legal notice. See NOTICE.

legal obligation. See OBLIGATION.

legal officer. See OFFICER (2).

legal opinion. See OPINION (2).

legal order. 1. Traditionally, a set of regulations governing a society and those responsible for enforcing them. 2. Modernly, such regulations and officials plus the processes involved in creating, interpreting, and applying the regulations.

legal owner. See OWNER.

legal paternalism. The theory that a government or legal system is justified in controlling the individual affairs of the citizens. • This theory is often associated with legal positivists. See PATERNALISM; LEGAL POSITIVISM.

legal person. See artificial person under PERSON. Cf. LEGAL ENTITY.

legal personality. See PERSONALITY.

legal-personal representative. See REPRESENTATIVE.

legal philosophy. See general jurisprudence under JURISPRUDENCE.

legal portion. See LEGITIME.

legal positivism, n. The theory that legal rules are valid only because they are enacted by an existing political authority or accepted as binding in a given society, not because they are grounded in morality or in natural law. • Legal positivism has been espoused by such scholars as H.L.A. Hart. — legal positivist, n. See POSITIVE LAW. Cf. LOGICAL POSITIVISM.

"[I]t will be helpful to offer some comparisons between legal positivism and its counterpart in science. Scientific positivism condemns any inquiry projecting itself beyond observable phenomena; it abjures metaphysics, it renounces in advance any explanation in terms of ultimate causes. Its program of research is to chart the regularities discernible in the phenomena of nature at the point where they become open to human observation, without asking — as it were — how they got there. In the setting of limits to inquiry there is an obvious parallel between scientific and legal positivism. The legal positivist concentrates his attention on law at the point where it emerges from the institutional processes that brought it into being. It is the finally made law itself that furnishes the subject of his inquiries. How it was made and what directions of human effort went into its creation are for him irrelevancies." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 177-78 (1968).

legal possessor. One with the legal right to possess property, such as a buyer under a conditional sales contract, as contrasted with the legal owner who holds legal title. See legal owner under OWNER.

legal practice. See PRACTICE OF LAW.

legal practitioner. A lawyer.

"Legal practitioners may be either barristers, special pleaders not at the bar, certified conveyancers, or solicitors. The three latter may recover their fees, but the first may not, their acting being deemed of a voluntary nature, and their fees merely in the light of honorary payments; and it follows from this, that no action lies against them for negligence or unskilfulness." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 169 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

legal prejudice. See PREJUDICE.

legal presumption. See presumption of law under PRESUMPTION.

legal proceeding. Any proceeding authorized by law and instituted in a court or tribunal to acquire a right or to enforce a remedy.

legal process. See PROCESS.

legal question. See QUESTION OF LAW.

legal rate. See INTEREST RATE.

legal realism, n. The theory that law is based, not on formal rules or principles, but instead on judicial decisions that should derive from social interests and public policy. • American legal realism — which flourished in the early 20th century — was espoused by such scholars as John Chipman Gray, Oliver Wendell Holmes, and Karl Llewellyn. — legal realist, n. Cf. LEGAL FORMALISM.

legal regime. See REGIME.

legal relation. The connection in law between one person or entity and another; VINCULUM JURIS.

legal remedy. See REMEDY.

legal representative. See personal representative under REPRESENTATIVE.

legal rescission. See RESCISSION.

legal research. 1. The finding and assembling of authorities that bear on a question of law. 2. The field of study concerned with the effective marshaling of authorities that bear on a question of law.

legal reserve. See RESERVE.

legal residence. See DOMICILE (2).

legal science. The field of study that, as one of the social sciences, deals with the institutions and principles that particular societies have developed (1) for defining the claims and liabilities of persons against one another in various circumstances, and (2) for peaceably resolving disputes and controversies in accordance with principles accepted as fair and right in the particular community at a given time.

legal secretary. An employee in a law office whose responsibilities include typing legal documents and correspondence, keeping records and files, and performing other duties supportive of the employer's law practice. • Legal secretaries usu. are more highly skilled, and therefore more highly compensated, than secretaries in general business.

legal seisin. See seisin in law under SEISIN.

legal separation. See SEPARATION (1).

Legal Services Corporation. A corporation established by the Legal Services Corporation Act of 1974 (42 USCA § 2996) to provide legal help to clients who cannot afford legal services.

legal servitude. See SERVITUDE (1).

legal signature. See SIGNATURE.

legal subdivision. See SUBDIVISION.

legal subrogation. See SUBROGATION.

legal succession. See SUCCESSION (2); DESCENT.

legal tender. The money (bills and coins) approved in a country for the payment of debts, the purchase of goods, and other exchanges for value. See TENDER (4).

legal theory. 1. See general jurisprudence under JURISPRUDENCE. 2. The principle under which a litigant proceeds, or on which a litigant bases its claims or defenses in a case.

legal title. See TITLE (2).

legal voter. See VOTER (2).

legal willfulness. See WILLFULNESS.

legal wrong. See WRONG.

legantine. See LEGATINE.

legare (lə-gair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To bequeath or give (property) by will.

legatarius (leg-ə-tair-ee-əs), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. The person to whom property is bequeathed. 2. Hist. A legate; a messenger or envoy. See LEGATE.

legate (leg-it). [fr. Latin legare "to send as deputy"] 1. Roman law. An official undertaking a special mission for the emperor, such as assisting in a judicial function or conducting a census. 2. Roman law. A senator or other official chosen to assist the emperor, a governor, or a general in a military or administrative activity. 3. A papal representative who may or may not have both diplomatic and ecclesiastical status; a diplomatic agent of the Vatican.

legate a latere (ay lat-ə-ree). See LEGATUS.

legate missus (mis-əs). See LEGATUS.

legate natus (nay-təs). See LEGATUS.

4. A representative of a state or the highest authority in a state; an ambassador; a person commissioned to represent a country in a foreign country. — Also termed legatus. — legatine, adj.

legate (lə-gayt), vb. To give or leave as a legacy; BEQUEATH.

legatee (leg-ə-tee). 1. One who is named in a will to take personal property; one who has received a legacy or bequest. 2. Loosely, one to whom a devise of real property is given. — Also termed (archaically) legatary.

residuary legatee (ri-zij-oo-er-ee). A person designated to receive the residue of a decedent's estate. See residuary estate under ESTATE.

specific legatee. The recipient, under a will, of designated property that is transferred by the owner's death.

legatine (leg-ə-tin or -tɪn), adj. Of or relating to a legate. — Also termed (erroneously) legatine.

legatine constitution. Hist. Eccles. law. A code of ecclesiastical laws enacted in English national synods in 1220 and 1268. • The synods were held under papal legates during the reign of Henry III.

legatine court. A court held by a papal legate and having ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

legation (lə-gay-shən). 1. The act or practice of sending a diplomat to another country; a diplomatic mission. 2. A body of diplomats sent to a foreign country and headed by an envoy extraordinary or a minister plenipotentiary. 3. The official residence of a diplomatic minister in a foreign country. Cf. EMBASSY.

legator (lə-gay-tər or leg-ə-tor). One who bequeaths a legacy; TESTATOR.

legatory (leg-ə-tor-ee), n. Hist. The one-third portion of a freeman's estate in land that he could dispose of by will. • The other two portions of the estate were subject to claims of the wife and children.

legatum (lə-gay-təm), n. [Latin fr. legare "to bequeath"] 1. Roman law. A legacy; a gift left by a deceased person to be paid from the estate by the heir. 2. Hist. A legacy to the church or burial place.

legatum optionis (lə-gay-təm op-shee-oh-nis), n. [Latin] Roman law. A legacy of one of several items that the designated beneficiary chooses from the testator's estate. • Originally, if the heir died after the testator but before making the selection, the heir's representative was unable to make the choice and the legacy failed. Justinian later changed the law to make selection by the representative under these circumstances valid.

legatus (lə-gay-təs). A legate. Pl. legati (lə-gay-ti) See LEGATE.

legatus a latere (ay lat-ə-ree). [Latin "legate from the (Pope's) side"] A papal legate (esp. a cardinal) appointed for a special diplomatic mission and not as a permanent representative. • This is a type of legatus missus. — Also termed legate a latere. Cf. NUNCIO.

legatus missus (mis-əs). [Latin "legate sent"] A legate sent on a special mission. — Also termed legate missus; legatus datus (day-təs).

legatus natus (nay-təs). [Latin "legate born"] A bishop or archbishop who claims to be a legate by virtue of office in an important see, such as Canterbury. — Also termed legate natus.

legem amittere (lee-jəm ə-mit-ə-ree), vb. [Latin "to lose one's law"] Hist. To lose the privilege of taking an oath, usu. because of a criminal conviction.

legem facere (lee-jəm fay-sə-ree), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To make an oath; to wage law.

legem ferre (lee-jəm fer-ee), vb. [Latin "to carry the proposal"] Roman law. To propose a law to the public.

legem habere (lee-jəm hə-beer-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To be able to testify under oath. • Witnesses with criminal convictions were unable to testify until the 19th century, by the Evidence Act of 1843 (6 & 7 Vict., ch. 85).

legem jubere (lee-jəm jə-beer-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To pass a proposed law.

legem ponere (lee-jəm poh-nə-ree), vb. [Latin] Hist. 1. To propound a law. 2. To pay in cash.

legem sciscere (lee-jəm sis-ə-ree), vb. [Latin] Roman law. (Of the people) to consent to a proposed law.

legem vadiare (lee-jəm vad-ee-air-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To wage law; to offer to make a sworn defense to an action for debt, accompanied by 11 neighbors as character witnesses. See COM-PURGATION.

legenita (lə-jen-ə-tə), n. Hist. A fine for the seduction of another man's wife. — Also termed legruita (lə-groo-ə-tə).

leger, n. Archaic. See LEDGER (2).

leges (lee-jeez), n. pl. [Latin] See LEX.

leges Angliae (lee-jeez ang-glee-ee), n. [Latin] Hist. The laws of England, as distinguished from the civil law and other legal systems.

leges barbarorum (lee-jeez bahr-bə-ror-əm), n. [Latin "laws of the barbarians"] Hist. The customary laws of medieval European law; esp., the customary laws of Germanic tribes during the Middle Ages. — Also termed folk laws. See SALIC LAW.

leges Edwardi Confessoris (lee-jeez ed-wahr-di kon-fə-sor-is), n. [Latin "Laws of Edward the Confessor"] Hist. A legal treatise written between 1130 and 1135, of dubious authority, compiling English law as it stood at the end of the reign of Henry I.

"[W]e have a book [leges Edwardi Confessoris] written in Latin which expressly purports to give us the law of Edward as it was stated to the Conqueror in the fourth year of his reign by juries representing the various parts of England . . . It is a private work of a bad and untrustworthy kind. It has about it something of the political pamphlet and is adorned with pious legends. The author, perhaps a secular clerk of French parentage, writes in the interest of the churches, and, it is to be feared, tells lies for them." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 103 (2d ed. 1898).

leges et consuetudines regni (lee-jeez et kon-swə-t[y]oo-də-nee-z reg-ni), n. [Latin "laws and customs of the kingdom"] Hist. The common law. • This was the accepted term for the common law since at least the late 12th century.

leges Henrici (lee-jeez hen-ri-si), n. [Latin] Hist. A book anonymously written between 1114 and 1118 containing Anglo-Saxon and Norman law. • The book lends insight to the period before the full development of Norman law in England. — Also termed leges Henrici Primi.

"Closely connected with the Quadripartitus is a far more important book, the so-called Leges Henrici. It seems to have been compiled shortly before the year 1118. After a brief preface, it gives us Henry's coronation charter (this accounts for the name which has unfortunately been given in modern days to the whole book), and then the author makes a gallant, if forlorn, attempt to state the law of England. At first sight the outcome seems to be a mere jumble of fragments . . . But the more closely we examine the book, the more thoroughly convinced we shall be that its author has undertaken a serious task in a serious spirit; he means to state the existing law of the land . . ." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 99 (2d ed. 1898).

leges imperii (lee-jeez im-peer-ee-i). [Latin] The laws of the government.

leges Juliae (lee-jeez joo-lee-ee), n. [Latin] Roman law. Laws enacted during the reign of Augustus or of Julius Caesar. • Together with the lex Aebutia, the leges Juliae effectively abolished the legis actiones, the ancient form of Roman civil procedure using prescribed oral forms.

leges non scriptae (lee-jeez non skrip-tee), n. [Latin] Hist. Unwritten or customary laws, including ancient acts of Parliament. Cf. LEGES SCRIPTAE.

leges publicae (lee-jeez pəb-lə-see). [Latin] Roman law. Statutes passed by the vote of the Roman people in popular assemblies. • Most leges publicae were of temporary political interest. — Often shortened to leges.

Leges Regiae (lee-jeez ree-ji-ee). Roman law. Fragments of customary law relating mostly to religious rites and traditionally attributed to Roman kings.

leges sacratae (lee-jeez sə-kray-tee), n. [Latin] Roman law. Laws whose violation was punished by devoting the offender to the infernal gods.

leges scriptae (lee-jeez skrip-tee), n. [Latin] Hist. Written laws; esp., statutory laws or acts of Parliament that are reduced to writing before becoming binding. Cf. LEGES NON SCRIPTAE.

leges sub graviore lege (lee-jeez səb grav-ee-or-I lee-jee), n. [Latin] Laws under a weightier law.

leges tabellariae (lee-jeez tab-ə-lair-ee-ee), n. [Latin] Roman law. Laws that regulated voting by ballot.

legibus solutus (lee-jə-bəs sə-loo-təs), adj. [Latin “released from the laws”] Roman law. (Of the emperor or other designated person) not bound by the law.

legiosus (lee-jee-oh-səs), adj. [Law Latin] Hist. Litigious.

legislate, vb. 1. To make or enact laws <the role of our lawmakers is to legislate, not to adjudicate>. 2. To bring (something) into or out of existence by making laws; to attempt to control (something) by legislation <virtually every attempt to legislate morality has failed>.

legislation. 1. The process of making or enacting a positive law in written form, according to some type of formal procedure, by a branch of government constituted to perform this process. — Also termed lawmaking; statute-making. 2. The law so enacted. 3. The whole body of enacted laws.

ancillary legislation. Legislation that is auxiliary to principal legislation.

antideficiency legislation. 1. Legislation enacted to provide revenue to cover a budget deficiency. 2. Legislation enacted to limit the rights of secured creditors to recover in excess of the security.

class legislation. See local and special legislation.

general legislation. Legislation that applies to the community at large.

judicial legislation. The making of new legal rules by judges; JUDGE-MADE LAW (2).

‘It has been said to be ‘merely misleading’ to speak of judicial legislation, and it must be admitted that to do so is to use highly metaphorical language. There is no equivalent to the authoritative text of a statute, and, even when they are not bound by a statute or indistinguishable precedent, the judges’ power to innovate is limited by what they cannot consider as well as by what they must consider. They cannot conduct those extensive examinations of empirical data and considerations of social policy which precede, or should precede, much legislation.’ Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 34 (4th ed. 1991).

local and special legislation. Legislation that affects only a specific geographic area or a particular class of persons. • Such legislation is unconstitutional if it arbitrarily or capriciously distinguishes between members of the same class. — Also termed class legislation.

pork-barrel legislation. Legislation that favors a particular local district by allocating funds or resources to projects (such as constructing a highway or a post office) of economic value to the district and of political advantage to the district’s legislator.

subordinate legislation. 1. Legislation that derives from any authority other than the sovereign power in a state and that therefore depends for its continued existence and validity on some superior or supreme authority. 2. REGULATION (2).

supreme legislation. Legislation that derives directly from the supreme or sovereign power in a state and is therefore incapable of being repealed, annulled, or controlled by any other legislative authority.

4. A proposed law being considered by a legislature <gun-control legislation was debated in the House>. 5. The field of study concentrating on statutes.

legislative, adj. Of or relating to lawmaking or to the power to enact laws.

legislative apportionment. See APPORTIONMENT.

legislative branch. The branch of government responsible for enacting laws; LEGISLATURE. Cf. EXECUTIVE BRANCH; JUDICIAL BRANCH.

legislative committee. See COMMITTEE.

legislative council. 1. A state agency that studies legislative problems and plans legislative strategy between regular legislative sessions. 2. In some English-speaking jurisdictions, the upper house of a legislature (corresponding to an American senate). 3. In some English-speaking jurisdictions, the lower house of a legislature (corresponding to an American House of Representatives).

legislative counsel. A person or group charged with helping legislators fulfill their legislative duties, as by performing research, drafting bills, and the like.

legislative court. See COURT.

legislative district. See DISTRICT.

legislative districting. The process of dividing a state into territorial districts to be represented in the state or federal legislature. See APPORTIONMENT; GERRYMANDERING; REAPPORTIONMENT.

legislative divorce. See DIVORCE.

legislative-equivalency doctrine. The rule that a law should be amended or repealed only by the same procedures that were used to enact it.

legislative fact. See FACT.

legislative function. 1. The duty to determine legislative policy. 2. The duty to form and determine future rights and duties. See LEGISLATIVE POWER.

legislative history. The background and events leading to the enactment of a statute, including hearings, committee reports, and floor debates. • Legislative history is sometimes recorded so that it can later be used to aid in interpreting the statute.

legislative intent. The design or plan that the legislature had at the time of enacting a statute. — Also termed intention of the legislature; intent of the legislature; congressional intent; parliamentary intent.

dormant legislative intent. The intent that the legislature would have had if a given ambiguity, inconsistency, or omission had been called to the legislators’ minds. — Sometimes shortened to dormant intent. — Also termed latent intent; latent intention.

legislative investigation. A formal inquiry conducted by a legislative body incident to its legislative authority. • A legislature has many of the same powers as a court to support a legislative inquiry, including the power to subpoena and cross-examine a witness and to hold a witness in contempt.

legislative jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

legislative law. See STATUTORY LAW.

legislative officer. See OFFICER (1).

legislative power. Constitutional law. The power to make laws and to alter them at discretion; a legislative body’s exclusive authority to make, amend, and repeal laws. • Under federal law, this power is vested in Congress, consisting of the House of Representatives and the Senate. A legislative body may delegate a portion of its lawmaking authority to agencies within the executive branch for purposes of rulemaking and regulation. But a legislative body may not delegate its authority to the judicial branch, and the judicial branch may not encroach on legislative duties.

legislative rule. An administrative rule created by an agency’s exercise of delegated quasi-legislative authority. • A legislative rule has the force of law. — Also termed substantive rule. Cf. INTERPRETATIVE RULE.

legislative veto. See VETO.

legislator, n. One who makes laws within a given jurisdiction; a member of a legislative body. — legislatorial (lej-is-lə-tor-ee-əl), adj.

legislature. The branch of government responsible for making statutory laws. • The federal government and most states have bicameral legislatures, usu. consisting of a house of representatives and a senate. Cf. EXECUTIVE (1); JUDICIARY (1).

legisperitus (lee-jis-per-ə-təs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A lawyer or advocate; one skilled in the law. Cf. JURISPERITUS.

legisprudence (lee-jis-proo-dənts). The systematic analysis of statutes within the framework of jurisprudential philosophies about the role and nature of law.

legist (lee-jist). 1. One learned or skilled in the law; a lawyer. 2. JURIST. — Formerly also termed legister.

legitimacy. 1. Lawfulness. 2. The status of a person who is born within a lawful marriage or who acquires that status by later action of the parents. Cf. ILLEGITIMACY.

legitima gubernatio (lə-jit-ə-mə g[y]oo-bər-nay-shee-oh). [Latin “lawful government”] See RECTA GUBERNATIO.

legitimate, adj. 1. Complying with the law; lawful . 2. Born of legally married parents . 3. Genuine; valid . — legitimacy, n.

legitimate child. See CHILD.

legitimate portion. See LEGITIME.

legitimation, n. 1. The act of making something lawful; authorization. 2. The act or process of authoritatively declaring a person legitimate. 3. Hist. Proof of a person’s identity and of legal permission to reside in a certain place or engage in a certain occupation. — legitimate, vb.

legitimatío per subsequens matrimonium (lə-jit-ə-may-shee-oh pər səb-see-kwenz mat-rə-moh-nee-əm), n. [Latin] The legitimation of a child born outside wedlock by the later marriage of the parents.

legitime (lej-ə-tim). Civil law. The part of a testator’s free movable property that his or her children (and occasionally other heirs) are legally entitled to regardless of the will’s terms. ● The legitime cannot be denied the children without legal cause. In Roman law, the amount of the legitime was one-fourth of the claimant’s share on intestacy. — Also spelled (esp. in Scotland) legitim. — Also termed legal portion; legitimate portion; forced portion. See forced heir under HEIR.

legitimi heredes (lə-jit-ə-mi hə-ree-deez), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. Heirs on intestacy, as determined by the Twelve Tables. ● They might include paternal relatives of the deceased. — Also spelled legitimi haeredes. See TWELVE TABLES.

legitimus (lə-jit-ə-məs), adj. [Latin] Roman law. (Of a person) legitimate; lawful.

legit vel non (lee-jit vel non). [Latin] Eccles. law. Does he read or not. ● This was the formal question propounded by a court to an ordinary (an ecclesiastical official) when an accused person claimed exemption from the death penalty by benefit of clergy. If the ordinary found that the accused was entitled to exemption, he responded “legit ut clericus,” or, “he reads like a clerk.” See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

lego (lee-goh). [Latin] Roman law. I bequeath. ● This was a common term in a will.

legocentrism. See LEGAL CENTRALISM.

lego-literary (lee-goh-lit-ər-er-ee), adj. Rare. Of or relating to law and literature. See LAW AND LITERATURE.

legruita. See LEGENITA.

leguleian (leg-yə-lee-ən), n. Rare. A pettifogging lawyer. — Also termed leguleius (leg-yoo-lee-əs). — leguleian, adj.

LEIN. abbr. LAW ENFORCEMENT INFORMATION NETWORK.

leipa (li-pə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A runaway or fugitive.

lemon law. 1. A statute designed to protect a consumer who buys a substandard automobile, usu. by requiring the manufacturer or dealer either to replace the vehicle or to refund the full purchase price. ● Almost all states have lemon laws in effect. — Also termed lemon protection. 2. By extension, a statute designed to protect a consumer who buys any products of inferior quality. — Also termed (in sense 2) quality-of-products legislation.

le mort saisit le vif doctrine (lə mor se-zeelə veef). [French “the dead seizes the living”] The principle requiring that there be no gap in the possession of a freehold estate in land, so that legal title vests immediately in the heirs upon the death of the person through whom they claim title. ● The doctrine does not exclude unknown heirs or heirs absent at the date of death.

lend, vb. 1. To allow the temporary use of (something), sometimes in exchange for compensation, on condition that the thing or its equivalent be returned. 2. To provide (money) temporarily on condition of repayment, usu. with interest.

lender. A person or entity from which something (esp. money) is borrowed.

lend-lease. A mutually beneficial exchange made between friendly parties; esp., an arrangement made in 1941, under the Lend-Lease Act, whereby U.S. destroyers were lent to Great Britain in exchange for Britain's leasing of land to the United States for military bases. — Also termed lease-lend.

lenient, adj. Tolerant; mild; merciful <lenient sentence>.

lenient test. The principle that the attorney-client privilege applicable to a document will be waived only by a knowing or intentional disclosure, and will not usu. be waived by an inadvertent disclosure. Cf. strict test; Hydraflow test.

lenity (len-ə-tee). The quality or condition of being lenient; mercy or clemency. See RULE OF LENITY.

lenity rule. See RULE OF LENITY.

leodes (lee-oh-deez), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A vassal. 2. Service to be provided to another. 3. Compensation to be paid by one who killed or seriously injured a vassal, divided among the sovereign, the vassal's lord, and the vassal's next of kin; WERGILD.

leonina societas (lee-ə-ni-nə sə-si-ə-tas). See SOCIETAS LEONINA.

leonine contract (lee-ə-nin). See adhesion contract under CONTRACT.

leproso amovendo (lep-roh-soh ay-moh-ven-doh), n. [Latin "for removing a leper"] Hist. A writ to remove a leper who participated in public gatherings, such as church or meetings.

le roy (lər wah or lə roy), n. [Law French] The king. — Also spelled le roi.

le roy le veut (lər wah lə voo). [Law French] Hist. The king (or the queen) wills it. • This is the form of the king's or queen's approval to a public bill passed by Parliament. For a queen, the sentence is la reine le veut.

"If the king consents to a public bill, the clerk usually declares, 'le roy le veut, the king wills it so to be:' if to a private bill, 'soit fait comme il est désiré, be it as it is desired.' If the king refuses his assent, it is in the gentle language of 'le roy s'avisera, the king will advise upon it.'" 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 184 (1765).

le roy remercie ses loyal sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et ainsi le veut (lər wah ruu-mair-see say lwi-ahl soo-zhay, ak-sept luu[r] bay-nay-voh-lawns, ay an-see lə vuu). [Law French] Hist. The king thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and therefore wills it to be so. • This is a form of the royal assent to a bill of supply, authorizing money for public purposes. For a queen, the sentence was la reine remercie ses loyal sujets le roy s'avisera (lər wah sa-veez-rah). [Law French] The king will advise upon it. • This is a form of the refusal of royal assent to a public bill in Parliament (not exercised since 1713). It corresponds to the judicial phrase curia advisari vult. For a queen, the sentence was la reine s'avisera. See CURIA ADVISARI VULT.

lese majesty (leez maj-əs-tee). [Law French "injured majesty"] 1. A crime against the state, esp. against the ruler. See high treason under TREASON. 2. An attack on a custom or traditional belief. — Also spelled lèse-majesté; lèse majesty; leze majesty. — Also termed laesa majestas; crimen laesae majestatis.

lesion (lee-zhən). 1. An injury or wound; esp., an area of wounded tissue. 2. Civil law. Loss from another's failure to perform a contract; the injury suffered by one who did not receive the equivalent value of what was bargained for. — Also spelled (in sense 2) lésion. 3. See LAESIO ENORMIS.

"The concept of lésion, unknown as such to the common law, may be defined as a detriment to one of the parties to a contract which results from an imbalance or disparity between the performance promised on the two sides. Down through the ages, civilians have differed over whether it gave the injured party a right of avoidance or rescission. Classical Roman law, designed for a society whose members were strong enough to protect their own interests, denied the right, but by the time of the French Revolution the right had come to be recognized, particularly by the canonists and Pothier. But the Revolution, both because of its emphasis on individual will and because of economic reasons, was hostile to the concept of lésion and the Civil Code provided that it did not affect the validity of a contract except in certain prescribed instances, most notably the case of the vendor of real property. The number of exceptions was enlarged both by subsequent legislation and, at least indirectly, by judicial decision, and this raised a question of the reversal of the general principle that rejected the concept." Allan Farnsworth, "The Development of the Civil Law of Obligations in New States: Senegal, Madagascar, and less developed country. See DEVELOPING COUNTRY.

lessee (le-see). One who has a possessory interest in real or personal property under a lease; TENANT.

lessee in the ordinary course of business.

A person that, in good faith and without knowledge that the lease is in violation of a third party's ownership rights, security interest, or leasehold interest, leases in the ordinary course from a person in the business of selling or leasing goods of that kind. UCC § 2A-102(a)(26). • The UCC specifically excludes pawnbrokers from the definition.

merchant lessee. A lessee who is a merchant of goods similar to those being leased. UCC § 2A-102(a)(31).

lessee's interest. The appraised value of leased property from the lessee's perspective for purposes of assignment or sale. • The value is usu. the property's market value minus the lessor's interest. Cf. LESSOR'S INTEREST.

lesser included offense. See OFFENSE (1).

lessor (les-or or le-sor). One who conveys real or personal property by lease; LANDLORD.

lessor of the plaintiff. Hist. The true party in interest prosecuting an action for ejectment. • At common law, an ejectment action theoretically was only for the recovery of the unexpired term of the lease. Conventions of pleadings at the time required the true plaintiff to grant a fictitious lease, thereby becoming a lessor, to an equally fictitious plaintiff in whose name the action would be prosecuted.

lessor's interest. The present value of the future income under a lease, plus the present value of the property after the lease expires. Cf. LESSEE'S INTEREST.

let, n. An impediment or obstruction <free to act without let or hindrance>.

let, vb. 1. To allow or permit <the court, refusing to issue an injunction, let the nuisance continue>. 2. To offer (property) for lease; to rent out <the hospital let office space to several doctors>. 3. To award (a contract), esp. after bids have been submitted <the federal agency let the project to the lowest bidder>.

lethal, adj. Deadly; fatal .

lethal injection. An injection of a deadly substance into a prisoner, done to carry out a sentence of capital punishment.

lethal weapon. See deadly weapon under WEAPON.

letter. 1. A written communication that is usu. enclosed in an envelope, sealed, stamped, and delivered; esp., an official written communication <an opinion letter>. 2. (usu. pl.) A written instrument containing or affirming a grant of some power or right <letters testamentary>. 3. Strict or literal meaning <the letter of the law>. • This sense is based on the sense of a letter of the alphabet. Cf. SPIRIT OF THE LAW.

letter-book. A merchant's book for holding correspondence.

letter contract. See CONTRACT.

letter missive. 1. Hist. A letter from the king (or queen) to the dean and chapter of a cathedral, containing the name of the person whom the king wants elected as bishop. 2. *Hist. After a lawsuit is filed against a peer, peeress, or lord of Parliament, a request sent to the defendant to appear and answer the suit. 3. *Civil law. The appellate record sent by a lower court to a superior court. — Also termed letter dimissory.

letter of advice. A notice that a draft has been sent by the drawer to the drawee. UCC § 3-701.

letter of attorney. See POWER OF ATTORNEY (1).

letter of attornment. A grantor's letter to a tenant, stating that the leased property has been sold and directing the tenant to pay rent to the new owner. See ATTORNMENT (1).

letter of comment. See DEFICIENCY LETTER.

letter of credence. A document that accredits a diplomat to the government of the country to which he or she is sent. — Abbr. LC; L/C. — Also termed letters of credence.

letter of credit. An instrument under which the issuer (usu. a bank), at a customer's request, agrees to honor a draft or other demand for payment made by a third party (the beneficiary), as long as the draft or demand complies with specified conditions, and regardless of whether any underlying agreement between the customer and the beneficiary is satisfied. ● Letters of credit are governed by Article 5 of the UCC. — Abbr. LC; L/C. — Often shortened to credit. — Also termed circular letter of credit; circular note; bill of credit.

"There is some confusion over the exact nature of credits. They resemble a number of commercial devices that are not credits. Often, there is confusion between letters of credit and guaranties, and occasionally between letters of credit and lines of credit. In the credit transaction itself, it is important to distinguish the credit from other contracts and from the acceptance. Generally, the broad credit transaction consists of three separate relationships. These include those that are (1) between the issuer and the beneficiary; (2) between the beneficiary and the account party; and (3) between the account party and the issuer. The first is the letter-of-credit engagement. The second is usually called the underlying contract, and the third is called the application agreement." John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 2.01, at 2-2 (1984).

"A credit is an original undertaking by one party (the issuer) to substitute his financial strength for that of another (the account party), with that undertaking to be triggered by the presentation of a draft or demand for payment and, often, other documents. The credit arises in a number of situations, but generally the account party seeks the strength of the issuer's financial integrity or reputation so that a third party (the beneficiary of the credit) will give value to the account party." John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 2.02, at 2-3 (1984).

"A seller hesitates to give up possession of its goods before it is paid. But a buyer wishes to have control of the goods before parting with its money. To relieve this simple tension, merchants developed the device known as the 'letter of credit' or simply the 'credit' or the 'letter.' Today, letters of credit come in two broad varieties. The 'commercial' letter dates back at least 700 years. It is a mode of payment in the purchase of goods, mostly in international sales. The 'standby' letter of credit is a much more recent mutant. It 'backs up' obligations in a myriad of settings. In the most common standby a bank promises to pay a creditor upon documentary certification of the applicant's default." 3 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 26-1, at 105 (4th ed. 1995).

clean letter of credit. A letter of credit that is payable on its presentation. ● No document needs to be presented along with it. — Also termed suicide letter of credit. Cf. documentary letter of credit.

commercial letter of credit. A letter of credit used as a method of payment in a sale of goods (esp. in an international transaction), with the buyer being the issuer's customer and the seller being the beneficiary, so that the seller can obtain payment directly from the issuer instead of from the buyer.

confirmed letter of credit. A letter of credit that directly obligates a financing agency (such as a bank) doing business in the seller's documentary letter of credit. A letter of credit that is payable when presented with another document, such as a certificate of title or invoice. — Abbr. DL/C. Cf. clean letter of credit.

export letter of credit. A commercial letter of credit issued by a foreign bank, at a foreign buyer's request, in favor of a domestic exporter.

general letter of credit. A letter of credit addressed to any and all persons without naming anyone in particular. Cf. special letter of credit.

guaranty letter of credit. See standby letter of credit.

import letter of credit. A commercial letter of credit issued by a domestic bank, at an importer's request, in favor of a foreign seller.

irrevocable letter of credit (i-REV-ə-kə-bəl). A letter of credit in which the issuing bank guarantees that it will not withdraw the credit or cancel the letter before the expiration date; a letter of credit that cannot be modified or revoked without the customer's consent.

negotiation letter of credit. A letter of credit in which the issuer's engagement runs to drawers and indorsers under a standard negotiation clause.

"Letter-of-credit law has long distinguished the straight credit from the negotiation credit. The engagement of the former runs to the beneficiary; the engagement of the latter runs to 'drawers, endorsers, and bona fide holders.' This quoted phrase is the traditional negotiation clause. The significance of it is that it obviously extends the credit engagement to parties other than the person with whom the account party is doing business." John F. Dolan, The Law of Letters of Credit ¶ 8.02[6], at 8-11 (1984).

open letter of credit. A letter of credit that can be paid on a simple draft without the need for documentary title.

revocable letter of credit (REV-ə-kə-bəl). A letter of credit in which the issuing bank reserves the right to cancel and withdraw from the transaction upon appropriate notice. ● The letter cannot be revoked if the credit has already been paid by a third party.

revolving letter of credit. A letter of credit that self-renews by providing for a continuing line of credit that the beneficiary periodically draws on and the customer periodically repays. ● A revolving letter of credit is used when there will be multiple drafts under a special letter of credit. A letter of credit addressed to a particular individual, firm, or corporation. Cf. general letter of credit.

standby letter of credit. A letter of credit used to guarantee either a monetary or a nonmonetary obligation (such as the performance of construction work), whereby the issuer agrees to pay the beneficiary if the customer defaults on its obligation. — Abbr. SL/C. — Also termed guaranty letter of credit.

straight letter of credit. A letter of credit requiring that drafts drawn under it be presented to a specified party.

suicide letter of credit. See clean letter of credit.

time letter of credit. A letter of credit that is duly honored by the issuer accepting drafts drawn under it. — Also termed acceptance credit; usance credit.

transferable letter of credit. A letter of credit that authorizes the beneficiary to assign the right to draw under it.

traveler's letter of credit. 1. A letter of credit addressed to a correspondent bank, from which one can draw credit by identifying oneself as the person in whose favor the credit is drawn. 2. A letter of credit used by a person traveling abroad, by which the issuing bank authorizes payment of funds to the holder in the local currency by a local bank. ● The holder signs a check on the issuing bank, and the local bank forwards it to the issuing bank for its credit.

letter of intent. A written statement detailing the preliminary understanding of parties who plan to enter into a contract or some other agreement; a noncommittal writing preliminary to a contract. ● A letter of intent is not meant to be binding and does not hinder the parties from bargaining with a third party. Business people typically mean not to be bound by a letter of intent, and courts ordinarily do not enforce one; but courts occasionally find that a commitment has been made. — Abbr. LOI. — Also termed memorandum of intent. Cf. precontract under CONTRACT.

letter of license. English law. An agreement signed by all the creditors of a financially troubled business that does the following: (1) grants the debtor more time to pay debts, (2) permits the debtor to continue business in the hope of overcoming its financial distress, and (3) protects the debtor from arrest, lawsuit, or other interference while the letter is in effect. See ARRANGEMENT WITH CREDITORS.

letter of recall. 1. A document sent from one nation's executive to that of another, stating that the former executive is summoning a minister back to his or her own country. 2. A manufacturer's letter to a buyer of a particular product, asking the buyer to bring the product back to the dealer for repair or replacement.

letter of recredentials. A formal letter from the diplomatic secretary of state of a host country to a foreign minister or ambassador who has been recalled. ● The letter officially accredits the foreign minister back to his or her home country.

letter of request. A document issued by one court to a foreign court, requesting that the foreign court (1) take evidence from a specific person within the foreign jurisdiction or serve process on an individual or corporation within the foreign jurisdiction and (2) return the testimony or proof of service for use in a pending case. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 28. Pl. letters of request. — Also termed letter rogatory (rog-ə-tor-ee); rogatory letter; requisitory letter (ri-kwiz-ə-tor-ee).

letter of the law. The strictly literal meaning of the law, rather than the intention or policy behind it. — Also termed litera legis. Cf. SPIRIT OF THE LAW.

letter of undertaking. An agreement by which a shipowner — to avoid having creditors seize the ship and release it on bond — agrees to post security on the ship, and to enter an appearance, acknowledge ownership, and pay any final decree entered against the vessel whether it is lost or not.

"Such informal or extra-legal agreements save court costs and the marshal's fees, avoid the annoyance of having the vessel even temporarily arrested and may well be cheaper than the usual surety bond. . . . In Continental Grain Co. v. Federal Barge Lines, Inc., [268 F.2d 240 (5th Cir. 1959), aff'd, 364 U.S. 19, 80 S.Ct. 1470 (1960)], Judge Brown commented that a letter of undertaking given by a shipowner would be treated 'as though, upon the libel being filed, the vessel had actually been seized, a claim filed, a stipulation to abide decrees with sureties executed and filed by claimant, and the vessel formally released. Any other course would imperil the desirable avoidance of needless cost, time and inconvenience to litigants, counsel, ships, clerks, marshals, keepers and court personnel through the ready acceptance of such letters of undertakings.' [268 F.2d at 243]. If, as Judge Brown suggests, the informal agreement is treated as having the same effect as a formal release under bond or stipulation, few questions relating to their use will ever have to be litigated." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 9-89, at 800-01 (2d ed. 1975).

letter rogatory. See LETTER OF REQUEST.

letter ruling. Tax. A written statement issued by the IRS to an inquiring taxpayer, explaining the tax implications of a particular transaction. — Also termed private letter ruling.

letters. Wills & estates. Letters of administration, letters of conservatorship, letters of guardianship, and letters testamentary, collectively. Uniform Probate Code § 1-201(23). See LETTER (2).

letters ad colligendum bona defuncti (ad kol-ə-jen-dəm boh-nə di-fungk-tl), n. [Law Latin] Hist. An authorization from a judicial officer to an approved person to collect and maintain the goods of a person who died intestate. • These letters were issued only if no representative or creditor existed to exercise this function.

letter security. See restricted security under SECURITY.

letters of absolution. Hist. Letters issued by an abbot releasing a member of his order from his vows of obedience to that order, thus permitting entry into another order.

letters of administration. A formal document issued by a probate court to appoint the administrator of an estate. • Letters of administration originated in the Probate of Testaments Act of 1357 (31 Edw. 3, ch. 4), which provided that in case of intestacy the ordinary (a high-ranking ecclesiastical official within a territory) should depute the decedent's closest friends to administer the estate; a later statute, the Executors Act of 1529 (21 Hen. 8, ch. 4), authorized the ordinary to grant administration either to the surviving spouse or to next of kin, or to both of them jointly. — Also termed administration letters. See ADMINISTRATION (4). Cf. LETTERS TESTAMENTARY.

letters of administration c.t.a. Letters of administration appointing an administrator cum testamento annexo (with the will annexed) either because the will does not name an executor or because the named executor does not qualify. See administration cum testamento annexo under ADMINISTRATION.

letters of administration d.b.n. Letters of administration appointing an administrator de bonis non (concerning goods not yet administered) because the named executor failed to complete the estate's probate. See administration de bonis non under ADMINISTRATION.

letters of credence. See LETTER OF CREDENCE.

letters of guardianship. A document issued by a court appointing a guardian to care for a minor's or an incapacitated adult's well-being, property, and affairs. • It defines the scope of the guardian's rights and duties, including the extent of control over the ward's education and medical issues. See GUARDIAN.

letters of marque (mahrk). A license authorizing a private citizen to engage in reprisals against citizens or vessels of another nation. • Congress has the exclusive power to grant letters of marque (U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11), but it has not done so since the 19th century. — Also termed letters of marque and reprisal.

"[F]ormerly it was not uncommon for a state to issue 'letters of marque' to one of its own subjects, who had met with a denial of justice in another state, authorizing him to redress the wrong for himself by forcible action, such as the seizure of the property of subjects of the delinquent state." J.L. Briery, The Law of Nations 321 (5th ed. 1955).

letters of safe conduct. Hist. Formal written permission from the English sovereign to a citizen of a nation at war with England, permitting that person to travel and ship goods, to England or on the high seas, without risk of seizure. • Passports or licenses from foreign ambassadors now may serve the same purpose. See SAFE CONDUCT.

letters of slains. Hist. Letters to the Crown from the relatives of a slain person concurring with the offender's application for a royal pardon. • A pardon could not be granted without the family's concurrence. — Also spelled letters of slanes.

letters patent. 1. Hist. A document granting some right or privilege, issued under governmental seal but open to public inspection. — Also termed litterae patentes (lit-ər-ee pə-ten-teez). Cf. LETTERS SECRET. 2. A governmental grant of the exclusive right to use an invention or design. See PATENT (2).

letters rogatory. See LETTER OF REQUEST.

letters secret. Hist. A governmental document that is issued to a private person, closed and sealed, and thus not made available for public inspection. — Also termed letters close. Cf. LETTERS PATENT (1).

letters testamentary. The instrument by which a probate court approves the appointment of an executor under a will and authorizes the executor to administer the estate. Cf. LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

letter stock. See restricted security under SECURITY.

lettre (lɛ-trɛ), n. [French “letter”] Hist. A formal instrument granting some authority.

lettre de cachet (lɛ-trɛ də ka-shay). [French “letter with a seal”] A royal warrant issued for the imprisonment of a person without trial.

leuca (loo-kə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. French law. A league, consisting of 1,500 paces. 2. A league, consisting of 1,000 paces. 3. A privileged space of one mile around a monastery.

levance and couchance (lev-ənts / kow-chənts). Hist. The state or condition of being levant and couchant. See LEVANT AND COUCHANT.

levandae navis causa (lə-van-dee nay-vis kaw-zə), n. [Latin “for the sake of lightening the ship”] Maritime law. The practice of throwing goods overboard to avoid total loss, entitling the owner to compensation from other participants in the maritime venture. See JETTISON; general average under AVERAGE.

levant and couchant (lev-ənt / kow-chənt), adj. [Law French couchant et levant “lying down and rising up”] Hist. (Of cattle and other beasts) trespassing on land for a period long enough to have lain down to rest and risen to feed (usu. at least one night and one day). • This period was the minimum required as grounds for distraint. — Also termed couchant and levant.

levari facias (lə-vair-I fay-shee-əs). [Law Latin “that you cause to be levied”] A writ of execution ordering a sheriff to seize a judgment debtor’s goods and income from lands until the judgment debt is satisfied. • This writ is now used chiefly in Delaware. Cf. FIERI FACIAS.

levari facias damna de disseisitoribus (lə-vair-I fay-shee-əs dam-nə dee dis-see-zə-tor-ə-bəs), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to be levied the rest of the debt”] Hist. A writ directing the sheriff to levy property to pay damages owed to one wrongfully dispossessed of a freehold estate. See DISSEISIN.

levari facias quando vicecomes returnavit quod non habuit emptores (lə-vair-I fay-shee-əs kwon-doh vi-see-koh-meez ree-tər-nay-vit kwod non hay-byoo-it emp-tor-eez), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to be levied the damages from the disseisors”] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff, who had already seized some of the debtor’s property and found it unsalable, to sell as much additional property as necessary to pay the entire debt.

levari facias residuum debiti (lə-vair-I fay-shee-əs ri-zij-oo-əm deb-ə-ti), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to be levied when the sheriff has returned that it had no buyers”] Hist. A writ directing the sheriff to levy upon a debtor’s lands or goods to pay the remainder of a partially satisfied debt.

levato velo (lə-vay-toh vee-loh), n. [Latin “with the curtain raised”] Roman law. The principle, applied to cases of wreck and salvage, and later to all maritime matters, that cases should be heard promptly. • Although commentators disagree about the origin of the expression, it probably refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door, and when the cases were heard, the sail was raised, allowing suitors to come into court and have their causes immediately heard.

levee (lev-ee), n. 1. An embankment constructed along the edge of a river to prevent flooding. 2. A landing place on a body of navigable water for loading and unloading goods or receiving and delivering passengers and boats.

levee district. A local or regional political subdivision organized to construct and maintain levees within its territory at public expense.

levée en masse. See LEVY EN MASSE.

level-premium insurance. See INSURANCE.

level-rate legal-reserve policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

leverage, n. 1. Positional advantage; effectiveness. 2. The use of credit or borrowed funds (such as buying on margin) to improve one’s speculative ability and to increase an invest-ment's rate of return. 3. The advantage obtained from using credit or borrowed funds rather than equity capital. 4. The ratio between a corporation's debt and its equity capital. — Also termed leverage ratio. 5. The effect of this ratio on common-stock prices.

leverage, vb. 1. To provide (a borrower or investor) with credit or funds to improve speculative ability and to seek a high rate of return. 2. To supplement (available capital) with credit or outside funds. 3. To fund (a company) with debt as well as shareholder equity. 4. Antitrust. To use power in one market to gain an unfair advantage in another market. 5. Insurance. To manipulate two coverages, as by an insurer withholding settlement of one claim to influence a claim arising under another source of coverage.

leverage contract. An agreement for the purchase or sale of a contract for the future delivery of a specified commodity, usu. silver, gold, or another precious metal, in a standard unit and quantity, for a particular price, with no right to a particular lot of the commodity. • A leverage contract operates much like a futures contract, except that there is no designated contract market for leverage contracts. The market sets the uniform terms of a futures contract. But in a leverage contract, the individual merchant sets the terms, does not guarantee a repurchase market, and does not guarantee to continue serving or acting as the broker for the purchaser. Leverage contracts are generally forbidden for agricultural commodities. 7 USCA § 23(a). Cf. FUTURES CONTRACT.

leveraged buyout. See BUYOUT.

leveraged lease. See LEASE.

leveraged recapitalization. See RECAPITALIZATION.

lex scripta (leks skrip-tə), n. [Latin "written law"] Law authorized or created by statute rather than custom or usage; WRITTEN LAW. Cf. LEX NON SCRIPTA.

lex Sempronia (leks sem-proh-nee-ə), n. [Latin] Hist. A law preventing senators from being judges, and allowing knights to so serve.

lex Silia (leks sil-ee-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. A law providing for personal actions for a fixed sum of money.

lex situs (leks si-təs), n. [Law Latin] The law of the place where property is located. — Also termed lex loci rei sitae. See Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws §§ 222 et seq. (1971).

lex solutionis. See LEX LOCI SOLUTIONIS.

lex talionis (leks tal-ee-oh-nis), n. [Law Latin] The law of retaliation, under which punishment should be in kind — an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and so on. — Also termed eye for an eye; jus talionis; principle of retribution.

"Kant, for example, expresses the opinion that punishment cannot rightly be inflicted for the sake of any benefit to be derived from it either by the criminal himself or by society, and that the sole and sufficient reason and justification of it lies in the fact that evil has been done by him who suffers it. Consistently with this view, he derives the measure of punishment, not from any elaborate considerations as to the amount needed for the repression of crime, but from the simple principle of lex talionis: 'Thine eye shall not pity; but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot' [Deuteronomy, xix 21]. No such principle, indeed, is capable of literal interpretation; but subject to metaphorical and symbolical applications it is in Kant's view the guiding rule of the ideal scheme of criminal justice." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 118 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"But if the old form of the lex talionis, an eye for an eye or a tooth for a tooth, sounds too barbaric today, may we not reformulate the retributive theory and put it thus: Everyone is to be punished alike in proportion to the gravity of his offense or to the extent to which he has made others suffer?" Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 53 (1961).

lex terrae (leks ter-ee). [Law Latin] See LAW OF THE LAND.

lex validitatis (leks val-ə-day-tis), n. [Latin] Conflict of laws. The presumption of validity given to marriages, contracts, and other matters.

lex Visigothorum (leks viz-ə-gah-thor-əm), n. [Latin "law of the Visigoths"] The law of a division of the Goths (a Germanic tribe) known as the Visigoths, who conquered Spain in the 5th century. • In the late 7th century, Kings Recceswinth and Erwig imposed a Visigothic common law, and it is to this law that the phrase lex Visigothorum usu. applies. — Also termed liber iudiciorum. — Also spelled lex Wisigothorum.

lex Voconia (leks və-koh-nee-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. A law regulating inheritance, esp. by women. — Also termed Voconian law.

"Lex Voconia . . . Contained several provisions concerned with the law of succession: (1) No woman could be heir . . . to an estate having a value greater than a fixed amount . . . (2) Admitted among female agnates only the sisters of the deceased to intestate succession. (3) No one person — male or female — could receive by legacy more than the heir (or all heirs together) instituted in the last will." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 561 (1953).

ley civile (lay see- or sə-veel), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. The civil law. 2. The Roman law. — Also termed ley escripte.

ley de terre (lay də tair). [Law French] See LAW OF THE LAND.

ley escripte (lay es-kript). See LEY CIVILE.

ley gager (lay gay-jər), n. [Law French] Hist. Wager of law; the defendant's giving of security to make law on a particular day. See WAGER OF LAW.

leze majesty. See LESE MAJESTY.

L.F. abbr. LAW FRENCH.

LHWCA. abbr. LONGSHORE AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT.

liability, n. 1. The quality or state of being legally obligated or accountable; legal responsibility to another or to society, enforceable by civil remedy or criminal punishment <liability for injuries caused by negligence>. — Also termed legal liability. 2. (often pl.) A financial or pecuniary obligation; DEBT <tax liability> <assets and liabilities>.

"The term 'liability' is one of at least double signification. In one sense it is the synonym of duty, the correlative of right; in this sense it is the opposite of privilege or liberty. If a duty rests upon a party, society is now commanding performance by him and threatening penalties. In a second sense, the term 'liability' is the correlative of power and the opposite of immunity. In this case society is not yet commanding performance, but it will so command if the possessor of the power does some operative act. If one has a power, the other has a liability. It would be wise to adopt the second sense exclusively. Accurate legal thinking is difficult when the fundamental terms have shifting senses." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 9 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"Liability or responsibility is the bond of necessity that exists between the wrongdoer and the remedy of the wrong. This vinculum juris is not one of mere duty or obligation; it pertains not to the sphere of ought but to that of must." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 364 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

absolute liability. See strict liability.

accomplice liability. Criminal responsibility of one who acts with another before, during, or after a crime. See 18 USCA § 2.

accrued liability. A debt or obligation that is properly chargeable in a given accounting period but that is not yet paid.

alternative liability. Liability arising from the tortious acts of two or more parties — when the plaintiff proves that one of the defendants has caused harm but cannot prove which one caused it — resulting in a shifting of the burden of proof to each defendant. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 433B(3) (1965).

civil liability. 1. Liability imposed under the civil, as opposed to the criminal, law. 2. The state of being legally obligated for civil damages.

contingent liability. A liability that will occur only if a specific event happens; a liability that depends on the occurrence of a future and uncertain event. • In financial statements, contingent liabilities are usu. stated in footnotes.

current liability. A business liability that will be paid or otherwise discharged with current assets or by creating other current liabilities within the next year (or operating cycle).

derivative liability. Liability for a wrong that a person other than the one wronged has a right to redress. • Examples include liability to a widow in a wrongful-death action and liability to a corporation in a shareholder's derivative suit.

enterprise liability. Liability imposed on each member of an industry responsible for manufacturing a harmful or defective product, allotted by each manufacturer's market share of the industry. — Also termed industry-wide liability. See market-share liability.

joint and several liability. Liability that may be apportioned either among two or more parties or to only one or a few select members of the group, at the adversary's discretion. • Thus, each liable party is individually responsible for the entire obligation, but a paying party may have a right of contribution and indemnity from nonpaying parties. See solidary liability.

joint liability. Liability shared by two or more parties.

liability in solido. See solidary liability.

liability without fault. See strict liability.

limited liability. Liability restricted by law or contract; esp., the liability of a company's owners for nothing more than the capital they have invested in the business.

market-share liability. Liability that is imposed, usu. severally, on each member of an industry, based on each member's share of the market, or respective percentage of the product that is placed on the market. • This theory of liability usu. applies only in the situation in which a plaintiff cannot trace the harmful exposure to a particular product, as when several products contain a fungible substance. For example, it is sometimes applied to a claim that the plaintiff was harmed by exposure to asbestos. See enterprise liability.

penal liability. Liability arising from a proceeding intended at least partly to penalize a wrongdoer. Cf. remedial liability.

personal liability. Liability for which one is personally accountable and for which a wronged party can seek satisfaction out of the wrongdoer's personal assets.

premises liability. See PREMISES LIABILITY.

primary liability. Liability for which one is directly responsible, as opposed to secondary liability.

products liability. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

remedial liability. Liability arising from a proceeding whose object contains no penal element. • The two types of proceedings giving rise to this liability are specific enforcement and restitution. Cf. penal liability.

secondary liability. Liability that does not arise unless the primarily liable party fails to honor its obligation.

several liability. Liability that is separate and distinct from another's liability, so that the plaintiff may bring a separate action against one defendant without joining the other liable parties.

shareholder's liability. 1. The statutory, added, or double liability of a shareholder for a corporation's debts, despite full payment for the stock. 2. The liability of a shareholder for any unpaid stock listed as fully owned on the stock certificate, usu. occurring either when the shareholder agrees to pay full par value for the stock and obtains the certificate before the stock is paid for, or when partially paid-for stock is intentionally issued by a corporation as fully paid, the consideration for it being entirely fictitious. — Also termed stockholder's liability.

solidary liability (sol-ə-der-ee). Civil law. The liability of any one debtor among two or more joint debtors to pay the entire debt if the creditor so chooses. • This is equivalent to joint and several liability in the common law. — Also termed liability in solido. See joint and several liability.

stockholder's liability. See shareholder's liability.

strict liability. Liability that does not depend on actual negligence or intent to harm, but that is based on the breach of an absolute duty to make something safe. • Strict liability most often applies either to ultrahazardous activities or in products-liability cases. — Also termed absolute liability; liability without fault.

vicarious liability (vi-kair-ee-əs). Liability that a supervisory party (such as an employer) bears for the actionable conduct of a subordinate or associate (such as an employee) because of the relationship between the two parties. See RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

liability bond. See BOND (2).

liability dividend. See scrip dividend under DIVIDEND.

liability in solido. See solidary liability under LIABILITY.

liability insurance. See INSURANCE.

liability limit. The maximum amount of coverage that an insurance company will provide on a single claim under an insurance policy. — Also termed limit of liability; policy limits.

liable (lī-ə-bəl also lī-bəl), adj. 1. Responsible or answerable in law; legally obligated. 2. (Of a person) subject to or likely to incur (a fine, penalty, etc.). — Also termed legally liable. See LIABILITY.

libel (lī-bəl), n. 1. A defamatory statement expressed in a fixed medium, esp. writing but also a picture, sign, or electronic broadcast. • Libel is classified as both a crime and a tort but is no longer prosecuted as a crime. — Also termed defamatory libel. See DEFAMATION. Cf. SLANDER.

"Libel is written or visual defamation; slander is oral or aural defamation." Robert D. Sack & Sandra S. Baron, Libel, Slander, and Related Problems § 2.3, at 67 (2d ed. 1994).

"The distinction itself between libel and slander is not free from difficulty and uncertainty. As it took form in the seventeenth century, it was one between written and oral words. But later on libel was extended to include pictures, signs, statues, motion pictures, and even conduct carrying a defamatory imputation, such as hanging the plaintiff in effigy, erecting a gallows before his door, dishonoring his valid check drawn upon the defendant's bank, or even . . . following him over a considerable period in a conspicuous manner. From this it has been concluded that libel is that which is communicated by the sense of sight, or perhaps also by touch or smell, while slander is that which is conveyed by the sense of hearing." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 112, at 786 (5th ed. 1984).

criminal libel. At common law, a malicious libel that is designed to expose a person to hatred, contempt, or ridicule and that may subject the author to criminal sanctions. • false-implication libel. Libel of a public figure in a news article that creates a false implication or impression even though each statement in the article, taken separately, is true. See FALSE LIGHT; INVASION OF PRIVACY.

group libel. Libel that defames a class of persons, esp. because of their race, sex, national origin, religious belief, or the like. • Civil liability for group libel is rare because the plaintiff must prove that the statement applied particularly to him or her. Cf. hate speech under SPEECH.

libel per quod (pər kwod). 1. Libel that is actionable only on allegation and proof of special damages. • Most jurisdictions do not recognize libel per quod, holding instead that general damages from libel are presumed. 2. Libel in which the defamatory meaning is not apparent from the statement on its face but rather must be proved from extrinsic circumstances. See INNUEENDO (2).

libel per se (pər say). 1. Libel that is actionable in itself, requiring no proof of special damages. • Most jurisdictions do not distinguish between libel per se and libel per quod, holding instead that general damages from libel are presumed. 2. Libel that is defamatory on its face, such as the statement "Frank is a thief."

obscene libel. Hist. 1. The common-law crime of publishing, with the intent to corrupt, material (esp. sexual words or pictures) that tends to deprave or corrupt those whose minds are open to immoral influences. 2. A writing, book, picture, or print that is so obscene that it shocks the public sense of decency.

liberty. 1. Freedom from arbitrary or undue external restraint, esp. by a government <give me liberty or give me death>. 2. A right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by prescription or by grant; the absence of a legal duty imposed on a person <the liberties protected by the Constitution>.

“[Liberty] denotes not merely freedom from bodily restraint but also the right of the individual to contract, to engage in any of the common occupations of life, to acquire useful knowledge, to marry, establish a home and bring up children, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men.” Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399, 43 S.Ct. 625, 626 (1923).

“The sphere of my legal liberty is that sphere of activity within which the law is content to leave me alone.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 239 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“The word liberty has become a symbol around which have clung some of the most generous human emotions. We have been brought up to thrill with admiration at the men who say, Give me liberty or give me death. But the philosopher asks whether all those who are devoted to liberty mean the same thing. Does liberty or freedom, for instance, involve free trade? Does it involve freedom to preach race hatred or the overthrow of all that we regard as sacred? Many who believe in liberty characterize the freedom which they are not willing to grant, as license, and they do it so often that one may be inclined to think that what we really need is less liberty and more license. Moreover, there is a confusion between the absence of legal restraint and the presence of real freedom as positive power to do what we want. The legal freedom to earn a million dollars is not worth a cent to one who has no real opportunity. It is fashionable to assert that men want freedom above all other things, but a strong case may be made out for the direct contrary. Absolute freedom is just what people do not want . . .” Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 101–02 (1961).

individual liberty. See personal liberty.

natural liberty. The power to act as one wishes, without any restraint or control, unless by nature.

“This natural liberty . . . being a right inherent in us by birth . . . But every man, when he enters into society, gives up a part of his natural liberty, as the price of so valuable a purchase; and, in consideration of receiving the advantages of mutual commerce, obliges himself to conform to those laws, which the community has thought proper to establish.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 121 (1765).

personal liberty. One’s freedom to do as one pleases, limited only by the government’s right to regulate the public health, safety, and welfare. — Also termed individual liberty.

political liberty. A person’s freedom to participate in the operation of government, esp. in the making and administration of laws.

floating lien. 1. A lien that is expanded to cover any additional property obtained by the debtor while the debt is outstanding. 2. A lien that continues to exist even when the collateral changes in character, classification, or location. — Also termed floating charge.

garnishment lien. A lien on a debtor's property held by a garnishee. • Such a lien attaches in favor of the garnishing creditor when a garnishment summons is served and also impounds any credits the garnishee owes the debtor so that they must be paid to the garnishing creditor. — Also termed lien of garnishment. See GARNISHMENT.

general lien. A possessory lien by which the lienholder may retain any of the debtor's goods in the lienholder's possession until any debt due from the debtor, whether in connection with the retained goods or otherwise, has been paid. • Factors, insurance brokers, packers, stockbrokers, and bankers have a general lien over the property of their clients or customers. Cf. particular lien.

hotelkeeper's lien. A possessory or statutory lien allowing an innkeeper to hold, as security for payment, personal property that a guest brought into the hotel.

inchoate lien (in-koh-it). A judgment lien that may be defeated if the judgment is vacated or a motion for new trial is granted. Cf. consummate lien.

involuntary lien. A lien arising without the debtor's consent.

judgment lien. A lien imposed on a judgment debtor's nonexempt property. • This lien gives the judgment creditor the right to attach the judgment debtor's property. — Also termed lien of judgment. See EXEMPT PROPERTY.

judicial lien. A lien obtained by judgment, levy, sequestration, or other legal or equitable process or proceeding. • If a debtor is adjudged to owe money to a creditor and the judgment has not been satisfied, the creditor can ask the court to impose a lien on specific property owned and possessed by the debtor. After the court imposes the lien, it usu. issues a writ directing the local sheriff to seize the property, sell it, and turn over the proceeds to the creditor.

junior lien. A lien that is subordinate to one or more other liens on the same property.

laborer's lien. See mechanic's lien.

landlord's lien. 1. At common law, a lien that gave a landlord the right to seize a tenant's property and sell it publicly to satisfy overdue rent. See DISTRESS. 2. Generally, a statutory lien on a tenant's personal property at the leased premises in favor of a landlord who receives preferred-creditor status on that property. • Such a lien usu. secures the payment of overdue rent or compensation for damage to the premises.

lien of attachment. See attachment lien.

lien of factor at common law. Hist. A lien not created by statute; a common-law lien.

lien of garnishment. See garnishment lien.

maritime lien. A lien on a vessel, given to secure the claim of a creditor who provided maritime services to the vessel or who suffered an injury from the vessel's use. — Also termed tacit hypothecation.

mechanic's lien. A statutory lien that secures payment for labor or materials supplied in improving, repairing, or maintaining real or personal property, such as a building, an automobile, or the like. — Also termed artisan's lien; chattel lien (for personal property); construction lien (for labor); garageman's lien (for repaired vehicles); laborer's lien (for labor); materialman's lien (for materials).

mortgage lien. A lien on the mortgagor's property securing the mortgage.

municipal lien. A lien by a municipal corporation against a property owner for the owner's proportionate share of a public improvement that specially and individually benefits the owner.

particular lien. A possessory lien by which the possessor of goods has the right to retain specific goods until a debt incurred in connection with those goods has been paid. — Also termed special lien. Cf. general lien.

possessory garageman's lien. A lien on a vehicle in the amount of the repairs performed by the garage.

possessory lien. A lien allowing the creditor to keep possession of the encumbered property until the debt is satisfied. • A power of sale may or may not be combined with this right of possession. Examples include pledges of chattels, the liens of innkeepers, garageman's liens, and vendor's liens. See PLEDGE.

prior lien. A lien that is superior to one or more other liens on the same property, usu. because it was perfected first. — Also termed priority lien.

retaining lien. An attorney's right to retain a client's papers in the attorney's possession until the client has paid for the attorney's services. • The attorney's retaining lien is barred by law in some states.

second lien. A lien that is next in rank after a first lien on the same property and therefore is next entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds from the property's sale.

secret lien. A lien not appearing of record and unknown to purchasers; a lien reserved by the vendor and kept hidden from third parties, to secure the payment of goods after delivery.

senior lien. A lien that has priority over other liens on the same property.

special lien. See particular lien.

specific lien. A lien secured on a particular thing by a contract or by a judgment, execution, attachment, or other legal proceeding.

statutory lien. 1. A lien arising solely by force of statute, not by agreement of the parties. • Examples are federal tax liens and mechanic's liens. 2. Bankruptcy. Either of two types of liens: (1) a lien arising solely by force of a statute on specified circumstances or conditions, or (2) a lien of distress for rent, whether or not statutory. • For bankruptcy purposes, a statutory lien does not include a security interest or judicial lien, whether or not the interest or lien arises from or is made effective by a statute.

tax lien. 1. A lien placed on property and all rights to property by the federal government for unpaid federal taxes. 2. A lien on real estate in favor of a state or local government that may be foreclosed for nonpayment of taxes. • A majority of states have adopted the Uniform Federal Tax Lien Registration Act.

vendee's lien. Real estate. A buyer's lien on the purchased land as security for repayment of purchase money paid in, enforceable if the seller does not or cannot convey good title.

vendor's lien. 1. Real estate. A seller's lien on land as security for the purchase price. • This lien may be foreclosed in the same way as a mortgage: the buyer usu. has a redemption period within which to pay the full purchase price. — Also termed grantor's lien. 2. A lien held by a seller of goods, who retains possession of the goods until the buyer has paid in full.

voluntary lien. A lien created with the debtor's consent.

warehouseer's lien. A lien covering storage charges for goods stored with a bailee. — Also termed warehouseman's lien.

lienable, adj. (Of property) legally amenable to a lien; capable of being subject to a lien.

lien account. See ACCOUNT.

lien avoidance. Bankruptcy. A debtor's depriving a creditor of a security interest in an asset of the bankruptcy estate. 11 USCA §§ 506(d), 522(f).

lienee (leen-ee or lee-ən-ee). 1. One whose property is subject to a lien. 2. An encumbrancer who holds a lien; LIENHOLDER.

"[A] mortgagee is the owner of the property, while a pledgee or other lienee is merely an encumbrancer of it." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 440 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

lienholder. A person having or owning a lien. — Also termed lienor; lienee.

lien of a covenant. The beginning portion of a covenant, stating the names of the parties and the character of the covenant.

lien of attachment. See attachment lien under LIEN.

lien of factor at common law. See LIEN.

lien of garnishment. See garnishment lien under LIEN.

lien of judgment. See judgment lien under LIEN.

lien-stripping. Bankruptcy. The practice of splitting a mortgagee's secured claim into secured and unsecured components and reducing the claim to the market value of the debtor's residence, thereby allowing the debtor to modify the terms of the mortgage and reduce the amount of the debt. • The U.S. Supreme Court has prohibited lien-stripping in all Chapter 7 cases (Nobelman v. American Savs. Bank, 508 U.S. 324, 113 S.Ct. 2106 (1993)) and in Chapter 13 cases involving a debtor's principal residence (Deusnup v. Timm, 502 U.S. 410, 112 S.Ct. 773 (1992)), and the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 modified the Bankruptcy Code to prohibit lien-stripping in Chapter 11 cases involving an individual's principal residence.

lien theory. The idea that a mortgage resembles a lien, so that the mortgagee acquires only a lien on the property and the mortgagor retains both legal and equitable title unless a valid foreclosure occurs. • Most American states — commonly called lien states, lien jurisdictions, or lien-theory jurisdictions — have adopted this theory. Cf. TITLE THEORY.

lieu conus ([y]oo kon-yoo), n. [Law French] Hist. A place generally known and noticed by those about it, such as a castle or manor.

limitation. 1. The act of limiting; the state of being limited. 2. A restriction. 3. A statutory period after which a lawsuit or prosecution cannot be brought in court. — Also termed limitations period; limitation period. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. Cf. LACHES. 4. Property. The restriction of the extent of an estate; the creation by deed or devise of a lesser estate out of a fee simple. See WORDS OF LIMITATION.

collateral limitation. Hist. A limitation that makes the duration of an estate dependent on another event (other than the life of the grantee), such as an estate to A until B turns 21.

conditional limitation. 1. See executory limitation. 2. A lease provision that automatically terminates the lease if a specified event occurs, such as if the lessee defaults.

executory limitation. A restriction that causes an estate to automatically end and revert in a third party upon the happening of a specified event. • This type of limitation, which was not recognized at common law, can be created only as a shifting use or executory devise. It is just simply a condition subsequent in favor of someone other than the transferor. — Also termed conditional limitation. See fee simple subject to an executory limitation under FEE SIMPLE.

"When a condition subsequent is created in favor of someone other than the transferor, the Restatement of Property calls the condition subsequent an executory limitation. It calls A's estate an estate in fee simple subject to an executory limitation." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 52 (2d ed. 1984).

limitation over. An additional estate created or contemplated in a conveyance, to be enjoyed after the first estate expires or is exhausted. • An example of language giving rise to a limitation over is "to A for life, remainder to B."

special limitation. A restriction that causes an estate to end automatically and revert to the grantor upon the happening of a specified event. See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE.

limitation of assize. Hist. A period prescribed by statute within which a person is required to allege that the person was properly seised of lands sued for under a writ of assize.

limitation-of-damages clause. A contractual provision by which the parties agree on a maximum amount of damages recoverable for a future breach of the agreement. — Also termed liquidated-damages clause.

one-month liquidation. A special election, available to certain shareholders, that determines how the distributions received in liquidation by electing shareholders will be treated for federal income-tax purposes. • To qualify for the election, the corporation must be completely liquidated within one month. IRC § 333 (26 USCA § 333).

partial liquidation. A liquidation that does not completely dispose of a company's assets; esp., a liquidation occurring when some corporate assets are distributed to shareholders (usu. on a pro rata basis) and the corporation continues to operate in a restricted form.

twelve-month liquidation. A liquidation occurring within 12 months from adoption of the liquidation plan to complete liquidation, subject to a tax law prohibiting the company from recognizing any gains or losses on property sold within that time frame. • Generally, inventory will not be included unless a bulk sale occurs. IRC (26 USCA) § 337.

4. Bankruptcy. The process — under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code — of collecting a debtor's nonexempt property, converting that property to cash, and distributing the cash to the various creditors. • Upon liquidation, the debtor hopes to obtain a discharge, which releases the debtor from any further personal liability for prebankruptcy debts. Cf. REHABILITATION (3).

liquidation dividend. See DIVIDEND.

liquidation preference. See PREFERENCE.

liquidation price. See PRICE.

liquidation value. See VALUE.

liquidator. A person appointed to wind up a business's affairs, esp. by selling off its assets. See LIQUIDATION (3), (4). Cf. RECEIVER.

liquid debt. See DEBT.

liquidity. 1. The quality or state of being readily convertible to cash. 2. Securities. The characteristic of having enough units in the market that large transactions can occur without substantial price variations. • Most stocks traded on the New York Stock Exchange, for example, have liquidity.

liquidity ratio. The ratio between a person's or entity's assets that are held in cash or liquid form and the amount of the person's or entity's current liabilities, indicating the ability to pay current debts as they come due.

livery (liv-ə-ree or liv-ree). The delivery of the possession of real property. Cf. DELIVERY.

livery in chivalry. Hist. The delivery of possession of real property from a guardian to a ward in chivalry when the ward reached majority.

livery office. An office designated for the delivery of lands.

livery of seisin. Hist. The ceremony by which a grantor conveyed land to a grantee. • Livery of seisin involved either (1) going on the land and having the grantor symbolically deliver possession of the land to the grantee by handing over a twig, a clod of dirt, or a piece of turf (called livery in deed) or (2) going within sight of the land and having the grantor tell the grantee that possession was being given, followed by the grantee's entering the land (called livery in law). See SEISIN.

“[W]e may now pause to wonder how transfer of these potentially infinite interests was accomplished. Without a modern system of land records, it would be desirable that the transfer be effected with sufficient ceremony not only to mark itself indelibly in the memories of the participants, but also to give notice to interested persons such as the mesne lord above the transferor. The central idea was to make ritual livery (meaning ‘delivery,’ from the Old French liver) of seisin (meaning, roughly, ‘possession,’ from the Old French saisir or seisir). The transferor and transferee would go to the land to be transferred, and the transferor would then hand to the transferee a lump of soil or a twig from a tree — all the while intoning the appropriate words of grant, together with the magical words ‘and his heirs’ if the interest transferred was to be a potentially infinite one.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 10–11 (2d ed. 1984).

lives in being. See LIFE IN BEING.

live storage. The storage of cars in active daily use, rather than cars put away for an extended period. • A garage owner's responsibility sometimes depends on whether a car is in live or dead storage. Cf. DEAD STORAGE.

living, n. One's source of monetary support or resources; esp., one's employment.

living separate and apart. (Of spouses) residing in different places and having no intention of resuming marital relations. • One basis for no-fault divorce in many states exists if the spouses have lived apart for a specified period.

living trust. See inter vivos trust under TRUST.

living will. An instrument, signed with the formalities necessary for a will, by which a person states the intention to refuse medical treatment and to release healthcare providers from all liability if the person becomes both terminally ill and unable to communicate such a refusal. — Also termed declaration of a desire for a natural death; directive to physicians. Cf. ADVANCE DIRECTIVE.

loading. Insurance. An amount added to a life-insurance premium to cover the insurer's business expenses and contingencies. — Also termed expense loading. See gross premium (1) under PREMIUM (1).

load line. Maritime law. 1. The depth to which a safely loaded ship will sink in salt water. 2. One of a set of graduated marks on the side of a ship, indicating the depth to which the ship can be loaded in varying waters (such as salt water or freshwater) and weather conditions. • Load lines must, by law in most maritime countries, be cut and painted amidships. — Also termed (in sense 2) load-line marks; Plimsoll marks.

"The interest of shipowners led them, in early times, to load vessels to a point beyond safety; the greater the weight of the vessel's load, of course, the lower she rides in the water, and the more vulnerable she is to heavy seas. Many seamen consequently lost their lives. Britain led the way in establishing standards of depth in the water believed to be safe; Samuel Plimsoll, M.P., was the moving spirit, and gave his name to the Plimsoll mark, now seen on the side of all large vessels, which marks the limits of safety for different seas and seasons. Since 1929, the United States has made mandatory the placing of and compliance with loadline marks. . . ." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 11-12, at 987 (2d ed. 1975).

loadmanage. The fee paid to loadsmen, who sail in small vessels acting as pilots for larger ships.

loan, n. 1. An act of lending; a grant of something for temporary use <Trina gave him the laptop as a loan, not a gift>. 2. A thing lent for the borrower's temporary use; esp., a sum of money lent at interest <Larry applied for a car loan>.

accommodation loan. A loan for which the lender receives no consideration in return. See ACCOMMODATION.

add-on loan. A loan in which the interest is calculated at the stated rate for the loan agreement's full term for the full principal amount, and then the interest is added to the principal before installment payments are calculated, resulting in an interest amount higher than if it were calculated on the monthly unpaid balance. • Consumer loans are typically add-on loans. — Also termed contract loan. See add-on interest under INTEREST (3).

amortized loan. A loan calling for periodic payments that are applied first to interest and then to principal, as provided by the terms of the note. See AMORTIZATION (1).

back-to-back loan. A loan arrangement by which two firms lend each other funds denominated in different currencies for a specified period.

below-market loan. See interest-free loan.

bridge loan. A short-term loan that is used to cover costs until more permanent financing is arranged. — Also termed swing loan.

broker call loan. See call loan.

building loan. A type of bridge loan used primarily for erecting a building. • The loan is typically advanced in parts as work progresses and is used to pay the contractor, subcontractors, and material suppliers. See interim financing under FINANCING.

call loan. A loan for which the lender can demand payment at any time, usu. with 24 hours' notice, because there is no fixed maturity date. — Also termed broker call loan; demand loan. Cf. term loan.

character loan. A loan made in reliance on the borrower's character and stable earnings. • Character loans are usu. secured by a mortgage or by other property, but sometimes they are unsecured.

clearing loan. A loan made to a bond dealer pending the sale of a bond issue.

collateral loan. See secured loan.

commercial loan. A loan that a financial institution gives to a business, generally for 30 to 90 days.

commodity loan. A loan secured by a commodity (such as cotton or wool) in the form of a warehouse receipt or other negotiable instrument.

consolidation loan. A loan whose proceeds are used to pay off other individual loans, thereby creating a more manageable debt.

consumer loan. A loan that is given to an individual for family, household, personal, or agricultural purposes and that is generally governed by truth-in-lending statutes and regulations.

contract loan. See add-on loan.

Crown loan. Tax. An interest-free demand loan, usu. from parent to child, in which the borrowed funds are invested and the income from the investment is taxed at the child's rate. • This type of loan is named for one Harry Crown of Chicago, reputedly one of the first persons to use it. See kiddie tax under TAX.

day loan. A short-term loan to a broker to finance daily transactions.

demand loan. See call loan.

discount loan. A loan in which interest is deducted in advance, at the time the loan is made.

home equity loan. A line of bank credit given to a homeowner, using as collateral the homeowner's equity in the home. — Often shortened to equity loan. See EQUITY (7).

installment loan. A loan that is to be repaid in usu. equal portions over a specified period.

interest-free loan. Money loaned to a borrower at no charge or, under the Internal Revenue Code, with a charge that is lower than the market rate. IRC (26 USCA) § 7872. — Also termed (in the IRC) below-market loan.

maritime loan. A loan providing that a lender will not be repaid if the cargo is damaged or lost because of a navigational peril, but that the lender will be repaid plus interest if the cargo arrives safely or is damaged because of the carrier's negligence.

mortgage loan. A loan secured by a mortgage or deed of trust on real property.

nonperforming loan. An outstanding loan that is not being repaid.

nonrecourse loan. A secured loan that allows the lender to attach only the collateral, not the borrower's personal assets, if the loan is not repaid.

participation loan. A loan issued by two or more lenders. See LOAN PARTICIPATION.

policy loan. An insurer's loan to an insured, secured by the policy's cash reserve.

precarious loan. 1. A loan that may be recalled at any time. 2. A loan in danger of not being repaid.

premium loan. A loan made to an insured by the insurer to enable the insured to pay further premiums. • The reserve value of the policy serves as collateral.

recourse loan. A loan that allows the lender, if the borrower defaults, not only to attach the collateral but also to seek judgment against the borrower's (or guarantor's) personal assets.

revolver loan. A single loan that a debtor takes out in lieu of several lines of credit or other loans from various creditors, and that is subject to review and approval at certain intervals. • A revolver loan is usu. taken out in an attempt to resolve problems with creditors. Cf. revolving credit under CREDIT (4).

revolving loan. A loan that is renewed at maturity.

secured loan. A loan that is secured by property or securities. — Also termed collateral loan.

short-term loan. A loan with a due date of less than one year, usu. evidenced by a note.

signature loan. An unsecured loan based solely on the borrower's promise or signature. • To obtain such a loan, the borrower must usu. be highly creditworthy.

swing loan. See bridge loan.

term loan. A loan with a specified due date, usu. of more than one year. • Such a loan typically cannot be repaid before maturity without incurring a penalty. — Also termed time loan. Cf. call loan.

loan, vb. To lend, esp. money.

loan-amortization schedule. A schedule that divides each loan payment into an interest component and a principal component. • Typically, the interest component begins as the largest part of each payment and declines over time. See AMORTIZATION (1).

loan association. See SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

loan broker. See BROKER.

loan-brokerage fee. See MORTGAGE DISCOUNT.

loan certificate. A certificate that a clearinghouse issues to a borrowing bank in an amount equal to a specified percentage of the value of the borrowing bank's collateral on deposit with the clearinghouse's loan committee.

loan commitment. A lender's binding promise to a borrower to lend a specified amount of money at a certain interest rate, usu. within a specified period and for a specified purpose (such as buying real estate). See MORTGAGE COMMITMENT.

loaned employee. See borrowed employee under EMPLOYEE.

loaned servant. See borrowed employee under EMPLOYEE.

loan for consumption. An agreement by which a lender delivers goods to a borrower who consumes them and who is obligated to return goods of the same quantity, type, and quality.

loan for exchange. A contract by which a lender delivers personal property to a borrower who agrees to return similar property, usu. without compensation for its use.

loanland. Hist. A tenancy involving the loan of land by one person to another. — Also spelled laenland. Cf. BOOKLAND; FOLKLAND.

loan participation. The coming together of multiple lenders to issue a large loan (called a participation loan) to one borrower, thereby reducing each lender's individual risk.

loan ratio. See LOAN-TO-VALUE RATIO.

loan-receipt agreement. Torts. A settlement agreement by which the defendant lends money to the plaintiff interest-free, the plaintiff not being obligated to repay the loan unless he or she recovers money from other tortfeasors responsible for the same injury.

loansharking, n. The practice of lending money at excessive and esp. usurious rates, and often threatening or using extortion to enforce repay-

loan society. English law. A club organized to collect deposits from and make loans to industrial workers. • The loan societies were forerunners of the American savings-and-loan associations.

loan-to-value ratio. The ratio, usu. expressed as a percentage, between the amount of a mortgage loan and the value of the property pledged as security for the mortgage. • For example, an $80,000 loan on property worth $100,000 results in a loan-to-value ratio of 80% — which is usu. the highest ratio that lenders will agree to without requiring the debtor to buy mortgage insurance. — Often shortened to LTV ratio. — Also termed loan ratio.

loan value. 1. The maximum amount that may be lent safely on property or life insurance without jeopardizing the lender's need for protection from the borrower's default. 2. The amount of money an insured can borrow against the cash value of his or her life-insurance policy.

lobby, vb. 1. To talk with a legislator, sometimes in a luxurious setting, in an attempt to influence the legislator's vote <she routinely lobbies for tort reform in the state legislature>. 2. To support or oppose (a measure) by working to influence a legislator's vote <the organization lobbied the bill through the Senate>. 3. To try to influence (a decision-maker) <the lawyer lobbied the judge for a favorable ruling>. — lobbying, n. — lobbyist, n.

local-exchange carrier. Telecommunications law. An entity that provides telephone service, usu. on a local basis, through a local-exchange network. 47 USCA § 153(26). — Abbr. LEC. See LOCAL-EXCHANGE NETWORK.

local-exchange network. Telecommunications law. A system for providing telephone service on a local basis. • A local-exchange network usu. consists of such elements as switches, local loops, and transport trunks, and capabilities such as billing databases and operator services. Switches are pieces of equipment that direct calls to the appropriate destination. Local loops are the wires that connect telephones to the switches. Transport trunks are the wires that carry calls from switch to switch. All the elements of a local-exchange network are often referred to as a bundle, and there are federal requirements that a local-exchange carrier who controls a local-exchange network permit competition by selling some access, including unbundled access, to its local-exchange network. 47 USCA § 251(c). See LOCAL-EXCHANGE CARRIER; UNBUNDLING RULES.

local government. See GOVERNMENT.

local improvement. See IMPROVEMENT.

local-improvement assessment. See local assessment under ASSESSMENT.

locality, n. A definite region; vicinity; neighborhood; community.

locality of a lawsuit. The place where a court may exercise judicial authority.

locality-plus test. Maritime law. The rule that, for a federal court to exercise admiralty jurisdiction, not only must the alleged wrong occur on navigable waters, it must also relate to a traditional maritime activity. — Also termed maritime-connection doctrine.

locality rule. 1. The doctrine that, in a professional-malpractice suit, the standard of care to be applied to the professional's conduct is the reasonable care exercised by similar professionals in the same vicinity and professional community.

localization doctrine. The doctrine that a foreign corporation, by doing sufficient business in a state, will subject itself to that state's laws.

local law. 1. A statute that relates to or operates in a particular locality rather than the entire state. 2. A statute that applies to particular persons or things rather than an entire class of persons or things. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) local act; local statute. 3. The law of a particular jurisdiction, as opposed to the law of a foreign state. — Also termed internal law. 4. Conflict of laws. The body of standards, principles, and rules — excluding conflict-of-laws rules — that the state courts apply to controversies before them. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 4(1) (1971).

local option. An option that allows a municipality or other governmental unit to determine a particular course of action without the specific approval of state officials. — Also termed local veto. Cf. HOME RULE.

local rule. 1. A rule based on the physical conditions of a state and the character, customs, and beliefs of its people. 2. A rule by which an individual court supplements the procedural rules applying generally to all courts within the jurisdiction. • Local rules deal with a variety of matters, such as requiring extra copies of motions to be filed with the court or prohibiting the reading of newspapers in the courtroom. Fed. R. Civ. P. 83.

local statute. See LOCAL LAW.

local union. See UNION.

local usage. A practice or method regularly observed in a particular place, sometimes considered by a court in interpreting a document. UCC § 1-205(2)(3). See CUSTOM AND USAGE.

local veto. See LOCAL OPTION.

locatio rei (lə-kay-shee-oh ree-I), n. [Latin "letting of a thing"] The hiring of a thing for use, by which the hirer gains the temporary use of the thing; a bailment or lease in which the bailee or lessee may use the item for a fee.

location. 1. The specific place or position of a person or thing. 2. The act or process of locating. 3. Real estate. The designation of the boundaries of a particular piece of land, either on the record or on the land itself. 4. Mining law. The act of appropriating a mining claim. — Also termed mining location. See MINING CLAIM. 5. The claim so appropriated. 6. Civil law. A contract for the temporary use of something for hire; a leasing for hire. See LOCATIO.

locative calls (lok-ə-tiv). Property. In land descriptions, specific descriptions that fix the boundaries of the land. • Locative calls may be marks of location, landmarks, or other physical objects. If calls in a description conflict, locative calls control over those indicating a general area of a boundary. See CALL (5); DIRECTORY CALLS.

locator (loh-kay-tər), n. [Latin] 1. Roman & civil law. One who lets for hire; the bailor or lessor in a locatio. 2. One who is entitled to locate land or set the boundaries of a mining claim.

locatum (lə-kay-təm), n. [Latin] Hist. A hiring. See BAILMENT.

Lochnerize (lok-nər-iz), vb. To examine and strike down economic legislation under the guise of enforcing the Due Process Clause, esp. in the manner of the U.S. Supreme Court during the early 20th century. • The term takes its name from the decision in Lochner v. New York, 198 U.S. 45, 25 S.Ct. 539 (1905), in which the Court invalidated New York's maximum-hours law for bakers. — Lochnerization, n.

lockbox. 1. A secure box, such as a post-office box, strongbox, or safe-deposit box. 2. A facility offered by a financial institution for quickly collecting and consolidating checks and other funds from a party's customers.

lockdown. The temporary confinement of prisoners in their cells during a state of heightened alert caused by an escape, riot, or other emergency.

locked in, adj. 1. (Of a person) unable to sell appreciated securities and realize the gain because of liability for capital gains taxes <my accountant advised me not to sell the stock because I am locked in>. 2. (Of a price, rate, etc.) staying the same for a given period <the 7% mortgage rate is locked in for 30 days>.

locked-in rate. See lock rate under INTEREST RATE.

lockout. 1. An employer's withholding of work and closing of a business because of a labor dispute. 2. Loosely, an employee's refusal to work because the employer unreasonably refuses to abide by an expired employment contract while a new one is being negotiated. Cf. STRIKE; BOYCOTT; PICKETING.

lock rate. See INTEREST RATE.

lockup, n. 1. JAIL. 2. LOCKUP OPTION.

lockup option. A defense against a corporate takeover, in which a friendly party is entitled to buy parts of a corporation for a set price when a person or group acquires a certain percentage of the corporation's shares. • An agreement of this kind may be illegal, to the extent it is not undertaken to serve the best interests of the shareholders. — Often shortened to lockup.

loco parentis. See IN LOCO PARENTIS.

locum tenens (loh-kəm tee-nenz or ten-ənz), n. [Law Latin "holding the place"] Hist. A deputy; a substitute; a representative.

locuples (lok-yə-pleez), adj. [Latin] Civil law. Having the means to pay any amount that the plaintiff might recover. — Also termed locuplete.

locus (loh-kəs). [Latin "place"] The place or position where something is done or exists. — Abbr. L. See SITUS.

locus actus (loh-kəs ak-təs). [Latin "place of the act"] The place where an act is done; the place of performance.

locus contractus (loh-kəs kən-trak-təs). [Latin "place of the contract"] The place where a contract is made. Cf. LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS.

locus criminis (loh-kəs krim-ə-nis), n. [Latin] The place where a crime is committed.

locus delicti (loh-kəs də-lik-ti). [Latin "place of the wrong"] The place where an offense is committed; the place where the last event necessary to make the actor liable occurs. Cf. LEX LOCI DELICTI.

"When a statute does not indicate where Congress considered the place of committing the crime to be, the site or locus delicti must be determined from the nature of the crime and the location of the acts or omissions constituting the offense." United States v. Clinton, 574 F.2d 464, 465 (9th Cir. 1978).

locus in quo (loh-kəs in kwoh). [Latin "place in which"] The place where something is alleged to have occurred.

locus partitus (loh-kəs pah-r-ti-təs), n. [Latin "a place divided"] Hist. The act of dividing two towns or counties to determine which of them contains the land or place in question.

locus poenitentiae (loh-kəs pen-ə-ten-shee-ee). [Latin "place of repentance"] 1. A point at which it is not too late for one to change one's legal position; the possibility of withdrawing from a contemplated course of action, esp. a wrong, before being committed to it.

"The requirement of an overt act before conspirators can be prosecuted and punished exists . . . to provide a locus poenitentiae an opportunity for the conspirators to reconsider, terminate the agreement, and thereby avoid punishment." People v. Zamora, 557 P.2d 75, 82 (Cal. 1976).

2. The opportunity to withdraw from a negotiation before finally concluding the contract.

locus publicus (loh-kəs pəb-li-kəs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A public place.

"Locus publicus . . . A parcel of public land. It is property of the Roman people and is protected by various interdicts . . . against violation by private individuals who might endanger its public character or its use by the people." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 568 (1953).

locus regit actum (loh-kəs ree-jit ak-təm), n. [Latin "the place rules the act"] Int'l law. The rule that a transaction complying with the legal formalities of the country where it is created will be considered valid in the country where it is to be effective, even if that country requires additional formalities.

locus rei sitae (loh-kəs ree-i si-tee), n. [Latin "place where a thing is situated"] Civil law. The rule that the place where the land is located is the proper forum in a case involving real estate.

locus sigilli (loh-kəs si-jil-i), n. [Latin] The place of the seal. • Today this phrase is almost always abbreviated "L.S." These are the traditional letters appearing on many notarial certificates to indicate where the notary public's embossed seal should be placed. If a rubber-stamp seal is used, it should be placed near but not over this abbreviation. See NOTARY SEAL.

"For some period in history seals were required to consist of wax affixed to the parchment or paper on which the terms of the instrument were written. The wax was required to have an identifiable impression made upon it. Usually this was made by a signet ring. In time when ordinary people, who did not have signet rings, learned to read and write, it was to be expected that substitutes for the traditional seal would be accepted by the law. Thus, today it would be generally accurate to say that a seal may consist of wax, a gummed wafer, an impression on the paper, the word 'seal,' the letters 'L.S.' (locus sigilli) or even a pen scratch." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 7-3, at 296 (3d ed. 1987).

locus standi (loh-kəs stan-di or -dee). [Latin "place of standing"] The right to bring an action or to be heard in a given forum; STANDING.

lode, n. 1. MINERAL LODGE. 2. LADE.

lode claim. See MINING CLAIM.

lodemanage, n. Hist. The hiring of a pilot to guide a vessel. — Also termed loadmanage.

lodestar. 1. A guiding star; an inspiration or model. 2. A reasonable amount of attorney's fees in a given case, usu. calculated by multiplying a reasonable number of hours worked by the prevailing hourly rate in the community for similar work, and often considering such additional factors as the degree of skill and difficulty involved in the case, the degree of its urgency, its novelty, and the like. • Most statutes that authorize an award of attorney's fees use the lodestar method for computing the award.

lodger. 1. A person who rents and occupies a room in another's house. 2. A person who occupies a designated area in another's house but acquires no property interest in that area, which remains in the owner's legal possession.

logan. See LAGAN.

logbook. 1. A ship's or aircraft's journal containing an account of each trip, often with a history of events during the voyage. 2. Any journal or record of events.

logia (loj-ee-ə), n. [Latin] Hist. A small house or cottage.

logical-cause doctrine. The principle that, if the plaintiff proves that an injury occurred and proves a logical cause of it, a party desiring to defeat the claim cannot succeed merely by showing that there is another imaginable cause, but must also show that the alternative cause is more probable than the cause shown by the plaintiff.

logical interpretation. See INTERPRETATION.

logical positivism. A philosophical system or movement requiring that meaningful statements be in principle verifiable. Cf. LEGAL POSITIVISM.

logical-relationship standard. Civil procedure. A test applied to determine whether a defendant's counterclaim is compulsory, by examining whether both claims are based on the same operative facts or whether those facts activate additional rights, otherwise dormant, for the defendant. • One of the most important factors considered is whether hearing the claims together would promote judicial economy and efficiency. Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a).

"[U]nder the fourth test — frequently referred to as the 'logical relationship' standard — the principal consideration in determining whether a counterclaim is compulsory rests on the efficiency or economy of trying the counterclaim in the same litigation as the main claim. As a result, the convenience of the court, rather than solely the counterclaim's relationship to the facts or issues of the opposing claim, is controlling. The hallmark of this approach is flexibility. Although the fourth test has been criticized for being overly broad in scope and uncertain in application, it has by far the widest acceptance among the courts." Jack H. Friedenthal et al., Civil Procedure § 6.7, at 352 (2d ed. 1993).

logographus (log-ə-graf-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A bookkeeper or public clerk.

LOI. abbr. LETTER OF INTENT.

loitering, n. The criminal offense of remaining in a certain place (such as a public street) for no apparent reason. • Loitering statutes are generally held to be unconstitutionally vague. — loiter, vb. Cf. VAGRANCY.

lollipop syndrome. A situation in which one parent in a custody battle provides the child with fun, gifts, and good times, and leaves all matters of discipline to the other parent.

London commodity option. An agreement to buy or sell a futures contract for a commodity traded on the London markets, for a particular price and within a particular time.

London Lloyd's. See LLOYD'S OF LONDON.

Lone Pine order. A case-management order in a toxic-tort lawsuit involving many plaintiffs, establishing procedures and deadlines for discovery, including requiring the plaintiffs to timely produce evidence and expert opinions to substantiate each plaintiff's exposure to the hazardous substance, the injury suffered, and the cause of the injury. Lore v. Lone Pine Corp., No. L-33606-85 (N.J. Super. Ct. Nov. 18, 1986). • Although the Lone Pine opinion is unreported, it has become famous for the kind of case-management order involved, in part because the plaintiffs' claims were dismissed for failure to timely provide expert opinions.

long, adj. 1. Holding a security or commodity in anticipation of a rise in price . 2. Of or relating to a purchase of securities or commodities in anticipation of rising prices . Cf. SHORT.

long, adv. By a long purchase; into or in a long position <bought the wheat long>.

long account. See ACCOUNT.

long-arm, adj. Relating to or arising from a long-arm statute <long-arm jurisdiction>.

long-arm statute. A statute providing for jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant who has had contacts with the territory where the statute is in effect. • Most state long-arm statutes extend this jurisdiction to its constitutional limits. — Also termed single-act statute.

Long Parliament. Hist. 1. The English Parliament of Charles I meeting between 1640 and 1653, dissolved by Oliver Cromwell in 1653, then recalled and finally dissolved in 1660. 2. The English Parliament that met between 1661 and 1678, after the restoration of the monarchy. • This Parliament is sometimes called the “Long Parliament of Charles II” to distinguish it from that of sense 1.

long robe. Hist. The legal profession <gentlemen of the long robe>. See ROBE.

long-run incremental cost. Antitrust. A cost threshold for determining whether predatory pricing has occurred, consisting of all costs that, over a several-year period, would not be incurred if the product in question were not offered. • It differs from average variable cost because it includes some costs that do not vary in the short run but that do vary over a longer period, depending on whether a particular product is offered. — Abbr. LRIC. Cf. AVERAGE VARIABLE COST.

Longshore and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act. A federal law designed to provide workers' compensation benefits to persons, other than seamen, who work in maritime occupations, esp. stevedoring and ship service. 33 USCA § 901. — Abbr. LHWCA.

“Employees who are engaged in maritime-related activities but who do not qualify as ‘seamen’ may be classified as ‘maritime workers’ entitled to the benefits provided by the Longshore and Harbor Workers’ Compensation Act Persons covered by the act, which has the attributes of the usual workers’ compensation law, include (1) employees injured on the Outer Continental Shelf in the course of mineral exploration and production activities, and (2) employees within American territorial waters who fall within the Congressional definition of a ‘maritime worker,’ and who are injured on ‘navigable waters.’” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 44 (2d ed. 1988).

longshoreman. A maritime laborer, such as a stevedore, who works on the wharves in a port; a person who loads and unloads ships.

lookout, n. A careful, vigilant watching <the motorist’s statutory duty of proper lookout>.

look-through principle. A doctrine for allocating transfer-gains taxes on real estate by looking beyond the entity possessing legal title to identify the beneficial owners of the property.

loophole. An ambiguity, omission, or exception (as in a law or other legal document) that provides a way to avoid a rule without violating its literal requirements; esp., a tax-code provision that allows a taxpayer to legally avoid or reduce income taxes.

loose construction. See liberal construction under CONSTRUCTION.

looseleaf service. A type of lawbook having pages that are periodically replaced with updated pages, designed to cope with constant change and increasing bulk.

loquela (lə-kwee-lə), n. [Law Latin “talk”] Hist. 1. The oral discussions between the parties to a lawsuit leading to the issue, now called the pleadings. 2. Settlement discussions.

loquela sine die (lə-kwee-lə si-nee di-ee or sin-ay dee-ay), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Indefinite postponement of an action.

lord. 1. A title of honor or nobility belonging properly to a baron but applied also to anyone who attains the rank of a peer. — Abbr. L. 2. (cap. & pl.) HOUSE OF LORDS. 3. A property owner whose land is in a tenant’s possession; LANDLORD (1).

temporal lord (tem-pə-rəl). One of the English peers (other than ecclesiastical), who sit in Parliament.

Lord Advocate. Scots law. An important political functionary in Scottish affairs who acts as the principal Crown counsel in civil cases, the chief public prosecutor of crimes, and legal adviser to the government on matters of Scots law. — Formerly also termed King's advocate.

Lord Campbell's Act. 1. The 1846 English statute that created a wrongful-death claim for the relatives of a decedent when the decedent would have had a claim if he or she had been merely injured and not killed. • Technically known as the Fatal Accidents Act of 1846, this statute changed the earlier rule, under which a tortfeasor who would have been liable to another escaped liability if the victim died. Cf. WRONGFUL-DEATH ACTION.

"The common law not only denied a tort recovery for injury once the tort victim had died, it also refused to recognize any new and independent cause of action in the victim's dependents or heirs for their own loss at his death. . . . The result was that it was cheaper for the defendant to kill the plaintiff than to injure him, and that the most grievous of all injuries left the bereaved family of the victim, who frequently were destitute, without a remedy. Since this was intolerable, it was changed in England by the passage of the Fatal Accidents Act of 1846, otherwise known as Lord Campbell's Act, which has become a generic name for similar statutes." Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 127; at 945 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

2. An American state's wrongful-death statute patterned after the original English act.

Lord Chamberlain. The second officer of the royal household in England, who serves as a peer, a privy counselor, and a member of the ruling government. — Also termed lord chamberlain of the household.

Lord Chancellor. The highest judicial officer in England. • The Lord Chancellor sits as speaker of the House of Lords, is a member of the Cabinet, and presides at appellate judicial proceedings. — Also termed Lord High Chancellor; Keeper of the King's Conscience.

Lord Chief Justice of England. The chief judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. • The Lord Chief Justice also serves on the Court of Appeal, and ranks second only to the Lord Chancellor in the English judicial hierarchy. — Formerly termed Chief Justice of England. Cf. CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE COMMON PLEAS.

Lord Denman's Act. See DENMAN'S ACT.

Lord High Chancellor. See LORD CHANCELLOR.

Lord High Steward. Hist. The speaker pro tempore and presiding officer in the House of Lords during a criminal trial of a peer for a felony or for treason. • The privilege of peerage in criminal proceedings was abolished in 1948.

Lord High Treasurer. Hist. An officer in charge of the royal revenues and customs duties, and of leasing the Crown lands. • The functions of the Lord High Treasurer are now vested in the lords commissioners of the treasury.

lord in gross. Hist. A lord holding the title not by virtue of a manor; a lord without a manor.

Lord Justice Clerk. The second judicial officer in Scotland, with special responsibility for criminal law.

Lord Justice General. The highest judicial officer in Scotland, and head of the High Court of Justiciary. • The Lord Justice General also holds the office of Lord President of the Court of Session.

Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal. See LORD PRIVY SEAL.

Lord Langdale's Act. See WILLS ACT (2).

Lord Lieutenant. 1. An honorary officeholder who is the Queen's representative in a county and the principal military officer there, originally appointed to muster the inhabitants to defend the country. 2. Hist. The former viceroy of the Crown in Ireland.

Lord Lyndhurst's Act. See LYNDHURST'S ACT.

Lord Mansfield's rule. The principle that neither spouse may testify about whether the husband had access to the wife at the time of a child's conception. • In effect, this rule — which has been abandoned by many states — made it impossible to bastardize a child born during a marriage.

lord mayor. 1. Hist. The chief officer of the corporation of the city of London, so called because the fourth charter of Edward III conferred on that officer the honor of having maces carried before him by the sergeants. 2. The title of the principal magistrate of a city, the office of which has been conferred by letters patent.

lord mayor's court. See COURT.

Lord of Appeal. A member of the House of Lords, of whom at least three must be present for the hearing and determination of appeals; and including the Lord Chancellor, the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and the peers that have held high judicial offices, such as ex-chancellors and judges of the superior court in Great Britain and Ireland.

Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. A person appointed and salaried to aid the House of Lords in the hearing of appeals. • These lords rank as barons for life, and sit and vote in the House of Lords even after retirement.

Lord of Parliament. A member of the House of Lords.

Lord President. The highest judicial officer in Scotland, and head of the Court of Session. • The Lord President also holds the office of Lord Justice General of Scotland.

Lord Privy Seal (priv-ee). English law. An officer who has custody of the privy seal and who authenticates either a state document before it passes to receive the Great Seal or a document that does not require the Great Seal because of its minor importance. • The Lord Privy Seal has nominal official duties but is often made a member of the British cabinet. — Also termed Keeper of the Privy Seal; Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal; Privy Seal.

Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS.

lord temporal. A House of Lords member who is not an ecclesiastic.

Lord Tenterden's rule. See EJUSDEM GENERIS.

loser-pays rule. See ENGLISH RULE.

loss. 1. The failure to keep possession of something. 2. A decrease in value; the amount by which a thing's original cost exceeds its later selling price. 3. The amount of financial detriment caused by an insured person's death or an insured property's damage, for which the insurer becomes liable. 4. Tax. The excess of a property's adjusted value over the amount realized from its sale or other disposition. IRC (26 USCA) § 1001. — Also termed (in sense 4) realized loss.

actual loss. A loss resulting from the real and substantial destruction of insured property.

actual total loss. 1. See total loss. 2. Marine insurance. The total loss of a vessel covered by an insurance policy (1) by its real and substantive destruction, (2) by injuries that destroy its existence as a distinct individual of a particular class, (3) by its being reduced to a wreck irretrievably beyond repair, or (4) by its being placed beyond the insured's control and beyond the insured's power of recovery.

capital loss. The loss realized upon selling or exchanging a capital asset. Cf. CAPITAL GAIN.

casualty loss. For tax purposes, the total or partial destruction of an asset resulting from an unexpected or unusual event, such as an automobile accident or a tornado.

consequential loss. A loss arising from the results of damage rather than from the damage itself. • A consequential loss is proximate when the natural and probable effect of the wrongful conduct, under the circumstances, is to set in operation the intervening cause from which the loss directly results. When the loss is not the natural and probable effect of the wrongful conduct, the loss is remote. — Also termed indirect loss. Cf. direct loss.

constructive total loss. 1. Such serious damage to the insured property that the cost of repairs would exceed the value of the thing repaired. — Also termed constructive loss. 2. Marine underwriting. According to the traditional American rule, such serious damage to the insured property that the cost of repairs would exceed half the value of the thing repaired. See total loss.

direct loss. A loss that results immediately and proximately from an event. Cf. consequential loss.

disaster loss. A casualty loss sustained in a geographic area that the President designates as a disaster area. • It may be treated as having occurred during the previous tax year so that a victim may receive immediate tax benefits.

economic loss. See ECONOMIC LOSS.

extraordinary loss. A loss that is both unusual and infrequent, such as a loss resulting from a natural disaster.

general average loss. Marine underwriting. A loss at sea usu. incurred when cargo is thrown overboard to save the ship; a loss due to the voluntary and intentional sacrifice of part of a venture (usu. cargo) to save the rest of the venture from imminent peril. • Such a loss is borne equally by all the interests concerned in the venture. See AVERAGE (3).

hobby loss. A nondeductible loss arising from a personal hobby, as contrasted with an activity engaged in for profit. • The law generally presumes that an activity is engaged in for profit if profits are earned during at least three of the last five years. IRC (26 USCA) § 183.

indirect loss. See consequential loss.

long-term capital loss. A loss on a capital asset held for an extended period, usu. at least 12 months.

net loss. The excess of all expenses and losses over all revenues and gains.

net operating loss. The excess of operating expenses over revenues, the amount of which can be deducted from gross income if other deductions do not exceed gross income. — Abbr. NOL.

ordinary loss. Tax. A loss incurred from the sale or exchange of an item that is used in a trade or business. • The loss is deductible from ordinary income, and thus is more beneficial to the taxpayer than a capital loss.

out-of-pocket loss. The difference between the value of what the buyer paid and the market value of what was received in return. • In breach-of-contract cases, out-of-pocket loss is used to measure restitution damages.

paper loss. A loss that is realized only by selling something (such as a security) that has decreased in market value. — Also termed unrealized loss.

partial loss. A loss of part of the insured property; damage not amounting to a total loss. Cf. total loss.

particular average loss. Marine underwriting. A loss suffered by and borne alone by particular interests in a maritime venture. • Such a loss is usu. a partial loss.

passive loss. A loss, with limited tax deductibility, from an activity in which the taxpayer does not materially participate, from a rental activity, or from a tax-shelter activity.

pecuniary loss. A loss of money or of something having monetary value.

recognized loss. Tax. The portion of a loss that is subject to income taxation. IRC (26 USCA) § 1001(c).

salvage loss. 1. Generally, a loss that presumptively would have been a total loss if certain services had not been rendered. 2. Marine underwriting. The difference between the salvage value, less the salvage charges, and the original value of the insured property.

total loss. The complete destruction of insured property so that nothing of value remains and the subject matter no longer exists in its original form. • Generally, a loss is total if, after the damage occurs, no substantial remnant remains standing that a reasonably prudent uninsured owner, desiring to rebuild, would use as a basis to restore the property to its original condition. — Also termed actual total loss. Cf. partial loss; constructive total loss.

unrealized loss. See paper loss.

loss carryback. See CARRYBACK.

loss carryforward. See CARRYOVER.

loss carryover. See CARRYOVER.

loss insurance. See INSURANCE.

loss leader. A good or commodity sold at a very low price, usu. below cost, to attract customers to buy other items. — Sometimes shortened to leader. See BAIT AND SWITCH.

loss-of-bargain damages. See expectation damages under DAMAGES.

loss-of-bargain rule. The doctrine that damages for a breach of a contract should put the injured party in the position it would have been in if both parties had performed their contractual duties.

loss-of-chance doctrine. A rule in some states providing a claim against a doctor who has engaged in medical malpractice that, although it does not result in a particular injury, decreases or eliminates the chance of surviving or recovering from the preexisting condition for which the doctor was consulted. — Also termed lost-chance doctrine; increased-risk-of-harm doctrine.

loss of consortium (kən-sor-shee-əm). A loss of the benefits that one spouse is entitled to receive from the other, including companionship, cooperation, aid, affection, and sexual relations. • Loss of consortium can be recoverable as damages in a personal-injury or wrongful-death action.

loss-payable clause. An insurance-policy provision that authorizes the payment of proceeds to someone other than the named insured, esp. to someone who has a security interest in the insured property. • Typically, a loss-payable clause either designates the person as a beneficiary of the proceeds or assigns to the person a claim against the insurer, but the clause usu. does not treat the person as an additional insured. See MORTGAGE CLAUSE.

loss ratio. 1. Insurance. The ratio between premiums paid and losses incurred during a given period. 2. A bank's loan losses compared to its loan assets; a business's receivable losses compared to its receivables.

loss reserve. See RESERVE.

lost, adj. 1. (Of property) beyond the possession and custody of its owner and not locatable by diligent search <lost at sea> <lost papers>. 2. (Of a person) missing <lost child>.

lost-chance doctrine. 1. LOSS-OF-CHANCE DOCTRINE. 2. A rule permitting a claim, in limited circumstances, against someone who fails to come to the aid of a person who is in imminent danger of being injured or killed. Cf. GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE.

lost corner. See CORNER.

lost earning capacity. A person's diminished earning power resulting from an injury. • This impairment is recoverable as an element of damages in a tort action. Cf. lost earnings under EARNINGS.

"To some extent the phrases 'loss of earnings' and 'loss of earning capacity' are used interchangeably. But the preferred view is that they are different concepts. The former covers real loss which can be proved at the trial; the latter covers loss of the chances of getting equivalent work in the future." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 572 (17th ed. 1977).

lost earnings. See EARNINGS.

lost-expectation damages. See expectation damages under DAMAGES.

lost or not lost. Marine insurance. A policy provision fixing the effective date of the policy to a time preceding the policy date, even if the insured ship has already been lost when the policy is executed, as long as neither party then knows, or has means of knowing, that the ship has been lost.

lost profits. A measure of damages that allows a seller to collect the profit that would have been made on the sale if the buyer had not breached. UCC § 2-708(2).

lost property. See PROPERTY.

lost-volume seller. A seller of goods who, after a buyer has breached a sales contract, resells the goods to a different buyer who would have bought identical goods from the seller's inventory even if the original buyer had not breached. • Such a seller is entitled to lost profits, rather than contract price less market price, as damages from the original buyer's breach. UCC § 2-708(2).

lucrative title. See TITLE (2).

lucre (loo-kər), n. Monetary gain; profit.

lucri causa (loo-kri kaw-zə). [Latin] For the sake of gain. • Lucri causa was formerly an essential element of larceny, but today the thief's intent to deprive the possessor of property is generally sufficient. See LARCENY.

“‘Lucri causa’ literally means for the sake of gain. On rare occasions the suggestion has been made that no taking is with intent to steal unless the thief is motivated by some purpose of gain or advantage. Even those advancing this suggestion have not insisted upon an intent to gain a pecuniary advantage. An intent to take away property and destroy it for the purpose of destroying evidence has been held to be sufficient even by those who have been inclined to insist upon lucri causa as essential to an intent to steal. The generally accepted view does not include this element at all. It regards intent to deprive the owner of his property permanently, or an intent to deal with another's property unlawfully in such a manner as to create an obviously unreasonable risk of permanent deprivation, as all that is required to constitute the animus furandi — or intent to steal.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 332-33 (3d ed. 1982).

lucrum (loo-krəm), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. Gain; profit. 2. Hist. A small parcel of land.

the appointment or statutory grant of authority. 3. A judicial officer with strictly limited jurisdiction and authority, often on the local level and often restricted to criminal cases. Cf. JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. — magisterial (maj-ə-stir-ee-əl), adj.

committing magistrate. A judicial officer who conducts preliminary criminal hearings and may order that a defendant be released for lack of evidence, sent to jail to await trial, or released on bail. See examining court under COURT.

district-court magistrate. In some states, a quasi-judicial officer given the power to set bail, accept bond, accept guilty pleas, impose sentences for traffic violations and similar offenses, and conduct informal hearings on civil infractions.

investigating magistrate. A quasi-judicial officer responsible for examining and sometimes ruling on certain aspects of a criminal proceeding before it comes before a judge.

“The institution of the investigating magistrate is another measure for preserving the integrity of the law at the level of enforcement. In this case the measure is directed not toward curing the evils of a lax or sporadic enforcement, but toward the evils of an opposite nature, those resulting from an excess of zeal on the part of the prosecutor. Under the system in question, before a criminal charge may be brought before the regular courts it must be investigated by a special official and, in effect, certified as deserving trial in court. The investigating magistrate is thus a kind of quasi-judge standing halfway between the prosecutor and the regular court. The danger of the institution lies precisely in this twilight zone of function which it occupies. The certification of a case for trial inevitably tends to confirm the criminal charge against the suspect, thus creating what may amount in practice to a strong presumption of guilt. The element of prejudice involved constitutes a threat to the integrity of the trial in open court; the accused has, in effect, had a kind of half-trial in advance of the real trial, and this half-trial is conducted, not before but by a kind of half-judge who acts essentially as an inquisitorial court. In those countries where it is a part of the legal system, the role of the investigating magistrate continues to be a subject of some debate, and even where it is generally accepted, there is always some lingering concern lest it become the subject of inconspicuous abuse.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 38–39 (1968).

metropolitan stipendiary magistrate (stī-pen-dee-er-ee). English law. A stipendiary magistrate with jurisdiction in inner London areas. See stipendiary magistrate.

Magistrate Judge, U.S. See UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE.

magistrate's court. See COURT.

magistratic, adj. See MAGISTERIAL.

magistratus (maj-ə-stray-təs), n. [fr. Latin magister "a master"] Roman law. 1. A magistrate. 2. A magistrate's office.

"Magistratus. Denotes both the public office and the official himself. Magistracy was a Republican institution; under the Principate some magistratus continued to exist but with gradually diminishing importance; in the post-Diocletian Empire some former magistracies still exist but reduced nearly completely to an honorific title The most characteristic features of the Republican magistracy were the limited duration (one year) and collegiality since each magistracy was covered by at least two persons . . . with equal power Magistrates were elected by the people During his year of service a magistratus could not be removed. Misdemeanor in office could be prosecuted only after the term, hence the tenure of an office for two consecutive years was prohibited The tenure of a public office was considered an honor; for that reason the magistrates did not receive any compensation. Their political influence was, however, of greatest importance" Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 571-72 (1953).

magna assisa (mag-nə ə-si-zə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The grand assize. See grand assize under ASSIZE (5).

magna assisa eligenda (mag-nə ə-si-zə el-ə-jen-də). See DE MAGNA ASSISA ELIGENDA.

Magna Carta (mag-nə kahr-tə). [Latin "great charter"] The English charter that King John granted to the barons in 1215 and that Henry III and Edward I later confirmed. • It is generally regarded as one of the great common-law documents and as the foundation of constitutional liberties. The other three great charters of English liberty are the Petition of Right (3 Car. (1628)), the Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. 2 (1679)), and the Bill of Rights (1 Will. & M. (1689)). — Also spelled Magna Charta.

"The history of Magna Carta is the history not only of a document but also of an argument. The history of the document is a history of repeated re-interpretation. But the history of the argument is a history of a continuous element of political thinking. In this light there is no inherent reason why an assertion of law originally conceived in aristocratic interests should not be applied on a wider scale." J.C. Holt, Magna Carta 16 (1965).

magna centum (mag-nə sen-təm), n. [Law Latin "great hundred"] Six score, or 120.

magna culpa (mag-nə kəl-pə). [Latin "great fault"] Roman law. Gross fault. • This is sometimes equivalent to dolus. See DOLUS.

maihematus (may-hə-may-təs), p.pl. [Law Latin] Maimed; wounded.

mail, n. 1. One or more items that have been properly addressed, stamped with postage, and deposited for delivery in the postal system. 2. An official system for delivering such items; the postal system. 3. One or more written or oral messages sent electronically (e.g., through e-mail or voicemail).

certified mail. Mail for which the sender requests proof of delivery in the form of a receipt signed by the addressee. • The receipt registered mail. Mail that the U.S. Postal Service records at the time of mailing and at each point on its route so as to guarantee safe delivery.

(a green card, which is usu. referred to as such) must be signed before the mail will be delivered. — Also termed certified mail, return receipt requested.

mail, vb. 1. To deposit (a letter, package, etc.) with the U.S. Postal Service; to ensure that a letter, package, etc. is properly addressed, stamped, and placed into a receptacle for mail pickup. 2. To deliver (a letter, package, etc.) to a private courier service that undertakes delivery to a third person, often within a specified time.

mailable, adj. (Of a letter or package) lawful to send through a postal service.

mailbox rule. 1. Contracts. The principle that an acceptance becomes effective — and binds the offeror — once it has been properly mailed. ● The mailbox rule does not apply, however, if the offer provides that an acceptance is not effective until received. 2. The principle that when a pleading or other document is filed or served by mail, filing or service is deemed to have occurred on the date of mailing. ● The mailbox rule varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. For example, it sometimes applies only to certain types of filings, and it may apply when a party uses an overnight courier instead of U.S. mail.

mail cover. A process by which the U.S. Postal Service provides a government agency with information on the face of an envelope or package (such as a postmark) for the agency's use in locating a fugitive, identifying a coconspirator, or obtaining other evidence necessary to solve a crime.

mail fraud. See FRAUD.

mail-order divorce. See DIVORCE.

maim, n. Archaic. The type of injury required for the commission of mayhem; esp., serious injury to part of a person's body that is necessary for fighting. — Also termed maihem; maihemium. — maim, vb. See MAYHEM.

"Maihem or maim is where by the wrongful act of another any member is hurt or taken away, whereby the party is made unperfect to fight: as if a bone be taken out of the hand But the cutting of an ear or nose, or breaking of the hinder teeth, or such like, is no maihem, because it is rather a deformity of body than diminishing of strength; and that is commonly tried by the justices beholding the party. And if the justices stand in doubt whether the hurt be a maihem or not, they use and will of their own discretion take the help and opinion of some skilful chirurgeon, to consider thereof, before they determine upon the cause." Termes de la Ley 283-84 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

"'Maim' is the modern equivalent of the old word 'mayhem,' and some have long been inclined to abandon the earlier word entirely. There is a tendency, on the other hand, to retain 'mayhem' for the offense and to use 'maim' for the type of injury originally required for such a crime. This usage has a distinct advantage because statutory enlargements have included another type of injury within the scope of this offense, and today mayhem (the offense) may involve something other than maim (the injury)." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 239 (3d ed. 1982).

mainpernor (mayn-pər-nər), n. [Law French, fr. O.F. main "hand" + pernor "taker"] Hist. 1. A surety for a prisoner's appearance; one who gives mainprise for another.

"Mainpernors differ from bail, in that a man's bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are barely sureties for his appearance at the day: bail are only sureties, that the party be answerable for the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 128 (1768).

2. A form of bail taken under a writ of mainprise. — Also termed manucaptor (man-yoo-kap-tər). See MAINPRISE.

main pot. Tax. A step in evaluating tax liability in which qualified transactions are compared to determine whether a net gain or loss has occurred. IRC (26 USCA) § 1231. — Also termed big pot; hotchpot; hodgepochge. Cf. CASUALTY POT.

mainprise (mayn-prīz), n. [Law French, fr. Old French main "hand" + prise "taking"] Hist. 1. Delivery of a prisoner to the mainpernor. 2. A suretyship undertaking that makes the surety responsible for a prisoner's appearance in court on a specified date and time. 3. A writ ordering the sheriff to release a prisoner after taking security for the prisoner's appearance. — Also spelled mainprize. — Also termed writ of mainprise; manucaption (man-yoo-kap-shən). See DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO.

mainprise, vb. Hist. To release (a prisoner) on the surety of a mainpernor.

main-purpose rule. Contracts. The doctrine that if a promise to guarantee another's debt is made primarily for the promisor's own benefit, then the statute of frauds does not apply and the promise does not have to be in writing. — Also termed main-purpose doctrine; leading-object rule.

“Majestas . . . From being an attribute of the princeps, the word ‘majesty’ came to be an honorific title confined, at first, to the Roman emperors of the West but later extended to all kings. From the time of Henry II, it has been used in England, the full form being ‘Her Most Gracious Majesty’. The usual form is ‘Her Majesty’.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 798 (1980).

major, n. See ADULT.

major action. Environmental law. An undertaking that has had or will have a significant impact on the environment, for which an environmental-impact statement usu. must be filed under some state laws and under the National Environmental Policy Act. Cf. MAJOR-FEDERAL ACTION.

major-and-minor fault rule. See MAJOR-MINOR FAULT RULE.

major annus (may-jər an-əs). [Latin “the greater year”] A leap year, made up of 366 days.

majora regalia (mə-jor-ee ri-gay-lee-ə). See regalia majora under REGALIA.

major crime. See FELONY.

major disaster. A hurricane, tornado, storm, flood, earthquake, drought, fire, or other catastrophe that, when it occurs within the United States, the President determines to be a sufficiently severe threat to warrant disaster assistance by the federal government. • When the major dispute. See DISPUTE.

President declares a major disaster, the federal government supplements the efforts and available resources of states and local governments and relief organizations in alleviating the damage, loss, hardship, and suffering caused by the catastrophe. 40 CFR § 109.2.

majores (mə-jor-eez), n. [Latin “greater persons”] 1. Roman law. Ancestors; forebears. — Also spelled maiores. 2. Hist. Greater persons; persons of a higher status.

major federal action. Environmental law. An undertaking by a federal agency that will have a significant impact on the environment, such as constructing an aqueduct or dam, constructing a highway through wetlands, or adopting certain agency regulations. • Under the National Environmental Policy Act, a federal agency that plans to take a major federal action that may significantly affect the environment is required to prepare and file an environmental-impact statement, along with any public comments, with the Environmental Protection Agency. 40 CFR §§ 1506.9, 1508.18 majority. 1. The status of one who has attained the age of majority (usu. 18). See AGE OF MAJORITY. Cf. MINORITY (1). 2. A number that is more than half of a total; a group of more than 50 percent <the candidate received 50.4 percent of the votes — barely a majority>. Cf. PLURALITY; MINORITY (2).

absolute majority. A majority of all those who are entitled to vote in a particular election, whether or not they actually cast ballots. See QUORUM.

simple majority. A majority of those who actually vote in a particular election.

supermajority. A majority substantially greater than 50 percent. • Such a majority is needed for certain extraordinary actions, such as ratifying a constitutional amendment or approving a fundamental corporate change. — Also termed extraordinary majority.

majority-consent procedure. Corporations. A statutory provision allowing shareholders to avoid a shareholders’ meeting and to act instead by written consent of the holders of a majority of shares. • Delaware and a few other states have enacted such procedures.

majority-minority district. A voting district in which a racial or ethnic minority group makes

majority rule. 1. A political principle that a majority of a group has the power to make decisions that bind the group. • It is governance by the majority of those who actually participate, regardless of the number entitled to participate. 2. Corporations. The common-law principle that a director or officer owes no fiduciary duty to a shareholder with respect to a stock transaction. • This rule has been restricted by both federal insider-trading rules and state-law doctrine. Cf. SPECIAL-FACTS RULE.

majority voting. See VOTING.

major life activity. Any activity that an average person in the general population can perform with little or no difficulty, such as seeing, hearing, sleeping, eating, walking, traveling, and working. • A person who is substantially limited in a major life activity is protected from discrimination under a variety of disability laws, most significantly the Americans with Disabilities Act and the Rehabilitation Act. 42 USCA § 12102(2); 29 USCA § 705(9)(B). See AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT.

major-minor fault rule. Maritime law. The principle that if the fault of one vessel in a collision is uncontradicted and sufficient to account for the accident, then the other vessel is presumed not to have been at fault and therefore not to have contributed to the accident. — Also termed major-and-minor fault rule.

major trend. See TREND.

majus jus (may-jəs jəs). [Law Latin “a greater right”] Hist. A greater right. • This was a plea in a real action.

make, vb. 1. To cause (something) to exist <to make a record>. 2. To enact (something) <to make law>. 3. To acquire (something) <to make money on execution>. 4. To legally perform, as by executing, signing, or delivering (a document) <to make a contract>.

make law. 1. To legislate. 2. To issue a legal precedent, esp. a judicial decision, that establishes a new rule of law on a particular subject.

3. Hist. To deny a plaintiff's charge under oath, in open court, with compurgators.

maker. 1. One who frames, promulgates, or ordains (as in lawmaker). 2. A person who signs a promissory note. See NOTE (1). Cf. CO-MAKER. 3. DRAWER.

accommodation maker. One who signs a note as a surety. See ACCOMMODATION (2); accommodation indorser under INDORSER.

prime maker. The person who is primarily liable on a note or other negotiable instrument.

makeup gas. Oil & gas. Natural gas that has been paid for by the purchaser, usu. under a take-or-pay contract, but that is to be delivered in the years following payment. See take-or-pay contract under CONTRACT.

make-whole doctrine. Insurance. The principle that, unless the insurance policy provides otherwise, an insurer will not receive any of the proceeds from the settlement of a claim, except to the extent that the settlement funds exceed the amount necessary to fully compensate the insured for the loss suffered.

mal (mal), adj. [Law French “bad; wrong; against”] Bad; wrong. • In Law French, mal was a separable word, equivalent to the Latin male (“badly”). In its modern uses, mal- is a prefix in terms such as maladministration and malpractice.

mala antiqua (mal-ə an-ti-kwə). Old crimes; offenses that date back to antiquity.

maladministration. Poor management or regulation, esp. in an official capacity. — Also termed misadministration.

mala fides (mal-ə fi-deez), n. See BAD FAITH.

mala in se (mal-ə in say or see). See MALUM IN SE.

malandrinus (mal-ən-dri-nəs), n. [Law Latin “brigand”] Hist. A thief; a pirate.

malapportionment, n. The improper or unconstitutional apportionment of a legislative district. — malapportion, vb. See APPORTIONMENT; GERRYMANDERING.

mala praxis (mal-ə prak-sis). [Law Latin] Hist. Malpractice; unskilled treatment, esp. by a doctor.

"Injuries, affecting a man's health, are where by any unwholesome practices of another a man sustains any apparent damage in his vigor or constitution. As by selling him bad provisions or wine . . . or by the neglect or unskilful management of his physician, surgeon, or apothecary. For it hath been solemnly resolved . . . that mala praxis is a great misdemeanor and offence at common law, whether it be for curiosity and experiment, or by neglect; because it breaks the trust which the party had placed in his physician, and tends to the patient's destruction." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 122 (1768).

malconduct in office. See official misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

male creditus (mal-ee kred-ə-təs). [Law Latin] Hist. (Of a person) in bad repute; untrusted.

malefactor (mal-ə-fak-tər), n. [Latin] Hist. A wrongdoer; a criminal.

maleficium (mal-ə-fish-ee-əm), n. [Latin "a misdeed"] Roman law. See MALEFACTION.

malesworn (mayl-sworn), p.pl. Forsworn. — Also spelled malsworn.

malfeasance (mal-fee-zənts), n. A wrongful or unlawful act; esp., wrongdoing or misconduct by a public official; MISFEASANCE IN PUBLIC OFFICE. — malfeasant (mal-fee-zənt), adj. — malfeasor (mal-fee-zər), n. Cf. MISFEASANCE; NONFEASANCE.

malfunction theory. Products-liability law. A principle permitting a products-liability plaintiff to prove that a product was defective by proving that the product malfunctioned, instead of requiring the plaintiff to prove a specific defect. ● A plaintiff relying on the malfunction theory usu. must also prove that the product was not misused, and must disprove all reasonable explanations for the occurrence other than a defect.

mal gree (mal gree). [Law French "against the will"] Hist. Against the will; without consent.

malice, n. 1. The intent, without justification or excuse, to commit a wrongful act. 2. Reckless disregard of the law or of a person's legal rights. 3. Ill will; wickedness of heart. ● This sense is most typical in nonlegal contexts. — malicious, *adj.

"Malice means in law wrongful intention. It includes any intent which the law deems wrongful, and which therefore serves as a ground of liability. Any act done with such an intent is, in the language of the law, malicious, and this legal usage has etymology in its favour. The Latin malitia means badness, physical or moral — wickedness in disposition or in conduct — not specifically or exclusively ill-will or malevolence; hence the malice of English law, including all forms of evil purpose, design, intent, or motive. [But] intent is of two kinds, being either immediate or ulterior, the ulterior intent being commonly distinguished as the motive. The term malice is applied in law to both these forms of intent, and the result is a somewhat puzzling ambiguity which requires careful notice. When we say that an act is done maliciously, we mean one of two distinct things. We mean either that it is done intentionally, or that it is done with some wrongful motive." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 384 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"[M]alice in the legal sense imports (1) the absence of all elements of justification, excuse or recognized mitigation, and (2) the presence of either (a) an actual intent to cause the particular harm which is produced or harm of the same general nature, or (b) the wanton and wilful doing of an act with awareness of a plain and strong likelihood that such harm may result. . . . The Model Penal Code does not use 'malice' because those who formulated the Code had a blind prejudice against the word. This is very regrettable because it represents a useful concept despite some unfortunate language employed at times in the effort to express it." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 860 (3d ed. 1982).

actual malice. 1. The deliberate intent to commit an injury, as evidenced by external circumstances. — Also termed express malice; malice in fact. Cf. implied malice. 2. Defamation. Knowledge (by the person who utters or publishes a defamatory statement) that a statement is false, or reckless disregard about whether the statement is true. ● To recover for defamation, a plaintiff who is a public official or public figure must overcome the defendant's qualified privilege by proving the defendant's actual malice. And for certain other types of claims, a plaintiff must prove actual malice to recover presumed or punitive damages. — Also termed New York Times malice; constitutional malice.

constructive malice. See implied malice.

express malice. 1. Criminal law. The intent to kill or seriously injure arising from a deliberate, rational mind. 2. See actual malice (1). 3. Defamation. The bad-faith publication of defamatory material.

implied malice. Malice inferred from a person's conduct. — Also termed constructive malice; legal malice; malice in law. Cf. actual malice (1).

malice in fact. See actual malice.

particular malice. Malice that is directed at a particular person. — Also termed special malice.

transferred malice. Malice directed to one person or object but instead harming another in the way intended for the first.

"[I]f A shoots at B intending to kill him, but the shot actually kills C, this is held to be murder of C. So also if A throws a stone at one window and breaks another, it is held to be malicious damage to the window actually broken. This doctrine, which is known as the doctrine of transferred malice, applies only where the harm intended and the harm done are of the same kind. If A throws a stone at a human being and unintentionally breaks a window, he cannot be convicted of malicious damage to the window." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 382 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

universal malice. The state of mind of a person who determines to take a life on slight provocation, without knowing or caring who may be the victim.

malice aforethought. The requisite mental state for common-law murder, encompassing any one of the following: (1) the intent to kill, (2) the intent to inflict grievous bodily harm, (3) extremely reckless indifference to the value of human life (the so-called "abandoned and malignant heart"), or (4) the intent to commit a felony (which leads to culpability under the felony-murder rule). — Also termed premeditated malice; preconceived malice; malice prepense; malitia praecogitata.

"Malice aforethought is the term which came into use during medieval times to indicate the mental element necessary in the felony of murder. It has been the subject of voluminous jurisprudential enquiry . . ." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 27 (16th ed. 1952).

"Every intentional killing is with malice aforethought unless under circumstances sufficient to constitute (1) justification, (2) excuse, or (3) mitigation." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 58 (3d ed. 1982).

malice exception. A limitation on a public official's qualified immunity, by which the official can face civil liability for willfully exercising discretion in a way that violates a known or well-established right. See qualified immunity under IMMUNITY (1).

malice in fact. See actual malice (1) under MALICE.

malice in law. See implied malice under MALICE.

malice prepense. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

malicious, adj. 1. Substantially certain to cause injury. 2. Without just cause or excuse.

malicious abandonment. See ABANDONMENT.

malicious abuse of legal process. See ABUSE OF PROCESS.

malicious abuse of process. See ABUSE OF PROCESS.

malicious accusation. See ACCUSATION.

malicious act. An intentional, wrongful act performed against another without legal justification or excuse.

malicious arrest. See ARREST.

malicious assault with a deadly weapon. See ASSAULT.

malicious bankruptcy. An abuse of process by which a person wrongfully petitions to have another person adjudicated a bankrupt or to have a company wound up as insolvent.

malicious damage. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

malicious execution. See EXECUTION.

malicious injury. See INJURY.

malicious killing. An intentional killing without legal justification or excuse.

maliciously damaging the property of another. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

malicious mischief. The common-law misdemeanor of intentionally destroying or damaging another's property. • Although modern statutes predominantly make this offense a misdemeanor, a few make it a felony (depending on the nature of the property or its value). — Also termed malicious mischief and trespass; malicious injury; malicious trespass; malicious damage; maliciously damaging the property of another; (in the Model Penal Code) criminal mischief.

malicious prosecution. 1. The institution of a criminal or civil proceeding for an improper purpose and without probable cause. 2. The cause of action resulting from the institution of such a proceeding. • Once a wrongful prosecution has ended in the defendant's favor, he or she may sue for tort damages. — Also termed (in the context of civil proceedings) malicious use of process. Cf. ABUSE OF PROCESS; VEXATIOUS SUIT.

"The distinction between an action for malicious prosecution and an action for abuse of process is that a malicious prosecution consists in maliciously causing process to be issued, whereas an abuse of process is the employment of legal process for some purpose other than that which it was intended by the law to effect — the improper use of a regularly issued process. For instance, the initiation of vexatious civil proceedings known to be groundless is not abuse of process, but is governed by substantially the same rules as the malicious prosecution of criminal proceedings." 52 Am. Jur. 2d Malicious Prosecution § 2, at 187 (1970).

malicious trespass. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

malicious use of process. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

malignare (mal-əg-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. 1. To malign; to slander. 2. To maim.

malinger, vb. To feign illness or disability, esp. in an attempt to avoid an obligation or to continue receiving disability benefits.

malison (mal-ə-zən or -sən). [fr. Latin malum "evil" + sonus "a sound"] Hist. A curse. — Also spelled maleson.

malitia (mə-lish-ee-ə). [Latin "malice"] Hist. An actual evil design; express malice. • Malitia originally signified general wrongdoing, and did not describe a wrongdoer's state of mind; malitia praecogitata, for example, indicated only the seriousness of the offense, though it was eventually rendered malice aforethought.

malitia praecogitata (pree-køj-ə-tay-tə). See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. — Also termed malitia excogitata (eks-køj-ə-tay-tə).

"[T]he word felony is often coupled with what will in the future be another troublesome term of art, to wit, malice aforethought or malice prepense (malitia excogitata, praecogitata)... When it first came into use, it hardly signified a state of mind; some qualifying adjective such as praemeditata or excogitata was needed if much note was to be taken of intention or of any other psychical fact. When we first meet with malice prepense it seems to mean little more than intentional wrong-doing; but the somewhat weighty adjectives which are coupled with malitia in its commonest context — adjectives such as excogitata — are, if we mistake not, traces of the time when forsteal, guetapens, waylaying, the setting of ambush, was (what few crimes were) a specially reserved plea of the crown to be emended, if indeed it was emendable, by a heavy wite." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 468–69 (2d ed. 1899).

malleable, adj. 1. (Of an object) capable of extension by hammering <the metal was malleable>. 2. (Of a person) capable of being influenced <the young student was malleable>.

Malleus Maleficarum (mal-ee-əs mal-ə-fi-kair-əm). [Latin "Hammer of Witches"] Hist. An encyclopedic work of demonology and witchcraft, prepared in 1486 by two Dominican friars (Heinrich Kraemer and Johann Sprenger) as part of their efforts to eradicate witchcraft in Germany. • The Malleus Maleficarum was based largely on folk-beliefs, but it was relied on as an authoritative source on how to detect, extract confessions from, and prosecute witches for several centuries after it first appeared.

Mallory rule. See MCNABB-MALLORY RULE.

mallum (mal-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A superior court; a high court that handles important business. 2. A public national assembly.

malo animo (mal-oh an-ə-moh), adv. [Latin] With evil intent; with malice.

malo grato (mal-oh gray-toh), adv. [Latin] Unwillingly.

Maloney Act. A 1938 amendment to the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, providing for broker registration in over-the-counter markets.

malpractice (mal-prak-tis). An instance of negligence or incompetence on the part of a professional. • To succeed in a malpractice claim, a plaintiff must also prove proximate cause and damages. — Also termed professional negligence.

legal malpractice. A lawyer's failure to render professional services with the skill, prudence, and diligence that an ordinary and reasonable lawyer would use under similar circumstances. — Also termed attorney malpractice.

medical malpractice. A doctor's failure to exercise the degree of care and skill that a physician or surgeon of the same medical specialty would use under similar circumstances. — Often shortened to med. mal.

malpractice insurance. See INSURANCE.

maltreatment. Bad treatment (esp. improper treatment by a surgeon) resulting from ignorance, neglect, or willfulness. See MALPRACTICE.

malum (mal-əm also may-ləm), n. [Latin] Something bad or evil. Pl. mala.

malum in se (mal-əm in say or see), n. [Latin "evil in itself"] A crime or an act that is inherently immoral, such as murder, arson, or rape. — Also termed malum per se. Pl. mala in se. — malum in se, adj. Cf. MALUM PROHIBITUM.

"The basis for the distinction between mala in se and mala prohibita, between what one might call a crime and an offence — or between what one might call a felony and a misdemeanour, if one could modernize those terms so that the latter was given its natural meaning — is that crime means to the ordinary man something that is sinful or immoral, and an offence at worst a piece of misbehaviour." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 33 (1968).

malum prohibitum (mal-əm proh-hib-i-təm), n. [Latin "prohibited evil"] An act that is a crime merely because it is prohibited by statute, although the act itself is not necessarily immoral. • Misdemeanors such as jaywalking and running a stoplight are mala prohibita, as are many regulatory violations. Pl. mala prohibita. — malum prohibitum, adj. Cf. MALUM IN SE.

"Much of the criminal law that is regulatory in character — the part of it that deals with malum prohibitum rather than malum in se — is based upon the ... principle ... that the choice of the individual must give way to the convenience of the many." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 16 (1968).

"As customarily used these phrases are mutually exclusive. An offense malum prohibitum is not a wrong which is prohibited, but something which is wrong only in the sense that it is against the law. This is emphasized at times by such phrases as 'malum prohibitum only' or 'but malum prohibitum,' although it is understood without any such qualification. A failure to understand this usage of the terms has led some to assume that all statutory additions to the common law of crimes are mala prohibita. One writer emphasized his confusion by speaking of embezzlement as malum prohibitum. This assumption is utterly without foundation. An act may be malum in se although no punishment is provided by law. If this defect is corrected by appropriate legislation, what previously was malum in se does not cease to be so by reason of having been defined and made punishable by law." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 884–85 (3d ed. 1982).

malveilles (mal-vay also mal-vayls), n. [French "misdemeanors"] Hist. 1. Ill will. 2. Crimes; misdemeanors; malicious acts.

malveis procurors (mal-vay prə-kyoor-ərz). [Law French "defective procurers"] Hist. Persons who pack juries, as by nomination or other practice.

malversation (mal-vər-say-shən), n. [French "ill behavior"] Official corruption; a misbehavior, esp. by someone exercising an office.

man. 1. An adult male. 2. Humankind. — Also termed mankind. 3. A human being. 4. Hist. A vassal; a feudal tenant.

manacle (man-ə-kəl). A shackle; a handcuff.

managed care. A system of comprehensive healthcare provided by a health-maintenance organization, a preferred-provider organization, or a similar group.

management. The people in a company who are responsible for its operation.

middle management. People who manage operations within a company and execute top management's directives.

top management. The highest level of a company's management, at which major policy decisions and long-term business plans are made. — Also termed upper management.

management fee. See FEE (1).

manager. 1. A person who administers or supervises the affairs of a business, office, or other organization.

general manager. A manager who has overall control of a business, office, or other organization, including authority over other managers. • A general manager is usu. equivalent to a president or chief executive officer of a corporation.

2. A legislator appointed by either legislative house to serve on a conference committee, esp. a joint committee that tries to reconcile differences in a bill passed by both houses in different versions. — Also termed conferee; manager of a conference. 3. A representative appointed by the House of Representatives to prosecute an impeachment before the Senate.

manager of a conference. See MANAGER (2).

managing agent. See AGENT.

managing conservator. See CONSERVATOR.

managing conservatorship. See CUSTODY (2).

managium (mə-nay-jee-əm), n. [Law Latin fr. Law French manage "a dwelling"] Hist. A dwelling; a mansion house. — Also termed mensa (men-sə).

Manahan-type carried interest. Oil & gas. A transaction in which the owner of a lease assigns all the working interest to someone else — who takes on specified costs of drilling and development — and the assignor retains a reversionary interest in part of the working interest, which reverts to the assignor once the assignee has recovered the specified costs during the payout period. Manahan Oil Co. v. Commissioner, 8 T.C. 1159 (1947).

manceps (man-seps), n. [Latin "an agent"] 1. Roman law. A purchaser of something at a state auction, esp. a right or advantage, as in the right to farm taxes. 2. Roman law. A state postmaster.

"Manceps. One who at a public auction, conducted by a magistrate, through the highest bid obtained the right to collect taxes (a tax farmer) or custom duties, the lease of public land (ager publicus) or other advantages (a monopoly). — In postal organization manceps was a post-station master." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 573 (1953).

3. A person who undertakes to perform a task and gives security for the performance.

manche-present (mah-nsh-pray-zon). [Law French "a gift from the giver's sleeve"] A bribe.

mancipare (man-sə-pair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin manus "hand" + capere "to take"] Roman law. 1. To alienate (a thing) by real or fictitious sale. 2. To sell (a person), esp. fictitiously as part of the emancipation process. See MANCIPATION.

mancipatio (man-sə-pay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] See MANCIPATION.

mancipation. [fr. Latin mancipatio "hand-grasp"] 1. Roman law. A legal formality for acquiring property by either an actual or a simulated purchase. • The formality consisted in laying hold of a thing and asserting title to it before five witnesses, followed by weighing the real or pretended purchase money on scales. This form of sale was abolished by Justinian.

"Mancipatio is the solemn sale per aes et libram. In the presence of five witnesses (cives Romani puberes) a skilled weighmaster (libripens) weighs out to the vendor a certain amount of uncoined copper (aes, raudus, raudusculum) which is the purchase-money, and the purchaser, with solemn words, takes possession with his hand — hence the description of the act as 'hand-grasp' — of the thing purchased as being his property." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 48 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

2. A similar form used for making a will, adoption, emancipation of slaves, etc. — Also termed mancipatio. Cf. EMANCIPATION.

mancipi res (man-sə-pi reez). See RES MANCIPI.

mancipium (man-sip-ee-əm), n. [Latin "a slave"] Roman law. 1. A slave, esp. by virtue of being captured by an enemy in war. 2. A temporary quasi-slave status often occurring in an emancipation, as when a son is emancipated from his father. See MANCIPATION.

M & A. abbr. Mergers and acquisitions. See MERGER.

mandamus (man-day-məs), n. [Latin "we command"] A writ issued by a superior court to compel a lower court or a government officer to perform mandatory or purely ministerial duties correctly. — Also termed writ of mandamus. Pl. mandamuses. — mandamus, vb.

alternative mandamus. A mandamus issued upon the first application for relief, commanding the defendant either to perform the act demanded or to appear before the court at a specified time to show cause for not performing it.

peremptory mandamus. An absolute and unqualified command to the defendant to do the act in question. • It is issued when the defendant defaults on, or fails to show sufficient cause in answer to, an alternative mandamus.

mandans (man-danz), Roman law. The principal for whom an agent deals with third parties. See MANDATOR.

mandant (man-dənt), n. [French] French & Scots law. A principal in a contract of mandate, such as a bailor in a bailment. See MANDATOR.

mandatary (man-də-ter-ee), n. 1. A person to whom a mandate is given. See MANDATE (5). 2. An agent, esp. one who acts gratuitously but is entitled to be indemnified for expenses incurred in carrying out the mandate. — Also termed (in Roman law) mandatarius. — mandatary, adj.

mandate, n. 1. An order from an appellate court directing a lower court to take a specified action. 2. A judicial command directed to an officer of the court to enforce a court order. 3. In politics, the electorate's overwhelming show of approval for a given political platform. 4.

Civil law. A written command given by a principal to an agent. 5. Civil law. A commission or contract by which one person (the mandator) requests someone (the mandatary) to perform some service gratuitously, the commission becoming effective when the mandatary agrees. • In this type of contract, no liability is created until the service requested has begun. The mandatary is bound to use reasonable care in performance, while the mandator is bound to indemnify against loss incurred in performing the service. — Also termed mandatum. 6. Int'l law. An authority given by the League of Nations and, later, the United Nations to certain governments to take over the administration and development of certain territories. Cf. TRUSTESHIP (2). — mandate, vb. — mandatory, adj.

mandate rule. The doctrine that, after an appellate court has remanded a case to a lower court, the lower court must follow the decision that the appellate court has made in the case, unless new evidence or an intervening change in the law dictates a different result.

mandator (man-day-tər or man-day-tər). 1. A person who delegates the performance of a mandate to another. 2. Civil law. The person who employs another (called a mandatary or mandatarius) in a gratuitous agency. — Also termed mandant. 3. BAILOR (1).

mandatory, adj. Of, relating to, or constituting a command; required; preemptory.

mandatory injunction. See INJUNCTION.

mandatory instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

mandatory joinder. See compulsory joinder under JOINDER.

mandatory penalty. See mandatory sentence under SENTENCE.

mandatory presumption. See conclusive presumption under PRESUMPTION.

mandatory punishment. See mandatory sentence under SENTENCE.

mandatory sentence. See SENTENCE.

mandatory statute. See STATUTE.

mandatory subject of bargaining. Labor law. A topic that is required by the National Labor Relations Act to be discussed in good faith by the parties during labor negotiations; an essential employment matter, including wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, about which management and the union are required to negotiate in good faith, and that can lawfully form the basis of a collective-bargaining impasse. 29 USCA § 158(d). — Often shortened to mandatory subject. Cf. PERMISSIVE SUBJECT OF BARGAINING.

mandatum (man-day-təm). A bailment in which the bailee will, without recompense, perform some service relating to the goods; MANDATE (5). • This type of bailment is for the sole benefit of the bailor.

mandavi ballivo (man-day-vī bə-lī-voh). [Law Latin “I have commanded the bailiff”] Hist. A sheriff’s return stating that the sheriff ordered a bailiff to execute a writ.

man-endangering state of mind. See PERSON-ENDANGERING STATE OF MIND.

manerium (mə-neer-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin, fr. Latin manere “to remain”] Hist. A manor.

“The term manerium seems to have come in with the Conqueror, though other derivatives from the Latin verb manere, in particular mansa, mansio, mansiuncula had been freely employed by the scribes of the land-books. But these had as a rule been used as representatives of the English hide, and just for this reason they were incapable of expressing the notion that the Normans desired to express by the word manerium. In its origin that word is but one more name for a house. Throughout the Exeter Domesday the word mansio is used instead of the manerium of the Exchequer record, and even in the Exchequer record we may find these two terms used interchangeably . . .” Frederic W. Maitland, Domesday Book and Beyond 108–09 (1921).

mangonare (mang-gə-nair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin mango “a dealer”] To buy in a market; to deal.

manhood. 1. A male person’s majority. 2. Hist. A ceremony of a vassal paying homage to the vassal’s lord. — Also termed homagium.

“Besides an oath of fealty, or profession of faith to the lord, which was the parent of our oath of allegiance, the vassal or tenant upon investiture did usually homage to his lord; openly and humbly kneeling, being ungirt, uncovered, and holding up his hands both together between those of the lord, who sate before him; and there professing that ‘he did become his man, from that day forth, of life and limb and earthly honour:’ and then he received a kiss from his lord. Which ceremony was denominated homagium, or manhood, by the feudists.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 53 (1766).

manifest, n. A document listing the cargo or passengers carried on a ship, airplane, or other vehicle.

manifestation of intention. Wills & estates. The external expression of the testator’s intention, as distinguished from an undisclosed intention. — Also termed manifestation of intent.

manifestation theory. Insurance. The doctrine that coverage for an injury or disease falls to the policy in effect when the symptoms of the covered injury or disease first appear. Cf. EXPOSURE THEORY; ACTUAL-INJURY TRIGGER; TRIPLE TRIGGER.

manifest-error-or-clearly-wrong rule. In some jurisdictions, the doctrine that an appellate court cannot set aside a trial court’s finding of fact unless a review of the entire record reveals that the finding has no reasonable basis.

manifest injustice. An error in the trial court that is direct, obvious, and observable, such as a defendant’s guilty plea that is involuntary or that is based on a plea agreement that the prosecution rescinds.

manifest intent. See INTENT (1).

manifest necessity. Criminal procedure. A sudden and overwhelming emergency, beyond the court's and parties' control, that makes conducting a trial or reaching a fair result impossible and that therefore authorizes the granting of a mistrial. • The standard of manifest necessity must be met to preclude a defendant from successfully raising a plea of former jeopardy after a mistrial.

manifesto. A written statement publicly declaring the issuer's principles, policies, or intentions; esp., a formal document explaining why a state or nation declared war or took some other significant international action.

manifest weight of the evidence. A deferential standard of review under which a verdict will be reversed or disregarded only if another outcome is obviously correct and the verdict is clearly unsupported by the evidence. Cf. WEIGHT OF THE EVIDENCE.

manipulation. Securities. The illegal practice of raising or lowering a security's price by creating the appearance of active trading. • Manipulation is prohibited by section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. 15 USCA § 78j(b). — Also termed market manipulation; stock manipulation.

mankind. See MAN (2).

Mann Act. A federal law, enacted originally in 1948, that criminalizes the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce for prostitution or similar sexual activities. 18 USCA § 2421. — Also termed White Slave Traffic Act.

manner and form. See modo et forma.

mannire (mə-ni-ree), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To summon (an adverse party) to court; to prosecute (a case).

mannopus (man-oh-pəs). [fr. Latin manus "hand" + opus "work"] Hist. 1. Manual labor. 2. A day's work. 3. MAINOUR.

manor. 1. A feudal estate, usu. granted by the king to a lord or other high person and cultivated as a unit. • In more ancient times, the lord's manor included a village community, usu. comprised of serfs.

"[T]o ask for a definition of a manor is to ask for what can not be given. We may however draw a picture of a typical manor, and, this done, we may discuss the deviations from this type [W]e may regard the typical manor (1) as being, qua vill, a unit of public law, of police and fiscal law, (2) as being a unit in the system of agriculture, (3) as being a unit in the management of property, (4) as being a jurisdictional unit. But we . . . see that hardly one of these traits can be considered as absolutely essential. The most important is the connection between the manor and the vill . . ." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 596-97 (2d ed. 1898).

"The term [manor] applied, after the Norman conquest, to estates organized under knights, ecclesiastical corporations, or otherwise, and managed and cultivated as units. By the end of the 11th century, the main element was the feudal lord, and soon he came to be regarded as the owner of the manor, and to have authority over the tenants, and the right to hold a court for them In the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, a manor also implied a right of jurisdiction exercised through a court baron, attended by both freeholders and villein tenants In the eighteenth century the manorial court decayed rapidly, cases being generally brought in the King's courts, the only surviving business being copyhold conveyancing." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 803 (1980).

reputed manor. A manor in which the demesne lands and services become absolutely separated. • The manor is no longer a manor in actuality, only in reputation. — Also termed seigniori in gross.

2. A jurisdictional right over tenants of an estate, usu. exercised through a court baron. 3. Hist. In the United States, a tract of land occupied by tenants who pay rent to a proprietor. 4. A mansion on an estate.

manorial extent. Hist. A survey of a manor by a jury of tenants, giving the numbers and names of tenants, the size of their holdings, the kind of tenure, and the kind and amount of the tenants' services.

manorial system. The medieval system of land ownership in which serfs and some freemen cultivated the soil of a manor in return for a lord's protection. See MANOR.

manse (mans), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A portion of land large enough to maintain one family; a sufficient amount of land to be worked by a yoke of oxen for a year. 2. A house without land; MESSUAGE. 3. In Scotland, a clergyman's dwelling. — Also termed mansus.

manser (man-sər), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A bastard.

Mansfield rule. The doctrine that a juror's testimony or affidavit about juror misconduct may not be used to challenge the verdict. • This Mansfield rule is intended to ensure that jurors are heard through their verdict, not through their postverdict testimony. In practice, the rule lessens the possibility that losing parties will seek to penetrate the secrets of the jury room. The rule was first announced in Vaise v. Delaval, 99 Eng. Rep. 944 (K.B. 1785), in an opinion by William Murray, first Earl of Mansfield, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench.

mansio (man-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. An inn. 2. A house.

mansion-house. 1. Hist. The residence of the lord of a manor. 2. DWELLING-HOUSE.

mansion-house rule. The doctrine that a tract of land lying in two counties will be assessed, for property-tax purposes, in the county in which the house is located.

manslaughter, n. The unlawful killing of a human being without malice aforethought. — manslaughter, vb. Cf. MURDER.

involuntary manslaughter. Homicide in which there is no intention to kill or do grievous bodily harm, but that is committed with criminal negligence or during the commission of a crime not included within the felony-murder rule. — Also termed negligent manslaughter. Cf. ACCIDENTAL KILLING.

"Involuntary manslaughter is a 'catch-all' concept. It includes all manslaughter not characterized as voluntary." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 104 (3d ed. 1982).

"The only differences between the legal use and the everyday use of 'voluntary,' 'not voluntary,' and 'involuntary' seem to be (a) a more frequent use of 'involuntary' as a synonym of 'not voluntary' and (b) a technical use of 'involuntary' in the crime of 'involuntary manslaughter,' where it seems to have the meaning of 'unintentional.' Thus, as contrasted with 'voluntary manslaughter,' there is no suggestion that death, as contrasted with harm, was intended or foreseen. Though it is often confined to cases of assault and battery where death results, for example either from the withholding of food or from excessive chastisement of a child, some jurists say that it can be due to any unlawful and dangerous action causing death." Alan R. White, Grounds of Liability 61-62 (1985).

voluntary manslaughter. An act of murder reduced to manslaughter because of extenuating circumstances such as adequate provocation (arousing the "heat of passion") or diminished capacity. — Also termed intentional manslaughter.

manstealing. See KIDNAPPING.

mansuetae naturae (man-swee-tee nə-tyoor-ee). [Latin "of a tamable nature"] Civil law. 1. adj. (Of animals) tame or tamable. 2. n. Tame animals; animals accustomed to come to the hand.

mansuetus (man-swee-təs), adj. [Latin] Roman law. Tame; tamed.

mansus. See MANSE.

manticulate (man-tik-yə-layt), vb. To pick pockets.

mantle children. Hist. Children born out of wedlock and later legitimized when their parents married, by standing under a cloak with the parents during the marriage ceremony.

"Our law . . . has no need to distinguish between various sorts of illegitimate children. A child is either a legitimate child or a bastard In the sharp controversy over this principle . . . the champion of what we may call the high-church party alleged that old English custom was in accord with the law of the church as defined by Alexander III. Probably there was some truth in this assertion. It is not unlikely that old custom, though it would not have held that the marriage in itself had any retroactive effect, allowed the parents on the occasion of their marriage to legitimate the already existing offspring of their union. The children were placed under the cloak which was spread over their parents during the marriage ceremony, and became 'mantle children.' We hear of this practice in Germany and France and Normandy; but we have here rather an act of adoption than a true legitimation . . . and it would not have fully satisfied the church." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 397-98 (2d ed. 1899).

manual, adj. Used or performed by hand <manual labor>.

manual delivery. Delivery of personal property by actual and corporeal change in possession.

Manual for Courts-Martial. A manual that implements the Uniform Code of Military Justice. • It was adopted in 1969 by presidential executive order.

manual gift. See GIFT.

manualis obedientia (man-yoo-ay-lis ə-bee-dee-en-shee-ə). [Latin "obedience by (taking or kissing) hand"] Sworn obedience upon an oath.

manual labor. Work performed chiefly through muscular exertion, with or without tools or machinery.

Manual of the Judge Advocate General. The Secretary of the Navy's directive on military justice, with minor variations between rules applicable to the Navy and those applicable to the Marine Corps. — Also termed JAG Manual.

manual-rating insurance. See INSURANCE.

manu brevis (man-yoo bree-vi). [Latin "with a short hand"] Roman & civil law. Directly; by the shortest route. • This described the transfer of ownership to a person already in physical possession. Cf. MANU LONGA.

manu captio (man-yə-kap-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. Surety; security; bail. 2. A writ allowing a person to be admitted to bail, when the person had been arrested for a felony but could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff. See MAINPRISE.

manucaption. See MAINPRISE.

manu captor. See MAINPERNOR.

manufacture, n. Patents. A thing that is made or built by a human being (or by a machine), as distinguished from something that is a product of nature. • Manufactures are one of the statutory categories of inventions that can be patented. Examples of manufactures are chairs and tires. — Also termed article of manufacture. Cf. MACHINE; PROCESS (3).

"A manufacture must have a definable structure that is claimed as its patentable characteristic. Manufactures are, after all, a category of product patents, and therefore must be 'things,' as opposed to ways or means. In summary, a patentable manufacture is any human-made structure that has inventive characteristics." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 30 (2d ed. 1990).

manufactured home. Secured transactions. A structure, transportable in one or more sections, that when traveling is 8 body feet or more in width or 40 body feet or more in length, or, when erected on site, is 320 or more square feet, and that is built on a permanent chassis and designed to be used as a dwelling with or without a permanent foundation when connected to the required utilities, and that has within it plumbing, heating, air-conditioning, and electrical systems. UCC § 9-102(a)(36).

manufacturer. A person or entity engaged in producing or assembling new products. • A federal law has broadened the definition to include those who act for (or are controlled by) any such person or entity in the distribution of new products, as well as those who import new products for resale. 42 USCA § 4902(6).

manufacturer's liability. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

manufacturing cost. See COST (1).

manufacturing defect. See DEFECT.

manu forti (man-yoo for-ti). [Latin] With strong hand. • This term was used in old writs of trespass to allege forcible entry, as in manu forti et cum multitudine gentium ("with strong hand and multitude of people").

manu longa (man-yoo long-gə). [Latin "with a long hand"] Roman & civil law. Indirectly; by the longest route. • This described the transfer of ownership by pointing out the limits of the land transferred. Cf. MANU BREVI.

manumission (man-yə-mish-ən). [Latin manumissio "I send out of hand"] Roman law. The granting of liberty to a slave or bondman; the freeing of one from the power of another; emancipation. • Manumission was so called because the slaves were sent out of the hand of their masters.

"Manumission is a kind of new birth. The master (patronus) therefore stands to his freedman in a relation analogous to the relation between father and son. The patron, as such, is entitled, as against his libertus, to a father's rights of succession and guardianship. He has the right of moderate chastisement (levis coercitio). He has the same claim to be treated with respect as he has against his son. He can claim to be supported by the libertus, if he falls into poverty. He is, lastly, entitled to certain services on the part of the freedman, which he can, if necessary, enforce by action, provided only the freedman had promised them after his manumission and in a manner not derogatory to his liberty." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 170 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

manumit (man-yə-mit), vb. To free (a slave).

manung (man-əng). Hist. An official's jurisdictional district. — Also spelled monung.

manuopus (man-yoo-oh-pəs). See MAINOUR.

manupes (man-yə-pee-z), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A full 12-inch foot as a legal measure.

manupretium (man-yə-pree-shee-əm). [Latin] Roman law. Compensation for performed labor or services.

manurable (mə-n[y]oor-ə-bəl), adj. [Law French fr. Old French main "hand"] Hist. (Of a thing) capable of being held in hand; capable of being touched.

manure (mə-nyoor), vb. [Law French fr. Old French main "hand"] Hist. To use (something) manually; to perform manual labor on (something).

manus (man-əs also may-nəs). [Latin "hand"]
1. Roman law. The power exercised by the head of a family over all its members and slaves; esp., a husband's power over his wife. 2. Hist. A compurgator, or the oath taken. ● This usage of manus may stem from the affiant's placing a hand on the Bible while taking the oath. See COMPURGATOR.

manuscript. An unpublished writing; an author's typescript or written work product that is proposed for publication.

manus mortua (man-əs mor-choo-ə). [Latin "dead hand"] See MORTMAIN.

manutenentia (man-yə-tə-nen-shee-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The old writ of maintenance. See MAINTENANCE.

manworth. Hist. The value of a person's life.

Mapp hearing. Criminal procedure. A hearing held to determine whether evidence implicating the accused was obtained as the result of an illegal search and seizure, and should therefore be suppressed. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684 (1961).

mara (mair-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A lake; a pool; a body of water that cannot be drained.

maraud (mə-rawd), vb. To rove about to pillage or plunder; to loot.

marcatus (mahr-kay-təs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The yearly rent of a tract of land.

Marchers. Hist. Lords who lived on the borders of Scotland and Wales, and operated, with the permission of the English sovereigns, under their own private laws. ● The laws were eventually abolished by the statute 27 Hen. 8, ch. 26. — Also termed Lords Marchers.

"Thus the Lords Marchers were practically independent potentates of a kind very unusual in England. From this two consequences flowed. In the first place there grew up in their jurisdictions a mixture of Welsh custom and English law known as the custom of the Marches. In the second place, although they held of the king, their allegiance sat so lightly upon them that it was necessary to declare in 1354 that 'all the Lords of the Marches of Wales shall be perpetually attending and annexed to the crown of England, and not to the principality of Wales, in whose hands so ever the same principality be.'" 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 121 (7th ed. 1956).

marches (mahr-chəz). Hist. Boundaries between countries or territories, specif. the borders between England and Wales, and England and Scotland.

marchet (mahr-chet). Hist. A fee paid by a feudal tenant to the lord so that the tenant's daughter could marry someone outside the lord's jurisdiction or so that the lord would waive the droit du seigneur. — Also termed marcheta; marchetum; merchet; mercheta; merchetum; maiden rent. See DROIT DU SEIGNEUR.

"Any service which stamps the tenant as an unfree man, stamps his tenure as unfree; and in common opinion such services there are, notably the merchetum. Now among the thousands of entries in English documents relating to this payment, it would we believe be utterly impossible to find one which gave any sanction to the tales of a ius primae noctis. The context in which this duty is usually mentioned explains at least one of the reasons which underlie it. The tenant may not give his daughter (in some cases his son or daughter) in marriage — at least not outside the manor . . . No doubt a subjection to this restraint was regarded as very base, and sometimes it is described in vigorous words which express a free man's loathing for servility: — 'he must buy, he must make ransom for, his flesh and blood.'" 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 372 (2d ed. 1898).

march-in rights. Patents. The government's right to step in and grant a new license or revoke an existing license if the owner of a federally funded invention (or the owner's licensee) has not adequately developed or applied the invention within a reasonable time. 35 USCA § 203.

marchioness (mahr-shə-nis or mahr-shə-nes), n. [fr. Law Latin marchionissa, the feminine counterpart to marchio "marquess"] A female dignity, equivalent to a marquis, conferred by creation or by marriage with a marquis. See MARQUIS.

of securities that may be borrowed for the purpose of the purchase of such securities, the term 'margin' referring to the percentage of the value that must be paid in cash by the purchaser. Such requirements have been implemented for the purposes of preventing the excessive use of credit for the purchase or carrying of securities, and of reducing the aggregate amount of the national credit resources, which are directed by speculation into the stock market, and of achieving a more balanced use of such resources." 69 Am. Jur. 2d Securities Regulation — Federal § 481 (1993).

initial margin requirement. The minimum percentage of the purchase price that a buyer must deposit with a broker. • The Federal Reserve Board establishes minimum margin requirements to prevent excessive speculation and price volatility.

maintenance margin requirement. The minimum equity that a buyer must keep in a margin account, expressed as a percentage of the account value.

margin stock. See marginable security under SECURITY.

margin transaction. A securities or commodities transaction made through a broker on a margin account. — Also termed buying on margin. See MARGIN (5).

mariage de convenance. See marriage of convenience under MARRIAGE (1).

marinarius (mar-ə-nair-ee-əs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A seaman; a mariner. • Marinarius capitaneus (kap-ə-tay-nee-əs) was the admiral or warden of the ports.

marine, adj. 1. Of or relating to the sea <marine life>. 2. Of or relating to sea navigation or commerce <marine insurance> <marine interest>.

marine belt. See territorial waters under WATER.

marine carrier. See CARRIER.

marine contract. See CONTRACT.

Marine Court in the City of New York. The New York City court, originally created to resolve seamen's disputes, that was the predecessor of the City Court of New York.

marine insurance. See INSURANCE.

marine interest. See MARITIME INTEREST.

marine league. A geographical measure of distance equal to one-twentieth part of a degree of latitude, or three nautical miles.

marine peril. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

marine protest. A writing attested by a justice of the peace, a notary public, or a consul, made or verified by the master of a vessel, stating that the vessel has suffered a severe voyage and that the master has engaged in neither misconduct nor negligence. See PROTEST.

mariner. A person employed on a vessel in sea navigation; SEAMAN.

marine-rescue doctrine. The rule that when a person on a ship goes overboard, the ship must use all reasonable means to retrieve the person from the water if the person can be seen, and, if the person cannot be seen, must search for the person as long as it is reasonably possible that the person is still alive.

marine risk. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

mariner's will. See soldier's will under WILL.

marine rule. The doctrine that if the cost of restoring damaged property would exceed one-half the value of the property before the damage, then the property is deemed to be totally destroyed. • The marine rule developed in the context of applying marine insurance to damaged ships, but it has also been applied to other property, including buildings.

maritagium (mar-ə-tay-jee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A lord's right to arrange a marriage for his infant ward. 2. DOWER. 3. Dowry; a marriage gift. See DOS.

"[W]hile to the common lawyer dos meant dower, in other systems it meant dowry: a gift to the wife, or to husband and wife, by the bride's parents or other relatives. In England this was called the 'marriage-gift' or maritagium. Marriage-gifts were commonly made either to establish a cadet branch of a family or to assist a daughter who was not an heiress to make a good match." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 310 (3d ed. 1990).

maritagium habere (mar-ə-tay-jee-əm hæ-beer-ee). [Law Latin] To have the right of arranging a woman's marriage. • This was a privilege granted by the Crown to favored subjects. See MARITAGIUM.

marital, adj. Of or relating to the marriage relationship <marital property>.

marital agreement. Any agreement between spouses concerning the division and ownership of marital property; esp., a premarital contract or separation agreement that is primarily concerned with dividing marital property in the event of divorce. — Also termed marriage settlement; property settlement. See PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT; POSTNUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

marital-communications privilege. See marital privilege (1) under PRIVILEGE (3).

marital deduction. See DEDUCTION.

marital-deduction trust. See TRUST.

marital dissolution. See DIVORCE.

marital immunity. See husband-wife immunity under IMMUNITY (2).

marital portion. Civil law. The portion of a deceased spouse's estate to which the surviving spouse is entitled.

marital privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

marital property. See PROPERTY.

marital rape. See RAPE.

marital rights. Rights and incidents (such as property or cohabitation rights) arising from the marriage contract.

maritare (mar-ə-tair-ee), vb. Hist. To marry.

maritima Angliae (mə-rit-ə-mə ang-gee-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The seacoast. 2. The Crown's sea revenue, as from wreckage and from whales or sturgeons cast ashore. • The revenue was formerly collected by sheriffs and later by the Lord High Admiral.

maritima incrementa (mə-rit-ə-mə in-kre-men-tə). [Latin "marine increases"] Hist. Alluvion caused by the sea; land gained from the sea.

maritime (mar-i-tīm), adj. 1. Connected with or situated near the ocean. 2. Of or relating to sea navigation or commerce.

"The word 'maritime' has in the Constitution its appropriate meaning, i.e., relating to the sea, and 'sea' is a word of wide extension and application . . . Its classical and scriptural equivalents are applied to all sorts of navigable waters. It is not restricted, even in common speech, to waters where the tide ebbs and flows, for the Baltic Sea, the Black Sea, the Sea of Azof, the Sea of Marmora, the Mediterranean Sea, the great scenes of early maritime enterprise, have no visible tide." 1 Steven F. Friedell, Benedict on Admiralty § 103, at 7-5 (7th ed. 1996).

Maritime Administration. A federal agency that promotes and regulates the activities of the U.S. merchant marine, esp. by directing emergency operations, establishing specifications for shipbuilding and design, and determining navigation routes. • The Maritime Act of 1981 transferred the Maritime Administration from the Department of Commerce to the Department of Transportation.

maritime belt. See territorial waters under WATER.

Maritime Commission. A federal agency that regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic commerce of the United States by: (1) ensuring that U.S. international trade is open to all countries on fair and equitable terms, (2) guarding against unauthorized monopolies in U.S. waterborne commerce, and (3) ensuring that financial responsibility is maintained to clean up oil spills and indemnify injured passengers.

maritime-connection doctrine. See LOCALITY-PLUS TEST.

maritime contract. See CONTRACT.

maritime employment. Under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, a job that is related to the loading, unloading, construction, or repair of a vessel. 33 USCA § 902(3).

maritime flavor. The relation of a given case to shipping concerns. • This is a factor used in determining federal admiralty jurisdiction over a particular matter by analyzing whether the matter sufficiently relates to marine and shipping concerns and whether there is need for a federal response.

"There is perhaps no more elusive concept in the law of admiralty than 'maritime flavor.' . . . While 'maritime flavor' is incapable of precise definition, certain observations may be helpful. Generally, courts find 'maritime flavor' in those events and transactions which are major concerns of the shipping industry. This is tempered by the realization that exercise of federal control will not necessarily promote maritime shipping with the same vigor as control by a coastal or predominantly maritime state. Since federal law will not necessarily be more favorable, courts may find 'maritime flavor' only when there is a perceived need for a uniform national rule, which can only be provided by the federal sovereign." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 23 (2d ed. 1988).

maritime interest. Interest charged on a loan secured by a sea vessel or its cargo, or both. ● Because of the lender's considerable risk, the interest rate may be extraordinarily high. — Also termed marine interest.

maritime jurisdiction. The exercise of authority over maritime cases by the U.S. district courts sitting in admiralty. See 28 USCA § 1333. ● Cases falling within this jurisdiction are governed by the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims — a supplement to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See ADMIRALTY (1).

maritime law. The body of law governing marine commerce and navigation, the transportation at sea of persons and property, and marine affairs in general; the rules governing contract, tort, and workers'-compensation claims arising out of commerce on or over water. — Also termed admiralty; admiralty law. Cf. LAW OF THE SEA.

maritime lien. See LIEN.

maritime loan. See LOAN.

maritime service. Maritime law. Work performed in connection with a ship or commerce on navigable waters, such as service to preserve a ship's crew, cargo, or equipment.

maritime state. Hist. The collective officers and mariners of the British navy.

maritime tort. See TORT.

maritus (mə-rī-təs), n. [Latin] A husband; a married man.

mark, n. 1. A symbol, impression, or feature on something, usu. to identify it or distinguish it from something else. 2. TRADEMARK (1). 3. SERVICEMARK.

benchmark. See BENCHMARK.

certification mark. See CERTIFICATION MARK.

collective mark. See COLLECTIVE MARK.

demimark. See DEMIMARK.

markdown. A reduction in a selling price.

marked money. Money that bears a telltale mark so that the money can be traced, usu. to a perpetrator of a crime, as when marked money is given to a kidnapper as ransom.

aftermarket. See secondary market.

auction market. A market (such as the New York Stock Exchange) in which securities are bought and sold by competitive bidding through brokers. Cf. negotiated market.

bear market. A securities market characterized by falling prices over a prolonged period. — Also termed down market; receding market.

black market. An illegal market for goods that are controlled or prohibited by the government, such as the underground market for prescription drugs.

bull market. A securities market characterized by rising prices over a prolonged period. — Also termed advancing market; strong market.

buyer's market. A market in which supply significantly exceeds demand, resulting in lower prices.

capital market. A securities market in which stocks and bonds with long-term maturities are traded.

common market. An economic association formed by several nations to reduce trade barriers among them; esp. (usu. cap.), EUROPEAN UNION.

discount market. The portion of the money market in which banks and other financial institutions trade commercial paper.

down market. See bear market.

forward market. See futures market.

free market. See open market.

Friday market. The normal tendency for stock-prices to decline on Fridays. • The tendency occurs because many investors balance their accounts before the weekend to avoid any adverse changes in market prices over the weekend.

futures market. A commodity exchange in which futures contracts are traded; a market for a trade (e.g., commodities futures contracts and stock options) that is negotiated at the current price but calls for delivery at a future time. — Also termed forward market. See FUTURES CONTRACT.

geographic market. Antitrust. The part of a relevant market that identifies the regions in which a firm might compete. • If a firm can raise prices or cut production without causing a quick influx of supply to the area from outside sources, that firm is operating in a distinct geographic market.

“For purposes of [the Sherman Act], the relevant geographic market comprises the area in which the defendant effectively competes with other individuals or businesses for distribution of the relevant product. Stated differently, the relevant geographic market consists of the area from which the sellers of a particular product derive their customers, and the area within which the purchasers of the product can practically seek the product.” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 57, at 119–20 (1996).

gray market. A market in which legal but perhaps unethical methods are used to avoid a manufacturer's distribution chain and thereby sell goods (esp. imported goods) at prices lower than those envisioned by the manufacturer. See PARALLEL IMPORTS.

“One of the most controversial areas of customs law concerns ‘gray market goods,’ goods produced abroad with authorization and payment but which are imported into unauthorized markets. Trade in gray market goods has increased dramatically in recent years, in part because fluctuating currency exchange rates create opportunities to import and sell such goods at a discount rate from local price levels.” Ralph H. Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Transactions § 20.8 (1995).

institutional market. The demand among large investors and corporations for short-term funds and commercial paper.

market overt. An open, legally regulated public market where buyers, with some exceptions, acquire good title to products regardless of any defects in the seller's title. Cf. FAIR.

money market. The financial market for dealing in short-term negotiable instruments such as commercial paper, certificates of deposit, banker's acceptances, and U.S. Treasury securities.

negotiated market. A market (such as an over-the-counter securities market) in which buyers and sellers seek each other out and negotiate prices. Cf. auction market.

open market. A market in which any buyer or seller may trade and in which prices and product availability are determined by free competition. — Also termed free market.

original market. See primary market.

over-the-counter market. See OVER-THE-COUNTER MARKET.

primary market. The market for goods or services that are newly available for buying and selling; esp., the securities market in which new securities are issued by corporations to raise capital. — Also termed original market.

product market. Antitrust. The part of a relevant market that applies to a firm's particular product by identifying all reasonable substitutes for the product and by determining whether these substitutes limit the firm's ability to affect prices.

“For purposes of an antitrust claim under ... the Sherman Act, the relevant product market includes those services or commodities which are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes. In order to establish the relevant product market, therefore, a plaintiff must sufficiently identify what types of products are reasonably interchangeable substitutes for the defendant's product within the appropriate area of competition.” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 58, at 121 (1996).

public market. A market open to both purchasers and sellers.

receding market. See bear market.

recognized market. A market where the items bought and sold are numerous and similar, where competitive bidding and bartering are not prevalent, and where prices paid in sales of comparable items are publicly quoted. • Examples of recognized markets include stock and commodities exchanges. Under the UCC, a secured creditor may, upon the debtor's default, sell the collateral in a recognized market without notifying the debtor. Such a sale is presumed to be commercially reasonable.

relevant market. Antitrust. A market that is capable of being monopolized — that is, a market in which a firm can raise prices above the competitive level without losing so many sales that the price increase would be unprofitable. • The relevant market includes both the product market and the geographic market.

secondary market. The market for goods or services that have previously been available for buying and selling; esp., the securities market in which previously issued securities are traded among investors. — Also termed aftermarket.

seller's market. A market in which demand exceeds (or approaches) supply, resulting in raised prices.

soft market. A market (esp. a stock market) characterized by falling or drifting prices and low volume.

spot market. A market (esp. in commodities) in which payment or delivery is immediate <the spot market in oil>.

strong market. See bull market.

thin market. A market in which the number of bids or offerings is relatively low.

marketability. Salability; the probability of selling property, goods, securities, or services at specified times, prices, and terms.

marketability test. Mining law. The principle that, for someone to obtain a patent on a mining claim on federal land, there must be a showing that a reasonably prudent person could extract and market the claimed mineral at a profit, and that at the time of discovery, a large enough market for the mineral existed to attract the efforts of a reasonably prudent person.

marketable, adj. Of commercially acceptable quality; fit for sale and in demand by buyers. — Also termed merchantable.

marketable security. See SECURITY.

marketable title. See TITLE (2).

marketable-title act. A state statute providing that a person can establish good title to land by searching the public records only back to a specified time (such as 40 years ago). See marketable title under TITLE (2).

market activity. See MARKET VOLUME.

market approach. A method of appraising real property, by surveying the market and comparing the property to similar pieces of property that have been recently sold, and making appropriate adjustments for differences between the properties, including location, size of the property, and the dates of sale. — Also termed comparative-sales approach; market-comparison approach; market-data approach. Cf. COST APPROACH; INCOME APPROACH.

market average. A price level for a specific group of stocks.

market-comparison approach. See MARKET APPROACH.

market correction. See DOWN REVERSAL.

market-data approach. See MARKET APPROACH.

market equity. The percentage of the total market value that a particular company's securities account for, represented by each class of security. Cf. BOOK EQUITY.

marketing, n. 1. The act or process of promoting and selling products or services. 2. The part of a business concerned with meeting customers' needs. 3. The area of study concerned with the promotion and selling of products or services.

marketing contract. See CONTRACT.

market intermediary. Securities. A person whose business is to enter into transactions on both sides of the market. Investment Company Act, 15 USCA § 80a-3(c)(2)(B)(i).

market-maker. Securities. One who helps establish a market for securities by reporting bid-and-asked quotations. • A market-maker is typically a specialist permitted to act as a dealer, a dealer acting in the capacity of block positioner, or a dealer who, with respect to a security, routinely enters quotations in an interdealer communication system or otherwise and is willing to buy and sell securities for the dealer's own account.

market-making, n. The practice of establishing prices for over-the-counter securities by reporting bid-and-asked quotations. • A broker-dealer engaged in this practice, which is regulated by both the NASD and the SEC, buys and sells securities as a principal for its own account, and thus accepts two-way bids (both to buy and to sell). See BID AND ASKED.

market manipulation. See MANIPULATION.

market order. See ORDER (4).

market-out clause. Oil & gas. A contract provision permitting a pipeline-purchaser of natural gas to lower the purchase price if market conditions make it uneconomical to continue buying at the contract price, and permitting the well owner to respond by accepting the lower price or by rejecting it and canceling the contract.

market-participant doctrine. The principle that, under the Commerce Clause, a state does not discriminate against interstate commerce by acting as a buyer or seller in the market, by operating a proprietary enterprise, or by subsidizing private business. • Under the Dormant Commerce Clause principle, the Commerce Clause — art. I, § 8, cl. 3 of the U.S. Constitution — disallows most state regulation of, or discrimination against, interstate commerce. But if the state is participating in the market instead of regulating it, the Dormant Commerce Clause analysis does not apply, and the state activity will generally stand. See Dormant Commerce Clause under COMMERCE CLAUSE.

marketplace of ideas. A forum in which expressions of opinion can freely compete for acceptance without governmental restraint. • Although Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes was the first jurist to discuss the concept as a metaphor for explaining freedom of speech, the phrase marketplace of ideas dates in American caselaw only from 1954.

market power. The ability to reduce output and raise prices above the competitive level — specifically, above marginal cost — for a sustained period, and to make a profit by doing so. • In antitrust law, a large amount of market power may constitute monopoly power. See MONOPOLIZATION. Cf. MARKET SHARE.

"In economic terms, market power is the ability to raise prices without a total loss of sales; without market power, consumers shop around to find a rival offering a better deal." 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 49, at 110 n.87 (1996).

market price. See PRICE.

market quotation. The most current price at which a security or commodity trades.

market-recovery program. See JOB-TARGETING PROGRAM.

market share. The percentage of the market for a product that a firm supplies, usu. calculated by dividing the firm's output by the total market output. • In antitrust law, market share is used to measure a firm's market power, and if the share is high enough — generally 70% or more — then the firm may be guilty of monopolization. See MONOPOLIZATION. Cf. MARKET POWER.

market-share liability. See LIABILITY.

market-share theory. Antitrust. A method of determining damages for lost profits by calculating the impact of the defendant's violation on the plaintiff's output or market share. Cf. BEFORE-AND-AFTER THEORY; YARDSTICK THEORY.

market structure. The broad organizational characteristics of a particular market, including seller concentration, product differentiation, and barriers to entry.

market trend. See TREND.

market value. See fair market value under VALUE.

market value at the well. Oil & gas. The value of oil or gas at the place where it is sold, minus the reasonable cost of transporting it and processing it to make it marketable.

market volume. 1. The total number of shares traded on one day on a stock exchange. 2. The total number of shares of one stock traded on one day. — Also termed market activity.

Mark Hopkins doctrine. The principle that when an employee leaves a job because of a labor dispute, any later employment the employee has must be bona fide and intended as permanent for the employee to avoid a labor-dispute disqualification from unemployment benefits if the employee leaves the later job. Mark Hopkins, Inc. v. Employment Comm'n, 151 P.2d 229 (Cal. 1944).

markon. An amount (usu. expressed as a percentage) initially added to a product's cost to obtain the list price. • Further increases or decreases in price are called markups or mark-downs, respectively.

marksman. 1. A person who, not being able to write, signs documents with some kind of character or symbol. 2. A highly skilled shooter.

Marks rule. The doctrine that, when the U.S. Supreme Court issues a fractured, plurality opinion, the opinion of the Justices concurring in the judgment on the narrowest grounds — that is, the legal standard with which a majority of the Court would agree — is considered the Court's holding. Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 97 S.Ct. 990 (1977).

mark up, vb. 1. To increase (the price of goods, etc.) 2. To revise or amend (a legislative bill, a rule, etc.). 3. To place (a case) on the trial calendar.

markup, n. 1. An amount added to an item's cost to determine its selling price. See PROFIT MARGIN. 2. A session of a congressional committee during which a bill is revised and put into final form before it is reported to the appropriate house.

Markush doctrine (mahr-kəsh). Patents. An exception to the policy against use of alternative language in claims, by which in certain claims (esp. those involving chemical components) a claimant can use an alternative, subgeneric phrase when there is no applicable, commonly accepted generic expression. Ex parte Markush, 1925 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 126.

"The Patent Office early adopted a policy against use of alternative language in claims. Thus, a claimant could not use the specific alternative phrase 'glass or plastic' but could use a generic phrase (such as 'impervious transparent material') that would cover effectively the desired alternatives. The Markush doctrine developed as an exception With chemical compounds there may be no suitable phrase to cover the alternatives. Under limited circumstances a claimant could use an artificial or coined subgeneric group in the form of 'material selected from the group consisting of X, Y, and Z.'" 2 Donald S. Chisum, Patents § 8.06[2], at 8-119 to 8-120 (1992).

marque, law of. Archaic. A reprisal entitling one who has been wronged and is unable to receive ordinary justice to take the goods of the wrongdoer (if they can be found within one's own precinct) in satisfaction for the wrong. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

marquis (mahr-kwis or mahr-kee). An English nobleman below and next in order to a duke. — Also termed marquess.

marquisate (mahr-kwi-sit or -zit), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The seigniorship of a marquis.

marriage, n. 1. The legal union of a man and woman as husband and wife. • Although the common law regarded marriage as a civil contract, it is more properly the civil status or relationship existing between a man and a woman who agree to and do live together as spouses. The essentials of a valid marriage are (1) parties legally capable of contracting marriage, (2) mutual consent or agreement, and (3) an actual contracting in the form prescribed by law.

"It has frequently been said by courts, and even by Legislatures, that marriage is a 'civil contract.' But to conclude from these statements that marriage . . . has all, or even many, of the incidents of an ordinary private contract, would be a grave error. In fact, these statements to the effect that marriage is a 'civil contract' will be found, upon examination, to have been used only for the purpose of expressing the idea that marriage, in the American states, is a civil, and not a religious institution, or that . . . in some states mutual consent alone without formal celebration is sufficient to constitute a valid marriage known as a common law marriage, or that, as is true in all states, the mutual consent of the parties is essential, even in the case of a ceremonial marriage." Joseph W. Madden, Handbook of the Law of Persons and Domestic Relations § 1-3, at 2-3 (1931).

clandestine marriage (klan-des-tin). 1. A marriage that rests merely on the agreement of the parties. 2. A marriage entered into in a secret way, as one solemnized by an unauthorized person or without all required formalities. See Fleet marriage.

common-law marriage. A marriage that takes legal effect, without license or ceremony, when a couple live together as husband and wife, intend to be married, and hold themselves out to others as a married couple. • Common-law marriages are permitted in 14 states and in the District of Columbia. — Also termed informal marriage.

consensual marriage. Marriage by consent alone, without any formal process. See common-law marriage.

consular marriage. A marriage solemnized in a foreign country by a consul or diplomatic official of the United States. • Consular marriages are recognized in some jurisdictions.

covenant marriage. A marriage that is entered into under a law establishing certain requirements for marriage and divorce in a state that otherwise allows for no-fault divorce. • In the late 1990s, several states (beginning with Louisiana) passed laws providing for covenant marriages. The requirements vary, but most of these laws require couples who opt for a covenant marriage to undergo premarital counseling. A divorce will be granted only after the couple has undergone marital counseling and has been separated for a specified period (usu. at least 18 months). The divorce prerequisites typically can be waived with proof that a spouse has committed adultery, been convicted of a felony, abandoned the family for at least one year, or physically or sexually abused the other spouse or a child. — Also termed high-test marriage.

cross-marriage. A marriage by a brother and sister to two people who are also brother and sister.

de facto marriage (di fak-toh). A marriage that, despite the parties' living under color of law as man and wife, is defective for some reason.

Fleet marriage. Hist. A clandestine marriage performed in the 17th or 18th century in the Fleet prison in London by a chaplain who had been imprisoned for debt. • Parliament attempted to stop the practice, but it was not until the statute of 26 George 2, ch. 33, declaring marriages performed outside public chapels or churches to be void and punishable as a felony, that the practice ceased.

green-card marriage. See sham marriage.

Gretna-Green marriage. A marriage entered into in a jurisdiction other than where the parties reside to avoid some legal impediment that exists where they live; a runaway marriage. • Gretna Green is a Scottish village close to the English border that served as a convenient place for eloping English couples to wed.

"A 'Gretna-Green marriage' was a marriage solemnized in Scotland by parties who went there to avoid the delay and formalities required in England. . . . In the United States, the term describes marriages celebrated between residents of a State who go to a place beyond and yet near to the boundary line of an adjoining State, on account of some advantage afforded by the law of that State." William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 496 (1889).

high-test marriage. See covenant marriage.

informal marriage. See common-law marriage.

marriage in jest. A voidable marriage in which the parties lack the requisite intent to marry.

marriage of convenience. 1. A marriage contracted for social or financial advantages rather than out of mutual love. — Also termed mariage de convenance. 2. Loosely, an ill-considered marriage that, at the time, is convenient to the parties involved.

morganatic marriage (mor-gə-nat-ik).

Hist. A marriage between a man of superior status to a woman of inferior status, with the stipulation that the wife and her children cannot participate in the title or possessions of the husband. • By extension, the term later referred to the marriage of a woman of superior status to a man of inferior status. — Also termed left-handed marriage.

plural marriage. A marriage in which one spouse is already married to someone else; a bigamous or polygamous union.

putative marriage (pyoo-tə-tiv). A marriage in which the husband and wife believe in good faith that they are married, but for some technical reason are not formally married (as when the ceremonial official was not authorized to perform a marriage). • Putative marriages are usu. treated as valid and do not need to be formalized.

Scotch marriage. A marriage by consensual contract, without the necessity of a formal ceremony, so called because this kind of marriage was until 1940 recognized as valid under Scots law.

sham marriage. A marriage in which a U.S. citizen marries a foreign citizen for the sole purpose of allowing the foreign citizen to become a permanent U.S. resident. • Sham marriages are illegal if made with an intent to circumvent immigration law. — Also termed green-card marriage.

voidable marriage. A marriage that is initially invalid but that remains in effect unless terminated by court order. • For example, a marriage is voidable if either party is underage or otherwise legally incompetent, or if one party used fraud, duress, or force to induce the other party to enter the marriage. The legal imperfection in such a marriage can be inquired into only during the lives of both spouses, in a proceeding to obtain a judgment declaring it void.

void marriage. A marriage that is invalid from its inception, that cannot be made valid, and that can be terminated by either party without obtaining a divorce or annulment. • For example, a marriage is void if the parties are too closely related or if either party is already married.

2. The act or ceremony so uniting them; a wedding. — marital, adj.

ceremonial marriage. A wedding that follows all the statutory requirements and that has been solemnized before a religious or civil official.

civil marriage. A wedding ceremony conducted by an official, such as a judge, or by some other authorized person — as distinguished from one solemnized by a member of the clergy.

proxy marriage. A wedding in which someone stands in for an absent bride or groom, as when one party is stationed overseas in the military. • Proxy marriages are prohibited in most states.

marriage article. A premarital stipulation between spouses who intend to incorporate the stipulation in a postnuptial agreement.

marriage broker. One who arranges a marriage in exchange for consideration. • A marriage broker may be subject to criminal liability for public-policy reasons.

marriage ceremony. The religious or civil proceeding that solemnizes a marriage. — Also termed wedding.

marriage certificate. A document that is executed by the religious or civil official presiding at a marriage ceremony and filed with a public authority (usu. the county clerk) as evidence of the marriage.

marriage in jest. See MARRIAGE (1).

marriage license. A document, issued by a public authority, that grants a couple permission to marry. • Most states require the couple to take blood tests before obtaining the license.

marriage-notice book. An English registry of marriage applications and licenses.

marriage of convenience. See MARRIAGE (1).

marriage portion. See DOWRY.

marriage promise. See PROMISE.

marriage records. Government or church records containing information on prospective couples (such as a woman's maiden name and address) and on wedding services performed.

marriage settlement. See MARITAL AGREEMENT, PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

marshal, n. 1. A law-enforcement officer with duties similar to those of a sheriff. 2. A judicial officer who provides court security, executes process, and performs other tasks for the court. — marshalship, n.

United States Marshal. A federal official who carries out the orders of a federal court.

• U.S. Marshals are employees of the executive branch of government.

marshal, vb. To arrange or rank in order <the brief effectively marshaled the appellant's arguments>.

marshaling assets, rule of. See RULE OF MARSHALING ASSETS.

marshaling doctrine. The principle that, when a senior creditor has recourse to two or more funds to satisfy its debt, and a junior creditor has recourse to only one fund to satisfy its debt, the senior creditor must satisfy its debt out of the funds in which the junior creditor has no interest.

marshaling the evidence. 1. Arranging all of a party's evidence in the order that it will be presented at trial. 2. The practice of formulating a jury charge so that it arranges the evidence to give more credence to a particular interpretation.

Marshal of the Queen's Bench. Hist. A custodial officer of the Queen's Bench prison. • The position was abolished by the Queen's Prison Act of 1842 (St. 5 & 6 Vict., ch. 22).

Marshalsea (mahr-shəl-see), n. [fr. Law Latin marescallia] Hist. 1. The court or seat of the marshal of the royal household. 2. A debtor's prison in London under the jurisdiction of the Court of Marshalsea. See COURT OF MARSHALSEA.

mart. See MARKET (1).

martē suo decurrere (mahr-tee s[y]oo-oh də-kər-ər-ee). [Latin] Hist. To run its course by its own force. • In the civil law, this term was applied to a suit that ran its course without obstruction.

martial law (mahr-shəl). 1. The law by which during wartime the army, instead of civil authority, governs the country because of a perceived need for military security or public safety. • The military assumes control purportedly until civil authority can be restored. 2. A body of firm, strictly enforced rules that are imposed because of a perception by the country's rulers that civil government has failed, or might fail, to function. • Martial law is usu. imposed when the rulers foresee an invasion, insurrection, economic collapse, or other breakdown of the rulers' desired social order.

"Martial law is the public law of necessity. Necessity calls it forth, necessity justifies its exercise, and necessity measures the extent and degree to which it may be employed. That necessity is no formal, artificial, legalistic concept but an actual and factual one: it is the necessity of taking action to safeguard the state against insurrection, riot, disorder, or public calamity. What constitutes necessity is a question of fact in each case." Frederick B. Wiener, A Practical Manual of Martial Law 16 (1940).

"[M]artial law is nothing more and nothing less than an application of the common law doctrine that force, to whatever degree necessary, may be used to repress illegal force. Martial law is the public right of self-defense against a danger threatening the order or the existence of the state. Where the ordinary civil authorities — the police — are unable to resist or subdue a disturbance, additional force, military in nature, may be applied. The extent of military force used depends in each instance upon the extent of the disturbance." Id. at 16-17.

absolute martial law. The carrying on of government functions entirely by military agencies, as a result of which the authority of civil agencies is superseded.

qualified martial law. The carrying on of government functions partly by military agencies, as a result of which the authority of some civil agencies is superseded.

3. The law by which the army in wartime governs foreign territory that it occupies. 4. Loosely, MILITARY LAW.

Martindale-Hubbell Law Directory. A series of books, published annually, containing a roster of lawyers and law firms in most cities of the United States, corporate legal departments, government lawyers, foreign lawyers, and lawyer-support providers, as well as a digest of the laws of the states, the District of Columbia, and territories of the United States, and a digest of the laws of many foreign jurisdictions, including Canada and its provinces.

Martinez report. A report that courts sometimes require a pro se party to file in order to clarify a vague or incomprehensible complaint. Martinez v. Aaron, 570 F.2d 317 (10th Cir. 1978).

Mary Carter agreement. A contract (usu. a secret one) by which one or more, but not all, codefendants settle with the plaintiff and obtain a release, along with a provision granting them a portion of any recovery from the non-participating codefendants. • In a Mary Carter agreement, the participating codefendants agree to remain parties to the lawsuit and, if no recovery is awarded against the nonparticipating codefendants, to pay the plaintiff a settled amount. Such an agreement is void as against public policy in some states but is valid in others if disclosed to the jury. Booth v. Mary Carter Paint Co., 202 So. 2d 8 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1967). Cf. GALLAGHER AGREEMENT.

Mary Major. See JANE DOE.

masking, n. In critical legal studies, the act or an instance of concealing something's true nature <being a crit, Max contends that the legal system is merely an elaborate masking of social injustices>. — mask, vb.

maximalist retributivism. See RETRIBUTIVISM.

maximum cure. Maritime law. The point at which a seaman who is injured or sick has stabilized, and no additional medical treatment will improve the seaman's condition. • A shipowner's obligation to provide maintenance and cure to a sick or injured seaman usu. continues until the seaman has reached maximum cure. See MAINTENANCE AND CURE.

maximum medical improvement. The point at which an injured person's condition stabilizes, and no further recovery or improvement is expected, even with additional medical intervention. • This term is most often used in the context of a workers'-compensation claim. An injured employee usu. receives temporary benefits until reaching maximum medical improvement, at which time a determination can be made about any permanent disability the employee has suffered and any corresponding benefits the employee should receive. — Abbr. MMI.

may, vb. 1. Is permitted to <the plaintiff may close>. • This is the primary legal sense — usu. termed the "permissive" or "discretionary" sense. 2. Has a possibility (to); might <the defendant may win on appeal>. Cf. CAN. 3. Loosely, is required to; shall; must <if two or more defendants are jointly indicted, any defendant who so requests may be tried separately>. • In dozens of cases, courts have held may to be synonymous with shall or must, usu. in an effort to effectuate legislative intent.

mayhem (may-hem), n. 1. The crime of maliciously injuring a person's body, esp. to impair or destroy the victim's capacity for self-defense. • Modern statutes usu. treat this as a form of aggravated battery. — Also termed grievous bodily harm. See BATTERY.

"Mayhem, according to the English common law, is maliciously depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or to annoy his adversary. It is a felony." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 239 (3d ed. 1982).

MC. abbr. MEMBER OF CONGRESS.

McCarran Act. A federal law requiring, among other things, members of the Communist party to register with the Attorney General and requiring Communist organizations to provide the government with a list of its members. ● The Act was passed during the Cold War but was later repealed in response to a U.S. Supreme Court decision declaring portions of the Act unconstitutional. — Also termed McCarran Internal Security Act; Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950.

McCarran-Ferguson Act. A federal law allowing a state to regulate insurance companies doing business in that state, and also to levy a tax on them. 15 USCA §§ 1011–1015.

McCarran Internal Security Act. See MCCARRAN ACT.

McClanahan presumption. The presumption that the states do not have jurisdiction to tax members of a Native American tribe who live or work on tribal land. ● The presumption is not limited to tribal members who live or work on a formal reservation. Instead, it includes those who live or work on informal reservations, in dependent tribal communities, and on tribal allotments. McClanahan v. Arizona Tax Comm'n, 411 U.S. 164, 93 S.Ct. 1257 (1973).

McDonnell Douglas test. Employment law.

The principle for applying a shifting burden of proof in employment-discrimination cases, essentially requiring the plaintiff to come forward with evidence of discrimination and the defendant to come forward with evidence showing that the employment action complained of was taken for nondiscriminatory reasons. ● Under this test, the plaintiff is first required to establish a prima facie case of discrimination, as by showing that the plaintiff is a member of a protected group and suffered an adverse employment action. If the plaintiff satisfies that burden, then the defendant must articulate a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employment action complained of. If the defendant satisfies that burden, then the plaintiff must prove that the defendant's stated reason is just a pretext for discrimination and that discrimination was the real reason for the employment action. McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 93 S.Ct. 1817 (1973).

McNabb-Mallory rule. Criminal procedure.

The doctrine that a confession is inadmissible if obtained during an unreasonably long detention period between arrest and a preliminary hearing. ● Because of the broader protections afforded under the Miranda rule, the McNabb-Mallory rule is rarely applied in modern cases. McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332, 63 S.Ct. 608 (1943); Mallory v. United States, 354 U.S. 449, 77 S.Ct. 1356 (1957). — Often shortened to Mallory rule.

McNaghten rules (mik-nawt-ən). Criminal law.

The doctrine that a person is not criminally responsible for an act when a mental disability prevented the person from knowing either (1) the nature and quality of the act, or (2) whether the act was right or wrong. ● The federal courts and most states have adopted this test in some form. McNaghten's Case, 8 Eng. Rep. 718 (H.L. 1843). — Also spelled McNaughten rules; M'Naghten rules; M'Naughten rules. — Also termed right-and-wrong test; right-wrong test. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

nal law is the same as if the facts were as they seemed to him to be." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 959-60 (3d ed. 1982).

McNary comity. The principle that a U.S. district court should not hear a taxpayer's civil-rights challenge to the administration of a state's tax system. Fair Assessment in Real Estate Ass'n v. McNary, 454 U.S. 100, 102 S.Ct. 177 (1981).

mediation (mee-dee-ay-shən), n. 1. A method of nonbinding dispute resolution involving a neutral third party who tries to help the disputing parties reach a mutually agreeable solution. — Also termed conciliation. Cf. ARBITRATION. 2. Int'l law. A neutral country's interference in the controversies of other countries to maintain international stability. — mediate (mee-dee-ayt), vb. — mediatory (mee-dee-ə-tor-ee), adj. — mediator (mee-dee-ay-tər), n.

"The distinction between mediation and conciliation is widely debated among those interested in ADR, arbitration, and international diplomacy. Some suggest that conciliation is 'a nonbinding arbitration,' whereas mediation is merely 'assisted negotiation.' Others put it this way: conciliation involves a third party's trying to bring together disputing parties to help them reconcile their differences, whereas mediation goes further by allowing the third party to suggest terms on which the dispute might be resolved. Still others reject these attempts at differentiation and contend that there is no consensus about what the two words mean — that they are generally interchangeable. Though a distinction would be convenient, those who argue that usage indicates a broad synonymy are most accurate." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 554 (2d ed. 1995).

Mediation and Conciliation Service. A federal agency that tries to prevent the interruption of commerce resulting from labor disputes, by assisting parties in settling their disputes through mediation and conciliation. • The agency can intervene on its own motion or on the motion of a party to the dispute. — Also termed Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. 29 USCA §§ 172, 173.

meliorations (meel-yə-ray-shənz). 1. Scots law. Improvements — other than repairs — on an estate. 2. Lasting improvements.

melioribus damnis. See DE MELIORIBUS DAMNIS.

melius inquirendum (mee-lee-əs in-kwə-ren-dəm), n. [Law Latin "to be better inquired into"] Hist. A writ ordering the escheator to investigate a matter further, as by inquiring who is the next heir of a party who died seised of lands.

member. Military law. A person assigned to a court-martial to determine guilt and punishment.

member bank. See BANK.

member firm. Securities. A brokerage firm with at least one director, officer, or general partner who holds a seat in an organized securities exchange. — Also termed (if organized as a corporation) member corporation.

member of a crew. Maritime law. Under the Jones Act, a person who is attached to a navigating vessel and assists or aids in navigation; SEAMAN.

member of Congress. An elected official who sits in either the U.S. Senate or the House of Representatives. • The official may be appointed to fill an unexpired term. — Abbr. MC.

member of Parliament. A person with the right to sit in one of the two houses of Parliament. — Abbr. MP.

membrana (mem-bray-nə), n. [Latin “parchment”] Hist. 1. A skin of parchment. 2. A notebook of leaves of parchment. • The English rolls were made of several types of parchment and the term membrana was used in referring to them.

membrum (mem-brəm), n. [Latin “limb”] A division of something, esp. a slip or small piece of land.

memorandum. 1. An informal written note or record outlining the terms of a transaction or contract <the memorandum indicated the developer’s intent to buy the property at its appraised value>. • To satisfy the statute of frauds, a memorandum can be written in any form, but it must (1) identify the parties to the contract, (2) indicate the contract’s subject matter, (3) contain the contract’s essential terms, and (4) contain the signature of the party against whom enforcement is sought. — Also termed memorial; note. See STATUTE OF FRAUDS. 2. An informal written communication used esp. in offices <the firm sent a memorandum reminding all lawyers to turn in their timesheets>. — Often shortened to memo. 3. A party’s written statement of its legal arguments presented to the court, usu. in the form of a brief <memorandum of law>. Pl. memoranda, memorandums.

memorandum articles. Marine insurance. Goods described in the memorandum clause. See MEMORANDUM CLAUSE.

memorandum check. See CHECK.

memorandum clause. A marine-insurance clause protecting underwriters from liability for injury to goods that are particularly perishable, or for minor damages.

memorandum decision. See memorandum opinion under OPINION (1).

memorandum in error. A document alleging a factual error, usu. accompanied by an affidavit of proof.

memorandum of alteration. English law. A patentee’s disclaimer of certain rights — such as rights to part of an invention that is not new and useful — to avoid losing the whole patent. • Under former law, if a patent was granted to two inventions, one of which was not new and useful, the entire patent would be defective.

memorandum of association. English law. A legal document setting up a corporation — either with or without limited liability — and including the company’s name, purpose, and duration. See ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

memorandum of intent. See LETTER OF INTENT.

memorandum of understanding. See LETTER OF INTENT.

memorandum opinion. See OPINION (1).

memorial, n. 1. An abstract of a legal record, esp. a deed; MEMORANDUM (1). 2. A written statement of facts presented to a legislature or executive as a petition.

memoriter (mə-mor-ə-tər), adv. [Latin “with an accurate memory”] From memory; by recollection. • Memoriter proof of a written instrument is furnished by the recollection of a witness who knew the instrument.

menacing, n. An attempt to commit common-law assault. • The term is used esp. in jurisdictions that have defined assault to include battery. See ASSAULT.

mendacity (men-das-ə-tee), n. 1. The quality of being untruthful. 2. A lie; falsehood. — mendacious (men-day-shəs), adj.

men of straw. Hist. False witnesses who wandered around courts and were paid to give untrue testimony. • They stuffed straw into their shoes so that advocates could recognize them. See STRAW MAN.

mens (menz), n. [Latin] Mind; intention; will.

mensa. See MANAGIUM.

mensa et thoro (men-sə et thor-oh). [Latin] From bed and board. See divorce a mensa et thoro under DIVORCE.

mensalia (men-say-lee-ə), n. [fr. Latin mensa 'a table'] Parsonages; spiritual livings. — Also termed mensal benefices.

mensis (men-sis), n. [Latin] Roman law. A month.

mens legis (menz lee-jis). [Latin "the mind of the law"] The spirit or purpose of a law.

mens legislatoris (menz lej-is-lə-tor-is). [Latin "the intention of the lawmaker"] Legislative intent.

mentor (men-sor), n. [fr. Latin metiri "to measure"] Roman law. A measurer of land; a surveyor.

mens rea (menz ree-ə). [Law Latin "guilty mind"] The state of mind that the prosecution, to secure a conviction, must prove that a defendant had when committing a crime; criminal intent or recklessness <the mens rea for theft is the intent to deprive the rightful owner of the property>. • Mens rea is the second of two essential elements of every crime at common law, the other being the actus reus. — Also termed mental element; criminal intent; guilty mind. Pl. mentes reae (men-teez ree-ee). Cf. ACTUS REUS.

"There are only two states of mind which constitute mens rea, and they are intention, and recklessness." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 29–30 (16th ed. 1952).

"Most English lawyers would however now agree with Sir James Fitzjames Stephen that the expression mens rea is unfortunate, though too firmly established to be expelled, just because it misleadingly suggests that, in general, moral culpability is essential to a crime, and they would assent to the criticism expressed by a later judge that the true translation of mens rea is 'an intention to do the act which is made penal by statute or by the common law.' [Allard v. Selfridge, (1925) 1 K.B. at 137 (per Shearman, J.).]" H.L.A. Hart, "Legal Responsibility and Excuses," in Punishment and Responsibility 28, 36 (1968).

mensularius (men-sə-lair-ee-əs), n. [fr. Latin mensa "a table"] Roman law. A dealer in money; a moneychanger; a banker.

mensura (men-s[y]oor-ə), n. [Latin] Hist. A measure.

mensura domini regis (men-s[y]oor-ə dom-ə-ni ree-jis). [Law Latin "the measure of our lord the king"] Hist. The standard weights and measures established under Richard I, in his Parliament at Westminster in 1197.

"Thus, under king Richard I, in his parliament holden at Westminster, A.D. 1197, it was ordained that there shall be only one weight and one measure throughout the kingdom, and that the custody of the assise or standard of weights and measures shall be committed to certain persons in every city and borough . . . In king John's time this ordinance of king Richard was frequently dispensed with for money which occasioned a provision to be made for enforcing it . . . These original standards were called pondus regis, and mensura domini regis; and are directed by a variety of subsequent statutes to be kept in the exchequer, and all weights and measures to be made conformable thereto." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 265–66 (1765).

mental anguish. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

mental capacity. See CAPACITY (3).

mental cruelty. See CRUELTY.

mental distress. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

mental element. See MENS REA.

mental illness. 1. A disorder in thought or mood so substantial that it impairs judgment, behavior, perceptions of reality, or the ability to cope with the ordinary demands of life. 2. Mental disease that is severe enough to necessitate care and treatment for the afflicted person's own welfare or the welfare of others in the community.

mental incompetence. See INCOMPETENCY.

mental reservation. One party's silent understanding or exception to the meaning of a contractual provision.

mental shock. See SHOCK.

mental suffering. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

mente captus (mēn-tee kăp-təs). [Latin "captured in mind"] Persons who are habitually insane.

mentes reae (mēn-teez ree-ee). pl. MENS REA.

mentiri (mēn-tī-rī), vb. [Latin] To lie.

mentition (mēn-tīsh-ən), n. [fr. Latin mentitio "lying"] The act of lying.

mera noctis (mēer-ə nok-tīs), n. [Latin "middle of the night"] Midnight.

mercantile (mər-kən-teel or -tīl or -tīl), adj. Of or relating to merchants or trading; commercial <the mercantile system>.

mercantile agent. See AGENT.

mercantile law. See COMMERCIAL LAW (1).

Mercantile Law Amendment Acts. The Mercantile Law Amendment Act of 1856 (19 & 20 Vict., chs. 60, 97) and the Mercantile Law Amendment Act (Scotland) of 1856, passed primarily to reconcile parts of the mercantile laws of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

mercantile paper. See commercial paper (1) under PAPER.

mercative (mər-kay-tiv), adj. [fr. Latin mercaturum "a market"] Scots law. Belonging to trade.

mercatum (mər-kay-təm), n. [Law Latin] A market; a contract of sale; a bargain.

mercedary (mər-sə-der-ee), n. [Latin] An employer; one who hires.

mercenarius (mər-sə-nair-ee-əs), n. [Latin] 1. An employee; a servant. 2. A soldier of fortune. — Also spelled mercennarius.

mercenary (mər-sə-ner-ee). Int'l law. A professional soldier hired by someone other than his or her own government to fight in a foreign country.

mercenlage (mər-sən-law). [fr. Saxon myrcnlag] The law of the Mercians. • This was one of the three principal legal systems prevailing in England at the beginning of the 11th century. It was observed in many midland counties and those bordering on Wales. — Also spelled merchenlage (mər-shən-law). — Also termed lex merciorum (leks mər-shee-or-əm); Mercian law (mər-shee-ən or mər-shən). See DANELAW; WEST SAXON LAW.

"[A]bout the beginning of the eleventh century there were three principal systems of laws prevailing in different districts . . . The Mercen-Lage, or Mercian laws, which were observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales; the retreat of the ancient Britons; and therefore very probably intermixed with the British or Druidical customs." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 65 (1765).

merces (mər-seez), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. An agreed payment for services specifically contracted for.

2. A reward, esp. for a gratuitous service. Cf. HONORARIUM.

"A recompense paid for any kind of services, without a preceding agreement (e.g., for saving one's life) is also called merces." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 581 (1953).

merchandise (mər-chən-dīz also -dīs). Goods that are bought and sold in business; commercial wares.

merchandise broker. See BROKER.

Merchandise Marks Acts. Hist. An 1887 English statute (50 & 51 Vict., ch. 28) making it a misdemeanor to fraudulently mark merchandise for sale or to sell merchandise so marked.

- The statute was repealed in 1968.

merchant. One whose business is buying and selling goods for profit; esp., a person or entity that holds itself out as having expertise peculiar to the goods in which it deals and is therefore held by the law to a higher standard of expertise than a nonmerchant is held. • Because the term relates solely to goods, a supplier of services is not considered a merchant.

merchantable title. See marketable title under TITLE (2).

merchant exception. Contracts. An exemption from the statute of frauds making a contract between merchants enforceable if, within a reasonable time after they reach an oral agreement, a written confirmation of the terms is sent, to which the recipient does not object within ten days of receiving it. • The only effect of failing to object to the written confirmation is that the recipient will be precluded from relying on the statute of frauds — or the lack of a formal, written agreement — as a defense to a breach-of-contract claim. The party seeking to enforce an agreement must still prove that an agreement was reached. UCC § 2-201(2).

merchantman. Archaic. A vessel employed in foreign or interstate commerce or in the merchant service.

merchant's accounts. Current, mutual accounts between merchants showing debits and credits for merchandise.

merchant's defense. The principle that a store owner will not be held liable for reasonably detaining a suspected shoplifter, to facilitate an investigation by a law-enforcement officer, if probable cause exists to suspect the detained person of wrongfully removing merchandise from the store.

merchant seaman. See SEAMAN.

merchant's firm offer. See irrevocable offer under OFFER.

Merchant Shipping Acts. English statutes to improve shipping conditions by, among other things, vesting the superintendence of merchant shipping in the board of trade.

merchet (mər-chet). See MARCHET.

mercheta. See MARCHET.

merchetum. See MARCHET.

merciament (mər-see-ə-mənt). Archaic. See AMERCEMENT.

Mercian law. See MERCENLAGE.

Mercimoniatus Angliae (mər-sə-moh-nee-ay-təs ang-gee-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. English customs duties on merchandise brought into the country.

mercy. Compassionate treatment, as of criminal offenders or of those in distress; esp., imprisonment, rather than death, imposed as punishment for capital murder. See CLEMENCY.

mercy killing. See EUTHANASIA.

mere (mair or mer), n. [Law French] Mother, as in the phrase en ventre sa mere (“in its mother's womb”).

mere-continuation doctrine. A principle under which a successor corporation will be held liable for the acts of a predecessor corporation, if only one corporation remains after the transfer of assets, and both corporations share an identity of stock, shareholders, and directors. — Also termed continuity-of-entity doctrine. Cf. SUBSTANTIAL-CONTINUITY DOCTRINE.

mere-evidence rule. Criminal procedure. The former doctrine that a search warrant allows seizure of the instrumentalities of the crime (such as a murder weapon) or the fruits of the crime (such as stolen goods), but does not permit the seizure of items that have evidentiary value only (such as incriminating documents). ● The Supreme Court has abolished this rule, and today warrants may be issued to search for and seize all evidence of a crime. Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294, 87 S.Ct. 1642 (1967); Fed. R. Crim. P. 41(b).

mere license. See bare license under LICENSE.

mere licensee. See bare licensee under LICENSEE.

mere motu. See EX MERE MOTU.

mere right. An abstract right in property, without possession or even the right of possession. — Also termed jus merum; merum jus; meer dreit.

“The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or even the right of possession. This is frequently spoken of in our books under the name of the mere right, jus merum; and the estate of the owner is in such cases said to be totally divested, and put to a right. A person in this situation may have the true ultimate property of the lands in himself: but by the intervention of certain circumstances, either by his own negligence, the solemn act of his ancestor, or the determination of a court of justice, the presumptive evidence of that right is strongly in favour of his antagonist; who has thereby obtained the absolute right of possession . . . The heir therefore in this case has only a mere right, and must be strictly held to the proof of it, in order to recover the lands.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 197–98 (1766).

merestone (meer-stohn). Archaic. A stone that marks land boundaries. — Also spelled meairstone.

meretricious (mer-ə-trish-əs), adj. 1. Involving prostitution; of an unlawful sexual nature . 2. (Of a romantic relationship) involving either unlawful sexual connection or lack of capacity on the part of one party . 3. Superficially attractive but fake nonetheless; alluring by false show <meretricious advertising claims>.

mergee (mər-jee). A participant in a corporate merger.

merger. 1. The act or an instance of combining or uniting. 2. Contracts. The substitution of a superior form of contract for an inferior form, as when a written contract supersedes all oral agreements and prior understandings.

“Where two parties have made a simple contract for any purpose, and afterwards have entered into an identical engagement by deed, the simple contract is merged in the deed and becomes extinct. This extinction of a lesser in a higher security, like the extinction of a lesser in a greater interest in lands, is called merger.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 85 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

bust-up merger. A merger in which the acquiring corporation sells off lines of business owned by the target corporation to repay the loans used in the acquisition.

cash merger. A merger in which shareholders of the target company must accept cash for their shares. — Also termed cash-out merger; freeze-out merger.

conglomerate merger. A merger between unrelated businesses that are neither competitors nor customers or suppliers of each other.

“A merger which is neither vertical nor horizontal is a conglomerate merger. A pure conglomerate merger is one in which there are no economic relationships between the acquiring and the acquired firm. Mixed conglomerate mergers involve horizontal or vertical relationships, such as the acquisition of a firm producing the same product as the acquirer but selling it in a different geographical market, which is not a horizontal merger because the merging companies are not competitors . . .” 54 Am. Jur. 2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade, and Unfair Trade Practices § 169, at 226 (1996).

de facto merger (di fak-toh). A transaction that has the economic effect of a statutory merger but that is cast in the form of an acquisition or sale of assets or voting stock. ● Although such a transaction does not meet the statutory requirements for a merger, a court will generally treat it as a statutory merger for purposes of the appraisal remedy.

downstream merger. A merger of a parent corporation into its subsidiary.

forward triangular merger. See triangular merger.

freeze-out merger. See cash merger.

horizontal merger. A merger between two or more businesses that are on the same market level because they manufacture similar products in the same geographic region; a merger of direct competitors. — Also termed horizontal integration.

product-extension merger. A merger in which the products of the acquired company are complementary to those of the acquiring company and may be produced with similar facilities, marketed through the same channels, and advertised by the same media.

reverse triangular merger. A merger in which the acquiring corporation's subsidiary is absorbed into the target corporation, which becomes a new subsidiary of the acquiring corporation. — Also termed reverse subsidiary merger.

short-form merger. A merger that is less expensive and time-consuming than an ordinary statutory merger, usu. permitted when a subsidiary merges into a parent that already owns most of the subsidiary's shares. ● Such a merger is generally accomplished when the parent adopts a merger resolution, mails a copy of the plan to the subsidiary's record shareholders, and files the executed articles of merger with the secretary of state, who issues a certificate of merger.

statutory merger. A merger provided by and conducted according to statutory requirements.

stock merger. A merger involving one company's purchase of another company's capital stock.

triangular merger. A merger in which the target corporation is absorbed into the acquiring corporation's subsidiary, with the target's shareholders receiving stock in the parent corporation. — Also termed subsidiary merger; forward triangular merger.

upstream merger. A merger of a subsidiary corporation into its parent.

vertical merger. A merger between businesses occupying different levels of operation for the same product, such as between a manufacturer and a retailer; a merger of buyer and seller.

8. The blending of the rights of a creditor and debtor, resulting in the extinguishment of the creditor's right to collect the debt. ● As originally developed in Roman law, a merger resulted from the marriage of a debtor and creditor, or when a debtor became the creditor's heir. — Also termed confusion; confusion of debts; confusion of rights. Cf. CONFUSION OF TITLES.

merger clause. See INTEGRATION CLAUSE.

merger of offenses. See MERGER (4).

meritorious (mer-ə-tor-ee-əs), adj. 1. (Of an act, etc.) meriting esteem or reward <meritorious trial performance>. 2. (Of a case, etc.) meriting a legal victory; having legal worth <meritorious claim>.

meritorious consideration. See good consideration under CONSIDERATION.

meritorious defense. See DEFENSE (1).

merit regulation. Under state blue-sky laws, the practice of requiring securities offerings not only to be accompanied by a full and adequate disclosure but also to be substantively fair, just, and equitable.

merits. 1. The elements or grounds of a claim or defense; the substantive considerations to be taken into account in deciding a case, as opposed to extraneous or technical points, esp. of procedure <trial on the merits>. 2. EQUITY (3) <on questions of euthanasia, the Supreme Court has begun to concern itself with the merits as well as the law>.

merit system. The practice of hiring and promoting employees, esp. government employees, based on their competence rather than political favoritism. Cf. SPOILS SYSTEM.

Merit Systems Protection Board. A federal agency with jurisdiction to review civil-service-employee appeals and related matters, such as actions brought by the Office of Special Counsel. The Board succeeded to certain functions of the Civil Service Commission.

Merrill doctrine. The principle that the government cannot be estopped from disavowing an agent's unauthorized act. Federal Crop Ins. Corp. v. Merrill, 332 U.S. 380, 68 S.Ct. 1 (1947).

merum (meer-əm). [Latin] Hist. Mere; naked.

merum jus (meer-əm jəs). See MERE RIGHT.

merx (mærks). [Latin] Hist. Trade articles; merchandise.

mescreant (mes-kree-awnt or mis-kree-ənt). [Law French] Hist. MISCREANT. — Also termed mescroyant.

mesne (meez or mees), n. [Law French] Hist. A house. — Also spelled mees; meas.

mesnalty (meen-əl-tee), n. [fr. Law French and English mesne "middle"] Hist. 1. The estate or manor held by a mesne lord. 2. The right of the mesne; the tenure of the mesne lord. — Also spelled mesnality. See MESNE LORD.

mesne (meen), adj. Occupying a middle position; intermediate or intervening <the mesne encumbrance has priority over the third mortgage, but is subordinate to the first mortgage>.

mesne, writ of. See DE MEDIO.

mesne assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

mesne conveyance. See CONVEYANCE.

mesne encumbrance. See ENCUMBRANCE.

mesne lord. Hist. A feudal lord who stood between a tenant and the chief lord, and held land from a superior lord. See LORD (3).

mesne process. See PROCESS.

mesne profits. See PROFIT.

mesonomic (mes-ə-nom-ik also mee-zə-), adj. Of, relating to, or involving an act that, although it does not affect a person's physical freedom, has legal consequences in its evolution. • This term was coined by the philosopher Albert Kocourek in his book Jural Relations (1927). Cf. ZYGNOMIC.

message. A written or oral communication, often sent through a messenger or other agent, or electronically (e.g., through e-mail or voice-mail).

annual message. A message from the President or a governor given at the opening of an annual legislative session.

Presidential message. A communication from the President to the U.S. Congress on matters pertaining to the state of the union, esp. of matters requiring legislative consideration. U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. — Also termed State of the Union.

special message. A message from the President or a governor relating to a particular matter.

veto message. See VETO MESSAGE.

message from the Crown. An official communication from the sovereign to Parliament.

messarius (mə-sair-ee-əs), n. [fr. Latin messis] Hist. A chief servant; a bailiff; an overseer of the harvest.

messenger. 1. One who conveys a communication; esp., one employed to deliver telegrams or other communications. 2. Hist. An officer who performs certain ministerial duties, such as taking temporary charge of assets of an insolvent estate.

messuage (mes-wij). A dwelling house together with the curtilage, including any outbuildings. See CURTILAGE.

meta (mee-tə). [Latin] 1. Roman law. The mark where a racecourse ends or around which chariots turn; by extension, a limit in space or time. 2. Hist. A boundary; a border.

metalaw (met-ə-law). A hypothetical set of legal principles based on the rules of existing legal systems and designed to provide a framework of agreement for these different systems.

"[T]he Constitution controls the deployment of governmental power and defines the rules for how such power may be structured and applied. The Constitution, therefore, is not a body of rules about ordinary private actions, but a collection of rules about the rules and uses of law: in a word, metalaw." Laurence H. Tribe, Constitutional Choices 246 (1985).

metallum (mə-tal-əm), n. Roman law. 1. Metal; a mine. 2. Labor in mines as punishment for a crime. • This was one of the most severe punishments short of death.

metatus (mə-tay-təs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A dwelling; quarters; a seat.

metayer system (me-tay-yər or met-ə-yay). An agricultural system in which land is divided into small farms among single families who pay a landlord a fixed portion — usu. half — of the produce and the landlord provides the stock. ● The system was formerly prevalent in parts of France and Italy, and in the southern part of the United States. — Also written métayer system.

metecorn (meet-korn). Archaic. A portion of corn a lord pays a tenant for labor.

metegavel (meet-gav-əl). Archaic. A rent or tribute paid in supplies of food.

metelotage (me-te-loh-tahzh). [French] 1. French law. The leasing of a ship. 2. A seaman's wages.

mete out, vb. To dispense or measure out (justice, punishment, etc.) <shortly after the jury returned its verdict, the judge meted out an appropriate punishment>.

meter. 1. A metric unit of length equal to 39.368 inches. 2. An instrument of measurement used to measure use or consumption, esp. used by a utility company to measure utility consumption   .

meter rate. A rate that a utility company applies to determine a charge for service <meter rate based on kilowatt-hours of electricity>.

metes and bounds (meets). The territorial limits of real property as measured by distances and angles from designated landmarks and in relation to adjoining properties. ● Metes and bounds are usu. described in deeds and surveys to establish the boundary lines of land. — Also termed butts and bounds; lines and corners.

metewand (meet-wahnd). Archaic. A measuring staff of varying lengths.

meteyard (meet-yahrd). Archaic. A metewand that is one yard long.

method. A mode of organizing, operating, or performing something, esp. to achieve a goal <method of election> <method of performing a job>.

metric system. A decimal system for measuring length, weight, area, or volume, based on the meter as a unit length and the kilogram as a unit mass.

metropolitan, adj. Of or relating to a city or metropolis.

metropolitan, n. Eccles. law. An archbishop; the head of a province <the Archbishop of Canterbury is a metropolitan>.

metropolitan council. An official or quasi-official body appointed or elected by voters of a metropolitan area to provide for the unified administration of services (such as sewage disposal or public transportation) to the cities and towns within the metropolitan area.

metropolitan district. See DISTRICT.

metteshep (meet-shəp). Hist. 1. An acknowledgment paid in a measure of corn. 2. A penalty imposed on a tenant for neglect of duty, such as failing to cut the lord's corn. — Also spelled mettenschep.

metus (mee-təs). [Latin] Roman law. 1. Fear of imminent danger; apprehension of serious danger, esp. in the form of duress to force a person to do something.

"Fear (metus) had the same effect as fraud as regards the avoidance of the contract. It might be set up by way of defence (exceptio metus) or be the ground of restitutio in integrum, or give rise to an action (actio metus) It was not any kind of fear which grounded this action. The evil threatened must be of a serious character" R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 352 (4th ed. 1956).

2. A threat by which damage is done to another's property.

meubles (muu-bəl or myoo-blə), n. [Law French] Movables, such as household utensils. See MOVABLES.

Mexican divorce. See DIVORCE.

Michaelmas sitting (mik-əl-məs). Hist. A term of English common-law courts, running from November 2 to November 25.

miche (mich), vb. Hist. To hide; to sneak; to play truant. — Also spelled mitch.

michery (mich-ər-ee). Hist. Theft; cheating.

Midcal test. Antitrust. The doctrine that the anticompetitive acts of a private party will be considered state acts — and thereby protected from liability under the antitrust laws — if the acts are within a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed policy of the state, and if the conduct is actively supervised by the state. California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100 S.Ct. 937 (1980). See STATE-ACTION DOCTRINE; ACTIVE SUPERVISION.

mid-channel. See MIDDLE LINE OF MAIN CHANNEL.

middle burden of proof. A level of required persuasion, between the preponderance-of-the-evidence standard and the beyond-a-reasonable-doubt standard, by which a party is required to prove a fact by clear and convincing evidence. See clear and convincing evidence under EVIDENCE.

middle-level scrutiny. See INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY.

middle line of main channel. The equidistant point in the main channel of the river between the well-defined banks on either shore; the middle thread of a river's current. — Also termed mid-channel; middle of the river.

middleman. An intermediary or agent between two parties; esp., a dealer (such as a wholesaler) who buys from producers and sells to retailers or consumers.

middle management. See MANAGEMENT.

middle of the river. See MIDDLE LINE OF MAIN CHANNEL.

middle-of-the-road test. See HYDRAFLOW TEST.

middle thread. The center line of something; esp., an imaginary line drawn lengthwise through the middle of a stream's current.

mid-level scrutiny. See INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY.

midnight deadline. A time limit for doing something, ending at midnight on a particular day. • For a bank, the midnight deadline is midnight on the next banking day following the day on which the bank receives the relevant item or from which the time for taking action begins to run, whichever is later. UCC § 4-104(a)(10).

midsummer-day. The summer solstice, usu. occurring about June 22. • It was formerly one of the four quarter-days for the payment of rents.

midway. See THALWEG.

Midwest Piping rule. Labor law. The doctrine that an employer may not recognize multiple unions during a period in which there are conflicting claims of representation. Midwest Piping & Supply Co., 63 NLRB Dec. (CCH) 1060 (1945).

migrant worker. Int'l law. A person who works seasonally as an agricultural laborer in a foreign country.

migration. Movement (of people or animals) from one country or region to another.

migratory corporation. See CORPORATION.

migratory divorce. See DIVORCE.

Mike O'Connor rule. Labor law. The doctrine that unilateral changes that an employer makes after a union victory in an initial-representation election — but before the employer's objections have been resolved — are automatic violations of the National Labor Relations Act if the employer's objections are rejected. • If the employer's objections are sustained, any failure-to-bargain charge will be dismissed because the employer had no duty to bargain. But if the employer's objections are rejected, the employer is considered to have been under a duty to bargain as of the date of the election, which is why the unilateral changes are automatic violations of the Act. Mike O'Connor Chevrolet-Buick-GMC Co., 209 NLRB Dec. (CCH) 701 (1974).

mild exigency. A circumstance that justifies a law-enforcement officer's departure from the knock-and-announce rule, such as the likelihood that the building's occupants will try to escape, resist arrest, or destroy evidence. See KNOCK-AND-ANNOUNCE RULE.

mile. 1. A measure of distance equal to 5,280 feet. — Also termed statute mile. 2. NAUTICAL MILE.

mileage. 1. The distance in miles between two points. 2. The distance a vehicle has traveled as reflected by an odometer. 3. An allowance paid for travel expenses, as of a witness or public employee.

miles (mi-leez), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A soldier. 2. Hist. A knight.

militare (mil-ə-tair-ee), vb. [Latin] 1. Roman law. To serve as a soldier. • This verb later referred to serving in public office, civil or military. 2. Hist. To be knighted.

military, adj. 1. Of or relating to the armed forces <military base>. 2. Of or relating to war <military action>.

military, n. The armed forces.

military board. A group of persons appointed to act as a fact-finding agency or as an advisory body to the appointing military authority.

military bounty land. Land offered to members of the military as a reward for services. See donation land under LAND.

military commission. A court, usu. composed of both civilians and military officers, that is modeled after a court-martial and that tries and decides cases concerning martial-law violations. See COURT-MARTIAL.

military-contractor defense. The principle that a manufacturer who produces equipment for the military is immune from tort liability, to the same extent as the federal government, if the manufacturer did not design the equipment, participated minimally in the design, or received government authorization to proceed with a design after warning the government of the possible dangers of the design and of possible alternative designs.

military court. A court that has jurisdiction over members of the armed forces and that enforces the Code of Military Justice. See CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE.

military court of inquiry. A military court that has special and limited jurisdiction and that is convened to investigate specific matters and, traditionally, to determine whether further procedures are warranted. 10 USCA § 935.

military government. Int'l law. The control of all or most public functions within a country, or the assumption and exercise of governmental functions, by military forces or individual members of those forces; government exercised by a military commander under the direction of the executive or sovereign, either externally during a foreign war or internally during a civil war. • A military government's actions supersede all local law. See MARTIAL LAW.

military judge. A commissioned officer of the armed forces who is on active duty and is a member of a bar of a federal court or of the highest court of a state. • The Judge Advocate General of the particular service must certify a military judge as qualified for duty. A military judge of a general court-martial must also be a member of an independent judiciary. A military judge is detailed to every general court-martial and usu. to a special court-martial.

military jurisdiction. The three types of governmental power given the military by the U.S. Constitution — specif., jurisdiction under military law, jurisdiction under military government, and jurisdiction under martial law.

military justice. A structure of punitive measures designed to foster order, morale, and discipline within the military.

military law. The branch of public law governing military discipline and other rules regarding service in the armed forces. • It is exercised both in peacetime and in war, is recognized by civil courts, and includes rules far broader than for the punishment of offenders. — Also termed military justice. — Sometimes loosely termed martial law. Cf. MARTIAL LAW.

"Military Law . . . is largely, but not exclusively, statutory in character, and prescribes the rights of, and imposes duties and obligations upon, the several classes of persons composing its military establishment; it creates military tribunals, endows them with appropriate jurisdiction and regulates their procedure; it also defines military offenses and, by the imposition of adequate penalties, endeavors to prevent their occurrence." George B. Davis, A Treatise on the Military Law of the United States 1 (3d ed. 1915).

military leave. A policy contained in employment policies or collective-bargaining agreements allowing a long-term leave of absence — without an accompanying loss of benefits — for a person in active service in the U.S. armed forces.

military necessity. Int'l law. A principle of warfare that permits enough coercive force to achieve a desired end, as long as the force used is not more than is called for by the situation. •

This principle dates from the Hague Convention on Laws and Customs of War on Land of October 18, 1907, which prohibits the destruction or seizure of enemy property "unless such destruction or seizure be imperatively demanded by the necessities of war."

military objective. Int'l law. An object that by its nature, location, or use contributes to military action, and is thus susceptible to attack. ● Under Geneva Convention Protocol 1 (1977), only military — rather than civilian — objects are proper targets.

military offense. An offense, such as desertion, that lies within the jurisdiction of a military court. See COURT-MARTIAL.

military officer. A person who has command in the armed forces.

Military Rules of Evidence. The rules of evidence applicable to military law and courts-martial. — Abbr. MRE.

military tenure. See TENURE.

military testament. See soldier's will under WILL.

militate (mil-ə-tayt), vb. To exert a strong influence <the evidence of police impropriety militates against a conviction>. Cf. MITIGATE.

militēs (mil-ə-teez), n. 1. Roman law. Members of the military. 2. Hist. Knights who are part of the royal army, by virtue of feudal tenure.

"[Knights] are also called in our law militēs, because they formed a part of the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures; one condition of which was, that every one who held a knight's fee immediately under the crown ... was obliged to be knighted and attend the king in his wars, or fine for his non-compliance." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 404 (1765).

3. Scots law. Freeholders holding estates from barons.

militia (mə-lish-ə). 1. A body of citizens armed and trained, esp. by a state, for military service apart from the regular armed forces. ● The Constitution recognizes a state's right to form a "well-regulated militia" but also grants Congress the power to activate, organize, and govern a federal militia. U.S. Const. amend. II; U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15–16. See NATIONAL GUARD. 2. Roman law. Military service.

Militia Clause. One of two clauses of the U.S. Constitution giving Congress the power to call forth, arm, and maintain a military force to enforce compliance with its laws, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

mill. 1. A machine that grinds corn, grain, or other substances, esp. using a wheel and circular motion. ● The substance ground in a mill is sometimes called grist, esp. when it is a grain. Courts sometimes refer to the grinding process as a metaphor for the judicial process <suits to collect on promissory notes are grist for the summary-judgment mill because the material facts in such cases are often undisputed>. 2. The building in which the grinding is performed, along with the site, dam, or other items connected with the mill. 3. The tenth part of a cent.

millage rate. See MILL RATE.

Miller Act. A federal law requiring the posting of performance and payment bonds before an award is made for a contract for construction, alteration, or repair of a public work or building. 40 USCA §§ 270a–270d–1.

Miller–Tydings Act. A federal law, enacted in 1937 as an amendment to the Sherman Act, exempting fair-trade laws from the application of the Sherman Act and legalizing resale-price-maintenance agreements between producers and retailers of products. ● The Act was repealed by the Consumer Goods Pricing Act of 1975.

Miller v. Shugart agreement. A settlement in which an insured consents to a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, on the condition that the plaintiff will satisfy the judgment only out of proceeds from the insured's policy, and will not seek recovery against the insured personally. ● Although the phrase takes its name from a Minnesota case, it is used in other jurisdictions as well. Miller v. Shugart, 316 N.W.2d 729 (Minn. 1982).

milling in transit. An arrangement in which a shipment is temporarily detained at an intermediate point, usu. for the application of some manufacturing process, with or without an increase of a freight charge by the carrier.

mill power. A unit of water power used in defining quantities and weights of water available to a lessee.

mill privilege. The right of a mill-site owner to construct a mill and to use power from the stream to operate the mill, with due regard to the rights of other owners along the stream's path.

mill rate. A tax applied to real property whereby each mill represents $1 of tax assessment per $1,000 of the property's assessed value <the mill rate for taxes in this county is 10 mills, so for a home valued at $100,000, the owner will pay $1,000 in property taxes>. — Also termed millage rate.

mill site. 1. A small tract of land on or contiguous to a watercourse, suitable for the erection and operation of a mill. 2. Mining law. A small parcel of nonmineral public land (not exceeding five acres) claimed and occupied by an owner of a mining claim because the extra space is needed for mining or ore-reduction operations. 30 USCA § 42.

Mimms order. A police officer's command for a motorist to get out of the vehicle. • A Mimms order need not be independently justified if the initial stop was lawful. Pennsylvania v. Mimms, 434 U.S. 106, 98 S.Ct. 330 (1977).

mina (MI-nə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A measure of grain or corn.

minage (mi-nij), n. [Law French] Hist. A toll for selling grain or corn by the mina.

minare (mi-nair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To mine.

mind. 1. The source of thought and intellect; the seat of mental faculties. 2. The ability to will, direct, or assent. 3. Memory.

mind and memory. Archaic. A testator's mental capacity to make a will <she argued that her uncle was not of sound mind and memory when executing the will because he had Alzheimer's disease>. • This phrase was generally used as part of the phrase of sound mind and memory, referring to the capacity of a testator to make a will. See BONA MEMORIA; CAPACITY.

mine. 1. An underground excavation used to obtain minerals, ores, or other substances. 2. A mineral deposit; a place containing a mineral deposit.

mineral, n. Any natural inorganic matter that has a definite chemical composition and specific physical properties that give it value <most minerals are crystalline solids>.

mineral deed. See DEED.

mineral district. A particular region of the country where valuable minerals are typically found and mined.

mineral entry. The right of entry on public land to mine valuable mineral deposits.

mineral interest. See MINERAL RIGHT.

mineral land. See LAND.

mineral lease. See LEASE.

mineral lode. A mineral bed of rock with definite boundaries in a general mass of a mountain; any belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries that clearly separate it from neighboring rock. — Also termed lode.

"Typically, a lode is a concentration of valuable mineral with boundaries sufficiently distinct to import such a definite trend, continuity, and apartness to the formation that it can be traced through the enclosing mass of rock." 1 American Law of Mining § 32.02(2), at 32-7 (2d ed. 1998).

mineral right. The right to search for, develop, and remove minerals from land or to receive a royalty based on the production of minerals. • Such a right is usu. granted by a mineral lease. — Also termed mineral interest. See SUBSURFACE RIGHT. Cf. SURFACE RIGHT.

mineral royalty. See ROYALTY (2).

mineral servitude. See SERVITUDE (1).

minerator (min-ər-ay-tər). [Law Latin] A miner.

miner's inch. A measurement of water discharge, equaling nine-gallons per minute from a one-inch square pipe. • The precise measurement of a miner's inch varies in different localities.

minimal contacts. See MINIMUM CONTACTS.

minimalist retributivism. See RETRIBUTIVISM.

minimal participant. Criminal law. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, a defendant who is among the least culpable of a group of criminal actors, as when the defendant does not understand the scope or structure of the criminal enterprise or the actions of the other members of the group. • The offense level for a crime of a minimal participant can be decreased by four levels. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3B1.2(a). Cf. MINOR PARTICIPANT.

minimal scrutiny. See RATIONAL-BASIS TEST.

mini-maxi, n. An underwriting arrangement for a securities transaction, whereby a broker is required to sell the minimum number of securities on an all-or-none basis and the balance on a best-efforts basis. See UNDERWRITING (2).

miniment (min-ə-mənt). See MUNIMENT.

minimization requirement. Criminal law. The mandate that police officers acting under an eavesdropping warrant must use the wiretap in a way that will intercept the fewest possible conversations that are not subject to the warrant.

minimum, adj. Of, relating to, or constituting the smallest acceptable or possible quantity in a given case <minimum charge to a customer of a public utility>.

minimum contacts. A nonresident defendant's forum-state connections, such as business activity or actions foreseeably leading to business activity, that are substantial enough to bring the defendant within the forum-state court's personal jurisdiction without offending traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154 (1945). — Also termed minimal contacts.

minimum-fee schedule. Hist. A list of the lowest fees that a lawyer may charge, set by a state bar association. • The courts held that miniimum-fee schedules, now defunct, violated anti-trust laws.

minimum lot. See LOT (1).

minimum-royalty clause. Patents. A royalty-agreement provision that prescribes a fixed payment by the licensee to the patent owner, regardless of whether the invention is used or not.

minimum sale. See EXHIBITION VALUE.

minimum scrutiny. See RATIONAL-BASIS TEST.

minimum sentence. See SENTENCE.

minimum tax. See alternative minimum tax under TAX.

minimum wage. See WAGE.

mining. The process of extracting ore or minerals from the ground; the working of a mine. • This term also encompasses oil and gas drilling.

mining claim. A parcel of land that contains precious metal in its soil or rock and that is appropriated by a person according to established rules and customs known as the process of location. See LOCATION (4).

lode claim. A mining claim (on public land) to a well-defined vein embedded in rock; a mining claim to a mineral lode.

placer claim. A mining claim that is not a lode claim; a claim where the minerals are not located in veins or lodes within rock, but are usu. in softer ground near the earth's surface.

"It has long been recognized that the distinction between lode and placer claims must be tempered by scientific findings as to the nature of the mineral deposits under consideration, and the practicalities of modern mining methods, which may permit the use of surface mining methods to remove certain lodes or veins of minerals previously only reached by underground methods." 53A Am. Jur. 2d Mines and Minerals § 21, at 273 (1996).

mining location. See LOCATION (4), (5).

mining partnership. An association of persons to jointly share a mining business, including the profits, expenses, and losses. • The partnership has features of both a tenancy in common and an ordinary commercial partnership.

"It has generally been held that the law governing ordinary commercial or trading partnerships applies, with a few exceptions, to mining partnerships. The principal exception and the main distinction between mining partnerships and commercial partnerships generally is based on the fact that the principle of delectus personae, meaning the right of a partner to exercise choice and preference as to the admission of any new members to the firm, and as to the persons to be so admitted, does not apply to mining partnerships . . ." 58 C.J.S. Mines and Minerals § 387, at 380 (1998).

mining rent. Consideration given for a mining lease, whether the lease creates a tenancy, conveys a fee, or grants a mere license or incorporeal right.

minister, n. 1. A person acting under another's authority; an agent. 2. A prominent government officer appointed to manage an executive or administrative department. 3. A diplomatic representative, esp. one ranking below an ambassador.

foreign minister. 1. A minister of foreign affairs, who in many countries is equivalent to the U.S. Secretary of State. 2. An ambassador, minister, or envoy from a foreign government.

minister plenipotentiary (plen-ə-pə-ten-shee-er-ee). A minister ranking below an ambassador but possessing full power and authority as a governmental representative, esp. as an envoy of a sovereign ruler. ● This officer is often regarded as the personal representative of a head of state.

public minister. A high diplomatic representative such as an ambassador, envoy, or resident, but not including a commercial representative such as a consul.

4. A person authorized by a Christian church to perform religious functions.

ministerial, adj. Of or relating to an act that involves obedience to instructions or laws instead of discretion, judgment, or skill <the court clerk's ministerial duties include recording judgments on the docket>.

ministerial-function test. The principle that the First Amendment disallows judicial resolution of an employment-discrimination claim under Title VII, if the employee's responsibilities are religious in nature, as in acting as a liaison between a religion and its adherents, spreading faith, participating in church governance, supervising a religious order, and supervising participation in religious ritual and worship. 42 USCA § 2000e-1(a). See TITLE VII OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964.

ministerial officer. See OFFICER (1).

ministerial trust. See passive trust under TRUST.

minister plenipotentiary. See MINISTER.

ministrant (min-ə-strənt). 1. One who ministers; a dispenser. 2. Hist. Eccles. law. A party who cross-examines a witness.

ministri regis (mi-nis-tri ree-jis). [Latin] Hist. Ministers of the king. ● This term was applied to judges and ministerial officers.

minitrial. A private, voluntary, and informal form of dispute resolution in which each party's attorney presents an abbreviated version of its case to a neutral third party and to the opponent's representatives, who have settlement authority. ● The third party may render an advisory opinion on the anticipated outcome of litigation. Cf. summary jury trial under TRIAL.

minor, n. A person who has not reached full legal age; a child or juvenile. — Also termed infant.

emancipated minor. A minor who is self-supporting and independent of parental control, usu. as a result of a court order. See EMANCIPATION.

minor aetas (mi-nər ee-tas). [Latin] Hist. Lesser age; minority; infancy.

minora regalia (mi-nor-ə ri-gay-lee-ə). See reglia minora under REGALIA.

minor crime. See MISDEMEANOR.

minor dispute. See DISPUTE.

minor fact. See FACT.

minority. 1. The state or condition of being under legal age. — Also termed infancy; nonage. Cf. MAJORITY (1). 2. A group having fewer than a controlling number of votes. Cf. MAJORITY (2). 3. A group that is different in some respect (such as race or religious belief) from the majority and that is sometimes treated differently as a result; a member of such a group. ● Some courts have held that the term minority, in this sense, is not limited to a group that is outnumbered. It may also be applied to a group that has been traditionally discriminated against or socially suppressed, even if its minority discount. A reduction in the value of a closely held business's shares that are owned by someone who has only a minority interest in the business. • The concept underlying a minority discount is recognition that controlling shares — those owned by someone who can control the business — are worth more in the market than noncontrolling shares. But when dissenting shareholders object to a corporate act, such as a merger, and become entitled to have their shares appraised and bought by the corporation, many courts hold that incorporating a minority discount into the valuation of the dissenters' shares is inequitable and is not permitted. See APPRAISAL REMEDY.

minority opinion. See dissenting opinion under OPINION (1).

minority shareholder. See SHAREHOLDER.

minor participant. Criminal law. Under the federal sentencing guidelines, a defendant who is less culpable for a crime than the other members of the group committing the crime, but who has more culpability than a minimal participant. • A defendant who is a minor participant can have the offense level for the crime decreased by two levels. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 3B1.2(b). Cf. MINIMAL PARTICIPANT.

minor's estate. See ESTATE.

mint, n. 1. A government-authorized place for coining money. 2. A large supply, esp. of money.

mintage. 1. The mint's charge for coining money. 2. The product of minting; money.

mint-mark. An authorized mark on a coin showing where it was minted.

minus (mī-nəs). [Latin] Roman law. Less; less than; not at all. • A debt remaining wholly unpaid was called minus solutum.

minus Latium. See LATIUM MINUS.

minute book. 1. A book in which a court clerk enters minutes of court proceedings. 2. A record of the subjects discussed and actions taken at a corporate directors' or shareholders' meeting. — Also termed minutes book.

minute entry. See minute order (1) under ORDER (2).

minutes. 1. Memoranda or notes of a transaction or proceeding. 2. Scots law. Written forms for preserving evidence.

"When it is necessary to preserve evidence of any incidental judicial act or statement, this is done in the Court of Session, and also in the inferior courts, by a minute. Thus, where the pursuer restricts his libel, or makes a reference to the defender's oath . . . this is done by a minute. Strictly speaking, those minutes ought to be prepared by the clerk of court, as their form imports. They commence with the name of the counsel . . . and purport to be a statement made by him . . ." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 721 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

minutes book. See MINUTE BOOK.

minutio (mī-n[y]oo-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. A lessening or reduction. See DEMINUTIO.

Miranda hearing (mə-ran-də). A pretrial proceeding held to determine whether the Miranda rule has been followed and thus whether the prosecutor may introduce into evidence the defendant's statements to the police made after arrest. See MIRANDA RULE.

Miranda rule. The doctrine that a criminal suspect in police custody must be informed of certain constitutional rights before being interrogated. • The suspect must be advised of the right to remain silent, the right to have an attorney present during questioning, and the right to have an attorney appointed if the suspect cannot afford one. If the suspect is not advised of these rights or does not validly waive them, any evidence obtained during the interrogation cannot be used against the suspect at trial. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602 (1966).

Mirandize (mə-ran-dīz), vb. Slang. To read (an arrestee) rights under the Miranda rule <the defendant was arrested, Mirandized, and interrogated>. See MIRANDA RULE.

mirror-image rule. Contracts. The doctrine that the acceptance of a contractual offer must be positive, unconditional, unequivocal, and unambiguous, and must not change, add to, or qualify the terms of the offer; the common-law principle that for a contract to be formed, the terms of an acceptance must correspond exactly with those of the offer. • In modern commercial contexts, the mirror-image rule has been replaced by UCC § 2-207, which allows parties to enforce their agreement despite minor discrepancies between the offer and the acceptance. — Also termed ribbon-matching rule. See BATTLE OF THE FORMS.

“If an offeree purports to accept an offer but in doing so adds various conditions and qualifications of his own, is the acceptance binding on the offeror, at least in part? Generally speaking, the answer is no: the common law rule, reflected in Restatement Section 59, is that a statement of acceptance is effective only if it is a mirror image of the offer and expresses unconditional assent to all of the terms and conditions imposed by the offeror.” Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 54 (1990).

misà (mī-zə). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The issue in a writ of right; a mise. 2. An agreement; a compromise.

misadministration. See MALADMINISTRATION.

misadventure. 1. A mishap or misfortune. 2. Homicide committed accidentally by a person doing a lawful act and having no intent to injure; ACCIDENTAL KILLING.

misallege, vb. To erroneously assert (a fact, a claim, etc.).

misapplication, n. The improper or illegal use of funds or property lawfully held. — misap- ply, vb.

misappropriation, n. The application of another's property or money dishonestly to one's own use. — misappropriate, vb. See EMBEZZLEMENT. Cf. APPROPRIATION; EXPROPRIATION.

misappropriation theory. Securities. The doctrine that a person who wrongfully uses confidential information to buy or sell securities in violation of a duty owed to the one who is the information source is guilty of securities fraud.

misbehavior in office. See official misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

misbranding, n. The act or an instance of labeling one's product falsely or in a misleading way. • Misbranding is prohibited by federal and state law. — misbrand, vb.

miscarriage of justice. A grossly unfair outcome in a judicial proceeding, as when a defendant is convicted despite a lack of evidence on an essential element of the crime. — Also termed failure of justice.

miscegenation (mi-sej-ə-nay-shən). A marriage between persons of different races, formerly considered illegal in some jurisdictions. • In 1967, the U.S. Supreme Court held that laws banning interracial marriages are unconstitutional. Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817 (1967). But for years, such laws technically remained on the books in some states. The last remaining state-law ban on interracial marriages was a provision in the state constitution of Alabama. The Alabama legislature voted to repeal the ban, subject to a vote of the state's citizens, in 1999. — Also termed mixed marriage, interracial marriage.

miscellaneous itemized deduction. See DEDUCTION.

mischarge. An erroneous jury instruction that may be grounds for reversing a verdict. — Also termed misdirection.

mischief (mis-chəf). 1. A condition in which a person suffers a wrong or is under some hardship, esp. one that a statute seeks to remove or for which equity provides a remedy <this legislation seeks to eliminate the mischief of racially restrictive deed covenants>. 2. Injury or damage caused by a specific person or thing <the vandals were convicted of criminal mischief>. 3. The act causing such injury or damage <their mischief damaged the abbey>.

mischief rule. In statutory construction, the doctrine that a statute should be interpreted by first identifying the problem (or “mischief”) that the statute was designed to remedy and then adopting a construction that will suppress the problem and advance the remedy. — Also termed rule in Heydon's Case; purpose approach. Cf. GOLDEN RULE; PLAIN-MEANING RULE; EQUITY-OF-THE-STATUTE RULE.

misconduct (mis-kon-dəkt). 1. A dereliction of duty; unlawful or improper behavior.

affirmative misconduct. 1. An affirmative act of misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact; intentional wrongful behavior. • Some courts hold that there must be an ongoing pattern of misrepresentation or false promises, as opposed to an isolated act of providing misinformation. 2. With respect to a claim of estoppel against the federal government, a misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact by a government employee — beyond a merely innocent or negligent misrepresentation.

juror misconduct. A juror's violation of the court's charge or the law, committed either during trial or in deliberations after trial, such as (1) communicating with outsiders, witnesses, attorneys, bailiffs, or judges about the case, (2) bringing into the jury room information about the case but not in evidence, and (3) conducting experiments regarding theories of the case outside the court's presence.

official misconduct. A public officer's corrupt violation of assigned duties by malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance. — Also termed misconduct in office; misbehavior in office; malconduct in office; misdemeanor in office; corruption in office; official corruption.

wanton misconduct. An act, or a failure to act when there is a duty to do so, in reckless disregard of another's rights, coupled with the knowledge that injury will probably result. — Also termed wanton and reckless misconduct.

willful misconduct. Misconduct committed voluntarily and intentionally.

"This term of art [willful misconduct] has defied definition, but it is clear that it means something more than negligence. Two classic examples of misconduct which will defeat the seaman's claim are intoxication and venereal disease." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 185-86 (3d ed. 1996).

2. An attorney's dishonesty or attempt to persuade a court or jury by using deceptive or reprehensible methods.

miscontinuance. A continuance erroneously ordered by a court.

miscreant (mis-kree-ənt). An apostate; an unbeliever.

misdate. To erroneously date (a document, etc.).

misdelivery. Delivery not according to the contractual specifications.

misdemeanant (mis-də-mee-nənt), n. A person who has been convicted of a misdemeanor.

misdemeanor (mis-di-mee-nər). 1. A crime that is less serious than a felony and is usu. punishable by fine, penalty, forfeiture, or confinement (usu. for a brief term) in a place other than prison (such as a county jail). — Also termed minor crime; summary offense. Cf. FELONY.

"'Misdemeanor' was the label ultimately adopted to apply to all offenses other than treason or felony. The term included a wide variety of wrongs and misprisions. Many of the substantive legal principles and procedures applicable to felonies were not applied in the case of misdemeanors. The difference in treatment between felonies and misdemeanors has carried over from common law to current practice, and today misdemeanors are often treated differently than felonies [in] the procedures employed in trying such cases as well as [in] the consequences of a conviction. The traditional distinction between felonies and misdemeanors has been abolished in England." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 15 (3d ed. 1982).

gross misdemeanor. A serious misdemeanor, though not a felony.

treasonable misdemeanor. See TREASONABLE MISDEMEANOR.

2. Archaic. Any crime, including a felony.

"A crime, or misdemeanor, is an act committed, or omitted, in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it. This general definition comprehends both crimes and misdemeanors; which, properly speaking, are mere synonymous terms: though, in common usage, the word, 'crimes,' is made to denote such offences as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye; while smaller faults, and omissions of less consequence, are comprised under the gentler names of 'misdemeanors' only." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 5 (1769).

misdemeanor in office. See official misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

misdemeanor-manslaughter rule. The doctrine that a death occurring during the commission of a misdemeanor (or sometimes a non-dangerous felony) is involuntary manslaughter. ● Many states and the Model Penal Code have abolished this rule. Cf. FELONY-MURDER RULE.

"Companion to the felony-murder rule is the so-called misdemeanor-manslaughter rule[:]. . . Homicide resulting from the perpetration or attempted perpetration of an unlawful act, less than a dangerous felony, is manslaughter if the unlawful act is malum in se." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 108 (3d ed. 1982).

misdescription. 1. A contractual error or falsity that deceives, injures, or materially misleads one of the contracting parties. 2. A bailee's inaccurate identification, in a document of title, of goods received from the bailor. 3. An inaccurate legal description of land in a deed.

misdirection. See MISCHARGE.

mise (meez or miz), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. Expenses incurred in litigation. 2. The general issue in a writ of right. ● When a tenant pleads superior title to the plaintiff, the tenant is said to join the mise on the mere right. 3. A settlement; a compromise, as in the Mise of Lewes between Henry III and the rebelling barons.

mise money. Hist. Money paid by contract to purchase a privilege.

miserabile depositum (miz-ə-ray-bə-lee di-poz-ə-təm). [Law Latin “a pitiful deposit”] Civil law. A deposit or bailment made in an emergency, as in a shipwreck, fire, or insurrection.

miserere (miz-ə-reer-ee). [Latin] Hist. Have mercy. • This is the first phrase of the 51st psalm, used to test a person claiming benefit of clergy. See NECK VERSE.

miser cordia (miz-ə-ri-kor-dee-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. Mercy. 2. An arbitrary fine as a punishment. 3. An exemption from a fine.

miser cordia communis (miz-ə-ri-kor-dee-ə kə-myoo-nis). [Law Latin] Hist. A fine levied on a whole county.

misfeasance (mis-fee-zənts), n. 1. A lawful act performed in a wrongful manner. 2. More broadly, a transgression or trespass; MALFEASANCE. — misfeasant, adj. — misfeasor, n. Cf. NONFEASANCE.

misfeasance in public office. The tort of excessive or malicious or negligent exercise of statutory powers by a public officer. — Also termed malfeasance.

mishering. See MISKERING. misjoinder (mis-joyn-dər). 1. The improper union of parties in a civil case. See JOINDER. Cf. DISJOINDER; NONJOINDER. 2. The improper union of offenses in a criminal case.

miskening (mis-ken-ing). [fr. French misw “wrong” + Saxon cennan “to declare”] 1. A wrongful summons. 2. A pleading mistake or irregularity.

“But every defeated plaintiff could be amerced ‘for a false claim.’ Incidentally too any falsehood . . . that is, any fraudulent misuse of the machinery of the law, would be punished by imprisonment. Then again every default in appearance brought an amercement on the defaulter and his pledges. Every mistake in pleading, every miskening . . . brought an amercement on the pleader if the mistake was to be retrieved. A litigant who hoped to get to the end of his suit without an amercement must have been a sanguine man; for he was playing a game of forfeits.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederick W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 519 (2d ed. 1899).

miskering (mis-kər-ing). Hist. Freedom or immunity from amercement. — Also termed abishering; abishersing; mishering; mishersing.

misla id property. See PROPERTY.

mislay, vb. To deposit (property, etc.) in a place not afterwards recollected; to lose (property, etc.) by forgetting where it was placed. See misla id property under PROPERTY.

misleading, adj. (Of an instruction, direction, etc.) delusive; calculated to be misunderstood.

misnomer (mis-noh-mər). A mistake in naming a person, place, or thing, esp. in a legal instrument. • In federal pleading — as well as in most states — misnomer of a party can be corrected by an amendment, which will relate back to the date of the original pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c)(3).

misperformance. A faulty attempt to discharge an obligation (esp. a contractual one). Cf. PERFORMANCE; NONPERFORMANCE.

mispleading. Pleading incorrectly. • A party who realizes that its pleading is incorrect can usu. amend the pleading, as a matter of right, within a certain period, and can thereafter amend with the court’s permission.

misprision (mis-prizh-ən). 1. Concealment or nondisclosure of a serious crime by one who did not participate in the crime.

clerical misprision. A court clerk’s mistake or fraud that is apparent from the record.

misprision of felony. Concealment or nondisclosure of someone else’s felony.

misprision of treason. Concealment or nondisclosure of someone else’s treason.

negative misprision. The wrongful concealment of something that should be revealed <misprision of treason>.

positive misprision. The active commission of a wrongful act <sedition conduct against the government is positive misprision>.

- 2. Seditious conduct against the government.
- 3. An official's failure to perform the duties of public office.
- 4. Misunderstanding; mistake.

"The word 'misprision' has been employed with different meanings. While Blackstone thought of it as referring to a grave misdemeanor, it seems to have been used earlier to indicate the entire field of crime below the grade of treason or felony before the word 'misdemeanor' became the generally accepted label for this purpose. More recently it has been said: 'Misprision is nothing more than a word used to describe a misdemeanor which does not possess a specific name.' [United States v. Perlstein, 126 F.2d 789, 798 (3d Cir. 1942).] It has been associated with two specific offenses, and only these, from the earliest times. They are misprision of treason and misprision of felony, which consist of the criminal default of one in regard to the crime of another." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 572 (3d ed. 1982).

misprisor (mis-prī-zər). One who commits misprision of felony.

misreading. An act of fraud in which a person incorrectly reads the contents of an instrument to an illiterate or blind person with the intent to deceitfully obtain that person's signature.

misrecital. An incorrect statement of a factual matter in a contract, deed, pleading, or other instrument.

misrepresentation, n. 1. The act of making a false or misleading statement about something, usu. with the intent to deceive. 2. The statement so made; an assertion that does not accord with the facts. — Also termed false representation; (redundantly) false misrepresentation. — misrepresent, vb. Cf. REPRESENTATION.

fraudulent misrepresentation. A false statement that is known to be false or is made recklessly — without knowing or caring whether it is true or false — and that is intended to induce a party to detrimentally rely on it. — Also termed fraudulent representation; deceit.

"A misrepresentation is fraudulent if the maker intends his assertion to induce a party to manifest his assent and the maker (a) knows or believes that the assertion is not in accord with the facts, or (b) does not have the confidence that he states or implies in the truth of the assertion, or (c) knows that he does not have the basis that he states or implies for the assertion." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 162(1) (1981).

innocent misrepresentation. A false statement not known to be false; a misrepresentation that, though false, was not made fraudulently.

material misrepresentation. 1. Contracts. A false statement that is likely to induce a reasonable person to assent or that the maker knows is likely to induce the recipient to assent. 2. Torts. A false statement to which a reasonable person would attach importance in deciding how to act in the transaction in question or to which the maker knows or has reason to know that the recipient attaches some importance. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 538 (1979).

"The materiality of a misrepresentation is determined from the viewpoint of the maker, while the justification of reliance is determined from the viewpoint of the recipient. . . . The requirement of materiality may be met in either of two ways. First, a misrepresentation is material if it would be likely to induce a reasonable person to manifest his assent. Second, it is material if the maker knows that for some special reason it is likely to induce the particular recipient to manifest his assent. There may be personal considerations that the recipient regards as important even though they would not be expected to affect others in his situation, and if the maker is aware of this the misrepresentation may be material even though it would not be expected to induce a reasonable person to make the proposed contract. One who preys upon another's known idiosyncrasies cannot complain if the contract is held voidable when he succeeds in what he is endeavoring to accomplish. . . . Although a nonfraudulent misrepresentation that is not material does not make the contract voidable under the rules stated in this Chapter, the recipient may have a claim to relief under other rules, such as those relating to breach of warranty." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 162 cmt. c (1979).

negligent misrepresentation. A careless or inadvertent false statement in circumstances where care should have been taken.

misrepresentee. A person to whom a fact has been misrepresented.

misrepresenter. A person who misrepresents a fact to another. — Also spelled misrepresentor.

missilia (mi-sī-lee-ə). [fr. Latin mittere "to throw"] Roman law. Money that the praetors, consuls, or wealthy individuals throw as gifts to people on the street.

missing-evidence rule. The doctrine that, when a party fails to present evidence at trial that the party controls and that would have been proper to present, the jury is entitled to infer that the evidence would have been unfavorable to that party.

missing person. 1. Someone whose whereabouts are unknown and, after a reasonable time, seem to be unascertainable. 2. Someone whose continuous and unexplained absence entitles the heirs to petition a court to declare the person dead and to divide up the person's property. See SEVEN-YEARS'-ABSENCE RULE. Cf. DISAPPEARED PERSON.

missing ship. Maritime law. A vessel that has been gone for an unreasonably long time, leading to the presumption that it is lost at sea; esp., a vessel that has been gone longer than the average time it takes a vessel to make a similar voyage in the same season.

missing-witness rule. The doctrine that, when a party fails to present a witness at trial who is available only to that party and whose testimony would have been admissible, the jury is entitled to infer that the witness's testimony would have been unfavorable to that party.

mistake, n. 1. An error, misconception, or misunderstanding; an erroneous belief. 2. Contracts. The situation in which the parties to a contract did not mean the same thing — or when one or both, while meaning the same thing, formed untrue conclusions about the subject matter of the contract — as a result of which the contract may be rendered void. Cf. FRUSTRATION.

"The word mistake is generally used in the law of contracts to refer to an erroneous belief — 'a belief that is not in accord with the facts.' To avoid confusion, it should not be used, as it sometimes is in common speech, to refer to an improvident act, such as the making of a contract, that results from such an erroneous belief. Nor should it be used, as it sometimes is by courts and writers, to refer to what is more properly called a misunderstanding, a situation in which two parties attach different meanings to their language." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 9.2, at 649 (1982) (quoting Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151 (1981)).

"In this Restatement the word 'mistake' is used to refer to an erroneous belief. A party's erroneous belief is therefore said to be a 'mistake' of that party. The belief need not be an articulated one, and a party may have a belief as to a fact when he merely makes an assumption with respect to it, without being aware of alternatives. The word 'mistake' is not used here, as it is sometimes used in common speech, to refer to an improvident act, including the making of a contract, that is the result of such an erroneous belief. This usage is avoided here for the sake of clarity and consistency. Furthermore, the erroneous belief must relate to the facts as they exist at the time of the making of the contract. A party's prediction or judgment as to events to occur in the future, even if erroneous, is not a 'mistake' as that word is defined here. An erroneous belief as to the contents or effect of a writing that expresses the agreement is, however, a mistake. Mistake alone, in the sense in which the word is used here, has no legal consequences. The legal consequences of mistake in connection with the creation of contractual liability are determined by [substantive rules]." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 151 cmt. a (1981).

common mistake. See mutual mistake (2).

essential mistake. Contracts. A mistake serious enough that no real consent could have existed, so that there was no real agreement.

inessential mistake. See unessential mistake.

mistake of fact. A mistake about a fact that is material to a transaction. — Also termed error in fact; error of fact.

mistake of law. A mistake about the legal effect of a known fact or situation. — Also termed error in law; error of law.

mutual mistake. 1. A mistake in which each party misunderstands the other's intent. — Also termed bilateral mistake. 2. A mistake that is shared and relied on by both parties to a contract. • A court will often revise or nullify a contract based on a mutual mistake about a material term. — Also termed (in sense 2) common mistake.

"The term 'common mistake' is more usually, but less grammatically, referred to as 'mutual mistake'. Cheshire and Fifoot on Contract have made a heroic effort to introduce and establish the more correct term, and it does seem to be gaining ground. However, the beginner is warned that the term 'mutual mistake' is nearly always used by the Courts to mean what we here call 'common mistake'." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 190 n.7 (3d ed. 1981).

nonessential mistake. See unessential mistake.

unessential mistake. Contracts. A mistake that does not relate to the nature of the contents of an agreement, but only to some external circumstance, so that the mistake has no effect on the validity of the agreement. — Also termed inessential mistake; nonessential mistake; collateral mistake.

unilateral mistake. A mistake by only one party to a contract. • A unilateral mistake is usu. not grounds to rescind the contract.

mistery (mis-tər-ee). Hist. A business; a trade. — Also spelled mystery.

mistrial. 1. A trial that the judge brings to an end, without a determination on the merits, because of a procedural error or serious misconduct occurring during the proceedings. 2. A trial that ends inconclusively because the jury cannot agree on a verdict.

misuse, n. 1. Products liability. A defense alleging that the plaintiff used the product in an improper, unintended, or unforeseeable manner. 2. Patents. The use of a patent either to improperly extend the granted monopoly to nonpatented goods or to violate antitrust laws.

misuser. An abuse of a right or office, as a result of which the person having the right might lose it <it is an act of misuser to accept a bribe>. Cf. USER.

mitigate (mit-ə-gayt), vb. To make less severe or intense <the fired employee mitigated her damages for wrongful termination by accepting a new job>. — mitigation, n. — mitigatory (mit-ə-gə-tor-ee), adj. Cf. MILITATE.

mitigating circumstance. See CIRCUMSTANCE.

mitigation-of-damages doctrine. The principle requiring a plaintiff, after an injury or breach of contract, to use ordinary care to alleviate the effects of the injury or breach. • If the defendant can show that the plaintiff failed to mitigate damages, the plaintiff's recovery may be reduced. — Also termed avoidable-consequences doctrine.

mitigation of punishment. Criminal law. A reduction in punishment due to mitigating circumstances that reduce the criminal's level of culpability, such as the existence of no prior convictions. See mitigating circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE.

mitiori sensu. See IN MITIORI SENSU.

mitter avant (mit-ər ə-vant), vb. [Law French] Hist. To present or produce (evidence, etc.) to a court.

mittimus (mit-ə-məs). [Law Latin "we send"] Hist. 1. A court order or warrant directing a jailer to detain a person until ordered otherwise; COMMITMENT (4). 2. A certified transcript of a prisoner's conviction or sentencing proceedings. 3. A writ directing the transfer of records from one court to another. Pl. mittimus.

mixed government. See GOVERNMENT.

mixed insurance company. See INSURANCE COMPANY.

mixed jury. See JURY.

mixed larceny. See LARCENY.

mixed law. A law concerning both persons and property.

mixed-motive doctrine. Employment law. The principle that, when the evidence in an employment-discrimination case shows that the complained-of employment action was based in part on a nondiscriminatory reason and in part on a discriminatory reason, the plaintiff must show that discrimination was a motivating factor for the employment action and, if the plaintiff makes that showing, then the defendant must show that it would have taken the same action without regard to the discriminatory reason.

mixed nuisance. See NUISANCE.

mixed policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

mixed presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

mixed property. See PROPERTY.

mixed question. 1. MIXED QUESTION OF LAW AND FACT. 2. An issue involving conflicts of foreign and domestic law.

mixed question of law and fact. An issue that is neither a pure question of fact nor a pure question of law. • Mixed questions of law and fact are typically resolved by juries. — Also termed mixed question of fact and law. — Often shortened to mixed question.

mixed tithes. See TITHE.

mixed trust. See TRUST.

mixed war. See WAR.

mixtion (miks-chən). Archaic. 1. The process of mixing products together so that they can no longer be separated. 2. The product of mixing.

mixtum imperium (miks-təm im-peer-ee-əm). [Latin] Hist. Mixed authority; mixed jurisdiction. • This term refers to the power of subordinate civil magistrates.

MLA. abbr. MOTION FOR LEAVE TO APPEAL.

MMI. abbr. MAXIMUM MEDICAL IMPROVEMENT.

M'Naghten rules. See MCNAGHTEN RULES.

M'Naughten rules. See MCNAGHTEN RULES.

M.O. abbr. MODUS OPERANDI.

mobile goods. See GOODS.

Mobile-Sierra doctrine. The principle that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission may not grant a rate increase to a natural-gas producer unless the producer's contract authorizes a rate increase, or unless the existing rate is so low that it may adversely affect the public interest (as by threatening the continued viability of the public utility to continue its service). United Gas Pipe Line Co. v. Mobile Gas Serv. Corp., 350 U.S. 332, 76 S.Ct. 373 (1956); Federal Power Comm'n v. Sierra Pac. Power Co., 350 U.S. 348, 76 S.Ct. 368 (1956). — Also termed Sierra-Mobile doctrine.

mobilia (moh-bil-ee-ə), n. [Latin "movables"] Roman law. Movable things. • The term primarily refers to inanimate objects but sometimes also refers to animals.

mobilia sequuntur personam (moh-bil-ee-ə si-kwən-tər pər-soh-nəm). [Latin] Int'l law. Movable things follow the person — i.e., the law of the person. • This is the general principle that rights of ownership and transfer of movable property are determined by the law of the owner's domicile.

"The maxim mobilia sequuntur personam is the exception rather than the rule, and is probably to be confined to certain special classes of general assignments such as marriage settlements and devolutions on death and bankruptcy." Handel v. Slatford, 1953 Q.B. 248, 257 (Eng. C.A.).

"Under the influence of Savigny many Continental systems in the mid-nineteenth century led the way for Anglo-American law in limiting the operation of the doctrine of mobilia sequuntur personam to universal assignments of movables, adopting for particular assignments the single principle of the lex situs of the movable." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 457 (7th ed. 1974).

mock trial. 1. A fictitious trial organized to allow law students, or sometimes lawyers, to practice the techniques of trial advocacy. 2. A fictitious trial, arranged by a litigant's attorney, to assess trial strategy, to estimate the case's value or risk, and to evaluate the case's strengths and weaknesses. • In this procedure, people from the relevant jury pool are hired to sit as mock jurors who, after a condensed presentation of both sides, deliberate and reach a verdict (often while being observed by the participants behind a one-way glass). The jurors may later be asked specific questions about various arguments, techniques, and other issues. Because the mock jurors usually do not know which side has hired them, their candid views are thought to be helpful in formulating trial strategies. Cf. MOOT COURT.

mode. A manner of doing something <mode of proceeding> <mode of process>.

model act. A statute drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws and proposed as guideline legislation for the states to borrow from or adapt to suit their individual needs. • Examples of model acts include the Model Employment Termination Act and the Model Punitive Damages Act. Cf. UNIFORM ACT.

Model Code of Professional Responsibility. A set of ethical guidelines for lawyers, organized in the form of canons, disciplinary rules, and ethical considerations. • Published by the ABA in 1969, this code has been replaced in most states by the Model Rules of Professional Conduct.

model jury charge. See model jury instruction under JURY INSTRUCTION.

model jury instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

Model Penal Code. A proposed criminal code drafted by the American Law Institute and used as the basis for criminal-law revision by many states. — Abbr. MPC.

Model Penal Code test. See SUBSTANTIAL-CAPACITY TEST.

Model Rules of Professional Conduct. A set of ethical guidelines for lawyers, organized in the form of 52 rules — some mandatory, some discretionary — together with explanatory comments. • Published by the ABA in 1983, these rules have generally replaced the Model Code of Professional Responsibility and have been adopted as law by many states.

moderamen inculpatæ tutelæ (moh-də-ray-mən in-kəl-pay-tee t[y]oo-tee-lee). [Latin] Roman law. The remedy or plea of justifiable defense. • This phrase refers to the degree of force justified in self-defense. — Also termed inculpatæ tutelæ moderatio (mod-ə-ray-shee-oh).

moderate castigavit (mod-ə-ray-tee kas-tə-gay-vit). [Latin “he moderately chastised”] Hist. A plea justifying a trespass because it is really a chastisement that the defendant is legally entitled to inflict on the plaintiff because of their relationship.

moderate force. See nondeadly force under FORCE.

moderator. A presider at a meeting or assembly.

modiatio (moh-dee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. A duty paid for every tierce of wine. See PRI-SAGE.

modification. 1. A change to something; an alteration . 2. A qualification or limitation of something .

Modified Accelerated Cost Recovery System. See ACCELERATED COST RECOVERY SYSTEM.

modified-comparative-negligence doctrine. See 50-PERCENT RULE.

modius (moh-dee-əs), n. [Latin “a measure”] Hist. 1. A bushel. 2. An uncertain measure, as of land.

modo et forma (moh-doh et for-mə). [Latin] In manner and form. • In common-law pleading, this phrase began the conclusion of a traverse. Its object was to put the burden on the party whose pleading was being traversed not only to prove the allegations of fact but also to establish as correct the manner and form of the pleading. — Also termed manner and form.

modus (moh-dəs). [Latin “mode”] 1. Criminal procedure. The part of a charging instrument describing the manner in which an offense was committed. 2. Roman & civil law. Mode; manner; consideration, esp. the manner in which a gift, bequest, servitude, etc. is to be employed. 3. Eccles. law. DE MODO DECIMANDI. See MODUS OPERANDI.

modus de non decimando (moh-dəs dee non des-ə-man-doh). See DE NON DECIMANDO.

modus habilis (moh-dəs hab-ə-lis). [Latin] A valid manner (in proving a debt, etc.).

modus operandi (moh-dəs op-ə-ran-di or -dee). [Latin “a manner of operating”] A method of operating or a manner of procedure; esp., a pattern of criminal behavior so distinctive that investigators attribute it to the work of the same person <staging a fight at the train station was part of the pickpocket’s modus operandi>. — Abbr. M.O. Pl. modi operandi.

modus tenendi (moh-dəs tə-nen-di). [Latin] Hist. The manner of holding. • This phrase referred to the different types of tenures by which estates were held.

Modus Tenendi Parliamentum (moh-dəs tə-nen-di pahr-lə-men-təm). [Law Latin “the manner of holding Parliament”] Hist. A 14th-century writing on the powers of Parliament, translated in the 17th century and edited by T.D. Hardy in 1846.

modus transferendi (moh-dəs trans-fər-en-di). [Law Latin] Hist. The manner of transferring.

modus vacandi (moh-dəs və-kan-dī). [Law Latin] Hist. The manner of vacating. • This term was often used in determining the circumstances under which a vassal surrendered an estate to a lord.

modus vivendi (moh-dəs vi-ven-dī or -dee). [Latin “means of living (together)”] Int’l Law. A temporary, provisional arrangement concluded between subjects of international law and giving rise to binding obligations on the parties.

“[Modus vivendi] is an instrument of toleration looking towards a settlement, by preparing for or laying down the basis of a method of living together with a problem or by bridging over some difficulty pending a permanent settlement. Normally it is used for provisional and interim arrangements which ultimately are to be replaced by a formal agreement of a more permanent and detailed character. There is no clear distinction of a modus vivendi from other treaties. The most distinguishing feature is its provisional character; nevertheless a modus vivendi may be exercised for an indefinite period of time if it is prolonged sine die or if a definitive solution to the problem cannot be reached by treaty. Some ‘temporary’ arrangements have actually turned out to be quite durable.” Walter Rudolf, “Modus Vivendi,” in 3 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 443 (1997).

moible (myoo-bəl), adj. [Law French] Hist. Movable, as in the phrase biens moibles (“movable goods”).

moiety (moy-ə-tee). 1. A half of something (such as an estate). 2. A portion less than half; a small segment. 3. In customs law, a payment made to an informant who assists in the seizure of contraband.

moiety act. Criminal law. A law providing that half of an imposed fine will inure to the benefit of the informant.

mole. A person who uses a long affiliation with an organization to gain access to and betray confidential information.

molestation. 1. The persecution or harassment of someone, as in the molestation of a witness. 2. The act of making unwanted and indecent advances to or on someone, esp. for sexual gratification. — molest, vb. — molester, n.

child molestation. Any indecent or sexual activity on, involving, or surrounding a child, usu. under the age of 14. See Fed. R. Evid. 414(d).

molliter manus imposuit (mol-ə-tər man-əs im-poz-[y]ə-wit). [Latin] Hist. He gently laid hands upon. • This phrase was used in actions of trespass and assault to justify a defendant’s use of force as reasonable, as when it was necessary to keep the peace.

monarchy. A government in which a single person rules, with powers varying from absolute dictatorship to the merely ceremonial.

limited monarchy. A monarchical form of government in which the monarch’s power is subject to constitutional or other restraints. — Also termed constitutional monarchy.

moneta (mə-nee-tə), n. [Latin] Money.

monetarium (mon-ə-tay-jee-əm), n. [Law Latin “mintage”] Hist. 1. The right to coin money; mintage. 2. A tribute paid by a tenant to persuade a lord not to change coinage.

monetarism (mon-i-tə-riz-əm). An economic theory claiming that the money supply is the basic influence on the economy. • The theory was originated by Milton Friedman in the late 1960s.

monetary, adj. 1. Of or relating to money <monetary value> <monetary damages>. 2. Financial <monetary services> <monetary investments>.

monetary bequest. See pecuniary bequest under BEQUEST.

money. 1. The medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a government as part of its currency <coins and currency are money>. UCC § 1-201(24). 2. Assets that can be easily converted to cash <demand deposits are money>. 3. Capital that is invested or traded as a commodity <the money market> 4. (pl.) Funds; sums of money <investment moneys>. — Also spelled (in sense 4) monies. monitory letter. Eccles. law. Admonitory communications sent from an ecclesiastical judge to staff members in response to reported abuses or scandals.

monocracy (mə-nok-rə-see). A government by one person.

monocrat (mon-ə-krat). A monarch who governs alone.

monogamy (mə-nog-ə-mee), n. 1. The custom prevalent in most modern cultures restricting a person to one spouse at a time. 2. The fact of being married to only one spouse. — monogamous, adj. — monogamist, n. Cf. BIGAMY; POLYGAMY.

monomachy (mə-nom-ə-kee). Hist. See DUEL (2).

monomania (mon-ə-may-nee-ə). Insanity about some particular subject or class of subjects, usu. manifested by a single insane delusion. ● A will made by someone suffering from this condition is usu. held valid unless the evidence shows that particular provisions in the will were influenced by the insane delusion. — monomaniacal, adj. — monomaniac, n. monopolium (mon-ə-poh-lee-əm). [Latin fr. Greek monopolion “a selling alone”] Hist. The sole power of sale; a monopoly.

monopolization, n. The act or process of obtaining a monopoly. ● In federal antitrust law, monopolization is an offense with two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power — that is, the power to fix prices and exclude competitors — within the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power, as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S.Ct. 1698 (1966). — monopolize, vb. — monopolistic, adj. — monopolist, n.

attempted monopolization. The effort to monopolize any part of interstate or foreign commerce, consisting in (1) a specific intent to control prices or destroy competition in the relevant market, (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct, and (3) a “dangerous probability” of success in achieving monopoly in the relevant market.

monopolý, n. 1. Control or advantage obtained by one supplier or producer over the commercial market within a given region. 2. The market condition existing when only one economic entity produces a particular product or provides a particular service. ● The term is now commonly applied also to situations that approach but do not strictly meet this definition.

“[Ninety per cent] is enough to constitute a monopoly; it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four per cent is enough; and certainly thirty-three per cent is not.” United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416, 424 (2d Cir. 1945) (Hand, J.).

bilateral monopoly. A hypothetical market condition in which there is only one buyer and one seller, resulting in transactional delays because either party can hold out for a better deal without fearing that the other party will turn to a third party.

legal monopoly. The exclusive right granted by government to business to provide utility services that are, in turn, regulated by the government.

natural monopoly. A monopoly resulting from a circumstance over which the monopolist has no power, as when the market is so limited for a product that only one plant is needed to meet demand.

3. Patents. The exclusive right to make, use, and sell an invention.

monopoly leveraging. A theory of liability holding that a party violates the antitrust laws when it exploits its monopoly power in one market to gain a competitive advantage in another market.

monopoly power. The power to control prices or to exclude competition. ● The size of the market share is a primary determinant of whether monopoly power exists.

monopsony (mə-nop-sə-nee), n. A market situation in which one buyer controls the market. — monopsonistic, adj.

Monroe Doctrine. The principle that the United States will allow no intervention or domination by any non-American nation in the Western Hemisphere. ● This principle, which has some recognition in international law (though not as a formal doctrine), was first announced by President James Monroe in 1823.

other states of the region concerned, that is to say, the Continent of America, have never been parties to it and indeed have often resented it." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 314 (5th ed. 1955).

monstrans de droit (mon-strənz də droyt).

[Law French] Hist. A manifestation of right as a method of obtaining restitution from the Crown. • It was replaced by the writ of right. Currently, restitution is obtained by an ordinary action against the government.

monstrans de faits (mon-strənz də fay[ts]).

[Law French] Hist. A showing of deeds; a profert.

monstraverunt (mon-strə-veer-ənt). [Latin

"they have showed"] Hist. A writ of relief for tenants of ancient demesne who were distressed by their lord to do more than the tenure required.

"The little writ serves the turn of a man who claims land according to the custom of the manor; but the tenants of whom we are speaking are protected, and protected collectively, against any increase of their services. This is very plain when the manor is in the hands of a mesne lord. If he attempts to increase the customary services, some of the tenants, acting on behalf of all, will go to the royal chancery and obtain a writ against him. Such a writ begins with the word Monstraverunt. The king addresses the lord: — 'A, B and C, men of your manor of X, which is of the ancient demesne of the crown of England, have shown us that you exact from them other customs and services than those which they owe, and which their ancestors did in the time when that manor was in the hands of our predecessors, kings of England; therefore we command you to cease from such exactions, otherwise we shall order our sheriff to interfere.'" 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 388 (2d ed. 1898).

montes pietatis (mon-teez pi-ə-tay-tis). [Latin "mountains of piety"] Hist. Institutions established to lend money upon pledges of goods.

month. 1. One of the twelve periods of time in which the calendar is divided <the month of March>. — Also termed calendar month; civil month. 2. Any time period approximating 30 days <due one month from today>. 3. At common law, a period of 28 days; the period of one revolution of the moon . — Also termed lunar month. 4. One-twelfth of a tropical year; the time it takes the sun to pass through one sign of the zodiac, usu. approximating 30 days  — Also termed solar month.

month-to-month lease. See LEASE.

month-to-month tenancy. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

monument, n. 1. A written document or record, esp. a legal one. 2. Any natural or artificial object that is fixed permanently in land and referred to in a legal description of the land. — monumental, adj.

natural monument. A nonartificial permanent thing on land, such as a tree, river, or beach. — Also termed natural object.

Moody's Investor's Service. An investment analysis and advisory service. — Often shortened to Moody's.

moonlighting. The fact or practice of working at a second job after the hours of a regular job. — Also termed dual employment; multiple job-holding.

moonshine. Slang. A distilled alcoholic beverage, esp. whiskey, that is illegally manufactured.

moorage. 1. An act of mooring a vessel at a wharf. 2. A mooring charge.

moot, adj. 1. Archaic. Open to argument; debatable. 2. Having no practical significance; hypothetical or academic <the question on appeal became moot once the parties settled their case>. — mootness, n.

moot, vb. 1. Archaic. To raise or bring forward (a point or question) for discussion. 2. To render (a question) moot or of no practical significance.

moot court. 1. A fictitious court held usu. in law schools to argue moot or hypothetical cases, esp. at the appellate level. 2. A practice session for an appellate argument in which a lawyer presents the argument to other lawyers, who first act as judges by asking questions and who later provide criticism on the argument. — Also termed practice court. Cf. MOCK TRIAL.

moot man. Hist. A person who argued cases in the Inns of Court.

mootness doctrine. The principle that American courts will not decide moot cases — that is, cases in which there is no longer any actual controversy. Cf. RIPENESS.

mop. See STATUTE FAIR.

mora (mor-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. Willful delay or default in fulfilling a legal obligation.

“Mora. This was wrongful failure to discharge a legal obligation on demand made at a fitting time and place. It must be wilful: failure to appear, by mistake, or in a bona fide belief that there was no obligatio, or doubt about it, or by mishap, did not suffice to put a debtor in mora.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 338 (2d ed. 1953).

mora (mor-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A moor; unprofitable ground.

moral absolutism. The view that a person's action can always properly be seen as right or wrong, regardless of the situation or the consequences. — Also termed ethical absolutism; objective ethics. Cf. MORAL RELATIVISM.

moral certainty. Absolute certainty. • Moral certainty is not required to sustain a criminal conviction. See REASONABLE DOUBT.

moral consideration. See good consideration under CONSIDERATION.

moral depravity. See MORAL TURPITUDE.

moral duty. See DUTY (1).

moral evidence. See EVIDENCE.

moral fraud. See actual fraud under FRAUD.

moral hazard. See HAZARD (2).

morality. 1. Conformity with recognized rules of correct conduct. 2. The character of being virtuous, esp. in sexual matters.

“[T]he terms ‘morality’ and ‘immorality’ . . . are understood to have a sexual connotation. In fact, the terms ‘ethics’ and ‘morals’ are no longer interchangeable in everyday speech. A governmental official arraigned on a ‘morals charge’ will be accused of something quite different from one accused of an ‘ethics violation.’” William P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 55 (1975).

3. A system of duties; ethics.

private morality. A person's ideals, character, and private conduct, which are not valid governmental concerns if the individual is to be considered sovereign over body and mind and if the need to protect the individual's physical or moral well-being is insufficient to justify governmental intrusion. • In his essay On Liberty (1859), John Stuart Mill distinguished between conduct or ideals that affect only the individual from conduct that may do harm to others. Mill argued that governmental intrusion is justified only to prevent harm to others, not to influence a person's private morality.

public morality. 1. The ideals or general moral beliefs of a society. 2. The ideals or actions of an individual to the extent that they affect others.

moral law. A collection of principles defining right and wrong conduct; a standard to which an action must conform to be right or virtuous.

“It quite often happens that the moral law disapproves of something which the secular permits as a concession to human frailty.” Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 78 (1968).

moral necessity. See NECESSITY.

moral obligation. A duty that is based only on one's conscience and that is not legally enforceable. • In contract law, moral obligation may support a promise in the absence of traditional consideration, but only if the promisor has previously received some actual benefit from the promisee.

moral person. See artificial person under PERSON.

moral relativism. The view that there are no absolute or constant standards of right and wrong. — Also termed ethical relativism; subjective ethics. Cf. MORAL ABSOLUTISM.

moral right. (usu. pl.) Copyright. A right protecting a visual artist's work beyond the ordinary protections of copyright. • Moral rights include both integrity rights, which protect the work from changes that damage the artist's or the work's reputation, and attribution rights, which allow the artist to claim authorship of the work and to prevent the unlawful use of the author's name in reference to a modified version of the work. Visual Artists Rights Act of 1990 (17 USCA §§ 106A, 113).

moral turpitude. 1. Conduct that is contrary to justice, honesty, or morality. • In the area of legal ethics, offenses involving moral turpitude — such as fraud or breach of trust — traditionally make a person unfit to practice law. — Also termed moral depravity. 2. Military law. Any conduct for which the applicable punishment is a dishonorable discharge or confinement not less than one year.

"Moral turpitude means, in general, shameful wickedness — so extreme a departure from ordinary standards of honest, good morals, justice, or ethics as to be shocking to the moral sense of the community. It has also been defined as an act of baseness, vileness, or depravity in the private and social duties which one person owes to another, or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between people." 50 Am. Jur. 2d Libel and Slander § 165, at 454 (1995).

moratorium (mor-ə-tor-ee-əm). 1. An authorized postponement, usu. a lengthy one, in the deadline for paying a debt or performing an obligation. 2. The period of this delay. 3. The suspension of a specific activity. Pl. moratoriums, moratoria.

moratory (mor-ə-tor-ee), adj. Of or relating to a delay; esp., of or relating to a moratorium.

moratory damages. See DAMAGES.

morganatic marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

morgangiva (mor-gan-jə-və), n. [Law Latin "moving gift"] Hist. A gift made to the bride on the morning after the wedding; a type of dowry. — Also spelled morgangina.

Morgan presumption. A presumption that shifts the burden of proof by requiring the person against whom it operates to produce sufficient evidence to outweigh the evidence that supports the presumed fact, as in requiring a criminal defendant who was arrested while in possession of an illegal substance — and is thereby presumed to have knowingly possessed it — to produce sufficient evidence to entitle the jury to find that the defendant's evidence outweighs the evidence of knowing possession. See Edmund M. Morgan, Instructing the Jury Upon Presumptions and Burdens of Proof, 47 Harv. L. Rev. 59, 82–83 (1933). Cf. THAYER PRESUMPTION.

mors (morz), n. [Latin] Death.

morsellum terrae (mor-sel-əm ter-ee). [Law Latin "a morsel of earth"] Hist. A small parcel of land.

mors naturalis (morz nach-ə-ray-lis). See natural death under DEATH.

mortality factor. Insurance. In life-insurance ratemaking, an estimate of the average number of deaths that will occur each year at each specific age, calculated by using an actuarial table. • The mortality factor is one element that a life insurer uses to calculate premium rates. See ACTUARIAL TABLE; PREMIUM RATE. Cf. INTEREST FACTOR; RISK FACTOR.

mortality table. See ACTUARIAL TABLE.

mort d'ancestor (mor[t] dan-ses-tər). [Law French "death of an ancestor"] Hist. An assize founded on the death of an ancestor.

"Another of the petty assizes was that of mort d'ancestor, founded on the Assize of Northampton 1176. The question in this assize was whether the plaintiff's father (or other close ancestor) had been seised in fee — that is, of an inheritable estate — on the day he died, and whether the plaintiff was his next heir; if both questions were answered in the affirmative, the plaintiff was entitled to be put in seisin." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 267–68 (3d ed. 1990).

mortgage (mor-gij), n. 1. A conveyance of title to property that is given as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of a duty and that will become void upon payment or performance according to the stipulated terms. 2. A lien against property that is granted to secure an obligation (such as a debt) and that is extinguished upon payment or performance according to stipulated terms. 3. An instrument (such as a deed or contract) specifying the terms of such a transaction. 4. Loosely, the loan on which such a transaction is based. 5. The mortgagee's rights conferred by such a transaction. 6. Loosely, any real-property security transaction, including a deed of trust. — Abbr. M. — mortgage, vb.

“The chief distinction between a mortgage and a pledge is that by a mortgage the general title is transferred to the mortgagee, subject to be revested by performance of the condition; while by a pledge the pledgor retains the general title in himself, and parts with the possession for a special purpose. By a mortgage the title is transferred; by a pledge, the possession.” Leonard A. Jones, A Treatise on the Law of Mortgages § 4, at 5–6 (5th ed. 1908).

adjustable-rate mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender can periodically adjust the mortgage’s interest rate in accordance with fluctuations in some external market index. — Abbr. ARM. — Also termed variable-rate mortgage; flexible-rate mortgage.

all-inclusive mortgage. See wraparound mortgage.

amortized mortgage. A mortgage in which the mortgagor pays the interest as well as a portion of the principal in the periodic payment. • At maturity, the periodic payments will have completely repaid the loan. — Also termed self-liquidating mortgage. See AMORTIZATION. Cf. straight mortgage.

balloon-payment mortgage. A mortgage requiring periodic payments for a specified time and a lump-sum payment of the outstanding balance at maturity.

blanket mortgage. A mortgage covering two or more properties that are pledged to support a debt.

bulk mortgage. 1. A mortgage of personal property in bulk; a pledge of an aggregate of goods in one location. 2. A mortgage of more than one real-estate parcel.

chattel mortgage (chat-əl). A mortgage on goods purchased on installment, whereby the seller transfers title to the buyer but retains a lien securing the unpaid balance. • Chattel mortgages have generally been replaced by security agreements, which are governed by Article 9 of the UCC. Cf. retail installment contract under CONTRACT.

closed-end mortgage. A mortgage that does not permit either prepayment or additional borrowing against the collateral. Cf. open-end mortgage.

closed mortgage. A mortgage that cannot be paid in full before maturity without the lender’s consent.

collateral mortgage. Civil law. A mortgage securing a promissory note pledged as collateral security for a principal obligation.

consolidated mortgage. A mortgage created by combining two or more mortgages.

construction mortgage. A mortgage used to finance a construction project.

contingent-interest mortgage. A mortgage whose interest rate is directly related to the economic performance of the pledged property.

conventional mortgage. A mortgage, not backed by government insurance, by which the borrower transfers a lien or title to the lending bank or other financial institution. • These mortgages, which feature a fixed periodic payment of principal and interest throughout the mortgage term, are typically used for home financing. — Also termed conventional loan.

direct-reduction mortgage. An amortized mortgage in which the principal and interest payments are paid at the same time — usu. monthly in equal amounts — with interest being computed on the remaining balance. — Abbr. DRM.

dry mortgage. A mortgage that creates a lien on property but does not impose on the mortgagor any personal liability for any amount that exceeds the value of the premises.

equitable mortgage. A transaction that has the intent but not the form of a mortgage, and that a court of equity will treat as a mortgage. Cf. technical mortgage.

extended first mortgage. See wraparound mortgage.

FHA mortgage. A mortgage that is insured fully or partially by the Federal Housing Administration.

first mortgage. A mortgage that is senior to all other mortgages on the same property.

fixed-rate mortgage. A mortgage with an interest rate that remains the same over the life of the mortgage regardless of market conditions. — Abbr. FRM.

flexible-rate mortgage. 1. See adjustable-rate mortgage. 2. See renegotiable-rate mortgage.

flip mortgage. A graduated-payment mortgage allowing the borrower to place all or some of the down payment in a savings account and to use the principal and interest to supplement lower mortgage payments in the loan's early years.

future-advances mortgage. A mortgage in which part of the loan proceeds will not be paid until a future date.

general mortgage. Civil law. A blanket mortgage against all the mortgagor's present and future property. La. Civ. Code art. 3285.

graduated-payment adjustable-rate mortgage. A mortgage combining features of the graduated-payment mortgage and the adjustable-rate mortgage. — Abbr. GPARM.

graduated-payment mortgage. A mortgage whose initial payments are lower than its later payments. • The payments are intended to gradually increase, as the borrower's income increases over time.

growing-equity mortgage. A mortgage that is fully amortized over a significantly shorter term than the traditional 25- to 30-year mortgage, with increasing payments each year. — Abbr. GEM.

interest-only mortgage. A balloon-payment mortgage on which the borrower must at first make only interest payments, but must make a lump-sum payment of the full principal at maturity. — Also termed standing mortgage; straight-term mortgage.

joint mortgage. A mortgage given to two or more mortgagees jointly.

judicial mortgage. Civil law. A judgment lien created by a recorded legal judgment.

jumbo mortgage. A mortgage loan in a principal amount that exceeds the dollar limits for a government guarantee.

junior mortgage. A mortgage that is subordinate to another mortgage on the same property. — Also termed puisne mortgage.

leasehold mortgage. A mortgage secured by a lessee's leasehold interest.

legal mortgage. Civil law. A creditor's mortgage arising by operation of law on the debtor's property. — Also termed tacit mortgage.

open-end mortgage. A mortgage that allows the mortgagor to borrow additional funds against the same property. Cf. closed-end mortgage.

package mortgage. A mortgage that includes both real and incidental personal property, such as a refrigerator or stove.

participation mortgage. 1. A mortgage that permits the lender to receive profits of the venture in addition to the normal interest payments. 2. A mortgage held by more than one lender.

price-level-adjusted mortgage. A mortgage with a fixed interest rate but the principal balance of which is adjusted to reflect inflation. — Abbr. PLAM.

puisne mortgage. See junior mortgage.

purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage that a buyer gives the seller, when the property is conveyed, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price. — Abbr. PMM. See SECURITY AGREEMENT.

renegotiable-rate mortgage. A government-sponsored mortgage that requires the mortgagee to renegotiate its terms every three to five years, based on market conditions. — Also termed flexible-rate mortgage; rollover mortgage.

reverse annuity mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender disburses money over a long period to provide regular income to the (usu. elderly) borrower, and in which the loan is repaid in a lump sum when the borrower dies or when the property is sold. — Abbr. RAM. — Also termed reverse mortgage.

rollover mortgage. See renegotiable-rate mortgage.

second mortgage. A mortgage that is junior to a first mortgage on the same property, but that is senior to any later mortgage.

"A landowner who already holds land subject to a mortgage may wish to hypothecate his equity. He does this by taking out a 'second mortgage.' Should the mortgagor default in his obligation on the first mortgage, the first mortgagee may foreclose. If there is a deficiency upon sale, the second mortgagee loses his security in the equity because there is no equity. If the mortgagee does not default on the first mortgage, but does on the second, the second mortgagee can foreclose on the mortgagor's equity. Such a foreclosure would not affect the first mortgagee's rights." Edward H. Rabin, Fundamentals of Modern Real Property Law 1087 (1974).

self-liquidating mortgage. See amortized mortgage.

senior mortgage. A mortgage that has priority over another mortgage (a junior mortgage) on the same property.

shared-appreciation mortgage. A mortgage giving the lender the right to recover (as contingent interest) an agreed percentage of the property's appreciation in value when it is sold or at some other specified, future date. — Abbr. SAM.

shared-equity mortgage. A mortgage in which the lender shares in the profits from the property's resale. • The lender must usu. first purchase a portion of the property's equity by providing a portion of the down payment.

special mortgage. Civil law. A mortgage burdening only particular, specified property of the mortgagor. La. Civ. Code art. 3285.

standing mortgage. See interest-only mortgage.

straight mortgage. A mortgage in which the mortgagor is obligated to pay interest during the mortgage term along with a final payment of principal at the end of the term. Cf. amortized mortgage.

straight-term mortgage. See interest-only mortgage.

submortgage. See SUBMORTGAGE.

tacit mortgage. See legal mortgage.

technical mortgage. A traditional, formal mortgage, as distinguished from an instrument having the character of an equitable mortgage. Cf. equitable mortgage.

VA mortgage. A veteran's mortgage that is guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

variable-rate mortgage. See adjustable-rate mortgage.

Welsh mortgage. A type of mortgage, formerly common in Wales and Ireland, by which the mortgagor, without promising to pay the debt, transfers title and possession of the property to the mortgagee, who takes the rents and profits and applies them to the interest, often with a stipulation that any surplus will reduce the principal. • The mortgagee cannot compel the mortgagor to redeem, and cannot foreclose the right to redeem, because no time is fixed for payment. The mortgagor is never in default, but may redeem at any time.

wraparound mortgage. A second mortgage issued when a lender assumes the payments on the borrower's low-interest first mortgage (usu. issued through a different lender) and lends additional funds. • Such a mortgage covers both the outstanding balance of the first mortgage and the additional funds loaned. 12 CFR § 226.17 cmt. 6. — Also termed extended first mortgage; all-inclusive mortgage.

zero-rate mortgage. A mortgage with a large down payment but no interest payments, with the balance paid in equal installments.

mortgage-backed security. See SECURITY.

mortgage banker. An individual or organization that originates real-estate loans for a fee, resells them to other parties, and services the monthly payments.

mortgage bond. See BOND (3). mortgage broker. See BROKER.

mortgage certificate. A document evidencing part ownership of a mortgage.

mortgage clause. An insurance-policy provision that protects the rights of a mortgagee when the insured property is subject to a mortgage. • Such a clause usu. provides that any insurance proceeds must be allocated between the named insured and the mortgagee "as their interests may appear." — Also termed mortgagee clause. See LOSS-PAYABLE CLAUSE; ATIMA.

open mortgage clause. A mortgage clause that does not protect the mortgagee if the insured mortgagor does something to invalidate the policy (such as committing fraud). • This type of clause has been largely superseded by the mortgage-loss clause, which affords the mortgagee more protection. — Also termed simple mortgage clause. Cf. MORTGAGE-LOSS CLAUSE.

standard mortgage clause. A mortgage clause that protects the mortgagee's interest even if the insured mortgagor does something to invalidate the policy. • In effect, this clause creates a separate contract between the insurer and the mortgagee. — Also termed union mortgage clause.

mortgage commitment. A lender's written agreement with a borrower stating the terms on which it will lend money for the purchase of specified real property, usu. with a time limitation.

mortgage company. A company that makes mortgage loans and then sells or assigns them to investors.

mortgage-contingency clause. A real-estate-sale provision that conditions the buyer's performance on obtaining a mortgage loan.

mortgage deed. See DEED.

mortgage discount. The difference between the mortgage principal and the amount the mortgage actually sells for; the up-front charge by a lender at a real-estate closing for the costs of financing. • Although usu. paid by the buyer, the discount is sometimes paid by the seller when required by law, as with a VA mortgage. — Also termed point; mortgage point; loan-brokerage fee; new-loan fee.

mortgagee (mor-gə-jee). One to whom property is mortgaged; the mortgage-creditor, or lender. — Also termed mortgage-holder.

mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee who takes control of mortgaged land by agreement with the mortgagor, usu. upon default of the loan secured by the mortgage.

mortgage clause. See MORTGAGE CLAUSE.

mortgagee policy. A title-insurance policy that covers only the mortgagee's title and not the owner's title. Cf. OWNER'S POLICY.

mortgage foreclosure. See FORECLOSURE.

mortgage-guarantee insurance. Insurance provided by the Mortgage Guarantee Insurance Company to mortgage lenders that grant mortgages to parties having less than a 20% down payment. • The cost of the insurance is included in the closing costs.

mortgage-holder. See MORTGAGEE.

mortgage insurance. See INSURANCE.

mortgage lien. See LIEN.

mortgage loan. See LOAN.

mortgage-loss clause. A mortgage clause providing that title insurance will not be invalidated by the mortgagor's acts. • Thus, even if the mortgagor does an act that would otherwise make the policy void, the act merely voids the policy as against the mortgagor, but it remains in full force for the benefit of the mortgagee. — Also termed New York standard clause; union-loss clause. Cf. open mortgage clause under MORTGAGE CLAUSE.

mortgage market. The conditions that provide the demand for new mortgage loans and the later resale of those loans in the secondary mortgage market.

primary mortgage market. The national market in which mortgages are originated.

secondary mortgage market. The national market in which existing mortgages are bought and sold, usu. on a package basis.

mortgage note. See NOTE (1).

mortgage point. See POINT (2); MORTGAGE DISCOUNT.

mortgage servicing. The administration of a mortgage loan, including the collection of payments, release of liens, and payment of property insurance and taxes. • Servicing is usu. performed by the lender or the lender's agent, for a fee.

mortgage warehousing. An arrangement in which a mortgage company holds loans for later resale at a discount.

mortgaging out. The purchase of real property by financing 100% of the purchase price.

mortgagor (mor-gə-jor or mor-gə-jər). One who mortgages property; the mortgage-debtor, or borrower. — Also spelled mortgager; mortgag-eor.

mortis causa (mor-tis kaw-zə). See gift causa mortis under GIFT.

mortmain (mort-mayn). [French "deadhand"] The condition of lands or tenements held inalienably by an ecclesiastical or other corporation. See AMORTIZE; DEADHAND CONTROL.

mortmain statute. A law that limits gifts or other dispositions of land to corporations (esp. charitable ones) and that prohibits corporations from holding land in perpetuity. • In England, laws such as the Provisions of Westminster and Magna Carta essentially required the Crown's authorization before land could vest in a corporation. The object was to prevent lands from being held by religious corporations in perpetuity. Although this type of restriction was not generally part of the common law in the United States, it influenced the enactment of certain state laws restricting the amount of property a corporation can hold for religious or charitable purposes. — Also termed mortmain act; statute of mortmain.

mortuary. 1. A place where cadavers are prepared for burial; a place where dead bodies are held before burial. 2. A burial place. 3. Hist. A

mortuary table. See ACTUARIAL TABLE.

mortuum vadium (mor-choo-əm vay-dee-əm). See vadium mortuum under VADIUM.

mortuus (mor-choo-əs), adj. [Latin] Hist. 1. Dead. 2. A sheriff's return that the named party is dead.

mortuus civiliter (mor-choo-əs sə-vil-ə-tər). [Latin "civilly dead"] A person civilly dead, deprived of civil rights. See CIVIL DEATH.

mortuus sine prole (mor-choo-əs si-nee proh-lee). [Latin] Dead without issue. — Abbr. m.s.p.

most favorable light. See LIGHT MOST FAVORABLE.

most favored nation. A treaty status granted to a nation, usu. in international trade, allowing it to enjoy the privileges accorded to the other nations that are parties to the treaty. ● The primary effect of most-favored-nation status is lower trade tariffs. — Also termed most-favored-nation status. — Abbr. MFN.

most-favored-nation clause. 1. A clause in an agreement between two nations providing that each will treat the other as well as it treats any other nation that is given preferential treatment. 2. By extension, such a clause in any contract, but esp. an oil-and-gas contract. — Often shortened to favored-nation clause; MFN clause. — Also termed most-favored-nations clause. Cf. preferential tariff under TARIFF.

most-favored-tenant clause. A commercial-lease provision ensuring that the tenant will be given the benefit of any negotiating concessions given to other tenants.

most-significant-relationship test. Conflict of laws. The doctrine that, to determine the state law to apply to a dispute, the court should determine which state has the most substantial connection to the occurrence and the parties. ● For example, in a tort case, the court should consider where the injury occurred, where the conduct that caused the injury occurred, the residence, place of business, or place of incorporation of the parties, and the place where the relationship between the parties, if any, is centered. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 145 (1971). In a case involving a contract, the court should consider where the contract was made, where the contract was negotiated, where the contract was to be performed, and the domicile, place of business, or place of incorporation of the parties. Id. § 188.

most suitable use. See highest and best use under USE (1).

most-suitable-use value. See optimal-use value under VALUE.

moteer (moh-teer). Hist. A customary payment or service made at the lord's court.

mother. A woman who has given birth to or legally adopted a child. ● The term is sometimes interpreted as including a pregnant woman who has not yet given birth.

adoptive mother. See adoptive parent under PARENT.

foster mother. See foster parent under PARENT.

mother country. A colonizing nation; a colonial power. Cf. COLONY.

Mother Hubbard clause. 1. A clause stating that a mortgage secures all the debts that the mortgagor may at any time owe to the mortgagee. — Also termed anaconda clause; dragnet clause. 2. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease or a mineral or royalty deed conveying small strips of land or irregularly shaped acreage outside the area described in the lease or deed. ● Such a provision is usu. included to override any inaccuracies in the description of the land. — Also termed cover-all clause. 3. A court's written declaration that any relief not expressly granted in a specific ruling or judgment is denied.

mother-in-law. The mother of a person's spouse.

motion. 1. A written or oral application requesting a court to make a specified ruling or order. 2. A proposal made under formal parliamentary procedure.

calendar motion. A motion relating to the time of court appearances. ● Examples include motions to continue, motions to advance, and motions to reset.

contradictory motion. Civil law. A motion that is likely to be contested or that the nonmoving side should have an opportunity to contest.

dilatory motion (dil-ə-tor-ee). 1. A motion made solely for the purpose of delay. 2. A motion that has the effect of delaying the proceedings.

ex parte motion (eks pahr-tee). A motion made to the court without notice to the adverse party; a motion that a court considers and rules on after hearing from fewer than all sides.

omnibus motion. A motion that makes several requests or asks for multiple forms of relief.

posttrial motion. A motion made after judgment is entered, such as a motion for new trial.

speaking motion. A motion that addresses matters not raised in the pleadings.

special motion. A motion specifically requiring the court's discretion upon hearing, as distinguished from one granted as a matter of course.

motion for a more definite statement. See MOTION FOR MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT.

motion for a new trial. See MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

motion for a protective order. See MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER.

motion for a repleader. Common-law pleading. An unsuccessful party's posttrial motion asking that the pleadings begin anew because the issue was joined on an immaterial point. ● The court never awards a repleader to the party who tendered the immaterial issue.

motion for directed verdict. A party's request that the court enter judgment in its favor before submitting the case to the jury because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary foundation on which a reasonable jury could find for the other party. ● Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the equivalent court paper is known as a motion for judgment as a matter of law. — Also termed motion for a directed verdict. — Abbr. MDV. See MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW; directed verdict under VERDICT.

motion for j.n.o.v. See MOTION FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING THE VERDICT.

motion for judgment as a matter of law. A party's request that the court enter a judgment in its favor before the case is submitted to the jury, or after a contrary jury verdict, because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a jury could find for the other party. ● Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may move for judgment as a matter of law anytime before the case has been submitted to the jury. This kind of motion was formerly known as a motion for directed verdict (and still is in many jurisdictions). If the motion is denied and the case is submitted to the jury, resulting in an unfavorable verdict, the motion may be renewed within ten days after entry of the judgment. This aspect of the motion replaces the court paper formerly known as a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50.

motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. A party's request that the court enter a judgment in its favor despite the jury's contrary verdict because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a jury to find for the other party. ● Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, this procedure has been replaced by the provision for a motion for judgment as a matter of law, which must be presented before the case has been submitted to the jury but can be reasserted if it is denied and the jury returns an unfavorable verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. — Also termed motion for j.n.o.v. See MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW.

motion for judgment of acquittal. A criminal defendant's request, at the close of the government's case or the close of all evidence, to be acquitted because there is no legally sufficient evidentiary basis on which a reasonable jury could return a guilty verdict. ● If the motion is granted, the government has no right of appeal. — Abbr. MJOA.

motion for judgment on the pleadings. A party's request that the court rule in its favor based on the pleadings on file, without accepting evidence, as when the outcome of the case rests on the court's interpretation of the law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c).

motion for leave to appeal. A request that an appellate court review an interlocutory order that meets the standards of the collateral-order doctrine. — Abbr. MLA. See COLLATERAL-ORDER DOCTRINE.

motion for more definite statement. A party's request that the court require an opponent to amend a vague or ambiguous pleading to which the party cannot reasonably be required to respond. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e). — Also termed motion for a more definite statement.

motion for new trial. A party’s postjudgment request that the court vacate the judgment and order a new trial for such reasons as factually insufficient evidence, newly discovered evidence, or jury misconduct. • In many jurisdictions, this motion is required before a party can raise such matters on appeal. — Also termed motion for a new trial.

motion for protective order. A party’s request that the court protect it from potentially abusive action by the other party, usu. relating to discovery, as when one party seeks discovery of the other party’s trade secrets. • A court will sometimes craft a protective order to protect one party’s trade secrets by ordering that any secret information exchanged in discovery be used only for purposes of the pending suit and not be publicized. — Also termed motion for a protective order.

motion for relief from stay. See MOTION TO LIFT THE STAY.

motion for relief from the judgment. A party’s request that the court correct a clerical mistake in the judgment — that is, a mistake that results in the judgment’s incorrectly reflecting the court’s intentions — or to relieve the party from the judgment because of such matters as (1) inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, (2) newly discovered evidence that could not have been discovered through diligence in time for a motion for new trial, (3) the judgment’s being the result of fraud, misrepresentation, or misconduct by the other party, or (4) the judgment’s being void or having been motion to alter or amend the judgment

motion for summary judgment. A request that the court enter judgment without a trial because there is no genuine issue of material fact to be decided by a fact-finder — that is, because the evidence is legally insufficient to support a verdict in the nonmovant’s favor. • In federal court and in most state courts, the movant-defendant must point out in its motion the absence of evidence on an essential element of the plaintiff’s claim, after which the burden shifts to the nonmovant-plaintiff to produce evidence raising a genuine fact issue. But if a party moves for summary judgment on its own claim or defense, then it must establish each element of the claim or defense as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. 56. — Abbr. MSJ. — Also termed summary-judgment motion; motion for summary disposition. See SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

motion in arrest of judgment. 1. A defendant’s motion claiming that a substantial error appearing on the face of the record vitiates the whole proceeding and the judgment. 2. A post-judgment motion in a criminal case claiming that the indictment is insufficient to sustain a judgment or the verdict is somehow insufficient.

motion in limine (in lim-ə-nee). A pretrial request that certain inadmissible evidence not be referred to or offered at trial. • Typically, a party makes this motion when it believes that mere mention of the evidence during trial would be highly prejudicial and could not be remedied by an instruction to disregard. If, after the motion is granted, the opposing party mentions or attempts to offer the evidence in the jury’s presence, a mistrial may be ordered. A ruling on a motion in limine does not preserve evidentiary error for appellate purposes. Instead, to raise such an error on appeal, a party must have formally objected when the evidence was actually admitted or excluded during trial.

motion to alter or amend the judgment. A party’s request that the court correct a substantive error in the judgment, such as a manifest error of law or fact. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a motion to alter or amend the judgment must be filed within ten days after the judgment is entered. It should not ordinarily be used to correct clerical errors in a judgment. Those types of errors — that is, errors that result in the judgment not reflecting the court’s intention — may be brought in a motion for relief from the judgment, which does not have the ten-day deadline. A motion to alter or amend the judgment is usu. directed to substantive issues regarding the judgment, such as an intervening change in the law or newly discovered evidence that was not available at trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e). Cf. MOTION FOR RELIEF FROM THE JUDGMENT.

motion to compel discovery. A party's request that the court force the party's opponent to respond to the party's discovery request (as to answer interrogatories or produce documents). Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a). — Often shortened to motion to compel. — Also termed motion to enforce discovery.

motion to dismiss. A request that the court dismiss the case because of settlement, voluntary withdrawal, or a procedural defect. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss the case (under Rule 41(a)) or the defendant may ask the court to dismiss the case, usu. based on one of the defenses listed in Rule 12(b). These defenses include lack of personal or subject-matter jurisdiction, improper venue, insufficiency of process, the plaintiff's failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted, and the failure to join an indispensable party. A defendant will frequently file a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, which is governed by Rule 12(b)(6), claiming that even if all the plaintiff's allegations are true, they would not be legally sufficient to state a claim on which relief might be granted. — Abbr. MTD.

motion to enforce discovery. See MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY.

motion to lift the stay. Bankruptcy. A party's request that the bankruptcy court alter the automatic bankruptcy stay to allow the movant to act against the debtor or the debtor's property, as when a creditor seeks permission to foreclose on a lien because its security interest is not adequately protected. — Also termed motion for relief from stay; motion to modify the stay.

motion to modify the stay. See MOTION TO LIFT THE STAY.

motion to quash (kwahsh). A party's request that the court nullify process or an act instituted by the other party, as in seeking to nullify a subpoena.

motion to remand. In a case that has been removed from state court to federal court, a party's request that the federal court return the case to state court, usu. because the federal court lacks jurisdiction or because the procedures for removal were not properly followed. 28 USCA § 1447(c).

motion to strike. 1. Civil procedure. A party's request that the court delete insufficient defenses or immaterial, redundant, impertinent, or scandalous statements from an opponent's pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). 2. Evidence. A request that inadmissible evidence be deleted from the record and that the jury be instructed to disregard it.

motion to suppress. A request that the court prohibit the introduction of illegally obtained evidence at a criminal trial.

motive. Something, esp. willful desire, that leads one to act. — Also termed ulterior intent. Cf. INTENT.

"The term 'motive' is unfortunately ambiguous. That feeling which internally urges or pushes a person to do or refrain from doing an act is an emotion, and is of course evidential towards his doing or not doing the act. But when that evidential fact comes in turn to be evidenced, we must rely on two sorts of data, (a) the person's own expressions of that emotion, e.g., 'I hate M,' or 'I wish I owned that necklace'; and (b) external circumstances likely in human experience to arouse the emotion, e.g., a slander on D may be evidence that D became angry; a purse of money left in sight of D may be evidence that D's desire to have it was aroused. Now this second sort of evidential circumstance (b) is loosely referred to as 'motive,' — though in reality it is only evidential of the emotion, which itself is evidential of the act." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 76 (1935).

bad motive. A person's knowledge that an act is wrongful while the person commits the act.

malicious motive. A motive for bringing a prosecution, other than to do justice.

Motor Carrier Act. A federal statute, originally enacted in 1935 (49 USCA §§ 502–507), subjecting commercial motor carriers of freight and passengers in interstate commerce to the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, now the U.S. Department of Transportation. • The Act was repealed in the 1980s.

movable, n. (usu. pl.) 1. Property that can be moved or displaced, such as personal goods.

"Movables and immovables. The main distinction drawn in later Roman law and modern systems based thereon between kinds of things subject to ownership and possession. While basically the distinction corresponds to everyday conceptions, assigning animals and vehicles to the former and land and buildings to the latter category, particular things may be assigned to one category rather than the other for reasons of convenience. Thus, in French law, farm implements and animals are immovables. The distinction is also important in international private law, more so than that between real and personal . . . Thus, land held on lease is personal property by English law for historical reason, but in international private law it is a right in immovable property." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 858 (1980).

intangible movable. A physical thing that can be moved but that cannot be touched in the usual sense. • Examples are light and electricity.

"'Intangible movables' is a term of art in the common law which has been applied more widely than its meaning literally justifies, which is merely to those things that have physical existence and can be moved, though cannot be touched in the normal sense, such as light, electricity and radioactive waves. In English law the term has been generally applied to interests created by law which have only a legal, not a physical existence, and are accordingly capable only of legal, not physical, movement. It is convenient, however, to retain a term which is generally accepted and understood in this special legal meaning." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 470 (7th ed. 1974).

2. Scots law. A nonheritable right. — Also spelled moveable. — movable, adj. Cf. IMMOVABLE.

"Moveables are, in the phraseology of the law of Scotland, opposed to heritage; so that every species of property, and every right a person can hold, is by that law either heritable or moveable. Hence, moveables are not merely corporeal subjects capable of being moved, but every species of property, corporeal or incorporeal, which does not descend to the heir in heritage." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 662 (George Watson ed., 1882).

movable estate. See personal property under PROPERTY.

movable freehold. The land a seashore owner acquires or loses as water recedes or approaches.

movant (moov-ənt). One who makes a motion to the court. — Formerly also spelled movent.

move, vb. 1. To make an application (to a court) for a ruling, order, or some other judicial action <the appellant moved the court for a new trial>. 2. To propose under formal parliamentary procedure <the senator moved that a vote be taken>.

movent. See MOVANT.

mover, n. Slang. A stock that experiences spectacular market price changes; a very unstable stock.

moving expense. See EXPENSE.

moving papers. The papers that constitute or support a motion in a court proceeding. — Also termed motion papers.

moving violation. An infraction of a traffic law while the vehicle is in motion.

MP. abbr. Member of Parliament. See PARLIAMENT.

MPC. abbr. MODEL PENAL CODE.

MPC test. See SUBSTANTIAL-CAPACITY TEST.

Mr. Denman's Act. See DENMAN'S ACT.

MRE. abbr. MILITARY RULES OF EVIDENCE.

MSJ. abbr. MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

m.s.p. abbr. MORTUUS SINE PROLE.

MTD. abbr. MOTION TO DISMISS.

MUD. See municipal utility district under DISTRICT.

mug book. A collection of mug shots of criminal suspects maintained by law-enforcement agencies (such as the FBI and police departments) to be used in identifying criminal offenders.

mug shot. A photograph of a person's face taken after the person has been arrested and booked.

mulct (mʌkt), n. A fine or penalty.

mulct, vb. 1. To punish by a fine. 2. To deprive or divest of, esp. fraudulently.

mulier (myoo-lee-ər), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A woman. • This term at various times referred to a marriageable virgin, a woman not a virgin, a wife, and a mother. 2. Hist. & Scots law. A legitimate son; the son of a mulier ("lawful wife"). — Also termed mulieratus.

mulier puisne (myoo-lee-ər pyoo-nee). [Law Latin] Hist. The younger lawful son, usu. distinguished from the bastard eigné ("the elder bastard son").

"The common law developed one exception to its harsh doctrine of bastardy. Where the eldest son was born out of wedlock (the bastard eigné) and the next son was born to the same parents after the marriage (the mulier puisné), and upon the ancestor's death the bastard eigné entered as heir and remained in undisturbed possession until his own death, the bastard eigné was treated as if he had been legitimate with respect to the inheritance of that land. The reason given by Littleton was that a person who was legitimate by the Canon law could not be bastardised posthumously, when he no longer had the opportunity to contest the issue." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 559 (3d ed. 1990).

mulierty (myoo-lee-ər-tee). Hist. The condition of a legitimate child, as distinguished from a bastard.

multa (məl-tə), n. [Latin "a fine"] Hist. Eccles. law. A fine the bishops paid to the king so that they could make and probate wills and administer estates. — Also termed multura episcopi (məl-t[y]oor-ə i-pis-kə-pi).

multicraft union. See UNION.

multidistrict litigation. Civil procedure. Federal-court litigation in which civil actions pending in different districts and involving common fact questions are transferred to a single district for coordinated pretrial proceedings, after which the actions are returned to their original districts for trial. • Multidistrict litigation is governed by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, which is composed of seven circuit and district judges appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States. 28 USCA § 1407. — Abbr. MDL.

multifarious (məl-tə-fair-ee-əs), adj. 1. (Of a single pleading) improperly joining distinct matters or causes of action, and thereby confounding them. 2. Improperly joining parties in a lawsuit. 3. Diverse; many and various. — multifariousness, n.

multiplicity (məl-tə-plis-i-tee), n. Criminal procedure. The improper charging of the same offense in several counts of the indictment or information. • Multiplicity violates the Fifth Amendment protection against double jeopardy. — multiplicitous (məl-tə-plis-i-təs), adj.

multiplicity of actions. The existence of two or more lawsuits litigating the same issue against the same defendant. — Also termed multiplicity of suits; multiplicity of proceedings. See PIECEMEAL LITIGATION.

multiplied damages. See multiple damages under DAMAGES.

Multistate Bar Examination. See BAR EXAMINATION.

multistate corporation. See CORPORATION.

multital (məl-ti-təl), adj. 1. Of or relating to legal relations that exist among three or more people, esp. a multitude of people. Cf. UNITAL.

"Tort and breach of contract are alike breaches of duty, but in the case of tort the pre-existing duty of the wrongdoer was one that was shared by every other member of society; and the injured party whose right was violated had not merely one right, he had a multitude of rights. His rights and the correlative duties of others were 'multital.' The secondary right and duty, however, arising from the tort, are relations that exist between the two persons only. They are 'unital.' In the case of a breach of contract, both the primary right and duty and the secondary right and duty are 'unital.'" William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 11 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

2. Rare. See IN REM.

multura episcopi. See MULTA.

mund (mænd or muund). [Old English "hand"] Hist. A right to protection or guardianship; a guardian. Cf. MANUS (1).

"Once more we see prerogative rights growing, while feudal claims fall into the background; and in the case of lunacy we see a guardianship, a mund, which is not profitable to the guardian, and this at present is a novel and noteworthy thing." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 481 (2d ed. 1898).

munera (myoo-nær-ə), n. [Law Latin "graces"] Hist. Tenancies at will; tenancies made at the grantor's pleasure.

muni (myoo-nee), n. See municipal bond under BOND (3).

municeps (myoo-nə-seps). [fr. Latin munus "office" + capere "to take"] Roman law. 1. A citizen of a municipality (municipium). 2. A member of the council of a municipium.

municipal, adj. 1. Of or relating to a city, town, or local governmental unit. 2. Of or relating to the internal government of a state or nation (as contrasted with international).

municipal, n. See municipal bond under BOND (3).

municipal action. Any authorized exercise of governmental power by a municipal officer, board, agency, or other municipal body.

municipal affairs. The matters relating to the local government of a municipality.

municipal aid. Financial or other assistance provided by a municipality to a private business, usu. to encourage it to relocate to the municipality.

municipal attorney. See CITY ATTORNEY.

municipal bond. See BOND (3).

municipal charter. A written document making the persons residing within a fixed boundary, along with their successors, a corporation and body politic for and within that boundary, and prescribing the powers, privileges, and duties of the corporation.

municipal corporation. A city, town, or other local political entity formed by charter from the state and having the autonomous authority to administer the state's local affairs. — Also termed municipality. Cf. quasi-corporation under CORPORATION.

municipal corporation de facto. A corporation recognized to exist, although it has not fully complied with statutory requirements, when there is (1) a valid law authorizing its incorporation, (2) a colorable and bona fide attempt to organize under that law, and (3) an assumption of powers conferred under that law.

municipal court. See COURT.

municipal domicile. See DOMICILE.

municipal election. See ELECTION.

municipal function. The duties and responsibilities that a municipality owes its members.

municipal government. See local government under GOVERNMENT.

municipality. 1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. 2. The governing body of a municipal corporation.

municipal judge. See JUDGE.

municipal law. 1. The ordinances and other laws applicable within a city, town, or other local governmental entity. 2. The internal law of a nation, as opposed to international law.

municipal lien. See LIEN.

municipal officer. A person who occupies a municipal office — usu. mandated by statute or charter — and who may be required to take an oath and exercise sovereign authority in carrying out public duties, with compensation incident to the office irrespective of the actual services rendered.

municipal ordinance. See ORDINANCE.

municipal security. See municipal bond under BOND (3).

municipal utility district. See DISTRICT.

municipal warrant. See WARRANT (2).

municipium (myoo-nə-sip-ee-əm). [fr. Latin munus "honor" + capere "to take"] Roman law. A self-governing town; specif., any community allied with or conquered by Rome and allowed to maintain certain privileges (such as maintaining separate laws called leges municipales) and to exchange certain rights with Rome, such as intermarriage with Roman citizens.

muniment (myoo-nə-mənt). A document (such as a deed or charter) evidencing the rights or privileges of a person, family, or corporation. — Also termed (archaically) miniment.

muniment house. Hist. A place (such as a room in a castle or cathedral) where titles, deeds, and other evidences of title are stored.

muniment of title. Documentary evidence of title, such as a deed or a judgment regarding the ownership of property. — Also termed common assurance. See CHAIN OF TITLE.

murder, n. The killing of a human being with malice aforethought. ● At common law, the crime of murder was not subdivided, but many state statutes have adopted the degree structure outlined below (though the Model Penal Code has not). — murder, vb. — murderous, adj. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. Cf. MAN-SLAUGHTER.

depraved-heart murder. A murder resulting from an act so reckless and careless of the safety of others that it demonstrates the felony murder. Murder that occurs during the commission of a felony (esp. a serious one). — Also termed (in English law) constructive murder. See FELONY-MURDER RULE.

first-degree murder. Murder that is willful, deliberate, or premeditated, or that is committed during the course of another serious felony (often limited to rape, kidnapping, robbery, burglary, or arson). ● All murder perpetrated by poisoning or by lying in wait is considered first-degree murder. All types of murder not involving willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing are usu. considered second-degree murder. — Also termed murder of the first degree; murder one.

murder by torture. A murder preceded by the intentional infliction of pain and suffering on the victim.

"In some jurisdictions, a murder by torture may constitute murder in the first degree. It occurs when a defendant intentionally inflicts pain and suffering upon his victim for the purpose of revenge, extortion, or persuasion." 2 Charles E. Torcia, Wharton's Criminal Law § 144, at 281 (15th ed. 1994).

murder of the first degree. See first-degree murder.

murder one. See first-degree murder.

second-degree murder. Murder that is not aggravated by any of the circumstances of first-degree murder. — Also termed murder of the second degree; murder two.

serial murder. A murder pattern in which one criminal selects several victims at random or because the victims share similar characteristics.

third-degree murder. A wrong that did not constitute murder at common law. ● Only a few states have added to their murder statutes a third degree of murder. The other states classify all murders in two degrees. Manslaughter is not a degree of the crime of murder, but instead is a distinct offense.

willful murder. The unlawful and intentional killing of another without excuse or mitigating circumstances.

murdrum (mər-drəm). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. The secret killing of someone. 2. A fine against the tithing where the secret and unsolved homicide took place.

"The readiness with which the Norman administrators seized on this Anglo-Saxon system was probably due to its effectiveness in collecting the murdrum, the murder fine. In ordinary cases of homicide, the whole district — except the kin of the suspect — would be zealous to bring the malefactor to justice. But we can readily see that, if the person killed was a Norman, every effort would be made to shield the murderer. The Norman rulers had recourse to the device . . . of imposing a group responsibility. The tithing within which the murdered Norman was found was compelled to pay a fine or to discover and surrender the homicide. The word murdrum is a word of uncertain etymology, and has given us our term for willful homicide." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 175-76 (1936).

3. Murder; specif., murder with malice aforethought. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

murorum operatio (myuur-or-əm op-ə-ray-shee-oh). [Latin] Hist. Repair work to the fortifications of buildings, cities, or castles, performed by their inhabitants.

muster, vb. Military law. 1. To assemble together (troops) for inspection or service. 2. To assemble together (potential troops) for enlistment.

muster roll. Maritime law. A shipmaster's account listing the name, age, national character, and quality of every employee on the ship. ● In wartime, it is used in ascertaining a ship's neutrality.

mutation, n. A significant and basic alteration; esp., in property law, the alteration of a thing's status, such as from separate property to community property. — mutate, vb. — mutational, adj.

mutatio nominis (myoo-tay-shee-oh nom-ə-nis). [Latin] Roman law. Change of name. ● It was allowed provided that no prejudice was thereby caused to others. The related phrase mutato nomine (myoo-tay-toh nom-ə-nee) means "the name having been changed."

mutatis mutandis (myoo-tay-tis myoo-tan-dis). [Latin] All necessary changes having been made; with the necessary changes <what was said regarding the first contract applies mutatis mutandis to all later ones>.

mute, n. 1. A person who cannot speak. 2. A person (esp. a prisoner) who stands silent when required to answer or plead. ● Formerly, if a prisoner stood mute, a jury was empaneled to determine whether the prisoner was intentionally mute or mute by an act of God. By the Criminal Law Act of 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, ch. 28), if a prisoner was mute by malice, the officer automatically entered a plea of not guilty and the trial proceeded. If adjudicated to be insane, the prisoner was kept in custody until the Crown determined what should be done.

mutilation, n. 1. The act or an instance of rendering a document legally ineffective by subtracting or altering — but not completely destroying — an essential part through cutting, tearing, burning, or erasing. 2. Criminal law. The act of cutting off or permanently damaging a body part, esp. an essential one. — mutilate, vb. — mutilator, n. See MAYHEM.

mutiny (myoo-tə-nee), n. 1. An insubordination or insurrection of armed forces, esp. sailors, against the authority of their commanders; a forcible revolt by members of the military against constituted authority, usu. their commanding officers.

"Both mutiny and failure to prevent, suppress, or report a mutiny are capital offenses. . . . The elements of mutiny are (1) creation of any violence or disturbance or acting in concert with others to refuse to obey orders (2) with the intent to usurp or override lawful military authority. One fails to prevent, suppress, or report mutiny when he does not take all reasonable means to overcome or report mutiny. Concert of action is not required for mutiny when the accused creates violence or disturbance." Charles A. Shanor & L. Lynn Hogue, Military Law in a Nutshell 197-98 (2d ed. 1996).

2. Loosely, any uprising against authority. — mutinous, adj.

Mutiny Act. Hist. An English statute enacted annually from 1689 to 1879 to provide for a standing army and to punish mutiny, desertion, and other military offenses. ● It was merged into the Army Discipline and Regulation Act of 1879 (ch. 33).

mutual, adj. 1. Generally, directed by each toward the other or others; reciprocal. 2. (Of a condition, credit covenant, promise, etc.) reciprocally given, received, or exchanged. 3. (Of a right, etc.) belonging to two parties; common. — mutuality, n.

mutual account. See ACCOUNT.

mutual affray. See MUTUAL COMBAT.

mutual-agreement program. A prisoner-rehabilitation plan in which the prisoner agrees to take part in certain self-improvement activities to receive a definite parole date.

mutual assent. Agreement by both parties to a contract, usu. in the form of offer and acceptance. ● In modern contract law, mutual assent is determined by an objective standard — that is, by the apparent intention of the parties as mutual association. A mutually owned, cooperative savings and loan association, with the deposits being shares of the association. • A mutual association is not allowed to issue stock and is usu. regulated by the Office of Thrift Supervision, an agency of the U.S. Treasury Department. — See SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

mutual-benefit association. A fraternal or social organization that provides benefits for its members, usu. on an assessment basis.

mutual-benefit insurance. Benefits provided by a mutual-benefit association upon the occurrence of a loss.

mutual combat. A consensual fight on equal terms — arising from a moment of passion but not in self-defense — between two persons armed with deadly weapons. • A murder charge may be reduced to voluntary manslaughter if death occurred by mutual combat. — Also termed mutual affray. Cf. DUEL.

mutual company. See COMPANY.

mutual contract. See bilateral contract under CONTRACT.

mutual debts. See DEBT.

mutual demands. Countering demands between two parties at the same time .

mutual fund. 1. An investment company that invests its shareholders' money in a usu. diversified selection of securities. — Often shortened to fund. 2. Loosely, a share in such a company.

balanced fund. A mutual fund that maintains a balanced investment in stocks and bonds, investing a certain percentage in senior securities.

bond fund. A mutual fund that invests primarily in specialized corporate bonds or municipal bonds.

closed-end fund. A mutual fund having a fixed number of shares that are traded on a major securities exchange or an over-the-counter market.

common-stock fund. A mutual fund that invests only in common stock.

dual fund. A closed-end mutual fund that invests in two classes of stock — stock that pays dividends and stock that increases in investment value without dividends. • A dual fund combines characteristics of an income fund and a growth fund. — Also termed dual-purpose fund; leverage fund; split fund.

fully managed fund. A mutual fund whose policy allows reasonable discretion in trading securities in combination or quantity.

growth fund. A mutual fund that typically invests in well-established companies whose earnings are expected to increase. • Growth funds usu. pay small dividends but offer the potential for large share-price increases.

hedge fund. See HEDGE FUND.

income fund. A mutual fund that typically invests in securities that consistently produce a steady income, such as bonds or dividend-paying stocks.

index fund. A mutual fund that invests in the stock of companies constituting a specific market index, such as Standard & Poor's 500 stocks, and thereby tracks the stock average.

leverage fund. See dual fund.

load fund. A mutual fund that charges a commission, usu. ranging from 4 to 9%, either when shares are purchased (a front-end load) or when they are redeemed (a back-end load).

money-market fund. A mutual fund that invests in low-risk government securities and short-term notes.

no-load fund. A mutual fund that does not charge any sales commission (although it may charge fees to cover operating costs).

open-end fund. A mutual fund that continually offers new shares and buys back existing shares on demand. • An open-end fund will continue to grow as more shareholders invest because it does not have a fixed number of shares outstanding.

performance fund. A mutual fund characterized by an aggressive purchase of stocks expected to show near-term growth.

split fund. See dual fund.

utility fund. A mutual fund that invests only in public-utility securities.

value fund. A mutual fund that invests in stocks that its manager believes to be priced below their true market value.

vulture fund. An investment company that purchases bankrupt or insolvent companies to reorganize them in hopes of reselling them at a profit.

mutual insurance. See INSURANCE.

mutual insurance company. An insurer whose policyholders are its owners, as opposed to a stock insurance company owned by outside shareholders. Cf. STOCK INSURANCE COMPANY.

mutuality. The state of sharing or exchanging something; a reciprocation; an interchange <mutuality of obligation>.

mutuality doctrine. The collateral-estoppel requirement that, to bar a party from relitigating an issue determined against that party in an earlier action, both parties must have been in privity with one another in the earlier proceeding.

mutuality of assent. See MEETINGS OF THE MINDS.

mutuality of contract. See MUTUALITY OF OBLIGATION.

mutuality of debts. Bankruptcy. For purposes of setoff, the condition in which debts are owed between parties acting in the same capacity, even though the debts are not of the same character and did not arise out of the same transaction.

mutuality of estoppel. The collateral-estoppel principle that a judgment is not conclusively in favor of someone unless the opposite decision would also be conclusively against that person.

mutuality of obligation. The agreement of both parties to a contract to be bound in some way. — Also termed mutuality of contract. See MUTUAL ASSENT.

“The doctrine of mutuality of obligation is commonly expressed in the phrase that in a bilateral contract ‘both parties must be bound or neither is bound.’ But this phrase is over-generalization because the doctrine is not one of mutuality of obligation but rather one of mutuality of consideration. Phrasing the rule in terms of mutuality of obligation rather than in terms of consideration has led to so-called exceptions and judicial circumventions. . . . It has been suggested that the term ‘mutuality of obligation’ should be abandoned and we must agree in the light of the confusion that this term has engendered.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 4-12, at 226 (3d ed. 1987).

mutuality of remedy. The availability of a remedy, esp. equitable relief, to both parties to a transaction, usu. required before either party can be granted specific performance. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

mutual mistake. See MISTAKE.

mutual promises. See PROMISE.

mutual rescission. See RESCISSION (2).

mutual savings bank. See BANK.

mutual testaments. See mutual wills under WILL.

mutual will. See WILL.

mutuant (myoo-choo-ənt). The provider of property in a mutuum. See MUTUUM.

mutuari (myoo-choo-air-i), vb. [Latin] To borrow.

mutuary (myoo-choo-er-ee). The recipient of property in a mutuum. See MUTUUM.

mutuatus (myoo-choo-ay-təs), n. [Latin] A borrowing; a loan of money.

mutus et surdus (myoo-təs et sər-dəs). [Latin] Deaf and dumb.

mutuum (myoo-choo-əm). 1. A transaction (sometimes referred to as a bailment) in which goods are delivered, but instead of being returned, are replaced by other goods of the same kind. • At common law such a transaction is regarded as a sale or exchange, and not as a bailment, because the particular goods are not returned. 2. Roman law. A loan in which the borrower is entitled to consume the goods lent and return an equivalent amount. • This was one of three types of contract for permissive use, the other two being commodatum (kom-ə-day-təm) and locatio conductio (loh-kay-sheeh-oh kən-dək-sheeh-oh).

mysterious disappearance. A loss of property under unknown or baffling circumstances that are difficult to understand or explain. • The term is used in insurance policies covering theft.

“Under a policy insuring against loss of property by ‘mysterious disappearance’ recovery is generally allowed where the article disappears from the place the insured left it, while recovery is ordinarily disallowed where the insured has no recollection of when he last had possession of the article and cannot say when or from what place it disappeared. Thus the addition of the words ‘mysterious disappearance’ to a theft policy does not transform it to an ‘all loss’ policy covering lost or mislaid articles, but it remains a theft policy.” 43 Am. Jur. 2d Insurance § 501, at 575-76 (1982).

mystic testament. See mystic will under WILL.

mystic will. See WILL.

N

nam (nam), n. [Old English naam] Hist. The act of distraining property.

nam (nam or nahm), prep. [Latin] For.

“Nam . . . This particle is frequently used as introductory to the quotation of a maxim, and sometimes erroneously treated as a part of the maxim quoted.” 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 219 (2d ed. 1867).

namare (nə-mair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To distrain property.

namation (nə-may-shən), n. [fr. Old English nam] Hist. 1. The act of distraining property. 2. Scots law. The impounding of property. — Also termed namatio.

name, n. A word or phrase identifying or designating a person or thing and distinguishing that person or thing from others.

alias. See ALIAS.

assumed name. See ASSUMED NAME.

corporate name. The registered name under which a corporation conducts legal affairs such as suing, being sued, and paying taxes; the name that a corporation files with a state authority (usu. the secretary of state) as the name under which the corporation will conduct its affairs. ● A corporate name usu. includes, and in many states is required to include, the word “corporation,” “incorporated,” or “company;” or an abbreviation of one of those words. Cf. ASSUMED NAME.

distinctive name. A name, esp. a trade-name, that clearly distinguishes one thing from another. ● To maintain an action for tradename infringement, the plaintiff must prove, among other things, that it owns a distinctive name.

fictitious name. See ASSUMED NAME; ALIAS.

full name. A person’s first name, middle name (or middle initial), and surname.

generic name. See GENERIC NAME.

legal name. A person’s full name as recognized in law, consisting of a first name (usu.

given at birth or at a baptism or christening) and a last name (usu. a family name).

nickname. See NICKNAME.

street name. See STREET NAME.

tradename. See TRADENAME.

name-and-arms clause. Hist. A clause (usu. in a will or settlement transferring property) providing that the property's recipient must assume and continue using the testator's or settlor's surname and coat-of-arms, or else the property will pass to another person.

named insured. See INSURED.

named-insured exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

named partner. See name partner under PARTNER.

named-perils policy. See multi-peril policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

named plaintiff. See class representative under REPRESENTATIVE.

namely, adv. By name or particular mention; that is to say <the plaintiff asserted two claims, namely wrongful termination and slander>. • The term indicates what is to be included by name. By contrast, including implies a partial list and indicates that something is not listed. See INCLUDE.

name partner. See PARTNER.

namium (náy-mee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The act of distraining property.

namium vetitum (náy-mee-əm vet-ə-təm), n. [Law Latin "taking prohibited"] Hist. A refused or prohibited taking or redelivery. • This term is most often associated with the circumstance in which a lord's bailiff distrained animals or goods, and was ordered by the lord to take them to an unknown place or otherwise not to redeliver them when the sheriff came to replevy them. — Also termed vetitum namium.

nanny tax. See TAX.

nantissement (non-tis-mahn), n. [French] French law. A security or pledge. • If it involves movable property, it is called "gage." If it involves immovable property such as real estate, it is called "antichrèse."

Napoleonic Code. 1. (usu. pl.) The codification of French law commissioned by Napoleon in the 19th century, including the Code civil (1804), the Code de procédure civile (1806), the Code de commerce (1807), the Code pénal (1810), and the Code d'instruction crimenelle (1811). — Also termed Code Napoléon (abbr. CN). 2. Loosely, CIVIL CODE (2).

NAR. abbr. NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS.

narcoanalysis (nahr-koh-ə-nal-ə-sis). The process of injecting a "truth-serum" drug into a patient to induce semiconsciousness, and then interrogating the patient. • This process has been utilized to enhance the memory of a witness.

narcotic, n. 1. An addictive drug, esp. an opiate, that dulls the senses and induces sleep. 2. (usu. pl.) A drug that is controlled or prohibited by law. — narcotic, adj.

narr. abbr. NARRATIO.

narr-and-cognovit law (nahr-and-kahg-noh-vit). [Latin narratio "declaration" and cognovit "the person has conceded"] Hist. A law providing that a plaintiff will be granted judgment on a note through an attorney's confession that the amount shown on the note, together with interest and costs, constitutes a legal and just claim. Cf. COGNOVIT JUDGMENT; confession of judgment under JUDGMENT.

narratio (nə-ray-shee-oh), n. [Latin "narrative"] Hist. A declaration, complaint, or petition in which the plaintiff sets out the facts of a case; an oral narrative by the plaintiff of the facts and legal arguments on which the claim is based. • The term has also been called the "conte" or "tale." — Abbr. narr.

"[T]he making of the count, in Latin the narratio, was the very centre of the legal process. We do not know how it came about that the litigant was allowed to speak through the mouth of another, though it has been suggested that it was not to prevent mistakes being made but to prevent them being fatal. Certainly the litigant could disavow what was said on his behalf; and perhaps it was only 'said' by him when he formally adopted it. If this is right, our modern barrister began as one who could harmlessly blunder." S.F.C. Milsom, Historical Foundations of the Common Law 28 (1969).

narrative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

narrator (na-ray-tor or na-ray-tər), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A pleader or counter; a person who prepares pleadings (i.e., narrs). • For example, a serjeant-at-law was also known as serviens narrator. Pl. narratores (na-rə-tor-eez).

"The Latin narrator and its French equivalent contour became technical terms. If an English term was in use, it was perhaps forspeaker." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 215 n.1 (2d ed. 1898).

narrow-channel rule. The navigational requirement that a vessel traveling down a slim fairway must keep as near to the fairway wall on the vessel's starboard side as is safe and practicable. 33 USCA § 2009(a)(i).

narrowly tailored, adj. (Of a content-neutral restriction on the time, place, or manner of speech in a designated public forum) being only as broad as is reasonably necessary to promote a substantial governmental interest that would be achieved less effectively without the restriction; no broader than absolutely necessary. See designated public forum under PUBLIC FORUM.

narrow sea. (often pl.) A sea running between two coasts that are close to each another. • The English Channel, for example, is a narrow sea.

nasciturus (nas-ə-t[y]oor-əs or -t[y]ər-əs), n. [fr. Latin nascor "to be born"] Roman law. An unborn child.

NASDAQ (naz-dak). abbr. NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SECURITIES DEALERS AUTOMATED QUOTATION SYSTEM.

natale (nə-tay-lee), n. [Latin "of or belonging to birth"] Hist. The status a person acquires by birth. • For example, if one or both parents of a child were serfs, the child was generally regarded as a serf, and a child born free rarely became a serf. See NATIVUS.

nati et nascituri (nay-ti et nas-ə-t[y]oor-I or -t[y]ər-I), n. pl. [Latin "born and to be born"] Hist. A person's heirs, near and remote.

natio (nay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. A nation. 2. A group of students. 3. A native place.

nation, n. 1. A large group of people having a common origin, language, and tradition and usu. constituting a political entity. • When a nation is coincident with a state, the term nation-state is often used. — Also termed nationality.

"The nearest we can get to a definition is to say that a nation is a group of people bound together by common history, common sentiment and traditions, and, usually (though not always, as, for example, Belgium or Switzerland) by common heritage. A state, on the other hand, is a society of men united under one government. These two forms of society are not necessarily coincident. A single nation may be divided into several states, and conversely a single state may comprise several nations or parts of nations." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 136 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

2. A community of people inhabiting a defined territory and organized under an independent government; a sovereign political state. Cf. STATE.

national, adj. 1. Of or relating to a nation <national anthem>. 2. Nationwide in scope <national emergency>.

national, n. 1. A member of a nation. 2. A person owing permanent allegiance to and under the protection of a state. 8 USCA § 1101(a)(21).

national of the United States. A citizen of the United States or a noncitizen who owes permanent allegiance to the United States. 8 USCA § 1101(a)(22). — Also termed U.S. national; U.S. citizen.

National Aeronautics and Space Act. A 1958 federal statute that created the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), a civilian agency of the federal government whose functions include conducting space research, improving aeronautical travel, building manned and unmanned space vehicles, developing operational space programs, and engaging in other space activities devoted to peaceful purposes for the benefit of all humankind. 42 USCA §§ 2451-2484.

national association. See national bank under BANK.

National Association of Realtors. An association of real-estate brokers and agents promoting education, professional standards, and modernization in areas of real estate such as brokerage, appraisal, and property management. — Abbr. NAR.

National Association of Securities Dealers. A group of brokers and dealers empowered by the SEC to regulate the over-the-counter securities market. — Abbr. NASD.

National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotation system. A computerized system for recording transactions and displaying price quotations for a group of actively traded securities on the over-the-counter market. — Abbr. NASDAQ.

national bank. See BANK.

National Bar Association. An organization comprised primarily of African-American members of the legal profession, which was founded in 1925 and which seeks to promote education, professionalism, and the protection of civil rights. — Abbr. NBA.

National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. An organization that drafts and proposes statutes for adoption by individual states, with the goal of making the laws on various subjects uniform among the states. • Founded in 1892 and composed of representatives from all 50 states, the Conference has drafted more than 200 uniform laws, including the Uniform Commercial Code. — Abbr. NCCUSL. — Also termed Uniform Law Commissioners. See UNIFORM ACT; MODEL ACT.

national currency. Money (both notes and coins) approved by a national government and placed in circulation as a medium of exchange. See LEGAL TENDER.

National Daily Quotation Service. See PINK SHEET.

national debt. The total financial obligation of the federal government, including such instruments as Treasury bills, notes, and bonds, as well as foreign debt.

national defense. 1. All measures taken by a nation to protect itself against its enemies. • A nation's protection of its collective ideals and values is included in the concept of national defense. 2. A nation's military establishment.

national domicile. See DOMICILE.

national emergency. A state of national crisis or a situation requiring immediate and extraordinary national action.

National Environmental Policy Act. A 1969 federal statute establishing U.S. environmental policy. • The statute requires federal agencies to submit an environmental-impact statement with every proposal for a program or law that would affect the environment. 42 USCA national government. The government of an entire country, as distinguished from that of a province, state, subdivision, or territory of the country and as distinguished from an international organization.

National Guard. The U.S. militia, which is maintained as a reserve for the U.S. Army and Air Force. • Its members are volunteers, recruited and trained on a statewide basis and equipped by the federal government. A state may request the National Guard's assistance in quelling disturbances, and the federal government may order the National Guard into active service in times of war or other national emergency. See MILITIA.

nationality. 1. NATION (1). 2. The relationship between a citizen of a nation and the nation itself, customarily involving allegiance by the citizen and protection by the state; membership in a nation. 3. The formal relationship between a ship and the nation under whose flag the ship sails. See FLAG STATE.

Nationality Act. See IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY ACT.

nationalization, n. 1. The act of bringing an industry under governmental control or ownership. 2. The act of giving a person the status of a citizen. See NATURALIZATION.

nationalize, vb. 1. To bring (an industry) under governmental control or ownership. 2. To give (a person) the status of a citizen; NATURALIZE.

National Labor Relations Act. A federal statute regulating the relations between employers and employees and establishing the National Labor Relations Board. 29 USCA §§ 151-169. •

The statute is also known as the Wagner Act of 1935. It was amended by the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947 and the Landrum-Griffin Act of 1959. — Also termed Wagner Act. — Abbr. NLRRA.

National Labor Relations Board. A federal agency (created by the National Labor Relations Act) that regulates employer-employee relations by establishing collective bargaining, conducting union elections, and prohibiting unfair labor practices. 29 USCA § 153. — Abbr. NLRB. — Often shortened to Labor Relations Board.

National Lawyers Guild. An association of lawyers, law students, and legal workers dedicated to promoting a left-wing political and social agenda. • Founded in 1937, it now comprises some 4,000 members. Cf. FEDERALIST SOCIETY.

National Mediation Board. A federal agency that, among other things, mediates disputes between rail and air carriers and their employees over wages and working conditions. • It was created by the Railway Labor Act. 45 USCA §§ 154-163. — Abbr. NMB.

National Motor Vehicle Theft Act. See DYER ACT.

national origin. The country in which a person was born, or from which the person's ancestors came. • This term is used in several anti-discrimination statutes, including Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibits discrimination because of an individual's "race, color, religion, sex, or national origin." 42 USCA § 2000e-2.

National Priorities List. Environmental law. The Environmental Protection Agency's list of the most serious uncontrolled or abandoned hazardous-waste sites that are identified for possible long-term remediation as Superfund sites. 40 CFR § 35.6015. — Abbr. NPL.

National Quotation Bureau. A company that publishes daily price quotations (pink sheets) of over-the-counter securities.

National Reporter System. A series of law-books, published by the West Group, containing every published decision of the federal and state courts in the United States. • For federal courts, the system includes the Supreme Court Reporter, Federal Reporter, Federal Claims Reporter, Federal Supplement, Federal Rules Deci- sions, Bankruptcy Reporter, Military Justice Reporter, and Veterans Appeals Reporter. For state courts, the system includes the Atlantic Reporter, New York Supplement, North Eastern Reporter, North Western Reporter, Pacific Reporter, South Eastern Reporter, Southern Reporter, and South Western Reporter.

National Response Center. Environmental law. A nationwide communication center located in Washington, D.C., responsible for receiving, and relaying to appropriate federal officials, all notices of oil discharges and other releases of hazardous substances. 40 CFR § 310.11.

national-security privilege. See state-secrets privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

national-service life insurance. A policy, issuable to a person in active U.S. military service on or after October 8, 1940, that provides life insurance at favorable rates. • This insurance was established by the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, and is regulated by the Administrator of Veterans Affairs. 38 USCA §§ 1901-1929.

national synod. See SYNOD.

National Transportation Safety Board. An independent government agency that investigates some transportation accidents, conducts safety studies, hears and rules on licensing appeals, and proposes safety guidelines and improved safety standards for the transportation industry. 49 USCA §§ 1101-1155. — Abbr. NTSB.

national union. See UNION.

nations, law of. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

native, n. 1. A person who is a citizen of a particular place, region, or nation by virtue of having been born there. 2. A person whose national origin derives from having been born within a particular place. 3. Loosely, a person born abroad whose parents are citizens of the nation and are not permanently residing abroad. 4. Loosely, a person or thing belonging to a group indigenous to a particular place. • The term Native American is sometimes shortened to native.

native-born, adj. Born in the nation specified . • This term is sometimes considered redundant. See NATIVE.

nativi conventionarii (nə-tī-vī kən-ven-shee-ə-nair-ee-ī), n. pl. [Law Latin] Hist. Villeins by contract.

nativi de stipite (nə-tī-vī dee stip-ə-tee), n. pl. [Law Latin] Hist. Villeins by birth. See NATIVUS; NATALE.

nativitas (nə-tiv-ə-tas), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The servitude or bondage of serfs.

nativo habendo (nə-tī-voh hə-ben-doh), n. DE NATIVO HABENDO.

nativus (nə-tī-vəs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A person who is born a villein or serf.

“Having seen what serfdom means, we may ask how men become serfs. The answer is that almost always the serf is a born serf; nativus and villanus were commonly used as interchangeable terms . . .” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 422 (2d ed. 1898).

natural, adj. 1. In accord with the regular course of things in the universe and without accidental or purposeful interference . 2. Normal; proceeding from the regular character of a person or thing <it is natural for a duck to fly south in the winter>. 3. Brought about by nature as opposed to artificial means . 4. Inherent; not acquired or assumed <natural talent>. 5. Indigenous; native <the original or natural inhabitants of a country>. 6. Of or relating to birth <natural child as distinguished from adopted child>. 7. Untouched by civilization; wild <only a small part of the forest remains in its natural state>. — naturally, adv.

natural, n. 1. A person who is native to a place. See NATIVE; NATURAL-BORN CITIZEN. 2. A person or thing especially suited for a particular endeavor.

natural-accumulation doctrine. The rule that a governmental entity or other landowner is not required to remove naturally occurring ice or snow from public property, such as a highway, unless the entity has, by taking some affirmative action (such as highway construction), increased the travel hazard to the public.

natural affection. The love naturally existing between close relatives, such as parent and child. • Natural affection may be valid consideration for a completed contract but insufficient to support an unperformed contract. See CONSIDERATION; executory contract under CONTRACT.

natural allegiance. See ALLEGIANCE.

natural and probable consequence. See NATURAL CONSEQUENCE.

natural-born citizen. See CITIZEN.

Natural Born Citizen Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution barring persons not born in the United States from the presidency. U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 5.

natural-born subject. See SUBJECT.

natural boundary. See BOUNDARY.

natural channel. See CHANNEL.

natural child. See CHILD.

natural cognation. See COGNATION.

natural consequence. Something that predictably occurs as the result of an act <plaintiff's injuries were the natural consequence of the car wreck>. — Also termed natural and probable consequence.

natural day. See DAY.

natural death. See DEATH.

natural-death act. A statute that allows a person to issue a written directive instructing a physician to withhold life-sustaining procedures if the person should become terminally ill.

naturalis possessio (nach-ə-ray-lis pə-zes[h]-ee-oh). Mere detention of an object. • This type of possession exists when the possessor's holding of the object is limited by a recognition of another person's outstanding right. The holder may be a usufructuary, a bailee, or a servant.

naturalization. The granting of citizenship to a foreign-born person under statutory authority.

Naturalization Clause. The constitutional provision stating that every person born or naturalized in the United States is a citizen of the United States and of the state of residence. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. See JUS SOLI.

naturalization court. A court having jurisdiction to hear and decide naturalization petitions. • Naturalization courts were abolished as a result of the Immigration Act of 1990. Under current U.S. law, the Attorney General has the sole authority to naturalize citizens. But after a hearing before an immigration officer, an applicant may seek review of the denial of an application for naturalization in the federal district court for the district in which the applicant resides. If an applicant is certified to be eligible for naturalization, the oath of allegiance may be administered by the Attorney General, a federal district court, or a state court of record. See oath of allegiance under OATH.

naturalize, vb. To grant citizenship to (a foreign-born person) under statutory authority. — naturalization, n.

naturalized citizen. See CITIZEN.

natural law. 1. A physical law of nature <gravitation is a natural law>. 2. A philosophical system of legal and moral principles purportedly deriving from a universalized conception of human nature or divine justice rather than from legislative or judicial action; moral law embodied in principles of right and wrong <many ethical teachings are based on natural law>. — Also termed law of nature; natural justice; lex aeterna; eternal law; lex naturae; divine law; jus divinum; jus naturale; jus natu- rae; normative jurisprudence. Cf. FUNDAMENTAL LAW; POSITIVE LAW.

"Natural law, as it is revived today, seeks to organize the ideal element in law, to furnish a critique of old received ideals and give a basis for formulating new ones, and to yield a reasoned canon of values and a technique of applying it. I should prefer to call it philosophical jurisprudence. But one can well sympathize with those who would salvage the good will of the old name as an asset of the science of law." Roscoe Pound, The Formative Era of American Law 29 (1938).

"It is true that when medieval writers spoke of natural law as being discoverable by reason, they meant that the best human reasoning could discover it, and not, of course, that the results to which any and every individual's reasoning led him was natural law. The foolish criticism of Jeremy Bentham: 'a great multitude of people are continually talking of the law of nature; and then they go on giving you their sentiments about what is right and what is wrong; and these sentiments, you are to understand, are so many chapters and sections of the law of nature', merely showed a contempt for a great conception which Bentham had not taken the trouble to understand." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 20–21 (5th ed. 1955).

"[N]atural law is often an idealization of the opposite to that which prevails. Where inequality or privilege exists, natural law demands its abolition." Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 96 (1961).

natural life. A person's physical life span.

natural monopoly. See MONOPOLY.

natural monument. See MONUMENT.

natural object. 1. A person likely to receive a portion of another person's estate based on the nature and circumstances of their relationship. — Also termed natural object of bounty; natural object of one's bounty; natural object of testator's bounty. 2. NATURAL BOUNDARY. 3. NATURAL MONUMENT.

The elements of the universe, such as mountains, plants, planets, and stars.

natus (nay-təs), adj. [Latin] Born; (of a child) alive.

naucerus (naw-kleer-əs), n. [Latin fr. Greek naus "ship" + kleeros "allotment"] Roman law. A shipmaster.

naulage (naw-lij), n. [Old French fr. Law Latin naulagium "passage money"] The fare for passengers or goods traveling by ship. See NAULUM.

naulum (naw-ləm), n. [Latin fr. Greek naus "ship"] Roman law. Fare; freights; a shipowner's fee for carrying people or goods from one place to another. • The term derives from the mythological reference to money placed in the mouths of the dead as a toll so that Charon would lead them across the river Styx to the underworld.

nauta (naw-tə), n. [Latin fr. Greek naus "ship"] Roman law. A sailor.

nautical, adj. Of or relating to ships or shipping, carriage by sea, or navigation.

nautical assessor. A person skilled in maritime matters who is summoned in an admiralty case to assist the judge on points requiring special expertise.

nautical mile. A measure of distance for air and sea navigation, equal to one minute of arc of a great circle of the earth. • Different measures have been used by different countries because the earth is not a perfect sphere. Since 1959, however, the United States has used an international measure for a nautical mile, set by the Hydrographic Bureau, equal to 6,076.11549 feet, or 1,852 meters.

nauticum fenus (naw-ti-kəm fee-nəs), n. [Greek nautikum "nautical" + Latin fenus "interest"] Roman & civil law. A loan on bottomry made to a transporter of merchandise by ship. • The loan is subject to an extremely high rate of interest because it does not have to be repaid unless the ship safely reaches its destination. The nauticum fenus is both a loan and marine insurance. The rate, originally unlimited because of the risks of sea travel, was eventually fixed at 12%. The money loaned is pecunia trajecticia (money conveyed overseas). — Also spelled nauticum foenus. — Also termed nautica pecunia; foenus nauticum.

NAV. abbr. NET ASSET VALUE.

navagium (na-vay-jee-əm), n. [Latin "ship; voyage"] Hist. A tenant's duty to transport the lord's goods by ship.

naval, adj. 1. Of or relating to ships or shipping. 2. Of or relating to a navy. See NAVY.

naval law. A system of regulations governing naval forces. See CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE.

navarch (nay-vahrk), n. [fr. Greek naus "ship" + archos "chief"] Hist. A master of an armed ship. — Also termed navarchus. Cf. NAVICULARIUS.

navicularius (nə-vik-yə-lair-ee-əs), n. [Latin "shipowner"] Hist. A person engaged in the shipping business.

navigable (nav-i-gə-bəl), adj. 1. Capable of allowing vessels or vehicles to pass, and thereby usable for travel or commerce <the channel was barely navigable because it was so narrow>.

navigable in fact, adj. Naturally usable for travel or commerce. • A stream is navigable in fact if, in its natural and ordinary state, it can be used for travel or commerce.

2. Capable of being steered <navigable aircraft>. See NAVIGABLE WATER.

navigable airspace. The area above the legally established minimum flight altitudes, including the area needed to ensure safe takeoffs and landings of aircraft. 49 USCA § 40102(a)(30).

navigable sea. Int'l law. The ocean waters divided into three zones of control among nations: (1) the inland waters, which are near a nation's shores and over which a nation has complete sovereignty; (2) territorial waters, which are measured from the seaward edge of the inland waters, over which a nation has extensive control but over which innocent parties must be allowed to travel to other nations; and (3) the high seas, which are international waters not subject to the domain of any single nation.

navigable water. 1. At early common law, any body of water affected by the ebb and flow of the tide. • This test was first adopted in England because most of England's in-fact navigable waters are influenced by the tide, unlike the large inland rivers that are capable of supporting commerce in the United States.

"[N]avigable waters in English admiralty law generally were defined as those waters subject to the ebb and flow of the tide. This limitation was acceptable for an American nation composed of states along the Atlantic coast, where inland streams generally were not used for commerce beyond the reach of tidal fluctuations. However, the expansion of the American nation westward resulted in the use for water-borne commerce of a number of important streams — most notably the Mississippi River — to carry goods and people far beyond the effect of tide waters." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 18 (2d ed. 1988).

2. (usu. pl.) A body of water that is used, or typically can be used, as a highway for commerce with ordinary modes of trade and travel on water. • Under the Commerce Clause, Congress has broad jurisdiction over all navigable waters in the United States.

navigable water of the United States.

Navigable water that alone — or in combination with other waters — forms a continuous highway for commerce with other states or foreign countries.

navigate, vb. 1. To travel or sail in a vessel on water <to navigate from New York to Bermuda>. 2. To steer <to navigate the plane>. 3. To make way through, on, or about something <the plaintiff was unable to navigate the stairs in the dark>.

navigation. 1. The act of sailing vessels on water. 2. The process and business of directing the course of a vessel from one place to another. See RULES OF NAVIGATION.

navigation servitude. 1. An easement allowing the federal government to regulate commerce on navigable water without having to pay compensation for interference with private ownership rights. See NAVIGABLE WATER.

"The navigation servitude, because of its link to navigable waters and the protection of navigation, is often confused with the public trust doctrine. The navigation servitude, however, is a paramount federal servitude on navigable waters based on the commerce power rather than on ownership or trust responsibilities." Donna R. Christie, Coastal and Ocean Management Law in a Nutshell 34 (1994).

2. An easement, based on the state police power or public trust doctrine, that allows a state to regulate commerce on navigable water and provide limited compensation for interference with private ownership rights. • The state servitude is inferior to the federal servitude.

navis (nay-vis), n. [Latin] A ship; a vessel.

navy. 1. A fleet of ships. 2. The military sea force of a country, including its collective ships and its corps of officers and enlisted personnel; esp. (usu. cap.), the division of the U.S. armed services responsible primarily for seagoing forces. • The U.S. Constitution gives Congress the power to establish a navy and make laws governing the naval forces. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 13–14.

Navy Department. A division of the Department of Defense that oversees the operation and efficiency of the Navy, including the Marine Corps component (and the U.S. Coast Guard when operating as a naval service). • Established in 1798, the Department is headed by the Secretary of the Navy, who is appointed by the President and reports to the Secretary of Defense.

nazeranna (naz-ə-ran-ə). Hist. The amount that a person pays to the government as an acknowledgment for public office or a grant of public lands.

N.B. abbr. [Latin nota bene] Note well; take notice — used in documents to call attention to something important.

NBA. abbr. NATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION.

NCCUSL (nə-k[y]oo-səl). abbr. NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF COMMISSIONERS ON UNIFORM STATE LAWS.

n.c.d. abbr. NEMINE CONTRA DICENTE.

N.D. abbr. Northern District, in reference to U.S. judicial districts.

ne admittas (nee ad-mit-əs), n. [Latin “that you admit not”] Eccles. law. A writ prohibiting a bishop, usu. in a quare impedit action, from admitting the other party’s clerk to be a parson of a church. • After a party institutes a quare impedit action to enforce a right to propose a clerk to the position of parson of a vacant church (right of advowson), that party can resort to the ne admittas writ if it is believed that the bishop will admit another person’s proposed clerk before the quare impedit action concludes. See QUARE IMPEDIT.

near, adv. 1. Close to; not far away, as a measure of distance <the neighbors’ houses are near one another>. 2. Almost; close in degree . 3. Closely tied by blood <my brother is a near relative>. 4. Familiar; intimate .

near money. See current asset under ASSET.

neat, adj. 1. Clean; pure. 2. Free from extraneous matter.

neat weight. See net weight under WEIGHT.

ne baila pas (nə bay-lə pah), n. [Law French “he or she did not deliver”] In an action for detinue, a defendant’s plea denying the receipt of the property in question.

necation (ni-kay-shən), n. [fr. Latin necare “to kill”] Hist. The act of killing.

necessaries. 1. Things that are indispensable to living <an infant’s necessities include food, shelter, and clothing>. — Also termed necessities of life. 2. Things that are essential to maintaining the lifestyle to which one is accustomed . • The term includes whatever is reasonably needed for subsistence, health, comfort, and education, considering the person’s age, station in life, and medical condition, but it excludes (1) anything purely ornamental, (2) anything solely for pleasure, (3) what the person is already supplied with, (4) anything that concerns someone’s estate or business as opposed to personal needs, and (5) borrowed money.

“Things may be of a useful character, but the quality or quantity supplied may take them out of the character of necessities. Elementary textbooks might be a necessary to a student of law, but not a rare edition of ‘Littleton’s Tenures,’ or eight or ten copies of ‘Stephen’s Commentaries.’ Necessaries also vary according to the station in life of the infant or his peculiar circumstances at the time. The quality of clothing suitable to an Eton boy would be unnecessary for a telegraph clerk; the medical attendance and diet required by an invalid would be unnecessary to one in ordinary health. It does not follow therefore that because a thing is of a useful class, a judge is bound to allow a jury to say whether or no it is a necessary.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 172 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

necessary and proper, adj. Being appropriate and well adapted to fulfilling an objective.

Necessary and Proper Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution permitting Congress to make laws “necessary and proper” for the execution of its enumerated powers. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18. • The Supreme Court has broadly interpreted this clause to grant Congress the implied power to enact any law reasonably designed to achieve an express constitutional power. McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 316 (1819). — Also termed Basket Clause; Coefficient Clause; Elastic Clause; Sweeping Clause.

necessary damages. See general damages under DAMAGES.

necessary deposit. See DEPOSIT (5).

necessary diligence. See DILIGENCE.

necessary domicile. See DOMICILE.

necessary implication. See IMPLICATION.

necessary improvement. See IMPROVEMENT.

necessary inference. A conclusion that is unavoidable if the premise on which it is based is taken to be true.

necessary intromission. See INTROMISSION.

necessary party. See PARTY (2).

necessary repair. An improvement to property that is both needed to prevent deterioration and proper under the circumstances.

necessary way. See easement by necessity under EASEMENT.

necessitas (nə-sēs-i-tas), n. [Latin] Roman law.

1. Necessity. 2. A force or influence that compels an unwilling person to act. • The term refers to a lack of free will to do a legal act, as opposed to libera voluntas ("free will").

necessitas culpabilis (nə-sēs-i-tas kəl-pay-bə-lis). [Latin "culpable necessity"] Hist. An unfortunate necessity that, while essentially excusing the act done under its compulsion, does not necessarily relieve the actor from blame.

"And as to the necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo lord Bacon entitles it necessitas culpabilis . . . For the law intends that the quarrel or assault arose from some unknown wrong . . . and since in quarrels both parties may be, and usually are, in some fault; and it scarce can be tried who was originally in the wrong; the law will not hold the survivor entirely guiltless. But it is clear, in the other case, that where I kill a thief that breaks into my house, the original default can never be upon my side." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 186–87 (1769).

necessities. 1. Indispensable things of any kind. 2. NECESSARIES.

necessities of life. See NECESSARIES (1).

necessitous, adj. Living in a state of extreme want; hard up.

necessitous circumstances. The situation of one who is very poor; extreme want.

necessitudo (nə-sēs-i-t[y]oo-doh), n. [Latin "need"] Hist. 1. An obligation. 2. A close connection or relationship between persons, such as a family relationship.

necessity. 1. Criminal law. A justification defense for a person who acts in an emergency that he or she did not create and who commits a harm that is less severe than the harm that would have occurred but for the person's actions. • For example, a mountain climber lost in a blizzard can assert necessity as a defense to theft of food and blankets from another's cabin. — Also termed choice of evils; duress of circumstances. 2. Torts. A privilege that may relieve a person from liability for trespass or conversion if that person, having no alternative, harms another's property in an effort to protect life or health.

"In some cases even damage intentionally done may not involve the defendant in liability when he is acting under necessity to prevent a greater evil. The precise limits of the defence are not clear, for it has affinities with certain other defences, such as act of God, self-help, duress, or inevitable accident. It is distinguishable from self-defence on the ground that this presupposes that the plaintiff is prima facie a wrongdoer: the defence of necessity contemplates the infliction of harm on an innocent plaintiff. The defence, if it exists, enables a defendant to escape liability for the intentional interference with the security of another's person or property on the ground that the acts complained of were necessary to prevent greater damage to the commonwealth or to another or to the defendant himself, or to their or his property. The use of the term necessity serves to conceal the fact that the defendant always has a choice between two evils. This is what distinguishes the defence of necessity from that of impossibility." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 493 (17th ed. 1977).

moral necessity. A necessity arising from a duty incumbent on a person to act in a particular way.

physical necessity. A necessity involving an actual, tangible force that compels a person to act in a particular way.

private necessity. Torts. A necessity that involves only the defendant's personal interest and thus provides only a limited privilege. • For example, if the defendant harms the plaintiff's dock by keeping a boat moored to the dock during a hurricane, the defendant can assert private necessity but must compensate the plaintiff for the dock's damage.

public necessity. Torts. A necessity that involves the public interest and thus completely excuses the defendant's liability. • For example, if the defendant destroys the plaintiff's house to stop the spread of a fire that threatens the town, the defendant can assert public necessity.

necessity defense. See JUSTIFICATION (2).

neck verse. Hist. A verse, usu. consisting of the opening verse of Psalm 51 (Miserere mei, Deus "Have mercy on me, O God"), which was used as a literacy test for an accused who claimed benefit of clergy. • An accused who read the passage satisfactorily would not receive the maximum sentence (the person's neck would be saved). Although judges could assign any passage, they usu. chose Psalm 51, so that for many years criminals memorized this verse and pretended to read it. Still, the records show that many accused persons failed the test. The reading of the neck verse was abolished in 1707. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

"During the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the judges' attitudes to benefit of clergy changed completely, and they came to see it as a regular means of escape from the mandatory death penalty. Physical appearance was disregarded, and reading became the sole test of clerical status. When a man was convicted of a felony, he would fall on his knees and pray the book; he would then be tendered a passage from the psalter, known as the neck-verse, and if he could read or recite it satisfactorily his clergy was taken to be proved. . . . Strictly speaking, the decision whether the convict read as a clerk was for the ordinary; but he was subject to the control of the judges, and could be fined for refusing to accept someone. By the end of the sixteenth century as many as half of all men convicted of felony were recorded as having successfully claimed benefit of clergy." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 587 (3d ed. 1990).

necropsy (nek-rop-see). See AUTOPSY (1).

ne disturba pas (nə di-stər-bə pah), n. [Law French "did not disturb"] Eccles. law. A defendant's general denial (plea of the general issue) in a quare impedit action. See QUARE IMPEDIT.

ne dona pas (nə doh-nə pah), n. [Law French "did not give"] Hist. A defendant's general denial (plea of the general issue) in a formedon action, alleging that the plaintiff was given the right to land under a gift of tail. — Also termed non dedit. See FORMEDON.

nee (nay), adj. [French] (Of a woman) born. • This term is sometimes used after a married woman's name to indicate her maiden name <Mrs. Robert Jones nee Thatcher>. — Also spelled née.

needy, adj. 1. Needful; necessary. 2. Indigent; very poor. • Needy implies a more permanent and less urgent condition than necessitous. See NECESSITOUS.

ne exeat republica (nee ek-see-ət [or ek-see-at] ri-pəb-li-kəh), n. [Latin "let him not go out of the republic"] 1. A writ restraining a person from leaving the republic. 2. A chancery writ ordering the person to whom it is addressed not to leave the jurisdiction of the court or the state. • Ne exeat writs — no longer widely used — are usu. issued to ensure the satisfaction of a claim against the defendant. — Often shortened to ne exeat. — Also termed writ of ne exeat; ne exeat regno.

"The district courts of the United States . . . shall have such jurisdiction to make and issue in civil actions, writs and orders of injunction, and of ne exeat republica, orders appointing receivers, and such other orders and processes . . . as may be necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the internal revenue laws." IRC (26 USCA) § 7402(a).

"Such a writ [ne exeat] might be issued upon the commencement of the suit for equitable relief, during the pendency of the suit, or upon issuance of the final decree to secure its enforcement. But such writ related primarily to the person of the defendant and issued only upon satisfactory proof that he planned or intended to remove himself beyond the court's jurisdiction so that he might escape obedience to such command as might be or had been laid upon him. The writ has been frequently termed an equitable bail. It involves taking and keeping the defendant in custody until he gives bail or bond in a designated amount, conditioned upon his keeping himself amenable to the effective processes of the court." William Q. de Funiak, Handbook of Modern Equity 21 (2d ed. 1956).

nefas (nee-fas), n. [Latin ne "not" + fas "right"] 1. Roman law. Something that the gods forbid. 2. Roman law. Something against the law or custom. 3. Hist. Something that is wicked.

nefastus (ni-fas-təs), n. [Latin ne "not" + fastus "lawful for public business"] Roman law. A day when it is unlawful to open the courts, administer justice, or hold public assemblies. • The priests in charge of supervising the laws and religious observances established an official calendar, on which certain days, marked "nefasti," were to be devoted to religious or public ceremonies. — Also termed dies nefasti. Cf. dies fasti under DIES.

negate, vb. 1. To deny. 2. To nullify; to render ineffective.

negative, adj. 1. Of or relating to something bad; not positive . 2. Of or relating to refusal of consent; not affirmative .

negative, n. 1. A word or phrase of denial or refusal <"no" and "not" are negatives>. 2. A word expressing the opposite of the positive <two negatives and one positive>. 3. The original plate of a photograph, on which light and shadows are the opposite of the positive images later created and printed <not only the pictures, but also the negatives, were required to be returned>. 4. Archaic. The power of veto <the king's negative has eroded>.

negative, vb. To negate; to deny, nullify, or render ineffective <the jury negated fraud>.

negative act. See ACT (2).

negative amortization. See AMORTIZATION.

negative averment. See AVERMENT.

negative cash flow. See CASH FLOW.

negative causation. See CAUSATION.

Negative Commerce Clause. See COMMERCE CLAUSE.

negative condition. See CONDITION (2).

negative contingent fee. See reverse contingent fee under CONTINGENT FEE.

negative covenant. See COVENANT (1).

negative duty. See DUTY (1).

negative easement. See EASEMENT.

negative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

negative externality. See EXTERNALITY.

negative misprision. See MISPRISION.

negative-pledge clause. 1. A provision requiring a borrower, who borrows funds without giving security, to refrain from giving future lenders any security without the consent of the first lender. 2. A provision, usu. in a bond indenture, stating that the issuing entity will not pledge its assets if it will result in less security to the bondholders under the indenture agreement.

negative pregnant. A denial implying its affirmative opposite by seeming to deny only a qualification of the allegation and not the allegation itself. • An example is the statement, "I didn't steal the money last Tuesday," the implication being that the theft might have happened on another day. — Also termed negative pregnant with an affirmative. Cf. AFFIRMATIVE PREGNANT.

negative prescription. See PRESCRIPTION (3).

negative proof. See PROOF.

negative reprisal. See REPRISAL.

negative servitude. See SERVITUDE (1).

negative statute. See STATUTE.

negative testimony. See negative evidence under EVIDENCE.

negative veto. See qualified veto under VETO.

neglect, n. The omission of proper attention to a person or thing, whether inadvertent, negligent, or willful; the act or condition of disregarding. — neglect, vb. — neglectful, adj.

"'Neglect' is not the same thing as 'negligence'. In the present connection the word 'neglect' indicates, as a purely objective fact, that a person has not done that which it was his duty to do; it does not indicate the reason for this failure. 'Negligence,' on the other hand, is a subjective state of mind, and it indicates a particular reason why the man has failed to do his duty, namely because he has not kept the performance of the duty in his mind as he ought to have done. A man can 'neglect' his duty either intentionally or negligently." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 108 n.1 (16th ed. 1952).

culpable neglect. Censurable or blameworthy neglect; neglect that is less than gross carelessness but more than the failure to use ordinary care.

excusable neglect. A failure — which the law will excuse — to take some proper step at the proper time (esp. in neglecting to answer a lawsuit) not because of the party's own carelessness, inattention, or willful disregard of the court's process, but because of some unexpected or unavoidable hindrance or accident or because of reliance on the care and vigilance of the party's counsel or on a promise made by the adverse party.

inexcusable neglect. Unjustifiable neglect; neglect that implies more than unintentional inadvertence. • A finding of inexcusable neglect in, for example, failing to file an answer to a complaint will prevent the setting aside of a default judgment.

willful neglect. Intentional neglect; deliberate neglect.

neglect hearing. A judicial hearing involving alleged child abuse or some other situation in which a child has not been properly cared for. ● Depending on the jurisdiction, this type of hearing might take place in various types of courts, such as a family court, a juvenile court, a probate court, or a district court.

negligence, n. 1. The failure to exercise the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in a similar situation; any conduct that falls below the legal standard established to protect others against unreasonable risk of harm, except for conduct that is intentionally, wantonly, or willfully disregarding of others' rights. ● The term denotes culpable carelessness. The Roman-law equivalents are culpa and negligentia, as contrasted with dolus (wrongful intention). — Also termed actionable negligence; ordinary negligence; simple negligence. 2. A tort grounded in this failure, usu. expressed in terms of the following elements: duty, breach of duty, causation, and damages.

"Negligence in law ranges from inadvertence that is hardly more than accidental to sinful disregard of the safety of others." Patrick Dévlin, The Enforcement of Morals 36 (1968).

"During the first half of the nineteenth century, negligence began to gain recognition as a separate and independent basis of tort liability. Its rise coincided in a marked degree with the Industrial Revolution; and it very probably was stimulated by the rapid increase in the number of accidents caused by industrial machinery, and in particular by the invention of railways. It was greatly encouraged by the disintegration of the old forms of action, and the disappearance of the distinction between direct and indirect injuries, found in trespass and case . . . Intentional injuries, whether direct or indirect, began to be grouped as a distinct field of liability, and negligence remained as the main basis for unintended torts. Negligence thus developed into the dominant cause of action for accidental injury in this nation today." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 28, at 161 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

"Negligence is a matter of risk — that is to say, of recognizable danger of injury . . . In most instances, it is caused by heedlessness or inadvertence, by which the negligent party is unaware of the results which may follow from his act. But it may also arise where the negligent party has considered the possible consequences carefully, and has exercised his own best judgment. The almost universal use of the phrase 'due care' to describe conduct which is not negligent should not obscure the fact that the essence of negligence is not necessarily the absence of solicitude for those who may be adversely affected by one's actions but is instead behavior which should be recognized as involving unreasonable danger to others." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 31, at 169 (5th ed. 1984).

active negligence. Negligence resulting from an affirmative or positive act, such as driving through a barrier. Cf. passive negligence.

advertent negligence. Negligence in which the actor is aware of the unreasonable risk that he or she is creating; RECKLESSNESS. — Also termed willful negligence.

collateral negligence. An independent contractor's negligence, for which the employer is generally not liable. See COLLATERAL-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE.

comparative negligence. A plaintiff's own negligence that proportionally reduces the damages recoverable from a defendant. — Also termed comparative fault. See COMPARATIVE-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE.

concurrent negligence. The negligence of two or more parties acting independently but causing the same damage. Cf. joint negligence.

contributory negligence. 1. A plaintiff's own negligence that played a part in causing the plaintiff's injury and that is significant enough (in a few jurisdictions) to bar the plaintiff from recovering damages. ● In most jurisdictions, this defense has been superseded by comparative negligence. See CONTRIBUTORY-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE. 2. Rare. The negligence of a third party — neither the plaintiff nor the defendant — whose act or omission played a part in causing the plaintiff's injury.

"The contributory negligence of a third party is no excuse for the negligence of the defendant." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 154 (13th ed. 1924).

criminal negligence. Gross negligence so extreme that it is punishable as a crime. ● For example, involuntary manslaughter or other negligent homicide can be based on criminal negligence, as when an extremely careless automobile driver kills someone. — Also termed culpable negligence; gross negligence.

"Though the legislatures and the courts have often made it clear that criminal liability generally requires more fault than the ordinary negligence which will do for tort liability, they have not so often made it plain just what is required in addition to tort negligence — greater risk, subjective awareness of the risk, or both. Statutes are sometimes worded in terms of 'gross negligence' or 'culpable negligence' or 'criminal negligence,' without any further definition of these terms. . . . The courts thus have had to do their best with little guidance from the legislature, with varying results." Wayne R. LaFare & Austin W. Scott, Jr., Criminal Law § 3.7, at 235-37 (2d ed. 1986).

culpable negligence. Negligent conduct that, while not intentional, involves a disregard of the consequences likely to result from one's actions.

"'Culpable negligence,' while variously defined, has been held incapable of exact definition; it means something more than negligence In connection with negligence, the word 'culpable' is sometimes used in the sense of 'blamable,' and it has been regarded as expressing the thought of a breach of a duty or the commission of a fault; but culpable negligence has been held to amount to more than 'blameworthy' conduct It does not involve the element of intent On the other hand, it has been said to be intentional conduct which the actor may not intend to be harmful but which an ordinary and reasonably prudent man would recognize as involving a strong probability of injury to others." 65 C.J.S. Negligence § 1(13) (1966).

gross negligence. 1. A lack of slight diligence or care. 2. A conscious, voluntary act or omission in reckless disregard of a legal duty and of the consequences to another party, who may typically recover exemplary damages. — Also termed reckless negligence; wanton negligence; willful negligence; willful and wanton negligence; hazardous negligence. 3. See criminal negligence.

"Negligence is gross if the precautions to be taken against harm are very simple, such as persons who are but poorly endowed with physical and mental capacities can easily take." H.L.A. Hart, "Negligence, Mens Rea and Criminal Responsibility," in Punishment and Responsibility 136, 149 (1968).

"Gross Negligence. As it originally appeared, this was very great negligence, or the want of even slight or scant care. It has been described as a failure to exercise even that care which a careless person would use. Several courts, however, dissatisfied with a term so nebulous . . . have construed gross negligence as requiring willful, wanton, or reckless misconduct, or such utter lack of all care as will be evidence thereof But it is still true that most courts consider that 'gross negligence' falls short of a reckless disregard of the consequences, and differs from ordinary negligence only in degree, and not in kind." Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 34, at 211-12 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

hazardous negligence. 1. Careless or reckless conduct that exposes someone to extreme danger of injury or to imminent peril. 2. See gross negligence.

imputed negligence. Negligence of one person charged to another; negligence resulting from a party's special relationship with another party who is originally negligent — so that, for example, a parent might be held responsible for some acts of a child.

inadvertent negligence. Negligence in which the actor is not aware of the unreasonable risk that he or she is creating, but should have foreseen and avoided it. — Also termed simple negligence.

joint negligence. The negligence of two or more persons acting together to cause an accident. Cf. concurrent negligence.

legal negligence. See negligence per se.

negligence in law. Failure to observe a duty imposed by law. See negligence per se; legal negligence.

negligence per se. Negligence established as a matter of law, so that breach of the duty is not a jury question. • Negligence per se usu. arises from a statutory violation. — Also termed legal negligence.

ordinary negligence. Lack of ordinary diligence; the failure to use ordinary care. • The term is most commonly used to differentiate between negligence and gross negligence.

passive negligence. Negligence resulting from a person's failure or omission in acting, such as failing to remove hazardous conditions from public property. Cf. active negligence.

professional negligence. See MALPRACTICE.

reckless negligence. See gross negligence.

simple negligence. See inadvertent negligence.

slight negligence. The failure to exercise the great care of an extraordinarily prudent person, resulting in liability in special circumstances (esp. those involving bailments or carriers) in which lack of ordinary care would not result in liability; lack of great diligence.

subsequent negligence. The negligence of the defendant when, after the defendant's initial negligence and the plaintiff's contributory negligence, the defendant discovers — or should have discovered — that the plaintiff was in a position of danger and fails to exercise due care in preventing the plaintiff's injuries. — Also termed supervening negligence. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

tax negligence. Negligence arising out of the disregard of tax-payment laws, for which the Internal Revenue Service may impose a penalty — 5% of the amount underpaid. IRC (26 USCA) § 6651(a).

wanton negligence. See gross negligence.

willful and wanton negligence. See gross negligence.

willful negligence. See advertent negligence.

negligence rule. Commercial law. The principle that if a party's negligence contributes to an unauthorized signing or a material alteration in a negotiable instrument, that party is estopped from raising this issue against later parties who transfer or pay the instrument in good faith. • Examples of negligence include leaving blanks or spaces on the amount line of the instrument, erroneously mailing the instrument to a person with the same name as the payee, and failing to follow internal procedures designed to prevent forgeries.

negligent, adj. Characterized by a person's failure to exercise the degree of care that someone of ordinary prudence would have exercised in the same circumstance <the negligent driver went through the stop sign> <negligent construction caused the bridge to collapse>. negligently, adv.

"[A] careful consideration is needed of the differences between the meaning of expressions like 'inadvertently' and 'while his mind was a blank' on the one hand, and 'negligently' on the other. In ordinary English, and also in lawyers' English, when harm has resulted from someone's negligence, if we say of that person that he has acted negligently we are not thereby merely describing the frame of mind in which he acted. 'He negligently broke a saucer' is not the same kind of expression as 'he inadvertently broke a saucer'. The point of the adverb 'inadvertently' is merely to inform us of the agent's psychological state, whereas if we say 'He broke it negligently' we are not merely adding to this an element of blame or reproach, but something quite specific, viz. we are referring to the fact that the agent failed to comply with a standard of conduct with which any ordinary reasonable man could and would have complied: a standard requiring him to take precautions against harm. The word 'negligently', both in legal and in non-legal contexts, makes an essential reference to an omission to do what is thus required: it is not a flatly descriptive psychological expression like 'his mind was a blank'." H.L.A. Hart, "Negligence, Mens Rea and Criminal Responsibility," in Punishment and Responsibility 136, 147-48 (1968).

negligent entrustment. The act of leaving a dangerous article (such as a gun or car) with a person who the lender knows, or should know, is likely to use it in an unreasonably risky manner.

negligent escape. See ESCAPE (3).

negligent homicide. See HOMICIDE.

negligentia (neg-li-jen-shee-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. Carelessness; inattentive omission. • Negligentia can be of varying degrees, which may or may not result in actionable liability. See CULPA. Cf. DILIGENTIA.

"In the sources negligentia is tantamount to culpa, and similarly graduated (magna, lata negligentia). Precision in terminology is no more to be found here than in the field of culpa. One text declares ... 'gross negligence (magna negligentia) is culpa, magna culpa is dolus'; another says: 'gross negligence (dissoluta negligentia) is near to dolus (prope dolum).' In the saying 'lata culpa is exorbitant (extreme) negligence, i.e., not to understand (intelligere) what all understand' ... negligentia is identified with ignorance." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 593 (1953).

lata negligentia (lay-tə neg-li-jen-shee-ə). Extreme negligence resulting from an unawareness of something that the actor should have known.

magna negligentia (mag-nə neg-li-jen-shee-ə). See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

negligent infliction of emotional distress.

The tort of causing another severe emotional distress through one's negligent conduct. • Most courts will allow a plaintiff to recover damages for emotional distress if the defendant's conduct results in physical contact with the plaintiff, or, when no contact occurs, if the plaintiff is in the zone of danger. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS; ZONE-OF-DANGER RULE. Cf. INTENTIONAL INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

negligent manslaughter. See involuntary manslaughter under MANSLAUGHTER.

negligent misrepresentation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

negligent offense. See OFFENSE (1).

négoce (ni-gohs), n. [French] Trade; business.

negotiability. The capability of commercial paper to have its title transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery alone, so that the transferee has a rightful claim on it. • Negotiability (which pertains to commercial paper) differs from assignability (which pertains to contracts in general) because an assignee traditionally takes title subject to all equities, and an assignment is not complete without notice to the debtor, whereas an indorsee takes free of all equities and without any notice to the debtor.

negotiable, adj. 1. (Of a written instrument) capable of being transferred by delivery or indorsement when the transferee takes the instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses. 2. (Of a deal, agreement, etc.) capable of being accomplished. 3. (Of a price or deal) subject to further bargaining and possible change. Cf. NONNEGOTIABLE; ASSIGNABLE.

"The term 'negotiable,' in its enlarged signification, is used to describe any written security which may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery merely, so as to vest in the indorsee the legal title, and thus enable him to bring a suit thereon in his own name. But in a strictly commercial classification, and as the term is technically used, it applies only to those instruments which, like bills of exchange, not only carry the legal title with them by indorsement, or delivery, but carry as well, when transferred before maturity, the right of the transferee to demand the full amounts which their faces call for. 'Assignable' is the more appropriate term to describe bonds, and ordinary notes, or notes of hand as they are most commonly called; as 'negotiable' is the more fitting term to describe the peculiar instruments of commerce." 1 John W. Daniel, A Treatise on the Law of Negotiable Instruments § 2, at 3 (Thomas H. Calvert ed., 7th ed. 1933).

negotiable bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

negotiable bond. See BOND (2).

negotiable certificate of deposit. A security issued by a financial institution as a short-term source of funds, usu. with a fixed interest rate and maturity of one year or less.

negotiable instrument. A written instrument that (1) is signed by the maker or drawer, (2) includes an unconditional promise or order to pay a specified sum of money, (3) is payable on demand or at a definite time, and (4) is payable to order or to bearer. UCC § 3-104(a). — Also termed negotiable paper; negotiable note. • Among the various types of negotiable instruments are bills of exchange, promissory notes, bank checks, certificates of deposit, and other negotiable securities.

"What are called 'negotiable instruments,' or 'paper to bearer,' such as bills of exchange, or promissory notes, do really pass from hand to hand, either by delivery or indorsement, giving to each successive recipient a right against the debtor, to which no notice to the debtor is essential, and which, if the paper is held bona fide and for value, is unaffected by flaws in the title of intermediate assignors." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 315-16 (13th ed. 1924).

"One must first understand that a negotiable instrument is a peculiar animal and that many animals calling for the payment of money and others loosely called 'commercial paper' are not negotiable instruments and not subject to the rules of Article 3." James J. White & Robert S. Summers, 2 Uniform Commercial Code § 16-1, at 70 (4th ed. 1995).

negotiable order of withdrawal. A negotiable instrument (such as a check) payable on demand and issued against funds deposited with a financial institution. — Abbr. NOW.

negotiable-order-of-withdrawal account. See NOW account under ACCOUNT.

negotiable paper. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

negotiable words. The terms and phrases that make a document a negotiable instrument. — Also termed words of negotiability. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

negotiate, vb. 1. To communicate with another party for the purpose of reaching an understanding <they negotiated with their counterparts for weeks on end>. 2. To bring about by discussion or bargaining <she negotiated a software license agreement>. 3. To transfer (an instrument) by delivery or indorsement, whereby the transferee takes the instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses <Jones negotiated the check at the neighborhood bank>.

negotiated market. See MARKET.

negotiated offering. See OFFERING.

negotiated plea. See PLEA (1).

negotiating bank. A financial institution that discounts or purchases drafts drawn under a letter of credit issued by another bank.

negotiation, n. 1. A consensual bargaining process in which the parties attempt to reach agreement on a disputed or potentially disputed matter. • Negotiation usu. involves complete autonomy for the parties involved, without the intervention of third parties.

"Negotiation, we may say, ought strictly to be viewed simply as a means to an end; it is the road the parties must travel to arrive at their goal of mutually satisfactory settlement. But like other means, negotiation is easily converted into an end in itself; it readily becomes a game played for its own sake and a game played with so little reserve by those taken up with it that they will sacrifice their own ultimate interests in order to win it." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 128 (1968).

2. (usu. pl.) Dealings conducted between two or more parties for the purpose of reaching an understanding. 3. The transfer of an instrument by delivery or indorsement whereby the transferee takes it for value, in good faith, and without notice of conflicting title claims or defenses. — negotiate, vb. — negotiable, adj. — negotiability, n. See HOLDER IN DUE COURSE.

due negotiation. The transfer of a negotiable document of title so that the transferee takes it free of certain claims enforceable against the transferor. • This is the good-faith-purchase exception to the doctrine of derivative title. UCC §§ 7-501(4); 7-502(1).

negotiation letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

negotiorum gestio (ni-goh-shee-or-əm jes-chee-oh), n. [Latin “management of affairs”] Roman & civil law. A quasi-contractual situation in which an actor (negotiorum gestor) manages or interferes in the business transaction of another person (dominus negotii) in that person’s absence, done without authority but out of concern or friendship. • By such conduct, the actor was bound to conduct the matter to a conclusion and to deliver the transaction’s proceeds to the person, who likewise was bound to reimburse the actor for any expenses incurred. A negotiorum gestio did not exist if the gestor acted self-interestedly or if the owner expressly forbade the gestor from acting on the owner’s behalf.

negotiorum gestor (ni-goh-shee-or-əm jes-tor), n. [Latin “a manager of affairs”] Roman & civil law. A person who volunteers to render some necessary service to property, or to a business, in the absence of its owner. • This person has a claim to be compensated by the owner for the trouble taken, and the owner has a claim for any loss that results from the negotiorum gestor’s fault. — Sometimes shortened to gestor. See NEGOTIORUM GESTIO.

negotium (ni-goh-shee-əm), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A matter; an affair, as in negotium absentis, a matter concerning an absent person. 2. A transaction; an agreement. 3. A trade; a business. 4. A civil or criminal trial. Pl. negotia.

n.e.i. abbr. NON EST INVENTUS.

neife (neef), n. [Law French] Hist. A person born into bondage or serfdom; specif., a female serf. — Also spelled naif; neif; nief.

“For the children of villeins were also in the same state of bondage with their parents; whence they were called in Latin, nativi, which gave rise to the female appellation of a villein, who was called a neife.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 93–94 (1766).

neighbor, n. 1. A person who lives near another <Jensen’s neighbor spotted the fire>. 2. A person or thing situated near something <Canada is the United States’ neighbor to the north>. 3. A person in relation to humankind <love thy neighbor>.

neighborhood. 1. The immediate vicinity; the area near or next to a specified place. 2. People living in a particular vicinity, usu. forming a community within a larger group and having similar economic statuses and social interests. 3. The condition of being close together.

neighborhood effect. See EXTERNALITY.

neighboring rights. Copyright. The intellectual-property rights of performers, producers of sound recordings, and broadcasters. • Each of these right-holders creates something deserving of copyright protection, but these rights are less central to copyright law than such highly creative productions as novels and sculptures.

neighbor principle. The doctrine that one must take reasonable care to avoid acts or omissions that one can reasonably foresee will be likely to injure one’s neighbor. • According to this principle, neighbor includes all persons who are so closely and directly affected by the act that the actor should reasonably think of them when engaging in the act or omission in question.

ne injuste vexes (nee in-jəs-tee vek-seez), n. [Law Latin “do not trouble unjustly”] Hist. A writ prohibiting a lord from demanding more services from a tenant than the tenure allowed.

“The writ of ne injuste vexes . . . which prohibits distresses for greater services than are really due to the lord; being itself of the prohibitory kind, and yet in the nature of a writ of right. It lies, where the tenant in fee-simple and his ancestors have held of the lord by certain services; and the lord hath obtained seisin of more or greater services, by the inadvertent payment or performance of them by the tenant himself. Here the tenant cannot . . . avoid the lord’s possessory right, because of the seisin given by his own hands; but is driven to this writ, to divest the lord’s possession, and establish the mere right of property, by ascertaining the services, and reducing them to their proper standard.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 234 (1768).

neither party. A docket entry reflecting the parties’ agreement not to continue to appear to prosecute and defend a lawsuit. • This entry is equivalent to a dismissal.

ne luminibus officiator (nee loo-min-i-bəs ə-fish-ee-ay-tər), n. [Latin “not impede light”] Roman law. A servitude restraining a homeowner from constructing anything that blocks light to an adjoining house.

nemine contradicente (nem-i-nee kahn-trə-di-sen-tee). [fr. Latin nemo “nobody” + contradicere “contradict”] Without opposition or dissent. • This phrase expresses the lack of opposition by members of a court, legislative body, or other group to a resolution or vote <the motion passed inemine contradicente>. It is used in the English House of Commons. — Abbr. nem. con.; n.c.d. — Also termed inemine dissentiente.

inemine dissentiente (nem-i-nee di-sen-shee-en-tee). [fr. Latin nemo “nobody” + dissentio “dissents”] NEMINE CONTRADICENTE. • This phrase is used in the House of Lords. — Abbr. nem dis.; n.d.

nemo (nee-moh), n. [Latin] No one; no man. • This term is the first word of many Latin maxims, such as nemo est supra leges (“no one is above the law”).

neonaticide. See INFANTICIDE.

NEPA (nee-pə). abbr. NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY ACT.

nephew. 1. The son of a person’s brother or sister; sometimes understood to include the son of a person’s brother-in-law or sister-in-law. • This term is extended in some wills to include a grandnephew. 2. Hist. A grandchild. 3. Hist. A descendant.

“[N]ephew ... a son’s or daughter’s son, a grandson (also ... a granddaughter), later also a brother’s or sister’s son, a nephew, in general a descendant ... The application, as with all other terms denoting relationship beyond the first degree, formerly varied (‘grandson,’ ‘nephew,’ ‘cousin,’ ‘kinsman,’ etc.); its final exclusive use for ‘nephew’ instead of ‘grandson’ is prob. due in part to the fact that, by reason of the great difference in age, a person has comparatively little to do with his grandsons, if he has any, while nephews are proverbially present and attentive, if their uncle is of any importance.” 5 The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia 3968 (1895).

nepos (nep-ohs), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A grandson. 2. Hist. A nephew. • The term nepos later became neveu and then “nephew.” See NEPHEW.

nepotism (nep-ə-tiz-əm), n. Bestowal of official favors (esp. in hiring) on one’s relatives. — nepotistic, adj.

neptis (nep-tis), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. A granddaughter. 2. A female descendant.

ne relessa pas (nə rə-les-ə pah), n. [Law French “did not release”] A plaintiff’s reply to a defendant’s plea of release as a defense to liability in a case.

nerve-center test. A method courts sometimes use to determine the location of a company’s principal place of business, by which the principal place of business is determined to be the location where the corporate officers, directors, and (sometimes) shareholders reside, and where they direct and control the corporation’s activities.

net, n. 1. An amount of money remaining after a sale, minus any deductions for expenses, commissions, and taxes. 2. The gain or loss from a sale of stock. 3. See net weight under WEIGHT.

net assets. See NET WORTH.

net asset value. The market value of a share in a mutual fund, computed by deducting any liabilities of the fund from its total assets and dividing the difference by the number of outstanding fund shares. — Abbr. NAV. — Also termed asset value. See MUTUAL FUND.

net balance. See net proceeds under PROCEEDS.

net book value. An asset’s value as that value appears on an organization’s books, less the asset’s depreciation since the last valuation.

net-capital rules. Securities. Basic financial-responsibility standards adopted by the Securities and Exchange Commission under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. • Under these rules, securities brokers are required to maintain a minimum level of capitalization and to maintain aggregate indebtedness at a level less than a specified multiple of the broker’s net capital. 15 USCA § 780(c)(3); SEC Rule 15c3-1 (17 CFR § 240.15c3-1).

net cash flow. See CASH FLOW.

net cost. See COST (1).

net earnings. See net income under INCOME.

net estate. See ESTATE.

nether house of Parliament. Hist. The lower house of Parliament; the English House of Commons. • This name was given to the House of Commons at the time of Henry VIII.

net income. See INCOME.

net investment. See INVESTMENT.

net lease. See LEASE.

net level annual premium. See PREMIUM (1).

net listing. See LISTING (1).

net loss. See LOSS.

network element. Telecommunications. A facility or piece of equipment used to provide telecommunications service, as by a local-exchange network, and each feature, function, or capability of the service. 47 USCA § 153(29).

net worth. A measure of one's wealth, usu. calculated as the excess of total assets over total liabilities. — Also termed net assets.

net-worth method. The procedure the Internal Revenue Service uses to determine the taxable income of a taxpayer who doesn't keep adequate records. • The change in net worth for the year determines the taxpayer's gross income, after taking into account nontaxable receipts and nondeductible expenses.

net yield. See YIELD.

ne unques (nee əng-kweez). [Law French] Never.

ne unques accouple (nee əng-kweez ə-kəp-əl), n. [Law French “never married”] In a dower action by a widow to recover the estate of her deceased husband, a tenant's plea denying the woman's marriage to the decedent. See DOWER.

ne unques executor (nee əng-kweez ig-zek-yə-tər), n. [Law French “never executor”] A plea that the defendant or plaintiff is not an executor as alleged.

ne unques seise que dower (nee əng-kweez see-zee kə dow-ər), n. [Law French “never seised of a dowable estate”] Hist. In a dower action, the tenant's general denial (plea of general issue) that the widow's husband was never seised of a dowable estate of inheritance.

ne unques son receiver (nee əng-kweez sawn ri-see-vər), n. [Law French "never a receiver"] In an action for an accounting, the defendant's plea denying the receipt of anything from the plaintiff.

neutral, adj. 1. Indifferent. 2. (Of a judge, mediator, arbitrator, or actor in international law) refraining from taking sides in a dispute.

neutral, n. 1. A person or country taking no side in a dispute. Cf. BELLIGERENT. 2. A nonpartisan arbitrator typically selected by two other arbitrators — one of whom has been selected by each side in the dispute.

neutrality, n. The condition of a nation that in time of war takes no part in the dispute but continues peaceful dealings with the belligerents. — neutral, adj.

armed neutrality. A condition of neutrality that the neutral state is willing to maintain by military force.

neutrality law. Int'l law. An act that prohibits a nation from militarily aiding either of two or more belligerent powers with which the nation is at peace; esp., a federal statute forbidding acts — such as the equipping of armed vessels or the enlisting of troops — designed to assist either of two belligerents that are at peace with the United States. 22 USCA §§ 441–457.

neutrality proclamation. Int'l law. At the outbreak of a war between two nations, an announcement by the President that the United States is neutral and that its citizens may not violate the neutrality laws, as in the Neutrality Proclamation of 1793, issued during the war between France and Great Britain.

neutralization. 1. The act of making something ineffective. 2. The process by which a country's integrity has been permanently guaranteed by international treaty, conditionally on its maintaining a perpetual neutrality except in its own defense. • Switzerland is the only remaining example, having been neutralized by the Treaty of Vienna in 1815 — a provision reaffirmed by the Treaty of Versailles in 1919. 3. The act of declaring certain persons or property neutral and safe from capture. See NEUTRAL PROPERTY. 4. Evidence. The cancellation of unexpected harmful testimony from a witness by showing, usu. by cross-examination, that the witness has made conflicting statements. • For example, a neutral principles. Constitutional law. Rules grounded in law, as opposed to rules based on personal interests or beliefs. • In this context, the phrase was popularized by Herbert Wechsler. See Toward Neutral Principles of Constitutional Law, 73 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1959).

neutral property. Things belonging to citizens of a country that is not a party to a war, as long as the things are properly used and labeled. • For example, harmless neutral property aboard a captured belligerent ship would not normally be subject to seizure. But the hiding of explosives in otherwise neutral property could allow the property to be seized as contraband.

ne varietur (nee vair-ee-ee-tər), n. [Latin "it must not be altered"] A notation of identity that a person, usu. a notary, places on documents or translations of documents. • In Louisiana, this notation is typically placed on a collateral mortgage note to bind and identify the note with the collateral mortgage.

never indebted, plea of. A common-law traverse — or denial — by which the defendant in an action on a contract debt denies that an express or implied contract existed. See TRAVERSE.

new, adj. 1. (Of a person, animal or thing) recently come into being <the new car was shipped from the factory this morning>. 2. (Of any thing) recently discovered . 3. (Of a person or condition) changed from the former state <she has a new state of mind>. 4. Unfamiliar; unaccustomed <she asked for directions because she was new to the area>. 5. Beginning afresh .

new acquisition. See ACQUISITION.

new and useful. Patents. Two of the requirements for an invention to be patentable — namely, that the invention be novel and that it have practical utility. 35 USCA § 101. See PATENT (3).

new asset. See ASSET.

new assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (5).

new-business rule. The principle precluding an award of damages for lost profits to a business with no recent record of profitability, because the damages would be too speculative.

new cause of action. See CAUSE OF ACTION.

new-contract dispute. See major dispute under DISPUTE.

new debtor. See DEBTOR.

new-debtor syndrome. Conduct showing a debtor's bad faith in filing for bankruptcy, as a result of which the court may dismiss the bankruptcy petition. • An example is the debtor's formation of a corporation, immediately before the bankruptcy filing, solely to take advantage of the bankruptcy laws.

new drug. See DRUG.

new-for-old. 1. Marine insurance. In adjusting a partial marine-insurance loss, the principle that old materials apply toward payment of the new, so that the old material's value is deducted from the total repair expenses, and then from that balance one-third of the cost of repairs (one-third of the new materials for the old on the balance) is deducted and charged against the insured shipowner. — Also termed deduction for new. 2. The principle that a party whose property has been damaged is entitled to recover only the amount necessary to restore the property to the condition it was in before the damage, instead of acquiring a new item to replace one that was old and depreciated.

New Inn. Hist. English law. One of the Inns of Chancery (collegiate houses) in which law students were placed before entering the Inns of Court. • This practice continued until approximately 1650, when the buildings began to be used only by attorneys and solicitors. See INNS OF CHANCERY. Cf. INNS OF COURT.

new issue. See ISSUE (2).

new-loan fee. See MORTGAGE DISCOUNT.

newly discovered evidence. See EVIDENCE.

new matter. See MATTER.

new promise. See PROMISE.

new-rule principle. Criminal procedure. A doctrine barring federal courts from granting habeas corpus relief to a state prisoner because of a rule, not dictated by existing precedent, announced after the prisoner's conviction and sentence became final. — Also termed nonretroactivity principle. See HABEAS CORPUS.

new ruling. Criminal procedure. A Supreme Court ruling not dictated by precedent existing when the defendant's conviction became final and thus not applicable retroactively to habeas cases. • For example, when the Court in Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399, 106 S.Ct. 2595 (1986), ruled that the Eighth Amendment prohibits execution of insane prisoners, this new ruling was nonretroactive because it departed so widely from prior doctrine. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 109 S.Ct. 1060 (1989). See HABEAS CORPUS.

new series. See N.S.

newsman's privilege. See journalist's privilege (1) under PRIVILEGE (3).

newspaper. A publication for general circulation, usu. in sheet form, appearing at regular intervals, usu. daily or weekly, and containing matters of general public interest, such as current events.

daily newspaper. A newspaper customarily published five to seven days every week. — Often shortened to daily.

legal newspaper. A newspaper containing matters of legal interest including summaries of cases, legal advertisements, legislative or regulatory changes, and local bankruptcy notices.

newspaper of general circulation. A newspaper that contains news and information of interest to the general public, rather than to a particular segment, and that is available to the public within a certain geographic area. • Legal notices (such as a class-action notice) are often required by law to be published in a newspaper of general circulation.

official newspaper. A newspaper designated to contain all the public notices, resolves, acts, and advertisements of a state or municipal legislative body.

newspaper prospectus. See PROSPECTUS.

new style. The modern system for ordering time according to the Gregorian method, introduced by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582 and adopted in England and the American colonies in 1752. • Because the Julian calendar was slightly longer than the astronomical year, the vernal equinox was displaced by ten days. Pope Gregory reformed the calendar by announcing that October 5, 1582 would be called October 15. And, while generally retaining a leap year for years divisible by 4, he skipped leap years in years divisible by 100 (such as 1800 and 1900), but retained leap years for years divisible by 400 (such as 2000). Thus, the years 2000, 2004, 2008, etc. are leap years, but 2100 is not. — Abbr. n.s. — Also termed Gregorian calendar. Cf. OLD STYLE.

new trial. A postjudgment retrial or reexamination of some or all of the issues determined in an earlier judgment. • The trial court may order a new trial, either by motion of a party or on the court's own initiative. Also, an appellate court, in reversing the trial court's judgment, may remand the case to the trial court for a new trial on some or all of the issues on which the reversal is based. Fed. R. Civ. P. 59. See MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL; REMAND.

new value. See VALUE.

new works. See WORKS.

New York interest. See Boston interest under INTEREST (3).

New York standard clause. See MORTGAGE-LOSS CLAUSE.

New York Stock Exchange. An unincorporated association of member firms that handle the purchase and sale of securities both for themselves and for customers. • This exchange, the dominant one in the United States, trades in only large companies having at least one million outstanding shares. — Abbr. NYSE.

New York Supplement. A set of regional lawbooks that, being part of the West Group's National Reporter System, contain every published decision from intermediate and lower courts of record in New York, from 1888 to date. • The first series ran from 1888 to 1937; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. N.Y.S.; N.Y.S.2d.

New York Times rule. A commonsense rule of ethical conduct holding that one should not do anything arguably newsworthy — in public or in private — that one would mind having reported on the front page of a major newspaper. • In various communities, a local newspaper is substituted for the Times. — Also termed New York Times test; New York Times v. Sullivan rule. See actual malice under MALICE.

nexi (nek-sī), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. Debtors given in bondage to creditors until their debts have been paid. See NEXUM.

next devisee. See DEVISEE.

next eventual estate. See ESTATE.

next friend. A person who appears in a lawsuit to act for the benefit of an incompetent or minor plaintiff, but who is not a party to the lawsuit and is not appointed as a guardian. — Also termed prochein ami. Cf. guardian ad litem under GUARDIAN.

next-in, first-out. A method of inventory valuation (but not a generally accepted accounting principle) whereby the cost of goods is based on their replacement cost rather than their actual cost. — Abbr. NIFO. Cf. FIRST-IN, FIRST-OUT; LAST-IN, FIRST-OUT.

next of kin. 1. The person or persons most closely related by blood to a decedent. 2. The person or persons entitled to inherit personal property from a decedent who has not left a will. See HEIR.

next presentation. Hist. Eccles law. In the law of advowsons, the right to present to the bishop a clerk to fill the first vacancy in a local parsonage. See ADVOWSON.

nexum (nek-səm), n. [Latin] Roman law. A transaction or practice under which a debtor, upon a failure to repay the debt, could be seized and held in bondage until the debt was repaid.

"Nexum. This highly controversial matter will be briefly dealt with as nexum had long been obsolete in classical law. Little is really known of it: it has been doubted whether there ever was such an institution. No text tells us that there was a contract called nexum . . . But we have texts which speak of nexum as creative of obligation . . . and many literary texts dealing with debtors who were nexi, so that it may be taken as certain that there was such a transaction . . . which in some way reduced debtors to a sort of slavery, that great hardships resulted and that a l. Poetelia . . . practically ended this state of things, presumably by requiring an actual judgment before seizure. The effect was not to abolish nexum, but, by depriving it of its chief value, the power of seizure . . . to leave it with no advantages to counterbalance its clumsiness, so that it went out of use." W.W. Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law: From Augustus to Justinian 429-30 (Peter Stein ed., 3d ed. 1963).

nexus. A connection or link, often a causal one <cigarette packages must inform consumers of the nexus between smoking and lung cancer>. Pl. nexuses; nexus.

nexus test. The standard by which a private person's act is considered state action — and may give rise to liability for violating someone's constitutional rights — if the conduct is so closely related to the government's conduct that the choice to undertake it may fairly be said to be that of the state. • While similar to the symbiotic-relationship test, the nexus test focuses on the particular act complained of, instead of on the overall relationship of the parties. Still, some courts use the terms and analyses interchangeably. — Also termed close-nexus test. Cf. SYMBIOTIC-RELATIONSHIP TEST. See JOINT PARTICIPATION; STATE-COMPULSION TEST.

"The complaining party must . . . show that there is a sufficiently close nexus between the State and the challenged action of the regulated entity so that the action of the latter may be fairly treated as that of the State itself. The purpose of this requirement is to assure that constitutional standards are invoked only when it can be said that the State is responsible for the specific conduct of which the plaintiff complains. . . . [O]ur precedents indicate that a State normally can be held responsible for a private decision only when it has exercised coercive power or has provided such significant encouragement, either overt or covert, that the choice must in law be deemed to be that of the State." Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S. 991, 1004, 102 S.Ct. 2777, 2786 (1982).

NGO. abbr. NONGOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATION.

NGRI. See not guilty by reason of insanity under NOT GUILTY.

nichil (nich-əl), n. [Old French nichil fr. Latin nihil "nothing"] Hist. English law. A debt owed to the Exchequer's office but niled by sheriffs as nonleviable. • Once a year, an officer of the Clerk of Nichils enrolled these amounts and sent them to the treasurer's remembrancer's office from which process was issued for their recovery. Both offices were abolished in 1833. — Also spelled nichill; nichel.

nichil, vb. (Of a sheriff) to make return that a debt is worthless, because the debtor either cannot be found or is unable to pay.

nickname, n. 1. A shortened version of a person's name <"Bill" is William's nickname>. 2. A descriptive or alternative name, in addition to or instead of the actual name <David Smith's nickname is "Red">.

niece. 1. The daughter of a person's brother or sister; sometimes understood to include the daughter of a person's brother-in-law or sister-in-law. • This term is extended in some wills to include a grandniece. See NEPHEW.

nient (nee-ent). [Law French] Not; nothing.

nient culpable (nee-ent kəl-pə-bəl), n. [Law French] Hist. A general plea of "not guilty" in a tort or criminal action.

"When the prisoner hath thus pleaded not guilty, non culpabilis, or nient culpable; which was formerly used to be abbreviated upon the minutes, thus, 'non (or nient) cul.' the clerk of the assise, or clerk of the arraigns, on behalf of the crown replies, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove him so." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 333 (1769).

nient dedire (nee-ent də-deer), vb. [Law French] Hist. To deny nothing; to be subject to a default judgment.

nient le fait (nee-ent lə fay). [Law French] Hist. Not the deed. • This term was the earlier version of non est factum. See NON EST FACTUM.

nient seisi (nee-ent see-zee), n. [Law French "not seised"] Hist. The general denial in a writ to recover an annuity.

NIFO (ni-foh). abbr. NEXT-IN, FIRST-OUT.

night. 1. The time from sunset to sunrise. 2. Darkness; the time when a person's face is not discernible. • This definition was used in the common-law definition of certain offenses, such as burglary.

"The definition of a burglar, as given by Sir Edward Coke, is, 'he that by night breaketh and entereth into a mansion-house, with intent to commit a felony.' . . . The time must be by night, and not by day; for in the daytime there is no burglary As to what is reckoned night, and what day, for this purpose anciently the day was accounted to begin only at sunrise, and to end immediately upon sunset; but the better opinion seems to be, that if there be daylight . . . enough, begun or left, to discern a man's face withal, it is no burglary. But this does not extend to moonlight; for then many midnight burglaries would go unpunished: and besides, the malignity of the offence does not so properly arise from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night when all the creation, except beasts of prey, are at rest; when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 224 (1769).

3. Thirty minutes after sunset and thirty minutes before sunrise, or a similar definition as set forth by statute, as in a statute requiring specific authorization for night searches. 4. Evening. — Also termed nighttime. Cf. DAY.

nightwalker. 1. Hist. A person who suspiciously wanders about at night and who might disturb the peace. • Nightwalking was an example of a “common” offense requiring no specific facts to be asserted in the indictment. 2. A sleepwalker. 3. A prostitute who walks the streets at night; streetwalker.

nihil. See NIHIL EST.

nihil capiat per breve (ni-hil kap-ee-ət pər bree-vee or breev), n. [Latin “Let him take nothing by his writ”] A judgment against the plaintiff in an action at bar or in abatement. — Also termed nihil capiat per billam (“let him take nothing by his bill”).

nihil dicit (ni-hil di-sit), n. [Latin “he says nothing”] 1. The failure of a defendant to answer a lawsuit. 2. See nil-dicit default judgment under DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

nihil-dicit default judgment. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

nihil est (ni-hil est). [Latin “there is nothing”] A form of return by a sheriff or constable who was unable to serve a writ because nothing was found to levy on. — Often shortened to nihil. Cf. NULLA BONA.

nihil habet (ni-hil hay-bət). [Latin “he has nothing”] A form of return by a sheriff or constable who was unable to serve a scire facias or other writ on the defendant. See SCIRE FACIAS.

nihilism (ni-əl-iz-əm). 1. A doctrine maintaining that there is no rational justification for moral principles and that there is no objective truth. 2. The view that traditional beliefs are unfounded and that life is meaningless and useless. 3. A theory that the existing economic, social, or political institutions should be destroyed, regardless of the result, because of the basic undesirability of those institutions. • This theory, featured by Ivan Turgenev in his 1861 novel Fathers and Sons, was popular among Russian extremists until the collapse of the czarist government.

nihilist, n. A person who advocates nihilism. See NIHILISM.

nil (nil). [Latin] Nothing. • This word is a contracted form of nihil. See NIHIL EST.

nil debet (nil deb-ət). [Latin “he owes nothing”] Hist. A general denial in a debt action on a simple contract.

“The proper general issue in debt on simple contracts and statutes is ‘nil debet,’ which is a formal denial of the debt. It denies not only the existence of any contract, but under it any matters in excuse or in discharge may also be shown.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 184, at 327 (Henry Winthrop Bantline ed., 3d ed. 1923).

nil-dicit default judgment. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

nimble dividend. See DIVIDEND.

nimmer. A petty thief; pilferer; pickpocket.

Nineteenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1920, providing that a citizen’s right to vote cannot be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state within it, on the basis of sex. — Also termed Women’s Suffrage Amendment.

1933 Act. See SECURITIES ACT OF 1933.

ninety-day letter. Statutory notice of a tax deficiency sent by the IRS to a taxpayer. • During the 90 days after receiving the notice, the taxpayer must pay the taxes (and, if desired, seek a refund) or challenge the deficiency in tax court. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 6212, 6213. — Also written 90-day letter. — Also termed notice of deficiency; deficiency notice; tax-deficiency notice. Cf. THIRTY-DAY LETTER.

Ninth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, providing that rights listed in the Constitution must not be construed in a way that denies or disparages unlisted rights, which are retained by the people.

nisi (ni-si), adj. [Latin “unless”] (Of a court’s ex parte ruling or grant of relief) having validity unless the adversely affected party appears and shows cause why it should be withdrawn . See decree nisi under DECREE.

nisi decree. See decree nisi under DECREE.

nisi feceris (ni-si fee-sə-ris), n. [Law Latin “unless you have done so”] Hist. A clause in a manorial writ providing that the king’s court or officer will do justice if the lords fail. • This provision allowed royal courts to usurp the jurisdiction of manorial courts.

nisi prius (ni-si pri-əs). [Latin “unless before then”] A civil trial court in which, unlike in an appellate court, issues are tried before a jury. • The term is obsolete in the United States except in New York and Oklahoma. — Abbr. n.p.

nisi prius clause. An entry to the record authorizing a jury trial in the designated county. See NISI PRIUS.

nisi prius roll. The transcript of a case at nisi prius. — Also termed nisi prius record.

NLRB. abbr. NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

NMB. abbr. NATIONAL MEDIATION BOARD.

NMI. abbr. No middle initial.

no-action clause. An insurance-policy provision that bars suit against the insurer until the liability of the insured has been determined by a judgment.

no-action letter. A letter from the staff of a governmental agency stating that if the facts are as represented in a person’s request for an agency ruling, the staff will advise the agency not to take action against the person. • Typically, a no-action letter is requested from the SEC on such matters as shareholder proposals, resales of stock, and marketing techniques.

no actus reus (noh ak-təs ree-əs). A plea in which a criminal defendant either denies involvement with a crime or asserts that the harm suffered is too remote from the criminal act to be imputable to the defendant.

no-answer default judgment. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

no arrival, no sale. A delivery term, included in some sales contracts, by which the seller assumes the duty to deliver the goods to a specified place, and assumes the risk of loss for the goods while they are in transit. • If the goods arrive damaged or late, the buyer can either avoid the contract or accept the goods at a discount.

no award. In an action to enforce an award, the defendant’s plea denying that an award was made.

nobility, n. pl. 1. Persons of social or political preeminence, usu. derived by inheritance or from the sovereign. • In English law, there are various degrees of nobility, or peerage, such as dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons, and their female counterparts. Nobility is generally created either by a writ of summons to sit in Parliament or by a royal grant through letters patent, and was once usu. accompanied by a large land grant. Nobility by writ descended to a person’s bodily heirs. The modern practice is to grant nobility by letters patent, which provide limitations as to future heirs. The U.S. Constitution prohibits granting a title of nobility. U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8.

2. Persons of high or noble character. 3. The collective body of persons making up the noble class.

no bill, n. A grand jury’s notation that insufficient evidence exists for an indictment on a criminal charge <the grand jury returned a no bill instead of the indictment the prosecutors expected>. — no-bill, vb. <the grand jury no-billed three of the charges>. Cf. TRUE BILL.

no-bonus clause. Landlord-tenant law. A lease provision that takes effect upon governmental condemnation, limiting the lessee's damages to the value of any improvements to the property and preventing the lessee from recovering the difference between the lease's fixed rent and the property's market rental value. See CONDEMNATION.

no cause of action. See take-nothing judgement under JUDGMENT.

nocent (noh-sənt), adj. [fr. Latin nocere "harm"] Archaic 1. Injurious; harmful. 2. Guilty; criminal. • This word is the little-used antonym of innocent.

nocent (noh-sənt), n. [fr. Latin nocere "harm"] Hist. A person who is guilty.

no-claim, n. The lack of a claim. • Legal philosophers devised this term to denote the opposite of a claim. As one jurist has said apologetically, "there is no word in English which expresses the lack of a claim and therefore the rather barbarous 'no-claim' has been suggested." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 291 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

no-confidence vote. The formal legal method by which a legislative body, by a majority vote, forces the resignation of a cabinet or ministry. — Also termed vote of no confidence.

no contest. A criminal defendant's plea that, while not admitting guilt, the defendant will not dispute the charge. • This plea is often preferable to a guilty plea, which can be used against the defendant in a later civil lawsuit. — Also termed nolo contendere; non vult contendere.

no-contest clause. A testamentary provision conditioning a gift or legacy on the beneficiary's not challenging the will.

noctanter (nok-tan-tər), n. [Latin "by night"] Hist. A chancery writ issued to a sheriff as a first step in the recovery of damages for destroying a ditch or hedge. • The neighboring villagers (vills) were held liable for the damages unless they indicted the offender.

noctem de firma (nok-təm dee fər-mə), n. [Law Latin "night of duty (payable)"] Hist. The duty or custom of providing entertainment or provisions for a night. • At the time of the Norman Conquest, this was the duty or custom of entertaining the king for one night. — Also termed noctes; firma noctis.

nocumentum (nok-yə-men-təm). [fr. Latin nocere "to harm"] Hist. A nuisance. • There was no remedy at law for a nuisance causing only property damage, but there was a remedy for a nuisance causing injury.

no-duty, n. Liberty not to do an act. — Also termed liberty not.

no-duty doctrine. 1. Torts. The rule that a defendant who owes no duty to the plaintiff is not liable for the plaintiff's injury. 2. The rule that the owner or possessor of property has no duty to warn or protect an invitee from known or obvious hazards.

Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The principle that the First Amendment shields from liability (esp. under antitrust laws) companies that join together to lobby the government. • The doctrine derives from a line of Supreme Court cases beginning with Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S.Ct. 523 (1961), and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S.Ct. 1585 (1965).

no evidence. 1. The lack of a legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable fact-finder to rule in favor of the party who bears the burden of proof <there is no evidence in the record about his whereabouts at midnight>. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party can move for judgment as a matter of law to claim that the other party — who bears the burden of proof — has been fully heard and has not offered sufficient evidence to prove one or more essential elements of the suit or defense. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. Though such a contention is usu. referred to as a no-evidence motion, the issue is not whether there was actually no evidence, but rather whether the evidence was sufficient for the fact-finder to be able to reasonably rule in favor of the other party.

"Since judgment as a matter of law deprives the party opposing the motion of a determination of the facts by a jury, it should be granted cautiously and sparingly. Nevertheless, the federal courts do not follow the rule that a scintilla of evidence is enough to create an issue for the jury. The question is not whether there is literally no evidence upon which the jury properly could find a verdict for that party." 9A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2524, at 252-54 (2d ed. 1995).

2. Evidence that has no value in an attempt to prove a matter in issue <that testimony is no evidence of an alibi>.

no-eyewitness rule. Torts. The largely defunct principle holding that if no direct evidence shows what a dead person did to avoid an accident, the jury may infer that the person acted with ordinary care for his or her own safety. • In a jurisdiction where the rule persists, a plaintiff in a survival or wrongful-death action can assert the rule to counter a defense of contributory negligence.

no-fault, adj. Of or relating to a claim that is adjudicated without any determination that a party is blameworthy <no-fault divorce>.

no-fault auto insurance. See INSURANCE.

no-fault divorce. See DIVORCE.

no funds. An indorsement marked on a check when there are insufficient funds in the account to cover the check.

no goods. See NULLA BONA.

n.o.i.b.n., abbr. NOT OTHERWISE INDEXED BY NAME.

no-knock search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

NOL. See net operating loss under LOSS.

nolens volens (noh-lenz voh-lenz), adv. & adj. [Latin] Willing or unwilling <nolens volens, the school district must comply with the court's injunction>.

no-limit order. See ORDER (4).

nolisement (nə-lis-mahn), n. [French] French law. The chartering of a ship; AFFREIGHTMENT.

nolition (noh-lish-ən). The absence of volition; unwillingness.

nolle prosequi (nah-lee prahs-ə-kwi), n. [Latin "not to wish to prosecute"] 1. A legal notice that a lawsuit has been abandoned. 2. A docket entry showing that the plaintiff or the prosecution has abandoned the action. — Often shortened to nolle.

"In America the term [nolle prosequi] bears the same meaning as in England, with one exception. The attorney-general has not the same discretion with which English law invests him. Although in some States the prosecuting officer may enter a nolle prosequi at his discretion, in others the leave of the court must be obtained." 17 Encyclopaedia Britannica 546 (9th ed. 1907).

"Nolle prosequi is a formal entry on the record by the prosecuting officer by which he declares that he will not prosecute the case further, either as to some of the counts of the indictment, or as to part of a divisible count, or as to some of the persons accused, or altogether. It is a judicial determination in favor of accused and against his conviction, but it is not an acquittal, nor is it equivalent to a pardon." 22A C.J.S. Criminal Law § 419, at 1 (1989).

nolle prosequi (nah-lee prahs-ə-kwi), vb. To abandon (a suit or prosecution); to have (a case) dismissed by a nolle prosequi <the state nolle prosequed the charges against Johnson>. — Often shortened to nolle pros; nol-pros; nol-pro.

no-load fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

nolo contendere (noh-loh kən-ten-də-ree). [Latin "I do not wish to contend"] NO CONTEST. — Often shortened to nolo.

no man's land. Labor law. The lack of clear jurisdiction between a state government and the federal government over labor disputes. • This term was common in the 1950s, but its use has declined as later laws have clarified jurisdictional issues.

NOM clause. abbr. NO-ORAL-MODIFICATION CLAUSE.

nomen (noh-men or -mən), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A personal name. • A Roman citizen generally had three names: a praenomen ("first name"), a nomen ("the name of the family group"), and cognomen ("a surname"). 2. Roman law. A claim; an obligation. 3. Hist. A person's first name. 4. More broadly, any name. See AGNOMEN.

nomen collectivum (noh-men kol-ək-ti-vəm), n. [Latin] A collective name; a name of a class of things.

nomen generale (noh-men jen-ə-ray-lee), n. [Latin] A general name; a genus.

nomen generalissimum (noh-men jen-ə-rə-lis-i-məm), n. [Law Latin] A name with the most general meaning.

"Nomen generalissimum. A very general name: a comprehensive term. Such are the terms crime, demand, draft, estate, goods, grant, heir, house, instrument, interest, land, merchandise, obligation, offense." William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 711 (1889).

nomen juris (noh-men joor-is), n. [Latin] A legal name or designation.

nomen transcripticium (noh-men tran-skrip-tish-ee-əm), n. [Latin "entry (in an account transferred)"] Roman law. A creditor's entry of a money debt into a new account (expensilatio) after closing another account, thereby creating, with the debtor's permission, a literal contract from an existing obligation, which may or may not have been enforceable. Pl. nomina transcripticia.

"The subject will, perhaps, become clearer by examples: ... A has in the past had dealings by way of sale, exchange, etc., with B, of which an account appears in his codex showing a balance against B for 500 aurei. A, with B's consent, closes this account by a statement on the opposite page (contrary to fact) that B has paid the aurei ... and opens a new account with the statement (contrary to strict fact) that he has advanced to B the sum of 500 aurei. Hence the expensilatio represents a nomen transcripticium; a nomen (debt) has been transferred from one account to another ... In effect the old contracts between A and B have been novated, i.e. extinguished, one single obligation having been substituted in their place; obviously a course which offered many advantages to both parties, as it simplified the accounts, and saved disputes about the previous transactions." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 317-18 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

nominal (nahm-ə-nəl), adj. 1. Existing in name only <the king was a nominal figurehead as he had no power>. 2. (Of a price or amount) trifling, esp. as compared to what would be expected <the lamp sold for a nominal price of ten cents>. 3. Of or relating to a name or term . — nominally, adv.

nominate, vb. 1. To propose (a person) for election or appointment <Steven nominated Jane for president>. 2. To name or designate (a person) for a position <the testator nominated an executor, who later withdrew because he couldn't perform his duties>.

nominate contract. See CONTRACT.

nominatim (nah-mi-nay-təm), adv. [fr. Latin nomen "name"] Roman law. By name. • This term refers to mentioning someone or something expressly or specifically by name, so that (for example) to disinherit persons nominatim means that there is no doubt who is meant to be excluded.

nominating and reducing. Hist. A method used, esp. in London, to obtain special jurors from which to select a jury panel. • Under this method, a number representing each person on a sheriff's list is drawn from a box until 48 unchallenged people have been nominated. Each party then strikes 12 people and the remaining 24 constitute the panel.

nominatio auctoris (nah-mi-nay-shee-oh awk-tor-is), n. [Latin "naming of the originator (or seller)"] 1. In an action for the recovery of something, such as real estate, the defendant's plea that the property is actually owned by another party. • The true owner is then required to defend the action. 2. Roman law. In an action alleging ownership of an item, the defendant's plea naming the seller, who then must assist in the defense of the action against the plaintiff. — Also termed laudare auctorem.

nomination. 1. The act of proposing a person for election or appointment. 2. The act of naming or designating a person for a position.

nomination paper. (usu. pl.) A document filed by an independent political group — usu. one not qualifying as a political party or able to hold primary elections — to place one or more nominees on a general-election ballot.

nomination to a living. Eccles. law. A right to offer a clerk to the owner of an advowson for presentation to the bishop of the diocese. • The owner of an advowson can grant the right to another but is then bound to present whomever the grantee chooses.

nominativus pendens (nahm-ə-nə-ti-vəs pen-denz), n. [Latin “nominative hanging”] In a sentence, a nominative phrase that is not grammatically connected with the rest of the sentence. — Also termed nominative absolute.

“Nominativus pendens . . . The opening words in the form of a deed inter partes (“This deed,” etc., down to “whereas”), though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, having regard to the predicate “witnesseth” or “nor this deed witnesseth,” are sometimes of this kind.” William A. Jowitt, The Dictionary of English Law 1230 (1959).

nomina villarum (nahm-ə-nə vi-lair-əm), n. [Latin “names of the villages”] Hist. In the reign of Edward II, a list compiled by sheriffs of the names of the villages and possessors in their respective counties.

nomine. (nahm-ə-nee). [fr. Latin nomen “name”] Roman law. 1. By name; under the name of, as in sine nomine edere librum (“to publish [a book] anonymously”). 2. On behalf of, as in proprio (suo) nomine (“on one’s own behalf”).

nominee. 1. A person who is proposed for an office, position, or duty. 2. A person designated to act in place of another, usu. in a very limited way. 3. A party who holds bare legal title for the benefit of others or who receives and distributes funds for the benefit of others.

nominee trust. See TRUST.

nomine poenae (nahm-ə-nee pee-nee), n. [Latin “in the name of penalty”] 1. Civil law. A clause in a testament requiring the heir to do something by way of penalty. 2. At common law, a penalty for nonperformance, such as additional rent to be paid by a tenant to a landlord for failing to perform certain conditions in a lease.

nomocanon (nə-mok-ə-non or noh-mə-kan-ən). 1. A collection of canon and imperial laws applicable to ecclesiastical matters in the orthodox churches. • The first nomocanon is falsely ascribed to Johannes Scholasticus, patriarch of Constantinople, in 553. Later canons consist primarily of the canons of the Quinisext and the ecclesiastical laws of Justinian. 2. A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without regard to imperial constitutions.

nomographer (nə-mog-rə-fər). 1. A person who drafts laws. 2. A person skilled in nomography.

nomography (nə-mog-rə-fee). 1. The art of drafting laws. 2. A treatise on the drafting of laws.

nomothete (noh-mə-theet), n. [fr. Greek nomos “law” + thetes “a person who prescribes”] Hist. A lawgiver. — Also spelled nomotheta.

non (non). [Latin] Not; no. • This term negates, sometimes as a separate word and sometimes as a prefix.

nonability. 1. The lack of legal capacity, esp. to sue on one’s own behalf. 2. A plea or exception raising a lack of legal capacity.

nonacceptance. 1. The refusal or rejection of something, such as a contract offer. See REJECTION. 2. A buyer’s rejection of goods because they fail to conform to contractual specifications. See UCC § 2-601(a). 3. A drawee’s failure or refusal to receive and pay a negotiable instrument.

non acceptavit (non ak-sep-tay-vit). [Latin “he did not accept”] In an assumpsit action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, the defendant’s plea denying acceptance of the bill.

nonaccess. Family law. Absence of opportunity for sexual intercourse. • Nonaccess is often used as a defense by the alleged father in paternity cases.

non accrevit infra sex annos (non ə-kree-vit in-frə seks an-ohs), n. [Latin “it did not accrue in six years”] Hist. The general pleading form for the statute-of-limitations defense.

nonacquiescence (non-ak-wee-es-ənts). Administrative law. An agency’s policy of declining to be bound by lower-court precedent that is contrary to the agency’s interpretation of its organic statute, but only until the Supreme Court has ruled on the issue.

nonactuarially sound retirement system. A retirement plan that uses current contributions and assets to pay current benefit obligations, instead of investing contributions to pay future benefits. Cf. ACTUARIALY SOUND RETIREMENT SYSTEM.

nonadmission. 1. The failure to acknowledge something. 2. The refusal to allow something, such as evidence in a legal proceeding.

nonadmitted asset. See ASSET.

nonae et decimae (noh-nee et des-ə-mee), n. pl. [Law Latin “ninths and tenths”] Hist. Two payments that church-farm tenants make to the church, the first being rent for the land and the second being a tithe.

nonassertive conduct. See CONDUCT.

nonassessable insurance. See INSURANCE.

nonassessable stock. See STOCK.

non assumpsit (non ə-səm[p]-sit). [Latin “he did not undertake”] Hist. A general denial in an action of assumpsit. See ASSUMPSIT.

“‘Non assumpsit’ is the general issue in assumpsit, whether special or general, and is in effect a formal denial of liability on the promise or contract alleged. It denies not only the inducement or statement of the plaintiff’s right, but also the breach, and allows any defense tending to show that there was no debt or cause of action at the time of commencing suit.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 182, at 322 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

non assumpsit infra sex annos (non ə-səm[p]-sit in-frə seks an-ohs), n. [Latin “he did not undertake within six years”] Hist. The specific pleading form for the statute-of-limitations defense in an action of assumpsit.

nonbailable, adj. 1. (Of a person) not entitled to bail <the defendant was nonbailable because of a charge of first-degree murder>. 2. (Of an offense) not admitting of bail <murder is a nonbailable offense>.

noncallable security. See SECURITY.

noncancelability clause. An insurance-policy provision that prevents the insurer from canceling the policy after an insured's loss, as long as the premium has been paid.

noncapital, adj. (Of a crime) not involving or deserving of the death penalty <noncapital murder>.

noncareer vice-consul. See VICE-CONSUL.

noncash charge. See CHARGE.

non cepit (non see-pit). [Latin "he did not take"] Hist. A general denial in a replevin action that puts at issue both the taking and the place of taking. See REPLEVIN.

"'Non cepit' is the general issue in replevin, and is a formal denial both of the fact and the place of the alleged taking. It denies the taking only, and not the plaintiff's right of possession. Where replevin may be and is brought for goods lawfully obtained, but unlawfully detained, the general issue is 'non detinet,' which is a denial of the detention. It denies the detention only, and not the plaintiff's right." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 178, at 318 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

noncitizen. A person who is not a citizen of a particular place. See ALIEN.

nonclaim. A person's failure to pursue a right within the legal time limit, resulting in that person's being barred from asserting the right. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

nonclaim statute. See STATUTE.

noncode state. Hist. A state that, at a given time, had not procedurally merged law and equity, so that equity was still administered as a separate system. • The term was current primarily in the early to mid-20th century. — Also termed common-law state. Cf. CODE STATE.

noncombatant, adj. 1. Not serving in a fighting capacity <noncombatant personnel>. 2. Not designed for combat <noncombatant vehicle>.

noncombatant, n. 1. An armed-service member who serves in a non-fighting capacity. 2. A civilian in wartime.

noncommercial partnership. See nontrading partnership under PARTNERSHIP.

R. Civ. P. 41(a). — Also termed voluntary discontinuance. 2. A court’s dismissal of a case or of a defendant because the plaintiff has failed to make out a legal case or to bring forward sufficient evidence. See judgment of nonsuit under JUDGMENT. — non-suit, vb.

“Nonsuit . . . is equivalent to a demurrer to the evidence in that, even if all facts that plaintiff presents are true, the evidence is not, as a matter of law, sufficient to entitle plaintiff to a judgment. However, a voluntary nonsuit, unlike a demurrer or a directed verdict which resolves the action on its merits, may result in another trial of the cause.” 75A Am. Jur. 2d Trial § 853 (1991).

compulsory nonsuit. An involuntary nonsuit.

non sum informatus (non səm in-fər-may-təs), n. [Latin “I am not informed”] Hist. A type of default judgment based on a defense attorney’s statement that the client gave no instructions to answer the lawsuit.

no recourse. 1. The lack of means by which to obtain reimbursement from, or a judgment against, a person or entity <the bank had no recourse against the individual executive for collection of the corporation's debts>. 2. A notation indicating that such means are lacking <the bill was indorsed "no recourse">. See nonrecourse loan under LOAN; WITHOUT RECOURSE.

no-retreat rule. Criminal law. The doctrine that the victim of a murderous assault may use deadly force in self-defense if there is no reasonable alternative to avoid the assailant's threatened harm. • A majority of American jurisdictions have adopted this rule. Cf. RE-TREAT RULE.

no-right, n. The absence of right against another in some particular respect. • A no-right is the correlative of a privilege. — Also termed liability.

“A says to B, ‘If you will agree to pay me $100 for this horse you may have him and you may indicate your agreement by taking him.’ This is a physical fact, called an offer, consisting of certain muscular acts of A having certain physical results in B. The legal relations immediately following are (in part) as follows: B now has the privilege of taking the horse and A has no-right that he shall not . . .” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 321 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“‘No-right’ is sometimes derided as being a purely negative concept. If a no-right is something that is not a right, the class of no-rights must, it is said, include elephants. The answer is that negative terms are often useful as alternative ways of stating propositions involving negatives. For instance, the terms ‘alien,’ ‘cold,’ and ‘dark’ are all negative or privative, because their meaning includes the idea of the absence of something else. The proposition that A is an alien means that A is not a British subject; in the one mode of statement the negative is incorporated in the noun, whereas in the other it is expressed as a separate word. Similarly the word ‘liberty’ is negative, and critics who attack the concept of no-right should logically attack the concept of liberty also. . . . [L]iberty means ‘no-duty not.’ . . . [F]or the sake of clear thinking it is necessary to give each of the four meanings [of right] a separate name. Words like ‘no-right’ and ‘no-duty’ may seem uncouth at first sight, but it is surely a clear and useful statement to say that ‘right’ sometimes means ‘no-duty not.’” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 240–41 n.(u) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

norm, n. 1. A model or standard accepted (voluntarily or involuntarily) by society or other large group, against which society judges someone or something. • An example of a norm is the standard for right or wrong behavior. 2. An actual or set standard determined by the typical or most frequent behavior of a group.

basic norm. In the legal theory of Hans Kelsen, the law from which all the other laws in a society derive. • Kelsen’s “pure theory of law” maintains that laws are norms. Therefore, a society’s legal system is made up of its norms, and each legal norm derives its validity from other legal norms. Ultimately, the validity of all laws is tested against the “basic norm,” which may be as simple as the concept that all pronouncements of the monarch are to be obeyed. Or it may be an elaborate system of lawmaking, such as a constitution. — Also termed grundnorm. See PURE THEORY.

normal, adj. 1. According to a regular pattern; natural <it is normal to be nervous in court>. 2. According to an established rule or norm <it is not normal to deface statues>. 3. Setting a standard or norm .

normal balance. A type of debit or credit balance that is usu. found in ledger accounts. • For example, assets usu. have debit balances and liabilities usu. have credit balances.

normal college. See NORMAL SCHOOL.

normal law. The law as it applies to persons who are free from legal disabilities.

normal market. See CONTANGO.

normal mind. A mental capacity that is similar to that of the majority of people who can handle life’s ordinary responsibilities.

normal school. A training school for public-school teachers. • Normal schools first appeared in the United States in the 1800s and were two-year post-high-school training programs for elementary-school teachers. At the turn of the century, normal schools expanded into four-year teaching colleges. Most of these institutions have developed into liberal arts colleges offering a wider variety of education and teaching programs. — Also termed normal college.

Norman French. A language that was spoken by the Normans and became the official language of English courts after the Norman Conquest in 1066. • The language deteriorated into Law French and continued to be used until the late 17th century. English became the official language of the courts in 1731.

normative, adj. Establishing or conforming to a norm or standard <Rawls’s theory describes normative principles of justice>.

normative jurisprudence. See NATURAL LAW.

Norris-La Guardia Act (nor-is lə gwahr-dee-ə). A 1932 federal law that forbids federal courts from ruling on labor policy and that severely limits their power to issue injunctions in labor disputes. • The statute was passed to curb federal-court abuses of the injunctive process, to declare the government’s neutrality on labor policy, to curtail employers’ widespread use of injunctions to thwart union activity, and to promote the use of collective bargaining to resolve disputes. 29 USCA §§ 101-115. — Also termed Labor Disputes Act.

Norroy (nor-oy). English law. The third of the three Kings at Arms (and the chief herald), whose province lies on the north side of the river Trent. • The Norroy's duties have included the supervision of weddings and funerals of nobility. See HERALD.

North American Free Trade Agreement. A trilateral treaty — entered into on January 1, 1994 between the United States, Canada, and Mexico — that phases out all tariffs and eliminates many nontariff barriers (such as quotas) inhibiting the free trade of goods between the participating nations. — Abbr. NAFTA.

North Eastern Reporter. A set of regional lawbooks that, being part of the West Group's National Reporter System, contain every published decision from Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, New York, and Ohio, from 1885 to date. • The first series ran from 1885 to 1936; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. N.E.; N.E.2d.

North Western Reporter. A set of regional lawbooks that, being part of the West Group's National Reporter System, contain every published decision from Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin, from 1879 to date. • The first series ran from 1879 to 1941; the second series is the current one. — Abbr. N.W.; N.W.2d.

Northwest Territory. Hist. The first possession of the United States, being the geographical region south of the Great Lakes, north of the Ohio River, and east of the Mississippi River, as designated by the Continental Congress in the late 1700s. • This area includes the present states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and the eastern part of Minnesota.

noscitur a sociis (nos-ə-tər ay [or ah] soh-shee-is). [Latin "it is known by its associates"] A canon of construction holding that the meaning of an unclear word or phrase should be determined by the words immediately surrounding it. Cf. EJUSDEM GENERIS; EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS; RULE OF RANK.

"The ejusdem generis rule is an example of a broader linguistic rule or practice to which reference is made by the Latin tag noscitur a sociis. Words, even if they are not general words like 'whatsoever' or 'otherwise' preceded by specific words, are liable to be affected by other words with which they are associated." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 118 (1976).

no-setoff certificate. See WAIVER OF DEFENSES.

no-shop provision. A stipulation prohibiting one or more parties to a commercial contract from pursuing or entering into a more favorable agreement with a third party.

nosocomus (nos-ə-koh-məs), n. [Greek "an attendant on the side"] Hist. A person who manages a hospital that cares for paupers.

no-strike clause. A labor-agreement provision that prohibits employees from striking for any reason and establishes instead an arbitration system for resolving labor disputes.

nota (noh-tə), n. [Latin "mark"] Hist. 1. A promissory note. 2. A brand placed on a person by law.

nota bene (noh-tə ben-ee or bee-nee or ben-ay). See N.B.

notae (noh-tee), n. pl. [Latin] Hist. Shorthand characters. See NOTARIUS.

notarial, adj. Of or relating to the official acts of a notary public . See NOTARY PUBLIC.

notarial will. See WILL.

notarius (noh-tair-ee-əs), n. [fr. Latin nota "a character or mark"] 1. Roman law. A writer (sometimes a slave) who takes dictation or records proceedings by shorthand. • A notarius was later also called a scriba. 2. Roman law. An officer who takes a magistrate's dictation by shorthand. 3. Hist. An officer who prepares deeds and other contracts. 4. A notary or a scribe.

notary public (noh-tə-ree), n. A person authorized by a state to administer oaths, certify documents, attest to the authenticity of signatures, and perform official acts in commercial matters, such as protesting negotiable instruments. — Often shortened to notary. — Abbr. n.p. Pl. notaries public. — notarize, vb. — notarial, adj.

"A notary public is an officer long known to the civil law, and designated as registrarius, actuarius, or scrivarius." John Proffatt, A Treatise on the Law Relating to the Office and Duties of Notaries Public § 1, at 1 (John F. Tyler & John J. Stephens eds., 2d ed. 1892).

"The notary public, or notary, is an official known in nearly all civilized countries. The office is of ancient origin. In Rome, during the republic, it existed, the title being tabelliones forenses, or personae publicae; and there are records of the appointment of notaries by the Frankish kings and the Popes as early as the ninth century. They were chiefly employed in drawing up legal documents; as scribes or scriveners they took minutes and made short drafts of writings, either of a public or a private nature. In modern times their more characteristic duty is to attest the genuineness of any deeds or writings, in order to render the same available as evidence of the facts therein contained." Benjamin F. Rex, The Notaries' Manual § 1, at 1-2 (J.H. McMillan ed., 6th ed. 1913).

notary seal. 1. The imprint or embossment made by a notary public's seal. 2. A device, usu. a stamp or embosser, that makes an imprint on a notarized document. — Also termed notarial seal.

embossed seal. 1. A notary seal that is impressed onto a document, raising the impression above the surface. ● An embossed seal clearly identifies the original document because the seal is only faintly reproducible. For this reason, this type of seal is required in some states and on some documents notarized for federal purposes. 2. The embossment made by this seal.

rubber-stamp seal. 1. In most states, a notary public's official seal, which is ink-stamped onto documents and is therefore photographically reproducible. ● It typically includes the notary's name, the state seal, the words "Notary Public," the name of the county where the notary's bond is filed, and the expiration date of the notary's commission. 2. The imprint made by this seal.

notation credit. A letter of credit specifying that anyone purchasing or paying a draft or demand for payment made under it must note the amount of the draft or demand on the letter. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

note, n. 1. A written promise by one party (the maker) to pay money to another party (the payee) or to bearer. ● A note is a two-party negotiable instrument, unlike a draft (which is a three-party instrument). — Also termed promissory note. Cf. DRAFT (1).

accommodation note. A note that an accommodating party has signed and thereby assumed secondary liability for; ACCOMMODATION PAPER.

approved indorsed note. A note indorsed by a person other than the maker to provide additional security.

balloon note. A note requiring small periodic payments but a very large final payment. ● The periodic payments usu. cover only interest, while the final payment (the balloon payment) represents the entire principal.

banknote. See BANKNOTE.

blue note. A note that maintains a life-insurance policy in effect until the note becomes due.

bought note. A written memorandum of a sale delivered to the buyer by the broker responsible for the sale.

circular note. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

coal note. Hist. A promissory note written according to a statute that required payment for coal out of any vessel in the port of London to be in cash or by promissory note containing the words "value received in coal." ● Noncompliance with the statute resulted in a fine of £100.

cognovit note. See COGNOVIT NOTE.

collateral note. See secured note.

coupon note. A note with attached interest coupons that the holder may present for payment as each coupon matures.

demand note. A note payable whenever the creditor wants to be paid. See call loan under LOAN.

executed note. A note that has been signed and delivered.

floating-rate note. A note carrying a variable interest rate that is periodically adjusted within a predetermined range, usu. every six months, in relation to an index, such as Treasury bill rates. — Also termed floater.

hand note. A note that is secured by a collateral note.

installment note. A note payable at regular intervals. — Also termed serial note.

inverse-floating-rate note. A note structured in such a way that its interest rate moves in the opposite direction from the underlying index (such as the London Interbank Offer Rate). • Many such notes are risky investments because if interest rates rise, the securities lose their value and their coupon earnings fall. — Also termed inverse floater.

joint and several note. A note for which multiple makers are jointly and severally liable for repayment, meaning that the payee may legally look to all the makers, or any one of them, for payment of the entire debt. See joint and several liability under LIABILITY.

joint note. A note for which multiple makers are jointly, but not severally, liable for repayment, meaning that the payee must legally look to all the makers together for payment of the debt. See joint liability under LIABILITY.

mortgage note. A note evidencing a loan for which real property has been offered as security.

negotiable note. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

nonrecourse note. A note that may be satisfied upon default only by means of the collateral securing the note, not by the debtor's other assets. Cf. recourse note.

note of hand. See promissory note.

premium note. A promissory note given by an insured to an insurance company for part or all of the premium.

promissory note. An unconditional written promise, signed by the maker, to pay absolutely and in any event a certain sum of money either to, or to the order of, the bearer or a designated person. — Also termed note of hand.

recourse note. A note that may be satisfied upon default by pursuing the debtor's other assets in addition to the collateral securing the note. Cf. nonrecourse note.

reissuable note. A note that may again be put into circulation after having once been paid.

renewal note. A note that continues an obligation that was due under a prior note.

sale note. A broker's memorandum on the terms of a sale, given to the buyer and seller.

savings note. A short-term, interest-bearing paper issued by a bank or the U.S. government.

secured note. A note backed by a pledge of real or personal property as collateral. — Also termed collateral note.

sold note. A written memorandum of sale delivered to the seller by the broker responsible for the sale, and usu. outlining the terms of the sale. See CONFIRMATION SLIP.

stock note. A note that is secured by securities, such as stocks or bonds.

tax-anticipation note. A short-term obligation issued by state or local governments to finance current expenditures and that usu. matures once the local government receives individual and corporate tax payments. — Abbr. TAN.

time note. A note payable only at a specified time and not on demand.

treasury note. See TREASURY NOTE.

unsecured note. A note not backed by collateral.

2. A scholarly legal essay shorter than an article and restricted in scope, explaining or criticizing a particular set of cases or a general area of the law, and usu. written by a law student for publication in a law review. — Also termed comment; lawnote. Cf. ANNOTATION. 3. A minute or memorandum intended for later reference; MEMORANDUM (1).

note, vb. 1. To notice carefully or with particularity <the defendant noted that the plaintiff seemed nervous>. 2. To put down in writing <the court reporter noted the objection in the record>. 3. Archaic. To brand <as punishment, the criminal was noted>. See NOTA.

note broker. See BROKER.

note of a fine. Hist. English law. A step in the judicial process for conveying land, consisting of a chirographer's brief of the proceedings before the documents of conveyance are engrossed. — Also termed abstract of a fine. See FINE.

note of allowance. English law. A master's note, upon receiving a party's memorandum of an error of law in a case, allowing error to be asserted.

note of hand. See promissory note under NOTE (1). Pl. notes of hand.

note of protest. A notary's preliminary memo, to be formalized at a later time, stating that a negotiable instrument was neither paid nor accepted upon presentment. See PROTEST.

note payable. See account payable under ACCOUNT.

note receivable. See account receivable under ACCOUNT.

note verbal (noht vər-bəl). Int'l law. An unsigned diplomatic note, usu. written in the third person, that sometimes accompanies a diplomatic message or note of protest to further explain the country's position or to request certain action. — Also spelled note verbale (vair-bahl).

not-for-profit corporation. See nonprofit corporation under CORPORATION.

not found. Words placed on a bill of indictment, meaning that the grand jury has insufficient evidence to support a true bill. See IGNORAMUS; NO BILL. Cf. TRUE BILL.

not guilty. 1. Criminal law. A defendant's plea denying the crime charged. 2. A jury verdict acquitting the defendant because the prosecution failed to prove the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

not guilty by reason of insanity. 1. A not-guilty verdict, based on mental illness, that usu. does not release the defendant but instead results in commitment to a mental institution. 2. A criminal defendant's plea of not guilty that is based on the insanity defense. — Abbr. NGRI. — Also termed not guilty on the ground of insanity. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

3. Common-law pleading. A defendant's plea denying both an act of trespass alleged in a plaintiff's declaration and the plaintiff's right to possess the property at issue.

"In trespass, whether to person or property, the general issue is 'not guilty.' It operates in the first place as a denial that the defendant committed the act of trespass alleged, to wit, the application of force to the plaintiff's person, the entry on his land, or the taking or damages of his goods. It also denies the plaintiff's possession, title, or right of possession of the land or goods." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 170, at 307-08 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

not guilty by statute. Hist. Under certain acts of Parliament, the pleading form for a defendant's general denial in a civil action. ● This pleading form allowed a public officer to indicate action under a statute. The officer had to write the words "by statute" in the margin along with the year, chapter, and section of the applicable statute, and the defendant could not file any other defense without leave of court. The right to plead "not guilty by statute" was essentially removed by the Public Authorities Protection Act of 1893.

4. A general denial in an ejectment action.

"The general issue in ejectment is not guilty. This plea operates as follows: (1) As a denial of the unlawfulness of the withholding; i.e., of the plaintiff's title and right of possession. (2) All defenses in excuse or discharge, including the statute of limitations, are available under the general issue in ejectment." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 188, at 333 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

not-guilty plea. See PLEA (1).

nothous (noh-thəs), adj. Archaic. Spurious; illegitimate.

nothus (noh-thəs), n. [fr. Greek nothos "false"] Roman law. An illegitimate child; one of base birth. ● If the child's mother was a Roman citizen, the child was also a Roman citizen. — Also termed spurius.

notice, n. 1. Legal notification required by law or agreement, or imparted by operation of law as a result of some fact (such as the recording of an instrument); definite legal cognizance, actual or constructive, of an existing right or title <under the lease, the tenant must give the landlord written notice 30 days before vacating the premises>. ● A person has notice of a fact or condition if that person (1) has actual knowledge of it; (2) has received a notice of it; (3) has reason to know about it; (4) knows about a related fact; or (5) is considered as having been able to ascertain it by checking an official filing or recording. 2. The condition of being so notified, whether or not actual awareness exists <all prospective buyers were on notice of the judgment lien>. 3. A written or printed announcement <the notice of sale was posted on the courthouse bulletin board>. Cf. KNOWLEDGE.

actual notice. Notice given directly to, or received personally by, a party.

adequate notice. See due notice.

commercial-law notice. Under the UCC, notice of a fact arising either as a result of actual knowledge or notification of the fact, or as a result of circumstances under which a person would have reason to know of the fact. UCC § 1-201(25).

constructive notice. Notice arising by presumption of law from the existence of facts and circumstances that a party had a duty to take notice of, such as a registered deed or a pending lawsuit; notice presumed by law to have been acquired by a person and thus imputed to that person. — Also termed legal notice.

direct notice. Actual notice of a fact that is brought directly to a party's attention. — Also termed positive notice.

due notice. Sufficient and proper notice that is intended to and likely to reach a particular person or the public; notice that is legally adequate given the particular circumstance. — Also termed adequate notice; legal notice.

express notice. Actual knowledge or notice given to a party directly, not arising from any inference, duty, or inquiry.

fair notice. 1. Sufficient notice apprising a litigant of the opposing party's claim. 2. The requirement that a pleading adequately apprise the opposing party of a claim. • A pleading must be drafted so that an opposing attorney of reasonable competence would be able to ascertain the nature and basic issues of the controversy and the evidence probably relevant to those issues. 3. FAIR WARNING.

immediate notice. 1. Notice given as soon as possible. 2. More commonly, and esp. on notice of an insurance claim, notice that is reasonable under the circumstances.

implied notice. Notice that is inferred from facts that a person had a means of knowing and that is thus imputed to that person; actual notice of facts or circumstances that, if properly followed up, would have led to a knowledge of the particular fact in question. — Also termed indirect notice; presumptive notice.

imputed notice. Information attributed to a person whose agent, having received actual notice of the information, has a duty to disclose it to that person. • For example, notice of a hearing may be imputed to a witness because it was actually disclosed to that witness's attorney of record.

indirect notice. See implied notice.

inquiry notice. Notice attributed to a person when the information would lead an ordinarily prudent person to investigate the matter further; esp., the time at which the victim of an alleged securities fraud became aware of facts that would have prompted a reasonable person to investigate.

judicial notice. See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

legal notice. 1. See constructive notice. 2. See due notice.

notice by publication. See public notice.

personal notice. Oral or written notice, according to the circumstances, given directly to the affected person.

positive notice. See direct notice.

presumptive notice. See implied notice.

public notice. Notice given to the public or persons affected, usu. by publishing in a newspaper of general circulation. • This notice is usu. required, for example, in matters of public concern. — Also termed notice by publication.

reasonable notice. Notice that is fairly to be expected or required under the particular circumstances.

record notice. Constructive notice of the contents of an instrument, such as a deed or mortgage, that has been properly recorded.

notice, vb. 1. To give legal notice to or of <the plaintiff's lawyer noticed depositions of all the experts that the defendant listed>. 2. To realize or give attention to <the lawyer noticed that the witness was leaving>.

notice act. See NOTICE STATUTE.

notice-and-comment period. Administrative law. The statutory time frame during which an administrative agency publishes a proposed regulation and receives public comment on the regulation. • The regulation cannot take effect until after this period expires. — Often shortened to comment period.

notice-and-comment rulemaking. See informal rulemaking under RULEMAKING.

notice by publication. See public notice under NOTICE.

notice doctrine. The equitable doctrine that when a new owner takes an estate with notice that someone else had a claim on it at the time of the transfer, that claim may still be asserted against the new owner even if it might have been disregarded at law. — Also termed doctrine of notice.

notice filing. The perfection of a security interest under Article 9 of the UCC by filing only a financing statement, as opposed to a copy or abstract of the security agreement. • The financing statement must contain (1) the debtor's signature, (2) the secured party's name and address, (3) the debtor's name and mailing address, and (4) a description of the types of, or items of, collateral.

notice of appeal. A document filed with a court and served on the other parties, stating an intention to appeal a trial court's judgment or order. • In most jurisdictions, filing a notice of appeal is the act by which the appeal is perfected. For instance, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure provide that an appeal is taken by filing a notice of appeal with the clerk of the district court from which the appeal is taken, and that the clerk is to send copies of the notice to all the other parties' attorneys, as well as the court of appeals. Fed. R. App. P. 3(a), (d). — Also termed claim of appeal. See APPEAL.

notice of appearance. 1. Procedure. A party's written notice filed with the court or oral announcement on the record informing the court and the other parties that the party wants to participate in the case. 2. Bankruptcy. A written notice filed with the court or oral announcement in open court by a person who wants to receive all pleadings in a particular case. • This notice is usu. filed by an attorney for a creditor who wants to be added to the official service list. 3. A pleading filed by an attorney to notify the court and the other parties that he or she represents one or more parties in the lawsuit.

notice of deficiency. See NINETY-DAY LETTER.

notice of dishonor. Notice to the indorser of an instrument that acceptance or payment has been refused. • This notice — along with presentment and actual dishonor — is a condition of an indorser's secondary liability. UCC § 3-503(a).

notice of motion. Written certification that a party to a lawsuit has filed a motion or that a motion will be heard or considered by the court at a particular time. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the requirement that a motion be made in writing is fulfilled if the motion is stated in a written notice of the hearing on the motion. Also, the courts in most jurisdictions require all motions to include a certificate, usu. referred to as a certificate of service, indicating that the other parties to the suit have been given notice of the motion's filing. Notice of any hearing or other submission of the motion must usu. be provided to all parties by the party requesting the hearing or submission. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d), 7(b)(1); Fed. R. Civ. P. Form 19.

notice of orders or judgments. Written notice of the entry of an order or judgment, provided by the court clerk or one of the parties. • Notice of a judgment is usu. provided by the clerk of the court in which the judgment was entered. If the court does not provide notice, a party is usu. required to provide it. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the clerk is required to provide immediate notice of any order or judgment to any party to the case who is not in default. Fed. R. Civ. P. 77(d); Fed. R. Crim. P. 49(c).

notice of protest. 1. A statement, given usu. by a notary public to a drawer or indorser of a negotiable instrument, that the instrument was neither paid nor accepted; information provided to the drawer or indorser that protest was made for nonacceptance or nonpayment of a note or bill. See PROTEST (2). 2. A shipowner's or crew's declaration under oath that damages to their vessel or cargo were the result of perils of the sea and that the shipowner is not liable for the damages. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

notice of removal. The pleading by which the defendant removes a case from state court to federal court. • A notice of removal is filed in the federal district court in the district and division in which the suit is pending. The notice must contain a short and plain statement of the grounds for removal and must include a copy of all process, pleadings, and orders that have been served on the removing party while the case has been pending. The removing party must also notify the state court and other parties to the suit that the notice of removal has been filed. A notice of removal must be filed, if at all, within 30 days after the defendant is served with process in the suit. 28 USCA § 1446; Murphy Bros., Inc. v. Michetti Pipe Stringing, Inc., 119 S.Ct. 1322 (1999).

notice of trial. A document issued by a court informing the parties of the date on which the lawsuit is set for trial. • While the court typically provides the notice to all parties, it may instead instruct one party to send the notice to all the others.

notice pleading. See PLEADING (2).

notice-prejudice rule. A doctrine barring an insurer from using late notice as a reason to deny an insured's claim unless the insurer can show that it was prejudiced by the untimely notice.

notice-race statute. See RACE-NOTICE STATUTE.

notice statute. A recording act providing that the person with the most recent valid claim, and who purchased without notice of an earlier, unrecorded claim, has priority. • About half the states have notice statutes. — Also termed notice act. Cf. RACE STATUTE; RACE-NOTICE STATUTE.

notice to appear. A summons or writ by which a person is cited to appear in court. • This is an informal phrase sometimes used to refer to the summons or other initial process by which a person is notified of a lawsuit. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require the summons to state that the defendant must appear and defend within a given time and that failure to do so will result in a default judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(a). See PROCESS; SUMMONS; DEFAULT JUDGMENT; NOTICE TO PLEAD.

notice to creditors. Bankruptcy. A formal notice to creditors that a creditors' meeting will be held, that proofs of claim must be filed, or that an order for relief has been granted.

notice to plead. A warning to a defendant, stating that failure to file a responsive pleading within a prescribed time will result in a default judgment. • The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require the summons to notify the defendant that failure to appear and defend within a prescribed time will result in a default judgment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(a). See PROCESS; SUMMONS; DEFAULT JUDGMENT; NOTICE TO APPEAR.

notice to produce. See REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION.

notice to quit. 1. A landlord's written notice demanding that a tenant surrender and vacate the leased property, thereby terminating the tenancy. 2. A landlord's notice to a tenant to pay any back rent within a specified period (often seven days) or else vacate the leased premises.

notification. 1. Int'l law. A formal announcement of a legally relevant fact, action, or intent, such as notice of an intent to withdraw from a treaty. 2. NOTICE.

notify, vb. 1. To inform (a person or group) in writing or by any method that is understood <I notified the court of the change in address>. 2. Archaic. To give notice of; to make known <to notify the lawsuit to all the defendants>. See NOTICE.

notio (noh-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin noscere "to know"] 1. Roman law. An investigation of a case. 2. Hist. The authority of a judge to try a case.

notitia (noh-tish-ee-ə), n. [Latin "knowledge"] 1. Roman law. Knowledge; information. • This term carried over for a time into English practice. 2. Roman law. A list; register; catalogue. • The notitia dignitatum (dig-ni-tay-təm) was a list of the high offices in the Eastern and Western parts of the empire. 3. Hist. Notice. 4. A list of ecclesiastical sees.

not law. A judicial decision regarded as wrong by the legal profession.

"Even when it is not possible to point out any decision that affects the point in question in any one of the ways enumerated, it sometimes happens that the profession has grown to ignore the old decision as wrong or obsolete; and though this does not happen often, when it does happen, the old decision is very likely not to be followed in case the point is squarely raised again. This is one of the instances in which lawyers rather mystically, though soundly, say that a decision is 'not law.'" William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 329 (3d ed. 1914).

notoriety. 1. The state of being generally, and often unfavorably, known and spoken of <the company executive achieved notoriety when she fled the country to avoid paying taxes>. 2. A person in such a state <the notoriety gave a rare interview>.

notorious, adj. 1. Generally known and spoken of. 2. (Of the possession of property) so conspicuous as to impute notice to the true owner. — Also termed (in sense 2) open and notorious. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

notorious cohabitation. See COHABITATION.

notorious insolvency. Scots law. A bankruptcy; the stage of insolvency in which the debtor has publicly acknowledged insolvency under the statute. • This stage is usu. followed by sequestration, which is notorious insolvency coupled with the appointment of a trustee for creditors. — Also termed notour bankruptcy.

notorious possession. See POSSESSION.

not otherwise indexed by name. A phrase used in shipping and tariff construction, usu. to show a classification of something generally rather than specifically. ● For example, a shipment of aircraft and boat engines merely labeled "other articles" is not otherwise indexed by name. — Abbr. n.o.i.b.n.

notour bankruptcy. See NOTORIOUS INSOLVENCY.

not possessed. Common-law pleading. In an action in trover, the defendant's plea denying possession of the articles allegedly converted. See TROVER.

not proven. An archaic jury verdict — now used only in Scots criminal law — equivalent in result to not guilty, but carrying with it a strong suspicion of wrongdoing. — Also termed Scotch verdict.

not satisfied. A form of return by a sheriff or constable, on a writ of execution, indicating only that the amount due on a judgment was not paid. ● A general return of this type is usu. viewed as technically deficient because it does not state why the writ was not satisfied. Cf. NULLA BONA.

not sufficient funds. The notation of dishonor (of a check) indicating that the drawer's account does not contain enough money to cover payment. — Abbr. NSF. — Also termed insufficient funds.

notwithstanding, prep. Despite; in spite of <notwithstanding the conditions listed above, the landlord can terminate the lease if the tenant defaults>.

n.o.v. abbr. NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

nova causa interveniens. See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

nova custuma (noh-və kəs-t[y]ə-mə), n. [Law Latin "new custom"] Hist. A tax; an imposition. Cf. ANTIQUA CUSTUMA.

novae narrationes (noh-vee nə-ray-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin "new counts or tales"] Hist. A collection of pleading forms published during the reign of Edward III.

nova statuta (noh-və stə-t[y]oo-tə), n. pl. [Law Latin] Hist. New statutes. ● This term refers to the statutes passed beginning with the reign of Edward III. Cf. VETERA STATUTA.

novation (noh-vay-shən), n. The act of substituting for an old obligation a new one that either replaces an existing obligation with a new obligation or replaces an original party with a new party. ● A novation may substitute (1) a new obligation between the same parties, (2) a new debtor, or (3) a new creditor. — Also termed substituted agreement; (Roman law) novatio (noh-vay-shee-oh). — novate (noh-vayt or noh-vayt), vb. — novatory (noh-və-tor-ee), adj. See substituted contract under CONTRACT; ACCORD (2).

"The only way in which it is possible to transfer contractual duties to a third party is by the process of novation, which requires the consent of the other party to the contract. In fact novation really amounts to the extinction of the old obligation, and the creation of a new one, rather than to the transfer of the obligation from one person to another. Thus if B owes A £100, and C owes B the same amount, B cannot transfer to C the legal duty of paying his debt to A without A's consent. But if A agrees to accept C as a debtor in place of B, and if C agrees to accept A as his creditor in place of B, the three parties may make a tripartite agreement to this effect, known as novation. The effect of this is to extinguish B's liability to A and create a new liability on the part of C." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 283 (3d ed. 1981).

"The word 'novation' is used in a variety of senses. Courts frequently use it as synonymous with 'substituted contract.' Most academic writers and both contracts restatements, however, restrict its use to describe a substituted contract involving at least one obligor or obligee who was not a party to the original contract. . . . The development of a separate category under the rubric 'novation' is doubtless traceable to problems of consideration formerly thought to be present in such contracts because of the former common law rule that consideration must be supplied by the promisee. This rule has long been laid to rest almost everywhere." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 11-8, at 444-45 (3d ed. 1987).

objective novation. Civil law. A novation involving the substitution of a new obligation for an old one.

subjective novation. Civil law. A novation involving the substitution of a new obligor for a previous obligor who has been discharged by the obligee.

novel assignment. See new assignment under ASSIGNMENT (5).

novel disseisin (nov-əl dis-see-zin), n. A recent disseisin. See DISSEISIN; ASSISE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN.

Novellae (nə-vel-ee). See NOVELS.

Novellae Constitutiones. See NOVELS.

Novellae Leonis (nə-vel-ee lee-oh-nis), n. [Latin “novels of Leo”] A collection of 113 ordinances issued by Emperor Leo from A.D. 887–893.

Novels. A collection of 168 constitutions issued by the Roman emperor Justinian and his immediate successors. • Taken together, the Novels make up one of four component parts of the Corpus Juris Civilis. — Also termed Novellae; Novellae Constitutiones. See CORPUS JURIS CIVILIS.

novelty. Patents. 1. The fact that an invention is new in form and in function or performance. 2. The requirement that this fact must be demonstrated for an invention to be patentable. • If the invention has been previously patented, described in a publication, or known or used by others, it is not novel. 35 USCA § 102. Cf. NON-OBVIOUSNESS.

noverca (nə-vər-kə), n. [Latin] A stepmother.

noverint universi per praesentes (noh-və-rənt yoo-ni-vər-sī pər pri-zen-teez). [Latin] Know all men by these presents. • This is a formal phrase once found at the beginning of deeds of release. In translation, they still sometimes appear on various types of legal documents. See KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS; PATEAT UNIVERSIS PER PRAESENTES.

novigild (noh-və-gild), n. [fr. Latin novem “nine” + Anglo-Saxon gid or geld “a payment”] Hist. The money a person must pay for damaging another person’s property, the amount equaling nine times the purchase price of the property damaged.

novi operis nuntiatio (noh-vī ahp-ə-ris nən-shee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Latin “new work protest”] Roman law. A protest or prohibition against an opus novum (“new work”). • A person whose rights were impaired by the building or tearing of down a structure could protest at the worksite and forbid further activity. — Also termed (edictum) de novi operis nuntiatione.

noviter perventa (noh-və-tər pər-ven-tə), n. pl. [Law Latin “newly known”] Eccles. law. Newly discovered facts, which are usu. allowed to be introduced in a case even after the pleadings are closed.

novus actus interveniens (noh-vəs ak-təs in-tər-vee-nee-ənz). See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

novus homo (noh-vəs hoh-moh), n. [Latin “new man”] Hist. A man who has been pardoned for a crime.

NOW. abbr. 1. NEGOTIABLE ORDER OF WITHDRAWAL. 2. National Organization for Women.

NOW account. See ACCOUNT.

now comes. See COMES NOW.

noxā (nok-sə), n. [Latin “injury”] Hist. 1. Roman law. An offense such as injury to a person or property, esp. one committed by a slave or son. 2. Roman law. The obligation to pay for damage committed by a son, slave, or animal. • The father or master generally had to pay for the damages or else surrender the offender to the injured party. 3. An offense, generally. 4. The punishment for an offense. 5. Something that exerts a harmful effect on the body.

noxal (nok-səl), adj. Archaic. Of or relating to a claim against a father or owner for damage done by a son, a slave, or an animal.

noxal action. [fr. Latin actio noxalis “injurious action”] 1. Roman law. The claim against a master or father for a tort committed by a son, a slave, or an animal. • The head of the family could be sued either to pay a penalty due or to surrender the tortfeasor to the victim. Roman law also provided for the surrender of animals that caused damage under actio de pauperie. 2. Hist. A person’s claim to recover for damages committed by a person’s son, slave, or animal.

noxious (nok-shəs), adj. 1. Harmful to health; injurious. 2. Unwholesome; corruptive. 3. Archaic. Guilty.

n.p. abbr. 1. NISI PRIUS. 2. NOTARY PUBLIC.

NPL. abbr. NATIONAL PRIORITIES LIST.

NPV. See net present value under PRESENT VALUE.

n.r. abbr. 1. New reports. 2. Not reported. 3. NONRESIDENT.

n.s. abbr. 1. New series. • This citation form indicates that a periodical has been renumbered in a new series. 2. NEW STYLE.

NSF. abbr. NOT SUFFICIENT FUNDS.

NTSB. abbr. NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD.

nubilis (n[y]oo-bə-lis), n. [Latin “marriageable”] Civil law. A person, esp. a girl, who is old enough to be married.

nuclear-nonproliferation treaty. See non-proliferation treaty under TREATY.

nuda detentio (n[y]oo-də di-ten-shee-oh). [Latin] See possessio naturalis under POSSESSIO.

nuda patientia (n[y]oo-də pash-ee-en-shee-ə). [Latin] Mere sufferance.

nuda possessio (n[y]oo-də pə-zes[h]-ee-oh). [Latin] Mere possession.

nude, adj. 1. Naked; unclothed. 2. Lacking in consideration or in some essential particular. See NUDUM PACTUM. 3. Mere; lacking in description.

nude contract. See NUDUM PACTUM.

nude matter. A mere allegation.

“[N]ude matter is not of so high nature, as either a mater of Record or a speciality, otherwise there called mater in deede; which maketh mee to thinke, that nude mater is a naked allegation of a thing done, to be proved only by witnesses, and not either by Record, or other speciality in writing vnder seale.” John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

nudum pactum (n[y]oo-dəm pak-təm). [Latin “bare agreement”] 1. Roman law. An informal agreement that is not legally enforceable, because it does not fall within the specific classes of agreements that can support a legal action. • But a pactum could create an exception to or modification of an existing obligation. 2. An agreement that is unenforceable as a contract because it is not “clothed” with consideration. — Also termed naked contract; nude contract; nude pact.

nugatory (n[y]oo-gə-tor-ee), adj. Of no force or effect; useless; invalid <the Supreme Court rendered the statute nugatory by declaring it unconstitutional>.

nuisance. 1. A condition or situation (such as a loud noise or foul odor) that interferes with the use or enjoyment of property. • Liability might or might not arise from the condition or situation. — Formerly also termed annoyance.

“A nuisance may be merely a right thing in the wrong place, like a pig in the parlor instead of the barnyard.” Village of Euclid v. Amber Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 388, 47 S.Ct. 114, 118 (1926).

“A ‘nuisance’ is a state of affairs. To conduct a nuisance is a tort. In torts, the word ‘nuisance’ has had an extremely elastic meaning; sometimes it is little more than a pejorative term, a weasel word used as a substitute for reasoning. . . . The general distinction between a nuisance and a trespass is that the trespass flows from a physical invasion and the nuisance does not.” Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 7.2, at 417 (2d ed. 1993).

2. Loosely, an act or failure to act resulting in an interference with the use or enjoyment of property. • In this sense, the term denotes the action causing the interference, rather than the resulting condition <the Slocums’ playing electric guitars in their yard constituted a nuisance to their neighbors>.

“There is perhaps no more impenetrable jungle in the entire law than that which surrounds the word ‘nuisance.’ It has meant all things to all people, and has been applied indiscriminately to everything from an alarming advertisement to a cockroach baked in a pie.” Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 86, at 616 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

3. The class of torts arising from such conditions, acts, or failures to act when they occur unreasonably. — Also termed actionable nuisance.

“Nuisance is really a field of tortious liability rather than a single type of tortious conduct: the feature which gives it unity is the interest invaded — that of the use and enjoyment of land. The tort emphasises the harm to the plaintiff rather than the conduct of the defendant.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 50–51 (17th ed. 1977).

abatable nuisance. A nuisance so easily removable that the aggrieved party may lawfully cure the problem without notice to the liable party, such as overhanging tree branches.

absolute nuisance. 1. Interference with a property right that a court considers fixed or invariable, such as a riparian owner's right to use a stream in its natural condition. 2. See nuisance per se. 3. Interference in a place where it does not reasonably belong, even if the interfering party is careful. 4. Interference for which a defendant is held strictly liable for resulting harm, esp. in the nature of pollution. Cf. qualified nuisance.

Sense (4) has been disapproved: "[T]he use of the term 'nuisance' to describe the tort liability that sometimes results from accidental invasions produces too much confusion." Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 89, at 637 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

anticipatory nuisance. A condition that, although not yet at the level of a nuisance, is very likely to become one, so that a party may obtain an injunction prohibiting the condition. — Also termed prospective nuisance.

attractive nuisance. A dangerous condition that may attract children onto land, thereby causing a risk to their safety. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE.

"[T]he doctrine acquired the unfortunate misnomer 'attractive nuisance,' a label which persists to this day. It cannot be taken literally, since the courts have now largely rejected the notion that the child must be attracted by that which injures him, and whether or not the condition is in fact a 'nuisance' has nothing at all to do with defendant's liability to the child." Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 89 (2d ed. 1992).

cognate nuisance. Rare. Interference with an easement.

"The term nuisance is applied to torts of two distinct groups, first, acts of wrongful user by an owner or possessor of land resulting in an unreasonable interference with the rights of enjoyment of the owner or possessor of neighboring land, and, second, wrongful interferences with easements or other incorporeal rights." William F. Walsh, A Treatise on Equity 170 (1930).

"When an easement was interfered with, an action on the case lay as a matter of course. . . . Such an interference is sometimes called 'cognate nuisance' to distinguish it from interferences with the personal enjoyment of the incidents of occupying the land." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 486 (3d ed. 1990).

common nuisance. See public nuisance.

continuing nuisance. A nuisance that is either uninterrupted or frequently recurring. • It need not be constant or unceasing, but it must occur often enough that it is almost continuous.

legalized nuisance. A nuisance sanctioned by legislative, executive, or other official action and therefore immune from liability, such as a city park.

mixed nuisance. A condition that is both a private nuisance and a public nuisance, so that it is dangerous to the community at large but also causes particular harm to private individuals.

nuisance at law. See nuisance per se.

nuisance dependent on negligence. See qualified nuisance.

nuisance in fact. A nuisance existing because of the circumstances of the use or the particular location. • For example, a machine emitting high-frequency sound may be a nuisance only if a person's dog lives near enough to the noise to be disturbed by it. — Also termed nuisance per accidens.

nuisance per se (pər say). Interference so severe that it would constitute a nuisance under any circumstances; a nuisance regardless of location or circumstances of use, such as a leaky nuclear-waste storage facility. — Also termed nuisance at law; absolute nuisance.

permanent nuisance. A nuisance that cannot readily be abated at reasonable expense. Cf. temporary nuisance.

private nuisance. A condition that interferes with a person's enjoyment of property, but does not involve a trespass. • The condition constitutes a tort for which the adversely affected person may recover damages or obtain an injunction.

"Trespass and private nuisance are alike in that each is a field of tort liability rather than a single type of tortious conduct. In each, liability may arise from an intentional or an unintentional invasion. For an intentional trespass, there is liability without harm; for a private nuisance, there is no liability without significant harm. . . . In private nuisance an intentional interference with the plaintiff's use or enjoyment is not of itself a tort, and unreasonableness of the interference is necessary for liability." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 821D cmt. d (1979).

"The different ways and combinations of ways in which the interest in the use or enjoyment of land may be invaded are infinitely variable. A private nuisance may consist of an interference with the physical condition of the land itself, as by vibration or blasting which damages a house, the destruction of crops, flooding, raising the water table, or the pollution of a stream or of an underground water supply." Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 87, at 619 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

prospective nuisance. See anticipatory nuisance.

public nuisance. An unreasonable interference with a right common to the general public, such as a condition dangerous to health, offensive to community moral standards, or unlawfully obstructing the public in the free use of public property. • Such a nuisance may lead to a civil injunction or criminal prosecution. — Also termed common nuisance.

“[P]ublic nuisance . . . is an amorphous and unsatisfactory area of the law covering an ill-assorted collection of wrongs, some of which have little or no association with tort and only appear to fill a gap in criminal law. Others cover what could be generally described as ‘noisome trade,’ which could be dealt with under some form of statutory nuisance. Yet a third group deals with what we would generally describe as ‘abuses of the highway’ . . .” R.W.M. Dias & B.S. Markesinis, Tort Law 254 (1984).

qualified nuisance. A condition that, though lawful in itself, is so negligently permitted to exist that it creates an unreasonable risk of harm and, in due course, actually results in injury to another. • It involves neither an intentional act nor a hazardous activity. — Also termed nuisance dependent on negligence. Cf. absolute nuisance.

temporary nuisance. A nuisance that can be corrected by a reasonable expenditure of money or labor. Cf. permanent nuisance.

nuisance in fact. See NUISANCE.

nuisance money. See nuisance settlement under SETTLEMENT.

nuisance per accidens. See nuisance in fact under NUISANCE.

nuisance per se. See NUISANCE.

nuisance settlement. See SETTLEMENT.

nul (nəl). [Law French] No; none. • This negative particle begins many phrases, such as nul tiel.

nul agard (nəl ə-gahrd), n. [Law French “no award”] In an action to enforce an arbitration award on an arbitration bond, a plea denying the existence of the award. Cf. AGARD.

nul disseisin (nəl dis-see-zin). [Law French “no disseisin”] In a real action, a defendant’s plea that the plaintiff was not deprived of the possession of any land and tenements. See DISSEISIN.

nul fait agard (nəl fay ə-gahrd). [Law French] No award was made. Cf. AGARD.

null, adj. Having no legal effect; without binding force; VOID <the contract was declared null and void>. • The phrase null and void is a common redundancy.

nulla bona (nəl-ə boh-nə). [Latin “no goods”] A form of return by a sheriff or constable upon an execution when the judgment debtor has no seizable property within the jurisdiction. Cf. NIHIL EST.

nulla poena sine lege (nəl-ə pee-nə si-nee lee-jee or sin-ay lay-gay). [Latin] No punishment without a law authorizing it.

nullification (nəl-i-fi-kay-shən), n. 1. The act of making something void; specif., the action of a state in abrogating a federal law, on the basis of state sovereignty. 2. The state or condition of being void. See JURY NULLIFICATION.

nullification doctrine. The theory — espoused by southern states before the Civil War — advocating a state’s right to declare a federal law unconstitutional and therefore void.

nullify, vb. To make void; to render invalid.

nullity (nəl-ə-tee). 1. Something that is legally void <the forged commercial transfer is a nullity>. 2. The fact of being legally void <she filed a petition for nullity of marriage>.

absolute nullity. Civil law. 1. An act that is void because it is against public policy, law, or order. 2. The state of such a nullity. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

relative nullity. Civil law. 1. A legal nullity that can be cured by confirmation because

nullity of marriage. 1. The invalidity of a presumed or supposed marriage because it is void on its face or has been voided by court order. ● A void marriage, as in an incestuous marriage, is invalid on its face and requires no formality to end. A voidable marriage, such as a marriage lacking requisite parental consent, requires a court order to invalidate.

“The declaration of nullity is appropriate if the marriage is relatively null or absolutely null yet one or both spouses were in good faith. If the marriage is relatively null, civil effects flow until the declaration of nullity. On the other hand, the marriage that is absolutely null generally produces civil effects only if one or both of the spouses were in good faith and only so long as good faith lasts.” 16 Katherine S. Spaht & W. Lee Hargrave, Louisiana Civil Law Treatise: Matrimonial Regimes § 7.6, at 348 (2d ed. 1997).

2. A suit brought to nullify a marriage. See ANNULMENT.

nullius filius (nə-lī-əs fil-ee-əs), n. [Latin “son of no one”] An illegitimate child.

nullius in bonis (nə-lī-əs in boh-nis), adj. [Latin “among the property of no person”] Hist. Belonging to no one. ● Wild animals were considered to be nullius in bonis. — Also termed in nullius bonis.

nullius juris (nə-lī-əs joor-is). [Latin] Hist. Of no legal force.

nullum arbitrium (nəl-əm ahr-bi-tree-əm), n. [Law Latin “no decision”] Hist. In an action to enforce an arbitration bond, a plea denying the existence of an arbitration award.

nullum est erratum (nəl-əm est ə-ray-təm), n. [Latin “there is no error in the record”] In response to an assignment of error, the common plea that there is no error in the record. ● The effect of the plea is essentially to admit well-pleaded facts.

nullum fecerunt arbitrium (nəl-əm fə-see-rənt ahr-bi-tree-əm). [Latin “they never submitted to arbitration”] Hist. In an action to enforce an arbitration award, the defendant’s plea denying that there had been an arbitration.

Nullum Tempus Act (nəl-əm tem-pəs akt), n. [Latin] Hist. English law. The Crown Suits Act of 1769 (amended in 1862) that limited the Crown’s time to sue, in land and other specified matters, to 60 years. ● The statute altered the common-law rule of nullum tempus aut locus occurrit regi (“no time or place affects the Crown”), which was based on the idea that the Crown was too busy with governmental affairs to timely attend to its legal affairs.

nullum tempus occurrit reipublicae (nəl-əm tem-pəs ə-kār-it ree-i-pəb-lə-see), n. [Latin “no time runs against the state”] The principle that a statute of limitations does not apply to a commonwealth or state unless a statute specifically provides that it does. ● The purpose of the rule is to fully protect public rights and property from injury.

nul tiel (nəl teel). [Law Latin] No such. ● This phrase typically denotes a plea that denies the existence of something.

nul tiel corporation, n. [Law French “no such corporation exists”] A plea denying the existence of an alleged corporation. ● The defense of nul tiel corporation must usu. be affirmatively pleaded by a defendant before a plaintiff is required to prove its corporate existence.

nul tiel record, n. [Law French “no such record”] A plea denying the existence of the record on which the plaintiff bases a claim. ● Evidence may generally be introduced to invalidate the record only, not the statements in the record. See trial by record under TRIAL.

“The proper general issue in debt on judgments is ‘nul tiel record,’ which denies the existence of the record alleged. Nul tiel record sets up: (1) the defense either that there is no record at all in existence; or (2) one different from that which the defendant has declared of; or (3) that the judgment is void on the face of the record.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 186, at 330 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

nul tort (nəl tort), n. [Law French “no wrong”] Hist. A type of general denial in an action to recover lands and tenements, by which the defendant claims that no wrong was done. See NUL DISSEISIN.

“The general issue, or general plea, is what traverses, thwarts, and denies at once the whole declaration; without offering any special matter whereby to evade it [I]n real actions, nul tort, no wrong done; nul disseisin, no disseisin; and in a writ of right, that the tenant has more right to hold than the demandant has to demand. These pleas are called the general issue, because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the declaration, they amount at once to an issue; by which we mean a fact affirmed on one side and denied on the other.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 305 (1768).

nul waste (nəl wayst), n. [Law French “no waste”] Hist. The defendant’s general denial in an action to recover damages for the destruction of lands and tenements. See NUL TORT.

numbers game. A type of lottery in which a person bets that on a given day a certain series of numbers will appear from some arbitrarily chosen source, such as stock-market indexes or the U.S. Treasury balance. • The game creates a fund from which the winner’s share is drawn and is subject to regulation as a lottery.

numerata pecunia (n[y]oo-mə-ray-tə pi-kyoo-nee-ə), n. [Latin] Hist. Money counted or paid.

numerical lottery. See Genoese lottery under LOTTERY.

numerosity (n[y]oo-mər-ahs-ə-tee). The requirement in U.S. district courts that, for a case to be certified as a class action, the party applying for certification must show, among other things, that the class of potential plaintiffs is so large that the joinder of all of them into the suit is impracticable. See CLASS ACTION.

nummata (nə-may-tə), n. [Law Latin “money”] The monetary price of something.

nummata terrae (nə-may-tə ter-ee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. An acre of land.

nunciato (nən-shee-ay-toh). See NUNTIATIO.

nuncio (nən-shee-oh), n. [Italian, fr. Latin nunciare “to announce”] 1. A papal ambassador to a foreign court or government; a representative of the Vatican in a country that maintains diplomatic relations with it. — Also termed nuncius; nuntio. Cf. INTERNUNCIO; LEGATE. 2. Archaic. A messenger.

nunc pro tunc (nəngk proh təngk or nuəngk proh tuəngk). [Latin “now for then”] Having retroactive legal effect through a court’s inherent power <the court entered a nunc pro tunc order to correct a clerical error in the record>.

“When an order is signed ‘nunc pro tunc’ as of a specified date, it means that a thing is now done which should have been done on the specified date.” 35A C.J.S. Federal Civil Procedure § 370, at 556 (1960).

nunc pro tunc amendment. See AMENDMENT (3).

nunc pro tunc judgment. See JUDGMENT.

nuncupare (nəng-kyuu-pair-ee), vb. [Latin “call by name”] Hist. To name or pronounce orally. • Nuncupare heredem means to name an heir before public witnesses.

nuncupate (nəng-kyə-payt), vb. [fr. Latin nuncupare “call by name”] 1. Hist. To designate or name. 2. To vow or declare publicly and solemnly. 3. To declare orally, as a will. 4. To dedicate or inscribe (a work).

nuncupative (nəng-kyə-pay-tiv or nəng-kyoo-pə-tiv), adj. [fr. Latin nuncupare “to name”] Stated by spoken word; declared orally.

nuncupative will. See WILL.

nundinae (nən-də-nee), n. [fr. Latin novem “nine” + dies “day”] 1. Roman law. A fair or market. 2. Roman law. The period between two consecutive markets (usu. eight days). • This period was often fixed for the payment of debts.

nundination (nən-di-nay-shən), n. [fr. Latin nundinatio “the holding of a market or fair”] Hist. The act of buying or selling at a fair.

nunquam indebitatus (nəng[k]-kwam in-deb-itay-təs), n. [Latin “never indebted”] Hist. A defensive plea in a debt action, by which the defendant denies any indebtedness to the plaintiff. Cf. CONCESSIT SOLVERE.

nuntiatio (nən-shee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Latin “a declaration”] Hist. A formal declaration or protest. • A nuntiatio novi operis was an injunction placed on the construction of a new building by the person protesting the construction. — Also spelled nunciato.

nuntio. See NUNCIO.

nuntius (nən-shee-əs), n. [Latin “bearer of news”] 1. Roman law. A messenger. • Declarations through a messenger were usu. as valid as those by letter. 2. Hist. A messenger sent to make an excuse for a party’s absence in court. 3. Hist. An officer of the court. — Also termed summoner; beadle. 4. Eccles. law. NUNCIO (1).

nuper obiit (n[y]oo-pər oh-bee-it), n. [Latin “lately died”] Hist. A writ available to an heir to establish the equal division of land when, on the death of an ancestor who held the estate in fee simple, a coheir took the land and prevented the other heirs from possessing it. The writ was abolished in 1833. See COPARCENER.

nuptiae (nəp-shee-ee). See MATRIMONIUM.

nuptiae secundae (nəp-shee-ee sə-kən-dee), n. [Latin] Eccles. law. A second or subsequent marriage. ● In canon law, second or subsequent marriages were frowned upon, and priests would not attend those ceremonies.

nuptial (nəp-shəl), adj. Of or relating to marriage.

Nuremberg defense (n[y]ər-əm-bərg). The defense asserted by a member of the military who has been charged with the crime of failing to obey an order and who claims that the order was illegal, esp. that the order would result in a violation of international law. ● The term is sometimes used more broadly to describe situations in which citizens accused of committing domestic crimes, such as degradation of government property, claim that their crimes were justified or mandated by international law.

nurture, vb. 1. To supply with nourishment. 2. To train, educate, or develop.

nurus (n[y]oor-əs), n. [Latin] A daughter-in-law.

nychthemeron (nik-thee-mər-ahn), n. [Greek] An entire day and night; a 24-hour period.

NYSE. abbr. NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE.

nystagmus (ni-stag-məs). A rapid, involuntary jerking or twitching of the eyes, sometimes caused by ingesting drugs or alcohol. ● The "horizontal gaze nystagmus test" is one of the field-sobriety tests given to people suspected of being intoxicated. In the procedure, the suspect is told to focus on an object, such as a pencil, and to track its movement, usu. from side to side, by moving only the eyes. Intoxication is indicated if the eyes jerk or twitch while tracking the object.

O

OASDHL abbr. Old Age, Survivors, Disability, and Health Insurance. See OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE.

OASDL abbr. Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance. See OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE.

OASI abbr. OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE.

oath. 1. A solemn declaration, accompanied by a swearing to God or a revered person or thing, that one's statement is true or that one will be bound to a promise. ● The person making the oath implicitly invites punishment if the statement is untrue or the promise is broken. The legal effect of an oath is to subject the person to penalties for perjury if the testimony is false. 2. A statement or promise made by such a declaration. 3. A form of words used for such a declaration. 4. A formal declaration made solemn without a swearing to God or a revered person or thing; AFFIRMATION.

"The word 'oath' (apart from its use to indicate a profane expression) has two very different meanings: (1) a solemn appeal to God in attestation of the truth of a statement or the binding character of such a promise; (2) a statement or promise made under the sanction of such an appeal." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 515 (3d ed. 1982).

assertory oath (ə-sər-tə-ree). An oath by which one attests to some factual matter, rather than making a promise about one's future conduct. ● A courtroom witness typically takes such an oath.

corporal oath (kɔr-pər-əl). An oath made solemn by touching a sacred object, esp. the Bible.

"Oath (Juramentum) Is a calling Almighty God to witness that the Testimony is true; therefore it is aptly termed Sacramentum, a Holy Band, a Sacred Tye, or Godly Vow. And it is called a Corporal Oath, because the party when he swears, toucheth with his right hand the Holy Evangelists or Book of the New Testament." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

decisive oath. Civil law. An oath by a party in a lawsuit, used to decide the case because the party's adversary, not being able to furnish adequate proof, offered to refer the decision of the case to the party. — Also termed decisory oath.

extrajudicial oath. An oath that, although formally sworn, is taken outside a legal proceeding or outside the authority of law.

judicial oath. An oath taken in the course of a judicial proceeding, esp. in open court.

loyalty oath. See oath of allegiance.

oath ex officio (eks ə-fish-ee-oh). At common law, an oath under which a member of the clergy who was accused of a crime could swear innocence before an ecclesiastical court.

oath in litem (lī-tem or -təm). Civil law. An oath taken by a plaintiff in testifying to the value of the thing in dispute when there is no evidence of value or when the defendant has fraudulently suppressed evidence of value.

oath of allegiance. An oath by which one promises to maintain fidelity to a particular sovereign or government. ● This oath is most often administered to a high public officer, to a soldier or sailor, or to an alien applying for naturalization. — Also termed loyalty oath; test oath.

oath of calumny (kal-əm-nee). An oath, taken by a plaintiff or defendant, that attests to the party's good faith and to the party's belief that there is a bona fide cause of action. See CALUMNY.

oath of office. An oath taken by a person about to enter into the duties of public office, by which the person promises to perform the duties of that office in good faith.

oath of supremacy. Hist. English law. An oath required of those taking office, along with the oaths of allegiance and abjuration, declaring that the sovereign is superior to the church in ecclesiastical matters.

oath purgatory. See purgatory oath.

oath supplementary. See supplementary oath.

pauper's oath. An affidavit or verification of poverty by a person requesting public funds or services. See poverty affidavit under AFFIDAVIT; IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

promissory oath. An oath that binds the party to observe a specified course of conduct in the future. • Both the oath of office and the oath of allegiance are types of promissory oaths.

purgatory oath. An oath taken to clear oneself of a charge or suspicion. — Also termed oath purgatory.

suppletory oath (səp-lə-tor-ee). 1. Civil law. An oath administered to a party, rather than a witness, in a case in which a fact has been proved by only one witness. • In a civil-law case, two witnesses are needed to constitute full proof. See HALF-PROOF. 2. An oath administered to a party to authenticate or support some piece of documentary evidence offered by the party. — Also termed oath suppletory.

test oath. See oath of allegiance.

oath against an oath. See SWEARING CONTEST.

oath ex officio. See OATH.

oath-helper. See COMPURGATOR.

oath in litem. See OATH.

oath of abjuration. See ABJURATION.

oath of allegiance. See OATH.

oath of calumny. See OATH.

oath of office. See OATH.

oath of supremacy. See OATH.

Oath or Affirmation Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution requiring members of Congress and the state legislatures, and all member of the executive or judicial branches — state or local — to pledge by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution. U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

oath purgatory. See purgatory oath under OATH.

oath-rite. The form or ceremony used when taking an oath.

oath suppletory. See suppletory oath under OATH.

oathworthy, adj. Legally capable of making an oath.

obaeratus (oh-bə-ray-təs). [Latin] Roman law. A debtor obliged to serve the creditor until the debt is discharged.

ob continentiam delicti (ob kon-tə-nen-shee-əm də-lik-ti). [Latin] On account of contiguity to the offense; being contaminated by association with something illegal.

ob contingentiam (ob kon-tin-jen-shee-əm). [Latin] On account of connection; in case of contingency.

obedience. Compliance with a law, command, or authority.

obediential obligation. See OBLIGATION.

ob favorem mercatorum (ob fə-vor-əm mər-kə-tor-əm). [Latin] In favor of merchants.

obiit (oh-bee-it). [Latin] He died; she died.

obiit sine prole (oh-bee-it si-nee proh-lee also sin-ay prohl). [Latin] He died without issue. — Abbr. o.s.p.

obit. 1. Archaic. A memorial service on the anniversary of a person's death. 2. A record or notice of a person's death; an obituary.

obiter (oh-bid-ər), adv. [Latin "by the way"] Incidentally; in passing <the judge said, obiter, that a nominal sentence would be inappropriate>.

obiter, n. See OBITER DICTUM.

obiter dictum (ob-i-tər dik-təm). [Latin "something said in passing"] A judicial comment made during the course of delivering a judicial opinion, but one that is unnecessary to the decision in the case and therefore not precedential (though it may be considered persuasive). — Often shortened to dictum or, less commonly, obiter. Pl. obiter dicta. See DICTUM. Cf. HOLDING (1); RATIO DECIDENDI.

"Strictly speaking an 'obiter dictum' is a remark made or opinion expressed by a judge, in his decision upon a cause, 'by the way' — that is, incidentally or collaterally, and not directly upon the question before the court; or it is any statement of law enunciated by the judge or court merely by way of illustration, argument, analogy, or suggestion. . . . In the common speech of lawyers, all such extrajudicial expressions of legal opinion are referred to as 'dicta,' or 'obiter dicta,' these two terms being used interchangeably." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 304 (3d ed. 1914).

A court's holding that, according to a later court, was expressed in unnecessarily broad terms. • Some authorities suggest that this is not, properly speaking, a type of obiter dictum at all.

object (ob-jekt), n. 1. A person or thing to which thought, feeling, or action is directed <the natural object of one's bounty>. See NATURAL OBJECT. 2. Something sought to be attained or accomplished; an end, goal, or purpose <the financial objects of the joint venture>.

object (əb-jekt), vb. 1. To state in opposition; to put forward as an objection <the plaintiff objected that the defendant's discovery requests were overbroad>. 2. To state or put forward an objection, esp. to something in a judicial proceeding <the defense objected to the testimony on the ground that it was privileged>. — objector, n.

objectant. See CONTESTANT.

objection, n. A formal statement opposing something that has occurred, or is about to occur, in court and seeking the judge's immediate ruling on the point. • The party objecting must usu. state the basis for the objection to preserve the right to appeal an adverse ruling.

continuing objection. A single objection to all the questions in a given line of questioning. • A judge may allow a lawyer to make a continuing objection when the judge has overruled an objection applicable to many questions, and the lawyer wants to preserve the objection for the appellate record. — Also termed running objection.

general objection. An objection made without specifying any grounds in support of the objection. • A general objection preserves only the issue of relevancy. — Also termed broadside objection.

speaking objection. An objection that contains more information (often in the form of argument) than needed by the judge to sustain or overrule it. • Many judges prohibit lawyers from using speaking objections, and sometimes even from stating the grounds for objections, because of the potential for influencing the jury.

specific objection. An objection that is accompanied by a statement of one or more grounds in support of the objection.

objection in point of law. A defensive pleading by which the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff but objects that they do not make out a legal claim.

objective, adj. 1. Of, relating to, or based on externally verifiable phenomena, as opposed to an individual's perceptions, feelings, or intentions <the objective facts>. 2. Without bias or prejudice; disinterested <because her son was involved, she felt she could not be objective>. Cf. SUBJECTIVE.

objective ethics. See MORAL ABSOLUTISM.

objective meaning. See MEANING.

objective novation. See NOVATION.

objective standard. See STANDARD.

objective theory of contract. The doctrine that a contract is not an agreement in the sense of a subjective meeting of the minds but is instead a series of external acts giving the objective semblance of agreement. — Often shortened to objective theory. Cf. SUBJECTIVE THEORY OF CONTRACT; MEETING OF THE MINDS.

object of a right. The thing in respect of which a right exists; the subject matter of a right. — Also termed subject of a right. See SUBJECT OF A RIGHT.

object offense. See OFFENSE (1).

object of the power. See permissible appointee under APPOINTEE.

object of the power of appointment. See permissible appointee under APPOINTEE.

objurgatrix (ob-jər-gay-triks). Hist. A common scold. See SCOLD.

oblatio (ah-blay-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. A tender of payment (as of a debt).

oblation (ah-blay-shən). An offering or sacrifice, esp. one in a religious or ritualistic ceremony.

obligate, vb. 1. To bind by legal or moral duty. 2. To commit (funds, property, etc.) to meet or secure an obligation.

obligatio (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. An obligation; a legal bond. Pl. obligationes (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh-nee-z).

obligatio civilis (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh sə-vi-lis). [Latin "civil obligation"] 1. An obligation recognized under jus civile as opposed to one recognized only under jus honorarium. — Also termed obligatio praetoria (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh pri-tor-ee-ə); obligatio honoraria (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh [h]on-ə-rair-ee-ə). 2. A legally enforceable obligation, such as one by contract.

obligatio ex contractu (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh eks kən-trak-t[y]oo). [Latin "contractual obligation"] A contractual obligation.

obligatio ex delicto (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh eks də-lik-toh). [Latin "tortious obligation"] An obligation arising from a wrongdoing against the person or property of another; an obligation enforceable in tort. — Also termed obligatio ex maleficio (mal-ə-fish-ee-oh).

obligatio naturalis (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh nach-ə-ray-lis). [Latin "natural obligation"] An obligation that is not legally enforceable; an obligation deriving only from the law of nature.

obligatio quasi ex contractu (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh kway-sī [or -zī] eks kən-trak-t[y]oo). [Latin "obligation from quasi-contract"] An obligation arising between two persons who have not contracted with each other but have formed a relationship similar to a contractual one; a quasi-contractual obligation. See implied-in-law contract under CONTRACT.

obligatio quasi ex delicto (ah-blə-gay-shee-oh kway-sī [or -zī] eks də-lik-toh). [Latin "obligation from something resembling a tort"] An obligation arising from a wrong that is not covered by an obligatio ex delicto but that nonetheless creates liability. — Also termed obligatio quasi ex maleficio (mal-ə-fish-ee-oh).

obligation, n. 1. A legal or moral duty to do or not do something. 2. A formal, binding agreement or acknowledgment of a liability to pay a certain amount or to do a certain thing for a particular person or set of persons. — Also termed legal obligation. See DUTY; LIABILITY.

"[I]n English-speaking countries an unfortunate habit has arisen of using 'obligation' in a lax manner as co-extensive with duties of every kind." Frederick Pollock, A First Book of Jurisprudence 82 (1896).

"A man cannot be obliged or bound to the entire community: his duties to the political society of which he is a member are matters of public, or criminal law. Nor can the whole community be under an obligation to him: the rights on his part correlative to the duties owed to him would be rights in rem, would be in the nature of property as opposed to obligation. The word obligation has been unfortunately used in this sense by Austin and Bentham as including the general duty, which the law imposes on all, to respect such rights as the law sanctions. Whether the rights are to personal freedom or security, to character, or to those more material objects which we commonly call property, they impose corresponding duties on all to forbear from molesting the right. Such rights are rights in rem. But it is of the essence of obligation that the duties which it imposes are imposed on definite persons, and are themselves definite: the rights which it creates are rights in personam." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 9 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"Obligation in its popular sense is merely a synonym for duty. Its legal sense, derived from Roman law, differs from this in several respects. In the first place, obligations are merely one class of duties, namely, those which are the correlatives of rights in personam. An obligation is the vinculum juris, or bond of legal necessity, which binds together two or more determinate individuals. . . . Secondly, the term obligatio is in law the name, not merely of the duty, but also of the correlative right. It denotes the legal relation or vinculum juris in its entirety, including the right of the one party, no less than the liability of the other. Looked at from the point of view of the person entitled, an obligation is a right; looked at from the point of view of the person bound, it is a duty. . . . An obligation, therefore, may be defined as a proprietary right in personam or a duty which corresponds to such a right." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 460 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

absolute obligation. An obligation requiring strict fulfillment according to the terms of the engagement, without any alternatives to the obligor.

accessory obligation. An obligation that is incidental to another obligation. • For example, a mortgage to secure payment of a bond is an accessory obligation. The primary obligation is to pay the bond itself. Cf. primary obligation (1).

alternative obligation. An obligation that can be satisfied in two different ways, at the choice of the obligor.

bifactoral obligation (bi-fak-tər-əl). An obligation created by two parties.

conditional obligation. An obligation that depends on an uncertain event.

conventional obligation. An obligation that results from actual agreement of the parties; a contractual obligation. Cf. obediential obligation.

correal obligation (kor-ee-əl or kə-ree-əl). Roman law. A joint obligation.

"A correal obligation means a plurality of obligations based on a community of obligation: a joint liability in respect of the whole of the same debt or a joint right in respect of the whole of the same claim." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of current obligation. An obligation that is presently enforceable, but not past due.

inheritable obligation. An obligation that may be enforced by a successor of the creditor or against a successor of the debtor. — Also termed heritable obligation.

joint obligation. 1. An obligation that binds two or more debtors to a single performance for one creditor. 2. An obligation that binds one debtor to a single performance for two or more creditors.

natural obligation. Civil law. A moral duty that is not enforceable by judicial action. • Natural obligations are recognized in civil-law jurisdictions. While they are not enforceable by judicial action, something that has been performed under a natural obligation may not be reclaimed. For example, if an indigent patient in a hospital has no legal obligation to pay for the treatment but does so anyway, that person cannot later reclaim the payments voluntarily made. — Also termed obligatio naturalis.

obediential obligation (ə-bee-dee-en-shəl). An obligation incumbent on the parties as a result of their situation or relationship, such as an obligation of parents to care for their children. Cf. conventional obligation.

primary obligation. 1. An obligation that arises from the essential purpose of the transaction between the parties. Cf. accessory obligation. 2. A fundamental contractual term imposing a requirement on a contracting party from which other obligations may arise.

pure obligation. Scots law. An absolute obligation already due and immediately enforceable.

secondary obligation. A duty, promise, or undertaking that is incident to a primary obligation; esp., a duty to make reparation upon a breach of contract. — Also termed accessory obligation.

several obligation. 1. An obligation that binds two or more debtors to separate performances for one creditor. 2. An obligation that binds one debtor to separate performances for two or more creditors.

simple obligation. An obligation that does not depend on an outside event; an unconditional obligation.

single obligation. An obligation with no penalty attached for nonperformance, as when one party simply promises to pay 20 dollars to another.

solidary obligation (sol-ə-der-ee). Roman & civil law. An obligation that binds each of two or more debtors for the entire performance. • Solidary obligations are analogous to common-law joint and several obligations.

statutory obligation. An obligation — whether to pay money, perform certain acts, or discharge duties — that is created by or arises out of a statute, rather than based on an independent contractual or legal relationship.

unifactoral obligation (yoo-nə-fak-tər-əl). An obligation created by one party.

obligation, mutuality of. See MUTUALITY OF OBLIGATION.

obligational. See OBLIGATORY.

obligatio naturalis. See OBLIGATIO.

obligation bond. See general obligation bond under BOND (3).

obligationes innominati. See INNOMINATE OBLIGATIONS.

Obligation of Contracts Clause. See CONTRACTS CLAUSE.

obligations, law of. See LAW OF OBLIGATIONS.

obligatio praetoria. See obligatio civilis (1) under OBLIGATIO.

obligatio quasi ex contractu. See OBLIGATIO.

obligatio quasi ex delicto. See OBLIGATIO.

obligatio quasi ex maleficio. See obligatio quasi ex delicto under OBLIGATIO.

obligatory (ə-blig-ə-tor-ee), adj. 1. Legally or morally binding <an obligatory promise>. 2. Required; mandatory <attendance is not obligatory>. 3. Creating or recording an obligation . — Also termed (rarely) obligational.

oblige (ə-blj), vb. 1. To bind by legal or moral duty; obligate. 2. To bind by doing a favor or service.

obligee (ob-lə-jeə). 1. One to whom an obligation is owed; a promisee or creditor. 2. Archaic. One who is obliged to do something; OBLIGOR (1).

"Several dictionaries, such as The Random House College Dictionary (rev. ed. 1988) and Webster's New World Dictionary (1979), define obligee in its etymological sense ['obliged'], as if it were synonymous with obligor. Random House, for example, defines obligee as 'a person who is under obligation,' but that meaning ought to be reserved for obligor. An obligee, in modern usage, is one to whom an obligation is owed." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 609 (2d ed. 1995).

obligor (ob-lə-gor or ob-lə-gor). 1. One who has undertaken an obligation; a promisor or debtor. 2. Archaic. One who obliges another to do something; OBLIGEE (1).

oblique (ə-bleek), adj. 1. Not direct in descent; collateral <an oblique heir>. 2. Indirect; circumstantial <oblique evidence>.

oblique evidence. See circumstantial evidence under EVIDENCE.

obliquus (ob-lī-kwəs). [Latin "oblique"] Hist. (Of a line of descent) collateral; indirect. Cf. RECTUS.

obliterate, vb. 1. To wipe out, rub off, or erase (a writing or other markings). 2. To remove from existence; to destroy all traces of. — obliteration, n.

obliterated corner. See CORNER.

oblivion. 1. The act or fact of forgetting or having forgotten <the oblivion of sleep>. 2. The state of being completely forgotten or unknown . 3. An official disregard of an offense; pardon; amnesty <an act of oblivion by Parliament>.

obloquy (ob-lə-kwee). 1. Abusive or defamatory language; CALUMNY. 2. The state or condition of being ill spoken of; disgrace or bad repute.

obnoxious, adj. 1. Offensive; objectionable <obnoxious behavior>. 2. Contrary; opposed . 3. Archaic. Exposed to harm; liable to something undesirable <actions obnoxious to criticism>.

obreption (ob-rep-shən). The obtaining of a gift or dispensation from a sovereign or ecclesiastical authority by fraud. Cf. SUBREPTION.

obrogate (ob-rə-gayt), vb. Civil law. To modify or repeal (a law) in whole or in part by passing a new law. — obrogation, n. Cf. ABROGATE.

obscene, adj. Extremely offensive under contemporary community standards of morality and decency; grossly repugnant to the generally accepted notions of what is appropriate. ● Under the Supreme Court's three-part test, material is legally obscene — and therefore not protected under the First Amendment — if, taken as a whole, the material (1) appeals to the prurient interest in sex, as determined by the average person applying contemporary community standards; (2) portrays sexual conduct, as specifically defined by the applicable state law, in a patently offensive way; and (3) lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607 (1973).

"If there be no abstract definition, ... should not the word 'obscene' be allowed to indicate the present critical point in the compromise between candor and shame at which the community may have arrived here and now?" United States v. Kennerley, 209 F. 119, 121 (S.D.N.Y. 1913) (per Hand, J.).

obscenity, n. 1. The quality or state of being morally abhorrent or socially taboo, esp. as a result of referring to or depicting sexual or excretory functions. 2. Something (such as an expression or act) that has this quality. See CONTEMPORARY COMMUNITY STANDARD. Cf. INDECENCY.

"Obscenity is not deemed to be protected by the First Amendment, and the operative legal tests for obscenity are spongy and leave much to the vagaries of juries asked to evaluate expert testimony on literary merit, offensiveness, and other unmeasurables." Richard A. Posner, Law and Literature: A Misunderstood Relation 329 (1988).

observe, vb. To adhere to or abide by (a law, rule, or custom) .

observer. Int'l law. A representative of a country or international organization who attends meetings of an international body (such as the United Nations) to which the observer's country does not belong. ● Observers do not vote or sign documents, but they are sometimes allowed to participate in discussions.

obses (ob-seez), n. [Latin] A hostage in wartime. Pl. obsides.

obsignare (ob-sig-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To seal up, as with money that has been tendered and refused.

obsignation, n. A formal ratification or confirmation, esp. by an official seal. — obsignatory (ob-sig-nə-tor-ee), adj.

obsolescence (ob-sə-les-ənts). 1. The process or state of falling into disuse or becoming obsolete. 2. A diminution in the value or usefulness of property, esp. as a result of technological advances. • For tax purposes, obsolescence is usu. distinguished from physical deterioration. Cf. DEPRECIATION.

economic obsolescence. Obsolescence that results from external economic factors, such as decreased demand or changed governmental regulations.

functional obsolescence. Obsolescence that results either from inherent deficiencies in the property, such as inadequate equipment or design, or from improvements in the property since its use began.

planned obsolescence. A system or policy of deliberately producing consumer goods that will wear out or become outdated after limited use, thus inducing consumers to buy new items more frequently. — Also termed built-in obsolescence.

obsolescent, adj. Going out of use; becoming obsolete.

obsolete, adj. No longer in general use; out-of-date.

obstante (ob-stan-tee or əb-). [Latin] Withstanding; hindering. See NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

obsta principiis (ob-stə prin-sip-ee-is). [Latin] Withstand beginnings; resist the first approaches or encroachments.

obstinate desertion. See DESERTION.

obstrict (əb-strikt), vb. To coerce. — obstrictive, adj. — obstrictiveness, n.

"The element of coercion or obstrictiveness. The contrast here is between voluntary and obstricted (or coerced) conduct. The coercion need not be actual (objective), but may be merely potential (subjective) by fear of the possible force; as, when the faithful canine, Towser, susceptible to the sight of a feline enemy, is tempted to pursue, but upon his owner's stern voice and a shake of the stick, Towser turns humbly back and crushes his impulse." John Henry Wigmore, Problems of Law 7-8 (1920).

obstriction. Archaic. Obligation; bond.

obstruction of justice. Interference with the orderly administration of law and justice, as by giving false information to or withholding evidence from a police officer or prosecutor, or by harming or intimidating a witness or juror. • Obstruction of justice is a crime in most jurisdictions. — Also termed obstructing justice; obstructing public justice.

obtest (ob- or əb-test), vb. 1. To call to or invoke as a witness. 2. To ask for earnestly; beseech; implore. 3. To protest.

obtulit se (ob-t[y]ə-lit see). [Latin] Offered himself. • In old English practice, these words were entered on the record when one party appeared ("offered himself") in court against an opposing party who did not appear.

ob turpem causam (ob tər-pəm kaw-zəm). [Latin] For an immoral consideration.

obvention (ob- or əb-ven-shən). Eccles. law. An incoming fee or revenue, esp. one that comes occasionally or incidentally.

obviate (ob-vee-ayt), vb. 1. To dispose of or do away with (a thing); to anticipate and prevent from arising <they obviated the growing problem through legislation>. 2. To make unnecessary <the movant obviated the all-night drafting session by getting the opponent to agree to an extension>. — obviation, n. — obviator, n.

obviousness, n. Patents. The quality or state of being easily apparent to a person with ordinary skill in a given art, considering the scope and content of the prior art, so that the person could reasonably believe that, at the time it was conceived, the invention was to be expected. • An invention that is determined to be obvious cannot be patented. — obvious, adj. Cf. NONOBVIOUSNESS.

obviousness double patenting. See DOUBLE PATENTING.

o.c. abbr. 1. OPE CONSILIO. 2. Orphan's court. See probate court under COURT.

occasio (ə-kay-zhee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A tax that a lord imposed on his vassals or tenants for his necessity. 2. Hindrance or trouble; esp., vexatious litigation.

occupancy. 1. The act, state, or condition of holding, possessing, or residing in or on something; actual possession, residence, or tenancy; esp. of a dwelling or land. 2. The act of taking possession of something that has no owner (such as abandoned property) so as to acquire legal ownership. See ADVERSE POSSESSION. 3. The period or term during which one owns, rents, or otherwise occupies property. 4. The state or condition of being occupied. 5. The use to which property is put.

occupant. 1. One who has possessory rights in, or control over, certain property or premises. 2. One who acquires title by occupancy.

general occupant. A person who occupies land in the interim arising after the death of a pur autre vie tenant but before the death of the person who serves as the measuring life for the estate. • A general occupancy can arise when the grant to the pur autre vie tenant does not state who may occupy the land after the death of the first tenant. Because no heir is named, the land can be occupied by the first possessor of the land. — Also termed common occupant. Cf. CESTUI QUE VIE.

special occupant. A pur autre vie tenant's heir who occupies land in the interim between the death of the tenant and the death of the person who serves as the measuring life for the estate. • A special occupancy can arise when the grant to the pur autre vie tenant provides that possession is for the life of the tenant, then to the tenant's heirs.

occupare (ok-yə-pair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To seize or take possession of (property); to enter (land) upon a vacant possession.

occupatible (ok-yə-pə-tl). Hist. Property that has been left by its rightful owner and is now possessed by another.

occupatio (ok-yə-pay-shee-oh). Roman law. A mode of acquisition by which a person obtains absolute title by first possessing a thing that previously belonged to no one, such as a fish in the sea or a wild bird.

occupation. 1. An activity or pursuit in which a person is engaged; esp., a person's usual or principal work or business. 2. The possession, control, or use of real property; OCCUPANCY. 3. The seizure and control of a territory by military force; the condition of territory that has been placed under the authority of a hostile army. 4. The period during which territory seized by military force is held.

occupational-disability insurance. See INSURANCE.

occupational disease. A disease that is contracted as a result of exposure to debilitating conditions or substances in the course of employment. • Employees who suffer from occupational diseases are eligible for workers' compensation. Courts have construed the term to include a variety of ailments, including lung conditions (such as asbestosis or black lung), hearing loss, and carpal tunnel syndrome. — Also termed industrial disease.

"Certain diseases and infirmities which develop gradually and imperceptibly as a result of engaging in particular employments and which are generally known and understood to be usual incidents or hazards thereof, are distinguished from those having a traumatic origin, or otherwise developing suddenly and unexpectedly, by the terms 'occupational,' and 'industrial.'" 82 Am. Jur. 2d Workers' Compensation § 326 (1992).

occupational hazard. A danger or risk that is peculiar to a particular calling or occupation. • Occupational hazards include both accidental injuries and occupational diseases.

Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970. A 1970 federal statute that requires employers to (1) keep the workplace free from recognized hazards that cause or are likely to cause death or serious physical harm to employees, and (2) comply with standards promulgated by the Secretary of Labor. — Abbr. OSHA (oh-shə).

"Although OSHA has been one of the most controversial pieces of protective legislation ever enacted, Congress has not passed any substantive amendments to the Act. There have been, however, some limitations on OSHA enforcement activity attached to appropriations bills. In addition, OSHA has been affected by newer laws such as the Criminal Fine Enforcement Act, the Equal Access to Justice Act, and the Surface Transportation Assistance Act. . . . The Act covers employment in every state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and all American territories, an estimated 5 million workplaces and 75 million employees." Mark A. Rothstein, Occupational Safety and Health Law 7 (1990).

Occupational Safety and Health Administration. A federal agency that establishes and enforces health and safety standards in various industries. • This agency, created in 1970 as part of the Labor Department, routinely conducts inspections of businesses and issues citations for noncompliance with its standards. — Abbr. OSHA.

occupational tax. See occupation tax under TAX.

occupation tax. See TAX.

occupavit (ok-yə-pay-vit). [Law Latin] Hist. A writ to regain possession to land or a tenement from which one was ejected in time of war.

occupying claimant. A person who claims the right under a statute to recover for the cost of improvements done to land that is later found not to belong to the person.

occupying-claimant act. See BETTERMENT ACT.

occurrence. Something that happens or takes place; specif., an accident, event, or continuing condition that results in personal injury or property damage that is neither expected nor intended from the standpoint of an insured party. • This specific sense is the standard definition of the term under most liability policies.

occurrence policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

occurrence rule. Civil procedure. The rule that a limitations period begins to run when the alleged wrongful act or omission occurs, rather than when the plaintiff discovers the injury. • This rule applies, for example, to most breach-of-contract claims. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. Cf. DISCOVERY RULE.

ocean. 1. The continuous body of salt water that covers more than 70% of the earth's surface; the high seas; the open sea. See SEA. 2. Any of the principal geographic divisions of this body. • There are generally considered to be five oceans: Atlantic, Pacific, Indian, Arctic, and Antarctic.

ocean bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

ocean marine insurance. See INSURANCE.

octo tales (ok-toh tay-leez or taylz). [Latin "eight such"] 1. A supply of eight additional jurors for a trial. 2. A writ commanding a sheriff to summon eight more jurors for a trial. See TALES.

octroi (ok-troy or ahk-trwah), n. [French] 1. Hist. A grant or privilege of a charter by a sovereign. 2. A local tax levied on certain goods that are brought into a city (esp. in some European countries). 3. The place where such a tax is collected. 4. The agency for collecting such a tax.

octroy (ok-troy), vb. (Of a sovereign) to grant or concede as a privilege.

o/d. abbr. OVERDRAFT (2).

OD. abbr. 1. Overdose. 2. OVERDRAFT (2). 3. See ordinary seaman under SEAMAN.

odal (oh-dəl), n. Hist. Land not subject to feudal duties or burdens; ALLODIUM. — Also termed odel; odhal; odhall. — odal, adj. <an odal right>.

odd lot. See LOT (3).

odd-lot, adj. Of, relating to, or designating a worker who is so substantially disabled as to be unable to find stable employment in the ordinary labor market, and thus is considered totally disabled and entitled to workers'-compensation benefits under the odd-lot doctrine <an odd-lot worker who could find only sporadic employment>.

odd-lot doctrine. Workers' compensation. The doctrine that permits a finding of total disability for an injured claimant who, though able to work sporadically, cannot obtain regular employment and steady income and is thus considered an "odd lot" in the labor market.

odel. See ODAL.

odhal. See ODAL.

odhall. See ODAL.

odio et atia. See DE ODIO ET ATIA.

odium (oh-dee-əm). 1. The state or fact of being hated. 2. A state of disgrace, usu. resulting from detestable conduct. 3. Hatred or strong aversion accompanied by loathing or contempt. — odious, adj.

oeconomicus (ee-kə-nom-ə-kəs). [Law Latin] Hist. An executor of a will.

oekonomus (ee-kon-ə-məs). [Latin] Civil law. A manager or administrator.

of counsel. See COUNSEL.

of course. 1. Following the ordinary procedure <the writ was issued as a matter of course>. 2. Naturally; obviously; clearly <we'll appeal that ruling, of course>.

off-board, adj. Outside a major exchange; over-the-counter or between private parties <an off-board securities transaction>. — Also termed off-the-board. See OVER-THE-COUNTER.

offender. A person who has committed a crime.

adult offender. 1. A person who has committed a crime after reaching the age of majority. 2. A person who, having committed a crime while a minor, has been convicted after reaching the age of majority. 3. A juvenile who has committed a crime and is tried as an adult rather than as a juvenile.

first offender. A person who authorities believe has committed a crime but who has never before been convicted of a crime. ● Such a person is often treated leniently at sentencing or in plea negotiations.

repeat offender. A person who has been convicted of a crime more than once; RECIDIVIST.

status offender. A youth who engages in conduct that — though not criminal by adult standards — is considered inappropriate enough to bring a charge against the youth in juvenile court; a juvenile who commits a status offense. Cf. youthful offender; JUVENILE DELINQUENT.

youthful offender. 1. A person in late adolescence or early adulthood who has been convicted of a crime. ● A youthful offender is often eligible for special programs not available to older offenders, including community supervision, the successful completion of which may lead to erasing the conviction from the offender's record. 2. JUVENILE DELINQUENT. — Also termed young offender; youth offender. Cf. status offender.

offense (ə-fents). 1. A violation of the law; a crime, often a minor one. See CRIME.

acquisitive offense. An offense characterized by the unlawful appropriation of another's property. ● This is a generic term that refers to a variety of crimes (such as larceny) rather than a particular one.

anticipatory offense. See inchoate offense.

arrestable offense. English law. An offense for which the punishment is fixed by law or for which a statute authorizes imprisonment for five years, or an attempt to commit such an offense. ● This statutory category, created in 1967, abolished the traditional distinction between felonies and misdemeanors. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) arrestable offence.

capital offense. A crime for which the death penalty may be imposed. — Also termed capital crime.

civil offense. See public tort under TORT.

cognate offense. A lesser offense that is related to the greater offense because it shares several of the elements of the greater offense and is of the same class or category. ● For example, shoplifting is a cognate offense of larceny because both crimes require the element of taking property with the intent to deprive the rightful owner of that property. Cf. lesser included offense.

continuing offense. A crime that is committed over a period of time, such as a conspiracy, so that the last act of the crime controls for the commencement of the statute of limitations.

cumulative offense. An offense committed by repeating the same act at different times.

divisible offense. A crime that includes one or more crimes of lesser grade. ● For example, murder is a divisible offense comprising assault, battery, and assault with intent to kill.

extraneous offense. An offense beyond or unrelated to the offense for which a defendant is on trial.

graded offense. A crime that is divided into various degrees of severity with corresponding levels of punishment, such as murder (first-degree and second-degree) or assault (simple and aggravated). See DEGREE (2).

impeachable offense. See IMPEACHABLE OFFENSE.

inchoate offense. A step toward the commission of another crime, the step in itself being serious enough to merit punishment. ● In criminal law, the three inchoate offenses are attempt, conspiracy, and solicitation. The term is sometimes criticized (see quot. below). — Also termed anticipatory offense; inchoate crime; preliminary crime.

"These preliminary crimes have sometimes been erroneously described as 'inchoate' offenses. This is misleading because the word 'inchoate' connotes something which is not yet completed, and it is therefore not accurately used to denote something which is itself complete, even though it be a link in a chain of events leading to some object which is not yet attained. The offence of incitement is fully performed even though the person incited immediately repudiates the suggested deed, a conspiracy is committed although the conspirators have not yet moved to execute their purposed crime, and the performance of a criminal attempt must always have been reached before the end is gained. In all these instances it is the ultimate crime which is inchoate and not the preliminary crime, the position indeed being just the same as in the example imagined above of a man who stole a revolver and committed other crimes in order to effect his purpose of murder. There the murder was inchoate, but the larceny and other crimes (including the attempt) were completed." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 77 (16th ed. 1952).

included offense. See lesser included offense.

index offense. One of eight classes of crimes reported annually by the FBI in the Uniform Crime Report. • The eight classes are murder (and nonnegligent homicide), rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny-theft, arson, and auto theft. — Also termed index crime.

indictable offense. A crime that can be prosecuted only by indictment. • In federal court, such an offense is one punishable by death or by imprisonment for more than one year or at hard labor. Fed. R. Crim. P. 7(a). See INDICTMENT.

joint offense. An offense (such as conspiracy) committed by the participation of two or more persons.

lesser included offense. A crime that is composed of some, but not all, of the elements of a more serious crime and that is necessarily committed in carrying out the greater crime <battery is a lesser included offense of murder>. • For double-jeopardy purposes, a lesser included offense is considered the "same offense" as the greater offense, so that acquittal or conviction of either offense precludes a separate trial for the other. — Also termed included offense; necessarily included offense. Cf. cognate offense.

liquor offense. Any crime involving the inappropriate use or sale of intoxicating liquor. See DRAM-SHOP LIABILITY; DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED.

multiple offense. An offense that violates more than one law but that may require different proof so that an acquittal or conviction under one statute does not exempt the defendant from prosecution under another.

necessarily included offense. See lesser included offense.

negligent offense. A violation of law arising from a defective discharge of duty or from criminal negligence. See criminal negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

object offense. The crime that is the object of the defendant's attempt, solicitation, conspiracy, or complicity. • For example, murder is the object offense in a charge of attempted murder. — Also termed target offense.

offense against property. A crime against another's personal property. • The common-law offenses against property were larceny, embezzlement, cheating, cheating by false pretenses, robbery, receiving stolen goods, malicious mischief, forgery, and uttering forged instruments. Although the term crimes against property, a common term in modern usage, includes crimes against real property, the term offense against property is traditionally restricted to personal property. Cf. CRIMES AGAINST PROPERTY.

offense against public justice and authority. A crime that impairs the administration of justice. • The common-law offenses of this type were obstruction of justice, barratry, maintenance, champerty, embracery, escape, prison breach, rescue, misprision of felony, compounding a crime, subornation of perjury, bribery, and misconduct in office.

offense against the habitation. A crime against another's house — traditionally either arson or burglary.

offense against the person. A crime against the body of another human being. • The common-law offenses against the person were murder, manslaughter, mayhem, rape, assault, battery, robbery, false imprisonment, abortion, seduction, kidnapping, and abduction. Cf. CRIMES AGAINST PERSONS.

offense against the public health, safety, comfort, and morals. A crime traditionally viewed as endangering the whole of society. • The common-law offenses of this type were nuisance, bigamy, adultery, fornication, lewdness, illicit cohabitation, incest, miscegenation, sodomy, bestiality, buggery, abortion, and seduction.

offense against the public peace. A crime that tends to disturb the peace. • The common-law offenses of this type were riot, unlawful assembly, dueling, rout, affray, forcible entry and detainer, and libel on a private person.

petty offense. A minor or insignificant crime.

"[W]e find ... an apparent implication that a 'petty offense' is not a 'crime.' Much could be said for such a position but it is not the law at the present time. In the federal penal code, for example, it is provided that any misdemeanor 'the penalty for which does not exceed imprisonment for a period of six months or a fine of not more than $500, or both, is a petty offense.'" Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 22 (3d ed. 1982) (quoting 18 USCA § 1(3)).

political offense. See POLITICAL OFFENSE.

public offense. An act or omission forbidden by law.

public-welfare offense. A minor offense that involves no moral delinquency, being intended only to secure the effective regulation of conduct in the interest of the community. • An example is driving a car with one brake-light missing. — Also termed regulatory offense; contravention.

regulatory offense. 1. A statutory crime, as opposed to a common-law crime. 2. See public-welfare offense.

same offense. 1. For double-jeopardy purposes, the same criminal act, omission, or transaction for which the person has already stood trial. See DOUBLE JEOPARDY. 2. For sentencing and enhancement-of-punishment purposes, an offense that is quite similar to a previous one.

second offense. An offense committed after conviction for a first offense. • The previous conviction, not the indictment, forms the basis of the charge of a second offense.

separate offense. 1. An offense arising out of the same event as another offense but containing some differences in elements of proof. • A person may be tried, convicted, and sentenced for each separate offense. 2. An offense arising out of a different event entirely from another offense under consideration.

serious offense. An offense not classified as a petty offense and usu. carrying at least a six-month sentence. — Also termed serious crime. Cf. petty offense.

sexual offense. An offense involving unlawful sexual conduct, such as prostitution, indecent exposure, incest, pederasty, and bestiality.

status offense. 1. See status crime under CRIME. 2. A minor's violation of the juvenile code by doing some act that would not be considered illegal if an adult did it, but that indicates that the minor is beyond parental control. • Examples include running away

substantive offense (səb-stən-tiv). A crime that is complete in itself and is not dependent on another crime for one of its elements. — Also termed substantive crime.

summary offense. An offense (such as a petty misdemeanor) that can be prosecuted without an indictment. Cf. indictable offense.

target offense. See object offense.

unnatural offense. See SODOMY.

unrelated offense. A crime that is independent from the charged offense.

2. Civil law. An intentional unlawful act that causes injury or loss to another and that gives rise to a claim for damages. • This sense of offense is essentially the same as the common-law intentional tort.

quasi-offense. Civil law. A negligent unlawful act that causes injury or loss to another and that gives rise to a claim for damages. • This is equivalent to the common-law tort of negligence. — Also termed quasi-delict.

offense against property. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against public justice and authority. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against the habitation. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against the person. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against the public health, safety, comfort, and morals. See OFFENSE (1).

offense against the public peace. See OFFENSE (1).

offensive (ə-fen-siv), adj. 1. Of or for attack <an offensive weapon>. 2. Unpleasant or disagreeable to the senses; obnoxious <an offensive odor>. 3. Causing displeasure, anger, or resentment; esp., repugnant to the prevailing sense of what is decent or moral <patently offensive language and photographs>. See OBSCENE.

offensive and defensive league. Int'l law. A league binding the parties not only to aid one another when attacked but also to support one another when attacking in offensive warfare.

offensive collateral estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

offensive strike. See STRIKE.

offensive-use waiver. An exemption from the attorney-client privilege, whereby a litigant is considered to have waived the privilege by seeking affirmative relief, if the claim relies on privileged information that would be outcome-determinative and that the opposing party has no other way to obtain. Cf. AT-ISSUE WAIVER.

offer, n. 1. The act or an instance of presenting something for acceptance <the prosecutor's offer of immunity>. 2. A promise to do or refrain from doing some specified thing in the future; a display of willingness to enter into a contract on specified terms, made in a way that would lead a reasonable person to understand that an acceptance, having been sought, will result in a binding contract <she accepted the $750 offer on the Victorian armoire>. Cf. ACCEPTANCE.

"[A]n offer is, in effect, a promise by the offeror to do or abstain from doing something, provided that the offeree will accept the offer and pay or promise to pay the 'price' of the offer. The price, of course, need not be a monetary one. In fact, in bilateral contracts, as we explained earlier, the mere promise of payment of the price suffices to conclude the contract, while in a unilateral contract it is the actual payment of the price which is required." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 44 (3d ed. 1981).

irrevocable offer (i-rev-ə-kə-bəl). An offer that includes a promise to keep it open for a specified period, during which the offer cannot be withdrawn without the offeror's becoming subject to liability for breach of contract. • Traditionally, this type of promise must be supported by consideration to be enforceable, but under UCC § 2-205, a merchant's signed, written offer giving assurances that it will be held open — but lacking consideration — is nonetheless irrevocable for the stated period (or, if not stated, for a reasonable time not exceeding three months). — Also termed (in the UCC) firm offer; (specif.) merchant's firm offer.

"It has sometimes been asserted that an irrevocable offer is 'a legal impossibility.' See Langdell, Summary of the Law of Contracts, § 178, also § 4; Wormser, 'The True Conception of Unilateral Contracts,' 26 Yale Law Journal, 137, note; Lee, Title Contracts, in Jenks' Dig. of Eng. Civ. Law, § 195; Ashley, Contracts, § 13. A close analysis shows that there is nothing impossible either in the conception itself or in its application. If we define 'offer' as an act on the part of the offeror . . . , then no offer can ever be revoked, for it is of yesterday — it is indeed factum. But if we mean by 'offer' the legal relation that results from the offeror's act, the power then given to the offeree of creating contractual relations by doing certain voluntary acts on his part, then the offer may be either revocable or irrevocable according to the circumstances. The idea of an irrevocable power is not at all an offer to all the world. An offer, by way of advertisement, of a reward for the rendering of specified services, addressed to the public at large. • As soon as someone renders the services, a contract is made.

public-exchange offer. A takeover attempt in which the bidder corporation offers to exchange some of its securities for a specified number of the target corporation's voting shares. Cf. TENDER OFFER.

standing offer. An offer that is in effect a whole series of offers, each of which is capable of being converted into a contract by a distinct acceptance.

two-tier offer. See TWO-TIER OFFER.

3. A price at which one is ready to buy or sell; BID <she lowered her offer to $200>. 4. ATTEMPT (2) <an offer to commit battery>. — offer, vb. — offeror, n. — offeree, n.

offer in compromise. See OFFER OF COMPROMISE.

offering, n. 1. The act of making an offer; something offered for sale. 2. The sale of an issue of securities. See ISSUE (2).

all-or-none offering. An offering that allows the issuer to terminate the distribution if the entire block of offered securities is not sold.

initial public offering. A company's first public sale of stock; the first offering of an issuer's equity securities to the public through a registration statement. — Abbr. IPO.

negotiated offering. A securities offering in which the terms (including the underwriters' compensation) have been negotiated between the issuer and the underwriters.

primary offering. An offering of newly issued securities.

private offering. An offering made only to a small group of interested buyers. — Also termed private placement.

public offering. An offering made to the general public.

registered offering. A public offering of securities registered with the SEC and with appropriate state securities commissions. — Also termed registered public offering.

rights offering. An issue of stock-purchase rights allowing shareholders to buy newly issued stock at a fixed price, usu. below market value, and in proportion to the number of shares they already own. — Also termed privileged subscription. Cf. PREEMPTIVE RIGHT.

secondary offering. 1. Any offering by an issuer of securities after its initial public offering. 2. An offering of previously issued securities by persons other than the issuer. See secondary distribution (1) under DISTRIBUTION.

special offering. An offering of a large block of stock that, because of its size and the market in the particular issue, is specially handled on the floor of the stock exchange.

undigested offering. A public offering of securities that remain unsold because there is insufficient demand at the offered price.

offering circular. A document, similar to a prospectus, that provides information about a private securities offering. — Also termed offering statement.

offering price. See asking price under PRICE.

offering statement. See OFFERING CIRCULAR.

offer of compromise. An offer by one party to settle a dispute amicably (usu. by paying money) to avoid or end a lawsuit or other legal action. • An offer of compromise is usu. not admissible at trial as evidence of the offering party's liability. — Also termed offer in compromise; offer of settlement.

offer of judgment. A settlement offer by one party to allow a specified judgment to be taken against the party. • In federal procedure (and in many states), if the adverse party rejects the offer, and if a judgment finally obtained by that party is not more favorable than the offer, then that party must pay the costs incurred after the offer was made. Fed. R. Civ. P. 68.

offer of performance. Contracts. One party's reasonable assurance to the other, through words or conduct, of a present ability to fulfill contractual obligations. • When performances are to be exchanged simultaneously, each party is entitled to refuse to proceed with the exchange until the other party makes an appropriate offer of performance.

"The requirement of an offer of performance is to be applied in the light of what is reasonably to be expected by the parties in view of the practical difficulties of absolute simultaneity and is subject to the agreement of the parties, as supplemented or qualified by usage and course of dealing." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 238 cmt. b (1981).

offer of settlement. See OFFER OF COMPROMISE.

offer to all the world. See OFFER.

office practitioner. A lawyer who does not litigate; an attorney whose work is accomplished primarily in the office, without court appearances. — Also termed office lawyer.

officer. 1. A person who holds an office of trust, authority, or command. • In public affairs, the term refers esp. to a person holding public office under a national, state, or local government, and authorized by that government to exercise some specific function. In corporate law, the term refers esp. to a person elected or appointed by the board of directors to manage the daily operations of a corporation, such as a CEO, president, secretary, or treasurer. Cf. DIRECTOR (2).

acting officer. One performing the duties of an office — usu. temporarily — but who has no claim of title to the office.

administrative officer. 1. An officer of the executive department of government, usu. of inferior rank. 2. A ministerial or executive officer, as distinguished from a judicial officer.

corporate officer. An officer of a corporation, such as a CEO, president, secretary, or treasurer.

county officer. An officer whose authority and jurisdiction are confined to the limits of the county served.

de facto officer. See officer de facto.

de jure officer. See officer de jure.

legislative officer. 1. A member of a federal, state, or municipal legislative body. 2. A government official whose duties relate primarily to the enactment of laws, such as a federal or state congressman. • State and federal constitutions generally restrict legislative officers' duties to the enactment of legislation. But legislative officers occasionally exercise judicial functions, such as presenting or hearing cases of impeachment of other government officers.

ministerial officer. An officer who primarily executes mandates issued by the officer's superiors. • One who performs specified legal duties when the appropriate conditions have been met, but who does not exercise personal judgment or discretion in performing those duties.

officer de facto (di fak-toh). 1. An officer who exercises the duties of an office under color of an appointment or election, but who has failed to qualify for office for any one of various reasons, as by being under the required age, having failed to take the oath, having not furnished a required bond, or having taken office under a statute later declared unconstitutional. 2. Corporations. One who is acting under color of right and with apparent authority, but who is not legally a corporate officer. • The corporation is bound by all acts and contracts of an officer de facto in the same way as it is with those of an officer de jure. — Also termed de facto officer.

officer de jure (di juur-ee). 1. An officer who exercises the duties of an office for which the holder has fulfilled all the qualifications. 2. A duly authorized corporate officer. — Also termed de jure officer.

state officer. 1. A person whose authority or jurisdiction extends to the general public or state as a whole, as distinguished from an officer whose authority and jurisdiction is confined to the limits of a particular political subdivision. 2. An officer exercising authority under a state — rather than the federal — government.

subordinate officer. 1. An officer ranking below and performing under the direction of another officer. 2. An independent officer subject only to statutory direction.

United States officer. An officer appointed under the authority of the federal government; specif., an officer appointed in the manner described in Article II, section 2, of the U.S. Constitution.

old-age and survivors' insurance. (usu. cap.) A system of insurance, subsidized by the federal government, that provides retirement benefits for persons who turn 65 and payments to survivors upon the death of the insured. • This was the original name for the retirement and death benefits established by the Social Security Act of 1935. As the scope of these benefits expanded, the name changed to Old Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (OASDI), and then to Old Age, Survivors, Disability, and Health Insurance (OASDHI). Today, the system is most often referred to as social security. — Abbr. OASI. See SOCIAL SECURITY.

Old Natura Brevium (nə-t[y]oor-ə bree-vee-əm). Hist. A treatise on the writs in use during the reign of Edward III. — Abbr. O.N.B. See BREVE.

old style. The system of ordering time according to the Julian method, introduced by Julius Caesar in 46 B.C., by which all years have 366 days except the years divisible by 4, which have 366 days. • This differs from the modern calendar in that it assumes that there are exactly 365.25 days in a year. But there are actually slightly less than 365.25 days in a year, so the old-style calendar adds too many days over time. The Julian calendar was reformed by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582. — Abbr. o.s. — Also termed Julian calendar. Cf. NEW STYLE.

Oléron, laws of (oh-lə-ron or aw-lay-ron). See LAWS OF OLÉRON.

OMVUI. abbr. Operating a motor vehicle under the influence. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

on all fours. (Of a law case) squarely on point (with a precedent) on both facts and law; nearly identical in all material ways <our client's case is on all fours with the Supreme Court's most recent opinion>. Cf. WHITEHORSE CASE.

"The courts, nowadays, are governed largely by precedent, and this imposes on the advocate the necessity of supporting his client's cause by concrete authorities — cases 'on all fours' with, or at least analogous to, the case at bar." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 98 (3d ed. 1914).

O.N.B. abbr. OLD NATURA BREVIUM.

on board bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

on demand. When presented or upon request for payment <this note is payable on demand>. — Also termed on call. See PAYABLE.

one-action rule. In debtor-creditor law, the principle that when a debt is secured by real property, the creditor must foreclose on the collateral before proceeding against the debtor's unsecured assets.

one-court-of-justice doctrine. A principle in some states holding that there is but a single court in the state and that this court is composed of several divisions, such as the supreme court, the courts of appeals, and district courts, probate courts, and any other legislatively created courts. ● Michigan, for example, has embodied this doctrine in its constitution (art. VI, § 1). — Also termed one court of justice.

one-day, one-trial method. A system of summoning and using jurors whereby a person answers a jury summons and participates in the venire for one day only, unless the person is actually impaneled for a trial, in which event the juror's service lasts for the entire length of the trial. ● This system, which is used in several states, reduces the average term of service and expands the number of individual jurors called.

180-day rule. 1. A rule that, in some jurisdictions, allows a person charged with a felony to be released on personal recognizance if the person has been in jail for 180 days without being brought to trial, and if the delay has not resulted from the defendant's own actions. 2. A rule requiring all pending charges against a prison inmate to be brought to trial in 180 days or to be dismissed with prejudice.

one-month liquidation. See LIQUIDATION.

one-person, one-vote rule. Constitutional law. The principle that the Equal Protection Clause requires legislative voting districts to have about the same population. Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 84 S.Ct. 1362 (1964). — Also termed one-man, one-vote rule. See APPORTIONMENT.

onerando pro rata portione. See DE ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONE.

onerare (on-ə-rair-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To burden or load.

onerari non (on-ə-rair-I non). [Law Latin] Hist. Ought not to be charged. • In pleading, these words were used by a defendant to begin a plea in a debt action. Cf. ACTIO NON.

oneratio (on-ə-ray-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. A cargo or lading.

onerous (oh-nər-əs or on-ər-əs), adj. 1. Excessively burdensome or troublesome; causing hardship <onerous discovery requests>. 2. Having or involving obligations that outweigh the advantages <onerous property>. 3. onerous contract. See CONTRACT.

onerous gift. See GIFT.

onerous title. See TITLE (2).

one-satisfaction rule. The principle that a plaintiff is only entitled to one recovery for a particular harm, and that the plaintiff must elect a single remedy if the jury has awarded more than one. • This rule is, for example, one of the foundations of a defendant's right to have a jury verdict reduced by the amount of any settlements the plaintiff has received from other entities for the same injury. — Also termed single-recovery rule.

one-subject rule. The principle that a statute should embrace only one topic, which should be stated in its title.

onomastic (on-ə-mas-tik), adj. 1. Of or relating to names or nomenclature. 2. (Of a signature on an instrument) in a handwriting different from that of the body of the document; esp., designating an autograph signature alone, as distinguished from the main text in a different hand or in typewriting. Cf. HOLOGRAPH; SYMBOLIC. — onomastics (for sense 1), n.

on or about. Approximately; at or around the time specified. • This language is used in pleading to prevent a variance between the pleading and the proof, usu. when there is any uncertainty about the exact date of a pivotal event. When used in nonpleading contexts, the phrase is mere jargon.

on pain of. Followed by punishment inflicted if one does not comply with a command or condition <ordered to cease operations on pain of a $2,000 fine>.

on point. Discussing the precise issue now at hand; apposite <this opinion is not on point as authority in our case>. — Also termed in point. Cf. OFF POINT.

operational, adj. 1. Engaged in operation; able to function. 2. Ministerial.

operation of law. The means by which a right or a liability is created for a party regardless of the party's actual intent <because the court didn't rule on the motion for rehearing within 30 days, it was overruled by operation of law>.

operative, adj. 1. Being in or having force or effect; esp., designating the part of a legal instrument that gives effect to the transaction involved <the operative provision of the contract>. 2. Having principal relevance; essential to the meaning of the whole <may is the operative word of the statute>.

operative fact. See FACT.

operative performance bond. See PERFORMANCE BOND.

operis novi nuntiatio (op-ər-is noh-vī nən-shee-ay-shee-oh). [Latin "declaration of a new work"] Civil law. A protest or warning against a new work undertaken by another to one's detriment.

OPIC. abbr. OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION.

opinio juris sive necessitatis (ə-pin-ee-oh joor-is si-vee nə-ses-i-tay-tis). [Latin "opinion that an act is necessary by rule of law"] Int'l law. The principle that for a country's conduct to rise to the level of international customary law, it must be shown that the conduct stems from the country's belief that international law (rather than moral obligation) mandates the conduct. — Also termed opinio juris.

opinion. 1. A court's written statement explaining its decision in a given case, usu. including the statement of facts, points of law, rationale, and dicta. — Abbr. op. — Also termed judicial opinion. See DECISION. Cf. JUDGMENT; RULING.

advisory opinion. 1. A nonbinding statement by a court of its interpretation of the law on a matter submitted for that purpose. ● Federal courts are constitutionally prohibited from issuing advisory opinions by the case-or-controversy requirement, but other courts, such as the International Court of Justice, render them routinely. See CASE-OR-CONTROVERSY REQUIREMENT. 2. A written statement, issued only by an administrator of an employee benefit plan, that interprets ERISA and applies it to a specific factual situation. ● Only the parties named in the request for the opinion can rely on it, and its reliability depends on the accuracy and completeness of all material facts.

concurring opinion. See CONCURRENCE (3).

dissenting opinion. An opinion by one or more judges who disagree with the decision reached by the majority. — Often shortened to dissent. — Also termed minority opinion.

majority opinion. An opinion joined in by more than half of the judges considering a given case. — Also termed main opinion.

memorandum opinion. A unanimous opinion stating the decision of the court; an opinion that briefly reports the court's conclusion, usu. without elaboration because the decision follows a well-established legal principle or does not relate to any point of law. — Also termed memorandum decision.

minority opinion. See dissenting opinion.

per curiam opinion (pər kyoor-ee-əm). An opinion handed down by an appellate court without identifying the individual judge who wrote the opinion. — Sometimes shortened to per curiam.

plurality opinion. An opinion lacking enough judges' votes to constitute a majority, but receiving more votes than any other opinion.

seriatim opinions (seer-ee-ay-tim). A series of opinions written individually by each judge on the bench, as opposed to a single opinion speaking for the court as a whole.

slip opinion. 1. A court opinion that is published individually after being rendered and then collectively in advance sheets before being released for publication in a reporter. ● Unlike an unpublished opinion, a slip opinion can usu. be cited as authority. Cf. ADVANCE SHEETS. 2. Archaic. A preliminary draft of a court opinion not yet ready for publication. — Also termed slip decision. Cf. unpublished opinion.

unpublished opinion. An opinion that the court has specifically designated as not for publication. • Court rules usu. prohibit citing an unpublished opinion as authority. Such an opinion is considered binding on only the parties to the particular case in which it is issued. Cf. slip opinion.

2. A formal expression of judgment or advice based on an expert's special knowledge; esp., a document, usu. prepared at a client's request, containing a lawyer's understanding of the law that applies to a particular case. — Also termed opinion letter.

"The essence of a lawyer's job is to obtain the facts and the law with due diligence and then to give advice. But, strangely, no controlling definition has evolved for what is an 'opinion.' The lack of a definition is not crucial for some purposes. On the other hand, a definition is vital in other areas; for example, to determine within a law firm when peer review is necessary . . ." 8 Arnold S. Jacobs, Opinion Letters in Securities Matters § 3, at Intro-12 (1998).

adverse opinion. An outside auditor's opinion that a company's financial statements do not conform with generally accepted accounting principles or do not accurately reflect the company's financial position.

audit opinion. A certified public accountant's opinion regarding the audited financial statements of an entity.

coverage opinion. A lawyer's opinion on whether a particular event is covered by a given insurance policy.

legal opinion. A written document in which an attorney provides his or her understanding of the law as applied to assumed facts. • The attorney may be a private attorney or attorney representing the state or other governmental entity. Private attorneys frequently render legal opinions on the ownership of real estate or minerals, insurance coverage, and corporate transactions. A party may be entitled to rely on a legal opinion, depending on factors such as the identity of the parties to whom the opinion was addressed and the law governing these opinions. See coverage opinion.

title opinion. A lawyer's or title company's opinion on the state of title for a given piece of real property, usu. describing whether the title is clear and marketable or whether it is encumbered. See TITLE SEARCH.

unqualified opinion. An audit opinion given by an accountant who is satisfied that the financial statements reviewed were fairly presented and consistent with the previous year, and that the audit was performed in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards.

3. A witness's thoughts, beliefs, or inferences about facts in dispute, as opposed to personal knowledge of the facts themselves. — Also termed (in sense 3) conclusion. See opinion evidence under EVIDENCE.

opinion evidence. See EVIDENCE.

opinion letter. See OPINION (2).

opinion rule. Evidence. The principle that a witness should testify to facts, not opinions, and that a witness's opinions are often excludable from evidence. • Traditionally, this principle is regarded as one of the important exclusionary rules in evidence law. It is based on the idea that a witness who has observed data should provide the most factual evidence possible, leaving the jury to draw inferences and conclusions from the evidence. Under this system, the witness's opinion is unnecessary.

"This rule [the opinion rule] is an historical blunder, for the early cases excluding 'opinion' meant a belief by a person who had personally seen and known nothing, and was therefore not qualified to speak; whereas the modern rule applies it to witnesses who have had personal observation as a basis for their inference. Moreover, it is a senseless rule, for not once in a thousand times can the observed data be exactly and fully reproduced in words. Still further, no harm could be done by letting the witness offer his inference, except perhaps the waste of a moment's time, whereas the application of the rule wastes vastly more time. And finally the rule is so pedantically applied by most courts that it excludes the most valuable testimony, such as would be used in all affairs of life outside a court room." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 156 (1935).

"The [opinion] rule in its stark simplicity might be interpreted as excluding all value judgments, that is to say all statements not being factual propositions susceptible of some sort of empirical proof or disproof. The rule, if it is to be given any purely logical meaning at all, must be interpreted as excluding at least all inferences drawn from perceived data. Even if value judgments are saved by construing the rule as having application only to factual propositions, the rule would seem to purport to exclude all such propositions in the formulation of which inference by the witness has played some part." Zelman Cowen, Essays on the Law of Evidence 162 (1956).

opinion testimony. See TESTIMONY.

oppignorate (ə-pig-nə-rayt), vb. Archaic. To pawn or pledge. — Also spelled oppignorate. Cf. PIGNORATE.

opponent. 1. An adverse party in a contested matter. 2. A party that is challenging the admissibility of evidence — opposed to proponent.

opportunity. The fact that the alleged doer of an act was present at the time and place of the act.

opportunity cost. See COST (1).

opportunity to be heard. The chance to appear in a court or other tribunal and present evidence and argument before being deprived of a right by governmental authority. ● The opportunity to be heard is a fundamental requirement of procedural due process. It ordinarily includes the right to receive fair notice of the hearing, to secure the assistance of counsel, and to cross-examine adverse witnesses. See procedural due process under DUE PROCESS.

opposer. 1. Intellectual property. One who formally seeks to prevent the grant of a patent or the registration of a trademark. 2. Hist. APPOSER.

oppression. 1. The act or an instance of unjustly exercising authority or power. 2. An offense consisting in the abuse of discretionary authority by a public officer who has an improper motive, as a result of which a person is injured. ● This offense does not include extortion, which is typically a more serious crime. 3. Contracts. Coercion to enter into an illegal contract. ● Oppression is grounds for the recovery of money paid or property transferred under an illegal contract. See DURESS; UNCONSCIONABILITY. 4. Corporations. Unfair treatment of minority shareholders (esp. in a close corporation) by the directors or those in control of the corporation. See FREEZE-OUT. — Also termed (in sense 4) shareholder oppression. — oppress, vb. — oppressive, adj.

oppressor. A public official who unlawfully or wrongfully exercises power under color of authority in a way that causes a person harm; one who commits oppression.

OPRA. abbr. OPTIONS PRICE REPORTING AUTHORITY.

optimal-use value. See VALUE.

opt in, vb. To choose to participate in (something) <when the choice of settling or not settling came, the Joneses opted in, hoping to avoid a lengthy trial>.

option, n. 1. The right or power to choose; something that may be chosen <the lawyer was running out of options for settlement>. 2. A contract made to keep an offer open for a specified period, so that the offeror cannot revoke the offer during that period <the option is valid because it is supported by consideration>. — Also termed option contract. See irrevocable offer under OFFER. 3. The right conveyed by such a contract <Phil declined to exercise his first option to buy the house>. 4. The right (but not the obligation) to buy or sell a given quantity of securities, commodities, or other assets at a fixed price within a specified time <trading stock options is a speculative business>. Cf. FUTURES CONTRACT.

call option. An option to buy something (esp. securities) at a fixed price even if the market rises; the right to require another to sell. — Often shortened to call.

cash-value option. The right of a life-insurance policyholder to surrender the policy for its cash value at a specified time or at any time.

commodity option. An option to buy or sell a commodity.

futures option. An option to buy or sell a futures contract.

naked option. A call option that grants another the right to buy stock even though the option-giver does not own the stock to back up that commitment. — Also termed uncovered option.

nonforfeiture option. A policyholder's option, upon the lapse of premium payments, to continue an insurance policy for a shorter period than the original term, to surrender the policy for its cash value, to continue the policy for a reduced amount, or to take some other action rather than forfeit the policy.

option to purchase real property. A contract by which an owner of realty enters an agreement with another allowing the latter to buy the property at a specified price within a specified time, or within a reasonable time in the future, but without imposing an obligation to purchase upon the person to whom it is given.

put option. An option to sell something (esp. securities) at a fixed price even if the market declines; the right to require another to buy. — Often shortened to put.

seller's option. A special stock-exchange transaction that gives the seller the right to deliver the security within a specified period, usu. 5 to 60 days.

settlement option. Insurance. A life-insurance-policy clause providing choices in the method of paying benefits to a beneficiary, as by lump-sum payment or periodic installments.

stock option. See STOCK OPTION.

uncovered option. See naked option.

option, vb. To grant or take an option on (something) <Ward optioned his first screenplay to the studio for $50,000>.

option agreement. Corporations. A share-transfer restriction that commits the shareholder to sell, but not the corporation or other shareholders to buy, the shareholder's shares at a fixed price when a specified event occurs. Cf. BUY-SELL AGREEMENT (2); OPTION (2).

optional bond. See BOND (3).

optional completeness, rule of. See RULE OF OPTIONAL COMPLETENESS.

optional-completeness doctrine. See RULE OF OPTIONAL COMPLETENESS.

optional writ. See WRIT.

option contract. See OPTION (2).

optionee (op-shə-nee). One who receives an option from another. — Also termed option-holder.

optionor (op-shə-nər or op-shə-nor). One who grants an option to another. — Also spelled optioner. — Also termed option-giver.

option premium. See PREMIUM (4).

option spread. Securities. The difference between the option price and the fair market value of the underlying stock when the option is exercised. See SPREAD.

Options Price Reporting Authority. A national market-system plan approved by the SEC for collecting and disseminating last-sale and quotation information on options traded on a five-member exchange consisting of the American Stock Exchange, the Chicago Board of Options Exchange, the New York Stock Exchange, the Pacific Stock Exchange, and the Philadelphia Stock Exchange. — Abbr. OPRA.

option tender bond. See put bond under BOND (3).

option to purchase real property. See OPTION.

opt out, vb. To choose not to participate in (something) <with so many plaintiffs opting out of the class, the defendant braced itself for multiplicitous lawsuits>.

opus (oh-pəs), n. [Latin “work”] A product of work or labor; esp., an artistic, literary, or musical work or composition. Pl. opuses, opera (ah-pə-rə or oh-pə-rə).

opus novum (oh-pəs noh-vəm). [Latin “new work”] Civil law. A structure newly built on land. See NOVI OPERIS NUNTIATIO.

O.R. abbr. Own recognizance; on one's own recognizance <the prosecutor agreed not to object to releasing the suspect O.R.>. See RECOGNIZANCE.

oraculum (ə-rak-yə-ləm). [Latin “a prophetic declaration”] Roman law. A response or sentence delivered by the emperor.

oral, adj. Spoken or uttered; not expressed in writing. Cf. PAROL.

oral argument. An advocate's spoken presentation before a court (esp. an appellate court) supporting or opposing the legal relief at issue.

“[T]he oral argument is the one chance for you (not for some chance-assigned mere judge) to answer any questions you can stir any member of the court into being bothered about and into bothering with, and the one chance to sew up each such question into a remembered point in favor. . . . In any but freak situations, oral argument is a must.” Karl N. Llewellyn, The Common Law Tradition: Deciding Appeals 240 (1960).

oral confession. See CONFESSION.

oral contract. See parol contract (1) under CONTRACT.

oral deposition. See DEPOSITION.

oral trust. See TRUST.

oral will. See WILL.

oratio consultoria (or-ay-shee-oh kon-səl-tor-ee-ə). See LIBELLUS CONSULTORIA.

orator (or-ə-tər). 1. Roman law. An advocate or pleader. 2. Hist. A plaintiff or petitioner in an action in chancery.

oratrix (or-ə-triks). Hist. A female orator.

orbation (or-bay-shən). Hist. Bereavement or deprivation of one's parents or children.

ordeal. Hist. A primitive form of trial in which an accused person was subjected to a dangerous or painful physical test, the result being considered a divine revelation of the person's guilt or innocence. ● The participants believed that God would reveal a person's culpability by protecting an innocent person from the torture. The ordeal was commonly used in Europe as late as the 13th century, and was sporadically used even later. — Also termed trial by ordeal; judicium Dei ("judgment of God"); vulgaris purgatio. Cf. CANFARA.

"Ordeals involved an appeal to God to reveal the truth in human disputes, and they required priestly participation to achieve this rapport with the Deity. Several forms of ordeal were recognised by the early Christian Church, but in England they usually took the form of fire or water. In the former, a piece of iron was put into a fire and then in the party's hand; the hand was bound, and inspected a few days later: if the burn had festered, God was taken to have decided against the party. The ordeal of cold water required the party to be trussed and lowered into a pond; if he sank, the water was deemed to have 'received him' with God's blessing, and so he was quickly fished out. . . . In 1215, the Lateran Council . . . took the decisive step of forbidding clergy to participate any more in ordeals. This led in England to the introduction of the criminal trial jury." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 5-6 (3d ed. 1990).

ordeal by fire. An ordeal in which the accused person was forced to hold a piece of hot metal or to walk barefoot across a hot surface, the judgment of guilt or innocence depending on how quickly the person's hands or feet healed. — Also termed fire ordeal.

ordeal by water. 1. An ordeal in which guilt or innocence depended on whether the accused person floated or sank after being submerged in cold water. ● Those who sank were declared innocent, while those who floated were adjudged guilty because floating revealed the water's (and therefore God's) rejection of the accused. This type of ordeal was used esp. in witchcraft trials. — Also termed ordeal by cold water. 2. An ordeal in which guilt or innocence was determined by how quickly the accused person's arm healed after being placed in boiling water. — Also termed (in sense 2) ordeal by hot water; (in both senses) water ordeal.

ordelf (or-delf). See OREDELFF.

ordels (or-deelz). Hist. English law. The right to conduct trials by ordeal within a given jurisdiction.

order, n. 1. A command, direction, or instruction. 2. A written direction or command delivered by a court or judge. — Also termed court order; judicial order.

"An order is the mandate or determination of the court upon some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in an action, not disposing of the merits, but adjudicating a preliminary point or directing some step in the proceedings." 1 Henry Campbell Black, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 1, at 5 (2d ed. 1902).

administrative order. 1. An order issued by a government agency after an adjudicatory hearing. 2. An agency regulation that interprets or applies a statutory provision.

decretal order (di-kree-təl). A court of chancery's interlocutory order that is issued on motion of a party and has the effect of a final decree. See decree nisi under DECREE.

ex parte order (eks pahr-tee). An order made by the court upon the application of one party to an action without notice to the other.

final order. An order that is dispositive of the entire case. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

interim order. 1. A temporary court decree that takes effect until something else occurs. 2. See interlocutory order.

interlocutory order (in-tər-lok-yə-tor-ee). An order that relates to some intermediate matter in the case; any order other than a final order. ● Most interlocutory orders are not appealable until the case is fully resolved. But by rule or statute, most jurisdictions allow some types of interlocutory orders (such as preliminary injunctions and class-certification orders) to be immediately appealed. — Also termed interlocutory decision; interim order; intermediate order. See appealable decision under DECISION; COLLATERAL-ORDER DOCTRINE.

minute order. 1. An order recorded in the minutes of the court rather than directly on a case docket. ● Although practice varies, traditionally when a trial judge is sitting officially, with or without a court reporter, a clerk or deputy clerk keeps minutes. When the judge makes an oral order, the only record of that order may be in the minutes. It is therefore referred to as a minute order. — Also termed minute entry. 2. A court order not directly relating to a case, such as an order adopting a local rule of court. ● In this sense, the court is not a single judge acting in an adjudicatory capacity, but a chief judge, or a group of two or more judges, acting for a court in an administrative or some other nonadjudicatory capacity.

preclusion order. An order barring a litigant from presenting or opposing certain claims or defenses for failing to comply with a discovery order.

show-cause order. An order directing a party to appear in court and explain why the party took (or failed to take) some action or why the court should or should not grant some relief. — Also termed order to show cause.

standing order. A forward-looking order that applies to all cases pending before a court. • Some individual judges issue a standing order on a subject when there is no local rule bearing on it, often because a rule would not be acceptable to other judges on the court. Standing orders are frequently criticized because they undermine uniformity of procedural rules, esp. at the local level.

turnover order. An order by which the court commands a judgment debtor to surrender certain property to a judgment creditor, or to the sheriff or constable on the creditor's behalf. • Such an order is usu. directed to property that is difficult to acquire by the ordinary judgment-collection process, such as share certificates and accounts receivable.

3. The words in a draft (such as a check) directing one person to pay money to or deliver something to a designated person. • An order should appear to be the demand of a right as opposed to the request for a favor. See order paper under PAPER. 4. Securities. A customer's instructions to a broker about how and when to buy or sell securities.

all-or-none order. An order to buy a security to be executed either in its entirety or not at all.

alternative order. An order to buy a security by either of two alternatives (e.g., buy a stock at a limited price or buy on a stop order). — Also termed either-or order.

buy order. An investor's instruction to purchase stock.

day order. An order to buy or sell on one particular day only. Cf. open order.

discretionary order. An order to buy or sell at any price acceptable to the broker.

either-or order. See alternative order.

fill-or-kill order. An order that must be executed as soon as it reaches the trading floor. • If the order is not filled immediately, it is canceled.

limit order. An order to buy or sell at a specified price, regardless of market price. Cf. no-limit order.

market order. An order to buy or sell at the best price immediately available on the market. — Also termed order at the market.

matched order. An order to buy and sell the same security, at about the same time, in about the same quantity, and at about the same price.

no-limit order. An order to buy or sell securities with no limits on price. Cf. limit order.

open order. An order that remains in effect until filled by the broker or canceled by the customer. Cf. day order.

order at the market. See market order.

percentage order. An order to buy or sell a stated amount of a certain stock after a fixed number of shares of the stock have traded.

scale order. An order to buy or sell a security at varying price ranges.

sell order. An investor's instruction to sell stock.

split order. An order directing a broker to sell some stock at one price and some stock at another price.

stop order. An order to buy or sell when the security's price reaches a specified level (the stop price) on the market. • By fixing the price beforehand, the investor is cushioned against stock fluctuations. — Also termed stop-loss order.

time order. An order that becomes a market or limited-price order at a specified time.

order absolute. See decree absolute under DECREE.

order assigning residue. A probate court's order naming the persons entitled to receive parts of an estate and allotting that share to each.

order at the market. See market order under ORDER (4).

order bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

order document. See order paper under PAPER.

ordered, adjudged, and decreed. Judicially mandated; required by court order.

"The usual style of a decree is 'it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed'; and of an order or rule, 'it is ordered,' etc."
1 Henry Campbell Black, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 2, at 6-7 (2d ed. 1902).

order instrument. See order paper under PAPER.

orderly officer. See officer of the day under OFFICER (2).

order nisi. See decree nisi under DECREE.

Order of the Coif (koyf). 1. Formerly, the order of serjeants-at-law, the highest order of counsel at the English Bar. • The last serjeant was appointed to the Order in 1875. 2. An honorary legal fraternity composed of a select few law students with the highest grades. See COIF.

order paper. See PAPER.

order to show cause. See show-cause order under ORDER (2).

ordinance (or-də-nənts). An authoritative law or decree; esp., a municipal regulation. • Municipal governments can pass ordinances on matters that the state government allows to be regulated at the local level. — Also termed bylaw; municipal ordinance.

"An ordinance . . . may be purely administrative in nature, establishing offices, prescribing duties, or setting salaries; it may have to do with the routine or procedure of the governing body. Or it may be a governmental exercise of the power to control the conduct of the public — establishing rules which must be complied with, or prohibiting certain actions or conduct. In any event it is the determination of the sovereign power of the state as delegated to the municipality. It is a legislative enactment, within its sphere, as much as an act of the state legislature." 1 Judith O'Gallagher, Municipal Ordinances § 1A.01, at 3 (2d ed. 1998).

ordinandi lex (or-də-nan-dī leks). [Latin] The law of procedure, as distinguished from substantive law.

ordinarily prudent person. See REASONABLE PERSON.

ordinary, adj. 1. Occurring in the regular course of events; normal; usual. Cf. EXTRAORDINARY. 2. (Of a judge) having jurisdiction by right of office rather than by delegation. 3. (Of jurisdiction) original or immediate, as opposed to delegated.

ordinary, n. 1. Eccles. law. A high-ranking official who has immediate jurisdiction over a specified territory, such as an archbishop over a province or a bishop over a diocese. 2. Civil law. A judge having jurisdiction by right of office rather than by delegation. 3. A probate judge. • The term is used in this sense only in some U.S. states.

original issue. See ISSUE (2).

original-issue discount. The amount by which a bond is sold below its par value when it is first issued. — Abbr. OID.

originality. Copyright. 1. The quality or state of being the product of independent creation and having a minimum degree of creativity. • Originality is a requirement for copyright protection. But this is a lesser standard than that of novelty in patent law: to be original, a work does not have to be novel or unique. Cf. NOVELTY. 2. The degree to which a product claimed for copyright is the result of an author's independent efforts. Cf. CREATIVITY.

“‘Original’ in reference to a copyrighted work means that the particular work ‘owes its origin’ to the ‘author.’ No large measure of novelty is necessary.” Alfred Bell & Co. v. Catalda Fine Arts, Inc., 191 F.2d 99, 102 (2d Cir. 1951) (Frank, J.).

original jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

original market. See primary market under MARKET.

original-package doctrine. Constitutional law. The principle that imported goods are exempt from state taxation as long as they are unsold and remain in the original packaging. • The Supreme Court abolished this doctrine in 1976, holding that states can tax imported goods if the tax is nondiscriminatory. See IMPORT-EXPORT CLAUSE.

outstanding warrant. See WARRANT (1).

over, adj. (Of a property interest) intended to take effect after the failure or termination of a prior estate; preceded by some other possessory interest  .

overage, n. 1. An excess or surplus, esp. of goods or merchandise. 2. A percentage of retail sales paid to a store's landlord in addition to fixed rent.

overbreadth doctrine. Constitutional law. The doctrine holding that if a statute is so broadly written that it deters free expression, then it can be struck down on its face because of its chilling effect — even if it also prohibits acts that may legitimately be forbidden. • The Supreme Court has used this doctrine to invalidate a number of laws, including those that would disallow peaceful picketing or require loyalty oaths. Cf. VAGUENESS DOCTRINE.

overdraft. 1. A withdrawal of money from a bank in excess of the balance on deposit. 2. The amount of money so withdrawn. — Abbr. OD; o/d. 3. A line of credit extended by a bank to a customer (esp. an established or institutional customer) who might overdraw on an account.

overdraw, vb. To draw on (an account) in excess of the balance on deposit; to make an overdraft.

overhead, n. Business expenses (such as rent, utilities, or support-staff salaries) that cannot be allocated to a particular product or service; fixed or ordinary operating costs. — Also termed administrative expense; office expense.

overheated economy. See ECONOMY.

overinclusive, adj. (Of legislation) extending beyond the class of persons intended to be protected or regulated; burdening more persons than necessary to cure the problem <an overinclusive classification>.

overinsurance. 1. Insurance (esp. from the purchase of multiple policies) that exceeds the value of the thing insured. 2. Excessive or needlessly duplicative insurance.

overissue, n. An issue of securities beyond the authorized amount of capital or credit.

overlapping jurisdiction. See concurrent jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

overplus. See SURPLUS.

overreaching, n. 1. The act or an instance of taking unfair commercial advantage of another, esp. by fraudulent means. 2. The act or an instance of defeating one's own purpose by going too far. — overreach, vb.

overridden veto. See VETO.

override (oh-vər-rid), vb. To prevail over; to nullify or set aside <Congress mustered enough votes to override the President's veto>.

override (oh-vər-rid), n. 1. A commission paid to a manager on a sale made by a subordinate. 2. A commission paid to a real-estate broker who listed a property when, within a reasonable amount of time after the expiration of the listing, the owner sells that property directly to a buyer with whom the broker had negotiated during the term of the listing. 3. ROYALTY (2).

overriding royalty. See ROYALTY (2).

overrule, vb. 1. To rule against; to reject <the judge overruled all of the defendant's objections>. 2. (Of a court) to overturn or set aside (a precedent) by expressly deciding that it should no longer be controlling law <in Brown

v. Board of Education, the Supreme Court overruled Plessy v. Ferguson>. Cf. VACATE (1).

"If a decision is not a recent one, and especially if it seems to be very poor, it should not be relied upon without ascertaining whether it may not have been expressly or impliedly overruled by some subsequent one; that is, whether the court may not have laid down a contrary principle in a later case." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 94 (1922).

"Overruling is an act of superior jurisdiction. A precedent overruled is definitely and formally deprived of all authority. It becomes null and void, like a repealed statute, and a new principle is authoritatively substituted for the old." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 189 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

overseas bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

Overseas Private Investment Corporation.

A corporation created by the federal government to finance and insure overseas investments by U.S. companies. • Chartered in 1969, the corporation is a for-profit entity that is not federally funded, but its insurance commitments are backed by the full faith and credit of the federal government. — Abbr. OPIC.

oversubscription. A situation in which there are more subscribers to a new issue of securities than there are securities available for purchase.

overt, adj. Open and observable; not concealed or secret <the conspirators' overt acts>.

overt act. Criminal law. 1. An act that indicates an intent to kill or seriously harm another person and thus gives that person a justification to use self-defense. 2. An outward act, however innocent in itself, done in furtherance of a conspiracy, treason, or criminal attempt. • An overt act is usu. a required element of these crimes. 3. See ACTUS REUS. — Also termed positive act.

over-the-counter, adj. 1. Not listed or traded on an organized securities exchange; traded between buyers and sellers who negotiate directly <over-the-counter stocks>. 2. (Of drugs) sold legally without a doctor's prescription <over-the-counter cough medicine>. — Abbr. OTC.

over-the-counter market. The market for securities that are not traded on an organized exchange. • Over-the-counter (OTC) trading usu. occurs through telephone or computer negotiations between buyers and sellers. Many of the more actively traded OTC stocks are listed on NASDAQ. — Abbr. OTC market.

overtime. 1. The hours worked by an employee in excess of a standard day or week. • Under the Fair Labor Standards Act, employers must pay extra wages (usu. 1½ times the regular hourly rate) to certain employees (usu. nonsalaried ones) for each hour worked in excess of 40 hours per week. 2. The extra wages paid for excess hours worked.

overtly, vb. (Of a trial lawyer) to try a lawsuit by expending excessive time, effort, and other resources to explore minutiae, esp. to present more evidence than the fact-trier can assimilate, the result often being that the adversary gains arguing points by disputing the minutiae.

overturn, vb. To overrule or reverse <the court overturned a long-established precedent>.

owelty (oh-əl-tee). 1. Equality as achieved by a compensatory sum of money given after an exchange of parcels of land having different values or after an unequal partition of real property. 2. The sum of money so paid.

OWI. abbr. Operating while intoxicated. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

owing, adj. That is yet to be paid; owed; due .

owling. Hist. The smuggling of wool or sheep out of England. • The term usu. refers to nighttime smuggling.

own, vb. To have or possess as property; to have legal title to.

owned-property exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

owner. One who has the right to possess, use, and convey something; a proprietor. See OWNERSHIP.

adjoining owner. A person who owns land abutting another's; ABUTTER.

beneficial owner. 1. One recognized in equity as the owner of something because use and title belong to that person, even though legal title may belong to someone else; esp., one for whom property is held in trust. — Also termed equitable owner. 2. A corporate shareholder who has the power to buy or sell the shares, but who is not registered on the corporation's books as the owner.

equitable owner. See beneficial owner (1).

general owner. One who has the primary or residuary title to property; one who has the ultimate ownership of property. Cf. special owner.

legal owner. One recognized by law as the owner of something; esp., one who holds legal title to property for the benefit of another. See TRUSTEE.

limited owner. A tenant for life; the owner of a life estate. See life estate under ESTATE.

naked owner. Civil law. A person whose property is burdened by a usufruct. See USUFRUCT.

owner of record. See STOCKHOLDER OF RECORD.

owner pro hac vice (proh hahk vee-chay). See demise charter under CHARTER (4). record owner. 1. A property owner in whose name the title appears in the public records. 2. STOCKHOLDER OF RECORD.

sole and unconditional owner. Insurance. The owner who has full equitable title to, and exclusive interest in, the insured property.

special owner. One (such as a bailee) with a qualified interest in property. Cf. general owner.

owners' association. The basic governing entity for a condominium or planned unit developments. • It is usu. an unincorporated association or a nonprofit corporation.

owners' equity. The aggregate of the owners' financial interests in the assets of a business entity; the capital contributed by the owners plus any retained earnings. — Also termed (in a corporation) shareholders' equity; stockholders' equity.

"Owner's equity is the residual claim of the owners of the business on its assets after recognition of the liabilities of the business. Owner's equity represents the amounts contributed by the owners to the business, plus the accumulated income of the business since its formation, less any amounts that have been distributed to the owners." Charles H. Meyer, Accounting and Finance for Lawyers in a Nutshell 4 (1995).

ownership. The collection of rights allowing one to use and enjoy property, including the right to convey it to others. • Ownership implies the right to possess a thing, regardless of any actual or constructive control. Ownership rights are general, permanent, and inheritable. Cf. POSSESSION; TITLE (1).

"Possession is the de facto exercise of a claim; ownership is the de jure recognition of one. A thing is owned by me when my claim to it is maintained by the will of the state as expressed in the law; it is possessed by me, when my claim to it is maintained by my own self-assertive will.

Ownership is the guarantee of the law; possession is the guarantee of the facts. It is well to have both forms if possible; and indeed they normally co-exist." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 311 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"Ownership does not always mean absolute dominion. The more an owner, for his advantage, opens up his property for use by the public in general, the more do his rights become circumscribed by the statutory and constitutional powers of those who use it." Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U.S. 501, 506, 66 S.Ct. 276, 278 (1946) (Black, J.).

bare ownership. See trust ownership.

beneficial ownership. A beneficiary's interest in trust property.

bonitarian ownership (bahn-ə-tair-ee-in). Roman law. A type of equitable ownership recognized by a praetor when the property was conveyed by an informal transfer, or by a formal transfer by one not the true owner.

contingent ownership. Ownership in which title is imperfect but is capable of becoming perfect on the fulfillment of some condition; conditional ownership.

corporeal ownership. The actual ownership of land or chattels.

incorporeal ownership. The ownership of rights in land or chattels.

joint ownership. Ownership shared by two or more persons whose interests, at death, pass to the survivor or survivors by virtue of the right of survivorship.

ownership in common. Ownership shared by two or more persons whose interests, at death, pass to the dead owner's heirs or successors.

qualified ownership. Ownership that is shared, restricted to a particular use, or limited in the extent of its enjoyment.

trust ownership. A trustee's interest in trust property. — Also termed bare ownership.

vested ownership. Ownership in which title is perfect; absolute ownership.

owner's policy. Real estate. A title-insurance policy covering the owner's title as well as the mortgagee's interest. Cf. MORTGAGEE POLICY.

own-product exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

own-work exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

oxfiled (oks-fild). Hist. A restitution made by a county or hundred for a wrong done by someone within that region.

oxgang (oks-gang). Hist. An amount of land equal to what an ox plows in one year, usu. 12 to 15 acres. • An oxgang, equaling one-eighth of a carucate, was used to assess land for tax purposes. — Also termed oxgate; bovata terrae. Cf. CARUCATE.

oyer (oy-ər or oh-yər). [fr. Old French oir “to hear”] Hist. 1. A criminal trial held under a commission of oyer and terminer. See COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER. 2. The reading in open court of a document (esp. a deed) that is demanded by one party and read by the other. 3. Common-law pleading. A prayer to the court by a party opposing a profert, asking to have the instrument on which the opponent relies read aloud. • Oyer can be demanded only when a profert has been properly made, but it is disallowed for a private writing under seal.

“A party having a right to demand oyer is yet not obliged, in all cases, to exercise that right; nor is he obliged, in all cases, after demanding it, to notice it in the pleading he afterwards files or delivers. Sometimes, however, he is obliged to do both, namely, where he has occasion to found his answer upon any matter contained in the deed of which profert is made, and not set forth by his adversary. In these cases the only admissible method of making such matter appear to the court is to demand oyer, and, from the copy given, set forth the whole deed verbatim in his pleading.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 289, at 483 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

oyer, demand of. See DEMAND OF OYER.

oyer and terminer (oy-ər an[d] tər-mə-nər). [Law French oyer et terminer “to hear and determine”] 1. See COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER. 2. COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER (2).

oyez (oh-yes or oh-yez or oh-yay). [Law French] Hear ye; the utterance oyez, oyez, oyez is usu. used in court by the public crier to call the courtroom to order when a session begins or when a proclamation is about to be made.

pais (pay or pays). See IN PAIS.

Palace Court. Hist. A court having jurisdiction over all personal actions arising within 12 miles of Whitehall. • This court was created by James I in response to complaints about the inconvenience of using the itinerant Court of the Marshalsea; its jurisdiction was similar, but the court remained in Whitehall. It was abolished along with the Court of the Marshalsea in 1849. See COURT OF THE MARSHALSEA.

“The court of the marshalsea, and the palace court at Westminster, though two distinct courts, are frequently confounded together. The former was originally holden before the steward and marshal of the king’s house, and was instituted to administer justice between the king’s domestic servants, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and thereby the king lose their service. . . . But this court being ambulatory, and obliged to follow the king in all his progresses, so that by the removal of the household, actions were frequently discontinued, and doubts having arisen as to the extent of its jurisdiction . . . [the king] erected a new court of record, called the curia palatii, or palace-court, to be held before the steward of the household and knight marshal, and the steward of the court, or his deputy; with jurisdiction to hold plea of all manner of personal actions whatsoever, which shall arise between any parties within twelve miles of his majesty’s palace at Whitehall.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 76 (1768).

palimony (pal-ə-moh-nee). A court-ordered allowance paid by one member to the other of a couple that, though unmarried, formerly cohabited. Cf. ALIMONY.

pallio cooperire (pal-ee-oh koh-op-ə-ri-ree). [Latin “to cover with a pallium”] Hist. A marriage of persons who have already had a child together. • The pallium was a veil or cover over the bride, which was extended to cover the bastard child. Its removal at the wedding was deemed to legitimate the child.

Palmer’s Act. An English statute, enacted in 1856, giving a person accused of a crime falling outside the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court the right to have the case tried in that court. St. 19 & 20 Vict., ch. 16. — Also termed Central Criminal Court Act. See CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

palming off. See PASSING OFF.

Palsgraf rule (pawlz-graf). Torts. The principle that negligent conduct resulting in injury will lead to liability only if the actor could have reasonably foreseen that the conduct would injure the victim. • In Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R., 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99 (1928), two railroad attendants negligently dislodged a package of fireworks from a man they were helping board a train. The package exploded on impact and knocked over some scales that fell on Mrs. Palsgraf. The New York Court of Appeals, in a 4-3 majority opinion written by Chief Justice Benjamin Cardozo, held that the attendants could not have foreseen the possibility of injury to Palsgraf and therefore did not breach any duty to her. In the dissenting opinion, Justice William S. Andrews asserted that the duty to exercise care is owed to all, and thus a negligent act will subject the actor to liability to all persons proximately harmed by it, whether foreseeable or not. Both opinions have been widely cited to support the two views expressed in them.

pandect (pan-dekt). 1. A complete legal code; esp. of a nation or a system of law, together with commentary. 2. (cap. & pl.) The 50 books constituting Justinian's Digest (one of the four works making up the Corpus Juris Civilis), first published in A.D. 533. — Also termed (in sense 2) Digest. — Also spelled (in reference to German law) pandekt. Pl. pandects, pandectae. See CORPUS JURIS CIVILIS.

pander, n. One who engages in pandering. — Also termed panderer. See PIMP.

pandering (pan-dar-ing), n. 1. The act or offense of recruiting a prostitute, finding a place of business for a prostitute, or soliciting customers for a prostitute. — Also termed promoting prostitution. 2. The act or offense of selling or distributing textual or visual material (such as magazines or videotapes) openly advertised to appeal to the recipient's sexual interest. • Although the concept of pandering was invoked by the U.S. Supreme Court in Ginzburg v. United States, 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942 (1966), it has seldom been discussed by the Court since then. — pander, vb.

P & L. abbr. Profit and loss. See INCOME STATEMENT.

chattel paper (chat-əl). See CHATTEL PAPER.

commercial paper. 1. An instrument, other than cash, for the payment of money. • Commercial paper — typically existing in the form of a draft (such as a check) or a note (such as a certificate of deposit) — is governed by Article 3 of the UCC. But even though the UCC uses the term commercial paper when referring to negotiable instruments of a particular kind (drafts, checks, certificates of deposit, and notes as defined by Article 3), the term long predates the UCC as a business and legal term in common use. Before the UCC, it was generally viewed as synonymous with negotiable paper or bills and notes. It was sometimes applied even to nonnegotiable instruments. — Also termed mercantile paper. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

“Commercial paper” is rather a popular than a technical expression, often used, however, both in statutes and in decisions of courts, to designate those simple forms of contract long recognized in the world's commerce and governed by the law merchant.” 1 Joseph F. Randolph, A Treatise on the Law of Commercial Paper § 1, at 1 (2d ed. 1899).

“Defined most broadly, commercial paper refers to any writing embodying rights that are customarily conveyed by transferring the writing. A large subset of commercial paper consists of such writings that are negotiable, which means that the law enables a transferee to acquire the embodied rights free of claims and defenses against the transferor.” Richard E. Speidel, Negotiable Instruments and Check Collection in a Nutshell 1 (4th ed. 1993).

2. Such instruments collectively. — Also termed bills and notes. 3. Loosely, a short-term unsecured promissory note, usu. issued and sold by one company to meet another company's immediate cash needs.

Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act

parent. 1. The lawful father or mother of someone. ● In ordinary usage, the term denotes more than responsibility for conception and birth. The term commonly includes (1) either the natural father or the natural mother of a child, (2) the adoptive father or adoptive mother of a child, (3) a child’s putative blood parent who has expressly acknowledged paternity, and (4) an individual or agency whose status as guardian has been established by judicial decree. In law, parental status based on any criterion may be terminated by judicial decree.

adoptive parent. A parent by virtue of legal adoption. See ADOPTION (1).

foster parent. An adult who, though without blood ties or legal ties, cares for and rears a child, esp. an orphaned or neglected child that might otherwise be deprived of nurture.

● Foster parents sometimes give care and support temporarily until a child is legally adopted by others.

2. See parent corporation under CORPORATION.

parentage (pair-ən-tij or par-). The state or condition of being a parent; kindred in the direct ascending line.

parentage action. See PATERNITY SUIT.

parental consortium. See CONSORTIUM.

parental immunity. See IMMUNITY (2).

parental kidnapping. See KIDNAPPING.

Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act. A federal law, enacted in 1980, providing a penalty for child-kidnapping by a noncustodial parent and requiring a state to recognize and enforce a child-custody order rendered by a court of another state. 28 USCA § 1738A; 42 USCA parental-liability law. A statute obliging parents to pay damages for torts (esp. intentional ones) committed by their minor children. • All states have these laws, but most limit the parents' liability to about $3,000 per tort.

parental-preference doctrine. The principle that a fit parent, who is willing and able to care for a minor child, should be granted custody instead of someone who is not the child's parent. — Also termed parental-presumption rule.

parental-responsibility statute. A law imposing criminal sanctions (such as fines) on parents whose minor children commit crimes as a result of the parents' failure to exercise sufficient control over them. — Also termed control-your-kid law.

parental rights. A parent's rights concerning his or her child, including the right to educate and discipline the child and the right to control the child's earnings and property.

parent-child immunity. See parental immunity under IMMUNITY (2).

parent company. See parent corporation under CORPORATION.

parent corporation. See CORPORATION.

parentela (par-ən-tee-lə), n. pl. [Law Latin] Persons who can trace descent from a common ancestor.

parentelic method (par-ən-tee-lik or -tel-ik). A scheme of computation used to determine the paternal or maternal collaterals entitled to inherit.

parenticide (pə-ren-tə-sid). 1. The act of murdering one's parent. 2. A person who murders his or her parent.

pares curiae (par-eez kyoor-ee-ee). [Law Latin "peers of the court"] Hist. A lord's tenants who sat in judgment of a fellow tenant.

pares regni (par-eez reg-nī). [Law Latin] Hist. Peers of the realm.

Pareto optimality (pə-ray-toh or pə-ret-oh), n. An economic situation in which no person can be made better off without making someone else worse off. • The term derives from the work of Vilfredo Pareto (1848–1923), an Italian economist and sociologist. — Pareto-optimal, adj.

Pareto superiority, n. An economic situation in which an exchange can be made that benefits someone and injures no one. • When such an exchange can no longer be made, the situation becomes one of Pareto optimality. — Pareto-superior, adj.

pari causa, in. See IN PARI CAUSA.

pari delicto, in. See IN PARI DELICTO.

paries communis (pair-ee-eez kə-myoo-nis). [Latin] A common wall; a party wall.

pari materia, in. See IN PARI MATERIA.

parimutuel betting (par-i-myoo-choo-əl). A system of gambling in which bets placed on a race are pooled and then paid (less a management fee and taxes) to those holding winning tickets.

pari passu (pahr-ee pahs-oo or pair-I, pair-ee, or par-ee pas-[y]oo). [Latin "by equal step"] Proportionally; at an equal pace; without preference <creditors of a bankrupt estate will receive distributions pari passu>.

pari ratione (pair-I ray-shee-oh-nee or rash-ee-oh-nee). [Latin] Roman & civil law. For the like reason; by like mode of reasoning.

parish. 1. In Louisiana, a governmental subdivision analogous to a county in other U.S. states. 2. Eccles. law. A division of a town or district, subject to the ministry of one pastor.

district parish. Eccles. law. A geographical division of an English parish made by the Crown's commissioners for the building of new churches for worship, celebration of marriages, christenings, and burials.

parish court. See county court under COURT.

par item. See ITEM.

parium judicium (pair-ee-əm joo-dish-ee-əm). [Law Latin] The judgment of peers; trial by a jury of one's peers or equals.

Parker doctrine. See STATE-ACTION DOCTRINE.

parking. 1. The sale of securities subject to an agreement that the seller will buy them back at a later time for a similar price. • Parking is illegal if done to circumvent securities regulations or tax laws. It is often a method of evading the net-capital requirements of the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD), which requires a brokerage firm to discount the value of any stock it holds in its own account when it files its monthly report about its net-capital condition. To reach technical compliance with the NASD's net-capital requirements, a brokerage firm "sells" stock from its own account to a customer at market price, thereby avoiding the discount for reporting purposes. Having filed its report, it can then "buy" the shares back from the customer, usu. at the same price at which it "sold" the stock, plus interest. 2. The placement of assets in a safe, short-term investment while other investment opportunities are being considered. — Also termed (in sense 1) stock-parking.

parking-lot rule. The principle that workers' compensation insurance covers the injuries suffered by an employee on the employer's premises when the employee is arriving at or leaving work. — Also termed premises rule.

parliament. The supreme legislative body of some nations; esp. (cap.), in the United Kingdom, the national legislature consisting of the monarch, the House of Lords, and the House of Commons.

parliamentary diplomacy. See DIPLOMACY.

parliamentary divorce. See DIVORCE.

parliamentary intent. See LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

parliamentary law. The body of rules and precedents governing the proceedings of legislative and deliberative assemblies.

parliamentary privilege. See PRIVILEGE (1); legislative privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

parliamentum insanum. See MAD PARLIAMENT.

par of exchange. The equality of a given sum of one country's currency and the like sum of money of a foreign country into which it is to be exchanged.

parol (pə-rohl or par-əl), adj. 1. Oral; unwritten <parol evidence>. 2. Not under seal <parol contract>.

parol (pə-rohl or par-əl), n. 1. An oral statement or declaration. 2. Hist. The oral pleadings in a case.

"Anciently pleadings were conducted in court orally, and the whole pleadings were called the parol; but for centuries the pleadings in civil actions have been required to be in writing." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 178-79 (2d ed. 1899).

parol agreement. See parol contract (1) under CONTRACT.

parol arrest. See ARREST.

parol contract. See CONTRACT.

parol demurrer. See DEMURRER.

parole (pə-rohl), n. The release of a prisoner from imprisonment before the full sentence has been served. • Although not available under some sentences, parole is usu. granted for good behavior on the condition that the parolee regularly report to a supervising officer for a specified period. — parole, vb. Cf. PARDON; PROBATION (1).

"The essence of parole is release from prison, before completion of the sentence, on condition that the prisoner abide by certain rules during the balance of the sentence. Parole is not freedom." 59 Am. Jur. 2d Pardon and Parole § 6 (1987).

juvenile parole. The conditional release of a juvenile offender from confinement. — Also termed aftercare.

parole board. A governmental body that decides whether prisoners may be released from prison before completing their sentences. — Also termed board of parole; parole commission.

parolee (pə-roh-lee). A prisoner who is released on parole.

parole revocation. The administrative act of returning a parolee to prison because of the parolee's failure to abide by the conditions of parole (as by committing a new offense).

parol evidence. See EVIDENCE.

parol-evidence rule. Contracts. The principle that a writing intended by the parties to be a final embodiment of their agreement cannot be modified by evidence that adds to, varies, or contradicts the writing. • This rule usu. operates to prevent a party from introducing extrinsic evidence of negotiations that occurred before or while the agreement was being reduced to its final written form. See INTEGRATION (2); MERGER (2). Cf. FOUR-CORNERS RULE.

"The basic principle is often called the 'parol evidence rule', and according to this rule evidence is not admissible to contradict or qualify a complete written contract. The rule is usually stated in the form of a rule of evidence, but it is probably best regarded as a rule of substantive law. The question is not really whether evidence can be admitted which might vary the written document, but whether, if the evidence is admitted, it will have the legal effect of varying the document." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 161-62 (3d ed. 1981).

"The parol evidence rule assumes that the formal writing reflects the parties' minds at a point of maximum resolution and, hence, that duties and restrictions that do not appear in the written document, even though apparently accepted at an earlier stage, were not intended by the parties to survive. In addition, and quite apart from the survival of matters discarded in the course of negotiations, there is the obvious danger of outright fraud." Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 82-83 (1990).

parol lease. See LEASE.

parols de ley (pə-rohlz də lay). [Law French] Words of law; technical words.

parol trust. See oral trust under TRUST.

Parratt-Hudson doctrine. The principle that a state actor's random, unauthorized deprivation of someone's property does not amount to a due-process violation if the state provides an adequate postdeprivation remedy. Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527, 101 S.Ct. 1908 (1984); Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 104 S.Ct. 3194 (1984).

parricide (par-ə-sid), n. 1. The act of killing a close relative, esp. a parent. 2. One who kills such a relative. — parricidal, adj. Cf. PATRICIDE.

pars (pahrz). [Latin] Hist. A party to an action.

pars enitia (pahrz i-ni-shee-ə). [Law Latin "oldest's part"] Hist. An oldest child's portion of lands divided by lot.

parson. See RECTOR (1).

pars rea (pahrz ree-ə). A party defendant.

parte inaudita (pah-tee in-aw-dy-tə or in-aw-di-tə). [Latin "one side being unheard"] Of or relating to action taken ex parte.

parte non comparente (pah-tee non kom-pə-ren-tee). [Latin] The party not having appeared.

partes finis nihil habuerunt (pah-teez fi-nis ni-hil hab-yoo-eer-ənt). [Law Latin "the parties to the fine had nothing"] Hist. A plea to set aside a conveyance of land on grounds that the transferor did not have a sufficient ownership interest in the property to alienate it.

"Yet where a stranger . . . officiously interferes in an estate which in nowise belongs to him, his fine is of no effect; and may at any time be set aside . . . by pleading that 'partes finis nihil habuerunt.'" 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 356-57 (1765).

partial account. A preliminary accounting of an executor's or administrator's dealings with an estate.

partial assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

partial average. See particular average under AVERAGE.

partial breach. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

partial defense. See DEFENSE (1).

partial dependent. See DEPENDENT.

partial disability. See DISABILITY (1).

partial eviction. See EVICTION.

partial evidence. See EVIDENCE.

partial failure of consideration. See FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

partial guardian. See GUARDIAN.

partial integration. See INTEGRATION (2).

partial limitation. Insurance. A policy provision in which the insurer agrees to pay a total loss if the actual loss exceeds a specified amount.

partial liquidation. See LIQUIDATION.

partial loss. See LOSS.

partially disclosed principal. See PRINCIPAL (1).

partially integrated contract. See INTEGRATED CONTRACT.

partial pardon. See PARDON.

partial release. See RELEASE.

partial summary judgment. See SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

partial verdict. See VERDICT.

partial zoning. See ZONING.

partiarus (pahr-shee-air-ee-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A legatee entitled to a portion of an inheritance along with the appointed heirs. 2. A tenant who is bound to hand over a portion of the crop in lieu of rent.

particeps (pahr-tə-seps), n. [Latin] 1. A participant. 2. A part owner.

particeps criminis (pahr-tə-seps krim-ə-nis), n. [Latin "partner in crime"] 1. An accomplice or accessory. Pl. participes criminis (pahr-tis-ə-pee-z). See ACCESSORY.

"Even in felonies but little practical importance now attaches to the distinctions between the first three of these four classes of 'accomplices' — a term which the law applies to all the participes criminis, whatever their degree of 'complicity' in the offence, though popular use generally limits it to those who take only a minor part. For the maximum punishment prescribed for any given crime is the same in the case of all three classes." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 90 (16th ed. 1952).

2. The doctrine that one participant in an unlawful activity cannot recover in a civil action against another participant in the activity.

• This is a civil doctrine only, having nothing to do with criminal responsibility.

participating bond. See BOND (3).

participating insurance. See INSURANCE.

participating policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

participating preferred stock. See STOCK.

participation, n. 1. The act of taking part in something, such as a partnership. 2. The right of employees to receive part of a business's profits; profit-sharing. — participate, vb.

particulars of sale. A document that describes the various features of a thing (such as a house) that is for sale.

particular successor. See SUCCESSOR.

particular tenant. See TENANT.

particular title. See TITLE (2).

partitio (pahr-tish-ee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. Division; partition.

partitio legata (pahr-tish-ee-oh læ-gay-tə). [Latin] A directive from a testator to an heir to divide the inheritance and deliver a designated portion to a named legatee; a testamentary partition.

partition, n. 1. Something that separates one part of a space from another. 2. The act of dividing; esp., the division of real property held jointly or in common by two or more persons into individually owned interests. — partition, vb. — partible, adj.

definitive partition. A partition that is irrevocable.

provisional partition. A temporary partition, often made before the remainder of the property can be divided.

partner. 1. One who shares or takes part with another, esp. in a venture with shared benefits and shared risks; an associate or colleague <partners in crime>. 2. One of two or more persons who jointly own and carry on a business for profit <the firm and its partners were sued for malpractice>. See PARTNERSHIP. 3. One of two persons who are married or who live together; a spouse or companion <my partner in life>.

dormant partner. See silent partner.

general partner. A partner who ordinarily takes part in the daily operations of the business, shares in the profits and losses, and is personally responsible for the partnership's debts and liabilities. — Also termed full partner.

junior partner. A partner whose participation is limited with respect to both profits and management.

limited partner. A partner who receives profits from the business but does not take part in managing the business and is not liable for any amount greater than his or her original investment. — Also termed special partner; (in civil law) partner in commendam. See limited partnership under PARTNERSHIP.

liquidating partner. The partner appointed to settle the accounts, collect the assets, adjust the claims, and pay the debts of a dissolving or insolvent firm.

name partner. A partner whose name appears in the name of the partnership <Mr. Tibbs is a name partner in the accounting firm of Gibbs & Tibbs>. — Also termed named partner; title member.

nominal partner. A person who is held out as a partner in a firm or business but who has no actual interest in the partnership. — Also termed ostensible partner; partner by estoppel.

partner in commendam (in kə-men-dəm). See limited partner.

quasi-partner. A person who joins others in an enterprise that appears to be, but is not, a partnership. ● A joint adventurer, for example, is a quasi-partner.

secret partner. A partner whose connection with the firm is concealed from the public. — Also termed sleeping partner.

senior partner. A high-ranking partner, as in a law firm.

silent partner. A partner who shares in the profits but who has no active voice in management of the firm and whose existence is often not publicly disclosed. — Also termed dormant partner.

sleeping partner. See secret partner.

special partner. See limited partner.

surviving partner. The partner who, upon the partnership's dissolution because of another partner's death, serves as a trustee to administer the firm's remaining affairs.

partner in commendam. See limited partner under PARTNER.

partnership. A voluntary association of two or more persons who jointly own and carry on a business for profit. ● Under the Uniform Partnership Act, a partnership is presumed to exist if the persons agree to share proportionally the business's profits or losses. Cf. JOINT VENTURE; STRATEGIC ALLIANCE.

collapsible partnership. Tax. A partnership formed by partners who intend to dissolve it before they realize any income. ● Any partner's gain resulting from unrealized receivables or inventory that has increased substantially in value will be treated by the IRS as ordinary income rather than as capital gain. IRC (26 USCA) § 751. Cf. collapsible corporation under CORPORATION.

commercial partnership. See trading partnership.

family partnership. See FAMILY PARTNERSHIP.

general partnership. A partnership in which all partners participate fully in running the business and share equally in profits and losses (though the partners' monetary contributions may vary).

implied partnership. See partnership by estoppel.

limited-liability partnership. A partnership in which a partner is not liable for a negligent act committed by another partner or by an employee not under the partner's supervision. ● All states have enacted statutes that allow a business (typically a law firm or accounting firm) to register as this type of partnership. — Abbr. L.L.P.

limited partnership. A partnership composed of one or more persons who control the business and are personally liable for the partnership's debts (called general partners), and one or more persons who contribute capital and share profits but who cannot manage the business and are liable only for the amount of their contribution (called limited partners). ● The chief purpose of a limited partnership is to enable persons to invest their money in a business without taking an active part in managing the business, and without risking more than the sum originally contributed, while securing the cooperation of others who have ability and integrity but insufficient money. — Abbr. L.P. — Also termed special partnership; (in civil law) partnership in commendam.

"Unknown at common law, the limited partnership was derived from the commenda or societe en commandite of continental Europe to permit a person to invest and share in the profits of a partnership business and yet limit one's liability to one's investment. It was first recognized in the United States by a New York statute of 1822. It is now recognized by statute in all American jurisdictions." Henry G. Henn & John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations § 28, at 86 (3d ed. 1983).

"[T]he two primary characteristics of a limited partnership [are] liability of limited partners only for their agreed contributions, and a hierarchical structure with management in one or more general partners and very little power or authority in the limited partners. Thus, limited partners are typically — although not necessarily — passive contributors of capital. . . . In this respect they resemble shareholders in a corporation, but, depending on the details of the organizational documents, they may have greater or lesser rights." 3 Alan R. Bromberg & Larry E. Ribstein, Bromberg and Ribstein on Partnerships § 12.01, at 12:5–12:6 (1999).

master limited partnership. A limited partnership whose interests or shares are publicly traded. See publicly traded partnership.

nontrading partnership. A partnership that does not buy and sell but instead is a partnership of employment or occupation. — Also termed noncommercial partnership.

particular partnership. A partnership in which the members unite to share the benefits of a single transaction or enterprise.

partnership at will. A partnership that any partner may dissolve at any time without thereby incurring liability. Cf. partnership for a term.

partnership by estoppel. A partnership implied by law when one or more persons represent themselves as partners to a third party who relies on that representation. ● A person who is deemed a partner by estoppel becomes liable for any credit extended to the partnership by the third party. — Also termed implied partnership.

partnership for a term. A partnership that exists for a specified duration or until a specified event occurs. ● Such a partnership can be prematurely dissolved by any partner, but that partner may be held liable for breach of the partnership agreement. Cf. partnership at will.

partnership in commendam. See limited partnership.

publicly traded partnership. A partnership whose interests are traded either over-the-counter or on a securities exchange. ● These partnerships are treated as corporations for income-tax purposes. — Abbr. PTP.

special partnership. 1. See limited partnership. 2. A partnership formed only for a single venture.

subpartnership. An arrangement between a firm's partner and a nonpartner to share the partner's profits and losses in the firm's business, but without forming a legal partnership between the partner and the nonpartner.

tiered partnership. An ownership arrangement consisting of one parent partnership that is a partner in one or more subsidiary partnerships.

trading partnership. A partnership whose usual business involves buying and selling. — Also termed commercial partnership.

umbrella limited partnership. A limited partnership used by a real-estate investment trust to acquire investment properties in exchange for shares in the partnership. See umbrella partnership real-estate investment trust under REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST.

universal partnership. A partnership formed by persons who agree to contribute all their individually owned property — and to devote all their skill, labor, and services — to the partnership.

partnership agreement. A contract defining the partners' rights and duties toward one another — not the partners' relationship with third parties. — Also termed articles of partnership.

partnership association. A business organization that combines the features of a limited partnership and a close corporation. ● Partnership associations are statutorily recognized in only a few states. — Also termed statutory partnership association; limited partnership association.

partnership at will. See PARTNERSHIP.

partnership by estoppel. See PARTNERSHIP.

partnership certificate. A document that evidences the participation of the partners in a partnership. • The certificate is often furnished to financial institutions when the partnership borrows money.

partnership distribution. See DISTRIBUTION.

partnership for a term. See PARTNERSHIP.

partnership in commendam. See limited partnership under PARTNERSHIP.

partnership insurance. See INSURANCE.

partner's lien. A partner's right to have the partnership property applied in payment of the partnership's debts and to have whatever is due the firm from fellow partners deducted from what would otherwise be payable to them for their shares.

part payment. A buyer's delivery of money or other thing of value to the seller, and its acceptance by the seller, when the money or the value of the thing does not equal the full sum owed.

part performance. 1. The accomplishment of some but not all of one's contractual obligations. 2. A party's execution, in reliance on an opposing party's oral promise, of enough of an oral contract's requirements that a court may hold the statute of frauds not to apply. 3. PART-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

part-performance doctrine. The equitable principle by which a failure to comply with the statute of frauds is overcome by a party's execution, in reliance on an opposing party's oral promise, of an oral contract's requirements. — Sometimes shortened to part performance.

“Part performance is not an accurate designation of such acts as taking possession and making improvements when the contract does not provide for such acts, but such acts regularly bring the doctrine into play. The doctrine is contrary to the words of the Statute of Frauds, but it was established by English courts of equity soon after the enactment of the Statute. Payment of purchase-money, without more, was once thought sufficient to justify specific enforcement, but a contrary view now prevails, since in such cases restitution is an adequate remedy. English decisions treated a transfer of possession of the land as sufficient, if unequivocally referable to the oral agreement, apparently on the ground that the promise to transfer had been executed by a common-law conveyance. Such decisions are not generally followed in the United States. Enforcement has instead been justified on the ground that repudiation after ‘part performance’ amounts to a ‘virtual fraud.’ A more accurate statement is that courts with equitable powers are vested by tradition with what in substance is a dispensing power based on the promisee's reliance, a discretion to be exercised with caution in the light of all the circumstances.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 129 cmt. a (1981).

part-sovereign state. See SOVEREIGN STATE.

party. 1. One who takes part in a transaction .

“Note, that if an Indenture be made between two as Parties thereto in the Beginning, and in the Deed one of them grants or lets a Thing to another who is not named in the Beginning, he is not Party to the Deed, nor shall take any Thing thereby.” John Rastell, Les Termes de la Ley 471 (26th ed. 1721).

“A person who takes part in a legal transaction or proceeding is said to be a party to it. Thus, if an agreement, conveyance, lease, or the like, is entered into between A. and B., they are said to be parties to it; and the same expression is often, though not very correctly, applied to the persons named as the grantors or releasors in a deed-poll.” 2 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 930 (1883).

party of the first part. Archaic. The party named first in a contract; esp., the owner or seller.

party of the second part. Archaic. The party named second in a contract; esp., the buyer.

2. One by or against whom a lawsuit is brought .

adverse party. A party whose interests are opposed to the interests of another party to the action.

aggrieved party. A party whose personal, pecuniary, or property rights have been adversely affected by another person's actions or by a court's decree or judgment. — Also termed party aggrieved; person aggrieved.

formal party. See nominal party.

indispensable party. A party who, having interests that would inevitably be affected by a court's judgment, must be included in the case. • If such a party is not included, the case must be dismissed. Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(b). Cf. necessary party.

innocent party. A party who did not consciously or intentionally participate in an event or transaction.

interested party. A party who has a recognizable stake (and therefore standing) in a matter.

necessary party. A party who, being closely connected to a lawsuit, should be included in the case if feasible, but whose absence will not require dismissal of the proceedings. See compulsory joinder under JOINDER. Cf. indispensable party.

nominal party. A party who, having some interest in the subject matter of a lawsuit, will not be affected by any judgment but is nonetheless joined in the lawsuit to avoid procedural defects. • An example is the disinterested stakeholder in a garnishment action. — Also termed formal party. Cf. real party in interest.

party aggrieved. See aggrieved party.

party in interest. See real party in interest.

party opponent. An adversary in a legal proceeding. — Sometimes written party-opponent.

party to be charged. A defendant in an action to enforce a contract falling within the statute of frauds.

prevailing party. A party in whose favor a judgment is rendered, regardless of the amount of damages awarded <in certain cases, the court will award attorney's fees to the prevailing party>. — Also termed successful party.

proper party. A party who may be joined in a case for reasons of judicial economy but whose presence is not essential to the proceeding. See permissive joinder under JOINDER.

real party in interest. A person entitled under the substantive law to enforce the right sued upon and who generally, but not necessarily, benefits from the action's final outcome. — Also termed party in interest; (archaically) interesse. Cf. nominal party.

"[T]he 'real party in interest' is the party who, by the substantive law, possesses the right sought to be enforced, and not necessarily the person who will ultimately benefit from the recovery. . . . The concept of real party in interest should not be confused with the concept of standing. The standing question arises in the realm of public law, when governmental action is attacked on the ground that it violates private rights or some constitutional principle. . . . Unfortunately, . . . confusion between standing on the one hand and real party in interest or capacity on the other has been increasing." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 70, at 490 & n.2 (5th ed. 1994).

parum cavisse videtur (par-əm kə-vis-ee vī-dee-tər). [Latin] Hist. He seems to have taken too little care; he seems to have been incautious. • This expression was used by a judge when pronouncing a death sentence.

par value. The value of an instrument or security as shown on its face; esp., the arbitrary dollar amount assigned to a stock share by the corporate charter, or the principal of a bond. — Often shortened to par. — Also termed face value; nominal value; stated value.

"At one time par value had considerable importance because it was widely viewed as the amount for which the shares would be issued: shares with a par value of one hundred dollars could be subscribed for at one hundred dollars per share with confidence that all other identical shares would also be issued for $100. This practice, however, long ago fell into disuse. Today, par value serves only a minor function and is in no way an indication of the price at which the shares are issued, with this one exception: The one basic rule about setting the price for shares of common stock with a par value is that the price must be equal to or greater than par value." Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 109 (3d ed. 1991).

par-value stock. See STOCK.

pass, vb. 1. To pronounce or render an opinion, ruling, sentence, or judgment <the court refused to pass on the constitutional issue, deciding the case instead on procedural grounds>. 2. To transfer or be transferred <the woman's will passes title to the house to her nephew, much to her husband's surprise> <title passed when the nephew received the deed>. 3. To enact (a legislative bill or resolution) <Congress has debated whether to pass a balanced-budget amendment to the Constitution>. 4. To approve or certify (something) as meeting specified requirements <the mechanic informed her that the car had passed inspection>. 5. To publish, transfer, or circulate (a thing, often a forgery) <he was found guilty of passing counterfeit bills>. 6. To forgo or proceed beyond <the case was passed on the court's trial docket because the judge was presiding over a criminal trial>.

passage, n. 1. The passing of a legislative measure into law. 2. A right, privilege, or permission to pass over land or water; an easement to travel through another's property.

Pate hearing. A proceeding in which the trial court seeks to determine whether a criminal defendant is competent to stand trial. Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 86 S.Ct. 836 (1966); 18 USCA § 4241. — Also termed competency hearing; incompetency hearing.

patent (pay-tənt), adj. Obvious; apparent . Cf. LATENT.

patent (pat-ənt), n. 1. The governmental grant of a right, privilege, or authority. 2. The official document so granting. — Also termed public grant. See LETTERS PATENT.

call patent. A land patent in which the corners have been staked but the boundary lines have not been run out at the time of the grant.

land patent. An instrument by which the government conveys a grant of public land to a private person.

lapse patent. A land patent substituting for an earlier patent to the same land that lapsed because the previous patentee did not claim it.

3. The exclusive right to make, use, or sell an invention for a specified period (usu. 17 years), granted by the federal government to the inventor if the device or process is novel, useful, and nonobvious. 35 USCA §§ 101–103.

“What, exactly, is a patent and how does it operate to foster the ‘progress of the useful arts’? In its simplest terms a patent is an agreement between an inventor and the public, represented by the federal government: in return for a full public disclosure of the invention the inventor is granted the right for a fixed period of time to exclude others from making, using, or selling the defined invention in the United States. It is a limited monopoly, designed not primarily to reward the inventor (this may or may not follow), but to encourage a public disclosure of inventions so that after the monopoly expires, the public is free to take unrestricted advantage of the invention.” Earl W. Kintner & Jack L. Lahr, An Intellectual Property Law Primer 7–11 (2d ed. 1982).

basic patent. A patent granted to an invention recognized by industry or the scientific community as pioneering, unexpected, and unprecedented. — Also termed pioneer patent.

combination patent. A patent granted for an invention that unites existing components in a novel way.

design patent. A patent granted for a new, original, and ornamental design for an article of manufacture; a patent that protects a product’s appearance or nonfunctional aspects. ●

Design patents — which, unlike utility patents, have a term of only 14 years — are similar to copyrights.

fencing patent. A patent procured in an effort to broaden the scope of the invention beyond the article or process that is actually intended to be manufactured or licensed. Cf. DOUBLE PATENTING.

paper patent. A patent granted for a discovery or invention that has never been used commercially. ● A paper patent receives less protection under the law than a patent granted for a device that is actually used in industry.

pioneer patent. See basic patent.

plant patent. A patent granted for the invention or discovery of a new and distinct variety of asexually reproducing plant.

process patent. A patent for a method of treating specified materials to produce a certain result; a patent outlining a means of producing a physical result independently of the producing mechanism. ● The result might be brought about by chemical action, by applying some element or power of nature, by mixing certain substances together, or by heating a substance to a certain temperature.

reissue patent. A patent that is issued to correct one or more errors in an original patent, as to revise the specification or to fix an invalid claim. ● A reissue patent replaces the original patent and lasts for the rest of the original patent’s term. 35 USCA § 251. — Sometimes shortened to reissue.

“[R]eissue patents are relatively rare, because the push and pull of the patent prosecution process tends to make the claims both accurate and as broad as the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office will allow.” Stephen Elias, Patent, Copyright and Trademark 278 (1996).

utility patent. A patent granted for one of the following types of inventions: a process, a machine, a manufacture, or a composition of matter (such as a new chemical). ● Utility patents are the most commonly issued patents. 35 USCA § 101.

patentable, adj. Capable of being patented <patentable processes>.

Peeping Tom. A person who spies on another (as through a window), usu. to gain sexual pleasure; VOYEUR.

peer, n. 1. A person who is of equal status, rank, or character with another.

"The commonalty, like the nobility, are divided into several degrees; and, as the lords, though different in rank, yet all of them are peers in respect of their nobility, so the commoners, though some are greatly superior to others, yet all are in law peers, in respect of their want of nobility . . ." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 391 (1765).

2. A member of the British nobility (such as a duchess, marquis, earl, viscount, or baroness). — peerage (peer-ij), n.

"The Crown has power to create any number of peers and of any degree. In modern practice the power is exercised on the advice of the Prime Minister and the honour is most commonly a reward for political services. Peerages can be, and have been, conferred for party political reasons; 12 were created in 1712 to save the government, and 16 to help pass the Reform Bill in 1832. In 1832 and 1911 the Opposition of the House of Lords was overcome by the threat to create enough peers to secure a majority . . . The main privilege of a peer is to sit and vote in the House of Lords." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 942 (1980).

peer-reviewed journal. A publication whose practice is to forward submitted articles to disinterested experts who screen them for scholarly or scientific reliability, the idea being that articles actually published have already withstood expert scrutiny and comment.

peine forte et dure (pen for tay door or payn fort ay dyoor). [French "strong and hard punishment"] Hist. The punishment of an alleged felon who refused to plead, consisting of pressing or crushing the person's body under heavy weights until the accused either pleaded or died.

"In all other felonies, however, the punishment of peine forte et dure was, until lately, denounced as the consequence of an obstinate silence. The greatest caution and deliberation were indeed to be exercised before it was resorted to; and the prisoner was not only to have 'trina admonitio,' but a respite of a few hours, and the sentence was to be distinctly read to him, that he might be fully aware of the penalty he was incurring." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 425–26 (2d ed. 1826).

"In old English law, a person charged with felony who, refusing to accept jury trial, was pressed to death (peine forte et dure), was not regarded as committing suicide, so that he did not forfeit his property." Glanville Williams, The Sanctity of Life and the Criminal Law 270 n.4 (1957).

pell. See CLERK OF THE PELLs.

pellex (pel-eks), n. [Latin] Roman law. A concubine.

penal (pee-nal), adj. Of, relating to, or being a penalty or punishment, esp. for a crime.

"The general rule is that penal statutes are to be construed strictly. By the word 'penal' in this connection is meant not only such statutes as in terms impose a fine, or corporal punishment, or forfeiture as a consequence of violating laws, but also all acts which impose by way of punishment damages beyond compensation for the benefit of the injured party, or which impose any special burden, or take away or impair any privilege or right." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 344 (3d ed. 1914).

"The word penal connotes some form of punishment imposed on an individual by the authority of the state. Where the primary purpose of a statute is expressly enforceable by fine, imprisonment, or similar punishment the statute is always construed as penal." 3 Norman J. Singer, Sutherland Statutes and Statutory Construction § 59.01, at 1 (4th ed. 1986).

penal sum. The monetary amount specified as a penalty in a penal bond. See penal bond under BOND (2).

penalty. 1. Punishment imposed on a wrongdoer, esp. in the form of imprisonment or fine.
● Though usu. for crimes, penalties are also sometimes imposed for civil wrongs. 2. Excessive liquidated damages that a contract purports to impose on a party that breaches. ● If the damages are excessive enough to be considered a penalty, a court will usu. not enforce that particular provision of the contract. Some contracts specify that a given sum of damages is intended "as liquidated damages and not as a penalty" — but even that language is not fool-proof.

"A penalty is a sum which a party . . . agrees to pay or forfeit in the event of a breach, but which is fixed, not as a pre-estimate of probable actual damages, but as a punishment, the threat of which is designed to prevent the breach, or as security, where the sum is deposited or the covenant to pay is joined in by one or more sureties, to insure that the person injured shall collect his actual damages. Penalties . . . are not recoverable or retainable as such by the person in whose favor they are framed . . ." Charles T. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Damages § 146, at 600 (1935).

civil penalty. A fine assessed for a violation of a statute or regulation <the EPA levied a civil penalty of $10,000 on the manufacturer for exceeding its pollution limits>.

statutory penalty. A penalty imposed for a statutory violation; esp., a penalty imposing automatic liability on a wrongdoer for violation of a statute's terms without reference to any actual damages suffered.

penalty clause. A contractual provision that assesses an excessive monetary charge against a defaulting party. • Penalty clauses are generally unenforceable. — Often shortened to penalty. — Also termed penal clause. Cf. LIQUIDATED-DAMAGES CLAUSE; LIMITATION-OF-REMEDIES CLAUSE.

"It not infrequently happens that contracts provide for what is to happen in the event of a breach by the parties, or by one of them. Such provisions may be perfectly simple attempts to avoid future disputes, and to quantify the probable amount of any loss. That is unobjectionable. But sometimes clauses of this kind are not designed to quantify the amount of the probable loss, but are designed to terrorize, or frighten, the party into performance. For example, a contract may provide that the promisor is to pay £5 on a certain event, but if he fails to do so, he must then pay £500. Now a clause of that kind is called a penalty clause by lawyers, and for several hundred years it has been the law that such promises cannot be enforced. The standard justification for the law here is that it is unfair and unconscionable to enforce clauses which are designed to act in terrorem." P.S. Atiyah, Promises, Morals, and Law 57-58 (1981).

penance. Eccles. law. A punishment assessed by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offense.

pend, vb. (Of a lawsuit) to be awaiting decision or settlement.

pendency (pen-dən-see), n. The state or condition of being pending or continuing undecided.

pendens. See LIS PENDENS.

pendent (pen-dənt), adj. 1. Not yet decided; pending . 2. Of or relating to pendent jurisdiction or pendent-party jurisdiction <pendent parties>. 3. Contingent; dependent <pendent upon a different claim>.

pendent-claim jurisdiction. See pendent jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

pendente lite (pen-dən-tee li-tee), adv. [Latin "while the action is pending"] During the proceeding or litigation; contingent on the outcome of litigation. — Also termed lite pendente. Cf. LIS PENDENS.

pendente lite administration. See ADMINISTRATION.

pendent jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

pendent-party jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

pending, adj. Remaining undecided; awaiting decision .

pending, prep. 1. Throughout the continuance of; during <in escrow pending arbitration>. 2. While awaiting; until <the injunction was in force pending trial>.

pending-ordinance doctrine. The principle that a municipality may properly deny an application for a property use that, although it would satisfy existing law, would violate a law that is pending when the application is made. • This doctrine was judicially created, mainly to short-circuit landowners' attempts to circumvent a new ordinance by applying for a nonconforming use on the eve of its approval.

penetration pricing. Pricing of a new product below its anticipated market price to enter a market, discourage competition, and recover the initial investment.

penitentiary (pen-ə-ten-shə-ree), n. A correctional facility or other place of long-term confinement for convicted criminals; PRISON. — penitentiary, adj.

Pennoyer rule (pə-noy-ər). The principle that a court may not issue a personal judgment against a defendant over which it has no personal jurisdiction. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1877).

Pennsylvania rule. Torts. The principle that a tortfeasor who violates a statute in the process of causing an injury has the burden of showing that the violation did not cause the injury.

pennystock. See STOCK.

penology (pee-nol-ə-jee), n. The study of penal institutions, crime prevention, and the punishment and rehabilitation of criminals, including the art of fitting the right treatment to an offender. — penological (pee-nə-loj-i-kəl), adj. — penologist (pee-nol-ə-jist), n. Cf. CRIMINOLOGY.

pen register. A mechanical device that logs dialed telephone numbers, without overhearing the telephone conversation, by monitoring electrical impulses. Cf. WIRETAPPING.

pensio (pen-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. A payment for the use of a thing, such as rent for the use of another's house.

pension. A fixed sum paid regularly to a person (or to the person's beneficiaries), esp. by an employer as a retirement benefit. Cf. ANNUITY.

vested pension. A pension in which an employee (or employee's estate) has rights to benefits purchased with the employer's contributions to the plan, even if the employee is no longer employed by this employer at the time of retirement. • The vesting of qualified pension plans is governed by ERISA. See EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT.

Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. The federal agency that guarantees the payment of retirement benefits covered by private pension plans that lack sufficient assets to pay the promised benefits. — Abbr. PBGC.

pensioner. A recipient or beneficiary of a pension plan.

pension plan. An employer's plan established to pay long-term retirement benefits to employees or their beneficiaries; a plan providing systematically for the payment of definitely determinable benefits to employees over a period of years, usu. for life, after retirement. • Retirement benefits are typically determined by such factors as years of the employee's service and compensation received. ERISA governs the administration of many pension plans. See EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT. Cf. EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

contributory pension plan. A pension plan in which both the employer and the employee contribute.

defined-contribution plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

defined pension plan. A pension plan in which the employer promises specific benefits to each employee. — Also termed fixed-benefit plan.

noncontributory pension plan. A pension plan contributed to only by the employer.

nonqualified pension plan. A deferred-compensation plan in which an executive increases retirement benefits by annual additional contributions to the company's basic plan.

qualified pension plan. A pension plan that complies with federal law (ERISA) and thus allows the employee to receive tax benefits for contributions and tax-deferred investment growth.

top-hat plan. An unfunded pension plan that is maintained by an employer primarily for the purpose of providing deferred compensation for a select group of managers or highly paid employees. • Top-hat plans are generally not subject to the broad remedial provisions of ERISA because Congress recognized that certain individuals, by virtue of their position or compensation level, can substantially influence the design or operation of their deferred-compensation plan.

pension trust. See TRUST.

penumbra (pi-nəm-brə), n. A surrounding area or periphery of uncertain extent. • In constitutional law, the Supreme Court has ruled that the specific guarantees in the Bill of Rights have penumbras containing implied rights, esp. the right of privacy. Pl. penumbras, penumbrae (pi-nəm-bree). — penumbral (pi-nəm-brəl), adj.

"Problems of fringe meaning are sometimes spoken of as 'problems of the penumbra', the point being that, in the case of a great many words, there is no doubt about the hard core of their meanings, but different views may well be taken on the question whether the words are applicable to things or situations outside that hard core." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 57 (1976).

peonage (pee-ə-nij), n. Illegal and involuntary servitude in satisfaction of a debt. — peon, n.

"Peonage, which is a term descriptive of a condition that existed in Spanish America, and especially in Mexico, and in the territory of New Mexico, and which may be defined as the status or condition of compulsory service based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master, the basic fact being the indebtedness, is abolished and prohibited by an act of Congress which further declares that any statute, resolution, regulation, ordinance, or usage of any territory or state designed or operating to establish, maintain, or enforce, directly or indirectly, the voluntary or involuntary service or labor of any persons as peons, in liquidation of any debt or obligation, or otherwise, shall be null and void [42 USCA § 1994].” 45 Am. Jur. 2d Involuntary Servitude and Peonage § 10, at 935-36 (1969).

people. (usu. cap.) The citizens of a state as represented by the prosecution in a criminal case <People v. Snyder>.

people's court. 1. A court in which ordinary people can resolve small disputes. See small-claims court under COURT. 2. In totalitarian countries, a group of nonlawyer citizens, often illiterate commoners, convened at the scene of a crime to pass judgment or impose punishment on the accused criminal. 3. (cap.) In Nazi Germany, a tribunal that dealt with political offenses.

peppercorn. A small or insignificant thing or amount; nominal consideration <the contract was upheld despite involving mere peppercorn>. See nominal consideration under CONSIDERATION.

per (pər), prep. 1. Through; by <the dissent, per Justice Thomas>. 2. For each; for every <55 miles per hour>. 3. In accordance with the terms of; according to <per the contract>.

perambulation. The act or custom of walking around the boundaries of a piece of land, either to confirm the boundaries or to preserve evidence of them.

perambulatione facienda. See DE PERAMBULATIONE FACIENDA.

per annum (pər an-əm), adv. [Latin] By, for, or in each year; annually <interest of eight percent per annum>.

P/E ratio. abbr. PRICE-EARNINGS RATIO.

per autre vie. See PUR AUTRE VIE.

per aversionem (pər ə-vər-zhee-oh-nəm). [Latin “for a lump sum”] Roman & civil law. Of a sale in which goods are taken in bulk or land is bought by estimation of the number of acres. ● This type of sale is so called because the buyer “turns away” from a careful scrutiny of the things purchased.

per bouche (pər boosh). [Law French] By the mouth; orally.

per capita (pər kap-i-tə), adj. [Latin “by the head”] 1. Divided equally among all individuals, usu. in the same class <the court will distribute the property to the descendants on a per capita basis>. Cf. PER STIRPES.

per capita with representation. Divided equally among all members of a class of takers, including those who have predeceased the testator, so that no family stocks are cut off by the prior death of a taker. ● For example, if T (the testator) has three children — A, B, and C — and C has two children but predeceases T, C’s children would still take C’s share when T’s estate is distributed.

2. Allocated to each person; possessed by each individual <the average annual per capita income has increased over the last two years>. — per capita, adv.

per capita tax. See poll tax under TAX.

percentage lease. See LEASE.

percentage-of-completion method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

percentage order. See ORDER (4).

perception. Civil law. The act of taking into possession (as rents, profits, etc.).

percolating water. See WATER.

per consequens (pər kon-sə-kwenz). [Latin] By consequence; consequently.

per considerationem curiae (pər kən-sid-ə-ray-shee-oh-nəm kyoor-ee-ee). [Law Latin] By the consideration of the court.

per contra (pər kon-trə). [Latin] On the other hand; to the contrary; by contrast.

per curiam (pər kyoor-ee-əm), adv. & adj. [Latin] By the court as a whole.

per curiam, n. See per curiam opinion under OPINION (1).

per curiam opinion. See OPINION (1).

per diem (pər dī-əm or dee-əm), adv. [Latin] By the day; for each day. Cf. IN DIEM.

per diem, adj. Based on or calculated by the day <per diem interest>.

per diem, n. 1. A monetary daily allowance, usu. to cover expenses. 2. A daily fee.

perdonatio utlagariae (pər-də-nay-shee-oh ət-lə-gair-ee-ee). [Law Latin “pardon of outlawry”] Hist. A pardon given to a person outlawed for failing to obey a court’s summons. • A person who voluntarily surrendered was eligible for this type of pardon.

perduellio (pər-d[y]oo-el-ee-oh). [Latin “treason”] Roman law. Treasonous conduct, such as joining the enemy or deserting the battlefield. • Perduellio was later absorbed into a broader category of crimes against the state, the crimen laesae majestatis. — Also termed perduellion (pər-d[y]oo-el-yən). See CRIMEN LAESAE MAJESTATIS.

perdurable (pər-d[y]uur-ə-bəl), adj. (Of an estate in land) lasting or enduring; durable; permanent.

perempt (pər-empt), vb. 1. Civil law. To quash, do away with, or extinguish. 2. Slang. To exercise a peremptory challenge.

peremption. Civil law. The period during which a legal right exists. • If the right is not exercised during this period, it is destroyed. Whereas prescription simply bars a specific remedy, peremption bars the action itself. Cf. PRESCRIPTION (1). See STATUTE OF REPOSE.

peremptory (pər-emp-tə-ree), adj. 1. Final; absolute; conclusive; incontrovertible <the king’s peremptory order>. 2. Not requiring any shown cause; arbitrary <peremptory challenges>.

peremptory, n. See peremptory challenge under CHALLENGE (2).

peremptory challenge. See CHALLENGE (2).

peremptory day. See DAY.

peremptory defense. See DEFENSE (1).

peremptory exception. See EXCEPTION (1).

peremptory instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

peremptory mandamus. See MANDAMUS.

peremptory plea. See PLEA (3).

peremptory strike. See peremptory challenge under CHALLENGE (2).

peremptory writ. See WRIT.

per eundem (pər ee-ən-dəm). [Latin] By the same. • This term often appears in the phrase per eundem in eadem (“by the same judge in the same case”).

perfect (pər-fekt), vb. To take all legal steps needed to complete, secure, or record (a claim, right, or interest); to put in final conformity with the law <perfect a security interest> <perfect the title>.

perfect attestation clause. A provision in a testamentary instrument asserting that all actions required to make a valid testamentary disposition have been performed.

perfect competition. See COMPETITION.

perfect duty. See DUTY (1).

perfected security interest. See SECURITY INTEREST.

perfect equity. See EQUITY.

perfecting amendment. See AMENDMENT (1).

perfect instrument. See INSTRUMENT.

perfection. Validation of a security interest as against other creditors, usu. by filing a statement with some public office or by taking possession of the collateral. Cf. ATTACHMENT (4).

automatic perfection. The self-operative perfection of a purchase-money security interest without filing or without possession of the collateral. • The security interest is perfected simply by the attachment of the security interest, without any additional steps. See purchase-money security interest under SECURITY INTEREST.

temporary perfection. The continuous perfection of a security interest for a limited period. • For example, a security interest in proceeds from the original collateral is perfected for ten days after the debtor receives the proceeds; the interest will become unperfected after this ten-day period unless certain statutory requirements are met. On most instruments, a secured party who advances new value under a written security agreement obtains a 21-day perfection period, even if the secured party does not file a financing statement and the collateral remains with the debtor. UCC § 9-304(4).

perfect tender. See TENDER (2).

perfect-tender rule. Commercial law. The principle that a buyer may reject a seller's goods if the quality, quantity, or delivery of the goods fails to conform precisely to the contract. • Although the perfect-tender rule was adopted by the UCC (§ 2-601), other Code provisions — such as the seller's right to cure after rejection — have softened the rule's impact. Cf. SUBSTANTIAL-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

“At common law, a buyer of goods possessed a legal right to insist upon ‘perfect tender’ by the seller. If the goods failed to conform exactly to the description in the contract — whether as to quality, quantity or manner of delivery — the buyer could reject the goods and rescind the contract, which meant that the parties would be returned to the positions they occupied before the contract was entered into.” Marvin A. Chirelstein, Concepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 112 (1990).

perfect title. See TITLE (2).

perfect usufruct. See USUFRUCT.

perfect war. See WAR.

per feloniam (pər fə-loh-nee-əm). [Latin] Hist. With criminal intent.

perfidy (pər-fə-dee). Int'l law. A combatant's conduct that creates the impression that an adversary is entitled to, or is obliged to accord, protection under international law, when in fact the conduct is a ruse to gain an advantage. • Acts of perfidy include feigning an intent to negotiate under a flag of truce, or feigning protected status by using signs, emblems, or uniforms of the United Nations or of a neutral country.

per formam doni (pər fɔr-məm doh-ni). [Law Latin] By the form of the gift; by the designation of the giver rather than by operation of law.

performance, n. 1. The successful completion of a contractual duty, usu. resulting in the performer's release from any past or future liability; EXECUTION (2). — Also termed full performance. — perform, vb. Cf. NONPERFORMANCE.

defective performance. A performance that, whether partial or complete, does not completely comply with the contract. • One example is late performance.

future performance. Performance in the future of an obligation that will become due under a contract.

misperformance. See MISPERFORMANCE.

nonperformance. See NONPERFORMANCE.

part performance. See PART PERFORMANCE.

specific performance. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

substantial performance. Performance of the primary, necessary terms of an agreement. See SUBSTANTIAL-PERFORMANCE DOCTRINE.

2. The equitable doctrine by which acts consistent with an intention to fulfill an obligation are construed to be in fulfillment of that obligation, even if the party was silent on the point. 3. A company's earnings. 4. The ability of a corporation to maintain or increase earnings.

performance bond. 1. A bond given by a surety to ensure the timely performance of a contract. • In major international agreements, performance bonds are typically issued by banks, but sometimes also by insurance companies. The face amount of the bond is typically 2% of the value of performance, but occasionally as much as 5%. 2. A third party's agreement to guarantee the completion of a construction contract upon the default of the general contractor. — Also termed completion bond; surety bond; contract bond. Cf. common-law bond under BOND (2).

nonoperative performance bond. A performance bond that is not currently in effect but is activated upon the issuance of the buyer's letter of credit or other approved financing.

operative performance bond. A performance bond that has been activated by the issuance of the buyer's letter of credit or other approved financing.

revolving performance bond. A performance bond that is in effect on a continuing basis for the duration of the contract, usu. plus an additional number of days (often 45).

up-front performance bond. A performance bond given before the issuance of the buyer's letter of credit or other financing.

performance fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

performance plan. A bonus compensation plan in which executives are paid according to the company's growth.

performance right. A copyright holder's exclusive right to recite, play, act, show, or otherwise render the protected work publicly, whether directly or by technological means (as by broadcasting the work on television).

performance shares. Stock given to an executive when the corporation meets a performance objective.

performance stock. See glamour stock under STOCK.

per fraudem (pər fraw-dəm), adv. [Latin] By fraud; fraudulently.

periculosus (pər-ik-yə-loh-səs), adj. [Latin] Dangerous; perilous.

periculum (pə-rik-yə-ləm), n. [Latin] Civil law. Peril; danger; risk.

peril. 1. Exposure to the risk of injury, damage, or loss <the perils of litigation>. 2. Insurance. The cause of a loss to person or property <insured against all perils>. Cf. RISK (3).

peril of the sea. An action of the elements at sea of such force as to overcome the strength of a well-founded ship and the normal precautions of good marine practice. • A peril of the sea may relieve a carrier from liability for the resulting losses. — Also termed danger of navigation; danger of river; marine peril; marine risk; (in regard to the Great Lakes) perils of the lakes.

"Of the marine perils, by far the most important are those 'of the seas'. What is covered is not any loss that may happen on the sea, but fortuitous losses occurring through extraordinary action of the elements at sea, or any accident or mishap in navigation. By far the greatest number of claims for marine loss, and of the insurance problems connected with other topics treated in this book arise under this clause. Extraordinary action of the wind and waves is a sea peril. Collision, foundering, stranding, striking on rocks and icebergs, are all covered under these words. Even a swell from a passing ship may be a 'peril of the sea'. On the other hand, ordinary wear and tear are not included under the coverage of this or any other phrase in the clause, nor are losses which are anticipatable as regular incidents of sea carriage in general or of navigation in a particular part of the world." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 2-9, at 72-73 (2d ed. 1975).

per incuriam (pər in-kyoor-ee-əm), adj. (Of a judicial decision) wrongly decided, usu. because the judge or judges were ill-informed about the applicable law.

"As a general rule the only cases in which decisions should be held to have been given per incuriam are those of decisions given in ignorance or forgetfulness of some inconsistent statutory provision or of some authority binding on the court concerned, so that in such cases some features of the decision or some step in the reasoning on which it is based is found on that account to be demonstrably wrong. This definition is not necessarily exhaustive, but cases not strictly within it which can properly be held to have been decided per incuriam, must in our judgment, consistently with the stare decisis rule which is an essential part of our law, be of the rarest occurrence." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 149 (4th ed. 1991).

per infortunium (pər in-for-t[y]oo-nee-əm), adj. or adv. [Latin] By misadventure. • At common law, when one person killed another per infortunium, a conviction and royal pardon were necessary even when there was no fault. See homicide per infortunium under HOMICIDE.

"It may seem strange to modern minds that for centuries it was a rule of our law that a man who killed another either by misadventure (per infortunium) or in reasonable self-defence (against an attack not itself felonious), although he did not commit a felony, must yet be held guilty of unlawful homicide and require the King's pardon if he were to escape punishment, and even if granted pardon would still be liable to suffer forfeiture of his property; and that he was exposed to claims for compensation from the family of the deceased." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 113 (16th ed. 1952).

periodic alimony. See permanent alimony under ALIMONY.

periodic estate. See ESTATE.

periodic-payment-plan certificate. See CERTIFICATE.

periodic tenancy. See TENANCY.

periphrasis (pə-rif-rə-sis), n. A roundabout way of writing or speaking; circumlocution. — periphrastic (per-ə-fras-tik), adj.

perjury (pər-jər-ee), n. The act or an instance of a person's deliberately making material false or misleading statements while under oath. — Also termed false swearing; false oath; (archaically) forswearing. — perjure (pər-jər), vb. — perjured (pər-jərd), perjurious (pər-juur-ee-əs), adj. — perjurer (pər-jər-ər), n.

perjury-trap doctrine. The principle that a perjury indictment against a person must be dismissed if the prosecution secures it by calling that person as a grand-jury witness in an effort to obtain evidence for a perjury charge, esp. when the person's testimony does not relate to issues material to the ongoing grand-jury investigation.

perk, n. See PERQUISITE.

per legem terrae (pər lee-jəm ter-ee). [Law Latin] By the law of the land; by due process of law.

permanent abode. See DOMICILE (1).

permanent alimony. See ALIMONY.

permanent allegiance. See ALLEGIANCE.

permanent chargé d'affaires. See CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES.

per metas et bundas (pər mee-təs et bən-dəs). [Law Latin] By metes and bounds.

per minas. See duress per minas under DURESS.

permissible appointee. See APPOINTEE.

permission. 1. The act of permitting. 2. A license or liberty to do something; authorization.

permissive abstention. See ABSTENTION.

permissive counterclaim. See COUNTERCLAIM.

permissive inference. See permissive presumption under PRESUMPTION.

permissive joinder. See JOINDER.

permissive presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

permissive subject of bargaining. Labor law. An employment or collective-bargaining issue, other than a basic employment issue, that is not required to be the subject of collective bargaining but that cannot be implemented by management without union approval. • For example, altering the scope of the bargaining unit does not affect a term or condition of employment, so it is a permissive, instead of mandatory, subject of bargaining. Disagreement on a permissive subject of bargaining cannot be used as the basis for an impasse in negotiating a collective-bargaining agreement, unlike a mandatory subject of bargaining. — Often shortened to permissive subject. Cf. MANDATORY SUBJECT.

permissive use. See USE (4).

permissive waste. See WASTE (1).

permit (pər-mit), n. A certificate evidencing permission; a license .

permit (pər-mit), vb. 1. To consent to formally <permit the inspection to be carried out>. 2. To give opportunity for <lax security permitted the escape>. 3. To allow or admit of <if the law so permits>.

permit bond. See license bond under BOND (2).

permit card. Labor law. A document issued by a union to a nonunion member to allow the person to work on a job covered by a union contract.

per mitter le droit (pər mit-ər lə droyt). [Law French] Hist. By passing the right. • This described how releases became effective, as when a person disseised of land released the estate to the disseisor, at which time the right and possession combined to give the disseisor the entire estate.

per mitter l'estate (pər mit-ər lə-stayt). [Law French] Hist. By passing the estate. • This described the manner in which a joint tenant's right to an entire estate arose when the tenant received the remaining estate from the other joint tenant.

permutatio (pər-myoo-tay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. An agreement for barter or exchange.

per my et per tout (pər mee ay pər too[t]). [Law French] By the half and by the whole. • This phrase described the estate held by joint tenants: by the half for purposes of survivorship, by the whole for purposes of alienation. Cf. PER TOUT ET NON PER MY.

pernancy (pər-nən-see). Hist. A taking or reception, as of the profits of an estate.

pernor of profits (pər-nər or -nor). Hist. A person who receives the profits of property; one who has the pernancy of the profits.

perp (pərp), n. Slang. Perpetrator <the police brought in the perp for questioning>. See PERPETRATOR.

perpars (pər-pahrz). [Law Latin, fr. Latin per partes "by parts"] See PURPART.

perpetrate, vb. To commit or carry out (an act, esp. a crime) <find whoever perpetrated this heinous deed>. — perpetration, n.

perpetrator. A person who commits a crime or offense.

perpetua (pər-pech-oo-ə). See exceptio peremptoria under EXCEPTIO.

perpetual bond. See annuity bond under BOND (3).

perpetual edict. See EDICT.

perpetual freehold. See FREEHOLD.

perpetual injunction. See permanent injunction under INJUNCTION.

perpetual lease. See LEASE.

perpetual statute. See STATUTE.

perpetual succession. See SUCCESSION (4).

perpetual trust. See TRUST.

perpetuating testimony. The means or procedure for preserving for future use witness testimony that might otherwise be unavailable at trial.

perpetuities, rule against. See RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES.

perpetuity (pər-pə-t[y]oo-ə-tee). 1. The state of continuing forever. 2. Hist. An unbarrable entail. 3. Hist. An inalienable interest. 4. An interest that does not take effect or vest within the period prescribed by law. • In reference to the rule against perpetuities, only sense 4 is now current. See RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES.

"A perpetuity is a thing odious in law, and destructive of the Commonwealth; it would put a stop to commerce and prevent the circulation of the riches of the Kingdom, and therefore is not to be countenanced in equity. If in equity you could come nearer to a perpetuity than the rules of Common Law would admit, all men being desirous to continue their estates in their families, would settle their estates by way of trust; which might indeed make well for the jurisdiction of the court, but would be destructive of the commonwealth." (1683) 1 Vern. 163 (per Lord North) (as quoted in George W. Keeton, English Law: The Judicial Contribution 118 (1974)).

perpetuity of the king or queen. A fiction of English law that for political purposes the king or queen is immortal; that is, a monarch dies, but the office is never vacant.

per procuracionem (pər prok-yə-ray-shee-oh-nəm). [Latin] By proxy. — Abbr. per pro.; p. proc.; p. pro.; p.p. — Also termed per procuracionem.

per se violation. Antitrust. A trade practice (such as price-fixing) that is considered inherently anticompetitive and injurious to the public without any need to determine whether it has actually injured market competition.

persistent price discrimination. See PRICE DISCRIMINATION.

person. 1. A human being. 2. An entity (such as a corporation) that is recognized by law as having the rights and duties of a human being. 3. The living body of a human being <contract found on the smuggler's person>.

"So far as legal theory is concerned, a person is any being whom the law regards as capable of rights and duties. Any being that is so capable is a person, whether a human being or not, and no being that is not so capable is a person, even though he be a man. Persons are the substances of which rights and duties are the attributes. It is only in this respect that persons possess juridical significance, and this is the exclusive point of view from which personality receives legal recognition." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 318 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

artificial person. An entity, such as a corporation, created by law and given certain legal rights and duties of a human being; a being, real or imaginary, who for the purpose of legal reasoning is treated more or less as a human being. — Also termed fictional person; juristic person; legal person; moral person.

persona designata (pər-soh-nə dez-ig-nay-tə). [Latin] A person considered as an individual (esp. in a legal action) rather than as a member of a class.

persona ficta (pər-soh-nə fik-tə). [Latin “false mask”] Hist. A fictional person, such as a corporation.

person aggrieved. See aggrieved party under PARTY (2).

persona grata (pər-soh-nə gray-tə or grah-tə or grat-ə), n. [Latin] An acceptable person; esp., a diplomat who is acceptable to a host country. Pl. personae gratae (pər-soh-nee gray-tee or grah-tee or grat-ee). Cf. PERSONA NON GRATA.

personaliter (pər-sə-nay-lə-tər), adv. [Latin] Personally; in person.

personality. The legal status of one regarded by the law as a person; the legal conception by which the law regards a human being or an artificial entity as a person. — Also termed legal personality.

“Legal personality . . . refers to the particular device by which the law creates or recognizes units to which it ascribes certain powers and capacities.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 393 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

personal judgment. See JUDGMENT.

personal jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

personal justice. See JUSTICE (1).

personal knowledge. See KNOWLEDGE.

personal law. The law that governs a person's family matters, usu. regardless of where the person goes. • In common-law systems, personal law refers to the law of the person's domicile. In civil-law systems, it refers to the law of the individual's nationality (and so is sometimes called lex patriae). Cf. TERRITORIAL LAW.

"The idea of the personal law is based on the conception of man as a social being, so that those transactions of his daily life which affect him most closely in a personal sense, such as marriage, divorce, legitimacy, many kinds of capacity, and succession, may be governed universally by that system of law deemed most suitable and adequate for the purpose [A]lthough the law of the domicile is the chief criterion adopted by English courts for the personal law, it lies within the power of any man of full age and capacity to establish his domicile in any country he chooses, and thereby automatically to make the law of that country his personal law." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 188 (7th ed. 1974).

petit cape. See cape parvum under CAPE.

petite assize. See ASSIZE (5).

Petite policy. The Department of Justice rule forbidding a federal prosecution after a previous state or federal prosecution based on the same acts unless (1) the prosecution has been approved by the Assistant Attorney General,

(2) there is a substantial federal interest supporting the prosecution, (3) the previous prosecution failed to vindicate the federal interest, and (4) there is sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction. Petite v. United States, 361 U.S. 529, 80 S.Ct. 450 (1960).

“(‘Petite Policy’) . . . The purpose of this policy is to vindicate substantial federal interests through appropriate federal prosecutions, to protect persons charged with criminal conduct from the burdens associated with multiple prosecutions and punishments for substantially the same act(s) or transaction(s), to promote efficient utilization of Department resources, and to promote coordination and cooperation between federal and state prosecutors.” United States Attorneys’ Manual § 9-2.031 (Sept. 1997).

“In response to the Court’s continuing sensitivity to the fairness implications of the multiple prosecution power, the Justice Department adopted the policy of refusing to bring a federal prosecution following a state prosecution except when necessary to advance compelling interests of federal law enforcement. The Petite policy was designed to limit the exercise of the power to bring successive prosecutions for the same offense to situations comporting with the rationale for the existence of that power. Although not constitutionally mandated, this Executive policy serves to protect interests which, but for the ‘dual sovereignty’ principle inherent in our federal system, would be embraced by the Double Jeopardy Clause. In light of the parallel purposes of the Government’s Petite policy and the fundamental constitutional guarantee against double jeopardy, the federal courts should be receptive, not circumspect, when the Government seeks leave to implement that policy.” Rinaldi v. United States, 434 U.S. 22, 28-29, 98 S.Ct. 81, 85 (1977) (citation omitted).

petitio (pə-tish-ee-oh), n. [Latin] 1. Civil law. A plaintiff’s suit, esp. in an action in rem. 2. Hist. A petition or demand; esp., a count in a real action.

placitare (plas-ə-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] To plead; to bring an action in a court of law.

placitory (plas-ə-tor-ee), adj. [Law Latin] Of or relating to pleas or pleading.

placitum (plas-ə-təm), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. Roman law. An agreement between parties. 2. Roman law. An imperial constitution. 3. A judicial decision. 4. A court; a judicial tribunal. 5. A judicial proceeding; a trial. 6. A fine, mulct, or pecuniary punishment. 7. A pleading or plea. 8. A paragraph or section of a title or page where the point decided in a case is set forth separately. — Abbr. (in sense 8) pl. Pl. placita.

placitum fractum (plas-ə-təm frak-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. A day past or lost to the defendant.

placitum nominatum (plas-ə-təm nom-ə-nay-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. The day appointed for a defendant to appear and plead.

plagiarism (play-jə-riz-əm), n. The act or an instance of copying or stealing another's words or ideas and attributing them as one's own. — plagiarize (play-jə-riz), vb. — plagiarist (play-jə-rist), n. Cf. INFRINGEMENT.

"Plagiarism, which many people commonly think has to do with copyright, is not in fact a legal doctrine. True plagiarism is an ethical, not a legal, offense and is enforceable by academic authorities, not courts. Plagiarism occurs when someone — a hurried student, a neglectful professor, an unscrupulous writer — falsely claims someone else's words, whether copyrighted or not, as his own. Of course, if the plagiarized work is protected by copyright, the unauthorized reproduction is also a copyright infringement." Paul Goldstein, Copyright's Highway 12 (1994).

"That the supporting evidence for the accusation of plagiarism may on occasion be elusive, insufficient, or uncertain, is not the same as thinking that the definition of plagiarism is uncertain. The gray areas may remain resistant to adjudication without being resistant to definition. It may be perfectly clear what constitutes plagiarism ('using the work of another with an intent to deceive') without its being clear that what faces us is truly a case of this." Christopher Ricks, "Plagiarism," 97 Proceedings of the British Academy 149, 151 (1998).

plagiarius (play-jee-air-ee-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A kidnapper.

plagium (play-jee-əm), n. [Latin] Roman law. The act of kidnapping, which included harboring another's slave.

plaideur (play- or ple-dər), n. [Law French "pleader"] Archaic. An attorney at law; an advocate.

plaidoyer (ple-dwah-yay), n. [French] Hist. An advocate's plea.

plain bond. See DEBENTURE.

plain error. See ERROR (2).

plain-feel doctrine. Criminal procedure. The principle that a police officer, while conducting a legal pat-down search, may seize any contraband that the officer can clearly identify, by touch, as being illegal or incriminating. — Also termed plain-touch doctrine.

plain-language law. Legislation requiring non-technical, readily comprehensible language in consumer contracts such as residential leases or insurance policies. ● Many of these laws have genuinely simplified the needlessly obscure language in which consumer contracts have traditionally been couched.

plain-language movement. 1. The loosely organized campaign to encourage legal writers and business writers to write clearly and concisely — without legalese — while preserving accuracy and precision. 2. The body of persons involved in this campaign.

plain meaning. See MEANING.

plain-meaning rule. The rule that if a writing, or a provision in a writing, appears to be unambiguous on its face, its meaning must be determined from the writing itself without resort to any extrinsic evidence. ● Though often applied, this rule is often condemned as simplistic because the meaning of words varies with the verbal context and the surrounding circumstances, not to mention the linguistic ability of the users and readers (including judges). — Also termed ordinary-meaning rule. Cf. GOLDEN RULE; MISCHIEF RULE; EQUITY-OF-THE STATUTE RULE.

"On its positive side, the plain meaning rule states a tautology: Words should be read as saying what they say. The rule tells us to respect meaning but it does so without disclosing what the specific meaning is. At best, it reaffirms the preeminence of the statute over materials extrinsic to it. In its negative aspect, on the other hand, the rule has sometimes been used to read ineptly expressed language out of its proper context, in violation of established principles of meaning and communication. To this extent it is an impediment to interpretation." Reed Dickerson, The Interpretation and Application of Statutes 229 (1975).

plain-sight rule. See PLAIN-VIEW DOCTRINE.

plaint. 1. Archaic. A complaint, esp. one filed in a replevin action. See COMPLAINT (1). 2. Civil law. A complaint or petition, esp. one intended to set aside an allegedly invalid testament.

plaintiff. The party who brings a civil suit in a court of law. — Abbr. pltf. Cf. DEFENDANT.

plaintiff in error. Archaic. See APPELLANT; PETITIONER.

plaintiff's-viewpoint rule. The principle that courts should measure the amount in controversy in a case by analyzing only the amount of damages claimed by the plaintiff.

plain-touch doctrine. See PLAIN-FEEL DOCTRINE.

plain-vanilla swap. See INTEREST-RATE SWAP.

plain-view doctrine. Criminal procedure. The rule permitting a police officer's warrantless seizure and use as evidence of an item observed in plain view from a lawful position or during a legal search when the officer has probable cause to believe that the item is evidence of a crime. — Also termed clear-view doctrine; plain-sight rule. Cf. OPEN-FIELDS DOCTRINE.

PLAM. See price-level-adjusted mortgage under MORTGAGE.

plan, n. 1. BANKRUPTCY PLAN. 2. EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

planned obsolescence. See OBSOLESCENCE.

planned-unit development. A land area zoned for a single-community subdivision with flexible restrictions on residential, commercial, and public uses. — Abbr. PUD. Cf. RESIDENTIAL CLUSTER.

planning board. A local government body responsible for approving or rejecting proposed building projects. • In most jurisdictions, the planning board's decisions are subject to the review of the city council. — Also termed planning commission.

plan of rehabilitation. See BANKRUPTCY PLAN.

plan of reorganization. See BANKRUPTCY PLAN.

plan-of-the-convention doctrine. The principle that each U.S. state, by ratifying the U.S. Constitution, has consented to the possibility of being sued by each of the other states, and has no immunity from such a suit under the 11th Amendment.

plant patent. See PATENT (3).

plat. 1. A small piece of land; PLOT (1). 2. A map describing a piece of land and its features, such as boundaries, lots, roads, and easements.

platform. A statement of principles and policies adopted by a political party as the basis of the party's appeal for public support.

plat map. A document that gives the legal descriptions of pieces of real property by lot, street, and block number. • A plat map is usu. drawn after the property has been described by some other means, such as a government survey. Once a plat map is prepared, property descriptions are defined by referring to the appropriate map.

plea, n. 1. An accused person's formal response of "guilty," "not guilty," or "no contest" to a criminal charge.

blind plea. A guilty plea made without the promise of a concession from either the judge or the prosecutor. Cf. negotiated plea.

guilty plea. An accused person's formal admission in court of having committed the charged offense. • A guilty plea is usu. part of a plea bargain. It must be made voluntarily, and only after the accused has been informed of and understands his or her rights. A guilty plea ordinarily has the same effect as a guilty verdict and conviction after a trial on the merits.

insanity plea. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

negotiated plea. The plea agreed to by a criminal defendant and the prosecutor in a plea bargain. See PLEA BARGAIN. Cf. blind plea.

not-guilty plea. An accused person's formal denial in court of having committed the charged offense. • The prosecution must then prove all elements of the charged offense beyond a reasonable doubt if the defendant is to be convicted.

2. At common law, the defendant's responsive pleading in a civil action. Cf. DECLARATION (7). 3. A factual allegation offered in a case; a pleading. Cf. DEMURRER.

affirmative plea. See pure plea.

anomalous plea. An equitable plea consisting in both affirmative and negative matter. • That is, it is partly confession and avoidance and partly traverse. The plea is appropriate when the plaintiff, in the bill, has anticipated the plea, and the defendant then traverses the anticipatory matters. — Also termed plea not pure. Cf. pure plea.

common plea. 1. A common-law plea in a civil action as opposed to a criminal prosecution. — Also termed common cause; common suit. 2. Hist. A plea made by a commoner.

“By ‘common pleas’ Magna Carta meant no more than ordinary pleas between commoners.” Alan Harding, A Social History of English Law 51 (1966).

dilatory plea (dil-ə-tor-ee). A plea that does not challenge the merits of a case but that seeks to delay or defeat the action on procedural grounds.

“Dilatory pleas are those which do not answer the general right of the plaintiff, either by denial or in confession and avoidance, but assert matter tending to defeat the particular action by resisting the plaintiff’s present right of recovery. They may be divided into two main classes: (1) Pleas to the jurisdiction and venue. (2) Pleas in abatement. A minor class, sometimes recognized, is pleas in suspension of the action.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 220, at 382 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

double plea. A plea consisting in two or more distinct grounds of complaint or defense for the same issue. Cf. alternative pleading under PLEADING (2); DUPLICITY (2).

issuable plea. A plea on the merits presenting a complaint to the court. Cf. issuable defense under DEFENSE (1).

jurisdictional plea. A plea asserting that the court lacks jurisdiction either over the defendant or over the subject matter of the case. — Also termed plea to the jurisdiction.

negative plea. A plea that traverses some material fact or facts stated in the bill.

nonissuable plea. A plea on which a court ruling will not decide the case on the merits, such as a plea in abatement.

peremptory plea. A plea that responds to the merits of the plaintiff’s claim.

plea in abatement. A plea that objects to the place, time, or method of asserting the plaintiff’s claim but does not dispute the claim’s merits. • A defendant who successfully asserts a plea in abatement leaves the claim open for continuation in the current action or reassertion in a later action if the defect is cured.

plea in bar. See PLEA IN BAR.

plea in confession and avoidance. See CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

plea in discharge. A plea alleging that the defendant has previously satisfied and discharged the plaintiff’s claim.

plea in equity. A special defense relying on one or more reasons why the suit should be dismissed, delayed, or barred. • The various kinds are (1) pleas to the jurisdiction, (2) pleas to the person, (3) pleas to the form of the bill, and (4) pleas in bar of the bill. • Pleas in equity generally fall into two classes: pure pleas and anomalous pleas.

plea in estoppel. Common-law pleading. A plea that neither confesses nor avoids but pleads a previous inconsistent act, allegation, or denial on the part of the adverse party to preclude that party from maintaining an action or defense.

plea in reconvention. Civil law. A plea that sets up a new matter, not as a defense, but as a cross-complaint, setoff, or counterclaim.

plea in suspension. A plea that shows some ground for not proceeding in the suit at the present time and prays that the proceedings be stayed until that ground is removed, such as a party’s being a minor or the plaintiff’s being an alien enemy.

plea not pure. See anomalous plea.

plea of confession and avoidance. See CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

plea of privilege. A plea that raises an objection to the venue of an action. See CHANGE OF VENUE (1).

plea of release. A plea that admits the claim but sets forth a written discharge executed by a party authorized to release the claim. See RELEASE (2).

plea puis darrein continuance (pwis dar-ayn kən-tin-yoo-ənts). [Law French “plea since the last continuance”] A plea that alleges new defensive matter that has arisen during a continuance of the case and that did not exist at the time of the defendant’s last pleading.

plea to further maintenance to the action. Hist. A defensive plea asserting that events occurring after the commencement of the action necessitate its dismissal. • The plea is obsolete because of the pleading requirements in federal and state rules of civil procedure.

plea to the declaration. A plea in abatement that objects to the declaration and applies immediately to it. — Also termed plea to the count.

plea to the jurisdiction. See jurisdictional plea.

plea to the person of the defendant. A plea in abatement alleging that the defendant has a legal disability to be sued.

plea to the person of the plaintiff. A plea in abatement alleging that the plaintiff has a legal disability to sue.

plea to the writ. A plea in abatement that objects to the writ (summons) and applies (1) to the form of the writ for a matter either apparent on the writ's face or outside the writ, or (2) to the way in which the writ was executed or acted on.

pure plea. An equitable plea that affirmatively alleges new matters that are outside the bill. • If proved, the effect is to end the controversy by dismissing, delaying, or barring the suit. A pure plea must track the allegations of the bill, not evade it or mistake its purpose. Originally, this was the only plea known in equity. — Also termed affirmative plea. Cf. anomalous plea.

rolled-up plea. Defamation. A defendant's plea claiming that the statements complained of are factual and that, to the extent that they consist of comment, they are fair comment on a matter of public interest. See FAIR COMMENT.

special plea. A plea alleging one or more new facts rather than merely disputing the legal grounds of the action or charge. • All pleas other than general issues are special pleas. See general issue under ISSUE (1).

plea bargain, n. A negotiated agreement between a prosecutor and a criminal defendant whereby the defendant pleads guilty to a lesser offense or to one of multiple charges in exchange for some concession by the prosecutor, usu. a more lenient sentence or a dismissal of the other charges. — Also termed plea agreement; negotiated plea. — plea-bargain, vb. — plea-bargaining, n.

plead, vb. 1. To make a specific plea, esp. in response to a criminal charge <he pleaded not guilty>. 2. To assert or allege in a pleading <fraud claims must be pleaded with particularity>. 3. To file or deliver a pleading <the plaintiff hasn't pleaded yet>.

pleader, n. 1. A party who asserts a particular pleading. 2. A person who pleads in court on behalf of another. 3. Hist. At common law, a person who (though not an attorney) specialized in preparing pleadings for others. — Also termed special pleader. 4. Hist. NARRATOR.

pleading, n. 1. A formal document in which a party to a legal proceeding (esp. a civil lawsuit) sets forth or responds to allegations, claims, denials, or defenses. • In federal civil procedures, the main pleadings are the plaintiff's complaint and the defendant's answer.

accusatory pleading. An indictment, information, or complaint by which the government begins a criminal prosecution.

amended pleading. A pleading that replaces an earlier pleading and that contains matters omitted from or not known at the time of the earlier pleading.

"An amendment is the correction of an error or the supplying of an omission in the process or pleadings. An amended pleading differs from a supplemental pleading in that the true function of the latter is to spread upon the record matter material to the issue which has arisen subsequent to the filing of a pleading, while matter of amendment purely is matter that might well have been pleaded at the time the pleading sought to be amended was filed, but which through error or inadvertence was omitted or misstated. It has been declared that the allowance of amendments is incidental to the exercise of all judicial power and is indispensable to the ends of justice." Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 68 (1916).

anomalous pleading. A pleading that is partly affirmative and partly negative in its allegations.

articulated pleading. A pleading that states each allegation in a separately numbered paragraph.

defective pleading. A pleading that fails to meet minimum standards of sufficiency or accuracy in form or substance.

responsive pleading. A pleading that replies to an opponent's earlier pleading. See ANSWER.

sham pleading. An obviously frivolous or absurd pleading that is made only for purposes of vexation or delay. — Also termed sham plea; false plea.

shotgun pleading. A pleading that encompasses a wide range of contentions, usu. supported by vague factual allegations.

supplemental pleading. A pleading that either corrects a defect in an earlier pleading or addresses facts arising since the earlier pleading was filed. • Unlike an amended pleading, a supplemental pleading merely adds to the earlier pleading and does not replace it.

2. A system of defining and narrowing the issues in a lawsuit whereby the parties file formal documents alleging their respective positions.

alternative pleading. A form of pleading whereby the pleader alleges two or more independent claims or defenses that are not necessarily consistent with each other, such as alleging both intentional infliction of emotional distress and negligent infliction of emotional distress based on the same conduct. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(e)(2). Cf. DUPLICITY (2); double plea under PLEA (3).

artful pleading. A plaintiff's disguised phrasing of a federal claim as solely a state-law claim in order to prevent a defendant from removing the case from state court to federal court.

code pleading. A procedural system requiring that the pleader allege merely the facts of the case giving rise to the claim, not the legal conclusions necessary to sustain the claim. — Also termed fact pleading. Cf. issue pleading.

common-law pleading. The system of pleading historically used in the three common-law courts of England (the King's Bench, the Common Pleas, and the Exchequer) up to 1873.

equity pleading. The system of pleading used in courts of equity. • In most jurisdictions, rules unique to equity practice have been largely supplanted by rules of court, esp. where law courts and equity courts have merged.

issue pleading. The common-law method of pleading, the main purpose of which was to frame an issue. Cf. code pleading.

notice pleading. A procedural system requiring that the pleader give only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, and not a complete detailing of all the facts. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a).

special pleading. See SPECIAL PLEADING.

3. The legal rules regulating the statement of the plaintiff's claims and the defendant's defenses <today, pleading is a much simpler subject than it was in former years>.

pleading the baby act. See BABY ACT, PLEADING THE.

pleading the Fifth. The act or an instance of asserting one's right against self-incrimination under the Fifth Amendment. — Also termed taking the Fifth. See RIGHT AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION.

plead over, vb. 1. To fail to notice a defective allegation in an opponent's pleading. 2. Hist. To plead the general issue after a defendant has had a dilatory plea overruled. See AIDER BY PLEADING OVER.

plea in abatement. See PLEA (3).

plea in bar. A plea that seeks to defeat the plaintiff's or prosecutor's action completely and permanently.

general plea in bar. A criminal defendant's plea of not guilty by which the defendant denies every fact and circumstance necessary to be convicted of the crime charged.

special plea in bar. A plea that, rather than addressing the merits and denying the facts alleged, sets up some extrinsic fact to show why a criminal defendant cannot be tried for the offense charged. • Examples include the plea of autrefois acquit and the plea of pardon.

plea in confession and avoidance. See CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

plea in discharge. See PLEA (3).

plea in equity. See PLEA (3).

plea in reconvention. See PLEA (3).

plea in suspension. See PLEA (3).

plea not pure. See anomalous plea under PLEA (3).

plea of confession and avoidance. See CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE.

plea of pregnancy. Hist. A plea of a woman convicted of a capital crime to stay her execution until she gives birth. See jury of matrons under JURY.

plea of privilege. See PLEA (3).

plea of release. See PLEA (3).

plea of sanctuary. See DECLINATORY PLEA.

plea of tender. At common law, a pleading asserting that the defendant has consistently been willing to pay the debt demanded, has offered it to the plaintiff, and has brought the money into court ready to pay the plaintiff. See TENDER.

plea puis darrein continuance. See PLEA (3).

pleasure appointment. The assignment of someone to employment that can be taken away at any time, with no requirement for notice or a hearing.

plea to further maintenance to the action.

See PLEA (3).

plea to the count. See plea to the declaration under PLEA (3).

plea to the declaration. See PLEA (3).

plea to the jurisdiction. See jurisdictional plea under PLEA (3).

plea to the person of the defendant. See PLEA (3).

plea to the person of the plaintiff. See PLEA (3).

plea to the writ. See PLEA (3).

plebiscite (pleb-ə-sit or pleb-ə-sit), n. 1. A binding or nonbinding referendum on a proposed law, constitutional amendment, or significant public issue. 2. Int'l law. A direct vote of a country's electorate to decide a question of public importance, such as union with another country or a proposed change to the constitution. — plebiscitary (plə-bi-sə-ter-ee), adj.

plebiscitum (pleb-ə-si-təm), n. [Latin] Roman law. An enactment passed at the request of a tribune by the assembly of the common people (the concilium plebis). Pl. plebiscita. See CONCILIUM PLEBIS.

plebs (plebz), n. [Latin] Roman law. The common people in ancient Rome; the general body of citizens. Pl. plebes (plee-beez).

pledge, n. 1. A bailment or other deposit of personal property to a creditor as security for a debt or obligation; PAWN (2). Cf. LIEN. 2. The item of personal property so deposited; PAWN (1). 3. Broadly, the act of providing something as security for a debt or obligation. 4. The thing so provided. 5. Hist. A person who acts as a surety for the prosecution of a lawsuit. • In early practice, pledges were listed at the end of the declaration. Over time the listing of pledges became a formality, and fictitious names (such as "John Doe" or "Richard Roe") were allowed. — pledge, vb. — pledgeable, adj.

"A pledge is something more than a mere lien and something less than a mortgage." Leonard A. Jones, A Treatise on the Law of Collateral Securities and Pledges § 2, at 4 (Edward M. White rev., 3d ed. 1912).

"A pledge is a bailment of personal property to secure an obligation of the bailor. If the purpose of the transaction is to transfer property for security only, then the courts will hold the transaction a pledge, even though in form it may be a sale or other out-and-out transfer." Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 128, at 622 (2d ed. 1936).

"The pledge is as old as recorded history and is still in use, as the presence of pawnbrokers attests. In this transaction the debtor borrows money by physically transferring to a secured party the possession of the property to be used as security, and the property will be returned if the debt is repaid. Since the debtor does not retain the use of pledged goods, this security device has obvious disadvantages from the debtor's point of view." Ray D. Henson, Secured Transactions § 3-1, at 17 (3d ed. 1983).

pledged account. See ACCOUNT.

pledgee. One with whom a pledge is deposited.

pledgery. Archaic. See SURETYSHIP (1).

pledgor. One who gives a pledge to another. — Also spelled pledger.

plegiis acquietandis. See DE PLEGIIS ACQUIETANDIS.

poaching, n. The illegal taking or killing of fish or game on another's land. — poach, vb.

pocket immunity. See IMMUNITY (3).

pocket money. See HAT MONEY.

pocket part. A supplemental pamphlet inserted usu. into the back inside cover of a lawbook, esp. a treatise or code, to update the material in the main text until the publisher issues a new edition of the entire work. • Legal publishers frequently leave a little extra room inside their hardcover books so that pocket parts may later be added.

pocket veto. See VETO.

P.O.D. abbr. Pay on delivery.

poena (pee-nə). [Latin] Punishment; penalty.

poena corporalis (pee-nə kor-pə-ray-lis). [Latin] Corporal punishment.

poenae secundarum nuptiarum (pee-nee sek-ən-dāir-əm nəp-shee-air-əm), n. [Latin "penalties of second marriages"] Roman law. Disabilities that, for the protection of children of a first marriage, are imposed on a parent who remarries. See PARENS BINUBUS.

"If either parent re-married, the interests of the children of the first marriage were protected (in the later Roman Empire) by a number of legal rules the effect of which was to confer certain benefits on the children and to impose certain disabilities — the so-called poenae secundarum nuptiarum — on the parens binubus. The most important of these rules was that which declared that all the property which the parens binubus had acquired gratuitously from his or her deceased spouse, whether by way of gift, dos, donatio propter nuptias, or testamentary disposition — the so-called lucra nuptialia — should become ipso jure the property of the children of the first marriage at the moment of the conclusion of the second marriage, and that only a usufruct should be reserved for the parens binubus." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 477 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

poenalis (pi-nay-lis), adj. [Latin] Roman law. Imposing a penalty; penal.

poena pilloralis (pee-nə pil-ə-ray-lis). [Latin] Hist. Punishment of the pillory.

poenitentia (pee-nə-ten-shee-ə or pen-ə). [Latin] Roman law. Reconsideration; changing one's mind.

pointing (pin-ding). Scots law. A judgment creditor's seizing of a debtor's property to satisfy the debt.

point, n. 1. A pertinent and distinct legal proposition, issue, or argument <point of error>. 2. One percent of the face value of a loan (esp. a mortgage loan), paid up front to the lender as a service charge or placement fee <the borrower hoped for only a two-point fee on the mortgage>. — Also termed mortgage point. See MORTGAGE DISCOUNT. 3. A unit used for quoting stock, bond, or commodity prices <the stock closed up a few points today>.

point-and-click agreement. An electronic version of a shrink-wrap license in which a computer user agrees to the terms of an electronically displayed agreement by pointing the mouse to a particular location on the screen and then clicking. See shrink-wrap license under LICENSE.

poisonous-tree doctrine. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE.

poison pill. A corporation's defense against an unwanted takeover bid whereby shareholders are granted the right to acquire equity or debt securities at a favorable price to increase the bidder's acquisition costs. See SHARK REPELLENT. Cf. PORCUPINE PROVISION.

"Another recent tactic is the 'poison pill' which is a conditional stock right that is triggered by a hostile takeover and makes the takeover prohibitively expensive. The poison pill is a variation of the scorched earth defense. . . ." Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation § 11.20, at 575 (2d ed. 1990).

police, n. 1. The governmental department charged with the preservation of public order, the promotion of public safety, and the prevention and detection of crime. 2. The officers or members of this department.

police blotter. See ARREST RECORD.

police court. See magistrate's court (1) under COURT.

police jury. Civil law. The governing body of a parish.

police justice. See police magistrate under MAGISTRATE.

police magistrate. See MAGISTRATE.

police officer. A peace officer responsible for preserving public order, promoting public safety, and preventing and detecting crime. Cf. PEACE OFFICER.

police power. 1. The inherent and plenary power of a sovereign to make all laws necessary and proper to preserve the public security, order, health, morality, and justice. • It is a fundamental power essential to government, and it cannot be surrendered by the legislature or irrevocably transferred away from government.

"[I]t is possible to evolve at least two main attributes or characteristics which differentiate the police power: it aims directly to secure and promote the public welfare, and it does so by restraint or compulsion." Ernst Freund, The Police Power § 3, at 3 (1904).

2. A state's Tenth Amendment right, subject to due-process and other limitations, to establish and enforce laws protecting the public's health, safety, and general welfare, or to delegate this right to local governments. 3. Loosely, the power of the government to intervene in the use of privately owned property, as by subjecting it to eminent domain. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

political gerrymandering. See GERRYMANDERING (1).

political law. See POLITICAL SCIENCE.

political liberty. See LIBERTY.

political offense. A crime directed against the security or governmental system of a nation, such as treason, sedition, or espionage. • Under principles of international law, the perpetrator of such an offense cannot be extradited.

political party. An organization of voters formed to influence the government's conduct and policies by nominating and electing candidates to public office. • The United States has traditionally maintained a two-party system, which today comprises the Democratic and Republican parties.

political patronage. See PATRONAGE (3).

political power. The power vested in a person or body of persons exercising any function of the state; the capacity to influence the activities of the body politic. — Also termed civil power.

sovereign political power. Power that is absolute and uncontrolled within its own sphere. • Within its designated limits, its exercise and effective operation do not depend on, and are not subject to, the power of any other person and cannot be prevented or annulled by any other power recognized within the constitutional system. — Often shortened to sovereign power. — Also termed supreme power.

subordinate political power. Power that, within its own sphere of operation, is subject in some degree to external control because there exists some superior constitutional power that can prevent, restrict, direct, or annul its operation. — Often shortened to subordinate power.

political question. A question that a court will not consider because it involves the exercise of discretionary power by the executive or legislative branch of government. — Also termed non-justiciable question. Cf. JUDICIAL QUESTION.

political-question doctrine. The judicial principle that a court should refuse to decide an issue involving the exercise of discretionary power by the executive or legislative branch of government.

political right. See RIGHT.

political science. The branch of learning concerned with the study of the principles and conduct of government. — Also termed political law.

political society. See STATE (1).

polygamy (pə-lig-ə-mee), n. The state of being simultaneously married to more than one spouse; multiple marriages. — polygamous, adj. — polygamist, n. Cf. BIGAMY; MONOGAMY.

“Polygamy (many marriages) is employed at times as a synonym of bigamy and at other times to indicate the simultaneous marriage of two or more spouses.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 458 (3d ed. 1982).

polygarchy. See POLYARCHY.

polygraph, n. A device used to evaluate veracity by measuring and recording involuntary physiological changes in the human body during interrogation. • Polygraph results are inadmissible as evidence in most states. — Also termed lie detector. — polygraphic, adj. — polygraphy, n.

polygyny (pə-lij-ə-nee). The condition or practice of having more than one wife. Cf. POLYANDRY.

pone (poh-nee). [Latin “put”] Hist. An original writ used to remove an action from an inferior court (such as a manorial court or county court) to a superior court. • The writ was so called from the initial words of its mandate, which required the recipient to “put” the matter before the court issuing the writ.

ponendis in assisis (pə-nen-dis in ə-si-zis). [Latin “to be placed in assizes”] Hist. A writ directing the sheriff to empanel a jury for an assize or real action.

ponendo sigillum ad exceptionem. See DE PONENDO SIGILLUM AD EXCEPTIONEM.

ponendum in ballium (pə-nen-dəm in bal-ee-əm). [Latin “to be placed in bail”] Hist. A writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in a bailable matter.

pone per vadium (poh-nee pər vay-dee-əm). [Latin] Hist. A writ commanding the sheriff to summon a defendant who has failed to appear in response to an initial writ by attaching some of the defendant’s property and requiring the defendant to find sureties. • It was so called from the words of the writ, pone per vadium et salvos plegios (“put by gage and safe pledges”).

ponit loco suo (poh-nit loh-ko s[y]oo-oh). [Latin] Puts in his place. • This phrase was formerly used in a power of attorney. — Abbr. po. lo. suo.

ponit se super patriam (poh-nit see s[y]oo-pər pay-tree-əm or pa-tree-əm). [Latin “he puts himself upon the country”] Hist. A defendant’s plea of not guilty in a criminal action. — Abbr. po. se. See GOING TO THE COUNTRY; PATRIA (3).

pontiff. 1. Roman law. A member of the council of priests in ancient Rome. — Also termed pontifex.

“The specialists who interpreted the Twelve Tables and the unwritten part of the law were called pontiffs. At first they dealt with both sacred law (how to appease the gods) and secular law (how to secure peace among men). Some of them later confined themselves to secular law. As an example of how they interpreted the law, the Twelve Tables said that if a father sells his son three times (into bondage, to pay off debts) the son is to be free from his father’s power. The Twelve Tables said nothing about a daughter. The pontiffs held that if a father sold his daughter once, she was free.” Tony Honoré, About Law 13 (1995).

2. The leader of the Catholic Church; the Pope.

Ponzi scheme (pon-zee). A fraudulent investment scheme in which money contributed by later investors generates artificially high dividends for the original investors, whose example attracts even larger investments. • Money from the new investors is used directly to repay or pay interest to old investors, usu. without any operation or revenue-producing activity other than the continual raising of new funds. This scheme takes its name from Charles Ponzi, who in the late 1920s was convicted for fraudulent schemes he conducted in Boston. Cf. PYRAMID SCHEME.

pool, n. 1. An association of individuals or entities who share resources and funds to promote their joint undertaking; esp., an association of persons engaged in buying or selling commodities. • If such an association is formed to eliminate competition throughout a single industry, it is a restraint of trade that violates federal antitrust laws. 2. A gambling scheme in which numerous persons contribute stakes for betting on a particular event (such as a sporting event).

pooling. See COMMUNITIZATION.

pooling agreement. A contractual arrangement by which corporate shareholders agree that their shares will be voted as a unit. — Also termed voting agreement; shareholder voting agreement; shareholder-control agreement.

pooling of interests. A method of accounting used in mergers, whereby the acquired company's assets are recorded on the acquiring company's books at their cost when originally acquired. • No goodwill account is created under the pooling method.

pop, n. Telecommunications. A calculation of the potential customer base for a mobile-phone-service provider, calculated by the number of people living in the area multiplied by the company's percentage ownership of the area's cellular service.

Poppean law. See LEX PAPIA POPPEA.

popular action. See QUI TAM ACTION.

popular election. See ELECTION.

popular justice. See JUSTICE (1).

populus (pop-yə-ləs). [Latin] Roman law. The people; the whole body of Roman citizens, patricians, and plebeians.

porcupine provision. A clause in a corporation's charter or bylaws designed to prevent a takeover without the consent of the board of directors. Cf. SHARK REPELLENT; POISON PILL.

pork-barrel legislation. See LEGISLATION.

pornography, n. Material (such as writings, photographs, or movies) depicting sexual activity or erotic behavior in a way that is designed to arouse sexual excitement. • Pornography is protected speech under the First Amendment unless it is determined to be legally obscene. — pornographic, adj. See OBSCENITY.

child pornography. Material depicting a person under the age of 18 engaged in sexual activity. • Child pornography is not protected by the First Amendment — even if it falls short of the legal standard for obscenity — and those directly involved in its distribution can be criminally punished.

port. 1. A harbor where ships load and unload cargo. 2. Any place where persons and cargo are allowed to enter a country and where customs officials are stationed. — Also termed (in sense 2) port of entry.

foreign port. 1. One exclusively within the jurisdiction of another country or state. 2. A port other than a home port.

home port. The port that is either where a vessel is registered or where its owner resides.

port of call. A port at which a ship stops during a voyage.

port of delivery. The port that is the terminus of any particular voyage and where the ship unloads its cargo.

port of departure. The port from which a vessel departs on the start of a voyage.

port of destination. The port at which a voyage is to end. • This term generally includes any stopping places at which the ship receives or unloads cargo.

port of discharge. The place where a substantial part of the cargo is discharged.

portable business. A law practice that an attorney can take from one firm or geographic location to another, with little loss in client relationships. — Also termed portable practice.

port authority. A state or federal agency that regulates traffic through a port or that establishes and maintains airports, bridges, tollways, and public transportation.

portfolio. The various securities or other investments held by an investor at any given time. • An investor will often hold several different types of investments in a portfolio for the purpose of diversifying risk.

market portfolio. A value-weighted portfolio of every asset in a particular market.

portfolio income. See INCOME.

portio legitima (por-shee-oh lə-jit-ə-mə). [Latin "lawful portion"] Civil law. The portion of an inheritance that a given heir is entitled to, and of which the heir cannot be deprived by the testator without special cause.

portion. A share or allotted part (as of an estate).

port of call. See PORT.

port of delivery. See PORT.

port of discharge. See PORT.

port of entry. See PORT.

portorium (por-tohr-ee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist.

1. A tax or toll levied at a port or at the gates of a city. 2. A toll for passing over a bridge.

port-risk insurance. See INSURANCE.

portsale. Hist. A public sale of goods to the highest bidder; an auction.

port toll. A duty paid for bringing goods into a port.

portwarden. An official responsible for the administration of a port.

po. se. abbr. PONIT SE SUPER PATRIAM.

position. The extent of a person's investment in a particular security or market.

position of the United States. The legal position of the federal government in a case involving the Equal Access to Justice Act. • The position's reasonableness in light of precedent determines whether the government will be liable for the opposing party's attorney's fees.

positive act. See OVERT ACT.

positive condition. See CONDITION (2).

positive covenant. See COVENANT (1).

positive duty. See DUTY (1).

positive easement. See affirmative easement under EASEMENT.

positive evidence. See direct evidence (1) under EVIDENCE.

positive externality. See EXTERNALITY.

positive fraud. See actual fraud under FRAUD.

positive justice. See JUSTICE (1).

positive law. A system of law promulgated and implemented within a particular political community by political superiors, as distinct from moral law or law existing in an ideal community or in some nonpolitical community. • Positive law typically consists of enacted law — the codes, statutes, and regulations that are applied and enforced in the courts. The term derives from the medieval use of positum (Latin “established”), so that the phrase positive law literally means law established by human authority. — Also termed jus positivum; made law. Cf. NATURAL LAW.

“A judge is tethered to the positive law but should not be shackled to it.” Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 94 (1968).

positive misprision. See MISPRISION.

positive notice. See direct notice under NOTICE.

positive prescription. See PRESCRIPTION (2).

positive proof. See PROOF.

positive reprisal. See REPRISAL.

positive servitude. See SERVITUDE (1).

positive testimony. See affirmative testimony under TESTIMONY.

positive wrong. See WRONG.

positivi juris (poz-ə-ti-vi joor-is). [Law Latin] Of positive law. See POSITIVE LAW.

positivism. The doctrine that all true knowledge is derived from observable phenomena, rather than speculation or reasoning. See LEGAL POSITIVISM; LOGICAL POSITIVISM; positivist jurisprudence under JURISPRUDENCE.

positivistic, adj. Of or relating to legal positivism. See LEGAL POSITIVISM.

positivistic jurisprudence. See positivist jurisprudence under JURISPRUDENCE.

posse (pos-ee). [Latin] 1. A possibility. See IN POSSE. Cf. IN ESSE. 2. Power; ability.

posse comitatus (pos-ee kom-ə-tay-təs), n. [Latin "power of the county"] A group of citizens who are called together to assist the sheriff in keeping the peace. — Often shortened to posse.

possess, vb. To have in one's actual control; to have possession of. — possessor, n.

possessio (pə-zes[h]-ee-oh). [Latin] The de facto relation between the holder of a thing and the thing itself.

pedis possessio (pee-dis or ped-is pə-zes[h]-ee-oh). [Latin] A foothold; an actual possession of real property, implying either actual occupancy or enclosure or use. See PEDIS POSSESSIO DOCTRINE.

possessio bona fide (pə-zes[h]-ee-oh boh-nə fi-dee). [Latin] Possession in good faith. Cf. possessio mala fide.

possessio bonorum (pə-zes[h]-ee-oh bə-nor-əm). [Latin] Roman law. Possession of goods.

possessio civilis (pə-zes[h]-ee-oh sə-vi-lis). [Latin] Roman law. Legal possession; that is, possession accompanied with an intent to become the owner. • Possessio civilis served as the basis for acquiring property by prescription (usucapio). Cf. possessio naturalis.

possessio fratris (pə-zes[h]-ee-oh fray-tris or fra-tris). [Latin] Hist. The possession or seisin of a brother; that is, a possession of an estate by a brother that would entitle his full sister to succeed him as heir, to the exclusion of a half-brother.

possessio mala fide (pə-zes[h]-ee-oh mal-ə fi-dee). [Latin] Possession in bad faith. Cf. possessio bona fide.

possessio naturalis (pə-zes[h]-ee-oh nach-ə-ray-lis). [Latin "natural possession"] Roman law. The simple holding of a thing, with no intent of keeping it permanently. — Also termed nuda detentio. See natural possession under POSSESSION. Cf. possessio civilis.

possession. 1. The fact of having or holding property in one's power; the exercise of dominion over property. 2. The right under which one may exercise control over something to the exclusion of all others; the continuing exercise of a claim to the exclusive use of a material object. 3. (usu. pl.) Something that a person owns or controls; PROPERTY (2). 4. A territorial dominion of a state or nation. Cf. OWNERSHIP; TITLE (1).

"[A]s the name of Possession is . . . one of the most important in our books, so it is one of the most ambiguous. Its legal senses (for they are several) overlap the popular sense, and even the popular sense includes the assumption of matters of fact which are not always easy to verify. In common speech a man is said to possess or to be in possession of anything of which he has the apparent control, or from the use of which he has the apparent power of excluding others. . . . [A]ny of the usual outward marks of ownership may suffice, in the absence of manifest power in some one else, to denote as having possession the person to whom they attach. Law takes this popular conception as a provisional groundwork, and builds up on it the notion of possession in a technical sense, as a definite legal relation to something capable of having an owner, which relation is distinct and separable both from real and from apparent ownership, though often concurrent with one or both of them." Frederick Pollock & Robert Samuel Wright, An Essay on Possession in the Common Law 1-2 (1888).

"In the whole range of legal theory there is no conception more difficult than that of possession. The Roman lawyers brought their usual acumen to the analysis of it, and since their day the problem has formed the subject of a voluminous literature, while it still continues to tax the ingenuity of jurists. Nor is the question one of mere curiosity or scientific interest, for its practical importance is not less than its difficulty. The legal consequences which flow from the acquisition and loss of possession are many and serious. Possession, for example, is evidence of ownership; the possessor of a thing is presumed to be the owner of it, and may put all other claimants to proof of their title." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 285 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

actual possession. Physical occupancy or control over property. Cf. constructive possession.

adverse possession. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

bona fide possession. Possession of property by a person who in good faith does not know that the property's ownership is disputed.

civil possession. Civil law. Possession existing by virtue of a person's intent to own a property even though the person no longer occupies or has physical control of it.

constructive possession. Control or dominion over a property without actual possession or custody of it. — Also termed effective possession; possessio fictitia. Cf. actual possession.

corporeal possession. Possession of a material object, such as a farm or a coin. — Also termed natural possession; possessio corporis; (Ger.) Sachenbesitz.

derivative possession. Lawful possession by one (such as a tenant) who does not hold title.

direct possession. See immediate possession.

effective possession. See constructive possession.

exclusive possession. The exercise of exclusive dominion over property, including the use and benefit of the property.

hostile possession. Possession asserted against the claims of all others, including the record owner. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

immediate possession. Possession that is acquired or retained directly or personally. — Also termed direct possession.

incorporeal possession. Possession of something other than a material object, such as an easement over a neighbor's land, or the access of light to the windows of a house. — Also termed possessio juris; quasi-possession.

"It is a question much debated whether incorporeal possession is in reality true possession at all. Some are of opinion that all genuine possession is corporeal, and that the other is related to it by way of analogy merely. They maintain that there is no single generic conception which includes possessio corporis and possessio juris as its two specific forms. The Roman lawyers speak with hesitation and even inconsistency on the point. They sometimes include both forms under the title of possessio, while at other times they are careful to qualify incorporeal possession as quasi possessio — something which is not true possession, but is analogous to it. The question is one of no little difficulty, but the opinion here accepted is that the two forms do in truth belong to a single genus. The true idea of possession is wider than that of corporeal possession, just as the true idea of ownership is wider than that of corporeal ownership." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 288-89 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

indirect possession. See mediate possession.

insular possession. An island territory of the United States, such as Puerto Rico.

mediate possession (mee-dee-it). Possession of a thing through someone else, such as an agent. • In every instance of mediate possession, there is a direct possessor (such as an agent) as well as a mediate possessor (the principal). — Also termed indirect possession.

"If I go myself to purchase a book, I acquire direct possession of it; but if I send my servant to buy it for me, I acquire mediate possession of it through him, until he has brought it to me, when my possession becomes immediate." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 300 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

naked possession. The mere possession of something, esp. real estate, without any apparent right or colorable title to it.

natural possession. Civil law. The exercise of physical detention or control over a thing, as by occupying a building or cultivating farmland. • Natural possession may be had without title, and may give rise to a claim of unlawful possession or a claim of ownership by acquisitive prescription. The term "natural possession" has been replaced by the term "corporeal possession" in the Louisiana Civil Code, by virtue of a 1982 revision. The change was nonsubstantive. La. Civ. Code Ann. art. 3425 (West 1994). See corporeal possession; PRESCRIPTION (2).

notorious possession. Possession or control that is evident to others; possession of property that, because it is generally known by people in the area where the property is located, gives rise to a presumption that the actual owner has notice of it. • Notorious possession is one element of adverse possession. — Also termed open possession; open and notorious possession. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

peaceable possession. Possession (as of real property) not disturbed by another's hostile or legal attempts to recover possession. Cf. ADVERSE POSSESSION.

pedal possession. Actual possession, as by living on the land or by improving it. • This term usu. appears in adverse-possession contexts.

possession in fact. Actual possession that may or may not be recognized by law. • For example, an employee's possession of an employer's property is for some purposes not legally considered possession, the term detention or custody being used instead. — Also termed possessio naturalis.

possession in law. 1. Possession that is recognized by the law either because it is a specific type of possession in fact or because the law for some special reason attributes the advantages and results of possession to someone who does not in fact possess. 2. See constructive possession. — Also termed possessio civilis.

"There is no conception which will include all that amounts to possession in law, and will include nothing else, and it is impossible to frame any definition from which the concrete law of possession can be logically deduced." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 287 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

possession of a right. The de facto relation of continuing exercise and enjoyment of a right, as opposed to the de jure relation of ownership. — Also termed possessio juris; (Ger.) Rechtsbesitz.

precarious possession. Civil law. Possession of property by someone other than the owner on behalf of or with permission of the owner. • A lessee may have precarious possession of the leased property.

quasi possession. See incorporeal possession.

scrambling possession. Possession that is uncertain because it is in dispute. • With scrambling possession, the dispute is over who actually has possession — not over whether a party's possession is lawful.

possession unity. See unity of possession under UNITY.

possessor. One who has possession. — possessorial (pos-ə-sor-ee-əl), adj.

possessor bona fide (boh-nə fi-dee). A possessor who believes that no other person has a better right to the possession.

possessor mala fide (mal-ə fi-dee). A possessor who knows that someone else has a better right to the possession.

possessorium (pos-ə-sor-ee-əm). See possessory action under ACTION.

possessory (pə-zes-ə-ree), adj. Of, relating to, or having possession.

possessory action. See ACTION.

possessory claim. The title of a claimant to public land who has filed a declaratory statement but has not paid for the land.

possessory conservator. See CONSERVATOR.

possessory garageman's lien. See LIEN.

possessory interest. 1. The present right to control property, including the right to exclude others, by a person who is not necessarily the owner. 2. A present or future right to the exclusive use and possession of property.

"We shall use the term 'possessory interest' to include both present and future interests, and to exclude such interests as easements and profits. The reader should note that the Restatement of Property uses the term 'possessory' to refer only to interests that entitle the owner to present possession. See Restatement, Property §§ 7, 9, 153 (1936)." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 19–20 n.1 (2d ed. 1984).

possessory lien. See LIEN.

possessory warrant. A process similar to a search warrant used by a civil plaintiff to search for and recover property wrongfully taken.

possibilitas (pos-ə-bil-ə-tas). [Latin] Possibility; a possibility.

possibility. 1. An event that may or may not happen. 2. A contingent interest in real or personal property.

naked possibility. A mere chance or expectation that a person will acquire future property. • A conveyance of a naked possibility is usu. void for lack of subject matter, as in a deed conveying all rights to a future estate not yet in existence. — Also termed bare possibility; naked expectancy.

possibility coupled with an interest. An expectation recognized in law as an estate or interest, as occurs in an executory devise or in a shifting or springing use. • This type of possibility may be sold or assigned.

remote possibility. A limitation dependent on two or more facts or events that are contingent and uncertain; a double possibility. — Also termed possibility on a possibility.

possibility of reverter. A future interest retained by a grantor after conveying a fee simple determinable, so that the grantee's estate terminates automatically and reverts to the grantor if the terminating event ever occurs. • In this type of interest, the grantor transfers an estate whose maximum potential duration equals that of the grantor's own estate and attaches a special limitation that operates in the grantor's favor. — Often shortened to reverter. See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE. Cf. POWER OF TERMINATION.

"Most treatise-writers define the possibility of reverter as the interest a transferor keeps when he transfers a fee simple determinable or a fee simple conditional. See, e.g., 1 American Law of Property § 4.12; Simes & Smith § 281. Although this definition is all right as far as it goes, it fails to provide for interests less than the fee simple that are granted on special limitation... Although we call the possibility of reverter an 'estate,' the courts of an earlier era would probably have called it a 'possibility of becoming an estate.'" Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 58 n.5 (2d ed. 1984).

possibility on a possibility. See remote possibility under POSSIBILITY.

POSSLQ (pahs-əl-kyoo). abbr. A person of opposite sex sharing living quarters. • Although this term is intended to include only a person's roommate of the opposite sex to whom the person is not married, the phrase literally includes those who are married. This overbreadth has occasionally been criticized. See CUPOS.

"In the 1980 census, the United States Census Bureau — recognizing a societal change with numerous persons living together without being 'officially' married — counted not only persons who were 'Single' and 'Married,' but also 'Persons of the Opposite Sex Sharing Living Quarters.' The acronym is POSSLQ — and, of course, is pronounced possle-kew. It has been suggested that, although the source was stunningly unlikely, it was the Very Word that society has been looking for to describe these relationships: POSSLQ. Precise, business-like, nonjudgmental. And, in its own way, sort of poetic, too" Fischer v. Dallas Federal Savings and Loan Ass'n, 106 F.R.D. 465 (N.D. Tex. 1985).

post. [Latin] After. Cf. ANTE.

post, vb. 1. To publicize or announce by affixing a notice in a public place <foreclosure notice was posted at the county courthouse>. 2. To transfer (accounting entries) from an original record to a ledger <post debits and credits>. 3. To place in the mail <post a letter>. 4. To make a payment or deposit; to put up <post bail>.

post disseisina. See DE POST DISSEISINA.

postea (poh-stee-ə), n. [Latin "afterwards"] Hist. A formal statement, endorsed on a nisi prius record, giving an account of the proceedings at the trial of the action.

"With the verdict of the jury [in the 15th–18th centuries] . . . the proceedings at nisi prius closed, and the case was sent back to the court at Westminster from which it issued for judgment, after a statement of the holding of the trial and of the verdict had been added to the record. This statement, from the fact that it began with the Latin word 'postea,' or 'afterwards,' was known as the 'postea' and was in fact drafted by the party in whose favour the verdict had gone, whence the phrase 'postea to the plaintiff' or 'the defendant,' which is found in the old reports." Geoffrey Radcliffe & Geoffrey Cross, The English Legal System 185 (G.J. Hand & D.J. Bentley eds., 6th ed. 1977).

posted water. See WATER.

posteriores (pah-steer-ee-or-eez). [Latin] Roman law. Descendants in a direct line beyond the sixth degree.

posteriority (pah-steer-ee-or-ə-tee). The condition or state of being subsequent. ● This word was formerly used to describe the relationships existing between a tenant and the two or more lords the tenant held of; the tenant held the older tenancy "by priority" and the more recent one "by posteriority."

posterity, n. 1. Future generations collectively. 2. All the descendants of a person to the furthest generation.

postjudgment discovery. See DISCOVERY.

postliminium (pohst-lə-min-ee-əm), n. [fr. Lat. in post "after" + limen "threshold"] 1. Roman & civil law. The doctrine that a restoration of a person's lost rights or status relates back to the time of the original loss or deprivation, esp. in regard to the restoration of the status of a prisoner of war.

"[A] person who is taken captive and comes back within the limits of the Empire is correctly described as returning by postliminium. By 'limen' (threshold) we mean the frontier of a house, and the old lawyers applied the word to the frontier of the Roman State; so that the word postliminium conveys the idea of recrossing the frontier. If a prisoner is recovered from a beaten foe he is deemed to have come back by postliminium." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 85-86 (4th ed. 1956).

2. Int'l law. The act of invalidating all an occupying force's illegal acts, and the post-occupation revival of all illegitimately modified legal relations to their former condition, esp. the restoration of property to its rightful owner. — Also termed postliminy.

post litem motam (pohst li-təm moh-təm). [Law Latin] After suit commenced. • Depositions held after litigation had begun were formerly sometimes so called.

postman. Hist. A barrister in the Court of Exchequer who had precedence in motions. • The postman was so called because of the post he stood next to when making motions.

posttrial motion. See MOTION.

postulatio (pos-chə-lay-shee-oh). [Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. A petition requesting the transfer of a bishop.

postulatio actionis (pos-chə-lay-shee-oh ak-shee-oh-nis). [Latin] Roman law. A request or petition to a magistrate having jurisdiction for permission to bring an action to redress a wrong. • This was similar to the former practice of applying for a writ.

potentate (poh-tən-tayt). A ruler who possesses great power or sway; a monarch.

potentia (pə-ten-shee-ə). [Latin] Possibility; power.

potential, adj. Capable of coming into being; possible <things having a potential existence may be the subject of mortgage, assignment, or sale>.

potential Pareto superiority. See WEALTH MAXIMIZATION.

potentia propinqua (pə-ten-shee-ə prə-ping-kwə). [Latin] Common possibility.

potestas (pə-tes-təs). [Latin “power”] Roman law. Authority or power, such as the power of a magistrate to enforce the law, or the authority of a master over a slave.

patria potestas (pay-tree-ə or pa-tree-ə pə-tes-təs). [Latin “paternal power”] The authority held by the male head of a family over his children and further descendants in the male line, unless emancipated. • Initially, the father had extensive powers over the family, including the power of life and death. Over time, the broad nature of the patria potestas gradually became more in the nature of a responsibility to support and maintain family members.

“The power of the father continued ordinarily to the close of his life, and included not only his own children, but also the children of his sons, and those of his sons’ sons, if any such were born during his lifetime.... Originally and for a long time the patria potestas had a terribly despotic character. Not only was the father entitled to all the service and all the acquisitions of his child, as much as to those of a slave, but he had the same absolute control over his person. He could inflict upon him any punishment however severe.... Consider now that the patria potestas had this character and extent down to the Christian era: that, in general, every citizen of the republic who had a living father was in this condition, unable to hold property, unable to acquire any thing for himself, wholly dependent on his father in property and person ... without help or vindication from the law.... The reason which caused the Romans to accept and uphold the patria potestas, to maintain it with singular tenacity against the influence of other systems with which they came in contact, must have been the profound impression of family unity, the conviction that every family was, and of right ought to be, one body, with one will and one executive.” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 119–21 (1881).

pound, n. 1. A place where impounded property is held until redeemed. 2. A place for the detention of stray animals. 3. A measure of weight equal to 16 avoirdupois ounces or 7,000 grains. 4. The basic monetary unit of the United Kingdom, equal to 100 pence. — Also termed (in sense 4) pound sterling.

Powell doctrine. See CORRUPT-MOTIVE DOCTRINE.

power. 1. The ability to act or not act. 2. Dominance, control, or influence over another. 3. The legal right or authorization to act or not act; the ability conferred on a person by the law to alter, by an act of will, the rights, duties, liabilities, or other legal relations either of that person or of another. 4. A document granting legal authorization. See AUTHORITY. 5. An authority to affect an estate in land by (1) creating some estate independently of any estate that the holder of the authority possesses, (2) imposing a charge on the estate, or (3) revoking an existing estate. See POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

appendant power (ə-pen-dənt). 1. A power that gives the donee a right to appoint estates that attach to the donee’s own interest. 2. A power held by a donee who owns the property interest in the assets subject to the power, and whose interest can be divested by the exercise of the power. ● The power appendant is generally viewed as adding nothing to the ownership and thus is not now generally recognized as a true power. — Also termed power appendant.

beneficial power. A power that is executed for the benefit of the power’s donee, as distinguished from a trust power, which is executed for the benefit of someone other than the power’s donee (i.e., a trust beneficiary).

collateral power. A power created when the donee has no estate in the land, but simply the authority to appoint.

concurrent power. A political power independently exercisable by both federal and state governments in the same field of legislation.

congressional power. The authority vested in the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives to enact laws and take other constitutionally permitted actions. U.S. Const. art. I.

enumerated power. A political power specifically delegated to a governmental branch by a constitution. — Also termed express power.

general power. Power that can be exercised in anyone’s favor, including the agent, to affect another’s interest in property; a power that authorizes the alienation of a fee to any alienee.

implied power. A political power that is not enumerated but that nonetheless exists because it is needed to carry out an express power.

incident power. A power that, although not expressly granted, must exist because it is necessary to the accomplishment of an express purpose. — Also termed incidental power.

inherent power. A power that necessarily derives from an office, position, or status.

institorial power (in-stə-tor-ee-əl). Civil law. The power given by a business owner to an agent to act in the owner’s behalf.

investigatory power (in-ves-tə-gə-tor-ee). (usu. pl.) The authority conferred on a governmental agency to inspect and compel disclosure of facts germane to an investigation.

judicial power. See JUDICIAL POWER.

naked power. The power to exercise rights over something (such as a trust) without having a corresponding interest in that thing. Cf. power coupled with an interest.

plenary power (plee-nə-ree or plen-ə-ree). Power that is broadly construed; esp., a court’s power to dispose of any matter properly before it.

police power. See POLICE POWER.

power appendant. See appendant power.

power coupled with an interest. A power to do some act, conveyed along with an interest in the subject matter of the power. ● A power coupled with an interest is not held for the benefit of the principal, and it is irrevocable due to the agent’s interest in the subject property. For this reason, some authorities assert that it is not a true agency power. — Also termed power given as security; proprietary power. Cf. naked power.

"[S]uppose that the principal borrows money from the agent and by way of security authorizes the agent to sell Blackacre if the loan is not repaid and pay himself out of the proceeds. In such case there is no more reason why the principal should be permitted to revoke than if he had formally conveyed or mortgaged Blackacre to the agent. Hence it would be highly unfair to the agent to allow his principal to revoke. The reason why such a case is not properly governed by the considerations usually making an agency revocable is that this is in reality not a case of agency at all. In a normal agency case the power is conferred upon the agent to enable him to do something for the principal while here it is given to him to enable him to do something for himself. Coupled with an interest means that the agent must have a present interest in the property upon which the power is to operate." Harold Gill Reuschlein & William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership § 47, at 99 (1990).

power in gross. A power held by a donee who has an interest in the assets subject to the power but whose interest cannot be affected by the exercise of the power. • An example is a life tenant with a power over the remainder.

power of acceptance. An offeree's power to bind an offeror to a contract by accepting the offer.

power of revocation (rev-ə-kay-shən). A power that a person reserves in an instrument (such as a trust) to revoke the legal relationship that the person has created.

durable power of attorney. A power of attorney that remains in effect during the grantor's incompetency. • Such instruments commonly allow an agent to make healthcare decisions for a patient who has become incompetent.

general power of attorney. A power of attorney that authorizes an agent to transact business for the principal.

irrevocable power of attorney (i-rev-ə-kə-bəl). A power of attorney that the principal cannot revoke. — Also termed power of attorney coupled with an interest. See power coupled with an interest under POWER.

power of attorney coupled with an interest. See irrevocable power of attorney.

special power of attorney. A power of attorney that limits the agent's authority to only a specified matter.

power of revocation (rev-ə-kay-shən). See POWER.

power of sale. See POWER.

power-of-sale clause. A provision in a mortgage or deed of trust permitting the mortgagee or trustee to sell the property without court authority if the payments are not made.

power-of-sale foreclosure. See FORECLOSURE.

power of termination. A future interest retained by a grantor after conveying a fee simple subject to a condition subsequent, so that the grantee's estate terminates (upon breach of the condition) only if the grantor exercises the right to retake it. — Also termed right of entry; right of reentry; right of entry for breach of condition; right of entry for condition broken. See fee simple subject to a condition subsequent under FEE SIMPLE. Cf. POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER.

power over oneself. See CAPACITY (2).

power over other persons. See AUTHORITY (1).

power politics. Int'l law. An approach to foreign policy that encourages a nation to use its economic and military strength to enlarge its own power as an end in itself; a system in which a country is willing to bring its economic and (esp.) military strength to bear in an effort to increase its own power.

practice book. A volume devoted to the procedures in a particular court or category of courts, usu. including court rules, court forms, and practice directions.

practice court. 1. MOOT COURT. 2. (cap.) BAIL COURT.

practice of law. The professional work of a duly licensed lawyer, encompassing a broad range of services such as conducting cases in court, preparing papers necessary to bring about various transactions from conveying land to effecting corporate mergers, preparing legal opinions on various points of law, drafting wills and other estate-planning documents, and advising clients on countless types of legal questions. • The term also includes activities that comparatively few lawyers engage in but that require legal expertise, such as drafting legislation and court rules. — Also termed legal practice. Cf. LAW PRACTICE.

unauthorized practice of law. The practice of law by a person, typically a nonlawyer, who has not been licensed or admitted to practice law in a given jurisdiction. — Abbr. UPL.

“The definitions and tests employed by courts to delineate unauthorized practice by non-lawyers have been vague or conclusory, while jurisdictions have differed significantly in describing what constitutes unauthorized practice in particular areas.

“Certain activities, such as the representation of another person in litigation, are generally proscribed. Even in that area, many jurisdictions recognize exceptions for such matters as small-claims and landlord-tenant tribunals and certain proceedings in administrative agencies. Moreover, many jurisdictions have authorized law students and others not locally admitted to represent indigent persons or others as part of clinical legal education programs.

“Controversy has surrounded many out-of-court activities such as advising on estate planning by bank trust officers, advising on estate planning by insurance agents, stock brokers, or benefit-plan and similar consultants, filling out or providing guidance on forms for property transactions by real estate agents, title companies, and closing-service companies, and selling books or individual forms containing instructions on self-help legal services accompanied by personal, non-lawyer assistance on filling them out in connection with legal procedures such as obtaining a marriage dissolution. The position of bar associations has traditionally been that non-lawyer provisions of such services denies the person served the benefit of such legal measures as the attorney-client privilege, the benefits of such extraordinary duties as that of confidentiality of client information and the protection against conflicts of interest, and the protection of such measures as those regulating lawyer trust accounts and requiring lawyers to supervise non-lawyer personnel. Several jurisdictions recognize that many such services can be provided by non-lawyers without significant risk of incompetent service, that actual experience in several states with extensive non-lawyer provision of traditional legal services indicates no significant risk of harm to consumers of such services, that persons in need of legal services may be significantly aided in obtaining assistance at a much lower price than would be entailed by segregating out a portion of a transaction to be handled by a lawyer for a fee, and that many persons can ill afford, and most persons are at least inconvenienced by, the typically higher cost of lawyer services.” Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers § 4 cmt. c (1998).

practick (prak-tik). Scots law. A precedent that is not necessarily binding.

practitioner. A person engaged in the practice of a profession, esp. law or medicine.

praemium pudicitiae (pree-mee-əm pyoo-də-sish-ee-ee), n. [Latin “the price of chastity”] Hist. Compensation paid by a man who seduced a chaste woman. — Also termed praemium pudoris.

praemunire (pree-myoo-ni-ree), n. [Latin praemoneri “to be forewarned”] Hist. The criminal offense of obeying an authority other than the king. • Praemunire stems from the efforts of Edward I (1272–1307) to counter papal influence in England, and takes its name from the writ’s initial words: praemunire facias (“that you cause to be forewarned”). Praemunire offenses included an archbishop’s refusal to elect a royal nominee as bishop, and an assertion that Parliament had legislative authority without the sovereign.

praenomen (pree-noh-mən), n. [Latin] Roman law. The first of a person’s three names, given to distinguish the person from family members.

praepositus (pree-poz-ə-təs), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. An officer next in authority to the alderman of a hundred. 2. A steward or bailiff of an estate.

praepositus villae (pree-poz-ə-təs vil-ee), n. [Latin] Hist. A constable of a town; a petty constable.

praerogativa regis (pree-rog-ə-ti-və ree-jis), n. [Law Latin “of the Crown’s prerogative”] Hist. A declaration made at the time of Edward I (1272–1307) defining certain feudal and political rights of the Crown, including the right to wardship of an idiot’s lands to protect the idiot’s heirs from disinheritance or alienation. — Also termed de praerogativa regis (dee pree-rog-ə-ti-və ree-jis).

praescriptio (pri-skrip-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A preliminary portion of a formula that defines the scope of action or states an exception or objection to the action. 2. A defensive plea in an action to recover land by which the defendant asserts ownership based on continuous possession for a prescribed time. — Also termed (in sense 2) praescriptio longi temporis.

praeses (pree-seez), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A governor of a province. 2. The president of a college or university.

praestare (pree-stair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. 1. To perform an obligation. 2. To undertake liability.

praesumitur pro negante (pri-zyoo-mə-tər proh ni-gan-tee). [Latin] It is presumed for the negative. • This is the rule of the House of Lords when the votes are equal on a motion.

praesumptio (pri-zəmp-shee-oh). [Latin] A presumption.

praesumptio fortior (pri-zəmp-shee-oh for-shee-ər or -or). [Latin] A strong presumption (of fact); a presumption strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposing party.

praesumptio hominis (pri-zəmp-shee-oh hom-ə-nis). [Latin] The presumption of an individual; that is, a natural presumption unfettered by rules.

praesumptio juris (pri-zəmp-shee-oh joor-is). [Latin] A presumption of law; that is, one in which the law assumes the existence of something until it is disproved. See presumption of law under PRESUMPTION.

praesumptio Muciana (pri-zəmp-shee-oh myoo-shee-ay-nə). [Latin] Roman law. The rebuttable presumption that in case of doubt a thing possessed by a married woman had been given to her by her husband. • The presumption was named after the jurist Quintus Mucius.

praeteritio (pree-tə or pret-ə-rish-ee-oh). [Latin] A testator's exclusion of an heir by passing the heir over.

praetor (pree-tər). [Latin] Roman law. A magistrate responsible for identifying and framing the legal issues in a case and ordering a lay judge (judex) to hear evidence and decide the case in accordance with the statement of the issues.

praetor fidei-commissarius (pree-tər fi-dee-i-kom-ə-sair-ee-əs). A special praetor having jurisdiction of cases involving trusts.

praetorian edict. See EDICT.

praevaricator (pree-var-ə-kay-tər). See PREVARICATOR.

pratique (pra-teek or prat-ik). Maritime law. A license allowing a vessel to trade in a particular country or port after complying with quarantine requirements or presenting a clean bill of health.

praxis (prak-sis). [Greek "doing; action"] In critical legal studies, practical action; the practice of living the ethical life in conjunction and in cooperation with others.

prayer for relief. A request addressed to the court and appearing at the end of a pleading; esp., a request for specific relief or damages. — Often shortened to prayer. — Also termed demand for relief.

"The prayer for relief. The plaintiff prays in his bill for the relief to which he supposes himself entitled on the case made out in the bill. This is called the special prayer. He then prays for general relief, usually in these words: 'And the plaintiff (or your orator) prays for such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require, and as may be agreeable to equity and good conscience.' Both prayers are generally inserted in the bill, — the special prayer first, the general following." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 69 (2d ed. 1899).

general prayer. A prayer for additional unspecified relief, traditionally using language such as, "Plaintiff additionally prays for such other and further relief to which she may show herself to be justly entitled." • The general prayer typically follows a special prayer.

special prayer. A prayer for the particular relief to which a plaintiff claims to be entitled.

prayer in aid. See AID PRAYER.

prayer of process. A conclusion in a bill in equity requesting the issuance of a subpoena if the defendant fails to answer the bill.

preamble (pree-am-bəl), n. An introductory statement in a constitution, statute, or other document explaining the document's basis and objective; esp., a statutory recital of the inconveniences for which the statute is designed to provide a remedy. — preambulatory (pree-am-byə-ler-ee), preambular (pree-am-byə-lər), adj.

preappointed evidence. See EVIDENCE.

preaudience. English law. The right of a senior barrister to be heard in court before other barristers.

prebankruptcy, adj. Occurring before the filing of a bankruptcy petition <prebankruptcy transactions>.

prebend (preb-ənd), n. 1. A stipend granted in a cathedral church for the support of the members of the chapter. 2. The property from which the stipend comes.

prebendary (preb-ən-der-ee). A person serving on the staff of a cathedral who receives a stipend from the cathedral's endowment.

precariae (pri-kair-ee-ee). [Law Latin "favors"] Hist. Day labor that tenants of certain manors were bound to give their lords at harvest time. — Also termed preces.

precarious, adj. Dependent on the will or pleasure of another; uncertain.

precarious loan. See LOAN.

precarious possession. See POSSESSION.

precarious trade. See TRADE.

precarium (pri-kair-ee-əm). [Latin] 1. Roman law. Property granted or lent, to be returned at the will of the grantor. 2. Hist. An estate or tenure arising from a precarious grant, and usu. characterized by uncertainty or arduous conditions of tenure.

precatory (prek-ə-tor-ee), adj. (Of words) requesting, recommending, or expressing a desire for action, but usu. in a nonbinding way. ● An example of precatory language is "it is my wish and desire to . . ."

precatory trust. See TRUST.

precedence (pres-ə-dənts or prə-seed-ənts), n. 1. The act or state of going before; esp., the order or priority in place or time observed by or for persons of different statuses (such as political dignitaries) on the basis of rank during ceremonial events. 2. The order in which persons may claim the right to administer an intestate's estate. ● The traditional order is (1) surviving spouse, (2) next of kin, (3) creditors, and (4) public administrator.

precedent (prə-seed-ənt also pres-ə-dənt), adj. Preceding in time or order <condition precedent>.

precedent (pres-ə-dənt), n. 1. The making of law by a court in recognizing and applying new rules while administering justice. 2. A decided case that furnishes a basis for determining later cases involving similar facts or issues. — precedential, adj. See STARE DECISIS.

"In law a precedent is an adjudged case or decision of a court of justice, considered as furnishing a rule or authority for the determination of an identical or similar case afterwards arising, or of a similar question of law. The only theory on which it is possible for one decision to be an authority for another is that the facts are alike, or, if the facts are different, that the principle which governed the first case is applicable to the variant facts." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 288 (3d ed. 1914).

"A precedent . . . is a judicial decision which contains in itself a principle. The underlying principle which thus forms its authoritative element is often termed the ratio decidendi. The concrete decision is binding between the parties to it, but it is the abstract ratio decidendi which alone has the force of law as regards the world at large." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 191 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"One may say, roughly, that a case becomes a precedent only for such a general rule as is necessary to the actual decision reached, when shorn of unessential circumstances." 1 James Parker Hall, Introduction, American Law and Procedure xlviii (1952).

"One may often accord respect to a precedent not by embracing it with a frozen logic but by drawing from its thought the elements of a new pattern of decision." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 151 (1968).

binding precedent. A precedent that a court must follow. ● For example, a lower court is bound by an applicable holding of a higher court in the same jurisdiction. — Also termed authoritative precedent; binding authority. Cf. imperative authority under AUTHORITY (4). declaratory precedent. A precedent that is merely the application of an already existing legal rule.

original precedent. A precedent that creates and applies a new legal rule.

persuasive precedent. A precedent that a court may either follow or reject, but that is entitled to respect and careful consideration. ● For example, if the case was decided in a neighboring jurisdiction, the court might evaluate the earlier court's reasoning without being bound to decide the same way.

precedent sub silentio (səb sə-len-shee-oh). A legal question that was neither argued nor considered in a judicial decision that is or might be treated as a precedent.

3. DOCTRINE OF PRECEDENT. 4. A form of pleading or property-conveyancing instrument. ● Precedents are often compiled in book form and used by lawyers as guides for preparing similar documents.

prece partium (pree-see pah-rshee-əm). [Law Latin] On the prayer of the parties.

precept (pree-sept). 1. A standard or rule of conduct; a command or principle <several legal precepts govern here>. 2. A writ or warrant issued by an authorized person demanding another's action, such as a judge's order to an officer to bring a party before the court <the sheriff executed the precept immediately>.

preces (pree-seez). [Latin "prayers"] Roman law. A petition addressed to the emperor by a private person. Cf. RESCRIPT (3).

preces primariae (pree-seez pri-mair-ee-ee). [Latin] Hist. The right of the sovereign to appoint a person to fill a vacant prebendary office after the sovereign's accession. • This right was exercised during the reign of Edward I. — Also termed primae preces. See PREBENDARY.

precinct. A geographical unit of government, such as an election district, a police district, or a judicial district.

precipe (pre-sə-pee). See PRAECIPE.

précis (pray-see or pray-see), n. [French] A concise summary of a text's essential points; an abstract. Pl. précis (pray-seez or pray-seez).

precludi non debet (pri-kloo-di non dee-bet or deb-et). [Latin "he ought not to be barred"] Hist. The beginning of a plaintiff's reply to a plea in bar in which the plaintiff objects to being barred from maintaining the action.

preclusion order. See ORDER (2).

precompounded prescription drug. See DRUG.

preconceived malice. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

precontract. See CONTRACT.

predate, vb. See ANTEDATE.

predatory intent. See INTENT (1).

predatory pricing. Unlawful below-cost pricing intended to eliminate specific competitors and reduce overall competition; pricing below an appropriate measure of cost for the purpose of eliminating competitors in the short run and reducing competition in the long run. See ANTI-TRUST.

predecease, vb. To die before (another) <she predeceased her husband>.

predecessor. 1. One who precedes another in an office or position. 2. An ancestor.

predecisional, adj. Of, relating to, or occurring during the time before a decision.

predial (pree-dee-əl), adj. Of, consisting of, relating to, or attached to land <predial servitude>. — Also spelled praedial.

predial servitude. See servitude appurtenant under SERVITUDE.

predicate act. In the law of RICO, one of two or more related acts of racketeering necessary to establish a pattern. See RACKETEER INFLUENCED AND CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS ACT.

predicate fact. See FACT.

prediction theory. See BAD-MAN THEORY; PREDICTIVE THEORY OF LAW.

predictive theory of law. The view that the law is nothing more than a set of predictions about what the courts will decide in given circumstances. • This theory is embodied in Holmes's famous pronouncement, "The prophecies of what the courts will do in fact, and nothing more pretentious, are what I mean by the law." Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., The Path of the Law, 10 Harv. L. Rev. 457, 460-61 (1897). — Also termed prediction theory. Cf. BAD-MAN THEORY.

predisposition. A person's inclination to engage in a particular activity; esp., an inclination that vitiates a criminal defendant's claim of entrapment.

preemption (pree-emp-shən), n. 1. The right to buy before others. See RIGHT OF PREEMPTION. 2. The purchase of something under this right. 3. An earlier seizure or appropriation. 4. The occupation of public land so as to establish a preemptive title. 5. Constitutional law. The principle (derived from the Supremacy Clause) that a federal law can supersede or supplant any inconsistent state law or regulation. — Also termed (in sense 5) federal preemption. — preempt, vb. — preemptive, adj. See COMPLETE-PREEMPTION DOCTRINE.

Garmon preemption. Labor law. A doctrine prohibiting state and local regulation of activities that are actually or arguably (1) protected by the National Labor Relations Act's rules relating to the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively, or (2) prohibited by the National Labor Relations Act's provision that governs unfair labor practices. San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 79 S.Ct. 773 (1959). — Also termed Garmon doctrine. See COLLECTIVE BARGAINING; UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE.

Machinists preemption. Labor law. The doctrine prohibiting state regulation of an area of labor activity or management-union relations that Congress has intentionally left unregulated. Lodge 76, Int'l Ass'n of Machinists v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Comm'n, 427 U.S. 132, 96 S.Ct. 2548 (1976).

preemption claimant. One who has settled on land subject to preemption, intending in good faith to acquire title to it.

preemption right. The privilege to take priority over others in claiming land subject to preemption. • The privilege arises from the holder's actual settlement of the land.

preemptive right. A shareholder's privilege to purchase newly issued stock — before the shares are offered to the public — in an amount proportionate to the shareholder's current holdings in order to prevent dilution of the shareholder's ownership interest. • This right must be exercised within a fixed period, usu. 30 to 60 days. — Also termed subscription privilege. See SUBSCRIPTION RIGHT. Cf. rights offering under OFFERING.

preexisting condition. See CONDITION (2).

preexisting duty. See DUTY (1).

preexisting-duty rule. Contracts. The rule that if a party does or promises to do what the party is already legally obligated to do — or refrains or promises to refrain from doing what the party is already legally obligated to refrain from doing — the party has not incurred detriment. • This rule's result is that the promise does not constitute adequate consideration for contractual purposes. For example, if a builder agrees to construct a building for a specified price but later threatens to walk off the job unless the owner promises to pay an additional sum, the owner's new promise is not enforceable because, under the preexisting-duty rule, there is no consideration for that promise. — Also termed preexisting-legal-duty rule.

prefect (pree-fekt), n. 1. A high official or magistrate put in charge of a particular command, department, or region. 2. In New Mexico, a probate judge.

prefer, vb. 1. To put forward or present for consideration; esp. (of a grand jury), to bring (a charge or indictment) against a criminal suspect <the defendant claimed he was innocent of the charges preferred against him>. 2. To give priority to, such as to one creditor over another <the statute prefers creditors who are first to file their claims>.

preference. 1. The act of favoring one person or thing over another; the person or thing so favored. 2. Priority of payment given to one or more creditors by a debtor; a creditor's right to receive such priority. 3. Bankruptcy. PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

insider preference. A transfer of property by a bankruptcy debtor to an insider more than 90 days before but within one year after the filing of the bankruptcy petition.

liquidation preference. A preferred shareholder's right, once the corporation is liquidated, to receive a specified distribution before common shareholders receive anything.

voidable preference. See PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

preference shares. See preferred stock under STOCK.

preferential assignment. See PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

preferential debt. See DEBT.

preferential rule. Evidence. A rule that prefers one kind of evidence to another. • It may work provisionally, as when a tribunal refuses to consider one kind of evidence until another kind (presumably better) is shown to be unavailable, or it may work absolutely, as when the tribunal refuses to consider anything but the better kind of evidence.

“There are only three or four . . . sets of [preferential] rules. There is a rule preferring the production of the original of a document, in preference to a copy. There is a rule requiring the attesting witness to a will to be summoned to evidence its execution. And there is a rule preferring the magistrate’s official report of testimony taken before him. Then there are a few miscellaneous rules, such as the officially certified enrollment of a statute, etc.” John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 219 (1935).

preferential shop. See SHOP.

preferential tariff. See TARIFF (2).

preferential transfer. Bankruptcy. A prebankruptcy transfer made by an insolvent debtor to or for the benefit of a creditor, thereby allowing the creditor to receive more than its proportionate share of the debtor’s assets; specif., an insolvent debtor’s transfer of a property interest for the benefit of a creditor who is owed on an earlier debt, when the transfer occurs no more than 90 days before the date when the bankruptcy petition is filed or (if the creditor is an insider) within one year of the filing, so that the creditor receives more than it would otherwise receive through the distribution of the bankruptcy estate. • Under the circumstances described in 11 USCA § 547, the bankruptcy trustee may recover — for the estate’s benefit — a preferential transfer from the transferee. — Also termed preference; voidable preference; voidable transfer; preferential assignment. Cf. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE (2).

preferred, adj. Possessing or accorded a priority or privilege .

preferred creditor. See CREDITOR.

preferred dividend. See DIVIDEND.

preferred docket. See DOCKET (2).

preferred-provider organization. A group of healthcare providers (such as doctors, hospitals, and pharmacies) that agree to provide medical services at a discounted cost to covered persons in a given geographic area. — Abbr. PPO. Cf. HEALTH-MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATION.

preferred stock. See STOCK.

preferring of charges. Military law. The formal completion of a charge sheet, which includes signing and swearing to the charges and specifications. • Only a person subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice can prefer charges. Cf. INITIATION OF CHARGES.

prehearing conference. An optional conference for the discussion of procedural and substantive matters on appeal, usu. held in complex civil, criminal, tax, and agency cases. • Those attending are typically the attorneys involved in the case as well as a court representative such as a judge, staff attorney, or deputy clerk. Fed. R. App. P. 33.

prejudice, n. 1. Damage or detriment to one’s legal rights or claims. See dismissal with/without prejudice under DISMISSAL.

legal prejudice. A condition that, if shown by a party, will usu. defeat the opposing party’s action; esp., a condition that, if shown by the defendant, will defeat a plaintiff’s motion to dismiss a case without prejudice. • The defendant may show that dismissal will deprive the defendant of a substantive property right or preclude the defendant from raising a defense that will be unavailable or endangered in a second suit.

undue prejudice. The harm resulting from a fact-trier’s being exposed to evidence that is persuasive but inadmissible (such as evidence of prior criminal conduct) or that so arouses the emotions that calm and logical reasoning is abandoned.

2. A preconceived judgment formed without a factual basis; a strong bias. — prejudice, vb. — prejudicial, adj.

prejudicial error. See reversible error under ERROR (2).

prejudicial publicity. Extensive media attention devoted to an upcoming civil or criminal trial. • Under the Due Process Clause, extensive coverage of a criminal trial may deprive the defendant of a fair trial.

preliminary, adj. Coming before and usu. leading up to the main part of something <preliminary negotiations>.

preliminary complaint. See COMPLAINT.

preliminary crime. See inchoate offense under OFFENSE (1).

preliminary evidence. See EVIDENCE.

preliminary hearing. A criminal hearing (usu. conducted by a magistrate) to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to prosecute an accused person. • If sufficient evidence exists, the case will be set for trial or bound over for grand-jury review, or an information will be filed in the trial court. — Also termed preliminary examination; probable-cause hearing; bindover hearing; examining trial. Cf. ARRAIGNMENT.

preliminary injunction. See INJUNCTION.

preliminary inquiry. Military law. The initial investigation of a reported or suspected violation of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Cf. PRETRIAL INVESTIGATION.

preliminary-inquiry officer. Military law. The person, usu. an officer, who conducts a preliminary inquiry.

preliminary letter. See INVITATION TO NEGOTIATE.

preliminary objection. Int'l law. In a case before an international tribunal, an objection that, if upheld, would render further proceedings before the tribunal impossible or unnecessary. • An objection to the court's jurisdiction is an example of a preliminary objection.

preliminary proof. See PROOF.

preliminary prospectus. See PROSPECTUS.

preliminary statement. The introductory part of a brief or memorandum in support of a motion, in which the advocate summarizes the essence of what follows. • In at least two jurisdictions, New York and New Jersey, the preliminary statement is a standard part of court papers. In many other jurisdictions, advocates do not routinely include it. But preliminary statements are typically allowed, even welcomed, though not required.

preliminary warrant. See WARRANT (1).

premarital agreement. See PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

prematurity. 1. The circumstance existing when the facts underlying a plaintiff's complaint do not yet create a live claim. Cf. RIPENESS. 2. The affirmative defense based on this circumstance.

premeditated, adj. Done with willful deliberation and planning; consciously considered beforehand .

premeditated malice. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

premeditation, n. Conscious consideration and planning that precedes some act (such as committing a crime). — premeditate, vb.

premier serjeant. See SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

premise (prem-is), n. A previous statement or contention from which a conclusion is deduced. — Also spelled (in BrE) premiss. — premise (prem-is or pri-miz), vb.

premises (prem-ə-siz). 1. Matters (usu. preliminary facts or statements) previously referred to in the same instrument <wherefore, premises considered, the plaintiff prays for the following relief>. 2. A house or building, along with its grounds <smoking is not allowed on these premises>.

premises liability. A landowner's or landholder's tort liability for conditions or activities on the premises.

premises rule. See PARKING-LOT RULE.

premium, n. 1. The periodic payment required to keep an insurance policy in effect. — Also termed insurance premium.

advance premium. A payment made before the start of the period covered by the insurance policy.

earned premium. The portion of an insurance premium applicable to the coverage period that has already expired. • For example, if the total premium for a one-year insurance policy is $1,200, the earned premium after three months is $300.

gross premium. 1. The net premium plus expenses (i.e., the loading), less the interest factor. See LOADING; INTEREST FACTOR. 2. The premium for participating life insurance. See participating insurance under INSURANCE.

natural premium. The actual cost of life insurance based solely on mortality rates. ● This amount will be less than a net premium. See net premium.

net level annual premium. A net premium that stays the same each year.

net premium. 1. Generally, the premium amount for an insurance policy less agent commissions. 2. The portion of the premium that covers the estimated cost of claims. 3. The money needed to provide benefits under an insurance policy. ● The net premium in a life-insurance policy is calculated by using an assumed interest and mortality-table rate; it does not include additional expense amounts that will be charged to the policyholder. — Also termed net valuation premium.

net single premium. The money that must be collected from a policyholder at one time to guarantee enough money to pay claims made on an insurance policy. ● This amount assumes that interest accrues at an expected rate and is based on a prediction of the likelihood of certain claims.

net valuation premium. See net premium.

unearned premium. The portion of an insurance premium applicable to the coverage period that has not yet occurred. ● In the same example as above under earned premium, the unearned premium after three months is $900.

2. A sum of money paid in addition to a regular price, salary, or other amount; a bonus. 3. The amount by which a security's market value exceeds its face value. — Also termed (specif.) bond premium. Cf. DISCOUNT (3).

control premium. A premium paid for shares carrying the power to control a corporation. ● The control premium is often computed by comparing the aggregate value of the controlling block of shares with the cost that would be incurred if the shares could be acquired at the going market price per share.

4. The amount paid to buy a securities option. — Also termed (in sense 4) option premium.

premium bond. See BOND (3).

premium loan. See LOAN.

premium note. See NOTE (1).

premium on capital stock. See paid-in surplus under SURPLUS.

premium rate. Insurance. The price per unit of life insurance. ● It is usu. expressed as a cost per thousands of dollars of coverage. Life insurers use three factors — the interest factor, the mortality factor, and the risk factor — to calculate premium rates. — Sometimes shortened to rate. See INTEREST FACTOR; MORTALITY FACTOR; RISK FACTOR.

premium stock. See STOCK.

premium tax. See TAX.

prenatal tort. See TORT.

prender de baron (pren-dər də bar-ən). [Law French “a taking of husband”] Hist. A plea asserting that the former wife of a murder victim should not be allowed to appeal a murder case against the alleged killer because she has since remarried.

prenup, n. See PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

prenuptial (pree-nəp-shəl), adj. Made or occurring before marriage; premarital. — Also termed antenuptial (an-tee-nəp-shəl).

prenuptial agreement. An agreement made before marriage usu. to resolve issues of support and property division if the marriage ends in divorce or by the death of a spouse. — Also termed antenuptial agreement; antenuptial contract; premarital agreement; premarital contract; marriage settlement. — Sometimes shortened to prenup. See SETTLEMENT (2). Cf. POSTNUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

prenuptial gift. See GIFT.

prenuptial will. See WILL.

prepaid expense. See EXPENSE.

prepaid income. See INCOME.

prepaid interest. See INTEREST (3).

prepaid legal services. An arrangement — usu. serving as an employee benefit — that enables a person to make advance payments for future legal services.

preparation. Criminal law. The act or process of devising the means necessary to commit a crime. Cf. ATTEMPT.

prepayment clause. A loan-document provision that permits a borrower to satisfy a debt before its due date, usu. without paying a penalty.

prepayment penalty. A charge assessed against a borrower who elects to pay off a loan before it is due.

prepetition (pree-pə-tish-ən), adj. Occurring before the filing of a petition (esp. in bankruptcy) <prepetition debts>.

preponderance (pri-pon-dər-ənts), n. Superiority in weight, importance, or influence. — preponderate (pri-pon-dər-əyt), vb. — preponderant (pri-pon-dər-ənt), adj.

preponderance of the evidence. The greater weight of the evidence; superior evidentiary weight that, though not sufficient to free the mind wholly from all reasonable doubt, is still sufficient to incline a fair and impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than the other. ● This is the burden of proof in a civil trial, in which the jury is instructed to find for the party that, on the whole, has the stronger evidence, however slight the edge may be. — Also termed preponderance of proof; balance of probability. Cf. clear and convincing evidence under EVIDENCE.

prerogative (pri-rog-ə-tiv), n. An exclusive right, power, privilege, or immunity, usu. acquired by virtue of office. — prerogative, adj.

prerogative court. In New Jersey, a probate court.

prerogative writ. See extraordinary writ under WRIT.

pres (pray). [Law French] Near. See CY PRES.

presale. The sale of real property (such as condominium units) before construction has begun.

prescribable (pri-skrīb-ə-bəl), adj. (Of a right) that can be acquired by prescription.

presence-of-the-testator rule prescription, n. 1. The effect of the lapse of time in creating and destroying rights.

liberative prescription. Civil law. A bar to a lawsuit resulting from its untimely filing. ● This term is essentially the civil-law equivalent to a statute of limitations. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

2. The acquisition of title to a thing (esp. an intangible thing such as the use of real property) by open and continuous possession over a statutory period. — Also termed positive prescription; acquisitive prescription. Cf. ADVERSE POSSESSION.

prescription in a que estate (ah kee). [Law French “prescription in whose estate”] A claim of prescription based on the immemorial enjoyment of the right by the claimant and the former owners whose estate the claimant has succeeded to.

3. The extinction of a title or right by failure to claim or exercise it over a long period. — Also termed negative prescription; extinctive prescription. 4. The act of establishing authoritative rules; a rule so established. 5. Int'l law. The acquisition of a territory through a continuous and undisputed exercise of sovereignty over it. — prescribe, vb. Cf. PROSCRIPTION.

prescriptive easement. See EASEMENT.

prescriptive right. A right obtained by prescription <after a nuisance has been continuously in existence for 20 years, a prescriptive right to continue it is acquired as an easement appurtenant to the land on which it exists>.

presence-of-defendant rule. The principle that a felony defendant is entitled to be present at every major stage of the criminal proceeding. Fed. R. Crim. P. 43.

presence of the court. The company or proximity of the judge or other courtroom official. ● For purposes of contempt, an action is in the presence of the court if it is committed within the view of the judge or other person in court and is intended to disrupt the court's business.

presence-of-the-testator rule. The principle that a testator must be aware (through sight or other sense) that the witnesses are signing the will. • Many jurisdictions interpret this requirement liberally, and the Uniform Probate Code has dispensed with it.

present, adj. 1. Now existing; at hand . 2. Being the one under consideration <the present appeal does not deal with that issue>. 3. In attendance; not elsewhere <all present voted for him>.

present ability. See ABILITY.

presentation. 1. The delivery of a document to an issuer or named person for the purpose of initiating action under a letter of credit; PRESENTMENT (3). 2. Hist. Eccles. law. A benefice patron's recommendation of a person to fill a vacant benefice. • If the benefice's bishop rejected the appointee, the patron could enforce the right to fill the vacancy by writ of quare impedit in the Court of Common Pleas. See QUARE IMPEDIT. Cf. ADVOWSON; INSTITUTION.

present case. See case at bar under CASE.

present conveyance. See CONVEYANCE.

present covenant. See COVENANT (4).

presentence hearing. A proceeding at which a judge or jury receives and examines all relevant information regarding a convicted criminal and the related offense before passing sentence. — Also termed sentencing hearing.

presentence investigation report. A probation officer's detailed account of a convicted defendant's educational, criminal, family, and social background, conducted at the court's request as an aid in passing sentence. — Abbr. PSI. — Often shortened to presentence report.

present enjoyment. See ENJOYMENT.

presenter. Commercial law. Any person presenting a document (such as a draft) to an issuer for honor. UCC § 5-102.

present estate. See ESTATE.

presenting bank. See BANK.

presenting jury. See GRAND JURY.

present interest. See INTEREST (2).

presentment (pri-zent-mənt). 1. The act of presenting or laying before a court or other tribunal a formal statement about a matter to be dealt with legally. 2. A formal written accusation returned by a grand jury on its own initiative, without a prosecutor's previous indictment request.

"A grand jury has only two functions, either to indict or to return a 'no bill.' The Constitution speaks also of a 'presentment,' but this is a term with a distinct historical meaning now not well understood. Historically presentment was the process by which a grand jury initiated an independent investigation and asked that a charge be drawn to cover the facts should they constitute a crime. With United States attorneys now always available to advise grand juries, proceeding by presentment is an outmoded practice." 1 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 110, at 459 (3d ed. 1999).

3. The formal production of a negotiable instrument for acceptance or payment.

"Presentment and dishonor occur, for instance, when the holder of a check attempts to cash it at the drawee bank, but payment is refused because the drawer lacks sufficient funds on deposit. The demand for payment is presentment. The bank's refusal to pay is dishonor." 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 16-8, at 100 (4th ed. 1995).

presentment for acceptance. Production of an instrument to the drawee, acceptor, or maker for acceptance. • This type of presentment may be made anytime before maturity, except that with bills payable at sight, after demand, or after sight, presentment must be made within a reasonable time.

presentment for payment. Production of an instrument to the drawee, acceptor, or maker for payment. • This type of presentment must be made on the date when the instrument is due.

presentment of Englishry. Hist. The offering of proof that a slain person was English rather than (before the Conquest) a Dane or (after the Conquest) a Norman. • This requirement was issued first by the conquering Danes and then by the Normans to protect these groups from the English by the threat of a village- or hundred-wide amercement if the inhabitants failed to prove that a dead person found among them was English.

presentment warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

present recollection refreshed. Evidence. A witness's memory that has been enhanced by showing the witness a document that describes the relevant events. • The document itself is merely a memory stimulus and is not admitted in evidence. Fed. R. Evid. 612. — Also termed refreshing recollection; present recollection revived. Cf. PAST RECOLLECTION RECORDED.

presents, n. pl. Archaic. The instrument under consideration. • This is usu. part of the phrase these presents, which is part of the longer phrase know all men by these presents (itself a loan translation from the Latin noverint universi per praesentes). See KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS.

present sale. See SALE.

present sense impression. Evidence. One's perception of an event or condition, formed during or immediately after the fact. • A statement containing a present sense impression is admissible even if it is hearsay. Fed. R. Evid. 803(1). Cf. EXCITED UTTERANCE.

present use. See USE (4).

present value. The sum of money that, with compound interest, would amount to a specified sum at a specified future date; future value discounted to its value today. — Also termed present worth.

adjusted present value. An asset's value determined by adding together its present value and the value added by capital-structure effects. — Abbr. APV.

net present value. The present value of net cash flow from a project, discounted by the cost of capital. • This value is used to evaluate the project's investment potential. — Abbr. NPV.

preside, vb. 1. To occupy the place of authority, esp. as a judge during a hearing or trial <preside over the proceedings>. 2. To exercise management or control <preside over the estate>.

president, n. 1. The chief political executive of a government; the head of state. 2. The chief executive officer of a corporation or other organization. — presidential, adj.

presidential elector. See ELECTOR.

Presidential message. See MESSAGE.

president judge. See presiding judge under JUDGE.

president of a court-martial. Military law. The senior member in rank present at a court-martial trial.

President of the United States. The highest executive officer of the federal government of the United States. • The President is elected to a four-year term by a majority of the presidential electors chosen by popular vote from the states. The President must be a natural citizen, must be at least 35 years old, and must have been a resident for 14 years within the United States. U.S. Const. art. II, § 1.

presiding judge. See JUDGE.

presiding juror. See JUROR.

presiding officer. See OFFICER (2).

press, n. 1. The news media; print and broadcast news organizations collectively. 2. Hist. A piece of parchment, as one sewed together to make up a roll or record of judicial proceedings.

prest (prest). Hist. A duty to be paid by the sheriff upon his account in the Exchequer or for money remaining in his custody.

prestation (pre-stay-shən). Hist. 1. A payment (or presting) of money. 2. The rendering of a service.

prest money. Hist. A monetary payment made to a soldier or sailor on enlistment.

presume, vb. To assume beforehand; to suppose to be true in the absence of proof.

presumed father. See FATHER.

presumed-seller test. A method of imposing product liability on a manufacturer if the manufacturer, having full knowledge of the product's dangerous propensities, would be negligent in placing the product on the market.

presumption. A legal inference or assumption that a fact exists, based on the known or proven existence of some other fact or group of facts. • Most presumptions are rules of evidence calling for a certain result in a given case unless the adversely affected party overcomes it with other evidence. A presumption shifts the burden of production or persuasion to the opposing party, who can then attempt to overcome the presumption. See BURDEN OF PRODUCTION.

"A presumption may be defined to be an inference as to the existence of one fact from the existence of some other fact founded upon a previous experience of their connection." William P. Richardson, The Law of Evidence § 53, at 25 (3d ed. 1928).

absolute presumption. See conclusive presumption.

artificial presumption. See presumption of law.

conclusive presumption. A presumption that cannot be overcome by any additional evidence or argument <it is a conclusive presumption that a child under the age of seven is incapable of committing a felony>. — Also termed absolute presumption; irrebuttable presumption; mandatory presumption; presumption juris et de jure. Cf. rebuttable presumption.

"'Conclusive presumptions' or 'irrebuttable presumptions' are usually mere fictions, to disguise a rule of substantive law (e.g., the conclusive presumption of malice from an unexcused defamation); and when they are not fictions, they are usually repudiated by modern courts." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 454 (1935).

"Conclusive presumptions, sometimes called irrebuttable presumptions of law, are really rules of law. Thus it is said that a child under the age of fourteen years is conclusively presumed to be incapable of committing rape. This is only another way of saying that such a child cannot be found guilty of rape." Richard Eggleston, Evidence, Proof and Probability 92 (1978).

conditional presumption. See rebuttable presumption.

conflicting presumption. One of two or more presumptions that would lead to opposite results. — Also termed inconsistent presumption.

"'Conflicting presumptions' are simply two ordinary presumptions that would give opposite results; usually they are really successive presumptions. E.g., where A proves himself to be the son of N, wife of M, but M and N were already separated, and later M married P, and had a son B, the later marriage of M might presume a prior divorce from N before separation to make it valid, and yet the birth of A from a married mother might be presumed legitimate, and thus the question whether A or B was the legitimate son would be attended by opposing presumptions. But in this aspect the doctrine of presumptions is clouded with difficulties and leads to much vain speculation and logical unrealism." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 454 (1935).

disputable presumption. See rebuttable presumption.

factual presumption. See presumption of fact.

heeding presumption. A rebuttable presumption that an injured product user would have followed a warning label had the product manufacturer provided one.

inconsistent presumption. See conflicting presumption.

irrebuttable presumption. See conclusive presumption.

legal presumption. See presumption of law.

mandatory presumption. See conclusive presumption.

McClanahan presumption. See MCCLANAHAN PRESUMPTION.

mixed presumption. A presumption containing elements of both law and fact.

Morgan presumption. See MORGAN PRESUMPTION.

natural presumption. A deduction of one fact from another, based on common experience.

permissive presumption. A presumption that a trier of fact is free to accept or reject from a given set of facts. — Also termed permissive inference.

presumption juris et de jure. See conclusive presumption.

presumption of fact. A type of rebuttable presumption that may be, but as a matter of law need not be, drawn from another established fact or group of facts <the possessor of recently stolen goods is, by presumption of fact, considered the thief>. — Also termed factual presumption.

presumption of general application. A presumption that applies across the board to all legislation, as a result of which lawmakers need not list each such presumption in all bills.

"One function of the word 'presumption' in the context of statutory interpretation is to state the result of this legislative reliance (real or assumed) on firmly established legal principles. There is a 'presumption' that mens rea is required in the case of statutory crimes, and a 'presumption' that statutory powers must be exercised reasonably. These presumptions apply although there is no question of linguistic ambiguity in the statutory wording under construction, and they may be described as 'presumptions of general application.' At the level of interpretation, their function is the promotion of brevity on the part of the draftsman. Statutes make dreary enough reading as it is, and it would be ridiculous to insist in each instance upon an enumeration of the general principles taken for granted." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 142-43 (1976).

presumption of intent. A permissive presumption that a criminal defendant who intended to commit an act did so.

presumption of law. A legal assumption that a court is required to make if certain facts are established and no contradictory evidence is produced <by presumption of law, a criminal defendant is considered innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt>. — Also termed legal presumption; artificial presumption; praesumptio juris.

prima facie presumption. See rebuttable presumption.

procedural presumption. A presumption that may be rebutted by credible evidence.

rebuttable presumption. An inference drawn from certain facts that establish a prima facie case, which may be overcome by the introduction of contrary evidence. — Also termed prima facie presumption; disputable presumption; conditional presumption; praesumptio juris. Cf. conclusive presumption.

statutory presumption. A rebuttable or conclusive presumption that is created by statute.

Thayer presumption. See THAYER PRESUMPTION.

presumption of death. A presumption that arises on the unexpected disappearance and continued absence of a person for an extended period, commonly seven years.

presumption of fact. See PRESUMPTION.

presumption-of-fertility rule. See FERTILE-OCTOGENARIAN RULE.

presumption of general application. See PRESUMPTION.

presumption-of-identity rule. The common-law rule that unless there is a specific, applicable statute in another state, a court will presume that the common law has developed elsewhere identically with how it has developed in the court's own state, so that the court may apply its own state's law. • Today this rule applies primarily in Georgia. See Shorewood Packaging Corp. v. Commercial Union Ins., 865 F. Supp. 1577 (N.D. Ga. 1994).

presumption of innocence. The fundamental criminal-law principle that a person may not be convicted of a crime unless the government proves guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, without any burden placed on the accused to prove innocence.

presumption of intent. See PRESUMPTION.

presumption of law. See PRESUMPTION.

presumption of legitimacy. The presumption that the husband of a woman who gives birth is the father of the child.

presumption of natural and probable consequences. Criminal law. The presumption that mens rea may be derived from proof of the defendant's conduct.

presumption of survivorship. The presumption that one of two or more victims of a common disaster survived the others, based on the supposed survivor's youth, good health, or other reason rendering survivorship likely.

presumption of validity. Patents. The assumption that the holder of a patent is entitled to a statutory presumption of validity.

presumptive (pri-zəmp-tiv), adj. 1. Giving reasonable grounds for belief or presumption. 2. Based on a presumption. — presumptively, adv.

presumptive authority. See implied authority under AUTHORITY (1).

presumptive damages. See punitive damages under DAMAGES.

presumptive death. See DEATH.

presumptive evidence. See EVIDENCE.

presumptive heir. See heir presumptive under HEIR.

presumptive notice. See implied notice under NOTICE.

presumptive proof. See conditional proof under PROOF.

presumptive sentence. See SENTENCE.

presumptive title. See TITLE (2).

presumptive trust. See resulting trust under TRUST.

pretax, adj. Existing or occurring before the assessment or deduction of taxes <pretax income>.

pretax earnings. See EARNINGS.

prête-nom (pret-nohm). [French] One who lends his name.

preterlegal (pree-tər-lee-gəl), adj. Rare. Beyond the range of what is legal; not according to law <preterlegal customs>.

pretermisssion (pree-tər-mish-ən). 1. The condition of one who is pretermitted, as an heir of a testator. 2. The act of omitting an heir from a will.

pretermisssion statute. See PRETERMITTED-HEIR STATUTE.

pretermitt (pree-tər-mit), vb. 1. To ignore or disregard purposely <the court pretermitted the constitutional question by deciding the case on procedural grounds>. 2. To neglect or overlook accidentally <the third child was pretermitted in the will>.

pretermitted child. See pretermitted heir under HEIR.

pretermitted defense. See DEFENSE (1).

pretermitted heir. See HEIR.

pretermitted-heir statute. A state law that grants a pretermitted heir the right to inherit a share of the testator's estate, usu. by treating the heir as though the testator had died intestate. — Also termed pretermisssion statute.

pretermitted spouse. See pretermitted heir under HEIR.

pretext (pree-tekst), n. A false or weak reason or motive advanced to hide the actual or strong reason or motive. — pretextual (pree-tekst-choo-əl), adj.

pretextual arrest. See ARREST.

pretextus (pree-tekst-təs). [Latin] A pretext.

pretium (pree-shee-əm). [Latin] Price; value; worth.

pretium affectionis (pree-shee-əm ə-fek-shee-oh-nis). An enhanced value placed on a thing by the fancy of its owner, growing out of an attachment for the specific article and its associations; sentimental value. • This value is not taken as a basis for measuring damages.

pretium periculi (pree-shee-əm pə-rik-yə-li). The price of the risk, such as the premium paid on an insurance policy.

pretorial court (pri-tor-ee-əl). See COURT.

pretrial conference. An informal meeting at which opposing attorneys confer, usu. with the judge, to work toward the disposition of the case by discussing matters of evidence and narrowing the issues that will be tried. • The conference takes place shortly before trial and ordinarily results in a pretrial order. — Often shortened to pretrial. — Also termed pretrial hearing.

pretrial detention. See DETENTION.

pretrial discovery. See DISCOVERY.

pretrial diversion. See DIVERSION PROGRAM.

pretrial hearing. See PRETRIAL CONFERENCE.

pretrial intervention. 1. DIVERSION PROGRAM. 2. See deferred judgment under JUDGMENT.

pretrial investigation. Military law. An investigation to decide whether a case should be recommended for forwarding to a general court-martial.

pretrial order. A court order setting out the claims and defenses to be tried, the stipulations of the parties, and the case's procedural rules, as agreed to by the parties or mandated by the court at a pretrial conference.

prevail, vb. 1. To obtain the relief sought in an action; to win a lawsuit <the plaintiff prevailed in the Supreme Court>. 2. To be commonly accepted or predominant <it's unclear which line of precedent will prevail>.

prevailing party. See PARTY (2).

prevarication (pri-var-ə-kay-shən), n. The act or an instance of lying or avoiding the truth; equivocation. — prevaricate (pri-var-ə-kayt), vb.

prevaricator (pri-var-ə-kay-tər). [Latin] 1. A liar; an equivocator. 2. Roman law. One who betrays another's trust, such as an advocate who aids the opposing party by betraying the client. — Also spelled (in sense 2) praevaricator.

prevent, vb. To hinder or impede .

preventative custody. See CUSTODY (1).

prevention. Civil law. The right of one of several judges having concurrent jurisdiction to exercise that jurisdiction over a case that the judge is first to hear.

prevention doctrine. Contracts. The principle that each contracting party has an implied duty to not do anything that prevents the other party from performing its obligation. — Also termed prevention-of-performance doctrine.

preventive custody. See CUSTODY (1).

preventive detention. See DETENTION.

preventive injunction. See INJUNCTION.

preventive punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

previously taxed income. See INCOME.

price. The amount of money or other consideration asked for or given in exchange for something else; the cost at which something is bought or sold.

agreed price. The price for a sale, esp. of goods, arrived at by mutual agreement. Cf. open price.

asked price. The lowest price at which a seller is willing to sell a security at a given time. See SPREAD (2).

asking price. The price at which a seller lists property for sale, often implying a willingness to sell for less. — Also termed ask price; offering price.

at-the-market price. A retail price that store owners in the same vicinity generally charge.

bid price. The highest price that a prospective buyer is willing to pay for a security at a given time. See SPREAD (2).

call price. 1. The price at which a bond may be retired before its maturity. 2. See strike price.

ceiling price. 1. The highest price at which a buyer is willing to buy. 2. The highest price allowed by a government agency or by some other regulatory institution.

closing price. The price of a security at the end of a given trading day. — Also termed close.

exercise price. See strike price.

ex-works price. The price of goods as they leave the factory. See EX WORKS.

fixed price. A price that is agreed upon by a wholesaler and a retailer for the later sale or resale of an item. • Agreements to fix prices are generally prohibited by state and federal statutes.

floor price. The lowest price at which a seller is willing to sell.

liquidation price. A price that is paid for property sold to liquidate a debt. • Liquidation price is usu. below market price. — Also termed liquidation value.

list price. A published or advertised price of goods; retail price.

market price. The prevailing price at which something is sold in a specific market. See fair market value under VALUE.

mean trading price. Securities. The average of the daily trading price of a security determined at the close of the market each day during a 90-day period.

net price. The price of something, after deducting cash discounts.

offering price. See asking price.

open price. The price for a sale, esp. of goods, that has not been settled at the time of a sale's conclusion. UCC § 2-305. Cf. agreed price.

put price. See strike price.

redemption price. 1. The price of a bond that has not reached maturity, purchased at the issuer's option. 2. The price of shares when a mutual-fund shareholder sells shares back to the fund. — Also termed liquidating price; repurchase price.

reserve price. The price announced at an auction as the lowest that will be entertained. See WITH RESERVE; WITHOUT RESERVE.

sales price. The total amount for which property is sold, often including the costs of any services that are a part of the sale. • Under sales-tax statutes, the amount is typically valued in money even if the value is not received in money. — Also termed selling price.

spot price. The amount for which a commodity is sold in a spot market. See SPOT TRADING.

strike price. Securities. The price for which a security will be bought or sold under an option contract if the option is exercised. — Also termed striking price; exercise price; call price; put price. See OPTION.

subscription price. See SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

suggested retail price. The sales price recommended to a retailer by a manufacturer of the product.

support price. A minimum price set by the federal government for a particular agricultural commodity.

target price. A price set by the federal government for particular agricultural commodities. • If the market price falls below the target price, farmers receive a subsidy from the government for the difference.

transfer price. The charge assigned to an exchange of goods or services between a corporation's organizational units.

unit price. A price of a food product expressed in a well-known measure such as ounces or pounds.

upset price. The lowest amount that a seller is willing to accept for property or goods sold at auction.

wholesale price. The price that a retailer pays for goods purchased (usu. in bulk) from a wholesaler for resale to consumers at a higher price.

price amendment. Securities. A change in a registration statement, prospectus, or prospectus supplement affecting the offering price, the underwriting and selling discounts or commissions, the amount of proceeds, the conversion rates, the call prices, or some other matter relating to the offering price.

price/cost analysis. A technique of determining, for antitrust purposes, whether predatory pricing has occurred by examining the relationship between a defendant's prices and either its average variable cost or its average total cost.

price discrimination. The practice of offering identical or similar goods to different buyers at different prices when the costs of producing the goods are the same. • Price discrimination can violate antitrust laws if it reduces competition. It may be either direct, as when a seller charges different prices to different buyers, or indirect, as when a seller offers special concessions (such as favorable credit terms) to some but not all buyers.

persistent price discrimination. A monopolist's systematic policy of obtaining different rates of return from different sales groupings.

price-earnings ratio. The ratio between a stock's current share price and the corporation's earnings per share for the last year. • Some investors avoid stocks with high price-earnings ratios because those stocks may be overpriced. — Abbr. P/E ratio. Cf. earnings yield under YIELD.

price expectancy. See EXHIBITION VALUE.

price-fixing. The artificial setting or maintenance of prices at a certain level, contrary to the workings of the free market. • Price-fixing is usu. illegal per se under antitrust law.

"Price-fixing agreements may or may not be aimed at complete elimination of price competition. The group making those agreements may or may not have the power to control the market. But the fact that the group cannot control the market prices does not necessarily mean that the agreement as to prices has no utility to the members of the combination. The effectiveness of price-fixing agreements is dependent on many factors, such as competitive tactics, position in the industry, the formula underlying price policies. Whatever economic justification particular price-fixing agreements may be thought to have, the law does not permit an inquiry into their reasonableness. They are all banned because of their actual or potential threat to the central nervous system of the economy." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 225-26 n.59, 60 S.Ct. 811, 845 n.59 (1940).

horizontal price-fixing. Price-fixing among competitors on the same level, such as retailers throughout an industry.

vertical price-fixing. Price-fixing among parties in the same chain of distribution, such as manufacturers and retailers attempting to control an item's resale price.

price index. An index of average prices as a percentage of the average prevailing at some other time (such as a base year). See CONSUMER PRICE INDEX; PRODUCER PRICE INDEX.

price leadership. A market condition in which an industry leader establishes a price that others in the field adopt as their own. • Price leadership alone does not violate antitrust laws without other evidence of an intent to create a monopoly.

price-level-adjusted mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

price memorandum. Securities. A document created by an underwriter to explain how securities are priced for a public offering and, typically, to show estimates and appraisals that are not allowed as part of the offering documents.

price support. The artificial maintenance of prices (as of a particular commodity) at a certain level, esp. by governmental action (as by subsidy).

price war. A period of sustained or repeated price-cutting in an industry (esp. among retailers), designed to undersell competitors or force them out of business.

priest-penitent privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

primae impressionis (pri-mee im-pres[h]-ee-oh-nis). [Law Latin] Of the first impression. See case of first impression under CASE.

primae preces. See PRECES PRIMARIAE.

prima facie (pri-mə fay-shə or fay-shee), adv. [Latin] At first sight; on first appearance but subject to further evidence or information <the deed is prima facie valid>.

prima facie, adj. Sufficient to establish a fact or raise a presumption unless disproved or rebutted .

prima facie case. 1. The establishment of a legally required rebuttable presumption. 2. A party's production of enough evidence to allow the fact-trier to infer the fact at issue and rule in the party's favor.

prima facie evidence. See EVIDENCE.

prima facie presumption. See rebuttable presumption under PRESUMPTION.

prima facie privilege. See qualified immunity under IMMUNITY (1).

prima facie tort. See TORT.

primage (pri-mij). See HAT MONEY.

primary, n. See primary election under ELECTION.

primary activity. Labor law. Concerted action (such as a strike or picketing) directed against an employer with which a union has a dispute. Cf. SECONDARY ACTIVITY.

primary allegation. See ALLEGATION.

primary authority. See AUTHORITY (4).

primary beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

primary boycott. See BOYCOTT.

primary cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE (1).

primary committee. Bankruptcy. A group of creditors organized to help the debtor draw up a reorganization plan.

primary conveyance. See CONVEYANCE.

primary election. See ELECTION.

primary evidence. See best evidence under EVIDENCE.

primary fact. See FACT.

primary insurance. See INSURANCE.

primary-jurisdiction doctrine. A judicial doctrine whereby a court tends to favor allowing an agency an initial opportunity to decide an issue in a case in which the court and the agency have concurrent jurisdiction.

primary lease. See HEADLEASE.

primary liability. See LIABILITY.

primary-line competition. See horizontal competition under COMPETITION.

primary-line injury. Antitrust. Under the price-discrimination provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act, the practice of charging below-cost, predatory prices in an attempt to eliminate the seller's competition in the market. 15 USCA § 13(a). ● A primary-line injury, which hinders or seeks to hinder competition among the seller's competitors, is distinguishable from a secondary-line injury, which refers to discriminatory pricing that hinders or seeks to hinder competition among the seller's customers, by favoring one customer over another in the prices the seller charges. Cf. SECONDARY-LINE INJURY.

"Liggett contends that Brown & Williamson's discriminatory volume rebates to wholesalers threatened substantial competitive injury by furthering a predatory pricing scheme designed to purge competition from the economy segment of the cigarette market. This type of injury, which harms direct competitors of the discriminating seller, is known as a primary-line injury." Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 220, 113 S.Ct. 2578, 2586 (1993).

primary market. See MARKET.

primary mortgage market. See MORTGAGE MARKET.

primary obligation. See OBLIGATION.

primary offering. See OFFERING.

primary plea. See primary allegation under ALLEGATION.

primary powers. The chief powers given by a principal to an agent to accomplish the agent's tasks. Cf. MEDIATE POWERS.

primary reserve ratio. See RESERVE RATIO.

primate (pri-mit). A chief ecclesiastic; an archbishop or bishop having jurisdiction over other bishops within a province.

prime, n. See prime rate under INTEREST RATE.

prime, vb. To take priority over <Watson's preferred mortgage primed Moriarty's lien>.

prime contractor. See general contractor under CONTRACTOR.

prime cost. See COST (1).

prime lending rate. See prime rate under INTEREST RATE.

prime maker. See MAKER.

prime minister. (often cap.) The chief executive of a parliamentary government; the head of a cabinet. — Abbr. PM.

primer (prim-ər or pri-mər). [Law French] First; primary <primer seisin>.

prime rate. See INTEREST RATE.

primer election. A first choice; esp., the eldest coparcener's pick of land on division of the estate. See ELECTION.

primer fine (prim-ər or pri-mər fin). [Latin] Hist. A fee payable to the Crown on the suing out of a writ of praecipe to begin a conveyance by fine. See FINE (1). — Also termed praefine.

primer seisin. See SEISIN.

prime serjeant. See priemier serjeant under SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

prime tenant. See TENANT.

primitiae (pri-mish-ee-ee). [fr. Latin primus "first"] See FIRST FRUITS. — primitial (pri-mish-əl), adj.

primogeniture (pri-mə-jen-ə-chər). 1. The state of being the firstborn child among siblings. 2. The common-law right of the firstborn son to inherit his ancestor's estate, usu. to the exclusion of his younger siblings. — Also termed (in sense 2) primogenitureship. See BOROUGH ENGLISH.

"We might note here, parenthetically, that the English preference for single-file male descent — that is, the system of descent known as primogeniture — was never cordially received in this country. Our statutes of descent and distribution uniformly provide for sons' and daughters' sharing the inheritance equally. Although this seems a fairer method than primogeniture, which was finally abolished in Britain with the 1925 reforms, the descent of property to an ever-expanding group of heirs can seriously complicate the clearing of old titles." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 9 (2d ed. 1984).

primo venienti (pri-moh ven-ee-en-ti). [Latin] To the one first coming. ● This refers to the former practice by estate executors of paying debts as they were presented without regard to whether the estate had enough assets to pay all the debts.

primum decretum (pri-məm di-kree-təm). [Latin "first decree"] 1. Hist. Eccles. law. A preliminary decree granted in favor of the plaintiff on the nonappearance of a defendant. 2. Maritime law. A provisional decree.

princeps (prin-seps). [Latin] Roman law. A leading person, esp. the emperor.

principal, adj. Chief; primary; most important.

principal, n. 1. One who authorizes another to act on his or her behalf as an agent. Cf. AGENT (1).

disclosed principal. A principal whose identity is revealed by the agent to a third party. ● A disclosed principal is always liable on a contract entered into by the agent with the principal's authority, but the agent is usu. not liable.

partially disclosed principal. A principal whose existence — but not actual identity — is revealed by the agent to a third party.

undisclosed principal. A principal whose identity is kept secret by the agent. • An undisclosed principal and the agent are both liable on a contract entered into by the agent with the principal's authority.

2. One who commits or participates in a crime. Cf. ACCESSORY (2); ACCOMPLICE (2).

“The student should notice that in criminal law the word ‘principal’ suggests the very converse of the idea which it represents in mercantile law. In the former, as we have seen, an accessory proposes an act, and the ‘principal’ carries it out. But in the law of contract, and in that of tort, the ‘principal’ only authorizes an act, and the ‘agent’ carries it out. Where the same transaction is both a tort and a crime, this double use of the word may cause confusion. For example, if, by an innkeeper's directions, his chamber-maid steals jewels out of a guest's portmanteau, the maid is the ‘principal’ in a crime, wherein her master is an accessory before the fact; whilst she is also the agent in a tort, wherein her master is the ‘principal’.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 89 (16th ed. 1952).

principal in the first degree. The perpetrator of a crime.

principal in the second degree. One who helped the perpetrator at the time of the crime. — Also termed accessory at the fact. See ABETTOR.

“The distinction between principals in the first and second degrees is a distinction without a difference except in those rare instances in which some unusual statute has provided a different penalty for one of these than for the other. A principal in the first degree is the immediate perpetrator of the crime while a principal in the second degree is one who did not commit the crime with his own hands but was present and abetting the principal. It may be added, in the words of Mr. Justice Miller, that one may perpetrate a crime, not only with his own hands, but ‘through the agency of mechanical or chemical means, as by instruments, poison or powder, or by an animal, child, or other innocent agent’ acting under his direction.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 736 (3d ed. 1982) (quoting Beausoliel v. United States, 107 F.2d 292, 297 (D.C. Cir. 1939)).

3. One who has primary responsibility on an obligation, as opposed to a surety or indorser.

4. The corpus of an estate or trust. 5. The amount of a debt, investment, or other fund, not including interest, earnings, or profits.

principal action. See main demand under DEMAND (1).

principal contract. See CONTRACT.

principal covenant. See COVENANT (1).

principal creditor. See CREDITOR.

principal demand. See main demand under DEMAND (1).

principal fact. See FACT.

principal in the first degree. See PRINCIPAL (2).

principal in the second degree. See PRINCIPAL (2).

principalis (prin-sə-pay-lis), adj. [Latin] Principal, as in principalis debtor (“principal debtor”).

principal place of business. The place of a corporation's chief executive offices, which is typically viewed as the “nerve center.”

principle, n. A basic rule, law, or doctrine.

principle of finality. See FINALITY DOCTRINE.

principle of legality. See LEGALITY (2).

principle of nonintervention. See NONINTERVENTION.

principle of retribution. See LEX TALIONIS.

print, n. See FINGERPRINT.

Printers Ink Statute. A model statute drafted in 1911 and adopted in a number of states making it a misdemeanor to print an advertisement that contains a false or deceptive statement.

prior, adj. 1. Preceding in time or order <under this court's prior order>. 2. Taking precedence .

prior, n. Criminal law. Slang. A previous conviction <because the defendant had two priors, the judge automatically enhanced his sentence>.

prior-appropriation doctrine. The rule that, among the persons whose properties border on a waterway, the earliest users of the water have the right to take all they can use before anyone else has a right to it. Cf. RIPARIAN-RIGHTS DOCTRINE.

prior art. See ART.

prior-claim rule. The principle that before suing for a tax refund or abatement, a taxpayer must first assert the claim to the Internal Revenue Service.

prior consistent statement. A witness's earlier statement that is consistent with the witness's trial testimony. • A prior consistent statement is not hearsay if it is offered to rebut a charge that the testimony was improperly influenced or fabricated. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(1)(B).

prior creditor. See CREDITOR.

prior inconsistent statement. A witness's earlier statement that conflicts with the witness's testimony at trial. • In federal practice, extrinsic evidence of an unsworn prior inconsistent statement is admissible — if the witness is given an opportunity to explain or deny the statement — for impeachment purposes only. Fed. R. Evid. 613(b), 801(d)(1)(A).

priori petenti (pri-or-I pə-ten-ti). [Latin "to the first person applying"] Wills & estates. The principle that when two or more persons are equally entitled to administer an estate, the court will appoint the person who applies first.

priority. 1. The status of being earlier in time or higher in degree or rank; precedence. 2. An established right to such precedence; esp., a creditor's right to have a claim paid before other creditors of the same debtor receive payment. 3. The doctrine that, as between two courts, jurisdiction should be accorded the court in which proceedings are first begun.

priority claim. See CLAIM (5).

priority-jurisdiction rule. See FIRST-TO-FILE RULE.

priority lien. See prior lien under LIEN.

priority of invention. The determination that one among several patent applications, for substantially the same invention, should receive the patent when the Patent and Trademark Office has declared interference. • This determination depends on the date of conception, the date of reduction to practice, and diligence.

priority of liens. The ranking of liens in the order in which they are perfected.

prior lien. See LIEN.

prior petens (pri-ər pet-enz). [Latin] The person first applying.

prior preferred stock. See STOCK.

prior restraint. A governmental restriction on speech or publication before its actual expression. • Prior restraints violate the First Amendment unless the speech is obscene, is defamatory, or creates a clear and present danger to society.

"The legal doctrine of prior restraint (or formal censorship before publication) is probably the oldest form of press control. Certainly it is one of the most efficient, since one censor, working in the watershed, can create a drought of information and ideas long before they reach the fertile plain of people's minds. In the United States, the doctrine of prior restraint has been firmly opposed by the First Amendment to the Constitution, and by the Supreme Court, perhaps most notably in the case of Near v. Minnesota, decided in 1931. But the philosophy behind that doctrine lives zestfully on, and shows no signs of infirmities of age." David G. Clark & Earl R. Hutchinson, Mass Media and the Law 11 (1970).

prior-use bar. See PUBLIC-USE BAR.

prior-use doctrine. The principle that, without legislative authorization, a government agency may not appropriate property already devoted to a public use.

prisage (pri-zij). Hist. A royal duty on wine imported into England. • Prisage was replaced by butlerage in the reign of Edward I. Cf. BUTLERAGE.

prisel en auter lieu (pri-zəl awn oh-tayl-yoo). [Law French "a taking in another place"] A plea in abatement in a replevin action.

prison. A state or federal facility of confinement for convicted criminals, esp. felons. — Also termed penitentiary; penal institution; adult correctional institution. Cf. JAIL.

prison breach. A prisoner's forcible breaking and departure from a place of lawful confinement; the offense of escaping from confinement in a prison or jail. • Prison breach has traditionally been distinguished from escape by the presence of force; this distinction has been abandoned in some jurisdictions. — Also termed prison breaking. Cf. ESCAPE (2).

"Breach of prison by the offender himself, when committed for any cause, was felony at the common law: or even conspiring to break it. But this severity is mitigated by the statute de frangentibus prisonam, 1 Edw. II, which enacts that no person shall have judgment of life or member, for breaking prison, unless committed for some capital offence. So that to break prison, when lawfully committed for any treason or felony, remains still a felony as at the common law; and to break prison, when lawfully confined upon any other inferior charge, is still punishable as a high misdemeanor by fine and imprisonment." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 130-31 (1769).

prison camp. A usu. minimum-security camp for the detention of trustworthy prisoners who are often employed on government projects.

prisoner. 1. A person who is serving time in prison. 2. A person who has been apprehended by a law-enforcement officer and is in custody, regardless of whether the person has yet been put in prison.

prisoner at the bar. An accused person who is on trial.

prisoner of conscience. Int'l law. A person who, not having used or advocated the use of violence, has been imprisoned by reason of a political, religious, or other conscientiously held belief or by reason of ethnic origin, sex, color, or language.

prisoner's dilemma. A logic problem — often used by law-and-economics scholars to illustrate the effect of cooperative behavior — involving two prisoners who are being separately questioned about their participation in a crime: (1) if both confess, they will each receive a 5-year sentence; (2) if neither confesses, they will each receive a 3-year sentence; and (3) if one confesses but the other does not, the confessing prisoner will receive a 1-year sentence while the silent prisoner will receive a 10-year sentence. See EXTERNALITY.

prist (prist). [Law French] Hist. Ready. • In oral pleading, this term was used to express a joinder of issue.

privacy, invasion of. See INVASION OF PRIVACY.

privacy law. A federal or state statute that protects a person's right to be left alone or restricts public access to personal information such as tax returns and medical records. — Also termed privacy act.

private, adj. 1. Relating or belonging to an individual, as opposed to the public or the government. 2. (Of a company) not having shares that are freely available on an open market. 3. Confidential; secret.

private agent. See AGENT.

private annuity. See ANNUITY.

private attorney. See ATTORNEY (1).

private-attorney-general doctrine. The equitable principle that allows the recovery of attorney's fees to a party who brings a lawsuit that benefits a significant number of people, requires private enforcement, and is important to society as a whole.

privation (pri-vay-shən). 1. The act of taking away or withdrawing. 2. The condition of being deprived.

privatization (pri-və-tə-zay-shən), n. The act or process of converting a business or industry from governmental ownership or control to private enterprise. — privatize, vb.

privatum (pri-vay-təm). [Latin] Private. • This term appeared in phrases such as jus privatum (“private law”).

privies (priv-eez). See PRIVY.

privigna (pri-vig-nə), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. A daughter of one’s husband or wife by a previous marriage; a stepdaughter.

privignus (pri-vig-nəs). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A son of one’s husband or wife by a previous marriage; a stepson.

privilege. 1. A special legal right, exemption, or immunity granted to a person or class of persons; an exception to a duty.

absolute privilege. A privilege that immunizes an actor from suit, no matter how wrongful the action might be, and even though it is done with an improper motive. Cf. qualified privilege.

conditional privilege. See qualified privilege.

deliberative-process privilege. A privilege permitting the government to withhold documents relating to policy formulation to encourage open and independent discussion among those who develop government policy.

litigation privilege. A privilege protecting the attorneys and parties in a lawsuit from defamation claims arising from statements made in the course of the suit.

parliamentary privilege. The right of a particular question, motion, or statement to take precedence over all other business before the legislative body.

privilege from arrest. An exemption from arrest, as that enjoyed by members of Congress during legislative sessions. U.S. Const. art. I, § 6.

qualified privilege. A privilege that immunizes an actor from suit only when the privilege is properly exercised in the performance of a legal or moral duty. — Also termed conditional privilege. Cf. absolute privilege.

“Qualified privilege . . . is an intermediate case between total absence of privilege and the presence of absolute privilege.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 165 (17th ed. 1977).

special privilege. A privilege granted to a person or class of persons to the exclusion of others and in derogation of the common right.

testimonial privilege. A right not to testify based on a claim of privilege; a privilege that overrides a witness’s duty to disclose matters within the witness’s knowledge, whether at trial or by deposition.

viatorial privilege (vi-ə-tor-ee-əl). A privilege that overrides a person’s duty to attend court in person and to testify.

work-product privilege. See WORK-PRODUCT RULE.

2. An affirmative defense by which a defendant acknowledges at least part of the conduct complained of but asserts that the defendant’s conduct was authorized or sanctioned by law; esp., in tort law, a circumstance justifying or excusing an intentional tort. See JUSTIFICATION (2). Cf. IMMUNITY (2). 3. An evidentiary rule that gives a witness the option to not disclose the fact asked for, even though it might be relevant; the right to prevent disclosure of certain information in court, esp. when the information was originally communicated in a professional or confidential relationship.

accountant-client privilege. The protection afforded to a client from an accountant’s unauthorized disclosure of materials submitted to or prepared by the accountant.

antimarital-facts privilege. See marital privilege (2).

attorney-client privilege. The client’s right to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing confidential communications between the client and the attorney. — Also termed lawyer-client privilege; client’s privilege.

“There are a number of ways to organize the essential elements of the attorney-client privilege to provide for an orderly analysis. One of the most popular is Wigmore’s schema: ‘(1) Where legal advice of any kind is sought (2) from a professional legal adviser in his capacity as such, (3) the communications relating to that purpose (4) made in confidence (5) by the client (6) are at his instance permanently protected (7) from disclosure by himself or by the legal adviser, (8) except the privilege be waived.’ Though this organization has its virtues, there is some question as to whether it completely states the modern privilege.” 24 Charles Alan Wright & Kenneth W. Graham, Jr., Federal Practice and Procedure § 5473, at 103–04 (1986) (quoting 8 John Henry Wigmore, Evidence § 2292, at 554 (John T. McNaughton rev., 1961)).

“At the present time it seems most realistic to portray the attorney-client privilege as supported in part by its traditional utilitarian justification, and in part by the integral role it is perceived to play in the adversary system itself. Our system of litigation casts the lawyer in the role of fighter for the party whom he represents. A strong tradition of loyalty attaches to the relationship of attorney and client, and this tradition would be outraged by routine examination of the lawyer as to the client's confidential disclosures regarding professional business. To the extent that the evidentiary privilege, then, is integrally related to an entire code of professional conduct, it is futile to envision drastic curtailment of the privilege without substantial modification of the underlying ethical system to which the privilege is merely ancillary." John W. Strong, McCormick on Evidence § 87, at 121-22 (4th ed. 1992).

clergyman-penitent privilege. See priest-penitent privilege.

doctor-patient privilege. The right to exclude from evidence in a legal proceeding any confidential communication that a patient makes to a physician for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment, unless the patient consents to the disclosure. — Also termed physician-client privilege; patient-physician privilege.

editorial privilege. See journalist's privilege (2).

executive privilege. A privilege, based on the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers, that exempts the executive branch of the federal government from usual disclosure requirements when the matter to be disclosed involves national security or foreign policy. Cf. executive immunity under IMMUNITY (1).

husband-wife privilege. See marital privilege.

informant's privilege. The qualified privilege that a government can invoke to prevent disclosure of the identity and communications of its informants. • In exercising its power to formulate evidentiary rules for federal criminal cases, the U.S. Supreme Court has consistently declined to hold that the government must disclose the identity of informants in a preliminary hearing or in a criminal trial. McCray v. Illinois, 386 U.S. 300, 312, 87 S.Ct. 1056, 1063 (1967). A party can usu. overcome the privilege if it can demonstrate that the need for the information outweighs the public interest in maintaining the privilege. — Also termed informer's privilege.

joint-defense privilege. The rule that a defendant can assert the attorney-client privilege to protect a confidential communication made to a codefendant's lawyer if the communication was related to the defense of both defendants. — Also termed common-interest doctrine.

journalist's privilege. 1. A reporter's protection, under constitutional or statutory law, from being compelled to testify about confidential information or sources. — Also termed reporter's privilege; newsman's privi- lege. See SHIELD LAW (1). 2. A publisher's protection against defamation lawsuits when the publication makes fair comment on the actions of public officials in matters of public concern. — Also termed editorial privilege. See FAIR COMMENT.

judicial privilege. Defamation. The privilege protecting any statement made in the course of and with reference to a judicial proceeding by any judge, juror, party, witness, or advocate.

legislative privilege. Defamation. The privilege protecting (1) any statement made in a legislature by one of its members, and (2) any paper published as part of legislative business. — Also termed (in a parliamentary system) parliamentary privilege.

marital privilege. 1. The privilege allowing a spouse not to testify, and to prevent another from testifying, about confidential communications with the other spouse during the marriage. — Also termed marital-communications privilege. 2. The privilege allowing a spouse not to testify in a criminal case as an adverse witness against the other spouse, regardless of the subject matter of the testimony. — Also termed (in sense 2) privilege against adverse spousal testimony; antimarital-facts privilege. 3. The privilege immunizing from a defamation lawsuit any statement made between husband and wife. — Also termed (in all senses) spousal privilege; husband-wife privilege.

national-security privilege. See state-secrets privilege.

newsman's privilege. See journalist's privilege (1).

official privilege. The privilege immunizing from a defamation lawsuit any statement made by one state officer to another in the course of official duty.

parliamentary privilege. See legislative privilege.

patient-physician privilege. See doctor-patient privilege.

peer-review privilege. A privilege that protects from disclosure the proceedings and reports of a medical facility's peer-review committee, which reviews and oversees the patient care and medical services provided by the staff.

physician-client privilege. See doctor-patient privilege.

priest-penitent privilege. The privilege barring a clergy member from testifying about a confessor's communications. — Also termed clergyman-penitent privilege.

privilege against adverse spousal testimony. See marital privilege (2).

psychotherapist-patient privilege. A privilege that a person can invoke to prevent the disclosure of a confidential communication made in the course of diagnosis or treatment of a mental or emotional condition by or at the direction of a psychotherapist. • The privilege can be overcome under certain conditions, as when the examination is ordered by a court. — Also termed psychotherapist-client privilege.

reporter's privilege. See journalist's privilege (1).

self-critical-analysis privilege. A privilege protecting individuals and entities from divulging the results of candid assessments of their compliance with laws and regulations, to the extent that the assessments are internal, the results were intended from the outset to be confidential, and the information is of a type that would be curtailed if it were forced to be disclosed. • This privilege is founded on the public policy that it is beneficial to permit individuals and entities to confidentially evaluate their compliance with the law, so that they will monitor and improve their compliance with it. — Also termed self-policing privilege.

spousal privilege. See marital privilege.

state-secrets privilege. A privilege that the government may invoke against the discovery of a material that, if divulged, could compromise national security. — Also termed national-security privilege.

4. Civil law. A creditor's right, arising from the nature of the debt, to priority over the debtor's other creditors. 5. HAT MONEY.

privilege against self-incrimination. See RIGHT AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION.

privileged, adj. Not subject to the usual rules or liabilities; esp., not subject to disclosure during the course of a lawsuit .

privileged communication. See COMMUNICATION.

privileged debt. See DEBT.

privileged subscription. See RIGHTS OFFERING.

privileged villeinage. See VILLEINAGE.

privilege from arrest. See PRIVILEGE (1).

Privileges and Immunities Clause. The constitutional provision (U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1) prohibiting a state from favoring its own citizens by discriminating against other states' citizens who come within its borders.

Privileges or Immunities Clause. The constitutional provision (U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1) prohibiting state laws that abridge the privileges or immunities of U.S. citizens. • The clause was effectively nullified by the Supreme Court in the Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 36 (1873). Cf. DUE PROCESS CLAUSE; EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE.

privilege tax. See TAX.

privilegium (priv-ə-lee-jee-əm). [Latin] 1. Roman law. A law passed against or in favor of a specific individual. 2. Roman law. A special right, esp. one giving priority to a creditor. 3. Civil law. Every right or favor that is granted by the law but is contrary to the usual rule.

privilegium clericale (priv-ə-lee-jee-əm kler-ə-kay-lee). [Law Latin] See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

privity (priv-ə-tee). 1. The connection or relationship between two parties, each having a legally recognized interest in the same subject matter (such as a transaction, proceeding, or piece of property); mutuality of interest <privity of contract>.

horizontal privity. Commercial law. The legal relationship between a party and a non-party who is related to the party (such as a buyer and a member of the buyer's family).

privity of blood. 1. Privity between an heir and an ancestor. 2. Privity between coparceners.

privity of contract. The relationship between the parties to a contract, allowing them to sue each other but preventing a third party from doing so. • The requirement of privity has been relaxed under modern laws and doctrines of implied warranty and strict liability, which allow a third-party beneficiary or other foreseeable user to sue the seller of a defective product.

“To many students and practitioners of the common law privity of contract became a fetish. As such, it operated to deprive many a claimant of a remedy in cases where according to the mores of the time the claim was just. It has made many learned men believe that a chose in action could not be assigned. Even now, it is gravely asserted that a man cannot be made the debtor of another against his will. But the common law was gradually influenced by equity and by the law merchant, so that by assignment a debtor could become bound to pay a perfect stranger to himself, although until the legislature stepped in, the common-law courts characteristically made use of a fiction and pretended that they were not doing that which they really were doing." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 335 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"It is an elementary principle of English law — known as the doctrine of 'Privity of Contract' — that contractual rights and duties only affect the parties to a contract, and this principle is the distinguishing feature between the law of contract and the law of property. True proprietary rights are 'binding on the world' in the lawyer's traditional phrase. Contractual rights, on the other hand, are only binding on, and enforceable by, the immediate parties to the contract. But this distinction, fundamental though it be, wears a little thin at times. On the one hand, there has been a constant tendency for contractual rights to be extended in their scope so as to affect more and more persons who cannot be regarded as parties to the transaction. On the other hand, few proprietary rights are literally 'binding on the world.'" P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 265 (3d ed. 1981).

"The doctrine of privity means that a person cannot acquire rights or be subject to liabilities arising under a contract to which he is not a party. It does not mean that a contract between A and B cannot affect the legal rights of C indirectly." G.H. Treitel, The Law of Contract 538 (8th ed. 1991).

privity of estate. A mutual or successive relationship to the same right in property, as between grantor and grantee or landlord and tenant.

privity of possession. Privity between parties in successive possession of real property. • The existence of this type of privity is often at issue in adverse-possession claims.

vertical privity. 1. Commercial law. The legal relationship between parties in a product's chain of distribution (such as a manufacturer and a seller). 2. Privity between one who signs a contract containing a restrictive covenant and one who acquires the property burdened by it.

2. Joint knowledge or awareness of something private or secret, esp. as implying concurrence or consent <privity to a crime>.

privy (priv-ee), n. pl. A person having a legal interest of privity in any action, matter, or property; a person who is in privity with another. • Traditionally, there were six types of privies: (1) privies in blood, such as an heir and an ancestor; (2) privies in representation, such as an executor and a testator or an administrator and an intestate person; (3) privies in estate, such as grantor and grantee or lessor and lessee; (4) privies in respect to a contract — the parties to a contract; (5) privies in respect of estate and contract, such as a lessor and lessee where the lessee assigns an interest, but the contract between lessor and lessee continues because the lessor does not accept the assignee; and (6) privies in law, such as husband and wife. Pl. privies.

Privy Council. In Britain, the principal council of the sovereign, composed of the cabinet ministers and other persons chosen by royal appointment to serve as privy councillors. • The functions of the Privy Council are now mostly ceremonial. See JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Privy Councillor. A member of the Privy Council.

privy purse. English law. The income set apart for the sovereign's personal use.

privy seal. 1. A seal used in making out grants or letters patent before they are passed under the great seal. 2. (cap.) LORD PRIVY SEAL.

privy signet. Hist. The signet or seal used by the sovereign in making out grants and private letters.

privy verdict. See VERDICT.

prize. 1. Something of value awarded in recognition of a person's achievement. 2. A vessel or cargo captured at sea or seized in port by the forces of a nation at war, and therefore liable to being condemned or appropriated as enemy property.

prize court. See COURT.

prize fighting. Fighting for a reward or prize; esp., professional boxing.

"Prize fighting . . . was not looked upon with favor by the common law as was a friendly boxing match or wrestling match. On the other hand it was not punishable by the common law unless it was fought in a public place, or for some other reason constituted a breach of the peace." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 480 (3d ed. 1982).

prize goods. See GOODS.

prize law. The system of laws applicable to the capture of prize at sea, dealing with such matters as the rights of captors and the distribution of the proceeds.

prize money. 1. A dividend from the proceeds of a captured vessel, paid to the captors. 2. Money offered as an award.

PRO. abbr. PEER-REVIEW ORGANIZATION.

pro (proh). [Latin] For.

proamita (proh-am-ə-tə). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A great-great aunt; the sister of one's great-grandfather.

proamita magna (proh-am-ə-tə mag-nə). [Latin] Civil law. A great-great-great-aunt.

proavia (proh-ay-vee-ə). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A great-grandmother.

proavunculus (proh-ə-vəŋk-yə-ləs). [Latin] Civil law. A great-grandmother's brother.

probabilis causa (prə-bay-bə-lis kaw-zə). [Latin] Probable cause.

probable cause. A reasonable ground to suspect that a person has committed or is committing a crime or that a place contains specific items connected with a crime. • Under the Fourth Amendment, probable cause — which amounts to more than a bare suspicion but less than evidence that would justify a conviction — must be shown before an arrest warrant or search warrant may be issued. — Also termed reasonable cause; sufficient cause; reasonable grounds. Cf. REASONABLE SUSPICION.

"Probable cause may not be established simply by showing that the officer who made the challenged arrest or search subjectively believed he had grounds for his action. As emphasized in Beck v. Ohio [379 U.S. 89, 85 S.Ct. 223 (1964)]: 'If subjective good faith alone were the test, the protection of the Fourth Amendment would evaporate, and the people would be "secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects" only in the discretion of the police.' The probable cause test, then, is an objective one; for there to be probable cause, the facts must be such as would warrant a belief by a reasonable man." Wayne R. LaFare & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 3.3, at 140 (2d ed. 1992).

probable-cause hearing. See PRELIMINARY HEARING.

probable consequence. An effect or result that is more likely to follow its supposed cause than not to follow it.

probable-desistance test. Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, focusing on whether the defendant has exhibited dangerous behavior indicating a likelihood of committing the crime. See ATTEMPT (2).

probable evidence. See presumptive evidence under EVIDENCE.

probandum (proh-ban-dəm), n. A fact to be proved. Pl. probanda. See fact in issue under FACT.

probata (proh-bay-tə). [Latin] pl. PROBATUM.

probate (proh-bayt), n. 1. The judicial procedure by which a testamentary document is established to be a valid will; the proving of a will to the satisfaction of the court. • Unless set aside, the probate of a will is conclusive upon the parties to the proceedings (and others who had notice of them) on all questions of testamentary capacity, the absence of fraud or undue influence, and due execution of the will. But probate does not preclude inquiry into the validity of the will's provisions or on their proper construction or legal effect. — Also termed proof of will.

informal probate. Probate designed to operate with minimal involvement of the probate court. • Most modern probate codes encourage this type of administration, with an independent personal representative. — Also termed independent probate.

probate in common form. Hist. Probate granted in the registry, without any formal procedure in court, on the executor's ex parte application. • This type of probate is revocable.

probate in solemn form. Hist. Probate granted in open court; as a final decree, when all interested parties have been given notice. • This type of probate is irrevocable for all parties who have had notice of the proceeding, unless a later will is discovered.

small-estate probate. An informal procedure for administering small estates, less structured than the normal process and usually not requiring the assistance of an attorney.

2. Loosely, a personal representative's actions in handling a decedent's estate. 3. Loosely, all the subjects over which probate courts have jurisdiction. 4. Archaic. A nonresident plaintiff's proof of a debt by swearing before a notary public or other officer that the debt is correct, just, and due, and by having the notary attach a jurat.

probate, vb. 1. To admit (a will) to proof. 2. To administer (a decedent's estate). 3. To grant probation to (a criminal); to reduce (a sentence) by means of probation.

probate asset. See legal asset under ASSET.

probate bond. See BOND (2).

probate code. A collection of statutes setting forth the law (substantive and procedural) of decedents' estates and trusts.

probate court. See COURT.

probate distribution. See DISTRIBUTION.

probate duty. See DUTY (4).

probate estate. A decedent's property subject to administration by a personal representative. See decedent's estate under ESTATE.

probate homestead. A homestead, exempt from creditors' claims, set apart for use by a decedent's surviving spouse and minor children. See HOMESTEAD.

probate in common form. See PROBATE.

probate in solemn form. See PROBATE.

probate judge. See JUDGE.

probate jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

probate register. See REGISTER.

probatio (prə-bay-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman & civil law. Proof.

plena probatio. See probatio plena.

probatio mortua (prə-bay-shee-oh mor-choo-ə). [Latin] Dead proof; proof by an inanimate object such as a deed or other instrument.

probatio plena (prə-bay-shee-oh plee-nə). [Latin] Civil law. Full proof; proof by two witnesses or a public instrument. — Also termed plena probatio.

probatio semi-plena (prə-bay-shee-oh semi-plee-nə). [Latin] Civil law. Half-full proof; half-proof; proof by one witness or a private instrument.

probatio viva (prə-bay-shee-oh vi-və). [Latin] Living proof; that is, proof by the mouth of a witness.

probation. 1. A court-imposed criminal sentence that, subject to stated conditions, releases a convicted person into the community instead of sending the criminal to jail or prison. Cf. PA-ROLE.

shock probation. Probation that is granted after a brief stay in jail or prison. • Shock probation is intended to awaken the defendant to the reality of confinement for failure to abide by the conditions of probation. This type of probation is discretionary with the sentencing judge and is usu. granted within 180 days of the original sentence. Cf. shock incarceration under INCARCERATION.

2. The act of judicially proving a will. See PROBATE.

probation before judgment. See deferred judgment under JUDGMENT.

probationer. A convicted criminal who is on probation.

probation officer. A government officer who supervises the conduct of a probationer.

probation without judgment. See deferred judgment under JUDGMENT.

probatio plena. See PROBATIO.

probatio semi-plena. See PROBATIO.

probatio viva. See PROBATIO.

probative (proh-bə-tiv), adj. Tending to prove or disprove. • Courts can exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Fed. R. Evid. 403. — probativeness, n.

probative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

probative fact. See FACT.

probator (proh-bay-tər), n. Hist. An accused person who confesses to a crime but asserts that another also participated in the crime. • The probator had to undertake to prove the supposed accomplice's guilt.

probatum (proh-bay-təm), n. [Latin] Something conclusively established or proved; proof. Pl. probata. Cf. ALLEGATUM.

pro bono (proh boh-noh), adv. & adj. [Latin pro bono publico "for the public good"] Being or involving uncompensated legal services performed esp. for the public good <took the case pro bono> <50 hours of pro bono work each year>.

pro bono et malo (proh boh-noh et mal-oh). [Latin] For good and ill. See DE BONO ET MALO.

probus et legalis homo (proh-bəs et læ-gay-lis hoh-moh). [Law Latin] A good and lawful man. ● This phrase referred to a juror who was legally competent to serve on a jury. Pl. probi et legales homines.

procedendo (proh-sə-den-doh). [Latin] A higher court's order directing a lower court to determine and enter a judgment in a previously removed case.

procedendo ad iudicium. See DE PROCEDENDO AD IUDICIUM.

procedural consolidation. See JOINT ADMINISTRATION.

procedural-default doctrine. The principle that a federal court lacks jurisdiction to review the merits of a habeas corpus petition if a state court has refused to review the complaint because the petitioner failed to follow reasonable state-court procedures.

procedural due process. See DUE PROCESS.

procedural law. The rules that prescribe the steps for having a right or duty judicially enforced, as opposed to the law that defines the specific rights or duties themselves. — Also termed adjective law. Cf. SUBSTANTIVE LAW.

procedural presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

procedure. 1. A specific method or course of action. 2. The judicial rule or manner for carrying on a civil lawsuit or criminal prosecution. See CIVIL PROCEDURE; CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

proceeding. 1. The regular and orderly progression of a lawsuit, including all acts and events between the time of commencement and the entry of judgment. 2. Any procedural means for seeking redress from a tribunal or agency. 3. An act or step that is part of a larger action. 4.

The business conducted by a court or other official body; a hearing. 5. Bankruptcy. A particular dispute or matter arising within a pending case — as opposed to the case as a whole.

“ ‘Proceeding’ is a word much used to express the business done in courts. A proceeding in court is an act done by the authority or direction of the court, express or implied. It is more comprehensive than the word ‘action,’ but it may include in its general sense all the steps taken or measures adopted in the prosecution or defense of an action, including the pleadings and judgment. As applied to actions, the term ‘proceeding’ may include — (1) the institution of the action; (2) the appearance of the defendant; (3) all ancillary or provisional steps, such as arrest, attachment of property, garnishment, injunction, writ of ne exeat; (4) the pleadings; (5) the taking of testimony before trial; (6) all motions made in the action; (7) the trial; (8) the judgment; (9) the execution; (10) proceedings supplementary to execution, in code practice; (11) the taking of the appeal or writ of error; (12) the remittitur, or sending back of the record to the lower court from the appellate or reviewing court; (13) the enforcement of the judgment, or a new trial, as may be directed by the court of last resort.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 3–4 (2d ed. 1899).

adjudicatory proceeding. See adjudicatory hearing under HEARING.

administrative proceeding. See ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING.

collateral proceeding. A proceeding brought to address an issue incidental to the principal proceeding.

competency proceeding. A proceeding to assess a person's mental capacity. ● A competency hearing may be held either in a criminal context to determine a defendant's competency to stand trial or as a civil proceeding to assess whether a person should be committed to a mental-health facility.

contempt proceeding. A judicial or quasi-judicial hearing conducted to determine whether a person has committed contempt.

core proceeding. See CORE PROCEEDING.

criminal proceeding. A proceeding instituted to determine a person's guilt or innocence or to set a convicted person's punishment; a criminal hearing or trial.

ex parte proceeding (eks pahr-tee). A proceeding in which not all parties are present or given the opportunity to be heard. — Also termed ex parte hearing.

in camera proceeding (in kam-ə-rə). A proceeding held in a judge's chambers or other private place.

informal proceeding. A trial conducted in a more relaxed manner than a typical court trial, such as an administrative hearing or a trial in small-claims court.

judicial proceeding. Any court proceeding.

non-core proceeding. See RELATED PROCEEDING.

related proceeding. See RELATED PROCEEDING.

special proceeding. 1. A proceeding that can be commenced independently of a pending action and from which a final order may be appealed immediately. 2. A proceeding involving statutory or civil remedies or rules rather than the rules or remedies ordinarily available under rules of procedure; a proceeding providing extraordinary relief.

summary proceeding. A nonjury proceeding that settles a controversy or disposes of a case in a relatively prompt and simple manner. — Also termed summary trial. Cf. plenary action under ACTION.

“Summary proceedings were such as were directed by Act of Parliament, there was no jury, and the person accused was acquitted or sentenced only by such person as statute had appointed for his judge. The common law was wholly a stranger to summary proceedings.” A.H. Manchester, Modern Legal History of England and Wales, 1750–1950 160 (1980).

supplementary proceeding. 1. A proceeding held in connection with the enforcement of a judgment, for the purpose of identifying and locating the debtor’s assets available to satisfy the judgment. 2. A proceeding that in some way supplements another.

proceeds (proh-seedz), n. 1. The value of land, goods, or investments when converted into money; the amount of money received from a sale <the proceeds are subject to attachment>. 2. Something received upon selling, exchanging, collecting, or otherwise disposing of collateral. UCC § 9–306(1). • Proceeds differ from other types of collateral because they constitute any collateral that has changed in form. For example, if a farmer borrows money and gives the creditor a security interest in the harvest, the harvested wheat is collateral. If the farmer then exchanges the harvest for a tractor, the tractor becomes the proceeds of the wheat.

net proceeds. The amount received in a transaction minus the costs of the transaction (such as expenses and commissions). — Also termed net balance.

proceres (pros-ə-reez). [Latin] Nobles; lords. See DOMUS PROCERUM.

process, n. 1. The proceedings in any action or prosecution <due process of law>. 2. A summons or writ, esp. to appear or respond in court <service of process>. — Also termed judicial process; legal process.

“Process is so denominated because it proceeds or issues forth in order to bring the defendant into court, to answer the charge preferred against him, and signifies the writs or judicial means by which he is brought to answer.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 338 (2d ed. 1826).

ailable process. A process instructing an officer to take bail after arresting a defendant. • The defendant’s discharge is required by law after the tender of suitable security.

civil process. A process that issues in a civil lawsuit.

compulsory process. A process, with a warrant to arrest or attach included, that compels a person to appear in court as a witness.

criminal process. A process (such as an arrest warrant) that issues to compel a person to answer for a crime.

final process. A process issued at the conclusion of a judicial proceeding; esp., a writ of execution.

irregular process. A process not issued in accordance with prescribed practice. • Whether the process is void or merely voidable depends on the type of irregularity. Cf. regular process.

mesne process (meen). 1. A process issued between the commencement of a lawsuit and the final judgment or determination. 2. The procedure by which a contumacious defendant is compelled to plead.

original process. A process issued at the beginning of a judicial proceeding.

“Original process is any writ or notice by which a defendant is called upon to appear and answer the plaintiff’s declaration. The commencement of the suit at common law was formerly by original writ. Judicial process was by summons, attachment, arrest and outlawry.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 3, at 17 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

regular process. A process that issues lawfully according to prescribed practice. Cf. irregular process.

summary process. 1. An immediate process, issuing and taking effect without intermediate applications or delays. 2. A legal procedure used to resolve a controversy more efficiently and expeditiously than ordinary methods. 3. The legal documents achieving such a result. 4. A procedure for repossessing real property from a tenant upon default. See summary eviction under EVICTION. 5. See SHOW-CAUSE PROCEEDING.

trust process. In some states (particularly in New England), garnishment or foreign attachment.

void process. Legal process that, in some material way, does not comply with the required form.

3. Patents. A method, operation, or series of actions intended to achieve some end or result. Cf. MACHINE; MANUFACTURE.

“A process is a way of doing something. If it is a patentable process, it must be a new, useful, and nonobvious way of doing something. If the process is patentable, the result of that process — the something getting done — need not of itself be new, useful, or nonobvious. In other words, the result of an inventive process need not be an invention itself.” Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 24 (2d ed. 1990).

process, abuse of. See MALICIOUS ABUSE OF PROCESS.

process agent. See AGENT.

process by foreign attachment. See FACTORIZING PROCESS.

products liability, n. 1. A manufacturer's or seller's tort liability for any damages or injuries suffered by a buyer, user, or bystander as a result of a defective product. • Products liability can be based on a theory of negligence, strict liability, or breach of warranty. 2. The legal theory by which liability is imposed on the manufacturer or seller of a defective product. 3. The field of law dealing with this theory. — Also termed product liability; (specif.) manufacturer's liability. — product-liability, adj. See LIABILITY.

"The law of products liability is that body of common and statutory law permitting money reparation for substandard conduct of others resulting in product-related injury to the injured party's person or property. Resistance to the description of products liability as a doctrine having receded, there is today a guiding tenet in the law of product-related injury that is the distillate of seventy years of decisional law. The birth of the doctrine can be dated at 1916, the publication of the immensely influential decision in MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co., [217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050 (1916)], in which the New York Court of Appeals held that the manufacturer of any product capable of serious harm if incautiously made owed a duty of care in the design, inspection, and fabrication of the product, a duty owed not only to the immediate purchaser but to all persons who might foreseeably come into contact with the product. Following MacPherson, the doctrine as formed by decisions of the ensuing decades is that a buyer, user, consumer or bystander in proximity to an unreasonably dangerous product, and who is injured in person or in property by its dangerous propensities, may recover in damages from the manufacturer or intermediate seller." 1 M. Stuart Madden, Products Liability § 1.1, at 1-2 (2d ed. 1988).

strict products liability. Products liability arising when the buyer proves that the goods were unreasonably dangerous and that (1) the seller was in the business of selling goods, (2) the goods were defective when they were in the seller's hands, (3) the defect caused the plaintiff's injury, and (4) the product was expected to and did reach the consumer without substantial change in condition.

products-liability action. A lawsuit brought against a manufacturer, seller, or lessor of a product — regardless of the substantive legal theory or theories upon which the lawsuit is brought — for personal injury, death, or property damage caused by the manufacture, construction, design, formulation, installation, preparation, or assembly of a product. — Also termed product-liability action.

products-liability insurance. See INSURANCE.

[Latin] For this occasion or particular purpose. • The phrase usu. refers to a lawyer who has not been admitted to practice in a particular jurisdiction but who is admitted there temporarily for the purpose of conducting a particular case. — Abbr. p.h.v. See admission pro hac vice under ADMISSION (2). For owner pro hac vice, see demise charter under CHARTER (4).

prohibit, vb. 1. To forbid by law. 2. To prevent or hinder.

prohibited degree. See DEGREE.

prohibitio de vasto, directa parti (proh-hə-bish-ee-oh dee vas-toh, di-rek-tə pahr-tī). [Latin “prohibition of waste, directed to the party”] Hist. A writ issued during litigation prohibiting a tenant from committing waste.

prohibition. 1. A law or order that forbids a certain action. 2. An extraordinary writ issued by an appellate court to prevent a lower court from exceeding its jurisdiction or to prevent a nonjudicial officer or entity from exercising a power. — Also termed (in sense 2) writ of prohibition.

“Prohibition is a kind of common-law injunction to prevent an unlawful assumption of jurisdiction. . . . It is a common-law injunction against governmental usurpation, as where one is called coram non iudice (before a judge unauthorized to take cognizance of the affair), to answer in a tribunal that has no legal cognizance of the cause. It arrests the proceedings of any tribunal, board, or person exercising judicial functions in a manner or by means not within its jurisdiction or discretion.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 341, at 542 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

3. (cap.) The period from 1920 to 1933, when the manufacture, transport, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the United States was forbidden by the 18th Amendment to the Constitution. • The 18th Amendment was repealed by the 21st Amendment.

prolocutor (proh-lok-yə-tər). 1. Eccles. law. The president or chair of a convocation. 2. Hist. The speaker of the British House of Lords. • This office now belongs to the Lord Chancellor.

pro majori cautela (proh mə-jor-ī kaw-tee-lə). [Latin] For greater caution; by way of additional security. • This phrase usu. applies to an act done or to a clause put in an instrument as a precaution.

promatertera (proh-mə-tər-tər-ə). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A great-great-aunt; the sister of one’s great-grandmother.

promatertera magna (proh-mə-tər-tər-ə mag-nə). [Latin] Civil law. A great-great-great-aunt.

promise, n. 1. The manifestation of an intention to act or refrain from acting in a specified manner, conveyed in such a way that another is

"By common usage, a promise is an expression leading another person justifiably to expect certain conduct on the part of the promisor. Such an expression is a promise, whether enforceable at law or not. It is indeed an essential element in every contract. Society does not guarantee the fulfillment of all expectations so induced." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 6 n.3 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"[Promise] means not only the physical manifestations of assurance by words or conduct, but also the moral duty to make good the assurance by performance. If by reason of other operative facts the promise is recognized as creating a legal duty, the promise is a contract." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1A, at 4 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

"It is well to make clear two points at the outset . . . The first is that I do not believe that all promises are morally binding; accordingly, I use the term 'promise' without prejudging the question whether the promise creates an obligation. The second is that, where a promise does create an obligation, the reason for that may depend upon whether the promise was explicit or implied. There is thus, in my view, a fundamental distinction between explicit and implied promises, and when I use the word 'promise' without qualification, I normally mean an explicit promise." P.S. Atiyah, Promises, Morals, and Law 8 (1981).

2. The words in a promissory note expressing the maker's intention to pay a debt. ● A mere written acknowledgment that a debt is due is insufficient to constitute a promise. — promise, vb.

aleatory promise (ay-lee-ə-tor-ee). A promise conditional on the happening of a fortuitous event, or on an event that the parties believe is fortuitous.

alternative promise. A contractual promise to do one of two or more things, any one of which must satisfy the promisee for the promise to qualify as consideration.

bare promise. See naked promise.

collateral promise. A promise to guarantee the debt of another, made primarily without benefit to the party making the promise. ● Unlike an original promise, a collateral promise must be in writing to be enforceable. See MAIN-PURPOSE RULE.

conditional promise. A promise that is conditioned on the occurrence of an event <she made a conditional promise to sell the gold on April 2 unless the price fell below $300 an ounce before that time>. ● A conditional promise is not illusory as long as the condition is not entirely within the promisor's control.

dependent promise. A promise to be performed by a party only when another obligation has first been performed by another party.

divisible promises. Promises that are capable of being divided into independent parts.

false promise. A promise made with no intention of carrying it out.

fictitious promise. See implied promise.

gratuitous promise. A promise made in exchange for nothing; a promise not supported by consideration. ● A gratuitous promise is not ordinarily legally enforceable. — Also termed bare promise; naked promise.

illusory promise. A promise that appears on its face to be so insubstantial as to impose no obligation on the promisor; an expression cloaked in promissory terms but actually containing no commitment by the promisor. ● For example, if a guarantor promises to make good on the principal debtor's obligation "as long as I think it's in my commercial interests," the promisor is not really bound.

"An apparent promise which, according to its terms, makes performance optional with the promisor no matter what may happen, or no matter what course of conduct in other respects he may pursue, is in fact no promise. Such an expression is often called an illusory promise." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1A, at 5 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

implied promise. A promise created by law to render a person liable on a contract so as to avoid fraud or unjust enrichment. — Also termed fictitious promise.

"Under some circumstances the promise inferred is called an implied promise and in others it is referred to as a constructive promise. But whichever conclusion is reached, the result is the same. In other words an implied promise and a constructive promise are not treated differently. The theoretical difference between the two is that a promise implied from the conduct of the parties arises by construction of law, only when justice requires it under the circumstances." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 4-12, at 234-35 (3d ed. 1987).

independent promise. See unconditional promise.

marriage promise. A betrothal; an engagement to be married.

mutual promises. Promises given simultaneously by two parties, each promise serving as consideration for the other.

new promise. A previously unenforceable promise that a promisor revives and agrees to fulfill, as when a debtor agrees to pay a creditor an amount discharged in the debtor's bankruptcy.

original promise. A promise to guarantee the debt of another, made primarily for the benefit of the party making the promise. • An original promise need not be in writing to be enforceable. See MAIN-PURPOSE RULE.

promise implied in fact. A promise existing by inference from the circumstances or actions of the parties. See implied promise.

promise in consideration of marriage. A promise for which the actual performance of the marriage is the consideration, as when a man agrees to transfer property to a woman if she will marry him. • A promise to marry, however, is not considered a promise in consideration of marriage.

promise in restraint of trade. A promise whose performance would limit competition in any business or restrict the promisor in the exercise of a gainful occupation. • Such a promise is usu. unenforceable.

remedial promise. A seller's promise to repair or replace goods, or the like, or to refund the price if the goods (1) do not conform to the contract or to a representation at the time of the delivery of the goods, (2) conform at the time of delivery but later fail to perform as agreed, or (3) contain a defect. UCC § 2-102(a)(31).

unconditional promise. A promise that either is unqualified or requires nothing but the lapse of time to make the promise presently enforceable. • A party who makes an unconditional promise must perform that promise even though the other party has not performed according to the bargain. — Also termed independent promise.

voidable promise. A promise that one party may, under the law, declare void by reason of that party's incapacity or mistake, or by reason of the fraud, breach, or other fault of the other party.

promisee (prom-is-ee). One to whom a promise is made.

promise implied in fact. See PROMISE.

promise in consideration of marriage. See PROMISE.

promise in restraint of trade. See PROMISE.

promise not to compete. See noncompetition covenant under COVENANT (1).

promisor (prom-is-or). One who makes a promise; esp., one who undertakes a contractual obligation.

promissor (prom-is-ər). [Latin] Civil law. A promisor; specif., a party who undertakes to do a thing in response to the interrogation of the other party (the stipulator).

promissory, adj. Containing or consisting of a promise <the agreement's promissory terms>.

promissory condition. See CONDITION (2).

promissory estoppel. See ESTOPPEL.

promissory fraud. See FRAUD.

promissory note. See NOTE (1).

promissory oath. See OATH.

promissory representation. See REPRESENTATION.

promissory warranty. See WARRANTY (3).

promoter. 1. A person who encourages or incites. 2. A founder or organizer of a corporation or business venture; one who takes the entrepreneurial initiative in founding or organizing a business or enterprise. — Formerly also termed projector.

“The complete judicial acceptance of the term ‘promoter’ is a matter of comparatively recent date. In some of the early cases, persons engaged in the formation of a corporation are spoken of as ‘projectors.’ Other cases of about the same period, though recognizing the obligations flowing therefrom, do not give any name to the relation in which such persons stand to the contemplated company. The word promoter, while undoubtedly employed in common parlance before that time, does not seem to have been used in any reported decision until after it had been used, and for the purposes of the act defined, in the Joint Stock Companies Act of 1844 [A] person may be said to be a promoter of a corporation if before its organization, he directly or indirectly solicits subscriptions to its stock, or assumes to act in its behalf in the purchase of property, or in the securing of its charter, or otherwise assists in its organization." Manfred W. Ehrich, The Law of Promoters § 1, at 2-3; § 13, at 15 (1916).

"A promoter is a person who takes the initiative in developing and organizing a new business venture. A promoter may act either alone or with co-promoters. The term 'promoter' is not one of opprobrium; indeed, the promoter is often an aggressive, imaginative entrepreneur who fulfills the essential economic function of taking an idea and creating a profitable business to capitalize on the idea." Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 64 (3d ed. 1991).

promoting prostitution. See PANDERING.

promulgate (proh-məl-gair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To promulgate; to make (a law) publicly known after its enactment.

promulgate (prə-məl-gayt or prom-əl-gayt), vb.

1. To declare or announce publicly; to proclaim.
2. To put (a law or decree) into force or effect.

promulgation (prom-əl-gay-shən or proh-məl-). The official publication of a new law or regulation, by which it is put into effect.

promutuum (proh-myoo-choo-əm). [Latin "as if lent"] Civil law. A quasi-contract in which a person who received money or property in error agrees to return what was received to the person who paid it.

pronepos (proh-nep-ohs). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A great-grandson.

proneptis (proh-nep-tis). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A great-granddaughter.

pro non scripto (proh non skrip-toh). [Latin] As not written; as though it had not been written.

pronotary (proh-noh-tə-ree), n. First notary.

pronounce, vb. To announce formally <pronounce judgment>.

pronunciation (prə-nən-see-ay-shən). Archaic. A sentence or decree.

pronurus (proh-nə-rəs). [Latin] Civil law. The wife of a grandson or great-grandson.

proof, n. 1. The establishment or refutation of an alleged fact by evidence; the persuasive effect of evidence in the mind of a fact-finder. 2. Evidence that determines the judgment of a court. 3. An attested document that constitutes legal evidence.

affirmative proof. Evidence establishing the fact in dispute by a preponderance of the evidence.

conditional proof. A fact that amounts to proof as long as there is no other fact amounting to disproof. — Also termed presumptive proof.

double proof. 1. Bankruptcy. Proof of claims by two or more creditors against the same debt. • This violates the general rule that there can be only one claim with respect to a single debt. 2. Evidence. Corroborating government evidence (usu. by two witnesses) required to sustain certain convictions.

full proof. 1. Civil law. Proof by two witnesses or by public instrument. 2. Evidence that satisfies the minds of the jury of the truth of the fact in dispute beyond a reasonable doubt.

literal proof. Civil law. Written evidence. Cf. testimonial proof.

negative proof. Proof that establishes a fact by showing that its opposite is not or cannot be true. Cf. positive proof.

positive proof. Direct or affirmative proof. Cf. negative proof.

preliminary proof. Insurance. The first proof offered of a loss occurring under a policy, usu. sent in to the underwriters with a notification of the claim.

presumptive proof. See conditional proof.

proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Proof that precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support.

testimonial proof. Civil law. Proof by the evidence of witnesses, rather than proof by written instrument. Cf. literal proof.

proof, burden of. See BÜRDEN OF PROOF.

proof brief. See BRIEF.

proof of acknowledgment. An authorized officer's certification — based on a third party's testimony — that the signature of a person (who usu. does not appear before the notary) is genuine and was freely made. — Also termed certificate of proof.

proof of claim. Bankruptcy. A creditor's written statement that is submitted to show the basis and amount of the creditor's claim. Pl. proofs of claim.

informal proof of claim. A proof of claim stating a creditor's demand for payment and intent to hold the debtor's bankruptcy estate liable, but that does not comply with the Bankruptcy Code's form for proofs of claim. ● A late-filed proof of claim may be given effect if the creditor had timely filed an informal proof of claim.

proof of debt. The establishment by a creditor of a debt in some prescribed manner (as by affidavit) as a first step in recovering the debt from an estate or property; PROOF OF CLAIM.

proof of loss. An insured's formal statement of loss required by an insurance company before it will determine whether the policy covers the loss.

proof of service. A document filed (as by a sheriff) in court as evidence that process has been successfully served on a party. — Also termed return of service. See SERVICE (1).

proof of will. See PROBATE (1).

pro opere et labore (proh op-ə-ree et lə-bor-ee). [Latin] For work and labor.

propaganda. Int'l law. 1. The systematic dissemination of doctrine, rumor, or selected information to promote or injure a particular doctrine, view, or cause. 2. The ideas or information so disseminated.

"As early as the Middle Ages, both the Church and worldly powers had realised that public opinion was of importance in their struggles with each other. . . . [R]ulers thought it necessary to put their case before public opinion in neutral and hostile countries, though they did their best to prevent any 'seditious' material from abroad reaching their own loyal subjects. The position changed with the growth of democracy and of the demand for the popular control of foreign affairs. Then propaganda became an indispensable secondary weapon of power politics both in peace and war." Georg Schwarzenberger, Power Politics: A Study of International Society 166-67 (2d ed. 1951).

pro partibus liberandis (proh pahr-ti-bəs lib-ə-ran-dis). [Latin "to free the portions"] Hist. A writ for the partition of lands among coheirs.

propatruus (proh-pay-troo-əs or -pa-troo-əs). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A great-grandfather's brother.

propatruus magnus (proh-pay-troo-əs [or -pa-troo-əs] mag-nəs). [Latin] Roman & civil law. A great-great-great-uncle.

pro per, adv. & adj. See PRO PERSONA.

proper, n. See PRO SE.

proper care. See reasonable care under CARE.

proper evidence. See admissible evidence under EVIDENCE.

proper feud. See FEUD.

proper independent advice. See INDEPENDENT ADVICE.

proper law. Conflict of laws. The substantive law that, under the principles of conflicts of law, governs a transaction.

proper lookout, n. The duty of a vehicle operator to exercise caution to avoid collisions with pedestrians or other vehicles.

proper party. See PARTY (2).

pro persona (proh pār-soh-nə), adv. & adj. [Latin] For one's own person; on one's own behalf . — Sometimes shortened to pro per. See PRO SE.

property. 1. The right to possess, use, and enjoy a determinate thing (either a tract of land or a chattel); the right of ownership <the institution of private property is protected from undue governmental interference>. 2. Any external thing over which the rights of possession, use, and enjoyment are exercised <the airport is city property>.

"In its widest sense, property includes all a person's legal rights, of whatever description. A man's property is all that is his in law. This usage, however, is obsolete at the present day, though it is common enough in the older books. . . . In a second and narrower sense, property includes not all a person's rights, but only his proprietary as opposed to his personal rights. The former constitute his estate or property, while the latter constitute his status or personal condition. In this sense a man's land, chattels, shares, and the debts due to him are his property; but not his life or liberty or reputation. . . . In a third application, which is that adopted [here], the term includes not even all proprietary rights, but only those which are both proprietary and in rem. The law of property is the law of proprietary rights in rem, the law of proprietary rights in personam being distinguished from it as the law of obligations. According to this usage a freehold or leasehold estate in land, or a patent or copyright, is property; but a debt or the benefit of a contract is not. . . . Finally, in the narrowest use of the term, it includes nothing more than corporeal property — that is to say, the right of ownership in a material object, or that object itself." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 423-24 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

abandoned property. Property that the owner voluntarily surrenders, relinquishes, or disclaims. Cf. lost property; mislaid property.

absolute property. Property that one has full and complete title to and control over.

common property. 1. Property that is held jointly by two or more persons. 2. See COMMON AREA.

community property. See COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

corporeal property. 1. The right of ownership in material things. 2. Property that can be perceived, as opposed to incorporeal property; tangible property.

distressed property. Property that must be sold because of mortgage foreclosure or because it is part of an insolvent estate.

exempt property. See EXEMPT PROPERTY.

general property. Property belonging to a general owner. See general owner under OWNER.

income property. Property that produces income, such as rental property.

incorporeal property. 1. An in rem proprietary right that is not classified as corporeal property. • Incorporeal property is traditionally broken down into two classes: (1) jura in re aliena (encumbrances), whether over material or immaterial things, examples being leases, mortgages, and servitudes; and (2) jura in re propria (full ownership over an immaterial thing), examples being patents, copyrights, and trademarks. 2. A legal right in property having no physical existence. • Patent rights, for example, are incorporeal property. — Also termed incorporeal chattel; incorporeal thing.

intangible property. Property that lacks a physical existence. • Examples include bank accounts, stock options, and business goodwill. Cf. tangible property.

intellectual property. See INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY.

literary property. See LITERARY PROPERTY.

lost property. Property that the owner no longer possesses because of accident, negligence, or carelessness, and that cannot be located by an ordinary, diligent search. Cf. abandoned property; mislaid property.

marital property. Property that is acquired from the time when a marriage begins until one spouse files for divorce (assuming that a divorce decree actually results). • In equitable-distribution states, the phrase marital property is the rough equivalent of community property. See COMMUNITY PROPERTY; EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION.

maternal property. Property that comes from the mother of a party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock.

mislaid property. Property that has been voluntarily relinquished by the owner with an intent to recover it later — but that cannot now be found. Cf. abandoned property; lost property.

“A distinction is drawn between lost property and mislaid property. An article is ‘mislaid’ if it is intentionally put in a certain place for a temporary purpose and then inadvertently left there when the owner goes away. A typical case is the package left on the patron’s table in a bank lobby by a depositor who put the package there for a moment while he wrote a check and then departed without remembering to take it with him. There is always a ‘clue’ to the ownership of property which is obviously mislaid rather than lost, because of the strong probability that the owner will know where to return for his chattel when he realizes he has gone away without it.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 310–11 (3d ed. 1982).

mixed property. Property with characteristics of both real property and personal property — such as heirlooms and fixtures.

movable property. See MOVABLE.

neutral property. See NEUTRAL PROPERTY.

paternal property. Property that comes from the father of a party, and other ascendants of the paternal stock.

personal property. 1. Any movable or intangible thing that is subject to ownership and not classified as real property. — Also termed personalty; personal estate; movable estate; (in plural) things personal. Cf. real property. 2. Property not used in a taxpayer’s trade or business or held for income production or collection.

private property. Property — protected from public appropriation — over which the owner has exclusive and absolute rights.

public property. State- or community-owned property not restricted to any one individual’s use or possession.

qualified property. A temporary or special interest in a thing (such as a right to possess it), subject to being totally extinguished by the occurrence of a specified contingency over which the qualified owner has no control.

qualified-terminable-interest property. Property that passes by a QTIP trust from a deceased spouse to the surviving spouse and that (if the executor so elects) qualifies for the marital deduction provided that the spouse is entitled to receive income in payments made at least annually for life and that no one has the power to appoint the property to anyone other than the surviving spouse. ● This property is included in the surviving spouse's estate at death, where it is subject to the federal estate tax. See QTIP trust under TRUST.

real property. Land and anything growing on, attached to, or erected on it, excluding anything that may be severed without injury to the land. ● Real property can be either corporeal (soil and buildings) or incorporeal (easements). — Also termed realty; real estate. Cf. personal property.

“Historically, the line between real and personal property stems from the types of assets administered on death respectively, in the king's and in the church's courts. The king's courts, concerned with the preservation of the feudal structure, dealt with fees simple, fees tail and life estates. Estates for years, gradually evolving out of contracts made by feudally unimportant persons, clearly became interests in land but never fully attained the historical dignity of being ‘real property.’ The early economic unimportance of money, goods and things other than land permitted the church courts to take over the handling of all such assets on the death of the owner. When the development of trade and of capitalism caused assets of these types to assume great, and sometimes paramount, importance we found ourselves with the two important categories of property, namely ‘real’ and ‘personal’ property, each with its set of rules evolved from a different matrix. The pressure of modern society has been strongly for assimilation and the resultant elimination of this line, but this movement is far from complete attainment of its goal.” 1 Richard R. Powell, Powell on Real Property § 5.04, at 5-7 to 5-8 (Patrick J. Rohan ed., rev. ed. 1998).

scheduled property. Insurance. Property itemized on a list (usu. attached to an insurance policy) that records property values, which provide the basis for insurance payments in the event of a loss under an insurance policy.

separate property. See SEPARATE PROPERTY.

special property. Property that the holder has only a qualified, temporary, or limited interest in, such as (from a bailee's standpoint) bailed property.

tangible personal property. Corporeal personal property of any kind; personal property that can be seen, weighed, measured, felt, or touched, or is in any way perceptible to the senses.

tangible property. Property that has physical form and characteristics. Cf. intangible property.

property, law of. See LAW OF PROPERTY.

property crimes. See CRIMES AGAINST PROPERTY.

property-damage insurance. See property insurance under INSURANCE.

property dividend. See asset dividend under DIVIDEND.

property insurance. See INSURANCE.

property of the debtor. Bankruptcy. Property that is owned or (in some instances) possessed by the debtor, including property that is exempted from the bankruptcy estate. 11 USCA § 541(b).

property of the estate. Bankruptcy. The debtor's tangible and intangible property interests (including both legal and equitable interests) that fall under the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction because they were owned or held by the debtor when the bankruptcy petition was filed. 11 USCA § 541.

property settlement. 1. A judgment in a divorce case determining the distribution of the marital property between the divorcing parties. 2. MARITAL AGREEMENT.

proprietary act. See PROPRIETARY FUNCTION.

proprietary article. See ARTICLE.

proprietary capacity. See CAPACITY (1).

proprietary capital. See CAPITAL.

proprietary drug. See DRUG.

proprietary duty. A duty owed by a municipality while acting in a proprietary, rather than governmental, activity.

proprietary function. Torts. A municipality's conduct that is performed for the profit or benefit of the municipality, rather than for the benefit of the general public. • Generally, a municipality is not immune from tort liability for proprietary acts. — Also termed proprietary act. Cf. GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTION.

proprietary government. See GOVERNMENT.

proprietary information. Information in which the owner has a protectable interest. See TRADE SECRET.

proprietary interest. See INTEREST (2).

proprietary lease. See LEASE.

proprietary power. See power coupled with an interest under POWER.

proprietas (prə-pri-ə-tas). [Latin] Hist. Ownership.

proprietas nuda (prə-pri-ə-tas n[y]oo-də). Naked ownership; the mere title to property, without the usufruct.

proprietas plena (prə-pri-ə-tas plee-nə). Full ownership, including both the title and the usufruct.

proprietary probanda (prə-pri-ə-tay-tee prə-ban-də). See DE PROPRIETATE PROBANDA.

proprietor, n. An owner, esp. one who runs a business. — proprietorship, n. See SOLE PROPRIETORSHIP.

propriety, Hist. Privately owned possessions; property.

proprio vigore (proh-pree-oh vi-gor-ee). [Latin] By its own strength.

propter (prop-tər). [Latin] For; on account of.

propter affectum (prop-tər ə-fek-təm). See challenge propter affectum under CHALLENGE (2).

propter defectum (prop-tər də-fek-təm). See challenge propter defectum under CHALLENGE (2).

propter defectum sanguinis (prop-tər də-fek-təm sang-gwi-nis). [Latin] On account of failure of blood.

propter delictum (prop-tər də-lik-təm). See challenge propter delictum under CHALLENGE.

propter honoris respectum (prop-tər hə-nor-is ri-spek-təm). [Latin] On account of respect of honor or rank.

propter impotentiam (prop-tər im-pə-ten-shee-əm). [Latin] On account of helplessness. ● This was formerly given as a ground for gaining a property interest in a wild animal, based on the animal's inability to escape (as where, for example, a young bird could not yet fly away).

propter privilegium (prop-tər priv-ə-lee-jee-əm). [Latin] On the account of privilege. ● This describes a way of acquiring a property interest in a wild animal, based on the claimant's exclusive right to hunt in a particular park or preserve.

pro quer. abbr. PRO QUERENTE.

pro querente (proh kwə-ren-tee). [Latin] For the plaintiff. — Abbr. pro quer. Cf. PRO DEFENDENTE.

pro rata (proh ray-tə or rah-tə or ra-tə), adv. Proportionately; according to an exact rate, measure, or interest <the liability will be assessed pro rata between the defendants>. — pro rata, adj. See RATABLE.

pro rata clause. An insurance-policy provision — usu. contained in the "other insurance" section of the policy — that limits the insurer's liability to payment of the portion of the loss that the face amount of the policy bears to the total insurance available on the risk. — Also termed pro rata distribution clause. Cf. ESCAPE CLAUSE; EXCESS CLAUSE.

prorate (proh-rayt or proh-rayt), vb. To divide, assess, or distribute proportionately <prorate taxes between the buyer and the seller>. — proration, n.

pro re nata (proh ree nay-tə). [Latin "in the light of what has arisen"] A law or course of action adopted in response to a pressing exigency, rather than in conformity with established precedent.

"So far as may be, the state leaves the rule of right to be declared and constituted by the agreement of those concerned with it. So far as possible, it contents itself with executing the rules which its subjects have made for themselves. And in so doing it acts wisely. For, in the first place, the administration of justice is enabled in this manner to escape in a degree not otherwise attainable the disadvantages inherent in the recognition of rigid principles of law. Such principles we must have; but if they are established pro re nata by the parties themselves, they will possess a measure of adaptability to individual cases which is unattainable by the more general legislation of the state itself." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 352 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

prorogation (proh-rə-gay-shən). The act of putting off to another day; esp., the discontinuance of a legislative session until its next term.

prorogue (proh-rohg or prə-), vb. 1. To postpone or defer. 2. To discontinue a session of (a legislative assembly, esp. the British Parliament) without dissolution. 3. To suspend or discontinue a legislative session.

proscribe, vb. 1. To outlaw or prohibit; to forbid. 2. Roman & civil law. To post or publish the name of (a person) as condemned to death and forfeiture of property.

proscription, n. 1. The act of prohibiting; the state of being prohibited. 2. A prohibition or restriction. — proscriptive, adj. Cf. PRESCRIPTION.

pro se (proh say or see), adv. & adj. [Latin] For oneself; on one's own behalf; without a lawyer <the defendant proceeded pro se> . — Also termed pro persona; in propria persona.

pro se, n. One who represents oneself in a court proceeding without the assistance of a lawyer <the third case on the court's docket involving a pro se>. — Also termed pro per.

prosecute, vb. 1. To commence and carry out a legal action <because the plaintiff failed to prosecute its contractual claims, the court dismissed the suit>. 2. To institute and pursue a criminal action against (a person) <the notorious felon has been prosecuted in seven states>. 3. To engage in; carry on <the company prosecuted its business for 12 years before going bankrupt>. — prosecutory, adj.

prosecuting attorney. See DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

prosecuting witness. See WITNESS.

prosecution. 1. The commencement and carrying out of any action or scheme <the prosecution of a long, bloody war>. 2. A criminal proceeding in which an accused person is tried <the conspiracy trial involved the prosecution of seven defendants>. — Also termed criminal prosecution.

sham prosecution. A prosecution that seeks to circumvent a defendant's double-jeopardy protection by appearing to be prosecuted by another sovereignty, when it is in fact controlled by the sovereignty that already prosecuted the defendant for the same crime. ● A sham prosecution is, in essence, a misuse of the dual-sovereignty rule. Under that rule, a defendant's protection against double jeopardy does not provide protection against a prosecution by a different sovereignty. For example, if the defendant was first tried in federal court and acquitted, that fact would not forbid the state authorities from prosecuting the defendant in state court. But a sham prosecution — for example, a later state-court prosecution that is completely dominated or manipulated by the federal authorities that already prosecuted the defendant, so that the state-court proceeding is merely a tool of the federal authorities — will not withstand a double-jeopardy challenge. See DUAL-SOVEREIGNTY DOCTRINE.

3. The government attorneys who initiate and maintain a criminal action against an accused defendant <the prosecution rests>.

prosecution history. Patents. The complete record of proceedings in the Patent and Trademark Office from the initial application to the issued patent. — Also termed file wrapper.

prosecution-history estoppel. Patents. The doctrine preventing a patent holder from invoking the doctrine of equivalents if the holder, during the application process, surrendered certain claims or interpretations of the invention. — Also termed file-wrapper estoppel. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

prosecutor, n. 1. A legal officer who represents the government in criminal proceedings. See DISTRICT ATTORNEY; UNITED STATES ATTORNEY; ATTORNEY GENERAL.

public prosecutor. See DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

special prosecutor. A lawyer appointed to investigate and, if justified, seek indictments in a particular case. See independent counsel under COUNSEL.

2. A private person who institutes and carries on a legal action, esp. a criminal action. — Also termed (in sense 2) private prosecutor. — prosecutorial, adj.

prosecutorial discretion. See DISCRETION.

prosecutorial misconduct. A prosecutor's improper or illegal act (or failure to act), esp. involving an attempt to persuade the jury to wrongly convict a defendant or assess an unjustified punishment. ● If prosecutorial misconduct results in a mistrial, a later prosecution may be barred under the Double Jeopardy Clause.

prosecutrix (pros-ə-kyoo-triks). Archaic. A female prosecutor.

prosequi (prahs-ə-kwi), vb. [Latin] To follow up or pursue; to sue or prosecute. See NOLLE PROSEQUI.

prosequitur (prə-sek-wə-tər or proh-). [Latin] He follows or pursues; he prosecutes.

prosocer (proh-sə-sər). [Latin] Civil law. A father-in-law's father; a spouse's grandfather.

prosocerus (prə-sos-ə-rəs). [Latin] Civil law. A wife's or husband's grandmother.

pro socio (proh soh-shee-oh). [Latin] As a partner. ● This was the name of an action on behalf of a partner.

pro solido (proh sol-ə-doh). [Latin] For the whole; without division.

prospectant evidence. See EVIDENCE.

prospective, adj. 1. Effective or operative in the future <prospective application of the new statute>. Cf. RETROACTIVE. 2. Anticipated or expected; likely to come about <prospective clients>.

prospective damages. See DAMAGES.

prospective heir. See HEIR.

prospective nuisance. See anticipatory nuisance under NUISANCE.

prospective statute. See STATUTE.

prospective waiver. See WAIVER (1).

prospectus (prə-spek-təs). A printed document that describes the main features of an enterprise (esp. a corporation's business) and that is distributed to prospective buyers or investors; esp., a written description of a securities offering. ● Under SEC regulations, a publicly traded corporation must provide a prospectus before offering to sell stock in the corporation. Pl. prospectuses. See REGISTRATION STATEMENT. Cf. TOMBSTONE.

newspaper prospectus. A summary prospectus that the SEC allows to be disseminated through advertisements in newspapers, magazines, or other periodicals sent through the mails as second-class matter (though not distributed by the advertiser), when the securities involved are issued by a foreign national government with which the United States maintains diplomatic relations.

preliminary prospectus. A prospectus for a stock issue that has been filed but not yet approved by the SEC. ● The SEC requires such a prospectus to contain a notice — printed in distinctive red lettering — that the document is not complete or final. That notice, which is usu. stamped or printed in red ink, typically reads as follows: "The information here given is subject to completion or amendment. A registration statement relating to these securities has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. These securities cannot be sold — and offers to buy cannot be accepted — until the registration statement becomes effective. This prospectus does not constitute an offer to buy. And these securities cannot be sold in any state where the offer, solicitation, or sale would be unlawful before registration or qualification under the securities laws of that state." — Also termed red-herring prospectus; red herring.

prostitution, n. 1. The act or practice of engaging in sexual activity for money or its equivalent; commercialized sex.

"Prostitution is not itself a crime in England or Scotland, although certain activities of prostitutes and those who profit from prostitution are prohibited, such as soliciting in a public place, procuring, letting premises for the purpose of prostitution and so forth. On the other hand, prostitution was, at least at one time, prohibited in all American jurisdictions." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 470 (3d ed. 1982).

2. The act of debasing. — prostitute, *vb. — prostitute, *n.

pro tanto (proh tan-toh), adv. & adj. [Latin] To that extent; for so much; as far as it goes <the debt is pro tanto discharged> .

protected activity. Conduct that is permitted or encouraged by a statute or constitutional provision, and for which the actor may not legally be retaliated against. ● For example, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act prohibits an employer from retaliating against an employee who opposes a discriminatory employment practice or helps in investigating an allegedly discriminatory employment practice. An employee who is retaliated against for engaging in one of those activities has a claim against the employer. 42 USCA § 2000e-3(a). protected class. See CLASS (1).

protected person. See PERSON.

protecting power. Int'l law. A country responsible for protecting another country's citizens during a conflict or a suspension of diplomatic ties between the citizens' country and a third party. ● After a protecting power is accepted by both belligerents, it works to ensure the proper treatment of nationals who are in a belligerent's territory, esp. prisoners of war. If the parties cannot agree on a protecting power, the Red Cross is often appointed to this position.

protection, n. 1. The act of protecting. 2. PROTECTIONISM. 3. COVERAGE (1). 4. A document given by a notary public to sailors and other persons who travel abroad, certifying that the bearer is a U.S. citizen. — protect, *vb.

protectionism. The protection of domestic businesses and industries against foreign competition by imposing high tariffs and restricting imports.

protection money. 1. A bribe paid to an officer as an inducement not to interfere with the criminal activities of the briber. • Examples include payments to an officer in exchange for the officer's releasing an arrestee, removing records of traffic violations from a court's files, and refraining from making a proper arrest. 2. Money extorted from a business owner by one who promises to "protect" the business premises, with the implied threat that if the owner does not pay, the person requesting the payment will harm the owner or damage the premises.

protection order. See RESTRAINING ORDER (1).

protective committee. A group of security holders or preferred stockholders appointed to protect the interests of their group when the corporation is liquidated or reorganized.

protective custody. See CUSTODY (1).

protective order. 1. A court order prohibiting or restricting a party from engaging in a legal procedure (esp. discovery) that unduly annoys or burdens the opposing party or a third-party witness. 2. RESTRAINING ORDER (1).

protective search. See SEARCH.

protective sweep. A police officer's quick and limited search — conducted after the officer has lawfully entered the premises — based on a reasonable belief that such a search is necessary to protect the officer or others from harm.

protective tariff. See TARIFF (2).

protective trust. See TRUST.

protectorate (prə-tek-tə-rət). 1. Int'l law. The relationship between a weaker nation and a stronger one when the weaker nation has transferred the management of its more important international affairs to the stronger nation. 2. Int'l law. The weaker or dependent nation within such a relationship. 3. (usu. cap.) The period in British history — from 1653 to 1659 — during which Oliver Cromwell and Richard Cromwell governed. 4. The British government in the period from 1653 to 1659.

pro tem. abbr. PRO TEMPORE.

pro tempore (proh tem-pə-ree), adv. & adj. [Latin] For the time being; appointed to occupy a position temporarily . — Abbr. pro tem.

protest, n. 1. A formal statement or action expressing dissent or disapproval. 2. A notary public's written statement that, upon presentment, a negotiable instrument was neither paid nor accepted. — Also termed initial protest; noting protest. Cf. NOTICE OF DISHONOR.

"Noting or initial protest is a memorandum made on [a dishonored] instrument, with the notary's initials, date, and the amount of noting charges, together with a statement of the cause of dishonor, such as 'no effects,' 'not advice,' or 'no account.' This is done to charge the memory of the notary, and should be done on the day of dishonor." Frederick M. Hinch, John's American Notary and Commission of Deeds Manual § 442, at 281 (3d ed. 1922).

protestando (proh-tə-stan-doh). [Law Latin] Protesting. • This emphatic word was used in a protestation to allege or deny something in an oblique manner.

protestation (prot-ə-stay-shən). Common-law pleading. A declaration by which a party makes an oblique allegation or denial of some fact, claiming that it does or does not exist or is or is not legally sufficient, while not directly affirming or denying the fact.

"The practice of protestation of facts not denied arose where the pleader, wishing to avail himself of the right to contest in a future action some traversable fact in the pending action, passes it by without traverse, but at the same time makes a declaration collateral or incidental to his main pleading, importing that the fact so passed over is untrue. The necessity for this arose from the rule that pleadings must not be double, and that every pleading is taken to admit such matters as it does not traverse. Such being its only purpose, it is wholly without effect in the action in which it occurs . . ." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 207, at 358 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

protest certificate. A notarial certificate declaring (1) that a holder in due course has recruited the notary public to present a previously refused or dishonored negotiable instrument, (2) that the notary has presented the instrument to the person responsible for payment or acceptance (the drawee), (3) that the instrument was presented at a given time and place, and (4) that the drawee refused or dishonored the instrument. • In former practice, the notary would issue a protest certificate, which could then be presented to the drawee and any other liable parties as notice that the holder could seek damages for the dishonored negotiable instrument. — Also termed notarial protest certificate. See NOTICE OF DISHONOR.

protest fee. A fee charged by a bank or other financial institution when an item (such as a check) is presented but cannot be collected.

prothonotary (prə-thon-ə-ter-ee or proh-thə-noh-tə-ree), n. A chief clerk in certain courts of law. — Also termed protonotary. — prothonotarial, adj.

protocol. 1. A summary of a document or treaty. 2. A treaty amending and supplementing another treaty. 3. The formal record of the proceedings of a conference or congress. — Also termed procès-verbal. 4. The minutes of a meeting, usu. initialed by all participants after confirming accuracy. 5. The rules of diplomatic etiquette; the practices that nations observe in the course of their contacts with one another.

protonotary. See PROTHONOTARY.

protutor (proh-t[y]oo-tər). Civil law. A person who, though not legally appointed as a guardian, administers another's affairs.

provisional injunction. See preliminary injunction under INJUNCTION.

provisional partition. See PARTITION.

provisional remedy. See REMEDY.

provisional seizure. See ATTACHMENT (1).

provision of a fine. Hist. A proclamation made after the conveying of land by fine, read aloud in court 16 times — four times in the term when the fine was made, and four times in the three succeeding terms.

Provisions of Oxford. Hist. During the reign of Henry III, a constitution created by the Mad Parliament and forming the King's advisory council that met with a group of barons several times a year to handle the country's affairs and resolve grievances, esp. those resulting from the King's avoidance of his obligations under Magna Carta. • The Provisions were effective until the baron uprising in 1263 under Simon de Montfort.

proviso (prə-vi-zoh). 1. A limitation, condition, or stipulation upon whose compliance a legal or formal document's validity or application may depend. 2. In drafting, a provision that begins with the words provided that and supplies a condition, exception, or addition.

provisor. 1. Hist. A provider of care or sustenance. 2. Eccles. law. A person nominated by the Pope to be the next incumbent of a benefice that is not yet vacant.

provocation, n. Something (such as words or actions) that arouses anger or animosity in another, causing that person to respond in the heat of passion. • "Adequate" provocation can reduce a murder charge to voluntary manslaughter. — provoke, vb. — provocative, adj. See MANSLAUGHTER.

provost marshal. Military law. A staff officer who supervises a command's military police and advises the commander.

proxenete (prok-sə-nee-tə). [Latin] Roman & civil law. 1. A person who negotiates or arranges the terms of a contract between parties; a broker. 2. A person who negotiates marriages; a matchmaker. — Also termed proxeneta.

proximate (prok-sə-mit), adj. 1. Immediately before or after. 2. Very near or close in time.

proximate cause. See CAUSE (1).

proximate consequence. A result following an unbroken sequence from some (esp. negligent) event.

proximate damages. See DAMAGES.

proximity. The quality or state of being near in time, place, order, or relation.

proxy, n. 1. One who is authorized to act as a substitute for another; esp., in corporate law, a person who is authorized to vote another's stock shares. 2. The grant of authority by which a person is so authorized. 3. The document granting this authority.

proxy contest. A struggle between two corporate factions to obtain the votes of uncommitted shareholders. • A proxy contest usu. occurs when a group of dissident shareholders mounts a battle against the corporation's managers. — Also termed proxy fight.

proxy marriage. See MARRIAGE (2).

proxy solicitation. A request that a corporate shareholder authorize another person to cast the shareholder's vote at a corporate meeting.

proxy statement. An informational document that accompanies a proxy solicitation and explains a proposed action (such as a merger) by the corporation.

PRP. abbr. Potentially responsible party.

prudent, adj. Circumspect or judicious in one's dealings; cautious. — prudence, n.

prudent-investor rule. Trusts. The principle that a fiduciary must invest in only those securities or portfolios of securities that a reasonable person would buy. — Also termed prudent-person rule.

publicanus (pəb-li-kay-nəs). [Latin] A farmer of the public revenue; that is, a tax collector.

public appointment. See APPOINTMENT (1).

publication, n. 1. Generally, the act of declaring or announcing to the public. 2. Copyright. The distribution of copies of a work to the public. ● At common law, publication marked the dividing line between state and federal protection, but the Copyright Act of 1976 superseded most of common-law copyright and thereby diminished the significance of publication.

"The concept of publication was of immense importance under the 1909 Act. It became a legal word of art, denoting a process much more esoteric than is suggested by the lay definition of the term. That it thus evolved was due largely to the American dichotomy between common law and statutory copyright, wherein the act of publication constituted the dividing line between the two systems of protection [state and federal]." 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 4.01, at 4-3 (Supp. 1997).

general publication. A distribution of copies not limited to a selected group, whether or not restrictions are placed on the use of the work. ● A general publication was generally held to divest common-law rights in a work.

limited publication. A distribution of copies limited to a selected group at a time when copies are not available to persons not included in the group; a publication that communicates the contents of a work to a definitely selected group and for a limited purpose, without the right of diffusion, reproduction, distribution, or sale. — Also termed private publication.

3. Defamation. The communication of defamatory words to someone other than the person defamed.

cation between husband and wife amount to publication; domestic intercourse of this kind is exempt from the restrictions of the law of libel and slander. But a statement by the defendant to the wife or husband of the plaintiff is a ground of action." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 154 (17th ed. 1977).

"The publication of a libel might be in the form of a book, pamphlet or newspaper, but nothing of that nature is required. A letter sent to a single individual is sufficient." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 489 (3d ed. 1982).

4. Wills. The formal declaration made by a testator when signing the will that it is the testator's will.

public defender. A lawyer or staff of lawyers, usu. publicly appointed, whose duty is to represent indigent criminal defendants. — Abbr. P.D.

public delict. See DELICT.

public disclosure of private facts. The public revelation of some aspect of a person's private life without a legitimate public purpose. • The disclosure is actionable in tort if the disclosure would be highly objectionable to a reasonable person. See INVASION OF PRIVACY.

public document. See DOCUMENT.

public domain. 1. Government-owned land. 2. The realm of publications, inventions, and processes that are not protected by copyright or patent. • Things in the public domain can be appropriated by anyone without liability for infringement.

"[P]ublic domain is the status of an invention, creative work, commercial symbol, or any other creation that is not protected by any form of intellectual property. Public domain is the rule: intellectual property is the exception." 1 J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 1.01[2], at 1-3 (3d ed. 1996).

public-duty doctrine. Torts. The rule that a governmental entity (such as a state or municipality) cannot be held liable for an individual plaintiff's injury resulting from a governmental officer's or employee's breach of a duty owed to the general public rather than to the individual plaintiff. — Also termed public-duty rule. See SPECIAL-DUTY DOCTRINE.

public easement. See EASEMENT.

public enemy. See ENEMY.

public entity. See ENTITY.

public-exchange offer. See OFFER.

public fact. See FACT.

public figure. A person who has achieved fame or notoriety or who has voluntarily become involved in a public controversy. • A public figure (or public official) suing for defamation must prove that the defendant acted with actual malice. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710 (1964). — Also termed public character.

limited-purpose public figure. A person who, having become involved in a particular public issue, has achieved fame or notoriety in relation to that particular issue.

public forum. Constitutional law. Public property where people traditionally gather to express ideas and exchange views. • To be constitutional, the government's regulation of a public forum must be narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest and must usu. be limited to time-place-or-manner restrictions. Cf. NONPUBLIC FORUM.

designated public forum. Public property that has not traditionally been open for public assembly and debate but that the government has opened for use by the public as a place for expressive activity, such as a public-university facility or a publicly owned theater. • Unlike a traditional public forum, the government does not have to retain the open character of a designated public forum. Also, the subject matter of the expression permitted in a designated public forum may be limited to accord with the character of the forum; content-neutral time, place, and manner restrictions are generally permissible. But any prohibition based on the content of the expression must be narrowly drawn to effectuate a compelling state interest, as with a traditional public forum. — Also termed limited public forum; nontraditional public forum.

traditional public forum. Public property that has by long tradition — as opposed to governmental designation — been used by the public for assembly and expression, such as a public street, public sidewalk, or public park. • To be constitutional, the government's content-neutral restrictions of the time, place, or manner of expression must be narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest, and leave open ample alternative channels of communication. Any government regulation of expression that is based on the content of the expression must meet the even higher constitutional test of being narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest.

public-function doctrine. See PUBLIC-FUNCTION TEST.

public-function rationale. See GOVERNMENTAL-FUNCTION THEORY.

public-function test. In a section 1983 suit, the doctrine that a private person's actions constitute state action if the private person performs functions that are traditionally reserved to the state. — Also termed public-function doctrine; public-function theory.

publici juris (pəb-li-sī joor-is). [Latin] Of public right .

public institution. See INSTITUTION (3).

public interest. 1. The general welfare of the public that warrants recognition and protection. 2. Something in which the public as a whole has a stake; esp., an interest that justifies governmental regulation.

public-interest exception. The principle that an appellate court may consider and decide a moot case — although such decisions are generally prohibited — if (1) the case involves a question of considerable public importance, (2) the question is likely to arise in the future, and (3) the question has evaded appellate review.

public international law. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

public intoxication. See INTOXICATION.

public invitee. See INVITEE.

publicist. 1. A public-relations person. 2. An international-law scholar.

public land. See LAND.

public law. 1. The body of law dealing with the relations between private individuals and the government, and with the structure and operation of the government itself; constitutional law, criminal law, and administrative law taken together. Cf. PRIVATE LAW (1). 2. A statute affecting the general public. • Federal public laws are first published in Statutes at Large and are eventually collected by subject in the U.S. Code. — Abbr. Pub. L.; P.L. — Also termed public statute (abbr. p.s.); general statute. Cf. general law (1) under LAW. 3. Constitutional law.

public official. A person elected or appointed to carry out some portion of a government's sovereign powers.

public passage. A right held by the public to pass over a body of water, whether the underlying land is publicly or privately owned.

public person. A sovereign government, or a body or person delegated authority under it.

public policy. 1. Broadly, principles and standards regarded by the legislature or by the courts as being of fundamental concern to the state and the whole of society. • Courts sometimes use the term to justify their decisions, as when declaring a contract void because it is "contrary to public policy." — Also termed policy of the law.

"The policy of the law, or public policy, is a phrase of common use in estimating the validity of contracts. Its history is obscure; it is most likely that agreements which tended to restrain trade or to promote litigation were the first to elicit the principle that the courts would look to the interests of the public in giving efficacy to contracts. Wagers, while they continued to be legal, were a frequent provocative of judicial ingenuity on this point, as is sufficiently shown by the case of Gilbert v. Sykes [16 East 150 (1812)] . . . : but it does not seem probable that the doctrine of public policy began in the endeavor to elude their binding force. Whatever may have been its origin, it was applied very frequently, and not always with the happiest results, during the latter part of the eighteenth and the commencement of the nineteenth century. Modern decisions, however, while maintaining the duty of the courts to consider the public advantage, have tended more and more to limit the sphere within which this duty may be exercised." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 286 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

2. More narrowly, the principle that a person should not be allowed to do anything that would tend to injure the public at large.

public-policy limitation. Tax. A judicially developed principle that a person should not be allowed to deduct expenses related to an activity that is contrary to the public welfare. • This principle is reflected in the Internal Revenue Code's specific disallowance provisions (such as for kickbacks and bribes).

pueritia (pyoo-ə-rish-ee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. Childhood, esp. up to the age of 17, the minimum age for pleading before a magistrate. Cf. AETAS INFANTIAE PROXIMA; AETAS PUBERTATI PROXIMA.

puffer. See BY-BIDDER.

puffing. 1. The expression of an exaggerated opinion — as opposed to a factual representation — with the intent to sell a good or service. ● Puffing involves expressing opinions, not asserting something as a fact. Although there is some leeway in puffing goods, a seller may not misrepresent them or say that they have attributes that they do not possess. — Also termed puffery; sales puffery; dealer's talk.

“‘Dealer's puffing,’ so long as it remains in the realm of opinion or belief, will not support a conviction of false pretenses however extravagant the statements.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 369 (3d ed. 1982).

2. Secret bidding at an auction by or on behalf of a seller; BY-BIDDING.

PUHCA. abbr. PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANY ACT.

punctum temporis (pəngk-təm tem-pə-ris). [Latin] A point of time; an instant.

punies (pyoo-nee). Slang. Punitive damages. See DAMAGES.

punishable, adj. 1. (Of a person) subject to a punishment <there is no dispute that Jackson remains punishable for these offenses>. 2. (Of a crime or tort) giving rise to a specified punishment . — punishability, n.

punishment, n. A sanction — such as a fine, penalty, confinement, or loss of property, right, or privilege — assessed against a person who has violated the law. — punish, vb. See SENTENCE.

“Punishment in all its forms is a loss of rights or advantages consequent on a breach of law. When it loses this quality it degenerates into an arbitrary act of violence that can produce nothing but bad social effects.” Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 575 (2d ed. 1961).

“In the treatment of offenders there is a clear and unmistakable line of division between the function of the judge and that of the penologist. I should modify that: the law is clear only if it is first made clear in what sense the word ‘treatment’ is being used. For in this context the word can be used in two senses, one wide and the other narrow. Let me take the wide meaning first. The object of a sentence is to impose punishment. For ‘punishment’, a word which to many connotes nothing but retribution, the softer word ‘treatment’ is now frequently substituted; this is the wider meaning. The substitution is made, I suppose, partly as a concession to the school which holds that crime is caused by mental sickness, but more justifiably as a reminder that there are other methods of dealing with criminal tendencies besides making the consequences of crime unpleasant.” Patrick Devlin, The Judge 32–33 (1979).

capital punishment. See DEATH PENALTY (1).

corporal punishment. Physical punishment; punishment that is inflicted upon the body (including imprisonment).

cruel and unusual punishment. Punishment that is torturous, degrading, inhuman, grossly disproportionate to the crime in question, or otherwise shocking to the moral sense of the community. ● Cruel and unusual punishment is prohibited by the Eighth Amendment.

cumulative punishment. Punishment that increases in severity when a person is convicted of the same offense more than once.

deterrent punishment. Punishment the purpose of which is to deter others from committing crimes by making an example of the offender so that like-minded people are warned of the consequences of crime.

excessive punishment. Punishment that is not justified by the gravity of the offense or the defendant's criminal record. See excessive fine (1) under FINE (5). infamous punishment. Punishment by imprisonment, usu. in a penitentiary. See infamous crime under CRIME.

nonjudicial punishment. Military law. A procedure in which a person subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice receives official punishment for a minor offense. • In the Navy and Coast Guard, nonjudicial punishment is termed captain's mast; in the Marine Corps, it is termed office hours; and in the Army and Air Force, it is referred to as Article 15. Nonjudicial punishment is not a court-martial.

preventive punishment. Punishment the purpose of which is to prevent a repetition of wrongdoing by disabling the offender.

reformatory punishment. Punishment the purpose of which is to change the character of the offender.

retributive punishment. Punishment the purpose of which is to satisfy the community's retaliatory sense of indignation that is provoked by injustice.

"The fact that it is natural to hate a criminal does not prove that retributive punishment is justified." Glanville Williams, The Sanctity of Life and the Criminal Law 60 (1957).

punitive, adj. Involving or inflicting punishment. — Also termed punitory.

punitive articles. Military law. Articles 77–134 in the Uniform Code of Military Justice. • These articles list the crimes in the military-justice system.

purchaser. 1. One who obtains property for money or other valuable consideration; a buyer.

affiliated purchaser. Securities. Any of the following: (1) a person directly or indirectly acting in concert with a distribution participant in connection with the acquisition or distribution of the securities involved; (2) an affiliate who directly or indirectly controls the purchases of those securities by a distribution participant, or whose purchases are controlled by such a participant, or whose purchases are under common control with those of such a participant; (3) an affiliate, who is a broker or a dealer (except a broker-dealer whose business consists solely of effecting transactions in "exempted securities," as defined in the Exchange Act); (4) an affiliate (other than a broker-dealer) who regularly purchases securities through a broker-dealer, or otherwise, for its own account or for the account of others, or recommends or exercises investment discretion in the purchase or sale of securities (with certain specified exceptions). SEC Rule 10b-18(a)(2) (17 CFR § 240.10b-18(a)(2)).

bona fide purchaser. One who buys something for value without notice of another's claim to the item or of any defects in the seller's title; one who has in good faith paid valuable consideration for property without notice of prior adverse claims. — Abbr. BFP. — Also termed good-faith purchaser; purchaser in good faith; innocent purchaser.

bona fide purchaser for value. One who purchases legal title to real property, without actual or constructive notice of any infirmities, claims, or equities against the title. • Generally, a bona fide purchaser for value is not affected by the transferor's fraud against a third party, and has a superior right to the transferred property as against the transferor's creditor to the extent of the consideration that the purchaser has paid. — Also termed innocent purchaser for value.

good-faith purchaser. See bona fide purchaser.

innocent purchaser. See bona fide purchaser.

pure accident. See unavoidable accident under ACCIDENT.

pure annuity. See nonrefund annuity under ANNUITY.

pure-comparative-negligence doctrine. The principle that liability for negligence is apportioned in accordance with the percentage of fault that the fact-finder assigns to each party and that a plaintiff's percentage of fault reduces the amount of recoverable damages but does not bar recovery. Cf. 50-PERCENT RULE. See comparative negligence under NEGLIGENCE; APPORTIONMENT OF LIABILITY.

pure easement. See easement appurtenant under EASEMENT.

pure obligation. See OBLIGATION.

pure plea. See PLEA (3).

pure race statute. See RACE STATUTE.

pure risk. See RISK.

pure speech. See SPEECH.

pure theory. The philosophy of Hans Kelsen, in which he contends that a legal system must be "pure" — that is, self-supporting and not dependent on extralegal values. • Kelsen's theory, set out in such works as General Theory of Law and the State (1945) and The Pure Theory of Law (1934), maintains that laws are norms handed down by the state. Laws are not defined in terms of history, ethics, sociology, or other external factors. Rather, a legal system is an interconnected system of norms, in which coercive techniques are used to secure compliance. The validity of each law, or legal norm, is traced to another legal norm. Ultimately, all laws must find their validity in the society's basic norm (grundnorm), which may be as simple as the concept that the constitution was validly enacted. See basic norm under NORM.

pure villeinage. See VILLEINAGE.

purgation (pər-gay-shən). Hist. The act of cleansing or exonerating oneself of a crime or accusation by an oath or ordeal.

canonical purgation. Purgation by 12 oath-helpers in an ecclesiastical court. See COMPURGATION.

vulgar purgation. Purgation by fire, hot irons, battle, or cold water; purgation by means other than by oath-helpers. • Vulgar purgation was so called because at first it was not sanctioned by the church.

purgatory oath. See OATH.

purge, vb. To exonerate (oneself or another) of guilt <purged the defendant of contempt>.

purpart (pər-pahrt). A share of an estate formerly held in common; a part in a division. — Formerly also termed purparty; perparts.

purparty (pər-pahr-tee). A part of an estate allotted to a coparcener. — Also spelled pourparty.

purport (pər-port), n. The idea or meaning that is conveyed or expressed, esp. by a formal document.

purport (pər-port), vb. To profess or claim falsely; to seem to be <the document purports to be a will, but it is neither signed nor dated>.

quaestor (kwes-tər or kwees-tər). [Latin] 1. Roman law. An officer who maintained and administered the public money, performing tasks such as making necessary payments, receiving revenues, keeping accurate accounts, registering debts and fines, supervising the accommodation of foreign ambassadors, and financing the burials and monuments of distinguished citizens.

“The office of quaestor goes back at least to the beginning of the Republic. Each year two quaestors were nominated by the consuls, later elected by the comitia tributa, to assist the consuls in matters of finance. This continued to be their principal concern, but they enlarged their functions as their numbers increased.” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 15 (4th ed. 1956).

2. Hist. An agent of the Pope who carried quaesita from door to door. — Also termed questionarius. Pl. quaestores. See QUAESTA.

quaestores parricidii (kwes-tor-eez par-ə-si-dee-i), n. pl. [Latin “quaestors of parricide”] Roman law. Two officers (usu. appointed annually) who were deputized to search out and try all cases of parricide and other capital offenses.

quaestor sacri palatii (kwes-tər say-krī pə-lay-shee-i). [Latin “quaestor of the sacred palace”] Roman law. An officer of the imperial court who acted as legal adviser to the emperor.

“The quaestor sacri palatii was one of the highest civil functionaries in the later Empire, concerned with the preparation of enactments and legal decisions to be issued by the emperor. He was the principal legal adviser of the emperor and he was [often] chosen from among the persons with considerable legal training.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 664 (1953).

quaestus (kwes-təs or kwee-stəs). [Latin] 1. Roman law. Profit, esp. from a business. 2. Hist. Acquisition; purchase. • This term refers to a purchased estate, as distinguished from haereditas, referring to an estate obtained by descent.

quale jus (kway-lee or kwah-lee jəs). [Latin “what kind of right”] Hist. A writ ordering an escheator to inquire into the extent of a religious person’s right to a judgment, before its execution, to make sure that the judgment was not collusively made to avoid the mortmain statute.

qualification. 1. The possession of qualities or properties (such as fitness or capacity) inherently or legally necessary to make one eligible for a position or office, or to perform a public duty or function <voter qualification requires one to meet residency, age, and registration requirements>. 2. A modification or limitation of terms or language; esp., a restriction of

qualified, adj. 1. Possessing the necessary qualifications; capable or competent . 2. Limited; restricted <qualified immunity>. — qualify, vb.

quamdiu (kwam-dee-yoo). [Latin] Hist. As long as; so long as. • This was a word of limitation formerly used in conveyances.

quamdiu bene se gesserint (kwam-dee-yoo bee-nee see jes-er-int). [Law Latin] As long as they shall conduct themselves properly. • This term refers to the holding of an office, specif. the Act of Settlement, 1700, ch. 2, which provided that a judge's tenure was no longer at the king's pleasure, but could continue until death or improper conduct. Cf. GOOD BEHAVIOR; DURANTE BENE PLACITO.

"But at present, by the long and uniform usage of many ages, our kings have delegated their whole judicial power to the judges of their several courts And, in order to maintain both the dignity and independence of the judges in the superior courts, it is enacted by the statute 13 W. III. c.2 that their commissions shall be made (not as formerly, durante bene placito, but) quamdiu bene se gesserint, and their salaries ascertained and established; but that it may be lawful to remove them on the address of both houses of parliament." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 267 (1765).

quango (kwang-goh). See QUASI-AUTONOMOUS NONGOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATION.

quanti minoris (kwon-ti mi-nor-is). [Latin "how much less"] Civil law. An action brought by a purchaser of an article to reduce the purchase price due to the article's defects.

quantitative rule. An evidentiary rule requiring that a given type of evidence is insufficient unless accompanied by additional evidence before the case is closed. • Such a rule exists because of the known danger or weakness of certain types of evidence. — Also termed synthetic rule.

quantity discount. See volume discount under DISCOUNT.

quantum (kwon-təm). [Latin "an amount"] The required, desired, or allowed amount; portion or share . Pl. quanta (kwon-tə).

quantum damnificatus (kwon-təm dam-nə-fi-kay-təs). [Latin "how much damnified"] Hist. The issue of damages submitted by a court of equity to the jury.

quantum meruit (kwon-təm mer-oo-it). [Latin "as much as he has deserved"] 1. The reasonable value of services; damages awarded in an amount considered reasonable to compensate a person who has rendered services in a quasi-contractual relationship. 2. A claim or right of action for the reasonable value of services rendered. 3. At common law, a count in an assumpsit action to recover payment for services rendered to another person. • Quantum meruit is still used today as an equitable remedy to provide restitution for unjust enrichment. It is often pleaded as an alternative claim in a breach-of-contract case so that the plaintiff can recover even if the contract is voided. See implied-in-law contract under CONTRACT.

quantum valebant (kwon-təm və-lee-bant or -bant). [Latin "as much as they were worth"] 1. The reasonable value of goods and materials. 2. At common law, a count in an assumpsit action to recover payment for goods sold and delivered to another. • Quantum valebant — although less common than quantum meruit — is still used today as an equitable remedy to provide restitution for another's unjust enrichment.

quarantina habenda. See DE QUARANTINA HABENDA.

quarantine. 1. Hist. A period of 40 days, esp. for the isolation and detention of ships containing persons or animals suspected of having or carrying a dangerous communicable disease, in order to prevent the spread of the disease.

"Quarantine The name is drawn from the fact that the period was formerly commonly 40 (Ital. quaranta) days. In 1423 Venice established a lazaretto or quarantine station on an island to check the growth of disease brought in by ships. In the sixteenth century quarantine became widespread and there developed the system of bills of health, certificates that the last port was free from disease; a clean bill entitled a ship to use the port without subjection to quarantine." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1022 (1980).

2. Hist. A widow's privilege to remain in her husband's house for 40 days after his death while her dower is being assigned. • This right was enforced by a writ de quarantina habenda. See DE QUARANTINA HABENDA. 3. The isolation of a person or animal afflicted with a communicable disease or the prevention of such a person or animal from coming into a particular area, the purpose being to prevent the spread of disease. • Federal, state, and local authorities are required to cooperate in the enforcement of quarantine laws. 42 USCA § 243(a).

"Power to make quarantine regulations is one of the most frequent powers conferred on boards of health. Such regulations constitute a proper exercise of the police power, provided they are not in conflict with federal regulations on the subject or that legislation by Congress is absent, and that they do not abridge rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment." 39 Am. Jur. 2d Health § 59, at 529-30 (1999).

4. A place where a quarantine is in force. — Also spelled quarentine; quarentene. — quarantine, vb.

quare (kwair-ee). [Latin] Why; for what reason; on what account. • This was used in various common-law writs, esp. writs in trespass.

quare clausum fregit (kwair-ee klaw-zəm free-jit). [Latin] Why he broke the close. — Abbr. qu. cl. fr.; q.c.f. See TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT.

quare ejectit infra terminum (kwair-ee i-jee-sit in-frə tər-mə-nəm), n. [Law Latin "why he ejected within the term"] Hist. A writ for a lessee who was prematurely ejected, when the ejector was not actually in possession but one claiming under the ejector was.

"For this injury the law has provided him with two remedies . . . the writ of ejectione firmæ; . . . and the writ of quare ejecti infra terminum; which lies not against the wrongdoer or ejector himself, but his feoffee or other person claiming under him. These are mixed actions, somewhat between real and personal; for therein are two things recovered, as well restitution of the term of years, as damages for the ouster or wrong." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 199 (1768).

quare impedit (kwair-ee im-pə-dit). [Latin "why he hinders"] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ or action to enforce a patron's right to present a person to fill a vacant benefice. — Also termed writ of quare impedit. See PRESENTATION; ADVOWSON.

"The writ of quare impedit commands the disturbers, the bishop, the pseudo-patron, and his clerk, to permit the plaintiff to present a proper person (without specifying the particular clerk) to such a vacant church, which pertains to his patronage; and which the defendants, as he alleges, do obstruct: and unless they so do, then that they appear in court to shew the reason why they hinder him." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 248 (1768).

quare incumbavit (kwair-ee in-kəm-bray-vit), n. [Law Latin "why he incumbered"] Hist. A writ or action to compel a bishop to explain why he encumbered the church when, within six months after the vacation of a benefice and after a ne admittas was received, the bishop conferred the benefice on his clerk while two other clerks were contending for the right of presentation in a quare impedit action. • The writ was abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act of 1833, ch. 27.

quare intrusit (kwair-ee in-troo-sit), n. [Law Latin "why he thrust in"] Hist. A writ allowing a lord to recover the value of a marriage, when the lord offered a suitable marriage to a ward but the ward rejected it and married someone else. • It was abolished by the Tenures Abolition Act, 1660, ch. 24.

quare non permittit (kwair-ee non pər-mit-it), n. [Law Latin "why he did not permit"] Hist. A writ for one who has a right to present to a church, against the proprietor.

quarentena terrae (kwahr-en-tee-nə ter-ee), n. [Law Latin "a quantity of land"] Hist. A furlong.

quarentine. See QUARANTINE.

quare obstruxit (kwair-ee əb-strək-sit), n. [Law Latin "why he obstructed"] Hist. A writ for one who could not enjoy a privilege to pass through a neighbor's land because the neighbor had obstructed the path.

quarrel. 1. An altercation or angry dispute; an exchange of recriminations, taunts, threats, or accusations between two persons. 2. Archaic. A complaint; a legal action.

"Quarrels is derived from querendo, and extends not only to actions as well real as personal, but also to the causes of actions and suits: so that by the release of all quarrels, not only actions depending in suit, but causes of action and suit also are released; and quarrels, controversies and debates, are words of one sense, and of one and the same signification, Coke, lib. 8, fol. 153." Termes de la Ley 330 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

quarta divi Pii (kwor-tə dī-vī pī-ī). [Latin "quarter of the deified Pius"] Roman law. The quarter portion of a testator's estate required to be left to an adopted child who had been unjustly emancipated or disinherited.

quarta falcidia (kwor-tə fal-sid-ee-ə). [Latin "Falcidian fourth"] See FALCIDIAN PORTION.

quarter, n. In the law of war, the act of showing mercy to a defeated enemy by sparing lives and accepting a surrender <to give no quarter>.

quarter day. See DAY.

quartering, n. Hist. 1. The dividing of a criminal's body into quarters after execution, esp. as part of the punishment for a crime such as high treason. See HANGED, DRAWN, AND QUARTERED. 2. The furnishing of living quarters to members of the military. • The Third Amendment generally protects U.S. citizens from being forced to use their homes to quarter soldiers. U.S. Const. amend. III. 3. The dividing of a shield into four parts to show four different coats of arms. — quarter, vb.

quarterly report. A financial report issued by a corporation (and by most mutual funds and investment managers) every three months.

quashal (kwahsh-əl), n. The act of quashing something <quashal of the subpoena>.

quasi (kway-si or kway-zi also kwah-zee). [Latin "as if"] Seemingly but not actually; in some sense; resembling; nearly.

"QUASI. A Latin word frequently used in the civil law, and often prefixed to English words. It is not a very definite word. It marks the resemblance, and supposes a little difference, between two objects, and in legal phraseology the term is used to indicate that one subject resembles another, with which it is compared, in certain characteristics, but that there are also intrinsic and material differences between them. It negatives the idea of identity, but implies a strong superficial analogy, and points out that the conceptions are sufficiently similar for one to be classed as the equal of the other." 74 C.J.S. Quasi, at 2 (1951).

quasi-admission. See ADMISSION (1).

quasi-affinity. See AFFINITY.

quasi-autonomous nongovernmental organization. A semipublic administrative body (esp. in the United Kingdom) having some members appointed and financed by, but not answerable to, the government, such as a tourist authority, a university-grants commission, a price-and-wage commission, a prison or parole board, or a medical-health advisory panel. • This term is more commonly written as an acronym, quango (kwang-goh), without capital letters.

quasi-insurer. See INSURER.

quasi-judicial, adj. Of, relating to, or involving an executive or administrative official's adjudicative acts. • Quasi-judicial acts, which are valid if there is no abuse of discretion, often determine the fundamental rights of citizens. They are subject to review by courts.

"Quasi-judicial is a term that is . . . not easily definable. In the United States, the phrase often covers judicial decisions taken by an administrative agency — the test is the nature of the tribunal rather than what it is doing. In England quasi-judicial belongs to the administrative category and is used to cover situations where the administrator is bound by the law to observe certain forms and possibly hold a public hearing but where he is a free agent in reaching the final decision. If the rules are broken, the determination may be set aside, but it is not sufficient to show that the administration is biased in favour of a certain policy, or that the evidence points to a different conclusion." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 336 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

quasi-judicial act. 1. A judicial act performed by an official who is not a judge. 2. An act performed by a judge who is not acting entirely in a judicial capacity. See JUDICIAL ACT.

quasi-judicial power. See POWER.

quasi-legislative, adj. (Of an act, function, etc.) not purely legislative in nature <the administrative agency's rulemaking, being partly adjudicative, is not entirely legislative — that is, it is quasi-legislative>.

quasi traditio* (kway-si [or -zi] trə-dish-ee-oh). [Latin "as if transfer"] Roman law. A party's acquisition of a servitude by using it with the informal permission or acquiescence of the owner.

"According to the civil law again a servitude — that is, a limited right of user in respect of a thing not one's own, e.g. a usufruct or a right of way — could only be created by means of certain definite legal forms. The praetorian law, on the other hand, allowed a servitude to be created by a so-called quasi traditio servitutis; that is, it was satisfied if one party gave the other, without any form, permission to exercise the right of user in question." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 82 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

quasi-trustee. See TRUSTEE (1).

quasi-usufruct. See USUFRUCT.

quatuor pedibus currit* (kwah-too-or ped-ə-bəs kər-it). [Law Latin] It runs upon four feet; it runs upon all fours. • The term commonly described a precedent that was extremely close to a point being decided. See ON ALL FOURS.

qu. cl. fr. abbr. QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT.

queen. 1. A woman who possesses, in her own right, the sovereignty and royal power in a monarchy. • Among the more famous English queens are Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth I, Queen Victoria, and Queen Elizabeth II. — Also termed queen regnant. 2. The wife of a reigning king. • She has some royal prerogatives (such as having her own officers), but is in many ways legally no different from the rest of the king's subjects. — Also termed queen consort. 3. A queen who rules in place of the actual sovereign (e.g., if the sovereign is a child). — Also termed queen regent. 4. DOWAGER-QUEEN.

queen dowager. See DOWAGER-QUEEN.

queen mother. See DOWAGER-QUEEN.

Queen's Bench. Historically, the highest common-law court in England, presided over by the reigning monarch. • The jurisdiction of this court now lies with the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice; when a king begins to reign, the name automatically changes to King's Bench. — Abbr. Q.B. — Also termed Court of Queen's Bench. Cf. KING'S BENCH.

Queen's Bench Division. The English court, formerly known as the Queen's Bench or King's Bench, that presides over tort and contract actions, applications for judicial review, and some magistrate-court appeals. — Abbr. Q.B.D.

Queen's Counsel. In the United Kingdom, Canada, and territories that have retained the rank, an elite, senior-level barrister or advocate originally appointed to serve as counsel to the queen. — Also termed senior counsel. — Abbr. Q.C. Cf. KING'S COUNSEL.

Queen's evidence. See EVIDENCE.

Queen's prison. A prison established in 1842 in Southwark, to be used for debtors and criminals confined under authority of the superior courts at Westminster, the highest court of admiralty, and the bankruptcy laws. • It replaced the Queen's Bench Prison, Fleet Prison, and Marshalsea Prison but was closed in 1862.

Queen's proctor. A solicitor that represents the Crown in domestic-relations, probate, and admiralty cases. • For example, in a suit for divorce or nullity of marriage, the Queen's proctor might intervene to prove collusion between the parties. — Also termed (when a king reigns) King's proctor.

que est le mesme (kyoo ay læ mem). [Law French] See QUAE EST EADEM.

quem redditum reddit (kwem red-ə-təm red-it), n. [Law Latin "which return he made"] Hist. A writ for a grantee of a rent (not a rent service) to force the tenant to consent to the transfer.

querela (kwə-ree-lə). [Law Latin fr. Latin queri "to complain"] Hist. 1. A complaint; the plaintiff's count or declaration. 2. A cause of action. 3. Roman law. An action.

querela coram rege a concilio discutienda et terminanda (kwə-ree-lə kor-əm ree-jee ay kən-sil-ee-oh dis-kə-shee-en-də et tər-mə-nan-də), n. [Law Latin "a dispute to be discussed and resolved by the council in front of the king"] Hist. A writ ordering someone to appear before the king to answer to a trespass.

querela inofficiosi testamenti (kwə-ree-lə in-ə-fish-ee-oh-sī tes-tə-men-tī), n. [Latin "a dispute of an undutiful will"] Roman law. An action allowing a descendant, ascendant, or sibling who was unjustly disinherited or passed over by a parent's will to have the will set aside as undutifully made.

"By far the most important is due to the querela inofficiosi testamenti. By this procedure, though the forms had been complied with, near relatives with obvious claims (the classes of those entitled having been gradually widened) might attack the will as contrary to natural duty (inofficiosum) and get it set aside." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 199 (2d ed. 1953).

querens (kweer-enz), n. [Latin fr. queri "to complain"] Hist. A plaintiff; the complaining party.

questa (kwes-tə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A quest; an inquest or inquiry upon the oaths of an impaneled jury.

mixed question of law and fact. See MIXED QUESTION OF LAW AND FACT.

political question. See POLITICAL QUESTION.

question of fact. See QUESTION OF FACT.

question of law. See QUESTION OF LAW.

question-and-answer. 1. The portion of a deposition or trial transcript in which evidence is developed through a series of questions asked by the lawyer and answered by the witness. — Abbr. Q-and-A. 2. The method for developing evidence during a deposition or at trial, requiring the witness to answer the examining lawyer's questions, without offering unsolicited information. 3. The method of instruction used in many law-school classes, in which the professor asks questions of one or more students and then follows up each answer with another question. — Also termed Socratic method. See SOC-RATIC METHOD.

question of fact. 1. An issue that has not been predetermined and authoritatively answered by the law. • An example is whether a particular criminal defendant is guilty of an offense or whether a contractor has delayed unreasonably in constructing a building. 2. An issue that does not involve what the law is on a given point. 3. A disputed issue to be resolved by the jury in a jury trial or by the judge in a bench trial. — Also termed fact question. See FACT-FINDER. 4. An issue capable of being answered by way of demonstration, as opposed to a question of unverifiable opinion.

question of law. 1. An issue to be decided by the judge, concerning the application or interpretation of the law . 2. A question that the law itself has authoritatively answered, so that the court may not answer it as a matter of discretion <under the sentencing guidelines, the punishment for a three-time offender is a question of law>. 3. An issue about what the law is on a particular point; an issue in which parties argue about, and the court must decide, what the true rule of law is <both parties appealed on the question of law>. 4. An issue that, although it may turn on a factual point, is reserved for the court and excluded from the jury; an issue that is exclusively within the province of the judge and not the jury <whether a contractual ambiguity exists is a question of law>. — Also termed legal question; law question.

questman. Hist. 1. An instigator of a lawsuit or prosecution. 2. A person who was chosen to inquire into abuses, esp. those relating to weights and measures. 3. A churchwarden; SIDESMAN. — Also termed questmonger.

questus est nobis (kwes-təs est noh-bis), n. [Law Latin “hath complained to us”] Hist. By 15 Edw., a writ against someone who continued a nuisance that existed before inheritance or purchase. • The former law provided recovery only against the party who had first caused the nuisance.

quia (kwi-ə or kwee-ə). [Latin] Hist. Because; whereas. • This term was used to point out the consideration in a conveyance.

Quia Emptores (kwi-ə or kwee-ə emp-tor-eez). [Latin “since purchasers”] Hist. A statute giving fee-simple tenants (other than those holding directly of the Crown) the power to alienate their land and bind the transferee to perform the same services for the lord as the transferor had been obliged to perform. • The statute, enacted in 1290, tended to concentrate feudal lordships in the Crown by eliminating multiple layers of fealty. 18 Edw., ch. 1. — Also termed Quia Emptores Terrarum.

“Edward I and his lords wished, for political reasons, to prevent the growth of subinfeudation, and in 1290 the Statute Quia Emptores was enacted. It took its name from the beginning of its preamble — ‘Since purchasers . . .’” L.B. Curzon, English Legal History 300 (2d ed. 1979).

quia erroneice emanavit (kwi-ə i-roh-nə-see em-ə-nay-vit). [Law Latin] Hist. Because it issued erroneously.

quia timet (kwi-ə ti-mət or kwee-ə tim-et). [Latin “because he fears”] A legal doctrine that allows a person to seek equitable relief from future probable harm to a specific right or interest.

“Quia timet is the right to be protected against anticipated future injury that cannot be prevented by the present action. The doctrine of ‘quia timet’ permits equitable relief based on a concern over future probable injury to certain rights or interests, where anticipated future injury cannot be prevented by a present action at law, such as where there is a danger that a defense at law might be prejudiced or lost if not tried immediately.” 27A Am. Jur. 2d Equity § 93, at 581 (1996).

quia-timet injunction. See INJUNCTION.

quick asset. See ASSET.

quick-asset ratio. The ratio between an entity's current or liquid assets (such as cash and quittance. 1. A release or discharge from a debt or obligation. 2. The document serving as evidence of such a release. See ACQUITTANCE.

quoad (kwoh-ad). [Latin] As regards; with regard to <with a pledge, the debtor continues to possess quoad the world at large>.

quoad hoc (kwoh-ad hok). [Latin] As to this; with respect to this; so far as this is concerned. ● A prohibition quoad hoc is a prohibition of certain things among others, such as matters brought in an ecclesiastical court that should have been brought in a temporal court.

quoad sacra (kwoh-ad say-krə). [Latin] As to sacred things; for religious purposes. ● This term often referred to property that was located so far from the parish to which it belonged that it was annexed quoad sacra to another parish, allowing the inhabitants to attend the closer parish’s services. But the land continued to belong to the original parish for all civil purposes.

quo animo (kwoh an-ə-moh), adv. [Latin] With what intention or motive. See ANIMUS.

quocumque modo velit, quocumque modo possit (kwoh-kəm-kwee moh-doh vel-it, kwoh-kəm-kwee moh-doh pahs-it). [Latin] In any way he wishes; in any way he can.

quod billa cassetur (kwod bil-ə kə-see-tər), n. [Latin “that the bill be quashed”] The common-law form of a judgment sustaining a plea in abatement that proceeds from a bill instead of an original writ. See CASSETUR BILLA.

quod clerici non eligantur in officio ballivi, etc. (kwod kler-ə-si non el-ə-gan-tər in ə-fish-ee-oh bal-li-vi), n. [Law Latin “that clerks are not chosen in the office of a bailiff, etc.”] Hist. A writ exempting a clerk, who was to be appointed as a bailiff, beadle, reeve, or other officer, from serving in the office.

quod computet (kwod kom-pyə-tet). [Law Latin “that he account”] The first judgment in an action of account, requiring the defendant to give an accounting before auditors. — Also termed judgment quod computet.

“In this action, if the plaintiff succeeds, there are two judgments: the first is, that the defendant do account (quod computet) before auditors appointed by the court; and, when such account is finished, then the second judgment is, that he do pay the plaintiff so much as he is found in arrear.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 163 (1768).

quod cum (kwod kəm). [Law Latin] For that; whereas. ● In common-law pleading, this phrase introduced explanations for the claims alleged, as in assumpsit actions.

quod ei deforceat (kwod ee-i di-for-see-ət), n. [Law Latin “that he deforces him”] Hist. A writ allowed by St. Westm. 2, 13 Edw., ch. 4 for the owners of a particular estate (such as a life estate or fee tail) who had lost land unwittingly by default in a possessory action. ● Up to that time, only owners in fee simple could recover property after such a default.

quod erat demonstrandum (kwod er-ət dem-ən-stran-dəm). See Q.E.D.

quod erat faciendum (kwod er-ət fay-shee-en-dəm). See Q.E.F.

quod fuit concessum (kwod f[y]oo-it kən-ses-əm). [Law Latin] Which was granted. ● This phrase was used in old reports to indicate that an argument or point made by counsel was approved or allowed by the court.

quod jussu (kwod jəs-[y]oo). [Latin “which was done by order”] Roman law. An action by one who contracted with a son or slave upon the authorization of the father or master, to compel the father or master to honor the agreement.

quod partes replacitent (kwod pahr-teez ri-plas-i-tənt), n. [Law Latin "that the parties do replead"] Hist. The judgment ordering repleader when an issue is formed on so immaterial a point that the court does not know for whom to give a judgment. • The parties must then reconstruct their pleadings.

quod partitio fiat (kwod pahr-tish-ee-oh fr-ət). [Latin "that partition be made"] Hist. In a partition suit, a judgment granting the partition.

quod permittat (kwod pər-mit-it), n. [Latin "that he permit"] Hist. A writ to prevent an interference in the exercise of a right, such as a writ for the heir of someone disseised of a common of pasture against the heir of the disseisor.

quod permittat prosternere (kwod pər-mit-it proh-stər-nə-ree), n. [Law Latin "that he permit to abate"] Hist. A writ to abate a nuisance, similar in nature to a petition of right.

"This is a writ commanding the defendant to permit the plaintiff to abate, quod permittat prosternere, the nuisance complained of; and, unless he so permits, to summon him to appear in court, and shew cause why he will not. And this writ lies as well for the alienee of the party first injured, as against the alienee of the party first injuring; as hath been determined by all the judges. And the plaintiff shall have judgment herein to abate the nuisance, and to recover damages against the defendant." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 222 (1768).

quod recuperet (kwod ri-k[y]oo-pər-it), n. [Law Latin "that he do recover"] Hist. The ordinary judgment for a plaintiff in an action at law. • The judgment might be either final or interlocutory depending on whether damages had been ascertained at the time the judgment was rendered. — Also termed judgment quod recuperet.

racketeer, n. A person who engages in racketeering. — racketeer, vb.

Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. A law designed to attack organized criminal activity and preserve marketplace integrity by investigating, controlling, and prosecuting persons who participate or conspire to participate in racketeering. • Enacted in 1970, the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) applies only to activity involving interstate or foreign commerce. 18 USCA §§ 1961–1968. Since then, many states have adopted laws (sometimes called “little RICO” acts) based on the federal statute. The federal and most state RICO acts provide for enforcement not only by criminal prosecution but also by civil lawsuit, in which the plaintiff can sue for treble damages.

“Before criminal or civil liability can attach under RICO, it must be shown that the two or more acts of racketeering alleged in the criminal indictment or civil complaint constitute a pattern of racketeering activity on the part of the culpable person. The statutory definition of pattern ‘requires at least two’ predicate acts occurring within ten years of each other, with one of them occurring after October 15, 1970. More broadly put, the pattern of racketeering activity is a scheme of unlawful conduct with a nexus to both the culpable person and the enterprise.” David R. McCormack, Racketeering Influenced Corrupt Organizations § 1.04, at 1–20 (1998).

racketeering, n. 1. A system of organized crime traditionally involving the extortion of money from businesses by intimidation, violence, or other illegal methods. 2. A pattern of illegal activity (such as bribery, extortion, fraud, and murder) carried out as part of an enterprise (such as a crime syndicate) that is owned or controlled by those engaged in the illegal activity. • The modern sense (sense 2) derives from the federal RICO statute, which greatly broadened the term's original sense to include such activities as mail fraud, securities fraud, and the collection of illegal gambling debts.

rap, n. Slang. 1. Legal responsibility for a criminal act <he took the rap for his accomplices>. 2. A criminal charge . 3. A criminal conviction; esp., a prison sentence .

rape, n. 1. At common law, unlawful sexual intercourse committed by a man with a woman not his wife through force and against her will. ● The common-law crime of rape required at least a slight penetration of the penis into the vagina. Also at common law, a husband could not be convicted of raping his wife. 2. Unlawful sexual activity (esp. intercourse) with a person (usu. a female) without consent and usu. by force or threat of injury. ● Most modern state statutes have broadened the definition along these lines. Marital status is now usu. irrelevant, and sometimes so is the victim's gender. — Also termed (in some statutes) unlawful sexual intercourse; sexual assault; sexual battery; sexual abuse. Cf. sexual assault under ASSAULT.

"[Another] offence, against the female part also of his majesty's subjects, but attended with greater aggravations than that of forcible marriage, is the crime of rape, raptus mulierum, or the carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 210 (1769).

"If force is to be declared an element of the crime [of rape] it becomes necessary to resort to the fiction of 'constructive force' to take care of those cases in which no force is needed beyond what is involved in the very act of intercourse itself. A better analysis is to recognize that the requirement of force is simply a means of demonstrating that the unlawful violation of the woman was without her consent and against her will. Therefore, evidence of serious force need not be shown in many cases. Hence the better view is that 'force' is not truly speaking an element of the crime itself, but if great force was not needed to accomplish the act the necessary lack of consent has been disproved in other than exceptional situations. The courts today frequently state the position that a woman's resistance need not be 'more than her age, strength, the surrounding facts, and all attending circumstances' make reasonable." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 211-12 (3d ed. 1982).

date rape. Rape committed by someone known to the victim, esp. by the victim's social companion. — Also termed acquaintance rape.

marital rape. A husband's sexual intercourse with his wife by force or without her consent. ● Marital rape was not a crime at common law, but under modern statutes the marital exemption no longer applies, and in most jurisdictions a husband can be convicted of raping his wife.

statutory rape. Unlawful sexual intercourse with a person under the age of consent (as defined by statute), regardless of whether it is against that person's will. ● Generally, only an adult may be convicted of this crime. A person under the age of consent cannot be convicted. — Also termed rape under age. See AGE OF CONSENT.

"Carnal knowledge of a child is frequently declared to be rape by statute and where this is true the offense is popularly known as 'statutory rape,' although not so designated in the statute." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 198 (3d ed. 1982).

3. Archaic. The act of seizing and carrying off a person (esp. a woman) by force; abduction. 4. The act of plundering or despoiling a place. 5. Hist. One of the six administrative districts into which Sussex, England was divided, being smaller than a shire and larger than a hundred.

rape, vb. 1. To commit rape against. 2. Archaic. To seize and carry off by force; abduct. 3. To plunder or despoil. — rapist, raper, n.

rape shield statute. See SHIELD LAW (2).

rape under age. See statutory rape under RAPE.

rapina (rə-pi-nə). [Latin "robbery, pillage"] Civil law. The forcible taking of another's movable property with the intent to appropriate it to one's own use.

"Rapina is the taking away of a thing by violent means. It gives rise to the praetorian actio vi bonorum raptorum . . ." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 419 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

rapine (rap-in). 1. Forcible seizure and carrying off of another's property; pillage or plunder. 2. Archaic. Rape.

rapport à succession (ra-por ah sook-ses-syawn), n. [French "return to succession"] Civil law. The restoration to an estate of property that an heir received in advance from the decedent, so that an even distribution may be made among all the heirs. Cf. HOTCHPOT.

rapporteur (ra-por-tuur or -tär), n. [French] An official who makes a report of committee proceedings for a larger body (esp. a legislature).

rapprochement (ra-prosh-mahn). The establishment or restoration of cordial relations between two or more nations. — Also spelled rapprochment.

rap sheet. Slang. A person's criminal record.

raptu haeredis (rap-t[y]oo hä-ree-dis), n. [Latin] Hist. A writ for taking away an heir held in socage. See SOCAGE.

rapture. Archaic. 1. Forcible seizure and carrying off of another person (esp. a woman); abduction. 2. RAPE (1).

raptu virginum (rap-t[y]oo vär-ji-nəm). See DE RAPTU VIRGINUM.

rapuit (rap-yoo-it). [Latin] Hist. Ravished. • The term was formerly used in indictments for rape. See RAVISHMENT.

RAR. abbr. REVENUE AGENT'S REPORT.

rasure (ray-zhər). 1. The scraping or shaving of a document's surface to remove the writing from it; erasure. 2. Obliteration.

ratable (ray-tə-bəl), adj. 1. Proportionate <ratable distribution>. 2. Capable of being estimated, appraised, or apportioned <because hundreds of angry fans ran onto the field at the same time, blame for the goalpost's destruction is not ratable>. 3. Taxable <the government assessed the widow's ratable estate>. See PRO RATA.

ratchet theory. Constitutional law. The principle that Congress — in exercising its enforcement power under the 14th Amendment — can increase, but cannot dilute, the scope of 14th Amendment guarantees as previously defined by the Supreme Court. • Thus, the enabling clause works in only one direction, like a ratchet.

rate, n. 1. Proportional or relative value; the proportion by which quantity or value is adjusted <rate of inflation>. 2. An amount paid or charged for a good or service <the rate for a business-class fare is $550>.

class rate. A single rate applying to the transportation of several articles of the same general character.

confiscatory rate. A utility rate so low that the utility company cannot realize a reasonable return on its investment.

freight rate. A rate charged by a carrier for the transportation of cargo, usu. based on the weight, volume, or quantity of goods but sometimes also on the goods' value or the mileage.

joint rate. A single rate charged by two or more carriers to cover a shipment of goods over a single route.

union rate. The wage scale set by a union as a minimum wage to be paid and usu. expressed as an hourly rate or piecework rate.

3. INTEREST RATE <the rate on the loan increases by 2% after five years>. 4. English law. A sum assessed or payable to the local government in the place where a ratepayer dwells or has property. See RATEPAYER. — rate, vb.

rate base. The investment amount or property value on which a company, esp. a public utility, is allowed to earn a particular rate of return.

rate of interest. See INTEREST RATE.

rate of return. The annual income from an investment, expressed as a percentage of the investment. See RETURN (5).

fair rate of return. The amount of profit that a public utility is permitted to earn, as determined by a public utility commission.

internal rate of return. Accounting. A discounted-cash-flow method of evaluating a long-term project, used to determine the actual return on an investment. — Abbr. IRR.

ratepayer. English law. A person who pays local taxes; a person liable to pay rates. See RATE (4).

ratification, n. 1. Confirmation and acceptance of a previous act, thereby making the act valid from the moment it was done <the board of directors' ratification of the president's resolution>. 2. Contracts. A person's binding adoption of an act already completed but either not done in a way that originally produced a legal obligation or done by a third party having at the time no authority to act as the person's agent <an adult's ratification of a contract signed during childhood is necessary to make the contract enforceable>.

"Ratification may take place by express words indicating an intention to confirm the contract. These words may consist of a new express promise, or such words as 'I do ratify and confirm.' A mere acknowledgment that the contract was in fact made and that it has not been performed is not sufficient as a ratification. It is sometimes said that a ratification is ineffective unless made with knowledge of the possession of a legal power to disaffirm, but the cases holding the contrary seem to have the better reason." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 179-80 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. Int'l law. The final establishment of consent by the parties to a treaty to be bound by it, usu. including the exchange or deposit of instruments of ratification <the ratification of the nuclear-weapons treaty>. — ratify, vb. Cf. CONFIRMATION.

ratihabitio (rat-ə-hə-bish-ee-oh), n. [Latin fr. ratum habere "to hold ratified"] Civil law. Ratification or approval, esp. by a principal of an agent's transaction.

ratiocination (rash-ee-os-ə-nay-shən), n. The process or an act of reasoning. — ratiocinate (rash-ee-os-ə-nayt), vb. — ratiocinative (rash-ee-os-ə-nay-tiv), adj.

ratio decidendi (ray-shee-oh des-ə-den-dī), n. [Latin "the reason for deciding"] 1. The principle or rule of law on which a court's decision is founded <many poorly written judicial opinions do not contain a clearly ascertainable ratio decidendi>. 2. The rule of law on which a later court thinks that a previous court founded its decision; a general rule without which a case must have been decided otherwise <this opinion recognizes the Supreme Court's ratio decidendi in the school desegregation cases>. — Often shortened to ratio. Pl. rationes decidendi (ray-shee-oh-nee des-ə-den-dī). Cf. OBITER DICTUM; HOLDING.

"The phrase 'the ratio decidendi of a case' is slightly ambiguous. It may mean either (1) the rule that the judge who decided the case intended to lay down and apply to the facts, or (2) the rule that a later court concedes him to have had the power to lay down." Glanville Williams, Learning the Law 75 (11th ed. 1982).

"There are . . . two steps involved in the ascertainment of the ratio decidendi . . . First, it is necessary to determine all the facts of the case as seen by the judge; secondly, it is necessary to discover which of those facts were treated as material by the judge." Rupert Cross & ratio legis (ray-shee-oh lee-jəs), n. [Latin] The reason or purpose for making a law <the Senator argued that the rapid spread of violent crime was a compelling ratio legis for the gun-control statute>. — Also termed ratio juris.

rationabile estoverium (rash-[ee]-ə-nay-bə-lee es-tə-veer-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin "reasonable necessities"] Hist. Alimony.

rationabilibus divisis. See DE RATIONABILIBUS DIVISIS.

rationabili parte bonorum. See DE RATIONABILIPARTE BONORUM.

rational-basis test. Constitutional law. A principle whereby a court will uphold a law as valid under the Equal Protection Clause if it bears a reasonable relationship to the attainment of some legitimate governmental objective. — Also termed rational-purpose test; rational-relationship test; minimal scrutiny; minimum scrutiny. Cf. STRICT SCRUTINY; INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY.

ratione (ray-shee-oh-nee or rash-ee-oh-nee). [Latin] By reason; on account.

ratione domicilii (dom-ə-sil-ee-ī). By reason of domicile.

ratione impotentiae (im-pə-ten-shee-ee). By reason of inability. ● This was the basis for a property right in young wild animals that were unable to run or fly. See FERAE NATURAE.

ratione loci (loh-sī). By reason of place. ● This was the basis for a property right in rabbits and hares.

ratione materiae (mə-teer-ee-ee). By reason of the matter involved.

ratione personae (pər-soh-nee). By reason of the person concerned.

ratione privilegii (priv-ə-lee-jee-ī). By reason of privilege. ● This was the basis for a property right in animals of warren. See WARREN.

ratione rei sitae (ree-ī sī-tee). By reason of the situation of a thing.

ratione soli (soh-ī). By reason of the soil. ● This was the basis for a property right in bees.

ratione tenurae (ten-yə-ree). By reason of tenure.

rationes (ray-shee-oh-nee-z or rash-ee-oh-nee-z), n. [Latin “reasons’] Hist. The pleadings in a suit.

ratio scripta (ray-shee-oh skrip-tə), n. [Latin] Roman law. Written reason.

rattening (rat-ning). Hist. The practice of taking away tools, destroying machinery, and the like in an attempt either to compel a worker to join a union or to enforce a company’s compliance with union rules. • Rattening was formerly a common labor-union tactic in England, and it was a criminal offense.

ravishment, n. Archaic. 1. Forcible seizure and carrying off of another person (esp. a woman); abduction. 2. RAPE (1). • In this sense the term is widely considered inappropriate for modern usage, given its romantic connotations (in other contexts) of ecstasy and delight. — ravish, vb.

re (ree or ray), prep. Regarding; in the matter of; IN RE. • The term is often used as a signal or introductory title announcing the subject of business correspondence.

rea (ree-ə), n. [Latin] In civil and canon law, a female defendant. Pl. reae.

reacquired stock. See treasury stock under STOCK.

readjustment, n. Voluntary reorganization of a financially troubled corporation by the shareholders themselves, without a trustee’s or a receiver’s intervention. — readjust, vb.

ready, willing, and able. (Of a prospective buyer) legally and financially capable of consummating a purchase.

“‘READY, WILLING, AND ABLE’ — A phrase referring to a prospective buyer of property who is legally capable and financially able to consummate the deal. Traditionally, the broker earns a commission upon procuring a ‘ready, willing, and able’ buyer on the listing terms, regardless of whether the seller actually goes through with the sale. The ‘ready and willing’ means, generally, that the broker must in fact produce a buyer who indicates that he or she is prepared to accept the terms of the seller and is willing to enter into a contract for sale. The buyer is not ‘ready and willing’ when he or she enters into an option with the seller, but the buyer is ‘ready and willing’ when the option is exercised. The buyer is not ‘ready and willing’ when the offer is subject to any new conditions, such as making the closing date an unreasonably long period, for example, one year from the offer. . . . The ‘able’ requires that the buyer be financially able to comply with the terms of the sale in both initial cash payment and any necessary financing. The broker is not required to show that the purchaser has actual cash or assets to pay off the mortgage. But the broker is required to reveal the identity of the buyer if requested by the seller.” John W. Reilly, The Language of Real Estate 326 (4th ed. 1993).

reaffirmation, n. 1. Approval of something previously decided or agreed to; renewal <the Supreme Court’s reaffirmation of this principle is long overdue>. 2. Bankruptcy. An agreement between the debtor and a creditor by which the debtor promises to repay a prepetition debt that would otherwise be discharged at the conclusion of the bankruptcy <the debtor negotiated a reaffirmation so that he could keep the collateral>. • There are two main requirements for a reaffirmation to be enforceable: (1) the agreement must contain a clear and conspicuous provision stating that the debtor may rescind the reaffirmation agreement anytime before discharge or within 60 days after the agreement is filed with the court; and (2) for a debtor who is not represented by counsel, the court must determine that the reaffirmation is in the debtor’s best interest and does not impose an undue hardship. 11 USCA § 524(c). — Also termed (in sense 2) reaffirmation agreement. — reaffirm, vb.

reaffirmation hearing. Bankruptcy. A hearing at which the debtor and a creditor present a reaffirmation of a dischargeable debt for the court’s approval. • The reaffirmation hearing is usu. held simultaneously with the discharge hearing. See DISCHARGE HEARING.

real, adj. 1. Of or relating to things (such as lands and buildings) that are fixed or immovable <real property> . 2. Civil law. Of, relating to, or attached to a thing (whether movable or immovable) rather than a person . 3. Actual; genuine; true <real authority>. 4. (Of money, income, etc.) measured in terms of purchasing power rather than nominal value; adjusted for inflation <real wages>.

real account. See ACCOUNT.

real action. See ACTION.

real asset. See ASSET.

real authority. See actual authority under AUTHORITY (1).

real chattel. See chattel real under CHATTEL.

real contract. See CONTRACT.

real covenant. See covenant running with the land under COVENANT (4).

real defense. See DEFENSE (4).

real earnings. See EARNINGS.

real estate. See real property under PROPERTY.

real-estate agent. See AGENT.

real-estate broker. See BROKER.

real-estate investment trust. A company that invests in and manages a portfolio of real estate, with the majority of the trust's income distributed to its shareholders. • Such a trust may qualify for special income-tax treatment if it distributes 95% of its income to its shareholders. — Abbr. REIT. See investment company under COMPANY. Cf. REAL-ESTATE MORTGAGE TRUST.

umbrella-partnership real-estate investment trust. A REIT that controls and holds most of its properties through an umbrella limited partnership, as a result of which the trust can acquire properties in exchange for the limited-partnership interests in the umbrella while triggering no immediate tax obligations for certain sellers. • This is a structure that many REITs now use. — Abbr. UPREIT.

real-estate-mortgage investment conduit.

An entity that holds a fixed pool of mortgages or mortgage-backed securities (such as collateralized mortgage obligations), issues interests in itself to investors, and receives favorable tax treatment by passing its income through to those investors. • Real-estate-mortgage investment conduits were created by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. They can be organized as corporations, partnerships, or trusts. To qualify for tax-exempt status, the entity must meet two requirements: (1) almost all of the entity's assets must be real-estate mortgages (though a few other cash-flow-maintaining assets are allowed); and (2) all interests in the entity must be classified as either regular interests (which entitle the holder to principal and interest income through debt or equity) or residual interests (which provide contingent income). — Abbr. REMIC.

real-estate mortgage trust. A real-estate investment trust that buys and sells mortgages rather than real property. — Abbr. REMT. Cf. REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST.

real estate owned. Property acquired by a lender, usu. through foreclosure, in satisfaction of a debt. — Abbr. REO.

Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act. A federal law that requires lenders to provide home buyers with information about known or estimated settlement costs. 12 USCA §§ 2601-2617. — Abbr. RESPA. See REGULATION X.

real-estate syndicate. A group of investors who pool their money for the buying and selling of real property. • Most real-estate syndicates operate as limited partnerships or real-estate investment trusts.

real evidence. See EVIDENCE.

realignment (ree-ə-līn-mənt), n. The process by which a court, usu. in determining diversity jurisdiction, identifies and rearranges the parties as plaintiffs and defendants according to their ultimate interests. — realign, vb.

real income. See INCOME.

realization, n. 1. Conversion of noncash assets into cash assets. 2. Tax. An event or transaction, such as the sale or exchange of property, that substantially changes a taxpayer's economic position so that income tax may be imposed or a tax allowance granted. Cf. RECOGNITION (3). — realize, vb.

realized gain. See GAIN (3).

realized loss. See LOSS (4).

real law. 1. The law of real property; real-estate law. 2. Civil law. The law relating to specific things as opposed to persons.

real money. See MONEY.

real party in interest. See PARTY (2).

real rate. See INTEREST RATE.

real security. See SECURITY.

real servitude. See servitude appartenant under SERVITUDE (1).

real statute. See STATUTE.

real suretyship. See SURETYSHIP.

real things. Property that is fixed and immovable, such as lands and buildings; real property. — Also termed things real. See real property under PROPERTY. Cf. chattel real under CHATTEL.

realtor (reel-tər). 1. (cap.) Servicemark. A member of the National Association of Realtors. 2. Loosely, any real-estate agent or broker.

realty. See real property under PROPERTY.

quasi-realty. Hist. Things that the law treats as fixed to realty, but are themselves movable, such as title deeds.

real wages. See WAGE.

real wrong. See WRONG.

reapportionment, n. Realignment of a legislative district's boundaries to reflect changes in population. • The U.S. Supreme Court has required federal reapportionment. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 3. — Also termed redistricting. — reapportion, vb. Cf. GERRYMANDERING.

reargument, n. The presentation of additional arguments, which often suggest that a controlling legal principle has been overlooked, to a court (usu. an appellate court) that has already heard initial arguments. — reargue, vb. Cf. REHEARING.

rearrest. See ARREST.

reasonable, adj. 1. Fair, proper, or moderate under the circumstances <reasonable pay>. 2. According to reason <your argument is reasonable but not convincing>.

"It is extremely difficult to state what lawyers mean when they speak of 'reasonableness.' In part the expression refers to ordinary ideas of natural law or natural justice, in part to logical thought, working upon the basis of the rules of law." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 183 n.(u) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"In one sense the word [reasonable] describes the proper use of the reasoning power, and in another it is no more than a word of assessment. Reasoning does not help much in fixing a reasonable or fair price or a reasonable or moderate length of time, or in estimating the size of a doubt. Lawyers say a reasonable doubt, meaning a substantial one; the Court of Appeal has frowned upon the description of a reasonable doubt as one for which reasons could be given." Patrick Devlin, The Judge 134 (1979).

3. (Of a person) having the faculty of reason . 4. Archaic. Human <criminal homicide is traditionally called the unlawful killing of a "reasonable person">. — reasonableness, n.

reasonable accommodation. 1. An action taken to adapt or adjust for a disabled person, done in a way that does not impose an undue hardship on the party taking the action. • Under the Americans with Disabilities Act, an employer must make reasonable accommodations for an employee's disability. Examples of reasonable accommodations that have been approved by the courts include providing additional unpaid leave, modifying the employee's work schedule, and reassigning the employee to a vacant position. 2. An action taken to adapt or adjust for an employee's religious need or practice, done in a way that does not impose an undue hardship on the employer.

reasonable care. See CARE.

reasonable cause. See PROBABLE CAUSE.

reasonable diligence. See due diligence (1) under DILIGENCE.

reasonable doubt. The doubt that prevents one from being firmly convinced of a defendant's guilt, or the belief that there is a real possibility that a defendant is not guilty. • "Beyond a reasonable doubt" is the standard used by a jury to determine whether a criminal defendant is guilty. In deciding whether guilt has been proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the jury must begin with the presumption that the defendant is innocent. See BURDEN OF PERSUASION.

"Reasonable doubt . . . is a term often used, probably pretty well understood, but not easily defined. It is not a mere possible doubt; because every thing relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case, which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge." Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 295, 320 (1850) (per Lemuel Shaw, J.).

"The gravamen of Lord Goddard's objection to the formula of 'reasonable doubt' seems to have been the muddle occasionally created by an impromptu effort to explain to a jury the meaning of this phrase. A simple solution would be to refrain from explaining it, relying on the common sense of the jury. As Barton J. said in an Australian case, 'one embarks on a dangerous sea if he attempts to define with precision a term which is in ordinary use with reference to this subject-matter, and which is usually stated to a jury without embellishment as a well understood expression.' However, some modes of embellishment seem to be unobjectionable. There is probably no harm in telling the jury, as some judges do, that a reasonable doubt is one for which a sensible reason can be supplied." Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 873 (2d ed. 1961).

reasonable-expectation doctrine. Insurance.

The rule that resolves an insurance-policy ambiguity in favor of the insured's reasonable expectations.

reasonable force. See FORCE.

reasonable grounds. See PROBABLE CAUSE.

reasonable-inference rule. An evidentiary principle providing that a jury, in deciding a case, may properly consider any reasonable inference drawn from the evidence presented at trial.

reasonable man. See REASONABLE PERSON.

reasonable medical probability. In proving the cause of an injury, a standard requiring a showing that the injury was more likely than not caused by a particular stimulus, based on the general consensus of recognized medical thought. — Also termed reasonable medical certainty.

reasonable notice. See NOTICE.

reasonable person. 1. A hypothetical person used as a legal standard, esp. to determine whether someone acted with negligence. ● The reasonable person acts sensibly, does things without serious delay, and takes proper but not excessive precautions. — Also termed reasonable man; prudent person; ordinarily prudent person; reasonably prudent person. See reasonable care under CARE.

"The reasonable man connotes a person whose notions and standards of behaviour and responsibility correspond with those generally obtained among ordinary people in our society at the present time, who seldom allows his emotions to overbear his reason and whose habits are moderate and whose disposition is equable. He is not necessarily the same as the average man — a term which implies an amalgamation of counter-balancing extremes." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 56 (17th ed. 1977).

2. Archaic. A human being.

"In the antique phraseology which has been repeated since the time of Lord Coke the actus reus of murder (and therefore of any criminal homicide) was declared to be unlawfully killing a reasonable person who is in being and under the King's peace, the death following within a year and a day. In this sentence the word 'reasonable' does not mean 'sane', but 'human'. In criminal law, a lunatic is a persona for all purposes of protection, even when not so treated for the assessment of liability." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 102 (16th ed. 1952).

reasonable royalty. See ROYALTY (1).

reasonable suspicion. A particularized and objective basis, supported by specific and articulable facts, for suspecting a person of criminal activity. ● A police officer must have a reasonable suspicion to stop a person in a public place. See STOP AND FRISK. Cf. PROBABLE CAUSE.

reasonable time. 1. Contracts. The time needed to do what a contract requires to be done, based on subjective circumstances. ● If the contracting parties do not fix a time for performance, the law will usu. presume a reasonable time. 2. Commercial law. The time during which the UCC permits a party to accept an offer, inspect goods, substitute conforming goods for rejected goods, and the like.

reasonable use. See USE (1).

reasonable-use theory. Property. The principle that owners of riparian land may make reasonable use of their water if this use does not affect the water available to lower riparian owners.

reasonably prudent person. See REASONABLE PERSON.

reason to know. Information from which a person of ordinary intelligence — or of the superior intelligence that the person may have — would infer that the fact in question exists or that there is a substantial enough chance of its existence that, if the person is exercising reasonable care, the person's action would be based on the assumption of its possible existence.

reassurance. See REINSURANCE.

rebate, n. A return of part of a payment, serving as a discount or reduction. — rebate, vb.

rebellion. 1. Open, organized, and armed resistance to an established government or ruler. 2. Open resistance or opposition to an authority or tradition. 3. Hist. Disobedience of a legal command or summons.

rebus sic stantibus (ree-bəs sik stan-tə-bəs). [Law Latin “things standing thus”] Civil & int’l law. The principle that all agreements are concluded with the implied condition that they are binding only as long as there are no major changes in the circumstances. See CLAUSA REBUS SIC STANTIBUS.

rebut, vb. To refute, oppose, or counteract (something) by evidence, argument, or contrary proof <rebut the opponent’s expert testimony> <rebut a presumption of negligence>.

rebuttable presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

rebuttal, n. 1. In-court contradiction of an adverse party’s evidence. 2. The time given to a party to present contradictory evidence or arguments. Cf. CASE-IN-CHIEF.

rebuttal evidence. See EVIDENCE.

rebuttal witness. See WITNESS.

rebutter. 1. Common-law pleading. The defendant’s answer to a plaintiff’s surrejoinder; the pleading that followed the rejoinder and surrejoinder, and that might in turn be answered by the surrebutter. 2. One who rebuts.

recall, n. 1. Removal of a public official from office by popular vote. 2. A manufacturer’s request to consumers for the return of defective products for repair or replacement. 3. Revocation of a judgment for factual or legal reasons. — recall, vb.

recall election. See ELECTION.

recall exclusion. See sistership exclusion under EXCLUSION (3).

recant (ri-kant), vb. 1. To withdraw or renounce (prior statements or testimony) formally or publicly <the prosecution hoped the eyewitness wouldn’t recant her corroborating testimony on the stand>. 2. To withdraw or renounce prior statements or testimony formally or publicly <under grueling cross-examination, the witness recanted>. — recantation, n.

recapitalization, n. An adjustment or recasting of a corporation’s capital structure — that is, its stocks, bonds, or other securities — through amendment of the articles of incorporation or merger with a parent or subsidiary. ● An example of recapitalization is the elimination of unpaid preferred dividends and the creation of a new class of senior securities. — recapitalize, vb. Cf. REORGANIZATION (2).

leveraged recapitalization. Recapitalization whereby the corporation substitutes debt for equity in the capital structure, usu. to make the corporation less attractive as a target for a hostile takeover. — Also termed leveraging up.

reception. 1. At common law, lawful seizure of another’s property for a second time to secure the performance of a duty; a second distress. See DISTRESS. 2. Peaceful retaking, without legal process, of one’s own property that has been wrongfully taken.

recapture, n. 1. The act or an instance of retaking or reacquiring; recovery. 2. The lawful taking by the government of earnings or profits exceeding a specified amount; esp., the government’s recovery of a tax benefit (such as a deduction or credit) by taxing income or property that no longer qualifies for the benefit. 3. Int’l law. The retaking of a prize or booty so that the property is legally restored to its original owner. See POSTLIMINIUM (2). — recapture, vb.

recapture clause. 1. A contract provision that limits prices or allows for the recovery of goods if market conditions greatly differ from what the contract anticipated. 2. A commercial-lease provision that grants the landlord both a percentage of the tenant’s profits above a fixed amount of rent and the right to terminate the lease — and thus recapture the property — if those profits are too low.

receding market. See bear market under MARKET.

receipt, n. 1. The act of receiving something <my receipt of the document was delayed by two days>. 2. A written acknowledgment that something has been received <keep the receipt for the gift>.

accountable receipt. A receipt coupled with an obligation.

warehouse receipt. See WAREHOUSE RECEIPT.

3. (usu. pl.) Something received; INCOME <post the daily receipts in the ledger>.

receivable, adj. 1. Capable of being admitted or accepted. 2. Awaiting receipt of payment <accounts receivable>. 3. Subject to a call for payment .

receivable, n. See account receivable under ACCOUNT.

receiver. A disinterested person appointed by a court, or by a corporation or other person, for the protection or collection of property that is the subject of diverse claims (for example, because it belongs to a bankrupt or is otherwise being litigated). Cf. LIQUIDATOR.

ancillary receiver. One who is appointed as a receiver in a particular area to assist a foreign receiver in collecting the assets of an insolvent corporation or other entity.

"An ancillary receiver of a corporation or unincorporated association may be appointed (a) by a competent court of a state in which there are assets of the corporation or unincorporated association at the time of the commencement of the action for the appointment of such receiver, or (b) in the case of a corporation, by a competent court of the state of incorporation. . . . The purpose of such an ancillary receivership is to aid the foreign primary receivership in the collection and taking charge of assets of the estate being administered." 66 Am. Jur. 2d Receivers § 436, at 239 (1973).

receiver general. A public official in charge of a government's receipts and treasury. Pl. receivers general.

receivership. 1. The state or condition of being in the control of a receiver. 2. The position or function of being a receiver appointed by a court or under a statute. 3. A proceeding in which a court appoints a receiver.

dry receivership. A receivership in which there is no equity available to pay general creditors.

receiving state. The country to which a diplomatic agent or consul is sent by the country represented by that agent. Cf. SENDING STATE.

receiving stolen property. The criminal offense of acquiring or controlling property known to have been stolen by another person. ● Some jurisdictions require the additional element of wrongful intent. In some jurisdictions it is a felony, but in others it is either a felony or a misdemeanor depending on the value of the property. — Also termed receiving stolen goods. See FENCE.

recens insecutio (ree-senz in-sə-kyoo-shee-oh). [Latin "fresh pursuit"] Hist. Pursuit of a thief immediately after discovery of the theft. See FRESH PURSUIT.

reception. The adoption in whole or in part of the law of one jurisdiction by another jurisdiction.

receptitious (ree-sep-tish-əs), adj. Roman law. 1. (Of property) retained by the wife and not included in the dowry. 2. (Of a dowry) returnable by agreement to the donor upon the husband's death.

receptus (ri-sep-təs). [Latin "(a person) having been received"] Civil law. An arbitrator. ● The term takes its name from the idea that the arbitrator is "received" by the parties to settle their dispute.

recess (ree-ses), n. 1. A brief break in judicial proceedings <the court granted a two-hour recess for lunch>. Cf. CONTINUANCE (3). 2. An interval between sittings of the same legislative body <Congress took a monthlong recess>. — recess (ri-ses), vb.

recession. A period characterized by a sharp slowdown in economic activity, declining employment, and a decrease in investment and consumer spending. Cf. DEPRESSION.

recessus maris (ri-ses-əs mair-əs). [Latin] A going back or retreat of the sea. See RELICTION.

Recht (rekt). [German "right"] 1. Law generally. 2. A body of law. 3. A right or claim.

Rechtsphilosophi (rekts-fə-los-ə-fee). See ethical jurisprudence under JURISPRUDENCE.

recidivate (ri-sid-ə-vayt), vb. To return to a habit of criminal behavior; to relapse into crime.

recidivation. Archaic. See RECIDIVISM.

recidivism (ri-sid-ə-viz-əm), n. A tendency to relapse into a habit of criminal activity or behavior. — Also termed (archaically) recidivation. — recidivous, recidivist, adj.

recidivist (ri-sid-ə-vist), n. One who has been convicted of multiple criminal offenses, usu. similar in nature; a repeat offender <proponents of prison reform argue that prisons don't cure the recidivist>. — Also termed habitual offender; habitual criminal; repeater; career criminal.

reciprocal (ri-sip-rə-kəl), adj. 1. Directed by each toward the other or others; MUTUAL. 2. BILATERAL . 3. Corresponding; equivalent.

reciprocal contract. See bilateral contract under CONTRACT.

reciprocal dealing. A business arrangement in which a buyer having greater economic power than a seller agrees to buy something from the seller only if the seller buys something in return. ● Reciprocal dealing usu. violates anti-trust laws. — Also termed reciprocal-dealing arrangement. Cf. TYING ARRANGEMENT.

reciprocal exchange. An association whose members exchange contracts and pay premiums through an attorney-in-fact for the purpose of insuring themselves and each other. ● A reciprocal exchange can consist of individuals, partnerships, trustees, or corporations, but the exchange itself is unincorporated. — Also termed interinsurance exchange; reciprocal insurance exchange; reciprocal interinsurance exchange. See reciprocal insurance under INSURANCE.

reciprocal insurance. See INSURANCE.

reciprocal insurance exchange. See RECIPROCAL EXCHANGE.

reciprocal interinsurance exchange. See RECIPROCAL EXCHANGE.

reciprocal negative easement. See EASEMENT.

reciprocal trade agreement. An agreement between two countries providing for the exchange of goods between them at lower tariffs and better terms than exist between one of the countries and other countries.

reciprocal trust. See TRUST.

reciprocal will. See mutual will under WILL.

reciprocity (res-ə-pros-i-tee). 1. Mutual or bilateral action <the Arthurs stopped receiving social invitations from friends because of their lack of reciprocity>. 2. The mutual concession of advantages or privileges for purposes of commercial or diplomatic relations <Texas and Louisiana grant reciprocity to each other's citizens in qualifying for in-state tuition rates>.

recision. See RESCISSION.

recision. See RESCISSION.

recital. 1. An account or description of some fact or thing <the recital of the events leading up to the accident>. 2. A preliminary statement in a contract or deed explaining the background of the transaction or showing the existence of particular facts <the recitals in the settlement agreement should describe the underlying dispute>. — recite, vb.

"The parties may wish to begin the agreement with a statement of their intentions. Often they do this through recitals, which were traditionally introduced by 'whereas,' but can simply state the background without this formality." Scott J. Burnham, Contract Drafting Guidebook § 8.4, at 158 (2d ed. 1992).

reckless, adj. Characterized by the creation of a substantial and unjustifiable risk of harm to others and by a conscious (and sometimes deliberate) disregard for or indifference to that risk; heedless; rash. ● Reckless conduct is much more than mere negligence: it is a gross deviation from what a reasonable person would do. — recklessly, adv. See RECKLESSNESS. Cf. WANTON.

"Intention cannot exist without foresight, but foresight can exist without intention. For a man may foresee the possible or even probable consequences of his conduct and yet not desire them to occur; none the less if he persists on his course he knowingly runs the risk of bringing about the unwished result. To describe this state of mind the word 'reckless' is the most appropriate. The words 'rash' and 'rashness' have also been used to indicate this same attitude." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 28 (16th ed. 1952).

reckless disregard. 1. Conscious indifference to the consequences (of an act). 2. Defamation. Serious indifference to truth or accuracy of a publication. ● "Reckless disregard for the truth" is the standard in proving the defendant's actual malice toward the plaintiff in a libel action.

reckless driving. The criminal offense of operating a motor vehicle in a manner that shows conscious indifference to the safety of others.

reckless endangerment. The criminal offense of putting another person at substantial risk of death or serious injury. • This is a statutory, not a common-law, offense.

reckless homicide. See HOMICIDE.

reckless knowledge. See KNOWLEDGE.

reckless negligence. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

recklessness, n. 1. Conduct whereby the actor does not desire harmful consequence but nonetheless foresees the possibility and consciously takes the risk. • Recklessness involves a greater degree of fault than negligence but a lesser degree of fault than intentional wrongdoing. 2. The state of mind in which a person does not care about the consequences of his or her actions. — Also termed heedlessness. Cf. WANTONNESS.

“The ordinary meaning of the word [recklessness] is a high degree of carelessness. It is the doing of something which in fact involves a grave risk to others, whether the doer realizes it or not. The test is therefore objective and not subjective.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 194 (17th ed. 1977).

reclamation (rek-lə-may-shən), n. 1. The act or an instance of improving the value of economically useless land by physically changing the land, such as irrigating a desert. 2. Commercial law. A seller’s limited right to retrieve goods delivered to a buyer when the buyer is insolvent. UCC § 2-702(2). 3. The act or an instance of obtaining valuable materials from waste materials. — reclaim, vb.

reclusion (ri-kloo-zhən). Civil law. Incarceration as punishment for a crime; esp., solitary confinement or confinement at hard labor in a penitentiary.

recognition clause. Real estate. A clause providing that, when a tract of land has been subdivided for development, the ultimate buyers of individual lots are protected if the developer defaults on the mortgage. • Such a clause is typically found in a blanket mortgage or a contract for deed.

recognition picketing. See PICKETING.

recognition strike. See STRIKE.

recognitor (ri-kog-nə-tər), n. 1. Hist. A member of a jury impaneled on an assize or inquest. See RECOGNITION. 2. Rare. RECOGNIZOR.

recognizance (ri-kog-nə-zənts). 1. A bond or obligation, made in court, by which a person promises to perform some act or observe some condition, such as to appear when called, to pay a debt, or to keep the peace. • Most commonly, a recognizance takes the form of a bail bond that guarantees an unjailed criminal defendant’s return for a court date <the defendant was released on his own recognizance>. See RELEASE ON RECOGNIZANCE.

“Recognizances are aptly described as ‘contracts made with the Crown in its judicial capacity.’ A recognizance is a writing acknowledged by the party to it before a judge or officer having authority for the purpose, and enrolled in a court of record. It usually takes the form of a promise, with penalties for the breach of it, to keep the peace, to be of good behavior, or to appear at the assizes.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 80-81 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"A recognizance is an acknowledgment of an obligation in court by the recognizer binding him to make a certain payment subject to the condition that on the performance of a specified act the obligation shall be discharged." 1 Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 6, at 18 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

personal recognizance. The release of a defendant in a criminal case in which the court takes the defendant's word that he or she will appear for a scheduled matter or when told to appear. • This type of release dispenses with the necessity of the person's posting money or having a surety sign a bond with the court.

2. See bail bond under BOND (2).

recognized gain. See GAIN (3).

recognized loss. See LOSS.

recognized market. See MARKET.

recognizee (ri-kog-nə-zee). A person in whose favor a recognizance is made; one to whom someone is bound by a recognizance.

recognizer (ri-kog-nə-zor). A person who is obligated under a recognizance; one who is bound by a recognizance.

"A recognizance is an acknowledgment upon record of a former debt, and he who so acknowledges such debt to be due is termed the recognizer, and he to whom or for whose benefit he makes such acknowledgment is termed the recognizee." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 8 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

recollection, n. 1. The action of recalling something to the mind, esp. through conscious effort. 2. Something recalled to the mind. — recollect, vb. See PAST RECOLLECTION RECORDED; PRESENT RECOLLECTION REFRESHED.

recompensable. See COMPENSABLE.

recompense (rek-əm-pents), n. Repayment, compensation, or retribution for something, esp. an injury or loss. — recompense, vb.

reconciliation (rek-ən-sil-ee-ay-shən), n. 1. Restoration of harmony between persons or things that had been in conflict . 2. Family law. Voluntary resumption, after a separation, of full marital relations between spouses <the court dismissed the divorce petition after the parties' reconciliation>. 3. Accounting. An adjustment of accounts so that reconciliation statement. An accounting or financial statement in which discrepancies are adjusted.

reconduction, n. 1. Civil law. The renewal of a lease. — Also termed relocation. Cf. TACIT RELOCATION. 2. Int'l law. The forcible return of aliens (esp. illegal aliens, destitute or diseased aliens, or alien criminals who have served their punishment) to their country of origin. — Also termed (in sense 2) renvoi. — reconduct, vb.

reconsideration. The action of discussing or taking something up again <legislative reconsideration of the measure>.

reconsignment. A change in the terms of a consignment while the goods are in transit. See CONSIGNMENT.

reconstruction. 1. The act or process of rebuilding, re-creating, or reorganizing something <an expert in accident reconstruction>. 2. Patents. A rebuilding of a broken, worn-out, or otherwise inoperative patented article in such a way that a new article is created, thus resulting in an infringement <the replacement of the machine's essential parts was an infringing reconstruction rather than a permissible repair>. 3. (cap.) The process by which the Southern states that had seceded during the Civil War were readmitted into the Union during the years following the war (i.e., from 1865 to 1877) <the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution are a lasting legacy of Reconstruction>.

recontinuance. 1. Resumption or renewal. 2. The recovery of an incorporeal hereditament that had been wrongfully deprived.

reconvention. Civil law. The act or process of making a counterclaim. See COUNTERCLAIM.

reconventional demand. See DEMAND (1).

reconversion. The notional or imaginary process by which an earlier constructive conversion — meaning a change of personal into real property, or real into personal property — is annulled and taken away, and the converted property restored to its original quality. See equitable conversion under CONVERSION (1).

reconveyance, n. The restoration or return of something (esp. an estate or title) to a former owner or holder. — reconvey, vb.

record, n. 1. A documentary account of past events, usu. designed to memorialize those events; information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that, having been stored in an electronic or other medium, is retrievable in perceivable form. UCC § 2A-102(a)(34).

defective record. 1. A record that fails to conform to requirements of appellate rules. 2. A flawed real-estate title resulting from a defect on the property's record in the registry of deeds.

public record. A record that a governmental unit is required by law to keep, such as land deeds kept at a county courthouse. • Public records are generally open to view by the public. Cf. public document under DOCUMENT.

silent record. Criminal procedure. A record that fails to disclose that a defendant voluntarily and knowingly entered a plea, waived a right to counsel, or took any other action affecting his or her rights.

2. The official report of the proceedings in a case, including the filed papers, a verbatim transcript of the trial or hearing (if any), and tangible exhibits. See DOCKET (1).

recorda (ri-kor-də). Hist. In England, records that contained the judgments and pleadings in actions tried before the barons of the Exchequer. Cf. ORIGINALIA.

record agent. See INSURANCE AGENT.

recordare (ree-kor-dair-ee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ to bring up on appeal a judgment of a justice of the peace.

recordari facias loquellam (ree-kor-dair-I fay-shee-əs lə-kwee-ləm), n. [Law Latin “you cause the plaint to be recorded”] Hist. In England, a writ by which a suit or plaint in replevin could be removed from a county court to a superior court (esp. to one of the courts of Westminster Hall). — Abbr. re. fa. lo. See PLAINT (1).

recordation (rek-ər-day-shən), n. The act or process of recording an instrument, such as a deed or mortgage, in a public registry. • Recordation generally perfects a person's interest in the property against later purchasers (including later mortgagees), but the effect of recordation depends on the type of recording act in effect. — Also termed recordal.

record date. See DATE.

recorded recollection. See PAST RECOLLECTION RECORDED.

recorder. 1. Hist. A magistrate with criminal jurisdiction in some British cities or boroughs. 2. A municipal judge with the criminal jurisdiction of a magistrate or a police judge and sometimes also with limited civil jurisdiction. 3. A municipal or county officer who keeps public records such as deeds, liens, and judgments.

court recorder. A court official who records court activities using electronic recording equipment, usu. for the purpose of preparing a verbatim transcript. Cf. COURT REPORTER (1).

recorder of deeds. See REGISTER OF DEEDS.

recorder's court. A court having jurisdiction over felony cases. • This court exists in only a few jurisdictions, such as Michigan, where the recorder's court hears felony cases arising within the Detroit city limits.

recording act. A law that establishes the requirements for recording a deed or other property interest and the standards for determining priorities between persons claiming interests in the same property (usu. real property). • Recording acts — the three main types of which are the notice statute, the race statute, and the race-notice statute — are designed to protect bona fide purchasers from earlier unrecorded interests. — Also termed recording statute. See NOTICE STATUTE; RACE STATUTE; RACE-NOTICE STATUTE.

recording agent. See INSURANCE AGENT.

recording statute. See RECORDING ACT.

record notice. See NOTICE.

recordo et processu mittendis. See DE RECORDO ET PROCESSU MITTENDIS.

double recovery. 1. A judgment that erroneously awards damages twice for the same loss, based on two different theories of recovery. 2. Recovery by a party of more than the maximum recoverable loss that the party has sustained.

recrimination (ri-krim-i-nay-shən), n. Archaic. In a divorce suit, a countercharge that the complainant has been guilty of an offense constituting a ground for divorce. • Recriminations are now virtually obsolete because of the prevalence of no-fault divorce. — recriminatory, adj.

recross-examination. A second cross-examination, after redirect examination. — Often shortened to recross. See CROSS-EXAMINATION.

recta gubernatio (rek-tə g[y]oo-bər-nay-sheeh), n. [Latin "right government"] A government in which the highest power, however strong and unified, is neither arbitrary nor irresponsible, and derives from a law that is superior to itself. — Also termed legitima gubernatio.

rectification (rek-tə-fi-kay-shən), n. 1. A court's equitable correction of a contractual term that is misstated; the judicial alteration of a written contract to make it conform to the true intention of the parties when, in its original form, it did not reflect this intention. • As an equitable remedy, the court alters the terms as written so as to express the true intention of the parties. The court might do this when the rent is wrongly recorded in a lease or when the area of land is incorrectly cited in a deed. 2. A court's slight modification of words of a statute as a means of carrying out what the court is convinced must have been the legislative intent. • For example, courts engage in rectification when they read and as or or shall as may, as they frequently must do because of unfastidious drafting. — rectify, vb. See REFORMATION.

rectification of boundaries. Hist. An action to determine or correct the boundaries between two adjoining pieces of land.

rectification of register. Hist. A process by which a person whose name was wrongly entered in or omitted from a record can compel the recorder to correct the error.

rectitudo (rek-tə-t[y]oo-doh). [Law Latin] A right or legal due; a tribute or payment.

reeve (reev). Hist. 1. A ministerial officer of high rank having local jurisdiction; the chief magistrate of a hundred. • The reeve executed process, kept the peace, and enforced the law by holding court within the hundred. 2. A minor officer serving the Crown at the hundred level; a bailiff or deputy-sheriff. 3. An overseer of a manor, parish, or the like. — Also spelled reve. — Also termed greve.

"All the freeholders, unless relieved by special exemption, 'owed suit' at the hundred-moot, and the reeve of the hundred presided over it. In Anglo-Saxon times, the reeve was an independent official, and the hundred-moot was not a preliminary stage to the shire-moot at all. . . . But after the Conquest the hundred assembly, now called a court as all the others were, lost its importance very quickly. Pleas of land were taken from it, and its criminal jurisdiction limited to one of holding suspects in temporary detention. The reeve of the hundred became the deputy of the sheriff, and the chief purpose of holding the hundred court was to enable the sheriff to hold his tourn and to permit a 'view of frankpledge,' i.e., an inspection of the person who ought to belong to the frankpledge system." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 174-75 (1936).

shire-reeve. The reeve of a shire. • The shire-reeve was a forerunner of the sheriff. — Also spelled shire-reve. — Also termed shire-gerefa.

referral sales contract. A dual agreement consisting of an agreement by the consumer to purchase goods or services (usu. at an inflated price) and an agreement by the seller to compensate the consumer for each customer (or potential customer) referred to the seller. — Also termed referral sales agreement.

"The problem inherent in a referral sales contract is the problem inherent in a chain letter — the success of the arrangement depends on an inexhaustible supply of customers. For example, if each buyer submits 25 names and each of these 'referrals' becomes a buyer under a similar agreement, the completion of the seventh round of referrals requires 6.1 trillion persons. . . . Both courts and legislatures have acted against referral sales. . . . The Uniform Consumer Credit Code prohibits the use of referral sales schemes in which the rebate is conditioned on 'the occurrence of an event after the time the consumer agrees to buy or lease.' In other words, a referral scheme keyed to the consumer merely furnishing names is not affected; a referral scheme keyed to the consumer furnishing names of people who actually become customers is prohibited." David G. Epstein & Steve H. Nickles, Consumer Law in a Nutshell 39 (2d ed. 1981).

refinancing, n. An exchange of an old debt for a new debt, as by negotiating a different interest rate or term or by repaying the existing loan with money acquired from a new loan. — refinance, vb.

2. Securities. The complete process of preparing to sell a newly issued security to the public shelf registration. Registration with the SEC of securities to be sold over time, the purpose being to avoid the delays and market uncertainties of individual registration.

<the security is currently in registration>. — register, vb.

rehabilitation, n. 1. Criminal law. The process of seeking to improve a criminal's character and outlook so that he or she can function in society without committing other crimes <rehabilitation is a traditional theory of criminal punishment, along with deterrence and retribution>. Cf. DETERRENCE; RETRIBUTION (1). 2. Evidence. The restoration of a witness's credibility after the witness has been impeached <the inconsistencies were explained away during the prosecution's rehabilitation of the witness>. 3. Bankruptcy. The process of reorganizing a debtor's financial affairs — under Chapter 11, 12, or 13 of the Bankruptcy Code — so that the debtor may continue to exist as a financial entity, with creditors satisfying their claims from the debtor's future earnings <the corporation's rehabilitation was successful>. — Also termed debtor rehabilitation. Cf. LIQUIDATION (4). — rehabilitate, vb. — rehabilitative, adj.

rehabilitative alimony. See ALIMONY.

rehearing. A second or subsequent hearing of a case or an appeal, usu. held to consider an error or omission in the first hearing <the appellant, dissatisfied with the appellate court's ruling, filed a petition for rehearing>. — Abbr. reh'g. Cf. REARGUMENT.

reh'g. abbr. REHEARING.

rei (ree-I). pl. REUS.

reif (reef). Scots law. Robbery.

reification (ree-ə-fi-kay-shən), n. 1. Mental conversion of an abstract concept into a material thing. 2. Civil procedure. Identification of the disputed thing in a nonpersonal action and attribution of an in-state situs to it for jurisdictional purposes. 3. Commercial law. Embodiment of a right to payment in a writing (such as a negotiable instrument) so that a transfer of the writing also transfers the right. — reify (ree-ə-fi or ray-), vb.

rei interventus (ree-I in-tər-ven-təs), n. [Latin "things intervening"] Actions or efforts by one party to a contract with the consent of the other party, so that the one party has made a partial performance and the other cannot repudiate without being in breach.

reimbursement, n. 1. Repayment. 2. Indemnification. — reimburse, vb.

reimbursement alimony. See ALIMONY.

reinscription, n. Civil law. A second or renewed recordation of a mortgage or other title document. — reinscribe, vb.

reinstate, vb. To place again in a former state or position; to restore <the judge reinstated the judgment that had been vacated>. — reinstatement, n.

reinsurance. Insurance of all or part of one insurer's risk by a second insurer, who accepts the risk in exchange for a percentage of the original premium. — Also termed reassurance.

"The term 'reinsurance' has been used by courts, attorneys, and textwriters with so little discrimination that much confusion has arisen as to what that term actually connotes. Thus, it has so often been used in connection with transferred risks, assumed risks, consolidations and mergers, excess insurance, and in other connections that it now lacks a clean-cut field of operation. Reinsurance, to an insurance lawyer, means one thing only — the ceding by one insurance company to another of all or a portion of its risks for a stipulated portion of the premium, in which the liability of the reinsurer is solely to the reinsured, which is the ceding company, and in which contract the ceding company retains all contact with the original insured, and handles all matters prior to and subsequent to loss." 13A John Alan Appleman & Jean Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice § 7681, at 479-80 (1976).

excess reinsurance. Reinsurance in which a reinsurer assumes liability only for an amount of insurance that exceeds a specified sum. See excess insurance under INSURANCE.

facultative reinsurance. Reinsurance of an individual risk at the option (the "faculty") of the reinsurer.

flat reinsurance. Reinsurance (esp. of marine insurance) that cannot be canceled or modified.

treaty reinsurance. Reinsurance under a broad agreement of all risks in a given class as soon as they are insured by the direct insurer.

reinsurance treaty. A contract of reinsurance (usu. long-term) covering different classes or lines of business of the reinsured (such as professional liability, property, etc.) and obligating the reinsurer in advance to accept the cession of covered risks. ● Rather than receive individual notice of each specific claim covered, the treaty reinsurer will generally receive periodic reports providing basic information on the losses paid. — Also termed treaty of reinsurance. See BORDERAU. Cf. FACULTATIVE CERTIFICATE.

reinsured, n. An insurer that transfers all or part of a risk it underwrites to a reinsurer, usu. along with a percentage of the original premium. — Also termed cedent; cedant.

reinsurer. An insurer that assumes all or part of a risk underwritten by another insurer, usu. in exchange for a percentage of the original premium.

reinvestment. 1. The addition of interest earned on a monetary investment to the principal sum. 2. A second, additional, or repeated investment; esp., the application of dividends or other distributions toward the purchase of additional shares (as of a stock or a mutual fund).

reissuable note. See NOTE (1).

reissue. 1. An abstractor's certificate certifying to the correctness of an abstract. ● A reissue is an important precaution when the abstract comprises an original abstract brought down to a certain date and then several continuations or extensions showing matters that have occurred since the date of the original abstract. 2. See reissue patent under PATENT (3).

reissue patent. See PATENT (3).

REIT (reet). abbr. REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST.

rejection. 1. A refusal to accept a contractual offer. 2. A refusal to accept tendered goods as contractual performance. ● Under the UCC, a buyer's rejection of nonperforming goods must be made within a reasonable time after tender or delivery, and notice of the rejection must be given to the seller. — reject, vb. Cf. REPUDIATION; RESCISSION; REVOCATION.

rejoinder, n. Common-law pleading. The defendant's answer to the plaintiff's reply (or replication). — rejoin, vb.

related good. Trademarks. A good that infringes a trademark because it appears to come from the same source as the marked good, despite not competing with the marked good. ● For example, a cutting tool named "McKnife" might infringe the "McDonald's" trademark as a related good.

relation back, n. 1. The doctrine that an act done at a later time is considered to have occurred at an earlier time. ● For example, in federal civil procedure, an amended pleading relates back, for purposes of the statute of limitations, to the time when the original pleading was filed. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c). 2. A judicial application of that doctrine. — relate back, vb.

relative, n. A person connected with another by blood or affinity; a kinsman.

collateral relative. A relative who is not in the direct line of inheritance, such as a cousin.

relative-convenience doctrine. The principle that an injunction or other equitable relief may be denied if it would cause one party great inconvenience but the other party little or no inconvenience.

relative fact. See FACT.

relative nullity. See NULLITY.

relative power. See POWER.

relator. 1. The real party in interest in whose name a state or an attorney general brings a lawsuit. See EX REL. 2. The applicant for a writ, esp. a writ of mandamus, prohibition, or quo warranto. 3. A person who furnishes information on which a civil or criminal case is based; an informer.

relatrix (ri-lay-triks). Archaic. A female relator.

relaxatio (ree-lak-say-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. An instrument by which one relinquishes a right or claim to another; a release.

release, n. 1. Liberation from an obligation, duty, or demand; the act of giving up a right or claim to the person against whom it could have been enforced <the employee asked for a release from the noncomplete agreement>. — Also termed discharge; surrender. 2. The relinquishment or concession of a right, title, or claim. 3. A written discharge, acquittance, or receipt <Jones signed the release before accepting the cash from Hawkins>. 4. A written authorization or permission for publication <the newspaper obtained a release from the witness before printing his picture on the front page>. 5. The act of conveying an estate or right to another, or of legally disposing of it <the release of the easement on February 14>. 6. A deed or document effecting a conveyance <the legal description in the release was defective>. See deed of release under DEED. 7. The action of freeing or the fact of being freed from restraint or confinement <he became a model citizen after his release from prison>. 8. A document giving formal discharge from custody <after the sheriff signed the release, the prisoner was free to go>. — release, vb.

conditional release. 1. A discharge from an obligation based on some condition, the failure of which defeats the release. 2. An early discharge of a prison inmate, who is then subject to the rules and regulations of parole.

partial release. A release of a portion of a creditor's claims against property; esp., a mortgagee's release of specified parcels covered by a blanket mortgage.

release clause. Real estate. 1. A blanket-mortgage provision that enables the mortgagor to obtain a partial release of a specific parcel of land from the mortgage upon paying more than the pro rata portion of the loan. • Mortgagees commonly include a clause that disallows a partial release if the mortgagor is in default on any part of the mortgage. 2. A purchase-agreement provision that allows a seller who has accepted an offer containing a contingency to continue to market the property and accept other offers. • If the seller accepts another buyer's offer, the original buyer typically has a specified time (such as 72 hours) to waive the contingency (such as the sale of the buyer's present house) or to release the seller from the agreement.

releasee. 1. One who is released, either physically or by contractual discharge. 2. One to whom an estate is released.

release of mortgage. A written document that discharges a mortgage upon full payment by the borrower and that is publicly recorded to show that the borrower has full equity in the property.

release on recognizance. The pretrial release of an arrested person who promises, usu. in writing but without supplying a surety or posting bond, to appear for trial at a later date. — Also termed release on own recognizance. — Abbr. ROR.

release to uses. Conveyance of property, by deed of release, by one party to a second party for the use of the first party or a third party. See deed of release under DEED; STATUTE OF USES.

releasor. One who releases property or a claim to another. — Also spelled releaser.

relegatio (rel-ə-gay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin relegare "to send away"] Roman law. Temporary or permanent banishment of a citizen or condemned criminal without the full loss of the person's civil rights or property. Cf. DEPORTATIO.

"Relegatio. The expulsion of a citizen ordered either by an administrative act of a magistrate or by judgment in a criminal trial. In the latter case the relegatio was sometimes combined with additional punishments, such as confiscation of the whole or of a part of the property of the condemned person, loss of Roman citizenship, confinement in a certain place. A milder form of relegatio was the exclusion of the wrongdoer from residence in a specified territory. Illicit return was punished with the death penalty." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 673 (1953).

relegation, n. 1. Banishment or exile, esp. a temporary one. 2. Assignment or delegation. — relegate, vb.

relevance. The fact, quality, or state of being relevant; relation or pertinence to the issue at hand. — Also termed relevancy.

relevancy. See RELEVANCE.

relevant, adj. Logically connected and tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue; having appreciable probative value — that is, rationally tending to persuade people of the probability or possibility of some alleged fact. Cf. MATERIAL.

"The word 'relevant' means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other that according to the common course of events one either taken by itself or in connection with other facts proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or non-existence of the other." James Fitzjames Stephen, A Digest of the Law of Evidence 2 (4th ed. 1881).

relevant art. See ART.

relevant evidence. See EVIDENCE.

relevant market. See MARKET.

reliance, n. Dependence or trust by a person, esp. when combined with action based on that dependence or trust. — rely, vb.

detrimental reliance. Reliance by one party on the acts or representations of another, causing a worsening of the first party's position. • Detrimental reliance may serve as a substitute for consideration and thus make a promise enforceable as a contract. See promissory estoppel under ESTOPPEL.

reliance damages. See DAMAGES.

reliance interest. See INTEREST (2).

reliance-loss damages. See DAMAGES.

relict (rel-ikt). A widow.

relicta verificatione (ri-lik-tə ver-ə-fi-kay-shee-oh-nee). [Latin "his pleading being abandoned"] Hist. A confession of judgment accompanied by a withdrawal of the plea. See COGNOVIT ACTIONEM.

reliction (ri-lik-shən). 1. A process by which a river or stream shifts its location, causing the recession of water from its bank. 2. The alteration of a boundary line because of the gradual removal of land by a river or stream. See ACCRETION; DERELICTION.

relief. 1. A payment made by an heir of a feudal tenant to the feudal lord for the privilege of succeeding to the ancestor's tenancy.

"A mesne lord could, upon the death of his tenant, accept the tenant's heir as tenant; but he was not required to do so. When he did accept his deceased tenant's heir as tenant, it was typically because the heir had paid the mesne lord a substantial sum (known as a relief) for the re-grant of the tenancy." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 8 (2d ed. 1984).

2. Aid or assistance given to those in need, esp., financial aid provided by the state. 3. The redress or benefit, esp. equitable in nature (such as an injunction or specific performance), that a party asks of a court. — Also termed remedy. Cf. REMEDY.

affirmative relief. The relief sought by a defendant by raising a counterclaim or cross-claim that could have been maintained independently of the plaintiff's action.

alternative relief. Judicial relief that is mutually exclusive with another form of judicial relief. • In pleading, a party may request alternative relief, as by asking for both specific performance and damages. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). Cf. ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

coercive relief. Active judicial relief, either legal or equitable, that the government will enforce.

interim relief. Relief that is granted on a preliminary basis before an order finally disposing of a request for relief.

therapeutic relief. The relief, esp. in a settlement, that requires the defendant to take remedial measures as opposed to paying damages. • An example is a defendant-corporation (in an employment-discrimination suit) that agrees to undergo sensitivity training. — Often shortened to therapeutics.

religion. A system of faith and worship usu. involving belief in a supreme being and usu. containing a moral or ethical code; esp., such a system recognized and practiced by a particular church, sect, or denomination. • In construing the protections under the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause, courts have interpreted the term religion quite broadly to include a wide variety of theistic and nontheistic beliefs.

religion, freedom of. See FREEDOM OF RELIGION.

Religion Clause. In the Bill of Rights, the provision stating that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." U.S. Const. amend. I.

religious corporation. See CORPORATION.

religious liberty. See LIBERTY.

relinquishment, n. The abandonment of a right or thing. — relinquish, vb.

reliqua (rel-ə-kwə). [Latin] Civil law. The remainder of a debt after balancing or liquidating an account; money left unpaid.

relitigate, vb. To litigate (a case or matter) again or anew <relitigate the issue in federal court>. — relitigation, n.

relocatio (ree-loh-kay-shee-oh). [Latin] Civil law. The renewal of a lease; RECONDUCTION (1).

relocation. 1. Removal and establishment of someone or something in a new place. 2. Mining law. Appropriation of a new tract of land for a mining claim, as by an owner who wishes to change the boundaries of the original tract or by a stranger who wishes to claim an abandoned or forfeited tract. 3. Civil law. RECONDUCTION (1). Cf. TACIT RELOCATION.

rem. See IN REM.

remainder. Property. 1. A future interest arising in a third person — that is, someone other than the creator of the estate or the creator's heirs — who is intended to take after the natural termination of the preceding estate. ● For example, if a grant is "to A for life, and then to B," B's future interest is a remainder. Cf. EXECUTORY INTEREST; REVERSION; POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER.

"Whether a remainder is vested or contingent depends upon the language employed. If the conditional element is incorporated into the description of, or the gift to the remainder-man, then the remainder is contingent; but if, after words giving a vested interest, a clause is added divesting it, the remainder is vested. Thus, on a devise to A. for life, remainder to his children, but if any child dies in the lifetime of A. his share to go to those who survive, the share of each child is vested, subject to be divested by his death. But on a devise to A. for life, remainder to such of his children as survive him, the remainder is contingent." John Chipman Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities 66 (1886).

2. The property in a decedent's estate that is not otherwise specifically devised or bequeathed in a will.

"Under the names of 'remainders' and 'executory limitations,' various classes of interests in land could be created in expectancy, either at the Common Law or under the Statute of Uses. The differences between the two classes were highly technical; and the learning involved in acquiring a knowledge of the rules of determining them [is] quite out of proportion to the value obtained." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 263 (P.B. Fairsted ed., 6th ed. 1967).

accelerated remainder. A remainder that has passed to the remainderman, as when the gift to the preceding beneficiary fails.

alternative remainder. A remainder in which the disposition of property is to take effect only if another disposition does not take effect.

charitable remainder. A remainder, usu. from a life estate, that is given to a charity; for example, "to Jane for life, and then to the American Red Cross."

contingent remainder. A remainder that is either given to an unascertained person or made subject to a condition precedent. ● An example is "to A for life, and then, if B has married before A dies, to B." — Also termed executory remainder; remainder subject to a condition precedent.

"Unlike a vested remainder, a contingent remainder is either subject to a condition precedent (in addition to the natural expiration of a prior estate), or owned by unascertainable persons, or both. But the contingent remainder, like the vested remainder, 'waits patiently' for possession. It is so created that it can become a present estate (if ever it does) immediately upon, and no sooner than, the natural expiration of particular estates that stand in front of it and were created simultaneously with it." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 73 (2d ed. 1984).

cross-remainder. A future interest that results when particular estates are given to two or more persons in different parcels of land, or in the same land in undivided shares, and the remainders of all the estates are made to vest in the survivor or survivors. ● Two examples of devises giving rise to cross-remainders are (1) "to A and B for life, with the remainder to the survivor and her heirs," and (2) "Blackacre to A and Whiteacre to B, with the remainder of A's estate to B on A's failure of issue, and the remainder of B's estate to A on B's failure of issue." ● If no tenants or issue survive, the remainder vests in a third party (sometimes known as the ulterior remainderman). Each tenant in common has a reciprocal, or cross, remainder in the share of the others. This type of remainder could not be created by deed unless expressly stated. It could, however, be implied in a will.

"By a will also an estate may pass by mere implication, without any express words to direct its course. . . . So also, where a devise of black-acre to A and of white-acre to B in tail, and if they both die without issue, then to C in fee: here A and B have cross remainders by implication, and on the failure of either's issue, the other or his issue shall take the whole; and C's remainder over shall be postponed till the issue of both shall fail." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 381 (1766).

defeasible remainder. A vested remainder that will be eliminated if a condition subsequent occurs. • An example is "to A for life, and then to B, but if B ever sells liquor on the land, then to C." — Also termed remainder subject to divestment.

executed remainder. See vested remainder.

executory remainder. See contingent remainder.

indefeasible remainder. A vested remainder that is not subject to a condition subsequent. — Also termed indefeasibly vested remainder.

remainder subject to a condition precedent. See contingent remainder.

remainder subject to divestment. See defeasible remainder.

remainder subject to open. A vested remainder that is given to one person but that may later have to be shared with others. • An example is "to A for life, and then equally to all of B's children." — Also termed remainder subject to partial divestment.

vested remainder. A remainder that is given to an ascertained person and that is not subject to a condition precedent. • An example is "to A for life, and then to B." — Also termed executed remainder.

remainder bequest. See residuary bequest under BEQUEST.

remainderer. See REMAINDERMAN.

remainder interest. The property that passes to a beneficiary after the expiration of an intervening income interest. • For example, if a grantor places real estate in trust with income to A for life and remainder to B upon A's death, then B has a remainder interest.

remainderman. A person who holds or is entitled to receive a remainder. — Also termed remainderer; remainderperson; remainor.

remainder subject to a condition precedent. See contingent remainder under REMAINDER.

remainder subject to divestment. See defeasible remainder under REMAINDER.

remainder subject to open. See REMAINDER.

remainder subject to partial divestment. See remainder subject to open under REMAINDER.

remainor. See REMAINDERMAN.

remake rights. Copyright. The rights to produce one or more additional movies or screenplays based on what is substantially the same story as is contained in the original movie or screenplay for which the rights have been granted.

remand (ri-mand also ree-mand), n. 1. The act or an instance of sending something (such as a case, claim, or person) back for further action. 2. An order remanding a case, claim, or person.

fourth-sentence remand. In a claim for social-security benefits, a court's decision affirming, reversing, or modifying the decision of the Commissioner of Social Security. • This type of remand is called a fourth-sentence remand because it is based on the fourth sentence of 42 USCA § 405(g): "The court shall have power to enter, upon the pleadings and transcript of the record, a judgment affirming, modifying, or reversing the decision of the Commissioner of Social Security, with or without remanding the cause for a rehearing." See Melkonyan v. Sullivan, 501 U.S. 89, 111 S.Ct. 2157 (1991).

sixth-sentence remand. In a claim for social-security benefits, a court's decision that the claim should be reheard by the Commissioner of Social Security because new evidence is available, which was not available before, that might change the outcome of the proceeding. • This type of remand is called a sixth-sentence remand because it is based on the sixth sentence of 42 USCA § 405(g): "The court may, on motion of the Commissioner of Social Security made for good cause shown before the Commissioner files the Commissioner's answer, remand the case to the Commissioner of Social Security for further action by the Commissioner of Social Security, and it may at any time order additional evidence to be taken before the Commissioner of Social Security, but only upon a showing that there is new evidence which is material and that there is good cause for the failure to incorporate such evidence into the record in a prior proceeding" See Melkonyan v. Sullivan, 501 U.S. 89, 111 S.Ct. 2157 (1991).

remand (ri-mand), vb. 1. To send (a case or claim) back to the court or tribunal from which it came for some further action <the appellate court reversed the trial court's opinion and remanded the case for new trial>. Cf. REMOVAL (2). 2. To recommit (an accused person) to custody after a preliminary examination <the magistrate, after denying bail, remanded the defendant to custody>.

remanentia (rem-ə-nen-shee-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. A remainder or perpetuity.

remanent pro defectu emptorum (rem-ə-nənt proh di-fek-t[y]oo emp-tor-əm). [Latin] Hist. Remains unsold for want of buyers. ● This language was used in a return of a writ of execution when the sheriff could not sell the seized property.

remanet (rem-ə-net). 1. A case or proceeding whose hearing has been postponed. 2. A remainder or remnant.

remargining, n. Securities. The act or process of depositing additional cash or collateral with a broker when the equity in a margin account falls to an insufficient level. — remargin, vb. See margin account under ACCOUNT.

remediable, adj. Capable of being remedied, esp. by law <remediable wrongs>. — remediability, n.

remedial, adj. 1. Affording or providing a remedy; providing the means of obtaining redress . 2. Intended to correct, remove, or lessen a wrong, fault, or defect . 3. Of or relating to a means of enforcing an existing substantive right; procedural .

remedial action. Environmental law. An action intended to bring about or restore long-term environmental quality; esp., under CERCLA, a measure intended to permanently alleviate pollution when a hazardous substance has been released or might be released into the environment, so as to prevent or minimize any further release of hazardous substances and thereby minimize the risk to public health or to the environment. 42 USCA § 9601(24); 40 CFR § 300.6. — Also termed remedy. Cf. CERCLA; REMOVAL ACTION.

remedial enforcement. See secondary right under RIGHT.

remedial law. 1. A law providing a means to enforce rights or redress injuries. 2. A law passed to correct or modify an existing law; esp., a law that gives a party a new or different remedy when the existing remedy, if any, is inadequate.

remedial liability. See LIABILITY.

remedial promise. See PROMISE.

remedial statute. See STATUTE.

remedial trust. See constructive trust under TRUST.

remedies. The field of law dealing with the means of enforcing rights and redressing wrongs.

remedy, n. 1. The means of enforcing a right or preventing or redressing a wrong; legal or equitable relief. 2. REMEDIAL ACTION. — remedy, vb. Cf. RELIEF.

"A remedy is anything a court can do for a litigant who has been wronged or is about to be wronged. The two most common remedies are judgments that plaintiffs are entitled to collect sums of money from defendants and orders to defendants to refrain from their wrongful conduct or to undo its consequences. The court decides under the substantive law whether the litigant has been wronged; it conducts its inquiry in accordance with the procedural law. The law of remedies falls somewhere between substance and procedure, distinct from both but overlapping with both." Douglas Laycock, Modern American Remedies 1 (1985).

adequate remedy at law. A legal remedy (such as an award of damages) that provides sufficient relief to the petitioning party, thus preventing the party from obtaining equitable relief.

administrative remedy. A nonjudicial remedy provided by an administrative agency. ● Ordinarily, if an administrative remedy is available, it must be exhausted before a court will hear the case. See EXHAUSTION OF REMEDIES.

concurrent remedy. One of two or more legal actions available to redress a wrong.

cumulative remedy. A remedy available to a party in addition to another remedy that still remains in force.

equitable remedy. A nonmonetary remedy, such as an injunction or specific performance, obtained when monetary damages cannot adequately redress the injury. See IRREPARABLE-INJURY RULE.

extrajudicial remedy. A remedy not obtained from a court, such as repossession. — Also termed self-help remedy.

extraordinary remedy. A remedy — such as a writ of mandamus or habeas corpus — not available to a party unless necessary to preserve a right that cannot be protected by a standard legal or equitable remedy.

judicial remedy. A remedy granted by a court; esp., a tort remedy that is either ordinary (as in an action for damages) or extraordinary (as in an equitable suit for an injunction).

legal remedy. A remedy available in a court of law, as distinguished from a remedy available only in equity. • After the merger of law and equity, this distinction became no longer legally relevant.

provisional remedy. 1. A restraining order or injunctive relief pending the disposition of an action; a temporary remedy, such as attachment, incidental to the primary action and available to a party while the action is pending. 2. An equitable proceeding before judgment to provide for the postjudgment safety and preservation of property.

remedy over. A remedy that arises from a right of indemnification or subrogation. • For example, if a city is liable for injuries caused by a defect in a street, the city has a “remedy over” against the person whose act or negligence caused the defect.

self-help remedy. See extrajudicial remedy.

specific remedy. A remedy for breach of contract whereby the injured party is awarded the very performance that was contractually promised, as when the court orders a defaulting seller of goods to deliver the specified goods to the buyer (as opposed to paying damages).

speedy remedy. A remedy (such as a restraining order) that, under the circumstances, can be pursued expeditiously before the aggrieved party has incurred substantial detriment.

substitutional remedy. A remedy for breach of contract intended to give the promisee something as a replacement for the promised performance, as when the court orders a defaulting seller of goods to pay the buyer damages (as opposed to delivering the goods).

remedy, mutuality of. See MUTUALITY OF REMEDY.

réméré (ray-may-ray), n. [French] The right of repurchase.

REMIC (rem-ik or ree-mik). abbr. REAL-ESTATE-MORTGAGE INVESTMENT CONDUIT.

remise (ri-miz), vb. To give up, surrender, or release (a right, interest, etc.) <the quitclaim deed provides that the grantor remises any rights in the property>.

remission. 1. A cancellation or extinguishment of all or part of a financial obligation; a release of a debt or claim.

conventional remission. Civil law. A remission expressly granted to a debtor by a creditor having capacity to alienate.

tacit remission. Civil law. A remission arising by operation of law, as when a creditor surrenders an original title to the debtor.

2. A pardon granted for an offense. 3. Relief from a forfeiture or penalty. 4. A diminution or abatement of the symptoms of a disease.

remit, vb. 1. To pardon or forgive <the wife could not remit her husband's infidelity>. 2. To abate or slacken; to mitigate <the receipt of money damages remitted the embarrassment of being fired>. 3. To refer (a matter for decision) to some authority, esp. to send back (a case) to a lower court <the appellate court remitted the case to the trial court for further factual determinations>. See REMAND. 4. To send or put back to a previous condition or position . 5. To transmit (as money) <upon receiving the demand letter, she promptly remitted the amount due>. — remissible (for senses 1–4), adj. — remittable (for sense 5), adj.

remittance. 1. A sum of money sent to another as payment for goods or services. 2. An instrument (such as a check) used for sending money. 3. The action or process of sending money to another person or place.

remittance advice. See ADVICE.

remittee. One to whom payment is sent.

quit rent. See QUIT RENT.

rent charge. The right to receive an annual sum from the income of land, usu. in perpetuity, and to retake possession if the payments are in arrears. — Also spelled rent-charge; rentcharge. — Also termed fee-farm rent.

"Rent-charge is a rent with liberty to distrain. As when a man seised of land granteth by a deed poll, or by indenture, a yearly rent going out of the same land to another in fee or fee-tail, or for a term of life, etc. with clause of distress, or maketh a feoffment in fee by indenture, reserving to himself a certain yearly rent, with clause of distress." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 155 (1759).

"A rentcharge is an annual or periodic payment charged upon, and payable by the owner of, land. Unlike a rent service, in the case of a rentcharge there is no tenure or privity of estate between the parties. The owner of a rentcharge has no tenurial relationship with the land upon which it is charged. A rentcharge is a species of incorporeal property, but, unlike an easement, is incorporeal property in gross, being enjoyed by the owner personally and not in the capacity of proprietor of land." Peter Butt, Land Law 330 (2d ed. 1988).

rent seck. A rent reserved by deed but without any clause of distress. — Also spelled rent-seck. — Also termed dry rent.

rent service. A rent with some corporeal service incident to it (as by fealty) and with a right of distress.

3. Civil law. A contract by which one party conveys to another party a tract of land or other immovable property, to be held by the other party as owner and in perpetuity, in exchange for payment of an annual sum of money or quantity of fruits. See FRUIT (3). — Also termed rent of lands. 4. The difference between the actual return from a commodity or service and the cost of supplying it; the difference between revenue and opportunity cost. — rent, vb.

rent service. See RENT (2).

rents, issues, and profits. The total income or profit arising from the ownership or possession of property.

rent strike. A refusal by a group of tenants to pay rent until grievances with the landlord are heard or settled.

renunciation (ri-nən-see-ay-shən), n. 1. The express or tacit abandonment of a right without transferring it to another. 2. Criminal law. Complete and voluntary abandonment of criminal purpose — sometimes coupled with an attempt to thwart the activity's success — before a crime is committed. ● Renunciation can be an affirmative defense to attempt, conspiracy, and the like. Model Penal Code § 5.01(4). — Also termed withdrawal; abandonment. 3. Wills & estates. The act of waiving a right under a will and claiming instead a statutory share. See RIGHT OF ELECTION. — renounce, vb. — renunciative, renunciatory, adj.

renvoi (ren-voy), n. [French "sending back"] 1. The doctrine under which a court in resorting to foreign law adopts as well the foreign law's conflict-of-laws principles, which may in turn refer the court back to the law of the forum. 2. The problem arising when one state's rule on conflict of laws refers a case to the law of another state, and that second state's conflict-of-law rule refers the case either back to the law of the first state or to a third state. See CONFLICT OF LAWS. 3. RECONDUCTION (2).

REO. abbr. REAL ESTATE OWNED.

reo absente (ree-oh ab-sten-tee). [Latin] The defendant being absent; the absence of the defendant.

reorganization, n. 1. Bankruptcy. A financial restructuring of a corporation, esp. in the repayment of debts, under a plan created by a trustee and approved by a court. See CHAPTER 11.

haircut reorganization. A restructuring of the indebtedness that remains after a creditor forgives a portion of the debtor's obligation.

2. Tax. A restructuring of a corporation, as by a merger or recapitalization, in order to improve its tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code. • The Code classifies the various types of reorganizations with different letters. IRC (26 USCA) § 368(a)(1). Cf. RECAPITALIZATION.

A reorganization. A reorganization that involves a merger or consolidation under a specific state statute.

B reorganization. A reorganization in which one corporation exchanges its voting shares for another corporation's voting shares.

C reorganization. A reorganization in which one corporation exchanges its voting shares for substantially all the assets of another corporation.

D reorganization. A reorganization in which the corporation transfers some or all of its assets to another corporation that is controlled by the transferor or its shareholders, and then the stock of the transferee corporation is distributed.

E reorganization. A reorganization that involves a recapitalization.

F reorganization. A reorganization that involves a mere change in the identity, form, or place of organization of a corporation.

G reorganization. A reorganization that involves a transfer of all or part of the corporation's assets to another corporation in a bankruptcy or similar proceeding.

reorganization bond. See adjustment bond under BOND (3).

reorganization plan. Bankruptcy. A plan of restructuring submitted by a corporation for approval by the court in a Chapter 11 case. See CHAPTER 11.

rep. abbr. 1. REPORT. 2. REPORTER. 3. REPRESENTATIVE. 4. REPUBLIC.

reparable injury. See INJURY.

reparation (rep-ə-ray-shən). 1. The act of making amends for a wrong. 2. (usu. pl.) Compensation for an injury or wrong, esp. for wartime damages or breach of an international obligation.

reparative injunction. See INJUNCTION.

replacement insurance. See INSURANCE.

replead, vb. 1. To plead again or anew; to file a new pleading, esp. to correct a defect in an earlier pleading. 2. To make a repleader.

repleader (ree-plee-dər). Common-law pleading. A court order or judgment — issued on the motion of a party who suffered an adverse verdict — requiring the parties to file new pleadings because of some defect in the original pleadings. — Also termed judgment of repleader.

replegiare (ri-plee-jee-air-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To take back on pledge or surety; to replevy.

repleviable (ri-plev-ee-ə-bəl), adj. Capable of being replevied; recoverable by replevin <repleviable property>. — Also spelled replevisable (ri-plev-ə-sə-bəl). Cf. IRREPLEVIABLE.

replevin (ri-plev-in), n. 1. An action for the repossession of personal property wrongfully taken or detained by the defendant, whereby the plaintiff gives security for and holds the property until the court decides who owns it. 2. A writ obtained from a court authorizing the retaking of personal property wrongfully taken or detained. — Also termed (in sense 2) writ of replevin. Cf. DETINUE; TROVER.

“Replevin is a remedy ground and granted upon a distress, being a re-deliverance of the thing distrained to remain with the first possessor, on security or pledges given by him to try the right with the distrainer, and to answer him in a course of law.” The Pocket Lawyer and Family Conveyancer 105 (3d ed. 1833).

“The action of replevin lies, where specific personal property has been wrongfully taken and is wrongfully detained, to recover possession of the property, together with damages for its detention. To support the action it is necessary: (a) That the property shall be personal. (b) That the plaintiff, at the time of suit, shall be entitled to the immediate possession. (c) That (at common law) the defendant shall have wrongfully taken the property (replevin in the cepit). But, by statute in most states, the action will now also lie where the property is wrongfully detained, though it was lawfully obtained in the first instance (replevin in the detinet). (d) That the property shall be wrongfully detained by the defendant at the time of suit.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 49, at 120 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

personal replevin. At common law, an action to replevy a person out of prison or out of another’s custody. • Personal replevin has been largely superseded by the writ of habeas corpus as a means of investigating the legality of an imprisonment. See HABEAS CORPUS.

replevin in cepit (in see-pit). An action for the repossession of property that is both wrongfully taken and wrongfully detained.

replevin in detinet (in det-i-net). An action for the repossession of property that is rightfully taken but wrongfully detained.

replevin, vb. Archaic. REPLEVY.

replevy bond. See replevin bond under BOND (2). repliant (ri-plit-ənt). A party who makes a replication (i.e., a common-law reply). — Also spelled replicant.

replicare (rep-lə-kair-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To reply; to answer a defendant’s plea.

replicatio (rep-lə-kay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. The plaintiff’s answer to the defendant’s exception or plea; a replication.

replication (rep-lə-kay-shən). A plaintiff’s or complainant’s reply to a defendant’s plea or answer; REPLY (2).

anticipatory replication. Equity pleading. The denial in an original bill of defensive matters that the defendant might rely on. • A defendant who relies on the anticipated defense must traverse the anticipatory matter in addition to setting up the defense.

general replication. Equity pleading. A replication that consists of a general denial of the defendant’s plea or answer and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill.

replication de injuria. Common-law pleading. A traverse occurring only in the replication whereby the plaintiff is permitted to traverse the whole substance of a plea consisting merely of legal excuse, when the matter does not involve a title or interest in land, authority of law, authority of fact derived from the opposing party, or any matter of record. — Also termed replication de injuria sua propria, absque tali causa.

replication per fraudem. Common-law pleading. A replication asserting that the discharge pleaded by the defendant was obtained by fraud.

special replication. Equity pleading. A replication that puts in issue a new fact to counter a new matter raised in the defendant’s plea or answer.

reply, n. 1. Civil procedure. In federal practice, the plaintiff’s response to the defendant’s counterclaim (or, by court order, to the defendant’s or a third party’s answer). Fed. R. Civ. P. 7(a). 2. Common-law pleading. The plaintiff’s response to the defendant’s plea or answer. • The reply is the plaintiff’s second pleading, and it is followed by the defendant's rejoinder. — Also termed (in sense 2) replication. — reply, vb.

insider report. A monthly report that must be filed with the SEC when more than 10% of a company's stock is traded.

2. A written account of a court proceeding and judicial decision <the law clerk sent the court's report to counsel for both sides>.

official report. (usu. pl.) The governmentally approved set of reported cases within a given jurisdiction.

"[I]t may justly be said that all reports are in a sense 'official,' or that to use the term 'official reports' as referring to any particular series of reports is a misnomer, for it is certainly misleading. The mere fact that each state authorizes or requires publication of reports of its Supreme Court decisions, and, to insure such publication, agrees to purchase a stated number of each volume of the reports, cannot be said to give such a series pre-eminence as an 'official' publication." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 33 (3d ed. 1914).

3. (usu. pl.) A published volume of judicial decisions by a particular court or group of courts <U.S. Reports>. • Generally, these decisions are first printed in temporary paperback volumes, and then printed in hardbound reporter volumes. Law reports may be either official (published by a government entity) or unofficial (published by a private publisher). Court citations frequently include the names of both the official and unofficial reports. — Also termed reporter; law report; law reporter. Cf. ADVANCE SHEETS. 4. (usu. pl.) A collection of administrative decisions by one or more administrative agencies. — Abbr. rep. — report, vb.

reporter. 1. A person responsible for making and publishing a report; esp., a lawyer-consultant who prepares drafts of official or semi-official writings such as court rules or Restatements <the reporter to the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules explained the various amendments>. 2. REPORTER OF DECISIONS. 3. REPORT (3) <Supreme Court Reporter>. — Abbr. rep.; rptr.

"It may not come amiss to remark that the National Report System is usually spoken of as the 'Reporters,' and one of the component parts of that system is in like manner spoken of as a 'Reporter.' Wherever, in this or the succeeding chapters of this work, the word is used with a capital, it refers to one or more of the parts of the National Reporter System. When the word 'reporter' is used without capitalization, it refers to the person who reports or edits the cases in any series of reports to which reference is being made." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 37 (3d ed. 1914).

reporter of decisions. The person responsible for publishing a court's opinions. • The reporter of decisions often has duties that include verifying citations, correcting spelling and punctuation, and suggesting minor editorial improvements before judicial opinions are released or published. — Often shortened to reporter. — Also termed court reporter.

reporter's privilege. See journalist's privilege (1) under PRIVILEGE (3).

reporter's record. See TRANSCRIPT.

reporter's syllabus. See HEADNOTE.

repose (ri-pohz), n. 1. Cessation of activity; temporary rest. 2. A statutory period after which an action cannot be brought in court, even if it expires before the plaintiff suffers any injury. See STATUTE OF REPOSE.

repository (ri-poz-ə-tor-ee). A place where something is deposited or stored; a warehouse or storehouse.

repossession, n. The act or an instance of re-taking property; esp., a seller's re-taking of goods sold on credit when the buyer has failed to pay for them. — Often shortened to repo. — repossess, vb. Cf. FORECLOSURE.

representation, n. 1. A presentation of fact — either by words or by conduct — made to induce someone to act, esp. to enter into a contract <the buyer relied on the seller's represensation that the roof did not leak>. Cf. MISREPRESENTATION.

"Representation . . . may introduce terms into a contract and affect performance: or it may induce a contract and so affect the intention of one of the parties, and the formation of the contract. . . . At common law, . . . if a representation did not afterwards become a substantive part of the contract, its untruth (save in certain excepted cases and apart always from fraud) was immaterial. But if it did, it might be one of two things: (1) it might be regarded by the parties as a vital term going to the root of the contract (when it is usually called a 'condition'); and in this case its untruth entitles the injured party to repudiate the whole contract; or (2) it might be a term in the nature only of an independent subsidiary promise (when it is usually called a 'warranty'), which is indeed a part of the contract, but does not go to the root of it; in this case its untruth only gives rise to an action ex contractu for damages, and does not entitle the injured party to repudiate the whole contract." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 218, 222 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

affirmative representation. A representation asserting the existence of certain facts pertaining to a given subject matter.

false representation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

material representation. A representation that relates directly to the matter in issue or that actually causes an event to occur (such as a party's relying on the representation in entering into a contract). • Material representation is a necessary element of an action for fraud.

promissory representation. A representation about what one will do in the future; esp., a representation made by an insured about what will happen during the time of coverage, stated as a matter of expectation and amounting to an enforceable promise.

2. The act or an instance of standing for or acting on behalf of another, esp. by a lawyer on behalf of a client <Clarence Darrow's representation of Mr. Scopes>. 3. The fact of a litigant's having such a close alignment of interests with another person that the other is considered as having been present in the litigation <the named plaintiff provided adequate representation for the absent class members>. See ADEQUATE REPRESENTATION. 4. The assumption by an heir of the rights and obligations of his or her predecessor <each child takes a share by representation>. See PER STIRPES. — represent, vb.

representation, estoppel by. See estoppel by representation under ESTOPPEL.

representation election. See ELECTION.

representative, n. 1. One who stands for or acts on behalf of another <the owner was the football team's representative at the labor negotiations>. See AGENT.

accredited representative. A person with designated authority to act on behalf of another person, group, or organization, usu. by being granted that authority by law or by the rules of the group or organization <as an officer of the union, she was the accredited representative of the employees in the wage dispute>.

class representative. A person who sues on behalf of a group of plaintiffs in a class action. — Also termed named plaintiff. See CLASS ACTION.

independent personal representative. See personal representative.

lawful representative. 1. A legal heir. 2. An executor or administrator. 3. Any other legal representative.

legal-personal representative. 1. When used by a testator referring to personal property, an executor or administrator. 2. When used by a testator referring to real property, one to whom the real estate passes immediately upon the testator's death. 3. When used concerning the death of a seaman, the public administrator, executor, or appointed administrator in the seaman's state of residence.

personal representative. A person who manages the legal affairs of another because of incapacity or death, such as the executor of an estate. — Also termed independent personal representative; legal representative.

registered representative. A person approved by the SEC and stock exchanges to sell securities to the public. — Also termed customer's man; customer's person.

2. A member of a legislature, esp. of the lower house <one senator and one representative attended the rally>. — Abbr. rep.

representative action. 1. CLASS ACTION. 2. DERIVATIVE ACTION (1).

representative capacity. The position of one standing or acting for another, esp. through delegated authority <an agent acting in a representative capacity for the principal>.

representee. One to whom a representation is made.

"First, where the representor can show that he was not negligent, he will not be liable under the 1967 Act; and secondly, where the representee wants to claim damages at the contractual rate, for loss of his bargain, it may be that the Misrepresentation Act will not suffice." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 165 (3d ed. 1981).

representor. One who makes a representation.

"[I]t is arguable that even where a contracting party does not intend to guarantee the accuracy of what he says, the other party is at least entitled to assume that due care has been taken by the representor." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 309 (3d ed. 1981).

repressive tax. See sin tax under TAX.

reprieve (ri-preev), n. Temporary postponement of the execution of a criminal sentence, esp. a death sentence. — reprieve, vb. Cf. COMMUTATION (2); PARDON.

"The term reprieve is derived from repandre, to keep back, and signifies the withdrawing of the sentence for an interval of time, and operates in delay of execution." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 757 (2d ed. 1826).

reprimand, n. In professional responsibility, a form of disciplinary action — imposed after trial or formal charges — that declares the lawyer's conduct improper but does not limit his or her right to practice law. — reprimand, vb.

private reprimand. A reprimand that is not published but instead communicated only to the lawyer, or that is published without identifying the lawyer by name.

public reprimand. A reprimand that is published, usu. in a bar journal or legal newspaper.

reprisal (ri-pri-zəl). 1. (often pl.) Int'l law. The use of force, short of war, against another country to redress an injury caused by that country.

"'Reprisals' is a word with a long history, and modern writers are not agreed on the meaning which should be given to it today. Literally and historically it denotes the seizing of property or persons by way of retaliation Reprisals when they are taken today are taken by a state, but some writers would still limit the word to acts of taking or withholding the property of a foreign state or its nationals, for example by an embargo, whilst others would abandon the historical associations and use it to denote any kind of coercive action not amounting to war whereby a state attempts to secure satisfaction from another for some wrong which the latter has committed against it." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 321-22 (5th ed. 1955).

general reprisal. A reprisal by which a nation directs all its military officers and citizens to redress an injury caused by another nation. • An example is a command to seize the property of the offending nation wherever it is found.

negative reprisal. A reprisal by which a nation refuses to perform an obligation to another nation, such as the fulfillment of a treaty.

positive reprisal. A reprisal by which a nation forcibly seizes another nation's property or persons.

special reprisal. A reprisal by which a nation authorizes an aggrieved private citizen to redress an injury caused by another nation. • An example is an authorization for a private citizen to seize a particular vessel of the offending nation. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

2. (often pl.) Int'l law. An act of forceful retaliation for injury or attack by another country; formerly, in war, the killing of prisoners in response to an enemy's war crimes (now unlawful). Cf. RETORSION. 3. Any act or instance of retaliation, as by an employer against a complaining employee.

reprise (ri-priz), n. An annual deduction, duty, or payment out of a manor or estate, such as an annuity.

reprobation (rep-rə-bay-shən). The act of raising an objection or exception, as to the competency of a witness or the sufficiency of evidence. — reprobate (rep-rə-bayt), vb. — reprobationary (rep-rə-bay-shə-ner-ee), reprobative (rep-rə-bay-tiv), adj.

reprobator (rep-rə-bay-tər). Scots law. Hist. A proceeding to disqualify a witness or to invalidate the testimony of an objectionable witness. — Also termed action of reprobator.

reproduction right. A copyright holder's exclusive right to make copies or phonorecords of the protected work. • Unauthorized copying constitutes infringement.

reproductive rights. A person's rights relating to the control of his or her procreative activities; specif., the cluster of civil liberties relating to pregnancy, abortion, and sterilization, esp. the personal bodily rights of women in their decision whether to become pregnant or bear a child. • The phrase includes the idea of being able to make reproductive decisions free from discrimination, coercion, or violence. Human-rights scholars increasingly consider reproductive rights to be protected by international human-rights law.

republic, n. A system of government in which the people hold sovereign power and elect representatives who exercise that power. • It contrasts on the one hand with a pure democracy, in which the people or community as an organized whole wield the sovereign power of government, and on the other with the rule of one person (such as a king, emperor, czar, or sultan). — Abbr. rep. — republican, adj. Cf. DEMOCRACY.

republishment, n. 1. The act or an instance of publishing again or anew. 2. Wills & estates. Reestablishment of the validity of a previously revoked will by repeating the formalities of execution or by using a codicil. • The result is to make the old will effective from the date of republishment. — Also termed (in sense 2) revival. — republish, vb. Cf. REVIVAL (2).

repudiate, vb. 1. To reject or renounce (a duty or obligation); esp., to indicate an intention not to perform (a contract). 2. Hist. To divorce or disown (one's wife).

repudiatee (ri-pyoo-dee-ə-tee). A party to a contract that has been repudiated by the other party.

repudiation (ri-pyoo-dee-ay-shən), n. A contracting party's words or actions that indicate an intention not to perform the contract in the future; a threatened breach of contract. — repudiatory (ri-pyoo-dee-ə-tor-ee), repudiable (ri-pyoo-dee-ə-bəl), adj. Cf. REJECTION; RESCISSION.

"A repudiation is (a) a statement by the obligor to the obligee indicating that the obligor will commit a breach that would of itself give the obligee a claim for damages for total breach under § 243, or (b) a voluntary affirmative act which renders the obligor unable or apparently unable to perform without such a breach." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 250 (1981).

"Unfortunately, the terminology adopted by lawyers in this field has been neither uniform nor consistent, owing primarily to the historical difference between common law and equity, each originating in a different Court. Thus, whereas common lawyers tend to talk of repudiating a contract, equity lawyers talk of rescinding or setting aside a contract. Further inconsistency arises from the special terminology used in relation to certain special contracts. For instance, in a contract of sale of goods, we talk of the buyer rejecting the goods rather than repudiating the contract, although this usually amounts to the same thing. Further confusion arises from the fact that lawyers use the word 'repudiation' indiscriminately to mean rightful and wrongful repudiation, and it may not always be clear, at any rate to the beginner, which they mean. However, the main difficulty is the divergence between common law and equity, and this divergence is so deep-rooted that lawyers still feel that repudiation and rescission are different things. Thus most books on the law of Contract discuss the right to repudiate the contract for breach of condition in a section on Remedies, while they treat of the right to rescind a contract in the section on Misrepresentation. Indeed, so different are repudiation and rescission believed to be, that serious confusion is caused in the law of sale of goods by the fact that the Sale of Goods Act regulates the former but not the latter." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 294 (3d ed. 1981).

anticipatory repudiation. Repudiation of a contractual duty before the time for performance, giving the injured party an immediate right to damages for total breach, as well as discharging the injured party's remaining duties of performance. • This type of repudiation occurs when the promisor unequivocally disavows any intention to perform when the time for performance comes. Once the repudiation occurs, the nonrepudiating party has three options: (1) treat the repudiation as an immediate breach and sue for damages; (2) ignore the repudiation, urge the repudiator to perform, wait for the specified time of performance, and sue if the repudiating party does not perform; and (3) cancel the contract. — Also termed renunciation. See anticipatory breach under BREACH OF CONTRACT.

The first Restatement lists three actions that constitute anticipatory repudiation: "(a) a positive statement to the promisee or other person having a right under the contract, indicating that the promisor will not or cannot substantially perform his contractual duties; (b) transferring or contracting to transfer to a third person an interest in specific land, goods, or in any other thing essential for the substantial performance of his contractual duties; (c) any voluntary affirmative act which renders substantial performance of his contractual duties impossible, or apparently impossible." Restatement of Contracts § 318 (1932).

total repudiation. An unconditional refusal by a party to perform the acts required by a contract. • This type of repudiation justifies the other party in refraining from performance.

repudiator (ri-pyoo-dee-ay-tər). One who repudiates; esp., a party who repudiates a contract.

repugnancy (ri-pəg-nən-see). An inconsistency or contradiction between two or more parts of a legal instrument (such as a contract or statute).

repugnant (ri-pəg-nənt), adj. Inconsistent or irreconcilable with; contrary or contradictory to <the court's interpretation was repugnant to the express wording of the statute>.

repugnant verdict. See VERDICT.

repurchase, n. The act or an instance of buying something back or again; esp., a corporation's buying back of some or all of its stock at market price. — repurchase, vb. See REDEMPTION.

repurchase agreement. A short-term loan agreement by which one party sells a security to another party but promises to buy back the security on a specified date at a specified price. — Often shortened to repo.

repurchase price. See redemption price under PRICE.

reputation, n. The esteem in which a person is held by others. • Evidence of reputation may be introduced as proof of character whenever character evidence is admissible. Fed. R. Evid. 405. — reputational, adj.

reputational evidence. See reputation evidence under EVIDENCE.

reputation evidence. See EVIDENCE.

reputed manor. See MANOR.

request for admission. Civil procedure. In pretrial discovery, a party's written factual statement served on another party who must admit, deny, or object to the substance of the statement. • Ordinarily, many requests for admission appear in one document. The admitted statements — along with any statements not denied or objected to — will be treated by the court as established, and therefore do not have to be proved at trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 36. — Abbr. RFA. — Also termed request for admissions; request to admit.

request for instructions. Procedure. During trial, a party's written request that the court instruct the jury on the law as set forth in the request. Fed. R. Civ. P. 51. — Abbr. RFI. — Also termed request to charge.

request for production. Procedure. In pretrial discovery, a party's written request that another party provide specified documents or other tangible things for inspection and copying. Fed. R. Civ. P. 34. — Abbr. RFP. — Also termed notice to produce; demand for document inspection.

request to admit. See REQUEST FOR ADMISSION.

request to charge. See REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

required-records doctrine. The principle that the privilege against self-incrimination does not apply when one is being compelled to produce business records that are kept in accordance with government regulations and that involve public aspects. • Some courts have held that certain medical records and tax forms fall within this doctrine and are thus not protected by the privilege against self-incrimination.

required reserve. See RESERVE.

requirements contract. See CONTRACT.

requisition (rek-wə-zish-ən), n. 1. An authoritative, formal demand . 2. A governmental seizure of property <the state's requisition of the shopping center during the weather emergency>. See TAKING. — requisition, vb.

requisitionist. One who makes a formal demand (as for the performance of an obligation or the return of a fugitive). See REQUISITION (1).

requisitory letter. See LETTER OF REQUEST.

rere-county (reer-kown-tee). Hist. A subsidiary English county court held by the sheriff on the day after the regular county court. — Also spelled rere county; rier county.

res (rays or reez or rez), n. [Latin "thing"] 1. An object, interest, or status, as opposed to a person <jurisdiction of the res — the real property in Colorado>. 2. The subject matter of a trust; CORPUS (2) <the stock certificate is the res of the trust>. Pl. res.

res accessoria (rays ak-ses-or-ee-ə). [Latin] Civil law. An accessory thing; a thing that is related to a principal thing.

res adjudicata (rays ə-joo-di-kay-tə or -kah-tə). See RES JUDICATA.

resale, n. 1. The act of selling goods or property — previously sold to a buyer who breached the sales contract — to someone else. UCC § 2-706. 2. A retailer's selling of goods, previously purchased from a manufacturer or wholesaler, to consumers. — resell, vb.

resale-price maintenance. A form of price-fixing in which a manufacturer forces or persuades several different retailers to sell the manufacturer's product at the same price, thus preventing competition. • Resale-price maintenance is per se illegal under antitrust law. But a manufacturer is permitted to suggest a retail price as long as it does not compel retailers to sell at that price. See vertical price-fixing under PRICE-FIXING.

res caduca (rays kə-d[y]oo-kə). [Latin] Civil law. A fallen thing; an escheat.

resceit (ri-seet). Hist. The admittance of an interested third party to plead in a case between two others; intervention.

rescind (ri-sind), vb. 1. To abrogate or cancel (a contract) unilaterally or by agreement. 2. To make void; to repeal or annul <rescind the legislation>. — rescindable, adj.

rescissio (ri-sis[h]-ee-oh). [Latin] Civil law. Annulment or voidance of something; rescission.

rescission (ri-sizh-ən), n. 1. A party's unilateral unmaking of a contract for a legally sufficient reason, such as the other party's material breach. • Rescission is generally available as a remedy or defense for a nondefaulting party and restores the parties to their precontractual positions. 2. An agreement by contracting parties to discharge all remaining duties of performance and terminate the contract. — Also termed (in sense 2) agreement of rescission; mutual rescission; abandonment. — Also spelled recision; recission. — rescissory (ri-sis-ə-ree or ri-siz-), adj. Cf. REJECTION; REPUDIATION.

"The [UCC] takes cognizance of the fact that the term 'rescission' is often used by lawyers, courts and businessmen in many different senses; for example, termination of a contract by virtue of an option to terminate in the agreement, cancellation for breach and avoidance on the grounds of infancy or fraud. In the interests of clarity of thought — as the consequences of each of these forms of discharge may vary — the Commercial Code carefully distinguishes three circumstances. 'Rescission' is utilized as a term of art to refer to a mutual agreement to discharge contractual duties. 'Termination' refers to the discharge of duties by the exercise of a power granted by the agreement. 'Cancellation' refers to the putting an end to the contract by reason of a breach by the other party. Section 2-720, however, takes into account that the parties do not necessarily use these terms in this way." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 21-2, at 864-65 (3d ed. 1987).

equitable rescission. Rescission that is decreed by a court of equity.

legal rescission. Rescission that is effected by the agreement of the parties.

rescissory damages. See DAMAGES.

res communes (rays kə-myoo-nee). [Latin "common things"] Civil law. Things common to all; things that cannot be owned or appropriated, such as light, air, and the sea.

res controversa (rays kon-trə-vər-sə). [Latin] Civil law. A matter in controversy; a point in question.

res coronae (rays kə-roh-nee). [Latin] Hist. Things of the Crown, such as ancient manors, homages of the king, and liberties.

res corporales (rays kor-pə-ray-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Corporeal things; tangible things that are perceptible to the senses.

rescous (res-kəs). 1. RESCUE (2). 2. RESCUE (3).

rescript (ree-skript), n. 1. A judge's written order to a court clerk explaining how to dispose of a case. 2. An appellate court's written decision, usu. unsigned, that is sent down to the trial court. 3. A Roman emperor's or a Pope's written answer to a legal inquiry or petition. Cf. PRECES. 4. A duplicate or counterpart; a rewriting.

rescue, n. 1. The act or an instance of saving or freeing someone from danger or captivity. 2. The forcible and unlawful freeing of a person from arrest or imprisonment. — Also termed rescous.

"A rescue signifies a forcible setting at liberty, against law, of a person duly arrested. It is necessary, that the rescuer should have knowledge that the person whom he sets at liberty has been apprehended for a criminal offence, if he be in the custody of a private person; but if he be under the care of an officer, then he is to take notice of it at his peril." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 62 (2d ed. 1826).

3. The forcible retaking by the owner of goods that have been lawfully distrained. — Also termed rescous. Cf. REPOSSESSION. 4. Int'l law. The retaking of a prize by persons captured with it, so that the property is legally restored to its original owner. See POSTLIMINIUM (2). — rescue, vb.

rescue clause. See SUE-AND-LABOR CLAUSE.

rescue doctrine. Torts. The principle that a tortfeasor who negligently endangered a person is liable for injuries to someone who reasonably attempted to rescue the person in danger. ● The rationale for this doctrine is that an attempted rescue of someone in danger is always foreseeable. Thus, if the tortfeasor is negligent toward the rescuer, the tortfeasor is also negligent toward the rescuer. Cf. EMERGENCY DOCTRINE; GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE.

rescussu. See DE RESCUSSU.

res derelicta (rays der-ə-lik-tə). [Latin] A thing thrown away or forsaken by its owner; abandoned property.

res dominans (rays dom-ə-nanz). [Latin] The dominant property entitled to enjoy a servitude. See dominant estate under ESTATE.

research and development. An effort (as by a company or business enterprise) to create or improve products or services, esp. by discovering new technology or advancing existing technology. — Abbr. R and D; R & D.

reseiser (ri-see-zər). Hist. The taking of lands by the monarch in a case in which a general livery or ouster le main was previously misused.

resentencing, n. The act or an instance of imposing a new or revised criminal sentence. — resentence, vb.

reservation. 1. The creation of a new right or interest (such as an easement), by and for the grantor, in real property being granted to another. Cf. EXCEPTION (3).

implied reservation. An implied easement that reserves in a landowner an easement across a portion of sold land, such as a right-of-way over land lying between the seller's home and the only exit. ● An implied reservation arises only if the seller could have expressly reserved an easement, but for some reason failed to do so. See implied easement under EASEMENT.

"If the implied easement is in favor of the conveyee and is appurtenant to the tract conveyed, it is called an implied grant; if the implied easement is in favor of the conveyor and is appurtenant to the tract retained, it is called an implied reservation." Ralph E. Boyer et al., The Law of Property 311 (4th ed. 1991).

2. The establishment of a limiting condition or qualification; esp., a nation's formal declaration, upon signing or ratifying a treaty, that its willingness to become a party to the treaty is conditioned on certain additional terms that will limit the effect of the treaty in some way.

3. A tract of public land set aside for a special purpose; esp., a tract of land set aside for use by an American Indian tribe. — Also termed (in sense 3) reserve.

reservation of rights. See NONWAIVER AGREEMENT.

reserve, n. 1. Something retained or stored for future use; esp., a fund of money set aside by a bank or an insurance company to cover future liabilities.

amortization reserve. An account created for bookkeeping purposes to extinguish an obligation gradually over time.

bad-debt reserve. A reserve to cover losses on uncollectible accounts receivable.

legal reserve. The minimum amount of liquid assets that a bank or an insurance company must maintain by law to meet depositors' or claimants' demands.

loss reserve. 1. An insurance company's reserve that represents the estimated value of future payments, as for losses incurred but not yet reported. 2. A bank's reserve set aside to cover possible losses, as from defaulting loans.

mean reserve. In insurance, the average of the beginning reserve (after the premium has been paid for the policy year) and the ending reserve of the policy year.

policy reserve. An insurance company's reserve that represents the difference between net premiums and expected claims for a given year. ● This type of reserve is kept esp. by life-insurance companies.

required reserve. The minimum amount of money, as required by the Federal Reserve Board, that a bank must hold in the form of vault cash and deposits with regional Federal Reserve Banks.

sinking-fund reserve. A reserve used to pay long-term debt. See sinking fund under FUND (1).

unearned-premium reserve. An insurance company's reserve that represents premiums that have been received in advance but not yet applied to policy coverage. ● If a policyholder cancels coverage before the policy expires but has already paid a premium for the full policy period, the insurance company refunds the policyholder out of this reserve.

2. RESERVATION (3). 3. See net value under VALUE. — reserve, vb.

reserve account. See impound account under ACCOUNT.

reserve bank. See member bank under BANK.

Reserve Board. See FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD OF GOVERNORS.

reserve clause. A clause in a professional athlete's contract restricting the athlete's right to change teams, even after the contract expires. ● Reserve clauses are uncommon in modern professional sports. Cf. FREE AGENCY.

reserved easement. See EASEMENT.

reserved point of law. See POINT OF LAW.

reserved power. See POWER.

Reserved Power Clause. See TENTH AMENDMENT.

reserved surplus. See appropriated surplus under SURPLUS.

reserve price. See PRICE.

reserve ratio. The Federal Reserve Board's measurement of a member bank's required reserves. See required reserve under RESERVE.

primary reserve ratio. The ratio between a bank's required reserves (cash in vault plus deposits with Federal Reserve Banks) and its demand and time deposits.

secondary reserve ratio. The ratio between a bank's government securities and its demand and time deposits.

reset, n. Scots law. 1. The act or an instance of receiving stolen goods with the intent of depriving the owner of them. 2. Archaic. The harboring or sheltering of a criminal or outlaw. — reset, vb.

resettlement, n. 1. The settlement of one or more persons in a new or former place. 2. The reopening of an order or decree for the purpose of correcting a mistake or adding an omission.

res fungibiles (rays fən-jīb-ə-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Fungible things; things that are commercially interchangeable.

res gestae (rays jes-tee also jes-tī), n. pl. [Latin "things done"] The events at issue, or other events contemporaneous with them. ● In evidence law, words and statements about the res gestae are usu. admissible under a hearsay exception (such as present sense impression or excited utterance). Where the Federal Rules of Evidence or state rules fashioned after them are in effect, the use of res gestae is now out of place. See Fed. R. Evid. 803(1), (2). — Also termed res gesta.

"The Latin expression 'res gestae' or 'res gesta,' literally 'things done' or 'thing transacted,' has long served as a catchword . . . [T]he phrase has frequently served both to let in utterances which in strictness were not admissible and to exclude utterances which might well have been admitted. And frequently also its indefiniteness has served as a basis for rulings where it was easier for the judge to invoke this imposing catchword than to think through the real question involved. The phrase is antiquated. By modern judges it is being gradually discarded. It is superfluous, and serves only to obscure the logic of the rules. It should be left to oblivion." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 279 (1935).

"The res gestae embraces not only the actual facts of the transaction and the circumstances surrounding it, but the matters immediately antecedent to and having a direct causal connection with it, as well as acts immediately following it and so closely connected with it as to form in reality a part of the occurrence." State v. Fouquette, 221 P.2d 404, 416-17 (Nev. 1950).

res gestae witness. See WITNESS.

res habiles (rays hab-ə-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Things that may be acquired by prescription.

resiance (rez-ee-ənts). Archaic. Residence; abode.

resiant (rez-ee-ənt), adj. Archaic. Continually dwelling or abiding in a place; resident.

resiant, n. Archaic. A resident.

residence. 1. The act or fact of living in a given place for some time . 2. The place where one actually lives, as distinguished from a domicile <she made her residence in Oregon>. ● Residence usu. just means bodily presence as an inhabitant in a given place; domicile usu. requires bodily presence plus an intention to make the place one's home. A person thus may have more than one residence at a time but only one domicile. Sometimes, though, the two terms are used synonymously. Cf. DOMICILE. 3. The place where a corporation or other enterprise does business or is registered to do business <Pantheon Inc.'s principal residence is in Delaware>. 4. A house or other fixed abode; a dwelling .

residency. 1. A place of residence, esp. an official one <the diplomat's residency>. 2. The fact or condition of living in a given place <one year's residency to be eligible for in-state tuition>.

resident, n. A person who has a residence in a particular place. ● A resident is not necessarily either a citizen or a domiciliary. Cf. CITIZEN; DOMICILIARY.

resident agent. See registered agent under AGENT.

resident alien. See ALIEN.

residential cluster. Land-use planning. An area of land developed as a unit with group housing and open common space. Cf. PLANNED-UNIT DEVELOPMENT.

residential community treatment center. See HALFWAY HOUSE.

residua (ri-zij-oo-ə). pl. RESIDUUM.

residual, adj. Of, relating to, or constituting a residue; remaining; leftover  .

residual, n. 1. A leftover quantity; a remainder. 2. (often pl.) A disability remaining after an illness, injury, or operation. 3. (usu. pl.) A fee paid to a composer or performer for each repeated broadcast (esp. on television) of a film, program, or commercial.

residual estate. See residuary estate under ESTATE.

residual value. See salvage value under VALUE.

residuary (ri-zij-oo-er-ee), adj. Of, relating to, or constituting a residue; residual .

residuary, n. Wills & estates. 1. See residuary estate under ESTATE. 2. See residuary legatee under LEGATEE.

residuary bequest. See BEQUEST.

residuary clause. Wills & estates. A testamentary clause that disposes of any estate property remaining after the satisfaction of specific bequests and devises.

residuary devise. See DEVISE.

residuary devisee. See DEVISEE.

residuary estate. See ESTATE.

residuary legacy. See LEGACY.

residuary legatee. See LEGATEE.

residue. 1. Something that is left over after a part is removed or disposed of; a remainder. 2. See residuary estate under ESTATE.

residuum (ri-zij-oo-əm). 1. That which remains; a residue. 2. See residuary estate under ESTATE. Pl. residua (ri-zij-oo-ə).

residuum rule. Administrative law. The principle that an agency decision based partly on hearsay evidence will be upheld on judicial review only if the decision is founded on at least some competent evidence. ● The residuum rule has generally been rejected by federal and state courts.

resignation, n. 1. The act or an instance of surrendering or relinquishing an office, right, or claim. 2. A formal notification of relinquishing an office or position. — resign, vb.

res immobiles (rays i-moh-bə-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Immovable things; chattels real. See IMMOBILIA.

res incorporales (rays in-kor-pə-ray-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Incorporeal things; intangible things that are not perceptible to the senses. See incorporeal thing under THING.

res integra (rays in-tə-grə also in-təg-rə). [Latin "an entire thing"] See RES NOVA.

res inter alios acta (rays in-tər ay-lee-ohs ak-tə). [Latin "a thing done between others"] 1. Contracts. The common-law doctrine holding that a contract cannot unfavorably affect the rights of a person who is not a party to the contract. 2. Evidence. The rule prohibiting the admission of collateral facts into evidence.

res ipsa loquitur (rays ip-sə loh-kwə-tər). [Latin "the thing speaks for itself"] 1. Torts. The doctrine providing that, in some circumstances, the mere fact of an accident's occurrence raises an inference of negligence so as to establish a prima facie case. — Often shortened to res ipsa. — Also termed resipsy.

"The phrase 'res ipsa loquitur' is a symbol for the rule that the fact of the occurrence of an injury, taken with the surrounding circumstances, may permit an inference or raise a presumption of negligence, or make out a plaintiff's prima facie case, and present a question of fact for defendant to meet with an explanation. It is merely a short way of saying that the circumstances attendant on the accident are of such a nature as to justify a jury, in light of common sense and past experience, in inferring that the accident was probably the result of the defendant's negligence, in the absence of explanation or other evidence which the jury believes." Stuart M. Speiser, The Negligence Case: Res Ipsa Loquitur § 1:2, at 5-6 (1972).

"It is said that res ipsa loquitur does not apply if the cause of the harm is known. This is a dark saying. The application of the principle nearly always presupposes that some part of the causal process is known, but what is lacking is evidence of its connection with the defendant's act or omission. When the fact of control is used to justify the inference that defendant's negligence was responsible it must of course be shown that the thing in his control in fact caused the harm. In a sense, therefore, the cause of the harm must be known before the maxim can apply." H.L.A. Hart & Tony Honoré, Causation in the Law 419-20 (2d ed. 1985).

"Res ipsa loquitur is an appropriate form of circumstantial evidence enabling the plaintiff in particular cases to establish the defendant's likely negligence. Hence the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, properly applied, does not entail any covert form of strict liability. . . . The doctrine implies that the court does not know, and cannot find out, what actually happened in the individual case. Instead, the finding of likely negligence is derived from knowledge of the causes of the type or category of accidents involved." Restatement (Third) of Torts § 15 cmt. a (Discussion Draft 1999).

2. Criminal law. A test used to determine whether a defendant has gone beyond preparation and committed an attempt, based on whether the defendant's act itself indicated to an observer what the defendant intended to do. — Also termed (in sense 2) equivocality.

resisting arrest. The crime of obstructing or opposing a police officer who is making an arrest. — Also termed resisting lawful arrest.

resisting unlawful arrest. The act of opposing a police officer who is making an unlawful arrest. • Most jurisdictions have accepted the Model Penal Code position prohibiting the use of force to resist an unlawful arrest when the person arrested knows that a police officer is making the arrest. But some jurisdictions allow an arrestee to use nondeadly force to prevent the arrest.

res judicata (rays joo-di-kay-tə or -kah-tə). [Latin "a thing adjudicated"] 1. An issue that has been definitively settled by judicial decision. 2. An affirmative defense barring the same parties from litigating a second lawsuit on the same claim, or any other claim arising from the same transaction or series of transactions and that could have been — but was not — raised in the first suit. • The three essential elements are (1) an earlier decision on the issue, (2) a final judgment on the merits, and (3) the involvement of the same parties, or parties in privity with the original parties. Restatement (Second) of Judgments §§ 17, 24 (1982). — Also termed res adjudicata; claim preclusion. Cf. COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

"'Res judicata' has been used in this section as a general term referring to all of the ways in which one judgment will have a binding effect on another. That usage is and doubtless will continue to be common, but it lumps under a single name two quite different effects of judgments. The first is the effect of foreclosing any litigation of matters that never have been litigated, because of the determination that they should have been advanced in an earlier suit. The second is the effect of foreclosing relitigation of matters that have once been litigated and decided. The first of these, preclusion of matters that were never litigated, has gone under the name, 'true res judicata,' or the names, 'merger' and 'bar.' The second doctrine, preclusion of matters that have once been decided, has usually been called 'collateral estoppel.' Professor Allan Vestal has long argued for the use of the names 'claim preclusion' and 'issue preclusion' for these two doctrines [Vestal, Rationale of Preclusion, 9 St. Louis U. L.J. 29 (1964)], and this usage is increasingly employed by the courts as it is by Restatement Second of Judgments." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 100A, at 722-23 (5th ed. 1994).

res litigiosae (rays li-tij-ee-oh-see). [Latin] Civil law. Things that are in litigation; property or rights that are the subject of a pending action.

res mancipi (rays man-sə-pi). [Latin "things of mancipium"] Roman law. Property that can be transferred only by a formal ceremony of mancipation. — Also termed mancipi res; things mancipi. See MANCIPATION.

res mobiles (rays moh-bə-leez). [Latin] Civil law. Movable things; chattels personal.

res nec mancipi (rays nek man-sə-pi). [Latin "things not of mancipium"] Roman law. Property that can be transferred without a formal ceremony of mancipation. — Also termed things nec mancipi.

res nova (rays noh-və). [Latin "new thing"] 1. An undecided question of law. 2. A case of first impression. — Also termed res integra. See case of first impression under CASE.

res nullius (rays nə-ll-əs). [Latin "thing of no one"] A thing that can belong to no one; an ownerless chattel.

resolution. 1. A formal expression of an opinion, intention, or decision by an official body or assembly (esp. a legislature).

concurrent resolution. A resolution passed by one house and agreed to by the other. • It expresses the legislature's opinion on a subject but does not have the force of law.

joint resolution. A legislative resolution passed by both houses. • It has the force of law and is subject to executive veto.

simple resolution. A resolution passed by one house only. • It expresses the opinion or affects the internal affairs of the passing house, but it does not have the force of law.

2. Formal action by a corporate board of directors or other corporate body authorizing a particular act, transaction, or appointment.

shareholder resolution. A resolution by shareholders, usu. to ratify the actions of the board of directors.

3. A document containing such an expression or authorization.

Resolution Trust Corporation. A federal agency established to act as a receiver for insolvent federal savings-and-loan associations and to transfer or liquidate those associations' assets. • The agency was created when the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation was abolished in 1989. — Abbr. RTC. See FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION.

resolutive condition. See resolutive condition under CONDITION (2).

resolutive (ri-zahl-yə-tor-ee), adj. Operating or serving to annul, dissolve, or terminate .

resolutive condition. See CONDITION (2).

resort, n. Something that one turns to for aid or refuge <the court of last resort>. — resort, vb.

RESPA (res-pə). abbr. REAL ESTATE SETTLEMENT PROCEDURES ACT.

respite (res-pit), n. 1. A period of temporary delay; an extension of time. 2. A temporary suspension of a death sentence; a reprieve. 3. A delay granted to a jury or court for further consideration of a verdict or appeal. 4. Civil law. An agreement between a debtor and several creditors for an extension of time to repay the various debts. — respite, vb.

forced respite. A respite in which some of the creditors are compelled by a court to give the same extension of time that the other creditors have agreed to.

voluntary respite. A respite in which all the creditors agree to the debtor's proposal for an extension of time.

respondeat ouster (ri-spon-dee-at ow-stər). [Latin "let him make further answer"] A judgment or order that a party who made a dilatory plea that has been denied must now plead on the merits.

"In case of felony, if the plea be held bad, the judgment is respondeat ouster; or rather, as the defendant generally pleads over to the felony, the jury are charged again, and that at the same time with the issue on the plea of autrefois acquit, to inquire of the second issue, and the trial proceeds as if no plea in bar had been pleaded." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 461 (2d ed. 1826).

respondeat superior (ri-spon-dee-at soo-peer-ee-ər or sə-peer-ee-ər). [Law Latin "let the superior make answer"] Torts. The doctrine holding an employer or principal liable for the employee's or agent's wrongful acts committed within the scope of the employment or agency. — Also termed master-servant rule. See SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

"Most courts have made little or no effort to explain the result, and have taken refuge in rather empty phrases, such as 'he who does a thing through another does it himself,' or the endlessly repeated formula of 'respondeat superior,' which in itself means nothing more than 'look to the man higher up.'" W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 69, at 500 (5th ed. 1984).

respondent. 1. The party against whom an appeal is taken; APPELLEE. 2. The party against whom a motion or petition is filed. Cf. PETITIONER. 3. At common law, the defendant in an equity proceeding. 4. Civil law. One who answers for another or acts as another's security.

respondent bank. See BANK.

respondentia (ree-spon-den-shee-ə or res-pon-). [Law Latin fr. Latin respondere "to answer"] A loan secured by the cargo on one's ship rather than the ship itself. Cf. BOTTOMRY.

respondentia bond. See BOND (2).

respondere non debet (ri-spon-də-ree non deb-ət). [Latin] Common-law pleading. The prayer of a plea in which the defendant insists that he or she does not have to answer — because of a privilege, for example.

responsalis (res-pon-say-lis). [Law Latin] 1. Hist. One who appears and answers for another. 2. Eccles. law. A proctor. See APOCRISARIUS. responsa prudentium (ri-spon-sə proo-den-shee-əm). [Latin “the answers of the learned”] Hist. The opinions and judgments of eminent lawyers or jurists on questions of law addressed to them. • The responsa prudentium originally constituted part of the early Roman civil law. Roman citizens seeking legal advice, as well as magistrates and judges, often referred legal questions to leading jurists so as to obtain their opinions (responsa). The responsa of some leading jurists were collected, much in the manner of caselaw digests, and many of them passed into Justinian’s Digest. The phrase responsa prudentium gradually migrated to the common law, but today it is of primarily historical use. — Also spelled responsa prudentum.

“[T]he judex, or as we would now call him, the referee, might have no technical knowledge of law whatever. Under such conditions the unlearned judicial magistrates naturally looked for light and leading to the juriconsults who instructed them through their responsa prudentium, the technical name given to their opinions as experts, which were promptly recorded on tablets by their students or disciples.” Hannis Taylor, The Science of Jurisprudence 90–91 (1908).

“In [classical Latin] responsa prudentium is the usual form, but most of the legal sources . . . have prudentum following the example of Blackstone (1765).” The Oxford English Dictionary (2d ed. 1989).

responsibility, n. 1. LIABILITY (1). 2. Criminal law. A person’s mental fitness to answer in court for his or her actions. See COMPETENCY. 3. Criminal law. Guilt. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) criminal responsibility. — responsible, adj.

“[As for] the ambiguities of the word ‘responsibility,’ . . . it is, I think, still important to distinguish two of the very different things this difficult word may mean. To say that someone is legally responsible for something often means only that under legal rules he is liable to be made either to suffer or to pay compensation in certain eventualities. The expression ‘he’ll pay for it’ covers both these things. In this the primary sense of the word, though a man is normally only responsible for his own actions or the harm he has done, he may be also responsible for the actions of other persons if legal rules so provide. Indeed in this sense a baby in arms or a totally insane person might be legally responsible — again, if the rules so provide; for the word simply means liable to be made to account or pay and we might call this sense of the word ‘legal accountability’. But the new idea — the programme of eliminating responsibility — is not, as some have feared, meant to eliminate legal accountability: persons who break the law are not just to be left free.

What is to be eliminated are enquiries as to whether a person who has done what the law forbids was responsible at the time he did it and responsible in this sense does not refer to the legal status of accountability. It means the capacity, so far as this is a matter of a man’s mind or will, which normal people have to control their actions and conform to law. In this sense of responsibility a man’s responsibility can be said to be ‘impaired.’” H.L.A. Hart, “Changing Conceptions of Responsibility,” in Punishment and Responsibility 186, 196–97 (1968).

responsible broker-dealer. See BROKER.

responsive, adj. Giving or constituting a response; answering <the witness’s testimony is not responsive to the question>.

responsive pleading. See PLEADING (1).

responsive verdict. See VERDICT.

res privatae (rays pri-vay-tee). [Latin “private things”] Roman & civil law. Things that can be owned by individuals.

res publicae (rays pəb-li-see). [Latin “public things”] Roman & civil law. Things that cannot be individually owned because they belong to the public, such as the sea, navigable waters, and highways.

res quotidianae (rays kwoh-tid-ee-ay-nee). [Latin] Civil law. Everyday matters; familiar points or questions.

res religiosae (rays ri-lij-ee-oh-see). [Latin] Civil law. Religious things; esp., burial places.

res sanctae (rays sangk-tee). [Latin “sacred thing”] Roman law. The walls of a city. • The Romans considered maintenance of city walls so important that damage to a city’s walls was a capital offense.

res serviens (rays sər-vee-enz). [Latin] The servient property subject to a servitude. See servient estate under ESTATE.

rest, vb. 1. (Of a litigant) to voluntarily conclude presenting evidence in a trial <after the police officer’s testimony, the prosecution rested>. 2. (Of a litigant) to voluntarily conclude presenting evidence in (a trial) <the defense rested its case after presenting just two witnesses>.

Restatement. One of several influential treatises, published by the American Law Institute, describing the law in a given area and guiding its development. • Although the Restatements are frequently cited in cases and commentary, they are not binding on the courts. Restatements have been published in the following areas of law: Agency, Conflict of Laws, Contracts, Foreign Relations Law of the United States, Judgments, Law Governing Lawyers, Property, Restitution, Security, Suretyship and Guaranty, Torts, Trusts, and Unfair Competition. — Also termed Restatement of the Law.

"We speak of the work which the organization should undertake as a restatement; its object should not only be to help make certain much that is now uncertain and to simplify unnecessary complexities, but also to promote those changes which will tend better to adapt the laws to the needs of life. The character of the restatement which we have in mind can be best described by saying that it should be at once analytical, critical and constructive." Committee on the Establishment of a Permanent Organization for the Improvement of the Law (Elihu Root, chairman), Report Proposing the Establishment of an American Law Institute, 1 ALI Proc. 14 (1923).

restater. An author or reporter of a Restatement.

restaur (res-tor). 1. The recourse that insurers (esp. marine underwriters) have against each other according to the date of their insurance. 2. The recourse that marine insurers have against a ship's master if a loss occurs through the master's fault or negligence. 3. The recourse that one has against a guarantor or other person under a duty to indemnify. — Also spelled restor.

restitutio in integrum (res-tə-t[y]oo-shee-oh in in-tə-grəm). [Law Latin] Roman & civil law. Restoration to the previous condition or the status quo. • In Roman law, a praetor could accomplish this by annulling a contract or transaction that was strictly legally valid but inequitable and by restoring the parties to their previous legal relationship. The phrase is still sometimes used in American law (esp. in Louisiana) when a court annuls a contract and orders restitution on equitable grounds.

restitution, n. 1. Return or restoration of some specific thing to its rightful owner or status. 2. Compensation for benefits derived from a wrong done to another. 3. Compensation or reparation for the loss caused to another. • In senses 2 and 3, restitution is available in tort and contract law and is sometimes ordered as a condition of probation in criminal law. — restitutionary, adj.

"The term 'restitution' appears in early decisions, but general recognition probably began with the publication of the Restatement of Restitution [in 1937]. The term is not wholly apt since it suggests restoration to the successful party of some benefit obtained from him. Usually this will be the case where relief is given, but by no means always. There are cases in which the successful party obtains restitution of something he did not have before, for example a benefit received by the defendant from a third person which justly should go to the plaintiff." 1 George E. Palmer, The Law of Restitution § 1.1, at 4 (1978).

"'Restitution' is an ambiguous term, sometimes referring to the disgorging of something which has been taken and at times referring to compensation for injury done. Often, the result under either meaning of the term would be the same. If the plaintiff has been defrauded into paying $1,000 to the defendant, his loss and the defendant's gain coincide. Where they do not coincide, as where the plaintiff is out of pocket more than the defendant has gained and the defendant's conduct is tortious, the plaintiff will recover his loss in a quasi-contractual or equitable action for restitution. Unjust impoverishment as well as unjust enrichment is a ground for restitution. If the defendant is guilty of a non-tortious misrepresentation, the measure of recovery is not rigid but, as in other cases of restitution, such factors as relative fault, the agreed upon risks, and the fairness of alternative risk allocations not agreed upon and not attributable to the fault of either party need to be weighed." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9-23, at 376 (3d ed. 1987).

restitutionary redress. See REDRESS.

restitution damages. See DAMAGES.

restitutione extracti ab ecclesia (res-tə-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nee ek-strak-ti ab e-klee-z[h]ee-ə). [Latin] Eccles. law. A writ restoring someone who had been suspected or accused of a felony to the church.

restitutione temporalium (res-tə-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nee tem-pə-ray-lee-əm). [Latin] Eccles. law. A writ directing the sheriff to restore the temporalities of a diocese to a bishop. See TEMPORALITY (2).

restitutory interdict. See INTERDICT (1).

restor. See RESTAUR.

restraining order. 1. A court order prohibiting or restricting a person from harassing, threatening, and sometimes even contacting or approaching another specified person. • This type of order is issued most commonly in cases of domestic violence. — Also termed protection order; protective order. 2. TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER.

restraint, n. 1. Confinement, abridgment, or limitation . See PRIOR RESTRAINT. 2. Prohibition of action; holding back <the victim's family exercised no restraint — they told the suspect exactly what they thought of him>. 3. RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

restraint of marriage. A condition (esp. in a gift or bequest) that nullifies the grant to which it applies if the grantee marries or remarries. ● Restraints of marriage are usu. void if they are general or unlimited in scope.

restraint of princes. Archaic. An embargo. ● The phrase still occasionally appears in marine-insurance contexts. — Also termed restraint of princes and rulers; restraint of princes, rulers, and people. See EMBARGO.

restraint of trade. Antitrust. An agreement between or combination of businesses intended to eliminate competition, create a monopoly, artificially raise prices, or otherwise adversely affect the free market. ● Restraints of trade are usu. illegal, but may be declared reasonable if they are in the best interests of both the parties and the public. — Often shortened to restraint. — Also termed conspiracy in restraint of trade. See PER SE RULE; RULE OF REASON.

horizontal restraint. A restraint of trade imposed by agreement between competitors at the same level of distribution. ● The restraint is horizontal not because it has horizontal effects, but because it is the product of a horizontal agreement. — Also termed horizontal agreement.

unreasonable restraint of trade. A restraint of trade that produces a significant anticompetitive effect and thus violates antitrust law.

vertical restraint. A restraint of trade imposed by agreement between firms at different levels of distribution (as between manufacturer and retailer).

restraint on alienation. 1. A restriction, usu. in a deed of conveyance, on a grantee's ability to sell or transfer real property; a provision that conveys an interest and that, even after the interest has become vested, prevents the owner from disposing of it at all or from disposing of it in particular ways or to particular persons. ● Restraints on alienation are generally unenforceable as against public policy favoring the free alienability of land. — Also termed unreasonable restraint on alienation. 2. A trust provision that prohibits or penalizes alienation of the trust corpus.

restricted interpretation. See restrictive interpretation under INTERPRETATION.

restricted security. See SECURITY.

restricted stock. See restricted security under SECURITY.

restricted surplus. See SURPLUS.

restriction. 1. A limitation or qualification. 2. A limitation (esp. in a deed) placed on the use or enjoyment of property. See restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4). 3. Military law. A deprivation of liberty involving moral and legal, rather than physical, restraint. ● A military restriction is imposed as punishment either by a commanding officer's nonjudicial punishment or by a summary, special, or general court-martial. Restriction is a lesser restraint because it permits the restricted person to perform full military duties. See nonjudicial punishment under PUNISHMENT.

restriction in lieu of arrest. A restriction in which a person is ordered to stay within specific geographical limits, such as a base or a ship, and is permitted to perform full military duties.

restrictive condition. See negative condition under CONDITION (2).

restrictive covenant. See COVENANT (4).

restrictive covenant in equity. See restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4).

restrictive indorsement. See INDORSEMENT.

restrictive interpretation. See INTERPRETATION.

restrictive principle of sovereign immunity. The doctrine by which a foreign nation's immunity does not apply to claims arising from the nation's private or commercial acts, but protects the nation only from claims arising from its public functions. See COMMERCIAL-ACTIVITY EXCEPTION; JURE GESTIONIS; JURE IMPERII.

"[T]he [Foreign Sovereign] Immunities Act codified the so-called 'restrictive' principle of sovereign immunity, as recognized in international law. Under this doctrine, the immunity of a foreign state in the courts of the United States is 'restricted' to claims involving the foreign state's public acts and does not extend to suits based on its commercial or private conduct." 14A Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3662, at 161-62 (3d ed. 1998).

resulting power. See POWER.

resulting trust. See TRUST.

resulting use. See USE (4).

resummons. A second or renewed summons to a party or witness already summoned. See SUMMONS.

resumption. 1. The taking back of property previously given up or lost. 2. Hist. The retaking by the Crown or other authority of lands or rights previously given to another (as because of false suggestion or other error).

res universitatis (rays yoo-nə-vər-sə-tay-tis). [Latin] Civil law. Things belonging to a community (such as a municipality) and free to be used by all its members, such as public buildings and streets.

resurrender, n. Hist. The return of a copyhold estate to a mortgagor by the mortgagee after the debt has been repaid. See SURRENDER OF COPYHOLD.

retail, n. The sale of goods or commodities to ultimate consumers, as opposed to the sale for further distribution or processing. — retail, vb. — retail, adj. Cf. WHOLESALE.

retailer, n. A person or entity engaged in the business of selling personal property to the public or to consumers, as opposed to selling to those who intend to resell the items.

retail installment contract. See CONTRACT.

retail installment contract and security agreement. See retail installment contract under CONTRACT.

retail installment sale. See INSTALLMENT SALE.

retail sales tax. See sales tax under TAX.

retainage (ri-tayn-ij). A percentage of what a landowner pays a contractor, withheld until the construction has been satisfactorily completed and all mechanic's liens are released or have expired.

retained earnings. See EARNINGS.

retainer, n. 1. A client's authorization for a lawyer to act in a case <the attorney needed an express retainer before making a settlement offer>. 2. A fee paid to a lawyer to secure legal representation <he requires a $100,000 retainer>. — Also termed retaining fee. — retain, vb. Cf. ATTORNEY'S FEES.

general retainer. A retainer for a specific length of time rather than for a specific project.

special retainer. A retainer for a specific case or project.

retaining fee. See RETAINER (2).

retaining lien. See LIEN.

retaliatory discharge. See DISCHARGE (7).

retaliatory eviction. See EVICTION.

retaliatory law. A state law restraining another state's businesses — as by levying taxes — in response to similar restraints imposed by the second state on the first state's businesses.

retaliatory tariff. See TARIFF (2).

retallia (ri-tal-ee-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. The sale of goods or commodities in small quantities; retail.

retenementum (ri-ten-ə-men-təm). Hist. A withholding; restraint or detainment.

retinue. A group of persons who are retained to follow and attend to a sovereign, noble, or other distinguished person.

retired stock. See treasury stock under STOCK.

retirement, n. 1. Voluntary termination of one's own employment or career, esp. upon reaching a certain age <she traveled around the world after her retirement>. 2. Withdrawal from action or for privacy <Carol's retirement to her house by the lake>. 3. Withdrawal from circulation; payment of a debt <retirement of a series of bonds>. See REDEMPTION. — retire, vb.

retirement annuity. See ANNUITY.

retirement-income insurance. See INSURANCE.

retirement plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

retorna brevium (ri-tor-nə bree-vee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. The return of a writ. ● This was the indorsement on a writ by a sheriff or other officer, reporting on the writ's execution.

retorno habendo. See DE RETORNO HABENDO.

retorsion (ri-tor-shən). Int'l law. An act of lawful retaliation in kind for another nation's unfriendly or unfair act. ● Examples of retorsion include suspending diplomatic relations, expelling foreign nationals, and restricting travel rights. — Also spelled retortion. Cf. REPRISAL (2).

retraction, n. 1. The act of taking or drawing back <retraction of anticipatory repudiation before breach of contract>. 2. The act of recanting; a statement in recantation <retraction of a defamatory remark>. 3. Wills & estates. A withdrawal of a renunciation <because of her retraction, she took property under her uncle's will>. See RENUNCIATION (3). — retract, vb.

retraxit (ri-trak-sit). [Latin "he has withdrawn"] A plaintiff's voluntary withdrawal of a lawsuit in court so that the plaintiff forfeits the right of action. ● In modern practice, retraxit is called voluntary dismissal or dismissal with prejudice. See judgment of retraxit under JUDGMENT.

retreat rule. Criminal law. The doctrine holding that the victim of a murderous assault must choose a safe retreat instead of resorting to deadly force in self-defense, unless (1) the victim is at home or in his or her place of business (the so-called castle doctrine), or (2) the assailant is a person whom the victim is trying to arrest. ● A minority of American jurisdictions have adopted this rule. Cf. NO-RETREAT RULE.

retrial, n. A new trial of an action that has already been tried. — retry, vb. See TRIAL DE NOVO.

retribution, n. 1. Criminal law. Punishment imposed as repayment or revenge for the offense committed; requital. Cf. DETERRENCE; REHABILITATION (1). 2. Something justly deserved; repayment; reward. — retribute, vb. — retributive, adj.

retributive danger. See DANGER.

retributive punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

retributivism (ri-trib-yə-tə-viz-əm). The legal theory by which criminal punishment is justified, as long as the offender is morally accountable, regardless of whether deterrence or other good consequences would result. ● According to retributivism, a criminal is thought to have a debt to pay to society, which is paid by punishment. The punishment is also sometimes said to be society's act of paying back the criminal for the wrong done. Opponents of retributivism sometimes refer to it as "vindictive theory." Cf. hedonistic utilitarianism under UTILITARIANISM; UTILITARIAN-DETERRENCE THEORY.

maximalist retributivism. The classical form of retributivism, espoused by scholars such as Immanuel Kant, under which it is argued that society has a duty, not just a right, to punish a criminal who is guilty and culpable, that is, someone who has no justification or excuse for the illegal act.

minimalist retributivism. The more contemporary form of retributivism, which maintains that no one should be punished in the absence of guilt and culpability (that is, unless punishment is deserved), and that a judge may absolve the offender from punishment, wholly or partially, when doing so would further societal goals such as rehabilitation or deterrence.

retroactive, adj. (Of a statute, ruling, etc.) extending in scope or effect to matters that have occurred in the past. — Also termed retrospective. Cf. PROSPECTIVE (1). — retroactivity, n.

"'Retroactivity' is a term often used by lawyers but rarely defined. On analysis it soon becomes apparent, moreover, that it is used to cover at least two distinct concepts. The first, which may be called 'true retroactivity,' consists in the application of a new rule of law to an act or transaction which was completed before the rule was promulgated. The second concept, which will be referred to as 'quasi-retroactivity,' occurs when a new rule of law is applied to an act or transaction in the process of completion. . . . [T]he foundation of these concepts is the distinction between completed and pending transactions . . ." T.C. Hartley, The Foundations of European Community Law 129 (1981).

retroactive law. A legislative act that looks backward or contemplates the past, affecting acts or facts that existed before the act came into effect. ● A retroactive law is not unconstitutional unless it (1) is in the nature of an ex post facto law or a bill of attainder, (2) impairs the obligation of contracts, (3) divests vested rights, or (4) is constitutionally forbidden. — Also termed retrospective law.

retrocession. 1. The act of ceding something back (such as a territory or jurisdiction). 2. The

retrocessionaire. Reinsurance. A reinsurer of a reinsurer. See RETROCESSION.

retrocessional agreement. An agreement providing for reinsurance of reinsurance.

retrospectant evidence. See EVIDENCE.

retrospective, adj. See RETROACTIVE.

retrospective law. See RETROACTIVE LAW.

retrospective statute. See STATUTE.

return, n. 1. A court officer's bringing back of an instrument to the court that issued it; RETURN OF WRIT . 2. A court officer's indorsement on an instrument brought back to the court, reporting what the officer did or found . See FALSE RETURN (1). 3. TAX RETURN <file your return before April 15>. 4. (usu. pl.) An official report of voting results <election returns>. 5. Yield or profit <return on an investment>. See RATE OF RETURN. — return, vb.

capital return. Tax. Revenue that represents the repayment of cost or capital and thus is not taxable as income.

fair return on investment. The usual or reasonable profit in a business, esp. a public utility.

net return. The profit on an investment after deducting all investment expenses.

return date. See return day under DAY.

return day. See DAY.

returning board. An official body or commission that canvasses election returns.

return of service. See PROOF OF SERVICE.

return of writ. The sheriff's bringing back a writ to the court that issued it, with a short written account (usu. on the back) of the manner in which the writ was executed. — Often shortened to return. See RETURN (1).

re-up, vb. 1. To reenlist in one of the armed forces <the soldier re-upped the day after being discharged>. 2. To sign an extension to a contract, esp. an employment agreement <the star athlete re-upped in a three-year deal worth $12 million>.

reus (ree-əs). [Latin] Roman & civil law. 1. A defendant. Cf. ACTOR (3). 2. A party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant. 3. A party to a contract or transaction. Pl. rei.

revalidation. See REPUBLICATION.

revaluation, n. An increase in the value of one currency in relation to another currency. — revalue, vb. Cf. DEVALUATION.

revaluation surplus. See SURPLUS.

rev'd. abbr. Reversed.

reve (reev). Hist. The bailiff of a franchise or manor.

revendication, n. 1. The recovery or claiming back of something by a formal claim or demand. 2. Civil law. An action to recover rights in and possession of property that is wrongfully held by another. • This is analogous to the common-law replevin. — revendicate, vb.

revenue. Gross income or receipts.

general revenue. The income stream from which a state or municipality pays its obligations unless a law calls for payment from a special fund. See general fund under FUND (1).

land revenue. Revenue derived from lands owned by the Crown in Great Britain. • Crown lands have been so largely granted away to subjects that they are now transferred within very narrow limits. See Crown land under LAND.

marginal revenue. The amount of revenue earned from the sale of one additional unit.

revenue agent's report. A report indicating any adjustments made to a tax return as a result of an IRS audit. • After an audit, this report is mailed to the taxpayer along with a 30-day letter. — Abbr. RAR. See 30-DAY LETTER.

revenue bill. See BILL (3).

revenue bond. See BOND (3).

Revenue Procedure. An official statement by the IRS regarding the administration and procedures of the tax laws. — Abbr. Rev. Proc.

Revenue Ruling. An official interpretation by the IRS of the proper application of the tax law to a specific transaction. ● Revenue Rulings carry some authoritative weight and may be relied on by the taxpayer who requested the ruling. — Abbr. Rev. Rul.

revenue stamp. A stamp used as evidence that a tax has been paid.

revenue tariff. See TARIFF (2). reversal, n. 1. An appellate court's overturning of a lower court's decision. 2. Securities. A change in a security's near-term market-price trend. — reverse, vb.

reverse annuity mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

reverse bonus. See reverse contingent fee under CONTINGENT FEE.

reverse-confusion doctrine. Intellectual property. The rule that it is unfair competition if the defendant's use of a title that is confusingly similar to the one used by the plaintiff leads the public to believe that the plaintiff's work is the same as the defendant's, or that it is derived from or associated in some manner with the defendant. ● Under the conventional passing-off form of unfair competition, similarity of titles leads the public to believe that the defendant's work is the same as the plaintiff's work, or is in some manner derived from the plaintiff. But in reverse confusion, the unfair competition results from the confusion created about the origin of the plaintiff's work.

reverse contingent fee. See CONTINGENT FEE.

reverse subsidiary merger. See reverse triangular merger under MERGER.

reverse triangular merger. See MERGER.

reversible error. See ERROR (2).

reversio (ri-vər-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. The returning of land to the grantor.

reversion, n. 1. A future interest in land arising by operation of law whenever an estate owner grants to another a particular estate, such as a life estate or a term of years, but does not dispose of the entire interest. ● A reversion occurs automatically upon termination of the prior estate, as when a life tenant dies. — Also termed reversionary estate; estate in reversion; equitable reversion. 2. Loosely, REMAINDER. — revert, vb. — reversionary, adj. Cf. POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER; REMAINDER.

reversioner. 1. One who possesses the reversion to an estate; the grantor or heir in reversion. 2. Broadly, one who has a lawful interest in land but not the present possession of it.

reverter. See POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER.

reverter guarantee. Real estate. A mortgage clause protecting the mortgagee against a loss occasioned by the occurrence of a terminating event under a possibility of reverter. See POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER.

revest, vb. To vest again or anew <revesting of title in the former owner>. rev'g. abbr. Reversing.

review, n. Consideration, inspection, or reexamination of a subject or thing. — review, vb.

administrative review. 1. Judicial review of an administrative proceeding. 2. Review of an administrative proceeding within the agency itself.

appellate review. Examination of a lower court's decision by a higher court, which can affirm, reverse, or modify the decision.

discretionary review. The form of appellate review that is not a matter of right but that occurs only with the appellate court's permission. See CERTIORARI.

judicial review. See JUDICIAL REVIEW.

reviewable issue. See appealable decision under DECISION.

revised statutes. See STATUTE.

revision, n. 1. A reexamination or careful review for correction or improvement. 2. Military law. The reconvening of a general or special court-martial to revise its action or to correct the record because of an improper or inconsistent action concerning the findings or the sentence. • A revision can occur only if it will not materially prejudice the accused.

revival, n. 1. Restoration to current use or operation; esp., the act of restoring the validity or legal force of an expired contract or dormant judgment. — Also termed (for a dormant judgment) revival of judgment. Cf. RENEWAL (2). 2. Wills & estates. The reestablishment of the validity of a revoked will by revoking the will that invalidated the original will. Cf. REPUBLICATION. — revive, vb.

revival statute. See STATUTE.

revivor. A proceeding to revive an action ended because of either the death of one of the parties or some other circumstance.

revocable (rev-ə-kə-bəl), adj. Capable of being canceled or withdrawn .

revocable guaranty. See GUARANTY.

revocable letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

revocable trust. See TRUST.

revocation (rev-ə-kay-shən), n. 1. An annulment, cancellation, or reversal, usu. of an act or power. 2. Contracts. Withdrawal of an offer by the offeror. 3. Wills & estates. Invalidation of a will by the testator, either by destroying the will or by executing a new one. — revoke, vb. Cf. REPUDIATION; RESCISSION.

revocation hearing. See HEARING.

revocatory action (rev-ə-kə-tor-ee or ri-vok-ə-tor-ee). Civil law. An action brought by a creditor to annul a contract that has been entered into by the debtor and that will increase the debtor's insolvency.

revocatur (ree-voh-kay-tər). [Latin] Hist. It is recalled. • In former English practice, this was used as a notation on a judgment that was set aside because of a factual error (as opposed to being reversed because of legal error).

revolution, n. An overthrow of a government, usu. resulting in fundamental political change; a successful rebellion. — revolt, vb. — revolutionary, adj. & n.

revolver loan. See LOAN.

revolving charge account. See revolving credit under CREDIT (4).

reward, n. Something of value, usu. money, given in return for some service or achievement, such as recovering property or providing information that leads to the capture of a criminal. — reward, vb.

rex (reks). (usu. cap.) 1. A king. 2. The official title of a king. 3. The prosecution side (as representatives of the king) in criminal proceedings in a monarchy. — Abbr. R. Cf. REGINA.

rezone, vb. To change the zoning boundaries or restrictions of (an area) <rezone the neighborhood>. See ZONING.

RFA. abbr. REQUEST FOR ADMISSION.

RFI. abbr. REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

RFP. abbr. REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION.

r.g. abbr. REGULA GENERALIS.

rhadamanthine (rad-ə-man-thin), adj. (often cap.) (Of a judge) rigorous and inflexible <the judge's rhadamanthine interpretation of procedural requirements makes it essential to study the local rules before appearing in court>.

Rhodian law (roh-dee-ən). The earliest known system or code of maritime law, supposedly dating from 900 B.C. • Rhodian law was purportedly developed by the people of the island Rhodes, located in the Aegean Sea and now belonging to Greece. The ancient inhabitants of Rhodes are said to have controlled the seas because of their commercial prosperity and naval superiority. Despite the uncertainties about its history, Rhodian law has often been cited as a source of admiralty and maritime law.

"A strong tradition says that a maritime code was promulgated by the Island of Rhodes, in the Eastern Mediterranean, at the height of its power; the ridiculously early date of 900 B.C. has even been assigned to this supposititious code — a date accepted uncritically by some legal scholars. But even the existence of such a code has been pretty well cast in doubt, and we know next to nothing of its contents, if it existed. It is interesting to note, however, that the root-principle of the highly distinctive maritime-law system of general average . . . is clearly stated in Justinian's Digest, and that the Rhodian Law is invoked as authority." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 1-2, at 3-4 (2d ed. 1975).

ribbon-matching rule. See MIRROR-IMAGE RULE.

Richard Roe. A fictitious name for a male party to a legal proceeding, used because the party's true identity is unknown or because his real name is being withheld; esp., the second of two such parties. Cf. JOHN DOE.

RICO (ree-koh). abbr. RACKETEER INFLUENCED AND CORRUPT ORGANIZATIONS ACT.

rider. An attachment to some document, such as a legislative bill or an insurance policy, that amends or supplements the document.

rien culp (ryan kəlp). [Law French "not guilty"] Hist. A plea of not guilty.

rien dit (ryan dee). [Law French "says nothing"] Hist. A plea of nihil dicit. See NIHIL DICIT.

rien luy doit (ryan lwee dwah). [Law French "owes him nothing"] Hist. A plea of nil debet. See NIL DEBET.

riens en arrière (ryan aw-nah-ree-air). [Law French "nothing in arrear"] Hist. A plea in a debt action for arrearages of account.

riens passa per le fait (ryan pah-sah pair le fay). [Law French "nothing passed by the deed"] Hist. A plea by which a party seeks to avoid the operation of a deed that has been enrolled or acknowledged in court.

riens per descent (ryan pair day-sawn). [Law French "nothing by descent"] Hist. The plea of an heir who is sued for the ancestor's debt and who received no land or assets from the ancestor.

rier county. See RERE-COUNTY.

rigging the market. The practice of artificially inflating stock prices, by a series of bids, so that the demand for those stocks appears to be high and investors will therefore be enticed into buying the stocks. See MANIPULATION.

right, n. 1. That which is proper under law, morality, or ethics <know right from wrong>. 2. Something that is due to a person by just claim, legal guarantee, or moral principle <the right of liberty>. 3. A power, privilege, or immunity secured to a person by law <the right to dispose of one's estate>. 4. A legally enforceable claim that another will do or will not do a given act; a recognized and protected interest the violation of which is a wrong . 5. (often pl.) The interest, claim, or ownership that one has in tangible or intangible property  <publishing rights>.

"Right is a correlative to duty; where there is no duty there can be no right. But the converse is not necessarily true. There may be duties without rights. In order for a duty to create a right, it must be a duty to act or forbear. Thus, among those duties which have rights corresponding to them do not come the duties, if such there be, which call for an inward state of mind, as distinguished from external acts or forbearances. It is only to acts and forbearances that others have a right. It may be our duty to love our neighbor, but he has no right to our love." John Chipman Gray, The Nature and Sources of the Law 8-9 (2d ed. 1921).

"[T]he word 'right' is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls; it is so easy to slip from a qualified meaning in the premise to an unqualified one in the conclusion. Most rights are qualified." American Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, 256 U.S. 350, 358, 41 S.Ct. 499, 500 (1921) (Holmes, J.).

absolute right. A right that belongs to every human being, such as the right of personal liberty; a natural right. Cf. relative right.

accessory right. A supplementary right that has been added to the main right that is vested in the same owner. • For example, the right in a security is accessory to the right that is secured; a servitude is accessory to the ownership of the land for whose benefit the servitude exists. Cf. principal right.

accrued right. A matured right; a right that is ripe for enforcement (as through litigation).

acquired right. A right that a person does not naturally enjoy, but that is instead procured, such as the right to own property.

civil right. See CIVIL RIGHT.

conditional right. A right that depends on an uncertain event; a right that may or may not exist. • For example, parents have the conditional right to punish their child, the condition being that the punishment must be reasonable.

conjugal rights. See CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

equitable right. A right cognizable within a court of equity. • If a legal right and an equitable right conflict, the legal right ordinarily prevails over and destroys the equitable right even if the legal right arose after the equitable right. With the merger of law and equity in federal and most state courts, the procedural differences between legal and equitable rights have been largely abolished. Cf. legal right.

expectant right. A right that depends on the continued existence of present conditions until some future event occurs; a contingent right.

imperfect right. A right that is recognized by the law but is not enforceable. • Examples include time-barred claims and claims exceeding the local limits of a court's jurisdiction.

"[T]here are certain rights, sometimes called imperfect rights, which the law recognizes but will not enforce directly. Thus a statute-barred debt cannot be recovered in a court of law, but for certain purposes the existence of the debt has legal significance. If the debtor pays the money, he cannot later sue to recover it as money paid without consideration; and the imperfect right has the faculty of becoming perfect if the debtor makes an acknowledgment of the debt from which there can be inferred a promise to pay." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 286 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

imprescriptible right. A right that cannot be lost to prescription.

inalienable right. A right that cannot be transferred or surrendered; esp., a natural right such as the right to own property. — Also termed inherent right.

legal right. 1. A right created or recognized by law. 2. A right historically recognized by common-law courts. Cf. equitable right.

natural right. A right that is conceived as part of natural law and that is therefore thought to exist independently of rights created by government or society, such as the right to life, liberty, and property. See NATURAL LAW.

negative right. A right entitling a person to have another refrain from doing an act that might harm the person entitled.

patent right. A right secured by a patent.

perfect right. A right that is recognized by the law and is fully enforceable.

peripheral right. A right that surrounds or springs from another right.

personal right. 1. A right that forms part of a person's legal status or personal condition, as opposed to the person's estate. 2. See right in personam.

political right. The right to participate in the establishment or administration of government, such as the right to vote or the right to hold public office. — Also termed political liberty.

positive right. A right entitling a person to have another do some act for the benefit of the person entitled.

precarious right. A right enjoyed at the pleasure of another; a right that can be revoked at any time.

primary right. A right prescribed by the substantive law, such as a right not to be defamed or assaulted. • The enforcement of a primary right is termed specific enforcement.

principal right. A right to which has been added a supplementary right in the same owner. Cf. accessory right.

private right. A personal right, as opposed to a right of the public or the state. Cf. public right.

procedural right. A right that derives from legal or administrative procedure; a right that helps in the protection or enforcement of a substantive right. Cf. substantive right.

property right. A right to specific property, whether tangible or intangible.

proprietary right. A right that is part of a person's estate, assets, or property, as opposed to a right arising from the person's legal status.

public right. A right belonging to all citizens and usu. vested in and exercised by a public office or political entity. Cf. private right.

real right. 1. Civil law. A right that is connected with a thing rather than a person. • Real rights include ownership, use, habitation, usufruct, predial servitude, pledge, and real mortgage.

"The term 'real rights' (jura in re) is an abstraction unknown to classical Roman law. The classical jurists were preoccupied with the availability of remedies rather than the existence of substantive rights, and did not have a generic term to include all 'rights' which civilian scholars of following generations classified as 'real.' The expression ('real rights') was first coined by medieval writers elaborating on the Digest in an effort to explain ancient procedural forms of action in terms of substantive rights." A.N. Yiannopoulos, Real Rights in Louisiana and Comparative Law, 23 La. L. Rev. 161, 163 (1963).

relative right. A right that arises from and depends on someone else's right, as distinguished from an absolute right. Cf. absolute right.

remedial right. The secondary right to have a remedy that arises when a primary right is broken.

right in personam (in pər-sōh-nəm). An interest protected solely against specific individuals. — Also termed personal right; jus in personam. See IN PERSONAM.

right in rem (in rem). A right exercisable against the world at large. — Also termed real right; jus in rem. See IN REM.

"A right in rem need not relate to a tangible res. Thus a right that one's reputation should not be unjustifiably attacked is today described as a right in rem, since it is a right that avails against persons generally. This shows how far the conception has developed from the Roman notion of actio in rem, for one who sues to protect his reputation is not asking for judgment for a specific res. It should also be noticed that on breach of a right in rem, a right in personam arises against the aggressor." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 300 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

secondary right. A right prescribed by procedural law to enforce a substantive right, such as the right to damages for a breach of contract. • The enforcement of a secondary right is variously termed secondary enforcement, remedial enforcement, or sanctional enforcement. — Also termed remedial right; sanctioning right.

substantial right. An essential right that potentially affects the outcome of a lawsuit and is capable of legal enforcement and protection, as distinguished from a mere technical or procedural right.

substantive right (səb-stən-tiv). A right that can be protected or enforced by law; a right of substance rather than form. Cf. procedural right.

vested right. A right that so completely and definitely belongs to a person that it cannot be impaired or taken away without the person's consent.

right against self-incrimination. A criminal defendant's or a witness's constitutional right — under the Fifth Amendment, but waivable under certain conditions — guaranteeing that a person cannot be compelled by the government to testify if the testimony might result in the person's being criminally prosecuted. • Although this right is most often asserted during a criminal prosecution, a person can also "plead the Fifth" in a civil, legislative, administrative, or grand-jury proceeding. — Also termed privilege against self-incrimination; right to remain silent. See SELF-INCRIMINATION.

"The right against self-incrimination, protected by the Fifth Amendment, is central to the accusatorial system of criminal justice: together with the presumption of innocence, the right against self-incrimination ensures that the state must bear the burden of prosecution. . . . The right against self-incrimination is personal. It may be claimed only by the person who himself might be at risk for testifying. It may not be claimed on behalf of another. . . ." Jethro K. Lieberman, The Evolving Constitution 481–82 (1992).

rightful, adj. 1. (Of an action) equitable; fair . 2. (Of a person) legitimately entitled to a position . 3. (Of an office or piece of property) that one is entitled to <her rightful inheritance>.

right heir. See HEIR.

right in re propria. See JUS IN RE PROPRIA.

right of action. 1. The right to bring a specific case to court. 2. A right that can be enforced by legal action; a chose in action. Cf. CAUSE OF ACTION.

right of angary. See ANGARY.

right of approach. Int'l law. The right of a warship on the high seas to draw near another vessel to determine its nationality.

right of assembly. The constitutional right — guaranteed by the First Amendment — of the people to gather peacefully for public expression of religion, politics, or grievances. — Also termed freedom of assembly; right to assemble. Cf. FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION; unlawful assembly under ASSEMBLY.

right of audience. A right to appear and be heard in a given court. • The term is chiefly used in England to denote the right of a certain type of lawyer to appear in a certain type of court.

right of common. See PROFIT A PRENDRE.

right of contribution. See CONTRIBUTION (1).

right of dissent and appraisal. See APPRAISAL REMEDY.

right of election. Wills & estates. A spouse's statutory right to choose, upon the other spouse's death, either the share under the deceased spouse's will or a share of the estate as defined in the probate statute, which usually amounts to what the spouse would have received if the deceased spouse had died intestate. — Also termed widow's election. See ELECTION (2).

right of entry. 1. The right of taking or resuming possession of land or other real property in a peaceable manner. 2. POWER OF TERMINATION. 3. The right to go into another's real property for a special purpose without committing trespass. • An example is a landlord's right to enter a tenant's property to make repairs. 4. The right of an alien to go into a jurisdiction for a special purpose. • An example is an exchange student's right to enter another country to attend college.

right of entry for breach of condition. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

right of entry for condition broken. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

right of exoneration. See EQUITY OF EXONERATION.

right of first refusal. A potential buyer's contractual right to meet the terms of a third party's offer if the seller intends to accept that offer. • For example, if Beth has a right of first refusal on the purchase of Sam's house, and if Sam intends to accept Terry's offer to buy the house for $300,000, Beth can match this offer and prevent Terry from buying it. Cf. RIGHT OF PREEMPTION.

right of fishery. See FISHERY (1).

right of innocent passage. See INNOCENT PASSAGE.

right of petition. See RIGHT TO PETITION.

right of possession. The right to hold, use, occupy, or otherwise enjoy a given property; esp., the right to enter real property and eject or evict a wrongful possessor.

right of preemption. A potential buyer's contractual right to have the first opportunity to buy, at a specified price, if the seller chooses to sell. • For example, if Beth has a right of preemption on Sam's house for five years at $100,000, Sam can either keep the house for five years (in which case Beth's right expires) or, if he wishes to sell during those five years, offer the house to Beth, who can either buy it for $100,000 or refuse to buy, but if she refuses, Sam can sell to someone else. — Also termed first option to buy. Cf. RIGHT OF FIRST REFUSAL.

right of privacy. 1. The right to personal autonomy. • The U.S. Constitution does not explicitly provide for a right of privacy, but the Supreme Court has repeatedly ruled that this right is implied in the "zones of privacy" created by specific constitutional guarantees. 2. The right of a person and the person's property to be free from unwarranted public scrutiny or exposure. — Also termed right to privacy. See INVASION OF PRIVACY.

right of publicity. The right to control the use of one's own name, picture, or likeness and to prevent another from using it for commercial benefit without one's consent.

right of redemption. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

right of reentry. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

right of rescission. See RIGHT TO RESCIND.

right of revolution. The inherent right of a people to cast out their rulers, change their polity, or effect radical reforms in their system of government or institutions, by force or general uprising, when the legal and constitutional methods of making such changes have proved inadequate or are so obstructed as to be unavailable.

right of search. Int'l law. The right to stop, visit, and examine vessels on the high seas to discover whether they or the goods they carry are liable to capture; esp., a belligerent state's right to stop any merchant vessel of a neutral state on the high seas and to search as reasonably necessary to determine whether the ship has become liable to capture under the international law of naval warfare. • This right carries with it no right to destroy without full examination, unless those on a given vessel actively resist. — Also termed right of visit; right of visit and search; right of visitation; right of visitation and search. See VISIT.

right of support. Property. 1. A landowner's right to have the land supported by adjacent land and by the underlying earth. 2. A servitude giving the owner of a house the right to rest timber on the walls of a neighboring house.

right of survivorship. A joint tenant's right to succeed to the whole estate upon the death of the other joint tenant. — Also termed jus accrescendi. See SURVIVORSHIP; joint tenancy under TENANCY.

right of termination. English law. A remedy involving the ending of contractual relations, accorded to a party to a contract when the other party breaches a duty that arises under the contract. • The right of termination is contrasted with a right to rescind, which arises when the other party breaches a duty that arises independently of the contract. — Also termed right to terminate.

right of transit passage. See TRANSIT PASSAGE.

right of visit. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right of visit and search. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right of visitation. 1. VISITATION RIGHT. 2. RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right of visitation and search. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

right-of-way. 1. A person's legal right, established by usage or by contract, to pass through grounds or property owned by another. Cf. EASEMENT. 2. The right to build and operate a railway line or a highway on land belonging to another, or the land so used. 3. The right to take precedence in traffic.

right of wharfing out. Hist. A right to the exclusive use of submerged lands, as by establishing a permanent structure or wharf on the land to dock oceangoing vessels.

rights arbitration. See grievance arbitration under ARBITRATION.

rights-consciousness. See CLAIMS-CONSCIOUSNESS.

rights off. See EX RIGHTS.

rights offering. See OFFERING.

rights on. See CUM RIGHTS.

right to assemble. See RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY.

right to bear arms. The constitutional right of persons to own firearms.

right to choose. See FREEDOM OF CHOICE.

right-to-convey covenant. See covenant of seisin under COVENANT (4).

right to counsel. A criminal defendant's constitutional right, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, to representation by a court-appointed lawyer if the defendant cannot afford to hire one. — Also termed access to counsel. See ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL.

right to die. The right of a terminally ill person to refuse life-sustaining treatment. — Also termed right to refuse treatment. See ADVANCE DIRECTIVE.

right-to-know act. A federal or state statute requiring businesses (such as chemical manufacturers) that produce hazardous substances to disclose information about the substances both to the community where they are produced or stored and to employees who handle them. — Also termed right-to-know statute.

right to petition. The constitutional right — guaranteed by the First Amendment — of the people to make formal requests to the government, as by lobbying or writing letters to public officials. — Also termed right of petition; freedom of petition.

right to remain silent. See RIGHT AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION.

right to rescind. English law. The remedy accorded to a party to a contract when the other party breaches a duty that arises independently of the contract. • The right to rescind is contrasted with a right of termination, which arises when the other party breaches a duty that arises under the contract. — Also termed right of rescission.

right to terminate. See RIGHT OF TERMINATION.

right to travel. A person's constitutional right — guaranteed by the Privileges and Immunities Clause — to travel freely between states.

right to vote. See SUFFRAGE.

right-to-work law. A state law that prevents labor-management agreements requiring a person to join a union as a condition of employment. See SHOP.

right-wrong test. See MCNAGHTEN RULES.

rigid constitution. See CONSTITUTION.

rigor juris (rig-ər joo-ris). [Latin] Strictness of law. Cf. GRATIA CURIAE.

rigor mortis (rig-ər mor-tis). The temporary stiffening of a body's joints and muscles after death. • The onset of rigor mortis can vary from 15 minutes to several hours after death, depending on the body's condition and on atmospheric factors.

ringing out. See RINGING UP.

ringing the changes. Fraud consisting in the offender's using a large banknote to pay for a small purchase, waiting for the shopkeeper to put change on the counter, and then, by a series of maneuvers involving changes of mind — such as asking for some other article of little value or for smaller change for some of the money on the counter — creating a confused situation in which the offender picks up much more of the money than is really due.

ringing up. A method by which a group of commodities dealers discharge contracts for future delivery in advance by using offsets, cancellations, and price adjustments, thus saving the cost of actual delivery and change of possession. — Also termed ringing out.

riot, n. An unlawful disturbance of the peace by an assembly of usu. three or more persons acting with a common purpose in a violent or tumultuous manner that threatens or terrorizes the public. — riot, vb. — riotous, adj. Cf. unlawful assembly under ASSEMBLY; CIVIL COM-MOTION; ROUT.

"A riot is defined as an unlawful assembly (i.e. an assembly come together in pursuance of an unlawful purpose), consisting of at least three persons, which has begun to create a breach of the peace. At Common Law it is an indictable misdemeanour, punishable by a fine and imprisonment. But the statutory form of it, introduced by the Riot Act of 1714, is better known. By that statute, passed to deal with Jacobite disturbances, it was provided that the members of a riotous assembly of twelve or more persons which does not disperse within an hour after the reading by a magistrate of the proclamation contained in the Act, become guilty of felony, which, at the time of the passing of the Act, was a capital offence, and is, even now, punishable with imprisonment for life." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 136 (P.B. Fairst ed., 6th ed. 1967).

"A riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three or more persons acting together (a) in the commission of a crime by open force, or (b) in the execution of some enterprise, lawful or unlawful, in such a violent, turbulent and unauthorized manner as to create likelihood of public terror and alarm. . . . When they come together for this purpose they are guilty of unlawful assembly. When they start on their way to carry out their common design they are guilty of rout. In the actual execution of their design they are guilty of riot." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 483 (3d ed. 1982).

Riot Act. A 1714 English statute that made it a capital offense for 12 or more rioters to continue together for an hour after a magistrate has officially proclaimed that rioters must disperse. • This statute was not generally accepted in the United States and did not become a part of American common law. It did, however, become a permanent part of the English language in the slang phrase reading the Riot Act (meaning "to reprimand vigorously"), which originally referred to the official command for rioters to disperse.

riotous assembly. See ASSEMBLY.

riparian (ri-pair-ee-ən or rī-), adj. Of, relating to, or located on the bank of a river or stream (or occasionally another body of water, such as a lake) <riparian land> . Cf. LITTORAL.

riparian proprietor. A landowner whose property borders on a stream or river.

riparian right. (often pl.) The right of a landowner whose property borders on a body of water or watercourse. ● Such a landowner traditionally has the right to make reasonable use of the water. — Also termed water right.

riparian-rights doctrine. The rule that owners of land bordering on a waterway have equal rights to use the water passing through or by their property. Cf. PRIOR-APPROPRIATION DOCTRINE.

ripeness, n. 1. The circumstance existing when a case has reached, but has not passed, the point when the facts have developed sufficiently to permit an intelligent and useful decision to be made. 2. The requirement that this circumstance must exist before a court will decide a controversy. — ripen, vb. — ripe, adj. See JUSTICIABILITY. Cf. MOOTNESS DOCTRINE; PREMATURITY (1).

rising of court. Archaic. 1. A court's final adjournment of a term. 2. A recess or temporary break in a court's business, as at the end of the day.

absorbable risk. A potential loss that a corporation believes that it can cover either with available capital or with self-insurance.

assigned risk. One who is a poor risk for insurance but whom an insurance company is forced to insure because of state law. ● For example, an accident-prone driver is an assigned risk in a state with a compulsory motor-vehicle-insurance statute.

classified risk. In life and health policies, the risk created by a policyholder's substandard health or other peril.

noninsurable risk. A risk for which insurance will not be written because the risk is too uncertain to be the subject of actuarial analysis.

pure risk. A risk that always results in a loss.

speculative risk. A risk that can result in either a loss or a gain.

risk arbitrage. See ARBITRAGE.

risk-averse, adj. (Of a person) uncomfortable with volatility or uncertainty; not willing to take risks; very cautious .

risk-benefit test. See RISK-UTILITY TEST.

risk capital. See CAPITAL.

risk-capital test. Securities. A test of whether a transaction constitutes the sale of a security (and is thus subject to securities laws) based on whether the seller is soliciting risk capital with which to develop a business venture. Cf. CAPITAL-RISK TEST.

risk factor. Insurance. In life-insurance rate-making, the estimated cost of present and future claims, based on a mortality table. ● The risk factor is one element that a life insurer uses to calculate premium rates. See PREMIUM RATE. Cf. INTEREST FACTOR; MORTALITY FACTOR.

risk management. The procedures or systems used to minimize accidental losses, esp. to a business.

risk of jury doubt. See BURDEN OF PERSUASION.

risk of loss. The danger or possibility that a party will have to bear the costs and expenses for the damage, destruction, or inability to locate goods or other property.

risk of nonpersuasion. See BURDEN OF PERSUASION.

risk-utility test. A method of imposing product liability on a manufacturer if the evidence shows that a reasonable person would conclude that the benefits of a product's particular design versus the feasibility of an alternative safer design did not outweigh the dangers inherent in the original design. — Also termed danger-utility test; risk-benefit test. Cf. CONSUMER-CONTEMPLATION TEST.

RL/C. See revolving letter of credit under LETTER OF CREDIT.

robbery, n. The illegal taking of property from the person of another, or in the person's presence, by violence or intimidation; aggravated larceny. — rob, vb. See LARCENY; THEFT. Cf. BURGLARY.

"Robbery is larceny from the person by violence or intimidation. It is a felony both at common law and under modern statutes. Under some of the new penal codes robbery does not require an actual taking of property. If force or intimidation is used in the attempt to commit theft this is sufficient." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 343 (3d ed. 1982).

aggravated robbery. Robbery committed by a person who either carries a dangerous weapon — often called armed robbery — or inflicts bodily harm on someone during the robbery.

armed robbery. Robbery committed by a person carrying a dangerous weapon, regardless of whether the weapon is revealed or used. • Most states punish armed robbery as an aggravated form of robbery rather than as a separate crime.

conjoint robbery (kən-joynt). A robbery committed by two or more persons.

highway robbery. 1. Robbery committed against a traveler on or near a public highway. 2. Figuratively, a price or fee that is unreasonably high; excessive profit or advantage.

simple robbery. Robbery that does not involve an aggravating factor or circumstance.

robe. (often cap.) The legal or judicial profession <eminent members of the robe>.

Robinson-Patman Act. A federal statute (specif., an amendment to the Clayton Act) prohibiting price discrimination that hinders competition or tends to create a monopoly. 15 USCA § 13. See ANTITRUST LAW; CLAYTON ACT.

rocket docket. 1. An accelerated dispute-resolution process. 2. A court or judicial district known for its speedy disposition of cases. 3. A similar administrative process, in which disputes must be decided within a specified time (such as 60 days).

rogatory letter (rog-ə-tor-ee). See LETTER OF REQUEST.

roll, n. 1. A record of a court's or public office's proceedings. 2. An official list of the persons and property subject to taxation. — Also termed (in sense 2) tax roll; tax list; assessment roll. Cf. TAXPAYERS' LISTS.

rolled-up plea. See PLEA (3).

rollover, n. 1. The extension or renewal of a short-term loan; the refinancing of a maturing loan or note. 2. The transfer of funds (such as IRA funds) to a new investment of the same type, esp. so as to defer payment of taxes. — roll over, vb.

rollover mortgage. See renegotiable-rate mortgage under MORTGAGE.

Roman-Dutch law. A system of law in Holland from the mid-15th century to the early 19th century, based on a mixture of Germanic customary law and Roman law as interpreted in medieval lawbooks. • This law forms the basis of modern South African law, the law of several other countries in southern Africa, and the law of Sri Lanka.

Romanesque law. See CIVIL LAW (1).

Romanist, n. One who is versed in or practices Roman law; a Roman-law specialist.

Roman law. 1. The legal system of the ancient Romans, forming the basis of the modern civil law. — Also termed civil law. 2. CIVIL LAW (1).

"The Roman law is the body of rules that governed the social relations of many peoples in Europe, Asia, and Africa for some period between the earliest prehistoric times and 1453 A.D. This date should perhaps be extended to 1900 A.D., or even to the present time, and we might include America in the territory concerned. . . . Yet the essential fact is that no present-day community . . . consciously applies as binding upon its citizens the rules of Roman law in their unmodified form. That law is an historical fact. It would have only a tepid historical interest . . . if it were not for the circumstance that, before it became a purely historical fact, it was worked into the foundation and framework of what is called the civil law . . ." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 1 (1927).

"Roman law is not only the best-known, the most highly developed, and the most influential of all legal systems of the past; apart from English law, it is also the only one whose entire and unbroken history can be traced from early and primitive beginnings to a stage of elaborate perfection in the hands of skilled specialists." Hans Julius Wolff, Roman Law: An Historical Introduction 5 (1951).

root. Civil law. A descendant.

root of title. The recorded land transaction, usu. at least 40 years old, that is used to begin a title search. See CHAIN OF TITLE; TITLE SEARCH.

ROR. abbr. RELEASE ON RECOGNIZANCE.

Roth IRA. See INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNT.

round lot. See LOT (3).

riot (rowt), n. The offense that occurs when an unlawful assembly makes some move toward the accomplishment of its participants' common purpose. Cf. RIOT.

"The word 'riot' comes from the same source as the word 'route.' It signifies that three or more who have gathered together in unlawful assembly are 'on their way.' It is not necessary for guilt of this offense that the design be actually carried out, nor that the journey be made in a tumultuous manner." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 483 (3d ed. 1982).

Royal Marriages Act. A 1772 statute (12 Geo. 3, ch. 1) forbidding members of the royal family from marrying without the sovereign's permission, except on certain conditions.

"Royal Marriages Act An Act occasioned by George III's fear of the effect on the dignity and honour of the royal family of members thereof contracting unsuitable marriages, two of his brothers having done so It provided that marriages of descendants of George II, other than the issue of princesses who marry into foreign families, should not be valid unless they had the consent of the King in Council, or, if the parties were aged over 25, they had given 12 months' notice to the Privy Council, unless during that time both Houses of Parliament expressly declare disapproval of the proposed marriage." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1091 (1980).

royalty. 1. A payment made to an author or inventor for each copy of a work or article sold under a copyright or patent.

reasonable royalty. A royalty that a licensee would be willing to pay the inventor while still making a reasonable profit from use of the patented invention.

2. A share of the product or profit from real property, reserved by the grantor of a mineral lease, in exchange for the lessee's right to mine or drill on the land. — Also termed (in sense 2) override.

haulage royalty. A royalty paid to a landowner for moving coal via a subterranean passageway under the landowner's land from a mine located on an adjacent property. • The payment is calculated at a certain amount per ton of coal.

mineral royalty. A right to a share of income from mineral production.

overriding royalty. A royalty retained by a mineral lessee when the property is subleased.

shut-in royalty. Oil & gas. A payment made by an oil-and-gas lessee to the lessor to keep the lease in force when a well capable of producing is not utilized because there is no market for the oil or gas. • Generally, without such a payment, the lease will terminate at the end of the primary term unless actual production has begun.

rpitr. abbr. REPORTER.

R.S. See revised statutes under STATUTE.

RTC. abbr. RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION.

rubber check. See bad check under CHECK.

rubber-stamp seal. See NOTARY SEAL.

rubric (roo-brik). 1. The title of a statute or code <the rubric of the relevant statute is the Civil Rights Act of 1964>. 2. A category or designation <assignment of rights falls under the rubric of contract law>. 3. An authoritative rule, esp. for conducting a public worship service <the rubric dictates whether the congregation should stand or kneel>. 4. An introductory or explanatory note; a preface . 5. An established rule, custom, or law <what is the rubric in the Northern District of Texas regarding appearance at docket call?>.

rule, n. 1. Generally, an established and authoritative standard or principle; a general norm mandating or guiding conduct or action in a given type of situation.

general rule. A rule applicable to a class of cases or circumstances.

special rule. A rule applicable to a particular case or circumstance only.

2. A regulation governing a court's or an agency's internal procedures.

rule, vb. 1. To command or require; to exert control <the dictator ruled the country>. 2. To decide a legal point <the court ruled on the issue of admissibility>.

rule, the. An evidentiary and procedural rule by which all witnesses are excluded from the courtroom while another witness is testifying <invoking "the rule">. • The phrase "the rule" is used chiefly in the American South and Southwest, but it is a universal practice to exclude witnesses before they testify.

Rule 10b-5. The SEC rule that prohibits deceptive or manipulative practices (such as material misrepresentations or omissions) in the buying or selling of securities. — Also termed anti-fraud rule.

Rule 11. Civil procedure. 1. In federal practice, the procedural rule requiring the attorney of record or the party (if not represented by an attorney) to sign all pleadings, motions, and other papers filed with the court and — by this signing — to represent that the paper is filed in good faith after an inquiry that is reasonable under the circumstances. • This rule provides for the imposition of sanctions, upon a party's or the court's own motion, if an attorney or party violates the conditions stated in the rule. Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. 2. In Texas practice, the procedural rule requiring agreements between attorneys or parties concerning a pending suit to be in writing, signed, and filed in the court's record or made on the record in open court. Tex. R. Civ. P. 11.

rule absolute. See decree absolute under DECREE.

rule against accumulations. See ACCUMULATIONS, RULE AGAINST.

rule against perpetuities. Property. The rule prohibiting a grant of an estate unless the interest must vest, if at all, no later than 21 years after the death of some person alive when the interest was created. — Sometimes written Rule Against Perpetuities; Rule against Perpetuities.

"The true form of the Rule against Perpetuities is believed to be this: — NO INTEREST SUBJECT TO A CONDITION PRECEDENT IS GOOD, UNLESS THE CONDITION MUST BE FULFILLED, IF AT ALL, WITHIN TWENTY-ONE YEARS AFTER SOME LIFE IN BEING AT THE CREATION OF THE INTEREST." John Chipman Gray, The Rule Against Perpetuities 144 (1886).

"Another scholar who spent a substantial part of an academic lifetime attempting to bring order and add sense to the rule [against perpetuities], W. Barton Leach, described the rule as a 'technicality-ridden legal nightmare' and a 'dangerous instrumentality in the hands of most members of the bar.'" Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 178 (2d ed. 1984) (quoting Leach, Perpetuities Legislation, Massachusetts Style, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 1349 (1954)).

"The Rule Against Perpetuities is a rule against remoteness of vesting. A contingent future interest is invalid under the orthodox rule if, at the time of the creation of the interest, the circumstances are such that the contingency may go unresolved for too long a time. The Rule is not concerned with the duration of interests, that is, the length of time that they endure. It is not a rule against suspension of the power of alienation, nor a rule against restraints on alienation. It is not a rule that directly limits the duration of trusts The orthodox rule is satisfied if all contingent future interests are so created that they must vest, if they vest at all, within the perpetuities period." Robert J. Lynn, The Modern Rule Against Perpetuities 9 (1966).

"The common law Rule Against Perpetuities (modified by statute in some states) provides that no interest is valid unless it must vest within 21 years after lives in being when the interest was created. The rule is something of a misnomer. It does not limit the duration of a condition in a bequest, but rather limits the testator's power to earmark gifts for remote descendants." Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 18.7, at 394 (2d ed. 1977).

rule in Heydon's case. See MISCHIEF RULE.

Rule in Shelley's Case. Property. The rule that if — in a single grant — a freehold estate is given to a person and a remainder is given to the person's heirs, the remainder belongs to the named person and not the heirs, so that the person is held to have a fee simple absolute. • The rule, which dates from the 14th century but draws its name from the famous 16th-century case, has been abolished in most states. Wolfe v. Shelley, 76 Eng. Rep. 206 (K.B. 1581).

"[T]he rule in Shelley's Case, the Don Quixote of the law, which, like the last knight errant of chivalry, has long survived every cause that gave it birth and now wanders aimlessly through the reports, still vigorous, but equally useless and dangerous." Stamper v. Stamper, 28 S.E. 20, 22 (N.C. 1897).

Rule in Wild's Case. Property. The rule construing a grant to "A and A's children" as a fee tail if A's children do not exist at the effective date of the instrument, and as a joint tenancy if A's children do exist at the effective date. • The rule has been abolished along with the fee tail in most states.

rulemaking, n. The process used by an administrative agency to formulate, amend, or repeal a rule or regulation. — Also termed administrative rulemaking. — rulemaking, adj. Cf. ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATION; INFORMAL AGENCY ACTION.

formal rulemaking. Agency rulemaking that, when required by statute or the agency's discretion, must be on the record after an opportunity for an agency hearing, and must comply with certain procedures, such as allowing the submission of evidence and the cross-examination of witnesses. Cf. informal rulemaking.

informal rulemaking. Agency rulemaking in which the agency publishes a proposed regulation and receives public comments on the regulation, after which the regulation can take effect without the necessity of a formal hearing on the record. • Informal rulemaking is the most common procedure followed by an agency in issuing its substantive rules. — Also termed notice-and-comment rulemaking. See NOTICE-AND-COMMENT PERIOD. Cf. formal rulemaking.

rule nisi. See decree nisi under DECREE.

rule of capture. 1. The doctrine that if the donee of a general power of appointment manifests an intent to assume control of the property for all purposes and not just for the purpose of appointing it to someone, the donee captures the property and the property goes to the donee's estate. • One common way for the donee to show an intent to assume control for all purposes is to include provisions in his or her will blending the appointing property with the donee's own property. 2. Property. The principle that wild animals belong to the person who captures them, regardless of whether they were originally on another person's land. 3. Water law. The principle that a surface landowner can extract and appropriate all the groundwater beneath the land by drilling or pumping, even if doing so drains away groundwaters to the point of drying up springs and wells from which other landowners benefit. • This doctrine has been widely abolished or limited by legislation. 4. Oil & gas. The principle that the owner of a mineral right covering migratory (sometimes termed "fugacious") substances can extract and appropriate them by drilling or pumping, subject to the prior or contemporaneous capture of the same minerals by another mineral-rights holder into the same subterranean mineral deposit elsewhere. — Also termed doctrine of capture; law of capture.

rule of completeness. See RULE OF OPTIONAL COMPLETENESS.

rule of construction. See canon of construction under CANON (1).

rule of court. A rule governing the practice or procedure in a given court <federal rules of court>. See LOCAL RULE.

rule of decision. A rule, statute, body of law, or prior decision that provides the basis for deciding or adjudicating a case.

rule of four. The convention that for certiorari to be granted by the U.S. Supreme Court, four justices must vote in favor of the grant. See CERTIORARI.

rule of inconvenience. The principle of statutory interpretation holding that a court should not construe a statute in a way that will jeopardize an important public interest or produce a serious hardship for anyone, unless that interpretation is unavoidable.

rule of interpretation. See canon of construction under CANON (1).

rule of justice. A jurisprudential principle that determines the sphere of individual liberty in the pursuit of individual welfare, so as to confine that liberty within limits that are consistent with the general welfare of humankind.

rule of law. 1. A substantive legal principle <under the rule of law known as respondet superior, the employer is answerable for all wrongs committed by an employee in the course of the employment>. 2. The supremacy of regular as opposed to arbitrary power <citizens must respect the rule of law>. — Also termed supremacy of law. 3. The doctrine that every person is subject to the ordinary law within the jurisdiction <all persons within the United States are within the American rule of law>. 4. The doctrine that general constitutional principles are the result of judicial decisions determining the rights of private individuals in the courts <under the rule of law, Supreme Court caselaw makes up the bulk of what we call "constitutional law">. 5. Loosely, a legal ruling; a ruling on a point of law <the ratio decidendi of a case is any rule of law reached by the judge as a necessary step in the decision>.

rule of lenity (len-ə-tee). The judicial doctrine holding that a court, in construing an ambiguous criminal statute that sets out multiple or inconsistent punishments, should resolve the ambiguity in favor of the more lenient punishment. — Also termed lenity rule.

rule of marshaling assets. An equitable doctrine that requires a senior creditor, having two or more funds to satisfy its debt, to first dispose of the fund not available to a junior creditor. ● It prevents the inequity that would result if the senior creditor could choose to satisfy its debt out of the only fund available to the junior creditor and thereby exclude the junior creditor from any satisfaction. — Also termed rule of marshaling securities; rule of marshaling remedies.

rule of marshaling liens. See INVERSE-ORDER-OF-ALIENATION DOCTRINE.

rule of marshaling remedies. See RULE OF MARSHALING ASSETS.

rule of marshaling securities. See RULE OF MARSHALING ASSETS.

rule of necessity. A rule requiring a judge or other official to hear a case, despite bias or conflict of interest, when disqualification would result in the lack of any competent court or tribunal.

rule of optional completeness. The rule of evidence providing that when a party introduces part of a writing or an utterance at trial, the opposing party may require that the remainder of the passage be read to establish the full context. ● The rule has limitations: first, no utterance can be received if it is irrelevant, and second, the remainder of the utterance must explain the first part. In many jurisdictions, the rule applies to conversations, to an opponent's admissions, to confessions, and to all other types of writings — even account books. But the Federal Rules of Evidence limit the rule to writings and recorded statements. Fed. R. Evid. 106. In most jurisdictions, including federal, the remainder is admissible unless its admission would be unfair or misleading. — Also termed rule of completeness; doctrine of completeness; doctrine of optional completeness; completeness doctrine; optional-completeness rule; optional-completeness doctrine.

rule of rank. A doctrine of statutory construction holding that a statute dealing with things or persons of an inferior rank cannot by any general words be extended to things or persons of a superior rank. ● Blackstone gives the example of a statute dealing with deans, prebendaries, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotion. According to Blackstone, this statute is held not to extend to bishops, even though they have spiritual promotion, because deans are the highest persons named, and bishops are of a higher order. Cf. EJUSDEM GENERIS; EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS.

rule of reason. Antitrust. The judicial doctrine holding that a trade practice violates the Sherman Act only if the practice is an unreasonable restraint of trade, based on economic factors. See SHERMAN ANTITRUST ACT; RESTRAINT OF TRADE. Cf. PER SE RULE.

rule of recognition. In the legal theory of H.L.A. Hart, a legal system's fundamental rule, by which all other rules are identified and understood. ● In The Concept of Law (1961), Hart contends that a society's legal system is centered on rules. There are primary rules of obligation, which prescribe how a person should act in society, and secondary rules, by which the primary rules are created, identified, changed, and understood. A "rule of recognition" is a secondary rule, and serves to instruct citizens on when a pronouncement or societal principle constitutes a rule of obligation. Cf. RULES OF CHANGE; basic norm under NORM.

"This rule [the rule of recognition] may amount to no more than specifying a list of primary rules carved on a public monument. Or it may actually be a complete set of rules . . ." Martin P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 44 (1975).

rule of right. The source of a right; the rule that gives rise to a right.

rule of 72. A method for determining how many years it takes to double money invested at a compound interest rate. ● For example, at a compound rate of 6%, it takes 12 years (72 divided by 6) for principal to double.

rule of 78. A method for computing the amount of interest that a borrower saves by paying off a loan early, when the interest payments are higher at the beginning of the loan period. ● For example, to determine how much interest is saved by prepaying a 12-month loan after 6 months, divide the sum of the digits for the remaining six payments (21) by the sum of the digits for all twelve payments (78) and multiply that percentage by the total interest. — Also termed rule of the sum of the digits.

rule of the last antecedent. An interpretative principle by which a court determines that qualifying words or phrases modify the words or phrases immediately preceding them and not words or phrases more remote, unless the extension is necessary from the context or the spirit of the entire writing. ● For example, an application of this rule might mean that, in the phrase Texas courts, New Mexico courts, and New York courts in the federal system, the words in the federal system might be held to modify only New York courts and not Texas courts or New Mexico courts. — Also termed doctrine of the last antecedent; doctrine of the last preceding antecedent.

rule of the sum of the digits. See RULE OF 78.

rules of change. In the legal theory of H.L.A. Hart, the fundamental rules by which a legal system's other rules are altered. ● In Hart's theory, a legal system's primary rules are subject to identification and change by secondary rules. Among those rules are "rules of change," which prescribe how laws are altered or repealed. Cf. RULE OF RECOGNITION.

rules of court. See COURT RULES.

Rules of Decision Act. A federal statute (28 USCA § 1652) providing that a federal court, when exercising diversity jurisdiction, must apply the substantive law of the state in which the court sits. See diversity jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

rules of navigation. The principles and regulations that govern the steering and sailing of vessels to avoid collisions. ● Examples include the new International Rules governing conduct on the high seas and the Inland Rules governing navigation on the inland waters of the United States and U.S. vessels on the Canadian waters of the Great Lakes. 33 USCA §§ 1602–1608, 2001(a).

rule to show cause. See SHOW-CAUSE PROCEEDING.

ruling, n. The outcome of a court's decision either on some point of law or on the case as a whole. — Also termed legal ruling. — rule, vb. Cf. JUDGMENT; OPINION (1).

"A distinction is sometimes made between rules and rulings. Whether or not a formal distinction is declared, in common usage 'legal ruling' (or simply 'ruling') is a term ordinarily used to signify the outcome of applying a legal test when that outcome is one of relatively narrow impact. The immediate effect is to decide an issue in a single case. This meaning contrasts, for example, with the usual meaning of 'legal rule' (or simply 'rule'). The term 'rule' ordinarily refers to a legal proposition of general application. A 'ruling' may have force as precedent, but ordinarily it has that force because the conclusion it expresses (for example, 'objection sustained') explicitly depends upon and implicitly reiterates a 'rule' — a legal proposition of more general application . . ." Robert E. Keeton, Judging 67–68 (1990).

ruling case. See LEADING CASE (3).

ruling letter. See DETERMINATION LETTER.

run, vb. 1. To expire after a prescribed period <the statute of limitations had run, so the plaintiff's lawsuit was barred>. 2. To accompany a conveyance or assignment of (land) <the covenant runs with the land>. 3. To apply <the injunction runs against only one of the parties in the dispute>.

runner. 1. A law-office employee who delivers papers between offices and files papers in court. 2. One who solicits personal-injury cases for a lawyer.

running account. See ACCOUNT.

running days. See LAWDAYS.

running objection. See continuing objection under OBJECTION.

running policy. See floating policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

s. abbr. 1. STATUTE. 2. SECTION (1). 3. (usu. cap.) SENATE.

S-1. An SEC form that a company usu. must file before listing and trading its securities on a national exchange. • Used primarily by first-time issuers of securities, this form is the basic, full-length registration statement that requires a great deal of information about the issuer and the securities being sold. The SEC has also adopted modified forms for smaller enterprises, such as Forms SB-1 and SB-2. — Also termed Form S-1.

Sabbath-breaking. The violation of laws or rules on observing the Sabbath; esp., the violation of a blue law.

Sabbath law. See BLUE LAW.

sabotage (sab-ə-tahzh), n. 1. The destruction, damage, or knowingly defective production of materials, premises, or utilities used for national defense or for war. 18 USCA §§ 2151 et seq. 2. The willful and malicious destruction of an employer's property or interference with an employer's normal operations, esp. during a labor dispute. — sabotage, vb.

saboteur (sab-ə-tər), n. A person who commits sabotage.

sacer (sas-ər), adj. [Latin "sacred; forfeited to a god"] Roman law. (Of an outlaw or a wrongdoer) punished by being placed outside the law's protection. See CONSECRATIO CAPITIS; OUTLAWRY.

sachbaro. See SAGIBARO.

Sache (zakh-ə). [German] A thing; an article or matter. See THING.

sacramentales (sak-rə-men-tay-leez), n. pl. [Law Latin fr. Latin sacramentum "oath-takers"] Hist. Compurgators; people who take an oath swearing to a defendant's innocence. Sing. sacramentalis.

sacramentum (sak-rə-men-təm), n. [Latin "an oath"] Roman law. 1. A procedure for remedying a wrong; one of the legis actiones proceedings, used in both in rem and in personam actions when no other remedy was prescribed.

"Sacramentum . . . Where it took the form of an action in rem, the proceedings were as follows: the plaintiff secured the presence of the defendant in Court, the XII Tables entitling him, if the defendant refused to come, to bring him by force, and the object in dispute (e.g. the slave) had also to be there. The plaintiff then, holding a wand . . . in one hand, seized the object with the other and claimed ownership . . . Thereupon the defendant went through exactly the same ceremony, and used the same words . . . The plaintiff next asked for the defendant's title . . ., the defendant's reply being a general assertion of ownership . . . Whereupon the plaintiff denied the right, and challenged the defendant to a bet . . . and the defendant made a like challenge . . . The praetor then — (a) Awarded possession of the slave to one of the parties pending the trial . . . (b) Required the person so given possession to give security . . . and (c) Required both parties to give security . . ." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 388-90 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

2. The deposit of money made by both parties to the sacramentum and given to the winning party after the cause was determined.

"[T]he money staked as a wager . . . was known as sacramentum. The word evidently has a religious significance. The sum of the wager, forfeited by the party found to be in the wrong, was anciently devoted to religious purposes, later went to the public chest. But there is reason to think that at a still earlier period the word sacramentum meant, not a thing staked as a wager on the result of litigation, but an oath by each party as to the justice of his cause, involving a penalty to be paid to the offended deity if the oath was found to be false." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 422-23 (4th ed. 1956).

3. An oath of allegiance given by a soldier upon enlistment.

sacramentum decisionis (sak-rə-men-təm di-sizh-ee-oh-nis). [Latin "the oath of decision"] Civil law. The offer by one party to accept the opposing party's oath as decisive of the issues involved in a lawsuit.

"The defendant or person accused was . . . to make oath of his own innocence, and to produce a certain number of compurgators, who swore they believed his oath. Somewhat similar also to this is the sacramentum decisionis, or the voluntary and decisive oath of the civil law; where one of the parties to the suit, not being able to prove his charge, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary: which the adversary was bound to accept, or tender the same proposal back again; otherwise the whole was taken as confessed by him." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 342 (1768).

sacramentum fidelitatis (sak-rə-men-təm fi-del-ə-tay-tis). [Law Latin] Hist. The oath of fidelity, given by a vassal to a lord.

sacrilege (sak-rə-lij). 1. The act or an instance of desecrating or profaning a sacred thing. 2. Hist. Larceny of sacred objects, as from a church.

sacrilegium (sak-rə-lee-jee-əm). [Latin fr. sacer "sacred" + legere "to steal"] Roman law. 1. The theft of a sacred thing, punishable by death. 2. Violation of an imperial law.

"In the later Empire the conception of sacrilegium was somewhat distorted and those 'who through ignorance or negligence confound, violate and offend the sanctity of a divine law' . . . were considered guilty of sacrilegium. 'Divine' is here used in the sense of imperial, issued by the emperor . . . Thus sacrilegium and sacrilegus became rather general terms applied to the neglect or violation of imperial orders or enactments." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 689 (1953).

sacrilegus (sə-kril-ə-gəs). [Latin "sacrilegious"] Roman law. (A person) guilty of sacrilegium. See SACRILEGIUM.

sacristan (sak-ri-stən). [Latin] Hist. A caretaker of a church; a sexton of a church.

sacristy (sak-ri-stee). See VESTRY (1).

saemend (see-mənd). [Old English] Hist. An arbitrator; an umpire.

saevitia (si-vish-ee-ə). [Latin fr. saevus "cruel"] Hist. Cruelty in a marriage, as a result of which cohabitation is dangerous enough to justify a decree of separation.

safe, adj. Not exposed to danger; not causing danger <driving at a safe limit of speed>.

safe-berth clause. See SAFE-PORT CLAUSE.

safe-conduct. Int'l law. 1. A privilege granted by a belligerent allowing an enemy, a neutral, or some other person to travel within or through a designated area for a specified purpose. 2. A document conveying this privilege.

"Safe-conduct . . . The grantee is inviolable so long as he complies with the conditions imposed on him or necessitated by the circumstances of the case. Unless stated, a safe-conduct does not cover goods or luggage. They may be given also for ships and for goods. To be effective under international law the grant must have been arranged between belligerents." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1098 (1980).

safe-deposit box. A lockbox stored in a bank's vault to secure a customer's valuables. ● It usu. takes two keys (one held by the bank and one held by the customer) to open the box. — Often shortened to deposit box. — Also termed safety-deposit box.

safe-deposit company. See DEPOSITARY (1).

safe harbor. 1. An area or means of protection. 2. A provision (as in a statute or regulation) that affords protection from liability or penalty. ● SEC regulations, for example, provide a safe harbor for an issuer's business forecasts that are made in good faith.

safekeeping. Under the Securities Investors Protection Act, the holding of a security on behalf of the investor or broker that has paid for it. 15 USCA § 7811(2).

safe-port clause. A clause in a voyage or time charter expressly providing that the ship must go to a safe port nominated or ordered by the charterer. ● The ship can refuse an order to proceed to an unsafe port; compliance with the order exposes the charterer to liability for damage to the vessel resulting from entering an unsafe port. — Also termed safe-berth clause.

Safety Appliance Act. A federal law regulating the safety of equipment used by railroads in interstate commerce. 49 USCA §§ 20301 et seq.

safety-deposit box. See SAFE-DEPOSIT BOX.

safety engineering. The inspection and study of potentially dangerous conditions, usu. in an industrial environment, so that precautionary measures can be taken.

safe workplace. A place of employment in which all dangers that should reasonably be removed have been removed; a place of employment that is reasonably safe given the nature of the work performed. See OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH ADMINISTRATION.

sagibaro (sag-ə-bar-oh), n. [Old English] Hist. A determiner of disputes; a judge. — Also termed sachbaro (sak-bar-oh).

said, adj. Aforesaid; above-mentioned. • The adjective said is obsolescent in legal drafting, its last bastion being patent claims. But even in that context the word is giving way to the ordinary word the, which if properly used is equally precise. See AFORESAID.

“The word ‘said’ is used by many practitioners rather than ‘the’ to refer back to previously recited elements, sometimes to a previously cited anything. This practice is unobjectionable, although perhaps overly legalistic. If ‘sais’ or ‘thes’ are used, one should be consistent in the usage and not alternate between those words in repetitions of the same element or among different elements.”
Robert C. Faber, Landis on Mechanics of Patent Claim Drafting § 23, at 50 (3d ed. 1990).

sailor’s will. See soldier’s will under WILL.

sake and soke (sayk / sohk). Hist. A lord’s right to hold court and compel attendance. — Also spelled sak and soc (sak / sok).

salable (say-lə-bəl or sayl-ə-bəl), adj. Fit for sale in the usual course of trade at the usual selling price; MERCHANTABLE. — salability (say-lə-bil-ə-tee or sayl-ə-bil-ə-tee), n.

salable value. See fair market value under VALUE.

salarium (sə-lair-ee-əm), n. [Latin “salt money”] 1. Roman law. An allowance, esp. for living expenses, given to persons in noble professions (such as teachers or doctors) who were not allowed to sue for fees. 2. Roman law. Wages for persons engaged in military service on an emergency basis. • The regular soldier’s pay is a stipendium. 3. Hist. The rent or profits of a hall or house.

salary. An agreed compensation for services — esp. professional or semiprofessional services — usu. paid at regular intervals on a yearly basis, as distinguished from an hourly basis. • Salaried positions are usu. exempt from the requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act (on overtime and the like) but are subject to state regulation. Cf. WAGE.

accrued salary. A salary that has been earned but not yet paid.

sale, n. 1. The transfer of property or title for a price. 2. The agreement by which such a transfer takes place. • The four elements are (1) parties competent to contract, (2) mutual assent, (3) a thing capable of being transferred, and (4) a price in money paid or promised.

absolute sale. A sale in which possession and title to the property pass to the buyer immediately upon the completion of the bargain. Cf. conditional sale.

approval sale. See sale on approval.

auction sale. See AUCTION.

average gross sales. The amount of total sales divided by the number of sales transactions in a specific period.

bona fide sale. A sale made by a seller in good faith, for valuable consideration, and without notice of a defect in title or any other reason not to hold the sale.

bootstrap sale. 1. A sale in which the purchase price is financed by earnings and profits of the thing sold; esp., a leveraged buyout. See BUYOUT. 2. A seller’s tax-saving conversion of a business’s ordinary income into a capital gain from the sale of corporate stock.

bulk sale. See BULK TRANSFER.

cash-against-documents sale. See documentary sale.

cash sale. 1. A sale in which cash payment is concurrent with the receipt of the property sold. 2. A securities transaction on the stock-exchange floor requiring cash payment and same-day delivery.

compulsory sale. The forced sale of real property in accordance with either an eminent-domain order or an order for a judicial sale arising from nonpayment of taxes.

conditional sale. 1. A sale in which the buyer gains immediate possession but the seller retains title until the buyer performs a condition, esp. payment of the full purchase price. See conditional sales contract under CONTRACT. 2. A sale accompanied by an agreement to resell upon specified terms. Cf. absolute sale.

consignment sale. A sale of an owner’s property (such as clothing or furniture) by a third party entrusted to make the sale. See CONSIGNMENT.

consumer-credit sale. A sale in which the seller extends credit to the consumer. • A consumer-credit sale includes a lease in which the lessee’s rental payments equal or exceed the retail value of the item rented.

credit sale. A sale of goods to a buyer who is allowed to pay for the goods at a later time.

distress sale. 1. A form of liquidation in which the seller receives less for the goods than what would be received under normal sales conditions; esp., a going-out-of-business sale. 2. A foreclosure or tax sale.

dock sale. A sale in which a purchaser takes possession of the product at the seller's shipping dock, esp. for transportation outside the state.

documentary sale. A sale in which the buyer pays upon the seller's tender of documents of title covering the goods, plus a sight draft requiring the buyer to pay "at sight." • This type of sale typically occurs before delivery of the goods, which might be en route when the buyer pays. — Also termed cash-against-documents sale.

exclusive sale. A sale made by a broker under an exclusive-agency listing. See exclusive-agency listing under LISTING.

execution sale. A forced sale of a debtor's property by a government official carrying out a writ of execution. — Also termed forced sale; judgment sale; sheriff's sale. See EXECUTION.

executory sale. A sale agreed upon in principle but with a few minor details remaining.

fair sale. A foreclosure sale or other judicial sale conducted with fairness toward the rights and interests of the affected parties.

fire sale. 1. A sale of merchandise at reduced prices because of fire or water damage. 2. Any sale at greatly reduced prices, esp. due to an emergency. • Fire sales are often regulated to protect the public from deceptive sales practices.

forced sale. 1. See execution sale. 2. A hurried sale by a debtor because of financial hardship or a creditor's action. Cf. voluntary sale.

foreclosure sale. The sale of mortgaged property, authorized by a court decree or a power-of-sale clause, to satisfy the debt. See FORECLOSURE.

fraudulent sale. A sale made to defraud the seller's creditors by converting into cash property that should be used to satisfy the creditors' claims.

gross sales. Total sales (esp. in retail) before deductions for returns and allowances. — Also termed sales in gross.

installment sale. See INSTALLMENT SALE.

isolated sale. An infrequent or one-time sale that does not carry an implied warranty of merchantability.

judgment sale. See execution sale.

judicial sale. A sale conducted under the authority of a judgment or court order, such as an execution sale. — Also termed sheriff's sale.

lumping sale. A court-ordered sale in which several distinct pieces of property are sold together for a single sum.

memorandum sale. A conditional sale in which the buyer takes possession but does not accept title until approving the property.

net sale. The amount of money remaining from a sale, after deducting returns, allowances, rebates, discounts, and other expenses.

present sale. Under the UCC, a sale accomplished by the making of a contract. UCC § 2-106(1).

private sale. An unadvertised sale negotiated and concluded directly between the buyer and seller, not through an agent.

public sale. A sale made after public notice, as in an auction or sheriff's sale.

retail installment sale. See INSTALLMENT SALE.

sale and leaseback. See LEASEBACK.

sale and return. See sale or return.

sale as is. A sale in which the buyer accepts the property in its existing condition unless the seller has misrepresented its quality. — Also termed sale with all faults.

sale by sample. A sale in which the parties understand that the goods exhibited constitute the standard with which the goods not exhibited correspond and to which all deliveries should conform. • Any sample that is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods will conform to the sample or model. — Also termed sample sale.

sale in gross. 1. A sale of a tract of land made with no guarantee about the exact amount or size of the land being sold. 2. (pl.) See gross sales.

sale on approval. A sale in which completion hinges on the buyer's satisfaction, regardless of whether the goods conform to the contract. • Title and risk of loss remain with the seller until the buyer approves. UCC § 2-326(1)(a). — Also termed approval sale.

sale on credit. A sale accompanied by delivery of possession, but with payment deferred to a later date.

sale or return. A sale in which the buyer may return the goods to the seller, regardless of whether they conform to the contract, if the goods were delivered primarily for resale. • This transaction is a type of consignment in which the seller (usu. a distributor) sells goods to the buyer (often a retailer), who then tries to resell the goods, but a buyer who

sale per aversionem (pär ə-vər-zhee-oh-nəm). Civil law. A conveyance of all immovable property that falls within the boundaries stated in a purchase agreement, as opposed to a specified amount of acreage. • The sales price will not be modified because of a surplus or shortage in the amount of property that is exchanged, because the boundary description is the binding definition of the property conveyed. La. Civ. Code art. 2495.

sales in gross. See gross sales.

sale with all faults. See sale as is.

sale with right of redemption. A sale in which the seller reserves the right to retake the goods by refunding the purchase price.

sample sale. See sale by sample.

sheriff's sale. 1. See execution sale. 2. See judicial sale.

short sale. A sale of a security that the seller does not own or has not contracted for at the time of sale, and that the seller must borrow to make delivery. • Such a sale is usu. made when the seller expects the security's price to drop. If the price does drop, the seller can make a profit on the difference between the price of the shares sold and the lower price of the shares bought to pay back the borrowed shares.

short sale against the box. A short sale of a security by a seller who owns enough shares of the security to cover the sale but borrows shares anyway because the seller wants to keep ownership a secret or because the owned shares are not easily accessible. • Delivery may be made with either the owned or the borrowed shares, so it is less risky than an ordinary short sale. The phrase against the box refers to the owned shares that are in safekeeping; formerly, the "box" was a container used to store stock certificates.

similar sales. Eminent domain. Sales of like property in the same locality and time frame, admissible in a condemnation action to determine the marketable value of the particular property at issue.

simulated sale. A sale in which no price or other consideration is paid or intended to be paid, and in which there is no intent to actually transfer ownership. • Simulated sales are usu. done in an attempt to put property beyond the reach of creditors. — Also termed simulated transaction.

tax sale. A sale of property because of non-payment of taxes. See tax deed under DEED.

voluntary sale. A sale made freely with the seller's consent. Cf. forced sale.

wash sale. A sale of securities made at about the same time as a purchase of the same securities (such as within 30 days), resulting in no change in beneficial ownership. • A loss from a wash sale is usu. not tax-deductible. And securities laws prohibit a wash sale made to create the false appearance of market activity. — Also termed wash transaction.

sale and leaseback. See LEASEBACK.

sale and return. See sale or return under SALE.

sale as is. See SALE.

sale by sample. See SALE.

sale in gross. See SALE.

sale note. See NOTE (1).

sale-of-business doctrine. The outmoded rule holding that the transfer of stock incident to the sale of a business does not constitute a transfer of securities. • This doctrine was rejected by the U.S. Supreme Court in Landreth Timber Co. v. Landreth, 471 U.S. 681, 105 S.Ct. 2297 (1985), and its companion case, Gould v. Rufenacht, 471 U.S. 701, 105 S.Ct. 2308 (1985).

sale of land. A transfer of title to real estate from one person to another by a contract of sale. • A transfer of real estate is often referred to as a conveyance rather than a sale.

sale on approval. See SALE.

sale on credit. See SALE.

sale or exchange. 1. Tax. A voluntary transfer of property for value (as distinguished from a gift) resulting in a gain or loss recognized for federal tax purposes. 2. A transfer of property; esp., a situation in which proceeds of a sale are to be vested in another estate of the same character and use.

sale or return. See SALE.

sale per aversionem. See SALE.

sales agreement. A contract in which ownership of property is presently transferred, or will be transferred in the future, from a seller to a buyer for a fixed sum. UCC § 2-106(1).

sales-assessment-ratio study. A method for calculating the assessment level for taxable property in a jurisdiction, by comparing the assessed value and the actual sales price of a statistically reliable sample of the property in the jurisdiction, to determine the percentage by which the assessed values are above or below the sales prices.

sales finance company. See FINANCE COMPANY.

sales in gross. See gross sales under SALE.

sales invoice. See INVOICE.

sales journal. A book used to record sales of merchandise on account.

sales load. See LOAD.

sales mix. The relative combination of individual-product sales to total sales.

sales price. See PRICE.

sales puffery. See PUFFING (1).

sales tax. See TAX.

sale with all faults. See sale as is under SALE.

sale with right of redemption. See SALE.

Salic law (sal-ik or say-lik). An influential early medieval Frankish code of law that originated with the Salian Franks and that deals with a variety of civil property and family issues but is primarily a penal code listing the punishments for various crimes. • Salic law is the principal compilation of the early Germanic laws known collectively as leges barbarorum ("laws of the barbarians"). Salic law also designated a rule barring females from the line of succession to the throne, as a result of which references to Salic law have sometimes referred only to the code provision excluding women from inheriting certain lands (which probably existed only because military duties were connected with the inheritance). In the late 19th century, Oliver Wendell Holmes revived scholarly interest in Salic law by referring to it throughout The Common Law (1881). — Also termed Salique law; law Salique (sə-leek or sal-ik); lex Salica (leks sal-ə-kə).

salting, n. Labor law. A union tactic that involves a paid union employee going to work for a targeted nonunion employer with the intention of organizing the workforce. • The union agent (known as a salt) is considered an employee of the nonunion company and is protected by the National Labor Relations Act.

salus (sal-əs), n. [Latin] Health; prosperity; safety.

salva guardia. See DE SALVA GARDIA.

salvage (sal-vij), n. 1. The rescue of imperiled property. 2. The property saved or remaining after a fire or other loss, sometimes retained by an insurance company that has compensated the owner for the loss. 3. Compensation allowed to a person who, having a duty to do so, helps save a ship or its cargo. — salvage, vb.

"When some special and extraordinary assistance is rendered, whereby a ship, the persons on it, or its cargo, are saved, the persons rendering such successful assistance, who are called salvors, are entitled to a compensation, which is called salvage." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 168 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

"Salvage is a reward payable either by the shipowner or by the owners of goods carried in the ship to persons who save the ship or cargo from shipwreck, capture or other loss. The right to salvage is an ancient rule of maritime law and is not based on contractual rights. The actual amount payable is, as a rule, assessed by the Court. Sometimes an express agreement, fixing an amount, is made before the assistance is rendered, but this is not a question of salvage in the strict sense, which always implies service by persons who are under no obligation to render it." 2 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 98 (P.W. French ed., 10th ed. 1951).

salvage charges. Insurance. Costs necessarily incurred in salvage.

salvage loss. See LOSS.

salvager. See SALVOR.

salvage service. The aid or rescue given, either voluntarily or by contract, to a vessel in need of assistance because of present or apprehended danger. • Although salvage may involve towing, it is distinguished from towing service, which is rendered merely to expedite a voyage, not to respond to dangerous circumstances.

salvage value. See VALUE.

salvo (sal-voh). [Latin fr. salvus "safe"] Hist. 1. Saving; excepting. • This term was used in deeds. 2. Safely.

salvo conductu. See DE SALVO CONDUCTU.

salvo jure (sal-voh joor-ee). [Latin "the rule being safe"] Without prejudice to.

salvor (sal-vər), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A person who saves a vessel and its cargo from danger or loss; a person entitled to salvage. — Also termed salvager.

"A 'salvor' is a person who, without any particular relation to a ship in distress, proffers useful service, and gives it as a volunteer adventurer, without any pre-existing covenant that connected him with the duty of employing himself for the preservation of the ship. To be a salvor, one must have the intention and capacity to save the distressed property involved, but need not have an intent to acquire it." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Salvage § 2, at 270 (1993).

salvus plegius (sal-vəs plee-jee-əs). [Law Latin] Hist. A safe pledge; a satisfactory pledge. See PLEDGE.

SAM. See shared-appreciation mortgage under MORTGAGE.

same, pron. The very thing just mentioned or described; it or them <two days after receiving the goods, Mr. Sivigliio returned same>.

same-actor inference. Employment law. The doctrine that when an employee is hired and fired by the same person, and the termination occurs a reasonably short time after the hiring, the termination will be presumed not to be based on a discriminatory reason.

same-elements test. See LEGAL-ELEMENTS TEST.

same-evidence test. Criminal law. A test of whether the facts alleged in a given case are essentially identical to those alleged in a previous case. • If they are the same, the Fifth Amendment's prohibition against double jeopardy will bar the later action, which is essentially a second prosecution for the same offense. This principle was first announced in Blockburger v. United States, 284 U.S. 299, 52 S.Ct. 180 (1932). — Also termed Blockburger test; actual-evidence test. See same offense under OFFENSE (1); DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

same invention. Patents. 1. A second invention claiming the identical subject matter as a previous invention. 2. Within a reissue statute, the invention described in the original patent.

same-invention double patenting. See DOUBLE PATENTING (1).

same offense. See OFFENSE (1).

same-sex harassment. See HARASSMENT.

sample sale. See sale by sample under SALE.

sanae mentis (san-ee men-tis). [Law Latin] Hist. Of sound mind; of sane mind.

sanctio (sangk-shee-oh). [Latin fr. sancio "to ordain, confirm, or forbid under penalty"] Roman law. A particular clause in a statute imposing a penalty on any violation of that statute. • Despite its appearance, this term does not derive from the Latin sanctus, meaning "holy."

"Sanctio (legis). A clause in a statute which strengthens its efficacy by fixing a penalty for its violation, by forbidding its derogation through a later enactment, or by releasing from responsibility any one who by acting in accordance with the statute violated another law. The purpose of the sanction clause was to settle the relation between the new statute and former and future legislation. Thus the sanctio could also state that a previous statute remained fully or partially in force without being changed by the new one." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 689 (1953).

sanction (sangk-shən), n. 1. Official approval or authorization <the committee gave sanction to the proposal>. 2. A penalty or coercive measure that results from failure to comply with a law, rule, or order .

"Without adequate sanctions the procedure for discovery would often be ineffectual. Under Rule 37 [of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure], ... any party or person who seeks to evade or thwart full and candid discovery incurs the risk of serious consequences, which may involve imprisonment for contempt of court, an order that designated facts be taken to be established, an order refusing the delinquent party the right to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, striking out pleadings or parts of pleadings, rendering judgment by default, dismissal of the action or a claim therein, or assessment of expenses and attorney's fees. Sanctions are intended to prompt a party to respond." 8A Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 2281, at 595-95 (2d ed. 1994).

criminal sanction. A sanction attached to a criminal conviction, such as a fine or restitution. — Also termed penal sanction.

"A criminal sanction ... is a legally authorized post-conviction deprivation suffered by a human being through governmental action. By using the words 'post-conviction' in that definition, criminal sanctions are thus limited to those imposed upon defendants in criminal proceedings who, by reason or in consequence of a judgment entered upon a verdict of guilty found by a jury, or judge sitting without a jury (the latter having been legally waived), or upon a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere, stand convicted." A Treatise on the Law of Crimes § 2.00, at 66 (Marian Quinn Barnes ed., 7th ed. 1967).

death-penalty sanction. Civil procedure. A court's order dismissing the suit or entering a default judgment in favor of the plaintiff because of extreme discovery abuses by a party or because of a party's action or inaction that shows an unwillingness to participate in the case. • Such a sanction is rarely ordered, and is usu. preceded by orders of lesser sanctions that have not been complied with or that have not remedied the problem.

shame sanction. A criminal sanction designed to stigmatize or disgrace a convicted offender, and often to alert the public about the offender's conviction. • A shame sanction usu. publicly associates the offender with the crime that he or she committed. An example is being required to post a sign in one's yard stating, "Convicted Child Molester Lives Here." — Also termed shame sentence; shaming sanction; shaming sentence; scarlet-letter punishment; scarlet-letter sentence.

3. Int'l law. An economic or military coercive measure taken by one or more countries toward another to force it to comply with international law <U.N. sanctions against a renegade nation>.

sanction, vb. 1. To approve, authorize, or support <the court will sanction the trust disposition if it is not against public policy>. 2. To penalize by imposing a sanction <the court sanctioned the attorney for violating the gag order>.

sanctionable, adj. (Of conduct or action) meriting sanctions; likely to be sanctioned.

sanctions tort. A means of recovery for another party's discovery abuse, whereby the judge orders the abusive party to pay a fine to the injured party for the discovery violation. • This is not a tort in the traditional sense, but rather a form of punishment that results in monetary gain for the injured party.

sanctity of contract. The principle that the parties to a contract, having duly entered into it, must honor their obligations under it.

"[Sanctity of contract] is merely another facet of freedom of contract, but the two concepts cover, to some extent, different grounds. The sanctity of contractual obligations is merely an expression of the principle that once a contract is freely and voluntarily entered into, it should be held sacred, and should be enforced by the Courts if it is broken. No doubt this very sanctity was an outcome of freedom of contract, for the reason why contracts were held sacred was the fact that the parties entered into them of their own choice and volition, and settled the terms by mutual agreement." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 12 (3d ed. 1981).

sanctuary. 1. A safe place, esp. where legal process cannot be executed; asylum.

"In medieval England, as elsewhere in Europe, there were a number of ecclesiastical places where the king's writ did not run. The underlying theory was that consecrated places should not be profaned by the use of force, but the result in practice was that thieves and murderers could take refuge and thereby gain immunity even against the operation of criminal justice. This was the privilege called 'sanctuary.' In the case of parochial churches, the sanctuary lasted for forty days only. Before the expiration of this period, the fugitive had to choose whether to stand trial or 'abjure' the realm This was only permitted if he made a written confession to the coroner, which resulted in the forfeiture of his property as on conviction; his life only was spared . . ." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 585 (3d ed. 1990).

2. A holy area of a religious building; esp., the area in a church where the main altar is located.

sandbagging, n. A trial lawyer's remaining glibly silent when a possible error occurs at trial, with the hope of preserving an issue for appeal if the court does not correct the problem. • Such a tactic does not usu. preserve the issue for appeal because objections must be promptly made to alert the trial judge of the possible error.

S & L. abbr. SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

sandpapering, n. A lawyer's general preparation of a witness before a deposition or trial. Cf. HORSESHEDDING.

sandwich lease. See LEASE.

sane, adj. Having a relatively sound and healthy mind; capable of reason and of distinguishing right from wrong.

sanguis (sang-gwis), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. Blood relationship. 2. Hist. Consanguinity. 3. Hist. The right of a chief lord to judge cases involving bloodshed.

sanitary code. A set of ordinances regulating the food and healthcare industries.

sanity. The state or condition of having a relatively sound and healthy mind. Cf. INSANITY.

sanity hearing. 1. An inquiry into the mental competency of a person to stand trial. 2. A proceeding to determine whether a person should be institutionalized.

sans ce que (sanz see kə or sawn sə kə). [Law French] See ABSQUE HOC.

sans frais (sawn fray). [Law French] Without expense.

sans impeachment de wast (sanz im-pee-chment də wayst). [Law French] Hist. Without impeachment of waste.

sans jour (sawn zhoor or sanz joor). [Law French] Hist. Without day; SINE DIE. See ALLER SANS JOUR.

sans recours (sawn rə-koor or sanz ri-kuur). See WITHOUT RECOURSE.

sap, n. A club, a blackjack, a hose containing rocks in the middle, or any other object generally used as a bludgeon.

SAR. abbr. 1. STOCK-APPRECIATION RIGHT. 2. SUSPICIOUS-ACTIVITY REPORT.

sasine. See SEISIN.

satellite litigation. 1. One or more lawsuits related to a major piece of litigation that is being conducted in another court <the satellite litigation in state court prevented the federal judge from ruling on the issue>. 2. Peripheral skirmishes involved in the prosecution of a lawsuit <the plaintiffs called the sanctions "satellite litigation," drummed up by the defendants to deflect attention from the main issues in the case>.

satellite state. See CLIENT STATE.

satisdare (sat-is-dair-ee), vb. [Latin fr. satis "sufficient" + dare "to give"] Roman law. To give security in the form of satisdatio. See SATISDATIO.

satisdatio (sat-is-day-shee-oh), n. [Latin fr. satisdare] Roman law. Security given by a person, such as a debtor, through a surety.

satisfaction, n. 1. The giving of something with the intention, express or implied, that it is to extinguish some existing legal or moral obligation. • Satisfaction differs from performance because it is always something given as a substitute for or equivalent of something else, while performance is the identical thing promised to be done. — Also termed satisfaction of debt. 2. The fulfillment of an obligation; esp., the payment in full of a debt. 3. SATISFACTION PIECE. 4. Wills & estates. The payment by a testator, during the testator's lifetime, of a legacy provided for in a will; ADVANCEMENT. 5. Wills & estates. A testamentary gift intended to satisfy a debt owed by the testator to a creditor. — satisfy, vb. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

satisfaction contract. See CONTRACT.

satisfaction of judgment. 1. The complete discharge of obligations under a judgment. 2. The document filed and entered on the record indicating that a judgment has been paid.

"Generally, a satisfaction of a judgment is the final act and end of a proceeding. Satisfaction implies or manifests an expression of finality as to all questions of liability and damages involved in the litigation. Once satisfaction occurs, further alteration or amendment of a final judgment generally is barred. Satisfaction of a judgment, when entered of record by the act of the parties, is prima facie evidence that the creditor has received payment of the amount of the judgment or its equivalent, and operates as an extinguishment of the judgment debt." 47 Am. Jur. 2d Judgments § 1006, at 443 (1995).

satisfaction of lien. 1. The fulfillment of all obligations made the subject of a lien. 2. The document signed by the lienholder releasing the property subject to a lien.

satisfaction of mortgage. 1. The complete payment of a mortgage. 2. A discharge signed by the mortgagee or mortgage holder indicating that the property subject to the mortgage is released or that the mortgage debt has been paid and the mortgage conditions have been fully satisfied.

satisfaction piece. A written statement that one party (esp. a debtor) has discharged its obligation to another party, who accepts the discharge. — Also termed certificate of discharge; satisfaction.

satisfactory evidence. See EVIDENCE.

satisfactory proof. See satisfactory evidence under EVIDENCE.

satisfied term. See TERM (4).

Saturday-night special. 1. A handgun that is easily obtained and concealed. 2. Corporations. A surprise tender offer typically held open for a limited offering period (such as one week) to maximize pressure on a shareholder to accept. ● These tender offers are now effectively prohibited by section 14(e) of the Williams Act. 15 USCA § 78n(e).

saunkefin (sawn-kə-fan). [fr. Law French sang quifin] Hist. End of blood; the failure of a line of succession.

sauvagine (soh-və-zheen). [Law French] Hist. 1. Wild animal. 2. Wild nature of an animal.

save, vb. 1. To preserve from danger or loss <save a ship in distress>. 2. To lay up; to hoard <save money>. 3. To toll or suspend (the operation, running, etc.) of something <save a statute of limitations>. 4. To except, reserve, or exempt (a right, etc.) <to save vested rights>. 5. To lessen or avoid (a cost, resource, etc.) <save labor>.

save harmless. See HOLD HARMLESS.

save-harmless agreement. See HOLD-HARMLESS AGREEMENT.

save-harmless clause. See INDEMNITY CLAUSE.

saver default (say-vər di-fawlt). [Law French] Hist. To excuse a default. — Also spelled saver de fault; saver default.

“Saver default is the same as to excuse a default. And this is properly when a man having made default in court, comes afterwards, and alleges a good cause why he did it, as imprisonment at the same time, or the like.” Termes de la Ley 352 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

saving clause. 1. A statutory provision exempting from coverage something that would otherwise be included. ● A saving clause is generally used in a repealing act to preserve rights and claims that would otherwise be lost. 2. SAVING-TO-SUITORS CLAUSE. 3. SEVERABILITY CLAUSE. — Also termed savings clause.

savings account. A savings-bank depositor's account usu. bearing interest or containing conditions (such as advance notice) to the right of withdrawal.

savings-account trust. See Totten trust under TRUST.

savings-and-loan association. A financial institution — often organized and chartered like a bank — that primarily makes home-mortgage loans but also usu. maintains checking accounts and provides other banking services. — Often shortened to S & L. — Also termed loan association; thrift institution; thrift. Cf. BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

“The thrift institutions, mutual savings banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions, originally were created to meet needs for saving, credit and loans of people whose resources and income were modest. Commercial banks, merchants, money lenders, and pawn shops often did not serve this demand for loans or savings as well, or with interest rates as favorable to poor individuals, and families. During the last two centuries, thrift institutions were gradually developed, therefore, by social reformers, philanthropic benefactors, religious and fraternal organizations, trade unions, employers, and thrift entrepreneurs (in most countries of the world) as a collateral type of banking or financial intermediation.” William A. Lovett, Banking and Financial Institutions Law in a Nutshell 236 (1997).

savings bank. See BANK.

savings-bank trust. See Totten trust under TRUST.

savings bond. See BOND (3).

savings clause. See SAVING CLAUSE.

savings note. See NOTE (1).

saving-to-suitors clause. Maritime law. A federal statutory provision that allows a party to bring suit in either state or federal court, but requires both courts to apply federal substantive law. — Also termed saving clause. 28 USCA § 1333(1).

savor, vb. To partake of the character of or bear affinity to (something). ● In traditional legal idiom, an interest arising from land is said to “savor of the realty.” — Also spelled savour.

S.B. See senate bill under BILL (3).

SBA. abbr. SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION.

SBIC. abbr. SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT COMPANY.

sc. abbr. SCILICET.

S.C. abbr. 1. SUPREME COURT. 2. Same case. • In former practice, when put between two citations, the abbreviation indicated that the same case is reported in both places.

scab. A person who works under conditions contrary to a union contract; esp., a worker who crosses a union picket line to replace a union worker during a strike. — Also termed strike-breaker.

scabini (skə-bī-nī). [Law Latin] Hist. Judges or the judge's assessors in the court held by the count; magistrates. • The term was found in a charter from the wardens of Lynn in Norfolk, during the reign of Henry VIII. But even earlier than that, the title was used in Charlemagne's empire (the French equivalent being édevins) and later Germanized as Schöffen.

scalam (skay-ləm), n. [Latin] Hist. Scale. • Ad scalam was the method of paying money to the Exchequer, in which sixpence was added to each twenty shillings to compensate for a deficiency in weight, although no scales were actually used.

scale, n. 1. A progression of degrees; esp., a range of wage rates. 2. A wage according to a range of rates. 3. An instrument for weighing. 4. Hist. In the practice of the English Supreme Court of Judicature, the fee charged by a solicitor for a particular type of case. • Unless the court ordered otherwise, the lower scale applied to all causes and matters assigned by the Judicature Acts to the King's Bench, or the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty divisions; to all actions for debt, contract, or tort; and to almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the Chancery division and in which the amount in controversy was less than £1,000. The higher scale applied in all other cases, and in actions falling under one of the lower-scale classes if the principal relief sought was injunctive.

scale order. See ORDER (4).

scale tolerance. The nominal variation of the mass or weight of the same goods on different scales.

scaling law. Hist. A statute establishing a process for adjusting value differences between depreciated paper money and specie. • Statutes of this type were necessary when paper depreciated after both the American Revolution and the Civil War.

scalping, n. 1. The purchase of a security by an investment adviser before the adviser recommends that a customer buy the same security. • This practice is usu. considered unethical because the customer's purchase will increase the security's price, thus enabling the investment adviser to sell at a profit. 2. The excessive markup or markdown on a transaction by a market-maker. • This action violates NASD guidelines. 3. The practice of selling something (esp. a ticket) at a price above face value once it becomes scarce (usu. just before a high-demand event begins). — scalp, vb.

scandal. 1. Disgraceful, shameful, or degrading acts or conduct. 2. Slander. See SCANDALOUS MATTER.

"Scandal consists in the allegation of anything which is unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear, or is contrary to decency or good manners, or which charges some person with a crime not necessary to be shown in the cause, to which may be added that any unnecessary allegation, bearing cruelly upon the moral character of an individual, is also scandalous. The matter alleged, however, must be not only offensive, but also irrelevant to the cause, for however offensive it be, if it be pertinent and material to the cause the party has a right to plead it. It may often be necessary to charge false representations, fraud and immorality, and the pleading will not be open to the objection of scandal, if the facts justify the charge." Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 50-51 (1916).

scandalous matter. Civil procedure. A matter that is both grossly disgraceful (or defamatory) and irrelevant to the action or defense. • A federal court — upon a party's motion or on its own — can order a scandalous matter struck from a pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Cf. IMPERTINENT MATTER.

scandalum magnatum (skan-də-ləm mag-nay-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. Actionable slander of powerful people; specif., defamatory comments regarding persons of high rank, such as peers, judges, or state officials.

"Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm, which are called scandalum magnatum, are held to be still more heinous; and, though they be such as would not be actionable in the case of a common person, yet when spoken in disgrace of such high and respectable characters, they amount to an atrocious injury: which is redressed by an action on the case founded on many ancient statutes; as well on behalf of the crown, to inflict the punishment of imprisonment on the slanderer, as on behalf of the party, to recover damages for the injury sustained." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 123-24 (1768).

scarlet-letter punishment. See shame sanction under SANCTION.

scatter-point analysis. A method for studying the effect that minority-population changes have on voting patterns, involving a plotting of the percentage of votes that candidates receive to determine whether voting percentages increase or decrease as the percentages of voters of a particular race increase or decrease.

scènes à faire (sen ah fair). [French "scenes for action"] In copyright law, standard or general themes that are common to a wide variety of works and are therefore not copyrightable.

schedule, n. A written list or inventory; esp., a statement that is attached to a document and that gives a detailed showing of the matters referred to in the document <Schedule B to the title policy lists the encumbrances on the property>. — schedule, vb. — scheduled, adj.

scheme. 1. A systemic plan; a connected or orderly arrangement, esp. of related concepts <legislative scheme>. 2. An artful plot or plan, usu. to deceive others .

schism (siz-əm or skiz-əm). 1. A breach or rupture; a division, esp. among members of a group, as of a union. 2. A separation of beliefs and doctrines by persons of the same organized religion, religious denomination, or sect.

"It has been held that the civil courts are not concerned with mere schisms stemming from disputations over matters of religious doctrine, not only because such questions are essentially ecclesiastical rather than judicial, but also because of the separation between the church and the state However, it has also been held that the situation is different in the case of self-governing congressional churches, for here the courts do not hesitate to assume jurisdiction when a schism affects property rights, for in this form . . . each local congregation is independent and autonomous and there is no recourse within the denomination." 66 Am. Jur. 2d Religious Societies § 51, at 804 (1973).

school, n. 1. An institution of learning and education, esp. for children.

"Although the word 'school' in its broad sense includes all schools or institutions, whether of high or low degree, the word 'school' frequently has been defined in constitutions and statutes as referring only to the public common schools generally established throughout the United States When used in a statute or other contract, 'school' usually does not include universities, business colleges, or other institutions of higher education unless the intent to include such institutions is clearly indicated." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Schools § 1, at 355 (1993).

district school. A public school contained in and maintained by a school district. See SCHOOL DISTRICT.

private school. A school maintained by private individuals, religious organizations, or corporations, funded, at least in part, by fees or tuition, and open only to pupils selected and admitted based on religious affiliations or other particular qualifications.

public school. An elementary, middle, or high school established under state law, regulated by the local state authorities in the various political subdivisions, funded and maintained by public taxation, and open and free to all children of the particular district where the school is located. — Also termed common school.

science of legislation. See LAW REFORM.

sciendum est (sī-en-dəm est). [Latin] Roman law. It is to be known or understood. • This phrase often introduced a particular topic or explanation.

scienter (sī-en-tər or see-), n. [Latin “knowingly”] 1. A degree of knowledge that makes a person legally responsible for the consequences of his or her act or omission; the fact of an act’s having been done knowingly, esp. as a ground for civil damages or criminal punishment. See KNOWLEDGE; MENS REA. 2. A mental state consisting in an intent to deceive, manipulate, or defraud. • In this sense, the term is used most often in the context of securities fraud. The Supreme Court has held that to establish a claim for damages under Rule 10b-5, a plaintiff must prove that the defendant acted with scienter. Ernst & Ernst v. Hochfelder, 425 U.S. 185, 96 S.Ct. 1375 (1976).

scientific evidence. See EVIDENCE.

scientific knowledge. See KNOWLEDGE.

scientific method. An analytical technique by which a hypothesis is formulated and then systematically tested through observation and experimentation.

sci. fa. abbr. SCIRE FACIAS.

scil. abbr. SCILICET.

scilicet (sil-ə-set or -sit). [fr. Latin scire licet “that you may know”] That is to say; namely; VIDELICET. • Like videlicet, this word is used in pleadings and other instruments to introduce a more particular statement of matters previously mentioned in general terms. It has never been quite as common, however, as videlicet. — Abbr. sc.; scil.; (erroneously) ss.

scintilla (sin-til-ə). A spark or trace <the standard is that there must be more than a scintilla of evidence>. Pl. scintillas (sin-til-əz).

scintilla juris (sin-til-ə joor-is). [Law Latin “a spark of right”] Hist. A fragment of law or right. • This refers to a figurative expression in the law of uses providing a trace of seisin rights to remain in the feoffees sufficient to allow contingent uses to be executed under the Statute of Uses. It was abolished in the Law of Property Amendment Act of 1860. See STATUTE OF USES.

scintilla-of-evidence rule. A common-law doctrine holding that if even the slightest amount of relevant evidence exists on an issue, then a motion for summary judgment or for directed verdict cannot be granted and the issue must go to the jury. • Federal courts do not follow this rule, but some states apply it. — Also termed scintilla rule.

scire facias (sī-ree fay-shee-əs). [Law Latin “you are to make known, show cause”] A writ requiring the person against whom it is issued to appear and show cause why some matter of record should not be annulled or vacated, or why a dormant judgment against that person should not be revived. — Abbr. sci. fa.

amicable scire facias to revive a judgment. A written agreement in which a person against whom a revival of an action is sought agrees to the entry of an adverse judgment.

scire facias ad audiendum errores (sī-ree fay-shee-əs ad aw-dee-en-dəm e-ror-eez). [Law Latin “that you cause to know to hear errors”] Hist. A common-law writ allowing a party who had assigned error to compel the opposing party to plead. • It was abolished in 1875.

scire facias ad disprobandum debitum (sī-ree fay-shee-əs ad dis-proh-ban-dəm deb-ə-təm). [Law Latin “that you cause to know to disprove the debt”] Hist. A writ allowing a defendant in a foreign attachment against the plaintiff to disprove or avoid the debt recovered by the plaintiff, within a year and a day from the time of payment.

scire facias ad rehabendam terram (sī-ree fay-shee-əs ad re-hə-ben-dəm tər-əm), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know to recover the land”] Hist. A writ allowing a judgment debtor to recover lands taken in execution after the debtor has satisfied the judgment.

scire facias quare restitutionem non (sī-ree fay-shee-əs kwair-ee res-tə-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nəm non), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know why restitution not”] Hist. A writ for restitution after an execution on a judgment is levied but not paid and the judgment is later reversed on appeal.

scire facias sur mortgage (sī-ree fay-shee-əs sər mor-gj), n. [Law Latin “that you cause to know on mortgage”] Hist. A writ ordering a defaulting mortgagor to show cause why the mortgage should not be foreclosed and the property sold in execution.

scire facias sur municipal claim (sī-ree fay-shee-əs sər myoo-nis-ə-pəl klaym), n.

[Law Latin "that you cause to know on municipal claim"] Hist. A writ compelling the payment of a municipal claim out of the property to which a municipal lien is attached.

scire feci (si-ree fee-si). [Latin "I have caused to know"] Hist. The sheriff's return to a writ of scire facias, indicating that notice was given to the parties against whom the writ was issued.

scire fieri inquiry (si-ree fi-ə-ri), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ to ascertain the location of a testator's property from an executor, when the sheriff returned nulla bona to a writ of execution fieri facias de bonis testatoris. See FIERI FACIAS.

scite (sit). [fr. Latin situs] Archaic. 1. A location; a site. 2. The site of a capital message. 3. A municipal ordinance. — Also termed site.

scofflaw (skof-law). A person who treats the law with contempt; esp., one who avoids various laws that are not easily enforced <some scofflaws carry mannequins in their cars in order to drive in the carpool lane>.

scold, n. Hist. A person who regularly breaks the peace by scolding people, increasing discord, and generally being a public nuisance to the neighborhood. • This behavior was formerly punishable in various ways, including having an iron bridle fitted to the person's mouth. — Also termed common scold; objurgatrix. See BRANKS.

scolding bridle. See BRANKS.

scope note. In a digest, a precis appearing after a title and showing concisely what subject matter is included and what is excluded.

"In the Century and Decennial Digests, though not in the various digests of the Key-Number Series, there is printed immediately following each topic title a couple of paragraphs which are called the Scope-Note. The first paragraph of this scope-note shows very briefly the character of the subject-matter included under the title. The second paragraph shows the 'Exclusions' — i.e., what related matter has been excluded in order to conform to the plan of the Digest — and directs the reader to the proper title under which such related matter may be found. Consequently a little study of the scope-note will oftentimes repay the searcher for a few moments' time consumed in so doing." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 116 (3d ed. 1914).

scope of a patent. Patents. The invention limits protected under a patent, determined by methods based on established principles of patent law.

scriba (skri-bə), n. [Latin] Roman law. A court or office clerk; a scribe; a secretary. • In England, the scriba regis was the king's secretary.

scribere est agere (skri-bə-ree est aj-ə-ree). [Latin] Hist. To write is to act.

"But now it seems clearly to be agreed, that, by the common law and the statute of Edward III, words spoken amount only to a high misdemeanor, and no treason. For they may be spoken in heat, without any intention If the words be set down in writing, it argues more deliberate intention; and it has been held that writing is an overt act of treason; for scribere est agere. But even in this case the bare words are not the treason, but the deliberate act of writing them." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 80 (1769).

scrip. 1. A document that entitles the holder to receive something of value. 2. Paper money issued for temporary use.

scrip dividend. See DIVIDEND.

script. 1. An original or principal writing. 2. Handwriting.

scriptum indentatum (skrip-təm in-den-tay-təm). [Law Latin "indented writing"] Hist. An indenture.

scrivener (skriv-[ə]-nər). A writer; esp., a professional drafter of contracts or other documents.

money scrivener. A money broker; one who obtains money for mortgages or other loans.

scrivener's error. See clerical error under ERROR (2).

scutage (skyoo-tij), n. [fr. Latin scutum "a shield"] Hist. 1. A monetary payment levied by the king on barons as a substitute for some or all of the knights to be supplied to the king by each baron. • This payment seems to date from the 12th century, Henry II (1154–1189) having levied five scutages in the first 11 years of his reign. 2. A fee paid by a tenant-in-chief by knight-service in lieu of serving in a war. 3. A tax on a knight's estate to help furnish the army. — Also termed escuage.

"Scutage . . . Shield-money, in mediaeval feudal law, a payment in lieu of military service, paid by a tenant-in-chief in respect of the service of knights which he owed to the Crown. His personal obligation to serve could not be discharged by scutage but only by fine. Payment of scutage, though known in France and Germany, was most highly developed in England where it became a general tax on knights' estates at rates which by the thirteenth century were standardized. King John demanded frequent and heavy scutages and Magna Carta forbade the levying of scutage without the consent of a general council. Scutage was divided between the King and the tenants-in-chief who gave personal service in the campaign. It became obsolete by the fourteenth century." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 1121 (1980).

scutagio habendo. See DE SCUTAGIO HABENDO.

scyra (shy-rə), n. [Law Latin "shire"] Hist. 1. A county; shire. 2. A county's inhabitants.

seal, n. 1. An impression or sign that has legal consequence when applied to an instrument. 2. A fastening that must be broken before access can be obtained.

"The use of the seal in England seems to have begun after the Norman Conquest, spreading from royalty and a few of the nobility to those of lesser rank. Originally a seal often consisted of wax bearing the imprint of an individualized signet ring, and in the seventeenth century Lord Coke said that wax without impression was not a seal. But in the United States the courts have not required either wax or impression. Impressions directly on the paper were recognized early and are still common for notarial and corporate seals, and gummed wafers have been widely used. In the absence of statute decisions have divided on the effectiveness of the written or printed word 'seal,' the printed initials 'L.S.' (locus sigilli, meaning place of the seal), a scrawl made with a pen (often called a 'scroll') and a recital of sealing. Most states in which the seal is still recognized now have statutes giving effect to one or more such devices." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 96 cmt. a (1981).

"The time-honoured form of seal was a blob of wax at the foot of the document, bearing an imprint of some kind, often a crest or motto. The use of wax was not, however, necessary for a seal, and any mark or impression on the paper was sufficient as long as it was made with the intention of affixing a seal. Recent English cases have been willing to find the necessary intention in circumstances where courts in the past would almost certainly have declined; so much so that it may now be the common law that a document purporting to be executed as a deed but lacking actual sealing will be regarded as sealed as long as it contains a printed or written indication of where the mark or impression constituting the seal should be placed if it were to be affixed." Peter Butt, Land Law 481-82 (2d ed. 1988).

corporate seal. A seal adopted by a corporation for executing and authenticating its corporate and legal instruments.

sealed contract. See contract under seal under CONTRACT.

sealed instrument. At common law and under some statutes, an instrument to which the bound party has affixed a personal seal, usually recognized as providing indisputable evidence of the validity of the underlying obligations. • The common-law distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments has been abolished by many states, and the UCC provides that the laws applicable to sealed instruments do not apply to contracts for the sale of goods or negotiable instruments. UCC § 2-203. See contract under seal under CONTRACT; SPECIALTY.

"At common law, the seal served to render documents indisputable as to the terms of the underlying obligation, thereby dispensing with the necessity of witnesses; the sealed instrument was considered such reliable evidence that it actually became the contract itself — called a 'specialty' — the loss of which meant loss of all rights of the obligee against the obligor. The seal also had many other consequences at common law, some of which have been retained in jurisdictions which still recognize the seal In states where the seal is still recognized, its primary legal significance is often the application of a longer statute of limitations to actions on sealed instruments." 69 Am. Jur. 2d Seals § 2, at 617-18 (1993).

sealed testament. See mystic will under WILL.

sealed verdict. See VERDICT.

sealed will. See mystic will under WILL.

sea letter. Hist. A manifest issued during a war by authorities of a port where a neutral vessel is fitted, certifying the vessel's nationality, specifying the nature of and destination of the vessel's cargo, and allowing the vessel to sail under the neutral flag of its owner. ● The last sea letter was issued at the Port of New York in 1806, and the use of sea letters was discontinued by proclamation of President James Madison. — Also termed sea brief; sea pass; passport.

sealing records. The act or practice of officially preventing access to particular (esp. juvenile-criminal) records, in the absence of a court order. See EXPUNGEMENT.

seal of the state. See great seal (2) under SEAL.

seal of the United States. See great seal (1) under SEAL.

seaman. Maritime law. A person who assists in the navigation and operation of a vessel at sea; a sailor or mariner, esp. one below the rank of officer. ● Seamen's injuries are covered under the Jones Act. — Also termed mariner. See JONES ACT. Cf. STEVEDORE.

"The Jones Act plaintiff must be a 'seaman' who is injured (or killed) 'in the course of his employment.' The 'course of . . . employment' requirement at least excluded passengers, guests, trespassers, pirates (unless of course the pirate was suing his own employer) and so on. Who else might be excluded (or included) was, as a matter of initial construction, impossible to say. After a half-century of litigation the answer to the riddle is not apparent. The Supreme Court has alternated between giving the term 'seaman' an exceedingly broad construction and giving it a much narrower one. Consequently defendants have been encouraged to argue, in all but the most obvious cases, that plaintiff is not a Jones Act seaman and that the action must be dismissed. Thus there has always been, there continues to be, and presumably there will go on being a substantial volume of depressing litigation of this type." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 6-21, at 328 (2d ed. 1975).

"The traditional seaman is a member of the crew of a merchant vessel However, vessels are not limited in their functions to the transportation of goods over water. The performance by a vessel of some other mission, such as operating as a cruise ship, necessitates the presence aboard ship of employees who do not 'man, reef and steer' the vessel Exploration for oil and gas on navigable waters has led to further expansion of the concept of a 'seaman.' In 1959, in the celebrated case of Offshore Oil Co. v. Robinson, 266 F.2d 769 (5th Cir. 1959), the Fifth Circuit held that floating drilling structures are 'vessels' and that the amphibious oil workers aboard them are entitled to the seaman's remedies against their employers and the operators of the 'vessels' on which they are employed." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 178-80 (2d ed. 1988).

able-bodied seaman. An experienced seaman who is qualified for all seaman's duties and certified by an inspecting authority. — Abbr. AB; ABS. — Also termed able seaman; bluewater seaman.

merchant seaman. A sailor employed by a private vessel, as distinguished from one employed in public or military service.

ordinary seaman. A seaman who has some experience but who is not proficient enough to be classified as an able-bodied seaman. — Abbr. OS; OD.

seaman's will. See soldier's will under WILL.

sea pass. See SEA LETTER.

search, n. 1. An examination of a person's body, property, or other area that the person would reasonably be expected to consider as private, conducted by a law-enforcement officer for the purpose of finding evidence of a crime. ● Because the Fourth Amendment prohibits unreasonable searches (as well as seizures), a search cannot ordinarily be conducted without probable cause. — search, vb.

"It must be recognized that whenever a police officer accosts an individual and restrains his freedom to walk away, he has 'seized' that person. And it is nothing less than sheer torture of the English language to suggest that a careful exploration of the outer surfaces of a person's clothing all over his or her body in an attempt to find weapons is not a 'search.'" Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 16, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 1877 (1968) (Warren, J.).

administrative search. A search of public or commercial premises carried out by a regulatory authority for the purpose of enforcing compliance with health, safety, or security regulations. ● The probable cause required for an administrative search is less stringent than that required for a search incident to a criminal investigation. — Also termed regulatory search; inspection search.

border search. A search conducted by immigration or customs officials at the border of a country to detect and prevent illegal entries of people or things. • A border search requires no warrant.

checkpoint search. A search anywhere on a military installation.

consent search. A warrantless search conducted after the person who is to be searched or who has authority over the property to be searched voluntarily gives consent.

"The voluntariness of a consent to search is 'to be determined from the totality of all the circumstances.' [Schneekloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 93 S.Ct. 2041 (1973).] Among the factors to be considered in determining the effectiveness of an alleged consent to search are whether the defendant (1) has minimal schooling or was of low intelligence; (2) was mentally ill or intoxicated; (3) was under arrest at the time the consent was given; (4) was overpowered by officers, handcuffed, or similarly subject to physical restriction; (5) has seized from him by the police the keys to the premises thereafter searched; (6) employed evasive conduct or attempted to mislead the police; (7) denied guilt or the presence of any incriminatory objects in his premises; (8) earlier gave a valid confession or otherwise cooperated, as by instigating the search, or at least the investigation leading to the search; or (10) was refused his request to consult with counsel. The presence of some of these factors is not controlling, however, as each case must stand or fall on its own special facts." Jerold H. Israel & Wayne R. LaFave, Criminal Procedure in a Nutshell 141-42 (5th ed. 1993).

constructive search. A subpoena of a corporation's records.

"[I]t is settled that the so-called 'constructive search' involved in an administrative subpoena of corporate books or records constitutes a 'search' or 'seizure' within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Searches and Seizures § 44, at 674 (1993).

exigent search (eks-ə-jənt). A warrantless search carried out in response to a sudden emergency. • This type of search is often performed to preserve evidence or to ensure the safety of the arresting officers.

illegal search. See unreasonable search.

inventory search. A complete search of an arrestee's person before being booked into jail. • All possessions found are typically held in police custody.

no-knock search. A search of property by the police without knocking and announcing their presence and purpose before entry. • A no-knock search warrant may be issued under limited circumstances, as when a prior announcement would lead to the destruction of the objects searched for, or would endanger the safety of the police officer or another person.

private search. A search conducted by a private person rather than by a law-enforcement officer. • Items found during a private search are generally admissible in evidence if the person conducting the search was not acting at the direction of a law-enforcement officer.

protective search. A search of a detained suspect and the area within the suspect's immediate control, conducted to protect the arresting officer's safety (as from a concealed weapon) and often to preserve evidence. • A protective search can be conducted without a warrant. Chimel v. California, 395 U.S. 752, 89 S.Ct. 2034 (1969). — Also termed search incident to arrest; Chimel search (shə-mel).

regulatory search. See administrative search.

shakedown search. A usu. random and warrantless search for illicit or contraband material (such as weapons or drugs) in a prisoner's cell. — Often shortened to shakedown.

strip search. A search of a person conducted after that person's clothes have been removed, the purpose usu. being to find any contraband the person might be hiding.

unreasonable search. A search conducted without probable cause or other considerations that would make it legally permissible. — Also termed illegal search.

voluntary search. A search in which no duress or coercion was applied to obtain the defendant's consent. See consent search.

zone search. A search of a crime scene (such as the scene of a fire or explosion) by dividing it up into specific sectors.

2. An examination of public documents or records for information; esp., TITLE SEARCH. 3. Int'l law. The wartime process of boarding and examining the contents of a merchant vessel for contraband. • A number of treaties regulate the manner in which the search must be conducted. See RIGHT OF SEARCH.

search-and-seizure warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

search book. A lawbook that contains no statements of the law but instead consists of lists or tables of cases, statutes, and the like, used simply to help a researcher find the law. • Most indexes, other than index-digests, are search books.

search incident to arrest. See protective search under SEARCH (1).

search warrant. A judge's written order authorizing a law-enforcement officer to conduct a search of a specified place and to seize evidence. — Also termed search-and-seizure warrant. See WARRANT (1).

anticipatory search warrant. A search warrant based on an affidavit showing probable cause that evidence of a certain crime (such as illegal drugs) will be located at a specific place in the future.

blanket search warrant. 1. A single search warrant that authorizes the search of more than one area. 2. An unconstitutional warrant that authorizes the seizure of everything found at a given location, without specifying which items may be seized.

no-knock search warrant. A search warrant that authorizes the police to enter premises without knocking and announcing their presence and purpose before entry because a prior announcement would lead to the destruction of the objects searched for or would endanger the safety of the police or another person. See no-knock search under SEARCH.

sea reeve (see reev). Hist. An officer appointed to watch the shore and enforce a lord's maritime rights, including the right to wreckage.

section. 1. A distinct part or division of a writing, esp. a legal instrument. — Abbr. § ; sec.; s. 2. Real estate. A piece of land containing 640 acres, or one square mile. • Traditionally, public lands in the United States were divided into 640-acre squares, each one called a "section." — Also termed section of land.

half section. A piece of land containing 320 acres, laid off either by a north-and-south or by an east-and-west line; half a section of land.

quarter section. A piece of land containing 160 acres, laid off by a north-south or east-west line; one quarter of a section of land, formerly the amount usu. granted to a homesteader. — Often shortened to quarter.

section 8(f) agreement. Labor law. A labor contract that is negotiated between an employer in the construction business and a union that cannot demonstrate that it represents a majority of the employees at the time the contract is executed. 29 USCA § 158(f). • This is an exception to the general rule that an employer need only negotiate with a union that can demonstrate majority status. It was enacted in part because of the nature of the construction industry, in which the employers may have several different jobs in different parts of the country, the jobs are typically completed in a relatively short time, and the workforce is often transient. Since the workforce often does not have sufficient ties to a particular employer to petition for a certification election, section 8(f) agreements are directed toward providing a certain level of protection in recognition of that fact. But section 8(f) agreements are not equivalent to collective-bargaining agreements. For example, the employer can legally repudiate the agreement at any time, and the employees may not legally picket to enforce the agreement. The main protection such an agreement provides is a monetary obligation, which can be enforced, if necessary, in federal court. And if the union achieves majority status, the section 8(f) agreement will essentially become a fully enforceable collective-bargaining agreement.

section of land. See SECTION.

sectis non faciendis (sek-tis non fay-shee-en-dis). See DE SECTIS NON FACIENDIS.

sectores (sek-tor-eez), n. [Latin] Roman law. Successful bidders at public auctions.

securitize, vb. To convert (assets) into negotiable securities for resale in the financial market, allowing the issuing financial institution to remove assets from its books, to improve its capital ratio and liquidity while making new loans with the security proceeds. — securitized, adj. — securitization, n.

security, n. 1. Collateral given or pledged to guarantee the fulfillment of an obligation; esp., the assurance that a creditor will be repaid (usu. with interest) any money or credit extended to a debtor. 2. A person who is bound by some type of guaranty; SURETY. 3. The state of being secure, esp. from danger or attack. 4. An instrument that evidences the holder's ownership rights in a firm (e.g., a stock), the holder's creditor relationship with a firm or government (e.g., a bond), or the holder's other rights (e.g., an option). ● A security indicates an interest based on an investment in a common enterprise rather than direct participation in the enterprise. Under an important statutory definition, a security is any interest or instrument relating to finances, including a note, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, certificate of interest or participation in a profit-sharing agreement, collateral trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, fractional undivided interest in oil, gas, or other mineral rights, or certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guarantee of, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase any of these things. A security also includes any put, call, straddle, option, or privilege on any security, certificate of deposit, group or index of securities, or any such device entered into on a national securities exchange, relating to foreign currency. 15 USCA § 77b(1). Cf. SHARE (2); STOCK (4).

"Securities differ from most other commodities in which people deal. They have no intrinsic value in themselves — they represent rights in something else. The value of a bond, note or other promise to pay depends on the financial condition of the promisor. The value of a share of stock depends on the profitability or future prospects of the corporation or other entity which issued it; its market price depends on how much other people are willing to pay for it, based on their evaluation of those prospects." David L. Ratner, Securities Regulation in a Nutshell 1 (4th ed. 1992).

"What do the following have in common: scotch whiskey, self-improvement courses, cosmetics, earthworms, beavers, muskrats, rabbits, chinchillas, fishing boats, vacuum cleaners, cemetery lots, cattle embryos, master recording contracts, animal feeding programs, pooled litigation funds, and fruit trees? The answer is that they have all been held to be securities within the meaning of federal or state securities statutes. The vast range of such unconventional investments that have fallen within the ambit of the securities laws' coverage is due to the broad statutory definition of a 'security' . . ." 1 Thomas Lee Hazen, Treatise on the Law of Securities Regulation § 1.5, at 28–29 (3d ed. 1995).

adjustment security. A stock or bond that is issued during a corporate reorganization. ● The security holders' relative interests are readjusted during this process.

assessable security. A security on which a charge or assessment covering the obligations of the issuing company is made. ● Bank and insurance-company stock may be assessable.

asset-backed security. A debt security (such as a bond) that is secured by assets that have been pooled and secured by the assets from the pool.

bearer security. An unregistered security payable to the holder. Cf. bearer bond under BOND (3).

certificated security. A security that is a recognized investment vehicle, belongs to or is divisible into a class or series of shares, and is represented on an instrument payable to the bearer or a named person.

collateral security. A security, subordinate to and given in addition to a primary security, that is intended to guarantee the validity or convertibility of the primary security.

consolidated security. (usu. pl.) A security issued in large enough numbers to provide the funds to retire two or more outstanding issues of debt securities.

conversion security. The security into which a convertible security may be converted, usu. common stock.

convertible security. A security (usu. a bond or preferred stock) that may be exchanged by the owner for another security, esp. common stock from the same company, and usu. at a fixed price on a specified date. — Also termed (specif.) convertible debt; convertible stock.

coupon security. A security with detachable interest coupons that the holder must present for payment as they mature. • Coupon securities are usu. in denominations of $1,000, and they are negotiable.

debt security. A security representing funds borrowed by the corporation from the holder of the debt obligation; esp., a bond, note, or debenture. • Generally, a debt security is any security that is not an equity security. See BOND (3).

divisional security. A special type of security issued to finance a particular project.

equity security. A security representing an ownership interest in a corporation, such as a share of stock, rather than a debt interest, such as a bond; any stock or similar security, or any security that is convertible into stock or similar security or carrying a warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase stock or a similar security, and any such warrant or right.

exempt security. A security that need not be registered under the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 and is exempt from the margin requirements of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

fixed-income security. A security that pays a fixed rate of return, such as a bond with a fixed interest rate or a preferred stock with a fixed dividend.

government security. A security issued by a government, a government agency, or a government corporation; esp., a security (such as a Treasury bill) issued by a U.S. government agency, with the implied backing of Congress. — Also termed government-agency security; agency security.

heritable security. Scots law. A debt instrument secured by a charge on heritable property. See heritable bond under BOND (2).

high-grade security. A security issued by a company of sound financial condition and having the ability to maintain good earnings (e.g., a utility company security).

hybrid security. A security with features of both a debt instrument (such as a bond) and an equity interest (such as a share of stock). • An example of a hybrid security is a convertible bond, which can be exchanged for shares in the issuing corporation and is subject to stock-price fluctuations.

investment security. An instrument issued in bearer or registered form as a type commonly recognized as a medium for investment and evidencing a share or other interest in the property or enterprise of the issuer.

junior security. A security that is subordinate to a senior security.

landed security. A mortgage or other encumbrance affecting land.

letter security. See restricted security.

listed security. A security accepted for trading on a securities exchange. • The issuing company must have met the SEC's registration requirements and complied with the rules of the particular exchange. — Also termed listed stock. See DELISTING.

long-term security. 1. A new securities issue with an initial maturity of ten years or more. 2. On a balance sheet, a security with a remaining maturity of one year or more.

low-grade security. A security with low investment quality. • Low-grade securities usu. offer higher yields to attract capital. See junk bond under BOND (3).

marginable security. A security that can be bought on margin. — Also termed margin stock. See MARGIN.

marginized security. A security that is bought on margin and that serves as collateral in a margin account. See MARGIN.

marketable security. A security that the holder can readily sell on a stock exchange or an over-the-counter market.

mortgage-backed security. A security (esp. a pass-through security) backed by mortgages.

municipal security. See municipal bond under BOND (3).

noncallable security. A security that cannot be redeemed, or bought back, at the issuer's option. — Also termed (specif.) non-callable bond.

nonmarketable security. 1. A security that cannot be sold on the market (such as government bonds) and can be redeemed only by the holder. 2. A security that is not of investment quality.

outstanding security. A security that is held by an investor and has not been redeemed by the issuing corporation.

pass-through security. A security that passes through payments from debtors to investors. • Pass-through securities are usu. assembled and sold in packages to investors by private lenders who deduct a service fee before passing the principal and interest payments through to the investors.

personal security. 1. An obligation for the repayment of a debt, evidenced by a pledge or note binding a natural person, as distinguished from property. 2. A person's legal right to enjoy life, health, and reputation.

public security. A negotiable or transferable security that is evidence of government debt.

real security. The security of mortgages or other liens or encumbrances upon land. See COLLATERAL.

redeemable security. Any security, other than a short-term note, that, when presented to the issuer, entitles the holder to receive a share of the issuer's assets or the cash equivalent. — Also termed callable security.

registered security. 1. A security whose owner is recorded in the issuer's books. • The issuer keeps a record of the current owners for purposes of sending dividends, proxies, and the like. 2. A security that is to be offered for sale and for which a registration statement has been submitted. — Also termed (specif.) registered stock.

restricted security. A security that is not registered with the SEC and therefore may not be sold publicly unless specified conditions are met. • A restricted security is usu. acquired in a nonpublic transaction in which the buyer gives the seller a letter stating the buyer's intent to hold the stock as an investment rather than resell it. — Also termed restricted stock; letter security; letter stock; unregistered security.

senior security. A security of a class having priority over another class as to the distribution of assets or the payment of dividends. 15 USCA § 77r(d)(4).

shelf security. A security that is set aside for shelf registration.

short-term security. A bond or note that matures and is payable within a brief period (often one year).

structured security. (usu. pl.) A security whose cash-flow characteristics depend on one or more indexes, or that has an embedded forward or option, or a security for which an investor's investment return and the issuer's payment obligations are contingent on, or highly sensitive to, changes in the value of the underlying assets, indices, interest rates, or cash flows. SEC Rule 434(h) (17 CFR § 230.434(h)).

treasury security. See treasury stock under STOCK.

uncertificated security. A share or other interest in property or an enterprise, or an obligation of the issuer that is not represented by an instrument but is registered on the issuer's books. UCC § 8-102(a)(18). • This term was called uncertified security in previous versions of the UCC.

unlisted security. An over-the-counter security that is not registered with a stock exchange. — Also termed unlisted stock.

unregistered security. See restricted security.

voting security. See voting stock under STOCK.

when-issued security. A security that can be traded even though it has not yet been issued. • Any transaction that takes place does not become final until the security is issued.

worthless security. A security that has lost its value, for which a loss (usu. capital) is allowed for tax purposes. IRC (26 USCA) § 165.

zero-coupon security. A security (esp. a bond) that is issued at a large discount but pays no interest.

security agreement. An agreement that creates or provides for an interest in specified real or personal property to guarantee the performance of an obligation.

Security Council. A body of the United Nations, consisting of five permanent members (China, France, Russia, the United Kingdom, and the United States) and ten additional members elected at stated intervals, charged with the responsibility of maintaining international peace and security, and esp. of preventing or halting wars by diplomatic, economic, or military action.

security deposit. See DEPOSIT (3).

security for costs. Money, property, or a bond given to a court by a plaintiff or an appellant to secure the payment of court costs if that party loses.

security grade. See SECURITY RATING.

security grading. See SECURITY RATING.

security interest. A property interest created by agreement or by operation of law to secure performance of an obligation (esp. repayment of a debt). • Although the UCC limits the creation of a security interest to personal property, the Bankruptcy Code defines the term to mean “a lien created by an agreement.” 11 USCA § 101(51).

purchase-money security interest. A security interest that is created when a buyer uses the lender's money to make the purchase and immediately gives the lender security (UCC § 9-107); a security interest that is either (1) taken or retained by the seller of the collateral to secure all or part of its price or (2) taken by a person who by making advances or incurring an obligation gives value to enable the debtor to acquire rights in or the use of collateral if that value is in fact so used. • If a buyer's purchase of a boat, for example, is financed by a bank that loans the amount of the purchase price, the bank's security interest in the boat that secures the loan is a purchase-money security interest. — Abbr. PMSI. — Also termed purchase-money interest.

unperfected security interest. A security interest held by a creditor who has not established priority over any other creditor. • The only priority is over the debtor.

security rating. 1. The system for grading or classifying a security by financial strength, stability, or risk. • Firms such as Standard and Poor's and Moody's grade securities. — Also termed security grade; security grading; security rate. 2. The classification that a given security is assigned to under this system.

secus (see-kəs). [Latin] Otherwise; to the contrary.

sedato animo (si-day-toh an-ə-moh). [Latin] With stated or settled purpose.

se defendendo (see def-en-den-doh), adv. [Law Latin] In self-defense; in defending oneself <homicide se defendendo>.

“Homicide se defendendo is of two kinds. (1) Such, as tho it excuseth from death, yet it excuseth not the forfeiture of goods, . . . (2) Such as wholly acquits from all kinds of forfeiture.” 1 Hale P.C. 478.

sedentary work. See WORK.

sedente curia (si-den-tee kyoor-ee-ə). [Latin] The court sitting; during the court sitting.

sede plena (see-dee plee-nə). [Latin] Hist. The see being filled. • This term indicated that a bishop's see was not vacant.

sedes (see-deez), n. [Latin “a seat”] 1. Roman law. A private residence. 2. Roman law. Judicial office; the bench. 3. Hist. A see; a bishop's dignity.

sedge flat. A tract of land below the high-water mark.

sedition, n. An agreement, communication, or other preliminary activity aimed at inciting treason or some lesser commotion against public authority; advocacy aimed at inciting or producing — and likely to incite or produce — imminent lawless action. • At common law, sedition included defaming a member of the royal family or the government. The difference between sedition and treason is that the former is committed by preliminary steps, while the latter entails some overt act for carrying out the plan. But of course, if the plan is merely for some small commotion, even accomplishing the plan does not amount to treason. — seditious, adj. Cf. TREASON.

“Sedition — This, perhaps the very vaguest of all offences known to the Criminal Law, is defined as the speaking or writing of words calculated to excite disaffection against the Constitution as by law established, to procure the alteration of it by other than lawful means, or to incite any person to commit a crime to the disturbance of the peace, or to raise discontent or disaffection, or to promote ill-feeling between different classes of the community. A charge of sedition is, historically, one of the chief means by which Government, especially at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century, strove to put down hostile critics. It is evident that the vagueness of the charge is a danger to the liberty of the subject, especially if the Courts of Justice can be induced to take a view favourable to the Government.” Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 136 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

seditious conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

seditious libel. See LIBEL.

seditious speech. See SPEECH.

sed non allocatur (sed non al-ə-kay-tər). [Law Latin] Hist. But it is not allowed or upheld. • This phrase was formerly used to indicate the court's disagreement with the arguments of counsel.

sed per curiam (sed pər kyoor-ee-əm). [Latin] But by the court. • This phrase is used to introduce: (1) a statement made by the court disagreeing with counsel's arguments; or (2) the opinion of the whole court when different from the opinion of the single judge immediately before quoted.

sed quaere (sed kweer-ee). [Latin] But inquire; examine this further. • This remark indicates that the correctness of a particular statement is challenged.

seduction. The offense that occurs when a man entices a woman of previously chaste character to have unlawful intercourse with him by means of persuasion, solicitation, promises, or bribes, or other means not involving force. • Many states have abolished this offense for persons over the age of legal consent. Traditionally, the parent has an action to recover damages for the loss of the child's services. But in measuring damages, the jury may consider not just the loss of services but also the distress and anxiety that the parent has suffered in being deprived of the child's comfort and companionship. Though seduction was not a crime at common law, many American states made it a statutory crime until the late 20th century.

sed vide (sed vi-dee). [Latin] But see. • This remark, followed by a citation, directs the reader's attention to an authority or a statement that conflicts with or contradicts the statement or principle just given. — Also termed but see.

see, n. The area or district of a bishop's jurisdiction <the see of Canterbury>.

seed money. Start-up money for a business venture. — Also termed front money; front-end money.

segregation, n. 1. The act or process of separating. 2. The unconstitutional policy of separating people on the basis of color, nationality, religion, or the like. — segregate, vb. — segregative, adj.

de facto segregation. Segregation that occurs without state authority, usu. on the basis of socioeconomic factors.

de jure segregation. Segregation that is permitted by law.

punitive segregation. The act of removing a prisoner from the prison population for placement in separate or solitary confinement, usu. for disciplinary reasons.

seignior (seen-yər), n. [Law French] Hist. An owner of something; a lord of a fee or manor. — Also spelled seigneur (seen- or sayn-yər); seignor. See SEIGNIORY.

seignior in gross (seen-yər in grohs), n. A lord having no manor but enjoying the other rights of lordship.

seigniorage (seen-yər-ij), n. [Law French] 1. Hist. The tenure existing between lord and vassal. 2. Hist. A prerogative of the Crown; specif., the charge for coining bullion into money; mintage. 3. A royalty. 4. A profit.

seignioress (seen-yər-es or -is), n. [Law French] Hist. A female superior; a lady.

seignior (seen-yər-ee), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. The rights and powers of a lord; esp., a grantor's retained right to have the grantee perform services in exchange for the transfer of land. 2. A lord's dominions; a feudal or manor lordship; esp., land held subject to such a retained right in the grantor. — Also spelled seignory.

seignior in gross (seen-yər-ee in grohs). See reputed manor under MANOR.

seise (seez), vb. To invest with seisin or establish as a holder in fee simple; to put in possession <he became seised of half a section of farmland near Tulia>.

seisin (see-zin), n. Possession of a freehold estate in land; ownership. — Also spelled seizin. — Also termed vesture; seisina; (in Scots law) sasine.

“Originally, seisin meant simply possession and the word was applicable to both land and chattels. Prior to the fourteenth century it was proper to speak of a man as being seised of land or seised of a horse. Gradually, seisin and possession became distinct concepts. A man could be said to be in possession of chattels, or of lands wherein he had an estate for years, but he could not be said to be seised of them. Seisin came finally to mean, in relation to land, possession under claim of a freehold estate therein. The tenant for years had possession but not seisin; seisin was in the reversioner who had the fee. And although the word ‘seisin’ appears in modern statutes with a fair degree of frequency, it is usually treated as synonymous with ownership." Cornelius J. Moynihan, Introduction to the Law of Real Property 98–99 (2d ed. 1988).

actual seisin. See seisin in deed.

constructive seisin. See seisin in law.

covenant of seisin. See COVENANT (4).

customary seisin. See quasi seisin.

equitable seisin. See seisin in law.

legal seisin. See seisin in law.

livery of seisin. See LIVERY OF SEISIN.

primer seisin (prim-ər or pri-mər see-zin).

Hist. A right of the Crown to receive, from the heir of a tenant who died in possession of a knight's fee, one year's profits of the inherited estate (or half a year's profits if the estate was in reversion); FIRST FRUITS (1). quasi-seisin. A copyholder's possession of lands, the freehold possession being in the lord. — Also termed customary seisin.

seisin in deed. Actual possession of a freehold estate in land, by oneself or by one's tenant or agent, as distinguished from legal possession. — Also termed seisin in fact; actual seisin.

seisin in fact. See actual seisin.

seisin in law. The right to immediate possession of a freehold estate in land, as when an heir inherits land but has not yet entered it. — Also termed legal seisin; constructive seisin; equitable seisin.

seisina (see-zin-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Seisin.

seisina habenda (see-zin-ə hə-ben-də). See DE SEISINA HABENDA.

seisin in fact. See actual seisin under SEISIN.

seize, vb. 1. To forcibly take possession (of a person or property). 2. To place (someone) in possession. 3. To be in possession (of property). See SEISIN; SEIZURE.

seizure, n. The act or an instance of taking possession of a person or property by legal right or process; esp., in constitutional law, a confiscation or arrest that may interfere with a person's reasonable expectation of privacy.

select committee. See special committee under COMMITTEE.

select council. See COUNCIL.

selecti judices (si-lek-ti joo-di-seez). [Latin] Roman law. Jurors on the official panel prepared by the praetor, who for a specific trial were drawn by lot subject to challenge and sworn to office in a similar manner to modern juries.

selective disclosure. The act of divulging part of a privileged communication, or one of several privileged communications, usu. because the divulged portion is helpful to the party giving the information, while harmful portions of the communication are withheld. • Such a disclosure can result in a limited waiver of the privilege for all communications on the same subject matter as the divulged portion.

selective enforcement. The practice of law-enforcement officers who use wide or even unfettered discretion about when and where to carry out certain laws; esp., the practice of singling a person out for prosecution or punishment under a statute or regulation because the person is a member of a protected group or because the person has exercised or is planning to exercise a constitutionally protected right. — Also termed selective prosecution. Cf. VINDICTIVE PROSECUTION.

"The chief of police of a New England town once declared to the press that he believed in a strict curfew law, 'selectively enforced.' 'Selective enforcement' in this case means that the policeman decides for himself who ought to be sent home from the street; legislative candour would suggest that if this is the intention it ought to be expressed in the law itself, instead of being concealed behind words that are 'strict' and categorical." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 42 (1968).

selective incorporation. See INCORPORATION.

selective prosecution. See SELECTIVE ENFORCEMENT.

selective prospectivity. A court's decision to apply a new rule of law in the particular case in which the new rule is announced, but to apply the old rule in all other cases pending at the time the new rule is announced or in which the facts predate the new rule's announcement.

Selective Service System. An executive agency charged with maintaining records of all persons eligible for military service. — Abbr. SSS.

selectman. A municipal officer elected annually in some New England towns to transact business and perform some executive functions.

self-applying, adj. (Of a statute, ordinance, etc.) requiring no more for interpretation than a familiarity with the ordinary meanings of words.

self-authentication. See AUTHENTICATION.

self-crimination. See SELF-INCRIMINATION.

self-critical-analysis privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

self-dealing, n. Participation in a transaction that benefits oneself instead of another who is owed a fiduciary duty. • For example, a corporate director might engage in self-dealing by participating in a competing business to the corporation's detriment. — self-deal, vb. Cf. FAIR DEALING.

self-defense, n. 1. The use of force to protect oneself, one's family, or one's property from a real or threatened attack. • Generally, a person is justified in using a reasonable amount of force in self-defense if he or she believes that the danger of bodily harm is imminent and that force is necessary to avoid this danger. — Also termed defense of self. Cf. ADEQUATE PROVOCATION.

"The law of self-defence, as it is applied by the courts, turns on two requirements: the force must have been necessary, and it must have been reasonable." Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 114 (1991).

imperfect self-defense. The use of force by one who makes an honest but unreasonable mistake that force is necessary to repel an attack. • In some jurisdictions, such a self-defender will be charged with a lesser offense than the one committed.

perfect self-defense. The use of force by one who accurately appraises the necessity and the amount of force to repel an attack.

2. Int'l law. The right of a state to defend itself against a real or threatened attack. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) self-defence. — self-defender, n.

"Self-defence, properly understood, is a legal right, and as with other legal rights the question whether a specific state of facts warrants its exercise is a legal question. It is not a question on which a state is entitled, in any special sense, to be a judge in its own cause." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 319 (5th ed. 1955).

self-destruction. See SUICIDE.

self-determination contract. See CONTRACT.

self-determination election. See GLOBE ELECTION.

self-employed retirement plan. See KEOGH PLAN.

self-employment tax. See TAX.

self-executing, adj. (Of an instrument) effective immediately without the need of any type of implementing action <the wills had self-executing affidavits attached>. • Legal instruments may be self-executing according to various standards. For example, treaties are self-executing under the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution (Article VI, § 2) if textually capable of judicial enforcement and intended to be enforced in that manner.

self-help, n. An attempt to redress a perceived wrong by one's own action rather than through the normal legal process. • The UCC and other statutes provide for particular self-help remedies (such as repossession) if the remedy can be executed without breaching the peace. UCC § 9-503. — Also termed self-redress; extrajudicial enforcement.

"Notice to the debtor is generally not required prior to self-help repossession of collateral by the creditor upon default, although the provision for self-help repossession has been held to violate due process requirements in some instances, and states under the Uniform Consumer Credit Code require particular notice requirements. Furthermore, while the UCC generally does not require notice to the debtor upon self-help repossession of the collateral upon the debtor's default, the agreement between the parties may require such notice prior to repossession." 68A Am. Jur. 2d Secured Transactions § 608, at 466 (1993).

self-help remedy. See extrajudicial remedy under REMEDY.

self-incrimination. The act of indicating one's own involvement in a crime or exposing oneself to prosecution, esp. by making a statement. — Also termed self-crimination; self-inculpation. See RIGHT AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION.

Self-Incrimination Clause. The clause of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution barring the government from compelling criminal defendants to testify against themselves.

self-induced frustration. See FRUSTRATION.

self-induced intoxication. See voluntary intoxication under INTOXICATION.

self-insurance. See INSURANCE.

self-insured retention. Insurance. The amount of an otherwise-covered loss that is not covered by an insurance policy and that usu. must be paid before the insurer will pay benefits <the defendant had a $1 million CGL policy to cover the loss, but had to pay a self-insured retention of $100,000, which it had agreed to so that the policy premium would be lower>. — Abbr. SIR. Cf. DEDUCTIBLE.

self-killing. See SUICIDE.

self-liquidating mortgage. See amortized mortgage under MORTGAGE.

self-murder. See SUICIDE.

self-policing privilege. See self-critical-analysis privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

self-proved will. See WILL.

self-proving affidavit. See AFFIDAVIT.

self-redress. See SELF-HELP.

self-serving declaration. See DECLARATION (6).

self-settled trust. See TRUST.

self-slaughter. See SUICIDE.

self-stultification. The act or an instance of testifying about one's own deficiencies. See STULTIFY.

sell, vb. To transfer (property) by sale.

seller. 1. A person who sells or contracts to sell goods; a vendor. UCC § 2-103(1)(d). 2. Generally, a person who sells anything; the transferor of property in a contract of sale.

seller's market. See MARKET.

seller's option. See OPTION.

selling agent. The real-estate broker's representative who sells the property, as opposed to the agent who lists the property for sale. Cf. LISTING AGENT.

selling price. See sales price under PRICE.

sell-off, n. A period when heavy pressure to sell causes falling stock-market prices.

sell order. See ORDER (4).

semble (sem-bəl). [Law French] It seems; it would appear <semble that the parties' intention was to create a binding agreement>. • This term is used chiefly to indicate an obiter dictum in a court opinion or to introduce an uncertain thought or interpretation. — Abbr. sem.; semb.

semestria (si-mes-tree-ə), n. [Latin "half-yearly matters"] Roman law. The collected decisions of Roman emperors, issued every six months. — Also spelled semenstria.

semi-matrimonium (sem-I ma-trə-moh-nee-əm), n. [Latin] A half-marriage.

seminary. 1. An educational institution, such as a college, academy, or other school. 2. The building in which the institution performs its functions.

seminaufragium (sem-I-naw-fray-jee-əm), n. [Latin] Hist. A half-shipwreck, as when goods are cast overboard in a storm or when a damaged ship's repair costs are more than the ship's worth.

semi-plena probatio (sem-I-plee-nə proh-bay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Half-proof.

semi-skilled work. See WORK.

semper (sem-pər). [Latin] Always. • This term introduces several Latin maxims, such as semper in dubiis benigniora praeferenda sunt ("in doubtful cases, the more favorable constructions are always to be preferred").

senage (see-nij). [French] Money paid for synodals; tribute-money. See SYNODAL.

senate. 1. The upper chamber of a bicameral legislature. 2. (cap.) The upper house of the U.S. Congress, composed of 100 members — two from each state — who are elected to six-year terms. — Abbr. S.

senate bill. See BILL (3).

senator. A person who is a member of a senate.

senatores (sen-ə-tor-eez), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Members of the Roman senate. 2. Members of the municipal councils.

senatorial courtesy. 1. The tradition that the President should take care in filling a high-level federal post (such as a judgeship) with a person agreeable to the senators from the nominee's home state, lest the senators defeat confirmation.

"The risk of a deadlock is minimized by [the President's] consulting informally with the Senators from the State in which the office lies, if they are members of his own political party. Actually this amounts in most instances to his taking the advice of these two Senators as to a selection. A nomination approved by them is practically certain of final confirmation by the Senate as a whole. The arrangement is a 'log-rolling' one, which has been dignified by the name of 'Senatorial courtesy.' 'If you will help me to get the appointments I want in my State, I will help you get the appointments you want in your State.'" Herbert W. Horwill, The Usages of the American Constitution 129 (1925).

2. Loosely, civility among senators .

senatus (si-nay-təs), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. The senate; the great national council of Roman statesmen and dignitaries. 2. The meeting place for the Roman senate.

senatus consulta (si-nay-təs kən-səl-tə). [Latin] Roman law. Advice from the Roman Senate, which had no legal weight (though it was usu. followed) until the end of the second century A.D., when it became the official expression of the imperial will.

"Senatus consulta. — In the regal and republican periods the Senate enjoyed no legislative power. It was an advisory body, nominated by the King, and at first purely patrician. Later it . . . included patricians and plebeians . . . its chief duty still being to tender advice to the magistrates . . . The theory still was, till the time of Hadrian, that senatus consulta were directions to the magistrates, who were now in fact, if not in name, bound to give effect to them, till by a process of gradual usurpation senatus consulta came to be direct legislation." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 12–13 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

Senatus consulto (si-nay-təs kən-səl-toh). [Latin] Roman law. By the decree of the Senate.

senatus consultum (si-nay-təs kən-səl-təm). [Latin] Roman law. A decree of the Roman Senate. — Also termed senatus consult.

senatus consultum Macedonianum (si-nay-təs kən-səl-təm mas-ə-doh-nee-ay-nəm), n. [Latin "Macedo's Decree"] Roman law. A senate decree, first given under Claudius and renewed by Vespasian, to protect children from making unconscionable loans with creditors in expectation of their father's death, by making actions to recover such loans unlawful. — Also termed Macedonian Decree.

"In the principate of Vespasian, 69–79 A.D., a senatus consultum was passed which forbade loans to a filius-familias. It was called the senatus consultum — Macedonianum, after one Macedo, a usurer who had made such a loan and thereby instigated a hard-pressed debtor to kill his father in order to enter into his inheritance. To prevent tragic possibilities like these, the senatus consultum declared that no action would lie to recover money lent to a filius-familias." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 188–89 (1927).

"The senatus consultum Macedonianum reads as follows: 'Whereas Macedo's borrowings gave him an added incentive to commit a crime to which he was naturally predisposed and whereas those who lend money on terms which are dubious, to say the least, often provide evil men with the means of wrongdoing, it has been decided, in order to teach pernicious moneylenders that a son's debt cannot be made good by waiting for his father's death, that a person who has lent money to a son-in-power is to have no claim or action even after the death of the person in whose power he was.'" Digest of Justinian 14.6.1 (Ulpian, Ad Sabinum 49).

senatus consultum ultimae necessitatis (si-nay-təs kən-səl-təm əl-tə-mee nə-ses-i-tay-tis). [Latin] Roman law. A decree of the senate of the last necessity. • This decree usu. preceded the nomination of a leader with absolute power in a time of emergency. — Also termed senatus consultum ultimum.

senatus consultum Velleianum (si-nay-təs kən-səl-təm vel-ee-ay-nəm). [Latin "Velleian Decree"] Roman law. A senate decree, probably of A.D. 46, to protect women from making unconscionable guarantees, suretyship undertakings, or debt assumptions for their husbands and for others generally, by making actions to enforce such undertakings unlawful.

senatus decreta (si-nay-təs di-kree-tə), n. [Latin] Roman law. The senate's decisions.

sending state. The country from which a diplomatic agent or consul is sent abroad. Cf. RECEIVING STATE.

senescallus (sen-əs-kal-əs), n. [Law Latin] See SENESCHAL. seneschal (sen-ə-shəl), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. A French title of office, equivalent to a steward in England. • A seneschal was originally a duke's lieutenant or a lieutenant to other dignities of the kingdom. 2. The steward of a manor. — Also termed senescallus.

senility. Mental feebleness or impairment caused by old age. ● A senile person (in the legal, as opposed to the popular, sense) is incompetent to enter into a binding contract or to execute a will. — Also termed senile dementia (see-nil di-men-shee-ə).

senior, adj. 1. (Of a debt, etc.) first; preferred, as over junior obligations. 2. (Of a person) older than someone else. 3. (Of a person) higher in rank or service. 4. (Of a man) elder, as distinguished from the man's son who has the same name.

senior interest. See INTEREST (2).

seniority. 1. The preferential status, privileges, or rights given an employee based on the employee's length of service with an employer. ● Employees with seniority may receive additional or enhanced benefit packages and obtain competitive advantages over fellow employees in layoff and promotional decisions. 2. The status of being older or senior.

seniority system. Employment law. Any arrangement that recognizes length of service in making decisions about job layoffs and promotions or other advancements.

senior judge. See JUDGE.

senior lien. See LIEN.

senior mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

senior partner. See PARTNER.

senior security. See SECURITY.

senior status. The employment condition of a judge who, having taken semiretirement, continues to perform certain judicial duties that the judge is willing and able to undertake.

sensitivity training. Instructional sessions for management and employees designed to counteract the callous treatment of others, esp. women and minorities, in the workplace.

sensus (sen-səs). [Latin] Hist. Sense; meaning; signification. ● The word appears in its inflected form in phrases such as malo sensu ("an evil sense"), mitiori sensu ("in a milder sense"), and sensu honesto ("in an honest sense").

sentence, n. The judgment that a court formally pronounces after finding a criminal defendant guilty; the punishment imposed on a criminal wrongdoer . — sentence, vb.

accumulative sentences. See consecutive sentences.

aggregate sentence. A sentence that arises from a conviction on multiple counts in an indictment.

concurrent sentences. Two or more sentences of jail time to be served simultaneously. ● For example, if a defendant receives concurrent sentences of 5 years and 15 years, the total amount of jail time is 15 years.

conditional sentence. A sentence of confinement if the defendant fails to perform the conditions of probation.

consecutive sentences. Two or more sentences of jail time to be served in sequence. ● For example, if a defendant receives consecutive sentences of 20 years and 5 years, the total amount of jail time is 25 years. — Also termed cumulative sentences; accumulative sentences.

death sentence. A sentence that imposes the death penalty. — Also termed judgment of blood. See DEATH PENALTY.

deferred sentence. A sentence that will not be carried out if the defendant meets certain requirements, such as complying with conditions of probation.

determinate sentence. A sentence for a fixed length of time rather than for an unspecified duration. — Also termed definite sentence; definitive sentence; fixed sentence; flat sentence; straight sentence.

fixed sentence. 1. See determinate sentence. 2. See mandatory sentence.

flat sentence. See determinate sentence.

general sentence. An undivided, aggregate sentence in a multicount case; a sentence that does not specify the punishment imposed for each count. ● General sentences are prohibited.

indeterminate sentence. 1. A sentence of an unspecified duration, such as one for a term of 10 to 20 years. 2. A maximum prison term that the parole board can reduce, through statutory authorization, after the inmate has served the minimum time required by law. — Also termed indefinite sentence. See INDETERMINATE SENTENCING.

intermittent sentence. A sentence consisting of periods of confinement interrupted by periods of freedom. — Also termed (when served on weekends) weekend sentence.

life sentence. A sentence that imprisons the convicted criminal for life — though in some jurisdictions the prisoner may become eligible for release on good behavior, rehabilitation, or the like.

mandatory sentence. A sentence set by law with no discretion for the judge to individualize punishment. — Also termed mandatory penalty; mandatory punishment; fixed sentence.

maximum sentence. The highest level of punishment provided by law for a particular crime.

minimum sentence. The least amount of time that a defendant must serve in prison before becoming eligible for parole.

multiple sentences. Concurrent or consecutive sentences, if a defendant is found guilty of more than one offense.

nominal sentence. A criminal sentence in name only; an exceedingly light sentence.

noncustodial sentence. A criminal sentence (such as probation) not requiring prison time.

presumptive sentence. An average sentence for a particular crime (esp. provided under sentencing guidelines) that can be raised or lowered based on the presence of mitigating or aggravating circumstances.

split sentence. A sentence in which part of the time is served in confinement — to expose the offender to the unpleasantness of prison — and the rest on probation.

straight sentence. See determinate sentence.

suspended sentence. A sentence postponed so that the defendant is not required to serve time unless he or she commits another crime or violates some other court-imposed condition. ● A suspended sentence, in effect, is a form of probation. — Also termed withheld sentence.

weekend sentence. See intermittent sentence.

sentence cap. Military law. A pretrial plea agreement in a court-martial proceeding, by which a ceiling is placed on the maximum penalty that can be imposed.

sentence-factor manipulation. See sentencing entrapment under ENTRAPMENT.

sentence-package rule. Criminal procedure. The principle that a defendant can be resentenced on an aggregate sentence — that is, one arising from a conviction on multiple counts in an indictment — when the defendant successfully challenges part of the conviction, as by successfully challenging some but not all of the counts.

sentencing council. A panel of three or more judges who confer to determine a criminal sentence. ● Sentencing by a council occurs less frequently than sentencing by a single trial judge.

sentencing entrapment. See ENTRAPMENT.

sentencing guidelines. A set of standards for determining the punishment that a convicted criminal should receive, based on the nature of the crime and the offender's criminal history. ● The federal government and several states have adopted sentencing guidelines in an effort to make judicial sentencing more consistent.

sentencing hearing. See PRESENTENCE HEARING.

sententia (sen-ten-shee-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Sense; meaning. 2. An opinion, esp. a legal opinion. 3. A judicial decision.

SEP (sep). See simplified employee pension plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

separability clause. See SEVERABILITY CLAUSE.

separable, adj. Capable of being separated or divided .

separable controversy. A claim that is separate and independent from the other claims being asserted in a suit. ● This term is most often associated with the statute that permits an entire case to be removed to federal court if one of the claims, being separate and independent from the others, presents a federal question that is within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. 28 USCA § 1441(c).

separaliter (sep-ə-ray-lə-tər). [Latin] Hist. Separately. ● This term was formerly used in an indictment to emphasize that multiple defendants were being charged with separate offenses, when it appeared from the general language of the indictment that the defendants were jointly charged.

separate, adj. (Of liability, cause of action, etc.) individual; distinct; particular; disconnected.

separate action. See ACTION.

separate and apart. (Of a husband and wife) living away from each other, along with at least one spouse's intent to dissolve the marriage.

separate-but-equal doctrine. The now-defunct doctrine that African-Americans could be segregated if they were provided with equal opportunities and facilities in education, public transportation, and jobs. • This rule was established in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138 (1896), and overturned in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686 (1954).

separate caucus. See CAUCUS.

separate count. See COUNT.

separate covenant. See several covenant under COVENANT (1).

separate demise. See DEMISE.

separate estate. See ESTATE.

separate examination. 1. The private interrogation of a witness, apart from the other witnesses in the same case. 2. The interrogation of a wife outside the presence of her husband by a court clerk or notary for the purpose of acknowledging a deed or other instrument. • This was done to ensure that the wife signed without being coerced to do so by her husband.

separate maintenance. See MAINTENANCE.

separate offense. See OFFENSE (1).

separate property. 1. In a community-property state, property that a spouse owned before marriage or acquired during marriage by inheritance or by gift from a third party, or property acquired during marriage but after the spouses have entered into a separation agreement and have begun living apart. — Also termed individual property. Cf. COMMUNITY PROPERTY; marital property under PROPERTY. 2. In some common-law states, property titled to one spouse or acquired by one spouse individually during marriage.

separate return. See TAX RETURN.

separate-sovereigns rule. Criminal procedure. The principle that a person may be tried twice for the same offense — despite the Double Jeopardy Clause — if the prosecutions are conducted by separate sovereigns, as by the federal government and a state government or by two different states. See DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

separate support. See separate maintenance under MAINTENANCE.

separate trading of registered interest and principal of securities. A treasury security by which the owner receives either principal or interest, but usu. not both. — Abbr. STRIP.

separate trial. See TRIAL.

separatim (sep-ə-ray-tim). [Latin] Hist. Severally. • This term referred to the formation of several covenants in a deed.

separation. 1. An arrangement whereby a husband and wife live apart from each other while remaining married, either by mutual consent or by judicial decree; the act of carrying out such an arrangement. — Also termed legal separation; judicial separation. 2. The status of a husband and wife having begun such an arrangement, or the judgment or contract that brought the arrangement about. 3. Cessation of a contractual relationship, esp. in an employment situation. — separate, vb.

separation agreement. An agreement between spouses in the process of a divorce or legal separation concerning alimony, property division, child custody and support, and the like. — Also termed separation order (if approved or sanctioned judicially).

separation a mensa et thoro. See divorce a mensa et thoro under DIVORCE.

separation from bed and board. See divorce a mensa et thoro under DIVORCE.

separation of patrimony. Civil law. The act of providing creditors of a succession the right to collect against the class of estate property from which the creditors should be paid, by separating certain succession property from property rights belonging to the heirs.

separation of powers. The division of governmental authority into three branches of government — legislative, executive, and judicial — each with specified duties on which neither of the other branches can encroach; the constitutional doctrine of checks and balances by which the people are protected against tyranny. Cf. DIVISION OF POWERS.

"[T]he doctrine of the separation of powers was adopted by the convention of 1787 not to promote efficiency but to preclude the exercise of arbitrary power. The purpose was not to avoid friction, but, by means of the inevitable friction incident to the distribution of the governmental powers among three departments, to save the people from autocracy." Justice Louis Brandeis (as quoted in Roscoe Pound, The Development of Constitutional Guarantees of Liberty 94 (1957)).

"Although in political theory much has been made of the vital importance of the separation of powers, it is extraordinarily difficult to define precisely each particular power. In an ideal state we might imagine a legislature which had supreme and exclusive power to lay down general rules for the future without reference to particular cases; courts whose sole function was to make binding orders to settle disputes between individuals which were brought before them by applying these rules to the facts which were found to exist; an administrative body which carried on the business of government by issuing particular orders or making decisions of policy within the narrow confines of rules of law that it could not change. The legislature makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes the law." George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 330 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

separation of witnesses. The exclusion of witnesses (other than the plaintiff and defendant) from the courtroom to prevent them from hearing the testimony of others.

separation order. See SEPARATION AGREEMENT.

separation pay. See SEVERANCE PAY.

sequatur sub suo periculo (si-kway-tər səb [s]y[oo]-oh pə-rik-[y]ə-loh), n. [Law Latin "let him follow at his peril"] Hist. A writ available when a sheriff returned nihil to several summonses; specif., a writ issued after the sheriff returned nihil to a warrant ad warrantizandum and following an alias and a pluries writ. See SICUT ALIAS.

sequela (si-kwee-lə), n. [Latin "that which follows"] Hist. Suit; process, as in sequela curiae ("a suit of court") and sequela causae ("the process of a cause"). Pl. sequelae (si-kwee-lee).

sequela villanorum (si-kwee-lə vil-ə-nor-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. The family and appurtenances to a villein's goods, which were at the lord's disposal.

sequestered account. See ACCOUNT.

sequesterer. See SEQUESTRATOR.

sequestrari facias (see-kwes-trair-i fay-shee-əs), n. [Law Latin "you are to cause to be sequestered"] Hist. Eccles. law. A process to enforce a judgment against a clergyman in a benefice, by which the bishop was ordered to sequester a church's rents, tithes, or other profits until the debt was paid.

sequestrate, vb. See SEQUESTER.

sequestratio (see-kwes-tray-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. The depositing of an object in dispute with a holder either voluntarily or by court order.

sequestration (see-kwes-tray-shən), n. 1. The process by which property is removed from the possessor pending the outcome of a dispute in which two or more parties contend for it. Cf. ATTACHMENT (1); GARNISHMENT.

conventional sequestration. The parties' voluntary deposit of the property at issue in a lawsuit.

judicial sequestration. The court-ordered deposit of the property at issue in a lawsuit.

2. The setting apart of a decedent's personal property when no one has been willing to act as a personal representative for the estate. 3. A judicial writ commanding the sheriff or other officer to seize the goods of a person named in the writ. • This writ is sometimes issued against a civil defendant who has defaulted or has acted in contempt of court. 4. The court-ordered seizure of a bankrupt's estate for the benefit of creditors. 5. Int'l law. The seizure by a belligerent power of enemy assets. 6. The freezing of a government agency's funds; SEQUESTER (1). 7. Custodial isolation of a trial jury to prevent tampering and exposure to publicity, or of witnesses to prevent them from hearing the testimony of others. — Also termed (in sense 7) jury sequestration.

sequestrator (see-kwes-tray-tər). 1. An officer appointed to execute a writ of sequestration. 2. A person who holds property in sequestration. — Also termed sequesterer.

sequestro habendo (si-kwes-troh hæ-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ from the sovereign to the bishop ordering the discharge of the sequestration of a benefice's profits.

serendipity doctrine. Criminal procedure. The principle that all evidence discovered during a lawful search is eligible to be admitted into evidence at trial.

serf. Hist. A person in a condition of feudal servitude, bound to labor at the will of a lord; a villein. • Serfs differed from slaves in that they were bound to the native soil rather than being the absolute property of a master.

"As the categories became indistinct, the more abject varieties of slavery disappeared and in the twelfth century the word 'villein' became the general term for unfree peasants. 'Serf' did not become a legal term of art, and in so far as it remained in use it did not connote a status lower than that of villein. The merger was to the detriment of the villani, but it ensured that full slavery was not received as part of the common law." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 532 (3d ed. 1990).

sergeant. 1. Hist. A person who is not a knight but holds lands by tenure of military service. 2. Hist. A municipal officer performing duties for the Crown. 3. Hist. A bailiff. 4. SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. 5. A noncommissioned officer in the armed forces ranking a grade above a corporal. 6. An officer in the police force ranking below a captain or lieutenant. — Also spelled serjeant.

sergeant-at-arms. 1. Hist. An armed officer attending a sovereign. 2. An officer the Crown assigns to attend a session of Parliament. 3. A court-appointed officer to attend a legislative body, as by serving process and maintaining order during a legislative session. — Also spelled serjeant-at-arms.

Sergeant Schultz defense. An assertion by a criminal or civil defendant who claims that he or she was not an active participant in an alleged scheme or conspiracy, and that he or she knew nothing, saw nothing, and heard nothing. • This defense is named after a character from the television series Hogan's Heroes, in which Sergeant Schultz, a German guard in charge of prisoners of war during World War II, would avoid controversy over the prisoners' schemes by proclaiming that he saw nothing and knew nothing.

serial bond. See BOND (3).

serial murder. See MURDER.

serial note. See installment note under NOTE.

serial right. The right of publication; esp., a right reserved in a publishing contract giving the author or publisher the right to publish the manuscript in installments (as in a magazine) before or after the publication of the book.

serial violation. Civil-rights law. The practice by an employer of committing a series of discriminatory acts against an employee, all of which arise out of the same discriminatory intent or animus. • Such a series of discriminatory acts will usu. be considered a continuing violation. For a claim on the violation to be timely, at least one of the discriminatory acts must fall within the time permitted to assert the claim (e.g., 300 days for a Title VII claim). Cf. SYSTEMATIC VIOLATION.

seriatim (seer-ee-ay-tim), adv. [Latin] One after another; in a series; successively <the court disposed of the issues seriatim>. — Also termed seriatly (seer-ee-at-lee).

servitude. 1. An encumbrance consisting in a right to the limited use of a piece of land without the possession of it; a charge or burden on an estate for another's benefit <the easement by necessity is an equitable servitude>. • The three types of servitudes are easements, licenses, and profits. See EASEMENT; LICENSE; PROFIT (2).

acquired servitude. A servitude that requires a special mode of acquisition before it comes into existence.

additional servitude. A servitude imposed on land taken under an eminent-domain proceeding for a different type of servitude, as when a highway is constructed on land condemned for a public sidewalk. • A landowner whose land is burdened by an additional servitude is entitled to further compensation.

apparent servitude. Civil law. A predial servitude that is manifested by exterior signs or constructions, such as a roadway. Cf. nonapparent servitude.

landed servitude. See servitude appurtenant.

legal servitude. A servitude arising from a legal limitation on a property's use.

mineral servitude. A servitude granting the right to enter another's property to explore for and extract minerals.

natural servitude. A servitude naturally appurtenant to land, requiring no special mode of acquisition. • An example is the right of land, unencumbered by buildings, to the support of the adjoining land.

navigation servitude. See NAVIGATION SERVITUDE.

negative servitude. Civil law. A real servitude allowing a person to prohibit the servient landowner from exercising a right. • For example, a negative servitude, such as jus ne luminibus officiat, prevents an owner of land from building in a way that blocks light from reaching another person's house.

nonapparent servitude. Civil law. A predial servitude that is not obvious because there are no exterior signs of its existence. • An example is a prohibition against building above a certain height. Cf. apparent servitude.

personal servitude. A servitude granting a specific person certain rights in property.

positive servitude. Civil law. A real servitude allowing a person to do something on the servient landowner's property, such as entering the property.

predial servitude. See servitude appurtenant.

private servitude. A servitude vested in a particular person. • Examples include a landowner's personal right-of-way over an adjoining piece of land or a right granted to one person to fish in another's lake.

public servitude. A servitude vested in the public at large or in some class of indeterminate individuals. • Examples include the right of the public to a highway over privately owned land and the right to navigate a river the bed of which belongs to some private person.

servitude appurtenant. A servitude that is not merely an encumbrance of one piece of land but is accessory to another piece; the right of using one piece of land for the benefit of another, such as the right of support for a building. — Also termed real servitude; predial (or praedial) servitude; landed servitude.

servitude in gross. A servitude that is not accessory to any dominant tenement for whose benefit it exists but is merely an encumbrance on a given piece of land.

urban servitude. A servitude appertaining to the building and construction of houses in a city, such as the right to light and air.

2. The condition of being a servant or slave <under the 15th Amendment, an American citizen's right to vote cannot be denied on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude>. 3. The condition of a prisoner who has been sentenced to forced labor <penal servitude>.

involuntary servitude. The condition of one forced to labor — for pay or not — for another by coercion or imprisonment.

servitus (sər-vi-təs), n. [Latin fr. servire “to serve”] Roman law. 1. Slavery; bondage. 2. A servitude; an easement. Pl. servitutes.

sess, n. See CESS.

sessio (sesh-ee-oh), n. [Latin “a sitting”] Hist. A session; a sitting, as in sessio parliamenti (“the sitting of Parliament”).

session. 1. A sitting together or meeting of a court, legislature, or other deliberative body so that it can conduct business <the court’s spring session>. — Also termed (for a court) sitting. See TERM (5). 2. The period within any given day during which such a body is assembled and performing its duties <court is in session>.

biennial session. A legislative session held every two years. • Most state legislatures have biennial sessions, usu. held in odd-numbered years.

closed session. 1. A session to which parties not directly involved are not admitted. 2. Military law. A period during a court-martial when the members (or the judge, if trial is before a military judge) deliberate alone. — Also termed closed court.

extraordinary session. See special session.

extra session. See special session.

joint session. The combined meeting of two legislative bodies (such as the House of Representatives and the Senate) to pursue a common agenda.

lame-duck session. A post-election legislative session in which some of the participants are voting during their last days as elected officials. See LAME DUCK.

open session. 1. A session to which parties not directly involved are admitted. 2. Military law. The period during a court-martial in which all participants are in the courtroom. • Generally, the public may attend a court-martial's open session.

plenary session. A meeting of all the members of a deliberative body, not just a committee.

quarter session. 1. English law. The meetings held four times a year by a county's justices of the peace to transact business, including trying certain criminal and civil matters as specified by statute. • The quarter sessions were abolished in 1971 and replaced by the Crown Court system. 2. Scots law. A meeting formerly held four times a year by the justices to review criminal sentences. — Abbr. Q.S.

regular session. A session that takes place at fixed intervals or specified times.

special session. A legislative session, usually called by the executive, that meets outside its regular term to consider a specific issue or to reduce backlog. — Also termed extra session; extraordinary session.

session laws. 1. A body of statutes enacted by a legislature during a particular annual or biennial session. 2. The softbound booklets containing these statutes. — Also termed acts of assembly; blue books; sheet acts.

set-aside, n. Something (such as a percentage of funds) that is reserved or put aside for a specific purpose.

set aside, vb. (Of a court) to annul or vacate (a judgment, order, etc.) <the judge refused to set aside the default judgment>.

setback, n. Real estate. The minimum amount of space required between a lot line and a building line . • Typically contained in zoning ordinances or deed restrictions, setbacks are designed to ensure that enough light and ventilation reach the property and to keep buildings from being erected too close to property lines.

set down, vb. To schedule (a case) for trial or hearing, usu. by making a docket entry.

se te fecerit securum (see tee fes-ər-it si-ky-oor-əm). [Latin] See SI FECERIT TE SECURUM.

set forth. See SET OUT.

seti. Mining law. A lease.

set of exchange. Commercial law. A single bill of lading drawn in a set of parts, each of which is valid only if the goods have not been delivered against any other part. • Bills may be drawn in duplicate or triplicate, the first part being "first of exchange," the second part being "second of exchange," and so on. When one part has been paid, the other parts become void.

setoff, n. 1. A defendant's counterdemand against the plaintiff, arising out of a transaction independent of the plaintiff's claim. 2. A debtor's right to reduce the amount of a debt by any sum the creditor owes the debtor; the counterbalancing sum owed by the creditor. — Also written set-off. — Also termed (in civil law) compensation; stoppage. — set off, vb. See COUNTERCLAIM; OFFSET. Cf. RECOUPMENT (3).

"Set-off signifies the subtraction or taking away of one demand from another opposite or cross demand, so as to distinguish the smaller demand and reduce the greater by the amount of the less; or, if the opposite demands are equal, to extinguish both. It was also, formerly, sometimes called stoppage, because the amount to be set-off was stopped or deducted from the cross demand." Thomas W. Waterman, A Treatise on the Law of Set-Off, Recoupment, and Counter Claim § 1, at 1 (2d ed. 1872).

"Before considering the counter-claim, a brief reference to 'the set-off as known in former practice is necessary. By the common law, the setting off of one demand against another in the same action was unknown. If A had a cause of action in debt against B, and B had another cause of action in debt in equal amount against A, each must bring his action. One could not be set off against the other. This was changed by statute in England in 1729, by a provision which, somewhat enlarged and modified, has been generally adopted in this country." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 250-51 (2d ed. 1899).

"Set-off is defined to be a counter-demand, generally of a liquidated debt growing out of an independent transaction for which an action might be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff." Eugene A. Jones, Manual of Equity Pleading and Practice 65 n.42 (1916).

set out, vb. To recite, explain, narrate, or incorporate (facts or circumstances) <set out the terms of the contract>. — Also termed set forth.

set over, vb. To transfer or convey (property) <to set over the land to the purchaser>.

setting, n. The date and time established by a court for a trial or hearing <the plaintiff sought a continuance of the imminent setting>.

special setting. A preferential setting on a court's calendar, usu. reserved for older cases or cases given priority by law, made either on a party's motion or on the court's own motion. ● For example, some jurisdictions authorize a special setting for cases involving a party over the age of 70. — Also termed special trial setting; trial-setting preference.

settled estate. See ESTATE.

settlement, n. 1. The conveyance of property — or of interests in property — to provide for one or more beneficiaries, usu. members of the settlor's family, in a way that differs from what the beneficiaries would receive as heirs under the statutes of descent and distribution <in marriage settlements, historically, the wife waived her right to claim dower or to succeed to her husband's property>. 2. An agreement ending a dispute or lawsuit <the parties reached a settlement the day before trial>. 3. Payment, satisfaction, or final adjustment <the seller shipped the goods after confirming the buyer's settlement of the account>. 4. CLOSING <the settlement on their first home is next Friday>. 5. Wills & estates. The complete execution of an estate by the executor <the settlement of the tycoon's estate was long and complex>. — settle, vb.

final settlement. Wills & estates. A court order discharging an executor's duties after an estate's execution.

full settlement. A settlement and release of all pending claims between the parties.

judicial settlement. The settlement of a civil case with the help of a judge who is not assigned to adjudicate the dispute. ● Parties sometimes find this procedure advantageous because it capitalizes on judicial experience in evaluating the settlement value of a claim.

nuisance settlement. A settlement in which the defendant pays the plaintiff purely for economic reasons — as opposed to any notion of responsibility — because without the settlement the defendant would spend more money in legal fees and expenses caused by protracted litigation than in paying the settlement amount. ● The money paid in such a settlement is often termed nuisance money.

out-of-court settlement. The settlement and termination of a pending suit, arrived at without the court's participation.

strict settlement. Hist. A property settlement that aimed to keep the estate within the family by creating successive interests in tail and shielding remainders from destruction by the interposition of a trust.

structured settlement. A settlement in which the defendant agrees to pay periodic sums to the plaintiff for a specified time.

viatical settlement (vi-at-ə-kəl). [fr. Latin viaticus "relating to a road or journey"] A transaction in which a terminally or chronically ill person sells the benefits of a life-insurance policy to a third party in return for a lump-sum cash payment equal to a percentage of the policy's face value. ● Viatical settlements are common with AIDS patients, many of whom sell their policies at a 20% to 40% discount, depending on life expectancy. When the insured (called the "viator") dies, the investor receives the insurance benefit.

voluntary settlement. A property settlement made without valuable consideration — other than love and affection — from the beneficiary.

settlement class. See CLASS (4).

settlement credit. Civil procedure. A court's reduction of the amount of a jury verdict — or the effect of the verdict on nonsettling defendants — to account for settlement funds the plaintiff has received from former defendants or from other responsible parties.

settlement date. See DATE.

settlement-first method. A means by which to apply a settlement credit to a jury verdict, by first reducing the amount of the verdict by subtracting the amount of all settlements the plaintiff has received on the claim, then reducing the remainder by the percentage of the plaintiff's comparative fault. See SETTLEMENT CREDIT. Cf. FAULT-FIRST METHOD.

settlement option. See OPTION.

settlement sheet. See CLOSING STATEMENT (2).

settlement statement. See CLOSING STATEMENT (2).

settlement value. See VALUE.

is usu. applied to an early resident of a country or region. 2. SETTLOR.

settle up, vb. To collect, pay, and turn over debts and property (of a decedent, bankrupt, or insolvent business).

settlor (set-lər). 1. A person who makes a settlement of property; esp., one who sets up a trust. — Also termed creator; donor; trustor; grantor; founder. 2. A party to an instrument. — Also spelled (in both senses) settler.

set up, vb. To raise (a defense) <the defendant set up the insanity defense on the murder charge>.

Seventeenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1913, transferring the power to elect U.S. senators from the state legislatures to the states' voters.

Seventh Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, guaranteeing the right to a jury trial in federal civil cases that are traditionally considered to be suits at common law and that have an amount in controversy exceeding $20.

seven-years'-absence rule. The principle that a person who has been missing without explanation for at least seven years is legally presumed dead. Cf. ENOCH ARDEN LAW.

"[I]n the United States, it is quite generally held or provided by statute that a presumption of death arises from the continued and unexplained absence of a person from his home or place of residence without any intelligence from or concerning him for the period of 7 years. The presumption has been regarded as a procedural expedient and a rule of evidence." 22A Am. Jur. 2d Death § 551, at 527 (1988).

severability clause. A provision that keeps the remaining provisions of a contract or statute in force if any portion of that contract or statute is judicially declared void or unconstitutional. — Also termed saving clause; separability clause. See severable contract under CONTRACT.

severable contract. See CONTRACT.

severable statute. See STATUTE.

several, adj. 1. (Of a person, place, or thing) more than one or two but not a lot <several witnesses>. 2. (Of liability, etc.) separate; particular; distinct, but not necessarily independent . 3. (Of things, etc.) different; various <several settlement options>.

severally, adj. Distinctly; separately <severally liable>.

several obligation. See OBLIGATION.

several-remedies rule. A procedural rule that tolls a statute of limitations for a plaintiff who has several available forums (such as a workers'-compensation proceeding and the court system) and who timely files in one forum and later proceeds in another forum, as long as the defendant is not prejudiced.

several tenancy. See TENANCY.

severalty (sev-[ə]-rəl-tee). The state or condition of being separate or distinct <the individual landowners held the land in severalty, not as joint tenants>.

severance, n. 1. The act of cutting off; the state of being cut off. 2. The separation of claims, by the court, of multiple parties either to permit separate actions on each claim or to allow certain interlocutory orders to become final. — Also termed severance of actions; severance of claims. Cf. bifurcated trial under TRIAL. 3. The termination of a joint tenancy, usu. by converting it into a tenancy in common. 4. The removal of anything (such as crops or minerals) attached or affixed to real property, making it personal property rather than a part of the land. — sever, vb. — severable, adj.

severance damages. See DAMAGES.

severance of actions. See SEVERANCE (2).

severance of claims. See SEVERANCE (2).

severance pay. Money (apart from back wages or salary) paid by an employer to a dismissed employee. ● Such a payment is often made in exchange for a release of any claims that the employee might have against the employer. — Also termed separation pay; dismissal compensation.

deputy sheriff. An officer who, acting under the direction of a sheriff, may perform most of the duties of the sheriff's office. • Although undersheriff is broadly synonymous with deputy sheriff, writers have sometimes distinguished between the two, suggesting that a deputy is appointed for a special occasion or purpose, while an undersheriff is permanent. — Also termed undersheriff; general deputy; vice-sheriff.

sheriff's deed. See DEED.

sheriff's jury. See JURY.

sheriff's sale. See SALE.

Sherman Antitrust Act. A federal statute, passed in 1890, that prohibits direct or indirect interference with the freely competitive interstate production and distribution of goods. • This Act was amended by the Clayton Act in 1914. 15 USCA §§ 1-7. — Often shortened to Sherman Act.

shield law. 1. A statute that affords journalists the privilege not to reveal confidential sources. See journalist's privilege under PRIVILEGE (3). 2. A statute that restricts or prohibits the use, in rape or sexual assault cases, of evidence about the past sexual conduct of the victim. — Also termed (in sense 2) rape shield law; rape shield statute.

"The 'rape shield law.' At common law the character of the woman as to chastity or unchastity was held to be admissible in evidence on the theory that it had probative value in determining whether she did or did not consent. Defense counsel, in unrestrained zeal for an acquittal, took advantage of this to the point that it often seemed as if it was the victim of the rape, rather than the perpetrator, who was on trial. . . . A typical 'rape shield statute' does not prevent the introduction of any relevant and otherwise admissible evidence, but requires that the relevancy of any evidence of the previous sexual conduct of the complaining witness must be determined in a pretrial hearing before the judge in camera." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 206 (3d ed. 1982).

shifting, adj. (Of a position, place, etc.) changing or passing from one to another .

shingle theory. Securities. The notion that a broker-dealer must be held to a high standard of conduct because by engaging in the securities business ("hanging out a shingle"), the broker-dealer implicitly represents to the world that the conduct of all its employees will be fair and meet professional norms.

"[I]n judging the appropriate standard of care that attaches to a broker-dealer in recommending securities to his or her customers and in dealing with the customers' accounts, the Commission has relied upon the 'shingle theory.' The shingle theory is but an extension of the common law doctrine of 'holding out.' When brokers hold themselves out as experts either in investments in general or in the securities of a particular issuer, they will be held to a higher standard of care in making recommendations." Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation § 10.6, at 423 (2d ed. 1994).
