PREFACE TO THE EIGHTH VOLUME

We have now completed the eighth and last volume of this work. The author and the publisher may be permitted to rejoice at the successful conclusion of their arduous task, after twelve years of common effort.

The time occupied by the publication has no doubt seemed considerable to our subscribers. But, setting aside the interruptions caused by the ill-health of the author, the difficulties of his undertaking were very great. He had to study the six hundred or so of pictures that represent the work of Rembrandt as a painter, pictures now distributed throughout the public and private galleries of all Europe, and even of America; he had to describe them, and to reconstitute their history. These pictures had then to be photographed and reproduced in heliogravure. If, during the course of such searching examination, many works hitherto accepted as authentic proved to be apocryphal, or due to pupils, on the other hand, nearly two hundred unknown pictures came to light. We must add to all these sources of delay the time required for printing the text in three languages, and for making impressions of the heliogravures, which amount to some 600 000 copies for the complete edition.

This eighth volume is the one which has been longest in preparation; but, as will be seen, it is far more important than any of its predecessors. While in these the author described all the master's pictures in chronological order and traced the course of his artistic development, in this last volume, drawing upon the documents that have been preserved to us bearing on the artist's life, he has written Rembrandt's biography, and a study of his art. This is followed by descriptions and reproductions of fifty-six pictures discovered during the course of our publication, the re-appearance of many of these being mainly due to the interest excited by our undertaking. It was at first proposed to publish the latter in a supplement, but in the interest of our subscribers, we have preferred to give them here, in order to present the sum of Rembrandt's painted work, as far as it is known at present, in these eight volumes. For a like reason, we give reproductions of old engravings after pictures that have disappeared. And further — last, not least — we transcribe 437 documents of the highest interest to students, bearing upon Rembrandt and his works, and covering his whole life-time, and a certain period after his death. These documents, collected with the greatest care and the utmost completeness by Dr. C. Hofstede de Groot, are here given in the original, with commentaries and summaries in English.

Owing to this superabundance of material, we have been obliged to forego enumeration of Rembrandt's drawings and etchings, which, reduced to a bare catalogue of titles, would have had no scientific value. It was the less called for, as very complete special works on Rembrandt's etchings have been published in our days by E. Dutuit, D. Rovinski and W. von Seidlitz, while Dr. Hofstede de Groot has prepared an elaborate catalogue of the drawings, comprising over 2000 examples, which will shortly be published. Rembrandt's admirers will have no difficulty in procuring these special works. Our object, on the other hand, has been to give the most careful and complete annotated description of Rembrandt's pictures, and this task we may claim to have accomplished more perfectly than has ever yet been done either for Rembrandt or any other painter.

May our work, the completion of which coincides with the celebration of Rembrandt's tercentenary, contribute to the glorification of the great Dutch master, and prove an incentive to the study and comprehension of his immortal creations!

REMBRANDT'S BIOGRAPHY

WHEREAS the life of the « Painter-Prince », Peter Paul Rubens, in the Spanish Netherlands was as brilliant and luminous as his pictures, that of his more youthful contemporary in the northern Low Countries shows strong contrasts of light and shadow, a peculiar chiaroscuro akin to that of his pictures, in which the darks occupy far more space than the lights. His very earliest biographers, though they speak of his brief happiness, have far more to say of his evil days, those evil days for which he is judged mainly responsible himself. Documents relating to the artist, which have been discovered by Dutch students during the past decade in considerable numbers, give a similar picture of the master.

It is true that they show the tales of Houbraken and his followers to have been very much exaggerated, occasionally even untrue, and very unfair to Holland's greatest son, whose works were no longer understood or appreciated by his epigoni; but if the old biographers hold Rembrandt himself responsible for many of the misfortunes of his old age, for his debts and his distress, they are not altogether wrong. The documents clearly prove that Rembrandt was a very bad manager, that his passion for art and artistic objects made him run into debt, and that he had no notion of economy, in spite of his personal frugality. Indeed, they might seem occasionally to condemn Rembrandt even more strongly than his biographers; they have, in fact, been interpreted in this sense; and upon their evidence the master has been condemned for moral obliquity, debauchery and deceit. But such conclusions would be by no means justifiable, even if we had not Rembrandt's own works to bear eloquent testimony to his lofty moral purpose, his deep religious feeling, his warm heart and his iron industry. The archives throw practically no light at all on the spiritual development, the thoughts and feelings of the artist; and they are not even to be depended upon as statements of facts, when they contain the depositions of persons who were Rembrandt's opponents in law-suits, and consequently prejudiced against him; the affirmations made by these persons solely in their own interests were probably often very wide of the truth. But the archives seem indisputably and almost unanimously to establish the master's irregularity of life, and unpractical habits, the weaknesses of his artist-nature. He was, in fact, thoroughly unbusiness-like, obeying his artistic convictions only, and living wholly for his art, in which he felt a lofty pride and for which he sacrificed everything; an enthusiastic collector, deeming no price too high for a work of art, careless of the opinions of others, stubborn and angular, absorbed in his own intellectual life and in the interests of his home; easily excited, sensual in temperament, affectionate and sensitive, but blunt and even unjust when he was crossed, when his rights were infringed or his artist-pride was wounded; thus he stands before us, as contemporaries and archives reveal him; a very man, whose brilliant aspects have of course their dark sides; a gem, but one that was hard of grain and rough to the touch.

I propose to give in the following pages a brief picture of the artist's life, as an introduction to and commentary on the documents in Dutch archives relating to Rembrandt, and the various mentions of him gleaned from contemporary sources, a complete collection of which has been made and transcribed for this volume by Dr. C. Hofstede de Groot.

Rembrandt van Rijn was born at Leyden on July 15, 1606. This is the date given by Orlers, the burgomaster of his native town, his compatriot and senior, a person whose statements have been shown to be peculiarly accurate. Rembrandt himself gave different accounts of his own age on different occasions; from some of these we might conclude that he was born either in 1607 or 1608, but his earliest pronouncement on the subject, made in the year 1620, agrees with that of Orlers, and is certainly the most trustworthy. His parents were well-to-do members of the lower middle class in Leyden. His father, Harmen Gerritsz (born 1568 or 1569), was a miller. In addition to his windmill at the Witte Poort, a minor share in which belonged to other persons, Harmen owned a dwelling-house opposite the mill, and two or three plots of land outside the town. That he was highly respected in his native place is evident from his appointment to various civic offices. Harmen's wife was Neeltje Willemsz, daughter of a baker, whom he married on October 8, 1589. Five older children were still living when Rembrandt was born. The other boys were brought up to various handicrafts, but the parents seem to have believed their youngest son to be destined for higher things. In cultured Leyden, whose University, founded a generation earlier, had already become famous throughout Europe, nearly every citizen aspired to bring up a gifted son as a man of learning. This seems to have been the ambition of our worthy miller and his wife; for in 1620, Rembrandt, then aged fourteen, was entered as a student at the University. But here it was evidently soon discovered that his talents did not lie in the direction of letters, and the artistic aspirations of the youth, already very pronounced, as his earliest biographers tell us, speedily determined his parents in their choice of his career. Even later in life, Rembrandt seems never to have shown much interest in scientific study; in the inventory of his goods made in 1656 only fifteen books appear, besides the Bible; unfortunately the titles of these are not given. All the best of what he learned as a boy, his knowledge of the Scriptures, Rembrandt evidently owed to his mother, whom he was fond of representing with a Bible in her hand when he etched or painted her. The artist was as deeply versed in Holy Writ as any of the orthodox theologians of his native city. There are many motives, both from the Old and the New Testament, which he alone has treated; and many, known to us only in sketches among his drawings, have remained unidentified, because our generation is not so learned in the Scriptures as Rembrandt's Holland, and more especially, as himself.

Removing his son from the Latin Schools of the University before the end of the year 1620, Harmen Gervitsz placed him with a much esteemed painter of his native place, Jacob van Swanenburgh, the scion of a patrician Leyden family, which produced several painters. Rembrandt spent three years with him, studying the elements of his art, and as Jacob's brother was an engraver, it is probable that he also found facilities for learning etching and engraving. To complete his education, he went at the age of seventeen to Amsterdam, to work under another artist who had also a great reputation as a teacher at that time, Pieter Lastman, already the master of Rembrandt's fellow-townsmen, Jan Lievens, a youth of about the same age as himself. Both Lastman and Swanenburgh were formed under Italian influences during a long sojourn in Rome, where they attached themselves mainly to Caravaggio and Adam Elsheimer. From these two humbly endowed masters Rembrandt can have learned little but the purely mechanical part of his art, but the direction in which he was led by them, his introduction by their means to Elsheimer's familiar, genre-like conceptions of Biblical and mythological motives in combination with landscape, was of great and lasting usefulness and importance to him.

Rembrandt stayed only six months with Lastman; the art and the teaching of the latter were perhaps uncongenial to him. In the course of 1624 we find him back again in Leyden, where he continued his studies independently in the house of his parents, and probably made his first appearance in public as a painter. His earliest dated works belong to the year 1627; from this time forth we can trace his development from year to year for over four decades in a series of pictures, etchings and drawings. Even in his earliest works he shows marked originality, a complete divergence from the manner of his teachers. We have no direct evidences of the fashion in which he cultivated his powers during his first years of study at Leyden, but these works justify the conclusions we drew in our first volume in our account of Rembrandt's artistic development. As early as the year 1628 he was a finished artist, who would have claimed an honourable place in the history of Dutch art, even if he had died without further achievement. In this same year he received as his pupil a Leyden youth of fifteen, Gerard Dou, who developed under his teaching into one of the most remarkable of the Dutch genre-painters; he had already attracted the attention of Dutch connoisseurs throughout the country, as we know from the classic contemporary evidence of Buchel and of Constantijn Huygens. He further appears as a finished and independent artist, in disregarding the advice given him by distinguished amateurs such as these, to go and study in Italy, advice that we may be sure was fervidly endorsed by his Italianised teachers. Rembrandt saw what a fatal influence these Italian sojourns had had on the majority of his countrymen. He remained in his own country and in his parents' house, where he found his models, and where the spiritual life around him first gave him a taste for Biblical compositions.

His studies of his own head and of the figures of his parents and acquaintances had also gradually led him to essay portraiture. The first real portraits of persons outside his own circle which are dated belong to the year 1630. By this time his small Biblical and mythological pictures were among the works by Dutch painters most in demand, especially in Amsterdam, the capital. Actual picture-galleries were, however, still extremely rare. At Amsterdam, as elsewhere throughout Holland at this period, the richest and most influential people were primarily eager for portraits; the portrait-painters were the most highly esteemed artists, and their profits were larger and more easily earned than those of any others. Rembrandt, whose works had so speedily commanded attention and approbation, was very soon called upon to paint portraits. He obeyed the summons readily, for it promised rich profits within a short period. His native city seems to have afforded little scope for this new activity, whereas Amsterdam offered him a wide field. In 1631 we find him frequently in the capital, staying with a young friend, the painter and dealer Hendrick van Uylenborch, who published and sold his etchings for him, and dealt in his pictures, from whom he bought decorative articles for his studio, and perhaps an occasional picture or antique. His income was already such as to admit of these purchases; he was even able at this period to advance a sum of 1000 gulden to his friend.

These frequent visits, the increase of his clientèle in Amsterdam, especially of sitters for portraits, and above all, the commission given him by Dr. Nicolaes Tulp, to paint the great Anatomy-Lesson, determined the young master to settle in the capital. To a loving son like Rembrandt the parting from his parents must have been hard; he seems to have kept up his connection with his youthful home as closely as possible, taking his unmarried sister Lysbeth to Amsterdam with him as his housekeeper. It was at his friend Hendrick van Uylenborch's house on the Breestraat that he found a first home for himself in the winter of 1631-32; and it was doubtless to this friend also that he owed that which was to be his chief pleasure in life, and finally a source of endless trouble and distress : it was Uylenborch who first incited him to become a collector, and encouraged his easily aroused passion for collecting. It was Uylenborch again who introduced Rembrandt to various much esteemed members of Amsterdam society, such as his own relatives, the painter Rombertus van Uylenborch, Sylvius, and other clerical friends in the city; and it is highly probable that it was also through Uylenborch Rembrandt made the acquaintance of the young Frieslander who was afterwards to become his wife. Rembrandt's first connection with Hendrick's cousin, Saskia van Uylenborch, the daughter of a wealthy and respected Friesland family, began immediately after his removal to Amsterdam, for there is a profile portrait of the young girl painted by the master in 1632. Saskia was an orphan, and was at this time a temporary inmate of the house of Jan Cornelisz Sylvius, the preacher, her near relative. In 1624, at the age of twelve, her mother being already dead, she lost her father, who held an important position in Leerdam as municipal secretary and burgomaster. Of his nine children the three sons were jurists like himself; the daughters married clergymen and officials; and one, like Saskia, became the wife of a painter, Wijbrandt de Geest. These various connections rendered it easy for Rembrandt to improve his acquaintance with the young girl, who must have made an impression upon him at first sight. They were betrothed on June 6, 1633, as he himself has told us in the inscription on his beautiful silver-point drawing of Saskia in the Berlin Print Room. The severe illness of one of her sisters separated the young couple for a time. Saskia hastened to Antje Maccovius' sick-bed at Franeker, and nursed her till she died; she then went to Bildt to her sister Hiskia, who had married Gerrit van Loo, the secretary of the commune. Here the civil marriage of the young people took place, on June 22, 1634, and was immediately followed by the religious ceremony in the parish church of St. Anna.

The newly married pair established themselves in H. van Uylenborch's house in the St. Antonie Breestraat. Rembrandt's wedded happiness lasted just eight years, the best of his life, years that sped swiftly and almost cloudlessly. Acclaimed as indisputably the first painter in Holland, he commanded the highest prices for his pictures; he was consequently free to follow out his artistic inclinations, and enjoyed an income that enabled him to indulge freely in his passion for collecting, and in the purchase of those rich ornaments with which he loved to adorn his young wife. The melancholy documents of the law-suits of later years throw many interesting side-lights on this happy period. We now know as a fact, that Rembrandt made a very large income at the time; we can, indeed, almost fix the amount approximately. Saskia had brought him 40,000 guilders as her dowry. This sum was considerably increased later on by legacies from Rembrandt's mother and several of Saskia's relations. At the time of Saskia's death their joint property amounted, as the master himself admitted later, to 40,750 guilders. Rembrandt's price for a half-length portrait was 500 guilders; for his Scriptural subjects he received as much as 1200 guilders; 1600 guilders was paid for the Night Watch. In his first years at Amsterdam he painted about forty pictures annually; during his married life we may reckon his yearly output at twenty odd pictures. In addition he made considerable sums by his drawings and etchings, which were especially numerous during these years; and he found a further source of profit in the fees of his pupils, of whom he had as many as his rooms would hold. We shall not be giving an exaggerated estimate of Rembrandt's income between the years 1630 and 1640, if we put it at from 12,000 to 15,000 guilders, or from about £ 5000 to £ 6000 of our current money.

Taking into account the income he was enjoying, we can hardly blame Rembrandt very severely for spending freely. But the sight of Saskia in magnificent raiment, decked with pearls and precious stones, excited envy, particularly amongst her relatives. Several of them expressed their disapproval in no measured terms, and probably denounced Rembrandt as a spendthrift. This we learn from the records of an action brought by the master against Albert van Loo, the brother of his brother-in-law, in 1638, Rembrandt being highly incensed at the calumny uttered by van Loo, seeing that he and his wife were "richly and even ex superabundanti" provided with means. We know from the evidence of the goldsmith van Loo and his wife in 1658 or 1659 what Saskia's principal ornaments were: two large pear-shaped pearls, two rows of valuable pearls, the larger worn as a necklace, the smaller as a bracelet, a very large diamond set in a ring, and two other diamonds set as earrings, etc. The master kept some of these jewels even after his monetary embarrassments had become very grave, as we know from the evidence of Philips Koninek his pupil, to whom he sold a necklace of valuable pearls in the year 1652.

But Rembrandt spent still more lavishly in purchases of artistic objects and antiquities of every kind at this period. In the extant documents of the years immediately before 1660, which contain the evidence as to the value of Rembrandt's property at the time of Saskia's death, there is a valuation of his antiquities, which certain dealers assess roundly at 11,000 guilders, whereas they take the value of the pictures to be about 6,400 guilders. Still more valuable perhaps was his collection of drawings and engravings, which comprised complete sets of engravings by Marc Antonio, Mantegna, Lucas van Leyden, Schongauer, Dürer, Cranach, etc., to say nothing of his own works, a considerable number of which, including various masterpieces, decorated his rooms. When an inventory of his property was drawn up in view of sale, his distress had forced him to part with some of the best of these, among them the exquisite portrait of Saskia, now in the Cassel Gallery.

The chief joy and pride of the artist's life after his creative work lay in the possession of works of art. Simple and frugal as he was in his personal habits, indifferent as he was to dress, outward show, and festivities, a masterpiece was worth any money to him. We know from various sources that at the sales in Holland which at that period brought together works of art of all kinds from the whole of Europe, Rembrandt started with such a high offer for certain items he considered to be of great artistic merit, that no one ventured to bid against him. His artist-pride could not brook the thought that such things should not fetch their full value. What was his reward at the sale of his own art-treasures, works that ought to have fetched ten times what had been given for them, and that in our times would fetch perhaps a thousand times their original price!

All contemporary evidence proves that in spite of his large income and his exquisite surroundings the artist lived very simply. His work, his art and his home were all the world to him. Yet though he avoided noisy festivities, was unknown alike in literary societies and shooting guilds, and hated every kind of restraint and formality, he was no anchorite. From the portraits of this period, the manner in which he conceived and arranged them, we can form an idea of his circle of friends, which included the most highly esteemed clergymen, doctors, artists and savants of Amsterdam; the most aristocratic persons of the town also sought his acquaintance when they had any taste for art.

The joy of seeing a child growing up in his home during his wife's lifetime, was denied to Rembrandt. Three of the children Saskia bore him died in infancy, and when in September 1641 a son was at last born, who was destined to enjoy a longer life, the mother began to fade. She made her will on June 5 of the following year; and twelve days later her mortal remains were laid in a grave in the Oudekerk. The painter's happiness may be said to have been buried with her. The property she left to Rembrandt was certainly almost as large as that she had brought him as her wedding portion, and with absolute confidence in her husband, she directed in her will that he should enjoy the usufruct of it, and that it should be at his disposal, releasing him from any obligation to give an account of his stewardship to her prospective heir, Titus. But Saskia added one condition suggested no doubt by the notary as a customary precaution, and this condition with a person of Rembrandt's character, was bound to exercise a disastrous influence on his subsequent conduct: he was only to enjoy these advantages as long as he remained unmarried. The artist's carelessness, his ignorance of business and his passion for collecting threatened danger to his property; neglect and even utter ruin were contingencies none too improbable; and on the other hand, taking into account his absorption in his work, and his indifference to social relations, there seemed to be little prospect that the master, who was now thirty-six years old, would contract a second marriage with a well-dowered girl in his own rank of life, and thus become independent of Saskia's legacy.

Under these conditions, an important factor in Rembrandt's financial disaster was his negligence in paying for the house he had bought in the St. Antonie Breestraat on January 5, 1639, after various changes of dwelling. The building, still known as Rembrandt's House, is the second on the sluice, next door to that once occupied by the painter Nicolaes Eliasz. He had paid a part of the price (13,000 guilders) to the owner, Cristoffel Thysz, at once, but afterwards made no attempt to discharge the rest of the debt; later, as his income and capital fell off more and more, he even borrowed money from Thysz, left him to pay the taxes of the house, and allowed him to interfere in the management of his property, certainly not to his own advantage. The consequences of all this first became apparent about the year 1649, at about the same time when certain changes took place in the artist's household, which ensured him a comfortable home once more, but combined with his diminished fortune to cut him off from the society of his own class, and induced him to lead a more isolated life than ever. We have scarcely any information bearing upon the interval in which this state of things was slowly coming about; documents of a later date alone throw some light upon it. We can see from the works of this period that as in the life-time of his wife, Rembrandt continued to work with perfect independence, following his own artistic predilections; but they also show us that the master had ceased to take much pleasure in his now desolate home, that he turned to Nature for solace — hence the large number of landscapes produced during these years, especially among the etchings and drawings — or sought inspiration in the Scriptures. The portraits of this time, among which he himself and the members of his own family no longer play an important part, are mainly those of friends and acquaintances, in all probability painted solely because of the master's interest in the originals, and not for payment.

It is not till about 1649 that the archives begin again with their revelations and accusations. They disclose the existence of Titus' nurse, Geertge Dirx, the widow of a trumpeter, who had probably been an inmate of Rembrandt's house since the birth of the child, or at any rate since Saskia's death, and whose portrait may perhaps have been preserved to us in the delightful drawing of the Teyler Museum at Haarlem. She appears to have been well satisfied with her position in the household, and to have attached herself warmly to her nursling, for in her will, dated January 24, 1648, she left all her property to Titus. But in the following year her sentiments towards her master seem to have changed. On June 15, 1649, she left his service, whereupon Rembrandt undertook to pay her 150 guilders and a yearly pension of 60 guilders, on condition that she loyally maintained the disposition of her property in favour of Titus. Shortly afterwards, Geertge complained that her annuity was insufficient for her maintenance, and finally, in the month of October, she came forward in the Matrimonial Court to state that an irregular connection had existed between Rembrandt and herself, and that he had made her a promise of marriage. In spite of the artist's denial of the charges, the Court ordered him to increase the sum he had voluntarily assigned to her, obviously because her account of the matter seemed the more probable of the two. But the assumption that Rembrandt's version was nevertheless the true one is supported by the facts that in the following year Geertge was placed at Rembrandt's expense in a mad-house at Gouda, where she died shortly afterwards, and that in 1656, when Rembrandt was declared bankrupt, and was forced to call in all outlying sums towards the settlement of his debts, he made an attempt to recover his disbursements on Geertge's account from a near relative of his old servant, one Pieter Dircx. This man, a sailor, who was just about to start on a voyage, was arrested at Rembrandt's suit in spite of his protests. I can see no justification for looking upon this as a brutal outrage on the part of Rembrandt; for in the first place, we do not know the facts as to his negotiations with Geertge, and in the second, Rembrandt was bound, in consequence of his bankruptcy, to put on record, and make every effort to recover, all outlying claims, however dubious.

One of the witnesses who appeared on Rembrandt's behalf during the lawsuit with the trumpeter's widow was a young girl of twenty-three, named Hendrickje Stoffels, who was in all probability the cause of Geertge's quarrel with her master, and of her departure from his house. Hendrickje was already in Rembrandt's service when Geertge left, and on such confidential terms with him, that he gave her a minute account of the arrangement made with the latter at the time of her departure, for in October she was able to furnish very precise details as to this settlement. It is clear that the pleasant features, the fine eyes, fresh complexion and rounded figure of this young girl, and her modest, feminine bearing had very soon won her master's heart and roused the jealousy of the widow, who had hitherto ruled the house. It may be that Geertge made certain insinuations before the Court concerning Rembrandt's intimacy with the young girl, and thus influenced the decision of the judges. In any case, the master, — a man of a passionate and sensual temperament, as appears from the evidence of documents now known to us, and ruthless when he thought himself treacherously treated, as in his relations with Geertge Dircx — did not scruple to form a connection with Hendrickje very shortly afterwards (a child by her was buried on August 15, 1652), nor to persist in such relations after Hendrickje had been publicly reprovved by the church council and forbidden to partake of the Sacrament.

On October 30, 1654, another child of Hendrickje's was baptised in the presence of her father, Rembrandt, receiving the name of Cornelia, after the master's mother. Rembrandt would certainly not have hesitated to legitimatise his relations with Hendrickje by marriage, but for the clause in Saskia's will which provided for such a contingency. His financial position had now become so precarious, that he could not renounce the usufruct of his wife's fortune, and was no longer in a position to pay back the capital to her family. He therefore made up his mind to accept the obloquy incurred by his relations with his housekeeper, and the cessation of all intercourse with the best society of his city. He looked upon Hendrickje as his wife and treated her as such, and she repaid him a hundredfold in those dark days when he was driven from his home and forced to part with all his artistic treasures. Their common behaviour was so discreet that the public gradually learned to look upon them as a duly married couple, that Saskia's son always treated Hendrickje as his second mother, and that she is spoken of in various contemporary documents as Rembrandt's wife. The portraits of Hendrickje as well as those presentments of her which are preserved in the master's studies and in his historical compositions, show full features of a peculiarly attractive cast, and eyes expressing profound feeling and fidelity; they suggest a modest, affectionate nature. Hendrickje was just the woman to make Rembrandt's house a home to him once more, to bring up his children lovingly, and to solace him in the hour of misfortune.

The storm that finally broke over Rembrandt's head with the declaration of his bankruptcy had been gradually gathering round him, though he, the victim of the careless artist-nature that shrank from everything connected with business, took no serious or effectual steps to avert it. It had long been evident to his friends and relations that his monetary concerns were becoming more and more unsatisfactory. In 1647, relatives of Saskia's intervened on behalf of his son. In the year 1649 it transpired that the former owner of his house, Cristoffel Thysz, had been arranging all sorts of business matters for him, and had even paid his taxes. In consequence of these proceedings Rembrandt's debt to him at the beginning of the year 1653 amounted to 8470 guilders. Thysz threatened to evict him, if he did not pay this debt of over thirteen years' standing. As the artist could not find the money, he sought for help among his acquaintances, and in September, 1653, C. Witsen and Isaac van Hertsbeek advanced him 8400 guilders, each contributing half the sum more or less. Even then, however, Rembrandt did not satisfy Thysz' claims completely, but applied 1170 guilders to other purposes, and gave his old creditor a mortgage on the house to this value. It may be that he used this sum to help his family, to whom he had already acted very generously at the division of the inheritance after his mother's death, and who seem to have been in great difficulties at this juncture. In 1651 Adriaen Harmensz was obliged to sell one half of his mill; his widow sold the remaining half immediately after his death in 1654. In 1652 another brother was almost destitute, and the sister Lysbeth was also in distress. It is true that he could not do very much to help them, for his own embarrassments were becoming daily greater. In the year 1653 his patron, Jan Six, advanced him 1082 guilders, for which his friend or acquaintance, the painter Lodewijk van Ludick, became surety, unluckily for him, as Six shortly afterwards made over the debt to one G. Ornia, who exacted a settlement from Ludick, Rembrandt having meanwhile been declared bankrupt. The security offered by Rembrandt to Ludick was a half of the profits on all pictures he should paint down to the end of 1662. The difficulty he had in getting a little money together is attested by a transaction with a money-lender named Dirk van Cattenburgh in the following year, 1654, by which he hoped for some relief from his debts and creditors. The arrangement was never carried out, however, probably because Cattenburgh saw no prospect of getting his money back from Rembrandt within a reasonable period. And yet the master exerted himself honestly to work off his debts; the number of pictures and etchings executed during these years is unusually large, and includes several splendid and important works. Once more he undertook portraits for rich and aristocratic sitters, and in the year 1656 he even executed another great Anatomy Lesson, Professor Deyman making a demonstration to his pupils with a corpse. But all his industry availed him nothing; the sums arising from these works and from the sale of pictures and artistic objects from his collections barely sufficed to cover the daily expenses and the high interest he had to pay on his debts. Under these circumstances, Saskia's relations at last felt bound to appoint a guardian for Titus, one Jan Verbout, who was afterwards replaced by Louis Crayers, and on May 17, 1656, to demand a mortgage on half the value of Rembrandt's house as Titus' inheritance. The creditors protested, and brought an action against Titus' guardian, which dragged on for many years and was finally decided against them in 1665. They further demanded that Rembrandt should be declared bankrupt, and that all his property should be sold by auction. On July 25 and 26, 1656, an inventory of his possessions was drawn up, the detailed character of which gives us a complete idea of Rembrandt's home and its arrangement, of his collections, of the direction of his tastes, and of his artistic preferences; for this we are indebted to the mercilessness of his creditors and of the tribunals, for all his studies of every kind were taken from him, even his drawings, of which dozens of portfolios are catalogued. The plates of his etchings seem to have been the only things that were spared to him, for we find that Titus afterwards sold impressions from these, and so preserved the little household from absolute destitution.

The dispersal of all these treasures did not take place immediately; it was not until the end of the following year, 1657, that instructions were given for the sale. The first auction was held at the end of December; the second, not until September, 1658; the total sum realised was something under 5000 guilders. Meanwhile the house had been sold; neither the first nor the second would-be purchaser proved solvent; the third, one Lieven Simonsz, who offered 11,218 guilders, was the only one who was able to produce the necessary securities. But Rembrandt had been obliged to quit his home before this; on December 4, 1657, he removed to the Imperial Crown Inn, where the sale took place. After several changes of domicile, he once more found a modest home of his own in 1661 on the Rozengraecht, opposite the pleasure-gardens known as the Labyrinth, and here he remained until his death, save for a brief interval in the year 1665, when he was living on the Lauriergracht. But this house was not destined to prove a happy home to him, in spite of the affection shown him by his son and Hendrickje, for fate had yet further trials in store for him; the two persons whose tenderness now formed his sole tie to life, sank into the grave before him. For a time the master's position seems to have improved somewhat. In the course of the year 1660, probably soon after the death of Govert Flinck, who had been commissioned to paint a series of large historical decorative works for the Amsterdam Town Hall, the execution of one of these, the Conspiracy of Claudius Civilis, was entrusted to Rembrandt. On August 28, 1662, it was delivered at the Town Hall, but in the following year it was replaced by the work of another artist, Juriaen Ovens, doubtless because those who had given the commission were dissatisfied with the work. At the same time, Rembrandt painted another large picture, the Staalmeesters or Syndics, for the Regents of the Drapers' Guild, which bears a genuine date, 1662, together with a dubious signature and the date 1661. We know not whether this magnificent picture, which modern taste acclaims as the greatest of Rembrandt's works, pleased the persons for whom it was executed. No contemporary even mentions it.

As the whole of the master's earnings were impounded for the payment of ancient debts, Titus and Hendrickje conceived the idea of coming to the rescue in a very disinterested fashion. On December 15, 1660, they signed an agreement before a notary, which engaged Rembrandt as expert and adviser in a business they proposed to establish as art-dealers. Board and lodging were to be given him in return for his services, and they further made him an immediate payment of 950 and 800 guilders respectively, which he promised to return as soon as he could earn it by his pictures. Titus seems to have occupied himself chiefly with this little industry, in which the sale of his father's etchings was probably the most lucrative branch. We learn this from Houbraken, who in complete ignorance of the circumstances, cites it as an evidence of Rembrandt's avarice.

A sojourn of some sixteen or eighteen months at Hull in Yorkshire is supposed to have been made by Rembrandt at this period, on the evidence of Vertue, who gives Laroon, an acquaintance of Rembrandt's at the time, as his authority, and further states that he himself had seen a portrait of a sea-captain signed "Rembrandt f. Hull 1661-1662". This sojourn, if it really took place, must have occurred between December 15, 1660, and August 28, 1662, on which days, as we know, the artist signed agreements in Amsterdam. Dr. de Groot believes he has found a piece of evidence to support this statement in a drawing in the Berlin Print Room, which he takes to be a view of London with St. Paul's Cathedral. To me the likeness is hardly so apparent, and I should say the drawing very possibly represents some place in Belgium or on the Lower Rhine. Again, if we accept the hypothesis, we shall have to assume that the Claudius Civilis was finished in 1660, and that nearly all the pictures of 1661, amounting to nearly a dozen, were executed in England. If we further take into account the master's dependent state and the aversion to travelling shown by him even from early youth, this distant journey and the long sojourn in a strange land, far from all belonging to him, seems highly improbable.

Hendrickje's fatal illness, which induced her to make her will on August 7, 1661, would also have begun during this absence of Rembrandt's in England. She left all her property to her daughter Cornelia, and in the event of the latter's death, to Titus, but gave Rembrandt a life interest in the heritage. She must, however, have recovered to some extent after this, for she is mentioned in the following year; but she was no longer living in 1664, and as Rembrandt sold his family vault in the Oudekerk on October 27, 1662, we may reasonably assume that he did so in order to provide for her burial in his own district, probably in the Westerkerk.

The master was now wholly dependent upon his son. On June 19, 1665, Titus was declared of age on Rembrandt's requisition, about a year and a half before he had attained his actual majority. On November 5 of this same year, the sum of 6952 gilders was adjudged him as the balance of his mother's bequest, and in 1667 he married his cousin, Magdalena van Loo. But the youthful couple were destined to part all too soon, and a new sorrow, perhaps the bitterest of his life, awaited the stricken father. The registers of the Westerkerk record the burial of Titus van Rijn in the church on September 4, 1668. A year later, on October 8, 1669, a grave in the same church received the mortal remains of the world-weary artist. His burial was marked by the same modest obscurity in which his life had been spent during his last years. The only persons to show any interest in the event were an old sick-nurse, a few inquisitive neighbours, and the guardians of his daughter Cornelia, a girl of fifteen, and of his infant grandchild Titia. The latter, the posthumous child borne to Titus' widow in the spring, lost her mother a few days after the death of her grandfather. Magdalena was also buried in the Westerkerk on October 21, 1669.

We learn from contemporary documents that Rembrandt left no property beyond his poor household effects, his painting materials, and his clothes. We must therefore conclude that his last years were spent in poverty and privation. Yet he had never freed himself from the burden of debt. All he owned and all he earned beyond a bare subsistence belonged to his creditors. His son and Hendrickje had accordingly provided for him humbly out of their own purses, and had associated him with themselves in their business as art-dealers, a business that continued to exist even after the deaths of Hendrickje and Titus. During those last years, Rembrandt, as he himself declared, had several times been obliged to have recourse to the little store of ready money bequeathed by Hendrickje to her daughter. It is therefore very comprehensible that nothing of value that was his own should have been found in his possession at his death; but the little dwelling may nevertheless have been furnished with a certain modest comfort, and even with some degree of artistic beauty. As a fact, Titus' widow and Cornelia's guardian caused three rooms in the dead man's house, containing "pictures, drawings, curiosities and antiques", to be closed and sealed. We have yet another evidence that Rembrandt did not drink the cup of poverty to the dregs. François van Bylaert, the guardian of Titus' daughter Titia, seems to have exacted a statement on oath before a notary from the two guardians of Rembrandt's daughter, Cornelia, in which they declared that, by virtue of the agreement made between Rembrandt on the one hand, and Titus and Hendrickje on the other, the artist had owned nothing but his painting materials, and some linen and woollen garments, — that everything else he had left was actually the property of the heirs of these two, though Rembrandt had been given the use of it during his life time.

Recent researches have brought to light traces of the after-fate of Rembrandt's two orphaned descendants, his youthful daughter and infant grand-daughter. Some years after her father's death Cornelia married a painter called Suythoff, with whom she emigrated to Batavia, where in 1678 her first son was baptised under the name of Rembrandt, an evidence of the veneration she cherished for the memory of the great father, whom she had only known in his years of sorrow. At the age of seventeen, Titia married the son of her guardian, François van Bylaert, in the year 1686. These are the latest details that have come down to us concerning the family of the greatest genius Holland has produced.

The very considerable number of ancient documents bearing on Rembrandt's history, the testimony of the earlier art-historians, more especially those who were contemporary with him, combine with the master's works, notably his portraits of himself, to give us a clear and richly coloured image of his character. Even the aspersions of later biographers such as Houbraken and those who repeated his statements, serve to complete the picture, now that these earlier documents have shown us on what misunderstandings they were based. All the evidences give us the idea of a genuine artist-nature, of a man who lived entirely for his art, the art that bound him to his own home, that made him reserved, and as time went on, even repellent to outsiders. Baldinucci describes him as having "a head different from any other", as an "umorista"; but it would be a mistake to look upon him as an eccentric misanthrope.

Rembrandt's character was simple, and honest, open and without guile; "a man apart, perhaps somewhat angular and rough in character," says Fromentin, "harsh and caustic, a man who would not brook contradiction, and was not easy to convince, who was pliable enough beneath the surface, but outwardly unyielding, an original above all things". The son of a lower middle class family, he lived solely in simple bourgeois circles, and in these alone he was at his ease. Brought up in an atmosphere of sturdy Protestantism and domestic virtue, he sought and found his happiness in his work, his home and his family. Averse to every kind of show and formality, he held aloof from public activities and merrymakings, and avoided aristocratic society, even when he admitted its individual members to his studio. But his love for his own home did not make him by any means a recluse; from his youth up we find him in relation with a series of cultured citizens of Amsterdam, some of them men of high position, like Huygens and Six; even in his old age on the Rozeengracht he was never wholly without friends of this class. It is true that he cultivated them mainly in the interests of his art; those who sought to approach him merely out of curiosity had to wait their opportunity, if they were admitted at all. "When Rembrandt was at work, he would not have received the greatest monarch in the world," says Baldinucci, on the evidence of the master's pupil, Bernard Keil; but he was always accessible to artists and lovers of art; he sought their friendship and enjoyed intercourse with them; to them he willingly showed and lent his rich art treasures, stuffs, etc.; he gave them his etchings and even large pictures, he painted and etched numerous portraits of them, purely out of friendship for and interest in them.

If Rembrandt has been denounced as greedy and avaricious because he made his son Titus hawk his etchings, or mercilessly collected money due to him, it was by those who did not know that he was obliged to do these things to avert starvation from himself and his family, and that the money he collected was all for his creditors. Faults of the very opposite kind might be more justly laid to his charge, for moderate as he was himself, simply as he dressed and frugally as he lived, he was always capable of committing a folly to secure a work of art. His earlier biographers, contemporary documents, and the inventory made before the sale of his property alike show us how eagerly he collected; we may even fairly assume that this passion was one of the main causes of his ruin. And not merely the passion, but the manner in which he indulged it; for we know from one of his pupils, that at sales of artistic objects, notably the pictures and drawings of great masters, it was his habit to make such a high offer at the outset, that no other bidder would compete with him; and this he did, so he said, to exalt his art in the public estimation. Baldinucci further assures us that according to Bernard Keil, the master's pupil for many years, Rembrandt, acting on the same principle, was in the habit of buying back impressions of his own etchings all over Europe, merely because, in his opinion, the prices given for them in the trade were too low. The artist had an equal pleasure in the acquisition of all kinds of antiques, and in the purchase of beautiful ornaments, and splendid pearls and diamonds, not only for the adornment of his wife, but for the delight of his own eyes, and as accessories for his pictures, in which they play an important part.

If Rembrandt shunned social gatherings and fashionable society, he had good reason for his conduct. When he sought rest and relaxation after work, he wanted "not honour, but freedom", as he was fond of saying. But this did not make him a hermit. We know that cultured amateurs of all kinds sought his society and took pride in his friendship to the end of his days. There must then, it would seem, have been something in his personality quite apart from his art which attracted the discriminating, and made them willing to overlook his unconventional manners, the dirty painting-gown on which he was fond of wiping his brushes, and other superficial unpleasantnesses of a like nature. The master was one of the best connoisseurs of his day; like Rubens, Donatello and others, he was consulted as to the authenticity and value of works of art. He was a man capable of thinking and speaking about art in a pregnant and individual fashion, as we may see from certain axioms of his that have come down to us; but he was also — his works prove this as do those of very few other artists — a man who looked at life with attentive eyes, and observed it with so much originality and variety, that the most cultured could not have failed to profit by an interchange of ideas with him. In addition to all this, he was warm-hearted and affectionate, as is shown by the number of old friends he retained to the end of his life, and the attachment felt for him by all his family. His sincerity, his simplicity, his delight in life, made him a good friend and comrade. It is true that he had the defects common to men of such individuality and genius; he was careless, and took no thought for the morrow. He was passionate, and this sometimes made him unjust, especially when he thought that others had taken advantage of his singleness of mind. His excitability and sensuality enhanced his passionate tendencies, and made him, as his connection with Hendrickje and perhaps also with Geertge Dirckx proves, indifferent to conventional proprieties and even to moral restrictions. But the nobility of his soul was never quenched, not even under trials such as few have had to bear; his fidelity and warmth of heart shone all the more brightly for adversity, and earned their reward from those who were dearest to him.

Of Rembrandt's personality, of his outward appearance and of his character, we have a picture greater and more faithful than any other artist has left us of himself, or indeed than Rembrandt has bequeathed to us in the sum of nearly a hundred portraits. It is the simple drawing in Mr. John P. Heseltine's collection in London, which precedes these lines: Rembrandt at full length in his painting gown, standing; a man, an artist who worked for himself alone, and yet for his country and for the whole wide world.

REMBRANDT'S ART

REMBRANDT van Rijn takes his place in the very centre of Dutch art, not only chronologically, but by virtue of the importance and the scope of his life-work. Even had Rembrandt fallen short of the genius we reverence in him, he would yet occupy the historian more than any other Dutch master, so extraordinarily rich was the sum of his production. Over six hundred of his pictures have come down to us; his plates are more numerous than those of any other painter-etcher; nearly two thousand drawings attest his fertility as a draughtsman, and these, as we know from the inventory prepared for his sale, formed but a small proportion of his actual work with pen and pencil. No painter but Rubens, who lived to about the same age, can compare with Rembrandt in creative force and fecundity; none ever surpassed him in the variety of his creations, and above all, in the originality of his art, the depth and fulness of his conception and of its pictorial realisation.

In these days Rembrandt no longer needs an advocate. He comes nearer to our modern artistic ideals than Raphael or Michelangelo. He takes his place side by side with them in public estimation, and collectors give prices as high for his works as for theirs. Rembrandt has, indeed, become so popular, that his name is occasionally taken in vain, and very modern sentiments are ascribed to him. Koloff's dictum: "When one pronounces but the name Rembrandt, it is as if one should say Art, and even more," begins to be realised, and long ecstatic rigmaroles are making their appearance, which can only tend to obscure a true appreciation of the master. Rembrandt's art is so poignant and so many-sided, that it has always had its enthusiastic adherents, however adverse the artistic tendency of the moment, however hostile contemporary æsthetics may have been to it. Even at the period when Dutch art had sunk, under the sway of such snuffbox painters as the Ridder van der Werff and Willem van Mieris, Rembrandt had zealous friends among his countrymen. Ever since the English first began to form collections, Rembrandt's pictures and etchings have been eagerly sought after by them, and in Paris, even in the time of Boucher and Greuze, they were among the works that commanded the highest prices. It was at this period that the Empress Catherine, the Elector of Hesse, and Augustus of Saxony made their magnificent collections of Rembrandts. Sir Joshua Reynolds was one of the master's warmest admirers, and owned a series of excellent examples of his art. In Germany, a simultaneous tendency in art, the best known exponents of which were Dietrich and the engraver Schmidt, owed its origin to Rembrandt. Even during the Empire, at the time of David's domination, the master's works were appreciated; ever since, his reputation has grown steadily, till to-day it has become universal. At the beginning of the nineteenth century the works that excited most admiration were the minutely executed pictures painted by Rembrandt in his youth; the Romanticists delighted in the dramatic and animated conceptions dating from 1635 to 1640; the tendency to paint in brown tones which developed later in modern art found justification in the works of his middle period, and the representatives of the latest art movement derive the highest pleasure from his final triumphs.

It was in Rembrandt that Dutch art found full expression for its individuality. He marks the crowning point of the artistic development of Holland. Germans are fond of laying claim to Rembrandt as a compatriot; the claim is only so far justifiable, that he was the off-shoot of a purely Germanic stock, and that his art is essentially Germanic; it marks the apogee of Germanic culture in general, and from the artistic side, the deepest and most perfect expression of Germanic sentiment. Among the Teutonic nations art has repeatedly developed to a fruition that bears comparison with the most glorious artistic phases of Greece and Italy. But whereas Gothic art was grafted on a Romanesque stem, and hence shows Romanesque as well as Germanic elements in its fruition, whereas the art of Rubens, though essentially Germanic, reached its maturity through contact with Italian ideals, the art of Rembrandt, like that of the brothers van Eyck, is essentially Germanic. It has, in fact, much in common with that of their earlier epoch. In him we find in like manner the involved mysticism of the Middle Ages, the lofty aspiration combined with spiritual aloofness of the Gothic cathedral, with its magic chiaroscuro, the deeply religious sentiment that marked the more primitive art. But Rembrandt no longer strives unceasingly upwards, losing himself in infinity; he does not seek the highest good outside humanity, but recognises the divinity in humanity, finding peace and repose in his own heart. A mysticism all his own speaks to us from the pictures of the great Dutchman, as from his sketches with pencil and needle; no supernatural afflatus such as breathes from the mighty, incense-laden spaces of Gothic cathedrals, no fanatical attempts to kill the flesh in order to attain to a higher life beyond this, but the quiet contentment found in work, in living for others, the mysticism of love, that enters even the lowly hut with trust in Providence, and speaks to us inspiringly from the plainest features, and from the scored and furrowed faces of old age.

Rembrandt was the final point in a development that began with the Van Eycks. He had in common with those great discoverers of Nature for Art, those pioneers of the Renaissance on this side of the Alps, a stern realism, incorruptible honesty and precision in the conception and reproduction of nature, simple human sensibility, intense absorption in his theme and a profound sense of colour. But in place of the beauty and enamelled glow of local tints, we find in Rembrandt's works a subordination of colours under light, that often goes far towards suppressing them altogether; in place of the highest perfection of uniform execution, we have the deliberate freedom and variety of a very subtle and original technique; the painting of souls rather than of existences; with Rembrandt, the modest circumstantiality and artless materialism of the Van Eycks makes way for the glow of life and emotion.

Rembrandt is a Dutchman to the core; we cannot conceive of him outside Holland, and can only understand him fully in connection with Dutch painting as a whole; and yet he is greater and higher than the whole sum of Dutch art and culture; he marks a climax in the development of universal art. In this sense he is international, and in certain aspects he even appears in strong antagonism to Dutch art. For whereas Dutch painting had a tendency to break up into sections, each artist confining himself to some one narrow genre, Rembrandt conceived of art as a whole, grappling with its highest problems; and the solution he found for these is more novel and significant than any offered by art before or after him. As regards subject, the themes he chooses for representation are not new. His Scriptural motives, his mythological episodes and familiar incidents are to be found in the works of his predecessors, and more especially, of his masters; these latter, like Rembrandt, treat their motives in a genre-like fashion, generally with figures of small size in landscape. Even the Oriental costumes of his characters he borrowed from them, adapting and developing them for his own purpose. But the manner in which the master makes all these things expressive is not only novel but purely individual. All his compatriots, even the most gifted of them, give us but a phase of Dutch life and of the Dutch land, though they represent these with absolute truth and with the utmost perfection. Rembrandt alone rises above all this, exalting the specifically Dutch elements to a world peculiarly his own, and transporting us to a magic country, the Land of Rembrandt. We admire a Terborch, a Pieter de Hooch, a Jacob van Ruisdael or a Paul Potter, because they pictured their little section of the Dutch land and people with inimitable truth and delicacy, and the highest artistic mastery; but Rembrandt's greatness lay in this, that he set himself free from these things, that, firmly as his feet were planted on his native soil, he soared far above what was merely Dutch, that he impressed an universal human character upon his works, and bathed them in a splendour that makes them look like the creations of a loftier world.

Rembrandt, like all the Dutchmen of the great period, was a realist; he even goes beyond the rest of his countrymen in realism. Not only in the truth and comprehension with which he grasps and reproduces life, but also in the ruthlessness with which he expresses it in its lowest forms and manifestations, and even in its repulsiveness and brutality. Nearly all his personages are plain and ordinary, while many of them are positively ugly. He paints his people as he saw them around him, stunted in growth and clumsy of shape as their heavy Northern costume and the hardship of their daily lives tended to make them, common and insignificant in type, and bearing on their features the harsh impress of care and suffering. For his subject-pictures, as for his episodes from the life of Christ and the history of the patriarchs, and even for his mythological compositions, he sought models in his immediate neighbourhood, among his own family, his acquaintances, and above all, among the poor Jews of the quarter in which he lived, and from which he rarely wandered. This was, of course, detrimental to the classic beauty and traditional character of his heathen gods and goddesses, on the rare occasions when he undertook to represent these; yet even to them he gives a peculiarly individual charm in the quivering undulations of their naked bodies, and the luminous tones of their velvety skins. But this translation into the terms of daily life was all to the advantage of his Scriptural subjects, for his artistic resources enabled him to raise them far above commonplace reality. Rembrandt was the first, perhaps indeed the only painter who has given pictorial expression to the Bible itself. His New Testament subjects are no pathetic presentments from the lives of Christ and the Apostles such as Giotto gave us, nor classically conceived episodes like those of Masaccio and Raphael; they are the loud proclamation of the religion of love, the gospel of mercy and redemption, which is the portion even of the lowliest and most miserable, such as the persons in the majority of his compositions. Christ and his disciples, sprung from the humblest of the people, turn again to the people, living and working among them and for them. If in his pictures Rembrandt reaches back to the people, he acts quite in the spirit of the Bible. The simple truth of his renderings, the depth and honesty of his sentiment, speak in tones as clear and persuasive as the gospel words. The spirit of love and pity breathes from all his illustrations with such persuasive eloquence and poignant intensity, that all other pictorial renderings of Scriptural themes pale before them, and seem cold. Italian art knew the gospel only through the medium of the Church; Dutch art, thanks to Rembrandt, drew its knowledge directly from the Bible; the one shone resplendent in the antiquated patrician vestments of the Catholic church, the other wore the unpretending garb of the Dutch Protestant middle classes.

Rembrandt knew his Bible by heart. We may venture to affirm this almost in its literal sense, although we have no direct documentary evidence of it. From childhood he had been taught by his mother to love the sacred book — her book. When he painted or etched her, he loved to represent her with the Bible in her lap. Of the little library briefly catalogued in the inventory of his sale — a document lamentable enough for the master himself, but of inestimable value to his memory, for it speaks to us eloquently both of Rembrandt the artist and Rembrandt the man — the only work expressly mentioned, beside the “fifteen books of various sizes”, was “an old Bible”. In his pictorial exegesis of both Old and New Testament, Rembrandt is more exact than any other artist; there are a great many slight and subtle traits which have been noted by him alone; and he alone invariably essays to give adequate expression to local character and surroundings. Rembrandt's pictures and etchings, but more especially his drawings, present a variety of Scriptural motives which no other artist has treated. They might serve for an illustrated edition of the Bible which would surpass the Biblical illustrations of all other artists put together in sincerity and depth of feeling, as in richness of rendering.

That Rembrandt was a fervent believer can hardly be maintained on the mere evidence of his knowledge of the Scriptures. To him the Bible was the book with which he had grown up; its stories had filled his imagination when he was still a child; it took a firm hold on his mind; he thought and created by it and through it. He dealt with it in a perfectly ingenuous fashion, of course, unhampered by an excess of scruples, but apparently without much regard for or interest in the dogmatic subtleties which caused so much agitation in most sections of Dutch society at the period. Attempts have been made to show that Rembrandt was a sectarian; it has been suggested that he was a Mennonite, because he painted and etched the portraits of various distinguished Mennonites. But he also painted many other Dutch ministers, whose acquaintance he made through his wife Saskia van Uylenborch, the kinswoman of several theologians; and the fact that he had his children baptised in his national church, as well as all records that have come down to us bearing on his relations with that church, tend to prove that he belonged to the recognised establishment of his country. Unjustifiable as it would be to represent Rembrandt as the champion of a querulous dogmatism, it is no less erroneous to proclaim him a free-thinker or even an atheist, as did the Romanticists, who conceived of him as a brooding Republican. It is true that various unedifying records have shown us Rembrandt, led astray by his passionate and sensual temperament, in occasional revolt against moral law, and apparently not only contemptuous of ecclesiastical discipline, but indifferent to ordinary decorum and public repute. Certain of his works, moreover, notably the magnificent etching of Faust, and further, his intercourse with learned Jews and Catholics prove that he did not allow dogma to set up impassable barriers for him, but that he chose to think for himself in the highest matters, in religion and philosophy. But all this does not authorise us to conclude that he was a doubter or an unbeliever. The master never cast off his allegiance to the church; and his pictures speak a language so simple and sincere, that it is impossible to accept the assumption of his heterodoxy. In his creations he shows himself an apostle of Christianity without counterpart among painters. Rembrandt in no sense stripped his Scriptural subjects of their aureole; rather did he irradiate them with a supernatural splendour all his own, the power and the charm of his art; but he tells the tale in the simplest and truest manner, with all the power of his mind and all the intensity of his heart, and it is by virtue of this that he fixes our attention so instantly, and touches us so profoundly. To quote Koloff, he translated "the ancient text of Holy Writ into plain Dutch prose, and under his touch, the wonders of the East became actual local events and true stories; he treated Biblical history-painting in the dramatic spirit."

But the master saw not only the supernatural, but all other motives, in his own peculiar light, with his "double vision". In the case of actual portraits, this may seem to apply only in a limited sense. About half of these, like the portraits of contemporary Dutch painters, were simple, illuminated by an evenly distributed daylight, sound and solid in execution, decisive in drawing, direct and appropriate in characterisation. But we see from his portraits of himself, of his relatives and friends, which he never treated in this fashion, that he only conceived and painted his portraits on the customary lines at the express wish of his sitter; directly a free hand was given him, he at once turned to his own method of expression, which no one before or after him has ever employed. He shews us his personages, suddenly illumined by a ray of light, emerging from the darkness, and bathed in the splendour of his own radiance; he strives to give us, not only a faithful transcript of natural phenomena, but a reflection of the human soul; no corner of the heart is to be hidden from us. This visionary conception characterises his landscapes as well; these indeed best demonstrate the essential difference between Rembrandt and all other artists. Instead of painting the flat landscape that lay before him in his home, with wide horizons and lofty skies, high in tone and veiled in sea-mists, he imagined lofty mountain walls, dense groves and towering thunder-clouds, or the twilight of gathering darkness, and so created a secluded, dusky scenery, into which a flash of brilliant sunshine or the last rays of the setting sun cast a fantastic radiance. In Nature, he made the elements speak; here again he communed with the soul of nature, and watched her varying moods, bringing them into close relation with our human emotions.

Rembrandt owed his greatness to a peculiarly happy combination of genius, industry, and well-directed endeavour. The unusual variety and magnitude of his work prove that he observed and studied with an artist's eye at every moment of his daily life, that a perpetual lust of creation chained him to his task from his very earliest years. We know from the classic testimony of Constantijn Huygens, whose opinion of the artist was recorded when the latter was only twenty-four, that from the very outset of his career, Rembrandt had a certain end in view, which he pursued steadily and deliberately throughout his life. But, for all his intelligence and industry, his early achievement could not have been so remarkable, had he not possessed the further gift of a unique creative imagination. The thinker and poet in him were still greater than the painter; they even worked occasionally to the detriment of the artist, seducing him into a fantastic handling of simple motives that demanded a purely realistic treatment. In creation and invention, Rubens himself is inferior to him. Rembrandt often repeated the same subject a dozen times and more, in pictures, etchings and drawings, but he invariably evolved a new work of art therefrom. In his drawings we see how he essayed the same motive over and over again, until he found the form that best expressed his idea, how he treated the same subject in the most varied ways, and yet always from a rightly pictorial standpoint.

This conscious effort, the strongest idiosyncrasy of the master, manifests itself also in his methods from the very first. In the earliest works of Rembrandt's youth that have come down to us, it is the problem of illumination, and his own peculiar chiaroscuro that serve as his most distinguished means of expression, although in the course of years he used it with ever increasing breadth, subtlety and impressiveness. That the admiration excited by Rembrandt's art was first stirred by his chiaroscuro is a fact that has ample justification. If with him it was only a means to an end, yet it was the means by which his greatest miracles were worked. It was his chiaroscuro which enabled him to unveil the hidden treasures his prophetic eye discerned in Nature. Rembrandt has been called a magician. He was so far a magician, that he was able to give to the fanciful images of his spiritual world an artistic expression that compels our acceptance, inspires and delights us; a magician, too, in this sense, that he intoxicates our senses as by magic arts, projecting his images upon them as with a magic lantern. "Rembrandt", as Koloff has put it, "carries dark lanterns under his cloak, which he suddenly brings forth and flashes in our faces, so that at first we are too much dazzled to see anything". His light is a highly individual radiance, falling suddenly into the midst of darkness, and beaming forth from it again no less brilliantly, evoking a rich play of light and shadow, a kaleidoscopic variety of colour, with its beams and reflections, now veiling them and now letting them shine out again in the most resplendent tones. It is a light that seems to pierce humanity through and through, revealing the most secret thoughts, the most hidden feelings, and establishing the closest intimacy between spectator and sitter. "Rembrandt", to quote Fromentin once more, "paints and draws only through the medium of light. He has a fashion of stretching out into the distance, bringing things near, obscuring them, revealing them, and shrouding truth in visions, which is true art, and above all, the art of chiaroscuro". It is in reference to these qualities that the French have given the name "luministe" to the master, meaning a man whose conception of light was a novel one, who gave it a peculiar significance, and made many sacrifices for its sake.

But if Rembrandt is a more determined realist than any other master in all that concerns his models and his composition, he is the greatest of idealists in his methods and above all in his illumination. It is usual to speak of his light as supernatural, and the term is not inapt, for by the magic of his chiaroscuro he raised even the ugliest forms and commonest motives to a higher sphere, and transformed them into the most moving works of art. By these methods, he became the most modern of all the later artists, in that he substituted the beauty of the soul for the antique beauty of form. His light is, in fact, by no means realistic; it is neither sunlight nor candle-light, but the peculiar light of Rembrandt. Even in his illumination, of course, Nature was his point of departure; his studies were all made therefrom. But the sunlight or artificial light, that he endeavoured to render with almost naturalistic truth in some of his earliest pictures, soon appeared to him too harsh and commonplace, its shadows too black and opaque, to express spiritual life with all the intensity of his own experience. Through the study of atmosphere he developed his illumination to chiaroscuro, to the art of painting things bathed in light and surrounded by air; and this is why we may truly describe his chiaroscuro as the "art of making the atmosphere visible". His method of illumination has, of course, little in common with our modern plein air painting; and yet it is so closely related to it in principle, and so marvellous in execution, that our modern artists are, half unconsciously, specially attracted by Rembrandt's pictures. In his landscape-drawings, in which he seizes the immediate impression he receives from Nature, Rembrandt shows us landscape as light, as airy and as vaporous, as that of any modern master. But in his pictures, even his landscapes, he deliberately foregoes this truth to nature, because he desired to show something more than Nature, a world of his own. His light is an indoor light, even when he represents things in the open air; and this is why he has been as much admired and, to a certain extent, imitated, by those exponents of "tone", who have made their influence felt since the middle of the nineteenth century, as by the plein air painters of the present. Rembrandt studied his peculiar light in Dutch interiors, but we have only to compare his pictures with those of De Hooch or Vermeer of Delft to see how individually he treated it. The full, warm light, that invariably illumines the chief group, or, in single figures, the head, making it stand out from the surrounding chiaroscuro, seems like the last rays of the sun, falling into a closed room through some small aperture; but the master takes the harshness out of this light, he softens, diffuses and distributes it, giving it greater warmth, and making its reflections light up the dark surroundings or the dark background in the most varied manner. This peculiar light became so natural to the master, that he used it even in his landscapes.

The architecture and decoration in Rembrandt's pictures are very remarkable. During the Renaissance period in Italy, many painters were also architects, and the architecture in their works is often so definite and important, that it looks like a careful reproduction of contemporary buildings. But we can scarcely imagine the buildings in Rembrandt's pictures as actual structures. It would, in fact, be difficult even to draw them, so vague and indefinite are they, so carefully did the artist avoid precise contours and straight lines. Rembrandt's buildings, in which, just as in costume, he no doubt tried to suggest local character as far as possible, have that massive formlessness, that tendency towards the mystic and colossal, that deliberate archaism, in short, which characterises the architecture of our most modern artists. His temples and palaces, with their flattened cupolas and un aspiring towers, look as if they were crumbling to ruins or blasted by tempest, or as if they had been left unfinished by their builders. The motives are occasionally derived from the late Dutch Renaissance or the Romanesque period, but as a rule they are taken from native Gothic, and so freely treated, that the pointed arches are transformed into semi-circular arches; the slender, soaring character of the buildings is neutralised; towers lose their spires, and buttresses their pinnacles, that the rugged masses of masonry may make a more imposing effect. His churches have always a heavy, flattened cupola at the intersection of the transepts, which, combined with the shapeless pillar-like towers in the building itself, or close beside it, are intended to suggest the domed architecture of the East with its minarets. The master's aim in this peculiar architecture is to strengthen the pictorial effect of his composition, to create strong contrasts; massive, inanimate surfaces are opposed to rich and vivid groups of figures, wide airy spaces to dense shadows and mysterious chiaroscuro. Rembrandt has the same artistic ends in view in his treatment of ornament, which is as remote from, as diametrically opposed to classic ideals, as that of his human figures. In the forms and decorations of his furniture and utensils, in the patterns and borders of his dresses, in his frames, etc., the master is a pronounced adherent of that ornament of volutes, whorls, and shells, which went by the name of "Lotna Ornament" in Holland; a system of decoration evolved from Baroque-Gothic decoration at the close of the sixteenth and beginning of the seventeenth century north of the Alps, and more particularly in Holland, where it was developed primarily by Bles, and further by Floris, working under the inspiration of so-called "grotesque" ornament. That extraordinary medley of fantastic forms, appearing now as fishes, serpents or molluscs, now as gargoyles and masks, enframed in a sort of cartilaginous network of flourishes, roots, reglets, and shells, flashing upon us out of the gloom and disappearing again before we can grasp and follow a single motive to its conclusion, covers furniture and utensils, and forms the capitals of pillars and the pattern of stuffs in his pictures. Wherever they occur, their use is purely pictorial; their functions are to give life and movement in the brilliantly lighted portions, and gleaming surfaces that reflect the light in the penumbra; they are as vague, as shapeless and intangible, as the light itself in Rembrandt's pictures, the lively expression of the peculiar, granulated, indefinite technique of the master.

Chiaroscuro is so pre-eminently the determining factor in Rembrandt's pictures, that composition and drawing, colour and treatment, are all subservient to it; not infrequently, it even governs the costume of his figures, his choice of stuffs, and the folds in which he arranges them. The Oriental robes, turbans and other ornaments, which he adopts as the appropriate garments of his patriarchs and Jewish kings, could not be arranged in classic folds, but the light gleams magically among the heavy furrows of the gold-embroidered materials, and on their jewelled borders, giving a magnificent play of colour. If therefore, we seek to trace the master's development in his technical methods, we must, above all things, follow the course of his chiaroscuro. We shall find that the illumination, the chiaroscuro, and the effect he seeks to produce by their means, determine all the rest, and decide whether the execution is to be careful and precise, or broad and sketchy, whether the colour is to be rich in local tints, or almost monochromatic. All this, again, varies in the different stages of the master's career, and according to the different purpose he sets before him in each separate work, so that in his earliest as in his latest period we find him producing simultaneously both highly finished and sketchily treated compositions, pictures rich in colour and others that are little more than grisailles.

Rembrandt's composition seems somewhat arbitrary, if we judge of it by the standard of the Italian classicists; for he builds it up by means of light rather than of lines, and it is therefore governed by laws of its own. His compositions have great depth, and win a peculiar grandeur from the gloom in which they generally disappear; often very rich, they are always clear and coherent. He has the art of drawing the spectator into the very heart of the action, and making him kindle at the theme. Everything is in the right place, everything has its relation to the central motive, even accessories of little apparent importance. Within the limits prescribed by these main considerations, he is extraordinarily various in his arrangement, according to the motive, illumination, and date of the work. Sometimes he sets his chief figure or chief group full in the light, sometimes immediately beside it — when he does this, as in the Night-Watch, he is nevertheless careful to lead the eye at once to the principal object; — sometimes he places his figures well in the foreground, sometimes further back, now in the middle, and now on one side of the canvas.

If there were once critics who called Rembrandt a bad draughtsman, and denounced his colour, it was because they did not take a comprehensive view of his art, and could not understand what he meant and what he expressed. Rembrandt's drawing is not inferior to that of Raphael or Mantegna, but he carries it only so far as is compatible with his illumination, and with the expression he strives to achieve. No one ever surpassed him in the suggestion of a form, a movement, or an emotion by a few firm strokes, in the marshalling of numerous figures to make a definite composition, and express a theme clearly and strikingly, in the art of placing them rightly in a given space, surrounding them with light and air, and giving to each its appointed sphere, so to speak. This we may see best when we observe him working exclusively as a draughtsman, in his drawings and his etchings. On the other hand, Rembrandt was so intensely a colourist, that even when, superficially, he denies himself the use of colour, in his monochrome sketches, his etchings, and his drawings, he reveals the most delicate sense of colour by solicitude for and insistence on values. Pure contours, and sweeping folds are, of course, absent in Rembrandt's drawing; the manner in which his light breaks into the composition does away with sharp outlines; his chiaroscuro makes the lines indistinct, emphasising them in one place, only to veil them again close by. The art of his drawing lies in the manner in which he observed and gave effect to the laws of chiaroscuro after his own fashion.

We note the same tendency in his modelling. The quality in Rembrandt's work that first strikes even the uninformed spectator, and rouses his admiration, is that plastic effect, in which he is the rival of Leonardo. The manner in which he makes his figures emerge from darkness by means of a ray of brilliant light, gives them such reality, that they seem to be standing among us. It is evident that for a time, Rembrandt took a special pleasure in emphasising this effect. He was fond of placing his figures at an open window or in a doorway, of making them hold out a hand to the spectator, devices he afterwards abandoned, as over-realistic, and as damaging to the spiritual expression of a work. A certain hardness of modelling produced by strong contrasts of light and shade in certain early works, was avoided later by the bath of light and air in which his figures seem to float. Their plastic effect is produced by the delicate gradations of the light, the master's characteristic handling, and more especially by his practice of loading the colours on which the light falls.

Rembrandt is not a colourist in the same sense as Titian or Giorgione, as Rubens or Velazquez, or even as Terborch and Pieter de Hooch. Yet there are colour-passages in his pictures more magnificent in quality, and more fascinating in their juxtaposition of tints than anything in the works of the greatest masters of colour; but whereas with the true colourists, chiaroscuro is used to subdue pure local colour, in order to render it still more varied and expressive, Rembrandt's chiaroscuro detracts from the essential beauty of pure colour, modifying it in different ways, breaking it up, and even disguising it altogether. In works where this is the case, however, notably those of his latest period, Rembrandt is a colourist after his own fashion. He proceeds here by strong oppositions, juxtaposing certain decided, energetic colours with the most subtle perception of their values, combining and modifying them with innumerable little touches of paint, scattered among them, and only visible to the spectator on minute examination. By this method he obviates the harsh effect of local colour in the highest lights, and gives a glimmer of colour and transparence even to the deepest shadows. The means by which he achieves these ends are very various. In his earlier period, when it was his habit to concentrate his light, and make it fall upon the central point of his picture, his local colour is, as a rule, purer and simpler, and variety is achieved by breaking it up and subjecting it to infinite gradations in the shadow; in his middle period, when his chief pre-occupation was the attainment of an evenly distributed chiaroscuro, his local colours almost disappear in a prevalent golden brown tone; in the course of years, he showed an ever increasing tendency to the analysis of local colours, to their intermixture with a quantity of little touches of the richest tints, which allow of the subtlest distribution of light in colour, and intensify the glowing splendour of the general effect both by contrast and juxtaposition. If we take, for instance, a picture in which there is a drapery which produces the impression of a magnificent red at a distance determined by the master, and examine it closely, we shall see that among or above the more or less dominant patches of strong red, Rembrandt has set a multitude of small yellowish, brownish, bluish and blackish tones, their position above or between the dominant depending upon the respective influence of light and shadow on the colour. The master works out the same principle in his carnations, with the result that a head painted in chiaroscuro occasionally shows this many coloured, kaleidoscopic composition on closer examination. It is by these very means that the painter achieves his truthful effects of colour and chiaroscuro; in this apparently arbitrary handling, this coarse "smearing", as it used to be called, Rembrandt reveals a knowledge of the phenomena of colour, its values and harmonies, such as only Velazquez and Titian in their later development have ever possessed. Side by side with such works we find, it is true, others of the same period in which the colours are carefully elaborated and the local colours insisted on, such variations in treatment being governed by special considerations in each case, as, for instance, the individuality of the person represented, the illumination, and the general harmony; in such variation we see yet another evidence of that artistic sensibility and mastery which sought to do full justice to every subject, and to make every work of art a new creation.

Another quality that gives a peculiar picturesque charm to Rembrandt's works is his very individual handling of his material. This differs altogether from that of any other painter; occasionally simple, it is, as a rule, extremely subtle and complicated. When splendour of tint seemed to him unsuitable to the subject in hand, he carried discretion in the use of colour so far as to neutralise it almost entirely; but if he wished to make colour eloquent, he had methods of working it up, of loading, and glazing it, which gives it the enamelled richness and beauty of precious stones. The master has never been surpassed in this quality of splendid and luminous colour; not even the most gorgeous of his pupils and successors, Fabritius, Maes, Jan Vermeer and Pieter de Hooch can approach him. We must go back to the Van Eycks to find a magnificence comparable to his; but their pictures, with the evenly distributed daylight that gives an equal brilliance to all the tints, have not that intense, orchestral fullness of tone produced by some of Rembrandt's, in which the play of colour is concentrated upon a single, and often relatively small portion of the composition, which is further emphasised by a powerful effect of light. This result is, of course, achieved partly by contrasting brilliant passages with dense or muffled tones, as well as by the sudden irruption of light; but choice and preparation of colours, and science in their mixture and application, unquestionably counted for a good deal in the matter. Rembrandt's pictures prove no less clearly than those of the Van Eycks, which have been famous for centuries by such qualities, of what great importance excellence of material and skill in its preparation and treatment are to painting. The period immediately before that of Rembrandt in Holland, when artists sought to achieve effects of colour mainly by tone and values, and in a still greater degree, modern painting, which, with its indifferent materials, and lack of knowledge as to their nature and composition, seems to have lost, to a great extent, all sense of the beauty of colour per se, place Rembrandt's mastery in this further direction in the strongest light.

Rembrandt's handling is as varied as his colour and his illumination — as all his artistic preoccupations, indeed, but it was dependent on these former, and is always determined more or less by them; for it was only the skilled and faithful expression of his emotion. Though, broadly speaking, we find that with him as with most great artists, careful execution and minute handling characterised his early work, giving place to an ever increasing breadth and assurance in his later period, we shall note in the successive stages of Rembrandt's development an unusual variety in the execution of different pictures, and even occasionally in one and the same picture, a variety always determined by the idea the master had in his mind. There are pictures by Rembrandt, in which he excels such devotees of finish as Dou and Mieris in elaboration, and side by side with these, we shall find others that rival the hastiest improvisations of Frans Hals in his latest period, and even go beyond them. Here again Rembrandt shows the same independence as in all other artistic questions; seeing and feeling differently from all other artists, he also paints quite differently, employing to this end methods just as inspired and original as those to which he has recourse for illumination and for colour. In his execution, Rembrandt did not so much seek to reproduce the actual forms of things, as to suggest the impression they produce under the influence of light and chiaroscuro. This tends to make his handling unusually varied and complicated; it is now careless and hasty, now extremely careful and even laborious, but always so ingenious that imitation of it invariably leads to mannerism, as even the most gifted of his pupils have shown. The modern artists who have formed themselves on Rembrandt have been no more successful than these, for his artistic handwriting, marvellous as it generally is, and great as is the admiration it excites among painters, is so entirely individual, so imbued with the master's personal sentiment, that it is only justifiable as the expression of that sentiment. And nothing is more impossible than a resuscitation of such emotion.

We shall not be able to estimate Rembrandt's artistic importance aright, unless we take into account his activities as a collector and connoisseur. His individuality had so little in common with that of any other artist, that he was formerly looked upon as an eccentric, a contemner of artistic manifestations foreign to his own. Nothing could be further from the truth. Rembrandt was an artist to the core, and therefore an admirer of every kind of art. Nor was he satisfied with a Platonic affection for works of art; all his life long he was an enthusiastic collector of these, and made use of them for his artistic purposes by means of exhaustive study. As a collector and connoisseur, he held a position in Holland akin to that filled by Rubens in the Netherlands, or later by Sir Joshua Reynolds and Sir Thomas Lawrence in England. The Amsterdam artists came to him to study his treasures and make use of them, dealers and collectors to ask his advice. The detailed catalogue prepared for the forced sale of all his possessions on his bankruptcy gives us a clear idea of his preferences, and also of the materials he used in his studies, although some of the most important items were sold during the years that immediately preceded the catastrophe. We find to our surprise, that he owned a large collection of antiques, both busts and statues, though all these with one or two exceptions, were merely casts: that he had pictures by Raphael, Palma Vecchio, Giacomo Bassano, and even a figure of a child by Michelangelo — or, at any rate, that he possessed works which he ascribed to these masters, and, in addition, complete sets of the engravings of Mantegna and Marc Antonio, of Albert Dürer, Lucas Cranach, Holbein, Israel van Meckenen and Lucas van Leyden, and trial proofs of prints after P. Brueghel, Rubens, Van Dyck, Jordaens, and others, as well as numerous volumes containing engravings and woodcuts after Michelangelo, Titian, Raphael, the Carracci, Guido Reni, Ribera, and others. The catalogue even includes various works dealing with the theory of art, with architectonics, with costume, and kindred subjects. Strange to say, his own pupils are not represented among the painters of his native land, but, on the other hand, he showed a predilection for the works of the landscape-painters, especially those who had a certain affinity with his own temperament, such as Hercules Seghers, Lievens, and Porcellis. Like Rubens, he had a special admiration for Adriaen Brouwer. Besides all these pictures and other art treasures, the catalogue enumerates goblets and vessels of various kinds, Oriental and otherwise, weapons of all sorts, natural curiosities, which attracted him by their form and colour, and casts from life. We see that Rembrandt, earnest student of Nature though he was, was also an eager explorer in the wide domain of art, in spite of the fact that even in his youth he had denied himself a visit to Italy, recognising the dangers that would beset his originality in such a pilgrimage. He did not only profit indirectly by these studies, though, when we examine his youthful works, we see of what advantage they were to him in this sense; but Rembrandt did not disdain to borrow a motive occasionally from a foreign master. His famous portrait of himself in the London National Gallery, painted in 1640, and the similar etching of 1639, are composed on the lines of Titian's so-called Ariosto, which he saw sold in Amsterdam at that period, together with Raphael's portrait of Balthazar Castiglione. We find him borrowing figures from Dürer, Mantegna, and Correggio, even utilising an entire composition by Marten van Heemskereck, and making drawings after a great variety of artists, as after Indian miniatures and Italian medals. Of course, these adaptations are only to be discovered by careful examination of the master's work, for the manner in which he appropriated such occasional loans, makes it difficult to suppose that they were not entirely original.

Rembrandt must be studied as a whole; only thus is he comprehensible and unsurpassable. In detail, he sometimes shows a certain harshness, and coarseness, and even frailties and failings which are merely the defects incidental to his great and original genius. He did not always succeed in his efforts to give full artistic expression to his entirely novel outlook; his ruthless individuality sometimes led him to do violence to the object, but even so, his intention and his execution are nearly always of the highest interest and artistic merit.

INTRODUCTION

During the eight years that have passed since this work was begun, certain pictures by Rembrandt that were quite unknown, or that had disappeared, have come to light. The sum of these is so considerable, that we think it advisable to include them at once in an appendix to this volume, instead of reserving them for separate publication in a supplement some years hence. That we shall thus exhaust the total of Rembrandt's surviving works, we do not believe. A number of pictures, some of them important examples, which figured during the past century in London and Parisian sale-rooms and in the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, are no doubt lurking in English country mansions and town houses, forgotten or unnoticed by their owners. More than one wealthy Englishman whom I suspected, from various indications of earlier date, of possessing Rembrandts, assured me this was not the case; and yet I afterwards discovered not one, but two or three of the master's works in their houses. This will still happen occasionally, but the greater interest now taken in these pictures, and also the extraordinary increase in their value, make it improbable that such discoveries will be frequent. To facilitate research, we propose to give in this volume reproductions of lost pictures, known to us by engravings.

This aftermath is, of course, not a choice selection. Among some fifty pictures here reproduced, there is scarcely one of capital importance; the majority are youthful essays of various kinds, or hasty studies of heads, but even these are essential to a proper estimate of the artist.

One of the most interesting and perhaps the earliest of these pictures is the Christ at the Column (Plate 540) in the Edouard Aynard Collection, Paris. In size, arrangement, and conception it is closely akin to the St. Paul in Prison of 1627, in illumination to the Money-Changer and the St. Peter among the Servants of the High Priest: we may take it therefore to have been painted in the year 1627 or 1628. Certain details again, such as the pillar behind Christ, and the clothing, the pieces of mail, and the instruments of torture, are common to all these pictures. Harsh in the illumination and black in the shadows, hard and cold in colour, awkward in arrangement, defective both in proportions and perspective, superficial in anatomy — marked, in fact by faults that betray the hand of the beginner — the picture, compared with the sort of work that was being produced in Holland at the same time, is nevertheless very original, and already indicates the path the artist was about to follow. The figure of Christ, in spite of its inadequacy and its faulty anatomy, is strangely impressive, the head full of expression. The green of the mantle in the foreground and the violet in the costume of the guard are characteristic colours of the master's early period.

Since we drew attention in the first volume to the appearance of Rembrandt's father in the artist's work, the number of pictures which reproduce the head of this old man in a fanciful dress or as a study has increased very considerably. None of the newly discovered works are dated, but their character, and their analogies with the dated pictures, enable us to assign them to the years 1629 and 1630.

In the first volume we reproduced the small and much damaged study of the head of Rembrandt's father in the Nantes Museum (cf. Vol. I, Plate 26), on the authority of Emile Michel. The Rembrandt's Father in a small black Cap (Plate 541), in the possession of Dr. Müller of Paris, is so like this picture, but so superior to it, that the Nantes example must be pronounced merely a free copy, reversed. Still freer is the somewhat larger study of a head painted alla prima of Rembrandt's Father in a Cap that overshadows his Face (Plate 542). This was removed from the magazine a year or two ago, and now hangs in the gallery at Copenhagen. The nearly life-size bust of Rembrandt's Father with an Oriental Head-Cloth laid round his head like a turban (Plate 543), belonging to Madame May at Brussels, is a very careful work. In this shawl we find the cool subdued colours so characteristic of the artist's early manner, here used in very effective contrast to the flesh-tones. The illumination is less crude than in most works of this period, but the background is still monotonously dark, and the shadows are over-black. A similar picture of about the same size, Rembrandt's Father with a Medallion on a gold Chain (Plate 544), in Mr. Fleischmann's collection, London, is vigorously illuminated and shows a remarkable freedom in the handling. But the most interesting of these portraits is the very effective, large, and carefully executed study of Rembrandt's Father looking down, his Hand on his Breast (Plate 545), recently acquired by the Boston Museum. The arrangement and the sorrowful expression make it evident that the painter did not intend this picture for an actual portrait, but that he got his father to sit for a study for one of his historical pictures, probably a Judas or a penitent Peter. The full, warm sunlight falls from above over the bald head, across the face, and on the hand. The handling is already remarkably loose, the shadows not too black, and the execution very thorough, without being timid. This well preserved picture is akin in handling to the head of an old man of 1630, in the Cassel Gallery, in composition and illumination to the old man with downcast eyes of 1632 in the same collection.

Of the portraits of himself painted by Rembrandt during these years, the Rembrandt with his Mouth open (Plate 546), a small study belonging to Prince Lubomirski at Lemberg, is the earliest. The observation of a strong effect of light and expression was the artist's main preoccupation here, one to which he sacrificed likeness and charm uncompromisingly. This coarse study can scarcely have been painted later than 1628. The Rembrandt with luxuriant Hair and a slight Moustache (Plate 547), belonging to Mr. R. B. Berens of London, dates from the year 1629. Here, as in the slightly later work in Mrs. Gardner's collection at Boston, Rembrandt in a plumed Cap (Vol. I, Plate 18), the artist is already aiming at a style proper to portraiture, and at dignity of presentment. In conception and arrangement, and even in the cool colour, this picture resembles the large portrait of the artist of the year 1635 in the Liechtenstein Gallery. Another somewhat smaller work, Rembrandt in a steel Gorget with a Coek's Feather on his Cap (Plate 548), belonging to Mr. H. Teixeira de Mattos of Amsterdam, shows a considerable technical advance upon these pictures in delicacy of illumination, and in simplicity and correctness of drawing. The most attractive self-portrait of this period is perhaps the little bust belonging to the Comtesse Delaborde in Paris: Rembrandt looking enquiringly at the Spectator, a Cap on his frizzled Hair (Plate 549); this is sympathetic and piquant in expression, delicate in drawing, very picturesque in treatment, and vigorous in colour.

The influences of Rembrandt's first visits to Amsterdam are manifested in a peculiar manner in various small full-length portraits, inspired more especially by the works of Thomas de Keyser. Here again the master made his first essays in the genre with himself and his relatives. In our first volume (Plate 54), we reproduced the portrait of Rembrandt which passed from the Kums Collection into that of Baron Schickler. A replica of this, the Rembrandt with a Poodle at his Feet (Plate 550), has since come into the possession of the city of Paris with the Dutuit bequest, and hangs in the Petit Palais. A comparison of the two examples — the poodle does not appear in the Schickler portrait — is decidedly favourable to the Dutuit picture. This, though still formal in arrangement, hard in the contrast of light and shadow, dull in colour and poor in drawing, is considerably freer and more decisive in handling than the other, which must therefore be pronounced a school copy. The Dutuit picture has a genuine signature, with the date 1631. The pendant to this peculiar work, has also come to light meanwhile. This is the Rembrandt's Sister, full-length (Plate 551), which Baron Schickler secured as a companion to his Rembrandt portrait. She is painted in a fanciful costume, certain details of which are identical with those she wears in the pictures of Minerva and the so-called Jewish Bride (cf. Vol. I, Plates 68 and 69), and we may therefore conclude that this picture and its pendant were not simple portraits, but character-studies. It is an interesting point, that here we have a portrait of the person whose identity with Rembrandt's sister I have tried to establish, painted as early as 1631, and consequently, before his removal to Amsterdam, for we may take it that in all probability these two subjects were painted at the same, or very nearly at the same time.

The number of actual portraits of persons outside the artist's own circle has also received several additions. They are all of small size, and as portraits, are still very inferior to those of the great Amsterdam portrait-painters. The little bust of a Young Girl with short frizzled Hair (Plate 552), belonging to Mr. Scheurleer of the Hague, is the most impressive of these, by reason of the strong light concentrated on the head; the Youth in a plain flat Collar (Plate 553), belonging to Mr. John Jaffé of Nice, and the still smaller Bust of a young Man with a Hat over his bushy Hair (Plate 554), in the Paul Delaroff Collection at St. Petersburg, are more commonplace. The sitters both wear the costume characteristic of this period; the first-named youth has the doublet cut out at the neck over the pleated chemisette in which the artist so often dressed his models. The Jaffé picture was painted about 1630, the Delaroff example several years later.

Of the little studies of heads painted about 1630, the Leipzig Museum acquired the Head of an old Man with tangled white Hair and Beard (Plate 555), with the Gottschald bequest, and the Copenhagen Gallery has been enriched by a similar, but very spirited sketch of an Old Man's Head in Profile (Plate 556), discovered in its magazine. The Louvre has been presented by its former Director-General, M. Kacmpfen, with the interesting youthful work, A Hermit, reading (Plate 557). It is a very effective, and comparatively broadly treated study of an old man, whom we recognise in several other pictures painted at the same period, and in various red chalk drawings. The small Bathsheba (Plate 558), in the Museum at Rennes, is drier and more minute in handling, though interesting because of its motive. In size and arrangement it is almost a pendant to M. Warneck's Diana (cf. Vol. I, Plate 47); but whereas in the Diana the artist reproduced a hideous model without any attempt to soften her ugliness, here he has tried to give a certain beauty to the figure, only the shoulders of which are bare, and to round off the composition picturesquely by the background with its baroque palace. Twenty-two years later the master repeated this tame, prosaic composition in reverse, in his famous picture in the Louvre, but with what a difference in the pictorial methods!

Several particularly good examples of actual portraits painted during the first years after Rembrandt's removal to Amsterdam have become known to us. The Beardless Youth with a large flat Collar (Plate 559), belonging to Mr. F. T. Fleitmann of New York, has much in common with the Young Jew in Count Wachtmeister's collection (cf. Vol. II, Plate 78). The simplicity and individuality of the rendering make it one of the best portraits painted about 1631. The Young Woman with a Hymn-book in her right Hand (Plate 560), of the year 1632, now belonging to Mr. Hage at Nivaa, shows a conscientious patience in the rendering of the somewhat expressionless features, that a De Keyser or a Ravesteyn would hardly have surpassed. It is very similar to the Young Woman of the same year in the Academy at Vienna (cf. Vol. II, Plate 75). In the dated portrait of the following year, of a Young Woman with a white Cap and gauffered Ruff (Plate 561), belonging to his Excellency von Lachnicki at Warsaw, Rembrandt already reveals himself as the painter of the heart that smiles upon us from the candid eyes of this young Dutchwoman.

Another picture of 1633, the Three-quarters length of Uyttendogaert (Plate 562), belonging to Lord Rosebery at Mentmore, is one of the most important portraits of this early period, not only intrinsically, but because of the sitter's relations to the artist. It is painted with great care, and is so superior to the bust in the Stockholm Gallery (cf. Vol. II, Plate 95), with which it is almost identical, that the latter may perhaps be pronounced an old copy, made in Rembrandt's studio. The Nantes Museum owns a stately female portrait: the Young Lady holding a Watch in her right Hand (Plate 563). The rich costume, the splendid jewels, the attitude and the illumination recall the famous portrait of Maerten Daey's wife in the G. de Rothschild Collection (cf. Vol. II, Plate 108); it was probably painted in the same year, 1634.

Among the contemporary studies, one, the Old Man with a Cap and a double gold Chain (Plate 564), belonging to Mr. Fitzwilliam at Peterborough, is the original of a picture in the Cassel Gallery, long accepted as an authentic work by Rembrandt; it is a highly effective, careful study, painted in 1632 or 1633. A small study, almost in monochrome, of an Old Man with a Beard, looking to one Side (Plate 565), belonging to M. L. Jansen of Brussels, is dated 1633, and is already easy and spirited in handling. A more ambitious work is the oval, life-size bust of an Old Man with a white Beard and a black Cap (Plate 566), belonging to M. Adolphe Schloss of Paris; painted probably in 1634, it is broad and soft in handling, and in this, as in its colour, just the work that must have served as a model for the youthful Govaert Flink. The originals of two other studies of heads are unknown to me: one, the Young Man in Profile with a plumed Cap (Plate 567), the authenticity of which is attested by W. de Lecuw's contemporary engraving, belongs to M. Charles Sedelmeyer of Paris; the other, a Man with a pointed Beard, wide Cap, and gold Chain (Plate 568) is in the Wanamaker Collection at Philadelphia. A large early portrait of Saskia has also come to light recently, one of those character-studies which are distinguished from the actual portraits by an unpleasant pathos and fanciful accessories. This Saskia as Bellona (Plate 569), belonging to Sir George Donaldson, of London, was painted in 1633, and consequently during her betrothal to Rembrandt. The weapons are splendidly painted, especially the shield with the Gorgon.

Of the later portraits, treated in the simple style of the Dutch portrait-painters, the Young Man in Profile, holding his Hat in both Hands (Plate 570) dated 1637, in Prince Gagarin's collection at Moscow, is one of the most striking, the cloak of bright moiré silk forming a remarkable feature. It has a good deal in common with a first-rate Verspronck, while the Portrait of Alotte Adriaens (Plate 571), in Sir Frederick Cook's collection at Richmond, painted quite two years later, is like a very good J. G. Cuyp.

The sum of landscapes may now be enriched by three, one of them the Landscape with Swans I have already mentioned (Vol. V, p. 14), but was not able to reproduce before. The other two were quite unknown till now. They have all the characteristics of the other landscapes by the master given here; and like these, show how the very scenery of his home was transformed by him into a world of his own, and shrouded in a mysterious gloom, magically irradiated by secret light. The Landscape with the Ruin (Plate 572), an heirloom of the von Ketteler family at Schloss Ehringerfeld, has the same simplicity of motive and the same massiveness in the forms of the trees as the landscape from the James Reiss Collection now in the Rijksmuseum (cf. Vol. IV, Plate 232), and was probably painted about 1637 or 1638. The larger and richer Landscape with the Drawbridge (Plate 573) in the Duke of Alba's collection at Madrid, recalls the landscape in the Wallace Collection, London (cf. Vol. IV, Plate 233), but the handling and drawing are still more formal, in the manner of Hercules Seghers. The most freely treated is the Landscape with Swans (Plate 574), once the property of W. Bürger, now in the Schloss Collection, Paris. Its authenticity has been questioned, quite groundlessly; at a first glance, it has an unusual appearance, because the artist sketched it in hastily, and only partially covered up certain alterations just in the light. The evening glow, against which the group of trees in the foreground stands out in fantastic relief, the river with the bridge, the figures, the imposing building with the mountain in the background, the solid drawing, that gives the impression of modelling in paint, are all characteristics peculiar to Rembrandt, more especially in his middle period, about 1645, when this picture was painted.

As far as I am able to judge from a photograph, I should say that the Slaughtered Ox (Plate 575), in Mr. John G. Johnson's collection at Philadelphia, may be added to the series of still-life subjects, though it falls far short of the Louvre example. It must, in any case, have been painted very much earlier, perhaps soon after 1640.

Several little studies of male heads dating from this period have also come to light, of the same class as the series already reproduced in Vol. IV. What can have induced Rembrandt just at this period, immediately after the completion of the Night-Watch, and the death of Saskia, to spend his time on these numerous small, and for the most part insignificant studies of heads, many of which appear in replicas of almost equal merit? The best of the newly discovered examples date, like those already known, from the year 1643; they are the Old Man with a short white Beard, looking down (Plate 576), one of the last acquisitions of the lately deceased amateur, Rodolphe Kann of Paris, and the Old Man with disordered Beard and a gold Chain (Plate 577) belonging to M. Adolphe Schloss of Paris. All the others are undated, but their conception and treatment justify us in assigning them to this period: the so-called King Saul (Plate 578) belongs to Mr. Quincy A. Shaw of Boston; of the Man with disordered dark Hair and Beard (Plate 579) there is one example in Mr. John G. Johnson's collection at Philadelphia and another in the Peter von Semenow Gallery at St. Petersburg; the Elderly Man with a sorrowful Expression (Plate 580) belongs to

M. F. Kleinberger of Paris. The more important, life-size Bust of an elderly Man with a frizzled Beard (Plate 581), in the possession of Major Sir Henry St. John Mildmay of London, is of the same date. In face of the large number of very similar, and for the most part, signed and dated studies painted between 1650 and 1660, and grouped together here and in Vol. IV, no one is now likely to question the authenticity of these pictures.

Of those larger figure-studies variously described as Philosophers, Rabbis, and Old Jews, and life-size half-lengths and busts similarly labelled, several new specimens have been made known, all good and remarkable examples of the master. A Jewish Philosopher (Plate 582), a very striking and impressive work, passed from M. Charles Sedelmeyer to M. Maurice Kann's collection in Paris. The peculiarly careful execution makes it probable that this picture was painted towards the end of the forties. The highly expressive Bearded Man, his left Hand in his Coat (Plate 583), recognised in Count Wachtmeister's collection at Vanas as a genuine work of Rembrandt's, dates from 1651. A broadly painted study, somewhat caricatural in expression, of an Elderly Woman with a black Headcloth, laughing (Plate 584), belonging to Mr. Hugh P. Lane, is dated 1652. The richly coloured and very effective half-length of a White-bearded old Man with a red Cap, his right Hand in his Coat (Plate 585), in the possession of Mr. J. B. Robinson of London, is contemporary with it; in treatment, colour and effect, it is akin to the Architect in the Cassel Gallery. Softer in handling and more subdued in colour is the Seated Jew with a biretta-shaped felt Cap (Plate 586), belonging to Privy Councillor Delaroff of St. Petersburg, a work closely resembling several similar pictures painted about 1655. The Head of an old Man (Plate 587), now in the Leopold Hirsch Collection in London, was recognised when in the hands of a London dealer, as the study for the small, seated figure of an old man in the Berlin Gallery (cf. Vol. V, Plate 386), of which there is a smaller, half-length study in Sir Frederick Cook's collection. A female head of this period, the Young Girl looking down, her smooth Hair drawn into a Cap (Plate 588), belonging to Baron de Pontalba at Senlis near Paris, vigorously modelled and fatly painted, shows the examples on which N. Maes was then forming his style in Rembrandt's studio. The larger and very impressive study in the collection of Mr. John H. Harjes of Paris, the Old Man in profile, reading (Plate 589), must be a later work. It seems to have been painted from the same model as the old man standing behind Pilate in the Rodolphe Kann picture (cf. Vol. VII, Plate 532).

Mr. T. Humphry Ward's Titus with a black Cap on his dark curling Hair (Plate 590), may be accepted as a portrait of Rembrandt's son, though it has unfortunately suffered severely from re-painting. The apparent age of the youth makes it probable that it was painted about 1657. The broadly and richly handled study of a head, Christ praying and looking upwards (Plate 591), in the imperial castle of Pawlowsk, is a contemporary work. This picture is closely akin to the larger studies of Christ painted at this period, probably from the same model, and reproduced in Vol. VI (cf. Plates 412-415). Every now and then, some forgotten work by Rembrandt comes to light in the possession of the Emperor of Russia. The head of Christ mentioned above has remained at Pawlowsk, but two Biblical compositions have lately been added to the Hermitage examples, a Christ with the Samaritan Woman at the Well (Plate 592), a characteristic work of 1660, and a Tobias taking Leave of his Parents (Plate 593), obviously painted some years later. Unhappily, they were both so liberally re-painted at the beginning of the nineteenth century, that they ceased to be recognised as the works of Rembrandt. Since the cleaning to which they have been subjected, there can be no doubt as to their authenticity, but they show even now how severely they have suffered at the hands of the restorer. The Samaritan Woman, an oblong picture, is very similar in composition to the upright version of the same subject in the Rodolphe Kann Collection (cf. Vol. VI, Plate 408; this is dated 1655, not 1659, as I have lately convinced myself); but it has not the powerful colour and rich impasto of the latter. The Tobias is marked by the extraordinary simplicity and the deliberate reticence in the accessories that characterise the compositions of the sixties. The relation to Oriental compositions in Persian miniatures that may be established in the case of these pictures (notably the Esther at Moscow), appears here in conjunction with South Slavonic models and costumes. We seem to be looking at Wallachian peasants in their humble homes. The very simplicity of the picture makes it strangely impressive in sentiment; there is perhaps no work of Rembrandt's that suggests J. F. Millet so strongly as this Tobias. Was this Slavonic type impressed upon the master by Slavs in national costume, who happened to be in Amsterdam at the time? We know how eagerly he caught at everything that could enlarge and improve his knowledge and conception of that Eastern world which typified Scriptural themes to him. A large study painted in 1661, the Old Man praying (Plate 594), belonging to Count Harrach of Vienna, might support such a surmise, were it not so closely related in conception, arrangement, and date of execution, to the group of studies of Capuchin monks painted the same year (cf. Vol. IV, Plates 482-484). This impressive and broadly painted figure is a typical rendering of a Russian Iswoschtschik.

We conclude with a reproduction of the Lucrezia (Plate 595) in Mr. Borden's collection at New York, dated 1664, a work already mentioned (cf. Vol. VII, p. 16). The second and contemporary version of the subject, which Waagen describes as in a private collection in Scotland, we have unfortunately been unable to trace. Various other works by Rembrandt must still be lurking in England, in spite of the quest after his pictures that was been going on for some decades past. This is evident from Christie's sale catalogues of the nineteenth century, and from the comparatively high prices paid at these sales for many pictures since lost or forgotten.

CHRIST AT THE COLUMN

(M. ÉDOUARD AYNARD'S COLLECTION, PARIS)

CHRIST AT THE COLUMN

(M. ÉDOUARD AYNARD'S COLLECTION, PARIS)

Jesus, naked save for a white loin-cloth, is seated slightly to the left in front of a high column, on a circular stone pedestal — the pillory — to a ring in which his hands, bound together behind him, are fastened. The head, surrounded by a halo, is turned to the spectator, the eyes are cast down. Long, brown hair and a brown beard. To the left of the column, behind the steps that lead down into a hall, stands a soldier, his figure seen only to the knees, a long halberd in his right hand; he wears a greenish doublet, a gray neckcloth, and a brownish violet cap with feathers. In the background on the right another soldier in a helmet and cuirass, holding a halberd, is visible. In the foreground on the right lie a coat of mail, a bamboo cane, rods, twigs of thorn, and a large shield upon a violet robe. Grayish brown background. The light falls into the picture from above on the left.

Full length figure, about one third the size of life.
Painted about 1628.

THE HISTORY OF THE REIGN OF

The first part of the reign of King Henry the Fourth, who reigned from the year 1399 to 1413, was distinguished by a series of events which have since become famous in the history of England. The king's first object was to restore the peace of the kingdom, which had been long and cruelly divided by the civil wars of the preceding reign. He succeeded in this, and his reign was distinguished by a series of successful military expeditions, which have since become famous in the history of England.

At the death of King Henry the Fourth, the crown devolved upon his son, King Henry the Fifth, who reigned from the year 1413 to 1422. His reign was distinguished by a series of successful military expeditions, which have since become famous in the history of England.

At the death of King Henry the Fifth, the crown devolved upon his son, King Henry the Sixth, who reigned from the year 1422 to 1471. His reign was distinguished by a series of events which have since become famous in the history of England.

At the death of King Henry the Sixth, the crown devolved upon his son, King Edward the Fourth, who reigned from the year 1461 to 1483. His reign was distinguished by a series of events which have since become famous in the history of England.

REMBRANDT WITH A POODLE AT HIS FEET

(PETIT PALAIS, PARIS)

Aged about five and twenty. He stands in the middle of a room, his gloved left hand resting on a stick, his right against his side. He wears a gold-coloured coat, reaching to the knees, trimmed with gold embroideries and fringes, and held together by an Oriental girdle; over it a dark purple mantle, fastened on the shoulder with three gold buttons. Closely fitting dark green breeches, and low, soft leather boots. On his thick curly brown hair a high brown and green striped turban with a clasp and a heron's plume on the right side. Small moustache. At his feet a brown and white poodle. In the background to the left a table with a grayish green cover, on which lie a helmet, a shawl and other objects. Grayish brown background. The light falls into the picture from above on the left.

BATHSHEBA AFTER BATHING

(MUSEUM, RENNES)

Bathsheba is seated on a grassy knoll, turned to the right, and looking at the spectator. In her right hand she holds a small bunch of flowers. An old waiting-woman, spectacles on nose, is cutting her toe-nails. The upper part of her body, from which her chemise has slipped, is bare; a magnificent robe of gold brocade is drawn round the lower part of her body. Round her neck she wears a double gold chain; there is a jewelled cap on the back of her head, and a pearl in her ear. In the background to the right, King David's palace appears.

Small, full-length figure.

Signed to the left on the mound of grass: R. 1632.

(LORD ROSEBERY'S COLLECTION, MENTMORE)

Standing, turned to the right, the head almost full face to the front, looking at the spectator. He has a gray beard, and gray hair, partly covered by a black velvet skull-cap. He wears a black coat, a fur-trimmed cloak, and a ruff. His left hand is laid on his breast, his right holds his gloves. On a table to the right are his hat and an open folio. Dark background. The light falls into the picture from above on the left.

Three-quarters length, life-size.

Canvas. H. 1<sup>m</sup>,22; w. 1<sup>m</sup>,04.

Our Plate 95, Vol. II, has hitherto been accepted as the portrait mentioned in Uytenbogaert's journal as "am 13 April Uitgeschildert door Rembrant voor Abraham Anthonisz". But since the above work (a three-quarters length, signed in full, and dated 1633) has come to light, it seems highly probable that this is the original portrait spoken of by the sitter.

Etched by Giuseppe Longhi, 1811, under the title : Burgomastro Olandese.

In the foreground to the left a huntsman on horse-back in a yellow coat and a red cap, followed by his servant, who holds two hounds in leash and carries some game on a stick across his shoulder. In the centre of the foreground a man in a red coat with a basket on his back and a long stick resting against his shoulder, is seated by the roadside. In the middle distance, the gate of a fortified town. On the draw-bridge leading to this gate, a man in a carriage drawn by two horses, surrounded by attendants and pedestrians. A wide plain, enclosed on the left by steep cliffs, extends behind the town to the horizon.

Painted about 1640.

Oak panel. H. 0<sup>m</sup>,42; w. 0<sup>m</sup>,60.

Acquired by the fourteenth Duke of Alba, Don Carlos Miguel, in 1818.
Collection of H. E. James Stuart y Falcó, Duke of Berwick and Alba, Madrid.

THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

The history of the United States is a story of growth and expansion. It begins with the first settlers who came to the shores of the Atlantic coast. They found a land of fertile soil and abundant resources. Over time, the colonies grew and developed. They established their own governments and laws. They fought for their rights and independence. The United States emerged as a powerful nation, respected and admired by the world.

KNOWN ONLY BY ENGRAVINGS

ne reproductions of lost pictures, which may with some degree of confidence be ascribed to Rembrandt, are few in number. There are, however, a good many engravings and etchings, which purport to be from originals by the master; in most cases, in spite of the inaccuracy of the reproductions, it is possible to say with certainty, or with much probability, that the originals had nothing to do with Rembrandt.

We append a list of those reproductions which may be accepted as actually made from originals, either because of the dates of their execution — in Rembrandt's life-time — or because of their style and character.

I. THE BAPTISM OF THE EUNUCH.

Engraved by J. G. van Vliet.

Inscribed : Rt. v. Rijn jnu. J. G. v. Vliet, fec. 1631.

There are various copies of this early picture, painted about 1628-30. That in the Grand-Ducal Gallery at Oldenburg approaches the original very closely, if indeed it is not the original itself.

II. LOT AND HIS DAUGHTERS.

Engraved by J. G. van Vliet.

Inscribed : Rt. van Rijn jnventor 1631. J. G. van. Vliet : fecit.

Only a few poor copies exist of this picture, which was painted about 1628-30.

III. THE HOLY FAMILY.

Lithographed by Langlade.

Inscribed : Rembrant Pinxit. imp. lith. Langlade. Aubusson. Langlade del.

The composition shows all the characteristics of a youthful work of Rembrandt's, painted about 1628-29.

IV. SAINT JEROME.

Engraved by J. G. van Vliet.

Inscribed : Rt. v. Rijn jn. J. G. v. Vliet fec. 1631.

There is an old copy in the Suermondt Museum at Aix-la-Chapelle of this picture, which was painted about 1630.

V. REMBRANDT'S FATHER.

Mezzotint by Charles Phillips.

Inscribed : Rembrandt pinx. Cha. Phillips fecit, Paris 1769.

The original of this very conventionally treated plate was painted about 1630.

VI. REMBRANDT'S MOTHER.

Etched by A. Riedel.

Inscribed : Rembrandt Pin. A. Riedel : fe. Aqu : for : 1755 :

There are several copies of this picture, among others one in the Brunswick Gallery. The original was painted about 1630.

VII. PORTRAIT OF A YOUTH.

Engraved by L. Lowenstam.

Inscribed : Rembrandt v. Rijn pinx. Léopold Lowenstam sc.

This engraving was made for the catalogue of the Max Kann Collection, sold in Paris in 1879. Before the date of the sale, the companion-picture, Rembrandt's Sister in a fur-trimmed Cloak (vol. 1, n° 65) was also in this collection.

VIII. PORTRAIT OF A YOUTH.

Engraved by L. A. Claessens.

Painted about 1633-34.

IX. AN OLD MAN WITH A SKULL CAP, LOOKING DOWN.

Engraved by J. G. van Vliet.

Inscribed : Rt. inventor. J G v Vliet fec. 1634.

Painted about 1630-32.

X. REMBRANDT'S FATHER WITH A HORSE'S TAIL ON HIS CAP.

Engraved by J. G. van Vliet.

Inscribed : J. G. v. Vliet fec. Rt. inuenter.

Painted about 1630.

- XI. A YOUNG GIRL, CALLED "MARIANA".
 Engraved by W. P. de Leeuw.
 Inscribed : Remb. van Ryn juvenor. C. Dankerts excudit.
 Painted about 1634-36.
- XII. PORTRAIT OF THE PREACHER SWALMIUS.
 Engraved by J. Suijderhoef.
 Inscribed : Rembrandt Pinxit. I. Suijderhoef Sculpsit. P. Goos Excudit, and with a verse by H. Gualdorp.
 Painted about 1636-37.
- XIII. REMBRANDT'S SISTER, CALLED "LA DAME AUX PERLES".
 Engraved by A. de Marcenay.
 Inscribed : Rembrandt pinx. A. de Marcenay sc. 1768. La Dame aux Perles.
 Painted about 1632.
- XIV. PORTRAIT OF ADMIRAL PHILIPPS VAN DORP.
 Engraved by S. Savry (?).
 Inscribed : S. Savry Ex. Remb. van Rijn, with an inscription round it and a verse, below, A<sup>o</sup> 1631.
 Painted about 1634.
- XV. PORTRAIT OF A MAN WITH A POINTED BEARD AND A BROAD-BRIMMED HAT.
 Engraved in mezzotint by J. Stolker.
 Inscribed : Rembrandt Pinx. J. Stolker fecit.
 Painted about 1636-38.
- XVI. PORTRAIT OF JEREMIAS DE DEKKER.
 Engraved in mezzotint by Aquila (Arend van Halen).
 Inscribed : Rembrandt. Pinx. Aquila Schulp. With the sitter's name and a verse upon him. In an engraved baroque frame.
 Painted about 1660.
- XVII. THE AGED TOBIT WITH HIS WIFE IN AN INTERIOR.
 Engraved by W. P. de Leeuw.
 Inscribed : Rembr. van Rijn inv. W. P. Leeuw fecit, and with a quatrain by Plempius.
 Painted about 1636-38.

XVIII. AN OLD WOMAN PLUCKING A CHICKEN.

Engraved in mezzotint by R. Houston.

The original, which was sold with Baron de Beurnonville's collection in Paris in 1884, has since disappeared.

Painted about 1654.

XIX and XX. THE PHILOSOPHERS ZENO AND LUCIAN.

Engraved in mezzotint by Picard.

Inscribed : Zenon Philosophe. Rembrandt pinxit. Bernard Picart sculp. Picart excudit 1699. — Lucien Autheur grec. Rembrandt pinxit Bernard Picart fecit et excud.

The reproductions, though very superficial, seem to have been made from original studies of heads painted by Rembrandt about 1656-1658. Whether the master really intended to represent ancient philosophers, as Professor Six agrees with Picart in supposing, seems doubtful. The so-called Zeno looks like a study for a suffering Christ.

XXI. OLD MAN IN A VELVET CAP, LOOKING DOWN.

Engraved in mezzotint by W. Vaillant.

Signed : Rembrandt Pinx. Vaillant fec. et exc.

Painted about 1652.

[Faint, illegible text, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page]

1575
November 30

No. 1. REMBRANDT'S GRANDMOTHER AND HER SECOND HUSBAND BUY A WINDMILL.

On November 30, 1575, the miller, Cornelis Claesz, and his wife, Lysbeth Harmansdochter, appear before the Sheriffs of Leyden and declare, that shortly before her marriage, the latter had bought a corn-windmill from Jonkheer Jan van der Does van Noordwijk, and had removed it from Noordwijk, to the town-wall of Leyden, north of the Wittepoort. Lysbeth Harmansdochter declares that she still owes 900 guilders of the price, which she engages to pay off in yearly instalments, till May 1, 1582.

From the book of Opdrachtsbrieven Litt. E, fol. 323, first quoted and published by Vosmaer, Rembrandt, sa vie et ses œuvres, 1877, pp. 15, 16, 429.

There was formerly a good deal of uncertainty as to the situation of Rembrandt's paternal mill. Relying upon Houbraken's statement, that Rembrandt was born on the banks of the Rhine outside Leyden, between Zouterwoede and Koukerk, enquirers fixed upon a mill in this situation, which still bears the proud title of Rembrandt's Mill. In the Amsterdam Print Room there is a drawing by Johan de Bisschop, showing the ramparts of Leyden to the north of the Wittepoort; the mill in this drawing was etched by Cornet as Rembrandt's Mill.

Since it was finally demonstrated by Vosmaer (p. 7-17 and p. 427-431), that the first mill was not the one in question, that no member of Rembrandt's family ever had anything to do with it, and that the Bisschop-Cornet mill had only belonged to Rembrandt's grandmother in part, and for no more than a year, the documents relating to the mill have lost much of their importance. They are accordingly given above merely in the form of an abstract, with an indication of the place where they are preserved.

No. 2. REMBRANDT'S FATHER AND GRAND-PARENTS

Their names are recorded in a description of all the burgesses and inhabitants of Leyden, drawn up in the year 1581. They lived in the house in the Weddesteeg, the street in which Rembrandt was born in 1606.

First published by Vosmaer, p. 9.

The house in the Weddesteeg is marked with the figure 2 on the little map given by Vosmaer opposite p. 10. Cornelis Claesz van Berckel was the second husband of his wife, Lysbeth Harmansdochter, and lived there about seven years. Harmen (Rembrandt's father) and Maretgen, were Lysbeth's two children by her first marriage with Gherit Roelen or Roelofs. Mons' Byma was a student who lodged with them, apparently the same person who is inscribed in the Album Studiosorum on August 24, 1581, as Julius Beyma J. lic. and soon afterwards became a professor at the University.

Two men-servants and a maid complete the household.

No. 3. THE MARRIAGE OF REMBRANDT'S AUNT 1584
March 29

On March 29, 1584, at the Town Hall of Leyden, notice was published of the approaching marriage of

From the Echtboek A, covering from May 14, 1575, to April, 1586 (Folio 228 V<sup>o</sup>), first published by Vosmaer, p. 427.

Eighty years after the solemnisation of this marriage, Rembrandt's son, Titus, laid claim to property left by a son born of the union, one Gerrit Pietersz van Medemblik. Cf. with the document of February 2, 1665.

No. 4. MARRIAGE OF REMBRANDT'S
PARENTS

The notice of the intended marriage is taken: A. from the register in the Town Hall, in which the names of the bride and bridegroom are entered under September 22, 1589; and B. from the register of the Church of St. Peter, in which they are entered on the following day. The latter also gives the date of the wedding, October 8 of the same year.

No. 5. REMBRANDT'S FATHER BUYS HALF OF THE MILL FROM HIS STEPFATHER, WITH THE HOUSES BELONGING TO IT
IN THE WEDDESTEEG

On November 27, 1589, Cornelis Claesz with his stepson Harman Gerritsz, both millers, appears before the Leyden Sheriffs, to declare that he agrees to sell the latter one half of the mill with its appurtenances, and further, the southern half of the mill-house in the Weddesteeg, and a small new house to the east of the same, the whole for a bill drawn for 1800 gilders.

First published by Vosmaer, from the Protocol van Odrachts ende Waerbrieven Littera Q, fol. xviii verso, in the Leyden archives, pp. 10, 431 of his book, where, on pp. 430, 431 he also gives numerous excerpts concerning the mill, dating from 1602 to 1663. As these have no interest in connection with Rembrandt himself, they are omitted here. The mill of which Rembrandt's father thus became part-owner is indicated by the number 10 on Vosmaer's map (p. 10); the house, with the small new house standing behind it, by the number 4.

No. 6. REMBRANDT'S FATHER'S WILL

March 1

Harman Gerritsz appeared before the notary W. C. Oudenvliet on March 1, 1600, to make his will, by which he bequeathed the whole of his property to his wife, Neeltgen Willemsd' zuytbrouc, without conditions of any sort. She was to dispose of it as she thought fit, and was not required to furnish any inventory of the same. But she was enjoined to bring up their five children, and any others that might be born to them, honourably and in the fear of God throughout their minority. At the age of twenty-five, or on their marrying with their mother's consent, the children were each to receive from her 100 carolus guilders and a suitable outfit.

Further instructions follow, to take effect in the event of the children all dying without issue, which however, did not happen.

Finally, Harman Gerritsz made his wife the sole and only guardian of his children. But in the event of her marrying again, she was bound to give up half of the common property to them.

The will bears the following signature:

Harman Gerritsz

First quoted from the protocol of the notary W. C. Oudenvliet in the notarial archives at the Hague, by Rammelman Elsevier at Leyden, loc. cit. under N° 4, p. 297 (°).

Later wills, among them those of February 14, 1614, and of March 16, 1621, cancelled the above. We accordingly give an abstract only.

1. The notary is erroneously called Woudenvliet in this article. His name was Willem Claesz Oudenvliet.

1600 No. 7. DIVISION OF THE PROPERTY LEFT
April 25 BY REMBRANDT'S GRANDMOTHER, ELYSABETHI HARMENSDOCHTER

On April 25, 1600, Harmen Gerritsz and his sister Marytgen, widow of Pieter Claesz van Medenblick, the latter enjoying the usufruct of the property during the minority of her children, decide to divide a house and piece of land bequeathed to them by their mother, Elysabeth Harmensdochter. Harmen is to have the house (n° 3 on Vosmaer's map, p. 10), which adjoins his own (n° 4), and the plot of land belonging to it with the little new house (n° 5) behind it. His sister is to be allowed to live in the latter, rent free, for the rest of her life (1), and her children are to have the house to the north of this (n° 2). Harmen agrees to pay the expenses of putting up a partition-wall etc., and in addition to pay 100 carolus guilders to his nephews and nieces.

First published by Vosmaer from the Wees- en Armboek, Register A, folio 79 v° in the Leyden archives, pp. 427, 428 of his book, and discussed on pp. 11, 12.

1601 No. 8. REMBRANDT'S FATHER BUYS A May 3 GARDEN FROM THE HEIRS OF HIS SISTER

On May 3, 1601, the regents of Leyden allow the guardian of Marytgen Gerritsdochter's children to sell to their uncle, Harmen Gerritsz, half of a garden outside the Rijnsburgerpoort, the other half of which already belongs to him. The latter had further offered 1400 guilders for the house in the Weddesteeg allotted to the children at the division of property made in the previous year (n° 2 on Vosmaer's map, p. 10), and for an eighth share in the windmill, five-eighths of which already belong to him. The joint owner of the mill, Cornelis Claesz, having, however, made an offer higher by 100 guilders, the share was awarded to him.

First published by Vosmaer, pp. 12, 13, 429, from the Wees- en Armboek, Litt. A, folio 121 v° in the Leyden archives.

1644 No. 9. THE WILL OF REMBRANDT'S PARENTS
February 14

This will, drawn up by the notary Salomon Lenaertsz van der Wuert, at Leyden, on February 14, 1614, is referred to in the will of March 16, 1621.

It has never been published, and owing to the temporary inaccessibility of the Leyden notarial protocols in the Hague archives, cannot be given here.

1. She died in December of the same year, however.

No. 10. THE MARRIAGE OF REMBRANDT'S 1647
BROTHER, ADRIAEN VAN RIJN June 16

The register of the kerkelijke huwelijks-proclamatien, dating from February 8, 1614 to May 31, 1619, contains the following entry on folio 179 :

Adriaen Harmensz van Rijn, schoenmaecker, jonckman van Leyden, vergeselschaft met Harmen Gervijts van Rijn, sijn vader

Lysbetgen Symons, jonghe dochter, mede van Leyden vergeselschaft met Pieterthen Symons haer moeder.

First published by Vosmaer, p. 431.

No. 11. REMBRANDT INSCRIBED AS 1620
A STUDENT OF LEYDEN UNIVERSITY May 20

20 Mai 1620 Rembrandus Hermannij Leydensis an. 14 stud. litt. apud Parentes.

First published by Dr. W. N. du Rieu in Obreen's Archief voor Nederlandsche Kunstgeschiedenis v, p. 268 et seq; Kunstenaars voorkomende inh et Album Studiosorum der Academie te Leiden, after its discovery by M<sup>r</sup> A. D. de Vries, Azn., where the date was, however; given as May 25, 1620. The inscription had already appeared in an abbreviated form, with the right date, in the Album Studiosorum, published by Du Rieu in 1875, p. 147.

As Rembrandt was not fourteen till July 15, 1620, the "an. 14" must be taken as "anno quattodecimo": in his fourteenth year.

No. 12. THE WILL OF REMBRANDT'S PARENTS 1621
March 16

On March 16, 1621, the notary Ewout Henriczsz Craen presents himself in the house of Rembrandt's parents. The father is in good health, the mother ill in bed. Both are sane and sound mentally. They confirm the will made on February 14, 1614, before the notary Salomon Lenaertsz van der Wuert, but add the following codicil: Their eldest son, Gerijt Harmensz, having had an accident which has partially disabled his right hand, is to receive a yearly pension of 125 guilders free money from the estate of the last surviving parent. Should a misfortune of a like nature befall any other of the children through no fault of his own during his minority, the surviving parent is exhorted to compensate him in like manner. Both parents desire to be buried in their own grave in the church of St. Peter, near the chancel.

Then follow certain instructions as to the assignment of this grave to the heirs.

The couple sign as follows:

Unpublished. Mentioned in the protocol of the notary Ewout Henricxsz Craen, Oud Holland, 1887, v, p. 228 Rembrandt's Verwanten, Bijlage A. in A. Bredius en M. N. de Roever's Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis, II.

For the will mentioned above, see N° 9.

About No. 14. LAUDATORY MENTION
1628 OF REMBRANDT BY ARENT VAN BUCHEL

On a sheet of paper with notes, probably for an unpublished work called Res pictoriae:

Molitoris etiam Leidensis filius magni fit, sed ante tempus. Elyas Veldenus pictor elegans sed levis, habitat nunc Hagae. Rector Screvelius, monstrabat et suam effigiem ab Halsio picture Harlemensi in tabella pictam admodum vivide, a quo et pictus Scriverius, ad quam picturam eundem

1. Rammelman Elsevier misread this Sara; Vosmaer read it rightly as Cornelis.

in aere expressu Veldius, cuius mihi geminam effigiem dedit.

First published by G. van Rijn, Oud Holland, 1888, v, p. 149: Arent van Buchel's Res pictoriae.

The writer was of opinion that the handwriting of this note (he omits to say where it is preserved), agrees with that of other notes of 1628.

Esaïas (not Elyas) van de Velde lived at the Hague from 1618 onwards; Houbraken, however, says he was at Harlem in 1626.

Hals' portrait of Theod. Screvelius<sup>(1)</sup> dates from the year 1617, that of Peter Scriverius<sup>(2)</sup>, from the year 1626, the same year as Jan van de Velde's engraving.

This notice contains the earliest extant criticism on Rembrandt as an artist. The words magni fit sed ante tempus signify: he is highly esteemed, but prematurely so. Buchel obviously meant that Rembrandt might become great, but that to account him already a master was to over-estimate him.

First published from the Leyden archives, by P. Haverkorn van Rijsewijk in De Nederlandsche Spectator, 1887, p. 241, in consequence of a communication received from Mr. Ch. M. Dozy.

Although the surname is omitted, and the domicile not very clearly indicated, there is no doubt as to the identity of the deceased.

The alley called the Weddesteeg, in which the house of Rembrandt's parents was situated, is close to the White Gate. Cf. the map in Vosmaer, p. 10.

No. 16. INDICATIONS OF REMBRANDT'S AGE 1631

On an impression of the second state of the etched portrait of himself, Bartsch n° 7, in the British Museum, is written in Rembrandt's own hand:

Aet 24, Anno 1631 Rembrandt f.

1. Now in M. E. Warneck's collection, Paris; exhibited at the Hague Portrait Exhibition in 1903.

2. Bought by Mr. H. O. Havemeyer of New York at the Secrétan Sale, 1889.

First quoted by Vosmaer, p. vi. Facsimile given by Rovinski, n° 21.

A similar autograph :

AET. 24 Rembrandt f. 1631

appears on the print in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris, and according to Seidlitz, Rembrandt's Etchings, p. 30, also upon an impression formerly in the Holford Collection. These inscriptions must date from the first half of 1631, for Rembrandt was twenty-five on July 15, 1631.

1631 No. 17. INSCRIPTIONS ON ETCHINGS AFTER REMBRANDT

A. LOT AND HIS DAUGHTERS. Etching by Jan George van Vliet, Bartsch n° 1, inscribed :

Re van Ryn inventor 1631 JG. van. vliet. fecit

In the second state the address : Clement de Jonghe excu instead of the date (*).

The original picture has disappeared.

B. THE BAPTISM OF THE EUNUCH. Etching by Jan George van Vliet, Bartsch n° 12, with the inscription :

Re van Ryn inv. JG v. vliet fec. 1631

A copy, with the figures side by side instead of one above the other, is inscribed :

Rembrandt invent. C. J. Visscher excudebat. Hic lavat aethiopem nigrum pellitque colorem non cutis ast animae, post pansa oracla philippus (?)

C. ST. JEROME PRAYING. Etching by Jan George van Vliet, Bartsch n° 13, with the inscription :

and after the second state, with the address Dancker Danckertz.

The original picture has disappeared. Several copies, among others one in the Suermondt Gallery at Aix-la-Chapelle, which long passed for the original, show the composition turned in the same direction as in the print, and in copies of the same. A study of the figure in red chalk, in the Louvre, reproduced by Lippmann, n° 152, is reversed, showing the position of the original.

D. REMBRANDT'S MOTHER AS ANNA THE PROPHETESS. Etching by Jan George van Vliet, Bartsch n° 18, with the inscription :

Re van Ryn inventor, JG van vliet fecit,

1. Rovinski mentions (p. 41) a print by Haelweg after a somewhat different original by Rembrandt.

2. Rovinski speaks of the original by Rembrandt as in the possession of Count Tolstoi at Odessa ВЪСТ. ИЗЯЩН. Пек +183.

and after the third state with the address Dancker Danckertz excud.

From the original picture in the grand Ducal Gallery at Oldenburg, dated 1631, Bode n° 23.

E. BUST OF AN OFFICER TURNED TO THE RIGHT. Etching by Jan George van Vliet, Bartsch n° 26, with the inscription :

Re van Ryn in 1631. JG van vliet fecit.

In the second state, with the address Ran.

In the third state with the engraved inscription deleted, and replaced by the printed signature : Georgius Ragozy.

In the fourth state with the printed inscription : Georgius Ragozy, Dei gratia — bis — Siculorum comes. TAmsterdam gedruckt by Hugo Allardt, in de Kalverstraat in de Wereltkaart.

A reversed copy bears the inscription : Scanlirebec Roy d'albanie Re Inventor F. L. D. Ciartres excudit.

It belongs to the series in which various other heads by Rembrandt bear the names Mahomet, the Jew Philo, Gaston de Foy, etc.

F. L. D. Ciartres is the Parisian publisher François Langlois de Ciartres. Cf. under N° 90.

F. ST. ANASTASIUS IN HIS CELL. Etching by P. de Balliu, Bartsch II, p. 119, n° 2, with the inscription :

In the second state the address is deleted.

The original picture, dated 1631, is in the National Museum at Stockholm, Bode n° 40.

No. 18. CONSTANTIN HUYGENS' OPINION OF REMBRANDT About 1631

§ 1. After treating of other contemporary artists, such as Rubens, Miereveldt and Ravesteyn, the writer comes to two Leyden youths, whom he reckons among the elect. They are already equal to the most famous of their contemporaries, and will soon excel them all. § 2. Their origin refutes the accepted theory of hereditary excellence, already combated by the Italian, Trajanus Boccalinus, in a story in verse. § 3. The father of one (Lievens), is an embroiderer, that of the other (Rembrandt), a miller. § 4. The poverty of their parents made it impossible to give them any but the most mediocre teachers, who, if they could now see their pupils, would feel as much ashamed of themselves as did the masters of Virgil, Cicero and Archimedes. § 5. They owe nothing to their teachers, but everything to themselves, and would, no doubt, have made just the same progress, if they had had no teachers at all. § 6. Both Lievens and Rembrandt, to judge by their appearance, are still boys rather than youths. § 7. It is not the writer's intention to enumerate their works; but he wishes, as he did in the case of Rubens, that they would themselves prepare a catalogue raisonné of these. § 8. Summing up, he concludes that Rembrandt excels Lievens in intelligence and passion, whilst Lievens surpasses his companion in invention and grandeur. § 9. Lievens generally paints the size of life or even larger; Rembrandt, on the contrary, shows a force of expression in small, carefully painted compositions, such as we shall seek in vain in the works of other artists. § 10. In particular, a Judas, bringing back the blood-money to the Priest, will bear comparison with anything produced by the Italians, or by antiquity. § 11. Eulogy of the central figure. § 12. The beardless son of a Dutch miller has surpassed Protogenes, Apelles, and Parrhasius in this work, and although he has scarcely gone beyond the walls of his native town, he has achieved more than those who have transported Ilium to Italy. § 13. The character of Lievens, and Huygens' expectations of him. § 14. His fertility. § 15. His marvellous capacity for giving expression to the features. He, who now desires to embrace all nature, should exert himself more especially in this branch of art. § 16, for, however admirable and eminent an artist he may be, he will find it difficult to equal Rembrandt's vitality and invention as a historical painter.

[Here follow many details about Lievens, with which we are not concerned.]

§ 17. Both youths are reproved for thinking it not worth their while to visit Italy. § 18. If they would study the works of Raphael and Michelangelo, they would attain to the very summit of their art. They declare that they have no time for this now in the bloom of their youth, and that it is possible to see the best Italian art outside Italy, whereas in Italy itself it is difficult to find and scattered throughout the country. § 19. The writer will not proceed to enquire how far this may be true, but will only testify, that he has seldom seen such industry and endurance. § 20. They deny themselves even the innocent pleasures of their age. § 21. It would be well if they were more inclined to spare their not very robust bodies, which have already suffered from the sedentary life they lead.

n° XLVIII in the catalogue of manuscripts, p. 900 et seq. Our fragments are from p. 970 et seq. of the modern pagination.

First published by Dr. J. A. Worp: Constantijn Huygens over de schilders van zijn tijd, Oud Holland, 1891, ix, p. 106-136 and appendix, p. 307 et seq., with Dutch translation.

This autobiography, which embraces the years 1596-1614, is referred by Worp (loc. cit.), to the years 1629-31. It was published by him in full in the Bijdragen en Mededeelingen van het Historisch Genootschap, 1897, xviii, p. 1-122.

§ 4. Praeceptores—according to Orlers, Lievens was a pupil of Joris van Schooten and Lastman, Rembrandt of Jacob van Swanenburch and Lastman.

§ 8, 9. The correctness of this comparison between the two artists will be recognised if we compare their pictures of Samson and Delilah, the small example by Rembrandt, in the possession of the German Emperor at Potsdam, and the picture with life-size half-length figures by Lievens in the Rijks Museum. We see how Rembrandt's judicium and affectuum vivacitas surpass Lievens' audacia argumentorum formarumque superbia.

§ 10. The Judas bringing back the Pieces of Silver, so enthusiastically praised by Huygens, is now in Baron de Schieckler's collection, Paris (Bode, n° 10). The eulogy seems to us very excessive: we do not even consider the picture one of the best produced in the master's earliest period.

§ 17, 18. Huygens' regrets, that Rembrandt and Lievens did not care to visit Italy, are very significant of his taste and tendencies. No less significant are the reasons given by the artists for their disinclination: they had no time for travelling, and there were plenty of collections north of the Alps, in which they could study the best Italian art. It seems doubtful, however, if Rembrandt ever availed himself of such opportunities.

1631 No. 19. DECLARATION AS TO REMBRANDT'S
March 8 DOMICILE

Declaration made by two Leyden notaries certifying that a hundred persons named therein were living in Leyden, and that they had seen or spoken with the same on or after March 8.

24 Martii 1631 verklaren de Notarissen Dirck Jansz van vesanvelt en Caerl Oouterman te Leiden "dat honderd personen hiervoren genommeert als noch in levende lijve sijn, dat wy deselve op of naer viii martii 1631 gesien ofte gesproken hebben".

The second person named on the list is:

Mr. Rembrandt Harmensz, schilder.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the protocol of the notary C. Oouterman.

The object of this declaration is not stated.

No. 20. ACKNOWLEDGMENT BY 1631
H. ULENBURCH OF A DEBT DUE FROM HIM June 20 TO REMBRANDT

§ 1. Hendrick Ulenburch, art-dealer, declares before the notary G. J. Selden, that he owes Rembrandt or any subsequent holder of the title 1000 guilders, which sum was lent to him by the above-named. § 2. If Rembrandt wishes to be repaid in a year's time, he must give notice to this effect three months in advance.

Op huyden den 20 Juny 1631 compareerde voor my Geerloff Jellisz Selden, openbaar Notaris... Hendrick Ulenburch, Cunstiaandelaer, en bekende wel en deuchdelijk schuldich te wesen aen Rembrandt Harmensz, wonende tot Leyden off aen toonder deses, de som van tienhondert guldens ter cause van geleende penningen bij den voorsz. Hendr. van Ulenburch van den voorn. Rembrandt tot zijn contentement ontfangen, welverstaende off de voorsz Rembrandt de voorn. som over een jaer begeerde affgedaen te hebben, dat hij absdan gehouden zal sijn, den voorn. Van Ulenburch drie maenden voor den tijd daervan te waarschwen. Etc.

First published from the protocol of the notary G. J. Selden, Amsterdam, by A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, Oud Holland, 1887, v, p. 213, Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis.

The document does not set forth the purpose of this loan. Hendrick Ulenburch was a cousin of Saskia, who afterwards became Rembrandt's wife. Rembrandt lived in his house for some time after this date, and Ulenburch printed and published the Large Crucifixion for the master (Bartsch, n° 81).

In addition, three Latin distiches by C. G. Plempius: Felle tument oculi — vel sine Marte facit, and the address: F. de Wit.

The original picture is in the Städel Institute, Frankfort-on-the-Main, and was painted about 1630-31. Bode, n° 16.

B. PORTRAIT OF SASKIA VAN UYLENBURCH. Etching by Willem de Leeuw, Bartsch II, p. 132, n° 45.

Rembr. inv. WDL. fecit.

The original picture, painted in 1632, is in the National Museum, Stockholm. Bode, n° 63.

C. BUST PORTRAIT OF A WOMAN. Etching by Willem de Leeuw, Bartsch II, p. 132, n° 46.

Rem. S. Savry ex.

An old copy of this etching by S. Savry bears the inscription:

R. van rijn inventor.

The original is lost. It seems to have been a study of Rembrandt's father.

E. THE CIRCUMCISION. Anonymous etching, Bartsch II, p. 80, n° 7.

Rembrandt fecit J. P. Berendrecht ex.

The words "Rembrandt fecit" can only mean, that the composition was due to Rembrandt. The execution of the etching is very insignificant, and has nothing to do with Rembrandt. A Flight into Egypt, by the same hand, was included among Rembrandt's works by the earlier writers, Gersaint, Bartsch (n° 59), etc., because the print was said to have figured in Jan Six' collection. Jan Pietersz Berendrecht was a Haarlem publisher, whose name appears in the records of that city in 1614 (his marriage), and 1633 (his wife received into the Reformed Church). See Van der Willigen, Les Artistes de Harlem, p. 74<sup>(1)</sup>.

First given in facsimile in Victor de Stuers, Notice historique et descriptive des tableaux du Musée royal de la Haye, 1874.

The dissection represented, the only one noted in the Amsterdam anatomy-book as having taken place in the year 1632, was made on the corpse of a criminal, one Adriaen Adriaensz, called het Kint, a quiver-maker of Leyden, aged 28, who was Rembrandt's signature has been painted over by a later hand; traces of the original signature are distinguishable in the facsimile of the Hague Catalogue.

The fragments of the doctors' names which have disappeared may be easily restored. Their dates, as far as these are known, are given by Moes, Iconographia Batava.

No. 25. DECLARATION CERTIFYING
REMBRANDT TO BE ALIVE AND WELL

§ 1. The notary Jacob van Zwieten of Amsterdam, at the request of Pieter Huygen de Boys, living outside Leyden on the high Most, went to the house of Mr. Heyndrick Ulenburch in the Breestraat, near the St. Anthonissluis at Amsterdam. § 2. On asking a young maid-servant, if Rembrandt, who was a visitor in the house, was at home, he received an answer in the affirmative. § 3. He requested that Rembrandt might be called, and asked him, if he were the painter Mr. Rembrant Harmensz van Rijn. § 4. Receiving an answer in the affirmative, he remarked that Rembrandt was "fresh, vigorous, and in good health". § 5. Rembrandt confirmed this statement with the words: "that is true, I am, thank God, healthy and flourishing."

The object of this "Attestatio de Vita" is not stated, and is not to be discovered from any other source.

No. 26. INSCRIPTION ON REMBRANDT'S
ETCHING OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN

An impression of the second state of the etching, Bartsch n° 90, in the Amsterdam Print Room, is inscribed in old handwriting:

Rembrandt f. cum priu. l. 1633.

The fourth and subsequent states are signed in engraved characters:

Rembrandt inventor et fecit 1633.

An old copy is signed:

The notices of the Amsterdam inscription in the works of former writers who followed Blane, are all incorrect. The inscription is certainly an old one, but in my opinion, not by Rembrandt's own hand; the date is 1633, not 1632; the impression is from a second, not from a first state.

Nothing is known as to the copyright granted to the etching.

No. 27. COPYRIGHT OF REMBRANDT'S LARGE DESCENT FROM THE CROSS

The second state of the etching, Bartsch n° 81, bears the inscription:

Rembrandt f. cum. priu. l. 1633.

In the third state, in addition to the address:

Amstelodami Hendrickus Ulenburgensis Excudat.

In the fourth state the address of Justus Danckerts.

The copyright was probably granted by the States-General or the States of Holland as a protection against copyists. No allusion to the matter is to be found in the resolutions of either assembly, though it was customary to record privileges accorded to works of art.

Rembrandt was living in H. van Uylenburch's house when he etched the plate. Uylenburch probably undertook the retail sale of the prints, and afterwards sold the plate to Justus Danckerts.

AFTER REMBRANDT

A. BUST OF AN OLD MAN. Etching by Hendrick de Thier, Bartsch II, p. 128, n° 37.

R. v. Rijn In. H. Dthier. f. 1633.

The original picture, painted in 1630, was bequeathed by J. O. Gottschald to the Civic Museum of Leipzig.

According to Vosmaer, p. 499, the same engraver etched a plate of the Cassel portrait of Saskia, with the address of... Danckerts.

For this obscure engraver cf. Oud Holland, 1895, xiii, pp. 51, 52, Obreeens Archief, 1, p. 208, and Jaarboekje van den Ned. Adel, 1892-93.

B. PORTRAIT OF A YOUNG MAN. Etching by Willem de Leeuw, Bartsch II, p. 133, n° 47.

R. J. [= Rembrandt inventor].

A reversed copy bears, according to Bartsch, loc. cit., the inscription : S. Savery. Rembrandt inventor.

There is an example in the Amsterdam Print Room among S. Savery's works, but it does not bear his name.

Another copy, also reversed, is inscribed :

This head is the companion-piece to the Mariana of No. 23. C.

C. BUST OF AN ORIENTAL. Etching by Johan George van Vliet, Bartsch, n° 24.

R. van Rijn inv. JG. van Vliet fecit 1633.

An engraved copy, reversed, is inscribed :

The original picture, painted in 1630, represents Rembrandt's father, and is in the Ferdinandum at Innsbrück, Bode, n° 20.

D. BUST OF AN ORIENTAL. Etching by Johan George van Vliet, Bartsch n° 20.

JG. v. vliet fec. R. inventor.

An engraved copy, reversed, bears the inscription :

Mahomet. R. Inuentor F. L. D. Ciartres excudit.

Rembrandt's original has disappeared. This plate and the two following are undated, and are only assigned to the year 1633 on account on their analogies with the other similar prints by van Vliet.

E. BUST OF AN OLD MAN, LOOKING DOWN. Etching by Johan George van Vliet, Bartsch, n° 25.

R. in.

According to Bartsch. The Amsterdam impression has only R. According to Linck (in Rovinski), the second state bears the address of Ram.

An engraved copy, reversed, is inscribed :

F. BUST OF A MAN, LAUGHING. Etching by Johan George van Vliet, Bartsch, n° 21.

JG. v. Vliet fec. R. jnventor.

An engraved copy, reversed, is inscribed :

The original picture, probably a study of the master himself, was painted about 1629-30, and is in the Hague Gallery, Bode, n° 12.

No. 29. JOHANNES WTENBOGAERT PAINTED
BY REMBRANDT 1633
April 13

13 April 1633 Uügeschildert door Rembrandt voor Abraham Anthonisz.

Memoranda by J. Wtenbogaert, manuscript in the library of the Remonstrant Seminary at Leyden (University Library), n° 66. First published by Professor Joan Tideman, De Stichting der Remonstrantsche Broederschap, II, p. 191.

This portrait has hitherto been identified, even by the present writer, with a life-size half-length in the Stockholm Museum (Bode, n° 95). But now that the fully signed three-quarters length, dated 1633, in Lord Rosebery's possession at Mentmore Park (Rode, Supplement) has been brought to light, it seems extremely probable that this work is the original mentioned by the sitter. Compared with this, the Stockholm picture has no absolutely convincing evidences of authenticity; it is painted on canvas, is undated, and signed in a suspicious, or at any rate, an unusual manner.

Abraham Anthonisz was an earnest adherent of the Remonstrants and a friend of Wtenbogaert's. Cf. Prof. Joan Tideman's work, quoted above, and Dr. B. Tideman In. Portretten van Johannes Wtenbogaert, in Oud Holland, 1903, xxi, p. 125 et seq.

No. 30. INSCRIPTION UNDER REMBRANDT'S
DRAWING OF SASKIA VAN UYLENBURCH 1634
June 8

dit is naer myn huysvrou geconterfeyt do sy 21 jaer oud was den derden dach als wy getrouwt waeren den 8 Junyns 1633

First mentioned in the catalogue of the Jeron. Tonneman sale at Amsterdam, 1754. Printed in facsimile on the numerous reproductions of the original, a silver-point drawing on parchment, now in the Berlin Print Room. Etching by W. Unger in Lützow's Zeitschrift für bildende Kunst, 1870, p. 237, heliogravure in Lippmann's Handzeichnungen von Rembrandt van Rijn, n° 6, etc, etc.

The translation of the inscription is as follows : This is drawn from my wife when she was 21 years old, on the third day after our troth-plighting (i. e. our engagement), June 8, 1633. The use of the imperfect tense, « was » and « waeren », might have led us to suppose that the inscription was added at a later date, did it not appear to be absolutely contemporary with the drawing, and to have been written at the same time. In addition to this, the space under the portrait was obviously intended for an inscription from the first.

The expressions « huysvrouw » and « getroudt » have been stumbling-blocks since the publication of Vosmaer's book, owing to the incorrect interpretation he gave to them (p. 132), for Rembrandt and Saskia were not married till June 22, 1634. These difficulties are, however, easily solved, if we consider that « huysvrouw » was often used in the seventeenth century as the equivalent of betrothed, and « getroudt » as the equivalent of plighted or engaged (1).

No. 31. INSCRIPTIONS ON ENGRAVINGS
AFTER REMBRANDT

A. BUST OF AN OLD MAN, LOOKING DOWN. Etching by Johan George van Vliet, Bartsch, n° 23.

Re. Inuentor JG. v. vliet fec. 1634.
The original has disappeared.

B. BUST OF A MAN. Etching by Johan George van Vliet, Bartsch, n° 19.

Re. Inuentor JG. v. vliet fec. 1634.

In the second state the address of C. Danckerts is added.

An engraved copy, reversed, is inscribed : L'Épauque de la Reijne de Candaces, Re. Inuentor F. L. D. Ciartres excedit.

1. There are, for instance, several engraved portraits of the Countess Henrietta Catharina of Nassau, daughter of Frederick Henry, in the inscriptions of which she is described as « getrouwt met » and « Gemalinne van » Count Enno of East Friesland, though their marriage never took place, as the engagement was broken off. (Muller, Nederlandsche Historieplaten, n° 1836 c. and 1836, 2 ; Atlas van Stolk, n° 1857).

The original picture, a portrait of the artist himself, painted in 1629, is in the Ducal Museum at Gotha, Bode, n° 13.

C. A MAN IN DISTRESS. Etching by Johan George van Vliet, Bartsch n° 22.

Re. Inuentor JG. v. vliet fec. 1634.

In the second state the address of Dancker Danckerts is added.

An engraved copy, reversed, is inscribed : Heralclitus Re. Inuentor F. L. D. Ciartres excedit.

The original is the principal figure in the Judas bringing back the Thirty Pieces of Silver in Baron de Schickler's collection, Paris, Bode n° 10.

See also above, under No. 18.

D. PORTRAIT OF ADMIRAL PHILIPS VAN DORP. Etching by Salomon Savery.

Inscription on the oval : Jonck' Philips van Dorp Ridder etc. L. Admirael van Hollandt ende Westvrieslandt.

Inscription below : Four lines of Dutch verse : Hij die van al—blijct in Haer ooghen, A° 1634. S. Savry Exc. Remb. v. Rijn.

The original picture has disappeared. Vosmaer (p. 505) erroneously attempted to identify it with the portrait of a young man in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg, n° 828 in the catalogue.

No. 32. DEDICATION OF ENGRAVINGS BY REMBRANDT TO J. C. SYLVIUS About 1634

First published by W. Eckhoff, De Vrouw van Rembrandt, 1862, p. 39<sup>1</sup>.

This dedication appears in Rembrandt's own handwriting on the reverse of an impression of the etched portrait of Jan Cornelis Sylvius of the year 1634 (Bartsch n° 266), which is still in the possession of a member of the van Lennep family, descendants of Sylvius. The three other impressions alluded to have disappeared.

The inscription is a strong external evidence of the genuineness of the plate, which has been mistakenly challenged.

For the sitter, see under our Nos. 34 and 43.

No. 33. INSCRIPTION BY REMBRANDT 1634
IN BURCHARD GROSSMANN JUNIOR'S ALBUM June

*Een vroom gemoet [A pious mind]
Acht een voor goet [Prizes honour above wealth].
Rembrandt.
Amsterdam 1634.*

On the opposite page Rembrandt drew a small head of a man in a cap, akin in style to the painted Rabbis of this period, such as the pictures at Woburn Abbey (Bode n° 138), Chatsworth (199), Derby House (203), and Hampton Court (201).

First published in facsimile in the catalogue of Count Ludwig Paar's collection, sold at Vienna, February 20, 1896 (p. 61 of the catalogue, under the number 259).

The lot containing this and three other albums, was bought at this sale by the Royal Library of the Hague. The autograph and the drawing were fac-similed in the report of this institution for the year 1897.

Burchard Grossmann, junior, was a native of Weimar, and paid a visit to Holland from May to the middle of July, 1634. Rembrandt is the only artist who is represented among the contributors to the 144 pages of the album. Hendrick Uylenburgh, with whom Rembrandt was living at the time, wrote in the album June 18, 1634: Middelmaet hout staet [moderation wears well], hendrick Uylenburgh consthandler in amsterdam. The other Amsterdam entries, as far as they are dated, belong to June 17-21, 1634.

No. 34. REMBRANDT'S MARRIAGE

§ 1. Rembrandt, aged 26, living in the Breestraat, appears before the commissary of marriages, and declares that his mother consents to his union. § 2. The preacher, Jan Cornelis [Sylvius] appears in like manner as the cousin of the bride, Saskia V[an] uylenburgh, born at Leeuwarden, aged 21, living in the parish of St. Anne, Bilt. § 3. Sylvius promises to produce Saskia's legal inscription before the third publication of the banns. § 4. The consent of Rembrandt's mother is duly notified in a notarial document (our No. 35).

Saskia, § 3 aennemende voor't derde gebodt inne te brengen wettelijke inteekeninge van de voorn. Saskia.*

§ 4. In margine: Des moeders consent is goet nede gebracht, blijkende by Acte Notarieel.

Rembrandt Harmansz van Rijn

First published from the Extraordinaris Trouw-Register of Amsterdam, by W. Eekhoff, De Vrouw van Rembrandt, in Europa, 1862, p. 17, and by Dr. P. Scheltema, Aenistels Oudheid, 1863, v, p. 199.

The document had already been transcribed in the Kronyk van het Historisch Gezelschap te Utrecht, 1849, v, pp. 60, 61, from an extract from the Pui-aan-teekeningboeken der stad Amsterdam, 1578-1649. These were merely an abridged transcription of the original Puiboecken and Extraordinaris Trouw-Register, and as the latter are extant, were of no value as authorities (Scheltema, Rembrandt, p. 51).

Either through carelessness or vanity, Rembrandt here represented himself as a year younger than he actually was (born July 15, 1606).

Jan Cornelis was the preacher J. C. Sylvius, mentioned under No. 32. He was cousin to Saskia by his marriage with Aaltje van Uylenburgh. Cf. also No. 43.

No. 35. THE CONSENT OF REMBRANDT'S MOTHER TO HIS MARRIAGE

June 14

§ 1. On June 14, 1634, Neeltgen Willemsdr. van Zuytbrouck, widow of Harman Gerritsz van Rhijn, appears before the notary Adriaen Paets at Leyden and declares that she gives her free consent to the marriage of her son with Saskia van Uylenburgh, § 2. The banns may therefore be published and the formal ceremony may thereafter take place. § 3. In the presence of her son Adriaen, whom she has chosen as her coadjutor in the matter, she promises not to rescind this permission. § 4. She further declares that she approves the action already taken by Rembrandt in giving notice of his approaching marriage and causing his banns to be published without her knowledge. § 5. She accordingly thanks the commissaries of marriages for having granted the necessary permission, and begs them to account the permission as no less valid than if she herself had been present.

§ 1. *Op huyden, den 14 Junij ano XVI ende vier en dertich compareerde voor mij Adriaen Paets not. pub. mitsgaders voor den getuygen naergenompt d'eerbare Neeltgen willemsdr. van zuytbrouck wedue ende boedelhouster van harman gerritsz van Rhijn, burgeresse deser stede, my notario wellbekent, dewelcke verlaerde vrywillig geconsenteert ende toegestaan te hebben — zulex zy consenteert, toestaet, ende overgeeft bij desen — dat d'cers. From the protocol of the notary Adr. Paets of Leyden, anno 1634, folio cxiiij; now published for the first time. The existence of this document was indicated by the marginal note on No. 34.

The old woman, who had signed her name to her will in 1621, attested this and the following document with a cross only.

No. 36. REMBRANDT'S MOTHER'S WILL

§ 1. On June 14, 1634, Neeltgea Willemsdokter van Zuytbroeck, widow of Harman Gerritsz van Rhijn, appears before the notary Adriaen Paets at Leyden. Taking her age into account, she is fairly well, can stand and walk, retains her memory and all her senses and faculties, and has them all under control, as far as it is possible to judge from outward appearances. § 2. She declares it to be her last will that her son, Adriaen Harmansz van Rhijn, should pay back to his brothers and sisters at four stated periods, the first of which should be one year after her death, the sum of money he had received from her, over and above his due share of his father's estate. There is a document dealing with the matter in her inventory. The son is not required to pay any interest on this sum, and his brothers and sisters are not to deduct anything from his portion on this account, but he must either give them a security for it, or a mortgage on his house. § 3. The testatrix further declares, that should any of her children die before her, leaving childrea under age, she has appointed guardians for the latter in a second document, and that such guardians are to act on their behalf ia conjunctioa with her surviving children who are of age. But these guardians are only to intervene after the estate of the testatrix has been divided amoag her heirs. The Chamber of Orphans and all other public officials are excluded from the guardianship.

First quoted from the protocol of the notary Adriaen Paets of Leyden, fol. cxvij, by Rammelman Elsevier, loc. cit. under No. 4.

The will was made at the time of Rembrandt's marriage, and probably with reference thereto. The case provided for by the will did not arise. For Adriaen van Rijn's financial relations to his mother's estate, cf. the documents mentioned under Nov. 2, 1640. As this will has but a remote connection with Rembrandt, we give an abstract of it only.

The second document mentioned in § 3 exists in the form of an unsigned and undated draft in the protocol of the notary A. Paets. It contains exactly the same provisions concerning the guardianship of orphan grandchildren, and appoints Dominicus Jansz van der Phym and the notary Adriaen Paets to act as guardians in conjunction with the children who are of age.

June 22

Aaaa 1634 den 22 Junij sijn ia't houwelijck bevestigt Rembraet Hermens van Rhyn tot Amsterdam woaachtigh

Saskia van Ulenborgh, au tot Francker woonachtigh.

First published from the register of the Reformed Congregation in the parish of St. Anne, by Dr. P. Scheltema, Rembrandt, p. 51, and the Friesche Volksalmaach, 1853, p. 129, 130. Cf. also Navorscher, 1875, xxv, p. 261, and Eekhoff, De Vrouw van Rembrandt, p. 161.

The last named article gives the fullest information concerning Rembrandt's wife.

According to this, Saskia, baptised on August 2, 1612, was the youngest daughter of Rombertus Uyenburgh, who died June 3, 1624, and his wife Sjukje Osinga, who died June 17, 1619.

Besides Saskia, the couple had the following children:

1. Rombertus, who became an advocate in 1614, and in 1625 married Ildtje Hannia, widow of Hieronymus Abbema. He died 1631.

2. Ulricus, who became an advocate in 1623 and married Maaike van Orens.

3. Idsert, baptised April 1, 1608, mentioned 1642 as an officer.

4. Jeltje, who married Doede Ockama. He died in 1620, and Jeltje in 1637.

5. Hendrikje, who married the painter Wybrand de Geest in 1622. She died after 1682, and her husband after 1659 (?).

6. Antje, who married the Professor of theology, Johannes Maccovius of Franeker, on September 27, 1626. She died November 9, 1633, her husband June 24, 1644.

7. Hiskje, who married, September 23, 1627, Gerrit van Loo, Secretary to the commune of Bildt, where he died, December 26, 1641. Saskia was married from her house (?).

8. Titia, baptised January 18, 1605, married the commissary François Coopal of Vlissingen, and died there, June 5, 1641.

No. 38. POWER OF ATTORNEY GIVEN
BY REMBRANDT TO HIS BROTHER-IN-LAW, GERRIT VAN LOO

Rembrandt, merchant, of Amsterdam, appears on July 22, 1634, before the notary J. van Aller Andriesz at Rotterdam, and declares that he has given Gerrit van Loo authority to collect debts and receive interest throughout Friesland, on his behalf, as husband and guardian of Saskia Uylenburch.

Op huijden 22 July anno 1634 compareerde Sr. Rembrant van Ryn, coopman te Amsterdam, dewelcke bekende te hebben geconstitueert... Gerrit van Loo, secretaris op het Bildt in Friesland, omme uutten name ende van wegten hem compt., als man ende voocht ende getrouwt hebbende Saskia Ulenburch, syne luysvrouw, te manen, innen ende ontfangen, van alle syne compts. debiteuren, die in eenighe steden, dorpen, plaetsen ofte vleecken in Friesland voors. wonende sijn, alle soodanighe penninghe, renttes ofte Intressen, sulcx als hem compt. van deselve sijn competerende, tsij waer uut, ofte van wat oorsaeke desele zouden moghen spruytten, quitantie van sijnem ontfang te passeren, etc.

First published by P. Haverkorn van Rijsewijk

1. Date on the female portrait in the Rijksmuseum. Eckhoff gives the erroneous date 1643.

2. Saskia also appeared on July 12, 1635, as witness at the baptism of a child of this sister. Cf. Nieuwe Friesche Volksmanak, 1853, p. 137. Eckhoff, loc. cit. p. 187.

from the protocol of the notary J. van Aller Andriesz, xiii, 302, in Oud Holland, 1890, viii, p. 208 :

Enige aantekeningen betreffende schulders, wonende buiten Rotterdam uit het archief te Rotterdam.

It is a curious, and so far unexplained fact, that this document was drawn up at Rotterdam, and that Rembrandt is described in it as a merchant. Gerrit van Loo was Rembrandt's brother-in-law by his marriage with Hiskje van Uylenburch. For the Frisian debts, cf. the documents of the lawsuits in 1638, 1643, and 1646.

No. 39. NOTES BY REMBRANDT UPON PICTURES PAINTED BY HIS PUPILS AND SOLD BY HIM About
1635

On the back of a red chalk drawing of Susanna in the Bath, which passed into the Berlin Print Room with the Beckerath Collection, the following notes, cut away in parts, appear in Rembrandt's writing :

Syn vaendraeger synde	15.—.—
[c] en floora verhandelt	4. 6.—
fardynandus van syn werck verhandelt
aen ander werck van syn voorneemen
den Abraham een floora
Leenderts floora is verhandelt tegen	5.—.—

First published by Bode, Rembrandt, vol. 111, p. 18. The drawing on the back of which the notes appear represents Susanna with the Elders, and may be referred to the oil picture of 1637, in the Mauritshuis, though it also contains the chief elements of the larger composition of 1647, in the Berlin Museum. The drawing is signed with the monogram R. f. below on the right.

The notes obviously refer to the works of pupils, sold by Rembrandt. The two pupils in question are clearly Fardynandus Bol and Leendert Cornelisz van Beyeren. They had probably made copies of some of Rembrandt's compositions. The Standard-Bearer may have been Baron Gustave de Rothschild's picture, in Paris (Bode, n° 206), painted in 1635, the Flora, that in the Duke of Buccleuch's collection, London (Bode, n° 186), painted in 1633, and the Abraham, perhaps the Sacrifice of Isaac at St. Petersburg (Bode, n° 207), painted in 1635. A school-copy of the last named work, painted in 1636, is known to exist, and is discussed under our No. 47. On the other hand, certain well-known copies of the Rothschild Standard-Bearer (in the Cassel Gallery and in a private collection in America), and of the Buccleuch Flora (Lockett Agnew and Miss Ellice), can hardly be referred to in these notes, as they are considerably later in date.

The sense of the notes was probably as follows : [I have sold] his Standard-Bearer, it fetched 15 guilders.

[I have] sold a Flora, it fetched 4 guilders, 6 stuivers.

Of Ferd. Bol's works, I have sold to the amount of....

Of other work he had in hand I have already sold to the amount of....

[Further], the Abraham, and a Flora....

Leendert [van Beyerens] Flora is sold for 5 guilders.

The prices here recorded do not give a very exalted idea of the large profits Rembrandt is supposed to have made out of the works of his pupils.

For L. C. van Beyerens and other copies by him after Rembrandt, cf. the document of May 7, 1638.

In the first entry, Rembrandt gives as his address Hendrick van Uylenburch's house. He was living there already on July 26, 1632 (cf. above, No. 25), and seems to have stayed on after his marriage, and until he makes his appearance at the beginning of 1636 in the Nieuwe Doelenstraat. Cf. under No. 47.

Barent van Someren, whose property was sold on this occasion, was the landlord of "Het Schilt van Vranckrijck", known to us from Adriaen Brouwer's biography.

No. 45. INSCRIPTION ON AN ENGRAVING AFTER REMBRANDT

The etching by W. de Leeuw, Bartsch, n, p. 131, n° 43, after Rembrandt's aged Tobit and his wife, bears the inscription :

Rembr. van Ryn inv. WdLeeuw fecit, and two Latin distiches : Paupere sub tecto — honorque tibi. C. G. Plempius.

Subsequent states bear the address of Clemens de Jonghe.

The original has disappeared. It seems to have been a companion picture to that etched in 1755 by A. de Marcenay, The Healing of the aged Tobit, in the Duke of Arenberg's gallery at Brussels, painted in 1636, Bode, Plate 216.

No. 46. INSCRIPTION ON THE STUDIO-PICTURE, ABRAHAM'S SACRIFICE

Rembrandt verandert en overgeschildert 1636.

The picture is in the Old Pinacothek, Munich. Facsimile of the inscription in the catalogue, under n° 333.

The original by Rembrandt, of which this picture is a replica with variations by a pupil (cf. Bode, Plates 207 and 208), is in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg. It is dated a year earlier : 1635. It is now impossible to determine who was the author of the composition at Munich. Among the well-known painters who were Rembrandt's pupils about 1635-36, the names of Govaert Flink and Ferdinand Bol suggest themselves in this connection.

Other examples of the works of pupils retouched by Rembrandt, and bearing some inscription to this effect, are the following in his inventory of 1656, and the three Oriental Heads mentioned under No. 40 :

- A. No. 25. A Still-Life, retouched by Rembrandt.
- B. No. 27. A Vanitas, retouched by Rembrandt.
- C. No. 28. A Vanitas with a Sceptre, retouched by the same.
- D. No. 33. A picture of a Samaritan, retouched by Rembrandt.
- E. No. 120. A Vanitas, retouched by Rembrandt.

None of these pictures can be identified at present, but on the other hand the Entombment in the Dresden Gallery (n° 1566 in the Catalogue), is generally and rightly recognised as a school-copy retouched by Rembrandt (it is signed Rembrandt f. 1653), after the original painted by the master in 1630 for Prince Frederick Henry (now in the Old Pinacothek, Munich, n° 330).

No. 47. REMBRANDT'S FIRST LETTER
TO HUYGENS

§ 1. Rembrandt begs Huygens to tell Prince Frederick Henry that he is busy finishing the three pictures of the Passion ordered by the Prince: the Entombment, the Resurrection and the Ascension. § 2. They are uniform with the Crucifixion and the Descent from the Cross. § 3. Of the three, the Ascension is finished, the other two are half-finished. § 4. Rembrandt asks if his Excellency would like to have the finished picture at once, or would prefer to have all three together, and begs for an answer to this question. § 5. Rembrandt requests Huygens' acceptance of something lately painted by him, and hopes this offer will be taken in good part. § 6. He is living in the New Doelenstraat near the Lyons Bureau.

§ 1. Myn heer myn goetgunstige heer Huygens hoope dat U E. gaerne syn Excellensy sal aenseggen dat ick seer naerstigh doende den met die drie passystucken voorts met bequaemheyt of te maeken die syn Excellensy nu selfs heeft geordyneert, een graf legging ende een verrysenis en een Hemelwaert Christy. § 2. de selvyge acoorderen met opdoening en afdoeninge vant chruys Christij. § 3. van welcken drie voornoemden stuckens een van opgemaecht is daer Christus ten Hemel opvaert ende die ander twee ruym half gedaen sijn. § 4. en soo syn Excellensy dit opgemaecte steek voor eerst gelieft te hebben dan ofte die drie 't seffens.

Address: Myn heer, mijn Ed. Heer Huygens raet ende secretarus van sijn Excellensij, den Haeghe (port.)

Dated by a different hand: Feb. 1636.

Coat of arms: Two objects, arranged as a St. Andrew's cross, with figures between the arms of the cross; crest, a swan.

The original letter, first published by Vosmaer, first edition, p. 113, second edition, p. 188, was in the famous Verstolk van Soelen collection, and was sold by auction in November, 1867, for 219 gilders. In 1871 the firm of Martinus Nijhoff, of the Hague, sold it to Ellis and Green of London. All enquiries as to the ultimate fate of the document have proved fruitless.

No. 48. REMBRANDT'S SECOND LETTER
TO HUYGENS

§ 1. After cordial greetings to his correspondent, Rembrandt proposes soon to follow his letter in person, to see how the picture he has painted agrees with the rest. § 2. As regards price, he thinks he certainly deserves £ 200 (1200 gilders). § 3. But he will be content with whatever the Prince gives him. § 4. He begs Huygens to take this freedom of speech in good part. § 5. and he will not fail to requite his kindness if possible. § 6. The picture will be seen to the greatest advantage in the Prince's gallery, as the light there is very strong.

§ 1. Myn heer naer vriendelicke groetenissen soo ist dat ick goet vinde dat ick eorts volgen sal om te besien hoedat het stucken met de rest voucht.

Fac-simile of Rembrandt's second Letter to Huygens.
DOCUMENT No. 48.

sent, as they are not all dated, and Rurnet mis-read the date of one (our No. 69).

The order of the two letters that follow each other above is adopted for this reason: in them Rembrandt speaks of the Prince as His Excellency, whereas from the third letter (our No. 63) onwards, he uses the title His Highness, which had been bestowed on Frederick Henry in the interval.

The first of these two letters has hitherto been given as the second, and vice versa (Vosmaer, Michel, etc.). In the first Rembrandt says that, continuing the series of which he had already painted two pictures for the Prince (the Crucifixion and the Descent from the Cross), he is at work on three others, one of which, the Ascension, is almost finished. He asks if he shall send this, or wait till the two others are also finished. The supplementary date, February, 1636, was apparently correct, and was probably added by Huygens.

To this Huygens obviously replied, that he could send the finished picture, and asked the price.

Rembrandt hereupon wrote that he would soon come himself to see how the picture, despatched in the interval, harmonised with the two earlier examples, and named his price. The letter therefore probably dates from February or March, 1636.

The pictures of the Passion mentioned in these letters passed with the rest of those in the Düsseldorf Gallery to the Munich Pinacothek. They are:

No. 326. The Descent from the Cross, with the (obviously forged) signature C. Rembrandt f.

No. 327. The Crucifixion.

No. 328. The Ascension, signed Rembrandt f. 1636.

No. 329. The Resurrection, signed Rembrandt f. 1639.

No. 330. The Entombment.

We shall return to the two last pictures in our remarks on Rembrandt's later letters to Huygens.

None of these works are mentioned in any of the inventories of the Orange residences, several of which are extant. They first appear in 1751, in Van Gool's transcription of the catalogue of the Düsseldorf Gallery, in the Nieuwe Schouburg der Nederlantsche Kunstschilders, vol. II, p. 531 et seq. This catalogue records the state of the collection before the death of the Elector Johann Wilhelm in 1716<sup>(1)</sup>.

The pictures probably remained in the possession of the Orange family till the death of William III in 1702. From him Frederick I. of Prussia inherited inter alia the four principal palaces in and near the Hague, with their inventories<sup>(2)</sup>. Many of the art treasures were sold from these in the course of time; Rembrandt's pictures were probably of the number, and we may therefore assume that they came to Düsseldorf between 1702 and 1716.

The expression "van myn jongste werck" in § 5 of the first letter probably refers to some etchings, which Rembrandt wished to present to Huygens.

Rembrandt's domicile near the "Lyonaens boreel in de Nicuw Doelstraat" is only known to us from this document. It is not known what the "Lyonaens boreel" (Lyons Bureau) was. For his former lodging see above, No. 42.

The second letter speaks of a gallery of the Prince's in which the light was strong. This was probably at Honselaarsdijk. We know from an inventory of the year 1697, that there was a gallery there at the time. If it was not this, the reference can only have been to that of the Nieuburgh at Rijswijk.

No. 49. REMBRANDT'S PORTRAIT OF NICOLAES RUTS

March 16

The following item occurs in the inventory of the goods of Joffrou Susannah Ruts, widow of Joannes Boddens, constituting her separate estate on her marriage with Mr. Pieter van der Hagen, sometime member of the Council of India:

't Contrefeytsel van Nicolaes Ruts by Rembrandt gedaen.

From the file of the notary L. Lamberti of Amsterdam; first mentioned by A. Bredius in the periodical Der Sammler of July 1, 1891.

Susannah Ruts, born 1598, was the daughter of Rembrandt's sitter and of Cornelia Rausan. She married Jan Boddens (b. 1597, d. February, 1634), in 1619, and Mr. Pieter van der Hagen in 1636.

The portrait, painted in 1631, and now in the Pierpont Morgan Collection (Bode, Plate 51), remained in the possession of the Romswinkel family, descendants of the Ruts, till about 1800. The identity of the picture and the name of the sitter are vouched for by various old drawings from the original, among others one by A. Delfos in the collection of Dr. Jur. C. W. J. J. Pape of the Hague, with the inscription: "Het portret van Nicolaes Ruts,

1. The Alte Hof (now the Royal Palace), the Oranjezaal (Huis ten Bosch), the Nieuburgh at Rijswijk (demolished), and the castle of Honselaarsdijk (demolished).

1. The pictures are described as: "alle by een vergadert door dien alomberoenden en voortreffelijken vorst".

levensgroot door Rembrandt van Rijn 1632, (sic!) A. Delfos 1799 thans bij den heer Joost Romswinkel te Leiden", and another by W. v. Mieris in the possession of Jhr. Mr. C. H. Backer of Amsterdam.

The pictures that formed part of Susannah Ruts' dowry (among others, examples of Pieter Stalpaert, Hondecoeter, Pieter Willemsz Metselaer, Porcellis and Colijns) were valued by the presidents of the Amsterdam Guild of St. Luke, Dirk Pietersz Wittepaert and Gillis d'Hondecoeter. Rembrandt's picture, however, being a family portrait, was not included in the valuation.

No. 50. WAGER CONCERNING CERTAIN ENGRAVINGS BY REMBRANDT

§ 1. On March 31, 1636, Jacob de Wet bet C. Coelenbier that the Schenkenschans (entrenchment) would not be taken by the Gueux (i. e. the Dutch) by the 30th of June of that year. § 2. Both parties sign their names. § 3. Coelenbier stakes a tulip called the Lyons, De Wet 24 carolus guilders. § 4. De Wet further, having sold Coelenbier a print by Albert Dürer and two prints by Rembrandt, for which he was to have received 3.10.0 guilders, declares that Coelenbier shall keep them for nothing if he wins the wager, and shall pay the price agreed upon if he loses.

§ 1. bl. 62. o Anno 1636 den lesten maert met Corn. Coelenbier gewet te weten, dat seenckenschans den lesten Juni niet gues en sal sijn, t welck hy contrary gewet heeft.

§ 2 (w. g.) Cornelis Coelenbier Jacob Willemsz de Wet.

§ 3. Daerop hy myn een Lyon sal leveren; die om te draegen staet inde ouiellis tuyn, daer tegen ick geset heb 24 carolus gl.

§ 4. noch een prentien van Aelbert Daer vercoft op deselvte contdytsy en noch twee prentiens van Rembrant, daer op hy myn 3—10—0 gl. sal geven of hy sal deselvte voor niets hebben (?).

First published under the heading: Een paar aanteekeningen uit het schetsboekje van Jacob de Wet, in Oud Holland, 1886, IV, p. 300, Biografische Aanteekeningen, verzameld door Mr. A. D. de Vries Azn.

Jacob de Wet was the well-known Haarlem painter, the elder of the name; Cornelis Coelenbier was probably a relation of the landscape painter, Johannes Coelenbier.

1. Cf. with a similar wager made the next day between the same persons, Oud Holland, IV, p. 300.

The tulip craze was then at its height, and brought about a commercial crisis in 1637. From paragraphs 3 and 4 we gather that a tulip-bulb was valued at 24 guilders, whereas a print by Albert Dürer and two by Rembrandt were only worth half of 3.10.0 guilders = 1 gilder, 15 stuivers. "Ouiellis tuin" probably meant, according to Mr. Gonnet, Keeper of the Haarlem Archives: ou[de] Jelis tuin, that is, the garden of old Jilles or Gilles, a tulip-grower famous in his day, and now forgotten. Jacob de Wet lost his wager, for the Schenkenschans (near Emmerich) was taken by the Gueux on April 29, 1636, after a siege of nine months.

Extracts from the above were first published by Mr. Ch. M. Dozy, Veilingen van schilderijen in het begin van de zeventiende eeuw, in Obreens Archief vol. vi, p. 29 et seq. Nos. 42, 52 and 56 are similar documents.

Rembrandt's purchases amounted in all to 133 guilders, 2 stuivers. Towards the end of the three weeks that the sale lasted, Rembrandt's name disappears from the list of purchasers, and is replaced by that of Leendert Cornelisz, who is expressly mentioned as his pupil<sup>(1)</sup>. We may fairly assume that he was buying on Rembrandt's behalf. He spent 655 guilders 10 stuivers, 637 guilders 10 stuivers of the total on an art book by Lucas van Leyden<sup>(2)</sup>. Taking into account the current prices of engravings at this period, we must suppose this to have been a fairly complete collection of the engraver's work, together perhaps with a number of his drawings.

Jan Basse, the deceased owner of this extensive collection, was probably the elder painter of that name, born at Lille about 1571 (Oud Holland, iii, p. 60).

Govert Jansz, alias Mijneer, was a landscape painter, famous in his day, and eulogised by Van Mander, though now quite unknown. Rembrandt at the time of his bankruptcy owned two works by him, n<sup>o</sup> 44 and 107 in the inventory.

The meaning of the entry is not very clear. It seems probable that Troyanus de Magistris commissioned Uyl to make purchases for him at a sale of the latter's own pictures, and to be guided by Rembrandt's advice in the matter. The two received jointly the sum of two and a half guilders for their trouble. Documents published in Oud Holland, v, p. 231, show that De Magistris owned a picture by Uyl in 1650. Cf. also other documents there given for this once celebrated but now forgotten artist.

First published loc. cit. under No. 53.

It appears from this document that Rembrandt had bought a picture by Rubens of Hero and Leander, on which De Magistris had advanced him the sum of 424 odd guilders, either the whole or a part of the purchase-money, retaining the picture as security.

About the year 1644 Rembrandt sold the picture to Lodewyk van Ludick for 530 guilders. Cf. the statement of the latter published in Oud Holland, 1885, iii, p. 74. According to Rooses, L'Œuvre de Rubens, vol. iii, p. 107, the work has disappeared, and is known only by two copies, one of which is in the Dresden Gallery.

No. 55. REMBRANDT'S LAWSUIT IN RESPECT
OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW'S ESTATE

It appears from the "Register der Civile Sententien van den Hove van Friesland" in the state archives at Leeuwarden, that Dr. Gerardus Loo, husband and guardian of Hische Ulenburch, representative of Rembrandt van Rijn of Amsterdam, guardian of his wife Saske Ulenburch, and Idzert Ulenburch, heirs to three-eighths of the estate of Dr. Rombartus Ulenburch and his wife, Stuckien Aesingha, jointly bring an action against the married couple, Dr. Albertus Loo and Neeltje Rommerts, and against Juffrouw Hiss van Emingha, widow of Haringh van Sytma.

Ulenburch's heirs claim from their opponents the sum of 604 gold guilders, 4 stuivers and 9 penningen as the purchase-money of an estate in the Frisian commune of Rijperkerck, known as the Ulenburch-state, two-fifths of the total having fallen due on May 1, 1634, and three-fifths on May 1, 1635.

The defendants admit the debt, but maintain that they are not bound to pay until they have received the deeds of sale and title-deeds for which they stipulate; they further plead that Rombartus Ulenburch left Idzert Ulenburch's property in trust, and that Dr. Gerardus Loo owes Dr. Feykens a sum of money. If therefore, they pay over the price of the property now, they fear they may be called upon to pay again later, and it is for Loo to prove that they have no grounds for such fears. They offer to pay the money, if legal guarantees are given them with regard to the trust and to Dr. Loo's debtors; they deny, however, that they are liable for interest on the deferred payment.

The court confirmed an interim judgment of April 6, 1636, and on January 30, 1638, ordered the defendants to pay the disputed sum in full, with interest and damages<sup>1</sup>.

First mentioned by Vosmaer, first edition, p. 109<sup>1</sup>; second edition, p. 184<sup>1</sup>. The original document is so long, and its connection with Rembrandt so slight that we have thought it unnecessary to give more than an abstract here.

First published (extracts) by Mr. Ch. M. Dozy, loc. cit. under No. 51. Nos. 42, 51 and 52 are similar documents.

It is evident that Rembrandt was already practising as an art-dealer, either occasionally or professionally. This is the only credible explanation of the fact that he bought dozens of copies of the same print, and even a dozen parcels of one particular print.

No. 57. REMBRANDT'S LAWSUIT IN RESPECT

From the Register quoted under No. 55 it appears that Dr. Gerardus Loo, François Coopal, Rembrandt van Rijn and Dr. Johannes Maccovius, with their common brother-in-law, Edzart Ulenburch, had, on behalf of themselves and of the children of Jeltie Ulenburch, joint-heirs to six-eighths of the estate of Rombert Ulenburch and Siouckien Esinga, brought an action against Dr. Focco Feyckens, the advocate of the bookseller Dirck Alberts of Leeuwarden, and Dr. Ulricus Ulenburch, concerning the sale of a farm in the Frisian village of Niemirdun. Judgment was given in their favour on every count, on March 13, 1638.

The lawsuit has no further bearing on Rembrandt's affairs, and therefore an abstract only of the proceedings is given above. First mentioned by Vosmaer, first edition, p. 109<sup>1</sup>; second edition, p. 184<sup>1</sup>.

No. 58. COPIES OF PICTURES
BY REMBRANDT'S
IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

The following pictures occur in an inventory of the property of the deceased timber-merchant, Cornelisz Aertsz, drawn up on May 7, 1638:

1. een lantschapje [small landscape] copy na Pinas.
2. een copytje na Duyster, sijnde een nachtgen [night-piece].
- 3, 4. 2 vierante schilderijen van Joannes Baers, tot W'trecht, synde 'teene een koocken [kitchen], tander een soldaet met een boer [soldier and peasant].
5. een trony [head] synde een copy nae Rembrant.

7. een vrijster van achteren [young girl, seen from behind].
8. een soldaet, nae Rembrant gecopicert.
9. een vrouwetronie [woman's head], nae Rembrant gecopicert.
10. noch een vrouwetronie, nae Rembrant gecopicert.
11. de kunst, daervan in het Testament mentie wert gemaect, in desen niet gespecificeert, hier pr. memorie.

From the file of the notary L. Lamberti, Amsterdam, first published in Oud Holland, 1887, v. p. 236 by A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, Leendert Cornelisz van Beyerens, discipel van Rembrandt.

The copies mentioned under n<sup>o</sup> 1, 2, 5, 6, 7—10 were probably the work of the deceased owner's son, Leendert Cornelisz van Beyerens, then eighteen years old, mentioned as a pupil of Rembrandt's in the document given under No. 51<sup>(1)</sup>.

1. Cf. also No. 39.

Neither originals nor copies are extant, nor any other works by van Beyerens or the other artists mentioned in the remaining entries. A night-piece (guard-room), by W. C. Duyster, who died shortly before (1635), is to be found in the Dahl collection at Düsseldorf, inter alia.

The Utrecht painter Joannes Baers mentioned under 3, 4, is otherwise quite unknown. The works of art alluded to under 11 as mentioned in the will, and not further specified in the inventory, are enumerated in Oud Holland, v. p. 237.

No. 59. REMBRANDT'S ACTION FOR LIBEL 1638
AGAINST MAYKE AND DR. ALBERTUS 1638
VAN LOO July 16

Judgment of the Supreme Court of Friesland.

§ 1. Dr. Ulricus Ulenburch, advocate, in the name of his brother-in-law, Rembrandt, painter, of Amsterdam, on his own behalf and as guardian of his wife, Saskia van Ulenburch, summons Dr. Albertus van Loo on his own behalf and that of Mayke van Loo, widow of Dr. Adigerus Adius, to appear before the court, forasmuch as the latter did, on July 5, 1637, declare that Saskia had squandered her patrimony in ostentation and display, whereas she and Rembrandt are richly and ex superabundanti provided with means. § 2. It would be impossible for Rembrandt to overlook such a slander, which, thank God, is quite contrary to the truth. § 3. He claims that the defendants be compelled to retract the libel, and farther to pay in compensation 64 gold guilders to Rembrandt in his own name, and the same sum in Saskia's name, or as much more or less as the Court may determine, and also to bear the costs of the action. § 4. To this Mayke van Loo replies, that she knows nothing of what her brother said in her defence and § 5. still less did she give him authority to say anything libellous. § 6. The charge against her is consequently groundless. § 7. Dr. Albertus van Loo lays before the court a copy of the declaration, from which the plaintiff or his counsel have "squeezed out" the libel. § 8. From this it appears, that only Jeltie Ulenburch<sup>(1)</sup> was mentioned in the poem thereof, and if there is anything libellous therein, which the defendant, however, denies, it applies only to Jeltie. § 9. Rembrandt and Saskia are never mentioned, nor did the defendant ever think of them in this connection, nor were the incriminating words used animo injuriandi, but in defence of his widowed sister and his wards. § 10. These the advocate Ulenburch has sued for 400 pounds, a claim the assessor has declared to be unjustifiable to the very last farthing, etc., etc. § 11. Van Loo declares himself ready to swear that he neither mentioned the complainant nor thought of him, much less intended to libel him in any way. If however, Jeltie is an aggrieved party, the advocate Ulenburch has already avenged her, for in a marginal note he turns the incriminating passage against the defendant. The latter would not have thought of complaining of this as libellous, but he will do so, if his own words are so construed, and will claim compensation to the same amount as the complainant. § 12. Should the Court, however, be of opinion, that he has offended in what he wrote, and owes compensation to the complainant, he offers to pay the complainants 8 gold guilders, seeing that they are only a painter and his wife, and private persons. § 13. The defendants jointly and severally petition, however, that the complainant's suit be rejected and that he be condemned in costs. § 14. The Court agrees with this view of the case, and makes an order for payment of their respective costs by each party.

1. Saskia's sister, widow of Doede Ockema from 1620, died October 29, 1637.

From the Register of Civiele Sententien van den Hove van Friesland, first published by Dr. P. Scheltema, in Rembrand, Redevoering over het Leven en de Verdiensten van Rembrand van Rijn, 1853, p. 57-59; a translation in the second French edition, edited by W. Bürger, 1859, p. 43-46, reprinted from the Revue Universelle des Arts of this year, nouvelle édition, 1866, p. 62-66.

This action — the only one of those we know to have taken place in Friesland which Rembrandt lost — is of peculiar interest to us on account of the passages bearing on Rembrandt's life (§ 1, 2, 12), from which we learn :

1<sup>o</sup> That, in the opinion of his adversaries, Rembrandt was squandering his wife's fortune in luxury and ostentation;

2<sup>o</sup> That, in reply to this charge, he declared himself richly and even ex superabundanti provided with means;

3<sup>o</sup> That, on the grounds that Rembrandt was only a painter, and his wife only the wife of a painter, his adversaries considered 8 gold guilders a sufficient sum for damages, should they be condemned to pay these, in place of the 128 gold guilders claimed by the plaintiffs.

We know nothing as to the cause of the lawsuit.

No. 60. BAPTISM OF A CHILD OF REMBRANDT'S

July 22

Among the children who received the sign of the covenant on July 22, 1638, was Cornelia, daughter of Rembrandt and Saskia. Titia van Uylenburch was sponsor. The pastor J. Sylvius was present and baptised the child by the name of Cornelia.

Titia was that sister of Saskia's who married François Coopal of Vlissingen. She and her husband acted as sponsors to all the four children of Bembrandt whose baptisms are recorded, and the one child that survived Saskia was called Titus after her. Rembrandt sketched her occupied with some sewing, probably during one of her occasional visits to her sister and brother-in-law.

No. 64. REMBRANDT BUYS A HOUSE

January 5

§ 1. Christoffel Thijsz and Pieter Beltens, joint-heirs of Pieter Beltens, declare herewith that they have sold, and Bembrandt declares herewith that he has bought, a house and land on the south side of the Breestraat, to wit, the second house beyond the St. Anthoni Bridge, to the west of that belonging to Salvadoro Bodrigues, and to the east of that belonging to Nicolaes Elias, bounded in front by the street, behind by the premises of a chest-maker. § 2. It is to be taken just as it is built and enclosed, or walled in, a freehold without any charges upon it, as is stated in the ancient title-deeds, on which the purchaser may rely. § 3. The purchaser is to take possession of the house on May 1, 1639, on which day the title-deeds are to be handed over. § 4. The price amounts to 13,000 guilders of 20 stuivers. § 5. Of this, 1200 guilders are to be paid on taking possession, another 1200 guilders on November 1, and 850 guilders on May 1, 1640. § 6. The remaining three-quarters of the price are to be paid at the discretion of the purchaser, within the space of five or six years. § 7. He is, however, to pay 5 o/o interest on this deferred settlement, and the instalments may be as large, and may follow one upon another as speedily as he wishes.

The house bought by Rembrandt in January, 1639, still exists. The exterior is almost unchanged, but the interior has been entirely rebuilt, and divided into two portions. Further particulars, with an illustration, are given by Vosmaer, p. 242 (1).

The purchase of this house, which in itself was an evidence of a certain prosperity, became the cause of monetary difficulties from which Rembrandt was never able to extricate himself. He was never able to pay off the purchase-money, and became more and more deeply involved in debt.

The four letters to Huygens, Nos. 66-69 show us the financial straits in which Rembrandt found himself, even immediately after the acquisition of the house.

The Nicolaes Elias mentioned in § 2 was the well-known portrait-painter.

the other the Resurrection, to the great terror of the watch. § 3. Both are finished, and Rembrandt offers to deliver them, § 4. for the delectation of his Highness, as the utmost and most natural animation has been achieved in these pictures, and it is for this reason that they have been so long in hand. § 5. Rembrandt begs Huygens to speak to the Prince about the pictures, and asks whether they are to be sent first to Huygens' house, like the others; he awaits the answer to this question. § 6. As Huygens has once more exerted himself on Rembrandt's behalf in this connection, the artist wishes to send, together with the two pictures, a picture 10 feet long by 8 feet wide as a present for Huygens' own house. § 7. Good wishes for the welfare of his correspondent. § 8. Date and residence: on the Binnen-Amstel, in the house known as the Sugar Bakery, and the address.

Address :

Mijn Heer

Mijn E. Heer van Schuylenburgh

First mentioned by Van Eynden and Van der Willigen, Geschiedenis der vaderlandsche Schilderkunst, 1840, vol. iv, p. 145, and published by Vosmaer from the original in the domestic archives of H. M. the Queen of Holland, first edition, p. 115; second edition, p. 190, with a French translation.

Of Rembrandt's five last letters to Huygens, all written at the beginning of the year 1639, three present no difficulty in connection with their dates, as Rembrandt himself inscribed them with these : January 12 (third letter); January 27 (fifth letter); February 13 (sixth letter).

The letter we give as the fourth (No. 66) was placed by Vosmaer after the one we take as the fifth (No. 67). I think he was mistaken, for the following reasons :

In the third letter, written on January 12, Rembrandt announces the completion of the Entombment and the Resurrection, and asks if he shall send these as he did the earlier pictures, to Huygens' house. He awaits an answer to this question. He further sets forth his intention of presenting a picture 10 by 8 feet in size to Huygens himself.

With the fourth (undated) letter, he sends the two pictures, and asks for each 1000 guilders, or as much less as the Prince wishes to give.

This letter probably crossed one from Huygens, written on January 14, to which Rembrandt replied by a fifth letter on January 27. Huygens had evidently written to say that he did not wish to accept the proffered picture. Rembrandt, however, urges him again to receive the gift, as the first souvenir he has given him. He further begs for speedy payment (1).

He must have been in pressing need of the money, for in a sixth letter of February 13, he repeats his request, and in a seventh he returns somewhat diffidently to the charge, complaining of the treasurer Volbergen, who, in direct contradiction to the statement made by Wittenbogaert, the collector of revenue, declares that he has no money in the exchequer.

This letter must have reached the Hague at latest on February 17, and in consequence of its receipt an order was sent from thence on the same day to Volbergen to make the payment.

Ad § 2. Cf. the remarks relating to the pictures under No. 47. § 6. The only picture now known,

1. For the reason of this request, see No. 64.

Painted before 1639, that approximates to the measurements 10 feet by 8 feet, is, as Vosmaer pointed out, the Blinding of Samson in the Schönborn Gallery at Vienna. This measures 2 m. 87 cm. by 2 m. 38 cm. and is dated 1636 (Bode, Plate 211). Rembrandt must have known that Huygens had just taken possession of his new house on the Plein, for which other painters, among them G. Honthorst, A. Hanneman and D. Seghers had painted pictures. § 8. Although Rembrandt had bought a house for himself on January 5, he was still living on the Binnen Amstel in a house known as the Sugar Bakery. This is no longer to be identified. The title in the address is incorrect. Huygens was Lord of Zuylichem, not of Schuylenburgh. Rembrandt made a correction in the name, but evidently could not get it right. The title in the address is correct on the sixth and seventh letters.

About
January 14

§ 1. Rembrandt asks Huygens' permission (lijcensij) to deliver two pictures, for which he hopes His Highness will be willing to pay not less than 1000 guilders. § 2. If, however, His Highness thinks they are not worth so much, he may give less according to his discretion. § 3. Rembrandt relies absolutely on the Prince's knowledge and discretion; he will abide thankfully by his decision and remains with greetings Huygens' devoted servant. § 4. The expenses for frames and case amount to 44 guilders.

No. 67. REMBRANDT'S FIFTH LETTER
TO HUYGENS

§ 1. Rembrandt expresses his pleasure at the contents of Huygens' letter of January 14, attesting as it does the goodwill of the latter towards himself; he desires to show his friendship by a reciprocal service. § 2. He therefore sends the accompanying canvas against Huygens' wish, hoping that Huygens will not despise this, the first souvenir he has offered him. § 3. The collector of revenue, Wittenbogaert, had been at Rembrandt's house, when he was engaged in packing the two pictures, and had examined them. § 4. He said he could make the payment for them through his office, if the Prince approved. § 5. Rembrandt accordingly begs Huygens, that the money the Prince awards him for the two pictures may be paid to him on the first day of the following month in Amsterdam, which would be a great convenience to him. § 6. He begs for a reply to this, and wishes Huygens and his family all prosperity. § 7. The picture will be seen to the greatest advantage, if it is hung in a strong light, and in such a manner that the spectator can stand at some distance from it.

Together with three of Rembrandt's other letters to Huygens, it was sold on May 30, 1825, at Sotheby's, in London, with the collection of Jhr. C. A. van Sypesteyn: Lot 460, Four letters of Rembrandt van Rhyen, one dated 27th January, 1639, £ 32, 11 sh.

Ad § 2. For the picture sent by Rembrandt against Huygens' wishes, see the comment on No. 65, § 6.

§ 3. The collector Wittenbogaert, brother to the minister mentioned under No. 29, was etched by Rembrandt the same year, 1639 (Bartsch, n° 281), perhaps as an acknowledgment of his services on this occasion.

§ 7. The "picture" — not "pictures" — that should be hung in a strong light, and in such a manner that the spectator should be able to see it from a distance, is the work offered to Huygens (probably the Schönborn Blinding of Samson), and not the Prince's two pictures of the Entombment and the Resurrection, to which the words have so often been applied.

No. 68. REMBRANDT'S SIXTH LETTER

§ 1. Rembrandt expresses his confidence in Huygens; he is in particular convinced that if all is done according to Huygens' wish and to justice, no objection will be raised to the price he asks for the two last pictures. § 2. As regards the pictures already delivered, the price given for them was no more than 600 carolus-guilders a piece. § 3. As it seems evident that his Highness will not be induced to give a higher price, Rembrandt will be content with the same for the two last, if he be further paid the 4½ guilders he spent on the two ebony frames and the little cupboard [or case?]. § 4. He begs that payment may be made to him in Amsterdam on the first day of next month, and hopes that through Huygens' good offices, he may speedily receive his money, for which friendly service he will always be grateful. § 5. He commends Huygens and those dear to him to God, and prays for their continuous health.

First published by Vosmaer from the original now in the Meyer Cohn collection at Berlin, first edition, p. 121; second edition, p. 195 et seq.

The beginning of the letter evidently refers to the fact that the Prince had objected to the proposed price of 1000 guilders per picture, suggested by Rembrandt in his fourth letter. Rembrandt, on the other hand, had already pointed out in his third letter, that he had been obliged to give a good deal of time to these pictures, as they are full of animation and of natural movement. This circumstance, together with the increasing prices Rembrandt was gradually receiving for his works, and his momentary want of money, had induced him to ask 1000 guilders each for the pictures. As, however, he had in his fourth letter, declared that he would be satisfied with a smaller price, he will content himself with 600 guilders.

The expression "de kas" in § 3 is ambiguous. It may mean either the case in which the pictures were packed, although the value of this would hardly have been insisted upon by the painter, or a little shrine or box, in which it was then customary to enclose very valuable pictures. But if we accept this latter reading, it remains inexplicable why only one "kas" should have been sent for the two pictures.

No. 69. REMBRANDT'S SEVENTH LETTER

About February
15-17

§ 1. Rembrandt makes a reluctant appeal to Huygens, at the suggestion of the collector Wittenbogaert, to whom he had complained of the delay in payment, § 2. due to the Treasurer Volbergen, who denies having received the half-yearly taxes. § 3. Wittenbogaert, however, assured him on Wednesday last, that Volbergen had received the taxes regularly each half year, up to date, so that there must be over 4000 caroli at present in the Exchequer. § 4. As therefore circumstances are propitious, Rembrandt begs his gracious lord to give orders that the bill on the Treasury be met forthwith, § 5. so that he may at last receive his well-earned 1244 guilders. § 6. Rembrandt will always endeavour to requite this service on the part of Huygens with reverence, devotion and friendship. § 7. He greets him heartily, and trusts that God may long keep him in good health to his comfort. § 8. Rembrandt is living on the Binnen Amstel, in the Sugar Bakery.

First published from the original in the Albertina, Vienna, by Vosmaer, p. 521; photographed by Braun, facsimiled in Schönbrunner and Meder's, Hauptzeichnungen der Albertina.

The inscription is written on either side of and beneath a hasty pen and ink sketch by Rembrandt of Raphael's famous portrait of Castiglione (1) which, as we know from Sandrart's Teutschen Academie, 1, p. 53 b, was sold by auction at Amsterdam on April 9, 1639. Rembrandt was probably present at the sale, and may have made the sketch in the auction-room. For Rembrandt's use of this sketch in the etching of himself made this year (Bartsch, n° 21), cf. Hofstede de Groot in the Jahrbuch der Kgl. Preuss. Kunstsammlungen, vol. xv, p. 180 et seq. and Oud Holland, ix, p. 72.

According to Sandrart, loc. cit., Lucas van Uffelen's sale took place on April 9. The expression "caergesoen" justifies the inference that he had brought a shipload of Italian pictures to Amsterdam. The Alfonso Lopez mentioned under No. 90 secured the portrait for 3500 guilders, Sandrart having run the price up to 3400 guilders.

No. 72. COPIES AFTER REMBRANDT AMONG THE PROPERTY LEFT BY A CITIZEN OF AMSTERDAM

Among the property left by Aert Coninex, who died in his house on the western side of the Keizersgracht at Amsterdam, and whose inventory, drawn up April 13-17, 1639, includes a great number of pictures, were the following items :

In the ante-room of the upper story :

Een jongmanstronie [head of a youth] nae Rembrant, sonder lyst [without a frame].

Een outmastronie [head of an old man] sonder lyst nae Rembrant.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary P. Barmen, of Amsterdam.

Aert Coninex was the father of the painters Jacob and Philips Koning, both pupils of Rembrandt. Although their names do not appear as such in the inventory, they were probably the copyists. No copies after Rembrandt, nor any obvious pasticci in his master's manner by Philips Koning are extant, but the Hermitage at St. Petersburg and the Copenhagen Gallery both possess a figure-piece by Jacob Koning, differing essentially from his fine, characteristic landscapes. The first (n<sup>o</sup> 869 in the catalogue) is an old woman; the second (in the magazine) is a portrait of a youth in the manner of Rembrandt's earliest studies of himself.

On May 12, 1639, the painters Sr. Lucas Luce and Hendrick Uylenborch valued a number of pictures at Amsterdam, at the request of Cornelis Rutgers' widow, and among them :

Een conterfeytsel gedacu bij Rembrandt f. 100

First published after a communication by A. Bredius, from the file of the notary B. J. Verbeeck, of Amsterdam, in Oud Holland, 1898, xvi, p. 144 (an extract). Cf. also No. 62.

Two only of the remaining pictures were valued at a higher sum. These were a Martyrdom of St. Laurence, by C. Poelenburg (f. 250), and a Feast of the Gods, by the unknown painter Hendrick Schut, alias Brootsack (!) (f. 300).

The other pictures were valued as follows : P. Claesz, Breakfast, f. 24 —, the elder Coninxloo (Gillis) f. 50 —, Hals, f. 12 —, Copy after Poelenburg, Ascension, f. 24 —, Porcellis, Small Stormy Landscape, f. 72 —, Stormy Landscape, f. 30 —, Landscape in fine Weather, f. 60 —, Savery, f. 30 —, de Stom (!) f. 24 —, Adam Willers, f. 18 —.

Hendrick Uylenborch is the often mentioned cousin of Saskia, art-dealer, publisher, and painter. For Lucas Lucae, cf. the catalogue of the Utrecht Exhibition of 1894, under n<sup>o</sup> 376, 377. The two pictures there mentioned, and a picture in the manner of Ludens in the collection of the late Mr. A. H. H. v. d. Burgh of the Hague, are the only known works by him.

No. 74. A CANDLE-LIGHT SUBJECT

October 29

In the inventory of the deceased Anthony Gailard of Amsterdam, drawn up on October 29, 1639, the following entry occurs under n<sup>o</sup> 56, among some 165 pictures :

Een nacht, of kerslight van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract, made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary Hlasen, of Amsterdam.

Among the extant works of Rembrandt, painted before 1650, five are night-pieces, Bode's Plates 1, 4, 5, 130 and 132.

First published from Vertue's manuscript in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, (a transcription of Van der Doort's original inventory), under the title: "A Catalogue and Description of King Charles the First's Capital Collection of Pictures, limnings, statues, bronzes, medals and other curiosities. The whole transcribed and prepared for the Press and a great part of it printed, by the late ingenious Mr. Vertue, and now finished from his papers. London, W. Bathoe MDCCLVII, 4°, p. 83, et seq."

Reprinted in part by Waagen as Appendix A to the second volume of his Treasures of Art in Great Britain, London, John Murray, 1854, p. 465 et seq. According to Waagen, the inventory was probably made in 1639.

No. 87 occurs in :

P. 12, n° 129. Rembrant his picture, done by himself.

The same, No. 101.

P. 10, n° 143. Ry Rembrant. An old woman's picture in a veil.

Cf. herewith No. 552 : An old woman's head, a limning after Rembrant.

In respect of the first picture, I have already suggested on several occasions<sup>(1)</sup> that it was not a Rembrandt, but a Lievens, and in fact, the Lievens which, as Orlers tells us (p. 377), Frederick Henry gave to the English Ambassador, who presented it in his turn to the King, namely the Student (life-size) reading by a Turf Fire. Taking into account the great similarity of Rembrandt's and Lievens' early works, there would be nothing extraordinary in such a confusion, and it is significant that there is no picture of this subject by Lievens in the list of the King's works of art. The picture in question has disappeared.

The portrait of the artist himself described under No. 87 as an oval picture of Rembrandt with a black cap, a furred jacket, and a gold chain over both shoulders, agrees absolutely as to description, and approximately as to dimensions, with the Louvre portrait of the year 1634, Bode, Plate 164 : 2 f. 4 inches by 1 f. 11 inches = 0 m. 71 cm. by 0 m. 58 cm., and the Louvre picture measures 0 m. 68 cm. by 0 m. 53 cm. No other portrait of himself by Rembrandt painted before 1639 agrees more closely with the description in either particular<sup>(2)</sup>. The first printed mention of the Louvre picture occurs in 1750, in the catalogue of the De Vence collection.

No. 101. The old woman with the large head cloth is the portrait of Rembrandt's mother, still at Windsor, Rode, Plate 24.

No. 76. PURCHASE OF A PICTURE
BY REMBRANDT

1640

Anno 1640 ghecoft een Stucxkea, daerin een brilleman, van Rembrant, geteykent N. 56 vor f. 31. 10.

Communicated by G. van Enst Koning to Dr. P. Scheltema, and published by the latter in Aemstel's Oudheid, 1853, vol. 1, p. 187, note 29 to : Redevoering over het leven en de werken van B. v. d. Helst.

Neither buyer nor seller is mentioned, and we have no indication of the source from which the memorandum came. The words "Stucxken, daerin een brilleman" must signify "A small oil-painting, representing a spectacle-seller", for the price is too high for a drawing or etching, "Geteykent N. 56" means "numbered 56".

The picture has disappeared.

BY REMBRANDT

1640
April 25

In a valuation on the inventory of the Amsterdam art-dealer, Johannes de Renialme, dated April 25, 1640, we find the following item :

No. 19. Een priester van Rembrant f. 100. —

1. It is impossible to identify the portrait with that of a boy, still at Windsor, firstly, because of the subject, secondly because of the shape (oval), thirdly because of the dimensions, and fourthly, because of the details of the description.

No. 81. VALUATION OF PICTURES
BY REMBRANDT

1640
October 24

On October 24, 1640, Hans van Coninxloo hands over, in settlement of a debt, a number of works of art, at a valuation made by H. Uylenburgh and Fr. de Kaersgieter.

Among them were the following :

Een doeck, een Samson naer [Samson, on canvas, after] Rembrant f. 15. —

Een doeck, een dame naer [portrait of a lady, after] Rembrant f. 25 —

Een print ex homo van [print, Ecce Homo by] Rembrant [no valuation].

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. v. d. Ven, of Amsterdam.

The Samson may have been the Cassel copy of the Blinding of Samson in the Schönborn Gallery at Vienna. The Ecce Homo is the large upright plate of 1636, Bartsch n<sup>o</sup> 77.

Among the original pictures valued were : A. Brouwer, f. 20. —, J. v. Bijlert, f. 40. —, Lucas Cranach, f. 10. —, G. Flinck, f. 10. —, D. Hals, f. 12. —, and H. Pot, f. 12.

No. 82. INVENTORY AND APPORTIONMENT OF THE ESTATE OF REMBRANDTS MOTHER

The following deed contains a brief inventory of the estate of Rembrandt's mother, with a valuation of the property and its apportionment among the four heirs: the three sons Adriaen, Rembrandt and Willem, and the daughter Elisabeth, the latter represented by the guardians she herself had appointed for this purpose, Adriaen Paets, the notary, and her cousin, Dominicus Jansz van der Pluym.

We divide the deed into four sections:

- I. The Assets.
- II. The Liabilities.
- III. The Apportionment among the four heirs.
- IV. Special Dispositions.

*Sommere staet schiftinge ende scheydinge, aendelinghe ende begrotinge van den boedel ende goederen van Neeltgen Willemsdr. van Zuytbrouck, weduwe van Harman Gerritsz van Rhyn, gemaect ende bij geschrifte gestelt bij mij Adriaen Paets not' publ. ten verzoucke van eers. I. Assets.

§ 1. The various houses and pieces of land, valued by the municipal carpenter and master-mason at the sums set down against them, in accordance with the deed of valuation of October 16, 1640. § 2. The half of the malt mill on the rampart near the White Gate, the other half of which belongs to Clement Lenertsz Ruys. § 3. Adriaen may buy this half for the same sum Ruys paid for his half, i. e. f. 4165, of which he is to pay f. 600 ready money, and the rest in yearly instalments of f. 300. § 4. Three months after his mother's death, he is to say whether he accepts this proposal or not; on October 30, 1640, he answered in the affirmative. § 5. The cash value of this f. 4165 — reckoned against the xvth penny, i. e. 6 1/4 o/o, is f. 3064 in guilders, omitting stuivers and pence. § 6. A further asset consists of a garden and a plot of ground on the upper Rhine Dyke, outside the White

Gate, in the commune of Soeterwoude, valued at 400 guilders, charged with a ground tax of f. 5. — a year. § 7. The leases pertaining to the estate. § 8. The furniture and wearing apparel etc., valued by one Neeltgen Ponszen, are divided among the heirs by common consent; certain things are bought [probably a clerical error for sold], and Rembrandt has duly noted everything. § 9. The heirs further declare, that Adriaen owes the sum of 1600 guilders to the estate, which he is to repay, according to his mother's will, in four yearly instalments. This debt is not divided.

I. Voordelen.

§ 1. The manner in which the sum of f. 424 is to be paid to Pieter Hendriex van Gorten. § 2. Adriaen is to pay his debt of f. 1600 to the estate in such manner, that his brothers and sister may each receive 100 guilders from him annually for four years.

§ 3. Adriaen had promised his mother during her last illness, that he would take care of his sister, and has accordingly made an agreement with the latter, that she should have board and lodging, firing and light in his house for the sum of 200 guilders a year; 50 guilders of this are to be devoted to her clothing, etc., and Adriaen is to receive the remaining 150 guilders. § 4. Elisabeth, however, only receives 181 guilders in all from the rents of her houses, and from this sum repairs and taxes have to be deducted. § 5. Adriaen having pointed this out to his brothers, they have induced Elisabeth, by their friendly representations, to agree, that a portion, to the amount of f. 500, of the clothes and jewels given to her by her mother, shall be handed over to Adriaen after their valuation by Neeltgen Ponssen, § 6. which valuables Adriaen shall be free to deal with as he pleases. § 7. As, however, it appeared after this valuation had been made, that these goods, together with a sum of 150 guilders in ready money accompanying them, were not worth more than f. 383. 13. 0, Elisabeth retaining gold chains and other articles to the value of f. 115. 9. 0 (making a total value of 499. 2. 0), the brothers and sister had agreed that Adriaen should pay a yearly interest of 5 o/o on the 383. 13. 0 and § 8. that Elisabeth on her part should receive only f. 44. 5. 0 a year for clothes etc., instead of f. 50, and § 9. that the interest of f. 400, being Elisabeth's share of Adriaen's debt of f. 1600 to the estate (see above, I, § 9 and IV, § 2), should be applied to the repairs and taxes of her houses, and to other eventual expenses. § 10. Adriaen, on the other hand, is to manage Elisabeth's property till his death, and enjoy the income arising therefrom. § 11. Hereupon, the heirs declare that the division has been equitably made, that each has received his share and taken possession thereof, that they have received the necessary title-deeds and other papers, and have mutually handed over the property to each other. § 12. The houses and pieces of land may be registered by the secretaries of Leyden and Souterwoude in the names of their new owners. § 13. As, however, Adriaen has only been able to hand over f. 290 of the f. 600 he was to have paid in cash for his share of the mill (see above, I, § 3, III, § 1, IV, § 1.), he must give a mortgage on the mill for the remaining f. 310 to the person to whom this sum was assigned (?). § 14. In conclusion, the heirs agree together, to abide perpetually by the division of the property herewith made, and never to demand a further division.

Breddius en Mr. N. de Roever, ii.

Ad § 3 — 10. The following seems to have been the result of the somewhat complicated arrangements between Adriaen and Elisabeth:

As originally agreed, Adriaen was to have taken his sister into his house, receiving from her in return f. 200 yearly, f. 50 of which he was to allow her for clothing, etc. (§ 3).

But Elisabeth could only pay f. 181 and from this sum the repairs and taxes of her houses had to be deducted (§ 4).

She accordingly makes over a portion of her jewellery etc., to the value of f. 383. 13, to her brother (§ 8); on this sum, and on the f. 400 which Adriaen owes her (in all, f. 783. 13), he is to pay her 5 o/o interest (§ 9), that is to say, f. 39. 3. 10. Elisabeth's income is thus brought up to f. 181 + f. 39. 3. 10 = f. 220. 3. 0.

It is further agreed that Adriaen shall give her f. 44. 5. for clothing instead of f. 50 (§ 9), so that he will only demand f. 194. 5. from her instead of f. 200 per annum.

Of the f. 220. 3. 10, a sum of f. 25. 18. 10 will remain, which Adriaen, as administrator of the houses, is to receive for taxes and repairs.

No. 83. THE APPORTIONMENT OF THE REAL ESTATE OF REMBRANDT'S MOTHER AMONG HER HEIRS

November 2

§ 1. On November 2, 1640, the four children of Neeltgen Willemsdochter van Zuytbrouck and Harman Gerritsz van Rijn, Adriaen, Rembrandt, Willem and Elisabeth, appear before the notary Adriaen Paedts, of Leyden, and declare, that they have divided the estate of their parents, as is stated in the "Corte Staet" (No. 82), and § 2. that each one of them has received what was assigned him in this deed. § 3. They all declare themselves satisfied, and mutually engage to make no further claims on one another. § 4. They make over to each other mutually the shares assigned to each, and § 5. each will do henceforth what he pleases with his own portion. § 6. The houses and pieces of land may now be registered by the respective communal secretaries under the names of their new owners. § 7. Adriaen has received as his portion: 1. the parental house and piece of land in the Weddesteeg; 2. the half of the malt mill on the rampart opposite, the other half of which belongs to Clement Lenertsz Ruys; 3. a garden on the upper Rhine dyke outside the White Gate, and the rest as stated in the "Corte Staet", § 8. on condition that he contributes 310 guilders to the expenses of the estate, and further § 9. that he pays off to Rembrandt the mortgage of 3565 guilders, in yearly instalments of 300 guilders, from November 1, 1641, onward. § 10. This debt constitutes Rembrandt's portion, together with what is assigned him in the "Corte Staet". § 11. Willem gets a house and piece of land on the Rhine, near the White Gate, opposite the municipal dockyard, and certain other property assigned him. § 12. Elisabeth gets three houses and pieces of land on the Rhine, adjoining the land assigned to her brothers Adriaen and Willem, besides two small houses behind these, and other property assigned her. § 13. With the exception of the sum, which Adriaen is to pay Rembrandt for the half of the mill, and on which he is to pay the 15th penny tax i. e. 6 2/3 o/o, none of the heirs has anything to pay to the others.

No. 85. THE FINAL SETTLEMENT BETWEEN REMBRANDT AND HIS BROTHERS AND SISTER IN CONNECTION WITH THE PROPERTY LEFT THEM BY THEIR MOTHER

§ 1. On December 12, 1640, the three brothers and their sister appear before the notary, Adriaen Paedts, and declare that Adriaen has given an account of his receipts and expenditure, and that he had finally spent 480 guilders more than he had received. § 2. Rembrandt has paid his quarter of this amount, but the other two have not yet done so. § 3. Adriaen takes over the debt of f. 424 to Pieter Hendricksz van Gorten, and receives f. 150 of a sum due from Rens Jacobsz and Adam Willemsz, which sum had been set apart to discharge the aforesaid debt. § 4. Besides this, he is to keep the f. 310 he was to have paid in ready money for the mill. § 5. He also receives the promissory note of f. 30 given by Pieter Jansz of Soeterwoode, for which he pays Rembrandt f. 30. § 6. Elysabeth acknowledges receipt of the 4 florins due to her from Rembrandt. § 7. Adriaen, Willem and Elysabeth have each received their respective shares of

§ 1. Parentage, birthplace and date. § 2. Youthful instruction and preparation for the university, and for civic and national service. His inclination for painting. § 3. He is placed under the instruction of a painter. § 4. He remains for about three years with Jacob Isaacksz van Swanenburch, and promises to become an excellent painter. § 5. His father accordingly takes him to the famous Pieter Lastman of Amsterdam, § 6, with whom he remains about six months. After this he sets up for himself, with such success, that he has become one of the most celebrated painters of the century. § 7. Finding great favour among the citizens of Amsterdam, and receiving many commissions from them for portraits and other pictures, he removes to that city about 1630, and is still living there in 1641.

(J. Orlers, Beschrijvinge der Stadt Leyden, second edition, Leyden 1641, f<sup>o</sup>. p. 375.)

The first edition of Orlers appeared in 1614, and of course contained as yet no biography of Rembrandt; the third edition, published in 1760, gives the biography again unaltered.

As burgomaster of Leyden, Orlers had taken considerable pains over the biographies of the celebrities of his native city. He is of good repute as a historian, and as Rembrandt's first biographer, and also as his contemporary and fellow-citizen, he deserves the fullest confidence.

The names of Rembrandt's parents are correctly given; the date of birth, 1606, is supported by Rembrandt's own statement when he matriculated at the University (see above under No. 11). The matriculation further confirms Orlers' statement, that Rembrandt's parents at first intended him to follow a learned profession. Finally, the reason given for the removal to Amsterdam, and its date, "ontrent 1630", are in the main correct. We know from other documents (Nos. 19 and 20), that Rembrandt was still living at Leyden on March 8 and June 20, 1631, and that in the same year and at the beginning of 1632 he had already painted several citizens of Amsterdam, such as Nicolaes Ruts (1631), Maerten Looten (January, 1632), and Dr. Tulp at his Anatomy-Lesson (also early in 1632).

From Orlers' own words in another passage, occurring in the biography of Gerard Dou, we may give greater precision to the "ontrent 1630". Orlers says that Dou became Rembrandt's pupil on February 14, 1628, and that he remained "ontrent de drie jaren" with him. We may presume that the removal to Amsterdam severed the connection between master and pupil.

As all the facts advanced by Orlers which it is possible to test have proved correct, it is reasonable to assume the correctness of those we cannot check. Such are Rembrandt's apprenticeship to Jacob Isaacksz van Swanenburch and Pieter Lastman, and the duration of that apprenticeship, in the first case three years, in the second six months.

Orlers' notes are the foundations of all biographies of Rembrandt, and have consequently passed into the entire Rembrandt literature, into the older phase of this — van Leeuwen and Houbraken — with various distortions and printers' errors, into the more modern writings — Vosmaer, Michel, etc. — with a superior critical commentary.

No. 87. GERARD DOU REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

§ 1. Parentage, birthplace and date; in 1622 he goes to his first teacher, the engraver B. Dolendo. § 2. After a year and a half, he goes to the glass-painter, P. Couwenhorn, with a view to becoming his father's assistant later on. § 3. His father takes him into his business at the end of two years and a half. § 4. As, however, Gerard was very foolhardy, the elder Dou feared some accident might happen to him on the high ladders, and made up his mind to let him become a painter. § 5. He took the youth, aged fifteen, on February 14, 1628, to the gifted and world-famed Rembrandt. § 6. With Rembrandt he remained about three years and learned so much, that he became an excellent master, notably in small and highly finished pictures, whether of persons, animals, insects or other things. § 7. Everyone who sees them, is amazed at the daintiness of his pictures, which amateurs esteem highly, giving large prices for them.

(J. Orlers, Beschrijvinge der Stadt Leyden, second edition, Leyden 1641, 4<sup>o</sup>, p. 377 et seq.)

For the trustworthy character of this author's statements, cf. the notes to No. 86.

The precise indication of the date on which Dou became Rembrandt's pupil — February 14, 1628 — and of the duration of his apprenticeship — about three years — is important, as showing that Rembrandt was still living in Leyden about February 14, 1631.

No. 88. THE WILL OF REMBRANDT'S
SISTER ELISABETH

This will, dated July 24, 1641, is included in the file of the notary A. Paedts of Leyden, and is mentioned in Oud Holland, 1887, v, p. 228, by Messrs. A. Bredius and N. de Boever in their Rembraudt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis, II, Bijlage A, Rembrandt's Verwanten. From this we learn that Elisabeth left all her property to her eldest brother, Adriaen, with the condition that he should pay his two brothers nine hundred guilders.

As the files of Leyden notaries in the State archives at the Hague are at present inaccessible, we are unable to give any further information on the subject.

This is the last mention made of Rembrandt's sister. Vosmaer says (p. 455), that she was still living in 1646, but does not give his authority for the statement.

No. 90. REMBRANDT'S PICTURE BALAAM
THE PROPHET VALUED IN PARIS

1641
November

§ 1. The painter Claude Vignon, in a letter to Francois Langlois, called Ciartres, begs the latter, if he should go to London, to greet the famous painter C. Poelenburg from him. § 2. If by any chance Van Dyck should have arrived there, he is also to greet him, and to let him know that he (Vignon) had the day before valued the pictures of Lopez, foremost among them being Titian's Ariosto. § 3. The collection is to be sold in the middle of December, together with many other curiosities, and a printed catalogue will be sent to England. § 4. If Langlois goes to Holland, he begs him to greet Moses van Wttenbrouck at the Hague, and to get a few small landscapes by him. § 5. Also a few Poelenburgs, which will be readily found in London or Utrecht. § 6. At Utrecht he is to greet Honthorst, and at Amsterdam Rembrandt, and he is to bring something by the latter. § 7. He might also tell him that he (Vignon) had the day before valued his Prophet Balaam, which Lopez had bought from him, and which, as mentioned above, is to be sold. § 8. Further, Langlois is to greet all their common acquaintances from Italy, Paris and elsewhere, and to bring back curiosities with him. § 9. Good wishes for his journey and his safe return, etc.

At sig. Francesco Langlois detto il Ciartres.

§ 1. V. S. mi fara grazia essendo a Londra di salutare da mia parte il sig. Cornelio Poelenbourg pittore celeberrimo, ed altre amici. § 2. E se per sorte vi fosse arrivato l'illustre sig. cav. Vandiek, lo saluti unilmente a mio nome, e dicagli che jeri io feci la stiva de' quadri del sig. Lopez; dove ce n'è di Tiziano; tra' quali c'è il ritratto dell' Ariosto molto eccellentissimo; § 3. che si venderanno a mezzo Dicembre prossimo con molte altre ricche curiosità. Del tutto se sie da notizia a V. S. e se ne manda una lista stampata in Inghilterra.

1. The spelling of the proper names in Schellema's article is here corrected from the original.

§ 4. V. S. si ricorderà, passando in Olanda, di salutare all' Aja da mia parte il sig. Moïse Van Wtenbrouck pittore eccellente, e portar quì de suoi quadri di piccoli paesi. § 5. Porti ancora de quadri del sig. Coraelia, che ne troverà facilmente a Londra, e a Utrecht. § 6. In quest'ultima città saluterà a mio nome il sig. Gherardo Honthoïst; e in Asterdamme mi saluti anche il sig. Rembrandt, e porti seco qualcosa del suo. § 7. Gli dica pure, che io feci jeri la stiva del suo quadro del profeta Balam, che comprò da lui il sig. Lopez<sup>(1)</sup>, il qual quadro si venderà fra quelli sopradetti.

§ 8. Del resto lascio alla prudenza di V. S. a salutare tutti quelli signori, che possiamo aver conosciuto in Italia, o in Parigi, ed altri luoghi. Porti altre curiosità. § 9. Iddio condoca, e riconduca V. S. con sanità, felicità, e prosperità desiderata, accio ch'è al suo ritorno possiamo rinnovare per molto tempo la conversazione con l'aiuto del Signore Iddio, il quale io prego con tutta l'affezione del cuore di conservare la famiglia di V. S. etc. Jacopo Stella<sup>(2)</sup>.

1. Il sig. Lopez, rammentato anche qui sopra, aveva fatto una considerabile raccolta di quadri in Parigi.

2. Non il Bresciano, ma professore Francese.

In vol. v, p. 270, P. Mariette, owner of the letter, and grandson of the writer, states that Claudio Vignon, pittore, and not Jacopo Stella, wrote the letter.

First printed in (Botari) Raccolta di Lettere sulla Pittura, Scultura ed Architettura, Roma, 1764, 4°, vol. iv, p. 363, No. CLXXXIV, from the original, at that time in the possession of Pierre Mariette. Reprinted with commentary, and translated into Dutch, in Oud Holland, 1894, vi, p. 238, by E. W. Moes, Een Brief van kunsthistorische Beteekenis. German translation in Dr. Ernst Guhl's Künstlerbriefe, second edition by Dr. Adolf Rosenberg, Berlin, 1880, n, p. 214.

According to Moes, loc. cit., the letter was written in November, 1641, as Vignon first became acquainted with Van Dyck in January, 1641, and Van Dyck remained in Paris till November, 1641, and died on December 11, 1641. The sale of Alfonso Lopez' pictures must therefore have taken place about the middle of December, 1641. The printed catalogue has disappeared. Lopez (1572-1649) was, inter alia, agent of the King of France in Holland for the purchase of ammunition, victuals, etc. His name occurs repeatedly in the resolutions of the States General touching such dealings, between November, 1638 and March, 1641. He was also present at the sale of Lucas van Uffelen's collection at Amsterdam, April 10, 1639, when he bought Raphael's portrait of Castiglione. He also, as appears from Sandrart's dedication under R. van Persijn's print, brought Titian's so-called Ariosto (lately acquired by the London National Gallery), from Holland with him. Rembrandt's Balaam has disappeared, and no literary record of its existence has come down to us.

No. 91. PHILIPS ANGEL PRAISES REMBRANDT AND HIS MARRIAGE OF SAMSON

October 18

§ 1. It is very praiseworthy, when we painters turn to account the achievements of our predecessors, as many contemporary masters have done. § 2. We should therefore turn over old dusty books, to get a good knowledge of history. § 3. To the knowledge so acquired, we must, in our drawings, engravings and pictures, add the results of our own reflection, in order to preserve our artistic freedom, not doing violence to historical fact, but at the same time adorning our works. § 4. The ancients proceeded thus, and also many famous contemporary painters, such as the world-famous Rembrandt, Lievensz, Backer, Bleecker and others. § 5. Thus the speaker has seen a Marriage of Samson by Rembrandt, in which this master mind showed his profound power of reflection, by representing the guests, not seated, but reclining round the table, as was the habit of the ancients, and as it still is of the Turks. § 6. To make it evident that this wedding was to be distinguished from others, Rembrandt represented Samson in the foreground with long hair. § 7. Secondly, Samson was in the act of propounding his riddle, taking hold of his left middle finger with his right thumb and middle finger. § 8. Some of the guests raise their beakers of wine, and others embrace. § 9. Although it was evident that this was a feast after the fashion of the times, yet it was also shown that it was a particular marriage feast. § 10. Rembrandt achieved this result by careful reading of history and intelligent reflection on its meaning.

§ 1. Het is ten hoogsten prijselick (Edelc Geesten) dat wij ous ghewennen tot het geene de voorgheleefde Geesten betracht hebben, en noch van vele hedendaechse Meesters na ghekomen wert, § 2. ons bekumende niet neerstich de oude vermuete Boecken te doorsnuffelen om kennisse van Hystorien te bekomen, § 3. nevens welcke kennisse dan, als wy de selve willen door Teykeninghe, Placette, of Schilderije wydrucken, onse hooghe nagedachten moeten voeghen, om onse gheoorloofde vryheyt daer te beter ouder te menghen, sonder kvencken van den sin der Hystorien en meerder vercieringhe van ons werck, § 4. ghelijck de Oude ghedaen hebben, en vele vande teghenwoordighe vermaerde Geesten noch doen; als, daer is dien wijt-beruchten Rembrandt; dien vermaerden Jan Lievensz; dien groot-geachten Baeker; den aardigen Bliccker; en veel meer anderen, dien ik (om kortheyts wil) overslaen, van welke te sijner tijdt meerder van haer verdiende lofften den dach ghebracht sal werden. § 5. Onder alle heb ick van Rembraut eens een Simsons-Bruyloft uyt-gebeelt ghesten, waer van wy lesen by Iulianus 14 Cap. vers. 10 dier houdt men uyt bemercken hoe die kloecke Geest, door sijn hooge na-gheachte die hy hier outrent de eygentlickheit van't aensitten (of om beter te segghen, het aenlegghen) der Gasten aen Tafel wurr gewonnen had: want de Oude ghebraychte Beddekenen daerse op laghen, en sy en sucten niet gelijckerwijs wy nu aen Tafel sitten, maer laghen op haer ellehooghen, ghelijck sulcx noch in die Landen ghebraycklick is ouder de Turcken het welke hy seer aerdelick verthoont hadde. § 6. Nu, om het onderscheyt te marcken tusschen dese Bruyloft, en andere Bruyloften, soo had hy Simson op de voor-gront ghestelt met lauch hays, tot een bewijs van datter noyt Scheermes op syn hooft gheweest en was. § 7. Ten anderen: was Simson doende aen eenighe die naerstick toe-luysterde met sin Raedtsel voor te werpen, sulcx koud-men bespeuren aen sijn handen; want met sijn rechter dnyen en middelste vinger had hy de slinke middel-vingher ghevat; een ghewoonlicke doch seer natyrlieke acte, van-neer yemandt aen een ander wat door reden wil voorstellen en ghelijck alle Gasten niet tot een en de selve saeck gheneghen en sijn, soo had hy anderen ghemaect die verheent waren, niet luysterende naer het Raetsel, § 8. maer steckenile een Fluyt met Wijs al lacheude om hoogh; andere doende met kussen; § 9. in somma, het was een vroylicke Bruyloft en niet te min schoon ile beweginge soo ware als die in onse hedendaechse Feeste ghevoniden werden, soo had hy niet te min onderscheyt genoegh genaect datmensse uyt onse Bruyd-lofs-Feeste wel onderscheyden konden. § 10. Siet, dese vrucht, der eygen natuerlicke uyt-beeldinge outstout door de Hystorie wel gelesen en ouderast te hebben door hooge en verre na-gedachten.

Speech made by Philips Angel at Leyden, on St. Luke's Day (October 18), 1641, and published the following year under the title: Philips Angel's Lof der Schilderkonst, Leyden. Willem Christiaens, 1642, 4°, p. 47. First quoted in modern literature by Vosmaer, first edition, p. 83.

§ 4. The Baeker referred to is Jacob Adriaensz Baeker (1608-1651); the Bliccker was probably Gerrit Claesz Bliccker (c. 1600-1656), rather than Dirck Bliccker, born in 1622. § 5. The eulogy of Rembrandt's Marriage of Sauson passed from Angel into De Bie's Gulden Cabinet van de edele vrye Schilder konst, Antwerp, Jan Meyssens, 1661, p. 361. The picture was painted in 1638, and is now in the Dresden Gallery, n° 1560 in the catalogue (Bode, Plate 222). In Die Kunst für Alle, 1904, xx, p. 111, Adolf Hölzel makes an interesting comparison of the composition of this picture with that of Leonardo's Last Supper. Concerning Angel and his speech, cf. P. J. Frederiks in Oud Holland, 1888, vi, p. 113 et seq.

First accurately published by Dr. Johs. Dyserinck in the periodical De Gids, 1890, iv, p. 250. Earlier readings, as, for instance, those in the catalogue of the Rijksmuseum of 1881, on the back of Lundens' copy in the National Gallery, and on the former frame of the picture, were derived from Jan van Dijk's inaccurate transcription, in his Kunst en historiekundige beschrijving en aanmerkingen over alle die schilderijen op het stadhuis te Amsterdam, 1758, p. 59.

The names appear on a shield painted on the right of the vaulted gateway in the background. Both shield and inscription are undoubtedly due to Rembrandt himself.

The name of the drummer Jan van Kampoort does not appear, and is known only from van Dijk.

We learn from Dyserinck, p. 251, and the sources of information quoted by him, that all the persons represented lived in the second division of the city, with the exception of the three officers. Jan Adriaensen Keyser was afterwards an inn-keeper in the Handboogsdoelen, Reynier Engelen or Ingels was a Catholic advocate and afterwards a minister of religion at Outewael. Jan Pietersen Bronchorst was a cloth-merchant and later, in conjunction with Claes van Cruysbergen, made the declaration recorded under the dates 1658-59.

Cf. D. C. Meyer in Oud Holland, 1886, iv, pp. 199, 200, 209, on the three officers. The portraits of the other persons represented are recorded in Moes' Iconographia Batava, where their dates of birth and death are also given, as far as they are known.

WIFE SASKIA

§ 1. On June 5, 1642, at about 9 o'clock in the forenoon, Saskia van Uylenburch, lying ill in bed, but apparently sound in mind and memory, appears before the notary Mr. Pieter Barchman at Amsterdam. § 2. She commends her soul to God and her body to Christian burial, and declares her son Titus and any other children she may have, with their posterity, her heirs § 3 with this proviso, that her husband Rembrandt shall enjoy the usufruct of her property until such time as he shall marry again, and in the event of his remaining unmarried, until his death. § 4. He, on his part, shall feed, clothe and educate their child or children in a manner suitable to their station, until their majority or marriage, when he shall make a provision for them at his discretion. § 5. Children who die without issue are to leave their shares to their brothers and sisters, and the last surviving child — or if she should leave only one, then this one — shall make Rembrandt his heir. § 6. In this event Rembrandt shall be free to sell the property or to dispose of it in any way he may think fit, even before inheriting it. § 7. If, however, he should marry again or die under these circumstances, he is to make over one half of the whole property (including what may have fallen to him by virtue of clause 6), to his relations, and the other half to Hiskia van Uylenburch, Saskia's sister. § 8. In this event, Hiskia is to pay to each of Saskia's brothers, Ulricus and Idsert van Uylenburch, and to the children of her sister Jelletge, jointly, 1000 guilders. § 9. Rembrandt is under no obligation to furnish an inventory of the property to anyone or to give any security for the same, for Saskia can trust him to carry out her wishes conscientiously. § 10. Finally, the testatrix requests that her property may not be administered by any of the Chambers of Orphans, but that Rembrandt may deal with it on behalf of her heirs under age. § 11. She accordingly appoints him their guardian, and expressly excludes the Chamber of Orphans from the office. § 12. She declares the above to be her last will and testament. § 13. Declaration as to place, witnesses etc.

§ 1. In den name onses Heeren, Amen. In den jaere van de geboorte desselfs ons Heeren seshondert twee ende veertich den vyftien Junij, des morgens de clock ontrent negen ure, compareerde de Juffrouw Saskia van Uylenburch, huysvrouw van den E. First published, from the original in the file of the notary P. Barchman in the notarial archives of Amsterdam, by Dr. P. Scheltema; Rembrandt, 1853, p. 61-64.

The testamentary dispositions were the customary ones of the period, applied to the particular case: the children to inherit the whole estate; the surviving parent to enjoy the usufruct till his death or re-marriage, subject to the maintenance and endowment of the children, of whom he is appointed guardian; the exclusion of the Chamber of Orphans from appraisal of the property and guardianship of the children. The cases provided for in §§ 5-9 did not arise. When Rembrandt died in the beginning of October, 1669, his and Saskia's grandchild, Titus' little daughter, was still alive.

No. 94. DEATH OF REMBRANDT'S WIFE

June 14

Rombertus Ockema, son of Doede Ockema and Jelleke van Ulenburgh, Saskia's sister, made a number of entries in his album of family events. Those bearing upon Saskia and her nearest relatives occur under the heading:

Notabilia quaedam.

Avus meus maternus Rombertus Ulenburgh obiit Leonardiae die 3a mens Junij 1624 [= June 13, Greg. St.].

First published by W. Eekhoff, in his De Vrouw van Rembrandt, p. 35, from the original album of Rombertus Ockema, then in the author's possession. Eekhoff's transcription (and also the entries under our No. 37 above, based on his), do not take into account the fact that the dates given by Rombertus are Old Style (Julian Calendar), the use of which was adhered to in Friesland till 1700, though the New Style (Gregorian Calendar) had been adopted throughout the rest of Holland.

No. 97. ANNOUNCEMENT OF SASKIA'S DEATH TO THE AMSTERDAM CHAMBER OF ORPHANS 1642
December 17

§ 1. Declaration of Saskia's burial on June 19, 1642; she lived in the Anthoni Breestraat, and left one child, a minor. § 2. Her will of June 5, in which she had excluded the Chamber of Orphans from the guardianship, is produced. § 3. Rembrandt is to administer the entire estate, without giving account to anyone. § 4. Hendrick Uylenburch agrees to these conditions on December 17, 1642, in the presence of F. de Vrij and S. de Rijck.

From the Begraefregister of the Oude Kerk in the archives of the Amsterdam Chamber of Orphans, first published by Dr. P. Scheltema, Rembrandt, 1853, p. 64.

It was the duty of the sextons to give notice to the Chamber of Orphans of deceased persons who had left children under age; the Chamber then took the steps necessary for the safeguarding of their rights. As Hendrick Uylenburch, the art-dealer, declared himself satisfied with the will, probably as Saskia's nearest relative living in Amsterdam, the matter was settled for the Chamber of Orphans, until, on May 17, 1656, Rembrandt appeared before it and made over his interest in his house to his son Titus, still under age.

No. 98. JUDGMENT GIVEN IN REMBRANDT'S FAVOUR BY THE COURT OF FRIESLAND 1643
February 7

On February 7, 1643, judgment was given by the Court of Friesland in the matter of an appeal as between Dr. Ulricus Ulenburch, acting on behalf of Rembrandt as guardian of his and Saskia's child and Dr. Arnoldus Jellena, the advocate of Dirck Alberts. The Court pronounces in favour of Rembrandt, orders the sale of a house and a yard to be proclaimed again before the church and the Court on February 28, and condemns Dirck Alberts in costs.

Unpublished extract from the Civiel Sententienboek van het Hof van Friesland van 1643 in the State archives at Leeuwarden. The document is of such slight interest in its connection with Rembrandt that we do not transcribe it here. It is not known what the case in dispute was.

1644 No. 99. VALUATION OF A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT

In the year 1644, the Amsterdam art-dealer, Johannes de Renialme, gave a number of pictures as security, among them :

Een priester van Rembrandt, valued at f. 100.

First published by A. Bredius in the Amsterdamsch Jaarboekje of 1891, p. 62 : De Amsterdamsche Kunsthandel in de xvi<sup>e</sup> eeuw.

1644 No. 100. EPIGRAM BY VONDEL ON REMBRANDT'S PORTRAIT OF ANSLO

Op Cornelis Anslo.

Ay, Rembrant, mael Cornelis stem.

Het zichtbre deel is 't minst van hem :

't Onzichtbre kent men slechts door d'ooren,

Wie Anslo zien wil, moet hem hooren.

First printed in Vondel's Verspreiden Gedichten of the year 1644, p. 136. Unger, Vondel's latest editor, dates the poem 1640, on the ground that Rembrandt's red chalk drawing of Anslo, with this poem beneath it, in the Albertina, is signed Rembrandt f. 1640.

He was mistaken. The red chalk drawing in question, which was made for the etching, is in the British Museum, and most probably Vondel did not write the verses for this at all, but for the etching of 1641 (Bartsch, n° 271), or the picture of the same year in the Berlin Museum (Bode, Plate 282).

The poet's fantastic request to Rembrandt to paint the voice, has often been cited. Speech is, in fact, very happily suggested in the Berlin portrait.

Two other little poems of Vondel's are referred to pictures of Rembrandt's : Op de schildery van Mejoffer Anna Wijmers (Hollantsche Parnas, 1660, p. 146; complete edition of 1682, p. 602), to Rembrandt's portrait of Jan Six' mother (Bode, Plate 280), and Op den gelerden en beleefden Heer Joan Six (complete edition, p. 571), either to Rembrandt's etching of 1647 (Bartsch, n° 285) or to the portrait belonging to the Six family (Bode, Plate 371). But the painter is not clearly indicated by Vondel, and there is nothing to show that he really meant Rembrandt.

No. 101. PORTRAIT OF REMBRANDT'S FATHER IN A LEYDEN INVENTORY

February 23

In the inventory of Sybout van Caerdecamp<sup>(1)</sup> of Leyden, the following entry occurs on February 23, 1644 :

First published in Oud Holland, 1887, v, p. 219, from the file of the notary W. van Leeuwen, of Leyden, by A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, in Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis, II.

If this is an evidence, that a painted portrait of Rembrandt's father was known to the public as early as 1644, it follows from the document given below under date of February 2, 1679, that Rembrandt's contemporaries were also familiar with the etched portraits of Harmen Gerritsz. Emile Michel was the first to point out that the head now universally accepted as that of the artist's father (Bode, Plates 20, 25, 27-31<sup>(2)</sup> and Bartsch, n° 292, 294, 304, 321 and 374), is the only one for which the distinction can be reasonably claimed<sup>(3)</sup> (p. 41 of his work : Rembrandt, sa vie, son œuvre et son temps, Paris, 1893; English edition, vol. 1, p. 42).

No. 102. A LANDSCAPE BY REMBRANDT IN A SALE AT DELFT

March 15

On March 15, 1644, the property of Boudewijn de Man, formerly a collector of taxes, was sold on his death. Among the 64 pictures sold was :

No. 22 : Een Landschap van Reynbrant... f. 166.0. —

1. The Caerdecamp's were personally acquainted with the van Rijn; in 1654 Jan van Caerdecamp lent a sum of money to the widow of Adriaen van Rijn. Oud Holland, v, p. 219.

2. Plate 26, in the Nantes Museum, has proved to be a copy. On the other hand, n° 18 in the Amsterdam Rembrandt Exhibition, from the Fleischmann collection, London, is a portrait of Rembrandt's father.

3. A. Jordan's counter-arguments in the Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft, xvi, p. 298 et seq. seem to me unconvincing.

First transcribed from the file of the notary M. van Assendelft by A. Bredius, Gemäldepreise in Holland um 1650, in the Zeitschrift für bildende Kunst, 1883, p. 229.

The prices obtained at this auction were very high generally. An animal-picture by R. Savery and a church by B. v. Bassen, which would have been put at from six to ten guilders in the ordinary valuations of the day, both fetched more than the Rembrandt, namely f. 174 each. A school by D. v. Baburen went for a price which would hardly be exceeded in these days — f. 665. The catalogue is given in full by Bredius, loc. cit. above.

No. 104. CHRISTIAEN HUYGENS COPIES
AN OLD MAN BY REMBRANDT

§ 1. Christiaen writes to his brother Lodewijk, that he and his brother Constantijn are now painting with dry colour, which process is known as "doeselen". § 2. If Lodewijk could see what he (the writer) had done yesterday, he would no longer prize Spanish lead. § 3. He had copied a head of an old man by Rembrandt so perfectly, that the difference was scarcely perceptible. § 4. But for the time and trouble it would cost him, he would send Lodewijk the head.

Constantijn the younger and Christiaen Huygens had just gone to Leyden University at the time. They matriculated on May 12, 1645. Their father, Constantijn Huygens the elder, gave them a syllabus, dated May 9, in which, among other directions, we find: "ab undecima ad meridiem picturae operam dabunt" (p. 4).

Ad § 1. "Doeselen" was evidently a kind of pastel-painting. § 2. Spanish lead = pencil, black lead. § 3. The "vix differentiam videas" of course applies more to the similarity achieved between the two processes than to the quality of the copy.

No. 105. REMBRANDT'S LAWSUIT
IN RESPECT OF THE ESTATE OF HIS FATHER- AND MOTHER-IN-LAW

March 17

Dr. Rombartus Ulenburch, representative of Rembrandt van Rhojn, living at Amsterdam, guardian of Saskie Ulenburch, his wife, brings the action against Dr. Arnoldus Jellena, advocate of Dirck Alberts, bookseller of Leeuwarden. The plaintiff declares, that on March 24, 1632, the defendant bought at public auction a piece of land in the Frisian village of Nijemirdum, then used by the farmer Jetse Jacobs, with the exception of 4 "poude-maten" (1) of meadow-land, which had remained in the possession of Ulenburch's heirs. Dirck Alberts therefore owes Rembrandt the eighth part of the purchase-money of 1100 guilders, i. e. 137 guilders 14 stuivers, due in May, 1632, 1633, 1634, as appears from the conditions of sale sub A. The defendant is dilatory in his payments of the purchase-money, and cannot be induced to make them without legal action. The Court is urged to make him pay the amount due, with interest and damages.

The defendant in the first instance, denies Rembrandt's right to plead as guardian of his wife, seeing that she is dead. He admits that the land was knocked down to him at the auction, but declares that he protested against this at the time; this the plaintiff knows very well and has often ad- mitted. Further, the attestation sub B. C. shows, that the purchaser was to have the whole piece of land used by the farmer, which fetched a rental of 44 gilders; and if the four "pondematen" are taken from it, it will not fetch half this rent. This is shown by the document marked C. D. in which the whole property is offered for sale. The defendant offers to pay for such land as he has actually got.

The Court, however, on March 17, 1646, ordered him to pay the eighth part of the 1100 gold gilders as demanded, with interest and damages, and the costs of the action.

REMBRANDT IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

Among the assets of the bankrupt Deonys de Glabays, an inventory of which was made at Amsterdam on July 10, 1646, is the following item:

Een vrouwe Contrefeytsel met bloemen van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract taken by A. Bredius from the Amsterdam archives.

Of the extant pictures painted before 1646, those to which the entry might with most probability be applied are the Flora of 1633 in the Duke of Buccleuch's collection (Bode, Plate 186), that of 1634 in the Hermitage (Plate 189) and that in the Schloss collection, painted about 1633-34 (Plate 190).

From the Ordonnantieboek van Frederik Hendrik first published by C. Vosmaer in the Kunstkronyk, 1861, p. 39.

The Nativity came to the Munich Pinacothek with the Passion series so often mentioned above<sup>(1)</sup>; the Circumcision, however, which was with these pictures in the Electoral Gallery at Düsseldorf before the year 1706 (van Gool, II, p. 538) has disappeared. It was probably the composition, a copy of which has been removed from the Salzdahlum Gallery to that of Brunswick (n<sup>o</sup> 241 in the catalogue of 1900). The suggestion put forward in the catalogue, that G. v. d. Eeckhout may have been the copyist, is quite groundless.

No. 108. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

December 31

In the inventory of... the widow Anna Blommerts, drawn up December 31, 1646, these two entries occur:

Een turxex tronye van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. C. Hoogbeem, of Amsterdam.

"Turxex tronye" indicates studies of heads with turbans or some such Oriental accessories, like those at Windsor Castle (Bode, Plate 49), St. Petersburg (Plate 146) or Munich (Plate 147). The three-quarters length of an old woman, holding a pair of spectacles on a book in her lap, at St. Petersburg (Bode, Plate 263), the portraits of Rembrandt's mother (Plates 19, 21 and 24) and the old woman of 83 in the National Gallery are small pictures of old women painted by Rembrandt before 1646.

speaking a historical document, it is of historical interest, as showing the popularity and the wide circulation of this work of Rembrandt's.

In the same church there is also a painted copy of the Large Crucifixion (Bartsch, n° 81), undated, but of the same period, and in the Town Hall of Reval there is a copy of Bartsch n° 77, painted by J. v. Aken in 1667.

No. 110. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT AND OTHER VALUABLES BARTERED FOR ROPES, MASTS AND IRON

On March 28, 1647, Martin van den Broeck makes an agreement with Andries Ackersloot, in which he pledges himself to hand over gold, diamonds, silver plate and a number of pictures, receiving in exchange, ropes, masts, and 800 guilders worth of iron.

Among the pictures were :

1. Een contrefeytsel van Rembrants vrouw.
2. 't Contrefeytsel van Rembrandt.
3. Abraham mette drye engelen van Rembrandt.
4. De minnemoer van Rembrandt.
5. Een landschap van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. v. d. Ven, of Amsterdam.

It is impossible to say which of the many portraits of Rembrandt and Saskia are here indicated. Possible examples, among the portraits of Saskia are : Bode, Plates 150, 152-156 and 264; among those of Rembrandt : Bode, Plates 14, 16, 18, 61, 163-169, 171-176 and 255-261. The Abraham with the Angels may have been the St. Petersburg picture, Bode, Plate 223. No portrait of Rembrandt's Nurse (Geertghe Dirck, see under Nos. 113, 117, 118, 120-123) is known, and for the landscape we have a choice of Plates 229-235, 341, 572 and 573.

No. 111. COPIES AFTER REMBRANDT IN THE HAGUE INVENTORIES

In the register of public sales of pictures, etc., held at the Hague from April 8, 1647 onward, are the following entries :

1. Lyste van de schilderyen, toebehoorende Enoch Much ende Michiel van Tingerloo.

No. 21. Een naer Rembrandt (Purchaser Joh. Wichmans).

2. Schilderijen toebehoorende Mons<sup>r</sup>. Rossetter.
No. 8. Een naer Rembrandt (as originally written : principael van Rembrandt... f. 6. 15. — (Purchaser Verwijck).

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the original in the municipal archives of the Hague.

The register was kept in view of the tax of 2 1/4 o/o levied by the town on the proceeds of auctions.

No. 112. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT VALUED BY H. UYLENBURCH

June

Certain pictures, part of the property of the deceased widow of Reyneke Gerrits, were valued by Hendrick Uylenburch in June, 1647. Among them were :

Een cleyn trony gedrukt [a printed, i. e. engraved head] van Rembrandt. . . . . . 0.16.0.

Twe gedrukte bortjes [engraved subjects] van Rembrandt, synde een rottevangher [rat-catcher] en een besnydenis [Circumcision] Christi 0.16.—

Een trony na Rembrandt van Dirck van Santvoort . . . . . 10.—

Een trony van Rembrandt. . . . . . f. 60.—

Een Ecce Homo gedrukt van Rembrandt. 6.—

Pictures by other masters were valued as follows :
S. de Vlieger f. 90.—; J. Both f. 50.— and f. 60.—; C. Saftleven f. 42.—; D. Santvoort f. 12.—; P. de Neyn f. 16.—; Govert Flinck (portraits) f. 36.—, f. 30.—, f. 40.—; P. van Santvoort (landscape) f. 42.—; P. Claesz f. 36.—; A. v. Ostade f. 24.—; 2 P. Codde, the two f. 36.—; B. Peeters f. 6. 6.— and C. Moeynaert f. 6.—.

From the file of the notary L. Lamberti, Amsterdam; extracts quoted by Mr. N. de Roever, Oud Holland, 1889, vii, pp. 33 and 35, from notes furnished by A. Bredius.

The Rat-catcher is the etching, Bartsch n° 121, the Circumcision the small composition, Bartsch n° 48, the Ecce Homo Bartsch n° 77. The last was published by H. Uylenburch. His valuation has therefore a double interest. No copies by D. v. Santvoort after Rembrandt are now extant, though there are a few scriptural subjects by him quite in Rembrandt's manner, such as the Supper at Emmaüs in the Louvre and two similar subjects in a private collection at Moscow.

No. 113. GEERTGHE DIRCX' WILL

January 24

On January 24, 1648, Geertghe Dirck, widow of the trumpeter Abraham Claesz, and some time nurse to Rembrandt's son Titus van Rijn, had her will made by the notary Laur. Lamberti of Amsterdam. She is "siecklick van Lichaem". Titus is appointed sole heir, on condition that he gives the portrait of the testatrix and a hundred carolus guilders to Trijntje, the daughter of Pieter Lambertz Beetz of Hoorn. Geertghe's mother is to receive only her legal share, consisting of the wearing apparel, with the exception of the gold ornaments. Octaef Octaefsz. was one of the witnesses.

First mentioned by A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever in Oud Holland, 1885, III, p. 95, Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis, and Oud Holland, 1890, VIII, p. 175.

March 12 No. 114. HEADS PAINTED BY REMBRANDT
IN A ROTTERDAM INVENTORY

On March 12, 1648, an inventory of the property of the deceased Tryntge Pieters, widow of Crijn Hendricksz Volmarijn, painter and art-dealer at Rotterdam, was handed over to the Chamber of Orphans by the guardians of the children.

Among the pictures, which numbered over 200, the following are noted, without any distinguishing details:

Twee troentjes (little heads) van Rijnbrandt.

First published by P. Haverkorn van Rijsewijk, Oud Holland, 1894, XII, p. 146, Rotterdamsehe Schilders.

1649 No. 115. II. HEERSCHOP A PUPIL OF REMBRANDT?

Van Eynden and van der Willigen, in their Geschiedenis der vaderlandsche Schilderkunst, of 1846, vol. 1, p. 65, mention a portrait-drawing of Hendrik Heerschop in their possession with a circumscription to the effect that the sitter was a Haarlem painter and a pupil of Rembrandt. The original is said to have been painted in 1649, when the artist was twenty-two.

Both picture and drawing have disappeared. The writers do not state when the drawing was made. As the circumscription is uncorroborated by other documents, or by the character of Heerschop's art, it would be rash, taking into account the numerous forged drawings of this kind, to place too much reliance on the assertion, or to include Heerschop in the list of Rembrandt's pupils solely on such evidence, as has been done by art-writers down to the latest period. Cf. the remarks under No. 119 (?).

IN A LEYDEN INVENTORY

Among the pictures included in the marriage-portion of the bride of Cornelis Thymansz van Geesdorp, tailor, of Leyden, was

1. Since writing the above, I have heard from Mr. H. Ph. Gerritsen of the Hague, that competent connoisseurs have pronounced it the work of T. H. Jelgersma, an 18th century artist, and attach no importance to the circumscription.

Een vierkant stuk van Rembrandt. . . f. 6.—

Among the other pictures valued were: a Jul. Percellis f. 15.—; Droochsloot f. 8.—; de Haen f. 5.—; Dirk Davidt f. 8.—; van Swanenburch f. 7.—; two by Voorcamp f. 8.—; all in ebony frames.

Unpublished extract taken by A. Bredius from the file of the notary K. Outermaan of Leyden.

In September 1653 the tailor married again, and his pictures were valued by a female appraiser. Cf. No. 148.

No. 117. DRAFT OF AN ARRANGEMENT BETWEEN REMBRANDT AND GEERTGHE DIRCX

June 28

§ 1. Geertghe Direx, widow of Abraham Claesz, assisted by a guardian (to be chosen by her for this purpose), appears with the honourable and far-famed painter Rembrandt van Rijn before a notary. She declares that she was formerly nurse to Rembrandt's son Titus, and that afterwards she lived for a long time in Rembrandt's house. § 2. All she possesses — though this is little and insufficient for her maintenance — she earned in Rembrandt's service. § 3. This consideration moved her, on January 24, 1648, to leave her entire property to Titus van Rijn. § 4. Since leaving Rembrandt's house, she has found that it will be impossible for her to live on her income, and she has accordingly begged her former master, to make an agreement with her in respect of her maintenance. § 5. In accordance therewith, Rembrandt agrees to give her, between the date of the agreement and the New Year, 200 guilders, in instalments, deducting what he has already given her, and so enabling her to redeem the silver and gold things that she has pawned. § 6. In addition, he engages to give her annually till her death, 160 carolus guilders for her decent maintenance, payment to be first made on June 28, 1650, and thereafter at the end of every year. § 7. And this in satisfaction of all claims Geertghe has or may have had on Rembrandt, without any exception whatever, § 8. and only under the express condition that Geertghe honestly abides by her will of January 24, 1648, in favour of Titus. § 9. Geertghe further promises so to conduct herself that the "Roosring" with diamonds, and all the other property she is to redeem, shall be free and unencumbered at her death. § 10. It is further stipulated that neither the pension of 160 guilders nor her other property shall be in any way charged as against her debts. § 11. The contracting parties have no further claims one upon another. § 12. If Geertghe contravenes this agreement, her pension will cease, and she will be obliged to pay back all she has so far received.

The document is merely a rough draft, unsigned.

The date June 28, 1649, is inferred from § 6, which states that the pension is to be paid at the end of each year, and for the first time on June 28, 1649.

No. 118. GEERTGHE DIRCX SUMMONS
REMBRANDT TO APPEAR BEFORE THE COURT 1649
September 25

On September 25, 1649, Geertghe Dircx summons Rembrandt to appear before the Court of Matrimonial Affairs and Offences. He does not attend. The Commissary orders Winckelman (the executive officer) to call him. He is fined for non-appearance.

Commissariss. verlenen default ende ordonneren Winckelman te roepen Rembrandt voorsz. op de boeten van de Caemer. Actum den 25 Septembris 1649 Praesentibus Schellinger ende Abba.

First published in Oud Holland, 1899, xvii, p. 5, by A. Bredius, Nieuwe Rembrandiana, from the "Huwelijks Krackeelregister der Kamers van Huwelijksche Zaken en Injurien" in the Amsterdam archives; communicated by Mr. Johan E. Elias.

According to the "Handvesten ofte Privilegien ende Octroyen der Stad Amstelredam", 1748, ii, p. 647, persons so summoned were bound by the ordinance of August 28, 1586, to appear before the Chamber for matrimonial affairs and disputes. The maximum penalty for non-appearance was: for the first time, one gilder; for the second, three guilders; for the third time, ten guilders.

No. 119. CONSTANTIJN A. RENESSE A PUPIL OF REMBRANDT?

Inscription on the back of a drawing in the Roymans Museum at Rotterdam:

De eerste tekening getoont by Rem Bramt in jaer 1649 den 1 October het waert voor de tweede maal dat ick bij Rembrandt geweest bin.

The drawing itself represents Daniel in the Lions' Den, and is inscribed:

C. Renesse inventor et fecit 1652.

First published by Vosmaer, Rembrandt, 1868, p. 234.

The two inscriptions contradict one another. If the drawing was made in 1652, it cannot have been shown to Rembrandt on October 1, 1649. The date and signature on the recto have all the appearance of a genuine and contemporary inscription. We must therefore reject that of the verso, and with it the sole evidence that Renesse was directly the pupil of Rembrandt, although the few etchings and drawings by him now extant show very plainly that his art was greatly influenced by Rembrandt. The only extant picture by him, the family group in the Czernin Gallery, Vienna, is far less Rembrandtesque in character.

The inscription on the back was probably added by some one, with the idea of making the drawing more interesting, a device often adopted by forgers such as J. Stolker, C. v. Noorde and C. Ploos van Amstel.

No. 120. DECLARATION MADE BY HENDRICKJE STOFFELS IN REMBRANDT'S CASE AGAINST GEERTGHE DIRCX

October 1

§ 1. On October 1, 1649, Hendrickje Stoffels, spinster, appeared before the notary L. Lamberti, and declared upon her honour, in lieu of oath, that on the foregoing June 15, Rembrandt, in her presence and that of Trijntje Harmans, had made the following arrangement with Geertghe Dircx, who had been living with him, but who wished to leave his house. § 2. As soon as the agreement should be legalised, Rembrandt would pay Geertghe a sum of f. 150, and thereafter an annual pension of f. 60 till her death. § 3. If she required more, he would give her more at his discretion. § 4. But only on condition that the will she had made in favour of Titus should remain unaltered, and that she should make no further claims on Rembrandt.

§ 1. Den eerste October anno XVI. negenenveertich compareerde Hendrickje Stoffels, vrijster, ont 23 jaren, ende heeft bij haere vrouwe waerheijt in plaetse van eede, ten versoecke van den E. Rembrandt van Rijn, schilder, geattesteert. . . . . dat op den 15<sup>en</sup> Juny Iestleden (als wanneer Geertghe Dircx, Weduwe van zal' Abraham Claesz, Trompeter was in sijn leven, die aldaer eenighe tijdt hadde gewoont ende wilde van daer scheidende ende van hem affgaen) d'voorn. Requirant ende d'selve Geertghe Dircx, in presentie van haer Comparante ende van Trijntje Harmans, huysvrouw van Jan Pietersz, Constapel, hebben genaecht (over eenighe differentien, die den Requirant op haer hadde) accoort in de volgende manieren, te wetene:

§ 2. Dat d'voorn. Requirant heeft toegestaen, dat soo haest 't navolgende accoord, den rechten genoeghe zijnde, gestelt ende bevesticht soude sijn geweest, d'voorn. Requirant aen de voorsz. Geertghe Dircx soude betalen hondert en vijftich gulden Capitaal eens, ende voorts jaerlicx haer leven lang de somme van (hondert?) tsestich gulden, § 3. ende daerenboven indien sijt van noode hadde, noch soud adstiteren jaerlicx 't sijnen discretie tot haer eerhijkenoofdrifticheijt. § 4. Onder die conditie nochtans, dat het Testament, 't welck zij ten voordele van des Requiranten Soontge doen genaecht hadden voor mij Not' soude moeten blijven onverandert, ende dat

Geertghe geen pretensies meer op den Requirant soude mogen maecten; sonder arch of list, etc.

Geertghe's stoffen

From the file of the notary L. Lamberti. First published in Oud Holland, 1885, III, p. 96, by A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis.

In § 2. the sum is given as "tsestich gulden". This should no doubt read "hondert tsestich gulden". Either the notary made a mistake, or Hendrickje was wrong. Sixty guilders would have been too small a sum for the most modest pretensions, and everywhere else the sum is spoken of as f. 160. Cf. No. 117, § 6, § 10; No. 121, § 4; No. 123, p. 3.

No. 121. DECLARATION OF OCTAEF
OCTAEFFSZ TOUCHING
THE CONDUCT OF GEERTGHE DIRCX

§ 1. On October 14, the shoemaker Octaef Octaeffsz declares, at the request of the "wijt vermaerden" painter, Rembrandt van Rhijn, that he was present when the former made the agreement with Geertghe Dirx described under No. 120. He repeats the conditions there noted, and declares in conclusion:

§ 2. That on October 10, 1649, he was present in Rembrandt's kitchen, with Geertghe and the notary, for the purpose of signing the agreement, that Geertghe had become violent and unreasonable, and would not allow the document to be read over to her, much less sign it, though the notary had explained to her, that it contained nothing but the conditions already laid down.

§ 2. dat hij op den 10den October 1649 sijnde neffens my Notario ende d' voorn. Geertge Dirx in de koocken van den Requirant om 't accoord te teekenen, d' selve Geertge Dirx tegen den Requirant seer hevich en onredelyck heeft uytgevaren, willende 't accoord niet hooren lesen, veel min tekenen. Ende nietegenstaende dat ick Notaris haer mondelingh seijde, dat 't accoord niet anders inhouden soule als dese conditien.

§ 3. These conditions are repeated. § 4. Geertghe admits that these conditions were agreed upon, but she refuses to sign nevertheless; if she should become ill, she would require a maid or a nurse, and then the f. 160 would not be sufficient. § 5. Though Rembrandt professed himself willing to give more in this case, Geertghe nevertheless refused to sign.

§ 4. ende dat daernede alle actien ende pretensien, die d' een op d' ander soude mogen hebben, soudendood ende te niet sijn d'voorn; Geertge Dirx wel heeft bekent die conditien soo waren geaccordeert, maer dat sij 't accoord niet en wilde teekenen, nemende tot een uytvlucht bij sieckte ende andere swachheden een meyt ofte bewaerster, ende sulcx meer jaerlicx als hondert zestich gulden nodich te hebben, § 5. 't welck, althoewel den Requirant seyde sulcx tzijner discrecie te sullen verbeteren, heeft de voorn. Geertge Dirx geen accoord voor die tijd willen teekenen. Gedaen, etc.

We subjoin a commentary on the documents relating to the case, given under Nos. 113, 117, 118, 120-123, which may throw some light on the episode.

The documents mentioned under the dates March 2 and May 18, 1656, should also be taken into consideration.

Geertghe Direx, widow of the trumpeter Abraham Claesz, came to Rembrandt's house after the death of Saskia as nurse to Titus, an infant of one year old (No. 117, § 1).

She possessed nothing at the time (Ibidem, § 2).

Rembrandt loved her and, according to her account, repeatedly had sexual intercourse with her (No. 123, § 1).

She further asserts that he promised her marriage (Ibidem).

In any case he gave her a ring and other rich presents, for on leaving she declared that everything she possessed had been got in Rembrandt's house (No. 123; No. 117, § 2).

Rembrandt wished these presents (inter alia the "roosring" with diamonds) to return to Titus after Geertghe's death (No. 117, § 9).

It is therefore probable that they formerly belonged to Saskia.

Geertghe became attached to Titus and in her will dated January 24, 1648, made him her sole heir (No. 113).

Shortly afterwards, she quarrelled with Rembrandt, and it was decided that she should quit his house (on June 15, 1649, she was still in it: No. 120, § 1; on June 28, 1649, she had left: No. 117, § 4).

Rembrandt promises her a yearly pension of 160 guilders, on condition that she holds to the terms of her will above mentioned (No. 117, §§ 6-8).

Geertghe must have been a highly excitable woman, or have gradually become so, for she even refused at last to allow the conditions agreed upon between Rembrandt and herself to be read over to her (No. 121, § 2).

On September 25, 1649, she summoned Rembrandt to appear before the court (No. 118).

Rembrandt did not appear, but made another attempt to come to an agreement with her out of court (No. 121, October 10, 1649).

He made a draft of a new agreement (No. 123, § 4; October, 14, 1649).

On October 16, 1649, Geertghe summoned Rembrandt for the second time (No. 123).

He did not, however, appear before the third summons, when he laid the contract of October 14 before the Court (No. 123, § 4).

Meanwhile Geertghe had pawned some of the presents made her by Rembrandt, which he greatly valued. He promises to give her the money to redeem them. Firstly, on June 15, 150 guilders (No. 120, § 2) and later, as much as 200 guilders (No. 117, § 9).

He further promised her — evidently on June 28, 1649<sup>(1)</sup>, — a pension of 160 guilders, and in the event of her requiring more to enable her to live modestly but decently, a larger sum, according to his discretion (No. 117, §§ 6, 10; No. 121, § 4; No. 123, § 3).

On October 23, 1649, the Court increased the yearly pension to 200 guilders, but for the rest, obviously decided in favour of Rembrandt, for it approved the draft-agreement he laid before it (No. 123, § 4).

IN A PRIVATE COLLECTION AT AMSTERDAM

November 5

On November 5, 1649, a picture in the possession of Paulus Ramers and Agatha de Bruyn of Amsterdam was valued as follows:

Een out manstronie [head of an old man] door Rembrandt. . . . . f. 42.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. Weer, of Amsterdam.

Other valuations made were: Rustic subjects by J. M. Molenaar, f. 14.— and f. 6.—, a naked Woman by [A.] van Niculandt f. 6.—, Soldiers and

About 1650 No. 125. REMBRANDT SKETCHES LANDSCAPES IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD OF AMSTERDAM

On the reverse of a drawing by Rembrandt in the Heseltine Collection, London, representing a road on the bank of a river, with a group of trees, are the following lines in Philips Koning's handwriting :

*Dees tekeningh vertoont de buitenamstelkant
Soo braaf getekent door heer Rembrants eygen hant.*

P. Ko :

Neither drawing nor inscription is dated, nor is it possible to determine the date exactly. From the style of the drawing, however, it would seem to have been executed about 1648 or 1649. De Buiten-Amstel-Kant is the left bank of the river Amstel, before it enters the town at the toll-houses. Rembrandt often drew the place, inter alia in a series of drawings in the Duke of Devonshire's Album, reproduced by Lippmann, n<sup>o</sup> 53, 54, 64, 67, 71 and 82a.

The inscription was first mentioned in the manuscript inventory of the Valerius Roever Collection at Delft; Catalogus van mijne verz. v. Teekeningen 't zedert den jare 1705 tot heden 31 Dec. 1731.

Rembrandt.

On the reverse of two studies of an Oriental wooden figure are the following inscriptions in Rembrandt's handwriting :

cess Sophie of the Netherlands, and were bought for her from a Dutch dealer by the Grand Duke Charles Alexander in 1896. For further details, see Hofstede de Groot, Die Handzeichnungen Rembrandt's, under n<sup>o</sup> 541, 542.

The date of the inscriptions is somewhat uncertain. The drawings belong to the period of Rembrandt's full maturity. The wooden figures were probably in his possession before his bankruptcy.

No. 127. A POETICAL EULOGY ON A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT IN THE MAERTEN KRETZER COLLECTION 1650

Konstkabinet van Maerten Kretzer, 't Amsterdam. Gedrukt by Nicolaes van Ravensteyn, 1650.

*Ich sal niet poogen uwe roem
O Rembrant met mijn pen te malen
Elek weet wat eer dat ghy kont halen

The poem, by Lambert van den Bos, of which these four lines form one of the 120 strophes<sup>(1)</sup>, is examined and annotated at length in Oud Holland, 1884, II, p. 111 et seq., Vondeliana, II, Vondels handschriften (Vervolg) by J. H. W. Unger. It eulogises the principal pictures of this once famous collection<sup>(2)</sup>.

The commentator leaves it an open question whether the two pictures, Christ and the Cannaan- itish Woman<sup>(3)</sup> and the Adoration of the Magi, eulogised in six previous verses on p. 115 as works of the "Leyder Kindt", were by Rembrandt or Lucas van Leyden. In my opinion the term could only have applied to the latter, for Rembrandt was never so designated, and besides this, a return to Rembrandt in the passage quoted above, without any reference to the pictures by him already eulogised, would be extraordinary. It is not known what picture by Rembrandt was in Kretzer's collection.

1. Unger gave the number of stanzas incorrectly as 98.

2. Among them works by Titian, Bassano, Lastman, Rubens, Jordaens, Poelenburgh, ter Brugghen, Frans Floris, Pinas, Hout- horst, J. B. Weenix, Andrea del Sarto, Moro, Jan Hals (nick- named : de Gulden Ezel), Sandraert, A. Both, Ravesteyn, Albert Dürer, de Wit, Sotte Kleef, Porcellis, Mirabel, van Dyck, Vlegels, W. Kay, Fabritius, van Laer, J. D. de Heem, P. v. d. Bos, J. Asselijn and Lievens.

3. Not the Adaltriss as Unger supposes. The passages Matth. xv, 22-28 and Mark vii, 24-30 are paraphrased.

No. 128. A PICTURE OF DANIEL BY REMBRANDT
IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

In the inventory of one Pieter Croon of Amsterdam, a bankrupt, drawn up February 20, 1650, is the following entry :

*In 't voorhuys
Een schildereyge van Daniel van Rembrandt gedaen met een swarte lijst.*

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the Amsterdam archives.

No. 129. A DECLARATION MADE
BY REMBRANDT TOUCHING THE ACQUISITION OF DRAWINGS BY DE LA TOMBE

§ 1. On June 17, 1650, Rembrandt, at the request of the painter Jacob Ritsma, declared before the notary P. van Velsen, that about two years ago, shortly after the sale of L. van Beyerens's pictures, Ritsma had brought a book of drawings to his house. § 2. From among these, he took seven or eight that pleased him, paying Ritsma f. 24.—, which the latter was to remit to the person who had given him the commission. § 3. Meanwhile, Pieter de la Tombe being a frequent visitor at his house, he had shown him the drawings, which were by La Tombe's brother. § 4. La Tombe had praised the drawings and seemed desirous to buy them, whereupon Rembrandt had explained that though he had paid f. 24.— for the drawings, he did not know if he should get them for that. § 5. Pressed by La Tombe, he had at last told him, that he had had the drawings from Ritsma. § 6. A few days later, Ritsma brought back the money, saying that his principal would not sell the drawings at the price. § 7. Hereupon La Tombe came again, brought back the drawings and sold them to him for f. 24.—

Gedaen, etc. Rembrandt van Rijn.*

From the file of the notary P. van Velsen, of Amsterdam. First published in Oud Holland, 1890, viii, p. 177, by Dr. A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, Rembraut, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis, iii.

It appears from this document that Rembrandt, through the agency of Ritsma, offered some unknown person f. 24.— for seven or eight drawings by La Tombe, paying down the sum in advance. Later, Pieter de La Tombe intervened, induced the seller to demand the drawings back, and then sold them himself to Rembrandt for the same price. It is obvious that he wanted the commission Ritsma would otherwise have had. Ritsma's reason for getting Rembrandt to make the declaration is unknown.

Jacob Ritsma was a Groningen painter, practising at Amsterdam. Certain details concerning him are given in note 4, Oud Holland, viii, p. 176.

Pieter de la Tombe was the art-dealer from whom the etching, Bartsch n° 67, took the name "La Tombe's prentje" or "la petite Tombe." Salomon de la Tombe, the painter and draughtsman, was his brother; there are, however, some drawings by Pieter in existence.

For Leendert van Beyeren cf. our Nos. 39, 51 and 58.

1650 July 4 No. 130. DECLARATION MADE BY NEIGHBOUBS TOUCHING THE CONDITION OF GEERTGHE DIRCX

This deposition, made on July 4, 1650, before the notary J. Croese of Amsterdam, and sworn to before the burgomasters, is mentioned in our No. 163, but has not yet been traced. It probably contained statements as to Geertghe's excited state of mind.

1651 No. 131. A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT IN A DELFT SALE

At the sale in 1651 of the property of the deceased Jan Jacobsz Goeree, widower, whose wife, Judith Willensdochter van Vliet, died September 12, 1650, a number of pictures were put up to auction, among them :

Een Reynbrant . . . . . f. 60.—

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius and the notary A. H. H. van den Burgh from the file of the notary Georgijn of Delft.

The Rembrandt was the most expensive of the pictures. Other works were valued as follows : Ostade f. 26.5.—, Houckgeest f. 36.5.—, Saftleven f. 18.—, Van der Poel f. 23.5.—, P. v. Asch f. 44.—, f. 20. 10.—, f. 15.—, Jan Thomas f. 23.—, Van Goyen f. 30.—, P. Mulier f. 21.—, f. 19.—, f. 15. 15.— and f. 7.—, Bramer f. 20.— and f. 16.—, Palamedes f. 5.—, Vosmaer f. 14.—, f. 6. 10.—, Vromans f. 17. 10.— and W. v. Vliet, stepfather of the deceased, f. 8. 10.—.

1651 No. 132. INSCRIPTION ON AN ETCHING AFTER REMBRANDT

On the etching by J. Suyderhoef (Bartsch ii, p. 141, n° 84), after Rembrandt's portrait of Eleazar Swalmius, are six verses by H. Geldorpius :

*Aldus draecht Swalmius een kronvan grauwe haren
Geboren uit de zorg van vijftich min vier jaren*

Die by aan 't kerkerouer als gauwe stierman staat etc. concluding with : van zijn wacht ontslaat and in addition :

Rembrandt pinxit, J. Suyderhoef sculpsit, P. Goos excudit.

Swalmius became minister in the village of Poortugaal near Rotterdam in 1605; in 1651 he had therefore stood at the helm of the church for "vijftich min vier" = 46 years. The etching with the inscription must accordingly have been executed in 1651, and it is highly probable that the original picture dates from the same year. It cannot therefore be identical with the portrait in the Antwerp Museum, which represents Swalmius in a similar attitude, but is dated 1637 (Bode, Plate 226).

Bartsch, loc. cit. above, mentions three copies of Suyderhoef's plate, one by J. Brouwer, one by A. Conradus, with the address J. Tangena, and one anonymous, with the address P. Goos.

No. 133. PICTURE OF A LAUGHING MAN BY REMBRANDT 1652

In the inventory of one Herman van der Geel, who died at Delft in 1652, the following entry occurs :

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. v. d. Houve of Delft.

Among the laughing heads painted by Rembrandt before 1652 are the portraits of himself at the Hague (Bode, Plate 12), Nordkirchen (Plate 15), Paris, Warneck collection (Plate 161), and the Saskia at Dresden (Plate 151).

No. 134. REMBRANDT SIGNS HIS DRAWINGS IN JAN SIX' ALBUM 1652

In Jan Six' family album, "Pandora", Rembrandt made a drawing of Homer reciting his poems, with the inscription :

Rembrandt an Joannus Six . 1652.

Rembrandt an Joannus Six, 1652.

A second drawing in the album, of Jan Six' mother seated at a window, is signed :

Rembrandt f. 1652.

Cf. for these drawings Oud Holland, 1893, x, 1, p. 157, Jhr. Dr. J. Six, Iets over Rembrandt, Id. Oud Holland, 1897, xv, p. 1 et seq. De Homerus van Rembrandt, where there is a reproduction of the Homer drawing with the inscription. Both drawings are reproduced in Lippmann and Hofstede de Groot's Handzeichnungen Rembrandt's, n, 6 and 54.

1652 July 9 No. 135. REMBRANDT DRAWS THE RUINS OF THE AMSTERDAM TOWN HALL

On July 9, 1652, while the new Town Hall of Amsterdam was being built, the old Town Hall behind it was burnt down. Rembrandt stationed himself in the weighing-office opposite, or somewhere close by it, and made a drawing of the ruins on a sheet of paper, now in the J. P. Heselstine collection, London. It is inscribed:

*Van waerth afte sien dat Huis van Amsteldam doent af gebrandt was den 9 Julij 1652.
Rembrandt van rijn*

*van waech afte sien stats Huis van Amsteldam doent af gebrandt was den 9 Julij 1652
Rembrandt van rijn*

This drawing is entered in several old sale catalogues, among others that of the Van der Linden van Slingeland sale of August 22, 1785, at Dordrecht, n° 176, and that of Pieter Oets, January 31, 1791, at Amsterdam, Art-book A, n° 30. Facsimiled in Lippmann's Handzeichnungen Rembrandt's, n° 38.

There is a similar drawing of the ruins, without an inscription, in the Ducal Museum at Brunswick. There are also many old copies; among others that mentioned by Vosmaer (p. 550), as in the Van der Willigen sale.

1652 July 24 No. 136. A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT IN A LEYDEN INVENTORY

The following entry occurs in the inventory of the deceased Pieter Gerritsz van Hogemade, cloth-maker of Leyden:

Nr. 2 Een cleyn troneken [= tronetje, small head] van Rembrandt. . . . . f. 8.—

Other pictures in the list were: J. van Goyen f. 15.—, f. 18.— and a large one f. 33.—; sea-pieces by Staets f. 16.— and f. 7. 10.—; A. v. d. Tempel<sup>1)</sup> Shepherd and Shepherdess, f. 80.—

1. Abraham van den Tempel married Katharina, daughter of the deceased by his first wife, Reynoutge Reyniers van der Bangen (or Langen).

N. Moeyaert f. 18.— (two pictures); P. de Neyn f. 6.— and Jacq. de Rocheau (Rousseau) f. 6.—

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary K. Outermaan of Leyden.

No. 137. BURIAL OF A CHILD OF REMBRANDT'S?

1652 August 15

Doodboek Zinderkerk, 1 Aug. 1651 — 2 Nov. 1677.

Augustus, 1652

Kint inde kerek den 15 dito Rembrant lubberss van Rijn eygen graft comt . . . . . f. 4.—

First published in Oud Holland, 1883, 1, p. 5. Mr. N. de Roever, Een hmwelijk van Rembrandt, waarvan de eerste afkandiging twee eeuwen na zijn dood heeft plaats gehad.

De Roever took it absolutely for granted that the sexton made a mistake in the name, writing instead of Rembrant Harmensz, Rembrant Lubberss van Rijn. It is indeed quite possible. The sexton probably entered the names in the evening after his day's work, which made him more liable to errors than if he had taken them down directly from the lips of the mourners. But it must not be forgotten that the combination Rembrant Lubbertsz actually occurs, though without the adjunct van Rijn. In May, 1666, the baker Rem Lubberss was living at the corner of the Batevierstraat at Amsterdam (Inventory Desolate Boedelskamer C. C.).

Another entry, in the register of the burial-ground of St. Anthoni at Amsterdam, suggests further grounds for caution in this connection. On July 19, 1664, were buried "Rembrant van Ruynen en sijn kyndt, op de hoeck van de wijye steegh". Immerseel misread the name Rembrandt van Rijn. Scheltema, Rembrandt, 1853, p. 85.

No. 138. A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT IN A DELFT INVENTORY

1652 November 12

In an inventory drawn up by the notary S. Mesch of Delft on November 12, 1652, is the following entry:

Een tronge [= tronetje, small head] van Rembrant in ebbe lijst.

The remaining pictures are nearly all the works of Delft artists: A. Pijnacker, P. J. v. Asch, Odekerke, van Aelst, Pieter de Hijger, P. Vromans, etc. No prices are given.

Unpublished extract made by the late Mr. A. H. H. van der Burgh of the Hague, from the file of the notary S. Mesch of Delft.

No. 139. INSCRIPTION ON THE WATER-COLOUR COPY OF THE "NIGHT WATCH", IN THE ALBUM OF THE PRINCIPAL SITTEB. FRANS BANNING COCQ

Schets van de Schilderij op de groote Sael van de Cleveniers Doelen daerinne de Jonge Heer van Purmerlandt als Capiteijn, geeft last aen zijnen Lieutenant, de Heer van Vlaerdingen, om syn Compaignie Burgers te doen marcheren.

First reproduced in Oud Holland, 1886, iv, p. 204, by D. C. Meyer jr., De Amsterdamsche Schuttersstukken in en buiten het nieuwe Rijksmuseum, II.

Frans Banning Cocq had an album, in which he collected everything that related to himself and his family. This album was concluded before his death on January 1, 1655.

The inscription contains the oldest and no doubt the most accurate explanation of the action represented in the picture: Captain Banning Cocq gives the order to his lieutenant Willem van Ruytenburg to march out his company of the civic guard.

The sketch, like Lundens' copy of the picture in the National Gallery, contains two figures on the left which are not in the original. If it could be proved that the sketch was made directly from the latter, and not from Lundens' copy, the question as to whether the Night-Watch was ever cut down to its present dimensions would be finally settled. But the fact has not yet been established.

The album is at present in the possession of Jhr. D. de Graeff of the Hague.

The drawing has been repeatedly reproduced, inter alia in Oud Holland, 1886, iv, p. 204; Bredius, Masterpieces in the Rijksmuseum, p. 25.

No. 140. DEED OF SALE OF REMBRANDT'S HOUSE

On January 8, 1653, the Amsterdam sheriffs, Cornelis van Vlooswijk and Gerrit van Hellemont, declare that Christoffel Thijsz and Jan Beltens, joint heirs of Pr. Beltens jr., have appeared before them, stating that they have sold the house in the Bree-straat between the houses of Claes Elias, Salvador Rodrigues and Bastiaan Jacobsz to Rembrandt. § 2. No. 141. REMBRANDT GIVES A PROMISSORY NOTE TO CORNELIS WITSEN

§ 1. On January 29, 1653, Rembrandt appears before the sheriffs of Amsterdam and acknowledges himself indebted to Cornelis Witsen, councillor and sometime sheriff of the city, to the amount of f. 4180, which sum he had received in ready money. § 2. He promises to repay the same in a year, and assigns all his goods as security. § 3. Repayment of the sum by Rembrandt's trustee on February 22, 1658.

§ 3. In Margine : den inhoudt deser nevenstnende schepenkenisse is door d' heeren eommissarissen van desolaten boedel aan d' h' Wilsen voldaan den 22 Febr. 1658.

From the Schepenkenissen register, lrs. YY, fol. 256 v. First published by Dr. P. Scheltema, Rembrand, 1853, p. 72.

The expression "geloospant" (§ 2) refers to an ancient Amsterdam fashion of realising securities in the event of default. Cf., for instance, a work re-published several times during the course of the 18th century, the Amsterdamsche Secretary, p. 89 et seq., edition of 1700.

Cf. our No. 185 for the marginal note.

"Schepenkenissen" were promissory notes given in the presence of the sheriffs of Amsterdam. They took precedence of all other claims in the event of bankruptcy.

1653 February 1 No. 142. REMBRANDT'S DEBT TO CHRISTOFFEL THIJNS IN RESPECT OF THE PURCHASE OF HIS HOUSE

From item 2, it appears that Rembrandt had been in arrears with the interest for three years and a quarter, i. e. from November 1, 1649, and from the following items, that Christoffel Thijs had further paid not only his own but also Rembrandt's share of the municipal tax levied on purchases of real estate, the 40th and 80th penny, i. e. 2 1/2 o/o and 1 1/4 o/o of the total price (in this case f. 13,000). No. 143. CHRISTOFFEL THIJNS PRESENTS HIS ACCOUNT TO REMBRANDT

1653 February 4

§ 1. The notary S. van der Piet went on February 4, 1653, to Rembrandt's house and requested payment of the account given under No. 142, to the amount of f. 8470.16.— § 2. The stamped deed of transfer, which has long been ready, shall be handed over upon payment. § 3. In the event of further delay in the payment, Thijs, for weighty reasons, will resort to other means, entailing costs and interest. § 4. Rembrandt, however, refuses to accept the account, and replies that before paying, he must have the deed of transfer.

§ 1. *4 February 1653 heb ick Notaris, witten name van Sr. Christoffel Thijs, mij vindende aen Sr. Rembrant Hermansz van Rhyn d'selve presenterende een reeckening soo van 't capitaal der koop-peningen sijns hujs als interesten van dien, onder-teeckent bij de insinuant, dien volgende van deselve van Rhijn versocht prompte betalinge nopende f 8470.16.— met aenseggen, § 2. dat d'nernevens overgelevert sall werden de besegelde opdracht—off quyttschelding—brieff van overlang gereet gehouden, § 3. en in gevalle van langer treynement geprotestteert wegens seer hooge oorsaecken tot het gebruyck van sulcke middelen nls geraden sullen sijn, met voornemen mede, om alle de kosten en vordere inter-essen, item schude nen UE. te verhalten. § 4. First published loc. cit. under No. 142.

The "opdracht off quyttschelding brief" was the official document, by virtue of which the object therein specified was "opgedragen" i. e. "transferred" and the purchase-money "quytgeschol-den", i. e. acknowledged as received. Rembrandt's demand, that the document should be handed to him before payment, was illegal, and taking into account the notary's statement in § 2, obviously a subterfuge, resorted to because he was unable to pay.

OF DEBTS DUE TO HIMSELF 1653
March 28

On March 28, 1653, Rembrandt Harmansz van Rijn appears before the notary Duëc of Amsterdam and gives a power of attorney to François de Coster to collect all out-standing sums due to him. Heymen Dullert and Johan Hindrichszén sign as witnesses.

Unpublished. First mentioned in Oud Holland, 1890, viii, p. 178, by Dr. A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis, iii.

Heyman Dullaert was an obscure pupil of Rembrandt's. J. Hindrichszén was perhaps another. His name seems to indicate German or Danish origin.

No. 148. A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT
IN A LEYDEN INVENTORY 1653
September

In the inventory of the tailor Cornelis Thymansz van Geesdorp of Leyden, who was about to contract a second marriage, a number of pictures were valued by a "Prijsenster" (i. e. a female appraiser), among them :

Een stukken van Rembrandt met een ebben lyst. . . . . f. 6.—

Further, a Joh. Porcellis, f. 17.—, a J. van Goyen, f. 9.—, two van Rijcks, f. 24.— and a Droochsloot, f. 8.—, besides a large number of pictures without the names of the artists.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary K. Onterman of Leyden.

C. Th. van Geesdorp had acquired these pictures on June 9, 1649, from the wife he was about to marry. Cf. No. 116.

No. 149. REMBRANDT VALUES A PICTURE
BY PAULUS BRIL

On September 16, 1653, the artists H. van Uylenburgh, M. Kretzer, Lod. v. Ludick, Barth. Breenbergh, Barth. v. d. Helst, Sim. Luttichuys, Paulus Hennekijn, Ph. Koninck and W. Kalff, at the request of the painter, potter and art-dealer, Abraham de Cooge of Delft, attest the authenticity of a landscape by Paulus Brill.

§ 1. Rembrandt, the famous painter, aged about 46, appears before the notary J. van der Hoeven of Amsterdam, and declares that he too has seen, examined, and inspected the picture, and that he agrees with the opinion of the others. § 2. In the presence of his pupils, J. v. Glabbeek and J. Leveck.

§ 1. *Op den 16 September 1653 compareerde. . . The age assigned to Rembrandt, "omtrent 46 jaeren," is, as it purports to be, approximate only. Rembrandt was 47 on July 15, 1653. Nothing further is known of Jan Glabbeek, either as a pupil of Rembrandt or as a painter. For Leveck or Lavecq, cf. G. H. Veth in Oud Holland, 1889, vii, p. 308.

No. 150. A PORTRAIT BY REMBRANDT
IN A DELFT INVENTORY

1654

In the inventory of Willem Jansz van Onnen, found among the documents of the year 1654 in the file of a Delft notary whose name is not given, is the following :

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius. The files lie between those of the notary W. de Langue and J. van der Houwe.

No. 151. THE DATE OF REMBRANDT'S PORTRAIT OF JAN SIX

1654

Jan Six made the following chronostichon on his portrait :

Op mijn schilderij
Aonidas teneris qui sum veneratus ab annis
Talis ego Janus Sixius ora tui.

The letters in heavy type, taken as Roman numerals, give the date 1654.

First published by J. E. van Someren, Oude Kunst in Nederland, from the paper found by Jhr. Dr. J. Six among the literary remains of Jan Six.

Though it is not expressly stated that Six here referred to his portrait by Rembrandt, it is certainly highly probable, taking into account that no other portraits of him painted in this year are known. The famous picture, still in the possession of the family (Bode, Plate 371), is undated, but technically, it is akin to Rembrandt's works of the year 1654.

No. 152. A ST. JOHN PAINTED BY REMBRANDT

No. 154. A DISPUTE BETWEEN BEMBRANDT
AND DIEGO ANDRADA

§ 1. On February 23, 1654, the notary Adriaen Lock went, at the request of the Portuguese merchant, Sr. Diego Andrada, to see Bembrandt, and set forth the following matter to him: § 2. some time back, Andrada had commissioned Rembrandt to paint the portrait of a certain young girl, paying him f. 75 on account in advance, and agreeing to pay the rest on the completion of the picture. § 3. Andrada, however, does not consider the portrait at all like the girl, and he therefore requests Bembrandt to alter it before the departure of the girl, and to make it like her. § 4. If Bembrandt will not do this, he may keep the picture, as it does not suit Andrada, and he will demand restitution of the sum paid in advance. § 5. After hearing the above read, Bembrandt declares he will not touch the picture again or finish it, till the rest of the price has been paid or security given for its payment. § 6. Thereupon he will finish it, and will submit it to the heads of the Guild of St. Luke, who shall decide whether it be like or not. In the latter event, he will alter it. § 7. If Andrada will not agree to this, Bembrandt will keep the picture, and will offer it for sale the next time he has an auction of his pictures,

§ 1. Op huyden den xxij February 1654 hebbe ick Adriaen Lock, Not . . . , mij ten versoecke van Sr. Diego d'Andrada Portgees Coopman alhyer, gevonden en getrans portiert bij ende nevens

First published from the file of the notary A. Lock of Amsterdam, in Oud Holland, 1899, xvii, p. 2, by Dr. A. Bredius, Nieuwe Rembrandtiana. Nothing further is known of the persons concerned, nor of the further developments of the affair, nor is it recorded whether the proposed sale of Bembrandt's pictures took place.

No. 155. BEMBRANDT DEMANDS PAYMENT 1654
OF A DEBT May 1

§ 1. On May 1, 1654, the notary P. van Toll went at Rembrandt's request to Dirck van Cattenborch, and in the absence of the latter read to Willem Cornelisz Toll § 2. a statement to the effect that Bembrandt had received from Nicolaes Duysen-daelders a bill of exchange drawn by Dirck van Cattenborch on the latter's brother Otto, to the amount of f. 1005 capital and f. 40 interest, falling due on the first day of May. § 3. As the said Otto van Cattenborch had gone away without leaving an order to pay, Rembrandt demands payment of the f. 1045 from Dirck, minus a sum of about f. 800, which Rembrandt himself owes to Dirck. He will demand payment of the rest where and how he pleases. § 4. W. C. van Toll replied that he would inform van Cattenborch of the matter on his return. § 5. On May 2, Dirck van Cattenborch accordingly came to the notary, and having agreed that the f. 800 of Rembrandt's debt should be deducted, gave Nicolaes Duysendaelders a draft for the remaining f. 245.

No. 156. PORTRAIT OF JORIS DE CAULLERY 1654
PAINTED BY REMBRANDT June 16

Joris de Caullery, a sea-captain in the service of the Republic, is under orders to go abroad on July 1, 1654. Being much in debt, he is afraid that his creditors may take advantage of his absence, to sell his goods at a low price. On June 16, he accordingly makes over the portraits of himself and his wife to his children. Among these gifts was :

Aen zijn dochter Josijna de Caullery het conterfeytsel van hem, comparant met het roer in de handt, gedaen by M<sup>r</sup> Rembrant.

From the file of the notary Th. van Zwieten of the Hague. First mentioned by A. Rredius and G. H. Veth, Oud Holland, 1887, v, p. 51, Poulus Lesire; and published by A. Bredius, Oud Holland, 1893, XI, p. 128, De Portretten van Joris de Caullery.

The only extant portrait by Rembrandt representing an officer with a gun in his hand is the Portrait of an Officer, probably Joris de Caullery, in Mr. Charles T. Yerkes' collection, New York (Bode, Plate 84).

For the remaining portraits of this man and his wife, cf. Oud Holland, XI, p. 127 et seq.

The deed of gift was evidently cancelled after the captain's return. In his will of August 30, 1661, he left the same picture to his daughter Josyna. Cf. our No. 242.

From File 1x of the Church Council of the Nederduitsche Hervormde Gemeente of Amsterdam. Communicated by Professor H. C. Millies and first published by Kramm, Anhang sub voce Rembrandt, 1864.

These citations support Baldinucci's statement that Rembrandt belonged to the Mennonite community, or, at any rate, that he was not a member of the national church. In the first citation he is summoned to appear with Hendrickje. It was then evidently discovered that he was not a member of the church, and the two subsequent citations deal only with Hendrickje. She did not deny the charges. On October 30, 1654, Cornelia, her child and Rembrandt's, was baptised.

REMBRANDT IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY 1654
December 7

In the inventory of the deceased Catharina Scharckens, widow of Cornelis Smout of Amsterdam, the following entry occurs :

Een bruiloft van Rembrandt.

From the file of the notary A. Eggerix of Amsterdam. First published by A. Bredius in Oud Holland, 1890, VIII, p. 229, Het Schildersregister van Jan Sysmus. The portrait of Carel Fabritius occurs in the same inventory.

The only known picture by Rembrandt representing a wedding is the Marriage of Samson in the Dresden Gallery, painted in 1638 (Bode, Plate 222). Cf. No. 91 above.

No. 160. REMBRANDT GIVES CHRISTOFFEL
THIJSSENS A PROMISSORY NOTE 1654
December 10

§ 1. Rembrandt and Christoffel Thijssens appear before the sheriffs of Amsterdam, the former declaring that he owes Thijssens a yearly interest of f. 52, n. 4. § 2. The debt is secured on his house and plot of ground in the Breestraet and all his remaining goods. § 3. The interest to be paid on November 8 of each year without reduction. § 4. But Rembrandt has the option of paying off the original debt of f. 1168, 4.— with interest.

This note gave Christoffel Thijssens at least a certain security for his interest on the arrears of the purchase-money for Rembrandt's house, for in the event of bankruptcy, the debt would be treated as a preferential claim. Cf. under our Nos. 142, 143.

1655 No. 161. A DRAWING BY LEONARD BRAMER
AFTER A SUPPOSED REMBRANDT

In a series of drawings by Leonard Bramer after pictures belonging to private owners at Delft is one representing a woman shearing sheep, surrounded by the flock. Bramer himself wrote under it: "Den onbekend", but below this is written in another hand, also of the middle of the seventeenth century:

Reinbrant.

The ascription, to judge by the hasty sketch, is a very bold one.

The drawing must have been executed shortly before 1655.

§ 1. On December 25, 1655, L. van Ludick and A. Fransz appear before the notary and declare that Rembrandt had purchased from D. van Cattenburch

(acting on behalf of his brother Otto), the house and piece of land in the Hoogstraet, opposite the civic artillery-magazine, in which the painter, Hercules Sanders, is at present living. § 2. And this for f. 4000.— in cash, on which sum Rembrandt is to pay interest, and f. 3000.— worth of pictures and prints. § 3. Cattenburch, on his part, is forthwith to pay f. 500.— in cash and a second sum of f. 500.— within a year, for which Rembrandt is to hand over pictures and prints. § 4. These arrangements were made about a year ago, and now van Ludick and Fransz are requested to value the pictures and prints. Cattenburch has accordingly handed them the specification of the pictures and prints he is to take for the f. 3000.—. § 5. The valuation: A, of the pictures, B, C, of the etchings, D, of six small pictures by A. Brouwer and J. Porcellis, E, of an etched portrait of Otto van Cattenburch, equal in quality to that of Jan Six, which Rembrandt is to execute. § 6. Declaration that the valuation is an equitable one. § 7. Reasons adduced: Abraham Fransz was present, when the agreement as to the negotiations mentioned sub D and E was made, and Ludick had often heard from Cattenburch's own lips that he had accepted the pictures at the price mentioned.

Lodewijk van Ludick is the painter of Italian landscapes whose name occurs so often in connection with Rembrandt; Abraham Fransz (1) the art-dealer whose portrait was etched by Rembrandt (Bartsch, n° 273). The brothers Dirck and Otto van Cattenburch have already made their appearance in the document given under No. 155, and so has the painter Hercules Sanders. The witness Thomas Asselijn was a poet, and the brother of Jan Asselijn, the painter.

The civic artillery-house had long been the East India Company's House in the year 1655. It still exists under this name.

The supplementary specification mentioned under § 5 A is unfortunately missing.

The sum of f. 750.— for six small pictures by Brouwer and Porcellis is a large amount for the period. It is not known whether the etched portrait of Otto van Cattenburch mentioned under § 5 F. was ever executed by Rembrandt. In any case, it does not exist under this name, and there is no portrait etched after 1655 with which it could be plausibly identified.

Nor are we better informed as to what Rembrandt did with the house in the Hoofstraet. At the time of his bankruptcy, six months after the date of this document, he no longer owned it.

No. 164. PIETER DIRKSZ DEMANDS THAT REMBRANDT SHOULD PROCURE HIS RELEASE FROM PRISON 1656
March 2

Pieter Dirksz, brother of Geertghe Dirck, had requested Cornelia Janssen, wife of Willem Jansz Couhouwer, to place Geertghe in an asylum, which she accordingly did, Rembrandt paying all the expenses. When on account of his embarrassments, he wanted his money back a few years later, and could not get it, he caused Pieter Dirksz, who was about to sail as carpenter on the vessel "de Bever", to be thrown into the debtors' prison, whereupon the latter, on March 2, 1656, sent the notary Justus van de Ven to Rembrandt to reproach him with having unjustly imprisoned him. He (Dirksz) must and will leave the country. If Rembrandt makes this impossible, the subsequent expenses will be laid to Rembrandt's account. He also demands damages for all the abuse and affronts he has suffered and undergone by Rembrandt's action against him.

Rembrandt replied that Pieter Dirksz had cited him to appear before the court of appeal, and that he will answer the charges there. He will consider, however, whether it might be possible to arrange the matter otherwise, but he will not consent to Dirksz' release from custody.

No. 165. DEPOSITION AS TO PLACING GEERTGHE DIRCX IN AN ASYLUM

§ 1. On May 3, 1656, Cornelia Jans appeared before the notary J. Molengraeff of Amsterdam and deposed, at Rembrandt's request, that in the year 1650 she had been asked by the friends, i. e. the nearest relatives, of Geertghe Dircx, to help in removing her to the asylum at Gouda. § 2. To this end, she had advanced about f. 140.—(rather more than less) for the expenses of the journey, and as fees to officials, the regents and the matron of the establishment. § 3. At the request of the relatives she had applied to Rembrandt for the sum, and had received it from him. § 4. She further declared that a deposition now shown to her, made by neighbours concerning Geertghe Dircx before the notary J. Crosse on July 4, 1650, was sworn to before the burgomasters by the deponents.

No. 166. REMBRANDT APPEARS BEFORE
THE CHAMBER OF ORPHANS TO MAKE OVER HIS HOUSE TO HIS SON

1656
May 17

On May 17, 1656, Rembrandt declares before the Chamber of Orphans that his house is a part of the maternal heritage of his son Titus, aged fifteen. § 2. And this with a proviso, until he (Rembrandt) shall marry again, in which event he would have to hand over the whole inheritance to his son. § 3. Meanwhile he will keep it for him until his majority. § 4. To free the house from the charges upon it, he mortgages all his property real and personal, present and future. § 5. In consideration whereof Rembrandt is to enjoy the usufruct of the remaining property, with the consent of Titus' maternal relatives.

§ 1. Den 17. May 1656 heeft rembrant vant rlijn, schilder bewesen sijnen soone titus, out 15 iaer, daer moeder af was Saskia van uylenbarch, voor sijn moeders erffnisse, een huys ende erff, staende ende gelegen op de anthony breestraet, vrij sonder eenig belastinge.

After the bankruptcy, which was probably declared in consequence of this transfer, the following notes were added on the same page :

Den 22 Januari 1658 heeft Jan Verwout [the guardian of Titus] de quyttscheldinge vant huys opgebracht [i. e. produced the receipt for the payment made on account of the purchase-money, thus attesting ownership of the house].

*Den 22 Juli 1665 is de quyttscheldinge vant voorsz. huys behaendicht aen titus van Rhijn als bekomen hebbende veniam aetatis daer op deselve titus van Rhijn bekent van voors. A German version by E. Koloff in von Raumer, Histor. Taschenbuch, Leipzig, 1850, p. 563 et seq.

A very intelligent commentary on this inventory of Rembrandt's has appeared during the publication of the present volume: W. Valentiner's Rembrandt und seine Umgebung, II: Anmerkungen zu Rembrandt's Kunstbesitz, p. 64 et seq. Strasburg, 1905.

We have retained the numeration, which appears only in Bürger's French edition of Scheltema, and in Rovinski. It does not figure in the original.

The document now in existence has more the appearance of a fair copy than of an inventory made in the course of two days by persons going round the house.

This inventory gives certain indications of the arrangement of Rembrandt's dwelling. All the walls were hung with pictures, all the cupboards — fixtures belonging to the house — were full of artistic objects.

There were 6 chairs in the hall (30, 31), one of them on a raised platform (32) by the window, such as we see in pictures by P. de Hooch and Metz, and further, the cupboard belonging to Hendrickje. Cf. our Nos. 191 and 314.

The side room, looking into the street and adjoining the hall, contained a mirror (72), a table with a cloth (75), 7 velvet chairs (76) and a marble cooler (74).

Behind this there was a simpler room (often called the "binnenhaert"), looking into a little courtyard, and containing household utensils: a press (97), kettle (100), clothes-horse (101), and a small table (95) with 4 plain chairs (98) and cushions belonging to these (99).

The four "Kaertschilden" (96) are generally supposed to have been screens to regulate the light in etching.

From the hall, the corridor ran past the side room, the inner room, and the little courtyard to the large saloon or back room looking out to the back, which was evidently used by Rembrandt as a bed-room (132-135, 137). The bed-steads, which are not mentioned in the inventory, must have belonged to the house. No mention is made of a wash-stand. In addition to the bed things, we find here a large mirror (126), 6 blue chairs (127), a table with a cloth (128, 129), a cane chair (136), a press, and a little cupboard for children's clothes, both of cedar-wood (130, 131).

This concludes the inventory of the ground-floor. The studios and art-rooms were evidently on the first floor, the store-rooms perhaps above these, the kitchen in the basement under the large back room.

No painting utensils of any kind appear in the studio, no easels, chairs, palettes, paints, grinding-boards, etc. Even the partitions, which we know from No. 180 to have belonged to Rembrandt, are not included.

In the ante-room there was only an old chest (309), 4 leather chairs (310) and a table (311); in the store-room a bed-stead (350), perhaps belonging to Titus?

The kitchen utensils are entered under 351-358, the linen appears under 359-363.

Throughout the inventory we find no mention of stoves (Cf. No. 180 § 3), curtains, or family portraits, an item that cannot certainly have been lacking in Rembrandt's house.

Articles belonging to Hendrickje and the little Cornelia were not included in the inventory.

No. 173. AGREEMENT BETWEEN REMBRANDT AND DANIEL FRANSSEN

September 26

On September 26, 1656, Rembrandt appears before the notary Torquinius and admits that he owes the surgeon Mr. Daniel Franssen a considerable sum of money, as set forth in the promissory note given before the sheriffs. § 2. As he is about to sell his goods and art collections, he promises, in the event of being unable to pay Franssen in full out of the proceeds, to make up the balance by painting a few pictures, which Franssen agrees to take on the valuation of two impartial appraisers. § 3. L. van Ludick and Abraham Franssen are appointed for this purpose.

TO ACT FOR HIM AGAINST REMBRANDT

§ 1. On September 27, 1656, the surgeon Daniel Franssen appears before the notary H. C. Torquinius, and declares that he has given his brother Abraham powers to demand in his name, from Rembrandt, solvent or insolvent, f. 3150, which Rembrandt owes him, as appears from the "Schepenkennis" of May 30, 1656; and further to give a receipt for the same, to satisfy all legal requirements in connection therewith, and to do everything Daniel himself should or could do. § 2. He engages to approve anything Abraham or his representative may do in the matter.

From Registers C and D of the "Desolate Boedelskamer" of Amsterdam. First published by Dr. P. Scheltema, Rembrandt, 1853, p. 81. An English translation by C. J. Nieuwenhuys had, however, already appeared in 1834, in his Review of the Lives and Works of some of the most eminent Painters, London, pp. 38, 39. Scheltema, loc. cit., made use of another text, which does not contain the totals carried over to a new account at the beginning of each year, but, on the other hand, has certain smaller items which we give enclosed in square brackets.

The only assets were the proceeds of the sales: that of the furniture by Thomas Jacobsz Haringh, amounting to f. 4964.4, and that of the house by Samuel Gerincx ad l. f. 6713.3; total f. 11 677.7.

Only those creditors whose claims were secured were dealt with, and these were only satisfied in part. Of the creditors whose claims were unsecured we hear nothing. No discharge can therefore have been granted. Rembrandt remained a bankrupt till his death.

The creditors whose claims were satisfied wholly or in part were:

The secretary Frans Jansz Bruyningh was a distant relative of the Nicolaes Bruyningh, whose portrait, painted by Rembrandt in 1652, is in the Cassel Gallery (Bode, Plate 367).

The Concierge, Thomas Jacobsz Haringh, was etched by Rembrandt in 1655 (Bartsch, n<sup>o</sup> 275).

No. 177. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT LEFT
BY JOHANNES DE RENIALME
THE ART-DEALER

June 27

On June 27, 1657, the works of art left by the deceased art-dealer, Johannes de Renialme, were valued by the painter Adam Camerarius and Marten Kretzer.

Among them were the following by Rembrandt:

No. 291 het vroukje in overspel . . . . .	f 1500.—
„ 292 Rembrandts contrefeytsel, anteyck . . . . .	150.—
„ 294 Laserus verwekkinge van Rembrant . . . . .	600.—

No. 299 Maria en Joseph . . . . .	120.—
(no number) Maria en Joseph . . . . .	36.—
„ 300 een moor . . . . .	12.—

„ 304 een antyque tronie . . . . .	50.—
(no number) een Hester en Assuerus . . . . .	350.—

There were in all over 400 pictures, a miscellaneous collection of masters and schools, Italians, Dutchmen, Hollbein, etc. The total valuation was f. 36 512.10.

From the file of the notary F. Uyttenbogaert of Amsterdam. First published by A. Bredius in the Amsterdamsch Jaarboekje, 1891, p. 62 et seq. Cf. also Floerke, Studien zur niederl. Kunst und Kulturgeschichte, 1907, p. III.

No. 291 was the most valuable picture of the collection. It was the famous Woman taken in Adultery of 1644, in the National Gallery (Bode, Plate 247).

No. 292, the portrait of Rembrandt in antique costume, and n° 304, the antique head, cannot now be identified with any confidence.

No. 294. The only extant example of a Resurrection of Lazarus (Bode, Plate 45) is hardly to be accepted as a picture that was valued at f. 600 in 1657.

For n° 299 and the following number we may take into consideration Bode's Plates 37, 38, 242, 248, 250-252, and 336.

No. 300. The Moor may be the picture in the Wallace Museum (Bode, Plate 148).

No. 301 was doubtless the St. Petersburg picture, (Plate 126), which was still in Rembrandt's possession a year earlier (n° 37 in his inventory).

No. 302 is unknown to us; n° 303 we have no means of identifying; the last picture on the list cannot have been one of the three extant scenes from the history of Esther (Bode, Plates 411, 530, 531), for all these are later in date than the document under discussion.

No. 178. PAYMENT IS REQUIRED FROM
L. VAN LUDICK AS REMBRANDT'S SURETY

§ 1. On August 1, 1657, the notary P. Padthuysen went with witnesses at Gerbrand Ornia's request to the house of Lodewijk van Ludiek to make the following statement: § 2. Ornia has taken over a promissory note given by Rembrandt to Jan Six on March 7, 1653, in respect of a debt for which Ludiek was surety. § 3. As Rembrandt is now in financial difficulties, and as it is evident to Ornia, after enquiries made at the Bankruptcy Court, that he can expect nothing from Rembrandt, he demands immediate payment from Ludiek; failing which, he shall sue him for the amount, as he herewith declares to him. § 4. Van Ludiek hereupon replies, that he will talk over the matter bona fide with Ornia.

§ 1. Op huyden denersten dach Augusti Anno 1657 hebbe ick, Pieter Padthuysen, openbaer Notaris. . . . , mij neffens de naergen. getuygen ten versoeke van Sr. Gerbrand Ornia, wouende binnen deser stede, getransporteert aen Sr. Lodewijk van Ludick, en hem geinsinnuert. . . . t gecue volcht:

§ 2. Den insinuant actie en transport hebbende van Sr. Jan Six van eene obligatie in dato den 7 Maert 1653 by Rembrant van Rijn ten behoeve van den voorn. Six gepasseert, in dewelcke ghij U als borge hebt geconstitueert voor de voorn. van Rijn, § 3 en want denselven van Rijn in soodanigen verloop van saecken is gecooenen, dat hij hem is dienende van den miserabelen staet en benefitie van cessie, hebbende hij insinuant op de camer van de Desolate boedels vernomen naer de gelegentheit van den boedel van den voorn. van Rijn, van dewelcke hem insinuant int minste niet en staet te verwachten, soo doct den insinuant U geinsinnuerde door ons, notaris en getuygen, aendienen en insinueren, dat ghij metten aldereersten den insinuant aen de betalinge sult helpen, ofte bij naerlaticheyt soo protesteert hij insinuant, dat hij U om deselve betalinge als borge voor den voornoemde van Rijn sal aansprecken en convenieren, protesterende mits desen van genoechsamen advertentie en waerschouwinge.

From the file of the notary P. Padthuysen of Amsterdam. First published in Oud Holland, 1890, viii, p. 181, by A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis, III.

The promissory note given by Rembrandt to Six, for which van Ludiek was surety, has not been discovered as yet. It was probably drawn up before a notary and not before the sheriffs, and therefore did not constitute a preferential claim. As it was evident from the outset that only preferential claims in their due sequence would be dealt with in the settlement, Ornia, to whom Six had transferred the bill, applied directly to Ludiek as Rembrandt's surety.

§ 1. On October 20, 1657, Titus appears before the notary Spithoff to make his will. § 2. He makes his half-sister Cornelia his sole legatee, § 3. and appoints Rembrandt and Hendrickje, or the survivor of the two, to be her guardians or guardian, to the exclusion of the Chamber of Orphans or other guardians § 4. under the express condition, that Rembrandt shall enjoy the income of the property for his life, § 5. such income to be applied to his nourishment and maintenance, § 6. and not to any other purpose, and in particular not to the payment of debts already incurred or hereafter to be incurred. Nor may Rembrandt make over or sell such income to any third person. § 7. This life-interest is in lieu of the portion of his estate legally due to his father, which portion is withheld from him by the present will. § 8. No. 180. A SUPPOSED REMBRANDT SOLD AT THE HAGUE. 1657
October 25

Among the papers of the Dutch statesman Leo Aytzma, found after his death in the possession of his secretary Lelienbergh, and sequestered by the Provincial Court of Holland, was a loose sheet with the following note, from which it appears that at the sale of M. Page at the Hague, J. van den Berge bought pictures for Aytzma:

No. 182. TITUS VAN RIJN'S SECOND WILL

This will, dated November 22, 1657, is identical with the earlier document down to the words: "in plaetse van dien begeert genoeg" at the close of § 8. It then continues as follows:

§ 1. Rembrandt is again expressly appointed sole guardian of Titus' half-sister Cornelia, to the exclusion of the Chamber of Orphans and all other guardians. § 2. He is to administer the estate at his own discretion, and in case of pressing necessity, he is permitted to take some portion of the capital for his relief, the testator being confident that he will deal equitably in the matter. § 3. Rembrandt may appoint another guardian to act with him, if he thinks it advisable, and if circumstances seem to require it; and also he may appoint one or two persons to administer the property after his own death under the supervision of the Chamber of Orphans.

§ 4. The testator further directs that after his father's death the annual income of the estate shall be applied to the bringing up of Cornelia and the maintenance of her mother. § 5. When Cornelia marries or attains her majority, she is to have one half of the income, and Hendrickje the other half, unless she should marry, in which event it is to revert to Cornelia. § 6. At Cornelia's death her children are to inherit the whole property absolutely. § 7. If she should die without issue, the estate is to be equally divided between the maternal and paternal relatives of Titus. § 8. Cornelia is not to encumber or alienate the property, nor is she to make any will incompatible with the provisions of the testator. § 9. If Cornelia dies without issue, her mother is to enjoy the income of the estate for her life. § 10. In conclusion, Titus expressly forbids his father, to give any account or inventory of the property to anyone, and still less, to offer it as a security.

§ 1. Authoriserende tot eenige en absolute voogt over sijn testateurs voorn. halve susterken de voorn. sijne vader, met expresse uytshytinge van de Ed. Heeren Weesm<sup>n</sup> en andere Oppervoogden, wie diesouden mogen wesen, deselve met behoorlijke reverentie van de moeyten bedanckende, § 2. sullende sijn testateurs voorsz. vader sijne na te laten goederen moge regeeren en administreren over sijn goedduncken en gelieven, oock in cas van nootdrufftigheyt en des noot sijnde wel van 't capitael te mogen afnemen, aentasten en tot nootdrift gebruycken, twelk hem ten vollen toevertrouwt wert, daerinne niet anders als naer behoren te sullen handelen. § 3. Sal oock sijn vader een tweede voogt neffens hem mogen kieser, soo't hem geraden dunct en de sacker selve vereyscht, gelijckelij oock mede sal mogen substituieren en stellen een offe twee bequame persooenen, omme sijn testateurs naer te laten goederen, naer 't overlijden van sijn testateurs vader onder 't oppergesach van de Ed. Heeren Weesm<sup>n</sup> te regereer en te administreren en de vruchten te employeren volgende dese nytterste wille. § 4. Voorder is noch sijn testateurs wille en begeren, dat bij sterven van sijn testateurs voorn. vader de gemelde jaerlijcke vruchten en incompten van sijne na te laten goederen sullen dienen tot opbrenginge en onderhout van de voorn. Cornelia, sijn halve susterken, alsmede tot onderhout van desselfs moeder Hendrickje Stoffels. § 5. doch soo wanneer de voorsz. Cornelia comt ten huwelijcken state ofte mondigen jare, sullen deselve vruchten alsdan bij haer voor d'ene helft en bij hare moeder voor d'ander helft gennten werden, soo lange totdat deselve hare moeder sich comt ten huwelijcken state te begeven, als wanneer deselve in haer reguart sullen ophouden ende int geheel comen ende genoten werden bij sijn testateurs halve suster voorn. § 6. Eynelijck heeft hij testateur noch gewilt en begeert, dat bij sterven van de voorn. Cornelia de goederen bij haer van hem testateur l'erve geeregen, ofte daerinne sij bij desen is g'instituert, int geheel en sonder afstrek van trebellianique ofte andere portien sallen moeten gaen, erven en succederen op hare na te laten kint ofte kinderen of verder afcomeling bij representatie, § 7 of bij gebreecke van nasact in 't leven te hebben, dat alsdan deselve goederen mede als voren int geheel sullen erven en succederen aen sijn vrienden van sijn vaders sijde voor d'eene helft, en aen de vrunden van sijn testateurs overleden moederssijde voor de andere helfte, als heuduyden daerinne substituerende bij desen, § 8 sonder dat deselve Cornelia de goederen sal mogen belasten, beswaren ofte veralleneren, nochte oock contrarie d'inhout deses by gene forme van uytterste wille te mogen werden gelisponeert. § 9. Des sal de voorn. Hendrickje Stofjels (in cas en soo wanneer Cornelia sonder nasact comt te sterven) de vruchten van de goederen haer leven langh tot haer onderhout mogen trecken en genieten. § 10. Verbiedende voorts wel expres, dat sijn testateurs vader aen niemant ter werelt gehouden sal wesen te geven eenige openinge, staet ofte inventaris van de goederen bij hem testateur naer te laten, veel min te stellen eenige borgen ofte verseeckeringe, als sulcx wel expres verbiedende en hem daeraf ontlastende mis desen. Etc.

Titus Rembrantsz. van Rijn.

From the file of the notary J. Q. Spithoff living on the Singel, Amsterdam. First published loc. cit. under the first will (see No. 179), p. 226.

None of the eventualities provided for in the will arose. Titus married and left a (posthumous) daughter himself. On his marriage, or as soon as there was a prospect of his becoming a father, he revoked this will, and made a new one. This has not yet come to light, though we know that in it he appointed Fr. van Bijlert guardian of his child. Cf. our No. 319, § 2.

These two wills are of great interest as showing the testator's confidence in his father, and affection for his half-sister and step-mother.

Landlord of the Keyzers Croon.

English translation of the lost original, published by C. J. Nieuwenhuys, A Review of the Lives and Works of some of the most eminent Painters, London, 1834, p. 34.

All attempts to find the original among the documents of the "Desolate Boedelskamer" at Amsterdam have proved fruitless.

The date 1656 given by Nieuwenhuys is certainly incorrect. It was not until November, 1657, that the authorisation for the sale of Rembrandt's effects was given (No. 181), and the account of the expenses of this sale cannot therefore be referred to 1656. Equally incorrect is the assumption — made, for instance, by Vosmaer, p. 333 — that Rembrandt lived for a time at the Keyzerskroon, and that the document was his hotel-bill. Rembrandt's house was not sold until February, 1658. It is almost certain that he remained in it till then, and left it for his new home, probably that on the Roosegracht. The landlord's account was treated as a preferential claim upon the estate, and paid; it must therefore have referred to the costs of the bankruptcy, and not to Rembrandt's maintenance. The amount would have been large for a stay of three weeks by a bankrupt visitor, but it is moderate enough for the sale expenses of such a comprehensive collection as that of Rembrandt's effects and art-treasures, the display of which necessitated the use of several rooms.

1658 No. 184. INSCRIPTION ON A PRINT OF
" THE LARGE COPPENOL " ETCHING

On the print of the etching known as " the large Coppenol " (Bartsch, n° 283), which was in the V. Denon sale in 1826, was this inscription, written by Coppenol himself :

Qui art a partout part a. Lieveu van Coppenol R. v. Rijn fecit anno 1658.

Dr. P. Scheltema's Rembrandt, 1866, p. 117.

It is also given by Vosmaer, 2nd edition, p. 558.

The picture has disappeared. Six years later
Rembrandt painted the Lucretia of the Demidoff Collection, San Donato, now in America, but well-known by C. Kopping's etching.

In addition to the Rembrandt, the inventory contains a Venus and Cupid by Rubens, a "Fruytgagie" (fruit-piece) by van den Uyl, a "Fruytgagie" by G. de Vries, and two landscapes with cattle by J. B. Wolfert.

It does not appear why Verwout was superseded. From this time forth Louis Craeyers acted very vigorously in defence of Titus' interests.

No. 193. TITUS VAN RIJN MENTIONED IN A DEPOSITION

May 1

On May 1, 1658, certain persons make an unimportant statement about the breaking of a mirror, in which the following sentence occurs:

dat zy getnygen gesten hebben dat den requirant voor de lommert van seker persoon (die hy verstaet geweest te sijn de soon van Rembrandt van Rijn, schilder, op zyn hoofd geset wiert. . . en dat hy daarmede voort gegaen is naer de Lommersbruch.

From the file of the notary A. Lock of Amsterdam. First published in Oud Holland, 1898, xvii, p. 3, by Dr. A. Bredius, Nieuwe Rembrandtiana.

An erroneous interpretation is given to this passage loc. cit. above, by a mistake in punctuation. What the plaintiff really says is, that the mirror was placed on his head by a person who, as he has since learnt, is the son of the painter Rembrandt, in front of "de Lommert", i. e. the civic loan-office, and that he walked thus to the Lommersbruch [Lombards' Bridge], which leads across the Oude Zijds Voorburgwal near the loan-office.

No. 195. TWO AGREEMENTS BETWEEN REMBRANDT AND JAN SIX CANCELLED

§ 1. The names of the parties. § 2. The commissaries, with the mutual consent of the parties, cancel two agreements, one whereby Rembrandt sells the portrait of Saskia, the other in Rembrandt's favour, touching a Simeon, and a St. John preaching. The document relating to the latter had been lost in Rembrandt's possession. § 3. The annulment, however, is only to apply to the indemnities that the parties had agreed to pay, should they infringe the contract.

The portrait of Saskia is the one in the Cassel Gallery (Bode, Plate 150).

The Simeon is probably the picture by Lievensz, which was among the property left by Jan Six in 1702: n<sup>o</sup> 48, Simeon in the Temple, van Johan Lievensz de Oude, valued at f. 150.— to f. 130.— and f. 60.— and bought by Nicolaes Six for f. 50.—

The Preaching of John the Baptist was by Rembrandt, and likewise figures in the inventory as: "n<sup>o</sup> 38, St. Jans Predicatie, in 't Grauw van Rembrandt, zo raar en ongemeen konstig als te bedenken is"; valued at from f. 800.— to f. 600.—, bought for f. 710.— by Jan Six junior. The picture is now in the Berlin Gallery (Bode, Plate 215).

No. 196. THE COMMISSARIES
OF THE "DESOLATE BOEDELKAMER" ORDER REMBRANDT'S DRAWINGS AND ENGRAVINGS TO BE SOLD

1658
September 24

Adriaen Hendriexen is commissioned to superintend the sale of the prints and drawings among Rembrandt's effects, and to arrange and distribute them beforehand, in such manner as he may think will cause them to sell most advantageously.

No. 197. POSTER, ANNOUNCING THE SALE OF REMBRANDT'S COLLECTION OF ENGRAVINGS

1658
After
September 24

§ 1. Rembrandt's trustee announces, that, by order of the Bankruptcy Court, he is about to sell the "Papier Kunst" (paper art = prints) forming part of Rembrandt's estate, and consisting of the works of Italian, French, German and Netherlandish masters, collected with great discrimination by Rembrandt. § 2. Also a large number of drawings and sketches by Rembrandt himself. § 3. The place and hour of the sale.

§ 2. Gelijc dan mede een goede partije van Teekeningen, ende Schetsen van denselven Rembrandt van Rijn selven.

§ 3. De verkopinge sal wesen ten daeghe, ure ende Jahre als boven, ten huise van Barent Jansz. Schuurman, Wuert in de Keyzers Kroon, in de Kalverstraet, daer de verkopinge voor desen is geweest. Segget Voort.

First published by C. Josi in his Beredeneerde Catalogus der werken van Rembrandt van Rijn... uit het Kabinet van C. Ploos van Amstel J. Czn. Amsterdam, 1810, p. vi*.

The intimation of the time "ten daeghe, ure ende Jahre als boven" does not appear in Josi's transcript, but is given by E. Maaska, p. Rembrandt, Amsterdam, 1828, Bijlage D. It is therefore probable that it was in the superscription of the poster, of which there is now no extant copy. Vosmaer, 1st edition, p. 275, says that the sale was held by Adriaen Hendriksen in September, 1658. I have not succeeded in discovering his authority for this statement.

No. 199. YSAACQ VRANCX' PREFERENTIAL CLAIM AGAINST REMBRANDT IS ALLOWED

§ 1. On December 10, 1658, Dirck Spiegel appears before the Bankruptcy Court against Mr. Henricus Torquinius, Rembrandt's trustee. § 2. The commissaries of the Court declare, that he has a preferential claim to the sum of f. 95.15, the value of four pictures, which he had received as security from Rembrandt, and that he is to receive this sum without giving security. § 3. With regard to the balance due to him, to which he may add the interest at 6 % from the date of the promissory note to that of the bankruptcy, he must claim against the estate on equal terms with the other creditors. § 4. Dirck Spiegel appeals from this decision to the Sheriffs of Amsterdam.

The appeal availed Ysaacq Vranex nothing. He received (after No. 169) his preferential claim of f. 95.15, and of the balance realised, as much as the rest of the creditors, i. e. nothing.

No. 200. JACOB DE LA TOMBE'S PREFERENTIAL CLAIM AGAINST REMBRANDT IS ALLOWED

December 17

§ 1. On December 17, 1658, Jacob de la Tombe appears before the Bankruptcy Court against Rembrandt's trustee. § 2. The commissaries of the Court declare that he has a preferential claim to the sum of f. 32.5, the proceeds of certain pictures belonging in part or wholly to him, which were sold among Rembrandt's pictures. He is to receive this sum without giving security.

De la Tombe's pictures figure in Rembrandt's inventory (No. 169) as Nos. 34 and 109. There his Christian name is given as Pieter, here and in the statement of Rembrandt's liabilities (No. 176) it appears as Jacob. Cf. also No. 201 below.

English translation of the original, which has now disappeared, published by C. J. Nieuwenhuys, A Review of the Lives and Works of the most eminent Painters, London, 1834, p. 32. All efforts to recover the original among the documents in the "Desolate Boedelskamer" in the State Archives at Amsterdam have proved fruitless.

The payment was made in respect of the sum realised by the pictures of Giorgione and Palma Vecchio (Nos. 34 and 109 in the inventory of 1656), the joint property of Rembrandt and de la Tombe.

1658-1659 No. 202. REMBRANDT'S DEPOSITION TOUCHING AN INVENTORY OF SASKIA'S PROPERTY

§ 1. Rembrandt appears before the notary and declares upon oath, at the request of Louys Crayers, that in the year 1647, his son's maternal relatives had made certain enquiries as to the property left by Saskia, and § 2 that he (Rembrandt) had accordingly consulted Mr. Pieter Cloeck, advocate, as to his conduct in the matter. § 3. The advocate advised him in writing, to make an inventory of his property at the time of Saskia's death; of this property Titus, as his mother's heir, was entitled to one half, Rembrandt, however, retaining the usufruct. § 4. Rembrandt accordingly within the space of two months drew up the inventory affixed to the original of this document, § 5, entering therein all the goods which were in his possession at the time of Saskia's death, and for some time afterwards.

The inventory spoken of in § 4 is unfortunately missing. The total value, f. 40,750, is, however, known from the judgment of the Provincial Court of December 22, 1662, quoted by Vosmaer in his first edition, p. 405.

The eight documents that follow all serve to attest the truth of the declaration made above.

Throughout, no dates are given. We only know that all the documents were included in the files of 1658 and 1659.

1658-1659 No. 203. DEPOSITIONS AS TO OBJECTS OF VALUE BELONGING TO REMBRANDT AND SASKIA

§ 1. The silversmith Jan van Loo and his wife Anna Huybrechts appear before the notary and declare upon oath, at the request of Louys Crayers, that they knew Rembrandt and Saskia intimately, and that they therefore know them to have had in their joint possession two strings of large pearls for the neck, and two smaller ones to match for the arms, the which remained in Rembrandt's possession after Saskia's death and until 1649. § 2. Anna Huybrechts alone makes the same attestation as regards the articles noted below. § 3. In support of their attestation the witnesses declare that they had seen the objects in question in Rembrandt's possession, both before and after the death of Saskia.

§ 1. No. 207. DEPOSITION TOUCHING
THE PURCHASE OF A " SUSANNA " FROM REMBRANDT

1658-1659

Adriaen Banck, merchant, declares, at the request of Louys Crayers, that in 1647 he bought a Susanna for f. 500 from Rembrandt.

Compareerde Adriaen Banck, out omtrent 4(6) jaer, Coopman hier ter stede, ende heeft ter versoecke van Sr Louys Crayers, vooght over Titus van Rhijn, zoone van Saskia van Uylenburch, bij ware christelijke woorden en in sijn conscientie geattesteert, getuyght ende verclaert hoe waer is: dat hij attestant int jaer 1647 van Rembrandt van Rhijn, vader van deselve Titus gekocht heeft een stuck schilderie van Susannah, daervoor hij attestant alsdoen aen hem heeft betocht gehadt de som van vijffhondert guldens in gelde.

A picture of Susanna painted before Saskia's death (as this must have been), which could have fetched f. 500 in Rembrandt's time, is not to be identified among the master's extant works. The little picture of 1637 in the Hague Gallery (Bode, Plate 193), is obviously out of the question.

No. 208. DEPOSITION TOUCHING A PORTRAIT
PAINTED FOR ANDRIES DE GRAEFF.

1658-1659

§ 1. At the request of Louys Crayers, Hendrick Uylenburch declares that he acted as arbitrator in a dispute between Rembrandt and Andries de Graeff over a picture or portrait painted by Rembrandt for de Graeff. § 2. It was then decided by himself and his coadjutors, that de Graeff should pay Rembrandt f. 500 for the picture. § 3. This happened in 1642.

Alle 't welek etc.

Hendrick Uylenburgh.

Marens and Abraham Uijlenburgh witness the deposition.

First published loc. cit. under No. 202, p. 93. For the object of this attestation, see the remarks under this head.

Unfortunately, the subject of the picture is not mentioned. We cannot therefore tell whether it was a portrait of de Graeff himself, or of a member of his family. It is evident that the point in dispute was settled in Rembrandt's favour, otherwise there would have been no object in the deposition.

Andries de Graeff was the well-known Amsterdam burgomaster of this name.

For Hendrick Uylenburgh, cf. our Nos. 20, 25, 27, 42, 73 etc.

1658-1659 No. 209. DEPOSITION MADE BY ABRAHAM V. WILMERDONX TOUCHING HIS PORTRAIT BY REMBRANDT

At the request of Louys Crayers, Abraham van Wilmerdonx declares that he and his wife were painted by Rembrandt about 1642, and that during Saskia's illness and before her death, he had paid f. 500.— for the picture, besides f. 60. — for canvas and frame.

woorden ten versoecke van Sr Louys Crayers, als vooght over Titus van Rhijn, soone van Saskia van Uylenburgh, geproceert bij Rembrandt van Rhijn, geattesteert, getuyght en verclaert, hoe waer is: dat deselve Rembrandt van Rhijn hem Heer attestant en sijne huysvrouw omtrent het jaer 1642 heeft geconterfeijt gehadt, daer voor hij attestant aen hem, in de sieckte en doen voor de doot van sijn huysvrouw, heeft betaelt gehadt, de somme van vijfhondert gulden wegen het schilderen en noch de somme van tsestigh gulden daerenboven voor 't doek en lijst.

Abr. Wilmerdonx.

First published loc. cit. under No. 202, p. 93. For the object of this attestation, see the remarks under this head.

The portraits of Wilmerdonx and his wife have not been identified. It is not clear from this document whether they were in a group, or in two separate pictures.

No. 210. PURCHASE OF A PICTURE BY RUBENS FROM REMBRANDT 1658-1659

§ 1. Lodewijk van Ludick declares at the request of Louys Crayers, that about the year 1644, he bought a picture of Hero and Leander by P. P. Rubens from Rembrandt, and paid f. 530.— ready money for it. § 2. This picture had been in Rembrandt's possession some 4 or 5 years, and van Ludick knew well when Rembrandt had acquired it.

Alle 't welek etc.

Lodewyck van Ludick.

First published loc. cit. under No. 202, p. 94. For the object of this attestation, see the remarks under this head.

For the purchase of this picture by Rembrandt, cf. No. 54 above.

No. 211. A COPY AFTER REMBRANDT
IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

On January 22, 1659, the pictures left by the deceased Willem Allertsz Eentgens, ebony-carver, of Amsterdam, were valued by the painters Jan Looten and Gerbrand van den Eeckhout. Among them was:

De Coningh Saul, na Rembrandt. . . . f. 4.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. d'Amour of Amsterdam.

The picture was probably a copy from the youthful work in the Gallery of the Städel Institut, Frankfort on the Main (Bode, Plate 46).

Copies, after Douster fetched f. 5.—, after Uyl f. 30.—; originals, by P. Molijn f. 10.—, D. Ver-tangen f. 48.—, J. Molenaer f. 15.—, to f. 40.— Moeynaert f. 8.—J. Verwerf. 10.—A. v. Everdingen f. 12-10, D. Hals f. 12.— and f. 20.— and Strijker (landscape) f. 34.—, (cowherds) f. 10.— (nude study) f. 6.—.

No. 212. DEPOSITION AS TO THE VALUE OF REMBRANDT'S COLLECTIONS

§ 1. On March 19, 1659, Lodewyck van Ludick and Adriaen de Wees declare, at the request of Louys Crayers, that, in their opinion, the collections of engravings and drawings, curiosities, antiquities, medals and marine specimens owned by Rembrandt between 1640 and 1650 were worth f. 11 000, and the pictures f. 6400.—, both rather over than under the value given. § 2. De Wees, however, declares himself to be not so certain as regards the pictures. § 3. Both base their assertions on the fact that during the time specified, they were on intimate terms with Rembrandt, and very often saw his curiosities and pictures; and § 4. being themselves amateurs and experts, who have dealt largely in such objects, they are certain that their estimates are correct.

19 Martii 1659.

AND LODEWIJK VAN LUDICK

After 1659
March 19

§ 1. Rembrandt acknowledges himself indebted to L. v. Ludick to the amount of f. 1200.—, Ludick having been his surety for a debt of f. 1000.— to Jan Six, which had been taken over by Gerbrand Ornia. § 2. Ludick has had to pay f. 1200.— the capital and interest. § 3. Rembrandt now promises to pay off this sum within three years by painting pictures, which are to be valued by impartial persons, to be appointed by Rembrandt and Ludick respectively. § 4. Rembrandt further engages to furnish a picture already begun, from the history of Jonathan and David, and to deliver it to Ludick within the first year.

Maart 1659.

From the file (much damaged by a fire) of the notary N. Listingh. First published (after the discovery of the document by Dr. A. Bredius) by Mr. N. de Roeyer, in Oud Holland, 1881, n. p. 85, Rembrandt, Bijdragen tot de Geschiedenis van zijne laatste Levensjaren.

The date is uncertain. The document follows one of March 19, 1659, and may have been drawn up the same day. Cf. for Ludick's liability No. 178 above.

Rembrandt's picture from the history of David and Jonathan has disappeared, if it was ever finished. For Ornia cf. Oud Holland, loc. cit., note 8.

No. 214. SKETCH BY REMBRANDT FOR "THE WOMAN TAKEN IN ADULTERY"

In the Print Room at Munich there is a sketch by Rembrandt for a Woman taken in Adultery, with the autograph inscription:

Zoo juchtig om Christus in syn antwoordt te verschaleken kon de schrift... antw... niet afwachten.

This sketch is made on the reverse of a fragment of an invitation to a funeral, of which there is a complete copy in the Amsterdam archives. It is in the following terms:

ANNO 1659

Tegens Woens-dagh den 14 May
Wordt U. E. ter Begraeffnisse Gebeden, met
AEGTJE NACHTGLAS.
Dochter van Wylen
JACOB PIETERSZ
NACHT-GLAS

Op de cleveuiers-Doele; ten een uur, als Vriendt in Huys te komen.

Nieuwe-Kerck

Unpublished. The invitation gives us the date after which the drawing must have been made. It is, however, very probable that the sketch was made not much later than this date, for such notices as the above soon find their way to the waste-paper basket, unless piously preserved as memorials.

Rembrandt used the half of a similar invitation, no perfect copy of which has been discovered, for the largest of the sketches for his Conspiracy of Claudius Civilis, also in the Munich Print-Room.

The half-sheet thus preserved runs as follows, the missing fragments being supplied where possible:

Anno 16..
Tegens Dinsdag den...
Wordt U. E. ter Begraeffnisse Gebeden met
BEBECC A.....
Huysvrou van
CORNEL S.....
Moeder van
DR. JOANNES.....
Op de Nieuwe-zydts Achterburgwal (bij) de Lutherse Kerck, hy't Heyburgetje. Als vriend in huys te komen.

First published in Oud Holland, 1897, xv, p. 196, note 1, by C. Hofstede de Groot, Heeft Rembrandt in Engeland vertoefd?

The entry of this Rebecca's burial does not occur in the registers of the Nieuwe Kerk (1658-1661), the Oude Kerk (1657-1661), or the Zuider Kerk (1658-1661), which were the churches nearest to the house of the deceased.

The first mentioned picture is n<sup>o</sup> 1277 in the Imperial Museum, painted by J. Lievens and Johan van den Eckh. The statement that this head is a portrait of Rembrandt is incorrect, and à priori improbable. The collaboration of Lievens and van Eckh points to Lievens' Antwerp period, when Rembrandt had settled in Amsterdam, and had a very different appearance.

The second picture has disappeared.

No. 216. NIGHT-PIECE BY REMBRANDT

1659
September 17

In the inventory of Catharina Willems van Thoorvliet, widow of Dirck Segersz van Campen, drawn up on September 17, 1659, the following occurs among other pictures :

En kaerslichgeu [small candle-light scene] geschildert by Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. v. Campen of Leyden.

Other artists represented were : W. v. d. Bundel (2), Molenaer (2), Cornelis van Haerlem, P. Fr. de Grebber, Jac. and Nic. Swanenburch, H. v. Nes, Cuyyp, de Neyn, Brouwer, Goltzius, and (in a copy) Dirck Hals.

No prices are given.

No. 218. A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT
IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

1659
November 3

In the inventory of the deceased captain Marten Pietersz Day, drawn up in Amsterdam, November 3, 1659, the following occurs among a number of pictures and portraits, the painters of which are not mentioned :

Een schildery vnn een out man van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary B. Coornhart of Amsterdam.

Marten Day and his wife were painted by Rembrandt in 1634 (Bode, Plates 107 and 108). Very probably these portraits were also among the works of art not specially mentioned.

1660 No. 219. RHYMED EULOGY ON REMBRANDT'S ETCHING OF LIEVEN VAN COPPENOL

First printed in De Hollantsche Parnas, of verscheiden Gedichten .. door T. van Donselaar verzamelt. Amsterdam, Jacob Lescaille, 1660, p. 42.

The author of the above does not appear again in connection with Rembrandt. It is uncertain whether it refers to the large etching of 1658, Bartsch, n° 283, or to the smaller portrait, Bartsch, n° 282. For the latter cf. the following number.

This stanza gives us the information nowhere else afforded, that the boy behind Coppenol in the etching, Bartsch, n° 282, was Coppenol's grandson.

1660 No. 221. RHYMED EULOGY ON REMBRANDT'S "CHRIST AND THE MAGDALEN"

V. 1. When the poet compares the text of St. John's Gospel with Rembrandt's picture, he asks himself was history ever so truthfully rendered by the brush, and did dead colour ever come so near to life. V. 5. Christ seems to be speaking to Mary, who, though she believes, yet trembles between hope and fear. V. 9. The rocks tower high in the air, as art requires. Their shadows give aspect and majesty to the rest of the picture. V. 11. The poet saw Rembrandt paint this picture, and therefore his pen must praise Rembrandt's brush, his ink Rembrandt's colour.

5. *'t Schijnt dat de Christus segt: Marie, en wilt niet beven,
Ick ben 't de dood en heeft aen uwen Heer geen deel;
Sij sulcx geloovende, maer echter noch niet heel,
Schijnt tusschen vreugde en druck; en vreesse en hoop te sweven.*

Dies moest mijn' Pen wat Rijns van uw begneft

Pinceel

En mijnen Int wat Roems van uwe Verwen spreken.

J. De Decker.

First printed in De Hollantsche Parnas, 1660, p. 405; later in Jeremias de Dekker, Rijmoefeningen, 1667, p. 85; 1726, vol. II, p. 230. Also in Immerzeel, Lofrede op Rembrandt, p. 64, and Vosmaer, second edition, p. 166, with a French translation.

In the edition of 1726 the words "voor H. F. Waterloo" in the superscription are replaced by the motto: "Micat inter omnes".

The passage in St. John's Gospel (xx, 16) is as follows: "Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master". This text agrees with the picture of 1638 at Buckingham Palace (Bode, Plate 221, on panel), but not with that of 1651 at Brunswick (Bode, Plate 333, on canvas). The latter seems rather to illustrate the following verse: "Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not". In this picture, too, the rocky crags rising high into the air and contrasting with the rest of the composition, are absent, and, it is painted, not on the "panel" spoken of in line 12, but on canvas.

But although description and material tell in favour of the picture of 1638, it certainly seems strange that de Dekker should write in a poem of 1660, of having seen Rembrandt painting a picture for H. F. Waterloos in 1638. Unless we assume that the poem remained unprinted for about 20 years, it seems very probable that it refers to a lost picture, painted by Rembrandt about 1655-1658.

1660 No. 222. RHYMED EULOGY ON REMBRANDT'S PORTRAIT OF JEREMIAS DE DEKKER

V. 1. If Rembrandt would paint de Dekker, he must consider, before he begins, that he has an excellent poet before him. V. 5. And if he would attempt to surpass the poet's pen with his brush, he must exert himself far more, than when he paints ordinary people. V. 8. He must not think of a handful of vain gold, but must dip his brush in pure sunshine. V. 10. Then he will immortalise the head, already overshadowed by wreaths of oak and laurel, and the poet will spread Rembrandt's praise far and wide. V. 15. Thus his poetry will take new life from Rembrandt's painting, as will Rembrandt's art from his poetry.

Reprinted in Oud Holland, 1884, II, p. 86, Rembrandt, Bijdragen tot de Geschiedenis van zijne laatste Levensjaren, naer de gegevens van wijlen Mr. A. D. de Vries Azn. verzameld, bewerkt door Mr. N. de Hoever.

Rembrandt's portrait of Dekker has disappeared. It was long erroneously identified with the later picture of 1666 in the Hermitage, n° 827 in the catalogue (Bode, Plate 498). There are two prints after it: one by an anonymous engraver in the complete edition of de Dekker's poems, the other by A. v. Halen. (Cf. our No. 235). One would hardly suppose them to represent the same person. The following lines stand beneath the first:

*Op de afbeelding van Jeremias de Dekker door
Rembrant van Rhijn geschildert.*

De Dekker, die, op 't spoor van Vondel, taelgebreken spreken,

*Die slaghen aen de wick der ed'le Poëzy

Voor wien der Dichteren, voor wien heb hij te zwichten?*

*Natuur, Verstant en konst volmaken zijn' gedichten.
M. Brouerius van Nidek R. G.*

The above verses notwithstanding, H. F. Waterloos seems to have had the intelligence to appreciate Rembrandt's art. Rembrandt, at any rate, painted a Christ and Mary Magdalen for him. Cf. our No. 221.

Brouerius van Nidek was also the person who brought out the complete edition of de Dekker's works. In his preface he thus refers to Rembrandt's portrait:

... onderwijfen dat zijne schriften, veel duur-zamer als zijne afbeelding, door den grooten

Schilder-Fenix Rembrant van Rijn geschildert, zijne heugenis by de late nakomelingen met luister zullen doen leven.

1660 No. 224. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT
IN THE COLLECTION OF THE ARCH-DUKE
LEOPOLD WILLIAM

David Teniers' work on the Italian pictures in the Arch-Duke's collection appeared in 1660.

The non-Italian pictures of the collection are referred to only on p. 2 of the book, in a "Catalogus nominum pictorum" of 180 names; among the Dutchmen figures:

Rhinbrant van Rijn

The other Dutchmen were: A. Marienhoff, Adriaen van Ostaeden, Cornelius Poetenborch, Cornelius Sacchtleven, de Vrom, Dirick van Delen, Egbert van den Poel, Gerardus Dau, Hemskercken,
Herman Saffleuen, Joannes Lieuens, Joannes de
Heem, Joannes Lis, Joannes Ossenbeck, Joannes
Bot, Joannes Percelis, Lelienbergh, Lenardus Bremer, Peeter Quast, Philippes Wouwerman, Roulandus Sanery, and Schorel.

No. 225. AGREEMENT BETWEEN REMBRANDT
AND LODEWIJCK VAN LUDICK 1660
January 29

On January 29, 1660, Rembrandt and van Ludick came to an agreement concerning three pictures by Lastman and Pijnas, which Rembrandt was to have bought and van Ludick to have sold, but which they are to retain in their joint possession for a time.

The existence of this agreement is deduced from the document of August 28, 1662, given below under No. 253, in which it is cancelled, obviously because Rembrandt was dilatory with the payment.
Rembrandt undertakes to recoup van Ludick for interest and loss of time by painting him a picture.

No. 226. THE CLAIM OF THE LANDLORD 1660
OF THE KEYSERSKROON March 3
RECOGNISED AS PREFERENTIAL

On March 3, 1660, the widow of the landlord of the Keyerskroon received preferential payment from Rembrandt's trustee in satisfaction of her claim for hire of rooms and other expenses.

No. 227. A "CHRIST WASHING THE DISCIPLES' FEET" BY REMBRANDT IN A PRIVATE COLLECTION AT AMSTERDAM

In the inventory of the bankrupt Abraham Jacobsz Greeven, drawn up on March 10, 1660, the following occur among other pictures :

Een schilderijtje daer Christus de voeten wast van Rembrandt.

D'offerande Sacharias, Copy nae Rembrandt.

From the archives of the "Desolate Boedelskamer" of Amsterdam. First published in the French edition of Dr. P. Scheltema's Rembrandt, 1866, p. 117.

No such picture by Rembrandt is now known to us.

The picture in the A. Lehmann collection, Paris, described by Bode under Plate 42, represents a Zacharias in the Temple. There is an old copy of this in the Schwerin Museum (n<sup>o</sup> 577, in catalogue of 1882).

No. 228. PORTRAITS BY REMBRANDT IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

In the inventory of the property left by Koert Kooper of Amsterdam, drawn up on April 3, 1660, from information furnished by Geesie Copers, widow of the bookseller, Jan Jansz. Brouwer, the following entry occurs :

Een conterfeytsel van den overleden en syn vrouw van Rembrandt, met swarte lijsten.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary Jan Hendricksz Leuven of Amsterdam.

These portraits cannot be identified among Rembrandt's extant works.

No. 229. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

In the inventory of the bankrupt Abr. Varleth of Amsterdam, drawn up on April 22, 1660, the following entry occurs :

Twee Tronien van off nae Rembrandt gedaen, die de huysvrouw seyt haer toe te komen en een van Pieter Heyblom gekoft te hebben . . . . . f 48.—

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the archives of the "Desolate Boedelskamer" of Amsterdam.

The low valuation suggests doubts as to the genuineness of the pictures.

No. 230. FINAL JUDGMENT OF THE AMSTERDAM COURT OF SHERIFFS IN THE CASE OF CRAYERS VERSUS HERTSBEECK

On May 5, 1660, the Amsterdam Court of Sheriffs gives a judgment, by which Isaacq van Hertsbeeck is ordered to pay back the sum of f. 4200. — assigned to him provisionally in satisfaction of his claim against Rembrandt, while Crayers is authorized to receive the same ns part of Titus' inheritance from his mother.

Unpublished. The existence of this judgment is deduced from the judgment of the Provincial Court of Holland, given on December 22, 1662. Cf. No. 256 below, under § 27.

No. 231. LOUYS CRAYERS REMOVES THE STOP-ORDER FROM THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALE OF REMBRANDT'S HOUSE

August 24

Crayers, having on May 20, 1658 (see under this date), made a stop-order against the proceeds of the sale of Rembrandt's house, in order to safeguard his ward's interests, agrees, on August 24, 1660, that the surplus of the amount shall be given up to the Bankruptcy Court.

No. 232. SALE OF PICTURES BY REMBRANDT

August 31

On August 31, 1660, Adriaen Banck, merchant, of Schiedam, sells the following inter alia to Arien Maen :

Een stueck van Rembrandt, de history van Susassnn f 560.—

Een stueck van dito, sijnde mijn Conterfeytsel . . . . . f 150.—

Een schets van dito Rembrandt . . . f 30.—

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary P. v. Tol of Amsterdam.

The Susanna had been bought from Rembrandt by the seller himself in 1647. Cf. his deposition under No. 207 above on this point.

The portrait of Adriaen Banck cannot now be identified.

The other pictures were priced as follows: A Paris by F. Bol f. 70.—, a large Hunting Scene by Rubens f. 300.—, two large Ruisdaels f. 150.—, an ls. v. Ostade and a Heda, each f. 50.—.

1660 No. 233. AGREEMENT BETWEEN TITUS VAN
December 15 RIJN AND HENDRICKJE STOFFELS

§ 1. On December 15, 1660, Titus, assisted by his father, and Hendrickje, assisted by a trustee chosen by her for the purpose, declare that they agree to carry on the business started two years ago by them, in pictures, "paper-art" (1), engravings and woodcuts, curiosities, and all pertaining thereto, including the printing of the engravings, till six years after the death of Rembrandt, under the following conditions: § 2. Firstly, they will carry on their housekeeping and all pertaining thereto at their joint expense; and having jointly paid for all their furniture, their works of art, and curiosities, their rent and taxes, they will continue to do so. § 3. Further, they have each brought all they possess into the partnership, and Titus in particular his baptismal gifts, his savings, and his personal earnings. All that either party earns in future is to be held in common. § 4. As each is to receive half of the profits, so each is to bear half of the loss. § 5. But as they require some help in their business, and as no one is more capable of giving this help than Rembrandt, the contracting parties agree that he shall live with them, and receive free board and lodging, on condition that he will promote their interests in every way possible to him. § 6. He will, however, have no share in the business or the housekeeping, and the contracting parties will be the joint owners of all the collections and household effects. And all that he may henceforth acquire, will be the property of the partners. § 7. As Rembrandt had shortly before become bankrupt, and had lost everything he possessed, it had been necessary to support him, and he acknowledges having received f. 950.— from Titus, and f. 800.— from Hendrickje to this end, which sums he will pay back, as soon as he shall have earned something again by his painting. § 8. As security for this promise, he assigns to Titus and Hendrickje all the pictures he paints in their house, or the sums he receives for them. § 9. The contracting parties further agree, that no one of them is to sell or alienate anything on his individual account, under a penalty of f. 50.—, which sum Rembrandt will deduct from his payment in favour of the delinquent's partner. § 10. They mutually promise to abide strictly by the terms of this agreement, etc.

§ 1. Den 15 December 1660 compareerden Titus (van Rhijn)(1), geassisteerd met Rembrandt van Rhijn, sijn (vader ter) eenre, en Hendrickje Stoffels meerderjarigh, voor soo veel (noodig met) haer gecooren vooght ten desen geassisteerd ter andere sijde en verclaerden overeengecomen ende verdragen te sijn over seeckere compagnie en handel van schilderijen, papiere kunst, koper- en houtsnede, item drucken van deselve, rariteyten en alle ap- en dependentien van dien, als sijlieden met malcanderen voor langer als twee jaren hebben aengevangen en vervolgens noch wilden continueeren tot soo lange toe als de voorsz. Rembrandt van Rhijn int leven sal wesen, en noch ses jaren der naer, en dat op de volgende conditien:

§ 2. Eerstelijck dat de huyshoudingh, die tsedert aengegaen heeft de voorn. Rembrandt van Rhijn aen de voorsz. Titus van Rhijn en Hendrickje Stoffels, present en accepteerende getransporteert, gecedeert en opgedragen (alle) soodanighe schilderijen en provenuen van dien als hij tharen huysse (sal) comen te schilderen en ooit bevonden sullen worden, omme die daer voor als eygen te behouden en haer achterwesens daeruyt te consequeren, tot dat sij ten volle sullen wesen betaelt en voldaeen, sonder dat hij, Rembrandt van Rhijn, daer eenighe actio recht off eygendom van behoudt ofte reserveert onder eenigh pretext.

§ 9. Voorts hebben de voorsz. partijen contrahenten geaccordeert en verdragen, dat d'een sonder d'ander niet ea sal vermogen yets int bysonder te gaen vercopen, verduysteren off vervreemden van de Compaignie en off sulcx gebeurde, soo sal degene die sulcx bevonden wert te hebben gedaen verbeuren aen (den ander) de somme van vyftich gulden, 't welck sal gevonden (en betaelt) werden door Rembrandt van

R(hijn uyt de) penninghen, die yder van hem moet hebben, ende dat geschiedende, dat de gebreeckige soo veel minder en d'ander soo veel meer van hem sal competere en dat telkens als tselve mach werden bevonden.

§ 10. Beloovende de voorsz. drye Comparanten (Titus met sijnen vader geassisteert) haer soo veel yder aengaet prompt nae desen te sullen reguleren en malcanderen alles ouwrebreeckelijk te presteren sonder eenighe contraventie, onder verband van elcx persoon en goederen, ten bedwangh van alle rechten en rechteren. Ter goeder trouwe en versochte acte.

Dat aldus passerde binnen deser voorsz. stadt. Actum ter presentie van Jacob Leeuw en Frederick Helderberch als getuygen, en hebben de comparanten beneffens deselve en my Notaris de minate onder teekent.

The object of this agreement was the protection of Rembrandt from the contingent severity of his creditors. He possessed nothing, could earn nothing, and could not even produce anything on his own account. All he might produce belonged henceforth to the partners, who in return guaranteed him board, lodging, and attendance.

No. 234. TRANSFER OF REMBRANDT'S HOUSE

No. 240. A DRAWING BY REMBRANDT
IN JACOBUS HEYBLOCK'S ALBUM

March 30

In the Album Amicorum of Jacobus Heyblock, Rector of the Amsterdam college, presented to the Royal Library at the Hague by Madame Kneppehouth a few years ago, there is a drawing of Simeon with the Infant Jesus, signed :

Rembrandt f. 1661.

On the opposite page is the following poem :

*Aen den erwaerden en wel geleerden
Domine Jacobus Heyblock*

*Hier toont ons Rembrandt hoe den ouden Simeon Met vreucht, sijn Heylant en Messias neemt in 't armen
En nu om 't sterven wenst, wijl sijn genaden son
Verschenen is, die alle wenschen sou beschermen
(Vertrouwend vast op hem) voor d' hel en ewigedoot:
T welck leert, dat vromen voor het sterven gants niet vresen
Want 't is der bosen schrick, der goeden hulp in noot:
Wat kan o Heyblock dan ons troostelijcker wesen*

den 30 Maert.*

A. L(ydius?)

First published by Vosmaer, 1st edition, p. 313, from the album, then in the possession of J. Kneppehouth.

The suggestion that A. L. = A. Lydius is a conjecture of Vosmaer's. The poem is later than the drawing, which must therefore have been executed early in 1661.

No. 241. HENDRICKJE STOFFELS' WILL

August 7

§ 1. On August 7, 1661, Hendrickje Stoffels, living on the Roosegraacht, opposite the new Doolhof, ailing, but able to stand and walk, etc., made her will in the presence of the notary N. Listingh. § 2. She makes her daughter Cornelia her sole legatee, and in the event of Cornelia's death without issue, her half-brother Titus is to be her heir. § 3. Rembrandt, the father, is appointed guardian, with authority to act as he may think best, without giving account to any one. § 4. He may also, in view of his own illness, death, or other contingency, appoint a substitute, to the exclusion of the Chamber of Orphans. § 5. She wishes the business partnership of December 15, 1660, to be carried on by Rembrandt and Titus. § 6. Should her little daughter die without issue, Titus is to be sole legatee. § 7. She further desires, that in the event of Titus' succession, Rembrandt should enjoy the life-interest of the property, in place of his legal share of Cornelia's estate. § 8. This usufruct is to be applied only to his maintenance, and may not be offered as security to creditors. § 9. Concluding formula and signature.

A few weeks after the execution of this will, on October 20, 1661, we find the last mention of Hendrickje Stoffels. We do not know the date of her death.

For the partnership mentioned in § 5 see our
No. 233.

Christiaen Dusart, whose name occurs in various documents of this period, was a painter, some of whose pictures have come to light again within the last few years, e. g. in the Museums of Amsterdam and Epinal, in the Bonde collection at Stockholm, and the Hoogendijk collection at the Hague.

The deposition deals with the conduct of a drunken man who had caused a disturbance in the neighbourhood.

Hendrickje signed with a cross. Titus van Rhijn acted as witness.

The appellations "Juffrouw" and "Huysvrouw van Sr. Rembrandt" show that her neighbours treated Hendrickje with the respect due to a married woman, without protest from the sailor's widow or the gold-wire maker's wife.

The poet, Jan Vos, after making Nature prophesy the fame of Amsterdam, goes on to say v. 1. that the town shall be full of painters and poets, who on Kretzer's advice, will form themselves into a brotherhood. v. 5. The portrait, which was painted in preparation for the large etching, Bartsch n° 283, and is an exact counterpart of this, reversed, is in Lord Ashburton's collection at The Grange (Bode, Plate 456). It is contemporary with the etching, and dates from about 1658.

The earlier, life-size portrait of the calligraphist in the Cassel Gallery dates from about 1632, and can hardly be the work here referred to.

IN A LEYDEN INVENTORY

Among the documents of the notary Scharpen-brant of Leyden, dated 1662, is the inventory of the notary K. Outerman and Maria de Neut (d. March 6, 1637).

In it is the following entry:

In de Camer:

Een trony van Rembrandt.

There are also pictures by Stooter, W. v. d.
Bundel, M. Fz. de Hulst, Joost de Volder, J.
Lievensz, de Neyn, Oudenrogge and D. Hals, and many other pictures by unknown artists. The valuation was made by Jan Jansz van Rihjn and the painter Jacques de Claeuw.

The total valuation was f. 411.—

No. 249. A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT IN THE 1662
LARGE GALLERY OF THE AMSTERDAM TOWN HALL

§ 1. In his description of the Amsterdam Town Hall, Melehor Fokkens, speaking of the large gallery surrounding the two courtyards, says that four of the scenes from the wars of the Batavians against the Romans, out of the eight which are to fill the lunettes in the four corners of the gallery, are already completed, two on the north and two on the south. § 2. The two former stand above the statues of Diana and Mercury in the southern angle over the door of the Treasury. § 3. Here the series begins with the exhortation of Claudius Civilis to the nobles and grandees of his people, in the Schakerbosch, where a great banquet was served.
§ 4. Late at night, when the guests were heated with wine, Civilis addressed them, etc., etc.
§ 5. His proposals were favourably received; he caused all present to take the oath, and they all drank wine from a golden goblet. § 6. Messengers were sent throughout the land, notably among the Kefnemers, and he also received secret support from the English. This episode is treated in the first picture, painted by Rembrandt.

§ 1. Van den oorlogh der Batavieren of Hollanders zullen wy nu spreken, die zy geveerd hebben tegen de Romeynen, hare Bondtgenoten. Van deze stryden zyn already vier schilderyen gemaakt, twee ten Noorden en twee ten Zuyden, maar van deze voornoemde Oorloogh zullen acht gedeelten zyn, in de acht parkken der vier hoekken van de omwandelinghe der Galderye. § 2. De eerste staan boven de beelden van Diana en Mercurius, in de hoek ten Zuyden boven de Tresorye. § 3. Hier begint de aanmaninge van den Oversten Klaudius Civilis, die alle de grootsten en edelen van 't puzk der voornaamsten, ende treffelyksten der Gemeynthe by een liet roepen in 't Schakerbos, alwaar een groote maalydt wierdt aangerecht en de Gasterye hadde Civilis laten toe stellen, ten eynde hy den Adeldom tegen de Romeynsche dwingende macht zou opmaken. § 4. Als nu laat in de nacht zy begonden vrolyk te worden, en van de Wijn verhit, heft hy haar op dusdanige wyze aangesproken, pryzenik met een grooten lof de dapperheydt haarder Mannen, beginnende van de slaafsche onderdrukkingen daar mede zy veronglykt wierden.

(Here the purport of the speech, without interest to us.)

§ 5. Dusdanige reden gesproken hebbende, hebben alle de braafsten die ter Gastmaal waren, zyn voorstel met een groot vergenoegen en toestemminge nangehoordt; Civili's nam haar alle den Eedt af, vervloekkende den genen die verstaunde, daar op wierdt een grooten gulden Beker met Wijn omgedronkken, en alle beloofden hem te volgen wann hy haar voorginge. § 6. Dit dus verre uigewerkt, wierden terstondt door 't geheele Landt Gezanten gezonden; vooreerst na de Kennemers, om haer den anslagh bekendt te maken; hy kreegh ook nl heymtelijk de Engelsche ann zijn zijde, en dit wordt vertoond in de eerste schildery geschildert door Rembrandt.

Beschrijvinge der wijdt vermannde Koop-Stadt Amstredam by M. Fokkens, Amsterdam, 1662, p. 159 et seq.

Fokkens is the only writer, who mentions Rembrandt's picture as in this place. All later authors, when they give the painters' names at all, speak of Juriaan Ovens' picture as occupying this place, where it remains to this day. That a work of Rembrandt's once hung here was completely forgotten, till Mr. N. de Roever recalled the fact in Oud Holland, 1891, IV, p. 297 et seq. and 1892, X, p. 137 et seq. In the latter article it was pointed out that the central portion of the picture, with the principal group (Bode, Plate 520) is in the Stockholm Museum. This picture measures 1 m. 96 cm. h. by 3 m. 09 cm. w. or 6.05 square metres, while the space for which the original picture was intended measures over 26 square metres<sup>1</sup>.

Cf. our No. 214 for a sketch for this picture.

No. 250. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT
IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

On March 30, 1662, at the instance of Hendrick de Kempenaer and Barent Bovenhorst, an inventory was drawn up of the effects of the lately deceased couple, Matthijs Hals and Maria de Bary, residents in the Pijlsteegh, Amsterdam.

Among the pictures were :

Een tronj vnn Rembrandt
Noch cen dito.

Unpublished extract made by Dr. A. Bredius from the file of the notary Nic. Listingh.

The couple left four children : Maria, Pieter, Jan and Adriaentje Hals. The first picture in the inventory was a social gathering by Dirck Hals ; there were in addition numerous pictures by Haarlem masters: H. Mommers, Joh. Wijck, S. v. Ruysdael(2), Jac. de Wet jun. (2), Floris van Schoten (4), Jac. v. Mosschert, with figures by Ostade, P. Mulier, J. Ruysdael (3), Pieter Wouwerman, de Vries (2), F. de Hulst, Wouter Knijff, Cornelis Becht, Willem Kool, (B. v.) Veen, Koelenbier, Pieter van Hoest (2) and A. v. Everdingen.

1. The space measures exactly 5 m. 45 cm. in either direction; the top is semi-circular.

Payment of f. 58 for four pictures was due to Hendrick Mommers.

1662 No. 253. A NEW AGREEMENT BETWEEN August 28 REMBRANDT AND LODEWIJK VAN LUDICK

§ 1. On August 28, 1662, L. v. Ludick and Rembrandt declare before the notary N. Listingh, that they have agreed as follows : § 2. The sale and purchase respectively of three pictures by Lastman and Pijnas, effected between them on January 29, 1660, is cancelled. Ludick, who still has the pictures in his possession, will dispose of them as he thinks fit : Rembrandt will paint him a picture at his own discretion to compensate him for loss of time, and interest on the purchase-money. § 3. The two parties have further come to an agreement touching two pictures, a Nativity and a Circumcision, which Rembrandt had sold to van Ludick at the price of f. 600.— receiving in payment from the latter certain prints, which Rembrandt had bought, partly directly from van Ludick, partly at an auction held by van Ludick. § 4. Rembrandt, however, is still to receive f. 118.— but he, on his part, must re-paint and improve the figure of the operator in the Circumcision, on the above-mentioned panel. § 5. Thirdly, Rembrandt is to pay back the f. 1200, which Ludick, as Rembrandt's security, was obliged to pay to Ornia. From this the f. 118 are to be deducted, and the balance of f. 1082 is to be paid off as follows : § 6. Ludick is to receive the fourth part of all that Rembrandt receives for the alteration of the picture he has delivered at the Town Hall, and this applies both to the sum already due to Rembrandt, and that which he will receive in addition. § 7. Van Ludick is further to receive a half of all Rembrandt's earnings from January 1, 1663, until the f. 1082. — is paid off. Rembrandt gives the said earnings as security. § 8. All other agreements are cancelled by the present one : Rembrandt is also to fulfil the pledge he gave touching a portrait, which he promised to van Ludick on a certain occasion. § 9. Rembrandt promises once more, to keep his word faithfully, and should he die before van Ludick is paid, van Ludick's claim is to be satisfied with the pictures he may leave behind him, which pictures Rembrandt mortgages for this purpose. § 10. The parties agree to disregard all legal exemptions and in particular the legal rule that a special renunciation takes precedence of a general one.

First published from the file of the notary N. Listingh, shelf MM, packet 161, in Oud Holland, 1884, II, p. 87, Rembrandt, Bijdragen tot de Geschiedenis van zijne laatste Levensjaren, naar gegevens door wijlen Mr. A. D. de Vries Az. verzameld, bewerkt door Mr. N. de Roever.

This document is a continuation of Nos. 145, 178, 213 and 225, and is in its turn continued in Nos. 263 and 265.

The contents give an idea of van Ludick's goodwill towards Rembrandt, and of Rembrandt's dilatoriness in carrying out his promises and engagements. He did not pay for the pictures by Lastman and Pijnas in time, he has to paint a picture, to alter the chief figure in a Circumcision, to alter his picture in the Town Hall, and fulfil his promise to paint a portrait of Ludick. He has to pay a debt of f. 1200.— but instead, he buys f. 600.— worth of "printen en plaetiens".

Ad § 3. The Nativity is no longer to be identified among Rembrandt's works. The suggestion that the Adoration of the Magi of 1657 at Buckingham Palace was the work in question must be rejected, for the Dutch, who continued to keep Twelfth Night, were well aware of the distinction between this feast and Christmas. Besides, the 1657 picture is a day, and not a night scene. The Circumcision might have been Lord Spencer's picture of 1661 at Althorp (Bode, Plate 518) which, as I have already pointed out (Repertorium f. Kunstw., 1899, p. 163), was originally an Adoration of the Magi, were it not expressly stated that it was a "bortie", i. e. a little board, a picture painted on panel. No such work painted about 1661 is extant. § 6. For the picture in the Town Hall cf. our No. 249. The painter never got so far as the "verschijderung", or the work would probably still be in its place.

§ 8. We do not know if Ludiek's portrait was ever painted; at any rate, it is no longer to be identified.

(Here follow entries relating to further transactions touching this same grave.)

The sign in the first column is the mark on the gravestone, that in column A the old number, that in column B the new number of the grave. Rem Wybrantsz was the name of the former owner.

Now published for the first time, from a "Graefboek" of the Oude Kerk. Already mentioned in Oud Holland, 1885, III, p. 95, and 1887, v, p. 219, where reference is also made to another register, to which the figures in columns A and B obviously refer.

Zeeger Fransz was the sexton in 1642; in 1662 he had a successor, Pieter van Geenen (or Gerwen according to Oud Holland, loc. cit.)<sup>1</sup>.

Although we have no direct evidence of the fact, the assumption that the sale of Saskia's grave had some connection with Hendrickje's death is doubtless correct. The Amsterdam regulations provided, that citizens should bury their dead in the churches nearest to their domiciles. For every church passed by, an additional fee was incurred for burial expenses. Rembrandt therefore required a grave for Hendrickje in the Westerkerk, the church nearest to the Rosegracht, and Saskia's grave in the Oude Kerk was not available, owing to the expenses its use would have entailed. He probably sold it, to buy the other.

No. 256. JUDGMENT OF THE COURT
OF HOLLAND IN THE CASE OF HERTSBEECK VERSUS CRAYERS

December 22

§ 1. Judgment in the case of the merchant Isaack van Hertsbeeck, against Louys Crayers, successor to Jan Verwout, guardian of Titus van Rijn. § 2. The Court had ordered<sup>1</sup> that the documents relating to the case should be laid before it within the legal limit of time, as had already been done before the Amsterdam Court of first instance, etc. § 3. The respondent (Louis Crayers), originally the complainant, had declared before the Amsterdam Court that on June 5, 1642, Saskia had made her will, with the conditions known to us from No. 93 above. This will took effect shortly afterwards, in consequence of her death, and Titus van Rijn, on whose behalf Crayers was acting, became her sole legatee. § 4. The father retained a life interest in the property; and, in spite of the instructions in the will relieving him of the necessity of so doing, he ought to have made an inventory of the joint property, his own and Saskia's. § 5. This had been neglected, because Rembrandt had believed it to be unnecessary, until in 1647, the maternal relatives of his son had urged him to do it. § 6. Hereupon, the advocate Cloeck had instructed him that it was necessary he should have an inventory and description drawn up, of the effects he and his wife had jointly owned. § 7. In consequence of this, Rembrandt had made a specification of the same as at the date of Saskia's death, giving the minimum valuation of each item, § 8. and had thus arrived at a minimum total of f. 40,750.— half of which, i. e. f. 20,375, belonged to Titus. § 9. Titus, however, had so far received nothing, although on May 17, 1656, Rembrandt had transferred the house to him before the Chamber of Orphans, § 10. for shortly afterwards, Rembrandt had become bankrupt, when the house was compulsorily sold by the trustee and certain creditors, on behalf of the child and the remaining creditors who had claims on it. § 11. It had been established by the deposition of witnesses and by corroborative documents that Rembrandt's specification was a correct one, § 12. and it was admitted that Titus was not only entitled to half the property therein described, but that he had also a lien on his father's estate, § 13. by virtue of which he had preferential rights precedent to those of creditors of later date. § 14. On these grounds the respondent, as guardian of the child, had made a stop-order against the proceeds of the sale of Rembrandt's house. § 15. This order had in no way infringed the appellant's rights, for his claim dated from many years after the death of Saskia. § 16. Nevertheless, the appellant had protested against it, and had summoned Crayers before the privileged Court, there to state the grounds of his action. § 17. The appellant, or in the first instance defendant, objects, on his part, that on March 14, 1653, Rembrandt had borrowed f. 4200.— from him, and shortly before, on January 29, 1653, f. 4180.— from the burgomaster Witsen, in the presence of the sheriffs, and when his circumstances became more embarrassed, he had at once made over his house to his son, on May 17, 1656, this house being, however, already mortgaged by these debt, incurred in the presence of the sheriffs. § 18. This he did to secure the maternal heritage of his son, though he himself, as he had admitted, was enjoying the usufruct thereof, had been absolved from the obligation of making an inventory of all pertaining to it, and was merely bound to give his son a certain portion according to his discretion, on the majority or marriage of the latter. § 19. He ought not therefore to have been allowed to make the inventory and the transfer of the house in fraudem creditorum, whose money he had either used for the payment of his debts, or for the reconstitution of the property. § 20. It was in any case untrue that one half of the joint property of the parents belonged to the child, for his father might have adjudged him his legal portion, i. e. one third of f. 20,375 = f. 6791.13.5.

1. The order is dated October 22, 1660. Cf. the « Register van de geprononceerde Advijzen van het Hof van Holland van 23 Februarij 1660 — 22 December 1661, n<sup>o</sup> 366. »

§ 21. This also disposed of Titus' supposed lien. § 22. Although Crayers had been obliged to agree to the repayment of Hertsbeeck from the proceeds of the house, Hertsbeeck had only been able to enforce this by legal measures, and had been obliged to give security for the money, as also had Witsen, § 23. in accordance with a provisional judgment of the Amsterdam Court of December 4, 1658, in the case of Hertsbeeck versus Crayers re the unjustifiable stop-order Crayers had made against the proceeds of the house, and the protest he had lodged with the municipal secretaries against disbursement of this money. § 24. Hertsbeeck therefore protested against Crayers' proposals and demanded payment of his "Schepenkennis", and further, legal confirmation of the previous payment under security, and re-imbursment of expenses. § 25. Crayers counter-pleaded as to the main contention, and also as to the subsidiary demands § 26. and Hertsbeeck rejoined, and hereupon the sheriffs, on December 4, 1658, granted Hertsbeeck's subsidiary plea for payment of the money under security, and as regards the main contention ordered the litigants to produce the claim, the reply thereto, the counter-plea, and the rejoinder. § 27. The Court of Sheriffs had thereupon decided the main issue on May 5, 1660, ordering Hertsbeeck to refund the money, and permitting Crayers to receive it as part payment of Titus' maternal heritage. § 28. Hertsbeeck has appealed against this judgment, and proposed as via medias to pay Crayers as much of the proceeds of the house as would accrue to Titus on the basis of a legal inventory of Saskia's estate after satisfaction of all claims against it. § 29. The parties to appear before delegates of the Court to confirm the said inventory. § 30. If this offer be rejected, Hertsbeeck proposes that the judgment of the Amsterdam Court be annulled altogether. § 31. Crayers refuses, and asks for confirmation of the judgment and provisional execution thereof. § 32. Hertsbeeck protests against the latter, and in the counter-plea and rejoinder both parties persist in their demands. § 33. The Court decides for Crayers against Hertsbeeck.

22 December 1662.

No. 257. REMBRANDT GIVES A POWER OF ATTORNEY TO HIS SON TITUS

Among the files of the notary Nie. Listingh of Amsterdam (MM. 161) is a power of attorney given by Rembrandt to Titus, dated 1663. It is couched in such general terms that it is impossible to draw any special conclusion from it.

No. 258. REMBRANDT BORROWS MONEY FROM HARMEN BECKER 1663 March 28

The debt incurred on this occasion was paid October 6, 1665. The document of release gives the amount: f. 450.— and the security.

The promissory note itself has not come down to us.

For further particulars see No. 281.

No. 259. REMBRANDT ACTS AS WITNESS FOR HIS LANDLORD VAN LEEST 1663 July 26

On July 26, 1663, Rembrandt acted as witness at the drawing up of the inventory his landlord van Leest caused to be made of the property of his son Jacob van Leest junior, who had died in the Rosegracht.

Mentioned in Oud Holland, 1890, VIII, p. 183, by Dr. A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levensgeschiedenis, II.

These authors consider the fact of Rembrandt's having acted as witness an evidence of the esteem in which he was held in the neighbourhood. We, however, look upon it as an indication that Rembrandt did not despise even such small profits as the fees paid to witnesses. In by far the greater number of notarial documents that have come down to us, the witnesses are persons of humble condition, who would be glad of a small but convenient addition to their earnings. We have never found any suggestion that they were persons of special repute.

No. 260. DE MONCONYS SEES A REMRRANDT AT THE HOUSE OF JACOB LOIS AT ROTTERDAM 1663 August 3

§ 1. On August 3, 1663, the French traveller de Monconys visited the art-collection of Jacob Lois of Rotterdam. He praises pictures by Titian, § 2. Lucas van Leyden, Holbein, § 3. Rembrandt, Bloemaert, Dou, § 4. H. Saftleven, Ph. Wouwerman, Brouwer and van Dyck.

§ 1. Le 3 (Août 1663) ie fus (à Rotterdam) chez Monsieur Loes, marchand de drap, qui peint aussi et qui a de fort bons tableaux, entre autres une teste la plus belle que le Titian ait jamais faite, qui semble estre de la maniere d'Olbens tant elle est achevée; mais outre que le nom du Titian y est, et son coloris, le cachet du Roy d'Angleterre, à qui elle estoit y est derrière; une teste du portrait du Titian de Perin del Vague et une femme du Titian dont Rubens a composé un portrait tant estimé et mis en estampe, aussi bien que le portrait susmentionné; § 2. une petite teste de Lucas, qui semble de la miniature et un petit portrait d'un Comte de Pembroc, avec un bonnet de velours, avec des plumes blanches, le plus beau qu'ait jamais fait Olbens et le plus beau que l'aye veu de ma vie. Il n'est pas plus grand que la main et il en refusa plus de 2000 l. du pays. § 3. Il a aussi force testes de Rimbam Blomar, une femme qui tire du vin de Dau excellent peintre de Leiden, § 4. des paysages d'Armanzast Leuen qui a de la manière de Fouquieres et qui est à Utrecht, de Phelps, Van hermun qui a la manière de Bamboche, des Brouwers Vandics et autres.

The name Loes is a mistake for Lois. Jacob Lois (c. 1620-1676) was a cloth-merchant, architect, and painter. Two of his pictures are in the Rotterdam Museum, the catalogue of which gives the dates of his life. We have also his inventory of October 30, 1680, which was published in Scheffer's Algemeen Nederlandsch Familieblad in 1883. It includes his pictures: four Titians (part 2, p. 4b), een vrouwtge (female portrait) van Lucas van Leyden, het graefge van Penbroeck (the Earl of Pembroke) van Holbeyn (with two others), 2 oude mans trony's (heads of old men) van Reynbrant, een oude trony (an old man's (?) head) van A. Blommert, een vrouwtge met lampge (a woman with a lamp) van G. Douw, 4 landscapes by H. Saffleven, 4 pictures by and 8 copies after Ph. Wouwerman, 6 Brouwers and 8 van Dycks.

No. 261. REMBRANDT OWNS A DRAWING
BY ANNIBALE CARRACCI

§ 1. On December 6, 1663, Constantijn Huygens the younger, of the Hague, writes to his brother Christiaan in Paris enjoining him to see the Jabach collection, which is said to contain about 50 drawings of landscapes by Annibale Caracci, § 2. and among them, according to Uylenburg, one with a good deal of water and small figures. § 3. He asks Christiaan to make a small hasty sketch of it, indicating the number of figures and their positions, § 4. that he may judge whether a similar drawing belonging to Rembrandt is a copy, which, however, he does not believe, because of the firmness of the touch.

No. 1177 Constantijn Huygens frère à Christiaan
Huygens
A la Haye le 6 Decembre 1663

§ 1. Vous ne devriez pas aussi négliger de voir à Paris le cabinet du Sieur Jabach, qui est un des plus beaux du monde pour les tableaux aussi bien que pour les desseins. Je le voudrais bien pour une raison particulière. Il a ce dit on entre autres choses environ une cinquantaine de paysages dessinés à la plume d'Annibal Caracci, § 2. et Uylenburg dit que parmi ceux là il y en a un ou il y a beaucoup d'eau et des petites figures de gens qui se baignent. § 3. Je voudrais que si vous voyez cela vous en fassiez vite un petit brouillon n'importe quelque mauvais qu'il soit pourveu qu'on y puisse aucunement discerner ou sont les figures et combien il y en a, § 4. pour scavoir un peu au vray si celui qu'a Rembrant à Amsterdam ou il y a semblablement des gens qui nagent du mesme maistre n'est pas une copie, ce que je ne croy pourtant pas pour l'hardiesse de la plume.

From the original in the Huygens collection of the University Library, Leyden. Published in the Œuvres complètes de Christiaan Huygens, vol. IV, p. 456 et seq.

The object of the request was probably to make sure whether there was a second example of the drawing Huygens wished to buy from Rembrandt. It proves that Rembrandt (or rather Titus and Hendrickje) were carrying on business as art-dealers.

For the writer and his correspondent see our No. 104.

"Uylenburg" was either Hendrick or his son Gerrit, both art-dealers.

§ 1. On June 4, 1664, L. v. Ludick declares before the notary that he has sold to H. Becker all the rights accruing to him from the agreement of August 28, 1662, and has been paid in full by Becker for the same. § 2. He accordingly hands over the agreement to v. This document deals with Rembrandt's old debt to Jan Six (see No. 145), which the latter had sold to Ornia (see No. 178). Cf. also Nos. 213, 225 and 253, and for the sale to Becker, Nos. 265 and 300.

No. 264. SUPPOSED REGISTRATION OF REMBRANDT'S BURIAL

1664
July 19

In the "Begraafregister van het Sint Antonie Kerkhof" at Amsterdam is the following entry:

19 Juli 1664, Rembrandt van Ruynen en sijn kyndt op de hoeck van de wijje steegh.

J. Immerzeel, Lofrede op Rembrandt, 1841, pp. 25 and 58, had looked for the entry of Rembrandt's burial, because he had given a mistaken interpretation to the words "Titus van Rijn, enigien naergelaten soon van Rembrandt", in the document of No. 283 below. He found the above entry, in which he read van Rijn instead of van Ruynen, and hence applied it to Rembrandt. The correct reading has already been given by Dr. Scheltema, Rembrandt, 1853, p. 84.

No. 265. STATEMENTS OF WITNESSES
AS TO THE TRANSACTION
BETWEEN L. V. LUDICK AND H. BECKER

§ 1. Abraham Franssen and Thomas Asselijn declare on December 31, 1664, at Rembrandt's request, the former, that he was present in H. Becker's house nine or ten months ago, when L. v. Ludick sold his claim on Rembrandt to Becker for some cloth at f. 8.— a yard. § 2. Van Ludick had said that Becker had overvalued the cloth, and that he would let Becker keep the portion he was giving him for the claim, if he would pay f. 500. § 3. Becker had at once accepted the offer, but had afterwards retracted, whereupon v. Ludick had offered to take f. 25.— less, and Becker had told him, he would rather get rid of the cloth than pay cash for the claim. § 4. Becker had then given the cloth for the claim. § 5. Thomas Asselijn, for his part, declares that v. Ludick had told him a few days later, that he had exchanged the claim for some cloth. § 6. Asselijn having remarked that v. Ludick had no doubt made a good bargain, the latter retorted that he had offered Becker the cloth again for f. 500.—

No. 266. INSCRIPTIONS ON PRINTS OF THE ETCHING
« CHRIST HEALING THE SICK » (Bartsch n° 74).

About
1665

A. On the reverse of the impression of the first state in the Amsterdam Print Room :

First published by Vosmaer, first edition p. 229, second edition p. 292.

The inscription was written by the art-dealer Jan Pietersz Zoomer (1641 to about 1716). Marc Antonio's Plague, the print given in exchange, is Bartsch n. 417.

Taking into account the date of Zoomer's birth, this exchange cannot have been made much before 1665. It proves that, even after his bankruptcy, Rembrandt still possessed first impressions of the Hundred Gilder Print executed several years before, and that he still took an interest in the important prints of other engravers.

B. Reverse of the impression of the first state in the Imperial Library at Vienna :

de 6 print op de plaat (sixth impression from the plate) f 48 Gulden.

Both inscriptions are in a seventeenth century handwriting, the first written in red pencil, the second with a silver point. The former is probably either by Rembrandt himself or by the first owner of the plate.

First published by Adam Bartsch, Catalogue raisonné de toutes les estampes qui forment l'œuvre de Rembrandt, Vienna, 1797, i, p. 74.

C. Verses under an impression of the second state in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris :

Aldus maalt Rembrants naaldt den zoone Godts na 't leeven;

En stelt hem midden in een drom van zieke liën:

*Op dat de Werelt zouw na zestien Eeuwen zien,
De wond'ren die hij an haar allen heeft bedreeven.*

June 20 No. 275. ISAAC VAN HERTSBEECK IS ORDERED TO REFUND TO TITUS' GUARDIAN
THE SUM OF MONEY PAID TO HIM

§ 1. Isaac van Hertsbeeck is ordered, on June 20, 1665, to pay back the sum of f. 4.200.— received by him from the proceeds of Rembrandt's house, to Louys Crayers, Titus' guardian, § 2. in accordance with the decision of the Court of Sheriffs, given May 5, 1660. § 3. Hertsbeeck had appealed against this decision to the Provincial Court and the Supreme Court. The appeal was dismissed by the former on December 22, 1662, and by the latter on January 27, 1665, the appellant being condemned in costs.

§ 1. Den 20 Juny 1665 is Isaac van Harsbeeck bij assignatie geordonneert, de overstaende bij hem ontwangene poste van f 4.200 wederom uyt te heren ende te berde te brengen aen Louys Crayers, als bijde Heeren weesmeesteren, in plaetse van Jan Verwouth, gesurrogeerde voocht over Titus van Rijn, zoon van Rembrand van Rijn ende Saskia van Uylenburch, opde borchtochte bij hem in qualité voors. voor Schepenen gestelt, als blijet bij 't Cautie-

No. 278. REMBRANDT OFFERS TO PAY
II. BECKER

August 29

§ 1. Abraham Franssen declares on August 29, 1665, at Rembrandt's request, that he went to Becker on Rembrandt's behalf about a year and a half ago, and offered him, in Rembrandt's name, payment of the capital and interest on two promissory notes, demanding that Becker should hand over the security for the same, consisting of nine pictures and two books with engravings and drawings. § 2. To which Becker had replied, that Rembrandt must first finish the Juno, and had wanted him to paint something else as well, which Rembrandt declared himself under no obligation to do. § 3. Hereupon Becker had refused to accept payment.

§ 1. Op huyden den 29 Augusti a<sup>o</sup> 1665 compareerde voor my Johannes Hellenus, notaris pub. by den hove van Hollandt geadmiteert en te Amsterdam resideerende. The action was settled by mutual agreement on October 6, 1665. It is not possible to say whether the appearance before the Councillor Nierop took place or not, as the books recording such appearances are missing for this period.

We know nothing more precise as to these two debts. It is remarkable that no interest was charged on the second. Rembrandt had already offered to pay, on March 1, 1664 (<sup>1</sup>), but Becker had refused the money on that occasion, requiring that Rembrandt should first finish a Juno. It may be that the master agreed to paint this in place of interest. The presence of the receipts for the securities at the Hague was obviously due to the lawsuit referred to under No. 280.

Rembrandt promises to return the receipt for the security, which is for the moment at the Hague, within a few days. § 3. At the date of this settlement, neither of the two parties has any claim against the other beyond that arising from the debt to L. v. Ludick which Becker had taken over.

The expression " eenigen naergelaten soon van Rembrant " has led to the mistaken inference that Rembrandt was already dead at this date. It means, of course " the only surviving son of the marriage between Rembrandt and Saskia ". This interpretation was given by Scheltema, Rembrandt, 1853, p. 84, who also pointed out the mistake as to Rembrandt's supposed burial on July 19, 1664, referred to under our No. 264 above.

§ 1. Anna de Witt, of Dordrecht, writes to her cousin Johan van der Voort of Amsterdam, that she will gladly consent to have the portrait of their common grandfather, Willem Schijverts van Merode, copied for him as he wishes, but does not think there is a painter at Dordrecht who could do it satisfactorily. § 2. She has given the picture to her cousin Hamel to take to Herzogenbosch, where there is a good painter, on condition that, should the copy prove successful, a second copy should be made for him (v. d. Voort). § 3. As the original is less than life-size, the copy is to be made life-size, like the other family portraits, and many persons disapprove of this, holding that the original should be exactly copied. § 4. In the original there is also an indifferent figure of a patron saint, as the picture seems to have been an altarpiece formerly. § 5. In this matter, individual taste may be consulted. If her correspondent wishes, the original may be sent to him ; it is to be copied again for the writer in the same size as the original, but without the patroness, which is by an inferior painter, § 6. whereas the portrait is by one of the greatest painters of his time, Holbein, who also painted the picture of their ancestor. § 7. Rembrandt offered f 1000.— for the original, which proves its artistic value, and therefore it ought to be copied by a good painter.

Letter from Anna de Witt to her cousin Johan van der Voort of Amsterdam. First published by J. F. Backer, in the Amsterdamsch Jaarboek voor 1901, p. 16 et seq., Een briefje van nichtje Anna de Witt.

It is not very probable that Holbein was really the painter of this portrait, and of that of the ancestor mentioned in § 6. The tendency to ascribe every passable picture of the 16th century to Lucas van Leyden, Dürer, or Holbein was no less pronounced in those days than in our own times.

In the Register of Collateral Heirs, p. 36, 2nd document, in the civic archives of Amsterdam, is the following entry under the date of December 4, 1666:

Naergelaten by Jaques van leest, alhier overleden:

f 1100: de helfte van een huys en erve op de Roosegracht tegensovert Doolhoff, daer Rembrandt van Rijn, schilder, in woont.

f 1000: de helfte van een huys staende naest het bovenstaende, bewoont bij pieter Coelard.

f 350: de helfte van een achterhuys in te gaen in de gangh nevens het huys daer rembrandt in woont.

f 1000: } (Other houses, of no interest to us.)
f 5500: }

Den 4 December 1666 aengegeven bij Pieter van ghesel wonende int onderste perceel op 't water.

First published in Oud Holland, 1884, II, p. 108, by Mr. N. de Roever, Rembrandt's Sterfhuis, where also we are informed that Jaques van Leest, probably brother of the engraver, A. van Leest, died at the end of 1666. Cf. for him also No. 259 above.

The heirs had the houses sold by auction. In the conditions of sale, preserved in the Amsterdam archives (!), it is stated that the first house was let till May, 1668, for a yearly rent of f. 225.

The sale took place on January 17, 1667. The Pieter van Ghesel mentioned above became the owner of the whole house for f. 3906. —

The house, n° 184, in which Rembrandt had been living since July 26, 1663, stands on the north side of the Roosegracht, which is now filled in. The plot of ground is 4 m. by 23 1/2 m. A passage at the side of the house leading to the courtyard is now called the Romolengang. An underground dwelling had an entrance-door in this passage.

1667 No. 289. RHYMED EULOGY ON REMBRANDT'S
ETCHED PORTRAIT OF LIEVEN
VAN COPPENOL

Mariette found the following verse in Coppenol's writing on an impression of Bartsch n° 283, in the Crozat Collection:

1. Willige Verkoopingen, 1666-67, n° 43.

Lieven van Coppenol A° 1667

No. 290. RHYMED EULOGY ON REMBRANDT'S
PORTRAIT OF JEREMIAS DE DEKKER 1667

*Op zijne afbeelding geschildert door
Rembrand van Rijn.*

o Rembrand, schoon uw vlijt De Dekker heeft gemaelt

Zoo koustig dat de ziel als uit het aenschijn straelt,

't Is nuer een schaduw van de schors, die hem bedekte:

*Zijn pen was machtiger dan al't pinccelbedrijf:
Zy schildert zelf zijn geest, die langer voor het lijf*

Te groot viel, waerom ook zijn reis ten Hemel strekte.

J. v. Petersont.

Although, as we have seen above (No. 222), the portrait of Dekker was painted before 1660, this poem appears for the first time in the posthumous edition of the poet's works, published by Wed<sup>e</sup> Marten Jansz Brandt and Abraham van der Burgh at Amsterdam in 1667.

No. 291. JEREMIAS DE DEKKER'S POEM
OF THANKS TO REMBRANDT 1667

V. 1—12. Alexander the Great would allow none but Apelles to paint him; and although the poet is less proud, he is nevertheless well pleased that the Apelles of his age has consented to paint him. 12—16. And this, not in hope of gain, but out of his love and favour to the Muses. 17—28. De Dekker would fain, in his turn, portray Rembrandt's art and talent, but he cannot venture so to do, since the task would need the knowledge of a Vasari and a Van Mander. 29—48. Neither is it necessary, for Rembrandt's brush is famous as far as Dutch ships travel, and even in Rome, where he is the equal, nay, the superior, of Michelangelo and of Raphael. 49—60. It would therefore be an impertinence to sing Rembrandt's praise in verse, and he will only beg him to accept his eternal gratitude with these lines.

July 24 No. 300. ARBITRATION BETWEEN REMBRANDT AND HARMEN BECKER

§ 1. On July 24, 1668, Rembrandt acknowledges that, in accordance with the decision of three appointed arbitrators, the sum of f. 1082 is due from him to H. Becker, two-thirds of which he is to pay in cash, and one third in pictures by his own hand, which he is to paint within six months. § 2. These pictures are to be appraised by experts, appointed by the arbitrators, and should they be worth more than a third of f. 1082, Becker is to pay Rembrandt the surplus. § 3. As, however, it is not convenient to Rembrandt to pay the money at once, Becker will wait six months. Rembrandt will then pay him the amount punctually together with interest at 4 per cent, not only on this sum, but on his share of the fees paid to the arbitrators. § 4. For greater safety, Titus offers himself as his father's security.

This agreement deals with the debt, which H. Becker took over from L. v. Ludick, but for which he had not paid 50 per cent of the nominal value. Rembrandt had obviously tried to evade his responsibilities, on this ground, but his pleas were set aside by the arbitrators.

October 23

On October 23, 1668, the numerous pictures of the wine-merchant, Cornelis de Putter, of the Hague, were sold by his widow. Among them was:

No. 9. Rembrandt van Rhijn . . . . f. 50.—

The picture was bought in by the widow.

From the file of the notary G. de Cretzer of the Hague. First published by A. Bredins in Oud Holland, 1895, XIII, p. 120.

1669 No. 306. PROPERTY LEFT BY REMBRANDT
October 5

§ 1. The day<sup>(1)</sup> after Rembrandt's death on October 4, 1669, an inventory was made of his property. Although it had been expressly stated in the agreement of December 15, 1660, that the whole of the furniture belonged to Titus and Hendrickje, and consequently, it now passed to their heirs, an inventory of everything in the living-rooms was nevertheless drawn up (see below nos. 1—50). § 2. All the works of art and antiquities, however, were in three locked rooms, the keys of which were held by the notary, and the doors of which he sealed. § 3. Magdalena van Loo and Christiaen Dusart (Cornelia's guardian), expressly declare that they wish to consider whether they will take possession of the property or not. § 4. The meaning of the last, half-burnt clause seems to be, that they will pay the funeral expenses, if they can recover them from the estate.

First published, after the discovery made by the author, in the second (French) edition of Dr. P. Scheltema's Rembrandt, edited by W. Bürger in 1866, p. 153.

The entry relating to Catharina van Wijck, which follows after that of Rembrandt's burial, and really belongs to the entry relating to Jan Theunisz Blanckerhof, was erroneously connected with Rembrandt, until Mr. N. de Roever set the matter right in Oud Holland, 1, p. 1 et seq.: Een huwelijk van Rembrandt waarvan de eerste afkondiging twee eeuwen na zijn dood heeft plaats gehad. Cf. the facsimile of the passage loc. cit.

The two children under age left by Rembrandt were Cornelia, Hendrickje's daughter, and Titia, posthumous daughter of Titus.

The funeral expenses are given sub A as f. 20.—, sub B. as f. 15.—. Which was right we cannot now determine. For the expression: "baer roff 16," cf. No. 301 above.

But it is evident from our No. 319, that Fr. van Bijlert was appointed guardian to the unborn child of Titus in his will, of which we have no further record. The guardianship was probably only contingent on the death of Rembrandt, for otherwise van Bijlert would, no doubt, have been formally recognised immediately after the birth of Titia.

No. 310. INVENTORY OF THE PROPERTY LEFT BY REMBRANDT'S DAUGHTER-IN-LAW, MAGDALENA VAN LOO

The beginning of the inventory, says the writer who first published it, contains nothing of importance. From the portions still intact, we gather § 1. that certain of the goods were mortgaged, to the amount of . . . . 100 guilders, which Titus had spent in paying Becker, to whom he had given security for his father's debt. § 2. The goods in question were four pictures by Brouwer, two by Lievens, one by Porcellis, and three books containing Rembrandt's finest engravings. § 3. The family portraits are included with the furniture, and not with the works of art.

No. 311. DISPUTE BETWEEN THE GUARDIANS OF CORNELIA AND OF TITIA VAN RIJN 1669
December 9

§ 1. At the request of Abr. Franssen and Christiaan Dusart, guardians of Cornelia van Rijn, the notary goes to the house of François van Bijlert, guardian of Titus' daughter, and reads the following notice to him: § 2. whereas the latter has summoned them to be present on December 11, when an inventory is to be made of the effects left in Rembrandt's house at his death, § 3. and whereas, by virtue of the agreement relating thereto, everything in the house, with the exception of the clothes and painting materials, is the sole property of the daughter of Hendrickje, § 4. they will not allow any inventory to be made by Bijlert. § 5. After hearing the notice read, Bijlert asks for a copy of the communication made to him.

§ 1. Op huyden den 9 December 1669 hebbe ick Jan Quirijnsz Spithoff, openbaer Notaris etc. mij met en beneffens de naerbekreven getuygen vervoegt ten woonhuysse en bij den persoon van Sr. François van Bijlert, en denselven uyt den name en van wegen Abraham Francken en Christiaan da Sart, als voogheden over Cornelia van Rijn nagelaten dochtertje van Hendrickje Stoffels, geprocreert bij Rembrant van Rijn, geinsinweert en voorgelesen tgene volgt:

The guardian of the little Titia must have been quite as well aware of the existence of the agreement mentioned in § 3, as the guardians of the little Cornelia. Perhaps the summons was merely a formal one, its object being to certify what Rembrandt's effects actually were.

No. 312. THE PROPERTY OF TITUS' DAUGHTER ADMINISTERED BY THE CHAMBER OF ORPHANS

§ 1. On January 21, 1670, Franz van Bijlert hands over to the Chamber of Orphans, a list of moneys and scrip belonging to Titia van Rijn including § 2. a bond of the Province of Holland to the amount of f. 3000.— § 3. a bond of his own to the same amount, § 4. and a promissory note given by Cornelis van der Pluym to the amount of f. 4000.— All these are laid in Titia's drawer. § 5. On April 22, 1670, the last-named bill was met, and the money added to the other moneys. § 6 to § 10. The fifth part of the different valuables, pieces of land, and scrip left by Magdalena van Loo. § 11. Further, furniture, art-books, pictures, and ready money, as specified in the inventory. § 12. The property mentioned in the last paragraph has been sold meanwhile, and the proceeds, amounting to f. 2000.— added to the rest of the money on March 11, 1670. § 13. Fr. van Bijlert receives, on June 19, 1670, f. 200.— of the same, of which he is to give an account. § 14. Ibidem on September 12, 1670, the remaining f. 5780.— § 15. With this he has made a provisional investment in two bonds of the Province of Holland, at an outlay of f. 2000 for the two, and § 16. has added the balance of f. 3750.— to the rest of the money. § 17. This sum is, however, handed to him again on February 25, 1671, as he promises to invest it in bonds. § 18. On the same day he agrees to take Titia into his house, and board and educate her, as long as he or his wife shall live, for f. 300.— a year, and the regents of the Chamber of Orphans may record the contract on each side. The bonds mentioned in § 15 were handed over to F. van Bijlert again on March 3, 1671, and with them and the rest of the money for which he has still to give an account, he bought a bond of f. 10000.— § 20. On August 30, 1686, all the bonds were handed to Fr. van Bijlert jun. and his wife Titia van Rijn, who thereupon gave their father and father-in-law, van Bijlert sen. a receipt in full.

hollandois, i, p. 94, from the "Inbreng Register, 33," of the Amsterdam Chamber of Orphans, in the civic archives.

De Roever, in Oud Holland, 1883, i, p. 10 et seq. put forward the very acute hypothesis that the bonds mentioned in § 2—4 were the paternal, and the assets enumerated in § 5—10 the maternal heritage of the orphan. The artistic objects of § 11, 12, probably also came from Titus van Rijn, and the bond for f. 10 000, the purchase of which on March, 1671, is noted in § 19, was obviously paid for with the available sum of f. 5180.—, plus half the proceeds of Rembrandt's estate, the other half going to Cornelia van Rijn. As Dutch bonds cannot have been much below par in March, 1671, Rembrandt's estate must have amounted to from f. 8—9000.

No. 314. AFFIDAVIT RELATING TO HENDRICKJE STOFFEL'S CUPBOARD

§ 1. Affidavit of Jannetje Vermeulen and Rebecca Willems made at the request of Abraham Franz and Christiaen Dusart, guardians of Cornelia van Rijn. § 2. The former declares on March 16, 1670, that she well remembers that Hendrickje Stoffels, then housekeeper to Rembrandt, living exactly opposite to her, had a cupboard of her own in the vestibule, so full of linen and woollen goods and silver that the appraisers valued it at f. 600.—.
§ 3. Hendrickje had been obliged, on this occasion, to swear that the cupboard and its contents belonged to her, and that Rembrandt had no share in them, § 4. otherwise the cupboard would have been seized by the trustee. § 5. In support of her statement she declares that at the time, being Hendrickje's opposite neighbour, she was very intimate with her, had often seen the cupboard standing in its place, had often looked into it with Hendrickje, and seen silver spoons, gold rings, other silver articles, and linen and woollen goods in it, § 6. and Hendrickje had often told her how she had been obliged to swear that it all belonged to her. § 7. Rebecca Willems declares, that Rembrandt had often told her how he had been obliged again to take money from Cornelia's property, and how he had kept the household with it for a time. § 8. Further, she knew that Cornelia had a bag of silver ducats in the cupboard, and on the day after Rembrandt's death, she had seen Magdalena van Loo take about f. 170 in gold out of the bag of silver, because half of the gold belonged to her. § 9. Both women declare, they had often heard Rembrandt say that the cupboard and its contents belonged exclusively to Cornelia.

§ 10. When, on the day after Rembrandt's death, the notary Stheeman had placed seals on the rooms, cupboards, and chests, they were both present, and heard Magdalena van Loo tell the notary that this cupboard, being Cornelia's property, was not to be sealed, and saw her hand the key to Chris-tiaen Dusart, asking him to take care of it.

Cf. Nos. 191 and 315 on the subject of this cupboard.

From § 9 it appears that the making of the inventory took place the day after Rembrandt's death. As this was done on October 5, 1669, we gather that Rembrandt died on October 4, 1669.

No. 315. REMBRANDT'S PECUNIARY CIRCUMSTANCES AT THE TIME OF HIS DEATH

§ 1. On March 18, 1670, Rebecca Willems declares in addition to her former deposition, which she maintains and confirms, that, on the day after Rembrandt's death, Magdalena van Loo came to her and asked if no money had been found in the house. § 2. She had answered this question in the negative, and had said, that Rembrandt had for some time past been drawing upon Cornelia's money, to keep the house. § 3. At this Magdalena had seemed very much perturbed, and had said she hoped Rembrandt had not taken the gold coins from Cornelia's money-box, half of which belonged to her. § 4. Shortly afterwards Dusart came in, and Magdalena repeated this to him. § 5. Both of them had then asked her for the key of Cornelia's cupboard, opened the cupboard, taken out a money-bag, and from this again a smaller bag containing gold, and Magdalena had, with Dusart's full knowledge and approval, taken the gold home with her, promising to bring back silver in its place.

was, § 2. sij deposante antwoorde van Neen, seggende dat Sr. Rembrandt van Rijn haer deposante wel gesecht had, dat hij alrede eenige tijd uit Cornelia's cas 't huys had opgehouden, § 3. deselve Magdalena daerop seyde, als perplect staende: " ick hoop niet, dat vader de goude pottstukken van Cornelia, daer mijn de helft van toecomen, genomen heeft." § 4. Dat cort daerop den requirant Dusart aldaer mede ten huysse gecomen is en Magdalena 't gunt vooren (staet) tegen den req<sup>r</sup> Dusart seggende, § 5. als doen de requirant en Magdalena de sleutel van de kas van Cornelia affey-schte, ende daermede de kas opgedaen en in presencie van haer deposante aldaer een sack gelt uytkreegh, in welke sack seecker sackje met gout in was, welck goudt sij Magdalena met kennisse en toestaan van hem Dusart daeruyt en mede naer haer huys nam, met belofte daer silvergelt voor in de plaets te brengen.

The word " Acte " on the margin meant, that the couple were not married in Amsterdam, but that they had demanded a document, which was to show, that the banns had been published in Amsterdam, and that the marriage might take place elsewhere.

The couple went to Batavia in the course of the same year (cf. No. 320 below), and there the following children of the marriage were baptised.

No. 321. A PICTURE BY, AND A COPY AFTER 1670
REMBRANDT, IN A PRIVATE COLLECTION November 4
AT AMSTERDAM

In the inventory of the broker Sr. Abraham Fabritius, drawn up on November 4, 1670, there is the following entry :

*Op de beste camer:
Een lazarusverwecking van Rembrand van Rijn
In de binnencamer agter 't voorhuys:
Een juffrouw uyt een venster naar Rembrandt van Rijn*

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary A. Voskuyl of Amsterdam.

This Raising of Lazarus was either the early picture in the collection of the late Mr. Yerkes of New York (n° 30 in the inventory of 1636; Bode, Plate 45), or the picture valued f. 600 in Joh. de Renialme's estate in 1657 (see above No. 177).

The second picture was perhaps a copy from the Dulwich Gallery Girl at a Window (Bode, Plate 300).

IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

In the inventory of November 24, 1671, of the deceased Jan Boursse, brother of the painter Esayas Boursse, living in the Anthoniebreestraat, are the following among other pictures :

Een conterfeytsel van een dienstmaecht door Rembrandt van Rijn gedaen.

Een groot printeboeck omtrent compleet (nearly full) van teykeningen en printen door Rembrandt van Rijn.

Een groot printeboeck, niet compleet van teykeningen en printen, gedaen door Rembrandt van Rijn.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. de Winter of Amsterdam.

There were besides these a number of other pictures, many of them by Esayas Boursse, all unpriced.

From Simon van Leeuwen's Korte Beschrijving van het Lugdunum Batavorum, Nu Leyden, Leyden, Joh. v. Gelder 1672, p. 188 et seq.

The first statement, that Joris van Schooten was Rembrandt's master, is incorrect. In my Quellenstudien, I, p. 396, I have tried to explain how van Leeuwen came to make the mistake. It is evident that he made abbreviated excerpts from Orlers, in which he indicated Rembrandt's master, Jacob van Swanenburgh, by the initials J. v. S. This artist, however, is only here mentioned by his family name, figuring everywhere else as Jacob Isaaksz.

Hence, when van Leeuwen was working up his excerpts, the only artist he could discover whose name agreed with these initials, J. v. S., was Joris van Schooten.

Van Leeuwen's second notice contains the first printed mention of Rembrandt's death.

No. 326. REMBRANDT PAYS HIGH PRICES
FOR ENGRAVINGS BY LUCAS VAN LEYDEN 1675

Sandrart relates what he had heard on this head from Rembrandt's pupil, Ulrich Mayr :

. . . wie mich dann auch der Kunst-berühmte Herr Johann Ulrich Mayr versichert, dass er seinem Lehrmeister Herrn Rembrandt für 14 Stück von dieses Künstlers saubersten Abdrucken, als das Ecce homo, S. Pauli Reise nach Damasco, die grosse Creutzigung, der Magdalenen Tanz und andere, in einem öffentlichen Ausruff 1400 Gulden bezahlen sehen.

[ . . . the distinguished artist, Johann Ulrich Mayr, also assured me that he had seen his master Rembrandt give 1400 guilders at a public auction for

14 of this artist's best prints, such as the Ecce Homo, the Conversion of St. Paul, the large Crucifixion, the Magdalene dancing and others.]

From Joachim von Sandrart's Academia Tedesca della... Pictura, Nuremberg, 1675, part II, book III, chapter VI, Lucas van Leyden und andere 11 Künstler, p. 240 a.

The prints in question are: Bartsch, n<sup>o</sup> 71, 107, 74 and 122.

The statement seems a very probable one, taking into account Rembrandt's admiration for the works of his great predecessor. Cf. our Nos 51, 319 and 340.

1675 No. 327. GOVERT FLINCK, REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

Aus den Clevischen Landen wurde diese edle Kunst merklich gezeuget, durch den herrlichen Künstler Govert Flinck, so sich von dort nach Amsterdam zu Rembrandt begeben, und bey ihm trefflich zugenommen, indem er, neben grossem Fleiss: seinen guten Verstand zum Vortheil gehabt, wordurch sein Lob bald weit ausgebreitet worden. Er folgte in der Manier viel seinem Lehrmeister, wurde aber in Gleichheit und Annehmlichkeit der Contrafäten glücklicher geschätzt.

[This noble art was greatly adorned by a native of Cleves, the superb artist, Govert Flinck, who, coming thence to Rembrandt at Amsterdam, made excellent progress with him, his great industry being supplemented by a good understanding, so that his praise soon spread abroad. He followed his master's manner very closely, but was esteemed happier in his portraits as regards likeness and amenity.]

From the work quoted under No. 326, chapter XX, Johan Lys und noch neun und dreyszig andere Mahlere, ccxxxiii. Govert Flinck van Glev, p. 319 b.

Sandrart knew both Flinck and Rembrandt personally. Flinck was Rembrandt's pupil immediately before the period spent by Sandrart in Amsterdam (c. 1637—1642). Flinck's works of this period show a marked dependence upon Rembrandt. It is easy to believe that his portraits were more pleasing and more faithful to the originals than those of Rembrandt.

1675 No. 328. GERRIT DOU REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

Gleichwie oftmalen einerley ausgesäeter Blumen Samen in einem Feld unterschiedliche und vielfältige Blumen herfür bringet, also gehets auch in unserer

Kunst: Gerhard Dou von Leyden wurde zwar von Renbrand in unserm Kunstgarten gesäet, aber es wurde eine ganz andere Blume, als der Gärtner sich eingebildet.

[Just as seeds of the same kind scattered in a field often produce flowers various and manifold, so is it in art. Gerhard Dou of Leyden was indeed sown by Rembrandt in our art-garden, but he became a flower very different to that which the gardener expected.]

From the work quoted under the two preceding numbers, chapter XXI, Carl von Mandern und andere vier und zwanzig Mahlere, ccxxxvi. Gerhard Dou von Leyden, p. 320 b.

Orlery has also recorded, that Gerrit Dou was Rembrandt's pupil. But Sandrart's statement is independent of this, as he knew Dou personally. Cf. W. Martin, Het Leven en de Werken van Gerrit Dou, Leyden, 1901, p. 41 et seq.

No. 329. SANDRART'S BIOGRAPHY OF REMBRANDT

§ 1. Rembrandt, the son of a miller, a pupil of Lastman, attained to a high degree of excellence in art through industry and natural gifts, although he never visited Italy and was but imperfectly developed. § 2. He sinned against the laws of anatomy, proportion, perspective and the antique, as against Raphael's draughtsmanship; and he also warred against academies and relied on Nature. § 3. Being incorrect in outline, he made his backgrounds dark and laid stress only on the general harmony of a picture, achieving excellent results in half lengths, heads and small pictures. § 4. His engravings bear witness to his industry, and by its means he acquired affluence; his house was full of well-to-do pupils, each paying about f. 100 a year. In addition, he made from f. 2000 to f. 2500 a year by the sale of their works. § 5. If he had been more prudent in his relations with others, he would have become still wealthier. But although he was no spendthrift, he cared little for social rank, and was addicted to the society of humble folks, who interfered a good deal with his work. § 6. His colour-harmony. § 7. His passion for collecting. § 8. His concentration of light and his glowing colour. § 9. In his representation of old persons he came very close to Nature. He painted few mythological or historical episodes, but rather simple and naturally picturesque subjects. § 10. He died in Amsterdam; his son is said to be a good painter also.

§ 1. Es ist fast zu bewundern, dass da der fürtreffliche Rembrand von Ryn, nur aus dem platten Land und von einem Müller entsprossen, gleichwol ihm die Natur zu so edler Kunst dergestalt getrieben, dass er durch grossen Fleisz, angeborne Inclination und Neigung auf einen so hohen Staffel in der Kunst gelanget. Er machte seinen Anfang zu Amsterdam bey dem berühmten Laszmann und gieng ihme wegen Gütigkeit der Natur ungesparten Fleiszes und allstätiger Uebung nichts ab, als das er Italien und andere Oerter, wo die Antichen und der Kunst Theorie zu erlernen nicht besucht, zunal da er auch nicht als nur schlecht Niederländisch lesen, und also sich durch die Bücher wenig helfen können:

§ 2. Dennach bliebe er beständig bey seinem angenommenen Brauch, und scheute sich nicht, wider unsere Kunst-Reglen, als die Anatomia und Maas der menschlichen Gliedmassen, wider die Perspectiva und den Nutzen der antichen Statuen, wider Raphaels Zeichenkunst und vernünftige Ausbildungen auch wider die unserer Profession höchstnößigen Academien zu streiten, und denenselben zu widersprechen, vorgehend, dass man sich einig und allein an die Natur und keine andere Reglen binden solle, wie er dann auch, nach Erforderung eines Werks, das Licht oder Schatten, und die Umzüge aller Dingen, ob sie schon dem Horizont zuwider wann sie nur seiner Meinung nach wol und der Sachen geholffen, gut geheissen; § 3. So dann, weil die saubere Umzüge sich an ihrem Ort correct solten erfinden, füllte er die Gefahr zu vermeiden denselben mit Finsterschwarz dergestalt aus, dass er von solchen nichts anders als die Zusammenhaltung der Universal-Harmonia verlangte, in welcher letzten er fürtefflich gewesen, und der Natur Einfalt nicht allein stattlich auszubilden, sondern auch mit natürlichen Kräften in Colorten und starken Erheben, zu zieren gewust fürnemlich in halben Bildern, oder alten Köpfen, ja auch in kleinen Stücken, zierlichen Kleidungen und andern Artigkeiten.

§ 4. Neben diesem hat er in Kupfer sehr viele und unterschiedliche Sachen geätzt, die von seiner Hand im Druck ausgehen, aus welchem allem wol zu sehen dass er ein sehr fleisziger unverdrossener Mann gewesen dannhero ihme das Glück grosse baare Mittel zugetheilt, und seine Behausung in Amsterdam mit fast unzählbaren fürnehmten Kindern zur Instruction und Lehre erfüllet, deren jeder ihme jährlich in die 100 Gulden bezahlt, ohne den Nutzen welchen er aus dieser seiner Lehrlinge Mahlwerken und Kupferstücken erhalten der sich auch in die 2 bis 2500 Gulden baares Gelds belaffen, samt dem, was er durch seine eigne Hand-Arbeit erworben. § 5. Gewisz ist dass wann er mit den Leuten sich hätte wiszen zu halten und seine Sache vernünftig anzustellen er seinen Reichthum noch merklich ergrössert haben würde; Dann ob er schon kein Verschwender gewesen, hat er doch seinen Stand gar nicht wiszen zu beobachten, und sich jederzeit nur zu niedrigen Leuten gesellet, dannhero er auch in seiner Arbeit verhindert gewesen.

§ 6. Dieses dienet zu seinem Lob, dass er die Farben sehr vernünftig und künstlich von ihrer eignen Art zu brechen, und nachmalen darnit auf der Tafel der Natur warhafte und lebhaft Einfältigkeit, mit guter Harmonie des Lebens auszubilden gewust vormit er dann allen denen die Augen eröffnet, welche, dem gemeinen Brauch nach, mehr Färber als Mahler sind, indem sie die Härteigkeit und rauhe Art der Farben ganz frech und hart neben einander legen, dass sie mit der Natur ganz keine Gemeinschaft haben, sondern nur denen in den Kram-Läden gefüllten Farben Schachteln oder aus der Färberey gebrachten Tüchern ähnlich und gleich sehen. § 7. Sonsten war er auch ein grosser Liebhaber von allerley Kunststücken an Gemälden, Handriszen, Kupferstichen, und allerhand fremden Seltsamkeiten, denn er eine grosse Menge gehabt und hierinnen sehr curios gewesen; deswegen er auch von vielen sehr hoch geschätzt und gepriesen worden.

§ 8. In seinen Werken liesze unser Künstler wenig Licht sehen, auszer an dem fürnehmsten Ort seines Intents, um welches er Licht und Schatten künstlich beysammen hielt, samt einer wolgemessenen reflexion, also dass das Licht in den Schatten mit groszem Urtheil wieche, die Colorit ware ganz glüend, und in allem eine hohe Vernunft. § 9. In Ausbildung alter Leute, und derselben Haut und Haar zeigte er einen grossen Fleisz, Gedult und Erfahrungheit, so dass sie dem einfältigen Leben ganz nahe kamen. Er hat aber wenig antiche Poetische Gedichte, alludien oder seltsame Historien, sondern meistens einfältige und nicht in sonderbares Nachsinnen laufende ihme wolgefällige und schilderachtige (wie sie die Niederländer nennen) Sachen gemahlet, die doch voller aus der Natur herausgesuchter Artlichkeiten waren: § 10. Ist gestorben in Amsterdam, und hat einen Sohn, der gleichfals die Kunst wol verstehen solle, hinterlassen.

Sandart was acquainted with Rembrandt from 1637—1642 at Amsterdam. His statements probably record the facts concerning the master which had impressed themselves on his memory: that he was of humble origin, had had a great vogue and had earned a great deal of money, but associated chiefly with persons of the lower orders. He had probably left the city before the Night-Watch was painted, or he would certainly have mentioned it, as it was executed for the same room as his own group of marksmen (cf. above, No. 144). He seems also to have been ignorant of Rembrandt's later reverses. The son who was also reputed a good painter, was either Titus, of whom we only know that he had tried his hand at painting before he was fifteen (inventory of 1656, n<sup>o</sup> 298—300), or Rembrandt's son-in-law, Cornelis van Suythof.

1675 No. 330. J. U. MAYR, REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

Johann Ulrich Mayr. . . hat, nach kaum zurürk gelegtem kindtschen Alter, einen Anfang [in der Kunst] zu Augstburg gemacht; dieweil aber sein Vatterland diesen seinen groszen Lust nicht nach Genüge desselben ersättigen mögen hat er sich in Niderland zu den berühmten Künstlern Rembrand und Jordans begeben, und daselbst durch allerhand zierliche Historien von dem gefangenen Traum-Ausleger Joseph in Egypten, der Flucht der Jungfrauen Maria mit ihrem Jesu-Kind auf dem Esel, und vielfältige andere, die erste Blumen in den unverwelklichen Kranz seines Kunst-Ruhms gebunden, indem alle Kunstverständige in seiner Arbeit eine der Natur vollkommene Ähnlichkeit, wahrhafte Colorit, universal-harmonie der Farben und derselben gerechte Stärke und Kraft gefunden, und dernalben sein Lob der ämsigen Fama auszubreiten anvertrauet.

[Johann Ulrich Mayr . . . when scarcely more than a child, had made a beginning [in art] at Augsburg; but as his native land did not give him facilities enough to satisfy his ambitions, he went to the Netherlands, to the famous artists Rembrand and Jordans, and there wove the first blossoms into the unfading garland of his artistic fame by painting various pleasing histories of the captive interpreter of dreams, Joseph in Egypt, of the flight of the Virgin with the Infant Jesus on the ass, and many others; all connoisseurs now agreeing that his works show a perfect resemblance to Nature, truthful colour, a general harmony of tints, together with due strength and force, and thence busy Fame may be trusted to spread his praise abroad.]

IN THE POSSESSION OF G. UYLENRURCH March 27

fo. 70. . . . Inventaris vaude Meubelen Huysraet ende anders bevonden inden Boedel van Gerrit Uylenburgh Schilder.

fo. 76<sup>r</sup> 9. een Judin (Jewess) van Rembrandt fo. 77<sup>r</sup> 74. een begonne vrouwe Conterfeitsel (unfinished female portrait) van Rembrandt.

First published from the "Register van de Inventarissen MM. Anno 1675" among the documents of the "Desolate Boedelskamer" in the civic archives of Amsterdam, by Dr. P. Scheltema, Rembrandt, French edition of 1866, p. 110 et seq. Among the assets of this art-dealer, the son of Hendrick Uylenburgh, were 153 artistic objects, all unvalued. The inventory was drawn up on March 27 and 28, and April 26 and 27, 1675. Not one of the three pictures by Rembrandt can be identified with any certainty.

No. 332. COPY OF A CHRIST BY REMBRANDT 1675
IN A PRIVATE COLLECTION AT AMSTERDAM December

In the inventory of Gerrit Reyersz Elias of Amsterdam, drawn up in December, 1675, is the following entry:

Een copy na een Christuonick van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. de Winter of Amsterdam.

No. 333. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT 1676
IN A SALE AT ROTTERDAM May 15

At the sale of May 15, 1676, at Rotterdam, of the pictures of Reynier van der Wolf and his children, the heirs of Juffrouw M. Pessers, there was the following entry under n° 14 of the "Registers van de voornaamste zoo Oude als Nederduytse Meesters gemaakt":

Een Paracelsus, een half Figuur, door Rembrandt . . . . . f 200.—

The catalogue is preserved in G. Hoet's Catalogus of Naamlyst van Schilderyen met derzelve pryzen, zedert een langen reeks van Jaeren zoo in Holland als op andere Plaatzten in het openbaar verkocht, The Hague, 1752, vol. II, p. 344, where it is interesting to compare the prices of the other pictures. For the Rembrandt, cf. J. Six in Oud Holland, 1897, xv, p. 4. No. 335. AN OLD MAN, PAINTED
BY REMBRANDT,
ENGRAVED BY WALLERANT VAILLANT

Bust of a bearded old man in a skull-cap, looking down to the right. Inscribed:

Rembrandt Pinx. W. Vaillant fec. et Exc.

W. Vaillant flourished 1623-1677.

The same head was engraved by de Marcenay in 1764 as n° 24 of the de Vence collection, under the title of Le Vieillard atrabilaire.

The original has disappeared.

No. 336. PORTRAIT OF REMBRANDT AND SASKIA
IN THE POSSESSION OF LOUYS CRAYERS' WIDOW

1677
August 4

On August 4, 1677, Louys Crayers' widow, who had married as her second husband Gerrit Hagen, owned:

Een conterfeytsel van Rembrandt van Rijn en zijn huysvrouw.

Unpublished extract made by the late Mr. N. de Roever of Amsterdam.

Louis Crayers had been guardian to Titus van Rijn. Cf. above Nos. 192 et seq.

The only portrait-groups of Rembrandt and Saskia are those in the Dresden Gallery (Bode, Plate 157), and at Buckingham Palace (Bode, Plate 158).

No. 337. CAREL FABRITIUS AND ABRAHAM
FURNERIUS, FELLOW-PUPILS WITH HOOGSTRAATEN UNDER REMBRANDT

Samuel van Hoogstraten, in his Inleyding tot de Hooge Schoole der Schilderkonst, published by Francois van Hooagstraten at Rotterdam in 1678, makes repeated references to his fellow-pupils in Rembrandt's studio, and the theoretical questions they were in the habit of discussing together.

§ 1. Fabritius asks: How can one tell whether a pupil is likely to become a good painter? § 2. Hoogstraten answers: He gives promise of becoming such, if, taking into account his youth, he seems not only to love art, but to take delight in rendering the beauties of Nature. § 3. Hoogstraten asks Furnerius: How can one tell whether an episode has been well depicted. § 4. Furnerius answers: From knowledge of history. § 5. The question arises: what is the first rule of good composition? § 6. Fabritius answers: To select and arrange the noblest objects in Nature.

§ 1. Onzen Fabritius, mijn medeleerling, stelde my in onze jeugd deeze vraeg voor:

Welk zijn de gewisse kenteykenen, en vruchten van den geest in een jong leerling, om een goet Schilder uit te verhoopen?

§ 2. Ik antwoorde; na de maete mijns begrijs in dien onderdom:

Dat hy niet alleen schijne de konst te beminnen, maer dat hy in der daet, in de aerdicheden der bevaltijke natuur uit te beelden, verliest is.

Page 95.

§ 3. Ik stelde wel eer in onze Schilderschool aen Furnerius, die namaets in zijn lantschappen zeer aerdich was, deeze vraeg voor: Waer uit datmen zoude weeten en kennen, of een Historie wel was uitgebeelt? § 4. Hy antwoorde: Uit kennis van de geschiedenis.

Page 181.

§ 5. Wy hadden toen ik noch Discipel was, dit vraagstuk: Welk daer was de grondles en regel van wel te ordineeren: § 6. Fabritius antwoorde: De edelste natuerlijkheden te verkiezen, en by een te schikken.

Hoogstraten became Rembrandt's pupil about 1641, i. e. after the death of his father Dirck (December 20, 1640; p. 257; under No. 341, § 3). By his fellow-pupil Fabritius he must mean Carel, and not Bernard, for in other passages (pp. 274, 291 and 308; see our No. 343), he praises his "deurzichten", i. e. perspectives, also eulogised by Bleysswijk. Of these we can form no idea, the last of these pictures having been destroyed in the fire at the Boymans Museum, Rotterdam, in 1864. It is, however, noteworthy that Carel Fabritius was already an independent master in 1640 (before Hoogstraten, according to his own account, entered Rembrandt's studio), as his portrait of Abraham de Notte in the Rijksmuseum shows. Abraham Furnerius is only known to us by his very Rembrandtesque drawings. He also was an independent "Kunstschilder" by June 13, 1641, so can only have been Hoogstraten's fellow-pupil for a short time. Cf. Hofstede de Groot, Quellenstudien, p. 331 et seq.

No. 337 a. HOOGSTRATEN, REMBRANDT'S PUPIL.

Hoogstraten, having importuned Rembrandt with questions, received the following advice from him: "Accustom thyself to make a right use of what thou hast already acquired, and what is now hidden will be presently revealed to thee".

Als ik mijn meester Rembrant eens lastig viel, met te veel oorzaak vragen, zoo antwoorde hy zeer wel: Schikt u daer nae, dat gy 't geene gy alreets weet, wel leert in 't werk stellen, zoo zult gy de verborgentheden, daer gy nu na vraegt, tijts genoeg ontdekt zien.

From S. van Hoogstraten, loc. cit., p. 13.

No. 337 b. HOOGSTRATEN PRAISES REMBRANDT'S POWER OF RENDERING THE ASPECTS OF THE MIND

Every great Italian and Netherlandish master has distinguished himself more especially in some particular feature of his art. After citing Italian examples, the writer gives German and Netherlandish instances. Among these, Rembrandt is distinguished as having best portrayed the emotions.

Een ander zal mooglijk lust hebben om deeze byzonderheden nader aen te wijzen, en ook van onze Duitschen: maer van de laetste tot een proef, zoo was Durer gezet op meest enerley stof van kleederen, Lukas van Leyden op zedicheit, Rubens op rijklijke ordinantien, Antony van Dijk op bevalijckheit, Rembrand op de lijdingen des gemoeds, en Goltsius op eenige groote Meesters hand eigentlijk na te volgen.

From S. van Hoogstraten, loc. cit., p. 75.

No. 338. HOOGSTRATEN'S CRITICISM OF THE « NIGHT-WATCH »

1673

§ 1. A painter should not arrange his figures side by side in rows, as is too often done in the Dutch "shooting-pieces". Unity should reign in the composition, as in Rembrandt's picture, where indeed, the separate portraits entrusted to him are too much subordinated to the general effect. § 2. Nevertheless, the picture, in spite of its defects, will outlive all the works of Rembrandt's rivals by virtue of the picturesque conception, the elegance of composition, and the vigour that characterise it, and that make all other "shooting-pieces" look like figures from a pack of cards beside it. § 3. It would, however, have been better if there had been more light in the picture.

§ 1. T en is niet genoeg, dat een Schilder zijn beelden op ryen nevens malkander stelt, gelijk men hier in Holland op de Schuttersdoelen al te veel zien kan. De rechte meesters brengen te weeg, dat haer geheele werk eenweezich is, gelijk Clio uit Horatius leert:

*Breng yder werkstuk, zoo 't behoort,
Slechts enkel en eenweezich voort.*

Rembrant heeft dit in zijn stuk op den Doele tot Amsterdam zeer wel, maer na veeler gevoelen al te veel, waergenomen, maekende meer werks van het groote beelt zijner verkiezing als van de byzondere afbeeldsels, die hem waren aenbesteed. § 2. Echter zal dat zelve werk, hoe berispelijk, na mijn gevoelen al zijn meedestrevers verdueren, zijnde zoo schilderachtig van gedachten, zoo zwierich van sprong en zoo krachtich, dat, nae zommiger gevoelen, al d'andere stukken daer als kaarteblaren nevens staen. § 3. Schoon ik wel gewilt hadde, dat hij'er meer lights in ontsteeken had.

From S. van Hoogstraten, loc. cit., p. 176.

This remarkable criticism by a contemporary and pupil of Rembrandt's contains a strange mixture of praise and blame, the latter in respect of the lack of light and the subordination of the several figures, which should have been portraits, to the general effect, the former in respect of the unity of the composition, the picturesque effect and the vigour. The words "zwierich van sprong" are difficult to interpret, but they probably mean, as Vosmaer also supposed, freedom, elegance of composition.

No. 339. HOOGST RATEN'S CRITICISM OF REMBRANDT'S « PREACHING OF JOHN THE BAPTIST »

§ 1. Hoogstraten remembers having noted the admirable attention that marks the listeners of all classes in a beautifully composed picture by Rembrandt, representing the Preaching of John the Baptist. § 2. The incident of dogs pairing introduced in this picture was, however, less edifying. § 3. Natural as this may be in itself, it is unseemly to a degree in this picture; and might lead one to suppose it a discourse by the Cynic Diogenes, rather than by St. John. § 4. Such accessories reveal the simplicity of the master's mind, and are the more ludicrous the more vulgar they are.

§ 1. 't Gedenkt my dat ik, in zeker aerdich geordincert stukje van Rembrandt, verbeeldende een Johannes Predicatie, een wonderlijke aendacht in de toehoorderen van allerleye staeten gezien hebbe: dit was ten hoogsten pryslyk. § 2. maer men zach'er ook een hondt, die op een onstichtlijke wijze een teef besprong. § 3. Zeg vry, dat dit gebeurlyk en natuerlyk is, ik zegge dat het een verfoeilijke onvoeglykheyt tot dese Historie is; en dat men uit dit byvoegzel veel eer zou zeggen, dat dit stukje een Predicatie van den Hondschen Diogenes, als van den Heyligen Johannes vertoonde. § 4. Zoodanige uitbeeldingen maeken het onnoozel verstant des meesters bekent; en zijn te bespottlyker, alsze in geringer opmerkingen dwaelen.

No. 339a. HOOGST RATEN PRAISES
REMBRANDT'S TALENT FOR COMPOSITION

The various figures in a composition should not be piled one above the other, but should be freely grouped, as van Mander says in his didactic poem: Grondt der Edel Vry Schilderconst.

Here follows a quotation from the poet, and examples: Leonardo da Vinci, certain other Italians, Rembrandt, who understood and applied this principle successfully, Rubens and Jordaens:

Rembrandt heeft deze deugd dikmaels wel begrepen, en de beste stukken van Rubens, en zijn navolger Jordaens, hebben een byzonder welstandige sprongen troeping.

Deze liefde tot papierkunst is in onze dagen zoo hoog gesteegen geweest, dat ik voor een moezelmanetje, gezegt Uilenspiegel, van Lukas van Leyden, by de tachtich rijksdaelders, door Rembrandt, heb zien geeven: en de ronde passie van den zelve meester is noch voor ongelijk meerder prijs verkocht.

A similar fact is recorded by Sandrart: cf. above, No. 326.

The Uilenspiegel is Bartsch n° 159, the round Passion Bartsch n° 57-65.

No. 340a. HOOGST RATEN PRAISES
REMBRANDT'S TREATMENT OF FLESH

4678

The colours should be so mixed, as really to represent flesh, and chalky whites should be avoided. Jacques de Bakker of Antwerp and Jacob Backer of Amsterdam accomplished this in a natural manner, and Rembrandt attached great importance thereto.

Het zy dan datmen naekten van kinderen, of jongelingen, of lijvige worstelaers, of magere en uitgeeerde lichamen, of baedende nimsen, ja hemelsche Godinnen schildere; men zie toe, datmen de verwen zoodanich breeke, dat het vlees schijne; datmen de kalkachtige wiltheyt mijde. Vermander zegt, dat eenen Jaques de Bakker tot Antwerpen eerst een vleeschachtige maniere van schilderen invoerde, kotoreerende zoo niet met enkel wit, maer verhoogende met een natuerlijke karnatie. Zeker, zijn naemgenoot Jaques de Bakker tot Amsterdam is hem zoo wel in deze prijslijke waerneming naegevolgt, als hy hem in naem is gelijk geweest. Ik zwijge van Rembrant en andere, die dit konstdeel wonderlijk hoog achten.

From S. van Hoogstraten, loc. cit., p. 227.

No. 341. HOOGSTRATEN INCLUDES REMBRANDT AMONG THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PAINTERS OF HIS CENTURY

§ 1. The author will not write about painters, but about painting. § 2. To show that painting was not annihilated in Holland by the Iconoclasts, although they had driven it from the churches, he will mention a few painters who have best appreciated the lofty functions of art, and named made the noblest choice. § 3. The artists enumerated.

§ 1. . . . . mijn voornemen is niet van de Schilders, maer van de Schilderkonst, te handelen; een ander', die beter tijdt heeft, mag haere levens beschrijven, en Karel Vermander vervolgt. § 2. Om echter te toonen, dat de konst, sedert de Beelstorming in de voorgaende eeuw, in Holland niet geheel vernietigt is, schoon ons de beste loopbaenen, naementlijk de kerken, daer door geslooten zijn, en de meeste Schilders zich dieshalven tot geringe zaeken, jae zelfs tot beuzelingen te schilderen, geheelijk begeeven, zoo zal ik eenige met naemen aanwijzen, die meest op 't gros der konst en de edelste verkiezing hebben gezien. § 3. Als daer is geweest Strazio Voluto of Gilliam Fermout, Lastman, Mierevelt, Theodorus Baubere: Pieter Fransen de Grebber, die heer heeft, dat hy nevens andere tot discipel gehadt heeft den edelen en volmaekten Pieter Leely, die in 't hofte Wihal van Koning Karel den Tweeden tans als een alderuitgelezenste bloeme bloeit: Hondhorst, Ravesteyn, den verzierlijken Rembrant, nae de dood van mijn Vader Theodoor mijn tweede Meester: Jaques de Bakker, Govert Flink, Gerrit Douw, Stokkade, Jan Lievens, Micris, Doudeins, de Baen, maer holla, ik will de thans nog levendige, om geen jalouzie te verwekken, overslaen.

From S. van Hoogstraten, loc. cit., p. 257.
The Strazio Voluto, or Gilliam Fermout of § 3 is now known to us only as the first husband of G. Metsu's mother. Lely was not the pupil of P. F. de Grebber, but of his father, Frans Pietersz. It is not very clear what the writer means by the term "verzierlijk" as applied to Rembrandt. "Verzieren" means to adorn; "verzierlijk" would therefore signify rich in ornament, decorative?

No. 341 a. REMBRANDT'S TALENT IN RENDERING CANDLE-LIGHT

Rembrandt has represented candle-light to the best of his ability in some of his etchings, but when we cover up the light, the rest is black, whereas in reality, when we screen the source of light, we still see the rest very plainly.

[We should be careful] ou niet meer 't onderneemen, als het vermoogen onzer verwen toelaet. Want als wy te hoog opheffen, zoo zullen wy om laeg te kort schieten, gelijk een gebeurt, die in 't schilderen van een nachtstuk een brandende toors of een kaerse voor aen stellen: want zy hebben de macht niet, het resterende werk zijn behoorlijke hlaerheit te geeven. Rembrant heeft de maet van een kaerslicht in eenige bruine printjes nae zijn vermoogen uitgebeelt, maer als men die lichjes toedeckt, zoo blijft de rest van 't werk donker: daer wy gewoon zijn, als men ons iets by de kaers laet zien, onze hand voor 't licht te houden, op dat het onze ooggen niet en belette alles on 't klaerst en kenlijkst te onderscheyden.

From S. van Hoogstraten, loc. cit., p. 268.

No. 342. REMBRANDT'S TREATMENT OF REFLECTED LIGHT EULOGISED

§ 1. Rembrandt showed extraordinary mastery in the rendering of reflected light. This seems to have been his true element. § 2. Would that he had understood the theory of the matter somewhat better, for he who trusts only to his eye and to his alleged experience, makes mistakes which excite the scorn of pupils, to say nothing of masters, the more so, as such knowledge is easily acquired.

§ 1. Wonderlijk heeft zich onzen Rembrant in reflexceeringen gequeeten, jae het scheen, of deze verkiezing van 't wederom kaetsen van eenich licht zijn rechte element was, § 2. had hy hem maer wat beter op de grondregels deezer konst verstaen; want die alleentlijk op zijn oog en gewaende ondervindinge steunt, begaet dikmaels feylen, die den spot van leerjongers, ik zwijge van meesters, verdienen: en zoo veel te meer, daer deeze zekere kennissen, voor die'er zich een weynig aen laet gelegen zijn, zoo gemakkelijk zijn te bekomen.

REMBRANDT'S COLOUR

In Raphael's ceiling-decorations in the Chigi Palace (i. e. the Farnesina), we must not look for the qualities of Tintoretto or Veronese, Fabritius' perspectives, nor Rembrandt's colour, but Greek statues [as conceived] by the graceful Raphael, beauty without pomp, and a reflection of the antique.

... men behoeft in deze stukken (i. e. the ceiling-decorations in the Chigi Palace) niet te zoeken, of Tintoretse wondere oploeningen, of Veroneesche ordinantien, oogenbliklike bewegingen, of gelwonge schikking: veel min Fabritische deurzichten, of Rembrandtsche verwen: maer de Grieksche statuen in den bevallijken Rafael, de schoonheit zomler pronk, en een spiegel van 't oprechte outhet.

No. 343a. REMBRANDT'S TALENT
FOR COMBINING LIGHT AND SHADE

Light and shade must not be mixed too much, but they must be combined in groups, and transitions from the strongest light to the deepest shadow should be introduced, an art in which Rembrandt excelled.

Daerom beveele ik n niet te veel met lichten en schadwen door een te haspelen, maer de zelve bequamelijk in groepen te vereenigen; laet uwe sterkste lichten met minder lichten minlijk verzelt zijn, ik verzeeker u, datze te heerlijker zullen uitblinken; laet uwe diepste donkerheden met klaere bruintens omringt zijn, op dat ze met te meerder geweld de kracht van het licht mogen doon afsteeken. Rembrandt heeft deeze deugt hoog in top gevoert, en was volleert in 't wel byeenvoegen van bevriende verwen.

No. 344. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT
IN A PRIVATE COLLECTION AT AMSTERDAM

1678
May 7

On May 7, 1678, Johannes Rosa valued the pictures belonging to Hans aux Brebis, a rich Amsterdam merchant. Among them were:

- No. 27. Een meysje van Rembrandt. . . . f 30
31. Een vrouwe trony van Rembrandt. . . . f 3

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. van Loosdrecht of Amsterdam.

Pictures by other painters were valued as follows: E. de Witte, f. 50.—; Hercules Seghers, f. 18.—; J. Lievens (landscape), f. 36.—; J. Weenix, f. 100.—; Ph. Wouwerman (sea-coast), f. 75.—; and f. 80.—; Ruysdael, f. 24.—; Metsu (kitchen), f. 80.—; Poelenburg, f. 80.—; van der Does, f. 50.—; etc.

No. 345. PORTRAITS BY REMBRANDT VALUED AT AMSTERDAM

May 17

On May 17, 1678, J. Rosa and M. de Hondcoeter valued the pictures of the widow of J. Meurs of Amsterdam. Among them were:

- Een manstrony van Rembrandt. . . . f. 40.—
Een vrouwetryn van Rembrandt. . . . f. 15.—

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. van Loosdrecht of Amsterdam.

Pictures by other painters were valued as follows: A. v. Everdingen, f. 10.—; E. de Witte, f. 36.—; P. de Hoogh, f. 5.— and f. 25.— (a bedroom); Terburgh (Juffertje), f. 40.—; Ad. Willelaerts, f. 10.—; copy after Backer, f. 12.—; a gallery by Gerards (i. e. G. P. van Zijl), f. 40.—; A. v. d. Neer (night-scene), f. 18.—.

No. 346. REMBRANDT'S ETCHINGS
IN THE POSSESSION OF THE DEALER
CLEMENT DE JONGHE

1679
February 11

On February 11, 1679, the art-dealer, Clement de Jonghe, a friend of Rembrandt, died. He left a large collection of etchings, and among them an important set by Rembrandt, catalogued as follows:

1. Latombisch plaatjens. (Bartsch, n° 67).
2. Praeterjies an de deur. (B. 176 or 126?)
3. Jonckman met een persiaensche muts. (B. 141 or 142?)
4. Vlucht naar Egipten. (B. 52, 54 or 55.)

5. Wandelende besjes. (B. 120; Naomi and Ruth.)
6. St. Johans onthoofdinge. (B. 92; 93 is not genuine.)
7. Wijffjen met boeckende (sic!) koecken. (B. 124.)
8. Slaapende naakte vrouwjes. (Impressions of B. 197 to 205 entered under one number; hence the plural.)
9. Oude Tobias. (B. 42.)
10. Rembrandts moeder. (B. 343, 348, 349, 351, 352 or 354.)
11. Pleysterhoofd met een jongetjen. (B. 130.)

63. Vlucht naer Egipte. (B. 55, 52 or 54.)
64. Geboorte. (B. 45 or 46; both are the Adoration of the Shepherds.)
65. Afneminge van 't cruys. (B. 82, 81 or 83.)
66. Zacharius (Simeon) met kint op den armen. (B. 49.)
67. Biddende Tobias met sijn familie. (B. 43.)
68. Een outwifstronietgen. (Rembrandt's mother? cf. above ad 10.)
69. Neersiende oude man.
70. Rembrandt selfs. (Cf. 13.)
71. Sittende oude vrouw. (Cf. ad 10, 69.)
72. Leggende naekte ruster. (B. 196.)
73. Sittende een naekte slaeper. (B. 193? His eyes are open.)

First published from the file of the notary J. Backer of Amsterdam in Oud Holland, 1890, VIII, p. 180, by Dr. A. Bredius and Mr. N. de Roever, Rembrandt, Nieuwe Bijdragen tot zijne Levens-geschiedenis, III.

The above catalogue is inaccurate in several particulars: 21. Daniel onder de leeuwen, 35. Begravinghe der dooden in 't oude testament, 49. Avontmael Christi, 55. De Geboorte met een ladder, 30. Venus en Satyr, 66. Zacharias met kind op den armen, 73. Sittende een naeckte slaeper, 26. Varken drijvers, and at least one episode from the history of Tobias, are wrongly named, unless we assume that these etchings were no longer in existence when the first description of Rembrandt's etchings was made, for these examples are missing in the earliest catalogues of the master's engraved work. No. 8 is only comprehensible, if we assume that the plural indicates impressions of various etchings. for there is no etching of several naked woman. No. 29. Naechte Cleopatra, is also more fanciful than exact as applied to one of the extant studies of nude women. The same may be said of n° 43. Wandelende vader Abraham.

Capiteyn Eenbeen (One-leg) was probably the nickname of a one-legged citizen of Amsterdam. The two unknown individuals, of n° 24. Schipper Gerbrandts soontjen, and n° 45. Conterfeytsel van Snyters, are the only portrait-etchings in this inventory besides those of Rembrandt himself and his relations. It seems probable that when Six, Lutma, Asselijn and others had their portraits etched by Rembrandt, they received the whole set of impressions in payment. Otherwise it would be inexplicable that there should be no single specimen of these portraits in the collection of one of the leading art-dealers in Amsterdam.

No. 348. NOTE ON REMBRANDT
BY MATHIAS SCHEITS

Mathias Scheits, a Hamburg painter, who studied under Philips Wouwerman in Holland, made a few notes in his copy of van Mander's Schilderboek on contemporary artists no longer living. This copy is now in the possession of Dr. Wilhelm Bode of Berlin. The following is the note on Rembrandt :

noch Eenige uytnemende Meesters deser Konst die ick M. S. gekent hebbe ende al verby sein, sein dese volgende :

Rembrant, toe genamt van den Rein om dat hei in een Plaets aen den Ryn gelegen gebohren was, hadde geleert by Pitter Lastman. sein vader was een Molenaar. hei hielt sein Wohnung t Amsterdam, wass achtbaer ende groht van aensien door sein konst geworden, het welck doch in 't lest mit hem wat verminderde, hey starf Anno 1669, in de Maent September.

Dit geschreven, Anno 1679, den 23 Juny. M. S.

First published by Dr. W. Bode, Frans Hals und seine Schule, in von Zahn's Jahrbüchern für Kunstwissenschaft, IV, 1871, appendix 1, Ein handschriftlicher Nachtrag des Malers Mathias Scheits zu Carel van Manders Schilderboek, p. 63.

The note on Rembrandt follows those on Frans Hals and Philips Wouwerman, and precedes that on Jordaens.

No. 349. " A PHILOSOPHER " 1679
November 25
BY REMBRANDT
IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

In the inventory of the property of the deceased Volekwijn Momma, drawn up November 25, 1679, the following occurs among the pictures :

Een filosooph van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary W. Sylvius of Amsterdam.

The property included about forty pictures, all unpriced.

No. 350. WORKS BY REMBRANDT IN THE 1680
January 6
INVENTORY OF JAN VAN DE CAPPELLE

Between January 4 and August 13, 1680, an inventory was taken of the property left by the painter Jan van de Cappel of Amsterdam.

Among the numerous pictures and drawings were :

13. Een Ecce homo, grauw, van Rembrant van Rijn.

21. Een lantschapje van Rembrant van Rijn.

31. Een Conterfeytsel, synde den Overleden, van Rembrant.

55. Een conterfeytzel van Rembrandt, sijnde zijn vader.

56. Een Christus trony van dito.

65. Een besges trony van Rembrandt.

83. Een oudemanstronytje van Rembrandt.

Tekeningen, bevonden op de Constraemer

6. Een portfolio daerin 56 tekeningen van Rembrandt, historien.

7. Een dito daerin 89 tekeningen van Rembrandt, lantschappen.

17. Een dito daerin zijn 135 tekeningen sijnde het vrouwenleven met kinderen van Rembrandt.

24. Een dito daerin zijn 48 schetsen van Rembrandt en Pinas.

In 't comptoir

43. Een dito daerin 188 schetsen, lantschappen van Rembrandt.

From the file of the notary Adriaen Lock of Amsterdam. First published in Oud Holland, 1892, x, p. 31 et seq. by Dr. A. Bredius, De Schilder Johannes van de Cappelle.

There were nearly 200 pictures and 7098 drawings in all; about 500 of the latter were by Rembrandt.

No. 13 is the grisaille in the National Gallery (Bode, Plate 214); n° 31 is no longer extant; the rest cannot be identified.

The drawings " het vrouwenleven met kinderen " are probably the beautiful pen and ink sketches of women and children in the Stockholm Museum and other collections.

No. 351. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT
AMONG THE PROPERTY
LEFT BY THE PAINTER JACOB LOIS

The painter, architect and cloth-merchant, Jacob Lois, sometime sheriff of Rotterdam, died on August 31, 1676. The inventory of his property was handed to the president of the Chamber of Orphans on October 30, 1680.

Among the numerous pictures were :

Een oude manstrony van Reynbrant

There are no valuations.

First published from the civic archives of Rotterdam in the Algemeen Nederlandsch Familieblad 1883-84, n° 2 p. 4, n° 3 p. 2, n° 5 p. 4.

Lois' collection was already well known in 1663, in which year he was visited by the French traveller Monconys. Cf. our No. 257.

No. 352. REMBRANDT CRITICISED
BY ANDRIES PELS

1681

V. 1—10. Rembrandt a warning to all who are inclined to stray from the path marked out for artists. V. 11. Although he might have been not inferior to Titian, Van Dyck, Michelangelo or Raphael in colour and conception, he took as the model for his life-studies, not the Greek Venus, but a washerwoman or a treader of peat, and called this fidelity to Nature. V. 17. Description of such a model. V. 25. Rembrandt's passion for collecting curiosities from all parts of the world. V. 35. Regrets that an artist of so much native talent should not have turned it to better account.

1. Gij mist zeer grof, wilt gij 't gebaande pad verliezen.

Wilt ge, als wanhoopende, een gevaarelijker kiezen;

En met onduurzaam lof te vreden, doen, gelijk De groote Rembrandt, die 't bij Titiaan, van Dijk,

5. Noch Michiel Angelo, noch Rafel zag te haalen, En daarom liever koos doorluchtiglijk te dwaalen,

Om de eerste ketter in de Schilderkunst te zijn, En menig nieuweling te lokken aan zijn lijn; Dan zich door 't volgen van ervarenen te scherpen,

10. En zijn vermaard penseel den reglen te onderwerpen.

Die, schoon hij voor niet één van all' die meesters week

In houding, noch in kracht van koloryt bezweek, Als hij een' naakte vrouw, gelijk 't somtijds gebeurde,

Zou schild'ren, tot model geen Grieksche Venus keurde;

15. Maar eer een' waschter, of turf-treedster uit een schuur,

Zijn' dwaaling noemende navolging van Natuur, Al 't ander ydele verziëring. Slappe borsten, Verwongen' handen, ja de neepen van de borsten

Des rijglijfs in de buik, des husebands om 't been,

20. 't Moest al gevolgd zijn, of natuur was niet te vreen;

Ten minsten zijne, die geen regels, noch geen reden

Van evenmaatigheid gedoogde in 's menschen leden;

En doorzigt alzo min, als tusschenwijdte, woog,

- Noch wikte met de kunst, maar op de schijn van 't oog.
25. Die door de gansche Stad op bruggen, en op hoeken,
Op Nieuwe, en Noordermarkt zeer y'rig op ging zoeken
Harnassen, Moriljons, Japonsche Ponjerts, bont,
En rafelkraagen, die hij schilderachtig vond,
En vaak een Scipio aan 't Roonsche lichchaam paste,
30. Of de ed'le leden van een Cyrus meê vermaste.
En echter scheen hem, schoon hij tot zijn voordeel nam,
Wat ooit uit 's waerelds vier gedeelten herwaarts kwam,
Tot ongemeenheid van optooisel veel te ontbreeken.
Als hij zijn beelden in de kleederen zou steeken.
35. Wat is t een schade voor de kunst, dat zich zoo braaf
Een hand niet beter van haare ingestorte gaaf Gediend heeft! Wie had hem voorbij gestreefd in 't schild' ren?
Maar och! hoe ed'ler geest, hoe meer zij zal verwild' ren,
Zo zij zich aan geen grond, en snoer van regels bindt.
40. Maar alles nit zich zelf te weeten onderwindt!

From A. Pels, Gebruik en misbruik des tooneels, Amsterdam, Albert Magnus, 1681, 4°, p. 35 and 36.
Though the criticism is one-sided and unjust, the facts animadverted upon are true. The model described in v. 17 et seq. may have been the sitter for Bartsch n°. 198; the Scipio of v. 29 is perhaps the picture described under n° 3 in Smith's Supplement, which re-appeared at a London dealer's in May, 1905.

No. 357. PORTRAIT BY REMBRANDT
IN A HAGUE INVENTORY

On April 1, 1684, a reconciliation took place between Thomas Robijn and his wife Jannetje Molenijsen. An inventory was taken on this occasion, in which the following occurs:

Een trony van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary R. v. Opoceren of The Hague.

In an undated inventory of the same Th. Robijn's, discovered by A. Bredius in the archives of the Leyden Chamber of Orphans, but now lost, the picture is entered as:

Een tronie, wordt geseyt van Rembrandt.

Thirdly, a valuation of Thomas Robijn's pictures, which has disappeared, was discovered by A. Bredius, with this entry:

Een conterfeytsel van Rembrandt. . . f 11. 15.—

Other pictures were valued as follows: P. Mullier f. 11.—, Bramer f. 9. 5.—, v. d. Cappelle f. 10.—, de Claeuw f. 5. 5.— and a pair f. 4. 10.—, A. v. No. 358. REMBRANDT MENTIONED
BY FÉLIBIEN

§ 1. His universality. His portraits. His manner is distinguished from the smooth technique of his countrymen by the broad, fat brushing, and the juxtaposition of colours without any attempt at fusion. § 2. Many praise his works; and it must be admitted that his pictures are very artistic, and that, seen from the right distance, his heads have a very plastic effect. § 3. The difference between his portraits and those of Van Dyck. § 4. Some of the heads are repellent, when viewed too near.

§ 5. And as the spectator does not require to place himself at a distance from a simple portrait to take in the figure, this broad manner of painting seems unsatisfactory. § 6. However, all his works are not so treated. He distributes tones and half tones, lights and shadows skillfully. § 7. At the right distance everything blends agreeably. § 8. Etched portraits, etc. Date of death.

§ 1. Rimbrans vivoit encore alors. C'estoit un Peintre assez universel, et qui a fait quantité de portraits. Tous ses tableaux sont peints d'une manière tres-particulière, et bien différente de celle qui paroist si lechée, dans laquelle tombeut d'ordinaire les Peintres Flamans. Car souvent il ne faisoit que donner de grands coups de pinceau, et coucher ses couleurs fort épaisses, les unes auprès des autres, sans les noyer et les adoucir ensemble. § 2. Cependant, comme les gousts sont différens, plusieurs personnes ont fait cas de ses ouvrages. Il est vray aussi qu'il y a beaucoup d'art, et qu'il a fait de fort belles testes. Quoy-que toutes n'ayeut pas les graces du pinceau, elles ont beaucoup de force; et lorsqu'on les regarde d'une distance proportionnée, elles font un tres-bon effet, et paroissent avec beaucoup de rondeur.

§ 3. Il est vray, dit Pymandre, que les portraits du Peintre dont vous me parlez, sont bien différens de ceux de Vaudéik, et que les qualitez nécessaires à faire une belle teste, et que vous remarquez tantost, ne se trouvent point, à mon avis, dans celles de Rimbrans. § 4. Car il n'y a pas longtenps qu'on n'en fit voir une, où toutes les teintes sont séparées, et les coups de pinceau marquez d'une épaisseur de couleurs si extraordinaire, qu'un visage paroist avoir quelque chose d'affreux, lors qu'on le regarde un peu de près. § 5. Cependant, comme les yeux n'ont pas besoin d'une grande distance pour embrasser un simple portrait, je ne voy pas qu'ils pussent estre satisfaits en voyant des tableaux si peu finis.

§ 7. Car par l'éloignement, les coups de pinceau fortement donnez, et cette épaisseur de couleurs que vous avez remarquée, diminuent à la veüe, et se noyant et meslant ensemble, font l'effet qu'on souhaite.

Here follows a theoretic digression of over five pages, terminating with this passage:

Mais retournez, je vous prie, à ce Peintre que vous venez de quitter, et dont la manière si éloignée de celle des autres, nous a aussi éloigné de luy.

§ 8. Non seulement, repris-je, il a peint fort différemment des autres; mais il a gravé à l'eau-forte d'une façon toute singulière. L'on voit quantité d'estampes de luy, très-curieuses, et entre autres, de fort beaux portraits, quoi-que très-différens, comme je vous ay dit, des gravures ordinaires. Il mourut en 1668.

From André Félibien, Entretiens sur les vies et sur les ouvrages des plus excellens peintres anciens et modernes, iv, pp. 150, 151 and 157. Paris, 4<sup>e</sup>, 1685.

The Entretiens are semi-historical, semi-aesthetic discourses on painting in the form of conversations between Félibien and Pymandre.

The "encore alors" of § 1 refers to the date of Gaspard de Cræyer's death, 1666.

The printing of the fourth volume was completed on October 31, 1684.

1685 No. 35g. PEACOCKS PAINTED BY REMBRANDT,
September IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

In the inventory of the property left by Tobias van Donselaer, author of the well known description of Amsterdam, drawn up in September, 1685, the following entry occurs:

Een groot schilderij met twee pauwen van Rembrandt.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary A. Doornick of Amsterdam.

The only other picture was a battle-piece by J. Martsen de Jonge.

The Rembrandt is now in the Cartwright collection at Aynhoe (Bode, Plate 23g).

1686 No. 360. BALDINUCCI'S LIFE OF REMBRANDT

§ 1. Rembrandt the painter, greater in repute than in merit, was living at Amsterdam about 1640. The Night-Watch described; the principal figure of the group; the composition criticised; the figures carefully studied from Nature; the price of the picture. § 2. Pictures of episodes from Ovid in the house of a merchant belonging to the magistrature.

§ 3. Pictures by Rembrandt in Italy. § 4. Rembrandt a Mennonite; the peculiarities of this sect. § 5. Rembrandt's extravagant technique. § 6. His fame as a portrait-painter; his colour better than his drawing; his practice of loading his impasto; his handling. § 7. His pupil, the Danish painter, Bernard Keihl, who spent eight years in his studio, relates that a hasty drawing of Rembrandt's fetched 30 scudi at a public sale. § 8. Rembrandt's mode of life; his appearance; his habits. § 9. When he was at work, no one might disturb him. § 10. He frequented auction-rooms, to buy antiques. § 11. His liberality, his reverence for art, his method of bidding at sales. § 12. He would lend his utensils to brother-artists. § 13. His manner of etching. § 14. He is more esteemed as an etcher than as a painter. § 15. To raise the prices of his etchings, which, in his opinion, were not sufficiently appreciated, he bought them up himself all over Europe. § 16. His bankruptcy; travels abroad; death. § 17. His pupils.

VITA
DI REIMBROND
VAN REIN.

ciò
REMBRANDT DEL RINO
pittore, e intagliatore in Amsterdam,
Discepolo di . . . nato 1606. † circa 1670.

§ 1. Circ' all' Anno 1640, viveva, ed operava in Amsterdam Reimbrond Vanrein, che in nostra lingua diciamo Rembrante del Reno, nato in Leida, pittore in vero d' assai più credito, che valore. Costui avendo dipinta una gran tela, alla quale fu dato luogo nell' Alloggio de' Cavalieri forestieri, in cui aveva rappresentata un'ordinanza d'una di quelle compagnie di Cittadini, si procacciò sì gran nome, che poco migliore l'acquistò giammai altro artefice di quelle parti. La cagione di ciò fu più che ogni altra, perch' egli fra l'altre figure aveva fatto vedere nel quadro un Capitano, con piede alzato in atto di marciare, e con una partigiana in mano, così ben tirata in prospettiva, che non essendo più lunga in pittura di mezzo braccio, sembrava, da ogni veduta, di tutta sua lunghezza; il rimanente però, avuto riguardo a quanto doveva volersi da uomo tanto accreditato, riuscì appiastato, e confuso in modo, che poco si distinguevano l'altre figure fra di loro, tutto che fatte fossero con grande studio dal naturale. Di quest' opera, della quale per ventura di lui grido quell' età, ebbe egli 4000. scudi di quella moneta, che giungono a compire il numero di circa a 3500. de' nostri Toscani. § 2. In casa un Mercante del Magistrato condusse molte opere a olio sopra muro, rappresentanti favole d' Ovidio. § 3. In Italia, per quello solamente, ch'è venuto a nostra cognizione, sono due quadri di sua mano, cioè; in Roma nella Galleria del Principe Panfilio una testa d'uomo di poca barba, con un turbante in capo, ed in Firenze nella Real Galleria nella stanza de' ritratti de' pittori, il proprio ritratto suo. § 4. Quest'Artefice professava in quel tempo la Religione dei Menisti, la quale, tutto che falsa ancor' ella, è però contraria a quella di Calvino, perchè non usano battezzarsi, che di 30. anni. Non eleggono Predicanti letterati, ma si vagliano a tale ufficio d'uomini di vile condizione, purchè da loro siano stimati, come noi diremmo, Galantuomini, e Giusti, e nel resto vivono a lor capriccio. § 5. Questo pittore, e intagliatore insieme, siccome fu molto diverso di cervello dagli altri uomini nel governo di se stesso, così fu anche stravagantissimo nel modo del dipingere, e fecevi una maniera, che si può dire, che fosse interamente sua, senza d'intorno si bene, o circoscrizione di linee interiori, ne esteriori, tutta fatta di colpi strapazzati, e replicati con gran forza di scuri a suo modo, ma senza scuro profondo. E quel che si rende quasi impossibile a capire si è, come potesse essere, ch'egli col far di colpi operasse sì adagio, e con tanta lunghezza, e fatica conducesse le cose sue, quanta nessun' altro mai. § 6. Avrebbe egli potuto fare gran quantità di ritratti per lo gran credito, ch'è s'era procacciato in quelle parti il suo colorito, al quale però poco corrispondeva il disegno; ma l'essersi già fatta voce comune, che a chi voleva esser ritratto da lui conveniva lo stare i bei due, e tre mesi al naturale, faceva sì, che pochi si cimentavano. La cagione di tanta agiatezza era perchè subito, che il primo lavoro era prosciugato, tornava a darvi sopra nuovi colpi, e colpetti, finchè talvolta alzava sopra tal luogo il colore poco meno di mezza dito; onde si può dir di lui, ch'è s' faticasse sempre senza riposo, molto dipignesse, e pochissime opere conducesse; contuttociò mantennesi egli sempre in tanta stima, che un suo disegno, nel quale poco, o nulla si scorgeva. § 7. come racconta Bernardo Keill di Danimarca, pittore lodutissimo, che oggi opera in Roma, stato otto anni nella sua scuola, fu venduto all'ineanto per trenta scudi. § 8. Con questa sua stravaganza di maniera andava interamente del pari nel Rembrant quella del suo vivere; perchè egli era umorista di prima classe, e tutti disprezzava. Lo scomparire, che faceva in lui una faccia brutta, e plebea, era accompagnato da un vestire abietto, e fucido, essendo suo costume nel lavorare il nettarsi i pennelli addosso, ed altre cose fare, tagliate a questa misura. § 9. Quando operava non avrebbe data udienza al primo Monarca del mondo, a cui sarebbe bisognato il tornare, e ritornare, finchè l'avesse trovato fuori di quella faccenda. § 10. Visitava spesso i luoghi de' pubblici incanti, e quivi faceva procaccio d'abiti d'usanze vecchie, e dismesse, purchè gli fossero paruti bizzarri, e pittoreschi, e quegli poi, tutto che talvolta fossero stati pieni d'immondezza, appiccava alle mura nel suo studio tra le belle galanterie, che pure si diletta di possedere, come sarebbe a dire, ogni sorta d'armi antiche, e moderne, come frecce, alabarde, daghe, sciabole, coltelli, e simili; quantità innumerabile di disegni, di stampe, medaglie, ed ogni'altra cosa, che s'credeva poter giammai bisognare ad un pittore. § 11. Merita egli però gran lode per una certa sua, benchè stravagante bontà, cioè ch'è per la stima grande, che s'faceva dell'arte sua, quando si subastavano cose appartenenti alla medesima, e particolarmente pitture, e disegni di grand' uomini di quelle parti, egli alla prima offerta ne alzava tanto il prezzo, che non mai trovavasi il secondo offerente, e diceva far questo, per mettere in credito la professione. § 12. Era anche assai liberale nell'imprestare quelle sue misce ad ogni pittore, a cui per far qualche lavoro fossero abbisognate. § 13. Quello in che veramente valse quest' artefice, fu una bizzarrissima maniera, ch'egli s'inventò, d'intagliare in rame all'acqua forte, ancor questa tutta sua propria, ne più usata da altri, ne più veduta, cioè, con certi fregghi, e fregchetti, e tratti irregolari, e senza dintorno, facendo però risaltare dal tutto un chiaro scuro profondo, e di gran forza, ed un gusto pittoresco fino all'ultimo segno; tignendo in alcuni luoghi il campo di nero affatto, e lasciando in altri il bianco della carta, e secondo il colorito, che s'volle dare agli abiti delle sue figure, o ai vicini, o ai lontani, usando talvolta pochissim'ombra, e talvolta ancora un semplice dintorno, senz'altro più. § 14. E vaglia la verità, il Rembrant in questo suo particolar modo d'intagliare fu da' professori dell'arte assai più stimato, che nella pittura, nella quale pare, ch'egli avesse, come sopra dicemmo, più tosto singolarità di fortuna, che d'eccelesenza. Ne' suoi intagli usò per lo più di notare con mal composte, informi, e strapazzate lettere, la parola Rembrant. § 15. Con questi suoi intagli egli giunse a posseder gran ricchezza, a proporzione della quale si fece sì grande in lui l'alterigia, e 'l gran concetto di se stesso, che parendogli poi, che le sue carte non si vendessero più il prezzo, ch'elle meritavano, pensò di trovar modo d'accrescerne universalmente il desiderio, e con intollerabile spesa fecene ricomperare per tutta Europa quante ne poté mai trovare ad ogni prezzo, e fra l'altre una ne comperò in Amsterdam all' incanto per 50. scudi, ed era questa una Resurrezione di Lazero, e ciò fece in tempo, ch'egli medesimo ne possedeva il rame intagliato di sua mano. § 16. Finalmente con tal bella invenzione diminuì tanto suo avere, che si ridusse all'estremo, ed occorre a lui cosa, che rare volte si racconta di altri pittori, cioè, ch'ei diede in fallito; onde partitosi d'Amsterdam, si portò a' servigj del Re di Svezia, dove circa all' anno 1670. infelicemente si morì. § 17. Questo è quanto abbiamo fin qui potuto rintracciare di notizia di quest'artefice da chi in quel tempo il conobbe, e familiarmente il pratico. Se poi egli perseverasse in quella sua falsa Religione non è venuto a nostra cognizione. Restarono alcuni, ch'erano stati suoi discepoli, cioè il soprannominato Bernardo Keillb di Danimarca, e Goubert Flynk d'Amsterdam, e questi nel colorito seguìto la maniera del maestro, ma assai meglio dintornò le proprie figure; e finalmente restò fra suoi discepoli il Pittor Gerardo Dou di Leida.

From Filippo Baldinucci, Cominciamento, e progresso dell' arte dell' intagliare in rame, colle vite di molti de' più eccellenti Maestri della stessa Professione, Firenze, MDCLXXVI, 4°, p. 78 et seq.

Cf. Emile Michel in Oud Holland, 1890, VIII, p. 161 et seq., Francesco (sic!) Baldinucci et les Biographes de Rembrandt.

Baldinucci was obviously acquainted with certain of Rembrandt's pictures and etchings at first-hand. The details he gives of Rembrandt's life he probably learnt from Bernard Keihl, a Danish painter, who lived in Rome from 1656—1687, and presumably spent the eight preceding years in Rembrandt's studio. He may have got the dates of birth and death from printed sources. Keihl, no doubt, described the Night-Watch to him, but the pupil's recollection of the picture so far failed him that he made the two principal figures into one. The price, 3500 Tuscan scudi(<sup>1</sup>)=8750 gilders, is considerably in excess of that actually received: f. 1600. See Nos. 205 and 206 above.

The statement as to Rembrandt's connection with the Mennonites agrees with what was said above under No. 157; and those as to the tenets of the sect (adult baptism and lay-preaching) are also correct in the main. Keihl may have been with Rembrandt at the time of the master's bankruptcy, his sojourn in Rome dating from 1656. The date of death is about right, but the journey to Sweden is extremely improbable, not to say a manifest invention. Of the pictures by Rembrandt which Baldinucci had seen in Italy, the portrait of the artist is still in the Uffizi (Bode, Plate 425 or Plate 504). For the Doria Pamfili picture, on the other hand, cf. Jhr. Dr. J. Six, Een Rembrandt te Rome, in Oud Holland, 1900, XVIII, p. 188 et seq., F. Becker and U. Thieme in the Kunstchronik of June 20, 1901, n° 29, p. 454, and C. Hofstede de Groot, Geen Rembrandt in de Galerij Doria Pamfili te Rome, in Oud Holland, 1901, XIX, p. 90 et seq. The statement that Rembrandt only finished a few pictures is refuted by the large number of extant works, and in addition, those which have disappeared, but as to which we have undeniable evidence. The later, broadly painted pictures may have appeared unfinished to Baldinucci and his informant. Or it may be that while Keihl was in his studio, Rembrandt had begun to show that dilatoriness in completing pictures, to which some of the later documents in the archives bear witness. Cf. for instance our No. 213, § 4: a picture of David and Jonathan, begun; N° 253, § 4: an unfinished Circumcision; § 6: a picture to alter for the Town-Hall; § 8: a portrait to paint for L. v. Ludick; No. 278, § 2: an unfinished Juno; No. 331, een begonne vrouwe Conterfeytset.

1. A silver scudo is about 5 francs, and not 1 franc, as Michel assumes loc. cit. above.

No. 361. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT

1687
March 7

In the inventory taken on March 7, 1687, of the property left by Juffrou Cath. Deyl, widow of the painter Nicolaes Rosendael, who died November 17, 1686, there are the following entries:

- N° 18. een halfbeelt (half-length) van Rembrandt
27. een tronie (head) van Rembrandt
80. Een wenteltrap (winding staircase) van Rembrandt van Rijn
116. een tronie van Rembrandt
132. een lantschap van Rembrandt van Rijn

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary J. de Winter of Amsterdam.

Nicolaes Rosendael was the obscure painter of a life-size picture of the Good Samaritan in the Haarlem Museum, inter alia. "Een wenteltrap" probably means a picture resembling the Philosophers in the Louvre (Rode, Plates 121 and 122).

No. 362. A PORTRAIT OF REMBRANDT
BY HIMSELF IN A SALE AT AMSTERDAM

1687
April 9

In an anonymous sale of pictures at Amsterdam, on April 9, 1687, one of the items was:

No. 100. *Van Rembrandt, zyn eygen
Conterfeytsel.* . . . . . f 6.0.—

The catalogue is preserved in G. Hoet, vol. 1, p. 10, where the prices fetched by the other pictures may be compared with this.

No. 363. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT
IN THE POSSESSION OF JAMES II.
OF ENGLAND

A Lyst of His Maj<sup>ties</sup> Pictures in Whitehall.

No. 114. By Rembrandt, An old womans picture in a veile.

No. 130. Rembrandt his picture, done by himselfe.

No. 16. (of the second list) An old womans head in lining after Rembrandt.

First published by W. Bathoe, London, MDCCLXXXVIII, 4<sup>to</sup>, A Catalogue of the Collection of Pictures etc. belonging to King James the Second, from Vertue's transcript of a manuscript which had belonged to the then lately deceased Earl of Oxford. The binding of the original now in the British Museum, Harleian MS. n<sup>o</sup>. 1890, bears the arms of James II. The Catalogue must therefore have been for the King's personal use. It is signed: William Chiffinch of the King's bed-chamber.

The Catalogue itself is not dated. The other lists in the same volume are dated respectively: February 15, 1688 (Wardrobe at Whitehall), March 17, 1688 (Wardrobe, Phil. Kynnersley), March 26, 1688 (Windsor) and March 19, 1688 (Jewelles).

No. 364. A PORTRAIT OF REMBRANDT
BY HIMSELF IN A DELFT INVENTORY

In the inventory of Willem Spieringh, who died on January 23, 1689, at Delft, was the following entry:

Een irony van Rembrandt zynde zyn conterfeytsel.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary W. v. Ruyven of Delft. The property included a large collection of pictures, for the most part by Netherlandish painters, all without prices.

No. 365. A FEMALE PORTRAIT BY REMBRANDT
IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY 1690
September 30

Abraham Velters, merchant, of Amsterdam, died on September 30, 1690, leaving a collection of forty-two choice pictures, and among them:

een vrouwtje van Rembrandt.

There were further seven pictures by Rubens, a portrait by Van Dyck, pictures by Jordaens, Savery, Wouwerman, etc. No prices.

First published by J. E. Elias, De Vroedschap van Amsterdam, vol. II, p. 666, Haarlem, 1905, from documents relating to Abraham Velters' estate among those in the archives of the Chamber of Orphans which have not yet been arranged.

No. 366. A PICTURE BY REMBRANDT
IN A PRIVATE COLLECTION AT DELFT 1691

In the inventory of the widow of Jacobus van Schagen of Delft, drawn up in 1691, the following occurs:

Een stuck van Rembrandt van Rijn.

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the file of the notary G. v. Assendelft of Delft. The collection was a fine one, but no valuations are given.

No. 367. A "NATIVITY" BY REMBRANDT
IN A SALE AT THE HAGUE 1692
March 24

At the sale of the pictures of Johan van Tongeren, advocate of the Courts of Holland, held at The Hague on March 24, 1692, one of the items was:

No. 59. Een stuck van Rembrandts zynde een Kerst-nacht, seer fraey . . . f 152.0.—

The catalogue is transcribed in Hoet, vol. 1, p. 14, where the prices fetched by the other pictures may be compared with the above. The only ones among the extant works to which the entry could be referred are the Adoration of the Shepherds in the Munich Pinacothek, and that in the National Gallery, London (Bode, Plates 315 and 316).

1692 No. 368. A " LANDSCAPE WITH A FORTRESS "
 April 27 BY REMBRANDT IN A DELFT COLLECTION

In the inventory of the deceased Juffr. Geertruyt Brasser (widow of Johan van der Chijs, councillor and sheriff of Delft), who died April 27, 1692, is the following entry :

Een casteel door Rembrandt . . . . . f 10.—

Unpublished extract made by A. Bredius from the notarial files at Delft.

The valuation was made by the painter Johannes Verkolje.

Other pictures were priced as follows : Babucren f. 80.—, Bijlert f. 40.—, Bloemaert f. 30.—, den Uyl f. 30.—, Porcellis f. 10.—, Codde f. 18.—, Säftleven f. 20.—, P. Palamedes f. 25.— and Pijnas f. 10.

Among the extant landscapes the only one to which this entry could be referred is the example in the Wallace Museum (Bode, Plate 233).

No. 369. REMBRANDT'S
 " ANATOMY-LESSONS "
 MENTIONED BY COMMELIN

D'Anatomic of Snyburg :

Dese Kamer is niet alleen verciert met eenige menschen en beesten Geraamtens, maar ook van verscheyde Schilderyen, gedaan door bysondere konstige Schilders, daar onder twee door den vermaarden Rembrandt gedaan, welke boven al uyt munten; deselve verbeelden in 't midden een subject van een Mensch dat ontleed word door de in der tijd zijnde Professor Anatomiae, daar by en om geplaatst staan, de in dienst zijnde Overluyden.

From Caspar Commelin's Beschryving der Stadt Amsterdam, Sequel, Amsterdam, Wed<sup>e</sup> Aart Dircksz Oossaan, 1693, p. 651.

On p. 664 Commelin describes the Kloveniersdoelen. He mentions Sandrart's and Flinck's pictures, but says nothing of the Night-Watch, neither does he mention Rembrandt on p. 867 et seq. where he deals with the Amsterdam painters.

Rembrandt's two Anatomy-Lessons are Dr. Tulp's Anatomy-Lesson in The Hague Gallery (Bode, Plate 55), and Dr. Deyman's Anatomy-Lesson, the extant fragment of which is preserved in the Amsterdam Rijksmuseum (Bode, Plate 450).

No. 370. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT
 IN AN AMSTERDAM SALE

1694
 September 23

In an anonymous sale which took place at Amsterdam on September 22, 1694, the following were put up to auction :

No. 62. Een Naakt Vrouwetje van Rembrandt . . . . . f 1.2.—
No. 73. Een Naakt Mannetje van Rembrandt . . . . . f 0.15.—

The catalogue is given by Hoet, vol. 1, p. 21, where we may compare the prices fetched by the other pictures. The small female nude may have been one of the studies for Susanna : in The Hague Gallery (Bode, Plate 193), the Louvre (Bode, Plate 324), and M. Bonnat's collection (Bode, Plate 323), or the Bathsheba after the Bath in the Rennes Museum. The small male nude may have been the so-called Christ at the Column(<sup>1</sup>) in the Carstanjen collection (Bode, Plate 317).

No. 371. REMBRANDT'S " BAPTISM OF THE EUNUCH " IN AN AMSTERDAM INVENTORY

No. 373. REMBRANDT'S PLACE
IN A SYSTEMATICALLY ARRANGED COLLECTION OF ENGRAVINGS

In the first volume of his Cabinet des Singularitez d'architecture, peinture, sculpture et graveure (Paris, 1699)<sup>(1)</sup>, p. 159 et seq., Florent Le Comte gives his idea of a systematic collection of engravings, which he divides into three parts : 1. Sujets historiques, 2. Sujets de morale, 3. le Progrès de la Peinture, de la Sculpture et de la Graveure, with Sujets melangez as a Supplement. The first series to consist of 87 volumes, the second of 5 only, and the third again of 50. Of the last he remarks (p. 177) :

No. 375. MONOGRAMS OF REMBRANDT AND CERTAIN OF HIS IMITATORS

Florent Le Comte, loc. cit. above, vol. II, p. 296, gives the meaning of a number of artists' monograms, with an illustrative plate :

Le 2 est aussi la marque de J. G. van Vliet. Il a écrit son nom ensuite du chiffre (J. G. interlaced). Il a gravé dans le goût du Rimbrant.

Le 16. (R. II. interlaced) veut dire Rimbran, il a marqué aussi Van Rhin. iw.

J. L. fec. C'est Joannes Livius, il a fait plusieurs piéces dans le goût de Rimbran.

Les piéces marquées d'un grand A et un V ensemble et ensuite Ostaden P. et de plus les deux mêmes lettres entrelassées, et attendant Does fecit. Ce sont des grotesques et autres obscurités dans le goût de Rimbran, etc.

age. § 6. Engravings after him and others by Van Vliet. § 7. Rembrandt among the most distinguished engravers of portraits.

§ 1. Rembraud van Rhein<sup>(*)</sup>, Peintre et Graveur, étoit fils d'un Meunier, et cette naissance fit bien voir que le génie ne se forme pas toujours par l'éducation, encore bien qu'elle y contribue beaucoup : à la vérité Lesnuns<sup>(*)</sup> lui montra les principes de l'Art de peindre, mais il ne tarda guère à se faire remarquer pour un homme universel. Ses Tableaux sont peints d'une manière particulière, car souvent il ne faisoit que donner de grands coups de linceau, et coucher ses couleurs fort épaisses, les unes après les autres, sans les noyer et adoucir ensemble, se disant Peintre, et non Teinturier, pour les unir, comme une eau : les portraits qu'il a fait sont néanmoins de vrais portraits.

§ 2. Il fut fort curieux de desseins et d'Estampes; et la belle manière qu'il s'est donné, lui a dans la suite attiré la même recherche pour ce qu'il a fait. Sa manière de graver à l'eau forte, a grandement d'expression et d'esprit; elle tient beaucoup de la manière noire : mais c'est une manière qui lui est toute particulière. § 3. Le nombre des Estampes dont il a gravé les planches, va bien à 280. mais il y en a d'un même sujet jusqu'à quatre ou cinq épreuves, plus ou moins finies; il les a toutes faites entre 1628. et 59. L'on presume par 4. ou 5. qu'il résidoit à Venise en 1635. et 36. Il a fait tirer nombre d'épreuves sur du papier de la Chine, ou de Soie, qui porte en soi une espèce de demi teinte, qui y donne de l'agrément.

§ 4. Il revint s'établir en Hollande, où il prit une femme qui n'étoit pas d'une plus grande naissance que lui, et fit bien voir par sa manière de vivre, qu'il ne vouloit pas déguiser la sienne, puisqu'il ne prit plaisir qu'à fréquenter des gens de sa sorte, avec lesquels il vivoit en liberté, et qu'il préféreroit à l'honneur d'hunter des personnes, dont la qualité l'auroit mis dans une espèce de contrainte.

§ 5. On voit de lui quantité d'Estampes curieuses, entr'autres dix paysages qu'il a gravé en 1645. plusieurs histoires, beaucoup de nudités, et de très beaux portraits sans aucune inscription, entre lesquels l'on remarque le sien et celui de sa femme. Enfin après avoir beaucoup travaillé, il mourut à Amsterdam en 1668. âgé de 62 ans.

§ 6. J. G. van Vliet, a beaucoup travaillé dans le goût de Rembraut, il a gravé six pièces de la Passion, et autres différentes choses, au nombre de 60. pièces, dont quelques-unes d'après Livius.

§ 7. Changeons notre discours, et voyons un peu les principales Estampes à considérer pour les portraits. Ce sont celles que les Peintres mêmes ont gravé en differens tems, ou qui sont faites d'après Raphaël, le Titien, les Caraches, Rubens, Van Dyck, ou d'Albert Durer, de Lucas de Leyde, gravées par Gilles Sadeler, Henry Goltzius, Michel Mirevelt, Suyderhoef, Visscher, Rhimbrant, Lucas Killian, Crispin de Pass, et plusieurs autres qui ont gravé d'après Rubens et Van Dyck : de Robert Nanteuil, Claude Mellan, et de quantité d'autres, dont je passe les noms, parce qu'ils ne sont pas de si grande force, et que d'ailleurs on ne peut compter un bon Peintre ou Graveur dont il n'y ait eu de beaux portraits.

(*) Ce surnom marque le lieu de sa naissance, situé sur le bras du Rhin, qui passe à Leyde.

From Florent Le Comte, loc. cit. above, vol. III, p. 334 to 336.

Most of Le Comte's information is derived from earlier writers, notably Félibien and Sandrart.

The number of etchings and their dates are original. Le Comte seems also to have been the first person who read this word "geretuck" on the etching Bartsch n° 288 and the similar terms on the prints Bartsch 286 and 287 as "Venetiis", thus inventing the myth of Rembrandt's sojourn in Italy, which persisted for more than 150 years. Cf. No. 40 above. Ten, the number given for the landscapes of 1645, is an exaggeration. There are but three in Bartsch : n° 208, 209, and 231, which bear this date. Most of the others date from 1640-1650. The date of birth is correct, that of death a year too early.

No. 380. ETCHED PORTRAITS BY REMBRANDT 4699

Florent Le Comte, loc. cit., vol. III, p. 418, says at the conclusion of his list of works by the Sadelers :

J'ajouterai ici par curiosité quelques Portraits de Rhimbrandt qui précéderont quelques autres que Smith a gravé dans une manière noire qui est assez du goût d'aujourd'hui. Commençons par ceux de Rhimbrandt.

1. Joncker Philips van Dau Dorp-Ridder Admiral.
2. Jams Silvius, deux fois.
3. Joh. Cornelij Silvius.
4. Uytendogardus.
5. Un Juif descendant un escalier.

No. 381. R. DE PILES' CRITICISM OF REMBRANDT AND HIS ART

§ 1. Name, birth, father, and master. § 2. His works show neither correct drawing nor taste for the antique. § 3. His aim was the imitation of Nature; the curiosities he had collected were, he said, his antiques. § 4. He collected Italian drawings and engravings, but did not profit by them. § 5. His portraits and etchings eulogised; the number and date of the latter. § 6. His supposed sojourn in Venice; the portrait of his wife; various states of his etchings, and his preference for specially tinted China paper. § 7. His novel manner of etching, resembling mezzotint. § 8. His intelligence, his large earnings, his taste for the society of persons of humble station. § 9. His manner of painting; the date of his death. § 10. Rembrandt's art the result of his birth and education; he has not the taste of Raphael and the antique, neither poetry of thought nor elegant drawing, but a very lively imagination. § 11. He sometimes gave a certain elevation to his homely art by his genius, but only for a time. § 12. He therefore painted very few historical pictures, although he made a great number of brilliant drawings, many of which were in De Piles' possession. § 13. His etchings are less remarkable, but their chiaroscuro and expression are unusually fine. § 14. Although Rembrandt had no feeling for beauty in Nature, he had a great talent for reproduction, as is shown in his portraits, which sometimes surpass those of the greatest masters. § 15. The inaccuracy of his outline, the truth and vitality of his brushing and his etching. § 16. His superb chiaroscuro, his local colour, his carnations. § 17. His colour compared to that of Titian. § 18. Difference between the two. § 19. Rembrandt's pictures must be looked at from the right distance.

Rembrandt Vanrein.

§ 1. Le surnom de Van Rein lui vient du lieu de sa naissance qui est un Village situé sur le bras du Rein qui passe à Leyde, il étoit fils d'un Meunier et Disciple d'un assez bon Peintre d'Amsterdam appelé Lesman : mais il ne devoit la connoissance qu'il a acquise dans sa Profession qu'à la bonté de son Esprit et à ses Réflexions. § 2. Il ne faut néanmoins chercher dans ses Ouvrages, ni la correction du Dessin, ni le Goût de l'Antique. § 3. Il disoit lui-même, que son but n'étoit que l'imitation de la Nature vivante, ne faisant consister cette Nature que dans les choses créées, telles qu'elles se voyent, il avoit de vieilles armures, de vieux instrumens, de vieux ajustemens de tête, et quantité de vieilles étoffes ouvragées, et il disoit que c'étoit-là ses Antiques. § 4. Il ne laissoit pas, malgré sa manière, d'être curieux de beaux Dessins d'Italie, dont il avoit un grand nombre aussi bien que de belles Estampes, dont il n'a pas profité tant il est vrai que l'éducation et l'habitude ont beaucoup de pouvoir sur nos esprits. § 5. Cependant il a fait quantité de Portraits, d'une force, d'une suavité et d'une vérité surprenantes.

Sa graveure à l'Eau forte tient beaucoup de sa manière de peindre. Elle est expressive et spirituelle, principalement ses Portraits, dont les touches sont si à propos, qu'elles expriment et la Chair et la Vie, le nombre des Estampes qui sont de sa main est d'environ deux cens quatre-vingt. On y voit son Portrait plusieurs fois, et l'on peut juger par l'année qui y est marquée qu'il est né avec le siècle. Et de toutes ces dates que l'on voit sur ses Estampes, il n'y en a point au de là de 1628 ni après 1659. § 6. Il y en a quatre ou cinq qui font voir qu'il étoit à Venise en 1635 et 1636. Il se maria en Hollande, et il a gravé le portrait de sa Femme avec le sien, il a retouché plusieurs de ses Estampes jusqu'à quatre et cinq fois pour en changer le Clair-obscur et pour chercher un bon effet. Il paroit que le papier blanc n'étoit pas toujours de son Goût pour les impressions : car il a fait tirer quantité de ses épreuves sur du papier de demie teinte principalement sur du papier de la Chine qui est d'une teinte Rousse et dont les épreuves sont recherchées des Curieux.

§ 7. Il y a dans sa graveure une façon de faire qui n'a point encore été connue que je sache. Elle a quelque chose de la manière noire; mais celle-cy n'est venue qu'après. § 8. Quoy qu'il eut un bon Esprit et qu'il eût gagné beaucoup de bien, son penchant le portoit à converser avec des gens de basse naissance. Quelques personnes qui s'intéressoient à sa réputation luy en voulurent parler, quand je veux d'élever mon Esprit, leur dit-il, ce n'est pas l'honneur que je cherche c'est la liberté. § 9. Et comme on luy reprochoit un jour la singularité de sa manière d'employer les Couleurs qui rendoient ses Tableaux raboteux, il répondit qu'il étoit Peintre, et non pas Teinturier. Il mourut à Amsterdam l'an 1668.

REFLEXIONS

Sur les Ouvrages de Rembrandt.

§ 10. Les talens de la Nature tirent leurs plus grand prix de la façon de les cultiver et l'exemple de Rembrandt est une preuve tres-sensible du pouvoir que l'habitude et l'éducation ont sur la naissance des hommes. Ce Peintre étoit né avec un beau Génie et un Esprit solide, sa veine étoit fertile, ses pensées fines et singulières, ses compositions expressives et les mouvemens de son Esprit fort vifs : mais parce qu'avec le lait il avoit sucé le Goût de son País, qu'il avoit été élevé dans une ville continuelle d'un naturel pesant et qu'il avoit connu trop tard une vérité plus parfaite que celle qu'il avoit toujours pratiquée, ses productions se tournoient du côté de son habitude, malgré les bonnes semences qui étoient dans son Esprit; ainsi on ne verra point dans Rembrandt, ni le Goût de Raphaël, ni celui de l'Antique, ni pensées Poétiques, ni élégance de Dessain; on y trouvera seulement, tout ce que le Naturel de son País, conçu par une vive imagination, est capable de produire. § 11. Il en a quelques fois relevé la bassesse par un bon mouvement de son Génie: mais comme il n'avoit aucune pratique de la belle proportion, il retomboit facilement dans le mauvais Goût auquel il étoit accoutumé.

§ 12. C'est la raison pour laquelle Rembrandt n'a pas beaucoup peint de sujets d'Histoires, quoy qu'il ait dessiné une infinité de pensées qui n'ont pas moins de sel et de piquant que les productions des meilleurs Peintres. Le grand nombre de ses Dessains que j'ay entre mes mains en est une preuve convaincante à qui voudra leur rendre justice. § 13. Et bien que ses Estampes ne soient pas inventées avec le même Esprit que les Dessains dont je parle, on y voit néanmoins un Clair-obscur et des expressions d'une beauté peu commune.

§ 14. Il est vray que le talent de Rembrandt, ne s'est pas tourné à faire un beau choix du Naturel: mais il avoit un artifice merveilleux pour l'imitation des objets présens, l'on en peut juger par les différens Portraits qu'il a faits, et qui bien loin de craindre la comparaison d'aucun Peintre, mettent souvent à bas, par leur présence, ceux des plus grans Maitres.

§ 15. Si ses contours ne sont pas corrects, les traits de son Dessain sont pleins d'esprit, et l'on voit dans les Portraits qu'il a gravez que chaque trait de pointe comme dans sa Peinture chaque coup de Pinceau, donnent aux parties du visage un caractère de vie et de vérité, qui fait admirer celui de son Génie. § 16. Il avoit une suprême intelligence du Clair-obscur, et ses Couleurs locales se present un mutuel secours l'une à l'autre et se font valloir par la Comparaison. Ses Carnations ne sont pas moins vrayes, moins fraiches, ni moins recherchées dans les sujets qu'il n représentez que celles du Titien. Ces deux Peintres étoient convaincus qu'il y avoient des Couleurs qui se détruisoient l'une l'autre par l'excès du mélange, qu'ainsi il ne falloit les agiter par le mouvement du Pinceau que le moins qu'on pouvoit. Ils préparoient par des Couleurs amies une première couche la plus aprochante du Naturel qu'il leur étoit possible. Ils donnoient sur cette pâte toute fraîche par des coups légers et par des teintes Vierges, la force et les fraicheurs de la Nature et finissoient ainsi le travail qu'ils observoient dans leur modèle. § 18. La différence qui est entre ces deux Peintres sur ce sujet c'est que Titien, rendoit ses recherches plus imperceptibles et plus fondées, et qu'elles sont dans Rembrandt très distinguées à les regarder de près; § 19. mais dans une distance convenable elles paroissent très unies par la justesse des coups et par l'accord des Couleurs. Cette pratique est singulière à Rembrandt, elle est une preuve convaincante que la capacité de ce Peintre est à couvert du hazard, qu'il étoit Maître de ses Couleurs, et qu'il en possédoit l'Art en souverain.

From Roger de Piles, Abrégé de la Vie des Peintres, Avec des reflexions sur leurs Ouvrages, Paris, 1699, p. 433-438.

Roger de Piles spent several years as a state-prisoner in Holland, where he made the collection of drawings of which he speaks in § 3. The biographical details are taken from the earlier writers; the estimate of Rembrandt's art is original. The number 280 given for the etchings agrees more or less with that of the plates now accepted as genuine. The time mentioned as that during which the etchings were produced, 1628-1659, is also correct in the main. There is only one plate, the Roman with the Arrow, Rartsch n° 202, which bears a date not included within these limits : 1661. For the error as to Venice in § 6, cf. the note on this point under No. 379.

1699 No. 382. GERARD DOU REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

Girard Dau
De Leyde, a été disciple de Rembrandt et quoy que sa manière d'opérer soit fort éloigné de celle de son Maître, il luy devoit néanmoins l'intelligence et les principales règles de son Art dans la partie du Coloris, il peignoit en petit à l'huile, et ses Figures qui pour l'ordinaire ne passent pas la hauteur d'un pied, sont aussi terminées que si elles étoient grandes comme le Naturel.

1700
April 20 No. 383. " HANNAH AND SAMUEL "
BY REMBRANDT IN AN AMSTERDAM SALE

In the sale of Philips de Flines' collection at Amsterdam on April 20, 1700, the following items occurred :

- No. 30. Hanna Onderwyzende haer Soontje Samuel van Rembrand van Rijn. . . . . f 300.—
No. 100. Een Kapitaal stuk, van Rembrand van Rijn. . . . . f 90.—

The catalogue is given by G. Hoet, vol. 1, p. 54 et seq., where we may compare the prices realised by the other pictures.

The first picture is probably that in the Ellesmere collection (Bode, Plate 325); the second cannot be identified.

Govard Bidloo wrote a poem : Aen den Haere Philips de Flines op zijne kunstkamer van Beelden, Medaltien, Schilderijen, Teekeningen en Prenten, which must have been composed before the sale, though it was first printed in G. Bidloo's Mengel-poezij, Leyden, Joh. Arnold Langerak, 1719, 4<sup>to</sup>.

The first picture is mentioned as follows on p. 181 :

Hoe fier weet Rembrand 't oog van Anna uit te drukken!

No. 384. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT
IN A SALE AT AMSTERDAM 1700
October 8

The following were in an anonymous sale at Amsterdam on October 8, 1700 :

- No. 35. Een Trony van Rembrandt . . . . . f 7.5.—
No. 36. Een Kleene, van dito . . . . . f 8.—

The catalogue is given by G. Hoet, vol. 1, p. 60, where we may compare the prices fetched by the other pictures.

No. 385. ECLIPSE OF REMBRANDT'S FAME 1702
AFTER HIS DEATH

§ 1. The great masters who painted for discriminating amateurs were, above all, the Italians, but also many Netherlanders, and among them the bold artist Rembrandt. § 2. Every connoisseur knows how powerfully and superbly he painted, yet recently a picture by him was sold for 6 stuivers; trustworthy witnesses exist among the art-dealers who were present. § 3. Soon afterwards the picture was sold again for 11 gilders, and now things have advanced so far that several hundred gilders would be paid for this roughly painted picture.

§ 1. Heel anders hebben de groote bazen gedaan, die niet voor suksiende, maar alleen voor held're oogen in de konst kwamen te schilderen; tracht gij te weten wie dese geweest zijn, het zijn de nooit volpreesen Italianen. Buiten die soo zijn het onse voorvaderen, die hier in onse Nederlanden geblonken hebben, te veel om te verhaalen; want die onse konst bemind, is dit kenbaar: alleen soo sal ik een noemen, die hier mede niet van ontaard was, den stouten Schilder Rembrand. § 2. Hoekrachtig en heertlijk desen trotschen schilder geschilderd heeft, is zigbaar voor alle konstverstandige oogen; nogtans soo hebben wij naa weinige tijd verleden, gesien hoe de onwetenheid dese roemruchte konststukken mishandeld heeft, als men voor een zes stuivers een conterfeitsel van Rembrand verkofte, gelyk men door geloofbare ooggetuigen soude konnen goed maken; en dese waren beroemde konstkennaars, of om beter te seggen, konsthandelaars, gelyk zij in de wandeling genoemt worden. § 3. Maar weinige tijl hier naa is het selfde voor elf gulden verkofst, en nu in het soo veer gekoomen, dat men'er eenige konderden voor neer leidt, voor die ruwe Schilderij. Zoo it dese beroemde man naa zijn dood onthaalt!

Wybrand de Geest jun., Kabinet der Statuen, Amsterdam, S. Lamsveld, 1702, p. 81.

On p. 111 the writer enumerates the great Netherlandish masters as follows: Rubens, van Dijk, Bloemart, Mijtens, Spranger, Frans Floris, Holbein (!), Jordaens, Hans de Vries, Goltius, Breugel, Lucas van Leyden, Rembrandt, and the far-famed Michiel de Coxie.

Wybrand de Geest jun. was the son of Julius, and the grandson of Wybrand sen., who was Rembrandt's brother-in-law by his marriage with Hendrickje van Uylenburch.

April 6      No. 386. WORKS BY REMBRANDT LEFT
BY JAN SIX AT HIS DEATH

In the sale of Jan Six' property held at Amsterdam on April 6, 1702, were the following works :

- No. 38. St. Jans predicatie in 't Gauw van Rembrandt, zo ruar en ongemeen konstig als te bedenken is . . . . . f 710.—
- No. 39. De vrouw van Rembrandt, door Rembrandt geschilderd krachtig en heerlijk uit-gevoerd . . . . . f 510.—
- No. 40. Abraham bij de Engelen, heel goed van dito . . . . . f 31.10

And finally :

Eenige Geeste Plaatn van Rembrand van Rijn.

From the original catalogue in the possession of the Six family. First published by J. F. van Someren, Oude Kunst in Nederland.

No. 38 was valued before the auction at f. 600 to f. 800. Jan Six the son was the purchaser. It is now in the Berlin Gallery (Bode, Plate 215).

No. 39 was valued at f. 500 to f. 800 and was bought by Nicolaes Six. It is now in the Cassel Gallery (Bode, Plate 150).

Cf. for these two pictures under No. 195 above.

No. 40 must be the St. Petersburg picture (Bode, Plate 223).

1703
May 17      No. 387. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT
IN HYACINTHE RIGAUD'S POSSESSION AND COPIES BY THE LATTER
AFTER THE MASTER

When the French portrait-painter, Hyacinthe Rigaud, made a marriage-contract with Marie Catherine Chastillon on May 17, 1703, he drew up the following list himself :

*Estat des tableaux que j'ay des grands
maistres
De Raimbran*

Un homme armé. . . . .	600 liv.
Une femme tenant une fleur à la main. . . . .	800 „
Le portrait en buste de Raimbran. . . . .	500 „
Un portrait du mesme . . . . .	200 „
Une teste de vieillard . . . . .	100 „
Une teste de femme . . . . .	80 „
Un chef de saint Jean . . . . .	100 „

Here follow pictures by Rubens, Van Dyck, Jordaens, Titian, Forest, Bourdon and Paul Veronese, valued at from 800 liv. (Rubens and Van Dyck), to 60 liv. (Van Dyck, sketch, and Forest) and 40 liv. (Bourdon), in all 27 pictures valued at 8670 livres. Then come portraits by Rigaud himself, 13 examples at 4100 livres, and

*Copies de ma main des tableaux des grands
maistres.*

Portrait de Rimbran et de sa fille en ovale. . . . .	200 liv.
Une teste de paisanne, après Rim- bran . . . . .	150 „

16 other copies after specified (Van Dyck, G. Reni, Maratti and Cignani) and unspecified masters, valued in all at 2730 livres.

Rigaud's total property amounted to 94500 livres.

The contract did not result in marriage, but was cancelled on Nov. 23, 1703.

First published from the documents of the notary de Beauvais in the Revue de l'Art français, 1891, p. 18 : Contrat de mariage et testament du peintre Hyacinthe Rigaud, pièces communiquées par M. le vicomte de Grouchy et annotées par M. Jules Guiffrey.

None of the pictures are described with sufficient accuracy to enable us to identify them.

No. 388. "A HERMIT" BY REMBRANDT      4710
IN A PRIVATE COLLECTION AT BREMEN      March 26

26 März 1710 Nachmittags giengen wir endlich zu dem alten D. und Prof. Theologiae, Herrn Bothe. Er ist etlich sechzig Jahr alt. . . . . Die Gemälde so oben in dem Hause auf beyden Seiten in zünlicher Menge und sehr wohl ausgesucht hien- gen, waren besser und merkwürdiger. Unter diesen war ein schön Stück von Rembrandt, einen Eremiten in der Höhle vorstellend.

[On March 26, 1710, we went in the afternoon to the Doctor and Professor of Theology, Bothe. He is about 60 years old. . . . The pictures in the upper part of the house, fairly numerous and very well chosen, were much better and more remarkable [than a certain peal of bells]. Among them was a fine piece by Rembrandt, representing a hermit in a cave].

From Zacharias Conrad von Uffenbach's Merkwürdige Reisen durch Niedersachsen, Holland und Engelland, Ulm, 1753, vol. II, p. 211.

Uffenbach visited Bremen in 1710 on his way to Holland; his notes on his travels were not, however, published till long after his death.

Of the Professor and Doctor of Theology Bothe we know nothing further. There must be an error of transcription, comprehension, or memory here.

The Hermit in the cave may have been the lost picture painted in Rembrandt's youth, and known to us by J. G. van Vliet's etching (cf. above No. 17 C.), or the picture in the Stroganoff Collection (Bode, Plate 39), that in the Kaempfen Collection (Bode, Plate 557), or that in the Beit Collection (Bode, Plate 218).

No. 389. UFFENBACH SEES REMBRANDT'S
"ANATOMY-LESSONS"

Den 20 Febr. [1711] Morgens waren wir op de Schneykamer oder Theatro anatomico. . . .

Der Junge, so uns herunführte, rühmte die Schilde-reij an der Thüre insonderheit, allwo der Todte in der Verkürzung liegt, so dass man ihm unter die Fusssohle siehet. Es ist zwar ein gutes Stück, doch nicht das beste. Eines rechter Hand des Camins ist demselben weit vorzuziehen und war unvergleich-lich. Auf diesem Stück verriehet der berühmte Anatomicus Tulpus die Section. Hiervor soll ein noch lebender Burgermeister allhier tausend Thaler geboten haben, wie es dann gewiss gar schön.

[On Febr. 20 [1711] we went in the morning to the Schneykamer or Theatro anatomico . . . .

The youth who showed us round praised more especially the picture by the door, in which the corpse is very much foreshortened, so that the spectator is confronted by the soles of the feet. It is certainly a fine piece, but not the best. That to the right of the fire-place is far better and indeed incomparable. Here the famous anatomist Tulp is dissecting. For this a burgomaster who is still living is said to have offered 1000 thalers, and it is certainly very fine].

Loc. cit. under No. 388, vol. II, p. 546.

Although Rembrandt's name is not mentioned, there is no doubt that Professor J. Deyman's Anatomy-Lesson (Bode, Plate 450) is meant by the picture near the door. The other Anatomy-Lesson (Bode, Plate 55) is sufficiently indicated by the name of the lecturer.

In Commelin's description of Amsterdam Rembrandt's Anatomy-Lessons are also the only ones mentioned. Cf. No. 369 above.

No. 390. REMBRANDT'S SO-CALLED HUNDRED 1711
GILDER, THIRTY GILDER AND TWENTY March 1
GILDER PRINTS

Den 1 Martii [1711], waren wir bey David Bra-men um seine Kupferstiche zu sehen, weil er in der Wochen keine Zeit hat, selbige zu zeigen. Er hat deren eine ziemliche Anzahl, darunter das vornehmste eine grosse Menge von Rembrandt, doch hatte er die besten, und sogenannte Hundert-Gulden-Prent nicht. Selbige wird also genennet, weil sie einmals in einer Auction so hoch bezahlt worden. Sie stellet das Wunderwerk Christi vor, wie er einen blinden und tauben gesund macht. Die dreyssig Gulden und zwanzig Gulden Prent aber hatte Herr Bramen, wiewohl selbige mein Bruder in Holland gleichfalls erkaufft. Jene ist das ecce homo! diese aber die Abnehmung Christi vom Creuze.

[On March 1, [1711] we went to David Bramen to see his engravings, for he has not time to show them during the week. He has a considerable number of them, and the best are many of Rembrandt's prints, but he had not the finest of all, the so-called Hundred Gilder Print. This name was given to it, because it once fetched this price in a sale. It represents Christ's miracle of the healing of a blind and deaf man. Bramen had, however, the Thirty Gilder and Twenty Gilder Prints, which my brother also bought in Holland. The former is the Ecce Homo, the latter the Descent from the Cross.]

Loc. cit. under the two preceding numbers, vol. III, p. 581.

These three prints are Bartsch n<sup>os</sup> 74, 77 and 81. The explanation of the titles is doubtless correct. Cl. Mr. A. D. de Vries Az. in Oud Holland, I, p. 296, note 7. The collector's correct name was David Bremer.

4744 No. 391. UFFENBACH SEES A NEGRO'S HEAD
March 2 MODELLED BY REMBRANDT

Den 2. Martii [1711] fuhren wir auf den Brettermarkt zu einem Bildhaner, bey welchem wir allerhand Bilder gesehen, davon wir aber die meisten in Laden und in dem Haag gekauft. Er hatte einen Mohrenkopf, den Rembrandt nach dem Leben abgeformet haben soll, den er aber gar hoch hielt.

[On March 2 [1711] we drove to the timbermarket to a sculptor, at whose house we saw all manner of statues, most of which, however, we had already bought in the shops and at the Hague. He had a Negro's Head, said to have been modelled by Rembrandt from life, which, however, he valued at a very high figure.]

4744 No. 392. THE HUNDRED GILDER PRINT
March 7 ROUGHT FOR A GILDER

*Den 7. Martii [1711] giengen wir noch zu unserem Nachbar de Roede, der uns noch allerhandt curiosa und artefacta zeigte . . . . .
Er zeigte uns noch ferner . . . . . etliche Kupferstiche von Rembrandt, so Herr de Roede nicht kenneete, noch verstunde, wie dann mein Bruder die sogenannte Hundert-Gulden-Prent vor einen Gulden von ihm bekame.*

[On March 7 [1711] we went again to our neighbour de Roede, who showed us all sorts of curiosities and artistic objects . . . . .
He further showed us several engravings by Rembrandt, of which de Roede knew and understood so little, that my brother bought the Hundred Gilder Print from him for a gilder.]

4744 No. 393. UFFENBACH SEES A PORTRAIT
March 18 OF REMBRANDT BY HIMSELF AT THE HOUSE OF S. VAN DER SCHELLING

Den 18 Mart. [1711] Morgens fuhren wir zu Herrn Sibert van der Schelling, um seine vortreflichen Schildereyen und Handrisse zu sehen.

Die vornehmsten unter allen waren folgende: (Joh. Liss lebensgrosse Maria Magdalena, Porträt Luthers von Holbein) und ein unvergleichlich Porträt ganz gross von Rembrandt durch ihn selbst gemahlt, welches gewiss bewundernswerth ist, und nicht genug kan betrachtet werden.

[On March 18 [1711] we went in the morning to Sibert van der Schelling, to see his excellent pictures and drawings.

The following were the best of all: (Joh. Liss, a life-size Mary Magdalen, portrait of Luther by Holbein), and an incomparable portrait of Rembrandt by himself, of a large size, a truly admirable work, which we could not sufficiently admire.]

Loc. cit. under the preceding numbers, vol. III, p. 647.

Houbraken was also familiar with van der Schelling's collection, but he says nothing of the Rembrandt, though he mentions the master's sketch of Leonardo's Last Supper and Jan Lijs' picture.

Nothing is known as to the ultimate fate of Rembrandt's portrait. It was probably one of the later examples like those in the Louvre, in Lord Iveagh's, and in Lord Ilchester's collections.

No. 394. A NOTE ON REMBRANDT'S ALLEGED SOJOURN IN ENGLAND 4743

§ 1. Vertue notes, on the strength of a statement made by Old Laroon and Christian Reisen, that Rembrandt lived from sixteen to eighteen months in Hull, painting portraits there, and that the painter Michiel Dahl owned the portrait of a sea-captain, inscribed with the sitter's and the painter's names, York, and the date 1667.

Reported by old Rembrant van Rhine was in Laroon who in England liv'd at Hull in Yorkshire his youth knew about sixteen or eighteen months Rembrant at where he painted several Gentlemen and seafaring mens pictures, York one of them is in the possession of Mr. Dahl, a sea captain with the Gentleman's name, Rembrants name and York and the year 1667 (Christian)

First correctly transcribed from Vertue's Diaries, 1713, Brit. Mus. Add. mss. 21.111, fol. 8, by Lionel Cust, published by C. Hofstede de Groot in Oud Holland, 1897, xv, p. 193 et seq. Heeft Rembrandt in Engeland vertoefd? Cf. also the footnote 2 on p. 91 of Oud Holland, 1901, xix.

M. Laroon is said to have been born in 1653. If this was the case, he may possibly have had the famous master, Rembrandt, pointed out to him when he himself was a boy of eight or nine years old. The first part of the note was derived from him. Christian Reisen further told Vertue that the Swedish portrait-painter, Michiel Dahl, possessed a portrait of a sea-captain, inscribed with the sitter's name and the signature: Rembrandt York 1662. The date means 1661 English style, 1662 Dutch style, i. e. the period between January 1 and March 25, 1662.

As there is no mention of Rembrandt in any extant document in the Amsterdam archives between December 15, 1660 (No. 233) and August 28, 1662 (No. 253), a period of about 20 months, it is not impossible that he may have spent from 16 to 18 months of the time in England. The two large pictures of this period, the Staalmeesters and the Conspiracy of Claudius Civilis, must, of course, have been painted in Amsterdam. There is only one dated picture of the year 1662 (Bode, Plate 488). Of those painted in 1661, in all fourteen, eleven are more or less religious in subject, as:

The two Monks, Stroganoff and Wemyss Collections (Bode, Plates 482 and 483).

the Nun, at Épinal (Plate 511).

the St. Matthew, in the Louvre (Plate 521).

the Praying Pilgrim, in the Maurice Kann Collection (Plate 485).

the St. Bartholomew (a Man holding a Knife), in Mr. Boughton Knight's Collection (Plate 508).

the Christ, in the Baczynski Collection (Plate 417).

the Christ, at Aschaffenburg (Plate 416).

the Praying Pilgrim (an old Man praying), in the Harrach Collection (Plate 594).

the Rabbi, in the late R. Kann's Collection (Plate 509) and the Circumcision, at Althorp (Plate 518)(<sup>1</sup>).

Among these, again, the three first, as well as the similar (undated) picture in the National Gallery (Plate 484), are Catholic in character, and are more likely to have been painted abroad than in sternly Protestant Holland. Did Rembrandt make his way to England through the Spanish Netherlands?

No. 395. LAIRESSE CENSURES REMBRANDT'S TREATMENT OF LIGHT AND COLOUR

§ 1. Just as clear light causes all objects to present themselves fairly and clearly to our eyes, so darkness unquestionably makes things appear more obscure and unsightly. § 2. Many famous masters have fallen into error in this respect, notably Rubens, Rembrandt, and Lievens; the first by a crude gaudiness, the other two, by striving to attain melowness, and achieving only an effect of rottenness; these examples typify two extremes, which the author points out as dangerous cliffs to be avoided by other artists.

§ 1. Gelyk het helder licht de oorzaak is, waar door al de koleurige voorwerpen, zich suiver en schoon voor onze oogen opdoen; zo is ook onwedspreekelyk, dat hoe meer hetzelfde door duisterheid besmet en verbrooken zy, hoe gezegde voorwerpen zich ook duysterder en minder schoon zullen vertoonen.

§ 2. Veelc doorluchtige meesters, hebben zich jaunerlyk hierin vergreepen; onder de Brabanders, Rubbens; in Holland, Rembrant, Lievens en veele anderen, die hun trant hebben nagevolgd; de eene willende het leven al te schoon hebben, is tot een rauwe bontigheid, een ander om de murwheid te bekomen, tot de ryp en rottigheid verwallen; twee buytenspoorigheiden, als twee gevaarlyke klippen by ons aangemerkt, om dezelve als een baak tot waarschouwing ann andere voor te stellen.

From G. de Laresse, Groot Schilderboek, Erste deel, twaalfde hoofdstuk, Van het bevalligen schoon koloreeren, p. 41. Amsterdam, David Mortier, 1714.

In the turgid style peculiar to him, Laresse evidently seeks to express his opinion that Rubens emphasised the contrast between light and shade too little, Rembrandt and Lievens too much; with the result that the former was gaudy in colour and the two latter muddy.

No. 396. REMBRANDT'S ALLEGED PREFERENCE FOR HOMELY SUBJECTS

§ 1. A painter's daily life is reflected in his art. Rubens and Van Dyck were accustomed to courts and to the society of the great, and their thoughts were accordingly directed to lofty themes. Jordaens and Rembrandt, on the other hand conceived their subjects in a homely fashion. P. de Laar and Brouwer painted the commonest episodes; each in harmony with his daily surroundings.

Maar gemakkelijker valt het voor een Burger, een burgerlyke rol dan een andere te speelen; also ook voor een Schilder, te blyven by het verbeelden van het geen hem dagelyks voorkomt; dewyl onze hersenen zyn als een glaze bol, in 't midden van een kamer opgehangen, welke door alle voorwerpen, die zich vertoonen, aangedaan word, en een indruk daar van behoud. Zo zag men Rubbens en van Dyk, mannen die dagelyks te Hoof en by de Grooten verkeerden, hunne gedachten op het verheevene der Konst vesten; Jordaens en Rembrant weder op het burgerlyke; Bamboots en Brouwer op het alleringste: en dus ieder na de maat hunner neigingen, voor zo veel dezelve tot den ommevang met menschen van hunne soorte strekten.

No. 397. THE RICHNESS OF COLOUR
IN REMBRANDT'S PORTRAITS

The writer imagines the case of three painters, decorating a wall in three compartments, the first and third spaces being large, the middle one small. If, he argues, the last-named should make his small compartment as glowing and powerful in colour as a life-size head by Rembrandt, he would outrage alike the laws of nature and the rules of art.

Als nu deze Meester, dien het Middelstuk aanbesteed word, dit kleene stuk zo krachtigen gloeiend opschildert als hy kan, ja als een levensgroot troonie van Rembrand, dat zoude immers heel tegens de natuur en tegen de regelen van de Konst zyn.

From G. de Lairese, loc. cit., 21<sup>e</sup> hoofdstuk, kleene Stukken, of groote en kleene Beelden*, p. 320.

No. 398. LAIRESSE CENSURES REMBRANDT'S
TREATMENT OF SHADE

§ 1. The ordinary light is the best, far better than sunshine, which is quite unsuitable for painting. But one should not paint too flat, and especially always and everywhere, for flat shadows should not be used in the ordinary light of a room, but rather, melting ones, which keep the right mean. In particular, life-size figures should make the spectator think that they are living and not painted. § 2. Shadows should not be black, as in Ribera's works, nor gray, yellow, or pink, as in those of Rembrandt, Lievens, and others among the Italians, Brabanters, and Dutchmen, who give an indiscriminate glow, as they call it, to their shadows, as if there were fire in them.

§ 1. Wat het licht aangaat, ik oordeel het gemeene het beste, en veel eigender dan 't zonnelicht; also ik hetzelfde heel oneigen houde: en schoon zommige, die de buono gusto meenen te verstaan, geduurig roepen dat men vlak moet schilderen, is 't nochtans grootelyks gedwaald, gelyk wy meermaalen gezegt hebben, die manier overal en zonder onderscheid te gebruiken: want het is in een gemeen kamerlicht niet eigen (byzonder in levensgrooten beelden, welke in alles met de aanschouwers gelyk moeten zyn, ja zodanig dat, indien zy op uitgesnede planken geschilderd waren, zy niet voor geschilderd, maar voor het leeven zelf, aangezien zouden werden) dezelve met vlakke schaduwen te daagen, maar twyffelachtig en smeltende, dat zy ronden; § 2. niet zwart gelyk Spangnolet, noch grauw, giel of ros, als Rembrand, Jan Lievensz, en meer anderen onder de Italiaanen, Hollanders en Brabanders gedaan hebben, welke zonder verschillendheid de gloed, zo als zy die noemen, zodanig in de schaduw brengen of 'er de brand in was, alleenlyk maar om geweld te doen.

en der Vergrooten Verkleenglazen*, p. 323.

No. 399. LAIRESSE CENSURES REMBRANDT'S
FAT IMPASTO

1744

§ 1. Lairese is of opinion that one should spare neither black nor white, if one aims at a vigorous effect in painting, through many wise in their own conceit, have laid down the rule that white should never be used. § 2. One should not be led astray by this manner or that, but should only follow Nature. § 3. The painter should wield his brush boldly, but not like Rembrandt and Lievens, whose colour ran down their pictures like mud; it should be even and fused, so that the painted objects appear round and plastic by the painter's skill, and not by the thickness of his impasto.

§ 1. Wat de kracht belangt, ik zou wíl noch zwart spaaren, alschoon veele waanwyzén voorgegeven hebben, dat men geen wíl gebruiken moet: een braaf schilder doet alles. § 2. Men moet zich niet laten mis leiden door deze of geene manier: volgt alleenlyk de Natuur, zoo gy de konst wíl voldoen. Weg met futselen, vroeten en morssen: § 3. tast uw werk met een kloeke hand aan. Evenwel niet op zyn Rembrands of Lievensz, dat het sap gelyk drek langs het Stuk neêr loope; maar gelyk en mals, dat uwe voorwerpen alleen door de konst rond en verheeven schynen, en niet door klodderij.

1714 No. 400. LAIRESSE CENSURES REMBRANDT'S INNOVATIONS IN ART

§ 1. Although Rembrandt is to be censured for his innovations, his style is not altogether reprehensible, for it has much naturalness and a commanding vigour. § 2. He had but few followers and these all fell into disrepute like their exemplar, although some have maintained that he was unsurpassable for colour, light, harmony and ideas. § 3. What then was lacking in his art but style! § 4. Lairese is not of this opinion, although there was a time when he inclined to this manner, but he has now recognised his error.

§ 1. Maar het is niet van heden dat men zulke schrandere geesten vind, die door nieuwigheden eenig aanzien onder de doortuchtige Verstandén zoeken te verkrygen. Men heeft 'er verscheidene van dien aart sedert eenigen tyd gezien doch ik zal 'er maar alleenlyk twee noemen, als Rembrand en Jan Lievensz, welker manier wel niet geheel te verwerpen is, voornaamentlyk die van den eersten, zo ten opzigte van zyne natuurlykheid, als ook zyne uitsteekende kragt. § 2. Evenwel bespeurt men, dat hy niet nagevolgd word dan van weinige, welke noch eindelyk met hinnen Voorganger te gronde zyn gegaan; niettegenstaande dat men 'er vond, en noch vind, welke vast stellen dat het in zyn vermogen was alles 't welk de konst en 't penceel kon uitvoeren, hebbende hy alle de beroemdsten van zynen tyd tot heden toe overtroffen: want zeggen zy, was 'er ooit een Schilder die de natuur in kracht van koloriet zo na kwam, door zyne schoone lichten, liefelyke overeenstemming, zyne zeldsaame en boven gemeene gedachten, enz. § 3. Wat kon hem ontbreken na zo veele uitsteekende begaafdheden? En is zulks niet genoeg om de geheele waerelt te verlokken, indien hy niet ingenomen was geweest door een manier die al lange jaaren in de waereld stand gegreepen had.

§ 4. Maar dezen gelieven te weteen, dat ik met hen in myne gevoelens hier omtrent zeer verschillende ben; hoewel ik niet voil ontkennen, dat ik voor dezen een byzondere neiginge tot zyne manier gehad heb: maar ik had zo haast niet begonnen te bezeffen de onfeilbaare regelen dezer Konst, of ik vond my genoodzaakt myne dwaalinge te herroepen en de zyne te verwerpen; als zynde niet anders gegrondvest dan op losse en spookachtige inbeeldingen, welke zonder voorbeelden wezende, geen wisse gronden hadden, daar zy op steunden.

From G. de Lairese, loc. cit., p. 325.

No. 401. LAIRESSE COMPARES REMBRANDT'S COLOUR WITH THAT OF TITIAN 1714

§ 1. Many are of opinion that Van Dyck's pictures look like water-colours beside Titian's, because Titian's have so much power in colour, light and shade, that Van Dyck's cannot be compared with them, and appear tame and feeble. § 2. This is a ludicrous and contemptible verdict. It is true that the two are very different, but if we desire to mark the difference, we need not go to the Italians, for Rembrandt is not inferior to Titian in colour.

§ 1. Zommige oordelen, dat de Conterfeitsels van van Dyk by die van Titiaan maar waterverw gelyken, om reden dat die van Titiaan zo veel kracht in koleur, dag, en schaduwe hebben, dat die van den anderen daar niet by konnen haalen, ja een koleur, zeggen zy, welke op die wyze voor van Dyk onnavolgelyk is, en daar het zyne zich alles flets en krachteloos by vertoont: § 2. waarlyk, een belagchelyk en beschimpend oordel. Doch dat van Dyk en Titiaan in koleur veel verschillen, dat staa ik hun toe; maar dat men in dit geval by de Italiaanen niet behoeft te loopen, om zulks te bewyzen, is ook zeker: want voor zo veel de krachtige coloriet, indien het daar in bestond, belangt, zo zeg ik dat Rembrant voor Titiaan niet heeft te wyken.

1715 No. 402. THE "NIGHT-WATCH" REMOVED
May 23

The Treasurers of Amsterdam decide to have the Night Watch cleaned, and removed from the large hall of the Kloveniersdoelen to the War Council Chamber in the Town Hall.

1715 Den 23 Maij. Present de Heeren Pancras, Velters, en Hooft Thesaurieren.

Is geordonneert, omme het groote stuk schilderij van Rembrandts hangende op de saal van de Cloveniersdoelen schoon te maken en als dan hetzelfde te plaatsen op de Kreygsraatskamer van het Stadhuys.

From "Resolutieboek xi" of the Treasurers of Amsterdam (covering from October 28, 1711 to January 28, 1723). First published by Dr. Joh<sup>r</sup>. Dyserinck in De Gids, 1890, iv, p. 245.

The hall of the Kloveniersdoelen was the place for which the picture was painted. Cf. No. 144 above.

The "Kreygsraatskamer van het Stadhuys" was the smaller War Council Chamber in the Amsterdam Town Hall, now the Royal Palace. The picture remained there till it was removed to the Trippenhuys in 1815. It hung between two doors, entirely filling the space. Jan van Dijk, in his Kunst en historiekundige beschrijving en aanmerkingen over alle schilderyen op het stadhuis te Amsterdam, first published in 1758, tells us, that in order to make it fit into its destined place, a piece of the canvas was cut off at either end, as might be seen from the "egte model" belonging to one Boendermaker. This "original sketch", was however, as is now universally acknowledged, Gerard Lundens' copy in the London National Gallery.

The controversy as to whether the Night-Watch was mutilated or not, is based on this statement. Further details are given by Dyserinck, loc. cit. above, p. 253-276, by Jan Veth in the Tweemaandelijksch Tijdschrift, 1899, p. 441 (also published separately), and in the Jahrbuch der Kgl. Preussischen Kunstanmlungen, 1902, vol. xxiii, p. 147, and by J. Six in the Bulletin van den Ned. Oudheidk-Bond, iii, p. 199.

About 1715 No. 403. REMBRANDT'S REPRESENTATION OF NIGHT

About the year 1715 a scurrilous pamphlet was published, which attacked Houbraken's Letters of Philalæthes, and was entitled: Lyris, Opper Rijn en Schilderbaaz, Nieuw Opgereze Brieven-schrijver, En navolnaakt Zwartekunstschraper aan't Y, Boertend Heldendigt, Te Abdera Bij Kornelis Seisers. The poem is addressed to one J. M. and signed Bernhardus Koulona, a pseudonym hitherto unexplained. On p. 22, fifth line from the bottom et seq. there is an enumeration of the most eminent painters, who in Houbraken's opinion, surpassed him, and whom he strove to emulate: Lairesse, A. van der Werff, D. van der Plaes, Carel de Moor and G. Schaleken. P. 23, line 12 then continues:

En Rembrandt, die den nacht verbeelde te figuurlijk. In zijnen duistren grond.

First published by Hofstede de Groot, Quellenstudien, ii, p. 468 et seq.

No. 404. PICTURES BY REMBRANDT

The picture was obviously the one which occurred in the sale of Coenraad, Baron Droste, on July 21, 1734, at The Hague (Hoet 1, p. 423 et seq.):

No. 49. Een Vrouwje voor haer Toilet, door Rembrandt, h. 14 d. br. 12 d. . . . f. 51.0.

The only extant picture of the kind which agrees more or less with the description in dimensions, is No. 817 in the Hermitage (Bode, Plate 400): A young Woman in a red Dress at a Toilet-table, which measures 0.40 cm. by 0.33 cm.

No. 405. R. ROGHMAN A CLOSE FRIEND

4718 No. 406. REMBRANDT IMITATES JAN PIJNAS

Jan Pijnas paints in a brownish tone, and therefore many believe that Rembrandt imitated him in this.

Later writers asserted, on the strength of this passage, that Pijnas was Rembrandt's master.

4718 No. 407. HOUBRAKEN'S LIFE OF REMBRANDT

§ 1. Birthplace, date of birth, parents, early youth, first teachers. § 2. Various versions of the facts. § 3. Anecdote of his visit to an amateur at The Hague. § 4. His removal to Amsterdam. § 5. His numerous pupils, for whom he hired a loft with separate compartments. § 6. Anecdote of a pupil who played at Adam and Eve with his model. § 7. His wealth of invention as shown in his varied treatment of the same material in relation to persons, their attitudes, costume and expression. § 8. Example: Christ at Emmaüs. § 9. Houbraken etches a drawing of this subject by Rembrandt. § 10. He laments the large number of unfinished pictures and etchings, as, for instance, the Hundred Gilder Print. § 11. The amazing nature of the treatment as exemplified in the portrait of Lutma. § 12. Some pictures are finished very elaborately in some parts, while in others the treatment is very slight. § 13. According to Rembrandt, a picture is finished, as soon as the artist has carried out his intention. § 14. Anecdote of a portrait-group, in which he painted his dead pet monkey. § 15. There are also carefully finished pictures by him, and many of them have already been sent to France and Italy, where they have fetched high prices. § 16. The careful manner is that of his early period: the St. Peter's Boat in the Hinloopen collection is an example. § 17. Haman, Esther and Ahasuerus in the same collection. § 18. The Woman taken in Adultery and the Preaching of John the Baptist. § 19. Information furnished by Rembrandt's pupils as to his methods. § 20. He rarely painted a hand well, and rarely had a good female model. § 21. Like Michelangelo da Caravaggio, Rembrandt held that everything should be painted from Nature.

[Here Houbraken digresses to explain that this is not always possible, as, for instance, in the case of flying or falling figures, persons crying or laughing, etc.]

§ 22. Discussion as to whether Rembrandt studied his various renderings of facial expression from actual data. Houbraken is of opinion that he did, and that he relied on close observation. § 23. But Rembrandt would not be bound by rules laid down by others. Quotation from Pels. § 24. Rembrandt was overwhelmed with commissions. § 25. He would not allow visitors to examine his pictures too closely, declaring that the smell of paint was unwholesome. § 26. He is said to have painted a certain portrait with such loaded impasto, that it was possible to lift it up by the nose. § 27. His portraits of himself in J. van Beuningen's collection and that of the Grand Duke of Florence. § 28. His etchings and sketches. § 29. His Last Supper in W. Six' collection. § 30. His manner of finishing his etchings a secret. § 31. Etched portraits of Lutma and Sylvius. § 32. According to Houbraken, Rembrandt made little alterations in his plates, to furnish new states of impressions already sold. He quotes instances. Rembrandt made his son hawk them about. § 33. Rembrandt's pupils and Sandrart's evidence in this connection. § 34. His earnings, property left by him at his death, date of death. § 35. His wife; his intimacy with persons of humble rank. § 36. His new method of painting consciously and deliberately adopted. § 37. His pupils: Paudiss. § 38. Wulfhagen. § 39. J. Ovens.

§ 1. Dit jaar 1606 byzonder vruchtbaar in 't voortbrengen aan brave Konstenaars deed ook op den 15 van Wiedemaand aan den Ryn buiten Leyden Rembrant te voorschyn komen.

Zyn Vader werd door de wandeling Herman Gerritzen van Ryn geheeten, zynde een mulder op de Korenmolen tusschen Leyerdorp en Koukerk aan den Ryn, en zyn moeder was Neeltje Willems van Zuitbroek genaamt, welke door dat beroep eerlyk aan den kost konden geraken.

Onze Rembrant van Ryn een eenige zoon zynde, wierden zyne ouders voornemens van hem de Latynsche taal te laten leeren, en hem tot de geleertheit op te voeden, tot welken einde zy hem te Leyden ter schoole deden. Maar de byzondere drift, die hy tot de Teekenkonst hadde, deed hen van besluit veranderen, gelyk zy ook gevolgelyk hem bestelden om de fondamenten dier konst te leren by Jakob Izakzen van Zwaanborg, by welchen hy bleef ontrent den tyd van drie jaren, in welchen tyd hy zodanig gevordert was, dat yder zig daar van verwondert hielt, en besluit maakte, dat uit hem wat groots te verwaghten stont, des besloot zyn Vader (om dat hem geen gelentheit zoade ontbreken van een vasten grond, tot opbouw van de konst) hem by P. Lastman t'Amsterdam te brengen, by den welchen hy zes Maanden bleef, en na dien tyd nog eenige maanden by Jak. Pinas tot hy besluit nam van voortaan by zig zelve de konst te oefenen, 't geen hem wonder wel vaa eerst af aan gelukte.

§ 2. Anderen willen dat Pinas zyn eerste onderwyser in de konst zou geweest zyn. En Simon van Leeuwen, in zyn korte beschryving van Leiden, zeit: dat Joris van Schoten de leermeester van Rembrant en Jan Lievensz geweest is.

§ 3. Terwyl hy dan yverig en met grooten lust by zig zelve aan zyners Ouders huis, dagelyks de Konst voortzette, kreeg hy nu en dan bezoek van konstlievenden, welke hem eindelyk aanwysing deden aan een Heer in den Haag, ten einde hy zeker stukje 't geen hy toen gemaakt had aan den zelve zoude vertoonen en aanbieden. Rembrant trok daar op met het zelve te voet naar den Haag, en verkogt het voor hondert gulden. Hy, wonderwel in zyn schik en niet gewoon zoo veel gelt in zyn buidel te hebben, verlangde straks om op 't allerspoedigste t'huis te komen, op dat zyne ouders deelgenooten wierden van de verheugenis die hy daar over hadde.

Te voet gaan was nu te gering, met de Jachtschuit te varen te gemeen, des ging hij op de wagen zitten, die naar Leiden reed.

Wanneer zy nu aan 't huis den Deil pleystoren zonden, en elk van den wagen afgang om zig te versverschen, bleef onze Rembrant alleen op den wagen zitten, by zynen buit, vertrouwend den zelve niet alleen. Wat gebeurt 'er? de kreb naau weg gezet, terwyl de wagenaar vast met de rest van 't volk aan kwam treden, raken de paarden op den hol, en rennen met hem voort, zonder zig aan 't keeren te steuren tot binnen de Poort van Leiden, en bleven voor hun gewone Herreberg met den wagen stil staan daar elk zig over verwonderende, hem vraagde hoe zulks waar by gekomen; waar tegens hy niet veel praat hielt, naar zig van den wagen en met den buit wegmaakte naar zyne ouders, wel vergenoegt dat hy dus voor niet en zonder eenige kosten spoediger als anders tot Leiden gebrocht was.

§ 4. Thans deed hem dit blinkend beginsel de hoop van gelwinning vooruit zien, en zyn konst-drift op die wyse gespoort nam zoodanig toe in de konst dat hy aan alle konstkenneren genoegen gaf.

Dus kreeg hy (als het spreekwoord zeit) de handen vol werk. En dewyl hy naderhand, zoo om 't schilderen van pourtreiten als andere stukken, dikwils genootzaak was tot Amsterdam te komen, vond hy goed (ziende dat die Stadt inzonderheit hem gunstig scheen te wezen, en zyn opkomen daar in te voorspellen) zig met 'er woon daar na toe te begeven, 't geen was ontrent den jare 1630.

§ 5. Daar zynde vloeyde hem het werk van alle kanten toe; gelyk ook menigte van Leerlingen, tot welchen einde hy een Pakhuis huurde op de Bloem-graft, daar zyne leerlingen elk voor zig een vertrek (of van papier of zeildoek afschoten) om zonder elkander te storen naar 't leven te kunnen schilderen. En gelyk'er onder de Jeugt, inzonderheit als 'er veel by een zyn, wel zomtyts iets klungtig voorvalt; zoo gebeurde 't hier ook. § 6. Want een van dezelve een vrouweleven tot model noodig hebbende, bragt het zelve in zyn afgeschoten vertrek. Dit lokte de anderen tot nieuwsgierigheid, zoo dat zy op hunne kousen (om niet gehoor te worden) by beurten door eene kleine scheur, met voordagt daar toe gemaakt, het spel betuurden. Nu was het op een warmen zomersen dag wanneer dit voorviel; des de teekenaar of schilder zig zoo wel als het model moedernaakt ontkleedden. Wat ertele behandelingen en reden-wisseling tusschen die twee voorvielen, konden de aanschouwers van dit blyspel melden. En gebeurde 't op den zelve tyd dat Rembrant kwam om te zien wat zyne leerlingen deden, gaande om hen te onderwyzen naar gewoonte by den eenen voor en den anderen naa, tot dat hy ook eindelyk by het vertrek: daar deze naakte deslieven by een zaten kwam, dat hy wel dicht gesloten vond, en van de zaak verwittigt, eenigen tyd sul dit spel door de gemaakte splete beschoude, tot dat hy onder meer woordenwisselingen hen hoorde zeggen: Zeker nu is 't even of wy Adam en Eva waren in 't Paradys, want wy zyn beide naakt. Waar op hy niet zyn schilderstok op de deur klopte, en met een luide stem tot beider verbaastheid hun dus toeriep: Om dat gij naakt zyt, daarom moet gy het Paradys uit, nootzaakende door bedreigingen zyn leerling van binnen de deur te openen; zoo dat hy binnen kwam, het spel van Adam en Eva stoorde, 't blyspel in een treurspel deed verwisselen, en den gewaanden Adam en zyn Eva met slagen niddreef, zoo dat zy ter naauwernood in 't afloopen van de trappen aog een gedeelte vaa hunne kleederen om 't lyf kregen, om niet naakt op de straat te komen.

§ 7. Hy was in opzicht van de konst ryk van gedachten, waarom men van hem aiet zelden een menigte van verschelinge schetzen over een zelve voorwerp ziet verbeelt, ook vol van veranderingen zoo ten opzigt van de wezens, en wyze van staan, als in den toestel der kleedingen; waar in hy boven anderen (inzonderheit zulken, die dezelve wezens en kleedingen, even of het al tweelingen waren, in hunne werken te pas brengen), is te pryzen. Ja hy munte daar in boven allen uit: en niemand weet ik dat zoo menige verandering in afschetsingen van een en 't zelve voorwerp gemaakt heeft; 't welk ontspruit uit aanlagtige bedenkingen der menigerhande Hartstochten, die op zulk een zaak noodzakelyk bewogen, en gaande gemaakt in der menschen wezens inzonderheit door vaste kentrekken zig doen zien, en ook uit de onderscheidentlyke beweginge der lichamen zig vertoonen. § 8. Om een voorbeeld te stellen: daar Kristus zig door de brekinge des broods van zyne Discipelen die met hem naar Emans gegaan waren, doet kennen, zyn 'er verscheiden schetsen (behalven de twee die 'er in druk uitgaan) by de beminnaars van de teekenkonst bekend. En geen minder getal afschetsingen zyn 'er van de gestalte der twee Discipelen als Kristus uit hunne oogen verdwenen was, waar door zy verzet, verbaast en verwonderd stonden. § 9. Wy hebben een der zelve die ons best beviel, om den Hartstocht van verwonderinge die daar in waar genomen is, en het verbaast staaren met het gezicht op den ledigen stoel, waar in Kristus een oogenblik te voren gezeeten, nu daar uit verdwenen was, tot leidinge voor de noch onbedreve schilderjeugt in plaat gebragt, en hiernevens vertoont.

De bedrevenen moeten myn yver niet ten kwade duiden; 't is om de jeugd aanleiding tot opmerken te geven, en die niet onlankebaar zyn zullen myn moeite met dank loonen; want zulke voorbeelden, zyn (gelyk de Spaansche zinspreuk zegt) als de hand die de Ossen met den muil by 't water leid. § 10. Maar een ding is te beklagen dat hy zoo schigtig tot veranderingen, of tot wat anders gedreven, vele dingen maar ten halven op gemaakt heeft, zoo in zyne schilderyen, als nog meer in zyn geestte printhkonst, daar het opgemaakte ons een denkbeeld geeft van al 't fraajs dat wy van zyne hand gehad zouden hebben, ingevallen hy yder ding naar mate van het beginsel voltooit hadde, als inzonderheit aan de zoogenaande hondert guldens print en andere te zien is, waar omtrent wy over de wyze van handelinge moeten verbaast staan; § 11. om dat wy niet kunnen begrypen hoe hy het dus heeft weten uit te voeren op een eerst gemaakte ruwe schets, gelyk blykt dat hy gedaan heeft aan het portretje van Lutma dat men eerst in ruwe schets, daar na met een agtergrond en eindelyk uitvoerig in print ziet. § 12. En dus ging het ook met zyne schilderyen, waar van ik 'er gezien heb, daar dingen ten uitersten in uitgevoerd waren, en de rest als niet een ruwe teerkwast zonder agt op teekenen te geven was aangesmeert. § 13. En in zulk 'doen was hy niet te verzetten, nemende tot verantwoording dat een stuk voldaan is als de meester zyn voornemen daar in bereikt heeft, zoo ver dat hy om een enkele parel kragt te doen hebben, een schoone Kleopatra zouw hebben overtaant. Een staal van zyne koppigheit omtrent diergelyke wyze van handelinge schiet my te binnen. § 14. 'T gebeurde dat hy een groot portretstuk onder handen had, waar in Man, Vrouw en Kinderen stonden; dit stuk ten deelen afgemaakt, komt onverwagt een aap dien hy had te sterven. Hy geen anderen doek gereed aan de hand hebbende, schildert dien dooden aap in 't gemelde stuk, daar die luiden veel tegen hadden, niet willende dat hunne portretten by dat van een afschuwelyken stervenden aap zonden te pronk staan. Maar neen: hy had zoo veel liefde voor dat model van den dooden aap dat hy liever dat stuk onvoldaan wilde aan zig houden, dan hun ten gevallen de kwast 'er op te zetten, gelyk ook geschiedde; waarom het gemelde stuk ook naderhant, tot een afschutting gediend heeft voor zyne leerlingen.

§ 15. Egter zyn 'er nog vele van zyne konststukken, welke in 't geheel doorschildert en uitgevoerd zyn, in de voornaamste Konstkabinetten te zien, alshoos 'er eenige jaren verleden vele tot hoogen prys opgekogt naar Italien en Frankryk zyn gevoert.

§ 16. En ik heb opgemerkt dat hy in zyn vroegen tyd wel meer gedult gehad heeft om zyne konststukken uitvoerig te bewerken dan daarna. Onder verscheide bewys-stalen is dit inzonderheit aan dat stuk te zien dat hy den naam van St. Pieters sloopje bekend is, 't geen veel jaren in 't kabinet van den Heere Jan Jakobzen Hinloopen, voorheen Schout en Burgermeester tot Amsterdam, gehangen heeft. Want de werking der beelden, en wezens trekken zyn daar zoo natuurllyk naar de gesteltheit van het geval uitgedrukt als te bedenken is, daar benevens veel uitvoeriger geschildert als men gewoon is van hem te zien. § 17. Ook is ter zelve plaats een stuk daar Haman Hester en Assweer vergast, door Rembrandt geschildert, waarvan de Dichter Jan Vos, als een verstandig konstkenner, den inhoud des zelfs, nevens de kracht der byzondere gemoedsdriften, daar in te bespeuren, dus uitdrukt:

Hier ziet men Haman by Asweer en Hester eeten.

Maar 't is vergeefs, zyn borst is vol van spyt en smart.

Hy byt in Hesters spys: maar dieper in haar hart.

De Koning is van wraak en raazerny bezeeten.

De granschap van een Vorst is schrik'lyk alsze raast.

Die alle mannen dreigt, wort door een vrouw verbaast.

Zoo stort men van den top in 't dal der tegenspoeden, De wraak die langzaam komt gebruikt de strengste roeden.

§ 18. Dus is ook het stukje 't Vroukje in overspel bevonden, genaamt, by den Heere en Meester Willem Six oud Scheepen der Stadt Amsterdam. Als ook het stukje de prediking van Johannes den Dooper, in 't graauw geschildert; verwonderlyk om de natuurlyke verbeeldingen der toelusterende wezenstrekken, en veranderlyke bekleedingen byden Heere Postmeester Johan Six mede tot Amsterdam te zien. Waarom ik ook vast moet besluiten dat hy daar inzonderheit zyn werk van genaakt, en op de rest zoo veel agt niet gegeven heeft. § 19. Hier in word ik te meer verzekert, om dat verscheiden van zyne leerlingen my hebben verklaart, dat hy zontyts een wezen wel op tienderhande wyzen afschetste eer hy 't zelve op paneel bragt; ook wel een dag of twee honde doorbrengen om een Tulleband naar zyn zinlikheit op te tuigen. Maar wat het naakt belangt daar ontrent heeft hy zoo veel voorbereidselen niet gemaakt, maar daar meesentyd stordig over heen geloopt. § 20. Zietmen een goede hand van hem 't is zeltzaam, wyl hy dezelve, inzonderheit by zyn portretten, in de schaduw weg dommelt. Of het mogt een hant zyn van een oude berimpelde Bes. En wat zyn naakte vrouwtjes aanbelngt, de heerlykste voorwerpen voor 't konstpenceel, en daar olle berugte meesters van ouds af, al hun vlyt op hebben gelegd; die zyn (als het spreekwoord zeil) te droevig om 'er van te zingen, of te spelen. Want het doorgaans vertoonzelen zyn daarmen van walgen moet, en zig verwonderen, dat een man van zoo veel vernuft en geest zoo eigenzinnig in zyne verkiezingen geweest is.

§ 21. 'Tzal den Lezere niet vervelen, inzonderheit den genen, welke geneigtheit hebben om de behandelingen der konst volgens de rede en zekersten gront te kennen, 't zy om die tot gebruik te maken of daar van te konnen spreken, op dat zy weeten en verstaan de grontleidingen der onderscheiden begrypen die groote meesters in het behandelen dezer konst hebben gehad, en die zy zig als een grondwet hebben voorgesteld; dat ik eens twee groote lichten in de Schilderkonst in opzicht van hunne wyze van doen in vergelyking breng, en dan myn oordeel, met dat van K. v. Mander gepaart, vrijborstig uitspreek. Deze verhaalt dat Michael Angelo (Caravaggio) plag te zeggen:

Dat alle schilderwerk, 't zy wat, of van wien gemaakt, maar kinder- en beuzelwerk is, zoo niet alles naar 't leven geschildert is, en datter niet goet of beter kan wezen, dan de natuur te volgen; over zulks hy niet eenen enkelen streek deed, of hy zette het leven voor zig etc. Van deze meening was ook onze groote meester Rembrant, stellende zig ten grondwet, enkele naarvolging van de natuur, en alles wat daarbuiten gedaan werd was by hem verdacht . . . . .

§ 22. Ymant zal licht zeggen, Rembrant heeft zig op het verbeelden der byzondere wezenstrekken wel verstaan, en wort daar in geprezen, heeft hy dit niet op vasten gront gedaan? Ik antwoord ja: maar op een gront welken ik niet tot een algemeene leiding kan stellen; naardien hy door een wonderbaar vast denkbeeld, de gemootsdriften in dien oogenblik, wanneer dezelve zig in het wezen der voorwerpen vertoonden, heeft weten in te drukken, en zig daar van te bedienen, 't welk alleen een zeldzame natuurlyke hoedanigheid is; waar voor onze leerlessen niet noodig zyn: dienende onze leiding allen om zulken die dat geluk niet bezitten, door beproefde weegen op te leiden; om daar toe bekwaam te worden . . . . .

§ 23. Rembrant (om een einde van dit pleit te maken) wilde zig aan geene regelen van anderen binden, en noch min de doorkluchtigste voorbeelden volgen van die, welke met het schoone te verkiezen zich zelve enen eeuwiggen roem gemaakt hebben; maar vernoegde zig met het leven te volgen, zoo als het hem voorkwam, zonder eenige keur daar ontrent te maken. Waaron ook de brave Dichter Andries Pels heel geestig van hem zeit in zyn Gebruik en Misbruik des Tooneels, p. 36 dat hij.

Als hy een naakte vrou, gelyk zontyts gebeurde. Zouschild'ren, tot model geen Griekse Venus keurde, Maar eer een' Waster, of Turftreedster uit een schuur;

Zyn'dvaling noemende naarvolging van natuur, Al't ander ydele verziering. Slappe borsten, Verwrongen handen, ja de nepen van de borsten Des ryglyfs in den buik, des kousebands om't been, 'T moest al gevolgt zyn, of natuur was niet te vreên, Ten minsten zyne, die geen regels, noch geen reden Van evenmatigheit gedoogde in 's menschen leden.

Ik prys deze vryborstigheid in Pels, en versoek dat de lezer myn openhartig oordeel ook zal ten besten duiden, als niet geschiet uit haat tegen des mans werk, maar om de verschelinge begrypen, en onder- scheiden behandelingen der konst met elkander te vergelyken, en den leerbegerigen tot naarvolging van het prysselykste aan te sporen. Want buiten dit moet ik zeggen met den voorgemelden Dichter :

Wat was 't een schade voor de konst, dat zig zoo braaf
Een hand, niet beter van haare ingestorte gaaf Beilient heeft! Wie had hem voorby gestreeft in 't schilderen?
Maar ag! hoe grooter geest, hoe meer hy zal verwildren,
Zoo hy zig aan geen grond, en snoer van regels bindt.
Maar alles uit zig zelf te weten onderwind!

§ 24. Doch dit alles overgeslagen; zyn konst werd zoodanig in zyn tyd geacht en gezogt, dat men hem (als het spreekwoord zegt) moest bidden en gelt toegeven. Veel jaren agter den ouden heeft hy het met schilderen zoo drok gehad dat de menschen lang naar huane stukken moesten wagten, niettegenstaande dat hy met zyn werk vaardig voortging, inzonderheit in zyn laatsten tyd, toen het 'er, van naby gezien, uitzag of het met een Metzelaars truffel wus aangesmeert. § 25. Waarom hy de menschen, als zy op zyn schilderkamer kwamen, en zyn werk van diehtebly wilden bekyken, terug trok, zeggende: de reuk van de verf zou u verveelen. § 26. Ook wort 'er getuigt dat hy eens een pourtret geschildert heeft daar de verw zoodanig dik op lag, datmen de schildery by de neus van de grondt konde opligten. Dus ziet men ook gesteente en paerlen, op Borsteiraden en Tulbanden door hem zoo verheven geschildert al even of ze gebooteerd waren, door welke wyze van behandelen zyne stukken, zelf in wyden afstand, kragtig uitkomen.

§ 27. Onder een menigte van roemwaardige pourtretten die hy gemaakt heeft, is 'er een geweest by den Heere Jan van Benningen, dat hy naar zyn eigen wezen had geschildert 't geen zoo konstig en kragtig uitgewerkt was, dat het kragtigste penceelwerk van van Dyk, en Rubbens daar by niet kon halen, ja het hoeft scheen uit het stuk te steken, en de aanschouwers aan te spreken. Niet min word ook, 't geen in de Gallery van den Groothartog van Florence nevens de pourtretten, van F. Koning, F. Mieris, G. Dou, B. van der Helst, Ferdinansus Voet van Antwerpen, M. Müsscher, G. Schalcken, G. Laires, A. van der Werf, K. de Moor, en van der Neer, hangt, om de kracht van 't schilderen gepreezen. § 28. Dus veel oordeelen wy genoeg gezet te wezen aangaande zyn penceelwerk. 'T lust ons (schoon zyn levensrol zig al vry wyd en breed heeft uitgestrekt) noch van zyn natuurlyke en onnavolglyke etskonst wat te zeggen, 't geen alleen genoeg zoude geweest hebben om zyn roem op te houden. Van dese zynere ettelijke honderden onder de printkonstlievenden bekend, gelyk ook geen minder getal van schetsen met de pen op papier, waar in de driften van 't gemoet ontrent allerhande voorvallen zoo konstig en duidelyk zig in de wezenstrekken vertoonen, dat het te verwonderen is. Toren, haat, droefheit, blytschap, en zoo voort, alles staat zoo natuurlyk afgebeeld datmen uit de pentrekken lezen kan wat elk zeggen will. § 29. Onder vele die onder die menigte uitsteken is de verbeelding van Christus laatste Avondmaal 't geen ik by den konstminnenden van der Schelling heb gezien, thans in handen van meergemelden Heere Will. Six, hetgeen meer als twintig Ducatons waard geschat word, schoon het maar een enkele schets met de pen op papier is. Waar uit men besluiten moet: dat hy magtig is geweest op de beschouwinge der menigerhande gemoetsdriften, zig een vast denkleelt in te drukken.

Veel geestige Historien, Beeltjes, Portretjes, en een menigte van Manne- en Vrouwe-kopstukjes zyn door hem met de nauld ten eersten, en vele onder die heel uitvoerig in koper geëts, die tot genoegden der liefhebbers door den druk verspreit zyn.

§ 30. Hy had ook een eige wyze van zyne geëtsde platen naderhand te bewerken en op te maken: 't geen hy zyne leerlingen nooit liet zien; 't is ook niet te bedenken op wat wyze 't zelve gedaan is; dus is die vinding (even als de wetenschap van het Glas te koleuren, gelyk het Dirk en Wouter Crabet van Gouda hebben gedaan) met den uitvinder ten grave gedaelt.

§ 31. Men ziet van het Pourtretje van Lutma (om een voor alle ten voorbeeld te stellen) drie onderscheiden drukken: ene die ruw geschetst is, een wat meer opgemaakt, met byvoeging van een glasraam, en eindelyk een uitvoerigen kragtig uitvoert. Men ontdekt ook aan het portretje van Silvius, dat het op gelyke wyze eerst ruw geëts is, de teedere tintelschaduw en kragt daar naderhand is ingebracht, en zoo eel en zagt gehandelt, als door de schraapkonst kan gedaan worden. § 32. Dit doen bragt hem grooten roem en niet min voordeel by: inzonderheit ook het kunsje van liechte verandering, of kleine en geringe byvoegzelen, die hy aan zyne printjes maakte, waardoor dezelve audermaal op nieu verkogt werden. Ja de drift was in dien tyd zoo groot dat zulke luiden voor geen rechte liefhebbers gehouden wierden, die het Junootje met een zonder 't kroontje, 't Josepje met het wit en bruine troontje en diergelyke meer, niet hadden. Ja het Vrootje by de kachel, schoon van zyn geringste, moest elk met, en zonder 't witte mutsje, met, en zonder het sleutelkachelkje hebben, 't geen hy door zyn zoon Titus (kwamsuis te gering voor hem) liet uitventen.

§ 33. Daar benevens had hy zoo groot een menigte van Leerlingen die hem yder jaarlyks 100 Gulden opbragten : dat Sandrart, die omgang met hem gehad heeft, getuigt dat hy konde berekenen dat Rembrant, jaarlyks van zyne leerlingen meer dan 2500 Gulden inkomen had. En nochtans was hy (geltgierig luid niet wel) zoo geltlieftig dat zyne leerlingen dit bemerkende, by wylen uit potzery op den vloer of elders, daar 't hem in 't oog most komen, stuivers, dubbeltjes, schellingen enz. schilderen, daar hy dikwerf de hand vergeefs naar uitstak, dog verlegen zynde, daar van nooit iets deed merken.

Gelt stopt geen begeerten.

§ 34. Doe hier by het geen hy met het penceel won, want hy zich voor zyn schildren wel liet betalen. Zoo moest hy noodwendig een grote somme gelt opgeleit hebben; te meer noch dewyl hy geen man was die veel in de kroeg of gezelschappen verteerde, en noch min binnens huis, daar hy maar burgerlyk leefde, en als hy aan zyn werk was, dikwils met een stuk kaas en broot, of met een pekelhoring zyn maaltyd deed. Niettegenstaande dit alles, heeft men van zyn groote nalatenschap niet hooren trompetten, na zyn dood, welke voorviel in 't jaar 1674.

§ 35. Hy had ten Huisvrouw een Boertinne van Raarep, of Ransdorp in Waterlant, wat klein van persoon maar welgemaakt van wezen, en poezel van lichaam. Haar pourtret zietmen nevens het zyne in een van zyne printjes, daar wy ons van bedient hebben, en zyn Beeltenis doen zien in de Plaat M. onder Ann. Mar. Schurmans.

Hy verkeerde in den herfst van zyn leven wel meest met gemeene luiden, en zulke die de konst hanteerden. Misschien dat hy de wellevenswetten, door Gratiaan beschreven, gekent heeft; want die zeit elders : Het is goed met uitstekende Persoonen te verkeerren om zoodanig te worden, maar wanneermen dat is, moetmen zig by middelmatige voegen. En hy gaf 'er deze rede van : Als ik mijn geest uitspanninge wil geven, dan is het niet eer die ik zoek, maur vryheit.

§ 36. Zyne wyze van doen ontrent de konst (schoon in vele deelen te mispryzen) doet my besluiten dat hy zulks voordachtig gedaan heeft; want indien hy zig een wyze van schilderen, die naar die van anderen geleek, had aangewent, of zyn penceel op den voet van eenige berugte Italiaanen, of andere hoogvlieggers geschoeit, zoo zouw de waerelt, uit vergelijking van 't een met het ander, zyne verdienste hebben konnen opmaken, daar hy nu, met het tegendeel te doen, die proefneming heeft vooruit geloopen, en gedaan als Tacitus van Keizer Tiberius zeit: Dat hy alles vermydde waar uit het volk gelegenheit konde nemen van vergelijkingen tusschen hem en Augustus te maken, wiens gedachtenis hy zag dat by yder aangenaam was.

§ 37. Onder de menigvuldige leerlingen, die hy in de konst heeft opgekweekt, worden ook deze volgende genoemd, die, omdat wy den tyd van hunne geboorte niet weten, voeglykst staan agter hun meester geplaatst, als:

Paudis, een Nedersakx (ook by Sandrart gemeld) die naderhand geschildert heeft by den Hartog Albert van Beyeren.

§ 38. Frans Wulfhagen geboren te Bremen, heeft de behandeling van zynen meester met veel roem weten na te bootzen, en zig ook daar aan tot het einde van zyn leven gehouden.

§ 39. Juriaan Ovens. Deze was een braaf meester in Historien en Nachtluchten, en bracht groote kracht in dezelve. Van hem is een groot stuk te zien in de Gaandery van 't Amsterdamse Raadhuis, verbeeldende de t'zamensweeringen der oude Batavieren in 't heilig of Schaaker Bosch, daar Claudius Civilis de voornaamste Hoofden en Eidelen, op een gastmaal genoodigt, in zyn belang overhaalt, om 't jak der Romeinen van hunne hazen af te werpen. Hy was 1675 noch in leven en schilderde voor den Hartog van Holsteyn in Frederikstadt.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. 1, p. 254-274.

§§ 1-2 are for the most part an inaccurate paraphrase of Orlers (cf. No. 86 above). The date and place of birth, and the situation of the paternal mill are incorrectly reported<sup>1)</sup>. The statement that Rembrandt was an only son is a gratuitous assertion of the writer's, as is also the allegation that the master was a pupil of Jacob Pijnas. Constantijn Huygens has been identified as the Maecenas of § 3 (cf. his eulogy of the youthful Rembrandt in No. 18 above), but without any positive evidence. § 4 is again derived from Orlers (cf. No. 86, § 7). § 5. The division of the studio into small compartments by partitions is confirmed by our No. 186, § 3.

The opinion expressed in § 7 and § 8 is based on personal observation. § 9. The original of this etching has disappeared, although various imitations have passed for it. § 10. The lament over the many unfinished pictures had already been made by Baldinucci (cf. No. 360, § 6). § 11. For the various states of the etching of Lutma, cf. for instance, Seidlitz on Bartsch n° 276. § 16. For the St. Peter's Boat cf. Hofstede de Groot, Quellenstudien, 1, p. 156, and Bode, Plate 120; for Esther's Feast, cf. No. 247 above; § 18. for the Woman taken in Adultery cf. No. 177 above and for the Preaching of John the Baptist No. 195 above.

§ 23. The passage from Pels occurs under No. 352 above. § 24. The number of commissions by which Rembrandt was overwhelmed had already been mentioned by Baldinucci, cf. No. 360, § 6. § 27. For the portrait of himself at Florence cf. ibidem § 3. § 29. The drawing of the Last Supper is now at Berlin (Hofstede de Groot, Rembrandt's Zeichnungen, n° 65). § 31. The Sylvius is Bartsch n° 266 or 280, § 32. the Juno, Bartsch n° 112, the Joseph, Bartsch n° 37, the Woman at the Stove, Bartsch n° 197. The statement that Rembrandt caused his son Titus to sell his etchings is perhaps a reminiscence of the fact, that Rembrandt was employed in the business carried on by Titus and Hendrickje. Cf. Bredius and De Roever in Oud Holland, 1885, III, p. 102. § 34. Houbraken is responsible for the false date of death, 1674.

§ 35. The etching in question is Bartsch n° 19. The concluding sentence had already appeared in Le Comte (see our No. 379, § 3), and de Piles (see our No. 381, § 8). § 37. The information as to Paudiss is derived from Sandrart, Teutsche Akademie, II, III, p. 78.

§ 39. Cf. No. 249 above for Ovens' picture in the Amsterdam Town Hall. The concluding sentence is taken from Sandrart, loc. cit., II, III, p. 77.

No. 408. FERDINAND BOL REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

He was between two and three years old when he came to Amsterdam. As soon as he came to years of discretion and developed a love of art, he studied it under Rembrandt.

Ferdinandus Bol . . . . was twee of drie jaren oud, als hy in Amsterdam kwam, waar hy tot redensgebruik gekomen, en zig geneigt vindende tot de konst, onder den Grooten Rembrant zig daar in geoeffent heeft.

From Houbraken, loc. cit. above, p. 301.

Bol was born in 1616. His parents were well-to-do citizens of Dordrecht. It is improbable that he should have left his parental home at the early age of two or three. His connection with Rembrandt is first recorded in 1640 (cf. No. 79 above).

In the year 1750 an inventory was made of the contents of the Treasure Chamber, with a very prolix title. The following entry occurs on fol. 552:

No. 100. Ein deto mit einer Zauberei vorstellend von Reinbrandt.

[No. 100. Ditto (i. e. a small picture) with an enchantment by Reinbrandt].

Loc. cit., p. cccviii.

This inventory was in use till 1773, and the various alterations that took place were noted in it.

1719 No. 410. HEYMAN DULLAERT REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

§ 1. Place and date of birth, names of his parents. § 2. He developed early, but was sickly, showed an inclination for poetry and painting. § 3. He was sent to Rembrandt at Amsterdam, and learned to imitate his master so closely, that a copy by him was sold as an original. § 4. His friends. § 5. His intimacy with van Hoogstraten due to their having studied together under Rembrandt.

§ 1. Heiman Dullaert is geboren te Rotterdam op den zesten van Sprokkelmaent des jaers 1636. Zyn ouders waren Kornelis Michielszoon Dullaert, een handelaer in granen, en Sofia Melisdijk. § 2. Men bespeurde al vroeg een vlag en geslepen oordeel in hem, dog zyn geest gehuisvest in een zwak lichaem was oirzaek dat hy niet bequaem was dan tot dingen, die enkel den geest betroffen, welke met een heel en al poëtisch zynde hem met goetvinden zyner ouderen deed overhellen tot de Schilderkunst, die, als yder weet, veel overeenkomst met de poëzy heeft. § 3. Om die kunst te leeren wert hy naer Amsterdam gezonden, en bestelt by den beroemden Schilder Rembrand van Rijn, dien hy, by trappen vorderende, eindelyk sulz wist na te volgen, dat zekere copy van een van Rembrants stukken, door Dullaert gemaakt, t Amsterdam voor het werk van Rembrandt verkogt wiert. Men vint noch hier en daer verscheiden stukken, die van de kunstenners zeer geprezen worden.

§ 4. In het hanthaven der diehkunst had hy byzonder gezelschap aen Joachim en Francois van Hoogstraten, ook aen Samuel, broeder des laetsten, als hy te Rotterdam quam, die hem alle in groote agtinge hielden, en zyne gaven waerdeerden. § 5. De gemeenzaemheit was des te grooter, omdat hy met Samuel van Hoogstraten de schilderkunst by Rembrandt geleert had.

From the Kort berecht wegens het Leven van Heiman Dullaert, in H. Dullaert's Poems, edited by David van Hoogstraten, Amsterdam, Gerard Onder de Linde, 1719.

Cf. also No. 427 below.

None of Dullaert's pictures are now known, so it is no longer possible to verify his alleged imitation of Rembrandt.

The statement in § 5 is probably incorrect. Dullaert was barely five years old when Hoogstraten entered Rembrandt's studio.

1719

§ 1. The beginning (suppressed here), is merely a transcript from Orlers (cf. No. 87 above), and the first paragraph is also derived entirely from the same source; the only original passage is that in which Houbraken remarks that many persons had expressed wonder at such a noble art [as Dou's] having been formed in the school of Rembrandt, forgetting that Rembrandt, in his youth, had painted in the same careful manner, which he (Houbraken) has pointed out in his biography of the master, supporting his statement by various examples.

§ 1. Over zulks nam hy (i. e. Don's father) besluit (hoewel tegens zyn wil, en tot zyn schade) van hem de Schilderkonst te laten leeren, en besteedde hem nu vyftien jaren oud zynde, den 14 van Sprokkelmaant 1628 by den toen al vermaarden Rembrandt, by welken hy gebleven is omtrent drie jaren, in welken tyd hy zoo veer gevorderd was, datmen aan de beginselen wel zien konde, dat 'er (inzonderheit in 't kleen en uitvoerige) wat goets te wagten stont, of van hem te gemoet te zien was.

§ 2. Velen hebben zig verwonderd dat uit de school van Rembrandt zulk een eel konstpenceel ontsproot; doch die zyn niet bewust dat Rembrandt in zyn eersten tyd uitvoerig geschildert heeft, gelyk wy dat in zyne levens beschryving door verscheide stalen hebben aangewezen.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 2, Amsterdam, 1719.

No. 412. GOVERT FLINCK
REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

§ 1. Govert Flink and Jakob Backer were fellow-pupils under Lambert Jacobz at Leeuwarden, and at the end of their apprenticeship, they both went to Amsterdam, where Flink had well-to-do relations.

§ 2. As Rembrandt had great influence at the time, Flink studied in the master's studio for another year. § 3. He accustomed himself so much to Rembrandt's manner, that several of his pictures were taken for original Rembrandts and sold as such. § 4. Later, he weaned himself from this manner with great difficulty, when light painting came into favour again in Amsterdam under Italian influences.

§ 1. Te Leewaarden gekomen vond hy Jakob Backer een geschikt en yverig Jongman tot zyn bysloop en gezelschap in de Konst, die met hem (na dat zy nu zoo veer gevorderd waren dat zy op eygen wieken konden vliegen) naar Amsterdam vertrok, daar Flink, wyl hy daar zeer welwarende bloedvrienden had wonen, ten eersten gelegenheit vont om proeven van zyn Konst te geven. § 2. Maar alzoo te dier tyd de handeling van Rembrandt in 't algemeen geprezen wierd, zoo dat alles op die leest moest geschoeit wezen, zouw het de Waerelt behagen; vond hy zig geraden een Jaar by Rembrandt te gaan leeren; ten einde hy zig die behandeling der verwen en wyze van schilderen gewendde, § 3. welke hy in dien korten tyd zoodanig heeft weten na te bootsen dat verscheiden van zyne stukken voor echte penceelwerken van Rembrandt wierden aangezien en verkocht.

§ 4. Doch hy heeft die wyze van schilderen naderhand met veele moete en arbeid weer afgewent: naardien de Waerelt voor 't overtyden van Rembrandt, de oogen al geopent wierden, op 't invoeren der Italiaansche penceelkonst, door ware Konstkeners, wanneer het helder schilderen weer op de baan kwam.

From Houbraken, loc. cit. above, vol. II, p. 20.

As we know that Jacob Backer came to Amsterdam as a master-painter as early as 1632 (the portrait-group of the Regentesses in the civic Orphan Asylum was ordered from him in 1632), and Flink's earliest works are dated 1636, there was sufficient time in the interval for the alleged year in Rembrandt's studio. Indeed, in Flink's early works, the impress of Rembrandt's influence is so strongly marked, that we should be inclined to accept a longer term as more probable. Cf. Oud Holland, 1904, xlii, pp. 27 and 129, for the history of the portrait of Gozen Centen in the Rijksmuseum, which affords an interesting illustration of Houbraken's statement as to the great similarity and the confusion of the works of the two masters. Houbraken's remark as to Flink's adoption of a lighter tone is confirmed by Flink's later pictures.

No. 413. ORIGIN OF THE NAME
" LA PETITE TOMBE "

4719

The painter La Tombe had a brother, who was a collector of pictures and engravings and who gave the name " La Tombe's prentje " to one of Rembrandt's etchings.

[LaTombe] had ook een Broeder die een beminnaar van Schilderyen en Printkonst was, waar om 'er ook onder de Etskonst van Rembrandt een printje uitgaat bekend by de naam van la Tombes printje.

From Houbraken, loc. cit. above, vol. II, p. 28.

The etching in question is Bartsch n° 67, Christ teaching. The French, misapprehending the term " La Tombe's plaatje " (cf. No. 346, § 1 above) applied the words " la Tombe " to the tomb-like platform or slab on which Jesus is standing. Hence the misnomer " La petite Tombe ".

It is not very clear which of the La Tombes was meant. Houbraken was unable to give the Christian name, and the documents are very obscure (see above Nos. 200 and 201). Besides the Pieter and Jacob mentioned in these, there were further a Salomon and an N. de La Tombe.

No. 414. PHILIPS KONING
REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

§ 1. Date and place of birth. § 2. Vondel praises a sleeping Venus by Koning, and shows how he, unlike his master Rembrandt (whom, in Houbraken's opinion, Vondel seeks to depreciate by this praise of his pupil), achieves vigour in his pictures by clarity instead of blackness, § 3. whereas Rembrandt, contrary to all reality, illuminated the figures in the foreground, and painted the backgrounds dark. He then quotes Vondel's verses, where, in lines 9 et seq. the poet speaks of "the sons of darkness".

§ 1. Philips de Koning geboren tot Amsterdam in 't Jaar 1619, op den 5 van Slagtmant (November), heeft de Konst geleert by den vernardden Rembrant van Ryn . . . . .

§ 2. *J. v. d. From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 53 et seq.

For the tendency of this poem, in which Rembrandt's name is not once mentioned, cf. N. Beets, Poezij in Woorden, p. 89 et seq. correcting Busken Huët, Land van Rembrandt, II, p. 554.

No. 415. ADRIAAN VERDOEL
REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

4749

*Adriaan Verdoel overmans geboren had den grooten Rembrant tot zyn onderwyzer in de Konst gehad, hoewel anderen zeggen Leon. Bramer en J.
de Wit. wnar door hy zoodanig in de konst toenani dat men hem niet rede onder de Konstenaars tellen mag, aangezien hy doorgans in zyne Historische ver-beeldingen, op grootse voorwerpen doelde.*

From Houbraken, loc. cit. above, vol. II, p. 57.

Overmaas is the name given to the part of Holland south of the arm of the Rhine which flows into the sea at Rotterdam, and is there known as the Maas. As a fact, Verdoel was born at Flushing, and therefore in the province of Zeeland. He is known to us chiefly as an imitator of other artists, such as Potter (Schwerin Museum), Salomon Koninck (Copenhagen Museum), and other masters (Leipzig Museum). It is impossible to suggest a probable master for him from these.

A number of Biblical subjects, Christ bearing his Cross, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego (Berg Collection, Solingen), Reconciliation of Jacob and Esau (Mrozowski Collection, Warsaw), Christ bearing his Cross (Chanienko Collection, Kiev), Death of the Rich and of the Poor Man (Fels Sale, Amsterdam, October 28, 1891), Ananias and Sapphira (Cereda Collection, Milan), Melchizedech blessing Abraham (Lille Museum), Mordecaï's triumphal Ride and Joseph distributing Corn in Egypt (Brocard Collection, Moscow), seem to indicate a master such as Bramer or Jacob de Wet. But as some of these are dated very late, they are probably all the work of Adriaen Verdoel the younger, who became a member of the Middelburg Guild in 1695-1696. It is possible that the information of one of Houbraken's authorities may refer to the father, that of the other to the son.

1719 No. 416. GERBRAND VAN DEN EECKOUT
REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

§ 1. Date and place of birth. He remained faithful to Rembrandt's manner all his life. § 2. Houbraken saw a Christ in the Temple among the Scribes by him, in which the faces were very expressive. § 3. Rembrandt also won his fame by expression, so that Eeckhout may be considered one of his best pupils.

§ 1. Gerbrant van den Eekhout geboren tot Amsterdam in 't Jaar 1621 op den 19 van Oogstmaant (August) was een leerling van Rembrant van Ryn, en bleef tot het einde van zyn leven by de zelve wyze van schilderen, welke hy van zyn meester geleert had.

§ 2. Ik heb verscheiden Konststukken van hem, en onder dese een gezien, verbeeldende Christus, zittende in den Tempel onder de Hebreuse leeraren, in welke wezenstrekken de yver in 't onderwyzen, en de verwondering over de antwoorden van den Heere Christus, zoo natuurlyk verbeeld was, dat men scheen te zien wat zy tegens malkander wilden zeggen. § 3. Een waarneming daar Rembrant zyn inzonderheit door vermaart gemaakt heeft: zoo dat men Eekhout onder de besten van zyne leerlingen met reden stellen mag.

From Houbraken, loc. cit. above, vol. II, p. 100.

The picture praised in § 3 is probably the boy Jesus in the Munich Pinacothek (n° 348 in the catalogue).

1719 No. 417. JOHANNES LUTMA ETCHED
BY REMBRANDT

De oude Lutma, bekend aan zyn portret door Rembrandt geest, toenmaals [i. e. at the time when

Pietro Testa] te Rome zynde, kocht verscheide werken van hem voor de waarde van een Ducaton.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 138.

The etching is Bartsch, n° 276. No further record of Lutma's visit to Rome and his acquaintance with Pietro Testa has come down to us. We only know that he was in Paris in 1615, probably on his way to or from Italy.

No. 418. JACOB LAVECQ REMBRANDT'S PUPIL 1719

§ 1. Lavecq painted at first in the manner of his master Rembrandt, but afterwards in that of Jan de Baen. § 2. He had in his house a picture of his early period, painted so much in the style of Rembrandt, that it might have been taken for one of the master's works.

§ 1. Jakob Lavecq. . . . had de Konst by Rembrant geleert, maar in zyne reyse (to France) die handeling laten varen en zedert zig geheel tot het schilderen van portretten, vry wel zwenkende naar die van de Baen, begeven. § 2. Hy hadde noch een stuk schildery van zyn eersten tyd in zyn huis, daar de handeling van Rembrant zoo wel in was waargenomen, datmen het voor een stuk van Rembrant zouw hebben aangesehen.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 153.

Cf. for this artist G. H. Veth in Oud Holland, 1889, vii, p. 308 et seq. and our No. 149. There is a very Rembrandtesque early portrait by Lavecq in the Duke of Leinster's collection at Carton, Ireland, and his later period, when he was under the influence of De Baen, is most fully illustrated by the six family portraits belonging to Jhr. Gevaerts van Simonshaven at The Hague. Cf. also n° 70 of the Hague Exhibition of Portraits, 1903.

No. 419. SAMUEL VAN HOOGSTRATEN 1719
REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

§ 1. Date and place of birth; his father and Rembrandt were his masters. § 2. He adhered to the manner of the latter for a time, but gradually weaned himself from it, and adopted a perfectly different technique. § 3. He was also a successful portrait-painter.

§ 1. Samuel van Hoogstraten . . . is geboren te Dordrecht in het Jaar 1627. of hy ook noch andere leermeesters in zyn vroegen tyd buiten zyn Vader gehad heeft weet ik niet, maar wel dat hy ook de Konst by Rembrandt van Ryn (want desen noemt hy, na de Dood van zyn Vader Theodoor, zyn tweeden Meester. In zyn Boek van de Schilderkonst p. 257) geleert heeft, § 2. wiens wyze van schilderen hy noch eenigen tyd aan de hand hield, en allenskens, zig daar van weer ontwende, en eindelyk een geheele andere wyze van schilderen aannam, § 3. ook zig begaf tot het schilderen van portretten, daar hy eenen gelokkigen voortgang in maakte, zoo in den Haag, daar hy eenige Jaren gewoont heeft, als ook te Dordrecht.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 155.

The passage quoted is from our No. 340.

The date of birth is incorrect.

There are no very Rembrandtesque pictures by Hoogstraten. Even those which bear the earliest dates show no traces of his master's influence. For his portraits cf. E. W. Moes, Iconographia Batava, passim.

1719 No. 420. MICHEL WILLEMANS BECOMES INTIMATE WITH REMBRANDT

Willemans comes to Holland in his twentieth year, and there makes friends principally with Jacob Backer and Rembrandt, taking such pleasure in their art, society, and conversation that he gives up his projected journey to Italy.

Michiel Willemans geboren in 't Jaar 1630 . . . overtrof met zyn twintigste jaar zyn tyd en lantgenooten . . . vertrok naar Holland . . . en voegde zig in gezelschap zynde wel meest by J. Backer en Rembrandt, in wier Konst, byzyn, en Redenvoeringen hy zoo veel genoeg nam, dat hy zyn voornemen van naar Italiën te reizen schortte, maar besloot een ruimen omtrek door Duitslant te doen, gelyk hy ook deed . . .

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 233.

Willemans soon forgot Rembrandt's teaching. His pictures, which are to be found chiefly in Silesia, show no traces of the master's influence.

1719 No. 421. HOUBRAKEN CENSURES REMBRANDT'S "CHRIST IN THE HOUSE OF MARY AND MARTHA"

Houbraken criticises Rembrandt for having represented Martha baking cakes at a Dutch fire place, in an iron pan.

Such are the blunders committed by those who are ignorant of history and antiquity.

My gedenkt ook een stuk van den grooten Rembrandt gezien te hebben, verbeeldende daur Martha aan Kristus kluchtig vult, dat Maria zig der huiszorge ontrekt en die alleen op haar laat aankomen. Hier zat Martha afgebeelt, koeken te bakken onder den schoorsteen, op de wyze als men hier te lande gewoon is, in een Luikse yzere pan, in een tyd eer Luik eens genaamt was.

Al zulke misslagen ontspruiten uit gebrek van History- en oudheikunde.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 246.

There is no extant picture by Rembrandt answering to this description.

No. 422. HOUBRAKEN CENSURES REMBRANDT'S REPRESENTATION OF THE SERPENT IN EDEN

§ 1. Hoogstraten's teaching eulogised. § 2. Rembrandt and Lairese censured for their representation of the serpent in Eden. § 3. How Lairese arrived at such a conception, Houbraken cannot understand, but it is sufficiently well known that Rembrandt cared nothing about the rules of art, however generally approved. § 4. Quotation from Pels.

§ 1. Om voort te gaan. Hoogstraten was een uitnemend bekwaam man om het wezentlyke van de Konst zyne Leerlingen in te prenten; maar gedoogde gansch geen de minste vryheit, die afweek van de vaste regelen der Konst. Gebeurde 't dat d'een of ander tegens den text der Historie voordachtelyk iets daar by invoegde, wanende zijn vernuft daar door te doen blyken, kreeg die straks tot een les: Dat men zig altydt moest bevlytigen om waarheden te vertoonen; of dat men anders de valsche Denkbeelden hielp styven, en voortplanten. § 2. Hij zag op iets waar in zy Rembrandt en Laïres hadden naargevolgt. En wilje weten wat Lezer, 't was de verbeelding van de Paradysslang, welk de eerst gemelde tegens de letter van den text aan in een print verbeeld had, van stal, als de verziende Draken in de Metamorphosis van Ovidius: de tweede door een wanschepel met een Vrouwenangezicht. § 3. Wat Reden Laïres daar voor mocht gehad hebben, ontschuldigt niet; ja my verwondert dat zulk een groot licht in de Konst zulk een breuk voordachtelyk tegen de letter begaan heeft; inmers meer als over Rembrant, van wien bekend is, dat hy zig naar geen regelen van de Konst (hoe algemeen goed gekeurt) verbond, maar eigen zinlykheit voor zyn regel hield; § 4. waarom de brave Dichter Andr. Pels, in zyn Tooneelwetten, van hem zegt:

Wat is 't een schade voor de Konst, dat zig zoo braaf

Een hand, niet beter van haar ingestorte gaaf Bedient heeft! wie had hem voor by gestreeft in 't schild'ren?

Maar ach! hoe eed'ler geest, hoe meer hy zal verwild'ren,

Als hy zig aan geen Wet, of snoer van Regels bind; Maar alles uit zig zelf te weten onderwind.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 255.
For the quotation from Pels cf. No. 351 above.

No. 423. NICOLAES MAES REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

Place and date of birth; he learned drawing from an obscure teacher and painting from Rembrandt; but he soon forsook the manner of the latter, and began to paint portraits, in doing which he found that young ladies in particular prefer light pictures to dark ones.

Nicolaas Maas, geboren te Dordrecht in 't jaar 1632, had de teekenkonst in zyn jeugt by een gemeen Meester, de Schilderkonst by Rembrant geleert, maar verliet vroeg die wyze van schilderen, te meer toen hy zig tot het schilderen van portretten begaf, en wel zag dat inzonderheit de jonge Juffrouwen meer behagen namen in het wit dan in 't bruin.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 273.

Houbraken's statements concerning Maes have been confirmed in the main by modern research. This is especially the case in respect of his comparatively early change of manner. His masterpieces in the Rembrandtesque style cease, as a fact, about 1660, and his portraits become increasingly smooth and glassy. Taking into account the testimony of Houbraken, who knew Maes personally, it seems strange that it should long have been doubted whether the earlier and the later Maes were identical.

No. 424. JAN DE BAEN FINDS IT DIFFICULT TO CHOOSE BETWEEN THE RESPECTIVE MANNERS OF REMBRANDT AND VAN DYCK 4719

Jan de Baen bedankte met zyn 18 Jaar zyn onderwyzer [Jac. Backer] plichtig, om proef te nemen wat hy uit zig zelf zou kunnen verrichten.

Nu moest hy zig een wyze van schilderen voorstellen die prysselyk was om zig daar aan te houden. De penceelkonst van Ant. van Dyck was in groote agting, en die van Rembrant vond ook veel aanhangers. Op dezen tweesprong stont hy lang te dutton, niet wetende wat weg best in te slaan, doch verkoos de handeling van den eersten als van een duurzamer aart, tot zyn voorwerp.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. II, p. 305.

No early works by de Baen, showing the influence of Backer, still less that of Rembrandt, have come down to us. All extant examples betray the influence of Van Dyck, transmitted by P. Lely and J. Mijtens.

No. 425. WILLEM DROST REMBRANDT'S PUPIL 4721

Van Drost, die een leerling van Rembrant was, heb ik een Johannes Predicatie gezien, die braaf geschildert en geteekent was. Hy heeft lang te Rome geweest daar hy omgang hielt met Karel Lot en Joan van der Meer.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol II, p. 61.

Houbraken does not state the painter's Christian name, probably because it was unknown to him. This has given rise to a confusion, which has persisted even to the present time. The catalogues<sup>1</sup> continue to call the artist Cornelis Drost, although he signed himself W. Drost on an etching (Bartsch, Rembrandt, n° 328), and Gulielmus Drost on a portrait in the possession of a London dealer. His Preaching of John the Baptist has disappeared. The Drost who lived for a long time in Rome, was probably another artist with the initial P., by whom there is a picture in the Innsbrück Museum (n° 600 in the catalogue). Cf. also the note to n° 1608 in the Dresden Gallery catalogue.

No. 426. HOUBRAKEN COPIES THE PORTRAIT OF JOHANNES ASSELIJN FROM REMBRANDT'S ETCHING 4721

<sup>1</sup> Those, for instance, of the Cassel Gallery, the Louvre, and the Wallace Museum.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. III, p. 65.
This etching is Bartsch, n° 277.

1724 No. 427. HEYMAN DULLAERT REMBRANDT'S
PUPIL

§ 1. Dullaert's place and date of birth, youth and teacher. § 2. His intimacy with Rembrandt and the master's other pupils. § 3. Information given by his nephew Velthuyzen as to an imitation of Rembrandt by him.

§ 1. Heymen Dullaert geboren te Rotterdam op den 6 van Sprokkelmaand (February) 1636. . . . was vander jeugd aan vlytig in 't oefenen van talen en wetenschappen, wanneer ook de zucht tot de Schilderkonst, hem na een bekwaam meester tot zyn onderwyzer deed onzien. Dit was Rembrandt van Rijn, by dewelke hy in korte jaren door zyn vernuft, zoo ver verderde dat hy voorts zig naar 't leven wist te behelpen, hondende naderhand nog omgang, met dezelve en zyne brave Leerlingen. § 2. inzonderheit Filips de Koning, die ook 't zynen gedachtenis zyn portret schilderde, waar van wy ons (wyl geen van later jaren voorhanden was) bediend hebben . . . . .

§ 3. De Kontschilder Velthuyzen, van Gouda, die ten huisvrouw zyn Broeders dochter heeft, heeft my verhaalt, dat hy zyn meesters werk zoo eveneens met zyn penceel wist na te bootzen, dat de verbeelding van den krysgod Mars in 't blinkent harnas door hem geschildert, voor een echt stuk van Rembrandt, tot Amsterdam, verkocht wert.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. III, p. 78 et seq.
The first paragraph has no new features, compared with our No. 402, from which it is taken. The intimacy with Philips Koning was probably a result of the circumstance that Koning painted Dullaert's portrait, which was engraved by Jacobus Houbraken for the collected poems<sup>(1)</sup>. The Mars in Armour of § 3 may have been a copy of Rembrandt's picture in the Glasgow Gallery (Bode, Plate 418).

1724 No. 428. AERT DE GELDER REMBRANDT'S
PUPIL

Gelder, who began as the pupil of Hoogstraten, and afterwards approached Rembrandt more closely than any of his other pupils, retaining his manner to the last. § 3. He became Rembrandt's pupil in 1645. § 4. Like Rembrandt, he had a lumber-room full of antiquities, which he used as studio-properties.

§ 1. De Konst van Rembrandt had als wat nieuws in haar tyd een algemeene goedkeuring; zoo dat de konstoeffenaren (wilden zy hunne werken gangbaar doen zyn) genootzaakt waren zich aan die wyze van schilderen te gewennen; al hadden zy zelf een veel prysselyker behandeling. § 2. Waarom ook Govert Flink (geelyk wy in zyne levensbeschryving hebben aangemerkt) en anderen meer, zich tot de school van Rembrandt begaven. Onder deze was ook myn Stadtgenoot Aert de Gelder, die, na dat hy door S. v. Hoogstraten in de gronden van de Konst was onderwezen, mede naar Amsterdam vertrok om Rembrands wyze van schilderen te leeren, 't geen hem zoodanig toeviel en gelukte, dat ik tot zynen roeni zeggen moet, dat geen van alle hem zoo na gekomen is in die wyze van schilderen. En is boven dit opmerkelyk, dat hy alleen onder zoo een menigvuldig getal, welke naderhand die wyze van schilderen agterlieten, daarin is staande gebleven.

§ 3. Hy kwam in den Jare 1645 by den zelve om de Konst te leeren en bleef 'er twee volle Jaren, wanneer hy zig weder naar Dordrecht begaf, en de konst tot heiden toe loffelyk heeft geoffent.

Van Rembrandt zeit Pels dat hy . . . . Door de gansche Stad op bruggen en op hoeken, Op Nieuwe, en Noordermarkt zeer yv'rig op ging zoeken Harnassen, Mariljons, Japonsche Ponjerts, Bont, En Rafelkragen, die hy schilderagtig vont.

§ 4. Maar onze de Gelder, heeft niet minder dan hy een voldekraam van allerhande soort van kleederen, behangsels, schiet- en steekgeweer, harnassen, enz. tot schoenen en muilen inkluis, by een verzamelt; en de zoldering en de wanden van zyn schildervertrek, zyn behangen met stoersche en gestikte zyde bewind-selen en sluyers, zommige geheel, andere gescheurt even als de gewonnen legervandels op de zaal van 't Hougsche Hof.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. III, p. 206 et seq.
The description of his style is correct. The date 1645 given as that of de Gelder's admission to Rembrandt's studio must be a mis-print, as Houbraken immediately before gives the same date for his birth. For 1645 we should probably read 1654.

No. 429. GODFRIED KNELLER
REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

Godfrid Kneller, geboren 1648, was van jongs af aan tot de Schilderkunst geneigt. Nadat hy zig eenigen tyd daar in geoffent had, begaf hy zig naar Hollant en tot onderwysinge eerst van Rembrandt, daar na van Ferdinand Bol.

Hoe lang hy 't onderwys van gemelde Meesters genoten heeft, weet ik niet, maar wel dat hy van daar naar Rome vertrok, en zich vorder oeffende naar de overheerlyke konst van Titiaan en A. Corats.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. III, p. 233 et seq.

The information here given is mentioned nowhere else, but may nevertheless be correct, F. Bol's influence being clearly visible in Kneller's youthful works in the Museum of his native Lübeck. The time of his apprenticeship with Rembrandt must have been about 1660, if the date 1648 given as the year of his birth is correct.

No. 430. JAN GRIFFIER ACQUAINTED WITH REMBRANDT

§ 1. Griffier's first master was a flower-painter addicted to drunkenness. He then enters Roghman's studio and obtains admittance to other good painters' studios, among others that of Rembrandt, whose pupil he would have liked to become. Rembrandt refuses on account of his great friendship to Roghman. § 2. Griffier is able to imitate many masters and amongst them, Rembrandt.

§ 1. Zyn (Jan Griffier's) vader bestelde hem by een bloemschilder. Doch deze was een dronkaart, en in stee van dat Jan de konst oeffenen zoude, had hy werk genoeg om hem uit katten en kroegen op te zoeken, en hem zonder ongemak t'huis te krygen, waar door hy een tegenzin in den baas kreeg, en ging by Boelant Rogman, daar hy een geruinen tyd bleef. Door zyn byzonderen yver en vlyt tot de konst maakte hy zig by elk bemint, zoo dat hy zomwyle toegang vont om der braafste meesters werken van zyn tyd te zien, als Lingelbach, Ad. van den Velde, Ruisdaal, en Rembrandt, by welken hy graag had willen leeren: maar Rembrandt weigerde zulks, zeggende: dat Rogman en hy te goede vriden waren, om zyne leerlingen van hem af te lokken.

§ 2. Tusschen beide dient ook aangemerkt dat hy zig niet altyd by eene wyze van Schilderen gehouden heeft; maar zomwyl zyn penceel liet zwieren naar den wint van voordeel, dan eens op de wyze van Rembrandt, dan eens op de wyze van Poelenburg, Ruisdaal en anderen, zoo dat zyn werken dikwyls voor egte stukken van die meesters verkocht zyn geworden.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. III, p. 358 et seq.

No. 431. CORNELIS BROUWER
REMBRANDT'S PUPIL

Cornelis Brouwer, een konstlievend man, die ook voormaals een leerling van Rembrandt was geweest, en zyn (i. e. Adr. v. d. Werff's) geveezen meester (i. e. Egton H. v. d. Neer) dikwyls kwam bezoeken, waar door hy kennis aan hem had, toonde veel geneegenheit voor hem.

From Houbraken, loc. cit., vol. III, p. 392.

Cornelis Brouwer is not known as a painter.

CONCLUDING NOTE

With Houbraken the records of Rembrandt, which we may consider primary sources of information, come to an end. Houbraken was himself the pupil of one of Rembrandt's pupils, and knew several of the master's other pupils, beside his own teacher. His successors are content to borrow from him, and this more and more carelessly as time went on. The sale prices of Rembrandt's pictures at later periods are still of interest, but it becomes increasingly doubtful with time whether the works in question were really by Rembrandt. In transcribing these prices, we have taken the year 1702 as a final point, and for later sales, we refer students to the printed catalogues, and more especially to the extracts from these given by Hoet and Terwesten.
