THANKS

DANIEL C SCHECHTER

Pretty much everyone I met in the state of Campeche merits praise for their compassionate, gentle spirit but I neglected to write down all their names. In particular, I would like to thank Raul and Marta Ek' in Dzibalchén for their hospitality, and Fernando Alvarado and Guadalupe Poot in Sabancuy for their generous assistance. Among the tourism personnel who went above and beyond their job descriptions, Yaremi García Pech in Campeche and Juan Manuel Mas Dzib in Hopolchén have earned my everlasting gratitude. I am also grateful to Carlos Vidal and Adriana Orlaineta at INAH, Juan Carlos Taller and Eduardo Galicia of Pronatura Yucatán, and Charlotte Arnaud at Río Bec for filling me in on archaeological and environmental developments. Thank you, John Hagenbuch and Judith Kidd, and Joann Andrews and Anthony Andrews for sharing your voluminous knowledge of Yucatán with me. Jeffrey A Wright and José Fernández Ramos as usual contributed their journalistic savvy to help me dig up information, and Ray Bartlett, my esteemed co-author, answered every one of my endless questions. Above all, thank you, Myra for every little thing. You came through again!

RAY BARTLETT

Muchas, muchas gracias:

To my family and friends – for simply remembering who I am after I've been gone so many months, and for enduring my random e-tales from the road. Thanks to Suki and Greg, to Danny, and to all the LP staff behind the scenes – it has been a joy working with you. Thanks as well to the friendly, fun-loving, proud citizens of Yucatán – taxi drivers, fishermen, hammock makers, bartenders, divers, waiters, hotel and

THE LONELY PLANET STORY

The story begins with a classic travel adventure: Tony and Maureen Wheeler's 1972 journey across Europe and Asia to Australia. There was no useful information about the overland trail then, so Tony and Maureen published the first Lonely Planet guidebook to meet a growing need.

From a kitchen table, Lonely Planet has grown to become the largest independent travel publisher in the world, with offices in Melbourne (Australia), Oakland (USA) and London (UK). Today Lonely Planet guidebooks cover the globe. There is an ever-growing list of books and information in a variety of media. Some things haven't changed. The main aim is still to make it possible for adventurous travelers to get out there – to explore and better understand the world.

At Lonely Planet we believe travelers can make a positive contribution to the countries they visit – if they respect their host communities and spend their money wisely. Every year 5% of company profit is donated to charities around the world.

hostel owners, tour guides, salsa dancers, staff – thank you so much for the insider advice that helped make this guidebook what it is. May you treat all readers of this book as kindly as you've treated me. Rob, your tips and sleuthing helped tremendously.

A giant thanks to Natalie and Becca for letting me crash your vacation right when I needed it most, and to all the wonderful, fun, zany traveling friends I met or made along the way. You're what makes it worth it to hit the road for so long.

Special thanks as always, last and most importantly, to my ruin-researching, mot-mot-spotting, dog-feeding, hotel-sleuthing, hammock-trying, ever-understanding, often beleaguered and very patient partner in crime.
