Preface

When Henry Campbell Black published the first edition of Black's Law Dictionary back in 1891, the Oxford English Dictionary had not yet been completed. Nor was the OED finished when Black prepared his second edition in 1910. By today's standards, the "gentle art of lexicography,"¹ as it has been called, was yet to experience the tremendous dictionary-making developments that the 20th century had in store, the highlights being the OED (1928), Webster's Second (1934), Webster's Third (1961), and the second edition of the OED (1989). Largely through the influence of these major works, dictionaries today are much better than they used to be.

Legal scholarship has also made tremendous strides — even in describing pre-19th-century law. The great legal historians Pollock, Maitland, and Holdsworth had not yet produced their monumental works when Black put out the first edition. Our understanding of Roman law is better today than it was a century ago. Our understanding of feudal law is much better. Meanwhile, our precedent-based system still has not entirely escaped the influence of Roman and feudal law.

At the same time, modern law hurtles headlong into decade after decade of new statutes, new doctrines, and new tripartite tests. The world — as well as the law that tries to govern it — is changing at a dizzying pace. If you want evidence of this change, look inside for the hundreds of new entries such as cyberstalking, jurimetrics, parental kidnapping, quid pro quo sexual harassment, reproductive rights, and viatical settlement.

Given all these developments — both in lexicography and in law — it is hardly surprising that, by the end of the 20th century, Black's Law Dictionary had come to need a major overhaul. This edition is the result of that effort.

New Features in the Seventh Edition

Significant strides have been made both in modernizing this edition and in improving its historical depth. The editors' goal was to make it at once the most scholarly and the most practical edition ever published. More than 4,500 entries in the book are entirely new. (Some of the new entries are surprising: previous editions had omitted some commonplace terms such as act of Congress, circuit judge, motion for summary judgment, senatorial courtesy, and sidebar comment.) Of the remaining 20,000 entries, all have been thoroughly revised: sharpened and tightened.

Aside from the thousands of new entries and subentries, the differences between earlier editions and this one are many. The headwords show whether a term should be uppercase or lowercase, roman or italic.

PREFACE

The pronunciation symbols are easy to understand. For the first time ever, etymologies systematically appear. Senses of words are analytically broken down and given numbers — as never before. Definitions are clearer than ever (though the battle for clarity, when the subject is feudal law, can never be completely won). Bullets now appear within definitions to help differentiate definitional information (before the bullet) from encyclopedic information (after the bullet). More than 2,000 newly added quotations from some 400 important works of Anglo-American legal scholarship appear throughout the text to help convey the nuances of the legal vocabulary. (More about these in a moment.) The 2,200 legal maxims (mostly Latin) are conveniently collected in an appendix, instead of cluttering the main lexicon. In addition, my colleagues and I have:

- Attempted a thorough marshaling of the language of the law from original sources.
- Examined the writings of specialist scholars rather than looking only at judicial decisions.
- Considered entries entirely anew rather than merely accepting what previous editions have said. We have often checked Westlaw and other sources when trying to decide which of two competing forms now predominates in legal usage.
- Imposed analytical rigor on entries by avoiding duplicative definitions and by cataloguing and numbering senses.
- Ensured that specialized vocabularies are included — from bankruptcy to securities law, from legal realism to critical legal studies.

This modern approach to legal lexicography is only a beginning. To its great credit, the West Group has now made the editing of Black's Law Dictionary, in its various editions, an ongoing project. This means that Black's, like all major dictionaries outside the law, will be a continuing work in progress. As the law continues its rapid evolution, Black's Law Dictionary will keep apace.

The Inclusion of Scholarly Quotations

In a novel feature, more than 2,000 quotations from scholarly works appear throughout the text to help round out the treatment of various terms. In selecting these quotations, my colleagues and I have sought a blend of characteristics: temporal and geographic range, aptness, and insight. Some scholars show great astuteness in discussing terminology — particularly Blackstone (English law), Glanville Williams (criminal law and jurisprudence), Rollin Perkins (criminal law), and Charles Alan Wright (federal procedure). Although Blackstone and Wright are well known to American lawyers, Williams and Perkins are not: their work deserves more widespread attention.

The List of Works Cited (Appendix G) sets forth the 400-plus lawbooks cited in these pages. We have tried to locate the best scholarly discussions of legal terminology and to give snippets of them. In future editions, we intend to continue this practice, and we encourage readers to submit published quotations for this purpose.

The Challenge of Legal Lexicography

Law dictionaries have a centuries-old tradition of apologizing in advance for errors and omissions. Some of the apologies are moving — especially to one who understands the arduousness of lexicography — and a few border on the humorous:

- 1607: “[I]f I have either omitted any hard word within my circuit, or set it downe not expounded, I give you good leave to impute the one to my negligence, the other to mine ignorance: and so commend these my paines to your best profit, and you unto God.”²
- 1670: “If I have sometimes committed a Jeofaile, or hunted Counter in any explication or Etymology, in so large a field of words, and stor’d with such variety of Game, it will be no wonder, and, I hope, will draw no censure upon me from the Ingenuous [I]f I leave some words with a Quaere . . . to be resolved or corrected by the more learned; it is but what Cowell frequently, and Spelman has sometimes done.”³
- 1732: “[W]here there is such great Variety of Learning and abundant Quantity of Nice Matter, with the utmost Care, there must be some Faults and Failings to be Pardon’d by the Reader.”⁴
- 1848: “It is not without very considerable diffidence, that this Lexicon is submitted to the indulgence of the Profession and the Public, for no man can be more conscious of the difficulties besetting such a subject — of the many requisites of the task — and above all, of the great discrepancy usually exhibited between what a book ought to be, and what it is — than the Author of the present undertaking.”⁶

In the first edition of this book (1891), Henry Campbell Black broke the tradition, boldly asserting the exhaustiveness of his work:

“The dictionary now offered to the profession is the result of the author’s endeavor to prepare a concise and yet comprehensive book of definitions of the terms, phrases, and maxims used in American and English law and necessary to be understood by the working lawyer and judge, as well as those important to the student of legal history or comparative jurisprudence. . . . Of the most esteemed law dictionaries now in use, each will be found to contain a very considerable number of words not defined in any other. None is quite comprehensive in itself. The author has made it his aim to include all these terms and phrases here, together with some not elsewhere defined.” Henry Campbell Black, A Dictionary of Law iii (1891).

There is no lack of confidence expressed anywhere in his preface.

Yet in putting forth this seventh edition, I confess that my feelings incline more to those of Black’s predecessors than to those of Black himself.

A Lot of Help from Our Friends

Diffidence, though, can lead to safeguards. And so it has in this work. I engaged several distinguished scholars who thoroughly vetted the entire manuscript:

- Tony Honoré, former holder of the Regius Professorship in Civil Law at Oxford University, and author of many important books, including Causation in the Law (with H.L.A. Hart).
- Joseph F. Spaniol, Jr., former Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, whose wide-ranging experience includes decades of service in federal rulemaking as a consultant to the Standing Committee on Rules of Practice and Procedure.
- David M. Walker, former holder of the Regius Professorship in Law at Glasgow University, perhaps the most prolific legal writer in the British Isles, and author of the renowned Oxford Companion to Law (1980).

Additionally, in about a third of the manuscript, we had the help of Hans W. Baade, holder of the Hugh Lamar Stone Chair in Civil Law at the University of Texas. He is a comparativist of the first rank whose expertise ranges from domestic relations to international transactions to conflict of laws.

PREFACE

On the editorial side, several of my colleagues at LawProse, Inc. played crucial roles. David W. Schultz, a seasoned editor who joined the Black's team in 1995, was invaluable in producing both the pocket edition (which appeared in 1996) and this unabridged edition. His editorial judgments have improved every page. Lance A. Cooper, an aspiring legal historian, joined the team in 1997, working skillfully on thousands of entries for more than 18 months. Elizabeth C. Powell arrived in 1998, bringing with her a keen intellect, ten years of lawyerly experience, and an amazing capacity for hard work. All three — Schultz, Cooper, and Powell — are splendid lawyers who, not so long ago, never imagined they would one day be legal lexicographers. Yet they learned dictionary-making as the best lexicographers do: on the job. And they've become quite accomplished.

When it came to pronunciations, though, I knew we needed someone already expert in the art. This dictionary presents extraordinary challenges to a pronunciation editor, being full of Latin and French as well as Law Latin (the impure Latin of Renaissance lawyers) and Law French (the Norman French of medieval lawyers). Fortunately, Charles Harrington Elster of San Diego, an orthoepist with several excellent books to his credit, was willing to take on the task. He wisely guided us through the confusing mazes of Anglo-Latin, the only type of Latin with a continuous tradition in Anglo-American law. Even if some of the pronunciations strike you at first as odd, you can be sure that there is sound authority for them.

On translating Greek, Latin, and French, we had the benefit of many scholars' expertise. Professors Honoré and Walker supplied many of our etymologies. So did Edwin Carawan and Alison Parker, both of whom hold Ph.D.s in Classics; they examined all the maxims listed in Appendix A and supplied new translations and annotations for them.

As the manuscript deadline approached, I asked 30 judges, lawyers, and academics — mostly practicing lawyers — to read and comment on a batch of 150 pages of manuscript each. All of them generously agreed. I am enormously grateful to each of these learned lawyers:

PREFACE

What I hadn't fully reckoned, when sending out batches of manuscript, was how challenging it would be to integrate more than 4,500 pages of lightly to heavily edited text. Evaluating and entering the edits into our database took three full-time lawyers the better part of six weeks. Fortunately, Beverly Ray Burlingame of Dallas, an immensely talented editor and prodigiously hard worker, took time off from her busy law practice to help complete the project. She made huge contributions during the final stage.

But hers was not the only extraordinary act on behalf of the cause. During the final months, Michael L. Atchley of Dallas, upon learning of our deadline, began sending us draft entries for several hundred terms that were missing from the sixth edition. His broad legal knowledge, as well as his natural aptitude for lexicography, showed in all his work. Then he generously read and commented on large stacks of manuscript.

Several lawyers made important contributions beyond those I've already described. Ann Taylor Schwing of Sacramento painstakingly culled through the 90 volumes of Words and Phrases for possible inclusions, and she read large portions of the manuscript. Elizabeth Sturdivant Kerr of Fort Worth contributed drafts of many entries for the letters E, H, and T, and she read much of the manuscript. Michelle D. Monse of Dallas contributed drafts of many L entries. Stephen W. Kotara of Dallas contributed to the letters F and G. Meanwhile, Terrence W. Kirk of Austin submitted many useful drafts of criminal-law definitions.

As the work progressed, I occasionally ran queries by scholars in various legal specialties, and they all responded helpfully. Many thanks to J.H. Baker, Peter Butt, Robert W. Hamilton, Herbert J. Hammond, Geoffrey C. Hazard, Jr., Gideon Kanner, Robert E. Keeton, John S. Lowe, Neil MacCormick, Joseph W. McKnight, Sir Robert Megarry, Richard A. Posner, William C. Powers, Jr., Thomas M. Reavley, Christoph Schreuer, Sir David Williams, and Charles Alan Wright. In a specialized review, Marc I. Steinberg commented on the business-law terms throughout the book.

Several universities provided significant assistance. While working on the project, I was an adjunct professor at Southern Methodist University School of Law. Meanwhile, I had stints as a visiting scholar at the University of Glasgow (July 1996), under the sponsorship of Professor David M. Walker; at the University of Cambridge (July 1997), under the sponsorship of Vice-Chancellor Emeritus Sir David Williams; and at the University of Salzburg (July 1998), under the sponsorship of Professors Wolfram Karl and Christoph Schreuer. I used the libraries at each of those universities to good advantage. I also made good use of the renowned Tarlton Law Library at the University of Texas (thanks to Professor Roy M. Mersky and his colleagues). And the entire Black's team constantly used the Underwood Law Library at Southern Methodist University (thanks to Professor Gail Daly and her colleagues). Also, I was able to carry out some research at the Langdell Law Library at Harvard University. To all of these libraries and their staffs, I am grateful for the cordial help they unflinchingly gave.

PREFACE

Professor Mersky helped in another notable way: he and several of his colleagues — Beth Youngdale, Marlyn Robinson, and Monika Szakassits — generously verified the accuracy of our List of Works Cited (Appendix G).

Five research assistants — extraordinarily talented law students at Southern Methodist University School of Law — verified citations throughout the book. The editors are much indebted to Daniel Alexander, Julie Buffington, Nicole Schauf Gambrell, Peggy Glenn-Summitt, and Kenneth E. Shore. I especially thank Julie Buffington for organizing this team and ensuring the timely completion of a complex task.

Karen Magnuson of Portland, who has worked on several of my other books, courageously proofread the entire 3,500-page single-spaced manuscript as we worked through the final draft. Her talents as a proofreader are, in my experience, unmatched.

Many others contributed to the book in various ways: the late Alexander Black of Rochester began a reading program to gather illustrative quotations for our files; Thomas M. Fleming of Rochester continued that program for most of its duration; Caroline B. Garner of Dallas located historical legal terms in early dictionaries; E.N. Genovese of San Diego helped supply some foreign pronunciations; Tanya Glenn of Dallas typed the initial list of maxims; Michael Greenwald of Philadelphia helped on terms relating to the American Law Institute; and Tinh T. Nguyen of Dallas, with unusual enthusiasm, carried out the tedious but necessary task of checking cross-references and alphabetization.

While the project has been housed at LawProse, Inc. — as it will be through at least the next edition — Pan Garner, vice president of the company, has handled its business operations with energy, enthusiasm, and care. This included, over several years, working with me to acquire one of the most comprehensive collections of law-related dictionaries anywhere to be found. This collection has been invaluable in our work.

At the West Group, David J. Oliveiri, Doug Powell, John Perovich, and Brendan Bauer had the imagination and the forcefulness to make the book a reality. Their logistical support, not to mention their moral support, helped everyone involved in the project. In the production department, Kathy Walters worked wonders to produce the book within a tight deadline.

Tremendous amounts of talent and toil have gone into the making of this book. Yet the worries of early lexicographers have a haunting ring: this work might not prove as absolutely faultless as it has been my wish to make it. If that turns out to be so, as it inevitably will, I can only hope that readers will recognize the genuine merits residing in these pages.

Guide to the Dictionary

1. Alphabetization

All headwords, including abbreviations, are alphabetized letter by letter, not word by word. Spaces, apostrophes, hyphens, virgules, and the like do not count. For example:

c/o COA
coadjutor coal note Coase Theorem
co-assignee coasting trade

Numbers in headwords are ordered as follows: spelled-out numbers are alphabetized letter by letter; numbers written as numerals are arranged in ascending numerical order. Thus:

Nineteenth Amendment
1933 Act
1934 Act
ninety-day letter Ninth Amendment
nisi

Commas break the letter-by-letter alphabetization if they are backward-looking (e.g., perpetuities, rule against), but not if they are forward-looking (e.g., right, title, and interest).

2. Pronunciations

A word may have more than one acceptable pronunciation. When that is so, the preferred pronunciation appears first. Pronunciations are separated by or if each of them is standard among English-speaking lawyers. A pronunciation is introduced by also if it is either non-standard or not as widely accepted as the first pronunciation. Thus:

lessor (les-or or le-sor).
voir dire (vwahr deer also vor deer or vor dir), n.

Boldface syllables receive primary stress. For variably pronounced syllables, often only the changed syllables are included. For example:

scienter (sI-en-tər or see-), n.

GUIDE TO THE DICTIONARY

Brackets in a pronunciation indicate an optional sound, as in fiduciary (fi-d[y]oo-shee-er-ee).

For handy reference, the pronunciation guide is located inside the front cover.

3. Etymologies

The origins of most foreign words and phrases are given in brackets. By far the most frequent etymologies are “Latin” (i.e., the classical Latin used during the time of ancient Rome) and “Law Latin” (i.e., the Anglicized Latin formerly used in legal documents and proceedings). Essentially, the Law Latin tag corresponds to what some dictionaries call Late Latin, and others Medieval Latin. Other languages of origin are listed as well, including French, Law French, Old English, Greek, German, and Dutch.

4. Tags

Two types of tags appear. First, there are usage tags:

Hist. = historical; no longer current in law

Archaic = old-fashioned and declining in use

Rare = very infrequent in modern usage

Slang = very informal

Second, there are many subject-matter tags that identify the field of law that a particular term or sense belongs to (e.g., Antitrust, Commercial law, and Wills & estates). Two of these tags deserve special mention. Roman law indicates a term that can be traced back to the legal system of the ancient Romans. Civil law indicates a term that is used in modern civil-law systems, including much of the law in Louisiana.

5. Angle Brackets

Contextual illustrations of a headword are given in angle brackets:

taxable, adj. 1. Subject to taxation <interest earned on a checking account is taxable income>. 2. (Of legal costs or fees) assessable <expert-witness fees are not taxable court costs>.

6. Bullets

Bullets are used to separate definitional information (before the bullet) from information that is not purely definitional (after the bullet), such as encyclopedic information or usage notes.

7. Cognate Forms

This dictionary lists corresponding parts of speech. For example, under the definition of confirmation, the corresponding verb (confirm) and adjective (confirmatory) are listed.

If a cognate form applies to only one sense of a headword, that form is denoted as follows:

construction, n. 1. The act of building by combining or arranging parts or elements; the thing so built. 2. The act or process of interpreting or explaining the sense or intention of something (usu. a statute, opinion, or instrument). — construct (for sense 1), vb. — construe (for sense 2), vb.

delegation, n. 1. The act of entrusting another with authority or empowering another to act as an agent or representative <delegation of contractual duties>. 2. A group of representatives . — delegate (del-ə-gayt) (for sense 1), vb. — delegable (del-ə-gə-bəl) (for sense 1), adj.

8. Cross-references

a. See

The signal “See” is used in three ways:

- (1) To indicate that the definition is at another location in the dictionary:

secondary boycott. See BOYCOTT.

assembly, right of. See RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY.

- (2) To refer to closely related terms:

mercy. Compassionate treatment, as of criminal offenders or of those in distress; esp., imprisonment, rather than death, imposed as punishment for capital murder. See CLEMENCY.

investment banker. A person or institution that underwrites, sells, or assists in raising capital for businesses, esp. for new issues of stocks or bonds; a trader at an investment bank. See investment bank under BANK.

- (3) To refer to a synonymous subentry:

pure easement. See easement appurtenant under EASEMENT.

b. Cf.

“Cf.” is used to refer to related but contrastable terms:

strategic alliance. A coalition formed by two or more persons in the same or complementary businesses to gain long-term financial, operational, and marketing advantages without jeopardizing competitive independence <through their strategic alliance, the manufacturer and distributor of a co-developed product shared development costs>. Cf. JOINT VENTURE; PARTNERSHIP.

testacy (tes-tə-see), n. The fact or condition of leaving a valid will at one's death. Cf. INTESTACY.

GUIDE TO THE DICTIONARY

c. Also termed

The phrase “also termed” at the end of an entry signals a synonymous word or phrase. Variations on “also termed” include “also spelled,” “also written,” and “often shortened to.”

d. Terms with multiple senses

If the cross-referenced term has multiple senses, the particular sense referred to is indicated in parentheses:

appropriation bill. See BILL (3).

common mistake. See mutual mistake (2) under MISTAKE.

9. Quotations

Quotations are set off in small type. Most quotations are included because they provide nuances that would otherwise not be available within the strict confines of a traditional definition. Older quotations show what scholars said about legal terminology at particular points in history. The editors have selected quotations on the basis of aptness, insight, and clarity. Please note that some of the older quotations might not fully reflect current law.

10. Subentries

Many terms in this dictionary are collected by topic. For example, the different types of contracts, such as bilateral contract and gratuitous contract, are defined under the main term contract. (Cross-references in B and G will refer readers who look up bilateral contract and gratuitous contract to contract.) If a term has more than one sense, then the corresponding subentries are placed under the appropriate sense of that term.

11. Typefaces

Most of the typefaces used in this dictionary are self-explanatory. For instance, all headwords and cognate forms are in boldface type and all subentries are italicized. As for headwords of foreign origin, those that are fully naturalized are in boldface Roman type, while those that are not fully naturalized are in boldface italics. Generally, small caps are used with “See” and “Cf.” cross-references. Three other uses of small caps deserve special mention:

- a. Small caps refer to a synonymous headword. In the following example, the small caps suggest that you review the definition at contiguous for more information:

adjoining (ə-joyn-ing), adj. Touching; sharing a common boundary; CONTIGUOUS. — adjoin (ə-joyn), vb. Cf. ADJACENT.

GUIDE TO THE DICTIONARY

- b. Small caps also refer to the predominant form when it may be phrased or spelled in more than one way. For example, the following uses of small caps direct you to the entries at perjury and payor:

false swearing. See PERJURY.

payer. See PAYOR.

- c. Small caps also refer to the spelled-out form of abbreviations (the term is defined at the spelled-out headword, not the abbreviated form). For example:

FDIC. abbr. FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. An independent governmental agency that insures bank deposits up to a statutory amount per depositor at each participating bank. ● The insurance fund is financed by a premium paid by the participating banks. — Abbr. FDIC.

ab, prep. [Latin] From; by; of.

ABA. abbr. 1. AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION. 2. AMERICAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION.

abacinate (ə-bas-ə-nayt), vb. To blind (a person) by placing a red-hot iron or metal plate in front of the eyes.

abaction (ab-ak-shən). See ABIGEATUS.

ab actis (ab ak-tis), n. [Latin "in relation to proceedings"] Roman law. An officer responsible for public records (acta), registers, journals, or minutes; a court clerk; a notary.

abactor (ab-ak-tər or -tor). See ABIGEUS.

ab agendo (ab ə-jen-doh), adj. [Latin] Unable to act; incapacitated for business or transactions of any kind.

abalienation (ab-ayl-yə-nay-shən), n. [fr. Latin abalienare "to alienate"] Civil law. The transfer of an interest or title in property; ALIENATION (2). • In Roman law, the term was abalienatio ("a perfect conveyance from one Roman citizen to another"), which was anglicized to abalienation. — abalienate, vb.

abamita (ə-bam-ə-tə). [Latin] Civil law. A great-great-great aunt.

abandonee (ə-ban-də-nee). One to whom property rights are relinquished; one to whom something is formally or legally abandoned.

abandonment, n. 1. The relinquishing of a right or interest with the intention of never again claiming it. • In the context of contracts for the sale of land, courts sometimes use the term abandonment as if it were synonymous with rescission, but the two should be distinguished. An abandonment is merely the acceptance by one party of the situation that a nonperforming party has caused. But a rescission due to a material breach by the other party is a termination or discharge of the contract for all purposes. 2. Family law. The act of leaving a spouse or child willfully and without an intent to return. Cf. DESERTION.

"The lines of distinction between abandonment and the many forms of child neglect are often not very clear so that failure to support or to care for a child may sometimes be characterized as abandonment and sometimes as neglect." Homer H. Clark, Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States § 20.6, at 895 (1988).

malicious abandonment. The desertion of a spouse without just cause. See criminal desertion under DESERTION.

voluntary abandonment. 1. As a ground for divorce, a final departure without the consent of the other spouse, without sufficient reason, and without the intention to return. 2. In the law of adoption, a natural parent's willful act or course of conduct that implies a conscious disregard of or indifference to a child, as if no parental obligation existed.

3. Criminal law. RENUNCIATION (2). 4. Bankruptcy. A trustee's court-approved release of property that is burdensome or of inconsequential value to the estate, or the trustee's release of nonadministered property to the debtor when the case is closed. 5. Contracts. RESCISSION (2). 6. Intellectual property. Disuse of a trademark, copyright, or patent, with or without an intent to resume use, resulting in loss of the protected right. 7. Insurance. An insured's relinquishing of damaged or lost property to the insurer as a constructive total loss. Cf. SALVAGE (2). — abandon, vb.

ab ante (ab an-tee), adv. [Latin] Hist. Before; beforehand; in advance. — Also termed ab antecedente.

abatamentum (ə-bay-tə-men-təm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. See ABATEMENT (5).

abatement (ə-bayt-mənt), n. 1. The act of eliminating or nullifying <abatement of a nuisance> <abatement of a writ>. 2. The suspension or defeat of a pending action for a reason unrelated to the merits of the claim <the defendant sought abatement of the suit because of misnomer>. See plea in abatement under PLEA.

"Although the term 'abatement' is sometimes used loosely as a substitute for 'stay of proceedings,' the two may be distinguished on several grounds. For example, when grounds for abatement of an action exist, the abatement of the action is a matter of right, but a stay is granted in the court's discretion. And in proper circumstances a court may stay a proceeding pending the outcome of another proceeding although a strict plea in abatement could not be sustained." 1 Am. Jur. 2d Abatement, Survival, and Revival § 3 (1994).

3. The act of lessening or moderating; diminution in amount or degree <abatement of the debt>. 4. The reduction of a legacy, general or specific, as a result of the estate's being insufficient to pay all debts and legacies <the abatement of legacies resulted from the estate's insolvency>. 5. Archaic. The act of thrusting oneself tortiously into real estate after the owner dies and before the legal heir enters <abatement of freehold>. — Also termed (in sense 5) abatamentum. — abate, vb. — abatable, adj.

abatement clause. A lease provision that releases the tenant from the rent obligation when an act of God precludes occupancy.

abator (ə-bay-tər or -tor), 1. A person who eliminates a nuisance. See ABATEMENT (1). 2. Hist. A person who tortiously intrudes on an heir's freehold before the heir takes possession. See ABATEMENT (5).

abatuda (ab-ə-t[y]oo-də), n. [fr. Law Latin abatudus "debased"] Hist. A thing diminished, such as money reduced in value by clipping (moneta abatuda).

abavia (ə-bay-vee-ə), n. [Latin] Civil law. A great-great-great grandmother.

abavunculus (ab-ə-vəŋg-kyə-ləs), n. [Latin] Civil law. A great-great-great uncle. — Also termed avunculus maximus.

abavus (ab-ə-vəs), n. [Latin] Civil law. A great-great grandfather.

abbot (ab-ət). Eccles. law. A spiritual superior or governor of an abbey. Cf. ABBESS.

abbreviated term sheet. See TERM SHEET.

Abbreviatio Placitorum (ə-bree-vee-ay-shee-oh plas-i-tor-əm), n. [Law Latin "summary of the pleas"] Hist. An abstract of pleadings culled from the rolls of the Curia Regis, Parliament, and common-law courts from the 12th to 14th centuries, compiled in the 17th century, printed in 1811, attributed to Arthur Agarde, Deputy Chamberlain of the Exchequer, and other keepers of the records. Cf. YEAR BOOKS.

abbreviator. 1. One who abbreviates, abridges, or shortens. 2. Eccles. law. An officer in the court of Rome appointed as assistant to the vice-chancellor for drawing up the Pope's briefs and reducing petitions, when granted, into proper form to be converted into papal bulls.

abbroachment (ə-brohch-mənt), n. Hist. The act of forestalling the market by buying wholesale merchandise to sell at retail as the only vendor. — Also spelled abbrochment; abbrochement. — abbroach, vb.

ABC test. The rule that an employee is not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits if the employee (A) is free from the control of the employer, (B) works away from the employer's place of business, and (C) is engaged in an established trade. • The name derives from the A, B, and C commonly used in designating the three parts of the test.

ABC transaction. Oil & gas. A sale of a working interest from an owner (A) to an operator (B) in return for a cash payment and the right to another (usu. larger) payment when the well produces, followed by A's sale of the right to the production payment to a corporation (C), which pays A in cash borrowed from a lender on C's pledge of the production payment. • Thus A receives cash taxed at capital-gains rates, and B pays part of the purchase price with nontaxable production income. The tax advantages of this transaction were eliminated by the Tax Reform Act of 1969.

abdication (ab-di-kay-shən), n. The act of renouncing or abandoning privileges or duties, esp. those connected with high office <Edward VIII's abdication of the Crown in 1936> <the court's abdication of its judicial responsibility>. — abdicate (ab-di-kayt), vb. — abdicable (ab-di-kə-bəl), adj. — abdicator (ab-di-kay-tər), n.

abditory (ab-di-tor-ee), n. [Law Latin abditorium "box, receptacle"] A repository used to hide and preserve goods or money. — Also termed abditorium (ab-di-tor-ee-əm).

abduction (ab-dək-shən), n. 1. The act of leading someone away by force or fraudulent persuasion. • Some jurisdictions have various elements added to this basic definition, such as that the abductor must have the intent to marry or defile the person, that the abductee must be an underage child, or that the abductor must have the intent to subject the abductee to concubinage or prostitution. 2. Archaic. At common law, the crime of taking away a female person without her consent by use of persuasion, fraud, or violence, for the purpose of marriage, prostitution, or illicit sex. — abduct, vb. — abductor, n. — abductee, n. See KIDNAPPING.

"There was no such crime as abduction known to the English common law, but a statute [3 Hen. 7, ch. 2 (1487)], passed a few years before Columbus discovered America, created a felony which is the forerunner of all the present statutes on abduction." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 183 (3d ed. 1982).

abearance (ə-bair-ənts), n. Archaic. Behavior; conduct.

"The other species of recognizance, with sureties, is for the good abearance, or good behaviour. This includes security for the peace . . ." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 253 (1769).

ab epistolis (ab ee-pis-tə-lis), n. [Latin] Hist. An officer who maintained the correspondence (epistolae) for a superior; a secretary.

aberrant behavior (a-ber-ənt). A single act of unplanned or thoughtless criminal behavior. • Many courts have held that aberrant behavior justifies a downward departure — that is, a more lenient sentence — under the federal sentencing guidelines, based on a comment in the introduction to the Guidelines Manual to the effect that the guidelines do not deal with single acts of aberrant behavior. U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual, ch. 1, pt. A, ¶ 4.

abesse (ab-es-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Roman & civil law. To be absent; to be away from a place where one is supposed to be (as before a court). Cf. ADESSE.

abet (ə-bet), vb. 1. To encourage and assist (someone), esp. in the commission of a crime <abet a known felon>. 2. To support (a crime) by active assistance <abet a burglary>. — abetment, n. See AID AND ABET. Cf. INCITE.

abettator (ab-ə-tay-tər), n. [Law Latin] Archaic. See ABETTOR.

abettor. A person who encourages or assists in the commission of a crime. — Also spelled abetter. — Also termed principal in the second degree; (archaically) abettator.

ab extra (ab ek-strə), adv. [Latin] From outside; extra; beyond.

“Abeyance, from the French bayer, to expect, is that which is in expectation, remembrance, and intendment of law. By a principle of law, in every land there is a fee simple in somebody, or else it is in abeyance; that is, though for the present it be in no man, yet it is in expectancy belonging to him that is next to enjoy the land.” 1 Richard Burn, A New Law Dictionary 4 (1792).

abiaticus (ab-ee-ay-tə-kəs), n. [Law Latin “descended from a grandfather”] Hist. A grandson in the male line; a son’s son. — Also spelled aviaticus.

abide, vb. 1. To tolerate or withstand <the widow found it difficult to abide the pain of losing her husband>. 2. To obey <try to abide the doctor’s order to quit smoking>. 3. To await <the death-row prisoners abide execution>. 4. To perform or execute (an order or judgment) <the trial court abided the appellate court’s order>. 5. To stay or dwell <the right to abide in any of the 50 states>.

abide by, vb. To act in accordance with or in conformity to.

abiding conviction. See CONVICTION.

abigeatus (ə-bij-ee-ay-təs), n. [Latin] Roman law. The act of stealing cattle by driving them away (abigere). • This was known in the later civil law as abaction.

abigeus (ə-bij-ee-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. One who steals cattle, esp. in large numbers; a cattle rustler. • This was known in the later civil law as an abactor.

ability. The capacity to perform an act or service; esp., the power to carry out a legal act <ability to enter into a contract>.

present ability. The actual, immediate power to do something (esp. to commit a crime).

ab inconvenienti (ab in-kən-vee-nee-en-ti), adv. [Law Latin] From hardship or inconvenience. See argumentum ab inconvenienti under ARGUMENTUM.

ab initio (ab i-nish-ee-oh), adv. [Latin] From the beginning <the injunction was valid ab initio>. Cf. IN INITIO.

ab intestato (ab in-tes-tay-toh), adv. [Latin] By intestacy <succession ab intestato is often treated as being necessary because of the neglect or misfortune of the deceased proprietor>. Cf. EX TESTAMENTO.

ab invito (ab in-vi-toh), adv. [Latin] By or from an unwilling party; against one’s will . Cf. IN INVITUM.

ab irato (ab I-ray-toh), adv. [Latin] By one who is angry. • This phrase usu. refers to a gift or devise made adversely to an heir’s interests, out of anger. An action to set aside this type of conveyance was known at common law as an action ab irato.

abishering. See MISKERING.

abjudge (ab-jøj), vb. Archaic. To take away or remove (something) by judicial decision. Cf. ADJUDGE.

“As a result of the trial a very solemn judgment is pronounced. The land is adjudged to the one party and his heirs, and adjudged (abiudicata) from the other party and his heirs for ever.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 63 (2d ed. 1899).

abjudicatio (ab-joo-di-kay-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] The act of depriving a person of a thing by judicial decision.

able seaman. See able-bodied seaman under SEAMAN.

able to work. Labor law. (Of a worker) released from medical care and capable of employment; esp., not qualified to receive unemployment benefits on grounds of illness or injury.

ablocation (ab-loh-kay-shən). Archaic. The leasing of property for money. Cf. LOCATIO.

abmatertera (ab-mə-tər-tər-ə), n. [Latin] Civil law. A great-great-great aunt. See MATERTERA MAXIMA.

abnepos (ab-nep-ahs or -ohs), n. [Latin] Civil law. A great-great grandson; the grandson of a grandson or granddaughter.

abneptis (ab-nep-tis), n. [Latin] Civil law. A great-great granddaughter; the granddaughter of a grandson or granddaughter.

abnormal law. The law as it applies to persons who are under legal disabilities such as infancy, alienage, insanity, criminality, and (formerly) coverture.

abnormally dangerous activity. An undertaking that cannot be performed safely even if reasonable care is used while performing it, and for which the actor may face strict liability for any harm caused; esp., an activity (such as dynamiting) for which the actor is held strictly liable because the activity (1) involves the risk of serious harm to persons or property, (2) cannot be performed without this risk, regardless of the precautions taken, and (3) does not ordinarily occur in the community. • Under the Restatement (Second) of Torts, determining whether an activity is abnormally dangerous includes analyzing whether there is a high degree of risk of harm, whether any harm caused will be substantial, whether the exercise of reasonable care will eliminate the risk, whether the activity is a matter of common usage, whether the activity is appropriate to the place in which it occurs, and whether the activity's value to society outweighs its dangerousness. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 520 (1977). — Also termed ultrahazardous activity. See strict liability under LIABILITY.

abode. A home; a fixed place of residence. See DOMICILE.

abogado (ah-boh-gah-thoh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. An advocate; a lawyer.

abortee (ə-bor-tee). A woman who undergoes an abortion.

abortifacient (ə-bor-tə-fay-shənt), n. A drug, article, or other thing designed or intended for producing an abortion. — abortifacient, adj.

abortion, n. 1. The spontaneous or artificially induced expulsion of an embryo or fetus. • In Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court first recognized a woman's right to choose to end her pregnancy as a privacy right stemming from the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment. 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 1409 (1973). 2.

Archaic. At common law, the misdemeanor of causing a miscarriage or premature delivery of a fetus by means of any instrument, medicine, drug, or other means. • Many American states made this a statutory felony until the Roe v. Wade decision. — Also termed procuring an abortion. — abort, vb. — abortionist, n.

“The word ‘abortion,’ in the dictionary sense, means no more than the expulsion of a fetus before it is capable of living. In this sense it is a synonym of ‘miscarriage.’ With respect to human beings, however, it has long been used to refer to an intentionally-induced miscarriage as distinguished from one resulting naturally or by accident. There has been some tendency to use the word to mean a criminal miscarriage, and there would be distinct advantages in assigning this meaning to it; but there are so many references to lawful abortion or justification for abortion that it is necessary to speak of ‘criminal abortion’ or the ‘crime of abortion’ to emphasize the element of culpability.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 186–87 (3d ed. 1982).

therapeutic abortion. An abortion carried out for medical reasons.

“Until recently it was common to speak of ‘therapeutic abortion.’ The literal meaning of the term is an abortion induced for medical reasons, but it was commonly understood to mean one for the purpose of saving the mother’s life” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 193 (3d ed. 1982).

above-the-line, adj. (Of a deduction) taken after calculating gross income and before calculating adjusted gross income. • Examples of above-the-line deductions are IRA contributions and moving expenses. Formerly, individual tax returns had a dark line above which these deductions were written. Cf. BELOW-THE-LINE.

absolute defense. See real defense under DEFENSE (4).

absolute delivery. See DELIVERY.

absolute disparity. Constitutional law. The difference between the percentage of a group in the general population and the percentage of that group in the pool of prospective jurors on a venire. • For example, if African-Americans make up 12% of a county's population and 8% of the potential jurors on a venire, the absolute disparity of African-American veniremembers is 4%. The reason for calculating the disparity is to analyze a claim that the jury was not impartial because the venire from which it was chosen did not represent a fair cross-section of the jurisdiction's population. Some courts criticize the absolute-disparity analysis, favoring instead the comparative-disparity analysis, in the belief that the absolute-disparity analysis understates the deviation. See FAIR-CROSS-SECTION REQUIREMENT; DUREN TEST; STATISTICAL-DECISION THEORY. Cf. COMPARATIVE DISPARITY.

absolute estate. See ESTATE.

absolute gift. See inter vivos gift under GIFT.

absolute immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

absolute interest. See INTEREST (2).

absolute law. A supposed law of nature thought to be unchanging in principle, although circumstances may vary the way in which it is applied. See NATURAL LAW.

absque tali causa (abs-kwee tay-li kaw-zə), adv. [Law Latin] Without such cause. • In common-law pleading, this was part of the larger phrase de injuria sua propria, absque tali causa (“of his own wrong, without such cause”) appearing in a reply that a trespass plaintiff made to counter a defendant's claim of excuse. In an assault case, for example, if a defendant pleaded that he had struck the plaintiff in self-defense, the plaintiff could reply that the defendant was guilty of his own wrong committed without such cause as alleged. Cf. DE INJURIA.

abstain, vb. 1. To refrain from doing something. 2. (Of a federal court) to refrain from exercising jurisdiction over a matter.

abstention. 1. The act of withholding or keeping back (something or oneself). 2. A federal court's relinquishment of jurisdiction when necessary to avoid needless conflict with a state's administration of its own affairs. 3. The legal principle underlying such a relinquishment of jurisdiction. Cf. COMITY.

Burford abstention. A federal court's refusal to review a state court's decision in cases involving a complex regulatory scheme and sensitive areas of state concern. Burford v. Sun Oil Co., 319 U.S. 315, 63 S.Ct. 1098 (1943).

Colorado River abstention. A federal court's decision to abstain while relevant and parallel state-court proceedings are underway. Colorado River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 96 S.Ct. 1236 (1976).

equitable abstention. A federal court's refraining from interfering with a state administrative agency's decision on a local matter when the aggrieved party has adequate relief in the state courts.

permissive abstention. Abstention that a bankruptcy court can, but need not, exercise in a dispute that relates to the bankruptcy estate but that can be litigated, or is being litigated, in another forum. • In deciding whether to abstain, the bankruptcy court must consider (1) the degree to which state law governs the case, (2) the appropriateness of the procedure to be followed in the other forum, (3) the remoteness of the dispute to the issues in the bankruptcy case, and (4) the presence of nondebtor parties in the dispute. 28 USCA § 1334(c)(1).

Pullman abstention. A federal court's decision to abstain so that state courts will have an opportunity to settle an underlying state-law question whose resolution may avert the need to decide a federal constitutional question. Railroad Comm'n v. Pullman Co., 312 U.S. 496, 61 S.Ct. 643 (1941).

Thibodaux abstention (tib-ə-doh). A federal court's decision to abstain so that state courts can decide difficult issues of public importance that, if decided by the federal court, could result in unnecessary friction between state and federal authorities. Louisiana Power & Light Co. v. City of Thibodaux, 360 U.S. 25, 79 S.Ct. 1070 (1959).

Younger abstention. 1. A federal court's decision not to interfere with an ongoing state criminal proceeding by issuing an injunction or granting declaratory relief, unless the prosecution has been brought in bad faith or merely as harassment. Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S.Ct. 746 (1971). — Also termed equitable-restraint doctrine. 2. By extension, a federal court's decision not to interfere with a state-court civil proceeding used to enforce the criminal law, as to abate an obscene nuisance. See OUR FEDERALISM.

abstinence (ab-stə-nənts). The practice of refraining completely from indulgence in some act; esp., the practice of not having sex or of not consuming alcoholic beverages.

abstract, n. A concise statement of a text, esp. of a legal document; a summary. See ABSTRACT OF JUDGMENT; ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

abstract compromis. See general compromis under COMPROMIS.

abstracter. See ABTRACTOR.

abstraction (ab- or əb-strak-shən), n. 1. The mental process of considering something without reference to a concrete instance <jurisprudence is largely the abstraction of many legal particulars>. 2. A theoretical idea not applied to any particular instance <utopia in any form is an abstraction>. 3. The summarizing and recording of a legal instrument in public records <abstraction of the judgment in Tarrant County>. 4. The act of taking with the intent to injure or defraud <the abstraction of funds was made possible by the forged signature on the check>. — abstract (ab-strakt), vb.

Copyright. A judicially created test for determining whether substantial similarity exists between the nonliteral elements of two or more computer programs. • Under this test, a program is first dissected according to its varying levels of generality ("abstractions test"). Then each level of abstraction is examined to filter out program elements that are unprotectable, such as ideas, processes, facts, public-domain information, merger material, scenes a faire, and other unprotectable elements ("filtration test"). Finally, the remaining protectable elements are compared with the allegedly infringing program to determine whether substantial elements of the plaintiff's program have been misappropriated ("comparison test").

abstractions test. Copyright. A means of comparing copyrighted material with material that is claimed to infringe on the copyright, by examining whether the actual substance has been copied or whether the two works merely share the same abstract ideas. • The primary authority for the abstractions test is Judge Learned Hand's opinion in Nichols v. Universal Pictures Corp., 45 F.2d 119 (2d Cir. 1930).

abstract of a fine. See NOTE OF A FINE.

abstract of conviction. A summary of the court's finding on an offense, esp. a moving violation.

abstract of judgment. A copy or summary of a judgment that, when filed with the appropriate public office, creates a lien on the judgment debtor's nonexempt property. See judgment lien under LIEN.

abstract of record. An abbreviated case history that is complete enough to show an appellate court that the questions presented for review have been preserved.

abstract of title. A concise statement, usu. prepared for a mortgagee or purchaser of real property, summarizing the history of a piece of land, including all conveyances, interests, liens, and encumbrances that affect title to the property. — Also termed brief.

good and merchantable abstract of title.

An abstract of title showing clear, good, and marketable title, rather than showing only the history of the property. See clear title, good title, and marketable title under TITLE (2).

abstractor (ab- or əb-strak-tər). A person who prepares abstracts of title. — Also spelled ab-stracter.

abstract question. See HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.

ab urbe condita (ab ər-bee kon-di-tə). [Latin] From the founding of the city (esp. Rome in 753 B.C.). • This term is sometimes used in abbreviated form in classical dates. For example, the date “23 A.U.C.” means “23 years after the founding of Rome,” or 730 B.C. — Abbr. A.U.C.

abuse (ə-byoos), n. 1. A departure from legal or reasonable use; misuse. 2. Physical or mental maltreatment.

abuse of the elderly. Physical or psychological abuse of an elderly person by a caretaker. • Examples include deprivation of food or medication, beatings, oral assaults, and isolation. — Also termed elder abuse.

carnal abuse. See sexual abuse.

child abuse. An intentional or neglectful physical or emotional injury imposed on a child, including sexual molestation. — Also termed cruelty to a child; cruelty to children. See BATTERED-CHILD SYNDROME.

elder abuse. See abuse of the elderly.

sexual abuse. 1. An illegal sex act, esp. one performed against a minor by an adult. — Also termed carnal abuse. 2. RAPE (2).

spousal abuse. Physical, sexual, or psychological abuse inflicted by one spouse on the other spouse. See BATTERED-WOMAN SYNDROME.

abuse (ə-byooz), vb. 1. To depart from legal or reasonable use in dealing with (a person or thing); to misuse. 2. To injure (a person) physically or mentally. 3. To damage (a thing).

abuse excuse. Criminal law. The defense that a defendant is unable to tell right from wrong, having been physically or mentally abused as a child. • Like the traditional criminal-law excuse of insanity, the abuse excuse is asserted by a defendant in an effort to avoid all culpability for the crime charged.

abuse of discovery. See DISCOVERY ABUSE.

abuse of discretion. 1. An adjudicator's failure to exercise sound, reasonable, and legal decision-making. 2. An appellate court's standard for reviewing a decision that is asserted to be

abuse of process. The improper and tortious use of a legitimately issued court process to obtain a result that is either unlawful or beyond the process's scope. — Also termed abuse of legal process; malicious abuse of process; malicious abuse of legal process; wrongful process; wrongful process of law. Cf. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

abuse of rights. Int'l law. A country's exercise of a right either in a way that impedes the enjoyment by other countries of their own rights or for a purpose different from that for which the right was created (e.g., to harm another country).

abuse-of-rights doctrine. Civil law. The principle that a person may be liable for harm caused by doing something the person has a right to do, if the right (1) is exercised for the purpose or primary motive of causing harm, (2) is exercised without a serious and legitimate interest that is deserving of judicial protection, (3) is exercised against moral rules, good faith, or elementary fairness, or (4) is exercised for a purpose other than the one it was granted for.

abuse-of-the-writ doctrine. Criminal law. The principle that a petition for a writ of habeas corpus may not raise claims that could have been, but were not, asserted in a previous petition.

abusive (ə-byoo-siv), adj. 1. Characterized by wrongful or improper use <abusive discovery tactics>. 2. (Of a person) that treats another badly <abusive parent>. — abusively, adv.

abut (ə-bət), vb. To join at a border or boundary; to share a common boundary with <the company's land in Arizona abuts the Navajo Indian reservation>. — abutment (ə-bət-mənt), n.

abuttals (ə-bət-əlz). Land boundaries; the boundary lines of a piece of land in relation to other contiguous lands. — Also termed (archaically) buttals.

abutter (ə-bət-ər). 1. The owner of adjoining land; one whose property abuts another's.

“The major right of [an abutter] is that of access to his property — a right of reasonable ingress and egress. He is entitled to compensation for any substantial impairment of this reasonable access. The right normally includes the right to have, at some point, a driveway onto his premises. An abutter does not have the right to the continued flow of traffic in the same amount or pattern past his premises." Osborne M. Reynolds, Jr., Handbook of Local Government Law § 180, at 620 (1982).

2. Land that adjoins the land in question.

academic, adj. 1. Of or relating to a school or a field of study; esp., of or relating to a field of study that is not vocational or commercial, such as the liberal arts <academic courses>. 2. Theoretical; specif., not practical or immediately useful <academic question>.

academic freedom. The right (esp. of a university teacher) to speak freely about political or ideological issues without fear of loss of position or other reprisal.

academic lawyer. A law professor, usu. one who maintains a law practice on the side.

Académie de Droit International de La Haye. See HAGUE ACADEMY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

academy. 1. An institution of higher learning. 2. An association dedicated to the advancement of knowledge in a particular field, such as the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers. 3. A private high school. 4. (cap.) A garden near Athens where Plato taught; hence, the school of philosophy that he led.

a cancellando (ay kan-sə-lan-doh). [Law Latin] From canceling.

"It has its name of chancery, cancellaria, from the judge who presides here, the lord chancellor or cancellarius; who, Sir Edward Coke tells us, is so termed a cancellando, from cancelling the king's letters patents when granted contrary to law..." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 46 (1768).

a cancellis (ay kan-sel-is), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A chancellor, so called because he performed the duties of office behind a cancelli ("lattice").

a cancellis curiae explodi (ay kan-sel-is kyoor-ee-I ek-splōh-di). [Law Latin] Hist. To be expelled from the bar of the court.

a cause de cy (ay kaw-zə də see), adv. [Law French] For this reason.

accedas ad curiam (ak-see-dəs ad kyoor-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin "you are to go to the court"] Hist. An original writ for removing a replevin action to a royal court from either of two feudal courts — a court baron or a hundred court. • It is a recordare facias loquelam for replevin actions. See RECORDARE FACIAS LOQUELAM.

accede (ak-seed), vb. To consent or agree. — accession, n. — accedence (ak-see-dənts), n.

Accelerated Cost Recovery System. An accounting method that is used to calculate asset depreciation and that allows for the faster recovery of costs by assigning the asset a shorter useful life than was previously permitted under the Internal Revenue Code. • This system applies to property put into service from 1981 to 1986. It was replaced in 1986 by the Modified Accelerated Cost Recovery System. — Abbr. ACRS.

accelerated remainder. See REMAINDER.

acceleration, n. 1. The advancing of a loan agreement's maturity date so that payment of the entire debt is due immediately. 2. The shortening of the time for vesting in possession of an expectant interest. — Also termed acceleration of remainder. 3. Property. The hastening of an owner's time for enjoyment of an estate because of the failure of a preceding estate. 4. Securities. The SEC's expediting of a registration statement's effective date so that the registrant bypasses the required 20-day waiting period. — accelerate, vb.

acceleration clause. A loan-agreement provision that requires the debtor to pay off the balance sooner than the due date if some specified event occurs, such as failure to pay an installment or to maintain insurance. Cf. INSECURITY CLAUSE.

acceptance, n. 1. An agreement, either by express act or by implication from conduct, to the terms of an offer so that a binding contract is formed. • If an acceptance modifies the terms or adds new ones, it generally operates as a counteroffer. Cf. OFFER.

acceptance by silence. Acceptance of an offer not by explicit words but through the lack of an offeree's response in circumstances in which the relationship between the offeror and the offeree justifies both the offeror's expectation of a reply and the offeror's reasonable conclusion that the lack of one signals acceptance. • Ordinarily, silence does not give rise to an acceptance of an offer, but this exception arises when the offeree has a duty to speak.

qualified acceptance. A conditional or partial acceptance that varies the original terms of an offer and operates as a counteroffer; esp., in negotiable instruments, an acceptor's variation of the terms of the instrument.

2. A buyer's assent that the goods are to be taken in performance of a contract for sale. • Under UCC § 2-606, a buyer's acceptance consists in (1) signifying to the seller that the goods are conforming ones or that the buyer will take them despite nonconformities, (2) not making an effective rejection, or (3) taking any action inconsistent with the seller's ownership. If the contract is for the sale of goods that are not identified when the contract is entered into, there is no acceptance until the buyer has had a reasonable time to examine the goods. But if the buyer deals with them as owner, as by reselling them, a court may find constructive acceptance.

"Acceptance means communicated acceptance... [It] must be something more than a mere mental assent." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 34 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919). [But Corbin adds:] "This use of the word 'communicated' is open to some objection. To very many persons the word means that knowledge has been received. Frequently a contract is made even though the offeror has no such knowledge. In such case the acceptance is not 'communicated' and yet it consummates the contract." Id. n.2.

"Acceptance of a conveyance or of a document containing a promise is a manifestation of assent to the terms thereof made, either before or after delivery, in accordance with any requirements imposed by the grantor or promisor. If the acceptance occurs before delivery and is not binding as an option contract, it is revocable until the moment of delivery." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 106 (1981).

3. The formal receipt of and agreement to pay a negotiable instrument. 4. A negotiable instrument, esp. a bill of exchange, that has been accepted for payment.

acceptance au besoin (oh bə-zwan). [French "in case of need"] An acceptance by one who has agreed to pay the draft in case the drawee fails to do so.

acceptance for honor. An acceptance or undertaking not by a party to the instrument, but by a third party, for the purpose of protecting the honor or credit of one of the parties, by which the third party agrees to pay the debt when it becomes due if the original drawee does not. • This type of acceptance inures to the benefit of all successors to the party for whose benefit it is made. — Also termed acceptance supra protest.

accommodation acceptance. The acceptance of an offer to buy goods for current or prompt shipment by shipping nonconforming goods after notifying the buyer that the shipment is intended as an accommodation. • This type of "acceptance" is not truly an acceptance under contract law, but operates instead as a counteroffer if the buyer is duly notified.

banker's acceptance. A bill of exchange drawn on and accepted by a commercial bank. • Banker's acceptances are often issued to finance the sale of goods in international trade. — Abbr. BA. — Also termed bank acceptance.

blank acceptance. Acceptance by a bill-of-exchange drawee before the bill is made, as indicated by the drawee's signature on the instrument.

conditional acceptance. An agreement to pay a draft on the occurrence or nonoccurrence of a particular event.

express acceptance. A written or oral expression indicating that the drawee has seen the instrument and does not dispute its sufficiency. • While a written acceptance is typically signified by the stamped or written word "accepted" or "presented" usu. on the instrument itself, an oral acceptance must be made directly to a drawer or holder who has waived the right to a written acceptance.

implied acceptance. An acceptance implied by a drawee whose actions indicate an intention to comply with the request of the drawer; conduct by the drawee from which the holder is justified in concluding that the drawee intends to accept the instrument.

special acceptance. An acceptance that departs from either the terms of a bill or the terms added to but not otherwise expressed in a bill. • An example is an acceptance of a draft as payable in a particular place even though the draft contains no such limitation.

trade acceptance. A bill of exchange for the amount of a specific purchase, drawn on and accepted by the buyer for payment at a specified time.

5. An insurer's agreement to issue a policy of insurance. — accept, vb.

acceptance by silence. See ACCEPTANCE (1).

acceptance company. See sales finance company under FINANCE COMPANY.

acceptance credit. See time letter of credit under LETTER OF CREDIT.

acceptance doctrine. Construction law. The principle that, once an owner accepts the work of a contractor, the contractor is not liable to third parties for an injury arising from the contractor's negligence in performing under the contract, unless the injury results from a hidden, imminently dangerous defect that the contractor knows about and the owner does not know about. — Also termed accepted-work doctrine.

acceptance-of-the-benefits rule. The doctrine that a party may not appeal a judgment after having voluntarily and intentionally received the relief provided by it.

acceptance sampling. The practice of examining only a few items from a shipment to determine the acceptability of the whole shipment.

acceptance supra protest. See acceptance for honor under ACCEPTANCE.

acceptare (ak-sep-tair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To accept or assent to, as a promise made by another.

accepted-work doctrine. See ACCEPTANCE DOCTRINE.

acceptilation (ak-sep-tə-lay-shən). Civil law. An oral release from an obligation even though payment has not been made in full; a complete discharge. Cf. APOCHA.

acceptor. A person or entity that accepts a negotiable instrument and agrees to be primarily responsible for its payment or performance.

acceptor supra protest. One who accepts a bill that has been protested, for the honor of the drawer or an indorser.

access, n. 1. An opportunity or ability to enter, approach, pass to and from, or communicate with <access to the courts>. 2. Copyright. An opportunity to view or copy a copyrighted work <the duplication of the error proved that the defendant had access>. — access, vb.

"Since direct evidence of copying is rarely available, a plaintiff can rely upon circumstantial evidence to prove this essential element; the most important component of such circumstantial evidence to support a copyright infringement claim is proof of access. Evidence of access and substantial similarity create an inference of copying and establish a prima facie case of copying." 18 Am. Jur. 2d Copyright and Literary Property § 206 (1985).

multiple access. Family law. In a paternity suit, the defense that the mother had lovers other than the defendant around the time of conception.

accession (ak-sesh-ən). 1. The act of acceding or agreeing <the family's accession to the kidnapper's demands>. 2. A coming into possession of a right or office <as promised, the state's budget was balanced within two years after the governor's accession>. 3. Int'l law. The process by which a nation becomes a party to a treaty that has already been agreed on by other nations <Italy became a party to the nuclear-arms treaty by accession>. — Also termed adherence; adhesion. 4. The acquisition of title to personal property by bestowing labor on a raw material to convert it to another thing <the owner's accession to the lumber produced from his land>. — Also termed (in Roman law) accessio. See ADJUNCTION (2).

"Accessio is the combination of two chattels belonging to different persons into a single article: as when A's cloth is used to patch B's coat, or a vehicle let on hire-purchase has new accessories fitted to it." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 113 (17th ed. 1977).

5. A property owner's right to all that is added to the land, naturally or by labor, including land left by floods and improvements made by others <the newly poured concrete driveway became the homeowner's property by accession>. Cf. ANNEXATION. 6. An improvement to existing personal property, such as new shafts on golf clubs.

"The problem of accessions arises infrequently, judging from reported cases, but an obvious instance of the difficulty arises where a motor vehicle is being financed by a secured party and the debtor in possession of necessity acquires a new engine or new tires for the vehicle. . . . If the seller of the engine or tires reserved a security interest at the time the goods were installed, the seller should prevail over the vehicle's secured party, with a right to remove the accessions. Conversely, if the sale were on open credit with no security interest reserved, or if the seller acquired a security interest after installation of the goods, then the financier of the vehicle should prevail." Ray D. Henson, Handbook on Secured Transactions Under the Uniform Commercial Code § 4-22, at 93 (2d ed. 1979).

accessorial (ak-sə-sor-ee-əl), adj. 1. (Of a promise) made for the purpose of strengthening another's credit <an accessorial pledge by way of guaranty>. — Also termed accessory. 2. Criminal law. Of or relating to the accessory in a crime <accessorial guilt>.

accessorial obligation. See COLLATERAL OBLIGATION.

accessory (ak-ses-ə-ree), n. 1. Something of secondary or subordinate importance. 2. A person who aids or contributes in the commission of a crime. • An accessory is usu. liable only if the crime is a felony. — accessory, *adj. — accessoryship, *n. Cf. PRINCIPAL (2).

"In most jurisdictions, the common-law distinctions between principals and accessories have largely been abolished, although the pertinent statutes vary in form and substance. Conceptually, the common-law pattern remains the same: The person who aids, abets, commands, counsels, or otherwise encourages another to commit a crime is still regarded as a party to the underlying crime as at common law, even though the labels principal in the first degree, principal in the second degree, and accessory before the fact are no longer used, and even though it usually does not matter whether the aider and abettor is or is not present at the scene of the crime." 1 Charles E. Torcia, Wharton's Criminal Law § 35, at 202-03 (15th ed. 1993).

accessory after the fact. An accessory who knows that a crime has been committed and who helps the offender try to escape arrest or punishment. • The liability of such an accessory is still treated separately under most penal statutes. There are four requirements: (1) someone else must have committed a felony, and it must have been completed before the accessory's act; (2) the accessory must not be guilty as a principal; (3) the accessory must personally help the principal try to avoid the consequences of the felony; and (4) the accessory's assistance must be rendered with guilty knowledge. — Sometimes shortened to accessory after.

accessory at the fact. See principal in the second degree under PRINCIPAL (2).

"A principal in the second degree is one by whom the actual perpetrator of the felony is aided and abetted at the very time when it is committed; for instance, a car-owner sitting beside the chauffeur who kills someone by over-fast driving, or a passenger on a clandestine joy-riding expedition which results in manslaughter; or a bigamist's second 'wife', if she knows he is committing bigamy. (In early law he was not ranked as a principal at all, but only as a third kind of accessory — the accessory at the fact.)" J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 86 (16th ed. 1952).

accessory before the fact. An accessory who assists or encourages another to commit a crime but who is not present when the offense is actually committed. • Most jurisdictions have abolished this category of accessory and instead treat such an offender as an accomplice. — Sometimes shortened to accessory before. See ACCOMPLICE.

"An accessory before the fact is a person who procures or advises one or more of the principals to commit the felony. This definition requires from him an instigation so active that a person who is merely shown to have acted as the stake-holder for a prize-fight, which ended fatally, would not be punishable as an accessory. The fact that a crime has been committed in a manner different from the mode which the accessory had advised will not excuse him from liability for it. Accordingly if A hires B to poison C, but B instead kills C by shooting him, A is none the less liable as accessory before the fact to C's murder. But a man who has counselled a crime does not become liable as accessory if, instead of any form of the crime suggested, an entirely different offence is committed." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 88 (16th ed. 1952).

accessory obligation. See OBLIGATION.

accessory use. See USE (1).

access to counsel. See RIGHT TO COUNSEL.

accident, n. 1. An unintended and unforeseen injurious occurrence; something that does not occur in the usual course of events or that could not be reasonably anticipated. 2. Equity practice. An unforeseen and injurious occurrence not attributable to mistake, neglect, or misconduct. — accidental, adj.

“The word ‘accident,’ in accident policies, means an event which takes place without one’s foresight or expectation. A result, though unexpected, is not an accident; the means or cause must be accidental. Death resulting from voluntary physical exertions or from intentional acts of the insured is not accidental, nor is disease or death caused by the vicissitudes of climate or atmosphere the result of an accident; but where, in the act which precedes an injury, something unforeseen or unusual occurs which produces the injury, the injury results through accident.” 1A John Alan Appleman & Jean Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice § 360, at 455 (rev. vol. 1981).

culpable accident. An accident due to negligence. • A culpable accident, unlike an unavoidable accident, is no defense except in those few cases in which wrongful intent is the exclusive and necessary basis for liability.

unavoidable accident. An accident that cannot be avoided because it is produced by an irresistible physical cause that cannot be prevented by human skill or reasonable foresight. • Examples include accidents resulting from lightning or storms, perils of the sea, inundations or earthquakes, or sudden illness or death. Unavoidable accident has been considered a means of avoiding both civil and criminal liability. — Also termed inevitable accident; pure accident; unavoidable casualty. Cf. ACT OF GOD.

“An unavoidable accident is an occurrence which was not intended and which, under all the circumstances, could not have been foreseen or prevented by the exercise of reasonable precautions. That is, an accident is considered unavoidable or inevitable at law if it was not accidental-death benefit. An insurance-policy provision that allows for a payment (often double the face amount of the policy) if the insured dies as a result of some mishap or sudden external force. — Abbr. ADB.

accidental injury. See INJURY.

accidental killing. Homicide resulting from a lawful act performed in a lawful manner under a reasonable belief that no harm would be possible. — Also termed death by misadventure; homicide by misadventure; killing by misadventure; homicide per infortunium. See justifiable homicide under HOMICIDE. Cf. involuntary manslaughter under MANSLAUGHTER.

accidental stranding. See STRANDING.

accidere (ak-sid-ər-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. 1. To fall down. 2. By extension, to befall or happen to.

accipere (ak-sip-ər-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To receive; esp., to take under a will.

accipitare (ak-sip-ə-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To pay (a lord) in order to become a vassal; esp., to pay relief upon succeeding to an estate.

accola (ak-ə-lə), n. [Latin “person living nearby”] 1. Roman law. A person who inhabits or occupies land near a certain place, such as one who dwells near a river. 2. Hist. An agricultural tenant; a tenant of a manor.

accomenda (ak-ə-men-də). Hist. Maritime law. A contract between a cargo owner and a shipmaster whereby the parties agree to sell the cargo and divide the profits (after deducting the owner’s costs). • This contract actually consists of two agreements: a mandatum, by which the owner gives the shipmaster the power to dispose of the cargo, and a partnership contract, by which the parties divide any profits arising from the sale. See MANDATE (5).

accommodated party. A party for whose benefit an accommodation party signs and incurs liability. Cf. ACCOMMODATION PARTY.

accommodation, n. 1. A loan or other financial favor. 2. The act of signing an accommodation paper as surety for another. See ACCOMMODATION PAPER. 3. The act or an instance of making a change or provision for someone or something; an adaptation or adjustment. See PUBLIC ACCOMMODATION; REASONABLE ACCOMMODATION.

accommodation indorser. See INDORSER.

accommodation land. See LAND.

accommodation line. Insurance. One or more policies that an insurer issues to retain the business of a valued agent, broker, or customer, even though the risk would not be accepted under the insurer's usual standards.

accommodation loan. See LOAN.

accommodation maker. See MAKER.

accommodation note. See NOTE (1).

accommodation paper. A negotiable instrument that one party cosigns, without receiving any consideration, as surety for another party who remains primarily liable. • An accommodation paper is typically used when the cosigner is more creditworthy than the principal debtor. — Also termed accommodation bill; accommodation note.

accommodation party. A person who, without recompense or other benefit, signs a negotiable instrument for the purpose of being a surety for another party (called the accommodated party) to the instrument. • The accommodation party can sign in any capacity (i.e., as maker, drawer, acceptor, or indorser). An accommodation party is liable to all parties except the accommodated party, who impliedly agrees to pay the note or draft and to indemnify the accommodation party for all losses incurred in having to pay it. See SURETY.

accommodation surety. See voluntary surety under SURETY.

accompany, vb. To go along with (another); to attend. • In automobile-accident cases, an unlicensed driver is not considered accompanied by a licensed driver unless the latter is close enough to supervise and help the former.

accomplice (ə-kom-plis). 1. A person who is in any way concerned with another in the commission of a crime, whether as a principal in the first or second degree or as an accessory. • Although the definition includes an accessory before the fact, not all authorities include an accessory after the fact.

2. A person who knowingly, voluntarily, and intentionally unites with the principal offender in committing a crime and thereby becomes punishable for it. See ACCESSORY. Cf. PRINCIPAL (2).

“By definition an accomplice must be a person who acts with the purpose of promoting or facilitating the commission of the substantive offense for which he is charged as an accomplice. State v. White, N.J. 1984, 484 A.2d 691, 98 N.J. 122.” Model Penal Code § 2.06 annot. (1997).

accomplice liability. See LIABILITY.

accomplice witness. See WITNESS.

accord, n. 1. An amicable arrangement between parties, esp. between peoples or nations; COMPACT; TREATY. 2. An offer to give or to accept a stipulated performance in the future to satisfy an obligor's existing duty, together with an acceptance of that offer. • The performance becomes what is known as a satisfaction. — Also termed executory accord; accord executory. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION; SATISFACTION. Cf. NOVATION.

"An accord is a contract under which an obligee promises to accept a stated performance in satisfaction of the obligor's existing duty. Performance of the accord discharges the original duty." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 281(1) (1981).

"The term executory accord is sometimes used to underscore the point that the accord itself does not discharge the duty. It also reflects an historical anachronism, now generally rejected, under which an unperformed accord was not a defense to an action on the underlying duty." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 4.24, at 285 n.8 (1982).

3. A signal used in a legal citation to introduce a case clearly supporting a proposition for which another case is being quoted directly.

accord, vb. 1. To furnish or grant, esp. what is suitable or proper <accord the litigants a stay of costs pending appeal>. 2. To agree <they accord in their opinions>.

accord and satisfaction. An agreement to substitute for an existing debt some alternative form of discharging that debt, coupled with the actual discharge of the debt by the substituted performance. ● The new agreement is called the accord, and the discharge is called the satisfaction. Cf. NOVATION; SETTLEMENT.

"'Accord and satisfaction' means an agreement between the parties that something shall be given to, or done for, the person who has the right of action, in satisfaction of the cause of action. There must be not only agreement ('accord') but also consideration ('satisfaction'). Such an arrangement is really one of substituted performance." 1 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 101 (P.W. French ed., 13th ed. 1950).

accordant (ə-kor-dənt), adj. In agreement <accordant with these principles>.

accouchement (ə-koosh-mənt or ak-oosh-mawnt). [French] Childbirth.

account, n. 1. A detailed statement of the debits and credits between parties to a contract or to a fiduciary relationship; a reckoning of monetary dealings <the trustee balanced the account at the end of each month>. ● In wills and estates, an account is a brief financial statement of the manner in which an executor or administrator has performed the official duties of collecting the estate's assets and paying those who are entitled. An account charges the executor or administrator with the value of the estate as shown by the inventory, plus any increase, and credits the executor with expenses and costs, duly authorized disbursements, and the executor's commission. — Abbr. acct.; a/c. 2. A course of business dealings or other relations for which records must be kept <open a brokerage account>. 3. ACCOUNTING (3)

"The action of account lies where one has received goods or money for another in a fiduciary capacity, to ascertain and recover the balance due. It can only be maintained where there is such a relationship between the parties, as to raise an obligation to account, and where the amount due is uncertain and unliquidated." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 56, at 144 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

4. ACCOUNTING (4) <the contractor filed an action for account against the nonpaying customer>. 5. A statement by which someone seeks to explain an event <Fred's account of the holdup differed significantly from Martha's>.

account in trust. An account established by an individual to hold the account's assets in trust for someone else.

account payable. (usu. pl.) An account reflecting a balance owed to a creditor; a debt owed by an enterprise in the normal course of business dealing. — Often shortened to payable. — Also termed note payable. Pl. accounts payable.

account receivable. (usu. pl.) An account reflecting a balance owed by a debtor; a debt owed by a customer to an enterprise for goods or services. — Often shortened to receivable. — Also termed note receivable. Pl. accounts receivable.

account rendered. An account produced by the creditor and presented for the debtor's examination and acceptance.

account settled. An account with a paid balance.

account stated. 1. A balance that parties to a transaction or settlement agree on, either expressly or by implication. ● The phrase also refers to the agreement itself or to the assent giving rise to the agreement.

"An account stated is a manifestation of assent by debtor and creditor to a stated sum as an accurate computation of an amount due the creditor." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 282(1) (1981).

"If a creditor and a debtor wish to compromise or liquidate a disputed or unliquidated debt, they may do so by either a substituted contract or an accord. If, however, their agreement is in the nature of a computation, it is called an account stated. An account stated, then, is a manifestation of assent by both parties to the stated sum as an accurate computation of the debt." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 4.24, at 286 (1982).

2. A plaintiff's claim in a suit for such a balance. 3. Equity practice. A defendant's plea in response to an action for an accounting. ● The defendant states that the balance due on the statement of the account has been discharged and that the defendant holds the plaintiff's release. — Also termed stated account.

accumulated-adjustments account. Tax. An item on the books of an S corporation (usu. an equity item on the corporation's balance sheet) to account for taxable-income items passed through to shareholders, such as accumulated earnings — earned before the corporation converted from a C corporation to an S corporation — that would have been distributed as a dividend to the shareholders if the corporation had remained a C corporation. • One of the theories underlying the accumulated-adjustments account is that the shareholders should not be permitted to avoid dividend-tax treatment on a corporation's accumulated earnings just because the corporation converts from C status to S status. IRC (26 USCA) § 1368(e)(1). — Abbr. AAA.

adjunct account. An account that accumulates additions to another account.

assigned account. A pledge of an account receivable to a bank or factor as security for a loan.

bank account. A deposit or credit account with a bank, such as a demand, time, savings, or passbook account. UCC § 4-104(a).

blocked account. An account at a bank or other financial institution, access to which has been restricted either by the government or by an authorized person. • An account may be blocked for a variety of reasons, as when hostilities erupt between two countries and each blocks access to the other's accounts. — Also termed frozen account.

book account. A detailed statement of debits and credits giving a history of an enterprise's business transactions.

capital account. An account on a partnership's balance sheet representing a partner's share of the partnership capital.

charge account. See CHARGE ACCOUNT.

closed account. An account that no further credits or debits may be added to but that remains open for adjustment or setoff.

community account. An account consisting of commingled and community funds. See COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

contra account (kon-trə). An account that serves to reduce the gross valuation of an asset.

custodial account. An account opened on behalf of someone else, such as one opened by a parent for a minor child.

deposit account. A demand, time, savings, passbook, or similar account maintained with a bank, savings-and-loan association, credit union, or like organization, other than investment property or an account evidenced by an instrument. UCC § 9-102(a)(20). — Abbr. D.A.

escrow account. 1. A bank account, generally held in the name of the depositor and an escrow agent, that is returnable to the depositor or paid to a third person on the fulfillment of specified conditions. — Also termed escrow deposit. See ESCROW. 2. See impound account.

frozen account. See blocked account.

impound account. An account of accumulated funds held by a lender for payment of taxes, insurance, or other periodic debts against real property. — Also termed escrow; escrow account; reserve account. See ESCROW.

intermediate account. An account filed by an executor, administrator, or guardian after the initial account and before the final account.

joint account. A bank or brokerage account opened by two or more people, by which each party has a present right to all funds in the account and, upon the death of one party, the survivors become the owners of the account, with no right of the deceased party's heirs or devisees to share in it. — Abbr. JA. — Also termed joint-and-survivorship account.

lien account. A statement of claims that fairly informs the owner and public of the amount and nature of a lien.

long account. An account involving numerous items or complex transactions in an equitable action, usu. referred to a master or commissioner.

margin account. A brokerage account that allows an investor to buy or sell securities on credit, with the securities usu. serving as collateral for the broker's loan.

multiple-party account. An account that has more than one owner with a current interest in the account. • Multiple-party accounts include joint accounts, payable-on-death (P.O.D.) accounts, and trust accounts. Uniform Probate Code § 6-201(5).

mutual account. An account showing mutual transactions between parties, as by showing debits and credits on both sides of the account.

“[E]ach party to a mutual account occupies both a debtor and creditor relation with regard to the other party. A mutual account arises where there are mutual dealings, and the account is allowed to run with a view to an ultimate adjustment of the balance. In order to establish a mutual account, it is not enough that the parties to the account have cross demands or cross open accounts; there must be an actual mutual agreement, express or implied, that the claims are to be set off against each other." 1 Am. Jur. 2d Accounts and Accounting § 6, at 564 (1994).

negotiable-order-of-withdrawal account. See NOW account.

nominal account (nahm-ə-nəl). An income-statement account that is closed into surplus at the end of the year when the books are balanced.

NOW account (now). An interest-bearing savings account on which the holder may write checks. — Also termed negotiable-order-of-withdrawal account.

offset account. One of two accounts that balance against each other and cancel each other out when the books are closed.

open account. 1. An unpaid or unsettled account. 2. An account that is left open for ongoing debit and credit entries and that has a fluctuating balance until either party finds it convenient to settle and close, at which time there is a single liability.

pledged account. A mortgagor's account pledged to a lender in return for a loan bearing interest at a below-market rate.

real account. An account that records assets and liabilities rather than receipts and payments.

reserve account. See impound account.

revolving charge account. See revolving credit under CREDIT (4).

running account. An open, unsettled account that exhibits the reciprocal demands between the parties.

sequestered account. An account (such as a joint bank account) that a court has ordered to be separated, frozen, and impounded.

share-draft account. An account that a member maintains at a credit union and that can be drawn on through the use of share drafts payable to third parties. • A share-draft account operates much like a checking account operates at a bank. — Also termed share account.

accountable receipt. See RECEIPT.

accountant. 1. A person authorized under applicable law to practice public accounting; a person whose business is to keep books or accounts, to perform financial audits, to design and control accounting systems, and to give tax advice. • For some purposes, the term includes a professional accounting association, a corporation, and a partnership, if they are so authorized.

certified public accountant. An accountant who has satisfied the statutory and administrative requirements to be registered or licensed as a public accountant. — Abbr. CPA.

2. A defendant in an action of account.

accountant-client privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

accountant's lien. See LIEN.

account book. A journal in which a business's transactions are recorded. See SHOP BOOKS.

account debtor. See DEBTOR.

account for. 1. To furnish a good reason or convincing explanation for; to explain the cause of. 2. To render a reckoning of (funds held, esp. in trust). 3. To answer for (conduct).

accounting. 1. The act or a system of establishing or settling financial accounts; esp., the process of recording transactions in the financial records of a business and periodically extracting, sorting, and summarizing the recorded transactions to produce a set of financial records. — Also termed financial accounting. 2. A rendition of an account, either voluntarily or by court order. • The term frequently refers to the report of all items of property, income, and expenses prepared by a personal representative, trustee, or guardian and given to heirs, beneficiaries, and the probate court. 3. A legal action to compel a defendant to account for and pay over money owed to the plaintiff but held by the defendant (often the plaintiff's agent); ACCOUNTING FOR PROFITS. — Also termed account render; account. 4. More broadly, an action for the recovery of money for services performed, property sold and delivered, money loaned, or damages for the nonperformance of simple contracts. • Such an action is available when the rights of parties will be adequately protected by the payment of money. — Also termed action on account; account; action of book debt. 5. Commercial law. An equitable proceeding for a complete settlement of all partnership affairs, usu. in connection with partner misconduct or with a winding up. See WINDING UP. 6. Secured transactions. A record that (1) is authenticated by a secured party, (2) indicates the aggregate unpaid secured obligation as of a date no more than 35 days before or after the date of the record, and (3) identifies the components of the obligations in reasonable detail. UCC § 9-102(a)(2).

accounting for profits. An action for equitable relief against a person in a fiduciary relationship to recover profits taken in a breach of the relationship. — Often shortened to accounting.

“The term accounting, or accounting for profits, is used in several ways. In its most important meaning, it is a restitutionary remedy based upon avoiding unjust enrichment. In this sense it reaches monies owed by a fiduciary or other wrongdoer, including profits produced by property which in equity and good conscience belonged to the plaintiff. It resembles a constructive trust in that tracing may be used to reach profits. But even if tracing fails, the plaintiff may recover a judgment for the profits due from use of his property.” Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies § 4.3(5), at 408 (2d ed. 1993).

accounting method. A system for determining income and expenses for tax purposes.

accrual accounting method (ə-kroo-əl). An accounting method that records entries of debits and credits when the liability arises, rather than when the income or expense is received or disbursed.

capitalization accounting method. A method of determining an asset's present value by discounting its stream of expected future benefits at an appropriate rate.

cash-basis accounting method. An accounting method that considers only cash actually received as income and cash actually paid out as an expense.

completed-contract accounting method. A method of reporting profit or loss on certain long-term contracts by recognizing gross income and expenses in the tax year that the contract is completed.

cost accounting method. The practice of recording the value of assets in terms of their cost. — Also termed cost accounting.

direct charge-off accounting method. A system of accounting by which a deduction for bad debts is allowed when an account has become partially or completely worthless.

equity accounting method. A method of accounting for long-term investment in common stock based on acquisition cost, investor income, net losses, and dividends.

fair-value accounting method. The valuation of assets at present actual or market value.

installment accounting method. A method by which a taxpayer can spread the recognition of gains from a sale of property over the payment period by computing the gross-profit percentage from the sale and applying it to each payment.

percentage-of-completion method. An accounting method in which revenue is recognized gradually during the completion of the subject matter of the contract.

physical-inventory accounting method. A method of counting a company's goods at the close of an accounting period.

purchase accounting method. A method of accounting for mergers whereby the total value paid or exchanged for the acquired firm's assets is recorded on the acquiring firm's books, and any difference between the fair market value of the assets acquired and the purchase price is recorded as goodwill.

accounting period. A regular span of time used for accounting purposes; esp., a period used by a taxpayer in determining income and related tax liability.

Accounting Research Bulletin. A publication containing accounting practices recommended by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants. — Abbr. ARB.

a ce (a sə), adv. [Law French] For this purpose.

a cel jour (ə sel zhoor), adv. [Law French] At this day.

ac etiam (ak ee-shee-əm or esh-ee-əm). [Law Latin] 1. And also. ● These words introduced a genuine claim in a pleading in a common-law case in which a fictitious claim had to be alleged to give the court jurisdiction. In other words, the phrase ac etiam directed the court to the real cause of action. — Also spelled acetiam.

“[T]o remedy this inconvenience, the officers of the king’s bench devised a method of adding what is called a clause of ac etiam to the usual complaint of trespass; the bill of Middlesex commanding the defendant to be brought in to answer the plaintiff of a plea of trespass, and also to a bill of debt: the complaint of trespass giving cognizance to the court, and that of debt authorizing the arrest.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 288 (1768).

2. Common-law pleading. The clause that introduced the real allegation after a fictitious allegation of trespass. — Also termed (in sense 2) ac etiam clause.

acknowledge, vb. 1. To recognize (something) as being factual <acknowledge the federal court’s jurisdiction>. 2. To show that one accepts responsibility for <acknowledge paternity of the child>. 3. To make known the receipt of <acknowledged the plaintiff’s letter>. 4. To confirm as genuine before an authorized officer <acknowledged before a notary public>. 5. (Of a notary public or other officer) to certify as genuine <the notary acknowledged the genuineness of the signature>.

acknowledgment. 1. A recognition of something as being factual. 2. An acceptance of responsibility. 3. The act of making it known that one has received something. 4. A formal declaration made in the presence of an authorized officer, such as a notary public, by someone who signs a document and confirms that the signature is authentic. ● In most states, the officer certifies that (1) he or she personally knows the document signer or has established the signer’s identity through satisfactory evidence, (2) the signer appeared before the officer on the date and in the place (usu. the county) indicated, and (3) the signer acknowledged signing the document freely. Cf. VERIFICATION (1).

“An acknowledgment is a verification of the fact of execution, but is not a verification of the contents of the instrument executed; in other words, an acknowledgment is the method of authenticating an instrument by showing it was the act of the person executing it, while a verification is a sworn statement as to the truth of the facts stated within an instrument.” 1A C.J.S. Acknowledgments § 2 (1985).

5. The officer’s certificate that is affixed to the document. — Also termed (in sense 5) certificate of acknowledgment; (loosely) verification. See PROOF OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

jury verdict, that an accused person is not guilty of the charged offense.

acquittal in fact. An acquittal by a jury verdict of not guilty.

acquittal in law. An acquittal by operation of law, as of someone who has been charged merely as an accessory after the principal has been acquitted.

implied acquittal. An acquittal in which a jury convicts the defendant of a lesser-included offense without commenting on the greater offense. • Double jeopardy bars the retrial of a defendant who has received an implied acquittal.

2. Contracts. A release or discharge from debt or other liability; ACQUITTANCE. 3. Hist. The obligation of a middle lord to protect a tenant from a claim, entry, or molestation by a paramount lord arising out of service that the middle lord owes the paramount lord.

acquittance, n. A document by which one is discharged from a debt or other obligation; a receipt or release indicating payment in full. — acquit, vb.

acquitted, adj. 1. Judicially discharged from an accusation; absolved. 2. Released from a debt.

acre. An area of land measuring 43,560 square

acre-foot. A volume measurement in irrigation, equal to the amount of water that will cover one acre of land in one foot of water (325,850 gallons).

acre right. Hist. In New England, a citizen’s share in the common lands. • The value of the acre right varied among towns but was fixed in each town. A 10-acre lot in a certain town was equivalent to 113 acres of upland and 12 acres of meadow, and an exact proportion was maintained between the acre right and salable land.

across-the-board, adj. Applying to all classes, categories, or groups <an across-the-board tax cut>.

ACRS. abbr. ACCELERATED COST-RECOVERY SYS-TEM.

act, n. 1. Something done or performed, esp.
voluntarily; a deed.

“[A]ct’ or ‘action’ means a bodily movement whether voluntary or involuntary . . .” Model Penal Code § 1.13.

2. The process of doing or performing; an occurrence that results from a person’s will being exerted on the external world; ACTION (1). — Also termed positive act; act of commission.

“The term act is one of ambiguous import, being used in various senses of different degrees of generality. When it is said, however, that an act is one of the essential conditions of liability, we use the term in the widest sense of which it is capable. We mean by it any event which is subject to the control of the human will. Such a definition is, indeed, not ultimate, but it is sufficient for the purpose of the law." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 367 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"The word 'act' is used throughout the Restatement of this Subject to denote an external manifestation of the actor's will and does not include any of its results, even the most direct, immediate, and intended." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 2 (1965).

act in pais (in pay). [Law French] An act performed out of court, such as a deed made between two parties on the land being transferred. See IN PAIS.

act in the law. An act that is intended to create, transfer, or extinguish a right and that is effective in law for that purpose; the exercise of a legal power. — Also termed juristic act; act of the party; legal act.

act of omission. See negative act.

act of the law. The creation, extinction, or transfer of a right by the operation of the law itself, without any consent on the part of the persons concerned. — Also termed legal act.

act of the party. See act in the law.

administrative act. An act made in a management capacity; esp., an act made outside the actor's usual field (as when a judge supervises court personnel). • An administrative act is often subject to a greater risk of liability than an act within the actor's usual field. See IMMUNITY (1).

bilateral act. An act that involves the consenting wills of two or more distinct parties, as with a contract, a conveyance, a mortgage, or a lease; AGREEMENT (1).

external act. An act involving bodily activity, such as speaking.

intentional act. An act resulting from the actor's will directed to that end. • An act is intentional when foreseen and desired by the doer, and this foresight and desire resulted in the act through the operation of the will.

internal act. An act of the mind, such as thinking.

judicial act. An act involving the exercise of judicial power.

"The distinction between a judicial and a legislative act is well defined. The one determines what the law is, and what the rights of parties are, with reference to transactions already had; the other prescribes what the law shall be in future cases arising under it." Union Pacific R.R. v. United States, 99 U.S. 700, 721 (1878) (Field, J., dissenting).

jural act (joor-əl). An act taken in the context of or in furtherance of a society's legal system. — Also termed jural activity.

"In order to identify an act as a jural act, it must be the kind of act that would be engaged in by someone who is enforcing a law, determining an infraction of the law, making or changing a law, or settling a dispute." Martin P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 23 (1975).

juristic act. See act in the law.

negative act. The failure to do something that is legally required; a nonoccurrence that involves the breach of a legal duty to take positive action. • This takes the form of either a forbearance or an omission. — Also termed act of omission.

unilateral act. An act in which there is only one party whose will operates, as in a testamentary disposition, the exercise of a power of appointment, or the avoidance of a voidable contract.

unintentional act. An act not resulting from the actor's will toward what actually takes place.

verbal act. An act performed through the medium of words, either spoken or written.

3. The formal product of a legislature or other deliberative body; esp., STATUTE.

construction act. A legislative directive included in a statute, intended to guide or direct a court's interpretation of the statute. • A construction act can, for example, be a simple statement such as "The word 'week' means seven consecutive days" or a broader directive such as "Words and phrases are to be read in context and construed according to the rules of grammar and common usage. Words and phrases that have acquired a technical or particular meaning, whether by legislative definition or otherwise, are to be construed accordingly."

acta diurna (ak-tə dī-ər-nə), n. [Latin "daily proceedings"] Roman law. A public register of the daily proceedings of the senate, assemblies of the people, or the courts.

acta publica (ak-tə pəb-li-kə), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. Things of general knowledge and concern; matters transacted before certain public officers.

acte (akt), n. [French] French law. 1. An instrument; a proof in writing, such as a deed, bill of sale, or birth certificate.

acte authentique (akt oh-tawn-teek). A deed executed with certain prescribed formalities, in the presence of a notary or other official.

acte de décès (akt də day-say). A death certificate.

acte de francisation (akt də frangk-ə-zasyawn). A certificate confirming that a ship is of French nationality.

acte de mariage (akt də mar-yahzh). A marriage certificate.

acte de naissance (akt də nay-sənts). A birth certificate.

acte extrajudiciaire (akt eks-trə-zhuu-deesyair). A document served by a huissier at the request of one party on another party without legal proceedings. See HUISSIER (1).

l'acte de l'état civil (lakt də lay-tah see-veel). A public document relating to status (e.g., birth, divorce, death).

2. An act; conduct.

acte d'héritier (akt day-ri-tyay). [French "act of an heir"] Conduct by an heir indicating an intent to accept the succession.

acting, adj. Holding an interim position; serving temporarily <an acting director>.

acting chargé d'affaires. See CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES.

acting executor. See EXECUTOR.

actio (ak-shee-oh also ak-tee-oh), n. [Latin] 1. Roman & civil law. An action; a right or claim. 2. A right of action. 3. Hist. At common law, a lawsuit. Pl. actiones.

actio ad exhibendum (ak-shee-oh ad ek-siben-dəm). An action to compel a defendant to produce property so as to establish that it is in the defendant's possession.

actio aestimatoria. See DE AESTIMATO.

actio arbitraria (ak-shee-oh ahr-bi-trair-ee-ə). An action in which the judge orders the defendant to do something (such as restoring property to the plaintiff) on pain of a monetary judgment payable to the plaintiff.

actio bonae fidei (ak-shee-oh boh-nee fi-dee-i). One of a class of actions in which a judge could take equitable considerations into account in rendering a decision.

actio calumniae (ak-shee-oh kə-ləm-nee-ee). An action to retrain, or collect damages for, a malicious civil suit.

actio civilis (ak-shee-oh sə-vi-lis). A civil action.

actio commodati (ak-shee-oh kom-ə-day-ti). [Latin "action on loan"] Roman law. An action for the recovery of a thing gratuitously lent but not returned to the lender. — Also termed commodati actio. See COMMODATUM.

actio commodati contraria (ak-shee-oh kom-ə-day-ti kən-trair-ee-ə). An action by a gratuitous borrower against a lender to compel the performance of, or for damages for the breach of, the contract.

actio commodati directa (ak-shee-oh kom-ə-day-ti di-rek-tə). An action by a lender against a borrower for restitution for an item gratuitously lent to another.

actio condictio indebiti (ak-shee-oh kən-dik-shee-oh in-deb-ə-ti). See condictio indebiti under CONDUCTIO. • Strictly speaking, the headword is a solecism, since a condictio is a type of actio, but it is occasionally found in legal literature.

actio conducti (ak-shee-oh kən-dək-ti). [Latin "action for the thing hired"] Roman law. An action that a hirer of a thing (the conductor) might have against a lessor. Cf. actio locati.

actio confessoria (ak-shee-oh kon-fə-sor-ee-ə). [Latin "action based on an admission"] Roman law. 1. See vindicatio servitutis under VINDICATIO. 2. An action in which the defendant admits liability but does not express it in a fixed sum. • A judge therefore assesses the damages.

actio contraria (ak-shee-oh kən-trair-ee-ə). A counterclaim. Cf. actio directa.

actio criminalis (ak-shee-oh kri-mə-nay-lis). A criminal action.

actio damni injuriae (ak-shee-oh dam-ni in-joor-ee-ə). An action for damages for tortiously causing pecuniary loss.

actio de communi dividendo. See DE COMMUNI DIVIDUNDO.

actio de dolo malo (ak-shee-oh dee doh-loh mal-oh). An action of fraud. • This type of action was widely applied in cases involving deceitful conduct. — Also termed actio doli.

actio de in rem verso (ak-shee-oh dee in rem vər-soh). See action de in rem verso under ACTION.

actio de peculio (ak-shee-oh dee pə-kyoo-lee-oh). An action against a paterfamilias or slave owner concerning the child or slave's separate fund (peculium).

actio de pecunia constituta (ak-shee-oh dee pə-kyoo-nee-ə kon-sti-t[y]oo-tə). An action on a promise to pay a preexisting debt.

actio depositi contraria (ak-shee-oh di-poz-ə-ti kən-trair-ee-ə). An action that a depositary has against the depositor for unpaid expenses.

actio depositi directa (ak-shee-oh di-poz-ə-ti di-rek-tə). An action that a depositor has against a depositary for the return of the deposited item.

actio de tigno juncto (ak-shee-oh dee tignoh jəngk-toh). An action by the owner of material incorporated without payment into the defendant's building.

actio directa (ak-shee-oh di-rek-tə). 1. An action founded on strict law and conducted according to fixed forms; an action based on clearly defined obligations actionable at law. 2. A direct action, as opposed to a counterclaim (actio contraria). Cf. actio utilis.

actio empti (ak-shee-oh emp-ti). An action by a buyer to compel a seller to deliver the item sold or for damages for breach of contract.

actio ex conducto (ak-shee-oh eks kən-dəkt-toh). An action by the lessee of a thing or the hirer of another's services to enforce the contract or claim damages for breach.

actio ex contractu (ak-shee-oh eks kən-trak-t[y]oo). An action arising out of a contract. • This term had a similar meaning at common law.

actio ex delicto (ak-shee-oh eks də-lik-toh). An action founded on a tort. — Also termed actio poenalis.

actio exercitoria (ak-shee-oh eg-zər-si-tor-ee-ə). An action against the owner or lessee (exercitor) of a vessel, esp. for contracts made by the master. — Also termed exercitoria actio.

actio ex locato. See actio locati.

actio ex stipulatu (ak-shee-oh eks stip-yə-lay-t[y]oo). An action brought to enforce a stipulatio. See STIPULATIO.

actio familiae erciscundae (ak-shee-oh fəmil-ee-ee ər-sis-kən-dee). [Latin "to divide an estate"] Roman law. An action for the partition of the inheritance among heirs. — Sometimes shortened to familiae erciscundae.

actio furti (ak-shee-oh fər-ti). Roman law. An action by which the owner of stolen goods can recover twice their value from the thief by way of penalty, without prejudice to a further action to recover the goods themselves or their value.

actio honoraria (ak-shee-oh on-ə-rair-ee-ə). A praetorian action; a class of equitable actions introduced by the praetors to prevent injustices.

actio in factum (ak-shee-oh in fak-təm). Roman law. An action granted by the praetor when no standard action was available. • The closest Anglo-American equivalent is action on the case or trespass on the case. See trespass on the case under TRESPASS.

actio in personam (ak-shee-oh in pər-soh-nəm). See action in personam under ACTION.

actio in rem (ak-shee-oh in rem). See action in rem under ACTION.

actio institoria (ak-shee-oh in-sti-tor-ee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. An action against a principal by one who contracted with the principal's business agent. See INSTITOR.

actio iudicati (ak-shee-oh joo-di-kay-ti). An action to enforce a judgment by execution on the defendant's property.

actio legis Aquiliae (ak-shee-oh lee-jis əkwil-ee-ee). An action under the Aquilian law; an action to recover damages for intentional or negligent injury to another's property.

actio locati (ak-shee-oh loh-kay-ti). [Latin "action for what has been hired out"] Roman law. An action that a lessor of a thing (the locator) might have against the hirer. — Also termed actio ex locato. Cf. actio conducti.

actio mandati (ak-shee-oh man-day-ti). An action to enforce a contract for gratuitous services (i.e., a mandatum).

actio mixta (ak-shee-oh mik-stə). A mixed action; an action in which two or more features are combined, as an action for damages and for a penalty, or an action in rem and in personam.

actio negatoria (ak-shee-oh neg-ə-tor-ee-ə). An action brought by a landowner against anyone claiming a servitude in the landowner's property. — Also termed actio negativa.

actio negotiorum gestorum (ak-shee-oh nə-goh-shee-ər-əm jes-tor-əm). An action either by a gestor for the recovery of expenses incurred in looking after another's property or against the gestor for the mismanagement of the person's property. See NEGOTIORUM GESTOR.

actio non accrevit infra sex annos (ak-shee-oh non ə-kree-vit seks an-ohs), n. [Latin "the action did not accrue within six years"] Hist. A plea to the statute of limitations by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff's cause of action has not accrued within the last six years.

actio non ulterius (ak-shee-oh non əl-teer-ee-əs), n. [Latin "an action no further"] Hist. The distinctive clause in a plea to abate further maintenance of the action. • This plea replaced the puis darrein continuance. Cf. plea to further maintenance to the action under PLEA; PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE.

actio perpetua (ak-shee-oh pər-pech-oo-ə). An action that is not required to be brought within a specified time. Cf. actio temporalis.

actio personalis (ak-shee-oh pər-sə-nay-lis). A personal action.

actio pignoratitia (ak-shee-oh pig-nə-rə-tish-ee-ə). An action of pledge; an action founded on a contract of pledge. See PIGNUS.

actio poenalis. See actio ex delicto.

actio praejudicialis (ak-shee-oh pree-joo-dish-ee-ay-lis). A preliminary action; an action begun to determine a preliminary matter on which other litigated matters depend.

actio praetoria (ak-shee-oh pri-tor-ee-ə). A praetorian action; one introduced by a praetor.

actio pro socio (ak-shee-oh proh soh-shee-oh). An action brought by one partner against another.

actio Publiciana (ak-shee-oh pə-blish-ee-ay-nə). An action allowing a person who had acquired bonitarian ownership of property to recover it, so that the person would in due course acquire full title by prescription. • This action is named for Publicius, the praetor who first granted it. — Also termed actio Publiciana in rem. See bonitarian ownership under OWNERSHIP.

actio quod jussu (ak-shee-oh kwod jəs-[y]oo). An action against a master for enforcement of a debt contracted on the master's behalf by a slave.

actio quod metus causa (ak-shee-oh kwod mee-təs kaw-zə). An action to penalize someone who wrongfully compelled the plaintiff to assume an obligation. • The plaintiff could obtain damages of four times the value of the extorted property.

actio realis (ak-shee-oh ree-ay-lis). [Law Latin] A real action.

actio redhibitoria (ak-shee-oh red-i-bi-tor-ee-ə). An action to cancel a sale because of defects in the thing sold.

actio rerum amotarum (ak-shee-oh reer-əm am-ə-tair-əm). An action to recover items stolen by a spouse shortly before a divorce.

actio rescissoria (ak-shee-oh re-si-sor-ee-ə). An action to restore the plaintiff to property lost by prescription. • This action was available to minors and other persons exempt from prescriptive claims against their property.

actio serviana (ak-shee-oh sər-vee-ay-nə). An action by which a lessor could seize, in satisfaction of unpaid rent, the lessee's personal property brought onto the leased premises.

actio stricti juris (ak-shee-oh strik-ti joor-is). A class of personal actions enforceable exactly as stated in the formula without taking equitable considerations into account; an action of strict right. See FORMULA (1).

actio temporalis (ak-shee-oh tem-pə-ray-lis). An action that must be brought within a specified time. Cf. actio perpetua.

actio tutelae (ak-shee-oh t[y]oo-tee-lee). An action arising from a breach of the duty owed by a guardian (tutor) to the ward, such as mismanagement of the ward's property.

actio utilis (ak-shee-oh yoo-tə-lis). An action founded on utility rather than strict right, available esp. to persons having an interest in property less than ownership. • This type of action was modeled after the actio directa. Cf. actio directa (1).

actio venditi (ak-shee-oh ven-də-ti). An action by which a seller could enforce a contract of sale.

actio vi bonorum raptorum (ak-shee-oh vi bə-nor-əm rap-tor-əm). A penal action to recover goods taken by force. • A successful plaintiff would also receive three times the value of the taken property. Cf. INTERDICTUM QUOD VI AUT CLAM.

actio vulgaris (ak-shee-oh vəl-gair-is). An ordinary action, as opposed to one granted in special circumstances.

action. 1. The process of doing something; conduct or behavior. 2. A thing done; ACT (1). 3. A civil or criminal judicial proceeding.

"An action has been defined to be an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice, by which one party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. But in some sense this definition is equally applicable to special proceedings. More accurately, it is defined to be any judicial proceeding, which, if conducted to a determination, will result in a judgment or decree. The action is said to terminate at judgment." 1 Morris M. Estee, Estee's Pleadings, Practice, and Forms § 3, at 1 (Carter P. Pomeroy ed., 3d ed. 1885).

"The terms 'action' and 'suit' are nearly if not quite synonymous. But lawyers usually speak of proceedings in courts of law as 'actions,' and of those in courts of equity as 'suits.' In olden time there was a more marked distinction, for an action was considered as terminating when judgment was rendered, the execution forming no part of it. A suit, on the other hand, included the execution. The word 'suit,' as used in the Judiciary Act of 1784 and later Federal statutes, applies to any proceeding in a court of justice in which the plaintiff pursues in such court the remedy which the law affords him." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 3 (2d ed. 1899).

"'Action' in the sense of a judicial proceeding includes recoupment, counterclaim, set-off, suit in equity, and any other proceedings in which rights are determined." UCC § 1-201(1).

action de die in diem (dee di-ee in di-em). [Law Latin "from day to day"] Hist. 1. An action occurring from day to day; a continuing right of action. 2. An action for trespass for each day that an injury continues.

"That trespass by way of personal entry is a continuing injury, lasting as long as the personal presence of the wrongdoer, and giving rise to actions de die in diem so long as it lasts, is sufficiently obvious." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 42 (17th ed. 1977).

action de in rem verso (dee in rem vær-soh). [Latin "action for money applied to the defendant's advantage"] Roman & civil law. An action for unjust enrichment, in which the plaintiff must show that an enrichment was bestowed, that the enrichment caused an impoverishment, that there is no justification for the enrichment and impoverishment, and that the plaintiff has no other adequate remedy at law, including no remedy under an express or implied contract. — Also termed actio de in rem verso.

action ex contractu (eks kən-trak-t[y]oo). A personal action arising out of a contract.

"Actions ex contractu were somewhat illogically classified thus: covenant, debt, assumpsit, detinue, and account. The action of covenant lay where the party claimed damages for a breach of contract or promise under seal. The writ of debt lay for the recovery of a debt; that is, a liquidated or certain sum of money alleged to be due from defendant to plaintiff. The writ of detinue was the ancient remedy where the plaintiff claimed the specific recovery of goods, chattels, deeds, or writings detained from him. This remedy fell into disuse by reason of the unsatisfactory mode of trial of 'wager of law,' which the defendant could claim; and recourse was had to the action of replevin. In the American States an action of replevin founded upon statute provisions is almost universally the remedy for the recovery of specific personal property." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 5 (2d ed. 1899).

action ex delicto (eks də-lik-toh). A personal action arising out of a tort.

"The actions ex delicto were originally the action of trespass and the action of replevin." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 5 (2d ed. 1899).

action for money had and received. At common law, an action by which the plaintiff could recover money paid to the defendant, the money usu. being recoverable because (1) the money had been paid by mistake or under compulsion, or (2) the consideration was insufficient.

"The action for money had and received lay to recover money which the plaintiff had paid to the defendant, on the ground that it had been paid under a mistake or compulsion, or for a consideration which had wholly failed. By this action the plaintiff could also recover money which the defendant had received from a third party, as when he was accountable or had attorned to the plaintiff in respect of the money, or the money formed part of the fruits of an office of the plaintiff which the defendant had usurped." Robert Goff & Gareth Jones, The Law of Restitution 3 (3d ed. 1986).

action for money paid. At common law, an action by which the plaintiff could recover money paid to a third party — not to the defendant — in circumstances in which the defendant had benefited.

"The action for money paid was the appropriate action when the plaintiff's claim was in respect of money paid, not to the defendant, but to a third party, from which the defendant had derived a benefit. Historically, the plaintiff had to show that the payment was made at the defendant's request; but we shall see that the law was prepared to 'imply' such a request on certain occasions, in particular where the payment was made under compulsion of law or, in limited circumstances, in the course of intervention in an emergency on the defendant's behalf, which in this book we shall call necessitous intervention." Robert Goff & Gareth Jones, The Law of Restitution 3 (3d ed. 1986).

action for poinding. Hist. A creditor's action to obtain sequestration of the land rents and goods of the debtor to satisfy the debt or enforce a distress.

action for the loss of services. Hist. A husband's lawsuit against one who has taken away, imprisoned, or physically harmed his wife in circumstances in which (1) the act is wrongful to the wife, and (2) the husband is deprived of her society or services.

action for the recovery of land. See EJECTMENT.

action in equity. An action that seeks equitable relief, such as an injunction or specific performance, as opposed to damages.

action in personam (in pər-sōh-nəm). An action determining the rights and interests of the parties themselves in the subject matter of the case. — Also termed personal action; (in Roman law) actio in personam; actio personalis. See IN PERSONAM.

action in rem (in rem). An action determining the title to property and the rights of the parties, not merely among themselves, but also against all persons at any time claiming an interest in that property. — Also termed (in Roman law) actio in rem; actio realis. See IN REM.

action of assize. Hist. A real action by which the plaintiff proves title to land merely by showing an ancestor's possession. See ASSIZE.

action of book debt. See ACCOUNTING (4).

action of reprobator. See REPROBATOR.

action on account. See ACCOUNTING (4).

action on expenditure. An action for payment of the principal debt by a personal surety.

action on the case. See trespass on the case under TRESPASS.

action per quod servitium amisit (pər kwod sər-vish-ee-əm ə-mi-sit). [Latin] Hist. An action for the loss of a servant's services.

action quasi in rem (kway-sī in rem or kway-zī). An action brought against the defendant personally, with jurisdiction based on an interest in property, the objective being to deal with the particular property or to subject the property to the discharge of the claims asserted. See quasi in rem under IN REM.

action to quiet title. A proceeding to establish a plaintiff's title to land by compelling the adverse claimant to establish a claim or be forever estopped from asserting it. — Also termed quiet-title action.

amicable action. See test case (1) under CASE.

civil action. An action brought to enforce, redress, or protect a private or civil right; a noncriminal litigation.

"The code of New York, as originally adopted, declared, 'the distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of all such actions and heretofore existing, are abolished; and there shall be in this State hereafter but one form of action for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress of private wrongs, which shall be denominated a civil action.' With slight verbal changes the above provision has been enacted in most of the States and Territories which have adopted the reformed procedure." Edwin E. Bryant, The class action. See CLASS ACTION.

collusive action. An action between two parties who have no actual controversy, being merely for the purpose of determining a legal question or receiving a precedent that might prove favorable in related litigation. — Also termed fictional action.

common-law action. An action governed by common law, rather than statutory, equitable, or civil law.

criminal action. An action instituted by the government to punish offenses against the public.

derivative action. See DERIVATIVE ACTION.

direct action. See DIRECT ACTION.

fictional action. See collusive action.

fictitious action. An action, usu. unethical, brought solely to obtain a judicial opinion on an issue of fact or law, rather than for the disposition of a controversy.

joint action. 1. An action brought by two or more plaintiffs. 2. An action brought against two or more defendants.

local action. An action that can be brought only in the jurisdiction where the cause of action arose, as when the action's subject matter is a piece of real property.

matrimonial action. An action relating to the state of marriage, such as an action for separation, annulment, or divorce.

mixed action. An action that has some characteristics of both a real action and a personal action.

"In early times the only mixed actions were those for the partition of lands, for which a writ was provided in the common-law courts. The remedy was further enlarged by the statute of 31 Hen. VII c. 1, and 32 Hen. VIII c. 32, which gave compulsory partition, by writ at common law. These statutes formed the basis of partition in the American States; but in England and here courts of Chancery have been found most convenient, and their procedure most favorable for the division of estates in land. The statutes at the present time, in most of the States, prescribe a procedure which is quite similar to that in equity practice." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 10-11 (2d ed. 1899).

nonpersonal action. An action that proceeds within some category of territorial jurisdiction other than in personam — that is, jurisdiction in rem, quasi in rem, or over status.

penal action. 1. A criminal prosecution. 2. A civil proceeding in which either the state or a common informer sues a defendant who has violated a statute and seeks to recover a penalty. • Although civil in nature, a penal action resembles a criminal proceeding because the result of a successful action is a monetary penalty intended, like a fine, to punish the defendant. See COMMON INFORMER.

“For in ‘penal actions’, unless the statute expressly authorizes private persons to act as informers, the State alone can sue and recover the penalty; and yet there is full authority for ranking such suits by it as merely civil proceedings.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 538 (16th ed. 1952).

3. A civil lawsuit by an aggrieved party seeking recovery of a statutory fine or a penalty, such as punitive damages.

“[T]here exists a well-known class of proceedings called ‘penal actions’, by which pecuniary penalties can be recovered — in some cases by any person who will sue for them — from the doers of various prohibited acts; these acts being thus prohibited, and visited with penalties, solely on account of their tendency to cause evil to the community at large, ‘considered as a community.’ For example, a person who, in advertising a reward for the return of lost property, adds that ‘no questions will be asked’ incurs by the Larceny Act, 1861, a penalty of £50 recoverable by anyone who will sue for it.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 533-34 (16th ed. 1952).

personal action. 1. An action brought for the recovery of debts, personal property, or damages arising from any cause.

2. See action in personam.

petitory action (pet-ə-tor-ee). An action to establish and enforce title to property independently of the right to possession. — Also termed petitorium.

plenary action (plee-nə-ree or plen-). A full hearing or trial on the merits, as opposed to a summary proceeding. Cf. summary proceeding under PROCEEDING.

possessory action (pə-zes-ə-ree). 1. An action to obtain, recover, or maintain possession of property but not title to it, such as an action to evict a nonpaying tenant. — Also termed possessorium.

“The possessory action affords a remedy against a disturbance, in fact or in law, of possession. The function of the possessory action is to aid the ‘disturbed’ possessor of immovable property or a real right in maintaining his possession of the property or the enjoyment of the right, or to restore the ‘evicted’ possessor to the possession of the property or enjoyment of the right.” James D. Johnson, Jr., Guide to Louisiana Real Actions, Ten Year and Thirty Year Prescriptions 5 (1961).

2. Maritime law. An action brought to recover possession of a ship under a claim of title.

real action. An action brought for the recovery of land or other real property; specif., an action to recover the possession of a freehold estate in real property, or seisin. See SEISIN.

“If the question be asked why it was that a large part of the really English law which Bracton undertook to expound is found in connection with the subject of real actions, while in Blackstone’s treatise only the personal actions are deemed worthy of attention, the answer must be that the former were dying out. When Chitty wrote (1808) the old real actions were practically obsolete, and in the succeeding generation such vestiges of them as remained were abolished by statute.” Hannis Taylor, The Science of Jurisprudence 574 (1908).

“The principal real actions formerly in use were (1) the writs of right; (2) the writs of entry; (3) the possessory assizes, such as novel disseisin and mort d’ancestor. Real actions are those in which the demandant seeks to recover seisin from one called a tenant, because he holds the land. They are real actions at common law because the judgment is in rem and awards the seisin or possession.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 32, at 63 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

redhibitory action. Civil law. An action brought to void a sale of an item having a defect that renders it either useless or so flawed that the buyer would not have bought it in the first place. See REDHIBITION.

remedial action. See REMEDIAL ACTION.

separate action. 1. An action brought alone by each of several complainants who are all involved in the same transaction but cannot legally join the suit. 2. One of several distinct actions brought by a single plaintiff against each of two or more parties who are all liable to a plaintiff with respect to the same subject matter. — Also termed several action.

several action. See separate action.

statutory action. An action governed by statutory law rather than equitable, civil, or common law.

test action. See test case (2) under CASE.

third-party action. An action distinct from the main claim, whereby the defendant brings in an entity that is not directly involved in the lawsuit but that may be liable to the defendant for all or part of the plaintiff's claim. • A common example is an action for indemnity or contribution.

transitory action. An action that can be brought in any venue where the defendant can be personally served with process.

"Transitory actions are universally founded on the supposed violation of rights which, in contemplation of law, have no locality. They are personal actions, that is, they are brought for the enforcement of purely personal rights or obligations. If the transaction on which the action is founded could have taken place anywhere, the action is generally regarded as transitory; but if the transaction could only have happened in a particular place . . . the action is local. Some authorities, considering the effect of the distinction, define transitory actions as actions which may be tried wherever defendant may be found and served." 92 C.J.S. Venue § 8, at 678-79 (1955).

active-operations duty. Maritime law. A shipowner's obligation to provide safe working conditions, in the work areas controlled by the shipowner, for the stevedore and longshoremen who are loading or unloading the ship. — Also termed active-control-of-vessel duty. Cf. TURN-OVER DUTY; INTERVENTION DUTY.

active supervision. Antitrust. Under the test for determining whether a private entity may claim a state-action exemption from the anti-trust laws, the right of the state to review the entity's anticompetitive acts and to disapprove those acts that do not promote state policy. See STATE-ACTION DOCTRINE; MIDCAL TEST.

"The active supervision requirement stems from the recognition that where a private party is engaging in the anticompetitive activity, there is a real danger that he is acting to further his own interests, rather than the governmental interests of the State. The requirement is designed to ensure that the state-action doctrine will shelter only the particular anticompetitive acts that, in the judgment of the State, actually further state regulatory policies. To accomplish this purpose, the active supervision requirement mandates that the State exercise ultimate control over the challenged anticompetitive conduct." Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100-01, 108 S.Ct. 1658, 1663 (1988).

active trust. See TRUST.

active waste. See commissive waste under WASTE.

activity. See MARKET VOLUME.

activity incident to service. An act undertaken by a member of the armed forces as a part of a military operation or as a result of the actor's status as a member of the military. • For example, if a member of the military takes advantage of that status by flying home on a military aircraft, the flight is activity incident to service, and a claim against the government for any injuries received may be barred under the Feres doctrine. See FERES DOCTRINE.

act of attainder. See BILL OF ATTAINDER.

act of bankruptcy. An event, such as a debtor's fraudulent conveyance of property, that triggers an involuntary bankruptcy proceeding against a debtor. • The 1978 Bankruptcy Reform Act abolished this requirement as a condition to an involuntary bankruptcy proceeding.

act of Congress. A law that is formally enacted in accordance with the legislative power granted to Congress by the U.S. Constitution. • To become a law, or an act of Congress, a bill or resolution must be passed by a majority of the members of both the House of Representatives and the Senate. Bills or resolutions may generally be introduced in either chamber, except that bills for generating revenue must be introduced in the House of Representatives. When a bill or resolution is introduced in a chamber, it is usu. assigned to a committee. If it is passed by the committee, it is reported to the full chamber. If it passes in the full chamber, it is reported to the other chamber, which then usu. assigns it to a committee in that chamber. If it passes by majority votes of the committee and act of God. An overwhelming, unpreventable event caused exclusively by forces of nature, such as an earthquake, flood, or tornado. • The definition has been statutorily broadened to include all natural phenomena that are exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible, the effects of which could not be prevented or avoided by the exercise of due care or foresight. 42 USCA § 9601(1). — Also termed act of nature; act of providence. Cf. FORCE MAJEURE; unavoidable accident under ACCIDENT.

"[A]ll natural agencies, as opposed to human activities, constitute acts of God, and not merely those which attain an extraordinary degree of violence or are of very unusual occurrence. The distinction is one of kind and not one of degree. The violence or rarity of the event is relevant only in considering whether it could or could not have been prevented by reasonable care; if it could not, then it is an act of God which will relieve from liability, howsoever trivial or common its cause may have been. If this be correct, then the unpredictable nature of the occurrence will go only to show that the act of God in question was one which the defendant was under no duty to foresee or provide against. It is only in such a case that the act of God will provide a defence." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 330 (17th ed. 1977).

act of grace. An act of clemency; esp., such an act performed at the beginning of a monarch's reign or at some other significant occasion.

act of honor. Commercial law. A transaction, memorialized in an instrument prepared by a notary public, evidencing a third person's agreement to accept, for the credit of one or more of the parties, a bill that has been protested. • The UCC eliminated this type of transaction.

act of nature. See ACT OF GOD.

act of omission. See negative act under ACT (2).

act of Parliament. A law made by the British sovereign, with the advice and consent of the lords and the commons; a British statute.

act of Parliament of Scotland. 1. A law passed by the Parliament of Scotland between its creation about the 17th century and 1707. 2. A law passed (from 1999 onward) by the new Parliament of Scotland created by the Scotland Act of 1998.

act of petition. Hist. A summary proceeding in which litigants provide brief statements supported by affidavit. • This procedure was used in the English High Court of Admiralty.

act of possession. Conduct indicating an intent to claim the property in question as one's own; esp., conduct that supports a claim of adverse possession.

act of sale. An official record of a sale of property; esp., a document drawn up by a notary, signed by the parties, and attested by witnesses.

Act of Settlement. Hist. An act of Parliament (12 & 13 Will. 3, ch. 2, 1700) that resolved the question of royal succession unsettled after the Glorious Revolution of 1688. • The question was resolved by limiting the Crown to members of the House of Hanover who were Protestant. The Act also provided that the sovereign must be a member of the Church of England, and it established that judges would hold office during good behavior rather than at the will of the sovereign.

act-of-state doctrine. The common-law principle that prevents U.S. courts from questioning the validity of a foreign country's sovereign acts within its own territory. • As originally formulated by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1897, the doctrine provides that "the courts of one country will not sit in judgment on the acts of the government of another done within its own territory." Underhill v. Hernandez, 168 U.S. 250, 252, 18 S.Ct. 83, 84 (1897).

Act of Supremacy. Hist. A statute that named the English sovereign as supreme head of the Church of England (26 Hen. 8, ch. 1). • The Act was passed in 1534 during Henry VIII's reign and confirmed in 1559 (1 Eliz., ch. 1) to counteract pro-Catholic legislation enacted during the reign of Mary Tudor.

act of the party. See act in the law under ACT (2).

Act of Uniformity. Hist. Any of several 16th- and 17th-century acts mandating uniform religious practices in England and Ireland; specif., an act requiring the use of the Book of Common Prayer.

Act of Union. Any of several acts of Parliament uniting various parts of Great Britain. • The term applies to (1) the Laws in Wales Act (1535), which united Wales with England and made that principality subject to English law, and (2) the Union with Ireland Act (1800), which abolished the Irish Parliament and incorporated Ireland into the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. It is also, but quite mistakenly, used in reference to the Union with Scotland in 1707, which was not made by statute but by treaty, approved by separate acts of Parliament of Scotland and of England, which by the treaty dissolved themselves and created the new state of Great Britain with one parliament, the Parliament of Great Britain.

actor. 1. One who acts; a person whose conduct is in question. 2. Archaic. A male plaintiff. 3. Hist. An advocate or pleader; one who acted for another in legal matters. Cf. REUS (1).

actrix (ak-triks). Archaic. A female plaintiff.

actually litigated. (Of a claim that might be barred by collateral estoppel) properly raised in an earlier lawsuit, submitted to the court for a determination, and determined. • A party is barred by the doctrine of collateral estoppel from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated — usu. including by summary judgment but not necessarily by default judgment — in an earlier suit involving the same parties, even if that suit involved different claims. Restatement (Second) of Judgments § 27 cmt. d (1982).

actual market value. See fair market value under VALUE.

actual notice. See NOTICE.

actual physical control. Direct bodily power over something, esp. a vehicle. • Many jurisdictions require a showing of “actual physical control” of a vehicle by a person charged with driving while intoxicated.

actual possession. See POSSESSION (3).

actual reduction to practice. See REDUCTION TO PRACTICE.

actual-risk test. The doctrine that, for an injured employee to be entitled to workers’-compensation benefits, the employee must prove that the injury arose from, and occurred in the course and scope of, employment.

actual total loss. See LOSS.

actual value. See fair market value under VALUE.

actuarial equivalent. The amount of accrued pension benefits to be paid monthly or at some other interval so that the total amount of benefits will be paid over the expected remaining lifetime of the recipient.

actuarially sound retirement system. A retirement plan that contains sufficient funds to pay future obligations, as by receiving contributions from employees and the employer to be invested in accounts to pay future benefits. Cf. NONACTUARIALLY SOUND RETIREMENT SYSTEM.

actuarial method. A means of determining the amount of interest on a loan by using the loan’s annual percentage rate to separately calculate the finance charge for each payment period, after crediting each payment, which is credited first to interest and then to principal.

actuarial present value. The amount of money necessary to purchase an annuity that would generate a particular monthly payment, or whatever periodic payment the plan provides, for the expected remaining life span of the recipient.

actuarial surplus. An estimate of the amount by which a pension plan’s assets exceed its expected current and future liabilities, including the amount expected to be needed to fund future benefit payments.

actuarial table. An organized chart of statistical data indicating life expectancies for people in various categories (such as age, family history, and exposure to chemicals). • Actuarial tables are usu. admissible in evidence. — Also termed expectancy table; mortality table; mortuary table. Cf. LIFE TABLE.

actuarius (ak-choo-air-ee-əs or ak-tyoo-), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A notary or clerk; a shorthand writer. 2. A keeper of public records.

actuary (ak-choo-air-ee), n. A statistician who determines the present effects of future contingent events; esp., one who calculates insurance and pension rates on the basis of empirically based tables. — actuarial (ak-choo-air-ee-əl), adj.

actum (ak-təm), n. [Latin] A thing done; an act or deed.

actus (ak-təs), n. [Latin] 1. An act or action; a thing done. 2. Hist. An act of Parliament; esp., one passed by both houses but not yet approved by the monarch. Cf. STATUTUM (1). 3. Roman law. A servitude for driving cattle or a carriage across another's land. Cf. ITER (1).

actus reus (ak-təs ree-əs also ray-əs). [Law Latin "guilty act"] The wrongful deed that comprises the physical components of a crime and that generally must be coupled with mens rea to establish criminal liability; a forbidden act <the actus reus for theft is the taking of or unlawful control over property without the owner's consent>. — Also termed deed of crime; overt act. Cf. MENS REA.

"The word actus connotes a 'deed', a physical result of human conduct. When criminal policy regards such a deed as sufficiently harmful it prohibits it and seeks to prevent its occurrence by imposing a penalty for its commission. It has long been the custom of lawyers to describe a deed so prohibited by law in the words actus reus. Thus actus reus may be defined as 'Such result of human conduct as the law seeks to prevent'. It is important to note that the actus reus, which is the result of conduct, and therefore an event, must be distinguished from the conduct which produced the result. For example, in a simple case of murder it is the victim's death (brought about by the conduct of the murderer) which is the actus reus; the mens rea is the murderer's intention to cause that death. In other words, the crime is constituted by the event, and not by the activity (or in certain cases, as we shall see, by the omission to act) which caused the event." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 13 (16th ed. 1952).

"The phrase 'deed of crime' [= actus reus] as so used does not indicate the crime itself but merely one of the ingredients of crime; and this ingredient may be present without any crime at all, just as hydrogen is one of the ingredients of water but may be present without water. The words 'deed of crime' are so suggesting of the crime itself, however, that perhaps the Latin phrase 'actus reus' is less likely to cause confusion. The actus reus is essential to crime but is not sufficient for this purpose without the necessary mens rea, just as mens rea is essential to crime but is insufficient without the necessary actus reus." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 831 (3d ed. 1982).

addition. 1. A structure that is attached to or connected with another building that predates the structure; an extension or annex. • Although some courts have held that an addition is merely an appurtenant structure that might not actually be in physical contact with the other building, most courts hold that there must be physical contact. 2. A title or appellation appended to a person's name to show rank, occupation, or place of residence. • In English law, there are traditionally four kinds of additions: (1) those of estate, such as yeoman, gentleman, or esquire; (2) those of degree (or dignity), such as knight, baron, earl, marquis, or duke; (3) those of trade or occupation, such as scrivener, painter, mason, or carpenter; and (4) those of place of residence, such as London, Bath, or Chester. It was formerly required by the statute of additions (1 Hen. 5, ch. 5) that original writs and indictments state a person's addition, but the practice has long since been abolished.

additional-consideration rule. Employment law. An exception to the employment-at-will principle, whereby an employee who does not have a written contract but who undertakes substantial hardship in addition to the normal job duties — as by relocating to a different city based on oral assurances of job security — can maintain a breach-of-contract claim if the employer does not fulfill its agreement.

additional damages. See DAMAGES.

additional extended coverage. Insurance. A policy endorsement providing supplemental residential coverage for a variety of perils, including vandalism, damage from falling trees, and water damage from the plumbing system.

adequate consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

adequate notice. See due notice under NOTICE.

adequate protection. Bankruptcy. The protection afforded to a holder of a secured claim against the debtor, such as a periodic cash payment or an additional lien <the bankruptcy court permitted the lender to foreclose on the debtor's home after finding a lack of adequate protection of the lender's property interest>. 11 USCA § 361.

"Bankruptcy intends to safeguard secured creditors' encumbrances, but the stay threatens them by preventing the secured creditors from foreclosing or taking other actions to apply the property's value against the secured debt. Bankruptcy aims to guard against this threat by ordering relief . . . for lack of adequate protection of the secured interest." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 3-27, at 140 (1993).

adequate provocation. Something (such as the heat of passion) that affects a person's reason and self-control, causing the person to impulsively commit a crime. • In certain circumstances, adequate provocation can reduce a

adequate representation. A close alignment of interests between actual parties and potential parties in a lawsuit, so that the interests of potential parties are sufficiently protected by the actual parties. • The concept of adequate representation is often used in procedural contexts. For example, if a case is to be certified as a class action, there must be adequate representation by the named plaintiffs of all the potential class members. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). And if a nonparty is to intervene in a lawsuit, there must not already be adequate representation of the nonparty by an existing party. Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(a)(2).

adequate-state-grounds doctrine. A judge-made principle that prevents the Supreme Court from reviewing a state-court decision based partially on state law if a decision on a federal issue would not change the result.

adequate warning. Products liability. Notice of the potential dangers involved in using a product, provided in a way that is reasonably calculated to reach the product's consumers and to catch their attention, and written so that it is comprehensible to the average user of the product and fairly conveys the nature and extent of any danger involved in using the product and the way to avoid the danger. Restatement (Third) of Torts: Products Liability § 2(c) cmt. i (1998).

administrative law. The law governing the organization and operation of the executive branch of government (including independent agencies) and the relations of the executive with the legislature, the judiciary, and the public. • Administrative law is divided into three parts: (1) the statutes endowing agencies with powers and establishing rules of substantive law relating to those powers; (2) the body of agency-made law, consisting of administrative rules, regulations, reports or opinions containing findings of fact, and orders; and (3) the legal principles governing the acts of public agents when those acts conflict with private rights.

"Administrative law deals with the field of legal control exercised by law-administering agencies other than courts, and the field of control exercised by courts over such agencies." Felix Frankfurter, The Task of Administrative Law, 75 U. Pa. L. Rev. 614, 615 (1927).

international administrative law. 1. The internal law and rules of international organizations. 2. The substantive rules of international law that directly refer to the administrative matters of individual states. 3. Domestic administrative law specifically concerned with international problems or situations. — Also termed administrative international law.

administrative-law judge. An official who presides at an administrative hearing and who has the power to administer oaths, take testimony, rule on questions of evidence, and make factual and legal determinations. 5 USCA § 556(c). — Abbr. ALJ. — Also termed hearing examiner; hearing officer; trial examiner.

Administrative Office of the United States Courts. A federal agency that carries out the nonjudicial business of the federal courts. • administrative officer. See OFFICER (1).

The Administrative Office collects statistics on the courts, supervises the administrative personnel, disburses the payroll, and performs other similar functions.

administrative procedure. See PROCEDURE.

Administrative Procedure Act. 1. A federal statute establishing practices and procedures to be followed in rulemaking and adjudication. • The Act was designed to give citizens basic due-process protections such as the right to present evidence and to be heard by an independent hearing officer. 2. A similar state statute.

administrative proceeding. A hearing, inquiry, investigation, or trial before an administrative agency, usu. adjudicatory in nature but sometimes quasi-legislative. — Also termed evidentiary hearing; full hearing; trial-type hearing; agency adjudication.

administrative process. 1. The procedure used before administrative agencies. 2. The means of summoning witnesses to an agency hearing.

administrative remedy. See REMEDY.

administrative review. See REVIEW.

administrative rule. A broadly applicable agency statement that interprets a law or policy or describes the agency's requirements.

administrative rulemaking. See RULEMAKING.

administrative search. See SEARCH.

administrative tribunal. An administrative agency before which a matter may be heard or tried, as distinguished from a purely executive agency; an administrative agency exercising a judicial function.

administrative warrant. See WARRANT (1).

administrator (ad-min-ə-stray-tər). 1. A person appointed by the court to manage the assets and liabilities of an intestate decedent. • This term once referred to males only (as opposed to administratrix), but legal writers now generally use administrator to refer to someone of either sex. Cf. EXECUTOR (2).

administrator ad litem (ad lī-tem or -təm). A special administrator appointed by the court to represent the estate's interest in an action usu. either because there is no administrator of the estate or because the current administrator has an interest in the action adverse to that of the estate.

administrator ad prosequendum (ad prahs-ə-kwen-dəm). An administrator appointed to prosecute or defend a certain action or actions involving the estate.

administrator c.t.a. See administrator cum testamento annexo.

administrator cum testamento annexo (kəm tes-tə-men-toh ə-nek-soh). An administrator appointed by the court to carry out the provisions of a will when the testator has named no executor, or the executors named refuse, are incompetent to act, or have died before performing their duties. — Also termed administrator c.t.a.; administrator with the will annexed.

administrator de bonis non (dee boh-nis non). An administrator appointed by the court to administer the decedent's goods that were not administered by an earlier administrator or executor. • If there is no will, the administrator bears the name administrator de bonis non (abbr. administrator d.b.n.), but if there is a will, the full name is administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo (abbr. administrator d.b.n. c.t.a.).

administrator pendente lite. See special administrator.

administrator with the will annexed. See administrator cum testamento annexo.

ancillary administrator (an-sə-ler-ee). A court-appointed administrator who oversees the distribution of the part of a decedent's estate located in a jurisdiction other than that of the main administration, where the decedent was domiciled.

foreign administrator. An administrator appointed in another jurisdiction.

general administrator. A person appointed to administer an intestate decedent's entire estate.

public administrator. A state-appointed officer who administers intestate estates that are not administered by the decedent's relatives. • This officer's right to administer is usu. subordinate to the rights of creditors, but in a few jurisdictions the creditors' rights are subordinate.

special administrator. 1. A person appointed to administer only a specific part of an intestate decedent's estate. 2. A person appointed to serve as administrator of an estate solely because of an emergency or an unusual situation, such as a will contest. — Also termed (in sense 2) administrator pendente lite.

2. A person who manages or heads a business, public office, or agency.

court administrator. An official who supervises the nonjudicial functions of a court, esp. the court's calendar, judicial assignments, budget, and nonjudicial personnel.

admiralitas (ad-mə-ral-ə-tas), n. [Law Latin] 1. Admiralty; an admiralty court. 2. SOCIETAS NAVALIS.

admiralty (ad-mə-rəl-tee), n. 1. A court that exercises jurisdiction over all maritime contracts, torts, injuries, or offenses. • The federal courts are so called when exercising their admiralty jurisdiction, which is conferred by the U.S. Constitution (art. III, § 2, cl. 1). — Also termed admiralty court; maritime court. 2. The system of jurisprudence that has grown out of the practice of admiralty courts; MARITIME LAW. 3. Narrowly, the rules governing contract, tort, and workers' compensation claims arising out of commerce on or over water. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) admiralty law. — admiralty, adj.

Admiralty, First Lord. See FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY.

Admiralty Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution giving the federal courts jurisdiction over maritime cases. U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1.

admiralty law. See MARITIME LAW.

admissibility (ad-mis-ə-bil-ə-tee), n. The quality or state of being allowed to be entered into evidence in a hearing, trial, or other proceeding.

conditional admissibility. The evidentiary rule that when a piece of evidence is not itself admissible, but is admissible if certain other facts make it relevant, the evidence becomes admissible on condition that counsel later introduce the connecting facts. ● If counsel does not satisfy this condition, the opponent may ask the judge to strike from the record the conditionally admitted piece of evidence and to instruct the jury to disregard it.

curative admissibility. The rule that an inadmissible piece of evidence may be admitted if offered to cure or counteract the effect of some similar piece of the opponent’s evidence that itself should not have been admitted.

limited admissibility. The principle that testimony or exhibits may be admitted into evidence for a restricted purpose. ● Common examples are admitting prior contradictory testimony to impeach a witness but not to establish the truth, and admitting evidence against one party but not another. The trial court must instruct the jury properly about the applicable limits when admitting the evidence. Fed. R. Evid. 105.

multiple admissibility. The evidentiary rule that, though a piece of evidence is inadmissible under one rule for the purpose given in offering it, it is nevertheless admissible if relevant and offered for some other purpose not forbidden by the rules of evidence.

admissible (ad-mis-ə-bəl), adj. 1. Allowable; permissible <admissible evidence>. 2. Worthy of gaining entry or being admitted .

admissible evidence. See EVIDENCE.

admission (ad-mish-ən), n. 1. A voluntary acknowledgment of the existence of facts relevant to an adversary’s case. — admit, vb. Cf. CONFESSION.

admission against interest. A person’s statement acknowledging a material fact that is harmful to the person’s position as a litigant. ● An admission against interest must be made either by a litigant or by one in privity with or occupying the same legal position as the litigant; as an exception to the hearsay rule, it is admissible whether or not the person is available as a witness. A declaration against interest, by contrast, is made by a nonlitigant who is not in privity with a litigant; a declaration against interest is also admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule, but only when the declarant is unavailable as a witness.

admission by employee or agent. An admission made by a party-opponent’s agent during employment and concerning a matter either within the scope of the agency or authorized by the party-opponent.

admission by party-opponent. An opposing party’s admission, which is not considered hearsay if it is offered against that party and is (1) the party’s own statement, in either an individual or a representative capacity; (2) a statement of which the party has manifested an adoption or belief in its truth; (3) a statement by one authorized by the party to make such a statement; (4) a statement by the party’s agent concerning a matter within the scope of the agency or employment and made during the existence of the relationship; or (5) a statement by a coconspirator of the party

admission by silence. The failure of a party to speak after an assertion of fact by another party that, if untrue, would naturally compel a person to deny the statement.

admission in judicio. See judicial admission.

adoptive admission. An action by a party that indicates approval of a statement made by another, and thereby acceptance of the truth of the statement.

extrajudicial admission. An admission made outside court proceedings.

implied admission. An admission reasonably inferable from a party's action or statement, or a party's failure to act or speak. — Also termed tacit admission.

incidental admission. An admission made in some other connection or involved in the admission of some other fact.

incriminating admission. An admission of facts tending to establish guilt.

judicial admission. A formal waiver of proof that relieves an opposing party from having to prove the admitted fact and bars the party who made the admission from disputing it. — Also termed solemn admission; admission in judicio; true admission.

quasi-admission. An act or utterance, usu. extrajudicial, that creates an inconsistency with and discredits, to a greater or lesser degree, a present claim or other evidence of the person creating the inconsistency.

solemn admission. See judicial admission.

tacit admission. See implied admission.

true admission. See judicial admission.

2. Acceptance of a lawyer by the established licensing authority, such as a state bar association, as a member of the practicing bar, usu. after the lawyer passes a bar examination and supplies adequate character references <admission to the bar>.

admission on motion. Permanent admission of a lawyer who is in good standing in the bar of a different state without the need for a full bar examination.

admission pro hac vice (proh hak vi-see or proh hak vee-chay). Temporary admission of an out-of-jurisdiction lawyer to practice before a court in a specified case or set of cases. See PRO HAC VICE.

adulterium (ad-əl-teer-ee-əm), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. 1. The crime of adultery. 2. A punishment imposed for the offense of adultery.

“Adulterium. A statutory punishment of adultery, which was considered a criminal offense only when committed by a married woman (adultera) . . . [Before the statute Lex Julia de adulteriis coercendis of 18 B.C.], customary law admitted only immediate revenge of the husband . . . Under the Julian statute, the father of the adulterous woman was permitted to kill her and her partner (adulter) if he surprised them in his or her husband’s house. The husband’s rights were rather limited; he was forced to divorce her, for otherwise he made himself guilty of matchmaking . . . Besides, he or his father had to accuse the adulteress of adulterium which now became a public crime prosecuted before a criminal court.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 352 (1953).

adultery (ə-dəl-tə-ree), n. Voluntary sexual intercourse between a married person and a person other than the offender’s spouse. — Formerly also termed spouse-breach. — adulterous, adj. Cf. FORNICATION; INFIDELITY.

“Returning to the question of adultery, evidently this word cannot be interpreted today in precisely the meaning it bore for the Old Testament patriarchs. On Old Testament principles one may marry several wives, even two sisters; and a married man may and should beget children for his dead brother. When Sarah found herself childless, she advised her husband Abraham to go in unto her maid, so that she might obtain children by the maid. Such acts, though evidently not adulterous within the original meaning of the Decalogue, would be regarded as adulterous by the laws and customs of Western society at the present day.” Glanville Williams, The Sanctity of Life and the Criminal Law 134 (1957).

“In some states, sexual intercourse between two married persons, who are not married to each other, constitutes adultery on the part of both; sexual intercourse between a married person and an unmarried person likewise constitutes adultery on the part of both. In other states, adultery can be committed only by a married person. Thus, sexual intercourse between two married persons, who are not married to each other, constitutes adultery on the part of both; but if only one party to the sexual intercourse is married, the intercourse constitutes adultery on the part of the married person and fornication on the part of the unmarried person. In other states, sexual intercourse constitutes adultery only where the woman is the married party. Thus, sexual intercourse between a married woman and a married man other than her spouse or sexual intercourse between a married woman and an unmarried man constitutes adultery on the part of both; but if the woman is unmarried, neither party is guilty of adultery even if the man is married.” 2 Charles E. Torcia, Wharton’s Criminal Law § 211, at 531 (15th ed. 1994).

double adultery. Adultery between persons who are both married to other persons.

incestuous adultery. Adultery between relatives; adultery committed by persons who are closely related.

open and notorious adultery. Archaic. An offense in which the parties reside together publicly, as if conjugal relations existed between them, and the community is generally aware of the living arrangement and the fact that the couple is not married.

single adultery. Adultery in which only one party is married to another person.

advance payment. See PAYMENT.

advance premium. See PREMIUM (1).

advance sheets. A softcover pamphlet containing recently reported opinions by a court or set of courts. • Advance sheets are published during the interim between an opinion’s announcement and its inclusion in a bound volume of law reports. Cf. slip opinion (1) under OPINION; REPORT (3).

“As a bound volume of any series of reports is not published until sufficient matter has accumulated to fill it, it necessarily results in the holding of the first decisions rendered after the preceding volume has been issued, until there are enough more to justify the publication of the next volume. Even after enough material has been accumulated to fill a volume, there is necessarily considerable time consumed in its printing, indexing, and binding before the book is ready for delivery. Hence, it is customary, as soon as a part of the volume has come from the press, to issue such part in pamphlet form; and these paper-bound copies are known as ‘advance sheets.’ They are portions of the next volume issued in advance of final publication, being paged as they will appear in the bound volume. Advance sheets enable the enterprising lawyer to obtain the decisions right down almost to the date of his search for the law.” Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 21 (1922).

advancing market. See bull market under MARKET.

advantagium (ad-van-tay-jee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. An advantage.

adversarius (ad-vər-sair-ee-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. An adversary in a lawsuit.

adversary (ad-vər-ser-ee), n. An opponent; esp., opposing counsel. — adversary, adversarial, adj.

adversary procedure. See ADVERSARY SYSTEM.

adversary proceeding. 1. A hearing involving a dispute between opposing parties <Judge Adams presided over the adversary proceeding between the landlord and tenant>. 2. Bankruptcy. A lawsuit that is brought within a bankruptcy proceeding, governed by special procedural rules, and based on conflicting claims usu. between the debtor (or the trustee) and a creditor or other interested party <the Chapter 7 trustee filed an adversary proceeding against the party who received $100,000 from the debtor one week before the bankruptcy filing>.

adversary system. A procedural system, such as the Anglo-American legal system, involving active and unhindered parties contesting with each other to put forth a case before an independent decision-maker. — Also termed adversary procedure and (in criminal cases) accusatorial system or accusatory procedure. Cf. INQUISITORIAL SYSTEM.

adverse-agent doctrine. The rule that an agent's knowledge will not be imputed to the principal if the agent is engaged in fraudulent activities that are concealed as part of the fraud.

adverse-domination doctrine. The equitable principle that the statute of limitations on a breach-of-fiduciary-duty claim against officers and directors is tolled as long as a corporate plaintiff is controlled by the alleged wrongdoers. • The statute is tolled until a majority of the disinterested directors discover or are put on notice of the claim against the wrongdoers. This doctrine is available to benefit only the corporation.

adverse dominion. The doctrine that tolls the limitations period for claims against wrongdoing directors and officers of a corporation while they are in control of the corporation. • The purpose of this doctrine is to prevent a director or officer from successfully hiding wrongful or fraudulent conduct during the limitations period. FDIC v. Shrader & York, 991 F.2d 216, 227 (5th Cir. 1993).

adverse easement. See prescriptive easement under EASEMENT.

adverse employment action. An employer's decision that substantially and negatively affects an employee's job, such as a termination, demotion, or pay cut. — Also termed adverse job action.

adverse enjoyment. See ENJOYMENT.

adverse impact. See DISPARATE IMPACT.

adverse-inference rule. See ADVERSE-INTEREST RULE.

adverse interest. An interest that is opposed or contrary to that of someone else.

adverse job action. See ADVERSE EMPLOYMENT ACTION.

adverse opinion. See OPINION (2).

adverse possession. A method of acquiring title to real property by possession for a statutory period under certain conditions, esp. a non-permissive use of the land with a claim of right when that use is continuous, exclusive, hostile, open, and notorious. Cf. PRESCRIPTION (2).

constructive adverse possession. Adverse possession in which the claim arises from the claimant's payment of taxes under color of right rather than by actual possession of the land.

adversus (ad-vər-səs), prep. [Latin] Against. • The first letter of this term was formerly used in law reports in place of the more commonly used v. ("versus"). — Abbr. a.

advice and consent. The right of the U.S. Senate to participate in making treaties and appointing federal officers, provided by U.S. Const. art II, § 2. • As to treaties, the Senate's advice and consent generally includes Senate involvement in the negotiation process, and the need for a two-thirds majority of the Senate for ratification. As to public officers, the Senate's advice and consent generally includes the right to vote on approval of an appointment.

advice of counsel. 1. The guidance given by lawyers to their clients. 2. In a malicious-prosecution lawsuit, a defense requiring both a complete presentation of facts by the defendant to his or her attorney and honest compliance with the attorney's advice. 3. A defense in which a party seeks to avoid liability by claiming that he or she acted reasonably and in good faith on the attorney's advice. • Such a defense usu. requires waiver of the attorney-client privilege, and the attorney cannot have knowingly participated in implementing an illegal plan.

"Advice of counsel is a defense to a limited number of torts involving lack of probable cause, bad faith, or malice as an element of the cause of action. By far the most frequent cause of action against which the defense is asserted is malicious prosecution. The defense may also be asserted to avoid liability for punitive damages on the reasoning that good faith reliance on advice of counsel defeats the malice necessary to an award of punitive damages. In civil matters, the advice is typically obtained from the defendant's own attorney; when the underlying proceeding is criminal, the advice may be obtained from the district attorney's office or similar source and may take the form of action by that officer rather than advice followed by action by the defendant." 4 Ann Taylor Schwing, California Affirmative Defenses § 41:26, at 82 (2d ed. 1996).

advice of credit. Notice by an advising bank of the issuance of a letter of credit.

advisare (ad-vi-zair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] To consult, deliberate, or consider. See CURIA ADVISARI VULT.

advowee (ad-vow-ee). A patron who holds an advowson; ADVOCATUS (2). — Also spelled avowee.

advowee paramount. The sovereign, or highest patron.

advowson (ad-vow-zən). Eccles. law. The right of presenting or nominating a person to a vacant benefice in the church. • The person enjoying this right is called the “patron” (patronus) of the church, and was formerly termed “advocatus,” the advocate or defender, or in English, the “advowee.” The patron presents the nominee to the bishop (or, occasionally, another church dignitary). If there is no patron, or if the patron neglects to exercise the right within six months, the right lapses and a title is given to the ordinary (a diocesan officer) to appoint a cleric to the church. Cf. PRESENTATION; INSTITUTION.

“Advowson is the right of presentation to a church, or ecclesiastical benefice. . . . For, when lords of manors first built churches on their own demesnes, and appointed the tithes of those manors to be paid to the officiating ministers, which before were given to the clergy in common . . . the lords, who thus built a church, and endowed it with glebe or land, had of common right a power annexed of nominating such minister as he pleased . . . to officiate in that church of which he was the founder, endower, maintainer, or, in one word, the patron. This instance of an advowson will completely illustrate the nature of an incorporeal hereditament. It is not itself the bodily possession of the church and its appendages; but it is a right to give some other man a title to such bodily possession. The advowson is the object of neither the sight, nor the touch; and yet it perpetually exists in the mind’s eye, and in contemplation of law. . . . The patronage can therefore be only conveyed by operation of law. . . .” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 21–22 (1766).

advowson appendant (ə-pen-dənt). An advowson annexed to a manor, and passing as incident to it, whenever the manor is conveyed to another. • The advowson passes with the manor even if it is not mentioned in the grant.

advowson collative (kə-lay-tiv). An advowson for which there is no separate presentation to the bishop because the bishop happens to be the patron as well. • In this case, the one act by which the benefice is conferred is called "collation."

advowson donative (don-ə-tiv or doh-nə-tiv). An advowson in which the patron has the right to put a cleric in possession by a mere gift, or deed of donation, without any presentation to the bishop. • This type of advowson was converted into the advowson presentative by the Benefices Act of 1898. — Also termed donative advowson.

"An advowson donative is when the king, or any subject by his licence, doth found a church or chapel, and ordains that it shall be merely in the gift or disposal of the patron; subject to his visitation only, and not to that of the ordinary; and vested absolutely in the clerk by the patron's deed of donation, without presentation, institution, or induction. This is said to have been anciently the only way of conferring ecclesiastical benefices in England; the method of institution by the bishop not being established more early than the time of archbishop Becket in the reign of Henry II." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 23 (1766).

advowson in gross. An advowson that is separated from the manor and annexed to a person. • All advowsons that have been separated from their original manors are advowsons in gross.

advowson presentative (pri-zen-tə-tiv). The usual kind of advowson, in which the patron has the right to make the presentation to the bishop and to demand that the nominee be instituted, if the bishop finds the nominee canonically qualified.

aedes (ee-deez), n. [Latin] Roman law. A building; esp., a temple (aedes sacra).

affidatio dominorum (af-ə-day-shee-oh dom-ə-nor-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. An oath taken by lords in Parliament.

affidatus (af-ə-day-təs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A tenant by fealty.

affidavit (af-ə-day-vit). A voluntary declaration of facts written down and sworn to by the declarant before an officer authorized to administer oaths. • A great deal of evidence is submitted by affidavit, esp. in pretrial matters such as summary-judgment motions. Cf. DECLARATION (8).

affidavit of defense. See affidavit of merits.

affidavit of increase. Hist. An affidavit that lists — and seeks reimbursement from the opposing party for — the additional costs (above the filing fee and other basic fees charged by the court clerk) incurred by a party in taking a matter through trial. • Attorney fees, witness payments, and the like were included in this affidavit. See COSTS OF INCREASE.

affidavit of inquiry. An affidavit, required in certain states before substituted service of process on an absent defendant, in which the plaintiff's attorney or a person with knowledge of the facts indicates that the defendant cannot be served within the state.

affidavit of merits. An affidavit in which a defendant asserts that he or she has a meritorious defense. — Also termed affidavit of defense.

affidavit of notice. An affidavit stating that the declarant has given proper notice of hearing to other parties to the action.

affidavit of service. An affidavit certifying the service of a notice, summons, writ, or process.

counteraffidavit. An affidavit made to contradict and oppose another affidavit.

IFP affidavit. See poverty affidavit.

in forma pauperis affidavit. See poverty affidavit.

pauper's affidavit. See poverty affidavit.

poverty affidavit. An affidavit made by an indigent person seeking public assistance, appointment of counsel, waiver of court fees, or other free public services. 28 USCA § 1915. — Also termed pauper's affidavit; in forma pauperis affidavit; IFP affidavit.

self-proving affidavit. An affidavit attached to a will and signed by witnesses, indicating that the testator was of sound mind and sham affidavit. An affidavit that contradicts clear testimony previously given by the same witness, usu. used in an attempt to create an issue of fact in response to a motion for summary judgment.

supplemental affidavit. An affidavit made in addition to a previous one, usu. to supply additional facts.

affidavit of defense. See affidavit of merits under AFFIDAVIT.

affirm, vb. 1. To confirm (a judgment) on appeal. 2. To solemnly declare rather than swear under oath.

affirmance, n. 1. A ratification, reacceptance, or confirmation.

“A party who has the power of avoidance may lose it by action that manifests a willingness to go on with the contract. Such action is known as ‘affirmance’ and has the effect of ratifying the contract. See Restatement of Restitution § 68. The rule stated in this Section is a special application of that stated in § 85, under which a promise to perform a voidable duty is binding. On ratification, the affirming party is bound as from the outset and the other party continues to be bound.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 380 cmt. a (1981).

2. The formal approval by an appellate court of a lower court’s judgment, order, or decree. — affirm, vb.

affirmance day general. See DAY.

affirmant. A person who testifies under affirmation and not under oath.

affirmation, n. A pledge equivalent to an oath but without reference to a supreme being or to “swearing.” • While an oath is “sworn to,” an affirmation is merely “affirmed,” but either type of pledge may subject the person making it to the penalties for perjury. — affirm, vb. — affirmatory, adj. Cf. OATH.

affirmative, adj. 1. That supports the existence of certain facts <affirmative evidence>. 2.

That involves or requires effort <an affirmative duty>.

aforethought (ə-for-thawt), adj. Thought of in advance; deliberate; premeditated <malice aforethought>. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

a fortiori (ay for-shee-or-I or ah for-shee-or-ee), adv. [Latin] By even greater force of logic; even more so <if a 14-year-old child cannot sign a binding contract, then, a fortiori, a 13-year-old cannot>. Cf. A MULTO FORTIORI.

after-acquired domicile. See DOMICILE.

after-acquired-evidence doctrine. Employment law. The rule that, if an employer discharges an employee for an unlawful reason and later discovers misconduct sufficient to justify a lawful discharge, the employee cannot win reinstatement. • The doctrine either shields the employer from liability or limits the available relief when, after an employee has been terminated, the employer learns for the first time that the employee engaged in wrongdoing that would have resulted in a discharge anyway. McKennon v. Nashville Banner Publ'g Co., 513 U.S. 352, 115 S.Ct. 879 (1995).

after-acquired property. 1. Secured transactions. A debtor's property that is acquired after a security transaction and becomes additional security for payment of the debt. UCC § 9-204. — Also termed future-acquired property. 2. Bankruptcy. Property that the bankruptcy estate acquires after commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding. 11 USCA § 541(a)(7). 3. Wills & estates. Property acquired by a person after making a will. • The old rule was that a testamentary gift of personal property spoke at the time of the testator's death, whereas a gift of lands spoke from the date of the will's execution (so that after-acquired property was not disposed of), but this has been changed by legislation in most states.

after-acquired-property clause. A mortgage provision that makes any later-acquired real estate subject to the mortgage.

after-acquired title. See TITLE.

after-acquired-title doctrine. The principle that title to property automatically vests in a person who bought the property from a seller who acquired title only after purporting to sell the property to the buyer.

after-born child. See CHILD.

after-born heir. See HEIR.

aftercare. See juvenile parole under PAROLE.

after cost. See COST (1).

aftermarket. See secondary market under MARKET.

after the fact. Subsequent to an event of legal significance <accessory after the fact>.

AG. abbr. ATTORNEY GENERAL.

against the form of the statute. Contrary to the statutory requirements. • This formal phrase, which traditionally concludes an indictment, indicates that the conduct alleged contravenes the cited statute and therefore constitutes a criminal offense. In modern contexts, the full conclusion often reads: "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided." The phrase is a translation of the Law Latin contra formam statuti.

against the peace and dignity of the state. A concluding phrase in an indictment, used to condemn the offending conduct generally (as opposed to the specific charge of wrongdoing contained in the body of the instrument). • This phrase derives from the Law Latin contra pacem domini regis ("against the peace of the lord the king"), a charging phrase formerly used in indictments and in civil actions of trespass. See KING'S PEACE.

against the weight of the evidence. (Of a verdict or judgment) contrary to the credible evidence; not sufficiently supported by the evidence in the record. See WEIGHT OF THE EVIDENCE.

against the will. Contrary to a person's wishes.
• Indictments use this phrase to indicate that the defendant's conduct was without the victim's consent.

agalma (ə-gal-mə). A figure or design on a seal.

agard (ə-gahrd). [Law French] An award. See NUL FAIT AGARD.

agarder (ah-gahr-day), vb. [Law French] To award, adjudge, or determine; to sentence or condemn.

age, n. A period of time; esp., a period of individual existence or the duration of a person's life.

age of capacity. The age, usu. defined by statute as 18 years, at which a person is legally capable of agreeing to a contract, executing a will, maintaining a lawsuit, or the like. — Also termed age of majority; legal age; lawful age. See CAPACITY.

age of consent. The age, usu. defined by statute as 16 years, at which a person is legally capable of agreeing to marriage (without parental consent) or to sexual intercourse. See CONSENT.

age of majority. 1. The age, usu. defined by statute as 18 years, at which a person attains full legal rights, esp. civil and political rights such as the right to vote. — Also termed lawful age. 2. See age of capacity.

age of reason. The age at which a person becomes able to distinguish right from wrong and is thus legally capable of committing a crime or tort. • The age of reason varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, but 7 years is usu. the age below which a child is conclusively presumed not to have committed a crime or tort, while 14 years is usu. the age below which a rebuttable presumption applies.

fighting age. The age at which a person becomes eligible to serve in (or liable to conscription into) a military unit.

lawful age. 1. See age of capacity. 2. See age of majority (1).

age discrimination. See DISCRIMINATION.

Age Discrimination in Employment Act. A federal law prohibiting job discrimination based on a person's age, esp. unfair and discriminatory employment decisions that negatively affect someone who is 40 years old or older. 29 USCA §§ 621–634. • Passed in 1967, the Act applies to businesses with more than 20 employees and to all governmental entities. — Abbr. ADEA.

agency. 1. A fiduciary relationship created by express or implied contract or by law, in which one party (the agent) may act on behalf of another party (the principal) and bind that other party by words or actions. See AUTHORITY (1).

“The basic theory of the agency device is to enable a person, through the services of another, to broaden the scope of his activities and receive the product of another's efforts, paying such other for what he does but retaining for himself any net benefit resulting from the work performed.” Harold Gill Reuschlein & William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership § 1, at 3 (2d ed. 1990).

actual agency. An agency in which the agent is in fact employed by a principal.

agency by estoppel. An agency created by operation of law and established by a principal's actions that would reasonably lead a third person to conclude that an agency exists. — Also termed apparent agency; ostensible agency; agency by operation of law.

agency by necessity. See agency of necessity.

agency by operation of law. See agency by estoppel.

agency from necessity. See agency of necessity.

agency in fact. An agency created voluntarily, as by a contract. • Agency in fact is distinguishable from an agency relationship created by law, such as agency by estoppel.

agency of necessity. An agency arising during an emergency that necessitates the agent's acting without authorization from the principal; the relation between a person who in exigent circumstances acts in the interest of another without being authorized to do so. • It is a quasi-contractual relation formed by the operation of legal rules and not by the agreement of the parties. — Also termed agency from necessity; agency by necessity. See NEGOTIORUM GESTIO.

apparent agency. See agency by estoppel.

exclusive agency. The right to represent a principal — esp. either to sell the principal's products or to act as the seller's real-estate agent — within a particular market free from competition. — Also termed exclusive franchise.

"Contracts involving the element of exclusive agency generally fall into three classes: (1) where the contract does not prevent the principal from making direct sales but deprives him of the right to appoint other agents; (2) where the agent is the only one with any right to sell, and (3) where the exclusive agency is accompanied with a stipulated right to commissions on all sales whether made through the agent or not." 3 Am. Jur. 2d Agency § 268, at 768 (1986).

express agency. An actual agency arising from the principal's written or oral authorization of a person to act as the principal's agent. Cf. implied agency.

financing agency. A bank, finance company, or other entity that in the ordinary course of business (1) makes advances against goods or documents of title, or (2) by arrangement with either the seller or the buyer intervenes to make or collect payment due or claimed under a contract for sale, as by purchasing or paying the seller's draft, making advances against it, or taking it for collection, regardless of whether documents of title accompany the draft. UCC § 2-102(a)(20).

general agency. A principal's delegation to an agent, without restriction, to take any action connected with a particular trade, business, or employment. — Also termed universal agency.

implied agency. An actual agency arising from the conduct by the principal that implies an intention to create an agency relationship. Cf. express agency.

ostensible agency. See agency by estoppel.

special agency. An agency in which the agent is authorized only to conduct a single transaction or a series of transactions not involving continuous service.

undisclosed agency. An agency relationship in which an agent deals with a third party who has no knowledge that the agent is acting on a principal's behalf. • The fact that the agency is undisclosed does not prohibit the third party from seeking redress from the principal or the agent.

universal agency. See general agency.

2. An agent's place of business. 3. A governmental body with the authority to implement and administer particular legislation. — Also termed (in sense 3) government agency; admin- istrative agency; public agency; regulatory agency.

federal agency. A department or other instrumentality of the executive branch of the federal government, including a government corporation and the Government Printing Office. • The Administrative Procedure Act defines the term agency negatively as being any U.S. governmental authority that does not include Congress, the courts, the government of the District of Columbia, the government of any territory or possession, courts-martial, or military authority. 5 USCA § 551. The caselaw on this definition focuses on authority: generally, an entity is an agency if it has authority to take binding action. Other federal statutes define agency to include any executive department, government corporation, government-controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch, or federal regulatory board.

independent agency. A federal agency, commission, or board that is not under the direction of the executive, such as the Federal Trade Commission or the National Labor Relations Board. — Also termed independent regulatory agency; independent regulatory commission.

quasi-governmental agency. A government-sponsored enterprise or corporation (sometimes called a government-controlled corporation), such as the Federal National Mortgage Corporation.

agency adjudication. See ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING.

agency by operation of law. See agency by estoppel under AGENCY (1).

agency records. Under the Freedom of Information Act, documents that are created or obtained by a government agency, and that are in the agency's control at the time the information request is made. 5 USCA § 552; United States Dep't of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 109 S.Ct. 2841 (1989).

agency regulation. See REGULATION (2).

agency security. See government security under SECURITY.

agency shop. See SHOP.

agenda. A list of things to be done, as items to be discussed at a meeting.

agens (ay-jenz). [Latin] 1. One who acts or does an act; an agent. Cf. PATIENS. 2. A plaintiff.

agent. 1. One who is authorized to act for or in place of another; a representative . Cf. PRINCIPAL (1); EMPLOYEE. 2. Something that produces an effect <an intervening agent>. See CAUSE (1).

"Generally speaking, anyone can be an agent who is in fact capable of performing the functions involved. The agent normally binds not himself but his principal by the contracts he makes; it is therefore not essential that he be legally capable to contract (although his duties and liabilities to his principal might be affected by his status). Thus an infant or a lunatic may be an agent, though doubtless the court would disregard either's attempt to act as if he were so young or so hopelessly devoid of reason as to be completely incapable of grasping the function he was attempting to perform." Floyd R. Mechem, Outlines of the Law of Agency 8-9 (Philip Mechem ed., 4th ed. 1952).

"The etymology of the word agent or agency tells us much. The words are derived from the Latin verb, ago, agere; the noun agens, agentis. The word agent denotes one who acts, a doer, force or power that accomplishes things." Harold Gill Reuschlein & William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership § 1, at 2-3 (2d ed. 1990).

apparent agent. A person who reasonably appears to have authority to act for another, regardless of whether actual authority has been conferred. — Also termed ostensible agent.

bargaining agent. A labor union in its capacity of representing employees in collective bargaining.

co-agent. A person who shares with another agent the authority to act for the principal. — Also termed dual agent.

corporate agent. An agent authorized to act on behalf of a corporation; broadly, all employees and officers who have the power to bind the corporation.

del credere agent (del kred-ə-ray or kray-də-ray). An agent who guarantees the solvency of the third party with whom the agent makes a contract for the principal. ● A del credere agent receives possession of the principal's goods for purposes of sale and guarantees that anyone to whom the agent sells the goods on credit will pay promptly for them. For this guaranty, the agent receives a higher commission for sales. The promise of such an agent is almost universally held not to be within the statute of frauds. — Also termed del credere factor.

diplomatic agent. A national representative in one of four categories: (1) ambassadors, (2) envoys and ministers plenipotentiary, (3) ministers resident accredited to the sovereign, or (4) chargés d'affaires accredited to the minister of foreign affairs.

dual agent. See co-agent.

emigrant agent. One engaged in the business of hiring laborers for work outside the country or state.

fiscal agent. A bank or other financial institution that collects and disburses money and services as a depository of private and public funds on another's behalf.

foreign agent. A person who registers with the federal government as a lobbyist representing the interests of a foreign nation or corporation.

forwarding agent. 1. A person or company whose business is to receive and ship goods for others. — Also termed freight-forwarder. 2. A freight-forwarder who assembles less-than-carload shipments (small shipments) into carload shipments, thus taking advantage of lower freight rates.

general agent. An agent authorized to transact all of the principal's business of a particular kind or in a particular place. ● Among the common types of general agents are factors, brokers, and partners.

"Although the distinction between general and special agents can be difficult to apply, the terminology is sometimes used by courts and the distinction plays a major role in the Restatement of Agency. A general agent . . . is an integral part of the principal's business and does not need fresh authorization for each separate transaction. A manager of a store is an example of a general agent." J. Dennis Hynes, Agency, Partnership, and the LLC in a Nutshell 21 (1997).

government agent. 1. An employee or representative of a governmental body. 2. A law-enforcement official, such as a police officer or an FBI agent. 3. An informant, esp. an inmate, hired by law enforcement to obtain incriminating statements from another inmate. ● An accused's Sixth Amendment right to counsel is triggered when the accused is questioned by a government agent.

high-managerial agent. An agent of a corporation or other business, having authority to formulate corporate policy or supervise employees. — Also termed superior agent.

independent agent. An agent who exercises personal judgment and is subject to the principal only for the results of the work performed.

local agent. An agent appointed to act as another's (esp. a company's) representative and to transact business within a specified district.

managing agent. A person with general power involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, as opposed to an ordinary agent who acts under the direction and control of the principal. — Also termed business agent.

mercantile agent. An agent employed to sell goods or merchandise on behalf of the principal.

ostensible agent. See apparent agent.

private agent. An agent acting for an individual in that person's private affairs.

process agent. A person authorized to accept service of process on behalf of another.

public agent. A person appointed to act for the public in matters pertaining to governmental administration or public business.

real-estate agent. An agent who represents a buyer or seller (or both, with proper disclosures) in the sale or lease of real property. • A real-estate agent can be either a broker (whose principal is a buyer or seller) or a salesperson (whose principal is a broker).

registered agent. A person authorized to accept service of process for another person, esp. a corporation, in a particular jurisdiction. — Also termed resident agent.

soliciting agent. 1. Insurance. An agent with limited authority relating to the solicitation or submission of applications to an insurance company but usu. without authority to bind the insurer, as by accepting the applications on behalf of the company. 2. An agent who solicits orders for goods or services for a principal. 3. A managing agent of a corporation for purposes of service of process.

special agent. An agent employed to conduct a particular transaction or to perform a specified act.

statutory agent. An agent designated by law to receive litigation documents and other legal notices for a nonresident corporation. • In most states, the secretary of state is the statutory agent for such corporations.

stock-transfer agent. An organization that oversees and maintains records of transfers of shares for a corporation.

subagent. A person appointed by an agent to perform some duty relating to the agency. — Also termed subservant.

superior agent. See high-managerial agent.

transfer agent. An organization (such as a bank or trust company) that handles transfers of shares for a publicly held corporation by issuing new certificates and overseeing the cancellation of old ones and that usu. also maintains the record of shareholders for the corporation and mails dividend checks. • Generally, a transfer agent ensures that certificates submitted for transfer are properly indorsed and that the right to transfer is appropriately documented.

undercover agent. 1. An agent who does not disclose his or her role as an agent. 2. A police officer who gathers evidence of criminal activity without disclosing his or her identity to the suspect.

universal agent. An agent authorized to perform all acts that the principal could personally perform.

agent provocateur (ay-jənt prə-vok-ə-tər or a-zhawn praw-vaw-kə-tuur), n. 1. An undercover agent who instigates or participates in a crime, often by infiltrating a group involved in suspected illegal conduct, to expose and punish criminal activity. 2. A person who entraps or entices another to break the law and then informs against the other as a lawbreaker.

agent's lien. See LIEN.

age of capacity. See AGE.

age of consent. See AGE.

age of majority. See AGE.

age of reason. See AGE.

ager (ay-jər), n. [Latin] Roman law. Land or territory; esp., a portion of land enclosed by definite boundaries.

ager publicus (ay-jər pəb-li-kəs). Land of the people; public land.

aggravated, adj. 1. (Of a crime) made worse or more serious by circumstances such as violence, the presence of a deadly weapon, or the intent to commit another crime <aggravated robbery>. Cf. SIMPLE (1). 2. (Of a tort) made worse or more serious by circumstances such as intention to cause harm or reckless disregard for another's safety <the defendant's negligence was aggravated by malice>. 3. (Of an injury) harmful to a part of the body previously injured or debilitated <an aggravated bone fracture>. See AGGRAVATION RULE.

aggravated arson. See ARSON.

aggravated assault. See ASSAULT.

aggravated battery

aggravated battery. See BATTERY.

aggravated damages. See punitive damages under DAMAGES.

aggravated kidnapping. See KIDNAPPING.

aggravated larceny. See LARCENY.

aggravated robbery. See ROBBERY.

aggravated sodomy. See SODOMY.

aggravating circumstance. See CIRCUMSTANCE.

aggravation rule. Workers' compensation. The principle that when an on-the-job injury combines with a preexisting injury, resulting in a greater disability than that which would have resulted from the on-the-job injury alone, the entire disability is compensable as if it had occurred at work.

aggregate (ag-rə-git), adj. Formed by combining into a single whole or total <aggregate income>.

aggregate (ag-rə-git), n. An assemblage of particulars; an agglomeration <aggregate of interests>.

aggregate (ag-rə-gayt), vb. To collect into a whole <aggregate the claims>.

aggregate concept. An approach to taxing business organizations whereby an organization is viewed as a collection of its individual owners, not as a separate taxable entity.

aggregate corporation. See CORPORATION.

aggregate demand. See DEMAND (3).

aggregate income. See INCOME.

aggregate sentence. See SENTENCE.

aggregate supply. See SUPPLY.

aggregate theory of partnership. The theory that a partnership does not have a separate legal existence (as does a corporation), but rather is only the totality of the partners who make it up. Cf. ENTITY THEORY OF PARTNERSHIP.

aggregatio mentium (ag-rə-gay-shee-oh men-shee-əm). [Latin "gathering together of minds"] See MEETING OF THE MINDS.

aggregation. Patents. A combination of two or more elements in a patent claim, each one unrelated and each one performing separately and without cooperation — as a result of which the combination does not define a composite integrated mechanism. — Also termed juxtaposition.

aggregation doctrine. The rule that precludes a party from totaling all claims for purposes of meeting the minimum amount necessary to give rise to federal diversity jurisdiction under the amount-in-controversy requirement. See diversity jurisdiction under JURISDICTION; AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

aggression. Int'l law. The use of armed force by a country against the sovereignty, territorial integrity, or political independence of another country, or in a manner inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations. • Acts falling within this definition include declaring war against, invading, attacking, blockading, or landing troops on another country's territory.

aggressor corporation. See CORPORATION.

aggressor doctrine. Civil law. The principle precluding tort recovery for a plaintiff who acts in a way that would provoke a reasonable person to use physical force for protection from the plaintiff, unless the defendant uses excessive force to repel the plaintiff.

aggrieved party. See PARTY (2).

AGI. See adjusted gross income under INCOME.

agillarius (aj-ə-lair-ee-əs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A keeper of a herd of cattle in a common field; a hayward.

aging of accounts. A process of classifying accounts receivable by the time elapsed since the claim came into existence for the purpose of estimating the balance of uncollectible accounts as of a given date.

agio (aj-ee-oh or ay-jee-oh). The premium paid for the exchange of one kind of money for another, such as paper currency for coin or one country's currency for another's.

agiotage (aj-ee-ə-tij). 1. The business of dealing in foreign exchange. 2. Speculative buying and selling of securities.

agist (ə-jist), vb. To allow animals to graze on one's pasture for a fee.

agister (ə-jis-tər). One who takes and pastures grazing animals for a fee; a person engaged in the business of agistment. • An agister is a type of bailee for hire. — Also spelled agistor.

agister's lien. See LIEN.

agistment (ə-jist-mənt). 1. A type of bailment in which a person, for a fee, allows animals to graze on his or her pasture; the taking in of cattle or other livestock to feed at a per-animal rate. 2. A charge levied upon the owner or occupier of land. See TITHE OF AGISTMENT.

agistment of sea-banks. Hist. A charge on land used to pay for the upkeep of dikes that prevent the encroachment of the sea.

agnate (ag-nayt), adj. Related or akin through male descent or on the father's side.

agnate, n. A blood relative whose connection is through the male line. Cf. COGNATE.

agnatic, adj. (Of a relationship) restricted to affiliations through the male line.

agnatio (ag-nay-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. A relationship extended to a person through males only; an affiliation of free persons of either sex in the power (patria potestas) of the senior living male or of a male who would be in his power if he were living. • An agnatic relationship could be created either by adoption or by a blood relationship (cognatio) traced solely through the male side of a family. See COGNATIO; patria potestas under POTESTAS.

agnatus (ag-nay-təs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A person related through the male line. Cf. COGNATUS.

"[Agnati were] all individuals subject for the time being to the same patria potestas, or who would be so subject were the common ancestor alive. Brothers and sisters, with their uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces, and other collaterals (not having been received into another family), if related through males, were agnates. The civil issue of the state was the Agnatic Family. Cognates were all persons who could trace their blood to a single ancestor or ancestress, and agnates were those cognates who traced their connection exclusively through males." John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary (8th ed. 1914).

agnomen (ag-noh-mən). [Latin] 1. An additional name or title; a nickname. 2. Roman law. An additional name, given in recognition of some achievement or to reflect adoption by a different gens. See NOMEN.

agrarian (ə-grair-ee-ən), adj. Of or relating to land, land tenure, or a division of landed property. — agrarian, n.

agrarian law. Roman & civil law. The body of law governing the ownership, use, and distribution of land.

agrarium (ə-grair-ee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. A tax upon, or tribute payable out of, land.

a gratia (ay gray-shee-ə). [Law Latin] EX GRATIA.

agreementum (ə-gree-ə-men-təm). [Law Latin] Agreement; an agreement.

agreed-amount clause. An insurance-policy provision that the insured will carry a stated amount of coverage.

agreed-boundary doctrine. The principle that owners of contiguous land may agree on the boundary between the parcels, as long as the actual boundary is uncertain, there is agreement between the two owners about the boundary line, there is acquiescence in the agreed line for a time exceeding the statute of limitations, and the agreed boundary is identifiable on the ground.

agreed judgment. See JUDGMENT.

agreed price. See PRICE.

agreed statement of facts. See STATEMENT OF FACTS.

agreed statement on appeal. See agreed statement of facts under STATEMENT OF FACTS.

agreed value. See VALUE.

agreement. 1. A mutual understanding between two or more persons about their relative rights and duties regarding past or future performances; a manifestation of mutual assent by two or more persons. 2. The parties' actual bargain as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances, including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance. UCC § 1-201(3).

"An agreement, as the courts have said, 'is nothing more than a manifestation of mutual assent' by two or more parties legally competent persons to one another. Agreement is in some respects a broader term than contract, or even than bargain or promise. It covers executed sales, gifts, and other transfers of property." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 2, at 6 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

agreement of sale. An agreement that obligates someone to sell and that may include a corresponding obligation for someone else to purchase.

agreement to agree. 1. An unenforceable agreement that purports to bind two parties to negotiate and enter into a contract; esp., a proposed agreement negotiated with the intent that the final agreement will be embodied in a formal written document and that neither party will be bound until the final agreement is executed. 2. A fully enforceable agreement containing terms that are sufficiently definite as well as adequate consideration, but leaving some details to be worked out by the parties.

"[I]t has been many times reiterated that the law does not recognize 'an agreement to agree' as a valid contract. So an agreement under which a builder was to construct a building for a developer was held not to be binding because no price was fixed, it being simply agreed that fair and reasonable sums would be negotiated. An 'agreement to agree' would be unobjectionable if the parties had definitely agreed to enter into a contract on terms which were themselves sufficiently definite. What they cannot do is to bind themselves to negotiate and reach agreement, for the negotiations may quite genuinely fail to lead to an agreement." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 89 (3d ed. 1981).

agreement to sell. An agreement that obligates someone to sell.

binding agreement. An enforceable contract. See CONTRACT.

closing agreement. Tax. A written contract between a taxpayer and the Internal Revenue Service to resolve a tax dispute.

formal agreement. An agreement in which the law requires not only the consent of the parties but also a manifestation of the agreement in some particular form, in default of which the agreement is null.

integrated agreement. See INTEGRATED CONTRACT.

invalid agreement. See invalid contract under CONTRACT.

outsourcing agreement. See OUTSOURCING AGREEMENT.

point-and-click agreement. See POINT-AND-CLICK AGREEMENT.

simple agreement. An agreement in which the law requires nothing for its effective operation beyond some manifestation that the parties have consented.

subordination agreement. An agreement by which one who holds an otherwise senior interest agrees to subordinate that interest to a normally lesser interest, usu. when a seller agrees to subordinate a purchase-money mortgage so that the buyer can obtain a first-mortgage loan to improve the property.

unconscionable agreement (ən-kon-shə-nə-bəl). An agreement that no promisor with any sense, and not under a delusion, would make, and that no honest and fair promisee would accept. — Also termed unconscionable contract.

underwriting agreement. An agreement between a corporation and an underwriter covering the terms and conditions of a new securities issue.

valid agreement. See valid contract under CONTRACT.

voidable agreement. See voidable contract under CONTRACT.

void agreement. See void contract under CONTRACT.

agreement of imperfect obligation. See unenforceable contract under CONTRACT.

agreement of rescission. See RESCISSION (2).

agreement of sale. See AGREEMENT.

Agreement Relating to Liability Limitation of the Warsaw Convention and The Hague Protocol. See MONTREAL AGREEMENT.

agreement to agree. See AGREEMENT.

agreement to sell. See AGREEMENT.

agri (ag-rī), n. pl. [Latin] Lands.

agribusiness. The pursuit of agriculture as an occupation or profit-making enterprise, including labor, land-use planning, and financing the cost of land, equipment, and other necessary expenses.

Agricultural Adjustment Act. A federal statute, enacted in 1933, that paid farmers to not produce crops in an effort to raise crop prices. ● The U.S. Supreme Court declared the act unconstitutional in 1936 on grounds that Congress had overstepped its power to regulate commerce. A second, more limited Agricultural Adjustment Act was enacted in 1938. — Abbr. AAA.

agricultural labor. Work that is performed on a farm or ranch, or that pertains to the production of commodities, such as harvesting crops, raising livestock, or obtaining milk, honey, or other animal products. • Agricultural labor is often excluded from certain labor laws, such as unemployment insurance and workers' compensation.

agricultural lien. See LIEN.

agriculture. The science or art of cultivating soil, harvesting crops, and raising livestock.

"'Agriculture' is broader in meaning than 'farming'; and while it includes the preparation of soil, the planting of seeds, the raising and harvesting of crops, and all their incidents, it also includes gardening, horticulture, viticulture, dairying, poultry, bee raising, and ranching." 3 Am. Jur. 2d Agriculture § 1, at 934-35 (1986).

agri limitati (ag-rī lim-i-tay-tī). [Latin "fields limited" or "lands enclosed by boundaries"] Roman & civil law. Lands whose boundaries have been fixed by a surveyor. • They included land belonging to the state by right of conquest, and granted and sold in individual plots.

Aguilar-Spinelli test (ah-gee-lahr spi-nel-ee or ag-wə-lahr). Criminal procedure. A standard for determining whether hearsay (such as an informant's tip) is sufficiently reliable to establish probable cause for an arrest or search warrant. • Under this two-pronged test — which has been replaced by a broader, totality-of-the-circumstances approach — the reliability of both the information and the informant must be independently shown. Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108, 84 S.Ct. 1509 (1964); Spinelli v. United States, 393 U.S. 410, 89 S.Ct. 584 (1969). Cf. TOTALITY-OF-THE-CIRCUMSTANCES TEST.

ahupuaa (ah-hoo-poo-ah-ah). A variable measure of Hawaiian land, traditionally understood to stretch from the sea to the mountains, to allow the people to obtain the various materials needed for subsistence offered at different elevations. — Also spelled ahupua'a.

AICPA. abbr. American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

aid, n. Hist. 1. A subsidy or tax granted to the king for an extraordinary purpose. — Also termed grant-in-aid. 2. A benevolence or tribute (i.e., a sum of money) granted by the tenant to his lord in times of difficulty and distress. • Over time, these grants grew from being discretionary to matters of right. The three principal aids were: (1) to ransom the lord's person if he was taken prisoner; (2) to contribute toward the ceremony of knighting the lord's eldest son; and (3) to provide a suitable portion to the lord's eldest daughter when she married. 3. Assistance in defending a lawsuit in which the plaintiff also has a claim against an unsued third party having a joint interest in the defense.

aid and abet, vb. To assist or facilitate the commission of a crime, or to promote its accomplishment. • Aiding and abetting is a crime in most jurisdictions. — Also termed aid or abet; counsel and procure. — aider and abettor, n.

"The phrase 'aid and abet' and 'aider and abettor' seem unnecessarily verbose. . . . [A]ny aid given with mens rea is abetment; hence to add the word 'aid' to the word 'abet' is not necessary and is sometimes misleading." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 724-25 (3d ed. 1982).

"In connection with the principal in the second degree or accessory before the fact, the terms 'aid' and 'abet' are frequently used interchangeably, although they are not synonymous. To 'aid' is to assist or help another. To 'abet' means, literally, to bait or excite, as in the case of an animal. In its legal sense, it means to encourage, advise, or instigate the commission of a crime." 1 Charles E. Torcia, Wharton's Criminal Law § 29, at 181 (15th ed. 1993).

aid and comfort. Help given by someone to a national enemy in such a way that the help amounts to treason.

"Aid and comfort may be given in various ways, such as buying a vessel and fitting it for service in aid of the enemy, delivering prisoners and deserters to the enemy, or selling critical materials with knowledge of the fact that the purchaser buys them to use in the manufacture of gunpowder for the enemy, or otherwise to aid him in his prosecution of the war. And the courts have given short shrift to the claim that such a sale was not intended to aid the enemy but only to make a profit." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 502 (3d ed. 1982).

aide-mémoire (ayd-mem-wahr). Int'l law. A diplomatic document that a diplomatic agent leaves with the receiving state's department of foreign affairs on the occasion of a démarche. • The aide-mémoire presents the receiving state with a precise record of the substance of the diplomatic agent's mission. It is typically written in an impersonal style, without mentioning either the addressee or the author. It appears on printed letterhead and is dated, but it is not

aider by pleading over. The cure of a pleading defect by an adversary's answering the pleading without an objection, so that the objection is waived.

aider by verdict. The cure of a pleading defect by a trial verdict, based on the presumption that the record contains adequate proof of the necessary facts even if those facts were not specifically alleged.

"AIDER BY VERDICT. Wherever a pleading states the essential requisites of a cause of action or ground of defense, it will be held sufficient after a general verdict in favor of the party pleading, though the statement be informal or inaccurate; but a verdict will never aid the statement of a title or cause of action inherently defective." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 332, at 531 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

aiding an escape. The crime of helping a prisoner escape custody.

alien ami. See alien friend.

alien amy. See alien friend.

alien enemy. A citizen or subject of a country at war with the country in which the citizen or subject is living or traveling. — Also termed enemy alien.

"In its natural meaning, the term 'alien enemy' indicates a subject of a State with which this country is at war; but in considering the enforcement of civil rights, the test is not nationality, but residence or place of business. Hence, if a person is voluntarily resident in or is carrying on business in an enemy country, then he is an alien enemy even though he be a British subject or the subject of a neutral State . . ." 1 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 52-53 (P.W. French ed., 13th ed. 1950).

alteration. 1. A substantial change to real estate, esp. to a structure, not involving an addition to or removal of the exterior dimensions of a building's structural parts. • Although any addition to or improvement of real estate is by its very nature an alteration, real-estate lawyers habitually use alteration in reference to a lesser change. Still, to constitute an alteration, the change must be substantial — not simply a trifling modification. 2. An act done to an instrument, after its execution, whereby its meaning or language is changed; esp., the changing of a term in a negotiable instrument without the consent of all parties to it. • Material alterations void an instrument, but immaterial ones do not. An alteration is material if it (1) changes the burden of a party (as by changing the date, time, place, amount, or rate of interest), (2) changes the liabilities or duties of any party (as by adding or removing the name of a maker, drawer, indorser, payee, or co-surety), or (3) changes the operation of the instrument or its effect in evidence (as by adding words or negotiability, changing the form of an indorsement, or changing the liability from joint to several).

"With respect to written instruments, 'alteration' generally means a change in an instrument's sense of language caused by a party to the instrument, and does not include such changes by non-parties or 'strangers' to the instrument. Although the distinction is not always observed, technically an alteration by a non-party or stranger to the instrument is a 'spoliation,' not an alteration, which does not invalidate it or change the rights or liabilities of the parties in interest, so long as the original writing remains legible." 4 Am. Jur. 2d Alteration of Instruments § 1 (1995).

material alteration. 1. A significant change in something; esp., a change in a legal instrument sufficient to alter the instrument's legal meaning or effect. 2. An unauthorized change in an instrument or an addition to an incomplete instrument resulting in the modification of a party's obligations. UCC § 3-407.

structural alteration. A significant change to a building or other structure, essentially creating a different building or structure.

altercation. A vehement dispute; a noisy argument.

"altercation. The traditional view is that this word refers to 'a noisy brawl or dispute,' not rising to the seriousness of physical violence. . . . But in AmE, the word now often denotes some type of scuffling or fighting, especially in police jargon." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern American Usage 34 (1998).

alter ego. A corporation used by an individual in conducting personal business, the result being that a court may impose liability on the individual by piercing the corporate veil when fraud has been perpetrated on someone dealing with the corporation. See PIERCING THE CORPORATE VEIL.

alter-ego rule. 1. Corporate law. The doctrine that shareholders will be treated as the owners of a corporation's property, or as the real parties in interest, whenever it is necessary to do so to prevent fraud or to do justice. 2. Criminal law. The common-law doctrine limiting the use of force when defending another person to the amount of force that the other person would be privileged to use in self-defense.

altering or amending a judgment. A trial court's act of correcting a substantive mistake in a judgment, as by correcting a manifest error of law or fact. Fed. R. Civ. P. 59(e).

alternat (awl-tar-nit or al-ter-nah). [French] The rotation in precedence among states, diplomats, etc., esp. in the signing of treaties. • This practice gives each diplomat a copy of the treaty with the diplomat's signature appearing first.

amalgamation (ə-mal-gə-may-shən), n. The act of combining or uniting; consolidation <amalgamation of two small companies to form a new corporation>. — amalgamate, vb. — amalgamator, n. See MERGER.

Amalphitan Code (ə-mal-fə-tən). Hist. A code of maritime law compiled late in the 11th century at the port of Amalfi near Naples. • The Code was regarded as a primary source of maritime law throughout the Mediterranean to the end of the 16th century. — Also termed Amalphitan Table; Laws of Amalfi.

a manibus (ay man-ə-bəs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A royal scribe.

amanuensis (ə-man-yoo-en-sis), n. [fr. Latin ab- “from” + manus “hand”] One who takes dictation; a scribe or secretary.

a manu servus (ay man-yoo sər-vəs). [Latin] A handservant; scribe; secretary.

ambactus (am-bak-təs). [Latin] Hist. 1. A messenger. 2. A servant whose services are hired out by the master.

ambasciator (am-bash-ee-ay-tər). [Law Latin] Hist. A person sent about in the service of another; an ambassador.

ambassador. 1. A diplomatic officer of the highest rank, usu. designated by a government as its resident representative in a foreign state. • Ambassadors represent the sovereign as well as the nation and enjoy many privileges while abroad in their official capacity, including immunity. Ambassadors are distinguished from ministers and envoys, who represent only the state where they are from and not the sovereign. Ambassadors are also generally distinguished from certain legates who have only ecclesiastical authority. But the papal nuncio and some legates, such as the legate a latere, bear the rank of ambassador. See NUNCIO; LEGATE. 2. A representative appointed by another. 3. An unofficial or nonappointed representative. — Also spelled (archaically) embassador. — ambassadorial, adj. — ambassadorship, n.

ambiguitas latens (am-bi-gyoo-ə-tas lay-tenz). See latent ambiguity under AMBIGUITY.

ambiguitas patens (am-bi-gyoo-ə-tas pay-tenz). See patent ambiguity under AMBIGUITY.

ambiguity (am-bi-gyoo-ə-tee), n. An uncertainty of meaning or intention, as in a contractual term or statutory provision. — ambiguous (am-big-yoo-əs), adj.

“In the context of statutory interpretation the word most frequently used to indicate the doubt which a judge must entertain before he can search for and, if possible, apply a secondary meaning is ‘ambiguity’. In ordinary language this term is often confined to situations in which the same word is capable of meaning two different things, but, in relation to statutory interpretation, judicial usage sanctions the application of the word ‘ambiguity’ to describe any kind of doubtful meaning of words, phrases or longer statutory provisions. Hinchy’s case prompted the suggestion that if, in a particular context, words convey to different judges a different range of meanings ‘derived from, not fanciful speculations or mistakes about linguistic usage, but from true knowledge about the use of words, they are ambiguous.'” Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 76-77 (1976).

ambiguity on the factum. An ambiguity relating to the foundation of an instrument, such as a question relating to whether a testator intended for a particular clause to be part of an agreement, whether a codicil was intended to republish a former will, or whether the residuary clause was accidentally omitted.

latent ambiguity. An ambiguity that does not readily appear in the language of a document, but instead arises from a collateral matter when the document's terms are applied or executed <the contract contained a latent ambiguity because the shipping terms stated that the goods would arrive on the ship Peerless, but two ships have that name>. — Also termed extrinsic ambiguity; equivocation; ambiguitas latens.

patent ambiguity (payt-ənt). An ambiguity that clearly appears on the face of a document, arising from the language itself <the nonperformance was excused because the two different prices expressed in the contract created a patent ambiguity>. — Also termed intrinsic ambiguity; ambiguitas patens.

“[L]atent ambiguity . . . must be carefully distinguished from patent ambiguity, where words are omitted, or contradict one another; for in such cases explanatory evidence is not admissible. Where a bill of exchange was expressed in words to be drawn for ‘two hundred pounds’ but in figures for ‘£245,’ evidence was not admitted to show that the figures expressed the intention of the parties.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 401 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

ambiguity doctrine. See CONTRA PROFERENTEM.

ambiguity on the factum. See AMBIGUITY.

hostile amendment. A legislative amendment intended to antagonize potential supporters of a bill.

killer amendment. A legislative amendment that has the effect (intended or not) of antagonizing potential supporters of a bill.

perfecting amendment. A legislative amendment that either corrects one or more minor problems with a bill or makes minor adjustments to attract more support for the bill.

substitute amendment. A legislative amendment that seeks to change provisions in a bill.

2. The process of making such a revision. 3. A change made by addition, deletion, or correction; an alteration in wording. — Abbr. amend.

amendment on court’s own motion. A change to a pleading or other document by the judge without a motion from a party.

nunc pro tunc amendment (nəŋk proh təŋk or nuŋk proh tuŋk). An amendment that is given retroactive effect, usu. by court order.

amendment of indictment. The alteration of the charging terms of an indictment, either literally or in effect, after the grand jury has made a decision on it. • The indictment usu. cannot legally be amended at trial in a way that would prejudice the defendant by having a trial on matters that were not contained in the indictment.

amendment on court’s own motion. See AMENDMENT (3).

amends, n. Compensation given for a loss or injury; reparation.

amenity. [fr. Latin amoenitas “pleasantness”] Something tangible or intangible that increases the enjoyment of real property, such as location, view, landscaping, security, or access to recreational facilities.

a mensa et thoro (ay men-sə et thor-oh). [Latin “from board and hearth”] (Of a divorce decree) effecting a separation of the parties rather than a dissolution of the marriage . See divorce a mensa et thoro under DIVORCE; SEPARATION; A VINCULO MATRIMONII.

amerce (ə-mərs), vb. 1. To impose a fine or penalty that is not fixed but is left to the court’s discretion; to punish by amercement. 2. To fine or punish in any manner. — amerceable (ə-mər-sə-bəl), amerciable (ə-mər-see-ə-bəl), adj.

amercement (ə-mərs-mənt), n. [fr. Law French estre à merci “to be at the mercy (of another),” fr. Latin merces “payment”] 1. The imposition of a discretionary fine or penalty by a court, esp. on an official for misconduct <an amercement proceeding>. 2. The fine or penalty so imposed <an amercement charged to the sheriff for failing to return the writ of execution>. — Also termed cashlite; (archaically) amerciament; merciament.

American Academy of Actuaries. A national organization of actuaries who must meet specified educational requirements and have at least three years of actuarial work experience. • Created in 1965, the Academy promotes public awareness of the actuarial profession, represents the profession before federal and state governments, and sponsors continuing-education conferences. — Abbr. AAA. See ACTUARY.

ancient document. See DOCUMENT.

ancient house. See HOUSE.

ancient law. The law of antiquity, considered esp. either from an anthropological standpoint or from the standpoint of tracing precursors to modern law.

"Ancient law uniformly refuses to dispense with a single gesture, however grotesque; with a single syllable, however its meaning may have been forgotten; with a single witness, however superfluous may be his testimony. The entire solemnities must be scrupulously completed by persons legally entitled to take part in them, or else the conveyance is null, and the seller is re-established in the rights of which he had vainly attempted to divest himself." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 225-26 (17th ed. 1901).

ancient-lights doctrine. The common-law principle by which a landowner acquired, after 20 years of uninterrupted use, an easement preventing a neighbor from building an obstruction that blocks light from passing through the landowner's window. • The window (or other opening) is termed an ancient light. This doctrine has rarely been applied in the United States. — Also termed ancient-windows doctrine.

"Under the English doctrine of ancient lights, which has been soundly repudiated in this country, if a landowner had received sunlight across adjoining property for a specified period of time, the landowner was entitled to continue to receive unobstructed access to sunlight across the adjoining property; the landowner acquired a negative prescriptive easement and could prevent the adjoining landowner from obstructing access to light." 1 Am. Jur. 2d Adjoining Landowners § 90, at 889 (1994).

ancient readings. Hist. Lectures on ancient English statutes, formerly having substantial legal authority.

ancient rent. Hist. The rent reserved at the time the lease is made, if the estate was not then under lease.

ancients. Hist. Certain members of seniority in the Inns of Court and Chancery. • In Gray's Inn, the society consisted of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar, with the ancients being the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, those who passed the readings were termed ancients. The Inns of Chancery consisted of both ancients and students or clerks.

ancient serjeant. Hist. English law. The eldest of the Crown's serjeants. • The last serjeant to hold this office died in 1866.

ancient wall. See WALL.

ancient watercourse. See WATERCOURSE.

ancient-windows doctrine. See ANCIENT-LIGHTS DOCTRINE.

ancient writing. See ancient document under DOCUMENT.

ancilla (an-sil-ə), n. [Latin] Hist. A female auxiliary or assistant.

ancillary (an-sə-ler-ee), adj. Supplementary; subordinate <ancillary claims>. — ancillarity (an-sə-la[i]r-ə-tee), n.

ancillary administrator. See ADMINISTRATOR (1).

ancillary attachment. See ATTACHMENT (3).

ancillary bill. See ancillary suit under SUIT.

ancillary claim. A claim that is collateral to, dependent on, or auxiliary to another claim, such as a state-law claim that is sufficiently related to a federal claim to permit federal jurisdiction over it. • The concept of ancillary federal jurisdiction is now contained in the supplemental-jurisdiction statute, 28 USCA § 1367. See ancillary jurisdiction and supplemental jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

ancillary process. See ancillary suit under SUIT.

ancillary receiver. See RECEIVER.

ancillary suit. See SUIT.

ancipitis usus. See conditional contraband under CONTRABAND.

Anders brief. Criminal procedure. A brief filed by a court-appointed defense attorney who wants to withdraw from the case on appeal based on a belief that the appeal is frivolous. • In an Anders brief, the attorney seeking to withdraw must identify anything in the record that might arguably support the appeal. The court then decides whether the appeal is frivolous and whether the attorney should be permitted to withdraw. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 87 S.Ct. 1396 (1967). — Also termed no-merit brief.

"Anders requires an attorney to assume two somewhat contradictory roles when filing a no-merit brief. The first, and most important, role is that of an advocate. Anders makes clear that the first duty of appellate counsel is to study the record and to consult with the defendant to ascertain whether there is anything in the record to support an appeal. Counsel should not consider the case with a view toward finding no merit or of acting as a neutral party. Only if counsel can find no issue of even arguable merit does he change hats and become an amicus curiae." Jonathan M. Purver & Lawrence E. Taylor, Handling Criminal Appeals § 138, at 285 (1980).

and other good and valuable consideration.
See other consideration under CONSIDERATION.

androlepsy (an-drə-lep-see). [fr. Greek "seizure of men"] Hist. The taking by one nation of citizens or subjects of another nation either in reprisal or to enforce some claim (as to surrender or punish a fugitive). — Also termed androlepsia (an-drə-lep-see-ə).

anecius (ə-nee-shee-əs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The eldest; the firstborn; the senior, as contrasted with puisne ("the younger").

angaria (ang-gair-ee-ə). 1. ANGARY. 2. Roman law. A compulsory service consisting in the transport of goods or persons for the imperial post. 3. Hist. A service exacted by a lord beyond what is due.

angary (ang-gə-ree). Int'l law. A country's right, in war or other urgent circumstances, to seize — for temporary use — neutral merchant ships in its inland or territorial waters as well as aircraft within its territory, with full indemnity by the country. — Also termed right of angary; jus angariae.

"In many respects the content and scope of the right of angary remain unclear and there is little evidence of State practice on several controversial questions. In practice, the right has been exercised mainly in wartime. Nevertheless, several writers consider it to be applicable in times of peace and in cases of absolute necessity, such as the evacuation of the population in the event of a national emergency." Rainer Lagoni, "Angary, Right of," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law (1992).

Anglicé (ang-glə-see), adv. [French] In English.

• This term formerly appeared in pleadings to signal an English translation or restatement of a previous Latin word or phrase <panis, Anglicé, bread>.

Anglo-Saxon law. The body of royal decrees and customary laws developed by the Germanic peoples who dominated England from the 5th century to 1066.

anhote, n. Hist. A single tribute or tax paid according to custom, such as scot and lot. See SCOT AND LOT.

aniente (an-ee-ənt or an-ee-ent), adj. [Law French] (Of a law, etc.) having no force or effect; void. — Also spelled anient. — Also termed aniens.

animo (an-ə-moh). [Latin] See ANIMUS (2).

animo et corpore (an-ə-moh et kor-pə-ree), adv. [Latin] By the mind and by the body; by the intention and by the physical act <possession is acquired animo et corpore>.

animo felonico (an-ə-moh fə-lon-ə-koh), adv. [Latin] With felonious intent; with the intention to commit a felony.

animus (an-ə-məs). [Latin] 1. Ill will; animosity.

class-based animus. A prejudicial disposition toward a discernible, usu. constitutionally protected, group of persons. • A class-based animus is an essential element of a civil-rights conspiracy case.

2. Intention. • All the following Latin "animus" phrases have analogous adverbial forms beginning with "animus" (the definition merely needing "with" at the outset) — for example, animus furandi means "with the intention to steal," animus testandi means "with testamentary intention," etc.

animus belligerendi (an-ə-məs bə-lij-ə-ren-di). The intention to wage war.

animus cancellandi (an-ə-məs kan-sə-lan-di). [Latin] The intention to cancel. • This phrase usu. refers to a will.

animus capiendi (an-ə-məs kap-ee-en-di). [Latin] The intention to take or capture.

animus dedicandi (an-ə-məs ded-ə-kan-di). [Latin] The intention to donate or dedicate.

animus defamandi (an-ə-məs def-ə-man-di). [Latin] The intention to defame.

animus derelinquendi (an-ə-məs dee-rel-ing-kwen-dī). [Latin] The intention to abandon.

animus deserendi (an-ə-məs des-ə-ren-dī). [Latin] The intention to desert (usu. a spouse, child, etc.).

animus differendi (an-ə-məs dif-ə-ren-dī). [Latin] The intention to obtain delay.

animus domini (an-ə-məs dom-ə-nī). [Latin] Roman law. The intent to exercise dominion over a thing; the intent to own something. Cf. animus possidendi.

"All possession has two elements, a physical and a mental, which the Romans distinguish as corpus and animus. The first is the physical relation of the possessor to the object. The second is his sense of that relation. If he is minded to deal with the thing as his own (animus domini — animus sibi habendi), no matter whether rightfully or wrongfully, he possesses in the fullest sense." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 179–80 (4th ed. 1956).

animus donandi (an-ə-məs doh-nan-dī). The intention to give.

animus et factum (an-ə-məs et fak-təm). [Latin "mind and deed"] The intention and the deed. • This phrase can refer to a person's intent to reside in a given country permanently or for an indefinite period.

animus felonius (an-ə-məs fe-loh-ni-kəs). The intention to commit a felony.

animus furandi (an-ə-məs fyuu-ran-dī). The intention to steal. — Also termed furandi animus.

"[An] intent to deprive the owner of his property permanently, or an intent to deal with another's property unlawfully in such a manner as to create an obviously unreasonable risk of permanent deprivation, [is] all that is required to constitute the animus furandi — or intent to steal." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 332–33 (3d ed. 1982).

animus injuriandi (an-ə-məs in-joor-ee-an-dī). The intention to injure, esp. to insult.

animus lucrandi (an-ə-məs loo-kran-dī). [Latin] The intention to make a gain or profit.

animus malus (an-ə-məs mal-əs). [Latin] Evil intent.

animus manendi (an-ə-məs mə-nen-dī). [Latin "will to remain"] The intention to remain; the intention to establish a permanent residence.

animus morandi (an-ə-məs mə-ran-dī). [Latin "will to tarry"] The intention to remain. • Although animus morandi is broadly synonymous with animus manendi, morandi suggests less permanency.

animus nocendi (an-ə-məs noh-sen-dī). [Latin] The intention to harm.

animus possidendi (an-ə-məs pah-sə-den-dī). [Latin] Roman law. The intent to possess a thing. Cf. animus domini.

animus quo (an-ə-məs kwoh). [Latin] The intent with which.

animus recipiendi (an-ə-məs ri-sip-ee-en-dī). [Latin] The intention to receive.

animus recuperandi (an-ə-məs ri-k[y]oo-pə-ran-dī). [Latin] The intention to recover.

animus republicandi (an-ə-məs ree-pub-lə-kan-dī). [Latin] The intention to republish.

animus restituendi (an-ə-məs rə-sti-tyoo-en-dī). [Latin] The intention to restore.

animus revertendi (an-ə-məs ree-vər-ten-dī). The intention to return (to a place).

animus revocandi (an-ə-məs rev-oh-kan-dī). [Latin] The intention to revoke (a will) <her destruction of the will indicated that she had animus revocandi>.

animus signandi (an-ə-məs sig-nan-dī). [Latin] The intention to sign.

animus testandi (an-ə-məs tes-tan-dī). [Latin] Testamentary intention.

ann, jour, et wast (an, zhoor, ay wayst). [Law French] See YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE.

annates (an-ayts or an-its), n. [fr. Law Latin annata] Hist. Eccles. law. First fruits paid out of spiritual benefices, initially to the Pope and later to the Crown under Henry VIII.

annex, n. Something that is attached, such as a document to a report or an addition to a building.

annexation, n. 1. The act of attaching; the state of being attached. 2. Property. The point at which a fixture becomes a part of the realty to which it is attached. 3. A formal act by which a nation, state, or municipality incorporates land within its dominion. • In international law, the usual formalities of announcing annexation involve having specially commissioned officers hoist the national flag and read a proclamation. 4. The annexed land itself. — annex, vb. Cf. ACCESSION (5).

cherry-stem annexation. 1. Annexed land that resembles (on a map) a cherry because the annexed territory — the cherry — is not contiguous to the acquiring municipality, and the narrow corridor of annexed land leading to the targeted area resembles a stem. 2. The process of annexing land with this configuration.

anniversary date. Insurance. The annually recurring date of the initial issuance of a policy. Cf. POLICY YEAR.

anno ante Christum (an-oh an-tee kris-təm), adv. [Latin] In the year before Christ. — Abbr. A.A.C.

anno ante Christum natum (an-oh an-tee kris-təm nay-təm), adv. [Latin] In the year before the birth of Christ. — Abbr. A.A.C.N.

Anno Domini (an-oh dom-ə-nī or -nee). [Latin] "in the year of the Lord" Of the modern era. • This phrase denotes the method of calculating time from the birth of Christ <A.D. 1776>. — Abbr. A.D. — Also termed Year of Our Lord.

annonae civiles (ə-noh-nee sə-vī-leez), n. [Latin] Hist. Yearly rents issuing out of particular lands and payable to certain monasteries.

anno orbis conditi (an-oh or-bis kon-di-ti), n. [Latin] The year of the creation of the world. — Abbr. A.O.C.

Anno Regni (an-oh reg-nī). [Latin] In the year of the reign. • A.R.V.R. 22, for example, is an abbreviated reference to Anno Regni Victoriae Reginae vicesimo secundo ("in the twenty-second year of the reign of Queen Victoria"). — Abbr. A.R.

annotatio (an-oh-tay-shee-oh). [Latin] RESCRIPT (3).

annotation (an-ə-tay-shən), n. 1. A brief summary of the facts and decision in a case, esp. one involving statutory interpretation. 2. A note that explains or criticizes a source of law, usu. a case. • Annotations appear, for example, in the United States Code Annotated (USCA). 3. A volume containing such explanatory or critical notes. — annotate (an-ə-tayt), vb. — annotative (an-ə-tay-tiv), adj. — annotator (an-ə-tay-tər), n. Cf. NOTE (2).

"One of the most important classes of Search Books is those included in the category of Annotations. They are important and valuable, in that they often purport to give, in very condensed form, some indication of the law, deduced from the cases or statutes, as well as to point out where similar cases can be found." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 84 (3d ed. 1914).

announce, vb. To make publicly known; to proclaim formally <the judge announced her decision in open court>.

annual permit. A permit, required by some states, that must be paid each year by a corporation that does business in the state. • In some states, the permit fee is set according to the corporation's capitalization.

annual report. A yearly corporate financial report for shareholders and other interested parties. • The Securities Exchange Act of 1934 requires registered corporations to file an annual report on the SEC's Form 10-K. An annual report includes a balance sheet, income statement, statement of changes in financial position, reconciliation of changes in owners' equity accounts, a summary of significant accounting principles, other explanatory notes, the auditor's report, and comments from management about prospects for the coming year. — Also termed annual statement; financial report.

annual value. See VALUE.

annua pensione. See DE ANNUA PENSIONE.

annuitant (ə-n[y]oo-ə-tənt), n. A beneficiary of an annuity.

annuity (ə-n[y]oo-ə-tee). 1. An obligation to pay a stated sum, usu. monthly or annually, to a stated recipient. • These payments terminate upon the death of the designated beneficiary. 2. A fixed sum of money payable periodically. 3. A right, often acquired under a life-insurance contract, to receive fixed payments periodically for a specified duration. Cf. PENSION. 4. A savings account with an insurance company or investment company, usu. established for retirement income. • Payments into the account accumulate tax-free, and the account is taxed only when the annuitant withdraws money in retirement.

annuity certain. An annuity payable over a specified period, regardless of whether the annuitant dies.

annuity due. An annuity that makes payments at the beginning of each pay period. Cf. ordinary annuity.

cash-refund annuity. An annuity providing for a lump-sum payment after the annuitant's death of the difference between the total received and the price paid.

contingent annuity. 1. An annuity that begins making payments when some future event occurs, such as the death of a person other than the annuitant. 2. An annuity that makes an uncertain number of payments, depending on the outcome of a future event.

deferred annuity. An annuity that begins making payments on a specified date if the annuitant is alive at that time. — Also termed deferred-payment annuity. Cf. immediate annuity.

fixed annuity. An annuity that guarantees fixed payments, either for life or for a specified period.

group annuity. An annuity payable to members of a group, esp. employees, who are covered by a single annuity contract, such as a group pension plan.

immediate annuity. An annuity paid for with a single premium and that begins to pay benefits within the first payment interval. Cf. deferred annuity.

joint annuity. An annuity payable to two annuitants until one of them dies, at which time the annuity terminates for the survivor (unless the annuity also provides for survivorship rights). See survivorship annuity.

life annuity. An annuity payable only during the annuitant's lifetime, even if the annuitant dies prematurely.

life-income period-certain annuity. An annuity that pays a specified number of payments even if the annuitant dies before the minimum amount has been paid.

nonrefund annuity. An annuity with guaranteed payments during the annuitant's life, but with no refund to anyone at death. — Also termed straight life annuity; pure annuity.

ordinary annuity. An annuity that makes payments at the end of each pay period. Cf. annuity due.

private annuity. An annuity from a private source rather than from a public or life-insurance company.

pure annuity. See nonrefund annuity.

refund annuity. An annuity that, upon the annuitant's death, pays to the annuitant's estate the difference between the purchase price and the total payments received during the annuitant's lifetime.

retirement annuity. An annuity that begins making payments only after the annuitant's retirement. • If the annuitant dies before retirement, an agreed amount will usu. be refunded to the annuitant's estate.

straight annuity. An annuity that makes payments in fixed amounts at periodic intervals. Cf. variable annuity.

straight life annuity. See nonrefund annuity.

survivorship annuity. An annuity providing for continued payments to a survivor, usu. a spouse, after the original annuitant dies.

tax-deferred annuity. See 403(b) plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

variable annuity. An annuity that makes payments in varying amounts depending on the success of investment strategy. Cf. straight annuity. See variable annuity contract under CONTRACT.

annuity bond. See BOND (3).

annuity certain. See ANNUITY.

annuity depreciation method. See DEPRECIATION METHOD.

annuity due. See ANNUITY.

annuity insurance. See INSURANCE.

annuity policy. An insurance policy providing for monthly or periodic payments to the insured to begin at a fixed date and continue through the insured's life.

annuity trust. See TRUST.

annulment (ə-nəl-mənt), n. 1. The act of nullifying or making void. 2. A judicial or ecclesiastical declaration that a marriage is void. • Unlike a divorce, an annulment establishes that marital status never existed in law. — annul (ə-nəl), vb. Cf. DIVORCE.

annum luctus (an-əm lək-təs), n. [Latin “year of mourning”] Roman law. The year following the death of a married man during which his widow could not remarry, because of the confusion that would ensue in determining the percentage of a child born a few months after a second marriage within that year. — Also sometimes termed year in mourning.

annus (an-əs). [Latin] A year.

annus, dies, et vastum (an-əs, di-eez, et vas-təm). [Law Latin] See YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE.

annus et dies (an-əs et di-eez). [Law Latin] A year and a day. See YEAR-AND-A-DAY RULE.

annus utilis (an-əs yoo-tə-lis), n. [Latin] Roman law. A year made up of the available days for conducting legal business and deducting the remaining days, such as days when the courts are closed or when the opposing party is absent.

annuus reditus (an-əs red-ə-təs). [Law Latin] A yearly rent.

anomalous indorsement. See irregular indorsement under INDORSEMENT.

anomalous jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

anomalous-jurisdiction rule (ə-nom-ə-ləs). The principle that a court of appeals has provisional jurisdiction to review the denial of a motion to intervene in a case, and if the court of appeals finds that the denial was correct, then its jurisdiction disappears — and it must dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction — because an order denying a motion to intervene is not a final, appealable order. • This rule has been criticized by courts and commentators. Many appellate courts, upon finding that the trial court properly denied a motion to intervene, will affirm the denial instead of dismissing the appeal for want of jurisdiction. — Also termed anomalous rule.

anomalous pleading. See PLEADING (1).

anomalous rule. See ANOMALOUS-JURISDICTION RULE.

anonymous, adj. Not named or identified <the police arrested the defendant after a tip from an anonymous informant>. — anonymity (an-ə-nim-ə-tee), n.

anoysance (ə-noy-zənts), n. [Law French] Hist. An annoyance or nuisance. See NUISANCE.

answer, n. A defendant’s first pleading that addresses the merits of the case, usu. by denying the plaintiff’s allegations. • An answer usu. sets forth the defendant’s defenses and counterclaims.

answer, vb. 1. To respond to a pleading or a discovery request <the company failed to answer the interrogatories within 30 days>. 2. To assume the liability of another . 3. To pay (a debt or other liability) <she chose to promise to answer damages out of her own estate>.

answer date. See answer day under DAY.

answer day. See DAY.

antapocha (ant-ap-ə-kə). [Latin “counter-receipt”] Roman & civil law. A counterpart to a receipt (i.e., an apocha), signed by the debtor and delivered to the creditor. Cf. APOCHA.

ante (an-tee), prep. [Latin] Before. Cf. POST.

antea (an-tee-ə), adv. [Latin] Formerly; heretofore.

antecedent (an-tə-seed-ənt), adj. Earlier; preexisting; previous. — antecedent (preceding thing), n. — antecedence (quality or fact of going before), n.

antecedent claim. A preexisting claim. • Under the UCC, a holder takes an instrument for value if it is taken for an antecedent claim. UCC § 3-303.

antecedent debt. See DEBT.

antecessor (an-tə-ses-ər or an-), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A professor of law. 2. Hist. An ancestor. 3. Hist. A predecessor to an office.

antedate (an-ti-dayt), vb. 1. To affix with a date earlier than the true date; BACKDATE (1) <antedate a check>. 2. To precede in time <the doctrine antedates the Smith case by many years>. — Also termed predate. — antedate, n. Cf. POSTDATE.

ante exhibitionem billae (an-tee ek-si-bish-ee-oh-nəm bil-ee). Before the exhibition of the bill; i.e., before a suit has begun.

ante litem motam (an-tee li-təm moh-təm). [Law Latin "before the lawsuit was started"] Before a legal dispute arose — i.e., at a time when the declarant has no motive to lie.

ante meridiem (an-tee mə-rid-ee-əm). [Latin] Before noon. — Abbr. a.m.; A.M.

ante mortem interest (an-tee mor-təm). [Latin] An interest existing before (but not after) a transferor's death.

ante natus (an-tee nay-təs). [Law Latin] A person born before a certain political event that affected the person's political rights; esp., a person born before the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Cf. POST NATUS.

antenuptial (an-ti-nəp-shəl), adj. See PRENUPTIAL.

antenuptial agreement. See PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

antenuptial gift. See prenuptial gift under GIFT.

antenuptial will. See prenuptial will under WILL.

anthropometry (an-thrə-pom-ə-tree). A system of measuring the human body, esp. the size relationships among the different parts. • Before the advent of fingerprinting, minute measurements of the human body — taken and compared to other persons' measurements — were used to identify criminals and deceased persons. Cf. BERTILLON SYSTEM.

antichresis (an-ti-kree-sis). [Latin "in place of interest"] Roman & civil law. A mortgage in which the mortgagee retains possession of the mortgaged property and takes the fruits (such as rents) of the property in lieu of interest on the debt.

anticipated compromis. See general compromis under COMPROMIS.

anticipation. Patents. The previous use, knowledge, documentation, or patenting of an invention. • Any of these will negate the invention's novelty, thereby preventing a patent or providing a defense to an infringement claim. See NOVELTY.

anticipatory breach. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

anticipatory nuisance. See NUISANCE.

anticipatory offense. See inchoate offense under OFFENSE.

anticipatory replication. See REPLICATION.

anticipatory repudiation. See REPUDIATION.

anticipatory search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

anticompetitive conduct. Antitrust. An act that harms or seeks to harm the market or the process of competition among businesses, and that has no legitimate business purpose.

antideficiency legislation. See LEGISLATION.

antidestruction clause. A provision in a security protecting a shareholder's conversion rights, in the event of a merger, by granting the shareholder a right to convert the securities into the securities that will replace the company's stock when the merger is complete. — See convertible security under SECURITY.

antidilution provision. A convertible-security provision that safeguards the conversion privilege from share splits, share dividends, or other transactions that might affect the conversion ratio. See CONVERSION RATIO; DILUTION (2).

antidumping law. A statute designed to protect domestic companies by preventing the sale of foreign goods at less than fair value, as defined in the statute (for example, at a price below that of the domestic market). See DUMPING.

antifraud rule. See RULE 10B-5.

antigraph (an-ti-graf). Archaic. A copy or counterpart of an instrument.

antigraphus (an-tig-rə-fəs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. An officer who maintains tax revenues; a comptroller.

Anti-Injunction Act. A federal statute providing that a federal court may not enjoin state-court proceedings unless an injunction is (1) expressly authorized by Congress, (2) necessary for the federal court's in rem jurisdiction, or (3) necessary to prevent relitigation of a judgment rendered by the federal court. 28 USCA § 2283.

anti-john law. A criminal-law statute punishing prostitutes' customers.

antilapse statute. Wills & estates. A statute that passes a bequest to the heirs of the beneficiary if the beneficiary dies before the testator dies. — Also termed lapse statute; nonlapse statute.

antimanifesto. Int'l law. A proclamation in which a belligerent power asserts that the war is a defensive one for that power.

antimarital-facts privilege. See marital privilege (2) under PRIVILEGE (3).

antinomia (an-ti-noh-mee-ə). [Greek] Roman law. See ANTINOMY.

antinomy (an-tin-ə-mee), n. A contradiction in law or logic; esp., a conflict of authority, as between two decisions <antinomies in the case-law>. — antinomic (an-ti-nom-ik), adj.

antiqua custuma (an-ti-kwə kəs-t[y]oo-mə), n. [Law Latin "ancient customs"] Hist. A tax on wool, woolfells, and leather, under St. 3 Edw. ● The distinction between antiqua custuma and nova custuma arose when the king imposed new taxes on the same articles in the 22nd year of his reign. Cf. NOVA CUSTUMA.

antiquare (an-ti-kwair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. 1. To reject a proposal for a new law. ● Those who voted against a proposed law wrote on their ballots the letter "A" for antiquo ("I am for the old law"). 2. To repeal a law.

antiqua statuta (an-ti-kwə stə-t[y]oo-tə). See VETERA STATUTE.

antiquum dominicum (an-ti-kwəm də-min-i-kəm). [Law Latin] Ancient demesne. See DEMESNE.

antisubrogation rule (an-tee-səb-roh-gay-shən). Insurance. The principle that an insurance carrier has no right of subrogation — that is, no right to assert a claim on behalf of the insured or for payments made under the policy — against its own insured for the risk covered by the policy. See SUBROGATION.

antitakeover statute. A state law designed to protect companies based in the state from hostile takeovers.

antithetarius (an-tith-ə-tair-ee-əs). [Law Latin] Hist. An accused person who asserts that his or her accuser is guilty of the crime. Cf. APPROVER (1).

Antitrust Civil Process Act. A federal law prescribing the procedures for an antitrust action by way of a petition in U.S. District Court. 15 USCA §§ 1311 et seq.

antitrust law. The body of law designed to protect trade and commerce from restraints, monopolies, price-fixing, and price discrimination. ● The principal federal antitrust laws are the Sherman Act (15 USCA §§ 1-7) and the Clayton Act (15 USCA §§ 12-27).

"As legislative history and case law both disclose, the general objective of the antitrust laws is the maintenance of competition. Competition per se thus becomes a goal of the legal order. Yet, competition is not a concept which defines itself; notions about the desirability of competition may shape judgments about how the law should apply, at least at its indistinct edges." Lawrence A. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust § 5, at 20 (1977).

appeal as of right. See appeal by right.

appeal by application. An appeal for which permission must first be obtained from the reviewing court. — Also termed appeal by leave.

appeal by right. An appeal to a higher court from which permission need not be first obtained. — Also termed appeal as of right; appeal of right.

appeal de novo. An appeal in which the appellate court uses the trial court's record but reviews the evidence and law without deference to the trial court's rulings. — Also termed de novo review.

appeal in forma pauperis (in for-mə paw-pər-is). An appeal by an indigent party, for whom court costs are waived. Fed. R. App. P. 24. See IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

consolidated appeal. An appeal in which two or more parties, whose interests were similar enough to make a joinder practicable, proceed as a single appellant.

cross-appeal. An appeal by the appellee, usu. heard at the same time as the appellant's appeal.

delayed appeal. An appeal that takes place after the time for appealing has expired, but only when the reviewing court has granted permission because of special circumstances.

devolutive appeal (di-vol-yə-tiv). An appeal that does not suspend the execution of the underlying judgment.

direct appeal. An appeal from a trial court's decision directly to the jurisdiction's highest court, thus bypassing review by an intermediate appellate court. • Such an appeal may be authorized, for example, when the case involves the constitutionality of a state law.

duplicitous appeal. An appeal from two separate judgments, from a judgment and an order, or from two orders.

interlocutory appeal. An appeal that occurs before the trial court's final ruling on the entire case. • Some interlocutory appeals involve legal points necessary to the determination of the case, while others involve collateral orders that are wholly separate from the merits of the action. Cf. FINAL-JUDGMENT RULE.

limited appeal. An appeal from only certain portions of a decision, usu. only the adverse or unfavorable portions.

suspensive appeal. An appeal that stays the execution of the underlying judgment.

appeal, vb. To seek review (from a lower court's decision) by a higher court <petitioner appeals the conviction>. — appealability, n.

appealable decision. See DECISION.

appeals court. See appellate court under COURT.

appearance, n. Procedure. A coming into court as a party or interested person, or as a lawyer on behalf of a party or interested person. — appear, vb.

"The English courts did not, until modern times, claim jurisdiction over the person of the defendant merely by service of summons upon him. It was deemed necessary to resort to further process by attachment of his property and arrest of his person to compel 'appearance,' which is not mere presence in court, but some act by which a person who is sued submits himself to the authority and jurisdiction of the court. Any steps in the action, such as giving bail upon arrest, operated as an appearance or submission." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 5, at 24 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

appearance pro hac vice (proh hak vi-see or proh hahk vee-chay). [Latin] An appearance made by an out-of-state lawyer for one particular case, usu. by leave of court. ● For more on the pronunciation of this term, see PRO HAC VICE.

compulsory appearance. An appearance by one who is required to appear by having been served with process.

general appearance. An appearance for general purposes, which waives a party's ability later to dispute the court's personal jurisdiction.

initial appearance. A criminal defendant's first appearance in court to hear the charges read, to be advised of his or her rights, and to have bail determined. ● The initial appearance is usu. required by statute to occur without undue delay. In a misdemeanor case, the initial appearance may be combined with the arraignment. See ARRAIGNMENT.

special appearance. 1. A defendant's pleading that either claims that the court lacks personal jurisdiction over the defendant or objects to improper service of process. 2. A defendant's showing up in court for the sole purpose of contesting the court's assertion of personal jurisdiction over the defendant. — Also termed limited appearance; appearance de bene esse.

voluntary appearance. An appearance entered by a party's own will, without the service of process.

appearance bond. See bail bond under BOND (2).

appearance date. See answer day under DAY.

appearance day. See answer day under DAY.

appearance de bene esse. See special appearance under APPEARANCE.

appearance docket. See DOCKET (1).

appearance doctrine. In the law of self-defense, the rule that a defendant's use of force is justified if the defendant reasonably believed it to be justified.

appellator (ap-ə-lay-tər). [Latin] Roman & civil law. 1. An appellant. 2. The judge to whom an appeal is taken.

appellee (ap-ə-lee). A party against whom an appeal is taken and whose role is to respond to that appeal, usu. seeking affirmance of the lower court's decision. Cf. APPELLANT.

appello (ə-pel-oh). [Latin] Roman law. I appeal. ● This was the form of making an appeal apud acta (in the presence of the judge).

appellor (ə-pel-or or ap-ə-lor). Hist. English law. A person who formally accuses another of a crime, challenges a jury, or informs against an accomplice.

appellum de feloniam. See APPEAL OF FELONY.

appendant (ə-pen-dənt), adj. Attached or belonging to property as an additional but subsidiary right. — appendant, n.

appendant easement. See easement appurtenant under EASEMENT.

appendant power. See POWER (5).

appenditia (ap-en-dish-ee-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The appendages or appurtenances of an estate.

appendix, n. A supplementary document attached to the end of a writing <the brief includes an appendix of exhibits>. Pl. appendixes, appendices.

appensura (ap-en-s[y]oor-ə), n. [fr. Latin appendere “to weigh out”] Hist. The payment of money by weight rather than by count.

applicant. 1. One who requests something; a petitioner, such as a person who applies for letters of administration. 2. ACCOUNT PARTY.

application. 1. MOTION. 2. Bankruptcy. A request for an order not requiring advance notice and an opportunity for a hearing before the order is issued.

apply, vb. 1. To make a formal request or motion <apply for a loan> <apply for injunctive relief>. 2. To employ for a limited purpose <apply the payments to a reduction in interest>. 3. To put to use with a particular subject matter <apply the law to the facts> <apply the law only to transactions in interstate commerce>.

appointee. 1. One who is appointed. 2. One who receives the benefit of a power of appointment. See POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

permissible appointee. A person to whom appointive property may be assigned under a power of appointment. — Also termed object of the power of appointment; object of the power.

appointive asset. See ASSET.

appointive property. A property interest that is subject to a power of appointment.

appointment, n. 1. The act of designating a person, such as a nonelected public official, for a job or duty <Article II of the U.S. Constitution grants the President the power of appointment for principal federal officials, subject to senatorial consent>.

public appointment. An appointment to a public office.

2. An office occupied by someone who has been appointed . 3. The act of disposing of property, in exercise of a power granted for that purpose <the tenant's appointment of lands>. See POWER OF APPOINTMENT. — appoint, vb. — appointer (for senses 1 & 2), n. — appointor (for sense 3), n.

illusory appointment. A nominal, unduly restrictive, or conditional transfer of property under a power of appointment.

“Like many other theories which are very plausible in the abstract, experience has shown that the doctrine of illusory appointments is difficult in application, since the term ‘illusory’ is vague and indefinite. And, because of the difficulty of formulating rules for determining what is an illusory appointment and the evils resulting from attempts to substitute the judicial will for the intent of the donor and donee of the power, the doctrine has been condemned or rejected by many courts.” 62 Am. Jur. 2d Powers of Appointment § 186 (1990).

Appointments Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution giving the President the power to nominate federal judges and various other officials. U.S. Const. art. II, § 2.

apport (ə-port), n. [Law French] Hist. A tax, expense, tribute, or payment.

apportionment, n. 1. Division into proportionate shares. 2. The act of allocating or attributing moneys or expenses in a given way, as when a taxpayer allocates part of profits to a particular tax year or part of the use of a personal asset to a business. 3. Distribution of legislative seats among districts that are entitled to representation; esp., the allocation of congressional representatives among the states based on population, as required by the 14th Amendment. • The claim that a state is denying the right of representation to its citizens through improper apportionment presents a justiciable issue. — Also termed legislative apportionment. See REAPPORTIONMENT. 4. The division (by statute or by the testator's instruction) of an estate-tax liability among persons interested in an estate. — apportion, vb.

apportionment clause. Insurance. A policy provision that distributes insurance proceeds in proportion to the total coverage.

apportionment of liability. Torts. The parceling out of liability for an injury among multiple tortfeasors, and possibly the plaintiff as well. • Apportionment of liability encompasses such legal doctrines as joint and several liability, comparative responsibility, indemnity, and settlements. See Restatement (Third) of Torts: Apportionment of Liability (1999).

apportum (ə-por-təm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The revenue, profit, or emolument that something brings to its owner. • This was often used in reference to a pension.

apposer. See FOREIGN APPOSER.

apposite (ap-ə-zit), adj. Suitable; appropriate.

appraisal, n. 1. The determination of what constitutes a fair price; valuation; estimation of worth. 2. The report of such a determination. — Also termed appraisement. — appraise, vb. Cf. ASSESSMENT (3).

appraisal clause. An insurance-policy provision allowing either the insurer or the insured to demand an independent estimation of a claimed loss.

appraisal remedy. The statutory right of corporate shareholders who oppose some extraordinary corporate action (such as a merger) to have their shares judicially appraised and to demand that the corporation buy back their shares at the appraised value. — Also termed appraisal right; dissenters' right; right of dissent and appraisal.

appraisal trinity. The three most commonly accepted methods of appraising real property: the market approach, the cost approach, and

appraisement. 1. APPRAISAL. 2. An ADR method used for resolving the amount or extent of liability on a contract when the issue of liability itself is not in dispute. • Unlike arbitration, appraisement is not a quasi-judicial proceeding but instead an informal determination of the amount owed on a contract.

appraiser. An impartial person who estimates the value of something, such as real estate, jewelry, or rare books. — Also termed valuer.

appreciable, adj. Capable of being measured or perceived.

aratrum terrae (ə-ray-trəm ter-ee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The amount of land that can be plowed with a single plow; plowland.

araturia (ar-ə-t[y]oor-ee-ə), n. [Law Latin] See arable land under LAND.

ARB. abbr. ACCOUNTING RESEARCH BULLETIN.

arbiter (ahr-bə-tər). One with the power to decide disputes, such as a judge <the Supreme Court is the final arbiter of legal disputes in the United States>. Cf. ARBITRATOR.

arbitrage (ahr-bə-trahzh), n. The simultaneous buying and selling of identical securities in different markets, with the hope of profiting from the price difference in those markets. — Also termed space arbitrage. — arbitrager (ahr-bə-trahzh-ər), arbitrageur (ahr-bə-trahzh-ər), n.

kind arbitrage. Purchase of a security that, having no restriction other than the payment of money, is exchangeable or convertible within a reasonable time to a second security, with a simultaneous offsetting sale of the second security. — Also termed convertible arbitrage.

risk arbitrage. Arbitrage of assets that are probably, but not necessarily, equivalent; esp., arbitrage of corporate stock in a potential merger or takeover, whereby the target company’s stock is bought and the acquiring company’s stock is sold simultaneously.

time arbitrage. Purchase of a commodity against a present sale of the identical commodity for a future delivery; esp., the simultaneous buying and selling of securities for immediate delivery and future delivery, with the hope of profiting from the difference in prices.

arbitrament (ahr-bi-trə-mənt). 1. The power to decide for oneself or others; the power to decide finally and absolutely. 2. The act of deciding or settling a dispute that has been referred to arbitration. 3. AWARD. — Also spelled (archaically) arbitrement.

arbitrament and award. A plea that the same matter has already been decided in arbitration.

arbitrary, adj. 1. Depending on individual discretion; specif., determined by a judge rather than by fixed rules, procedures, or law. 2. (Of a judicial decision) founded on prejudice or preference rather than on reason or fact. ● This type of decision is often termed arbitrary and capricious.

arbitrary mark. See arbitrary trademark under TRADEMARK.

arbitrary trademark. See TRADEMARK.

arbitration, n. A method of dispute resolution involving one or more neutral third parties who are usu. agreed to by the disputing parties and whose decision is binding. — Also termed (redundantly) binding arbitration. — arbitrate, vb. — arbitral, adj. Cf. MEDIATION (1).

ad hoc arbitration. Arbitration of only one issue.

adjudicative-claims arbitration. Arbitration designed to resolve matters usu. handled by courts (such as a tort claim), in contrast to arbitration of labor issues, international trade, and other fields traditionally associated with arbitration.

compulsory arbitration. Arbitration required by law or forced by law on the parties.

final-offer arbitration. Arbitration in which both parties are required to submit their “final offer” to the arbitrator, who may choose only one. ● This device gives each party an incentive to make a reasonable offer or risk the arbitrator’s accepting the other party’s offer. The purpose of this type of arbitration is to counteract arbitrators’ tendency to make compromise decisions halfway between the two parties’ demands.

grievance arbitration. 1. Arbitration that involves the violation or interpretation of an existing contract. ● The arbitrator issues a final decision regarding the meaning of the contractual terms. 2. Labor law. Arbitration of an employee’s grievance, usu. relating to an alleged violation of the employee’s rights under a collective-bargaining agreement. ● The arbitration procedure is set out in the collective-bargaining agreement. Grievance arbitration is the final step in grievance procedure. — Also termed rights arbitration. See GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE.

interest arbitration. Arbitration that involves settling the terms of a contract being negotiated between the parties; esp., in labor law, arbitration of a dispute concerning what provisions will be included in a new collective-bargaining agreement. ● When the parties cannot agree on contractual terms, an arbitrator decides. This type of arbitration is most common in public-sector collective bargaining.

judicial arbitration. Court-referred arbitration that is final unless a party objects to the award.

rights arbitration. See grievance arbitration.

voluntary arbitration. Arbitration by the agreement of the parties.

arbitration act. A federal or state statute providing for the submission of disputes to arbitration.

arbitration and award. An affirmative defense asserting that the subject matter of the action has already been settled in arbitration.

arbitration board. A panel of arbitrators appointed to hear and decide a dispute according to the rules of arbitration.

arbitration clause. A contractual provision mandating arbitration — and thereby avoiding litigation — of disputes about the contracting parties’ rights, duties, and liabilities.

arbitration of exchange. The simultaneous buying and selling of bills of exchange in different international markets, with the hope of profiting from the price difference of the currencies in those markets. See ARBITRAGE; DRAFT (1).

arbitrator, n. A neutral person who resolves disputes between parties, esp. by means of formal arbitration. — arbitratorship, n. Cf. ARBITER.

arbitrement. Archaic. See ARBITRAMENT.

[Latin "seizure of the goods of foreign merchants"] Hist. A writ to seize the goods of an alien, taken in recompense of goods taken from an English subject living abroad.

arrest of inquest. A plea that a matter proposed for inquiry has already been investigated and should therefore not be reexamined.

arrest of judgment. The staying of a judgment after its entry; esp., a court's refusal to render or enforce a judgment because of a defect apparent from the record. • At common law, courts have the power to arrest judgment for intrinsic causes appearing on the record, as when the verdict differs materially from the pleadings or when the case alleged in the pleadings is legally insufficient. Today, this type of defect must typically be objected to before trial or before judgment is entered, so that the motion in arrest of judgment has been largely superseded.

"An arrest of judgment [under common law] was the technical term describing the act of a trial judge refusing to enter judgment on the verdict because of an error appearing on the face of the record that rendered the judgment invalid." United States v. Sisson, 399 U.S. 267, 280-81, 90 S.Ct. 2117, 2125 (1970).

arrest on final process. See ARREST.

arson, n. 1. At common law, the malicious burning of someone else's dwelling house or out-house that is either appurtenant to the dwelling house or within the curtilage.

"At common law, arson is the wilful and malicious burning of the dwelling house of another. It may occur during the nighttime or the daytime, and it is an offense against the security of habitation or occupancy, rather than against ownership or property." 3 Charles E. Torcia, Wharton's Criminal Law § 334, at 324-25 (15th ed. 1995).

2. Under modern statutes, the intentional and wrongful burning of someone else's property (as to destroy a building) or one's own property (as to fraudulently collect insurance). — Also termed (in sense 2) statutory arson. Cf. HOUSEBURNING.

"The term 'statutory arson' is employed to designate the entire area of statutory proscription which is analogous to, but does not constitute, common-law arson. It is important to have mutually-exclusive labels here not only for the reasons mentioned in the preceding section, but because some of the state statutes provide a penalty for arson without defining the word and hence adopt the common-law definition." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 287 (3d ed. 1982).

"(1) Arson. A person is guilty of arson, a felony of the second degree, if he starts a fire or causes an explosion with the purpose of: (a) destroying a building or occupied structure of another; or (b) destroying or damaging any property, whether his own or another's, to collect insurance for such loss. It shall be an affirmative defense to prosecution under this paragraph that the actor's conduct did not recklessly endanger any building or occupied structure of another or place any other person in danger of death or bodily injury." Model Penal Code § 220.1 (1997).

aggravated arson. Arson accompanied by some aggravating factor, as when the offender foresees or anticipates that one or more persons will be in or near the property being burned.

A set of principles outlining the U.S. Supreme Court's policy of deciding constitutional questions only when necessary, and of avoiding a constitutional question if the case can be decided on the basis of another issue. • These rules were outlined in Justice Brandeis's concurring opinion in Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 56 S.Ct. 466 (1936). They include the policy that the court should not decide a constitutional question in a friendly suit, should not anticipate a question of constitutional law, should not create a rule of constitutional law that is broader than that called for by the facts of the case, should not decide a constitutional issue if the case can be decided on another ground, should not rule on the constitutionality of a statute unless the plaintiff is harmed by the statute or if the plaintiff has accepted the benefits of the statute, and should not rule on the constitutionality of an act of Congress without first analyzing whether the act can be fairly construed in a way that would avoid the constitutional question. — Also termed Brandeis rules.

as is, adv. & adj. In the existing condition without modification <the customer bought the car as is>. • Under UCC § 2-316(3)(a), a seller can disclaim all implied warranties by stating that the goods are being sold “as is” or “with all faults.” Generally, a sale of property

"as is" means that the property is sold in its existing condition, and use of the phrase as is relieves the seller from liability for defects in that condition. — Also termed with all faults.

as-is warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

asked price. See PRICE.

asking price. See PRICE.

as of. On; at. • This is often used to signify the effective legal date of a document, as when the document is backdated or the parties sign at different times <the lease commences as of June 1>.

as of right. By virtue of a legal entitlement <the case is not one triable to a jury as of right>.

as per. In accordance with; PER (3). • This phrase has traditionally been considered a barbarism, per being the preferred form in commercialesse <per your request>. But even per can be improved on <as you requested>.

asportation (as-pər-tay-shən), n. The act of carrying away or removing (property or a person). • Asportation is a necessary element of larceny. — Also termed carrying away. — asport, vb. See LARCENY.

"To constitute larceny, there must be a taking or caption and carrying away or asportation of the property of another. There is a caption when the defendant takes possession. He takes possession when he exercises dominion and control over the property. There is an asportation when he carries away the property; any carrying away movement, however slight, is sufficient. An asportation presupposes a prior caption; therefore, there can be no asportation unless there has first been a caption." 3 Charles E. Torcia, Wharton's Criminal Law § 357, at 412-13 (15th ed. 1995).

asportavit (as-por-tay-vit). [Law Latin] He carried away.

ASR. abbr. ACCOUNTING SERIES RELEASE.

assart. Hist. 1. The action of pulling up trees and bushes in a forest to make the land arable. • This was a crime if done without a license. 2.

A piece of land made arable by clearing a forest.

assassination, n. The act of deliberately killing someone, esp. a public figure, usu. for hire or for political reasons. — assassinate, vb. — assassin, n.

assault, n. 1. Criminal & tort law. The threat or use of force on another that causes that person to have a reasonable apprehension of imminent harmful or offensive contact; the act of putting another person in reasonable fear or apprehension of an immediate battery by means of an act amounting to an attempt or threat to commit a battery. 2. Criminal law. An attempt to commit battery, requiring the specific intent to cause physical injury. — Also termed (in senses 1 and 2) simple assault. 3. Loosely, a battery. 4. Popularly, any attack. — assault, vb. — assaultive, adj. Cf. BATTERY.

"Ordinary usage creates a certain difficulty in pinning down the meaning of 'assault.' Etymologically, the word is compounded of the Latin ad + saltare, to jump at. In popular language, it has always connoted a physical attack. When we say that D assaults V, we have a mental picture of D attacking V, by striking or pushing or stabbing him. In the middle ages, however, the terms 'assault' and 'battery' were given technical meanings which they have retained ever since. It became settled that though an assault could be committed by physical contact, it did not require this, since a show of force raising an apprehension in the mind of the victim was sufficient. Also, a 'battery' did not require an actual beating; the use of any degree of force against the body would suffice. The acts of spitting on a person and kissing without consent are both batteries." Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 135-36 (1978).

"In addition to the classic definitions of assault, some jurisdictions have used assault as a generic term to describe either assault or battery. Thus, a defendant who intentionally injures somebody may be convicted of assault rather than battery." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 57 (2d ed. 1987).

aggravated assault. Criminal assault accompanied by circumstances that make it more severe, such as the use of a deadly weapon, the intent to commit another crime, or the intent to cause serious bodily harm.

"The common law did not include any offense known as 'aggravated assault.' However, it did make provision for certain situations in this field, under other names. If, for example, the intended application of force to the person would have resulted in murder, mayhem, rape or robbery, if successful, and the scheme proceeded far enough to constitute an attempt the prosecution was for an attempt to commit the intended felony." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 180 (3d ed. 1982).

assault purpensé (ə-sawlt poor-pawn-say). Hist. Premeditated assault. — Also termed assultus premeditatus (ə-səl-təs pree-med-ə-tay-tis).

"Even before the conquest, . . . deliberately planned assassinations came to be distinguished and put into the list of Crown pleas as forsteal. The original sense of this word was lying in wait to ambush the victim. After the conquest this is expressed in various terms in French and Latin, but frequently takes the form of assault purpensé, or assultus premeditatus. In time this yields before malitia excogitata, and so introduces us to the very troublesome word 'malice'." Theodore F.T. Plucknett, A Concise History of the Common Law 444 (5th ed. 1956).

assault to rape. See assault with intent to commit rape.

assault with a deadly weapon. An aggravated assault in which the defendant, controlling a deadly weapon, threatens the victim with death or serious bodily injury. — Also termed felonious assault.

assault with intent. Any of several assaults that are carried out with an additional criminal purpose in mind, such as assault with intent to murder, assault with intent to rob, assault with intent to rape, and assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury. • These are modern statutory inventions that are often found in state criminal codes.

assault with intent to commit rape. An assault carried out with the additional criminal purpose of intending to rape the victim. — Also termed assault to rape.

attempted assault. An attempt to commit an assault. — Also termed attempt to assault.

"[I]t is apparent that reference may be made to an 'attempt to assault' without logical absurdity. There is nothing absurd in referring to an attempt to frighten, which would constitute, if successful, a criminal assault in most jurisdictions. . . . It is not surprising, therefore, that there is a tendency to break away from the ancient view that there is no such offense known to the law as an attempt to commit an assault." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 168 (3d ed. 1982).

"By far the most interesting cases in this area are the attempted assault cases. Where assault is defined as intentionally putting another in fear of a battery, there is of course no basis for denying the possibility of an attempt. Where, however, assault is defined as an attempted battery, attempted assault looks very much like the forbidden 'attempt to attempt' a battery. For this reason some courts have held that there is no such crime as attempted assault. Other courts, however, have held that an attempted assault can exist, defining it as an attempted battery which has not progressed far enough to be an assault." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 223-24 (2d ed. 1987).

civil assault. An assault considered as a tort and not as a crime. • Although the same assaultive conduct can be both a tort and a crime, this term isolates the legal elements that give rise to civil liability.

conditional assault. An assault expressing a threat on condition, such as "your money or your life."

criminal assault. An assault considered as a crime and not as a tort. • This term isolates the legal elements that give rise to criminal liability even though the act might also have been tortious.

excusable assault. An assault committed by accident or while doing a lawful act by lawful means, with ordinary caution and without any unlawful intent.

felonious assault. An assault that is of sufficient severity to be classified and punished as a felony. See aggravated assault.

indecent assault. See sexual assault.

malicious assault with a deadly weapon. An aggravated assault in which the victim is threatened with death or serious bodily harm from the defendant's use of a deadly weapon. • Malice is inferred from both the nature of the assault and the weapon used.

sexual assault. 1. Sexual intercourse with another person without that person's consent. • Several state statutes have abolished the crime of rape and replaced it with the offense of sexual assault. 2. Offensive sexual contact with another person, exclusive of rape. — Also termed (in sense 2) indecent assault. Cf. RAPE.

simple assault. 1. ASSAULT (1). 2. ASSAULT (2).

"(1) Simple Assault. A person is guilty of assault if he: (a) attempts to cause or purposely, knowingly or recklessly causes bodily injury to another; or (b) negligently causes bodily injury to another with a deadly weapon; or (c) attempts by physical menace to put another in fear of imminent serious bodily injury." Model Penal Code § 211.1 (1997).

assault and battery. Loosely, a criminal battery. See BATTERY.

assaultee. A person who is assaulted.

assaulter. A person who assaults another.

assault purpensé. See ASSAULT.

assault to rape. See assault with intent to commit rape under ASSAULT.

assault with a deadly weapon. See ASSAULT.

assault with intent. See ASSAULT.

assault with intent to commit rape. See ASSAULT.

assay, n. 1. A proof or trial, by chemical experiments, of the purity of metals, esp. gold and silver. 2. An examination of weights and measures.

assayator regis. See ASSAYER OF THE KING.

assayer. One who makes assays of precious metals.

assayer of the king. Hist. An officer of the royal mint, appointed by St. 2 Hen. 6, ch. 12, who receives and tests bullion taken in for coining. — Also termed assayator regis.

assurare (ə-sek-yə-rair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To make secure, as by pledges.

assurance (ə-sek-yə-ray-shən). Marine insurance. Insurance.

assuror (ə-sek-yə-ray-tər). Marine insurance. An insurer.

assembly. 1. A group of persons organized and united for some common purpose.

riotous assembly. Hist. An unlawful assembly of 12 or more persons causing a disturbance of the peace.

unlawful assembly. A meeting of three or more persons who intend either to commit a violent crime or to carry out some act, lawful or unlawful, that will constitute a breach of the peace. Cf. RIOT.

“An unlawful assembly differs from a riot in that if the parties assemble in a tumultuous manner, and actually execute their purpose with violence, it is a riot; but if they merely meet on a purpose, which, if executed, would make them rioters, and, having done nothing, they separate without carrying their purpose into effect, it is an unlawful assembly.” 77 C.J.S. Riot; Insurrection § 2, at 565 (1994).

2. In many states, the lower house of a legislature.

assent, n. Agreement, approval, or permission. — assent, vb. See CONSENT.

“The requirement of ‘assent,’ which is fundamental to the formation of a binding contract, implies in a general way that both parties to an exchange shall have a reasonably clear conception of what they are getting and what they are giving up.” Marvin A. Chirelstein, Con- cepts and Case Analysis in the Law of Contracts 66 (1990).

constructive assent. Assent imputed to someone based on conduct.

express assent. Assent that is clearly and unmistakably communicated.

implied assent. Assent inferred from one’s conduct rather than from direct expression.

mutual assent. See MUTUAL ASSENT.

assented stock. See STOCK.

assertion, n. A declaration or allegation. — assert, vb. — assertor, n.

assertive conduct. See CONDUCT.

assertive question. Civil law. A question asked of a witness at a criminal trial, by which inadmissible evidence is sought, to provide the jury with details regarding another crime. Cf. INTERROGATIVE QUESTION.

assertory covenant. See COVENANT (1).

assertory oath (ə-sər-tə-ree). See OATH.

assessable insurance. See INSURANCE.

assessable policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

assessable security. See SECURITY.

assessable stock. See STOCK.

assessed valuation. See VALUATION.

assessment, n. 1. Determination of the rate or amount of something, such as a tax or damages <assessment of the losses covered by insurance>. 2. Imposition of something, such as a tax or fine, according to an established rate; the tax or fine so imposed <assessment of a luxury tax>.

“There is a distinction between public improvements, which benefit the entire community, and local improvements, which benefit particular real estate or limited areas of land. The latter improvements are usually financed by means of special, or local, assessments. These assessments are, in a certain sense, taxes. But an assessment differs from a general tax in that an assessment is levied only on property in the immediate vicinity of some local municipal improvement and is valid only where the property assessed receives some special benefit differing from the benefit that the general public enjoys." Robert Kratovil, Real Estate Law 465 (6th ed. 1974).

assessment for benefits. See special assessment.

deficiency assessment. An assessment by the IRS — after administrative review and tax-court adjudication — of additional tax owed by a taxpayer who underpaid. See TAX DEFICIENCY.

erroneous assessment. An assessment that deviates from the law and creates a jurisdictional defect, and that is therefore invalid.

excessive assessment. A tax assessment that is grossly disproportionate as compared with other assessments.

jeopardy assessment. An assessment by the IRS — without the usual review procedures — of additional tax owed by a taxpayer who underpaid, based on the IRS's belief that collection of the deficiency would be jeopardized by delay.

local assessment. A tax to pay for improvements (such as sewers and sidewalks) in a designated area, levied on property owners who will benefit from the improvements. — Also termed local-improvement assessment.

"Since there is [an] important and fundamental distinction between the tax in the more limited sense and the local assessment, the question often arises whether provisions in constitutions and statutes which refer by name to taxes, include also local assessments. This is primarily a question of legislative intention. In the absence of anything to show the specific intention of the legislature, the general rule is that the local assessment possesses such marked peculiarities differentiating it from the tax in the more limited sense of the term, that the use of the term 'tax' does not prima facie show an intention to include local assessments." 1 William H. Page & Paul Jones, A Treatise on the Law of Taxation by Local and Special Assessments § 39, at 67 (1909).

maintenance assessment. A charge for keeping an improvement in working condition or a residential property in habitable condition. — Also termed maintenance fee.

political assessment. Hist. A charge levied on officeholders and political candidates by a political party to defray the expenses for a political canvass.

special assessment. The assessment of a tax on property that benefits in some important way from a public improvement. — Also termed assessment for benefits.

3. Official valuation of property for purposes of taxation <assessment of the beach house>. — Also termed tax assessment. Cf. APPRAISAL. 4. An audit or review <internal financial assessment> <environmental site assessment>. — assess, vb.

assessment bond. See BOND (3).

assessment company. An association that offers its members life insurance, and then pays for death losses by levying an assessment on the surviving members of the association.

assessment contract. See CONTRACT.

assessment district. See DISTRICT.

assessment for benefits. See special assessment under ASSESSMENT.

assessment fund. The balance of the assessments of a mutual benefit association, minus expenses, from which beneficiaries are paid.

assessment insurance. See INSURANCE.

assessment list. See ASSESSMENT ROLL.

assessment period. A taxable period.

assessment ratio. For property tax purposes, the ratio of assessed value to fair market value.

assessment roll. A record of taxable persons and property, prepared by a tax assessor. — Also termed assessment list.

assessment work. Mining law. The annual labor (such as improvements) that must be performed on an unpatented mining claim to continue to hold the claim.

assessor. 1. One who evaluates or makes assessments, esp. for purposes of taxation. — Also termed (specif.) tax assessor. 2. A person who advises a judge or magistrate about scientific or technical matters during a trial. See MASTER (2). — assessorial (as-ə-sor-ee-əl), adj. — assessorship, n.

asset. 1. An item that is owned and has value. 2. (pl.) The entries on a balance sheet showing the items of property owned, including cash, inventory, equipment, real estate, accounts receivable, and goodwill. 3. (pl.) All the property of a person (esp. a bankrupt or deceased person) available for paying debts.

accrued asset. An asset arising from revenues earned but not yet due.

admitted asset. An asset that by law may be included in evaluating the financial condition of an insurance company. Cf. nonadmitted asset.

appointive asset. An asset distributed under a power of appointment.

assets by descent. The portion of an estate that passes to an heir and is sufficient to charge the heir with the decedent's specialty debts. — Also termed assets per descent.

assets in hand. The portion of an estate held by an executor or administrator for the payment of debts chargeable to the executor or administrator. — Also termed assets entre main; assets entre mains.

asset under management. A securities portfolio for which an investment adviser provides ongoing, regular supervisory or management services.

capital asset. 1. A long-term asset used in the operation of a business or used to produce goods or services, such as equipment, land, or an industrial plant. — Also termed fixed asset. 2. For income-tax purposes, any of most assets held by a taxpayer except those assets specifically excluded by the Internal Revenue Code. • Excluded from the definition are, among other things, stock in trade, inventory, and property held by the taxpayer primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of trade or business.

commercial assets. The aggregate of available property, stock in trade, cash, and other assets belonging to a merchant.

current asset. An asset that is readily convertible into cash, such as a marketable security, a note, or an account receivable. — Also termed liquid asset; quick asset; near money.

"Current assets are assets expected to be converted to cash, sold, or consumed during the next twelve months, or within the business's normal operating cycle if the cycle is longer than a year. The operating cycle is the period from the time that cash is used to acquire goods and services, these goods and services are sold to customers, and the accounts receivable from these customers are collected in cash. For a small retail store, the operating cycle may be only a few weeks or months. For a shipbuilding company, however, the normal operating cycle could run several years." Jay Alix & Elmer E. Heupel, Financial Handbook for Bankruptcy Professionals § 9.2, at 354 (1991).

dead asset. A worthless asset that has no realizable value, such as an uncollectible account receivable.

earning asset. (usu. pl.) An asset (esp. of a bank) on which interest is received. • Banks consider loans to be earning assets.

equitable asset. An asset that is subject to payment only in a court of equity.

frozen asset. An asset that is difficult to convert into cash because of court order or other legal process.

hidden asset. An asset carried on the books at a substantially reduced or understated value that is considerably less than market value.

illiquid asset. An asset that is not readily convertible into cash, usu. because of (1) the lack of demand, (2) the absence of an established market, or (3) the substantial cost or time required for liquidation (such as for real property, even when it is desirable).

individual asset. (usu. pl.) Property belonging to a member of a partnership as personal property, apart from the firm's property.

intangible asset. An asset that is not a physical object, such as a patent, a trademark, or goodwill.

legal asset. A decedent's asset that by law is subject to the claims of creditors or legacies. — Also termed probate asset.

liquid asset. See current asset.

mass asset. An intangible asset, such as a dominant market position, that is made up of several components but that is considered a single entity for purposes of depreciation, because the loss of any component of the asset is replaced by new components, so that the whole asset has little or no fluctuation in value. • An entity with a dominant market position might lose a vendor, but because of its dominant market position is able to replace the loss with a new vendor. The market position is therefore considered a mass asset.

net assets. See NET WORTH.

net quick assets. The excess of quick assets less current liabilities. See QUICK-ASSET RATIO.

new asset. Wills & estates. In the administration of a decedent's estate, property that the administrator or executor receives after the time has expired to file claims against the estate.

nominal asset. An asset whose value is difficult to assess, such as a judgment or claim.

nonadmitted asset. An asset that by law may not be included in evaluating the financial condition of an insurance company because it cannot be converted quickly into cash without a financial loss. Cf. admitted asset.

- personal asset. An asset in the form of money or chattels.
- probate asset. See legal asset.
- quick asset. 1. Cash and other current assets other than inventory. 2. See current asset.
- real asset. An asset in the form of land.
- tangible asset. An asset that has a physical existence and is capable of being assigned a value.
- wasting asset. An asset exhausted through use or the loss of value, such as an oil well or a coal deposit.
- asset acquisition. Acquisition of a corporation by purchasing all its assets directly from the corporation itself, rather than by purchasing shares from its shareholders. — Also termed asset purchase. Cf. SHARE ACQUISITION.
- asset allocation. The spreading of funds between different types of investments with the intention of decreasing risk and increasing return.
- asset-backed security. See SECURITY.
- asset-based financing. See FINANCING.
- asset-coverage test. Accounting. A bond-indenture restriction that permits additional borrowing only if the ratio of assets (typically net tangible assets) to debt (typically long-term debt) does not fall below a specified minimum.
- asset-depreciation range. The IRS's range of depreciation lifetimes allowed for assets placed in service between 1970 and 1980 and for assets depreciated under the Modified Accelerated Cost Recovery System under the Tax Reform Act of 1986. — Abbr. ADR. See ACCELERATED COST RECOVERY SYSTEM.
- asset dividend. See DIVIDEND.
- asset purchase. See ASSET ACQUISITION.
- assets by descent. See ASSET.
- assets entre main. See assets in hand under ASSET.
- assets in hand. See ASSET.
- assets per descent. See assets by descent under ASSET.

asset under management. See ASSET.

asset value. See NET ASSET VALUE.

asseverate (ə-sev-ə-rayt), vb. To state solemnly or positively; to aver. — asseveration (ə-sev-ə-ray-shən), n. See AVERMENT.

assign, n. (usu. pl.) See ASSIGNEE.

assignable, adj. That can be assigned; transferable from one person to another, so that the transferee has the same rights as the transferor had <assignable right>. Cf. NEGOTIABLE.

assignable lease. See LEASE.

assigned account. See ACCOUNT.

assigned counsel. See COUNSEL.

assigned risk. See RISK.

assignee (ə-si-nee or as-ə-nee). One to whom property rights or powers are transferred by another. • Use of the term is so widespread that it is difficult to ascribe positive meaning to it with any specificity. Courts recognize the protean nature of the term and are therefore often forced to look to the intent of the assignor and assignee in making the assignment — rather than to the formality of the use of the term assignee — in defining rights and responsibilities. — Also termed assign.

absolute assignee. A person who is assigned an unqualified interest in property in a transfer of some or all of the incidents of ownership.

assignee ad interim. An assignee appointed between the time of bankruptcy and the appointment of a regular assignee.

collateral assignee. A lender who is assigned an interest in property (usu. real property) as security for a loan.

assignee clause. A provision of the Judiciary Act of 1789 that prevented a litigant without diversity of citizenship from assigning a claim to another who did have the required diversity. • In 1948 the assignee clause was replaced by 28 USCA § 1359, which denies federal jurisdiction when a party is improperly or collusively joined, by assignment or otherwise, merely to invoke jurisdiction.

assignment, n. 1. The transfer of rights or property <assignment of stock options>. 2. The rights or property so transferred <the creditor took the assignment>.

"An assignment is a transfer or setting over of property, or of some right or interest therein, from one person to another; the term denoting not only the act of transfer, but also the instrument by which it is effected. In these senses the word is variously applied in law." Alexander M. Burrill, A Treatise on the Law and Practice of Voluntary Assignments for the Benefit of Creditors § 1, at 1 (James Avery Webb ed., 6th ed. 1894).

"Negotiability differs from assignment, with which it has obvious affinities, in at least two respects. In the first place no notice need be given of the transfer of a negotiable instrument, and in the second place the transfer of such an instrument is not subject to equities. Thus whereas an assignor only transfers his rights subject to any defences which could be pleaded against him, a transfer of a negotiable instrument to someone in good faith passes a good title, free from any such defences. For instance a person who receives a cheque in good faith obtains a good title, even though the cheque may have been stolen. It is not, of course, any document which has the attributes of negotiability. Only those documents recognized by the custom of trade to be transferable by delivery (or endorsement) are negotiable. Other documents can only be transferred by assignment." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 278-79 (3d ed. 1981).

absolute assignment. An assignment that leaves the assignor no interest in the assigned property or right.

assignment in gross. A transfer of a company's trademark separately from the goodwill of the business. • Courts often hold that such an assignment passes nothing of value to the transferee.

assignment of account. An assignment that gives the assignee the right to funds in an account, usu. to satisfy a debt.

assignment of dower (dow-ər). The act of setting apart a widow's share of her deceased husband's real property.

assignment of income. See assignment of wages.

assignment of lease. An assignment in which a lessee transfers the entire unexpired remainder of the lease term, as distinguished from a sublease transferring only a portion of the remaining term.

assignment of wages. A transfer of the right to collect wages from the wage earner to a creditor. — Also termed assignment of income.

assignment pro tanto. An assignment that results when an order is drawn on a third party and made payable from a particular fund that belongs to the drawer. • The draw-ee becomes an assignee with respect to the drawer's interest in that fund.

collateral assignment. An assignment of property as collateral security for a loan.

common-law assignment. An assignment for the benefit of creditors made under the common law, rather than by statute.

conditional assignment. An assignment of income (such as rent payments or accounts receivable) to a lender, made to secure a loan. • The lender receives the assigned income only if the assignor defaults on the underlying loan.

effective assignment. An assignment that terminates the assignor's interest in the property and transfers it to the assignee.

equitable assignment. An assignment that, although not legally valid, will be recognized and enforced in equity — for example, an assignment of a chose in action or of future acquisitions of the assignor. • To accomplish an "equitable assignment," there must be an absolute appropriation by the assignor of the debt or fund sought to be assigned.

fly-power assignment. A blank written assignment that, when attached to a stock certificate, renders the stock transferable.

foreign assignment. An assignment made in a foreign country or in another jurisdiction.

general assignment. Assignment of a debtor's property for the benefit of all the assignor's creditors, instead of only a few. — Also termed voluntary assignment. See ASSIGNMENT FOR THE BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

gratuitous assignment. An assignment given or taken in either of two ways: (1) in exchange for a performance or return promise that would be consideration for a promise; or (2) as security for — or in total or partial satisfaction of — a preexisting obligation.

mesne assignment (meen). A middle or intermediate assignment; any assignment before the last one.

partial assignment. The immediate transfer of part but not all of the assignor's right.

preferential assignment. See PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

total assignment. An assignment empowering the assignee to enforce the entire right for the benefit of the assignor or others. • Examples are assignment to secure an obligation and assignment to a trustee.

voluntary assignment. See general assignment.

wage assignment. An assignment by an employee of a portion of the employee's pay to another (such as a creditor).

3. The instrument of transfer <the assignment was appended to the contract>. 4. A task, job, or appointment <the student's math assignment> <assignment as ambassador to a foreign country>. 5. In litigation practice, a point that a litigant advances <the third assignment of error>.

new assignment. Hist. A plaintiff's restatement of a claim because the first complaint did not contain sufficient details. • The purpose was to allow a plaintiff to reply to a defendant's responsive plea that did not address the plaintiff's specific claim because the complaint was too general. New assignment has been replaced by amended pleadings. — Also termed novel assignment.

"A new assignment is a restatement in the replication of the plaintiff's cause of action. Where the declaration in an action is ambiguous and the defendant pleads facts which are literally an answer to it, but not to the real claim set up by the plaintiff, the plaintiff's course is to reply by way of new assignment; that is, to allege that he brought his action, not for the cause supposed by the defendant, but for some other cause, to which the plea has no application." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 214, at 370 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

assignment for the benefit of creditors. Assignment of a debtor's property to another person in trust so as to consolidate and liquidate the debtor's assets for payment to creditors, any surplus being returned to the debtor. • This procedure serves as a state-law substitute for federal bankruptcy proceedings. The debtor is not discharged from unpaid debts by this procedure since creditors do not agree to any discharge.

assignment of error. A specification of the trial court's alleged errors on which the appellant relies in seeking an appellate court's reversal, vacation, or modification of an adverse judgment. Pl. assignments of error. See ERROR. Cf. WRIT OF ERROR.

assignment of income. See assignment of wages under ASSIGNMENT (2).

assignment of lease. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

assignment-of-rents clause. A mortgage provision or separate agreement that entitles the lender to collect rents from the mortgaged premises if the borrower defaults.

assignment of rights. Contracts. The transfer of rights from a party to a contract to a third party.

assignment of wages. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

assignment pro tanto. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

assignor (as-ə-nor or ə-si-nər or ə-si-nor). One who transfers property rights or powers to another. — Also spelled assigner.

assignor estoppel. See ESTOPPEL.

assisa armorum (ə-si-zə ahr-mor-əm). [Law Latin "assize of arms"] Hist. A statute requiring the keeping of arms for the common defense.

assisa cadere (ə-si-zə kad-ə-ree), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To fail in the assize, as by being nonsuited.

assisa continuanda (ə-si-zə kən-tin-yoo-an-də) [Law Latin] Hist. A writ addressed to the justices of assize for the continuation of a case.

assisa de foresta (ə-si-zə dee for-es-tə), n. [Law Latin "assize of the forest"] Hist. A statute concerning orders to be observed in the royal forest. — Also termed ordinatio forestae; assisa forestae.

assisa de mensuris (ə-si-zə dee men-s[y]oor-is), n. [Law Latin "assize of measures"] Hist. A common rule for weights and measures, established by Richard I in the eighth year of his reign.

assisa de morte antecessoris. See assize of mort d'ancestor under ASSIZE (6).

assisa de nocumento (ə-si-zə dee nok-yə-men-toh), n. [Law Latin "assize of nuisance"]. See assize of nuisance under ASSIZE (8).

assisa de utrum (ə-si-zə dee yoo-trəm), n. [Law Latin "assize of utrum"] See ASSIZE UTRUM.

assisa forestae. See ASSISA DE FORESTAE.

assisa friscaie fortiae. See assize of fresh force under ASSIZE (7).

assisa mortis d'ancestoris (ə-si-zə mor-tis dan-ses-tor-is), n. [Law Latin] See assize of mort d'ancestor under ASSIZE (6).

assisa novae disseysinae (ə-si-zə noh-vee di-see-zin-ee), n. [Law Latin] See ASSIZE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN.

assisa panis et cerevisiae (ə-si-zə pan-is et ser-ə-vish-ee-ee), n. [Law Latin "assize of bread and ale"] Hist. A statute passed in the 51st year of the reign of Henry III, regulating the sale of bread and ale. — Also termed statute of bread and ale.

assisa proroganda. See DE ASSISA PROROGANDA.

assisa ultimae praesentationis (ə-si-zə əl-tim-ee pree-zən-tay-shee-oh-nis or prez-ən-), n. [Law Latin] See assize of darrein presentment under ASSIZE (7).

assisa venalium (ə-si-zə və-nay-lee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The assize of salable commodities.

assise. See ASSIZE.

assiser. See ASSIZER.

assistance, writ of. See WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.

assistance of counsel. Representation by a lawyer, esp. in a criminal case. See RIGHT TO COUNSEL.

effective assistance of counsel. A conscientious, meaningful legal representation, whereby the defendant is advised of all rights and the lawyer is given reasonable opportunity to perform assigned tasks.

ineffective assistance of counsel. A representation in which the lawyer cannot devote full effort to the defendant, usu. because of a conflict of interest.

"The Sixth Amendment right to assistance of counsel has been held to imply the 'right to the effective assistance of counsel.' The Court has often said that the converse — ineffective assistance of counsel — is a constitutional denial of the Sixth Amendment right, even if the lawyer has been retained by rather than appointed for the defendant. 'Ineffective' does not necessarily mean incompetent or unprepared; it means an inability to perform as an independent lawyer devoted to the defendant. . . . However, counsel's assistance is not necessarily ineffective because the lawyer made mistakes. Only very serious errors, such as would likely have produced an entirely different outcome at trial, will suffice to require a new trial." Jethro K. Lieberman, The Evolving Constitution 263–64 (1992).

assisted self-determination. See assisted suicide under SUICIDE.

assisted suicide. See SUICIDE.

assize (ə-siz), n. 1. A session of a court or council.

maiden assize. Hist. 1. An assize in which no prisoner is sentenced. 2. An assize in which the sheriff presents the judges with white gloves because there are no prisoners to try. • This practice stemmed from a custom in which a prisoner who was convicted of murder but pardoned by the Crown presented gloves to the judges as a fee.

2. A law enacted by such a body, usu. one setting the measure, weight, or price of a thing.

Assize of Clarendon (klar-ən-dən). Hist. A decree issued in 1166 by Henry II to the justices in eyre and sheriffs concerning criminal procedure. • The Assize expanded the reach of the king's courts by asserting royal jurisdiction over serious crimes. See CONSTITUTIONS OF CLARENDON.

Assize of Northampton. Hist. A decree issued in 1176 by Henry II as an expansion and reissue of the Assize of Clarendon, instructing judges esp. on questions of tenure, relief, and dower.

3. The procedure provided for by such an enactment. 4. The court that hears cases involving that procedure. 5. A jury.

grand assize. (often cap.) A sworn panel summoned by judicial writ to resolve disputes concerning real property. • Henry II instituted the Grand Assize in the 12th century as an alternative to trial by battle. — Also termed magna assisa.

petite assize. A jury convened to decide questions of possession.

6. A jury trial.

assize of mort d'ancestor (mor[t] dan-ses-tar). An action for the recovery of land belonging to the claimant's ancestor. • Mort d'ancestor was abolished in the early 19th century. — Also termed assisa mortis d'ancestoris; assisa de morte antecessoris.

judicial assize. An assize begun by judicial writ and deriving from pleas of gage, mort d'ancestor, and darrein presentment.

petty assize. An assize begun by an original writ. • Petty assizes were characterized by the form of the writ, which specified the questions to be put to the panel, and ordered that a panel be assembled. The petty assizes were novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, utrum, and darrein presentment.

"The word 'Assisa' means originally the sitting of a court or assembly. It then comes to denote the things done, the enactments passed, at such a court or assembly. Thus we speak of the Assize of Clarendon, or the Assize of Northampton. Certain of these enactments in Henry II's reign introduced a new procedure for the trial of questions as to the ownership or possession of lands held by free tenure. The Grand Assize introduced this new procedure for the determination of questions of ownership; the possessory assizes for the determination of question of possession." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 275 (7th ed. 1956).

7. A jury's finding. 8. A writ. — Also spelled assise; assisa.

assize of darrein presentment (dar-ayn pri-zen-t-mənt), n. [fr. French dernier présentation "last presentment"] Hist. A writ of assize allowing a person with a right of advowson that has been disturbed by another claimant to have a jury determine who had the last right to present a clerk to a benefice and then to allow that person to present again and to recover damages for interference. • This was abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act of 1833 and was replaced by the quare impedit action. — Also termed darreign presentment; assize of last presentation; assisa ultimae praesentationis; assize de ultima presentatione. — Also spelled darreign. See ADVOWSON; QUARE IMPEDIT.

"An assise of darrein presentment, or last presentation, lies when a man, or his ancestors, under whom he claims, have presented a clerk to a benefice, who is instituted; and afterwards upon the next avoidance a stranger presents a clerk, and thereby disturbs him that is the real patron. In which case the patron shall have this writ, directed to the sheriff to summon an assise or jury, to enquire who was the last patron that presented to the church now vacant, of which the plaintiff complains that he is deformed by the defendant: and, according as the assise determines that question, a writ shall issue to the bishop; to institute the clerk of that patron, in whose favour the determination is made, and also to give damages . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 245 (1768).

"[A]t some time or another during his reign Henry gave a possessory action, the assize of darrein presentment . . . which stands to the writ of right of advowson in somewhat the same relation as that in which the novel disseisin stands to the writ of right for land. If the church is vacant and two persons are quarrelling about the advowson, it is very necessary that some provisional, some possessory judgment should be given . . . The principle of the new assize is, simply stated, this: 'He who presented last time, let him present this time also; but this without prejudice to any question of right.' An inquest of neighbours is summoned to declare who it was that presented the last parson." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 148–49 (2d ed. 1898).

assize of fresh force. Hist. A writ available in urban areas to disseise another's land. •

This writ is so called because it was available only within the first 40 days after title accrued to the person seeking it. — Also termed assisa friscaë fortiaë.

assize of novel disseisin. Hist. A writ for a tenant who has been disseised of lands and tenements. — Also termed assisa novae disseisinae.

assize of nuisance. Hist. A judicial writ directing a sheriff of the county where an alleged nuisance occurred to summon a jury to view the premises and do justice. • A successful plaintiff is entitled to abate the nuisance and recover damages. — Also termed assisa de nocumento.

assizer, n. Hist. 1. A member of a grand assize. See grand assize under ASSIZE (5). 2. Scots law. A juror. 3. One having custody of the standards of weight and measure; esp., one who fixes the assize of bread, ale, and other items of general consumption. — Also spelled assizor; assiser; assisor.

Assizes de Jerusalem (ə-siz-əz də jə-roo-sə-ləm). A code of feudal law intended to serve as the law of the lands conquered by the Crusaders. • The code was prepared in the 12th century after the 1099 conquest of Jerusalem.

assize utrum (yoo-trəm). [Latin] Hist. A writ to determine whether land claimed by a church was a lay or spiritual tenure. • This writ is named after its emphatic word, which required the fact-finder to determine whether (utrum) the land belonged to the church. — Also termed (erroneously) assize of utrum.

"In the assize utrum a jury was summoned to decide whether land was held by lay or spiritual tenure — a preliminary question to any litigation about it, for the Church claimed jurisdiction over spiritual land. Later the Church was to lose this jurisdiction, and the assize utrum became the parson's substitute for the writ of right. This curious development was brought about in this way. A parson could not use the writs of right, for, like a life tenant, he could not trace his title back to the seisin of an ancestor. The assize utrum could be made to serve the parson, however, for the question asked in the writ was whether certain land in a parish was 'the free alms of the Church of X.' If the answer was 'yes,' then it followed that it was the parson of the parish's land." Brian Simpson, An Introduction to the History of the Land Law 30–31 (1961).

"[T]he 'assize utrum' . . . is important as being the first instance known to us of the general use of the royal procedure by way of inquest in a matter of private litigation. If the answer of the inquest was that this land was held in frankalmoign, then the case went to the ecclesiastical court; if that it was lay fee, then to the appropriate lay tribunal. In the course of the thirteenth century the ecclesiastical courts lost their jurisdiction over land held by spiritual tenure, and the 'assize utrum' came to be used not as a merely preliminary procedure but as a mode of deciding in royal courts a question of title to glebe land." Geoffrey Radcliffe & Geoffrey Cross, The English Legal System 33-34 (G.J. Hand & D.J. Bentley eds., 6th ed. 1977).

associate, n. 1. A colleague or companion. 2. A junior member of an organization or profession; esp., a lawyer in a law firm, usu. with fewer than a certain number of years in practice, who may, upon achieving the requisite seniority, receive an offer to become a partner or shareholder. 3. English law. An officer of a common-law court responsible for maintaining the court's records, attending jury trials, and entering verdicts. • In 1894, associates' duties were taken over by the staff of the Central Office. See CLERK OF ASSIZE; CENTRAL OFFICE.

associated person. Securities. 1. A partner, officer, director, branch manager of a broker or dealer, or any person performing similar functions or occupying a similar status, any person directly or indirectly controlling, controlled by, or under common control with the broker or dealer, or any employee of the broker or dealer — with two exceptions: (1) those whose functions are solely clerical or ministerial, and (2) those required to register under state law as a broker or dealer solely because they are issuers of securities. 2. A natural person who is a partner, officer, director, or employee of: (1) the issuer; (2) a general partner of a limited partnership issuer; (3) a company or partnership that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the issuer; or (4) a registered investment adviser to a registered investment company issuer.

associate judge. See JUDGE.

association. 1. The process of mentally collecting ideas, memories, or sensations. 2. A gathering of people for a common purpose; the persons so joined. 3. An unincorporated business organization that is not a legal entity separate from the persons who compose it. • If an association has sufficient corporate attributes, such as centralized management, continuity of existence, and limited liability, it may be classified and taxed as a corporation. — Also termed unincorporated association; voluntary association.

benevolent association. An unincorporated, nonprofit organization that has a philanthropic or charitable purpose. — Also termed beneficial association, benefit association, benevolent society, fraternal society, friendly society.

homeowners' association. 1. An association of people who own homes in a given area and have united to improve or maintain the area's quality. 2. An association formed by a land developer or homebuilder to manage and maintain property in which they own an undivided, common interest. • Homeowners' associations — which are regulated by statute in many states — are commonly formed by restrictive covenant or a declaration of restrictions. — Also spelled homeowners association.

professional association. 1. A group of professionals organized to practice their profession together, though not necessarily in corporate or partnership form. 2. A group of professionals organized for education, social activity, or lobbying, such as a bar association. — Abbr. P.A.

trade association. An association of business organizations having similar concerns and engaged in similar fields, formed for mutual protection, the interchange of ideas and statistics, and the establishment and maintenance of industry standards. • A trade association may be composed of members of a single industry (e.g., the Chemical Manufacturers Association) or members having a common interest or purpose (e.g., the Consumer Mortgage Coalition). Among the joint actions that a trade association often takes are collecting industry data, advertising, marketing, and engaging in public relations and government relations.

association-in-fact enterprise. Under RICO, a group of people or entities that have not formed a legal entity, but that have a common or shared purpose, and maintain an ongoing organizational structure through which the associates function as a continuing unit. • A RICO violation is not shown merely by proving that an enterprise, including an association-in-fact, exists. A pattern of racketeering activity must also be proved. 18 USCA § 1961(4); United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 101 S.Ct. 2524 (1981).

Association of American Law Schools. An organization of law schools that have each graduated at least three annual classes of students. — Abbr. AALS.

assoil (ə-soyl), vb. [Law French] Hist. To acquit or absolve; to deliver from excommunication. — Also spelled assoile. — Also termed absoile; assoilye.

assultus premeditatus. See assault purpensé under ASSAULT.

assumed bond. See guaranteed bond under BOND (3).

assumed name. 1. ALIAS (1). 2. The name under which a business operates or by which it is commonly known <Antex Corporation's assumed name is Computer Warehouse>. • Many states require an individual or business operating under an assumed name to file an assumed-name certificate, usu. in the secretary of state's office or the county clerk's office where the principal place of business is located. See D/B/A. Cf. corporate name under NAME.

assumpsit (ə-səm[p]-sit). [Law Latin "he undertook"] 1. An express or implied promise, not under seal, by which one person undertakes to do some act or pay something to another <an assumpsit to pay a debt>. 2. A common-law action for breach of such a promise or for breach of a contract <the creditor's assumpsit against the debtor>.

"It was early known as 'trespass on the case upon promises,' but in time came to be designated assumpsit (he assumed or promised), and lies for damages for breach of all contracts, parol or simple, whether written or verbal, express or implied." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 9-10 (2d ed. 1899).

"In its origin an action of tort, [assumpsit] was soon transformed into an action of contract, becoming afterwards a remedy where there was neither tort nor contract. Based at first only upon an express promise, it was afterwards supported upon an implied promise, and even upon a fictitious promise. Introduced as a special manifestation of the action on the case, it soon acquired the dignity of a distinct form of action, which superseded Debt, became concurrent with Account, with Case upon a bailment, a warranty, and bills of exchange, and competed with Equity in the case of the essentially equitable quasi-contracts growing out of the principle of unjust enrichment. Surely, it would be hard to find a better illustration of the flexibility and power of self-development of the Common Law." James Barr Ames, "The History of Assumpsit," in 3 Select Essays in Anglo-American Legal History 298 (1909).

general assumpsit. An action based on the defendant's breach of an implied promise to pay a debt to the plaintiff. — Also termed common assumpsit; indebitatus assumpsit.

"General assumpsit is brought for breach of a fictitious or implied promise raised by law from a debt founded upon an executed consideration. The basis of the action is the promise implied by law from the performance of the consideration, or from a debt or legal duty resting upon the defendant." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 59, at 153 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

indebitatus assumpsit (in-deb-i-tay-təs ə-səm[p]-sit). [Latin "being indebted, he undertook"] 1. Hist. A form of action in which the plaintiff alleges that the defendant contracted a debt and, as consideration, had undertaken (i.e., promised) to pay. • The action was equivalent to the common-law action for debt (an action based on a sealed instrument), but could be used to enforce an oral debt. Indebitatus assumpsit was abolished in 1873 by the Judicature Act. See CONCESSIT SOLVERE. 2. See general assumpsit.

"[I]f I verbally agree to pay a man a certain price for a certain parcel of goods, and fail in the performance, an action of debt lies against me; for this is a determinate contract: but if I agree for no settled price, I am not liable to an action of debt, but a special action on the case, according to the nature of my contract. And indeed actions of debt are now seldom brought but upon special contracts under seal . . . [T]he plaintiff must recover the whole debt he claims, or nothing at all. For the debt is one single cause of action, fixed and determined; and which therefore, if the proof varies from the claim, cannot be looked upon as the same . . . action of debt. . . . But in an action on the case, on what is called an indebitatus assumpsit, which is not brought to compel a specific performance of the contract, but to recover damages for its non-performance, the implied assumpsit, and consequently the damages for the breach of it, are in their nature indeterminate; and will therefore adapt and proportion themselves to the truth of the case which shall be proved, without being confined to the precise demand stated in the declaration." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 154 (1768).

special assumpsit. An action based on the defendant's breach of an express contract. — Also termed express assumpsit.

"Special assumpsit lies for the recovery of damages for the breach of simple contract, either express or implied in fact. The term 'special contract' is often used to denote an express or explicit contract as contrasted with a promise implied in law." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 58, at 148 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

assumption, n. 1. A fact or statement taken for granted; a supposition . 2. The act of taking (esp. someone else's debt or other obligation) for or on oneself; the agreement to so take <assumption of a debt>. — assume, vb.

implied assumption. The imposition of personal liability on a land purchaser who buys subject to a mortgage and who deducts the mortgage amount from the purchase price, so that the purchaser is treated as having assumed the debt.

assumption clause. 1. A mortgage provision that prohibits another from assuming the mortgage without the permission of the mortgagee. 2. A provision by which the transferee of an instrument agrees to assume an obligation of the transferor.

assumption fee. A lender's charge for processing records for a new buyer's assumption of an existing mortgage.

assumption of the risk. Torts. 1. The act or an instance of a prospective plaintiff's taking on the risk of loss, injury, or damage <the skydiver's assumption of the risk>. — Also termed assumption of risk.

"[Assumption of risk] has been a subject of much controversy, and has been surrounded by much confusion, because 'assumption of risk' has been used by the courts in several different senses, which traditionally have been lumped together under the one name, often without realizing that any differences exist. There are even courts which have limited the use of the term 'assumption of risk' to cases in which the parties stand in the relation of master and servant, or at least some other contractual relation; but they have been compelled to invent other names for other cases, such as 'incurred risk,' or 'volenti non fit injuria.' This appears to be largely a distinction without a difference; and most courts have made general use of the one term. . . . In its most basic sense, assumption of risk means that the plaintiff, in advance, has given his express consent to relieve the defendant of an obligation of conduct toward him, and to take his chances of injury from a known risk arising from what the defendant is to do or leave undone." W. Page Keeton et al., The Law of Torts § 68, at 480-81 (5th ed. 1984).

assurance, n. 1. Something that gives confidence; the state of being confident or secure <self-assurance>. 2. A pledge or guarantee <adequate assurances of the borrower's solvency>. 3. The act of transferring real property; the instrument by which it is transferred <the owner's assurance of the farm to his son>. 4. English law. See life insurance under INSURANCE <she obtained assurance before traveling abroad, naming her husband as the beneficiary>. — assure, vb.

collateral assurance. A pledge made in addition to the principal assurance of an agreement.

common assurance. See MUNIMENT OF TITLE.

further assurance. A covenant contained in a warranty deed whereby the grantor promises to execute any document that might be needed in the future to perfect the title that the original deed purported to transfer.

assured, n. Insurance. One who is indemnified against loss; INSURED.

assurer. See INSURER.

attachamenta bonorum (ə-tach-ee-ə-men-tə bə-nor-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A distress taken on goods and chattels by bailiffs, as security to answer an action for debt.

attachiamentum (ə-tach-ee-ə-men-təm), n.
[Law Latin] An attachment. Pl. attachiamenta.

attaching creditor. See CREDITOR.

attachment. 1. The seizing of a person's property to secure a judgment or to be sold in satisfaction of a judgment. — Also termed (in civil law) provisional seizure. Cf. GARNISHMENT; SEQUESTRATION (1).

attachment of wages. The attachment by a plaintiff of a defendant's earnings as an employee. • In some jurisdictions, an attachment-of-earnings order requires the defendant's employer to deduct a specified sum from the defendant's wages or salary and to pay the money into court. The court then sends the money to the plaintiff. — Also termed attachment of earnings. Cf. GARNISH-MENT.

provisional attachment. A prejudgment attachment in which the debtor's property is seized so that if the creditor ultimately prevails, the creditor will be assured of recovering on the judgment through the sale of the seized property. • Ordinarily, a hearing must be held before the attachment takes place, and most courts require the creditor to post a bond for any damages that result from the seizure (esp. if the creditor ultimately loses in the lawsuit).

2. The arrest of a person who either is in contempt of court or is to be held as security for the payment of a judgment. 3. A writ ordering legal seizure of property (esp. to satisfy a creditor's claim) or of a person. — Also termed writ of attachment.

ancillary attachment. An attachment that results in seizure and holding of property pending a resolution of the plaintiff's claim.

4. The creation of a security interest in property, occurring when the debtor agrees to the security, receives value from the secured party, and obtains rights in the collateral. UCC § 9-203. Cf. PERFECTION. 5. The act of affixing or connecting; something (as a document) that is affixed or connected to something else.

attachment bond. See BOND (2).

attachment of earnings. See *attachment of

attachment of risk. The point when the risk of loss of purchased goods passes from the seller to the buyer. UCC § 2-509.

attainder (ə-tayn-dər), n. At common law, the act of extinguishing a person's civil rights when sentenced to death or declared an outlaw for committing a felony or treason. — attaint (ətaynt), vb. See BILL OF ATTAINDER.

"The word attainder is derived from the Latin term attinctus, signifying stained or polluted, and includes, in its meaning, all those disabilities which flow from a capital sentence. On the attainder, the defendant is disqualified to be a witness in any court; he can bring no action, nor perform any of the legal functions which before he was admitted to discharge; he is, in short, regarded as dead in law." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 725 (2d ed. 1826).

attaint (ə-taynt), adj. Stained or blackened rep-utationally; under an attainder for crime.

attaint, n. Hist. A writ to inquire whether a 12-member jury gave a false verdict. • If it was so found (by a 24-member jury), the judgment based on the verdict was overturned. The writ was abolished in England in 1826.

attempt, n. 1. The act or an instance of making an effort to accomplish something, esp. without success. 2. Criminal law. An overt act that is done with the intent to commit a crime but that falls short of completing the crime. • Attempt is an inchoate offense distinct from the attempted crime. — Also termed (in sense 2) criminal attempt; offer. See DANGEROUS-PROXIM-ITY TEST; INDISPENSABLE-ELEMENT TEST; LAST-PROXIMATE-ACT TEST; PHYSICAL-PROXIMITY TEST; PROBABLE-DESISTANCE TEST. Cf. CONSPIRACY; SO-LICITATION (2). — attempt, vb.

"An attempt to commit an indictable offence is itself a crime. Every attempt is an act done with intent to commit the offence so attempted. The existence of this ulterior intent or motive is the essence of the attempt. . . . [Yet] [a]lthough every attempt is an act done with intent to commit a crime, the converse is not true.
Every act done with this intent is not an attempt, for it may be too remote from the completed offence to give rise to criminal liability, notwithstanding the criminal purpose of the doer. I may buy matches with intent to burn a haystack, and yet be clear of attempted arson; but if I go to the stack and there light one of the matches, my intent has developed into a criminal attempt." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 387 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"Attempt . . . is the most common of the preliminary crimes. It consists of steps taken in furtherance of an indictable offence which the person attempting intends to carry out if he can. As we have seen there can be a

attempted assault. See ASSAULT.

attempted monopolization. See MONOPOLIZATION.

attempted suicide. See SUICIDE.

attempt to assault. See attempted assault under ASSAULT.

attendance officer. See TRUANCY OFFICER.

attendant, adj. Accompanying; resulting <attendant circumstances>.

attendant term. See TERM (4).

attenuation doctrine (ə-ten-yə-way-shən). Criminal procedure. The rule providing — as an exception to the fruit-of-the-poisonous-tree doctrine — that evidence obtained by illegal means may nonetheless be admissible if the connection between the evidence and the illegal means is sufficiently attenuated or remote. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE.

atterminare (ə-tər-mi-nair-ee), vb. [Law Latin]
 1. To put off to a succeeding term; to adjourn.
 2. To prolong the time to pay a debt.

atterminement (ə-tər-min-mənt). The granting of a delay for some purpose; esp., the extension of time to pay a debt.

attermoient (at-ər-moy-ə-mənt). [Law French] Eccles. law. COMPOSITION (1).

attest (ə-test), vb. 1. To bear witness; testify <attest to the defendant's innocence>. 2. To affirm to be true or genuine; to authenticate by signing as a witness <attest the will>. — attestation (a-te-stay-shən), n. — attestative (ə-tes-tə-tiv), adj.

attestation clause. A provision at the end of an instrument (esp. a will) that is signed by the instrument's witnesses and that recites the formalities required by the jurisdiction in which the instrument might take effect (such as where the will might be probated). ● The attestation strengthens the presumption that all the statutory requirements for executing the will have been satisfied. Cf. TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE.

attested copy. See certified copy under COPY.

attester (ə-tes-tər). One who attests or vouches for. — Also spelled attestant; attestator; attestor.

attesting witness. See WITNESS.

at the bar. See AT BAR.

at the courthouse door. (Of the posting of a notice of judicial sale, etc.) on the courthouse door, or in direct proximity to the door, as on a bulletin board that is located just outside the door and that is regularly used for the posting of legal notices. ● Some statutes may specify that the notice be actually posted on the door. See POSTING (5).

attorn (ə-törn), vb. 1. To agree to be the tenant of a new landlord. 2. To transfer (money, goods, etc.) to another.

attornatus (at-ər-nay-təs). [Law Latin] One who is attorned, or put in the place of another; an attorney.

attorney. 1. Strictly, one who is designated to transact business for another; a legal agent. — Also termed attorney-in-fact; private attorney. 2. A person who practices law; LAWYER. — Also termed (in sense 2) attorney-at-law; public attorney. Cf. COUNSEL. — Abbr. att'y. Pl. attorneys.

attorney-at-law. See ATTORNEY (2).

attorney-client privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

attorney fees. See ATTORNEY'S FEES.

attorney general. The chief law officer of a state or of the United States, responsible for advising the government on legal matters and representing it in litigation. — Abbr. AG. Pl. attorneys general.

attorney general's opinion. 1. An opinion furnished by the U.S. Attorney General to the President or another executive official on a request concerning a question of law. 2. A written opinion by a state attorney general, usu. given at the request of a public official, interpreting a legal provision.

attorney in charge. See lead counsel under COUNSEL.

attorney-in-fact. See ATTORNEY (1).

attorney malpractice. See legal malpractice under MALPRACTICE.

attorney of record. The lawyer who appears for a party in a lawsuit and who is entitled to receive, on the party's behalf, all pleadings and other formal documents from the court and from other parties. — Also termed counsel of record. See OF RECORD (1).

attorney's fees. The charge to a client for services performed for the client, such as an hourly fee, a flat fee, or a contingent fee. — Also spelled attorneys' fees. — Also termed attorney fees. Cf. RETAINER (2).

attorney's lien. See LIEN.

attorney-witness rule. See LAWYER-WITNESS RULE.

attorney work product. See WORK PRODUCT.

attornment (ə-törn-mənt), n. 1. A tenant's agreement to hold the land as the tenant of a new landlord. 2. A constructive delivery involving the transfer of mediate possession while a third person has immediate possession; esp., a bailee's acknowledgment that he or she will hold the goods on behalf of someone other than the bailor. • For the other two types of constructive delivery, see CONSTITUTUM POSSESSORIUM; TRADITIO BREVI MANU. — attorn, vb.

"[Another] form of constructive delivery is that which is known to English lawyers as attornment. . . . The mediate possessor of a thing may deliver it by procuring the immediate possessor to agree with the transferee to hold it for the future on his account, instead of on account of the transferor. Thus if I have goods in the warehouse of A and sell them to B, I have effectually delivered them to B so soon as A has agreed with B to hold them for him, and no longer for me." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 306-07 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

attractive nuisance. See NUISANCE.

attractive-nuisance doctrine. Torts. The rule that a person who owns property on which there is a dangerous thing or condition that will foreseeably lure children to trespass is under a duty to protect those children from the danger <the attractive-nuisance doctrine imposed a duty on the school to protect the children from the shallow, polluted pond on school property>. — Also termed turntable doctrine; torpedo doctrine. See DANGEROUS INSTRUMENTALITY.

attribution, n. The process — outlined in the Internal Revenue Code — by which a person's or entity's stock ownership is assigned to a related family member or entity for tax purposes. — Also termed stock attribution. — attribute, vb. — attributive, adj.

at will. Subject to one's discretion; as one wishes or chooses; esp. (of a legal relationship), able to be terminated or discharged by either party without cause <employment at will>.

at-will employment. See employment at will under EMPLOYMENT.

at-will tenancy. See tenancy at will under TENANCY.

Atwood doctrine. The principle that, to the extent an ERISA plan and its summary-plan description conflict regarding the circumstances under which benefits may be denied, the summary-plan description controls. Atwood v. Newmont Gold Co., 45 F.3d 1317 (9th Cir. 1995); 29 USCA § 1022. See SUMMARY-PLAN DESCRIPTION.

au besoin (oh bæ-zwan). [French "in case of need"] A designation in a bill of exchange stating who is responsible for payment if the drawee fails or refuses to pay. • Au besion is part of the phrase au besion, chez Messrs. Garnier et DuCloux (meaning "in case of need, apply to Messrs. Garnier and DuCloux").

A.U.C. abbr. AB URBE CONDITA.

auction, n. A sale of property to the highest bidder. • Under the UCC, a sale at auction is complete when the auctioneer so announces in a customary manner, as by pounding a hammer. — Also termed auction sale. — auction, vb.

auction without reserve. An auction in which the property will be sold to the highest bidder, no minimum price will limit bidding, the owner may not withdraw property after the first bid is received, the owner may not reject any bids, and the owner may not nullify the bidding by outbidding all other bidders. • In an auction without reserve, the owner essentially becomes an offeror, and each successively higher bid creates a contingent contract, with the highest bid creating an enforceable agreement. — Also termed absolute auction. See WITHOUT RESERVE.

auction with reserve. An auction in which the property will not be sold unless the highest bid exceeds a minimum price. See WITH RESERVE.

Dutch auction. 1. An auction in which property is initially offered at an excessive price that is gradually lowered until the property is sold. 2. A method of tendering stock shares, by which a corporation provides a price range, shareholders indicate how many shares they will sell and at what price, and the corporation buys however many shares it wants at the lowest prices offered. — Also termed Dutch-auction tender method.

auctioneer, n. A person legally authorized to sell goods or lands of other persons at public auction for a commission or fee. • The auctioneer is the property owner's agent up to the moment when a purchaser's bid is accepted, when the auctioneer becomes the purchaser's agent. — Formerly also termed vendue master.

auction market. See MARKET.

auction sale. See AUCTION.

audience, n. A hearing before judges. See RIGHT OF AUDIENCE.

audit, n. A formal examination of an individual's or organization's accounting records, financial situation, or compliance with some other set of standards. — audit, vb. — auditor, n. See GENERALLY ACCEPTED AUDITING STANDARDS.

audit of return. See tax audit.

compliance audit. An audit conducted by a regulatory agency, an organization, or a third party to assess compliance with one or more sets of laws and regulations.

correspondence audit. An IRS audit of a taxpayer's return conducted by mail or telephone.

desk audit. A review of a civil-service position to determine whether its duties and responsibilities fit the prescribed job classification and pay scale.

field audit. An IRS audit conducted at the taxpayer's business premises or lawyer's offices.

independent audit. An audit conducted by an outside person or firm not connected with the person or organization being audited.

internal audit. An audit performed by an organization's personnel to ensure that internal procedures, operations, and accounting practices are in proper order.

office audit. An IRS audit of a taxpayer's return conducted in the IRS agent's office.

post audit. An audit of funds spent on a completed capital project, the purpose being to assess the efficiency with which the funds were spent and to compare expected cash-flow estimates with actual cash flows.

tax audit. The review of a taxpayer's return by the IRS, including an examination of the taxpayer's books, vouchers, and records supporting the return. — Also termed audit of return.

audita querela (aw-dī-tə kwə-ree-lə). [Law Latin "the complaint having been heard"] A writ available to a judgment debtor who seeks a rehearing of a matter on grounds of newly discovered evidence or newly existing legal defenses.

"The writ of audita querela (= quarrel having been heard) . . . , introduced during the time of Edward III, was available to re-open a judgment in certain circumstances. It was issued as a remedy to defendant where an important matter concerning his case had arisen since the judgment. Its issue was based on equitable, rather than common law principles." L.B. Curzon, English Legal History 103 (2d ed. 1979).

"Audita querela is distinguished from coram nobis in that coram nobis attacks the judgment itself, whereas audita querela may be directed against the enforcement, or further enforcement, of a judgment which when rendered was just and unimpeachable." 7A C.J.S. Audita Querela § 2, at 901 (1930).

audit letter. A client's written request for its attorney to give its financial auditors information about matters such as pending or threatened litigation. • The attorney usu. sends the response (called an audit response) directly to the financial auditors. See AUDIT RESPONSE.

audit-letter response. See AUDIT RESPONSE.

audit of return. See tax audit under AUDIT.

audit opinion. See OPINION (2).

auditor. A person or firm, usu. an accountant or an accounting firm, that formally examines an individual's or entity's financial records or status.

county auditor. An official who examines a county's accounts and financial records.

audit report. An outside auditor's written statement, usu. accompanying a company's financial statement, expressing the auditor's opinion of the accuracy of the company's financial condition as set forth in the financial statement.

audit response. A letter that an attorney provides to a client's financial auditors, usu. at the client's request, regarding matters such as pending or threatened litigation. ● Audit responses should comply with the American Bar Association's Statement of Policy Regarding Lawyer's Responses to Auditors' Requests for Information, published in December 1975. — Also termed audit-letter response. See AUDIT LETTER.

audit trail. The chain of evidence connecting account balances to original transactions and calculations.

augmented estate. See ESTATE.

aula regis (aw-lə ree-jis). [Latin "king's hall"] Hist. See CURIA REGIS.

Aunt Jemima doctrine. Trademarks. The principle that a trademark is protected not only from an act of direct copying, but also from the use of any similar mark that would likely make a buyer think that the item bearing the similar mark comes from the same source as the trademarked item. Aunt Jemima Mills Co. v. Rigney & Co., 247 F. 407 (2d Cir. 1917); 15 USCA § 1114.

aural acquisition. Criminal law. Under the Federal Wiretapping Act, hearing or tape-recording a communication, as opposed to tracing its origin or destination. 18 USCA § 2510(4).

Australian ballot. See BALLOT (4).

authentic act. Civil law. 1. A writing signed before a notary public or other public officer. 2. A certified copy of a writing.

authenticate, vb. 1. To prove the genuineness of (a thing). 2. To render authoritative or authentic, as by attestation or other legal formality. See UCC § 9-102(a)(5).

authentication, n. 1. Broadly, the act of proving that something (as a document) is true or genuine, esp. so that it may be admitted as evidence; the condition of being so proved <authentication of the handwriting>. 2. Specif., the assent to or adoption of a writing as one's own.

self-authentication. Authentication without extrinsic evidence of truth or genuineness. ● In federal courts, certain writings, such as notarized documents and certified copies of public records, may be admitted into evidence by self-authentication. Fed. R. Evid. 902.

authentic interpretation. See INTERPRETATION.

authenticum (aw-then-tə-kəm). Roman & civil law. 1. An original instrument. 2. A collection of Justinian's laws from A.D. 535 to 556.

authoritative precedent. See binding precedent under PRECEDENT.

authority. 1. The right or permission to act legally on another's behalf; the power delegated by a principal to an agent <authority to sign the contract>. See AGENCY.

"The term 'authority,' like the term 'contract,' may easily be used in three senses, and is therefore a term to be avoided when accurate reasoning is desirable. It may be used to mean (1) the operative acts of the principal, (2) a physical document executed by the principal, or (3) the legal relations consequent upon the preceding operative facts (1) and (2), and especially the legal power conferred upon the agent to bring the principal into new legal relations without any further action by the principal. The operative facts may be spoken words, a document together with the acts necessary to execute it, or other conduct by the principal apparently expressing an intention to create a power. Hereafter, the word 'authority' will be used to denote these operative facts; in other cases the word power will usually be substituted. This latter word is not so likely to be taken in shifting senses, in spite of the fact that 'power of attorney' generally means a physical document under seal." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 508 n.1 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

actual authority. Authority that a principal intentionally confers on an agent, including the authority that the agent reasonably believes he or she has as a result of the agent's dealings with the principal. ● Actual authority can be either express or implied. — Also termed real authority.

"Actual authority is such as a principal intentionally confers upon the agent, or intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, allows the agent to believe himself to possess." Cal. Civ. Code § 2316.

apparent authority. Authority that a third party reasonably believes an agent has, based on the third party's dealings with the principal. • Apparent authority can be created by law even when no actual authority has been conferred. — Also termed ostensible authority; authority by estoppel.

"The term 'apparent authority' means that a legal power is vested in the agent in the absence of any intention by the principal that it should exist, or even in spite of his intention that it should not exist. The operative facts causing this power to exist are acts of the principal which, considered along with surrounding facts, induce the third person with whom the agent deals to believe reasonably that the principal intended the power to exist. The power is real and not merely apparent. The agent is indeed a wrongdoer in exercising the power. He possesses the power but not the legal privilege of using it. Likewise, the authority (meaning the action of the principal creating the agent's power) is real. It is only the intention of the principal to create such a power that is merely apparent (i.e., non-existent)." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 510 n.1 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"'Apparent authority' of an insurance agent means such authority as an insurer knowingly permits the agent to assume, or which it holds him out as possessing, that is, such authority as he appears to have by reason of actual authority or such authority as a reasonably prudent man would suppose the agent to possess." John Alan Appleman & Jean Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice § 8674 (1981).

authority coupled with an interest. Authority given to an agent for valuable consideration. • This authority cannot be unilaterally terminated by the principal.

constructive authority. Authority that is inferred because of an earlier grant of authority.

express authority. Authority given to the agent by explicit agreement, either orally or in writing. — Also termed stipulated authority.

general authority. A general agent's authority, intended to apply to all matters arising in the course of business.

implied authority. Authority given to the agent as a result of the principal's conduct, such as the principal's earlier acquiescence to the agent's actions. — Also termed presumptive authority.

incidental authority. Authority needed to carry out actual or apparent authority. • For example, the actual authority to borrow money includes the incidental authority to sign commercial paper to bring about the loan. — Also termed inferred authority.

inherent authority. Authority of an agent arising from the agency relationship.

naked authority. Authority delegated solely for the principal's benefit, without giving any consideration to the agent. • This authority can be revoked by the principal at any time.

ostensible authority. See apparent authority.

presumptive authority. See implied authority.

real authority. See actual authority.

special authority. Authority limited to an individual transaction.

stipulated authority. See express authority.

2. Governmental power or jurisdiction <within the court's authority>. 3. A governmental agency or corporation that administers a public enterprise <transit authority>. — Also termed public authority.

constituted authority. (often pl.) The legislative, executive, and judicial departments officially and rightfully governing a nation, people, municipality, or other governmental unit; an authority properly appointed or elected under organic law, such as a constitution or charter.

examining authority. A self-regulatory organization registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission and vested with the authority to examine, inspect, and otherwise oversee the activities of a registered broker or dealer.

4. A legal writing taken as definitive or decisive; esp., a judicial or administrative decision cited as a precedent <that case is good authority in Massachusetts>. • The term includes not only the decisions of tribunals but also statutes, ordinances, and administrative rulings.

adverse authority. Authority that is unfavorable to an advocate's position. • Most ethical codes require counsel to disclose adverse authority in the controlling jurisdiction even if the opposing counsel has not cited it.

imperative authority. Authority that is absolutely binding on a court. — Also termed binding authority. Cf. binding precedent under PRECEDENT.

persuasive authority. Authority that carries some weight but is not binding on a court.

"It may be well to call attention to the fact that the word 'authority' is used by lawyers in at least two senses, one abstract and the other concrete. The word [in its concrete sense] refer[s] to the book or other repository to which one resorts to find propositions of law, and sometimes the word is used in an even narrower sense to mean reported cases. In its abstract sense, however, 'authority' is substantially equivalent to 'influence' or 'power,' and in this sense 'authority' may be divided into two grades, in that the force of a statement of law is either imperative (that is to say, absolutely binding upon the courts) or simply persuasive. The use of the terms 'primary' and 'secondary' authority, as applied in the concrete sense, must not be confused with the use of the terms 'imperative' and 'persuasive' authority, as used in the abstract sense. That is to say, a book of primary authority may be either imperative or persuasive, according to the circumstances . . . , or it may be of no force at all. Books of secondary authority are, in the nature of things, usually merely of persuasive authority." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 12 (3d ed. 1914).

primary authority. Authority that issues directly from a law-making body; legislation and the reports of litigated cases.

secondary authority. Authority that explains the law but does not itself establish it, such as a treatise, annotation, or law-review article.

5. A source, such as a statute, case, or treatise, cited in support of a legal argument <the brief's table of authorities>.

authority by estoppel. See apparent authority under AUTHORITY (1).

authority coupled with an interest. See AUTHORITY (1).

authorize, vb. 1. To give legal authority; to empower <he authorized the employee to act for him>. 2. To formally approve; to sanction <the city authorized the construction project>. — authorization, n.

authorized capital. See nominal capital under CAPITAL.

authorized capital stock. See capital stock (1) under STOCK.

authorized committee. See SPECIAL LITIGATION COMMITTEE.

authorized shares. See capital stock (1) under STOCK.

authorized stock. See capital stock (1) under STOCK.

autocracy (aw-tok-rə-see), n. Government by one person with unlimited power and authority; unlimited monarchy. — autocratic (aw-tə-krat-ik), adj. — autocrat (aw-tə-krat), n.

autolimitation, n. An authority's establishment of rules that, in effect, limit the authority's own power. — autolimit, vb.

"The theory of Jellinek (Allgemeine Staatslehre), so far as the writer understands it, is not an explanation either. In his view something which he calls the State, not defined, but, as it seems, a group of persons, finds itself in possession of power, and establishes rules. These are the law. This process he calls 'autolimitation.' It is true that a body with supreme power does make law. An autocrat, man or group, without rules, may do justice, though it probably will not, but it does not make law — there is no Rechtsstaat. But autolimitation is, as Professor Brierly notes . . . , a contradiction in terms. If the State's power is limited, it must be by some superior power. But even accepting the analysis, we are no better off." W.W. Buckland, Some Reflections on Jurisprudence 24 (1945).

automated transaction. A contract formed or performed, in whole or in part, by electronic means or by electronic messages in which either party's electronic actions or messages establishing the contract are not intended to be reviewed in the ordinary course by an individual. UCC § 2A-102(a)(3).

automatic-adjustment clause. A provision in a utility-rate schedule that allows a public utility to increase its rates without a public hearing or state review, if certain operating costs, such as the price of fuel, increase. Federal Energy Regulatory Comm'n v. Mississippi, 456 U.S. 742, 102 S.Ct. 2126 (1982).

automatic perfection. See PERFECTION.

automatic stay. See STAY.

automatic suspension. See automatic stay under STAY.

automatism (aw-tom-ə-tiz-əm), n. 1. Action or conduct occurring without will, purpose, or reasoned intention, such as sleepwalking; behavior carried out in a state of unconsciousness or mental dissociation without full awareness. ● Automatism may be asserted as a defense to negate the requisite mental state of voluntariness for commission of a crime. 2. The state of a person who, though capable of action, is not conscious of his or her actions. — automaton, n.

"How far is automatism a defence? It has been defined as involuntary action performed in a state of unconsciousness not amounting to insanity. Theoretically the defence is that no act in the legal sense took place at all — the plea is that there was no volition or psychic awareness.” George Whitecross Paton, A Textbook of Jurisprudence 315 (G.W. Paton & David P. Derham eds., 4th ed. 1972).

ambulatory automatism. Automatism that consists in irresponsible or purposeless wanderings.

automobile exception. An exemption from the requirement of a search warrant, whereby the police may search a vehicle without a warrant when there is probable cause to suspect that the vehicle contains contraband or evidence of a crime. Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 45 S.Ct. 280 (1925); California v. Acevedo, 500 U.S. 565, 111 S.Ct. 1982 (1991).

automobile exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

automobile guest statute. See GUEST STATUTE.

automobile insurance. See INSURANCE.

autonomic law (aw-tə-nom-ik). The type of enacted law that has its source in various forms of subordinate and restricted legislative authority possessed by private persons and bodies of persons. • Examples are corporate bylaws, university regulations, and the rules of the International Monetary Fund.

autonomous tariff. See TARIFF (2).

autonomy (aw-tahn-ə-mee), n. 1. The right of self-government. 2. A self-governing state. — autonomous (aw-tahn-ə-məs), adj.

autopsy (aw-top-see). 1. An examination of a dead body to determine the cause of death, esp. in a criminal investigation. — Also termed post-mortem; necropsy. 2. The evidence of one's own senses.

“To a rational man of perfect organization, . . . the best and highest proof of which any fact is susceptible is the evidence of his own senses. Hence autopsy, or the evidence of one's own senses, furnishes the strongest probability and indeed the only perfect and indubitable certainty of the existence of any sensible fact.” Gentry v. McMinnis, 3 Dana 382 (1835) (as quoted in John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 214 (1935)).

autoptic evidence (aw-top-tik). See demonstrative evidence under EVIDENCE.

autoptic preference (proh-fər-ənts). The presentation of an item for inspection by the court. See demonstrative evidence under EVIDENCE.

“Yet another form of proof that may present difficulties in defining evidence is what Wigmore calls ‘autoptic preference.’ By this barbarism, the learned author was referring to those few cases in which it is possible to bring before the jury the material fact itself, rather than evidence of the fact.” 22 Charles Alan Wright & Kenneth W. Graham, Jr., Federal Practice and Procedure § 5163, at 33 (1978).

autre action pendant (oh-trə ak-see-awn pah-n-dahn). [Law French] Another action pending. • This phrase was formerly used in pleas of abatement.

autre droit (oh-trə drwah). [Law French] In right of another. • This phrase describes the manner in which a trustee holds property for a beneficiary.

autrefois (oh-trə-fwah or oh-tər-foyz). [Law French] On another occasion; formerly.

autrefois acquit (ə-kwit or a-kee). A plea in bar of arraignment that the defendant has been acquitted of the offense. — Also termed former acquittal. See DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

“Suppose that a transgressor is charged and acquitted for lack of evidence, and evidence has now come to light showing beyond doubt that he committed the crime. Even so, he cannot be tried a second time. He has what is termed, in legal French, the defence of autrefois acquit. Similarly, if he is convicted, even though he is let off very lightly, he cannot afterwards be charged on fresh evidence, because he will have the defence of autrefois convict. These uncouth phrases have never been superseded, though they might well be called the defence of ‘previous acquittal’ and ‘previous conviction’; and ‘double jeopardy’ makes an acceptable generic name for both.” Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 24 (1978).

autrefois attain (ə-taynt). Hist. A plea in bar that the defendant has already been attainted for one felony and therefore cannot be prosecuted for another.

autrefois convict. A plea in bar of arraignment that the defendant has been convicted of the offense. See DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

aver (ə-vər), vb. To assert positively, esp. in a pleading; to allege.

average, n. 1. A single value that represents a broad sample of subjects; esp., in mathematics, the mean, median, or mode of a series. 2. The ordinary or typical level; the norm. 3. Maritime law. Liability for partial loss or damage to an insured ship or its cargo during a voyage; the apportionment of such liability. — average, vb. & adj.

extraordinary average. A contribution by all the parties concerned in a commercial voyage — whether for vessel or cargo — toward a loss sustained by some of the parties in interest for the benefit of all.

general average. Average resulting from an intentional partial sacrifice of ship or cargo to avoid total loss. ● The liability is shared by all parties who had an interest in the voyage. — Abbr. GA. — Also termed gross average; general-average contribution.

"[G]eneral average refers to certain extraordinary sacrifices made or expenses incurred to avert a peril that threatens the entire voyage. In such a case the party sustaining the loss confers a common benefit on all the parties to the maritime venture. As a result the party suffering the loss has a right — apart from contract or tort — to claim contribution from all who participate in the venture. The doctrine of general average is thus an equitable principle derived from the general maritime law. General average is an exception to the principle of particular average that losses lie where they fall; rather the loss becomes 'general,' meaning that it is spread ratably among all the parties involved in the maritime adventure. The doctrine of general average is of ancient vintage, and can be traced back to remotest antiquity." Thomas J. Schoenbaum, Admiralty and Maritime Law § 16-1, at 522-23 (1987).

particular average. Average resulting from an accidental partial loss or damage. ● The liability is borne solely by the person who suffered the loss. — Also termed simple average; partial average.

average gross sales. See SALE.

average tax rate. See TAX RATE.

average variable cost. The average cost per unit of output, arrived at by dividing the total cost (fixed cost and variable cost) by output. Cf. LONG-RUN INCREMENTAL COST.

averaging down. Securities. An investment strategy in which shares in the same company are purchased at successively lower prices to achieve a lower average cost than the first purchase.

averaging up. Securities. An investment strategy in which shares in the same company are purchased at successively higher prices to accumulate an increasingly larger position at an average cost that is lower than the market price. ● The investor will earn significant profits only if the stock's price continues to rise.

averment (ə-vər-mənt), n. A positive declaration or affirmation of fact; esp., an assertion or allegation in a pleading <the plaintiff's averment that the defendant ran a red light>. Cf. ASSEVERATE.

immaterial averment. An averment that alleges something in needless detail; a statement that goes far beyond what is in issue. • This type of averment may be ordered struck from the pleading.

negative averment. An averment that is negative in form but affirmative in substance and that must be proved by the alleging party. • An example is the statement "she was not old enough to enter into the contract," which is more than just a simple denial. Cf. TRAVERSE.

averment of notice. A statement in a pleading that someone else has been properly notified about some fact. See NOTICE.

bad faith, n. 1. Dishonesty of belief or purpose <the lawyer filed the pleading in bad faith>. — Also termed mala fides (mal-ə fi-deez).

"A complete catalogue of types of bad faith is impossible, but the following types are among those which have been recognized in judicial decisions: evasion of the spirit of the bargain, lack of diligence and slacking off, willful rendering of imperfect performance, abuse of a power to specify terms, and interference with or failure to cooperate in the other party's performance." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 205 cmt. d (1981).

2. Insurance. An insurance company's unreasonable and unfounded (though not necessarily fraudulent) refusal to provide coverage in violation of the duties of good faith and fair dealing owed to an insured. • Bad faith often involves an insurer's failure to pay the insured's claim or a claim brought by a third party. 3. An insured's claim against an insurance company for an unreasonable and unfounded refusal to provide coverage. — bad-faith, adj. Cf. GOOD FAITH.

badge of fraud. A circumstance that the courts generally interpret as a reliable indicator that a party to a transaction was trying to hinder or defraud the other party, such as a transfer in anticipation of litigation, a transaction outside the usual course of business, or a false statement. See FRAUD.

badge of slavery. 1. Strictly, a legal disability suffered by a slave, such as the inability to vote or to own property. 2. Broadly, any act of racial discrimination — public or private — that Congress can prohibit under the 13th Amendment.

badger game. A scheme to extort money or some other benefit by catching someone in a compromising position and threatening to make that person's behavior public.

"The 'badger game' is a blackmailing trick, usually in the form of enticing a man into a compromising position with a woman whose real or pretended husband comes upon the scene and demands payment under threat of prosecution or exposure." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 451 (3d ed. 1982).

bad-man theory. The jurisprudential doctrine or belief that a bad person's view of the law represents the best test of what the law actually is because that person will carefully calculate precisely what the rules allow and operate up to the rules' limits. • This theory was first espoused by Oliver Wendell Holmes in his essay The Path of the Law, 10 Harv. L. Rev. 457 (1897). In the essay, Holmes maintained that a society's legal system is defined by predicting how the law will affect a person, as opposed to considering the ethics or morals supposedly underlying the law. Under Holmes's theory, the prediction is best made by viewing the law as would a "bad man" who is unconcerned with morals. Such a person is not concerned with acting morally or in accord with a grand philosophical scheme. Rather, that person is concerned with whether and to what degree certain acts will incur punishment by the public force of the law. See LEGAL REALISM. — Also termed prediction theory.

bad motive. See MOTIVE.

bad title. See unmarketable title under TITLE (2).

baga (bag-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. A bag or purse, esp. one in which original writs were kept by the Chancery.

bagman. A person who collects and distributes illegally obtained money; esp., an intermediary who collects a bribe for a public official.

bail, n. 1. A security such as cash or a bond; esp., security required by a court for the release of a prisoner who must appear at a future time <bail is set at $500>. Cf. RECOGNIZANCE.

bail absolute. A type of fiduciary bond conditioning a surety's liability on the failure of an estate administrator, executor, or guardian to properly account for estate funds. See fiduciary bond under BOND (2).

cash bail. A sum of money (rather than a surety bond) posted to secure a prisoner's release from jail. — Also termed stationhouse bail.

civil bail. A bond or deposit of money given to secure the release of a person arrested for failing to pay a court-ordered civil debt. • The bail is conditioned on the payment of the debt.

excessive bail. Bail that is unreasonably high considering both the offense with which the accused is charged and the risk that the accused will not appear for trial. • The Eighth Amendment prohibits excessive bail.

2. Release of a prisoner on security for a future appearance <the court refused bail for the accused serial killer>. 3. One or more sureties for a criminal defendant <the attorney stood as bail for her client>. See BAILER (1).

"As a noun, and in its strict sense, bail is the person in whose custody the defendant is placed when released from jail, and who acts as surety for defendant's later appearance in court. . . . The term is also used to refer to the undertaking by the surety, into whose custody defendant is placed, that he will produce defendant in court at a stated time and place." 8 C.J.S. Bail § 2 (1988).

bail above. See bail to the action.

bail below. See bail to the sheriff.

bail common. Hist. A fictitious surety filed by a defendant in a (usu. minor) civil action. — Also termed common bail; straw bail.

"[T]he Common Pleas made a distinction between common and special bail, allowing the former, in cases where the defendant voluntarily appeared to the process, or where the damage expressed in it appeared to be but of a trifling amount, and requiring the latter only, when the plaintiff's demand or the damage he had sustained appeared to be something considerable. In time therefore, in common cases, every defendant took the liberty of offering John Doe and Richard Roe, for his bail. . . ." 1 George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas lxi (3d ed. 1787).

bail to the action. Hist. A surety for a civil defendant arrested by a mesne process (i.e., a process issued during the lawsuit). • If the defendant lost the lawsuit, the bail to the action was bound either to pay the judgment or to surrender the defendant into custody. — Also termed bail above; special bail. Cf. bail to the sheriff.

bail to the sheriff. Hist. A person who pledged to the sheriff that a defendant served with process during a civil action would appear on the writ's return day. — Also termed bail below. Cf. bail to the action.

"This kind of bail is called bail to the sheriff, because given to that officer, and for his security; and bail below, because subordinate or preliminary to bail to the action or special bail, which is termed bail above." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 174 (2d ed. 1867).

common bail. See bail common.

special bail. See bail to the action.

straw bail. See bail common.

bail, vb. 1. To obtain the release of (oneself or another) by providing security for future appearance <his parents bailed him out of jail>. 2. To release (a person) after receiving such security <the court bailed the prisoner>. 3. To place (personal property) in someone else's charge or trust <bail the goods with the warehouse>.

bailable, adj. (Of an offense or person) eligible for bail.

bailable offense. A criminal charge for which a defendant may be released from custody after providing proper security <misdemeanor theft is a bailable offense>.

bail common. See BAIL (3).

Bail Court. Hist. An ancillary court of Queen's Bench responsible for ensuring that bail sureties were worth the sums pledged (i.e., hearing justifications) and handling other procedural matters. • The court was established in 1830 and abolished in 1854. — Also termed Practice Court.

bail dock. A small compartment in a courtroom used to hold a criminal defendant during trial.

bailee. A person who receives personal property from another as a bailment. See BAILMENT.

bailee policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

bail-enforcement agent. See BOUNTY HUNTER.

bailer. 1. One who provides bail as a surety for a criminal defendant's release. — Also spelled bailor. — Also termed bail bondsman; bailman. 2. BAILOR (1).

bailiff. 1. A court officer who maintains order during court proceedings. 2. A sheriff's officer who executes writs and serves processes.

bailiff-errant. Hist. A bailiff appointed by the sheriff to deliver writs and other process within a county. Cf. bailiffs of franchises.

bailiff of franchises. Hist. A bailiff who executes writs and performs other duties in privileged districts that are outside the Crown's (and therefore the sheriff's) jurisdiction. Cf. bailiff-errant.

"Bailiffs of Franchises are those who are appointed by every Lord within his Liberty, to do such Offices therein, as the Bailiff Errant does at large in the County."

bailiffs of hundreds. Hist. Bailiffs appointed by a sheriff to collect fines, summon juries, attend court sessions, and execute writs and process in the county district known as a hundred. See HUNDRED.

bailiffs of manors. Hist. Persons appointed to superintend the estates of the nobility. • These bailiffs collected fines and rents, inspected buildings, and took account of waste, spoils, and misdemeanors in the forests and demesne lands.

bound bailiff. Hist. A deputy sheriff placed under bond to ensure the faithful performance of assigned duties.

high bailiff. Hist. A bailiff attached to a county court, responsible for attending court sessions, serving summonses, and executing orders, warrants, and writs.

special bailiff. Hist. A deputy sheriff appointed at a litigant's request to serve or execute some writ or process related to the lawsuit.

bail in error. Security given by a defendant who intends to bring a writ of error on a judgment and desires a stay of execution in the meantime. See appeal bond & supersedeas bond under BOND (2).

bailivia. See BAILIWICK.

bailiwick (bay-lə-wik). The office, jurisdiction, or district of a bailiff; esp., a bailiff's territorial jurisdiction. — Also termed bailivia; baliva; balliva.

"In the early days a village was called a 'wick.' Each village had a bailiff who was its peace officer. His authority was limited to the territory of the wick. A bailiff was popularly referred to as a 'bailie,' and before long a bailie's wick was expressed as his 'bailiwick.' And in time this word came to be used to indicate the special territory over which a peace officer exercises his authority as such. Although it may be changed by statute, the normal situation is that the bailiwick of a policeman is his city, the bailiwick of a sheriff is his county and the bailiwick of a state officer, such as a member of the Highway Patrol, is the state." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1096 (3d ed. 1982).

bail-jumping, n. The criminal offense of defaulting on one's bail. — bail-jumper, n. — jump bail, vb. See JUMP BAIL.

bailment. 1. A delivery of personal property by one person (the bailor) to another (the bailee) who holds the property for a certain purpose under an express or implied-in-fact contract. •

Unlike a sale or gift of personal property, a bailment involves a change in possession but not in title. Cf. PAWN.

"The customary definition of a bailment considers the transaction as arising out of contract. Thus Justice Story defines a bailment as 'a delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose, and upon a contract express or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust' [Joseph Story, Bailments 5 (9th ed. 1878)]. There has, however, been a vigorous dissent to this insistence on the contractual element in bailments. Professor Williston . . . defines bailments broadly 'as the rightful possession of goods by one who is not the owner' [4 Samuel Williston, Law of Contracts 2888 (rev. ed. 1936)]. . . . It is obvious that the restricted definition of a bailment as a delivery of goods on a contract cannot stand the test of the actual cases. The broader definition of Professor Williston is preferable." Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 73, at 252, 254 (2d ed. 1955).

"Although a bailment is ordinarily created by the agreement of the parties, resulting in a consensual delivery and acceptance of the property, such a relationship may also result from the actions and conduct of the parties in dealing with the property in question. A bailment relationship can be implied by law whenever the personal property of one person is acquired by another and held under circumstances in which principles of justice require the recipient to keep the property safely and return it to the owner." 8A Am. Jur. 2d Bailment § 1 (1997).

actual bailment. A bailment that arises from an actual or constructive delivery of property to the bailee.

bailment for hire. A bailment for which the bailee is compensated, as when one leaves a car with a parking attendant. — Also termed lucrative bailment.

bailment for mutual benefit. A bailment for which the bailee is compensated and from which the bailor receives some additional benefit, as when one leaves a car with a parking attendant who will also wash the car while it is parked.

constructive bailment. A bailment that arises when the law imposes an obligation on a possessor of personal property to return the property to its rightful owner, as with an involuntary bailment.

gratuitous bailment. A bailment for which the bailee receives no compensation, as when one borrows a friend's car. ● A gratuitous bailee is liable for loss of the property only if the loss is caused by the bailee's gross negligence. — Also termed naked bailment; depositum; naked deposit; gratuitous deposit; deposit.

involuntary bailment. A bailment that arises when a person accidentally, but without any negligence, leaves personal property in another's possession. ● An involuntary bailee who refuses to return the property to the owner can be liable for conversion. — Also termed involuntary deposit. See abandoned property, lost property, mislaid property under PROPERTY.

lucrative bailment. See bailment for hire.

naked bailment. See gratuitous bailment.

2. The personal property delivered by the bailor to the bailee. 3. The contract or legal relation resulting from such a delivery. 4. The act of posting bail for a criminal defendant. 5. The documentation for the posting of bail for a criminal defendant.

bailor (bay-lor or bay-lər). 1. A person who delivers personal property to another as a bailment. — Also spelled bailer. 2. BAILER (1).

bailout, n. 1. A rescue of an entity, usu. a corporation, from financial trouble. 2. An attempt by a business to receive favorable tax treatment of its profits, as by withdrawing profits at capital-gain rates rather than distributing stock dividends that would be taxed at higher ordinary-income rates.

bailout stock. See STOCK.

bail piece. Hist. A document recording the nature of the bail granted to a defendant in a civil action. ● The bail piece was filed with the court and usu. signed by the defendant's sureties. See BAIL (2); RECOGNIZANCE.

bail-point scale. A system for determining a criminal defendant's eligibility for bail, whereby a defendant either will be released on personal recognizance or will have a bail amount set according to the total number of points given, based on the defendant's background and behavior.

bailman. See BAILER (1).

bail to the action. See BAIL (3).

bail to the sheriff. See BAIL (3).

bait advertising. See BAIT AND SWITCH.

bait and switch. A sales practice whereby a merchant advertises a low-priced product to lure customers into the store only to induce them to buy a higher-priced product. ● Most states prohibit the bait and switch when the original product is not actually available as advertised. — Also termed bait advertising.

balance, vb. 1. To compute the difference between the debits and credits of (an account) <the accountant balanced the company's books>. 2. To equalize in number, force, or effect; to bring into proportion <the company tried to balance the ratio of mid-level managers to assembly-line workers>. 3. To measure competing interests and offset them appropriately <the judge balanced the equities before granting the motion>. — balance, n.

balanced economy. See ECONOMY.

balanced fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

balance of power. Int'l law. A relative equality of force between countries or groups of countries, as a result of which peace is encouraged because no country is in a position to predominate.

balance of probability. See PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE.

balance sheet. A statement of an entity's current financial position, disclosing the value of the entity's assets, liabilities, and owners' equity. — Also termed statement of financial condition; statement of condition; statement of financial position. Cf. INCOME STATEMENT.

balance-sheet insolvency. See INSOLVENCY.

balance-sheet test. See balance-sheet insolvency under INSOLVENCY.

balancing test. A judicial doctrine, used esp. in constitutional law, whereby a court measures competing interests — as between individual rights and governmental powers, or between state authority and federal supremacy — and decides which interest should prevail.

bale. A package of goods wrapped in cloth and marked so as to be identifiable on a bill of lading.

baliva. See BAILIWICK.

ballistics. 1. The science of the motion of projectiles, such as bullets. 2. The study of a weapon's firing characteristics, esp. as used in criminal cases to determine a gun's firing capacity and whether a particular gun fired a given bullet.

balliva. See BAILIWICK.

ballivo amovendo (bə-li-voh ay-moh-ven-doh). [Latin "a bailiff to be removed"] Hist. A writ to remove from office a bailiff who does not have sufficient land in the bailiwick as required by the Statute of Westminster (1285).

absentee ballot. A ballot that a voter submits, sometimes by mail, before an election. See absentee voting under VOTING.

joint ballot. Parliamentary practice. A vote by legislators of both houses sitting together as one body.

secret ballot. A vote cast in such a way that the person voting cannot be identified.

"The secret ballot, when used to protect citizens when choosing their representatives, is a hallmark of a democratic system of government; but, when it is used to conceal a public official's vote, it violates the fundamental tenet of an elected or appointed official's ultimate accountability to the electorate." Op. Tex. Att'y Gen. H-1163 (1978).

4. A list of candidates running for office. — ballot, vb.

Australian ballot. A ballot characterized by a variety of safeguards designed to maintain secrecy in voting. ● Australian ballots are widely used in various forms in the United States.

Massachusetts ballot. A ballot in which, under each office, the names of candidates and party designations are printed in alphabetical order. ● This is a type of Australian ballot.

office-block ballot. A ballot that lists the candidates' names under the title of the office sought without mentioning the candidates' party affiliations.

party-column ballot. A ballot that lists the candidates' names in separate columns by political party regardless of the offices sought by the candidates.

ballot box. A locked box into which ballots are deposited.

ban, n. 1. Hist. A public proclamation or summons. • Bans dealt with a variety of matters, such as the calling to arms of a lord's vassals or the proclamation that an offender was henceforth to be considered an outlaw. 2. Eccles. law. An authoritative ecclesiastical prohibition; an interdiction. 3. BANNS OF MATRIMONY. — Also spelled bann.

ban, vb. To prohibit, esp. by legal means.

banc (bangk or bongk). [French] Bench. See EN BANC.

banco (bang-koh). 1. A seat or bench of justice. See EN BANC. 2. A tract of land cut off by the shifting of a river's course; esp., land that has become cut off in such a manner from the country it originally belonged to. See AVULSION (2).

bancus (bang-kəs). [Law Latin "bench"] Hist. English law. A court or tribunal.

bancus reginae (bang-kəs rə-jī-nee). See QUEEN'S BENCH.

bancus regis (bang-kəs ree-jəs). See KING'S BENCH.

bancus superior (bang-kəs sə-peer-ee-ər). Upper bench. • The King's Bench was so called during the Protectorate (1653–1659). — Abbr. b.s. — Also termed bancus publicus ("public bench").

B and E. abbr. Breaking and entering. See BURGLARY (2).

bane. Hist. A malefactor or murderer; a person whose criminal act calls for the raising of the hue and cry.

banish. See EXILE.

bank. 1. A financial establishment for the deposit, loan, exchange, or issue of money and for the transmission of funds; esp., a member of the Federal Reserve System. • Under securities law, a bank includes any banking institution, whether or not incorporated, doing business under federal or state law, if a substantial portion of the institution's business consists of receiving deposits or exercising fiduciary powers similar to those permitted to national banks and if the institution is supervised and examined by a state or federal banking authority; or a receiver, conservator, or other liquidating agent of any of the above institutions. 15 USCA § 78c(a)(6). 2. The office in which such an establishment conducts transactions.

"A bank is a quasi public institution, for the custody and loan of money, the exchange and transmission of the same by means of bills and drafts, and the issuance of its own promissory notes, payable to bearer, as currency, or for the exercise of one or more of these functions, not always necessarily chartered, but sometimes so, created to subserve public ends, or a financial institution regulated by law A bank is wholly a creature of statute doing business by legislative grace and the right to carry on a banking business through the agency of a corporation is a 'franchise' which is dependent on a grant of corporate powers by the state." 1A Michie on Banks and Banking § 2, at 5–6 (1993).

bank for cooperatives. A bank within a system of banks established to provide a permanent source of credit to farmers' cooperatives and supervised by the Farm Credit Administration.

collecting bank. In the check-collection process, any bank handling an item for collection, except for the payor bank or the depository bank. UCC § 4–105(5).

custodian bank. A bank or trust company that acts as custodian for a clearing corporation and that is supervised and examined by a state or federal authority. UCC § 8–102(4).

depository bank. The first bank to which an item is transferred for collection. UCC § 4–105(2).

drawee bank. See payor bank.

Federal Home Loan Bank. See FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK.

federal land bank. See FEDERAL LAND BANK.

intermediary bank. A bank to which an item is transferred in the course of collection, even though the bank is not the depository or payor bank. UCC § 4–105(4).

investment bank. A bank whose primary purpose is to acquire financing for businesses, esp. through the sale of securities. • An investment bank does not accept deposits and, apart from selling securities, does not deal with the public at large. See INVESTMENT BANKER.

member bank. A bank that is a member of the Federal Reserve System. — Also termed reserve bank. See FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

mutual savings bank. A bank that has no capital stock and in which the depositors are the owners. See SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

national bank. A bank incorporated under federal law and governed by a charter approved by the Comptroller of the Currency. ● A national bank is permitted to use the abbreviation n.a. (national association) as part of its name.

nonbank bank. A financial institution that either accepts demand deposits or makes commercial loans, but, unlike banks, does not do both at the same time and therefore can avoid federal regulations on bank ownership. ● Nonbank banks were esp. prolific in the 1980s, but amendments to the definition of a bank under federal law have essentially closed this loophole.

nonmember bank. A bank that is not a member of the Federal Reserve System. See FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

payor bank. A bank that is requested to pay the amount of a negotiable instrument and, on the bank's acceptance, is obliged to pay that amount; a bank by which an item is payable as drawn or accepted. UCC § 4-105(3). — Also termed drawee bank.

presenting bank. A nonpayor bank that presents a negotiable instrument for payment. UCC § 4-105.

private bank. An unincorporated banking institution owned by an individual or partnership and, depending on state statutes, subject to or free from state regulation.

remitting bank. A payor or intermediary bank that pays or transfers an item.

reserve bank. See member bank.

respondent bank. A bank, association, or other entity that exercises fiduciary powers, that holds securities on behalf of beneficial owners, and that deposits the securities for safekeeping with another bank, association, or other entity exercising fiduciary powers. SEC Rule 14a-1(k) (17 CFR § 240.14a-1(k)).

savings-and-loan bank. See SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

savings bank. A bank that receives deposits, pays interest on them, and makes certain types of loans, but does not provide checking services.

state bank. A bank chartered by a state and supervised by the state banking department. ● For a state bank to have FDIC insurance on deposits, it must become a member of the Federal Reserve System.

bank, vb. 1. To keep money at <he banks at the downtown branch>. 2. To deposit (funds) in a bank <she banked the prize money yesterday>. 3. Slang. To loan money to facilitate (a transaction) <who banked the deal?>. ● The lender's consideration usu. consists of a fee or an interest in the property involved in the transaction.

bankable paper. See PAPER.

bank acceptance. See banker's acceptance under ACCEPTANCE (4).

banker's bill. See finance bill under BILL (6).

banker's lien. See LIEN.

bank examiner. A federal or state official who audits banks with respect to their financial condition, management, and policies.

bank for cooperatives. See BANK.

bank fraud. The criminal offense of knowingly executing, or attempting to execute, a scheme or artifice to defraud a financial institution, or to obtain property owned by or under the control of a financial institution, by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises. 18 USCA § 1344.

bank holding company. A company that owns or controls one or more banks. • Ownership or control of 25 percent is usu. enough for this purpose. — Abbr. BHC.

banking. The business carried on by or with a bank.

Banking Act of 1933. See GLASS-STEAGALL ACT.

banking day. 1. Banking hours on a day when a bank is open to the public for carrying on substantially all its banking functions. • Typically, if the bookkeeping and loan departments are closed by a certain hour, the remainder of that day is not part of that bank's banking day. 2. A day on which banks are open for banking business.

“‘Banking day’ is defined in [UCC §] 4-104(1)(c) [now 4-104(a)(3)]. The definition was designed to exclude from the ‘banking day’ all bank holidays (although some states added specifics on holidays) as well as the portions of a day on which one or more of the substantial departments of the bank closed off their services to the public, even though it remained open for accepting deposits and withdrawing funds as well as continuously processing items for payment or for dispatch. Clearly, when night depositaries came into vogue, their existence did not extend the ‘banking day.’ The present existence and growing use of so-called 24-hour teller machines also does not extend the banking day. The nature of the banking day is sufficiently tenuous that banks would do well to fix a definite cutoff hour under subsection 4-107(1).” William D. Hawkland, Uniform Commercial Code Series § 4-104:01, at 4-43 (1984).

banking game. A gambling arrangement in which the house (i.e., the bank) accepts bets from all players and then pays out winning bets and takes other bettors' losses.

bank night. A lottery in which a prize is awarded to a person (often a theater patron) whose name is drawn randomly from a hopper.

banknote. A bank-issued promissory note that is payable to bearer on demand and that may circulate as money. — Also written bank note. — Also termed bank bill.

spurious banknote. 1. A banknote that is legitimately made from a genuine plate but that has forged signatures of the issuing officers, or the names of fictitious officers. 2. A banknote that is not a legitimate impression from a genuine plate, or is made from a counterfeit plate, but that is signed by the persons shown on it as the issuing officers. — Also termed spurious bank bill.

bank rate. See INTEREST RATE.

Bankr. Rep. abbr. Bankruptcy Reporter.

bankrupt, adj. Indebted beyond the means of payment; insolvent. — Also spelled (archaically) bankerout; bankrout.

bankrupt, n. 1. A person who cannot meet current financial obligations; an insolvent person. 2. DEBTOR (2).

cessionary bankrupt. Archaic. A person who forfeits all property so that it may be divided among creditors. • For the modern near-equivalent, see CHAPTER 7.

bankruptcy. 1. The statutory procedure, usu. triggered by insolvency, by which a person is relieved of most debts and undergoes a judicially supervised reorganization or liquidation for the benefit of that person's creditors. • For various types of bankruptcy under federal law, see the entries at CHAPTER. — Also termed bankruptcy proceeding; bankruptcy case.

“There are two general forms of bankruptcy: (1) liquidation and (2) rehabilitation. Chapter 7 of the Code is entitled ‘Liquidation.’ The terms ‘straight bankruptcy’ and ‘bankruptcy’ often are used to describe liquidation cases under the bankruptcy laws because the vast majority of bankruptcy cases are liquidation cases. In a typical Chapter 7 liquidation case, the trustee collects the non-exempt property of the debtor, converts that property to cash, and distributes the cash to the creditors. The debtor gives up all the nonexempt property she owns at the time of the filing of the bankruptcy petition and hopes to obtain a discharge. Chapters 11, 12, and 13 of the Bankruptcy Code contemplate debtor rehabilitation. In a rehabilitation case, creditors look to future earnings of the debtor, not to the property of the debtor at the time of the initiation of the bankruptcy proceeding, to satisfy their claims. The debtor generally retains its assets and makes payments to creditors, usually from postpetition earnings, pursuant to a court-approved plan.” David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 1-5, at 8-9 (1993).

involuntary bankruptcy. A bankruptcy proceeding initiated by creditors (usu. three or more) to force the debtor to declare bankruptcy or be legally declared bankrupt. 11 USCA § 303(b).

voluntary bankruptcy. A bankruptcy proceeding initiated by the debtor. 11 USCA § 301.

2. The fact of being financially unable to pay one's debts and meet one's obligations; insolvency. — Also termed failure to meet obli- gations. 3. The status of a party who has declared bankruptcy under a bankruptcy statute. 4. The fact of having declared bankruptcy under a bankruptcy statute. 5. The field of law dealing with the rights and entitlements of debtors and creditors in bankruptcy.

Bankruptcy Act. The Bankruptcy Act of 1898, which governed bankruptcy cases filed before October 1, 1979.

bankruptcy case. See BANKRUPTCY (1).

bankruptcy clause. See IPSO FACTO CLAUSE.

Bankruptcy Code. The Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978 (as amended and codified in 11 USCA), which governs bankruptcy cases filed on or after October 1, 1979.

Bankruptcy Court. 1. A U.S. district court that is exclusively concerned with administering bankruptcy proceedings. 2. The bankruptcy judges within a given district, considered as making up a court that is a subunit of a U.S. district court.

bankruptcy estate. A debtor's legal and equitable interests in property as of the commencement of a bankruptcy case.

bankruptcy judge. A judicial officer appointed by a U.S. Court of Appeals to preside over a bankruptcy court in a designated judicial district for a term of 14 years. • A bankruptcy judge is called an Article II judge. 28 USCA §§ 151 et seq. See ARTICLE II JUDGE.

bankruptcy plan. A detailed program of action formulated by a debtor or its creditors to govern the debtor's rehabilitation, continued operation or liquidation, and payment of debts. • The bankruptcy court and creditors must approve the plan before it is implemented. — Often shortened to plan. — Also termed plan of reorganization (for Chapter 11); plan of rehabilitation (for Chapter 13). See ARRANGEMENT WITH CREDITORS.

bankruptcy proceeding. 1. BANKRUPTCY (1). 2. Any judicial or procedural action (such as a hearing) related to a bankruptcy.

bankruptcy-remote entity. A business, usu. a special-purpose entity, established to perform limited functions and to have one or a few primary creditors. • This type of entity is sometimes established to protect lenders on large, complex projects, when the lender is to be paid solely or almost exclusively out of the money generated when the project becomes operational. This business is established to have no function other than to develop, own, and operate the project, and to have no principal creditors other than the project lenders. In this way, the lenders have additional protection because there are fewer creditors to compete for the money generated by the project, and there is less likelihood that the project will be forced into bankruptcy. A bankruptcy-remote entity will sometimes issue securities instead of just receiving a direct loan. See SINGLE-PURPOSE PROJECT; SPECIAL-PURPOSE ENTITY; project financing under FINANCING.

bankruptcy trustee. The person appointed by the U.S. Trustee and approved by the bankruptcy court to take charge of and administer the debtor's estate during bankruptcy proceedings. — Also termed trustee in bankruptcy. See UNITED STATES TRUSTEE.

Bank Secrecy Act of 1970. A federal law requiring banks to maintain records of all transactions with depositors and to report to the U.S. Treasury all deposits of more than $10,000.

bank statement. See STATEMENT OF ACCOUNT (1).

bank-statement rule. Commercial law. The principle that if a bank customer fails to examine a bank statement within a reasonable time (usu. no more than a year for a forged drawer's signature or alteration, and no more than three years for a forged indorsement), the customer is precluded from complaining about a forgery or material alteration. UCC § 4-406.

bannitio (bə-nish-ee-oh or ba-). [Law Latin] Hist. Expulsion by a ban or public proclamation; banishment. See EXILE; BAN (1).

bannitus (ban-ə-təs). [Law Latin] Hist. A person under a ban; an outlaw. See BAN (1).

banns of matrimony. Hist. Public notice of an intended marriage. • The notice was given to ensure that objections to the marriage would be voiced before the wedding. — Also spelled bans of matrimony.

bar, n. 1. In a courtroom, the railing that separates the front area, where the judge, court personnel, lawyers, and witnesses conduct court business, from the back area, which provides seats for observers; by extension, a similar railing in a legislative assembly <the spectator stood behind the bar>. 2. The whole body of lawyers qualified to practice in a given court or jurisdiction; the legal profession, or an organized subset of it <the attorney's outrageous misconduct disgraced the bar>. See BAR ASSOCIATION.

integrated bar. A bar association in which membership is a statutory requirement for the practice of law. — Also termed unified bar.

specialty bar. A voluntary bar association for lawyers with special interests, specific backgrounds, or common practices.

voluntary bar. A bar association that lawyers need not join to practice law.

3. A particular court or system of courts <case at bar>. • Originally, case at bar referred to an important case tried "at bar" at the Royal Courts of Justice in London. 4. BAR EXAMINATION <Pendarvis passed the bar>. 5. A preventive barrier to or the destruction of a legal action or claim; the effect of a judgment for the defendant . Cf. MERGER (5). 6. A plea arresting a lawsuit or legal claim <the defendant filed a bar>. See plea in bar under PLEA.

bar, vb. To prevent, esp. by legal objection <the statute of limitations barred the filing of the stale claims>.

bar association. An organization of members of the legal profession <several state bar associations sponsor superb CLE programs>. See BAR (2).

state bar association. An association or group of attorneys that have been admitted to practice law in a given state. • State bar associations are usu. created by statute, and membership is often mandatory for those who practice law in the state. Unlike voluntary, professional-development bar associations such as the American Bar Association, state bar associations often have the authority to regulate the legal profession, by undertaking such matters as disciplining attorneys and bringing lawsuits against those who participate in the unauthorized practice of law.

barebones indictment. See INDICTMENT.

bare license. See LICENSE.

bare licensee. See LICENSEE.

bare ownership. See trust ownership under OWNERSHIP.

bare possibility. See naked possibility under POSSIBILITY.

bare promise. See gratuitous promise under PROMISE.

bare trustee. See TRUSTEE (1).

bar examination. A written test that a person must pass before being licensed to practice law. • The content and format of bar examinations vary from state to state. — Often shortened to bar.

Multistate Bar Examination. A part of every state's bar examination given in the form of a multiple-choice test covering broad legal subjects, including constitutional law, contracts, criminal law, evidence, property, and torts. — Abbr. MBE.

bar examiner. One appointed by the state to test applicants (usu. law graduates) by preparing and administering the bar examination.

bargain, n. An agreement between parties for the exchange of promises or performances. • A bargain is not necessarily a contract because the consideration may be insufficient or the transaction may be illegal. — bargain, vb.

"A bargain is an agreement of two or more persons to exchange promises, or to exchange a promise for a performance. Thus defined, 'bargain' is at once narrower than 'agreement' in that it is not applicable to all agreements, and broader than 'contract,' since it includes a promise given in exchange for insufficient consideration. It also covers transactions which the law refuses to recognize as contracts because of illegality." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 2A, at 7 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

bargain and sale. A written agreement for the sale of land whereby the buyer would give valuable consideration (recited in the agreement) without having to enter the land and perform livery of seisin, so that the parties equitably "raised a use" in the buyer. • The result of the bargain and sale was to leave the legal estate in fee simple in the seller and to create an equitable estate in fee simple in the buyer.

bargain-and-sale deed. See DEED.

bargainee. The buyer in a bargained-for exchange.

bargaining agent. See AGENT.

bargaining unit. A group of employees authorized to engage in collective bargaining on behalf of all the employees of a company or an industry sector.

bargain money. See EARNEST MONEY.

bargainor (bahr-gən-or or bahr-gə-nər). The seller in a bargained-for exchange.

bargain purchase. See BARGAIN SALE.

bargain sale. A sale of property for less than its fair market value. • For tax purposes, the difference between the sale price and the fair market value must be taken into account. And bargain sales between family members may lead to gift-tax consequences. — Also termed bargain purchase.

bargain theory of consideration. The theory that a promise in exchange for a promise is sufficient consideration for a contract. • This theory underlies all bilateral contracts. See bilateral contract under CONTRACT.

"We saw earlier that classical contract theory tended to associate the doctrine of consideration with the concept of bargain. The emphasis of classical law shifted away from actual benefits and detriments to the mutual promises which constitute a wholly executory contract. American lawyers developed from this trend a 'bargain theory of consideration' and similarly in English law a more modern basis for the doctrine of consideration was found by some lawyers in the notion that a contract is a bargain in which the consideration is the price of the bargain. Allied to this is the supposed rule that nothing can be treated as a consideration unless it is seen by the parties as the 'price' of the bargain." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 119 (3d ed. 1981).

barometer stock. See STOCK.

baron. 1. Hist. A man holding land directly from the Crown in exchange for military service. 2. Hist. A husband. See BARON ET FEME. 3. One of the judges of the English or Scottish Courts of Exchequer. — Abbr. B. See BARONS OF THE EXCHEQUER. 4. A noble rank; specif., the lowest rank in the British peerage. 5. Generally, a lord or nobleman.

barones scaccarii. See BARONS OF THE EXCHEQUER.

baronet. Hist. A non-noble hereditary title that descends in the male line only. • Baronets originated in 1611 when James I began selling the title as a way to raise revenue.

baron et feme (bar-ən ay fem). [Law French] Hist. Husband and wife. See COVERTURE; FEME COVERT.

baronial court. Hist. A feudal court established by the owner of extensive lands held directly of the king under military tenure.

Baron Parke's rule. See GOLDEN RULE.

Barons of the Exchequer. Hist. The six judges of the Court of Exchequer. • After the 1873 transfer of the Court's jurisdiction to the High Court of Justice, the judges were known as justices of the High Court. — Also termed barones scaccarii. See COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

barony (bar-ən-ee). See TENURE (2).

barra (bah-rə). [Law French "bar"] Hist. 1. See plea in bar under PLEA. 2. A barrister. — Also spelled barre.

barrator (bar-ə-tər), n. A fomentor of quarrels and lawsuits; one who excites dissension and litigation among people. — Also spelled barretor. Cf. CHAMPERTOR.

"Barrator or Barater (Fr. Barateur, a Deceiver) Is a common mover or maintainer of Suits, Quarrels, or Parts, either in Courts or elsewhere in the Country, and is himself never quiet, but at variance with one or other." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

barratry (bar-ə-tree or bair-), n. 1. Vexatious incitement to litigation, esp. by soliciting potential legal clients. • Barratry is a crime in most jurisdictions. 2. Maritime law. Fraudulent or grossly negligent conduct (by a master or crew) that is prejudicial to a shipowner. 3. The buying or selling of ecclesiastical or governmental positions. — barratrous (bar-ə-trəs), adj.

barrier to entry. An economic factor that makes it difficult for a business to enter a market and compete with existing suppliers.

"Strictly speaking, a barrier to entry is a condition that makes the long-run costs of a new entrant into a market higher than the long-run costs of the existing firms in the market; a good example is a regulatory limitation on entry. The term is also used, more questionably, as a synonym for heavy start-up costs." Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 10.8, at 227 (2d ed. 1977).

barring of entail. The freeing of an estate from the limitations imposed by an entail and permitting its free disposition. • This was anciently done by means of a fine or common recovery, but later by deed in which the tenant and next heir join. — Also termed breaking of entail. See ENTAIL.

barrister (bar-is-tər), n. In England or Northern Ireland, a lawyer who is admitted to plead at the bar and who may argue cases in superior courts. — barristerial (bar-ə-steer-ee-əl), adj. Cf. SOLICITOR (4).

inner barrister. 1. QUEEN'S COUNSEL. 2. A student member of an Inn of Court.

outer barrister. A barrister called to the bar, but not called to plead from within it, as a Queen's Counsel or (formerly) serjeant-at-law is permitted to do; a barrister belonging to the outer bar. — Also termed utter barrister. See OUTER BAR.

vacation barrister. A counselor who, being newly called to the bar, is to attend for six long vacations the exercises of the house.

barter, n. The exchange of one commodity for another without the use of money. — barter, vb.

base court. See COURT.

base estate. See ESTATE.

base fee. See FEE (2); fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE.

baseline. Int'l law. The line that divides the land from the sea, by which the extent of a coastal jurisdiction is measured.

basement court. Slang. A low-level court of limited jurisdiction, such as a police court, traffic court, municipal court, or small-claims court.

base-point pricing. A freight-charge calculation based on the distance from a geographical location that differs from the goods' shipment point of origin (often where a major competitor is located). • The purpose is to reduce freight charges and enhance the shipper's competitive position, or to have customers incur freight charges not paid by the seller.

base service. Hist. Work of an agricultural nature performed by a villein tenant in exchange for permission from the lord to hold the land. Cf. KNIGHT SERVICE.

base tenure. See TENURE.

basic crops. See CROPS.

basic-form policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

basic norm. See NORM.

basic patent. See PATENT (3).

Basilica (bə-sil-i-kə). A 60-book Greek summary of Justinian's Corpus Juris Civilis, with comments (scholia). • The Basilica ("royal law") was begun by the Byzantine emperor Basil I, and it served as a major source of the law of the Eastern Empire from the early 10th century until Constantinople's fall in 1453.

basis. 1. A fundamental principle; an underlying condition. 2. Tax. The value assigned to a taxpayer's investment in property and used primarily for computing gain or loss from a transfer of the property. • When the assigned value represents the cost of acquiring the property, it is also called cost basis. — Also termed tax basis. Pl. bases.

adjusted basis. Basis increased by capital improvements and decreased by depreciation deductions.

"[I]t is well to consider the word 'adjusted' in the term 'adjusted basis.' Often, after property is acquired, certain adjustments (increases or decreases to the dollar amount of the original basis) must be made. After these adjustments, the property then has an 'adjusted basis.'" Michael D. Rose & John C. Chommie, Federal Income Taxation § 6.04, at 300 (3d ed. 1988).

adjusted cost basis. Basis resulting from the original cost of an item plus capital additions minus depreciation deductions.

carryover basis. The basis of property transferred by gift or in trust, equaling the transferor's basis. — Also termed substituted basis.

stepped-up basis. The basis of property transferred by inheritance. • Stepped-up basis equals the fair market value of property on the date of the decedent's death (or on the alternate valuation date).

substituted basis. 1. The basis of property transferred in a tax-free exchange or other specified transaction. 2. See carryover basis.

basis point. One-hundredth of 1%; .01%. • Basis points are used in computing investment yields (esp. of bonds) and in apportioning costs and calculating interest rates in real-estate transactions.

Basket Clause. See NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE.

basse justice (bahs zhoo-stees). [Latin "low justice"] Hist. A feudal lord's right to personally try a person charged with a minor offense.

bastard. 1. ILLEGITIMATE CHILD. 2. A child born to a married woman whose husband could not possibly be the father.

bastard eisne. See EISNE.

bastardy. See ILLEGITIMACY.

bastardy proceeding. See PATERNITY SUIT.

batable ground (bay-tə-bəl). Land of uncertain ownership. • Batable (or debatable) ground originally referred to certain lands on the border of England and Scotland before the 1603 union of the two kingdoms.

bathtub conspiracy. See intra-enterprise conspiracy under CONSPIRACY.

Batson challenge. See CHALLENGE (1).

battered-child syndrome. The medical and psychological condition of a child who has suffered continuing injuries that could not be accidental and are therefore presumed to have been inflicted by someone close to the child.

battered-woman syndrome. The medical and psychological condition of a woman who has suffered physical, sexual, or emotional abuse at the hands of a spouse or lover. • This syndrome is sometimes proposed as a defense to justify a woman's killing of a man. — Sometimes (more specifically) termed battered-wife syndrome; (more broadly) battered-spouse syndrome.

battery, n. 1. Criminal law. The application of force to another, resulting in harmful or offensive contact. • It is a misdemeanor under most modern statutes. — Also termed criminal battery.

"Criminal battery, sometimes defined briefly as the unlawful application of force to the person of another, may be divided into its three basic elements: (1) the defendant's conduct (act or omission); (2) his 'mental state,' which may be an intent to kill or injure, or criminal negligence, or perhaps the doing of an unlawful act; and aggravated battery. A criminal battery accompanied by circumstances that make it more severe, such as the use of a deadly weapon or the fact that the battery resulted in serious bodily harm.

sexual battery. The forced penetration of or contact with another's sexual organs or the sexual organs of the perpetrator. See RAPE.

simple battery. A criminal battery not accompanied by aggravating circumstances and not resulting in serious bodily harm.

2. Torts. An intentional and offensive touching of another without lawful justification. — Also termed tortious battery. — batter, vb. Cf. ASSAULT.

battle of the forms. The conflict between the terms of standard forms exchanged between a buyer and a seller during contract negotiations. • UCC § 2-207 attempts to resolve battles of the forms by abandoning the common-law requirement of mirror-image acceptance and providing that an acceptance with additional terms is normally valid. — Also termed UCC battle of the forms. See MIRROR-IMAGE RULE.

"The rules of offer and acceptance are difficult to apply in certain circumstances known as the 'battle of the forms' where parties want to enter into a contract, but jockey for position in an attempt to use the rules of law so as to ensure that the contract is on terms of their choosing." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 54 (3d ed. 1981).

batture (bə-tyoor or ba-toor). [French] Soil, stone, or other material that builds under water and may or may not break the surface. • If batture builds against a bank and breaks the surface, it becomes alluvion. See ALLUVION (2).

bawd. Archaic. A person, usu. a woman, who solicits customers for a prostitute; a madam. See DISORDERLY HOUSE (2). Cf. PIMP.

bawdy house. See DISORDERLY HOUSE.

bay. Int'l law. An inlet of the sea, over which the coastal country exercises its jurisdiction to enforce its environmental, immigration, and customs laws.

historic bay. A bay that, because of its shape, would not be considered a bay subject to the coastal country's jurisdiction, except for that country's long-standing unilateral claim over it; a bay over which the coastal country has traditionally asserted and maintained dominion.

BCD. See bad-conduct discharge under DISCHARGE.

BCD special court-martial. See COURT-MARTIAL.

beadle (beed-əl). 1. Hist. A court crier with duties similar to those of a constable. 2. Hist. Eccles. law. A minor parish officer who serves the vestry's needs in various ways, including giving notice of the vestry's meetings, executing its orders, and attending its inquests. 3. A macebearer at Oxford University or Cambridge University. — Also spelled bedel.

beak. BrE Slang. A magistrate or justice of the peace.

bean counter. Slang. A person who makes decisions using numerical calculations; esp., an accountant.

bear, vb. 1. To support or carry <bear a heavy load>. 2. To produce as yield <bear interest>. 3. To give as testimony <bear witness>.

beaupleader (boh-plee-dər). [Law French "fair pleading"] Hist. 1. A fine imposed for bad or unfair pleading. 2. A writ of prohibition that prevented a sheriff from taking a fine for bad pleading. • The Statute of Marlbridge (1267) prohibited the taking of fines for this type of pleading. See WRIT OF PROHIBITION.

beauty contest. Slang. A meeting at which a major client interviews two or more law firms to decide which firm will get its business.

before-and-after theory. Antitrust. A method of determining damages for lost profits (and sometimes overcharges), whereby the plaintiff's profits are examined before, during, and after the violation to estimate the reduction in profits due to the defendant's violation. — Also termed before-and-after method. Cf. YARDSTICK THEORY; MARKET-SHARE THEORY.

"In its simplest form, the [before-and-after] theory looks at the plaintiff's net profits before and after the injury period, discounts all dollars to their present value, and gives the plaintiff a sum that, before trebling, will bring its earnings during the injury period up to the same average level as its earnings during the noninjury periods." Herbert Hovenkamp, Economics and Federal Antitrust Law § 16.7, at 450 (1985).

before the fact. Prior to an event of legal significance.

behavioral science. The body of disciplines (psychology, sociology, anthropology) that study human behavior.

behoof, n. Archaic. A use, profit, or advantage that is part of a conveyance <to his use and behoof>. — behoove, vb.

belief-cluster. In critical legal studies, a group of unconnected ideas or opinions that appear to be related when considered together in reference to a specific subject, such as racism, sexism, or religious intolerance.

belligerency. Int'l law. 1. The status assumed by a nation that wages war against another nation. 2. The quality of being belligerent; the act or state of waging war.

belligerent, n. A country involved in a war or other hostile action. — belligerent, adj. Cf. NEUTRAL.

bellum (bel-əm). [Latin] See WAR (1).

bellum justum (bel-əm jəs-təm). [Latin] Int'l law. A just war; one that the proponent considers morally and legally justifiable, such as a war against an aggressive, totalitarian regime. • Under Roman law, before war could be declared, the fetiales (a group of priests who monitored international treaties) had to certify to the Senate that just cause for war existed. Thomas Aquinas and other medieval theologian-jurists debated the circumstances that justified war; some canonists supported the notion of a just war against non-Catholics. Over time, debating the justness of war had little practical effect, and most belligerents now simply declare the validity of their warlike behavior.

bellwether stock. See barometer stock under STOCK.

belong, vb. 1. To be the property of a person or thing <this book belongs to the judge>. See OWNERSHIP. 2. To be connected with as a member <they belong to the state bar>.

bench legislation. See JUDGE-MADE LAW (2).

benchmark. A standard unit used as a basis for comparison.

bench memo. 1. A short brief submitted by a lawyer to a trial judge, often at the judge's request. 2. A legal memorandum prepared by an appellate judge's law clerk to help the judge in preparing for oral argument and perhaps in drafting an opinion. • A trial-court judge may similarly assign a bench memo to a law clerk, for use in preparing for hearing or trial or in drafting an opinion.

bench ruling. An oral ruling issued by a judge from the bench.

bench trial. See TRIAL.

bench warrant. See WARRANT (1).

benefice (ben-ə-fis). 1. Hist. A feudal estate in land, held during the life of the tenant. See BENEFICIUM (3).

"[T]he vassal no longer owns the land, but 'holds' it 'of the lord — the vassal has become a 'tenant' (from the Latin, 'tenere', to hold). The vassal's interest in the land so held, first called a 'benefice', is now a 'feudum', anglicised in modern law as 'fee.'" Peter Butt, Land Law 52 (3d ed. 1996).

2. Hist. Eccles. law. An estate held by the Catholic Church in feudal tenure. 3. An ecclesiastical office such as a bishopric; a preferment.

bénéfice (bay-nay-fees). [French "benefit"] French law. A benefit or advantage; esp., a privilege given by law rather than by agreement of the parties.

bénéfice de discussion. [French] BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION.

bénéfice de division. [French] BENEFIT OF DIVISION.

bénéfice d'inventaire. [French] BENEFIT OF INVENTORY.

beneficial, adj. 1. Favorable; producing benefits <beneficial ruling>. 2. Consisting in a right that derives from something other than legal title <beneficial interest in a trust>.

beneficial association. See benevolent association under ASSOCIATION.

beneficial enjoyment. See ENJOYMENT.

beneficial holder of securities. A holder of equitable title to corporate stock. • The stock is not registered under the holder's name in the corporation's records.

beneficial interest. A right or expectancy in something (such as a trust or an estate), as opposed to legal title to that thing. • For example, a person with a beneficial interest in a trust receives income from the trust but does not hold legal title to the trust property.

beneficial owner. See OWNER.

beneficial ownership. See OWNERSHIP.

beneficial power. See POWER (4).

beneficial use. See USE (1).

beneficiary (ben-ə-fish-ee-er-ee or ben-ə-fish-ə-ree), n. A person who is designated to benefit from an appointment, disposition, or assignment (as in a will, insurance policy, etc.); one designated to receive something as a result of a legal arrangement or instrument. — beneficiary, adj.

contingent beneficiary. The person designated in a life-insurance policy to receive the proceeds if the primary beneficiary is unable to do so. — Also termed secondary beneficiary.

creditor beneficiary. A third-party beneficiary who is owed a debt that is to be satisfied by performing the contract.

direct beneficiary. See intended beneficiary.

donee beneficiary. A third-party beneficiary who is intended to receive the benefit of the contract's performance as a gift from the promisee.

avored beneficiary. See FAVORED BENEFICIARY.

incidental beneficiary. A third-party beneficiary who is not intended to benefit from a contract and thus does not acquire rights under the contract. Cf. intended beneficiary.

income beneficiary. A person entitled to income from property; esp., a person entitled to receive trust income.

intended beneficiary. A third-party beneficiary who is intended to benefit from a contract and thus acquires rights under the contract as well as the ability to enforce the contract once those rights have vested. — Also termed direct beneficiary. Cf. incidental beneficiary.

primary beneficiary. The person designated in a life-insurance policy to receive the proceeds when the insured dies.

secondary beneficiary. See contingent beneficiary.

third-party beneficiary. A person who, though not a party to a contract, stands to benefit from the contract's performance. • For example, if Ann and Bob agree to a contract under which Bob will render some performance to Chris, then Chris is a third-party beneficiary.

unborn beneficiary. A person named in a general way as sharing in an estate or gift though not yet born.

beneficiary heir. See HEIR.

beneficio primo ecclesiastico habendo (ben-ə-fish-ee-oh pry-moh ə-klee-z[h]ee-as-tə-koh hə-ben-doh). [Latin "to have the first ecclesiastical benefice"] Hist. A writ from the king to the lord chancellor ordering the appointment of a named person to the first vacant benefice.

beneficium (ben-ə-fish-ee-əm). [Latin "benefit"] 1. Roman law. A privilege, remedy, or benefit granted by law, such as the beneficium abstinendi ("privilege of abstaining"), by which an heir could refuse to accept an inheritance (and thereby avoid the accompanying debt). 2. Hist. A lease, generally for life, given by a ruler or lord to a freeman. • Beneficium in this sense arose on the continent among the German tribes after the collapse of the Roman Empire.

"All those to whom the Frankish king had given land and to whom the Frankish emperor had granted political authority had received it on certain conditions. They were the recipients of royal favor — a beneficium. Their holding came to be so styled." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 126 (1936).

3. Hist. English law. An estate in land granted by the king or a lord in exchange for services.

• Originally, a beneficium could not be passed to the holder's heirs, in contrast to feuds, which were heritable from an early date. Tenants, however, persisted in attempting to pass the property to their heirs, and over time the beneficium became a heritable estate. As this process occurred, the meaning of beneficium narrowed to a holding of an ecclesiastical nature. See BENEFICE (1).

"Beneficia were formerly Portions of Land, etc. given by Lords to their Followers for their Maintenance; but afterwards as these Tenures became Perpetual and Hereditary, they left their Name of Beneficia to the Livings of the Clergy, and retained to themselves the Name of Feuds. And Beneficium was an estate in land at first granted for Life only, so called, because it was held ex mero Beneficio of the Donor . . . [b]ut at Length, by the Consent of the Donor, or his Heirs, they were continued for the Lives of the Sons of the Possessors, and by Degrees past into an Inheritance. . . ." Giles Jacob, A New Law-Dictionary (8th ed. 1762).

"In England from almost, if not quite, the earliest moment of its appearance, the word feodum seems not merely to imply, but to denote, a heritable, though a dependent right. But if on the continent we trace back the use of this word, we find it becoming interchangeable with beneficium, and if we go back further we find beneficium interchangeable with precarium. A tenancy at will has, we may say, become a tenancy in fee. . . . The Norman conquest of England occurs at a particular moment in the history of this process. It has already gone far; the words feum, feudum, feodum are fast supplanting beneficium. . . ." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 67-68 (2d ed. 1898).

4. Hist. Eccles. law. A feudal tenure for life in church-owned land, esp. land held by a layperson. • Over time, this sense of beneficium faded, and it came to be restricted to that of an ecclesiastical living, i.e., a benefice.

"The pope became a feudal lord; and all ordinary patrons were to hold their right of patronage under this universal superior. Estates held by feudal tenure, being originally gratuitous donations, were at that time denominated beneficia: their very name as well as constitution was borrowed, and the care of the souls of a parish thence came to be denominated a benefice." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 106 (1769).

5. Hist. A benefit or favor; any particular privilege, such as benefit of clergy (beneficium clericale). 6. BENEFICE (3).

beneficium abstinenti (ben-ə-fish-ee-əm ab-sti-nen-di). [Latin "privilege of abstaining"] Roman law. The right of an heir to refuse an inheritance and thus avoid liability for the testator's debts.

"[T]hese heirs came also to be protected by the praetor, viz. by the jus or beneficium abstinenti. Provided they took care not to act as heir in any kind of way, then, whether they formally demanded the privilege or not, their own property could not be made liable for their ancestor's debts." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 220 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

beneficium cedendarum actionum (ben-ə-fish-ee-əm see-den-day-rəm ak-shee-oh-nəm). [Latin "privilege of having actions made over"] Roman & Scots law. The right of a cosurety who might or might not have paid the debt to compel the creditor to give over the right of action against the other cosurety. • Under Scots law, a cosurety's (or coactioner's) right of action against the nonpaying cosurety arises on payment, without the necessity of compelling the creditor to assign the action. But in Roman law, the right of action arose before the paying of the debt.

beneficium competentiae (ben-ə-fish-ee-əm kom-pə-ten-shi-ee). [Latin "privilege of competency"] Roman & Scots law. A debtor's right to be ordered to pay only as much as the debtor reasonably could, so that after assigning his or her estate to creditors, the debtor kept enough to live on. See assignment for the benefit of creditors under ASSIGNMENT.

beneficium divisionis (ben-ə-fish-ee-əm di-vizh-ee-oh-nis). See BENEFIT OF DIVISION.

beneficium inventarii (ben-ə-fish-ee-əm in-ven-tay-ree-I or in-ven-tair-ee-I). See BENEFIT OF INVENTORY.

beneficium ordinis (ben-ə-fish-ee-əm or-də-nis). [Latin "privilege of order"] Roman & Scots law. A surety's right to require a creditor to seek payment from the principal debtor before seeking payment from the surety. See BÉNÉFICE DE DISCUSSION.

"Beneficium Ordinis . . . by the civil law and our own, a cautioner, simply bound as such, is entitled to insist that the principal be first discussed by extreme diligence." Hugh Barclay, A Digest of the Law of Scotland 76 (3d ed. 1865).

beneficium separationis (ben-ə-fish-ee-əm sep-ə-ray-shee-oh-nis). [Latin "privilege of separation"] Roman law. The right of a creditor of the deceased to have the property of the deceased separated from an heir's property. • This separation protected the deceased's creditors by ensuring that the deceased's property was not used to pay the heir's creditors.

benefit, n. 1. Advantage; privilege <the benefit of owning a car>. 2. Profit or gain .

fringe benefit. A benefit (other than direct salary or compensation) received by an employee from an employer, such as insurance, a company car, or a tuition allowance. — Often shortened (esp. in pl.) to benefit.

general benefit. Eminent domain. The whole community's benefit as a result of a taking. • It cannot be considered to reduce the compensation that is due the condemnee.

pecuniary benefit. A benefit capable of monetary valuation.

special benefit. Eminent domain. A benefit that accrues to the owner of the land in question and not to any others. • Any special benefits justify a reduction in the amount of damages payable to the owner of land that is partially taken by the government during a public project.

benefit association. See benevolent association under ASSOCIATION.

benefit certificate. A written obligation to pay a named person a specified amount upon stipulated conditions. • Benefit certificates are often issued by fraternal and beneficial societies.

benefit-of-bargain rule. See BENEFIT-OF-THE-BARGAIN RULE.

benefit of cession. Civil law. A debtor's immunity from imprisonment for debt. • The immunity arises when the debtor's property is assigned to the debtor's creditors.

benefit of clergy. 1. At common law, the right of a cleric not to be tried for a felony in the King's Court <in the Middle Ages, anyone who could recite the "neck verse" was granted the benefit of clergy>. • It was abolished in England in 1827 but survived even longer in some American states, such as South Carolina, where it was successfully claimed in 1855. State v. Bosse, 42 S.C.L. (3 Rich.) 276 (1855). See NECK VERSE.

"Benefit of clergy was a remarkable privilege which, although now obsolete, was for centuries of great importance in criminal law. Some knowledge of it is even now essential for a proper understanding of common law crimes. After William the Conqueror separated the ecclesiastical from the secular courts, the clergy put forward the claim that all persons in holy orders should be exempt from secular jurisdiction in all proceedings, civil or criminal. Eventually the rule was established that 'clerks' of all kinds, who committed any of the serious crimes termed felonies, could be tried only in an ecclesiastical court, and therefore were only amenable to such punishments as that court could inflict. Any clerk accused of such crime was accordingly passed over to the bishop's court. He was there tried before a jury of clerks by the oaths of twelve compurgators; a mode of trial which usually ensured him an acquittal." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 75 (16th ed. 1952).

"'Benefit of clergy,' in its origin, was the right of a clergyman not to be tried for felony in the King's Court. In ancient times, when the Church was at the peak point of its power, it preempted jurisdiction over felony charges against clergymen. It demanded that in any case in which a clergyman was charged with felony, the case be transferred to the Ecclesiastical Court for trial. The benefit was extreme because conviction of felony in the King's Court resulted in the sentence of death, whereas the Ecclesiastical Court did not make use of capital punishment." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 4 (3d ed. 1982).

2. Loosely, religious approval as solemnized in a church ritual <the couple had several children without benefit of clergy>.

benefit of discussion. Civil law. A guarantor's right to require a creditor to seek payment from the principal debtor before seeking payment from the guarantor. — Also termed benefice de discussion.

"Benefit of Discussion. By common law a cautioner, bound simply as such, had right to insist that the creditor should discuss the principal debtor, that is, exhaust his estate by diligence, before coming upon him for payment of the debt." William K. Morton & Dale A. Whitman, Manual of the Law of Scotland 299 (1896).

benefit of division. Civil law. A surety's right to be sued only for a part of the debt proportionate to the number of solvent cosureties. — Also termed benefice de division.

benefit of inventory. Civil law. The principle that an heir's liability for estate debts is limited to the value of what is inherited, if the heir so elects and files an inventory of the estate's assets. — Also termed benefice d'inventaire.

benefit-of-the-bargain damages. See DAMAGES.

benefit-of-the-bargain rule. 1. The principle that a party who breaches a contract must provide the aggrieved party everything the aggrieved party would have received, including profits, had the contract been fully performed. 2. The principle that a defrauded buyer may recover from the seller as damages the difference between the misrepresented value of the property and the actual value received. — Also termed benefit-of-bargain rule. Cf. OUT-OF-POCKET RULE.

benevolent association. See ASSOCIATION.

benevolentia regis habenda (ben-ə-və-len-shee-ə ree-jis hə-ben-də). [Latin “the king’s benevolence to be had”] Hist. A fine paid to receive the king’s pardon and a restoration of place, title, or estate.

benevolent society. See benevolent association under ASSOCIATION.

Benthamite, adj. Of or relating to the utilitarian theory of Jeremy Bentham. See hedonistic utilitarianism under UTILITARIANISM.

bequeath (bə-kweeth), vb. To give property (usu. personal property) by will.

bequest (bə-kwest), n. 1. The act of giving property (usu. personal property) by will. 2. Property (usu. personal property other than money) disposed of in a will. — Also termed bequeathal (bə-kwee-thəl). Cf. DEVISE; LEGACY.

charitable bequest. A bequest given to a charitable organization. See CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION.

conditional bequest. A bequest whose effectiveness or continuation depends on the occurrence or nonoccurrence of a particular event.

demonstrative bequest. A bequest that, by its terms, must be paid out of a specific source, such as a stock fund.

executory bequest. A bequest of a future, deferred, or contingent interest in personalty.

general bequest. A bequest payable out of the general assets of the estate.

pecuniary bequest. A bequest of money; a legacy. — Also termed monetary bequest; money bequest.

residuary bequest. A bequest of the remainder of the testator’s estate, after the payment of the debts, legacies, and specific bequests. — Also termed remainder bequest.

specific bequest. A bequest of a specific item or cash amount.

Berne Convention. An international copyright treaty — drawn up in Berne in 1886 and revised in Berlin in 1908, now administered by the World Intellectual Property Organization — providing that works created by citizens of one signatory nation will be protected in other signatory nations, without the need for local formalities. • The United States ratified the Berne Convention in 1989 and modified several aspects of U.S. copyright law to comply with the treaty’s terms.

Berry rule. The doctrine that a defendant seeking a new trial on grounds of newly discovered evidence must show that (1) the evidence is newly discovered and was unknown to the defendant at the time of trial; (2) the evidence is material rather than merely cumulative or impeaching; (3) it will probably produce an acquittal; and (4) the failure to learn of the evidence was not due to the defendant’s lack of diligence. Berry v. State, 10 Ga. 511 (1851).

bertillon system (bər-tə-lon or bair-tee-yawn). A system of anthropometry once used to identify criminals by measuring and describing them. • The bertillon system is named for Alphonse Bertillon, the French anthropologist who developed the technique early in the 20th century. Fingerprinting has largely replaced the bertillon system. Cf. ANTHROPOMETRY.

bes (bes). [Latin] 1. Roman law. Two-thirds of the Roman as, or pound, consisting of eight unciae (ounces) out of twelve. See AS; UNCIA. 2. Civil law. Two-thirds of an inheritance.

besayel (bes-ay-əl). [Law French] Hist. 1. A writ of right used by a great-grandfather’s heirs to recover property held by the great-grandfather. See assize of mort d’ancestor under ASSIZE (6). 2. A great-grandfather. — Also spelled besaiel; besaile; bisaile; besayle. Cf. AIEL; COSINAGE.

best bid. See BID (1).

best efforts. Diligent attempts to carry out an obligation <the contractor must use best efforts to complete its work within the stated time>. • As a standard, a best-efforts obligation is stronger than a good-faith obligation. — Also termed best endeavors. Cf. due diligence (1) under DILIGENCE; GOOD FAITH.

best-efforts contract. See CONTRACT.

best-efforts underwriting. See UNDERWRITING.

best endeavors. See BEST EFFORTS.

best evidence. See EVIDENCE.

best-evidence rule. The evidentiary rule providing that, to prove the contents of a writing (or a recording or photograph), a party must produce the original writing unless it is unavailable, in which case secondary evidence — such as copies, notes, or testimony — may be admitted. Fed. R. Evid. 1001–1004. — Also termed documentary-originals rule; original-writing rule; original-document rule.

bestiality (bes-chee-al-ə-tee). Sexual activity between a human and an animal. • Some authorities restrict the term to copulation between a human and an animal of the opposite sex. See SODOMY.

best-mode requirement. Patents. The requirement that a patent application show the best physical method known to the inventor for using the invention. Cf. ENABLEMENT REQUIREMENT.

bestow, vb. To convey as a gift <bestow an honor on another>. — bestowal, n.

best use. See highest and best use under USE.

bet, n. Something (esp. money) staked or pledged as a wager.

layoff bet. A bet placed by a bookmaker to protect against excessive losses or to equalize the total amount placed on each side of the wager.

betterment. An improvement that increases the value of real property. See IMPROVEMENT.

betterment act. A statute requiring a landowner to compensate an occupant who improves the land under a mistaken belief that the occupant is the real owner. • The compensation usu. equals the increase in the land’s value generated by the improvements. — Also termed occupying-claimant act.

beyond a reasonable doubt. See REASONABLE DOUBT.

beyond seas. (Of a person) being absent from a jurisdiction or nation. • Some jurisdictions toll the statute of limitations during a defendant’s absence. — Also termed beyond the seas; out of the state; ultra mare.

b.f. abbr. BONUM FACTUM.

BFOQ. abbr. BONA FIDE OCCUPATIONAL QUALIFICATION.

BFP. See bona fide purchaser under PURCHASER (1).

BHC. abbr. BANK HOLDING COMPANY.

bias, n. Inclination; prejudice <the juror’s bias prompted a challenge for cause>. — bias, vb. — biased, adj.

judicial bias. Bias that a judge develops during a trial. • Judicial bias is usu. insufficient to justify disqualifying a judge from presiding over a case. To justify disqualification or recusal, the judge’s bias usu. must be personal or based on some extrajudicial reason.

bicameral, adj. (Of a legislature) having two legislative houses (usu. called the House of Representatives and the Senate). • The federal government and all states except Nebraska have bicameral legislatures. — bicameralism, n.

bid, n. 1. A buyer’s offer to pay a specified price for something that may or may not be for sale  .

best bid. The highest auction bid; in the letting of a contract, the lowest bid by a qualified bidder.

bid in. A bid made by the owner of auctioned property to ensure that the property is not sold below actual value.

bid off. To purchase by bid at auction or judicial sale.

upset bid. A bid in a judicial sale made for more than the purchaser's bid so that the sale will be set aside (i.e., upset).

2. A submitted price at which one will perform work or supply goods <the subcontractor's bid>. — bid, vb. See BID SHOPPING.

competitive bid. A bid submitted in response to public notice of an intended sale or purchase.

firm bid. A bid that, by its terms, remains open and binding until accepted or rejected. • A firm bid usu. contains no unusual conditions that might defeat acceptance.

open bid. A bid that the bidder may alter after submission so as to meet competing bids.

sealed bid. A bid that is not disclosed until all submitted bids are opened and considered simultaneously.

bid and asked. Securities. A notation describing the range of prices quoted for securities in an over-the-counter stock exchange. • Bid denotes the buying price, and asked denotes the selling price. See SPREAD (2).

bid bond. See BOND (2).

bidding up. The act or practice of raising the price for an auction item by making a series of progressively higher bids. • Bidding up is unlawful if the bids are made collusively by persons with an interest in raising the bids. Cf. BY-BIDDING.

bid in. See BID (1).

bid off. See BID (1).

bid peddling. See BID SHOPPING.

bid price. See PRICE.

bid quote. Securities. The price a broker will pay for a security or commodity.

bid shopping. A general contractor's effort — after being awarded a contract — to reduce its own costs by finding a subcontractor that will submit a lower bid than that used in calculating the total contract price. • If a lower bid is secured, the general contractor will receive a windfall profit because the savings are usu. not passed on to the property owner. The subcontractor whose bid is used in the initial proposal can seek to avoid bid shopping by insisting that it be irrevocably named in the contract as the project's subcontractor.

bid wanted. Securities. A dealer's notation that bids are being sought from anyone on a security for sale. • The notation appears in the pink sheets. — Abbr. BW. See PINK SHEET.

biennial session. See SESSION.

biennium (bi-en-ee-əm). 1. A two-year period. 2. The period for which many state legislatures make appropriations.

biens (beenz or byenz). [French] Hist. Goods; property. • Biens includes real property in most civil-law jurisdictions. Cf. BONA.

bifactoral obligation. See OBLIGATION.

bifurcated divorce. See divisible divorce under DIVORCE.

bifurcated trial. See TRIAL.

bigamous (big-ə-məs), adj. 1. (Of a person) guilty of bigamy. 2. (Of a marriage) involving bigamy.

bigamus (big-ə-məs), n. Hist. 1. One who commits bigamy; a bigamist. 2. A man who marries a widow, or who remarries. • Under ecclesiastical law, a bigamus could be denied benefit of clergy.

bigamy, n. The act of marrying one person while legally married to another. • Bigamy is a criminal offense if it is committed knowingly. — bigamist, n. Cf. POLYGAMY; MONOGAMY.

big bath. Slang. A write-off of significant costs, taken to shed an unprofitable business line or to remove the necessity for future write-offs.

Big Board. 1. The New York Stock Exchange. • This sense of Big Board may have derived from the former name of the NYSE — New York Stock and Exchange Board. 2. A quotation display showing the current prices of securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

big pot. See MAIN POT.

bilagines (bi-lay-jə-neež). [Law Latin] Hist. Town bylaws; laws made by a town's inhabitants for their own government.

bilan (bee-lahn). [French "balance sheet"] Civil law. A book used by bankers and merchants to record all that they owe and all that is owed to them; a balance sheet.

bilanciis deferendis (bə-lan-shee-is def-ər-en-dis). Hist. An obsolete writ ordering a corporation to carry weights to a given place to weigh wool licensed for transportation.

bilateral, adj. Affecting or obligating both parties .

bilateral mistake. See mutual mistake (1) under MISTAKE.

bilboes (bil-bohz). Hist. 1. A device for punishment at sea consisting of a board with holes that secure an offender's hands and feet. Cf. STOCKS. 2. An iron bar with sliding shackles for confining the ankles of prisoners, esp. on shipboard.

bill, n. 1. A formal written complaint, such as a court paper requesting some specific action for reasons alleged. 2. An equitable pleading by which a claimant brings a claim in a court of equity. • Before the merger of law and equity, the bill in equity was analogous to a declaration in law. The nine parts of every equitable bill are (1) the address to the person holding the great seal, (2) the introduction, which identifies the parties, (3) the premises, which state the plaintiff's case, (4) the confederating part, in which the defendants are charged with combination, (5) the charging part, in which the plaintiff may try to overcome defenses that the defendants may allege, (6) the jurisdictional clause, showing that the court has jurisdiction, (7) the interrogating part, inserted to try to compel a full and complete answer, (8) the prayer for relief, and (9) the prayer for process to compel the defendants to appear and answer. — Also termed bill in equity. See DECLARATION (7).

"The statement of the plaintiff's cause of action in equity is called the bill. To this bill the defendant (unless he could protect himself by a demurrer or a plea) was obliged to put in an answer under oath." George Tucker Bispham, The Principles of Equity: A Treatise on the System of Justice Administered in Courts of Chancery § 9, at 12 (11th ed. 1931).

bill for a new trial. A bill in equity to enjoin a judgment and to obtain a new trial because of some fact that would render enforcement of the judgment inequitable. • The fact must have been either unavailable or unknown to the party at trial due to fraud or accident. Cf. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

bill in aid of execution. A bill to set aside a fraudulent encumbrance or conveyance.

bill in perpetuum rei memoriam. See bill to perpetuate testimony.

bill in the nature of a bill of review. A postjudgment bill of review filed by a person who was neither a party to the original suit nor bound by the decree sought to be reversed. — Also termed supplemental bill in nature of bill of review.

bill in the nature of a bill of revivor. A bill filed when a litigant dies or becomes incapacitated before the litigant's interest in property could be determined. • The purpose of the bill is to resolve who holds the right to revive the original litigation in the deceased's stead.

bill in the nature of a supplemental bill. A bill bringing to court new parties and interests arising from events happening after the filing of the suit. • A supplemental bill, in contrast, involves parties or interests already before the court.

bill in the nature of interpleader. A bill of interpleader filed by a person claiming an interest in interpleaded property.

bill of certiorari. A bill in equity seeking removal of an action to a higher court. See CERTIORARI.

bill of complaint. An original bill that begins an action in a court of equity. See COMPLAINT (1).

"A suit in equity, under the procedure of the English Court of Chancery, which was generally adopted in the American States prior to the code, is instituted by the plaintiff filing a bill of complaint. The plaintiff is usually called the complainant, in the Federal courts the complainant or plaintiff indifferently. The bill is in substance a petition to the chancellor, or judge of the court of equity, setting forth at large the grounds of the suit, and praying the process of the court, its subpoena, to bring the defendant into court and compel him to answer the plaintiff's bill, and, also, for such relief by decree or interlocutory remedy, by way of injunction, etc., as the plaintiff supposes himself entitled to." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 55 (2d ed. 1899).

bill of conformity. A bill filed by an executor or administrator who seeks the court's guidance in administering an involved estate.

• The bill is usu. filed to adjust creditors' claims.

bill of costs. A certified, itemized statement of the amount of costs owed by one litigant to another.

bill of discovery. A bill in equity seeking disclosure of facts within the adverse party's knowledge. See DISCOVERY.

bill of evidence. A transcript of testimony heard at trial.

bill of exceptions. 1. A formal written statement — signed by the trial judge and presented to the appellate court — of a party's objections or exceptions taken during trial and the grounds on which they are founded. • These bills have largely been replaced by straight appeals under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See EXCEPTION (1). 2. In some jurisdictions, a record made to preserve error after the judge has excluded evidence.

bill of foreclosure. A bill in equity filed by a lender to have mortgaged property sold to satisfy all or part of the secured, unpaid debt.

bill of interpleader. An original bill filed by a party against two or more persons who claim from that party the same debt or duty. • The requesting party asks the court to compel the contenders to litigate their rights to establish to whom the debt or duty is due. See INTERPLEADER.

"The common law offered the stakeholder no relief, in that if he paid in good faith to one claimant, he might nevertheless be sued by and required to pay another claimant. And a judgment at law in favor of one claimant against the stakeholder was no defense to an action against the stakeholder by another claimant. However, in equity the bill or suit of interpleader offers him a remedy in that he may interplead (bring) into one action all of the claimants, turn the money or property over to the court, be himself dismissed from the proceeding, and have the court decide which of the claimants is entitled to the fund or property. . . ." William Q. de Funiak, Handbook of Modern Equity § 108, at 241-42 (2d ed. 1956).

bill of peace. An equitable bill filed by one who is threatened with multiple suits involving the same right, or with recurrent suits on the same right, asking the court to determine the question once and for all, and to enjoin the plaintiffs from proceeding with the threatened litigation. • One situation involves many persons having a common claim but threatening to bring separate suits; another involves one person bringing a second action on the same claim.

"By a bill of peace we are to understand a bill brought by a person to establish and perpetuate a right which he claims, and which, from its nature, may be controverted by different persons, at different times, and by different actions; or, where separate attempts have already been unsuccessfully made to overthrow the same right, and justice requires that the party should be quieted in the right, if it is already sufficiently established; or if it should be sufficiently established under the direction of the court. The obvious design of such a bill is to procure repose from perpetual litigation, and therefore, it is justly called a bill of peace." Joseph Story, Commentaries on Equity Jurisprudence § 853, at 567 (W.E. Grigsby ed., 1st English ed. 1884).

"If there was a dispute as to some right involving a multiplicity of persons (e.g., as to a man's right to take tolls, or to a right of way traversing many estates), a bill of peace could be brought in equity to establish the right and so secure repose from the prospect of incessant or multifarious litigation. Bills of peace have now in practice been superseded by modern procedural provisions for the joinder of parties and for representative actions." Robert E. Megarry & P.V. Baker, Snell's Principles of Equity 570 (27th ed. 1973).

bill of review. A bill in equity requesting that a court reverse or revise a prior decree.

bill of revivor. A bill filed for the purpose of reviving and continuing a suit in equity when there has been an abatement of the suit before final consummation. • The most common cause of such an abatement is the death of either the plaintiff or the defendant.

bill of revivor and supplement. A compound of a supplemental bill and a bill of revivor, joined for convenience. • Its distinct parts must be framed and proceeded on separately.

bill quia timet. An equitable bill used to guard against possible or prospective injuries and to preserve the means by which existing rights are protected from future or contingent violations. • It differs from an injunction, which corrects past and present — or imminent and certain — injuries. One example is a bill to perpetuate testimony. See QUIA TIMET.

bill to carry a decree into execution. A bill brought when a decree could not be enforced without further court order due to the parties' neglect or for some other reason.

bill to perpetuate testimony. An original bill to preserve the testimony of a material witness who may die or leave the jurisdiction before a suit is commenced, or to prevent or avoid future litigation. — Also termed bill in perpetuam rei memoriam.

bill to suspend a decree. A bill brought to set aside a decree.

bill to take testimony de bene esse (dee or də bee-nee es-ee also day ben-ay es-ay). A bill brought to take testimony pertinent to pending litigation from a witness who may be unavailable at the time of trial.

cross-bill. A bill brought by the defendant against the plaintiff in the same suit, or against other defendants in the same suit, relating to the matters alleged in the original bill.

nonoriginal bill. A bill relating to some matter already litigated by the same parties. ● It is an addition to or a continuation of an original bill.

original bill. A bill relating to some matter that has never before been litigated by the same parties having the same interests.

skeleton bill of exceptions. A bill of exceptions that, in addition to the formal parts, contains only the court's directions to the clerk to copy or insert necessary documents into the record for appellate review, but does not contain the actual evidence or trial-court rulings. ● For example, the statement "the clerk will insert the official transcript here" is typically a skeleton bill.

supplemental bill. A bill filed for the purpose of adding something to an original bill. ● This addition usu. results from the discovery of new facts or from a new understanding of facts after the defendant has put on a defense.

supplemental bill in nature of bill of review. See bill in the nature of a bill of review.

3. A legislative proposal offered for debate before its enactment.

appropriation bill. A bill that authorizes governmental expenditures. ● The federal government cannot spend money unless Congress has appropriated the funds. U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 7. See APPROPRIATION (2), (3).

clean bill. A bill that has been changed so much by a legislative committee that it is better to introduce a new bill (a "clean" one) than to explain the changes made.

deficiency bill. An appropriation bill covering expenses omitted from the general appropriation bills, or for which insufficient appropriations were made. ● An urgent deficiency bill covers immediate expenses usu. for one item, and a general deficiency bill covers a variety of items.

engrossed bill. A bill passed by one house of the legislature.

enrolled bill. A bill passed by both houses of the legislature and signed by their presiding officers. See ENROLLED-BILL RULE.

house bill. (often cap.) A legislative bill being considered by a house of representatives. — Abbr. H.B.

money bill. See revenue bill.

omnibus bill. 1. A single bill containing various distinct matters, usu. drafted in this way to force the executive either to accept all the unrelated minor provisions or to veto the major provision. 2. A bill that deals with all proposals relating to a particular subject, such as an "omnibus judgeship bill" covering all proposals for new judgeships or an "omnibus crime bill" dealing with different subjects such as new crimes and grants to states for crime control.

private bill. A bill relating to a matter of personal or local interest only. Cf. SPECIAL LAW.

"A private Bill is a measure for the interest of some person or class of persons, whether an individual, a corporation, or the inhabitants of a county, town, parish, or other locality, and originates on the motion of some member of the [legislature] in which the Bill is introduced." Courtenay P. Ilbert, Legislative Methods and Forms 28 (1901).

public bill. A bill relating to public policy in the whole community.

revenue bill. A bill that levies or raises taxes. ● Federal revenue bills must originate in the House of Representatives. U.S. Const. art. I, § 7, cl. 1. — Also termed money bill.

senate bill. (often cap.) A legislative bill being considered by a senate. — Abbr. S.B.

4. An enacted statute <the GI Bill>. 5. An itemized list of charges; an invoice <hospital bill>. See FEE STATEMENT.

bill of parcels. 1. A seller's itemized list of goods and prices, intended to assist a buyer in detecting any mistakes or omissions in a shipment of goods. 2. INVOICE.

bill payable. See account payable under ACCOUNT.

bill receivable. See account receivable under ACCOUNT.

bill rendered. See account rendered under ACCOUNT.

6. A bill of exchange; a draft <the bank would not honor the unsigned bill>. See DRAFT (1).

advance bill. A bill of exchange drawn before the shipment of the goods.

domestic bill. 1. A bill of exchange that is payable in the state or country in which it is drawn. 2. A bill on which both the drawer and drawee reside within the same state or country. — Also termed (in sense 2) inland bill of exchange. Cf. foreign bill.

finance bill. A bill of exchange drawn by a bank in one country on a bank in another country for the purpose of raising short-term credit. • Finance bills are often issued in tight money periods, and usu. have maturity dates of more than 60 days. — Also termed banker's bill; working capital acceptance.

foreign bill. A bill of exchange drawn in one state or country and payable in another. Cf. domestic bill.

inland bill of exchange. See domestic bill.

investment bill. A bill of exchange purchased at a discount and intended to be held to maturity as an investment.

7. A formal document or note; an instrument <bill of sale>.

"The expression 'bill of sale' includes bills of sale, assignments, transfers, declarations of trust without transfer, inventories of goods with receipts thereto attached, or receipts for purchase-monies of goods, and other assurances of personal chattels, and also powers of attorney, authorities, or licences to take possession of personal chattels as security for any debt, and also any agreement, whether intended or not to be followed by the execution of any other instrument, by which a right in equity to any personal chattels, or to any charge or security thereon, shall be conferred . . ." Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Personal Property 60 (11th ed. 1881) (tracking the definition in the [U.K.] Bills of Sale Act of 1878).

"A transfer may be either an absolute assignment by way of gift or sale, or an assignment by way of mortgage or security only; but in either case when a written document of any sort is used to effect the transfer, the document is called technically a 'bill of sale.'" Arthur Weldon & H. Gibson Rivington, Gibson's Conveyancing 302 (14th ed. 1933).

bill obligatory. A written promise to pay; a promissory note under seal. — Also termed single bond. See NOTE (1).

bill of debt. A debt instrument, such as a bill obligatory or promissory note.

bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

bill penal. A written promise to pay that carries a penalty in excess of the underlying debt for failure to pay. Cf. bill single.

bill single. A written promise to pay that is not under seal and has no penalty for failure to pay. — Also termed single bill. Cf. bill penal.

grand bill of sale. 1. Hist. An instrument used to transfer title to a ship that is at sea. 2. An instrument used to transfer title of a ship from the builder to the first purchaser.

single bill. See bill single.

skeleton bill. A bill drawn, indorsed, or accepted in blank.

8. A piece of paper money . 9. A promissory note <the debtor signed a bill for $7,000>.

billable hour. A unit of time used by an attorney or paralegal to account for work performed and chargeable to a client. • Billable hours are usu. divided into quarters or tenths of an hour.

billable time. An attorney's or paralegal's time that is chargeable to a client. Cf. NONBILLABLE TIME.

bill of costs. See BILL (2).

bill of credit. 1. Legal tender in the form of paper, issued by a state and involving the faith of the state, designed to circulate as money in the ordinary uses of business. 2. LETTER OF CREDIT.

bill of debt. See BILL (7).

bill of discovery. See BILL (2).

bill of entry. Maritime law. A written description of goods filed by an importer with customs officials to obtain permission to unload a ship's goods.

bill of evidence. See BILL (2).

bill of exceptions. See BILL (2).

bill of exchange. See DRAFT (1).

bill of foreclosure. See BILL (2).

bill of health. Maritime law. A statement certifying the healthy condition of a ship's cargo and crew. • The bill is issued by the port authority from which a vessel sails and is shown to the port authority at the ship's destination as proof that the ship's cargo and crew are disease-free. A "clean" bill states that no contagious or infectious diseases were present at the port; a "touched" or "foul" bill states that the named disease was suspected, anticipated, or actually present.

bill of indemnity. 1. Hist. An act of Parliament passed annually to protect officeholders who unwittingly fail to take an oath necessary for officeholding from liability for acts done in an official capacity. • A more general statute, the Promissory Oaths Act, replaced the bill of indemnity in 1868. 2. A law protecting a public official from liability for official acts. 3. An initial pleading by which a plaintiff seeks to require another (often an insurance company) to discharge the plaintiff's liability to a third person.

bill of indictment. An instrument presented to a grand jury for the jury's determination whether sufficient evidence exists to formally charge the accused with a crime. See INDICTMENT; NO BILL; TRUE BILL.

bill of information. 1. INFORMATION. 2. Hist. A civil suit begun by the Crown or by those under its protection, such as a charity.

bill of interpleader. See BILL (2).

bill of lading (layd-ing). A document of title acknowledging the receipt of goods by a carrier or by the shipper's agent; a document that indicates the receipt of goods for shipment and that is issued by a person engaged in the business of transporting or forwarding goods. • An airbill is usu. included within the definition of the term. — Abbr. B/L. — Also termed waybill.

"A bill of lading may be regarded in three several aspects. (1) It is a receipt given by the master of a ship acknowledging that the goods specified in the bill have been put on board; (2) it is the document [that] contains the terms of the contract for the carriage of the goods agreed upon between the shipper of the goods and the shipowner (whose agent the master of the ship is); and (3) it is a 'document of title' to the goods, of which it is the symbol. It is by means of this document of title that the goods themselves may be dealt with by the owner of them while they are still on board ship and upon the high seas." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 380 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

clean bill of lading. 1. A bill of lading containing no clause or notation qualifying the bill's terms. 2. Maritime law. A bill of lading that, by not providing for storage of goods on a ship's deck, implies that the goods are to be stowed belowdecks.

destination bill of lading. A bill procured to be issued at the shipping or other destination rather than at the place of shipment. UCC § 7-305.

foul bill of lading. A bill of lading that shows on its face that the goods were damaged or that there was a shortage of goods at the time of shipment.

negotiable bill of lading. A bill of lading calling for the delivery of goods to the bearer or to a named person's order. UCC § 7-104.

ocean bill of lading. A negotiable bill of lading used in shipment by water. — Often shortened to ocean bill.

onboard bill of lading. A bill of lading reflecting that goods have been loaded onto a ship. — Often shortened to onboard bill.

order bill of lading. A negotiable bill of lading stating that the goods are consigned to the order of the person named in the bill.

overseas bill of lading. A bill of lading used for overseas shipment by water or air. UCC § 2-323. — Often shortened to overseas bill.

straight bill of lading. A nonnegotiable bill of lading that specifies a consignee to whom the carrier is contractually obligated to deliver the goods. — Also termed nonnegotiable bill of lading.

through bill of lading. A bill of lading by which a carrier transports goods to a designated destination, even though the carrier will have to use a connecting carrier for part of the passage. UCC § 7-302. — Often shortened to through bill.

bill of Middlesex. Hist. A process by which the Court of the King's Bench in Middlesex obtains jurisdiction over a defendant who resides in a county outside the jurisdiction of the Court, by alleging a fictitious trespass in a county over which the court has jurisdiction. ● Once the sheriff returns the bill noting that the defendant is not in the county where the trespass occurred, a latitat is issued to the sheriff of the defendant's actual residence. See LATITAT.

"The bill of Middlesex . . . is a kind of capias, directed to the sheriff of that county, and commanding him to take the defendant and have him before our lord the king at Westminster on a day prefixed, to answer to the plaintiff of a plea of trespass. For this accusation of trespass it is, that gives the court of king's bench jurisdiction in other civil causes, as was formerly observed; since when once the defendant is taken into custody . . . of this court, may here be prosecuted for any other species of injury." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 285 (1768).

bill of mortality. Hist. A record of the number of deaths occurring in a given district. ● Bills of mortality were compiled — often week to week — in England from late in the 16th century to the 19th century as a way to keep track of the plague and other highly contagious diseases.

bill of pains and penalties. A legislative act that, though similar to a bill of attainder, prescribes punishment less severe than capital punishment. ● Bills of pains and penalties are included within the U.S. Constitution's ban of bills of attainder. U.S. Const. art I, § 9.

bill of parcels. See BILL (5).

bill of particulars. A formal, detailed statement of the claims or charges brought by a plaintiff or a prosecutor, usu. filed in response to the defendant's request for a more specific complaint. — Also termed statement of particulars. See MOTION FOR MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT.

"Although it has been said that the bill of particulars is not a discovery device, it seems plain that it is a means of discovery, though of a limited nature. It is the one method open to a defendant in a criminal case to secure the details of the charge against him." 1 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 129, at 646-47 (3d ed. 1999).

bill of peace. See BILL (2).

bill of review. See BILL (2).

bill of revivor. See BILL (2).

bill of revivor and supplement. See BILL (2).

bill of rights. 1. (usu. cap.) A section or addendum, usu. in a constitution, defining the situations in which a politically organized society will permit free, spontaneous, and individual activity, and guaranteeing that governmental powers will not be used in certain ways; esp., the first ten amendments to the U.S. Constitution. 2. (cap.) One of the four great charters of English liberty (1 W. & M., 1689), embodying in statutory form all the principles of the other three charters, namely, Magna Carta, the Petition of Right (3 Car., 1628), and the Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. 2, 1679).

bill of sale. An instrument for the conveyance of title to personal property, absolutely or by way of security. Cf. DEED.

bill of sight. Maritime law. A declaration made to a customs officer by an importer who is unsure about what is being shipped. • The bill of sight allows an importer to inspect the goods before paying duties.

bill penal. See BILL (7).

bill quia timet. See BILL (2).

bill receivable. See account receivable under ACCOUNT.

bill rendered. See account rendered under ACCOUNT.

bills and notes. See PAPER.

bills in a set. A bill of lading made up of a series of independent parts, each bearing a number and providing that goods delivered against any one part void the other parts. • Traditionally, in overseas-goods shipments, the parts of this type of bill were sent under separate cover so that if one was lost, the buyer could take delivery of the goods with another one. UCC § 7-304.

bill single. See BILL (7).

bill taken pro confesso (proh kən-fes-oh). [Latin "as if admitted"] Hist. An order issued by a court of equity when a defendant fails to file an answer.

bill to carry a decree into execution. See BILL (2).

bill to perpetuate testimony. See BILL (2).

bill to suspend a decree. See BILL (2).

bill to take testimony de bene esse. See BILL (2).

bimetallism. A monetary system in which currency is defined in terms of two metals (usu. gold and silver), both being legal tender and with a fixed rate of exchange between them. •

The American money system was based on a bimetallic standard from 1792 to 1873.

bind, vb. To impose one or more legal duties on (a person or institution) <the contract binds the parties> <courts are bound by precedent>. — binding, adj. — bindingness, n.

binder. 1. A document in which the buyer and the seller of real property declare their common intention to bring about a transfer of ownership, usu. accompanied by the buyer's initial payment. 2. Loosely, the buyer's initial payment in the sale of real property. Cf. EARNEST MONEY. 3. An insurer's memorandum giving the insured temporary coverage while the application for an insurance policy is being processed or while the formal policy is being prepared. — Also termed binding receipt; binding slip.

binding, adj. 1. (Of an agreement) that binds . 2. (Of an order) that requires obedience <the temporary injunction was binding on the parties>.

binding agreement. See AGREEMENT.

binding precedent. See PRECEDENT.

binding receipt. See BINDER.

binding slip. See BINDER.

bind over, vb. 1. To put (a person) under a bond or other legal obligation to do something, esp. to appear in court. 2. To hold (a person) for trial; to turn (a defendant) over to a sheriff or warden for imprisonment pending further judicial action. • A court may bind over a defendant if it finds at a preliminary examination that enough evidence exists to require a trial on the charges made against the defendant. — binding over, n. — bindover, adj.

bindover hearing. See PRELIMINARY HEARING.

biological child. See natural child under CHILD.

biological father. See natural father under FATHER.

biological warfare. See WARFARE.

bipartite, adj. (Of an instrument) executed in two parts by both parties.

birretum (bə-ret-əm). [Law Latin] A cap or coif formerly worn by British judges and serjeants-at-law.

birth. The complete extrusion of a newborn baby from the mother's body.

birth certificate. A formal document that records a person's birthdate, birthplace, and parentage.

birth mother. A biological mother, as opposed to an adoptive mother.

birth record. Statistical data kept by a governmental entity concerning persons' birthdates, birthplaces, and parentage.

bi-scot. Hist. English law. A fine imposed for not repairing banks, ditches, and causeways.

bishop. The chief superintendent and highest-ranking member of the clergy within a diocese.
● The bishop is subject to the archbishop of a province.

"[A] bishop . . . has several courts under him, and may visit at pleasure every part of his diocese. His chancellor is appointed to hold his courts for him, and to assist him in matters of ecclesiastical law. . . ." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 370 (1765).

bishopric (bish-ə-prik). 1. DIOCESE. 2. The office of a bishop.

Bishop's Court. Hist. Eccles. law. A court held in the cathedral of each diocese, the judge being the bishop's chancellor, who applied civil canon law. ● The jurisdiction included appeals from the Court of Archdeacon. In a large diocese, the bishop's chancellor would have commissaries in remote parts who held consistory courts. See CONSISTORY COURT.

biting rule. A rule of construction that once a deed or will grants a fee simple, a later provision attempting to cut down, modify, or qualify the grant will be held void.

Bivens action. A lawsuit brought to redress a federal official's violation of a constitutional right. Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S.Ct. 1999 (1971). ● A Bivens action allows federal officials to be sued in a manner similar to that set forth at 42 USCA § 1983 for state officials who violate a person's constitutional rights under color of state law.

B/L. abbr. BILL OF LADING.

blackacre. A fictitious tract of land used in legal discourse (esp. law-school hypotheticals) to discuss real-property issues. ● When another tract of land is needed in a hypothetical, it is often termed "whiteacre."

"Blackacre is the most celebrated tract of land in the world of the law. . . . Blackacre is wholly mythical, yet totally real. It is a concept, living in the realm of the mind and doubly valuable since much of the law of property has the same type of reality." John E. Cribbet, Principles of the Law of Property 2 (2d ed. 1975).

Black Act. Hist. An English statute (9 Geo. ch. 22) establishing the death penalty for the unlawful killing or maiming of animals. ● The statute was passed in 1722 in the wake of crimes committed by persons with faces blackened or otherwise disguised. The statute was repealed in 1827. The classic study of this law is E.P. Thompson, Whips and Hunters: The Origins of the Black Act (1975).

Black Acts. Scots law. Statutes of the Scottish Parliament passed from 1535 to 1594 and recorded in a book printed in black letter.

Black Book of the Exchequer. Hist. A record book containing treaties, conventions, charters, papal bulls, and other English state documents.
● It dates from the 13th century. — Also termed Liber Niger Parvus.

black cap. A square cap worn by English judges on certain state or solemn occasions. ● The black cap was formerly worn by a judge when handing down a death sentence.

black codes. (usu. cap.) Hist. 1. Antebellum state laws enacted to regulate the institution of slavery. 2. Laws enacted shortly after the Civil War in the ex-Confederate states to restrict the liberties of the newly freed slaves to ensure a supply of inexpensive agricultural labor and to maintain white supremacy.

"Clearly, leaders of the old South who survived the war were in no mood for racial equality. It was a bitter enough pill that the slaves were legally free; there was no inclination to go beyond the formal status. The Black Codes of 1865, passed in almost all of the states of the old Confederacy, were meant to replace slavery with some kind of caste system and to preserve as much as possible of the prewar way of life." Lawrence M. Friedman, A History of American Law 504 (2d ed. 1985).

blackletter law. One or more legal principles that are old, fundamental, and well settled. ● The term refers to the law printed in books set in Gothic type, which is very bold and black. — Also termed hornbook law.

blacklist, vb. To put the name of (a person) on a list of those who are to be boycotted or punished <the firm blacklisted the former employe>. — blacklist, n.

blackmail, n. A threatening demand made without justification; EXTORTION (1). — blackmail, vb. Cf. GRAYMAIL; GREENMAIL; FEEMAIL.

"[Blackmail is] a certain rate of Money, Corn, Cattle, or other consideration, paid to some inhabiting upon, or near the borders, being persons of name and power, allied with . . . known Robbers . . . to be thereby by them freed and protected from the danger of those Spoil-takers." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

"'Black-mail' (black rent) was anciently used to indicate 'rents reserved in work, grain or baser money' (i.e. baser than silver). It was also employed at one time to refer to 'a tribute formerly exacted in the north of England and in Scotland by freebooting chiefs for protection from pillage.' [Quoting American College Dictionary (1948).] Such practice was extortion, in the literal sense, and hence 'blackmail' is frequently used to indicate statutory extortion or sometimes an extorsive threat. And the federal statute forbidding the sending of an extorsive threat by mail has been referred to as the 'blackmail statute.'" Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 451 (3d ed. 1982).

blackmail suit. See SUIT.

black maria. Slang. A locked van used by the police to transport prisoners to and from jail.

blank indorsement. See INDORSEMENT.

blank lien. See LIEN.

blank stock. See STOCK.

blasphemy (blas-fə-mee), n. Irreverence toward God, religion, a religious icon, or something else considered sacred. • Blasphemy was a crime at common law and remains so in some U.S. jurisdictions, but it is rarely if ever enforced because of its questionable constitutionality under the First Amendment. — blaspheme (blas-feem or blas-feem), vb. — blasphemous (blas-fə-məs), adj. — blasphemer (blas-fee-mər), n.

“Blasphemy is the malicious revilement of God and religion. In England blasphemy was the malicious revilement of the Christian religion. . . . Blasphemy has been held to be a common-law crime [in the United States] because of its tendency to stir up breaches of the peace. It is expressly made punishable by some of the statutes.”
Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 474, 475 (3d ed. 1982).

blended fund. See FUND (1).

blended trust. See TRUST.

blind entry. See ENTRY (2).

blind pig. See BLIND TIGER.

blind plea. See PLEA (1).

blind selling. The sale of goods without giving a buyer the opportunity to examine them.

blind tiger. Slang. A place where intoxicants are illegally sold. • This term was commonly used during Prohibition. — Also termed blind pig. See PROHIBITION (3).

blind trust. See TRUST.

bloc. A group of persons or countries aligned with a common interest or purpose, even if only temporarily <voting bloc>.

block, n. 1. A municipal area enclosed by streets <three blocks away>. See LOT (1). 2. A quantity of things bought or sold as a unit .

blockade. Int’l law. A belligerent’s prevention of access to or egress from an enemy’s ports by stationing ships or squadrons in such a position that they can intercept vessels attempting to enter or leave those ports. • To be binding, a blockade must be effective — that is, it must be maintained by a force sufficient to prevent access to ports.

blockage rule. Tax. The principle that a large block of stock shares may be valued at less than the sum of the values of the individual shares because such a large block may be difficult to sell at full price.

Blockburger test. See SAME-EVIDENCE TEST.

blockbusting. The act or practice, usu. by a real-estate broker, of persuading property owners to sell their property quickly, and often at a loss, to avoid an imminent influx of members of minority groups. • Blockbusting is illegal in many states.

full blood. The relationship existing between persons having the same two parents; un-mixed ancestry. — Also termed whole blood; entire blood.

half blood. The relationship existing between persons having the same father or mother, but not both parents in common.

inheritable blood. Hist. A relationship between an ancestor and an heir that the law recognizes for purposes of passing good title to property.

mixed blood. The relationship between persons whose ancestors are of different races or nationalities.

"The term 'mixed bloods,' as used in treaties and statutes, has been held to include persons of half, or more or less than half, Indian blood, derived either from the father or from the mother." 42 C.J.S. Indians § 3 (1991).

whole blood. See full blood.

blood, corruption of the. See CORRUPTION OF BLOOD.

blood alcohol content. The concentration of alcohol in one's bloodstream, expressed as a percentage. • Blood alcohol content is used to determine whether a person is legally intoxicated, esp. under a driving-while-intoxicated law. In many states, a blood alcohol content of .08% is enough to charge a person with an offense. — Abbr. BAC. — Also termed blood alcohol count; blood alcohol concentration. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE; DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED.

blood feud. A state of hostility between families in which one family seeks to avenge the killing of one of its members by killing a member of the other family.

"Anglo-Saxon polity preserved, even down to the Norman Conquest, many traces of a time when kinship was the strongest of all bonds. Such a stage of society, we hardly need add, is not confined to any one region of the world or any one race of men. . . . When it puts on the face of strife between hostile kindreds, it is shown in the war of tribal factions, and more specifically in the blood-feud. A man's kindred are his avengers; and, as it is their right and honour to avenge him, so it is their duty to make amends for his misdeeds, or else maintain his cause in fight. Step by step, as the power of the State waxes, the self-centred and self-helping autonomy of the kindred wanes. Private feud is controlled, regulated, put, one may say, into legal harness; the avenging and the protecting clan on the slain and the slayer are made pledges and auxiliaries of public justice." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 31 (2d ed. 1898).

blood-grouping test. A test used in paternity and illegitimacy cases to determine whether a particular man could be the father of a child. • The test does not establish paternity; rather, it eliminates men who could not be the father. See PATERNITY TEST.

blood money. 1. Hist. A payment given by a murderer's family to the next of kin of the murder victim. 2. A reward given for the apprehension of a person charged with a crime, esp. capital murder.

hension of a person charged with a crime, esp. capital murder.

Bluebook. The citation guide — formerly titled A Uniform System of Citation — that is generally considered the authoritative reference for American legal citations. • The book's complete title is The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation. Although it has been commonly called the Bluebook for decades, the editors officially included Bluebook in the title only in the mid-1990s. The book is compiled by the editors of the Columbia Law Review, the Harvard Law Review, the University of Pennsylvania Law Review, and The Yale Law Journal.

blue chip, n. A corporate stock that is considered a safe investment because the corporation has a history of stability, consistent growth, and reliable earnings. — Also termed blue-chip stock. — blue-chip, adj.

blue law. A statute regulating or prohibiting commercial activity on Sundays. • Although blue laws were formerly common, they have declined since the 1980s, when many courts held them invalid because of their origin in religion (i.e., Sunday being the Christian Sabbath). Blue laws usu. pass constitutional challenge if they are enacted to support a nonreligious purpose, such as a day of rest for workers. — Also termed Sunday law; Sunday-closing law; Sabbath law; Lord's Day Act.

Blue List. Securities. A daily listing (on blue paper) of secondary-market offerings of municipal bonds.

"Municipal bonds available for resale in the secondary market are listed by state in The Blue List, along with such information as the number of bonds offered, issuer, maturity date, coupon rate, price, and dealer making the offering. Ratings are not included. But there are sections on settlement dates of recent new offerings, prerefunded bonds, and miscellaneous offerings (some U.S. government and agency obligations, railroad equipment trust certificates, corporate bonds, and even preferred stocks). The dollar value of listings, referred to as the floating supply, gives an indication of the size and liquidity of the secondary municipal market." The New York Institute of Finance, How the Bond Market Works 185 (1988).

blue-pencil test. A judicial standard for deciding whether to invalidate the whole contract or only the offending words. • Under this standard, only the offending words are invalidated if it would be possible to delete them simply by running a blue pencil through them, as opposed to changing, adding, or rearranging words.

blue-ribbon jury. See JURY.

blue-sky, vb. To approve (the sale of securities) in accordance with blue-sky laws <the company's IPO has not yet been blue-skyed>.

blue-sky, adj. (Of a security) having little value.

blue-sky law. A state statute establishing standards for offering and selling securities, the purpose being to protect citizens from investing in fraudulent schemes or unsuitable companies.

"The first legislative attempts to regulate securities transactions were effected on the state level, with the first general securities law being said to have been enacted by the State of Kansas in 1911, and with 48 jurisdictions having enacted such statutes by 1933. These statutes were said to be enacted to stop the sale of stock in fly-by-night concerns, visionary oil wells, distant gold mines, and other fraudulent exploitations. A similar description of the early legislative purpose is that such acts were aimed at 'speculative schemes which have no more basis than so many feet of blue sky,' and this description has had a lasting influence in that state securities acts are commonly referred to as 'blue sky laws.'" 69A Am. Jur. 2d Securities Regulation — State § 1 (1993).

"The state legislatures entered the arena of securities regulation more than twenty years before Congress. . . . [T]he statutes, which vary widely in their terms and scope, are commonly referred to as 'blue sky' laws, an appellation with several suggested origins. It has been said, for example, that the Kansas legislature was spurred by the fear of fast-talking eastern industrialists selling everything including the blue sky." 1 Thomas Lee Hazen, Treatise on the Law of Securities Regulation § 8.1, at 490-92 (3d ed. 1995).

board. 1. A group of persons having managerial, supervisory, or advisory powers <board of directors>. 2. Daily meals (and sometimes lodging) furnished to a guest at an inn, boarding-house, or other lodging <room and board>.

Board of Governors. See FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD OF GOVERNORS.

Board of Green Cloth. Hist. A group of persons responsible for governing the royal-household staff, esp. in financial matters such as accounting for expenses and paying servants' wages. • The Board consisted of the Lord Steward and inferior officers, and its name derived from the green cloth that covered the table used by the Board to conduct its duties. In more ancient times, it kept the peace and main-

board of health. A municipal or state agency charged with protecting the public health.

Board of Immigration Appeals. The highest administrative tribunal for matters arising under U.S. immigration law, charged with hearing appeals from the Immigration and Naturalization Service. • The Board is made up of five permanent members appointed by the Attorney General and two immigration judges who serve on a temporary basis. Most cases are heard by panels of two permanent judges and one temporary judge. — Also termed Immigration Appeals Board.

board of legal specialization. A body, usu. an arm of a state bar association, that certifies qualified lawyers as specialists within a given field. • Typically, to qualify as a specialist, a lawyer must meet a specified level of experience, pass an examination, and provide favorable recommendations from peers.

board of pardons. A state agency, of which the governor is usu. a member, authorized to pardon persons convicted of crimes.

board of parole. See PAROLE BOARD.

Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences. A quasi-judicial body that reviews rejected patent applications and determines priority between rival patent applicants. See INTERFERENCE (2).

board of regents. A group of persons appointed to supervise an educational institution, esp. a university.

board of registration. A state agency authorized to license and discipline members of a trade or profession.

board of review. 1. A body that reviews administrative-agency decisions. 2. A body that reviews property-tax assessments. 3. In some cities, a board that reviews allegations of police misconduct.

Board of Tax Appeals. See TAX COURT, U.S.

bona fide holder for value. See HOLDER FOR VALUE.

bona fide judgment creditor. See JUDGMENT CREDITOR.

bona fide occupational qualification. An employment qualification that, although it may discriminate against a protected class (such as sex, religion, or national origin), relates to an essential job duty and is considered reasonably necessary to the operation of the particular business. • Such a qualification is not illegal under federal employment-discrimination laws. — Abbr. BFOQ.

“The bona fide occupational qualification is a complete defense. It is invoked when the defendant makes a distinction expressly forbidden by Title VII, such as the refusal to hire women or women with preschool-age children, the reassignment of pregnant employees, or the exclusion of particular ethnic groups from particular jobs. . . . The employer's motivation for excluding the protected class is not significant in evaluating the BFOQ defense. The inquiry focuses on the necessity of using an expressly forbidden classification. The fact that the employer adopted the exclusion for invidious reasons, rather than for the business consideration on which the defense is based, is not material. Thus, if the exclusion, in fact, is proved to be necessary it may be used, even if invidiously motivated." Mack A. Player, Employment Discrimination Law § 5.29, at 282-83 (1988).

bona fide operation. A real, ongoing business.

bona fide possession. See POSSESSION (3).

bona fide purchaser. See PURCHASER (1).

bona peritura. See BONA.

bona utlagatorum. See bona fugitivorum under BONA.

bona vacantia. See BONA.

bona waviata. See BONA.

bond, n. 1. An obligation; a promise.

"[A]n obligation, or in English a 'bond,' is a document written and sealed containing a confession of a debt; in later times 'contract' is the genus, 'obligation' the species." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law 207 (2d ed. 1899).

2. A written promise to pay money or do some act if certain circumstances occur or a certain time elapses; a promise that is defeasible upon a condition subsequent.

"The fact that an instrument is called a 'bond' is not conclusive as to its character. It is necessary to disregard nomenclature and look to the substance of the bond itself. The distinguishing feature of a bond is that it is an obligation to pay a fixed sum of money, at a definite time, with a stated interest, and it makes no difference whether a bond is designated by that name or by some other, if it possesses the characteristics of a bond. There is no distinction between bonds and certificates of indebtedness which conform to all the characteristics of bonds." 1 Silvester E. Quindry, Bonds & Bondholders Rights & Remedies § 2, at 3-4 (1934).

appeal bond. A bond that an appellate court may require from an appellant in a civil case to ensure payment of the costs of appeal; a bond required as a condition to bringing an appeal or staying execution of the judgment appealed from. Fed. R. App. P. 7. Cf. superse-deas bond.

appearance bond. See bail bond.

attachment bond. A bond that a defendant gives to recover attached property. • The plaintiff then looks to the bond issuer to satisfy a judgment against the defendant.

average bond. Marine insurance. A bond given to the captain of a ship by consignees of cargo subject to general average, guaranteeing payment of their contribution once it is ascertained, on condition that their goods be promptly delivered.

bail bond. A bond given to a court by a criminal defendant's surety, guaranteeing that the defendant will duly appear in court in the future; a bond given to obtain a prisoner's release and to secure the prisoner's appearance to answer legal process. • The effect of the release on bail bond is to transfer custody of the prisoner from the officers of the law to the custody of the surety on the bail bond, whose undertaking is to redeliver the defendant to legal custody at the time and place appointed in the bond. — Also termed appearance bond. See BAIL.

bid bond. A bond filed in public construction projects to ensure that the bidding contractor will enter into the contract. • The bid bond is a type of performance bond.

blank bond. Archaic. A bond in which the space for the creditor's name is left blank.

blanket bond. 1. A bond covering several persons or projects that require performance bonds. 2. See fidelity bond.

bond for land. A bond given by the seller of land to a buyer, binding the seller to convey once the buyer tenders the agreed price. — Also termed bond for a deed. Cf. BINDER (1).

bond of corroboration. An additional obligation undertaken to corroborate the debtor's original obligation.

bottomry bond. A contract for the loan of money on a ship, usu. at extraordinary interest, for maritime risks encountered during a certain period or for a certain voyage. • The loan can be enforced only if the vessel survives the voyage. — Also termed bottomage bond. Cf. respondentia bond.

"A bottomry bond, strictly speaking, is a mortgage or pledge of a ship by the owner or agent, to secure the repayment of money lent for the use of the ship; and the conditions of it are, that if the ship is lost, the lender loses his money; but if it arrives, then, not only the ship itself is liable, but also the person of the borrower." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 169 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

"[T]he bottomry bond . . . is a sort of mortgage on a ship, entered into for the purpose of raising money in case of necessity in a foreign port. The advance of communications has caused bottomry and respondentia bonds to pass virtually out of use." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 1-10, at 25 n.85 (2d ed. 1975).

claim-property bond. See replevin bond.

common-defeasance bond. See penal bond.

common-law bond. A performance bond given by a construction contractor. • A common-law bond exceeds the requirements of a statutory performance bond because it provides additional coverage for construction projects. Cf. PERFORMANCE BOND.

common money bond. A promise to pay money as a penalty for failing to perform a duty or obligation.

cost bond. A bond given by a litigant to secure the payment of court costs.

counterbond. A bond to indemnify a surety.

delivery bond. See forthcoming bond.

depository bond. A bond given by a bank to protect a public body's deposits should the bank become insolvent.

discharging bond. A bond that both permits a defendant to regain possession of attached property and releases the property from the attachment lien. — Also termed dissolution bond. See forthcoming bond.

executor's bond. A bond given to ensure the executor's faithful administration of the estate. See fiduciary bond.

"The English law did not require an executor to give bond because he was appointed by the testator and his authority was derived from the will rather than court appointment. Some American jurisdictions do not require a bond of an executor. In the majority of our states a testator may by will dispense with the executor's bond, but in absence of such testamentary provision a bond will be required." Thomas E. Atkinson, Handbook of the Law of Wills § 113, at 621 (2d ed. 1953).

fidelity bond. A bond to indemnify an employer or business for loss due to embezzlement, larceny, or gross negligence by an employee or other person holding a position of trust. — Also termed blanket bond.

fiduciary bond. A type of surety bond required of a trustee, administrator, executor, guardian, conservator, or other fiduciary to ensure the proper performance of duties.

forthcoming bond. 1. A bond guaranteeing that something will be produced or forthcoming at a particular time, or when called for. 2. A bond (usu. given to a sheriff) to permit a person to repossess attached property in exchange for that person's commitment to surrender the property in the event of an adverse judgment. — Also termed delivery bond. Cf. replevin bond.

general-average bond. Maritime law. A cargo owner's bond exacted by a carrier to ensure that the owner will pay the general average contribution. • When the contribution amounts are disputed, the carrier requires this bond before agreeing to unload the ship. — Also termed average bond. See general average under AVERAGE (3).

guaranty bond. A bond combining the features of a fidelity and a surety bond, securing both payment and performance.

heritable bond. Scots law. A bond secured by land.

hypothecation bond. A bond given in the contract of bottomry or respondentia.

indemnity bond. A bond to reimburse the holder for any actual or claimed loss caused by the issuer's or some other person's conduct.

injunction bond. A bond required of an injunction applicant to cover the costs incurred by a wrongfully enjoined party. Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(c).

interim bond. 1. A bond set by a police officer when a person is arrested for a minor offense, such as a misdemeanor, without a warrant. • Although the bond allows the arrestee to be released, it requires that the person be available for arraignment. 2. A bond set by a judge or magistrate and attached to a misdemeanor warrant.

judicial bond. A bond to indemnify an adverse party in a lawsuit against loss occasioned by delay or by deprivation of property resulting from the lawsuit. • Judicial bonds are usu. classified according to the nature of the action in which they are required, as with appeal bonds, injunction bonds, attachment bonds, replevin bonds, forthcoming or redelivery bonds, and bail bonds. A bond of a fiduciary — such as a receiver, administrator, executor, or guardian — is often required as a condition to appointment.

liability bond. A bond intended to protect the assured from a loss arising from some event specified in the bond.

license bond. A bond required of a person seeking a license to engage in a specified business or to receive a certain privilege. — Also termed permit bond.

maintenance bond. A bond guaranteeing against construction defects for a period after the completion of the contracted-for work.

negotiable bond. A bond that can be transferred from the original holder to another.

official bond. A bond given by a public officer, conditioned on the faithful performance of the duties of office. • Official bond may also refer to a bond filed by an executor, guardian, trustee, or other fiduciary. See fiduciary bond.

payment bond. A bond given by a surety to cover any amounts that, because of the general contractor's default, are not paid to a subcontractor or materialman.

"[T]he bond serves two purposes: it assures the owner a lien-free project, and it induces suppliers and subcontractors to accept work on the project, perhaps at a lower price, because of the assurance that they will be paid. Since no additional charge is generally made for a payment bond when a performance bond is being purchased, the two are usually issued simultaneously." Grant S. Nelson, Real Estate Finance Law § 12.2, at 881 (3d ed. 1994).

peace bond. A bond required by a court from a person who has breached or threatened to breach the peace. See BREACH OF THE PEACE.

penal bond. A bond requiring the obligor to pay a specified sum as a penalty if the underlying obligation is not performed. — Also termed penal bill; common-defeasance bond.

performance bond. See PERFORMANCE BOND.

permit bond. See license bond.

personal bond. 1. See bail bond; BAIL. 2. A written document in which an obligor formally recognizes an obligation to pay money or to do a specified act.

probate bond. A bond, such as that filed by an executor, required by law to be given during a probate proceeding to ensure a faithful performance by the person under bond.

redelivery bond. See replevin bond.

refunding bond. A bond given to assure an executor that a legatee will return an estate distribution should the remaining estate assets be insufficient to pay the other legacies.

registered bond. A governmental or corporate obligation to pay money, represented by a single certificate delivered to the creditor. • The obligation is registered in the holder's name on the books of the debtor.

removal bond. 1. A bond to cover possible duties owed by a person who removes goods from a warehouse for export. 2. A bond required in some states when a litigant seeks to remove an action to another court.

replevin bond (ri-plev-in). 1. A bond given by a plaintiff to replevy or attach property in the defendant's possession before judgment is rendered in a replevin action. • The bond protects the attaching officer and ensures the property's safekeeping until the court decides whether it should be returned to the defendant. — Also termed replevy bond. See REPLEVIN. 2. A bond given by a defendant in a replevin action to regain attached property pending the outcome of litigation. • The bond does not discharge the attachment lien. — Also termed replevy bond; claim-property bond; redelivery bond. Cf. forthcoming bond.

respondentia bond (re-spon-den-shee-ə or ree-). A contract containing the pledge of a ship's cargo; a mortgage of a ship's cargo. Cf. bottomry bond.

simple bond. 1. A bond without a penalty. 2. A bond payable to a named obligee on demand or on a certain date.

statutory bond. A bond that literally or substantially meets the requirements of a statute.

straw bond. A bond, usu. a bail bond, that carries either a fictitious name or the name of a person who is unable to pay the sum guaranteed; a worthless or inadequate bond.

submission bond. A bond given by a litigant who agrees to submit a lawsuit to arbitration and to be bound by an arbitrator's award.

supersedeas bond (soo-pər-see-dee-əs). An appellant's bond to stay execution on a judgment during the pendency of the appeal. Fed. R. Civ. P. 62(d); Fed. R. App. P. 8(b). — Often shortened to supersedeas. See SUPERSEDE (2). Cf. appeal bond.

surety bond. See PERFORMANCE BOND.

ten-percent bond. A bail bond in the amount of 10% of the bond otherwise required for a defendant's release. • This type of bond usu. allows a defendant to arrange a bond without the services of a bondsman or other surety.

unsecured bail bond. A bond that holds a defendant liable for a breach of the bond's conditions (such as failure to appear in court), but that is not secured by a deposit of or lien on property. See RECOGNIZANCE.

3. A long-term, interest-bearing debt instrument issued by a corporation or governmental entity usu. to provide for a particular financial need; esp., such an instrument in which the debt is secured by a lien on the issuer's property. Cf. DEBENTURE.

"Typically debt securities are notes, debentures, and bonds. Technically a 'debenture' is an unsecured corporate obligation while a 'bond' is secured by a lien or mortgage on corporate property. However, the word 'bond' is often used indiscriminately to cover both bonds and debentures. . . . A 'bond' is a long term debt security while a 'note' is usually a shorter term obligation. Bonds are historically bearer instruments, negotiable by delivery, issued in multiples of $1,000 with interest payments represented by coupons that are periodically clipped and submitted for payment." Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 128 (3d ed. 1991).

accrual bond. A bond — usu. the last collateralized-mortgage-obligation issue — from which no principal or interest payment will be made until any bonds issued earlier have been fully paid. — Also termed Z-bond.

adjustment bond. A bond issued when a corporation is reorganized. — Also termed reorganization bond.

annuity bond. A bond that lacks a maturity date and that perpetually pays interest. — Also termed consol; perpetual bond; continued bond; irredeemable bond.

arbitrage bond. A municipal bond, the proceeds of which are invested in bonds paying a higher yield than that paid by the municipality on its own bonds. • Under the Internal Revenue Code, the tax-free aspect of municipal-bond income may be lost if the bonds are classified as arbitrage bonds. See ARBITRAGE.

assessment bond. A municipal bond repaid from property assessment taxes.

assumed bond. See guaranteed bond (1).

baby bond. A bond usu. having a face value of $1,000 or less.

bearer bond. A bond payable to the person holding it. • The transfer of possession transfers the bond's ownership. Cf. registered bond.

bond and mortgage. A bond that is backed by a mortgage on realty. — Also termed mortgage bond. Cf. DEBENTURE.

book-entry bond. A bond for which no written certificate is issued to reflect ownership.

callable bond. See redeemable bond.

chattel-mortgage bond. A bond secured by a mortgage on personal property.

closed-end mortgage bond. A mortgage bond with provisions prohibiting the debtor from issuing additional bonds against the bond's collateral.

collateral trust bond. 1. A bond representing a debt secured by the deposit of another security with a trustee. — Also termed collateral trust certificate. 2. A long-term corporate bond that is secured by other companies' mortgage bonds held by the corporation, which pledges and deposits the mortgage bonds in trust. • The interest on these collateral trust bonds is typically lower than that received on the bonds pledged; the surplus is used to form a sinking fund to redeem the collateral trust bonds. A holding company often issues these bonds by pledging the stock of a subsidiary.

commodity-backed bond. A bond with interest payments or principal repayment tied to the price of a specific commodity, such as gold. • This type of bond, which has a low interest rate but provides a hedge against inflation because the commodity price will usu. rise, is often issued by a firm with a stake in the commodity.

consolidated bond. 1. A railroad bond secured by a mortgage on the entire railroad line formed by several consolidated railroads. Cf. divisional bond. 2. A single bond that replaces two or more outstanding issues.

construction bond. A bond issued by a governmental entity for a building project.

convertible bond. A bond that can be exchanged for stock shares in the corporation that issued the bond.

corporate bond. 1. An interest-bearing instrument containing a corporation's promise to pay a fixed sum of money at some future time. • A corporate bond may be secured or unsecured. 2. A bond issued by a corporation, usu. having a maturity of ten years or longer.

county bond. A county-issued bond paid through a levy on a special taxing district, whether or not the district is coextensive with the county.

coupon bond. A bond with attached interest coupons that the holder may present to receive interest payments. See BOND COUPON.

cushion bond. A bond paying an uncommonly high interest rate.

debenture bond. See DEBENTURE (3).

deferred-interest bond. A bond whose interest payments are postponed for a time.

discount bond. A bond sold at its current market value, which is less than its face value. — Also termed non-interest-bearing bond.

divisional bond. A railroad bond secured by a mortgage on a specific segment of a consolidated railroad system. Cf. consolidated bond.

endorsed bond. See guaranteed bond (1).

equipment trust bond. A bond secured by tangible property, such as an airplane. • A trustee usu. holds title to the equipment, which is leased to the issuer. — Also termed equipment trust certificate.

first-mortgage bond. A long-term bond that has the first claim on specified assets.

flat bond. A bond that trades without accrued interest.

floating-interest bond. A bond with an interest rate that moves up and down with changing economic conditions.

flower bond. A Treasury bond redeemable before maturity if used to settle federal estate taxes. • Flower bonds were issued before April 1971 and reached final maturity in 1998.

foreign bond. A bond issued in a currency different from that used where the issuer is located, such as a Canadian-government bond that is denominated in U.S. dollars and issued in the United States.

full-faith-and-credit bond. See general-obligation bond.

general-mortgage bond. A corporate bond secured by a blanket mortgage on property. • The general-mortgage bond, however, is often less valuable because it is subordinate to prior mortgages.

general-obligation bond. A municipal bond payable from general revenue rather than from a special fund. • Such a bond has no collateral to back it other than the issuer's taxing power. — Often shortened to obli- gation bond. — Also termed full-faith-and-credit bond.

“There are two main types of bonds issued by local governments: general obligation bonds and revenue bonds. . . . Bonds will be assumed to be general obligation unless they themselves contain a clear promise to pay only out of a special fund.” Osborne M. Reynolds, Jr., Handbook of Local Government Law § 104, at 323 (1982).

gold bond. 1. Hist. A bond payable in gold coin or U.S. currency at the election of the bondholder. • This type of bond existed until 1933, when the U.S. monetary system abandoned the gold standard. 2. A commodity-backed bond that is secured by gold and issued by a gold-mining company.

government bond. See savings bond; government security under SECURITY (4).

guaranteed bond. 1. A bond issued by a corporation and guaranteed by a third party. • This type of bond is common among railroads. — Also termed endorsed bond; assumed bond; joint bond. 2. A bond issued by a subsidiary corporation whose parent corporation guarantees the principal and interest payments.

improvement bond. See revenue bond.

income bond. A corporate bond secured by the corporation's net income, after the payment of interest on senior debt. • Sometimes this type of bond is a cumulative-income bond, in which case, if the income in any year is insufficient to pay the full interest, the deficit is carried forward as a lien on any future income.

indeterminate bond. A callable bond with no set maturity date.

industrial-development bond. 1. A type of revenue bond in which interest and principal payments are backed by a corporation rather than a municipality. • This type of bond usu. finances a private business facility. 2. A tax-exempt municipal bond that finances a usu. local industry. — Also termed industrial-revenue bond.

interchangeable bond. A bond that can be exchanged for a different type of bond, such as a coupon bond that may be exchanged for a registered bond.

interest bond. A bond paid in lieu of interest due on other bonds.

investment-grade bond. A bond with a rating of BBB or better by the leading bond rating services. See INVESTMENT-GRADE RATING.

irredeemable bond. See annuity bond.

joint and several bond. A bond in which the principal and interest are guaranteed by two or more obligors.

joint bond. A bond signed by two or more obligors. • In contrast to a joint and several bond, all the obligors must be joined if an action is brought on the bond.

junior bond. A bond subordinate in priority to another bond.

junk bond. A high-risk, high-yield subordinated bond issued by a corporation with a below-standard industry rating.

leasehold-mortgage bond. A bond issued by a lessee and secured by the lessee's leasehold interest.

Lloyd's bond. Hist. English law. A corporate bond issued on work done or goods delivered. • A bond issued in this manner avoids any restriction on indebtedness existing either in law or in corporate bylaws. The term supposedly derives from an English lawyer named Lloyd, who is credited with devising the method.

mortgage bond. A bond secured by the issuer's real property.

multimaturity bond. See put bond.

municipal bond. A bond issued by a nonfederal government or governmental unit, such as a state bond to finance local improvements. • The interest received from a municipal bond may be exempt from federal, state, and local taxes. — Often shortened (in pl.) to municipals; munies. — Also termed municipal security.

noncallable bond. See noncallable security under SECURITY.

non-interest-bearing bond. See discount bond.

nonstatutory bond. See voluntary bond.

obligation bond. See general-obligation bond.

open-end mortgage bond. A mortgage bond that can be used as security for another bond issue.

optional bond. A bond that the holder may redeem before its maturity date if the issuer agrees.

option tender bond. See put bond.

participating bond. A bond that entitles the holder to a share of corporate profits but does not have a fixed interest rate.

passive bond. A bond bearing no interest. See passive debt under DEBT.

perpetual bond. See annuity bond.

post-obit bond. An agreement by which a borrower promises to pay to the lender a lump sum (exceeding the amount advanced) upon the death of a person whose property the borrower expects to inherit. • Equity traditionally enforces such bonds only if the terms are just and reasonable.

premium bond. A bond with a selling price above face or redemption value. See PREMIUM (3).

put bond. A bond that gives the holder the right to redeem it for full value at specified times before maturity. — Also termed multimaturity bond; option tender bond. Cf. put option under OPTION (4).

railroad-aid bond. A bond issued by a public body to fund railway construction.

redeemable bond. A bond that the issuer may call for payment. — Also termed callable bond.

re-funding bond. A bond that retires an outstanding bond.

registered bond. A bond that only the holder of record may redeem, enjoy benefits from, or transfer to another. Cf. bearer bond.

reorganization bond. See adjustment bond.

revenue bond. A government bond repayable from public funds.

savings bond. A nontransferable bond issued by the U.S. government.

school bond. A bond issued by a city or school district to fund school construction.

secured bond. A bond backed by some type of security. Cf. DEBENTURE (2).

serial bond. A bond issued concurrently with other bonds having different maturity dates.

series bonds. A group of bonds issued under the authority of the same indenture, but offered publicly at different times and with different maturity dates and interest rates.

single bond. See bill obligatory under BILL (7). sinking-fund bond. A bond backed by a sinking fund for bond redemption. See sinking fund under FUND (1).

special-tax bond. A municipal bond secured by taxes levied for a specific governmental purpose, usu. improvements. — Also termed special-assessment bond.

state bond. A bond issued by a state.

statutory bond. A bond given in accordance with a statute.

subordinated bond. See junior bond.

tax-exempt bond. A bond that pays tax-free interest.

term bond. A bond that matures concurrently with other bonds in that issue.

Treasury bond. See TREASURY BOND.

unsecured bond. See DEBENTURE (2).

voluntary bond. A bond not required by statute but given anyway. — Also termed nonstatutory bond.

zero-coupon bond. A bond paying no interest. • It is sold at a discount price and later redeemed at face value, the profit being the difference. — Also termed passive bond. See zero-coupon security under SECURITY (4).

bond, vb. 1. To secure payment by providing a bond <at the creditor's insistence, Gabriel consolidated and bonded his various loans>. 2. To provide a bond for (a person) <the company bonded its off-site workers>.

bond and mortgage. See BOND (3).

bond conversion. The exchange of a convertible bond for another asset, usu. stock.

bond coupon. The part of a coupon bond that is clipped by the holder and surrendered to obtain an interest payment. See coupon bond under BOND (3).

bond covenant. A bond-indenture provision that protects bondholders by specifying what the issuer may or may not do, as by prohibiting the issuer from issuing more debt. See BOND INDENTURE (1).

bond creditor. See CREDITOR.

bond discount. See DISCOUNT (3).

bond dividend. See DIVIDEND.

bond for title. Real estate. The seller's retention of legal title until the buyer pays the purchase price. — Also termed bond for deed. Cf. contract for deed under CONTRACT.

bond fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

bondholder. One who holds a government or business bond.

bond indenture. 1. A contract between a bond issuer and bondholder outlining a bond's face value, interest rate, maturity date, and other features. 2. A mortgage held on specified corporate property to secure payment of the bond.

bonding company. See COMPANY.

bond issue. See ISSUE (2).

bondman. See BONDSMAN (2).

bond of corroboration. See BOND (2).

bond premium. See PREMIUM (3).

bond rating. A system of evaluating and appraising the investment value of a bond issue.

bond retirement. The cancellation of a bond that has been called or paid.

bondsman. 1. One who guarantees a bond; a surety. 2. A serf or peasant; VILLEIN. — Also termed (in sense 2) bondman.

bond table. A schedule used in determining a bond's current value by its coupon rate, its time to maturity, and its effective yield if held to maturity.

bond trust. See TRUST.

bones gents (bohn jents). [Law French "good men"] Hist. Qualified or competent persons; esp., men qualified to serve on a jury.

bonification (bahn-ə-fi-kay-shən). A tax remission, usu. on goods intended for export. • Bonification enables a commodity to be sold in a foreign market as if it had not been taxed.

boni homines (boh-ni hom-ə-nee-z). [Law Latin "good men"] Hist. Free tenants who judged each other in their lord's court.

"[W]e may find traces of juries in the laws of all those nations which adopted the feudal system, as in Germany, France, and Italy; who had all of them a tribunal composed of twelve good men and true, 'boni homines'" 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 349 (1768).

bonis cedere (boh-nis see-də-ree). [Latin "to cede one's goods"] Civil law. A transfer or surrender of property, usu. from a debtor to a creditor.

bonis non amovendis. See DE BONIS NON AMOVENDIS.

bonitarian ownership. See OWNERSHIP.

bonitary. See BONITARIAN.

bono et malo (boh-noh et mal-oh). See DE BONO ET MALO.

bonorum possessio contra tabulas (bə-noh-rəm pə-zesh-ee-oh kahn-trə tab-yə-ləs). [Latin "possession of goods against the testament"] Roman law. An order authorizing the applicant to take possession of an estate contrary to the testator's will. • Magistrates made such orders in certain cases, as where a testator passed over a son who was not expressly disinherited. — Also termed contra tabulas.

"The Praetor could not affect the civil validity of a will; he could not make or unmake a heres. He could, however, give bonorum possessio to a person, heres or not at civil law, which gave him power to take possession of the goods by appropriate steps, bonorum possessio contra tabulas . . ." W.W. Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law: From Augustus to Justinian 324 (Peter Stein ed., 3d ed. 1963).

bonum factum (boh-nəm fak-təm). [Latin] A good or proper act or deed. — Abbr. b.f.

bonus. 1. A premium paid in addition to what is due or expected <year-end bonus>. • In the employment context, workers' bonuses are not a gift or gratuity; they are paid for services or on consideration in addition to or in excess of the compensation that would ordinarily be given. 2. Oil & gas. A payment made to the lessee for the execution of an oil-and-gas lease <the lessee received a large bonus at closing>.

"The amount of bonus paid, usually referred to as a per acre amount, may fluctuate widely between properties. The amount paid depends upon the nature of the development activity in the vicinity. If the land is located in a semi-proven area, or in a logical extension of a proven field, the bonus paid may be substantial." Richard W. Hemingway, The Law of Oil and Gas § 2.5, at 57 (3d ed. 1991).

bonus share. See bonus stock under STOCK.

bonus stock. See STOCK.

bonus zoning. See incentive zoning under ZONING.

double-entry bookkeeping. A method of bookkeeping in which every transaction recorded by a business involves one or more "debit" entries and one or more "credit" entries. • The debit entries must equal the credit entries for each transaction recorded.

single-entry bookkeeping. A method of bookkeeping in which each transaction is recorded in a single record, such as a record of cash or credit accounts.

bookland (buuk-land). Hist. Land held under charter or deed; freehold land. • This was a privileged form of ownership (usu. free of the customary burdens on land) generally reserved for churches and leaders. — Also spelled bocland; bockland. — Also termed charter-land. Cf. LOANLAND; FOLKLAND.

"Charter-land is such as a man holds by charter, that is, by evidence in writing, which otherwise is called freehold. . . . [T]his land was held with more easy and commodious conditions, than folkland and copy-hold land held without writing; . . . it is a free and absolute inheritance; whereas land without writing is charged with payment and bondage; so that for the most part noblemen and persons of quality possess the former, and rustics the other. The first we call freehold and by charter: the other, land at the will of the lord." Termes de la Ley 80 (1st. Am. ed. 1812).

"Prior to the Conquest, property in land was divided into bocland, folcland, and laenland. The exact nature of these rights has been disputed, but probably bocland was held by owners of high station claiming under a charter of privileges originally granted by the King, while folcland was held by ordinary owners according to the custom of the district in which the land lay. Laenland, or loanland, appears to have represented something in the nature of a tenancy of a less enduring character. It derived its existence from the loan of land by one person to another, and hence emphasises the relation later known as that of feudal landlord and tenant. Furthermore, as bocland became more common, a tendency for laenland and bocland to coalesce appeared." A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter's Outlines of English Legal History 195 (5th ed. 1958).

bookmaker. A person who determines odds and receives bets on the outcome of events, esp. sports events. See BOOKMAKING.

bookmaking. Gambling that entails the taking and recording of bets on an event, such as a horse race.

book of original entry. A day-to-day record in which a business's transactions are first recorded.

books of account. See SHOP BOOKS.

Books of Adjournal. Scots law. The records of the High Court of Justiciary.

book value. The value at which an asset is carried on a balance sheet. Cf. BOOK EQUITY.

adjusted book value. Inventory value adjusted to reflect the inventory's current actual value.

book-value stock. See STOCK.

boomage. 1. A fee charged by a company for collecting and distributing logs that have accumulated in its boom (i.e., a line of sawed logs collected and stored on a stream's surface). 2. A right to enter on riparian lands to fasten booms. 3. An anchorage fee charged by a canal proprietor.

boon day. (usu. pl.) Hist. One of several days in the year when copyhold tenants were obliged to perform base services for the lord (such as reaping corn) without pay. — Also termed due day.

boot, n. 1. Tax. Supplemental money or property subject to tax in an otherwise tax-free exchange. 2. Corporations. In a corporate reorganization, anything received other than the stock or securities of a controlled corporation. 3. Commercial law. Cash or other consideration used to balance an otherwise unequal exchange. 4. Hist. ESTOVERS (1).

boot camp. 1. A camp for basic training of Navy or Marine Corps recruits. 2. See shock incarceration under INCARCERATION.

boothage (boo-thij). See BOTHAGIUM.

bootleg, vb. To manufacture, reproduce, or distribute (something) illegally or without authorization <he was bootlegging copyrighted videotapes>.

bootlegger, n. A person who manufactures, transports, or sells something illegally, esp. alcoholic beverages. See MOONSHINE.

bootstrap, vb. 1. To make a success despite sparse resources. 2. To reach an unsupported conclusion.

bootstrap doctrine. Conflict of laws. The doctrine that forecloses collateral attack on the jurisdiction of another state's court that has rendered final judgment. • The doctrine applies when a court in an earlier case has taken jurisdiction over a person, over status, or over land. It is based on the principle that under res judicata, the parties are bound by the judgment, whether the issue was the court's jurisdiction or something else. The bootstrap doctrine, however, cannot give effectiveness to a judgment by a court that had no subject-matter jurisdiction. For example, parties cannot, by appearing before a state court, "bootstrap" that court into having jurisdiction over a federal matter.

"If the court which rendered the judgment has, with the parties before it, expressly passed upon the jurisdictional question in the case, or had opportunity to do so because the parties could have raised the question, that question is res judicata, and is therefore not subject to collateral attack in the state in which the judgment is sued on. This has been called the 'bootstrap doctrine,' the idea being that a court which initially had no jurisdiction can when the issue is litigated lift itself into jurisdiction by its own incorrect but conclusive finding that it does have jurisdiction." Robert A. Leflar, American Conflicts Law § 79, at 159 (3d ed. 1977).

bootstrap sale. See SALE.

booty. 1. Int'l law. Movables taken from the enemy as spoils in the course of warlike operations. — Also termed spoils of war. 2. Property taken by force or piracy; prize or loot.

bordage (bor-dij). Hist. A type of tenure in which a tenant holds a cottage and a few acres in exchange for providing customary services to the lord.

bordarii (bor-dair-ee-1). Hist. Bordage tenants. • The status of these tenants was less servile than that of villein tenants. See BORDAGE; VILLEINAGE.

border. A boundary between one nation (or a political subdivision) and another.

border control. Int'l law. A country's physical manifestation of its territorial sovereignty, by which it regulates which people and goods may enter and leave. • As a practical matter, border controls are often used to contain plant and animal diseases, fight terrorism, and detect the movement of criminals.

bordereau (bor-də-roh), n. 1. A description of reinsured risks; esp., a periodic report provided by a cedent to a treaty reinsurer, consisting of basic information affecting the reinsurance treaty, such as the underlying insureds, the types of risks covered, policies, and dates of loss. See REINSURANCE TREATY. 2. A detailed note of account. Pl. bordereaux. — border-eau, vb.

border search. See SEARCH.

bord-halfpenny (bord-hay-pə-nee). See BOTHAGIUM.

bordlands. Hist. Land used by the nobility to produce food. • Bordlands remained under the nobility's direct control or were given to tenants who produced provisions for the landowner. Cf. BORDAGE.

bork (bork), vb. Slang. 1. (Of the U.S. Senate) to reject a nominee for the U.S. Supreme Court or other governmental position because of the nominee's unorthodox political and legal philosophy. • The term derives from the name of Robert Bork, President Ronald Reagan's unsuccessful nominee for the Court in 1987. 2. (Of political and legal activists) to embark on a media campaign that helps pressure U.S. Senators into rejecting a President's nominee for the U.S. Supreme Court. 3. Generally, to smear a political opponent.

borough. 1. A town or township with a municipal charter, such as one of the five political divisions of New York City. 2. English law. A chartered town that originally sent a member to Parliament. 3. Hist. A fortified or important town.

borough court. English law. An inferior civil court of record, usu. presided over by the municipal recorder. • Most borough courts were abolished by Parliament in 1972. Cf. BOROUGHS SESSIONS; RECORDER (1).

borough English. Hist. A common-law rule of descent whereby the youngest son inherited all his father's lands. — Also termed burgh English; burgh Engloys. See PRIMOGENITURE.

borough fund. English law. The revenue generated by a municipal borough.

borough-holder. See BORSHOLDER.

borough sessions. Criminal court sessions held before a municipal recorder. Cf. BOROUGHS COURTS; RECORDER (1).

borrow, vb. 1. To take something for temporary use. 2. To receive money with the understanding or agreement that it must be repaid, usu. with interest. See LOAN.

borrowed capital. Funds lent to a corporation or other entity to finance its operations, such as cash dividends that are declared by a corporation but temporarily retained (with stockholder approval) to provide operating funds.

borrowed employee. See EMPLOYEE.

borrowed servant. See borrowed employee under EMPLOYEE.

borrowed-statutes doctrine. The principle that if one state adopts a statute identical to that of another state, any settled judicial construction of that statute by the courts of the other state is binding on the courts of the state that later enacts the statute.

borrower. A person or entity to whom money or something else is lent.

borrowhead. See BORSHOLDER.

borrowing statute. A legislative exception to the conflict-of-laws rule holding that a forum state must apply its own statute of limitations. • A borrowing statute specifies the circumstances in which a forum state will apply another state's statute of limitations.

borsholder (bors-hohl-dər). Hist. 1. The chief of a tithing or frankpledge. 2. A petty constable. — Also termed borough-holder; borrow-head; headborough.

Boston interest. See INTEREST (3).

bote (boht). Hist. 1. A compensation or profit. — Also spelled bot; boot.

cart-bote. See plowbote.

fire-bote. See housebote.

haybote. See HAYBOTE.

hedgebote. See HAYBOTE.

housebote. An allowance of wood from the estate used to repair a house or to burn in the fireplace. — Also termed fire-bote.

plowbote. An allowance of wood for the construction and repair of farm equipment. — Also termed cart-bote.

wainbote. An allowance of wood for the repair of wagons.

2. A compensatory payment for causing an injury. Cf. BOTELESS.

God-bote. A church fine paid for offenses against God.

man-bote. Compensation for killing someone.

theft-bote. The acceptance of a payment from a thief in exchange for an agreement not to prosecute; COMPOUNDING A CRIME. • The payment might be either a bribe or a return of the stolen goods themselves. This was a form of compounding a felony.

“Another offence of this class is theftbote or composition with a thief by which the person robbed takes his goods again and by contract suppresses the robbery and defrauds justice. This crime is punishable by fine and imprisonment.” 1 Sir Robert Chambers, A Course of Lectures on the English Law: 1767–1773 448 (Thomas M. Curley ed., 1986).

3. A tenant's right to use as much wood from the estate as necessary for fuel, fences, and other agricultural operations. • Bote in this sense is an earlier form of estovers.

boteless (boht-ləs), adj. Hist. Without relief or remedy; without the privilege of making satisfaction for a crime by pecuniary payment. • The modern word bootless is derived from this term. Cf. BOTE (2).

bothagium (bah-thay-jee-əm). Hist. Customary dues paid to a lord for placing a booth in a fair or market. — Also termed bord-halfpenny; boothage.

botiler of the king. Hist. An officer who provided the king's wines. • By virtue of office, the botiler could choose two casks from every wine-laden ship. The modern word butler is derived from botiler.

bottomage bond. See bottomry bond under BOND (2).

bottom-hole contract. Oil & gas. An agreement requiring a payment from the well owner to the well's lessee after the lessee drills to a specified depth, whether or not the well produces.

bottomland. Low-lying land, often located in a river's floodplain.

bottomry. A contract by which a shipowner pledges the ship as security for a loan to finance a voyage (as to equip or repair the ship), the lender losing the money if the ship is lost during the voyage. • The term refers to the idea that the shipowner pledges the ship's bottom, or keel. Cf. RESPONDENTIA.

bottomry bond. See BOND (2).

bought and sold notes. Two memoranda prepared by a broker to record the sale of a note. • The broker sends the bought note to the purchaser, and sends the sold note to the seller.

bought note. See NOTE (3).

boulevard rule. The principle that the driver of a vehicle approaching a highway from a smaller road must stop and yield the right-of-way to all highway traffic.

boulwarism. Labor law. A bargaining tactic in which an employer researches the probable outcome of collective bargaining and uses the information to make a firm settlement offer to a union on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, so that there is no real negotiation. • Boulwarism is now considered to be an unfair labor practice by the National Labor Relations Board. The practice takes its name from Lemuel Boulware, vice president for employee relations at General Electric Company, who used the technique during the mid-20th century.

bound, n. (usu. pl.) 1. BOUNDARY <metes and bounds>. 2. A limitation or restriction on action <within the bounds of the law>.

bound, vb. To delineate a property boundary <property bounded by the creek>. Cf. BIND.

bound, adj. 1. Constrained by a contractual or other obligation <they are bound to make the payments by the first of each month>. 2. (Of a court) constrained to follow a precedent <bound by a Supreme Court decision>.

boundary. 1. A natural or artificial separation that delineates the confines of real property <the creek serves as a boundary between the two properties>. See METES AND BOUNDS.

"The object of all rules for the establishment of boundaries is to ascertain the actual location of the boundary as made at the time. The important and controlling consideration, where there is a conflict as to a boundary, is the parties intention, whether express or shown by surrounding circumstances . . ." 11 C.J.S. Boundaries § 3 (1995).

natural boundary. Any nonartificial thing (such as a river or ocean) that forms a boundary of a nation, a political subdivision, or a piece of property. — Also termed natural object.

private boundary. An artificial boundary marker.

public boundary. A natural formation that marks the beginning of a boundary line. — Also termed natural boundary.

2. Int'l law. A line marking the limit of the territorial jurisdiction of a state or other entity having an international status.

boundary by acquiescence. See DOCTRINE OF PRACTICAL LOCATION.

boundary by agreement. See DOCTRINE OF PRACTICAL LOCATION.

boundary traffic. The movement of persons or goods across an international boundary.

bound bailiff. See BAILIFF.

bounded tree. A tree that marks a corner of a property's boundary.

bounder. A visible mark that indicates a territorial limit in a land survey.

bounty. 1. A premium or benefit offered or given, esp. by a government, to induce someone to take action or perform a service . 2. A gift, esp. in a will; generosity in giving <the court will distribute the testator's bounty equally>.

bounty hunter. A person who for a fee pursues someone charged with, or suspected of committing, a crime; esp., a person hired by a bail-bond company to find and arrest a criminal defendant who has breached the bond agreement by failing to appear in court as ordered. — Also termed bail-enforcement agent.

bounty land. See LAND.

bourse (buurs). [French] French law. An exchange; a stock exchange. — Also termed bourse de commerce.

boutique (boo-teek). A small specialty business; esp., a small law firm specializing in one particular aspect of law practice .

bovata terrae (boh-vay-tə ter-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. See OXGANG.

bow-bearer. Hist. An officer responsible for apprehending trespassers and poachers in the king's forest.

box-top license. See shrink-wrap license under LICENSE.

boycott, n. 1. An action designed to achieve the social or economic isolation of an adversary. • The term derives from Captain Charles C. Boycott, an English landowner in famine-plagued Ireland of the 1870s; because of his ruthless treatment of Irish tenant farmers, the Irish Land League ostracized him. 2. A concerted refusal to do business with a party to express disapproval of that party's practices. 3. A refusal to deal in one transaction in an effort to obtain terms desired in a second transaction. • Under the Sherman Antitrust Act, even peaceful persuasion of a person to refrain from dealing with another can amount to a boycott. See 15 USCA §§ 1-7. — boycott, vb. Cf. PICKETING; STRIKE.

consumer boycott. A boycott by consumers of products or services to show displeasure with the manufacturer, seller, or provider.

group boycott. Antitrust. 1. CONCERTED REFUSAL TO DEAL. 2. A type of secondary boycott by two or more competitors who refuse to do business with one firm unless it refrains from doing business with an actual or potential competitor of the boycotters. • A group boycott can violate the Sherman Act and is analyzed under either the per se rule or the rule of reason, depending on the nature of the boycott. See PER SE RULE; RULE OF REASON.

"Since early in this century, courts have interpreted Section 1 [of the Sherman Act] to limit the ability of competing firms to agree not to deal with or to isolate another firm. Unlike many cartels, where all competitors voluntarily join to fix prices (and share monopoly rewards), concerted refusals to deal usually involve a subset of all market participants who band together to gain market power by destroying or coercing their rivals. Such organized refusals to deal with a particular firm are usually given the pejorative label of 'group boycotts.'" Ernest Gellhorn & William E. Kovacic, Antitrust Law and Economics in a Nutshell 204 (4th ed. 1994).

primary boycott. A boycott by union members who stop dealing with a former employer.

secondary boycott. A boycott of the customers or suppliers of a business so that they will withhold their patronage from that business. • For example, a group might boycott a manufacturer who advertises on a radio station that broadcasts messages considered objectionable by the group.

B.R. abbr. 1. Bankruptcy Reporter. — Also abbreviated Bankr. Rep. 2. Bancus Regis [Latin "King's Bench"]. 3. Bancus Reginae [Latin "Queen's Bench"]. • This abbreviation has been replaced by the English initials of these courts, K.B. and Q.B.

bracery. Hist. 1. The offense of selling pretended rights or title to land. • This practice was outlawed by statute of 32 Hen. 8, ch. 9. 2. EM-BRACERY.

bracket creep. The process by which inflation or increased income pushes individuals into higher tax brackets.

bracket system. A system for collecting a sales tax based on an index providing for a graduated payment depending on the purchase price of the item, the purpose being fourfold: (1) to avoid having the seller collect a tax less than one cent; (2) to avoid requiring the state to figure the exact amount of tax on each sale; (3) to allow the seller to have a ready means for fixing the tax to be collected; and (4) to allow the state to collect about the right amount of tax. • This system may be provided for either by statute or by administrative regulation.

Bracton. The common title of one of the earliest books of English law, De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliae (ca. 1250). • Henry of Bracton (also known as Bracton), a judge of the Court of King's Bench and of Assize, is credited with writing the work, though he may have merely revised an earlier version.

"Bracton's book is the crown and flower of English medieval jurisprudence. . . . Romanesque in form, English in substance — this perhaps is the best brief phrase that we can find for the outcome of his labours; but yet it is not very good. He had at his command and had diligently studied . . . various parts of the Corpus Iuris Civilis, of the Decretum, and the Decretals, and he levied contributions from the canonist Tancred. . . . Bracton's debt — and therefore our debt — to the civilians is inestimably great. But for them, his book would have been impossible; but for them . . . we should have missed not only the splendid plan, the orderly arrangement, the keen dilemmas, but also the sacerdotal spirit of the work. On the other hand, the main matter of his treatise is genuine English law laboriously collected out of the plea rolls of the king's court. . . . [H]is endeavor is to state the practice, the best and most approved practice, of the king's court, and of any desire to romanize the law we must absolutely acquit him." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 206-09 (2d ed. 1898).

Brady Act. A federal law establishing a national system for quickly checking the background of a prospective handgun purchaser. • The formal name of the law is the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act. The U.S. Supreme Court held unconstitutional the law's interim provision, which required chief state law-enforcement officers (usu. sheriffs) to conduct background checks until the national system was in place. The act is named for James Brady, a campaigner for gun-control laws who, as a member of President Ronald Reagan's staff, was wounded by gunfire during an attempted presidential assassination in 1981. 18 USCA §§ 921-930.

Brady material. Information or evidence that is favorable to a criminal defendant's case and that the prosecution has a duty to disclose. • The prosecution's withholding of such information violates the defendant's due-process rights. Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194 (1963). Cf. JENCKS MATERIAL.

brain death. See DEATH.

brake. See DUKE OF EXETER'S DAUGHTER.

branch. 1. An offshoot, lateral extension, or division of an institution <the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government>. 2. A line of familial descent stemming from a common ancestor <the Taylor branch of the Bradshaw family>. — Also termed stock.

Brandeis brief (bran-dis). A brief, usu. an appellate brief, that makes use of social and economic studies in addition to legal principles and citations. • The brief is named after Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis, who as an advocate filed the most famous such brief in Muller v. Oregon, 208 U.S. 412, 28 S.Ct. 324 (1908), in which he persuaded the Court to uphold a statute setting a maximum ten-hour workday for women.

Brandeis rules. See ASHWANDER RULES.

branding. 1. The act of marking cattle with a hot iron to identify their owner. 2. Formerly, the punishment of marking an offender with a hot iron.

brand name. See TRADENAME.

branks (brangks). Hist. An instrument used to punish scolds, consisting of an iron framework that surrounded the head and entered the mouth to keep the offender's tongue depressed. — Also termed scolding bridle. See SCOLD. Cf. CASTIGATORY; DUCKING STOOL.

brassage (bras-ij). Hist. A government charge for the actual cost of coining metals. • Any profit is termed seigniorage. See SEIGNIORAGE (2).

breach, n. A violation or infraction of a law or obligation <breach of warranty> <breach of duty>. — breach, vb.

breach of arrest. A military offense committed by an officer who, being under arrest in quarters, leaves those quarters without a superior officer's authorization. See arrest in quarters under ARREST.

breach of close. The unlawful or unauthorized entry on another person's land; a common-law trespass. — Also termed breaking a close. See CLOSE.

breach of contract. Violation of a contractual obligation, either by failing to perform one's own promise or by interfering with another party's performance.

"A breach may be one by non-performance, or by repudiation, or by both. Every breach gives rise to a claim for damages, and may give rise to other remedies. Even if the injured party sustains no pecuniary loss or is unable to show such loss with sufficient certainty, he has at least a claim for nominal damages. If a court chooses to ignore a trifling departure, there is no breach and no claim arises." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 236 cmt. a (1981).

active breach of contract. Civil law. The negligent performance of a contractual obligation, to the point of acting outside the contract's terms. • Under Louisiana law, active breach of contract is contrasted with passive breach of contract, which is a failure to perform the obligations created by the contract. Unlike a passive breach, an active breach of contract may give rise to claims in contract and in tort. Cf. passive breach of contract.

anticipatory breach. A breach of contract caused by a party's anticipatory repudiation, i.e., unequivocally indicating that the party will not perform when performance is due. • Under these circumstances, the nonbreaching party may elect to treat the repudiation as an immediate breach and sue for damages. — Also termed constructive breach. See REPUDIATION.

"A repudiation by one party may occur before the time for performance has arrived. Such a repudiation is called an anticipatory breach, and it gives the innocent party the option of treating the contract as terminated at once and suing for damages immediately if he chooses or, alternatively, of waiting until the time of performance has arrived, and then again calling on the other party to perform. Should he choose the latter course he runs the risk that the contract may possibly become frustrated in the interim, in which case he will have lost his right to damages." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 298 (3d ed. 1981).

continuing breach. A breach of contract that endures for a considerable time or is repeated at short intervals.

efficient breach. An intentional breach of contract and payment of damages by a party who would incur greater economic loss by performing under the contract. See EFFICIENT-BREACH THEORY.

immaterial breach. See partial breach.

immediate breach. A breach that entitles the nonbreaching party to sue for damages immediately.

material breach. A substantial breach of contract, usu. excusing the aggrieved party from further performance and affording it the right to sue for damages.

"In determining whether a failure to render or to offer performance is material, the following circumstances are significant: (a) the extent to which the injured party will be deprived of the benefit which he reasonably expected; (b) the extent to which the injured party can be adequately compensated for the part of that benefit of which he will be deprived; (c) the extent to which the party failing to perform or to offer to perform will suffer forfeiture; (d) the likelihood that the party failing to perform or to offer to perform will cure his failure, taking account of all the circumstances including any reasonable assurances; (e) the extent to which the behavior of the party failing to perform or to offer to perform comports with standards of good faith and fair dealing." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 241 (1981).

partial breach. A breach of contract that is less significant than a material breach and that gives the aggrieved party a right to damages, but does not usu. excuse that party from performance. — Also termed immaterial breach.

passive breach of contract. Civil law. A failure to perform the requirements of a contract. • Under Louisiana law, passive breach of contract is contrasted with active breach of contract, which is negligence in performing a contractual obligation. While an active breach of contract may give rise to claims in contract and in tort, a passive breach of contract usu. does not give rise to a tort claim. Cf. active breach of contract.

total breach. A material breach of contract that gives rise to a claim for damages based on the injured party's remaining rights to performance under the contract.

breach of covenant. The violation of an express or implied promise, usu. in a contract, either to do or not to do an act. See COVENANT.

breach of duty. The violation of a legal or moral obligation; the failure to act as the law obligates one to act. See NEGLIGENCE.

breach of peace. See BREACH OF THE PEACE.

breach of prison. See PRISON BREACH.

breach of promise. The violation of one's word or undertaking, esp. a promise to marry. See HEARTBALM STATUTE.

breach of the peace. The criminal offense of creating a public disturbance or engaging in disorderly conduct, particularly by making an unnecessary or distracting noise. — Also termed breach of peace; disturbing the peace; disturbance of the peace. See DISORDERLY CONDUCT.

"A breach of the peace takes place when either an assault is committed on an individual or public alarm and excitement is caused. Mere annoyance or insult is not enough: thus at common law a householder could not give a man into custody for violently and persistently ringing his door-bell. It is the particular duty of a magistrate or police officer to preserve the peace unbroken; hence if he has reasonable cause to believe that a breach of the peace is imminent he may be justified in committing an assault or effecting an arrest." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 131 (17th ed. 1977).

"The beginning of our criminal justice ... was concerned very largely with the problem of keeping the peace. Because of this fact all early indictments included some such phrase as 'against the peace of the King'; and until recently statutory provisions for simplification, indictments in this country were thought to be incomplete without some such conclusion as 'against the peace and dignity of the state.' As a result of this history all indictable offenses are sometimes regarded as deeds which violate the public peace, and hence in a loose sense the term 'breach of the peace' is regarded as a synonym for crime." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 477 (3d ed. 1982).

breach of trust. A trustee's violation of either the trust's terms or the trustee's general fiduciary obligations; the violation of a duty that equity imposes on a trustee, whether the violation was willful, fraudulent, negligent, or inadvertent. • A breach of trust subjects the trustee to removal and creates personal liability.

breach of warranty. 1. A breach of an express or implied warranty relating to the title, quality, content, or condition of goods sold. UCC § 2-312. 2. Insurance. WARRANTY (3).

bread acts. Hist. Laws providing for the sustenance of persons kept in prison for debt. • These laws were formerly on the books in both England and the United States.

break. vb. 1. To violate or disobey (a law) <to break the law>. 2. To nullify (a will) by court proceeding <Samson, the disinherited son, successfully broke the will>. 3. To escape from (a place of confinement) without permission <break out of prison>. 4. To open (a door, gate, etc.) and step through illegally <he broke the close>.

breakage. 1. An allowance given by a manufacturer to a buyer for goods damaged during transit or storage. 2. Insignificant amounts of money retained by racetrack promoters from bets. • The retention of these small sums avoids the inconvenience of counting and paying out inconsequential winnings.

breaking, n. Criminal law. In the law of burglary, the act of entering a building without permission.

"[T]o constitute a breaking at common law, there had to be the creation of a breach or opening; a mere trespass at law was insufficient. If the occupant of the dwelling had created the opening, it was felt that he had not entitled himself to the protection of the law, as he had not properly secured his dwelling. . . . In the modern American criminal codes, only seldom is there a requirement of a breaking. This is not to suggest, however, that elimination of this requirement has left the 'entry' element unadorned, so that any type of entry will suffice. Rather, at least some of what was encompassed within the common law 'breaking' element is reflected by other terms describing what kind of entry is necessary. The most common statutory term is 'unlawfully,' but some jurisdictions use other language, such as 'unauthorized,' by 'trespass,' 'without authority,' 'without consent,' or 'without privilege.'" Wayne R. LaFare & Austin W. Scott, Jr., Criminal Law § 8.13, at 793-94 (2d ed. 1986).

breaking a case. 1. The voicing by one appellate judge to another judge on the same panel of a tentative view on how a case should be decided. • These informal expressions assist the judges in ascertaining how close they are to agreement. 2. The solving of a case by the police.

breaking a close. See BREACH OF CLOSE.

breaking and entering. See BURGLARY (2).

breaking bulk, n. 1. The act of dividing a large shipment into smaller units. 2. Larceny by a bailee, esp. a carrier, who opens containers, removes items from them, and converts the items to personal use. — Also termed breaking bale. — break bulk, vb.

breaking of entail. See BARRING OF ENTAIL.

breast of the court. A judge's conscience, mind, or discretion. • This phrase is a loan translation (or calque) of the Latin phrase in pectore judicis. See IN PECTORE JUDICIS.

Breathalyzer. A device used to measure the blood alcohol content of a person's breath, esp. when the police suspect that the person was driving while intoxicated. • Breathalyzer test results are admissible as evidence if the test was properly administered. — Also termed alcoholometer; drunkometer; intoxilyzer; intoximeter. — breathalyze, vb. See BLOOD ALCOHOL CONTENT.

breathing room. Slang. The post-bankruptcy period during which a debtor may formulate a debt-repayment plan without harassment or interference by creditors.

bredwite (bred-wət). Hist. A penalty for not complying with regulations relating to the weight or quantity of bread.

brehon (bree-hən). Hist. In Ireland, a judge.

Brehon law (bree-hən law). Hist. The ancient system of law in Ireland at the time of its conquest by Henry II. • This law was formally abolished in 1366. — Sometimes spelled Brehon Law.

"[T]he Irish were governed by what they called the Brehon law, so stiled from the Irish name of judges, who were denominated Brehons. But king John in the twelfth year of his reign went into Ireland, and carried over with him many able sages of the law; and there by his letters patent, in right of the dominion of conquest, is said to have ordained and established that Ireland should be governed by the laws of England. . . . But to this ordinance many of the Irish were averse to conform, and still stuck to their Brehon law: so that both Henry the third and Edward the first were obliged to renew the injunction. . . . And yet, even in the reign of queen Elizabeth, the wild natives still kept and preserved their Brehon law. . . ." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 100-01 (1765).

brephotrophi (bre-fah-trə-fī). Civil law. Persons who manage institutions that receive and care for poor or abandoned children. • The word is Greek in origin and was used in late Roman law, but it first appeared in English in the 18th century.

brethren (breth-rən), n. pl. Brothers, esp. those considered spiritual kin (such as male colleagues on a court) <my brethren argue in the dissent that my statutory interpretation is faulty>. • The use of this collegial term has naturally dwindled as more women have entered law and esp. into the judiciary. Cf. SISTREN.

Bretts and Scotts, Laws of the. A system of laws used by the Celtic tribes of Scotland until the beginning of the 14th century, when Edward I of England abolished those laws.

breve (breev or bree-vee), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Writ. • The word brevis meant “short,” and brevia were short writs, unlike charters. Pl. brevia (bree-vee-ə).

album breve (al-bəm breev or bree-vee). A blank writ; a writ with a blank or omission in it.

apertum breve (ə-pər-təm breev or bree-vee). [Latin “open writ”] An open, unsealed writ. See patent writ under WRIT. Cf. CLAUSUM.

breve de bono et malo (breev or bree-vee dee boh-noh et mal-oh). See DE ODIIO ET ATIA.

breve de conventionne (breev or bree-vee dee kən-ven-shee-oh-nee). See WRIT OF COVENANT.

breve de recto (breev or bree-vee dee rek-toh). See DE RECTO.

breve de transgressione super casum (breev or bree-vee dee trans-gres[h]-ee-oh-nee s[y]oo-pər kay-səm). See TRESPASS ON THE CASE.

breve innominatum (breev or bree-vee i-nom-ə-nay-təm). [Latin “innominate writ”] A writ that recites a cause of action only in general terms.

breve magnum de recto (breev or bree-vee mag-nəm dee rek-toh). See DE RECTO PATENS.

breve perquirere (breev or bree-vee pər-kwɪ-rə-ree). [Latin “to obtain a writ”] To purchase a writ or license of trial in the king’s courts.

breve rebellionis. See COMMISSION OF REBELLION.

breve testatum (breev or bree-vee tes-tay-təm). [Latin “a witnessed writ”] A written memorandum used to memorialize the terms of a conveyance and investiture of land. • Witnesses to the conveyance did not sign the document, but their names were recorded. Brevia testata were introduced to reduce disputes concerning the terms of oral grants.

brevia amicabilia (bree-vee-ə am-ə-kə-bil-ee-ə). [Latin “writs with agreement”] Writs obtained with the agreement or consent of the opposing party in an action.

brevia anticipantia (bree-vee-ə an-tis-ə-pan-shee-ə). [Latin “anticipatory writs”] Anticipatory or preventive writs. • Six were included in this category: writs of mesne; warrantia chartae; monstraverunt; audita querela; curia claudenda; and ne injuste vexes. See QUIA TIMET.

brevia formata (bree-vee-ə for-may-tə). [Latin “writs of approved form”] Writs of established and approved form, issued as a matter of course. Cf. brevia magistralia.

brevia judicialia (bree-vee-ə joo-dish-ee-ay-lee-ə). [Latin “judicial writs”] Writs that issue during an action or afterward in aid of judgment. • A court issued such a writ after an original writ had issued out of Chancery. Cf. brevia originale.

brevia magistralia (bree-vee-ə maj-istray-lee-ə). [Latin “masters’ writs”] Writs issued by the masters or clerks of chancery according to the circumstances of particular cases. • These writs, unlike some others, might be varied in accordance with the complainant’s particular situation. Cf. brevia formata.

brevia originale (bree-vee-ə ə-rɪj-i-nay-lee). [Latin] Original writ. • This writ began a judicial action. Cf. brevia judicialia.

brevia selecta (bree-vee-ə sə-lek-tə). [Latin “selected writs”] Choice or selected writs or processes. — Abbr. brev. sel.

brevet (brə-vet or brev-it). 1. Military law. A commission promoting an officer to a higher rank, esp. during wartime, but without a corresponding pay increase. 2. French law. A privilege or warrant granted by the government to a private person, authorizing a special benefit or the exercise of an exclusive privilege. • For example, a brevet d’invention is a patent for an invention.

brevet officer. See OFFICER (2).

brevia amicabilia. See BREVE.

brevia anticipantia. See BREVE.

Breviarium Alaricanum (bree-vee-air-ee-əm al-ə-ri-kay-nəm). [Latin] An abridgment (or breviary) of Roman law compiled by order of the Visigoth king Alaric II, published for the use of his Roman subjects in the year 506. ● The compilation was known before the 16th century as the Lex Romana Visigothorum. It was also termed the Breviarium Aniani after Alaric's chancellor, Anian, who edited and distributed the work. — Also termed Breviary of Alaric (bree-vee-er-ee əv al-ə-rik).

“Though the Breviarium was later replaced by the Lex Visigothorum in the Visigothic kingdom, it continued in use in southern France and Lombardy, which had meantime passed under the dominion of the Franks. Its qualities made the Breviarium a book of high authority throughout the whole of western Europe during the Middle Ages and it was one of the main channels through which Roman law entered western European law prior to the Reception.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 151–52 (1980).

brevia selecta. See BREVE.

breviate (bree-vee-ət). [Latin] Hist. An abstract of a writing; esp., a short statement attached to a Parliamentary bill summarizing the contents of the bill.

brevia testata (bree-vee-ə tes-tay-tə). [Latin] Hist. See breve testatum under BREVE.

brevis et rotulis liberandis (bree-və-bəs et roch-ə-ləs lib-ər-an-dis). [Latin “breves and rolls to be freed”] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to turn over to a successor all paraphernalia of office.

brev. sel. See brevia selecta under BREVE.

bribe, n. A price, reward, gift, or favor bestowed or promised with a view to pervert the judgment of or influence the action of a person in a position of trust.

bribee. One who receives a bribe. — Also termed bribe-taker.

bribe-giver. See BRIBER.

briber. One who offers a bribe. — Also termed bribe-giver.

bribery, n. The corrupt payment, receipt, or solicitation of a private favor for official action.

● Bribery is a felony in most jurisdictions. — bribe, vb.

commercial bribery. Corrupt dealing with the agents or employees of prospective buyers to secure an advantage over business competitors.

bribe-taker. See BRIBEE.

bribour (brī-bər). [fr. French bribeur] Hist. A thief.

bridge bank. A national bank chartered to operate an insolvent bank for up to three years or until the bank is sold.

bridge loan. See LOAN.

brief, n. 1. A written statement setting out the legal contentions of a party in litigation, esp. on appeal; a document prepared by counsel as the basis for arguing a case, consisting of legal and factual arguments and the authorities in support of them. — Also termed legal brief.

Anders brief. See ANDERS BRIEF.

Brandeis brief. See BRANDEIS BRIEF.

proof brief. A preliminary appellate brief to be reviewed by the clerk of the court for compliance with applicable rules. ● Proof briefs are required by local rules of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. A proof brief in full compliance will be accepted and filed. If not in compliance, it will be returned for corrections to be made, and a deadline will be set for refiling. After all proof briefs have been accepted in a case, a date is set for filing a final brief, which may be modified only to include joint-appendix references, repagination, or updated citations.

reply brief. A brief that responds to issues and arguments raised in the brief previously filed by one's opponent.

2. English law. A solicitor's document that abstracts the pleadings and facts to inform a barrister about the case. 3. ABSTRACT OF TITLE. — brief, vb.

brief-writing. The art or practice of preparing legal briefs. — Also termed brief-making.

brigandage (brig-ən-dij). Archaic. Plundering and banditry carried out by bands of robbers. • Piracy is sometimes called "maritime brigandage."

bright-line rule. A judicial rule of decision that tends to resolve issues, esp. ambiguities, simply and straightforwardly, sometimes sacrificing equity for certainty.

bring to book. To arrest and try (an offender) <the fugitives were brought to book and convicted>.

British subject. The status conferred on a citizen of the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth countries such as Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and India by the British Nationality Act 1981. • Although this is the current sense, the phrase British subject has had many different meanings over the years, under different statutes.

broad-form insurance. See INSURANCE.

broad-form policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

broad interpretation. See liberal construction under CONSTRUCTION (2).

broadside objection. See OBJECTION.

brocard (brahk-ərd or broh-kərd). An elementary legal principle or maxim, esp. one deriving from Roman law or ancient custom.

brocarius (broh-kair-ee-əs). [Law Latin] Hist. A broker; a middleman between buyer and seller.

broker, n. 1. An agent who acts as an intermediary or negotiator, esp. between prospective buyers and sellers; a person employed to make bargains and contracts between other persons in matters of trade, commerce, and navigation. • A broker differs from a factor because the broker usu. does not have possession of the property. Cf. FACTOR. 2. Securities. A person engaged in the business of conducting securities transactions for the accounts of others. — broker, vb.

"The most important determining factor of what constitutes a 'broker' is whether the party is dealing for itself or for another. A broker may, by contract, have title to property pass through it (though usually it does not), and it may, by contract, collect from the consumer, but a broker does not deal on its account. Two preliminary requirements must be met for a finding that an individual is acting as a broker: (1) the person is acting for compensation; and (2) the person is acting on behalf of someone else." 12 Am. Jur. 2d Brokers § 1 (1997).

broker-agent. 1. A person who acts as an intermediary between parties to a transaction, and as a representative of one of them. 2. A person licensed both as a broker and as an agent.

broker-dealer. A brokerage firm that engages in the business of trading securities for its own account (i.e., as a principal) before selling them to customers. • Such a firm is usu. registered with the SEC and with the state in which it does business. See DEALER (2).

"Since many broker-dealers maintain custody of funds and securities belonging to their customers, safeguards are required to assure that the customers can recover those funds and securities in the event the broker-dealer becomes insolvent. The three principal techniques that have been utilized are (a) financial responsibility standards for broker-dealers, (b) requirements for segregation of customers' funds and securities, and (c) maintenance of an industry-wide fund to satisfy the claims of customers whose brokerage firms become insolvent." David L. Ratner, Securities Regulation in a Nutshell 182-83 (4th ed. 1992).

broker for sale. A broker retained to sell something, but having neither possession of the goods nor any right of action in the broker's own name on contracts that the broker enters into.

broker's broker. A municipal securities broker or dealer that routinely effects transactions for the account of other brokers, dealers, and municipal securities dealers.

commercial broker. A broker who negotiates the sale of goods without having possession or control of the goods. Cf. FACTOR (2).

commission broker. A member of a stock or commodity exchange who executes buy and sell orders.

customhouse broker. A broker who prepares paperwork for the entry or clearance of ships, and for the import or export of goods. — Also termed customs broker.

discount broker. 1. A broker who discounts bills of exchange and promissory notes, and advances money on securities. 2. A broker who executes buy and sell orders at commission rates lower than those of full-service brokers.

government-securities interdealer broker. A broker engaged exclusively in the business of transacting in government securities for parties that are themselves government brokers or dealers.

institutional broker. A broker who trades securities for institutional clients such as banks, mutual funds, pension funds, and insurance companies.

insurance broker. Insurance. A person who, for compensation, brings about or negotiates contracts of insurance as an agent for someone else, but not as an officer, salaried employee, or licensed agent of an insurance company. • The broker acts as an intermediary between the insured and the insurer. — Also termed producer.

“The term ‘insurance broker’ is often used to characterize an individual who is thought to act primarily on behalf of a purchaser in an insurance transaction. This delineation . . . is employed by some courts and writers even though almost all insurance brokers are actually compensated for their services through commissions that are paid by the insurers. Because brokers receive compensation from the insurer, it seems evident that a persuasive argument can be made for not treating a broker as an agent of the insurance purchaser.” Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law: A Guide to Fundamental Principles, Legal Doctrines, and Commercial Practices § 2.5, at 83-84 (1988).

loan broker. A person who is in the business of lending money, usu. to an individual, and taking as security an assignment of wages or a security interest in the debtor’s personal property.

merchandise broker. One who negotiates the sale of merchandise without possessing it. • A merchandise broker is an agent with very limited powers.

money broker. A broker who negotiates the lending or raising of money for others.

mortgage broker. An individual or organization that markets mortgage loans and brings lenders and borrowers together. • A mortgage broker does not originate or service mortgage loans.

note broker. A broker who negotiates the discount or sale of commercial paper.

real-estate broker. A broker who negotiates contracts of sale and other agreements (such as mortgages or leases) between buyers and sellers of real property. • Real-estate brokers must be licensed in the states where they conduct business.

registered broker. A broker registered or required to be registered under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

responsible broker-dealer. A broker-dealer who communicates bids or offers on the floor of a stock exchange at the designated location for trading in a reported security or who, in an off-exchange transaction, communicates the bid or offer as either a principal or an agent, for its own or another’s account. SEC Rule 11Ac1-1(a)(21) (17 CFR § 240.11Ac1-1(a)(21)).

securities broker. A broker employed to buy or sell securities for a customer, as opposed to a securities dealer, who trades as a principal before selling the securities to a customer. See DEALER (2).

brokerage. 1. The business or office of a broker . 2. A broker’s fee <collect the brokerage after the house sells>.

brokerage contract. An agency agreement employing a broker to make contracts in the name of and on behalf of the principal and for which the broker receives a commission.

brokerage listing. See LISTING (1).

broker-agent. See BROKER.

broker call loan. See call loan under LOAN.

broker-dealer. See BROKER.

broker for sale. See BROKER.

broker’s broker. See BROKER.

brother. A male having one parent or both parents the same as another person.

consanguine brother (kahn-sang-gwin). Civil law. A brother descended from the same father as another, but from a different mother.

half brother. See HALF BROTHER.

uterine brother (yoo-tər-in). Civil law. A brother descended from the same mother as another, but from a different father.

brother-german. See GERMAN.

brother-in-law. The brother of one’s spouse or the husband of one’s sister. • Additionally, the husband of one’s spouse’s sister is also sometimes considered a brother-in-law. Pl. brothers-in-law.

brother-sister corporation. See sister corporation under CORPORATION.

Bruton error (broot-ən). The violation of a criminal defendant's constitutional right of confrontation by admitting into evidence a non-testifying codefendant's confession that implicates a defendant who claims innocence. Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 88 S.Ct. 1620 (1968).

brutum fulmen (broo-təm fəl-men or -mən). [Latin "inert thunder"] 1. An empty noise; an empty threat; something ineffectual. 2. A judgment void on its face; one that is, in legal effect, no judgment at all.

Bryan treaties. Int'l law. Any of 48 treaties designed to avert war by requiring the signatories to submit disputes of any kind to standing peace commissions. • The first of these treaties, named after Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan, was signed between the United States and Great Britain in 1914.

b.s. abbr. See bancus superior under BANCUS.

BTA. abbr. Board of Tax Appeals. See TAX COURT.

bubble. Slang. A dishonest or insubstantial business project, generally founded on a fictitious or exaggerated prospectus, designed to ensnare unwary investors.

Bubble Act. An English statute passed in 1720 to prevent corporate fraud.

bucketing. Securities. The illegal practice of receiving an order to buy or sell stock but not immediately performing the order. • The perpetrator profits by executing the order when the stock market goes down, but confirming the order to the customer at the original price.

bucket shop. Securities. An establishment that is nominally engaged in stock-exchange transactions or some similar business, but in fact engages in registering bets or wagers, usu. for small amounts, on the rise or fall of the prices of stocks and commodities. • A bucket shop uses the terms and outward forms of the exchanges, but differs from exchanges because there is no delivery of — and no expectation or intention to deliver or receive — the securities or commodities nominally exchanged.

budget. 1. A statement of an organization's estimated revenues and expenses for a specified period, usu. a year. 2. A sum of money allocated to a particular purpose or project.

buffer-zone. Land-use planning. An area of land separating two different zones or areas to help each blend more easily with the other, such as a strip of land between industrial and residential areas.

buggery, n. Sodomy or bestiality. — bugger, vb. — bugger, n. See SODOMY.

bugging, n. A form of electronic surveillance by which conversations may be electronically intercepted, overheard, and recorded, usu. covertly; eavesdropping by electronic means. See WIRETAPPING.

building-and-loan association. A quasi-public corporation that accumulates funds through member contributions and lends money to the members buying or building homes. Cf. SAVINGS-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

building codes. Laws and regulations setting forth standards for the construction, maintenance, occupancy, use, or appearance of buildings and dwelling units. — Also termed (for dwelling units) housing codes.

building lien. See mechanic's lien under LIEN.

building line. A boundary drawn along a curb or the edge of a municipality's sidewalks to establish how far a building must be set away from the street to maintain a uniform appearance. • This is often referred to as a setback requirement.

building loan. See LOAN.

building permit. A license granted by a government agency (esp. a municipality) for the construction of a new building or a substantial alteration of an existing structure.

building restrictions. Regulations governing the type of structures that can be constructed on certain property. • The restrictions are usu. listed in zoning ordinances or restrictive covenants in deeds. Cf. BUILDING CODE; restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4).

built-in obsolescence. See planned obsolescence under OBSOLESCENCE.

bulk, adj. (Of goods) not divided into parts .

bulk discount. See volume discount under DISCOUNT.

bulk mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

bulk sale. A sale of a large quantity of inventory outside the ordinary course of the seller's business. • Bulk sales are regulated by Article 6 of the UCC, which is designed to prevent sellers from defrauding unsecured creditors by making these sales and then dissipating the sale proceeds. — Also termed bulk transfer.

bulk transfer. See BULK SALE.

bull. Eccles. law. 1. A document issued by a Pope, so called from the leaden seal attached to it. 2. A seal attached to an official document, esp. a papal edict.

bullā (buul-ə or bəl-ə). [Law Latin] A metal or wax papal seal or document.

bulletin des lois (buul-ə-tan day lwah). French law. The publication that provides official notice of the text and effective date of a law or decree.

bullion (buul-yən). An uncoined solid mass of gold or silver.

bullion fund. Public money used by a mint to purchase precious metals for coinage and to pay bullion depositors.

bull market. See MARKET.

bullpen. Slang. 1. An area in a prison where inmates are kept in close confinement. 2. A detention cell where prisoners are held until they are brought into court.

bumbershoot insurance. See INSURANCE.

bum-marriage doctrine. The principle that the marital-witness privilege may not be asserted by a partner in a marriage that is in fact moribund, though legally valid. See marital privilege (2) under PRIVILEGE (3).

bumping. 1. Displacement of a junior employee's position by a senior employee. 2. An airline-industry practice of denying seats to passengers because of overbooking.

bunco. A swindling game or scheme; any trick or ploy calculated to win a person's confidence in an attempt to deceive that person.

bundle, vb. To sell related products or services in one transaction at an all-inclusive price.

bunkhouse rule. The principle that an employee's injury suffered while living in an employer's housing is compensable even if the injury occurs during off-duty hours.

burden, n. 1. A duty or responsibility <the seller's burden to insure the shipped goods>. 2. Something that is oppressive . 3. A restriction on the use or value of land; an encumbrance <the easement created a burden on the estate>. — burden, vb. — burdensome, adj.

burden of allegation. A party's duty to plead a matter for that matter to be heard in the lawsuit. — Also termed burden of pleading.

burden of going forward with evidence. See BURDEN OF PRODUCTION.

burden of persuasion. A party's duty to convince the fact-finder to view the facts in a way that favors that party. • In civil cases, the plaintiff's burden is usu. "by a preponderance of the evidence," while in criminal cases the prosecution's burden is "beyond a reasonable doubt." — Also termed persuasion burden; risk of nonpersuasion; risk of jury doubt. — Also loosely termed burden of proof.

burden of pleading. See BURDEN OF ALLEGATION.

burden of production. A party's duty to introduce enough evidence on an issue to have the issue decided by the fact-finder, rather than decided against the party in a peremptory ruling such as a summary judgment or a directed verdict. — Also termed burden of going forward with evidence; burden of producing evidence; production burden; degree of proof.

burden of proof. 1. A party's duty to prove a disputed assertion or charge. • The burden of proof includes both the burden of persuasion and the burden of production. — Also termed onus probandi. 2. Loosely, BURDEN OF PERSUASION.

"In the past the term 'burden of proof' has been used in two different senses. (1) The burden of going forward with the evidence. The party having this burden must introduce some evidence if he wishes to get a certain issue into the case. If he introduces enough evidence to require consideration of this issue, this burden has been met. (2) Burden of proof in the sense of carrying the risk of nonpersuasion. The one who has this burden stands to lose if his evidence fails to convince the jury — or the judge in a nonjury trial. The present trend is to use the term ‘burden of proof’ only with this second meaning” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 78 (3d ed. 1982).

“The expression ‘burden of proof’ is tricky because it has been used by courts and writers to mean various things. Strictly speaking, burden of proof denotes the duty of establishing by a fair preponderance of the evidence the truth of the operative facts upon which the issue at hand is made to turn by substantive law. Burden of proof is sometimes used in a secondary sense to mean the burden of going forward with the evidence. In this sense it is sometimes said that a party has the burden of countering with evidence a prima facie case made against that party.” William D. Hawkland, Uniform Commercial Code Series § 2A-516:08 (1984).

Bureau Veritas. See VERITAS.

Burford abstention. See ABSTENTION.

burgage-tenure (bər-gij ten-yər). Hist. 1. A type of socage tenure in which tenants paid annual rents to the lord of the borough. See SOCAGE. 2. Scots law. The tenure by which a burgh held its land of the king, the service due being watching and warding. See WATCH AND WARD.

burgator (bər-gay-tər). Hist. A burglar; a person who breaks into a house or an enclosed space.

burgess (bər-jis). Hist. 1. An inhabitant or freeman of a borough or town. 2. A magistrate of a borough. 3. A person entitled to vote at elections. 4. A representative of a borough or town in Parliament.

“[Burgesses] are properly Men of Trade, or the Inhabitants of a Borow or Walled Town; yet we usually apply this name to the Magistrates of such a Town, as the Bailiff and Burgesses of Leominster. But we do now usually call those Burgesses who serve in Parliament, for any such Borow or Corporation.” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

burgh English (bærg ing-glish). See BOROUGH ENGLISH.

burgh Engloys (bærg ing-gloiz). See BOROUGH ENGLISH.

burglar, n. One who commits burglary.

burglarious (bər-glair-ee-əs), adj. Of or relating to burglary <burglarious intent>. — burglariously, adv.

burglarize, vb. To commit a burglary <the defendant burglarized three houses>. — Also termed (esp. in BrE) burgle.

burglary, n. 1. The common-law offense of breaking and entering another’s dwelling at night with the intent to commit a felony. 2. The modern statutory offense of breaking and entering any building — not just a dwelling, and not only at night — with the intent to commit a felony. • Some statutes make petit larceny an alternative to a felony for purposes of proving burglarious intent. — Also termed (in sense 2) breaking and entering; statutory burglary. Cf. ROBBERY.

burglary tool. (often pl.) An implement designed to assist a person in committing a burglary. • In many jurisdictions, it is illegal to possess such a tool if the possessor intends to commit a burglary.

burgle. See BURGLARIZE.

burial insurance. See INSURANCE.

buried-facts doctrine. Securities. The rule that a proxy-statement disclosure is inadequate if a reasonable shareholder could fail to understand the risks presented by facts scattered throughout the proxy. • In applying this rule, a court will consider a securities disclosure to be false and misleading if its overall significance is obscured because material information is buried in footnotes, appendixes, and the like.

burking, n. The crime of murdering someone, usu. by smothering, for the purpose of selling the corpse. • This term arose from the Scottish murder team of Burke and Hare, whose practice in 1828 of suffocating their victims while leaving few visible marks made the corpses more salable to medical schools. — burke, vb.

burlaw. See BYRLAW.

burlaw court. See BYRLAW COURT.

bursting-bubble theory. Evidence. The principle that a presumption disappears once the presumed facts have been contradicted by credible evidence.

business. A commercial enterprise carried on for profit; a particular occupation or employment habitually engaged in for livelihood or gain.

business agent. 1. See managing agent under AGENT. 2. A labor-union representative selected to deal with employers.

business associations. See BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

business combination. 1. The consolidation, for accounting purposes, of a corporation and one or more incorporated or unincorporated businesses. 2. The two entities considered as one entity for accounting purposes.

business-interruption insurance. See INSURANCE.

business invitee. See INVITEE.

business-judgment rule. Corporations. The presumption that in making business decisions not involving direct self-interest or self-dealing, corporate directors act on an informed basis, in good faith, and in the honest belief that their actions are in the corporation's best interest. ● The rule shields directors and officers from liability for unprofitable or harmful corporate transactions if the transactions were made in good faith, with due care, and within the directors' or officers' authority.

"The business judgment rule is a presumption protecting conduct by directors that can be attributed to any rational business purpose. In order to plead and prove a claim, a plaintiff must plead and prove facts overcoming this presumption. Where the presumption is overcome, directors bear the burden of proving the fairness of the challenged conduct. The difference between these two levels of judicial scrutiny — a presumption in favor of directors that protects conduct that is rational, versus a burden of proving fairness — frequently is outcome determinative." 1 Dennis J. Block et al., The Business Judgment Rule 18-19 (5th ed. 1998).

business loss. See ordinary loss under LOSS.

ca. abbr. CIRCA.

cabal (kə-bal or kə-bahl). A small group of political schemers or conspirators. • The term is sometimes said to have originated as an acronym from a committee of five ministers of Charles II, whose surnames began with C, A, B, A, and L (Clifford, Arlington, Buckingham, Ashley, and Lauderdale). Though colorful, this etymology is false: the term came into English directly from the French cabale “intrigue,” which derives ultimately from Hebrew qabbalah “received lore.”

cabala (kab-ə-lə or kə-bahl-ə). An esoteric or obscure doctrine.

caballeria (kah-bah-ye-ree-ah). [Spanish] Spanish law. An allotment of land in regions formerly conquered by Spain, such as Mexico and the southwestern United States. • Originally a Spanish feudal tenure held by a soldier, a caballeria eventually came to refer to an area of land. It usu. measures 100 by 200 feet in the United States, and between 30 and 200 acres in Mexico and other former Spanish territories.

cabinet. (often cap.) The advisory council to an executive officer, esp. the President. • The President’s cabinet is a creation of custom and tradition, dating back to the term of George Washington. The U.S. Constitution alludes to a group of presidential advisers — the President “may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices” (art. II, § 2, cl. 1) — but the term cabinet is not specifically mentioned. The cabinet today comprises the heads of the 14 executive departments: the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Defense, the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of Energy, the Secretary of Education, and the Secretary of Veterans Affairs. Other officials, such as the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations and the director of the Office of Management and the Budget, have been accorded cabinet rank.

inner cabinet. The heads of the departments of State, Treasury, Defense, and Justice. • This group is so called because in most administrations they tend to be closer to the President and more influential than the rest of the cabinet (the outer cabinet).

kitchen cabinet. An unofficial and informal body of noncabinet advisers who often have more sway with the executive than the real cabinet does. • This term was first used derivatively in reference to some of President Andrew Jackson’s advisers, who, because of their reputation for unpolished manners, were supposedly not important enough to meet in the formal rooms of the White House.

“The term [kitchen cabinet] began to lose its sting after Jackson’s time. But because most Presidents do have circles of personal friends, the idea remains. Theodore Roosevelt had his ‘tennis cabinet.’ Jonathan Daniels referred to Warren Harding’s ‘poker cabinet.’ Herbert Hoover had an exercise-loving ‘medicine ball cabinet.’ Even governors can play the game. In writing of New York’s Alfred Smith, Ed Flynn mentions the ‘golfing cabinet.’” William Safire, Safire’s New Political Dictionary 389 (1993).

cabotage (kab-ə-tij). Int’l law. 1. The carrying on of trade along a country’s coast; the transport of goods or passengers from one port or place to another in the same country. • The privilege to carry on this trade is usu. limited to vessels flying the flag of that country. 2. The privilege of carrying traffic between two ports in the same country. 3. The right of a foreign airline to carry passengers and cargo between airports in the same country.

“Cabotage meant originally navigation and trade along the same stretch of coast between the parts thereof, such coast belonging to one and the same State. However, the term cabotage or coasting trade as used in commercial treaties comprises now sea trade between any two parts of the same country, whether on the same coasts or different coasts, provided always that the different coasts are all of them the coasts of one and the same country as a political and geographical unit in contra-distinction to the coasts of colonies or dominions of such countries.” 1 F.L. Oppenheim, International Law 493 (Hersch Lauter ed., 8th ed. 1955).

"Some writers maintain [that cabotage] should be applied only to maritime navigation; in this context one can distinguish between petit cabotage — transport between ports situated on the same sea (e.g. Bordeaux–Le Havre) — and grand cabotage — transport between ports situated on different seas (e.g. Bordeaux–Marseille). However, the term is also properly applied to transport between two inland points on an international river within one State, although the term grand cabotage is sometimes incorrectly applied to transnational transport between the inland ports of different riparian States on the same waterway. River cabotage properly so called is sometimes also referred to as local transport. Finally, the term has also been adopted to describe commercial air transport between airports situated in the same State." Robert C. Lane, "Cabotage," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 519–20 (1992).

ca'canny strike. See STRIKE.

cacicazgos (kah-see-kahs-gohs). Land held in entail by caciques (leaders of Indian villages) and their descendants in Spanish America.

cadastre (kə-das-tər). A survey and valuation of real estate in a county or region compiled for tax purposes. — Also spelled cadaster.

cadena (kə-deen-ə). [Spanish "chain"] Spanish law. Imprisonment; formerly, confinement at hard labor while chained from waist to ankle.

cadena perpetua. Life imprisonment.

cadena temporal. Imprisonment for a term less than life.

cadere (kad-ə-ree). [Latin "to fail"] Hist. 1. To end, cease, or fail. • This term usu. refers to the failure of a writ action. Cadit breve, for example, means "the writ fails." 2. To be changed or turned into. • Cadit assisa in juratum means "the assise is changed into a jury."

caduca (kə-d[y]oo-kə). [Latin "fallen things"] 1. Civil law. Inheritable property; property descending to an heir. 2. Roman law. Property formerly belonging to an intestate owner who has died without heirs or to someone who has suffered forfeiture for crime. • The property escheated to the state. See ESCHEAT. 3. Roman law. Testamentary gifts that lapse. See LAPSE.

caducary (kə-d[y]oo-kə-ree). (Of a bequest or estate) subject to, relating to, or by way of escheat, lapse, or forfeiture of property <the statute was intended to waive the rights of the caducary heirs>.

caduce (kə-d[y]oos), vb. To take by escheat or lapse <the government caduced the unclaimed mineral royalties>.

caducity (kə-d[y]oo-sə-tee), n. The lapse of a testamentary gift <the testator failed to provide a contingency for the caducity of the legacy>.

caeteris paribus. See CETERIS PARIBUS.

caeteris tacentibus. See CETERIS TACENTIBUS.

caeterorum administration. See ADMINISTRATION.

c.a.f. Cost, assurance, and freight. • This term is synonymous with C.I.F.

"[I]n a French contract the term 'C.A.F.' does not mean 'Cost and Freight' but has exactly the same meaning as the term 'C.I.F.,' since it is merely the French equivalent of that term. The 'A' does not stand for 'and' but for 'assurance,' which means insurance." William D. Hawkland, Uniform Commercial Code Series § 2-320 (1984).

cafeteria plan. An employee fringe-benefit plan allowing a choice of basic benefits up to a certain dollar amount.

cahoots (kə-hoots). Slang. Partnership, esp. in an illegal act; collusion <the lawyer was in cahoots with her client>.

Cairns's Act (kairn-zəz). Hist. An 1858 statute that expanded the relief available in England's chancery courts to include monetary damages in addition to injunctive relief. • Cairns's Act was superseded by the Judicature Acts of 1873–1875. — Also spelled Cairns' Act. Cf. JUDICATURE ACTS.

Calandra rule (kə-lan-drə). The doctrine that a grand-jury witness may be compelled to answer questions about certain items, even though the items were obtained by the police illegally. United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 94 S.Ct. 613 (1974).

calendar, n. 1. A systematized ordering of time into years, months, weeks, and days; esp., the Gregorian calendar established by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582 and adopted in Great Britain in 1752. • The Gregorian calendar is used throughout the Western world.

C & F. abbr. COST AND FREIGHT. — Also spelled CandF.

canfara (kan-fə-rə). [Law Latin] Hist. A trial by hot iron, formerly used in England. See ordeal by fire under ORDEAL.

canon (kan-ən), n. 1. A rule or principle, esp. one accepted as fundamental.

canon of construction. A rule used in construing legal instruments, esp. contracts and statutes. ● Although a few states have codified the canons of construction — examples of which are contra proferentem and ejusdem generis — most jurisdictions treat the canons as mere customs not having the force of law. — Often shortened to canon. — Also termed rule of construction; rule of interpretation.

“A frequent criticism of the canons [of construction], made forcefully by Professor Llewellyn many years ago, is that for every canon one might bring to bear on a point there is an equal and opposite canon. This is an exaggeration; but what is true is that there is a canon to support every possible result.” Richard A. Posner, The Federal Courts: Crisis and Reform 276 (1985).

canon of descent. (usu. pl.) A common-law rule governing intestate succession. ● In England, canons of descent tended to concentrate landholdings in the hands of a few people, an approach generally rejected in the United States. — Also termed canon of inheritance.

“The common-law canons of descent tended to prevent the diffusion of landed property, and to promote its accumulation in the hands of a few. The principles sprang from the martial genius of the feudal system. In the United States the English common law of descents, in its essential features, has been rejected; each State has established a law for itself.” William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 349 (1889).

2. (usu. cap.) A maxim stating in general terms the standards of professional conduct expected of lawyers. ● The Model Code of Judicial Conduct (1990) contains five canons and hundreds of specific rules. 3. A rule of ecclesiastical law. 4. A corpus of writings. 5. A clergy member on the staff of a cathedral.

canonical law. See CANON LAW.

canonical purgation. See PURGATION.

canonist (kan-ən-ist), n. An expert in canon law; esp., a canon lawyer or professor.

canon law. 1. A body of Roman ecclesiastical law that was not compiled until the 12th to 14th centuries. ● It has grown steadily since that time, and is now codified in the Codex Juris Canonici of 1983, replacing that of 1918. — Also termed corpus juris canonici; papal law; jus canonicum. 2. A body of law developed within a particular religious tradition. — Also termed church law; canonical law. Cf. ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

“The indirect contributions of the canon law to the development of English law were as great as, and the direct contributions far greater than, those made by the civil law. Indirectly the canon lawyers gave much even to the purely secular law of England, because, during the early Middle Ages, most of the judges or the royal courts were ecclesiastics acquainted with the chief doctrines of canon law. . . . The direct influence of the canon law in England resulted from its being the law which was administered in the courts of the Church.” W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 41 (2d ed. 1949).

canon of construction. See CANON (1).

canon of descent. See CANON (1).

canon of inheritance. See canon of descent under CANON (1).

cant (kant). Civil law. A method of dividing commonly held property by awarding it to the highest-bidding owner on condition that the successful bidder must buy out each coowner's interest. — Also termed licitation.

cantred (kan-tred). [fr. Welsh cant "hundred" + tref "village"] See HUNDRED.

canum (kay-nəm). [Law Latin] Hist. A duty or tribute payable from a tenant to a lord, usu. consisting of produce from the land.

canvass, vb. 1. To examine in detail; scrutinize <that issue has been repeatedly canvassed by our state's courts>. 2. To solicit political support from voters or a voting district; to take stock of public opinion <the candidate is actively canvassing the Western states>. — canvass, n.

cap, n. An upper limit, such as a statutory limit on the recovery in a tort action or on the interest a bank can charge. — cap, vb.

capacitate (kə-pas-ə-tayt), vb. To qualify; to make legally competent. — capacitation (kə-pas-ə-tay-shən), n.

capacity. 1. The role in which one performs an act <in her corporate capacity>.

proprietary capacity. The capacity of a city or town when it engages in a business-like venture rather than a governmental function. See PROPRIETARY FUNCTION.

2. A legal qualification, such as legal age, that determines one's ability to sue or be sued, to enter into a binding contract, and the like <she had full capacity to bind the corporation with her signature>. • Unless necessary to show the court's jurisdiction, a plaintiff's pleadings need not assert the legal capacity of any party. A party wishing to raise the issue of capacity must do so by specific negative pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(a). — Also termed (specif.) capacity to sue. See STANDING. 3. The mental ability to understand the nature and effect of one's acts <his acute pain reduced his capacity to understand the hospital's admission form>. — Also termed mental capacity. See COMPETENCY.

criminal capacity. The mental ability that a person must possess to be held accountable for a crime; the ability to understand right from wrong. See INSANITY; INFANCY.

diminished capacity. An impaired mental condition — short of insanity — that is caused by intoxication, trauma, or disease and that prevents the person from having the mental state necessary to be held responsible for a crime. • In some jurisdictions, a defendant's diminished capacity can be used to determine the degree of the offense or the severity of the punishment. — Also termed diminished responsibility. Cf. INSANITY.

testamentary capacity. The mental ability a person must have to prepare a valid will. • This capacity is often described as the ability to recognize the natural objects of one's bounty, the nature and extent of one's estate, and the fact that one is making a plan to dispose of the estate after death. — Also termed disposing capacity.

capacity defense. See DEFENSE (1).

capacity to sue. See CAPACITY (2).

capax doli (kay-paks doh-li). See DOLI CAPAX.

capax negotii (kay-paks ni-goh-shee-I), adj. [Latin "capable of entering into a transaction"] (Of a person) having capacity to enter into a contract; capable of transacting business.

cape (kay-pee). Hist. [Latin "take"] A writ filed to recover possession of land.

cape magnum (kay-pee mag-nəm). [Latin "grand" cape] A writ granting possession of land before a tenant's appearance in the action. — Also termed grand cape.

cape parvum (kay-pee pahr-vəm). [Latin "little" cape] A writ for the recovery of land issuing after the appearance of the tenant in the action. — Also termed petit cape.

"Cape is a writ judicial touching plea of land or tenements, so termed (as most writs be) of that word in itself, which carrieth the especiallest intention or end thereof. And this writ is divided in (Cape magnum, & Cape parvum): both which . . . take hold of things immoveable, and seeme to differ betweene themselves in these points. First, because (cape magnum) or the (grand Cape) lyeth before appearance, and (Cape parvum) afterward. Secondly, the (Cape magnum) summoneth the tenent to answer to the default, and over to the demandant: (Cape parvum) summoneth the tenent to answer to the default onely: and therefore is called (Cape parvum) or in French English (petit Cape)." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

capias (kay-pee-əs or kap-ee-əs). [Latin "that you take"] Any of various types of writs that require an officer to take a named defendant into custody. — Also termed writ of capias; body execution.

capias ad audiendum judicium (ad aw-dee-en-dəm joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin "that you take to hear the judgment"] In a misdemeanor or case, a writ issued to bring the defendant to hear the judgment to be imposed after having failed to appear.

capias ad computandum (ad kom-pyoo-tan-dəm). [Latin “that you take for computation”] Hist. A writ issued when a debtor has failed to appear and make account after losing in an action of account render. See ACCOUNTING (3).

capias ad respondendum (ad ree-spon-den-dəm). [Latin “that you take to answer”] A writ commanding the sheriff to take the defendant into custody to ensure that the defendant will appear in court. — Abbr. ca. resp.

capias ad satisfaciendum (ad sat-is-fay-shee-en-dəm). [Latin “that you take to satisfy”] Hist. A postjudgment writ commanding the sheriff to imprison the defendant until the judgment is satisfied. — Abbr. ca. sa.

capitale (kap-i-tay-lee). [Latin "a thing"] Hist. 1. Movable property, esp. animals (such as 100 head of cattle). • Over time, chattel became the more common term. 2. A stolen thing, or its equivalent value. Pl. capitalia.

capital expenditure. An outlay of funds to acquire or improve a fixed asset. — Also termed capital improvement; capital outlay.

capital expense. See EXPENSE.

capital flight. The sending of large amounts of investment money out of a country, usu. as a result of panic caused by political turmoil or a severe recession.

capital gain. The profit realized when a capital asset is sold or exchanged. — Also termed capital gains. Cf. ordinary gain under GAIN (3); capital loss under LOSS.

"Throughout most of the history of income taxation in the U.S., a distinction has been drawn between the rate of taxation on 'ordinary income' (or ordinary loss) and 'capital gain' (or capital loss). 'Capital gain' refers to the income from certain transactions in some assets, called capital assets, or from other transactions that Congress has said should be taxed as capital gain. . . . The most common form of capital gain or loss transaction is a sale of an asset such as a share of stock or a parcel of land, for cash." John K. McNulty, Federal Income Taxation of Individuals in a Nutshell 420 (5th ed. 1995).

long-term capital gain. The profit realized from selling or exchanging a capital asset held for more than a specified period, usu. one year.

short-term capital gain. The profit realized from selling or exchanging a capital asset held for less than a specified period, usu. one year. • It is treated as ordinary income under current federal tax law.

capitis aestimatio (kap-i-tis es-ti-may-shee-oh). [Latin “valuing of a head”] Hist. A monetary estimate of a person’s life, made to assess a penalty for the person’s slaying. See WERGILD.

capitis deminutio (kap-i-tis dem-i-n[y]oo-shee-oh). [Latin “reduction of status”] Roman law. A diminution or abridgment of a person's legal status. — Also spelled capitis diminutio. Pl. capitis deminutiones.

"Capitis deminutio is the destruction of the 'caput' or legal personality. Capitis deminutio, so to speak, wipes out the former individual and puts a new one in his place, and between the old and the new individual there is, legally speaking, nothing in common. A juristic personality may be thus destroyed in one of three ways: (1) by loss of the status libertatis. This is the capitis deminutio maxima; (2) by loss of the status civitatis. This is the capitis deminutio media (magna); (3) by severance from the agnatic family. This entails capitis deminutio minima." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 178-79 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

capitula (kə-pich-ə-lə). [Law Latin "chapters"] Hist. 1. Collections of laws or ordinances organized under various headings. — Also termed capitulary. 2. Chapters or assemblies of ecclesiastical persons.

capitula coronae (kə-pich-ə-lə kə-roh-nee). [Latin "chapters of the Crown"] Hist. A more detailed form of the articles of the eyre. See ARTICLES OF THE EYRE.

capitula de judaeis (kə-pich-ə-lə dee joo-dee-is). [Latin "chapters on the Jews"] Hist. 1. Laws concerning the Jews. 2. Questions posed by the justices in eyre to determine the amount a Jew would pay to receive the king's protection and a license to conduct business. • The capitula de judaeis reflected the pervasive anti-Semitism of medieval England. Cf. ARTICLES OF THE EYRE.

capitula itineris (kə-pich-ə-lə i-tin-ə-ris). [Law Latin "chapters of the eyre"] See ARTICLES OF THE EYRE.

capitulary (kə-pich-ə-ler-ee). [Latin "chapter or section (of a code)"] Any orderly and systematic collection or code of laws. See CAPITULA (1).

capitulation (kə-pich-ə-lay-shən), n. 1. The act of surrendering or giving in. 2. Int'l law. An agreement to surrender a fortified place or a military or naval force. • A commander in control may generally make such an agreement for the place or force. 3. Hist. An agreement between a Christian state and a non-Christian one (such as the Ottoman Empire) giving subjects of the former certain privileges in the territory of the latter. — capitulate, vb. — capitulatory, adj.

cap rate. See CAPITALIZATION RATE.

caprice (kə-prees), n. 1. Arbitrary or unfounded motivation. 2. The disposition to change one's mind impulsively.

capricious (kə-prish-əs), adj. 1. (Of a person) characterized by or guided by unpredictable or impulsive behavior. 2. (Of a decree) contrary to the evidence or established rules of law. Cf. ARBITRARY.

captain-of-the-ship doctrine. In medical-malpractice law, the doctrine imposing liability on a surgeon for the actions of assistants who are under the surgeon's control but who are employees of the hospital, not the surgeon.

captain's mast. Military law. The nonjudicial punishment of an enlisted person by a military commanding officer. • This type of punishment is usu. for a minor offense. See nonjudicial punishment under PUNISHMENT.

captation (kap-tay-shən). Civil law. Coercion of a testator resulting in the substitution of another person's desires for those of the testator. • The term formerly applied to the first stage of a hypnotic trance. Cf. UNDUE INFLUENCE.

captator (kap-tay-tər). Civil law. A person who obtains a gift or legacy through artifice. Cf. UNDUE INFLUENCE.

captive insurance. See INSURANCE.

captive insurance company. See INSURANCE COMPANY.

captive insurer. See captive insurance company under INSURANCE COMPANY.

capture. See RULE OF CAPTURE.

caput (kap-ət). [Latin “head”] 1. Hist. A head, chief, or principal person. 2. Roman law. A person. 3. Roman law. A person’s condition or status.

“A ‘natural,’ as opposed to an ‘artificial,’ person is such a human being as is regarded by the law as capable of rights or duties: in the language of Roman law as having a ‘status.’ . . . Besides possessing this general legal capacity, or status, a man may also possess various special capacities, such as the ‘tria capita’ of liberty, citizenship, and family rights. A slave having, as such, neither rights nor liabilities, had in Roman law, strictly speaking, no ‘status,’ ‘caput,’ or ‘persona.’ . . . It must however be remembered that the terms ‘persona’ and ‘caput’ were also used in popular language as nearly equivalent to ‘homo,’ and in this sense were applied to slaves as well as to freemen.” Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 80–81 (4th ed. 1888).

caput comitatus (kap-ət kom-ə-tay-təs). [Latin “head of the county”] Hist. The head of a county; a sheriff.

caput gerat lupinum (kap-ət jeer-ət loo-pi-nəm). [Latin “let him bear the head of a wolf”] Hist. An outlawed felon considered a pariah — a lone wolf — open to attack by anyone. See OUTLAWRY.

“He who breaks the law has gone to war with the community; the community goes to war with him. It is the right and duty of every man to pursue him, to ravage his land, to burn his house, to hunt him down like a wild beast and slay him; for a wild beast he is; not merely is he a ‘friendless man,’ he is a wolf. . . . Caput gerat lupinum — in these words the court decreed outlawry.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 449 (2d ed. 1899).

carcanum (kahr-kay-nəm). [Latin “iron collar, pillory”] Hist. A prison or workhouse.

carcelage (kahr-sə-lij). [fr. Latin carcer “prison”] Hist. Prison fees.

carcer (kahr-sər). [Latin “jail, prison”] Hist. A prison or jail, esp. one used to detain rather than punish. • Carcer, as used in English law and Roman law, usu. referred to a jail used as a place of detention during trial or after sentence pending execution, rather than as a place of punishment. The modern term incarceration derives from this word.

cardinal-change doctrine. Contracts. The principle that if the government makes a fundamental, unilateral change to a contract beyond the scope of what was originally contemplated, the other party (usu. a contractor) will be released from the obligation to continue work under the contract. • A contractor’s allegation of cardinal change is essentially an assertion that the government has breached the contract.

care, n. 1. Serious attention; heed <written with care>. 2. Under the law of negligence, the conduct demanded of a person in a given situation. • Typically, this involves a person’s giving attention both to possible dangers, mistakes, and pitfalls and to ways of ensuring that these risks do not materialize <standard of care>. See DEGREE OF CARE; REASONABLE PERSON.

adequate care. See reasonable care.

due care. See reasonable care.

great care. 1. The degree of care that a prudent person exercises in dealing with very important personal affairs. 2. The degree of care exercised in a given situation by the person most competent to deal with the situation.

ordinary care. See reasonable care.

proper care. See reasonable care.

reasonable care. As a test of liability for negligence, the degree of care that a prudent and competent person engaged in the same line of business or endeavor would exercise under similar circumstances. — Also termed due care; ordinary care; adequate care; proper care. See REASONABLE PERSON.

slight care. The degree of care a person gives to matters of minor importance; the degree of care given by a person of limited accountability.

career criminal. See RECIDIVIST.

career vice-consul. See VICE-CONSUL.

careless, adj. 1. (Of a person) not exercising reasonable care. 2. (Of an action or behavior) engaged in without reasonable care. Cf. RECKLESS.

carelessness, n. 1. The fact, condition, or instance of a person’s either not having done what he or she ought to have done, or having done what he or she ought not to have done. 2. A person’s general disposition not to do something that ought to be done.

"The word 'carelessness' as a synonym for negligence can be committed by those who care deeply. A man may take all the care of which he is capable, and yet be accounted negligent for failing to reach the objective standard. He may honestly . . . believe that the facts are such that he is not imperilling anyone; but he may be held to have been negligent in arriving at that belief. An incompetent driver may be convicted of driving 'without due care and attention' even though he was doing his level best. The careless person is the person who does not take the care he ought to take: never mind whether he felt careful. He can be held to be negligent in making a perfectly honest mistake." Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 44-45 (1978).

ca. resp. See capias ad respondendum under CAPIAS.

cargo insurance. See INSURANCE.

carjacking. The forcible theft of a vehicle from a motorist.

carnal abuse. See sexual abuse under ABUSE.

carnal knowledge. Archaic. Sexual intercourse, esp. with an underage female.

"The ancient term for the act itself was 'carnal knowledge' and this is found in some of the recent cases and statutes. The phrase 'sexual intercourse,' more common today apart from legal literature, is also found in recent cases and statutes. Either term, when the reference is to rape, is sometimes coupled with the word 'ravish.' And unlawful intercourse with a girl under the age of consent is often characterized as 'carnal knowledge and abuse.'" Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 201 (3d ed. 1982).

carnet (kahr-nay). A customs document allowing an item (esp. an automobile) to be exported temporarily from one country into another country.

carriage. Transport of freight or passengers.

Carriage of Goods by Sea Act. Maritime law. A 1936 federal act defining, for goods damaged in transit, the rights and responsibilities of issuers and holders of ocean bills of lading. 46 USCA §§ 1300 et seq.

carrier. 1. An individual or organization (such as a railroad or an airline) that transports passengers or goods for a fee.

common carrier. A carrier that is required by law to transport passengers or freight, without refusal, if the approved fare or charge is paid. — Also termed public carrier.

"[A] 'common carrier' is bound to take all goods of the kind which he usually carries, unless his conveyance is full, or the goods be specially dangerous; but may charge different rates to different customers." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 299 (13th ed. 1924).

marine carrier. A carrier operating on navigable waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

private carrier. A carrier that is not bound to accept business from the general public and is therefore not considered a common carrier. — Also termed contract carrier.

2. INSURER.

carrier's lien. See LIEN.

Carroll doctrine. The principle that a broadcast licensee has standing to contest any grant of a competitive license by the Federal Communications Commission because the grant could lead to a diminution in broadcast service by causing economic injury to an existing licensee. Carroll Broadcasting Co. v. FCC, 258 F.2d 440 (D.C. Cir. 1958).

carryback. Tax. An income-tax deduction (esp. for a net operating loss) that cannot be taken entirely in a given period but may be taken in an earlier period (usu. the previous three years). — Also termed loss carryback; tax-loss carryback. Cf. CARRYOVER.

active case. A case that is still pending.

case at bar. A case under the immediate consideration of the court. — Also termed case at bench; instant case; present case.

case made. See case reserved.

case of first impression. A case that presents the court with issues of law that have not previously been decided in that jurisdiction.

case reserved. 1. A written statement of the facts proved at trial and drawn up and stipulated to by the parties, so that certain legal issues can be decided by an appellate court. — Also termed case made; special case. 2. Hist. An agreement between litigants to submit the case to a judge rather than to a jury.

"It should have come as no surprise . . . that in most cases 'merchants were not fond of juries.' For one of the leading measures of the growing alliance between bench and bar on the one hand and commercial interests on the other is the swiftness with which the power of the jury is curtailed after 1790. . . . [During the last years of the eighteenth century American lawyers vastly expanded the 'special case' or 'case reserved,' a device designed to submit points of law to the judges while avoiding the effective intervention of a jury. In England, Lord Mansfield had used a similar procedure to bring about an alliance between common lawyers and mercantile interests." Morton J. Horwitz, The Transformation of American Law, 1780-1860 141-42 (1977).

case stated. 1. A formal written statement of the facts in a case, submitted to the court jointly by the parties so that a decision may be rendered without trial. — Also termed case agreed on. 2. Hist. A procedure used by the Court of Chancery to refer difficult legal questions to a common-law court. • This procedure was abolished in 1852. 3. English law. An appeal from a Magistrates' Court to the Divisional Court of Queen's Bench on a point of criminal law. • After ruling, the magistrate states the facts for the appeal and the Queen's Bench rules on the question of law presented by the magistrate's ruling.

inactive case. A pending case that is not proceeding toward resolution. • This may occur for several reasons, such as nonservice, want of prosecution, or (in a criminal case) the defendant's having absconded.

instant case. See case at bar.

present case. See case at bar.

special case. See case reserved.

test case. 1. A lawsuit brought to establish an important legal principle or right. • Such an action is frequently brought by the parties' mutual consent on agreed facts — when that is so, a test case is also sometimes termed amicable action; amicable suit. 2. An action selected from several suits that are based on the same facts and evidence, that raise the same question of law, and that have a common plaintiff or a common defendant. • Sometimes, when all parties agree, the court orders a consolidation and all parties are bound by the decision in the test case. — Also termed test action.

2. A criminal investigation <the Manson case>. 3. An individual suspect or convict in relation to any aspect of the criminal-justice system <the probation officer said he considers Mr. Jones a difficult case>. 4. An argument <the debater made a compelling case for gun control>. 5. An instance, occurrence, or situation  . 6. case of first impression. See CASE.

case-or-controversy requirement. The constitutional requirement that, for a federal court to hear a case, the case must involve an actual dispute. See CONTROVERSY (3).

“The courts of the United States do not sit to decide questions of law presented in a vacuum, but only such questions as arise in a ‘case or controversy.’ The two terms can be used interchangeably, for, we are authoritatively told, a ‘controversy,’ if distinguishable at all from a ‘case,’ is distinguishable only in that it is a less comprehensive term, and includes only suits of a civil nature.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts 60 (5th ed. 1994).

case reserved. See CASE.

case stated. See CASE.

case system. See CASEBOOK METHOD.

case-within-a-case rule. Torts. The requirement that in a legal-malpractice action, the plaintiff must show that, but for the attorney's negligence, the plaintiff would have won the case underlying the malpractice action.

cas fortuit (kah for-twee). [French “fortuitous case”] Insurance. A fortuitous event; an inevitable accident.

cash, n. 1. Money or its equivalent. 2. Currency or coins, negotiable checks, and balances in bank accounts. — cash, vb.

petty cash. Currency kept on hand for incidental expenditures.

cash-against-documents sale. See documentary sale under SALE.

cash-and-carry clause. Int'l law. A regulation that, before U.S. involvement in World War II, allowed belligerent countries to pay cash for goods whose export was prohibited. • Formally, this regulation was entirely neutral, but in practice it favored Great Britain.

cash bail. See BAIL (1).

cash-basis accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

cash book. An account book of all cash received and paid out by a business.

cash budget. A period-by-period schedule of a business's opening cash on hand, estimated cash receipts, cash disbursements, and cash balance. • A cash budget is used to project a business's cash receipts and disbursements over some future period.

cash collateral. See COLLATERAL.

cash cycle. The time it takes for cash to flow into and out of a business, such as the time between the purchase of raw materials for manufacture and the sale of the finished product.

cash discount. See DISCOUNT.

cash dividend. See DIVIDEND.

cash equivalent. A short-term security that is liquid enough to be considered equivalent to cash.

cash-equivalent doctrine. Tax. The doctrine requiring income to be reported even if it is not cash, as when the taxpayer barter to receive in-kind payments.

cash-expenditure method. Tax. A technique used by the IRS to reconstruct a taxpayer's unreported income by comparing the amount spent on goods and services during a given period with the income reported for that period. • If the expenditures exceed the reported revenue, the IRS treats the difference as taxable income.

cash flow. 1. The movement of cash through a business, as a measure of profitability or liquidity. 2. The cash generated from a business or transaction. 3. Cash receipts minus cash disbursements for a given period. — Sometimes spelled cashflow.

cash flow per common share. The cash flow from operations minus preferred stock dividends, divided by the number of outstanding common shares.

discounted cash flow. A method of evaluating a capital investment by comparing its projected income and costs with its current value. — Abbr. DCF.

incremental cash flow. The net increase in cash flow attributable to a particular capital investment.

negative cash flow. A financial situation in which cash outflow exceeds cash inflow. See INSOLVENCY.

net cash flow. Cash inflow minus cash outflow.

cashier, n. 1. One who receives and records payments at a business. 2. A bank's or trust company's executive officer, who is responsible for banking transactions.

cashier, vb. To dismiss from service dishonorably <after three such incidents, Jones was cashiered>.

cashier's check. See CHECK.

cashlite. See AMERCEMENT.

cash merger. See MERGER.

cash or deferred arrangement. A retirement-plan provision permitting an employee to have a certain amount of compensation paid in cash or contributed, on behalf of the employee, to a profit-sharing or stock-bonus plan. • A 401(k) plan is a type of cash or deferred arrangement. — Abbr. CODA.

cashout, n. An arrangement by a seller to receive the entire amount of equity in cash rather than retain an interest in the property. — cash out, vb.

cash-out merger. See cash merger under MERGER.

cash-refund annuity. See ANNUITY.

cash sale. See SALE.

cash surrender value. See VALUE.

cash tender offer. See TENDER OFFER.

cash-transaction report. IRS Form 4789, which requires banks and other financial institutions to report cash transactions above a certain amount.

cash value. 1. See fair market value under VALUE. 2. See full cash value under VALUE.

cash-value option. See OPTION.

cassare (kə-sair-ee), vb. [Law Latin fr. Latin cassus “void”] Hist. To quash or nullify. • Cassare was usu. used in reference to voiding an agreement, law, or writ. See CASSETUR BILLA; CASSETUR BREVE.

cassation (ka-say-shən), n. A quashing. See COURT OF CASSATION.

cassetur billa (kə-see-tər bil-ə). [Latin “that the bill be quashed”] Hist. 1. A judgment quashing a plea in abatement. 2. A plaintiff’s on-the-record admission that a defendant’s plea in abatement cannot be avoided. • This statement discontinues the action. — Also termed billa cassetur; quod billa cassetur.

cassetur breve (kə-see-tər bree-vee). [Latin “that the writ be quashed”] Hist. A judgment quashing an action begun by writ.

castigatory (kas-ti-gə-tor-ee). Hist. A device for punishing scolds by repeatedly plunging them underwater. — Also termed ducking stool; cking stool; trebucket. See SCOLD. Cf. BRANKS.

“[A] common scold, . . . if convicted, shall be sentenced to be placed in a certain engine of correction called the trebucket, castigatory, or cking stool, which in the Saxon language signifies the scolding stool; though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking stool, because the residue of the judgment is, that, when she is so placed therein, she shall be plunged in the water for her punishment.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 169 (1769).

casting vote. 1. A deciding vote cast by the presiding officer of a deliberative body when the votes are tied. • The U.S. Constitution gives the Vice President the casting vote in the Senate. U.S. Const. art. I, § 3. 2. VOTE (3).

cast-iron-pipe doctrine. See DIVIDEND-CREDIT RULE.

castle doctrine. Criminal law. An exception to the retreat rule allowing the use of deadly force by a person who is protecting his or her home and its inhabitants from attack, esp. from a trespasser who intends to commit a felony or inflict serious bodily harm. — Also termed dwelling defense; defense of habitation. See RETREAT RULE.

castle-guard, n. Hist. 1. The protection of a castle. 2. A form of knight service in which a tenant must protect the lord’s castle. 3. The tenure giving rise to this knight service. 4. A tax once imposed in lieu of this knight service. 5. The territory that is chargeable with the tax imposed in lieu of the knight service. — Also termed (in senses 2–5) ward.

casual, adj. 1. (Of employment) occurring without regularity; occasional . See casual employment under EMPLOYMENT. 2. (Of an event or occurrence) not expected, foreseen, or planned; fortuitous .

casual affray. See CHANCE-MEDLEY.

casual condition. See CONDITION (2).

casual deficit. An unforeseen shortfall of funds.

casual ejector. See EJECTOR.

casual employment. See EMPLOYMENT.

casualty. 1. A serious or fatal accident. 2. A person or thing injured, lost, or destroyed.

casualty gain. Insurance. The profit realized by an insured when the benefits paid exceed the insured property’s adjusted value.

casualty insurance. See INSURANCE.

casualty loss. See LOSS.

casualty pot. Tax. A step in evaluating tax liability in which casualty gains and losses are compared to determine whether a net loss or gain has occurred. Cf. MAIN POT.

casu consimili (kay-s[y]oo kən-sim-ə-lī). [Latin “in a like case”] Hist. A writ of entry allowing the holder of a reversionary interest to take possession of land alienated by a life tenant. • This writ originated in the Statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. ch. 24 (1285)), which expanded the writs available to litigants by authorizing the Chancery to issue a writ for any situation that called for a writ similar to one that had previously issued casu consimili (“in a like case”). Many other writs were framed under Westminster 2, but this particular writ’s close association with the statute led to the term’s becoming generic. — Also termed consimili casu; entry in casu consimili.

casu proviso (kay-s[y]oo prə-vi-zoh). [Latin “in the case provided”] Hist. A writ of entry to recover a reversion in land alienated by a tenant in dower, i.e., a widow with a life estate in the alienated land.

casus (kay-səs). [Latin] 1. A chance accident; an event without human intervention or fault. Cf. CULPA; DOLUS. 2. A situation actually contemplated by the legislature in enacting a statute that applies to the situation. • In this sense, the term is opposed to casus omissus.

casus belli (kay-səs bel-lī). [Latin] An act or circumstance that provokes or justifies war.

casus foederis (kay-səs fed-ər-is). [Latin “the case of the treaty” or “the case of the agreement”] 1. Int’l law. A provocative act by one nation toward another, entitling the latter to call upon an ally to fulfill the terms of an alliance. 2. A clause within a treaty of alliance specifying such provocative acts. 3. Contracts. A case or an event falling within the terms of a contract.

casus fortuitus (kay-səs for-t[y]oo-ə-təs). [Latin] 1. A fortuitous event. 2. A loss not attributable to human fault.

casus major (kay-səs may-jər). [Latin] An extraordinary casualty.

casus male inclusus (kay-səs mal-ee in-kloo-səs). [Latin “case wrongly included”] A situation literally provided for by a statute or contract, but wrongly so because the provision’s literal application has unintended consequences.

casus omissus (kay-səs ə-mis-əs). [Latin “case omitted”] A situation not provided for by a statute or contract, and therefore governed by caselaw or new judge-made law. Pl. casus omissi.

“At times a state of war appears to exist between the courts and the parliamentary draftsman. The courts decline to come to the rescue when a casus omissus is revealed, so words appropriate to cover the casus omissus are added to the statute. More frequently the draftsman gets in first and, anticipating a strict construction by the courts coupled with a total lack of sympathy if there should happen to be a casus omissus, he produces a statute which is nothing less than horrific in its detail.” Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 11–12 (1976).

catalla (kə-tal-ə). [Law Latin “chattels”] Hist. 1. CHATTEL. — Also termed catals.

“Catals (catalla) alias chatels, cometh of the Normans. For . . . all movable goods . . . are called chatels: the contrary whereof is (fief) which we do call fee.” John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

2. Cattle used for plowing.

catalla otiosa (kə-tal-ə oh-shee-oh-nis). [Law Latin “nonworking chattels”] Hist. 1. Chattels that are not animals. 2. Cattle not used for plowing.

catallis captis nomine districtionis (kə-tal-is kap-tis nahm-ə-nee di-strik-shee-oh-nis). [Latin “chattels taken in name of distress”] Hist. A writ permitting a landlord who is owed rent to distrain (i.e., seize) the doors, windows, and gates of the tenant’s house.

catallis reddendis (kə-tal-is ri-den-dis). See DE CATALIS REDDENDIS.

catals. See CATALLA.

cataneus. See CAPITANEUS.

catchpoll (kach-pohl). Hist. A sheriff’s deputy or bailiff. — Also spelled catchpol; catchpole.

“Catchpol . . . (One that catches by the Poll) Though now taken as a word of Contempt, yet in ancient times, it was used, without reproach, for such as we now call Sergeants of the Mace, Bailiffs, or any other that use to Arrest Men upon any Action.” Thomas Blount, Nomolexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

catch-time charter. See time charter under CHARTER (4).

categorical question. See QUESTION (1).

cater cousin (kay-tər). A distant relative. • The term derives from the French quatre cousin, meaning a cousin in the fourth degree.

cathedral. Eccles. law. The principal church of a diocese, in which the bishop's throne, or cathedra, is situated.

cathedral preferment. Eccles. law. In a cathedral church, a deanery, archdeaconry, canonry, or other office below the rank of bishop.

Catoniana regula (kə-toh-nee-ay-nə reg-yə-lə). [Latin "rule attributed to Cato"] Roman law. The principle that the lapse of time does not cure something void at the outset. • It was typically used to set aside a bequest in which the testator did not have the requisite power or capacity when executing the will.

cats and dogs. Slang. 1. Nonperforming securities. 2. Highly speculative securities.

"Wall Street disdainfully regards most penny stocks as cats and dogs, a popular phrase in use since 1879 to describe low-priced, often worthless, speculative securities. The single word dog also means a worthless security, and the related pup meant a low-priced, inactive stock during the 1940s and 1950s." Kathleen Odean, High Steppers, Fallen Angels, and Lollipops: Wall Street Slang 10 (1988).

cattle rustling. The stealing of cattle.

caucus (kaw-kəs), n. 1. Representatives from a political party who assemble to nominate candidates and decide party policy. 2. A meeting of a group of people to formulate a policy or strategy. — caucus, vb.

separate caucus. A confidential mediation session that a mediator holds with an individual party to elicit settlement offers and demands. • When separate caucuses are used, the mediator typically shuttles between the two (or more) sides of a dispute to communicate offers and demands.

causa (kaw-zə), n. [Latin] 1. CAUSE (1).

"One of the vaguest terms of the Roman juristic language. Starting from the basic meaning of cause, reason, inducement, the jurists use it in very different senses. . . . Causa is the reason for which some judicial measures (actions, exceptions, interdicts) were introduced by the praetor. . . . Sometimes causa is roughly identical with animus when it alludes to the subjective motive, intention, or purpose of a person." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 382–83 (1953).

causa causans (kaw-zə kaw-zanz). An immediate or effective cause. See immediate cause under CAUSE.

causa jactitationis maritaggi (kaw-zə jak-ti-tay-shee-oh-nis mar-ə-tay-jee-I). [Latin "cause of assertion of marriage"] See JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE.

causa matrimonii praelocuti (kaw-zə ma-trə-moh-nee-I pree-lə-kyoo-ti). [Latin "cause of prearranged marriage"] Hist. A writ of entry available to a woman who had given land to a suitor who refused to marry her within a reasonable time. — Also termed entry for marriage in speech.

causa proxima (kaw-zə prok-si-mə). The immediate or latest cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE.

causa remota (kaw-zə ri-moh-tə). A remote or indirect cause. See remote cause under CAUSE.

causa sine qua non (kaw-zə si-nee kway non also sin-ay kwah nohn). A necessary cause; the cause without which the thing cannot be or the event could not have occurred. See but-for cause under CAUSE.

2. Civil law. A consideration or inducement.

"The revolution of the ancient law of Contract was consummated when the Praetor of some one year announced in his Edict that he would grant equitable actions upon Pacts which had never been matured at all into Contracts, provided only that the Pacts in question had been founded on a consideration (causa)." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 28 (17th ed. 1901).

"Article 1131 of the French Civil Code provides that: 'L'obligation sans cause, ou sur une fausse cause, ou sur une cause illicite, ne peut avoir aucun effet.' This cause or causa is a synonym for consideration, and we find the terms used interchangeably in the earlier English authorities." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 361 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

causa non secuta (kaw-zə non sə-kyoo-tə). [Latin "the (expected) consideration not having followed"] Roman law. A consideration that has failed; failure of consideration.

falsa causa (fal-sə [or fawl-sə] kaw-zə). [Latin "mistaken reason or motive"] Roman law. Falsity of consideration. • This might result from several things, such as a mistaken reason for making a gift or bequest.

causa causae est causa causati (kaw-zə kaw-zee est kaw-zə kaw-zay-ti). [Latin "the cause of a cause is the cause of the thing caused"]. Torts. The principle that the cause of the cause (rather than only the immediate cause) should also be considered as the cause of the effect.

causa causans. See CAUSA (1).

causa jactitationis maritaggi. See CAUSA (1).

causal (kaw-zəl), adj. 1. Of, relating to, or involving causation . 2. Arising from a cause . Cf. CAUSATIVE.

causal challenge. See challenge for cause under CHALLENGE (2).

causality (kaw-zal-ə-tee), n. The principle of causal relationship; the relation between cause and effect <the foreseeability test is one of duty and of causality>. — Also termed causation. — causal, adj.

causa matrimonii praelocuti. See CAUSA (1).

causam nobis significes quare (kaw-zəm noh-bis sig-nif-ə-seez kwair-ee). [Latin "that you signify to us the cause why"] Hist. A writ ordering a town's mayor to give seisin of land to a grantee of the king.

causa mortis (kaw-zə mor-tis), adj. Done or made in contemplation of one's own death. See gift causa mortis under GIFT.

causa non secuta. See CAUSA (2).

causa proxima. See CAUSA (1).

causare (kaw-zair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin causari "to litigate"] To litigate; to show cause against.

causa remota. See CAUSA (1).

causa sine qua non. See CAUSA (1).

causation (kaw-zay-shən). 1. The causing or producing of an effect <the plaintiff must prove causation>. 2. CAUSALITY.

negative causation. Securities. The defense that part of the plaintiff's damages were caused by factors other than the depreciation in value of the securities resulting from registration-statement defects. ● If negative causation is proved, the plaintiff's damages should be reduced. 15 USCA § 77k(e).

transaction causation. Securities. The fact that an investor would not have engaged in a given transaction if the other party had made truthful statements at the required time.

causative (kaw-zə-tiv), adj. 1. Effective as a cause or producing a result <causative factor of the accident>. 2. Expressive of causation <the causative relationship between drinking and assault>. Cf. CAUSAL.

causator (kaw-zay-tər). [Latin "promoter of litigation"] Hist. 1. A litigant. 2. A person who manages or litigates a cause for another.

cause, n. 1. Something that produces an effect or result <the cause of the accident>.

but-for cause. The cause without which the event could not have occurred. — Also termed actual cause; cause in fact; factual cause.

concurrent cause. 1. One of two or more causes that simultaneously create a condition that no single cause could have brought about. 2. One of two or more causes that simultaneously create a condition that any one cause could have created alone.

contributing cause. A factor that — though not the primary cause — plays a part in producing a result.

cooperative cause. Archaic. A person who is contributorily or comparatively negligent.

direct and proximate cause. See proximate cause.

direct cause. See proximate cause.

efficient adequate cause. See proximate cause.

efficient cause. See proximate cause.

efficient intervening cause. See intervening cause.

efficient proximate cause. See proximate cause.

factual cause. See but-for cause.

immediate cause. The last event in a chain of events, though not necessarily the proximate cause of what follows. — Also termed effective cause.

intervening cause. An event that comes between the initial event in a sequence and the end result, thereby altering the natural course of events that might have connected a wrongful act to an injury. ● If the intervening cause is strong enough to relieve the wrongdoer of any liability, it becomes a superseding cause. A dependent intervening cause is one that is not an act and is never a superseding cause. An independent intervening cause is one that operates on a condition produced by an antecedent cause but in no way resulted from that cause. — Also termed intervening act; intervening agency; intervening force; in- dependent intervening cause; efficient intervening cause; supervening cause; novus actus interveniens; nova causa interveniens. See superseding cause.

jural cause. See proximate cause.

legal cause. See proximate cause.

primary cause. See proximate cause.

procuring cause. 1. See proximate cause (2). 2. Real estate. The efforts of the agent or broker who effects the sale of realty and who is therefore entitled to a commission.

proximate cause. 1. A cause that is legally sufficient to result in liability. 2. A cause that directly produces an event and without which the event would not have occurred. — Also termed direct cause; direct and proximate cause; efficient proximate cause; efficient cause; efficient adequate cause; legal cause; procuring cause; producing cause; primary cause; jural cause.

"The four 'tests' or 'clues' of proximate cause in a criminal case are (1) expediency, (2) isolation, (3) foreseeability and (4) intention." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 823 (3d ed. 1982).

"'Proximate cause' — in itself an unfortunate term — is merely the limitation which the courts have placed upon the actor's responsibility for the consequences of the actor's conduct. In a philosophical sense, the consequences of an act go forward to eternity, and the causes of an event go back to the dawn of human events, and beyond. But any attempt to impose responsibility upon such a basis would result in infinite liability for all wrongful acts, and would 'set society on edge and fill the courts with endless litigation.' [North v. Johnson, 58 Minn. 242, 59 N.W. 1012 (1894).] As a practical matter, legal responsibility must be limited to those causes which are so closely connected with the result and of such significance that the law is justified in imposing liability. Some boundary must be set to liability for the consequences of any act, upon the basis of some social idea of justice or policy." W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on Torts § 41, at 264 (5th ed. 1984).

remote cause. A cause that does not necessarily or immediately produce an event or injury.

sole cause. The only cause that, from a legal viewpoint, produces an event or injury. ● If it comes between a defendant's action and the event or injury at issue, it is treated as a superseding cause.

"When this one dominant cause is found it is treated as the 'sole cause' for the purposes of the particular case, even if it might not be so treated in a different kind of cause of action. A 'sole cause' which intervenes between defendant's act and the result in question is spoken of as a 'superseding cause.' . . . The phrase 'sole cause,' meaning the only cause which will receive juridical recognition for the purposes of the particular case, is convenient to give emphasis to three points: (1) If defendant's act was the sole cause of the death or other socially-harmful occurrence, it is by definition a proximate cause thereof; (2) if something other than his act was the sole cause of the harm there need be no further inquiry so far as he is concerned; (3) it is not necessary that defendant's act should have been the sole cause of the harm, — which is merely another form of stating that a contributory cause is sufficient." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 781-82 (3d ed. 1982).

superseding cause. An intervening act that the law considers sufficient to override the cause for which the original tortfeasor was responsible, thereby exonerating that tortfeasor from liability. — Also termed sole cause. Cf. intervening cause.

supervening cause. See intervening cause.

unavoidable cause. A cause that a reasonably prudent person would not anticipate or be expected to avoid.

2. A ground for legal action <the plaintiff does not have cause to file suit>.

good cause. A legally sufficient reason. ● Good cause is often the burden placed on a litigant (usu. by court rule or order) to show why a request should be granted or an action excused. The term is often used in employment-termination cases. — Also termed good cause shown; just cause; lawful cause; sufficient cause.

"Issues of 'just cause,' or 'good cause,' or simply 'cause' arise when an employee claims breach of the terms of an employment contract providing that discharge will be only for just cause. Thus, just cause is a creature of contract. By operation of law, an employment contract for a definite term may not be terminated without cause before the expiration of the term, unless the contract provides otherwise." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 9.7, at 539 (1994).

probable cause. See PROBABLE CAUSE.

3. A lawsuit; a case <the court has 50 causes on the motion docket>. 4. CAUSA (2).

cause, vb. To bring about or effect <dry conditions caused the fire>.

cause-and-prejudice rule. Criminal law. The doctrine that a prisoner attacking the conviction or sentence (as by a petition for writ of habeas corpus) on the basis of a constitutional challenge that was not presented to the trial court, must show good cause for failing to preserve the objection at trial, and must show that the trial court's error actually prejudiced the defendant. ● The cause that will excuse the defendant's procedural lapse must ordinarily be some objective factor that made presentation of the defense impractical at trial, such as the reasonable unavailability of the legal or factual basis of the defense at trial, or wrongful governmental interference. As for the prejudice element, the defendant must show that some actual prejudice, such as a constitutionally invalid sentence, resulted from the trial court's error. The cause-and-prejudice rule creates a higher burden than the defendant would face in a direct appeal because it is intended to provide protection from fundamental miscarriages of justice rather than from minor trial-court errors. But in death-penalty cases in which the defendant proves actual innocence, the court may grant relief even when the standards of the cause-and-prejudice rule have not been met. See actual innocence under INNOCENCE.

cause célèbre (kawz sə-leb or kawz say-leb-rə). [French "celebrated case"] A trial or decision in which the subject matter or the characters are unusual or sensational <the O.J. Simpson trial was a cause célèbre in the 1990s>.

cause in fact. See but-for cause under CAUSE (1).

cause list. See DOCKET (2).

cause of action. 1. A group of operative facts giving rise to one or more bases for suing; a factual situation that entitles one person to obtain a remedy in court from another person; CLAIM (4) <after the crash, Aronson had a cause of action>.

"What is a cause of action? Jurists have found it difficult to give a proper definition. It may be defined generally to be a situation or state of facts that entitles a party to maintain an action in a judicial tribunal. This state of facts may be — (a) a primary right of the plaintiff actually violated by the defendant; or (b) the threatened violation of such right, which violation the plaintiff is entitled to restrain or prevent, as in case of actions or suits for injunction; or (c) it may be that there are doubts as to some duty or right, or the right beclouded by some apparent adverse right or claim, which the plaintiff is entitled to have cleared up, that he may safely perform his duty, or enjoy his property." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 170 (2d ed. 1899).

2. A legal theory of a lawsuit . Cf. RIGHT OF ACTION. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) ground of action.

new cause of action. A claim not arising out of or relating to the conduct, occurrence, or transaction contained in the original pleading. • An amended pleading often relates back to the date the original pleading was filed. Thus, a plaintiff may add claims to a suit without facing a statute-of-limitations bar, as long as the original pleading was filed in time to satisfy the statute. But if the amended pleading adds a claim that arises out of a different transaction or occurrence, or out of different alleged conduct, the amendment does not relate back to the date the original pleading was filed. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c).

3. Loosely, a lawsuit <there are four defendants in the pending cause of action>.

cause-of-action estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

causidicus (kaw-zid-ə-kəs). [Latin "pleader"] Roman law. A speaker or pleader who pleaded cases orally for others. Cf. ADVOCATUS.

cautio (kaw-shee-oh). [Latin "security"] Roman & civil law. 1. Security given to ensure the performance of an obligation. See BAIL; BOND (2). 2. A surety.

cautio fideiussoria (kaw-shee-oh fi-dee-yə-sor-ee-ə). [Latin "security from a third party"] Security given by a third party. — Also spelled cautio fidejussoria.

cautio judicatem solvi (kaw-shee-oh joo-dikay-təm sol-vi). [Latin] A plaintiff's security for court costs.

cautio Muciana (kaw-shee-oh myoo-shee-ay-nə). [Latin "security introduced by Mucius Scaevola"] Security given by an heir or legatee to obtain immediate possession of a conditional inheritance. • The condition in the will usu. required an heir to refrain from doing some act, such as marriage or overseas travel.

cautio pignoratitia (kaw-shee-oh pig-nər-ə-tish-[ee]-ə). [Latin "security by pledge"] Security given by pledging goods. Cf. PIGNORATITIA ACTIO.

cautio pro expensis (kaw-shee-oh proh ek-spen-sis). [Latin "security for costs"] Security for court costs.

cautio usufructuaria (kaw-shee-oh yooz-yə-frək-choo-air-ee-ə). [Latin "tenant's security"] Security given by a tenant for life or a term for years against waste of the rented property. See USUFRUCT.

caution (kay-shən). Civil & Scots law. 1. Security given to ensure performance of some obligation. 2. The person who gives the security. See BAIL.

cautionary instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

cautione admittenda. See DE CAUTIONE ADMITTENDA.

caveat (kav-ee-aht or kay-vee-at or kav-ee-at). [Latin "let him or her beware"] 1. A warning or proviso <he sold the car to his friend with the caveat that the brakes might need repairs>.

caveat actor (kay-vee-at ak-tor). [Latin] Let the doer, or actor, beware.

caveat emptor (kay-vee-at emp-tor). [Latin "let the buyer beware"] A doctrine holding that purchasers buy at their own risk. • Modern statutes and cases have greatly limited the importance of this doctrine.

"It [caveat emptor] is one of that tribe of anonymous Latin maxims that infest our law . . . they fill the ear and sound like sense, and to the eye look like learning; while their main use is to supply the place of either or both." Gulian C. Verplanck, An Essay on the Doctrine of Contracts 218 (1825).

"Caveat emptor is the ordinary rule in contract. A vendor is under no duty to communicate the existence even of latent defects in his wares unless by act or implication he represents such defects not to exist." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 245 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

caveat venditor (kay-vee-at ven-di-tor). [Latin] Let the seller beware.

caveat viator (kay-vee-at vi-ay-tor). [Latin "let the traveler beware"]. The duty of a traveler on a highway to use due care to detect and avoid defects in the way.

2. A formal notice or warning given by a party to a court or court officer requesting a suspension of proceedings <the decedent's daughter filed a caveat stating the facts on which her will contest is based>. 3. Under the Torrens system of land titles, a formal notice of an unregistered interest in land. • Once lodged with the register of deeds, this notice prevents the register from recording any dealing affecting the estate or the interest claimed. See TORRENS SYSTEM. — caveat, vb.

caveatable (kay-vee-at-ə-bəl), adj. Of or relating to a legal or equitable interest that is protectable by a caveat. See CAVEAT (2), (3).

caveatee (kay-vee-at-ee). One whose interest is challenged by a caveat.

caveat emptor. See CAVEAT.

caveator (kay-vee-ay-tər). One who files a caveat, esp. to challenge the validity of a will; CONTESTANT.

caveat venditor. See CAVEAT.

caveat viator. See CAVEAT.

ceiling rent. See RENT (1).

cenegild (kay-nə-gild). Hist. An expiatory fine paid by a murderer to the victim's relatives.

consere (sen-seer-ee), vb. [Latin "to express an opinion"] Roman law. To decree or resolve.

censo (sen-soh). [Spanish] Spanish law. 1. Ground rent. 2. An annuity or payment for the use of land.

censo al quitar (ahl kee-tahr). A redeemable annuity. — Also termed censo redimible. censo consignativo (sen-soh kaw-n-seeg-nah-tee-voh). A transferable annuity, backed by a lien on the debtor's real property. • The debtor retains full legal title to the real property.

censo enfiteutico (en-fee-tay-oo-tee-koh). A real property owner's annuity from a usufructuary tenant; an emphyteutic annuity. See EMPHYTEUSIS.

censo redimible. See censo al quitar.

censo reservatio (ray-ser-vah-tee-oh). An annuity payable by a grantee of land to the grantor. • The annuity is reserved when the land is transferred to the grantee.

ensor, n. 1. Roman law. A Roman officer who acted as a census taker, assessor, and reviewer of public morals. 2. A person who inspects publications, films, and the like for objectionable content. 3. In the armed forces, someone who reads letters and other communications and deletes material considered a security threat. — ensorial, adj. — ensorship, n.

ensor (sen-sər), vb. To officially inspect (esp. a book or film) and delete material considered offensive.

censo redimible. See censo al quitar under CENSO.

censo reservatio. See CENSO.

ensorial jurisprudence. See LAW REFORM.

censumethidus (sen-sə-meth-ə-dəs). [Law Latin] See MORTMAIN. — Also spelled censumorthidus.

censure (sen-shər), n. An official reprimand or condemnation; harsh criticism <the judge's careless statements subjected her to the judicial council's censure>. — ensorious, adj.

censure, vb. To reprimand; to criticize harshly <Congress censured the senator for his inflammatory remarks>.

census. The official counting of people to compile social and economic data for the political subdivision to which the people belong. Pl. cen-suses.

federal census. A census of a state or territory, or a portion of either, taken by the Census Bureau of the United States. • The Constitution (art. I, § 2) requires only a simple count of persons for purposes of apportioning congressional representation among the states. Under Congress's direction, however, the census has evolved to include a wide variety of information that is useful to businesses, historians, and others not affiliated with the federal government.

centena (sen-tee-nə). [fr. Latin centum "hundred"] Hist. A district containing 100 freemen, established among the Germans, Franks, Goths, and Lombards. • The centena corresponds to the Saxon hundred.

centenarius (sen-tə-nair-ee-əs). [fr. Latin centum "hundred-man"] Hist. A petty judge or under-sheriff of a hundred. See HUNDRED.

center-of-gravity doctrine. Conflict of laws. The rule that, in choice-of-law questions, the law of the jurisdiction with the most significant relationship to the transaction or event applies. — Also termed significant-relationship theory; grouping-of-contacts theory.

centesima (sen-tes-ə-mə). [Latin "one-hundredth"] Roman law. The hundredth part; 1%. See USURAE CENTESIMAE.

Central American Court of Justice. A court created by a 1908 convention between Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua, to guarantee the rights of the various republics to maintain peace and harmony in their relations and to prevent recourse to the use of force. • The convention expired after ten years, and the court ceased to exist in 1918.

central clearing system. A method of facilitating securities transactions in which an agent or subsidiary of an exchange acts as a clearinghouse for member brokerage firms by clearing their checks, settling their accounts, and delivering their payments. • Most transactions are reflected solely by computerized book entries, and clearinghouse statements are submitted showing the net balance to be paid to reconcile the member firm's accounts.

Central Criminal Court. The Crown Court sitting in London, formerly known as the Old Bailey. • The Central Criminal Court, created in 1834, has jurisdiction to try all indictable offenses committed in London. See CROWN COURT.

Central Criminal Court Act. See PALMER'S ACT.

central government. See federal government under GOVERNMENT.

Central Intelligence Agency. A U.S. federal agency responsible for gathering, analyzing, and sometimes acting on information relating to national security, esp. foreign intelligence and counterintelligence activities. — Abbr. CIA.

Central Office. The primary office for most of England's courts. • The Central Office was established in 1879 to consolidate the masters and associates of the common-law courts, and the clerical functions of the Crown Office of the Queen's Bench Division, the Report and Enrollment offices of the Chancery Division, and several other offices.

centumviri (sen-təm-və-rī). [Latin "hundred men"] Roman law. A court with jurisdiction to hear important cases, esp. those relating to inheritances, wills, and property. • The court originally consisted of 105 judges — 3 from each of the 35 tribes.

CEO. abbr. CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER.

ceorl (chorl). Hist. A Saxon freeman who either possessed no landed property or held land of a thane by paying rent or providing services. • After the Norman Conquest, ceorls were reduced to the status of unfree villeins. Under Norman rule, the variant form of the word, churl, became associated with a base peasant, and soon acquired the connotation of a surly, coarse person (hence the modern meaning). — Also termed churl; cirliscus.

cepi (see-pī). [Latin] Hist. I have taken. • Cepi was often used in a capias return by an arresting sheriff, as in cepi corpus et est in custodia ("I have taken the defendant [or body] and he is in custody").

"But for injuries committed with force to the person, property, or possession, of the plaintiff, the law, to punish the breach of the peace, and prevent its disturbance in the future, provided also a process against the defendant's person. . . . This process was called a capias ad respondendum, which at once authorised the sheriff to take the defendant, and imprison him till the return-day, and then produce him in court. . . . If by this process the defendant was arrested, the sheriff returned it with cepi corpus indorsed. But notwithstanding this writ commanded the sheriff to take and secure him till the return-day, he might, at his own peril, have let the defendant continue at large; thought he was liable, in case of his non appearance in court, to make amends to the plaintiff in an action for an escape, or to be amerced by the court for the contempt, in not producing the body pursuant to the return he had made on the writ." George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas xlii-xliii (3d ed. 1787).

cepi corpus et bail (see-pī kor-pəs et bayl). I have arrested and then released the defendant on a bail bond.

cepi corpus et committitur (see-pī kor-pəs et kə-mīt-ə-tər). I have arrested and committed the defendant (to prison).

cepi corpus et est languidus (see-pī kor-pəs et est lang-gwə-dəs). I have arrested the defendant and he is sick. • This notation in a sheriff's return indicated that the defendant was too sick to be moved safely from the place of arrest.

cepi corpus et paratum habeo (see-pī kor-pəs et pə-ray-təm hay-bee-oh). I have made an arrest and am ready to produce the defendant.

cepit (see-pit). [Latin] Hist. He took. • This was the main verb in a declaration in an action for trespass or replevin.

cepit et abduxit (see-pit et ab-duk-sit). [Latin] Hist. He took and led away. • This declaration appeared in either a writ of trespass or a larceny indictment for theft of an animal.

cepit et asportavit (see-pit et as-por-tay-vit). [Latin] Hist. He took and carried away. • This declaration appeared in either a writ of trespass or a larceny indictment for a defendant's wrongfully carrying away goods.

cepit in alio loco (see-pit in ay-lee-oh loh-koh). [Latin] Hist. He took in another place. • This phrase appeared in a replevin-action pleading in which a defendant asserted that the property had been taken at a place other than that named in the plaintiff's declaration.

cerage (seer-ij). See WAX SCOT.

cera impressa (seer-ə im-pres-ə). [Latin "impressed wax"] Hist. An impressed seal. • Cera impressa originally referred only to wax seals, but later came to include any impressed seal, regardless of the substance impressed. See SEAL.

"The courts have held that an impression made on wafers or other adhesive substance capable of receiving an impression comes within the definition of 'cera impressa.' If then wax be construed to be merely a general term including any substance capable of receiving and retaining the impression of a seal, paper, if it has that quality, may well be included in the category. The machine now used to impress public seals does not require any substance to receive or retain the impression, which is as well defined, as durable — less likely to be defaced than that made on wax. It is the seal which authenticates, not the substance impressed." William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 926 (1889).

ceratium (si-ray-shee-əm). See WAX SCOT.

CERCLA (sər-klə). abbr. Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, • This statute holds responsible parties liable for the cost of cleaning up hazardous-waste sites. 42 USCA §§ 9601 et seq. See SUPERFUND.

"CERCLA is probably the most controversial environmental law ever enacted. Supporters praise it as a vital program to safeguard human health and the environment from the toxic consequences of decades of irresponsible waste handling. Citing cost estimates ranging up to $750 billion, critics deride it as an extraordinarily expensive measure which imposes crippling liability on innocent parties to fund clean-ups which are either unnecessary or largely ineffective." John G. Sprankling & Gregory S. Weber, The Law of Hazardous Wastes and Toxic Substances in a Nutshell 256 (1997).

ceremonial marriage. See MARRIAGE (2).

cert. abbr. CERTIORARI.

certain contract. See CONTRACT.

certificando de recognitione stapulae (sər-ti-fi-kan-doh dee rek-əg-nish-ee-oh-nee stay-py-lee). [Law Latin "by certifying the recognition of the statute staple"] Hist. A writ commanding the holder of certain commercial debt instruments (i.e., the mayor of the staple) to certify to the lord chancellor the existence and terms of a statute staple (i.e., a bond for commercial debt) wrongfully detained by a party to the bond. See STATUTE STAPLE.

certificate, n. 1. A document in which a fact is formally attested <death certificate>.

face-amount certificate. Securities. 1. A certificate, investment contract, or other security representing an obligation by its issuer to pay a stated or determinable sum, at a fixed or determinable date or dates more than 24 months after the date of issuance, in consideration of the payment of periodic installments of a stated or determinable amount. — Also termed face-amount certificate of the installment type. 2. A security representing a similar obligation on the part of the issuer of a face-amount certificate, the consideration for which is the payment of a single lump sum. See 15 USCA § 80a-2(a)(15). — Also termed fully paid face-amount certificate.

periodic-payment-plan certificate. A certificate, investment contract, or other security providing for a series of periodic payments by the holder and representing an undivided interest in certain specified securities or in a unit or fund of securities purchased wholly or partly with the proceeds of those payments. • The term also includes any security whose issuer is also issuing the certificates described above and whose holder has substantially the same rights and privileges as those holders have upon completing the periodic payments for which the securities provide. See 15 USCA § 80a-2(a)(27).

2. A document certifying the bearer's status or authorization to act in a specified way <nursing certificate>. 3. A notice by one court to another court of the action it has taken <when issuing its opinion, the Seventh Circuit sent a certificate to the Illinois Supreme Court>.

certificate creditor. See CREDITOR.

certificated security. See SECURITY.

certificate into chancery. English law. The decision of a common-law court on a legal question submitted by the chancery court.

certificate land. See LAND.

certificate of acknowledgment. See ACKNOWLEDGMENT (5). certificate of amendment. A document filed with a state corporation authority, usu. the secretary of state, reflecting changes made to a corporation's articles of incorporation.

certificate of assize. Hist. In England, a writ granting a retrial. ● The certificate of assize has been replaced by a court order granting a motion for new trial.

certificate of authority. 1. A document authenticating a notarized document that is being sent to another jurisdiction. ● The certificate assures the out-of-state or foreign recipient that the notary public has a valid commission. — Also termed certificate of capacity; certificate of official character; certificate of authentication; certificate of prothonotary; certificate of magistracy; apostille; verification. 2. A document issued by a state agency, usu. the secretary of state, granting an out-of-state corporation the right to do business in the state.

certificate of conference. A section of a pleading or motion filed with the court, usu. contained separately on a page near the end of the document, whereby the party filing the pleading or motion certifies to the court that the parties have attempted to resolve the matter, but that a judicial determination is needed because an agreement could not be reached. ● Courts require some motions to have a certificate of conference attached to them. This compels the parties to try to resolve the issue themselves, without burdening the court unless absolutely necessary.

certificate of convenience and necessity. A certificate issued by an administrative agency granting operating authority to a utility or transportation company. — Also termed certificate of public convenience and necessity.

certificate of deposit. 1. A banker's certificate acknowledging the receipt of money and promising to repay the depositor. 2. A bank document showing the existence of a time deposit, usu. one that pays interest. — Abbr. CD.

certificate of discharge. See SATISFACTION PIECE.

certificate of dissolution. A document issued by a state authority (usu. the secretary of state) certifying that a corporation has been dissolved.

certificate of election. A document issued by a governor, board of elections, or other competent authority certifying that the named person has been duly elected.

certificate of holder of attached property. A certificate given by a person who holds — but does not own — property attached by a sheriff. ● The certificate sets forth the holder's interest in the property.

certificate of incorporation. 1. A document issued by a state authority (usu. the secretary of state) granting a corporation its legal existence and the right to function as a corporation. — Also termed charter; corporate charter. 2. ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

certificate of indebtedness. 1. DEBENTURE. 2. TREASURY BILL. 3. CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT.

certificate of insurance. A document acknowledging that an insurance policy has been written, and setting forth in general terms what the policy covers.

certificate of interest. Oil & gas. A document evidencing a fractional or percentage ownership in oil-and-gas production.

certificate of magistracy. See CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORITY.

certificate of occupancy. A document indicating that a building complies with zoning and building ordinances. ● A certificate of occupancy is often required before title can be transferred and the building occupied.

certificate of official character. See CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORITY.

certificate of proof. See proof of acknowledgment under ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

certificate of prothonotary. See CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORITY.

certificate of public convenience and necessity. See CERTIFICATE OF CONVENIENCE AND NECESSITY.

certificate of purchase. A document reflecting a successful bid for property at a judicial sale. ● The bidder receives a property deed if the land is not redeemed or if the sale is confirmed by court order. — Also termed certificate of sale.

certificate of registry. Maritime law. A document certifying that a ship has been registered as required by law. See REGISTRY (2).

certificate of sale. See CERTIFICATE OF PURCHASE.

certificate of service. A section of a pleading or motion filed with the court, usu. contained separately on the last page, whereby the party filing the pleading or motion certifies to the court that a copy has been sent to the opposing party. • A certificate of service is usu. not included with the initial pleading that the plaintiff files to begin a suit, because that pleading is usu. served with a formal summons, unless the defendant waives service. But other pleadings and motions filed in a suit are usu. required to have a certificate of service attached to them. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d).

certificate of stock. See STOCK CERTIFICATE.

certificate of title. A document indicating ownership of real or personal property. • This document usu. identifies any liens or other encumbrances.

certification, n. 1. The act of attesting. 2. The state of having been attested. 3. An attested statement. 4. The writing on the face of a check by which it is certified. 5. A procedure by which a U.S. court of appeals asks the U.S. Supreme Court or the highest state court to review a question of law arising in a case pending before it on which the court of appeals needs guidance. See 15 USCA § 1254(2). Cf. CERTIORARI.

certification mark. A word, symbol, or device used on goods or services to certify the place of origin, material, mode of manufacture, quality, or other characteristic. See 15 USCA § 1127. — Also termed certification trademark. See TRADEMARK. Cf. COLLECTIVE MARK.

certification of bargaining agent. See UNION CERTIFICATION.

certification of labor union. See UNION CERTIFICATION.

certification to state court. The procedure by which a federal court of appeals defers deciding a novel question of state law by certifying the question to the highest court of the state. See CERTIFICATION (5).

certification trademark. See CERTIFICATION MARK.

certified check. See CHECK.

certified copy. See COPY.

certified financial statement. See FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

certified mail. See MAIL.

certified military lawyer. See LAWYER.

certified public accountant. See ACCOUNTANT.

certified question. 1. CERTIFICATION (5). 2. A point of law on which a U.S. court of appeals seeks guidance from either the U.S. Supreme Court or the highest court in a state.

certify, vb. 1. To authenticate or verify in writing. 2. To attest as being true or as meeting certain criteria. 3. (Of a court) to issue an order allowing a class of litigants to maintain a class action; to create (a class) for purposes of a class action. See CERTIFICATION. Cf. DECERTIFY.

certiorari (sər-shee-ə-rair-I or -rair-ee or -rah-ree). [Law Latin “to be more fully informed”] An extraordinary writ issued by an appellate court, at its discretion, directing a lower court to deliver the record in the case for review. • The U.S. Supreme Court uses certiorari to review most of the cases that it decides to hear. — Abbr. cert. — Also termed writ of certiorari. Cf. CERTIFICATION (5).

“The established method by which the Court of King’s Bench from the earliest times exercised superintendence over the due observance of their limitations by inferior courts, checked the usurpation of jurisdiction, and maintained the supremacy of the royal courts, was by writs of prohibition and certiorari. A proceeding by writ of certiorari (cause to be certified) is a special proceeding by which a superior court requires some inferior tribunal, board, or judicial officer to transmit the record of its proceedings for review, for excess of jurisdiction. It is similar to a writ of error, in that it is a proceeding in a higher court to superintend and review judicial acts, but it only lies in cases not appealable by writ of error or otherwise.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 340, at 541 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

“The discretionary writ of certiorari has come to control access to almost all branches of Supreme Court jurisdiction. Appeal jurisdiction has been narrowly limited, and certification of questions from federal courts of appeals has fallen into almost complete desuetude. Certiorari control over the cases that come before the Court enables the Court to define its own institutional role.” Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 4004, at 22 (2d ed. 1996).

certiorari facias (sər-shee-ə-rair-I fay-shee-əs). [Latin “cause to be certified”] The command of a writ of certiorari, referring to certification of the court record for review.

certworthy, adj. Slang. (Of a case or issue) deserving of review by writ of certiorari. — certworthiness, n.

cess (ses), n. Hist. 1. English law. An assessment or tax. 2. Scots law. A land tax. — Also spelled cesse; sess.

cessation-of-production clause. Oil & gas. A lease provision that temporarily extends a lease under which production has stopped. • The clause extends the lease for a specified period during which, to keep the lease alive, the lessee must resume operations.

“Many oil and gas leases contain provisions intended to give lessees more certainty than is given by the temporary cessation of production doctrine. Usually, such provision takes the form of a temporary cessation of production clause, a provision in the lease that states that the lease will be maintained so long as production does not cease for more than an agreed period of time, usually sixty to ninety days. . . . So long as sixty days does not elapse without operations on the property, the lease will not terminate even though there is no production.” John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 258 (3d ed. 1995).

cessavit per biennium (se-say-vit pər bi-en-ee-əm). [Latin “he ceased for two years”] Hist. A writ of right available to a landlord to recover land from a tenant who has failed to pay rent or provide prescribed services for a two-year period. • The writ could also be used to recover land donated to a religious order if the order has failed to perform certain spiritual services. — Also termed cessavit.

cesse. See CESS.

cesser (ses-ər). 1. Hist. A tenant whose failure to pay rent or perform prescribed services gives the landowner the right to recover possession of the land. — Also spelled cessor; cessure. 2. The termination of a right or interest.

cesset executio (ses-ət ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh). [Latin “let execution stay”] An order directing a stay of execution.

cesset processus (ses-ət proh-ses-əs). [Latin “let process stay”] An order directing a stay of a legal proceeding.

cessio (sesh-ee-oh). [Latin “cession”] A relinquishment or assignment; CESSION.

cessio actionum (sesh-ee-oh ak-shee-oh-nəm). [Latin] Roman law. The assignment of an obligation by allowing a third party to (1) sue on the obligation in the name of the party entitled to it, and (2) retain the proceeds.

cessio bonorum (sesh-ee-oh bə-nor-əm). [Latin “cession of goods”] Roman law. An assignment of a debtor’s property to creditors.

“It was the Roman equivalent of modern bankruptcy. . . . [O]ne who thus made cessio bonorum would not become infamis, was never liable in future beyond his means, for the old debts, and was not liable to personal seizure thereafter in respect of them.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 388 (1953).

cessio in jure (sesh-ee-oh in joor-ee). [Latin “transfer in law”] Roman law. A fictitious action brought to convey property, whereby the claimant demanded certain property, the owner did not contest the claim, and a magistrate awarded the property to the claimant. • Cessio in jure resembled the English common recovery. See COMMON RECOVERY.

cession (sesh-ən). 1. The act of relinquishing property rights. 2. The relinquishment or transfer of land from one state to another, esp. when a state defeated in war gives up the land as part of the price of peace. 3. The land so relinquished or transferred.

cessionary bankrupt. See BANKRUPT.

cessment (ses-mənt). Hist. An assessment or tax.

cessor. See CESSER.

cessure. See CESSER.

cestui (set-ee or ses-twee). [French “he who”] A beneficiary. — Also spelled cestuy.

cestui que trust (set-ee [or ses-twee] kee [or kə] trəst). [Law French] One who possesses equitable rights in property and receives the rents, issues, and profits from it; BENEFICIARY. — Also termed fide-commissary; fidei-commissarius. Pl. cestuis que trust or (erroneously) cestuis que trustent.

“[A]n alternative name for the beneficiary is ‘cestui que trust,’ an elliptical phrase meaning ‘he [for]= whose [benefit the] trust [was created].’ In this phrase cestui is pronounced ‘settee’ (with the accent on the first syllable), que is pronounced ‘kee,’ and trust as in English. Grammatically the plural should be cestuis que trust (pronounced like the singular); but by an understandable mistake it is sometimes written cestuis que trustent, as if trust were a verb." Glanville Williams, Learning the Law 10 (11th ed. 1982).

cestui que use (set-ee [or ses-twee] kée [or kə] yoos). The person for whose use and benefit property is being held by another, who holds the legal title to the property. Pl. cestuis que use or (erroneously) cestuis que usent.

"The basis of this institution was the transfer of property to a trusted friend, who was to hold it not for personal benefit but for the purpose of carrying out the transferor's instructions. The person to whom the land was conveyed for this purpose was the 'feoffee to uses'; the person for whose benefit the land was conveyed — the beneficiary — was the 'cestui que use' . . . , from the law French 'cestui a que use le feoffment fuit fait'." Peter Butt, Land Law § 702, at 97 (3d ed. 1996).

cestui que vie (set-ee [or ses-twee] kee [or kə] vee). The person whose life measures the duration of a trust, gift, estate, or insurance contract.

"[L]et us assume that A instead transfers 'to E for the life of A.' Since A has used his own life as the measuring life of E's estate, A has given away all that he had. Because E's estate is measured by the life of someone other than himself, his estate is called an estate pur autre vie. A, whose life is the measuring life, is called the cestui que vie." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 36 (2d ed. 1984).

ceteris paribus (set-ə-ris par-ə-bəs). [Latin] Other things being equal. — Also spelled caeteris paribus.

ceteris tacentibus (set-ə-ris ta-sen-tə-bəs). [Latin] Hist. The others being silent. • This phrase appeared in serially printed law reports after an opinion by one judge. It referred to the judges who did not vote or express an opinion. — Also spelled caeteris tacentibus. See SERIATIM.

chafewax (chayf-waks). Hist. A chancery officer who heated (or chafed) wax to seal writs, commissions, and other instruments. • The office was abolished in 1852. — Also spelled chaffwax.

chain-certificate method. The procedure for authenticating a foreign official record by the party seeking to admit the record as evidence at trial. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 44.

chain conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

chain gang. A group of prisoners chained together to prevent their escape while working outside a prison.

chain of causation. 1. A series of events each caused by the previous one. 2. The causal connection between a cause and its effects. Cf. CAUSATION.

chain-of-causation rule. Workers' compensation. The principle that an employee's suicide is compensable under workers' compensation statutes if the employee suffered an earlier work-related injury that led to a mental disorder resulting in the suicide.

chain of custody. 1. The movement and location of real evidence from the time it is obtained to the time it is presented in court.

"Chain of custody requires testimony of continuous possession by each individual having possession, together with testimony by each that the object remained in substantially the same condition during its presence in his possession. All possibility of alteration, substitution or change of condition need not be eliminated. For example, normally an object may be placed in a safe to which more than one person had access without each such person being produced. However the more authentication is genuinely in issue, the greater the need to negate the possibility of alteration or substitution." Michael H. Graham, Federal Rules of Evidence in a Nutshell 402 (3d ed. 1992).

2. The history of a chattel's possession. — Also termed chain of possession.

chain of title. 1. The ownership history of a piece of land, from its first owner to the present one. — Also termed line of title. 2. The ownership history of commercial paper, traceable through the indorsements. • For the holder to have good title, every prior negotiation must have been proper. If a necessary indorsement is missing or forged, the chain of title is broken and no later transferee can become a holder.

chain-referral scheme. See PYRAMID SCHEME.

chair. The person who presides over a committee, convention, assembly, or other deliberative body. — Also termed chairman; chairwoman; chairperson.

Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. The member of Parliament who presides over the House of Commons when it is sitting in committee.

chairperson. See CHAIR.

chairwoman. See CHAIR.

challenge, n. 1. An act or instance of formally questioning the legality or legal qualifications of a person, action, or thing .

as-applied challenge. A lawsuit claiming that a law or governmental policy, though constitutional on its face, is unconstitutional as applied, usu. because of a discriminatory effect; a claim that a statute is unconstitutional on the facts of a particular case or to a particular party.

Batson challenge. Criminal procedure. A defendant's objection to peremptory challenges of jurors whereby the defendant raises an inference that the prosecution used peremptory challenges to exclude potential jurors on the basis of race (Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 106 S.Ct. 1712 (1986)). • Edmondson v. Leesville Concrete Company extended Batson challenges to civil cases. 500 U.S. 614, 111 S.Ct. 2077 (1991).

constitutional challenge. A lawsuit claiming that a law or governmental action is unconstitutional.

facial challenge. A claim that a statute is unconstitutional on its face — that is, that it always operates unconstitutionally.

2. A party's request that a judge disqualify a potential juror or an entire jury panel <the personal-injury plaintiff used his last challenge to disqualify a neurosurgeon>. — Also termed jury challenge.

causal challenge. See challenge for cause.

challenge for cause. A party's challenge supported by a specified reason, such as bias challenge to the jury array or prejudice, that would disqualify that potential juror. — Also termed causal challenge; general challenge; challenge to the poll.

challenge propter affectum (prop-tər ə-fek-təm). A challenge because some circumstance, such as kinship with a party, renders the potential juror incompetent to serve in the particular case.

challenge propter defectum (prop-tər də-fek-təm). A challenge based on a claim that the juror is incompetent to serve on any jury for reasons such as alienage, infancy, or non-residency.

challenge propter delictum (prop-tər də-lik-təm). A challenge based on a claim that the potential juror has lost citizenship rights, as by being convicted of an infamous crime. See CIVIL DEATH (1).

challenge to the array. A legal challenge to the manner in which the entire jury panel was selected, usu. for a failure to follow prescribed procedures designed to produce impartial juries. • Such a challenge is either a principal challenge (if some defect renders the jury prima facie incompetent, as where the officer selecting veniremembers is related to the prosecutor or defendant) or a challenge for favor (as where the defect does not amount to grounds for a principal challenge, but there is a probability of partiality). — Also termed challenge to the jury array.

challenge to the poll. See challenge for cause.

general challenge. See challenge for cause.

peremptory challenge. One of a party's limited number of challenges that need not be supported by any reason, although a party may not use such a challenge in a way that discriminates against a protected minority. — Often shortened to peremptory. — Also termed peremptory strike. See STRIKE (2).

3. Military law. An objection to a member of the court serving in a court-martial case. • A military judge can be challenged only for cause.

challenge, vb. 1. To dispute or call into question <the columnist challenged the wisdom of the court's ruling>. 2. To formally object to the legality or legal qualifications of <the defendant challenged the person's eligibility for jury duty>.

challenge to the jury array. See challenge to the array under CHALLENGE (2).

challenge to the poll. See challenge for cause under CHALLENGE (2).

chamber, n. 1. A room or compartment <gas chamber>. 2. A legislative or judicial body; the hall or room where such a body conducts business <the senate chamber>. — chamber, adj.

judge's chamber. (usu. pl.) 1. The private room or office of a judge. 2. Any place that a judge transacts official business when not holding a session of the court. See IN CAMERA.

lower chamber. In a bicameral legislature, the larger of the two legislative bodies, such as the House of Representatives or the House of Commons.

upper chamber. In a bicameral legislature, the smaller of the two legislative bodies, such as the Senate or the House of Lords.

chamber, vb. (Of a judge) to sit in one's chambers at a given location <Judge Kaye chambers sometimes in New York and sometimes in Albany>.

chamber business. A judge's official business that is conducted outside the courtroom.

chamberlain (chaym-bər-lin). A treasurer; originally, the keeper of the royal treasure chamber. • The term has been used for several high offices in England, such as the Lord Great Chamberlain, Lord Chamberlain of the Household, and Chamberlain of the Exchequer.

chamberlaria (chaym-bər-lair-ee-ə). [Law Latin] Chamberlainship; the office of chamberlain.

chamber of accounts. French law. A court responsible for adjudicating disputes concerning public-revenue collection. Cf. COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

chamber of commerce. An association of merchants and other business leaders who organize to promote the commercial interests in a given area and whose group is generally affiliated with the national organization of the same name.

champertor (cham-pər-tər), n. A person who engages in champerty; one who supports and promotes another person's lawsuit for pecuniary gain.

champertous (cham-pər-təs), adj. Of, relating to, or characterized by champerty; constituting champerty .

"In England and many other countries, the contingent fee is prohibited as a form of champerty because it permits a client to carry on litigation in exchange for a promise to the lawyer of a share in the recovery. Although most states in the United States prohibit a lawyer from accepting an assignment of a percentage of the client's cause of action as a legal fee, they do not similarly condemn, as champertous, contingent fees whereby the lawyer receives a percentage of the recovery as a fee and no fee at all if there is no recovery." Robert H. Aronson & Donald T. Weckstein, Professional Responsibility in a Nutshell 271-72 (2d ed. 1991).

champerty (cham-pər-tee), n. 1. An agreement between a stranger to a lawsuit and a litigant by which the stranger pursues the litigant's claim as consideration for receiving part of any judgment proceeds. 2. The act or fact of maintaining, supporting, or promoting another person's lawsuit. Cf. MAINTENANCE (6).

"There is disagreement in the American courts as to what constitutes champerty. (1) Some courts hold that an agreement to look to the proceeds of the suit for compensation is champerty. . . . (2) Some courts hold that in addition the attorney must prosecute the suit at his own cost and expense to constitute champerty. . . . (3) Some courts hold even in a case like (2) that there is no champerty. . . . (4) All authorities agree that a contract for a contingent fee is not champerty if it is not to be paid out of the proceeds of the suit. . . . (5) In some states it is declared that the common law doctrines of maintenance and champerty are unknown . . . ; in some the matter is regulated wholly by statute. . . . [A]nd in most there is a marked tendency to narrow the doctrines of champerty or to evade them." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 294 n.2 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"The rule as to champerty has been generally relaxed under modern decisions and a majority of courts now recognize that an agreement by which the attorney is to receive a contingent fee, i.e., a certain part of the avails of a suit or an amount fixed with reference to the amount recovered, is valid as long as the attorney does not agree to pay the expenses and costs of the action." Walter Wheeler Cook, "Quasi-Contracts," in 1 American Law and Procedure 129 (1952).

chance, n. 1. A hazard or risk. 2. The unforeseen, uncontrollable, or unintended consequences of an act. 3. An accident.

chancellor, n. 1. A judge serving on a court of chancery. 2. A university president or CEO of an institution of higher education. — chancellorship, n.

Chancellor, Lord. See LORD CHANCELLOR.

chancellor of the diocese. Eccles. law. The sole judge of the consistory court of a diocese.

Chancellor of the Exchequer. In England, a government minister who controls revenue and expenditures. • Formerly, the Chancellor sat in the Court of Exchequer.

chancellor's foot. A symbol of the variability of equitable justice. • John Selden, the 17th-century jurist, is thought to have coined the phrase in this passage, from his best-known book: "Equity is a roguish thing. For law we have a measure, know what to trust to: equity is according to the conscience of him that is Chancellor, and as that is larger or narrower, so is equity. 'Tis all one as if they should make the standard for the measure the Chancellor's foot. What an uncertain measure would this be! One Chancellor has a long foot, another a short foot, a third an indifferent foot; 'tis the same thing in the Chancellor's conscience." Table Talk (1689).

chance-medley. [fr. Anglo-Norman chance medlee "chance scuffle"] A spontaneous fight during which one participant kills another participant in self-defense. — Also termed chaud-medley; casual affray. Cf. MEDLEY.

"But the self-defence, which we are now speaking of, is that whereby a man may protect himself from an assault, or the like, in the course of a sudden brawl or quarrel, by killing him who assaults him. And this is what the law expresses by the word chance-medley, or (as some rather choose to write it) chaud-medley; the former of which in its etymology signifies a casual affray, the latter an affray in the heat of blood or passion: both of them of pretty much the same import; but the former is in common speech too often erroneously applied to any manner of homicide by misadventure; whereas it appears . . . that it is properly applied to such killing, as happens in self-defence upon a sudden rencounter." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 184 (1769).

chancer (chan-sər), vb. To adjust according to equitable principles, as a court of chancery would. • The practice arose in parts of New England when the courts had no equity jurisdiction, and were compelled to act on equitable principles.

"The practice of 'chancering' is a very old one. A forfeiture could be 'chancered' under a law of 1699. . . . Adjudged cases in 1630–1692 may be found in the Records of the Court of Assistants of Massachusetts Bay Colony. The early laws of Massachusetts provided for 'chancering' the forfeiture of any penal bond. . . . In Rhode Island an act of 1746 provided for 'chancering' the forfeiture 'where any penalty is forfeited, or conditional estate recovered, or equity of redemption sued for, whether judgment is confessed or otherwise obtained.'" 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary 456–57 (8th ed. 1914).

chancery (chan-sər-ee). 1. A court of equity; collectively, the courts of equity. — Also termed court of chancery; chancery court.

"Chancery's jurisdiction was complementary to that of the courts of common law — it sought to do justice in cases for which there was no adequate remedy at common law. It had originated in the petition, not the writ, of the party who felt aggrieved to the Lord Chancellor as 'keeper of the King's conscience.' In its origins, therefore, Chancery's flexible concern for justice complemented admirably the formalism of a medieval system of common law which had begun to adhere strictly, perhaps overstrictly on occasion, to prescribed forms. By 1800, however, Chancery's system was itself regarded as being both consistent and certain." A.H. Manchester, Modern Legal History of England and Wales, 1750–1950 135–36 (1980).

2. The system of jurisprudence administered in courts of equity. See EQUITY. 3. Int'l law. The place where the head of a diplomatic mission and staff have their offices, as distinguished from the embassy (where the ambassador lives).

Chancery Court of York. Eccles. law. The ecclesiastical court of the province of York, responsible for appeals from provincial diocesan courts. Cf. COURT OF ARCHES.

chancery guardian. See GUARDIAN.

chance verdict. See VERDICT.

changed circumstances. See change of circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE.

change of circumstances. See CIRCUMSTANCE.

change of condition. 1. Workers' compensation. A substantial worsening of an employee's physical health occurring after an award, as a result of which the employee merits an increase in benefits. 2. Family law. A change of circumstances justifying a modification to a custody, child support, or alimony order. Cf. change of circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE.

change of venue. 1. The transfer of a lawsuit from one locale to another. 2. The transfer of a lawsuit begun in one court to another court in the same district, usu. because of questions of fairness. — Also termed transfer of venue. See VENUE.

change order. A directive issued by the federal government to a contractor to alter the specifications of an item the contractor is producing for the government.

changing fund. See FUND (1).

channel. 1. The bed of a stream of water; the groove through which a stream flows <digging a deeper channel was thought to help protect the river from flooding>.

main channel. The bed over which the principal volume of water flows; the deepest and most navigable part of a channel.

natural channel. The naturally formed bed and banks of a stream.

natural flood channel. A channel through which floodwaters naturally accumulate and flow downstream.

2. The line of deep water that vessels follow . 3. A water route between two islands or an island and a continent <the English Channel>. 4. A mode of transmitting something <the news channel>.

chantry (chan-tree), n. Hist. Eccles. law. 1. A benefice endowed for the saying of Mass by chantry priests for the soul of the founder or his designees. • This practice was abolished in England by the Chantry Acts of 1545 and 1547. 2. A chapel or part of a church so endowed. — Also spelled chauntry.

chapter (chap-ə-tər). [Law French] Hist. A list of matters drawn up by the king to be presented before the justices in eyre, justices of assise, or justices of the peace. — Also spelled chapitre. Cf. ARTICLES OF THE EYRE.

Chapter 7. 1. The chapter of the Bankruptcy Code allowing a trustee to collect and liquidate a debtor's property, either voluntarily or by court order, to satisfy creditors. 2. A bankruptcy case filed under this chapter. • An individual debtor who undergoes this type of liquidation (the most common type of bankruptcy) usu. gets a fresh financial start by receiving a discharge of all debts. — Also termed (in sense 2) straight bankruptcy.

"A Chapter 7 case has five stages: (1) getting the debtor into bankruptcy court; (2) collecting the debtor's property; (3) selling this property; (4) distributing the proceeds of the sale to creditors; and (5) determining whether the debtor is discharged from further liability to these creditors." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 1-7, at 9 (1993).

Chapter 9. 1. The chapter of the Bankruptcy Code governing the adjustment of a municipality's debts. 2. A bankruptcy case filed under this chapter.

Chapter 11. 1. The chapter of the Bankruptcy Code allowing an insolvent business, or one that is threatened with insolvency, to reorganize itself under court supervision while continuing its normal operations and restructuring its debt. • Although the Code does not expressly prohibit the use of Chapter 11 by an individual nonbusiness debtor, the vast majority of Chapter 11 cases involve business debtors. 2. A business reorganization conducted under this chapter; REORGANIZATION (2).

Chapter 12. 1. The chapter of the Bankruptcy Code providing for a court-approved debt-payment relief plan for family farmers with a regular income. 2. A bankruptcy case filed under this chapter. — Also termed (in sense 2) family-farmer bankruptcy; farmer bankruptcy.

Chapter 13. 1. The chapter of the Bankruptcy Code allowing a person's future earnings to be collected by a trustee and paid to unsecured creditors. • A plan filed under Chapter 13 is sometimes called a wage-earner's plan, a wage-earner plan, or an income-based plan. A Chapter 13 debtor does not receive a discharge of debts; rather, Chapter 13 allows the debtor to propose a plan of rehabilitation to extend or reduce the balance of any obligations. A plan made in good faith will be confirmed if the creditors acquiesce, if they receive the fair value of their claims, or if the plan pledges all of the debtor's disposable income for three years. 2. A bankruptcy case filed under this chapter.

chapter surfing. Slang. A debtor's movement from a filing under one Bankruptcy Code chapter to a filing under another.

character evidence. See EVIDENCE.

characterization. 1. Conflict of laws. The classification, qualification, and interpretation of laws that apply to the case. — Also termed qualification; classification; interpretation.

"In a conflict-of-laws situation, a court must determine at the outset whether the problem presented to it for solution relates to torts, contracts, property, or some other field, or to a matter of substance or procedure, in order to refer to the appropriate law. In other words, the court must initially, whether consciously or not, go through the process of determining the nature of the problem; otherwise, the court will not know which choice-of-law rule to apply to the case. This process is generally called 'characterization,' and sometimes 'classification, 'qualification,' or 'interpretation.' " 16 Am. Jur. 2d Conflict of Laws § 3, at 12 (1998).

2. The process of classifying marital property as either separate or community property.

character witness. See WITNESS.

charge, n. 1. A formal accusation of a crime as a preliminary step to prosecution . — Also termed criminal charge. 2. An instruction or command . 3. JURY CHARGE <review the charge for appealable error>. 4. An assigned duty or task; a responsibility <the manager's charge to open and close the office>. 5. An encumbrance, lien, or claim . 6. A person or thing entrusted to another's care . 7. Price, cost, or expense <free of charge>.

delinquency charge. A charge assessed against a borrower for failing to timely make a payment.

noncash charge. A cost (such as depreciation or amortization) that does not involve an outlay of cash.

charge, vb. 1. To accuse (a person) of criminal conduct <the police charged him with murder>. 2. To instruct or command <the dean charged the students to ensure that the entire group acted ethically>. 3. To instruct a jury on matters of law <the judge charged the jury on self-defense>. 4. To impose a lien or claim; to encumber <charge the land with a tax lien>. 5. To entrust with responsibilities or duties <charge the guardian with the ward's care>. 6. To demand a fee; to bill <the clerk charged a small filing fee>.

chargeable, adj. (Of an act) capable or liable of being charged as a criminal offense <taking that money for personal use would be chargeable>.

charge account. A credit arrangement by which a customer purchases goods and services and pays for them periodically or within a specified time. See CREDIT (4).

charge and discharge. Equity practice. Court-ordered account filings by a plaintiff and a defendant. • The plaintiff's account (charge) and the defendant's response (discharge) were filed with a master in chancery.

charge and specification. Military law. A written description of an alleged offense.

charge-back, vb. A bank's deducting of sums it had provisionally credited to a customer's account, occurring usu. when a check deposited in the account has been dishonored. UCC § 4-214.

charge conference. A meeting between a trial judge and the parties' attorneys to develop a jury charge.

chargé d'affaires (shahr-zhay də-fair). [French "one in charge of affairs"] A diplomat who is the second in command in a diplomatic mission (hence, subordinate to an ambassador or minister). — Also spelled chargé des affaires.
Pl. chargés d'affaires.

acting chargé d'affaires. A chargé d'affaires who performs mission functions when the leader of the mission is not available to do so or when the position is vacant. — Also termed chargés d'affaires ad interim.

permanent chargé d'affaires. A chargé d'affaires with a high enough rank to head a mission (if there is no ambassador or minister). — Also termed chargé d'affaires en pied; chargé d'affaires en titre.

chargee (chahr-jee). 1. The holder of a charge on property or of a security on a loan. 2. One charged with a crime.

charge off, vb. To treat (an account receivable) as a loss or expense because payment is unlikely; to treat as a bad debt. See bad debt under DEBT.

charge sheet. 1. A police record showing the names of each person brought into custody, the nature of the accusations, and the identity of the accusers. 2. Military law. A four-part charging instrument containing (1) information about the accused and the witnesses, (2) the charges and specifications, (3) the preferring of charges and their referral to a summary, special, or general court-martial for trial, and (4) for a summary court-martial, the trial record.

charging instrument. A formal document — usu. either an indictment or an information — that sets forth an accusation of a crime. — Also termed accusatory instrument.

charging lien. See LIEN.

charging order. Partnership. A statutory procedure whereby an individual partner's creditor can satisfy its claim from the partner's interest in the partnership.

charitable, adj. 1. Dedicated to a general public purpose, usu. for the benefit of needy people who cannot pay for benefits received <charitable contribution>. 2. Involved in or otherwise relating to charity <charitable foundation>.

charitable bequest. See BEQUEST.

charitable contribution. 1. A contribution of money or property to an organization engaged in charitable activities. 2. A contribution to a qualified nonprofit charitable organization. ● Charitable contributions are deductible for certain tax purposes.

charitable corporation. See CORPORATION.

charitable deduction. See DEDUCTION.

charitable immunity. See IMMUNITY (2).

charitable organization. Tax. A tax-exempt organization that (1) is created and operated exclusively for religious, scientific, literary, educational, athletic, public-safety, or community-service purposes, (2) does not distribute earnings for the benefit of private individuals, and (3) does not interfere in any way with political campaigns and decision-making processes. IRC (26 USCA) § 501(c)(3). — Also termed charity; 501(c)(3) organization.

charitable purpose. Tax. The purpose for which an organization must be formed so that it qualifies as a charitable organization under the Internal Revenue Code. — Also termed charitable use.

charitable remainder. See REMAINDER.

charitable remainder annuity trust. See TRUST.

charitable-remainder trust. See TRUST.

charitable trust. See TRUST.

charitable use. See charitable trust under TRUST.

charity, n. 1. CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION. 2. Aid given to the poor, the suffering, or the general community for religious, educational, economic, public-safety, or medical purposes. 3. Goodwill.

charlatan (shahr-lə-tən), n. A person who pretends to have more knowledge or skill than he or she actually has; a quack or faker. — charlatanism, charlatanry, n.

charta (kahr-tə). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A charter or deed. 2. A token by which an estate is held. 3. A royal grant of privileges or liberties.

chartae libertatum (kahr-tee lib-ər-tay-təm). [Latin] Charters of liberties. ● This term refers to the two great sources of English liberties: Magna Carta and the Charta de Foresta.

chartel. See CARTEL.

charter, n. 1. An instrument by which a governmental entity (such as a city or state) grants rights, liberties, or powers to its citizens. 2. Hist. The writing that accompanies a livery of seisin. ● Rather than being an operative element of transfer, the writing was merely evidence of it. 3. A legislative act that creates a business or defines a corporate franchise. Cf. ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

bank charter. A document issued by a governmental authority permitting a bank to conduct business.

corporate charter. 1. CERTIFICATE OF INCORPORATION (1). 2. A document that one files with the secretary of state upon incorporating a business. ● The corporate charter is often the articles of incorporation.

home-rule charter. A municipal corporation's organizational plan or framework, analogous to a constitution, drawn by the municipality itself and adopted by popular vote of the citizenry.

municipal charter. A charter by which a municipality is constituted.

"Municipal Charters. — The charter issued to a municipality is in the nature of a constitution to it, being superior to all ordinances enacted by that municipality, though inferior in rank to all State laws of every kind." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 8 (1922).

4. The leasing or hiring of an airplane, ship, or other vessel.

bareboat charter. A charter under which the shipowner provides the ship, and the charterer provides the personnel, insurance, and other materials necessary to operate it. — Also termed demise charter.

catch-time charter. See time charter.

demise charter. A charter under which the shipowner surrenders possession and control of the vessel to the charterer, who then succeeds to many of the shipowner's rights and obligations. ● The charterer is known either as a demise charterer or as an owner pro hac vice.

gross charter. A charter under which the shipowner provides all personnel and pays all expenses.

time charter. A charter for a specified period, rather than for a specific task or voyage; a charter under which the shipowner continues to manage and control the vessel, but the charterer designates the ports of call and the cargo carried. ● Each party bears the expenses related to its functions and for any damage it causes. — Also termed catch-time charter.

voyage charter. A charter under which the shipowner provides a ship and crew, and places them at the disposal of the charterer for the carriage of cargo to a designated port. ● The voyage charterer may lease the entire vessel for a voyage or series of voyages — or may (by “space charter”) lease only part of the vessel.

charter, vb. 1. To establish or grant by charter <charter a bank>. 2. To hire or rent for temporary use <charter a boat>.

charter agreement. See CHARTERPARTY.

chartered life underwriter. See UNDERWRITER.

chartered ship. See SHIP.

charter-land. Hist. See BOOKLAND.

charter of affreightment. See AFFREIGHTMENT.

charterparty. A contract by which a ship, or a principal part of it, is leased by the owner, esp. to a merchant for the conveyance of goods on a predetermined voyage to one or more places; a special contract between the shipowner and charterer, esp. for the carriage of goods at sea. — Also written charter-party; charter party. — Also termed charter agreement.

“Charter partie (charta partita) is nothing but that which we call a paire of indentures, containing the covenants and agreements made between merchants, or sea faring men touching their marine affaires.” John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

“The instrument by which a vessel is leased is a charter party. The term is derived from charta partita, i.e., a deed of writing divided; in earlier times the charta partita, like the indenture agreement, was prepared in two parts, the ship owner retaining one part and the charter-er the other. . . . While a charter party need not be in writing, most charters today are detailed written documents drawn to accommodate the particular needs of shipper and carrier in a certain type of trade or commerce.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 44–45 (3d ed. 1996).

chartis reddendis (kahr-tis ri-den-dis). [Latin “for returning charters”] Hist. A writ seeking the return of a charter of feoffment from a person who has been entrusted with the charter but who has refused to deliver it as instructed. See FEOFFMENT.

chartophylax (kahr-tof-ə-laks). Hist. A keeper of records or public instruments; a registrar.

chase. Hist. A franchise granted by the Crown empowering the grantee to keep, within a certain district, animals for hunting, i.e., the objects of the chase. ● This franchise was also known as a free chase to contrast it with a chase royal — a chase held by the Crown.

common chase. A chase in which everyone is entitled to hunt.

chattel (chat-əl). (usu. pl.) Movable or transferable property; esp., personal property.

“That Money is not to be accounted Goods or Chattels, because it is not of it self valuable. . . . Chattels are either personal or real. Personal, may be so called in two respects: One, because they belong immediately to the person of a Man, as a Bow, Horse, etc. The other, for that being any way injuriously withheld from us, we have no means to recover them, but Personal Actions. Chattels real, are such as either appertain not immediately to the person, but to some other thing, by way of dependency, as a Box with Charters of Land, Apples upon a Tree, or a Tree it self growing on the Ground. . . . [O]r else such as are issuing out of some immoveable thing to a person, as a Lease or Rent for the term of years.” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

chattel personal. A tangible good or an intangible right (such as a patent). — Also termed personal chattel.

chattel real. A real-property interest that is less than a freehold or fee, such as a leasehold estate. ● The most important chattel real is an estate for years in land, which is considered a chattel because it lacks the indefiniteness of time essential to real property. — Also termed real chattel.

chattel vegetable. A movable article of a vegetable origin, such as timber, undergrowth, corn, or fruit.

personal chattel. See chattel personal.

real chattel. See chattel real.

chattel lien. See mechanic's lien under LIEN.

chattel mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

chattel-mortgage bond. See BOND (3).

chattel paper. A writing that shows both a monetary obligation and a security interest in or a lease of specific goods. ● Chattel paper is generally used in a consumer transaction when the consumer buys goods on credit. The consumer typically promises to pay for the goods by executing a promissory note, and the seller retains a security interest in the goods. See SECURITY AGREEMENT.

electronic chattel paper. Chattel paper evidenced by a record or records consisting of information stored in an electronic medium and retrievable in perceivable form. UCC § 9-102(a)(22).

personal check. A check drawn on a person's own account.

postdated check. A check that bears a date after the date of its issue and is payable on or after the stated date.

raised check. A check whose face amount has been increased, usu. without the knowledge of the issuer — an act that under the UCC is considered a material alteration. UCC § 3-407. See RAISING AN INSTRUMENT.

registered check. A check purchased at a bank and drawn on bank funds that have been set aside to pay that check.

rubber check. See bad check.

stale check. A check that has been outstanding for an unreasonable time — more than six months under the UCC. • Banks in jurisdictions adopting the UCC may choose not to honor such a check. UCC § 4-404.

teller's check. A draft drawn by a bank on another bank or payable at or through a bank.

traveler's check. A cashier's check that must be signed by the purchaser at the time of purchase and countersigned when cashed; an instrument that (1) is payable on demand, (2) is drawn on or payable at or through a bank, (3) is designated by the term "traveler's check" or by a substantially similar term, and (4) requires, as a condition to payment, a countersignature by a person whose specimen signature appears on the instrument. UCC § 3-104(i). • Traveler's checks, which are available in various denominations, are typically purchased from a bank or financing company.

worthless check. See bad check.

check, vb. 1. To control or restrain <handcuffs checked the defendant's movement>. 2. To verify or audit <an accountant checked the invoices>. 3. To investigate <the police checked up on the suspect>.

check-kiting. The illegal practice of writing a check against a bank account with insufficient funds to cover the check, in the hope that the funds from a previously deposited check will reach the account before the bank debits the amount of the outstanding check. — Also termed kiting; check-flashing.

check-off system. The procedure by which an employer deducts union dues directly from the employees' wages and remits those dues to the union.

checkpoint search. See SEARCH.

checks and balances. The theory of governmental power and functions whereby each branch of government has the ability to counter the actions of any other branch, so that no single branch can control the entire government. • For example, the executive branch can check the legislature by exercising its veto power, but the legislature can, by a sufficient majority, override any veto. See SEPARATION OF POWERS.

chirograph (ki-rə-graf), n. 1. Civil law. A handwritten instrument signed by the party who writes it. 2. A written deed, subscribed and witnessed. 3. Such a deed in two parts from a single original document separated by an indented line through the word "chirographum," each party retaining one part. 4. Hist. FOOT OF THE FINE. — Also termed (in sense 4) cyrographarius. — chirographic, adj.

"Formerly, when deeds were more concise than at present, it was usual to write both parts on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters of the alphabet written between them; through which the parchment was cut, either in a straight or indented line, in such a manner as to leave half the word on one part and half on the other. Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists; and with us chirographa, or hand-writings." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 295–96 (1766).

chirographer of fines. Hist. A Court of Common Pleas officer who engrossed court-ordered fines and delivered indentures of the fines to the parties. See INDENTURE OF A FINE.

"Chirographer of fines ... signifieth in our common lawe, him in the common bench office, that ingrosseth fines in that court acknowledged, into a perpetuall record, after they be acknowledged, and fully passed by those officers, by whome they are formerly examined; and that writeth and delivereth the indentures of them unto the party. This officer also maketh two indentures, one for the buier, another for the seller; and maketh one other indented peece, containing also the effect of the fine, which he delivereth over to the custos brevium, that is called the foote of the fine." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

chirographum (ki-rōg-rə-fəm). Roman law. 1. A handwritten document, usu. an undertaking or acknowledgment of debt written in the debtor's own hand. 2. A right of action for debt. Pl. chirographa.

chit. 1. A signed voucher for money received or owed, usu. for food, drink, or the like. 2. A slip of paper with writing on it.

chivalry (shiv-əl-ree). Hist. Tenure held by knight-service; tenure in which a person held land in exchange for military service. See KNIGHT-SERVICE.

"Chivalry is a tenure of land by knight's service: for the better understanding whereof it is to be known, that there is no land but is held mediately or immediately of the crown by some service or other; and therefore all our free-holds that are to us and our heirs are called fees, as proceeding from the bounty of the king for some small yearly rent, and the performance of such services as originally were imposed upon the land at the giving thereof. . . . And these services are all by Littleton divided into two sorts, chivalry and soccage: the one martial and military; the other clownish and rustical." Termes de la Ley 83–84 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

choate (koh-it), adj. 1. Complete in and of itself. 2. Having ripened or become perfected. — choateness, n. Cf. INCHOATE.

chop-shop, n. A garage where stolen automobiles are dismantled so that their parts can be sold separately.

chose (shohz), n. [French] A thing, whether tangible or intangible; a personal article; a chattel. See THING.

chose in action. 1. A proprietary right in personam, such as a debt owed by another person, a share in a joint-stock company, or a claim for damages in tort. 2. The right to bring an action to recover a debt, money, or thing. 3. Personal property that one person owns but another person possesses, the owner being able to regain possession through a lawsuit. — Also termed thing in action.

"Chose, or, thing in action is, when a man hath cause, or may bring an action for some duty due to him; as an action of debt . . . and because they are things whereof a man is not possessed, but for recovery of them is driven to his action, they are called things in action." Termes de la Ley 85 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

"The term chose in action has been in common use for a long time, but some doubts have been recently raised as to its precise meaning. (See Law Quarterly Review for 1893, 1894, 1895.) A Divisional Court, however, has now given us the following definition: "'chose in action' is a known legal expression used to describe all personal rights of property which can only be claimed or enforced by action, and not by taking physical possession." Torkington v. Magee, [1902] 2 K.B. p. 430. The phrase 'rights of property' does not seem a very happy one, but it is quite clear that the court meant to include under the term chose in action rights under a contract and rights of action arising from breach of contract." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 362 n.(b) (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

chose in possession. Personal property for which title and possession unite in the same person. — Also termed thing in possession.

church law. See CANON LAW (2).

churl (chərl). See CEORL.

churn, burn, and bury. (Of a stockbroker) to make numerous risky trades in (an account) and, as a result, squander the customer's money. • The term denotes the action involved in particularly reckless churning.

churning, n. Securities. A stockbroker's excessive trading of a customer's account to earn more commissions rather than to further the customer's interests; an abuse of a customer's confidence for personal gain by frequent and numerous transactions, disproportionate to the size and nature of the customer's account. • Under securities laws, the practice is illegal — a violation of § 10(b) of the Exchange Act (15 USCA § 78j(b)). But because the fraud is the activity as a whole and there is no communication between the broker and the customer about a specific sale of securities, there is not normally a right of action for fraud based on churning. — churn, vb.

circuit, n. 1. A judicial division in which hearings occur at several locations, as a result of which judges often travel to different courthouses. 2. A judicial division of the United States — that is, the 13 circuits where the U.S. courts of appeals sit.

circuit court. See COURT.

circuit judge. See JUDGE.

circuit justice. See JUSTICE (2).

circuit-riding, n. Hist. The practice of judges' traveling within a legislatively defined circuit to hear cases in one place for a time, then another, and so on.

"The Judiciary Act of 1789 required that the justices of the Supreme Court serve also as judges of the circuit courts. The justices complained that circuit riding caused serious physical hardships and diverted them from more important duties in the nation's capital. . . . Congress in 1801 abolished circuit riding on grounds of efficiency, but a year later a new Jeffersonian Republican majority restored the practice, obliging each justice to hold circuit court along with a district judge. Gradually, however, improved communications, increasing business in the nation's capital, and the strengthening of American nationhood following the Civil War rendered circuit riding anachronistic. Congress in the Judiciary Act of 1869 established a separate circuit court judiciary, although the justices retained nominal circuit riding duties until the Circuit Court of Appeals Act of 1891. Congress officially ended the practice in 1911." The Oxford Companion to the Supreme Court of the United States 145 (Kermit L. Hall ed., 1992).

circuity of action. A procedure allowing duplicative lawsuits, leading to unnecessarily lengthy and indirect litigation, as when a defendant fails to bring a counterclaim, but later brings a separate action to recover what could have been awarded in the original lawsuit. • Civil-procedure rules have eliminated many problems associated with circuity of action.

"Circuity of action is, when an action is rightfully brought for a duty, but yet about the bush, as it were, for that it might as well have been otherwise answered and determined, and the suit saved: and because the same action was more than needful, it is called circuity of action." Termes de la Ley 87 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

Circumspecte agatis (sər-kəm-spek-tee ə-gay-tis). [Latin "that you act circumspectly"] Hist. A directive from the king to his justices detailing the boundaries of ecclesiastical jurisdiction. ● The directive, issued circa 1285, was originally in the form of a writ, but over time acquired statutory authority. The title Circumspecte agatis derives from the first few words of the writ: "Rex talibus iudicibus salutem; Circumspecte agatis . . ." circumstance, n. (often pl.) An accompanying or accessory fact, event, or condition, such as a piece of evidence that indicates the probability of an event. — circumstantial, adj.

aggravating circumstance. 1. A fact or situation that increases the degree of liability or culpability for a tortious or criminal act. 2. A fact or situation that relates to a criminal offense or defendant and that is considered by the court in imposing punishment (esp. a death sentence). ● Aggravating circumstances in death-penalty cases are usu. prescribed by statute. — Also termed aggravating element; aggravating factor. Cf. mitigating circumstance.

change of circumstances. Family law. A modification in the physical, emotional, or financial condition of one or both parents, used to show the need to modify a custody or support order. — Also termed changed circumstances.

exigent circumstances. A situation that demands unusual or immediate action and that may allow people to circumvent usual procedures, as when a neighbor breaks through a window of a burning house to save someone inside.

extenuating circumstance. See mitigating circumstance.

extraordinary circumstances. A highly unusual set of facts that are not commonly associated with a particular thing or event.

mitigating circumstance. 1. A fact or situation that does not justify or excuse a wrongful act or offense but that reduces the degree of culpability and thus may reduce the damages (in a civil case) or the punishment (in a criminal case). 2. A fact or situation that does not bear on the question of a defendant's guilt but that is considered by the court in imposing punishment and esp. in lessening the severity of a sentence. 3. Contracts. An unusual or unpredictable event that prevents performance, such as a labor strike. — Also termed extenuating circumstance. Cf. aggravating circumstance.

circumstantial evidence. See EVIDENCE.

cirliscus (sər-lis-kəs). See CEORL.

citatio ad reassumendam causam (si-tay-shee-oh ad ree-as-yoo-men-dəm kaw-zəm). [Latin "citation to take up a cause again"] Civil law. A citation issued to revive an action that was abated upon one party's death. ● The citation issues against the deceased party's heir. Cf. bill of revivor under BILL (2).

citation, n. 1. A court-issued writ that commands a person to appear at a certain time and place to do something demanded in the writ, or to show cause for not doing so. 2. A police-issued order to appear before a judge on a given date to defend against a stated charge, such as a traffic violation. 3. A reference to a legal precedent or authority, such as a case, statute, or treatise, that either substantiates or contradicts a given position. — Often shortened to (in sense 3) cite.

parallel citation. An additional reference to a case that has been reported in more than one reporter. ● For example, whereas a Bluebook citation reads "Morgan v. United States, 304 U.S. 1 (1938)," the same reference including parallel citations reads "Morgan v. United States, 304 U.S. 1, 58 S.Ct. 773, 82 L.Ed. 1129 (1938)," in which the main citation is to the U.S. Reports and the parallel citations are to the Supreme Court Reporter and to the Lawyer's Edition.

pinpoint citation. The page on which a quotation or relevant passage appears, as opposed to the page on which a case or article begins. ● For example, the number 217 is the pinpoint citation in Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217 (1962). — Also termed jump citation; dictum page; pincite.

citational, adj. Of or relating to a citation (esp. a reference citation) < citational analysis >.

citation order. The appropriate ranking of the various authorities marshaled in support of a legal proposition.

Citations, Law of. Roman law. An A.D. 426 decree of Emperor Valentinian listing Papinian, Paul, Gaius, Ulpian, and Modestinus as the only juristic writers who could be cited authoritatively in court. • If a majority of the writers agreed on an issue, the judge was bound to follow the majority view. The Law of Citations allowed the judge to use discretion only if the writers were equally divided and Papinian (whose view prevailed in a tie) was silent on the issue.

"In 426 came the famous lex de responsis prudentium — the Law of Citations. . . . This law lessened the difficulties of the courts in dealing with juristic literature. It excluded a huge mass of conflicting doctrine, the relative value of which had not been determined, and which yet had to be used by the judges as a source of principle on which to base their decisions." W.W. Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law: From Augustus to Justinian 35 (1921).

citator (si-tay-tər). A book or section of a book containing tables of cases or statutes that have been judicially cited in later cases.

"A citator is a compilation showing where certain cases have been cited in other cases, and whether the provisions of constitutions and statutes have been repealed, amended, or otherwise affected, or have been judicially construed, or have been cited." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 61 (1922).

2. For diversity-jurisdiction purposes, a corporation that was incorporated within a state or has its principal place of business there.

citizen-informant. A witness who, without expecting payment and with the public good in mind, comes forward and volunteers information to the police or other authorities.

citizen's arrest. See ARREST.

citizenship, n. 1. The status of being a citizen. 2. The quality of a person's conduct as a member of a community.

Citizenship Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution providing that all persons born or naturalized in the United States are citizens of the United States and the state they reside in. U.S. Const. art. XIV, § 1, cl. 1.

citizen suit. An action under a statute giving citizens the right to sue violators of the law (esp. environmental law) and to seek injunctive relief and penalties. • In the 1970s, during the heyday of antipollution statutes such as the Clean Water Act and the Clean Air Act, legislators believed that regulators sometimes become too close to the industries they oversee and, as a result, lack the aggressiveness that individual citizens would be able to bring to litigation. The statutes therefore included provisions authorizing people to be "private attorneys general" to protect the environment, seeking not only injunctions to stop pollution but also penalties to be paid to the U.S. Treasury.

city. 1. A municipal corporation, usu. headed by a mayor and governed by a city council. 2. The territory within a city's corporate limits. 3. Collectively, the people who live within this territory. Cf. TOWN.

city attorney. An attorney employed by a city to advise it and represent it in legal matters. — Also termed municipal attorney; city counsel; corporation counsel; city solicitor.

"There may have been a time in this country when the function of the City Attorney of the average city consisted mainly of advising the Council, preparing an occasional ordinance or handling an infrequent lawsuit. The legal business of the average city is no longer so simple, so infrequent and so nonconsuming of the time of the City Attorney. Every action of the City must be justified by its legal powers, and the City Attorney is the municipal officer whose responsibility it is to decide whether any act or action is within the city's legal powers. The demands of citizens for augmented municipal services, and the resulting diversification of city operations have increased the volume of work to the point where the City Attorney, in many cities, has become a central consultant of the city officers and employees on a day-to-day, hour-to-hour basis." Allen Grimes, The City Attorney: A Practice Manual 6 (1978).

city clerk. See CLERK (1).

city council. A city's legislative body, usu. responsible for passing ordinances, levying taxes, appropriating funds, and generally administering city government. — Also termed (in some states) board of aldermen.

city counsel. See CITY ATTORNEY.

city court. See municipal court under COURT.

city judge. See municipal judge under JUDGE.

city solicitor. See CITY ATTORNEY.

Civ. Ct. See civil court under COURT.

civic, adj. 1. Of or relating to citizenship or a particular citizen <civic responsibilities>. 2. Of or relating to a city <civic center>.

civil, adj. 1. Of or relating to the state or its citizenry <civil rights>. 2. Of or relating to private rights and remedies that are sought by action or suit, as distinct from criminal proceedings <civil litigation>. 3. Of or relating to any of the modern legal systems derived from Roman law <Louisiana is a civil-law jurisdiction>.

civil action. See ACTION.

civil arrest. See ARREST.

civil assault. See ASSAULT.

civil-authority clause. Insurance. A clause, esp. in a fire insurance policy, insuring against damages caused by firefighters, police, or other civil authority.

civil bail. See BAIL (1).

Civil Code. 1. The code that embodied the law of Rome. 2. The code that embodies the law of France, from which a great part of the Louisiana Civil Code is derived. — Abbr. C.C. — Also termed Code Civil. See NAPOLEONIC CODE. 3. A codification of noncriminal statutes.

civil cognation. See COGNATION.

civil commitment. See COMMITMENT.

civil commotion. A public uprising by a large number of people who, acting together, cause harm to people or property. ● A civil commotion usu. involves many more people than a riot. Cf. RIOT.

civil conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

civil contempt. See CONTEMPT.

civil corporation. See CORPORATION.

civil court. See COURT.

civil day. See artificial day under DAY.

civil death. 1. Archaic. At common law, the loss of rights — such as the rights to vote, make contracts, inherit, and sue — by a person who has been outlawed or convicted of a serious crime, or who is considered to have left the temporal world for the spiritual by entering a monastery.

"In one large department of law the fiction [civil death] is elegantly maintained. A monk or nun can not acquire or have any proprietary rights. When a man becomes 'professed in religion,' his heir at once inherits from him any land that he has, and, if he has made a will, it takes effect at once as though he were naturally dead." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, History of English Law 434 (2d ed. 1898).

"Civil death arises from outlawry; it seems doubtful whether there are any other circumstances to which the phrase is now applicable." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 193 n.(b) (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

2. In some states, the loss of rights — such as the rights to vote and hold public office — by a person serving a life sentence. Cf. civil disability under DISABILITY (2). 3. The state of a corporation that has formally dissolved or become bankrupt, leaving an estate to be administered for the benefit of shareholders and creditors. — Also termed legal death.

civil defense. 1. The practice of protecting civilians from dangers caused by hostilities or disasters and helping them recover from the immediate effects of such events. 2. The policies that underlie this practice.

civil disability. See DISABILITY (2).

civil disobedience. A deliberate but nonviolent act of lawbreaking to call attention to a particular law or set of laws of questionable legitimacy or morality.

"Social protest and even civil disobedience serve the law's need for growth. Ideally, reform would come according to reason and justice without self-help and disturbing, almost violent, forms of protest . . . Still, candor compels one here again to acknowledge the gap between the ideal and the reality. Short of the millennium, sharp changes in the law depend partly upon the stimulus of protest." Archibald Cox, Civil Rights, the Constitution, and the Courts, 40 N.Y. State B.J. 161, 169 (1968).

civil disorder. A public disturbance involving three or more people who commit violent acts that cause immediate danger or injury to people or property. See RIOT.

civil forfeiture. See FORFEITURE.

civil fraud. See FRAUD.

civil fruit. See FRUIT.

civilian, n. 1. A person not serving in the military. 2. A lawyer practicing in a civil-law jurisdiction. — civilian, adj.

civil infraction. See INFRACTION.

civil injury. See INJURY.

civilis (sə-vī-lis), adj. [Latin] Of or according to civil law.

civilista (siv-ə-lis-tə). [Latin] Hist. See CIVILIAN (2).

civiliter (sə-vil-ə-tər), adv. [Latin "civilly"] 1. By a civil, as distinguished from a criminal, proceeding. Cf. CRIMINALITER. 2. Civilly; as a citizen.

civiliter mortuus (sə-vil-ə-tər mor-choo-əs). [Latin] Civilly dead <the wife of a man civiliter mortuus had similar rights>. See CIVIL DEATH (1).

civilization. The transformation of a criminal matter to a civil one by law or judgment. Cf. CRIMINALIZATION.

civil justice. The methods by which a society redresses civil wrongs. Cf. CRIMINAL JUSTICE (1).

civil law. 1. (usu. cap.) One of the two prominent legal systems in the Western World, originally administered in the Roman Empire and still influential in continental Europe, Latin America, Scotland, and Louisiana, among other parts of the world. — Also termed jus civile; Roman law; Romanesque law. Cf. COMMON LAW (2). 2. ROMAN LAW (1). 3. The body of law imposed by the state, as opposed to moral law. 4. The law of civil or private rights, as opposed to criminal law or administrative law. — Abbr. CL.

"The difference between civil law . . . and criminal law turns on the difference between two different objects which the law seeks to pursue — redress or punishment. The object of civil law is the redress of wrongs by compelling compensation or restitution: the wrongdoer is not punished, he only suffers so much harm as is necessary to make good the wrong he has done. The person who has suffered gets a definite benefit from the law, or at least he avoids a loss. On the other hand, in the case of crimes, the main object of the law is to punish the wrongdoer; to give him and others a strong inducement not to commit the same or similar crimes, to reform him if possible, and perhaps to satisfy the public sense that wrongdoing ought to meet with retribution." William Geldart, Introduction to English Law 146 (D.C.M. Yardley ed., 9th ed. 1984).

civil liability. See LIABILITY.

civil-liability act. See DRAM-SHOP LIABILITY.

civil liberty. (usu. pl.) Freedom from undue governmental interference or restraint. ● This term usu. refers to freedom of speech or religion. — Also termed civil right.

civil list. An annual sum granted by Parliament for the expenses of the royal household.

civil marriage. See MARRIAGE (2).

civil month. See MONTH (1).

civil offense. See public tort under TORT.

civil penalty. See PENALTY.

civil possession. See POSSESSION (3).

civil power. See POLITICAL POWER.

civil procedure. 1. The body of law — usu. rules enacted by the legislature or courts — governing the methods and practices used in civil litigation. • An example is the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. 2. A particular method or practice used in carrying on civil litigation.

civil process. See PROCESS.

civil right. (usu. pl.) 1. The individual rights of personal liberty guaranteed by the Bill of Rights and by the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 19th Amendments, as well as by legislation such as the Voting Rights Act. • Civil rights include esp. the right to vote, the right of due process, and the right of equal protection under the law. 2. CIVIL LIBERTY.

civil-rights act. One of several federal statutes enacted after the Civil War (1861–1865) and, much later, during and after the civil-rights movement of the 1950s and 1960s, and intended to implement and give further force to the basic rights guaranteed by the Constitution, and esp. prohibiting discrimination in employment and education on the basis of race, sex, religion, color, or age.

civil-rights removal. See REMOVAL.

civil service, n. 1. The administrative branches of a government. 2. The group of people employed by these branches. — civil servant, n.

Civil Service Commission. A defunct federal board created in 1883 to ensure that civil-service employees are hired on the basis of merit rather than personal preference or political considerations. • In 1978, the Commission's functions were split between the Office of Personnel Management and the Merit Systems Protection Board.

civil society. See SOCIETY.

civil war. See WAR.

civil wrong. See WRONG; TORT.

civis (siv-is). [Latin] Roman law. A Roman citizen; a person entitled to the public and private rights associated with Roman citizenship. — Also termed civis Romanus.

civitas (siv-ə-tas). [Latin] Roman law. 1. A state; a group of people living under a given body of law. 2. The rights of a citizen.

C.J.S. abbr. Corpus Juris Secundum. — Also written CJS.

CL. abbr. CIVIL LAW.

Claflin trust. See indestructible trust under TRUST.

Claflin-trust principle. The doctrine that a trust cannot be terminated by the beneficiaries if the termination would defeat one of the settlor's material purposes in establishing the trust. • If the settlor is alive and consents, however, the trust may be terminated. Trusts in the "Claflin" category are spendthrift trusts, support trusts, trusts in which the trustee has discretion to make distributions, and trusts in which the beneficiary is entitled to income until a certain age and the principal at that age.

claim, n. 1. The aggregate of operative facts giving rise to a right enforceable by a court <the plane crash led to dozens of wrongful-death claims>. 2. The assertion of an existing right; any right to payment or to an equitable remedy, even if contingent or provisional <the spouse's claim to half of the lottery winnings>. 3. A demand for money or property to which one asserts a right <an insurance claim>.

liquidated claim. A claim for an amount previously agreed on by the parties or that can be precisely determined by operation of law or by the terms of the parties' agreement. — Also termed liquidated demand.

matured claim. A claim based on a debt that is due for payment.

unliquidated claim. A claim in which the liability of the party or the amount of the claim is in dispute.

4. An interest or remedy recognized at law; the means by which a person can obtain a privilege, possession, or enjoyment of a right or thing; CAUSE OF ACTION (1) <claim against the employer for wrongful termination>.

colorable claim. 1. A claim that is legitimate and that may reasonably be asserted, given the facts presented and the current law (or a reasonable and logical extension or modification of the current law). 2. A claim in which the debtor and property holder are, as a matter of law, not adverse. • One example of a colorable claim is one made by a person holding property as an agent or bailee of the bankrupt.

contingent claim. A claim that has not yet accrued and is dependent on some future event that may never happen.

counterclaim. See COUNTERCLAIM.

cross-claim. See CROSS-CLAIM.

supplemental claim. A claim for further relief made after the original claim.

5. A right to payment or to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if the breach gives rise to a right to payment. • It does not matter whether the right has been reduced to judgment or whether it is fixed or contingent, matured or unmatured, disputed or undisputed, or secured or unsecured.

creditor's claim. Bankruptcy. A claim that a creditor has against a debtor.

involuntary gap claim. Bankruptcy. A claim that accrues in the ordinary course of business after an involuntary bankruptcy petition has been filed but before the order for relief or the appointment of a trustee. • The Bankruptcy Code gives priority to creditors with claims of this type to encourage creditors to continue dealing with a debtor until the debtor has a chance to challenge the involuntary petition.

priority claim. Bankruptcy. An unsecured claim that, under bankruptcy law, must be paid before other unsecured claims. • The Bankruptcy Code sets forth eight classes of claims, to be paid in order of priority: (1) administrative expenses of the bankruptcy estate, (2) involuntary gap claims, (3) wage claims, (4) contributions to employee benefit plans, (5) claims of grain farmers and fishermen, (6) consumer deposits, (7) tax claims, and (8) capital requirements of an insured depository institution.

secured claim. A claim held by a creditor who has a lien or a right of setoff against the debtor's property.

unsecured claim. 1. A claim by a creditor who does not have a lien or a right of setoff against the debtor's property. 2. A claim by a creditor who has a lien on or right of setoff against the debtor's property worth less than the amount of the debt.

6. Patents. A formal statement describing the novel features of an invention and defining the scope of the patent's protection <claim no. 3 of the patent describes an electrical means for driving a metal pin>. Cf. SPECIFICATION (3).

dependent claim. A patent claim that refers to and further limits another claim or set of claims in the same patent application.

multiple dependent claim. A dependent claim that refers to more than one other claim.

claim and delivery. A claim for the recovery of specific personal property wrongfully taken or detained, as well as for any damages caused by the taking or detention. • This claim derives from the common-law action of replevin.

claimant, n. One who asserts a right or demand, esp. formally.

claim check. A receipt obtained for bailed or checked property and surrendered by the holder when the bailee returns the property.

claim dilution. Bankruptcy. The reduction in the likelihood that a debtor's claimants will be fully repaid, including considerations of the time value of money.

claim for relief. The part of a complaint in a civil action specifying what relief the plaintiff asks of the court.

claim in equity. Hist. A summary proceeding created to eliminate protracted pleading procedure in simple cases. • The claim in equity was established in England in 1850 and abolished in 1860.

claim-jumping. 1. The extension of the borders of a mining claim to infringe on other areas or claims. 2. The filing of a duplicate claim to take advantage of a flaw in the original claim.

claim of appeal. See NOTICE OF APPEAL.

claim of cognizance. Hist. An intervention seeking the return of a case to the claimant's own court. • Cognizance may be claimed by a person, city, or public corporation granted the right to hold court. — Also termed claim of conusance. See COGNIZANCE; CONUSANCE.

claim of conusance. See CLAIM OF COGNIZANCE.

claim of liberty. Hist. A petition to the Crown, filed in the Court of Exchequer, seeking the Attorney General's confirmation of liberties and franchises.

claim of ownership. 1. The possession of a piece of property with the intention of claiming it in hostility to the true owner. 2. A party's manifest intention to take over land, regardless of title or right. — Also termed claim of right; claim of title.

claim of right. Hist. A criminal plea, usu. to a theft charge, by a defendant asserting that the property was taken under the honest (but mistaken) belief that the defendant had a superior right to the property. • The claim of right could also be raised in defense against bigamy if a defendant honestly believed that an earlier marriage had been legally dissolved. It has been superseded by a defense of honesty.

claim-of-right doctrine. Tax. The rule that any income constructively received must be reported as income, whether or not the taxpayer has an unrestricted claim to it.

claim of title. See CLAIM OF OWNERSHIP.

claim preclusion. See RES JUDICATA.

“[T]he principal distinction between claim preclusion and issue preclusion is . . . that the former forecloses litigation of matters that have never been litigated. This makes it important to know the dimensions of the ‘claim’ that is foreclosed by bringing the first action, but unfortunately no precise definition is possible.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 100A, at 723 (5th ed. 1994).

claim-property bond. See replevin bond under BOND (2).

claims adjuster. See ADJUSTER.

claims-consciousness, n. The quality characterizing a legal culture in which people have firm expectations of justice and are willing to take concrete steps to see that justice is done <claims-consciousness in the United States has resulted from certain social changes, not from any character deficiency>. — Also termed rights-consciousness. — claims-conscious, adj.

Claims Court, U.S. See UNITED STATES COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS.

claims-made policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

clam (klam), adv. [Latin] Civil law. Secretly; covertly. • Under Roman law, an act (such as occupying or altering the condition of someone else's property) was committed clam when it was done with the intent to conceal it in an effort to avoid liability. See INTERDICTUM QUOD VIAUT CLAM.

clamea admittenda in itinere per attornatum (klay-mee-ə ad-mə-ten-də in ɪ-tin-ə-ree pər ə-tor-nay-təm). [Latin “claim to be admitted at the eyre by an attorney”] Hist. A writ from the king commanding the justices in eyre to permit by attorney the claim of a person employed in the king's service who cannot attend court in person.

clameur de haro (krah-mər dah-roh). [French] An outcry recognized in the Channel Islands as a protest against trespass to land. • The clameur de haro is a legal remnant of when the Duchy of Normandy held the islands before England took control in the 13th century. The victim's cry of haro (repeated 3 times) is popularly supposed to be an abbreviation of Ha Rollo, the first Duke of Normandy. The full cry, Haro, Haro, Haro, a l'aide, mon prince, on me fait tort, when registered at the local records office, enjoins the offender from possessing the land. See HARO; HUE AND CRY; GRAND COUTUMIER DE PAYS ET DUCHÉ DE NORMANDIE.

clamor. 1. Hist. A lawsuit; a claim. 2. HUE AND CRY (1). 3. Civil law. A claimant. 4. Civil law. The thing claimed from another.

clandestine (klan-des-tin), adj. Secret or concealed, esp. for illegal or unauthorized purposes.

clandestine marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

class, n. 1. A group of people, things, qualities, or activities that have common characteristics or attributes  <the upper-middle class>.

protected class. A class of people who benefit from protection by statute, such as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibits discrimination based on race, sex, national origin, or religion.

2. The order or rank that people or things are arranged in <she flew first class to Chicago>.

3. A group of people, uncertain in number .

testamentary class (tes-tə-men-tə-ree or -tree). A group of beneficiaries who are uncertain in number but whose number will be ascertainable in the future, when each will take an equal or other proportionate share of the gift.

4. Civil procedure. A group of people who have a common legal position, so that all their claims can be efficiently adjudicated in a single proceeding .

settlement class. Numerous similarly situated people for whom a claimant's representative and an adversary propose a contract liquidating the claims of all class members. • During the 1980s and 1990s, mass-tort defendants began using settlement classes as a means of foreclosing claims by some unknown number of future claimants.

class action. A lawsuit in which a single person or a small group of people represents the interests of a larger group. • Federal procedure has several requirements for maintaining a class action: (1) the class must be so large that individual suits would be impracticable, (2) there must be legal or factual questions common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties must be typical of those of the class, and (4) the representative parties must adequately protect the interests of the class. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. — Also termed class suit; representative action.

"The class action was an invention of equity . . . mothered by the practical necessity of providing a procedural device so that mere numbers would not disable large groups of individuals, united in interest, from enforcing their equitable rights nor grant them immunity from their equitable wrongs. . . . By rule 23 the Supreme Court has extended the use of the class action device to the entire field of federal civil litigation by making it applicable to all civil actions." Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Langer, 168 F.2d 182, 187 (8th Cir. 1948).

hybrid class action. A type of action in which the rights to be enforced are several and varied, but the object is to adjudicate claims that do or may affect the specific property in the action.

spurious class action. A former category of class action in which the interests of class members are several, not interdependent, and joinder is allowed to avoid multiplicity of suits.

clausa rebus sic stantibus (klawz-ə 'ree-bəs sik stan-tə-bəs). [Law Latin] Int'l law. 1. A treaty provision stating that the treaty is binding only as long as the circumstances in existence when the treaty was signed remain substantially the same. 2. A doctrine by which the law supplies such a provision to a treaty that does not expressly contain one; REBUS SIC STANTIBUS. — Often shortened to clausa. — Also termed clausula rebus sic stantibus; clausula.

"[T]he problem of the attitude of international law to oppressive or obsolete treaty obligations remains, and an attempt has been made by many writers to solve it by the doctrine known as the clausula rebus sic stantibus. In every treaty, it is said, there is implied a clause which provides that the treaty is to be binding only 'so long as things stand as they are'; the expressed terms may be absolute, but a treaty is never more than conditional, and when a 'vital change of circumstances' has occurred, the condition of the treaty's validity has failed, and it ceases to be binding. Such a doctrine, if it is to be accepted into the law, clearly needs careful definition. Otherwise it is capable of being used, and it often has been used, merely to excuse the breach of a treaty obligation that a state finds it inconvenient to fulfil." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 260 (5th ed. 1955).

clause, n. 1. A distinct section or provision of a legal document or instrument. 2. ITEM (3). — clausal, adj.

clause of accrual. A provision, usu. found in a gift by will or in a deed between tenants in common, that grants a decedent beneficiary's shares to the surviving beneficiary. — Also termed clause of accruer.

clause paramount. Maritime law. A provision in a charterparty incorporating the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act into the charter. See CHARTERPARTY; CARRIAGE OF GOODS BY SEA ACT.

clause potestative (poh-tes-tay-tiv). French law. A contractual provision in which one party reserves the right to annul the contract.

See INTERN. 5. A lawyer who assists a judge with research, writing, and case management.

"[M]odern American judging in all courts of national significance — the federal courts and the more prominent state appellate courts — staggers along despite the burden of bloated caseloads and the shortcomings of distinctly human judges only by the delegation of a great deal of the labor of judging to law clerks: subordinate, anonymous, but often quite powerful lawyers who function as the noncommissioned officers in the army of the judiciary." John Bilyeu Oakley & Robert S. Thompson, Law Clerks and the Judicial Process 2 (1980).

6. Hist. A cleric.

"Eventually the rule was established that 'clerks' of all kinds, who committed any of the serious crimes termed felonies, could be tried only in an ecclesiastical court, and therefore were only amenable to such punishments as that court could inflict. Any clerk accused of such crime was accordingly passed over to the bishop's court. He was there tried before a jury of clerks by the oaths of twelve compurgators; a mode of trial which usually ensured him an acquittal." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 75 (16th ed. 1952).

clerk, vb. To work as a clerk <she clerked for a Chicago law firm last summer>.

Coase Theorem (kohs). An economic proposition describing the relationship between legal rules about entitlements and economic efficiency. • The theorem, innovated by Ronald Coase, holds that if there are no transaction costs — such as the costs of bargaining or acquiring information — then any legal rule will produce an efficient result. Coase's seminal article was The Problem of Social Cost, 3 J. Law & Econ. 1 (1960).

"Nothing is more central to the study of law and economics nor more responsible for its growth than the Coase Theorem. What the Coase Theorem says, in effect, is that in many instances, the assignment of rights by courts or legal authorities may have little to do with who eventually possesses those rights. In the words of Mark Kelman, 'the market, like an untameable river, will knock out attempts to alter its mighty course.'" Jeffrey L. Harrison, Law and Economics in a Nutshell 56 (1995).

co-assignee. A person who, along with one or more others, is an assignee of the same subject matter.

See HEARSAY.

C.O.D. abbr. 1. Cash on delivery; collect on delivery. • By consenting to this delivery term, the buyer agrees to pay simultaneously with delivery and appoints the carrier as the buyer's agent to receive and transmit the payment to the seller. With C.O.D. contracts, the practice of carriers has traditionally been to disallow inspection before payment. 2. Costs on delivery. 3. Cash on demand. — Sometimes written c.o.d.

CODA. abbr. CASH OR DEFERRED ARRANGEMENT.

code. 1. A complete system of positive law, carefully arranged and officially promulgated; a systematic collection or revision of laws, rules, or regulations <the Uniform Commercial Code>. • Strictly, a code is a compilation not just of existing statutes, but also of much of the unwritten law on a subject, which is newly enacted as a complete system of law. — Also termed consolidated laws.

"A code is not only a collection of the existing statutory law, but also of much of the unwritten law on any subject, and is composed partly of such materials as might be at hand from all sources — from statutes, cases, and from customs — supplemented by such amendments, alterations, and additions as are deemed by the codifiers necessary to harmonize and perfect the existing system. In fact, in making a code, new laws may be added and old laws repealed in order to constitute a complete system." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 18–19 (3d ed. 1914).

2. (usu. cap.) The collection of laws and constitutions made by order of the Roman Emperor Justinian and first authoritatively published in A.D. 529 (with a second edition in 534). • Contained in 12 books, the Code is one of four works that make up what is now called the Corpus Juris Civilis. — Also termed (in sense 2) Legal Code. See CODEX; CORPUS JURIS CIVILIS.

Code Civil. The code embodying the civil law of France, dating from 1804. • It was known from the beginning as the Code Civil, to distinguish it from the other four Codes promoted by Napoleon, but is sometimes called Code Napoléon. In 1870, the official name became Code Civil. Cf. NAPOLEONIC CODE. See CIVIL CODE (2).

coded communications. Messages that are encoded or enciphered by some method of transposition or substitution so that they become unintelligible to anyone who does not have the key to the code or cipher.

Code de commerce (kohd də kaw-mairs). A codification of French commercial law, enacted in 1807, dealing with commercial transactions, bankruptcy, and the jurisdiction and procedure of the courts handling these subjects. • This code supplemented the Code Napoléon. See NAPOLEONIC CODE.

Code de procédure civile (kohd də praw-se-door see-veel). A French civil-procedure code, enacted in 1806 and appended to the Code Napoléon. See NAPOLEONIC CODE.

Code d'instruction criminelle (kohd dan-struuk-see-awn kri-mi-nel). A French criminal-procedure code, enacted in 1811 and appended to the Code Napoléon. See NAPOLEONIC CODE.

codefendant. One of two or more defendants sued in the same litigation or charged with the same crime. — Also termed joint defendant. Cf. COPLAINTIFF.

Code Napoléon (kohd na-poh-lay-awn). See NAPOLEONIC CODE.

Code Noir (kohd nwahr). [French "black code"] Hist. A body of laws issued by Louis XIV and applied in French colonies. • The Code regulated slavery and banned Jews and non-Catholic religious practices from the colonies.

code of conduct. A written set of rules governing the behavior of specified groups, such as lawyers, government employees, or corporate employees.

Code of Federal Regulations. The annual collection of executive-agency regulations published in the daily Federal Register, combined with previously issued regulations that are still in effect. — Abbr. CFR.

Code of Hammurabi (hah-mə-rah-bee or ham-ə-). The oldest known written legal code, produced in Mesopotamia during the rule of Hammurabi (who reigned from 1792 to 1750 B.C.). • The code consisted of nearly 300 provisions, arranged under headings such as family, trade, real property, personal property, and labor.

Code of Justinian. See JUSTINIAN CODE.

Code of Military Justice. The collection of substantive and procedural rules governing the discipline of members of the armed forces. 10 USCA §§ 801 et seq. — Also termed Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ).

Code of Professional Responsibility. See MODEL CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

Code pénal (kohd pay-nal). The fourth of five codes promoted by Napoleon, enacted in 1810, setting forth the penal code of France. See NAPOLEONIC CODE.

code pleading. See PLEADING (2).

code state. Hist. A state that, at a given time, had already procedurally merged law and equity, so that equity was no longer administered as a separate system. • This term was current primarily in the early to mid-20th century.

codex (koh-deks). [Latin] Archaic. 1. A code, esp. the Justinian Code. 2. A book written on paper or parchment; esp., a volume of an ancient text.

Codex Gregorianus (koh-deks gri-gor-ee-ay-nəs). [Latin] Roman law. A collection of imperial constitutions compiled by the Roman jurist Gregorius and published in A.D. 291. — Also termed Gregorian Code.

“The imperial enactments, rapidly increasing in number, covering, at hazard, the whole range of law, and, by reason of difficulties of communication and imperfect methods of promulgation, not always readily ascertainable, created a burden for the practitioner almost as great as that of the unmanageable juristic literature. Something was done to help him by two collections published privately about the end of the third century, the Codex Gregorianus and Codex Hermogenianus. These collections do not now exist: what is known of them is from citations in later literature....” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 20–21 (2d ed. 1953).

Codex Hermogenianus (koh-deks hər-mə-jee-nee-ay-nəs). [Latin] Roman law. A collection of imperial constitutions compiled by the Roman jurist Hermogenianus and published in A.D.

295. • The Codex Hermogenianus supplemented the Codex Gregorianus. — Also termed Hermogenian Code.

Codex Justinianus. See JUSTINIAN CODE.

Codex Repetitae Praelectionis (koh-deks rep-ə-ti-tee pri-lek-shee-oh-nis). [Latin “code of the resumed reading”] Roman law. A revised version of the Justinian Code, published in A.D. 534. • This code is divided into 12 books, and deals with ecclesiastical law, criminal law, administrative law, and private law. — Also termed Codex Iustinianus Repetitae Praelectionis. See JUSTINIAN CODE.

“By the time when the Digest and Institutes had been completed it was obvious that the Codex, published little more than four years earlier, was incomplete, since in the interval Justinian . . . had promulgated other new constitutions. Tribonian, therefore, was appointed to revise the Code, so as to bring it fully up to date, and at the end of the year A.D. 534 this new Code, known as the Codex Repetitae Praelectionis, was promulgated, and is the only Code which survives to the present day. Justinian seem to have laboured under the erroneous impression that the system he had framed would be adequate for all time. But as there is nothing static about law, further legislative enactments, termed Novellae Constitutiones, were issued during his reign. . . . In modern times Justinian’s various compilations came to be called collectively the Corpus Juris Civilis: the Corpus being regarded as a single work, made up of the Institutes, the Digest, the Codex Repetitae Praelectionis, and the Novels.” R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 44 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

Codex Theodosianus (koh-deks thee-ə-doh-shee-ay-nəs). [Latin] Roman law. A compilation of imperial enactments prepared at the direction of the emperor Theodosius and published in A.D. 438. • The Codex Theodosianus replaced all other imperial legislation from the time of Constantine I (A.D. 306–337), and remained the basis of Roman law until it was superseded by the Justinian Code in A.D. 529. — Also termed Theodosian Code.

codicil (kod-ə-səl or -sil). A supplement or addition to a will, not necessarily disposing of the entire estate but modifying, explaining, or otherwise qualifying the will in some way. • When admitted to probate, the codicil becomes a part of the will.

“A Schedule or supplement to a Will, or some other writing; some Writers, conferring a Testament, and a Codicil together, call a Testament a great Will, and a Codicil a little one; and compare a Testament to a Ship, and the Codicil to the Boat tied to the Ship.” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

“A codicil, from codicillus, a small codex, a little book or writing, may be defined as a writing by the testator intended as a supplement or addition to his will, the effect of which may be either to enlarge or restrict it, or to annul or revoke it altogether. It may add to or subtract from provisions of the will, may explain or alter, confirm or revoke them wholly or in part; or, when the will itself is invalid, may by a valid re-execution and republication revive and renew the will." 1 H.C. Underhill, A Treatise on the Law of Wills § 7, at 11 (1900).

codicillus (kod-ə-sil-əs). [Latin "little document"] Roman law. 1. An informal document instructing an heir to carry out a certain performance, usu. the payment of money or the transfer of property to a third person. • During the reign of Augustus (27 B.C.–A.D. 14), directives (fideicommissa) contained in codicilli became legally binding. See FIDEICOMMISSUM. 2. An imperially granted appointment or special privilege.

codification (kod-ə-fi-kay-shən), n. 1. The process of compiling, arranging, and systematizing the laws of a given jurisdiction, or of a discrete branch of the law, into an ordered code. 2. The code that results from this process. — codify (kod-ə-fi), vb. — codifier (kod-ə-fi-ər), n.

codifying statute. See STATUTE.

Coefficient Clause. See NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE.

coemptio (koh-emp-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. A form of civil marriage in which the husband "purchased" from a woman's father — by fictitious sale — the right to exercise marital power (manus) over the woman. • The importance of coemptio as a method of civil marriage had faded by the end of the Republic period. Cf. CONFARREATIO; USUS (2).

coemption (koh-emp-shən), n. 1. The act of purchasing the entire quantity of any commodity. 2. COEMPTIO. — coemptional, coemptive, adj.

coerce (koh-ərs), vb. To compel by force or threat <coerce a confession>.

coerced confession. See CONFESSION.

coercion (koh-ər-shən), n. 1. Compulsion by physical force or threat of physical force. • An act such as signing a will is not legally valid if done under coercion.

criminal coercion. Coercion intended to restrict another's freedom of action by: (1) threatening to commit a criminal act against that person; (2) threatening to accuse that person of having committed a criminal act; (3) threatening to expose a secret that either would subject the victim to hatred, contempt, or ridicule or would impair the victim's credit or goodwill, or (4) taking or withholding official action or causing an official to take or withhold action.

2. Conduct that constitutes the improper use of economic power to compel another to submit to the wishes of one who wields it. — Also termed economic coercion. 3. Hist. A husband's actual or supposed control or influence over his wife's actions. • Under the common-law doctrine of coercion, a wife who committed a crime in her husband's presence was presumed to have been coerced by him and thus had a complete defense. Courts have abolished this doctrine. — coercive, adj. — coercer, n.

"Although as an abstract statement any action or restraint imposed upon one by another may be spoken of as coercion, there has been a tendency in the criminal law to employ the word 'compulsion' for the general field and to reserve the word 'coercion' to indicate the exercise of such influence (actual or presumed) over a married woman by her husband. And since the latter is not merely a specific instance of the former, but is something which differs from it in kind so far as common-law consequences are concerned, there are important reasons for retaining this difference in the meaning to be assigned to these terms." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1018 (3d ed. 1982).

coercive relief. See RELIEF.

coexecutor (koh-eg-zek-yə-tər). See joint executor under EXECUTOR.

coexistence. Int'l law. The peaceful continuation of nations, peoples, or other entities or groups within an effective political-military equilibrium.

cogent (koh-jənt), adj. Compelling or convincing <cogent reasoning>. — cogency, n.

cognate, adj. See COGNATIC.

cognate, n. One who is kin to another. • In Roman law, the term implies that the kinship derives from a lawful marriage. In Scots and later civil law, the term implies kinship from the mother's side. Cf. AGNATE.

cognate nuisance. See NUISANCE.

cognate offense. See OFFENSE (1).

cognati. See COGNATUS.

cognatic (kog-nat-ik), adj. (Of a relationship) existing between cognates. — Also termed cognate.

cognatio (kog-nay-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. The relationship between people having a common ancestor; a blood relationship. Cf. AGNATIO.

cognition (kog-nay-shən), n. 1. Relationship by blood rather than by marriage; relationship arising through common descent from the same man and woman, whether the descent is traced through males or females.

“‘Cognition’ is . . . a relative term, and the degree of connexion in blood which it indicates depends on the particular marriage which is selected as the commencement of the calculation.” Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 122 (17th ed. 1901).

2. Civil law. A relationship existing between two people by blood, by family, or by both.

civil cognition. A relationship arising by law, such as that created by adoption.

mixed cognition. A relationship that combines the ties of blood and family, such as that existing between brothers who are born of the same marriage.

natural cognition. A blood relationship, usu. arising from an illicit connection.

3. Relationship between persons or things of the same or similar nature; likeness.

cognatus (kog-nay-təs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A cognatic relative; a person related to another by a common ancestor. — Also termed cognate. Cf. AGNATUS.

cognitio (kog-nish-ee-oh). [fr. Latin cognoscere “to know”] 1. Hist. The acknowledgment of a fine, or the certificate of such an acknowledgment. 2. Roman law. A judicial examination or hearing of a case by a magistrate or juror. ● Cognitio includes everything that the judicial authority did during the proceedings to establish the facts relevant to the controversy.

cognitionibus mittendis (kog-nish-ee-oh-nə-bəs mi-ten-dis). [Latin “cognizance of pleas to be released”] Hist. A writ ordering a justice of the Common Pleas to certify a fine that the justice had imposed but refused to certify.

cognitive test. Criminal law. A test of the defendant’s ability to know certain things, specifically the nature of his or her conduct and whether the conduct was right or wrong. ● This test is used in assessing whether a defendant may rely on an insanity defense.

cognitor (kog-ni-tor). Roman law. A person formally appointed to represent another in a civil trial. Cf. PROCURATOR (1).

cognizable (kog-ni-zə-bəl), adj. 1. Capable of being known or recognized; esp., capable of being identified as a group because of a common characteristic or interest that cannot be represented by others <American Indians qualify as a cognizable group for jury-selection purposes>. 2. Capable of being judicially tried or examined before a designated tribunal; within the court’s jurisdiction <the tort claims are not cognizable under the consumer-protection statute>.

cognizance (kog-ni-zəns), n. 1. The right and power to try and determine cases; JURISDICTION. 2. The taking of judicial or authoritative notice. 3. Acknowledgment or admission of an alleged fact; esp. (hist.), acknowledgment of a fine. See FINE (1); FINE SUR COGNIZANCE DE DROIT. 4. Common-law pleading. In a replevin action, a plea by the defendant that the goods are held in bailment for another. Cf. AVOWRY.

cognizee (kog-ni-zee). Hist. The grantee of land in a conveyance by fine. — Also termed conu-see; conuzee. See FINE (1). cognizor (kog-ni-zər or -zor). Hist. The grantor of land in a conveyance by fine. — Also termed conusor; conuzor. See FINE (1).

“Next comes the concord, or agreement itself, after leave obtained from the court; which is usually an acknowledgment . . . that the lands in question are the right of the complainant. And from this acknowledgment, or recognition of right, the party levying the fine is called the cognizor, and he to whom it is levied the cognizee.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 350–51 (1766).

cognovit (kog-noh-vit). [Latin “he has conceded (a debt or an action)”] An acknowledgment of debt or liability in the form of a confessed judgment. ● Formerly, credit contracts often included a cognovit clause in which the consumer relinquished, in advance, any right to be notified of court hearings in any suit for non-payment — but such clauses are now generally illegal. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT. Cf. WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

“A cognovit is an instrument signed by a defendant in an action actually commenced confessing the plaintiff’s demand to be just, and empowering the plaintiff to sign judgment against him in default of his paying the plaintiff the sum due to him within the time mentioned in the cognovit." John Indermaur, Principles of the Common Law 8 (Edmund H. Bennett ed., 1st Am. ed. 1878).

cognovit actionem (kog-noh-vit ak-shee-oh-nəm). [Law Latin "he has confessed the action"] A defendant's written acknowledgment of the plaintiff's claim, authorizing the plaintiff to take a judgment for a named sum; a cognovit.

cognovit clause. A contractual provision by which a debtor agrees to jurisdiction in certain courts, waives notice requirements, and authorizes the entry of an adverse judgment in the event of a default or breach. • Cognovit clauses are outlawed or restricted in most states.

cognovit judgment. See JUDGMENT.

cognovit note. A promissory note containing a cognovit clause. — Also termed judgment note.

cohabitation (koh-hab-ə-tay-shən), n. The fact or state of living together, esp. as partners in life, usu. with the suggestion of sexual relations. — cohabit (koh-hab-it), vb. — cohabitative (koh-hab-ə-tay-tiv), adj. — cohabitant (koh-hab-ə-tənt), n.

illicit cohabitation. At common law, the act of a man and a woman openly living together without being married to each other. — Also termed lewd and lascivious cohabitation.

matrimonial cohabitation. The living together of husband and wife.

notorious cohabitation. The act of a man and a woman openly living together under circumstances that make the arrangement illegal under statutes that are now rarely enforced.

cohabitation agreement. A contract outlining the property and financial arrangements between persons who live together. Cf. PRENUPTIAL AGREEMENT.

cohabiting unmarried person of the opposite sex. See CUPOS.

Cohan rule (koh-han). Tax. A former rule that a taxpayer may approximate travel and entertainment expenses where no records exist if the taxpayer has taken all possible steps to provide documentation. • Since 1962, travel and entertainment expenses have been only partly deductible and must be carefully documented, but courts may apply the Cohan reasoning to other items. Cohan v. Commissioner, 39 F.2d 540 (2d Cir. 1930).

coheir (koh-air). One of two or more persons to whom an inheritance descends. See HEIR.

coheiress (koh-air-is). Hist. A female coheir.

Cohen doctrine (koh-ən). See COLLATERAL-ORDER DOCTRINE.

cohort analysis (koh-hort). A method of measuring racial discrimination in the workplace by comparing, at several points in time, the pay and promotions of employees of different races. • Cohort analyses are often used in employment-discrimination cases.

coif (koyf). 1. A white linen headpiece formerly worn by serjeants at law (barristers of high standing) in common-law courts. 2. The rank or order of serjeants-at-law. See ORDER OF THE COIF.

coined term. See fanciful trademark under TRADEMARK.

coinsurance. See INSURANCE.

coinsurance clause. A provision in an insurance policy requiring a property owner to carry separate insurance up to an amount stated in the policy to qualify for full coverage. — Also termed contribution clause.

coinsurer. An insurer who shares losses sustained under an insurance policy. See coinsurance under INSURANCE.

cojudices. Archaic. In England, associate judges.

cold blood. A killer's state of mind when committing a willful and premeditated homicide . See COOL BLOOD. Cf. HEAT OF PASSION.

cold check. See bad check under CHECK.

cold-water ordeal. See ORDEAL.

colegatee. A joint legatee; one of two or more persons who receive a legacy under a will. Cf. LEGATEE.

colibertus (kol-i-bər-təs). [Law Latin] Hist. A serf in free socage; that is, a serf who is nominally freed but is still subject to certain servile conditions. • A colibertus occupied a position in society between servile and free tenants. — Also spelled collibertus. Pl. coliberti. See SO-CAGE.

collapsible corporation. See CORPORATION.

collapsible partnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

collate (kə-layt), vb. Civil law. To return (inherited property) to an estate for division <the grandchildren collated the property they had received>.

collateral (kə-lat-ər-əl), adj. 1. Supplementary; accompanying, but secondary and subordinate to <whether or not the accident victim was wearing a seat belt is a collateral issue>. 2. Not direct in line, but on a parallel or diverging line <my uncle is in my collateral line of descent>. Cf. LINEAL. — collaterality (kə-lat-ər-əl-ə-tee), n.

collateral (kə-lat-ər-əl), n. 1. A person collaterally related to a decedent. 2. Property that is pledged as security against a debt; the property subject to a security interest. See UCC § 9-102(a)(9). — Also termed (in sense 2) collateral security.

as-extracted collateral. 1. Oil, gas, or other minerals that are subject to a security interest that is created by a debtor having an interest in the minerals before extraction and that attaches to the minerals as they are extracted. UCC § 9-102(a)(4)(A). 2. An account arising out of the sale at the wellhead or minehead of oil, gas, or other minerals in which the debtor had an interest before extraction. UCC § 9-102(a)(4)(B).

cash collateral. Collateral consisting of cash, negotiable instruments, documents of title, securities, deposit accounts, or other cash equivalents.

cross-collateral. 1. Security given by all parties to a contract. 2. Bankruptcy. Bargained-for security that protects a creditor's postpetition extension of credit in addition to the creditor's prepetition unsecured claims that, as a result of this security, obtain priority over other creditors' prepetition unsecured claims. • Some courts allow this procedure, which is known as cross-collateralization.

collateral act. Any act (usu. excluding the payment of money) for which a bond or recognizance is given as security.

collateral affinity. See AFFINITY.

collateral ancestor. See collateral ascendant under ASCENDANT.

collateral ascendant. See ASCENDANT.

collateral-benefit rule. See COLLATERAL-SOURCE RULE.

collateral condition. See CONDITION (2).

collateral consanguinity. See CONSANGUINITY.

collateral consequence. A penalty for committing a crime — in addition to the penalties included in the criminal sentence. • An example is the loss of a professional license.

collateral contract. See CONTRACT.

collateral-contract doctrine. The principle that in a dispute concerning a written contract, proof of a second (but oral) agreement will not be excluded under the parol-evidence rule if the oral agreement is independent of and not inconsistent with the written contract, and if the information in the oral agreement would not ordinarily be expected to be included in the written contract.

collateral covenant. See COVENANT (1).

collateral defense. See DEFENSE (1).

collateral descent. See DESCENT.

collateral estoppel (e-stop-əl). An affirmative defense barring a party from relitigating an issue determined against that party in an earlier action, even if the second action differs significantly from the first one. — Also termed issue preclusion; issue estoppel; direct estoppel; estoppel by judgment; estoppel by record; estoppel by verdict; cause-of-action estoppel; estoppel per rem judicatam. Cf. RES JUDICATA.

administrative collateral estoppel. Estoppel that arises from a decision made by an agency acting in a judicial capacity.

defensive collateral estoppel. Estoppel asserted by a defendant to prevent a plaintiff from relitigating an issue previously decided against the plaintiff and for another defendant.

offensive collateral estoppel. Estoppel asserted by a plaintiff to prevent a defendant from relitigating an issue previously decided against the defendant and for another plaintiff.

collateral fact. See FACT.

collateral fraud. See extrinsic fraud (1) under FRAUD.

collateral heir. See HEIR.

collateral-inheritance tax. See TAX.

collateral issue. See ISSUE (1).

collateralize (kə-lat-ər-əl-īz), vb. 1. To serve as collateral for <the purchased property collateralized the loan agreement>. 2. To make (a loan) secure with collateral <the creditor insisted that the loan be collateralized>. — collateralization (kə-lat-ər-əl-ə-zay-shən), n.

collateralized mortgage obligation. Securities. A bond secured by a group of mortgage obligations or pass-through securities and paid according to the payment schedule of its class (or tranche). • CMOs are issued by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, and benefit from predictable payments of interest and principal. — Abbr. CMO. See pass-through security under SECURITY; TRANCHE.

collateral limitation. See LIMITATION.

collateral line. See LINE.

collateral loan. See secured loan under LOAN.

collateral matter. Evidence. Any matter on which evidence could not have been introduced for a relevant purpose. • If a witness has erred in testifying about a detail that is collateral to the relevant facts, then another party cannot call witnesses to contradict that point — cross-examination alone must suffice.

collateral mistake. See unessential mistake under MISTAKE.

collateral mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

collateral negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

collateral-negligence doctrine. The rule holding that one who engages an independent contractor is not liable for physical harm that the contractor causes if (1) the contractor's negligence consists solely of the improper manner in which the contractor's work is performed, (2) the risk of harm created is not normal to the work, and (3) the employer had no reason to contemplate the contractor's negligence when the contract was made.

collateral note. See secured note under NOTE.

collateral obligation. A liability undertaken by a person who becomes bound for another's debt. — Also termed accessorial obligation.

collateral-order doctrine. A doctrine allowing appeal from an interlocutory order that conclusively determines an issue wholly separate from the merits of the action and effectively unreviewable on appeal from a final judgment. — Also termed Cohen doctrine (fr. Cohen v. Beneficial Indus. Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 69 S.Ct. 1221 (1949)). See appealable decision under DECISION.

collateral power. See POWER.

collateral proceeding. See PROCEEDING.

collateral promise. See PROMISE.

collateral relative. See RELATIVE.

collateral security. See SECURITY.

collateral-source rule. Torts. The doctrine that if an injured party receives compensation for its injuries from a source independent of the tortfeasor, the payment should not be deducted from the damages that the tortfeasor must pay. • Insurance proceeds are the most common collateral source. — Also termed collateral-benefit rule.

collateral trust bond. See BOND (3).

collateral trust certificate. See collateral trust bond (1) under BOND (3).

collateral use. See USE (1).

collateral warranty. See WARRANTY (1).

collatio bonorum (kə-lay-shee-oh bə-nor-əm). [Latin “collation of goods”] Civil law. The bringing into hotchpot of goods or money advanced by a parent to a child, so that the parent’s personal estate will be equally distributed among the parent’s children. See HOTCHPOT.

collation (kə-lay-shən), n. 1. The comparison of a copy with its original to ascertain its correctness; the report of the officer who made the comparison. 2. An estimate of the value of advancements made by an intestate to his or her children so that the estate may be divided in accordance with the intestacy statute. 3. Eccles. law. The act (by a bishop) of conferring a benefice where the bishop holds the right of advowson, thus combining the acts of presentation and institution. — Also termed collation to a benefice. See advowson collative under ADVOWSON. — collate (kə-layt), vb. — collator (kə-lay-tər), n.

collatione facta uni post mortem alterius (kə-lay-shee-oh-nee fak-tə yoo-nī pohst mōrtəm al-teer-ee-əs [or awl-]). [Law Latin “collation to a benefice made to one after the death of the other”] Hist. A writ directed to the Court of Common Pleas, requesting that the court order a bishop to appoint a clerk in place of another who had died pending appointment.

collatione heremitagii (kə-lay-shee-oh-nee her-ə-mə-tay-jee-ī). [Law Latin “collation of hermitage”] Hist. A writ by which the Crown conferred the keeping of a hermitage on a clerk.

collation to a benefice. See COLLATION.

collatio signorum (kə-lay-shee-oh sig-nor-əm). [Law Latin “comparison of signs”] Hist. A method of testing a seal’s genuineness by comparing it with another known to be genuine.

collative fact. See investitive fact under FACT.

collectability. The relative ability of a judgment creditor to make a judgment debtor pay the amount of the judgment; the degree to which a judgment can be satisfied through collection efforts against the defendant.

collecting bank. See BANK.

collection. Banking. The process through which an item (such as a check) passes in a payor bank. See payor bank under BANK (1).

collection indorsement. See restrictive indorsement under INDORSEMENT.

collection item. An item (such as a documentary draft) taken by a bank for a customer’s account, but not credited until payment for the item has actually been received. See documentary draft under DRAFT (1).

collective bargaining. Negotiations between an employer and the representatives of organized employees to determine the conditions of employment, such as wages, hours, and fringe benefits. See CONCESSION BARGAINING.

“Collective bargaining means the joint determination by employees and employers of the problems of the employment relationship. Such problems include wage rates and wage systems, hours and overtime, vacations, discipline, work loads, classification of employees, layoffs, and worker retirement. The advent of collective bargaining does not give rise to these problems. Rather they are germane to the industrial relations environment, and exist with or without unionization.” Benjamin J. Taylor & Fred Whitney, Labor Relations Law 3 (1971).

collective-bargaining agreement. Labor law. A contract that is made between an employer and a labor union and that regulates employment conditions. — Also termed collective labor agreement; trade agreement.

collective mark. A trademark or servicemark used by an association, union, or other group either to identify the group’s products or services or to signify membership in the group. ● Collective marks — such as “Realtor” or “American Peanut Farmers” — can be federally registered under the Lanham Act. — Also collective measure. Int'l law. An activity undertaken by more than one country to achieve an agreed-upon end. • The countries involved may undertake a collective measure either in an ad hoc manner or through an institutionalized association.

collective punishment. A penalty inflicted on a group of persons without regard to individual responsibility for the conduct giving rise to the penalty. • Collective punishment was outlawed in 1949 by the Geneva Convention.

collective trademark. See COLLECTIVE MARK.

collective work. Copyright. 1. A publication (such as a periodical issue, anthology, or encyclopedia) in which several contributions, constituting separate and independent works in themselves, are assembled into a copyrightable whole. 2. A selection and arrangement of brief portions of different movies, television shows, or radio shows into a single copyrightable work. • If the selecting and arranging involves any originality, the person who selects and arranges the clips may claim a copyright even if copyright cannot be claimed in the individual component parts. Cf. COMPILATION (1).

"If a work is not joint and not derivative but nevertheless consists of works of authorship created by more than one person, it is a compilation of some sort except for the possibility that it is a work for hire. . . . If the component parts have an independent identity, that is, they are works of authorship, then the compilation is a collective work, a type of compilation." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 374 (2d ed. 1990).

collector of decedent's estate. A person temporarily appointed by a probate court to collect assets and payments due to a decedent's estate, and to settle other financial matters requiring immediate attention. • A collector is often appointed to look after an estate when there is a will contest or a dispute about who should be appointed administrator. The collector's duties end when an administrator is appointed.

collega (kə-lee-gə). [Latin] Roman law. A person invested with joint authority; a colleague or associate. • Collega usu. referred to a member of an association (collegium) or a coheir. See COLLEGIUM.

collegatarius (kə-leg-ə-tair-ee-əs). [Latin] Roman law. A co-legatee.

collegatary (kə-leg-ə-ter-ee). A co-legatee; a person who shares a common legacy with one or more other persons. — Also termed collegatarius (kə-leg-ə-ter-ee-əs).

college. 1. An institution of learning that offers instruction in the liberal arts, humanities, and sciences, but not in the technical arts or in studies preparatory to admission to a profession. 2. An assembly of people, established by law to perform some special function or to promote some common purpose, usu. of an educational, political, ecclesiastical, or scientific nature.

College of Arms. See HERALDS' COLLEGE.

collegium (kə-lee-jee-əm). [Latin] Roman law. An association of at least three people having the right to assemble and enact rules concerning membership, organization, and the rights and duties of members. • Collegia were formed for professional, cultural, charitable, and religious purposes. Pl. collegia.

collegium illicitum (kə-lee-jee-əm i-lis-ətəm). A collegium that either is not sanctioned by law or assembles for some purpose other than that expressed in its charter.

collegium licitum (kə-lee-jee-əm lis-ətəm). An assemblage of people empowered to act as a juristic person in the pursuit of some useful purpose or business.

collobium (kə-loh-bee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. A hood or covering for the shoulders, formerly worn by serjeants-at-law.

colloquium (kə-loh-kwee-əm). 1. The offer of extrinsic evidence to show that an alleged defamatory statement referred to the plaintiff even though it did not explicitly mention the plaintiff. 2. The introductory averments in a plaintiff's pleading setting out all the special circumstances that make the challenged words defamatory. Pl. colloquiums, colloquia. Cf. INDUCEMENT (4); INNUENDO (2).

colloquy (kol-ə-kwee). Any formal discussion, such as an oral exchange between a judge, the prosecutor, the defense counsel, and a criminal defendant in which the judge ascertains the defendant's understanding of the proceedings and of the defendant's rights.

collusion (kə-loo-zhən), n. An agreement to defraud another or to obtain something forbidden by law. • For example, before the no-fault concept in divorce proceedings, a husband and wife might agree to make it appear that one of them had committed an act that was grounds for divorce. — collude, vb. — collusive, adj. — colluder, n.

collusive action. See ACTION.

collusive joinder. See JOINDER.

Collyer doctrine (kol-yər). Labor law. The principle under which the National Labor Relations Board will refer an issue brought before it to arbitration if the issue is arbitrable under the collective-bargaining agreement. Collyer Insulated Wire, 192 NLRB 837 (1971). Cf. SPIELBERG DOCTRINE.

colonial law. 1. Law governing a colony or colonies. 2. The body of law in force in the 13 original U.S. colonies before the Declaration of Independence.

colony, n. Int'l law. 1. A dependent territorial entity subject to the sovereignty of an independent country, but considered part of that country for purposes of relations with third countries. 2. A group of people who live in a new territory but retain ties with their parent country. 3. The territory inhabited by such a group. — colonize, vb. — colonial, adj. Cf. MOTHER COUNTRY.

color, n. 1. Appearance, guise, or semblance; esp., the appearance of a legal claim to a right, authority, or office <color of title> <under color of state law>. 2. Common-law pleading. An apparent, but legally insufficient, ground of action, admitted in a defendant's pleading to exist for the plaintiff; esp., a plaintiff's apparent (and usu. false) right or title to property, the existence of which is pleaded by the defendant as a confession and avoidance to remove the case from the jury by turning the issue from one of fact to one of law. See GIVE COLOR.

"It is a rule of pleading, that no man be allowed to plead specially such a plea as amounts only to the general issue, or a total denial of the charge; but in such case he shall be driven to plead the general issue in terms, whereby the whole question is referred to a jury. But if the defendant, in an assise or action of trespass, be desirous to refer the validity of his title to the court rather than the jury, he may state his title specially, and at the same time give colour to the plaintiff, or suppose him to have an appearance or colour of title, bad indeed in point of law, but of which the jury are not competent judges. As if his own true title be, that he claims by feoffment with livery from A, by force of which he entered on the lands in question, he cannot plead this by itself, as it amounts to no more than the general issue . . . not guilty in an action of trespass. But he may allege this specially, provided he goes farther and says, that the plaintiff claiming by colour of a prior deed of feoffment, without livery, entered; upon whom he entered; and may then refer himself to the judgment of the court which of these two titles is the best in point of law." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 309 (1768).

express color. A feigned matter pleaded by the defendant in an action of trespass, from which the plaintiff seems to have a good claim while in truth the plaintiff has only the appearance of one. • This pleading was abolished by the Common-Law Procedure Act of 1852, 15 & 16 Vict., ch. 76, § 64.

"Express color is a fictitious allegation, not traversable, to give an appearance of right to the plaintiff, and thus enable the defendant to plead specially his own title, which would otherwise amount to the general issue. It is a licensed evasion of the rule against pleading contradictory matter specially." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 202, at 351 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

implied color. An apparent ground of action that arises from the nature of the defense, as when the defense consists of a confession and avoidance in which the defendant admits the facts but denies their legal sufficiency. • This is a quality inherent in all pleadings in confession and avoidance.

colorable, adj. 1. (Of a claim or action) appearing to be true, valid, or right <the pleading did not state a colorable claim>. 2. Intended to deceive; counterfeit <the court found the conveyance of exempt property to be a colorable transfer, and so set it aside>.

colorable alteration. Intellectual property. A modification that effects no real or substantial change, but is made only to distinguish an invention or work from an existing patent or copyright.

colorable claim. See CLAIM (4).

colorable-imitation test. Trademarks. A test for a trademark violation in which a court determines whether an ordinary person who is not allowed to compare the two items side by side could recognize the difference between the two.

colorable transaction. See TRANSACTION.

Colorado River abstention. See ABSTENTION.

color book. Archaic. Int'l law. An official compilation of diplomatic documents and internal papers and reports of a government, the purpose of which is to inform the legislature and the public about foreign policy, esp. during foreign crises. ● Color books reached their height of popularity in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. They are now little used in most countries.

colore officii (kə-lor-ee ə-fish-ee-i). [Latin "by color of office"] See COLOR OF OFFICE.

color of authority. The appearance or presumption of authority sanctioning a public officer's actions. ● The authority derives from the officer's apparent title to the office or from a writ or other apparently valid process the officer bears.

color of law. The appearance or semblance, without the substance, of a legal right. ● The term usu. implies a misuse of power made possible because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of the state. State action is synonymous with color of law in the context of federal civil-rights statutes or criminal law. See STATE ACTION.

color of office. The authority or power that is inherent in an office, esp. a public office. ● Acts taken under the color of an office are vested with, or appear to be vested with, the authority entrusted to that office.

"The starting point in the law of bribery seems to have been when a judge, for doing his office or acting under color of his office, took a reward or fee from some person who had occasion to come before him, — and apparently guilt attached only to the judge himself and not to the bribe-giver." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 527 (3d ed. 1982).

color of title. A written instrument or other evidence that appears to give title, but does not do so. — Also termed apparent title.

com. abbr. 1. COMPANY. 2. COMMONWEALTH.

comaker. One who participates jointly in borrowing money on a promissory note; esp., one who acts as surety under a note if the maker defaults. — Also termed cosigner. Cf. MAKER.

combatant (kəm-bat-ənt or kəm-bə-tənt). Int'l law. A person who participates directly in hostilities. ● "Legitimate" combatants are members of the armed forces or uniformed members of a militia or volunteer corps, under military command and subject to the laws of war.

combination. 1. An alliance of individuals or corporations working together to accomplish a common (usu. economic) goal. See COMBINATION IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE. 2. CONSPIRACY. 3. Patents. A union of elements that may be partly old and partly new. ● The term encompasses not only a combination of mechanical elements but also a combination of substances in a composition claim or steps in a process claim. 4. STRADDLE.

combination in restraint of trade. An express or tacit agreement between two or more persons or entities designed to raise prices, reduce output, or create a monopoly.

combination patent. See PATENT (3).

combustio domorum (kəm-bus-tee-oh də-mor-əm). [Latin "houses burning"] Hist. See HOUSE-BURNING.

comes (koh-meez). [Latin] Hist. 1. A count or earl. 2. A person who is part of a high government official's retinue. Pl. comites. See COMITATUS.

comes and defends. Archaic. Traditionally, the standard commencement of a defendant's plea or demurrer. ● The phrase, now rarely used, announces the defendant's appearance in court and intent to defend against the action.

comes now. Archaic. Traditionally, the standard commencement in pleadings <Comes now the plaintiff, Gilbert Lewis, by and through his attorneys of record, and would show unto the court the following>. ● For a plural subject, the phrase is come now <Come now the plaintiffs, Bob and Louise Smith>. — Also termed now comes. — Sometimes shortened to comes <Comes the State of Tennessee>.

comfort letter. 1. Securities. A letter from a certified public accountant certifying that no false or misleading information has been used in preparing a financial statement accompanying a securities offering. 2. Corporations. A letter, esp. from a parent corporation on behalf of a subsidiary, stating its support (but short of a guarantee) for the activities and commitments of another corporation.

comingle, vb. See COMMINGLE.

coming-to-rest doctrine. Insurance. The principle that coverage of shipped goods ends when the goods are unloaded and any cables or other links to the transporting vehicle have been disconnected. • The coming-to-rest doctrine covers only the movement of goods from the shipping vehicle to a place of rest outside the vehicle, in contrast to the broader coverage of the complete-operation rule. Cf. COMPLETE-OPERATION RULE.

comitas (kom-ə-təs). [Latin "courtesy"] See COMITY.

comitas gentium. See COMITY.

comitatu commissio (kom-ə-tay-t[y]oo kə-mis-oh). [Latin "county commission"] Hist. A writ or commission authorizing a sheriff to take charge of a county.

comitatu et castro commissio (kom-ə-tay-t[y]oo et kas-troh kə-mis-oh). [Latin "county and castle commission"] Hist. A writ authorizing a sheriff to take charge of a county and a castle.

comitatus (kom-ə-tay-təs). [Latin] Hist. 1. A county or shire. 2. The territorial jurisdiction of a count or earl. 3. A county court. 4. The retinue accompanying a prince or high government official.

comites (kom-ə-teez). See COMES.

comites paleys (kom-ə-teez-pa-lays). [Law French] Hist. Counts or earls palatine; those who exercise royal privileges in a county palatine. See COUNTY PALATINE.

comitia (kə-mish-ee-ə). [Latin "assembly"] Roman law. An assembly of the Roman people, gathered together for legislative or judicial purposes.

comitia centuriata (kə-mish-ee-ə sen-tyoor-ee-ay-tə). An assembly of the entire populace, voting by centuries (that is, military units) empowered to elect magistrates and to act as a court of appeal in a capital matter.

comitia curiata (kə-mish-ee-ə kyoor-ee-ay-tə). An assembly of (originally) patricians whose chief function was to authorize private acts of citizens, such as declaring wills and adoptions. • The comitia curiata engaged in little legislative activity.

"[I]n Rome the patrician will, recorded before the Comitia Curiata, was a variety of adoption but disappeared gradually, while the plebeian will, which proved the permanent form, was made by a formal sale, or mancipatio." John Henry Wigmore, Problems of Law 46-47 (1920).

comitia tributa (kə-mish-ee-ə tri-byoo-tə). An assembly of tribes convened to elect lower-ranking officials. • The comitia tributa undertook a great deal of legislative activity in the later Roman republic. Cf. CONCILIUM PLEBIS.

"Of the various popular assemblies the oldest was the Comitia Curiata. This was an assembly of the whole people, or rather of all heads of families, grouped in 30 curiae, the curia being the voting unit. . . . It is doubtful whether this body ever exercised legislative power in the ordinary sense. Important as its functions were, they belong, in the main and apart from formalities, to an age before legislation was thought of as an ordinary method of law reform. The Comitia Centuriata was, in historical times, a much more important body. The centuriate organisation, which was existing, at the latest, soon after the foundation of the Republic, was a grouping of the whole people, patrician and plebeian. . . . [I]t could vote only on propositions submitted by the presiding magistrate . . . in addition a lex of the centuriae required auctoritas patrum, which is commonly supposed to mean approval of the patrician members of the Senate. . . . A third assembly of the whole people was the Comitia Tributa. The voting unit of this body was the tribus, a subdivision, essentially local, of the territory of the State. . . . As in the case of the Comitia Centuriata, the proposal by the presiding magistrate was usually submitted for the previous approval of the Senate, and auctoritas patrum was required." W.W. Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law: From Augustus to Justinian 2-4 (1921).

comity (kom-ə-tee). 1. Courtesy among political entities (as nations, states, or courts of different jurisdictions), involving esp. mutual recognition of legislative, executive, and judicial acts. — Also termed comitas gentium; courtoisie internationale. Cf. ABSTENTION.

"A great deal of misconception about the nature of conflict of laws is due to the loose use of the term 'comity.' The laws of another state or nation, it has been sometimes said, can have no operation in another sovereignty except by comity. In the dictionary definition, comity means 'courtesy between equals; friendly civility.' Such a conception of the matter supposes one sovereign, as a matter of courtesy, allowing the law of another to operate within the territory of the first. If this were true, the determination of when, by comity, recognition would be given to foreign law would not be a predictable matter. . . . Courts use it, often loosely, and in cases correctly decided despite looseness of terms. It is clear that the reference to foreign law in appropriate cases is dependent not upon a mere courtesy which a court may grant or withhold at will, but upon the need to achieve justice among parties to a controversy having foreign contacts." Herbert F. Goodrich & Eugene F. Scoles, Handbook of the Conflict of Laws § 7, at 7-8 (4th ed. 1964).

"The comity principle is most accurately characterized as a golden rule among nations — that each must give the respect to the laws, policies and interests of others that it would have others give to its own in the same or similar circumstances." Thomas Buergenthal & Harold G. Mayer, Public International Law in a Nutshell 178 (2d ed. 1990).

judicial comity. The respect a court of one state or jurisdiction shows to another state or jurisdiction in giving effect to the other's laws and judicial decisions.

2. A rule of law having its origin in courtesy among political entities. 3. INTERNATIONAL LAW. • This sense is considered a misusage: "[I]n Anglo-American jurisprudence, . . . the term is also misleadingly found to be used as a synonym for international law." Peter Macalister-Smith, "Comity," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 672 (1992).

Comity Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution giving citizens of one state the right to all privileges and immunities enjoyed by citizens of the other states. U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 1. See PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES CLAUSE.

command. 1. An order; a directive. 2. In legal positivism, the sovereign's express desire that a person act or refrain from acting a certain way, combined with the threat of punishment for failure to comply.

"Commands are orders backed by threats. It is in virtue of threatened evils, sanctions, that expressions of desire not only constitute commands but also impose an obligation or duty to act in the prescribed ways." Martin P. Golding, Philosophy of Law 26 (1975).

command, vb. To direct authoritatively; to order.

commander-in-chief. 1. One who holds supreme or highest command of armed forces. 2. (cap.) The title of the U.S. President when acting as the constitutionally designated leader of the nation's military. U.S. Const. art. II, § 2.

Commander in Chief Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution appointing the President as supreme commander of the military. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. commandment. Hist. 1. An authoritative order of a judge or magisterial officer. 2. The offense of inducing another to commit a crime.

commencement. See INTRODUCTORY CLAUSE.

commencement of infringement. Copyright. The first of a series of discrete copyright violations, such as the first of many separate sales of infringing items. See INFRINGEMENT.

commenda (kə-men-də). A business association in which one person has responsibility for managing all business property.

commendam (kə-men-dam or -dəm). 1. Eccles. law. A vacant benefice held by a clerk until a regular pastor can be appointed. • Commendams were abolished in 1836. See BENEFICE. 2. PARTNERSHIP IN COMMENDAM.

commendation. Hist. The act of becoming a lord's feudal tenant to receive the lord's protection.

commendator (kəm-ən-day-tər). Eccles. law. A person holding a commendam (a benefice) as a trustee. • Commendators are so called because benefices are commended to their supervision. See COMMENDAM.

commendatus (kəm-ən-day-təs). Hist. A person who, by voluntary oath of homage, was placed under a lord's protection.

comment, n. 1. NOTE (2). 2. An explanatory statement made by the drafters of a particular statute, code section, or rule. — commentator, n.

commentators. See POSTGLOSSATORS.

commenter. One who comments; esp., one who sends comments to an agency about a proposed administrative rule or regulation. See NOTICE-AND-COMMENT PERIOD.

comment on the evidence. A statement made to the jury by the judge or by counsel on the probative value of certain evidence. • Lawyers typically make such comments in closing argument — and judges may make such comments in federal court — but most state-court judges are not permitted to do so when examining a witness, instructing the jury, and the like (in which case the comment is sometimes termed an impermissible comment on the evidence).

comment period. See NOTICE-AND-COMMENT PERIOD.

commerce. The exchange of goods and services, esp. on a large scale involving transportation between cities, states, and nations.

interstate commerce. Trade and other business activities between those located in different states; esp., traffic in goods and travel of people between states. • For purposes of this phrase, most statutory definitions include a territory of the United States as a state. Some statutory definitions of interstate commerce include commerce between a foreign country and a state.

intrastate commerce. Commerce that begins and ends entirely within the borders of a single state.

Commerce Clause. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3, which gives Congress the exclusive power to regulate commerce among the states, with foreign nations, and with Indian tribes.

Dormant Commerce Clause. The constitutional principle that the Commerce Clause prevents state regulation of interstate commercial activity even when Congress has not acted under its Commerce Clause power to regulate that activity. — Also termed Negative Commerce Clause.

Commerce Court. See COURT.

commercias belli (kə-mər-shee-ə bel-1). [Latin “commerce of war”] Commercial dealings or contracts between nations at war, or between the subjects of nations at war, under which arrangements for nonhostile dealings are made.

commercial-activity exception. An exemption from the rule of sovereign immunity, permitting a claim against a foreign state if the claim arises from private acts undertaken by the foreign state, as opposed to the state’s public acts. See RESTRICTIVE PRINCIPLE OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY; JURE GESTIONIS; JURE IMPERII.

commercial agent. 1. BROKER. 2. A consular officer responsible for the commercial interests of his or her country at a foreign port.

commercial impracticability. See IMPRACTICABILITY.

commercial insurance. See INSURANCE.

commercial law. 1. The substantive law dealing with the sale and distribution of goods, the financing of credit transactions on the security of the goods sold, and negotiable instruments. • Most American commercial law is governed by the Uniform Commercial Code. — Also termed mercantile law.

“Although the term commercial law is not a term of art in American law it has become synonymous in recent years with the legal rules contained in the Uniform Commercial Code.” Jonathan A. Eddy & Peter Winship, Commercial Transactions 1 (1985).

2. LAW MERCHANT.

commercial-law notice. See NOTICE.

commercial letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

commercial loan. See LOAN.

commercially reasonable, adj. (Of a property sale) conducted in good faith and in accordance with commonly accepted commercial practice. • Under the UCC, a sale of collateral by a secured party must be done in a commercially reasonable manner, or the sale may be rescinded. UCC § 9-504.

“[Section] 9-504 does impose two requirements upon the reselling creditor: (1) the creditor must send notice; and (2) every aspect of the sale including the method, manner, time, place, and terms must be 'commercially reasonable.' The notice requirement is easy to understand and apply The second condition is both more important and more difficult to define in operational terms. Its importance lies in the fact that the amount of the deficiency judgment will be inversely proportional to the sales price; if the price is high, the amount of the judgment will be low, and vice versa. The 'method, manner, time, place and terms' tests are really proxies for 'insufficient price,' and their importance lies almost exclusively in the extent they protect against an unfairly low price." James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 25-10, at 918 (4th ed. 1995).

commercial name. See TRADENAME.

commercial paper. See PAPER.

commercial partnership. See trading partnership under PARTNERSHIP.

commercial set. The primary documents covering shipment of goods, usu. including an invoice, bill of lading, bill of exchange, and certificate of insurance.

commercial speech. See SPEECH.

commercial surety. See compensated surety under SURETY.

commercial tort claim. A claim arising in tort when the claimant is either (1) an organization, or (2) an individual whose claim arose in the course of the claimant's business or profession, and the claim does not include damages arising out of personal injury or death. UCC § 9-102(a)(10).

commercial-traveler rule. The principle that an accident will be treated as occurring during the course of employment if it was caused by an employee whose job requires travel, and the employee was not on a personal errand. ● The commercial-traveler rule is an exception to the going-and-coming rule.

commercial treaty. See TREATY.

commercial unit. A unit of goods that by commercial usage is a single whole for purposes of lease and whose division materially impairs its character or value in the relevant market or in use. UCC § 2-102(a)(7). ● Under the UCC, "a commercial unit may be a single article, such as a machine; a set of articles, such as a suite of furniture or a line of machinery; a quantity, such as a gross or carload; or any other unit treated in use or in the relevant market as a single whole." Id.

comminatorium (kə-min-ə-tor-ee-əm). [Latin comminari "threaten"] Hist. A clause often included at the end of a writ, admonishing the sheriff to be faithful in the writ's execution.

commingle (kə-ming-gəl), vb. To put together in one mass, as when one mixes separate funds or properties into a common fund. — Also spelled comingle.

commingling (kə-ming-gling), n. A mixing together; esp., a fiduciary's mixing of personal funds with those of a beneficiary or client. ● Commingling is usu. considered a breach of the fiduciary relationship. Under the Model Rules of Professional Conduct, a lawyer is prohibited from commingling personal funds with those of a client. — Also spelled comingling.

commissary (kəm-i-ser-ee), n. 1. A person who is delegated or commissioned to perform some duty, usu. as a representative of a superior. 2. A general store, esp. on a military base; also, a lunchroom. — commissary, adj.

commission, n. 1. A warrant or authority, from the government or a court, that empowers the person named to execute official acts <the student received his commission to the U.S. Navy after graduation>. 2. The authority under which a person transacts business for another <the client gave her attorney express commission to sign the contract>. 3. A body of persons acting under lawful authority to perform certain public services <the Federal Communications Commission>.

commissioner of bail. An officer appointed to take bail bonds.

commissioner of deeds. An officer authorized by a state to take acknowledgments of deeds and other papers while residing in another state. • The acknowledgments are recognized in the state that licensed the commissioner. Cf. NOTARY PUBLIC.

commissioner of highways. A public officer responsible for overseeing the construction, alteration, and repair of highways.

commissioner of woods and forests. Hist. An officer who, by an 1817 Act of Parliament, assumed the jurisdiction of the Chief Justice of the Forest.

county commissioner. A county officer charged usu. with the management of the county's financial affairs, its police regulations, and its corporate business. — Also termed county supervisor.

court commissioner. An officer appointed by the court esp. to hear and report facts, or to conduct judicial sales.

United States Commissioner. Hist. A judicial officer appointed by a U.S. district court to hear a variety of pretrial matters in criminal cases. • Commissioners' duties have been transferred to U.S. Magistrate Judges. Cf. UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE.

commissioner's court. See COURT.

commission government. A type of municipal government in which the legislative power is in the hands of a few people.

commission merchant. See FACTOR.

commission of appraisement and sale. Maritime law. A court order requiring the sale of property in an in-rem admiralty action.

commission of assize. Hist. A royal authorization empowering a person to hold court and try cases arising while the justices in eyre held court elsewhere. Cf. EYRE.

"[B]oth the presentment of crimes and the conduct of trials by assize or jury — which rapidly became a common feature of royal justice — required the presence of twelve or more men from the vicinity where the matter in question occurred. . . . The means of achieving this reconciliation was the frequent issue of commissions to perform judicial functions in the country. . . . [A]ssize commissioners had original jurisdiction to hear a case from beginning to end. . . . But the assizes, though moulded into a regular routine, never became a distinct 'court' in the permanent sense. The jurisdiction of the judges rested entirely on the commissions which issued for each circuit: the judges could therefore be regularly interchanged, and after 1340 it was quite normal for a Common Plea case to be tried at nisi prius by a King's Bench judge, and vice versa." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 67 (3d ed. 1990).

commission of charitable uses. Hist. An authorization issuing out of the Court of Chancery to a bishop or other person authorizing the appointee to investigate allegations of fraud or other disputed matters concerning charitable land grants.

commission of delegates. Hist. A commission appointing a person (usu. a lord, bishop, or judge) to sit with several other appointees to hear an appeal of an ecclesiastical judgment in the Court of Chancery. • This commission was abolished in 1832, and its functions transferred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Commission of Gaol Delivery. Hist. A royal appointment authorizing a judge to go on the assize circuit and hear all criminal cases of those held in county jails. See JAIL DELIVERY. Cf. COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER.

commission of lieutenancy. Hist. A commission issued to send officers into every county to establish military order over the inhabitants. • This commission superseded the former commission of array, which provided the same powers. The commissions became obsolete with the establishment of the militia system.

commission of lunacy. See DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO.

Commission of Oyer and Terminer (oy-ər an[d] tər-mə-nər). [Law French oyer et terminer "to hear and determine"] Hist. A royal appointment authorizing a judge (often a serjeant-at-law) to go on the assize circuit and hear felony and treason cases. Cf. COMMISSION OF GAOL DELIVERY; COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

"[U]nder the commission of Oyer and Terminer, as the judges are directed to inquire as well as to hear and determine the same, they can only proceed upon an indictment found at the same assize, and before themselves; for they must first inquire by means of the grand jury or inquest, before they are empowered to hear and determine by the intervention of the petit jury." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 142 (2d ed. 1826).

commission of partition. An authorization appointing a person to sit with several other appointees for the purpose of dividing land held by tenants in common who desire a partition.

commission of rebellion. Hist. An attaching process that empowered a layperson to arrest and bring a defendant to Chancery to enforce obedience to a writ of subpoena or decree. ● The commission of rebellion was abolished in 1841. — Also termed writ of rebellion; commissio rebellionis; breve rebellionis.

"Commission of rebellion (Commissio rebellionis) is otherwise called a writte of rebellion, (breve rebellionis) and it hath use, when a man after proclamation made by the Shyreve upon an order of the channerie, or court of Starre chamber, under penaltie of his allegiance, to present himselfe to the court by a certaine day, appeareth not. And this commission is directed by way of command to certain persons, to this end, that they . . . apprehend, or cause to be apprehended, the party as a rebell and contemner of the kings lawes." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

commission of review. Hist. In England, an authorization sometimes granted in an extraordinary case to review a judgment of the Court of Delegates. ● The commission of review is no longer used because the Privy Council was substituted for the Court of Delegates as the appellate court in ecclesiastical cases in 1832. See COURT OF DELEGATES.

commission of the peace. Hist. An appointment of a person to keep the peace (i.e., provide police protection) on a local level. ● Over time the recipients of these commissions began to acquire judicial responsibilities, and became known as justices of the peace.

commission of unlivery (ən-liv-ər-ee). Hist. A court order requiring the unloading of goods from a ship so that they may be appraised.

common descriptive name. See GENERIC NAME.

common design. 1. The intention by two or more people to join in committing an unlawful act. 2. An intention to commit more than one crime. 3. The general design or layout of plots of land surrounding a particular tract. — Also termed common scheme; common plan. See ZONING.

common disaster. An event that causes two or more persons with related property interests (such as an insured and the beneficiary) to die at very nearly the same time, with no way to tell who died first. See SIMULTANEOUS-DEATH ACT.

common-disaster clause. A provision in a dispositive instrument, such as an insurance policy or a will, that seeks to cover the situation in which the transferor and transferee die in a common disaster.

common duty of care. A landowner's obligation to take reasonable care under the circumstances to see that a lawful visitor will be reasonably safe in using the premises for the purposes for which the visitor is permitted to be there.

common easement. See EASEMENT.

common elements. See COMMON AREA (2).

common-employment doctrine. See FELLOW-SERVANT RULE.

common-enemy doctrine. Property. The rule that a landowner may repel surface waters as necessary (as during a flood), without having to consider the consequences to upper landowners. ● The doctrine takes its name from the idea that the floodwater is every landowner's common enemy.

common enterprise. See JOINT ENTERPRISE.

commoner. 1. BrE. An ordinary citizen; one not a peer. 2. Archaic. A member of the House of Commons. 3. Archaic. A common lawyer. 4. Archaic. A person having a right of common — that is, a right to pasture on a lord's land. 5. A person who shares a right in common.

common error. Copyright. A mistake found both in a copyrighted work and in an alleged infringing work, the mistake being persuasive evidence of unauthorized copying.

common fine. See FINE (4).

common fishery. See FISHERY (2).

common-fund doctrine. The principle that if a plaintiff or his or her attorney creates, discovers, increases, or preserves a fund to which others also have a claim, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the fund the litigation costs and attorney's fees. — Also termed equitable-fund doctrine.

common heritage of mankind. Int'l law. The parts of the earth and cosmos that can be said to belong to human posterity, without regard for geographic location. ● The term embraces the ocean floor and its subsoil, and outer space. — Also termed common heritage of humankind.

common highway. See HIGHWAY.

common informer. A person who sues to recover a penalty in a penal action. ● In some jurisdictions, such an action may be instituted either by the attorney general on behalf of the state or by a common informer. See INFORMER; penal action under ACTION.

common in gross. See COMMON.

common intendment. See INTENDMENT.

common-interest doctrine. See joint-defense privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

common in the soil. See COMMON.

common jury. See petit jury under JURY.

common knowledge. A fact that is so generally known that a court may accept it as true without proof. See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

common-knowledge exception. The principle that lay testimony concerning routine or simple medical procedures is admissible to establish negligence in a medical-malpractice action. • This is a narrow exception in some jurisdictions to the rule that a medical-malpractice plaintiff must present expert testimony to establish negligence.

common law, n. [fr. Law French commen ley "common law"] 1. The body of law derived from judicial decisions, rather than from statutes or constitutions; CASELAW <federal common law>. Cf. STATUTORY LAW.

"Historically, [the common law] is made quite differently from the Continental code. The code precedes judgments; the common law follows them. The code articulates in chapters, sections, and paragraphs the rules in accordance with which judgments are given. The common law on the other hand is inarticulate until it is expressed in a judgment. Where the code governs, it is the judge's duty to ascertain the law from the words which the code uses. Where the common law governs, the judge, in what is now the forgotten past, decided the case in accordance with morality and custom and later judges followed his decision. They did not do so by construing the words of his judgment. They looked for the reason which had made him decide the case the way he did, the ratio decidendi as it came to be called. Thus it was the principle of the case, not the words, which went into the common law. So historically the common law is much less fettering than a code." Patrick Devlin, The Judge 177 (1979).

federal common law. The judge-made law of federal courts, excluding the law in all cases governed by state law. • An example is the nonstatutory law applying to interstate streams of commerce.

general federal common law. Hist. In the period before Erie v. Tompkins (304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817 (1938)), the judge-made law developed by federal courts in deciding disputes in diversity cases. • Since Erie was announced in 1938, a federal court has been bound to apply, as a general matter, the law of the state in which it sits. Thus, although there is a "federal common law," there is no general federal common law applicable to all disputes heard in federal court.

2. The body of law based on the English legal system, as distinct from a civil-law system <all states except Louisiana have the common law as their legal system>. Cf. CIVIL LAW (1). 3. General law common to the country as a whole, as opposed to special law that has only local application <the issue is whether the common law trumps our jurisdiction's local rules>. — Also termed jus commune.

"In its historical origin the term common law (jus commune) was identical in meaning with the term general law The jus commune was the general law of the land — the lex terrae — as opposed to jus speciale. By a process of historical development, however, the common law has now become, not the entire general law, but only the residue of that law after deducting equity and statute law. It is no longer possible, therefore, to use the expression common law and general law as synonymous." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 97 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"[I]t is necessary to dispose briefly of a problem of nomenclature. European equivalents of the expression 'common law' have been used, especially in Germany, to describe an emergent system of national law, based on the Roman model, that came into existence before national parliaments undertook to enact laws for the nation as a whole. In this use, 'the common law' (gemeines Recht) was used to distinguish the commonly shared tradition of Roman law from local statutes and customs." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 133 (1968).

4. The body of law deriving from law courts as opposed to those sitting in equity . • The common law of England was one of the three main historical sources of English law. The other two were legislation and equity. The common law evolved from custom and was the body of law created by and administered by the king's courts. Equity developed to overcome the occasional rigidity and unfairness of the common law. Originally the king himself granted or denied petitions in equity; later the task fell to the chancellor, and later still to the Court of Chancery. 5. The body of law to which no constitution or statute applies <the common law used by lawyers to settle disputes>.

common-law action. See ACTION.

common-law assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

common-law bond. See BOND (2).

common-law cheat. See CHEATING.

Common Market. The European Economic Community. • Common Market is a colloquial term — not a formal designation.

common mistake. See mutual mistake (2) under MISTAKE.

common money bond. See BOND (2).

common-nucleus-of-operative-fact test. The doctrine that a federal court will have jurisdiction over state-law claims that arise from the same facts as the federal claims providing a basis for subject-matter jurisdiction.

“The modern doctrine of pendent jurisdiction, as announced by the Supreme Court in United Mine Workers v. Gibbs (1966), is much broader.... Pendent jurisdiction, the Court said, existed whenever ‘the state and federal claims ... derive from a common nucleus of operative fact,’ and when considerations of judicial economy dictate having a single trial.” David P. Currie, Federal Jurisdiction in a Nutshell 106 (3d ed. 1990).

common nuisance. See public nuisance under NUISANCE.

Common Pleas, Court of. See COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

common property. See PROPERTY.

common recovery. Hist. An elaborate proceeding, full of legal fictions, by which a tenant in tail disentailed a fee-tail estate. • The action facilitated land transfer by allowing a potential transferee who was barred by law from receiving land to “recover” the land by suing the actual owner. Common recoveries, which were abolished early in the 19th century, were originally concocted by the clergy as a way to avoid the land-conveyance restrictions imposed by mortmain acts. — Also termed feigned recovery. See MORTMAIN STATUTE. Cf. CESSIO IN JURE; PRAECIPE QUOD REDDAT.

“Here’s how [the common recovery] worked. B, with the connivance of A, would bring a real action against A claiming falsely that he, B, owned the land and demanding recovery of it. A responded by claiming, just as falsely, that he had acquired the land from C and that C had warranted title to the land. When A demanded of C, also an accomplice of A, that he defend the title, C admitted falsely that he had, indeed, warranted the title. C allowed B to take a default judgment against A for the recovery of the land, and allowed A to obtain a default judgment against himself, C, for the recovery of land of equal value. The result of this fancy feudal footwork was to leave B with title to the land in fee simple and to leave A with his judgment against C. The judgment against C was viewed by the court as an adequate substitute for the entailed land. But when it came time for O or A's lineal heirs to enforce the judgment, it would transpire that C had been selected by A because he had no land at all! (Why else would C have played along?) Did the court have any suspicion that A, B, and C were colluding? Of course they did — but how else, in the face of De Donis, could they unshackle land from the chains of the fee tail?" Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 31–32 (2d ed. 1984).

common-return days. See dies communes in banco under DIES.

common scheme. See COMMON DESIGN.

common school. See public school under SCHOOL.

common scold. See SCOLD.

common-situs picketing. See PICKETING.

common-source doctrine. The principle that a defendant in a trespass-to-try-title action who claims under a source common to both the defendant and the plaintiff may not demonstrate title in a third source that is paramount to the common source, because doing so amounts to an attack on the source under which the defendant claims title.

common stock. See STOCK.

common-stock equivalent. A security that is exchangeable for common stock, and thus is considered to be the same as common stock. ● Common-stock equivalents include certain types of convertible securities, stock options, and warrants.

common-stock fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

common-stock ratio. The relationship of outstanding common stock to the corporation's total capitalization. ● The common-stock ratio measures the relative claims of stockholders to earnings (earnings per share and payout ratio), cash flow (cash flow per share), and equity (book value per share). Cf. PAYOUT RATIO.

common substitution. See SUBSTITUTION (3).

common suit. See common plea under PLEA (2).

common tenancy. See tenancy in common under TENANCY.

commonweal (kom-ən-weel). The general welfare; the common good.

commonwealth. 1. A nation, state, or other political unit <the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania>. 2. A political unit that has local autonomy but is voluntarily united with the United States <Puerto Rico and the Northern Mariana Islands are commonwealths>. Cf. DEPENDENCY; TERRITORY. 3. A loose association of countries that recognize one sovereign <the British Commonwealth>. ● In this context, in Great Britain, the term British has been dropped from British Commonwealth; BrE speakers refer simply to the Commonwealth. — Abbr. Commw.; comm. 4. The central (federal) power in Australia. — Abbr. (in sense 4) Cwth.

commorancy (kom-ə-rən-see). 1. A temporary residency. 2. English law. Permanent residency in a certain place.

commorant (kom-ə-rənt). 1. A person who dwells in a place temporarily. 2. English law. A person who resides permanently in a certain place.

commorientes (kə-mor-ee-en-teez). [fr. Latin commorior "to die together"] 1. Persons who die at the same time, such as spouses who die in an accident. 2. Civil law. The rule of succession regarding such persons. See simultaneous death under DEATH; SIMULTANEOUS-DEATH ACT.

commune (kom-yoon), n. A community of people who share property.

commune forum (kə-myoo-nee-for-əm). [Latin "common place of justice"] Hist. The seat of the principal English courts, esp. those that do not go on circuit.

commune placitum (kə-myoo-nee plas-ə-təm). [Latin "common plea"] Hist. A common plea between persons, as opposed to a plea of the Crown (i.e., a criminal action). Pl. communia placita.

commune vinculum (kə-myoo-nee ving-kyə-ləm). [Latin "common bond"] Hist. A relationship or link between persons; esp., the bond between lord and tenant, or the relationship between relatives.

communia (kə-myoo-nee-ə). [Latin] Hist. Things owned in common, such as running water, the air, and the sea.

communia placita non tenenda in scaccario (kə-myoo-nee-ə plas-ə-tə non tə-nen-də in skə-kair-ee-oh). [Law Latin "common pleas are not held in the Exchequer"] Hist. A writ directed to the Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer, forbidding them from holding pleas between common persons, i.e., pleas in which the Crown was not a party.

communication. 1. The expression or exchange of information by speech, writing, or gestures. 2. The information so expressed or exchanged.

conditionally privileged communication. A defamatory statement made in good faith by a person with an interest in a subject to someone who also has an interest in the subject, as an employer giving a poor but accurate job review of a former employee to a potential future employer. • The privilege may be lost on a showing of malice or bad faith.

confidential communication. A communication made within a certain protected relationship — such as husband-wife, attorney-client, or priest-penitent — and legally protected from forced disclosure.

privileged communication. A communication that is protected by law from forced disclosure. See PRIVILEGE (3). communicative evidence. See testimonial evidence under EVIDENCE.

communi consensu (kə-myoo-ni kən-sen-s[y]oo). [Latin] By common consent.

communi dividundo. See DE COMMUNI DIVIDUNDO.

communio bonorum (kə-myoo-nee-oh bə-nor-əm). [Latin "community of goods"] Civil law.

Commonly owned goods, esp. those held in common by a husband and wife.

communis opinio (kə-myoo-nis ə-pin-ee-oh). [Latin "common opinion"] Hist. A generally accepted belief about a point of law. • If held unanimously by those learned in the law, this common belief had the force of law in classical Rome.

"Communis opinio is evidence of what the law is, — not where it is an opinion merely speculative and theoretical, floating in the minds of persons, but where it has been made the ground-work and substratum of practice." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 330 (2d ed. 1867) (quoting Lord Ellenborough).

communis opinio doctorum (kə-myoo-nis ə-pin-ee-oh dok-tor-əm). [Latin "learned common opinion"] Hist. Scholarly agreement on points of Roman law, collected by the glossators of Justinian's texts in the later Middle Ages.

communis paries (kə-myoo-nis par-ee-eez). [Latin "common wall"] Civil law. See PARTY WALL.

communis scriptura (kə-myoo-nis skrip-t[y]oor-əkəm-myoo-nəs-skrip-tyuur-ə). [Latin "common writing"] Hist. See CHIROGRAPH.

communitization (kə-myoo-nə-tə-zay-shən), n. Oil & gas. The aggregating of small tracts sufficient for the granting of a well permit under applicable well-spacing rules. — Also termed pooling. — communitize (kə-myoo-nə-tiz), vb. Cf. UNITIZATION.

community. 1. A neighborhood, vicinity, or locality. 2. A society or group of people with similar rights or interests. 3. A collection of common interests that arise from an association.

community account. See ACCOUNT.

community debt. See DEBT.

community lease. See LEASE.

community of interest. 1. Participation in a joint venture characterized by shared liability and shared opportunity for profit. See JOINT VENTURE. 2. A common grievance that must be shared by all class members to maintain the class action. See CLASS ACTION. 3. Labor law. A criterion used by the National Labor Relations Board in deciding whether a group of employees should be allowed to act as a bargaining unit. • The Board considers whether the employees have similar duties, wages, hours, benefits, skills, training, supervision, and working conditions. See BARGAINING UNIT.

community property. Property owned in common by husband and wife as a result of its having been acquired during the marriage by means other than an inheritance or a gift to one spouse, each spouse holding a one-half interest in the property. • Only nine states have community-property systems: Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin. See marital property under PROPERTY. Cf. SEPARATE PROPERTY.

community-property state. A state in which spouses hold property that is acquired during marriage (other than property acquired by inheritance or individual gift) as community property. See COMMUNITY PROPERTY. Cf. COMMON-LAW STATE.

community trust. An agency organized to permanently administer funds placed in trust for public-health, educational, and charitable purposes.

commutation (kom-yə-tay-shən), n. 1. An exchange or replacement. 2. Criminal law. The executive's substitution in a particular case of a less severe punishment for a more severe one that has already been judicially imposed on the defendant. Cf. PARDON; REPRIEVE. 3. Commercial & civil law. The substitution of one form of payment for the other. — commute, vb. — commutative, adj.

commutation of taxes. A tax exemption resulting from a taxpayer's paying either a lump sum or a specific sum in lieu of an ad valorem tax.

commutative contract. See CONTRACT.

commutative justice. See JUSTICE (1).

commuted value (kə-myoo-tid). 1. In the assessment of damages, the present value of a future interest in property. 2. The value of future payments when discounted to present value.

Commw. abbr. COMMONWEALTH.

compact (kom-pakt), n. An agreement or covenant between two or more parties, esp. between governments or states.

interstate compact. A voluntary agreement between states enacted into law in the participating states upon federal congressional approval. Cf. INTERSTATE AGREEMENT.

Compact Clause. U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3, which disallows a state from entering into a contract with another state or a foreign country without congressional approval.

companionship services. Assistance provided to someone who needs help with personal matters such as bathing and dressing. • This type of service (in contrast to housecleaning) is exempt from the Federal Labor Standards Act's minimum-wage and overtime requirements.

company. A corporation — or, less commonly, an association, partnership, or union — that carries on a commercial or industrial enterprise; a corporation, partnership, association, joint-stock company, trust, fund, or organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not, and (in an official capacity) any receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, or similar official, or liquidating agent, for any of the foregoing. Investment Company Act § 2(a)(8) (15 USCA § 80a-2(a)(8)). — Abbr. co.; com.

bonding company. A company that insures a party against a loss caused by a third party.

controlled company. A company that is under the control of an individual, group, or corporation that owns most of the company's voting stock. Cf. subsidiary corporation under CORPORATION.

dead-and-buried company. A business that has dissolved, leaving no assets.

deposit company. An institution whose business is the safekeeping of securities or other valuables deposited in boxes or safes leased to the depositors. See DEPOSITARY; DEPOSITORY.

development-stage company. Securities. A company that devotes substantially all of its efforts to establishing a new business in which the principal operations either have not yet begun or have begun but without significant revenue.

diversified holding company. A holding company that controls several unrelated companies or businesses.

diversified investment company. An investment company that by law must invest 75% of its assets, but may not invest more than 5% of its assets in any one company or hold more than 10% of the voting shares in any one company.

face-amount certificate company. An investment company that is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face-amount certificates of the installment type, or that has been engaged in this business and has such a certificate outstanding. See investment company.

growth company. A company whose earnings have increased at a rapid pace and that usu. directs a high proportion of income back into the business.

guaranty company. See surety company.

holding company. A company formed to control other companies, usu. confining its role to owning stock and supervising management.

investment company. A company formed to acquire and manage a portfolio of diverse assets by investing money collected from different sources. • The Investment Company Act of 1940 defines the term as an issuer of securities that (1) is, holds itself out to be, or proposes to be engaged primarily in the business of investing, reinvesting, or trading in securities; (2) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of issuing face-amount certificates of the installment type, or has been engaged in this business and has such a certificate outstanding; or (3) is engaged or proposes to engage in the business of investing, reinvesting, owning, holding, or trading in securities, and owns or proposes to acquire investment securities having a value exceeding 40% of the value of the issuer's total assets (exclusive of government securities and cash items) on an unconsolidated basis. 15 USCA § 80a-2(a)(16). — Also termed investment trust. See REAL-ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUST; MUTUAL FUND.

joint-stock company. 1. An unincorporated association of individuals possessing common capital, the capital being contributed by the members and divided into shares, of which each member possesses a number of shares proportionate to the member's investment. 2. A partnership in which the capital is divided into shares that are transferable without the express consent of the partners. — Also termed joint-stock association; stock association.

"The joint stock association or company developed early in English company law, the term being used to distinguish companies which operated on a joint account and with a 'joint stock' (in trade) of their members from companies (now obsolete) each member of whom traded on one's separate account with one's own stock in trade. . . . In American jurisdictions, the joint stock association is generally an unincorporated business enterprise with ownership interests represented by shares of stock." Henry G. Henn & John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations § 50, at 109 (3d ed. 1983).

limited company. A company in which the liability of each shareholder is limited to the amount individually invested. • A corporation is the most common example of a limited company.

limited-liability company. A company — statutorily authorized in certain states — that is characterized by limited liability, management by members or managers, and limitations on ownership transfer. — Abbr. L.L.C. — Also termed limited-liability corporation.

management company. Any investment company that is neither a face-amount certificate company nor a unit-investment trust. See investment company; face-amount certificate company; unit-investment trust under TRUST.

mutual company. A company that is owned by its customers rather than by a separate group of stockholders. • Many insurance companies are mutual companies, as are many federal savings-and-loan associations. See MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

personal holding company. A holding company that is subject to special taxes and that usu. has a limited number of shareholders, with most of its revenue originating from passive income such as dividends, interest, rent, and royalties.

reporting company. See REPORTING COMPANY.

surety company. A company authorized to engage in the business of entering into guaranty and suretyship contracts and acting as a surety on bonds, esp. bail, fidelity, and judicial bonds. — Also termed guaranty company.

title company. A company that examines real-estate titles for any encumbrances, claims, or other flaws, and issues title insurance. — Also termed title-guaranty company. See TITLE SEARCH.

trust company. A company that acts as a trustee for people and entities and that sometimes also operates as a commercial bank. See TITLE.

company union. See UNION.

comparable (kɒm-pər-ə-bəl), n. (usu. pl.) A piece of property used as a comparison to determine the value of a similar piece of property.

comparable accommodation. A standard used for determining the maximum allowable rent in rent-regulated housing. • In applying this standard, a court reviews the prevailing rent for substantially similar housing units in the same area.

comparable worth. 1. The analogous value that two or more employees bring to a business through their work. 2. The idea that employees who perform identical work should receive identical pay, regardless of their sex; the doctrine that men and women who perform work of equal value should receive comparable pay.

comparatio litterarum (kɒm-pə-ray-shee-oh lit-ə-rair-əm). [Latin “comparison of writings”] Roman law. The act of comparing writings to ascertain authorship. • Even under Roman law, handwriting experts (comparatores) sometimes testified about a document’s authenticity.

comparative advertising. See ADVERTISING.

comparative disparity. Constitutional law. The percentage of underrepresentation of a particular group among potential jurors on a venire, in comparison with the group’s percentage of the general population. • Comparative disparity is calculated by subtracting a group’s percentage of representation on the venire from the group’s percentage of the population — that is, calculating the group’s absolute-disparity representation — then dividing that percentage by the group’s percentage-representation in the population, and multiplying the result by 100. For example, if African-Americans make up 12% of a county’s population, and 8% of the potential jurors on the venire, the absolute disparity of African-Americans is 4%. And the comparative disparity is 33%, because 4 divided by 12 is .33, or 33%. Many courts criticize the comparative-disparity analysis, and favor an absolute-disparity analysis, because the comparative-disparity analysis is said to exaggerate the deviation. The reason for calculating the disparity is to analyze a claim that the jury was not impartial because it was not selected from a pool of jurors that fairly represented the makeup of the jurisdiction. See DUREN TEST; FAIR-CROSS-SECTION REQUIREMENT; STATISTICAL-DECISION THEORY. Cf. ABSOLUTE DISPARITY.

comparative fault. See comparative negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

comparative-impairment test. Conflict of laws. A test that asks which of two or more forums would have its policies most impaired by not having its law applied in the case.

comparative interpretation. A method of statutory interpretation by which parts of the statute are compared to each other, and the statute as a whole is compared to other documents from the same source on a similar subject.

comparative jurisprudence. See JURISPRUDENCE.

comparative law. See comparative jurisprudence under JURISPRUDENCE.

comparative negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

comparative-negligence doctrine. Torts. The principle that reduces a plaintiff’s recovery proportionally to the plaintiff’s degree of fault in causing the damage, rather than barring recovery completely. • Most states have statutorily adopted the comparative-negligence doctrine. See NEGLIGENCE. Cf. CONTRIBUTORY-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE.

comparative-rectitude doctrine. Family law. Before the advent of no-fault divorce, the rule providing that when both spouses show grounds for divorce, the party least at fault is granted the requested relief.

comparative-sales approach. See MARKET APPROACH.

comparator (kəm-pər-ə-tər or kɒm-pə-ray-tər). Something with which something else is compared <the female plaintiffs alleged illegal wage discrimination and contrasted their pay with that of male comparators>.

compassing (kəm-pə-sing). Hist. The act of contriving or plotting, esp. of something underhanded. • The Treason Act of 1351 criminalized the act of compassing the sovereign’s death.

compel, vb. 1. To cause or bring about by force or overwhelming pressure . 2. (Of a legislative mandate or judicial precedent) to convince (a court) that there is only one possible resolution of a legal dispute <the wording of the statute compels us to affirm>.

compellable, adj. Capable of or subject to being compelled, esp. to testify <an accused person's spouse is not a compellable witness for the prosecution>.

compellativus (kəm-pel-ə-ti-vəs). [fr. Latin compellare "to accuse"] Hist. An adversary or accuser.

compelling-state-interest test. Constitutional law. A method for determining the constitutional validity of a law, whereby the government's interest in the law is balanced against the individual's constitutional right to be free of the law, and only if the government's interest is strong enough will the law be upheld. ● The compelling-state-interest test is used most commonly in equal-protection analysis when the disputed law requires strict scrutiny. See STRICT SCRUTINY.

compensable (kəm-pen-sə-bəl), adj. Able or entitled to be compensated for . — Also termed recompensable.

compensable death. Workers' compensation. A death that, because it occurred in the course of employment, entitles the employee's heirs to compensation.

compensable injury. See INJURY.

compensate (kəm-pən-sayt), vb. 1. To pay (another) for services rendered <the lawyer was fairly compensated for her time and effort>. 2. To make an amendatory payment to; to recompense (for an injury) <the court ordered the defendant to compensate the injured plaintiff>.

compensated surety. See SURETY.

compensating balance. The amount of money a borrower from a bank is required to keep on deposit as a condition for a loan or a line of credit.

compensatio (kəm-pen-say-shee-oh). [Latin "weighing; balancing"] Roman law. A defendant's claim to have the plaintiff's demand reduced by the amount that the plaintiff owes the defendant. See SETOFF (2).

compensatio criminis (kəm-pen-say-shee-oh krim-ə-nis). [Latin] Eccles. law. A defendant's plea in a divorce action, alleging that the complainant is guilty of the same conduct that the defendant is charged with, esp. adultery. See RECRIMINATION.

compensation (kəm-pən-say-shən), n. 1. Remuneration and other benefits received in return for services rendered; esp., salary or wages.

"Compensation consists of wages and benefits in return for services. It is payment for work. If the work contracted for is not done, there is no obligation to pay. [Compensation] includes wages, stock option plans, profit-sharing, commissions, bonuses, golden parachutes, vacation, sick pay, medical benefits, disability, leaves of absence, and expense reimbursement." Kurt H. Decker & H. Thomas Felix II, Drafting and Revising Employment Contracts § 3.17, at 68 (1991).

2. Payment of damages, or any other act that a court orders to be done by a person who has caused injury to another and must therefore make the other whole. 3. See SETOFF (2). — compensatory (kəm-pen-sə-tor-ee), compensational (kəm-pən-say-shə-nəl), adj.

accrued compensation. Remuneration that has been earned but not yet paid.

adequate compensation. See just compensation.

deferred compensation. 1. Payment for work performed, to be paid in the future or when some future event occurs. 2. An employee's earnings that are taxed when received or distributed and not when earned, such as contributions to a qualified pension or profit-sharing plan.

just compensation. Under the Fifth Amendment, a fair payment by the government for property it has taken under eminent domain — usu. the property's fair market value, so that the owner is no worse off after the taking. — Also termed adequate compensation; due compensation; land damages.

unemployment compensation. Compensation paid at regular intervals by a state agency to an unemployed person, esp. one who has been laid off.

unreasonable compensation. Under the Internal Revenue Code, pay that is out of proportion to the actual services rendered and is therefore not deductible.

compensation period. The time fixed by unemployment or workers'-compensation law during which an unemployed or injured worker is entitled to receive compensation.

compensatory damages. See DAMAGES.

compensatory time. See COMP TIME.

comperendinatio (kom-pər-en-də-nay-shee-oh). [Latin “to remand to the next day but one”] Roman law. An adjournment of an action to hear the parties or their advocates a second time; a second hearing of the parties to a case. ● The judge (judex) would decide the case at the conclusion of the second hearing.

competence, n. 1. A basic or minimal ability to do something; qualification, esp. to testify <competence of a witness>. 2. The capacity of an official body to do something <the court’s competence to enter a valid judgment>. 3. Authenticity <the documents were supported by a business-records affidavit, leaving their competence as evidence beyond doubt>. — competent, adj. Cf. COMPETENCY.

competency, n. 1. The mental ability to understand problems and make decisions. 2. A criminal defendant’s ability to stand trial, measured by the capacity to understand the proceedings, to consult meaningfully with counsel, and to assist in the defense. — Also termed competency to stand trial. — competent, adj. Cf. COMPETENCE.

competency hearing. See PATE HEARING.

competency proceeding. See PROCEEDING.

competency to stand trial. See COMPETENCY.

competent evidence. See EVIDENCE.

competent witness. See WITNESS.

competition. The effort or action of two or more commercial interests to obtain the same business from third parties.

fair competition. Open, equitable, and just competition between business competitors.

horizontal competition. Competition between a seller and its competitors. ● The Sherman Act prohibits unreasonable restraints on horizontal competition, such as price-fixing agreements between competitors. — Also termed primary-line competition.

perfect competition. A completely efficient market situation characterized by numerous buyers and sellers, a homogeneous product, perfect information for all parties, and complete freedom to move in and out of the market. ● Perfect competition rarely if ever exists, but antitrust scholars often use the theory as a standard for measuring market performance.

primary-line competition. See horizontal competition.

vertical competition. Competition between participants at different levels of distribution, such as manufacturer and distributor. — Also termed secondary-line competition.

competitive advertising. See ADVERTISING.

competitive bid. See BID (2).

competitive civil-service examination. A test designed to evaluate a person’s qualifications for a civil-service position. ● This type of examination may be open to all those seeking civil-service employment, or it may be restricted to those civil servants seeking a promotion. See CIVIL SERVICE.

compilation (kom-pə-lay-shən), n. 1. Copyright. A collection of literary works arranged in an original way; esp., a work formed by collecting and assembling preexisting materials or data that are selected, coordinated, or arranged in such a way that the resulting product constitutes an original work of authorship. Cf. COLLECTIVE WORK; DERIVATIVE WORK.

“A compilation consists of an original work of authorship that incorporates other pre-existing material. . . . The author who finally assembles the components into a compilation is the owner of the copyright of the compilation — but not of the component parts.” Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 374–75 (2d ed. 1990).

2. A collection of statutes, updated and arranged to facilitate their use. — Also termed compiled statutes. 3. A financial statement that does not have an accountant’s assurance of conformity with generally accepted accounting principles. ● In preparing a compilation, an accountant does not gather evidence or verify the accuracy of the information provided by the client; rather, the accountant reviews the compiled reports to ensure that they are in the appropriate form and are free of obvious errors. — compile, vb.

compiled statutes. See COMPILATION (2); STATUTE.

complainant (kəm-playn-ənt). 1. The party who brings a legal complaint against another; esp., the plaintiff in a civil suit.

“A suit in equity, under the procedure of the English Court of Chancery, which was generally adopted in the American States prior to the code, is instituted by the plaintiff filing a bill of complaint. The plaintiff is usually called the complainant, in the Federal courts the complainant or plaintiff indifferently. The bill is in substance a petition to the chancellor, or judge of the court of equity, setting forth at large the grounds of the suit, and praying the process of the court, its subpoena, to bring the defendant into court and compel him to answer the plaintiff's bill, and, also, for such relief by decree or interlocutory remedy, by way of injunction, etc., as the plaintiff supposes himself entitled to." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 55 (2d ed. 1899).

complaint. 1. The initial pleading that starts a civil action and states the basis for the court's jurisdiction, the basis for the plaintiff's claim, and the demand for relief. • In some states, this pleading is called a petition. 2. Criminal law. A formal charge accusing a person of an offense. Cf. INDICTMENT; INFORMATION.

amended complaint. A complaint that modifies and replaces the original complaint by adding relevant matters that occurred before or at the time the action began. • In some circumstances, a party must obtain the court's permission to amend its complaint.

preliminary complaint. A complaint issued by a court to obtain jurisdiction over a criminal suspect for a hearing on probable cause or on whether to bind the suspect over for trial.

supplemental complaint. An additional complaint that either corrects a defect in the original complaint or adds relevant matters that occurred after the action began. • Generally, a party must obtain the court's permission to file a supplemental complaint.

third-party complaint. A complaint filed by the defendant against a third party, alleging that the third party may be liable for some or all of the damages that the plaintiff is trying to recover from the defendant.

well-pleaded complaint. An original or initial pleading that sufficiently sets forth a claim for relief — by including the grounds for the court's jurisdiction, the basis for the relief claimed, and a demand for judgment — so that a defendant may draft an answer that is responsive to the issues presented. • A well-pleaded complaint must raise a controlling issue of federal law for a federal court to have federal-question jurisdiction over the lawsuit.

completed-contract accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

completed gift. See GIFT.

complete diversity. See DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP.

completed-operations policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

complete in itself, adj. (Of a legislative act) fully covering an entire subject.

complete integration. See INTEGRATION (2).

complete interdiction. See full interdiction under INTERDICTION (2).

completely integrated contract. See INTEGRATED CONTRACT.

completeness doctrine. See RULE OF OPTIONAL COMPLETENESS.

complete-operation rule. Insurance. The principle that goods are covered against damage at any time during the shipping process, including the loading and unloading of the goods. Cf. COMING-TO-REST DOCTRINE.

complete-preemption doctrine. The rule that a federal statute's preemptive force may be so extraordinary and all-encompassing that it converts an ordinary state-common-law complaint into one stating a federal claim for purposes of the well-pleaded-complaint rule.

complete voluntary trust. See executed trust under TRUST.

completion bond. See PERFORMANCE BOND.

complex trust. See TRUST.

complicated larceny. See mixed larceny under LARCENY.

complice (kom-plis). Archaic. An accomplice or accessory to a crime or immoral behavior.

complicity (kəm-plis-ə-tee), n. Association or participation in a criminal act; the act or state of being an accomplice. — complicitous (kəm-plis-ə-təs), *adj. See ACCOMPLICE.

composite state. See STATE (1).

composite work (kəm-poz-it). Copyright. An original publication that relates to a variety of subjects and that includes discrete selections from many authors. • Although the distinguishable parts are separately protectable, the owner of the work — not the author — owns the renewal term, if any. 17 USCA § 304(a).

composition, n. 1. An agreement between a debtor and two or more creditors for the adjustment or discharge of an obligation for some lesser amount; an agreement among the debtor and two or more creditors that the debtor will pay the creditors less than their full claims in full satisfaction of their claims. • The preexisting-duty rule is not a defense to this type of agreement because consideration arises from the agreement by each creditor with each other to take less than full payment. Through this agreement, the debtor is discharged in full for the debts of the participating creditors. — Also termed creditors' composition; attermoiement. 2. The compensation paid as part of such an agreement. 3. Hist. A payment of money or chattels as satisfaction for an injury. • In Anglo-Saxon and other early societies, a composition with the injured party was recognized as a way to deter acts of revenge by the injured party. — compose, vb.

composition deed. See DEED.

composition of matter. Patents. A patentable compound of material composed of two or more different substances; a product containing two or more substances, including all composite articles, whether resulting from chemical union or from mechanical mixture, and whether the substances are gases, fluids, powders, or solids.

"[A] composition of matter describes what most people imagine to be the goal of the typical laboratory inventor, since it is usually a new chemical invention, although it can be any composition of materials, not limited solely to chemicals." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 21 (2d ed. 1990).

compos mentis (kom-pəs men-tis), adj. [Latin "master of one's mind"] Of sound mind; having use and control over one's own mental faculties. Cf. NON COMPOS MENTIS.

compossessio (kom-pə-zes[h]-ee-oh). [Latin] Civil law. Possession by two or more persons of the same thing in common.

compos sui (kom-pəs s[y]oo-i), adj. [Latin "master of one's self"] (Of a person) having control over one's own limbs, or the power of bodily motion.

compound (kom- or kəm-pownd), vb. 1. To put together, combine, or construct. 2. To compute (interest) on the principal and the accrued interest. 3. To settle (a matter, esp. a debt) by a money payment, in lieu of other liability; to adjust by agreement. 4. To agree for consideration not to prosecute (a crime). • Compounding a felony in this way is itself a felony. 5. Loosely, to aggravate; to make (a crime, etc.) more serious by further bad conduct.

compounder (kom- or kəm-pownd-dər). 1. One who settles a dispute; the maker of a composition. — Also termed amicable compounder. See COMPOSITION (1). 2. One who knows of a crime by another and agrees, for a promised or received reward, not to prosecute.

compounding a crime. The offense of either agreeing not to prosecute a crime that one knows has been committed or agreeing to hamper the prosecution. — Also termed theft-bote.

"If a prosecuting attorney should accept money from another to induce the officer to prevent the finding of an indictment against that person this would be compounding a crime if the officer knew the other was guilty of an offense, but would be bribery whether he had such knowledge or not." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 539 (3d ed. 1982).

compound interest. See INTEREST (3).

compound journal entry. See ENTRY (2).

compound larceny. See mixed larceny under LARCENY.

comprehensive general liability policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

comprehensive insurance. See INSURANCE.

comprehensive nonliteral similarity. See SUBSTANTIAL SIMILARITY.

comprehensive zoning plan. A general plan to control and direct the use and development of a large piece of property. See ZONING.

comprint (kom-print). A surreptitious and illegal printing of another bookseller's copy of a work. See INFRINGEMENT.

compromis (kom-prə-mee). [French] Int'l law. An agreement between two or more countries to submit an existing dispute to the jurisdiction of an arbitrator, an arbitral tribunal, or an international court.

ad hoc compromis (ad hok kom-prə-mee). An agreement in which countries submit a particular dispute that has arisen between them to an ad hoc or institutionalized arbitral tribunal or to an international court. — Also termed compromis proper; special agreement.

general compromis. An agreement in which countries submit all or a definite class of disputes that may arise between them to an arbitral institution, a court, or an ad hoc arbitral tribunal by concluding a general arbitration treaty or by including an arbitration clause in a treaty. — Also termed abstract compromis; anticipated compromis.

compromise verdict. See VERDICT.

compromis proper. See ad hoc compromis under COMPROMIS.

compromissarius (kom-prə-mi-sair-ee-əs). [Latin] Roman law. See ARBITRATOR.

compromissum (kom-prə-mis-əm). [Latin "mutual agreement"] Roman law. An agreement to submit a controversy to arbitration.

compte arrêté (kawnt a-ray-tay). [French "settled account"] An account stated in writing, and acknowledged to be correct on its face by the party against whom it is stated.

comp time. Time that an employee is allowed to take off from work instead of being paid for overtime already worked. — Also termed compensatory time.

comptroller (kən-troh-lər). An officer of a business or a private, state, or municipal corporation who is charged with duties usu. relating to fiscal affairs, including auditing and examining accounts and reporting the financial status periodically. — Also spelled controller.

compulsion, n. 1. The act of compelling; the state of being compelled.

2. An uncontrollable inclination to do something. 3. Objective necessity; duress. — compel, vb.

compulsory (kəm-pəl-sə-ree), adj. Compelled; mandated by legal process or by statute <compulsory counterclaim>.

compulsory, n. Eccles. law. A writ that compels the attendance of a witness.

compulsory appearance. See APPEARANCE.

compulsory arbitration. See ARBITRATION.

compulsory-attendance law. A statute requiring minors of specified ages to attend school.

compulsory condition. See CONDITION (2).

compulsory counterclaim. See COUNTERCLAIM.

compulsory disclosure. See DISCLOSURE.

compulsory insurance. See INSURANCE.

compulsory joinder. See JOINDER.

compulsory labor. See FORCED LABOR.

compulsory license. See LICENSE.

compulsory nonsuit. See NONSUIT.

compulsory pilot. Maritime law. A ship pilot entitled by law to guide a ship for a particular purpose, such as piloting the ship into harbor. ● The compulsory nature of the appointment relieves the vessel's owner of personal liability if the pilot causes a collision. Cf. VOLUNTARY PILOT.

"The compulsory pilot presents a special problem. Statutes that impose a fine or imprisonment for the failure to take a pilot obviously create compulsory pilotage. Some statutes, however, allow the ship to refuse the pilot provided she pays his fee or half of it ('half-pilotage'). The Supreme Court has indicated that it does not regard the tendering of this alternative as amounting to compulsion. It makes a difference, because it is pretty well settled that if the pilotage is 'compulsory' the respondent superior nexus is broken, and the shipowner cannot be held personally liable for the fault of the pilot resulting in collision. The ship's liability in rem, however, is unaffected by the fact that the pilotage is compulsory. This is one of the more striking consequences of the endowment of the ship with a juristic personality independent of that of her owner." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 7-16, at 520-21 (2d ed. 1975).

compulsory process. See PROCESS.

Compulsory Process Clause. The clause of the Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution giving criminal defendants the subpoena power for obtaining witnesses in their favor.

compulsory sale. See SALE.

compurgation (kom-pər-gay-shən), n. [Latin con- "together" + purgare "to clear or purge"] Hist. A trial by which a defendant could have supporters (called compurgators), frequently 11 in number, testify that they thought the defendant was telling the truth. — Also termed wager of law; trial by oath. — compurgatory, adj.

"If a defendant on oath and in a set form of words will deny the charge against him, and if he can get a certain number of other persons (compurgators) to back his denial by their oaths, he will win his case. If he cannot get the required number, or they do not swear in proper form, 'the oath bursts,' and he will lose. Though oaths were used in the Roman law of procedure, this institution of compurgation was not known to it. It was, however, common to the laws of many of the barbarian tribes who overran the Roman empire. Because it was so common and so widespread the church adopted it. . . . The case of King v. Williams in 1824 was the last instance of its use. It was finally abolished in 1833." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 305-08 (7th ed. 1956).

compurgator (kom-pər-gay-tər). Hist. A person who appeared in court and made an oath in support of a civil or criminal defendant. — Also termed OATH-HELPER. See COMPURGATION.

computer crime. See CRIME.

computus (kom-pyətəs). [Latin computo "to count up; to reckon"] Hist. A writ to compel a guardian, bailiff, receiver, or accountant to render an accounting. — Also spelled compotus.

comstockery (kom-stok-ər-ee). (often cap.) Censorship or attempted censorship of art or literature that is supposedly immoral or obscene.

Comstock law (kom-stok). An 1873 federal statute that tightened rules against mailing "obscene, lewd, or lascivious" books or pictures, as well as "any article or thing designed for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortions." • Because of the intolerance that led to this statute, the law gave rise to an English word roughly equivalent to prudery — namely, comstockery.

con. abbr. 1. Confidence <con game>. 2. Convict <ex-con>. 3. Contra <pros and cons>. 4. (cap.) Constitutional <Con. law>.

con. See CONFIDENCE GAME.

concealed weapon. See WEAPON.

concealment, n. 1. The act of refraining from disclosure; esp., an act by which one prevents or hinders the discovery of something. 2. The act of removing from sight or notice; hiding. 3. Insurance. The insured's intentional withholding from the insurer material facts that increase the insurer's risk and that in good faith ought to be disclosed. — conceal, vb.

"Concealment is an affirmative act intended or known to be likely to keep another from learning of a fact of which he would otherwise have learned. Such affirmative action is always equivalent to a misrepresentation and has any effect that a misrepresentation would have. . . ." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 160 cmt. a (1981).

active concealment. The concealment by words or acts of something that one has a duty to reveal.

fraudulent concealment. The affirmative suppression or hiding, with the intent to deceive or defraud, of a material fact or circumstance that one is legally (or, sometimes, morally) bound to reveal.

passive concealment. The act of maintaining silence when one has a duty to speak.

concealment rule. The principle that a defendant's conduct that hinders or prevents a plaintiff from discovering the existence of a claim tolls the statute of limitations until the plaintiff discovers or should have discovered the claim. — Also termed fraudulent-concealment rule.

concedo (kən-see-doh). [Latin] Hist. I grant. • This was formerly a term of conveyance.

concentration account. A single centralized bank account into which funds deposited at or collected at out-of-area locations are periodically transferred.

conception of invention. The formation in the inventor's mind of a definite and permanent idea of a complete invention that is thereafter applied in practice. • Courts usu. consider conception when determining priority of invention.

conceptum (kən-sep-təm). [Latin "seized"] Civil law. A theft in which the stolen item was searched for and found in someone's possession and in the presence of witnesses. See FURTUM CONCEPTUM.

concerted action. An action that has been planned, arranged, and agreed on by parties acting together to further some scheme or cause, so that all involved are liable for the actions of one another. — Also termed concert of action.

concerted activity. Labor law. Action by employees concerning wages or working conditions. • Concerted activity is protected by the National Labor Relations Act and cannot be used as a basis for disciplining or discharging an employee.

"Typical protected concerted activity involves union organizing, the discussion of unionization among employees, or the attempt by one employee to solicit union support from another employee. But concerted activity need not involve a union. Activities by groups of employees unaffiliated with a union to improve their lot at their work place are deemed protected concerted activities." Douglas L. Leslie, Labor Law in a Nutshell 84 (3d ed. 1992).

concerted refusal to deal. Antitrust. An agreement between two or more persons or firms to not do business with a third party. • The parties to the agreement may or may not be competitors. Concerted refusals to deal may violate § 1 of the Sherman Act and are analyzed under either the per se rule or the rule of reason, depending on the nature of the agreement. See BOYCOTT; PER SE RULE; RULE OF REASON.

concert of action. See CONCERTED ACTION.

concert-of-action rule. See WHARTON RULE.

concessi (kən-ses-I). [Latin] Hist. I have granted. • Concessi grants a covenant in a lease for years; it does not warrant title. Concessi often appeared in the phrase demisi, concessi, et ad firmam tradidi ("demised, granted, and let to farm"). Cf. DEDI.

"Concessi (a word much used in Conveyances). In Law it creates a Covenant, as Dedi does a Warranty." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

concessimus (kən-ses-ə-məs). [Latin] Hist. We have granted. • Concessimus is a term of conveyance that creates a joint covenant on the part of the grantors.

concessio (kən-sesh-ee-oh). [Latin] Hist. A grant. • A term of conveyance used to convey incorporeal property. Pl. concessiones.

"Grants, concessiones; the regular method by the common law of transferring the property of incorporeal hereditaments, or, such things whereof no livery can be had. For which reason all corporeal hereditaments, as lands and houses, are said to lie in livery; and the others, as advowsons, commons, rents, reversions, etc., to lie in grant. . . . These therefore pass merely by the delivery of the deed." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 317 (1766).

concession, n. 1. A government grant for specific privileges. 2. The voluntary yielding to a demand for the sake of a settlement. 3. A rebate or abatement. 4. Int'l law. A contract in which a country transfers some rights to a foreign enterprise, which then engages in an activity (such as mining) contingent on state approval and subject to the terms of the contract. — concede, vb. — concessive, adj.

concession bargaining. Labor law. A type of collective bargaining in which the parties negotiate the employees' giving back previously gained improvements in wages, benefits, or working conditions in exchange for some form of job security, such as protection against layoffs. — Also termed employee givebacks; union givebacks. See COLLECTIVE BARGAINING.

concessit solvere (kən-ses-it sol-və-ree). [Latin "he agreed to pay"] Hist. A form of debt action on a simple contract. • The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had granted and agreed to pay to the plaintiff the sum sued for, but had not done so. The defendant responded with a plea of nunquam indebitatus ("never indebted"). See indebitatus assumpsit under ASSUMPSIT; NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS; COMMON COUNT.

concessor (kən-ses-ər). Hist. A grantor. Cf. CONCESSUS.

concessum (kən-ses-əm), p.pl. [fr. Latin concedere "to grant"] Hist. Granted. • Judges used this term to signify their assent to a point made in argument; for example, a court might state that a particular proposition was concessum per totam curiam ("granted by the whole court").

concessus (kən-ses-əs). Hist. A grantee. Cf. CONCESSOR.

conciliation, n. 1. A settlement of a dispute in an agreeable manner. 2. A process in which a neutral person meets with the parties to a dispute (often labor) and explores how the dispute might be resolved; MEDIATION (1). — conciliate, vb. — conciliative, conciliatory, adj. — conciliator, n.

conciliation court. See small-claims court under COURT.

concilium (kən-sil-ee-əm). [Latin "council"] 1. Hist. The sitting of a court to hear argument in a case; a motion requesting a day to present an argument. 2. CONCILIUM PLEBIS.

concilium plebis (kən-sil-ee-əm plee-bis). [Latin "assembly of the people"] Roman law. An assembly of the plebs gathered together to enact legislation. — Often shortened to concilium. See PLEBISCITUM. Cf. COMITIA TRIBUTA.

"Legislation was carried on to some extent by the Comitia Tributa and in an increasing degree by the assembly of the plebs alone, concilium plebis, which, in historical times, was also based on the tributal organisation. This assembly, presided over by a tribune of the plebs, was active from early times and there was early legislation on constitutional questions, enacted by that body and approved by the Senate, which was regarded as binding on the whole community. Its enactments, properly called plebiscita, were often called, as binding on the whole community, leges . . ." W.W. Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law: From Augustus to Justinian 4 (1921).

concilium regis (kən-sil-ee-əm ree-jis). [Latin "assembly of the king"] Hist. A tribunal that, during the reigns of Edward I and Edward II, heard cases of extraordinary difficulty.

conclude, vb. 1. To ratify or formalize (a treaty, convention, or contract) <it can be difficult to amend a contract that the parties have already concluded>. 2. To bind; estop <the admissions concluded the party as a matter of law>.

conclusion, n. 1. The final part of a speech or writing (such as a jury argument or a pleading). 2. A judgment arrived at by reasoning; an inferential statement. 3. The closing, settling, or final arranging (as of a treaty or contract). 4. Archaic. An act by which one estops oneself from doing anything inconsistent with it.

"Conclusion is, when a man by his own act upon record hath charged himself with a duty or other thing. . . . So if the sheriff, upon a capias to him directed, returns that he hath taken the body, and yet hath not the body in court at the day of the return, he shall be amerced. . . ." Termes de la Ley 102-03 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

conclusional, adj. See CONCLUSORY.

conclusionary, adj. See CONCLUSORY.

conclusion of fact. A factual deduction drawn from observed or proven facts; an evidentiary inference. Cf. FINDING OF FACT.

conclusion of law. An inference on a question of law, made as a result of a factual showing, no further evidence being required; a legal inference. Cf. FINDING OF FACT; LEGAL CONCLUSION.

conclusion to the country. Archaic. The closing part of a pleading that requests the trial of an issue by a jury. Cf. GOING TO THE COUNTRY.

conclusive, adj. Authoritative; decisive; convincing <her conclusive argument ended the debate>. Cf. CONCLUSORY.

conclusive evidence. See EVIDENCE.

conclusive presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

conclusive proof. See conclusive evidence (1) under EVIDENCE.

conclusory (kən-kloo-zə-ree or -sə-ree), adj. Expressing a factual inference without stating the underlying facts on which the inference is based <because the plaintiff's allegations lacked any supporting evidence, they were merely conclusory>. — Also termed conclusional; conclusionary. Cf. CONCLUSIVE.

concomitant (kən-kom-ə-tənt), adj. Accompanying; incidental <concomitant actions>. — concomitant, n.

concomitant evidence. See EVIDENCE.

concord (kən-kord or kong-), n. 1. An amicable arrangement between parties, esp. between peoples or nations; a compact or treaty. 2. Archaic. An agreement to compromise and settle an action in trespass.

"Concord is an Agreement made between two or more, upon a Trespass committed; and is divided into Concord executory, and Concord executed . . . one binds not, as being imperfect, but the other is absolute, and ties the Party." Giles Jacob, A New Law-Dictionary (8th ed. 1762).

3. Archaic. An in-court agreement in which a person who acquired land by force acknowledges that the land in question belongs to the complainant. See DEFORCE.

"Next comes the concord, or agreement itself, after leave obtained from the court; which is usually an acknowledgment from the deforciant (or those who keep the other out of possession) that the lands in question are the right of the complainant." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 350 (1766).

4. Hist. The settlement of a dispute.

final concord. A written agreement between the parties to an action by which they settle the action in court, with the court's permission. — Also termed finalis concordia; final peace.

concordat (kon- or kən-kor-dat). 1. An agreement between a government and a church, esp. the Roman Catholic Church.

"The qualification of a treaty as a concordat depends only upon its object and purpose, not upon the name or outward form chosen by the parties. Although the term originally was also used for treaties between States, it has increasingly become restricted to only those treaties concluded with the Holy See." Heribert Franz Köck, "Concordats," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 164 (1992).

2. Hist. Eccles. law. An agreement between ecclesiastical persons concerning a benefice, such as a resignation or promotion. See BENEFICE. 3. An agreement between secular persons or entities.

concordatory (kən-kor-də-tor-ee), adj. Of or relating to a concordat, esp. one between church and state in France.

Concordia discordantium canonum (kon-kor-dee-ə dis-kor-dan-shee-əm kə-nohn-əm). [Latin "the harmony of the discordant canons"] Hist. A collection of ecclesiastical authorities compiled by Gratian, an Italian monk, ca. 1140. • Gratian analyzed questions of law by drawing conclusions from side-by-side comparisons of a variety of texts. Later canonist scholarship usu. proceeded from Gratian's work. — Also termed Decretum Gratiani; Decretum.

"Another body of jurisprudence was coming into being. From humble beginnings the canon law had grown into a mighty system. Already it asserted its right to stand beside or above the civil law. The civil law might be the law of earth, ius soli; here was the law of heaven, ius poli. . . . Many men had been endeavouring to state that law, but the fame of earlier labourers was eclipsed by that of Gratian. A monk of Bologna, that city which was the centre of the new secular jurisprudence, he published . . . a book which he called Concordia discordantium canonum, but which was soon to become for all mankind simply the Decretum Gratiani, or yet more simply the Decretum. It is a great law-book. The spirit which animated its author was not that of a theologian, not that of an ecclesiastical ruler, but that of a lawyer. . . . The Decretum soon became an authoritative text-book and the canonist seldom went behind it. . . . The canonist had for it rather that reverence which English lawyers have paid to Coke upon Littleton. . . ." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 112–13 (2d ed. 1898).

concourse (kon-kors or kong-). Scots law. 1. The simultaneous existence of two actions based on the same facts, esp. a civil action and a criminal action. 2. The concurrence of the public prosecutor to a criminal prosecution by a private person.

"A private party may prosecute for the punishment of an offence perpetrated against himself, and for which the public prosecutor may refuse to prosecute at the public expense; but the concurrence of the public prosecutor is necessary, and it cannot be refused; or if refused, the case may proceed at the instance of the private party. Concourse is distinguished from Instance. In the former case the public prosecutor merely concurs or consents, whilst in the latter case he is also a principal party prosecuting for the public interest." Hugh Barclay, A Digest of the Law of Scotland 162 (3d ed. 1865).

3. A conflict among creditors or claimants. See CONCURSUS (1).

concupinatus (kon-kyoo-bə-nij), n. 1. The relationship of a man and woman who cohabit without the benefit of marriage. 2. The state of being a concubine. 3. Hist. A plea in a dower action made by a defendant who asserts that the plaintiff is the defendant's concubine rather than wife.

"Concupinatus, in common Acceptation is the Keeping of a Whore or Concubine: But in a legal Sense, it is used as an Exception against her that sueth for Dower, alledging thereby that she was not a Wife lawfully married to the Party, in whose Lands she seeks to be endowed, but his Concubine." Giles Jacob, A New Law-Dictionary (8th ed. 1762).

concupinatus (kon-kyoo-bi-nay-təs). [Latin "concupinatus"] Roman law. A permanent, monogamous union of a man and a woman who are not legally married. • Concupinatus was not prohibited by law, but carried fewer benefits than a legal marriage. Cf. JUSTAE NUPTIAE.

"[C]oncubinage (concubinatus) ... was something to which we have no precise analogue in modern law, for, so far from being prohibited by the law, it was regulated thereby, being treated as a lawful connexion. It is almost a sort of unequal marriage (and is practically so described by some of the jurists) existing between persons of different station — the man of superior rank, the woman of a rank so much inferior that it is not to be presumed that his union with her was intended to be a marriage." James Bryce, "Marriage and Divorce under Roman and English Law," in 3 Select Essays in Anglo-American Legal History 806-07 (1909).

concubine (kɒŋ-kyə-bɪn). A woman who cohabits with a man to whom she is not married.

concur (kən-kər), vb. 1. To agree; to consent. 2. In a judicial opinion, to agree with the judgment in the case (usu. as expressed in the opinion of another judge), or the opinion of another judge, but often for different reasons or through a different line of reasoning. 3. Civil law. To join with other claimants in presenting a demand against an insolvent estate.

concurator (kon- or kən-kyuur-ətər). Civil law. A guardian or co-curator. See CURATOR.

concurrence. 1. Agreement; assent. 2. A vote cast by a judge in favor of the judgment reached, often on grounds differing from those expressed in the opinion or opinions explaining the judgment. 3. A separate written opinion explaining such a vote. — Also termed (in sense 3) concurring opinion.

concurrencey, n. 1. Archaic. The quality or fact of being concurrent in jurisdiction; joint right or authority. 2. Criminal procedure. (Of a criminal sentence) concurrent in duration.

concurrent, adj. 1. Operating at the same time; covering the same matters <concurrent interests>. 2. Having authority on the same matters <concurrent jurisdiction>.

concurrent cause. See CAUSE (1).

concurrent condition. See CONDITION (2).

concurrent consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

concurrent covenant. See COVENANT (1).

concurrent estate. See ESTATE.

concurrent finding. See FINDING OF FACT.

concurrent interest. See concurrent estate under ESTATE (4).

concurrent jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

concurrent lease. See LEASE.

concurrent lien. See LIEN.

concurrent negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

concurrent policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

concurrent power. See POWER.

concurrent remedy. See REMEDY.

concurrent resolution. See RESOLUTION (1).

concurrent-sentence doctrine. The principle that an appellate court affirming a conviction and sentence need not hear a challenge to a conviction on another count if the conviction on the other count carries a sentence that is equal to or less than the affirmed conviction.

concurrent sentences. See SENTENCE.

concurrent tortfeasors. See TORTFEASOR.

concurrent writ. See WRIT.

concurring opinion. See CONCURRENCE (3).

concurso (kon- or kən-kər-soh). Civil law. An action in which a creditor seeks to enforce a claim against an insolvent debtor.

concursum (kon- or kən-kər-səs). [Latin "a running together"] 1. Civil & Scots law. A proceeding in which two or more creditors claim, usu. adversely to each other, an interest in a fund or estate so that they can sort out and adjudicate all the claims on the fund. See CONCOURSE (3). 2. Civil law. INTERPLEADER. 3. Eccl'es. law. An examination to determine a person's fitness for parochial office.

concursum in delicto (kon- or kən-kər-səs in də-lik-toh). [Latin] Cooperation in crime.

conculsiō (kən-kəsh-ee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. The offense of extorting money or gifts by threat of violence. ● In modern civil-law contexts, the term is often anglicized to concussion. — concuss, vb.

concussionary. Archaic. A person who extorts from others under guise of authority; one who practices concussion.

condedit (kən-dee-dit or -ded-it). [Latin “he made (a will)”] Eccles. law. A defensive plea filed by a party in response to an ecclesiastical-court libel (i.e., complaint) questioning the veracity of a will. — Also spelled condidit.

condemn, vb. 1. To judicially pronounce (someone) guilty. 2. To determine and declare that certain property is assigned to public use. See EMINENT DOMAIN. 3. To adjudge (a building) as being unfit for habitation. 4. To adjudge (food or drink) as being unfit for human consumption. 5. Maritime law. To declare that a vessel (1) is forfeited to the government, (2) is a prize, or (3) is unfit for service.

condemnation (kon-dem-nay-shən), n. 1. The act of judicially pronouncing someone guilty; conviction. 2. The determination and declaration that certain property (esp. land) is assigned to public use, subject to reasonable compensation; the exercise of eminent domain by a governmental entity. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

excess condemnation. The taking of property beyond what is needed for public use.

inverse condemnation. An action brought by a property owner for compensation from a governmental entity that has taken the owner's property without bringing formal condemnation proceedings. — Also termed condemnation blight.

quick condemnation. The immediate taking of private property for public use, whereby the estimated reasonable compensation is placed in escrow until the actual amount of compensation can be established.

3. An official pronouncement that a thing (such as a building) is unfit for use or consumption; the act of making such a pronouncement.

condemnation money. 1. Damages that a losing party in a lawsuit is condemned to pay. 2. Compensation paid by an expropriator of land to the landowner for taking the property.

condemnatory (kən-dem-nə-tor-ee), adj. 1. Condemning; expressing condemnation or censure. 2. Of or relating to the use of eminent domain or expropriation.

condemnee (kon-dem-nee). One whose property is expropriated for public use or taken by a public-works project.

condemnor (kon-dem-nor or kən-dem-nər). A public or semipublic entity that expropriates property for public use.

condescendence (kon-di-sen-dənts). Scots law. A statement of facts in a civil pleading, set out in consecutively numbered paragraphs, that the claimant relies on to justify the claim for relief.

condictio (kən-dik-shee-oh). [fr. Latin condicere “to demand back”] Roman & civil law. A personal action in the nature of demanding something back; an action of debt. • In the sense here used, debt must be understood broadly to cover not only contractual but also noncontractual claims. Condictio is usu. founded on an obligation to give or do a certain thing or service. — Also termed condiction; action of debt. — condictitious, condictious, adj.

condictio certi (kən-dik-shee-oh sər-tī). [Latin “claim for recovery of a certain sum or thing”] An action based on a promise to do a thing, where the promise is certain.

condictio ex causa furtiva. See condictio rei furtivae.

condictio ex lege (kən-dik-shee-oh eks lee-jee). [Latin “claim for recovery under a statute”] An action arising where a statute creates an obligation but provides no remedy.

condictio furtiva. See condictio rei furtivae.

condictio incerti (kən-dik-shee-oh in-sər-tī). [Latin “claim for recovery of an uncertain amount”] An action to recover an uncertain amount.

condictio indebiti (kən-dik-shee-oh in-deb-ə-tī). [Latin “claim for recovery of something not due”] An action to prevent the unjust enrichment of a defendant who had received money or property from the plaintiff by mistake. — Also termed actio condictio indebiti.

condictio rei furtivae (kən-dik-shee-oh ree-I fər-tī-vee). [Latin “claim for recovery of a stolen thing”] An action to recover a stolen thing. • A condictio rei furtivae could be brought against the thief or the thief's heirs. — Also termed condictio furtiva; condictio ex causa furtiva.

condictio sine causa (kən-dik-shee-oh si-nee kaw-zə). [Latin "claim for recovery of money or a thing given without consideration"] An action for the recovery of a thing given without consideration and in contemplation of a specific event that did not occur, such as a dowry made in view of a marriage that does not take place.

condictio triticaria (kən-dik-shee-oh tri-ti-kair-ee-ə). [Latin "claim for recovery of wheat"] An action for the recovery of a specified quantity of a named commodity.

conditio (kən-dish-ee-oh). [Latin] A condition.

condition, n. 1. A future and uncertain event on which the existence or extent of an obligation or liability depends; an uncertain act or event that triggers or negates a duty to render a promised performance. • For example, if Jones promises to pay Smith $500 for repairing a car, Smith's failure to repair the car (a condition) relieves Jones of the promise to pay.

"A condition is an event, not certain to occur, which must occur, unless its non-occurrence is excused, before performance under a contract becomes due." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 224 (1981).

"'Condition' is used in this Restatement to denote an event which qualifies a duty under a contract. It is recognized that 'condition' is used with a wide variety of other meanings in legal discourse. Sometimes it is used to denote an event that limits or qualifies a transfer of property. In the law of trusts, for example, it is used to denote an event such as the death of the settlor that qualifies his disposition of property in trust. Sometimes it is used to refer to a term in an agreement that makes an event a condition, or more broadly to refer to any term in an agreement (e.g., 'standard conditions of sale'). For the sake of precision, 'condition' is not used here in these other senses." Id. cmt. a.

"Strictly, a condition is a fact or event on the occurrence of which some legal right or duty comes into existence; a party may promise that this fact is so, or that the event will take place, but it is equally possible that no party to the contract promises this. An insurance company promises to pay £10,000 to an insured person if his house is destroyed by fire; the destruction of the house by fire is a condition of the insurer's promise to pay, but neither party promises to burn the house." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 146 (3d ed. 1981).

2. A stipulation or prerequisite in a contract, will, or other instrument, constituting the essence of the instrument. • If a court construes a contractual term to be a condition, then its untruth or breach will entitle the party to whom it is made to be discharged from all liabilities under the contract.

"Promises and the duties they generate can be either unconditional ('I promise to pay you $100,000') or conditional ('I promise to pay you $100,000 if your house burns down'). Lawyers use the word condition in several senses. Sometimes they use it to refer to the term in the agreement that makes the promise conditional. . . . However, lawyers also use the word condition to refer to an operative fact rather than to a term. According to the Restatement Second a condition is 'an event, not certain to occur, which must occur, unless occurrence is excused, before performance under a contract becomes due.' This use of the word has the support of leading writers." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 8.2, at 563 (2d ed. 1990).

"The terms 'warranty' and 'condition' are generally used interchangeably, for all practical purposes, and they refer to representations or promises by the insured, incorporated into the contract itself, on the truthfulness or fulfillment of which it is agreed that the rights of the insured shall depend. The primary differences between a mere representation and a warranty or condition are (1) while the insurer has the burden of proving the materiality of a misrepresentation before it will be grounds for avoidance, the materiality of a warranty or condition is conclusively presumed; and (2) while a representation will not be grounds for avoidance as long as it is substantially true, a warranty or condition must be strictly complied with in order to preclude avoidance. As with the majority view in representations, good or bad faith on the part of the insured is irrelevant." John F. Dobbyn, Insurance Law in a Nutshell 201 (3d ed. 1996).

affirmative condition. See positive condition.

casual condition. Civil law. A condition that depends on chance; one that is not within the power of either party to an agreement.

collateral condition. A condition that requires the performance of an act having no relation to an agreement's main purpose.

compulsory condition. A condition expressly requiring that a thing be done, such as a tenant's paying rent on a certain day.

concurrent condition. A condition that must occur or be performed at the same time as another condition, the performance by each party separately operating as a condition precedent; a condition that is mutually dependent on another, arising when the parties to a contract agree to exchange performances simultaneously. — Also termed condition concurrent.

"Conditions concurrent are acts that the parties to a contract are under duties of performing concurrently, the act of each party being separately operative as a condition precedent. The act is not concurrent with the legal relation affected, but only with the act of the other party." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 412-13 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

condition implied by law. See constructive condition.

condition implied in law. See constructive condition.

condition precedent. An act or event, other than a lapse of time, that must exist or occur before a duty to perform something promised arises. ● If the condition does not occur and is not excused, the promised performance need not be rendered. The most common condition contemplated by this phrase is the immediate or unconditional duty of performance by a promisor.

"Now the most important type of conditional clause, i.e. a clause on which the entire operation of the contract depends, is called a condition precedent. The vital thing about such a condition is that it is not a promise, and if a contract is subject to a condition precedent it may properly be called a conditional contract. A much-quoted example of such a contract is found in Pym v. Campbell, where the defendants agreed to buy from the plaintiffs a share of an invention, provided that the invention was approved by a third party. This proviso was held to be a condition precedent to the operation of the entire contract, and in the absence of the approval specified, the contract never came into operation." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 146 (3d ed. 1981).

"Before one gets too confused by the precedent and subsequent classifications, it might be helpful to know that in contract law there is no substantive difference between the two. . . . However, in the area of pleading and procedure significance may be placed upon the difference between a condition precedent and subsequent in terms of who has the burden of pleading and proof, the party seeking to enforce the promise usually being required to plead and prove a condition precedent and the party seeking to avoid liability for breach of promise sometimes being required to plead and prove the occurrence of the condition subsequent that would terminate his duty." Claude Rohwer & Gordon D. Schaber, Contracts in a Nutshell 313 (4th ed. 1997).

condition subsequent. A condition that, if it occurs, will bring something else to an end; an event the existence of which, by agreement of the parties, discharges a duty of performance that has arisen.

"It must also be observed that lawyers sometimes refer to a condition subsequent, i.e. a condition on the happening of which the whole contract is dissolved. A condition subsequent is simply a statement of the circumstances in which the contract may be prematurely brought to an end, and is usually more readily recognized than a condition precedent. Like a condition precedent, however, a condition subsequent differs from terms which are promises, because the occurrence of such a condition involves the parties in no liability." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 147 (3d ed. 1981).

"If . . . the deed or will uses such words as 'but if,' 'on condition that,' 'provided, however,' or 'if, however,' it will generally be assumed that a condition subsequent was intended." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 50 (2d ed. 1984).

constructive condition. A condition contained in an essential contractual term that, though omitted by the parties from their agreement, a court has supplied as being reasonable in the circumstances; a condition imposed by law to do justice. ● The cooperation of the parties to a contract, for example, is a constructive condition. — Also termed implied-in-law condition; condition implied by law; condition implied in law.

"[C]onstructive conditions are imposed by law to do justice. . . . The dividing line between an express condition . . . and constructive conditions is often quite indistinct. Yet, the distinction is often of crucial importance. The general rule governing an express condition is that it must be strictly performed. The general rule as to constructive conditions is that substantial compliance is sufficient." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 11.8, at 402 (4th ed. 1998).

copulative condition (kop-yə-lə-tiv or -lay-tiv). A condition requiring the performance of more than one act. Cf. disjunctive condition; single condition.

dependent condition. A mutual covenant that goes to the consideration on both sides of a contract.

disjunctive condition. A condition requiring the performance of one of several acts. Cf. copulative condition; single condition.

dissolving condition. See resolatory condition.

express condition. A condition that is explicitly stated in an instrument; esp., a contractual condition that the parties have reduced to writing.

implied condition. A condition that is not expressly mentioned, but is imputed by law from the nature of the transaction or the conduct of the parties to have been tacitly understood between them as a part of the agreement.

implied-in-fact condition. A contractual condition that the parties have implicitly agreed to by their conduct or by the nature of the transaction.

implied-in-law condition. See constructive condition.

inherent condition. A condition that is an intrinsic part of an agreement; a condition that is not newly imposed but is already present in an agreement.

lawful condition. A condition that can be fulfilled without violating the law.

mixed condition. Civil law. A condition that depends either on the will of one party and the will of a third person, or on the will of one party and the happening of a causal event.

negative condition. A condition forbidding a party from doing a certain thing, such as prohibiting a tenant from subletting leased property; a promise not to do something, usu. as part of a larger agreement. — Also termed restrictive condition. See negative easement under EASEMENT.

positive condition. A condition that requires some act, such as paying rent. — Also termed affirmative condition.

potestative condition (poh-tes-tə-tiv). Civil law. A condition that will be fulfilled only if the obligated party chooses to do so. • Louisiana no longer uses this term, instead providing that this type of condition will render the obligation null. Cf. suspensive condition; resolatory condition.

preexisting condition. Insurance. A physical or mental condition evident during the period before the effective date of a medical-insurance policy. • Typically, coverage for later treatment for such a condition is excluded if symptoms of the condition were present during the period before the policy was effective.

promissory condition. A condition that is also a promise.

“The distinction between a condition which is also a promise, and a condition which is not the subject of a promise, is often one of great difficulty and importance, especially where the term is implied and not expressed, and it is unfortunate that legal usage has sanctioned the word ‘condition’ for two such different concepts. It would at least be desirable if lawyers could be persuaded to refer to conditions which are the subject of a promise as ‘promissory conditions’, a usage which it is proposed to adopt here.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 147 (3d ed. 1981).

resolatory condition (rə-zol-yə-tor-ee). Civil law. A condition that upon fulfillment terminates an already enforceable obligation and entitles the parties to be restored to their original positions. — Also termed resolutive condition; dissolving condition. Cf. potestative condition.

restrictive condition. See negative condition.

single condition. A condition requiring the performance of a specified thing. Cf. copulative condition; disjunctive condition.

suspensive condition. Civil law. A condition that must be fulfilled before an obligation is enforceable. Cf. potestative condition.

unlawful condition. A condition that cannot be fulfilled without violating the law.

3. Loosely, a term, provision, or clause in a contract.

“This term condition is generally used to describe any fact, subsequent to the formation of a contract, which operates to make the duty of a promisor immediately active and compelling. Such a fact may be described as such in a term of the contract or it may not. In either event, the term of the contract should not itself be called the condition. . . . It is not uncommon, popularly, to speak of a condition of the contract as synonymous with term or provision of the contract. This should be avoided.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 226 n.1 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“The word ‘condition’ is used in the law of property as well as in the law of contract and it is sometimes used in a very loose sense as synonymous with ‘term,’ ‘provision,’ or ‘clause.’ In such a sense it performs no useful service.” Id. at 409.

4. A qualification attached to the conveyance of property providing that if a particular event does or does not take place, the estate will be created, enlarged, defeated, or transferred. 5. A state of being; an essential quality or status. — condition, vb.

artificial condition. A physical characteristic of real property, brought about by a person’s affirmative act instead of by natural forces.

dangerous condition. 1. A property defect creating a substantial risk of injury when the property is used in a reasonably foreseeable manner. • A dangerous condition may result in waiver of sovereign immunity. 2. A property risk that children, because of their immaturity, cannot appreciate or avoid.

conditional, adj. Subject to or dependent on a condition .

condition of employment. A qualification or circumstance required for obtaining or keeping a job.

condition precedent. See CONDITION (2).

conditions of sale. The terms under which auctions are to be conducted. • The conditions of sale are usu. placed in the auction room for public viewing before the sale.

condition subsequent. See CONDITION (2). condominia (kon-də-min-ee-ə). Civil law. Coownerships or limited ownerships. • Condominia are considered part of the dominium of the property, and thus are more than mere rights in the property (i.e., jure in re aliena); examples of condominia include emphyteusis, superficies, pignus, hypotheca, usufructus, usus, and habitatio.

condominium (kon-də-min-ee-əm). 1. Ownership in common with others. 2. A single real-estate unit in a multi-unit development in which a person has both separate ownership of a unit and a common interest, along with the development's other owners, in the common areas. Cf. COOPERATIVE (2). Pl. (for sense 2) condominiums.

"The condominium concept is not new, despite its relatively recent introduction in the United States. Ownership of individual units in buildings can be traced back to ancient Babylon; it was quite common in ancient Rome and in medieval Europe. The earliest condominium statute is Article 664 of the Code Napoleon of 1804, a very brief provision which was later substantially expanded. Condominium statutes were adopted in most nations in Europe, and in Central and South America, before any were adopted in the United States." Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 2.2, at 34 n.26 (2d ed. 1993).

3. Joint sovereignty by two or more nations. 4. A politically dependent territory under such sovereignty. Pl. condominia (senses 3 & 4).

condonation (kon-də-nay-shən), n. A victim's implied forgiveness of an offense by treating the offender as if there had been no offense; esp., before the advent of no-fault divorce, a spouse's forgiveness implied by continuing to live normally with the other spouse after that spouse has committed an offense that would otherwise be grounds for divorce.

condone (kən-dohn), vb. To voluntarily pardon or overlook (esp. an act of adultery). — condonable (kən-dohn-ə-bəl), adj.

conduct, n. Personal behavior, whether by action or inaction; the manner in which a person behaves. — conduct, vb.

"The word 'conduct' ... covers both acts and omissions.... In cases in which a man is able to show that his conduct, whether in the form of action or of inaction, was involuntary, he must not be held liable for any harmful result produced by it...." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 13 n.2, 24 (16th ed. 1952).

assertive conduct. Evidence. Nonverbal behavior that is intended to be a statement, such as pointing one's finger to identify a suspect in a police lineup. • Assertive conduct is a statement under the hearsay rule, and thus it is not admissible unless a hearsay exception applies. Fed. R. Evid. 801(a)(2). — Also termed implied assertion.

contumacious conduct (kon-t[y]oo-may-shəs). A willful disobedience of a court order. See CONTUMACY.

disorderly conduct. Behavior that tends to disturb the public peace, offend public morals, or undermine public safety. See BREACH OF THE PEACE.

disruptive conduct. Disorderly conduct in the context of a governmental proceeding. See CONTEMPT.

nonassertive conduct. Evidence. Nonverbal behavior that is not intended to be a statement, such as fainting while being questioned as a suspect by a police officer. • Nonassertive conduct is not a statement under the hearsay rule, and thus it is admissible. Fed. R. Evid. 801.

outrageous conduct. Conduct so extreme that it exceeds all reasonable bounds of human decency. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

unprofessional conduct. Behavior that is immoral, unethical, or dishonorable, either generally or when judged by the standards of the actor's profession.

conductio (kən-dək-shee-oh). [Latin "a hiring"] Roman law. The act of hiring or leasing, usu. of property or services. See LOCATIO-CONDUCTIO.

conductor (kən-dək-tər or -tor). [Latin "one who hires"] Roman law. 1. A person who leases property or hires the services of another. 2. A person who engages himself to make a specific work.

conductor operarum (kən-dək-tər [or -tor] op-ə-rair-əm). [Latin "a hirer of labor"] Roman law. A person who engages another to perform specified work for another at a stated price; a contractor.

conductus (kən-dək-təs). [fr. Latin conducere "hired"] Roman law. A person or thing hired by a conductor.

conduit taxation. See pass-through taxation under TAXATION.

confarreatio (kən-far-ee-ay-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. A religious ceremony used to wed patricians. • By this ceremony, the wife was brought into the husband's family and placed under the husband's protection (manus). See MANUS. Cf. COEMPTIO; USUS (2).

"Anciently, there were three modes in which marriage might be contracted according to Roman usage, one involving a religious solemnity, the other two the observance of certain secular formalities. By the religious marriage of Confarreatio; by the higher form of civil marriage, which was called Coemptio; and by the lower form, which was termed Usus, the Husband acquired a number of rights over the person and property of his wife, which were on the whole in excess of such as are conferred on him in any system of modern jurisprudence. But in what capacity did he acquire them? Not as Husband, but as Father. By the Confarreatio, Coemptio, and Usus, the woman passed in manum viri, that is, in law she became the Daughter of her husband. She was included in his Patria Potestas.... These three ancient forms of marriage fell, however, gradually into disuse, so that, at the most splendid period of Roman greatness, they had almost entirely given place to a fashion of wedlock — old apparently, but not hitherto considered reputable — which was founded on a modification of the lower form of civil marriage." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 149 (10th ed. 1884).

confectio (kən-fek-shee-oh). [Latin "a completing"] Hist. The act of making or executing a written instrument.

confederacy, n. 1. A league of states or countries that have joined for mutual support or joint action; an alliance. 2. An association of two or more persons, usu. for unlawful purposes; CONSPIRACY. 3. The fact or condition of being an ally or accomplice.

confederacy clause. Archaic. A clause in a complaint charging that the defendant or de-defendants have combined with others (who may yet be named as defendants) to defraud or deprive the plaintiff of personal rights.

confederate, n. An ally; esp., a coconspirator or accomplice.

confederation. A league or union of states or nations, each of which retains its sovereignty but also delegates some rights and powers to a central authority. Cf. FEDERATION.

confederation of states. A confederation involving a central government that exists and exercises certain powers but does not control all the external relations of the member states. • For international purposes there exists not one but a number of states. Cf. federal state under STATE.

conferee (kon-fər-ee). See MANAGER (2).

conference committee. See COMMITTEE.

confess, vb. To admit (an allegation) as true; to make a confession. — confessor, n.

confessed judgment. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

confessing error. A plea admitting to an assignment of error. See ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

confessio in judicio (kən-fesh-ee-oh in joo-dish-ee-oh). [Latin "confession in court"] Hist. An in-court confession.

confession, n. A criminal suspect's acknowledgment of guilt, usu. in writing and often including details about the crime. Cf. ADMISSION; STATEMENT.

"A confession is an acknowledgment in express words, by the accused in a criminal case, of the truth of the main fact charged or of some essential part of it." 3 John H. Wigmore, Evidence in Trials at Common Law § 821, at 308 (James H. Chadbourn ed., 4th rev. ed. 1970).

"The distinction between admissions in criminal cases and confessions by the accused is the distinction in effect between admissions of fact from which the guilt of the accused may be inferred by the jury and the express admission of guilt itself." William P. Richardson, The Law of Evidence § 394, at 268 (3d ed. 1928).

coerced confession. A confession that is obtained by threats or force.

direct confession. A statement in which an accused person acknowledges having committed the crime.

extrajudicial confession. A confession made out of court, and not as a part of a judicial examination or investigation. • Such a confession must be corroborated by some other proof of the corpus delicti, or else it is insufficient to warrant a conviction. Cf. judicial confession.

implied confession. A confession in which the person does not plead guilty but invokes the mercy of the court and asks for a light sentence.

indirect confession. A confession that is inferred from the defendant's conduct.

interlocking confessions. Confessions by two or more suspects whose statements are substantially the same and consistent concerning the elements of the crime. • Such confessions are admissible in a joint trial.

involuntary confession. A confession induced by the police or other law-enforcement authorities who make promises to, coerce, or deceive the suspect.

judicial confession. A plea of guilty or some other direct manifestation of guilt in court or in a judicial proceeding. Cf. extrajudicial confession.

naked confession. A confession unsupported by any evidence that a crime has been committed, and therefore usu. highly suspect.

oral confession. A confession that is not made in writing. • Oral confessions are admissible, though as a practical matter police interrogators prefer to take written or recorded confessions since juries typically view these as being more reliable.

plenary confession (plee-nə-ree or plen-ə-). A complete confession; one that is believed to be conclusive against the person who made it.

confession and avoidance. A plea in which a defendant admits allegations but pleads additional facts that deprive the admitted facts of an adverse legal effect. • For example, a plea of contributory negligence (before the advent of comparative negligence) was a confession and avoidance. — Also termed avoidance; plea in confession and avoidance; plea of confession and avoidance.

confession of judgment. 1. A person's agreeing to the entry of judgment upon the occurrence or nonoccurrence of an event, such as making a payment. 2. A judgment taken against a debtor by the creditor, based on the debtor's written consent. 3. The paper on which the person so agrees, before it is entered. — Also termed confessed judgment; cog- novit judgment; statement of confession. See COGNOVIT. Cf. WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

confidence. 1. Assured expectation; firm trust; faith <the partner has confidence in the associate's work>. 2. Reliance on another's discretion; a relation of trust <she took her coworker into her confidence>. 3. A communication made in trust and not intended for public disclosure; specif., a communication protected by the attorney-client or similar privilege <the confidences between lawyer and client>. • Under the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, a lawyer cannot reveal a client's confidence unless the client consents after full disclosure. DR 4-101. Cf. SECRET (2). — confide, vb.

confidence game. A means of obtaining money or property whereby a person intentionally misrepresents facts to gain the victim's trust so that the victim will transfer money or property to the person. — Also termed con game; con.

confidential, adj. 1. (Of information) meant to be kept secret <confidential settlement terms>. 2. (Of a relationship) characterized by trust and a willingness to confide in the other .

confidential communication. See COMMUNICATION.

confidentiality, n. 1. Secrecy; the state of having the dissemination of certain information restricted. 2. The relation between lawyer and client or guardian and ward, or between spouses, with regard to the trust that is placed in the one by the other.

confidential relationship. See FIDUCIARY RELATIONSHIP.

confidential source. A person who provides information to a law-enforcement agency or to a journalist on the express or implied guarantee of anonymity. • Confidentiality is protected both under the Federal Freedom of Information Act (for disclosures to law enforcement) and under the First Amendment (for disclosures to journalists).

confinee. A person held in confinement.

confinement, n. The act of imprisoning or restraining someone; the state of being imprisoned or restrained <solitary confinement>. — confine, vb.

confirm, vb. 1. To give formal approval to <confirm the bankruptcy plan>. 2. To verify or corroborate <confirm that the order was signed>. 3. To make firm or certain <the judgment confirmed the plaintiff's right to possession>.

confirmatio (kon-fər-may-shee-oh). [Latin "confirmation"] Hist. A confirmation of a voidable estate. See CONFIRMATION (4).

confirmatio crescens (kon-fər-may-shee-oh kres-enz). [Latin "growing confirmation"] A confirmation that enlarges an estate.

confirmatio diminuens (kon-fər-may-shee-oh di-min-yoo-enz). [Latin "diminishing confirmation"] A confirmation that decreases the services that a tenant must perform.

confirmatio perficiens (kon-fər-may-shee-oh per-fish-ee-enz). [Latin "perfecting confirmation"] A confirmation that ratifies a wrongful and defeasible title, or makes a conditional estate absolute. See CONFIRMATION (4).

Confirmatio Chartarum (kon-fər-may-shee-oh kahr-tair-əm). [Latin "confirmation of the charters"] Hist. A declaration first made by Henry III in 1225 confirming the guarantees of Magna Carta and the Charter of the Forest. • It was not enrolled until 1297, when, during the reign of Edward I, it was enacted, thus introducing these charters into the common law. — Also spelled Confirmatio Cartarum.

"For lawyers, the really important date is neither 1215 nor 1225, when Henry's Charter took its final form, but 1297, when Edward I, in his Inspeximus, confirmed the Charter of 1225 and the Forest Charter, which was issued at the same time (Confirmatio Chartarum). The important element in the Confirmatio is the statement that the Charter might be pleaded in every royal court, either to support a claim or a defense. The Charter becomes in this way part of the law — the Common Law — which, in 1297, was already a definite concept although it was not yet quite the equivalent of the law of England. Until then, the political aspects of the Charter had been much the more important." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 156 (1936).

confirmation, n. 1. The act of giving formal approval <Senate confirmation hearings>. 2. The act of verifying or corroborating; a statement that verifies or corroborates <the journalist sought confirmation of the district attorney's remarks>. 3. The act of ratifying a voidable estate; a type of conveyance in which a voidable estate is made certain or a particular estate is increased <deed of confirmation>. 4. Civil law. A declaration that corrects a null provision of an obligation in order to make the provision enforceable. 5. Commercial law. A bank's agreement to honor a letter of credit issued by another bank. — confirmatory (kən-fər-mə-tor-ee), adj. Cf. RATIFICATION.

silent confirmation. A bank's confirmation based on the request of the beneficiary of the credit rather than the issuing bank.

confirmation of sale. A court's approval — usu. in the form of a docket entry or order — of the terms of a court-ordered sale.

confirmation slip. The form verifying a purchase or sale of a security, usu. mailed by the broker to the investor. — Also termed transaction slip; sold note.

confirmatio perficiens. See CONFIRMATIO.

confirmavi (kən-fər-may-vī). [Latin] Hist. I have confirmed. • The emphatic word in a deed of confirmation. See CONFIRMATION (3).

confirmed letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

confirnee (kən-fər-mee). Hist. The grantee of a deed of confirmation. See CONFIRMATION (3).

confirming bank. See BANK.

confirmor (kən-fər-mər or -mor). Hist. The grantor of a deed of confirmation. See CONFIRMATION (3).

confiscable (kən-fis-kə-bəl or kən-fə-skə-bəl), adj. (Of property) liable to confiscation; subject to forfeiture <confiscable contraband>.

confiscare (kən-fi-skair-ee), vb. [Latin con "together" + fiscus "treasury"] Hist. To seize (property) for the government.

confiscate (kən-fə-skayt), vb. 1. To appropriate (property) as forfeited to the government. 2. To seize (property) by authority of law.

confiscation (kən-fi-skay-shən), n. 1. Seizure of property for the public treasury. 2. Seizure of property by actual or supposed authority. — confiscatory (kən-fis-kə-tor-ee), adj. — confiscator (kən-fə-skay-tər), n.

confiscatory rate. See RATE.

confitens reus (kən-fə-tenz ree-əs). [Latin "confessing accused"] Hist. An accused person who admits committing the offense.

conflicting evidence. See EVIDENCE.

conflicting presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

conflict of authority. 1. A disagreement between two or more courts, often courts of coordinate jurisdiction, on a point of law. 2. A disagreement between two or more treatise authors or other scholars, esp. in an area in which scholarly authority is paramount, such as public or private international law.

conflict of interest. 1. A real or seeming incompatibility between one's private interests and one's public or fiduciary duties. 2. A real or seeming incompatibility between the interests of two of a lawyer's clients, such that the lawyer is disqualified from representing both clients if the dual representation adversely affects either client or if the clients do not consent.

conflict of personal laws. 1. A difference of laws between a jurisdiction's general laws and the laws of a racial or religious group, such as a conflict between federal law and American Indian tribal law. 2. A difference between personal laws. See PERSONAL LAW.

false conflict of laws. 1. A situation resembling but not embodying an actual conflict because the potentially applicable laws do not differ, because the laws' underlying policies have the same objective, or because one of the laws is not meant to apply to the case before the court. 2. The situation in which, although a case has a territorial connection to two or more states whose laws conflict with one another, there is no real conflict because one state has a dominant interest in having its law chosen to govern the case — hence there is no real conflict. 3. The situation in which the laws of all states that are relevant to the facts in dispute either are the same or would produce the same decision in the case. — Often shortened to false conflict.

2. The body of jurisprudence that undertakes to reconcile such differences or to decide what law is to govern in these situations; the principles of choice of law. — Often shortened (in sense 2) to conflicts. — Also termed (in international contexts) private international law; international private law.

"The phrase [conflict of laws], although inadequate, because it does not cover questions as to jurisdiction, or as to the execution of foreign judgments, is better than any other." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 421 (13th ed. 1924).

conflict out, vb. To disqualify (a lawyer or judge) on the basis of a conflict of interest <the judge was conflicted out of the case by his earlier representation of one of the litigants>.

conformed copy. See COPY.

conforming, adj. Being in accordance with contractual obligations <conforming goods> <conforming conduct>. UCC § 2-102(a)(8).

conforming use. See USE (1).

Conformity Act. Hist. An 1872 federal statute providing that the practice and procedure in federal district courts (other than in equity and admiralty matters) must conform to the practice and procedure used by the state courts for like cases. • The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (effective in 1938) superseded the Conformity Act.

"[E]ven where there was conformity, it was to be 'as near as may be,' and this was understood by the Court to make the Conformity Act 'to some extent only directory and advisory' and to permit the federal judge to disregard a state practice that would, in his view, 'unwisely encumber the administration of the law, or tend to defeat the ends of justice.' With all these exceptions to conformity, and with the judge left somewhat at large to decide when he would conform, it is hardly surprising that the result was, in the view of a distinguished commentator, 'a mixture of conflicting decisions, which have served to cloud the whole subject in hideous confusion and shifting certainty.'" Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 61, at 425-26 (5th ed. 1994) (quoting Indianapolis & St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Horst, 93 U.S. 291, 300-01 (1876)).

conformity hearing. 1. A court-ordered hearing to determine whether the judgment or decree prepared by the prevailing party conforms to the decision of the court. 2. A hearing before a federal agency or department to determine whether a state-submitted plan complies with the requirements of federal law. • This type of hearing is common in cases involving social services.

Confrontation Clause. The Sixth Amendment provision guaranteeing a criminal defendant's right to directly confront an accusing witness and to cross-examine that witness.

confusio (kən-fyoo-zhee-oh). [fr. Latin confundere "to pour together"] 1. Roman law. An inseparable mixture of liquid property belonging to different owners. Cf. COMMIXTIO. 2. Scots law. A doctrine whereby a lesser right is absorbed into a greater right and is thus extinguished.

confusion. 1. CONFUSION OF GOODS. 2. MERGER (8).

"Confusion is the intermingling of two or more pieces of personal property so that the property rights in each can no longer be distinguished. Thereafter, no specific identification or separation of the formerly separate chattel is possible. Such an intermingling occurs most often with fungible goods like gas, oil, grain, mineral ore, or unmarked timber." Barlow Burke, Personal Property in a Nutshell 379 (2d ed. 1993).

confusion of boundaries. Hist. The branch of equity that deals with the settlement of disputed or uncertain boundaries.

confusion of debts. See MERGER (8).

confusion of goods. The mixture of things of the same nature but belonging to different owners so that the identification of the things is no longer possible. • If this occurs by common consent of the owners, they are owners in common, but if the mixture is done willfully by one person alone, that person loses all right in the property unless (1) the goods can be distinguished and separated among owners, or (2) the mixing person's goods are equal in value to the goods with which they were intermingled. Confusion of goods combines the civil-law concepts of confusio (a mixture of liquids) and commixtio (a mixture of dry items). — Also termed intermixture of goods.

confusion of rights. See MERGER (8).

confusion of titles. Civil law. The merger of two titles to the same land in the same person. Cf. MERGER (8).

con game. See CONFIDENCE GAME.

congeable (kon-jee-ə-bəl), adj. [fr. French congé "permission"] Hist. Lawful; permissible.

congé d'accorder (kawn-zhay da-kor-day). [Law French] Hist. Leave to accord. • Courts used this phrase in fictitious land-title lawsuits to grant the defendant permission to agree with the plaintiff's allegations. See FINE (1).

congé d'emparrer (kawn-zhay dawm-pahr-lay). [French] Hist. Leave to imparl. • This phrase was formerly used by a defendant to request leave of court for additional time to file a responsive pleading. See IMPARLANCE.

congeries (kon-jeer-eez or kon-jə-reez). A collection or aggregation .

conglomerate (kən-glom-ər-it), n. A corporation that owns unrelated enterprises in a wide variety of industries. — conglomerate (kən-glom-ə-rayt), vb. — conglomerate (kən-glom-ər-it), adj.

conglomerate merger. See MERGER.

congress, n. 1. A formal meeting of delegates or representatives. 2. (cap.) The legislative body of the federal government, created under U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 and consisting of the Senate and the House of Representatives. — congressional, adj.

congressional committee. See COMMITTEE.

congressional district. See DISTRICT.

Congressional Globe. A privately issued record of the proceedings in Congress. • The Globe was the sole record of congressional speeches and statements from 1833 until the publicly printed Congressional Record appeared in 1873.

congressional immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

congressional intent. See LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

congressional power. See POWER.

Congressional Record. The published record of the daily proceedings in the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives. • Members of Congress are allowed to edit their speeches before printing, and they may insert material never actually spoken by obtaining permission from their respective houses to print or extend their remarks.

congressional survey. See government survey under SURVEY.

conjectio (kən-jek-shee-oh), vb. [Latin “to infer”] Roman law. (Of a court) to draw a conclusion from evidence; to infer a fact from the evidence presented.

conjectio causae (kən-jek-shee-oh kaw-zee). [Latin “putting together of a cause”] Roman law. A summary presentation of a case before the court by the parties or their advocates.

conjectural choice, rule of. The principle that no basis for recovery is presented when all theories of causation rest only on conjecture.

conjecture (kən-jek-chər), n. A guess; supposition; surmise. — conjecture (kən-jek-chər), vb. — conjectural (kən-jek-chər-əl), adj.

conjoint (kən-joynt). A person connected with another in a joint interest or obligation, such as a cotenant or spouse.

conjoint robbery. See ROBBERY.

conjoint will. See joint will under WILL.

conjudex (kon-joo-deks). [fr. Latin con “together” + judex “judge”] Hist. An associate judge.

conjugal (kon-jə-gəl), adj. Of or relating to the married state, often with an implied emphasis on sexual relations between spouses <the prisoner was allowed a private bed for conjugal visits>.

conjugal rights. The rights and privileges arising from the marriage relationship, including the mutual rights of companionship, support, and sexual relations. • Loss of conjugal rights amounts to loss of consortium. See CONSORTIUM.

conjugium (kən-joo-jee-əm), n. [fr. Latin con “together” + jugum “yoke”] Roman law. The condition of being married.

conjuncta (kən-jəŋk-tə). [Latin] Civil law. Things (usu. words or phrases) that are joined together. Cf. DISJUNCTA.

conjunctim (kən-jəŋk-tim), adv. [Latin] Roman law. Conjointly. • Heirs instituted conjunctim, for example, became coheirs with equal shares. Cf. DISJUNCTIM.

conjunctim et divisim (kən-jəŋk-timet də-vi-zim or -sim). [Latin] Hist. Jointly and severally.

conjunctive denial. See DENIAL.

conjuratio (kon-juu-ray-shee-oh). [Latin] CONJURATION.

conjunction (kon-jə-ray-shən). Hist. 1. A plot or compact made by persons who swear to each other to do something that will result in public harm. 2. The offense of attempting a conference with evil spirits to discover some secret or effect some purpose; witchcraft; sorcery.

“Coniuration (coniuratio) is the very French word drawne from the latine, which as it is compounded of (con & iuro) so it signifieth a compact or plot, made by men combining themselves together by oath or promise, to do some publique harme. But in our common lawe, it is especially used for such as have personall conference with the devill or evill spirit, to know any secret, or to effect any purpose. And the difference that I have observed (how truly let those judge that be beter skilled in these maters) betweene coniuration and witchcraft, is because the one seemeth, by prayers and invocation of Gods powerfull names, to compell the devill, to say or doe what he commandeth him: the other dealeth rather by a friendly and voluntarie conference or agreement betweene him or her and the devill or familiar, to have her or his desires and turnes served in lieu of blood, or other gift offered unto him, especially of his or her soule.” John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

conjurator (kon-jə-ray-tər). Hist. A person who swears an oath with others; a coconspirator.

connecting factors. Conflict of laws. Factual or legal circumstances that help determine the choice of law by linking an action or individual with a state or jurisdiction. • An example of a connecting factor is a party’s domicile within a state.

connecting-up doctrine. The rule allowing evidence to be admitted on condition that the party offering it will adduce other evidence to show relevance.

connexity (kə-nek-sə-tee). Connectedness; the quality of being connected. • In some states, connexity expresses the relationship that must exist between a foreign party (such as a corporation) and the state for a plaintiff to maintain personal jurisdiction over the party; generally, the claim must arise from a transaction connected with the activities of the party in the state.

connivance (kə-ni-vənts), n. 1. The ignoring of a wrongdoer’s illegal conduct; esp., a secret or indirect condonation of another’s unlawful act. 2. Family law. In a divorce action, a defense that points to the plaintiff’s corrupt consent, implied or express, to the action being complained of.

connive (kə-niv), vb. 1. To knowingly overlook another’s wrongdoing. 2. Loosely, to conspire.

connubium (kə-n[y]oo-bee-əm), n. [fr. Latin con “together” + nubere “to marry”] Roman law. 1. The legal capacity to wed. 2. The collection of rights that accompany a marriage between persons who have the capacity to marry. — Also spelled conubium. — Also termed jus connubii. See CONCUBINATUS; JUSTAE NUPTIAE.

“The word connubium denotes properly the right to intermarry with Roman citizens; and hence to contract a Roman marriage, according to the peculiar forms and with the peculiar incidents and effects of marriage between Roman citizens. Chief among these incidents or effects was the patria potestas, or life-long control of the father over his children, which, as we shall soon see, was among the most remarkable peculiarities of the Roman system. In general, connubium embraces the peculiar rights of Roman citizens, so far as they pertain to family relations.” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 116 (1881).

conqueror, n. [fr. Law French conquerir “to acquire”] Hist. The first person who acquired land by purchase; one who first brought an estate into a family. See CONQUEST (2); PURCHASE (2).

conqueror, vb. [Latin] To complain. • Conqueror served as a declaratory statement in petitions, often by introducing the complaint: Conqueror quod . . . (“I complain that. . .”).

conquest. 1. Int’l law. An act of force by which, during a war, a belligerent occupies territory within an enemy country with the intention of extending its sovereignty over that territory. • That intention is usu. explained in a proclamation or some other legal act. 2. Hist. The acquisition of land by any method other than descent, esp. by purchase. 3. Hist. The land so acquired. Cf. PURCHASE (2).

“What we call purchase, perquisitio, the feudists called conquest, conquaestus, or conquisitio: both denoting any means of acquiring an estate out of the common course of inheritance. And this is still the proper phrase in the law of Scotland: as it was, among the Norman jurists, who stiled the first purchasor (that is, he who first brought the estate into the family which at present owns it) the conqueror or conquereur. Which seems to be all that was meant by the appellation which was given to William the Norman, when his manner of ascending the throne of England was, in his own and his successors’ charters, and by the historians of the times, entitled conquaestus, and himself conquaestor or conquisitor; signifying, that he was the first of his family who acquired the crown of England, and from whom therefore all future claims by descent must be derived: though now, from our disuse of the feudal sense of the word, together with the reflection on his forcible method of acquisition, we are apt to annex the idea of victory to this name of conquest or conquisition; a title which, however just with regard to the crown, the conqueror never pretended with regard to the realm of England; nor, in fact, ever had." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 242-43 (1766).

conquisitio (kən- or kəng-kwi-zish-ee-oh). [Latin "search"] See CONQUEST (2). — Also termed conquisition.

conquisitor (kən- or kəng-kwiz-ə-tər). [Latin "one who searches"] See CONQUEROR (1).

consanguine brothers. See BROTHERS.

consanguineo. See COSINAGE.

consanguineus (kon-sang-gwin-ee-əs), n. [Latin "related by blood"] Hist. A person related to another by blood; a consanguineous relative.

consanguineus frater (kon-sang-gwin-ee-əs fray-tər). [Latin "blood brother"] Hist. A half-brother by the same father.

consanguineus uterinus (kon-sang-gwin-ee-əs yoo-tə-rī-nəs). [Latin "blood relative by the uterus"] Hist. A half-brother by the same mother.

consanguinitas (kon-sang-gwin-ə-tas). [Latin "relationship by blood"] Roman law. The relationship between siblings who have the same father.

consanguinity (kon-sang-gwin-ə-tee), n. The relationship of persons of the same blood or origin. — consanguineous, adj. See prohibited degree under DEGREE. Cf. AFFINITY.

collateral consanguinity. The relationship between persons who have the same ancestor but do not descend or ascend from one another (for example, uncle and nephew, etc.).

lineal consanguinity. The relationship between persons who are directly descended or ascended from one another (for example, mother and daughter, great-grandfather and grandson, etc.).

conscience. 1. The moral sense of right or wrong; esp., a moral sense applied to one's own judgment and actions. 2. In law, the moral rule that requires justice and honest dealings between people.

conscience of the court. 1. The court's equitable power to decide issues based on notions of fairness and justice. 2. A standard applied by the court in deciding whether the parties or a jury has acted within limits. • Thus, in some cases, a jury's award of damages is upset because it is said to "shock the conscience of the court."

conscientious objector. A person who for moral or religious reasons is opposed to participating in any war, and who is therefore deferred from military conscription but is subject to serving in civil work for the nation's health, safety, or interest. Cf. PACIFIST.

conscionable (kon-shə-nə-bəl), adj. Conforming with good conscience; just and reasonable . — conscionableness, conscionability, n. Cf. UNCONSCIONABLE.

consciously parallel. Antitrust. Of, relating to, or characterizing the conduct of a party who has knowledge of a competitor's action (such as raising prices) and who makes an independent decision to take the same action. • In some cases this is viewed as evidence of a conspiracy.

conscious parallelism. Antitrust. An act of two or more businesses intentionally engaging in monopolistic conduct.

conscription. See DRAFT (2).

consecratio capitis (kon-sə-kray-shee-oh kap-i-tis). [Latin "consecrating the body"] Roman law. The act of declaring a wrongdoer an outlaw who could be killed on sight; the punishing of criminal behavior by relegating an offender to the gods, i.e., leaving the person outside divine and human protection. See SACER; OUTLAWRY.

consecutive sentences. See SENTENCE.

consecutive tortfeasors. See TORTFEASOR.

consensual (kən-sen-shoo-əl), adj. Having, expressing, or occurring with full consent. — Also termed consentaneous; consentient.

consensual contract. See CONTRACT.

consensual crime. See victimless crime under CRIME.

consensual marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

consensus ad idem (kən-sen-səs ad ī-dem). [Latin] An agreement of parties to the same thing; a meeting of minds. — Also termed consensus in idem.

"Agreement between the parties or consensus in idem is the basis of contractual obligation...." 2 David M. Walker, Principles of Scottish Private Law 11 (4th ed. 1988).

consent, n. Agreement, approval, or permission as to some act or purpose, esp. given voluntarily by a competent person. • Consent is an affirmative defense to assault, battery, and related torts, as well as such torts as defamation, invasion of privacy, conversion, and trespass. — consent, vb. — consensual, adj.

"The consent [to a contract] is none the less 'genuine' and 'real,' even though it be induced by fraud, mistake, or duress. Consent may be induced by a mistaken hope of gain or a mistaken estimate of value or by the lie of a third person, and yet there is a contract and we do not doubt the 'reality of the consent.' Fraud, mistake, and duress are merely collateral operative facts that co-exist with the expressions of consent and have a very important effect upon the resulting legal relations." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 199 n.1 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

express consent. Consent that is clearly and unmistakably stated.

implied consent. Consent inferred from one's conduct rather than from one's direct expression.

informed consent. 1. A person's agreement to allow something to happen, made with full knowledge of the risks involved and the alternatives. 2. A patient's knowing choice about treatment or a procedure, made after a physician or other healthcare provider discloses whatever information a reasonably prudent provider in the medical community would provide to a patient regarding the risks involved in the proposed treatment.

consentaneous, adj. See CONSENSUAL.

consent calendar. 1. A schedule of informal hearings involving a child, usu. arranged when it appears that the child's best interests will be served, if the case is heard informally. • The child and all interested parties must first consent before the case goes on the consent calendar. 2. A list of legislative bills that, having no anticipated objection, may be enacted into law without a vote. • The term also applies to a similar list maintained by an administrative agency. — Also termed (in sense 2) unanimous-consent calendar.

consent decree. See DECREE.

consent dividend. See DIVIDEND.

consentient, adj. See CONSENSUAL.

consent judgment. See agreed judgment under JUDGMENT.

consent jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

consent order. See consent decree under DECREE.

consent search. See SEARCH.

consent to be sued. Agreement in advance to be sued in a particular forum. See COGNOVIT CLAUSE.

consent to notice. A provision stating that notice required by a document may be given beforehand or to a designated person.

consequential contempt. See CONTEMPT.

consequential damages. See DAMAGES.

consequential economic loss. See ECONOMIC LOSS.

consequential loss. See LOSS.

conservation. Environmental law. The supervision, management, and maintenance of natural resources; the protection, improvement, and use of natural resources in a way that ensures the highest social as well as economic benefits.

conservator (kən-sər-və-tər or kən-sər-vay-tər), n. A guardian, protector, or preserver. — conservatorship, n.

managing conservator. 1. A person appointed by a court to manage the estate or affairs of someone who is legally incapable of doing so; GUARDIAN (1). 2. Family law. In the child-custody laws of some states, the parent who has primary custody of a child, with the right to establish the child's primary domicile. See CUSTODY.

possessory conservator. Family law. In the child-custody laws of some states, the parent who has visitation rights, but not the primary custody rights, of the child.

conservator of the peace. See PEACE OFFICER.

consideration, n. 1. Something of value (such as an act, a forbearance, or a return promise) received by a promisor from a promisee. • Consideration, or a substitute such as promissory estoppel, is necessary for an agreement to be enforceable. 2. Hist. A court's judgment. — Also termed (in Roman law) consideratio.

"A 'consideration' has been explained to be 'any act of the plaintiff from which the defendant, or a stranger, derives a benefit or advantage, or any labour, detriment, or inconvenience sustained by the plaintiff, however small the detriment or inconvenience may be, if such act is performed, or inconvenience suffered by the plaintiff with the assent, express or implied, of the defendant, or, in the language of pleading, at the special instance and request of the defendant.'" Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 286 (13th ed. 1924).

"A consideration in its widest sense is the reason, motive, or inducement, by which a man is moved to bind himself by an agreement. It is not for nothing that he consents to impose an obligation upon himself, or to abandon or transfer a right. It is in consideration of such and such a fact that he agrees to bear new burdens or to forgo the benefits which the law already allows him." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 359 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"The word 'consideration' has been around for a long time, so it is tempting to think we have had a theory of consideration for a long time. In fact until the nineteenth century the word never acquired any particular meaning or stood for any theory." Grant Gilmore, The Death of Contract 18 (1974).

adequate consideration. Consideration that is fair and reasonable under the circumstances of the agreement. Cf. sufficient consideration.

"It is helpful to observe precision in use of vocabulary when analyzing consideration issues. Distinguish carefully between 'adequate' consideration and 'sufficient' consideration. 'Adequacy' refers to whether there was a fair bargain involving an exchange of equal values. 'Sufficiency' refers to whether the consideration is legally sufficient to enforce a promise, and this requires only that there be some legal detriment incurred as a bargained exchange for the other party's promise." Claude Rohwer & Gordon D. Schaber, Contracts in a Nutshell 83 (4th ed. 1997).

and other good and valuable consideration. See other consideration.

concurrent consideration. Consideration arising at the same time as other consideration, or where the promises are simultaneous.

continuing consideration. An act or performance extending over time.

due consideration. See sufficient consideration.

executed consideration. A consideration that has been wholly given; past consideration as opposed to present or future consideration.

executory consideration (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee). A consideration that is to be given only after formation of the contract; present or future consideration as opposed to past consideration.

express consideration. Consideration that is specifically stated in an instrument.

fair consideration. 1. Consideration that is equal in value to the thing being exchanged; consideration given for property or for an obligation in either of the following circumstances: (1) when given in good faith as an exchange for the property or obligation, or (2) when the property or obligation is received in good faith to secure a present advance or prior debt in an amount not disproportionately small as compared with the value of the property or obligation obtained. — Also termed fair and valuable consideration. 2. Consideration that is honest, reasonable, and free from suspicion, but not strictly adequate or full.

future consideration. 1. Consideration to be given in the future; esp., consideration that is due after the other party's performance. 2. Consideration that is a series of performances, some of which will occur after the other party's performance. 3. Consideration the specifics of which have not been agreed on between the parties. Cf. past consideration.

good and valuable consideration. See legal consideration.

good consideration. 1. Consideration based on natural love or affection or on moral duty <good consideration, being based purely on affection, does not amount to valuable consideration>. • Such consideration is usu. not valid for the enforcement of a contract. — Also termed meritorious consideration; moral consideration.

"A good consideration is that of blood, or the natural love and affection which a person has to his children, or any of his relatives. . . . A good consideration is not of itself sufficient to support a promise, any more than the moral obligation which arises from a man's passing his word; neither will the two together make a binding contract; thus a promise by a father to make a gift to his child will not be enforced against him. The consideration of natural love and affection is indeed good for so little in law, that it is not easy to see why it should be called a good consideration . . ." Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Personal Property 95–96 (11th ed. 1881).

"Stated simply, good or meritorious consideration is nothing more than motive or moral obligation." 3 Richard A. Lord, Williston on Contracts § 7:16, at 325–26 (4th ed. 1992).

2. Loosely, valuable consideration; consideration that is adequate to support the bargained-for exchange between the parties <his agreement to pay the offering price was good consideration for the sale>.

gratuitous consideration (grə-t[y]oo-i-təs). Consideration that, not being founded on any detriment to the party who gives it, will not support a contract; a performance for which a party was already obligated.

illegal consideration. Consideration that is contrary to the law or public policy, or prejudicial to the public interest. • Such consideration does not support a contract.

immoral consideration. A consideration that so offends societal norms as to be invalid. • A contract supported by immoral consideration is usu. voidable or unenforceable.

implied consideration. Consideration that is inferred by law from the parties' actions.

impossible consideration. Consideration stemming from a promise or performance that cannot be fulfilled.

inadequate consideration. Consideration that does not involve an exchange of equal values.

invented consideration. Fictional consideration created by a court to prevent the invalidation of a contract that lacks consideration.

legally sufficient consideration. See sufficient consideration.

meritorious consideration. See good consideration.

moral consideration. See good consideration.

nominal consideration. Consideration that is so insignificant as to bear no relationship to the value of what is being exchanged (e.g., $10 for a piece of real estate). • Such consideration can be valid, since courts do not ordinarily examine the adequacy of consideration (although they do often inquire into such issues as fraud and duress). — Also termed peppercorn.

"Offers made in consideration of one dollar paid or promised are often irrevocable The irrevocability of an offer may be worth much or little to the offeree, and the courts do not ordinarily inquire into the adequacy of the consideration bargained for. Hence a comparatively small payment may furnish consideration for the irrevocability of an offer proposing a transaction involving much larger sums. But gross disproportion between the payment and the value of the option commonly indicates that the payment was not in fact bargained for but was a mere formality or pretense. In such a case there is no consideration Nevertheless, such a nominal consideration is regularly held sufficient to support a short-time option proposing an exchange on fair terms. The fact that the option is an appropriate preliminary step in the conclusion of a socially useful transaction provides a sufficient substantive basis for enforcement, and a signed writing taking a form appropriate to a bargain satisfies the desiderata of form. In the absence of statute, however, the bargaining form is essential: a payment of one dollar by each party to the other is so obviously not a bargaining transaction that it does not provide even the form of an exchange." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 87 cmt. b (1981).

other consideration. Additional things of value to be provided under the terms of a contract, usu. unspecified in the contract, deed, or bill of sale, because they are too numerous to conveniently list, or to avoid public knowledge of the total amount of consideration. — Also termed other good and valuable consideration.

past consideration. An act done or a promise given by a promisee before making a promise sought to be enforced. • Past consideration is not consideration for the new promise because it has not been given in exchange for this promise (although exceptions exist for new promises to pay debts barred by limitations or debts discharged in bankruptcy). See PREEXISTING-DUTY RULE. Cf. future consideration.

"A past consideration is, in effect, no consideration at all; that is to say, it confers no benefit on the promisor, and involves no detriment to the promisee in respect of his promise. It is some act or forbearance in time past by which a man has benefited without thereby incurring any legal liability." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 149 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

sufficient consideration. Enough consideration — as a matter of law — to support a contract. — Also termed due consideration; legally sufficient consideration. Cf. adequate consideration.

valuable consideration. Consideration that is valid under the law; consideration that either confers a pecuniarily measurable benefit on one party or imposes a pecuniarily measurable detriment on the other. — Also termed good and valuable consideration; legal consideration.

"By a valuable consideration is meant something of value given or promised by one party in exchange for the promise of the other. . . . The thing thus given by way of consideration must be of some value. That is to say, it must be material to the interests of one or the other or both of the parties. It must either involve some gain or benefit to the promisor by way of recompense for the burden of his promise, or it must involve some loss or disadvantage to the promisee for which the benefit of the promise is a recompense." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 360 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

consideration, failure of. See FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

consideration, want of. See WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

consideratum est per curiam (kən-sid-ə-ray-təm est pər kyoor-ee-əm). [Latin] Hist. It is considered by the court. • This was the formal language preceding the judgment of a common-law court. Cf. IDEO CONSIDERATUM EST.

"A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury. The language of the judgment is not, therefore, that 'it is decreed,' or 'resolved,' by the court, but that 'it is considered by the court,' consideratum est per curiam, that the plaintiff recover his debt, etc. In the early writers, considerare, consideratio always means the judgment of a court." 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary 619 (8th ed. 1914).

consign (kən-sɪn), vb. 1. To transfer to another's custody or charge. 2. To give (goods) to a carrier for delivery to a designated recipient. 3. To give (merchandise or the like) to another to sell, usu. with the understanding that the seller will pay the owner for the goods from the proceeds.

consignee (kən-si-nee or kən-). One to whom goods are consigned.

consignment (kən-sɪn-mənt). 1. The act of consigning goods for custody or sale. 2. A quantity of goods delivered by this act, esp. in a single shipment. 3. Under the UCC, a transaction in which a person delivers goods to a merchant for the purpose of sale, and (1) the merchant deals in goods of that kind under a name other than the name of the person making delivery, is not an auctioneer, and is not generally known by its creditor to be substantially engaged in selling others' goods, (2) with respect to each delivery, the aggregate value of the goods is $1,000 or more at the time of delivery, (3) the goods are not consumer goods immediately before delivery, and (4) the transaction does not create a security interest that secures an obligation. UCC § 9-102(a)(13).

consignment sale. See SALE.

consignor (kən-si-nər or kən-si-nor). One who dispatches goods to another on consignment.

consiliarius (kən-sil-ee-air-ee-əs). [fr. Latin consilium "advice"] 1. Roman law. A person who advises a magistrate; one who sits with the judge and assists in deciding cases. See CONCILIUM (1). 2. Hist. A counselor learned in law. See APOCRISARIUS.

consimili casu (kən-sim-ə-ll kay-s[y]oo), n. [Latin "in a like case"] Hist. A writ of entry allowing the holder of a reversionary interest in land to sue for the return of land alienated by a life tenant or a tenant by the curtesy. • This writ originated in the Statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. I) ch. 24 (1285), which expanded the writs available to litigants by requiring the Chancery to issue a writ for any situation that called for a writ similar to one that had previously issued consimili casu ("in a like case"). Specifically, the statute provided (in Latin) that "as often as it shall happen in chancery that in one case a writ is found, and in a like case [in consimili casu], falling under the same right, and requiring like remedy, no writ is to be found, the clerks of chancery shall agree in making a writ . . ." Many other writs were framed under Westminster 2, but this particular writ's close association with the statute led to its taking the generic name. See ACTIONES NOMINATAE.

Consistorium (kən-sis-tor-ee-əm). [Latin] Roman law. An imperial council that functioned both as a general council of state and as a supreme court of law.

consistory court (kən-sis-tər-ee). Eccles. law. In England, a diocesan court exercising jurisdiction over church property, such as a cemetery, and other ecclesiastical matters. • Consistory courts are presided over by the bishop's chancellor or the chancellor's commissary. In some instances, appeals may be taken to the High Court of Justice. Cf. BISHOP'S COURT.

consobrini (kən-sə-bri-ni). [Latin] Roman law. First cousins; children of brothers or sisters.

consol (kən-sol or kən-sol). See annuity bond under BOND (3).

Consolato del Mare (kawn-soh-lah-toh del mah-ray). [Italian "consulate of the sea"] Hist. Maritime law. An influential collection of European maritime customs, referred to by commercial judges (consuls) in ports of the kingdom of Aragon and other Mediterranean maritime towns. • The Consolato del Mare was published in Barcelona in the 15th century and soon became one of the leading maritime codes of Europe.

consolidate, vb. 1. To combine or unify into one mass or body. 2. Corporations. To unite (two or more corporations) to create one new corporation. 3. Civil procedure. To combine, through court order, two or more actions involving the same parties or issues into a single action ending in a single judgment or, sometimes, in separate judgments. Cf. MERGER (7).

consolidated appeal. See APPEAL.

consolidated bond. See BOND (3).

consolidated financial statement. See FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

consolidated laws. See CODE (1).

consolidated mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985. A federal statute that requires employers who offer group health coverage to their employees to continue to do so for a prescribed period (usu. 18 to 36 months) after employment has terminated so that the employee can continue to benefit from group health rates until becoming a member of another health-insurance plan. • The statute temporarily continues group coverage for a person no longer entitled to receive it, such as a terminated employee or an overage dependent. — Abbr. COBRA.

“In the absence of any type of statutory vesting provision (which would render benefits nonforfeitable), terminated employees were generally left without health care coverage while they were looking for another job. While some state insurance laws provide for limited continuation coverage or individual conversion options, these alternatives were not available in all states Thus, COBRA was designed to fill this void, by providing a statutorily mandated mechanism for enabling terminated employees (and their eligible family members) to continue to have access to group health coverage at group rates until they can get another job or otherwise arrange for replacement coverage.” I.M. Golub et al., COBRA Handbook § 1.1, at 1-2 (1994).

consolidated return. See TAX RETURN.

consolidated school district. See SCHOOL DISTRICT.

consolidated security. See SECURITY.

consolidating statute. See STATUTE.

consolidation, n. 1. The act or process of uniting; the state of being united. 2. Corporations. The unification of two or more corporations by dissolving the existing ones and creating a single new corporation. — Also termed consolidation of corporations. Cf. MERGER (7). 3. Corporations. Archaic. A union of the stock, property, or franchises of two or more companies whereby the conduct of their affairs is permanently — or for a long period — put under one management, whether the agreement between them is by lease, sale, or other form of contract, and whether the effect is the dissolution of one, both, or neither of the companies. 4. Civil procedure. The court-ordered unification of two or more actions, involving the same parties and issues, into a single action resulting in a single judgment or, sometimes, in separate judgments. — Also termed consolidation of actions. Cf. JOINDER. — consolidate, vb. — consolidatory (kən-sol-ə-day-tər-ee), adj.

procedural consolidation. See JOINT ADMINISTRATION.

substantive consolidation. Bankruptcy. The merger of two or more bankruptcy cases, usu. pending against the same debtor or related debtors, into one estate for purposes of distributing the assets, usu. resulting in the two estates sharing assets and liabilities, and in the extinguishment of duplicate claims and claims between the debtors.

consolidation loan. See LOAN.

consolidation of actions. See CONSOLIDATION.

consolidation of corporations. See CONSOLIDATION.

consonant statement. See STATEMENT.

consortium (kən-sor-shee-əm). 1. The benefits that one person, esp. a spouse, is entitled to receive from another, including companionship, cooperation, affection, aid, and (between spouses) sexual relations . See LOSS OF CONSORTIUM.

filial consortium (fil-ee-əl). A child’s society, affection, and companionship given to a parent.

parental consortium. A parent’s society, affection, and companionship given to a child.

spousal consortium. A spouse’s society, affection, and companionship given to the other spouse.

2. Hist. The services of a wife or daughter, the loss of which gives rise to a cause of action. • A husband could, for example, bring an action against a person who had injured his wife, “whereby he lost the help or companionship (of his wife)” (per quod consortium amisit). 3. A group of companies that join or associate in an enterprise <several high-tech businesses formed a consortium to create a new super-computer>. 4. Roman law. A community of undivided goods existing among coheirs after the death of the head of their family (paterfamilias). Pl. consortiums, consortia.

consortship (kon-sort-ship). Maritime law. An agreement by which salvors agree to work together to salvage wrecks, the recovery being apportioned among the salvors. ● Consortships reduce interference from other salvors, and help to prevent collisions at sea between operators attempting to salvage the same wreck.

conspicuous, adj. (Of a term or clause) clearly visible or obvious. ● Whether a printed clause is conspicuous as a matter of law usu. depends on the size and style of the typeface. Under the UCC, a term or clause is conspicuous if it is written in a way that a reasonable person against whom it is to operate ought to notice it. UCC § 1-201(10). See FINE PRINT.

conspicuous place. For purposes of posting notices, a location that is reasonably likely to be seen.

conspiracy, n. An agreement by two or more persons to commit an unlawful act; a combination for an unlawful purpose. ● In criminal law, conspiracy is a separate offense from the crime that is the object of the conspiracy. — Also termed criminal conspiracy. — conspiratorial, adj. Cf. ATTEMPT (2); SOLICITATION (2).

"Conspiracie (conspiratio) though both in Latine and French it be used for an agreement of men, to doe any thing either good or bad: yet in our lawyers bookes, it is alway taken in the evill part." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

"[Conspiracy is an] elastic, sprawling and pervasive offense, . . . so vague that it almost defies definition. Despite certain elementary and essential elements, it also, chameleon-like, takes on a special coloration from each of the many independent offenses on which it may be overlaid. It is always 'predominantly mental in composition' because it consists primarily of a meeting of minds and an intent." Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U.S. 440, 445-48, 69 S.Ct. 716, 719-20 (1949) (Jackson, J., concurring).

bathtub conspiracy. See intra-enterprise conspiracy.

chain conspiracy. A single conspiracy in which each person is responsible for a distinct act within the overall plan, such as an agreement to produce, import, and distribute narcotics in which each person performs only one function. ● All participants are interested in the overall scheme and liable for all other participants' acts in furtherance of that scheme.

"In a 'chain' conspiracy, the court looks to whether the parties serve as links in a chain. In Blumenthal v. United States (1947), the Supreme Court found that the parties had agreed to sell liquor at prices exceeding the ceiling set by regulations of the Office of Price Administration. The Court found that the agreements were steps in the formulation of one larger general conspiracy. By reason of all having knowledge of the plan's general scope and common end, the disposing of whiskey, they could be drawn together in a single conspiracy." Ellen S. Podgor & Jerold H. Israel, White Collar Crime in a Nutshell 52 (2d ed. 1997).

circle conspiracy. See wheel conspiracy.

civil conspiracy. An agreement between two or more persons to commit an unlawful act that causes damage to a person or property.

conspiracy in restraint of trade. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

hub-and-spoke conspiracy. See wheel conspiracy.

intra-enterprise conspiracy. Antitrust. A conspiracy existing between two subsidiaries, divisions, or other parts of the same firm. — Also termed bathtub conspiracy.

sedition conspiracy. A criminal conspiracy to forcibly (1) overthrow or destroy the U.S. government, (2) oppose its authority, (3) prevent the execution of its laws, or (4) seize or possess its property. 18 USCA § 2384.

wheel conspiracy. A conspiracy in which a single member or group (the "hub") separately agrees with two or more other members or groups (the "spokes"). ● The person or group at the hub is the only part liable for all the conspiracies. — Also termed circle conspiracy; hub-and-spoke conspiracy.

conspirator, n. A person who takes part in a conspiracy.

unindicted conspirator. A person who has been identified by law enforcement as a member of a conspiracy, but who has not been named in the indictment charging the person's fellow conspirator with conspiracy. ● Prosecutors often name someone an unindicted conspirator because any statement that the unindicted conspirator has made in the course and furtherance of the conspiracy is admissible against the indicted defendants. — Also termed unindicted coconspirator.

conspire, vb. To engage in conspiracy; to join in a conspiracy.

constable (kon-stə-bəl), n. 1. A peace officer responsible for minor judicial duties, such as serving writs and warrants, but with less authority and smaller jurisdiction than a sheriff. 2. In the United Kingdom, a police officer; also, the title of a police officer. — constabulary (kən-stab-yə-ler-ee), adj. — constabulary (body or force), n.

constablewick (kon-stə-bəl-wik). Hist. In the United Kingdom, the territorial jurisdiction of a constable. Cf. BAILLWICK.

constant dollars. The value of current money expressed as a percentage of its buying power in a previous year as determined by the consumer price index.

constat (kon-stat). [Latin "it is settled"] Hist. A certificate made by the Clerk of the Pipe and the auditors of the Exchequer at the request of a person intending to plead in the Court of Exchequer for the discharge of some item. ● The constat certified what appeared on record.

constate (kən-stayt), vb. To establish, constitute, or ordain. ● Constate usu. appears in relation to corporate documents; for example, the constating instruments of a corporation are its charter, organic law, or grant of powers to it.

constituency. The residents of an electoral district.

constituent, adj. 1. (Of a component) that helps make up or complete a unit or a whole . 2. (Of an assembly) able to frame or amend a constitution .

constituent, n. 1. A person who gives another the authority to act as a representative; a principal who appoints an agent. 2. Someone who is represented by a legislator or other elected official. 3. One part of something that makes up a whole; an element. — constituency, n.

constituent element. An essential component of a crime or cause of action.

constituere (kon-sti-tyoo-ə-ree), vb. [Latin "to appoint"] Hist. To appoint (someone). ● Constituere was used principally in powers of attorney: attornavi et in loco meo constitui ("I have attorned and put in my place").

constituted authority. See AUTHORITY (3).

constitutio (kon-sti-t[y]oo-shee-oh). [Latin "a decree"] 1. Roman law. An imperial decree; a law issued by the emperor; later, a collection of laws. ● The constitutiones took various forms, including orationes (laws submitted to the Senate), edicta (laws — usu. of a general character — put forth by the emperor without Senate approval), mandata (administrative directives to imperial officials), decreta (decisions by the emperor in legal cases), and rescripta (the emperor's responses to questions posed by litigants or imperial officials). Over time, the rapidly increasing number of constitutiones prompted their arrangement into collections such as the Theodosian Code and the Code of Justinian. Pl. constitutiones (kon-sti-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nee-z). See CODEX THEODOSIANUS; JUSTINIAN CODE.

"The name constitutiones, applied to the law-making utterances of the Roman emperors, had a very different meaning from our word 'constitution,' used to denote the fundamental, organic law of the state. Every official public document issuing from the emperor, and creating, declaring, or modifying law, was a constitutio. . . . [A]nd it is hardly necessary to say that, although professing to come from the person of the emperor, they were actually composed by jurists, and usually by those who stood first in their profession." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 6-7 (1881).

2. Civil law. A settlement achieved without a trial; the sum paid according to the settlement.

3. Hist. In England, a statute; a provision of a statute.

constitution. 1. The fundamental and organic law of a nation or state, establishing the conception, character, and organization of its government, as well as prescribing the extent of its sovereign power and the manner of its exercise.

flexible constitution. A constitution that is not defined or set apart in a distinct document and that is not distinguishable from other law in the way in which its terms can be legislatively altered. ● The British constitution is of this type.

rigid constitution. A constitution embodied in a special and distinct enactment, the terms of which cannot be altered by ordinary forms of legislation. ● The U.S. Constitution, which cannot be changed without the consent of three-fourths of the state legislatures or through a constitutional convention, is of this type.

unwritten constitution. The customs and values, some of which are expressed in statutes, that provide the organic and fundamental law of a state or country that does not have a single written law functioning as a constitution.

2. The written instrument embodying this fundamental law.

constitutional, adj. 1. Of or relating to a constitution <constitutional rights>. 2. Proper under a constitution <constitutional actions>.

constitutional challenge. See CHALLENGE (1).

constitutional convention. An assembly of state or national delegates who meet to frame, amend, or revise their constitution.

constitutional court. See COURT.

constitutional-fact doctrine. 1. The rule that federal courts are not bound by an administrative agency's findings of fact when the facts involve whether the agency has exceeded constitutional limitations on its power, esp. regarding personal rights. • Instead, the courts are charged with making an independent inquiry based on the record. 2. The now discredited rule that a federal appellate court is not bound by a trial court's findings of fact when constitutional rights are implicated. Cf. JURISDICTIONAL-FACT DOCTRINE.

constitutional freedom. A basic liberty guaranteed by the Constitution or Bill of Rights, such as the freedom of speech. — Also termed constitutional protection.

constitutional homestead. See HOMESTEAD.

constitutional immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

constitutionality, n. The quality or state of being constitutional <the constitutionality of the senator's bill is questionable>.

constitutionalize, vb. 1. To provide with a constitution <constitutionalize the new government>. 2. To make constitutional; to bring in line with a constitution <the court plans to constitutionalize the segregated school district>. 3. To make a constitutional question out of a question of law <the dissenter accused the majority of unnecessarily constitutionalizing its decision>.

constitutional law. 1. The body of law deriving from the U.S. Constitution and dealing primarily with governmental powers, civil rights, and civil liberties. 2. The body of legal rules that determine the constitution of a state with a flexible constitution.

constitutional limitation. A constitutional provision that restricts the powers of a governmental branch, department, agency, or officer.

constitutional monarchy. See limited monarchy under MONARCHY.

constitutional office. A public position that is created by a constitution, rather than by a statute.

constitutional officer. A government official whose office is created by a constitution, rather than by a statute; one whose term of office is fixed and defined by a constitution.

constitutional protection. See CONSTITUTIONAL FREEDOM.

constitutional question. A legal issue resolvable by the interpretation of a constitution, rather than a statute.

constitutional right. A right guaranteed by a constitution; esp., one guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution or by a state constitution.

constitutional taking. See TAKING (2).

constitutional tort. See TORT.

constitutiones principum. [Latin] Roman law. Roman imperial enactments, which were the sole form of legislation in the third century A.D.

Constitutions of Clarendon. Hist. Statutes enacted in 1164, during the reign of Henry II, by which the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts was limited and the clerics' exemptions from secular jurisdiction were greatly narrowed.

"During the first half of the twelfth century the claims of the church were growing, and the duty of asserting them passed into the hands of men who were not mere theologians but expert lawyers. Then, as all know, came the quarrel between Henry and Becket. In the Constitutions of Clarendon (1164) the king offered to the prelates a written treaty, a treaty which, so he said, embodied the 'customs' of his ancestors, more especially of his grandfather. Becket, after some hesitation, rejected the constitutions. The dispute waxed hot; certain of the customs were condemned by the pope. The murder followed . . . [F]rom [Henry's] time onwards the lay courts, rather than the spiritual, are the aggressors and the victors in almost every contest." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law 124-25 (2d ed. 1898).

constitutor (kon-stə-t[y]oo-tər). [Latin "an orderer, arranger"] Roman law. A person who, by agreement, becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt.

constitutum (kon-sti-t[y]oo-təm). [Latin "agreed arrangement"] Roman law. 1. An agreement to pay (one's own or another's) existing debt. • A constitutum was not a novation; the creditor could still sue the original debtor. It differed from a stipulation because it had to be for an existing debt. 2. The fixing of a day for the repayment of money owed.

constitutum debiti (kon-sti-t[y]oo-təm deb-ə-ti). [Latin “debt agreement”] Roman law. A promise to discharge an existing liability that is either one’s own (constitutum debiti proprii) or another’s (constitutum debiti alieni).

constitutum possessorium (kon-sti-t[y]oo-təm pah-ses-sor-ee-əm). [Latin “possessory agreement”] Roman law. A type of constructive delivery in which mediate possession is transferred while the immediate possession remains in the transferor; the agreement by which this transfer is brought about. • In the context of a security interest, the pledged property may remain in the possession of the debtor, but as bailee of the creditor. For the other two types of constructive delivery, see ATTORNMENT; TRADITIO BREVI MANU.

“[Another] form of constructive delivery is that which the commentators on the civil law have termed constitutum possessorium Any thing may be effectually delivered by means of an agreement that the possessor of it shall for the future hold it no longer on his own account but on account of someone else. . . . [I]f I buy goods from a warehouseman, they are delivered to me so soon as he has agreed with me that he will hold them as warehouseman on my account. The position is then exactly the same as if I had first taken actual delivery of them, and then brought them back to the warehouse, and deposited them there for safe custody.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 306 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

construction, n. 1. The act of building by combining or arranging parts or elements; the thing so built. 2. The act or process of interpreting or explaining the sense or intention of a writing (usu. a statute, opinion, or instrument). — construct (for sense 1), vb. — construe (for sense 2), vb.

“Construction, as applied to written law, is the art or process of discovering and expounding the meaning and intention of the authors of the law with respect to its application to a given case, where that intention is rendered doubtful either by reason of apparently conflicting provisions or directions, or by reason of the fact that the given case is not explicitly provided for in the law.” Henry Campbell Black, Handbook on the Construction and Interpretation of the Laws 1 (1896).

“Some authors have attempted to introduce a distinction between ‘interpretation’ and ‘construction.’ Etymologically there is, perhaps, such a distinction; but it has not been accepted by the profession. For practical purposes any such distinction may be ignored, in view of the real object of both interpretation and construction, which is merely to ascertain the meaning and will of the lawmaking body, in order that it may be enforced.” William M.

Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 337 (3d ed. 1914).

“There is no explanation of the distinction between interpretation and construction [in Blackstone], nor can it be inferred from the matters dealt with under each head. The distinction is drawn in some modern works, but it is not taken in this book because it lacks an agreed basis. Some writers treat interpretation as something which is only called for when there is a dispute about the meaning of statutory words, while speaking of construction as a process to which all statutes, like all other writings, are necessarily subject when read by anyone. Others treat interpretation as something which is mainly concerned with the meaning of statutory words, while regarding construction as a process which mainly relates to the ascertainment of the intention of the legislature.” Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 18 (1976).

contemporaneous construction. An interpretation given at or near the time when a writing was prepared, usu. by one or more persons involved in its preparation. — Also termed contemporaneous and practical interpretation.

liberal construction. An interpretation that applies a writing in light of the situation presented and that tends to effectuate the spirit and purpose of the writing. — Also termed equitable construction; loose construction; broad interpretation.

“Liberal construction . . . expands the meaning of the statute to embrace cases which are clearly within the spirit or reason of the law, or within the evil which it was designed to remedy, provided such an interpretation is not inconsistent with the language used. It resolves all reasonable doubts in favor of the applicability of the statute to the particular case.” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 343 (3d ed. 1914).

literal construction. See strict construction.

purposive construction (pər-pə-siv). An interpretation that looks to the “evil” that the statute is trying to correct (i.e., the statute’s purpose). — Also termed teleological interpretation.

strict construction. 1. An interpretation that considers only the literal words of a writing. — Also termed literal construction; literal interpretation. See STRICT CONSTRUCTIONISM. 2. A construction that considers words narrowly, usu. in their historical context. • This type of construction treats statutory and contractual words with highly restrictive readings. — Also termed strict interpretation. 3. The philosophy underlying strict interpretation of statutes; STRICT CONSTRUCTIONISM.

its spirit or reason, not so as to defeat the manifest purpose of the Legislature, but so as to resolve all reasonable doubts against the applicability of the statute to the particular case." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 343 (3d ed. 1914).

"Strict interpretation is an equivocal expression, for it means either literal or narrow. When a provision is ambiguous, one of its meanings may be wider than the other, and the strict (i.e., narrow) sense is not necessarily the strict (i.e., literal) sense." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 171 n.(t) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

construction act. See ACT (3).

construction bond. See BOND (3).

construction contract. See CONTRACT.

construction financing. See interim financing under FINANCING.

construction lien. See mechanic's lien under LIEN.

construction mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

construction warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

constructive, adj. Legally imputed; having an effect in law though not necessarily in fact. ● Courts usu. give something a constructive effect for equitable reasons <the court held that the shift supervisor had constructive knowledge of the machine's failure even though he did not actually know until two days later>. See LEGAL FICTION. Cf. ACTUAL.

constructive adverse possession. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

constructive assent. See ASSENT.

constructive authority. See AUTHORITY (1).

constructive bailment. See BAILMENT.

constructive breach. See anticipatory breach under BREACH OF CONTRACT.

constructive breaking into a house. A breaking made out by construction of law, as when a burglar gains entry by threat or fraud.

constructive condition. See CONDITION (2).

constructive contempt. See CONTEMPT.

constructive contract. See implied-in-law contract under CONTRACT.

constructive conversion. See CONVERSION (2).

constructive custody. See CUSTODY (1).

constructive malice. See implied malice under MALICE.

constructive murder. See felony murder under MURDER.

constructive notice. See NOTICE.

constructive payment. See PAYMENT.

constructive possession. See POSSESSION.

constructive-receipt doctrine. The rule that gross income under a taxpayer's control before it is actually received (such as accumulated interest income that has not been withdrawn) must be included by the taxpayer in gross income, unless the actual receipt is subject to significant constraints. IRC (26 USCA) § 451.

constructive reduction to practice. See REDUCTION TO PRACTICE.

constructive search. See SEARCH.

constructive seisin. See seisin in law under SEISIN.

constructive service. See SERVICE (2).

constructive taking. See TAKING (1).

constructive total loss. See LOSS.

constructive transfer. See TRANSFER.

constructive trust. See TRUST.

construe (kən-stroo), vb. To analyze and explain the meaning of (a sentence or passage) <the court construed the language of the statute>.

constuprate (kən-st[y]ə-prayt). Archaic. To rape or violate (a person).

consuetudinarius (kən-swə-t[y]oo-di-nair-ee-əs). [fr. Latin consuetudo "custom"] Hist. Eccles. law. A book containing the rites and forms of divine offices or customs of abbeys and monasteries.

consuetudinary law. See LAW.

Consuetudines Feudorum (kən-swə-t[y]oo-dineezyoo-dor-əm). [Law Latin "the customs of fiefs"] Hist. FEUDORUM LIBRI.

consuetudinibus et serviciis (kən-swə-t[y]oo-din-ə-bəs et sərvish-ee-is). [Law Latin "customs and services"] Hist. A writ of right that lay against a tenant who withheld rent or services from the lord.

consuetudo (kən-swə-t[y]oo-doh). [Latin "custom"] 1. Roman law. Custom; long-established usage or practice. 2. Hist. Customary law. ● Consuetudo generally bears this sense, referring to law that has been long approved by the will of the people. It is a broad term that includes both the common law and the statutory law of England. 3. Hist. A duty or tax.

consuetudo anglicana (kən-swə-t[y]oo-doh ang-gli-kay-noh). [Law Latin "the custom of England"] Hist. The English common law, as distinguished from Roman or civil law.

consuetudo curiae (kən-swə-t[y]oo-doh kyooree-ee). [Latin] Hist. The custom or practice of a court.

consuetudo mercatorum (kən-swə-t[y]oo-doh mər-kə-tor-əm). [Latin "the custom of merchants"] Hist. See LAW MERCHANT. — Also termed consuetudo mercatoria.

consul (kən-səl), n. 1. A governmental representative living in a foreign country to oversee commercial and other matters involving the representative's home country and its citizens in that foreign country. ● Because they are not diplomatic agents, consuls are subject to local law and jurisdiction. — consular (kən-sə-lər), adj. — consulship (kən-səl-ship), n.

"Consuls are commercial, not diplomatic agents. They reside abroad for the purpose of protecting the individual interests of traders, travellers, and mariners belonging to the State which employs them. . . . They exercise jurisdiction over their countrymen, their persons are inviolable, their residences may be used as asylums in the case of war or tumult, and in fact they possess more than the ordinary diplomatic immunities." T.J. Lawrence, A Handbook of Public International Law 86-87 (10th ed. 1925).

"Consuls are not diplomatic agents; they perform various services for a state or its subjects in another state, without, however, representing the former in the full sense. They may be nationals of either state, and generally they are made subject to the authority of the diplomatic representative of the state for which they act. They watch over commercial interests of the state for which they act; collection information for it; help its nationals with advice, administer their property if they die abroad, and register their births, deaths, and marriages; they authenticate documents for legal purposes, take depositions from witnesses, visa passports, and the like." J.L. Briery, The Law of Nations 216 (5th ed. 1955).

"The usual criterion used for the distinction between diplomats and consuls is the representative character of the former of which the latter are devoid. However, this distinction is not altogether correct. Undoubtedly diplomatic agents have a general representative character since in all matters and relations they represent their country in the state to which they are accredited. Consuls, on the other hand, as state organs, also represent their country in another state, but only in matters within their competence. Thus, the representative character of consuls is, like their competence, specific, and secondary to that of diplomatic agents." Constantin Economides, "Consuls," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 770 (1992).

consul general. A high-ranking consul appointed to a strategically important region and often having supervisory powers over other regions or other consuls.

2. Roman law. One of two chief magistrates elected annually during the Republic to exercise supreme authority. ● Under the Empire, the consulship was reduced to a sinecure, held by appointees of the emperor or the emperor himself.

"The principal inheritors of the royal authority and dignity were the two consuls elected by the comitia centuriata. They enjoyed equal powers. In the calendar the year was distinguished by their names. They convoked and initiated legislation in either comitia. In special emergencies, particularly in times of grave crisis, either consul might appoint a dictator who exercised supreme authority, but not beyond six months, unless reappointed. . . . It was abolished by Justinian in A.D. 541, though later emperors continued to assume the title." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 14 (4th ed. 1956).

consular court. See COURT.

consular invoice. See INVOICE.

consular jurisdiction. The exercise of a judicial function by a consul in a foreign territory, as by performing a wedding ceremony between nationals of the country represented by the consul.

consular law. The law relating to consuls, developed through custom and multitudes of bilateral consular agreements.

consular marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

consular relations. Int'l law. The aggregate of relations established between two countries through the exercise of consuls' functions on behalf of a sending state within the territory of a receiving state. See SENDING STATE; RECEIVING STATE.

consulate (kon-sə-lit). 1. The office or jurisdiction of a consul <the senator advised the businessman to notify the U.S. consulate in Kuwait before visiting the country>. 2. The location of a consul's office or residence <the family was staying on the second floor, just above the Turkish consulate>.

foreign consulate. The consulate of a foreign country in the receiving state.

3. Government by consuls <after the French Revolution, the Directory was overthrown and the Consulate was created>. ● This sense of consulate is based on the original Roman meaning ("chief magistrate") — not on the modern sense of an overseas representative of a country.

consul general. See CONSUL.

consultation, n. 1. The act of asking the advice or opinion of someone (such as a lawyer). 2. A meeting in which parties consult or confer. 3. Int'l law. The interactive methods by which states seek to prevent or resolve disputes. — consult, vb. — consulting, consultative, adj.

consulting expert. See EXPERT.

consumable, n. A thing (such as food) that cannot be used without changing or extinguishing its substance. Cf. NONCONSUMABLE.

consumer. A person who buys goods or services for personal, family, or household use, with no intention of resale; a natural person who uses products for personal rather than business purposes. 40 CFR § 721(b)(1).

consumer boycott. See BOYCOTT.

consumer-contemplation test. A method of imposing product liability on a manufacturer if the evidence shows that a product's danger is greater than what a reasonable consumer would expect. — Also termed consumer-user-contemplation test; consumer-expectation test. Cf. RISK-UTILITY TEST.

consumer credit. See CREDIT (4).

Consumer Credit Code. See UNIFORM CONSUMER CREDIT CODE.

Consumer Credit Protection Act. A federal statute that safeguards the consumer in connection with the use of credit by (1) requiring full disclosure of the terms of the loan agreement, including finance charges, (2) restricting the garnishment of wages, and (3) regulating the use of credit cards (15 USCA §§ 1601-1693). ● Many states have adopted consumer-credit-protection acts. — Also termed Truth in Lending Act (abbr. TILA). See UNIFORM CONSUMER CREDIT CODE.

consumer-credit sale. See SALE.

consumer-credit transaction. A transaction by which a person receives a loan for buying consumer goods or services. ● Consumer-credit transactions are usu. subject to regulations enacted for the consumer's protection.

consumer debt. See DEBT.

consumer-expectation test. See CONSUMER-CONTEMPLATION TEST.

consumer finance company. See FINANCE COMPANY.

consumer goods. See GOODS.

consumer-goods transaction. Secured transactions. A transaction in which (1) an individual incurs an obligation primarily for person, family, or household purposes, and (2) a security interest in consumer goods secures the obligation. UCC § 9-102(a)(16).

consumer law. The area of law dealing with consumer transactions — that is, a person's obtaining credit, goods, real property, or services for personal, family, or household purposes. — Also termed consumer-transactions law.

consumer lease. See LEASE.

consumer loan. See LOAN.

consumer price index. An index that tracks the price of goods and services purchased by the average consumer and that is published monthly by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. — Abbr. CPI. — Also termed cost-of-living index. Cf. PRODUCER PRICE INDEX.

consumer product. An item of personal property that is distributed in commerce and is normally used for personal, family, or household purposes. 15 USCA § 2301(1).

consumer-protection law. A state or federal statute designed to protect consumers against unfair trade and credit practices involving consumer goods, as well as to protect consumers against faulty and dangerous goods.

consumer transaction. A bargain or deal in which a party acquires property or services primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose.

consumer-transactions law. See CONSUMER LAW.

consumer-user-contemplation test. See CONSUMER-CONTEMPLATION TEST.

consummate (kən-səm-it), adj. Completed; fully accomplished. • Consummate was used frequently at common law to describe the status of a contract or an estate, such as the transformation of a husband's interest in his wife's inheritance from that of a tenant by the curtesy initiate to a tenant by curtesy consummate upon her death (assuming that a child had been born during the marriage). See curtesy consummate under CURTESY.

consummate (kən-sə-mayt), vb. 1. To bring to completion; esp., to make (a marriage) complete by sexual intercourse. 2. To achieve; fulfill. 3. To perfect; carry to the highest degree.

consummate dower. See DOWER.

consummate lien. See LIEN.

consumption. The act of destroying a thing by using it; the use of a thing in a way that thereby exhausts it.

consumption tax. See TAX.

containment. Int'l law. The policy of restricting the ideological and territorial expansion of one's enemy. • This was the basic philosophy of the United States during the Cold War.

contango (kən-tang-goh). Securities. 1. A market in which long-term futures or options contracts sell at a premium over short-term contracts. — Also termed normal market. 2. The premium so paid. • The premium paid for securities with longer maturities reflects the cost of holding the commodity for future delivery.

contemn (kən-tem), vb. To treat (as laws or court orders) with contemptuous disregard. See CONTEMPT.

contemner (kən-tem-ər or -nər). A person who is guilty of contempt before an instrumentality of government, such as a court or legislature. — Also spelled contemnor.

contemplation of bankruptcy. The thought of declaring bankruptcy because of the inability to continue current financial operations, often coupled with action designed to thwart the distribution of assets in a bankruptcy proceeding. — Also termed contemplation of insolvency.

contemplation of death. The thought of dying, not necessarily from an imminent danger, but as the compelling reason to transfer property to another. See gift causa mortis under GIFT.

contemplation of insolvency. See CONTEMPLATION OF BANKRUPTCY.

contemporanea expositio (kən-tem-pə-ray-nee-ə eks-pə-zish-ee-oh). [Latin "contemporanea"] neous exposition"] The doctrine that the best meaning of a statute or document is the one given by those who enacted it or signed it, and that the meaning publicly given by contemporary or long professional usage is presumed to be the true one, even if the language may have a popular or an etymological meaning that is very different.

contemporaneous and practical interpretation. See contemporaneous construction under CONSTRUCTION.

contemporaneous construction. See CONSTRUCTION.

contemporaneous-construction doctrine. The rule that the initial interpretation of an ambiguous statute by an administrative agency or lower court is entitled to great deference if the interpretation has been used over a long period.

contemporaneous-objection rule. The doctrine that a proper objection to the admission of evidence must be made at trial for the issue of admissibility to be considered on appeal.

contemporary community standard. The gauge by which a fact-finder decides whether material is obscene, judging by its patent offensiveness and its pruriency in the locale at a given time. See OBSCENITY (1).

"Both pruriency and patent offensiveness are determined by 'contemporary community standards.' But what is the relevant community? In Miller, the Court rejected the contention that only a national community standard, free of local biases, would provide adequate First Amendment protection and allowed lower courts to use local standards in defining what is obscene. Subsequent cases have made it clear that the state may choose to omit reference to any particular geographic community, state or local, although it may do so. If a geographic reference is omitted, each jury is free to ascertain the contemporary community standard." Jerome A. Barron & C. Thomas Dienes, Constitutional Law in a Nutshell 396 (3d ed. 1995).

contempt, n. 1. The act or state of despising; the condition of being despised. 2. Conduct that defies the authority or dignity of a court or legislature. • Because such conduct interferes with the administration of justice, it is punishable, usu. by fine or imprisonment. See CONTUMACY. — Also termed contempt of court — contemptuous, adj.

"Contempt is a disregard of, or disobedience to, the rules or orders of a legislative or judicial body, or an interruption of its proceedings by disorderly behavior or insolent language, in its presence or so near thereto as to disturb the proceedings or to impair the respect due to such a body." Edward M. Dangel, Contempt § 1, at 2 (1939).

civil contempt. The failure to obey a court order that was issued for another party's benefit. • A civil-contempt proceeding is coercive or remedial in nature. The usual sanction is to confine the contemner until he or she complies with the court order.

consequential contempt. 1. Contempt that, although not amounting to gross insolence or direct opposition, tends to create a universal disregard of the power and authority of courts and judges. 2. See constructive contempt.

constructive contempt. Contempt that is committed outside of court, as when a party disobeys a court order. — Also termed consequential contempt; indirect contempt.

contempt of Congress. Deliberate interference with the duties and powers of Congress, such as a witness's refusal to answer a question from a congressional committee. • Contempt of Congress is a criminal offense. 2 USCA § 192.

criminal contempt. An act that obstructs justice or attacks the integrity of the court. • A criminal-contempt proceeding is punitive in nature. — Also termed common-law contempt.

"Criminal contempt is a crime in the ordinary sense; it is a violation of the law, a public wrong which is punishable by fine or imprisonment or both." Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 201, 88 S.Ct. 1477, 1481 (1968).

direct contempt. Contempt that is committed in open court, as when a lawyer insults a judge on the bench.

indirect contempt. See constructive contempt.

contempt power. The power of a public institution (as Congress or a court) to punish someone who shows contempt for the process, orders, or proceedings of that institution.

contempt proceeding. See PROCEEDING.

contenement (kən-ten-ə-mənt). Hist. 1. Freehold land held by a feudal tenant, esp. land used to support the tenant. • Magna Carta exempted this property from seizure.

"Contenement, (contenementum) seemeth to be the free hold land, which lyeth to a mans tenement or dwelling house, that is in his owne occupation. For magna carta. ca. 14. you have these words: A free man shall not be amerced for a small fault, but after the quantity of the fault: and for a great fault, after the maner thereof, saving to him his contenement or free hold. And a merchant likewise shal be amerced saving to him his merchandies: and any other villaine then owens, shal be amerced saving his wainage. . . ." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

2. A person's reputation or standing in the community. • Though contenement as used in this sense is also rooted in the ownership of land, it may stem from the Law French contenance ("countenance") rather than the Law Latin contenementum ("with tenement"), as used in sense 1.

"Contenement signifies his Countenance, Credit, or Reputation, which he hath, together with, and by reason of his Freehold; and in this sense does the Statute of 1 Edw. 3 and Old Nat. Br. use it, where Countenance is used for Contenement: The Armor of a Soldier is his Countenance; the Books of a Schollar, his Countenance; and the like." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

content-based restriction. Constitutional law. A restraint on the substance of a particular type of speech. • This type of restriction can survive a challenge only if it is based on a compelling state interest and its measures are narrowly drawn to accomplish that end. See SPEECH (1).

contentious jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

contentious possession. See hostile possession under POSSESSION.

contents unknown. A statement placed on a bill of lading to show that the carrier does not know what is inside shipped containers. • Carriers use this phrase in an attempt to limit their liability for damage to the goods shipped.

content-valid test. A job-applicant examination that bears a close relationship to the skills required by the job. • Content-validation studies are often performed in employment-discrimination cases that contest the validity of an examination.

"The simplest form of test validation is where the test replicates major portions of the job, as for example, where a test measuring typing or computer literacy is used to select a secretarial support person. . . . A content valid test must measure or replicate a 'representative sample' of the job's duties. It is not valid if it measures only a small portion of those duties. For example, fire fighters may need to write reports, but a grammar test is too narrow to be content valid." Mack A. Player, Federal Law of Employment Discrimination in a Nutshell 101 (3d ed. 1992).

conterminous, adj. 1. Sharing a common boundary <the surveyor set a new line between the conterminous counties>. 2. Enclosed within a common boundary <all 48 conterminous states of this country>.

contest (kən-test), vb. 1. To strive to win or hold; contend <he chose to contest for the prize>. 2. To litigate or call into question; challenge <they want to contest the will>. 3. To deny an adverse claim or assert a defense to it in a court proceeding <she contests that charge>. — contest (kən-test), n.

contestability clause (kən-tes-tə-bil-ə-tee). Insurance. A policy provision setting forth when and under what conditions the insurer may contest a claim or void the policy based on a representation or omission made when the policy was issued. • Contestability clauses usu. lapse after two years. — Also termed contestable clause. Cf. INCONTESTABILITY CLAUSE.

contestant. One who contests the validity of a will. — Also termed objectant; caveator.

contestatio litis (kon-tes-tay-shee-oh lī-tis). [Latin "contestation of suit"] 1. Roman law. A position statement in an action, given by the litigants to the praetor for approval and submission to a judge (judex) for a decision.

"Both parties being present, or represented, before the praetor, the plaintiff stated the nature of his claim and asked for an action. It lay in the discretion of the praetor to give or to refuse it. . . . If, in the event, the praetor refused any action at all, or any action which the plaintiff was willing to accept, the matter was at an end. . . . If, on the other hand, subject to the direction and approval of the praetor, the parties agreed upon the issues to be referred . . . [a] document framed in identical terms was issued to the judex by the praetor as his authority to act. This ceremonial in which three persons concurred (plaintiff, defendant, praetor) was the litis contestatio." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 179–80 (4th ed. 1956).

2. Hist. The development in a lawsuit — brought about by the litigants' alternating statements — of a point in controversy. 3. Hist. An issue developed by the litigants' alternating statements. 4. CONTESTATION OF SUIT. — Also termed litis contestatio. See LITIS-CONTESTATION.

contestation of suit (kon-tes-tay-shən). Eccles. law. The point in an action when the defendant answers the plaintiff's libel (i.e., complaint); the plea and joinder of an issue. — Also termed contestatio litis.

context, n. 1. The surrounding text of a word or passage, used to determine the meaning of that word or passage <his remarks were taken out of context>. 2. Setting or environment <in the context of foreign relations>. — contextual, adj.

contiguity (kon-ti-gyoo-ə-tee), n. The state or condition of being contiguous <contiguity existed between the two adjoining tracts of land>.

contiguous (kən-tig-yoo-əs), adj. 1. Touching at a point or along a boundary; ADJOINING <Texas and Oklahoma are contiguous>. 2. Near in time or sequence; successive <contiguous thunder and lightning>.

contiguous zone. Int'l law. An area abutting and extending beyond the territorial sea, in which countries have limited powers to enforce customs as well as fiscal, sanitary, and immigration laws.

Continental Congress. The first national governmental assembly in the United States, formed in 1774 to protest British treatment of the colonies. ● The Second Continental Congress, commencing in 1775, adopted the Declaration of Independence and served as the national government until the Articles of Confederation were ratified in 1781.

contingency (kən-tin-jən-see). 1. An event that may or may not occur; a possibility. 2. The condition of being dependent on chance; uncertainty. 3. CONTINGENT FEE.

contingency fee. See CONTINGENT FEE.

contingency reserve. See contingent fund under FUND.

contingency with a double aspect. A contingent remainder existing along with a second remainder, the latter taking the remainder only if the first fails. ● In the following example, this type of remainder would arise if A never has children: “to A for life, and if A has children, then to the children and their heirs forever; and if A dies without children, then to B and B’s heirs forever.” See contingent remainder under REMAINDER.

contingent (kən-tin-jənt), adj. 1. Possible; uncertain; unpredictable <the trust was contingent, and the contingency never occurred>. 2. Dependent on something else; conditional <her acceptance of the position was contingent upon the firm’s agreeing to guarantee her husband a position as well>.

contingent annuity. See ANNUITY.

contingent beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

contingent claim. See CLAIM (4).

contingent debt. See DEBT.

contingent estate. See ESTATE.

contingent fee. A fee charged for a lawyer’s services only if the lawsuit is successful or is favorably settled out of court. ● Contingent fees are usu. calculated as a percentage of the client’s net recovery (such as 25% of the recovery if the case is settled, and 33% if the case is won at trial). — Also termed contingency fee; contingency.

reverse contingent fee. A fee in which a defense lawyer’s compensation depends in whole or in part on how much money the lawyer saves the client, given the client’s potential liability — so that the lower the settlement or judgment, the higher the lawyer’s fee. ● For example, if a client might be liable for up to $2 million, and agrees to pay the lawyer 40% of the difference between $1 million and the amount of the settlement or judgment, then a settlement of $800,000 would result in a fee of $80,000 (40% of the $200,000 under the threshold amount of $1 million). — Also termed negative contingent fee; defense contingent fee; reverse bonus.

contingent fund. See FUND (1).

contingent guaranty. See GUARANTY.

contingent interest. See INTEREST (2).

contingent-interest mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

contingent legacy. See LEGACY.

contingent liability. See LIABILITY.

contingent ownership. See OWNERSHIP.

contingent remainder. See REMAINDER.

contingent trust. See TRUST.

contingent use. See USE (4).

contingent will. See WILL.

continual claim. Hist. A formal claim to a tract of land made by an out-of-possession owner who is deterred from taking possession by a menace of some type. • The claim — called continual because it had to be renewed annually — preserved the claimant's right to the land. The owner had to make the claim as near to the land as could be done safely. This procedure gave the disseised person the same benefits (such as the right to devise the land) as a legal entry. The continual claim was abolished early in the 19th century.

"Continual claim is, where a man hath right to enter into certain lands whereof another is seised in fee, or fee tail, and dares not enter for fear of death or beating, but approaches as nigh as he dares, and makes claim thereto within the year and day before the death of him that hath the lands . . ." Termes de la Ley 114 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

continual injury. See INJURY.

continuance, n. 1. The act of keeping up, maintaining, or prolonging <continuance of the formal tradition>. 2. Duration; time of continuing <the senator's continuance in office>. 3. Procedure. The adjournment or postponement of a trial or other proceeding to a future date <motion for continuance>. — continue, vb. Cf. RECESS (1).

continuando (kən-tin-yoo-an-doh). [Law Latin "by continuing"] Hist. An allegation charging that the trespass or other wrongful act complained of constitutes a continuing tort against the plaintiff's property.

"In trespasses of a permanent nature, where the injury is continually renewed, (as by spoiling or consuming the herbage with the defendant's cattle) the declaration may allege the injury to have been committed by continuatio from one given day to another, (which is called laying the action with a continuando) and the plaintiff shall not be compelled to bring separate actions for every day's separate offence." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 212 (1768).

continuation agreement. Partnership. An agreement among the partners that, in the event of dissolution, the business of the partnership can be continued without the necessity of liquidation. Cf. BUY-SELL AGREEMENT (1).

"Normally, a continuation agreement would have some type of provision for purchasing the interest of a deceased or expelled partner. However, such a provision is not necessary. Courts have enforced agreements that give the estate of the deceased partner nothing." Harold Gill Reuschlein & William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership § 269, at 461 (2d ed. 1990).

continuation in part. A patent application filed during the lifetime of an earlier application by the same applicant, repeating a substantial part of the earlier application but adding to or subtracting from it. 35 USCA § 120. — Abbr. CIP.

continuing, adj. 1. (Of an act or event) that is uninterrupted . 2. (Of status or power) that needs no renewal; enduring <continuing stockholders> <continuing jurisdiction>.

continuing breach. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

continuing consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

continuing contract. See CONTRACT.

continuing covenant. See COVENANT (1).

continuing damages. See DAMAGES.

continuing guaranty. See GUARANTY.

continuing injury. See INJURY.

continuing judicial education. Continuing legal education for judges, usu. organized and sponsored by a governmentally subsidized body and often involving topics such as judicial writing, efficient decision-making, caseload management, and the like. — Abbr. CJE.

continuing jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

continuing-jurisdiction doctrine. 1. The rule that a court retains power to enter and enforce a judgment over a party even though that party is no longer subject to a new action. 2. Family law. The rule that once a court has acquired jurisdiction over a child-custody or support case, that court continues to have jurisdiction to modify orders, even if the child or a parent moves to another state.

continuing legal education. 1. The process or system through which lawyers extend their learning beyond their law-school studies, usu. by attending seminars designed to sharpen lawyering skills or to provide updates on legal developments within particular practice areas. • In some jurisdictions, lawyers have annual or biennial requirements to devote a given number of hours (usu. 12–15) to continuing legal education. 2. The enhanced skills or knowledge derived from this process. 3. The business field in which educational providers supply the demand for legal seminars, books, audiotapes, and videotapes designed to further the education of lawyers. — Abbr. CLE.

continuing nuisance. See NUISANCE.

continuing objection. See OBJECTION.

continuing offense. See OFFENSE (1).

continuing part-time judge. See JUDGE.

continuing trespass. See TRESPASS.

continuing warranty. See promissory warranty under WARRANTY (3).

continuing wrong. See WRONG.

continuity (kon-ti-n[y]oo-ə-tee). Int'l law. The principle that upheavals and revolutions within a country — as well as changes in governmental forms, the extent of a country's territory, and measures taken during a military occupation — do not affect the existence of the country and therefore cannot lead to its extinction.

continuity of business enterprise. A doctrine covering acquisitive reorganizations whereby the acquiring corporation must continue the target corporation's historical business or must use a significant portion of the target's business assets in a new business to qualify the exchange as a tax-deferred transaction.

continuity-of-enterprise doctrine. See SUBSTANTIAL-CONTINUITY DOCTRINE.

continuity-of-entity doctrine. See MERE-CONTINUATION DOCTRINE.

continuity of existence. See CONTINUITY-OF-LIFE DOCTRINE.

continuity of interest. 1. A doctrine covering acquisitive reorganizations whereby a target corporation's shareholders must retain a share in the acquiring corporation to qualify the exchange as a tax-deferred transaction. 2. A judicial requirement for divisive reorganizations whereby a target corporation's shareholders must retain an interest in both the distributing and the controlled corporations to qualify the exchange as a tax-deferred transaction.

continuity-of-life doctrine. The principle that the withdrawal, incapacity, bankruptcy, or death of the owner of an entity (esp. a corporation) does not end the entity's existence. — Also termed continuity of existence.

continuous-adverse-use principle. The rule that the uninterrupted use of land — along with the other elements of adverse possession — will result in a successful claim for adverse possession. — Also termed uninterrupted-adverse-use principle. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

continuous easement. See EASEMENT.

continuous injury. See continual injury under INJURY.

continuous-representation doctrine. The principle that the limitations period for bringing a legal-malpractice action is tolled as long as the lawyer continues the representation that is related to the negligent act or omission.

continuous-treatment doctrine. The principle that the limitations period for bringing a medical-malpractice action is tolled while the patient continues treatment that is related to the negligent act or omission.

continuous trigger. See TRIPLE TRIGGER.

contort (kon-tort), n. 1. (usu. pl.) The overlapping domain of contract law and tort law.

"I have occasionally suggested to my students that a desirable reform in legal education would be to merge the first-year courses in Contracts and Torts into a single course which we could call Contorts." Grant Gilmore, The Death of Contract 90 (1974).

2. A specific wrong that falls within that domain.

contra (kon-trə), prep. Against or contrary to. ● As a citation signal, contra denotes that the cited authority supports a contrary view.

"Observe in the note citing cases in support of a proposition mentioned in the text whether any of the cases follow the word contra, which means that a contrary rule has been laid down in them." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 78-79 (1922).

contra account. See ACCOUNT.

contraband (kon-trə-band), n. 1. Illegal or prohibited trade; smuggling. 2. Goods that are unlawful to import, export, or possess. — contraband, adj.

absolute contraband. Goods used primarily for war, such as arms and ammunition, as well as clothing and equipment of a military character.

conditional contraband. Goods susceptible of being used for warlike and peaceful purposes, such as coal and food. — Also termed incipitibus usus.

contraband per se. Property whose possession is unlawful regardless of how it is used. Cf. derivative contraband.

derivative contraband. Property whose possession becomes unlawful when it is used in committing an illegal act. Cf. contraband per se.

contra bonos mores (kon-trə boh-nohs mor-eez). [Latin “against good morals”] Offensive to the conscience and to a sense of justice. ● Contracts contra bonos mores are voidable. — Also termed contra bonos mores et decorum; adversus bonos mores.

“Whatever is contra bonos mores et decorum, the principles of our law prohibit, and the King’s court, as the general censor and guardian of the public manners, is bound to restrain and punish.” Jones v. Randall, 98 E.R. 706, 707 (1774) (per Mansfield, C.J.).

contra-causator (kon-trə-kaw-zay-tər). Hist. A criminal; a person prosecuted for a crime.

contraceptivism. Hist. The criminal offense of distributing or prescribing contraceptives.

contract, n. 1. An agreement between two or more parties creating obligations that are enforceable or otherwise recognizable at law . 2. The writing that sets forth such an agreement .

“The term contract has been used indifferently to refer to three different things: (1) the series of operative acts by the parties resulting in new legal relations; (2) the physical document executed by the parties as the lasting evidence of their having performed the necessary operative acts and also as an operative fact in itself; (3) the legal relations resulting from the operative acts, consisting of a right or rights in personam and their corresponding duties, accompanied by certain powers, privileges, and immunities. The sum of these legal relations is often called ‘obligation.’ The present editor prefers to define contract in sense (3)” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 13 n2 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

“A contract is a promise, or a set of promises, for breach of which the law gives a remedy, or the performance of which the law in some way recognizes as a duty. This definition may not be entirely satisfactory since it requires a subsequent definition of the circumstances under which the law does in fact attach legal obligation to promises. But if a definition were attempted which should cover these operative facts, it would require compressing the entire law relating to the formation of contracts into a single sentence.” Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1, at 1–2 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957) (footnote omitted).

“The term ‘contract’ is also used by lay persons and lawyers alike to refer to a document in which the terms of a contract are written. Use of the word in this sense is by no means improper so long as it is clearly understood that rules of law utilizing the concept ‘contract’ rarely refer to the writing itself. Usually, the reference is to the agreement; the writing being merely a memorial of the agreement.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 1.1, at 3 (4th ed. 1998).

3. Loosely, an unenforceable agreement between two or more parties to do or not to do a thing or set of things; a compact <when they finally agreed, they had a contract>. 4. A promise or set of promises by a party to a transaction, enforceable or otherwise recognizable at law; the writing expressing that promise or set of promises <when the lessor learned that the rooms were to be used for the delivery of blasphemous lectures, he declined to carry out his contract>.

“The promissory element present in every contract is stressed in a widely quoted definition: ‘A contract is a promise, or set of promises, for breach of which the law gives a remedy, or the performance of which the law in some way recognizes as a duty.’ [1 Samuel Williston, Contracts § 1.1 (4th ed. 1990).] This, like similar definitions, is somewhat misleading. While it is true that a promise, express or implied, is a necessary element in every contract, frequently the promise is coupled with other elements such as physical acts, recitals of fact, and the immediate transfer of property interests. In ordinary usage the contract is not the promise alone, but the entire complex of these elements.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 1.1, at 1–2 (4th ed. 1998).

accessory contract. A contract entered into primarily for the purpose of carrying out a principal contract. ● The principal types are suretyship, indemnity, pledge, warranty, and ratification. Cf. principal contract.

adhesion contract. A standard-form contract prepared by one party, to be signed by the party in a weaker position, usu. a consumer, who has little choice about the terms. — Also termed contract of adhesion; adhesory contract; adhesionary contract; take-it-or-leave-it contract; leonine contract.

“Some sets of trade and professional forms are extremely one-sided, grossly favoring one interest group against others, and are commonly referred to as contracts of adhesion. From weakness in bargaining position, ignorance, or indifference, unfavored parties are willing to enter transactions controlled by these lopsided legal documents.” Quintin Johnstone & Dan Hopson, Jr., Lawyers and Their Work 329–30 (1967).

aleatory contract (ay-lee-ə-tor-ee). A contract in which at least one party's performance depends on some uncertain event that is beyond the control of the parties involved. ● Most insurance contracts are of this type. — Also termed hazardous contract. Cf. certain contract.

alternative contract. A contract in which the performing party may elect to perform one of two or more specified acts to satisfy the obligation; a contract that provides more than one way for a party to complete performance, usu. permitting that party to choose the manner of performance. — Also termed alternative-methods-of-performance contract.

assessment contract. A contract in which the payment of a benefit is dependent on the collection of an assessment levied on persons holding similar contracts. See assessment insurance under INSURANCE.

best-efforts contract. A contract in which a party undertakes to use best efforts to fulfill the promises made; a contract in which the adequacy of a party's performance is measured by the party's ability to fulfill the specified obligations. ● Although the obligor must use best efforts, the risk of failure lies with the obligee. To be enforceable, a best-efforts term must generally set some kind of goal or guideline against which the efforts may be measured. See BEST EFFORTS.

bilateral contract. A contract in which each party promises a performance, so that each party is an obligor on that party's own promise and an obligee on the other's promise. — Also termed mutual contract; reciprocal contract.

“In a bilateral contract a promise, or set of promises on one side, is exchanged for a promise or a set of promises on the other side. In a unilateral contract, on the other hand, a promise on one side is exchanged for an act (or a forbearance) on the other side. Typical examples of bilateral contracts are contracts of sale, the buyer promising to pay the price and the seller promising to deliver the goods. A typical example of a unilateral contract is a promise of a reward for the finding of lost property followed by the actual finding of the property.” P.S.

Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 32 (3d ed. 1981).

blanket contract. A contract covering a group of products, goods, or services for a fixed period.

bona fide contract (boh-nə fīd or fi-dee). A contract in which equity may intervene to correct inequalities and to adjust matters according to the parties' intentions.

certain contract. A contract that will be performed in a stipulated manner. Cf. aleatory contract.

collateral contract. A side agreement that relates to a contract, which, if unintegrated, can be supplemented by evidence of the side agreement; an agreement made before or at the same time as, but separately from, another contract. See COLLATERAL-CONTRACT DOCTRINE.

“The term ‘collateral contract’ has no very precise meaning in the law. It is generally used as a label for a contract which is collateral, or by the side of, another contract. A great many examples of implied or constructive contracts created by the Courts are collateral in a broad sense. . . . [A]lthough the normal presumption is that the parties intend a written contract to be exclusive evidence of their intentions, it is always open to a party to show that in fact the writing did not exclusively represent their intentions, because of a ‘collateral’ contract made during the negotiations but not incorporated in the written instrument.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 80–81, 161 (3d ed. 1981).

commutative contract (kə-myoo-tə-tiv or kom-yə-tay-tiv). Civil law. A contract in which one party's performance is correlative to the performance of the other, so that non-performance by either affords a defense to the other. Cf. independent contract; synallagmatic contract.

conditional contract. An agreement that is enforceable only if another agreement is performed or if another particular prerequisite or condition is satisfied.

conditional sales contract. See retail installment contract.

consensual contract. Hist. A contract arising from the mere consensus of the parties, without any formal or symbolic acts performed to fix the obligation. ● Although the consensual contract was known to the common law, it originated in Roman law, where it embraced four types of contracts in which informal consent alone was sufficient: (1) an agency agreement (mandatum), (2) a partnership agreement (societas), (3) a sale (emptio venditio), or (4) a letting or hiring (locatio conductio). Cf. real contract.

"[T]he peculiarity of these Consensual Contracts is that no formalities are required to create them out of the Pact. Much that is indefensible, and much more that is obscure, has been written about the Consensual Contracts, and it has even been asserted that in them the consent of the Parties is more emphatically given than in any other species of agreement. But the Consensual merely indicates that the Obligation is here annexed at once to the Consensus. The Consensus, or mutual assent of the parties, is the final and crowning ingredient in the Convention, and it is the special characteristic of agreements falling under one of the four heads of Sale, Partnership, Agency, and Hiring, that, as soon as the assent of the parties has supplied this ingredient, there is at once a Contract. The Consensus draws with it the Obligation, performing, in transactions of the sort specified, the exact functions which are discharged, in the other contracts, by the Res or Thing..." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 322-23 (10th ed. 1884).

construction contract. A contract setting forth the specifications for a building project's construction. • This type of contract is usually secured by performance and payment bonds to protect both the owner and the subcontractors.

constructive contract. See implied-in-law contract.

continuing contract. A contract calling for periodic performances.

contract for deed. A conditional sales contract for the sale of real property. — Also termed installment land contract; land sales contract; land contract.

contract for sale. 1. A contract for the present transfer of property for a price. — Also termed contract of sale. 2. A contract to sell goods at a future time. — Also termed (in sense 2) contract to sell.

contract implied in fact. See implied-in-fact contract.

contract implied in law. See implied-in-law contract.

contract of adhesion. See adhesion contract.

contract of beneficence. See gratuitous contract.

contract of benevolence. See gratuitous contract.

contract of insurance. See INSURANCE POLICY.

contract of record. A contract that is declared by a court and entered into the court's record. • Contracts of record include judgments, recognizances, and (in England) statutes staple.

"Contracts of record are not really contracts at all, but are transactions which, being entered on the records of certain courts called 'courts of record,' are conclusive proof of the facts thereby appearing, and could formerly be enforced by action of law as if they had been put in the shape of a contract." 1 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 282 (1883).

"A contract of record is in point of fact no contract at all, and has nothing whatever to do with the law of contracts. These so-called contracts are the obligations incurred by a judgment or recognition of a Court of Record. They came to be called contracts only because they were enforceable by the same type of action as was used for genuinely contractual cases in the old common-law system of procedure." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 31 (3d ed. 1981).

contract of sale. See contract for sale (1).

contract to satisfaction. See satisfaction contract.

contract to sell. See contract for sale (2).

contract uberrimae fidei (yoo-ber-ə-mee fi-dee-1). A contract in which the parties owe each other duties with the utmost good faith.

"In a certain restricted group of contracts good faith is peculiarly necessary owing to the relationship between the parties, and in these cases — known as contracts uberrimae fidei — there is a full duty to disclose all material facts. The typical instance of such contracts is the contract of insurance. Here the duty to disclose all material facts to the insurer arises from the fact that many of the relevant circumstances are within the exclusive knowledge of one party, and it would be impossible for the insurer to obtain the facts necessary for him to make a proper calculation of the risk he is asked to assume without this knowledge." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 221-22 (3d ed. 1981).

contract under seal. A formal contract that requires no consideration and has the seal of the signer attached. • Modern statutes have mostly eliminated the special effects of a sealed contract. It must be in writing or printed on paper or parchment and is conclusive between the parties when signed, sealed, and delivered. Delivery is made either by actually handing it to the other party (or party's representative) or by stating an intention that the deed be operative even though it is retained in the possession of the party executing it. — Also termed sealed contract; special contract; specialty contract; specialty; deed; covenant.

"The only formal contract of English law is the contract under seal, sometimes also called a deed and sometimes a specialty. It is the only formal contract, because it derives its validity neither from the fact of agreement, nor from the consideration which may exist for the promise of either party, but from the form in which it is expressed." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 82 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"Contracts under seal also bear little resemblance to ordinary contracts, although here at least the liability is based on a promise. A contract under seal, that is to say a deed, . . . is a written promise or set of promises which derives its validity from the form, and the form alone, of the executing instrument. In point of fact the 'form' of the deed is nowadays surprisingly elastic. The only necessities are that the deed should be intended as such, and should be signed, sealed, and delivered. The sealing, however, has now become largely a fiction, an adhesive wafer simply being attached to the document in place of a genuine seal. Similarly, 'delivery' is not literally necessary, provided that there is a clear intention that the deed should be operative." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 31 (3d ed. 1981).

cost-plus contract. A contract in which payment is based on a fixed fee or a percentage added to the actual cost incurred.

de facto contract of sale. A contract purporting to pass property but defective in some element.

dependent contract. A contract conditioned or dependent on another contract.

deposit contract. An agreement between a financial institution and its customer governing the treatment of deposited funds and the payment of checks and other demands against the customer's account.

destination contract. A contract in which a seller bears the risk of loss until the goods arrive at the destination. UCC § 2-509. Cf. shipment contract.

discharged contract. See void contract (2).

divisible contract. See severable contract.

dual contract. A contract between parties who have made two contracts for the same transaction, sometimes so that one may be used to defraud another (such as a lender) as to the terms of the parties' actual agreement.

employment contract. A contract between an employer and employee in which the terms and conditions of employment are stated.

engineering, procurement, and construction contract. A fixed-price, schedule-intensive construction contract — typically used in the construction of single-purpose projects, such as energy plants — in which the contractor agrees to a wide variety of responsibilities, including the duties to provide for the design, engineering, procurement, and construction of the facility; to prepare start-up procedures; to conduct performance tests; to create operating manuals; and to train people to operate the facility. — Abbr. EPC contract. — Also termed turnkey contract. See SINGLE-PURPOSE PROJECT.

entire-output contract. See output contract.

escrow contract. The agreement among buyer, seller, and escrow holder, setting forth the rights and responsibilities of each. See ESCROW.

evergreen contract. A contract that renews itself from one term to the next in the absence of contrary notice by one of the parties.

executed contract. 1. A contract that has been fully performed by both parties. 2. A signed contract.

executory contract (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee). 1. A contract that remains wholly unperformed or for which there remains something still to be done on both sides, often as a component of a larger transaction and sometimes memorialized by an informal letter agreement, by a memorandum, or by oral agreement.

"If a contract is wholly executory, and the legal duties of the parties are as yet unfulfilled, it can be discharged by mutual consent, the acquittance of each from the other's claims being the consideration for the promise of each to waive his own." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 138 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

2. Bankruptcy. A contract under which debtor and nondebtor each have unperformed obligations and the debtor, if it ceased further performance, would have no right to the other party's continued performance.

express contract. A contract whose terms the parties have explicitly set out. — Also termed special contract. Cf. implied contract.

financial contract. Securities. An arrangement that (1) takes the form of an individually negotiated contract, agreement, or option to buy, sell, lend, swap, or repurchase, or other similar individually negotiated transaction commonly entered into by participants in the financial markets; (2) involves securities, commodities, currencies, interest or other rates, other measures of value, or any other financial or economic interest similar in purpose or function; and (3) is entered into in response to a request from a counterparty for a quotation, or is otherwise entered into and structured to accommodate the objectives of the counterparty to the arrangement.

fixed-price contract. A contract in which the buyer agrees to pay the seller a definite and predetermined price regardless of increases in the seller's cost or the buyer's ability to acquire the same goods in the market at a lower price.

formal contract. Hist. A written contract under seal.

futures contract. See FUTURES CONTRACT.

gambling contract. An agreement to engage in a gamble; a contract in which two parties wager something, esp. money, for a chance to win a prize. — Also termed gaming contract.

“Generally, under or apart from statutes so providing, or prohibiting such contracts or transactions, gambling contracts and transactions are illegal and void and cannot be enforced; and such contracts are void ab initio. . . . A gambling contract is invalid, no matter what outward form it may assume, and no ingenuity can make it legal.” 38 C.J.S. Gaming § 26, at 138–39 (1996).

government contract. See procurement contract.

gratuitous contract (grə-t[y]oo-i-təs). A contract made for the benefit of a promisee who does not give consideration to the promisor. — Also termed contract of beneficence; contract of benevolence. Cf. onerous contract.

grubstake contract. A contract between two parties in which one party provides the grubstake — money and supplies — and the other party prospects for and locates mines on public land. • Each party acquires an interest in the mine as agreed to in the contract. Grubstake contracts are used chiefly in the western United States. In some states, such as Alaska, a request for grubstake money is considered the offer of a security and must be registered. — Also termed grubstaking contract.

guaranteed-sale contract. A contract between a real-estate agency and a property owner in which the agency agrees to buy the property at a guaranteed price after a specified length of time if it has not been sold under the listing agreement. • The guaranteed price is usu. a substantial discount from the listed price. — Also termed guaranteed-purchase contract.

hazardous contract. See aleatory contract.

illegal contract. A promise that is prohibited because the performance, formation, or object of the agreement is against the law. • Technically speaking, an illegal contract is not a contract at all, so the phrase is a misnomer.

“An illegal contract is exceptionally difficult to define. It does not merely mean a contract contrary to the criminal law, although such a contract would indubitably be illegal. But a contract can well be illegal without contravening the criminal law, because there are certain activities which the law does not actually prohibit, but at the same time regards as contrary to the public interest and definitely to be discouraged, for instance, prostitution. While a void contract is not necessarily illegal, an illegal contract is often void. However, the consequences of an illegal contract differ somewhat from those usually produced by a simply void contract, so illegal contracts are usually accorded separate treatment.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 38 (3d ed. 1981).

illusory contract. An agreement in which one party gives as consideration a promise that is so insubstantial as to impose no obligation. • The insubstantial promise renders the contract unenforceable.

immoral contract. A contract that so flagrantly violates societal norms as to be unenforceable.

implied contract. 1. An implied-in-law contract. 2. An implied-in-fact contract. Cf. express contract.

implied-in-fact contract. A contract that the parties presumably intended, either by tacit understanding or by the assumption that it existed. — Also termed contract implied in fact.

implied-in-law contract. An obligation imposed by law because of the conduct of the parties, or some special relationship between them, or because one of them would otherwise be unjustly enriched. • An implied-in-law contract is not actually a contract, but instead a remedy that allows the plaintiff to recover a benefit conferred on the defendant. — Also termed contract implied in law; quasi-contract; constructive contract. See UNJUST ENRICHMENT.

“[A]dventurous courts have turned to the idea of a ‘contract implied in law,’ a ‘quasi-contract’ — not really a contract, a legal fiction necessary to promote the ends of justice and, in particular, to prevent ‘unjust enrichment.’” Grant Gilmore, The Death of Contract 73–74 (1974).

impossible contract. A contract that the law will not enforce because there is no feasible way for one of the parties to perform. See IMPOSSIBILITY (3).

independent contract. A contract in which the mutual acts or promises of the parties have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or as considerations. Cf. commutative contract.

informal contract. See parol contract (2).

innominate contract (i-nom-ə-nit). Civil law. A contract not classifiable under any particular name; a contract for which the law supplies nothing in addition to the express agreement of the parties. — Also termed innominate real contract. Cf. nominate contract.

installment contract. A contract requiring or authorizing the delivery of goods in separate lots, or payments in separate increments, to be separately accepted. • Under the UCC, this type of agreement will be considered one contract even if it has a clause stating that each delivery is a separate contract. UCC § 2-612.

installment land contract. See contract for deed.

integrated contract. See INTEGRATED CONTRACT.

invalid contract. A contract that is either void or voidable. — Also termed invalid agreement.

investment contract. See INVESTMENT CONTRACT.

joint contract. A contract in which two or more promisors are together bound to fulfill its obligations, or one in which two or more promisees are together entitled to performance. Cf. severable contract.

land contract. See contract for deed.

land sales contract. See contract for deed.

leonine contract. See adhesion contract.

letter contract. In federal contract law, a written contract with sufficient provisions to permit the contractor to begin performance.

leverage contract. See LEVERAGE CONTRACT.

literal contract. 1. Roman law. A type of written contract originally created by — and later evidenced by — an entry of the sum due on the debit side of a ledger, binding a signatory even though the signatory receives no consideration. See LITERIS OBLIGATIO.

“Though an obligation could be created by a literal contract in the time of Gaius, the so-called literal contract of Justinian was not, in itself, a means of creating an obligation, but was the evidence of an obligation created in some other way The true literal contract, as described by Gaius, may be defined as a means of creating an obligation to pay money by a fictitious entry . . . in the creditor’s account book . . . with the consent of the intended debtor. A, with B’s consent, enters the fact that B is indebted to him . . . and thereupon B is under an obligation to pay, though no money has passed between them.” R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 316–17 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

2. Civil law. A contract fully evidenced by a writing and binding on the signatory.

marine contract. A contract relating to maritime affairs, including navigation, marine insurance, affreightment, maritime loans, and shipping. — Also termed maritime contract.

maritime contract. A contract that relates to a vessel in its use as such, to navigation on navigable waters, to transportation by sea, or to maritime employment. • An action on a maritime contract falls within the admiralty jurisdiction.

marketing contract. 1. A business’s agreement with an agency or other association for the promotion of sales of the business’s goods or services. 2. An agreement between a cooperative and its members, by which the members agree to sell through the cooperative, and the cooperative agrees to obtain an agreed price.

mixed contract. 1. Civil law. A contract in which the respective benefits conferred are unequal. 2. A contract for both the sale of goods and services. • The UCC may apply to a mixed contract if the primary contract purpose is for the sale of goods.

mutual contract. See bilateral contract.

naked contract. See NUDUM PACTUM.

nominate contract (nom-ə-nit). Civil law. A contract distinguished by a particular name, such as sale, insurance, or lease, the very use of which determines some of the rules governing the contract and the contractual rights of the parties, without the need for special stipulations. • The contracts are generally divided into four types: (1) real (arising from something done), (2) oral (arising from something said), (3) literal (arising from something written), and (4) consensual (arising from something agreed to). Cf. innominate contract.

nude contract. See NUDUM PACTUM.

onerous contract. Civil law. A contract in which each party is obligated to perform in exchange for each party’s promise of performance. Cf. gratuitous contract.

option contract. See OPTION (2).

oral contract. See parol contract (1).

output contract. A contract in which a buyer promises to buy all the goods or services that a seller can supply during a specified period and at a set price. • The quantity term is measured by the seller’s output. — Also termed entire-output contract. Cf. requirements contract.

parol contract (pə-rohl or par-əl). 1. A contract or modification of a contract that is not in writing or is only partially in writing. — Also termed oral contract; parol agreement; (loosely) verbal contract. 2. At common law, a contract not under seal, although it could be in writing. — Also termed informal contract; simple contract. See PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE.

pignorative contract (pig-nə-ray-tiv). Civil law. A contract in which the seller of real property, instead of relinquishing possession of the property that is theoretically sold, gives the buyer a lien; a contract of pledge, hypothecation, or mortgage of realty.

precontract. A contract that precludes a party from entering into a comparable agreement with someone else. Cf. LETTER OF INTENT.

principal contract. A contract giving rise to an accessory contract, as an agreement from which a secured obligation originates. Cf. accessory contract.

procurement contract. A contract in which a government receives goods or services. ● A procurement contract, including the bidding process, is subject to government regulation. See FEDERAL ACQUISITION REGULATION. — Also termed government contract.

public contract. A contract that, although it involves public funds, may be performed by private persons and may benefit them.

quasi-contract. See implied-in-law contract.

real contract. 1. Hist. A contract in which money or other property passes from one party to another. ● This term, derived from the Roman law, referred to contracts concerning both personal and real property. 2. Roman law. A contract requiring something more than mere consent, such as the lending of money or the delivery of a thing. Cf. consensual contract.

"The essence of . . . the real contracts, was that, at the time the agreement was made, one party, by delivering something belonging to him to the other party to the contract, imposed on that other an obligation to return the thing itself or, in the case of things intended to be consumed, an equivalent in kind. As the Roman lawyers expressed it, the contractual obligation was created by something being handed over. . . ." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 292 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

"The term 'real contract' is in common use in the Civil law, and though not commonly used by judges or writers in the common law, nevertheless describes certain obligations enforced in England from very early times. A real contract is an obligation arising from the possession or transfer of a res." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 8, at 19 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

reciprocal contract. See bilateral contract.

requirements contract. A contract in which a seller promises to supply all the goods or services that a buyer needs during a specific period and at a set price, and in which the buyer promises (explicitly or implicitly) to obtain those goods or services exclusively from the seller. ● The quantity term is measured by the buyer's requirements. Cf. output contract.

retail installment contract. A contract for the sale of goods under which the buyer makes periodic payments and the seller retains title to or a security interest in the goods. — Also termed retail installment contract and security agreement; conditional sales contract. Cf. chattel mortgage under MORTGAGE.

satisfaction contract. A contract by which one party agrees to perform to the reasonable satisfaction of the other. — Also termed contract to satisfaction.

sealed contract. See contract under seal.

self-determination contract. Under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, an agreement by which the federal government provides funds to an Indian tribe and allows the tribe to plan and administer a program that would otherwise be administered by the federal government. 25 USCA § 450b(j). service contract. A contract to perform a service; esp., a written agreement to provide maintenance or repairs on a consumer product for a specified term. 15 USCA § 2301(8).

severable contract. A contract that includes two or more promises each of which can be enforced separately, so that failure to perform one of the promises does not necessarily put the promisor in breach of the entire contract. — Also termed divisible contract; several contract. See SEVERABILITY CLAUSE. Cf. joint contract.

"A severable contract . . . is one the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of apportionment on either side, so as to correspond to the unascertained consideration on the other side, as a contract to pay a person the worth of his services so long as he will do certain work; or to give a certain price for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample." Ivan Horniman, Wharton's Law Lexicon 215 (13th ed. 1925).

shipment contract. A contract in which a seller bears the risk of damage to the items sold only until they are brought to the place of shipment. ● If a contract for the sale of goods does not address the terms of delivery, it is presumed to be a shipment contract. UCC §§ 2-319, 2-504, 2-509. Cf. destination contract.

"In the jargon of commercial lawyers, a contract that requires or authorizes the seller to send the goods to the buyer but does not require that he deliver them at any particular destination is called a 'shipment contract.' Generally, in shipment contracts, risk of loss passes to the buyer at the point of shipment, which is also the point of 'delivery,' while in 'destination contracts' (seller must deliver at a particular destination) risk passes upon seller's tender at destination." 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 3-5, at 128-29 (4th ed. 1995).

simple contract. See parol contract (2).

simulated contract. Civil law. A contract that, although clothed in concrete form, has no existence in fact; a sham contract. • A simulated contract can be declared a sham and avoided by an interested party, including a creditor of one of the parties to the contract. — Also termed simulation.

special contract. 1. See contract under seal. 2. A contract with peculiar provisions that are not ordinarily found in contracts relating to the same subject matter. 3. See express contract.

specialty contract. See contract under seal.

standard-form contract. A usu. preprinted contract containing set clauses, used repeatedly by a business or within a particular industry with only slight additions or modifications to meet the specific situation.

stock-option contract. A negotiable instrument that gives the holder the right to buy or sell — for a specified price within a fixed time limit — a certain number of shares of the corporation's stock. See stock option under OPTION.

subcontract. A contract made by a party to another contract for carrying out the other contract, or a part of it.

subscription contract. See SUBSCRIPTION (3).

substituted contract. A contract between parties to a prior contract that takes the place of and discharges the previous obligation. • A substituted contract differs from a novation (as "novation" is traditionally defined) in that the latter requires the substitution for the original obligor of a third person not a party to the original agreement; when the obligee accepts the third party, the agreement is immediately discharged. In contrast to both substituted contract and novation, an executory accord does not immediately discharge an obligation; rather, the obligation is discharged on performance, often by a third person rather than the original obligor. Cf. NOVATION; ACCORD (2).

"[A] substituted contract immediately discharges the prior claim which is merged into the new agreement. Consequently, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the original claim can no longer be enforced. In the event of a breach, any action would have to be brought on the substituted agreement. . . . The concept of 'substituted contract' was created largely to circumvent the unsatisfactory rules that until recently governed executory accords. Now that these rules have been modernized, the next step should be the reabsorption of the substituted contract into the executory accord. . . . [T]he untidy distinction between executory accords and substituted contracts should not be allowed to complicate litigation about routine claim settlements." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 21.6, at 803 (4th ed. 1998).

synallagmatic contract (sin-ə-lag-mat-ik). [fr. Greek synallagma "mutual agreement"] Civil law. A contract in which the parties obligate themselves reciprocally, so that the obligation of each party is correlative to the obligation of the other. • A synallagmatic contract is characterized by correlative obligations, whereas a commutative contract is characterized by correlative performances. The term synallagmatic contract is essentially the civil-law equivalent of the common law's bilateral contract. Cf. commutative contract.

tacit contract. A contract in which conduct takes the place of written or spoken words in the offer or acceptance (or both).

take-it-or-leave-it contract. See adhesion contract.

take-or-pay contract. A contract requiring the buyer to either purchase and receive a minimum amount of a product at a set price ("take") or pay for this minimum without taking immediate delivery ("pay"). • These contracts are often used in the energy and oil-and-gas businesses.

third-party-beneficiary contract. A contract that directly benefits a third party and that gives the third party a right to sue any of the original contracting parties for breach.

unconscionable contract. See unconscionable agreement under AGREEMENT.

unenforceable contract. A valid contract that, because of some technical defect, cannot be enforced; a contract having some legal consequences, but that may not be enforced in an action for damages or specific performance in the face of certain defenses, such as the statute of frauds. • Unenforceable contracts share many features with voidable contracts, but unlike the latter, in some instances they may be enforced indirectly. Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 8 cmt. a (1981). — Also termed agreement of imperfect obligation.

"The difference between what is voidable and what is unenforceable is mainly a difference between substance and procedure. A contract may be good, but incapable of proof owing to lapse of time, want of written form, or failure to affix a revenue stamp. Writing in the first cases, a stamp in the last, may satisfy the requirements of law and render the contract enforceable, but it is never at any time in the power of either party to avoid the transaction. The contract is unimpeachable, only it cannot be proved in court." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 19–20 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"An unenforceable contract is a somewhat anomalous concept, fortunately now of small importance. We have already mentioned that certain types of contract are required by statute to be evidenced in writing, and that if this requirement is not satisfied, the contracts are regarded as unenforceable, but not void. There are, in fact, only two such contracts left now, namely a contract of guarantee and a contract for the sale of an interest in land. For most practical purposes an unenforceable contract is not much better than a void contract, since the most important characteristic of a valid contract is that it is enforceable." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 38 (3d ed. 1981).

unilateral contract. A contract in which only one party makes a promise or undertakes a performance.

"[M]any unilateral contracts are in reality gratuitous promises enforced for good reason with no element of bargain." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 126 (3d ed. 1981).

"If A says to B, 'If you walk across the Brooklyn Bridge I will pay you $100,' A has made a promise but has not asked B for a return promise. A has asked B to perform, not a commitment to perform. A has thus made an offer looking to a unilateral contract. B cannot accept this offer by promising to walk the bridge. B must accept, if at all, by performing the act. Because no return promise is requested, at no point is B bound to perform. If B does perform, a contract involving two parties is created, but the contract is classified as unilateral because only one party is ever under an obligation." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 2-10(a), at 64–65 (4th ed. 1998).

valid contract. A contract that is fully operative in accordance with the parties' intent. — Also termed valid agreement.

variable annuity contract. Securities. An annuity whose payments vary according to how well the fund (usu. made up of common stocks) that backs it is performing. SEC Rule 0-1(e)(1) (17 CFR § 270.0-1(e)(1)). See variable annuity under ANNUITY.

verbal contract. See parol contract (1).

voidable contract. A contract that can be affirmed or rejected at the option of one of the parties; a contract that is void as to the wrongdoer but not void as to the party wronged, unless that party elects to treat it as void.

"A voidable contract is a contract which, in its inception, is valid and capable of producing the results of a valid contract, but which may be 'avoided', i.e. rendered void at the option of one (or even, though rarely, of both) of the parties." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 37–38 (3d ed. 1981).

void contract. 1. A contract that is of no legal effect, so that there is really no contract in existence at all.

"Strictly speaking, a 'void contract' is a contradiction in terms; for the words describe a state of things in which, despite the intention of the parties, no contract has been made. Yet the expression, however faulty, is a compendious way of putting a case in which there has been the outward semblance without the reality of contract." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 18 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"A valid contract is, of course, simply a contract of full force and effect, not vitiated in any way. A so-called void contract, on the other hand, is really a contradiction in terms inasmuch as a contract has already been defined in terms applicable only to a valid contract. However, the term is convenient and is universally used. For purposes of exposition, it is convenient to treat void contracts as falling, broadly speaking, into main categories. On the one hand, are cases where one of the normal requirements for the creation of a contract is absent, while, on the other hand, are cases where all the normal requirements are satisfied, but the contract is void because the law disapproves of its purpose or the terms by which it seeks to achieve that purpose. Typical examples of contracts which are void because one of the normal requirements is absent are contracts in which the acceptance of an offer has not been communicated or in which a promise is given gratuitously. Typical examples of contracts which are void because of their terms or objects are wagering contracts, and contracts prejudicial to family relations." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 36–37 (3d ed. 1981).

2. A contract that has been fully performed. — Also termed discharged contract.

"Not only is the term 'void contract' in itself technically inaccurate, but a contract is sometimes said to be void, not because it was destitute of legal effect from its commencement, but because it has been fully performed, and so has ceased to have legal operation. It would be more proper to describe such a contract as 'discharged.'" William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 20 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. Loosely, a voidable contract.

"Again the word 'void' has been used, even by judges and the framers of statutes, where 'voidable' is meant. One illustration will suffice. By 17 Geo. III, c. 50, failure to pay certain duties at an auction is stated to make a bidding 'nul and void to all intents,' but this does not entitle a purchaser who has repented of his bargain to avoid the contract by his own wrong, that is by refusal to pay the statutory duty. The contract is voidable at the option of the party who has not broken the condition imposed by law." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 20–21 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

wagering contract. 1. A contract the performance of which depends on the happening of an uncertain event, made entirely for sport.
2. A contract in which an uncertain event affects or results from a business transaction.

● With this type of wagering contract, a business person is protected from a trade risk.

written contract. A contract whose terms have been reduced to writing.

“Written contracts are also commonly signed, but a written contract may consist of an exchange of correspondence, of a letter written by the promisee and assented to by the promisor without signature, or even of a memorandum or printed document not signed by either party. Statutes relating to written contracts are often expressly limited to contracts signed by one or both parties. Whether such a limitation is to be implied when not explicit depends on the purpose and context.” Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 95 cmt. c (1981) (citations omitted).

contract, freedom of. See FREEDOM OF CONTRACT.

contract bond. See PERFORMANCE BOND.

contract of affreightment (ə-frayt-mənt). Maritime law. An agreement for carriage of goods by water. ● This type of contract usu. takes the form of a bill of lading or charterpar-ty. — Abbr. COA. See bareboat charter under CHARTER; CHARTERPARTY.

contract of beneficence (bə-nef-ə-sənts). See gratuitous contract under CONTRACT.

contract of benevolence. See gratuitous contract under CONTRACT.

contract of insurance. See INSURANCE POLICY.

contract of record. See CONTRACT.

contract of sale. See contract for sale (1) under CONTRACT.

contractor. 1. A party to a contract. 2. More specif., one who contracts to do work or provide supplies for another.

general contractor. One who contracts for the completion of an entire project, including purchasing all materials, hiring and paying subcontractors, and coordinating all the work. — Also termed original contractor; prime contractor.

independent contractor. See INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

subcontractor. See SUBCONTRACTOR.

contract rate. See INTEREST RATE.

Contracts Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution prohibiting states from passing a law that would impair private contractual obligations. ● The Supreme Court has generally interpreted this clause so that states can regulate private contractual obligations if the regulation is reasonable and necessary. U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1. — Also termed Contract Clause; Obligation of Contracts Clause.

contract system. Hist. The practice of leasing prisoners out to private individuals for the prisoners' labor.

contract to satisfaction. See satisfaction contract under CONTRACT.

contract to sell. See contract for sale (2) under CONTRACT.

contractual duty. See DUTY (1).

contract uberrimae fidei. See CONTRACT.

contract under seal. See CONTRACT.

contractus (kən-trak-təs). [Latin] Roman law. A contract; an agreement between two or more parties, usu. to create an actionable bond between them. See CONTRAHERE.

"The texts of the Roman Law do not supply a definition of contract. The words contractus — contrahere — like 'contract' in English, are used in various senses, sometimes wider, sometimes narrower. Labeo gives contractus the meaning of a reciprocal obligation, such as purchase and sale, hire, partnership. But when the Romans speak of obligation arising from contract, they mean obligations arising from convention or agreement. In Roman law it was far from being the case that all agreements which might be expected to produce a legal obligation did so." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 285 (4th ed. 1956).

contractus bonae fidei (kən-trak-təs boh-nee fi-dee-i). [Latin "contract of good faith"] Roman law. A contract requiring that the parties perform their duties in good faith. • In an action brought on a contractus bonae fidei, the plaintiff had to assert that he had not acted in bad faith. All consensual contracts were considered contractus bonae fidei. Essentially, then, the phrase was typically used when a remedy was being sought for a breach.

contract zoning. See ZONING.

contradictory motion. See MOTION.

contrafactio (kon-trə-fak-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. The act of counterfeiting. • The word appeared frequently in the phrase contrafactio sigilli regis ("counterfeiting the king's seal").

contra formam collationis (kon-trə for-məm kə-lay-shee-oh-nis). [Latin "against the form of a collation"] Hist. A writ to regain lands given to a religious society in exchange for perpetual alms. • The writ was usu. sought by an heir of the person who had given the land away.

contra formam feoffmenti (kon-trə for-məm feef-men-ti). [Latin "contrary to the form of the feoffment"] Hist. A writ that commanded a landowner to stop demanding from a tenant more services than those included in the tenant's deed to the land. — Also spelled contra formam feoffamenti.

"Contra formam feoffamenti is a writ that lies where a man before the statute of quia emptores terrarum, made 18 Ed. 1, infeoffed another by deed to do certain service; if the feoffor or his heirs distrain him to do other service than is comprised in the deed, then the tenant shall have this writ, commanding him not to distrain him to do other service than is comprised in the deed." Termes de la Ley 116 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

contra formam statuti (kon-trə for-məm stə-tyoo-ti). [Law Latin] Contrary to the form of the statute. See AGAINST THE FORM OF THE STATUTE.

contrahere (kən-tray-hə-ree), vb. [Latin "draw together"] Roman law. 1. To establish or enter into a formal relationship, as between husband and wife, creditor and debtor, by mutual agreement. 2. To commit a crime. 3. To accept an inheritance. 4. Generally, to perform any act of legal significance. See CONTRACTUS.

contra jus belli (kon-trə jəs bel-i). [Latin] Against the law of war.

contra jus commune (kon-trə jəs kə-myoo-nee). [Latin] Against common right or law; contrary to the rule of the common law.

contra legem terrae (kon-trə lee-jəm ter-ee). [Latin] Against the law of the land.

contra non valentem. See DOCTRINE OF CONTRA NON VALENTEM.

contra omnes gentes (kon-trə om-nee-z jen-teez). [Latin] Hist. Against all people. • These were the traditional words of warranty in a deed.

contra pacem (kon-trə pay-səm). [Latin] Against the peace. • This term was formerly used in indictments to signify that the alleged offense is against the public peace.

contraplacitum (kon-trə-plas-ə-təm). [Latin] Hist. A counterplea.

contra proferentem (kon-trə prof-ə-ren-təm). [Latin "against the offeror"] The doctrine that, in interpreting documents, ambiguities are to be construed unfavorably to the drafter. — Also spelled contra proferentes. — Also termed ambiguity doctrine.

contrarotulator (kon-trə-roch-yə-lay-tər or kon-trə-roh-tyə-lay-tər). [Latin "controller"] Hist. A person responsible for collecting and managing funds on behalf of the Crown or other government office. • A variety of controllers existed in England, including the contrarotulator customarum (controller of the customs), contrarotulator hospitii domini regis (controller of the king's household), and contrarotulator pipae (controller of the pipe — i.e., an officer who collected debts due to the Exchequer).

contrary to law. 1. (Of an act or omission) illegal. 2. (Of a jury verdict) in conflict with established law.

contrary to the evidence. (Of an argument) that is counter to the weight of the evidence presented at a contested hearing.

contra tabula. See BONORUM POSSESSIO CONTRA TABULAS.

contravene (kon-trə-veen), vb. 1. To violate or infringe; to defy <the soldier contravened the officer's order, and then went AWOL>. 2. To come into conflict with; to be contrary to <the court held that the regulation contravenes public policy>.

contravening equity. See EQUITY.

contravention (kon-trə-ven-shən). 1. An act violating a legal condition or obligation; esp., an entail heir's act that conflicts with the entail provision. 2. French law. A criminal breach of a law, treaty, or agreement; a minor violation of the law. • A contravention is traditionally punishable by peines de police, usu. a fine not exceeding 15 francs and imprisonment not exceeding three days. See public-welfare offense under OFFENSE.

"We might get [terminological] help from the practice of Continental Europe in which three classes of punishable offenses are maintained — crimes, delicts, and contraventions. The last word is used for those minor violations of regulations, all of them necessary enough for public safety and convenience, which are so numerous and so detailed in our lives. It is a convenient term and is widely used in the United States for just such acts, but it has not yet been made official. The Continental practice has the advantage of using the word crimes only for really serious offenses, which is in conformity with popular feeling on the subject." Max Radin, The Law and You 92 (1948).

3. Scots law. An action brought for breach of a peace bond. See LAWBURROWS. 4. Hist. Scots law. An act committed in violation of a legal condition or obligation, esp. one done by an entail heir contrary to a deed.

contrectatio (kon-trek-tay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Lat. in contrectare "to touch or handle"] Hist. The act of laying hands on another's property with the intent of taking, misappropriating, or misusing it. • This term implied a greater culpability than simply taking property without the owner's permission and, under the Roman law, could rise to the level of theft (furtum).

contributing cause. See CAUSE (1).

contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

The offense of an adult's engaging in conduct involving a minor — or in the presence of a minor — likely to result in delinquent conduct.

• Examples include encouraging a minor to shoplift, to lie under oath, or to commit vandalism. — Also termed contributing to delinquency. See JUVENILE DELINQUENCY. Cf. IMPAIRING THE MORALS OF A MINOR.

contribution. 1. The right that gives one of several persons who are liable on a common debt the ability to recover ratably from each of the others when that one person discharges the debt for the benefit of all; the right to demand that another who is jointly responsible for a third party's injury supply part of what is required to compensate the third party. — Also termed right of contribution. 2. A tortfeasor's right to collect from others responsible for the same tort after the tortfeasor has paid more than his or her proportionate share, the shares being determined as a percentage of fault. 3. The actual payment by a joint tortfeasor of a proportionate share of what is due. Cf. INDEMNITY. 4. WAR CONTRIBUTION.

contribution bar. Preclusion of a defendant having contribution rights against other defendants, who have settled their dispute with the plaintiff, from seeking contribution from them.

• The bar is usu. allowed in exchange for a credit against any judgment the plaintiff obtains against the nonsettling defendant.

contribution clause. See COINSURANCE CLAUSE.

contribuione facienda (kon-tri-byoo-shee-oh-nee fay-shee-en-də). [Latin "writ for making contribution"] Hist. A writ to compel a tenant in common to contribute to a fellow tenant who has paid more than the tenant's share of a sum for which all the tenants are liable.

"Contribuione facienda is a writ that lieth in case where more are bound to one thing, & one is put to the whole burden. . . . If tenents in comon or joynt, hold a mill (pro indiviso) & equally take the profits therof, the mill falling to decay, & one or more of them refusing to contribute toward the reparation therof, the rest shall have this writ. . . ." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

contribution margin. The difference between a product's selling price and its cost of production. • The contribution margin indicates the amount of funds available for profit and payment of fixed costs.

contributory (kən-trib-yə-tor-ee), adj. 1. Tending to bring about a result. 2. (Of a pension fund) that receives contributions from both the employer and the employees.

contributory, n. 1. One who contributes or who has a duty to contribute. 2. A contributing factor. 3. Hist. A person who, as a result of being or representing a past or present member of a corporation, is liable to contribute to the corporation's debts upon its winding up.

contributory infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

contributory negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

contributory-negligence doctrine. Torts. The principle that completely bars a plaintiff's recovery if the damage suffered is partly the plaintiff's own fault. • Most states have abolished this doctrine and have adopted instead a comparative-negligence scheme. See NEGLIGENCE. Cf. COMPARATIVE-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE.

contributory pension plan. See PENSION PLAN.

control, n. The direct or indirect power to direct the management and policies of a person or entity, whether through ownership of voting securities, by contract, or otherwise; the power or authority to manage, direct, or oversee <the principal exercised control over the agent>.

superintending control. The general supervisory control that a higher court in a jurisdiction has over the administrative affairs of a lower court within that jurisdiction.

working control. The effective control of a corporation by a person or group who owns less than 50% of the stock.

control, vb. 1. To exercise power or influence over <the judge controlled the proceedings>. 2. To regulate or govern <by law, the budget office controls expenditures>. 3. To have a controlling interest in <the five shareholders controlled the company>.

control group. The persons with authority to make decisions on a corporation's behalf.

control-group test. A method of determining whether the attorney-client privilege protects communications made by corporate employees, by providing that those communications are protected only if made by an employee who is a member of the group with authority to direct the corporation's actions as a result of that communication. • The U.S. Supreme Court rejected the control-group test in Upjohn Co. v.

United States, 449 U.S. 383, 101 S.Ct. 677 (1981). Cf. SUBJECT-MATTER TEST.

controlled company. See COMPANY.

controlled corporate groups. See CONTROLLED GROUP.

controlled corporation. See CORPORATION.

controlled foreign corporation. See CORPORATION.

controlled group. Tax. Two or more corporations whose stock is substantially held by five or fewer persons. • The Internal Revenue Code subjects these entities (such as parent-subsidiary or brother-sister groups) to special rules for computing tax liability. — Also termed controlled corporate groups. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 851(c)(3), 1563(a). controlled-securities-offering distribution. See securities-offering distribution under DISTRIBUTION.

controlled substance. Any type of drug whose possession and use is regulated by law, including a narcotic, a stimulant, or a hallucinogen. See DRUG.

controlled-substance act. A federal or state statute that is designed to control the distribution, classification, sale, and use of certain drugs. • Most states have enacted these laws, which are usu. modeled on the Uniform Controlled Substances Act.

controller. See COMPTROLLER.

controlling interest. See INTEREST (2).

controlling person. See CONTROL PERSON.

controlling shareholder. See SHAREHOLDER.

control person. Securities. A person who has actual control or significant influence over the issuer of securities, as by directing corporate policy. • The control person is subject to many of the same requirements applicable to the sale of securities by the issuer. — Also termed controlling person.

“[T]he question of who is a control person is highly factual and is not dependent upon ownership of any specific percentage. For example, it has been held that someone owning eight percent of a company's stock was not a control person. . . ." 1 Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation § 4.24, at 279 (3d ed. 1995).

control premium. See PREMIUM (3).

control stock. Stock belonging to a control person at the time of a given transaction. — Also termed control shares.

control test. See IRRESISTIBLE-IMPULSE TEST.

control-your-kid law. See PARENTAL-RESPONSIBILITY STATUTE.

controver (kən-troh-vər). Hist. A person who concocts false news.

controversy. 1. A disagreement or a dispute, esp. in public. 2. A justiciable dispute. 3. Constitutional law. A case that requires a definitive determination of the law on the facts alleged for the adjudication of an actual dispute, and not merely a hypothetical, theoretical, or speculative legal issue. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) actual controversy. See CASE-OR-CONTROVERSY REQUIREMENT.

"What is a 'case or controversy' that is justiciable in the federal courts? The answer of Chief Justice Hughes is classic if cryptic. He said: 'A controversy in this sense must be one that is appropriate for judicial determination. A justiciable controversy is thus distinguished from a difference or dispute of a hypothetical character; from one that is academic or moot. The controversy must be definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse legal interests. It must be a real and substantial controversy admitting of specific relief through a decree of a conclusive character, as distinguished from an opinion advising what the law would be upon a hypothetical state of facts.' [Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240–41, 57 S.Ct. 461, 464 (1937) (Hughes, C.J.).] Unfortunately, this definition, though often quoted, turns upon labels that the Court had used in the past to describe cases before it, and the labels themselves are 'elastic, inconstant, and imprecise.'" Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 12, at 60–61 (5th ed. 1994).

public controversy. A controversy involving issues that are debated publicly and that have substantial ramifications for persons other than those engaged in it. • A participant in a public controversy may be deemed a public figure for purposes of a defamation suit arising from the controversy. See PUBLIC FIGURE.

"The nature and extent of an individual's involvement in a public controversy is determined by three factors: (1) the extent to which participation in it is voluntary; (2) the extent to which there is access to channels of effective communication in order to counteract false statements; and (3) the prominence of the role played in the public controversy." 50 Am. Jur. 2d Libel and Slander § 75, at 390 (1995).

controvert (kon-trə-vərt or kon-trə-vərt), vb. To dispute or contest; esp., to deny (as an allegation in a pleading) or oppose in argument <the allegations in Peck's pleadings were never adequately controverted>.

contubernium (kon-t[y]uu-bər-nee-əm). [Latin] Roman law. A marriage-like union between slaves.

"No such thing as marriage among slaves was, or could be, recognized by the law. As slaves were wholly subject to the disposal of their masters, no unions having the character of permanence or sacredness could exist among them: such a union, if it existed, would abridge the master's power of absolute control. Among slaves there could only be contubernium, cohabitation of the sexes for a longer or shorter time, but no legal matrimonium." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 111 (1881).

contumace capiendo. See DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO.

contumacious conduct. See CONDUCT.

contumacy (kon-t[y]uu-mə-see), n. Contempt of court; the refusal of a person to follow a court's order or direction. — contumacious, adj. See CONTEMPT.

contumax. Hist. 1. A person found to be in contempt of court. 2. A person who is accused of a crime but refuses to appear and answer the charge.

contumely (kon-t[y]uu-mə-lee or kən-t[y]oo-mə-lee), n. Insulting language or treatment; scornful rudeness.

contutor (kən-t[y]oo-tər). [Latin] Roman law. A co-guardian of a ward. • Appointment as a co-guardian could be accomplished by testament or by court order.

consuance (kon-yə-zənts). Hist. 1. Cognizance; jurisdiction. • The word consuance is actually an archaic form of cognizance. See COGNIZANCE (1); CLAIM OF COGNIZANCE. 2. JUDICIAL NOTICE. 3. An acknowledgment (of a debt, act, or opposing claim). • Examples of consuance include an acknowledgment in replevin that the defendant took the sued-for goods, or an acknowledgment in a land transfer (by fine) that the grantee is entitled to the land. See FINE (1).

consuant (kon-yə-zənt), adj. (Of a person) having cognizance or knowledge. See COGNIZANCE.

conusee (kon-yə-zee). See COGNIZEE.

conusor (kon-yə-zər or -zor). See COGNIZOR.

convene, vb. 1. To call together; to cause to assemble. 2. Eccles. law. To summon to respond to an action. See CONVENTIO (1).

“When the defendant was brought to answer, he was said to be convened, — which the canonists called conventio, because the plaintiff and defendant met to contest.” 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 668 (8th ed. 1914).

3. Civil law. To bring an action.

convening authority. Military law. An officer (usu. a commanding officer) with the power to convene, or who has convened, a court-martial.

convening order. Military law. An instrument that creates a court-martial. • The convening order specifies (1) the type of court-martial and its time and place, (2) the names of the members and the trial and defense counsel, (3) the name of the military judge, if one has been detailed, and (4) if necessary, the authority by which the court-martial has been created.

conventicle (kən-ven-tə-kəl). [fr. Latin conventiculum “small assembly”] 1. An assembly of a clandestine or unlawful character. 2. An assembly for religious worship; esp., a secret meeting for worship not sanctioned by law. 3. A place where such meetings are held.

conventio (kən-ven-shee-oh). [fr. Latin convenire “to come together”] 1. Eccles. law. The act of convening the parties to an action by summoning the defendant. 2. Hist. An agreement or convention; an agreement between two or more persons respecting a legal relation between them. See CONVENTION (1).

“Conventio is a word much used both in Ancient and Modern Law-pleadings, for an Agreement or Covenant.” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

convention. 1. An agreement or compact, esp. one among nations; a multilateral treaty <the Geneva Convention>. See TREATY. 2. An assembly or meeting of members belonging to an organization or having a common objective <an ABA convention>. 3. A generally accepted rule or practice; usage or custom <the court dispensed with the convention of having counsel approach the bench>.

conventional, adj. 1. Customary; orthodox; traditional <conventional motion practice>. 2. Depending on, or arising from, the agreement of the parties, as distinguished from something arising by law <conventional subrogation>. 3.

Arising by treaty or convention <conventional international law>.

conventional custom. See CUSTOM.

conventional interest. See INTEREST (3).

conventionalism. A jurisprudential conception of legal practice and tradition holding that law is a matter of respecting and enforcing legal and social rules.

“Conventionalism makes two postinterpretive, directive claims. The first is positive: that judges must respect the established legal conventions of their community except in rare circumstances. It insists, in other words, that they must treat as law what convention stipulates as law. Since convention in Britain establishes that acts of Parliament are law, a British judge must enforce even acts of Parliament he considers unfair or unwise. This positive part of conventionalism most plainly corresponds to the popular slogan that judges should follow the law and not make new law in its place. The second claim, which is at least equally important, is negative. It declares that there is no law — no right flowing from past political decisions — apart from the law drawn from those decisions by techniques that are themselves matters of convention, and therefore that on some issues there is no law either way.” Ronald Dworkin, Law’s Empire 116 (1986).

conventional law. A rule or system of rules agreed on by persons for the regulation of their conduct toward one another; law constituted by agreement as having the force of special law between the parties, by either supplementing or replacing the general law of the land. • The most important example is conventional international law, but there are many lesser examples such as rules and regulations of a country club or professional association, or the rules of golf, basketball, or any other game. — Also termed (in international law) treaty-made law; treaty-created law.

conventional lien. See LIEN.

conventional loan. See conventional mortgage under MORTGAGE.

conventional mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

conventional obligation. See OBLIGATION.

conventional remission. See REMISSION.

conventional sequestration. See SEQUESTRATION.

conventional subrogation. See SUBROGATION.

conventionē (kən-ven-shee-oh-nee). [Latin] Hist. A writ for the breach of a written covenant. • This writ was often used when parties wished to convey land by fine. — Also termed writ of covenant. See FINE (1).

conventus (kən-ven-təs). [Latin] Roman law. 1. An assembly. • Conventus magnatum vel procerum (“the assembly of the nobles”) was an ancient name for Parliament. 2. A judicial assize held within a province.

conventus juridicus (kən-ven-təs juu-rid-i-kəs). [Latin “judicial assembly”] Roman law. A court session held by a provincial governor in the leading cities of the province.

conversion, n. 1. The act of changing from one form to another; the process of being exchanged.

equitable conversion. The act of treating real property as personal property, or vice versa, in certain circumstances. • Courts usu. apply the doctrine of equitable conversion to recognize the transfer of land when a party dies after the signing of an agreement to sell real property but before the transfer of title. Equitable conversion is based on the maxim that equity regards as done that which ought to be done.

forced conversion. The conversion of a convertible security, after a call for redemption, when the value of the security that it may be converted to is greater than the amount that will be received if the holder permits the security to be redeemed.

2. Tort & criminal law. The wrongful possession or disposition of another’s property as if it were one’s own; an act or series of acts of willful interference, without lawful justification, with any chattel in a manner inconsistent with another’s right, whereby that other person is deprived of the use and possession of the chattel. — convert, vb.

wrongfully deprived of his goods, and not of one mode only, is the outcome of a process of historical development whereby, by means of legal fictions and other devices, the action of trover was enabled to extend its limits and appropriate the territories that rightly belonged to other and earlier forms of action.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 94 (17th ed. 1977).

“By conversion of goods is meant any act in relation to goods which amounts to an exercise of dominion over them, inconsistent with the owner’s right of property. It does not include mere acts of damage, or even an asportation which does not amount to a denial of the owner’s right of property; but it does include such acts as taking possession, refusing to give up on demand, disposing of the goods to a third person, or destroying them.” William Geldart, Introduction to English Law 143 (D.C.M. Yardley ed., 9th ed. 1984).

constructive conversion. Conversion consisting of an action that in law amounts to the appropriation of property. • Constructive conversion could be, for example, an appropriation that was initially lawful.

conversion by detention. Conversion by detaining a chattel in a way that is adverse to the owner or other lawful possessor. • The mere possession of a chattel without title is not conversion. The defendant must have shown an intention to keep it in defiance of the plaintiff.

conversion by estoppel. A judicial determination that a conversion has taken place — though in truth one has not — because a defendant is estopped from offering a defense. • This occurs, for example, under the traditional rule that a bailee is estopped from denying the bailor’s title even if the bailor has no title to the chattel.

conversion by taking. Conversion by taking a chattel out of the possession of another with the intention of exercising a permanent or temporary dominion over it, despite the owner’s entitlement to use it at all times.

conversion by wrongful delivery. Conversion by depriving an owner of goods by delivering them to someone else so as to change the possession.

conversion by wrongful destruction. Conversion by willfully consuming or otherwise destroying a chattel belonging to another person.

conversion by wrongful disposition. Conversion by depriving an owner of goods by giving some other person a lawful title to them.

direct conversion. The act of appropriating the property of another to one’s own benefit, or to the benefit of another. • A direct conversion is per se unlawful, and the traditional requirements of demand and refusal of the property do not apply.

fraudulent conversion. Conversion that is committed by the use of fraud, either in obtaining the property or in withholding it.

involuntary conversion. The loss or destruction of property through theft, casualty, or condemnation.

conversion premium. Securities. The surplus at which a security sells above its conversion price.

conversion price. Securities. The contractually specified price per share at which a convertible security can be converted into shares of common stock.

conversion ratio. 1. The number of common shares into which a convertible security may be converted. 2. The ratio of the face amount of the convertible security to the conversion price.

conversion security. See SECURITY.

conversion value. A convertible security's value as common stock. • For example, a bond that can be converted into ten shares of stock worth $40 each has a conversion value of $400. See BOND CONVERSION.

convertible arbitrage. See kind arbitrage under ARBITRAGE.

convertible bond. See BOND (3).

convertible collision insurance. See INSURANCE.

convertible debenture. See DEBENTURE.

convertible debt. See DEBT.

convertible insurance. See INSURANCE.

convertible security. See SECURITY.

convertible stock. See convertible security under SECURITY.

convertible subordinated debenture. See DEBENTURE.

convey, vb. To transfer or deliver (something, such as a right or property) to another, esp. by deed or other writing.

conveyance (kən-vay-ənts), n. 1. The voluntary transfer of a right or of property.

absolute conveyance. A conveyance in which a right or property is transferred to another free of conditions or qualifications (i.e., not as a security). Cf. conditional conveyance.

conditional conveyance. A conveyance that is based on the happening of an event, usu. payment for the property; a mortgage. Cf. absolute conveyance.

derivative conveyance. See secondary conveyance.

innocent conveyance. Hist. A leaseholder's conveyance of the leaseholder's property interest — that is, something less than a fee simple. • It is a conveyance of an equitable interest.

mesne conveyance (meen). An intermediate conveyance; one occupying an intermediate position in the chain of title between the first grantee and the present holder.

original conveyance. See primary conveyance.

present conveyance. A conveyance made with the intent that it take effect at once rather than in the future.

primary conveyance. A conveyance that creates an estate. • Examples of primary conveyances include feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, and partition. — Also termed original conveyance. Cf. secondary conveyance.

“Of conveyances by the common law, some may be called original, or primary conveyances; which are those by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises: others are derivative or secondary; whereby the benefit or estate, originally created, is enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 309 (1766).

secondary conveyance. A conveyance that follows an earlier conveyance and that serves only to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest created by the primary conveyance. — Also termed derivative conveyance. Cf. primary conveyance.

voluntary conveyance. A conveyance made without valuable consideration, such as a deed in favor of a relative.

2. The transfer of a property right that does not pass by delivery of a thing or merely by agreement. 3. The transfer of an interest in real property from one living person to another, by means of an instrument such as a deed. 4. The document (usu. a deed) by which such a transfer occurs. 5. A means of transport; a vehicle. 6. Bankruptcy. A transfer of an interest in real or personal property, including an assignment, release, monetary payment, or the creation of a lien or encumbrance. — Also termed (in sense 6) bond for deed. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

conveyancer (kən-vay-ən-sər). A lawyer who specializes in real-estate transactions. • In England, a conveyancer is a solicitor or licensed conveyancer who examines title to real estate, prepares deeds and mortgages, and performs other functions relating to the transfer of real property.

conveyancing (kən-vay-ən-sing). The act or business of drafting and preparing legal instruments, esp. those (such as deeds or leases) that transfer an interest in real property.

“Conveyancing is the art or science of preparing documents and investigating title in connection with the creation and assurance of interests in land. Despite its connection with the word ‘conveyance’, the term in practice is not limited to use in connection with old system title but is used without discrimination in the context of all types of title.” Peter Butt, Land Law 7 (2d ed. 1988).

conveyancing counsel. Three to six lawyers who are appointed by the Lord Chancellor to assist the High Court of Justice with opinions in matters of property titles and conveyancing. — Also termed conveyancing counsel of the Supreme Court; (formerly) conveyancing counsel to the Court of Chancery.

conveyee (kən-vay-ee). One to whom property is conveyed.

conveyor (kən-vay-ər or -or). One who transfers or delivers title to another.

convicium (kən-vish-ee-əm). [Latin] Roman law. Reproach, abuse, reviling, or insult.

convict (kən-vikt), n. A person who has been found guilty of a crime and is serving a sentence of confinement for that crime; a prison inmate.

convict (kən-vikt), vb. To find (a person) guilty of a criminal offense upon a criminal trial, a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere (no contest).

conviction (kən-vik-shən), n. 1. The act or process of judicially finding someone guilty of a crime; the state of having been proved guilty. 2. The judgment (as by a jury verdict) that a person is guilty of a crime. 3. A strong belief or opinion.

abiding conviction. A settled conviction; a definite conviction based on a thorough examination of the case.

summary conviction. A conviction of a person for a violation or minor misdemeanor as the result of a trial before a magistrate sitting without a jury.

conviction rate. Within a given area or for a given time, the number of convictions (including plea bargains) as a percentage of the total number of prosecutions undertaken.

convivium (kən-viv-ee-əm). [Latin “banquet”] Hist. Tenure that binds the tenant to provide meat and drink for the lord at least once a year.

convocation. See provincial synod under SYNOD.

convoy, n. A protective escort, esp. for ships. — convoy, vb.

co-obligee. One of two or more persons to whom an obligation is owed. See OBLIGEE.

co-obligor. One of two or more persons who have undertaken an obligation. See OBLIGOR.

cool blood. Criminal law. In the law of homicide, the finding that the defendant’s emotions were not in such an excited state that they interfered with his or her faculties and reason. — Also termed cool state of blood. See COLD BLOOD. Cf. HEAT OF PASSION.

Cooley doctrine. Constitutional law. The principle that Congress has exclusive power under the Commerce Clause to regulate the national as well as the local aspects of national commercial matters, and that the states may regulate those aspects of interstate commerce so local in character as to require diverse treatment. • The Supreme Court has abandoned the Cooley doctrine in favor of a balancing test for Commerce Clause cases. Cooley v. Port Board of Wardens, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 299 (1851).

cooling-off period. 1. During a dispute, a period during which no action may be taken by either side. 2. A period during which a buyer may cancel a purchase. 3. An automatic delay in some states between the filing of divorce papers and the divorce hearing. 4. Securities. A period (usu. at least 20 days) between the filing of a registration and the effective registration.

cooling time. Criminal law. Time to recover cool blood after great excitement, stress, or provocation, so that one is considered able to contemplate, comprehend, and act with reference to the consequences that are likely to follow. See COOL BLOOD.

“[O]ne who controls his temper time after time, following repeated acts of provocation, may have his emotion so bottled-up that the final result is an emotional explosion . . . [I]n such a case the ‘cooling time’ begins to run not from earlier acts, but from ‘the last straw.’ . . . As was the position in regard to the adequacy of the provocation, so the early holding was that the cooling time was a matter of law for the court.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 100 (3d ed. 1982).

cool state of blood. See COOL BLOOD.

cooperation. 1. An association of individuals who join together for a common benefit. 2. Patents. A unity of action to a common end or result, not merely joint or simultaneous action. 3. Int’l law. The voluntary coordinated action of two or more countries occurring under a legal régime and serving a specific objective.

cooperation clause. Insurance. A policy provision requiring that the insured assist the insurer in investigating and defending a claim.

cooperative, n. 1. An organization or enterprise (as a store) owned by those who use its services. 2. A dwelling (as an apartment building) owned by its residents, to whom the apartments are leased. — Often shortened to coop; co-op.

cooperative cause. See CAUSE (1).

cooperative corporation. See CORPORATION.

cooperative federalism. Distribution of power between the federal government and the states in which each recognizes the powers of the other but shares those powers to jointly engage in governmental functions.

co-opt, vb. 1. To add as a member. 2. To assimilate; absorb.

co-optation (koh-ahp-tay-shən), n. The act of selecting a person to fill a vacancy (usu. in a close corporation). — co-optative, adj.

coordinate jurisdiction. See concurrent jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

coordination-of-benefits clause. See COB CLAUSE.

coowner, n. A person who is in concurrent ownership, possession, and enjoyment of property with one or more others; a tenant in common, a joint tenant, or a tenant by the entirety. — coown, vb. — coownership, n.

cop a plea, vb. Slang. (Of a criminal defendant) to plead guilty to a lesser charge as a means to avoid standing trial for a more serious offense. See PLEA BARGAIN.

coparcenary (koh-pahr-sə-ner-ee), n. An estate that arises when two or more persons jointly inherit from one ancestor, the title and right of possession being shared equally by all. • Coparcenary was a form of coownership created by common-law rules of descent upon intestacy when two or more persons together constituted the decedent’s heir. Typically, this situation arose when the decedent was survived by no sons but by two or more daughters, so that the daughters took as coparceners. — Also termed parcenary; tenancy in coparcenary. — coparcenary, adj.

coparcener (koh-pahr-sə-nər). A person to whom an estate descends jointly, and who holds it as an entire estate. — Also termed parcener.

“But sometimes two or more persons together constituted the heir, and in this case they took the land as ‘parceners’ or ‘coparceners,’ the latter expression being the more common . . . In theory of law coparceners together constituted a single heir: ‘they be but one heire, and yet severall persons.’ They were called parceners because, as already seen, every coparcener had a common law right to have a partition made.” Robert E. Megarry & H.W.R. Wade, The Law of Real Property 456–57 (5th ed. 1984).

coparticeps (koh-pahr-tə-seps). [fr. Latin particeps “sharing”] See COPARCENER.

copartner. A member of a partnership; PARTNER.

copartnership. See PARTNERSHIP. • The terms copartnership and partnership are equally old — each having first appeared in the 1570s.

coparty. A litigant or participant in a legal transaction who has a like status with another party; a party on the same side of a lawsuit. See CODEFENDANT; COPLAINTIFF.

copayment. A fixed amount that a patient pays to a healthcare provider according to the terms of the patient’s health plan. — Often shortened to copay.

copia libelli deliberanda. See DE COPIA LIBELLI DELIBERANDA.

complaintiff. One of two or more plaintiffs in the same litigation. Cf. CODEFENDANT.

coprincipal. 1. One of two or more participants in a criminal offense who either perpetrate the crime or aid a person who does so. 2. One of two or more persons who have appointed an agent whom they both have the right to control.

copulative condition. See CONDITION (2).

copy, n. An imitation or reproduction of an original. • In the law of evidence, a copy is generally admissible to prove the contents of a writing. Fed. R. Evid. 1003. See BEST-EVIDENCE RULE.

“The noun ‘copy’ ordinarily connotes a tangible object that is a reproduction of the original work; the courts have generally found no reason to depart from this usage in the law of copyright.” 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 4.08[B], at 4–47 (Supp. 1995).

certified copy. A duplicate of an original (usu. official) document, certified as an exact reproduction usu. by the officer responsible for issuing or keeping the original. — Also termed attested copy; exemplified copy; verified copy; verification.

conformed copy. An exact copy of a document bearing written explanations of things that were not or could not be copied, such as a note on the document indicating that it was signed by a person whose signature appears on the original.

examined copy. A copy (usu. of a record, public book, or register) that has been compared with the original or with an official record of an original.

exemplified copy. See certified copy.

true copy. A copy that, while not necessarily exact, is sufficiently close to the original that anyone can understand it.

verified copy. See certified copy.

copycat drug. See generic drug under DRUG.

copyhold. Hist. A base tenure requiring the tenant to provide the customary services of the manor, as reflected in the manor’s court rolls. • Copyhold tenure descended from pure villeinage; over time, the customs of the manor, as reflected on the manor’s rolls, dictated what services a lord could demand from a copyhold-

er. This type of tenure was abolished by the Law of Property Act of 1922, which converted copyhold land into freehold or leasehold land. — Also termed copyhold tenure; customary estate; customary freehold; tenancy by the verge; tenancy par la verge; tenancy by the rod. See base tenure under TENURE; VILLEINAGE.

“Out of the tenure by villeinage, copyhold tenure developed By the end of the fifteenth century, to hold by copy of the court roll, to be a ‘copyholder,’ was a definite advantage, and, in most cases the holders had for many generations been personally free. The fusing of several different types of payment had also gone on, so that there was little difference between a holder in socage who had commuted the services for a sum of money and a copyholder who had done the same, except the specific dues of heriot and merchet. In Coke’s time, a very large part of the land of England was still held by copyhold.” Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 371 (1936).

copyholder. Hist. A tenant by copyhold tenure. — Also termed tenant by the verge; tenant par la verge.

copyright, n. 1. A property right in an original work of authorship (such as a literary, musical, artistic, photographic, or film work) fixed in any tangible medium of expression, giving the holder the exclusive right to reproduce, adapt, distribute, perform, and display the work. 2. The body of law relating to such works. • Federal copyright law is governed by the Copyright Act of 1976. 17 USCA §§ 101–1332. — Abbr. c. — copyright, vb. — copyrighted, adj.

“The development of copyright law in England was shaped by the efforts of mercantile interests to obtain monopoly control of the publishing industry — similar to those of the guilds that were instrumental in shaping patent and trademark law American copyright law came to distinguish between the ‘common law’ right of an author to his unpublished creations, and the statutory copyright that might be secured upon publication. Until recently, therefore, an author had perpetual rights to his creation, which included the right to decide when, if, and how to publish the work, but that common law right terminated upon publication at which time statutory rights become the sole rights, if any, to which the author was entitled. This distinction was altered by the Copyright Act of 1976, which shifts the line of demarcation between common law and statutory copyright from the moment of publication to the moment of fixation of the work into tangible form.” Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 280–82 (2d ed. 1990).

“What is copyright? From copyright law’s beginnings close to three centuries ago, the term has meant just what it says: the right to make copies of a given work — at first it meant simply written work — and to stop others from making copies without one’s permission.” Paul Goldstein, Copyright’s Highway 3 (1994).

"Before the 1976 Copyright Act swept virtually all copyrightable subject matter within the exclusive domain of federal protection, the term 'copyright' implied a statutory right created by Congress in order to 'Promote the Progress of Science.' Our first copyright act, in 1790, protected only maps, charts, and books. Protection gradually was extended to musical compositions and graphic works. In the middle of the nineteenth century, photography was developed and then protected, followed at the end of the century by motion pictures (although they were protected as photographs). As the twentieth century comes to a close, digital technology and multimedia forms of authorship seriously challenge the gradual, compartmentalized approach to granting new rights and new subject matter . . ." 1 William F. Patry, Copyright Law and Practice 1 (1994).

common-law copyright. A property right that arose when the work was created, rather than when it was published. • Under the Copyright Act of 1976, which was effective on January 1, 1978, common-law copyright was largely abolished for works created after the statute's effective date, but it still applies in a few areas. Notably, a common-law copyright received before January 1, 1978, remains entitled to protection.

Copyright Clause. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 8, which gives Congress the power to secure to authors the exclusive rights to their writings for a limited time.

copyright infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

copyright notice. A notice that a work is copyright-protected, usu. placed in each published copy of the work. • Since March 1, 1989, such notice is not required for a copyright to be valid (although it continues to provide certain procedural advantages).

copyright owner. One who holds exclusive rights to copyrighted material. 17 USCA § 101.

coram (kor-əm), prep. [Latin] (Of a person) before; in the presence of.

coram domino rege (kor-əm dom-ə-noh ree-jee). [Latin] Hist. Before our lord the king.

coram ipso rege (kor-əm ip-soh ree-jee). [Latin] Hist. Before the king himself. — Also termed coram ipso domino rege.

"The court of king's bench (so called because the king used formerly to sit there in person, the style of the court still being coram ipso rege) is the supreme court of common law in the kingdom. . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 41 (1768).

coram nobis (kor-əm noh-bis). [Latin "before us"] Hist. 1. A writ of error taken from a judgment of the King's Bench. • "Before us" refers to the sovereign, in contrast to the writ coram vobis ("before you"), which refers to any court other than King's Bench, esp. the Court of Common Pleas. 2. A writ of error directed to a court for review of its own judgment and predicated on alleged errors of fact. — Also termed writ of error coram nobis; writ of coram nobis.

coram non iudice (kor-əm non joo-di-see). [Latin "not before a judge"] 1. Outside the presence of a judge. 2. Before a judge or court that is not the proper one or that cannot take legal cognizance of the matter.

coram paribus (kor-əm par-ə-bəs). [Latin] Hist. Before the peers. • This phrase appeared in deed attestations.

Coram Rege Court. See KING'S BENCH.

coram sectatoribus (kor-əm sek-tə-tor-ə-bəs). [Law Latin] Hist. Before the suitors.

coram vobis (kor-əm voh-bis), n. [Latin "before you"] Hist. 1. A writ of error directed to a court other than the King's Bench, esp. the Court of Common Pleas, to review its judgment.

"Certain errors in the process of the court, committed by the defaults of the clerks, or as to matters of fact, could be remedied by the court itself. The writ issued for this purpose was called a writ of error 'coram vobis' if the error was in the Common Pleas; 'coram nobis' if it was in the King's Bench." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 224 (7th ed. 1956).

2. A writ of error sent by an appellate court to a trial court to review the trial court's judgment based on an error of fact. — Also termed writ of error coram vobis.

core proceeding. Bankruptcy. A proceeding involving claims that substantially affect the debtor-creditor relationship, such as an action to recover a preferential transfer. • In such a proceeding, the bankruptcy court, as opposed to the district court, conducts the trial or hearing and enters a final judgment. Cf. RELATED PROCEEDING.

corespondent. 1. A coparty who responds to a petition, such as a petition for a writ of certiorari. 2. In some states, a coparty who responds to an appeal. 3. Family law. In a divorce suit based on adultery, the person with whom the spouse is accused of having committed adultery. See RESPONDENT.

corium forisfacere (kor-ee-əm for-is-fay-sə-ree). [Law Latin “to forfeit skin”] Hist. To whip (a person, esp. a servant) as punishment. — Also termed corium perdere.

corium redimere (kor-ee-əm ri-dim-ər-ee). [Latin] Hist. To redeem one’s skin. • This referred to a person who paid restitution for an offense.

cornage (kor-nij). [fr. Anglo-French corne “horn”] Hist. 1. A type of grand-serjeanty military tenure in which the tenant was bound to blow a horn to alert others whenever an enemy approached. 2. A form of tenure entitling a landowner to rent based on the number of horned cattle owned by the tenant. • Cornage may have developed into a type of serjeanty or knight-service tenure that obligated the tenant to blow a horn to warn of invaders, esp. along the border with Scotland. See KNIGHT-SERVICE; SERJEANTY. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) horn tenure. 3. A tribute of corn due only on special occasions, as distinguished from a regularly provided service. • This term has often been spelled coraage or coraagium, stemming perhaps from a spelling error in the 1569 edition of Bracton’s De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliae.

Cornelian law. See LEX CORNELIA.

corner, n. 1. The common end of two survey lines; an angle made by two boundary lines.

existent corner. A corner whose location can be verified by an original landmark, a surveyor’s field notes, or other reliable evidence.

lost corner. A point in a land description, such as a landmark or natural object, whose position cannot be reasonably determined from traces of the original marks or other acceptable evidence. • The location can be determined by reference to one or more independent points remaining in the description.

obliterated corner. A corner that can be located only with evidence other than that put in place by the original surveyor.

2. The acquisition of control over all or a dominant quantity of a commodity with the purpose of artificially enhancing the price, carried out by purchases and sales of the commodity — and of options and futures — in a way that depresses the market price so that the participants are enabled to purchase the commodity at satisfactory prices and withhold it from the market for a time, thereby inflating its price. • A corner accomplished by confederation, with the purpose of raising or depressing prices and operating on the market, is a criminal conspiracy if the means are unlawful.

cornering the market. The act or process of acquiring ownership or control of a large portion of the available supply of a commodity or security, permitting manipulation of the commodity’s or security’s price.

Corn Products doctrine. Tax. The principle that a capital asset should be narrowly defined to exclude inventory-related property that is integrally tied to the day-to-day operations of a business. Corn Products Refining Co. v. C.I.R., 350 U.S. 46, 76 S.Ct. 20 (1955).

corody (kor- or kahr-ə-dee). Hist. An allowance of money, accommodation, food, or clothing given by a religious house to a royal servant. • The Crown was entitled to these benefits only from houses it had founded. — Also spelled corrody.

“Corrody is a partition for one’s sustenance. Be it bread, ale, herring, a yearly robe, or sum of money for the robe. So of a chamber, and stable for my horses, when the same is coupled with other things . . .” Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 162 (1759).

corollary (kor- or kahr-ə-ler-ee), n. A proposition that follows from a proven proposition with little or no additional proof; something that naturally follows.

corona (kə-roh-nə). [Latin] Hist. The Crown. • This term formerly appeared in criminal pleadings, e.g., placita coronae (“pleas of the Crown”).

coronation case. Any of the many lawsuits for breach of contract resulting from the postponement of the coronation of Edward VII because of his illness. • In one case, for example, the defendant had agreed to hire a ship for watching the naval review by King Edward VII and for a day’s cruise around the fleet. The court held that the contract was not frustrated by the cancellation of the naval review — the day’s cruise around the fleet was still possible, and indeed, the ship could have been used for many other purposes.

coronator (kor- or kahr-ə-nay-tər). [fr. Latin corona “crown”] A coroner. See CORONER (2).

“The formal title of custos (or occasionally conservator) placitorum corone continued to be used throughout the Middle Ages, but the more convenient shorter forms coronarius, which was confined to a short period around 1200, and CORONATOR rapidly gained greater currency. The English form was 'coroner' or 'crownier.'" R.F. Hunnisett, The Medieval Coroner 1 n.1 (1961).

coronatore eligendo. See DE CORONATORE ELIGENDO.

coronatore exonerando. See DE CORONATORE EXONERANDO.

coroner (kor- or kahr-ə-nər). 1. A public official whose duty is to investigate the causes and circumstances of any death that occurs suddenly, suspiciously, or violently. See MEDICAL EXAMINER. 2. Hist. A royal official with countywide jurisdiction to investigate deaths, to hold inquests, and to assume the duties of the sheriff if need be. • The coroner acted as a check on the sheriff, a local officer whose growing power threatened royal control over the counties. The coroner reported criminal activity to the king's justices in eyre. When the eyre court arrived in a county, it collected the coroner's roll to learn what had occurred in the county during the eyre's absence. The justices fined the coroner if he failed to produce the roll, or if they learned of criminal activity in the county from a source other than the roll.

"The office of coroner was established in September 1194, when the justices in eyre were required to see that three knights and one clerk were elected in every county as 'keepers of the pleas of the crown.' These were the first county coroners. . . . Throughout the Middle Ages the coroner could be ordered to perform almost any duty of an administrative or inquisitorial nature within his bailiwick, either alone or with the sheriff, but there were other duties which belonged more specifically to his office and which he performed without being ordered. These consisted of holding inquests upon dead bodies, receiving adjurations of the realm made by felons in sanctuary, hearing appeals, confessions of felons and appeals of approvers, and attending and sometimes organising exactions and outlawries promulgated in the county court. These were the 'crown pleas' which the coroner had to 'keep'. . . ." R.F. Hunnisett, The Medieval Coroner 1 (1961).

coroner's court. See COURT.

coroner's inquest. See INQUEST.

coroner's jury. See JURY.

corpnership. [Portmanteau word probably formed fr. corporation + partnership] A limited partnership (usu. having many public investors as limited partners) whose general partner is a corporation.

corporale sacramentum (kor-pə-ray-lee sak-rə-men-təm). Corporal oath. See OATH.

corporal oath. See OATH.

corporal punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

corporate, adj. Of or relating to a corporation, esp. a business corporation <corporate bonds>.

corporate acquisition. The takeover of one corporation by another if both parties retain their legal existence after the transaction. Cf. MERGER (7).

corporate agent. See AGENT.

corporate authority. 1. The power rightfully wielded by officers of a corporation. 2. In some jurisdictions, a municipal officer, esp. one empowered to represent the municipality in certain statutory matters.

corporate body. See CORPORATION.

corporate bond. See BOND (3).

corporate books. Written records of a corporation's activities and business transactions.

corporate charter. See CHARTER (3).

corporate citizenship. Corporate status in the state of incorporation, though a corporation is not a citizen for the purposes of the Privileges and Immunities Clause of the U.S. Constitution.

corporate counsel. See COUNSEL.

corporate crime. See CRIME.

corporate distribution. See DISTRIBUTION.

corporate domicile. See DOMICILE.

corporate entity. See ENTITY.

corporate franchise. See FRANCHISE (2).

corporate immunity. See IMMUNITY (2).

corporate indenture. See INDENTURE.

corporate-mortgage trust. A financing device in which debentures are issued and secured by property held in trust. • An independent trustee protects the interests of those who purchase the debentures.

corporate name. See NAME.

corporate officer. See OFFICER (1).

corporate-opportunity doctrine. The rule that a corporation's directors, officers, and employees are precluded from using information gained as such to take personal advantage of any business opportunities that the corporation has an expectancy right or property interest in, or that in fairness should otherwise belong to the corporation. • In a partnership, the analogous principle is the firm-opportunity doctrine.

corporate purpose. The general scope of the business objective for which a corporation was created. • A statement of corporate purpose is commonly required in the articles of incorporation.

corporate raider. A person or business that attempts to take control of a corporation, against its wishes, by buying its stock and replacing its management. — Often shortened to raider. — Also termed hostile bidder; unfriendly suitor. Cf. WHITE KNIGHT.

corporate seal. See SEAL.

corporate speech. See SPEECH.

corporate stock. See STOCK.

corporate trustee. See TRUSTEE (1).

corporate veil. The legal assumption that the acts of a corporation are not the actions of its shareholders, so that the shareholders are exempt from liability for the corporation's actions. See PIERCING THE CORPORATE VEIL.

corporate welfare. See WELFARE.

corporation, n. An entity (usu. a business) having authority under law to act as a single person distinct from the shareholders who own it and having rights to issue stock and exist indefinitely; a group or succession of persons established in accordance with legal rules into a legal or juristic person that has legal personality distinct from the natural persons who make it up, exists indefinitely apart from them, and has the legal powers that its constitution gives it. — Also termed corporation aggregate; aggre- gate corporation; body corporate; corporate body. — incorporate, vb. — corporate, adj. See COMPANY.

“A corporation is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. . . . [I]t possesses only those properties which the charter of its creation confers upon it.” Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 636 (1819) (Marshall, J.). acquired corporation. The corporation that no longer exists after a merger or acquisition.

admitted corporation. A corporation licensed or authorized to do business within a particular state.

aggressor corporation. A corporation that attempts to obtain control of a publicly held corporation by (1) a direct cash tender, (2) a public exchange offer to shareholders, or (3) a merger, which requires the agreement of the target's management.

alien corporation. See foreign corporation.

brother-sister corporation. See sister corporation.

business corporation. A corporation formed to engage in commercial activity for profit. Cf. nonprofit corporation.

C corporation. A corporation whose income is taxed through it rather than through its shareholders. • Any corporation not electing S-corporation tax status under the Internal Revenue Code is a C corporation by default. — Also termed subchapter-C corporation. Cf. S corporation.

charitable corporation. A nonprofit corporation that is dedicated to benevolent purposes and thus entitled to special tax status under the Internal Revenue Code. — Also termed eleemosynary corporation. See CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION.

civil corporation. Any corporation other than a charitable or religious corporation.

clearing corporation. A corporation whose capital stock is held by or for a national security exchange or association registered under federal law such as the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

close corporation. A corporation whose stock is not freely traded and is held by only a few shareholders (often within the same family). • The requirements and privileges of close corporations vary by jurisdiction. — Also termed closely held corporation; closed corporation.

collapsible corporation. A corporation formed to give a short-term venture the appearance of a long-term investment in order to portray income as capital gain, rather than profit. • The corporation is typically formed for the sole purpose of purchasing property. The corporation is usu. dissolved before the property has generated substantial income. The Internal Revenue Service treats the income earned through a collapsible corporation as ordinary income rather than as capital gain. IRC (26 USCA) § 341(a). Cf. collapsible partnership under PARTNERSHIP.

controlled corporation. A corporation in which the majority of the stock is held by one individual or firm.

controlled foreign corporation. Tax. A foreign corporation in which more than 50% of the stock is owned by U.S. citizens who each own 10% or more of the voting stock. • These shareholders (known as U.S. shareholders) are required to report their pro rata share of certain passive income of the corporation. — Abbr. CFC. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 951-964.

cooperative corporation. An entity that has a corporate existence, but is primarily organized for the purpose of providing services and profits to its members and not for corporate profit. • The most common kind of cooperative corporation is formed to purchase real property, such as an apartment building, so that its shareholders may lease the apartments. See COOPERATIVE (1).

corporation aggregate. Hist. A corporation made up of a number of individuals. Cf. corporation sole.

“The first division of corporations is into aggregate and sole. Corporations aggregate consist of many persons united together into one society, and are kept up by a perpetual succession of members, so as to continue forever: of which kind are the mayor and commonalty of a city, the head and fellows of a college, the dean and chapter of a cathedral church.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 457 (1765).

“The corporation aggregate is the typical corporation, which, at any given time, normally contains a number of individuals as members. This number may be great or small, varying from the hundreds of thousands of burgesses of a large borough to the two members of a private joint-stock company. It is even said that a corporation aggregate would not necessarily cease to exist if all its members died, leaving no successors; and this is, probably, sound doctrine.” Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 118 (P.B. Fairsted ed., 6th ed. 1967).

corporation by estoppel. A business that is deemed, by operation of law, to be a corporation because a third party dealt with the business as if it were a corporation, thus preventing the third party from holding a shareholder or officer of the corporation individually liable. See ESTOPPEL.

corporation by prescription. A corporation that, though lacking a charter, has acquired its corporate status through a long period of operating as a corporation. • Such an entity may engage in any enterprises that are not manifestly inconsistent with the purposes for which it is assumed to have been created. — Also termed common-law corporation.

corporation de facto. See de facto corporation.

corporation de jure. See de jure corporation.

corporation for profit. See for-profit corporation.

corporation sole. A series of successive persons holding an office; a continuous legal personality that is attributed to successive holders of certain monarchical or ecclesiastical positions, such as kings, bishops, rectors, vicars, and the like. • This continuous personality is viewed, by legal fiction, as having the qualities of a corporation. Cf. corporation aggregate.

“It would have been quite possible to explain in the same way the devolution of the lands of the Crown, or of a bishopric, or of a rectory, from the sovereign, bishop, or rector, to his successor; but English law has preferred to introduce for this purpose the fiction, peculiar to itself, of a ‘corporation sole.’” Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 350-51 (13th ed. 1924).

“But English Law knows another kind of corporation, the ‘corporation sole’, in which the group consists, not of a number of contemporary members, but of a succession of single members, of whom only one exists at any given time. This kind of corporation has been described by eminent legal writers as a ‘freak’; but it is a freak which undoubtedly has a legal existence. It has been said that the Crown is the only common law lay corporation sole; though the Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been claimed as another example, and statutory examples, such as the Public Trustee and the Treasury Solicitor, are conspicuous. But the examples of ecclesiastical corporations sole are numerous. Every diocesan bishop, every rector of a parish, is a corporation sole, and can acquire and hold land (and now also personal property) even during the vacancy of the see or living, for the benefit of his successors, and can bind his successors by his lawful conveyances and contracts. But, obviously, the distinction between the bishop or rector, in his personal and in his corporate character, is even harder to grasp than that between the members of a corporation aggregate and the corporation itself” Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 118-19 (P.B. Fairsted ed., 6th ed. 1967).

de facto corporation (di fak-toh). An incompletely formed corporation whose existence operates as a defense to personal liability of the directors, officers, and shareholders who in good faith thought they were operating the business as a duly formed corporation. — Also termed corporation de facto.

de jure corporation (di juur-ee). A corporation formed in accordance with all applicable laws and recognized as a corporation for liability purposes. — Also termed corporation de jure.

domestic corporation. 1. A corporation that is organized and chartered under the laws of a state. • The corporation is considered domestic by the chartering state. Cf. foreign corporation. 2. Tax. A corporation created or organized in the United States or under federal or state law. IRC (26 USCA) § 7701(a)(4).

dormant corporation. 1. An inactive corporation; a legal corporation that is presently not operating. 2. A corporation whose authority to do business has been revoked or suspended either by operation of law (as by failure to pay franchise taxes) or by an act of the government official responsible for the corporation's authority.

dummy corporation. A corporation whose only function is to hide the principal's identity and to protect the principal from liability.

ecclesiastical corporation (i-klee-zee-as-təkəl). English law. A corporation that is organized for spiritual purposes or for the administration of property held for religious uses. • This type of corporation is composed exclusively of ecclesiastics. — Also termed religious corporation. Cf. lay corporation.

"Ecclesiastical corporations. Corporations created for the furtherance of religion. . . . They are of two kinds: (1) corporations sole, i.e., bishops, certain deans, parsons and vicars; and (2) corporations aggregate, i.e., deans and chapters, and formerly prior and convent, abbot and monks, and the like. Such corporations are called 'religious corporations,' or 'religious societies,' in the United States." 1 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 432 (1883).

eleemosynary corporation. See charitable corporation.

foreign corporation. A corporation that was organized and chartered under the laws of another state, government, or country <in Arizona, a California corporation is said to be a foreign corporation>. — Also termed alien corporation. Cf. domestic corporation.

"'Foreign' is defined as 'not native or domestic.' This is the meaning given to the word in the various judicial definitions of foreign corporations. With respect to a particular state or country, a corporation created by or under the laws of that state or country is a 'domestic corporation,' and any corporation that owes its existence to the laws of another state, government or country is a 'foreign corporation.' The difference between a domestic and a foreign corporation of the same kind is one of status, determined by considerations that are external to the corporation and not internal or organic. Moreover, foreign corporations of all classes fall equally within the definition. In many jurisdictions foreign corporations are defined by statute, and the statutory definitions do not differ in substance from that stated above." 17 Fletcher Cyclopedia on the Law of Private Corporations § 8290, at 6-7 (1998).

for-profit corporation. A corporation organized for the purpose of making a profit; a business corporation. — Also termed corporation for profit; moneyed corporation.

government corporation. See public corporation (3).

joint-venture corporation. A corporation that has joined with one or more individuals or corporations to accomplish some specified project.

lay corporation. English law. A corporation made up of laypersons, and existing for a business or charitable purpose. Cf. ecclesiastical corporation.

limited-liability corporation. See limited-liability company under COMPANY.

public corporation. 1. A corporation whose shares are traded to and among the general public. — Also termed publicly held corporation. 2. A corporation that is created by the state as an agency in the administration of civil government. — Also termed political corporation. 3. A government-owned corporation that engages in activities that benefit the general public, usu. while remaining financially independent. • Such a corporation is managed by a publicly appointed board. — Also termed (in sense 3) government corporation; public-benefit corporation.

public-service corporation. A corporation whose operations serve a need of the general public, such as public transportation, communications, gas, water, or electricity. • This type of corporation is usu. subject to extensive governmental regulation.

quasi-corporation. An entity that exercises some of the functions of a corporation but that has not been granted corporate status by statute; esp., a public corporation with limited authority and powers (such as a county or school district). — Also sometimes termed quasi-municipal corporation. Cf. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

quasi-public corporation. A for-profit corporation providing an essential public service. • An example is an electric company or other utility.

railroad corporation. A company organized to construct, maintain, and operate railroads. — Also termed railroad company.

“A railroad company or corporation is usually regarded as a private corporation, and justly so, as contrasted with a strictly public corporation, such as a city, county, township, or the like governmental subdivision, but it is not a private corporation in the strict sense that an ordinary business corporation is, for it is charged with duties of a public nature that distinguish it from a purely and strictly private corporation.” 1 Byron K. Elliott & William F. Elliott, A Treatise on the Law of Railroads § 3, at 7 (3d ed. 1921).

registered corporation. A publicly held corporation a security of which is registered under § 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. • The corporation is subject to the Act’s periodic disclosure requirements and proxy regulations. 15 USCA § 781.

religious corporation. A corporation created to carry out some religious purpose.

S corporation. A corporation whose income is taxed through its shareholders rather than through the corporation itself. • Only corporations with a limited number of shareholders can elect S-corporation tax status under Subchapter S of the Internal Revenue Code. — Also termed subchapter-S corporation; tax-option corporation. Cf. C corporation.

shell corporation. A corporation that has no active business and usu. exists only in name as a vehicle for another company’s business operations.

sister corporation. One of two or more corporations controlled by the same, or substantially the same, owners. — Also termed brother-sister corporation.

small-business corporation. 1. A corporation having 75 or fewer shareholders and otherwise satisfying the requirements of the Internal Revenue Code provisions permitting a subchapter S election. IRC (26 USCA) § 1361. See S corporation. 2. A corporation receiving money for stock (as a contribution to capital and paid-in surplus) totaling not more than $1,000,000, and otherwise satisfying the requirements of the Internal Revenue Code section 1244(c), thereby enabling the shareholders to claim an ordinary loss on worthless stock. IRC (26 USCA) § 1244(c).

sole corporation. A corporation having or acting through only a single member.

spiritual corporation. A corporation whose members are spiritual persons, such as bishops, rectors, and abbots.

stock corporation. A corporation in which the capital is contributed by the shareholders and divided into shares represented by certificates.

subchapter-C corporation. See C corporation.

corporator (kor-pə-ray-tər). 1. A member of a corporation. 2. INCORPORATOR.

“Usually, a member of a corporation, in which sense it includes a stockholder; also, one of the persons who are the original organizers or promoters of a new corporation. The corporators are not the corporation, for either may sue the other.” William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 266 (1889).

corporeal (kor-por-ee-əl), adj. Having a physical, material existence; tangible <land and fixtures are corporeal property>. — corporeality, n. Cf. INCORPOREAL.

corporeal hereditament. See HEREDITAMENT.

corporeal ownership. See OWNERSHIP.

corporeal possession. See POSSESSION.

corporeal property. See PROPERTY.

corporeal thing. See THING.

corps diplomatique (kor dee-plə-ma-teeek). DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

corpus (kor-pəs), n. [Latin “body”] 1. An abstract collection or body. 2. The property for which a trustee is responsible; the trust principal. — Also termed res; trust estate; trust fund; trust property; trust res. 3. Principal (as of a fund or estate), as opposed to interest or income. Pl. corpora (kor-pə-rə), corpuses (kor-pə-səz).

corpus comitatus (kor-pəs kom-ə-tay-təs). [Latin “the body of a county”] Hist. Places not part of the “high seas” and hence where admiralty jurisdiction did not originally extend.

corpus corporatum (kor-pəs kor-pə-ray-təm). [Latin] Hist. A corporate body; a corporation.

corpus cum causa (kor-pəs kəm kaw-zə). [Law Latin “the body with the cause”] Hist. A writ issuing out of Chancery to remove both a person and a record from an inferior court in order to review a judgment issued by the inferior court.

"The first use of the writ to challenge imprisonment was in cases of privilege; an officer of a central court, or a litigant there, could be released from imprisonment in another court by writ of privilege in habeas corpus form. The Court of Chancery at the same time developed a similar procedure for reviewing the cause of imprisonment in an inferior tribunal; this species of writ was called corpus cum causa, and it became a common remedy against the misuse of borough jurisdiction in the fifteenth century." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 168 (3d ed. 1990).

corpus delicti (kor-pəs də-lik-tī or -tee). [Latin "body of the crime"] 1. The fact of a transgression; ACTUS REUS.

"[T]he definition of 'corpus delicti' often becomes important. (a) Essentially it signifies merely the fact of the specific loss or injury sustained, e.g., death of a victim or burning of a house. (b) To this is added also, by most courts, the criminal agency of some person (i.e., not mere accident). (c) A few courts also include evidence of the accused's identity with the deed; but this is absurd, for it virtually signifies making 'corpus delicti' synonymous with the whole charge. — Many courts treat this rule with a pedantic and unpractical strictness." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 310 (1935).

"One of the important rules of evidence in criminal cases is that which requires proof of the corpus delicti. Literally defined this term means 'the body of the offense,' or 'the substance of the crime.' In popular language it is used to describe the visible evidence of the crime, such as the dead body of a murdered person. Properly used, however, it is applicable to any crime and relates particularly to the act element of criminality; that is, that a certain prohibited act has been committed or result accomplished and that it was committed or accomplished by a criminal human agency." Justin Miller, "The Criminal Act," in Legal Essays in Tribute to Orrin Kip McMurray at 469, 478 (1935).

"The phrase 'corpus delicti' does not mean dead body, but body of the crime, and every offense has its corpus delicti. Its practical importance, however, has been very largely limited to the homicide cases. It concerns the usability in a criminal case of a confession made by the defendant outside of court." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 140 (3d ed. 1982).

2. Loosely, the material substance on which a crime has been committed; the physical evidence of a crime, such as the corpse of a murdered person.

corpus delicti rule. Criminal law. The doctrine that prohibits a prosecutor from proving the corpus delicti based solely on a defendant's extrajudicial statements. • The prosecution must establish the corpus delicti with corroborating evidence to secure a conviction.

corpus juris (kor-pəs joor-is). [Latin "body of law"] The law as the sum or collection of laws <Corpus Juris Secundum>. — Abbr. C.J.

corpus juris Angliae (kor-pəs joor-is ang-lee-ee). The entire body of English law, comprising the common law, statutory law, equity, and special law in its various forms.

Corpus Juris Canonici (kor-pəs joor-is kə-non-ə-sī). [Latin] Hist. The body of the canon law, compiled from the decrees and canons of the Roman Catholic Church. • The Corpus Juris Canonici emerged during the 12th century, beginning with the publication of Gratian's Decretum (1141–1150). In addition to the Decretum, it includes Raymond of Pennafort's Liber Extra (1234), the Liber Sextus of Pope Boniface VIII (1298), the Clementines of Pope Clement V (1313), the Extravagantes Joannis of Pope John XXII (1325), and extravagantes published by Pope John's successors (1499–1502). In 1582, the entire collection was edited by a commission of church dignitaries and officially named the Corpus Juris Canonici. It remained the Catholic Church's primary body of law until the promulgation of the Code of Canon Law in 1917, now replaced by that of 1983.

"After Gratian, later papal enactments, called 'decretals,' were collected and issued by the authority of various popes.... A revised edition of such 'decretals' ... was presented to Pope Gregory IX in 1234 — only a short while, therefore, after the final form of Magna Carta in 1225 — and issued by him with statutory force. The revision freely made changes in the text of the enactments and the resulting compilation in four 'books' was regarded as a 'Code,' corresponding to the 'Code' of Justinian, just as the Decretum of Gratian corresponded to the Digest.... All these compilations and collections were, from the sixteenth century on, known as the Corpus Juris Canonici, the 'Body of Canon Law,' and formed the basis of the law administered in the Church courts." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 33–34 (1936).

Corpus Juris Civilis (kor-pəs joor-is sə-vil-is or sə-vī-lis). The body of the civil law, compiled and codified under the direction of the Roman emperor Justinian in A.D. 528–534. • The collection includes four works — the Institutes, the Digest (or Pandects), the Code, and the Novels. The title Corpus Juris Civilis was not original, or even early, but was modeled on the Corpus Juris Canonici and given in the 16th century and later to editions of the texts of the four component parts of the Roman law. See ROMAN LAW (1). corpus possessionis (kor-pəs pə-zes[h]-ee-oh-nis). [Latin] Roman law. A thing possessed by someone. See animus possidendi under ANIMUS.

corpus pro corpore (kor-pəs proh kor-pə-ree). [Latin] Hist. Body for body. • This phrase commonly expressed the liability of a surety in a civil action (a mainpernor). See MAINPRISE.

correal (kor-ee-əl or kə-ree-əl), adj. Of or relating to liability that is joint and several. • Under Roman law, a correal debtor who paid an entire obligation had no right of action against a co-debtor. See CORREUS; SOLIDARY.

"If Aulus, having first obtained from Titius the promise of a hundred aurei, turned to Seius and said, Spondesne mihi, Sei, cosdem centum aureos dare? (Do you engage, Seius, to give me the same one hundred aurei?), then if Seius answered, Spondeo, there was one single obligation for a hundred aurei, binding in full on each of the two debtors. Aulus could demand a hundred from Titius or a hundred from Seius, and in case of non-payment could sue either one, taking his choice between them, for the full amount. If either paid the hundred, whether willingly or by compulsion, the other was released: for there was but one debt, and that was now discharged. This kind of obligation is called correal obligation (correal, from con, and reus or rei, connected parties, parties associated in a common debt or credit)." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 258 (1881).

correality (kor-ee-əl-ə-tee), n. The quality or state of being correal; the relationship between parties to an obligation that terminates when an entire payment is made by one of two or more debtors to a creditor, or a payment is made by a debtor to one of two or more creditors.

"But there were circumstances, apart from indivisibility, in which each of the parties might be liable in full. . . . Several were liable or entitled, each in solidum, under an obligation, but the thing was due only once. Satisfaction by, or to, one of those liable, or entitled, ended the whole obligation, and action by one of the joint creditors, or against one of the debtors, not only 'novated' the obligation between the actual parties, but destroyed it altogether as against the others. This relation is commonly called correality (correi debendi vel credendi)." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 349-50 (2d ed. 1953).

correal obligation. See OBLIGATION.

corrected policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

correction, n. 1. Generally, the act or an instance of making right what is wrong . 2. A change in business activity or market price following and counteracting an increase or decrease in the activity or price <the broker advised investors to sell before the inevitable stock-market correction>. See DOWN REVERSAL. 3. (usu. pl.) The punishment and treatment of a criminal offender through a program of imprisonment, parole, and probation <Department of Corrections>. — correct, vb. — corrective (for senses 1 & 2), correctional (for sense 3), adj.

correctional institution. See PRISON.

correctional system. A network of governmental agencies that administer a jurisdiction's prisons and parole system.

corrective advertising. Advertising that informs consumers that earlier advertisements contained a deceptive claim, and that provides consumers with corrected information. • This type of advertising may be ordered by the Federal Trade Commission.

corrector of the staple. Hist. A clerk who records merchants' transactions at a staple. See STAPLE (2).

correi credendi (kor-ee-I kri-den-dī). [Latin] Roman law. Joint creditors. — Also termed correi stipulandi (stip-yə-lan-dī). See STIPULATIO.

"The mode for stipulatio is stated in the Institutes. Of several stipulators (correi credendi, active correality) each asks the debtor and he answers once for all. Of several promisors (correi debendi, passive correality) the creditor asks each and they answer together." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 350 (2d ed. 1953).

correi debendi (kor-ee-I di-ben-dī). [Latin] Roman & Scots law. Joint debtors. — Also termed correi promittendi (proh-mi-ten-dī). See STIPULATIO.

"Correi Debendi — The name given by the Roman law to persons jointly bound. . . . In the Scotch law, if bound severally, and not jointly and severally, each is bound only for his share, whatever be the responsibility of the others." Hugh Barclay, A Digest of the Law of Scotland 196 (3d ed. 1865).

correi stipulandi. See CORREI CREDENDI.

correlative (kə-rel-ə-tiv), adj. 1. Related or corresponding; analogous. 2. Having or involving a reciprocal or mutually interdependent relationship <the term right is correlative with duty>.

correlative-rights doctrine. Water law. The principle that adjoining landowners must limit their use of a common water source to a reasonable amount.

"Under the correlative rights doctrine . . . rights to groundwater are determined by land ownership. However, owners of land overlying a single aquifer are each limited to a reasonable share of the total supply of groundwater. The share is usually based on the acreage owned." David H. Getches, Water Law in a Nutshell 249 (3d ed. 1997).

correspondence audit. See AUDIT.

correspondent, n. 1. The writer of a letter or letters. 2. A person employed by the media to report on events. 3. A securities firm or financial institution that performs services for another in a place or market that the other does not have direct access to. — correspond, vb.

corrigendum (kor-ə-jen-dəm), n. [Latin "correction"] An error in a printed work discovered after the work has gone to press. — Also termed erratum. Pl. corrigenda (kor-ə-jen-də).

corroborate (kə-rob-ə-rayt), vb. To strengthen or confirm; to make more certain <the witness corroborated the plaintiff's testimony>.

corroborating evidence. See EVIDENCE.

corroborating witness. See WITNESS.

corroboration (kə-rob-ə-ray-shən), n. 1. Confirmation or support by additional evidence or authority <corroboration of the witness's testimony>. 2. Formal confirmation or ratification <corroboration of the treaty>. — corroborate, vb. — corroborative (kə-rob-ə-rə-tiv), adj. — corroborator (kə-rob-ə-ray-tər), n.

corroborative evidence. See corroborating evidence under EVIDENCE.

corrupt, adj. 1. Archaic. (Of a person) subject to corruption of blood.

"[T]here are divers offences made Treason by Act of Parliament, whereof, though a Man be Attaint, yet his Blood, by Provisoes therein, is not corrupt, nor shall he forfeit any thing. . . ." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

2. Having an unlawful or depraved motive; esp., influenced by bribery.

corrupt, vb. 1. Archaic. To impose corruption of blood on (a person). 2. To change (a person's morals or principles) from good to bad.

corruption. 1. Depravity, perversion, or taint; an impairment of integrity, virtue, or moral principle; esp., the impairment of a public official's duties by bribery.

"The word 'corruption' indicates impurity or debasement and when found in the criminal law it means depravity or gross impropriety." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 855 (3d ed. 1982).

2. The act of doing something with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others; a fiduciary's or official's use of a station or office to procure some benefit either personally or for someone else, contrary to the rights of others.

corruption in office. See official misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

corruption of blood. A defunct doctrine, now considered unconstitutional, under which a person loses the ability to inherit or pass property as a result of an attainder or of being declared civilly dead. — Also termed corruption of the blood. See ATTAINDER; CIVIL DEATH.

"Corruption of blood is, when any one is attainted of felony or treason, then his blood is said to be corrupt; by means whereof neither his children, nor any of his blood, can be heirs to him, or to any other ancestor, for that they ought to claim by him. And if he were a noble or gentleman before, he and all his children are made thereby ignoble and ungentle. . . ." Termes de la Ley 125 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

corruptly, adv. In a corrupt or depraved manner; by means of corruption or bribery. ● As used in criminal-law statutes, corruptly usu. indicates a wrongful desire for pecuniary gain or other advantage.

corrupt-motive doctrine. Criminal law. The rule that conspiracy is punishable only if the agreement was entered into with an evil purpose, not merely with an intent to do the illegal act. ● This doctrine — which originated in People v. Powell, 63 N.Y. 88 (1875) — has been rejected by the Model Penal Code. — Also termed Powell doctrine.

corrupt-practices act. A federal or state statute that regulates campaign contributions and expenditures as well as their disclosure.

corvée seigneuriale (kor-vay sen-yuu-ree-ahl). [French] Hist. Services due the lord of the manor. — Often shortened to corvée.

applied cost. A cost appropriated to a project before it has been incurred.

average cost. The sum of the costs of beginning inventory costs and the costs of later additions divided by the total number of available units.

avoidable cost. A cost that can be averted if production is held below a certain level so that additional expenses will not be incurred.

carrying cost. Accounting. The variable cost of stocking one unit of inventory for one year. ● Carrying cost includes the opportunity cost of the capital invested in the inventory. — Also termed cost of carrying.

common cost. See indirect cost.

cost of completion. Contracts. A measure of damages based on the expense incurred by the party not in breach to finish the promised performance.

direct cost. The amount of money for material, labor, and overhead to produce a product.

distribution cost. Any cost incurred in marketing a product or service, such as advertising, storage, and shipping.

fixed cost. A cost whose value does not fluctuate with changes in output or business activity; esp., overhead expenses such as rent, salaries, and depreciation. — Also termed fixed charge; fixed expense.

flotation cost. (usu. pl.) A cost incurred in issuing additional stock.

historical cost. See acquisition cost.

implicit cost. See opportunity cost.

indirect cost. A cost that is not specific to the production of a particular good or service, but that arises from production activity in general, such as overhead allocations for general and administrative activities. — Also termed common cost.

manufacturing cost. The cost incurred in the production of goods, including direct and indirect costs.

marginal cost. The additional cost incurred in producing one more unit of output.

mixed cost. A cost that includes fixed and variable costs.

net cost. The cost of an item, arrived at by subtracting any financial gain from the total cost.

opportunity cost. The cost of acquiring an asset measured by the value of an alternative investment that is forgone <her opportunity cost of $1,000 in equipment was her consequent inability to invest that money in bonds>. — Also termed implicit cost.

original cost. See acquisition cost.

prime cost. The true price paid for goods on a bona fide purchase.

replacement cost. The cost of acquiring an asset that is as equally useful or productive as an asset currently held.

social cost. The cost to society of any particular practice or rule <although automobiles are undeniably beneficial to society, they carry a certain social cost in the lives that are lost every year on the road>.

sunk cost. A cost that has already been incurred and that cannot be recovered.

tangible cost. Oil & gas. A particular expense associated with drilling, such as the costs incurred for materials and land. • Drilling and testing costs are considered intangible.

transaction cost. (usu. pl.) A cost connected with a process transaction, such as a broker's commission, the time and effort expended to arrange a deal, or the cost involved in litigating a dispute.

unit cost. The cost of a single unit of a product or service; the total manufacturing cost divided by the number of units.

variable cost. The cost that varies in the short run in close relationship with changes in output.

2. (pl.) The charges or fees taxed by the court, such as filing fees, jury fees, courthouse fees, and reporter fees. — Also termed court costs.

3. (pl.) The expenses of litigation, prosecution, or other legal transaction, esp. those allowed in favor of one party against the other. — Also termed (in sense 3) litigation costs.

cost accounting. See cost accounting method under ACCOUNTING METHOD.

cost accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

cost and freight. A term in a quoted sales price indicating that the quoted price includes the cost of the goods and freight charges to the named destination, but not insurance or other special charges. • During shipment, the risk of loss is on the buyer. — Abbr. C.F.; C & F; CandF.

cost approach. A method of appraising real property, based on the cost of building a new property with the same utility, assuming that an informed buyer would pay no more for the property than it would cost to build a new property having the same usefulness. Cf. MARKET APPROACH; INCOME APPROACH.

cost basis. See BASIS (2).

cost-benefit analysis. An analytical technique that weighs the costs of a proposed decision, holding, or project against the expected advantages, economic or otherwise.

cost bond. See BOND (2).

cost-book mining company. An association of persons organized for the purpose of working mines or lodes, whose capital stock is divided into shares that are transferable without the consent of other members. • The management of the mine is entrusted to an agent called a purser.

cost depletion. Oil & gas. The recovery of an oil-and-gas producer's basis (i.e., investment) in a producing well by deducting the basis proportionately over the producing life of the well. Treas. Reg. § 1.611-2.

"Under cost depletion, the taxpayer in an oil and gas property deducts the basis in the property from the income as oil and gas are produced and sold. Cost depletion is calculated by a formula . . . [that] relates the recovery of the taxpayer's investment to the proportion that the current unit sales of oil and gas bear to the total anticipated sales of oil and gas from the property. The investment is recovered ratably over the life of the reserves." John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 353 (3d ed. 1995).

cost, insurance, and freight. A term in a quoted sales price indicating that the price includes the cost of the goods as well as freight and insurance charges to the named destination. • During shipment, the risk of loss is on the buyer. But the seller must provide insurance at a specified amount (usu. at a minimum of 110%). — Abbr. C.I.F. Cf. FREE ALONGSIDE SHIP; FREE ON BOARD.

"'C.i.f.' is a mercantile symbol that is commonly used in international sales contracts. It is defined by section 2-320 of the UCC and by the Incoterms — 1953 and the Revised American Foreign Trade Definitions — 1941. Under all of these definitions the letters 'c.i.f.' mean that the price covers the cost of the goods, the cost of insuring them for the benefit of the order of the buyer, and the cost of carrying them to the named point, almost always the destination. Like the other mercantile symbols, the meaning of 'C.I.F.' may be varied by agreement." William D. Hawkland, Uniform Commercial Code Series § 2-320:01 (1984).

C.I.F. destination. A contractual term denoting that the price includes in a lump sum the cost of the goods and the insurance and freight to the named destination. — Also termed C.I.F. place of destination.

cost justification. Under the Robinson-Patman Act, an affirmative defense against a charge of price discrimination dependent on the seller's showing that it incurs lower costs in serving those customers who are paying less. 15 USCA § 13(a).

cost-of-capital method. A means of measuring a utility's cost of acquiring debt and equity capital. • Regulatory commissions often use this method to determine a fair rate of return for the utility's investors.

cost of carrying. See carrying cost under COST.

cost of completion. See COST (1).

cost-of-living clause. A provision (as in a contract or lease) that gives an automatic wage, rent, or benefit increase tied in some way to cost-of-living rises in the economy. • A cost-of-living clause may also cover a decrease, though this is rare. See INFLATION.

cost-of-living index. See CONSUMER PRICE INDEX.

cost-plus contract. See CONTRACT.

cost-push inflation. See INFLATION.

costs de incremento. See COSTS OF INCREASE.

costs of collection. Expenses incurred in receiving payment of a note; esp., attorney's fees created in the effort to collect a note.

costs of increase. Hist. Costs of court that are awarded in addition to what a jury awards. • Juries usu. awarded the successful party only a small sum for costs. A party wishing to recoup the additional costs had to file an affidavit of increase setting forth what further costs were incurred by taking the matter through trial. — Also termed costs de incremento. See affidavit of increase under AFFIDAVIT.

costs of the day. See COST (3). costs to abide event. See COST (3).

cosurety. A surety who shares the cost of performing suretyship obligations with another. See SURETY.

cotarius (kə-tair-ee-əs). [Law Latin] Hist. A socage-tenure serf who holds land by paying rent and providing some personal services to the lord. • Both cotarius and coterellus serfs were also known as cottagers. Cf. COTERELLUS.

cotenancy. See TENANCY.

coterellus (kot-ə-rel-əs). [Law Latin] Hist. A serf who inhabits a cottage; a servile tenant whose person, issue, and goods are at the disposal of the lord. — Also spelled coterell. Cf. COTARIUS.

"Coterellus. . . . A cottager. Considered by Spelman and others, the same with cotarius. But Cowell makes the distinction that the cotarius had free socage tenure, and paid a stated firm (rent) in provisions or money, with some occasional customary service; whereas the coterellus seemed to have held in mere villenage, and had his person and issue and goods disposed at the pleasure of the lord." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 387 (2d ed. 1867).

coterminous (koh-tər-mə-nəs), adj. 1. CONTERMINOUS (1). 2. (Of ideas or events) coextensive in time or meaning <Judge Smith's tenure was coterminous with Judge Jasper's>.

cotland (kot-lənd). Hist. Land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villeinage tenure.

cotortfeasor (koh-tort-fee-zər). One who, together with another, has committed a tort. See TORTFEASOR.

cotrustee. One of two or more persons in whom the administration of a trust is vested. • The cotrustees form a collective trustee and exercise their powers jointly. — Also termed joint trustee. See TRUSTEE.

cotset (kot-set). Hist. A villein who provides labor to a lord in exchange for a cottage and plot of land. — Also termed cotsetus.

cottier (kot-ee-ər). 1. Hist. A serf who lives in a cottage; a cottager. • Over time, cottier has come to refer to a day laborer or a rural dweller. 2. Hist. Irish law. A tenant who leases a house and a small (usu. two acre or less) plot of land.

couchant and levant (kow-çənt / lev-ənt), adj. See LEVANT AND COUCHANT.

council. 1. A deliberative assembly <the U.N. Security Council>.

common council. 1. In some cities, the lower branch of a city council. 2. In some cities, the city's governing board.

select council. In some states, the upper branch of a city council.

2. An administrative or executive body .

councillor. See COUNCILOR.

Council of Economic Advisors. A select group of economists who advise the U.S. President on economic issues. — Abbr. CEA.

Council of the North. Hist. A body used by the Tudors to administer the northern parts of England (esp. Yorkshire) during the 16th and 17th centuries. ● The council probably predated the Tudors, but Henry VIII revived it. In addition to enforcing Crown policy in the northern territories, the appointees (many of whom were lawyers) exercised wide criminal and civil jurisdiction. The Council disbanded ca. 1640.

councilor, n. A person who serves on a council, esp. at the local level. — Also spelled councillor. — councillorship, n.

counsel, n. 1. Advice or assistance <the lawyer's counsel was to petition immediately for a change of immigration status>. 2. One or more lawyers who represent a client <the client acted on advice of counsel>. — In the singular, also termed counselor. Cf. ATTORNEY; LAWYER. 3. English law. A member of the bar; BARRISTER.

advisory counsel. An attorney retained merely to give advice on a particular matter, as distinguished from one (such as trial counsel) actively participating in a case.

appellate counsel. A lawyer who represents a party on appeal. ● The term is often used in contrast with trial counsel.

assigned counsel. An attorney appointed by the court to represent a person, usu. an indigent person. — Also termed court-appointed attorney.

corporate counsel. An in-house attorney for a corporation.

corporation counsel. A city attorney in an incorporated municipality.

counsel of record. See ATTORNEY OF RECORD.

general counsel. 1. A lawyer or law firm that represents a client in all or most of the client's legal matters, but that sometimes refers extraordinary matters — such as litigation and intellectual-property cases — to other lawyers. 2. The most senior lawyer in a corporation's legal department, usu. also a corporate officer.

house counsel. See in-house counsel.

independent counsel. An attorney hired to provide an unbiased opinion about a lawsuit or to conduct an impartial investigation; esp., an attorney appointed by a governmental branch or agency to investigate alleged misconduct within that branch or agency. See special prosecutor under PROSECUTOR. Cf. special counsel.

in-house counsel. One or more lawyers employed by a company. — Also termed house counsel.

junior counsel. 1. The younger or lower-ranking of two or more attorneys employed on the same side of a case, esp. someone charged with the less important aspects of the case. 2. English law. The barrister who assists Queen's Counsel.

King's Counsel. See KING'S COUNSEL.

lead counsel. 1. The more highly ranked lawyer if two or more are retained; the lawyer who manages or controls the case or cases, esp. in class actions or multidistrict litigation. — Also termed senior counsel; attorney in charge. 2. QUEEN'S COUNSEL. — Also termed leading counsel.

of counsel. 1. A lawyer employed by a party in a case; esp., one who — although not the principal attorney of record — is employed to assist in the preparation or management of the case or in its presentation on appeal. 2. A lawyer who is affiliated with a law firm, though not as a member, partner, or associate.

Queen's Counsel. See QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

senior counsel. 1. See lead counsel. 2. See KING'S COUNSEL; QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

special counsel. An attorney employed by the state or political subdivision to assist in a particular case when the public interest so requires. — Also termed special attorney. Cf. independent counsel.

standby counsel. An attorney who is appointed to be prepared to represent a pro se criminal defendant if the defendant's self-representation ends. ● The standby counsel may also provide some advice and guidance to the defendant during the self-representation. — Also termed advisory counsel.

trial counsel. 1. A lawyer who represents a party at trial. ● The term is often used in contrast with appellate counsel. 2. Military law. The person who prosecutes a case on the government's behalf.

counsel, assistance of. See ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL.

counsel, right to. See RIGHT TO COUNSEL.

counsel and procure. See AID AND ABET.

counsel of record. See ATTORNEY OF RECORD.

counselor. See COUNSEL (2).

count, n. Procedure. 1. The part of an indictment charging the suspect with a distinct offense. 2. In a complaint or similar pleading, the statement of a distinct claim. Cf. DECLARATION (7).

"This word . . . is in our old law-books used synonymously with declaration But when the suit embraces two or more causes of action (each of which of course requires a different statement), or when the plaintiff makes two or more different statements of one and the same cause of action, each several statement is called a count, and all of them, collectively, constitute the declaration." 1 John Bouvier, A Law Dictionary 245 (1839).

common count. Hist. In a plaintiff's pleading in an action for debt, boilerplate language that is not founded on the circumstances of the individual case but is intended to guard against a possible variance and to enable the plaintiff to take advantage of any ground of liability that the proof may disclose. • In the action for indebitatus assumpsit, the common count stated that the defendant had failed to pay a debt as promised. See indebitatus assumpsit under ASSUMPSIT.

general count. A count that states the plaintiff's claim without undue particularity.

money count. Hist. A count, usu. founded on a simple contract, giving rise to a claim for payment of money.

"Simple contracts, express or implied, resulting in mere debts, are of so frequent occurrence as causes of action, that certain concise forms of counts were devised for suing upon them. These are called the 'indebitatus' or 'money counts.'" 2 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 833 (1883).

multiple counts. Several separate causes of action or charged offenses contained in a single pleading or indictment.

omnibus count (ahm-ni-bəs). A count that combines into one count all money claims, claims for goods sold and delivered, claims for work and labor, and claims for an account stated.

separate count. One of two or more criminal charges contained in one indictment, each charge constituting a separate indictment for which the accused may be tried.

several count. One of two or more counts in a pleading, each of which states a different cause of action.

special count. A section of a pleading in which the plaintiff's claim is stated with great particularity — usu. employed only when the pleading rules require specificity.

3. Hist. The plaintiff's declaration, or initial pleading, in a real action. See DECLARATION (7).

4. Patents. The part of a patent application that defines the subject matter in a priority contest (i.e., an interference) between two or more applications or between one or more applications and one or more patents. See INTERFERENCE (2).

count, vb. 1. In pleading, to declare or state; to narrate the facts that state a claim. 2. Hist. To plead orally; to plead or argue a case in court.

counter. Hist. An advocate or professional pleader; one who counts (i.e., orally recites) for a client. • Counters had coalesced into an identifiable group practicing before the Common Bench by the beginning of the 13th century. They were the leaders of the medieval legal profession, and over time came to be known as serjeants-at-law. — Also spelled countor; contor; counteur. See SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

counteraction. See COUNTERCLAIM.

counteraffidavit. See AFFIDAVIT.

counterbond. See BOND (2).

counterclaim, n. A claim for relief asserted against an opposing party after an original claim has been made; esp., a defendant's claim in opposition to or as a setoff against the plaintiff's claim. — Also termed counteraction; countersuit; cross-demand. — counterclaim, vb. — counterclaimant, n. Cf. CROSS-CLAIM.

"Under [Fed. R. Civ. P.] Rule 13 the court has broad discretion to allow claims to be joined in order to expedite the resolution of all controversies between the parties in one suit. Rule 13(c) specifically provides that the counterclaimant is not limited by recovery sought by the opposing party but may claim relief in excess of that amount. Further, the general legal rule is that it is immaterial whether a counterclaim is legal or equitable for purposes of determining whether it properly is brought under Rule 13. . . . The expectation is that this liberal joinder policy will further the elimination of circuitry of action and multiple litigation." 6 Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1403, at 15-16 (2d ed. 1990).

compulsory counterclaim. A counterclaim that must be asserted to be cognizable, usu. because it relates to the opposing party's claim and arises out of the same subject matter. • If a defendant fails to assert a compulsory counterclaim in the original action, that claim may not be brought in a later, separate action (with some exceptions).

permissive counterclaim. A counterclaim that need not be asserted to be cognizable, usu. because it does not arise out of the same subject matter as the opposing party's claim or involves third parties over which the court does not have jurisdiction. • Permissive counterclaims may be brought in a later, separate action.

counterdeed. See DEED.

counterfeisance (kown-tər-fee-zənts). Archaic.
The act of counterfeiting.

counterfeit, vb. To forge, copy, or imitate (something) without a right to do so and with the purpose of deceiving or defrauding; esp., to manufacture fake money (or other security) that might be used in place of the genuine article. • Manufacturing fake food stamps is considered counterfeiting. — counterfeit, n. — counterfeit, adj.

"Literally a counterfeit is an imitation intended to pass for an original. Hence it is spurious or false, and to counterfeit is to make false. For this reason the verbs counterfeit and forge are often employed as synonyms and the same is true to some extent of the corresponding nouns. No error is involved in this usage but it is important to distinguish between the words as far as possible when used as the labels of criminal offenses. In the most restricted sense, [c]ounterfeiting is the unlawful making of false money in the similitude of the genuine. At one time under English statutes it was made treason. Under modern statutes it is a felony." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 431-32 (3d ed. 1982).

counterfeiter. A person who makes an unauthorized imitation of something (esp. a document, currency, or another's signature) with the intent to deceive or defraud.

counterfoil (kown-tər-foyl), n. A detachable part of a writing on which the particulars of the main part are summarized. • The most common example is a check stub, on which the date, the payee, and the amount are typically noted.

counterletter. Civil law. A document by which a record owner of real property acknowledges that another actually owns the property. •

Counterletters are used when the property is to be reconveyed after a period. See simulated contract under CONTRACT.

countermand (kown-tər-mand), n. An action that has the effect of voiding something previously ordered; a revocation. — countermand (kown-tər-mand or kown-), vb.

counteroffer, n. Contracts. An offeree's new offer that varies the terms of the original offer and that therefore rejects the original offer. — counteroffer, vb. — counterofferor, n. See MIRROR-IMAGE RULE.

counterpart. 1. In conveyancing, a corresponding part of an instrument <the other half of the indenture — the counterpart — could not be found>. 2. One of two or more copies or duplicates of a legal instrument <this lease may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which is considered an original>.

"Formerly 'part' was used as the opposite of 'counterpart,' in respect to covenants executed in duplicate, but now each copy is called a 'counterpart.'" 2 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 927 (1883).

counterpart writ. See WRIT.

counterpromise, n. A promise made in exchange for another party's promise . — counterpromise, vb.

counter-roll. Hist. A record kept by an officer as a check on another officer's record, esp. the rolls maintained by a sheriff and a coroner.

countersign, vb. To write one's own name next to someone else's to verify the other signer's identity. — countersignature, n.

countersuit. See COUNTERCLAIM.

countertrade. A type of international trade in which purchases made by an importing nation are linked to offsetting purchases made by the exporting nation.

"Countertrade is barter in modern clothes. It developed rapidly as a form of doing business with the USSR and Eastern European nations in the 1970s and 1980s, before the major economic and political reforms tended to diminish its emphasis as a means of doing business." Ralph H. Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Transactions § 2.1, at 46 (1995).

countervailable subsidy (kown-tər-vayl-ə-bəl səb-sə-dee). A foreign government's subsidy on the manufacture of goods exported to another country, giving rise to the importing country's entitlement to impose a countervailing duty on the goods if their import caused or threatens to cause material injury to domestic industry. See countervailing duty under DUTY (4). countervailing duty. See DUTY (4).

countervailing equity. See EQUITY.

counter will. See mutual will under WILL.

countez (kawn-teez). [Law French] Hist. A direction given by a clerk of a court to a crier, after a jury was sworn, to count the jury members.

"Of this ignorance we may see daily instances, in the abuse of two legal terms of ancient French; one, the prologue to all proclamations, 'oyez, or hear ye,' which is generally pronounced most unmeaningly, 'O yes:' the other, a more pardonable mistake, viz., when a jury are all sworn, the officer bids the crier number them, for which the word in law-french is, 'countez;' but we now hear it pronounced in very good English, 'count these.' "

4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 334 n.s (1769).

Counting House of the King's Household.

See BOARD OF GREEN CLOTH.

country. 1. A nation or political state. 2. The territory of such a nation or state.

county. The largest territorial division for local government within a state, generally considered to be a political subdivision and a quasi-corporation. • Every county exists as a result of a sovereign act of legislation, either constitutional or statutory, separating it from the rest of the state as an integral part of its territory and establishing it as one of the primary divisions of the state for purposes of civil administration. — Abbr. co.

"A county is a part of the realm, intirely governed by one sheriff under the king, but all subject to the general government of the realm; and therefore every county is as it were an intire body of itself, so that upon a feoffment of lands in many towns in one county, livery of seisin made in one parcel in any one of the towns in the name of all, sufficeth for all the lands in all the other towns within the same county: but upon a feoffment of lands in divers counties, there must be livery of seisin in every county." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 79 (1759).

foreign county. Any county separate from that of a county where matters arising in the former county are called into question, though both may lie within the same state or country.

county agent. See JUVENILE OFFICER.

county attorney. An attorney who represents a county in civil matters. • In some jurisdictions, county attorneys prosecute criminal offenders.

county auditor. See AUDITOR.

county bond. See BOND (3).

county commissioner. See COMMISSIONER.

county court. See COURT.

county judge. See JUDGE.

county officer. See OFFICER.

county palatine (pal-ə-tin or-tin). Hist. A county in which the lord held certain royal privileges, such as the right to pardon a felon or to have indictments recite that offenses were committed against the lord's — rather than the king's — peace. • In England, there were three such counties: Chester, Durham, and Lancaster. The separate legal systems in these counties was slowly eliminated; the last vestiges of a separate system were abolished by the Courts Act (1971). Cf. proprietary government under GOVERNMENT.

county property. Property that a county is authorized to acquire, hold, or sell.

county purpose. An objective pursued by a county; esp., one that a county levies taxes for.

county seat. The municipality where a county's principal offices are located. — Also termed county town.

coup d'état (koo day-tah). [French "stroke of state"] A sudden, usu. violent, change of government through seizure of power.

coupon (koo-pon). An interest or dividend certificate that is attached to another instrument, such as a bond, and that may be detached and separately presented for payment of a definite sum at a specified time.

coupon bond. See BOND (3).

coupon interest rate. See coupon rate under INTEREST RATE.

coupon note. See NOTE (1).

coupon rate. See INTEREST RATE.

coupon security. See SECURITY.

coupon yield. See YIELD.

Cour de Cassation. See COURT OF CASSATION.

courier. A messenger, esp. one who delivers parcels, packages, and the like. • In international law, the term denotes a messenger duly authorized by a sending state to deliver a diplomatic pouch.

course of business. The normal routine in managing a trade or business. — Also termed ordinary course of business; regular course of business; ordinary course; regular course.

course of dealing. An established pattern of conduct between the parties to a particular transaction. • If a dispute arises, the parties' course of dealing can be used as evidence of how they intended to carry out the transaction. Cf. COURSE OF PERFORMANCE; trade usage under USAGE.

"A course of dealing is distinguishable from a course of performance. As defined by the [UCC], 'course of dealing' relates to conduct under other transactions which occurred with regularity prior to the formation of the present contract, while 'course of performance' relates to the conduct of the parties under the contract in question subsequent to its formation. However, in meaning the two expressions are essentially equivalent." Ronald A. Anderson, Uniform Commercial Code § 1-205:86 (1997).

course of employment. Events that occur or circumstances that exist as a part of one's employment; esp., the time during which an employee furthers an employer's goals through employer-mandated directives.

course of performance. A sequence of previous performance by either party after an agreement has been entered into, when a contract involves repeated occasions for performance and both parties know the nature of the performance and have an opportunity to object to it. • A course of performance accepted or acquiesced in without objection is relevant to determining the meaning of the agreement.

UCC § 2-208; § 2A-301(a). Cf. COURSE OF DEALING; trade usage under USAGE.

"[C]ommon law courts have recognized the necessity of learning how people usually talk and what they usually mean by their language before one interprets their contracts. . . . '[C]ourse of performance' refers to a pattern of performance of the contract that is the subject of the dispute, as contrasted to 'course of dealing' which refers to the pattern of performance in prior contracts between the same parties." Claude Rohwer & Gordon D. Schaber, Contracts in a Nutshell 171-73 (4th ed. 1997).

"The phrase 'course of performance' relates to the way the parties have acted in performance of the particular contract in question. The judicial inquiry on this point is limited to the way the parties have acted in carrying out the particular contract that is in controversy, as distinguished from a general pattern of dealing that may embrace many other contracts or transactions between the parties." Ronald A. Anderson, Uniform Commercial Code § 1-205:74 (1997).

course of trade. See trade usage under USAGE.

court, n. 1. A governmental body consisting of one or more judges who sit to adjudicate disputes and administer justice .

"A court . . . is a permanently organized body, with independent judicial powers defined by law, meeting at a time and place fixed by law for the judicial public administration of justice." 1 William J. Hughes, Federal Practice, Jurisdiction & Procedure § 7, at 8 (1931).

2. The judge or judges who sit on such a governmental body <the court asked the parties to approach the bench>. 3. A legislative assembly <in Massachusetts, the General Court is the legislature>. 4. The locale for a legal proceeding <an out-of-court statement>. 5. The building where the judge or judges convene to adjudicate disputes and administer justice <the lawyers agreed to meet at the court at 8:00 a.m.>. — Also termed (in sense 5) courthouse.

admiralty court. See ADMIRALTY (1).

appellate court. A court with jurisdiction to review decisions of lower courts or administrative agencies. — Also termed appeals court; appeal court; court of appeals; court of appeal; court of review.

"Appellate courts are among the most important institutions of governance in the United States. Through their review of trial court and administrative agency decisions they ensure that those bodies function lawfully and that litigants receive justice under law. Moreover, they provide authoritative interpretations of statutory and constitutional provisions and control the shaping of the common law in response to ever-changing circumstances; they are thus major sources of law." Daniel John Meador & Jordana Simone Bernstein, Appellate Courts in the United States v (1994).

Article I Court. See legislative court.

Article III Court. See ARTICLE III COURT.

bankruptcy court. See BANKRUPTCY COURT.

court of claims. A court with the authority to hear claims made against a state (or its political subdivision) for cases in which the state has waived sovereign immunity. — Also termed claims court.

court of competent jurisdiction. A court that has the power and authority to do a particular act; one recognized by law as possessing the right to adjudicate a controversy.

court of domestic relations. See family court.

court of equity. A court that (1) has jurisdiction in equity, (2) administers and decides controversies in accordance with the rules, principles, and precedents of equity, and (3) follows the forms and procedures of chancery. Cf. court of law.

court of first instance. See trial court.

court of general jurisdiction. A court having unlimited or nearly unlimited trial jurisdiction in both civil and criminal cases.

court of inquiry. 1. Hist. In English law, a court appointed by the monarch to ascertain whether it was proper to use extreme measures against someone who had been court-martialed. 2. Hist. In American law, an agency created under articles of war and vested with the power to investigate the nature of a transaction or accusation of an officer or soldier. 3. In some jurisdictions, a procedure that allows a magistrate to examine witnesses in relation to any offense that the magistrate has a good-faith reason to believe was committed.

court of last resort. The court having the authority to handle the final appeal of a case, such as the U.S. Supreme Court.

court of law. 1. Broadly, any judicial tribunal that administers the laws of a state or nation. 2. A court that proceeds according to the course of the common law, and that is governed by its rules and principles. Cf. court of equity.

court of limited jurisdiction. A court with jurisdiction over only certain types of cases, or cases in which the amount in controversy is limited.

court of ordinary. See probate court.

court of original jurisdiction. A court where an action is initiated and first heard.

court of record. A court that is required to keep a record of its proceedings and that may fine and imprison people for contempt. • The court's records are presumed accurate and cannot be collaterally impeached. See OF RECORD (2).

court of review. See appellate court.

court of special session. A court that has no stated term and is not continuous, but is organized only for hearing a particular case.

de facto court (di fak-toh). 1. A court functioning under the authority of a statute that is later adjudged to be invalid. 2. A court established and acting under the authority of a de facto government.

diocesan court. Eccles. law. A court exercising general or limited jurisdiction (as determined by patent, local custom, or legislation) of matters arising within a bishop's diocese. • Diocesan courts include the consistorial court, the courts of the commissaries, and the courts of archdeacons.

district court. A trial court having general jurisdiction within its judicial district. — Abbr. D.C.

divisional court. An English court made up of two or more judges from the High Court of Justice sitting in special cases that cannot be disposed of by one judge. • Each division of the High Court has a divisional court, e.g., the Divisional Court of the Family Division.

With the exception of the Divisional Court of the Chancery Division, which has jurisdiction to review land-registration appeals from the county court, almost all judicial appeals are from decisions of a magistrates' court. The Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division hears appeals from the Crown Court or the magistrates' court by way of case stated in criminal prosecutions, which is the most frequent use of a divisional court.

domestic court. 1. A court having jurisdiction at the place of a party's residence or domicile. 2. See family court.

domestic-relations court. See family court.

ecclesiastical court (i-klee-zee-as-ti-kəl). 1. A religious court that hears matters concerning a particular religion. 2. In England, a court having jurisdiction over matters concerning the Church of England (the established church) as well as the duties and rights of the people serving it, but whose modern jurisdiction is limited to matters of ecclesiastical discipline and church property. — Also termed church court; court christian; spiritual court.

examining court. A lower court (usu. presided over by a magistrate) that determines probable cause and sets bail at a preliminary hearing in a criminal case.

family court. A court having jurisdiction over matters involving divorce, child custody and support, paternity, domestic violence, and other family-law issues. — Also termed domestic-relations court; court of domestic relations; domestic court.

federal court. A court having federal jurisdiction, including the U.S. Supreme Court, courts of appeals, district courts, bankruptcy courts, and tax courts. — Also termed United States court.

foreign court. 1. The court of a foreign nation. 2. The court of another state.

full court. A court session that is attended by all the court's judges; an en banc court. — Also termed full bench.

higher court. See court above.

hot court. A court, esp. an appellate court, that is familiar with the briefs filed in the case, and therefore with the issues, before oral argument. • Typically, a hot court controls the oral argument with its questioning, as opposed to listening passively to set presentations of counsel.

housing court. A court dealing primarily with landlord-and-tenant matters, including disputes over maintenance, lease terms, and building and fire codes.

hundred court. Hist. In England, a larger court baron, held for all inhabitants of a particular hundred rather than a manor, in which the free suitors were the judges (jurors) and the steward the register. • A hundred court was not a court of record, and it resembled a court-baron in all respects except for its larger territorial jurisdiction. The last hundred court was abolished in 1971. — Also termed hundred moot. See COURT BARON.

inferior court. 1. Any court that is subordinate to the chief appellate tribunal within a judicial system. 2. A court of special, limited, or statutory jurisdiction, whose record must show the existence of jurisdiction in any given case to give its ruling presumptive validity. — Also termed lower court.

instance court. 1. See trial court. 2. Hist. The admiralty court in England exercising original jurisdiction in all cases except those involving prizes.

insular court. A federal court with jurisdiction over U.S. island territories, such as the Virgin Islands.

intermediate court. An appellate court that is below a court of last resort.

justice court. A court, presided over by a justice of the peace, that has jurisdiction to hear cases involving small amounts of money or certain specified claims (such as forcible-entry-and-detainer suits). — Also termed justice-of-the-peace court; J.P. court.

juvenile court. A court having jurisdiction over cases involving children under a specified age, usu. 18. — Also termed children's court.

kangaroo court. 1. A self-appointed tribunal or mock court in which the principles of law and justice are disregarded, perverted, or parodied. • Kangaroo courts may be assembled by various groups, such as prisoners in a jail (to settle disputes between inmates) and players on a baseball team (to “punish” teammates who commit fielding errors). 2. A court or tribunal characterized by unauthorized or irregular procedures, esp. so as to render a fair proceeding impossible. 3. A sham legal proceeding.

land court. A court having jurisdiction over land-related matters including: (1) exclusive original jurisdiction of applications for registration of land titles and related questions, writs of entry and petitions to clear title to real estate, petitions to determine the validity and extent of municipal zoning ordinances, bylaws, and regulations, and proceedings for foreclosure and redemption from tax titles; (2) original concurrent jurisdiction of declaratory judgment proceedings, shared with the supreme judicial, superior, and probate courts; and (3) original concurrent equity jurisdiction in land-related matters, except for cases of specific performance of land contracts. • Land courts today exist in the United States only in Massachusetts and Hawaii.

landed-estates court. Hist. English law. A statutorily established tribunal to dispose of encumbered real estate more promptly and easily than could be accomplished through the ordinary judicial machinery. • This type of court was first established in Ireland by acts of 11 & 12 Vict., ch. 48 and 12 & 13 Vict., ch. 77. The purpose of the court was to enable the owner, or any lessee of an unexpired term of 63 years or less, of encumbered land to apply to commissioners to direct a sale. The court served as a court of record and was called the Incumbered Estates Court. A later act abolished that court and created a new permanent tribunal called the Landed Estates Court. 21 & 22 Vict., ch. 72.

legislative court. A court created by a statute, as opposed to one authorized by a constitution. — Also termed (in federal law) Article I court.

levy court. Hist. A court that once existed in the District of Columbia, exercising many of the functions typical of county commissioners or county supervisors in the states, such as constructing and repairing roads and bridges.

limited court. A court having special jurisdiction conferred by statute, such as a probate court.

local court. A court whose jurisdiction is limited to a particular territory, such as a state, municipal, or county court.

lord mayor's court. A court of law and equity having jurisdiction in civil cases arising within the city of London and acting as the appellate court from the Chamberlain Court. • It was abolished by the Court Act of 1971.

lower court. See court below.

magistrate's court (maj-i-strays or -strits). 1. A court with jurisdiction over minor criminal offenses. • Such a court also has the power to bind over for trial persons accused of more serious offenses. — Also termed police court. 2. A court with limited jurisdiction over minor criminal and civil matters. — Sometimes spelled (esp. in England) magistrates' court. — Also termed (in England) court of petty sessions; court of summary jurisdiction.

mayor's court. A municipal court in which the mayor presides as the judge, with jurisdiction over minor criminal (and sometimes civil) matters, traffic offenses, and the like.

moot court. See MOOT COURT.

municipal court. A court having jurisdiction (usu. civil and criminal) over cases arising within the municipality in which it sits. ● A municipal court's civil jurisdiction to issue a judgment is often limited to a small amount.

naturalization court. See NATURALIZATION COURT.

orphan's court. See probate court.

parish court. See county court.

piepowder court. See PIEPOWDER COURT.

pretorial court. Hist. A colonial court in Maryland with jurisdiction of capital crimes, consisting of the lord proprietary or his lieutenant-general and the council.

prize court. A court having jurisdiction to adjudicate the captures made at sea in time of war. See PRIZE (2).

probate court. A court with the power to declare wills valid or invalid, to oversee the administration of estates, and in some states to appoint guardians and approve the adoption of minors. — Also termed surrogate's court; court of ordinary; county court; orphan's court (abbr. o.c.). See PROBATE.

provisional court. A federal court with jurisdiction and powers governed by the order granting its authority, such as a temporary court established in a conquered or occupied territory.

small-claims court. A court that informally and expeditiously adjudicates claims that seek damages below a specified monetary amount, usu. claims to collect small accounts or debts. — Also termed small-debts court; conciliation court.

spiritual court. See ecclesiastical court.

state court. A court of the state judicial system, as opposed to a federal court.

superior court. 1. In some states, a trial court of general jurisdiction. 2. In Pennsylvania, an intermediate court between the trial court and the chief appellate court.

supreme court. See SUPREME COURT.

surrogate's court. See probate court.

territorial court. A U.S. court established in a U.S. territory (such as the Virgin Islands) and serving as both a federal and state court. ● The court was created under U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2.

three-judge court. A court made up of three judges; esp., a panel of three federal judges convened to hear a trial in which a statute is challenged on constitutional grounds. ● Three-judge courts were virtually abolished in 1976 when Congress restricted their jurisdiction to constitutional challenges to congressional reapportionments.

trial court. A court of original jurisdiction where the evidence is first received and considered. — Also termed court of first instance; instance court.

court administrator. See ADMINISTRATOR (1).

court-appointed attorney. See assigned counsel under COUNSEL.

court-appointed expert. See impartial expert under EXPERT.

court a quo. See COURT.

court baron. Hist. A manorial court with jurisdiction over amounts in controversy of 40 shillings or less. ● According to some authorities, the court baron developed into two courts: the customary court baron for disputes involving copyholders, and the court baron proper (also known as the freeholders' court baron), in which freeholders were allowed to hold court concerning minor disputes.

"In Coke's day it was said that the lord of a manor had one court, 'a court baron,' for his freeholders and another court, 'a customary court,' for his copyholders, and that in the latter the lord or his steward was the judge. Now over his unfree men the lord had, according to the law of the king's court, almost unlimited power; short of maiming them he might do what he liked with them; and every tenant of an unfree tenement was a tenant at will. Nevertheless in the court rolls and the manuals for stewards which come to us from the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries we cannot discover two courts or two methods of constituting the court. Freeholders and serfs are said to owe suit to the same halimoot, and so far as we can see, the curia which pronounces judgment is always the same body." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 593 (2d ed. 1898).

court calendar. A list of matters scheduled for trial or hearing; DOCKET (2).

court christian. See ecclesiastical court under COURT.

court commissioner. See COMMISSIONER.

court costs. See COST (2).

court day. See DAY.

courtesy supervision. Oversight of a parolee by a correctional agency located in a jurisdiction other than where the parolee was sentenced. • Courtesy supervision is usu. arranged informally between correctional authorities in cases in which the offense is not serious and the rehabilitative needs of the parolee are better served in another jurisdiction.

Court for Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved. Hist. A court established in 1848 to review questions of law arising in criminal cases. • Trial judges posed the postverdict questions of law to the Court, which decided whether error had been committed. The Court was abolished in 1907, and its jurisdiction was transferred to the Court of Criminal Appeal. — Also termed Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

“It was an old practice for the judge, in case of a conviction, if he felt a doubt as to the law, to respite judgment or sentence, and discuss the matter informally with the other judges. If they thought that the prisoner had been improperly convicted, he was pardoned. Statutory authority was given to this practice in 1848 by the establishment of the court for Crown Cases Reserved. All the judges were members of this court; and five, of whom the Lord Chief Justice must be one, formed a quorum.” 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 217 (7th ed. 1956).

Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

Hist. A court exercising jurisdiction over family issues, such as legitimacy and divorce. • The Court, which was established in 1857, acquired the matrimonial jurisdiction previously exercised by the ecclesiastical courts. It consisted of the Lord Chancellor, the Chief Justices of the Queen’s Bench and Common Pleas, the Chief Baron of Exchequer, the senior puisne judges of the last three courts, and the Judge Ordinary. In most instances, the Judge Ordinary heard the cases. The Judicature Act of 1873 abolished the Court and transferred its jurisdiction to the Probate Divorce and Admiralty Division (now Family Division) of the High Court of Justice.

Court for the Correction of Errors. A court having jurisdiction to review a lower court. •

The name was formerly used in New York and South Carolina.

Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors.

Hist. A court located in London with jurisdiction over bankruptcy matters. • The Bankruptcy Act of 1861 abolished the Court.

court for the trial of impeachments. A tribunal empowered to try a government officer or other person brought before it by the process of impeachment. • The U.S. Senate and the British House of Lords have this authority, as do the upper houses of most state legislatures. — Also termed impeachment court; court of impeachment.

court hand. Hist. A script style used by English court clerks, the words being abbreviated and contracted according to a set of common principles for maintaining brevity and uniformity. • This type of writing, along with the use of Latin (except for technical or untranslatable phrases), was banned early in the 18th century in an effort to make court records more accessible to nonlawyers.

“[T]echnical Latin continued in use from the time of its first introduction, till the subversion of our ancient constitution under Cromwell; when, among many other innovations in the law, some for the better and some for the worse, the language of our records was altered and turned into English. But, at the restoration of king Charles, this novelty was no longer countenanced; the practicers finding it very difficult to express themselves so concisely or significantly in any other language but the Latin. And thus it continued without any sensible inconvenience till about the year 1730, when it was again thought proper that the proceedings at law should be done into English, and it was accordingly so ordered by statute 4 Geo. II. c. 26. . . . What is said of the alteration of language by the statute 4 Geo. II. c. 26 will hold equally strong with respect to the prohibition of using the ancient immutable court hand in writing the records of other legal proceedings; whereby the reading of any record that is forty years old is now become the object of science, and calls for the help of an antiquarian.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 322–23 (1768).

courthouse. See COURT (5).

court lands. Hist. The part of a manor used for the lord’s household.

court leet (kort leet). Hist. A feudal court responsible for receiving frankpledges and notices of criminal accusations. • Courts leet exercised both governmental and judicial powers, but declined after the justices in eyre began to take over serious criminal cases. The court met once or twice a year, and was presided over by the lord's steward, a lawyer who acted as judge.

court-martial, n. An ad hoc military court, convened under military authority, to try and punish those who violate the Uniform Code of Military Justice, particularly members of the armed forces. Pl. courts-martial. — court-martial, vb.

"Courts-martial are not a part of the federal judiciary system, and the procedure in such courts is regulated by the Articles of War, Army Regulations, orders of the President, and Military custom." Altmyer v. Sanford, 148 F.2d 161 (5th Cir. 1945).

BCD special court-martial. A special court-martial in which a possible punishment is a bad-conduct discharge (a "BCD").

general court-martial. A proceeding that is presided over by a military judge, and no fewer than five members (who serve as jurors), and that has jurisdiction over all the members of the armed forces. • It is the highest military trial court.

special court-martial. A proceeding that is presided over by a military judge and no fewer than three members (who serve as jurors) to hear noncapital offenses and prescribe a sanction of hard labor, dismissal, or extended confinement (up to six months). • It is the intermediate level of courts-martial.

summary court-martial. A proceeding presided over by a single commissioned officer who is jurisdictionally limited in what sanctions can be imposed. • It is the lowest level of courts-martial.

court-martial order. A written order containing the result of a court-martial trial.

Court-Martial Reports. A publication containing the opinions of the U.S. Court of Military Appeals and select decisions of the Courts of Military Review. • This publication appeared during the years 1951–1975. — Abbr. CMR.

Court of Admiralty. See HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

court of ancient demesne. Hist. A court made up of freeholders of land held by the Crown (i.e., an ancient demesne). • The freeholders acted as judges much the same way that freeholders of an ordinary manor would in a court baron. See ancient demesne under DEMESNE; COURT BARON.

Court of Appeal. An English court of civil and criminal appellate jurisdiction established by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875. • The court is made up of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice, Master of the Rolls, President of the Family Division, Vice-Chancellor of the Chancery Division, former Lord Chancellors, Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and Lords Justices of Appeal. In practice it is made up of the Master of Rolls and the Lords Justices. It sits in several divisions, each having three members.

Court of Appeal in Chancery. Hist. An English court of intermediate appeal in equity cases, established in 1851 and abolished in 1873–1875, when its jurisdiction was transferred to the Court of Appeal.

court of appeals. See COURT.

Court of Appeals, U.S. See UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS.

Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. See UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ARMED FORCES.

Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. See UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FEDERAL CIRCUIT.

Court of Appeals in Cases of Capture. Hist. A court responsible for reviewing state-court decisions concerning British ships captured by American privateers during the War of Independence. • The Court was established by Congress under the Articles of Confederation and served as the chief U.S. court from 1780 to 1787. It was the first federal court in the United States.

Court of Archdeacon (ahrch-dee-kən). Hist. Eccles. law. An inferior ecclesiastical court with jurisdiction over cases arising within the archdeaconry and probate matters. • Appeal was to the Bishop's Court. The Court of Archdeacon was abolished in 1967. — Also termed Archdeacon's Court; Archdiaconal Court (ahr-kə-dī-ak-ən-əl).

Court of Arches. Eccles. law. The ecclesiastical court of the province of Canterbury, responsible for various appeals from provincial diocesan courts. • The court handled probate cases until the Court of Probate acquired jurisdiction in 1857. The Pope heard appeals from the Court of Arches until the break with Rome prompted a transfer of the appellate jurisdiction to the royal courts. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council now hears certain appeals from the Court of Arches. — Also termed Arches Court of Canterbury; Court of Canterbury; Court of the Official Principal. Cf. CHANCERY COURT OF YORK.

"The Court of Arches is the provincial court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is held by a judge generally called the Dean of the Arches. Its jurisdiction was important while testamentary cases were dealt with in the Ecclesiastical Courts. The name is derived from the fact that the court was originally held in the Church of St. Mary-Le-Bow (Ecclesia Beatae Mariae de Arcubus), the steeple of which is raised on stone pillars formed arch-wise like bent bows." W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 184 n.11 (2d ed. 1949).

Court of Assistants. Hist. A colonial body organized in Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1630 to act as a legislature and court for the colony. See GENERAL COURT.

"The court of assistants, made up of governor, deputy governor, and magistrates, heard appeals from lower courts, and took original jurisdiction in certain cases — for example, cases of divorce. Below it were the county courts." Lawrence M. Friedman, A History of American Law 40 (2d ed. 1985).

Court of Attachments. Hist. An inferior forest court with jurisdiction over trespasses of the royal forests. • The judges of this court (the verderers) met every 40 days to hear charges made by the royal foresters. Major trespass cases were heard by the justices in eyre. — Also termed wood-mote. See VERDERER.

Court of Audience. Hist. Eccles. law. A court in which the two archbishops exercise personal jurisdiction. • This court was abolished in 1963.

"Just as the bishop did not deprive himself of all jurisdiction by delegation to an official or commissary, so the archbishop did not originally deprive himself of all jurisdiction by delegation to the official principal. He possessed a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the court of the Arches, which was exercised in the court of Audience. In later times this jurisdiction was exercised by the judge of the court of Audience. At one time the archbishop may have exercised a considerable part of this jurisdiction in this court." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 601 (7th ed. 1956).

Court of Augmentations. Hist. A court established in 1536 by Henry VIII to determine controversies arising from the royal policy of taking over property owned by monasteries. • The court was merged into the Court of Exchequer in 1554.

Court of Canterbury. See COURT OF ARCHES.

Court of Cassation (ka-say-shən). The highest court of France. • The court's name derives from its power to quash (casser) the decrees of inferior courts. — Also termed (more formally) Cour de Cassation.

court of chancery. See CHANCERY (1).

court of chivalry. See HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

Court of Civil Appeals. An intermediate appellate court in some states, such as Alabama and (formerly) Texas.

court of claims. 1. See COURT. 2. (cap.) See UNITED STATES COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS.

Court of Common Pleas. 1. Hist. A superior court having jurisdiction of all real actions and common pleas (i.e., actions between subjects). • The Court was presided over by a chief justice with four (later five) puisne judges. In 1873 it became the Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice. In 1881 it merged into the Queen's Bench Division. 2. An intermediate-level court in some states, such as Arkansas. 3. A trial court of general jurisdiction in some states, such as Ohio, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina. — Also termed Court of Common Bench. — Abbr. C.P.

"Common pleas is the kings Court now held in Westminster hall, but in auncient time moveable, as appeareth by the statute called Magna charta. . . . [U]ntill the time that Henry the third granted the great charter, there were but two courts in all, called the Kings courts: whereof one was the Exchequer, and the other, the kings bench, which was then called (curia Domini regis) and (aula regis) because it followed the court or king: and that upon the grant of that charter, the court of common pleas was erected and settled in one place certaine: viz. at Westminster. . . . All civill causes both reall and personall are, or were in former times, tryed in this court, according to the strict lawe of the realme: and by Fortescue, cap. 50 it seemeth to have bene the onely court for reall causes." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

court of competent jurisdiction. See COURT.

court of conscience. Hist. A local English court with jurisdiction of small-debt cases. • The court was so called because its judgments were supposed to reflect equity and good conscience. County courts assumed the jurisdiction of the courts of conscience in 1846.

Court of Convocation. Eccles. law. An assembly of high-ranking provincial officials and minor clergy having jurisdiction over cases of heresy, schism, and other purely ecclesiastical matters.

Court of Criminal Appeals. 1. For each armed service, an intermediate appellate court that reviews court-martial decisions. • The court was established by the Military Justice Act of 1968. 10 USCA §§ 859–876. — Formerly termed Court of Military Review (abbr. CMR). 2. In some jurisdictions, such as Texas and Oklahoma, the highest appellate court that hears criminal cases.

Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Hist. An Article III court created in 1929 to hear appeals in customs and patent cases. • This court was abolished in 1982 and was superseded by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Court of Delegates. Hist. Eccles. law. A court serving as the final court of appeal for admiralty and ecclesiastical matters. • The Court was established in 1534 to serve in the stead of the Papal Curia when the English Church severed its ties with the Papacy. Six delegates made up the Court, usu. three persons trained in common law and three in civil law. This mixture led to confused rulings and unreliable precedents that hindered the Court's credibility and ultimately led to its dissolution. The Court was abolished in 1833 and its jurisdiction transferred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. — Also termed High Court of Delegates.

"The crown had an absolute discretion as to the person to be appointed. But, as the lawyers of Doctors' Commons were the only lawyers acquainted with canon or civil law, certain of them were usually included in the commission. . . . It is not surprising to find that the [Court of Delegates] was unsatisfactory. It was a shifting body, so that no general rules of procedure could be established. It did not as a rule give reasons for its decisions. Its members were only paid a guinea a day; and consequently it was usually composed of the junior civilians. On them, the judges of the common law courts, appointed as delegates, were obliged to rely for their law. In consequence of the dissatisfaction felt at its working the Ecclesiastical Commission of 1832, in a special report, recommended the transfer of its jurisdiction to the Privy Council. . . ." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 605 (7th ed. 1956).

court of domestic relations. See family court under COURT.

Court of Earl Marshal. See HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

court of equity. See COURT.

court of error. 1. Hist. Formerly, the Court of Exchequer Chamber and the House of Lords. • Appeals from common-law courts lay to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, and then to the House of Lords until 1873, when the Judicial Act gave jurisdiction of superior-court appeals to the Court of Appeal. Cf. COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 2. Generally, a court having jurisdiction to review a lower court's rulings.

Court of Errors and Appeals. Hist. Formerly, the court of last resort in New Jersey and New York. — Also termed High Court of Errors and Appeals.

Court of Exchequer (eks-chek-ər or eks-chek-ər). Hist. A former English superior court responsible primarily for adjudicating disputes about the collection of public revenue. • In 1873 it became the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice. In 1881 that Division was merged into the Queen's Bench Division. See QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION. Cf. CHAMBER OF ACCOUNTS.

Court of Exchequer Chamber. Hist. 1. An informal assembly of common-law judges who (sometimes with the Lord Chancellor) gathered to discuss important cases that have adjourned pending an opinion from the Court. • This body never became a court of law in a technical sense, but judges gave great weight to its decisions. The last reported decision of this body is from 1738.

"Earlier than these two statutory courts was the practice, which apparently originated about the time of Edward I, of informal meetings of the judges in the Exchequer Chamber to decide matters connected with litigation. . . . The purpose of the meeting was to bring before the judges a point of law which caused difficulty and which had arisen in a case being heard before one or other of the courts. Any resolution passed did not constitute a judgment; it was left to the court concerned to make the appropriate decree, and the official record made no reference to the informal decision. . . . Civil cases were debated in the Exchequer Chamber as late as the seventeenth century, and criminal cases continued to be 'reserved' for full discussion by all the common law judges until the nineteenth century." A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter's Outlines of English Legal History 202–04 (5th ed. 1958).

2. A court created by statute in 1357 to hear appeals from the Court of Exchequer. 3. A court created by statute in 1585 to hear appeals from the King's Bench. • This court consisted of all the justices of the Common Pleas and the Barons of Exchequer who were serjeants. At least six judges were necessary to render a judgment.

"Parliament was only occasionally summoned in the sixteenth century; and as Parliament was the only court which could amend errors of the King's Bench, the want of a court which could hold regular sessions was much felt. To supply this want a new court of Exchequer Chamber was created in 1585 for the purpose of amending the errors of the King's Bench." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 244 (7th ed. 1956).

4. A court charged with hearing appeals from the common-law courts of record. • This court was created in 1830 by combining the courts created by the statutes of 1357 and 1585. Appeals from one common-law court were heard by judges from the other two courts.

"This complicated system of appellate courts was abolished in 1830, when a new Court of Exchequer Chamber was set up as the court of error from each of the three common law courts. It was composed of the judges of the two common law courts other than those of the court appealed from. At the same time the right of the King's Bench to hear error from the Common Pleas was abolished. From the judgment of this new court a further appeal still lay to the House of Lords. This court was thus, until the Judicature Act, 1873, a court of intermediate appeals. Its jurisdiction after the Judicature Act passed to the Court of Appeal which was then created." W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 144 (2d ed. 1949).

Court of Faculties. Eccles. law. An archbishop's tribunal that grants special dispensations (such as a marriage license) and decides questions relating to monuments and mortuary matters. See MASTER OF THE FACULTIES.

Court of Federal Claims, U.S. See UNITED STATES COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS.

court officer. See OFFICER OF THE COURT.

court of first instance. See trial court under COURT.

court of general jurisdiction. See COURT.

Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace. Hist. 1. English law. A court of criminal jurisdiction held in each county (or borough) once in every quarter of a year. • The court was made up of a county's justices of the peace. It committed certain cases to the Assizes. Quarter Sessions were abolished in 1971, with most jurisdiction transferred to the Crown Court. — Often shortened to Quarter Sessions; Sessions.

"The court of general quarter sessions of the peace is a court that must be held in every county, once in every quarter of a year. . . . It is held before two or more justices of the peace, one of which must be of the quorum. The jurisdiction of this court, by statute 34 Edw. III. c. I. extends to the trying and determining all felonies and trespasses whatsoever, though they seldom, if ever, try any greater offence than small felonies within the benefit of clergy. . . ." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 268 (1769).

2. A court held in some states four times a year with jurisdiction over misdemeanors and occasionally tasks of an administrative nature, such as the care of public roads and bridges. — Often shortened to Quarter Session Court. — Also termed Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace.

Court of Great Sessions in Wales. Hist. A common-law court established in 1543 in Wales with jurisdiction equivalent to that of the English assizes. • The Court of Great Sessions was bound to follow English law, but not necessarily English case precedent. — Also termed King's Great Sessions in Wales.

"There was no outcry when, in 1536, 'the sinister usages and customs' of the Welsh were abrogated and Welsh subjects were granted the same laws and liberties as the English. . . . A new system of courts, called the Great Sessions in Wales, was set up. The courts were to sit twice a year in four circuits, each comprising three counties, and to each circuit were appointed justices 'learned in the laws of this realm'. These courts operated alongside the English courts, and they had the same jurisdiction in Wales as the King's Bench and Common Pleas had in England. . . . In 1830 the Great Sessions were abolished, and by complete procedural assimilation England and Wales became at last one unified jurisdiction, two extra circuits being added to the English assize system." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 37–38 (3d ed. 1990).

Court of High Commission. Hist. Eccles. law. A tribunal responsible for inquiring into religious offenses such as adultery, the holding of heretical opinions, and absence from church. • The High Commission was created to prosecute violations of the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity (1559), the statutes that gave the Crown supreme power over the Church of England. From about 1580 on, the High Commission functioned as a court. The Court's broad powers and use of civil-law procedures in ways counter to the common law (such as compelling suspects to testify against themselves) sparked opposition to its existence. Its close relationship with the Court of Star Chamber hastened its demise (along with the Star Chamber) in 1641. — Also termed High Commission Court.

"[T]he court of the king's high commission in causes ecclesiastical . . . was intended to vindicate the dignity and peace of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts, and enormities. Under the shelter of which very general words, means were found in that and the two succeeding reigns, to vest in the high commissioners extraordinary and almost despotic powers, of fining and imprisoning; which they exerted much beyond the degree of the offence itself, and frequently over offences by no means of spiritual cognizance. For these reasons this court was justly abolished by Statute 16 Car. I, c. 11.

And the weak and illegal attempt that was made to revive it, during the reign of King James the second, served only to hasten that infatuated prince's ruin." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 67-68 (1768).

Court of Honor. Hist. 1. English law. A feudal court of the manor. 2. English law. A court with jurisdiction to hear complaints concerning either affronts to honor or encroachments in precedence rights, heraldry, or coat-armor. 3. A tribunal of army officers convened to review and punish any dereliction from a code of honor.

Court of Hustings (hæs-tingz). Hist. 1. English law. A local court with jurisdiction over real and mixed actions, held in the Guildhall of London before the Recorder, the Lord Mayor, and Sheriff (the latter two officials serving as honorary judges). • This court dates from before the Conquest. 2. Formerly, a local court in Virginia. — Also termed curia burgi. See HUSTING.

court of impeachment. See COURT FOR THE TRIALS OF IMPEACHMENT.

court of inquiry. See COURT.

Court of International Trade, U.S. See UNITED STATES COURT OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE.

Court of Justice Seat. See COURT OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE IN EYRE.

Court of King's Bench. See KING'S BENCH.

court of last resort. See COURT.

court of law. See COURT.

court of limited jurisdiction. See COURT.

Court of Magistrates and Freeholders. Hist. A South Carolina court with criminal jurisdiction over alleged offenses committed by slaves and free persons of color.

Court of Military Appeals. See UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ARMED FORCES.

Court of Military Review. See COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS (1).

court of nisi prius. See NISI PRIUS.

Court of Official Principal. See COURT OF ARCHES.

Court of Ordinary. Hist. A Georgia court of probate jurisdiction.

court of original jurisdiction. See COURT.

Court of Orphans. Hist. In Maryland and Pennsylvania, a court exercising probate jurisdiction.

Court of Oyer and Terminer. 1. Hist. An assize court commissioned by the Crown to pass through the counties two or more times a year and hear felonies and treason cases. • The judges sat by virtue of several commissions, each of which, strictly speaking, created a separate and distinct court. A judge with an oyer and terminer commission, for example, was allowed to hear only cases of felony and treason; he could not try persons charged with other criminal offenses. But if the judge also carried a commission of gaol delivery (as most did), he could try all prisoners held in gaol for any offense; in this way most Courts of Oyer and Terminer gathered full criminal jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the assize courts was taken over by the Crown Court in 1971. See ASSIZE (1); COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER; COMMISSION OF GAOL DELIVERY. 2. In some states, a court of higher criminal jurisdiction.

Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery. Hist. 1. A court that carries the commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery. 2. In Pennsylvania, a court of criminal jurisdiction.

Court of Peculiars. Hist. Eccles. law. A branch of the Court of Arches that had jurisdiction over the provincial parishes of Canterbury that were exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop and responsible to the metropolitan only. • The Court of Peculiars was abolished in the 19th century. See COURT OF ARCHES.

court of petty sessions. See magistrate's court under COURT.

court of piepowder. See PIEPOWDER COURT.

Court of Pleas. Hist. A court of the county palatine of Durham, having a local common-law jurisdiction. • It was abolished in 1873, and its jurisdiction was transferred to the High Court. — Also termed Court of Pleas of Durham.

Court of Policies of Insurance. Hist. A court that determines in a summary way insurance-policy issues arising between merchants. • The Court's jurisdiction extended only to London, and appeal was taken to the Court of Chancery. The Court was abolished in 1863. — Also termed Court of Policies of Assurance.

Court of Private Land Claims. Hist. A federal court — in existence from 1891 to 1895 — with jurisdiction to hear private parties' claims to public-domain land located in the southwestern part of the United States and deriving from Spanish or Mexican grants.

Court of Probate. 1. Hist. A court established in 1857 to receive the testamentary jurisdiction formerly held by the ecclesiastical courts. • In 1873 the Court was merged into the High Court of Justice, where its jurisdiction was exercised by the Probate Divorce and Admiralty (now Family) Division. 2. See probate court under COURT.

Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace. See COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

Court of Queen's Bench. See QUEEN'S BENCH.

court of record. See COURT.

Court of Regard. Hist. A forest court responsible for looking into matters of waste and encroachment onto forest land (i.e., purpresture). • The Court also ensured that the feet of all mastiffs — a breed allowed in royal forests as guard dogs — within the forest were declawed and cut so as to prevent them from chasing deer.

Court of Requests. Hist. A royal court whose jurisdiction was mainly civil, though it exercised quasi-criminal jurisdiction in offenses such as riot and forgery. • Dating from 1483, the Court of Requests was a part of the Privy Council. It was disbanded in 1641 when Parliament limited the Privy Council's judicial functions. Cf. MASTER OF REQUESTS

"The establishment of the court of Requests was due to the large increase in the judicial business of the Council and the Chancery under the Tudors. . . . It was related both to the judicial side of the Council, which, as we shall see, came, in the course of the Tudor period, to be known as the court of Star Chamber, and to the court of Chancery. . . . [F]rom the end of Henry VIII's reign onwards, the legal assessors of the court assumed entire control, with the result that it became a court which was quite separate from the court of Star Chamber. These legal assessors were styled Masters of Requests, and from their title the court got its name." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 412-13 (7th ed. 1956).

court of review. See appellate court under COURT.

Court of Session. 1. Scots law. The supreme Scottish civil court, having divisions for trials and for hearing appeals. • Its jurisdiction corresponds generally to the English High Court of Justice. It has two appellate chambers, the First and Second Division, and several Lords Ordinary, who sit singly as trial judges. 2. In a few states, a court with jurisdiction over criminal cases.

Court of Shepway. Hist. The Court of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, exercising civil jurisdiction. • The civil jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports was abolished in 1855.

court of special session. See COURT.

Court of Star Chamber. See STAR CHAMBER (1).

court of summary jurisdiction. See magistrate's court under COURT.

Court of Swanimote. See COURT OF SWEINMOTE.

Court of Sweinmote (swayn-moht). Hist. A medieval forest court with jurisdiction over a variety of matters, esp. the right to graze animals during the summer when deer were fawning. • The forest freeholders (the sweins) made up the jury of the Court. By the 14th century, the Court's jurisdiction had expanded, and it acquired a form similar to the eyre courts. During this period, the Court came to be referred to as the Court of Swanimote rather than the Court of Sweinmote.

Court of the Chief Justice in Eyre (air). Hist. An eyre court responsible for trying offenses against the forest laws. • The jurisdiction of this Court was similar to that of the Court of Sweinmote. — Also termed Court of Justice Seat.

Court of the Earl Marshal. See HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

Court of the Lord High Constable and Earl Marshal. Hist. A court having jurisdiction over diverse military matters, such as treason, prisoners of war, and disputed coats of arms. • The Lord High Constable and the Earl Marshal were the top military officials of the Norman kings. After the office of Lord High Constable was forfeited in 1521, the court continued on as the Court of the Earl Marshal, but its jurisdiction was reduced to questions of chivalry only. Cf. HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

Court of the Lord High Admiral. See HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

Court of the Lord High Steward. Hist. A court commissioned to try a peer indicted for treason or a felony. • The Court met only if the House of Lords was not in session. The Lord High Steward sat as a judge and decided questions of law, and the peers decided facts only. The Court last sat in 1688.

Court of the Lord High Steward of the Universities. Hist. A court convened to try scholars, esp. Oxford or Cambridge students, who have been indicted for treason, felony, or mayhem.

Court of the Marshalsea (mahr-shəl-see). Hist. A court that moved about with the king, and had jurisdiction over certain cases arising within 12 miles of the king's residence (an area known as the verge). • The Court's steward and marshal acted as judges of the Court, and heard criminal cases and the common pleas of debt, covenant, and certain trespasses. The court's migratory nature made it inconvenient for litigants, and prompted its abolition in 1849. — Also termed Court of the Steward and Marshal. Cf. PALACE COURT.

"Coke points out that all the Acts passed concerning this court restrained, or explained, but never added to its jurisdiction. He decided, in the Case of the Marshalsea, that it could not try the newer forms of action such as assumpsit and trover. Its once general jurisdiction had passed to the court of King's Bench, and the attitude of that court to the more limited court of the Marshalsea made the court of the Marshalsea almost useless. There were complaints in the seventeenth century of the conduct of its officials; and, as it was obliged to follow the king in his progresses, it was a court extremely inconvenient to use." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 208 (7th ed. 1956).

Court of the Official Principal. See COURT OF ARCHES.

Court of the Steward of the King's Household. Hist. A court having jurisdiction over criminal cases involving a member of the royal household. • This court's jurisdiction was at first limited to acts of violence by the king's servants toward a member of the king's council, but it was later given broader criminal authority. The Court was abolished in 1828.

Court of Verge. See VERGE.

Court of Veterans Appeals, U.S. See UNITED STATES COURT OF VETERANS APPEALS.

Court of Wards and Liveries. Hist. A court created in 1540 to assert the Crown's right to income from a variety of feudal tenures. • The Court's unpopularity led to its abolition in 1660.

"[I]nquests of office were more frequently in practice than at present, during the continuance of the military tenures among us: when, upon the death of every one of the king's tenants, an inquest of office was held, called an inquisitio post mortem, to enquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer-seisin, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. To superintend and regulate these enquiries, the court of wards and liveries was instituted by statute 32 Hen. VIII c. 46 which was abolished at the restoration of king Charles the second, together with the oppressive tenures upon which it was founded." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 258 (1768).

courtoisie internationale. See COMITY.

court order. See ORDER (2).

court-packing plan. An unsuccessful proposal — made in 1937 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt — to increase the number of U.S. Supreme Court justices from nine to fifteen. • The ostensible purpose of the proposal was to increase the Court's efficiency, but President Roosevelt wanted to appoint justices who would not block his administration's New Deal programs.

court papers. All documents that a party files with the court, including pleadings, motions, notices, and the like. — Often shortened to papers. — Also termed suit papers.

court recorder. See RECORDER.

court reporter. 1. A person who records testimony, stenographically or by electronic or other means, and when requested prepares a transcript <the deposition could not start until the court reporter arrived>. Cf. court recorder under RECORDER. 2. REPORTER OF DECISIONS.

court roll. Hist. A record of a manor's tenures; esp., a record of the terms by which the various tenants held their estates. • Copyhold tenure, for example, developed from the practice of maintaining court rolls. See COPYHOLD.

courtroom. The part of a courthouse where trials and hearings take place. Cf. judge's chamber under CHAMBER.

court rules. Regulations having the force of law and governing practice and procedure in the various courts, such as the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the U.S. Supreme Court Rules, and the Federal Rules of Evidence, as well as any local rules that a court promulgates. — Also termed rules of court.

courts of the franchise. See FRANCHISE COURT.

court system. The network of courts in a jurisdiction.

cousin. 1. A child of one's aunt or uncle. — Also termed first cousin; full cousin; cousin-german. 2. A relative descended from one's ancestor (such as a grandparent) by two or more steps in a diverging line. 3. Any distant relative by blood or marriage; a kinsman or kinswoman.

cousin-in-law. 1. A husband or wife of one's cousin. 2. A cousin of one's husband or one's wife.

cousin once removed. 1. A child of one's cousin. 2. A cousin of one's parent.

cousin twice removed. 1. A grandchild of one's cousin. 2. A cousin of one's grandparent.

second cousin. A person related to another by descending from the same great-grandfather or great-grandmother.

third cousin. A person related to another by descending from the same great-great-grandfather or great-great-grandmother.

cousin-german. See GERMAN.

covenant (kəv-ə-nənt), n. 1. A formal agreement or promise, usu. in a contract.

absolute covenant. A covenant that is not qualified or limited by any condition. Cf. conditional covenant.

affirmative covenant. A covenant that obligates a party to do some act; esp., an agreement that real property will be used in a certain way. • An affirmative covenant is more than a restriction on the use of property; it requires the owner to undertake certain specified acts.

assertory covenant. One that affirmatively states certain facts; an affirming promise under seal.

auxiliary covenant (awg-zil-yə-ree). A covenant that does not relate directly to the primary subject of the agreement, but to something connected to it. Cf. principal covenant.

collateral covenant (kə-lat-ə-rəl). A covenant entered into in connection with the grant of something, but that does not relate immediately to the thing granted; esp., a covenant in a deed or other sealed instrument not pertaining to the conveyed property. Cf. inherent covenant.

concurrent covenant. A covenant that requires performance by one party at the same time as another's performance.

conditional covenant. A covenant that is qualified by a condition. Cf. absolute covenant.

continuing covenant. A covenant that requires the successive performance of acts, such as an agreement to pay rent in installments.

covenant in deed. See express covenant.

covenant in law. See implied covenant.

covenant not to compete. See noncompetition covenant.

covenant not to sue. A covenant in which a party having a right of action agrees not to assert that right in litigation. — Also termed contract not to sue.

"A covenant not to sue is a promise by the creditor not to sue either permanently or for a limited period. If the promise is one never to sue it operates as a discharge just as does a release. The theory is that should the creditor sue despite his promise not to, the debtor has a counterclaim for damages for breach of the creditor's covenant not to sue which is equal to and cancels the original claim. . . . If the covenant is not to sue for a limited time, the modern view is that the covenant may be raised as an affirmative defense to any action brought in violation of the covenant." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 21-11, 878-79 (3d ed. 1987).

dependent covenant. A covenant that depends on a party's prior performance of some act or condition. • Until the performance, the other party does not have to perform. Cf. concurrent covenant; independent covenant.

executed covenant. A covenant that has been fully performed.

executory covenant (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee). A covenant that remains unperformed in whole or in part.

express covenant. A covenant created by the words of the parties. — Also termed covenant in deed. Cf. implied covenant.

implied covenant. A covenant that can be inferred from the whole agreement and the conduct of the parties. — Also termed covenant in law. Cf. express covenant.

implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. An implied covenant to cooperate with the other party to an agreement so that both parties may obtain the full benefits of the agreement; an implied covenant to refrain from any act that would injure a contracting party's right to receive the benefit of the contract.

implied negative covenant. A covenant binding a grantor not to permit use of any reserved right in a manner that might destroy the benefits that would otherwise inure to the grantee.

independent covenant. A covenant that makes each party independently liable for its promises, regardless of the other party's actions.

inherent covenant. A covenant that relates directly to land, such as a covenant of quiet enjoyment. Cf. collateral covenant.

intransitive covenant. A covenant whose performance does not pass from the original covenantor to the covenantor's representatives. Cf. transitive covenant.

joint covenant. A covenant that binds two or more covenantors together. Cf. several covenant.

negative covenant. A covenant that requires a party to refrain from doing something; esp., in a real-estate financing transaction, the borrower's promise to the lender not to encumber or transfer the real estate as long as the loan remains unpaid.

noncompetition covenant. A contractual provision — typically found in employment, partnership, or sale-of-business agreements — in which one party agrees to refrain from conducting business similar to that of the other party. ● Courts generally enforce these clauses for the duration of the original business relationship, but clauses extending beyond termination must usu. be reasonable in scope, time, and territory. — Also termed noncompete covenant; covenant not to compete; restrictive covenant; promise not to compete; contract not to compete.

positive covenant. A covenant that requires a party to do something (such as to erect a fence within a specified time).

principal covenant. A covenant that relates directly to the principal matter of an agreement. Cf. auxiliary covenant.

restrictive covenant. See noncompetition covenant.

several covenant. A covenant that binds two or more covenantors separately. — Also termed separate covenant. Cf. joint covenant.

transitive covenant. A covenant whose duty of performance passes from the original covenantor to the covenantor's representatives. Cf. intransitive covenant.

2. TREATY. 3. A common-law action to recover damages for breach of contract under seal. 4. A promise made in a deed or implied by law; esp., an obligation in a deed burdening or favoring a landowner.

"A covenant is properly defined as a promise made in deed, although in practice the term is used rather more loosely to mean simply an obligation affecting a landowner whether created by deed or not." Peter Butt, Land Law 334–35 (2d ed. 1988).

"In their nature, covenants are first cousins to easements appurtenant. The burdened land corresponds to a servient tenement, the benefitted land, to a dominant tenement. In concept, the main difference between easements and covenants is that, whereas an easement allows its holder to go upon and to do something upon the servient tenement, the beneficiary of a covenant may not enter the burdened land, but may require the owner of that land to do, or more likely not to do, something on that land." Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 8.13, at 467 (2d ed. 1993).

affirmative covenant. An agreement that real property will be used in a certain way. ● An affirmative covenant is more than a restriction on the use of property. It requires the owner to undertake certain acts on the property.

covenant against encumbrances. A grantor's promise that the property has no visible or invisible encumbrances. ● In a special warranty deed, the covenant is limited to encumbrances made by the grantor. — Also termed general covenant against encumbrances. Cf. special covenant against encumbrances.

covenant appurtenant (ə-pər-tə-nənt). A covenant that is connected with the grantor's land; a covenant running with the land. Cf. covenant in gross.

covenant for further assurances. A covenant to do whatever is reasonably necessary to perfect the title conveyed if it turns out to be imperfect. See further assurance under ASSURANCE.

covenant for possession. A covenant giving a grantee or lessee possession of land.

covenant for quiet enjoyment. 1. A covenant insuring against the consequences of a defective title or any other disturbance of the title. 2. A covenant ensuring that the tenant will not be evicted or disturbed by the grantor or a person having a lien or superior title. ● This covenant is sometimes treated as being synonymous with covenant of warranty. — Also termed covenant of quiet enjoyment.

covenant for title. A covenant that binds the grantor to ensure the completeness, security, and continuance of the title transferred. ● This covenant usu. includes the covenants for seisin, against encumbrances, for the right to convey, for quiet enjoyment, and of warranty.

covenant in gross. A covenant that does not run with the land. Cf. covenant appurtenant.

covenant of good right to convey. See covenant of seisin.

covenant of habitability (hab-ə-tə-bil-ə-tee). See implied warranty of habitability under WARRANTY (2).

covenant of nonclaim. A covenant barring a grantor or the grantor's heirs from claiming title in the conveyed land.

covenant of quiet enjoyment. See covenant for quiet enjoyment.

covenant of seisin (see-zin). A covenant, usu. appearing in a warranty deed, stating that the grantor has an estate, or the right to convey an estate, of the quality and size that the grantor purports to convey. ● For the covenant to be valid, the grantor must have both title and possession at the time of the grant. — Also termed covenant of good right to convey; right-to-convey covenant.

covenant of warranty. A covenant by which the grantor agrees to defend the grantee against any lawful or reasonable claims of superior title by a third party and to indemnify the grantee for any loss sustained by the claim. ● This covenant is sometimes treated as being synonymous with covenant for quiet enjoyment. See WARRANTY (1).

covenant running with the land. A covenant that, because it relates to the land, binds successor grantees indefinitely. ● The land cannot be conveyed without the covenant. — Also termed real covenant.

“The important consequence of a covenant running with the land is that its burden or benefit will thereby be imposed or conferred upon a subsequent owner of the property who never actually agreed to it. Running covenants thereby achieve the transfer of duties and rights in a way not permitted by traditional contract law.” Roger Bernhardt, Real Property in a Nutshell 212 (3d ed. 1993).

covenant running with the title. A covenant that is specific to the conveyance of title between a grantor and a grantee.

covenant to convey. A covenant in which the covenantor agrees to transfer an estate's title to the covenantee.

covenant to renew. An executory contract that gives a lessee the right to renew the lease.

covenant to stand seised (seezd). Hist. A covenant to convey land to a relative. ● This covenant could not be used to convey land to a stranger; the only consideration that supports the covenant is the relationship by blood or marriage.

future covenant. A covenant that can be breached only upon interference with the possession of the grantee or the grantee's successors. ● The covenants in this class are the covenant for further assurances, the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and the covenant of warranty. The distinction between future and present covenants becomes important in determining when the statute of limitations begins to run. Cf. present covenant.

general covenant against encumbrances. See covenant against encumbrances.

implied reciprocal covenant. A presumption that a promisee has, in return for a promise made respecting land, impliedly made a promise to the promisor respecting other land. — Also termed implied reciprocal servitude.

present covenant. A covenant that can be breached only at the time of conveyance. ● The three covenants in this class are the covenant against encumbrances, the covenant of right to convey, and the covenant of seisin. Cf. future covenant.

real covenant. See covenant running with the land.

restrictive covenant. 1. A private agreement, usu. in a deed or lease, that restricts the use or occupancy of real property, esp. by specifying lot sizes, building lines, architectural styles, and the uses to which the property may be put. — Also termed restrictive covenant in equity; equitable easement; equitable servitude. 2. See noncompetition covenant under COVENANT (1).

right-to-convey covenant. See covenant of seisin.

special covenant against encumbrances.

A grantor's promise that the property is free of encumbrances created by the grantor only, not the grantor's predecessors. See special warranty deed under WARRANTY DEED. Cf. covenant against encumbrances.

covenant, vb. To promise or undertake in a covenant; to agree formally.

covenant against encumbrances. See COVENANT (4).

covenant appurtenant. See COVENANT (4).

covenantee (kəv-ə-nən-tee). The person to whom a promise by covenant is made; one entitled to the benefit of a covenant.

covenant for further assurances. See COVENANT (4).

covenant for possession. See COVENANT (4).

covenant for quiet enjoyment. See COVENANT (4).

covenant for title. See COVENANT (4).

covenant in deed. See express covenant under COVENANT (1).

covenant in gross. See COVENANT (4).

covenant in law. See implied covenant under COVENANT (1).

covenant marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

covenant not to compete. See noncompetition covenant under COVENANT (1).

covenant not to sue. See COVENANT (1).

covenant of good right to convey. See covenant of seisin under COVENANT (4).

covenant of habitability. See implied warranty of habitability under WARRANTY (2).

covenant of quiet enjoyment. See covenant for quiet enjoyment under COVENANT (4).

covenant of seisin. See COVENANT (4).

covenant of warranty. See COVENANT (4).

covenantor (kəv-ə-nən-tər or kəv-ə-nən-tor).

The person who makes a promise by covenant; one subject to the burden of a covenant. — Also spelled covenanter.

covenant running with the land. See COVENANT (4).

covenant running with the title. See COVENANT (4).

covenant to convey. See COVENANT (4).

covenant to renew. See COVENANT (4).

covenant to stand seized. See COVENANT (4).

Coventry Act (kəv-ən-tree or kov-). An 1803

English statute establishing the death penalty for anyone who, with malice aforethought, did "cut out or disable the tongue, put out an eye, slit the nose, cut off a nose or lip, or cut off or disable any limb or member of any subject; with the intention in so doing to maim or disfigure him."

"[At common law,] an injury such as cutting off [a man's] ear or nose did not constitute mayhem . . . , because it did not result in permanent disablement, but merely disfigured the victim. This was corrected by an early English statute. It seems that an assault was made upon Sir John Coventry on the street by persons who waylaid him and slit his nose in revenge for obnoxious words uttered by him in Parliament. This emphasized the weakness of the law of mayhem, and the so-called 'Coventry Act' was passed [in 1803]." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 239-40 (3d ed. 1982).

coventurer (koh-ven-chər-ər). A person who undertakes a joint venture with one or more persons. — Also termed co-adventurer. Cf. JOINT VENTURE.

cover, n. The purchase on the open market, by the buyer in a breach-of-contract dispute, of goods to substitute for those promised but never delivered by the seller. • Under UCC § 2-712, the buyer can recover from the seller the difference between the cost of the substituted goods and the original contract price.

coverage, n. 1. Inclusion of a risk under an insurance policy; the risks within the scope of an insurance policy. — cover, *vb.

dependent coverage. An insurance provision for protection of an insured's dependents.

full coverage. Insurance protection that pays for the full amount of a loss with no deduction.

2. The ratio between corporate pretax income and corporate liability for bond interest payments.

coverage opinion. See OPINION (2).

coverage ratio. A measurement of a firm's ability to cover its financing charges.

cover-all clause. See MOTHER HUBBARD CLAUSE (2).

covered wages. See WAGE.

cover letter. See TRANSMITTAL LETTER.

cover note. A written statement by an insurance agent confirming that coverage is in effect. • The cover note is distinguished from a binder, which is prepared by the insurance company.

covert baron (kəv-ərt bɑr-ən). [Law French] Hist. The condition or status of a married woman at common law. — Also written cover-baron. — Also termed covert de baron.

"By marriage, the husband and wife are one person in law: that is, the very being or legal existence of the woman is suspended during the marriage, or at least is incorporated and consolidated into that of the husband: under whose wing, protection, and cover, she performs every thing; and is therefore called in our law-french a feme-covert; is said to be covert-baron, or under the protection and influence of her husband, her baron, or lord; and her condition during her marriage is called her coverture." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 430 (1765).

coverture (kəv-ər-chər also -tyoor), n. Archaic. The condition of being a married woman <under former law, a woman under coverture was allowed to sue only through the personality of her husband>. — covert (kəv-ərt), adj.

"Coverture, is a french word signifying any thing that covereth, as apparell, a coverlet.... It is particularly applied in our common lawe, to the estate and condition of a married woman, who by the lawes of our realme, is in (potestate viri) and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of her selfe or her husband, without his consent and privity; or at the least, without his allowance and confirmation." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

"Coverture is by law applied to the state and condition of a married woman, who is sub potestate viri, (under the power of her husband) and therefore unable to contract with any to the damage of herself or husband, without his consent and privity, or his allowance and confirmation thereof. When a woman is married she is called a Femme covert, and whatever is done concerning her during marriage is said to be done during coverture."

The Pocket Lawyer and Family Conveyancer 96 (3d ed. 1833).

covin (kəv-ən). Hist. A secret conspiracy or agreement between two or more persons to injure or defraud another.

"Covin is a secret assent determined in the hearts of two or more, to the prejudice of another: As if a tenant for term of life, or tenant in tail, will secretly conspire with another, that the other shall recover against the tenant for life the land which he holds, & c. in prejudice of him in the reversion." Termes de la Ley 129 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

covinous (kəv-ə-nəs), adj. Hist. Of a deceitful or fraudulent nature.

cozen (kəz-ən), vb. Hist. To cheat or defraud. — Also spelled cosen.

cozening (kəz-ən-ing). Hist. A deceitful practice; the offense of cheating, or fraudulent dealing. — Also spelled cosening. Cf. STELLIONATUS.

"Cosening is an offence unnamed, whereby any thing is done guilefully in or out of contracts, which cannot be fitly termed by any special name. It is called stellionatus in the civile law...." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

C.P. abbr. COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

CPA. See certified public accountant under ACCOUNTANT.

CPI. abbr. CONSUMER PRICE INDEX.

C.R. abbr. CURIA REGIS.

cracking, n. A gerrymandering technique in which a geographically concentrated political or racial group that is large enough to constitute a district's dominant force is broken up by district lines and dispersed throughout two or more districts. Cf. PACKING; STACKING (2).

craft union. See UNION.

cramdown, n. Court confirmation of a Chapter 11 bankruptcy plan despite the opposition of certain creditors. • Under the Bankruptcy Code, a court may confirm a plan — even if it has not been accepted by all classes of creditors — if the plan (1) has been accepted by at least one impaired class, (2) does not discriminate unfairly, and (3) is fair and equitable. 11 USCA § 1129(b). — cram down, vb. See IMPAIRMENT.

The principle that the manufacturer of a product will be held strictly liable for injuries occurring in a collision, even if the collision results from an independent cause, to the extent that a defect in the product causes injuries above and beyond those that would have occurred in the collision itself. — Also termed second-collision doctrine; second-impact doctrine.

crastino (kras-tə-noh). [Law Latin] Hist. Tomorrow; on the morrow. • The return day of writs, so-called because the court terms always began on a saint's day; writs were therefore returnable the day after.

creancier (kree-ən-sər). [Law French] Hist. A creditor. — Also spelled creansour.

creativity. Copyright. The degree to which a work displays imaginativeness beyond what a person of very ordinary talents might create. Cf. ORIGINALITY.

"Where creativity refers to the nature of the work itself, originality refers to the nature of the author's contribution to the work. Thus, a public domain painting may evince great creativity, but if a copyright claimant adds nothing of his own to it, by way of reproduction or otherwise, then copyright will be denied on the basis of lack of originality. Conversely, a work may be entirely the product of the claimant's independent efforts, and hence original, but may nevertheless be denied protection as a work of art if it is completely lacking in any modicum of creativity." 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 2.08[B][2], at 2-88 (Supp. 1995).

creature of statute. A doctrine, governmental agency, etc. that would not exist but for a legislative act that brought it into being.

credibility, n. The quality that makes something (as a witness or some evidence) worthy of belief. — credible, adj.

credible evidence. See EVIDENCE.

credible witness. See WITNESS.

credit, n. 1. Belief; trust <the jury gave credit to Benson's version>. 2. One's ability to borrow money; the faith in one's ability to pay debts . 3. The time that a seller gives the buyer to make the payment that is due <30 days' credit>. 4. The availability of funds either from a financial institution or under a letter of credit <the bank extended a line of credit to the customer>.

bank credit. Credit that a bank makes available to a borrower.

consumer credit. Credit extended to an individual to facilitate the purchase of consumer goods and services.

installment credit. Consumer credit scheduled to be repaid in two or more payments, usu. at regular intervals. • The seller ordinarily exacts finance charges.

noninstallment credit. Consumer credit arranged to be repaid in a single payment. • Examples include doctors' and plumbers' bills.

revolving credit. A consumer-credit arrangement that allows the borrower to buy goods or secure loans on a continuing basis as long as the outstanding balance does not exceed a specified limit. — Also termed open credit; revolving charge account. Cf. revolver loan under LOAN.

5. LETTER OF CREDIT <the bank issued a credit in favor of the exporter>. 6. A deduction from an amount due; an accounting entry reflecting an addition to revenue or net worth <confirm that the credit was properly applied to my account>. Cf. DEBIT. 7. TAX CREDIT <the $500 credit reduced his income-tax liability by $500>.

accumulated-earnings credit. Tax. A deduction allowed in arriving at a corporation's accumulated taxable income. • It offsets the base on which the tax is assessed by reducing the taxable base by the greater of $250,000 or the accumulated earnings retained for the reasonable needs of the corporation, reduced by the net capital gain. IRC (26 USCA) § 535. See accumulated-earnings tax under TAX.

credit, vb. 1. To believe <the jury did not credit his testimony>. 2. To enter (as an amount) on the credit side of an account <her account was credited with $500>.

credit balance. Accounting. The status of an account when the sum of the credit entries exceeds the sum of the debit entries.

credit bureau. An organization that compiles information on people's creditworthiness and publishes it in the form of reports that are used chiefly by merchants and service-providers who deal directly with customers. • The practices of credit bureaus are regulated by federal (and often state) law. Most bureaus are members of the Associated Credit Bureaus of America. Cf. CREDIT-REPORTING BUREAU.

credit card. An identification card used to obtain items on credit, usu. on a revolving basis. See revolving credit under CREDIT. Cf. DEBIT CARD.

credit-card crime. The offense of using a credit card to purchase something with knowledge that (1) the card is stolen or forged, (2) the card has been revoked or canceled, or (3) the card's use is unauthorized.

credit memorandum. A document issued by a seller to a buyer confirming that the seller has credited (i.e., reduced) the buyer's account because of an error, return, or allowance.

credit mobilier. A company or association that carries on a banking business by making loans on the security of personal property.

creditor. 1. One to whom a debt is owed; one who gives credit for money or goods. — Also termed debtee. 2. A person or entity with a definite claim against another, esp. a claim that is capable of adjustment and liquidation. 3. Bankruptcy. A person or entity having a claim against the debtor predating the order for relief concerning the debtor. 4. Roman law. One to whom any obligation is owed, whether contractual or otherwise. Cf. DEBTOR.

attaching creditor. A creditor who has caused an attachment to be issued and levied on the debtor's property.

bond creditor. A creditor whose debt is secured by a bond.

certificate creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation who receives a certificate of indebtedness rather than payment because the municipality cannot pay the debt. Cf. warrant creditor.

conditional creditor. Civil law. A creditor who has either a future right of action or a right of action in expectancy.

creditor at large. A creditor who has not established the debt by reducing it to judgment, or who has not otherwise secured a lien on any of the debtor's property.

domestic creditor. A creditor who resides in the same state or country as the debtor or the debtor's property.

double creditor. A creditor who has a lien on two funds. Cf. single creditor.

execution creditor. A judgment creditor who has caused an execution to issue on the judgment.

foreign creditor. A creditor who resides in a different state or country from that of the debtor or the debtor's property.

gap creditor. Bankruptcy. A creditor who extends credit to, lends money to, or has a claim arise against the debtor in the period between the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition and the entry of the order for relief. • Under the Bankruptcy Code, a gap creditor's claim receives second priority, immediately below administrative claims. 11 USCA §§ 502(f), 507(a)(2).

general creditor. See unsecured creditor.

hypothetical creditor. Bankruptcy. An actual or code-created judicial-lien creditor or bona fide purchaser who establishes a bankruptcy trustee's status under the Bankruptcy Code's priority scheme, claiming property through the debtor at the time of the bankruptcy filing. 11 USCA § 544. — Also termed hypothetical lien creditor.

joint creditor. A creditor who is entitled, along with another creditor, to demand payment from a debtor.

judgment creditor. See JUDGMENT CREDITOR.

junior creditor. A creditor whose claim accrued after that of another creditor; a creditor who holds a debt that is subordinate to another's.

known creditor. A creditor whose identity or claim is either known or reasonably ascertainable by the debtor. • Known creditors are entitled to notice of the debtor's bankruptcy or corporate dissolution, as well as notice of any deadline for filing proofs of claim.

lien creditor. A creditor whose claim is secured by a lien on the debtor's property. UCC § 9-301(3).

preferred creditor. A creditor with a superior right to payment, such as a holder of a perfected security interest as compared to a holder of an unsecured claim. UCC § 9-301(1).

principal creditor. A creditor whose claim or demand greatly exceeds the claims of other creditors.

prior creditor. A creditor who is given priority in payment from the debtor's assets.

secondary creditor. A creditor whose claim is subordinate to a preferred creditor's.

secured creditor. A creditor who has the right, on the debtor's default, to proceed against collateral and apply it to the payment of the debt. — Also termed secured party.

"Secured party" means (A) a person in whose favor a security interest is created or provided for under a security agreement, whether or not any obligation to be secured is outstanding; (B) a person that holds an agricultural lien; (C) a consignor; (D) a person to which accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes have been sold; or (E) if a security interest or agricultural lien is created or provided for in favor of a trustee, agent, collateral agent, or other representative, that representative." UCC § 9-102(a)(50).

single creditor. In the marshaling of assets, a creditor with a lien on one fund. Cf. double creditor.

subsequent creditor. A creditor whose claim comes into existence after a given fact or transaction, such as the recording of a deed or the execution of a voluntary conveyance.

unsecured creditor. A creditor who, upon giving credit, takes no rights against specific property of the debtor. — Also termed general creditor.

warrant creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation who is given a municipal warrant for the amount of the claim because the municipality lacks the funds to pay the debt. Cf. certificiate creditor.

creditor at large. See CREDITOR.

creditor beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

creditor's bill. An equitable suit in which a judgment creditor seeks to reach property that cannot be reached by the process available to enforce a judgment. — Also termed creditor's suit.

creditor's claim. See CLAIM (5).

creditors' committee. Bankruptcy. A committee comprising representatives of the creditors in a Chapter 11 proceeding, formed to negotiate the debtor's plan of reorganization. ● Generally, a committee has no fewer than 3 and no more than 11 members and serves as an advisory body. 11 USCA § 1102.

creditors' composition. See COMPOSITION.

creditors' meeting. See MEETING.

creditor's suit. See CREDITOR'S BILL.

credit rating. An evaluation of a potential borrower's ability to repay debt, prepared by a credit bureau at the request of a lender.

credit report. 1. A credit bureau's report on a person's financial status, usu. including the approximate amounts and locations of a person's bank accounts, charge accounts, loans, and other debts, bill-paying habits, defaults, bankruptcies, foreclosures, marital status, occupation, income, and lawsuits. See CREDIT BUREAU. 2. The report of a credit-reporting bureau, usu. including highly personal information gathered through interviews with a person's friends, neighbors, and coworkers. See CREDIT-REPORTING BUREAU.

credit-reporting bureau. An organization that, on request, prepares investigative reports not just on people's creditworthiness but also on personal information gathered from various sources, including interviews with neighbors, friends, and coworkers. ● These reports are used chiefly by employers (for prospective employees), insurance companies (for applicants), and landlords (for prospective tenants). — Also termed investigating bureau. Cf. CREDIT BUREAU.

creditrrix (kred-ə-triks), n. [fr. Latin credere "to lend, entrust"] Archaic. Civil law. A female creditor.

credit sale. See SALE.

credit service charge. See SERVICE CHARGE.

credit-shelter trust. See bypass trust under TRUST.

credit slip. A document that allows a store customer to either purchase another item or receive cash or credit for merchandise the customer has returned to the store.

credit union. A cooperative association that offers low-interest loans and other consumer banking services to persons sharing a common bond — often fellow employees and their family members. ● Most credit unions are regulated by the National Credit Union Administration. State-chartered credit unions are also subject to regulation by the chartering state, and they may be regulated by state banking boards.

"Credit unions were the last major thrift institutions developed in the United States What distinguished credit unions from mutual savings banks and savings and loan associations was their emphasis on a common bond of workers, church members, or people in a local area, wanting to borrow relatively small amounts at reasonable interest rates from each other, and help each other save to meet these short-term needs. Their goal was to provide a low interest rate alternative (6-9 percent and preferably the lower) to loan sharks and pawnbrokers." William A. Lovett, Banking and Financial Institutions Law in a Nutshell 284 (1997).

creditworthy, adj. (Of a borrower) financially sound enough that a lender will extend credit in the belief that the chances of default are slight; fiscally healthy. — creditworthiness, n.

creeping tender offer. See TENDER OFFER.

C reorganization. See REORGANIZATION (2).

cretion (kree-shən). [fr. Latin cernere "to decide"] Roman law. 1. A method or form of accepting an inheritance by an heir who is appointed in a testament. • Cretion usu. had to be declared within 100 days from the date an heir received notice of the appointment. Cretion was formally abolished in A.D. 407.

"In the old law it was the practice to fix a time limit, usually of one hundred days, within which the heir was to make a formal acceptance, with the addition that if he failed to do so, he was to be disinherited and a substitute was to take the inheritance in his place. This formal acceptance was known as cretio from the Latin verb cernere=to decide. The practice had fallen into disuse before Justinian, who formally abolished it." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 199 (4th ed. 1956).

2. The period within which an heir might decide whether to accept an inheritance. — Also termed cretio (kree-shee-oh). — cretionary (kree-shən-er-ee), adj.

CRF. abbr. CRIMINAL-REFERRAL FORM.

crier (kri-ər). 1. An officer of the court who makes public pronouncements as required by the court. See BAILIFF. 2. An auctioneer. — Also spelled cryer.

criez la peez (kri-eez læ pees). [Law French] Hist. Rehearse the concord (or peace). • This phrase was used to confirm the conveyance of land by fine. The serjeant or countor in attendance read the phrase aloud in court. See FINE (1).

crim. con. abbr. CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

crime. A social harm that the law makes punishable; the breach of a legal duty treated as the subject-matter of a criminal proceeding. — Also termed criminal wrong. See OFFENSE.

"Understanding that the conception of Crime, as distinguished from that of Wrong or Tort and from that of Sin, involves the idea of injury to the State of collective community, we first find that the commonwealth, in literal conformity with the conception, itself interposed directly, and by isolated acts, to avenge itself on the author of the evil which it had suffered." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 320 (17th ed. 1901).

"It is a curious fact that all the minor acts enumerated in the penal code of a state like, say, New York are in law called crimes, which term includes both murder and overparking. It is a strong term to use for the latter, and of course the law has for centuries recognized that there are more serious and less serious crimes. At the common law, however, only two classes were recognized, serious crimes or felonies, and minor crimes or misdemeanors." Max Radin, The Law and You 91 (1948).

administrative crime. An offense consisting of a violation of an administrative rule or regulation that carries with it a criminal sanction.

capital crime. See capital offense under OFFENSE.

common-law crime. A crime that is punishable under the common law, rather than by force of statute. Cf. statutory crime.

computer crime. A crime requiring knowledge of computer technology, such as sabotaging or stealing computer data or using a computer to commit some other crime.

consensual crime. See victimless crime.

corporate crime. A crime committed either by a corporate body or by its representatives acting on its behalf. • Examples include price-fixing and consumer fraud.

crime against nature. See SODOMY.

crime malum in se. See MALUM IN SE.

crime malum prohibitum. See MALUM PROHIBITUM.

crime of omission. An offense that carries as its material component the failure to act.

crime of passion. A crime committed in the heat of an emotionally charged moment, with no opportunity to reflect on what is happening. See HEAT OF PASSION.

crime of violence. See violent crime.

crime without victims. See victimless crime.

federal crime. See FEDERAL CRIME.

hate crime. A crime motivated by the victim's race, color, ethnicity, religion, or national origin. • Certain groups have lobbied to expand the definition by statute to include a crime motivated by the victim's disability, gender, or sexual orientation. Cf. hate speech under SPEECH.

high crime. A crime that is offensive to public morality, though not necessarily a felony. • Under the U.S. Constitution, a civil officer's committing of a "high crime" is, along with treason and bribery, grounds for removal from office. U.S. Const. art. II, § 4. See IMPEACHABLE OFFENSE.

index crime. See index offense under OFFENSE.

infamous crime (in-fə-məs). 1. At common law, a crime for which part of the punishment was infamy, so that one who committed it would be declared ineligible to serve on a jury, hold public office, or testify. • Examples are perjury, treason, and fraud. 2. A crime punishable by imprisonment in a penitentiary. • The Fifth Amendment requires a grand-jury indictment for the prosecution of infamous (or capital) crimes, which include all federal felony offenses. See indictable offense under OFFENSE.

instantaneous crime. A crime that is fully completed by a single act, as arson or murder, rather than a series of acts. • The statute of limitations for an instantaneous crime begins to run with its completion.

noninfamous crime. A crime that does not qualify as an infamous crime. Cf. infamous crime.

organized crime. See ORGANIZED CRIME.

political crime. A crime (such as treason) directed against the government.

quasi-crime. 1. An offense not subject to criminal prosecution (such as contempt or violation of a municipal ordinance) but for which penalties or forfeitures can be imposed. • The term includes offenses that give rise to qui tam actions and forfeitures for the violation of a public duty. 2. An offense for which someone other than the actual perpetrator is held liable, the perpetrator being presumed to act on the command of the responsible party. See quasi-delict (1) under DELICT.

signature crime. A distinctive crime so similar in pattern, scheme, or modus operandi to previous crimes that it identifies a particular defendant as the perpetrator.

status crime. A type of crime of which a person is guilty by being in a certain condition or of a specific character, such as vagrancy. — Also termed status offense.

statutory crime. A crime punishable by statute. Cf. common-law crime.

street crime. Crime generally directed against a person in public, such as mugging, theft, or robbery.

strict-liability crime. A crime that does not require a mens rea element, such as speeding or attempting to carry a weapon aboard an aircraft.

vice crime. A crime of immoral conduct, such as gambling or prostitution.

victimless crime. A crime that is considered to have no direct victim, usu. because only consenting adults are involved. • Examples are possession of drugs and deviant sexual intercourse between consenting adults. — Also termed consensual crime; crime without victims.

"When a man's house has been robbed or his brother murdered, he is likely to take this complaint vigorously to the police and demand action. His presence on the scene dramatizes the need for law enforcement and gives sense and purpose to the work of the police and district attorney. In contrast, the absence of a prosecuting witness surrounds 'crimes without victims' with an entirely different atmosphere. Here it is the police who must assume the initiative. If they attempt to work without the aid of informers, they must resort to spying, and this spying is rendered all the more distasteful because what is spied upon is sordid and pitiable." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 44 (1968).

violent crime. A crime that has as an element the use, attempted use, threatened use, or substantial risk of use of physical force against the person or property of another. 18 USCA § 16. — Also termed crime of violence.

white-collar crime. See WHITE-COLLAR CRIME.

crime against humanity. Int'l law. A brutal crime that is not an isolated incident but that involves large and systematic actions, often cloaked with official authority, and that shocks the conscience of humankind. • Among the specific crimes that fall within this category are mass murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, and other inhumane acts perpetrated against a population, whether in wartime or not.

crime against international law. See CRIME AGAINST THE LAW OF NATIONS.

crime against nature. See SODOMY.

crime against peace. Int'l law. An international crime in which the offenders plan, prepare, initiate, or wage a war of aggression or a war in violation of international peace treaties, agreements, or assurances.

crime against the law of nations. Int'l law. 1. A crime punishable under internationally prescribed criminal law or defined by an international convention and required to be made punishable under the criminal law of the member states. 2. A crime, such as piracy or a war crime, punishable under international criminal law. 3. A crime punishable under international law; an act that is internationally agreed to be of a criminal nature, such as genocide, piracy, or engaging in the slave trade. — Also termed crime against international law.

crime against the person. See CRIMES AGAINST PERSONS.

crime-fraud exception. The doctrine that neither the attorney-client privilege nor the attorney-work-product privilege protects attorney-client communications that are in furtherance of a current or planned crime or fraud. Clark v. United States, 289 U.S. 1, 53 S.Ct. 465 (1933); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 731 F.2d 1032 (2d Cir. 1984).

crime malum in se. See MALUM IN SE.

crime malum prohibitum. See MALUM PROHIBITUM.

crimen (kri-mən), n. [Latin] 1. An accusation or charge of a crime. 2. A crime. Pl. crimina (krim-ə-nə).

crimen falsi (kri-mən fal-si or fawl-si). [Latin “the crime of falsifying”] 1. A crime in the nature of perjury. 2. Any other offense that involves some element of dishonesty or false statement. See Fed. R. Evid. 609(a)(2).

“The starting point [for perjury] seems to have been the so-called crimen falsi, — crime of falsifying. In the beginning, perhaps, one convicted of perjury was deemed too untrustworthy to be permitted to testify in any other case, and the idea grew until the term ‘crimen falsi’ included any crime involving an element of deceit, fraud or corruption.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 26 (3d ed. 1982).

crimen furti (kri-mən fər-ti). [Latin “the crime of stealing”] See THEFT.

crimen incendii (kri-mən in-sen-dee-i). [Latin “the crime of burning”] See ARSON.

crimen innominatum (kri-mən i-nom-ə-nay-təm). [Latin “the nameless crime”] See SODOMY.

crimen majestatis (kri-mən maj-ə-stay-tis). [Latin “crime against majesty”] Hist. High treason; any crime against the king’s person or dignity; LESE MAJESTY. • Under Roman law, crimen majestatis denoted any enterprise by a Roman citizen or other person against the emperor or the republic. — Also spelled crimen maiestatis. — Also termed crimen laesae majestatis. Cf. PERDUELLIO.

crimen raptus (kri-mən rap-təs). [Latin “the crime of rape”] See RAPE.

crimen repetundarum (kri-mən rep-ə-tən-dair-əm). [Latin] Roman law. The crime of bribery or extortion.

crimen roberiae (kri-mən rə-beer-ee-ee). [Latin “the crime of robbery”] ROBBERY.

criminal conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

criminal contempt. See CONTEMPT.

criminal conversation. Hist. A tort action for adultery, brought by a husband against a third party who engaged in sexual intercourse with his wife. — Abbr. crim. con.

“An action (whether of trespass or case is uncertain, but probably trespass) formerly lay against one who had committed adultery with the wife of the plaintiff. It was known as an action for criminal conversation. The wife’s consent was irrelevant. The action was distinct from that of enticement: one may commit adultery without enticing a wife away from her husband. The action was no doubt a necessity when divorce could only be obtained by Act of Parliament: as Parliament was not a tribunal suitable for trying allegations of adultery it was reasonable to require the petitioner to establish the truth of his allegations before a court of law. The action might also have been justified on the ground that the plaintiff is in substance complaining of the invasion of privacy of his marriage, and the insult thereby caused to his honour as a husband.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 358 (17th ed. 1977).

criminal damage to property. 1. Injury, destruction, or substantial impairment to the use of property (other than by fire or explosion) without the consent of a person having an interest in the property. 2. Injury, destruction, or substantial impairment to the use of property (other than by fire or explosion) with the intent to injure or defraud an insurer or lienholder. Cf. ARSON.

criminal defendant. The accused in a criminal proceeding.

criminal desertion. See DESERTION.

criminal forfeiture. See FORFEITURE.

criminal fraud. See FRAUD.

criminal homicide. See HOMICIDE.

criminal infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

criminal-instrumentality rule. The principle that when a criminal act is committed, that act — rather than the victim’s negligence that made the crime possible — will be considered to be the crime’s proximate cause.

criminal intent. 1. MENS REA. 2. An intent to commit an actus reus without any justification, excuse, or other defense.

“The phrase ‘criminal intent’ is one that has been bandied about with various meanings not carefully distinguished. At times it has been used in the sense of the ‘intent to do wrong’ (the outline of the mental pattern which is necessary for crime in general), — as, for example, in the phrase ‘the mental element commonly called criminal intent.’ At times it has been used in the sense of mens rea as the mental element requisite for guilt of the very offense charged, ‘a varying state of mind which is the contrary of an innocent state of mind, whatever may be pointed out by the nature of the crime as an innocent state of mind.' Often it is used to include criminal negligence as well as an actual intent to do the harmful deed, although at other times such negligence is referred to as a substitute, so to speak, for criminal intent in connection with certain offenses. Occasionally it is found in the sense of an intent to violate the law, — implying a knowledge of the law violated. On the other hand, as such knowledge is a factor not ordinarily required for conviction it has been pointed out that to establish ignorance of the law does not disprove criminal intent. Thus it has been said (assuming the absence of any circumstance of exculpation) 'whenever an act is criminal, the party doing the act is chargeable with criminal intent.' . . . This suggests a helpful guide for the use of the phrase 'criminal intent.' Some other term such as mens rea or guilty mind should be employed for more general purposes, and 'criminal intent' be restricted to those situations in which there is (1) an intent to do the actus reus, and (2) no circumstance of exculpation.' Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 832-34 (3d ed. 1982).

criminalism. 1. A pathological tendency toward criminality. 2. Archaic. The branch of psychiatry dealing with habitual criminals.

criminalist (krim-ə-nəl-ist). 1. A person who practices criminalistics as a profession. 2. Archaic. One versed in criminal law. 3. Archaic. A psychiatrist who treats criminals. 4. Archaic. A habitual criminal.

criminalistics (krim-ə-nə-lis-tiks), n. The science of crime detection, usu. involving the subsection of physical evidence to laboratory analysis, including ballistic testing, blood-fluid and tissue analysis, and other tests that are helpful in determining what happened. Cf. CRIMINOLOGY.

criminaliter (krim-ə-nay-lə-tər), adv. [Latin] Criminally. Cf. CIVILITER.

criminality (krim-ə-nəl-ə-tee). 1. The state or quality of being criminal. 2. An act or practice that constitutes a crime.

criminalization (krim-ə-nəl-ə-zay-shən), n. 1. The act or an instance of making a previously lawful act criminal, usu. by passing a statute. Cf. DECRIMINALIZATION; CIVILIZATION. 2. The process by which a person develops into a criminal.

criminalize (krim-ə-nəl-īz), vb. To make illegal; to outlaw.

criminal jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

criminal justice. 1. The methods by which a society deals with those who are accused of having committed crimes. See LAW ENFORCEMENT (1). 2. The field of study pursued by those seeking to enter law enforcement as a profession. ● Many colleges offer degrees in criminal justice, typically after two to four years of study. — Also termed (in sense 2) police science; law enforcement.

criminal-justice system. The collective institutions through which an accused offender passes until the accusations have been disposed of or the assessed punishment concluded. ● The system typically has three components: law enforcement (police, sheriffs, marshals), the judicial process (judges, prosecutors, defense lawyers), and corrections (prison officials, probation officers, parole officers). — Also termed law-enforcement system.

criminal law. The body of law defining offenses against the community at large, regulating how suspects are investigated, charged, and tried, and establishing punishments for convicted offenders.

"The criminal law represents the pathology of civilization." Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 70 (1961).

"Often the term 'criminal law' is used to include all that is involved in 'the administration of criminal justice' in the broadest sense. As so employed it embraces three different fields, known to the lawyer as (1) the substantive criminal law, (2) criminal procedure, and (3) special problems in the administration and enforcement of criminal justice. . . . The phrase 'criminal law' is more commonly used to include only that part of the general field known as the substantive criminal law. . . ." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1, 5 (3d ed. 1982).

criminal lawyer. See LAWYER.

criminal libel. See LIBEL.

criminally negligent homicide. See negligent homicide under HOMICIDE.

criminal mischief. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

criminal negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

criminal policy. The branch of criminal science concerned with limiting harmful conduct in society. ● It draws on information provided by criminology, and its subjects for investigation are (1) the appropriate measures of social organization for preventing harmful activities, and (2) the treatment to be accorded to those who have caused harm, whether the offenders are to be given warnings, supervised probation, medical treatment, or more serious deprivations of life or liberty, such as imprisonment or capital punishment.

criminal procedure. The rules governing the mechanisms under which crimes are investigated, prosecuted, adjudicated, and punished. ● It includes the protection of accused persons' constitutional rights.

criminal proceeding. See PROCEEDING.

criminal process. See PROCESS.

criminal prosecution. See PROSECUTION (2).

criminal protector. An accessory after the fact to a felony; one who aids or harbors a wrongdoer after the commission of a crime.

criminal-referral form. A form once required (from 1988 to 1996) for reporting every instance when a bank employee or affiliate committed or aided in committing a crime such as credit-card fraud, employee theft, or check-kiting. ● This form, like the suspicious-transaction report, has since been superseded by the suspicious-activity report. — Abbr. CRF.

criminal registration. See REGISTRATION (1).

criminal responsibility. See RESPONSIBILITY (1), (2).

criminal sanction. See SANCTION.

criminal science. The study of crime with a view to discovering the causes of criminality, devising the most effective methods of reducing crime, and perfecting the means for dealing with those who have committed crimes. ● The three main branches of criminal science are criminology, criminal policy, and criminal law.

criminal solicitation. See SOLICITATION.

criminal statute. See STATUTE.

criminal syndicalism. See SYNDICALISM.

criminal trespass. See TRESPASS.

criminal wrong. See CRIME.

criminate, vb. INCRIMINATE.

crimination (krim-ə-nay-shən), n. 1. INCRIMINATION. 2. An accusation or strong censure.

criminative (krim-ə-nay-tiv), adj. Of, relating to or involving incrimination or accusation. Cf. INFIRMATIVE.

criminogenic, adj. Tending to cause crime or criminality. — criminogenesis, n.

criminology, n. The study of crime and criminal punishment as social phenomena; the study of the causes of crime, comprising (1) criminal biology, which examines causes that may be found in the mental and physical constitution of an offender (such as hereditary tendencies and physical defects), and (2) criminal sociology, which deals with inquiries into the effects of environment as a cause of criminality. — Also termed criminal anthropology. — criminological, adj. — criminologist, n. Cf. CRIMINALISTICS.

crimping. Hist. The offense of decoying and confining persons to force them into military service. Cf. IMPRESSMENT (3).

crit. An adherent to the critical-legal-studies school of thought. — Also termed CLSer; Critic; critter.

fem-crit. A feminist adherent of critical legal studies.

critical evidence. See EVIDENCE.

Critical Legal Studies. 1. A school of thought advancing the idea that the legal system's manipulative nature masks its true function, which, according to the predominant Marxist wing of this school, is to perpetuate the socioeconomic status quo. 2. The body of work produced by adherents to this school of thought. — Abbr. CLS.

critical limitation. Patents. A limitation essential either to the operativeness of an invention or to the patentability of a patent claim for the invention.

Critical Race Theory. 1. A reform movement within the legal profession, particularly within academia, whose adherents believe that the legal system has disempowered racial minorities. ● The term first appeared in 1989. Critical race theorists observe that even if the law is couched in neutral language, it cannot be neutral because those who fashioned it had their own subjective perspectives that, once enshrined in law, have disadvantaged minorities and even perpetuated racism. 2. The body of work produced by adherents to this theory. — Abbr. CRT.

critical stage. 1. The point in a criminal prosecution when the accused's rights may be prejudiced by the absence of legal representation. ● A defendant is entitled to counsel at critical stages, such as trial or a preliminary hearing, when the defendant's rights could be prejudiced. 2. The point in a criminal prosecution when jeopardy attaches, when the jury is empaneled, or when a witness is sworn.

critter. See CRIT.

crop insurance. See INSURANCE.

crops. Products that are grown, raised, and harvested. ● Crops usu. are from the soil, but fruit grown on trees are also considered crops.

basic crops. Crops (such as wheat and corn) that are usu. subject to government-price supports.

growing crops. Crops that are in the process of growth. ● Judicial decisions vary on the growth stage at which a crop becomes a growing crop and on whether pasture grass is a growing crop. Growing crops are goods under UCC § 2-105(1). Cf. FARM PRODUCT.

cross, n. 1. CROSS-EXAMINATION. 2. A sale of a large amount of stock privately traded between two parties. ● Although the transaction does not happen on the exchange floor, it typically requires exchange permission.

cross-action. See CROSS-CLAIM.

cross-appeal. See APPEAL.

cross-bill. See BILL (2).

cross-claim, n. A claim asserted between codefendants or coplaintiffs in a case and that relates to the subject of the original claim or counterclaim. — Also termed cross-action. — cross-claim, vb. — cross-claimant, n. Cf. COUNTERCLAIM.

"The courts have not always distinguished clearly between a cross-claim and a counterclaim, and have used one name where the other is proper under the rules, perhaps because in some states, and in the old equity practice, the term cross-complaint or cross-bill is used for what the rules regard as a counterclaim. Under Rule 13 a counterclaim is a claim against an opposing party, while a cross-claim is against a co-party. Further there is not the same freedom in asserting cross-claims that the rules provide for counterclaims. An unrelated claim against an opposing party may be asserted as a permissive counterclaim, but only claims related to the subject matter of the original action, or property involved therein, are appropriate as cross-claims." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 80, at 574 (5th ed. 1994).

cross-collateral. See COLLATERAL.

cross-collateral clause. An installment-contract provision allowing the seller, if the buyer defaults, to repossess not only the particular item sold but also every other item bought from the seller on which a balance remained due when the last purchase was made. — Also termed dragnet clause.

cross-complaint. 1. A claim asserted by a defendant against another party to the action. 2. A claim asserted by a defendant against a person not a party to the action for a matter relating to the subject of the action.

cross-default. A provision under which default on one debt obligation triggers default on another obligation.

cross-demand. See DEMAND (3).

cross-elasticity of demand. Antitrust. A relationship between two products, usu. substitutes for each other, in which a price change for one product affects the price of the other.

cross-error. See ERROR (2).

cross-examination, n. The questioning of a witness at a trial or hearing by the party opposed to the party who called the witness to testify. ● The purpose of cross-examination is to discredit a witness before the fact-finder in any of several ways, as by bringing out contradictions and improbabilities in earlier testimony, by suggesting doubts to the witness, and by trapping the witness into admissions that weaken the testimony. The cross-examiner is typically allowed to ask leading questions but is traditionally limited to matters covered on direct examination and to credibility issues. — Also termed cross-interrogation. — cross-examine, vb. Cf. DIRECT EXAMINATION; RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION.

cross-interrogatory. See INTERROGATORY.

cross-licensing. Patents. The act, by two or more license holders, of exchanging licenses so that each may use or benefit from the other's patent.

cross-marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

cross-offer, n. Contracts. An offer made to another in ignorance that the offeree has made the same offer to the offeror. — cross-offer, vb. — cross-offerer, n.

cross-purchase buy-sell agreement. 1. BUY-SELL AGREEMENT (1). 2. A partnership insurance plan in which each partner individually buys and maintains enough insurance on the life or lives of other partners to purchase a deceased or expelled partner's equity.

cross-question. See QUESTION (1).

cross-rate. The exchange rate between two currencies expressed as the ratio of two foreign exchange rates in terms of a common third currency (usu. the U.S. dollar). • Foreign-exchange-rate dealers use cross-rate tables to look for arbitrage opportunities. See ARBITRAGE.

cross-remainder. See REMAINDER.

Crown. See KING.

Crown case. English law. A criminal action.

Crown Court. An English court having jurisdiction over major criminal cases. • Crown Courts date from 1971, when they assumed the criminal jurisdiction of the Assize Courts and all the jurisdiction of the Courts of Quarter Sessions.

crown jewel. A company's most valuable asset, esp. as valued when the company is the subject of a hostile takeover. • A common antitakeover device is for the target company to sell its crown jewel to a third party so that the company will be less attractive to an unfriendly suitor. See SCORCHED-EARTH DEFENSE.

Crown land. See LAND.

Crown loan. See LOAN.

CRT. abbr. CRITICAL RACE THEORY.

cruel and inhumane treatment. A ground for divorce consisting in unjustifiably abusive conduct by one spouse toward the other.

cruel and unusual punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

cruelty. The intentional and malicious infliction of mental or physical suffering on a living creature, esp. a human; abusive treatment; outrage.

cruelty to animals. A malicious or criminally negligent act that causes an animal to suffer pain or death.

extreme cruelty. As a ground for divorce, one spouse's physical violence toward the other spouse, or conduct that destroys or severely impairs the other spouse's mental health.

legal cruelty. Cruelty that will justify granting a divorce to the injured party; specif., conduct by one spouse that endangers the life, person, or health of the other spouse, or creates a reasonable apprehension of bodily or mental harm.

mental cruelty. As a ground for divorce, one spouse's course of conduct that creates such anguish that it endangers the life, physical health, or mental health of the other spouse. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

physical cruelty. As a ground for divorce, actual personal violence committed by one spouse against the other.

cruelty to a child. See child abuse under ABUSE.

cruelty to children. See child abuse under ABUSE.

cry de pais (kri də pay). [Law French] Hist. The cry of the country. • The hue and cry after an offender, as raised by the country (i.e., the people). — Also spelled cri de pais. See HUE AND CRY (1).

cryer. See CRIER.

CSV. See cash surrender value under VALUE.

c.t.a. See administration cum testamento annexo under ADMINISTRATION.

cucking stool. See CASTIGATORY.

cui ante divortium (ki [or kwI or kwee] an-tee də-vor-shee-əm). [Law Latin "to whom before divorce"] Hist. A writ of entry enabling a divorced woman to recover land that she had held in fee but that her husband had sold without her permission during the marriage. • The name of this writ derives from the words within it: cui ipsa ante divortium inter eos celebratum, contradicere non potuit ("whom she, before the divorce between them, could not gainsay"). The writ was abolished in 1833. — Also termed sur cui ante divortium.

cui in vita (kɪ [or kwɪ or kweɪ] in vɪ-tə). [Law Latin "to whom in the life"] Hist. A writ of entry enabling a woman to recover land that she had held in fee but that her deceased husband had sold without her permission. • It is so called from the words of the writ: cui ipsa in vita sua contradicere non potuit ("whom she, in his lifetime, could not gainsay"). — Also termed sur cui in vita.

"Cui in vita, is a writ of entry, which a Widow hath against him, to whom her Husband alienated her Lands or Tenements in his life time, which must specifie, that During his life, she could not withstand it." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

culpa (kəl-pə). [Latin] Roman & civil law. Fault, neglect, or negligence; unintentional wrong. See NEGLIGENCE. Cf. CASUS; DOLUS.

lata culpa (lay-tə kəl-pə). [Latin "grave fault"] Gross negligence. • This phrase occurs most commonly in bailment law and in the law of the transport of persons. — Also termed culpa lata. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

levis culpa (lee-vis kəl-pə). [Latin "slight fault"] Ordinary negligence. — Also termed culpa levis. See ordinary negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

levissima culpa (lə-vis-ə-mə kəl-pə). [Latin "the slightest fault"] Slight negligence. — Also termed culpa levissima. See slight negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

culpabilis (kəl-pay-bə-lis), adj. [Latin] Hist. Guilty.

culpability (kəl-pə-bil-ə-tee), n. Blameworthiness; the quality of being culpable. • Except in cases of absolute liability, criminal culpability requires a showing that the person acted purposely, knowingly, recklessly, or negligently with respect to each material element of the offense.

"The concept of culpability is used as a reference point to assess the defendant's guilt and punishment even though, in the two contexts, culpability denotes different aspects of the defendant and the murder. At the guilt phase, culpability is most often used to refer to the state of mind that the defendant must possess. Also at the guilt phase, culpability may reflect a broader judgment about the defendant: when he is culpable for his conduct, it means that he is blameworthy and deserves punishment. At the punishment phase, the concept of culpability stands as the benchmark for when the death penalty is an appropriate punishment." Phyllis L. Crocker, Con- cepts of Culpability and Deathworthiness, 66 Fordham L. Rev. 21, 35–36 (1997).

culpable (kəl-pə-bəl), adj. 1. Guilty; blameworthy. 2. Involving the breach of a duty.

culpable accident. See ACCIDENT.

culpable intoxication. See voluntary intoxication under INTOXICATION.

culpable neglect. See NEGLIGENCE.

culpable negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

culpa-in-contraendo doctrine. [Law Latin "fault in contracting"] The principle that parties must act in good faith during preliminary contract negotiations; esp., the principle that a breach by the offeror after the offeree has begun performance of a unilateral contract and is stopped by the offeror before completion will give rise to liability in tort.

culpa lata. See lata culpa under CULPA.

culpa levis. See levis culpa under CULPA.

culpa levissima. See levissima culpa under CULPA.

culprit. 1. A person accused or charged with the commission of a crime. 2. A person who is guilty of a crime. • Culprit may be a running together of cul, shortened from the Latin culpabilis ("guilty"), and prīt, from Old French prest ("ready"), two words formerly used to orally plead at the outset of a criminal case.

"When the prisoner hath thus pleaded not guilty, non culpabilis . . . the clerk of the assise, or clerk of the arraigns, on behalf of the crown replies, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove him so. This is done by two monosyllables in the same spirit of abbreviation, 'cul. prīt.' which signifies first that the prisoner is guilty, (cul. culpable, or culpabilis) and then that the king is ready to prove him so; prīt, praesto sum, or paratus verificare . . . How our courts came to express a matter of this importance in so odd and obscure a manner . . . can hardly be pronounced with certainty. It may perhaps, however, be accounted for by supposing that these were at first short notes, to help the memory of the clerk, and remind him what he was to reply; or else it was the short method of taking down in court, upon the minutes, the replication and averment; 'cul. prīt': which afterwards the ignorance of succeeding clerks adopted for the very words to be by them spoken. But however it may have arisen, the joining of issue . . . seems to be clearly the meaning of this obscure expression; which has puzzled our most ingenious etymologists, and is commonly understood as if the clerk of the ar-rains, immediately on plea pleaded, had fixed an opprobrious name on the prisoner, by asking him, 'culprit, how wilt thou be tried?' " 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 333-34 (1769).

cultural agreement. Int'l law. A bilateral or multilateral agreement between nations for the purpose of furthering cultural or intellectual relations.

cultural property. Int'l law. Movable and immovable property that has cultural significance, whether in the nature of antiquities and monuments of a classical age or important modern items of fine arts, decorative arts, and architecture. • Some writers prefer the term cultural heritage, which more broadly includes intangible cultural things such as folklore, crafts, and skills.

cum dividend. With dividend. • Stocks purchased cum dividend entitle the buyer to any pending declared dividends. Cf. EX DIVIDEND.

cum grano salis (kəm gray-noh say-lis or kuum grah-noh sah-lis). [Latin] With a grain of salt; with allowance for exaggeration; with reservations.

cum onere (kəm on-ə-ree). [Latin] With the burden. • An item acquired cum onere is taken subject to existing burdens and charges.

cum pertinentiis (kəm pər-tə-nen-shee-is). [Latin] With the appurtenances.

cum rights. With rights. • A cum rights purchaser of stock is entitled to rights that have been declared but not distributed, such as the right to purchase additional shares at a stated price. — Also termed rights on.

cum testamento annexo (kəm tes-tə-men-toh ə-nek-soh). See administration cum testamento annexo under ADMINISTRATION.

cumulative dividend. See DIVIDEND.

cumulative-effects doctrine. The rule that a transaction affecting interstate commerce in a trivial way may be taken together with other similar transactions to establish that the combined effect on interstate commerce is not trivial and can therefore be regulated under the Commerce Clause.

cumulative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

cumulative legacies. See LEGACY.

cumulative offense. See OFFENSE (1).

cumulative preference share. See cumulative preferred stock under STOCK.

cumulative preferred stock. See STOCK.

cumulative punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

cumulative remedy. See REMEDY.

cumulative sentences. See consecutive sentences under SENTENCE.

cumulative stock. See cumulative preferred stock under STOCK.

cumulative testimony. See TESTIMONY.

cumulative-to-the-extent-earned dividend. See DIVIDEND.

cumulative traverse. See TRAVERSE.

cumulative voting. See VOTING.

cumulative zoning. See ZONING.

CUPOS. abbr. Cohabiting unmarried person of the opposite sex. • Although this term is intended to be synonymous with POSSLQ (a person of the opposite sex sharing living quarters), it is more literally precise because it excludes married persons. See POSSLQ.

cur. abbr. CURIA (3).

cura (kyoor-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. A guardianship that protects the interests of youths (from puberty to the age of 25) or incapacitated persons. Cf. TUTELA. Pl. curae.

"Cura was a form of guardianship indicated by the necessities of the case, with respect to persons who, though sui juris, were in need of protection. It was not regarded as a substitute for patria potestas as tutela was. . . . It extended to the person as well as the property, and in the latter respect is much the same as in the case of the tutela of infants." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 122 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

cura furiosi (kyoor-ə fyoor-ee-oh-si). A guardianship for a person who was completely incapacitated from all acts.

"The cura furiosi empowered and bound the curator to manage the property of the lunatic on the lunatic's behalf." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 492 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

cura minorum (kyoor-ə mi-nor-əm). A guardianship for a minor whose capacity of action was complete.

cura prodigi (kyoor-ə prah-də-jī). A guardianship for a person whose capacity of action was imperfect.

"The cura prodigi differed from the cura furiosi in that the prodigus, unlike the furiosus, was himself capable of performing any act by which he acquired a right or benefit. The appointment of a curator, however, precluded the prodigus from performing any act which operated to alienate property or to subject him to a liability; any such act, in order to be effectual, had to be concluded either by the curator on behalf of the prodigus or by the prodigus with the approval of the curator." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 492 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

cur. adv. vult. abbr. CURIA ADVISARI VULT.

curate (kyuur-it). Eccles. law. 1. A person in charge of a parish; a pastor. 2. A member of the clergy who receives a stipend or salary to assist a vicar, rector, or pastor; an assistant to a parish priest.

curatio (kyə-ray-shee-oh). [fr. Latin cura "care"] Roman law. 1. The power or duty of managing the property of a youth or incompetent person. 2. The office of a curator. See CURA.

curative admissibility. See ADMISSIBILITY.

curative-admissibility doctrine. The rule that otherwise inadmissible evidence will be admitted to rebut inadmissible evidence placed before the fact-finder by the adverse party. ● The doctrine applies when a motion to strike cannot cure the prejudice created by the adverse party.

curative instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

curator (kyuur-ə-tər or kyuur-ay-tər or kyuur-ray-tər), n. 1. Roman law. A person who manages the affairs of another; a guardian. See CURA.

"One of the very oldest monuments of Roman legislation ... placed all free males who were of full years and rights under the temporary control of new class of guardians, called Curatores, whose sanction was required to validate their acts or contracts." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 134 (17th ed. 1901).

curator ad litem (kyuur-ray-tər ad lī-təm). A curator appointed by a court to represent the interests of a youth or incapacitated person during the proceedings before the court.

curator bonorum (kyuur-ray-tər bə-nor-əm). A person appointed by a court to administer the estate of an insolvent person.

2. A temporary guardian or conservator appointed by a court to care for the property or person of a minor or incapacitated person.

interim curator. Hist. A person appointed by a justice of the peace to hold a felon's property until a royal administrator could be assigned the task.

3. Civil law. A guardian who manages the estate of a minor, an absent person, or an incapacitated person. Pl. curatores.

curator ad hoc (kyuur-ray-tər ad hok). A court-appointed curator who manages a single matter or transaction; a special guardian.

curatorship. The office of a curator or guardian.

curatrix (kyuur-ray-triks). Archaic. A female curator.

cure, vb. 1. To remove legal defects or correct legal errors. ● For example, curing title involves removing defects from title to unmarketable land so that title becomes marketable. 2. The right of a seller under the UCC to correct a nonconforming delivery of goods, usu. within the contract period. — curative, adj.

cure by verdict. See AIDER BY VERDICT.

curfew (kər-fyoo). 1. Hist. A law requiring that all fires be extinguished at a certain time in the evening, usu. announced by the ringing of a bell. 2. A regulation that forbids people (or certain classes of them) from being outdoors between certain hours.

curia (kyoor-ee-ə). [Latin] 1. Roman law. One of 30 divisions (three tribes of ten curiae) into which the Roman people were said to be divided by Romulus. 2. Roman law. A legislative gathering, esp. of the Roman Senate; the building used for the assembly. Cf. comitia curiata under COMITIA. 3. Hist. A judicial tribunal held in the sovereign's palace; a royal court. — Abbr. cur. 4. Hist. A court. 5. The papal court, including its functionaries and officials.

"The word curia in classical Latin is used in a number of ways. Apparently, it meant at first a subdivision of the people. It was also used, by a transfer which is not too clear, for the building in which the Roman Senate met. By an almost inevitable development it became the word for the Senate itself and later the ordinary designation for the Council in municipalities of the later Empire . . . How much of this was still recalled in Medieval times, we cannot tell, but . . . in the early Middle Ages, curia was a common word to describe both the groups of men who generally were found in attendance on pope, emperor, king or prince, and the groups which were summoned by him to give him counsel. The curia in the latter sense, however, was not really a casual group of persons, summoned spasmodically to advise the king or any other person. It had come to be in Feudal Europe the ordinary Latin word for the general meeting of the lord's vassals, which itself grew out of the Germanic mot or thing . . . The Curia of the king was in theory a larger and more important example of the same kind of assemblage." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 46-48 (1936).

curia admiralitatis (kyoor-ee-ə ad-mə-rəl-ə-tay-tis). [Law Latin] See HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

curia advisari vult (kyoor-ee-ə ad-və-sair-ī-vəlt). [Latin] The court will be advised; the court will consider. • This phrase signaled a court's decision to delay judgment pending further consideration. In England, the phrase is still used in all Court of Appeal decisions when the judgment is reserved; that is, not delivered after the hearing. — Abbr. cur. adv. vult; c.a.v.

curia baronis (kyoor-ee-ə bə-roh-nis). [Law Latin] See COURT BARON.

curia burgi (kyoor-ee-ə bər-ji). See COURT OF HUSTINGS.

curia cancellaria. See CANCELLARIA.

curia christianitatis (kyoor-ee-ə kris-tee-an-ə-tay-tis). [Law Latin] See COURT CHRISTIAN.

curia claudenda (kyoor-ee-ə klaw-den-də). See DE CURIA CLAUDENDA.

curia comitatus (kyoor-ee-ə kom-ə-tay-təs). [Law Latin] See COUNTY COURT.

curia domini (kyoor-ee-ə dom-ə-nī). [Law Latin "lord's court"] Hist. A lord's house or hall, used as a meeting place for tenants during court sessions.

curia magna (kyoor-ee-ə mag-nə). [Law Latin "great court"] Hist. An ancient name for Parliament.

curia palatii (kyoor-ee-ə pə-lay-shee-ī). [Law Latin "court of the palace"] PALACE COURT.

curia regis (kyoor-ee-ə ree-jis). [Latin "king's court"] Hist. (usu. cap.) The chief court in early Norman England, established by William the Conqueror. • The curia regis was a body of advisers who traveled with the king, advising him on political matters and acting as an appellate court in important or complicated cases. Over time the functions of the curia regis became exclusively judicial in nature. — Also termed King's Court; aula regis. — Abbr. C.R.

"[W]e are tempted to use terms which are more precise than those that were current in the twelfth century. In particular we are wont to speak of the Curia Regis without remembering that the definite article is not in our documents. Any court held in the king's name by the king's delegates is Curia Regis. Thus the institution of what in course of time will be a new tribunal, a Court of King's Bench or a Court of Common Pleas, may be found in some small rearrangement, some petty technical change, which at the moment passes unnoticed." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 153 (2d ed. 1898).

"The focal point of royal government was the curia regis (king's court), the body of advisers and courtiers who attended the king and supervised the administration of the realm. It was not a specific court of law, any more than the eyre was, but rather was the descendant of the Anglo-Saxon witengemot (meeting with the witan, or royal advisers) and the ancestor of the king's council which later subdivided into parliament and the privy council." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 20 (3d ed. 1990).

curing title. The act of removing defects from a land title to make it marketable.

currency. An item (such as a coin, government note, or banknote) that circulates as a medium of exchange. See LEGAL TENDER.

blocked currency. Currency or bank deposits that, by government restriction, may be used only within the country where they are located.

fractional currency. Paper money worth less than one dollar; esp., the currency issued by the federal government from 1863 to 1876.

hard currency. Currency backed by reserves, esp. gold and silver reserves.

postal currency. A fractional currency bearing a facsimile of postage stamps during the Civil War.

soft currency. Currency not backed by reserves and therefore subject to sharp fluctuations in value.

United States currency. Currency issued under the authority of the federal government.

currency swap. See SWAP.

current account. See open account under ACCOUNT.

current asset. See ASSET.

current-cost accounting. A method of measuring assets in terms of replacement cost. • This approach accounts for inflation by recognizing price changes in a company's assets and restating the assets in terms of their current cost.

current expense. See operating expense under EXPENSE.

current funds. See FUNDS (2).

current income. See INCOME.

current liabilities. See short-term debt under DEBT.

current liability. See LIABILITY.

current market value. The price at which an asset can be sold within the present accounting period.

current money. See MONEY.

current obligation. See OBLIGATION.

current revenue. See current income under INCOME.

current wages. See WAGE.

current yield. See YIELD.

currit quattuor pedibus (kær-it kwah-too-ær ped-æ-bæs). [Law Latin] It runs on four feet; it runs on all fours. See ON ALL FOURS.

cursor (kær-sæ-tær). Hist. A chancery clerk responsible for making out original writs. • Cursor derives from the writs de cursu that the clerks wrote out.

cursor baron. Hist. An officer of the Court of Exchequer with administrative, but not judicial, duties. • Over time, as the Barons of the Exchequer took on more judicial rather than fiscal duties, the need for someone with financial experience became apparent. So in 1610 a cursor baron was appointed to sit alongside the judges. The office was abolished in 1856.

cursor (kær-sær). Eccles. law. An inferior officer of the papal court.

curtesy (kær-tæ-see). At common law, a husband's right, upon his wife's death, to a life estate in the land that his wife owned during their marriage, assuming that a child was born alive to the couple. • This right has been largely abolished. Traditionally, the full phrase was estate by the curtesy of England. Cf. DOWER.

curtesy consummate (kær-tæ-see kæn-søm-it). The interest the husband has in his wife's estate after her death.

curtesy initiate (kær-tæ-see i-nish-ee-it). The interest the husband has in his wife's estate after the birth of issue capable of inheriting, and before the death of the wife.

curtilage (kær-tæ-lij). The land or yard adjoining a house, usu. within an enclosure. • Under the Fourth Amendment, the curtilage is an area usu. protected from warrantless searches. See OPEN-FIELDS DOCTRINE. Cf. MESSUAGE.

curtiles terrae (kær-ti-leez ter-ee). [Law Latin] COURT LANDS.

curtillium (kær-til-ee-əm). [Law Latin] CURTILAGE.

cushion. See EQUITY (7).

cushion bond. See BOND (3).

custode admittendo (kæ-stoh-dee ad-mi-ten-doh). See DE CUSTODE ADMITTENDO.

custode amovendo (kæ-stoh-dee ay-moh-ven-doh). See DE CUSTODE AMOVENDO.

custodes libertatis angliae auctoritate parliamenti (kæ-stoh-deez lib-ær-tay-tis ang-lee-ee awk-tor-æ-tay-tee parl-[y]æ-men-ti). [Latin] Hist. Guardians of the liberty of England by the authority of Parliament. • The style of all writs and judicial process that issued during the period between the execution of Charles I (January 1649) and the proclamation of Oliver Cromwell as Lord Protector (December 1653).

custodes pacis (kæ-stoh-deez pay-sis). [Latin] Hist. Guardians (or conservators) of the peace. See PEACE OFFICER.

custodial account. See ACCOUNT.

custodia legis. See IN CUSTODIA LEGIS.

custodial interrogation. See INTERROGATION.

custodial trust. See TRUST.

custodian, n. 1. A person or institution that has charge or custody of property, papers, or other valuables; GUARDIAN. 2. Bankruptcy. A prepetition agent who has taken charge of any asset belonging to the debtor. 11 USCA § 101(11). — custodianship, n.

custodian bank. See BANK.

custodia terrae et haeredis. See DE CUSTODIA TERRAE ET HAEREDIS.

custody, n. 1. The care and control of a thing or person for inspection, preservation, or security.

constructive custody. Custody of a person (such as a parolee or probationer) whose freedom is controlled by legal authority but who is not under direct physical control.

penal custody. Custody intended to punish a criminal offender.

physical custody. Custody of a person (such as an arrestee) whose freedom is directly controlled and limited.

preventive custody. Custody intended to prevent further dangerous or criminal behavior.

protective custody. The government's confinement of a person for that person's own security or well-being, such as a witness whose safety is in jeopardy or an incompetent person who may harm others.

2. The care, control, and maintenance of a child awarded by a court to a relative, usu. one of the parents, in a divorce or separation proceeding. — Also termed managing conservatorship; legal custody.

divided custody. An arrangement by which each parent has custody and full control of and responsibility for the child part of the time, with reciprocal visitation rights.

joint custody. An arrangement by which both parents share the responsibility for and authority over the child at all times. — Also termed shared custody.

"The statutes, and the cases as well, differ over the definition of joint custody. It is most often defined as meaning only that both parents will share in the decisions concerning the child's care, education, religion, medical treatment and general welfare." Homer H. Clark, Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States § 19.5, at 815 (2d ed. 1988).

physical custody. The right to have the child live with the person awarded custody by the court.

shared custody. See joint custody.

sole custody. An arrangement by which one parent has full control and responsibility to the exclusion of the other.

3. The detention of a person by virtue of lawful process or authority. — Also termed legal custody. — custodial, adj.

custody hearing. A judicial examination of the facts relating to parental custody in a divorce or separation proceeding.

custody of the law. The condition of property or a person being under the control of legal authority (as a court or law officer). See IN CUSTODIA LEGIS.

custom, n. 1. A practice that by its common adoption and long, unvarying habit has come to have the force of law. See USAGE.

conventional custom. A custom that operates only indirectly through the medium of agreements, so that it is accepted and adopted in individual instances as conventional law between the parties to those agreements. — Also termed usage. See USAGE.

general custom. 1. A custom that prevails throughout a country and constitutes one of the sources of the law of the land. 2. A custom that businesses recognize and follow. See trade usage under USAGE.

legal custom. A custom that operates as a binding rule of law, independently of any agreement on the part of those subject to it. — Often shortened to custom.

local custom. A custom that prevails in some defined locality only, such as a city or county, and constitutes a source of law for that place only. — Also termed particular custom; special custom.

2. (pl.) Duties imposed on imports or exports. 3. (pl.) The agency or procedure for collecting such duties. — customary (for sense 1), adj.

custom and usage. General rules and practices that have become generally adopted through unvarying habit and common use. Cf. CUSTOM (1); USAGE.

customary, n. A record of all the established legal and quasi-legal practices within a community.

customary court baron. See COURT BARON.

customary dispatch. See DISPATCH.

customary estate. See COPYHOLD.

customary freehold. See COPYHOLD.

customary international law. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

customary interpretation. See INTERPRETATION.

customary law. Law consisting of customs that are accepted as legal requirements or obligatory rules of conduct; practices and beliefs that are so vital and intrinsic a part of a social and economic system that they are treated as if they were laws. — Also termed consuetudinary law.

“In contrast with the statute, customary law may be said to exemplify implicit law. Let us, therefore, describe customary law in terms that will reveal to the maximum this quality of implicitness. A custom is not declared or enacted, but grows or develops through time. The date when it first came into full effect can usually be assigned only within broad limits. Though we may be able to describe in general the class of persons among whom the custom has come to prevail as a standard of conduct, it has no definite author; there is no person or defined human agency we can praise or blame for its being good or bad. There is no authoritative verbal declaration of the terms of the custom; it expresses itself not in a succession of words, but in a course of conduct.” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 71 (1968).

customary seisin. See quasi seisin under SEISIN.

customary tenant. See TENANT.

customer's goods. See GOODS.

customer's man. See registered representative under REPRESENTATIVE.

customer's person. See registered representative under REPRESENTATIVE.

customhouse. A building or office, esp. at a port, where duties or customs are collected and where ships are cleared for entering or leaving the port. — Also termed customshouse.

customhouse broker. See BROKER.

custom of York. See YORK, CUSTOM OF.

Customs and Patent Appeals, Court of. See COURT OF CUSTOMS AND PATENT APPEALS.

customs broker. See customhouse broker under BROKER.

Customs Cooperation Council. A specialized intergovernmental organization for the study of customs questions. • Established in 1952, the Council has its headquarters in Brussels. — Abbr. CCC.

Customs Court, U.S. See UNITED STATES CUSTOMS COURT.

customs duty. See DUTY (4).

customs frontier. Int'l law. The territorial boundary at which a country imposes customs duties.

customs union. Int'l law. A combination of two or more countries within a single customs area with a common external tariff, though each participating country remains politically independent. • The effect is that tariffs originally levied on the traffic of goods between those countries are abolished or else successively dismantled according to an agreed-upon scheme, and that common tariffs are imposed on imports from nonmembers.

custos (kæs-tahs also kæs-tæs). [Latin] Hist. A keeper, protector, or guardian.

Custos Brevium (kæs-tahs bree-vee-əm). [Law Latin “keeper of the writs”] Hist. A clerk who receives and files the writs returnable to the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas. • The office was abolished in 1837. — Also termed Keeper of the Briefs.

custos maris (kæs-tahs mar-is). [Law Latin “warden of the sea”] Hist. A high-ranking naval officer; an admiral. — Also termed seaward, seward.

custos morum (kæs-tahs mor-əm) [Law Latin] Custodian of morals <H.L.A. Hart believed that courts should not be seen as the custos morum>. • This name was sometimes used in reference to the Court of King's Bench.

“[H]e [Viscount Simonds] approved the assertion of Lord Mansfield two centuries before that the Court of King's Bench was the custos morum of the people and had the superintendency of offences contra bonos mores.” Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 88 (1968).

custos placitorum coronae (kəs-tahs plas-ə-tor-əm kə-roh-nee). [Law Latin] See CORONATOR.

Custos Rotulorum (kəs-tahs roch-yə-lor-əm or rot-yə-lor-əm). [Law Latin “keeper of the pleas of the Crown”] Hist. The principal justice of the peace in a county, responsible for the rolls of the county sessions of the peace. — Also termed Keeper of the Rolls.

Custos Sigilli. See KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL.

custos spiritualium (kəs-tahs spir-i-choo-ay-lee-əm or -tyoo-ay-lee-əm). [Law Latin “keeper of the spiritualities”] Eccles. law. A member of the clergy responsible for a diocese’s spiritual jurisdiction during the vacancy of the see.

custos terrae (kəs-tahs ter-ee). [Law Latin “keeper of the land”] Hist. Guardian, warden, or keeper of the land.

custuma (kəs-chə-mə or kəs-tyə-mə). [French coutum “toll” or “tribute”] Hist. A duty or impost.

cutpurse. Hist. A person who steals by cutting purses; a pickpocket.

CVA. abbr. UNITED STATES COURT OF VETERANS APPEALS.

CVSG. abbr. A call for the view of the Solicitor General — an invitation from the U.S. Supreme Court for the Solicitor General’s views on a pending petition for writ of certiorari in a case in which, though the government is not a party, governmental interests are involved.

Cwth. abbr. COMMONWEALTH (4).

cyberlaw (si-bər-law). The field of law dealing with computers and the Internet, including such issues as intellectual-property rights, freedom of expression, and free access to information.

cybersquatting. The act of reserving a domain name on the Internet, esp. a name that would be associated with a company’s trademark, and then seeking to profit by selling or licensing the name to the company that has an interest in being identified with it.

cyberstalking. The act of threatening, harassing, or annoying someone through multiple e-mail messages, as through the Internet, esp.

with the intent of placing the recipient in fear that an illegal act or an injury will be inflicted on the recipient or a member of the recipient’s family or household.

cybertheft. The act of using an online computer service, such as one on the Internet, to steal someone else’s property or to interfere with someone else’s use and enjoyment of property. ● Examples of cybertheft are hacking into a bank’s computer records to wrongfully credit one account and debit another, and interfering with a copyright by wrongfully sending protected material over the Internet.

cyclical (si-klə-kəl or sik-lə-kəl), adj. (Of a stock or an industry) characterized by large price swings that occur because of government policy, economic conditions, and seasonal changes.

cy pres (see pray also si). [Law French “as near as”] The equitable doctrine under which a court reforms a written instrument with a gift to charity as closely to the donor’s intention as possible, so that the gift does not fail. ● Courts use cy pres esp. in construing charitable gifts when the donor’s original charitable purpose cannot be fulfilled. Cf. DOCTRINE OF APPROXIMATION.

“The cy pres doctrine has been much discussed, if not a little severely criticised, and in many cases misunderstood. . . . The cy pres doctrine is one under which Courts of Chancery act, when a gift for charitable uses cannot be applied according to the exact intention of the donor. In such cases the courts will apply the gift, as nearly as possible (cy pres) in conformity with the presumed general intention of the donor; for it is an established maxim in the interpretation of wills, that a court is bound to carry the will into effect if it can see a general intention consistent with the rules of law, even if the particular mode or manner pointed out by the testator cannot be followed.” George T. Bispham, The Principles of Equity § 104, at 113–14 (11th ed. 1931).

“Although the reason for the adoption of the cy pres rule by the English chancery court in the middle ages is not known, various hypotheses as to the motives of the court have been suggested. The most plausible theory is that the chancellors, being ecclesiastics and trained in Roman law, resurrected this civil law doctrine in order to save gifts made for religious purposes and thereby subject the property to church control. Justification for the use of the doctrine was laid on the shoulders of the donor, the idea being that since the object of the testator in donating the money to charity was to obtain an advantageous position in the kingdom of heaven, he ought not to be frustrated in this desire because of an unexpected or unforeseen failure.” Edith L. Fisch, The Cy Pres Doctrine in the United States 4 (1950).

cyrographum (si-roh-rə-fəm). [Law Latin] See CHIROGRAPH (2).

D

D. abbr. 1. DISTRICT. 2. DEFENDANT. 3. DIGEST.

D.A. abbr. 1. DISTRICT ATTORNEY. 2. See deposit account under ACCOUNT.

dactylography (dak-tə-log-rə-fee), n. The scientific study of fingerprints as a method of identification. — dactylographic (dak-til-ə-graf-ik), adj.

dailia. See DALUS.

dailus. See DALUS.

daily balance. The final daily accounting for a day on which interest is to be accrued or paid.

average daily balance. The average amount of money in an account (such as a bank account or credit-card account) during a given period. • This amount serves as the basis for computing interest or a finance charge for the period.

daily newspaper. See NEWSPAPER.

daisy chain. A series of purchases and sales of the same stock by a small group of securities dealers attempting to drive up the stock's price to attract unsuspecting buyers' interest. • Once the buyers have invested (i.e., are caught up in the chain), the traders sell for a quick profit, leaving the buyers with overpriced stock. This practice is illegal.

dalus (day-ləs), n. [Law Latin "a dale"] Hist. 1. A dale; a ditch. 2. A measure of land being a thin strip of pasture between two plowed furrows. — Also termed dailus; dailia.

damage, adj. Of or relating to monetary compensation for loss or injury to a person or property  . — Also termed damages . Cf. DAMAGES.

damage, n. Loss or injury to person or property <actionable damage resulting from negligence>.

damage-cleer (dam-ij kleer), n. [fr. Latin damna clericorum "clerk's compensation"] Hist. A set fee payable by a plaintiff to the Court of the Common Pleas, King's Bench, or Exchequer before execution on an award of damages. • The fee — later abolished by statute — was originally a gratuity to the court clerks for preparing special pleadings. — Also spelled damage cleere. — Also termed damna clericorum.

"Damage cleere, damna clericorum, was assessed by the tenth part in the common pleas, and by the twentieth part in the king's bench and exchequer, of all damages, exceeding five marks, recovered either by verdict, confession, or judgment of the court, in all actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, battery, false imprisonment, dower, and all others, wherein the damages were uncertain, which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary, or chief officer of that court, wherein they were recovered before he could have execution for them. But this is taken away by 17 Car. 2, c. 6." Termes de la Ley 141 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

damage feasant (dam-ij fez-ənt or fee-zənt), n. [fr. French faisant dommage] Hist. Doing damage. • This phrase usu. refers to injury to a person's land caused by another person's animals trespassing on the property and eating the crops or treading the grass. By law, the owner of the damaged property could distrain and impound the animals until compensated by the animals' owner. But the impounder had to feed the animals and could not sell or harm them. The term was introduced during the reign of Edward III. — Also spelled damage faisant. — Also termed damnum facientes.

damage rule. See LEGAL-INJURY RULE.

damages, n. pl. Money claimed by, or ordered to be paid to, a person as compensation for loss or injury <the plaintiff seeks $8,000 in damages from the defendant>. — damage, adj.

"Damages are the sum of money which a person wronged is entitled to receive from the wrongdoer as compensation for the wrong." Frank Gahan, The Law of Damages 1 (1936).

accumulative damages. Statutory damages allowed in addition to amounts available under the common law. — Also termed enhanced damages.

actual damages. An amount awarded to a complainant to compensate for a proven injury or loss; damages that repay actual losses. — Also termed compensatory damages.

added damages. See punitive damages.

additional damages. Damages usu. provided by statute in addition to direct damages. • Additional damages can include expenses resulting from the injury, consequential damages, or punitive damages.

benefit-of-the-bargain damages. Damages that a breaching party to a contract must pay to the aggrieved party, equal to the amounts that the aggrieved party would have received, including profits, if the contract had been fully performed.

compensatory damages (kəm-pen-sə-tor-ee). 1. Damages sufficient in amount to indemnify the injured person for the loss suffered. — Often shortened to compensatories. 2. See actual damages.

consequential damages. Losses that do not flow directly and immediately from an injurious act, but that result indirectly from the act.

continuing damages. 1. Damages arising from the same injury. 2. Damages arising from the repetition of similar acts within a definite period.

damages for lost expectations. See expectation damages.

damages ultra (əl-trə). Additional damages claimed by a plaintiff who is not satisfied with the amounts the defendant paid into court.

direct damages. See general damages.

discretionary damages. Damages (such as mental anguish or pain and suffering) that are not definitive but are measurable by the enlightened conscience of an impartial juror.

double damages. Damages that, by statute, are twice the amount that the fact-finder determines is owed, or twice the amount of actual damages awarded. • In some cases, double damages are awarded in addition to actual damages, so the effect is the same as treble damages.

enhanced damages. 1. See accumulative damages. 2. Patents. Damages for patent infringement in an amount up to three times that of compensatory damages, at the discretion of the court, based on the egregiousness of the defendant's conduct, including the willfulness of the infringement.

estimated damages. See liquidated damages.

excess damages. Damages awarded to an insured — beyond the coverage provided by an insurance policy — because the insurer did not settle the claim within policy limits. • If the insurer acted in bad faith in not settling, the insured may have a claim to recover the excess damages from the insurer. — Also termed excess-liability damages.

excessive damages. A jury award that grossly exceeds the amount warranted by law based on the facts and circumstances of the case; unreasonable or outrageous damages, which are subject to reduction by remittitur. See REMITTITUR.

exemplary damages. See punitive damages.

expectation damages. Compensation awarded for the loss of what a person reasonably anticipated from a transaction that was not completed. — Also termed expectancy damages; loss-of-bargain damages; lost-expectation damages; damages for lost expectations.

“[I]f a person contracts to buy a new car, and then changes his mind overnight and cancels the contract, the seller is in principle entitled to recover his anticipated profit on the transaction even though he has not, at the time of the cancellation, done anything whatever in pursuance of the contract. A person who books a room in a hotel would in theory be liable to pay for the hotel's loss of profit even though he cancels in sufficient time for the hotel to be able to relet the room, so long only as the room in fact remains unlet because there are no takers. Damages of this kind are often called damages for lost expectations, or 'expectation damages', or 'loss of bargain damages'.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 310 (3d ed. 1981).

fee damages. Damages awarded to the owner of abutting property for injury caused by the construction and operation of an elevated railroad. • The term is used because the damage is to the property owner's easements of light, air, and access, which are parts of the fee.

foreseeable damages. Damages that a breaching party knew or should have been aware of when the contract was made.

future damages. Money awarded to an injured party for an injury's residual or projected effects that reduce the person's ability to function. • Examples are expected pain and suffering, loss or impairment of earning capacity, and projected medical expenses.

general damages. Damages that the law presumes follow from the type of wrong complained of. • General damages do not need to be specifically claimed or proved to have been sustained. — Also termed direct damages; necessary damages.

hedonic damages (hi-don-ik). Damages that attempt to compensate the loss of the pleasure of being alive. • Such damages are not allowed in most jurisdictions.

imaginary damages. See punitive damages.

inadequate damages. Damages insufficient to fully and fairly compensate the parties; damages bearing no reasonable relation to the plaintiff's injuries, indicating prejudice, mistake, or other fact to support setting aside a jury's verdict.

incidental damages. 1. Losses reasonably associated with or related to actual damages. 2. A seller's commercially reasonable expenses incurred in stopping delivery or in transporting and caring for goods after a buyer's breach. UCC § 2-710. 3. A buyer's expenses reasonably incurred in caring for goods after a seller's breach. UCC § 2-715(1).

"What are incidental damages? The Code does not define incidental damages; rather 2-715(1) lists many expenses that are included as incidental damages. However, Comment 1 to 2-715 stresses that those listed 'are not intended to be exhaustive' but are merely illustrative of the typical kinds of incidental expenses that can be recovered under 2-715: (1) those associated with rightful rejection (for instance, inspection and storage); (2) those associated with a proper revocation of acceptance; and (3) those involved in effecting cover." 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 10-3, at 561-62 (4th ed. 1995).

irreparable damages (i-rep-ə-rə-bəl). Damages that cannot be easily ascertained because there is no fixed pecuniary standard of measurement, e.g., damages for a repeated public nuisance.

land damages. See just compensation under COMPENSATION.

lawful damages. Those damages fixed by law and ascertained in a court of law.

liquidated damages. An amount contractually stipulated as a reasonable estimation of actual damages to be recovered by one party if the other party breaches. • If the parties to a contract have agreed on liquidated damages, the sum fixed is the measure of damages for a breach, whether it exceeds or falls short of the actual damages. — Also termed stipulated damages; estimated damages. See LIQUIDATED-DAMAGES CLAUSE. Cf. unliquidated damages; PENALTY CLAUSE.

"Where the terms of a contract specify a sum payable for non-performance, it is a question of construction whether this sum is to be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages. The difference in effect is this: The amount recoverable in case of a penalty is not the sum named, but the damage actually incurred. The amount recoverable as liquidated damages is the sum named as such. In construing these terms a judge will not accept the phraseology of the parties; they may call the sum specified 'liquidated damages,' but if the judge finds it to be a penalty, he will treat it as such." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 470 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"The distinction between a penalty and genuine liquidated damages, as they are called, is not always easy to apply, but the Courts have made the task simpler by laying down certain guiding principles. In the first place, if the sum payable is so large as to be far in excess of the probable damage on breach, it is almost certainly a penalty. Secondly, if the same sum is expressed to be payable on any one of a number of different breaches of varying importance, it is again probably a penalty, because it is extremely unlikely that the same damage would be caused by these varying breaches. Thirdly, where a sum is expressed to be payable on a certain date, and a further sum in the event of default being made, this latter sum is prima facie a penalty, because mere delay in payment is unlikely to cause damage. Finally, it is to be noted that the mere use of the words 'liquidated damages' is not decisive, for it is the task of the Court and not of the parties to decide the true nature of the sum payable." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 316-17 (3d ed. 1981).

loss-of-bargain damages. See expectation damages.

lost-expectation damages. See expectation damages.

moratory damages (mor-ə-tor-ee or mahr-). Civil law. Damages for a delay in performing an obligation. • There must be a default before these damages can be recovered, while compensatory damages are recoverable for both a failure of performance and for a defective performance.

multiple damages. Statutory damages (such as double or treble damages) that are a multiple of the amount that the fact-finder determines to be owed. — Also termed multiplied damages. See double damages; treble damages.

"[T]he statutory multiple damages differ from the common law punitive damages in that punitive damages involved no fixed sum or limit. The fixed limit of multiple damages not only reduces their threat to the defendant and the potential for abuse, it also reduces the possibility of a measured deterrence. Likewise, because the enhancement of the award is fixed by the statutory multiple, there is no occasion for introducing evidence of the defendant's wealth as there is in the case of common law punitive damages Perhaps a more important distinction is that multiple damages statutes may be enacted for entirely non-punitive purposes. Specifically, some double or treble damages statutes, and also specified 'civil penalties,' are intended to provide a kind of liquidated damages for actual losses that cannot be proved or that are otherwise unrecognized by the law." Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies § 3.12, at 359 (2d ed. 1993).

necessary damages. See general damages.

nominal damages. A trifling sum awarded when a legal injury is suffered but when there is no substantial loss or injury to be compensated. Cf. substantial damages.

“Nominal damages are damages awarded for the infringement of a legal right, where the extent of the loss is not shown, or where the right is one not dependent upon loss or damage, as in the case of rights of bodily immunity or rights to have one’s material property undisturbed by direct invasion. The award of nominal damages is made as a judicial declaration that the plaintiff’s right has been violated.” Charles T. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Damages § 20, at 85 (1935).

particular damages. See special damages.

pecuniary damages (pə-kyoo-nee-er-ee). Damages that can be estimated and monetarily compensated. • Although this phrase appears in many old cases, it is now widely considered a redundancy — since damages are always pecuniary.

presumptive damages. See punitive damages.

prospective damages. Future damages that, based on the facts pleaded and proved by the plaintiff, can reasonably be expected to occur.

proximate damages. Damages directly, immediately, and naturally flowing from the act complained of. Cf. speculative damages (1).

punitive damages. Damages awarded in addition to actual damages when the defendant acted with recklessness, malice, or deceit. • Punitive damages, which are intended to punish and thereby deter blameworthy conduct, are generally not recoverable for breach of contract. The Supreme Court has held that three guidelines help determine whether a punitive-damages award violates constitutional due process: (1) the reprehensibility of the conduct being punished; (2) the reasonableness of the relationship between the harm and the award; and (3) the difference between the award and the civil penalties authorized in comparable cases. BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589 (1996). — Also termed exemplary damages; vindictive damages; punitory damages; presumptive damages; added damages; aggravated damages; speculative damages; imaginary damages; smart money; punies.

reliance damages. Damages awarded for losses incurred by the plaintiff in reliance on the contract.

“Reliance damages are . . . ‘real’ losses in a much more tangible way than losses of expectations. The distinction is nicely illustrated by McRae v. Commonwealth Disposals Commission. . . . In this case, . . . the defendants sold a shipwrecked tanker which they advertised as lying on a certain reef in the Pacific, and the plaintiffs spent a substantial sum of money equipping a salvage expedition to go in search of the ship. The ship was wholly nonexistent, and the plaintiffs were held entitled to damages. Here it was clear that the plaintiffs had incurred substantial expenses — real losses — in reliance on the contract, and the Australian High Court awarded these reliance damages to the plaintiffs.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 311 (3d ed. 1981).

reliance-loss damages. A reimbursement for losses or expenses that the plaintiff suffers in reliance on the defendant’s contractual promise that has been breached.

remote damages. See speculative damages (1).

rescissory damages (ri-sis-ə-ree or ri-siz-). Damages contemplated to restore a plaintiff to the position occupied before the defendant’s wrongful acts. • An award of rescissory damages may mean returning property to the original owner or, if that is not possible, paying the owner the monetary value of the property.

restitution damages. Damages awarded to a plaintiff when the defendant has been unjustly enriched at the plaintiff’s expense.

“Suppose A pays money to B in pursuance of a contract which turns out to be void, or perhaps is subsequently frustrated: clearly A cannot sue B for breach of contract. B’s promise to perform his side of the bargain is vitiated by the mistake or the frustrating event, so A’s lost expectations are losses which he must just put up with. But his claim to repayment of the money is evidently much stronger: for this money is a tangible loss to A and a tangible enrichment to B. So in this sort of case the money will often be recoverable, though English lawyers think of this as a quasi-contractual claim to recover money as on a total failure of consideration, and not a contractual claim to restitution damages. There is, however, no strong reason for refusing to call this a contractual action, any more than there is a reason for calling an action for damages quasi-contractual.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 312 (3d ed. 1981).

severance damages. In a condemnation case, damages awarded to a property owner for diminution in the fair market value of land as a result of severance from the land of the property actually condemned; compensation awarded to a landowner for the loss in value of the tract that remains after a partial taking of the land.

special damages. Damages that are alleged to have been sustained in the circumstances of a particular wrong. • To be awardable, special damages must be specifically claimed and proved. — Also termed particular damages.

speculative damages. 1. Damages that are so uncertain that they will not be awarded. — statutory damages. Damages provided by statute (such as a wrongful death and survival statute), as distinguished from damages provided under the common law.

Also termed remote damages. 2. See punitive damages.

stipulated damages. See liquidated damages.

substantial damages. A considerable sum awarded to compensate for a significant loss or injury. Cf. nominal damages.

"Substantial damages . . . are the result of an effort at measured compensation, and are to be contrasted with nominal damages which are in no sense compensatory, but merely symbolic." Charles T. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Damages § 20, at 85 (1935).

temporary damages. Damages allowed for an intermittent or occasional wrong, such as a real-property injury whose cause can be removed or abated.

treble damages. Damages that, by statute, are three times the amount that the factfinder determines is owed. — Also termed triple damages.

uncertain damages. Damages that are not clearly the result of a wrong. • The rule against allowing recovery of uncertain damages refers to these damages, not damages that are uncertain only in amount.

unliquidated damages. Damages that have been established by a verdict or award but cannot be determined by a fixed formula, so they are left to the discretion of the judge or jury. Cf. liquidated damages.

vindictive damages. See punitive damages.

damages, mitigation of. See MITIGATION-OF-DAMAGES DOCTRINE.

damages for detention. See noncontract demurrage under DEMURRAGE.

damages for lost expectations. See expectation damages under DAMAGES.

damages ultra. See DAMAGES.

dame. 1. The legal title of the wife of a knight or baronet. 2. The female equivalent of a knight. 3. A form of address to a woman of high rank. 4. A matron. 5. Slang. A woman. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) domina.

damna (dam-nə), n. [fr. Latin damnum "damage; loss"] Hist. 1. Damages, exclusive of costs. 2. Damages, inclusive of costs. 3. The abbreviation of damna clericorum, the Latin equivalent to damage-cleer, being a portion of damages constituting the clerk's fee. See DAMAGE-CLEER.

damna clericorum (dam-nə kler-ə-kor-əm), n. See DAMAGE-CLEER.

damnatus (dam-nay-təs). [fr. Latin damnare "to condemn"] 1. Roman law. A person condemned, esp. in a capital case. 2. Hist. Something prohibited by law; something that is unlawful, as in damnatus coitus ("unlawful sexual connection").

damn-fool doctrine. Insurance. The principle that an insurer may deny (esp. liability) coverage when an insured engages in behavior that is so ill-conceived that the insurer should not be compelled to bear the loss resulting from the insured's actions. — Also termed damned-fool doctrine.

"The 'damn foolish acts' concept is not a perfect predictor of judicial decisions, both because of its own imprecision and because other considerations, such as a desire to assure an innocent third party a source of indemnification, may influence a court. However, especially when . . . the insured who acted foolishly has sufficient resources to provide compensation to the injured persons, analysis of a coverage issue on the basis of a 'damn fool' doctrine is frequently a very effective approach both to predicting and to understanding outcomes." Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law: A Guide to Fundamental Principles, Legal Doctrines, and Commercial Practices § 5.4, at 541 (1988).

damnification, n. Something that causes damage <damnification in the form of a penalty>.

damnify, vb. To cause loss or damage to; to injure <the surety was damnified by the judgment obtained against it>.

damni injuriae actio (dam-nI in-joor-ee-ee ak-shee-oh), n. [Latin "an action for wrongful damage"] Roman law. A person's right to sue someone who wrongfully injured or killed that person's slave or beast or wrongfully inflicted loss in some other way.

damnosa hereditas (dam-noh-sə hə-red-i-tas), n. [Latin "a losing inheritance"] 1. Roman & civil law. An inheritance more onerous than beneficial, esp. because it is burdened with debt. 2. English law. Property of a bankrupt that creditors will disclaim under the bankruptcy laws because income from the property will exceed revenues. 3. Generally, anything that is acquired but turns out to be disadvantageous. — Also spelled damnosa haereditas.

damnum (dam-nəm), n. [Latin] A loss; damage suffered. Pl. damna. See AD DAMNUM.

damnum emergens (dam-nəm i-mər-jenz), n. [Latin “damage arising”] Roman law. An actual realized loss (such as a decline in the value of property) as opposed to an expected future loss (such as loss of profit).

“These kinds of damage are distinguished by the commentators as damnum emergens and lucrum cessans, which may be rendered ‘positive damage’ and ‘loss of profit.’ The first may be immediate (e.g., my slave is killed or has lost an eye), or consequential (I have lost his services — I have incurred medical expenses — he was one of a troupe of singers and the whole troupe is less valuable in consequence of his death or injury). Where there is no pecuniary loss there is no action. An action does not lie . . . for striking a slave if his value to me has not been depreciated by the blow nor for trespass to land unattended by damage.” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 394 (4th ed. 1956).

damnum fatale (dam-nəm fə-tay-lee), n. [Latin “accidental damage”] Roman law. Damage caused by an unavoidable circumstance, such as a storm or a shipwreck, for which bailees or others will not be held liable. • But an exception was made for damages resulting from theft.

“The liability of innkeepers, carriers, and stable keepers, at Roman law, was provided for in the praetor’s edict. They were under an obligation to restore all goods which the guests or passengers had with them, or left in their charge, and they could not defend themselves by showing the utmost degree of diligence. Unavoidable accident, which no human prudence would avert or provide against, damnum fatale, or overwhelming force, vis maior, were, however, an adequate defense It was particularly noted that theft by a third person would not be permitted as a defense and the reason assigned was the fact that travelers have scarcely any chance to protect themselves against collusion between the innkeeper and the thief.” Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 254 (1927).

damnum infectum (dam-nəm in-fek-təm). [Latin] Roman law. Loss not yet suffered but threatened or apprehended, as when a neighbor’s building is about to collapse onto one’s property.

damnum injuria datum (dam-nəm in-joor-ee-ə day-təm). [Latin] Roman law. The willful or negligent damage to corporeal property.

damnum sine injuria (dam-nəm si-nee in-joor-ee-ə or sin-ay). [Latin “damage without wrongful act”] Loss or harm for which there is no legal remedy. — Also termed damnum absque injuria. Cf. INJURIA ABSQUE DAMNO.

“There are cases in which the law will suffer a man knowingly and wilfully to inflict harm upon another, and will not hold him accountable for it. Harm of this description — mischief that is not wrongful because it does not fulfil even the material conditions of responsibility — is called damnum sine injuria, the term injuria being here used in its true sense of an act contrary to law (in jus), not in its modern and corrupt sense of harm.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 372–73 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

“There are many forms of harm of which the law takes no account. Damage so done and suffered is called damnum sine injuria, and the reasons for its permission by the law are various and not capable of exhaustive statement. For example, the harm done may be caused by some person who is merely exercising his own rights; as in the case of the loss inflicted on individual traders by competition in trade, or where the damage is done by a man acting under necessity to prevent a greater evil.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 13 (17th ed. 1977).

Dan (dan), n. [fr. Latin dominus] Archaic. In England, an honorable title for a man; the English equivalent to the Spanish Don. • The term evolved into the terms Master, Mister, and Sir.

D & O liability insurance. See directors’ and officers’ liability insurance under INSURANCE.

danelaw (dayn-law). Hist. 1. A system of rules, introduced by the Danes during their invasions of England primarily in the ninth century and maintained principally in the midland and eastern counties where the invasions occurred. • Danelaw was the prevailing law in these regions from the reign of King Edgar to Edward the Confessor, who compiled a uniform law that included some Danelaw components. 2. The counties in England where the Danish law was enforced primarily in the ninth and tenth centuries — Also termed danelage; lex Danorum.

“The Danish invasions of the ninth century subjected the eastern parts of the island to new Scandinavian influences. Where the Danes conquered, their ‘Danelaw’ prevailed. The very word ‘law’ is believed to have been given to the English language by the Danes.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 3 (3d ed. 1990).

danger. 1. Peril; exposure to harm, loss, pain, or other negative result. 2. A cause of peril; a menace.

apparent danger. 1. Obvious danger; real danger. 2. Criminal law. The danger resulting from a person's overt demonstration of the intent to seriously injure or kill another, making it necessary for the threatened person to kill the offender. See SELF-DEFENSE.

deterrent danger. An obvious danger that an occupier of land creates to discourage trespassers, such as a barbed-wire fence or spikes on the top of a wall.

imminent danger. 1. An immediate, real threat to one's safety that justifies the use of force in self-defense. 2. Criminal law. The danger resulting from an immediate threatened injury sufficient to cause a reasonable and prudent person to defend himself or herself.

retributive danger. A concealed danger that an occupier of land creates to injure trespassers. • A retributive danger is lawful only to the extent that it could be justified if the occupier had inflicted the injury personally or directly to the trespasser. Thus, a spring gun or a landmine is an unlawful means of defending land against a trespasser.

unavoidable danger. 1. Inescapable danger. 2. A danger that is unpreventable, esp. by a person operating a vessel.

danger-creation doctrine. The theory that if a state's affirmative conduct places a person in jeopardy, then the state may be liable for the harm inflicted on that person by a third party. • This is an exception to the general principle that the state is not liable for an injury that a third party inflicts on a member of the public. — Also termed danger-creation exception. Cf. SPECIAL-RELATIONSHIP DOCTRINE.

dangeria, n. Hist. Payment by forest tenants to the lord so that they can plow and sow in time of mast feeding by swine in the forest.

danger-invites-rescue doctrine. The principle holding a defendant liable not only for injuries to the person that the defendant has imperiled, but also for injuries that a third person receives while trying to rescue the imperiled person.

"Danger invites rescue. The cry of distress is the summons to relief. The law does not ignore these reactions of the mind in tracing conduct to its consequences. It recognizes them as normal. It places their effects within the range of the natural and probable. The wrong that imperils life is a wrong to the imperiled victim; it is a wrong also to his rescuer The railroad company whose train approaches without signal is a wrongdoer toward the traveler surprised between the rails, but a wrongdoer also to the bystander who drags him from the path The emergency begets the man. The wrongdoer may not have foreseen the coming of a deliverer. He is accountable as if he had." Wagner v. International Ry. Co., 133 N.E. 437, 437-38 (N.Y. 1921).

danger of navigation. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

danger of river. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

dangerous, adj. 1. (Of a condition, situation, etc.) perilous; hazardous; unsafe . 2. (Of a person, an object, etc.) likely to cause serious bodily harm  .

dangerous condition. See CONDITION (5).

dangerous criminal. See CRIMINAL.

dangerous drug. See DRUG.

dangerous instrumentality. An instrument, substance, or condition so inherently dangerous that it may cause serious bodily injury or death without human use or interference. • It may serve as the basis for strict liability. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE. Cf. deadly weapon under WEAPON.

dangerous-propensity test. See DANGEROUS-TENDENCY TEST.

dangerous-proximity test. Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, focusing on whether the defendant is dangerously close to completing the offense. • Factors include the gravity of the potential crime, the apprehension of the victim, and the uncertainty of the crime's occurrence. See ATTEMPT (2).

dangerous situation. Under the last-clear-chance doctrine, the circumstance in which a plaintiff operating a motor vehicle has reached a position (as on the path of an oncoming train) that cannot be escaped by the exercise of ordinary care. — Also termed situation of danger. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

dangerous-tendency test. A propensity of a person or animal to inflict injury. • The test is used, esp. in dog-bite cases, to determine whether an owner will be held liable for injuries caused by the owner's animal. — Also termed dangerous-propensity test.

dangerous weapon. See WEAPON.

danger-utility test. See RISK-UTILITY TEST.

danism (dan-iz-əm), n. [fr. Greek daneismos "a loan"] Hist. The lending of money on usury.

Darden hearing. Criminal procedure. An ex parte proceeding to determine whether disclosure of an informer's identity is pertinent to establishing probable cause when there is otherwise insufficient evidence to establish probable cause apart from the arresting officer's testimony about an informer's communications. • The defense attorney may be excluded from the hearing but can usu. submit questions to be used by the judge in the examination. People v. Darden, 313 N.E.2d 49 (N.Y. 1974).

dare (dair-ee), vb. [Latin "to give"] Roman law.
1. To give; to transfer (something, esp. property). • The transfer can be made to discharge a debt, to create an obligation, or to make a gift.
2. To appoint a representative.

dare ad remanentiam (dair-ee ad rem-ə-nen-shee-əm), vb. [Latin "to give in fee or forever"] To transfer (esp. a remainder) in fee or forever.

darraign (də-rayn), vb. [fr. Latin derationare; fr. French disrener] Hist. 1. To displace; to disarrange. 2. To respond to an accusation; to settle a dispute. — Also spelled deraign; derayne.

darrein (dar-ayn), adj. [fr. French dernier "the last"] The last, as in darrein presentment ("the last presentment"). See DARREIN CONTINUANCE; ASSIZE OF DARREIN PRESENTMENT.

darrein continuance (dar-ayn kən-tin-yoo-ənts), n. [fr. French dernier continuance "the last continuance"] Hist. Every plea of a new matter after the last entry of a plea on the record. • Every entry of a pleading after the first pleading on the record was called a continuance. — Also spelled dareyne continuance.

darrein presentment (dar-ayn pri-zent-mənt), n. See ASSIZE OF DARREIN PRESENTMENT.

darrein seisin (dar-ayn see-zin), n. [French "last seisin"] Hist. A tenant's plea in a writ of right. See SEISIN.

date. 1. The day when an event happened or will happen <date of trial>. 2. A period of time in general <at a later date>. 3. An appointment at a specified time <no dates are available>.

date of bankruptcy. The date when a court declares a person to be bankrupt; the date of bankruptcy adjudication. • This date may coincide with the voluntary-filing date.

date of cleavage. The filing date of a voluntary-bankruptcy petition. • With a few exceptions, only the debts existing at this time are dischargeable.

date of injury. The inception date of an injury; the date of an accident causing an injury.

date of issue. 1. Commercial law. An arbitrary date (for notes, bonds, and other documents in a series) fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run; the date that a stock or bond bears on its face, not the date on which it is actually signed, delivered, or put into circulation. • When a bond is delivered to a purchaser, it is considered "issued." But this concept is distinguishable from the "date of issue," which remains fixed, regardless of the date of sale or delivery. 2. Insurance. The date specified in the policy as the "date of issue," not the date on which the policy is executed or delivered, and regardless of other dates that may be specified in the policy or elsewhere, such as the date that the policy is to "take effect."

date of maturity. The date when a debt falls due, such as a debt on a promissory note or bond.

declaration date. The date when corporate directors declare a dividend. Cf. DIVIDEND DATE; EX-DIVIDEND DATE.

dividend date. See DIVIDEND DATE.

payable date. The official date on which shareholder dividends or distributions become payable. — Also termed record date.

payment date. The date on which stock dividends or interest checks are paid to shareholders.

record date. The date on which a stockholder must own shares to be entitled to vote or receive a dividend. — Also termed date of record. See EX-DIVIDEND DATE.

settlement date. 1. The date on which an investor must pay the broker for securities purchased. 2. The date on which a seller must deliver negotiable certificates for securities sold.

submission date. 1. The date that a case is to be submitted to a court for determination. 2. The date on which an investor must pay the broker for securities purchased. 3. The date on which a seller must deliver negotiable certificates for securities sold.

date certain. A fixed or appointed day; a specified day, esp. a date fixed by an instrument such as a deed. — Also termed (in French law) date certaine (dat sair-tayn).

date of bankruptcy. See DATE.

date of cleavage. See DATE.

date of injury. See DATE.

date of issue. See DATE.

datio (day-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin dare “to give”] Roman law. 1. An act of giving, as in datio in solutum (“giving in payment”). 2. An appointment, as in datio tutoris (“appointment of a guardian”).

datio in solutum (day-shee-oh in sə-l[y]oō-təm). Roman law. The discharging of an obligation by the giving and acceptance of something other than the thing due.

dation (day-shən), n. [fr. Latin dare “to give”] Civil law. A grant of something the recipient is actually entitled to, such as an office.

dation en paiement (day-shən in pay-mənt or da-syon ahn pay-mon), n. [French “a giving in payment”] Civil law. 1. An exchange of something instead of money to satisfy a debt. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION. 2. A method of satisfying a mortgage debt by transferring the mortgaged property when the mortgage exceeds the property’s value and the mortgage-holder is willing to accept the property in satisfaction of the debt. • Dation en paiement requires court approval after petition and notice.

dative (day-tiv), n. [fr. French datif “of giving”] 1. Roman & civil law. An appointment made by judicial or magisterial authority; esp., something granted that is not provided by law or a will. • In Scotland, an executor-dative is a court-appointed executor. 2. Hist. Something that can be given or retracted at will, such as an appointment to a nonperpetual office. — Also spelled datif.

datum (day-təm), n. [fr. Latin dare “to give”] 1. A piece of information. 2. Hist. Something given or executed. 3. A date.

Daubert hearing (daw-bərt or doh-ber). A hearing conducted by federal district courts, usu. before trial, to determine whether proposed expert testimony meets the federal requirements for relevance and reliability, as clarified by the Supreme Court in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786 (1993). See DAUBERT TEST.

Daubert test. A method that federal district courts use to determine whether expert testimony is admissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, which generally requires that expert testimony consist of scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge that will assist the fact-finder in understanding the evidence or determining a fact in issue. • In its role as “gatekeeper” of the evidence, the trial court must decide whether the proposed expert testimony meets the requirements of relevance and reliability. The court applies the test outside the jury’s presence, usu. during a pretrial Daubert hearing. At the hearing, the proponent must show that the expert’s underlying reasoning or methodology, and its application to the facts, are scientifically valid. In ruling on admissibility, the court considers a flexible list of factors, including (1) whether the theory can be or has been tested, (2) whether the theory has been subjected to peer review or publication, (3) the theory’s known or potential rate of error and whether there are standards that control its operation, and (4) the degree to which the relevant scientific community has accepted the theory. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786 (1993). The Supreme Court has held that similar scrutiny must be applied to nonscientific expert testimony. Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 119 S.Ct. 1167 (1999). Variations of the Daubert test are applied in the trial courts of most states. See scientific knowledge under KNOWLEDGE.

daughter. 1. A parent’s female child. 2. A female descendant. 3. A female child in a parent-child relationship.

daughter-in-law. The wife of one’s son.

Davis-Bacon Act. A federal law originally enacted in 1931 to regulate the minimum-wage rates payable to employees of federal public-works projects. 40 USCA § 276a.

day. 1. Any 24-hour period; the time it takes the earth to revolve once on its axis <we have a day to prepare a mandamus petition>. 2. The period between the rising and the setting of the sun <day or night>. — Also termed natural day. 3. Sunlight <we can see it in the day>. 4. The period when the sun is above the horizon, along with the period in the early morning and late evening when a person's face is discernible. 5. Any specified time period, esp. as distinguished from other periods <the good old days> . — Also termed (in senses 2, 3, and 4) daytime. Cf. NIGHT.

adjournment day. 1. The day on which an organization, such as a court or legislature, adjourns. 2. Hist. A later day appointed by the judges at regular sittings at nisi prius to try an issue of fact not then ready for trial.

adjournment day in error. Hist. A day scheduled for completion of matters not finished on the affirmance day of the term.

affirmance day general. Hist. In the Court of Exchequer, a day appointed after the beginning of every term to affirm or reverse judgments.

answer day. The last day for a defendant to file and serve a responsive pleading in a lawsuit. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a defendant generally must serve an answer (1) within 20 days after being served with the summons and complaint, or (2) if a defendant timely waives service at the plaintiff's request, within 60 days after the request for waiver was sent. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d), 12(a). — Also termed answer date; appearance date; appearance day.

artificial day. The period from the rising to the setting of the sun. — Also termed solar day; dies solaris.

astronomical day. See solar day (2).

banking day. See BANKING DAY.

business day. A day that most institutions are open for business, usu. a day on which banks and major stock exchanges are open, excluding Saturdays and Sundays.

calendar day. A consecutive 24-hour day running from midnight to midnight. — Also termed natural day.

common day. In England, an ordinary court day.

court day. A day on which a particular court is open for court business.

dedication day. Hist. A day on which people from several villages gathered in one place to celebrate the feast day of the saint and patron of a church.

entire day. An undivided day, rather than parts of two or more days aggregated to form a 24-hour period. • An entire day must have a legal, fixed, precise time to begin and end. A statute referring to an entire day contemplates a 24-hour period beginning and ending at midnight.

ferial day (feer-ee-əl). Hist. 1. A day free from labor, pleading, and service of process; a holiday. 2. A working day, under a 1449 statute (27 Hen. 6, ch. 5).

quarter day. Hist. One of four days during a year that money owed (such as rent) was legally or customarily payable.

return day. 1. A day on which a defendant must appear in court (as for an arraignment). 2. A day on which a defendant must file an answer. 3. A day on which a proof of service must be returned to court. 4. A day on which a writ of execution must be returned to court. 5. A day specified by law for counting votes in an election. — Also termed return date.

solar day. 1. See artificial day. 2. The 24-hour period from noon to noon. — Also termed astronomical day.

daybook. A merchant's original record of daily transactions.

day in court. 1. The right and opportunity, in a judicial tribunal, to litigate a claim, seek relief, or defend one's rights. 2. The right to be notified and given an opportunity to appear and to be heard when one's case is called.

day loan. See LOAN.

day order. See ORDER (4).

day rule. See DAY WRIT.

days in bank. Particular days set aside by the Court of Common Pleas for specific matters, including the appearance of parties and service of process. — Also termed dies in banco.

"There are in each of these terms stated days called days in bank, dies in banco; that is, days of appearance in the court of common pleas. They are generally at the distance of about a week from each other, and regulated by some festival of the church. On some one of these days in bank all original writs must be made returnable" 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 277 (1768).

daysman (dayz-mən). Hist. 1. An arbitrator; an elected judge; an umpire. 2. A day laborer. — Also spelled deiesman.

dead man's part. Hist. By custom in certain places, the portion of a dead man's estate given to the administrator. • That portion ranged from one-third (if the deceased had a wife and children) to the entire estate amount (if the deceased had no wife or children). — Also termed death's part; (in Scots law) dead's part.

"If the deceased leaves a widow and children, his substance . . . is divided into three parts; one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator: if only a widow, or only children, they shall respectively, in either case, take one moiety, and the administrator the other: if neither widow nor child, the administrator shall have the whole. And this portion, or dead man's part, the administrator was wont to apply to his own use, till the statute I Jac. II. c. 17 declared that the same should be subject to the statute of distributions." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 518 (1766).

dead man's statute. A law prohibiting the admission of a decedent's statement as evidence in certain circumstances, as when an opposing party or witness seeks to use the statement to support a claim against the decedent's estate. — Also termed dead person's statute.

de admensuratione dotis (dee ad-men-s[y]u-ray-shee-oh-nee doh-tis), n. [Law Latin "of the admeasurement of dower"] Hist. A writ available to an heir (or the heir's guardian if the heir is an infant) to reduce the dower of the ancestor's widow who, while the heir was an infant, was assigned more dower than she was entitled to.

"If the heir or his guardian do not assign her dower within the term of quarantine, or do assign it unfairly, she has her remedy at law, and the sheriff is appointed to assign it. Or if the heir (being under age) or his guardian assign more than she ought to have, it may be afterwards remedied by writ of admeasurement of dower." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 136 (1766).

de apostata capiendo (dee ə-pos-tə-tə kap-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin “of the taking of an apostate”] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to apprehend and return to an abbey a person who had entered the abbey, professed the religious order, and then left and wandered around the country.

de arbitratione facto (dee ahr-bi-tray-shee-oh-nee fak-toh), n. [Law Latin “of arbitration had”] Hist. A writ staying an action already settled by arbitration.

de arrestandis bonis ne dissipentur (dee ar-ə-stan-dis boh-nis nee dis-ə-pen-tər), n. [Law Latin “of goods arrested lest they be dispersed”] Hist. A writ to seize goods from a party to ensure that the goods do not disappear while a lawsuit is pending.

de arrestando ipsum qui pecuniam recepit (dee ar-ə-stan-doh ip-səm kwɪ pə-kyoo-nee-əm ri-see-pit), n. [Law Latin “for the apprehension of one who took the king’s money”] Hist. A writ ordering the arrest of a person who took the king’s money for war service, and then hid to keep from serving.

de asportatis religiosorum (dee as-por-tay-tis ri-lij-ee-oh-sor-əm), n. [Law Latin “concerning the property of religious persons carried away”] Hist. A statute of Edward I passed to curb abuses of clerical possessions, including the removal of those possessions to foreign countries.

de assisa proroganda (dee ə-sɪ-zə proh-rə-gan-də), n. [Law Latin “of the proroguing of an assize”] Hist. A writ ordering justices to postpone an assize because a party is busy in the Crown’s service.

death. The ending of life; the cessation of all vital functions and signs. — Also termed decease; demise.

brain death. The bodily condition of showing no response to external stimuli, no spontaneous movements, no breathing, no reflexes, and a flat reading (usu. for a full day) on a machine that measures the brain’s electrical activity. — Also termed legal death.

civil death. See CIVIL DEATH.

immediate death. 1. See instantaneous death. 2. A death occurring within a short time after an injury or seizure, but not instantaneously.

“A distinction has been made between ‘instantaneous’ and ‘immediate’ death As an example of ‘immediate’ rather than ‘instantaneous’ death . . . the situation in which a blow on the head produces unconsciousness and renders the victim incapable of intelligent thought, speech, or action for several minutes until he dies.” 22A Am. Jur. 2d Death § 43, at 159 (1988).

instantaneous death. Death occurring in an instant or within an extremely short time after an injury or seizure. • It is a factor in determining an award of damages for the victim’s pain and suffering. — Sometimes also termed immediate death.

“Although the possibility of a death that is truly simultaneous with the injury that caused it has been denied, it has been pointed out that death may be so contemporaneous with the fatal injury as to be instantaneous in the sense that there could be no recovery for the victim’s pain and suffering. Ordinarily, death is not regarded as instantaneous if an appreciable length of time elapsed between the injury and the death. Indeed, even where the injury causing the death is necessarily fatal and death results therefrom in a few moments, it has been held that although it would commonly be called an instantaneous death, still if the injured person survives the injury for a brief period, it may not be said that the death is instantaneous In such case it is immaterial that the period of time between the injury and death is short.” 22A Am. Jur. 2d Death § 43, at 158 (1988).

legal death. See brain death.

natural death. 1. Bodily death, as opposed to civil death. 2. Death from causes other than accident or violence; death from natural causes. — Also termed mors naturalis. Cf. violent death. See NATURAL-DEATH ACT.

presumptive death. Death inferred from proof of the person’s long, unexplained absence, usu. after seven years.

simultaneous death. The death of two or more persons in the same mishap, under circumstances that make it impossible to determine who died first. See SIMULTANEOUS-DEATH ACT; COMMORIENTES.

violent death. Death accelerated by human intervention and resulting from a sharp blow, explosion, gunfire, or the like. Cf. natural death.

death certificate. An official document issued by a public registry verifying that a person has died, with information such as the date and time of death, the cause of death, and the signature of the attending or examining physician.

death-knell doctrine. A rule allowing an interlocutory appeal if precluding an appeal until final judgment would moot the issue on appeal and irreparably injure the appellant's rights. • Once recognized as an exception to the final-judgment rule, the doctrine was limited by the U.S. Supreme Court in Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 98 S.Ct. 2454 (1978). There, the Court held that the death-knell doctrine does not permit an immediate appeal of an order denying class certification. But the doctrine still applies in some contexts. For example, the doctrine allows an immediate appeal of the denial of a temporary restraining order when the lack of an appeal would leave nothing to be considered in the trial court. Woratzeck v. Arizona Bd. of Executive Clemency, 117 F.3d 400 (9th Cir. 1997). — Also termed death-knell exception. See FINAL-JUDGMENT RULE.

Death on the High Seas Act. A federal law, enacted in 1920, permitting a wrongful-death action to be filed in U.S. district court for a death occurring on the high seas (i.e., seas beyond any state or territory's waters). 46 USCA app. §§ 761-767. — Abbr. DOHSA.

death penalty. 1. State-imposed death as punishment for a serious crime. — Also termed capital punishment. 2. debarment, n. The act of precluding someone from having or doing something; exclusion or hindrance. — debar, vb.

debasement. 1. The act of reducing the value, quality, or purity of something; esp., the act of lowering the value of coins by either reducing the weight of gold and silver in the coins or increasing the coins' alloy amounts. 2. Degradation. 3. The state of being degraded.

debauch (di-bawch), vb. 1. Archaic. To draw (a person) away from duty; to lead (a person) astray. 2. To corrupt (a person) with lewdness; to seduce (someone). 3. To mar or spoil (a person or thing).

debauchery (di-bawch-ə-ree), n. Excessive indulgence in sensual pleasures; sexual immorality or excesses. — debauch, vb.

debellatio (deb-ə-lay-shee-oh). [Latin] Int'l law. A means of ending a war and acquiring territory when one of the belligerent countries has been so soundly defeated that its adversary is able to decide alone the fate of the defeated country's territory; conquest followed by annexation. — Also termed subjugation.

"[There are] three possible alternative meanings of debellatio in international law. The first is that debellatio denotes the change wrought by the conquest and total subjugation of a State together with that State's annexation by the conqueror. The second view is that debellatio corresponds to the total defeat of an enemy State, its occupation, and the elimination of a vital component of Statehood; in this view, debellatio implies the extinction of the old State, but it leaves open the legal future of the occupied territory (annexation or the founding of one or more new States). The third view is that debellatio only describes a factual situation and that even the elimination of all the State organs combined with the occupation of the territory does not exclude the continuing existence of that State. It is mainly the second and the third meanings of debellatio which have been advocated for the situation of Germany since the end of World War II." Karl-Ulrich Meyn, "Debellatio," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 166 (1992).

de bene esse (dee bee-nee es-ee also day ben-ay es-ay), adv. [Law Latin "of well-being"] As conditionally allowed for the present; in anticipation of a future need <Willis's deposition was taken de bene esse>. — Abbr. d.b.e. — de bene esse, adj.

debenture (di-ben-chər). 1. A debt secured only by the debtor's earning power, not by a lien on any specific asset. 2. An instrument acknowledging such a debt. 3. A bond that is backed only by the general credit and financial reputation of the corporate issuer, not by a lien on corporate assets. — Also termed debenture bond; unsecured bond; naked debenture; plain bond. Cf. BOND (3).

convertible debenture. A debenture that the holder may change or convert into some other security, such as stock.

convertible subordinated debenture. A debenture that is subordinate to another debt but can be converted into a different security.

sinking-fund debenture. A debenture that is secured by periodic payments into a fund established to retire long-term debt.

subordinate debenture. A debenture that is subject to the prior payment of ordinary debentures and other indebtedness.

4. English law. A company's security for a monetary loan. • The security usu. creates a charge on company stock or property. 5. A customhouse certificate providing for a refund of the duties on imported goods when the importer reexports the goods rather than selling them in the country where they were imported.

debenture bond. See DEBENTURE (3).

debenture indenture. An indenture containing obligations not secured by a mortgage or other collateral. • It is a long-term financing vehicle that places the debenture holder in substantially the same position as a bondholder secured by a first mortgage.

debenture stock. 1. English law. A type of bond representing money borrowed by a company using its property or other fixed assets as security. 2. Stock that is issued under a contract providing for periodic, fixed payments.

debet et detinet (dee-bet or deb-et et det-i-net or det-ə-nət). [Law Latin] Hist. He owes and detains. • This phrase was used in declarations in actions for debt when the original creditor sued the original debtor. The declaration stated that the defendant "owes to" as well as "detains from" the plaintiff the debt or thing in question; thus, the action was said to be "in the debet et detinet." But if the action was brought against someone other than the original debtor (such as an executor, for a debt due from the testator), then the action was said to be "in the detinet alone." Cf. DETINET.

debet sine breve (dee-bet or deb-et si-nee breev or bree-vee), n. [Law Latin "debt without a writ"] 1. An action for debt commenced under a bill rather than a writ. 2. A debt confessed by judgment. — Abbr. d.s.b. — Also termed debitum sine breve; debit sans breve. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

de bien et de mal (də byen ay də mal). [Law French]. See DE BONO ET MALO.

de biens le mort (də beenz lə mor[t]). [Law French] Hist. Of the goods of the deceased.

de bigamis (dee big-ə-mis), n. [Law Latin "concerning men twice married"] Hist. The statute of 4 Edw. I. st. 3, so called from the opening words of the fifth chapter. See BIGAMUS.

debit. 1. A sum charged as due or owing. 2. In bookkeeping, an entry made on the left side of a ledger or account, noting an increase in assets or a decrease in liabilities. 3. An account balance showing that something remains due to the holder of the account. Cf. CREDIT (6).

debita laicorum (deb-i-tə lay-ə-kor-əm), n. [Law Latin “debts of laity”] Hist. The debts recoverable in civil courts.

debit card. A card used to pay for purchases by electronic transfer from the purchaser’s bank account. Cf. CREDIT CARD.

debitor. Roman law. Someone who has a legal obligation to someone else. Cf. CREDITOR (1).

debitor non praesumitur donare (deb-i-tor non pri-zyoo-mi-tur doh-nair-ee), n. [Law Latin “a debtor is not presumed to make a gift”] Hist. The presumption that any payment from a debtor is intended to satisfy the debt, unless the disposition clearly shows the debtor’s intent to make a donation.

debitrix (deb-ə-triks), n. [Latin] Archaic. Civil law. A female debtor.

debit sans breve. See DEBET SINE BREVE.

debitum (deb-i-təm), n. [Latin] Something owing; a debt. Cf. INDEBITUM.

debitum in praesenti solvendum in futuro (deb-ə-təm in pri-zen-ti sol-ven-dəm in fyoo-t[y]loor-oh). [Latin] A present debt (or obligation) to be paid at a future time; a debt or obligation complete when contracted, but of which the performance cannot be required until some future period.

debitum sine breve. See DEBET SINE BREVE.

de bonis asportatis (dee boh-nis as-pər-tay-tis). See trespass de bonis asportatis under TRESPASS.

de bonis non (dee boh-nis non). See administration de bonis non under ADMINISTRATION.

de bonis non administratis (dee boh-nis non ad-min-ə-stray-tis). [Law Latin] Hist. Of the goods not administered. ● When the first administrator of an intestate estate dies or is removed, the second administrator is called an administrator bonis non, who administers the goods not administered by the previous executor.

de bonis non amovendis (dee boh-nis non ay-moh-ven-dis), n. [Latin “of goods not to be moved”] Hist. A writ directing the sheriffs of London to make sure that a defendant’s goods are not removed while the defendant’s writ of error on a judgment is pending.

de bonis propriis (dee boh-nis proh-pree-is), n. [Law Latin “of his own goods”] Hist. A judgment allowing execution on an administrator’s individual property rather than the property of an estate, as when the administrator mismanages the estate. Cf. DE BONIS TESTATORIS.

de bonis testatoris (dee boh-nis tes-tə-tor-is), n. [Law Latin “of the goods of the testator”] Hist. A judgment awarding execution on a testator’s property, rather than the individual property of an administrator. Cf. DE BONIS PROPRIIS.

de bonis testatoris ac si (dee boh-nis tes-tə-tor-is ak si). [Law Latin “from the goods of the testator if he has any, and if not, from those of the executor”]. Hist. A judgment holding an executor responsible if the testator’s estate is insufficient or if the executor falsifies a pleading as a release.

de bonne memoire (də bawn mem-wahr). [Law French] Of sound mind; of good memory. — Also spelled de bone memorie. See MIND AND MEMORY; COMPOS MENTIS.

de bono et malo (dee boh-noh et mal-oh), n. [Law Latin “for good and evil”] Hist. 1. For good and evil. ● A criminal defendant indicated full submission to the jury’s verdict by placing himself or herself at the jury’s mercy de bono et malo. — Also termed de bien et de mal. 2. A special writ of jail delivery issued by the justices of assize to enable them to try all criminal defendants who were in jail where the court traveled. ● Formerly, the judges were required to issue a separate writ for every prisoner. This was replaced by a general commission of jail delivery.

“[T]hey have . . . a commission of general gaol delivery; which empowers them to try and deliver every prisoner, who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whenever indicted, or for whatever crime committed. It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each particular prisoner, which were called the writs de bono et malo: but, these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. So that, one way or other, the gaols are cleared, and all offenders tried, punished, or delivered, twice in every year: a constitution of singular use and excellence." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 267 (1769).

debt. 1. Liability on a claim; a specific sum of money due by agreement or otherwise <the debt amounted to $2,500>. 2. The aggregate of all existing claims against a person, entity, or state <the bank denied the loan application after analyzing the applicant's outstanding debt>. 3. A nonmonetary thing that one person owes another, such as goods or services <her debt was to supply him with 20 international first-class tickets on the airline of his choice>. 4. A common-law writ by which a court adjudicates claims involving fixed sums of money <he brought suit in debt>. — Also termed (in sense 4) writ of debt.

"The action of debt lies where a party claims the recovery of a debt; that is, a liquidated or certain sum of money due him. The action is based upon contract, but the contract may be implied, either in fact or in law, as well as express; and it may be either a simple contract or a specialty. The most common instances of its use are for debts: (a) Upon unilateral contracts express or implied in fact. (b) Upon quasi-contractual obligations having the force and effect of simple contracts. (c) Upon bonds and covenants under seal. (d) Upon judgments or obligations of record. (e) Upon obligations imposed by statute." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 52, at 132 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

active debt. Civil law. A debt due to another person.

ancestral debt. An ancestor's debt that an heir can be compelled to pay.

antecedent debt. 1. Contracts. An old debt that may serve as consideration for a new promise if the statute of limitations has run on the old debt. See PREEXISTING-DUTY RULE. 2. Bankruptcy. A debtor's prepetition obligation that existed before a debtor's transfer of an interest in property. • For a transfer to be preferential, it must be for or on account of an antecedent debt. See PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

bad debt. A debt that is uncollectible and that may be deductible for tax purposes.

bonded debt. A debt secured by a bond; a business or government debt represented by issued bonds.

community debt. A debt that is chargeable to the community of husband and wife rather than to either individually. See COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

consumer debt. A debt incurred by someone primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose.

"What are 'consumer' debts? Section 101(8) defines a consumer debt as follows: 'consumer debt means debt incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose.' The touchstone is the debtor's use of the money. The nature of the collateral, the business of the creditor and the form of the loan are all irrelevant. A loan of $25,000 from a Credit Union to pay for a child's education is a consumer debt, but the same loan used to finance the opening of an accounting business is not a consumer debt. This is so irrespective of the nature of the collateral put up for the debt." David G. Epstein et al.; Bankruptcy § 7-45, at 579 (1993).

contingent debt. A debt that is not presently fixed but that may become fixed in the future with the occurrence of some event.

convertible debt. A debt whose security may be changed by a creditor into another form of security.

deceit, n. 1. The act of intentionally giving a false impression <the juror's deceit led the lawyer to believe that she was not biased>. 2. A tort arising from a false representation made knowingly or recklessly with the intent that another person should detrimentally rely on it <the new homeowner sued both the seller and the realtor for deceit after discovering termites>. 3. See fraudulent misrepresentation under MISREPRESENTATION. — deceive, vb. See FRAUD; MISREPRESENTATION.

“The tort of deceit consists in the act of making a wilfully false statement with the intent that the plaintiff shall act in reliance on it, and with the result that he does so act and suffers harm in consequence. . . . There are four main elements in this tort: (1) there must be a false representation of fact; (2) the representation must be made with knowledge of its falsity; (3) it must be made with the intention that it should be acted on by the plaintiff, or by a class of persons which includes the plaintiff, in the manner which resulted in damage to him; (4) it must be proved that the plaintiff has acted upon the false statement and has sustained damage by so doing.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 387 (17th ed. 1977).

decem tales (des-em tay-leez), n. [Law Latin “ten such people”] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff to summon ten people for a jury panel when a sufficient number have not already appeared.

decemviri litibus judicandis (di-sem-və-ri li-ti-bəs joo-də-kan-dis), n. [Latin “ten persons to decide lawsuits”] Roman law. A group of five senators and five knights who assisted the elected magistrate in deciding legal disputes.

decenary. Hist. A town or district consisting of ten freeholding families. • A freeholder of the decenary (a decennarius) was bound by frankpledge to produce any wrongdoer living in the decenary. — Also spelled decennary. — Also termed decenna; tithing. Cf. FRANKPLEDGE.

“The civil division of the territory of England is into counties, of those counties into hundreds, of those hundreds into tithings or towns. Which division, as it now stands, seems to owe its original to king Alfred; who, to prevent the rapines and disorders which formerly prevailed in the realm, instituted tithings; so called from the Saxon, because ten freeholders, with their families, composed one. These all dwelt together, and were sureties or free pledges to the king for the good behavior of each other; and, if any offence was committed in their district, they were bound to have the offender forthcoming. And therefore anciently no man was suffered to abide in England above forty days, unless he were enrolled in some tithing or decenary.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 110 (1765).

decency. The state of being proper, as in speech or dress; the quality of being seemly.

decenna (di-sen-ə), n. [fr. Latin decem “ten”] See DECENARY.

decennarius (des-ə-nair-ee-əs), n. [Law Latin “a deciner”] One of ten families of freeholders comprising a decenary. See DECENARY.

decies tantum (desh-ee-eez or dee-shee-eez tan-təm), n. [Law Latin “ten times as much”] Hist. A writ ordering a juror who accepted a bribe for a verdict to pay ten times the bribery amount, half to the suing party and half to the Crown.

“Decies tantum is a writ that lies where a juror in any inquest takes money of the one part or other, to give his verdict; then he shall pay ten times as much as he hath received: and every one that will sue may have this action, and shall have the one half, and the king the other And the same law is of all other actions popular, where one part is to the king, the other to the party that sues. Also the embracers, who procure such inquests, shall be punished in the same manner, and they shall have imprisonment a year. But no justice shall inquire thereof ex officio, but only at the suit of the party.” Termes de la Ley 146 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

decimae (des-ə-mee), n. [fr. Latin decem “ten”] Eccles. law. 1. The tenth part of the annual profits of a benefice originally payable to the Pope, and later to the Crown by 26 Hen. 8, ch. 3.

“The tenths, or decimae, were the tenth part of the annual profit of each living . . . which was also claimed by the holy see But this claim of the pope met with a vigorous resistance from the English parliament; and a variety of acts were passed to prevent and restrain it But the popish clergy, blindly devoted to the will of a foreign master, still kept it on foot; sometimes more secretly, sometimes more openly and avowedly And, as the clergy expressed this willingness to contribute so much of their income to the head of the church, it was thought proper (when in the same reign the papal power was abolished, and the king was declared the head of the church of England) to annex this revenue to the crown” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 274 (1765).

2. Tithes paid to the church, often in grain or wool.

decimation (des-ə-may-shən). 1. A major destruction of people; a great loss of life. 2. Hist. A tithing; a payment of the tenth part. 3. Hist. A punishment, esp. by death, of every tenth person by lot. • Under Roman law, decimatio legionis referred to the execution by lot of every tenth soldier for mutiny or other neglect of duty.

self-serving declaration. An out-of-court statement made to benefit one's own interest.

7. Common-law pleading. The plaintiff's first pleading in a civil action. • It is an amplification of the original writ on which the action is founded, with the additional circumstances of the time and place of injury. In a real action, the declaration is called a count. Today the equivalent term in English law is statement of claim; in most American jurisdictions, it is called a petition or complaint. — Also termed narratio. See COUNT (3). Cf. PLEA (2).

"The declaration is a statement of all material facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action in a methodical and legal form. It consists of the following parts: (a) Statement of title of court. (b) Statement of venue in the margin. (c) The commencement. (d) The body, or statement of the cause of action. (e) The conclusion." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 76, at 192 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

declaration in chief. A declaration for the principal cause of action.

8. A formal, written statement — resembling an affidavit but not notarized or sworn to — that attests, under penalty of perjury, to facts known by the declarant. • Such a declaration, if properly prepared, is admissible in federal court with the same effect as an affidavit. 28 USCA § 1746. — Also termed declaration under penalty of perjury; unsworn declaration under penalty of perjury. Cf. AFFIDAVIT. 9. Int'l law. An oral or written statement, unilaterally made, by which a state expresses its will, intent, or opinion when acting in the field of declaration of no defenses. See WAIVER OF DEFENSES.

declaration of pain. See DECLARATION (6).

Declaration of Paris. An international agreement, signed by Great Britain, France, Turkey, Sardinia, Austria, Prussia, and Russia in 1856 (at the end of the Crimean War), providing that (1) privateering is illegal, (2) with the exception of contraband, a neutral flag covers an enemy's goods, (3) with the exception of contraband, neutral goods cannot be confiscated under a hostile flag, and (4) a blockade must work to be binding. • The agreement was later adopted by most other maritime powers, except the United States and a few others.

"The Declaration of Paris is one of the greatest triumphs won by commercial interests over the strict rules of maritime warfare. Its importance resides in its first three articles. Article 4 did no more than formulate a principle acknowledged for more than a century. Construed strictly it requires an impossibility; for no blockade, however strict, can always 'prevent access to the coast of the enemy.' But it is clear that the words were meant to be understood in a reasonable sense as merely prohibitory of ineffective or 'paper' blockades Article 1 struck at a most objectionable practice. The current of opinion had long been running strongly against the use of privateers. . . . Article 2 . . . has provoked an enormous amount of controversy. Together with Article 3 it amounted to a new departure in the law of maritime capture. Up to 1856 the great naval powers had been divided between the old principle that the liability of goods to capture should be determined by the character of their owner, and the more modern principle . . . that the character of the ship in which the goods were laden should settle their fate." 1 R.H. Inglis Palgrave, Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy 520-21 (Henry Higgs ed., 2d ed. 1925).

declaration of rights. An action in which a litigant requests a court's assistance not because any rights have been violated but because those rights are uncertain. • Examples include suits for a declaration of legitimacy, of nullity of marriage, of the legality or illegality of the conduct of state officers, and of the authoritative interpretation of wills. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT.

declaration of state of mind. See DECLARATION (6).

Declaration of Taking Act. The federal law regulating the government's taking of private property for public use under eminent domain. 40 USCA § 258a. • Fair compensation must be paid for the property.

declaration of trust. See DECLARATION (1).

declaration under penalty of perjury. See DECLARATION (8). declarator of trust (di-klar-ə-tər or di-klair-ə-tər or -tor). A common-law action against a trustee who holds property under a title ex facie for the trustee's own benefit.

declaratory (di-klar-ə-tor-ee or di-klair-), adj.
1. Clearly; manifestly .
2. Explanatory .

declaratory decree. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT.

declaratory judgment. See JUDGMENT.

declaratory-judgment act. A federal or state law permitting parties to bring an action to determine their legal rights and positions regarding a controversy not yet ripe for adjudication, as when an insurance company seeks a determination of coverage before deciding whether to cover a claim. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT.

declaratory part of a law. A portion of a law clearly defining rights to be observed or wrongs to be avoided.

declaratory precedent. See PRECEDENT.

declaratory statute. See STATUTE.

declaratory theory. The belief that judges' decisions never make law but instead merely constitute evidence of what the law is. • This antiquated view — held by such figures as Coke and Blackstone — is no longer accepted.

"There are . . . at least three good reasons why the declaratory theory should have persisted for some time after the modern English doctrine [of precedent] had begun to take shape. In the first place, it appealed to believers in the separation of powers, to whom anything in the nature of judicial legislation would have been anathema. Secondly, it concealed a fact which Bentham was anxious to expose, namely, that judge-made law is retrospective in its effect. If in December a court adjudges that someone is liable, in consequence of his conduct during the previous January, it would certainly appear to be legislating retrospectively, unless the liability is based on an earlier Act of Parliament, or unless the court is simply following a previous decision. A way of disguising the retrospective character of such a judgment would be to maintain the doctrine that the court really was doing no more than state a rule which anyone could have deduced from well-known principles or common usage, for the conduct in question would then have been prohibited by the law as it stood in January. The third reason for the persistence of the declaratory theory may be thought to justify its retention in a revised form today. When confronted with a novel point, judges always tend to speak as though the answer is provided by the common law." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 30 (4th ed. 1991).

de claro die (dee klair-oh di-ee). [Law Latin "by clear day"] By daylight.

de clauso fracto (dee klaw-zoh frak-toh). [Law Latin] Of a breach of close. See CLAUSUM FREGIT.

de contumace capiendo (dee kon-tyə-may-see kap-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin “for arresting a contumacious person”] Hist. A writ issuing out of the Court of Chancery at the request of an ecclesiastical court that has found a person to be in contempt. • This writ came into use after the Ecclesiastical Courts Act of 1813 removed ecclesiastical courts’ power to excommunicate litigants who failed to comply with a court order. Cf. EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO.

“In 1812 the case of Mary Ann Dix — a woman not of age, who was imprisoned for two years on a writ de excommunicato capiendo for not paying costs in a suit for defamation — aroused the Legislature. In the following year it was enacted that excommunication should cease to exist as part of the process of the ecclesiastical courts to enforce appearance, and as a punishment for contempt. . . . [F]or the writ de excommunicato capiendo was substituted the writ de contumace capiendo; and the rules applying to the older writ were made applicable to the new.” 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 632 (7th ed. 1956).

de copia libelli deliberanda (dee koh-pee-ə lib-el-i di-lib-ə-ran-də), n. [Law Latin “for delivering a copy of a libel”] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ ordering an ecclesiastical-court judge (such as the Dean of Arches) to provide the defendant with a copy of the plaintiff’s complaint.

de coronatore eligendo (dee kor-ə-nə-tor-ee el-i-jen-doh), n. [Law Latin “for electing a coroner”] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to call an election of a coroner to fill a vacant office. See CORONER (2).

de coronatore exonerando (dee kor-ə-nə-tor-ee eg-zon-ə-ran-doh), n. [Law Latin “for removing a coroner”] A writ ordering the sheriff to remove a coroner from office for a reason stated in the writ. See CORONER (2).

"The coroner is chosen for life: but may be removed, either by being made sheriff, or chosen verderor, which are offices incompatible with the other; or by the king's writ de coronatore exonerando, for a cause to be therein assigned, as that he is engaged in other business, is incapacitated by years or sickness, hath not a sufficient estate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 336 (1765).

de corpore comitatus (dee kōr-pə-ree kom-ə-tay-təs). [Law Latin] From the body of the county. • This term was esp. used to distinguish a body of the county at large from a smaller area or de vicineto ("from a neighborhood").

de corrodio habendo (dee kə-rōh-dee-oh hā-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin "writ for having a corody"] Hist. A writ to obtain an allowance, esp. of meat or other sustenance, from a religious house for a royal servant living there.

decoy, vb. To entice (a person) without force; to inveigle <the victim was decoyed out of her home> <the defendant was decoyed into the county and then served with process>. Cf. ENTRAPMENT.

decree of nullity. A decree declaring a marriage to be void ab initio. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

decree pro confesso (proh kən-fes-oh). Equity practice. A decree entered in favor of the plaintiff as a result of the defendant's failure to timely respond to the allegations in the plaintiff's bill.

"A decree pro confesso in equity is similar to a default judgment in an action at law. If a defendant in an equity suit fails to answer the plaintiff's petition within the prescribed time period, the bill will be taken pro confesso, and a decree entered in favor of the plaintiff . . . However, whereas a default judgment in an action at law effects an admission of pleaded facts and conclusions of law . . . a decree pro confesso in an equity action admits only the material and well pleaded facts in the petition and does not admit the legal claims upon which the plaintiff seeks relief." 27A Am. Jur. 2d Equity § 249, at 733-34 (1996).

deficiency decree. See deficiency judgment under JUDGMENT.

final decree. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

decreta (di-kree-tə), n. [Latin "decisions"] Roman law. Judgments of magistrates; esp., sentences pronounced by the emperor as the supreme judge. See DECRETUM.

"Decreta. In Roman law decisions of magistrates given after investigation of a case by cognitio . . . and in particular, decisions of the emperor as judge of first instance after trial by cognitio, or as a judge of appeal. As the highest authority in the State the emperor could interpret the law freely and even introduce new principles. Consequently imperial decisions were authoritative interpretations of the law or even innovatory and regarded as statements binding for the future, and as such quoted by the jurists. They were not only communicated to the parties but recorded in the records of the imperial court and private persons might obtain copies of them." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 343 (1980).

decretal (di-kree-təl), adj. Of or relating to a decree.

decretal interdict. See INTERDICT (1).

decretal order. See ORDER (2).

decretals (di-kree-təlz), n. Eccles. law. Canonical epistles written either by the Pope or by the Pope and his cardinals to settle controversial matters; esp., the second part of the Corpus Juris Canonici, canonical epistles consisting mainly of: (1) Decretales Gregorii Noni, a collection by Raymundus Barcinus, chaplain to Gregory IX, dating from about 1227; (2) Decretales Bonifacii Octavi, a collection by Boniface VIII in the year 1298; (3) Clementinae, a collection of Clement V, published in the year 1308; and (4) the Extravagantes, a collection by John XXII and other bishops. — Also (in Law Latin) Decretales. See CANON LAW.

de custode amovendo (dee kə-stoh-dee ay-moh-ven-doh), n. [Law Latin "of removing a guardian"] Hist. A writ to remove a guardian.

de custodia terrae et haeredis (dee kə-stoh-dee-ə ter-ee et her-ə-dis), n. [Law Latin "of right of ward"] Hist. A writ allowing a guardian in a knight's service to obtain custody of an infant ward.

de debito (dee deb-i-toh), n. [Law Latin "of debt"] Hist. A writ of debt. — Sometimes shortened to debito.

de debitore in partes secando (dee deb-i-tor-ee in pahr-teez si-kan-doh), n. [Latin "of cutting a debtor in pieces"] Roman law. The title of a law in the Twelve Tables, meaning either literally to cut a debtor into pieces or merely to divide the debtor's estate. See TWELVE TABLES.

"DE DEBITORE IN PARTES SECANDO . . . [S]ome writers contending for the literal signification, while others have supposed it to be only a figurative expression . . . The latter view has been adopted by Montesquieu, Bynkershoek, Heineccius and Taylor . . . The literal meaning, on the other hand, is advocated by Aulus Gellius and other writers of antiquity, and receives support from an expression (semoto omni cruciatu) in the Roman Code itself . . . This is also the opinion of Gibbon, Gravina, Pothier, Hugo and Niebuhr." 1 Alexander Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 432 (2d ed. 1867).

de deceptione (dee di-sep-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin "of deceit"] Hist. A writ available to a party who was deceived and damaged by someone acting in the party's name.

de deoneranda pro rata portionis (dee de-on-ə-ran-də proh ray-tə por-shee-oh-nis), n. [Law Latin "of the disburdening of a pro rata share"] Hist. A writ for someone who is forced to pay rent that others are supposed to proportionately contribute to.

dedi (dee-dī). [Latin] Hist. I have given. • Dedi is a conveyancing term that implies a warranty of title. Cf. CONCESSI.

"Dedi is a warranty in law to the feoffee and his heirs: as if it be said in a feoffment A. B. hath given and granted, & c. it is a warranty." Termes de la Ley 148 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dedication, n. Property. The donation of land or creation of an easement for public use. — dedicate, vb. — dedicatory, adj.

common-law dedication. A dedication made without a statute, consisting in the owner's appropriation of land, or an easement in it, for the benefit or use of the public, and the acceptance, by or on behalf of the land or easement. — Often shortened to dedication.

dedication by adverse user. A dedication arising from the adverse, exclusive use by the public with the actual or imputed knowledge and acquiescence of the owner.

express dedication. A dedication explicitly manifested by the owner.

implied dedication. A dedication presumed by reasonable inference from the owner's conduct.

statutory dedication. A dedication for which the necessary steps are statutorily prescribed, all of which must be substantially followed for an effective dedication.

tacit dedication. A dedication of property for public use arising from silence or inactivity and without an express agreement.

dedication and reservation. A dedication made with reasonable conditions, restrictions, and limitations.

dedication day. See DAY.

de die in diem (dee dr-ee in dī-em). [Law Latin] From day to day; daily.

dedi et concessi (dee-dī et kən-ses-i). [Law Latin] I have given and conveyed. • These were the words generally used to convey a gift.

dedimus et concessimus (ded-ə-məs et kən-ses-i-məs). [Law Latin] We have given and granted. • These words were used in a conveyance when there was more than one grantor or when the grant was from the Crown.

dedimus potestatem (ded-ə-məs poh-tes-tay-təm). [Law Latin "we have given power"] 1. A commission issuing from the court before which a case is pending, authorizing a person named in the commission to compel the attendance of certain witnesses, to take their testimony on the written interrogatories and cross-interrogatories attached to the commission, to reduce the answers to writing, and to send it sealed to the court issuing the commission. 2. In England, a chancery writ commissioning the persons named in the writ to take certain actions, including administering oaths to defendants and justices of the peace. • The writ was formerly used to commission a person to take action such as acknowledging a fine and appointing an attorney for representation in court. Before the Statute of Westminster (1285), an attorney could not appear on behalf of a party without this writ. — Also termed dedimus potestatem de attorno faciendo.

"Dedimus potestatem is a writ that lies where a man sues in the king's court, or is sued, and cannot well travel, then he shall have this writ directed to some justice, or other discreet person in the country, to give him power to admit some man for his attorney, or to levy a fine, or to take his confession, or his answer, or other examination, as the matter requires." Termes de la Ley 148 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dediticii (ded-i-tish-ee-i or dee-di-ti-shee-i), n. [Latin "those who have surrendered"] Roman law. Enemies who on surrender were granted their freedom or by the Lex Aelia Sentia, slaves (esp. criminals) who on being freed were denied citizenship. • Justinian abolished this status. — Also spelled dedititii.

“Slaves who before manumission had been subjected to degrading punishment (e.g. had been branded or made to fight in the arena) were given, on manumission, a special status, viz. that of enemies surrendered at discretion (dediticii). A dediticius, though free and not a slave, had none of the rights of a citizen, could never under any circumstances better his position (e.g. become a citizen), and was not allowed to live within 100 miles of Rome.” R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 67 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1942).

dedition (di-dish-ən), n. [fr. Latin deditio “give up”] A surrender of something, such as property.

de diversis regulis juris antiqui (dee di-vər-sis reg-yə-lis joor-is an-tri-kwi), n. [Latin “of various rules of ancient law”] Roman law. The last in the collection of Digest titles containing 211 maxims. See DIGEST.

de dolo malo (dee doh-loh mal-oh). [Latin] Of or based on fraud. See ACTIO DE DOLO MALO.

de domo reparanda (dee doh-moh rep-ə-ran-də), n. [Law Latin “to repair a house”] Hist. A writ ordering a cotenant to contribute to the expenses of maintaining common property.

De Donis Conditionalibus (dee doh-nis kən-dish-ee-ə-nal-i-bəs). An English statute, enacted in 1285, that gave rise to the ability to create a fee tail. — Often shortened to De Donis.

“[A]fter De Donis, the formula ‘to A and the heirs of his body’ gave to A an estate known as an estate in fee tail. Because A had no power to transfer an estate in fee simple absolute, it became theoretically possible for persons like O to tie up the ownership of land in a single family for hundreds of years. We say theoretically possible because by 1472 a way would be found for the tenant in tail (as A was called) to transfer an estate in fee simple absolute despite De Donis.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 29 (2d ed. 1984).

de dote assignanda (dee doh-tee as-ig-nan-də), n. [Law Latin “for assigning dower”] Hist. A writ ordering a royal escheater to provide dower to a widow of a tenant holding an estate directly from the Crown.

de dote unde nil habet (dee doh-tee ən-dee nil hay-bet), n. [Law Latin “of dower whereof she has none”] A writ ordering a tenant interfering with a widow’s right to dower to provide a reasonable dower. — Also termed writ of dower.

“DE DOTE UNDE NIL HABET. This is a writ of right in its nature It must be brought by the widow as demandant, against the tenant of the freehold, that is, the heir or his alienee, and its effect is to enable the former to recover from the latter the seisin of a third part of the tenements in demand, to be set forth to her in severalty by metes and bounds, together with damages and costs.” 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 433 (2d ed. 1867).

deductible, adj. Capable of being subtracted, esp. from taxable income. See DEDUCTION (2).

deductible, n. 1. Under an insurance policy, the portion of the loss to be borne by the insured before the insurer becomes liable for payment. Cf. SELF-INSURED RETENTION.

straight deductible. A deductible that is a specified, fixed amount.

2. The insurance-policy clause specifying the amount of this portion.

deduction, n. 1. The act or process of subtracting or taking away. 2. Tax. An amount subtracted from gross income when calculating adjusted gross income, or from adjusted gross income when calculating taxable income. — Also termed tax deduction. Cf. EXEMPTION (3); TAX CREDIT.

additional standard deduction. The sum of the additional amounts that a taxpayer who turns 65 or becomes blind before the close of the taxable year is entitled to deduct.

charitable deduction. A deduction for a contribution to a qualified charity or other tax-exempt institution. See CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTION (2); CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION.

deduction in respect of a decedent. A deduction that accrues to the point of death but is not recognizable on the decedent’s final income-tax return because of the accounting method used, such as an accrued-interest expense of a cash-basis debtor.

itemized deduction. An expense (such as a medical expense, home-mortgage interest, or a charitable contribution) that can be subtracted from adjusted gross income to determine taxable income.

marital deduction. A federal tax deduction allowed for lifetime and testamentary transfers from one spouse to another. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2056, 2523.

miscellaneous itemized deduction. Generally, an itemized deduction of job or investment expenses; a deduction other than those allowable in computing adjusted gross income, those enumerated in IRC (26 USCA) standard deduction. A specified dollar amount that a taxpayer can deduct from adjusted gross income, instead of itemizing deductions, to determine taxable income.

§ 67(b), and personal exemptions. • This type of deduction is allowed only to an itemizing taxpayer whose total miscellaneous itemized deductions exceed a statutory percentage of adjusted gross income.

3. The portion of a succession to which an heir is entitled before a partition. 4. The act or process of reasoning from general propositions to a specific application or conclusion. Cf. INDUCTION (2). — deduct (for senses 1–3), vb. — deduce (for sense 4), vb.

deduction for new. See NEW-FOR-OLD (1).

de ea re ita censuere (dee ee-ə ree i-tə sen-s[y]oo-ə-ree). [Latin] Concerning that matter they have so decreed. • This phrase was used to record decrees of the Roman senate. — Abbr. d.e.r.i.c.

deed, n. 1. Something that is done or carried out; an act or action. 2. A written instrument by which land is conveyed. 3. At common law, any written instrument that is signed, sealed, and delivered and that conveys some interest in property. — deed, vb. Cf. CONVEYANCE; BILL OF SALE.

“A deed is a writing sealed and delivered. For if either a parchment without writing be delivered as one’s deed, yet it is not his deed, though an obligation be afterwards written in it: or if it be a writing but not sealed at the time of the delivery of it as his deed, it is a scrole and not his deed. Or if I make and seal a deed, and the party take it without my delivery, I may plead it is not my deed.” Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 108 (1759).

“All deeds are documents, but not all documents are deeds. For instance, a legend chalked on a brick wall, or a writing tattooed on a sailor’s back may be documents but they are not deeds. A deed is, therefore, a particular kind of document. It must be a writing and a writing on paper or its like, e.g., vellum or parchment. Any instrument under seal is a deed if made between private persons. It must be signed, sealed, and delivered. A deed must either (a) effect the transference of an interest, right or property, or (b) create an obligation binding on some person or persons, or (c) confirm some act whereby an interest, right, or property has already passed.” Gerald Dworkin, Odgers’ Construction of Deeds and Statutes 1 (5th ed. 1967).

absolute deed. A deed that conveys title without condition or encumbrance. — Also termed deed absolute.

administrator’s deed. A document that conveys property owned by a person who has died intestate.

bargain-and-sale deed. A deed that conveys property to a buyer for valuable consideration but that lacks any guarantee from the seller about the validity of the title. See BARGAIN AND SALE.

composition deed. A deed reflecting the terms of an agreement between a debtor and a creditor to discharge or adjust a debt.

counterdeed. A secret deed, executed either before a notary or under a private seal, that voids, invalidates, or alters a public deed.

deed absolute. See absolute deed.

deed in fee. A deed conveying the title to land in fee simple, usu. with covenants.

deed in lieu of foreclosure. A deed by which a borrower conveys fee-simple title to a lender in satisfaction of a mortgage debt and as a substitute for foreclosure. • This deed is often referred to simply as “deed in lieu.”

deed of covenant. A deed to do something, such as a document providing for periodic payments by one party to another (usu. a charity) for tax-saving purposes. • The transferor can deduct taxes from the payment and, in some cases, the recipient can reclaim the deducted tax.

deed of distribution. A fiduciary’s deed conveying a decedent’s real estate.

deed of gift. A deed executed and delivered without consideration. — Also termed gratuitous deed.

deed of inspectorship. Hist. An instrument reflecting an agreement between a debtor and creditor to appoint a receiver to oversee the winding-up of the debtor’s affairs on behalf of the creditor.

deed of partition. A deed that divides land held by joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners.

deed of release. A deed that surrenders full title to a piece of property upon payment or performance of specified conditions.

deed of separation. An instrument governing a spouse’s separation and maintenance.

deed of settlement. 1. A deed to settle something, such as the distribution of property in a marriage. 2. English law. A deed formerly used to form a joint-stock company.

deed of trust. A deed conveying title to real property to a trustee as security until the grantor repays a loan. • This type of deed resembles a mortgage. — Also termed trust deed; trust indenture.

deed poll. A deed made by and binding on only one party, or on two or more parties having similar interests. • It is so called because, traditionally, the parchment was “polled” (that is, shaved) so that it would be even at the top (unlike an indenture). — Also spelled deed-poll. Cf. INDENTURE.

deed to lead uses. A common-law deed prepared before an action for a fine or common recovery to show the object of those actions.

deed without covenants. See quitclaim deed.

defeasible deed. A deed containing a condition subsequent causing title to the property to revert to the grantor or pass to a third party.

disentailing deed. Hist. A tenant-in-tail’s assurance that the estate tail will be barred and converted into an estate in fee. • The Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4 ch. 74) introduced this way of barring an entail. It authorized nearly every tenant in tail, if certain conditions were met, to dispose of the land in fee simple absolute and thus to defeat the rights of all persons claiming under the tenant.

full-covenant-and-warranty deed. See warranty deed.

general warranty deed. See warranty deed.

gift deed. A deed given for a nominal sum or for love and affection.

grant deed. A deed containing, or having implied by law, some but not all of the usual covenants of title; esp., a deed in which the grantor warrants that he or she (1) has not previously conveyed the estate being granted, (2) has not encumbered the property except as noted in the deed, and (3) will convey to the grantee any title to the property acquired after the date of the deed.

latent deed. A deed kept in a strongbox or other secret place, usu. for 20 years or more.

mineral deed. A conveyance of an interest in the minerals in or under the land.

mortgage deed. The instrument creating a mortgage. • A mortgage deed typically must contain (1) the name of the mortgagor, (2) words of grant or conveyance, (3) the name of the mortgagee, (4) a property description sufficient to identify the mortgaged premises, (5) the mortgagor’s signature, and (6) an acknowledgment. To be effective and binding, a mortgage deed must also be delivered.

quitclaim deed. A deed that conveys a grantor’s complete interest or claim in certain real property but that neither warrants nor professes that the title is valid. — Often shortened to quitclaim. — Also termed deed without covenants. Cf. warranty deed.

“A quitclaim deed purports to convey only the grantor’s present interest in the land, if any, rather than the land itself. Since such a deed purports to convey whatever interest the grantor has at the time, its use excludes any implication that he has good title, or any title at all. Such a deed in no way obligates the grantor. If he has no interest, none will be conveyed. If he acquires an interest after executing the deed, he retains such interest. If, however, the grantor in such deed has complete ownership at the time of executing the deed, the deed is sufficient to pass such ownership. . . . A seller who knows that his title is bad or who does not know whether his title is good or bad usually uses a quitclaim deed in conveying.” Robert Kratovil, Real Estate Law 49 (6th ed. 1974).

release deed. A deed that is issued once a mortgage has been discharged, explicitly releasing and reconveying to the mortgagor the entire interest conveyed by an earlier deed of trust.

sheriff’s deed. A deed that gives ownership rights in property bought at a sheriff’s sale.

special warranty deed. 1. A deed in which the grantor covenants to defend the title against only those claims and demands of the grantor and those claiming by and under the grantor. 2. In a few jurisdictions, a quitclaim deed. Cf. warranty deed.

statutory deed. A warranty-deed form prescribed by state law and containing certain warranties and covenants even though they are not included in the printed form.

support deed. A deed by which a person (usu. a parent) conveys land to another (usu. a son or daughter) with the understanding that the grantee will support the grantor for life. • Support deeds often result in litigation.

tax deed. A deed showing the transfer of title to real property sold for the nonpayment of taxes. See office grant under GRANT; tax sale under SALE. Cf. TAX CERTIFICATE.

title deed. A deed that evidences a person’s legal ownership of property. See TITLE.

trust deed. See deed of trust.

warranty deed. A deed containing one or more covenants of title; esp., a deed that expressly guarantees the grantor’s good, clear title and that contains covenants concerning the quality of title, including warranties of seisin, quiet enjoyment, right to convey, freedom from encumbrances, and defense of title against all claims. — Also termed general warranty deed; full-covenant-and-warranty deed. See WARRANTY (1). Cf. quitclaim deed; special warranty deed.

wild deed. A recorded deed that is not in the chain of title, usu. because a previous instrument connected to the chain of title has not been recorded.

deed box. Archaic. A box in which deeds of land title are traditionally kept. • Such a box is considered an heirloom in the strict sense. See HEIRLOOM (1).

deed of agency. A revocable, voluntary trust for payment of a debt.

deed of crime. See ACTUS REUS.

deed of feoffment. See FEOFFMENT.

deed without covenants. See quitclaim deed under DEED.

de ejectione custodiæ (dee ee-jek-shee-oh-nee kəs-toh-dee-ee). [Latin ejectment de gard "ejectment of a ward"] Hist. A writ available to a guardian after being ejected from the ward's land during the ward's minority. • The writ lay to recover the land or person of the ward, or both. The French equivalent was ejectment de garde.

de ejectione firmæ (dee ee-jek-shee-oh-nee fər-mee). [Latin "ejectment of farm"] Hist. A writ or action of trespass to obtain the return of lands or tenements to a lessee for a term of years that had been ousted by the lessor or by a reversioner, remainderman, or stranger. • The lessee was then entitled to a writ of ejection to recover, at first, damages for the trespass only, but later the term itself, or the remainder of it, with damages. This action is the foundation of the modern action of ejectment. See EJECTMENT.

"A writ then of ejectione firmæ, or action of trespass in ejectment, lieth, where lands or tenements are let for a term of years; and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainder-man, or any stranger, doth eject or oust the lessee of his term. In this case he shall have his writ of ejection, to call the defendant to answer for entering on the lands so demised to the plaintiff for a term that is not yet expired, and ejecting him. And by this writ the plaintiff shall recover back his term, or the remainder of it, with damages." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 199 (1768).

deem, vb. 1. To treat (something) as if (1) it were really something else, or (2) it has qualities that it doesn't have <although the document was not in fact signed until April 21, it explicitly states that it must be deemed to have been signed on April 14>. 2. To consider, think, or judge <she deemed it necessary>.

"'Deem' is a useful word when it is necessary to establish a legal fiction either positively by 'deeming' something to be something it is not or negatively by 'deeming' something not to be something which it is. . . . All other uses of the word should be avoided. Phrases like 'if he deems fit' or 'as he deems necessary' or 'nothing in this Act shall be deemed to . . . ' are objectionable as unnecessary deviations from common speech. 'Thinks' or 'considers' are preferable in the first two examples and 'construed' in the third. . . . 'Deem' is useful but dangerous. It creates an artificiality and artificiality should not be resorted to if it can be avoided." G.C. Thornton, Legislative Drafting 83-84 (2d ed. 1979).

deemed transferor. Tax. A person who holds an interest in a generation-skipping trust on behalf of a beneficiary, and whose death will trigger the imposition of a generation-skipping transfer tax. • A deemed transferor is often a child of the settlor. For example, a grandfather could establish a trust with income payable for life to his son (who, because he is only one generation away from his father, is also known as a nonskip person) with the remainder to his grandson, a beneficiary also known as the skip person. When the son dies, the trust will be included in his gross estate for determining the generation-skipping transfer tax. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601-2663. See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; generation-skipping trust under TRUST; SKIP PERSON; NONSKIP PERSON.

deep pocket. 1. (pl.) Substantial wealth and resources <the plaintiff nonsuited the individuals and targeted the corporation with deep pockets>. 2. A person or entity with substantial wealth and resources against which a claim may be made or a judgment may be taken <that national insurance company is a favorite deep pocket among plaintiff's lawyers>.

Deep Rock doctrine. Bankruptcy. The principle by which unfair or inequitable claims presented by controlling shareholders of bankrupt corporations may be subordinated to claims of general or trade creditors. • The doctrine is named for a corporation that made fraudulent transfers to its parent corporation in Taylor v. Standard Gas & Elec. Co., 306 U.S. 307, 59 S.Ct. 543 (1939).

de escaeta (dee es-kee-tə), n. [Law Latin "of escheat"] Hist. A writ authorizing a lord to recover land when the lord's tenant died without an heir. See ESCHEAT.

de escambio monetæ (dee es-kam-bee-oh mō-nee-tee), n. [Law Latin "of exchange of money"] Hist. A writ authorizing a merchant to prepare a bill of exchange.

de essendo quietum de theolonio (dee e-sen-doh kwi-ee-təm dee thee-ə-loh-nee-oh), n. [Law Latin "of being quit of toll"] Hist. A writ authorizing a person who is exempt from paying a toll to enforce the exemption without harassment. — Also spelled de essendo quietum de tolonio.

de essonio de malo lecti (dee e-soh-nee-oh dee mal-oh lek-ti), n. [Law Latin "of essoin of malum lecti (sickness of bed)"] Hist. A writ ordering a determination whether a person is truly sick after the person has issued an essoin claiming sickness as an excuse for not appearing in court.

de estoveriis habendis (dee es-tə-veer-ee-is hæ-ben-dis), n. [Law Latin "for having estovers"] Hist. A writ allowing a wife divorced a mensa et thoro ("from bed and board") to recover alimony.

"In case of divorce a mensa et thoro, the law allows alimony to the wife which is that allowance, which is made to a woman for her support out of her husband's estate; being settled at the discretion of the ecclesiastical judge, on consideration of all the circumstances of the case. This is sometimes called her estovers for which, if he refuses payment, there is; (besides the ordinary process of excommunication) a writ at common law de estoveriis habendis, in order to recover it It is generally proportioned to the rank and quality of the parties. But in case of elopement, and living with an adulterer, the law allows her no alimony." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 429 (1765).

de estrepamento (dee e-strep-ə-men-toh), n. [Law Latin "of enstrepment"] Hist. A writ to prevent waste by a tenant while a suit to recover the land is pending against the tenant. • Because this writ was only auxiliary to a real action to recover land, and because equity afforded the same relief by injunction, the writ fell into disuse and was abolished by 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27. — Also termed writ of estrepement. See ESTREPEMENT.

de eu et trene (də yoo ay trayn). [French] Hist. Of water and whip of three cords. • This term referred to a neife who, as a servant, could be corporally punished. See NEIFE.

de eve et de treve (də ev ay də trev). [Law French] Hist. From grandfather and great-grandfather's great-grandfather. • This phrase described the ancestral rights of lords to their villeins.

de excommunicato capiendo (dee eks-kə-myoo-ni-kay-toh kap-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin "for taking an excommunicated person"] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ ordering a sheriff to imprison an excommunicated person until the person reconciled with the church. • It was replaced by the writ de contumace capiendo. See DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO.

de excommunicato deliberando (dee eks-kə-myoo-ni-kay-toh di-lib-ə-ran-doh), n. [Law Latin "for delivering an excommunicated person"] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ releasing an excommunicated person from prison upon a certification by the person's superior that the person has reconciled with the church.

de excommunicato recipiendo (dee eks-kə-myoo-ni-kay-toh ri-kap-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin "for retaking an excommunicated person"] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ ordering the rearrest of an excommunicated person who had been released but had not reconciled with the church or given security for a reconciliation.

de excusationibus (dee ek-skyoo-zay-shee-oh-ni-bəs), n. [Latin "of excuses"] Roman law. The first title of the 27th book of the Digest, containing a person's legal excuses from serving as tutor or curator. • It is primarily made up of part of the Greek work of Herennius Modestinus. See DIGEST.

de executione facienda in withernamium (dee ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh-nee fay-shee-en-də in with-ər-nay-mee-əm), n. [Law Latin "for making execution in withernam"] Hist. A writ of execution in withernam. • This is a type of capis in withernam directing the sheriff to take from the defendant goods equal in value to the goods that the defendant took from the plaintiff.

de executione iudicii (dee ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh-nee joo-dish-ee-i), n. [Law Latin "of execution of judgment"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff or bailiff to execute a judgment.

de exemplificatione (dee ig-zem-pli-fi-kay-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin "of exemplification"] A writ ordering the transcription of an original record.

de exoneratione sectæ (dee ig-zon-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee sek-tee), n. [Law Latin "of exoneration of suit"] Hist. A writ exempting the king's ward from being sued in any court lower than the Court of Common Pleas (such as a county court, hundred court, leet, or court baron) during the time of the wardship.

de expensis civium et burgensium (dee ek-spen-sis siv-ee-əm et bər-jen-see-əm), n. [Law Latin “for levying the expenses of burgesses”] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to levy the expenses of each citizen and burgess of Parliament.

de expensis militum levandis (dee ek-spen-sis mil-ə-təm lə-van-dis), n. [Law Latin “for levying the expenses of knights”] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to levy an allowance for knights of the shire in Parliament.

deface (di-fays), vb. 1. To mar or destroy (a written instrument, signature, or inscription) by obliteration, erasure, or superinscription. 2. To detract from the value of (a coin) by punching, clipping, cutting, or shaving. 3. To mar or injure (a building, monument, or other structure). — defacement, n.

defacere. See DIFFACERE.

de facto (di fak-toh also dee or day), adj. [Law Latin “in point of fact”] 1. Actual; existing in fact; having effect even though not formally or legally recognized  2. Illegitimate but in effect . Cf. DE JURE.

de facto adoption. See ADOPTION.

de facto contract of sale. See CONTRACT.

de facto corporation. See CORPORATION.

defalk (di-fawlĳ), vb. Archaic. To deduct (a debt); to set off (a claim).

de falso judicio (dee fal-soh or fawl-soh joo-dish-ee-oh), n. [Law Latin “of false judgment”] Hist. A writ of false judgment; a writ to reverse an inferior court’s ruling.

de falso moneta (dee fal-soh or fawl-soh mah-nee-tə), n. [Law Latin “of false money”] Hist. The statute of Edward I providing that persons importing certain coins (called “pollards” and “crokards”) would forfeit both their goods and their lives.

defamacast (di-fam-ə-kast). Defamation by television or radio broadcast. See DEFAMATION.

defamation, n. 1. The act of harming the reputation of another by making a false statement to a third person. ● If the alleged defamation involves a matter of public concern, the plaintiff is constitutionally required to prove both the statement’s falsity and the defendant’s fault. 2. A false written or oral statement that damages another’s reputation. — defame, vb. See LIBEL; SLANDER. Cf. DISPARAGEMENT.

“The wrong of defamation consists in the publication of a false and defamatory statement concerning another person without lawful justification. That person must be in being. Hence not only does an action of defamation not survive for or against the estate of a deceased person, but a statement about a deceased or unborn person is not actionable at the suit of his relatives, however great their pain and distress, unless the statement is in some way defamatory of them.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 138 (17th ed. 1977).

“Defamation . . . is involved in two related harms, libel and slander. A familiar statement is that libel is written whereas slander is oral. This covers the idea in a general way but tends to mislead because defamation may be published without the use of words and hence be neither written nor oral. Thus libel may be perpetrated by hanging a person in effigy and slander, by sign or gesture.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 489 (3d ed. 1982).

defamation per quod. Defamation that either (1) is not apparent but is proved by extrinsic evidence showing its injurious meaning or (2) is apparent but is not a statement that is actionable per se.

defamation per se. A statement that is defamatory in and of itself and is not capable of an innocent meaning.

defamatory, adj. (Of a statement or communication) tending to harm a person's reputation, usu. by subjecting the person to public contempt, disgrace, or ridicule, or by adversely affecting the person's business.

"No exhaustive definition of 'defamatory' emerges from the cases for, as Lord Reid once said, it is not for the judges to 'frame definitions or to lay down hard and fast rules. It is their function to enunciate principles and much that they say is intended to be illustrative or explanatory and not to be definitive' [Cassell & Co. Ltd. v. Broome (1972) AC 1027, 1085]. One can nevertheless achieve a working description by combining two statements, namely: a defamatory statement is one which injures the reputation of another by exposing him to hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or which tends to lower him in the esteem of right-thinking members of society." R.W.M. Dias & B.S. Markesinis, Tort Law 423-24 (2d ed. 1989).

defamatory libel. See LIBEL.

defamatory statement. A statement that tends to injure the reputation of a person referred to in it. • The statement is likely to lower that person in the estimation of reasonable people and in particular to cause that person to be regarded with feelings of hatred, contempt, ridicule, fear, or dislike.

defames (di-fay-meez or di-fahm), adj. [Law French] Infamous.

default, n. The omission or failure to perform a legal or contractual duty; esp., the failure to pay a debt when due. — default, vb. — defaulter, n.

defaulter. 1. A person who is in default. 2. A person who misappropriates or fails to account for money held in the person's official or fiduciary capacity.

default judgment. 1. A judgment entered against a defendant who has failed to plead or otherwise defend against the plaintiff's claim, often by failing to appear at trial. 2. A judgment entered as a penalty against a party who does not comply with an order, esp. an order to comply with a discovery request. — Also termed judgment by default. See JUDGMENT.

nil-dicit default judgment (nil di-sit). [Latin 'he says nothing'] A judgment for the plaintiff entered after the defendant fails to file a timely answer, often after appearing in the case by filing a preliminary motion. — Also termed nihil-dicit default judgment. — Often shortened to nihil dicit.

no-answer default judgment. A judgment for the plaintiff entered after the defendant fails to timely answer or otherwise appear.

post-answer default judgment. A judgment for the plaintiff entered after the defendant files an answer, but fails to appear at trial or otherwise provide a defense on the merits.

defeasance (di-fee-z-ants), n. 1. An annulment or abrogation; VOIDANCE. 2. The fact or an instance of bringing an estate or status to an end, esp. by conditional limitation. 3. A condition upon the fulfillment of which a deed or other instrument is defeated or made void; a contractual provision containing such a condition. — Also termed defeasance clause. 4. Hist. A collateral deed made simultaneously with a conveyance and containing a condition by which the main deed might be defeated or made void. — Also spelled defeazance. — defease, vb.

"A defeazance is a collateral deed, made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 327 (1766).

defeasance clause. A mortgage provision stating that the conveyance to the mortgagee will be ineffective if the mortgagor pays the debt on time.

defeasible, adj. (Of an act, right, agreement, or position) capable of being annulled or avoided <defeasible deed>. See fee simple defeasible under FEE SIMPLE.

defeasive, adj. Rare. Capable of defeating .

defeat, vb. 1. To deprive (someone) of something expected, usu. by an antagonistic act <to defeat the opponent in an election>. 2. To annul or render (something) void <to defeat title>. 3.

To vanquish; to conquer (someone or something) <to defeat the armies>. 4. To frustrate (someone or something) <the expenditures defeat the bill's purpose>.

defect, n. An imperfection or shortcoming, esp. in a part that is essential to the operation or safety of a product. — defective, adj.

apparent defect. See patent defect.

design defect. A product imperfection occurring when the seller or distributor could have reduced or avoided a foreseeable risk of harm by adopting a reasonable alternative design, and when, as a result of not using the alternative, the product is not reasonably safe.

fatal defect. A serious defect capable of nullifying a contract.

hidden defect. A product imperfection that is not discoverable by reasonable inspection and for which a seller or lessor is generally liable if the flaw causes harm. • Upon discovering a hidden defect, a purchaser may revoke a prior acceptance. UCC § 2-608(1)(b). — Also termed latent defect; inherent defect.

manufacturing defect. An imperfection in a product that departs from its intended design even though all possible care was exercised in its assembly and marketing.

marketing defect. 1. The failure to adequately warn of a potential risk of harm that is known or should have been known about a product or its foreseeable use. 2. The failure to adequately instruct the user about how to use a product safely.

patent defect. A defect that is apparent to a normally observant person, esp. a buyer on a reasonable inspection. — Also termed apparent defect.

product defect. An imperfection in a product that has a manufacturing defect or design defect, or is faulty because of inadequate instructions or warnings.

defective, adj. 1. (Of a position, right, act, or process) lacking in legal sufficiency <defective execution of documents> <defective service of process>. 2. (Of a product) containing an imperfection or shortcoming in a part essential to the product's safe operation <defective wiring caused the accident>.

defective condition. An unreasonably dangerous state that might well cause physical harm beyond that contemplated by the ordinary user or consumer who purchases the product. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

defective performance. See PERFORMANCE.

defective pleading. See PLEADING (1).

defective product. See PRODUCT.

defective record. See RECORD.

defective title. See TITLE (2).

defective verdict. See VERDICT.

defect of form. An imperfection in the style, manner, arrangement, or nonessential parts of a legal document, as distinguished from a substantive defect. Cf. DEFECT OF SUBSTANCE.

defect of parties. A failure to include all necessary parties in a lawsuit.

defect of substance. An imperfection in the substantive part of a legal document, as by omitting an essential term. Cf. DEFECT OF FORM.

defectus (di-fek-təs), n. [fr. Latin deficere "to be deficient"] Hist. A defect; a deficiency.

defectus sanguinis (di-fek-təs sang-gwi-nis). [Latin "defect of blood"] Hist. A failure of issue, often resulting in an escheat. See ES-CHEAT.

defence. See DEFENSE.

defend, vb. 1. To deny, contest, or oppose (an allegation or claim) <the corporation vigorously defended against the shareholder's lawsuit>. 2. To represent (someone) as an attorney <the accused retained a well-known lawyer to defend him>.

defendant (di-fen-dənt). A person sued in a civil proceeding or accused in a criminal proceeding. — Abbr. D. Cf. PLAINTIFF.

defendant in error. Archaic. In a case on appeal, the prevailing party in the court below. See APPELLEE; RESPONDENT (1).

defendant's gain. The amount of money or the value of property that a criminal defendant has obtained by committing a crime. • Some states, such as New York, consider the defendant's gain when assessing a criminal fine or ordering restitution.

defendemus (di-fen-də-məs). [fr. Latin defendere] We will defend. • This term was used in conveyancing to require the donor and the donor's heirs to defend the donee against any attempted encumbrance not specifically agreed to. Although defendum was not a warranty, it became part of the warranty clause "shall and will warrant and forever defend."

defender. One who defends, such as the defendant in a lawsuit, a person using self-defense, or defense counsel.

defendere (di-fen-də-ree), vb. [Law Latin] To deny; to defend.

defendere se per corpus suum (di-fen-də-ree see pər kɔr-pəs s[y]oo-əm), vb. [Law Latin "to defend himself by his own body"] Hist. To agree to a trial by judicial combat; to agree to a duel.

defendere unica manu (di-fen-də-ree yoo-nə-kə man-yoo), n. [Law Latin "to defend with one hand"] Hist. A denial of an accusation under oath.

Defender of the Faith. See DEFENSOR FIDEI.

defendour (day-fon-duur), n. [Law French] Hist. A defendant; the party accused in an appeal.

defeneration (dee-fen-ə-ray-shən), n. [fr. Latin de "of" + foenero "to lend upon usury"] Hist. The act of lending money at a usurious interest rate.

defenestration (dee-fen-ə-stray-shən). The act of throwing someone or something out a window.

defense (di-fen[t]s). 1. A defendant's stated reason why the plaintiff or prosecutor has no valid case; esp., a defendant's answer, denial, or plea <her defense was that she was 25 miles from the building at the time of the robbery>.

"Defence is defined to be that which is alleged by a party proceeded against in an action or suit, as a reason why the plaintiff should not recover or establish that which he seeks by his complaint or petition." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 240 (2d ed. 1899).

affirmative defense. A defendant's assertion raising new facts and arguments that, if true, will defeat the plaintiff's or prosecution's claim, even if all allegations in the complaint are true. • Examples of affirmative defenses include duress and contributory negligence (in a civil case) and insanity and self-defense (in a criminal case).

capacity defense. A defense based on the defendant's inability to be held accountable for an illegal act or the plaintiff's inability to prosecute a lawsuit (as when the plaintiff was a corporation, but has lost its corporate charter). See CAPACITY.

collateral defense (kə-lat-ə-rəl). Criminal law. A defense of justification or excuse not involving a rebuttal of the allegation and therefore collateral to the elements that the prosecutor must prove. See EXCUSE (2); JUSTIFICATION (2).

dilatory defense (dil-ə-tor-ee). A defense that temporarily obstructs or delays a lawsuit but does not address the merits.

equitable defense. A defense formerly available only in a court of equity but now maintainable in a court of law. • Examples include mistake, fraud, illegality, and failure of consideration.

frivolous defense. A defense that has no basis in fact or law.

full defense. A technical common-law defensive plea, stated at length and without abbreviation. • The plea is obsolete because of the pleading requirements in federal and state rules of civil procedure.

inconsistent defense. A defense so contrary to another defense that the acceptance of one requires abandonment of the other. • For example, a person accused of murder cannot claim both self-defense and the alibi of having been in a different city when the murder took place.

insanity defense. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

issuable defense. Common-law pleading. A plea on the merits setting forth a legal defense. Cf. issuable plea under PLEA.

justification defense. See JUSTIFICATION DEFENSE.

legal defense. A complete and adequate defense in a court of law.

meritorious defense (mer-ə-tor-ee-əs). 1. A defense that addresses the substance or essentials of a case rather than dilatory or technical objections. 2. A defense that appears likely to succeed or has already succeeded.

partial defense. A defense going either to part of the action or toward mitigation of damages.

peremptory defense (pər-emp-tər-ee). A defense that questions the plaintiff's legal right to sue or contends that the right to sue has been extinguished.

pretermitted defense (pree-tər-mit-id). A defense available to a party that must be pleaded at the right time or be waived.

sham defense. A fictitious, untrue defense, made in bad faith.

2. A defendant's method and strategy in opposing the plaintiff or the prosecution; a doctrine giving rise to such a method or strategy <the lawyer advised her client to adopt a passive defense and to avoid taking the witness stand>.

derivative defense. A defense that rebuts the criminal elements that a prosecutor must establish to justify the submission of a criminal case to a jury.

dwelling defense. See CASTLE DOCTRINE.

empty-chair defense. See EMPTY-CHAIR DEFENSE.

3. One or more defendants in a trial <the defense rests>. 4. Commercial law. A basis for avoiding liability on a negotiable instrument <the drawer asserted a real defense against the holder in due course>.

personal defense. An ordinary defense in a contract action — such as failure of consideration or nonperformance of a condition — that the maker or drawer of a negotiable instrument is precluded from raising against a person who has the rights of a holder in due course. ● A personal defense can be asserted only against a transferee who is not a holder in due course. — Also termed limited defense.

real defense. A type of defense that is good against any possible claimant, so that the maker or drawer of a negotiable instrument can raise it even against a holder in due course. ● The ten real defenses are (1) fraud in the factum, (2) forgery of a necessary signature, (3) adjudicated insanity that, under state law, renders the contract void from its inception, (4) material alteration of the instrument, (5) infancy, which renders the contract voidable under state law, (6) illegality that renders the underlying contract void, (7) duress, (8) discharge in bankruptcy, or any discharge known to the holder in due course, (9) a suretyship defense (for example, if the holder knew that one indorser was signing as a surety or accommodation party), and (10) a statute of limitations (generally three years after dishonor or acceptance on a draft and six years after demand or other due date on a note). — Also termed absolute defense; universal defense.

5. Measures taken by a country or individual to protect against an attack. See SELF-DEFENSE; NATIONAL DEFENSE (1).

self-defense. See SELF-DEFENSE.

6. A country's military establishment. See NATIONAL DEFENSE (2). — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) defence.

defense attorney. A lawyer who represents a defendant in a civil or criminal case. — Also termed defense counsel; defense lawyer.

defense contingent fee. See reverse contingent fee under CONTINGENT FEE.

defense counsel. See DEFENSE ATTORNEY.

Defense Department. An executive department of the federal government, responsible for coordinating and overseeing military affairs and the agencies responsible for national security. ● The Department was established as the National Military Establishment in 1947, by combining the War and the Navy Departments. Its name was changed to Department of Defense in 1949. The Department's components include the Army, the Air Force, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It is headed by the Secretary of Defense, who is answerable to the President as Commander-in-Chief. — Also termed Department of Defense (abbr. DOD).

defense lawyer. See DEFENSE ATTORNEY.

defense-month. See FENCE-MONTH.

defense of habitation. See CASTLE DOCTRINE.

defense of others. A justification defense available if one harms or threatens another when defending a third person. See JUSTIFICATION (2).

defense of property. A justification defense available if one harms or threatens another when defending one's property. See JUSTIFICATION (2).

defense of self. See SELF-DEFENSE.

defensiva (dee-fen-si-və), n. [Latin "a protector"] Hist. A warden of the Marches, being one of many lords appointed by the Crown to defend England's borders.

defensive allegation. Hist. Eccles. law. A defendant's pleading of the facts relied upon that require the plaintiff's response under oath.

"The proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts are therefore regulated according to the practice of the civil and canon laws [T]heir ordinary course of proceeding is; first, by citation, to call the party injuring before them. Then . . . to set forth the complainant's ground of complaint. To this succeeds the defendant's answer upon oath; when, if he denies or extenuates the charge, they proceed to proofs by witnesses examined, and their depositions taken down in writing, by an officer of the court. If the defendant has any circumstances to offer in his defence, he must also propound them in what is called his defensive allegation, to which he is entitled in his turn to the plaintiff's answer upon oath, and may from thence proceed to proofs as well as his antagonist." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 100 (1768).

defensive collateral estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

defensor (di-fen-sər or -sor), n. [fr. Latin defendere "to forbid"] 1. Roman law. A defender of another's interests in court; an advocate, esp. for a corporation. Cf. PROCURATOR LITIS. 2. Roman law. DEFENSOR CIVITATIS. 3. Hist. Eccles. law. An advocate or patron of a church; a church warden. 4. Hist. A guardian; a protector; a defender.

defensor civitatis (di-fen-sər siv-i-tay-tis), n. [Latin "defender of the city"] Roman law. An officer conducting public business, including protecting people, esp. the poor, from legal injustices, adjudicating certain minor offenses and pecuniary matters, and acting as a notary in the execution of a will or other transfer. — Often shortened to defensor.

defensor fidei (di-fen-sər fi-dee-i), n. [Latin "defender of the faith"] A unique title of the sovereign of England, first granted by Pope Leo X to Henry VIII for writing against Martin Luther. • The Pope later withdrew the title because of Henry's harsh regulation of the church, but the title was again bestowed on the King by Parliament. The term is similar to the application of "Catholic" to the Spanish sovereign and "Most Christian" to the French sovereign. — Also termed Defender of the Faith.

defensum (di-fen-səm), n. [Law Latin "an inclosure"] Hist. 1. A portion of an open field allotted for corn or hay but not for feeding. 2. A wood partially enclosed to prevent the cattle from damaging the undergrowth. 3. A prohibition.

definitive sentence. See determinate sentence under SENTENCE.

deflation, n. A general decline in the price of goods and services. — deflate, vb. — deflationary, adj. Cf. INFLATION; DISINFLATION.

deforce, vb. 1. To keep (lands) from the true owner by means of force. 2. To oust (another) from possession by means of force. 3. To detain (a creditor's money) unjustly and forcibly. — deforciant, n.

"The character of the action of debt is well illustrated by the form of the writ as given by Glanville. It directs the sheriff to order the debtor to render a stated sum which he owes to the plaintiff, 'and whereof the plaintiff complains that the defendant unjustly deforces him,' and, if he will not obey, he is to be summoned before the King's Court. The plaintiff is 'deforced' of money just as in a writ of right he is 'deforced' of land. It is true that the term 'deforces' disappeared from the writ shortly after Glanville's time, the word debet taking its place; but this seems to have been a matter of form, not of substance. The plaintiff sought to recover the money due as his property." William F. Walsh, Outlines of the History of English and American Law 411 (1924).

deforcement. 1. An act of keeping lands from the true owner by force. 2. An act of ousting another from possession by means of force. 3. An act of detaining a creditor's money unjustly and forcibly.

deforciant (di-for-shənt), n. [fr. Law Latin deforcians "a deforcer"] A person who prevents another from taking possession of property; the defendant in an action of fine. See FINE (1).

defossion (di-fosh-in), n. [fr. Latin de "down" + fodere "dig"] The punishment of being buried alive.

de frangentibus prisonam (dee fran-jen-ti-bəs priz-ə-nəm), n. [Latin "of those who break prison"] Hist. The statute providing that an escaped prisoner will not be put to death or forfeit a limb simply for escaping from prison unless the original crime required that penalty upon conviction. 1 Edw. 2.

defraud, vb. To cause injury or loss to (a person) by deceit. See FRAUD.

defraudation. An act of privation by fraud.

defrauder. See FRAUDFEASOR.

defunct, adj. Dead; extinct <defunct corporation>.

defunct marriage. A marriage in which both parties, by their conduct, indicate their intent to no longer be married.

defunctus (di-fəŋk-təs), adj. [Latin] Dead, as in defunctus sine prole ("dead without (leaving) issue").

de furto (dee fər-toh), n. [Latin "of theft"] Hist. In England, a type of criminal appeal.

degaster (day-gas-tay), vb. [fr. Old French dégaster "to spoil"] To waste.

de gestu et fama (dee jes-ty[y]oo et fay-mə), n. [Law Latin "of behavior and reputation"] Hist. A writ available to a person whose character and reputation had been impeached.

degradation (deg-rə-day-shən). 1. A reduction in rank, degree, or dignity; specif., censure of a clergy member by divestiture of holy orders, either by word or by a solemn divestiture of robes and other insignia. 2. A moral or intellectual decadence or degeneration; a lessening of a person's or thing's character or quality <degradation of resources>. 3. A wearing down of something, as by erosion.

de gratia (dee gray-shee-ə). [Latin] Of favor; by grace, as in de speciali gratia ("of special grace or favor").

degree. 1. Generally, a classification or specification <degrees of proof>. 2. An incremental measure of guilt or negligence; a level based on the seriousness of an offense <murder in the first degree>. 3. A stage in a process; a step in a series of steps toward an end <the statute went through several degrees of development>. 4. A stage in intensity . 5. In the line of descent, a measure of removal determining the proximity of a blood or marital relationship <the judge was recused because she was related to the plaintiff within the second degree of affinity> <the council member did not participate in the vote because he was related to one of the bidders within the first degree of consanguinity>. — Also termed degree of kin. See AFFINITY (2); CONSANGUINITY.

equal degree. A relationship between two or more relatives who are the same number of steps away from a common ancestor.

prohibited degree. A degree of relationship so close (as between brother and sister) that marriage between the persons is forbidden by law. • Generally, with slight variations from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, the law forbids marriages between all persons lineally related and within the third civil-law degree of relationship. — Also termed forbidden degree.

6. A title conferred on a graduate of a school, college, or university, either after the completion of required studies or in honor of special achievements <she began studying for the bar exam the day after receiving her law degree>. Cf. DIPLOMA (3).

degree of care. A standard of care to be exercised in a given situation. See CARE.

highest degree of care. 1. The degree of care exercised commensurate with the danger involved. 2. The degree of care applied by people in the business or profession of dealing with the given situation. — Also termed extraordinary care; utmost care.

degree of crime. 1. A division or classification of a single crime into several grades of guilt, according to the circumstances surrounding the crime's commission, such as aggravating factors present or the type of injury suffered. 2. A division of crimes generally, such as felonies or misdemeanors.

degree of kin. See DEGREE.

degree of negligence. One of the varying levels of negligence typically designated as slight negligence, ordinary negligence, and gross negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

"Although the common law concept of degrees of negligence has been criticized or repudiated in many jurisdictions, the usefulness of the view at common law that degrees of negligence exist is still recognized in a number of jurisdictions, particularly in regard to the distinction between ordinary and gross negligence. Furthermore, legislators have not been dissuaded from using the degrees of negligence concept when it is helpful to achieve a legislative purpose." 57A Am. Jur. 2d Negligence § 233, at 274 (1989).

degree of proof. See BURDEN OF PRODUCTION.

de haerede deliberando illi qui habet custodiam terrae (dee hi-ree-dee di-lib-ə-ran-doh il-I kwi hay-bət kə-stoh-dee-əm ter-ee), n. [Law Latin "for delivering an heir to him who has wardship of the land"] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to deliver an heir to a person who had wardship.

de haerede rapto et abducto (dee hi-ree-dee rap-toh et ab-dək-toh), n. [Law Latin "of an heir ravished and carried away"] Hist. A writ allowing a lord to recover a ward who had been taken by another person.

de haeretico comburendo (dee hi-ret-i-koh kom-byə-ren-doh), n. [Law Latin "of burning a heretic"] Hist. 1. A writ ordering the execution by burning of a heretic who, after having already been convicted of heresy by the bishop and recanted, was again convicted by a secular court. — Also termed writ de haeretico comburendo.

"And . . . we find among our ancient precedents a writ de haeretico comburendo, which is thought by some to be as ancient as the common law itself. However, it appears from thence, that the conviction of heresy by the common law was not in any petty ecclesiastical court, but before the archbishop himself in a provincial synod; and that the delinquent was delivered over to the king to do as he should please with him: so that the crown had a control over the spiritual power, and might pardon the convict by issuing no process against him; the writ de haeretico comburendo being not a writ of course, but issuing only by the special direction of the king in council." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 46-47 (1769).

"But the case of Sawtre (1400) is a clear case in which the rule of the canon law was applied. He was convicted of heresy before the Bishop of Norwich and recanted his heresy. He fell again into heresy, and was condemned by the archbishop and his provincial Council, as a relapsed heretic. On this conviction the king issued a writ de haeretico comburendo. This case clearly shows that the common law recognized the rule of the canon law . . ." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 617 (7th ed. 1956).

2. The first English penal law against heresy, enacted in 1401 (2 Hen. 4, ch. 15). • The law authorized the burning of defendants who relapsed or refused to abandon their heretical opinions.

"The first English statute that denounced the penalty of death against heretics was passed in the year 1401. Whether before that statute the law that was in force in our land demanded or suffered that such persons should be burnt is a question that has been eagerly debated; on it in the days of Elizabeth and James I depended the lives of Anabaptists and Arians; it has not yet lost its interest; but it is a question that buzzes in a vacuum, for until Lollardy became troublesome there was too little heresy in England to beget a settled course of procedure." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 544 (1899).

de homagio respectuando (dee hō-may-jee-oh ri-spek-tyoo-an-doh), n. [Law Latin "for respiting or postponing homage"] Hist. A writ to postpone an homage. See HOMAGE.

de homine capto in withernamium (dee hōm-ə-nee kap-toh in with-ər-nay-mee-əm), n. [Law Latin "for taking a man in withernam"] Hist. A writ to seize and jail a person who took a bondman out of the county to keep the bondman from being replevied. • The defendant was jailed without bail until the bondman was returned. See WITHERNAM.

de homine replegiando (dee hōm-ə-nee ri-plee-jee-an-doh), n. [Law Latin "for replevying a man"] A writ to replevy a person out of jail or out of the custody of another person after giving security that the replevied person will answer any charge.

"The writ de homine replegiando lies to replevy a man out of prison, or out of the custody of any private person, (in the same manner that chattels taken in distress may be replevied . . .) upon giving security to the sheriff that the man shall be forthcoming to answer any charge against him. And, if the person be conveyed out of the sheriff's jurisdiction, the sheriff may return that he is eligned . . . upon which a process issues . . . to imprison the defendant himself, without bail . . . till he produces the party. But this writ is guarded with so many exceptions, that it is not an effectual remedy in numerous instances, especially where the crown is concerned." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 129 (1768).

dehors (də-hor or də-horz). [Law French] Outside; beyond the scope of <the court cannot consider the document because it is dehors the record>.

de identitate nominis (dee I-den-tə-tay-tee nōm-ə-nis), n. [Law Latin "of identity of name"] Hist. A writ to free a person mistaken for someone else with the same name and then falsely arrested and imprisoned. — Also termed de idemptitate nominis.

de idiota inquirendo (dee id-ee-oh-tə in-kwī-ren-doh or in-kwə-ren-doh). [Latin "of inquiring concerning an idiot"] Hist. A writ directing the sheriff to open an inquiry before a jury of 12 into whether a person is an idiot, that is, mentally incapable of managing personal affairs.

Dei gratia (dee-I gray-shee-ə). [Latin] By the grace of God. • This phrase was often used in rulers' titles to show that their authority was by divine right. It was also formerly used in titles of magistrates and other officers.

de iis qui ponendi sunt in assisis (dee I-əs kwī pə-nen-dī sɛnt in ə-si-zɛz), n. [Law Latin "of those who are to be put on assises"] Hist. The statute establishing juror qualifications. 21 Edw. 1.

de incremento (dee in-krə-men-toh). [Law Latin "of increase"] Hist. Additional. • Costs de incremento are costs awarded by a court in addition to costs awarded by the jury.

de ingressu (dee in-gres-[y]oo), n. [Law Latin “of entry”] Hist. A writ allowing entry into lands or tenements.

de injuria (dee in-juor-ee-ə). [Law Latin “of injury”] Hist. Of injury. • A traverse de injuria, contained in a replication in a trespass action, denies the defendant’s excuse for the wrong done. See TRAVERSE.

de inofficioso testamento (dee in-ə-fish-ee-oh-soh tes-tə-men-toh). [Latin] Hist. Concerning an inofficious or undutiful will. • This was a title of Roman law. See INOFFICIOSUS.

de integro (dee in-tə-groh), n. [Latin] Again; a second time.

de intrusione (dee in-troo-zhee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin “of intrusion”] Hist. A writ available to a reversioner when the tenant dies and a stranger occupies the land.

delayed funds availability. A hold that a bank places on uncollected funds that are represented by a deposited check. — Abbr. DFA.

delayed rental. See RENTAL.

del bien estre (del been es-tər). [Law French] Hist. Of well-being. See DE BENE ESSE.

del credere (del kred-ə-ray or kray-də-ray), adj. [Italian] Of belief or trust.

“Del credere’ agents for the sale of goods, in consideration of a higher payment than usual, become responsible for the solvency of the person to whom they sell them.” Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 304 (13th ed. 1924).

del credere agent. See AGENT.

del credere bailiff. See FACTOR.

del credere commission. A factor’s commission that is increased because the factor guarantees the payment to the principal of all debts that become due through the agency relationship.

del credere factor. See del credere agent under AGENT.

delectus personae (di-lek-təs pər-sōh-nee). [Latin “choice of the person”] The rule that when personal relations are important, a person cannot be compelled to associate with another person. • Based on this principle, a partner has the right to accept or reject a candidate proposed as a new partner.

delegable duty. See DUTY (1).

delegate (del-ə-git), n. One who represents or acts for another person or a group.

delegated legislation. See REGULATION (3).

delegatee (del-ə-gə-tee). An agent or representative to whom a matter is delegated.

delegation, n. 1. The act of entrusting another with authority or empowering another to act as an agent or representative <delegation of contractual duties>. 2. A group of representatives . — delegate (del-ə-gayt) (for sense 1), vb. — delegable (del-ə-gə-bəl) (for sense 1), adj.

delegation doctrine. Constitutional law. The principle (based on the separation-of-powers concept) limiting Congress's ability to transfer its legislative power to another governmental branch, esp. the executive branch. • Delegation is permitted only if Congress prescribes an intelligible principle to guide an executive agency in making policy. — Also termed nondelegation doctrine. See legislative veto under VETO.

delegation of duties. Contracts. A transaction by which a party to a contract arranges to have a third party perform the party's contractual duties.

delegation of powers. A transfer of authority by one branch of government to another branch or to an administrative agency. See DELEGATION DOCTRINE.

de legatis et fidei commissis (dee li-gay-tis et fi-dee-i kə-mis-is). [Latin] Of legacies and trusts. • This is a title in the Pandects.

de lege ferenda (dee lee-jee fə-rən-də). [Latin “from law to be passed”] Int'l law. A principle created to apply to a given situation, rather than from existing precedents; law created for changing circumstances. Cf. DE LEGE LATA.

“It is not sufficient for the codifiers of international law to study the subject matter solely from the juridical aspect, or to rely only on the state practice, precedent and doctrine.’ . . . [T]he systematic development of sociological inquiries concerning international law is indispensable for the human future, at any rate, insofar as the human future is deemed to depend on the role of international law. It seems indispensable, moreover, not only for the development of international law de lege ferenda, but also for the clarification of its present content de lege lata.” R.P. Dhokalia, The Codification of Public International Law 334–35 (1970).

de lege lata (dee lee-jee lay-tə). [Latin “from law passed”] Int'l law. 1. Existing law. 2. The principle that a court should decide based on actual law and not on how it thinks the law ought to be. Cf. DE LEGE FERENDA.

deleterious (del-ə-teer-ee-əs), adj. 1. Poisonous <deleterious toxins>. 2. Unwholesome; psychologically or physically harmful <deleterious influence>.

de libera falda (dee lib-ər-ə fal-də or fawl-də), n. [Law Latin “of free fold”] Hist. A writ allowing a free feeding, esp. of sheep on land. • This was a form of quod permittat.

de libera piscaria (dee lib-ər-ə pi-skair-ee-ə), n. [Law Latin “of free fishery”] Hist. A writ allowing an exclusive right to fish on public navigable water. • This was a form of quod permittat.

deliberate (di-lib-[ə]-rit), adj. 1. Intentional; premeditated; fully considered. 2. Unimpulsive; slow in deciding.

deliberate elicitation. Criminal procedure. The purposeful yet covert drawing forth of an incriminating response (usu. not during a formal interrogation) from a suspect whose Sixth Amendment right to counsel has attached but who has not waived that right. • Deliberate elicitation may occur, for example, when a police officer engages an arrested suspect in conversation on the way to the police station. Deliberate elicitation violates the Sixth Amendment. Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 84 S.Ct. 1199 (1964).

deliberate-indifference instruction. See JEWELL INSTRUCTION.

deliberate speed, with all. As quickly as the maintenance of law and order and the welfare of the people will allow, esp. with respect to the desegregation of public schools. Brown v. Board of Educ., 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686 (1954).

deliberation, n. The act of carefully considering issues and options before making a decision or taking some action; esp., the process by which a jury reaches a verdict, as by analyzing, discussing, and weighing the evidence. — deliberate (di-lib-ə-rayt), vb.

deliberative-process privilege. See PRIVILEGE (1).

de libero passagio (dee lib-ər-oh pə-say-jee-oh), n. [Law Latin “of free passage”] Hist. A writ allowing free passage over water. • This was a form of quod permittat.

de libertate probanda (dee lib-ər-tay-tee proh-ban-də), n. [Law Latin “for proving liberty”] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff to take security from a person accused of being a villein and to protect that person from harassment until the person’s status was determined by the justices of assize.

de libertatibus allocandis (dee lib-ər-tay-tə-bəs al-ə-kan-dis), n. [Law Latin “for allowing liberties”] Hist. A writ allowing a person entitled to certain liberties to obtain them.

de licentia transfretandi (dee li-sen-shee-ə trans-frə-tan-di), n. [Law Latin “of permission to cross the sea”] Hist. A writ ordering wardens of seaports, on certain conditions, to permit any person named in the writ to cross the sea.

delict (di-lik-t), n. [Latin delictum “an offense”] A violation of the law; a tort; a wrong. — Also termed (in Roman law) delictum; (in French law) délict.

“A delict is a civil wrong. It is an infringement of another’s interests that is wrongful irrespective of any prior contractual undertaking to refrain from it — though there may also be one. It entitles the injured party to claim compensation in civil proceedings — though criminal proceedings aimed at punishing the wrongdoer may also ensue.” 1 P.Q.R. Boberg, The Law of Delict 1 (1984).

private delict. A wrong regarded primarily as a matter of compensation between individuals.

public delict. A wrong for which the community as a whole takes steps to punish the offender. Cf. public tort under TORT.

quasi-delict. 1. Roman law. An offense for which some person other than the actual perpetrator is held responsible, such as a master for the wrongdoing of a slave.

“QUASI-DELICT . . . Justinian enumerates four cases of obligations said to arise quasi ex delicto. The implication seems to be that in all of them the law creates a liability though the defendant may not in fact be to blame. The cases are the following: — (1) The judge who ‘makes the case his own’ . . . incurs a penalty fixed by the magistrate at discretion . . . (2) If anything was thrown, or poured, from an upper room . . . the occupier was liable for double the damage . . . (3) If a thing was kept placed or suspended over a way used by the public . . . there was a penalty . . . which might be recovered from the occupier . . . (4) Ship-owners, innkeepers and stable-keepers were liable for damage or theft committed by slaves or free persons in their employ . . .” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 401–02 (4th ed. 1956).

2. See quasi-offense under OFFENSE (2).

delictal. See DELICTUAL.

deliction (di-lik-shən). The loss of land by gradual, natural changes, such as erosion resulting from a change in the course of a river or stream. Cf. ACCRETION (1); ALLUVION; AVULSION (2); EROSION.

delictual (di-lik-chə-wəl), adj. Of, relating to, or involving a delict; TORTIOUS. — Also termed delictal.

delictual fault. Civil law. A legal obligation arising between people independent of any prior contractual or other legal relationship between them, such as the obligation arising when one person commits a tort against another person.

delictum. See DELICT.

delimitation. The act of marking a boundary or fixing a limit.

delimit (di-lim-it), vb. To mark (a boundary); to fix (a limit).

delimitation. A fixing of limits or boundaries.

delinquency, n. 1. A failure or omission; a violation of a law or duty. See JUVENILE DELINQUENCY. 2. A debt that is overdue in payment.

delinquency charge. See CHARGE.

delinquent, adj. 1. (Of a person) failing to perform an obligation. 2. (Of a person) guilty of serious antisocial or criminal conduct. 3. (Of an obligation) past due or unperformed.

delinquent, n. 1. A person who fails to perform an obligation. 2. A person guilty of serious antisocial or criminal conduct. See JUVENILE DELINQUENT.

delinquent child. See CHILD.

delinquent minor. See JUVENILE DELINQUENCY.

delinquent tax. See TAX.

delirium. 1. A disordered mental state, often occurring during illness. 2. Exaggerated excitement. 3. A delusion; a hallucination.

delisting, n. The suspension of the privilege of having a security listed on an exchange. • Delisting results from failing to meet the exchange's listing requirements, as by not complying with the minimum net-asset requirement. — delist, vb. Cf. DEREGISTRATION.

délit. See DELICT.

deliverance. 1. A jury's verdict. 2. A judicial opinion or judgment. 3. A court's order directing that a person in custody be released; esp., such an order by an ecclesiastical court. — Also termed writ of deliverance. 4. Archaic. In a replevin action, a writ ordering the redelivery to the owner of goods.

second deliverance. Hist. A second replevin remedy after the plaintiff has been nonsuited and the distrained property has been returned to the defendant. — Also termed writ of second deliverance.

"And at the common law, the plaintiff might have brought another replevin, and so in infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. Wherefore the statute of Westm. 2, c. 2 restrains the plaintiff, when nonsuited, from suing any fresh replevin, but allows him a judicial writ issuing out of the original record, and called a writ of second deliverance, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him, on giving the like security as before. And, if the plaintiff be a second time nonsuit, or if the defendant has judgment upon verdict ... he shall have a writ or return irreplevisable, after which no writ of second deliverance shall be allowed." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 150 (1767).

5. Such a release (as in sense 3) or redelivery (as in sense 4).

delivery, n. 1. The formal act of transferring or conveying something, such as a deed; the giving or yielding possession or control of something to another. 2. The thing so transferred or conveyed. — deliver, vb. Cf. LIVERY.

absolute delivery. A delivery that is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the grantor's possession. • Such a delivery usu. does not depend on recordation.

actual delivery. The act of giving real and immediate possession to the buyer or the buyer's agent.

conditional delivery. A delivery that passes possession only upon the happening of a specified event.

constructive delivery. An act that amounts to a transfer of title by operation of law when actual transfer is impractical or impossible. • For example, the delivery of a deposit-box key by someone who is ill and immobile amounts to a constructive delivery of the box's contents even though the box may be miles away. For the three traditional types of constructive delivery, see ATTORNMENT; CONSTITUTUM POSSESSORIUM; TRADITIO BREVI MANU.

good delivery. Securities. The basic conditions for delivery of a security, including that (1) the certificate is in good condition, (2) the certificate belongs to the person transferring it, (3) the certificate is properly indorsed, and (4) any legal documents necessary for negotiability must accompany the certificate.

second delivery. A legal delivery by the depository of a deed placed in escrow.

symbolic delivery. The constructive delivery of the subject matter of a sale by the actual delivery of an article that represents the item, that renders access to it possible, or that provides evidence of the purchaser's title to it, such as the key to a warehouse or a bill of lading for goods on shipboard.

unconditional delivery. A delivery that immediately passes both possession and title and that takes effect immediately.

delivery bond. See forthcoming bond under BOND (2).

delivery in escrow. The physical transfer of something to an escrow agent to be held until some condition is met, at which time the agent will release it. • An example of such a delivery is a stock buyer's transfer of cash to a bank that will give the seller the cash upon receiving the stock certificates. This type of delivery creates immediate conditional rights in the promisee. The device may be used to create an option contract in which the promisee has the option. See ESCROW.

delivery of deed. The placing of a deed in the grantee's hands or within the grantee's control. • By this act, the grantor shows an intention that the deed operates immediately as a conveyance.

delivery order. A written order to deliver goods, directed to a warehouseman, carrier, or other person who ordinarily issues warehouse receipts or bills of lading. UCC § 7-102(1)(d).

de lunatico inquirendo (dee loo-nat-ə-koh inkwə-ren-doh), n. [Law Latin “for inquiring about a lunatic”] Hist. A writ or commission to determine whether a person is a lunatic. — Also termed commission of lunacy.

dem. abbr. DEMISE.

de magna assisa eligenda (dee mag-nə ə-si-zə el-i-jen-də), n. [Law Latin “of choosing the grand assize”] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to first summon 4 knights to give oaths before the justices of assize and then choose 12 more knights to form a grand assize to determine who had the right in a writ of right.

de malo (dee mal-oh). [Law Latin] Of illness. ● This term defined certain legal excuses, such as de malo lecti (“of illness in bed”), de malo veniendi (“of illness or misfortune in coming where the court is”), and de malo villae (“of illness in town where the court is”).

demand, n. 1. The assertion of a legal right.

cross-demand. A party’s demand opposing an adverse party’s demand. See COUNTERCLAIM; CROSS-CLAIM.

incidental demand. Civil law. A plea by which a party other than the plaintiff asserts a claim that is related to the plaintiff’s suit. ● Examples include a cross-claim, a demand against a third party, an intervention, and a reconventional demand. La. Code Civ. Proc. art. 1031.

legal demand. A lawful demand made by an authorized person.

main demand. Civil law. A plaintiff’s principal or primary claim against one or more defendants, contained in an original or validly amended pleading. — Also termed principal demand; principal action.

reconventional demand. Civil law. A plea by which a defendant asserts any claim that it has against the plaintiff, or any offset against the plaintiff’s claim. ● This plea is similar to the common-law counterclaim. La. Code Civ. Proc. 1061 et seq.

2. A request for payment of a debt or an amount due.

personal demand. An in-person demand for payment upon the drawer, maker, or acceptor of a bill or note.

3. In economics, the intensity of buyer pressure on the availability and cost of a commodity or service.

aggregate demand. 1. The total amount spent on goods and services in an economy during a specific period. 2. The total demand for a firm’s products and services during a specific period.

derived demand. Product demand that is related to another product’s demand.

demand, vb. 1. To claim as one’s due; to require; to seek relief. 2. To summon; to call into court.

demandant. Archaic. The plaintiff in a real action (the defendant being called a tenant). See real action under ACTION.

demand clause. A provision in a note allowing the holder to compel full payment if the maker fails to meet an installment.

demand deposit. See DEPOSIT (2).

demand draft. See sight draft under DRAFT.

demand for document inspection. See REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION.

demand for relief. See PRAYER FOR RELIEF.

demand instrument. An instrument payable on demand, at sight, or on presentation, as opposed to an instrument that is payable at a set future date. — Also termed demand note.

demand letter. A letter by which one party explains its legal position in a dispute and requests that the recipient take some action (such as paying money owed), or else risk being sued. ● Under some statutes (esp. consumer-protection laws), a demand letter is a prerequisite for filing a lawsuit.

demand loan. See call loan under LOAN.

demand note. See NOTE (1); DEMAND INSTRUMENT.

demand of oyer. Hist. The assertion of a party’s right to hear, read, or inspect a deed of which profert is made by the opposing party in a pleading. See OYER (3).

demand of view. Hist. In a real action, a defendant's request to see the thing at issue to ascertain its identity and the circumstances of the claim. • If a real action was brought against a tenant who did not know what land was at issue, the tenant might demand a view. See VIEW (4).

demand-pull inflation. See INFLATION.

demandress. Archaic. A female demandant.

de manucaptione (dee man-yə-kap-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin "of manucaption"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to release on sufficient bail an accused felon whose initial offer of bail had been rejected.

de manutenendo (dee man-yə-tə-nen-doh), n. [Law Latin "of maintenance"] Hist. A writ against a person who has wrongfully meddled in a lawsuit by providing assistance to a party to continue the litigation. See MAINTENANCE (6).

demarcation line. Int'l law. A provisional border having the function of separating territories under different jurisdictions, usu. established when the political situation does not admit a final boundary arrangement. — Also termed line of demarcation.

démarche (day-mahrsh). [French "gait; walk"] An oral or written diplomatic statement, esp. one containing a demand, offer, protest, threat, or the like. — Also spelled demarche.

de maritagio amisso per defaultam (dee mar-ə-tay-jee-oh ə-mis-oh pər də-fawl-təm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ available to a tenant of a frankmarriage to regain land lost by default.

de me (dee mee). [Latin] Of me. • This phrase appeared in feudal grants to confirm that a superior lord's permission was not needed for the conveyance. This was distinguished from a conveyance a me de superiore meo ("from me of my superior"), in which the estate is to be held of the superior, and is invalid unless confirmed by the superior. Cf. A ME.

demeanor. Outward appearance or behavior, such as facial expressions, tone of voice, gestures, and the hesitation or readiness to answer questions. • In evaluating a witness's credibility, the jury may consider the witness's demeanor.

demeanor evidence. See EVIDENCE.

demease (di-meez), n. Hist. Death.

de medietate linguae (dee mee-dee-ə-tay-tee ling-gwee). [Law Latin] Of half-tongue. • This term describes a jury made up of an equal number of natives and aliens. Edward III originally provided for such a jury in commercial cases when one party was an alien. It was later extended to criminal cases. If enough aliens could not be found, trial proceeded with the available number.

de medio (dee mee-dee-oh), n. [Law Latin "of mesne"] Hist. A writ against a mesne (i.e., middle) lord to protect an undertenant from harassment by a paramount lord for rent actually due from the mesne lord. — Also termed writ of mesne.

de melioribus damnis (dee mee-lee-or-ə-bəs dam-nis). [Law Latin] Of the better damages. • This term describes a plaintiff's election of the defendant against which to take judgment when the jury has mistakenly awarded separate damages against two or more defendants for a joint tort. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff could take a judgment against the defendant that had been assessed the greatest damages, and then enter a nolle prosequi against the others.

demented, adj. Not of sound mind; insane.

dementenant en avant (də-men-tə-nahnt on ə-vahnt). [Law French] From this time forward.

de mercatoribus (dee mər-kə-tor-ə-bəs), n. [Latin "of merchants"] Hist. The title of two statutes enacted in the 11th and 13th years of the reign of Edward I, providing that the land of a business debtor could be held by a creditor as security until the debt was paid.

"But by the statute de mercatoribus . . . the whole of a man's lands was liable to be pledged in a statute merchant, for a debt contracted in trade; though one-half of them was liable to be taken in execution for any other debt of the owner." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 161 (1765).

demesne (di-mayn or di-meen), n. [French] 1. At common law, land held in one's own right, and not through a superior. 2. Domain; realm. — Also spelled demain.

ancient demesne. Hist. A manor that was held by the Crown at the time of William the Conqueror and was recorded in the Domesday Book.

demesne as of fee. Hist. Complete ownership of something.

demesne land. See LAND.

demesne land of the Crown. See Crown land under LAND.

demesnial (di-may-nee-əl or di-meen-ee-əl), adj. Of or relating to a demesne.

demi (dem-ee), n. [French] Half; the half. • The term is most often a combining form, as in demi-sanguie.

demedietas (dem-ee-di-ə-tas), n. [Law Latin] A half; a moiety.

demilitarization. Int'l law. The process by which a country obligates itself not to station military forces — or to maintain military installations — in specified areas or zones within its territory.

demilitarized zone. Int'l law. A territorial area in which a country is obligated not to station military forces or maintain military installations.

demimark. Hist. Half a mark; money equal to ten shillings and eight pence, required to be tendered in a writ of right to force the demandant to prove seisin.

de minimis (də min-ə-mis), adj. [Latin "of the least"] 1. Trifling; minimal. 2. (Of a fact or thing) so insignificant that a court may overlook it in deciding an issue or case. 3. DE MINIMIS NON CURAT LEX.

de minimis non curat lex (də min-ə-mis non kyoor-at leks). [Latin] The law does not concern itself with trifles. — Often shortened to de minimis.

de minis (dee min-is), n. [Latin "of threats"] Hist. A writ ordering a person to keep the peace when the person has threatened another person with bodily harm or property destruction.

deminutio (dee-mi-n[y]oo-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin deminuere "taking away"] Roman law. A deprivation or loss. • The term appeared, for example, in the phrase capitis deminutio "the loss of civil status." — Also spelled diminutio.

demi-sanguie (dem-ee-sang). [Law French] Half-blood; blood on either the father's or the mother's side. — Also termed demy-sanguie.

demise (di-miz), n. 1. The conveyance of an estate by will or lease <the demise of the land for one year>. 2. The instrument by which such a conveyance is accomplished <the demise set forth the terms of the transfer>. 3. The passing of property by descent or bequest . 4. The death of a person or (figuratively) of a thing <the corporation's untimely demise>. — Abbr. dem. — demise, vb.

demise of the Crown. The immediate, automatic transfer of a kingdom to a successor upon a sovereign's death or long absence from the throne.

"The king never dies. Henry, Edward, or George may die; but the king survives them all. For immediately upon the decease of the reigning prince in his natural capacity, his kingship or imperial dignity, by act of law, without any . . . interval, is vested at once in his heir; who is, eo instanti, king to all intents and purposes. And so tender is the law of supposing even a possibility of his death, that his natural dissolution is generally called his demise . . . an expression which signifies merely a transfer of property; for . . . when we say the demise of the crown, we mean only that, in consequence of the disunion of the king's body natural from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor; and so the royal dignity remains perpetual." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 242 (1765).

joint demise. In an ejectment action, a demise made by two or more persons in one declaration.

separate demise. In an ejectment action, a demise made solely by the lessor.

several demise. (often pl.) Hist. In an ejectment action, a list of demises by all people potentially owning the property at issue, used to ensure that the plaintiff had proved a lease from the person actually having title. See EJECTMENT.

single demise. In an ejectment action, a declaration containing one demise. See EJECTMENT.

demise charter. See CHARTER (4).

demise charterer. See demise charter under charter.

demised premises. Property that has been leased.

demisi (di-mī-zī). [fr. Latin demittere] I have demised. • This was the operative phrase in a lease.

demissio (di-mīsh-ee-oh), n. [fr. Latin demittere "to demise"] Hist. A lease or other transfer. • In an ejectment action, this term was used in the phrase ex demissione ("on the demise") to show that a nominal plaintiff (a fictitious person) held an estate on a demise from the real plaintiff.

de mittendo tenorem recordi (dee mi-ten-doh tē-nor-əm ri-kor-di), n. [Law Latin "of sending the tenor of a record"] Hist. A writ to certify a record under seal.

demobilization. A dismissal of troops from active service.

democracy, n. Government by the people, either directly or through representatives. — democratic, adj. Cf. REPUBLIC.

de moderata misericordia capienda (dee mod-ə-ray-tə miz-ə-ri-kor-dee-ə kap-ee-en-də), n. [Law Latin "for taking a moderate amercement"] Hist. A writ ordering a bailiff to take a moderate penalty from a party who had been excessively penalized in a court not of record. • The writ was founded on Magna Carta.

de modo decimandi (dee moh-doh des-ə-mān-di), n. [Law Latin] Eccles. law. Of a mode of tithing. • This refers to any special kind of tithing by custom that is different from the general law that usu. required the tenth part of an annual increase. For example, it could mean a twelfth part of a quantity of hay rather than a tenth part or a couple of hens instead of a normal tithing of eggs. — Also termed modus decimandi; modus.

demonetization. A disuse of a metal in coinage; a withdrawal of the value of a metal as money <the demonetization of gold in the United States>.

demonstratio (dem-ən-stray-shee-oh). [fr. Lat-in demonstrare "to show"] Roman law. 1. A description, as in falsa demonstratio (a false description of something or someone in a will).

2. The statement of facts in a formula, forming the basis of a claim. See FORMULA (1).

demonstrative bequest. See BEQUEST.

demonstrative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

demonstrative legacy. See LEGACY.

demote, vb. To lower (a person) in rank, position, or pay. See DEGRADATION.

demur (di-mər), vb. To file a demurrer; to object to the legal sufficiency of a claim alleged in a pleading without admitting or denying the truth of the facts stated. See DEMURRER.

demurrable (di-mər-ə-bəl), adj. (Of a claim, pleading, etc.) subject to a demurrer . See DEMURRER.

demurrage (di-mər-ij). (usu. pl.) Maritime law. A liquidated penalty owed by a charterer to a shipowner for the charterer's failure to load or unload cargo by a certain time.

contract demurrage. A demurrage paid by a vessel's charterer if the time to unload the vessel at port takes longer than that agreed upon in the charterer's contract with the shipowner. Cf. DISPATCH MONEY.

"The contract may also provide that if . . . the loading time exceeds that fixed by the charter, the charterer will pay a liquidated compensation termed 'contract demurrage.'" Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 56 (2d ed. 1988).

noncontract demurrage. Demurrage not provided by contract, but ordered by a court. — Also termed damages for detention.

"After the . . . days on contract demurrage have expired, the charterer of course still remains liable for further delay, but the liability now is one for noncontract demurrage, which will be fixed by the court just as would any other unliquidated claim for damages. Non-contract demurrage may also be referred to as 'damages for detention.'" Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 4-8, at 212 (2d ed. 1975).

demurrage lien. See LIEN.

demurrant (di-mər-ənt). A party who interposes a demurrer. See DEMURRER.

demurrer (di-mər-ər). [Law French demorer "to wait or stay"] A pleading stating that although the facts alleged in a complaint may be true, they are insufficient for the plaintiff to state a claim for relief and for the defendant to frame an answer. • In most jurisdictions, such a pleading is now termed a motion to dismiss, but the demurrer is still used in a few states, including California, Nebraska, and Pennsylvania. Cf. DENIAL (1).

"The word 'demurrer,' derived from the Latin demorari, or the French demorrer, meaning to 'wait or stay,' imports that the party demurring waits or stays in his proceedings in the action until the judgment of the court is given whether he is bound to answer to so insufficient a pleading. Each party may demur to what he deems an insufficient pleading of the other. The demurrer was general when it was to matter of substance; it was special when it was made to matter of form, and must specifically point out the defect." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 15 (2d ed. 1899).

demurrer ore tenus. An oral demurrer. See ORE TENUS.

"The codes either expressly or by implication require all pleadings to be in writing. To this proposition there is the apparent exception that objections to the jurisdiction of the court, or to the sufficiency of a pleading, that it does not state a cause of action or defence, may be raised on the trial by what is sometimes called a demurrer ore tenus (that is, orally, — by word of mouth)." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 179 (2d ed. 1899).

general demurrer. See general exception (1) under EXCEPTION (1).

parol demurrer. Hist. A suspension of proceedings during the minority of an infant.

speaking demurrer. A demurrer that cannot be sustained because it introduces new facts not contained in the original complaint.

special demurrer. An objection that questions the form of the pleading and states specifically the nature of the objection, such as that the pleading violates the rules of pleading or practice.

demurrer book. A record of the demurrer issue used by the court and counsel in argument.

demurrer to evidence. A party's objection or exception that the evidence is legally insufficient to make a case. • Its effect, upon joinder in the demurrer by the opposite party, is that the jury is discharged and the demurrer is entered on record and decided by the court. A demurrer to evidence admits the truth of all the evidence and the legal deductions from that evidence.

demurrer to interrogatories. The objection or reason given by a witness for failing to answer an interrogatory.

demutualization, n. The process of converting a mutual insurance company (which is owned by its policyholders) to a stock insurance company (which is owned by outside shareholders), usu. as a means of increasing the insurer's capital by allowing the insurer to issue shares. • About half the states have demutualization statutes authorizing such a conversion. — demutualize, vb.

demy-sangué. See DEMI-SANGUE.

den and strond (den an[d] strond). Hist. Permission for a ship to run aground or strand itself.

denarius (di-nair-ee-əs), n. [Law Latin "penny"] 1. Roman law. The principal silver coin used by the Romans. 2. Hist. An English penny; a pence. 3. (pl.) Slang. Money in general. Pl. denarii. — Also termed denier.

denarius Dei (di-nair-ee-əs dee-I), n. [Law Latin "God's penny"] Hist. Earnest money exchanged by contracting parties, so called because the money was originally given either to the church or to the poor. • The denarius Dei was not part of the consideration. See ARRA.

denationalization. 1. Int'l law. The unilateral act of a country in depriving a person of nationality, whether by administrative decision or by operation of law. • Strictly, the term does not cover a person's renunciation of citizenship. 2. The act of returning government ownership and control of an industry or function to private ownership and control. — denationalize, vb.

de nativo habendo (dee nā-ti-voh hə-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin "about a serf to be held"] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff to apprehend and return a runaway serf to the serf's lord. • A trial on the writ would determine the lord's ownership status.

de natura brevium (dee nā-tyoor-ə bree-vee-ə). [Latin] Concerning the nature of writs. • This was a common title of textbooks on English medieval law.

denial, n. 1. A refusal or rejection; esp., a court's refusal to grant a request presented in a motion or petition <denial of the motion for summary judgment>. 2. A defendant's response controverting the facts that a plaintiff has alleged in a complaint; a repudiation <the worker's denial that physical contact occurred>. Cf. DEMURRER.

conjunctive denial. A response that controverts all the material facts alleged in a complaint.

disjunctive denial. A response that controverts the truthfulness of two or more allegations of a complaint in the alternative.

general denial. A response that puts in issue all the material assertions of a complaint or petition. — Also termed general plea.

qualified general denial. A general denial of all the allegations except the allegations that the pleader expressly admits.

"The qualified general denial most frequently is used when a limited number of allegations in the complaint are to be admitted. This form of denial also is employed when defendant cannot expressly deny an averment in his opponent's pleading and therefore cannot submit a general denial, although defendant wants to put plaintiff to his proof on that averment by interposing a denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief or a denial on information and belief." 5 Charles Alan Wright & Arthur Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1266, at 405 (1990).

specific denial. A separate response applicable to one or more particular allegations in a complaint.

3. A refusal or rejection <denial of an employment application>. 4. A deprivation or withholding <denial of due process>. — deny, vb.

denial of justice. Int'l law. A defect in a country's organization of courts or administration of justice, resulting in the country's violating its international legal duties to protect aliens. ● A denial of justice is a wrongful act under international law. — Also termed justitia denegata; déni de justice; refus de justice.

denier, n. 1. (də-nyay) [French fr. Latin denarius] DENARIUS (1), (3). 2. (di-nī-ər). [Law French] Hist. Denial; refusal, as in refusal to pay rent when demanded.

Denier à Dieu (də-nyay ah dyoo or dyoo). [French "God's money"] French law. Earnest money exchanged by contracting parties. See DENARIUS DEI.

denization (den-ə-zay-shən). The act of making a person a denizen. See DENIZEN.

denize (den-iz or di-nīz), vb. To make (a person) a denizen. See DENIZEN.

denizen (den-ə-zən). 1. A person given certain rights in a foreign nation or living habitually in a foreign nation. 2. English law. A person who holds a position midway between being an alien and a natural-born or naturalized subject.

Denman's Act. Hist. 1. The (English) Evidence Act of 1843, providing that no person offered as a witness can be excluded because of incapacity due to a past crime or an interest in the proceedings. — Also termed Lord Denman's Act. 2. The (English) Criminal Procedure Act of 1865 that allowed defense counsel to sum up evidence as allowed in a civil trial, to prove contradictory statements of an adverse witness, to prove a previous criminal conviction of an adverse witness, and to compare disputed handwriting. — Also termed Mr. Denman's Act.

denomination. 1. An act of naming. 2. A collective designation, esp. of a religious sect.

de non decimando (dee non des-ə-man-doh), n. [Law Latin "of not paying tithes"] Eccles. law. A claim for release from paying a tithe. — Also termed modus de non decimando.

"A prescription de non decimando is a claim to be entirely discharged of tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. Thus the king by his prerogative is discharged from all tithes. So a vicar shall pay no tithes to the rector, nor the rector to the vicar But these privileges are personal to both the king and the clergy; for their tenant or lessee shall pay tithes And from this original have sprung all the lands, which, being in lay hands, do at present claim to be tithe-free: for, if a man can show his lands to have been such abbey lands, and also immemorially discharged of tithes . . . this is now a good prescription, de non decimando. But he must show both these requisites for abbey lands, without a special ground of discharge, are not discharged of course; neither will any prescription de non decimando avail in total discharge of tithes, unless it relates to such abbey lands." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 31-32 (1766).

de non procedendo ad assisam (dee non proh-sə-den-doh ad ə-sī-zəm), n. [Law Latin "of not proceeding to take an assize"] Hist. A writ ordering justices not to hold an assize in a particular case.

Department of Justice. The federal executive division that is responsible for federal law enforcement and related programs and services. ● The U.S. Attorney General heads this department, which has separate divisions for prosecuting cases under federal antitrust laws, tax laws, environmental laws, and criminal laws. The department also has a civil division that represents the U.S. government in cases involving tort claims and commercial litigation. — Abbr. DOJ.

Department of State. See STATE DEPARTMENT.

Department of the Interior. A federal department responsible for managing federally owned land and natural resources, and for overseeing American Indian reservations. ● The Department administers a number of agencies, including the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the U.S. Geological Survey. — Also termed Interior Department.

Department of Transportation. The federal executive division that is responsible for programs and policies concerning transportation. ● Through a series of specialized agencies, this department oversees aviation, highways, railroads, mass transit, the U.S. merchant marine, and other programs. — Abbr. DOT.

departure, n. 1. A deviation or divergence from a standard rule, regulation, measurement, or course of conduct <an impermissible departure from sentencing guidelines>.

downward departure. In the federal sentencing guidelines, a court's imposition of a sentence more lenient than the standard guidelines propose, as when the court concludes that a criminal's history is less serious than it appears.

lateral departure. In the federal sentencing guidelines, a sentence that allows a defendant to avoid incarceration through community or home confinement. — Also termed lateral sentencing.

upward departure. In the federal sentencing guidelines, a court's imposition of a sentence harsher than the standard guidelines propose, as when the court concludes that a criminal's history did not take into account additional offenses committed while the prisoner was out on bail.

2. A variance between a pleading and a later pleading or proof <the departure between the plaintiff's pleadings and the actual evidence was significant>. 3. A party's desertion of the ground (either legal or factual) taken in the immediately preceding pleading and resort to another ground <the defendant's departure from the asserted alibi necessitated a guilty plea>. — depart, vb.

departure in despite of court. Hist. A failure of a tenant in a real action to appear on demand. ● A tenant, having once appeared in a real action, was considered to be constructively present until again called. So if the tenant failed to appear when demanded, the tenant was said to have departed in despite (in contempt) of court.

dépeçage (dep-ə-sahzh). [French "dismemberment"] A court's application of different state laws to different issues in a legal dispute; choice of law on an issue-by-issue basis.

depeculation (dee-pek-yə-lay-shən). Hist. An embezzlement from the public treasure. Cf. PECULATION.

legal dependent. A person who is dependent according to the law; a person who derives principal support from another and usu. may invoke laws to enforce that support.

partial dependent. Workers' compensation. A person whose partial reliance on an employee covered under workers'-compensation law for support entitles him or her to receive death benefits if the employee is killed on the job.

2. Tax. A relative, such as a child or parent, for whom a taxpayer may claim a personal exemption if the taxpayer provides more than half the person's support during the taxable year. — Also termed lawful dependent. — dependent, adj.

dependent claim. See CLAIM (6).

dependent condition. See CONDITION (2).

dependent contract. See CONTRACT.

dependent covenant. See COVENANT (1).

dependent coverage. See COVERAGE.

dependent intervening cause. A cause of an accident or injury that occurs between the defendant's behavior and the injurious result, but that does not change the defendant's liability.

dependent promise. See PROMISE.

dependent relative revocation. The doctrine that regards as mutually dependent the acts of destroying a will and substituting a new one when both acts are the result of one plan, so that, if a testator fails to complete the substitution, it is presumed that the testator would have preferred the old will to take effect. • This doctrine is a specific application of the rule that the testator's intent governs.

dependent state. See nonsovereign state under STATE (1).

de ponendo sigillum ad exceptionem de perambulatione facienda (dee pə-ram-byə-lay-shee-oh-nee fay-shee-en-də), n. [Law Latin "for making perambulation"] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to go with 12 knights of the county to settle a boundary dispute by walking about to determine the proper boundary between adjacent towns or lordships.

de placito (dee plas-ə-toh), n. [Law Latin] Of a plea. • These words were used in a declaration describing the particular action being brought, as in de placito debiti ("of a plea of debt").

de plagis et mahemio (dee play-jis et mə-hee-mee-oh), n. [Law Latin "of wounds and mayhem"] Hist. A type of criminal appeal used in cases of wounding and maiming.

de plano (dee play-noh). [Latin "from ground level"] 1. Roman law. Informally; in a summary manner. • The praetor would administer justice de plano when he stood on the same level with the parties instead of sitting on an elevated bench. 2. Hist. Clearly; manifestly, as in de bigamis. See DE BIGAMIS. 3. Hist. By collusion. 4. Scots law. Forthwith.

de plegiis acquietandis (dee plee-jee-is ə-kwi-ə-tan-dis), n. [Law Latin "for acquitting or releasing pledges"] Hist. A writ ordering repayment to a surety by a principal who had failed to make a required payment that the surety then had to cover.

depletable economic interest. A mineral-land interest subject to depletion by the removal (by drilling or mining) of the mineral that is the subject of the interest.

depletion, n. An emptying, exhausting, or wasting of an asset, esp. of a finite natural resource such as oil. — deplete, vb. — depletive, adj.

depletion allowance. See ALLOWANCE (3).

depletion reserve. Accounting. A charge to income reflecting the decrease in the value of a wasting asset, such as an oil reserve.

de ponendo sigillum ad exceptionem (dee pə-nen-doh si-jil-əm ad ek-sep-shee-oh-nəm), n. [Law Latin "for putting a seal to an exception"] Hist. A writ directing justices of assize to preserve exceptions taken by a party in a case.

deponent (di-poh-nənt), n. 1. One who testifies by deposition. 2. A witness who gives written testimony for later use in court; AFFIANT. — depone, vb.

depopulatio agrorum (dee-pop-yoo-lay-shee-oh ə-gror-əm), n. [Law Latin “depopulating the county”] Hist. The crime of destroying or ravaging a country. ● A person could not claim the benefit of clergy for this crime.

depopulation. 1. A reduction in population. 2. Hist. A species of waste by which the kingdom’s population was diminished. See DEPOPULATIO AGRORUM.

deportatio (dee-por-tay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin deportare “to carry away”] Roman law. Permanent exile of a condemned criminal. ● The person’s legal rights were virtually eliminated, all property was forfeited, and the person was “taken out of the number of Roman citizens” (ex numero civium Romanorum tollitur). Cf. RELEGATIO.

“Deportatio. Perpetual banishment of a person condemned for a crime. It was the severest form of banishment since it included additional penalties, such as seizure of the whole property, loss of Roman citizenship, confinement to a definite place. Under the Principate it replaced the former interdictio aqua et igni. The emperor could grant the deportee full amnesty, which restored him to his former rights (postliminium). Places of deportatio were islands (in insulam) near the Italian shore or an oasis in the Libyan desert.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 432 (1953).

deportation (dee-por-tay-shən), n. The act or an instance of removing a person to another country; esp., the expulsion or transfer of an alien from a country. — deport, vb.

deposit, n. 1. The act of giving money or other property to another who promises to preserve it or to use it and return it in kind; esp., the act of placing money in a bank for safety and convenience. 2. The money or property so given.

demand deposit. A bank deposit that the depositor may withdraw at any time without prior notice to the bank.

direct deposit. The payment of wages by transferring the payment directly into the employee’s bank account, usu. by electronic transfer.

frozen deposit. A bank deposit that cannot be withdrawn, as when the financial institution is insolvent.

general deposit. 1. A bank deposit of money that is commingled with other depositors’ money. 2. A bank deposit that is to the depositor’s credit, thus giving the depositor a right to the money and creating a debtor-creditor relationship between the bank and the depositor. ● A bank is not required to return the actual money deposited as a general deposit, as it must with a special deposit; the bank need return only an equivalent sum.

special deposit. A bank deposit that is made for a specific purpose, that is kept separately, and that is to be returned to the depositor. ● The bank serves as a bailee or trustee for a special deposit. — Also termed specific deposit.

time deposit. A bank deposit that is to remain for a specified period or on which notice must be given to the bank before withdrawal.

3. Money placed with a person as earnest money or security for the performance of a contract. ● The money will be forfeited if the depositor fails to perform. — Also termed security deposit. 4. Copyright. The placing of two copies of a published work with the Library of Congress within three months of publication. ● This requirement is independent of copyright registration. 5. Civil law. A bailment of goods to be kept by the bailee without payment; a gratuitous caretaking of an object. — Also termed depositum; naked deposit; gratuitous deposit. See gratuitous bailment under BAILMENT.

involuntary deposit. A deposit made by accidentally leaving or placing personal property in another’s possession. See involuntary bailment under BAILMENT.

necessary deposit. A bailment, usu. made by reason of emergency or other necessity, that prevents the depositor from freely choosing the depository. ● A necessary deposit occurs, for example, when a person entrusts goods to a stranger during a fire.

quasi-deposit. An involuntary deposit made when one party lawfully possesses property merely by finding it.

voluntary deposit. A deposit made by the mutual consent of the bailor and bailee.

deposit account. See ACCOUNT.

depository. 1. A person or institution that one leaves money or valuables with for safekeeping . • When a depository is a company, it is often termed a safe-deposit company. Cf. DEPOSITORY. 2. A gratuitous bailee. See DEPOSIT (6).

depository bank. See BANK.

deposit box. See SAFE-DEPOSIT BOX.

deposit company. See COMPANY.

deposit contract. See CONTRACT.

deposit in court. The placing of money or other property that represents a person's potential liability in the court's temporary custody, pending the outcome of a lawsuit. — Also termed deposit into the registry of the court.

deposit insurance. See INSURANCE.

deposit into the registry of the court. See DEPOSIT IN COURT.

deposition (dep-ə-zish-ən). 1. A witness's out-of-court testimony that is reduced to writing (usu. by a court reporter) for later use in court or for discovery purposes. 2. The session at which such testimony is recorded.

apex deposition. The deposition of a person whose position is at the highest level of a company's hierarchy. • Courts often preclude an apex deposition unless (1) the person to be deposed has particular knowledge regarding the claim, and (2) the requesting party cannot obtain the requested — and discoverable — information through less intrusive means.

deposition de bene esse (dee bee-nee es-ee also day ben-ay es-ay). A deposition taken from a witness who will likely be unable to attend a scheduled trial or hearing. • If the witness is not available to attend trial, the testimony is read at trial as if the witness were present in court. See testimony de bene esse under TESTIMONY.

deposition on written questions. A deposition given in response to a prepared set of written questions, as opposed to a typical oral deposition. — Formerly also termed deposition on written interrogatories.

"The advantage of a deposition on written questions is that counsel for the parties need not go to some distant place to be present at the taking of the deposition. Instead they serve on each other questions and cross questions — and even redirect and recross questions — that they wish to have put to the deponent. These are then sent to the officer who is to take the deposition. The officer puts the questions to the witness, records the answers, and transcribes and files the deposition as with an oral deposition. The officer is merely to record what the witness says in response to the various questions propounded to him or her." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 85, at 618–19 (5th ed. 1994).

oral deposition. A deposition given in response to oral questioning by a lawyer.

30(b)(6) deposition. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the deposition of an organization, through the organization's designated representative. • Under Rule 30(b)(6), a party may take the deposition of an organization, such as a corporation. The notice of deposition (or subpoena) may name the organization and may specify the matters to be covered in the deposition. The organization must then designate a person to testify about those matters on its behalf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(6). Most states authorize a similar procedure under state-court procedural rules.

deposit of title deeds. A pledge of real property as security for a loan, by placing with the lender, as pledgee, the title-deed to the land.

depositor, n. One who makes a deposit. See DEPOSIT.

depository (di-poz-ə-tor-ee), n. A place where one leaves money or valuables for safekeeping <the grade school's depository for used books>. Cf. DEPOSITORY.

depository bond. See BOND (2).

depository institution. 1. An organization formed under state or federal law, authorized by law to receive deposits, and supervised and examined by a government agency for the protection of depositors. 2. A trust company or other institution authorized by law to exercise fiduciary powers similar to those of a national bank. • The term does not include an insurance company, a Morris Plan bank, an industrial loan company, or a similar bank unless its deposits are insured by a federal agency.

depository-transfer check. See CHECK.

Depository Trust Corporation. The principal central clearing agency for securities transactions on the public markets. — Abbr. DTC.

deposit premium. The initial premium paid by an insured pending the final premium adjustment.

deposit ratio. The ratio of total deposits to total capital.

deposit slip. A bank's acknowledgment of an amount received on a certain date by a depositor.

depositum (di-poz-i-təm). See gratuitous bailment under BAILMENT; DEPOSIT (5).

deposit warrant. See WARRANT (2).

de post disseisina (dee pohst dis-see-zin-ə), n. [Law Latin "of past disseisin"] Hist. A writ for recovery of land by a person who had previously recovered the land from a disseisor by a praecipe quod reddat or on a default or redemption, but who was again disseised by the same disseisor.

de praerogativa regis (dee pri-rog-ə-ti-və ree-jis). See PRAEROGATIVA REGIS.

de praesenti (dee pri-zen-ti). [Law Latin] In the present tense; of the present.

depraved-heart murder. See MURDER.

depreciable life. See USEFUL LIFE.

depreciation (di-pree-shee-ay-shən), n. A decline in an asset's value because of use, wear, or obsolescence. — depreciate, *vb. — depreciable, *adj. Cf. APPRECIATION; AMORTIZATION (2).

accumulated depreciation. The total depreciation currently recorded on an asset. ● On the balance sheet, an asset's total cost less accumulated depreciation reflects the asset's book value. — Also termed accrued depreciation.

annual depreciation. The annual loss to property due to regular wear and tear.

functional depreciation. Depreciation that results from the replacement of equipment that is not yet worn out, but that is obsolete in light of a new invention or improved machinery allowing more efficient and satisfactory production.

depreciation method. A set formula used in estimating an asset's use, wear, or obsolescence over the asset's useful life. ● This method is useful in calculating the allowable annual tax deduction for depreciation. See USEFUL LIFE.

accelerated depreciation method. A depreciation method that yields larger deductions in the earlier years of an asset's life and smaller deductions in the later years.

annuity depreciation method. A depreciation method that allows for a return of imputed interest on the undepreciated balance of an asset's value. ● The imputed interest is subtracted from the current depreciation amount before it is credited to the accumulated depreciation accounts.

declining-balance depreciation method. A method of computing the annual depreciation allowance by multiplying the asset's undepreciated cost each year by a uniform rate that may not exceed double the straight-line rate or 150 percent.

double-declining depreciation method. A depreciation method that spreads over time the initial cost of a capital asset by deducting in each period twice the percentage recognized by the straight-line method and applying that double percentage to the undepreciated balance existing at the start of each period.

replacement-cost depreciation method. A depreciation method that fixes an asset's value by the price of its substitute.

sinking-fund depreciation method. A depreciation method that accounts for the time value of money by setting up a depreciation-reserve account that earns interest, resulting in a gradual yearly increase in the depreciation deduction.

straight-line depreciation method. A depreciation method that writes off the cost or other basis of the asset by deducting the expected salvage value from the initial cost of the capital asset, and dividing the difference by the asset's estimated useful life.

sum-of-the-years'-digits depreciation method. A method of calculating the annual depreciation allowance by multiplying the depreciable cost basis (cost minus salvage value) by a constantly decreasing fraction, which is represented by the remaining years of useful life at the beginning of each year divided by the total number of years of useful life at the time of acquisition. — Sometimes shortened to SYD method.

unit depreciation method. A depreciation method — directly related to the productivity of the asset — that divides the asset's value by the estimated total number of units to be produced, and then multiplies the unit cost by the number of units sold during the year, representing the depreciation expense for the year.

units-of-output depreciation method. A method by which the cost of a depreciable asset, minus salvage value, is allocated to the accounting periods benefited based on output (as miles, hours, number of times used, and the like).

depreciation reserve. An account, esp. of a public utility, built up to offset the depreciation of property because of time and use, so that at the end of the property's service, there is enough money to replace the property.

depredation. The act of plundering; pillaging.

depression. A period of economic stress that persists over an extended period, accompanied by poor business conditions and high unemployment. Cf. RECESSION.

deprivation. 1. An act of taking away <deprivation of property>. 2. A withholding of something <deprivation of food>. 3. The state of being without something; wanting <deprivation from lack of food>. 4. A removal or degradation from office <deprivation of the bishop>.

Deprizio doctrine. Bankruptcy. The rule that a debtor's payment to an outside creditor more than 90 days before a bankruptcy filing is voidable as a preferential transfer if it benefits an inside creditor. Levit v. Ingersoll Rand Fin. Corp. (In re V.N. Deprizio Constr. Co.), 874 F.2d 1186 (7th Cir. 1989).

de procedendo ad iudicium (dee proh-sə-dē-doh ad joo-dish-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin "for proceeding in an assise"] Hist. A chancery writ ordering a lower court to proceed to judgment in a case that had been wrongfully stayed. • If the lower-court justices refused, they could be punished for contempt.

de proprietate probanda (dee prə-pri-ə-tay-tee prə-ban-də), n. [Law Latin "for proving property"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to investigate the ownership of distrained goods claimed by a defendant in a replevin action.

"If therefore the distreiner claims any such property, the party replevying must sue out a writ de proprietate probanda, in which the sheriff is to try, by an inquest, in whom the property previous to the distress subsisted. And if it be found to be in the distreiner, the sheriff can de recordo et processu mittendis proceed no farther; but must return the claim of property to the court of king's bench or common pleas, to be there farther prosecuted, if thought advisable, and there finally determined." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 148 (1768).

deputy, n. A person appointed or delegated to act as a substitute for another, esp. for an official. — deputize, depute, vb.

general deputy. 1. A deputy appointed to act in another officer's place and execute all ordinary functions of the office. 2. See deputy sheriff under SHERIFF.

special deputy. A deputy specially appointed to serve a particular purpose, such as keeping the peace during a riot.

deputy sheriff. See SHERIFF.

de quarantina habenda (dee kwahr-ən-ti-nə hā-ben-də), n. [Law Latin "of return of quarantine"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to give a widow possession of part of her husband's estate, after she had been wrongfully ejected but before dower is assigned. See QUARANTINE.

de quo (dee kwoh). [Latin] Of which. • These were formal words used in a writ of entry, as in a writ of entry "in the quo" or "in the quibus." — Also termed de quibus.

de rationabilibus divisis (dee rash-ən-ə-bil-i-bəs di-vi-sis), n. [Law Latin "of the fixing of reasonable boundaries"] Hist. A writ to settle the boundaries between property owners of different towns when one owner claimed a trespass by the other.

de rationabili parte bonorum (dee rash-[ee]-ə-nay-bə-li pahr-tee bə-nor-əm), n. [Law Latin "of reasonable share of goods"] Hist. A writ allowing the wife and children of a dead man to recover a reasonable share of his goods from his executors after his debts were paid. • This writ was usu. founded on custom rather than the general law.

de recordo et processu mittendis (dee ri-kor-doh et proh-ses-[y]oo mi-ten-dis), n. [Law Latin "of the sending of the record and process of a cause to a superior court"] A type of writ of error.

de recto (dee rek-toh), n. [Law Latin] A writ of right to recover both the seisin and the property. — Also termed breve de recto. See WRIT OF RIGHT.

de recto de advocacione (dee rek-toh dee ad-və-kay-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin “of the right of advowson”] Hist. A writ restoring a person’s right to present a clerk to a benefice when that right had been interfered with. • It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27.

de recto de rationabili parte (dee rek-toh dee rash-[ee]-ə-nay-bə-li pahr-tee), n. [Law Latin “of right of reasonable part”] Hist. A writ allowing one coparcener or blood relative owning land in fee simple to obtain a rightful share from the other. • It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27.

de recto patens (dee rek-toh pay-tenz), n. [Law Latin “of right patent”] Hist. The highest writ of right under the law given to an owner in fee simple to recover the possession and use of land from the freehold tenant. — Also termed breve magnum de recto.

de redisseisina (dee ree-dis-see-zin-ə), n. [Law Latin “of redisseisin”] Hist. A writ for recovery of land or rent by a person who had previously recovered the land or rent by an assize of novel disseisin, but who was again disseised by the same disseisor. • This writ is similar to de post disseisina. See DE POST DISSEISINA; DISSEISIN.

deregistration, n. The point at which an issuer’s registration under section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is no longer required because of a decline in the number of holders of the issuer’s securities. 15 USCA § 78l. — deregister, vb. Cf. DELISTING.

deregulation, n. The reduction or elimination of governmental control of business, esp. to permit free markets and competition. — deregulate, vb.

derelict (der-ə-likht), adj. 1. Forsaken; abandoned; cast away <derelict property>.

quasi-derelict. (Of a ship or similar vessel) temporarily or involuntarily deserted or abandoned, as when the crew is dead or otherwise incapable of navigating the ship.

2. Lacking a sense of duty; in breach of a legal or moral obligation <the managers were unquestionably derelict in their duties>.

derelict, n. 1. Personal property abandoned or thrown away by the owner with an intent to no longer claim it, such as a boat deserted or abandoned at sea by a master or crew.

quasi-derelict. A ship that has been abandoned temporarily or involuntarily.

2. Land uncovered by receding water from its former bed. 3. A street person or vagrant; a hobo.

dereliction (der-ə-lik-shən), n. 1. Abandonment, esp. through neglect or moral wrong.

dereliction in the performance of duties. Military law. Willful or negligent failure to perform assigned duties; culpable inefficiency in performing assigned duties.

2. An increase of land caused by the receding of a sea, river, or stream from its usual water-mark. See RELICTION.

de replegiore de averiis. See DE AVERIIS REPLEGIANDIS.

de rescussu (dee ri-skəs-[y]oo), n. [Law Latin “of rescue”] Hist. A writ available when cattle were distrained or persons were arrested, and then rescued.

de retorno habendo (dee ri-tor-noh hə-ben-doh). [Law Latin] For having a return. • This term applied to (1) a judgment for a defendant in a replevin action, (2) a writ of execution for a defendant awarded judgment in a replevin action, and (3) a surety provided by a plaintiff at the beginning of a replevin action.

d.e.r.i.c. abbr. DE EA RE ITA CENSUERE.

de rien culpable (də reen kəl-pə-bəl). [Law French] Guilty of nothing; not guilty.

derivative, n. A volatile financial instrument whose value depends on or is derived from the performance of a secondary source such as an underlying bond, currency, or commodity. — Also termed derivative instrument.

“Derivatives transactions may be based on the value of foreign currency, U.S. Treasury bonds, stock indexes, or interest rates. The values of these underlying financial instruments are determined by market forces, such as movements in interest rates. Within the broad panoply of derivatives transactions are numerous innovative financial instruments whose objectives may include a hedge against market risks, management of assets and liabilities, or lowering of funding costs; derivatives may also be used as speculation for profit.” Procter & Gamble Co. v. Bankers Trust Co., [1996–1997 Transfer Binder] derivative acquisition. See ACQUISITION.

derivative action. 1. A suit by a beneficiary of a fiduciary to enforce a right belonging to the fiduciary; esp., a suit asserted by a shareholder on the corporation's behalf against a third party (usu. a corporate officer) because of the corporation's failure to take some action against the third party. — Also termed derivative suit; shareholder derivative suit; stockholder derivative suit; representative action. Cf. DIRECT ACTION (3). 2. A lawsuit arising from an injury to another person, such as a husband's action for loss of consortium arising from an injury to his wife caused by a third person.

derivative contraband. See CONTRABAND.

derivative conveyance. See secondary conveyance under CONVEYANCE.

derivative defense. See DEFENSE (1).

derivative estate. See ESTATE.

derivative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

derivative instrument. See DERIVATIVE.

derivative-jurisdiction doctrine. The principle that a case is not properly removable unless it is within the subject-matter jurisdiction of the state court from which it is removed.

derivative liability. See LIABILITY.

derivative possession. See POSSESSION.

derivative suit. See DERIVATIVE ACTION (1).

derivative title. See TITLE (2).

derivative-use immunity. See use immunity under IMMUNITY (3).

derivative work. Copyright. A copyrightable creation that is based on a preexisting product, such as a translation, musical arrangement, fictionalization, motion-picture version, abridgment, or any other recast or adapted form, and that only the holder of the copyright on the original form can produce or give permission to another to produce. Cf. COMPILATION (1).

descendibility of future interests

"[W]hile a compilation consists merely of the selection and arrangement of pre-existing material without any internal changes in such material, a derivative work involves recasting or transformation, i.e., changes in the pre-existing material, whether or not it is juxtaposed in an arrangement with other pre-existing materials. A catalog constitutes a compilation, and a translation of a pre-existing work constitutes a derivative work." 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 3.02, at 3-5 (Supp. 1997).

derived demand. See DEMAND (3).

derogation (der-ə-gay-shən), n. 1. The partial repeal or abrogation of a law by a later act that limits its scope or impairs its utility and force <statutes in derogation of the common law>. 2. Disparagement; depreciation in value or estimation <some argue that the derogation of family values has caused an increase in crime>. 3. Detraction, prejudice, or destruction (of a grant or right) <an attorney may be punished for derogation from professional integrity>. — derogate (der-ə-gayt), vb.

derogation from grant. A provision in an instrument of transfer (such as a deed) that diminishes, avoids, or otherwise operates against the grant itself.

derogatory clause. Wills & estates. A clause that a testator inserts secretly in a will, containing a provision that any later will not having that precise clause is invalid. • A derogatory clause seeks to protect against a later will extorted by undue influence, duress, or violence.

de salva gardia (dee sal-və gahr-dee-ə), n. [Law Latin "of safeguard"] A writ issued to protect strangers from harm while pursuing their legal rights in England.

de salvo conductu (dee sal-voh kən-dək-t[y]oo). [Law Latin "of safe conduct"] A writ of safe conduct.

de sa vie (də sa vee). [Law French] Of one's own life, as distinguished from pur autre vie ("for another's life").

descendant (di-sen-dənt), n. One who follows in lineage, such as a child or grandchild — but not a collateral relative. Cf. ASCENDANT.

descendibility of future interests. The legal possibility that a future interest (such as a remainder or an executory interest) can legally pass by inheritance.

descendible, adj. (Of property) capable of passing by descent or being inherited.

descent, n. 1. The acquisition of real property by law, as by inheritance; the passing of intestate real property to heirs. See SUCCESSION (2). Cf. DISTRIBUTION (1); PURCHASE (2). 2. The fact or process of originating from a common ancestor. — descend, vb.

collateral descent. Descent in a collateral or oblique line, from brother to brother or cousin to cousin. • With collateral descent, the donor and donee are related through a common ancestor.

direct-line descent. See lineal descent.

immediate descent. 1. A descent directly to an heir, as from a grandmother to granddaughter, brought about by the earlier death of the mother. 2. A direct descent without an intervening link in consanguinity, as from mother to daughter.

lineal descent. Descent in a direct or straight line, as from father or grandfather to son or grandson. — Also termed direct-line descent.

maternal-line descent. Descent between two persons, traced through the mother of the younger.

mediate descent. 1. A descent not occurring immediately, as when a granddaughter receives land from her grandmother, which first passed to the mother. 2. A direct descent occurring through a link in consanguinity, as when a granddaughter receives land from her grandfather directly.

“The law categorizes descents as either lineal or collateral, and as mediate or immediate. The term mediate or immediate descent may denote either the passing of the estate, or the relationship between the intestate and the heir. The classification of descents as mediate or immediate describes the proximity of the descent, while the characterization as lineal or collateral refers to the direction of the descent.” 23 Am. Jur. 2d, Descent and Distribution § 49, at 787–88 (1983).

paternal-line descent. Descent between two persons, traced through the father of the younger.

descent cast. Hist. The devolution of realty that has been acquired by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, upon an heir whose ancestor died intestate. • This tolled the real owner’s right of entry until the owner brought a legal action. — Also termed descent which tolls entry.

descriptio personae (di-skrip-shee-oh pər-soh-nee). [Law Latin] Description of the person. • This phrase, typically used to identify or describe a person in a contract or deed, is not essential to a document’s validity. Cf. designatio personae.

description. 1. A delineation or explanation of something by an account setting forth the subject’s characteristics or qualities <description of a patentable process>. 2. A representation by words or drawing of something seen or heard or otherwise experienced <description of the criminal> <description of the accident>. 3. An enumeration or specific identification of something <description of items in the estate>. 4. LEGAL DESCRIPTION.

descriptive mark. A trademark merely describing the goods to which it is affixed. • The trademark will be protected only if the user can demonstrate secondary meaning. — Also termed descriptive trademark. See SECONDARY MEANING.

“The bar against descriptive marks simply reflects the requirement of distinctiveness. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1052(e)(1). It often is said that a mark should not be analyzed in a piecemeal fashion. Instead, the mark as a whole must be tested for descriptiveness or secondary meaning. A mark that merely describes a product cannot possibly distinguish one producer from another. As an obvious example, ‘apple’ would be a descriptive name for that fruit, and, as a mark, would serve only to confuse the consumer, for it would tell nothing about the different origins of a selection of apples produced by different producers. Moreover, to allow an owner to pre-empt the term ‘apple’ would afford the owner a monopoly of something that is necessary to describe the goods for sale.” Arthur Miller & Michael Davis, Intellectual Property: Patents, Trademarks, and Copyright in a Nutshell 163 (2d ed. 1990).

de scutagio habendo (dee skyoo-tay-jee-oh hā-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin “for having scutage”] Hist. 1. A writ ordering a tenant-in-chief by knight’s service to serve in a war, send a substitute, or pay a sum of money. 2. A writ authorizing a lord who had served in the war or paid the required fine, to recover the scutage from his knights’ fees. See SCUTAGE.

“Such a baron, having proved that he fulfilled his contract or paid his fine, will have a royal writ de scutagio habendo, whereby the sheriff will be ordered to cause him to have the scutage due from his tenants. Still, before he can get his scutage, he has to obtain something that the king is apt to treat as a favour.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 270 (2d ed. 1898).

desecrate, vb. To divest (a thing) of its sacred character; to defile or profane (a sacred thing).

de secta ad molendinum (dee sek-tə ad mə-len-di-nəm), n. [Law Latin “of suit at mill”]

Hist. A writ forcing a person to continue grinding corn at a particular mill, as was customary, or to give a good reason why the custom should not be continued.

"There are also other services, due by ancient custom and prescription only. Such is that of doing suit to another's mill: where the persons, resident in a particular place, by usage time out of mind have been accustomed to grind their corn at a certain mill; and afterwards any of them go to another mill, and withdraw their suit . . . from the ancient mill. This is not only a damage, but an injury, to the owner . . . And for this injury the owner shall have a writ de secta ad molendum commanding the defendant to do his suit at that mill . . . or show good cause to the contrary: in which action the validity of the prescription may be tried, and if it be found for the owner, he shall recover damages against the defendant." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 234–35 (1768).

de sectis non faciendis (dee sek-tis non fay-shee-en-dis), n. [Law Latin "of not doing services"] Hist. A writ exempting a ward or dowress from performing certain services.

desegregation, n. 1. The abrogation of policies that separate people of different races into different institutions and facilities (such as public schools). 2. The state of having had such policies abrogated. — desegregate, vb. Cf. INTEGRATION (3).

de seisina habenda (dee see-zin-ə hæ-ben-də), n. [Law Latin "of holding seisin"] Hist. A writ ordering the sovereign to deliver seisin of lands and tenements to a lord, after holding them for the allowed year and a day because the lord's tenant committed a felony.

deserter. Int'l law. A soldier who unilaterally leaves national military service with the intention of renegeing on military obligations either permanently or for the duration of a military operation; a person who illegally abandons a military force, often by seeking refuge in a foreign territory or by joining enemy forces.

desertion, n. The willful and unjustified abandonment of a person's duties or obligations, esp. to military service or to a spouse or family. ● In family law, the five elements of spousal desertion are (1) a cessation of cohabitation, (2) the lapse of a statutory period, (3) an intention to abandon, (4) a lack of consent from the abandoned spouse, and (5) a lack of spousal misconduct that might justify the abandonment. — Also termed gross neglect of duty. — desert, vb.

constructive desertion. One spouse's misconduct that forces the other spouse to leave the marital abode.

criminal desertion. One spouse's willful failure without just cause to provide for the care, protection, or support of the other spouse who is in ill health or needy circumstances.

obstinate desertion. Desertion by a spouse who persistently refuses to return to the marital home, so that the other spouse has grounds for divorce. ● Before the advent of no-fault divorce, this term was commonly used in divorce statutes. The term was often part of the longer phrase willful, continued, and obstinate desertion.

deserts. See JUST DESERTS.

design, n. 1. A plan or scheme. 2. Purpose or intention combined with a plan.

formed design. Criminal law. The deliberate and fixed intention to kill, though not necessarily a particular person. See PREMEDITATION.
