¹¹ Companions. ¹² It would appear from this entry, that she was a poor maniac and a privileged pensioner. ¹³ A naked mask, brought by English Cuddy, or Cuthbert, into the Palace Yard of Holyrood. ¹⁴ For this and the preceding entries, see the Trials, Vol. I, * 77, &c. ¹⁵ The King's skill in surgery and leech-craft was considered unequalled in these times, and he was extolled by contemporary writers, who assert that he was consulted by physicians and surgeons in desperate cases. The present instances seem to savour of frolic only, probably arising from a foolish wager with some of his courtiers. ¹⁶ See Trials, Apr. 27, 1512, &c., Vol. 1, * p. 76. ¹⁷ Robert Maxwell, son of John Lord Maxwell, got a Charter of the Stewardship of Annandale, on his father's resignation.—*Reg. CRIMINAL TRIALS
HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

IT is an unfortunate circumstance that the regular series of THE BOOKS OF ADJOURNAL does not commence till the 18th day of November 1524, in the twelfth year of THE REIGN OF KING JAMES V; for unquestionably a variety of very important Trials must have taken place during his minority. No doubt, the public business of the country received a fatal shock from the disastrous consequences of Flodden-Field, and it would be long ere matters became settled after that unhappy day, when so many of the Nobility, and the flower of the principal families of Scotland, fell along with their King.

The Editor has endeavoured, to the utmost of his abilities, to fulfil the pledge he made at the outset of this undertaking, by entering into a very extensive and laborious examination of all the early Records and Collections of MSS. within his reach, so far as connected with the objects of this present work. In his zeal to preserve all that is important, and that bears on the history, manners, and customs of Scotland, he fears he may have encroached equally on his limits and on the patience of the general reader, whose pursuits, perhaps, do not lead him to attach much value to what will be greatly prized by the historian and antiquary. The result of these researches he now begs to submit in the illustrative Notes and Appendix to this Reign, in the hope that they will meet with the candid consideration of all.

What was remarked in the brief Notice prefixed to the Reign of JAMES IV, and to that Appendix, is equally applicable to the present portion. It may be observed, that the Extracts from the Records of the Privy Council, which are here given in chronological order, at the end of this and the other reigns, lie scattered over a number of volumes, and are blended with Precepts of Charters, Gifts, Presentations to Benefices and Offices, Legitimations, Licenses, Safe-conducts, &c.; of which, a number of the more important papers have been selected. To save the repetition of facts and illustrations contained in THE APPENDIX to this reign, the reader is referred, generally, to its contents.

the following curious extract from Anderson's MS. History of Scotland¹ will be as interesting to the reader as it is highly illustrative of the manners and spirit of these troublesome times. It seems a pretty close version of Buchanan's account of the same event, but the quaintness of the Scottish style adds much to its point.

' THAIR chancit, in the beginning of this RAID,² ane thing worthie of memorie, quhill, for the noveltie of the fact, I wald not pretermit. Thair was ane man of law³ birth in *Johne Stewartis*⁴ flabill and in alfe law office, ane horskeiper. This man, eftir the Slauchter of his maister, wandering about and wift not quhat to do, in end, with constant mynd, interpryfit ane heicher attempt than accordit aither for his stait or birth: For, passing to Edinburcht to the destinat reveng⁵ of his maisteris death, in the way he chanced to meit with a man of lyk fortoun to himself, and ane of the fervandis of the same Hous, and inquiryt of him, " Gif he sawe James Hammiltoune the Bastard⁶ in the towne?" Quho confessing he saw hime—" Sawe thow him (said he) most wnthankful cretour—and wald not slay that moift wicked man, quho flew our guid maister! Away! To the gallous with thé!"—This mekill spokin, passing furth the way, he was bent to com directlie to Court.

' Thair was in the wtter clois⁷ of the Palace to the number of two thowfand men in arnes, of DOUGLASS and HAMMILTOUNES dependaris, bound to the Raid quhair of we spak. This revenger of his maisteris Slauchter keipit still⁸ his eye and mynd upone HAMMILTOUN, regarding no more else; quho haveing ane cloick about him, vnarmed, passing furth of the clois, com vnder the long volt⁹ of the entres;¹⁰ the revainger, awaiting him in the obscure and narrow throit quhair the zetis¹¹ ar hung, flew wpone him, and gawe him sax woundis (quhair of sum pearfid almost to his vitall pairtis; wtheris James efchewed, be bowing¹² his bodie and obiect¹³ of his cloick), and incontinent lap¹⁴ in amangis the rest of the throng.

' Grit fture arrayfe¹⁵ incontinent, for sum HAMILTOUNES suspectit that this crnell turnes was done be THE DOUGLASSIS, quho as zit had not forzet¹⁶ the auld malice; so that the twa factionnes had almost fallin to it be the earis. In the end, the fture sumquhat fettled. All men within the clois (were) commandit to stand by wtheris fydis¹⁷ about the wallis of the clois. The stryker was fund, and the bludie knyff still in his hand. Inquiryt, " Quhairfra he com, and quhat was his buffines thair?" Quhill as his ansueris war flowand, he was caryid to priffoune, quhair the tortur (was) presented vnto him. He confessèd, incontinent, that he had done the deid to reveng his maisteris Slauchter, lamenting onlie that so honest attempt had turned to nathing. Being verrie feueirliche tormentid, he wald not confes that ony man was in Conspiracie with him. In end, he was condamed, caryid about the Towne naikid, and brodit¹⁸ with hot irnes in all pairtis of his bodie. He nevir, in word nor countenance, gawe ane dollorous signe. Quhat tyme his right hand was cut aff, he said, " It was moir lichtlie punisheit than it deservid, ffor that it had not obayit ane stout stomack!"

This circumstance was too remarkable to escape the attention of Leslie, who briefly says,—' Ane great conuentione of the Lordis being in Halyrudhous with THE KING, the xvij of Junij, thair com ane fempill¹⁹ lyk man, being fume tyme feruand to THE ERLE OF LENNOX; and in the mids ane great confluence in the Abbay clofe, furionlie and disperatlie struk SIR JAMES HAMMILTOUN, knyecht, with ane quhingsear in the Wambe,²⁰ thre findry strais, to the left;²¹ albeit²² that the said Sir James deit nocht of thay straiskis. The man beand suddantie takin, confessit the deid, without ony repentaunce, crying, " Fye on the feibill hand quhill wald not do that thing the hart thoct, and wes

High Treason — Bringing in Englishmen — Theft, &c.

[A STRIKING feature of this period of history, was the disjointed state of civil society. On the Borders, especially, the most lawless excesses were committed, almost with impunity; and at length matters had come to such a pitch, that THE KING found it necessary to levy an army, and to march along with them in person to these districts. It may be remarked, that the robberies and ‘ herefchips’ daily committed, were not confined to outlaws and desperadoes, or ‘ broken men,’ as they were termed, belonging to no Clan, but persons of good family joined in the general foray, and among others, THE LAIRDS OF HENDERLAND and TUSCHELAW² distinguished themselves by the most reckless and daring Treasons and Robberies.

It is unnecessary to enlarge on this subject, which is notorious, and has long been matter of history. According to the Editor’s usual plan, however, such contemporary notices as can now be gleaned, shall, without farther remark, be laid before the reader; as the adoption of this method, in his opinion, affords the most vivid picture of the transactions recorded. In Anderfon’s MS. History,⁶ it is merely remarked, that ‘ The rest of the 3eir was moir peciabil, bot the bauldnes of THEIUIS was never a

But the Original of *Bishop Lesley's*¹ History is rather more explicit. 'In the famyn moneth of May, the xvj day, thair wes ane greit conventioun of the Lordis with THE KING, in Edinburgh; and the King himself presentlie sittand in judgement. The Laird of Hinderland, callit Cokburn, and Adame Scot of Tuschelaw, quha wes callit KING OF THEIVIS, was accuset of Thift, refett and maineteyning of Thevis, slauchter, and uther crymes, and conviet thairfor and heidit; and their heidis fixit upoun the Tolbuith of Edinburg.'²

Without citing farther extracts, in this place, reference may be made to the Notice prefixed to the following article, where some interesting particulars are preserved in connexion with the same subject.]

Border Barons — Neglect to fulfil their Bonds, &c.

[IT is necessary for the right understanding of many of the proceedings which follow, that the reader should bear in mind the public events which gave rise to so remarkable a step as the levy of a large Army, under the command of THE KING in person, for the sole purpose, apparently, of suppressing a handful of BORDER THIEVES. In the preceding Trials, however, it has been seen that the state of the Borders of Scotland was so lawless, and the Chiefs so refractory and turbulent, that nothing short of the strongest coercive measures was likely to be of the least service towards restoring a better state of society among the Borderers.

The open Treason and revolt of THE EARL OF ANGUS, and the constant jarring and jealousies among the Barons, rendered the appointment of a Lieutenant inexpedient. It was therefore deemed necessary, for establishing tranquillity, that THE KING in person, accompanied by a very strong force, should suddenly march towards the Borders, and quell, by the strong arm of the law, all those who had not willingly come forward and given their Bond, with sureties under heavy penalties, to ‘keip gud reule within their respectiue boundis.’ The particulars now drawn from the Records of the Supreme Criminal Court are of considerable historical importance, and to the genealogist as well as the historian, must afford valuable information.

*Bishop Lesley*¹ gives this brief but striking narrative. After detailing the execution of the Lairds of Henderland and Tuschelaw, he proceeds: ‘The fame day THE ERLE BOITHUELL wes convict for manteyning of thame, and for certain uther crymes; and thairfoir wes in the Kingis will: For the quibilkis, the King caufit Ward him in the Castell of Edinburgh. Thairefter he wes fend in Murray; and laft, banieft Scotland; fua that he travellit to Venice, quhair he remanit during the Kingis lyve tyme. Alfua, the Lord Maxwell, Lord Hume, Larde Balcleuch, Farnyhirft, Pollock,² Johneftoun, Mark Ker, and uther principallis of THE BORDOURIS, wes convict be Afllyffis, and all put in Warde; quhair throwcht the Bordouraris keipit better reule thairefter, fa lang (as) the King wes one life.’

Sir James Balfour,³ after mentioning the proceedings against Earl Bothwell, says, ‘this fame yeir, lykwayes, THE KING impriffons the Lords Maxwell and Hume, with the Lairds of Buccleuch, Fernihurft, Pollard,⁴ Johnfon, and Marke Ker, as CHEIFFES of the Brokin men in the Borders; and becauffe they had winked at their willanies, and giuen them way; quheras they, by ther pouer and authoritye, might have refrained them.’ *Anderfon*⁵ also remarks: ‘The 17 day of the Callendis of May, eftir lang difputatioun in Counfall, continewit till nicht, THE KING Wardit the Earle Bothuell, Robert Maxwell, Walter Scott, and Mark Ker, within the Castell of Edinburgh, and all the honest men⁶ of Marche and Teviotdail, heir and thair throw the cuntry, ffor that he beleivid that thay secreitlie fould rayfe weir betuixt the realmes.’⁷

After having perused the preceding brief remarks, the reader will be enabled more fully to appreciate the following valuable particulars communicated in the Record.]

May 18.—The following perfons found surety to enter, when required, before the Justice, to underly the law for all crimes to be imputed to them: And for which they submitted themselves to the Kingis will: And also, for not doing their utmost diligence to fulfil their Bonds, &c.

Mar. 27.—SIR JAMES HAMMILTOUNE of Fynnert, kn^t, became surety (in like manner as Robert Lord Maxwell and John Johnestoune of that ilk had become to the King for the entry of John Scot, son and heir of Walter Scot of Syntoun, and William Scot, son and heir apparent of Robert Scot in Allanehalehe, being now in Ward within the Castle of Borthuik,) for SIR WALTER SCOT of Branxholme, knicht, to enter him in Ward within the said Castle, whensoever it pleases the King, under the pain of 500 merks. And the said Sir Walter bound himself to free Sir James of his caution and pledge.

Notice relative to 'Johnnie Armstrong' — Common Theft — Reset of Theft, &c.

[THERE have already been laid before the reader¹ various particulars relative to THE BORDER RAID, led by the King in person. Among other interesting circumstances connected with the Expedition, perhaps none is more remarkable than the capture and execution of the famous JOHNNIE ARMSTRANG. The Editor begs to refer to the *Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border*² for a general outline of the History of the CLAN or sept of ARMSTRONG, a lawless and disorderly race, which for a long period kept both sides of the Border in a ferment. It is only necessary to notice here, that the Chief of this Clan was the LAIRD OF MANGERTOUN. Johnnie Armstrong (commonly styled of Gilnockie) was brother to the LAIRD, and resided near Langholm, in Gilnockie Tower, at the Hollows, a place still resorted to, and highly distinguished for the romantic beauty of its scenery.

The state of the country adjoining the Borders was such that KING JAMES V considered it necessary to raise a large Army, and to proceed in person to execute vengeance upon 'the Theives and lymmaris,' and to bind down the Barons to observe 'gude reull within thair boundis.' This he executed to such good purpose, that it is still proverbial in these districts, that for a long time after that Expedition he 'made the rafch bufs keip the kow!'

In relation to JOHNNIE ARMSTRANG, it is somewhat singular that the circumstances, as they are detailed in the popular ballad or song, are substantially correct; and there cannot now be a doubt that he was most basely betrayed and put to death, even without the mockery of a form of Trial.³

As the most striking and forcible manner of laying the facts before the reader, the Editor thinks it proper in this place to subjoin some graphic accounts, as given by early writers. The first which need be cited is that contained in *Anderson's MS.*⁴ After noticing the proceedings against Earl Bothwell, &c. he states as follows:—

'Himself (the KING) about the moneth of July,⁵ gathering togidder about aucht thowfand men, tuik jorney to repres THE THIEVES. And passing forward with grit expeditioun, campid wpone the watter Ewes.⁶ Not far fra that duelt JOHNE ARMSTRANG, ane Capitane of ane factioun of Theives. Sax of his complices war reservid for hostagis; and for¹ that the keiping of thame stude in no feid, after they had imprisoned them a few monethis, they cawfid execut thame also; and futid new pledgis of theife that remaynid at hame. Thay of LIDDESDAILL refusung their awin howffis, past into England bag and bagaidge, and be daylie incurfiounes ranfactit the contreyis lying neir vnto thame.

‘Within fewe dayis eftir, THE KING, reffaveing hostages for the Nobilmen, releivid themefeluis furth of waird; of quhom Walter Scott, to gratiffie THE KING, slew Robert Johnston, ane verrie crewall Thief; quhairbe he incurid deidlie feid with that Hous, quhilk continewit, to the grit harme of baith the Clanes, long eftir.’

Calderwood's account of the matter is hardly so minute,² being as follows:—

‘In the month of Julie (1531)³ THE KING went with ane Armie of 8000 men to EWESDAILE to aprehend and punith Theeves. JOHN ARMISTRANG, a notable Theefe, who had compelled the English to pay him Black-male, and was terrible to the Lord Maxwell himself, when he was comming to THE KING, intifid be some courtionrs, bot without a fave conduct, he was intercepted by 50 horsemen lying in an ambush, and brought to THE KING, as if he had bein aprehendit by them against his will. He and a great number of his companie war hanged one grouing trees. His takers, to make him the more odious, alledged that he had promised to raunder so manie miles of Scotith ground nixt adjacent to the Borders, bot the English war well content to be ridd of him. The LIDDISDAIL people fled into England, bot troubled the countrie with RAIDES.’

The accurate *Bishop Lesley*⁴ gives but a brief narrative of the event. He says—

‘All this summer THE KING tuik greit care to paciefie the Bordouris, and punice the Theivis and Oppreffoures being thairon. And to that effect, in the moneth of Junij, he past to THE BORDOURIS with ane great Army; quhair he caufet xlvij of the maist nobill Theivis, with Johnne Armestrange thair Capitane, be tane; quha, being convict of Thift, reiff, slauchter and treasfoun, war all hangit apoun growand treis; and thair wes ane notabill Thiff brint, quha had brunt ane hous with ane woman and mony her barnis⁵ being thairintill. Yet George Armeffrange, broder to the said Johanny, wes pardonit and reservit levand to tell of the rest, like as he did; quha, within proces of tyme, wer aprehendit be the King, and puniest accordinge to thair desertis.’

But the most circumstantial and curious relation is that given by Lindesay of Pitscottie, with which this notice shall be closed.

‘To this effect he gave charge te all Earles, Lordis, Barrones, frieholderis and gentlemen to compeir at Edinburgh with ane monethis victuall, to pas with THE KING to daunton the THEIVES OF TEVIDAILL AND ANNERDAILL, with all vther partis of the realme. Also, the King desired all gentlmen that had doggis that wer gud to bring thame with thame to hunt in the saidis boundis; quhilk the most part of the Noblmen of the Highlandis did, fik as the Earles of Huntlie, Argyle, and Atholl, who brought thair deir-houndis with thame, and hunted with his Majestie. Thir Lordis with many other Lordis and Gentlmen, to the number of tuelf thousand men, assemblit at Edinburgh, and thairfra went with the Kingis grace to Meggatland, in the quhilkis boundis war flaine, at that tyme, aughteine fcoir of deir.

‘Eftir this hunting THE KING hanged Johnne Armstrang, Laird of Kilnokie, quhilk monie Scottis menne heavilie lamented, for he was ane doubtit⁶ man, and als guid ane Chiftane as evir was vpon THE BORDERIS, aither of Scotland or of England. And albeit he was ane lous leivand man, and sustained the number of xxiiij weill horfed able gentlmen with him, yitt he nevir molested no Scottis man. Bot it is said, from the Scottis Border to New Castle of England, thair was not ane of quhatfoever estate bot payed to this Johne Armstrang ane tribut, to be frie of his cumber, he was so doubtit in England. So, when he entred in before THE KING, he cam verrie reverentlie with his forsaid number, verrie richlie apparrelled, trusting that in respect he had cum to THE KINGIS grace willinglie and voluntarie, not being tane nor apprehendit be THE KING, he fould obtaine the mair favour. But when THE KING saw him and his men so gorgeous in thair apparrell, and so many braw men vnder ane tirrantis commandement, throwardlie¹ he turned about his face, and bad tak that tirrant out of his sight, saying, ‘ Quhat wantis yon knave that a King fould have?’ But when Johne Armstrange perceived that THE KING kindled in ane furie againes him, and had no hope of his lyff, notwithstanding of many great and fair offeris quhilk he offered to THE KING; that is, that he fould sustene him self with fourtie gentlemen, ever readie to awaitt vpoun his Majestie’s service, and never to tak a pennie of Scotland, nor Scottis man; seconddie, that thair was not ane subject in England, Duik, Earle, Lord, or Barroun, bot within ane certane day he fould bring ony of thame to his Majestie, either quick or dead! He, seing no hope of THE KINGIS favour towardis him, said verrie proudlie, ‘ I am bot ane fooll to feik grace at ane graces face! Bot had I knawin, Sir, that yea would have takin my lyff this day, I fould have lived vpoun the Borderis in disphyte of KING HARIE and yow baith!—for I knaw KING HARIE wold down-weigh my best hors with gold to know that I war condemned to die this day!’ So he was led to the scaffold, and he and all his men hanged. This being done, THE KING returned to Edinburgh the xxiiij day of Julij, and remained meikle of that winter in Edinburgh.’

The place where this execution took place is still pointed out to strangers, being at Carlenrig Chapel, about ten miles above Hawick, on the high road to Langholm. Sir Walter Scott adds, ‘ the country people believe, that, to manifest the injustice of this execution, the trees² withered away! Armstrong and his followers were buried in a deserted churchyard, where their graves are still shown.’³

With the following interesting extract from the Books of THE PRIVY SEAL of Scotland, the Editor will conclude this Notice, which has extended to a greater length than he had anticipated.

Violence committed by the Prior and Convent of Pittenweem— Slaughter.

[THE prosecutions and the Feuds which are noticed in the three subsequent entries, arose from the following circumstances, which, being illustrative of the spirit of these times, the Editor thinks it may be interesting to state rather more fully than usual. The assignees to the tack of the mill and eighty acres of the lands of Pittenweem, having sued before the Lords of Council, their Lordships, with consent of John, the PRIOR, and Mr Robert Forman, Dean of Glasgow, the USUFRUCTUARY of PITTENWEEM, ordained that Andrew Wood, and failing him, one of the King's Officers, should gather the corns growing on the lands, until the final decision of the suit. The King's Officer (Lawrence Bickerton, a Messenger-at-Arms) attempted to serve his Letters upon THE PRIOR, on Sep. 7th, who directed him to delay taking any steps for cutting down the crop until the next day. In the meantime, the Prior set off for Edinburgh; and on Bickerton's return on the 9th, the Sub-Prior and Convent threatened him in the most violent manner. He reports in his Execution of Deforcement, that they said 'þai wald deforce him, and baid him depairt, or ellis his feit fuld be worthe xxiiij pair of handis!' On the 11th, he again went to gather and lead in the corns, when he found the Sub-Prior and his servants busily engaged in reaping them, and who again threatened personal violence. He returned on the 12th and 13th, but there being 'lot Religiufe menne and preiftis, hynis,² wifis,³ and barnis, quhilkis war nocht risponfale to our fouerane lord, gef he had takin deforce,' he desired them to send for Andrew Wood of Pittenweem, John Brown of Anstruther, the Laird of Balcasky, or some other 'risponfale' persons to stop him, so that he might indorse his Deforcement, and depart—which they plainly refused. He therefore, on the 14th, got William Dischinton of Ardrosse, James Sandelandis of Cruvy, and other nine persons, to assist him in the execution of his Letters, 'with xl wiffis and fallowis, or þairby, to fcheir and leid þe faid cornis;' when the Prior and Convent, with 'þair complices to þe nowmer of thre hundrethe perfonis, bodin in feir of weir, wyth hagbutis, culveringis, croce-bowis, hand-bowis, fperis, halbertis, axis, and fwerdis, come in arrayit batell, wyth convocatiounne, and ringing of þair commounne bell,' fell upon them, and 'fchote diuerse pecis of artilþeary' at them. Bickerton then formally exhibited his Letters, and required security from the Prior to the extent of 500 merks, should he choose to retain the corns—or, on the other hand, offered the Prior security for 1000 merks, if the crop was reaped under authority of the Letters. All terms, however, were rejected by the Prior—and on the Messenger and his party retiring, they again 'fchote artilþeary' at them, and hurt several of them. And thus they 'maisterfullie deforfit him, in the executiounne of his office, quharypoun he brak his wand, and tuk witnes,' &c. These facts are luckily preserved in the Letters and executions; which, however, are by far too prolix to be inserted in this Collection.]

Treasonable Conspiracy against the King's Life—Conspiring the Destruction of the Scottish Army at Bedburgh.

[THE fate of THE MASTER OF FORBES has long been matter of History, and the details have been recorded with more or less accuracy by Buchanan,¹ Lesley,² Sir James Balfour,³ and Pinkerton;⁴ and Arnot, in his Collection of Criminal Trials,⁵ has devoted more than usual space to the discussion of this, the introductory, Case of his Abridgement; which, however, he confuses in his ordinary manner, and colours it with his peculiar views. As Mr Tytler's History enters so minutely into all the leading public events, it is unnecessary for the Editor to attempt even the briefest outline of the circumstances. The only mention which it is deemed necessary to be given, in this place, is the following passage, taken from Calderwood's History of the Church of Scotland;⁶ and the reader will find appended to the Trial three important illustrative Papers. These documents contain all that is requisite, in the mean time, towards the formation of a clear opinion of the nature and merits of this remarkable Case.

‘JOHN MASTER OF FORBES,⁷ be the persuasione of THE EARLE OF HUNTLEIE,⁸ who had seduced one of his servants called *Strachene*⁹ to reveale and forge a CONSPIRASIE intendit by his Master, was perfewed and convict be ane Assise, as having some yeers before fought, with THE DOUGLASSES, to slay THE KING. It was true he marraied THE EARLE OF ANGOUS his sifter; bot it could not be proven sufficientlie and clearlie, nither by Wittness or other evidences, that ever he had such a purpose. It was knowne that the greatest part of the ASSISE was corrupted be the Earle of Huntlie. THE MASTER OF FORBES was Beheaded the 10 of Julie 1537; and Strachene the revealer was Banished, because, as was aledged, he had concealed the Treafoune maney yeeres. Howbeit, the people judged not THE MASTER OF FORBES to be guiltie of that Treafoune, quhich was laid to his charge; yet, did they not lament for his death, because he had bein guiltie of manie grivious offences otherwayes. THE KING seemed to repent of this fact soon efter, for he received one of his bretheren into Court, and the other he restored to his brother's patrimonie, and procured to him a good marraige.’

There is only one circumstance farther which need be noticed, viz. that the Master of Forbes, notwithstanding of his sentence, was BEHEADED and quartered, &c. his relations having been spared the more ignominious part of the sentence. Wood, in his Peerage, following Arnot's account of the matter, relates that he was HANGED and quartered, &c. Leslie, however, informs us, that ‘he was heidit and quarterit at Edinburgh, and his heid and quarteris affixt apoun the Portis’—and Balfour says, that ‘be the mediatioun of some frindis, he had that favor to be beheadit and quarterit.’ On the scaffold he denied the Conspiracy against THE KING;¹⁰ but acknowledged that he deserved to PEERS. The challenger, after 'delating' or charging the accused person of Treason, &c., threw down his gauge, or gauntlet, which the accused, if he denied the charge, took up; and 'offerrit to defend the famyn (his assertion of innocence) with his body.' In absence, or failure of sufficient proof, THE KING frequently referred the matter to duel or 'Singular Combat,' as it was then termed, exclaiming, 'God defend the richt!' This Contest, like many other ordeals of a similar description, was founded on a deep knowledge of human nature; and seemed necessary, in these barbarous times, for the well-being of Society. The self-possession and innocence of the one party, and the boisterous arrogance, and confusion of the other, frequently, indeed generally, produced a termination favourable to the ends of substantial justice. Numerous instances could easily be adduced, if necessary, of the Judicial Combat having been authorized by Royal authority in Scotland.

JAMES R.

Conspiring the King's Destruction, by Poison — Treasonably Intercommuning, &c. with the Earl of Angus, &c.

[ONE of the most remarkable passages in the history of the reign of King James V, is the detail of the proceedings so rancorously adopted and put in execution against JEAN or JONET DOUGLAS, LADY GLAMMIS. The Editor considers it as due to the memory of a noble, and, as he conscientiously believes, a much injured Lady, whose character has met with an undue measure of severity from Historians, to enter rather more fully than usual into a statement of the facts of her case. It is probable that this injustice has arisen from the circumstance of its having been usual for succeeding writers to take for granted all statements made in the earlier Chroniclers and Historians, without farther examination; and thus, until Mr Pinkerton and Mr Tytler adopted a very different course, errors the most glaring were perpetuated, and handed down from one author to another.

Jonet Lady Glammis was the second daughter of George Master of Angus, (eldest son of 'the great Earl,' best known by the name of 'Bell-the-Cat,') by Elizabeth, second daughter of John first Lord Drummond. The reader may be reminded, that the undaunted old Earl of Angus, having remonstrated against the rashness and imprudence of KING JAMES IV accepting the challenge of the EARL OF SURREY to fight, received what he deemed an unpardonable affront from his sovereign, who taunted him for his counsel, and proudly told him, if he was afraid, he was at liberty to go home. Retiring in disgust from the field of battle himself, and, as is related, with tears of indignation, he generously left all his followers with his two eldest sons, who both fell at FLODDEN FIELD, with two hundred gentlemen of their name. Bell-the-Cat, broken-hearted, thereupon withdrew from the world, and died the following year, 1514, at the Priory of Whithorn, in Galloway.⁴

³ Anno 1538. ⁴ Wood's Peerage, I, 134. Pinkerton's Hist., &c.

The unfortunate lady who was the victim in the following Trial, married John sixth Lord Glammiss, who died Dec. 12, 1527, leaving issue by her, John seventh Lord Glammiss, then a youth. He was long involved in the consequences of his mother's misfortunes,¹ and Elizabeth, married to Ross of Craigie.² She appears soon afterwards to have married Archibald Campbell, who is styled by Historians 'of Kepneith.' This gentleman appears to the Editor to have been Archibald Campbell of Skippinche (Skipnish), who was the second son of Archibald second Earl of Argyle. He obtained a Charter of the lands and Keepership of the Castle of Skipynche or Skipnish, Aug. 13, 1511, from King James IV.³ The Editor does not recollect to have met with the title of Keipmech in any of the Public Records, and thinks it extremely probable that Campbell of Skipnish was the second husband of Lady Glammiss. At all events, it is very unlikely that a high-born Lady of so distinguished a family as that of DOUGLAS would stoop to a matrimonial alliance with a small Highland Laird, unconnected with any Noble family. It is proper, however, to state, that the Editor has no proof to adduce in support of this surmise. Being possessed of a masculine mind, and a large measure of that undaunted courage, which so long characterised the Douglasses, she generously, but imprudently, braved the King's Proclamations, which strictly forbid all persons, of whatever degree, from 'intercommuning' with, or giving food, raiment, or shelter to the Earl of Angus, and other Traitors and Rebels, under pain of death.

It must be borne in mind, that Archibald, the sixth Earl of Angus, Chancellor of Scotland, who was forfeited in Parliament, Sep. 5, 1528, along with George, his brother, and Archibald, his uncle, was brother-german to Lady Glammiss, who was closely attached to him alike by the bonds of natural affection and of private friendship. With the unquenchable fidelity of a sister's love, she afforded her brothers and their uncle all the assistance in her power, and speedily drew down upon herself a portion of the implacable vengeance which KING JAMES V had sworn against THE DOUGLASSES, it being known that he had taken a deep and solemn vow, that while he lived they should never find refuge in Scotland. This Nobleman, on the death of his first wife, Lady Margaret Hepburn, second daughter of Patrick first Earl of Bothwell (who died in childbed in 1513, without surviving issue), married, Aug. 6, 1514, MARGARET of England, QUEEN DOWAGER of JAMES IV, within eleven months after the fatal field of Flodden. The indecent haste with which this match was got up, and the ambitious views of the Douglasses, who through this means obtained the custody of the young KING's person, in reality accelerated their downfall, by exciting against them the jealousies of a powerful faction of the Nobility. THE KING having made his escape out of ANGUS's hands, in July, 1528, the forfeiture of the Earl, his brother, and uncle, followed speedily after the meeting of the earliest Parliament, Sep. 4, 1528. It cannot be disguised that the violent and openly treasonable conduct of the Earl and his faction after this period was by no means calculated to restore him to royal favour, or to reconcile him to his injured countrymen. Having made many incursions into his native country, he retired into England, and became a pensioner of HENRY VIII, who, in 1532, settled an annuity of one thousand merks Sterling upon him. The subsequent restoration of the family, after the death of KING JAMES V, is well known, and the outline of the history of his after life is unnecessary to be touched upon here, as being entirely foreign to the present subject.

So early as Dec. 1, 1528, she was summoned to answer before Parliament, along with Patrick Hume of Blacater, Hugh Kennedy of Girvanmanys, and Patrik Charteris, for art and part counsel, assistance, &c., afforded to the Earl of Angus, in convocating the lieges for eight days immediately preceding Jun. 1, for invasion of the King's person. This Summons of Treason was continued to Jan. 18, 1528-9, when the matter, so far as LADY GLAMMISS was concerned, seems to have been dropped, for on the next diet, Jan. 22, her name no longer appears. In a few years afterwards, on Jul. 1, 1531,⁴ we find that Gawayne Hammiltoune got a Gift from the Crown of the escheat of all the goods, heritable and moveable, which had pertained to JONET LADY GLAMMIS, and had been forfeited on account of her 'Intercommuniyng with our foueraue lordis Rebellis, or for ony vpir crymes,' &c. On Nov. 29 of that year, Haldane of Kelour and several others were fined for not passing upon her Assise; and on Jan. 31, 1531-2, John Drummond of Innerpeffery¹ became surety for her entry at the next Justice-aire of Forfar, for art and part of taking the life of her husband, John sixth Lord Glammiss, 'per intoxicationem,' which probably was meant to signify the employing of drugs, charms, or enchanted potions. This shifting of the ground, in relation to the charge of crime alleged against her, seems to have proceeded from the repeated refusal of the Barons to come forward as Assisors or Jurors on her Trial, and from the fear on the part of the public prosecutor that the Case would break down for want of legal and satisfactory proof of her being guilty of any Treason. Such suspicious circumstances naturally lead us to infer that her real crime was the political offence of her being a true-hearted DOUGLAS, and as such a contumacious despiser of the Royal tyranny, which would attempt to force her to deny succour to her oppressed brothers and uncle, and other 'Rebels.' As Lord Glammiss died Dec. 12, 1527, it is highly improbable that all legal proceedings would be allowed by the advisers of the Crown to be totally suspended for nearly four years against one who was, at any rate, obnoxious to THE KING. There were never awaiting enough of officious spies about the Scottish court to ferret out the truth of even the shadow of suspicion of crime against those who were unhappy enough to lie under its ban; and had there been any just ground of accusation, Lady Glammiss's career would have at once been cut short.

In farther corroboration of the feelings of the Barons, in relation to the innocence of Lady Glammiss, it may be stated that, on Feb. 2, 1531-2, Fullerton of Ardoch, and a number of other Lairds, were americiated for refusing to pass upon another Assise, which her prosecutors had again caused to be summoned for her trial. And once more, on Feb. 26, Lord Ruthven, Lord Oliphant, &c., were fined for the same cause, as may be seen from the various entries, under these respective dates, in this Collection. Owing to the imperfect state of the Criminal Records, no farther notice of this ill-used lady can now be procured until the day of her Trial, when unprincipled Witnesses appear to have been brought forward, who gave false testimouy; upon which the Jury were compelled to return a Verdict of guilty, 'without any substanciall ground or proyf of mattir.'²

With regard to the articles of Dittay, they are only two—treasonably Conspiring and imagining the King's Slaughter or destruction by poison, and treasonably assisting, supplying, resetting, intercommuning, and fortifying Archibald, Earl of Angus, and George Douglas, his brother. The popular story, which originated in the blunders and fables of some of the Chroniclers and Historians of the age of MARY and JAMES VI, has hitherto been, that the Lady Glammiss was burnt for WITCHCRAFT! The Records leave no room for imagining that such formed any part of the charges adduced against her. Assuredly, had it been possible to bring forward such an accusation, we may infer that it would have been strenuously urged against her, to secure the popular voice in favour of THE KING; and, above all, it would have been prominently recorded in the Dittay, and also in her Sentence. Mr Pinkerton, deluded by the frequent repetition of this fable, indulges himself by entering into extenuation of the conduct of JAMES V, for sanctioning the prosecution of Lady Glammiss for the imaginary crime of Witchcraft; and other authors, otherwise respectable, have fallen into the old vice of the earlier Historians, who have immemorially been in the habit of perpetuating each other's errors, by indolently taking for granted all that their predecessors had stated, without being at the pains of examining for themselves Records and documents which were at all times within their reach.

Perhaps the fabulous story in regard to a charge of WITCHCRAFT having been brought against Lady Glamis, may have originated in the preceding attempt to fasten upon her the pretended guilt of taking away her first husband's life by charmed drinks or drugs. This, however, took place many years before her execution. A more plausible reason for reporting that she dealt in Magic or Witchcraft may have been the barbarous manner of her death; for, she having died at the stake, it is not unlikely that the popular report, fifty years, or even a century afterwards, would be that she was 'Burnt for a Witch.' In all cases of Treason and Murder, as well as in those of Witchcraft, Sorcery, &c., females of rank were invariably burnt at the stake, until a comparatively recent date, when decapitation was sometimes granted, in particular instances. In crimes of an inferior description, such as Theft, &c., females, and often infirm old men, were drowned. From not attending to this circumstance, and as Witchcraft was uniformly punished by burning at the stake down to the commencement of the eighteenth century, it was natural for the more modern Historians, who were well aware of the manner of her death, to repeat what they had met with in the pages of earlier Chroniclers, &c.

There is one circumstance which strikes the Editor as affording a very extraordinary feature in these proceedings. The truly amiable MAGDALENE QUEEN OF SCOTLAND, who had only arrived from France on May 19, died on July 7, 1537; which plunged THE KING and the nation into the deepest sorrow. Never did a Queen-consort commence her reign under happier auspices, and with so entire a love of all her subjects. JAMES V had to all appearance abandoned himself to grief for her loss, and had retired from the pleasures of the Court and from all his usual sports and employments, when suddenly, 'in the very crisis of domestic and national affliction,'¹ these rigorous proceedings were adopted and perpetrated, with feelings of private revenge and hatred altogether abhorrent to human nature. Had such a course been previously determined upon by the advisers of the Crown, certainly the time was the worst that could possibly have been chosen; for even had this excellent Queen survived, Lady Glamis must either have been put to death by BURNING AT THE STAKE during the midst of the festivities which followed her Marriage and Public Reception, or at the very moment of the celebration of her Funeral Obsequies! The whole complexion of this shocking tragedy bears such savage traces of a furious and unmanly revenge against a noble and unprotected female, who was the only individual of her family on whom they could lay their hands, that it can hardly be compared with any other event, either in ancient or modern history.

The Editor need scarcely apologize for appending a few notices, which he considers as necessary towards the full understanding and illustration of so remarkable a Trial, and so painful a passage of the History of Scotland.]

I. NARRATIVE *taken from the History of Scotland, by David Scott of the Inner Temple.*¹

The Lady Jane Dowglass, &c. accus'd for Conspiring to Murder the King.

AT this time, the LADY JANE DOWGLASS, sifter to Archibald Earl of Angus (who then liv'd an exile in England), was the most celebrated beauty in the nation. She was of a middle stature, not too fat; her face of an oval form, with full eyes; her complexion extremely fair and beautiful, with a majestick mein. Besides all these perfections, she was a lady of singular chastity, her mind wanting none of those perfections a mortal creature could be capable of. Her modesty was admirable, her courage was above what could be expected in her sex; her judgment solid, her behaviour affable and engaging to her inferiors as well as equals: And as she was descended from one of the most ancient and illustrious Families in the kingdom (tho' at that time eclips'd,) she had been married to JOHN LYON LORD GLAMES, a most worthy young Nobleman of noble birth, but died soon, and left this young lady with one son: And tho' still mistress of her perfections and a plentiful jointure, yet continued a widow for some years after her husband's death. During which time, several of the first Nobility of the Kingdom had courted her; but she was not so much inclined to marry for wealth and title, as for merit; so that she plac'd her affection on one Archibald Campbell of Kepneath, who commanded the Third Regiment in the King's Army, to whom she was married, to their mutual satisfaction. Mean time William Lyon, a near relation of her first husband, having made violent addresses to her, and seeing that she was married to this gentleman, became almost distracted upon the disappointment: But though he had lost her in marriage, yet did not forbear his addresses to her in an unlawful way, and continued to importune her to consent to his designs; which she refused with the utmost disdain, and told him, that she had treated him with the respect due to the relation of her

Though no authorities are cited by the author on the margin, his account bears marks of having been collated with Drummond of Hawthornden's History, which is fuller on the subject of this Trial than any other. From his residence in London, he had, probably, access to State Papers, &c. from which his Narrative had been compiled. It has been deemed advisable to print it here, as the book is but little known; and indeed it only professes to be an impartial compilation from previous Histories and Chronicles.

first husband and child, and not out of any regard to his own person or merit; but, since she found that he had such designs, she hated the sight of him, and assured him that she never would comply with such abominable crimes.

This resolute denial, so distracted him, that he upbraided her with ingratitude for the great love he had for her, and told her, since he had lost so much time in vain, he would study to banish her from his thoughts. But his violent love, or rather lust, turn'd to as violent hatred; so that after that he never visited her, but studied revenge. Thus his passionate love being succeeded by vengeance, he took some time to invent a plot against her life, which he resolved to sacrifice to his resentment: And at last found out the most horrid contrivance that Hell could suggest. He accus'd the Lady, her husband, and one John Lyon, an aged Priest, and his own near relation, of having a design to poison THE KING. Whereupon they were apprehended and confined prisoners in THE CASTLE OF EDINBURGH, their goods seiz'd, and a strict charge given to the Judges of the Justiciary to proceed to their Trials.

Mean time the accuser, William Lyon, having too ready access to THE KING'S ear, studied all means to aggravate the crime; and that he might dispose THE KING to treat them with all possible cruelty, he represented that the Family of the Douglasses had been always dangerous and troublesome to his predecessors, and even to himself and his kingdom: And reminded him of the insolent behaviour of Archibald Earl of Angus, brother to the prisoner, in the time of his Majesty's minority, whose practices were so dangerous, that by a public Decree he was banish'd the kingdom as a disturber of the peace of his native country: That since that time he was become the subject of KING HENRY OF ENGLAND, his Majesty's greatest enemy; and was now the cause of all the Inroads made by THE ENGLISH into Scotland: And since he could not be restor'd to his honours and fortune without great difficulty, revenge had incited him to plot all the mischief he could against THE KING'S person, and who could be employ'd in such wicked designs more true to him than his own sister, who by the ties of blood was oblig'd to secrecy; and had employ'd her in that Conspiracy, thinking that her sex, character and birth, would make her the less suspected: Therefore advis'd his Majesty, that if he had any regard either to his interest or safety of his person, it was necessary to extirpate that race, which produc'd nothing but monstrous Rebels; and especially that woman, whom, if he spar'd, he put it in her power to accomplish her wicked designs.

THE KING, being ignorant of the malice which William Lyon bore to the Lady, order'd that she, her husband, and Chaplain, should be speedily brought to their Trial, without any regard to their birth or characters. And the Lady Jane was brought to the Bar, according to custom, to hear what she could say for her self. And having made particular answers to the questions propos'd by the Judges, she imagin'd that her danger proceeded from her relation to the Earl of Angus; and with the greatest courage and confidence imaginable, she deliver'd the following SPEECH.

Lady Jane Dowglays her Defence at the Bar.

‘ THOSE that hate my brother are enrag'd, because he is not in their power, that he might fall a sacrifice to their malice; and they now discharge their spite upon me, because of my near relation to him; and to gratify their revenge with my blood, they accuse me of crimes which, were they true, deserv'd the severest death. But, since it is the only prerogative of God to punish men or women for the faults of others, which belongs to no judge on earth, who are oblig'd to punish every one according to their personal crimes, you ought not to punish in me the actions of my brother, how blamable soever. Above all, you ought to consider if those things I am accus'd of have the least appearance of truth; for what gives the greatest evidence either of the guilt or innocence of an impeach'd person is their former life. What fault could any hitherto lay to my charge? Did any ever reproach me with any thing that is scandalous? Examine into my former conversation; for vice hath its degrees as well as virtue, nor none can attain to a perfection in either, except by long practice; and if you can find nothing reprobable in my conduct, how can ye believe that I am arriv'd all of a sudden to contrive this Murder, which is the very height and perfection of impiety? I protest I would not deliberately injure the most despicable wretch alive. Could I then make the Murder of my Sovereign, whom I always reverenc'd, and who never did me wrong, the first essay of my wickedness? None are capable of such damnable and unnatural actions, except such as are in desperate circumstances, or such as are hurried into Plots by reward or revenge. My birth, and condition of life, puts me beyond the suspicion of the first of this kind; and for the latter, since I was never injur'd by THE KING, how can I be suspected to thirst for revenge?

'I am here accus'd for purposing to kill THE KING; and to make my pretended crime appear more frightful, it is given out that the way was to be by poison. With what strange impudence can any accuse me of such wickedness who never saw any poison, nor know I any thing about the preparation of it? Let them tell where I bought it, or who procur'd it for me? Or though I had it, how could I use it, since I never come near THE KING's person, his table, nor Palace? It is well known, that, since my last marriage with this unfortunate gentleman, I have liv'd in the country, at a great distance from the Court. What opportunity could I have to poison THE KING?

'You may see by those circumstances, which give great light in such matters, that I am entirely innocent of those crimes I am charg'd with. It is of the office of you Judges to protect injur'd innocence: But if the malice and power of my enemies be such, that, whether guilty or innocent, I must needs be condemn'd, I shall die cheerfully, having the testimony of a good conscience; and assure yourselves, you shall find it more easy to take away my life than to blast my reputation, or to fix any real blot upon my memory.

'This is my last desire of you, that I may be the sole object of your severity, and that those other innocent persons may not share in my misfortunes. Seeing my chief crime is that I am descended of THE FAMILY OF DOWGLASS, there is no reason that they should be involv'd in my ruin; for my husband, son, and cousin, are neither of them of that Name or Family. I shall end my life with more comfort if you absolve them; for the more of us that suffer by your unjust Sentence the greater will be your guilt, and the more terrible your condemnation, when you shall be tried at the great day by the Almighty GOD, who is the impartial Judge of all flesh.'

The Judges represent the Case of Lady Jane to the King.

This SPEECH was deliver'd with such courage, and free from fear, that the Judges were extremely astonish'd at her heroick behaviour; and when they had consider'd what she had said in her own defence, they delay'd the Sentence, and sent two of their number to THE KING, to represent to him, that, though the Witnesses had prov'd the Articles of Impeachment, and that according to the laws of the land, upon the Evidence, she deserv'd death; yet, upon a serious consideration of the whole circumstances of the matter, they could not perceive the least probability of her guilt: They were afraid lest the rigour of the law in this case should prove the height of injustice,¹ therefore they wish'd rather that equity and mercy should take place, it being more safe to absolve a criminal than to condemn an innocent person: That time alone could discover the truth of the matter, by making known the characters of those Witnesses who had sworn against her, whether they were men of honesty, or had been bribed to accuse her: That nothing was more advisable than to delay the whole affair for some days, which could be no danger to THE KING, since those persons were not to have their liberty; and when there appear'd any clear proof of their guilt, they might suffer according to the law. As for themselves, they were tied up to the form and letter of the law; it belong'd only to his Majesty to temper and moderate their Sentence by his clemency: Upon which account, they address'd themselves to him, since in such cases wherein the life, honour, and effects of persons of distinction are concern'd, all possible caution was necessary.

The King's Answer to the Judges.

THE KING, who was naturally merciful, had easily complied with this request of the Judges, had not Lyon (who contriv'd the bellish plot, and then fear'd that if they escap'd his wickedness would be discover'd) prevail'd with THE KING to return this Answer to the Judges: That the exercise of Justice was a considerable part of the Royal dignity, which he had entrusted them with when he made them Judges: That it belong'd to their Office to preserve the Innocent and punish the Guilty: That the Book call'd Regiam Majestatem contain'd all the forms and rules which ought to determine them in such cases: Wherefore, he gave them full power to proceed in that matter, according to justice and the Laws of the land; and said, he knew nothing that could hinder them from doing their duty like men of judgment and honour.

Lady Jane Executed.

With this answer, those that were sent to wait upon THE KING return'd to the Exchequer, (where the Court of Justice then sat,) and reported to the rest of the Judges what THE KING had given them in charge. Whereupon the Judges gave Sentence against the Lady, according to the Law. She heard the Sentence pronounc'd without the least signe of terrour or concern. On the day appointed for her Execution, she suffer'd on THE CASTLE-HILL OF EDINBURGH; where she appear'd with so much beauty and little concern, that all the spectators were so deeply afflicted for her, that they burst out with tears and loud lamentations for her untimely end, and were so confident of her Innocence, that they design'd to rescue her: But THE KING'S Officers and Guards being present, hinder'd their attempting any thing that way.

Thus died this most noble Lady, whose death was lamented by all that knew or beheld her, except the most inhuman barbarian who brought her to this lamentable end.

The next day after her death, HER HUSBAND (Archibald Campbell) design'd to make his escape out of the Castle of Edinburgh, being let down over the walls by a rope, which happening to be too short, or broke, he fell upon the rocks, where he was dash'd to pieces.

THE KING seem'd much concern'd after the Execution of Lady Jane and the death of her husband, and caus'd release the old Gentleman her Chaplain. But yet, THE YOUNG LORD GLAMIS was still kept in the Castle, till after THE KING'S death.

William Lyon confesses his crime, and flies from justice.

After this most virtuous and excellent, as well as beautiful, Lady fell a victim to her inhuman lover, he began to reflect on his wickedness, and was so fill'd with horror that he was not able to endure the lashes of his troubled conscience. He lamented his crimes when it was too late, and having such confidence in THE KING'S mercy, he confess'd the whole matter secretly to him. But finding THE KING abhor'd such wickedness, he fled from the Court, knowing that he could not escape being punish'd according to his crimes; and departing from Scotland, he soon after died in Flanders, in great misery.¹

II. NARRATIVE from 'The History of the Houses of Douglas and Angus, by Master David Hume of Godscroft.'

'THE KING'S anger still continued against them (the DOUGLASSES) in such sort, that nine years after, in 1537, he was contented that Jean Douglas Lady Glames, (who was Angus' Sister,) should be accused by false Witnesses, condemned, and execute. The point of her accusation was, that she, and her Husband, (Archibald Campbell then,) and her Sonne, and an old Priest, had gone about to make away the King by Witchcraft. Their servants were tried and racked, but confess'd nothing; the Accuser, John Lyon,² a kinsman of her first husband, when he saw how they were like to be used, and that the House of Glames would be ruined, repenting of what he had done, confessed to the King that he had wronged them; but it did no good.

‘ She was burnt upon the Cafle-hill, with great commiseration of the people, in regard of her noble blood, of her husband, being in the prime of her years, of a singular beauty, and suffering all, though a woman, with a man-like courage; all men conceiving that it was not this fact, but the hatred the King carried to her brothers, that had brought her to this end. Her husband, seeking to escape over the wall of the Castle, fell, and broke his leg, and so died. Her sonne was kept in prison, because he was so young that the law could not strike against him.

‘ Others were committed to Ward, as Sir George Hume of Wedderburne, who was Angus his sister’s son, to Black-Nesse, for whom his mother, Dame Alison Douglas, coming often to entreat the King for him, though he always used her courteously, and gave her good countenance, and that almost onely to her of all their friends: So that his language was by way of excusing, without deniall; yet he could obtain nothing, till a little before his death, about the Rode of Fawla, when hee began to misse their service, then he set him at libertie. His implacabilitie did also appear in his carriage towards Archbald of Kilspindie, whom he, when he was a childe, loved singularly well for his ability of body, and was wont to call him his Gray-Steel.

‘ Archbald being banished into England, could not well comport with the humour of that nation, which he thought to be too proud, and that they had too high a conceit of themselves, joynd with a contempt and despising of all others. Wherefore, being wearied of that life, and remembring the King’s favour of old towards him, he determined to try the King’s mercifulness and clemency. So he comes into Scotland, and taking occasion of the King’s hunting in the Park at Stirling, he casts himself to be in his way, as he was coming home to the Castle. So soon as the King saw him afar off, ere he came near, he guessed it was he, and said to one of his Courtiers, yonder is my Grey-Steil, Archbald of Kilspindie, if he be alive. The other answered, That it could not be he, and that he durst not come into the King’s presence. The King approaching, he fell upon his knees, and craved Pardon, and promised from thence forward to abstain from meddling in public affairs, and to lead a quiet and private life. The King went by, without giving him any answer, and trotted a good round pace up the hill. Kilspindie followed, and, though he wore on him a secret, or shirt of mail for his particular enemies, was as soon at the Castle-gate as the King. There he sat him down upon a stone without, and entreated some of the King’s servants for a cup of drink, being wearie and thirstie: But they, fearing the King’s displeasure, durst give him none. When the King was sat at his dinner, he asked what he had done, what he had said, and whither he had gone? It was told him that he had desired a cup of drink, and had gotten none. The King reproved them very sharply for their discourtesie, and told them, That if he had not taken an oath that no DOUGLAS should ever serve him, he would have received him into his service, for he had seen him sometime a man of great abilitie. Then he sent him word to go to Leith, and expect his further pleasure. Then some kinsman of David Falconer (the canonier that was slain at Tantallon,) began to quarrel with Archbald about the matter, wherewith the King shewed himself not well pleased when he heard of it. Then he commanded him to go to France for a certain space, till he heard farther from him. And so he did, and died shortly after. This gave occasion to the King of England (Henry VIII.) to blame his nephew, alledging the old saying, That the King’s face should give grace. For this Archbald (whatsoever were Angus’s or Sir George his fault) had not been principal actor of any thing, nor no counfeller nor stirrer up, but only a follower of his friends, and that noways cruelly disposed.

‘ He caused also execute Sir James Hamilton of Evendale, for divers reasons: But that which incensed him most, was his Correspondencie and secret trafficking and meeting with the banished DOUGLASSES, especially with Sir George, whom he met with in the Park-head, as the King was informed. There was no man that he could hear had but received them into his house, but he caused apprehend, and execute the rigour of the law upon them. He caused the Laird of Blackader bring in John Nisbet of the Spittel, and made him to be execute to death, for receiving (as was alledged at least) the Earl of Angus into his house.

‘ These many Executions, proceeding from many Reports and Delations given to him, bred great suspicion in his mind; all the woods seemed full of Theeves. Many were put to death for the DOUGLASSES; this was a token that they had many favourers: many were offended by these executions, and so many ill-willers, by being offended. So his suspicion against the Nobility was daily increased; his jealousy grows, cares multiply, his mind is disturbed, which would not suffer him to sleep sound, but troubled his head with dreames and fanfies.’

III. NARRATIVE, from Bishop Lesley's History of Scotland.¹

IN this summer was tane THE LADY GLAMMES, sister to the Erle of Angus, and David Lyoun hir husband, and brocht to the town of Edinburgh, and wer accusit and convict be ane Assyse for Conspiracie of THE KINGIS deid. And the said lady was brint, and hir husband hangit thairfor.² The LORD GLAMMES, her sone, was convict for knowlege and Conspiracie of the famin, and thairfor forfaitit of his landis, and condampnit to dee. Bot because he wes younge and tendir of aige, THE KING spairit his lyff, and committed him to perpetuall preform; quhair he remainit during THE KINGIS liff tyme, in the Castell of Edinburgh.

Shortlie thairefter, JOHNE MAISTER OF FORBES, and eldest sone to the Lord Forbes, quha had maryit the said Lady Glammes sister, was accusit in Edinburgh, and convict be ane Assyse for the like Conspiracie of THE KINGIS deid; and thairfor wes heidit and quarterit at Edinburgh, and his heid and quarteris affixt apoun the Portis. The Lord Forbes, his fader, being suspectit thairfor, wes halden in ward in the Castell of Edinburghe; bot he wes thairefter releifit.

IV. NARRATIVE from ‘The Genealogie of the House of Drummond.’ Unpublished.³

ANOTHER daughter of GEORGE MASTER OF ANGUS, with Lady Elizabeth Drummond, was Jean Douglas, Lady Glamis, married to John Lord Glamis, called to a by-name, ‘ Cleanse the Cause.’ In the year 1537, she was accused, by suspected witnesses, (if not false,) that she and her sone and some others had gone about to take away King James the Fifth his lyfe by witchcraft; whereupon she was brunt upon the Castle Hill of Edinburgh, with great commiseration of the people, in regard of her noble blood and singular beautie, she being in the prime of her age, and suffering with a masculine courage, all men conceaveing that the King’s hatred to her brothers had brought her to that end.

Her sone John, who was next lord, was also condemned and forfaitit; yet, because he was a minor, reserved in prison untill he should be of age to have his sentence put in execution. Bot after the King’s death, in anno 1542, he was againe restored to his lyfe, estate, and honor, and was father to John Lyon, Lord Glames, Chancellor of Scotland, whose sone was Patrick, the first Earle of Kinghorn, and married to Anna Murray, daughter to John, then Laird of Tullibardine, begot upon Catharine Drummond, daughter to David Lord Drummond; this Patrick, the first Earle, was grandfather to Patrick, now Earle of Strathmore and Kinghorn.

V. NARRATIVE from Calderwood's MS. History of the Church of Scotland.

JEANE DOUGLASS LADIE GLAMES, and sifter to the Erle of Angus, was indicted and convict be ane Assise, having, with her second husband, Gillespich Campbell,¹ her son, ane old Preeft, and John Lyoun, her first husband's kinsman, fought to have killed THE KING with Poyson. Howbeit, they dwelt far from Court, and nothing could be extorted from their frinds or fervents, quhich anie wife might serve againest them; yit war they tortured and committed to the Castell of Edinburge.

JEANE DOUGLASS was burnt upon the 5 day after the beheading of THE MASTER OF FORBES. Her death was greatlie lamented be the people, for her nobilitie, her youth, her beautie, her courage at her death, but most of all, because it was judged that hatred against her bannished brother, rather then guiltiness of anie crime committed, had brought her to that end. Her husband, Gillespich Campbell, while he pressed to escape out of the Castell be a cord over the wall, the end being short, he brake all his bonds,² and died. His sone, a simple youth, scarce lyable to suspicioune for such a crime, was detained imprisoun during THE KING's life; and after, restored to his patrimonie.

The accuser was one William Lyoun, a kinsman. He repented, too late, of the calamitie he had brought upon such a noble Houfe, be his calumnies; and confessed his wicked purpose to THE KING. Bot THE KING relented nothing notwithstanding, either of his rigour, of the punishment, or of the forfaltour of the Lands.

Archibald Douglajs of Killspindie,³ quhen he loved singularlie for his abilitie quhen he was a child, and called him his Grayfeele, had come into the countrie secretlie, and fallen doun upon his knees before him, and craved pardoune, quhen THE KING was returning from the Park of Stirlie to the Castell; bot THE KING past by! This gave occatioune to KING HENRIE of England to blame his nephew, and to alledge the commoun saying, 'a KING's face should have grace.' The Earle of Angus sifter-son, George Hume of Wedderburne, he committed to warde in Blackneffe, and determined him in award;⁴ till a littell before his death, that he had need of service at FALA RAID, quhen THE KING fett him at libertie, and gave him a white horse of rare speed. Bot for⁵ this present, his wraith against THE DOUGLASSES was implacable.⁶

VIII. LETTER from Sir Thomas Clifford to King Henry VIII.³

MR PINKERTON having repeatedly quoted this Letter in his History, as being illustrative of the proceedings against THE MASTER OF FORBES and LADY GLAMMIS, the Editor deemed it proper to procure a Transcript of so valuable a document, proceeding, as it does, from the pen of such an eminent individual as Sir Thomas Clifford. Through the polite attention of Frederic Madden, Esquire, F.A.S., the Editor is enabled to lay before the reader all that is applicable to these Cases. Mr Madden remarks, that this interesting Paper 'is a copy by Sir Thomas himself, inclosed in a Letter from him to the Lord Privy Seal (Cromwell), the latter of which is dated from Berwick Castle, 26th July (1537.) The chief object of his Letter to THE KING is to inform him of THE KING OF SCOTS' secret visit to Dunbar, and provision of ordnance there and at other places. In consequence of which, Sir Thomas represents the defenceless state of Berwick, and desires aid and means of resistance in case of attack. The only portion of the Letter which refers to the execution of THE MASTER OF FORBES, &c., is the last paragraph.'

'As for vther newes occurrant in Scotland, on Saterday the xiiijth day of this month instaunt, THE MAISTER OF FORBOSE, sone and heir to the Lord Forbofe, was attached of Treason againt THE KINGIS perfon; of such mattir as he at his deth dyd tacke vpone hyme þat he was sackles⁴ off. Howbeit, he was the same day drawin, bedyt, and quartered in Edynburgh.

'And on Tewfday nixt followinge, THE LAYDY GLAMMES, suster to TH' ERLE OF ANGUYSH, was brint in Edynburgh for Treason layd vnto hir charge againt THE KINGIS perfon; as I can perceyue, without any substanciall ground or proyf of mattir.

'Ther is remaynyng in Wayrd,⁵ by THE KINGIS comaundement, THE LORD FORBOSE, William Forbofe, his couffine germayne, the Lord Glammes, the Lord of Wetherburn, Hewe Douglas, Esquier, the Lord⁶ of Whytingham, Petter of Carmyghell, the Lord⁷ Glaybarve, Robert Dowgles, Mr Davy Straywham,⁸ with diuers vther.'

Concealing the Lady Glammiss's treasonable Conspiracy against the King's life, by Poison.

[THE circumstances attending the following Case have already been fully explained in the preceding Trial of JONET LADY GLAMMYS, which renders farther remark unnecessary in this place.

On Jun. 15 preceding, this entry occurs in the Books of Adjournal:—'The quhilk day, DAVID, ERLE OF CRAUFURD, ROBERT DOWGLASE OF LOCHLEVIN, THE LARD OF LAWMOND, and ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL OF SKIPYNCHIE,⁹ ar becumin pleggis and fouerteis, coniunctlie and feueralie, vndir þe pane of tuenty thousand markis, þat þe LORD GLAMMYS fall remane in Warde, within þe Castell of Edinbur', and fall nocht eschaip nor eschew furth of þe famyne, quhill he haue þe KINGIS grace Licence, vndir þe said pane.'

The reader is already aware that JOHN seventh LORD GLAMMYS, although sentenced to be executed, was merely imprisoned during the life of KING JAMES V. He was, no doubt, but a youth at that time; but it was the jealous policy of THE KING, reckoning on the revengeful spirit of the times, to put it out of the power of this young Lord to be tempted to avenge his mother's cause and his own,

After his being thus restored, Lord Glammys married Jonet Keith, second daughter of Robert Lord Keith, and sister of William fourth Earl Marischal; and died anno 1558.]

Treasonably concealing the Master of Forbes's Conspiracy to Slay the King.

[IN the preceding Trial of JOHN MASTER OF FORBES, the reader has seen that JOHN STRATHAUCHIN, or STRACHANE, was implicated with him in the same crime. Without recapitulating that case, the Editor merely inserts a short paragraph explanatory of the matter,¹ which, so far as Strachane was concerned, seems tolerably correct.

venge was John Forbefs (MASTER OF FORBES), eldest fon to the Lord Forbefs, the Chief of that Name; a young man of great courage and good education, but had liv'd a vicious life, and had entertain'd one Straghan as a companion in his debauchery. This Straghan took opportunity to desire the gift of something from John Forbefs, which not being convenient for him to give, he excus'd himself. Upon which, Straghan was so offended, that he strove to be reveng'd on him; and knowing the EARL OF HUNTLY to be at variance with JOHN FORBESS, he went to the Earl and accus'd him of having for a long time design'd to murder THE KING: And by this means found false evidences to swear to what he alledg'd, that Mr Forbefs was resolv'd to assassinate THE KING, so that by his death THE DOWGLASSES might be restor'd to their ancient possessions, titles, and honour. Whereupon John Forbes was impeach'd, and by the testimony of those false witnesss, found guilty of death by the laws of Scotland; and was beheaded.

‘THE KING was so much concern'd for this Nobleman's death, that he banish'd Straghan, and restor'd the second brother of the Lord Forbes to his brother's estate and honour: And, in token of his favour, made him one of his Bed-chamber; and the third brother was, by THE KING's interest, married to a lady of great fortune.’]

Jul. 20.—JOHN STRATHAUCHIN, son and heir apparent of Thomas Strathanchin of Lethinturk, accus'd of being a participator in the Master of Forbes's treason, having become in THE KING's will, the following LETTER, declaring the royal pleasure, was entered on the books of Adjournal, and sentence pronounced accordingly.

Convocation — Spuilzie of Teind-sheaves — Wounding, &c.

Nov. 7.—GEORGE LORD HUME,¹ Stephen Howat, and five others, found caution to underly the law at the next Justice-aire of Berwick, for Convocation of the lieges to the number of sixty persons, armed in warlike manner, upon Sep. 10 last, coming upon Thomas Lowry and Robert Lummisdene, and other tenants of Stichell, whilst leading the Teind sheaves of the Abbay of Coldinghame, belonging to them by reason of their Lease, and 'Spuilzie' of the said sheaves; and for Hurting and Wounding the said persons.

Resetting Border Thieves and Rebels — Breaking 'the Band.'

Nov. 7.—WALTER KER OF CESFURD, James Douglas of Caveris, George Ruthirfurd of Hundolé, John R. of Hunthill, and Andrew Ker of Dolphingstone, CONVICTED of art and part of the favor and assistance afforded to Robert Ruthirfurd, George R. called Cokburne, and John R. called Jok of the grene, and their accomplices, Rebels and at the horn; permitting them to pass within their bounds continually, for divers years past: For not using their utmost diligence to hinder them from committing sundry Slaughters, Stouthreifs, Thefts and Oppressions upon the King's poor lieges; nor ejecting the said Rebels, their wives and children, from their bounds and bailliaries, but knowingly suffering them to pass within their limits, and to remain therein beyond the space of twelve hours, to commit sundry crimes during the time of their passing and reset within the shire wherein they dwell: And for not concurring with their friends, men, tenants, servants and adherents, against the said Rebels, and pursuing and apprehending them, that they might be delivered up to the laws, and put to death: Nor keeping the said Rebels furth of the said limits; thereby breaking, transgressing and violating their Obligation and 'Band' to the King, and incurring the pains contained in the said 'Band.'

Usurping the King's authority — Setting a Murderer free.

Nov. 8.—ALEXANDER FORBES of Brux, and Alexander Forbes of Tolleise, found surety to underly the law at the next Justice-aire of Aberdeen, for art and part of Usurping the King's authority, in taking and detaining John Makanedoy, after the Slaughter of Christian Bowmané Lady of Bruxis, for the space of four days 'red-hand' after commission of said Slaughter: And for disposing of his goods, which belonged as an escheat to the King: And for putting the said John to liberty.

¹ The Earl and twenty others came in the King's will for Hamesucken and Convocation of the lieges to the number of 200 men, taking the Teind-sheaves furth of the barn-yard of James Kirkcaldy of Grange, his Majesty's treasurer, and factor for the Abbacy of Coldinghame, carrying off and destroying seventeen chalders of corn and Teind-bear (barley.)—The Laids of Coldenknowis, Aytounne, and Cranstoune, became surety for them.

Treasonable Intercommuning with the Earl of Angus.

Dec. 16.—ANGUS DINGLAY came in the King's will for art and part of the treasonable assistance, supply, and Intercommuning with Archibald formerly Earl of Angus, his brother, and their accomplices, Rebels and traitors, being at the horn; going with the said Rebels, and Intercommuning with them in Berwick: And for revealing and declaring to them the secrets of the kingdom of Scotland; THE KING being then in France.

Commencement of the Reformation of Religion in Scotland — Heresy — Using Heretical Books, &c.

[THE Criminal Records do not afford us the extent of information which might have been expected upon the important subject of THE REFORMATION OF RELIGION IN SCOTLAND; but from them, and from the Register of the Privy Seal, &c., very interesting notices are to be met with. The reader will find that the Editor has amply availed himself of both of these sources. Referring generally to the well-known and valuable Historical works of the Reverend Dr M'Crie, Keith's and Calderwood's Church Histories, Knox's History of the Reformation, &c., for narratives of the persecutions against the early Reformers, the Editor shall merely annex a variety of contemporaneous and early authorities, for the purpose of exhibiting interesting reports of individual cases, in so far as they are illustrative of those proceedings which appear in other parts of this Collection. The labours of Dr M'Crie, Dr Cook, and others, who have entered into a full discussion of this remarkable portion of the history of our country, have long since met with the unqualified approbation of all who have turned their attention to the study of Church History, whether considered as a separate science, or as intimately connected with the political aspect of these eventful times.

It may be advantageous to prefix to the earliest notice which occurs in the Books of Adjournal, such Papers as have been selected by the Editor for the illustration of this subject; referring the reader more generally to the other materials which follow in the course of this work. This method may perhaps be more practically useful than inserting them among miscellaneous documents in a general Appendix.

Many readers may feel gratified by the following particulars, connected with some of the Narratives which are given in this work.

In 'OBSERVATIONS UPON A HOUSEHOLD BOOK OF KING JAMES V,' by Henry Ellis, Esq.,¹ published in a recent volume of the Archæologia, he remarks, 'The presence of THE KING himself at Edinburgh,² at an auto-da-fé,' is likewise noticed on the first of March, 1539, 'Accusatio hæreticorum et eorum combustio, apud Edinburgh REGE presente. He further informs us, that this happened 'when KELLER and BEVEREGE, two Dominican friars, Sir Duncan Simson of Stirling, a priest, Robert Forrester, a gentleman of that town, and Thomas Forest, Canon regular of St Colms on the Forth, and Vicar of Dolar, in Perthshire, suffered upon the Castle-hill. A short contemporary comment upon this event, occurs in an Original Letter from the Duke of Norfolk to Lord Cromwell, preserved in the British Museum, dated Berwick, Mar. 29, 1539. Complaining of the bigotry of KING JAMES V, his Grace says, 'Dayly commeth unto me some gentlemen and some Clerks, wiche do flee out of Scotland, as they said, for redyng of Scriptures in Inglilhe, saing, that if they were taken, they sholde be put to execution. I give them gentle words; and to some money. She was in Englonde and sawe QUEENE JANE. She was Sir Patrick Hamilton's daughter, and her brother wes brent in Scotlande iij or iiij years past.'

The other numerous instances of persecutions, for 'HERETICAL OPINIONS,' as they were then termed, though interesting in themselves, are already fully detailed by the authors before named, to whose works reference may be made.]

I. NARRATIVE of the proceedings against David Straiton, of the House of Lawriestowne, Mr Norman Gourlay, and others,² Aug. 27, 1534.

IN the month of August (1534) THE BISHOPS, having gotten fitt opportunitie, renewed their battell aganeft Jesus Christ. DAVID STRATILON, a Gentelman of the House of Lawrestowne, and MR NORMAN GOWRLAY, was brought to judgement in the Abby of Halyrudhoufe.³ THE KING him self, all cloathed with reid,⁴ being present, grait painis war taken upon David Stratoun to move him to recant and burn his Bill;⁵ bot he, ever⁶ standing to his defence, was in end adjudged to the fire. He alked grace at THE KING.⁷ THE BISHOPS anfwred prouddie, that 'the King's hands war bound, and that he had no grace to give to such as were by law condemned.' So was he, with Mr Norman, after dinner, upon the 27 day of August, led to a place beside the Rude of Greenside, between Leth and Edinbrug, to the intent that the inhabitants of Fife, seeing the fire, might be striken with terrour and feare.

David Straitoun at the first hated the Preefts onlie for their pride and avarice. The Bishop of Murray exacted of him the tenth fish. His anfuere to his servants⁸ was—'If they would have that which his servants had gotten, it war reassoun they should come and reive it quhair they gott the flock.' And, as was constantlie affirmed, he caused his servants cast the tenth fish in the sea againe. Procefs of Cursing was laid aganst him; which, quhen he contemned, he was fummoned to answer for Herefie. He had bein befor verie stuborne, and despised all reading, speriallie of good purpoffes; now, he delighted in nothing bot reading, albeit he could not read him self, and exorted everie man to peace and concord, and to the contempt of the world. He frequented much the companie of John Arskine, Laird of Dun,⁹ a man marvlonlie enlightened, in respect of these times. When the Laird of Lawer-

See the close of this article, p. * 211. ⁶ Constantly. ⁷ Pitscottie thus relates this proceeding: 'They condemned David Stratoun because he would not aljure and burne his faggot, quhilke they war verrie earnest to have done; and THE KING himself procured (pleaded) for his lyff, quhilke the Bischopis grantit, if he would burne his faggat, quhilke the said David o nawayes wold doe. Quhairfor the Vicar (Dean Forret, see articles II, III, and IV,) and he war both brunt. I know no cans quhy, bot that this David wold not pay his teindis thankfullie to his Personne. And also Mr Norman Galloway (Gourlay) was brunt, becaus he was in the East-land and cam home and married ane wayit, contrair the forme of THE POPE's institutionn, becaus he wes ane Preist, to quhom it was not permitted to marrie; bot if he had had ane thousand whores he had never beine quarrelled!'

stoune, being then a young man, was reading to him upon the New Testament, he chanced to read this sentence of our master, 'he that denieth me befor men, I will denie him in the presence of my ffather and befor his Angels;' at quhich words, as one revived, he sudentlie cast himself upon his kneis, and extended his hands, and looking constantlie with his visage toward pe Heaven a reasonable time, he burst furth at lenth in these words,—'O Lord, I have bein wickied, and justlie may thow abstract thy grace from me; bot Lord, for thy mercies sake, lett me never denie thee nor thy truth, for feare of death or bodilie pain!' The issue declared that his prayer was not powered out in vaine.

Mr Normand was a man of reasonable erudition and knowledge, although it was joynd with weaknefs. He had said thair was no Purgatorie, and that THE POPE was not a Bilhop, but an Anti-Christ, and that he had no jurisdiction in Scotland. James Hay, Bishop of Rossè, satt in judgement, as Commissioner to James Beattone, (Arch)Bishop of Sanct Andrews. as Mr Fox relateth.

To that diet was summoned others also, of whom some compeared in the Abbay Kirk of Halirud-houfe, abjured and publickly burnt the Bills. Others compeared not, bot fled out of the countrie. Adame Dayes, or Dales, a shipwright, that dwelt on the North side of the bridge of Leith, was one of the number. Henrie Carnes, skipper in Leith, fled out of the countrie to the Eastern Seas. John Stewart, indweller in Leith, died in exile. Mr William Johnstoune, Advocat, fled out of the countrie; returned in the time of GOVERNOUR HAMMILTOUNE: Reid, Bishop of Orkney, bought his houses (being confiscat) with a small soume; so that it was thought great favour that he gott the use of ane chamber; bot after his death he gott no buriall, nather in Church nor Church-yard. Mr Hendrie Henderfone, Schooll-master of the Grammer Schoole of Edinbrugh, was after summoned; and in the end, for non compeareing, was condemned as contumax and Heretick. He died in England. Sir William Kirkie, Preeft, whither he compeared and abjured or fled, we can find no certaintie.

Mr Fox¹ referreth to this time Sir James Hammiltoune of Linthgow, Shiriff, and his sister, Katharine.² James Hammiltoune was accused as one that maintained the oppinions of Mr Patrik, his brother, to whom THE KING gave counsell to depairt and not to compeare; for in case he compeared, he could not help him, because THE BISHOPS had perswaded him the cause of Heresie did nowayes apertaine to him.³ And so James fled, was condemned as ane Heritick, his goods and lands confiscat and disposed wnto others. His sister Katharine appeared; and being accused of Heresie, to witt, 'that her owne works could not save her,' she granted; and after long reasoning betwene her and Mr John Spens the lawyer,⁴ she concludit in this manner, 'Work heir, work there, quhat kinde of working is all this? I know perfectlie that no kinde of workes can save me, bot onlie the works of Christ, my Lord and Saviour!' THE KING, hearing these words, turned him about and laughed, and called her wnto him, and caused her to recant, because she was his aunt. And so she escaped.

A woman of Leith was detected upon this occatioun. Quhan the Midewife, in time of her labour, bid her say, 'Our Ladie help me!' She cried 'Christe help me! Christe helpe me, in whose help I trust!' She was also constrained to recant, and escaped without confiscation of her goods, because she (was) married.

The publick CEREMONIE OF RECENTING in these times, was to beare a faggot of drie sticks, and burne it publickly; to signifie that they war destroying that quhich should have beine the instrument of their death.

BEVERAGE, Blak Frier, and DUNCAN SIMPSON, a Preift at Stirline, a Gentleman, called ROBERT FORRESTER, in Stirline, war summoned be THE CARDINALL (Beaton) and the Bishop of Dumblain. At the day of their appearance, they were condemned to the death, without any place for recantation; because, as was alledged, they were Herefiarchs or Chief Hereticks, and teachers of Herefie; and especially, because many of them were at the briddell and mariage of a Preift who was Vicar of Tillibodie,¹ beside Stirline, and did eat flesh in Lent at the briddell.² They were cruelly Murdered wpon the Cattle hill of Edinburgh, the last of February.³ That crueltie was used be the Cardinal, the Chancelour, the Bishop of Glasgow, and the incestuous Bilhop of Dumblain.

FRIAR KILLOR fet forth the History of Christ's passion in form of a Commedie,⁴ quhich was acted at Stirline in THE KING'S presenee, upon Good Fryday, in the morning; in the quhich all things were so livly expressed, that the very simple people underfood and confessed that as the Preifts and obstinate Pharisies perswaded the people to refuse Christ Jesus, and causit Pilate to condemn him, so did the Bilhops and men, called Religious, blind the people, and perswaded Princes and Judges to persecute such as profess Christ Jesus his blessed Gospell. This plain speaking so inflamed them thairefter, that they thirsted ever for his blood.

THE VICAR OF DOLOR said to his servant, Andrew Kirkie, that 'he never heard a more heavenly speech all his lifetime, than out of the mouth of a Frier KILLOR, quhen he was imprisoned in the Castle of Edinburgh;' but Andrew could not remember the words. Buchanan sayeth that 5 were burnt at that time, 9 recanted, and many fled out of the country, of the quhich number he him self was one. The names of the recaunters we have not set doune in our History; only be report we hear of Walter Cousland, merchant in Stirline, and James Watson, merchant, who burnt their faggots;⁵ but as for the Vicar of Dolor, burnt at this time, we will set doun a fuller Historie of his life and death than hath been yet extant.

DEAN THOMAS FORRET, Vicar of Dolor, preached every Sunday to his parochiners the Epistle or Gospell, as it fell for the time; quhich then was a great novelty in Scotland to see any man preach, except a Black Frier or a Gray Frier; therfor the Friers invyed him, and accused him to the Bishop of Dunkell, in whose diocesis he remained, as ane Heretick, and one that shewed the mysteries of the Scriptures to the vulgar people in English, to make the Clergie detestable in the sight of the people. The Bishop, moved by the Friers' instigation, called the said Dean Thomas, and said to him, 'My joy,⁶ Dean Thomas, I love you weill, and therfor I most give yow my counsell how yow shall rule and guid your self.' To quhom Thomas said, 'I thank your lordship heartily.' Then the Bishop began his counsell on this maner: 'My joy, Dean Thomas, I am informed that ye preach the Epistle or Gospell every Sunday to your parochiners, and that yow take not the cow⁷ or upmost cloath from your parocheners, quhich is very prejudiciall to the Churchmen; and therfor, my joy, Thomas, I would (you took) your cow and upmost cloath as other Churchmen doeth; or els, it is to much to preach every Sunday, for in so doing ye may make the people think that we should preach likeways! But it is enough for you quhen ye find any good Epistle or any good Gospell, that setteth forth the libertie of the Holy Church, to preach that and let the rest be!' Thomas answered, 'My lord, I think that none of my parocheners will complain that I take not the cow nor the uppermost cloath, but will gladly give me the same, together with any other thing they have; and I will give and communicate with them any thing that I have; and so, my lord, we agree right weel, and there's no discord among us. And quhere your lordship sayeth, it is to much to preach every Sunday, indeed I think it is to litle, and also would wish that your lordship did the like!'—'Nay, nay, Dean Thomas,' said my lord, ¹ Thomas Cocklaw. ² See Foze, p. 1154. ³ Foze adds, 'Where they that were first bound to the stake godly and marveilously did comfort them that came behinde.' ⁴ One of the Mysteries or Moralities, which were so popular, among the Clergy as well as the people, during the Holidays. ⁵ Recanted. ⁶ My joe, a familiar expression in use among very intimate friends. See this dialogue in Foze, p. 1153. ⁷ 'The mortuarie and the chrisome.' See Note at the end of the next article, p. * 214.

‘let that be, for we are not ordained to preach.’ Then said Thomas, ‘Quhere your lordship biddeth me preach quhen I find any good Epistle or a good Gospell, truly, my lord, I have read the New Testament and the Old, and all the Epistles and Gospels, and among them I could never find an evill Epistle or an evill Gospell; but if your lordship will shew me the good Epistle and the good Gospell, and the evill Epistle and the evill Gospell, then I shall preach the good, and omitt the evill!’ Then spake my lord stoutly, and said, ‘I thank God, that I never knew quhat the Old and New Testament was! Therfor, Dean Thomas, I will know no thing but my Portuife¹ and my Poutificall!’ Of these words arose a proverb, quich is common in Scotland, ‘Ye are like the Bishop of Dunkeld, that knew neither the New nor the Olde lawe!’—‘Go your way,’ said my lord, ‘and let be all these phantasies; for if ye persever in these erroneous opinions, ye will repent quhen ye may not mend it!’ Thomas said, ‘I trust my cause be just in the presence of God, and therfor I pass not much quhat do follow thereupon!’ So my lord and he departed at that time. But soon after a summond was directed, as we have heard.

III. MEMOIR of Dean Thomas Forrett, Vicar of Dolor.

THOMAS FORRETT, Vicar of Dolor, was a Gentleman of the House of the Laird of Forrets, in Fife. His father was Master Stabler to KING JAMES IV. After he had got some beginning in the Rudiments, he went to Culen² and learned his gramer, (and) be the help of a rich lady was sustained ther at schools. After he returned he was made a Channon in SANCT COLME’S INCHE, and was a fervant Papist. Ther fell out a debate betwixt THE ABBOT and Channons about their portion due to them: for their maintainance. They got the Books of the foundation that they might understand the better of quhat allowance was due to them every day. The Abbot took the book from them, and gave them a Volume of Augustine’s to read and study in stead of it. ‘O happie and blessed was that book,’ said he many a time after, quhairby he came to the knowledge of the truth. He converted the younger Channons; but ‘the old bottells,’ he said, ‘would not receive the new wine!’ Therafter he was made Vicar of Dolor. He taught his flock the ten Commandments, and shewed them the way of their salvation to be only by the blood of Jesus Christ. He penned a litle Catechise,³ quich he caused a poor child answer him, quhen any faithfull brother came to him, to allure the hearts of the hearers to embrace the truth; quich indeed converted manie in the countrie about. He rose at six in the morning, and studied till twelve; and after dinner till supper, in Summer. In Winter he burnt candle till bed-time. When he visited aney sick person in the Paroch that was poor, he would carie bread and cheefe in his gown-sleeve to the sick person, and give him silver out of his purse, and feed his soul with the bread of life. He was very diligent in reading the Epistle to the Romans, in the Latin tongue, that he might be able to dispute against the adversaries. He would get three chapters perquire⁴ in one day, and at even gave the booke to his fervant Andrew Kirk to mark quhair he went wrong in the rehearsing; and then he held up his hands to Heaven, and thanked God that he was not idle that day.

He was diverse times summoned before the Bishops of Sanct Andrews and Dunkell to give account of his doctrine; but he gave such reasons and answers that he escaped, till that cruel Cardinal David Beton got the upper hand.

Quhen he was brought to the place of Execution *Frier Harbukell*⁵ biddeth him follow him. ‘Say, I beleive in God,’ sayeth the Frier. ‘I beleive in God,’ sayeth he. ‘And in our Lady,’ sayeth the Frier. ‘I beleive as our Ladie beleaveth,’ said he. ‘Say,’ said the Frier, ‘I beleive in God and in our Lady.’—‘Cease,’ said he, ‘tempt me not! I know quhat I should say as well as ye, thankis be to God!’ So he left him, and tempted the rest after the like mauer. In the mean time, while he was saying to the people, ‘I never ministered the Sacrament but I said, as the bread entereth into your mouth, so shall Christ dwell by lively faith into your hearts!—‘ Away! away!’ said one standing beside, with his jack¹ on him, ‘ we will have no preaching here!’ Another taketh the New Testament out of his bosome, and holdeth it up before the people, and crieth, ‘ Herefie! Herefie!’ Then the people cried, ‘ Burne him! Burne him!’ He cried with a loud voice, first in Latine, then in English, ‘ God be mercifull to me a sinner!’ After that, first in Latine, then in English, ‘ Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!’ After that, as his manner was to end with some Psalms, in his prayer, he began at the 51 Psalm, in Latine, ‘ Miserere mei, Deus, secundum magnam tuam misericordiam,’ &c. and so continued till they pulled the stool from under his feet, and so wirried² him; and after burnt him.

This information Mr John Davison received from his servant Andrew Kirkie, by a Letter, quhich he translated in Latine in his Catalogue of the Scottish Martyrs. He addeth farther, that quhen the PARDONERS would come to his Kirk, to offer pardon for money, he would say, ‘ Parochoners, I am bound to speak the truth unto yow! That is but to deceave yow. There is no pardone for our sins that can come to us either from Pope or any other, but only be the blood of Christ.

Quhen the Abbot of Sanct Colme’s Inche would say to him, ‘ Will ye say as they say, and keep your mind to your self, and save your self?’—‘ I thank your lordship,’ said the Vicar, ‘ ye are a freand to my body, but not to my soul! Befor I deny a word that I have spoken, ye shall see this body of mine blow away first with the wind, in ashes!’

When on of the number was wirried and burnt before him, he said, when it was told him, ‘ Yea, he was ane wyllly fellow, he knew there were many hungry folks coming after him, and he went befor to cause make readie the supper!’ Thus ended this faithfull servant of God, invyed be the Clergie for his good life, diligent preaching of the word, and sparing the cow and uppermoist cloath, that is the mortuarie and the chrisome.³

IV. DEANE THOMAS FORRET,⁴ *Vicare of Dollour, brunt in Edinburghe.*⁵

A lytle before this tyme one Deane Thomas Forret, Channon Regular and Vicar of Dollour, by fyde Striveling, a verie vprycht man and one of good lyfe and converfation, efter a moneth or two of imprifonment, was brought furth and accused afore the Prelatis and Churchmen in Edenbrughe for sum poyntes of Heresies, (as they thocht in those dayes,) whereof the heads were read and proponed by Mr Johne Lawder, the accuser, as follows. The Accuser. Fals Heretick! Thow sayes it is not

¹ The jack, Fr. jaque, was a kind of short coat of mail. ² Strangled him, at the stake. ³ In order that the reader may be fully aware of this shocking exaction of the Roman Catholic Priests, as then practised in the case of THE CORPSE-PRESENT, the Editor cannot do better than give Dr M’Crie’s lucid explanation. ‘ The beds of the dying were besieged, and their last moments disturbed, by avaricious Priests, who laboured to extort bequests to themselves or the Church. Not satisfied with exacting tithes from the living, a demand was made upon the dead. No sooner had a poor husbandman breathed his last than the rapacious Vicar visited the family.’—‘ The corpse-present was demanded by the Vicar, and seems to have been distinct from the ordinary dues exacted for the interment of the body and deliverance of the soul from Purgatory. This perquisite consisted in country parishes of the best cow which belonged to the deceased, and the uppermost cloth or covering of his bed, or the finest of his body-clothes. The “corp-present kow” answers to “the hereyeld horse,” which was paid to the landlord (superior) on the death of his tenant.’—Life of John Knox, i, 23, 349.

‘ And als the Vicar, as I trow, He will not fail to tak ane kow
And upmaist claith, thocht babis them ban, From ane purie selie husbandman;
Quhen that he lyes for til de, Having small bairnis twa or thré,
And hes thre ky withouten mo, The Vicar must have ane of tho,
With the gray cloke that happis the bed, Howbeit that he be purelye cled:
And gif the wyfe de on the morne, Thocht all the babis suld be forlorne,
The uther kow he elickis away, With hir pure cote of roploch gray:
And gif within twa dayis or thré, The eldest chyld happis to de,
Of the third kow he will be sure. Quhen he hes all then under his cure,
And father and mother baith ar deid, Beg mon the babis, without remeid.’

lesum to Kirkmen to tak pair Teyndes, and offringes, and corse presentis,¹ thocht we hawe bein in vfe of them constitute be þe Kirk and King, and allso our Holy Father þe Pape hes confermed þe same? Deane Thomas Foret. Brother, I said not so; but I said it was not lesum to Kirkmen to spend þe patrimonie of þe Kirk as they doe, as on whoores, ryotous feasting, and on faire wemen, and at playing at cairdis and at dyce; and nather þe Kirk weill menteaned, nor þe people instructed in God's Word, nether þe Sacrements dewlie ministred vnto them, as Chryft commanded.—The Accuser. Dar thow deny þat whilk is oppinlie knowen in the countrey! That thow gave againe to thy parochinaris þe cow and þe vpmast cloathes,² saying, thow haid no ryecht to them?—Deane Thomas. I gave them againe to them þat haid more³ need of them than I.—The Accuser. Thow fals Heretick! Thow learned all thy parochiners to say þe Pater noster, þe Creed, and þe ten Commandements in Englifch, which is contrare to all acts⁴ þat thay fould know which we say.—Deane Thomas. Brother, my people are so roode and ignorant⁵ they vnderstand no Latine, so þat my conscience moved me to pitie there ignorance, whilk provoaked me learne them þe wordis of there salvation in Englifch; that is, the Ten Commandements, whilk are þe law of God, whereby they mycht observe þe same. I teached them the Beleeff, whereby they mycht know there faith in God, and Jesus Chryft his sone, and (of)⁶ his death and resurrection (for thame). Mairover I teached (and learned thame) the Lords owen prayer⁷ in þe mother tongue, to þe effect þat they fould know to whome they fould pray, and in whose name they fould pray, and what they fould ask and desyre in prayer, whilk I beleefe to be þe paterne of all prayer.—The Accuser said, Why did thow that? By our actis and ordinaunces of our Holy Father þe Pape?—Deane Thomas answered, I follow the acts of our Maister and Saviour Jesus Chryft, and of þe Apostle Paule, who sayeth in his doctrine to þe Corinthians,⁸ that he haid rather speak fyve words to þe vnderstanding and edefeing of his people, then ten thousand in a strainge tongue whilk they vnderstand not.—The Accuser said, Where finds thow that?—Deane Thomas answered, in my book heir in my fleife.

Then þe Accuser start with a bend⁹ to þe Vicare, and pulled þe book out of his hand (fleife), holding (it) vp to þe people, saying with a lowd voyce, behold, Sirs, he hes the booke (of Herefie) in his fleife, þat makis all þe din and play in our Kirk! Brother, said þe Vicare, God forgive yow! Ye could say better, if ye pleased, nor¹⁰ to call the book of þe Evangell of Jesus Chryft the booke of Herefie! I assure yow, deare brother, þat thair is nothing in this buke but þe lyfe, Latter Will and Testament of our Maister and Saviour Jesus Chryft, penned by þe four Evangelists, for our wholsom instruction and confort.—Accuser. Knowes thow not, Heretick, þat it is contrare to our acts and expresse commands, to have a New Testament or Byble in Englifche, (quhilk is enough to burne thé for)? Then the counfall of the Clargie gave sentence on him to be Brunt, for the vseing of the same buik, the New Testament in Inglis.

For these, and þe lyke sentences, was he taken to þe Castell Hill in Edenburgh and most vmerciullie BRUNT.

V. NARRATIVE of the Proceedings against Hieronymus (Jerome) Russell and Ninian Kennedy.

AFTER that this crueltie was used in Edinburgh upon the Castle hill, the rest of the Bishops behoved to shew them selves no less fervent to suppress the light than did the Cardinal. Ther wer two apprehended in the diocie of Glasgou, HIERONYMUS RUSSELL, a Gray Frier, a young man of a meek nature, quick sprit, and good understanding, and one (NINIAN) KENEDIE, quho had not past the eighteenth year of his age; a man of good witt, and excelling in Scotith Poetrie.¹¹ Mr John Lauder, ¹ See Note to the preceding article. ² See the above-mentioned Note. ³ 'More mister nor I had.' Pitscottie. ⁴ Pitscottie's reading is better, 'oure actis, that thay sould know what they say.' ⁵ 'Barbarous,' Pits. ⁶ This word and the following are in Pitscottie's version. ⁷ 'The Dominicall Oratioune.' Pits. ⁸ 1 Cor. chap. xiv. v. 19. ⁹ Bound, spring. ¹⁰ Than. ¹¹ Knor, p. 22, says he was 'of excellent ingyne for Scottische Poetry.' See also Spotswood, 67. Keith, 9.

Mr Andrew Oliphant, and Frier Mertman, were sent to assist the Bishop of Glasgow, at least to stir him up to dip his hands in the blood of God's servants. N. KENNEDIE, at the first, was faint, and wuld gladly have recanted; but quhen space was denyed to him, the Spirit of all comfort began to work on him, the inward comfort began to burst forth, als weel in visage as in tongue and word; for his countenance began to be cheerfull, and with a joyful heart and loud voice he uttered thir words upon his knees. 'O Eternall God, how wonderfull is thy love and mercie quhich thou beareth unto mankind, and unto me the most miserabill wretch and captive¹ above all others; for even now, quhen I would have denyed thee and thy Son, our Lord Jhesus Christ, and so have cast my self into everlasting damnation, thou, by thy own hand, hath pulled me out from the very bottom of Hell, and made me to feel that heavenly comfort, quhich taketh from me that ungodly fear quhairwith before I was oppressed. Now I desire death: Do quhat yow please: I praise my God I am readie!'

These Godles tyrants, the servants of Satan, railed upon godly and learned HIERONYMUS. He answered, 'this is your hour and pour² of Darknes! Now sit ye as Judges, and we stand wrongfully accused, and more wrongfully to be condemned; but the day shall come quhen our innocence shall appear, and ye shall see your own blindness to your everlasting confusion. Go forward and fill the measure of your iniquitie!'

While the servants of God thus behaved themselves, a variance ariseth betwixt the Bishop and the beasts quhich came from the Cardinal. The Bishop said, 'I think it better to spare these men than to put them to death.' The dotting³ Doctors said, 'Quhat will ye do, my lord? Will ye condemn all that my Lord Cardinal, other Bishops, and we have done? If so, ye do shew your self enemy to the Church and us, and so we will repute you, be ye assured!' The faithless man, affrayed, adjudged the innocents to die, according to the desire of the wicked.

The meek and gentle JEROME RUSSELL comforted the other with many comfortable sentences; oft saying unto him, 'Brother, fear not! More mightie is he that is in us, than he that is in the world! The pain quhich we shall suffer is short, and shall be light; but our joy and consolation shall never have an end; therfor let us strive to enter in by that same strait way quhairby our master and Saviour hath entered in before us. Death cannot destroy us, for it is destroyed already by him for quhose sake we suffer! With these, and the like comfortable sentences, they passed to the place of Execution, and triumphed over death and Satan.

Thus did these cruell beasts intend nothing but Murder throughout all the quarters of this realme, so far had that blinded and vitious man, THE PRINCE—most vitious, I say, for he nether spared man, wife, nor maid, after his marriage, more than he did befor; and had given himself to obey the cruell appetite of these bloody beasts—that he had made a solem vow, that none should be spared that was suspected of Heresie, though he wer his own son!

Messengers-at-arms deprived for ignorance, &c.

[THE oppressions and irregularities committed by Notaries and Messengers-at-Arms, during the reign of King James V, were frequently visited with the most exemplary punishment, and in most of these cases, they were accompanied by deprivation of office. Frequent instances of this have already been given in this Collection, but the Editor cannot refrain from introducing in this place, a piteous ‘Supplication,’¹ by one of them, to the Lords of Privy Council, as an example of the lamentable straits to which some of these unlucky functionaries must have been reduced, pending the necessary enquiries into their conduct.—‘MY LORDIS OF COUNSALE, vnto 5our lordschepis huimlie menis and sehewis I 5our feruitour, PATRIK DUNCANSONE,² notar publict, That qubare 5our l. ordanit me to produce befor 5ou my prothogoll buke,³ quhilk I did; and senfyne,⁴ at 5our command, I haue remanit in pis toun, and hes fallin in hevy infirmitie, and my expensis failzeit; and, as I traift, my gudis at hame wafted and sperpalit,⁵ throu my absence, becaufe I departit fa schortlie to pir pairtis, and left nane to ouerluke pe famin: And albeit I haue happynnit reklefely to vary in pe daif of my Instrumēt, pe effect pairof is of verité; and (I) nenir committit sic negligence of befor, bot (am) repute and hakdin in all pe cuntré qubare I duell, ane trew and autentice⁶ manne. May 22.—WILLIAM JAMESOUN, called Wantoun Will, Convicted of art and part of the Slaughter of John Forbes, coming upon him at Prefstoun-panny, and flaying him with a ftone.—BEHEADED.

Slaughter of the Laird of Turnberry.

[THE following Case affords an illustration of the expediency of having the whole of the Warrants and loose papers belonging to the High Court of Jufticiary carefully examiued, arranged, and bound up for future confultation. The great mass of fuch documents entirely precludes the poffibility of the Editor, or any other private individual, confulting them. They have, apparently, for more than a century, been put into bundles, without the fmalleft reference to date or fubject; and it would certainly require many months to reduce them to order. It feems obvious, that among thefe Papers many documents muft exift, highly illuflrative of the Criminal proceedings which took place for a great period of time, and might even throw light upon many obscure points connected with the History of Scotland. A number of ROYAL LETTERS and WARRANTS, bearing the sign-manual of King James V, have already been found, which, it may be remarked, are seldom engrossed in the Record; for, doubtless, the Clerks of Juticiary could, at the time they were granted, easily refer to them when required. In the present instance, the original scroll of the 'Dittay,' the 'Supplication,' and King's Letter had been left in the Volume, and they have accidentally survived the changes and chances of nearly three centuries. They are given here as a specimen of the information which we might have expected in every Trial, had these Records been always valued as they now are.

In many Cases of the greatest importance we may still expect considerable light to be reflected from these documents, when properly arranged.]

(Addressed) To our traist coufing and counfalour JAMES LORD OGILUY.

In a short time afterwards, as appears from another Royal Warrant which is still preserved among the Papers of the Court of Justiciary, a similar indulgence was granted to WALTER MACFARLAN OF ARDLEISH, of whom were descended the families of Gartartan and Ballaggan, &c.¹ He was son of Sir John Macfarlan of that Ilk, kn^t, by his second Marriage, with a daughter of Herbert, first Lord Herries, and uncle to Duncan M. of that Ilk. The Warrant runs thus:

REX,

JUSTICE-CLERK, We grete ʒou weill. In hope þat WALTER MACFARLANE, now being in fure Ward within oure Castell of Edinburgh, fall caus his frendis in þa partis do gude feruice to ws in it, committit to þame, We haue ordinit þe Capitane of oure said Castell to let him to fré ward within þe famin, he findand fouirté, firft, to ʒou, vudir þe pane of Thré Thousand pundis, þat he fall nocht efchew furth of our said Ward: Quhilk ʒe failt nocht to tak of him; and þaireftir caufe him be put to fré Ward as said is. JAMES R.

Another Warrant was two months afterwards addressed to the Justice-Clerk, which, however, does not indicate the crime for which the parties were imprisoned. It is likely the offence was of a treasonable description; at all events, it was very serious in its consequences to the parties concerned.

REX,

Justice-Clerk, It is our will, and we charge ʒou þat ʒe reffawe fouerté of DUNCANE M^cFARLANE vnder þe pane of ane Thousand pundis, and felyke of WALTER M^cFARLANE vnder þe pane of Tua Thousand pundis, þat þai fall entir agane within ony Castell we pleife, vpoun xv dayis warning: And þat ʒe reffawe iij or iiij perfonnis, ilk ane for þair awin pairt, fouirté for þe said Walter; and þe said fouerté being fundin, þat ʒe caufe þame (to be) fred furth of Ward, and late þaim þas hame, to þe effect þat þai may do ws gud feruice in our nixt Justice-aire to be haldin in Dumbartane. Books of Adjournal.

[THE loss of THE BOOKS OF ADJOURNAL,² during an eventful period of nine years, embracing the close of the reign of KING JAMES V, and the commencement of that of MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS, is singularly unfortunate, as many important public events are known to have taken place, and, during such stirring times, there would doubtless be numerous Trials. All the traces now remaining of the proceedings which took place before the High Court of Justiciary, must be gathered from the necessarily meagre notices which occur in the 'Liber Plegiationis s. d. n. Regis et Regine,' wherein memoranda of the Bonds of Caution, or surety found by persons accused of crimes, were engrossed. As will be seen, the Editor has, as usual, availed himself of all the information which he could glean from these and other authentic sources; but, in all those instances, the authority is uniformly quoted. The narrow bounds into which the Editor must compress this information, demand that these notices shall be

The nature of his crime is not alluded to. ² It is very probable that there are two Volumes lost, perhaps only one. The series of Volumes, as indicated by the oldest markings, is very incomplete, and many of the Books which now remain are the scroll or jot-books, from which, with the assistance of the Dittays, &c. the Record was afterwards made up.

High Treason — Treasonable Conspiracy with the Douglasses against the King's Life.

Aug. 16.—No traces appear in the Criminal Records of the Trial of SIR JAMES HAMMILTON OF FINNART, KN^t. The event, however, is one so prominent in the History of the country, and Sir James was a person of such notoriety, that it seems proper to preserve some brief notice in this Collection. ‘The Bastard of Arran’ was principal Steward to KING JAMES V, and had been very high in favour with his royal master. His character appears to have been eminently distinguished by personal valour, intrigue, and tyranny. Letters of Legitimation had been granted to him so far back as Jan. 20, 1512-13;¹ and through the influence of his father JAMES, the first EARL OF ARRAN, and THE KING'S personal favour and friendship, he acquired very extensive Estates.

One of the greatest stains on his otherwise cruel and ambitious career, was the treacherous Murder of THE EARL OF LENNOX at the Field of Linlithgow, Sep. 4, 1526, after that distinguished Nobleman had surrendered himself prisoner.

Without entering on a sketch of any portion of his life, which more properly belongs to the Historian, the Editor merely refers to the following quotation. *Bishop Lesley*¹ also remarks, that, ' befoir his executione, he proteffit before God, that he had not offendit THE KING ; bot affirmit, that gif he had bene als guid a fervant to GOD as he was to the King, he had not dyet so shamfully ; and confessit that he defervit that deith, becaus he offendit God oftymes for pleasour of the King ; and theirfore prayit every one to taik exempill of his doingis !'

He married Margaret Levingstoun, Lady of Easter Wemyss. He was executed as a Traitor at Edinburgh, August 16, 1540 ; and his immense estates were Forfeited, and bestowed upon numerous Courtiers. In 1543, his son James obtained a recall of the Forfeiture.

' ABOUT the same tyme JAMES HAMMILTOUN, SCHEREF OF ²LINLITHGOW,³ and cowling german to SIR JAMES HAMMILTOUN (OF FINHART, bastard brother to the Earle of Arrane,) com to Scotland, eftir long banishment, quhill as he avovid to accuse Bastard James be law, purchessing Licence to com in the contrey for a certane space ; and vnderstanding quhat dainger baith himself and those that profess the pure doctrine of the pure Gospell stude in, fend his sone to THE KING, being in jorney towardis Fyff, quho com to him befoir he boited⁴ and frauchtit. The man, suspitious of natour with baschfull newis, affirmeing that it stude him to no les nor⁵ his lyff, perrelous to the hail realme, wyles he prevented⁶ the deid be punishment of the Tratur.

' THE KING, quho haillid to Fyff, fend the young man back againe to the Exchequer ; quhair he commandit James Leirmonth, his Maister Houthald, James Kirkealdie, Grit Thesaurer, baith men of sum Religioun, and Thomas Eryskine, ane earnest Papeist, Secretar, to convene, willing thame to credeit that heirer as him self ; and thairwithall tuik ane knawin ring from his finger, and fend to thame as ane pievie taikin. Thay, consulting vpon the mater, apprehendit James Hammiltoun, immediatlie efter his dinner, and reddie to depart hame to his awin hous, caryid him to the Castell, and impressid him. Thay, vnderstanding be thair exploratouris,⁷ that THE KING was moveid, vpon fute,⁸ to releive him, befydis the commoun dainger of the contrey, fleiring thame feluis, gif ane factius puissant man, ignominidlie vlid, fould escaip scot-frie, not ignorant how bitterlie and crewellie he wald reveng himself ; repairing with all expeditionn to Court, agmenting all thingis alse suspitiouslie as thay possibillie could, the present dainger, his mischevous naturall,⁹ his reddie wit, and grit substance, perfwadit THE KING not to releive a man baith craftie and bandd, and now provockid be ignomie, vntryid. Quhairvpon, THE KING past first to Edr., from thence to Seytonn, commanding in the meintyme to present Sir James Hammiltoun of Finhart to judgment ; quhilk, according to the custome of the realme appointid, he was convict and Beheidit. Eftir his death (he was) quarterid, and his quarteris hung wp wpon the publick pairtis of the Towne, in Awgwft 1540.

The crymes laid aganis him war, that he wpon a day determinid to brek vp THE KINGIS Chalmer to slay him; (and) that he had previe conferencis with THE DOWGLASSIS, declaird enemyes of the realme. His death, becans of his former wickid lyff, was lamentid of verrie fewe, except of his awin freindis and the Preiflis, who had fixt the hoip of the suretie of thair haif estait in him.

Eftir this tyme, THE KING begaane to suspect the Nobilitie. Solicitude pinchis his troublid mind; quihilk wnfettillid, was trublid in the nicht be visounes; quhair of ane is repoirtit of, verrie notabill. He thoct he saw Sir James Hammiltoun of Finhairt com vpon him with a naikid sword, and first cutid his right arme, and nixt his left from him; and eftir he had threatned, eftir schort space, also to tak his lyf, he evanifchid. As he awalkid in ane feir, and renouled vpon the event of the dream, schort space eftir, he was adverteized that baith his fones war deceifid, the ane at Sanctandrois, the wther at Striueling, on ane day, and almost in ane hour.

(May 3, 1541, apud Jedburgh.)—He again found caution that ‘ he fall vse and repare ane myle about þe Tovne of Dunbertane, as in our fouerane lordis warde,’ under the pane of 10,000 l. Among others of the new cautioners were William Stewart of Trakware, John Mow of that Ilk, Walter Ker of Cesfurde, Robert Scot of Howpaslot, and Gilbert Ker of Grenehede.—(Nov. 24 and Dec. 4.)—THE KING’S WARRANT was granted for again allowing him free Ward within the same limits, under the pain of 10,000 merks.

Caution to pass furth of the realm.

Mar. 13.—‘ PATRIK CULQUHOUN, now being in Warde within þe Castell of Edinburghe,’ found Thomas Stewart of Gawstoune cautioner or surety for him, ‘ þat he fall pass furth of þis realme within þe space of xxx dais, and remane furth of þe samyn at þe plesour of þe KINGIS grace, vndir þe pane of V^c. merkis.’

Caution for the Laird of Blackadder.

May 5 and 6, 1541, (apud Jedburgh.)—JOHN HUME of Blacader found surety that ‘ he fall remane within þe Tovne of Dunbertane, fredom pairof, and ane myle about the samyn, and nocht to extend þe boundis pairof, quhill our fouerane lord gif vthir command in þe contrare,’ under the pain of 20,000 l.—His sureties were similar to the preceding, with the addition of William Cokburn of that Ilk, John Hoppringill of Smallerraig, George H. of Torwodlee, Robert H. of Blyndlee, Adam Johnestoune of Corry, George Nesbett, baroune of Dalzell; John Lummidene, young Laird of Blenerne; Andrew Haliburtoune, young Laird of Mertoune, and Thomas Ker of Jare.

Caution for the Young Laird of Tuliduby.

Jun. 28, 1542.—JOHN STRIUELING, son and apparent heir of John S. of Tuliduby, ‘ now being in Warde within þe Castell of Edinburghe,’ found David Kincaid of the Cottis, Constable of the Castle of Edinburgh, &c., sureties that ‘ he fall obserue and keip his Warde within þe burghe of Edinbur^t, and nocht eschew furth of þe samyn, quhill¹ he be fred be our fouerane lord, vndir þe pane of ij^c merkis.’

Oppression — ‘ Colping,’ Forestalling and Regrating of Markets.

Jul. 7.—JOHN CLERK, in Drumcorse, and a number of other persons in the shires of Linlithgow and Lanark, found caution to underly the law for ‘ Colping,² Forestalling, and Regrating’ and for common Oppression of the lieges in buying and selling oxen, cows, and sheep.

APPENDIX,

ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE TRIALS WHICH OCCURRED DURING THE REIGN OF KING JAMES V.

I. ILLUSTRATIONS SELECTED FROM THE REGISTER OF THE PRIVY SEAL OF SCOTLAND.

REFERRING to the observations which are prefixed to the APPENDIX to the preceding Reign, the Editor has merely to Remark, in this place, that in order to save the necessity of numerous repetitions and copious Notes, he has thought it preferable to refer the reader, generally, to the TRIALS, &c., most of which will be found to be more or less illustrated by the following extracts. The General INDEX, to be inserted at the conclusion of this work, must ultimately render such references entirely unnecessary.

Aug. 23, 1515.—Ane Respit,¹ maid be avife of þe GOVERNOUR,² to Donald of the Blis of Hochalch, knygt., and with him vther thre scoir of personis, his kynnismen, freindis, or servandis, for all maner of actionis and crimes bigane, to cum and repare to ED^R, or ony vjer place within þe realme, to commoune with þe said GOVERNOUR, and do þair eirrandis, and returne agane; for þe space of lx dayis next to cum eftir þe dait hereof.

¹ James Muschet of Colgarthe, and seven other servants of John Earl of Lennox, also got a Remission, of this date, for the same crime. ² Histrionis. He may have been a Mummer or Buffoon. The mention of 'Playaris' are frequent in the old Records, Treasurers' Accounts, &c. ³ Many others were Remitted for the same offence, but, except in the cases of persons of distinction, it seems unnecessary to enumerate them. ⁴ ALEXANDER LORD HOME, and his brother Mr William Home, were beheaded at Edinburgh, Lord Home on 8th, and his brother on the following day, 9th October, 1516, and their heads were affixed on the Tolbooth. As a specimen of the contempt which our older writers seem to have entertained for chronological accuracy, Lesley (p. 107.) mentions the 8th, Buchanan (xiv. 7.) says the 11th, and his authority is followed by Crauford in his Officers of State (p. 324.), &c., and Sir James Balfour (I. 245.) fixes the 26th day of October, 1516. Pitcottie and others do not mention any date. The Peerages follow Lesley's authority. See Hood's Peerage, I. 735, &c. Those who are most familiar with the Chronicles, will easily recollect more serious discrepancies in matters of much greater moment. On Jul. 21, 1520, George Home, brother to the deceased Lord, came to Edinburgh with a great company, and in presence of the Provost took down the heads of his two brothers from 'the Tolbaithe gavell, quhair thay war fixt with iron.' They returned on the 25th, and 'causit solempne funeral and obsequies be maid in the Black Fryers, for the saulis of the saidis Lord Hume and his bruder; quhairat thair wes greit offeringis and banquetis maid, and returnit hame to thair awin dwellingis.' Lesley, 116. See also these Extracts, Oct. 12, 1528. ⁵ Several other Remissions were granted for the same crime to persons of no note.

¹ These words are struck out of the Record. ² This French knight had been appointed Lieutenant and Warden of the East Borders on the execution of THE EARL OF HOME, which gave great offence to the Scottish nobility, who naturally felt jealous of the appointment of foreigners to offices of such distinction. In the absence of the Governor, in France, the Homes got up a mock Siege of the Castle of Langholm for the purpose of drawing out the Lieutenant. Their plot succeeded, for De la Bastie left Dunbar with a pretty strong force, but fell into the hands of David Home of Wedderburn, who surprised and killed him and four other Frenchmen, and affixed his head on the Tolbooth at DUNSE, on Sep. 19, 1517. See Lesley, p. 110; Balfour, i. 245; and Pitscottie, p. 307, which last author, in his usual quaint style, informs us, that 'being ane stranger, and not knawing the ground weil, he laired his hors in ane mos; and thair his enemies cam vpoun him, and slew and murdered him verrie vn honestlie; and cutted aff his head and carried with thame. And it was said that he had long hair plett in his neck, quhillk David Home of Wedderburne knitt to his saidle-bow and kept it.' The Scottish writers strangely disfigure the name of this distinguished individual. He is called Bawty, De la Beauté, Bautie, and finally, old Pitscottie distances them all, by dubbing him TILLIBATIE! ³ Stirrup-holder. ⁴ Hired or waged soldiers; troops serving for pay.

II. ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE REIGN OF KING JAMES V, SELECTED FROM THE ACCOUNTS OF THE LORD HIGH TREASURER OF SCOTLAND.

[THE Editor presents here to the reader the result of a laborious and patient investigation of another portion of the truly valuable Records of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland's Accounts. If, in his eagerness to bring to light much important historical matter, he has erred, by collecting too many particulars, strictly speaking, unconnected with the nature of this work, it is hoped that even those who are least inclined for such enquiries, will readily excuse the indiscretion. It has long been the Editor's conviction, that the real complexion of great public events are often most clearly understood and displayed by the investigation of such authentic sources as the public Records. The intricacy and extent of these documents, however, are such as to discourage, or altogether to deter, the generality of authors from even making the attempt at so serious an undertaking.

It has been thought best merely to add a few brief explanatory Notes, because the dates in general indicate the Trials illustrated by this and the preceding Appendices.]

⁵ That; who.

¹ One of the Ordinary MINSTRELS. ² These payments occur, termly, in every account. ³ A number of splendid dresses are entered in the accounts at this period, preparatory to this grand solemnity. Offerings were made in ST GILES'S KIRK, all the 'hangyn,' or Tapestry, was brought from Stirling, and extensive repairs were made on the Palace of Holyrood. The dresses consist of 'Clayth of Gold,' 'crammasy sattin,' 'purpoure vellous,' 'blak vellous,' 'gray vellous,' 'carrowit sattin,' 'blak trailze,' 'braid blak taffatis,' and 'reid taffatis.' One of the dresses, May 25th, is entered thus: 'ITEM, bocht fra Evangelist, xviiij elne thre quartaris and ane half of blak vellous, to be JAKKIS, THE SECRET, and vtheris his campaneonis hoggotounis (haquetons), price of the elne xlvij s., summa, xlvii li. viij s. iiij d.

millar. The cause of his removal has been recorded by Bishop Lesley, who states, that 'THE QUENE being in Ingland, heiring of the departing of THE GOVERNOUR furth of Scotland, returnit to Edinburghe, the xvij day of Junij, with ane quiet trayne; bot wes nocht admittit to vissie THE KING in the Castell; quhill, in August thaireftir, becaus thar wes sum feir of THE PEST in the Castell, THE KING wes transportit to the Cragmillar, quhair THE QUENE vissiet him oftymes. Bot thair-through rais ane greit suspition that he suld have bene stollin away be her into INGLAND; and thairfoir he wes brocht againe to the Castell of Edinburch, and wes keptit thair to the returning of THE DUKE.' Bannatyne Club's Edit. p. 109. Extraordinary precautions were accordingly adopted, and many payments are made for articles for the King's use and diversion. See also Pinkerton, II, 168.

² It is unnecessary to add the other entries for summoning Witnesses, Assise, &c. &c. They are numerous, and prove that the utmost vigilance and activity were employed to bring the Murderers speedily to justice.

³ These and the preceding notices appear to have been entered merely as explanatory memoranda, without any reference, excepting to the subsequent expenditure in the Account.

⁴ That.

⁵ Others were sent to the various shires, &c.

⁶ Notifications and warnings for attendance, &c. were sent to LAUDER, HATHINGTOUN, and PEBLIS.

⁷ A favourite abbreviation for 'ane' at this period.

⁸ A rope of twenty-four fathoms.

¹⁰ This person founded a great many Guns in the reigns of KINGS JAMES IV and V, all of which he quaintly inscribed thus—(See Lesley, p. 81. Balf. Annals, I, 232, &c.)

¹ These mercenaries were then termed 'BANDIS OF WAGEOURIS,' in contradistinction to the irregular troops who were bound to perform military service, by virtue of Feudal tenure, &c. ² Seemingly the pay of five soldiers, who had died. ³ Probably 'Alexander Chalmour.' See Jul. 23, 1515, of these extracts. ⁴ The family of Scrymgeour, Constables of Dundee, enjoyed the honourable Office of heritable Banner-bearers to the King; which post of carrying the ROYAL BANNER, they could only claim in the event of the KING's actual presence in the field of battle, or when his Banner was borne before his Regent. The Heritable Standard-bearer bore the GREAT STANDARD of SCOTLAND in Battle, in all Wars where it was ordered to be unfurled, whether the King or his Regent, or merely his Lieutenant or General, were personally present. See Apr. 30, 1523, of these extracts. ⁵ On Jul. 22 preceding, he got for his year's fee xx li., and 'for making of his expensis throcht England to my lord Governour, 1 li.' ⁶ Champanzee. ⁷ Over and above. ⁸ Of Finnart. ⁹ Christiern II, King of Denmark, an ancient ally, had applied for a force of 1000 Highlanders to assist him in subduing his rebellious subjects of Sweden. The demand was parried, on the score of the disturbances which had broken out on the Borders of Scotland, &c.

² James Beaton, Archbishop of St Andrews.

³ Pinkerton, II, 212, calls this personage 'GOUZOLLES, denominated Captain of Milan.'

He was joined to JOHN fourth LORD ERSKINE in the custody of the KING, and 'with a guard of thirty-three Frenchmen was also to attend the QUEEN.' His appointment by Albany excited much disgust on the part of the nobles, who saw each fresh installation of foreigners into posts of dignity, with increased indignation. See also Oct. 16, 1529, of these Extracts, where he is called 'THE DUKE OF MILLANE.'

⁴ The Stryngeours were heritable ROYAL BANNER-BEARERS. See Note to Mar. 15, 1517-18, of these Extracts.

⁵ A great many similar messengers were dispatched, unnecessary to be enumerated in this place.

¹ See this Collection, I, * 114, &c. ² Another Messenger was dispatched on 1st March. ³ The game of TENNIS, called caiche pell, caiche, kache, &c. in the old Records, was a very favourite game at the Scottish Court, during this and the preceding reign. There are numerous traces of it through the whole of these Accounts. The curious and valuable Registers of Aberdeen also abound in similar notices. ⁴ From another entry, on Jun. 29, it would appear that the servants had invented a foolish sport for the young King's amusement, being a mock Assault of a Castle, the missiles on both sides being eggs. It may easily be imagined, in what a plight both victors and vanquished would be after a cessation of hostilities. ⁵ In pledge, or pawn. ⁶ The King's CHAMPION. ⁷ On Mar. 8, his servants, who were entrusted with ten couples of 'rachis' (bounds), got fifty pounds for their 'servandis.' Their first achievement was to worry three sheep, for which the owner, 'a pure woman,' was paid xx s. ⁸ The King's Wet-nurse. ⁹ Probably so nicknamed for his dexterity in making grimaces. ¹⁰ Tearing in pieces. ¹¹ Other Messengers were sent in different directions. See notice of this Raid against the ARMSTRONGS, &c. I, * 152, &c. Reference may also be made to the preceding Appendix.

¹ Over and above. ² This seems a very extraordinary measure, unless it can be interpreted to indicate, that L.100 was remitted to him of the amount of his Composition. ³ The Hangman, or public executioner. See Dr Jamieson's Dict. and Sir Walter Scott's Novels for explanations of the term. ⁴ Watching. ⁵ See Note to Jun. 16, 1532, of this Appendix. ⁶ There is no date affixed to this and the six following entries, which commence the accounts of 'Money at the command and Precepts of THE KINGIS, debursit to sundry personis.' ⁷ These payments continued for a considerable time. In the next account other entries are made, see Oct. 4, 1531, &c. Many similar traces of THE KING'S liberal patronage of literary men are to be found in these records. ⁸ Re-purchased. ⁹ A number of other payments for transporting geir of the Wardrob, &c. &c. These entries occur annually at Paische, or EASTER, and often at Christmas, &c.

A great number of similar entries occur for sums paid her for embroideries, &c. ⁵ This is entered among the ‘LEUERAYIS AT THE FEIST OF ZULE.’ ⁶ For the Murder of James Inglis, ABBOT OF CULROS, the same day. See I, * 151. ⁷ Sir William Louthien. Ibid. ⁸ Messengers were also dispatched for the ‘Lorde of Montgomery, the Erle of Mortoune, and Lord Seytoun.’ ⁹ So many notices have occurred, in the course of this Collection, relative to ROBIN HOOD GAMES, that the Editor thinks the following extracts will be acceptable to all readers. Reference may be advantageously made to Brand’s Popular Superstitions (Ellis’s Edit.), Dr Jamieson’s Diet., and Sir Walter Scott’s Works, though it may be affirmed that the present are the most interesting and minute which have hitherto been laid before the public.

¹ A great many more payments are made for dresses, provision for the horses, and 'iijj doggis to my Lord OBINZE;' xl li. to GUILLIAME, Franche post, &c. &c. ² JAMES ABBOT OF KELSO AND MELROSE, a pupil of George Buchanan. On Oct. 8, 1534, he got a charter of the Estates forfeited by the Earl of Angus, Reg. Mag. Sig. xxv. 241. Obiit 1558, sine prole. His mother was of the family of Sauchie. ³ These words are inserted, in larger letters, on the margin. ⁴ In this and the other instances 'SPANZE' had been written and 'FLANDRES' substituted.

⁵ 'CIPRE' on the margin. It does not appear, from any other entries in these Accounts, who this kingly personage was. The Editor is inclined to believe that the 'KING,' 'the PRINCE,' and 'the MORE,' belonged to one or more of the numerous bands of GYPSIES or BOHEMIANS, who infested various countries of Europe at and previous to this period, in such overwhelming numbers, as eventually to call down upon them the cruel, but perhaps necessary, severities which continued to be practised against that devoted race for nearly two centuries after this time. For numerous interesting particulars relative to this remarkable people, see this Collection, III, 590, &c. 'KING CRISTALL,' mentioned under date Aug. 23, 1530, of this Appendix, was likely another of these artful wanderers.

³ See also Aug. 5, 1535, for another entry relative to the KING'S DWARF. He also gets 'doublat, hoise, and bonnat,' on this occasion, for his 'ZULE LEURAY;' and on Sep. 27 preceding he had a payment of xl s. The Editor is of opinion that this is the individual DWARF for whom the well known Poem in the Bannatyne MS., entitled 'ANE LITTL INTERLUDE OF THE DROICHS PART OF THE PLAY,' was written.

⁴ There have already been given some instances of the KING OF BANE in the course of this Collection. The custom was similar to that still observed in England on Twelfth Night. See I, * 115, and Note, &c. The Editor does not recollect to have elsewhere met with a notice of the QUEEN OF BANE.

⁵ Bowit, bolt.

⁶ A number of other entries about the Blak kist and Reliques. ⁷ On Jun. 9, xij li. were paid him for the same purpose. The public ALMS given by KING JAMES V, at this period, was Sixteen pounds, monthly, besides his numerous benefactions and private charities. See Aug. 21.

¹ Tocher, dowery, or Marriage-portion.² Tricentalis. Three hundred MASSES.³ The LADY L., oneof the King's Mistresses. This must have been either the Lady Lochleven, (Margaret, daughter of John, twelfth Lord Erskine, and mother of the REGENT MURRAY,) afterwards the wife of Sir Robert Douglas of Lochleven—or Elizabeth, daughter of John, third Earl of Lennox, who bore to the King, Adam, Prior of the Charterhouse at Perth. There are many payments to this individual.⁴ The one half.⁵ Purchased.⁶ These initials are on the margin. The extract is made to notice the number of such entries for dresses, trinkets, &c. &c.

⁷ The Anti-

quary need scarcely be reminded that both the Chronicles and Translation of Livy have been admirably edited by THOMAS MAITLAND, Esq., Advocate, in Three Volumes Quarto.

⁴ What the names of these unfortunate young ladies were, the Editor has not been able to discover. The Peerages mention only one daughter of John, sixth Lord Glamis, ELIZABETH, married to Ross of Craigie; but it is probable that the Ladies mentioned here were daughters of Lady Glamis by her second marriage with Campbell of Skipnish, who was killed in attempting to escape from the Castle of Edinburgh about the period of LADY GLAMIS'S EXECUTION. See I, * 187, and the preceding Appendix, &c.

² There are various entries of the same kind for the King and Queen's books.

³ Shoes.

⁴ Curches, caps. There are also many entries for towels 'to rub the Kingis hede,' and 'to dry the Kingis hede.' It appears that JAMES V. regularly bathed his head; and that he used all manly sports and exercises to brace his frame.

⁵ The Editor has only thought it necessary to give a few instances of the QUEEN'S taste for Embroidery. The quantities of gold and silver thread, silk, &c. sent her, often monthly, amply prove her great industry, and the numerous works of embroidery and tapestry which she and her Ladies of honour must have executed.

⁶ Ribbons.

¹ See a curious instance of a similar entry, Mar. 26, 1541, of this Appendix. ² Ribbons. ³ There are also charges for 'xvj elnis frenzeis,' iiij sets of 'kuoppis,' 'fassis,' and 'stringis of silk.' ⁴ This is evidently O. Fr. orfèverie, gold embroidery, which is often written orfrage and orphray in ancient writings. ⁵ Charges for 'bukrem,' 'rubennis,' &c. ⁶ Embroidering. ⁷ There are other furnishings too numerous to be detailed. ⁸ Made by Johne Mosman. ⁹ There were likewise furnished other CHENZES, bracelatis, &c. to a considerable amount, also made of the King's awin gold. ¹⁰ Probably a dumb favourite at Court. ¹¹ KING JAMES V, like the other Princes of the Stuart family, was passionately fond of fine Horses, and had a most extensive variety of all kinds. He sent messengers to Spain, Denmark, France, England, and Flanders, &c. for the purchase of stallions and brood-mares; and besides this, received from foreign Princes, and from his own and the English nobility, numerous presents. Besides the Grooms and under-stablers, there often appear in these Accounts payments to above twenty 'children in the Stabill,' (Stable-boys, &c.) for liveries and wages. There are no data to ascertain the extent of THE ROYAL STED, but the number of servants employed may lead to a pretty accurate conjecture.

² Probably used instead of a coral for cutting the young Prince's teeth. ³ Nagbuts. This is selected to remark, that great quantities of nagbuts, culverins, and all kinds of Artillery and ammunition, were imported from Holland, Germany, Denmark, &c., in 1540, 1541, and 1542. The small arms were often in ninety-nine number at a time, perhaps from restrictive regulations in these countries, only suffering their exportation if under 100 in number.

¹ This is selected to repeat former observations, that the QUEEN must have passed much of her leisure hours in EMBROIDERING in Gold and Silver. In almost every month of these Accounts there are large payments for furnishings of Gold, silver, and silk thread, &c. On Feb. 12, another charge is made for 'xx½ dowbill hank of sewing gold, xxij li. xj s.' It is unnecessary to multiply similar entries, which are very frequent, and the quantities are usually two or three pounds weight at a time. ² In another entry this month, he is styled 'LORD ROBERT OF HALYRUBIOUS.' Such entries occur almost monthly. ³ Sweet-meats and Rhenish wine. ⁴ Eau de vie, French Brandy? ⁵ The other furnishings consist of Abbis, emmettis, towellis, altar towellis with croces of fyue silk, behis, corporallis, vj tynne crowettis of the fassonne of siluer, ane caip of clayth of gold, and ane caip of blew dames with sternis (stars) of gold. ⁶ See the entry, Mar. 22, 1539-40, of this Appendix. ⁷ Several notices occur of this individual. He was probably a DWARF, or BUFFOON, as would appear from the nature of the dresses given him from time to time. His name, however, is never mentioned. Several Dwarfs, male and female, were entertained at the Scottish Court, and had regular pensions and liveries assigned to them.

⁷ There is another charge of vij li. xij d. to Johnne Forestar, bowar, for Arrowis, the same month. ⁸ The concluding entries, under this department, at the close of the reign of KING JAMES V, are so interesting, and contain mention of so many persons whose names have long been familiar to the Historian and Antiquary, that the Editor has deemed it proper to give the payments at large. He believes such an enumeration is likely to be acceptable to readers of every class, as it affords such minute details of the internal economy of the Royal Palace, &c.

Their collection of Armour for the TOURNAMENT was equally remarkable, with all kinds of Jedburgh-Staffs, pikes, Cross-bows, &c. &c. The nature of the Armour here enumerated, has frequently been explained in the course of this work.⁷ On Dec. 22, Robert Logane, YOUNG LAIRD OF RESTALRIG, got expensive dresses of 'blak Damese' and 'Sating,' &c. It is likely he was the person here mentioned.

DEATH OF MARGARET, QUEEN DOWAGER OF SCOTLAND.

[THE date of QUEEN MARGARET'S DEATH has long been a doubtful and controverted point, and is now, for the first time, settled from indisputable authority. It is only necessary to notice a few of the earlier writers, as the later authors merely perpetuate their errors. Bishop Lesley states, that immediately after the 'Quene moder' had stood 'Godmoder' to PRINCE JAMES, (which event he dates 1539,) she 'passit to Methwen, to remane thair with hir husband; quhair scho tuik seiknes, and schortly eftir deceassit; and wes buryit in the Charter-Hous Kirk, at PERTH, in King James the Firstis graif, with greit honour and pompe-funeralle, THE KING him selfe and mony Nobill men being thair present.' BANNATYNE CLUE'S Edit. p. 157.—Balfour falls into the same blunder. Annales, I, 270.—The above entry in the Treasurer's Accounts is confirmed by 'THE CHRONICLE OF PERTH,' which has recently been printed for THE MAITLAND CLUB. 'QUEEN MARGARET, mother to King James the Fyft, deceisit on Sanct Munokis day, in Methuen, 1541 yeiris; bareit in the Charter hous, besyde Perth, the Kingis Maestie, Nobilitie, and Barronis being present.' Chron. of Perth, p. 2.—It is proper to add, that there are two Scottish SAINTS in the Calendar for October, ST MONON, martyr, at Arduena, A.D. 404, Oct. 18—and ST MARNOK, Bishop and Confessor, who died at Kilmarnock, A.D. 322, Oct. 25. The former of these, however, is the likeliest date of the two, from the various entries, and from the time which must have been employed in preparing the Funeral Ceremonies and 'DWLE' dresses.]

² Other messengers, dispatched with similar Letters.

³ Probably the same individual who is elsewhere styled 'The Littill Turk,' one of the Court Dwarfs. From the quality of the dress, he appears to have been a Jester or Buffoon, whose molly dress was green and yellow.

⁴ He also got a doublet and hose of 'blak fustiane and Scottis gray.'

⁵ It is unnecessary to enumerate these, for although they are interesting, they are too numerous to admit of insertion.

CRIMINAL TRIALS

AND OTHER PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

Slaughter of the Laird of Keir.

Jan. 5, 1542-3.—DAVID SCHAW found surety (Johne Ker, son of Andrew Ker of Fernyhirst) to underly the law at the next Justice-aire of Stirling, for art and part of the cruel Slaughter of SIR JOHN STRUETING OF KERE, KN^t.—Alexander Schaw of Sauchy bound himself to relieve Ker; and Alexander, brother of David Schaw, obliged himself to relieve both of them of their cautionry.

Slaughter of the Laird of Auchinfranko.

Jan. 11.—JOHN MAKNACHT OF KILQUHANNITE (being then at the horn) found surety to underly the law at the next Justice-aire of Kirkcudbright for art and part of the cruel Slaughter of WILLIAM SINCLARE OF AUCHINFRANKO.—(Apr. 17, 1543.) Andrew Herys, brother of William Lord Herys, became surety for his appearance to answer for the said crime.

Caution for Lord Glamis — Lady Glamis's Treason, &c.

[THE incidents connected with the Cases of JONET LADY GLAMMIS, and JOHN LORD GLAMMIS, her son, have already been treated of so fully, in a former part of this Collection,¹ that it is unnecessary to recapitulate in this place. It is proper, however, that the reader should bear in mind, that LORD GLAMMIS's Forfeiture was afterwards openly rescinded in Parliament, Mar. 15, 1542,² and that his lordship was restored to his dignities, lands, &c. The reasons assigned are too remarkable to be omitted in the present Collection. They were as follows. Casting down and breaking an Image of Saint Magdalene.

[IT may seem surprising to many readers, that so few instances occur in the Criminal Records, of proceedings against such of the early Reformers, in Scotland, as in their furious zeal defaced and overthrew so many splendid Religious Houses. In the Appendix to this and the preceding Reign, however, the reader will find many interesting notices, which have been obtained from other authentic sources, unnecessary to be recapitulated in this place. Among others which might easily be cited, the following is so remarkable, that the Editor thinks it an apt illustration of the spirit of individual Reformers, some of whom were, from constitutional timidity and other causes, compelled to recant; but afterwards, even in the face of tortures and the cruelest death, adhered to the Reformed faith. The tyrannical but vigorous manner in which the Popish clergy dealt with the first outbreakings of 'the Heretics,' as is already familiar to all, was unable to quench the faith of those good men; to whose fearless exertions, under God, we mainly owe the religious freedom which this country presently enjoys. The reader may refer, with advantage, to Dr M'Crie's last (5th) Edition of the Life of John Knox; where, in the Appendix to Vol. I., he gives many interesting particulars of the 'SCOTTISH MARTYRS.'

'WALTER STEUART, brother to Andrew Stewart Lord of Ochiltrie, was accused before BISHOP DUMBAR OF GLASGOW, in Marche (1533), for CASTING DOUNE ANE IMAGE IN THE KIRK OF AIRE. He recanted his oppinionns, after long dealling with him. Bot in his returning hame, he drowned in the Watter of Calder; so that, falling from his horse, none could rescue him. At lenth, getting hold of a great stane in the watter, he cried to his frinds and exorted them that they (should) take example by him not to redeeme life by recanting of the truthe; for experience there proved it would not be sure. He protested he was there to die in the trnth which he profesed; and that being sorie for his recantatioun, he was assured of the mercie of God, in Christ. He willed them to remember this work of God to their onne proffit. Being overcome and drawne from his grip of the stane, (he was) drowned, notte being able to rescue him in the deep whither he was caried. Howbeit the watter was not deep quhair he first fell. George Guide, one of the cheeff Clerks of the Colledge of Judges in Edinbrugh, riding behind him upon the same horse, was saved.']

² He was brother to the Earl of Lennox, but never was in Priest's orders. Owing to the part he took with his brother against THE EARL OF ARRAN, Governor of the kingdom, he absconded with him. Having embraced the Protestant faith, he afterwards got a gift of the Priory of St Andrews—succeeded to the Earldom of Lennox in 1576, which in 1579 he resigned to his grand-nephew, ESME STEWART LORD D'AUBIGNY ; and subsequently obtained for himself the title of EARL OF MARCH.—See Douglas's Peerage, Keith's Bishops, &c.

³ Son of George Earl of Huntly. ⁴ On Oct. 9 following, Cuthbert Cranstoun of Maynis found caution for the same offence, and several others were summoned. Many other instances may be found in the Appendix to this reign.

Abiding from the Raid of Langholm.

May 30.—GILBERT LAW, in Eifter Ogill, found caution to underly the law at the next Aire of Forfar, for his contemptuously Abiding from the Queen's Army at Peebles, Jun. 30 last, for Besieging and recovery of the House and fortalice of Langholme, taken and detained by our ancient enemies of England.

Assisting the English — Keeping the House of Bukcane.

Jun. 5.—ROBERT HOPPRINGILL OF BLYNDLEY, and five others, found the Laird of Torwodley as surety for their underlying the law at the next Aire of Selkirk, for treasonable Assistance, giving and taking Assurance with our ancient enemies the English, and keeping the House of Bukcane (Buckholm ?) belonging to James Hoppringill of Tymes, and pasturing the lands thereof.

Treasonably Assisting the English.

Jun. 20.—CUTHBERT CRANSTOUN OF DODDIS found George Lord Hume surety for himself, Cuthbert Howlatsonne, and fourteen others, to underly the law on Jul. 31, for treasonable Assistance given to our ancient enemies the English.¹

Abiding from the Raid of Mussilburgh.

Nov. 21 and 30.—MATHEW DOUGLAS, YOUNG LAIRD OF MANIS, found John Cragingelt of that Ilk, and ROBERT MONTGOMERY of Makbehill, and John M. found Gilbert Earl of Cassillis surety for their underlying the law at the Justice-aires of Dumbarton and Air-Douglas; viz. for abiding from several Armies of the Queen, and the other parties for abiding from the Army appointed to convene at Mussilburgh. They were all at the horn, and caution was allowed to be received, for their appearance, by Warrant of the Privy Council.

Professing the Doctrines of the Reformation — Alleged High Treason — Case of Judicial Murder.

[AMONG the too frequent instances of JUDICIAL MURDER, which unhappily disfigure our early Scottish Annals, the Case of SIR JOHN MELVILLE OF RAITH is perhaps one of the most remarkable, although the circumstances have been hitherto but little known. Knox and Buchanan are the only early Historians who take any notice of this Case; but even they have barely related the fact of his execution. It is not improbable, that the particulars having been matter of notoriety in their days, they had, on that account, deemed it unnecessary to enter very minutely into the details,² which would doubtlessly be fresh in the memory of all their contemporaries. In this manner, much valuable information has, in many instances, been irretrievably lost to posterity, through the author's fear of being accused of prolixity in rehearsing events which every one was then presumed to know as well as himself.

The Editor having had the original of the following interesting GIFT, dated Feb. 12, 1562-3, pointed out to him by Thomas Thomson, Esquire, Deputy Clerk Register of Scotland, he felt so much interested in the apparent iniquity of the death and forfeiture of this virtuous man, as to be induced to make a pretty extensive enquiry into the facts attending his Trial, of which, however, no traces are now to be found in the mutilated and imperfect Criminal Records of that period.

The truly learned and indefatigable Dr M'Crie, in his illustrations of the History of the Reformation³ in Scotland, after commenting on the rigorous and tyrannical conduct of THE REGENT ARRAN, and his brother the Archbishop of St Andrews, against those Barons and gentry who were the most distinguished favourers of the Reformed opinions in Religion, states, that, instead of attempting to prosecute them for Heresy, they rather preferred to bring them to Trial for alleged crimes against the State. Among others who were banished, and had their estates forfeited, he instances Cockburn of Ormiston and Crichton of Brunston; and he then shortly notices the present case, thus—‘SIR JOHN

¹ On Sep. 12, 1548, SIR JAMES AUCHINLECK found John, Master of Glencairn, as surety for him to underly the law for the same crimes—and others also were charged from time to time. Reference may likewise be made to the Appendix, where numerous other instances will be found.

³ Dr M'Crie's Life of John Knox, (third Edit.) I, 164.

MELVILLE OF RAITH, a gentleman of distinguished probity, and of untainted loyalty, was accused of a traitorous connexion with the enemy; and although the only evidence adduced in support of the charge was a Letter written by him to one of his sons then in England, and although this Letter contained nothing criminal, yet was he unjustly condemned and beheaded.¹

Bishop Leslie, and others of our Historians and Chroniclers, are entirely silent on the subject; but fortunately several MS. authorities concur in the accounts which they have respectively given of this disgraceful tragedy. According to the Editor's usual plan, he begs to lay these before the reader, as the best mode of enabling every one to form an impartial opinion, from contemporaneous or early sources.

The first authority which shall be cited is that of Johnston's MS.,¹ where the subject is thus introduced:—'THE Slauchter of WILLIAME LORD CREICHTOUN, ane Baroun of Parliament, was as the fiyff prefaidg of their² futur tyrrannie, quho was slayne in THE GOVERNOURIS awin Hous, almaist in his awin sicht, be ROBERT SEMPLE; bot the committer of the Slauchter was exeamed be intercessioun of the Bisshopis harlot, quho was Semple's dochter. The Archbisshop, in the lait KINGIS lyf-tyme, maid professioun of the pure Religioun to thois quhom he moit trustit; bot, eftir his death, he ran heid-longis in all kynd of vyce. Amangis many wtheris his harlotis, he interteayned this Harlot Semple, nather bewtiful, of gude fame, or wtherwayis in any fort notable, except his awin kynfman, and followed him as scho had bene his lauchfull wyffe. The sewind was the death of JOHNE MELUILL, ane nobill man of Fyff, quho was ane of THE KINGIS moit familiaris, quhois Lettres fend and writtin to ane certane Englisman, recommending vnto him ane freind of his, takin Pressoner, war intercepted. Althocht pair was no suspitioun of any crime conteaned in thame, 3it (was) the wrytid Lettre and wrytter pairof harlid to judgment. His landis gewin to DAUID (HAMILTON), the Governouris sounger sone, maid the punischnent moir filthie. The arme of theise infamous deidis twitchid bot a fewe, the invy many, bot the example perteneit almost to all.'

The next authority is that of Anderson's MS., the author of which narrates the event in these terms:—'IN this meantyme³ (but others writ pat it was the Winter before) did þe LARD OF RAITII moit innocentlie suffer, and after was forfalted, becaufe þat he writ a Bill to his sone, John Melvin, who then was in England, which was alleged to have been found in þe HOUSE OF ORMESTON.⁴ But many suspected þe pranks and craft of one REIN₅EAN COKBURNE, now since called CAPTANE REIN₅EAN, to whome þe said Letter was delivered. But howsoever it was, þe cruell beafts, the Bisshop of Sant Andrewes and the Abbot of Dumfermling, ceased not till þat þe heid of the Gentleman was stricken frome him; especiallie, becaufe þat he was knowen to be one þat vnfaynedlie favoured þe trewth of GODIS word, and was a great freind to those þat were in þe CASTELL OF SANT ANDREWES, of whose deliverance, and of GODIS wonderfull working with them during þe tyme of pair bowndage, we may now speak, least that in suppressing of so notable work of GOD we mycht justlie be accused of ingratitude.' &c.

*Calderwood*⁵ likewise notices Sir John Melvill's murder in similar terms.—'IN this year (circa 1550) JOHN MELVILL, LAIRD OF RAITH, in Fife, ane aged man, and of great account with KING JAMES V., was Beheaded for writing a Letter in favours of a captive to ane Englisman, his own Bastard son,⁶ as is reported, Prisoner for the time to the Englisman, to whom he recommended him. Although ther was not the least suspicion of any fault, yet lost he his head. The letter, as was alleged, was found in THE HOUSE OF ORMISTONE. Manie suspected the craft and pranks of Ninian Coekburne, afterward called Captain Ninian, to quhom the said Letter was delivered. Howsoever it was, the cruell beafts, the Bishop of Sanct Andrews and the Abbot of Dumfermling, ceased not till the head of the Nobleman was stricken from him; especially, because he was knowne to be one that unfeignedlie favoured the truth. They were not content of his death, till that he was Forfaulted also, and his patrimonie bestowed upon David Hammitone, THE GOVERNOUR'S youngest son.'

The following VERSES on the LAIRD OF RAITH'S EXECUTION, by John Johnstone,¹ may also be considered interesting by many readers, when viewed in connection with these desultory notices.

JOHANNES MALVILLUS, RETHIUS,

Nobilis Fifanus, Jacobo V. Regi, olim familiarissimus, summa vitæ innocentia, ob puræ Religionis studium, in suspicione falsi criminis, iniquissimo judicio sublatus est, Anno Christi, 1548.

Quidnam ego commerui? Quæ tanta injuria facti?
 Hostis ut in nostrum fieviat ense caput?
 Idem hostis, judexque simul. Pro crimine, Christi
 Relligio et fædo crimine pura manus.
 O secla! O mores! Scelerum sic tollere pœnas
 Ut virtus secleri debita damna luat.

It only remains to mention, that there is some doubt with respect to the date of this event, as several of the preceding authorities class it with occurrences of the year 1550. The following quotations, however, from the LORD HIGH TREASURER'S ACCOUNTS, seem to fix it with tolerable precision.

'Dec. 3, 1548.—Item, Writtingis to þe Lairdis of Balmowto, Balwery, Petfyrrane, and to all þe Lairdis and Gentilmen of FYF,² to be heir, (in Edinburgh,) Dec. v^{to}, vpoun þe LAIRD OF RATHIS ASSISE, xxij s. vj d.

The enquiring reader is referred to much interesting matter relative to the persecutions of the early Reformers, in the last Edition of Dr M^cCrie's valuable work on the Reformation.³]

Slaughter of Lord Crechtounne of Sanchar.

[THE remarkable event which forms the subject of the following proceedings, is mentioned by all the earlier historians, who, as usual, vary extremely in their chronology. *Lesley*⁴ says, under the year 1553, ' At same tyme, THE LORD SYMPILL slew⁵ THE LORD CREYCHTOUN OF SANCHAR, in the Governouris awin Hous, apoun a sudden, within the Toun of Edinburgh. For the quhilk he was taken and put in the Castle of Edinburgh, and had bene execut thairfoir, war not the gret laboris maid be the Lorde Sancharis freindis, for faultie of his lyf, through ane aggrement that was labored betuix thame, be moyence of the Bisshop of Sanctandrois, and utheris his freindis at the tyme.' Pitscottie,⁶

however, animadvert sharply on the scandal of compounding for so heinous a crime, and states that ‘no correctioun was maid thairfoir, becaus he (Lord Sempill) was the Bischopis guid-father.’¹ Bot the plague of God left never the Bischopis hors thaireftir, becaus they left the publick fault unpunished, conforme to justice. Yit the Governour wes weill obeyed in all thingis; quhill, at the last, he and his brother the Bischope begonthe to grow greidie, and held Justice-airis throche all Scotland, under pretext of justice, to fill thair bagis and boxes with money; for thair compositiones wer alike to Theiffis and leall men, with thair lawes. They scaffed throche all Scotland, opprestand the leal men als weill as the Theiff, for thair particular commoditie.’

The parties concerned in this affair were ROBERT third LORD SEMPILL, who married, 1st, Issobel, daughter of Sir William Hammilton of Sanquhar; and 2dly, Elizabeth Carlyle, a daughter of the Family of Torthorwald. He had extensive possessions and honourable offices, having, besides his patrimonial inheritance acquired Darnley, Cruikston, &c. after the forfeiture of Mathew Earl of Lennox, and held the offices of Governor of the Royal Castle of Douglas, Sheriff of Renfrew, &c. He afterwards fought against the Queen at the battle of Langside, and obtained the Abbacy of Paisley, on the forfeiture of Lord Claud Hamilton. There seems to be no doubt that he owed his life to his daughter’s corrupt influence over the Archbishop, who swayed his brother the Regent. The injured relations of the murdered Lord, finding themselves compelled to yield to the force of circumstances, were induced to give the use of their names, as concurring in the application for pardon.

May 26.—JOHN GRANT OF BALLANDALLOCH got a Remission for

Intercommuning, resetting, and supplying Norman Leslie, formerly Master of Rothes, rebel and traitor, convicted and declared in Parliament, and being at the horn for his treasonable deeds.

Abiding from the Convention at the Borders.

Jun. 10, (apud Peblis.)—PATRICK HEPBURNE OF BOLTOUNE Convicted of breaking the Queen's Proclamation, in absenting himself and abiding from the Convention made by the lord Governor at the MARCHES towards England, for the reformation of crimes, &c., committed therein.

ANOTHER unfortunate hiatus takes place at this period, by the loss of a Volume of THE BOOKS OF ADJOURNAL, from December 18, 1551, to April 19, 1554; being apparently that which had originally been numbered 'Sevint Buik.' In the absence of this information, the Editor again begs to refer the reader to THE APPENDIX, where it will be found that neither pains nor labour have been spared by him in his endeavours to remedy all such defects.

¹ A number of persons, chiefly persons of no rank, were charged for this offence; but it is unnecessary to enumerate such instances. See THE APPENDIX, &c. for many other examples.

The following remarkable document was obtained by the Editor from the 'LIBER STATUTORUM BURGI DE EDINBURGHE,' when engaged in searching the Archives of the City of Edinburgh for Papers for the present Collection. It may not inaptly be inserted in this place, as being highly illustrative of the disturbed state of society at that period, when the reader may recollect many instances of Feuds and even of pitched battles between the Barons having frequently been fought on the public streets of the metropolis.

Slaughter of the Laird of Leidcrieff and his Son — Feud between the Drummonds and Blairs, &c.

[As, in reference to the numerous DEADLY FEUDS which, unhappily, both preceding and subsequent to this period, convulsed the state of civil society in Scotland, the Editor is, through the kindness of his friend, David Laing, Esquire, enabled to lay before the reader an interesting extract from THE HISTORY OF THE FAMILY OF DRUMMOND, which has just been printed, under his superintendance, for private distribution only.

In various parts of this work, it may be seen that the various families of the Blairs of Balthayok and Ardblair, the Charteris' of Kinfaunis and Cuthilgurdy, the Drummonds, and several other Barons and Lairds in those parts of Perthshire, were constantly involved in Feuds with each other, and occasionally with burgesses and citizens of Perth, &c. One of the most deadly of these domestic broils is contained in the following PAPERS, which have lately been taken from the Originals, still in the possession of Henry Home Drummond of Blair Drummond, Esquire, and of which, so far as the Editor is aware, no memory is elsewhere preserved. Without specially noticing the numerous other Trials and proceedings in this work connected with such Feuds, the Editor begs merely to refer to them generally.

The subject is thus introduced in the body of the history¹ above mentioned:—‘GEORGE DRUMMOND, the sone of John, succeeded, who apparently purchased the lands of Newton of Blair, for he is the first whom we understand to have been styled George Drummond of Blair. He married Jannet Halyburton of Buttergask; he had to him two sones, George, who succeeded, and William Drummond. George Drummond, the father, and William, his youngest sone, were both treacherously killed together, at an unhappy rencounter by the,² upon the 3d of June, 1554; but most of them that were present, or guilty of the Slaughter, were either brought to publick Execution, or by their submissions and satisfactions made their peace with the parties wronged, as appears by their applicationes extant.’ The PAPERS above referred to follow.

ELGIN AND FORRES.

[THE following interesting Excerpts have been procured from the *Earl of Haddington's*¹ MS. Collections, Advocates' Library, (A. 422.) The first article is prefixed to a Copy of Proceedings of THE JUSTICE AIRE OF ELGIN AND FORRES, held and begun at the burgh of Elgin, on Monday, Aug. 17, 1556, before JOHN ERSKINE OF DYNE, Justice-depute. This Aire terminated on Oct. 17, 1556, being the twenty-first day of the sittings.

The reader is referred to a similar document, which has been published, as in reference to THE JUSTICE-AIRE OF JEDBURGH, in a former part of this work;² and it may be considered a matter of some curiosity to note the difference in the styles of these Proclamations. Of course, it must be understood that such intimations as these would run in the same terms, in reference to all the other Justice-aires of the kingdom, at the periods to which they respectively belong.

It may be noticed that the general complexion of the Cases which were tried at this Aire were trivial. The only entries possessing any interest follow the Proclamation, which is here given entire.]

[ANOTHER unfortunate hiatus occurs in the series of THE BOOKS OF ADJOURNAL, from this date, to the close of the reign of Mary Queen of Scots. There is good ground for conjecturing, that many of the public Records of this kingdom, embracing from the earliest period of the Reformation downwards to the years of the reign of King James VI, had long ago been wilfully destroyed, apparently for the purpose of suppressing evidence of the many religious and political struggles which occurred during these eventful years. The only materials now left are three small quarto volumes of the scroll-books, kept by one of the under Clerks of Court, marked ' 12 Book,' from Mar. 12, 1560-1, to May 13, 1562 ; ' Aucht Buik,' from May 19, 1563, to May 19, 1564 ; and ' Nynt Buik,' from May 24, 1564, to Mar. 6, 1565. Besides these, there is a scroll Caution book, irregularly kept, from Jun. 18, 1563, to Nov. 25, 1566. Although the notices which can now be gathered from these books are meagre, they are in many respects valuable.

The Editor has, as usual, availed himself of the other Records,¹ so far as they elucidate the Criminal proceedings of that period.]

² Thirteen burgesses. ³ The last remnant of the booths of the Cramers of St Giles’s Church, Luckenbooths, &c., were pulled down about twenty years ago, to widen the High Street. ‘The Cramers’ formed part of a small alley on the North side of the Cathedral.

⁴ These were favourite love-tokens among all ranks, varying, of course, in value. ⁵ Turquois. ⁶ Ducat. It has frequently been remarked, in the course of the present Collection, that the burgesses, as well as the nobility and gentry, were possessed of plate and jewellery to an extent greatly beyond what is now usual—and perhaps this may be accounted for from the difficulty of investing the large capital which many merchants and burgesses acquired in business or otherways. So ostentatious were the burgesses and their wives, that many legislative enactments were required to repress their passion for dress and finery. A reference to these sumptuary laws may prove not uninteresting to the curious inquirer into the manners and customs of this country.

⁷ They appear to have been burgesses of Edinburgh. The only names of any note were The Laird of Spottiswod, Mr James Watsone, Mr Michael Cheisholme.

THAIRFOIR it is our will, and We desire you to refaue þe said Jhone in will at þe said day, and to latt him to libertie and fredome, as our free liege man, to þe effect þat he may labour for him selff, and aggré with his partye.⁵ And failzè not heirin, as 3e will anfuere to ws pairupone; kepend þir presentis for your Warrant. SUBSCRUIT with our hand, At Sanctandros, þe xij day of Apryill, 1562. [MARIE R.]

Mr William Scott of Balwery ‘exponit, in name and behalff of þe saidis

¹ This is the first instance where the Editor has, in the earlier Records of this Court, met with the mention of a sword having been employed by the public executioner, by order of the Justiciar, for decapitation. It is by no means improbable that death had been inflicted on the murdered man by that instrument, and that the Judge, to make the punishment still more striking, had judicially ordered the self-same weapon to be used for their decapitation. ² The name was at this period indiscriminately spelt Sibbett and Sibbald. ³ This case savours strongly of bribery of the Crown Officers, persewaris, þat William Ballingall of þat Ilk, Alefone Gowray, his moder, David B., brouper of vniq^{le} Archibald B., nerrest kin and freindis of þe said vniq^{le} Archibald, wer informit þat þe said Jhone Sibbett had impetrat ane writting of þe QUENIS grace, productit be him, ordaning þe Justice, Justice Clerk, and his deputis, to refave þe said Jhone in hir grace will, vponne sinister informatioun; and that becaus, as he allegit, þe said Jhone, be him selff, his kin and freindis, had socht to haif satisfeid þe pairtye for þe said slauchter, at þe vttermoist of þair power, and þai on nawyis will accept þe samyn; albeit þe said William and freindis wes ay reddy, lyik as þai ar zit prowyn presentlie to haue haid commonyng and acceptit gud wyis, at þe sicht of freindis, for þe said Slauchter; thairfoir protestis for remeid of law aganis þe said Writting, as impetrat vponne fals narratioun.—To þe quhilk answert Mr David M^gill, as prelocutour for þe said Jhone Sibbett, þat nochtwithstanding ony Writting þat he had impetrat be our souerane (lady), he acceptis þe offir of þe partye, and is content at þe sycht of freindis, to do þe vttermoist of his power for Assythment¹ of pairtye.—Allegis Jhone Sibbett, þat nochtwithstanding his innocence of þe ald ffeid² contenit in his accusatioun, hoipand surelie þe QUENIS grace to try his innocence þairof, he simpliciter cumis in will for þe Slauchter committit vponne ald ffeid and foirthocht felony; and vnder protestation for ciuile defensis aganis þe pairtye.

He was accordingly received in Will, and found Robert Lundy of Balgony, Mr William Lundy, fiar of that Ilk, and David Sibbett of Lethome, to satisfy the parties.

JUSTICE, Thesaurer, Justice-Clerk, Aduocattis : fforfamekle as þe day affixt for persewing at our instance, and oure Aduocattis, off þe BAILLIES AND COUNSALE OF EDINBURGH, for putting to libertie and fredome furth of onre Ward þe committeris of þe SLAUCHTER of vmq^{le} NICOLL ȜOUNG, burges of Edinburge, vnpwrist, in contemptioun of our auctorité, is þe sext day of Junij nixt to cum, in our Tolbuith of Ed^r : QUHAIRFOR, sen þe said actioun tendis heichlie to oure honour and auctorité royall, and als to þe greit hurt of þe pure freindis of þe said vmq^{le} Nicoll, it is our Will, and we charge Ȝou, þat Ȝe with all diligence awyise with þe said actioun, and Lettres direct þairupoun ; and at þe day affixt þairto, proceed and do justice in þe said mater, conforme to þe law and justice without ony delay or continuatioun. As Ȝe will answere to ws vpoun þe executioun of Ȝoure offices, ffor it is our will and mynd þe samin be done. SUBSCRUIT with oure hand AT EDINBUR^r þe last day of Maij, the Ȝeir of God I^mV^lxiiiij Ȝeiris. (MARIE R.)

DAUID SYMMER, for him self, askit instrumentis that the Justice depute declarit, that he and the remanent his collegis vpoun þe pannall fuld haif bot fax prelocoutouris.—The Lard of Merchamestonne declarit, that he wald persew na man vpone þe pannall vpoune his lyfe, bot Dauid Symmer allanerlie ; and that, because he is surelie perswadit, alswede be writting as commoning hed betuix him and the said Dauid, that he was culpabill of the crymes contenit in the Letteris.—Johne Ȝoung, &c. askit instrumentis that thai comperit nocht as prelocoutouris foirfaidis to persew þe pannall, or ony of þame, of þair lyves ; bot allanerlie ¹ insafar as þe actioun is hurtfull to þe freindis of vmq^{le} Nicoll Ȝoung, remittand þe persute þair of, of þe QUENIS grace actioun, to hir hienes Aduocattis ; bot insafar as þe Letteris beris ony actioun of pairtye, concerning þe freindis ² of þe said vmq^{le} Nicoll, þat þai wald persew þe samin aganis þa mony of þe pannalls as þai wald name. Vpoun þe quhilkis þe personis persewit askit instrumentis.

Mr Dauid Borthwik allegit that THE JUSTICE-CLERK mycht nocht be Clerk in this mater, nor voit ³ thairintill, becaus he and the Lard of Merchamestonis wyfe wes sifter and brethir bairnis, ⁴ and that thair wes bairnis betuix the said Lard and his spous.—THE JUSTICE, be his Interlocutor, fand the Justice-Clerk was Ordinare, ⁵ and mycht nocht be removit.

The said Mr David allegit, dilatarié, that the fumondis is þa generall that the samin can nocht pas to ane Assise, becaus it condiscendis de nullo genere criminis Capitalis, in speciall, that may ressaif ane particular dyet. He also askit instrumentis, in name of Alexander Guthré, that the Advocattis and persewaris past fra the persutt of the said Alexander Guthré.—THE JUSTICE, Thesaurer, and Aduocattis, requirit Alexander Guthré, Commoun Scribe¹ of Edinburghe, in our foueran ladeis name, to exhibit and produce befor þame, incontinent, the commoun Buke quhairin the Actis auent the releuing of Williame Paterfoune ar contenit.

The said Mr David allegit, that thair can be na accusatioun heir toward þe perfones on þe pannell, becaus thir Baillies ar Jugeis Ordiner, havand power of incarceration; and insofar as thai ar accusit of the out-letting of this man, as the summondis is libellit, it contenis na cryme; becaus it is nocht libellit, that this man lattin furth is nowther convict of ony Homicide, or fugitiue fra THE QUENIS lawis, as in veritie he is nother convict nor callit vpon that crime; and in caise he wer perfewit, the man mycht entir and indure the lawis of this realme: Becaus Slauchter may be committit in a mannis defence, and he is able² to vnderly the law for the famyn, as oft hes bene practifit.³ And thairfor, the perfones on the pannale can on navis be perfewit, except it wer libellit that the said man ovt-lattin wer owther convict or fugitive. Repetit the same allegeance toward Mofcrope.

Maister Thomas M^ccalzane⁴ allegit the libell wes nocht relevant, becaus it is foundit vpon the allegit latting out of Ward of Patterfoun and Mofcrope, aganis the Baillies and Counsale of Edinburgh, without ony qualificatioun how latting out of Ward is ane cryme to thame; but allanarlie qualifiand to that effect, that thairthrow thai sehew thame selfis fawouraris of þe saidis Paterfoun and Mofcrope, and contemnit thairthrow THE QUENIS auctorité, in hynderance of justice, &c.: Quhilkis qualificatiounis contenis na cryme, without it wer said thai assistit to the cryme. And the latting out of Wardouris is na contempt nor vsurping of THE QUENIS auctorité, in perfones that hes THE QUENIS auctorité of prenoning, and inputting and outputting, as the Baillies of Edinburgh hes, and hes bene in continuall possessioun thairof, past memorié of men; nocht libelland, that thai extendit⁵ thair powar, havand sic.⁶ And allegit, hynderance of justice can nocht be ane cryme, speciallie as is libellit, quhair it is nocht libellit that the principale caus is nocht discussit. The Aduocattis anfweris, that the libell is ſpeciale, and relevant aneuch,¹ and ſuld be putt to the knowlege of the Affiſe, nochtwithſtanding the ſaidis allegeances, in reſpect of the ſame libell, and of ane Act producit be the Aduocat, and ſubſeruiit be Alexander Guthré, of the dait the xv day of Marche 1563.

(Jun. 10.)—THE JUSTICE, be awyife of his Affeffouris, REPELLIS the allegeances aboue writtin.—The pammal proteſtit for remeid of law.

Maifter Thomas Mcalſane, prelocutour for James Barroun, and the remanent pammal perſewit, as being vpoun the Counſale² of Edinburghe, by³ the Baillies, that had Jurisdictionne of inputting and outputting of perſones ; allegit, that inſafar as thay ar perſewit, being vpone the counſale of the latting out of the perſones libellit, and can nocht be repute to thame as ane cryme, that thair ar nocht ſubject to vnderly an Affyſe for that deid, as allegit criminall, becaus the deid to the quhilk thair ar allegit to haif gevin counſale, is nocht certane to haif bene criminale of the ſelf ; ffor it followis nocht, that quhan thair is ane man lattin out of perſonne, that thairfore thair is ane cryme committit ; bot the preſumptioun is in the contrair, quhair ane Juge Ordinar lattis out ony perſonne, that thairfore it is nocht lauchfullie done ; And this caus is nocht to be to thame that gevis counſale in latting out of manifſt Thevis, or committing of Thift or Slauchter ; ffor to commit Thift and Slauchter, or to gif counſale pairto, is cryme of the ſelf, except it be done be auctorité ; and thairfor, gevand counſale be ordour of juſtice, and in the performing thairof, thair can na cryme follow vpone the counſale-geving to the demandaris vpoun the releving of the manne requyrit be the Juge Ordinaris ; according to the diſpenſatiounne of the Commoune Law, in Lege, nullus, &c. de regulis juris—vthirwayis thair fall ane greit inconuenient, that thair fall na counſale be gevin to Jugis Ordinaris, quhilkis in this cuntré vſis nocht to handill greit cauſſis without counſale. And forther, in all tymes bygane, thair wes neur manne accuſit of ony cryme for counſale-geving to ony Juge-Ordinar, requyring counſale in exerceing of his office. And this perſute is ane noveltie.

David Symmer aſkit instrumentis for him ſelf and his collegis, Baillies, that Johne Young, prelocutour for the perſewaris, allegit, that the Counſale ordanit the Baillies to putt the pairteis libellit to libertie ; as the Act maid thairupoune beris ; and acceptit the ſaid allegeance, inſafar as the ſamin maid for him and his collegis, Baillies.

fact and accufatione aucht nocht to be put¹ to the pannal as ane cryme, becaus thai being Jugeis-Ordinaris ouer lyffe and memberis, and incarcerationne in presone, vnderstanding the wond² nocht to be mortall, becaus it wes in sic ane place as thair apperit na danger of deid³; and zit, for mair securitye, according to thair accustomit vse, in caisis of hurt nother quhair deid wes nocht followit, nor Homicide committit, thay lett the man to plege, vndir souertie of his reentré, vndir the pane of ane Thowfsand pundis; quhilk pane oure fouerane ladeis maiestie hes caufit to ressaif, to be vsit at her plesour, as the pane of the cautionne: And thairfor, allegit, that hir Maiestie, in effect, hes appreit the ordour vsit be the Bailleis and perfones vpoune the pannale, in the releving and committing to plege of the said Williame Paterfoun, and can haif na forther cryme to lay to the charge of the saidis Magistratis and Counsale; and thairfor, aucht nocht to be putt to the knowlege of ony Assise: And producit and schew THE QUENIS Aduocateis acquittance and discharge, in THE QUENIS grace name, vpone the ressaif and aggreance for the said sowne. And as to the latting out of Moserope, producit THE QUENIS grace command and Precept for putting of him to libertie. —The said Mr Dauid Borthuik askit instrumentis, that John Young, writer, producit certane Actis of Parliament anent Slauchteris.

The said Mr Dauid allegit, that thair is na cryme qualifeit in the Summondis producit be the persewaris, that may be imput to the Assyise; becaus the releving of William Paterfoun, in maner and be ordour as it wes done, is na cryme nor offence, nor yit aganis the lawis, onther Ciuile or Mvnicipall, bot wes done according thairto; becaus the Magistratis accusit ar Jugeis-Ordinaris, havand power of lyve and membris, Shereffis, with presone, &c.: And insafar as the said Williame was tane and committit to presone for ony allegit cryme, in caise it had bene of Homicide, lyke as thair wes nane thame actuale committit. bot onlie in simpliciter Hurting, as wes thoct and belevit commonlie to all men, thay mycht of thair office, having kepit him attour⁴ ane nycht and ane day, (lyke as he wes kepit be þe space of four or fyve nychtis,) haif put him to libertie, vndir cautionne and plege, to haif vndirlyne the lawis; lyke as, in trewth, insafar as he wes gevin to libertie, the samyn wes done vndir sufficient cautionn for his reentré agane, lyke as thai haif bene in wfe be virtew of thair officis and jurisdiction, in siclik caissis and offenslis, to haif lattu men to plege, speciallie quhair the actuale deth followit nocht, past memor; lyke as thai, and all vtheris Jugeis Ordinaris, aucht to haif done of thair offices, according to the Mvnicipale Law, conformit with the Commoun Law. And thairfor, it is na cryme, nor fuld nocht be putt to the knowlege of ane Assyise; vthirwayise, na persone that had woundit ony man mycht be put to libertie and fredome, quhill⁵ the wound wer

ITEM, allegit the said Mr David, thay being Jugeis Ordinaris, as is aboue writtin, viz. Sheriffs, to be sufficient inquisitionne; and found, that the wond was nocht mortall, baith be thair awin judgement and be inquisitionne and informatioun of Maisteris Chyrurgianis, famous men,² quhairby thai fand, that the wond was nocht mortall, and thairfor, fand that thai aucht of thair dewetye to latt the said Williame to libertie, vnder cautionne; and mycht haif bene compellit be ordouris and reffoun thairto.

Cuthbert Ramsay askit instrumentis, that nowther the pairtye nor THE QUENIS Advocattis wald accuse him. Alexander Park allegit that he was nocht vpon the Counsale, bot wes allanerlie Thefaurer and ingadderare of the Commoune-gude.

The Aduocattis askit instrumentis vpon the productione of the Protestatione maid be Maister Johne Spens and Maister Robert Glenne, Baillies, of the dait the xv day of Marche 1563 (4); and desyrit the samin to be schewin to the Assyise, quhairof the tennour followis.

PROTESTATIONE be Maisteris Johne Spens and Robert Glenne, Baillies. THE quhilk day, in presens of David Symmer ane of the Baillies, James Barroune, James Adamesoune, Eduard Houpe, Alexander Park, Maister Johne Prestoun, and Cuthbert Ramsay, of the Counsale, Maister Johne Spens and Maister Robert Glen, Baillies, disassentit to þe outlatting of William Paterfoun furth of Ward; and Protestit, þat in caise Nicoll Zoung deceiffit of þe straik, and þe said Williame Paterfoun fugitiue fra þe lawis pairfor, that the burding and damage þat mycht follow pairupone mycht be laid vpon þe consentaris to his libertie; and þat þai nor THE GUDE TOUN,³ fredome and libertie pairof, wer nocht in danger, in respect of þis pair Protestatione and refusale foirfaid. And heirupone askit instrumentis.

ITEM, allegit the said Mr David Borthuik, that the latting of Paterfoun to pledge, procedit vpon ane Decrete in presens of THE BAILLIES and Counsale, gevaris pairof, be sufficient inquisition and tryell accustomat to be taikin within the Burcht, in siclik caissis; quhilk Decrete is repute as the veritye, quhill⁴ the Reductione thairof; and swa, fen the said Decrete standis in strenth, and the gevaris thairof nocht decernit be thair Juge-superiour to haif done wrang, nor zit the samyn reducit, this Criminall caus, nocht being Ciuilye decydit, aucht nocht to pas to ane Assyise.

The Lard of Marchamestoun askit instrumentis, that he persewit na man except David Symmer, as he protestit of befoir. David Symmer allegit, that the thing that he is accusit of wes done be ordinance and awyise of the Counsale; and that he wes ane officiare to the Counsale;¹ and thairfor, the thing that he did was at thair command. And for verefeing of his alleigeance, productit ane Decrete—and thairfor proteffit, quhatfumeuer danger he incurrit, the Counsale fuld releif him pairrof.

The Aduocattis past frome the perfute of Maisteris Johne Spens, Robert Glenne, and Cuthbert Ramsay: Eikand,² that this few noumer³ can never suf-fir the law, nor be decernit to haif committit the cryme libellit, nor the few noumer can nocht ordand.⁴ It is the Common Law and Mvnicipall writtin law, quhair na slauchter is committit, to lat the perfoun to plege. Item, the Affyise aucht to acquit thame, becaus vpone allegit ordinance thir personis of Counsale on pannall hes na power to lat Paterfoune to libertie, nor mak ordinance; becaus the leift of the noumer that can mak ordinance mon⁵ be fevine perfonis. Johne Young wryter, prelocutour foirfaid, acceptis this alleigeance.

It is allegit for the parte of David Symmer, that he aucht to be acquit of all cryme; becaus, gif ony he did, the fame at the ordinance of the Counsale wes done; quhilk he wes obleift to obey, as the Ordinance beris.

High Treason — Conspiracy to seize the Queen's person, &c.

[THE following proceedings give a different view of this part of the life of the noted JAMES EARL OF BOTHWELL from that which has hitherto been related by Historians. Without at all entering upon so extensive a field of controversy, the Editor has merely to refer the reader to the labours of Robertson, Hume, Laing, M'Crie, and other modern writers, for their various statements of the facts which are reported to have occurred immediately before THE MARRIAGE of MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS with DARNLEY. The subject will, it is hoped, be soon taken up by Mr Tytler, in the course of his historical work; where, from the masterly and accurate manner in which that learned and impartial author has already treated many of the most obscure and controverted points in the earlier history of Scotland, much light may be expected to be thrown upon the whole of this extremely entangled and intricate reign.

In reference to this remarkable individual, the Editor begs here to lay before the reader two very interesting extracts, which, after investigation, he procured from the Kirk Session Records of the Parish of Canongate, from whence, it may be remarked, several important historical events may be verified or illustrated. The story of BOTHWELL'S first Marriage, and the subsequent cruel Divorce, May 7, 1567,³ are already well known. This event is thus recorded in these Registers among the Marriages, under date, Feb. 24, 1565-6, 'JAMES ERLL BODUELL—JANE GORDOUN.' And in the

These events are also fully treated of by Knox, Buchanan, Lesly, (in his Defence of Queen Mary,) Melvil, Spotswood, Keith, Goodall, Tytler, Chalmers, &c. The enquiring reader will also find much useful and important information in the Collections of State Papers, &c. by Anderson, Haynes, Murdin, and in the numerous Works of later Collectors.]

The pannel produced a Respite, dated¹ Feb. 22, 1565, for the space of 19 years.

Protestis M^r David M^cGill, that the entrie of James Bog in this Court, benawyife prejudicial to the Regalitie, in respect of the committing of the Slauchter libellit within the famin; and that the fouerteis fundin to this effect, to THE CONSTABILL and his deputtis, incur na danger. And siclik, Williame Henderfoune, Constabill depute, protestit, that his entre fairfaid be nawyife prejudicial to his office.—Mathew Sinclare of Lochirmalcus, Williame Ridpeth, of that Ilk, and Andrew Ridpeth, his uncle, became cautioners for the satisfaction of the parties.

THE last of the Scroll-Books of Adjournal during the reign of MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS, (some of which, as formerly noticed, have fortunately been preserved,) ends on Mar. 5, 1565-6. A few gleanings, however, of considerable historical interest, have been obtained from a Caution Book, (‘Liber Plegiationis S. D. N. REGINE,’) which extends from Jun. 18, 1563, to Nov. 25, 1566. No other fragments of the Criminal Records can now be found, from the period of the last of these dates to the close of Mary Queen of Scots’ reign, July 29, 1567. The Trials which took place during the minority of KING JAMES VI, as given in the sequel of this Collection, carry forward the chronological series of the Records of the High Court of Justiciary of Scotland.

In one of the MS. Abridgements preserved in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates,² the following notice occurs, in reference to this period:—‘MR THOMAS CRAIG fits as Justice deput for the most part; only Naper of Merchistoune fits the two first months. And Sir Simon Prestjoune of Craigmillar had a Commission to be Justice General for a short time, viz. from 22 Jan^{ry}, 1565, to the end of the next Feb^{ry}. The reason seems to be, that at that time, Argyle had joined the discontented Lords who had took arms after HENRY DARNLIE’S Marriage with THE QUEEN, chiefly because he had been proclaimed KING without taking the advice of the Great Lords, or asking the consent of the States of the Kingdom.—Vid. Home’s Hist. of the Douglasses, in Earle Mortoune’s life, p. 287; and Spots. Hist. ad. ann. 1564, p. 190, et seqq.’ Treasonable Conspiracy — Imprisoning the Queen in her Palace of Holyrood — Murder of David Riccio, &c.

[THE minute circumstances attending the bold but unmanly Conspiracy for the Murder of THE QUEEN'S favourite, DAVID RICCIO, have been so frequently detailed, that it is not the Editor's intention to intrude any lengthened observations upon the reader's notice, in this place. It will be found that, in the text as well as in the Appendix to this reign, many interesting particulars have been collected, which are now for the first time laid before the public, equally illustrative of this Treasonable and atrocious fact and of the subsequent Murder of KING HENRY (Darnley.)

Reference may be advantageously made to the Collections of Anderson and Keith, and to the Histories of Laing, Robertson, Chalmers, &c. for many important PAPERS, each of which throw additional light on the disastrous consequences resulting from this bloody and barbarous transaction.

The following Trials of THE LAIRD OF CAMBUSHMICHAELE and his two associates, and of HENRY YAIR, have fortunately been preserved in Sir Ludovick Stewart of Kirkhill's MS. Collections.¹ As was formerly observed, the original Criminal Records of this period have long since been destroyed; but it would appear, that the Volume in which these Trials was inserted must have been extant in the reign of Charles I, when this eminent Lawyer flourished. From the same source also, the Editor has recovered the following brief Memoranda, containing particulars,² which are thought of sufficient importance to be preserved along with the Trials to which many of these circumstances relate.

‘ ANE COMPENDIOUS NOTATION of matters interpryfed and done sen þE QUEEN'S MA. *comeing out of FRANCE to this her graces realme, þe 19 Augustij, 1561.*³

‘ IN the first, the Slaughter of þE EARLE OF HUNTLY wes vpon þe 28 day of October (1562), at Brunalfoure, (the Battle of Corriehie.)

‘ THE EARLE OF LENNEX came to Scotland þe 21 day of September 1564, and his restoring wes in þe Tolbooth of Edr by ane Parliament haldine þe . . . day of . . . 1564.

‘ The Hame-comeing of MY LORD DARNLEY, his son, out of England, wes þe 12 day of Feberij, 1564-(5.) He wes made Duke, Earle, Lord, and Knycht, in the moneth of Jully, and wes Cronnit be THE QUEEN'S MA^{TIE} with þe CROUNE OF MATRIMONY, vpon þe 28 of þe said moneth: And vpon þe morne, his Mariage wes with þE QUEEN'S grace, in þe Abbay of Hallyroodhous, with the Mefs,⁴ and came to Preaching twa Sundays nixt þairafter; and never after, vnto deceife.

‘ The Lords underwrittine were BANISHED for not consenting to the forsaide Mariage. Ther reason wes, becaufe þE QUEEN wold not grant to þe establisshing of þe true RELIGION, and they remainit in England thrie moneths, or þairby.

‘ The names of the Lords, Barrons, and principall Gentlemen, that depairtit to England.

James Earle of Mortone, Patrick Lord Ruthven, who tore him out of THE QUEEN hir armes, William Maister of Ruthven, Patrick Lord Lindsay, Sir William Maitland of Leithingtoun, kny^t, Secretar to our foverane lady, Mr James McGill of Rankeillour-Neather, Clerk of Register, with pair assisters, kinn, freindis, and fervants. Quhilk SEINȝIOR DAVIE they flew in THE QUEEN'S Chamber, and in hir graces prefence.

‘ And þe LORDIS quhilkis of befoir wer Banished, vpon þe morne they came to Ed^r, and they got pair peace fra þe QUEEN'S grace. And þairefter her grace fled to Dunbar and guydit þe countrie, and Banished þe saidis LORDS quhilk were þe Slayers of þe said SEINȝIOR DAVIE, and put þaim furth of þe realme.

‘ For the quhilke Slaughter Thomas Scot of Camfmjchaell, schereffe depute of Perth, and Henry zair, fervants to my Lord Ruthven, were HANGED and QUARTERED.

‘ To the quhilke Slaughter THE KING constitute (consentit?) and went with þaim to þe QUEEN'S grace Chamber; and þairefter denyed þat he consentit þairto, quhen þe LORDIS were out of þe realme, bot said he wes compellit be þaim to consent þairto, or else they would have slaine him.

‘ THE NATIVITIE and birth of our noble PRINCE wes in THE CASTLE OF ED^r þe 17 Junij, at ij hours, in þe year of our Lord 1566. His Baptiseing wes in Stirling, be THE BISCHOP OF ST ANDREWS þe 10 of December, þe forsaid year. THE KING OF FRANCE and þe QUEEN OF ENGLAND, be þe Ambaxattis, being witnessis, to witt, MONSEOR DE BREAME (for þe King of France,) and þe EARLE OF BEDFURD for þe Quein of England. The said Quein sent ane Funt of Gold to his Baptiseing, with operis great Gifts were given at þe said Baptiseing. The said Monfeor de Breame namit him, be command of þe King of France, CHARLES; the said Erle of Bedfurd namit him, be command of þe Queen of England, JAMES, quhilk we retein.

‘ THE KING came not to þe said Baptizme, bot many of þe LORDES waitit vpon þe EARLE OF BOTHWELL quhilk were present at þe said Baptizme. THE KING went to Glasgou soon after, and remained pair quhill Januarij. And þan þe QUEEN'S grace and þe LORDS quhilke were þair, in þe Court, went for him to bring to Ed^r 1566.

‘ Att þe said Baptizme þe LORDS quhilke were Banished for þe Slaughte of SEINȝIOR DAVIE were relaxit, and came home to this countrie. THE LORD RUTHVEN are (is) in England.

‘ THE KING remained and lay in þe KIRK OF FEILD, and divers tymes þe QUEEN came to sie how he did, he being very sick, 1566-(7). He being in his bed þe 9th Feb^r at twa in þe bell after midnycht, wes blawine in þe air, and þe hail lodging, William Tailzeour being also murdered with him, who wes his fervant, in anno 1566-(7).

‘ THE EARLE OF MURRAY departit to FRANCE, within ane moneth after þe said Slaughter.

‘ THE PRINCE wes sent to þe LORD ERSKINE in STIRLING þe 8 of March, þe year of God 1567; and he delyverit þe Castell of Ed^r to her grace þe same day, quhilk thee gave in keeping to Schir William Cockburne of Scirling, kny^t, who keipit þe famin till þe 22 of Appryll, and þan Schir James Balfour of Pittendreich, knicht, Laird of Burghley, was made Captane þairof.

Without attempting to collect into one view the various information which is scattered through the Appendix to this reign, so far as is illustrative of many of the important matters connected with these tragical proceedings, the Editor begs merely to refer to these, in addition to the numerous Collections of State Papers and Histories which treat of the Life and times of MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS. The forthcoming Volumes of Mr Fraser Tytler may safely be consulted for an impartial summary of that eventful and hitherto doubtful period of Scottish History, which, it is confidently expected, will receive much new and important light from that author's critical acumen and patient research.

It may be mentioned here that in these Records, and other authentic documents, the name of Queen Mary's Secretary was DAVID RICCIO, not ‘ RIZZIO,’ as his name has vulgarly been written, almost uniformly, by all our popular Historians.]

Treasonable Murder of King Henry — Seizing the Queen's person and Imprisoning her in the Castle of Dunbar — Compelling her to Marry the Earl of Bothwell, &c.

[As the circumstances connected with these horrible transactions are already so familiar to all who are in any measure conversant with the history of Scotland, it is considered unnecessary to collect from all the scattered sources the various voluminous Papers which elucidate the whole particulars. It is enough to refer the reader to Lainy's elaborate Dissertation, the State Trials, Anderson's Collections, Keith's History, &c. Unfortunately, no traces of Trials for this crime now remain in the Books of Adjournal; but the following brief abstract appears in Sir Ludovick Stewart's Collections.³ The *Acts of Parliament*⁴ ought likewise to be examined, in farther illustration of the subject, and of all the Trials for Treason and the numerous Forfeitures and Restorations during this and the subsequent reigns.

In THE APPENDIX to this reign, also, the reader will find a great variety of interesting and minute information regarding DARNLEY'S Murder.

The Kirk Session Records of Canongate thus quaintly notices the event: 'THE KING(IS) grace blaven vp v^t bud'⁵ in þe KIRK OF FEILD, the x of Februar 1566-(7.) It is worthy of notice that the same Session Records preserve the following highly interesting minutes of the Solemnization of the Marriage between King Henry and Mary Queen of Scots.

(From the MINUTES of the Kirk Session Record of Canongate.) Jul. 21, 1565.—'THE quhilck day Johne Brand, Myuifter, presentit to þe KIRK ane Writtine,⁶ writtine be þe Justice Clark⁷ hand, defyrine þe KIRK OF þe CANNOGAIT and Myuifter þairof to proclame HARIE DUK OF ALBAYNYE, Erle of Rois, &c. one þe one part, and MARIE be þe grace of God QUENE OF SCOTTIS,⁸ fonerane of this realme, one þe vpair part. The fate of the leading parties connected with DARNLEY'S Murder is well known. In reference to Nicholas Howbert, otherwise called Paris,² the Frenchman, he suffered death on Aug. 16, 1569, as appears from the Lord High Treasurer's Accounts,³ where charges are made for sending two of the quarters of his body to Perth and Dundee, and his head and one of his legs to St Andrews. His Confession and examination are given at full length in the Appendix of Documents illustrative of Darnley's Murder. They are dated at St Andrews, Aug. 9th and 10th, 1569. These important Papers were obtained from the Originals, which are signed on each leaf by Paris, and are still extant.⁴ But for the apparently accurate form in which they have been published by Mr Laing, the Editor would have deemed it proper to have had them collated carefully with the original MS., preserved in the British Museum.

Before concluding this brief notice, the Editor begs to call the attention of the historical enquirer to an extremely interesting NARRATIVE, written by JAMES EARL OF BOTHWELL, embracing his personal history after his flight from Scotland in 1567, his adventures upon the coast of Norway, &c. It has recently been printed from the original in the Royal Library at the Castle of Drottningholm, in Sweden, and was presented by Messrs Henry Cockburn and Thomas Maitland to the Members of the Bannatyne Club, under the title, ‘LES AFFAIRES DU CONTE DE BODUEL, L'AN. M.D.XXVIII.’⁵ An English translation also lately appeared in the New Monthly Magazine,⁶ in which work the authenticity of the document is fully established.]

(Apr. 12, 1567.)—JAMES ERLE OF BOTHWELL,⁸ James Orneftoun of pat Ilke,⁹ Hob Ormiftoun, his father-brother, Patrick Wilfoune, William Murray, Sim Armstrang, callit Wantoune Simie, Pareis¹⁰ Frenchman, (dilated) ffor the Murther of KING HENRIE, our fouerane lord's father, for feizing of THE QUEEN'S perfonne at the Foul-brigis, and Imprifoning of hir perfonne in THE CASTELL OF DUNBAR, and compelling her to compleit Mariage with him—for stuffing and halding of the said Castell, &c.

(Apr. 12.)—(SCHIR) PATRICK HEPBURNE OF WHYTECASTELL, kny^t, for airt and pairt of the Murther of THE KING, our fouerane lordis father, and vther crymes immediatlie preceeding.

‘ The Historie of King James the Sext,¹ from whose work David Craufurd of Drumsoy compiled his spurious ‘ *Memoirs of the Affairs of Scotland,*² narrates the circumstance very briefly, in these words : ‘ That fame verie nycht³ of hir transporting,⁴ tua men were tayne as suspect of THE KING’S Murther. The ane was callit Sebastion de Villour, a Frenchman of nation ; the uther was Capten William Blakater. This Capten shortly efter was put to the knowlege of a Juré, and was convict ; bot at his death wald nowayis confes himself giltie of THE KINGIS Murther. The uther escaipit.’

Birrel, in his ‘ *Diarey,*⁵ informs us, that ‘ the 24 day of Junij Capitane William Blacketer was drawin backward, in ane cairte, from pe Tolbuith to the Crollé, and ther wes hangit and quartred, for being on THE KING’S Muither.’ It will be seen by the Appendix to this reign, that his legs and arms were sent to Stirling, Glasgow, Perth, and Dundee, on Jul. 26, 1567.⁶ His quarters were fixed on the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, &c.

The following has been obtained from *Stewart’s MS.*⁷ Although the memorandum he has preserved is very brief, it has evidently been extracted from the Books of Adjournal, along with the preceding Trial of Scott and zair,⁸ &c.]

JUN. 14.—CAPTAINE WILLIAM BLACADER wes Convict and Fyllit be ane Assyße of airt and pairt of the crewill, odious, treasonable, and abominable Slaughter of THE KING’S father, vnder silence of night, in his awin ludging within the Burgh of Ed^r, beyde the (Kirk of) Field : And of the treasonable raising of fyre within the samyn, with ane great quantitie of Powder ; throw force of the whilk, the said hail lodging wes raisit and blawin in the aire, and THE KING (HENRY) crewallie and treasonable flaine and distroyit be the said Captaine ; vpon fet purpose, prouisioun, and foirthought felonie : And this he did vpon the nyynth day of Feberij, 1567. For the whilke cryne the said Captaine William wes execute.⁹

[ALTHOUGH the following Case properly belongs to the reign of KING JAMES VI., it has been thought preferable to insert it here, rather than in the Appendix. No remarks seem requisite, for the DEPOSITIONS, &c. give a full narrative of the parts which they individually bore in this shocking tragedy. The Lord High Treasurer’s Accounts contain several notices, of which the following may suffice, in this place.

gave the deponar also diverse admonitions, and also fair promises to keip the matter secret, and to take part with him in THE KINGIS Slaughter, as he had devisit; and pat hereafter, at evin, in the presence of John Hepburn, callit of Bolton, the said Erle proponit the samyn matter to the deponar, quhilk John Hepburn was on the counsaill pair of before. And therle Bothwell said to the deponar, 'I have devisit it in this manner, and ye shall do the same;' that is to say, he said in presence of James Ormiston of pat ilk, and the said John Hepburn, thir words, 'The poulder man (myf) be laid in the house under THE KINGIS chalmer, quhair THE QUEENE suld lye, in an barril, gyf it may be gottin within the barril, and the same barril shall haif an boill at the nether end hereof, and an tre, holit and howkit like an troch, put to the boill of the barril, and an hunt¹ hereupon, quhilk shall be fyr it at the far end, and the unfyrit end laid in the boill of the barril in the pulder.' And this purpos suld haif been put in execution upon the Saturday at night, and the matter fayllit pat nycht, becaus all thingis war not in redynes pairfor.

Item, Deponit, pat upon Sunday herefter, about thre or four houres afternone, in therle Bothwell's nedder house in the Abbaye, the said Erle, John Hepburn of Bolton, and the deponar, devyfit pat my lord suld gang up to the said Laird of Ormiston's chalmer (like as he did) sua sone as it was mirk,² and pat here past with my lord, quyet on fute. John Hepburn of Bolton, the deponar, and Ade Murray met here, and sum utheris quham the deponar remembers not, at the said Laird of Ormiston's flairefute of his chalmer, above the Bow, on the fourth-syde of the gait,³ and pat my lord commandit the said Ade and utheris to pass to Mr John Spensis, and remayne here quhill he came to here: And pat my lord, John Hepburn of Bolton, and the deponar, enterit in the said Laird of Ormiston's chalmer, quhair here fand the said Lard, and Hob Ormiston, his fader bruther, and an bruther of the Lards, quhais name the deponar knaws not, and was put to the dur; and pair here consullit quhat gait⁴ here suld gang to THE KINGIS house, becaus here had not tane purpos pairupon of before; and syne here seid all down togidder to the Black Freir seit, and he said Lard of Ormiston seit in throw the ald howfis and wallis, and past and opynitt the said Freir-set to my lord, the deponar, and the rest foresaid. And pat my lord and the deponar seit up and down the Kowgate, quhile Wille Powry and Pate Willson brocht the powder, quhilk was brocht, at twa sundry times, furth of the Abbay, from the Erle's ludgeing: And pat the same was in a tronk and an mail, and was brought upon Hermanis naig, and pat the powder was reffavit in at the Black Freir seit be the said Lard of Ormiston and John Hepburn of Boltown, and pat the samyn was born in be Wille Powry, Pate Willson, and the saids Lard of Ormiston, Hob Ormiston, and the deponar, in the trunk and mail. And hereftir the powder pat was in the trunk was taken furth of the same, and put in polks,⁵ and the powder pat was in baith the tronk and mail was caryit to THE KINGIS house in polks.

And it is of veritie, that Paris, the French man, was in the nedder house, under THE KINGIS chalmer, and had an key of the back-dowr, and then the said Lard of Ormiston past in at the said dur, and spake with the said Hob, his fader bruther, and with the said Paris, being both therein, and fand the time convenient, and came furth again, and tauld the samyn to the said Erle and his company; and pat here had with here alswa a tre and a powder barrel, for to have done as said is: But the barrel was so meikle,⁶ it could not be gottin in at the duur: And here here tuk all the polks and carried here within the said laich house, and temit⁷ here on the flour in an heip, and the polks weir taken furth again. And pat my lord was in the house afoir, and had left the said Paris herein, and the said Hob standand at the dur awaitand upon here coming: And pat the said Lard of Ormiston said to the said John Hepburn, 'Se ken now quhat ye haif to do, quhen all is quyet abone 5ow! Fyre the end of the hunt, and cum 5our way!' And hereftir the said Lard of Ormiston past his way, with Hob with him and Paris. John Hepburn and he deponar taryit still within the said laich house a certain space; and Paris lockit the back dur, and the dur here passit up the turnpike to THE KINGIS chalmer, quhair

THE KING, THE QUENE, and þe Erle Bothwell, and vthers were, and passit up to þame, levand behind him the said John Hepburn, and the deponar lockit in the said nedder houfe: And as the deponar believes Paris shew the Erle Bothwell that all things were in readines, and fyne sone þareftir,¹ THE QUENE and THE LORDIS returnit to the Abbey, my lord Bothwell being in her cumpany. And þareftir the Erle Bothwell, accompanyit with Paris and Georde Dalglissh, came to the back ȝard; and the said Hepburn, quha had twa keyis of the back dur, lichtit the lunt, and came with the deponar, and lockit the durris after þame, and fand the Erle of Bothwell in the ȝaird, quha speirit at þame, ‘Gyf they had done that quhilk he had biddin þame, and fyrit the lunt?’ And þai answerit, ‘þat it was done.’ And eftir my lord and thai tarryit in the ȝaird ane lang tyme; and quhen my lord saw þat þe matter came not hastily to pass, he was angre, and wald have gen in himself in the houfe; and the said John Hepburn stoppit him, saying thir wordis, ‘Ze neid not.’ And my lord said thir wordis, ‘I will not gang away quhile I see it done.’ And within ane schort space it fyrit, my lord, John Hepburn, the deponar, and Paris being gangang at the fute of the aley in the said ȝard. And quhen they saw the houfe riseand, and hard the crack, they ran their way, and come down the Wynd fra the said Freir ȝett; and þat my lord þareftir past to the wall at Leith Wynd, to have past over it, but becaufe he thocht it over lich, he sturrit pairwith, and came back again to the Nedder Bow, and past furth at the Port, after Johnne Hepburne had cried upon John Gallaway, porter, and cauffit him oppin the Port; and that the saids John Hepburn and Georde Dalgleissh passit afore with my lord, and sone þarefter the deponar and Paris followit; and the deponar passit to his bed, in John Hepburns in the Canongait, and my lord passit to his awin ludgeing to the Abbey.

IV. THE DEPOSITION OF JOHN HEPBURN, CALLED ‘JOHNNE OF BOWTOUN.’

Apud Edinburgum 8 die mensis Decembris, An. Dom. 1567, in presēce of my Lord Regent, the Erle of Athol, the Lord Lindsay, the Lard of Grange, and the Justice-Clerk.

THE quhilk day, JOHNNE HEPBURNE, callit Johnne of Bowtoun, being examiuit upon THE KINGIS Murther, grantit himself culpable and gilty þairof: and as he wald answer before God, deponit and declaryt the Erle of Bothweile his maisters part of the famyu, so far as the deponar knew in this matter, that is to say; The first tyme þat evir the Erle of Bothweile spake þis matter of THE KINGIS Murther to the deponar, was ane day or twa aftir the bringing of the powder furth of Dunbar; at quhilk tyme he said to the deponar in this manner, ‘Thair is ane purpos dividit amongs sōme of the Noblemen, and me amongs the rest, þat THE KINGE fall be slane; and that every ane of us fall send twa servandis to the doing þarof, owther on the fields, or otherwise as he may be apprehendit!’ And þan desirit þe deponar to be ane of the entrepryfers for him: Quhais answer was, ‘þat it was ane evil purpos, and ȝit, becaus he was servand and counsignance² to his lordshyp, he wald do as vtheirs wald, and put hand to it.’ One the morne þareftir, he callit James Ormiston of that ilk, the deponar, and John Hay, ȝounger of Tallo, and break the purpos to þame; and maid the like declaratioune to þame, þat vthir Noblemen had had as far enteres as he in þat matter: And þai maid to him evin sic answer as he had done. Quether my lord had schewed þame þe purpos of befor or not, þe deponar knawes not. Swa every day þare was tauking amongis þame of the famyn purpos, quhill within twa dais before þe Murther, þat the said Erle changed purpos of the slaying of THE KINGE one the feildes, becaufe þan it wald be knawn, and schew to þame quhat way it mycht he usit better be þe pulder. And on the Sunday, in the gloming³ before nicht, þe 9 daie of Februar last bepast, the deponar send þe said Johnne Hayes man for ane tome⁴ poulder barrel to the man quhilk Johnne Haye had cost⁵ the same fra, þat dwells above Sandie Bruces cloise-heid. At evin my lord suppit in Maister Johnne Balfour’s hous, quhare the Bisshop of Argyle maid the banket: And eftir supper my lord came up the gait, and þai all with him to the said Lard of Ormestonis’ chalmer; quhair þe deponar and Johnne Haye past in, and fand the said Lard and Hob Ormifoun his fader bruther; and as þe deponar rememberis, þat was the first time þat Hob knew of þat matter, and þair þai spake togidder, and my lord schewit þame þe maner: And the deponar, the said Lard of Ormifoun, Hob Ormifone, and Johne Haje, past to the fute of the Black Freir Wind, haveing sent away Wille Powry and Pate Wilfone for the poulder. And before þar cõmning furth of the said chalmer, my lord departit with his fervandis; quhair þe deponar knawes not. And the saids foure being togidder, as is befoir wryttin, at the fute of the Freir Wind, the said Willie Powry and Pate Wilfone cum agane with the poulder, quhilk was brocht at two times in ane tronk and ane mail; and þai carreit it in at Black Freres zet: And quhen þai war changing þe pulder furth of the tronk in polks, my lord come and speirid ‘Gyf all was redy?’ And bad þame haift before THE QUEENE cum furth of THE KINGIS house; for gyf she come furth before þai wer reddy, þay wald not find sic commodity. And þan þe pulder being put in polks, the saids Lard of Ormifone, Hob Ormifone, this deponar, Johne Haje, Willi Powry, and Pate Wilfone turfit¹ up the ponder to THE KINGIS house, and fand Paris at the dur, quha openit the samyn; and þay assayit to haue taken in the said barrell, and it wald not gang in at the dur; and þan þai liffit the samyn, and brocht it back to the zaird, and had in the poulder, and tuning it furth of the polks in ane bing and heip upon the flur, evin directly undir THE KINGIS bed. And þan þe said Laird of Ormifone, Hob Ormifon, and Paris, past away, and left the deponar and John Hay within the said house; quhilks tarryit þerein quhill efter twa houres after mydnight, and þan tuk ane lunt, with ane litle tre² quharon it lay, and placit þe same, þe ane end in the poulder, and fyr it þe vtilir end, and cam þair way, and lookit þe thre duris behind þame: And at þair cuming furth to the zaird, þay fand my lord Bothwell, Geordie Dalgleish, Pat Wilson, and Willie Powry: And my lord speirit at them, ‘Gyf þay had done all things as was ordourit?’ And þai said, ‘5ea?’ And þai tarryit upon ane quarter of ane hour þaireftir. And my lord thoecht lang,³ and speirit ‘Gyf þair was ony part of the house þat they mycht fe the lunt, gyff it was burnand anouch?’ And þai said, ‘þare was nane but ane wundo quhilk wes within þe clois?’ And as they war speeking upon it, the house begouth to take fyre and blew up; and þai ran away, and cum up Black Freir Wind, and zeid down ane clois to haif gottin over the broken wall at Leith Wind, but my lord thoecht it over heich to loup, because of his fair hand; and sfa returnit to þe Neddir Bow, and walkynit⁴ John Galloway, portar, quham þai gart cum down and opin the zet: And Willie Powry, Paris, and John Haje, zeid evin down the Canonngait, and my lord, the deponar, Pat Wilson, and Georde Dalgleish, zeid down Saint Mary Wind, and behind the zairds unto my lordis ludging in the Abby. And in þair by-ganging, twa of the watchis spirit,⁵ ‘Quhat þai were?’ and þe deponar answerit, ‘We are servandis of the Erle Bothweill, gangand to him with news out of the town.’ And sfa my lord passit to his bed, and þis deponar lay down in ane bed in þe hall. And sone þareftir Mr George Hackett came in, quha told, þat the house of the Kirk of Field was blawn up in the hair,⁶ and THE KING flain. And within short space þair-after my lord Huntley came in, and my lord Bothweill raifs and put on his clathis, and passit into THE QUEENIS house. And the deponar tarryit sum tyme þareftir, and cumand furth, fand the Abbay-zeit cloist; and þan þe deponar fand the said John Hay in his bed in John Hepburns, and lay down with him.

V. THE CONFESSION OF JOHN HABROUN,¹ YOUNG TALLA, DAGLEISH AND POWRIE, upon quhome was Justice execute the 3d of Januarie, the year of God 1567.

JOHN (HABROUN) of Bowton confessit that nyne was at the deid doing, my L. Bothwell, the lord of Ormifloun, Hob Ormifloun, himself, Talla, Dagleish, Wilson, Pourie, and French Paris; and that he saw na moe, nor knew of na other companies.

Item. He knowis nat other but that, that he was blowin in the ayre; for he was handilit with na mens' handes, as he saw; and if he was, it was with others and not with tham.

Item. As touching Sir James Balfour, he saw not his subsciption; but I warrand you he was the principall counfallar and deviser.

Item. He sayd, I confesse it is the veray Providence of God that hes brought me to his judgement; for I am led to it as an horse to the stall, for I had schippis providit to flie, but could not escape.

Item. He sayd, let no man do evill for counfall of great men or thayr masters, thinking thay shall save tham; for surely I thought that night that the deid was done, that although knowledge should bene gotten, na man durst have sayde it was evill done, feing the hand writtis, and acknowledging THE QUEENIS minde thairto.

Item. Speaking of THE QUEENE in the Tolbuith, he said, God make all weill, but the langer deirt² is hydden, it is the stronger. Quho lives, our daithes will be thought na newis!

Item. Hinneft,³ he confessit, he was ane of the principall doers of the daith, and thairfoir is justly worthy of daith; but he was assurit of the mercy of God, quho callit him to repentance.

ITEM. TALLA confessit, ut supra, agreing in all pointes as concerning the parsons, number, and blowing in the ayre.

Item. He affirmit, That in Setoun, my Lord Bothwell callit on him, and sayd, 'Quhat thought you quhen thou saw him blowen in the ayre?' Quho answerit, 'Alas! my lord, quhy speak ye that? For quhen ever I heare sic a thing, the wordes wound me to death, as they ought to do you!'

Item. That same tyme he saw Syr James Balfour put in his owne name and his brother's unto my Lord Bothwell's Remission.

Item. He knew of the deid doing three or four days or⁴ it was done, or thereby.

Item. He sayd, 'After that I came to the Court, I left the reading of God's worde and imbrafit vanitie; and thairfoir hes God justly brought this on me.'

Quhairfoir, let all men flee evill cumpany, and to trust not in men; for redy are we to imbrace evill, as redy as hardes⁵ to receive fyre. And further, in the Tolbuith he requyrit John Brande, Minister of the Congregation, to passe to my Lord Lindsay, and say, 'My lord, hartily I forgeve your L., and als my lord REGENT, and all others, but specially tham that betrayit me to you; for I know if ye could have favit me ye would; desiring you, as ye will answer before God in the latter day, to do your diligence to bring the rest, quho was the beginners of this worke, to justice, as ye have done to me; for ye know it was not begunne in my head. But yit praifes God that his justice hes begunne at me, by the quhilk he hes callit me to repentaunce!'

ITEM, DAGLISHE sayd, 'As God shall be my judge, I knew nothing of THE KINGES daith befoir

VII. DEPOSITIONS OF (FRENCH) PARIS, SERVANT TO THE S(COTCH) Q(UREEN), AND PRESENT AT THE MURDER OF HER HUSBANDE.

1. S'ensuyt ² la Declaration et Deposition de NYCOLLAS HAUBERT, diet PARIS, Pareisien, touchant la Morte et Meurtre du feu ROY HENRY D'ESCOSSE; au Meurtre duquel le dit Haubert estoit present, avec le Conte de Boduel et les autres ses adherens: Ceste Deposition fut suiete à Sainet Andrieu, sans ce que le dit Paris fut contraint ni interrogué, de son propre mouciment et voulloir pour s'en descharger comme il deist, et ee le ixme. jour d'Aouyl, 1569.

Et primierement, il deist,

JE confesse icy, devant Dieu et le monde, que le Mercredy ou le Jendy après dîner de la sepmaine donet le dict meurtre du feu ROY fut commis, moy estant en la chambre de LA ROYNE à Kerkafield, en compaignye de plusieurs aultres attendant LA ROYNE, qui estoit à la chambre du ROY, Mons. de Boduel vint à la chambre de LA ROYNE là où j'estois, et me deist en l'aureille, 'Paris, ie me trouve mal de ma malladye que tu sçais qui est mon flux de sang, ne sçais-tu point quelque lieu la ou ie porray aller faire mes affaires?' 'Ma foy, ce diet-ie, je ne fut jamais icy qu'à ceste heure-cy, mais ie m'en vois chercher quelque lieu.' La-dessus ie trouve ung eoing ou trou entre deux portes, et le va dire; 'Mons^r. venez-vous-en, fy vous estes otant presé!' Et estans la dedans, ie ferme la porte sur nous, et luy oste sa robbe, commençant à le destascher. Il me regarde, et me demande comment ie me portoys? luy disant, que ie me portoys bien, la grace à Dieu et à luy, me tenant pour bien recompense du service que luy avois faict de m'avoyer faict donner l'estat de varlet de chambre ches LA ROYNE. Il me respondist, que ce n'estoit pas asès, et qu'il me feroit davantage. Je luy dis, que ie me contentois, et que ie ne pouvoys davantage à la maison de LA ROYNE, voyant mon equalité, et que ie me contentois. Il me dict que ie me ne chommeroy de rien que ie luy dise, car disoit-il, Tu m'ais faict bon et loyal service depuis qu tu m'a servy; car ie sçay que tu as couvert mon deshonneur que tu avois occasion de fouller quant tu vins de mon service hors d'Angleterre. Mons^r. ce diet-ie, ie nay faict que tor de serviteur. Et bien, ce diet-il, pour autant que ie t'ay trouvé fydelle serviteur, ie te veulx dire vne chose, mais il te fault garder sur ta vie que nul ne le sache. (Mons^r. ce di-ie) il n'apertient au serviteur quant le maistre luy dit quelque chose de le reveler, et s'y est chose que vous pensés que ie ne puise garder, ne me le dictes point. Sçais-tu (ce diet-il) que c'est; c'est que fy ce ROY-là qui est la d— a jamais les pieds sur nous aultres Seigneurs, il nous vult dominer et estre cruel, et de nous autres Seigneurs ne le voullons pas souffrir, et aussy ce n'est la façon de ce pais, et pour cela nous avons conclud nous aultres de le faire fault—de dedans ceste maison en l'air avecques de la pouldre, de oyant ie ne le dis mot ains baillé la vene basse mon sens et mon cueur ce tourne de l'avoyr ouy ainfy parler. Il me regarde, me demandant que ie pense? Mons^r. (ce di-ie) je pense à ce que vous me dictes, qui est une grand chose. Qu'en pense-tu? (ce dit-il) Que j'en pense, Mons^r? (ce di-je) vous me pardonnerez fy ie vous die selon mon povvre esprit ce que i'en pense. Que veulx tu dire? (se dit-il), tu veulx prescher. Non, Mons^r, vous orres. Et bien (se dit-il) dis, dis! Mons^r. (ce di-je) depuis cinq ou six ans que ie vous ay fait service, ie vous ay toujours veu en grands troubles, et n'ay fceu jamais voyr d'amis qui ayent fait pour vous; maintenant, Mons^r. vous estes hors de tous ces troubles, la grace à Dieu, et plus en court à ce que tout le monde dict que jamais; pour ma part, ie voye que chascung vous fait la court, petis et grands, mais ie ne scay pas que vous rit qui vous veult veoyr aultrement, ie ne scay pas vous estes du pais Mons^r. Davantage l'on diet que vous estes le plus grand terrien de ce pays icy, et aussy que vous estes marie qui est l'heure quant vng homme prend ce ply la que il ce fault arester ou jamais. Maintenant, Mons^r. fy vous entreprenes ceste chose-là qui est grande, ce sera le plus grand trouble que vous eustes jamais, par dessus les aultres, car chascun cryera 'ha harault!' sur vous, et vous le voyres. Et bien (cedit-il) as-tu fait? Vous me pardonnerez, Mons^r. s'il vous plaist, fy ie vous ay die selon mon povvre esprit (ce di-ie). Et beste que tu es (ce dict-il) pense-tu que ie fay cecy tout seul de moy mesme? Monsieur, ie ne sçay pas comment vous le faictes, mais ie sçay bien que ce sera le plus grand trouble que vous eustes oncques. (Ce dict-il) et comment sera-ce? car i'ay disia Leddington qui est estymé l'ung des meilleurs espricts de ce pais-cy, et qui est l'entrepeneur de tout cecy; en apres j'ay Mons^r. d'Argyle mon frere, Mons^r. de Honthye, Mons^r. de Morton, Ruthen, et Lindesay. Ses trois-là une foys ne me fauldront jamais, car j'ay parlé pour leur grace; et ay tous les signes de ceulx-cy que ie t'ay nommes, et aussy avons envie de le faire dernièrement que nous fumes à Cragmiller, mais c'est que tu es un beste et povvre d'esprit, qui ne merite d'entendre chose de consequence. Ma foy, Monsieur (ce di-ie) il est vray, car mon esprit n'est point pour telle chose, mais bien pour vous faire service à ce que ie porray, et bien bien Mons^r. ilz vous porront bien faire maistre et principall de ce fait-là, mais quant ce sera fait ilz porront aussy mettre le tout sur vous, et les premiers qui cryeront 'ha harault!' apres vous, et les ceulx qui vous boutteront le premier à mort, s'ilz peuvent. He! Mons^r., ie vous prie m'en dire d'ung que vous ne m'aves point nommé; ie sçay bien que cestuy-la est aymé en ce pais du commuen peuple, et aussy de nous autres François, que quant il gouvernoyt l'espace de deux ou trois ans, il n'avoyt point de troubles au pais, tout le monde ce portoit bien, l'argent corroit, maintenant on ne peut veoyr homme qui ait moyen, et ne voyt-on que troubles; cestuy-la est sage et fy a des amys allies. Qui est cestuy-la? (ce me dict-il). Cest Mons^r. (ce di-ie) Mons^r. le Conte de Morra: je vous prie me dire quelle part cestuy-la prend? (Ce dit-il), il ne se veult point meller. Mons^r. (ce di-ie), il est sage. Adonc Mons^r. de Boduel retourne la teste vers moy et me deist, Mons^r. de Morra, Mons^r. de Morra, il ne veult n'ayder ne nuyre, mais c'est tout ung. Bien, bien, Mons^r. (ce di-ie) il ne le faicte sans cause, et vous le voyrez. La-dessus il me commande de prendre la clef de la chambre de LE ROYNE à Kirkcaldie. Je luy dis, Mons^r. vous me pardoneres, s'il vous plaist, pour autant que ie suis estrangier, et aussy que ce n'est mon estat, l'huyffier me porra demander que i'en veulz faire et-il aura raison. Et pourquoy (ce dit-il) n'est-tu vallet de chambre de LA ROYNE? Il est vraye, Mons^r. (ce di-ie) mais vous sçavez qu'à la maison d'ung Prince chaque officier à son office, et entre les autres l'huyffier a le sien, l'estat duquel est de garder la clef de la chambre. Pourquoy donc (ce dict-il) t'ay-je mis à la chambre de LA ROYNE fy non pour en tyrer du service? Helas! Mons^r. (ce di-ie) c'est bien pour vous faire service à ce que ie porrois, mais je pensois en moy mesme sans rien dire (le craignant) si j'eusse pensé telle chose, iamais la chambre ne m'eust chambree. La-dessus il s'en alla de moy de ce trou ou coing-la, ou il avoit fait ses affaires. Luy étant party de moy, je prens mon manteau et mon espee et m'en voys pormener dans la grand esglise, et pensoys en beaucoup de fortunes que j'avoys du passé eschapiés de luy, et commencois à remercier Dieu qui n'avoit delivré d'aveques luy, luy demandant du bon cuer d'estre hors de sa compaignie pour autant que ie congnoyffois ses vices fort terribles, et princi-pallement ung donet l'on dict que j'en fais sy bon serviteur, me reportant à Dieu, qui congnoit ce que luy en ay dict, comment ce seroyt sa ruyne. Plus de six ans il y a, et qu'il soit ainfy qu'on demande au Lard de Petincereif, qui a ouy parler pourquoy je fortis de son service hors d'Angleterre: il me battist et me tormentast à coups de pied sur le ventre, pour me faire faire chose que ie n'avoys envie de faire, donet il m'en à remercié en Escosse, que j'avoys couvert son honneur la ou j'avoys occasion de le fouller. Apres avoir penté à tout cela pour me refouldre de ce faict meschiant que j'avoys entendu et qu'il m'avoit dict, ie demande à mon Dieu, qu'il me conseillaist voyant le faict sy grand il estoimoit mon esprit; et que sy à ceste heure-la Mons^r. de Croque eust esté en ce pais, ie n'eusse point esté en ceste peine icy. Quant ie vis qu'il ny avoit aultre remede que d'avoyr patience, et qu'il ny avoit chemin pour m'en aller sy non par Angleterre, la ou j'eusse esté prins et arresté per faulte de passeport, et aussy que cest trahayson contre le Prince au serviteur de s'en aller sans congé, et aussy que ie ne sceu prouver pourquoy ie m'en allois sy non per Mons^r. de Bodvel qui ne m'eust jamais advoue; voyant comme chascun peut penser que cela gyfoit beaucoup à son honneur, et à des aultres Seigneurs à ce qu'il me disoit. Or doncques ce chemin-la ne me vallut rien, je me refoulz dessus ung poynt que sy ce meurtre ce seroit de brief c'estoit ma ruyne, pour autant que ie cognoyffois l'homme qui n'eust jamais failli de moy commander, et s'il y auroit dix ou douze jours entre deux, j'auray esperance de bien faire, car s'il va navire de quelque coste que foyt, qu'en Angleterre j'estoys delibere de me desrober pourquoy ie me refoulz au fortier de l'esglise de scavoyn de luy quant ce seroyt. De Vendredy doncques ie m'en vois à luy à fortier de sa chambre, comme il alloit chez LA ROYNE, et aussytot qu'il me veist il me demande sy ie avoys prins ceste clef. Je luy dis que je regarderoys a le faire; il me dict que je ne faillisse dont point, car c'estoit à Dymanche qu'ilz vouloyent faire à mettre leur faict en execution. A ceste heure-la je fors d'avecques luy plus fasche que jamais, et m'en vais sur le chemin du petit Leith tout expres pour trouver navire; et quant ie fus a moytie chemin ie dyfoys en moy-mesme, or est-il bon a voy que tu as l'esprit bien perdu, pour autant qu'il ny a plus que de main entre deux, quant ores le vent seroyt bon, as-tu la puissance de louer ou fretter une navire tout seul ou expres: la-dessus ie m'oste du grand chemin et me destorne à part, priant Dieu de me conseiller, car de faire bruyt de cela j'estoys morte. Ceste jour-la, ce passé en ce point, et aussy le Samedy toute la matynée. L'apres disner il me demande encores ceste clef; je luy dis, Mons^r., hélas! comment le feray-je? Pourquoy (ce dict-il) qui t'en gardera? N'es-tu pas serviteur de LA ROYNE? Il est vray, Mons^r., mais ce n'est point mon estat de prendre les clefs. Mais dy moy (ce dict-il) et pourquoy? Une fois ie ne le veulx rien commander en ce faict-la. J'ay des clefs assez sans toy, car il n'y a porte ceans donet je n'ay le clef, car Mons^r. Jacques Balfor et moy avons esté toute la nuycete pour veoyr et chercher le meilleur endroit et passage pour executer nostre affaire, et pour trouver bonne entree; mais ceste qui tu es une beste, car ie ne te veulx employer en ce faict-la, car j'ay des gens assez sans toy, et aussy que je scay que tu n'as point de cuer. La-dessus ie entre en la chambre de LA ROYNE, la ou Marguerite et quelques aultres estoient attendantz LA ROYNE, qui estoit en la chambre du Roy. Adonc le bruyt vint incontinent que LA ROYNE s'en alloit à l'Abbaie; tout le monde fort hors de sa chambre, et moy le dernier, prenant la clef de la dict chambre, et m'en vois à l'Abbaie apres elle, la ou je trouve Mons^r. de Bodvel, qui me demande sy j'avoys ceste clef. Ouy, Mons^r. (ce di-je). Il me commande de la garder. Au bout d'une heure Marguerite me prie d'aller à Kirkcaldie querir une couverture de Maytres à la chambre de LA ROYNE, ce que je fais et prens ung garson avecque moy et entre en la dict chambre, en presens de Sande Duram le jeune, et le porte-faix du Roy, et fais emportier la dite couverture, le dict Duram me demande la clef. Je luy dis que ce n'estoit pas à moy à la donner, mais bien à l'huyffier, luy pryant de me pardonner. Bien, donc (ce dict-il) puisque ne le me voulez donner. La-dessus ie m'en vins à l'Abbaie à la chambre de LA ROYNE et delivre la couverture à Marguerite, ceste jouer-la de Sabmedy estant ainffy passé, je m'en alloys me coucher.

Le Dymenche matin ie me leve à six heures, et m'en vois promener dedans le parc, et en ung vallon ie me metz à prier Dieu, et luy demander conseil de ce fait mefehant, car ie n'ay fceu trouver aultre moyen que de laiffèr couller l'eau du ruffeau qui estoit fy ord, en apres m'estant resolu, ie m'en retourne a l'Abbay, la ou ie trouve troys officiers de LA ROYNE, et m'en allay desieufner quant et culx, et m'en revins a neufue heures à la chambre de LA ROYNE, la ou l'oye nouvelle que Monsr. de Morray venoit prendre son congé de LA ROYNE pour aller veoyr Madame sa femme : moy entendant ceste parole l'aperfen incontynent qu'il le faisoit pour se destorner de se fait mefehant. La-dessus ie m'en allois me pormener Lafiarik et m'en vois soubvenir des paroles que j'avoys dictes du dict Seigneur de Morray à Monsr. de Bodvel ; et aussy ce qu'il m'en avoit respondu. A ceste heure-la ie dis en moy mesme, O Monsr. de Morray tu es homme de bien, pleust à Dieu que tu sceus mon cueur, je n'auray pas tant de mal que j'ay ! Et ayant bien pensé je m'en revins à la chambre de LA ROYNE, la ou elle alloit disner auz noces de Bafien ; toutesfoi je m'en allay disner à la ville et apres disner me pormener ; et estant revenu, j'entendis que LA ROYNE alloit souper chez Monsr. d'Argylle, la ou j'estois derrier elle luy servant desicant ; et comme elle lavoyt ses mains apres souper, elle me demande, fy t'avoys osté la couverture de Maytre de sa chambre au logis du ROY ? Je luy dis qu'ouy. Lors les seigneurs se levent de table, donc Monsr. de Bodvel m'appelle, et me mène seul avecques luy au logis de sa mere, la ou il ne fust gueres qu'il s'en alla au logis de Lard d'Ormiston, parler à luy et à son frere Hobe, et nous prend tout troys avecques luy et s'en va à Cougait et parle à Jehan Hay et à Jehan Hepbron, qu'il trouve à la rue. Apres avoir parle à eux, il s'en va tout seul et moy au logis du ROY, et à mye chemin au logis il me dict, or sçais-tu qu'il y a, tu t'en yras à la chambre de LA ROYNE à Kirkefield, et quand Jehan Hepbron, Jehan Hay, et le Lard Ormiston entront, et qu'ilz auront fait ce que ilz ont envie de faire, tu fortyras et t'en viendras à la chambre du ROY, ou tu t'en yras la ou tu voudras. Helas ! Monsr., (ce di-je) vous me commandes ma mort ! Et pourquoy (ce dict-il) te commande-je de faire quelque chose ? Il est veritable, ce di-je, Monsr., mais ie sçay bien que cest ma mort. Mais dis moy pourquoy (ce dict-il) fy ie te commandois de faire ce que les aultres font, tu le pourroys dire, mais ie sçay bien que tu n'as point de cueur ; une fois les aultres n'ont que faire de toy, car ilz entront bien fans toy, car ilz ont des clefs assés ; il n'y a porte ceans donet ilz n'en ayent les clefs. Bien, Monsr. (ce di-ie) ie m'y en voys. La-dessus il se departe de moy et s'en vais au logis du ROY, et entre en sa chambre, la ou estoit LA ROYNE et aucuns des Seigneurs, et ie m'en vins à la petite court, entre à la cuisine demandant une chaudielle au cufsynier, que j'alumis. Sur ces entre faitz, voicy Jehan Hepbron et Jehan Hay qui entrent en la chambre, la ou i'estois et portoys de la pouldre dedans des fazz qu'ilz misrent au milieu de la dict chambre. En ce fayfant, voycy Monsr. de Bodvel, qui furvient et parle au culx dyfant, ' Mon Dieu que vous faictes de bruyt ! on oyt d'enhault tout ce que vous faictes !' Et ainfy me regarde, et me demande ce que le fayfoys, et que ie m'en allasse à la chambre du ROY apres luy ; ce que je feis, et me trouve aupres de Monsr. d'Argylle, avec qui Monsr. de Bodvel parloit, et le dict Seigneur d'Argylle m'accaroysfloyt et me touche sur le dos sanz me dire mot. Et n'estant en la chambre du ROY la longueur d'une pater noster que LA ROYNE s'en va vers l'Abbaye et monte là ou estoit les nocces ; et moy ie m'en vois en ung coing la ou Monsr. de Bodvel me vint trouver, me demandant ce que j'avoys d'ainfy faire la myne, et que fy ie la fayfoys ainfy devant LA ROYNE, qu'il m'accoustroit en telle façon que ie ne fus iamais. Ie ne m'en soucy pas (ce di-ie) que vous faictes de moy à ceste heure-cy, vous priant me donner congé de m'aller coucher, car ie suis mallade. Non, ce dit-il, veulx que vous veniez avecques moy ; voulez vous laiffèr ces deux gentil-hommes-là Jehan Hay et Jehan Hepbron ? Helas ! Monsr., ce di-ie, que feres vous davantage pour moy, car mon cueur ne me peult servir à telle chose ? Je veulx que vous venies (ce dict-il), or bien donc Monsr. (ce di-ie) allons. La-dessus il s'en va à sa chambre changer d'habillemetz et prend le tailler et moy avecques luy, et s'en va au jardin du logis du ROY, la ou le tailler demene à la muraille. Et moy aupres, le dict Seigneur de Bodvel s'en va à la porte du jardin, et puis revint vers nous, la ou Jehan Hepbron et Jehan Hay s'en veindrent et incontynent comme ilz avoyent parlé à luy, voyla comme ung tempeste ou ung tonnoyre qui va eslever, de la peur que j'eu ie cheus en terre les cheveux dreflés comme allaines, dyfant, hélas ! Mons^r. qu'est ce cecy ? Il me dicte, je me fuis trouve à des enterprises grandes, mais iamais entreprise ne me fait fy grand peur que cesty-cy. Je luy dis, per ma foy, Mons^r., de telle chose que cecy il n'en viendra iamais bien, et vous le voyres ! O beste ! (ce dit-il) me menacent de me fraper de sa dague, mais ne la tire point. Là-dessus il commence à s'en aller bien viste, et nous apres luy, et s'en cuydoit aller per Leyth Wynd, mais il ne sceut. Il envoya donc Hepbron parler à portier pour ouvrir la porte, et qu'aussy le monde comencoyt à venir, il s'en va per derrier le Cannongait, et Jehan Hay et moy nous en allafmes la grand rue. Je difoys à Jehan Hay à telle chose que cecy n'en adviendra iamais bien. Il est vray (ce dit-il) nous avons bien offensé Dieu, mais il n'y a remede, il se faulte monstrer verteux et prier Dieu. Hélas ! (ce di-je) Mons^r. m'a menacé de me frapper de sa dague, mais je voudrois bien qu'il l'eust fait pour mon honneur. Paris, ce dict-il, prenes en patience, car vous congnoyflés bien l'homme. Là-dessus ie m'en allay coucher dans mon liet et luy au sien, mais je ne fçay ou, moy ellant levé le Lundy matin envyron sept ou huit heures, je m'en vins à la chambre du dit Seigneur de Bodvel, et incontynent qu'il me voyt il me demande que j'avoys à faire la mine ? Je luy dis, que j'avoys que jamais or n'y argent ne me remettroyt en point que l'estoys. Pourquoi ? (ce dict-il) Porce, Mons^r, que ie fçay bien que je fera pris pour le principall de ce fait-cy. Ha ! ouy (ce dict-il) tu es bien homme que ie voudrois bien prendre pour ung tel fait. Là-dessus il s'en va en bas en une chambre, et m'envoye querir par le dit tailler la ou il avoit en la chambre le Lard Ormeston, Hobe Ormeston, Jehan Hepbron, Daglijêhe, Porrey et moy.

Mons^r. de Bodvel me demande, que j'avoys à faire telle mine, et fy j'avoys promis quelque chose au Roy, et s'il estoit mon maistre ? Non, Mons^r. (ce di-ie.) Et voye-tu point (ce dict-il) ces gentil-hommes, qui ont terres, rentes et revennes, femmes et enfans, et ont tout voutu abandonner pour me faire service ! Et si tu pense avoir offensé Dieu, le peche n'est en toy, cest a moy, car je t'ay commandé, et tu ne feroys estre repris de ce fait, car ce font les Seigneurs mesmes de ce pais, avec moy, qu'avont commis le cryme, et voudrois qu'il meust cofle oo...escus et ne t'en avoyr iamais parlé. Per ma foy, Mons^r. (ce di-ie) ie la voudrois bien, or bien Paris il se fault monstrer verteux, et pour toutes les irheues du monde, il ne fault rien dire ; et s'y vous avez envie de vous en aller, vous vous en yres bientoft. Et du depuis ie l'ay demandé congé plus d'une demye douzaine de fois, et ne le fçue iamais avoyer ; et voyla tout ce que ie fay touchant ce fait.

2. A Sanct Andre¹ le dixieme jour d'Aouft, 1569, Nicholas Howbert, diet Paris, à esté interrogé sur les articles et demandes qui s'ensuyvent, &c.

Et premierment,

INTERROGUE, Quant premierment il entra en credit vers LA ROYNE ? Responce, que se fust comme LA ROYNE estoit à Callendar allant à Glasgow, qu'alors elle luy bailla une bourse la, ou il avoit environ 3 ou 4 cens escus, pour la porter à Mons^r. de Boduel ; lequel, apres avoir recon la dicte bourse sur le chemyn entre Callendar et Glasgow, luy dict que le diet Paris f'en allast avecques LA ROYNE, et qu'il se tint pres d'elle, et qu'il regardast bien à ce qu'elle feroit, luy dyfant, que LA ROYNE luy donneroyt des lettres pour les luy porter. LA ROYNE estant arruë à Glasgow, luy dict, je t'envoyray à Lislbouurg, tiens-toy prest, et ayant demeure la deux jours avecques la diet dame, laquelle escript des lettres et luy les baille, dyfant, vous direz de bouche à Mons^r. de Boduel qu'il baille ces lettres qui f'adressent à Mons^r. de Ledington à luy mesmes, et qu'il parle à luy, et voyes le parler ensemble et regardes la façon de faire, et quelle mine ilz feront, car c'est, ce difoyt-elle, pour favoyr lequel est meillieur pour loger LE ROY à Craigmillier ou à Kirkasfeld, affin d'avoyr bon air ; car, f'il logoyt à l'Abbaye, LE PRINCE pourroyt bien prendre sa maladie, à cause que ses serviteurs ne pourroyent leur en garder d'aller veoyr LE PRINCE : en oultre qu'il dict au dict de Boduel que LE ROY la vouloyt baifer, mais elle ne pas voullu de peur de sa maladie, chose que Rerefs en tefmoigneroyt bien. Et plus (ce dict-elle) vous direz à Monsr. de Boduell que je ne va jamais vers LE ROY que Rerefs n'y est, et voyt tout ce que je fais. Item, LA ROYNE luy dict, ' Paris hastes-vous de revenir, car je ne bougeray dicy jusques au temps que vous m'aures raporté la responce l'

Estant le dict Paris arryvé à Lislebourg trouve le dit de Boduel en son logis à l'Abbaye, lequel luy dist, ha ! Paris, tu es le bien venu. Monsr., ce dict-il, voycy des lettres que LA ROYNE vous envoie, et aussi à Monsr. de Liddington, vous pryant de les luy delivrer, et que je vous vis parler ensemble, pour veoyr vos façons de faire, et comment vous vous accordiez ensemble. Fort bien, ce dict-il, car j'ay ce jourdhuy parlé à luy, et luy a donné une haquenee. Le lendemain le dict Paris dict qu'il vint au logis du dit de Boduel par trois fois le chercher à 8, 9 et 10 heures, et ne le sceut jamais trouver ; mais à la fin Powrye le portier luy dist, qu'il l'allast chercher à la haulte ville, que peraventure il le trouveroyt en quelqz lieu au conseil ; et l'ayant cherché, il voyt venir une troupe de gens de vers le Kirkseild, la ou estoit le dict Seigneur de Boduel et Monsr. Jacques Balfour, coste a coste ensemble, lequelz f'en alloient d'isner au logis du dict Monsr. Jacques. Le dict Paris prya Monsr. de Boduel de le despecher vers LA ROYNE. Apres d'isner (ce dict-il) je le feray ; et quant il retourna querir sa despesche apres d'isner, il trouve le Seigneur de Boduell et le dict Monsr. Jacques seulz, teste a teste, en une chambre ; et le dict Seigneur de Boduel qui escrivait de sa propre main ; et apres avoir fait, il dist à Paris, voyla ta responce, retourne t'en à LA ROYNE et me recommends bien humblement à sa bonne grace, et luy dictes que tout yra bien, car Monsr. Jacques Balfour et moy n'avons dormis tout la nuyte ains avons mis ordre en toute, et avons apreste le logis, et dictes à LA ROYNE que je luy envoie ce dyamant que tu luy porteras, et que f'y j'avoymon cueur je le luy enverroye trefvullentiers, mais je ne l'ay pas moi. Va t'en à Monsr. de Liddington et luy demandes f'il veult rescrire à LA ROYNE, ce que le dict Paris fist, et le trouve à la chambre des comptes, et luy demande f'il plafoyt rendre la responce aux lettres de LA ROYNE que Monsr. de Boduel luy avoyt baillies. Ouy (ce dit-il) et la-dessus il prend du papier incontinent et escript, et ayant fait le dict Paris luy dict que LA ROYNE l'avoit commande de luy demander, lequel des deux logis feroit le millieur pour LE ROY, car elle ne bougeray dela jusqu'à ce qu'il l'auroit raporté sa responce. Le dit Liddington luy respondit, que le Kirkseild feroit bon, et que le dit Seigneur de Boduel et luy avoyent advise ensemble la-dessus. Ainly le dict Paris partit pour son aller à Glasgow vers LA ROYNE ; et estant de retour à Glasgow et avoyr fait son messaige, qui luy estoit donné des dix Seigneurs de bouche, LA ROYNE luy demande, s'il avoyt veu parler Messieurs de Boduel et Liddington ensemble ? Dict que non, mais que Monsr. de Boduel luy avoyt dict qu'ilz avoyent parlé de bon visage ensemble, et que le dict Sieur de Liddington estoit du tout à luy, et que le logis estoit prest. Item, comme elle retournoyt de Glasgow vers Lislebourg avec LE ROY à Kalendar, il f'adressé ung homme de Monsr. de Boduel au dict Paris et luy baille une lettre pour la presenter à LA ROYNE, ce qu'il feist, laquelle luy demanda, s'y l'homme estoit seur ? Je pense, ce dit-il, Madame qu'il n'eust voullu vous envoyer homme qu'il n'en fust seur. La-dessus en f'en allant coucher elle rescript une lettre, et y meist dedans ung anneau et la luy bailla pour la bailler au dict homme porteur, chose qu'il feist, pour la rapporter au dict Sieur de Boduel ; apres LA ROYNE et LE ROY estans à Lythkour, elle dict au dict Paris qu'il vouloit mettre Guilbert Cowlle, Vallet de chambre ches LE ROY, pour ce qu'il estoit de bon esprit, afin de veoyr ce que LE ROY feroit, car elle ne ce fyoyt point à Sande Duram. Du dict lieu Jehan Hay fust par elle despesché vers Monsr. de Boduel, auquel elle parla assés long temps, en apres aussy Paris avec des brassieletz au dit Sieur Boduel (le dict Paris arryvent à Lislebourg luy baille les brassieletz) lequel Siens estoit prest de monter à cheval pour aller trouver LE ROY et LA ROYNE, avec lequel le dict Paris retourne au devant du ROY, lequel ils conduyrent jusques à son logis à Kirkseild.

Interrogué, S'il favoyt aucun priveauté entre LA ROYNE et Monsr. de Boduel, durant le temps que LE ROY gyfoit à Kirkafeld? Respond, que Monsr. de Boduel luy avoyt diet que toutes les nuytz Jehan Hepbron feroyt le guet foubz les galleries à Sancte-Croyx, cependant que Lady Rerefs yroyt bien taird le querir pous l'amener à la chambre de LA ROYNE, luy deffendant, affavoyr à Paris, sur la vie de ne dire que sa femme estoit avecques luy.

Interrogué, S'il favoyt de l'entrepris du Meurtre du ROY depuis son arryvement à Kirkafeld jusques au jour de l'exécution? Respond, que non aultrement que ce qu'il en a desjà depofé en sa Deposition faite le neuvieme de ce mois, en adioustant que le jour que Monsr. de Boduel luy avoyt communiqué le faict de Meurtre du ROY, qui fust le mesme jour que LA ROYNE couchait au logis du ROY à Kirkafeld, (ainfy comme il y en souvient fort bein) et comme le dit Paris vouloyt dresser le liet de LA ROYNE en sa chambre, qui estoit droyt foubz la chambre du ROY; ainfy que Monsr. de Boduel luy avoyt commandé, lors qu'il parloyt avecques luy au trou la ou il le destafchoyt pour faire ses affaires, le diet Sieur de Boduell deffendist au dit Paris de ne dresser le liet de LA ROYNE droict foubz le liet du ROY, car je y veulx mettre la pouldre en cest endroyt-là, ce dit-il. Et ceste mesmes nuyt-là, apres que le liet fust dressé en la chambre de LA ROYNE; ce que je fis au mesme endroyt la ou il me fust deffendu par le diet de Boduel, LA ROYNE me dist, 'Sot que tu es, je ne veulx pas que mon liet foyt en cest endroyt-là, et de faict le feist oster!' Par lesquelles parolles, j'ay aperceu à mon esprit qu'elle avoyt cognoissance du faict. La-dessus je prins la hardiesse de luy dire, 'Madame, Monsr. de Boduel ma commande luy porter les clefs de votre chambre, et qu'il a envie de y faire quelque chose; c'est de faire saulter LE ROY en l'air par pouldre, qu'il y fera mettre!' 'Ne me parle poynt de cela ceste heurecy,' ce diet elle, 'fais en ce que tu voudras!' La-dessus je ne l'osoyz parler plus avant. A ceste heurecy je commence à confyderer que j'estoys employé en ce faict meschant, auparavant par parolles couvertes et desguysées estant envoyé de Glasgow vers Monsr. de Boduel, pour scavoyr lequel des logis estoient le meilleur, et par ce aussy qu'il m'a respondu alors, quant il me renvoye vers LA ROYNE, vous la dires, sy elle vous demande ce que je fais, que j'ay veillé toute ceste nuyt et Mr Jacques Balfour, pour aprester le logis du ROY. Estant interrogué, Sy LA ROYNE passoyt plus oultre ceste nuyte sur ce purpos? La diet que non, mais le pressoyt apres plus fort que jamais de parler à elle de pourpos de Monsr de Boduel, de sa femme, et de aultres choses. Et estant couchee ne dormoyt point toute la nuyte, ains escryvoit des lettres au diet Sieur de Boduel, et les envoye par le diet Paris au Sieur de Boduel, environ onze à douze heures de nuyt, mains riens de creance. Et ayant delivré ceste lettre au diet Sieur de Boduel, il rescrip estant au liet, et en baillant la responce au dit Paris, il luy diet, 'Dictes à LA ROYNE, que je dormiray point que je ne escheve mon entrepris, quant je debuoyz trayner la picque toute ma vie pour l'amour d'elle!'

Et estant de retour vers LA ROYNE, Vendredy au matin, luy ayant racompté ces mesmes parolles que luy avoyt dictes Monsr. de Boduel, 'Et bien, Paris (ce diet-elle en ryant) il n'en viendra jamais, sy Dieu plaist à ce pnynt-là!' Et ce dyfoyt-elle estant au liet. Et comme elle s'abilloyt, le dit Paris prend les deux clefs de la chambre de LA ROYNE, selon le commandement du dit Sieur de Boduel, et les luy aporte. Lequel ayant faict fortir toute le monde de sa chambre, prend le clef d'ung coffre qu'il avoyt en sa pochette, et apres avoyr ouvert le dit coffre, en tire des aultres clefs contrefaictes toute neufues, et en regardant les unes aupres des aultres, diet à Paris, ha! ouy, elles sont bien; raporte celles-là, et il remeist les contrefaictes dedans le coffre.

Estant interrogué, S'il scavoyt qui avoyt fait et baillé les clefs contrefaictes au dit Sieur de Boduel? Respond, qu'il n'en favoyt rien, sy non que le dit Sieur de Boduel luy dist, qu'il avoit toutes les clefs des portes de ce logis-là, et que luy et Maistre Jacques Balfour avoyent esté tout une nuyt pour chercher et favoyr la meilleure entree, comme il a desjà depofé. Mais cependant que le diet Paris estoit absent avecques les clefs, Archibald Bethon, huysfier, demande les clefs pour laisser fortir LA ROYNE au jardin, et ne les pouvant trouver, LA ROYNE en fust faché, et diet tout haut à Paris à son retour, ‘ Paris pourquoy aves-vous emporté les clefs de ma chambre ? Lequel ne luy respondit mot fur l’heure ; mais apres la, trouvant a part luy dist, ‘ Ha ! Madame, pourquoy m’aves vous dict devant le monde que j’avoys pris les clefs de votre chambre, voyant que vous faves bien le pourquoy ? ’ ‘ Ha ! ce dit-elle, Paris c’est tout nung ; ne te fonceye, ne te fonceye ! ’ ‘ Et d’autant qu’il en pourroyt avoyr bon fouverance, il dict, que ce Vendredy la nyxt LA ROYNE coucha encores au logis du ROY, et luy renvoya derechef porter des lettres au dict Sieur de Boduel.

Interrogué, S’il avoyt rien entendu de ce propos le Sabmedy au matin ? Respond que non, fy non que LA ROYNE deist en presence de ceulx de sa chambre, qu’il y avoyt eu quelque querelle entre le ROY et Monsr. de Sancte-Croix, lequel avoyt bon moyen à ceste heure-la de tuer LE ROY, car il n’y avoyt en la chambre alors qu’elle pour les departir : Et dict oultre, qu’apres d’ifner, le dict Sieur de Boduel luy commande de prendre la clef de la chambre de LA ROYNE, chose qu’il n’avoyt envie de faire ; mais comme LA ROYNE fortoyt de sa chambre, elle le regarde, et luy commande de prendre la dit clef. Et au foyr, LA ROYNE estant à l’Abbaye, elle envoie le dit Paris vers Monsr. de Boduel, luy commandant luy dire de bouche : ‘ Allez vous en à Monsr. de Boduel, et luy dictez, qu’il me semble qu’il feroit le mieulx que Monsr. de Sancte Croix avec Guillaume Blakatre allent à la chambre du Roy, faire ce que le dict de Boduel scait, et qu’il parle à Monsr. de Sanct Croix touchant ce purpos, car il feroit myeux ainfy qu’aultrement, et pour ce n’en feroit qu’ing peu prifonnier dedans le chasteau.’ Apres avoyr le dict Paris racompté ce fait à Monsr. de Boduel, il luy dict, ‘ Je parleray à Monsr. de Sanct Croix, et puis j’yray parler moy mesmes à LA ROYNE.’ Le dit Paris n’a fouverance d’aultre chose que se feist ce jour-là, mais le reste est contenu en sa premier Deposition, jusques à ce que LA ROYNE arryva en l’Abbaye, et Monsr. de Boduel l’estant ansfy retiré en sa chambre avec le dit Paris, survint Monsr. de Honteley, en compaignye de deux ou troys serviteurs, et ce par le chemin derrier l’Abbaye qui menie droyt au logis de feu Monsr. de Ruthuen ; et apres qu’ilz avoyent parlé en l’oreille ensemble, comme Monsr. de Boduel avoyt desia commence de changer ses habillemetz, le dict (Monsr.) de Boduel deist apres au dit Paris, que Monsr. de Honteley l’estoyt offert d’aller avecques luy, mais qu’il ne le vouloyt mener. Quant et luy, et apres que Monsr. de Honteley se fust party pour aller coucher, le dict de Boduel prend le tailler et Paris avecques luy, comme il est dict en sa premiere Deposition.

Le Lundy matin, entre neuf et dix heures, le dict Paris dict, qu’il entre dans la chambre de LA ROYNE, laquelle estoyt bien close, et son licet la tendu du noyr, en signe de deuil, et de la chandelle allumer, dedans ycelle la ou Madame de Bryant luy donnoyt à desieufner d’ung oeuf frais, la ou aussy Monsr. de Boduel arryve et parle à elle secretement, soubz courtine. Ce jour-là Lundy, se passé ainfy sans ce que le dict Paris parle à elle. Mardy, au matin, elle se lene ; et le dict Paris estant entré en sa chambre, LA ROYNE luy demande, ‘ Paris, qu’as-tu ? ’ — ‘ Helas ! ce dict-il, Madame, je voys que chascun me regarde de costé. ’ — ‘ Ne te chaille, ce dict-elle, je te feray bon vyfayge, et personne ne t’oferoyt dire mot ! ’ Cependant elle ne le dict chose de consequence, jusques à ce qu’elle vouloyt aller à Seton, alors elle luy demanda de prendre une cassette ou il y avoyt des corceletz d’escus, que le Thresorier luy avoyt aporté de France, pour la porter à la chambre de Monsr. de Boduel, qui estoyt à ceste heure-là logé dedans le Pallays, au dessus de la chambre la ou ce tenoyt le Conseil : Et puis apres, luy commanda de prendre son coffre des bagues et le faire porter au Chasteau, et le delivrer entre les mains du Sieur de Skirling, pour lors Capitaine soubz Monsr. de Boduel, chose qu’il feist : En apres, elle voyant le dict Paris tout fashé, elle pressoyt souvent de faire service à Monsr. de Boduel, ce qu’il n’avoyt envie de faire, ains demandoyt souvent son congé ; et voyant cela, à la parfin elle luy dict, ‘ Paris, allez-vous consoller avecques Mr Jacques Balfour ; cest ung homme d’esprit, je m’y suis consolle par plusieurs foys et me consolle de present.’

Item. Interrogué, Du premier pryveauté qu’il a cognu estre entre LA ROYNE et Monsr. de Boduel ? Respond, que c’estoyt alors que le dit de Boduel conduysoit LA ROYNE vers Glasgow, quant elle alloyt querir LE ROY. A Callender, apres souper, assez tard Lady Rerefs vint à la chambre de Monsr.

de Boduel et voyt le dict Paris la, et demande que faict ce Paris icy? Cest tout ung, ce dict-il, Paris ne dyra chose que je luy deffend de dire! Et la-dessus elle l'amene à la chambre de LA ROYNE. Cery cestoyt le foyr devant que le lendemain LA ROYNE l'envoya la bourse par Paris au dict Sieur de Boduel.

Item. En oultre, il dict et declare, qu'environ le temps que le dict de Boduel fust faict Duc, LA ROYNE lui bailla le buffett et vesselle de l'argent de MONSIEUR LE PRINCE la ou estoit ses armoyries pour la porter à Monsr. de Bothuile; le quelluy dict, que cestoyt pour en faire oster la marque de PRINCE, et y mettre la sienne, ce qu'il delyvra à ung qui a espoufè une Marguerite Hepbron (mais il ne scait bonnement son nom) lequel comme il luy dict il le debuoyt bailler à Mr Jacques Balfour pour le faire faire.

Item. Il dict et confesse, que la nuyt au paravant que LA ROYNE fust ravie et enleevee du dit Sieur de Boduel, que Monsr. d'Ormifoun vint parler à LA ROYNE bien secretement à Lythquow: la-dessus LA ROYNE escrypt une lettre par le dict Paris, et par ce qu'il ne scavoit bien le chemyn, LA ROYNE le feist conduire par le dict Ormifoun chez Monsieur de Halton, la ou le dict Sieur de Boduel estoit en bonne compaignie, et mesmes les Capitanes couches aupres de luy et daultres: Et trouvant le dict Sieur de Boduel endormye les veille, et luy dict, Monsieur, voyla des lettres que LA ROYNE vous envoie. Et bien, Paris, ce dit-il, couche toy la ung peu; cependant je m'envoys escryre, et apres avoir escrypt, il dict au dit Paris, 'Recommendes me humblement à la Majestie, et luy dictes que j'yray aujourd'hui la trouver sur la chemyn au pont.'

Item. Estant interrogué, S'il savoyt pourquoy Joseph s'en alla de ce pays? Respond, que LA ROYNE lui dict, Paris il fault que tu controuves quelque chose en ton esprit pour faire peur à Joseph, afin qu'il s'en aille: et voyant qu'il ne pouvoit rien faire, elle luy dict, je feray faire une lettre que tu perdras derrier luy pour luy faire peur; mais luy ne pouvant ce faire elle, le feist dire par le Justice-Clerk, comme il peust, qu'il eust à comparoistre au Parlement, chose qu'il l'affrayast grandement, et courut ça et la demandant son congé; enfin LA ROYNE baille neuf vingtz escus à Paris, pour les bailler à Joseph, afin qu'il s'en allast, ce qu'il feist; et ainsi ayant receu la dict somme, il s'en alla.

Item. Dict. que Jehan Hay souvent apres la mort du ROY le conseylloyt et le confortoyt bien, et qu'aulture ne le consolloyt, sy non que souvent comment Monsr. de Houteley le voyant deffaict, le demandoyt, Paris, qu'as tu?

VIII. EXTRACT OF LETTER FROM LORD HUNSDON TO SIR WILLIAM CECIL.¹

WHEREIN he says, he received a letter of the 23 of August, with the Q. MAJESTY'S letter, and my LADY LENNOX packet; and touching Paris, he was put to death a fortnight since, and so was Stewart, who was King of Herald's,² which had determined to kill THE REGENT; but he was forgiven for that, and was burnt for Conjuratiou and Witchcraft.

² This matter is thus chronicled by two contemporaneous authorities. 'This same day (Aug. 2, 1568), about 2 in the afternoon, Sir William Steuarte, Lyone King of Arms, departed out of Edinbarghe to Dumbrittan Castell, being suspect of Conspiracy against the Life of THE REGENT, the Earl of Murray.'—Birrel's Diary, p. 17. 'In this samin mounthe, Sir William Steuarte, Lyone King of Armes, was transported from Edinburgh Castle to Dumbrittane, and ther committed to close prisonne, for Conspyring to take the Regent's lyffe by Sorecery and Necromancey, for which he was put to death.'—Sir James Balfour's Annales, I, 345. No mention of these proceedings occurs in the Books of Adjournal—but about this time the Treasurer's Accounts notice many prosecutions against Witches, four females having been tried between May 16 and Aug. 12, 1569, for this imaginary crime.

X. THE CONFESSION OF THE LAIRD OF ORMISTON.⁴

The Castle of Edinburgh, 13th of December, 1573.

THE quhilk day Johne Brand, Minister at Hallyrnidhouse, being sent to the LAIRD OF BLACK ORMISTOUNE, to give him comfort, be the promiss of God's word offereit to sinners; and alsua, to requyre the said Laird to glorifie God, in shawing of the truth, &c.: After lang conference, and prayers made, above the space of ane hour, or theirby, the said John Brand, Minister, said unto him, 'Sir, althocht I am trewlie perswadit that the hail trewth ye have shawen me of this matter, yit, becaufe divers and greater doubts are passit of you, and alsé the memorie of men are bot weak, theirfoir, gif ye thought guid, I wald wryte certaine of they things, breifeley, that you have spoken.' Quha answerit, meiklie, 'For God's faike doe the famen; wreit even as I shall speike. As I shall answer unto God, with whom I hope this night to fowp,⁵ I shall declaire unto you the hail, from the beginning unto the end of my pairt.' First, I confes that the Earle Bothwell shew that famen wickit deid unto me, in his own chalmer in the Abbey, on Fryday before the deid wes done, and requyred me to take pairt with him therein, becaufe, as he alledged, I wes ane man of activeness, (alace theirfor!) quhair I utterly refusit, and said, God forbid, bot, gif it were upon the field, to fight with your Lo. unto the death, I fould not feir my skinn cutting. Then the said Earle said unto me, 'Tuihe, Ormistoune! Ye need not take feir of this, for the hail Lords hes concluded the famen langfyne, in Craigmiller, all that wes ther with THE QUEEN; and nane dar find falt with it, quhen it shall be done.' Efter the quhilk, I departit hame to Kaitis Tames,⁶ quhilk was Thomas Henderson's house, in Edinburgh, for his mother was called Kait: being in part feik, I lay down in my bed, and lay all Saturday, chiefie for that cause, beleivand that way to have put off that evil hour: And swa, I knew na farder of it quhill⁷ Sunday at night, quhere I, being in my chalmer in the Black Frier Wynd, gangand beltit in ane gown, John Hepburne and John Hay of Tallo come unto me, and said, 'THE QUEENIS grace and Lords are past up to sie THE KING, and my Lord is standand at the Black Frier Wynd fute, and bids you come to him incontinent.' Quhere⁸ I layd my gown from me, and taik ane ryding clock, becaufe I believit all had bein weill anewche now agreit, feing they had passit up to visit him : And cuming, at the first I mist the said Earle, for he had comiten upe amuther cloffe to feik me himselfe, in my awn chalmere ; and thair he fand my coufing Hob, quhom he brought with him ; and thairafter, met togidder in the middis of the Wynd, wha tuilke me againe ; and we all passit up to the Freier Yaird, through the flape,¹ quhair Parcys and Archie Betoun com and met us, and said all wes ready preparit for the setting of the lunt : And they all enquiryt, how it should be set to ? And, after diverse speakingis, I said, ' Take ane piece of lunt of thrie or four inch lang, and kindle the ane end of it, and lay to the cold end, and it wald burn syne to the train, and swa will blow up.' Efter the quhilk, THE QUEINE passing hame, the Erle Bothwell said, ' Speid, and clois all the duris !' for they had 13 fals keys of the lodging maide, and givin, as they said to me, be him that ancht the house. Efter the quhilk I departit incontinent, and came not nearer, as I shall answer befor God, nor² the duir. And as I was cumand hame, it strake ten hours, wher then I passit to Katis Tames hous, to avoyd suspitioun, that na man should say I was at the deid doinge ; for I was an hour and mair in my bed or the blast and crak was.

Being requyrit be the said Minister, ' Gif he knew not that THE KING was utherways handilit be menes handes, for it is commonlie spokin he was brought furth and wirryit !' Quha answerit, ' As I shall answer to my God, I knew nothing but he was blawin up ; and did enquiry the samyn maist diligentlie at John Hepburne and John Hay, and all that tarreit behind me ; quha swore unto me, they never knew nae uther thing bot he was blawin up ; and swa I think it was ane work done be God for the punishment of money wickit men, quhairof I am ane, and ane great sinner before God, for the quhilk I ask God mercy.

Thirdly, Being requyrit, Gif he knew na farder hereafter ? ansrit, At the Pasche³ thairafter, when the brute begouth to rys upon us, and all cryit, ane vengeance upon them that slew THE KING, it prickit my conscience, and I come unto the Erle Bothwell in his chamber, and said to him, ' Quhat Devill is this now, my lord, that every body suspectis you of this deid, and cryes ane vengeance for the samen, and few or no uther spokin of bot yow ! Aneuther thing you said to me !' Quha ansrit, ' I shall let you see sune thing that I had for me !' Quha lute⁴ me see ane Contract subferyvit be four or fyve handwrittes, quhilk he affirmit to me was the subscription of the Erle of Huntlie, Argyll, the Secreter Maitland, and Sir James Balfour, and alleaged that mony mae promisit, wha wald assist him gif he were put at. And thairafter read the said Contract ; quhilk, as I remember, containit thir words, in effect : ' THAT, for samikle it was thought expedient and maist profitable for the common wealth, be the haill Nobilitie and Lords underfubferyvit, that sic ane young fool and proud tirrane should not reign nor bear reull over thame ; and that for diverse causes, thairfoir, that thays all had concludit that he should be put off, by ane way or uther ; and quhosoever should take the deid in hand, or do it, they should defend and fortifie it as thamselfis ; for it should be every ane of their awin, recknit and halden done be themselfis.' Quhilk writting, as said Erle thew unto me, was devyfit be Sir James Balfour, subferyvit be them all ane quarter of ane year befor the deid was done.

After the quhilk, I never spake to the said Erle of it quhill the day he gate his Assyse ; quhaire the said Erle, standing at the barr, luiking down and sad lyke, I plukit upon him and said, ' Fye ! my lord, what Divill is this yee are doand ! Your face shawes what ye are ! Hald up your face, for Godis sake, and luik blythlie ;⁵ ye might luik swa and ye were gangand to the deid ! Allace ! and wo worth them that ever devyfit it ! I trow it shall gar⁶ us all murne !' Quha ansrit me, ' Had⁷ your tongue ; I wald not yet it wer toe do !' I have ane out-gait fra it,⁹ cum as it may ; and that ye will know belyve !¹⁰ they war slayne; and than thair came ane Bill¹ from thamselffis, and said they wer onley hurt, and wald not die: But ane thing did them mair evill than the hurting, viz. that ane commoune bruit was risen, that I was at THE KING'S Slaughter, and theirfoir desirit me to get fume guid way to purge myselfe, that it pafs na farder, or else ye have done with it. Quhilk Bill I tuik and gave to the Erle Bothwell, wha tuik it and gave it to THE QUEIN; and she tuike it and gave it to the Erle Huntlie, thair present, wha read it; and thairafter turnit unto me, and turnit her back, and gave an thring² with her shoulder, and passit away, and spake nothing to me. This is the hail thing I knaw, ather affoir or eftir, as I fall ansuer to my God, with whom I hope to supe.

Efter the quhilk, being inquyred, Gif ever THE QUEIN spake unto him at any tyme, or gif he knew what wes THE QUENIS mynd unto it? Anfrit, As I shall ansuer to God, shoe spake never to me nor I to hir of it, nor I knaw nathing of hir part, but as my Lord Bothwell thaw me: For I will not speike bot the trewth for all the gold of the earth, quhilk I desyre you, guid Minister, bear record hearof as ye have written, quhilk I pray yow read over to me: Let me alswa see it. Quhilk I did, affoir³ Archibald Douglass, Constabill of the Castle, and George Towers of Bristo, with uthers divers gentlemen and servants being in the chalmer.

Quhilk beand done, he said, for God's sake, sit down⁴ and pray for me, for I have bein ane greit sinner utherwyfe, for the quhilk my God this day is punishing me; for of all men on the earth, I have bein ane of the proudest and heich myndit, and maist filthie of my body, abusing myself dyvers ways. Bot specially, I have shed innocent blood of ane Michael Hunter with my awin hands. Allace theirfoir! Because the said Michael havand me lyeing upon my back, haveing ane fork in his hand, myght have slayne me gif he pleasit, and did it not; quhilk of all things grieves me maist in conscience. Alswa, in a raige, I hangit a poor man for an horfe; with mony uther wickit deids: for the quhilk, I aske my God mercy: For its not mervell that I have bein wickit, for the wickit companie that ever I have bein in, bot speciallie within thir feaven yearis bypast, quhilk⁵ I never saw twa guid men or ane guid deid, bot all kind of wickednefs; and sit my God wald not suffer me to be lost, and hes drawn me from them, as out of hell, and hes given me lazer⁶ and space, with guid companie, to repent; for the quhilk I thank him, and is assurit that I am ane of his elect.

Thir words, with mony mae, cryand continually unto his God, even to the very end, cryand, 'My Lord Jesus! sweit Jesus! have mercy upon me, as you have had upon uther finners!' in sick sort, that he was, to the appearance of man, ane of the maist penitent finners that hes bein sein this lang tyme, and may be comptit ane example of God's mercies to all penitent finners.

XI. TRIALS OF THE EARL OF BOTHWELL, THE EARL OF MORTOUN, &c.

THE reader may be once more referred to the Collections by Anderson, &c., for farther illustrations of the Murder of Darnley. In the new edition of the State Trials,⁷ the proceedings in the Trial of THE EARL OF BOTHWELL may be found, but in a modernized and mutilated form. Laing, in his History, also gives a brief notice of the mock Trial of Secretary Maitland of Lethington,⁸ and he has likewise preserved the memory of many other minute points, which cannot be noticed in this work. Reference may likewise be made to *Laing's History*⁹ and Bannatyne's Journal,¹⁰ for the Confession of THE EARL OF MORTON, on Jun. 2, 1581, the day of his execution, in which works are detailed the interesting Conference which took place between him, Mr John Durie, and Mr Walter Baleanquell, immediately before he suffered.

¹ Supremi (serenissimi) domini nostri. ² It is proper to observe at the outset of the work, that by the mode of reckoning in Scotland at this period, the year uniformly commenced on the 25th, and ended on the 24th day of March. This practice was universally observed, until the beginning of the seventeenth century, when the style was changed by an express enactment, and the year was thenceforward declared to commence, (especially in all public writings and instruments) with the 1st day of January, from and after January 1, 1600. The want of attention to this fact, has led to many mistakes in the quotation of dates, &c. ³ Accused, denounced. Law Lat. delatare, deferre. ⁴ Being accessory to.

³ A blank left here in the Record. The Record affords no information of the nature of the crime. It may, however, be conjectured, from the religious tenets of the Wintoun family, that they were put upon their trial for intercommuning with and reſetting Jeſuites, or hearing maſſ ſaid, &c.

⁴ 'The Confession of Mr Johnne Kello, miniſter of Spott, together with his repentance made vpon the ſcaffold befor his ſuffering, the fourt day of October 1570,' was 'Imprinted at Edinburgh, be Robert Lekpriwick' (1570 Herbert's Ames.) Richard Bannatyne has inserted the whole Tract in his Journal, p. 39, which is well worthy of perusal. Kello was a person of considerable note, and of much religious profession. The circumstance of the murder, his subsequent deep contrition, his confession and execution, made a great stir at the time. These are noticed by Calderwood and several other writers.—Bartilmo, Barbara, and Bessie Kello, 'sone and dochteris to vmq^{le} Mr Johnne Kello,' got a gift of his escheat 'throw the said vmq^{le} Mr Johnne being convict and justifeit to the deid, for the crewell and odious Murthure of vmq^{le} Margaret Thomesoun his spous.' ¹ It may be noticed here, that the term 'feruand' was at this period frequently, indeed usually, employed to signify secretary, clerk, a dependent or follower of a nobleman, &c.; not merely a domestic 'feruitour.' The clerks of lawyers, writers, notaries, &c., were uniformly styled feruitours or feruands, as were pages, henchmen, and dependents, in the train of the great. ² Choosing. ³ The popularity of these personages is too well known to stand in need of any explanation. For an abstract of the history of the Robin Hood games, and choosing of an Abbot of Unreason, reference need merely be made to Dr Jamieson's Dictionary, and the writings of Sir Walter Scott.

Oct. 31.—JOHNE ALEXANDERSOUNE, William, Gilbert, Andro, and Roger Sibbald in Cornetoune, brether to David Sibbald of Cair, William Barrye in Newtoune, David Strathachin at the mylne of Thorntoune, John Sibbald in Casteltoune, Robert Barrye sonne to the said William, John Watt in Boyburne, David Sibbald of Cair, Catherine Striueling in Casteltoune.

¹ The Bailie or Judge of every Regality, &c. having the privilege of criminal jurisdiction, was entitled, on finding surety for the due administration of justice, to appear at the bar of another Regality and even at the bar of the Supreme Court and claim the person of the pannel, if resident within his bounds. This was often the occasion of much injustice and oppression; for, though liable to be called to account for their conduct, the privacy of their proceedings, their distance from the seat of government, and the frequently disturbed state of the country, often prevented the circumstances from reaching the ears of the officers of the crown, excepting in very flagrant instances. ² This entry has been inserted at length to show the mode of procedure, &c.

Sorcery, Witchcraft and Incantation.

NOV. 8.—ELIZABETH or BESSIE DUNLOP, spous to Andro Jak in Lyne.⁴

THE TRIAL of BESSIE DUNLOP is one of the earliest, and may assuredly be reckoned as one of the most extraordinary cases on record, in reference to the infatuation, common to all the nations of Europe at that period, on the subject of Witchcraft. It is in every view extremely interesting, but more particularly on account of the very minute and graphic details given by Bessie of many circumstances connected with the prevailing superstition, especially in relation to the Court of Faerie ; which, so far as the Editor knows, are not elsewhere to be found. Few scenes perhaps are anywhere to be met with, so intensely attractive as the meetings with 'Thom Reid.'

The Dittay, or Indictment, seems to have been an echo of two Declarations, emitted by this

³ Confirmation ; from Law Latin, ratihabere. ⁴ On the margin of the Record, ' Conuict, and brynt.' Lyne or Linne, in Ayrshire, was a six-merk land, lying in the barony of Dalry, the property of the family of Lord Boyd. It is likely that Bessie and her husband were tenants or cottars on this estate, as the principal scene of the following transactions is within the county of Ayr. There is also a parish of Line in Peebles-shire.

ill-fated woman ; no doubt extorted, as usual, by the application of the most exquisite tortures. The Inquest or Assyise return a Special Verdict, corresponding to the various Articles or points of the Dittay and Examinations ; which poor Bessie, to avoid farther torture, (as may naturally be inferred,) confesses ; and is accordingly 'fylit,' on her own confession. It is very unfortunate, that in this, as in most other instances during the Sixteenth Century, the Record is so very brief with regard to the procedure which took place in Court.

With regard to the guilt of this unlucky woman, there can hardly be two opinions. She was certainly the dupe of her own overheated imagination, already well stored with such fancies, before her first interview with Thom Reid ;¹ who (if not entirely the phantom of a disordered brain) may not unlikely have been some heartless wag, acquainted with the virtues and use of herbs, and who possibly may have played off this too fatal joke on his unhappy victim.

In vindication of the Criminal Tribunals of this country, as well as those of England and France, &c. it is worthy of remark, that in almost all cases of Witchcraft, the trial and the punishment following upon conviction, were as frequently for the public profession of the art, 'ufing of Sorcerie,' &c., and for abusing the people with their 'devilifch craft,' as for the act of Witchcraft itself. In some instances, the poor creatures were convicted for 'being notour Witches,' and were put to death, after undergoing the most frightful tortures, on the slenderest evidence, afforded by the testimony of ignorant and superstitious country people, when added to the circumstance of their being 'habite and repute.'

There was generally, in all cases of this nature, a previous Precognition taken before the Privy Council, most frequently after repeated examinations before the Kirk Session, or the Presbytery of the bounds where the unfortunate victim resided. Such inquiries generally proceeded upon a special Commission issued by the Privy Council ; when the evidence of neighbours was taken down, whose lamentable ignorance and superstitious fears would magnify into Sorcery and Witchcraft the simplest actions in the life of the suspected Witch. Solitary confinement, cold and famine, extreme thirst, the want of sleep, and the privation of all the comforts, even the commonest necessaries of life, the desertion of their affrighted relations and friends, added to the cruellest tortures, generally induced them at length, weary of life, to make their 'Confession,' as it was called.

One of the most powerful incentives to 'Confession' was systematically to deprive the suspected Witch of the refreshment of her natural rest and sleep ; and the cruellest means were often resorted to, to accomplish this heinous purpose. Even the indulgence of lying in a reclining posture on their handful of straw was frequently denied them. This engine of inhuman oppression was perhaps more effectual in extorting confessions, than the actual application of the torture or question itself. Iron collars, or 'Witches bridles,' are still preserved in various parts of Scotland, which had formerly been used for such iniquitous purposes. These instruments were so constructed, that by means of a hoop which passed over the head, a piece of iron, having four points or prongs, was forcibly thrust into the mouth, two of these being directed to the tongue and palate, the others pointing outwards to each cheek. This infernal machine was secured by a padlock. At the back of the collar was fixed a ring, by which to attach the Witch to a staple in the wall of her cell. Thus equipped, and night and day 'waked' and watched by some skilful person appointed by her inquisitors, the unhappy creature, after a few days of such discipline, maddened by the misery of her forlorn and helpless state, would be rendered fit for 'confessing' any thing, in order to be rid of the dregs of her wretched life. At intervals, fresh examinations took place, and these were repeated from time to time, until her 'contumacy,' as it was termed, was subdued. The Clergy and Kirk Sessions appear to have been the unwearied instruments of 'purging the land of witchcraft,' and to them, in the first instance, all such complaints and informations were made.

¹ In Article 14, we are informed that Thom was 'officiare to the Lard of Blair,' probably his baron-officer.

Trial followed closely on the emission of one or more of the Declarations or Confessions thus obtained, which formed the ground-work of the public accusation and prosecution. The Assise, having merely to compare the indictment or dittay with the previously extorted Confession, and such other written or oral testimony as the prosecutor chose to adduce, returned their verdict, 'culpable and fylit.' Doom was, of course, pronounced in terms of law—and in a few hours the wretched victim was led out to the stake, to be strangled and burnt to ashes.

See Art. 14. ³ 'Confessit and fylit.' ⁴ Mr C. K. Sharpe, in a note to the Editor, queries 'land-ill?' The Editor is inclined to think this is the right reading, although the meaning of the term is now entirely obsolete. In diseases of sheep and cattle, similar phrases are still in use; such as the 'muir-ill,' the 'loupin-ill,' &c. The 'land-ill' seems to have been a familiar term employed for denoting famine, the pestilence or plague, or some prevailing and fatal epidemic. The following illustrative quotation is taken from 'Ane Addicioun of Scottis Cornicklis and Deidis,' privately printed, from an Original Manuscript, by Thomas Thomson, Esq. Deputy-Clerk-Register of Scotland, to whom the Editor is indebted for pointing out so interesting a passage. 'The famyne tyme, (anno 1439,) par was in Scotlande a gret derthe, for pe boll of quheit was at xl s., ande pe boll of ete-mele xxx s.; and werraly pe derthe was fa gret, pat par deit a pafinge peple for hungere. ¹ 'Fylit.' ² It seems not a little singular that these personages, whether 'gude wychtis,' 'brounies,' or 'ympis,' et hoc genus omne, nay, even 'Sathanas' himself, uniformly make use of the most pious salutations; often, indeed, the very words which the strange superstition of the Judge and Jury would have uttered in time of need to have dispersed them, or sunk them 100 fathoms deep in the Red Sea! Their own superstitious recollections should have informed them, that no evil spirit, such as they imagined the Thom Reids, Sathans, &c. to be, could have, even for a moment, listened to these holy words; far less to have gravely pronounced them. No doubt these were the common salutations of the Catholics of the Church of Rome of this period, but assuredly not lightly to be pronounced by such questionable characters as Thom. ³ Earthly, worldly. ⁴ Dwindled away. ⁵ Provoked, displeased, made angry, vexed. ⁶ (Likewise?) before you get home. ⁷ Fleyed, afraid. ⁸ 'Confessit and fylit.' ⁹ There is probably a clerical omission in this part of the Record, for no notice is taken of the second meeting. ¹⁰ Thorns were well-known 'tryfling places,' as well for brounies as for lovers. ¹¹ Believe, put confidence in. ¹² At the font, in baptism. ¹³ Vide Articles 6 and 25, &c. ¹⁴ 'Confessit and fylit.' ¹⁵ Fourth. ¹⁶ Gaed, went.

¹ Suddenly to swoon or faint away; vertigine corripit. The word 'vigous' the Editor never before heard of. It appears to have a similar sense with 'dealm,' and is probably from Lat. vacare, vacare, or Fr. vaquer, indicative of an extraordinary vacancy, or wandering of the mind and senses ; or the indescribable sensations experienced by those who are recovering from a swoon. Extremely old people are vulgarly said to be 'quite raig,' when insensible to what is passing around them, although they still retain, to a certain degree, the senses of hearing and seeing. Vige, Dan. and wage (raige), Swed. signify, to yield, to give way from want of ability to resist, and may perhaps be the root of this word. ² Vid. SENTENCE. 'CONUICT, AND BRYNT.'

NOTE. Unfortunately, the sentence has not been recorded at length in the Books of Adjournal; but the terms of it most probably were, that she should be carried to the Castle-hill of Edinburgh, and there 'wirreit at aw ffaik,' and thereafter her body to be 'brynt in assis,' and her whole moveable goods 'efcheit, and inbrocht to the kingis vse.' There is merely a marginal marking on the Record, such as was usual at that period, viz. 'Conuict, and brynt,' and there is no reason to suppose that the sentence was mitigated.

¹ This person, according to Sir Robert Gordon, commanded the country of Assint. He was the fifth son of Angus-more, Laird of Assint. The eldest son, Donald-Caim, died of his wounds shortly after being taken prisoner by the Laird of Lewis, (John M^cCorquill M^cLeod,) against whom he had revolted. Tormot, the second son, was slain by his brother Angus-beg, who, in his turn, was slain by his bastard brother Alexander, in revenge of Tormot's death. John-reawich succeeded his brother Angus-beg, (who died without issue,) and governed the country for 16 years. On John's death, he left the government to this Neill-Angus-son; whose younger brother Hucheon, jealous of Neill's prosperity, took him prisoner, and detained him until he forced him into certain terms. In revenge for this act, he killed Hucheon, with his second son Donald, who had come to visit him in the Isle of Assint. 'Wherupon Torquell Conaldagh MacLoyd of the Cogigh pursued the Yle in Assint, and apprehended Neill Anguffone, whom he sent to Edinburgh, where he was executed the yeir of God 1581.'—Gordon's General Account of Earldom of Sutherland, p. 263.—Neil left his sons John-reawich and Donald-bane, with three bastards, Tormot, Angus, and Alister. ² Y Macky of Far 'invaded the cuntry of Southerland after the death of Earl John, waisted the barony of Skibo, came to the town of Dornogh, and, (vpone some privat quarrell betuein himself and the Morrayes,) being assisted by the Laird of Duffus and his freindis, he brunt the said town, the yeir of God 1567, which was then cheiftie inhabited by the Morrayes.'—Gordon's Sutherland, p. 150.—This town was a second time burnt after a siege by the Master of Caithnes and Y Mackay, anno 1570, 'in the night feason, which the inhabitants culd no longer defend; yit eftir the town was lost, and the cathedrall church brunt, except the steiple, they held the castle and the steiple of the church for the space of a weik, the Catteynes continuallie assaunting them, bot in vain without successe.'—Ibid, p. 156. ³ i. e. Paid his Assythment, and obtained Letters of Slains thereupon.

It is much to be regretted that the ‘ poyntis of Dittay,’ and the Declarations and Confession of this personage, are not preserved in the Record. There is no doubt, from the singular respectability of the Assise or Jury, that she must have been of superior rank.—Although her conviction is recorded, the Justiciary Clerk has not marked the sentence on the margin as usual. It had likely been referred to the Lord Regent and Privy Council ; and when pronounced, omitted to be inserted in the Record.
