"All hell will break loose": 'Prepper' families planning for Doomsday

By Mirror.co.uk

The survivalism movement has been around since the 60s when Cold War fears prompted thousands into stockpiling food and weapons

Tim Ralston with his guns

Once a week Tim Ralston and his wife Marie take their three teenage kids to a secluded cabin in the Northern Arizona desert.

Surrounded by wildlife and the cows, sheep and chickens they raise it looks like a perfect eco-friendly family retreat.

But the Ralstons are not there for an American version of The Good Life.

On arrival Marie heads straight to the pantry to check the 15 years worth of tinned and freeze-dried food they've stockpiled, the kids test out their survival gear, first aid kits and water purifying tablets and Tim gets in some self-defence practice with his Crovel.

It's a 13-tools-in-one weapon he has designed himself and, as he is more than happy to demonstrate, it can slice a pig in half with two blows.

"It's the Swiss army knife of shovels," explains Tim proudly.

"The spike at one end, a pry bar, a hammer... and the blade itself is so strong it's used as an axe. It's very hardcore."

It's also selling like hot cakes and has been voted the No 1 Zombie Killing Tool in the World by the more extreme members of the growing community who, like Tim, are getting ready for Doomsday.

Planning: Tim teaching his family to use guns

For Tim and his family are Preppers, some of the tens of thousands of people worldwide preparing for Teotwawki – or The End Of The World As We Know It in their language.

The survivalism movement has been around since the 60s when Cold War fears of atomic attacks prompted hundreds of thousands of Americans into stockpiling food and weapons.

In 1999, fears of the Y2K computer bug triggered another surge in prepping, while the 9/11 attacks and terrorism alerts drove it to new highs. Survivalists used to be dismissed as wild-bearded weirdos living in caves.

But this week the Prepper phenomenon was thrown into the spotlight by the Sandy Hook school massacre in Connecticut.

Across the US, and in Europe and even the UK, apparently ordinary people are also preparing for WTSHF – prepping jargon for disaster, or when the s*** hits the fan.

They have their own organisation, the American Preppers Network, their own TV series Doomsday Preppers and Preppers UK on the National Geographic cable channel and scores of “how to prep” shows on local radio.

The supplies: Stockpiles of food

Then there are the websites and blogs, magazines and books like Preppers' Home Defence, a snip at £8.35 in Walmart.

And a huge industry is cashing in on their fears with companies selling special food and equipment – such as the air-purifying SCape Mask – as well as purpose-built shelters.

In North Salt Lake, Utah, builder Paul Seyfried is doing a roaring trade in bespoke bunkers which cost from £32,000 to £40,000.

Some Preppers will have woken up this morning feeling pretty confused as, according to one doomsday prophecy based on the ancient Mayan calendar, the world should have ended yesterday.

Tim, 49, a former IT consultant, did not believe that was how the end would come, nor does he think it will be a zombie apocalypse, plague, or bio-chemical attack, as other Preppers do.

He fears an electromagnetic pulse attack, triggered by man-made sources such as a missile or small nuclear bomb, or through the sun having a solar flare.

It would cause all electrical systems to blow up rendering everyday life impossible.

But Tim, Marie, their 15-year-old daughter and sons aged 16 and 13, insist they could survive for up to a year “off the grid” in a post-apocalypse world by “bugging-out” from their home in Scottsdale to their secret cabin.

Their food store has hundreds of tins of chicken, beef and tuna neatly lined up.

And then there's the stockpile of weapons – from an AK-47 assault rifle to hunting rifles – giving Tim enough firepower to keep a mini army at bay.

Tim, who runs a store specialising in outdoor and survival gear, adds: “My whole family knows how to shoot and use weapons responsibly.

“Why would they not want to know how to use a gun? I bring a gun to work with me every day.

Gas mask: Purifier air kit for Preppers

"If someone comes into my store and threatens me with a weapon I am not going to tell them to go away simply with good intentions.

"That is what my gun is for. People will not argue with a gun."

With other Preppers living nearby, he said their community has all the skills needed to stay alive

"The whole point of being a Prepper is that you are prepared for the worst," he says.

"It's a kind of insurance – like health insurance or life insurance.

"Prepping is different than survivalism. Survivalists used to be those lone guys sitting up the mountains counting beans and rice.

"The Preppers build communities with networks of people that have like minds and goals, mainly to protect themselves."

His views are echoed by Jeff Nice, 46, who lives on a 13 acre farm in North Carolina with wife Jeannie and their stockpile of food and weapons.

Bunker mentality: Hideout full of supplies

They also have a 200 yard rifle range and teach other Preppers “hunter education”.

The Nices’ big fear is nuclear apocalypse.

“When there is an attack all hell will break loose,” says Jeff. “People will be looking for ways to survive.

“No one thought there would be a 9/11. You only have to see how unstable the world is and then people will realise what we are doing is not crazy.”

Jay Blevins, 35, from Berryville, Virginia is a former deputy sheriff and Swat team officer who now teaches self-defence.

He has been prepping for more than a decade and estimates he’s spent £9,000 on supplies.

His family is part of a network of 20 Prepper families who have three “strongholds”— houses with additional supplies — as well as a “bug-out” location in a wooded area away from cities.

The bunker: Paul builds bespoke shelters

They also have a contingency plan to leave there and Jay believes, because of the network members' skills, they could survive indefinitely. He says: "You might laugh – but there's millions of people that suffer in large types of emergencies, just because they didn't do a little bit of preparation beforehand."

"Preppers seek to prepare, save, and defend life. Preppers are like Victoria Soto, the teacher who sacrificed her life for her students."
