Property. The common-law doctrine requiring a future interest to vest by the time it is to become possessory or else suffer total destruction (the interest then reverting to the grantor). • This doctrine has been abolished in all but a few American jurisdictions; the abolishing statutes are commonly termed anti-destructibility statutes. — Also termed destructibility rule.

“The destructibility rule still exists in its old common-law form in Florida. Various authors have suggested that it also exists unchanged in Arkansas, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and Tennessee; but there are no statutes or recent decisions to clarify the rule’s status in these states.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 79 n.46 (2d ed. 1984).

destructible trust. See TRUST.

desuetude (des-wə-t[y]ood). 1. Lack of use; obsolescence through disuse. 2. The doctrine holding that if a statute or treaty is left unenforced long enough, the courts will no longer regard it as having any legal effect even though it has not been repealed.

“[T]he doctrine of desuetude has had in all legal systems a very limited and cautious application. For the anachronistic statute a better remedy may be found through reinterpretation in the light of new conditions; as Gray remarks with some irony. ‘It is not as speedy or as simple a process to interpret a statute out of existence as to repeal it, but with time and patient skill it can often be done.’” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 38 (1968) (quoting John Chipman Gray, The Nature and Sources of Law 192 (1921)).

“There is no doctrine of desuetude in English law, so a statute never ceases to be in force merely because it is obsolete. Normally there must be an express repeal, but the whole or part of an enactment may be impliedly repealed by a later statute." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 3 (1976).

de superoneratione pasturae (dee soo-pə-rōh-nə-ray-shee-oh-nee pas-tyə-ree), n. [Law Latin "of surcharge of pasture"] Hist. A judicial writ against a person who was initially brought into county court for putting too many cattle on pasture, and later was impleaded in the same court on the same charge, and the cause was removed to the superior court at Westminster.

de tabulis exhibendis (dee tab-yə-lis ek-si-ben-dis), n. [Latin] Roman law. Of producing the tablets of a will. • This was a subject covered under Roman exhibitory interdicts governing the production of documents. A will of a deceased person had to be produced and opened to determine whether the applicant had rights under it.

detachiare (di-tak-ee-air-ee or di-tash-ee-air-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To seize a person or property by a writ of attachment or other legal remedy.

detainer. 1. The action of detaining, withholding, or keeping something in one's custody.

forcible detainer. See FORCIBLE DETAINER.

unlawful detainer. The unjustifiable retention of the possession of real property by one whose original entry was lawful, as when a tenant holds over after lease termination despite the landlord's demand for possession.

2. The confinement of a person in custody. 3. A writ authorizing a prison official to continue holding a prisoner in custody.

de tallagio non concedendo (dee tə-lay-jee-oh non kon-sə-den-doh), n. [Law Latin "of not granting tallage"] Hist. The title of a statute declaring that no taxes will be imposed by the king or his heirs without the consent of the archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, and other freemen of the realm. • The statute has been used to support the constitutional doctrine disallowing taxation except by Parliament. 34 Edw. 1 st. 4.

detection. The act of discovering or revealing something that was hidden, esp. to solve a crime.

"There is a clear distinction between inducing a person to do an unlawful act and setting a trap to catch him in the execution of a criminal plan of his own conception. There is also a distinction between the terms 'detection' and 'entrapment,' as applied to the activities of law enforcement officers. Legitimate detection of crime occurs when officers test a suspected person by offering him an opportunity to transgress the law in such manner as is usual in the activity alleged to be unlawful. On the other hand, entrapment occurs when officers induce a person to violate the law when he would not otherwise do so." 21 Am. Jur. 2d Criminal Law § 202 (1981).

de tempore cuius contrarium memoria hominum non existit (dee tem-pə-ree k[y]oo-jəs kən-trair-ee-əm mə-mor-ee-ə hom-ə-nəm non eg-zis-tit). [Latin] From time whereof the memory of man does not exist to the contrary. See LEGAL MEMORY.

de tempore in tempus et ad omnia tempora (dee tem-pə-ree in tem-pəs et ad om-nee-ə tem-pə-rə). [Latin] From time to time, and at all times.

de temps dont memorie ne court (də tahn dawn mem-ə-ree nə koor). [Law French] From time whereof memory does not run; time out of human memory. See LEGAL MEMORY.

détente (day-tahnt). [French] 1. The relaxation of tensions between two or more parties, esp. nations. 2. A policy promoting such a relaxation of tensions. 3. A period during which such tensions are relaxed. Cf. ENTENTE; ALLIANCE.

detentio (di-ten-shee-oh), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. NATURALIS POSSESSIO. 2. Hist. Detention; detainment, as opposed to captio ("taking").

detention, n. 1. The act or fact of holding a person in custody; confinement or compulsory delay. — detain, vb.

investigative detention. The holding of a suspect without formal arrest during the investigation of the suspect's participation in a crime. • Detention of this kind is constitutional only if probable cause exists.

pretrial detention. The holding of a defendant before trial on criminal charges either because the established bail could not be posted or because release was denied. — Also termed temporary detention.

preventive detention. Confinement imposed usu. on a criminal defendant who has threatened to escape or has otherwise violated the law while awaiting trial, or on a mentally ill person who may cause harm.

2. An employee's custody of the employer's property without being considered as having legal possession of it.

detention hearing. See HEARING.

detention in a reformatory. A juvenile offender's sentence of being sent to a reformatory school for some period.

determinable, adj. 1. Liable to end upon the happening of a contingency; terminable <fee simple determinable>. 2. Able to be determined or ascertained <the delivery date is determinable because she kept the written invoice>.

determinable easement. See EASEMENT.

determinable estate. See ESTATE.

determinable fee. 1. See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE. 2. See base fee under FEE (2).

determinate hospitalization. A fixed period of hospitalization, usu. by civil commitment.

determinate obligation. See OBLIGATION.

determinate sentence. See SENTENCE.

determination, n. 1. A final decision by a court or administrative agency <the court's determination of the issue>.

initial determination. The first determination made by the Social Security Administration of a person's eligibility for benefits.

2. The ending or expiration of an estate or interest in property, or of a right, power, or authority <the easement's determination after four years>. — determine, vb.

determination letter. A letter issued by the Internal Revenue Service in response to a taxpayer's request, giving an opinion about the tax significance of a transaction, such as whether a nonprofit corporation is entitled to tax-exempt status. — Also termed ruling letter.

determinative judgment. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

determinism. (sometimes cap.) A philosophy that human behavior is governed primarily by preexisting conditions, such as family or environmental factors, and is not influenced by will. — deterministic, adj.

deterrence, n. The act or process of discouraging certain behavior, particularly by fear; esp., as a goal of criminal law, the prevention of criminal behavior by fear of punishment. — deter, vb. — deterrent, adj. Cf. REHABILITATION (1); RETRIBUTION (1).

general deterrence. A goal of criminal law generally, or of a specific conviction and sentence, to discourage people from committing crimes.

special deterrence. A goal of a specific conviction and sentence to dissuade the offender from committing crimes in the future.

deterrent, n. Something that impedes; something that prevents .

deterrent danger. See DANGER.

deterrent punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

de theolonio (dee thee-ə-loh-nee-oh), n. [Law Latin "of toll"] Hist. A writ of trespass available to a person prevented from taking toll. See TOLL.

detinet (det-i-net). [Latin] He detains. • An action in debt may be in detinet when the plaintiff alleges that the defendant wrongfully kept goods, as distinguished from wrongfully taking them. An action in debt may also be in detinet when it is brought by or against someone other than an original party to the debt, such as an executor. An action of replevin is in detinet when the defendant retains possession of the property until after the judgment. Cf. DEBET ET DETINET.

detinue (det-i-nyoo or -noo). A common-law action to recover personal property wrongfully taken by another. Cf. REPLEVIN; TROVER.

"A claim in detinue lies at the suit of a person who has an immediate right to the possession of the goods against a person who is in actual possession of them, and who, upon proper demand, fails or refuses to deliver them up without lawful excuse. Detinue at the present day has two main uses. In the first place, the plaintiff may desire the specific restitution of his chattels and not damages for their conversion. He will then sue in detinue, not in trover. In the second place, the plaintiff will have to sue in detinue if the defendant sets up no claim of ownership and has not been guilty of trespass; for the original acquisition in detinue sur bailment was lawful." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 111 (17th ed. 1977).

detinue of goods in frankmarriage. Hist. A writ allowing a divorced wife to obtain the goods given to her during the marriage.

detinue sur bailment (det-i-nyoo sar bayl-mənt) [Law French] Hist. An action to recover property that the defendant acquired by bailment but refuses to return.

detinuit (di-tin-yoo-it). [Latin] He has detained.
 • An action is said to be in the detinuit when the plaintiff finally recovers possession of the property claimed under a writ of replevin.

detour, n. Torts. An employee's minor deviation from the employer's business for personal reasons. • Because a detour falls within the scope of employment, the employer is still vicariously liable for the employee's actions. Cf. FROLIC.

detournement (di-tuurn-mənt), n. An employee's misappropriation of the employer's funds.

detractio, n. The removal of property from one state to another after transfer of title by a will or inheritance.

de transgressione (dee trans-gresh-ee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin "of trespass"] The general name of various writs of trespass. See TRESPASS.

de transgressione, ad audiendum et terminandum (dee trans-gresh-ee-oh-nee, ad aw-dee-en-dəm et tər-mi-nan-dəm), n. [Law Latin "of determining and hearing a misdemeanor"] Hist. A commission for hearing and determining an outrage or misdemeanor.

detriment. 1. Any loss or harm suffered by a person or property. 2. Contracts. The relinquishment of some legal right that a promisee would have otherwise been entitled to exercise.

"A promise or an act may be a detriment although on balance the promisor is making a good bargain. Thus a promise to pay £10,000 for a Rolls Royce worth £12,000, is none the less a detriment, and a good consideration for a promise to deliver the car." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 101 (3d ed. 1981).

detriment to a promisee. Contracts. Consideration offered by a promisee to a promisor, esp. in a unilateral contract requiring an act from the promisee though the promisor has the power to revoke the promise.

detrimental reliance. See RELIANCE.

detunicari (di-tyoo-ni-kair-i), vb. [Latin "to be revealed"] To discover; to lay open.

de una parte (dee yoo-nə pahr-tee), n. [Latin] Of one party. • A deed is de una parte when only one party grants something to another, as distinguished from a deed inter partes. See INTER PARTES.

deuterogamy (d[y]oo-tər-og-ə-mee). [fr. Greek deuterogamia "second marriage"] A second marriage after the death of, or annulment or divorce from, the first spouse. — Also termed digama; digamy.

de uxore rapta et abducta (dee ək-sor-ee rap-tə et ab-dək-tə), n. [Law Latin "of seizing and carrying away a man's wife"] Hist. A writ of trespass for a man whose wife had been raped and carried away.

devadiatus (di-vad-ee-ay-təs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A defendant without a surety. — Also termed divadiatus.

devaluation, n. The reduction in the value of one currency in relation to another currency. — devalue, vb. Cf. REVALUATION.

devastation. 1. An executor's squandering or mismanagement of the deceased's estate. 2. An act of destruction.

devastaverunt (di-vas-tə-veer-ənt). [Latin pl. of devastavit "he (or she) has wasted"] They have wasted. • This word usu. referred to both an executor's waste of a decedent's property and the action against the executor for that waste.

devastavit (dev-ə-stay-vit). [Latin "he (or she) has wasted"] A personal representative's failure to administer a decedent's estate promptly and properly, esp. by spending extravagantly or misapplying assets. • A personal representative who commits waste in this way becomes personally liable to those having claims on the assets, such as creditors and beneficiaries.

de vasto (dee vas-toh), n. [Law Latin "of waste"] A writ allowing a reversioner or remainderman to compel a tenant for life or for years to appear and answer for the waste and resulting damage to the plaintiff's inheritance.

developed water. See WATER.

developing country. Int'l law. A country that is not as economically or politically advanced as the main industrial powers. • They are located mostly in Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, the Middle East, and South America. — Also termed developing state; underdeveloped country; less-developed country; Third World country.

"Pertinent terminology has undergone extensive changes in the past 40 years. At the very start, before the category found its way into official texts, economic and political writings referred mainly to 'poor' or 'backward'

development. 1. A human-created change to improved or unimproved real estate, including buildings or other structures, mining, dredging, filing, grading, paving, excavating, and drilling. 2. An activity, action, or alteration that changes undeveloped property into developed property.

development disability. See DISABILITY (1).

development-stage company. See COMPANY.

de ventre inspiciendo (dee ven-tree in-spish-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin "of (or for) inspecting the belly"] 1. A writ allowing a presumptive heir to summon a jury of matrons to verify the pregnancy of a widow suspected of feigning the pregnancy to produce a supposed heir. — Also termed ad ventrem inspiciendum. See venire facias tot matronas under VENIRE FACIAS.

"And this gives occasion to a proceeding at common law, where a widow is suspected to feign herself with child, in order to produce a supposititious heir to the estate: an attempt which the rigor of the Gothic constitutions esteemed equivalent to the most atrocious theft, and therefore punished with death. In this case with us the heir presumptive may have a writ de ventre inspiciendo to examine whether she be with child, or not . . . and, if the widow be upon due examination found not pregnant, any issue she may afterwards produce, though within nine months, will be bastard." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 444 (1765).

2. A writ providing a temporary stay of execution if a jury of matrons determines that a woman scheduled for execution and claiming pregnancy is "quick with child." • The execution would be postponed until after the birth, but if the woman became pregnant a second time before execution, she had no remedy. — Sometimes shortened to ventre inspiciendo. — Also spelled de ventre in spiciendo.

devest (di-vest), vb. 1. Hist. To deprive (a person) of possession, title, or property. 2. To take; to draw away.

deviance, n. The quality or state of departing from established norms, esp. in social customs. — deviate (dee-vee-ayt), vb. — deviant, adj. & n. — deviate (dee-vee-ət), n.

deviation. Marine insurance. 1. An unnecessary departure from the course fixed by express agreement, by maritime custom, or by the discretion of a reasonably careful and skillful navigator. 2. An unreasonable delay in pursuing this course.

deviation doctrine. 1. A principle allowing variation from a term of a will or trust to avoid defeating the document's purpose. 2. A principle allowing an agent's activity to vary slightly from the scope of the principal's permission. 3. The rule that an insurance policy covering a ship's voyage is canceled if the ship deviates unreasonably from its course.

deviation-well survey. An examination to determine whether a well is bottomed under another person's land.

device. 1. An invention or contrivance; any result of design. 2. A scheme to trick or deceive; a stratagem or artifice, as in the law relating to fraud.

de vicineto (dee vi-sin-ə-toh or -si-nə-toh). [Law Latin] From a vicinage; from a neighborhood. • This term was generally used in reference to a jury pool. See DE CORPORE COMITATUS.

de vi laica amovenda (dee vi lay-ə-kə ay-moh-ven-də), n. [Law Latin "of removing a lay force"] Hist. A writ allowing a parson claiming rights to a church to order a sheriff to remove a group of laymen who had gathered with another parson at the church and prevented the new parson from entering.

deviling (dev-ə-ling). 1. The act of a barrister handing a brief over to another to handle a case. 2. The practice of a junior barrister who drafts pleadings or other documents for a senior barrister who approves them, signs them, and is ultimately responsible for the work. — Also spelled devilling.

devil on the neck. Hist. A torture device made of irons that fastened to a person's neck and legs and then wrenched together to either gradually or quickly break the person's back. • It was often used to coerce confessions.

devisable, adj. 1. Capable of being bequeathed by a will. 2. Capable of being invented. 3. Feigned.

devisavit vel non (dev-ə-say-vit [or -zay-vit] vel non), n. [Law Latin "he (or she) devises or not"] Hist. An issue directed from a chancery court to a court of law to determine the validity of a will that has been contested, as by an allegation of fraud or testamentary incapacity. See VEL NON.

devise (di-vīz), n. 1. The act of giving property (usu. real property) by will. 2. The provision in a will containing such a gift. 3. Property (usu. real property) disposed of in a will. 4. A will disposing of real property. Cf. TESTAMENT (1). — devise, vb. Cf. BEQUEST; LEGACY.

conditional devise. A devise that depends on the occurrence of some uncertain event.

executory devise. An interest in land, created by will, that takes effect in the future and depends on a future contingency; a limitation, by will, of a future estate or interest in land when the limitation cannot, consistently with legal rules, take effect as a remainder. • An executory devise, which is a type of conditional limitation, differs from a remainder in three ways: (1) it needs no particular estate to support it, (2) with it a fee simple or lesser estate can be limited after a fee simple, and (3) with it a remainder can be limited in a chattel interest after a particular estate for life is created in that interest. See conditional limitation under LIMITATION.

general devise. A devise that passes the testator's lands without specifically enumerating or describing them.

lapsed devise. A devise that fails because the deviser outlives the named recipient.

residuary devise. A devise of the remainder of the testator's real property left after other specific devises are taken.

specific devise. A devise that passes a particular piece of property.

devisee (dev-ə-zee or di-vī-zee). A recipient of property (usu. real property) by will.

first devisee. The first devisee designated to receive an estate under a will.

next devisee. The devisee who receives the remainder of an estate in tail, as distinguished from the first devisee.

residuary devisee. The person named in a will who takes the testator's real property that remains after the other devises.

deviser. One who invents or contrives <the deviser of these patents>.

devisor. One who disposes of property (usu. real property) in a will.

devoir (də-vvahr or dev-wahr). Hist. A duty; a tax. — Also spelled devoire.

"Devoire is as much as to say a duty. It is used in the statute of 2 R. 2, cap. 3, where it is provided, that all the western merchants, being of the king's amity, shall pay all manner of customs and subsidies, and other devoire of Calais." Termes de la Ley 168 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

devolution (dev-ə-loo-shən), n. The act or an instance of transferring one's rights, duties, or powers to another; the passing of such rights, duties, or powers by transfer or succession <the federal government's devolution of police power to the states>. — devolutionary, adj.

devolutive appeal. See APPEAL.

devolve (di-vahlv), vb. 1. To transfer (rights, duties, or powers) to another. 2. To pass (rights, duties, or powers) by transmission or succession. See DEVOLUTION.

devy (də-vī), vb. [Law French] To die.

de warrantia chartae (dee wə-ran-shee-ə kahr-tee), n. [Law Latin "of a warranty of charter"] Hist. A writ allowing a tenant enfeoffed with a warranty, who was impleaded in an assize or other action in which the tenant could not call upon the warranty, to compel the feoffor to assist the tenant with a plea or defense, or else to pay damages and the value of the land, if it is recovered against the tenant.

"This we still make use of in the form of common recoveries, which are grounded on a writ of entry; a species of action that we may remember relies chiefly on the weakness of the tenant's title, who therefore vouches another person to warrant it . . . In assises indeed, where the principal question is whether the demandant or his ancestors were or were not in possession till the ouster happened, and the title of the tenant is little (if at all) discussed, there no voucher is allowed; but the tenant may bring a writ of warrantia chartae against the warrantor, to compel him to assist him with a good plea or defence, or else to render damages and the value of the land, if recovered against the tenant." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 299 (1768).

de warrantia diei (dee wə-ran-shee-ə dī-ee-I), n. [Law Latin “of warranty of day”] Hist. A writ ordering a judge not to default a party for nonappearance because the Crown warranted that the party was busy in its service.

dextrarius (dek-strair-ee-əs). Hist. One at the right hand of another.

dextras dare (dek-strəs dair-ee), vb. [Latin “to give right hands”] 1. To shake hands to show friendship. 2. To give oneself up to the power of another.

DFA. abbr. DELAYED FUNDS AVAILABILITY.

diaconate (dī-ak-ə-nit), n. [Law Latin] A deacon's office.

diaconus (dī-ak-ə-nəs), n. [Law Latin] A deacon. See DEACON.

diagnosis (dī-əg-noh-sis). 1. The determination of a medical condition (such as a disease) by physical examination or by study of its symptoms. 2. The result of such an examination or study. Cf. PROGNOSIS.

clinical diagnosis. A diagnosis from a study of symptoms only.

dialectic (dī-ə-lek-tik), n. 1. A school of logic that teaches critical examination of the truth of an opinion, esp. by discussion or debate. • The method was applied by ancient philosophers, such as Plato and Socrates, primarily in the context of conversational discussions involving questions and answers, and also by more modern philosophers, such as Immanuel Kant, who viewed it as a theory of fallacies, and G.W.F. Hegel, who applied the term to his philosophy proceeding from thesis, to antithesis, to synthesis. 2. An argument made by critically examining logical consequences. 3. A logical debate. 4. A disputant; a debater. Pl. dialectics.

diallage (dī-al-ə-jee), n. [fr. Greek diallagē “interchange”] A rhetorical figure of speech in which arguments are placed in several points of view, and then brought to bear on one point.

Dialogus de Scaccario (dī-al-ə-gəs dee skə-kair-ee-oh), n. [Law Latin “a dialogue of or about the Exchequer”] Hist. A treatise, written during the reign of Henry II, on the Court of Exchequer, set up in imaginary dialogue form between a master and a disciple. • Although some originally attributed the work to Gervase of Tilbury, it was probably written by Richard Fitz Nigel, the bishop of London under Richard I, and the former Treasurer of the Exchequer.

“The Dialogus de Scaccario is an anonymous book, but there can be little doubt that we are right in ascribing it to Richard Fitz Neal: that is to say, to Richard the son of that Nigel, bishop of Ely . . . The book stands out as a unique book in the history of medieval England, perhaps in the history of medieval Europe. A high officer of state, the trusted counsellor of a powerful king, undertakes to explain to all whom it may concern the machinery of government. He will not deal in generalities, he will not condescend to minute details. Perhaps the book was not meant for the general public so much as for the numerous clerks who were learning their business in the exchequer, but still that such a book should be written, is one of the wonderful things of Henry's wonderful reign.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 161-62 (2d ed. 1898).

dianoetic (dī-ə-noh-et-ik), n. [Greek dianoetikos, fr. dia- “through” + noein “to revolve in the mind”] Archaic. A form of logical reasoning that proceeds from one subject to another. — Also termed (erroneously) dianatic.

diarchy. See DYARCHY.

diarium (dī-air-ee-əm), n. [fr. Latin dies “day”] Roman law. An allowance (usu. of food) needed for a day; a daily allowance of food or pay. Pl. diaria (dī-air-ee-ə).

diatim (dī-ay-təm). [fr. Latin dies “day”] Every day; daily.

dica (dī-kə), n. [Law Latin] An account tally. See TALLY (1).

dicast (dī-kast or dik-ast), n. [Greek dikastes] Hist. An ancient Greek officer sitting as both judge and juror. • Each dicast was generally a free citizen over the age of 30. The dicasts sat together in groups of between 100 to 500, according to each case's importance, and decided cases by a majority.

dictate, vb. 1. To pronounce orally for transcription. 2. To order; to command authoritatively.

dictation. 1. The act of speaking words to be transcribed. 2. The words so transcribed.

dictator. 1. Roman law. An absolute ruler appointed in an emergency for a term of six months and subject to reappointment.

"In special emergencies, particularly in times of grave crisis, either consul might appoint a dictator who exercised supreme authority, but not beyond six months, unless reappointed. This was, in effect, a temporary reversion to monarchy." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 14 (4th ed. 1956).

2. A person, esp. a ruler, with absolute authority.

dictum (dik-təm), n. 1. A statement of opinion or belief considered authoritative because of the dignity of the person making it. 2. A familiar rule; a maxim. 3. OBITER DICTUM. Pl. dicta.

"As a dictum is by definition no part of the doctrine of the decision, and as the citing of it as a part of the doctrine is almost certain to bring upon a brief maker adverse comment, lawyers are accustomed to speak of a dictum rather slightly, and sometimes they go so far as to intimate a belief that the pronouncing of a dictum is the doing of a wrong. Yet it must not be forgotten that dicta are frequently, and indeed usually, correct, and that to give an occasional illustration, or to say that the doctrine of the case would not apply to some case of an hypothetical nature, or to trace the history of a doctrine, even though it be conceded, as it must, that such passages are not essential to the deciding of the very case, is often extremely useful to the profession." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 307 (3d ed. 1914).

dictum proprium (dik-təm proh-pree-əm). A personal or individual dictum that is given by the judge who delivers an opinion but that is not necessarily concurred in by the whole court and is not essential to the disposition. — Also termed (loosely) dictum propria.

gratis dictum (gray-tis dik-təm). 1. A voluntary statement; an assertion that a person makes without being obligated to do so. 2. A court's stating of a legal principle more broadly than is necessary to decide the case. 3. A court's discussion of points or questions not raised by the record or its suggestion of rules not applicable in the case at bar.

judicial dictum. An opinion by a court on a question that is directly involved, briefed, and argued by counsel, and even passed on by the court, but that is not essential to the decision. Cf. OBITER DICTUM.

obiter dictum. See OBITER DICTUM.

simplex dictum (sim-pleks dik-təm). An unproved or dogmatic statement. See IPSE DIXIT.

dictum de Kenilworth (dik-təm dee ken-əl-wərth), n. [Law Latin "edict of Kenilworth"] Hist. A declaration of an agreement between Edward I and the barons who had opposed him under the leadership of Simon de Montfort. ● The agreement, which concerned rent on the lands forfeited in the rebellion, was so called because it was made at Kenilworth castle in Warwickshire in A.D. 1266. It was published in the Statutes of the Realm and 52 Hen. 3.

dictum page. See pinpoint citation under CITATION.

diei dictio (di-ee-i dik-shee-oh), n. [Latin "appointing a day"] Roman law. 1. A magistrate's notice appointing a day for trial. 2. The service of a summons.

diem clausit extremum (di-əm klaw-zit ek-stree-məm), n. [Law Latin "he closed his last day"] Hist. 1. A chancery writ, founded on the statute of Marlbury, ordering the county escheator, after the death of a chief tenant of the Crown, to summon a jury to determine the amount and value of land owned by the chief tenant, to determine the next heir, and to reclaim the property for the Crown. ● It was a type of inquisition post mortem.

"Diem clausit extremum is a writ that lies where the king's tenant that holds in chief, dies; then this writ shall be directed to the excheator, to inquire of what estate he was seised, who is next heir, and his age, and of the certainty and value of the land, and of whom it is holden; and the inquisition shall be returned into the chancery, which is commonly called the office after the death of that person." Termes de la Ley 169 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

2. An Exchequer writ ordering a sheriff to summon a jury to investigate a Crown debtor's place of death and amount of property owned, and to levy the property of the deceased's heirs and executors. ● It was established by the Crown Suits Act of 1865 and repealed by the Crown Proceedings Act of 1947.

"And there is another writ of diem clausit extremum awarded out of the exchequer, after the death of an accomptant or debtor of his majesty, to levy the debt of his heir, executor, administrator's lands or goods." Termes de la Ley 169 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dies (di-eez), n. [Latin] A day; days.

dies ad quem (di-eez ad kwem), n. [Latin "the day to which"] Civil law. An ending date for a transaction; the ending date for computing time, such as the day on which interest no longer accrues.

dies amoris (di-eez ə-mor-is), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A day of favor; esp., a day set by the court for the defendant to make an appearance. ● This was usu. the fourth day of the term, which was the first day the court normally sat for business. In addition, the defendant usu. had three days of grace from the summons to appear, but an appearance on the fourth day quarto die post ("on the fourth day thereafter") was usu. sufficient.

dies a quo (di-eez ay kwoh), n. [Latin "the day from which"] Civil law. A transaction's commencement date; the date from which to compute time, such as a day when interest begins to accrue.

dies cedit (di-eez see-dit), n. [Latin "the time begins to run"] Roman & Scots law. The day on which an interest, esp. a legacy, vests; the day on which a condition obligation becomes due. — Also termed dies cedens. Cf. dies venit.

"A legacy was due, or became a valid right, either at the death of the testator or the occurrence of a condition precedent. This vesting of the property or the accruing of an obligation determined the content and nature of the interests involved. What the legatary got was discovered by examining what the legacy actually carried with it on the day when it became vested. To express the fact that the legacy had become vested, the technical expression dies cedit was used." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 434-35 (1927).

dies comitiales (di-eez kə-mish-ee-ay-leez), n. [Latin] Roman law. The 190 days in the year when an election could be held or the people could assemble as a legislative body. ● The praetors could not hold court while a legislative assembly was in session.

dies communes in banco (di-eez kə-myoo-nee in bang-koh), n. [Law Latin "common days in banc"] 1. Regular appearance dates in court. — Also termed common-return days. 2. An enactment printed under the Statutes of Henry III, regulating continuances and writ return dates. ● Examples include the Statutes of the Realm, Statutes of Uncertain Date, and Statutes at Large.

dies datus (di-eez day-təs), n. [Law Latin "a given day"] A continuance, esp. for a defendant before a declaration is filed; a time of respite in a case. ● A continuance granted after the filing of the declaration is called an imparlance. See IMPARLANCE.

dies datus in banco (di-eez day-təs in bang-koh), n. [Law Latin "a day given in the bench"] A day given in bank, as distinguished from a day at nisi prius.

dies datus partibus (di-eez day-təs pahrtə-bəs), n. [Law Latin "a day given to the parties"] A continuance; an adjournment.

dies datus prece partium (di-eez day-təs pree-see pah-shē-əm), n. [Law Latin "a day given at the prayer of the parties"] A day given at the parties' request.

dies Dominicus (di-eez də-min-i-kəs), n. [Latin] The Lord's day; Sunday.

dies excrescens (di-eez ek-skree-sənz), n. [Law Latin "the increasing day"] The additional day in a leap year.

dies fasti (di-eez fas-ti), n. [Latin] Roman law. A day when justice could be administered; a day when the praetor could officially pronounce the three words "do," "dico," and "addico." — Also called triverbial days. See dies juridicus. Cf. NEFASTUS.

dies feriati (di-eez fer-ee-ay-ti), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. A holiday; holidays.

dies gratiae (di-eez gray-shee-ee), n. [fr. Law French jour de grace] Hist. A day of grace, usu. granted to the plaintiff.

dies in banco. See DAYS IN BANK.

dies intercisi (di-eez in-tər-si-zi), n. [Latin "divided days"] Roman law. A day when the courts were open for only part of the day.

dies juridicus (di-eez juu-rid-i-kəs), n. [Latin] A day when justice can be administered. ● This term was derived from the civil-law term dies fasti.

dies legitimus (di-eez lə-jit-i-məs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A lawful day; a law day.

dies marchiae (di-eez mahr-kee-ee), n. [Law Latin "a day of the march"] Hist. In the reign of Richard II, the annual day set aside for the wardens of the English and Scottish borders to hold peace talks and resolve differences.

dies nefasti (di-eez nee-fas-ti), n. See NEFASTUS; dies non juridicus.

dies non (di-eez non). See dies non juridicus.

dies non juridicus (di-eez non juu-rid-i-kəs), n. [Law Latin "a day not juridical"] A day exempt from court proceedings, such as a holiday or a Sunday. — Often shortened to dies non.

dies pacis (di-eez pay-sis), n. [Law Latin "day of peace"] Hist. A day of peace. ● The days were originally divided into two categories: dies pacis ecclesiae ("a day of the peace of the church") and dies pacis regis ("a day of the Crown's peace").

dies religiosi (di-eez ri-lij-ee-oh-si). [Latin] Roman law. Religious days on which it was unlawful to transact legal or political business.

dies solaris (di-eez sə-lair-is), n. [Law Latin "a solar day"] See solar day under DAY.

dies solis (di-eez soh-lis), n. [Latin "day of the sun"] Roman law. Sunday.

dies utiles (di-eez yoo-tə-leez), n. [Latin "available days"] Roman law. A day when something can be legally done, such as a day a person can apply to the court to claim an inheritance.

dies venit (di-eez vee-nit), n. [Latin "the day has come"] Roman & Scots law. The date when an interest is both vested and actionable. • It is usu. the day when a legatee can claim payment of a legacy. — Also termed dies veniens. Cf. dies cedit.

diet. 1. A regimen, esp. of food. 2. A governing body's meeting day for legislative, political, or religious purposes; specif., a national assembly of various European countries, such as the diet of the German empire, which was summoned by the emperor regularly to perform various functions, including levying taxes, enacting laws, and declaring war. 3. Scots law. A day to perform a duty, such as a court sitting day, an appearance day, and a criminal pleading or trial day. — Also spelled dyet.

dieta (di-ee-tə), n. [fr. Latin dies "day"] Hist. 1. A day's journey. 2. A day's work. 3. A day's expenses.

dietary law. Any of the body of laws observed by orthodox Jews regulating which foods may be eaten, how the foods must be prepared and served, and what combinations and contacts (as between meat and milk) are prohibited.

di. et fi. (di et fi). abbr. DILECTO ET FIDELI.

Dieu et mon droit (dyuu ay mawn drwah). [French "God and my right"] The motto of the royal arms of England. • It was first used by Richard I and, with the exception of Elizabeth I, was continually used from Edward III to William III, who used the motto je maintiendrey. Queen Anne used Elizabeth I's motto, semper eadem, but Dieu et mon droit has been used since her death.

Dieu son acte (dyuu sawn akt), n. [Law Latin "an act of God"] Hist. An act of God, beyond human control.

diffacere (di-fay-sə-ree), vb. [fr. Old French defacer] Hist. To deface; to mutilate. — Also termed disfacere; defacere.

differential pricing. The setting of the price of a product or service differently for different customers. See PRICE DISCRIMINATION.

difforciare (di-for-shee-air-ee), vb. [Law Latin "to deny"] Hist. To keep (something) from someone; to deny (something) to someone.

diffused surface water. See WATER.

DIF system. See DISCRIMINANT FUNCTION.

digama (dig-ə-mə). See DEUTEROGAMY.

digamy (dig-ə-mee). See DEUTEROGAMY.

digest, n. 1. An index of legal propositions showing which cases support each proposition; a collection of summaries of reported cases, arranged by subject and subdivided by jurisdiction and court. • The chief purpose of a digest is to make the contents of reports available and to separate, from the great mass of caselaw, those cases bearing on some specific point. The American Digest System covers the decisions of all American courts of last resort, state and federal, from 1658 to present. — Abbr. D.

"An important and numerous class of books included in the general division designated as books of secondary authority is the group known by the generic name of 'Digests.' A Digest is essentially an index to Cases. But it is much more than an ordinary index, for it indicates the holdings and (in some, though not all, publications) the facts of each case. Any particular digest is a summary of the case law coming within its scope, and its units are summaries of particular points of particular cases. What the syllabi of a reported case are to that case, a digest is to many cases. Were a digest simply a collection of citations to cases, arranged logically according to the contents of such cases, it would be a search book; but, being a summary of the case law, it is a book of secondary authority." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 68 (3d ed. 1914).

2. Civil law. A compilation and systematic discussion of the various areas of law; chiefly, the Pandects of Justinian in 50 books, known

digital signature. See SIGNATURE.

dignitary. 1. A person who holds a high rank or honor. 2. Eccles. law. A person who, by virtue of holding a benefice (such as a cathedral), is preeminent over ordinary priests and canons.

dignity, n. 1. The state of being noble; the state of being dignified. 2. An elevated title or position. 3. A person holding an elevated title; a dignitary. 4. A right to hold a title of nobility, which may be hereditary or for life.

dilapidations, action for (də-lap-ə-day-shənʒ). Hist. A tort action brought by a new incumbent of a benefice for the disrepair of the houses or buildings on the benefice. • The incumbent — whether of a rectory, a vicarage, or a chapel — sued the executors or administrators of the incumbent’s deceased predecessor (who was not liable while living). The incumbent of a benefice was bound to maintain the parsonage, farm buildings, and chancel in good and substantial repair, restoring and rebuilding when necessary, according to the original plan. But the incumbent need not supply or maintain anything in the nature of ornament.

dilatory (dil-ə-tor-ee), adj. Tending to cause delay <the judge’s opinion criticized the lawyer’s persistent dilatory tactics>.

dilatory defense. See DEFENSE (1).

dilatory fiduciary. See FIDUCIARY.

dilatory motion. See MOTION.

dilatory plea. See PLEA (3).

dilecto et fidei (di-lek-toh et fi-dee-li). [Law Latin] To his beloved and faithful. • This phrase was used in various writs. — Abbr. di. et fi.

diligence. 1. A continual effort to accomplish something. 2. Care; caution; the attention and care required from a person in a given situation. • The Roman-law equivalent is diligentia. See DILIGENTIA.

“Care, or the absence of negligentia, is diligentia. The use of the word diligence in this sense is obsolete in modern English, though it is still retained as an archaism of legal diction. In ordinary usage, diligence is opposed to idleness, not to carelessness.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 393 n.(i) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

due diligence. 1. The diligence reasonably expected from, and ordinarily exercised by, a person who seeks to satisfy a legal requirement or to discharge an obligation. — Also termed reasonable diligence. 2. Corporations & securities. A prospective buyer’s or broker’s investigation and analysis of a target company, a piece of property, or a newly issued security. • A failure to exercise due diligence may sometimes result in liability, as when a broker recommends a security without first investigating it adequately.

extraordinary diligence. Extreme care that a person of unusual prudence exercises to secure rights or property.

great diligence. The diligence that a very prudent person exercises in handling his or her own property like that at issue. — Also termed high diligence.

necessary diligence. The diligence that a person is required to exercise to be legally protected.

ordinary diligence. The diligence that a person of average prudence would exercise in handling his or her own property like that at issue.

reasonable diligence. 1. A fair degree of diligence expected from someone of ordinary prudence under circumstances like those at issue. 2. See due diligence (1).

slight diligence. The diligence that a person of less than common prudence takes with his or her own concerns. — Also termed low diligence.

special diligence. The diligence expected from a person practicing in a particular field of specialty under circumstances like those at issue.

3. Scots law. A court-issued warrant to compel something, such as the attendance of a witness. 4. The legal process of attaching property for the payment of debt.

diligent, adj. Careful; attentive; persistent in doing something.

diligentia (dil-ə-jen-shee-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. Carefulness; diligence. • The failure to exercise diligentia might make a person liable if contractually obliged to look after another's interests, or it might result in tort liability. Cf. NEGLIGENTIA. See DILIGENCE.

diligentia exactissima (dil-ə-jen-shee-ə eks-ak-tis-ə-mə), n. [Latin] Extraordinary diligence that a head of a family habitually exercises in business. — Also termed diligentia exacta; diligentia boni patrisfamilias. See extraordinary diligence under DILIGENCE.

diligentia quam suis rebus (dil-ə-jen-shee-ə kwam s[y]oo-is ree-bəs), n. [Latin] The care that an ordinary person exercises in managing his or her affairs. See ordinary diligence under DILIGENCE.

"The texts distinguish two standards of diligence, a higher and a lower. The higher is the diligence which the good father of a family habitually exhibits in his own affairs (diligentia exacta or exactissima — diligentia boni patrisfamilias). The lower is the diligence which the person in question exhibits in his own affairs (diligentia quam suis rebus). This may, in fact, reach a high degree of diligence or it may not. But, at least, where this standard is applied nothing extraordinary is expected. It is a concrete standard. It is enough that the person in question pursues his normal course. According to a traditional terminology, where the first standard is applied, there is said to be liability for culpa levis in abstracto — slight negligence in the abstract; in the second case there is liability for culpa levis in concreto — slight negligence in the concrete." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 288 (4th ed. 1956).

diligent inquiry. A careful and good-faith probing to ascertain the truth of something.

diligiatus (də-lij-ee-ay-təs), n. [fr. Latin dis "apart" + ligius "under legal protection"] A person cast out of the law's protection; an outlaw.

Dillon's rule. The doctrine that a unit of local government may exercise only those powers that the state expressly grants to it, the powers necessarily and fairly implied from that grant, and the powers that are indispensable to the existence of the unit of local government. • For the origins of this rule, see 1 John F. Dillon, The Law of Municipal Corporations § 89, at 115 (3d ed. 1881).

dilution. 1. The act or an instance of diminishing a thing's strength or lessening its value. 2. Corporations. The reduction in the monetary value or voting power of stock by increasing the total number of outstanding shares. 3. Constitutional law. The limitation of the effectiveness of a particular group's vote by legislative reapportionment or political gerrymandering. • Such dilution violates the Equal Protection Clause. — Also termed vote dilution. 4. Trademarks. The impairment of a trademark's strength or effectiveness caused by the use of the mark on an unrelated product, usu. blurring the trademark's distinctive character or tarnishing it with an unsavory association. • Trademark dilution may occur even when the use is not competitive and when it creates no likelihood of confusion.

dilution doctrine. Trademarks. The rule protecting a trademark from a deterioration in strength, as when a person seeks to use the mark for an unrelated product.

dimidium (di-mid-ee-əm), n. [Latin "half"] Hist. 1. Half; a half — as in dimidium unius libratae ("half a pound"). 2. An undivided half of something.

dimidius (di-mid-ee-əs), adj. [Latin "half"] Hist. 1. Half; doubled. 2. Loosely, incomplete.

diminished responsibility. See diminished capacity under CAPACITY (3).

diminution (dim-ə-n[y]oo-shən), n. 1. The act or process of decreasing, lessening, or taking away. 2. An incompleteness or lack of certification in a court record sent from a lower court to a higher one for review. — diminish (for sense 1), vb.

diminution-in-value method. A way of calculating damages for breach of contract based on a reduction in market value that is caused by the breach.

dimissoriae litterae (dim-ə-sor-ee-ee lit-ər-ee), n. [Latin "dimissory letters"] Eccles. law. Dimissory letters; apostles. See APOSTLE.

dimissory letters (dim-ə-sor-ee). 1. Hist. Eccles. law. Documents allowing a clergy member to leave one diocese for another. 2. Eccles. law. Documents provided by one bishop to enable another bishop to ordain a candidate already ordained in the former bishop's diocese.

diocesan (di-ɒs-ə-sən), adj. Of or belonging to a diocese; of or relating to the relationship between a bishop and the clergy within the diocese.

diocesan court. See COURT.

diocesan mission. A mission performing its work in a single diocese.

diocesan synod. See SYNOD.

diocese (di-ə-sees or -sis). 1. Roman law. The division of the Roman empire into provinces. 2. Eccles. law. An archbishop's jurisdiction, including governance over several bishops, who each control a parish. 3. Eccles. law. A bishop's jurisdiction. • Several dioceses together are governed by an archbishop.

dioichia (di-oy-kee-ə), n. [fr. Latin diocesis "a diocese"] A district over which a bishop exercises his spiritual functions.

DIP. abbr. DEBTOR-IN-POSSESSION.

diploma. 1. Roman law. A letter giving permission to use the imperial post. 2. Hist. A royal charter; letters patent. 3. A document that evidences or memorializes graduation from a school or society. Cf. DEGREE (6). 4. A document that evidences a license or privilege to practice a profession, such as medicine.

diplomacy, n. Int'l law. 1. The art and practice of conducting negotiations between national governments.

open diplomacy. Diplomacy carried on with free access to interested observers and members of the press.

parliamentary diplomacy. The negotiations and discussions carried out in international organizations according to their rules of procedure.

secret diplomacy. Diplomacy carried on behind closed doors. — Also termed quiet diplomacy.

shuttle diplomacy. Diplomatic negotiations assisted by emissaries, who travel back and forth between negotiating countries. • In legal contexts, the term usu. refers to a similar approach used by a mediator in negotiating the settlement of a lawsuit. The mediator travels back and forth between different rooms, one of which is assigned to each side's decision-makers and counsel. The mediator relays offers and demands between the rooms and, by conferring with the parties about their positions and about the uncertainty of litigation, seeks to reach an agreed resolution of the case.

2. Loosely, foreign policy. 3. The collective functions performed by a diplomat. — diplomatic, adj. — diplomat, n.

diplomatic agent. See AGENT.

diplomatic bag. See DIPLOMATIC POUCH.

diplomatic corps. Int'l law. The ambassador and other diplomatic personnel assigned by their government to a foreign capital.

diplomatic immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

diplomatic pouch. 1. A bag containing official correspondence, documents, or articles intended exclusively for official communications of a nation with its missions, consular posts, or delegations. 2. The contents of the bag. — Also termed diplomatic bag; valise diplomatique.

diplomatic protection. Protection given by one country's representatives to a person, usu. an individual, against another country's violation of international law.

"The term diplomatic protection is not altogether precise. First, not only diplomatic agents and missions and other foreign offices may and do exercise diplomatic protection, but also, at a different level, consuls, and, although very rarely, military forces. Secondly, the term diplomatic protection does not clearly denote the boundary line to other diplomatic activities for the benefit of individuals, such as mere promotion of interests in one's own nationals in a foreign State, or friendly intercessions with foreign authorities. Thus, diplomatic or consular actions to obtain concessions or other government contracts for nationals from the receiving State, or the arrangement of legal defense for a justly imprisoned national are not diplomatic protection in our sense; they are usually neither directed against the other State nor based on a real or alleged violation of international law. All these last-mentioned activities may be called diplomatic protection only if the term is taken in a very broad sense." William Karl Geck, "Diplomatic Protection," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 1046 (1992).

diplomatic relations. Int'l law. The customary form of permanent contact and communication between sovereign countries.

diplomatics. The science of deciphering and authenticating ancient writings. • The principles were largely developed by the Benedictine Dom Mabillon in his 1681 work entitled De re diplomatica. — Also termed diplomatic (n.).

"Diplomatics, the science derived from the study of ancient diplomas, so called from being written on two leaves, or on double tablets. The Romans used the term more specially for the letters of license to use the public conveyances provided at the different stations, and generally for public grants. Subsequently it attained a more extended signification, and in more modern times has been used as a general term for ancient imperial and ecclesiastical acts and grants, public treaties, deeds of conveyance, letters, wills, and similar instruments, drawn up in forms and marked with peculiarities varying with their dates and countries. With the revival of literature, the importance of such documents in verifying facts and establishing public and private rights led to their being brought together from the historical works and the monastic registers in which they had been copied, or, in rarer instances, from public and ecclesiastical archives where the originals were still preserved. Then arose questions of authenticity, and doubts of the so-called originals; disputants defended or condemned them; and, in order to establish principles for distinguishing the genuine from the forged, treatises were written on the whole subject of these diplomas." 7 Encyclopaedia Britannica 220 (9th ed. 1907).

Diplomatic Security Service. A bureau of the U.S. Department of State having responsibility for protecting the Secretary of State and domestic and foreign dignitaries, as well as for investigating criminal activities such as identity-document fraud involving U.S. passports and visas. • The Service now employs some 800 special agents (members of the U.S. Foreign Service), who are located throughout the United States and in scores of embassies worldwide.

diptych (dip-tik), n. [fr. Latin diptycha fr. Greek diptycha "two-leaved"] 1. Roman law. Two tablets usu. made of wood or metal and tied with string through holes at the edges so that they could fold over (like a book with two leaves). • Diptychs were often used to send letters, and the text was sometimes written using a stylus, once on the inside waxed leaves and again on the outside, so that it could be read without opening the tablets. 2. Hist. Eccles. law. Tablets used by the church, esp. to register names of those making supplication, and to record births, marriages, and deaths. 3. Hist. Eccles. law. The registry of those names.

"The recitation of the name of any prelate or civil ruler in the diptychs was a recognition of his orthodoxy; its omission, the reverse. The mention of a person after death recognized him as having died in the communion of the church, and the introduction of his name into the list of saints or martyrs constituted canonization. In liturgics the diptychs are distinguished as the diptychs of the living and the diptychs of the dead, the latter including also the commemoration of the saints In the Western Church the use of the diptychs died out between the ninth and the twelfth century; in the Eastern Church it still continues." 2 The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia (1895).

"Diptychs were used in the time of the Roman empire for sending letters The consula and quaestors used, on assuming office, to send diptychs containing their names and portraits to their friends The early Christians used tablets thus made in the celebration of divine worship They were placed on . . . the pulpits, or reading desks, which may still be seen in ancient basilicas at the west end of the choir or presbytery; and from them were read to the congregation of the faithful the names of the celebrating priests, of those who occupied the superior positions in the Christian hierarchy, of the saints, martyrs, and confessors, and, in process of time, also of those who had died in the faith. . . . The inscription on the diptychs of deaths and baptisms, naturally led to the insertion of dates, and the diptychs seem thus to have grown into calendars, and to have been the germ from which necrologies, lists of saints, and almanacs have been developed." 7 Encyclopaedia Britannica 223-24 (9th ed. 1907).

dirationare (di-ray-shee-ə-nair-ee), vb. [fr. Lat. in dis "thoroughly" + ratiocinari "to reason"] Hist. 1. To prove; to establish one's right. 2. To disprove; to refute (an allegation).

direct (di-rekt), adj. 1. (Of a thing) straight; undeviating . 2. (Of a thing or a person) straightforward  <direct instructions>. 3. Free from extraneous influence; immediate <direct injury>. 4. Of or relating to passing in a straight line of descent, as distinguished from a collateral line  . 5. (Of a political action) effected by the public immediately, not through representatives <direct resolution> <direct nomination>.

direct, n. See DIRECT EXAMINATION.

direct, vb. 1. To aim (something or someone). 2. To cause (something or someone) to move on a particular course. 3. To guide (something or someone); to govern. 4. To instruct (someone) with authority. 5. To address (something or someone).

direct action. 1. A lawsuit by an insured against his or her own insurance company rather than against the tortfeasor and the tortfeasor's insurer. 2. A lawsuit by a person claiming against an insured but suing the insurer directly instead of pursuing compensation indirectly through the insured. 3. A lawsuit to enforce a shareholder's rights against a corporation. Cf. DERIVATIVE ACTION (1).

direct-action statute. A statute that grants an injured party direct standing to sue an insurer instead of the insured tortfeasor. • Under Rhode Island's direct-action statute, for example, an injured party may bring a direct action against an insurer when good-faith efforts to serve process on the insured are unsuccessful. These statutes exist in several states, including Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, New York, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

direct and proximate cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE (1).

direct appeal. See APPEAL.

direct attack. An attack on a judgment made in the same proceeding as the one in which the judgment was entered. • Examples of direct attacks are appeals and motions for new trial. Cf. COLLATERAL ATTACK.

directory, n. 1. A book containing an alphabetical list of names, addresses, and telephone numbers, esp. those of a city's or area's residents and businesses. 2. Any organization's publication containing information on its members or business, such as a legal directory. 3. Eccles. law. A church's book of directions for conducting worship. • One of the primary directories is the Directory for the Public Worship of God, prepared by the Assembly of Divines in England in 1644 to take the place of the Book of Common Prayer that had been abolished by Parliament. It was ratified by Parliament in 1645 and adopted by the Scottish Parliament and General Assembly of the Church of Scotland that same year. A directory in the Roman Catholic Church contains instructions for saying the mass and offices each day of the year. 4. A small governing body; specif., the five-member executive body that governed France from 1795–1799 during the French Revolution until it was overthrown by Napoleon and succeeded by the consulate.

directory call. Property. In a land description, a general description of the areas in which landmarks or other calls are found. See CALL (5); LOCATIVE CALLS.

directory provision. A statutory or contractual sentence or paragraph in which a directory requirement appears.

directory requirement. A statutory or contractual instruction to act in a way that is advisable, but not absolutely essential — in contrast to a mandatory requirement. • A directory requirement is frequently introduced by the word should or, less frequently, shall.

directory statute. See STATUTE.

directory trust. See TRUST.

direct-participation program. An investment vehicle that is financed through the sale of securities not traded on an exchange or quoted on NASDAQ and that provides flow-through tax consequences to the investors.

direct payment. See PAYMENT.

direct placement. 1. The sale by a company, such as an industrial or utility company, of an entire issue of securities directly to a lender (such as an insurance company or group of investors), instead of through an underwriter. • This type of offering is exempt from SEC filing requirements. 2. PRIVATE PLACEMENT (1).

direct selling. 1. Selling to a customer without going through a dealer. 2. Selling to a retailer without going through a wholesaler.

direct skip. Tax. A generation-skipping transfer of assets, either directly or through a trust. ● A direct skip may be subject to a generation-skipping transfer tax — either a gift tax or an estate tax. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601–2602. See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; SKIP PERSON.

direct tax. See TAX.

direct trust. See express trust under TRUST.

diribitores (di-rib-ə-tor-eez), n. [Latin “sorters of votes”] Roman law. Officers who distributed voting ballots to the public.

diriment impediment (dir-ə-mənt im-ped-ə-mənt), n. [fr. Latin dirimens impedimentum “nullifying impediment”] Hist. A bar to marriage (such as a close familial relationship) that annuls a marriage as a matter of law.

dirt-for-debt transfer. A transaction in which a bankrupt debtor satisfies all or part of a secured debt by transferring the collateral to the creditor.

disability. 1. The inability to perform some function; an objectively measurable condition of impairment, physical or mental <his disability entitled him to workers’-compensation benefits>. — Also termed incapacity.

developmental disability. An impairment of general intellectual functioning or adaptive behavior.

partial disability. A worker’s inability to perform all the duties that he or she could do before an accident, even though the worker can still engage in some gainful activity on the job.

permanent disability. A disability that will indefinitely prevent a worker from performing some or all of the duties that he or she could do before an accident.

physical disability. An incapacity caused by a physical defect or infirmity, or by bodily imperfection or mental weakness.

temporary disability. A disability that exists until an injured worker is as far restored as the nature of the injury will permit.

temporary total disability. Total disability that is not permanent.

total disability. A worker’s inability to perform employment-related duties because of a physical or mental impairment.

2. Incapacity in the eyes of the law <most of a minor’s disabilities are removed when he or she turns 18>. — Also termed incapacity.

civil disability. The condition of a person who has had a legal right or privilege revoked as a result of a criminal conviction, as when a person’s driver’s license is revoked after a DWI conviction. Cf. CIVIL DEATH (2).

disability benefits. See DISABILITY COMPENSATION.

disability clause. A life-insurance-policy provision providing for a waiver of premiums during the policyholder’s period of disability, and sometimes providing for monthly payments equal to a percentage of the policy’s face value.

disability compensation. Payments from public or private funds to a disabled person who cannot work, such as social-security or workers’-compensation benefits. — Also termed disability benefits.

disability insurance. See INSURANCE.

disability retirement plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

disable, vb. 1. To deprive (someone or something) of the ability to function; to weaken the capability of (someone or something). 2. To impair; to diminish. 3. To legally disqualify (someone); to render (someone) legally incapable.

disablement, n. 1. The act of incapacitating or immobilizing. 2. The imposition of a legal disability.

disabling restraints. Limits on the alienation of property. ● These restraints are sometimes void as being against public policy.

disabling statute. See STATUTE.

disadvocate (dis-ad-və-kair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] To deny; to disavow.

disaffirm (dis-ə-fərm), vb. 1. To repudiate; to revoke consent; to disclaim the intent to be bound by an earlier transaction. 2. To declare (a voidable contract) to be void.

disaffirmance (dis-ə-fərm-ənts). An act of denial; a repudiation, as of an earlier transaction. 2. A declaration that a voidable contract (such as one entered into by a minor) is void. — Also termed disaffirmation.

“Disaffirmance is an operative act whereby the legal relations created by an infant’s contract are terminated and discharged and other legal relations substituted. Inasmuch as the infant’s executory promise does not operate to create any legal duty in him (the infant being at all times at liberty or privileged not to perform), his disaffirmance is not the discharge of such a duty. A return promise by an adult, however, creates a legal duty and the infant has a correlative right in personam. A disaffirmance terminates these.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 181 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

disafforest (dis-ə-for-əst or -fahr-əst), vb. [fr. French desaforester] Hist. To free lands from the restrictions of the forest laws and return them to the status of ordinary lands. — Also termed deafforest.

disalt (dis-awlt), vb. Hist. To disable (a person).

disappeared person. A person who has been absent from home for at least seven continuous years and who, during that period, has not communicated with the person most likely to know his or her whereabouts. See SEVEN-YEARS-ABSENCE RULE; MISSING PERSON.

disappropriation. 1. Eccles. law. The alienation of church property from its original use; the severance of property from church ownership or possession. 2. The release of property from individual ownership or possession.

disapprove, vb. 1. To pass unfavorable judgment on (something). 2. To decline to sanction (something).

disarmament. Int’l law. The negotiated or voluntary reduction of military arms, esp. nuclear weapons, to a greatly reduced level or to nil. Cf. ARMS CONTROL.

disaster. A calamity; a catastrophic emergency.

disaster area. A region officially declared to have suffered a catastrophic emergency, such as a flood or hurricane, and therefore eligible for government aid.

disaster loss. See LOSS.

disavow (dis-ə-vow), vb. To disown; to disclaim knowledge of; to repudiate <the company disavowed the acts of its agent>. — disavowal, n.

disbarment, n. The action of expelling a lawyer from the bar or from the practice of law, usu. because of some disciplinary violation. — Also termed striking off the roll. — disbar, vb.

disbocatio (dis-bə-kay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Law Latin dis- + boscus “wood”] Hist. The conversion of forest to pasture.

disbursement (dis-bərs-mənt), n. The act of paying out money, commonly from a fund or in settlement of a debt or account payable <dividend disbursement>. — disburse, vb.

DISC. abbr. DOMESTIC INTERNATIONAL SALES CORPORATION.

discarcare (dis-kahr-kair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin dis- + carcare “to charge”] Hist. To unload (cargo), usu. from a ship. — Also termed discargare.

disceptatio causae (di-sep-tay-shee-oh kaw-zee), n. [Latin “debate about a case”] Roman law. The argument by the advocates of both sides of a dispute.

discharge (dis-chahrj), n. 1. The payment of a debt or satisfaction of some other obligation. 2. The release of a debtor from monetary obligations upon adjudication of bankruptcy; RELEASE (1). 3. The dismissal of a case. 4. The canceling or vacating of a court order. 5. The release of a prisoner from confinement. 6. The relieving of a witness, juror, or jury from further responsibilities in a case. 7. The firing of an employee.

constructive discharge. A termination of employment brought about by making the employee’s working conditions so intolerable that the employee feels compelled to leave.

“Most constructive discharges fall into one of two basic fact patterns. First, the employer can cause a constructive discharge by breaching the employee’s contract of employment in some manner short of termination. Second, the employer can make working conditions so intolerable erable that the employee feels compelled to quit." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 9.7, at 539 (1994).

retaliatory discharge. A discharge that is made in retaliation for the employee's conduct (such as reporting unlawful activity by the employer to the government) and that clearly violates public policy. • Most states have statutes allowing an employee who is dismissed by retaliatory discharge to recover damages.

unconditional discharge. 1. A release from an obligation without any conditions attached. 2. A release from confinement without any parole requirements to fulfill.

wrongful discharge. A discharge for reasons that are illegal or that violate public policy.

8. The dismissal of a member of the armed services from military service <the sergeant was honorably discharged>. — discharge (dis-chahrj), vb.

administrative discharge. A military-service discharge given by administrative means and not by court-martial.

bad-conduct discharge. A punitive discharge that a court-martial can give a member of the military, usu. as punishment for repeated minor offenses. — Abbr. BCD.

dishonorable discharge. The most severe punitive discharge that a court-martial can give to a member of the military. • A dishonorable discharge may result from conviction for an offense recognized in civilian law as a felony or of a military offense requiring severe punishment. Only a general court-martial can give a dishonorable discharge.

general discharge. One of the administrative discharges given to a member of the military who does not qualify for an honorable discharge.

honorable discharge. A formal final judgment passed by the government on a soldier's entire military record, and an authoritative declaration that he or she has left the service in a status of honor. • Full veterans' benefits are given only to a person honorably discharged.

undesirable discharge. One of the administrative discharges given to a member of the military who does not qualify for an honorable discharge.

dischargeability proceeding. Bankruptcy. A hearing to determine whether a debt is dischargeable or is subject to an exception to discharge. 11 USCA § 523.

dischargeable claim. Bankruptcy. A claim that can be discharged in bankruptcy.

discharged contract. See void contract under CONTRACT.

discharge hearing. Bankruptcy. A hearing at which the court informs the debtor either that a discharge has been granted or the reasons why a discharge has not been granted. See REAFFIRMATION HEARING.

discharge in bankruptcy. 1. The release of a debtor from personal liability for prebankruptcy debts. 2. A bankruptcy court's decree releasing a debtor from that liability.

disciplinary proceeding. An action brought to reprimand, suspend, or expel a licensed professional or other person from a profession or other group because of unprofessional, unethical, improper, or illegal conduct. • A disciplinary proceeding against a lawyer may result in the lawyer's being suspended or disbarred from practice.

disciplinary rule. (usu. cap.) A mandatory regulation stating the minimum level of professional conduct that a professional must sustain to avoid being subject to disciplinary action. • For lawyers, the disciplinary rules are found chiefly in the Model Code of Professional Responsibility. — Abbr. DR. Cf. ETHICAL CONSIDERATION.

discipline, n. 1. Punishment intended to correct or instruct; esp., a sanction or penalty imposed after an official finding of misconduct. 2. Control gained by enforcing compliance or order. 3. Military law. A state of mind inducing instant obedience to a lawful order, no matter how unpleasant or dangerous such compliance might be. — discipline, vb. — disciplinary, adj.

disclaimer, n. 1. A renunciation of one's legal right or claim. 2. A repudiation of another's legal right or claim. 3. A writing that contains such a renunciation or repudiation. — disclaim, vb.

disclaimer of warranty. An oral or written statement intended to limit a seller's liability for defects in the goods sold. • In some circumstances, printed words must be specific and conspicuous to be effective.

patent disclaimer. A patent applicant's amendment of a specification to relinquish part of the claim to the invention. • When part of the invention is not patentable, such a disclaimer can be filed to help ensure the validity of the rest of the patent. See SPECIFICATION (3).

qualified disclaimer. A person's refusal to accept an interest in property so that he or she can avoid having to pay estate or gift taxes. • To be effective under federal tax law, the refusal must be in writing and must be executed no later than nine months from the time when the interest was created. IRC (26 USCA) § 2518.

disclosure, n. The act or process of making known something that was previously unknown; a revelation of facts . — disclose, vb. — disclosural, adj. See DISCOVERY; INITIAL DISCLOSURE.

compulsory disclosure. A mandatory disclosure of information, as of matters within the scope of the discovery rules. See DISCOVERY (2).

full disclosure. A complete revelation of all material facts.

discommon (dis-kom-ən), vb. 1. To deprive of the right of common (e.g., the right to pasture). 2. To deprive (something, esp. land) of commonable character. • A person could discommon land by separating or enclosing it. 3. To deprive (someone) of the privileges of a place, such as the right to a church fellowship.

discontinuance (dis-kən-tin-yoo-ənts), n. 1. The termination of a lawsuit by the plaintiff; a voluntary dismissal or nonsuit. See DISMISSAL; NONSUIT. 2. The termination of an estate-tail by a tenant in tail who conveys a larger estate in the land than is legally allowed.

"Such is . . . the injury of discontinuance, which happens when he who hath an estate-tail, maketh a larger estate of the land than by law he is entitled to do: in which case the estate is good, so far as his power extends who made it, but no farther. As if tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee-simple, or for the life of the feoffee, or in tail; all which are beyond his power to make, for that by the common law extends no farther than to make a lease for his own life: the entry of the feoffee is lawful during the life of the feoffer; but if he retains the possession after the death of the feoffer, it is an injury, which is termed a discontinuance; the ancient legal estate, which ought to have survived to the heir in tail, being gone, or at least suspended, and for a while discontinued." 3 William discontinuee, n. A person who receives an entailed estate from the tenant in tail; one whose acquisition of an entailed estate causes a discontinuance of the fee tail heirs' right to the estate. Cf. DISCONTINUOR.

discontinuing easement. See discontinuous easement under EASEMENT.

discontinuor, n. A tenant in tail whose conveyance of the entailed estate causes a discontinuance. Cf. DISCONTINUEE.

discontinuous easement. See EASEMENT.

disconvenable (dis-kən-vee-nə-bəl), adj. [Law French] Archaic. Unfit; improper.

discount, n. 1. A reduction from the full amount or value of something, esp. a price. 2. An advance deduction of interest when a person lends money on a note, bill of exchange, or other commercial paper, resulting in its present value. See PRESENT VALUE. 3. The amount by which a security's market value is below its face value. Cf. PREMIUM (3). — discount, vb.

bulk discount. See volume discount.

cash discount. 1. A seller's price reduction in exchange for an immediate cash payment. 2. A reduction from the stated price if the bill is paid on or before a specified date.

functional discount. 1. A supplier's price discount given to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role (such as warehousing or advertising) in the supplier's distributive system. • This type of discount typically reflects the value of services performed by the purchaser for the supplier. If a functional discount constitutes a reasonable reimbursement for the purchaser's actual marketing functions, it does not constitute unlawful price discrimination and does not violate anti-trust laws. 2. A supplier's price discount based on the purchaser's relative distance from the supplier in the chain of distribution. • For example, a wholesaler or distributor usu. receives a greater discount than a retailer.

trade discount. 1. A discount from list price offered to all customers of a given type — for example, a discount offered by a lumber dealer to building contractors. 2. The difference between a seller's list price and the price at which the dealer actually sells goods to the trade.

volume discount. A price decrease based on a large-quantity purchase. — Also termed bulk discount; quantity discount.

discount bond. See BOND (3).

discount broker. See BROKER.

discounted cash flow. See CASH FLOW.

discount interest. See INTEREST (3).

discount loan. See LOAN.

discount market. See MARKET.

discount rate. See INTEREST RATE.

discount share. See discount stock under STOCK.

discount stock. See STOCK.

discount yield. See YIELD.

discoverable, adj. Subject to pretrial discovery <the defendant's attorney argued that the defendant's income-tax returns were not discoverable during the liability phase of the trial>.

discovered-peril doctrine. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

discover (dis-kəv-ərt), adj. 1. Archaic. Uncovered; exposed. 2. Not married, esp. a widow or a woman who has never married.

discovery, n. 1. The act or process of finding or learning something that was previously unknown <after making the discovery, the inventor immediately applied for a patent>. 2. Compulsory disclosure, at a party's request, of information that relates to the litigation <the plaintiff filed a motion to compel discovery>. • The primary discovery devices are interrogatories, depositions, requests for admissions, and requests for production. Although discovery typically comes from parties, courts also allow limited discovery from nonparties. 3. The facts or documents disclosed <the new associate spent all her time reviewing discovery>. — discover, vb. — discoverable, adj.

"Discovery has broad scope. According to Federal Rule 26, which is the model in modern procedural codes, inquiry may be made into 'any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter of the action.' Thus, discovery may be had of facts incidentally relevant to the issues in the pleadings even if the facts do not directly prove or disprove the facts in question." Geoffrey C. Hazard, Jr. & Michele Taruffo, American Civil Procedure: An Introduction 115 (1993).

postjudgment discovery. Discovery conducted after judgment has been rendered, usu. to determine the nature of the judgment debtor's assets or to obtain testimony for use in future proceedings. — Also termed posttrial discovery.

pretrial discovery. Discovery conducted before trial to reveal facts and develop evidence. • Modern procedural rules have broadened the scope of pretrial discovery to prevent the parties from surprising each other with evidence at trial.

discovery abuse. 1. The misuse of the discovery process, esp. by making overbroad requests for information that is unnecessary or beyond the scope of permissible disclosure. 2. The failure to respond adequately to proper discovery requests. — Also termed abuse of discovery.

"The term 'discovery abuse' has been used as if it were a single concept, but it includes several different things. Thus, it is useful to subdivide 'abuse' into 'misuse' and 'overuse.' What is referred to as 'misuse' would include not only direct violation of the rules, as by failing to respond to a discovery request within the stated time limit, but also more subtle attempts to harass or obstruct an opponent, as by giving obviously inadequate answers or by requesting information that clearly is outside the scope of discovery. By 'overuse' is meant asking for more discovery than is necessary or appropriate to the particular case. 'Overuse,' in turn, can be subdivided into problems of 'depth' and of 'breadth,' with 'depth' referring to discovery that may be relevant but is simply excessive and 'breadth' referring to discovery requests that go into matters too far removed from the case." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 81, at 580 (5th ed. 1994).

discovery immunity. A (usu. statutory) prohibition that excludes certain documents or information from discovery.

discovery policy. See claims-made policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

discovery rule. Civil procedure. The rule that a limitations period does not begin to run until the plaintiff discovers (or reasonably should have discovered) the injury giving rise to the claim. • The discovery rule usu. applies to injuries that are inherently difficult to detect, such as those resulting from medical malpractice. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. Cf. OCCURRENCE RULE.

discovery vein. See VEIN.

discredit, vb. To destroy or impair the credibility of (a witness, a piece of evidence, or a theory); to lessen the degree of trust to be accorded to (a witness or document). — discredit, n.

discreet (di-skreet), adj. Exercising discretion; prudent; judicious; discerning.

discrete (di-skreet), adj. Individual; separate; distinct.

discretion (di-skresh-ən). 1. A public official's power or right to act in certain circumstances according to personal judgment and conscience. — Also termed discretionary power.

administrative discretion. A public official's or agency's power to exercise judgment in the discharge of its duties.

judicial discretion. The exercise of judgment by a judge or court based on what is fair under the circumstances and guided by the rules and principles of law; a court's power to act or not act when a litigant is not entitled to demand the act as a matter of right. — Also termed legal discretion.

prosecutorial discretion. A prosecutor's power to choose from the options available in a criminal case, such as filing charges, prosecuting, plea-bargaining, and recommending a sentence to the court.

2. Criminal & tort law. The capacity to distinguish between right and wrong, sufficient to make a person responsible for his or her own actions. 3. Wise conduct and management; cautious discernment; prudence.

discretion, abuse of. See ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

discretionary (di-skresh-ə-ner-ee), adj. (Of an act or duty) involving an exercise of judgment and choice, not an implementation of a hard-and-fast rule. • Such an act by a court may be overturned only after a showing of abuse of discretion.

discretionary account. An account that allows a broker access to a customer's funds to purchase and sell securities or commodities for the customer based on the broker's judgment and without first having to obtain the customer's consent to the purchase or sale.

discretionary act. A deed involving an exercise of personal judgment and conscience. — Also termed discretionary function. See DISCRETION; ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

discretionary damages. See DAMAGES.

discretionary function. See DISCRETIONARY ACT.

discretionary immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

discretionary order. See ORDER (4).

discretionary power. See DISCRETION (1).

discretionary review. See REVIEW.

discretionary trust. See TRUST.

discriminant function (di-skrim-ə-nənt). An IRS method of selecting tax returns to be audited. • The method consists of (1) using a computer program to identify returns with a high probability of error (such as those showing a disproportionate amount of deductible expenses), and (2) having examiners manually review the selected returns to determine which ones should be audited. — Also termed DIF system.

discriminatee (di-skrim-ə-nə-tee). A person unlawfully discriminated against.

discrimination, n. 1. The effect of a law or established practice that confers privileges on a certain class or that denies privileges to a certain class because of race, age, sex, nationality, religion, or handicap. • Federal law, including Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, prohibits employment discrimination based on any one of those characteristics. Other federal statutes, supplemented by court decisions, prohibit discrimination in voting rights, housing, credit extension, public education, and access to public facilities. State laws provide further protections against discrimination. 2. Differential treatment; esp., a failure to treat all persons equally when no reasonable distinction can be found between those favored and those not favored.

"The dictionary sense of 'discrimination' is neutral while the current political use of the term is frequently non-neutral, pejorative. With both a neutral and a non-neutral use of the word having currency, the opportunity for confusion in arguments about racial discrimination is enormously multiplied. For some, it may be enough that a practice is called discriminatory for them to judge it wrong. Others may be mystified that the first group condemns the practice without further argument or inquiry. Many may be led to the false sense that they have actually made a moral argument by showing that the practice discriminates (distinguishes in favor of or against). The temptation is to move from 'X distinguishes in favor of or against' to 'X discriminates' to 'X is wrong' without being aware of the equivocation involved." Robert K. Fullinwider, The Reverse Discrimination Controversy 11-12 (1980).

age discrimination. Discrimination based on age. • Federal law prohibits age discrimination in employment against people who are age 40 or older.

gender discrimination. See sex discrimination.

invidious discrimination (in-vid-ee-əs). Discrimination that is offensive or objectionable, esp. because it involves prejudice or stereotyping.

racial discrimination. Discrimination based on race.

reverse discrimination. Preferential treatment of minorities, usu. through affirmative-action programs, in a way that adversely affects members of a majority group. See AFFIRMATIVE ACTION.

sex discrimination. Discrimination based on gender, esp. against women. — Also termed gender discrimination.

3. The effect of state laws that favor local interests over out-of-state interests. • Such a discriminatory state law may still be upheld if it is narrowly tailored to achieve an important state interest. — discriminate, vb. — discriminatory, adj. Cf. FAVORITISM.

discussion. 1. The act of exchanging views on something; a debate. 2. Civil law. A creditor's act of exhausting all remedies against the principal debtor before proceeding against the guarantor. See BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION.

disease. 1. A deviation from the healthy and normal functioning of the body <the drug could not be linked to his disease>. 2. (pl.) Special classes of pathological conditions with similar traits, such as having similar causes and affecting similar organs <respiratory diseases> <occupational diseases>. 3. Any disorder; any depraved condition.

functional disease. A disease that prevents, obstructs, or interferes with an organ's special function, without anatomical defect or abnormality in the organ itself.

industrial disease. See OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE.

occupational disease. See OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE.

organic disease. A disease that is caused by an injury to, or lesion or malfunction in, an organ.

disembarrass, vb. To free from embarrassment; to extricate or disentangle one thing from another.

disenfranchise (dis-ən-fran-chīz), vb. To deprive (a person) of the right to exercise a franchise or privilege, esp. to vote. — Also termed disfranchise.

disenfranchisement (dis-ən-fran-chīz-mənt or -fran-chīz-mənt). 1. The act of depriving a member of a corporation or other organization of a right, as by expulsion. 2. The act of taking away the right to vote in public elections from a citizen or class of citizens. — Also termed disfranchisement.

disentailing deed. See DEED.

disentailing statute (dis-ən-tayl-ing). A statute regulating or prohibiting disentailing deeds. See disentailing deed under DEED.

disentailment (dis-ən-tayl-mənt), n. The act or process by which a tenant in tail bars the entail on an estate and converts it into a fee simple, thereby nullifying the rights of any later claimant to the fee tail. — disentail, vb.

disentitle (dis-ən-tīt-əl), vb. To deprive (someone) of a title or claim <the plaintiff's actions disentitled her from recovering damages>.

disorderly house. 1. A dwelling where people carry on activities that are a nuisance to the neighborhood. 2. A dwelling where people conduct criminal or immoral activities. ● Examples are brothels and drug houses. — Also termed bawdy house; house of prostitution; house of ill fame; lewd house.

"The keeping of one type of disorderly house — the bawdy house — is punished because it violates the social interest in maintaining proper standards of morality and decency. . . . As included here a house may be disorderly for other reasons. Any house in which disorderly persons are permitted to congregate, and to disturb the tranquility of the neighborhood by fighting, quarreling, swearing or any other type of disorder, is a disorderly house; and the keeping thereof is a misdemeanor at common law." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 487 (3d ed. 1982).

disorderly person. 1. A person guilty of disorderly conduct. 2. A person who breaches the peace, order, decency, or safety of the public, as defined by statute.

"Ordinarily, a person who is guilty of disorderly conduct is a 'disorderly person,' but where statutes define 'a disorderly person' and distinguish acts which may constitute the offense of disorderly conduct, the distinction is to be preserved and the different provisions relative to the different offenses particularly followed." 27 C.J.S. Disorderly Conduct § 1(1), at 509 (1959).

disparagare (di-spar-ə-gair-ee), vb. [Law Latin fr. Law French disparager "to disparage"] Hist. 1. To disparage. 2. To bring together unequal persons, as in a marriage between persons of unequal lineage. Cf. PARAGE.

disparagatio (di-spar-ə-gay-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Disparagement in marriage.

disparagation (di-spar-ə-gay-shən), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. Disparagement. 2. A marriage below one's station.

disparage (di-spar-ij), vb. 1. Hist. To connect unequally (e.g., to marry below one's status). 2. To dishonor (something or someone) by comparison. 3. To unjustly discredit or detract from the reputation of (another's property, product, or business).

disparagement (di-spar-ij-mənt), n. A false and injurious statement that discredits or detracts from the reputation of another's property, product, or business. ● To recover in tort for disparagement, the plaintiff must prove that the statement caused a third party to take some action resulting in specific pecuniary loss to the plaintiff. — Also termed injurious falsehood. — More narrowly termed slander of title; trade libel; slander of goods. Cf. DEFAMATION.

disparaging instruction. A jury charge that discredits or defames a party to a lawsuit.

disparate impact (dis-pə-rit). The adverse effect of a facially neutral practice (esp. an employment practice) that nonetheless discriminates against persons because of their race, sex, national origin, age, or disability and that is not justified by business necessity. ● Discriminatory intent is irrelevant in a disparate-impact claim. — Also termed adverse impact.

disparate treatment. The practice, esp. in employment, of intentionally dealing with persons differently because of their race, sex, national origin, age, or disability. ● To succeed on a disparate-treatment claim, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant acted with discriminatory intent or motive.

disqualification, n. 1. Something that makes one ineligible; esp., a bias or conflict of interest that prevents a judge or juror from impartially hearing a case, or that prevents a lawyer from representing a party.

vicarious disqualification. Disqualification of all the lawyers in a firm or in an office because one of the lawyers is ethically disqualified from representing the client at issue. — Also termed imputed disqualification.

"In general, disqualification of a lawyer from representation, at least in multiple client-conflict scenarios, means disqualification of that lawyer's entire firm from the same representation. When a lawyer has been exclusively or chiefly responsible for the representation of a client and that lawyer changes jobs, there is little question but that the imputed-disqualification rule will apply to disqualify the new firm from representing the opponent of the first client. But because lawyers often work for large organizations, . . . a question may arise about the application of the imputation rule when a lawyer has left employment If the lawyer had little or no responsibility in the first organization for the representation or if the lawyer can be effectively shielded from the representation in the new organization, or both, there may be no useful purpose served by imputing the lawyer's disqualification to the new organization" James E. Moliterno & John M. Levy, Ethics of the Lawyer's Work 151 (1993).

2. The act of making ineligible; the fact or condition of being ineligible. — disqualify, vb. Cf. RECUSAL.

distringas vice comitem (di-string-gas vi-see kom-i-təm), n. [Law Latin “you are to distrain the sheriff”] Hist. A distringas writ ordering the coroner to distrain the sheriff for not executing a writ of venditioni exponas. See VENDITIONI EXPONAS.

distringere (di-strinj-ə-ree), vb. [Latin] To distrain; to coerce; to compel. ● The first-person form of the verb was distringo (“I distrain”).

disturbance, n. 1. An act causing annoyance or disquiet, or interfering with a person’s pursuit of a lawful occupation or the peace and order of a neighborhood, community, or meeting. 2. At common law, a wrong done to an incorporeal hereditament by hindering the owner’s enjoyment of it.

disturbance of common. At common law, a wrongful interference with, or impediment to, another’s right to commonable property, such as a wrongful fencing or surcharge on the common.

“The disturbance of common comes next to be considered; where any act is done, by which the right of another to his common is incommoded or diminished. This may happen, in the first place, where one who hath no right of common, puts his cattle into the land; and thereby robs the cattle of the commoners of their respective shares of the pasture. Or if one, who hath a right of common, puts in cattle which are not commonable, as hogs and goats; which amounts to the same inconvenience” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 237 (1768).

disturbance of franchise. At common law, a wrongful interference with a liberty or privilege.

“Disturbance of franchises happens when a man has the franchise of holding a court-leet, of keeping a fair or market, of free-warren, of taking toll, of seizing waifs or estrays, or (in short) any other species of franchise whatsoever, and he is disturbed or incommoded in the lawful exercise thereof.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 236 (1768).

disturbance of patronage. A wrongful obstruction of a patron from presenting a clerk to a benefice.

disturbance of public meetings. The unlawful interference with the proceedings of a public assembly.

“Generally speaking, any conduct which, being contrary to the usages of the particular sort of meeting and class of persons assembled, interferes with its due progress and services, or is annoying to the congregation in whole or in part, is a disturbance; and a meeting may be said to be ‘disturbed’ when it is agitated, aroused from a state of repose, molested, interrupted, hindered, perplexed, disquieted, or diverted from the object of the assembly.” 27 C.J.S. Disturbance of Public Meetings § 1, at 817 (1959).

disturbance of public worship. Any conduct that interferes with the peaceful, lawful assembly of people for religious exercises.

disturbance of tenure. A stranger’s ouster of a tenant from a tenancy. ● The tenant’s lord could recover damages for the ouster.

diverse, adj. 1. Of or relating to different types <the attorney handles diverse cases ranging from probate matters to criminal law>. 2. (Of a person or entity) having a different citizenship from the party or parties on the other side of the lawsuit <the parties are diverse because the plaintiffs are citizens of Illinois and the defendant is a New York citizen>. See diversity jurisdiction under JURISDICTION. 3. (Of a group of people) including people of different races, sexes, nationalities, and cultural backgrounds <the school has a diverse student body>.

diversification, n. 1. A company's movement into a broader range of products, usu. by buying firms already serving the market or by expanding existing operations <the soft-drink company's diversification into the potato-chip market has increased its profits>. 2. The act of investing in a wide range of companies to reduce the risk if one sector of the market suffers losses <the prudent investor's diversification of the portfolio among 12 companies>. — diversify, vb.

diversified holding company. See COMPANY.

diversion, n. 1. A deviation or alteration from the natural course of things; esp., the unauthorized alteration of a watercourse to the prejudice of a lower riparian owner, or the unauthorized use of funds. 2. A distraction or pastime. — divert, vb.

diversion program. A program that refers certain criminal defendants before trial to community programs on job training, education, and the like, which if successfully completed may lead to the dismissal of the charges. — Also termed pretrial diversion; pretrial intervention. Cf. deferred judgment under JUDGMENT.

Diversité des courts (di-vər-si-tay də koort). [Law French] A treatise on courts written in French, supposedly by Fitzherbert during the reign of Edward III. • It was printed initially in 1525 and again in 1534. — Also spelled Diversité des courtes.

"[F]or in the ancient treatise, entitled diversité de courtes . . . we have a catalogue of the matters of conscience then cognizable by subpoena in chancery, which fall within a very narrow compass." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 53 (1768).

diversity, n. 1. DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP. 2. Hist. A plea that a prisoner to be executed is not the one that was accused and found guilty, at which point a jury is immediately impaneled to try the issue of the prisoner's identity.

diversity, adj. Of, relating to, or involving diversity jurisdiction .

diversity jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

diversity of citizenship. A basis for federal-court jurisdiction that exists when (1) a case is between citizens of different states, or between a citizen of a state and an alien, and (2) the matter in controversy exceeds a specific value (now $75,000). 28 USCA § 1332. • For purposes of diversity jurisdiction, a corporation is considered a citizen of both the state of incorporation and the state of its principal place of business. An unincorporated association, such as a partnership, is considered a citizen of each state of which at least one of its members is a citizen. — Often shortened to diversity. See diversity jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

complete diversity. In a multiparty case, diversity between both sides to the lawsuit so that all plaintiffs have different citizenship from all defendants. • Complete diversity must exist for a federal court to have diversity jurisdiction over the matter. The rule of complete diversity was first laid down by Chief Justice Marshall in Strawbridge v. Curtiss, 7 U.S. (3 Cranch) 267 (1806).

manufactured diversity. Improper or collusively created diversity of citizenship for the sole or primary purpose of creating federal jurisdiction. • Manufactured diversity is prohibited by 28 USCA § 1359.

dives costs (di-veez), n. Ordinary court costs granted to a successful party, as distinguished from limited costs (such as out-of-pocket costs) allowed to a successful pauper who sued or defended in forma pauperis. • The term derives from the name of Dives, the supposed name of the rich man in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:19–31). Dives is a Latin word meaning "rich."

divestiture (di-ves-tə-cher or di-), n. 1. The loss or surrender of an asset or interest. 2. A court order to a party to dispose of assets or property. 3. Antitrust. A court order to a defendant to rid itself of property, securities, or other assets to prevent a monopoly or restraint of trade. — divest, vb.

divestment, n. 1. Property. The cutting short of an interest in property before its normal termination. 2. The complete or partial loss of an interest in an asset, such as land or stock. 3. DISINVESTMENT (2). — divest, vb.

divide-and-pay-over rule. Wills & estates. The principle that if the only provisions in a testamentary disposition are words ordering that payment be made at some time after the testator's death, time will be of the essence and the interest is future and contingent rather than vested and immediate.

divided court. An appellate court whose opinion or decision in a particular case is not unanimous, esp. when the majority is slim, as in a 5-to-4 decision of the U.S. Supreme Court.

divided-damages rule. Maritime law. The obsolete principle that when two parties are jointly liable to a third party for a tort, each party is liable for only half the damages. ● The courts now apply a comparative-negligence standard.

“For over a hundred years admiralty law embraced the rule of ‘divided damages’ in collision cases In 1975, in United States v. Reliable Transfer Co., 421 U.S. 397, 95 S.Ct. 1708, 44 L.Ed.2d 251 (1975), the Supreme Court jettisoned that inequitable and illogical rule in favor of proportionate allocation of fault among joint-tortfeasors in collision cases. Each vessel now is liable to the other offending vessel in contribution for that part of the total damages proportionate to its fault, and is liable for its per capita (virile) share only when the respective faults of the vessels are equal, or when proportionate fault can not be ascertained.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 165 (2d ed. 1988).

dividend. A portion of a company’s earnings or profits distributed pro rata to its shareholders, usu. in the form of cash or additional shares.

accumulated dividend. A dividend that has been declared but not yet paid. — Also termed accrued dividend.

accumulative dividend. See cumulative dividend.

asset dividend. A dividend paid in the form of property, usu. the company’s product, rather than in cash or stock. — Also termed property dividend.

bond dividend. A dividend in which a shareholder receives a bond instead of scrip, property, or money.

capital-gain dividend. A taxable payment to a mutual-fund shareholder. ● The payment is the shareholder’s proportional share of the net capital gains realized by securities sales from the mutual fund’s portfolio. — Also termed capital-gain distribution.

cash dividend. A dividend paid to shareholders in the form of money.

consent dividend. A dividend that is not actually paid to the shareholders, but is taxed to the shareholders and increases the basis in their stock investment. ● A corporation declares a consent dividend to avoid or reduce an accumulated-earnings or personal-holding-company penalty tax.

constructive dividend. A taxable benefit derived by a shareholder from the corporation even though the benefit was not designated a dividend. ● Examples include excessive compensation, bargain purchases of corporate property, and shareholder use of corporate property.

cumulative dividend. A dividend that grows from year to year when not paid. ● A cumulative dividend is usu. on preferred shares, and it must be paid in full before common shareholders may receive any dividend. If the corporation does not pay a dividend in a particular year or period, it is carried over to the next year or period and must be paid before the common shareholders receive any payment. — Also termed accumulative dividend. Cf. noncumulative dividend.

deferred dividend. A dividend that is declared, but is payable at a future date.

deficiency dividend. A dividend paid to reduce or avoid personal-holding-company tax in a prior year.

disguised dividend. See informal dividend.

extraordinary dividend. A dividend paid in addition to a regular dividend, usu. because of exceptional corporate profits during the dividend period. — Also termed extra dividend; nonrecurring dividend; special dividend.

fixed-return dividend. A dividend that is constant throughout the investment’s life.

informal dividend. A payment of salary, rent, interest, or the like to or for a shareholder as a substitute for a dividend. — Also termed disguised dividend.

liability dividend. See scrip dividend.

liquidation dividend. A dividend paid to a dissolving corporation’s shareholders, usu. from the capital of the corporation, upon the decision to suspend all or part of its business operations. — Also termed liquidating dividend.

nimble dividend. A dividend paid out of current earnings when there is a deficit in the account from which dividends may be paid. ● Some state statutes prohibit nimble dividends.

noncumulative dividend. A dividend that does not accrue for the benefit of a preferred shareholder if there is a passed dividend in a particular year or period. Cf. cumulative dividend.

nonrecurring dividend. See extraordinary dividend.

passed dividend. A dividend that is not paid when due by a company that has a history of paying regular dividends.

preferred dividend. A dividend paid to preferred shareholders, who are generally paid a fixed amount and take priority over common shareholders.

property dividend. See asset dividend.

reinvested dividend. A dividend that is used to purchase additional shares in the corporation, instead of being taken in cash by the shareholder. See DIVIDEND-REINVESTMENT PLAN.

scrip dividend. A dividend paid in certificates entitling the holder to ownership of capital stock to be issued in the future. • This type of dividend usu. signals that the corporation's cash flow is poor. — Also termed liability dividend.

special dividend. See extraordinary dividend.

stock dividend. A dividend paid in stock expressed as a percentage of the number of shares already held by a shareholder.

unpaid dividend. A declared but unpaid dividend.

year-end dividend. An extra dividend paid at the end of the fiscal year depending on the amount of the profits.

dividenda (div-i-den-də), n. [fr. Latin dividere "to divide"] Hist. Something to be divided; an indenture.

dividend addition. An amount added to the face value of a life-insurance policy and purchased by using a dividend as a single premium payment.

dividend-credit rule. The principle that a corporate reserve fund amassed from unpaid dividends on preferred stock must be used to pay subsequent dividends on preferred stock before dividend payments on common stock. — Also termed cast-iron-pipe doctrine.

dividend date. The date on which a corporation distributes dividends to record owners of stock shares. See record date under DATE. Cf. EX-DIVIDEND DATE.

dividend income. See INCOME.

dividend-payout ratio. A profitability ratio computed by dividing annual dividends per share by earnings per share.

dividend preference. The right of a holder of preferred shares to receive a dividend before dividend-received deduction. A deduction allowed to a corporate shareholder for dividends received from a domestic corporation. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 243–247.

dividend-reinvestment plan. A company-sponsored program that enables common shareholders to reinvest their dividends, plus additional voluntary payments, into shares of the entity's common stock, usu. with no sales charge, and sometimes at a discount from the stock's market price.

dividend yield. The current annual dividend divided by the market price per share.

divinare (div-i-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] To foretell or divine (something).

divine law. God's law, as distinguished from human law. See NATURAL LAW.

divine right of kings. The political theory that the sovereign is a direct representative of God and has the right to rule absolutely by virtue of birth.

"Divine Right of Kings . . . It originated in the mediaeval concept of God's award of temporal power to civil rulers and spiritual power to the Church. It was claimed by the earlier Stuart kings in England, and explains many of their attitudes in the struggle which developed between them and Parliament for political sovereignty . . . The principle of divine right was submerged during the Commonwealth but re-emerged under James II, but disappeared with his flight and abdication." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 366 (1980).

divine service. 1. Hist. A feudal tenure in which the tenants were obligated to perform special divine functions, such as singing at a certain number of masses or distributing a specified amount in alms. 2. A public worship service.

divisa (di-vi-zə), n. [fr. French diviser "to divide"] 1. A division, as of goods by a will; a devise. 2. A boundary of neighboring lands. 3. A court held on such a boundary to settle the tenants' disputes.

divisible contract. See severable contract under CONTRACT.

divisible divorce. See DIVORCE.

divisible offense. See OFFENSE (1).

divisim (di-vi-zəm). [Law Latin] Hist. Severally; separately.

divisional bond. See BOND (3).

divisional court. See COURT.

divisional security. See SECURITY.

division of fees. See FEE-SPLITTING.

division of powers. The allocation of power between the national government and the states. • Under the Tenth Amendment, powers not delegated to the federal government are reserved to the states or to the people. But today the Tenth Amendment provides only a limited check on Congress's power to regulate the states. Cf. SEPARATION OF POWERS.

division order. Oil & gas. A sales contract for the purchase of oil or gas, directing the purchaser to pay for the value of the products in the proportions set out in the contract. • The purchaser usu. asks the lessee to provide complete abstracts of title, which the purchaser uses to obtain a title examination and a title opinion. The purchaser then prepares the division order, usu. requiring it to be executed by the operator, the royalty owners, and anyone else with an interest in production. Once the division order is executed and returned to the purchaser, payments begin for the products removed.

divisum imperium (di-vi-zəm im-peer-ee-əm), n. [Latin "a divided empire"] Divided jurisdiction; alternate jurisdiction, as of courts.

"This main sea begins at the low-water-mark. But between the high-water-mark and the low-water-mark, where the sea ebbs and flows, the common law and admiralty have divisum imperium, an alternate jurisdiction; one upon the water, when it is full sea; the other upon the land, when it is an ebb." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 107 (1765).

divorce. The legal dissolution of a marriage by a court. — Also termed marital dissolution; dissolution of marriage. Cf. ANNULMENT.

divisible divorce. A divorce whereby the marriage itself is dissolved but the issues incident to the divorce, such as alimony, child custody, and visitation, are reserved until a later proceeding. • This type of divorce can be granted when the court has subject-matter jurisdiction but lacks personal jurisdiction over the defendant-spouse. — Also termed bifurcated divorce.

divorce a mensa et thoro (ay men-sə et thor-oh). [Latin "(divorce) from board and bed"] A partial or qualified divorce by which the parties are separated and forbidden to live or cohabit together, without affecting the marriage itself. • This type of divorce, abolished in England in 1857, was the forerunner of modern judicial separation. — Also termed separation a mensa et thoro; separation from bed and board.

"[The Ecclesiastical Courts] grant also what is called a divorce a mensa et thoro, or rather what we should call a judicial separation, i.e. they release the parties from the duty of living together on grounds of cruelty or misconduct . . ." William Geldart, Introduction to English Law 38 (D.C.M. Yardley ed., 9th ed. 1984).

divorce a vinculo matrimonii (ay ving-kyə-loh ma-trə-moh-nee-i). [Latin "(divorce) from the chains of marriage"] A total divorce of husband and wife, dissolving the marriage tie and releasing the parties wholly from their matrimonial obligations. • This type of common-law divorce, which bastardizes any children from the marriage, is granted on grounds that existed before the marriage. In England, the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1857 introduced statutory divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

ex parte divorce (eks pahr-tee). A divorce proceeding in which only one spouse participates or appears in court.

foreign divorce. A divorce obtained outside the state or country in which one spouse resides.

hotel divorce. A form of collusive divorce — occurring before widespread passage of no-fault divorce laws — in which the spouses agree to fake an adultery scene to create "fault." Cf. no-fault divorce.

"Clearly a lawyer may not originate or participate in a scheme to make it appear to the court that a ground for divorce has occurred when this is not the fact. Such is the case in the so-called 'hotel divorces,' prevalent in jurisdictions where adultery is the only ground for divorce, and based on the principle that intercourse will be presumed from apparently uninhibited opportunity." Henry S. Drinker, Legal Ethics 123-24 (1953).

legislative divorce. Hist. 1. The legal termination of a particular marriage, enacted by the legislature rather than by a court. • Legislative divorces once existed in New England, but now courts perform all divorces. 2. See parliamentary divorce.

limited divorce. 1. A divorce with no provision that one spouse must provide financial support to the other. 2. Loosely, a legal separation.

mail-order divorce. A divorce obtained by parties who are not physically present or domiciled in the jurisdiction purporting to grant the divorce. • Such a divorce is not recognized in the United States because of the absence of the usual bases for jurisdiction.

Mexican divorce. A divorce obtained in Mexico by mail order or by the appearance of one spouse who does not have a Mexican domicile. • Neither type is recognized in the United States.

migratory divorce. A divorce obtained by a spouse who moves to, or temporarily resides in, another state or country to get the divorce.

no-fault divorce. A divorce in which the parties are not required to prove fault or grounds beyond a showing of the irretrievable breakdown of the marriage or irreconcilable differences. • The system of no-fault divorce was adopted throughout the United States during the late 1960s and the 1970s.

Parliamentary divorce. A divorce decreed by Parliament or a legislative act, as opposed to a court. — Also termed legislative divorce.

pro-con divorce. An uncontested divorce granted after only the plaintiff appears at the proceeding (since the defendant contests nothing).

rabbinical divorce. A divorce granted under the authority of a rabbi.

divorce proctor. A person (such as a guardian) who is appointed to protect the interest of the state or children in a divorce action.

doctrine of contra non valentem (kon-trə non və-len-təm). The rule that a limitations or prescriptive period does not begin to run against a plaintiff who is unable to act, usu. because of the defendant's culpable act, such as concealing material information that would give rise to the plaintiff's claim. — Also termed contra non valentem.

doctrine of curative admissibility. A rule allowing a party to introduce otherwise inadmissible evidence to remove the prejudice caused by the improper admission of evidence that was offered by the opposing party. — Also termed curative-admissibility doctrine.

doctrine of entireties (en-ti-ər-teez). In customs law, the rule that when an entry consists of parts that assemble to form an article different from any of the parts, the proper classification will be of the whole article, rather than the individual components.

doctrine of equivalents. Patents. A judicially created theory for finding patent infringement when the accused process or product falls outside the literal scope of the patent claims. ● The doctrine evolved to prevent parties from evading liability for patent infringement by making trivial changes to avoid the literal language of the patent claims. Graver Tank &

Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Prods. Co., 339 U.S. 605, 70 S.Ct. 854 (1950). In determining whether infringement exists under the doctrine, the court must first determine whether “the accused product or process contain[s] an element identical or equivalent to each claimed element of the patented invention.” Warner-Jenkinson Co. v. Hilton Davis Chem. Co., 117 S.Ct. 1040, 1054 (1997). Then, if a correspondence is found between the elements of the accused device and of at least one patent claim, infringement under the doctrine turns on (1) whether the accused device substitutes an element that performs the same function, in a substantially similar way, to accomplish substantially the same result as each claimed element, or (2) whether the substitute element plays a role substantially different from the claimed element. — Also termed equivalents doctrine; doctrine of equivalence; doctrine of equivalency; doctrine of substantial equivalents; nonliteral infringement. Cf. literal infringement under INFRINGEMENT.

reverse doctrine of equivalents. The doctrine preventing infringement liability when the invention is substantially described by the claims of another’s patent but performs the same or similar function in a substantially different way.

doctrine of general average. A rule allowing a carrier to require cargo owners and the shipowner to contribute pro rata to the cost of protecting the ship and its cargo.

doctrine of illusory coverage. A rule requiring an insurance policy to be interpreted so that it is not merely a delusion to the insured.

doctrine of incontrovertible physical facts. See PHYSICAL-FACTS RULE.

doctrine of necessities. Archaic. The common-law rule holding a husband or father liable to one who sells goods to his wife or child if the goods are required for sustenance or support. See NECESSARIES.

doctrine of notice. See NOTICE DOCTRINE.

doctrine of optional completeness. See RULE OF OPTIONAL COMPLETENESS.

doctrine of parens patriae. See PARENS PATRIAE (2).

doctrine of practical location. The principle by which adjacent landowners resolve uncertainties over land boundaries by permanently fixing the boundaries by agreement. — Also termed boundary by agreement; boundary by acquiescence.

doctrine of precedent. 1. The rule that precedents not only have persuasive authority, but must be followed when similar circumstances arise. ● This rule developed in the 19th century and prevails today. See STARE DECISIS. 2. A rule that precedents are reported, may be cited, and will probably be followed by courts. ● This is the rule that prevailed in England until the 19th century.

doctrine of revestment. A rule by which a court regains jurisdiction after the entry of final judgment when the former opposing parties have actively participated in proceedings inconsistent with the court’s judgment.

doctrine of scrivener’s error. A rule permitting a typographical error in a document to be reformed by parol evidence, if the evidence is precise, clear, and convincing. See clerical error under ERROR (2).

doctrine of specialty. Int’l law. The principle, included as a provision in most extradition treaties, under which a person who is extradited to a country to stand trial for certain criminal offenses may be tried only for those offenses and not for any other pre-extradition offenses. — Also termed specialty doctrine. See EXTRADITION.

doctrine of substantial equivalents. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

doctrine of superior equities. Insurance. A rule by which an insurer is unable to recover from anyone whose equities are equal or superior to the insured’s; esp., a rule that a right of subrogation may be invoked against another party only if that party’s guilty conduct renders the party’s equity inferior to that of the insured.

doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgment. See judicial estoppel under ESTOPPEL.

doctrine of the last antecedent. See RULE OF THE LAST ANTECEDENT.

doctrine of the last preceding antecedent.

RULE OF THE LAST ANTECEDENT.

doctrine of worthier title. See WORTHIER-TITLE DOCTRINE.

document, n. 1. Something tangible on which words, symbols, or marks are recorded. 2. (pl.) The deeds, agreements, title papers, letters, receipts, and other written instruments used to prove a fact.

ancient document. Evidence. A document that is presumed to be authentic because its physical condition strongly suggests authenticity, it has existed for 20 or more years, and it has been maintained in proper custody (as by coming from a place where it is reasonably expected to be found). Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(8). — Also termed ancient writing.

foreign document. A document that originated in, or was prepared or executed in, a foreign state or country.

hot document. A document that directly supports a litigant's allegation.

public document. A document of public interest issued or published by a political body or otherwise connected with public business. Cf. public record under RECORD.

3. Evidence. Under the best-evidence rule, a physical embodiment of information or ideas, such as a letter, contract, receipt, account book, blueprint, or X-ray plate; esp., the original of such an embodiment.

document, vb. 1. To support with records, instruments, or other evidentiary authorities <document the chain of custody>. 2. To record; to create a written record of <document a file>.

documentary credit. 1. Credit extended on a document of title or any other legal document. 2. A financing arrangement in which a financial institution authorizes or makes a payment to a third party (usu. an exporter) at a customer's request. • This financing method facilitates international transactions by providing the importer with necessary credit and the exporter with an expedited cash payment.

documentary draft. See DRAFT.

documentary evidence. See EVIDENCE.

documentary instruction. A written agreement between an importer and exporter covering the relegation of various documents relating to the shipment and disposition of goods.

documentary stamp tax. See stamp tax under TAX.

document of title. A written description, identification, or declaration of goods authorizing the holder (usu. a bailee) to receive, hold, and dispose of the document and the goods it covers. • Documents of title, such as bills of lading, warehouse receipts, and delivery orders, are generally governed by Article 7 of the UCC. See BAILMENT.

negotiable document of title. A document of title that actually stands for the goods it covers, so that any transfer of the goods requires a surrender of the document. UCC § 7-104(1).

nonnegotiable document of title. A document of title that merely serves as evidence of the goods it covers. UCC § 7-104(2).

documentum (dok-yə-men-təm). [Latin] Roman law. 1. Proof. 2. A document. • This term appeared in postclassical imperial constitutions.

DOD. abbr. Department of Defense. See DEFENSE DEPARTMENT.

do, dico, addico (doh, dī-koh, ə-dī-koh or dīk-oh, ə-dīk-oh). [Latin] I give, I say, I adjudge. • These formal words were spoken by the Roman praetor in the exercise of his jurisdiction on certain days, such as dies fasti. They could not be officially spoken on dies nefasti. Do refers to the granting of actions, exceptions, and the appointment of judges; dico refers to the pronouncement of judgments; and addico refers to the adjudication of controverted property.

DOE. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.

Doe, Jane. See JANE DOE.

Doe, John. See JOHN DOE.

D'Oench Duhme doctrine (dench doom). The rule that estops a borrower from asserting a claim or defense against a federal successor to a failed financial institution — if the claim or defense is based on a side or secret agreement or representation — unless the agreement or representation has been (1) put into writing, (2) executed by the financial institution and borrower when the loan was issued, (3) approved by the financial institution's board of directors or loan committee, and (4) made a permanent part of the financial institution's records. D'Oench, Duhme & Co. v. FDIC, 315 U.S. 447, 62 S.Ct. 676 (1942) (now partially codified at 12 USCA § 1823(e), and otherwise of questionable standing in light of O'Melveny & Myers v. FDIC, 512 U.S. 79, 114 S.Ct. 2048 (1994)).

d'office (daw-fees). [Law French] Of office; officially. • This is similar to the Latin phrase ex officio.

dog. Slang. 1. Something undesirable, esp. a lawsuit <the cases assigned to the new lawyer were all dogs>. 2. Securities. A stock or other investment that suffers public disdain and repeated price declines or poor performance.

dog-draw. Hist. The apprehension of someone chasing a deer in a forest with a dog.

"Dog-draw is an apparent prehension of an offender against venison in the forest. There are four kinds of them observed by Manwood, part. 2, cap. 18, num. 9, of his Forest Laws, that is, dog-draw, stable-stand, back-bear, and bloody-hand. Dog-draw is, when one is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand." Termes de la Ley 181 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dogma (dawg-mə or dahg-), n. A philosophy, opinion, or tenet that is strongly held, is believed to be authoritative, and is followed steadfastly, usu. to the exclusion of other approaches to the same subject matter; a formally stated and proclaimed doctrine of faith. Pl. dogmas, dogmata (-mə-tə).

DOHSA (doh-sə). abbr. DEATH ON THE HIGH SEAS ACT.

doing-business statute. A state law defining the acts that constitute undertaking business there, usu. for the purpose of establishing the circumstances under which the state's courts may exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident. See MINIMUM CONTACTS; LONG-ARM STATUTE.

DOJ. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

dol (dohl or dol), n. [French "deceit; fraud"] Civil law. Fraud committed in inducing another to enter into a contract. See fraud in the inducement under FRAUD. Cf. FRAUDE.

do, lego (doh, lee-goh). [Latin] Hist. I give and bequeath. • In Roman law, this was the phrase used to make a bequest.

doli capax (doh-li kay-paks), adj. [Latin "capable of wrong"] Roman law. Capable of committing a crime or tort; esp., old enough to determine right from wrong. — Also termed capax doli. Cf. DOLI INCAPAX.

"In criminal cases, an infant of the age of fourteen years may be capitally punished for any capital offence: but under the age of seven he cannot. The period between seven and fourteen is subject to much uncertainty: for the infant shall, generally speaking, be judged prima facie innocent; yet if he was doli capax, and could discern between good and evil at the time of the offence committed, he may be convicted and undergo judgment and execution of death, though he hath not attained to years of puberty or discretion." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 452–53 (1765).

doli incapax (doh-li in-kay-paks), adj. [Latin "incapable of wrong"] Roman law. Incapable of committing a crime or tort. — Also termed incapax doli. Cf. DOLI CAPAX.

dollar-cost averaging, n. The investment practice of purchasing a fixed dollar amount of a type of security at regular intervals.

dolo (doh-loh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. Bad or mischievous design, as in dolo malo pactum se non servaturum ("an agreement induced by fraud cannot stand").

dolus (doh-ləs). [Latin "device; artifice"] Roman & civil law. 1. Fraud or deceit; conduct intended to deceive someone. • Although there may be dolus without fraud, fraud always includes dolus. Cf. CASUS; CULPA. 2. Intentional aggression; willful injury, esp. to another's property. — Also termed dolus malus; fraus.

"In the twelfth century the resuscitated Roman law introduced some new ideas. Men began to contrast, as Glanvill does, civil with criminal causes, to speak of dolus and culpa and casus, and to lay stress on the psychological element in crime." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederick W. Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 477 (2d ed. 1899).

"Although the word malitia is not unknown to the Roman lawyers, the usual and technical name for wrongful intent is dolus, or more specifically dolus malus. Dolus and culpa are two forms of mens rea. In a narrower sense, however, dolus includes merely that particular variety of wrongful intent which we term fraud — that is to say, the intent to deceive. From this limited sense it was extended to cover all forms of wilful wrongdoing. The English term fraud has never received an equally wide extension." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 385 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

dolus bonus (doh-ləs boh-nəs). [Latin "good deceit"] Shrewdness or justifiable deceit, as when a person lies to an attacker to prevent an assault. • Dolus bonus does not produce any legal consequences.

dolus dans locum contractui (doh-ləs danz loh-kəm kən-trak-choo-i). [Latin] Fraud (or deceit) giving rise to the contract; specif., a fraudulent misrepresentation that, having been made by one of the parties to the contract and relied on by the other, was actually instrumental in inducing the latter to enter into the contract.

dolus malus (doh-ləs mal-əs). [Latin "bad or evil deceit"] Evil or fraudulent design or intent; an unjustifiable deceit.

domain (doh-mayn), n. 1. The territory over which sovereignty is exercised <the 19th-century domains of the British Empire>. 2. An estate in land <the family domain is more than 6,000 acres>. 3. The complete and absolute ownership of land <his domain over this land has now been settled>. See EMINENT DOMAIN; PUBLIC DOMAIN.

domestic export. See EXPORT (1).

domestic guardian. See GUARDIAN.

Domestic International Sales Corporation.

A U.S. corporation, esp. a subsidiary whose income is primarily attributable to exports. • Income tax on part of a DISC's income is usu. deferred, resulting in a lower overall corporate tax for the parent than it would otherwise incur. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 991-997. — Abbr. DISC.

domestic judgment. See JUDGMENT.

domestic relations. See FAMILY LAW.

domestic-relations court. See family court under COURT.

domestic-relations law. See FAMILY LAW.

domestic servant. A household servant. — Often shortened to domestic.

domesticus (də-mes-ti-kəs), n. [Latin] Hist. Steward; judge's assistant; assessor.

domicellus (dom-ə-sel-əs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A king's natural son in France. 2. A young lord.

"Domicellus, Is an old obsolete . . . Word, anciently given as an Appellation or Addition to the King's natural Sons in France, and sometimes to the eldest Sons of Noblemen there; from whence we borrowed these Additions: As several natural Children of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, are stiled Domicelli by the Charter of Legitimation . . . But according to Thorn, the Domicelli were only the better Sort of Servants in Monasteries." Giles Jacob, A New Law-Dictionary (8th ed. 1762).

domicile (dom-ə-sil), n. 1. The place at which a person is physically present and that the person regards as home; a person's true, fixed, principal, and permanent home, to which that person intends to return and remain even though currently residing elsewhere. — Also termed permanent abode.

"By domicile we mean home, the permanent home; and if you do not understand your permanent home, I am afraid that no illustration drawn from foreign writers or foreign languages will very much help you to it." Whicker v. Hume (1858) 7 H.L.C. 124, 160 (per Lord Cranworth).

"It is difficult to give a definition of domicil that will cover at once domicil by operation of law and domicil by choice. The idea of domicil certainly includes the idea of place and the idea of settled connection with the place. Domicil of choice is so closely connected with the idea of home that it seems desirable to include that idea in any definition, and yet the idea is not applicable to many kinds of domicil by operation of law. It has therefore seemed best to state this element in the alternative. If a home is in the place, that is sufficient. If there is no home, or if the party is not sui juris, then the place is assigned by law without his will." 1 Joseph H. Beale, A Treatise on the Conflict of Laws § 9.1, at 89-90 (1935).

"Though the idea of permanent home is the central practical feature of domicile, Lord Cranworth's definition has a deceptive simplicity; for domicile . . . is a conception of law employed for the purpose of establishing a connection for certain legal purposes between an individual and the legal system of the territory with which he either has the closest connection in fact or is considered by law so to have because of his dependence on some other person." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 185 (7th ed. 1974).

2. The residence of a person or corporation for legal purposes. — Also termed (in sense 2) legal residence. Cf. RESIDENCE; PLACE OF BUSINESS.

after-acquired domicile. A domicile established after the facts relevant to an issue arose. • An after-acquired domicile cannot be used to establish jurisdiction or choice of law.

commercial domicile. 1. A domicile acquired by a nonresident corporation conducting enough activities to permit taxation of the corporation's property or activities located outside the bounds of the taxing state. 2. A domicile acquired by a person or company freely residing or carrying on business in enemy territory or enemy-occupied territory. — Also termed quasi-domicile.

corporate domicile. The place considered by law as the center of corporate affairs, where the corporation's functions are discharged; the legal home of a corporation, usually its state of incorporation or the state in which it maintains its principal place of business. • For purposes of determining whether diversity jurisdiction exists in federal court, a corporation is considered a citizen of both its state of incorporation and the state of its principal place of business. See DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP.

domicile of choice. 1. A domicile established by physical presence within a state or territory, coupled with the intention to make it home. 2. The domicile that a person chooses after reaching majority or being emancipated.

domicile of origin. The domicile of a person at birth, derived from the custodial parent or imposed by law. — Also termed natural domicile.

domicile of succession. The domicile that determines the succession of a person's estate.

domicile of trustee. The domicile where a trustee is appointed.

elected domicile. A contractually agreed domicile between parties for purposes of the contract.

foreign domicile. A domicile established by a citizen or subject of one sovereignty within the territory of another.

matrimonial domicile. A domicile that a husband and wife, as a married couple, have established as their home. — Also termed matrimonial home.

municipal domicile. A person's residence in a county or municipality, as distinguished from the person's state or national domicile.

national domicile. A domicile considered in terms of a particular nation rather than a locality or subdivision of a nation.

natural domicile. See domicile of origin.

necessary domicile. A domicile legally fixed and independent of choice, as in the domicile of origin. See domicile of origin.

quasi-domicile. See commercial domicile.

dominical (də-min-ə-kəl), adj. Of or relating to a Sunday; of or relating to the Lord's day.

dominicide (də-min-ə-sid), n. [fr. Latin dominus "master" + caedo "to kill"] Hist. 1. The crime of killing one's master. 2. A person who kills his or her master.

dominicium (də-min-ə-kəm), n. [Latin "domain"] 1. Hist. Domain; lordship. 2. Hist. Land ownership, esp. that retained by a lord for his own possession, as distinguished from the rights given to a tenant. 3. Eccles. law. A church or other religious building.

dominicium antiquum (də-min-ə-kəm an-ti-kwəm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Ancient domain.

dominion. 1. Control; possession <dominion over the car>. 2. Sovereignty <dominion over the nation>. 3. FOREIGN DOMINION.

dominium (də-min-ee-əm), n. [fr. Latin dominus "lord"] 1. Roman law. Absolute ownership including the right to possession and use. ● This term gradually came to also mean merely ownership of property, as distinguished from the right to possession or use.

"Dominium is the Roman term for the rights of an owner against all the world: and the contrast of dominium and obligatio is the nearest approach that can be made, in classical Roman language, to the distinction marked by the modern terms in rem and in personam." Frederick Pollock, A First Book of Jurisprudence 83 (1896).

"The one word dominium has to assume so many shades of meaning. The tenant qui tenet terram in dominico, is dominus rei and has dominium rei; but then he has above him one who is his dominus, and for the rights of this lord over him and over his land there is no other name than dominium." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 4 (2d ed. 1899).

dominium directum (də-min-ee-əm di-rek-təm), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Legal, not equitable, ownership.

dominium directum et utile (də-min-ee-əm di-rek-təm et yoo-tə-lee), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Complete ownership of property, including both title and exclusive use.

dominium plenum (də-min-ee-əm plee-nəm), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Full ownership combining dominium directum and dominium utile. — Also termed plenum dominium.

dominium utile (də-min-ee-əm yoo-tə-lee), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Equitable ownership; a beneficial right to use property; the right of a tenant to use the soil and its profits.

“The special characteristic of Feudal land was that ownership in it was split into two kinds, the dominium directum of the superior (lord) and the dominium utile of the vassal. The feudists correctly insisted that this was not a form of joint ownership, not yet of ownership burdened with an easement or a ‘usufruct,’ but that two kinds of ownership were present, and that each of these persons, the lord and the vassal, was properly called ‘owner’ or dominus. The lord’s dominium directum gave him a reversion in the case of forfeiture or failure of issue and the enjoyment of whatever the naturalia and accidentalia were. The vassal’s dominium utile gave him the immediate enjoyment of the land itself.” Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 148 (1936).

2. Hist. Lordship; sovereignty.

“The Latin word for ownership, dominium, is particularly confusing, since in medieval times it is also the word for lordship.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 255 (3d ed. 1990).

domino volente (dom-ə-noh və-len-tee). [Law Latin “the owner being willing”] With the owner’s consent.

dorsum (dor-səm). [Latin] Hist. The back. • This term usu. appeared as part of the phrase in dorso to indicate that an instrument had been signed on the back. In dorso recordi, for example, meant "on the back of the record."

"In the first place then the payee, or person to whom or whose order such bill of exchange or promissory note is payable, may by endorsement, or writing his name in dorso or on the back of it, assign over his whole property to the bearer, or else to another person by name...." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 468 (1766).

dos (dos or dohs), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. Dowry. 2. Hist. Dower.

"Dos was a gift made to the husband on the part of the wife as her contribution towards the expenses of the joint establishment. It was made by the wife or by another person on her behalf, usually before marriage and conditionally on the marriage taking place; but it might also be made or increased after marriage." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 150 (4th ed. 1956).

dos rationabilis (dohs rash-[ee]-ə-nay-bə-lis), n. [Latin] See dower by the common law under DOWER.

dossier (dos-ee-ay), n. [French] A file or brief; a bundle of papers pertaining to a particular matter.

DOT. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION.

dot (dot or dawt), n. [French fr. Latin dos] Civil law. Dowry; the property that a woman brings to the marriage to help with marriage expenses. • The income is usu. controlled by the husband, while the principal remains the wife's separate property.

dotage (doh-tij). 1. Senility; feebleness of a person's mind in old age. 2. Foolish affection; excessive fondness.

total (doht-əl), adj. Of or relating to dowry. See DOWRY.

dotalium (doh-tə-lish-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Dower.

"[S]ome have ascribed the introduction of dower to the Normans, as a branch of their local tenures; though we cannot expect any feudal reason for its invention, since it was not a part of the pure, primitive, simple law of feuds, but was first of all introduced into that system (wherein it was called ... dotalium) by the emperor Frederick the second; who was contemporary with our king Henry III. It is possible therefore that it might be with us the relic of a Danish custom: since, according to the historians of that country, dower was introduced into Denmark by Swein, the father of our Canute the great, out of gratitude to the Danish ladies, who sold all their jewels to ransom him when taken prisoner by the Vandals." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 129-30 (1766).

dotal property. Civil law. Separate property that the wife brings to the marriage to assist the husband with the marriage expenses.

dotation (doh-tay-shən), n. 1. The act of giving a dowry. 2. An endowment, esp. of funds for a charitable institution such as a hospital.

dote (doht), vb. 1. To be silly due to old age. 2. To bestow excessive fondness.

dote assignanda (doh-tee as-ig-nan-də). See DE DOTE ASSIGNANDA.

double quarrel. See DUPLEX QUERELA.

double recovery. See RECOVERY.

double rent. See RENT (1).

double standard. A set of principles permitting greater opportunity or greater lenience for one class of people than for another, usu. based on differences such as gender or race. See DISCRIMINATION.

double use. See USE (1).

double value. Twice the value of something; specif., a penalty payable by a tenant to a landlord of twice the yearly value of lands held by the tenant, who refused to leave when the landlord provided written notice of intent to possess the property. • The penalty was provided under the Landlord and Tenant Act (1730). St. 4 Geo. 2. ch. 28, s. 1.

double voucher. In a common-recovery suit, a voucher first by the fictitious tenant to the real tenant, and then by the real tenant to the common vouchee. See COMMON RECOVERY.

“The recovery, here described, is with a single voucher only; but sometimes it is with double . . . or farther voucher, as the exigency of the case may require. And indeed it is now usual always to have a recovery with double voucher at the least; by first conveying an estate of freehold to any indifferent person, against whom the praecipe is brought; and then he vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. For, if a recovery be had immediately against tenant in tail, it bars only such estate in the premises of which he is then actually seised; whereas if the recovery be had against another person, and the tenant in tail be vouched, it bars every latent right and interest which he may have in the lands recovered.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 359 (1766).

double will. See mutual will under WILL.

doubt, reasonable. See REASONABLE DOUBT.

do ut facias (doh at fay-shee-əs). [Latin “I give that you may do”] Roman law. An innominate contract in which a person gives something to another person who is to do or perform certain work. See innominate contract under CONTRACT.

dovetail seniority. The combination of seniority lists from merging companies into one list that allows employees to keep their premerger seniority.

Dow (dow). See DOW JONES INDUSTRIAL AVERAGE.

dowable (dow-ə-bəl), adj. 1. Capable of being endowed <the widow received the dowable estate>. 2. Capable of receiving dower <the woman was dowable of the estate>.

dowager (dow-ə-jər). A widow holding property or title — esp. a life estate in real property — received from her deceased husband.

dowager-queen. The widow of the king of England. — Also termed queen dowager; queen mother.

“A queen dowager is the widow of the king, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. But it is not high treason to conspire her death; or to violate her chastity . . . because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. Yet still, . . . no man can marry a queen dowager without special licence from the king, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. . . . A queen dowager, when married again to a subject, doth not lose her regal dignity, as peeresses dowager do their peerage when they marry commoners.”
1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 217 (1765).

dower (dow-ər). At common law, the right of a wife, upon her husband's death, to a life estate in one-third of the land that he owned in fee. ● With few exceptions, the wife could not be deprived of dower by any transfer made by her husband during his lifetime. Although most states have abolished dower, many states retaining the concept have expanded the wife's share to a life estate in all the land that her husband owned in fee. — Also termed dowment. Cf. CURTESY.

consummate dower (kən-səm-it). A wife's interest in her deceased husband's estate until that interest is legally assigned to her.

dower ad ostium ecclesiae (ad əhs-tee-əm e-klee-z[h]ee-ee), n. [Law Latin “dower at the church door”] Hist. An endowment of dower made by a man to his wife at the church door or porch, usu. as part of the marriage ceremony.

“DOWER AD OSTIUM ECCLESIAE . . . This appears to have been the original English dower . . . It was formerly the most usual species of dower, and, though latterly fallen into disuse, was not abolished until the statute of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105, s. 13 . . . The wife might be endowed of personalty or goods as well as of lands, and a trace of this ancient kind of dower is still distinctly preserved in the marriage ritual of the church of England, in the expression ‘with all my worldly goods I thee endow.’” 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 520 (2d ed. 1867).

dower by custom. Hist. Dower that is determined by custom rather than the general law.

“Dower by . . . custom; as that the wife shall have half the husband's lands, or in some places the whole, and in some only a quarter.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 132 (1766).

dower by the common law. The regular dower, consisting of a life interest in one-third of the lands that the husband held in fee. — Also termed dos rationabilis.

dower ex assensu patris (eks ə-sen-s[y]oo pə-tris), n. [Law Latin “dower by the father's assent”] Hist. A type of dower ad ostium ecclesiae made while the husband's father is alive and consents to the endowment to his son's wife.

inchoate dower (in-koh-it). A wife's interest in her husband's estate while both are living.

dowerness. See DOWRESS.

Dow Jones Industrial Average. A stock-market-performance indicator that consists of the price movements in the stocks of 30 leading industrial companies in the United States. — Abbr. DJIA. — Often shortened to Dow. — Also termed Dow Jones Average.

dowle stones (dohl). Rocks used as land boundaries.

dowment. See DOWER.

down market. See bear market under MARKET.

down payment. See PAYMENT.

down reversal. Securities. A sudden market-price decline after a rising trend. ● The term applies to the early stage of the decline; if the decline continues for several months, it is termed a bear market. Also termed correction; market correction.

downside. Securities. A period of declining stock prices.

downside risk. Securities. A likely risk that stock prices will drop.

downside trend. Securities. The portion of the market cycle that shows declining stock prices. — Also termed down trend.

DR. abbr. DISCIPLINARY RULE.

draconian (dray- or drə-koh-nee-in), adj. (Of a law) harsh; severe. ● This term derives from Draco, the name of the ancient Athenian lawgiver. — Also termed draconic.

draff (draf). Refuse; dregs; sweepings of dust and dirt. ● In weighing commodities, it is not included as part of the waste allowance for goods sold by weight.

draft, n. 1. An unconditional written order signed by one person (the drawer) directing another person (the drawee or payor) to pay a certain sum of money on demand or at a definite time to a third person (the payee) or to bearer. ● A check is the most common example of a draft. — Also termed bill of exchange; letter of exchange. Cf. NOTE (1).

bank draft. A draft drawn by one financial institution on another.

clean draft. A draft with no shipping documents attached.

demand draft. See sight draft.

documentary draft. A payment demand conditioned on the presentation of a document, such as a document of title, invoice, certificate, or notice of default.

export draft. A draft drawn by a domestic seller on a foreign buyer, directing the buyer to pay the trade amount to the seller or the seller's bank.

foreign draft. A draft drawn in one country or state but payable in another. — Also termed foreign bill of exchange; international bill of exchange.

inland draft. A draft drawn and payable in the same state or country.

overdraft. See OVERDRAFT.

share draft. A demand that a member draws against a credit-union share account, payable to a third party. ● A share draft is similar to a check that is written to draw funds out of a checking account at a bank.

sight draft. A draft that is payable on the bearer's demand or on proper presentment to the drawer. — Also termed demand draft.

time draft. A draft that contains a specified payment date. UCC § 3-108. — Also termed time bill.

drafting. The practice, technique, or skill involved in preparing legal documents — such as statutes, rules, regulations, contracts, and wills — that set forth the rights, duties, liabilities, and entitlements of persons and legal entities.

draftsman. See DRAFTER.

dragnet clause. 1. See MOTHER HUBBARD CLAUSE (1). 2. See CROSS-COLLATERAL CLAUSE.

dragnet lien. See LIEN.

Drago doctrine. The principle asserted by Luis Drago, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic, in a December 29, 1902 letter to the Argentine Minister in Washington, in which Drago, in response to the forcible coercion of Venezuela's unpaid loans by Great Britain and others, argued that no public debt should be collected from a sovereign state by force or through the occupation of American territory by a foreign power. • The subject was presented at the Hague Conference of 1907, when a modified version of the Drago doctrine was adopted.

drain, n. 1. The act of drawing a liquid off gradually; the act of emptying. 2. The act of gradually exhausting. 3. A conduit for draining liquid, as a ditch or a pipe.

drain, vb. 1. To draw (a liquid) off gradually <the farmer drained water from the property>. 2. To exhaust gradually <the facility has drained the area's natural resources>. 3. To empty gradually <the water drained>.

drainage district. A political subdivision authorized to levy assessments for making drainage improvements within its area.

"In the United States there are numerous special districts that administer drainage projects. They are typically formed under state law after a local election or petition showing consent of a majority of affected landowners. The projects are usually publicly financed, and assessments are made against all property benefited, whether or not all individual landowners have consented. Such projects can increase the agricultural capacity of drained lands and provide 'new' land for buildings and other improvements Special statutes governing drainage districts generally exempt them from restraints. . . . But if private property rights are taken or if others are damaged, compensation must be paid." David H. Getches, Water Law in a Nutshell 301 (3d ed. 1997).

drainage rights. The interest that a property owner has in the natural drainage and flow of water on the land.

dram (dram). 1. An apothecary measurement of fluid equal to an eighth of an ounce. 2. A small amount of anything, esp. liquor.

drama, n. 1. A presentation of a story portrayed by words and actions or actions alone; a play. Cf. DRAMATIC COMPOSITION.

"The term [drama] is applied to compositions which imitate action by representing the personages introduced in them as real and as employed in the action itself. The varieties of the drama differ more or less widely, both as to the objects imitated and as to the means used in the imitation. But they all agree as to the method or manner which is essential to the dramatic art, viz., imitation in the way of action." 7 Encyclopaedia Britannica 338 (9th ed. 1907).

2. An event or series of events having conflicting and exciting elements that capture people's attention.

dramatic composition. Copyright. A literary work setting forth a story, incident, or scene intended to be performed by actors, often with a musical accompaniment. Cf. DRAMA (1).

dram shop. Archaic. A place where alcoholic beverages are sold; a bar or saloon. — Also spelled dram-shop; dramshop. — Also termed grog-shop; drinking shop.

dram-shop act. A statute allowing a plaintiff to recover damages from a commercial seller of alcoholic beverages for the plaintiff's injuries caused by a customer's intoxication. — Also termed civil-liability act.

"Largely at the behest of the temperance movement, statutes (called 'dram shop acts') were enacted in many states which imposed some form of civil liability on those engaged in the business of selling such beverages in favor of third persons injured thereby At one time, almost half the states had such laws; today, that number seems to be declining. . . . A growing minority of states have overthrown the common law rule and have created a common law dram shop action. In most of these jurisdictions, liability is predicated on statutes which regulate the liquor business and prohibit certain sales by liquor licensees (to minors, intoxicated persons, etc.) thus, where the sale is unlawful, it is negligence per se" Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 293-94 (2d ed. 1992).

dram-shop liability. Civil liability of a commercial seller of alcoholic beverages for personal injury caused by an intoxicated customer. • Claims based on a similar type of liability have been brought against private citizens for personal injury caused by an intoxicated social guest.

draw, vb. 1. To create and sign (a draft) <draw a check to purchase goods>. 2. To prepare or frame (a legal document) <draw up a will>. 3. To take out (money) from a bank, treasury, or depository <she then drew $6,000 from her account>. 4. To select (a jury) <the lawyers then began voir dire and had soon drawn a jury>.

drawback. A government allowance or refund on import duties when the importer reexports imported products rather than selling them domestically. 19 USCA § 1313.

drawee (draw-ee). The person or entity that a draft is directed to and that is requested to pay the amount stated on it. • The drawee is usu. a bank that is directed to pay a sum of money on an instrument. — Also termed payor.

drawee bank. See payor bank under BANK.

drawer. One who directs a person or entity, usu. a bank, to pay a sum of money stated in an instrument — for example, a person who writes a check; the maker of a note or draft. See MAKER.

drawing account. See ACCOUNT.

drawing lots. An act of selection or decision-making based on pure chance, with the result depending on the particular lot drawn. • Jurors are usu. instructed by the court not to base their verdict on drawing lots or similar methods of chance.

drawlatch. Hist. A thief; a robber who waits until homes are empty, then draws the homes' door latches to steal what is inside.

drayage. A charge for transporting property.

dread-disease insurance. See INSURANCE.

dreit dreit. See DROIT-DROIT.

D reorganization. See REORGANIZATION (2).

drift of the forest. Hist. A periodic examination of forest cattle by officers who drive them to an enclosed place to determine their ownership or common status.

"Drift of the forest is nothing else but an exact view or examination taken once, twice, or oftener in a year as occasion shall require, what beasts there are in the forest, to the end that the common in the forest be not overcharged, that the beasts of foreigners that have no common there be not permitted, and that beasts not commonable may be put out." Termes de la Ley 185-87 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

drift-stuff. Any material floating at random in water without a discoverable source. • Drift-stuff is usu. the property of the riparian owner.

drilling-delay rental clause. Oil & gas. A clause in an oil-and-gas lease providing for periodic payments by the lessee to postpone exploration during the primary lease term. • This clause is usu. used to negate any requirement of drilling a test well.

"The purpose of the lease drilling-delay rental clause is to ensure that the lessee has no obligation to drill during the primary term by negating any implied obligation to test the premises. Before drilling-delay rental clauses became common in oil and gas leases, many courts held that lessees had an implied duty to drill a test well on the leased premises within a reasonable time after grant of the lease. The rationale for the implied covenant was that the major consideration for the grant of the lease by the lessor was the expectation that the property would be tested within a reasonable time. The courts' determination of what was a reasonable time ranged from a few months to several years, depending upon the circumstances. Lessees found that they could not rely upon a long stated term alone to preserve their rights." John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 195-96 (3d ed. 1995).

drinking shop. See DRAM SHOP.

drip rights. A servitude allowing water dripping off a person's roof to fall on a neighbor's land.

driver. 1. A person who steers and propels a vehicle. 2. A person who herds animals; a drover.

driver's license. The state-issued certificate authorizing a person to operate a motor vehicle.

driving, n. The act of directing the course of something, such as an automobile or a herd of animals.

driving under the influence. The offense of operating a motor vehicle in a physically or mentally impaired condition, esp. after consuming alcohol or drugs. • Generally, this is a lesser offense than driving while intoxicated. But in a few jurisdictions the two are synonymous. — Abbr. DUI. — Also termed (in N.Y.) driving while ability-impaired (DWAI); driving under the influence of liquor (DUIL); driving while intoxicated (DWI); operating under the influence (OUI); operating while intoxicated (OWI); operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated (OMVI); operating a motor vehicle under the influence (OMVUI). Cf. DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED.

driving while intoxicated. The offense of operating a motor vehicle in a physically or mentally impaired condition after consuming enough to raise one's blood alcohol content above the statutory limit (.08% in many states), or after consuming drugs. • Penalties vary widely; for example, the maximum penalty in Missouri and Louisiana is a $500 fine and six months in jail, while the penalties in New York range from $500 to $5,000 in fines and up to four years in jail. — Abbr. DWI. Cf. DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

DRM. See direct-reduction mortgage under MORTGAGE.

droit (drwah or droyt). [French “right”] 1. A legal right or claim. 2. The whole body of law.

droit-close (droyt klohz), n. [Law French] Hist. A writ against a lord on behalf of a tenant in ancient demesne holding land by charter in fee simple, in fee-tail, for life, or in dower.

droit common (droyt kom-ən), n. [Law French] The common law. — Also termed droit coutumier. See COMMON LAW (2).

droit coutumier. See DROIT COMMON.

droit d'accession (drwah dak-ses-syawn), n. [French “right of accession”] French law. A property right acquired by making, from existing material, something new that cannot be reduced to the original material’s shape. • This is the equivalent to the Roman specificatio. See ACCESSION (4).

“DROIT D’ACCESSION . . . The civil law rule is that if the thing can be reduced to the former matter it belongs to the owner of the matter, e.g. a statue made of gold; but if it cannot so be reduced it belongs to the person who made it, e.g. a statue made of marble.” 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 941 (8th ed. 1914).

droit d'accroissement (drwah da-kraws-mawn), n. [French] French law. A right of survivorship by which an heir’s interest is combined with the interest of a coheir who either has refused or is unable to accept the interest.

droit d'aubaine (drwah doh-ben), n. [Law French “right of alienage”] Hist. With certain exceptions, a sovereign’s right to a deceased alien’s property, regardless of whether the alien had a will. • This right was primarily exercised in France where it was revived in some form by Napoleon after its initial abolishment in 1790. It was ultimately abolished in 1819. — Also spelled droit d'aubaigne; droit d'aubénage. — Also termed jus albanagii; jus albinatus.

“Under the French rule of law, known as the droit d'aubaine . . . the whole property of an alien dying in France without leaving children born in that country escheated to the crown. The royal right was not universally exacted, and at a very early period special exceptions were introduced in favour of certain classes. Thus Louis XI exempted merchants of Brabant, Flanders, Holland, and Zealand from the operation of the law, and a similar privilege was extended by Henri II to merchants of the Hanse towns, and from Scotland.” 1 R.H. Inglis Palgrave, Palgrave’s Dictionary of Political Economy 68 (Henry Higgs ed., 2d ed. 1925).

“In France by the fourteenth century it was accepted that a stranger might acquire and possess but not inherit or transmit by will or on intestacy. In 1386 the French king assumed the seigniorial droit d'aubaine or right to inherit. In treaties in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the right was frequently renounced. Louis XVI in 1787 abolished the right as against subjects of Great Britain without reciprocity. The constituent Assembly abolished the right in 1790 and it was commonly abolished elsewhere in the early nineteenth century.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 378 (1980).

droit de bris (drwah də bree), n. [Law French “right of a wreck”] Hist. A right claimed by lords of the coasts of France to fragments of shipwrecks, including persons or property that had washed ashore. • The right was exercised primarily in Bretagne but was abrogated by Henry III as duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Guienne, in a charter granted in A.D. 1226. — Also termed droit de bris sur le naufrages. Cf. DROIT DE NAUFRAGE.

droit de détraction (drwah də day-trak-syawn), n. [French “the right of withdrawal”] Int’l law. A tax on property acquired by succession or by will and then removed to another state or country.

droit de maîtrise (drwah də may-treeez), n. [French “a right of mastership”] Hist. French law. A required payment to the Crown by an apprentice who has become a master worker.

droit de naufrage (drwah də noh-frazh), n. [French] Hist. French law. The right of a sovereign or a lord owning a seashore to seize the wreckage of a shipwreck and kill the crew or sell them as slaves. Cf. DROIT DE BRIS.

droit de prise (drwah də preez), n. [French “a right of prize”] Hist. French law. A commoner’s duty to supply articles on credit to the royal household for domestic consumption.

droit de quint (drwah də kant), n. [French “the right of a fifth”] Hist. French law. A required payment made by a noble vassal to the king each time ownership of the vassal’s fief changed.

droit de suite (drwah də sweet), n. [French “right to follow”] A creditor’s right to recover a debtor’s property after it passes to a third party.

droit d’exécution (drwah dek-say-kyoo-syawn), n. [French “right of execution”] French law. 1. A stockbroker’s right to sell the stock bought for a client who later refuses it. 2. A stockbroker’s right to sell deposited securities to secure the broker against a loss in buying for a client.

droit-droit (drwah-drwah), n. [Law French “double right”] Hist. The unification of the right of possession with the right of property. — Also termed jus duplicatum; dreit dreit.

“A complete title to lands, tenements, and hereditaments. For it is an ancient maxim of the law, that no title is completely good, unless the right of possession be joined with the right of property; which right is then denominated a double right, jus duplicatum, or droit droit. And when to this double right the actual possession is also united . . . then, and then only, is the title completely legal.” ² William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 199 (1766).

droit du seigneur (drwah də sen-yuur). [French “right of the lord”] Hist. 1. A supposed customary right of a feudal lord to have sexual intercourse with a tenant’s bride on her wedding night. 2. A supposed custom requiring sexual abstinence by a couple on their wedding night. — Also spelled droit de seigneur. — Also termed jus primae noctis.

droit maritime (drwah ma-ree-teem). [French] Maritime law.

droit moral (drwah maw-ral). [French] The doctrine of moral right, which entitles artists to prevent others from altering their works. • The basic rights protected by this doctrine are (1) the right to create, (2) the right to disclose or publish, (3) the right to withdraw from publication, (4) the right to be identified with the work, and (5) the right to ensure the integrity of the work, including the right to object to any mutilation or distortion of the work. These rights are sometimes called moral rights. See MORAL RIGHT.

droits civils (drwah see-veel), n. [French] French law. Private rights not connected to a person’s civil status. • Foreigners had certain rights that could be enforced when there was reciprocity with the foreigner’s home country.

droits of admiralty (droys), n. The Lord High Admiral’s rights in connection with the sea, such as the right to recover proceeds from shipwrecks, enemy goods confiscated at the beginning of hostilities, jetsam, flotsam, treasure, deodand, fines, forfeitures, sturgeons, whales, and other large fishes. • The droit proceeds are paid to the Exchequer’s office for the public’s use. See PRIZE (2).

“The crown had originally certain rights to property found upon the sea, or stranded upon the shore. The chief kinds of property to which the crown was thus entitled were, great fish (such as whales or porpoises), deodands, wreck of the sea, flotsam, jetsam, and lagan, ships or goods of the enemy found in English ports or captured by uncommissioned vessels, and goods taken or retaken from pirates After the rise of the court of Admiralty the Lord High Admiral became entitled to these droits by royal grant The right to droits carried with it a certain jurisdiction. Inquisitions were held into these droits at the ports, or the Vice-Admirals or droit gatherers reported them to the Admiral. The large terms of the Admiral’s Patents incited them, or their grantees, to frequent litigation with private persons or other grantees of the crown The Admiralty droits . . . are now transferred to the consolidated fund.” ¹ William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 559–61 (7th ed. 1956).

droitural (droy-chə-rəl), adj. [fr. Old French droiture “right”] Of or relating to an interest in property, as distinguished from actual possession.

dromones (drə-moh-neeze), n. pl. Hist. 1. Large ships. 2. War vessels of recognized navies, usu. prepared for hostilities. — Also termed dromos; dromunda.

drop. English law. A rule nisi that is not adopted because the members of a court are equally divided on the issue. • The rule is dropped rather than discharged or made absolute.

drop-down clause. An insurance-policy provision requiring an excess insurer to provide coverage to the insured even though the underlying coverage has not been exhausted, usu. because the underlying insurers are insolvent.

drop letter. A letter addressed to someone in the delivery area of the post office where the letter was posted.

drop-shipment delivery. A manufacturer's shipment of goods directly to the consumer rather than initially to a wholesaler. • If the wholesaler takes the order, it may receive part of the profit from the sale.

drop shipper. A wholesaler who arranges to have goods shipped directly from a manufacturer to a consumer. See DROP-SHIPMENT DELIVERY.

dropsey testimony. See TESTIMONY.

drove, n. 1. A group of animals driven in a herd.
2. A large group of people in motion.

drugarius (drəng-gair-ee-əs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A commander of a band of soldiers. 2. A naval commander.

drungus (drəng-gəs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A band of soldiers.

drunk, adj. Intoxicated; (of a person) under the influence of intoxicating liquor to such a degree that the normal capacity for rational thought and conduct is impaired.

drunkard. A person who is habitually or often intoxicated.

drunkenness. 1. A state of intoxication; inebriation; the condition resulting from a person's ingestion of excessive amounts of intoxicating liquors sufficient to affect the person's normal capacity for rational thought and conduct. 2. A habitual state of intoxication.

excessive drunkenness. A state of drunkenness in which a person is so far deprived of reason and understanding that the he or she is incapable of understanding the character and consequences of an act.

drunkometer (drəng-kom-ə-tər). See BREATHALYZER.

dry, adj. 1. Free from moisture; desiccated <dry land>. 2. Unfruitful; destitute of profitable interest; nominal . 3. (Of a jurisdiction) prohibiting the sale or use of alcoholic beverages .

dry check. See bad check under CHECK.

dry exchange. Something that pretends to pass on both sides of a transaction, but passes on only one side.

"Dry exchange . . . seems to be a subtil term invented to disguise usury, in which something is pretended to pass on both sides, whereas in truth nothing passes on the one side." Termes de la Ley 185 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

"DRY EXCHANGE . . . A euphemism applied to the 'coverture' or 'colouring' of the stringent statutes passed during the tudor period against usury . . . Usury, which was condemned by religion and law alike during the middle ages, was from the middle of the 16th century no longer to be confounded with the legitimate employment of capital; but the sentiment which inspired the above enactments was that of governing classes associated with the landed interest." 1 R.H. Inglis Palgrave, Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy 643 (Henry Higgs ed., 2d ed. 1925).

dry mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

dry receivership. See RECEIVERSHIP.

dry trust. See TRUST.

d.s.b. abbr. DEBET SINE BREVE.

DTC. abbr. DEPOSITORY TRUST CORPORATION.

dual agent. See co-agent under AGENT (1).

dual-capacity doctrine. The principle that makes an employer — who is normally shielded from tort liability by workers'-compensation laws — liable in tort to an employee if the employer and employee stand in a secondary relationship that confers independent obligations on the employer. Cf. DUAL-PURPOSE DOCTRINE.

dual citizenship. 1. A person's status as a citizen of two countries, as when the person is born in the United States to parents who are citizens of another country, or one country still recognizes a person as a citizen even though that person has acquired citizenship in another country. 2. The status of a person who is a citizen of both the United States and the person's country of residence.

dual-criminality principle. A rule prohibiting the extradition of a fugitive unless the offense involves conduct that is criminal in both countries.

dual distributor. A firm that sells goods simultaneously to buyers on two different levels of the distribution chain; esp., a manufacturer

dual distributorship. See DISTRIBUTORSHIP.

dual employment. See MOONLIGHTING.

dual listing. See LISTING (2).

dual-persona doctrine (d[y]oo-əl pər-soh-nə). The principle that makes an employer (who is normally shielded from tort liability by workers'-compensation laws) liable in tort to an employee if the liability stems from a second persona unrelated to the employer's status as an employer.

dual-priorities rule. The principle that partnership creditors have priority for partnership assets and that individual creditors have priority for a partner's personal assets. • This rule has been abandoned by the bankruptcy laws and the Revised Uniform Partnership Act. The bankruptcy code now allows partnership creditors access to all assets of bankrupt partners, not just those remaining after payment to individual creditors. — Also termed jingle rule.

dual-prosecution rule. The principle that the federal and state governments may both prosecute a defendant for the same offense because both governments are separate and distinct entities. See DUAL-SOVEREIGNTY DOCTRINE.

dual-purpose doctrine. The principle that an employer is liable for an employee's injury that occurs during a business trip even though the trip also serves a personal purpose. Cf. DUAL-CAPACITY DOCTRINE.

dual-purpose fund. See dual fund under MUTUAL FUND.

dual-sovereignty doctrine. The rule that the federal and state governments may both prosecute someone for a crime, without violating the constitutional protection against double jeopardy, if the person's act violated both jurisdictions' laws. See DUAL-PROSECUTION RULE.

duarchy (d[y]oo-ahr-kee), n. [fr. Greek duo "two" + archia "rule"] See DYARCHY.

dubitante (d[y]oo-bi-tan-tee). [Latin] Doubting. • This term was usu. placed in a law report next to a judge's name, indicating the judge doubted a legal point but was unwilling to state that it was wrong. — Also termed dubitans.

"[E]xpressing the epitome of the common law spirit, there is the opinion entered dubitante — the judge is unhappy about some aspect of the decision rendered, but cannot quite bring himself to record an open dissent." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 147 (1968).

dubitatur (d[y]oo-bi-tay-tər). [Latin] It is doubted. • This phrase indicates that a point of law is doubtful. — Also termed dubitavit.

ducat (dæk-it). A gold coin used as currency, primarily in Europe and first appearing in Venice in the early 1100s, with the motto sit tibi, Christe, dato, quem tu regis, iste Ducatus ("let this duchy which thou rulest be dedicated to thee, O Christ"). • It survived into the 20th century in several countries, including Austria and the Netherlands.

ducatus (d[y]ə-kay-təs), n. [Law Latin] A duchy; a dukedom.

duces tecum (d[y]oo-səs tee-kəm also tay-kəm). [Latin] Bring with you. See subpoena duces tecum under SUBPOENA.

duces tecum licet languidus (d[y]oo-səs tee-kəm li-set lang-gwə-dəs), n. [Law Latin "bring with you, although sick"] Hist. A habeas corpus writ ordering a sheriff to bring someone into court despite a return by the sheriff noting that the person was too ill to come.

Duchy Court of Lancaster (dæch-ee kort əv lang-kə-stər). Hist. English law. A court with special equity jurisdiction, similar to the equity courts of chancery, in which the Duchy of Lancaster's chancellor or deputy presides over issues primarily relating to land held by the Crown in right of the Duchy.

Duchy of Lancaster (dæch-ee əv lang-kə-stər). Land, in the county of Lancaster, the Savoy in London, and around Westminster, that originally belonged to the Duke of Lancaster and later belonged to the Crown in right of the Duchy.

due, adj. 1. Just, proper, regular, and reasonable <due care> <due notice>. 2. Immediately enforceable <payment is due on delivery>. 3. Owing or payable; constituting a debt <the tax refund is due from the IRS>.

due-bill. See IOU.

due care. See reasonable care under CARE.

due compensation. See just compensation under COMPENSATION.

due days. See BOON DAY.

due diligence. See DILIGENCE.

due-diligence information. Securities. Information that a broker-dealer is required to have on file and make available to potential customers before submitting quotations for over-the-counter securities. • The informational requirements are set out in SEC Rule 15c2-11 (17 CFR § 240.15c2-11).

due influence. The sway that one person has over another, esp. as a result of persuasion, argument, or appeal to the person's affections. Cf. UNDUE INFLUENCE.

duel. 1. TRIAL BY COMBAT. 2. A single combat; specif., a prearranged combat with deadly weapons fought between two or more persons under prescribed rules, usu. in the presence of at least two witnesses, to resolve a previous quarrel or avenge a deed. • In England and the United States, death resulting from a duel is treated as murder, and seconds may be liable as accessories. — Also termed monomachy; single combat. Cf. MUTUAL COMBAT.

"Dueling is distinguished from other offenses in that it has none of the elements of sudden heat and passion, and is usually carried out with some formality. A duel has been distinguished from an 'affray' in that an affray occurs on a sudden quarrel while a duel is always the result of design." 28A C.J.S. Dueling § 2, at 154 (1996).

dueling, n. The common-law offense of fighting at an appointed time and place after an earlier disagreement. • If one of the participants is killed, the other is guilty of murder, and all who are present, abetting the crime, are guilty as principals in the second degree.

"Dueling is prearranged fighting with deadly weapons, usually under certain agreed or prescribed rules. . . . It is a misdemeanor at common law to fight a duel, even though no death result, to challenge another to a duel, intentionally to provoke such a challenge, or knowingly to be the bearer of such a challenge." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 243 (3d ed. 1982).

duellum (d[y]oo-el-əm), n. [fr. Latin duo "two"]

due notice. See NOTICE.

due-on-encumbrance clause. A mortgage provision giving the lender the option to accelerate the debt if the borrower further mortgages the real estate without the lender's consent.

due-on-sale clause. A mortgage provision that gives the lender the option to accelerate the debt if the borrower transfers or conveys any part of the mortgaged real estate without the lender's consent.

due posting. 1. The stamping and placing of letters or packages in the U.S. mail. 2. The proper entry of an item into a ledger. 3. Proper publication; proper placement of an item (such as an announcement) in a particular place, as on a particular wall.

due process. The conduct of legal proceedings according to established rules and principles for the protection and enforcement of private rights, including notice and the right to a fair hearing before a tribunal with the power to decide the case. — Also termed due process of law; due course of law.

"The words 'due process' have a precise technical import, and are only applicable to the process and proceedings of the courts of justice; they can never be referred to an act of legislature." Alexander Hamilton, Remarks on an Act for Regulating Elections, New York Assembly, 6 Feb. 1787, in 4 Papers of Alexander Hamilton 34, 35 (Harold C. Syrett ed., 1962).

"The words, 'due process of law,' were undoubtedly intended to convey the same meaning as the words, 'by the law of the land,' in Magna Charta." Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 59 U.S. (18 How.) 272, 276 (1856) (Curtis, J.).

"Due process of law in each particular case means, such an exertion of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs." Thomas M. Cooley, A Treatise on the Constitutional Limitations 356 (1868).

"An elementary and fundamental requirement of due process in any proceeding which is to be accorded finality is notice reasonably calculated, under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections. . . . The notice must be of such nature as reasonably to convey the required information." Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 314, 70 S.Ct. 652, 657 (1950) (Jackson, J.). economic substantive due process. The doctrine that certain social policies, such as the freedom of contract or the right to enjoy property without interference by government regulation, exist in the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment, particularly in the words "liberty" and "property."

procedural due process. The minimal requirements of notice and a hearing guaranteed by the Due Process Clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments, esp. if the deprivation of a significant life, liberty, or property interest may occur.

substantive due process. The doctrine that the Due Process Clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments require legislation to be fair and reasonable in content and to further a legitimate governmental objective.

Due Process Clause. The constitutional provision that prohibits the government from unfairly or arbitrarily depriving a person of life, liberty, or property. • There are two Due Process Clauses in the U.S. Constitution, one in the 5th Amendment applying to the federal government, and one in the 14th Amendment applying to the states (although the 5th Amendment's Due Process Clause also applies to the states under the incorporation doctrine). Cf. EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE.

due process of law. See DUE PROCESS.

due-process rights. The rights (as to life, liberty, and property) so fundamentally important as to require compliance with due-process standards of fairness and justice. See DUE PROCESS; DUE PROCESS CLAUSE.

due proof. Sufficient and properly submitted evidence to produce a result or support a conclusion, such as an entitlement to benefits supported by an insurance policy.

DUI. abbr. DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

DUIL. abbr. Driving under the influence of liquor. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

duke. 1. A sovereign prince; a ruler of a duchy.
2. The first order of nobility in Great Britain below the royal family.

"But after the Norman conquest, which changed the military policy of the nation, the kings themselves continuing for many generations dukes of Normandy, they would not honour any subjects with that title, till the time of Edward III; who, claiming to be the king of France, and thereby losing the ducal in the royal dignity, in the eleventh year of his reign created his son, Edward the black prince, duke of Cornwall: and many, of the royal family especially, were afterwards raised to the honour. However, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1572, the whole order became utterly extinct: but it was revived about fifty years afterwards by her successor, who was remarkably prodigal of honours, in the person of George Villiers duke of Buckingham." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 385 (1765).

Duke of Exeter's Daughter. A torture rack in the Tower of London, named after the Duke of Exeter, Henry VI's minister who assisted in introducing it to England. — Also termed brake.

"The rack . . . to extort a confession from criminals, is a practice of a different nature . . . And the trial by rack is utterly unknown to the law of England; though once when the dukes of Exeter and Suffolk . . . had laid a design to introduce the civil law into this kingdom as the rule of government, for a beginning thereof they erected a rack for torture, which was called in derision the duke of Exeter's daughter, and still remains in the tower of London: where it was occasionally used as an engine of state, not of law, more than once in the reign of queen Elizabeth." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 320–21 (1769).

Duke of York's Laws. A body of laws compiled in 1665 by Governor Nicholls for the more orderly government of the New York colony. • The laws were gradually extended to the entire province.

dulocracy (d[y]oo-lok-rə-see), n. [fr. Greek doulos "servant" + kratein "to rule"] A government in which servants or slaves have so many privileges that they essentially rule. — Also spelled doulocracy.

duly, adv. In a proper manner; in accordance with legal requirements.

dum (dəm). [Latin] While; provided that.

dumb bidding. An auction bidding process in which the minimum acceptance price is placed under the object for sale — unbeknown to the bidders — and no bids are accepted until they meet that price. • Dumb bidding was initially intended to avoid the taxes imposed on auction sales by the statute of 1779, 19 Geo. 3, ch. 56, §§ 5-6, but the courts determined that the practice was fraudulent.

dum fervet opus (dəm fər-vet oh-pəs). [Latin] While the action is fresh; in the heat of action.
• This term usu. referred to matters of testimony.

dum fuit infra aetatem (dəm fyoo-it in-frə ee-tay-təm), n. [Law Latin “while he was within age”] Hist. A writ allowing a person of full age to recover lands feoffed while the person was an infant. • The remedy was also available to the person’s heirs. It was later replaced by the action of ejectment. See EJECTMENT.

dum fuit in prisona (dəm fyoo-it in priz-ə-nə), n. [Law Latin “while he was in prison”] Hist. A writ restoring a man to his estate after he transferred the estate under duress of imprisonment. See DURESS OF IMPRISONMENT.

dummodo (dəm-ə-doh). [Latin] So that. • This term was used as a limitation in conveyances, as in dummodo solverit talem redditum (dəm-ə-doh sol-və-rit tay-lem red-i-təm), meaning “provided he shall pay such a rent.”

dummy, n. 1. A party who has no interest in a transaction, but participates to help achieve a legal goal. 2. A party who purchases property and holds legal title for another.

dummy, adj. Sham; make-believe; pretend <dummy corporation>.

dummy corporation. See CORPORATION.

dummy director. See DIRECTOR.

dummy shareholder. See SHAREHOLDER.

dum non fuit compos mentis (dəm non fyoo-it kom-pəs men-tis), n. [Law Latin “while he was of unsound mind”] Hist. A writ allowing heirs to recover an estate transferred by someone of unsound mind.

dump, vb. 1. To drop (something) down, esp. in a heap; to unload. 2. To sell (products) at an extremely low price; specif., to sell (products) in a foreign market at a lower price than at home.

dumping. 1. The act of selling a large quantity of goods at less than fair value. 2. Selling goods abroad at less than the market price at home. See ANTIDUMPING LAW.

“Dumping involves selling abroad at a price that is less than the price used to sell the same goods at home (the ‘normal’ or ‘fair’ value). To be unlawful, dumping must threaten or cause material injury to an industry in the export market, the market where prices are lower. Dumping is recognized by most of the trading world as an unfair practice (akin to price discrimination as an antitrust offense).” Ralph H. Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Transactions § 6.1 (1995).

3. The disposal of waste matter into the environment.

Dumping Act. A federal antidumping law requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to notify the U.S. International Trade Commission (USITC) whenever the Secretary determines that goods are likely to be sold abroad at less than their fair value, so that the USITC can take appropriate action. 19 USCA § 1673.

dum sola (dəm soh-lə). [Latin] While single. • This phrase was used to limit conveyances, esp. to women, as in dum sola fuerit (“while she remains single”), dum sola et casta vixerit (“while she remains single and chaste”), and dum sola et casta (“while she is unmarried and lives chastely”).

dun (dən), vb. To demand payment from (a delinquent debtor) <his creditors are dunning him daily>. — dun, n.

dungeon. 1. The bottom part of a fortress or tower, often used as a prison. — Also termed dungeon-keep. 2. A dark underground prison.

dunnage (dən-ij). Anything, esp. pieces of wood, that are put underneath or between cargo on a vessel to prevent the cargo from bruising or getting wet from water leaking into the hold.

duodecemvirale iudicium (d[y]oo-oh-des-əm-və-ray-lee joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin] A trial by 12 persons; a trial by jury.

duodecima manus (d[y]oo-oh-des-ə-mə man-əs). [Latin] Twelve men.

“The manner of waging and making law is this. He that has waged, or given security, to make his law, brings with him into court eleven of his neighbours: . . . for by the old Saxon constitution every man’s credit in courts of law depended upon the opinion which his neighbours had of his veracity. The defendant then, standing at the end of the bar, is admonished by the judges of the nature and danger of a false oath. . . . And thereupon his eleven neighbours or compurgators shall avow upon their oaths that they believe in their consciences that he saith the truth . . . It is held indeed by later authorities . . . that fewer than eleven compurgators will do but Sir Edward Coke is positive that there must be this number . . . for as wager of law is equivalent to a verdict in the defendant's favor, it ought to be established by the same or equal testimony, namely, by the oath of twelve men. And so indeed Glanvil expresses it, . . . 'jurabit duodecima manu' . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 343 (1768).

duodena (d[y]oo-ə-dee-nə). [Latin] 1. A jury of twelve. 2. A dozen of anything.

duopoly (d[y]oo-əhp-ə-lee). A market in which there are only two sellers of a product.

duopsony (d[y]oo-op-sə-nee). A market in which there are only two buyers of a product.

duoviri (d[y]oo-oh-və-rī or d[y]oo-oh vī-rī). See DUUMVIRI.

duplex querela (d[y]oo-pleks kwə-ree-lə). 1. Hist. Eccles. law. An appeal by a clerk to the archbishop in response to the bishop's delaying or wrongfully refusing to do justice. • It is a double quarrel in that sometimes the archbishop orders a judge considering parallel proceedings not to take any action against the complainant during the pendency of the suit. 2. Eccles. law. An appeal to a person's immediate superior, as when a bishop appeals to an archbishop. — Also termed double quarrel; double complaint.

duplex valor maritagii (d[y]oo-pleks val-ər mar-ə-tay-jee-ī), n. [Law Latin "double the value of a marriage"] Hist. A ward's forfeiture of double the value of a marriage made without the guardian's consent. • In the quotation that follows, Blackstone uses the accusative form (duplicem valorem maritagii) because the phrase follows the verb forfeited.

"For, while the infant was in ward, the guardian had the power of tendering him or her a suitable match, without disparagement, or inequality: which if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage . . . to their guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give to the guardian for such an alliance: . . . and, if the infants married themselves without the guardian's consent, they forfeited double the value, duplicem valorem maritagii. This seems to have been one of the greatest hardships of our ancient tenures." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 70 (1766).

duplicate (d[y]oo-pli-kit), n. 1. A reproduction of an original document having the same particulars and effect as the original. 2. A new original, made to replace an instrument that is lost or destroyed. — Also termed (in sense 2) duplicate original. — duplicate (d[y]oo-plit), adj.

"A 'duplicate' is defined for purposes of the best evidence rule as a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography including enlargements and miniatures, by mechanical or electronic recording, by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original; copies subsequently produced manually, either handwritten or typed, are not within this definition." 29A Am. Jur. 2d Evidence § 1085 (1994).

duplicate (d[y]oo-pli-kayt), vb. 1. To copy exactly <he duplicated the original document>. 2. To double; to repeat <she duplicated the performance>.

duplicate will. See WILL.

duplicatio (d[y]oo-pli-kay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin duplicare "to double"] 1. Roman & civil law. A defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication, similar to a rejoinder in common law. — Also termed (in Scots law) duply. See REPLICATION. 2. The fourth in a series. 3. A duplication of a transaction.

duplicatum jus (d[y]oo-pli-kay-təm jəs), n. [Law Latin "double right"] A double right, such as droit droit (both the "right of possession and right of property").

duplicitous (d[y]oo-plis-i-təs), adj. 1. (Of a person) deceitful; double-dealing. 2. (Of a pleading, esp. an indictment) alleging two or more matters in one plea; characterized by double pleading.

duplicitous appeal. See APPEAL.

duplicitous indictment. See INDICTMENT.

duplicitous information. See duplicitous indictment under INDICTMENT.

duplicity (d[y]oo-plis-i-tee), n. 1. Deceitfulness; double-dealing. 2. The pleading of two or more distinct grounds of complaint or defense for the same issue. • In criminal law, this takes the form of joining two or more offenses in the same count of an indictment. — Also termed double pleading. Cf. alternative pleading under PLEADING (2); double plea under PLEA (3).

duply. See DUPLICATIO (1).

durable goods. See GOODS.

durable lease. See LEASE.

durable power of attorney. See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

durables. See durable goods under GOODS.

durante (d[y]ə-ran-tee). [Law Latin] While; during, as in durante minore aetate ("during minority"), durante viduitate ("during widowhood"), durante virginitate ("during virginity"), and durante vita ("during life"). • The term was often used in conveyancing.

durante absentia (d[y]ə-ran-tee ab-sen-shee-ə). [Law Latin] During absence. • This term referred to the administration of an estate while the executor was out of the county or otherwise absent. During the executor's absence, the administration sometimes continued because a delay until the executor's return would impair the estate settlement.

durante bene placito (d[y]ə-ran-tee bee-nee plas-ə-toh). [Law Latin] During good pleasure. • This phrase was used in the royal writ granting tenure durante bene placito to the king's judges.

duration. 1. The length of time something lasts <the duration of the lawsuit>.

duration of interest. The length of time a property interest lasts.

duration of trust. The length of time a trust exists.

2. A length of time; a continuance in time <an hour's duration>.

durational-residency requirement. The requirement that one be a state resident for a certain time, such as one year, as a precondition to the exercise of a specified right or privilege. • When applied to voting, this requirement has been held to be an unconstitutional denial of equal protection because it burdens voting rights and impairs the fundamental personal right of travel.

Duren test. Constitutional law. A test to determine whether a jury's composition violates the fair-cross-section requirement and a criminal defendant's Sixth Amendment right to an impartial jury. • Under the test, a constitutional violation occurs if (1) in the venire from which the jury was selected, a distinctive group is not fairly and reasonably represented in relation to the group's population in the community, (2) the underrepresentation is the result of a systematic exclusion of the group from the jury-selection process, and (3) the government cannot reasonably justify the discrepancy. Duren v. Missouri, 439 U.S. 357, 99 S.Ct. 664 (1979). See FAIR-CROSS-SECTION REQUIREMENT; STATISTICAL-DECISION THEORY; ABSOLUTE DISPARITY; COMPARATIVE DISPARITY.

duress (d[y]uu-res). 1. Strictly, the physical confinement of a person or the detention of a contracting party's property. • In the field of torts, duress is considered a species of fraud in which compulsion takes the place of deceit in causing injury.

"Duress consists in actual or threatened violence or imprisonment; the subject of it must be the contracting party himself, or his wife, parent, or child; and it must be inflicted or threatened by the other party to the contract, or else by one acting with his knowledge and for his advantage." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 261-62 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"Few areas of the law of contracts have undergone such radical changes in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries as has the law governing duress. In Blackstone's time relief from an agreement on grounds of duress was a possibility only if it was coerced by actual (not threatened) imprisonment or fear of loss of life or limb. 'A fear of battery . . . is no duress; neither is the fear of having one's house burned, or one's goods taken away or destroyed'; he wrote, 'because in these cases, should the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction by recovering equivalent damages: but no suitable atonement can be made for the loss of life, or limb.' Today the general rule is that any wrongful act or threat which overcomes the free will of a party constitutes duress. This simple statement of the law conceals a number of questions, particularly as to the meaning of 'free will' and 'wrongful.'" John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9-2, at 337 (3d ed. 1987).

2. Broadly, the threat of confinement or detention, or other threat of harm, used to compel a person to do something against his or her will or judgment. • Duress is a recognized defense to a crime, contractual breach, or tort. See COERCION; EXTORTION.

"[In most states,] the age-old rule of duress — that the doing of a prohibited act is not a crime if reasonably believed to be necessary to save from death or great bodily injury — together with the equally ancient exception in the form of the 'inexcusable choice,' are as firm today as ever except for the realization that they cover only part of the field." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1064 (3d ed. 1982).

duress of goods. 1. The act of seizing personal property by force, or withholding it from an entitled party, and then extorting something as the condition for its release. 2. Demanding and taking personal property under color of legal authority that either is void or for some other reason does not justify the demand.

duress of imprisonment. The wrongful confining of a person to force the person to do something.

duress of the person. Compulsion of a person by imprisonment, by threat, or by a show of force that cannot be resisted.

duress per minas (pær mi-nās). [Law Latin] Duress by threat of loss of life, loss of limb, mayhem, or other harm to a person.

"Duress per minas is a very rare defence; so rare that Sir James Stephen, in his long forensic experience, never saw a case in which it was raised. It has, however, been thought that threats of the immediate infliction of death, or even of grievous bodily harm, will excuse some crimes that have been committed under the influence of such threats." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 58 (16th ed. 1952).

economic duress. An unlawful coercion to perform by threatening financial injury at a time when one cannot exercise free will. — Also termed business compulsion.

"Courts have shown a willingness to recognize the concept of 'economic duress.' For instance it has been held that a defence on these grounds may be available to the purchaser of a ship from a shipbuilder, if the latter extracts a promise of extra payment as a condition of delivery of the ship." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 230 (3d ed. 1981).

moral duress. An unlawful coercion to perform by unduly influencing or taking advantage of the weak financial position of another. ● Moral duress focuses on the inequities of a situation while economic duress focuses on the lack of will or capacity of the person being influenced.

duressor (d[y]ə-res-ər). A person who coerces another person to do something against his or her will or judgment.

Durham (dər-əm). One of the three remaining county palatines in England, the others being Chester and Lancaster. ● Its jurisdiction was vested in the Bishop of Durham until the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, ch. 19 vested it as a separate franchise and royalty in the Crown. The jurisdiction of the Durham Court of Pleas was transferred to the Supreme Court of Judicature by the Judicature Act of 1873, but Durham continued to maintain a Chancery Court according to the Palatine Court of Durham Act of 1889. See COUNTY PALATINE.

Durham rule. Criminal law. A test for the insanity defense, holding that a defendant is not criminally responsible for an act that was the product of mental disease or defect (Durham v. United States, 214 F.2d 862 (D.C. Cir. 1954)). ● Formerly used in New Hampshire and the District of Columbia, the Durham rule has been criticized as being too broad and is no longer accepted in any American jurisdiction. — Also termed product test. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

Durrett rule. Bankruptcy. The principle that a transfer of property in exchange for less than 70% of the property's value should be invalidated as a preferential transfer. Durrett v. Washington Nat'l Ins. Co., 621 F.2d 201 (5th Cir. 1980); 11 USCA § 548. ● This rule has been applied most frequently to foreclosure sales. But it has essentially been overruled by the U.S. Supreme Court, which has held that, at least for mortgage foreclosure sales, the price received at a regularly conducted, noncollusive sale represents a reasonably equivalent value of the property, and the transfer is presumed valid. BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp., 511 U.S. 531, 114 S.Ct. 1757 (1994).

Dutch auction. See AUCTION.

Dutch-auction tender method. See Dutch auction (2) under AUCTION.

Dutch lottery. See LOTTERY.

dutiable (d[y]oo-tee-ə-bəl), adj. Subject to a duty <dutiable goods>.

duty. 1. A legal obligation that is owed or due to another and that needs to be satisfied; an obligation for which somebody else has a corresponding right.

"There is a duty if the court says there is a duty; the law, like the Constitution, is what we make it. Duty is only a word with which we state our conclusion that there is or is not to be liability; it necessarily begs the essential question [M]any factors interplay: the hand of history, our ideas of morals and justice, the convenience of administration of the rule, and our social ideas as to where loss should fall." William L. Prosser, Palsgraf Revisited, 52 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 15 (1953).

"A classic English definition [of duty] from the late nineteenth century holds that, when circumstances place one individual in such a position with regard to another that thinking persons of ordinary sense would recognize the danger of injury to the other if ordinary skill and care were not used, a duty arises to use ordinary skill and care to avoid the injury. A much quoted American judicial definition of duty emphasizes its relational aspects, with a focus on the foreseeability of risk to those 'within the range of apprehension.' At about the same time, one of the most creative of American law teachers defined duty as a complex of factors, including administrative, economic, and moral ones, to be applied by judges in their analyses of the legal strength of personal injury cases." Marshall S. Shapo, The Duty to Act xi-xii (1977).

"While courts frequently say that establishing 'duty' is the first prerequisite in an individual tort case, courts commonly go on to say that there is a 'general duty' to 'exercise reasonable care,' to avoid subjecting others to 'an unreasonable risk of harm,' or to comply with the 'legal standard of reasonable conduct.' Though cast in the language of duty, these formulations merely give the expression to the point that negligence is the standard of liability." Restatement (Third) of Torts § 6 cmt. a (Discussion Draft 1999).

absolute duty. A duty to which no corresponding right attaches. ● According to John Austin's legal philosophy, there are four kinds of absolute duties: (1) duties not regarding persons (such as those owed to God and to lower animals), (2) duties owed to persons indefinitely (i.e., to the community as a whole), (3) self-regarding duties (such as the duty not to commit suicide), and (4) duties owed to the sovereign. 1 John Austin, The Providence of Jurisprudence Determined 400 (Sarah Austin ed., 2d ed. 1861).

active duty. See positive duty.

affirmative duty. A duty to take a positive step to do something.

contractual duty. 1. A duty arising under a particular contract. 2. A duty imposed by the law of contracts.

delegable duty. A duty that may be transferred to another to perform. See ASSIGNMENT.

duty to act. A duty to take some action to prevent harm to another, and for the failure of which one may be liable depending on the relationship of the parties and the circumstances.

duty to speak. A duty to say something to correct another's false impression. ● For example, a duty to speak may arise when a person has, during the course of negotiations, said something that was true at the time but that has ceased to be true before the contract is signed.

imperfect duty. 1. A duty that, though recognized by law, is not enforceable against the person who owes it. 2. A duty that is not fit for enforcement but should be left to the discretion and conscience of the person whose duty it is.

implied duty of cooperation. A duty existing in every contract, obligating each party to cooperate with, or at least not to wrongfully hinder, the other party's performance. ● Breach of this implied duty excuses performance.

legal duty. A duty arising by contract or by operation of law; an obligation the breach of which would be a legal wrong <the legal duty of parents to support their children>.

moral duty. A duty the breach of which would be a moral wrong. — Also termed natural duty.

negative duty. A duty that forbids someone to do something; a duty that requires someone to abstain from something. — Also termed passive duty.

noncontractual duty. A duty that arises independently of any contract.

nondelegable duty (non-del-ə-gə-bəl). 1. Contracts. A duty that cannot be delegated by a contracting party to a third party. ● If the duty is transferred, the other contracting party can rightfully refuse to accept performance by the third party. 2. Torts. A duty that may be delegated to an independent contractor by a principal, who retains primary (as opposed to vicarious) responsibility if the duty is not properly performed. ● For example, a landlord's duty to maintain common areas, though delegated to a service contractor, remains the landlord's responsibility if someone is injured by improper maintenance.

perfect duty. A duty that is not merely recognized by the law but is actually enforceable.

positive duty. A duty that requires a person either to do some definite action or to engage in a continued course of action. — Also termed active duty.

preexisting duty. A duty that one is already legally bound to perform. See PREEXISTING-DUTY RULE.

2. Any action, performance, task, or observance owed by a person in an official or fiduciary capacity.

duty of candor (kan-dər). A duty to disclose material facts; esp., a duty of a director seeking shareholder approval of a transaction to disclose to the shareholders all known material facts about the transaction.

duty of fair representation. A labor union's duty to represent its member employees fairly, honestly, and in good faith.

duty of good faith and fair dealing. A duty that is implied in some contractual relationships, requiring the parties to deal with each other fairly, so that neither prohibits the other from realizing the agreement's benefits. ● This duty is most commonly implied in insurance contracts, and usu. against the insurer, regarding matters such as the insurer's obligation to settle reasonable demands that are within the policy's coverage limits. See GOOD FAITH; BAD FAITH.

duty of loyalty. A person's duty not to engage in self-dealing or otherwise use his or her position to further personal interests rather than those of the beneficiary. ● For example, directors have a duty not to engage in self-dealing to further their own personal interests rather than the interests of the corporation.

fiduciary duty (fi-d[y]oo-shee-er-ee). A duty of utmost good faith, trust, confidence, and candor owed by a fiduciary (such as a lawyer or corporate officer) to the beneficiary (such as a lawyer's client or a shareholder); a duty to act with the highest degree of honesty and loyalty toward another person and in the best interests of the other person (such as the duty that one partner owes to another). See FIDUCIARY; FIDUCIARY RELATIONSHIP.

strictly ministerial duty. A duty that is absolute and imperative, requiring neither the exercise of official discretion nor judgment.

3. Torts. A legal relationship arising from a standard of care, the violation of which subjects the actor to liability. — Also termed duty of care. 4. A tax imposed on a commodity or transaction, esp. on imports; IMPOST. ● A duty in this sense is imposed on things, not persons.

countervailing duty. A duty that protects domestic industry by offsetting subsidies given by foreign governments to manufacturers of imported goods.

customs duty. A duty levied on an imported or exported commodity; esp., the federal tax levied on goods shipped into the United States.

duty of detraction. A tax on property acquired by succession or will and then removed from one state to another.

import duty. 1. A duty on the importation of a product. 2. A duty on the imported product. — Also termed duty on import.

probate duty. A duty assessed by the government either on every will admitted to probate or on the gross value of the decedent's personal property.

unascertained duty. A preliminary, estimated payment to a customs collector of the duty that will be due on final accounting. ● An importer pays this duty to receive permission to land and sale the goods.

duty-bound, adj. Required by legal or moral obligation to do something <Jones is duty-bound to deliver the goods by Friday>.

duty-free, adj. Of or relating to products of foreign origin that are not subject to import or export taxes.

duty of candor. See DUTY (2).

duty of care. See DUTY (3).

duty of detraction. See DUTY (4).

duty of fair representation. See DUTY (2).

duty of loyalty. See DUTY (2).

duty of the flag. Hist. A maritime ceremony by which a foreign vessel struck her flag and lowered her topsail upon meeting the British flag. ● The ceremony was an acknowledgment of British sovereignty over the British seas.

duty of tonnage (tən-ij). A charge imposed on a commercial vessel for entering, remaining in, or leaving a port.

duty of water. The amount of water necessary to irrigate a given tract.

duty on import. See import duty under DUTY (4).

duty to act. See DUTY (1).

duty-to-defend clause. A liability-insurance provision obligating the insurer to take over the defense of any lawsuit brought by a third party against the insured on a claim that falls within the policy's coverage.

duty to mitigate (mit-i-gayt). Contracts. A non-breaching party's duty to make reasonable efforts to limit losses resulting from the other party's breach. ● Not doing so precludes the party from collecting damages that might have been avoided. See MITIGATION-OF-DAMAGES DOCTRINE.

duty to speak. See DUTY (1).

duumviri (d[y]oo-əm-və-rī), n. [fr. Latin due “two” + virī “men”] 1. Roman law. Magistrates elected or appointed in pairs to hold an office or perform a function.

duumviri municipales (d[y]oo-əm-və-rī myoo-nis-ə-pay-leez), n. [Latin] Two judicial magistrates annually elected in towns and colonies.

duumviri navales (d[y]oo-əm-və-rī nə-vay-leez), n. [Latin] Two officers appointed to man, equip, and refit the navy.

2. Two peers in authority. — Also termed duoviri.

dux (dəks), n. [fr. Latin ducere “to lead”] 1. Roman law. An army commander. 2. Roman law. A military governor of a province. • This term was eventually used also as a title of distinction. 3. Hist. Duke; a title of nobility. See DUKE.

DWAI. abbr. Driving while ability-impaired. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

dwelt, vb. 1. To remain; to linger <the case dwelled in her memory>. 2. To reside in a place permanently or for some period <he dwelled in California for nine years>.

dwelling-house. 1. The house or other structure in which a person lives; a residence or abode. 2. Real estate. The house and all buildings attached to or connected with the house. 3. Criminal law. A building, a part of a building, a tent, a mobile home, or another enclosed space that is used or intended for use as a human habitation. • The term has referred to connected buildings in the same curtilage but now typically includes only the structures connected either directly with the house or by an enclosed passageway. — Often shortened to dwelling. — Also termed (archaically) mansion house.

the person resides on it.” 5 Am. Jur. 2d Arson and Related Offenses § 13, at 789 (1995).

DWI. abbr. DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED.

DWOP (dee-wop). See dismissal for want of prosecution under DISMISSAL (1).

DWOP docket. See DOCKET (2).

dyarchy (dī-ahr-kee), n. [fr. Greek dy “two” + archein “rule”] A government jointly ruled by two people, such as William and Mary of England. — Also termed diarchy.

“Dyarchy. A term applied by Mommsen to the Roman principate . . . a period in which he held that sovereignty was shared between the princes and the senate. The term has also been given to a system of government, promoted as a constitutional reform in India by Montagu and Chelmsford and introduced by the Government of India Act, 1919. It marked the introduction of democracy into the executive of the British administration of India by dividing the provincial executives into authoritarian and popularly responsible sections composed respectively of councillors appointed by the Crown and ministers appointed by the governor and responsible to the provincial legislative councils . . . The system ended when full provincial autonomy was granted in 1935.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 386 (1980).

Dyer Act. A federal law, originally enacted in 1919, making it unlawful either (1) to transport a stolen motor vehicle across state lines, knowing it to be stolen, or (2) to receive, conceal, or sell such a vehicle, knowing it to be stolen. 18 USCA §§ 2311–2313. — Also termed National Motor Vehicle Theft Act.

dyet. See DIET.

dying declaration. See DECLARATION (6).

dying without issue. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

dynamite charge. See ALLEN CHARGE.

dynamite instruction. See ALLEN CHARGE.

dynasty. 1. A powerful family line that continues for a long time <an Egyptian dynasty>. 2. A powerful group of individuals who control a particular industry or field and who control their successors  .

dysnomy (dis-nə-mee), n. [fr. Greek dys “bad” + nomos “law”] Bad laws; the enactment of bad legislation.

ea intentione (ee-ə in-ten-shee-oh-nee). [Latin]
With that intent.

EAJA. abbr. EQUAL ACCESS TO JUSTICE ACT.

E & O insurance. See errors-and-omissions insurance under INSURANCE.

earl. A title of nobility, formerly the highest in England but now the third highest, ranking between a marquis and a viscount. ● This title corresponds with the French comte and the German graf. Originating with the Saxons, this title is the most ancient of the English peerage. William the Conqueror first made the title hereditary, giving it in fee to his nobles. No territorial, private, or judicial rights now accompany the title; it merely confers nobility and a hereditary seat in the House of Lords.

earldom. The dignity or jurisdiction of an earl. ● Only the dignity remains now, the jurisdiction having been given over to the sheriff. See DIG-NITY.

earles-penny. Hist. Money given in part payment; EARNEST. — Also termed earl's penny.

Earl Marshal of England. A great officer of state, who historically had jurisdiction over several courts, including the court of chivalry and the court of honor. ● Under this office is the herald's office, or college of arms. The Earl Marshal was also a judge of the Marshalsea court, now abolished. This office is quite ancient. Since 1672, it has been hereditary in the family of Howards, Dukes of Norfolk. — Often shortened to Earl Marshal.

earmark, n. 1. Originally, a mark upon the ear — a mode of marking sheep and other animals. 2. A mark put on something (such as a coin) to distinguish it from another.

earmark, vb. 1. To mark with an earmark. 2. To set aside for a specific purpose or recipient.

earmarking doctrine. Bankruptcy. An equitable principle that when a new lender makes a loan to enable a debtor to pay off a specified creditor, the funds are specifically set aside for that creditor so that, if the debtor lacks control over the disposition of the funds, they do not become part of the debtor's estate and thus subject to a preference.

earn, vb. 1. To acquire by labor, service, or performance. 2. To do something that entitles one to a reward or result, whether it is received or not.

earned income. See INCOME.

earned-income credit. See TAX CREDIT.

earned premium. See PREMIUM (1).

earned surplus. See retained earnings under EARNINGS.

earned time. Criminal procedure. A credit toward a sentence reduction awarded to a prisoner who takes part in activities designed to lessen the chances that the prisoner will commit a crime after release from prison. ● Earned time, which is usu. awarded for taking educational or vocational courses, working, or participating in certain other productive activities, is distinct from good time, which is awarded simply for refraining from misconduct. Cf. GOOD TIME.

earner. 1. One who produces income through personal efforts or property or both. 2. Property or an asset that produces income for its owner.

earnest, n. 1. A nominal payment or token act that serves as a pledge or a sign of good faith, esp. as the partial purchase price of property. ● Though not legally necessary, an earnest may help the parties come to an agreement. 2. EARNEST MONEY.

earnest money. A deposit paid (usu. in escrow) by a prospective buyer (esp. of real estate) to show a good-faith intention to complete the transaction, and ordinarily forfeited if the buyer defaults. ● Although earnest money has traditionally been a nominal sum (such as a nickel or a dollar) used in the sale of goods, it is not a mere token in the real-estate context: it may amount to many thousands of dollars. — Also termed earnest; bargain money; caution money; hand money. Cf. BINDER (2); down payment under PAYMENT.

“The amount of earnest money deposited rarely exceeds 10 percent of the purchase price, and its primary purpose is to serve as a source of payment of damages should the buyer default. Earnest money is not essential to make a purchase agreement binding if the buyer’s and seller’s exchange of mutual promises of performance (that is, the buyer’s promise to purchase and the seller’s promise to sell at a specified price and terms) constitutes the consideration for the contract.” John W. Reilly, The Language of Real Estate 131 (4th ed. 1993).

earning capacity. A person’s ability or power to earn money, given the person’s talent, skills, training, and experience. ● Earning capacity is one element considered when measuring the damages recoverable in a personal-injury lawsuit. And in family law, earning capacity is considered when awarding child support and spousal maintenance (or alimony) and in dividing property between spouses upon divorce. — Also termed earning power. See LOST EARNING CAPACITY.

earnings. Revenue gained from labor or services, from the investment of capital, or from assets. See INCOME. Cf. PROFIT.

appropriated retained earnings. Retained earnings that a company’s board designates for a distinct use, and that are therefore unavailable to pay dividends or for other uses. — Also termed appropriated surplus; surplus revenue; suspense reserve.

future earnings. See lost earnings.

gross earnings. See gross income under INCOME.

lost earnings. Wages, salary, or other income that a person could have earned if he or she had not lost a job, suffered a disabling injury, or died. ● Lost earnings are typically awarded as damages in personal-injury and wrongful-termination cases. There can be past lost earnings and future lost earnings. Both are subsets of this category, though legal writers sometimes loosely use future earnings as a synonym for lost earnings. Cf. LOST EARNING CAPACITY.

net earnings. See net income under INCOME.

pretax earnings. Net earnings before income taxes.

real earnings. Earnings that are adjusted for inflation so that they reflect actual purchasing power.

retained earnings. A corporation’s accumulated income after dividends have been distributed. — Also termed earned surplus; undistributed profit.

surplus earnings. The excess of corporate assets over liabilities within a given period, usu. a year.

earnings and profits. Corporations. In corporate taxation, the measure of a corporation’s economic capacity to make a shareholder distribution that is not a return of capital. ● The distribution will be dividend income to the shareholders to the extent of the corporation’s current and accumulated earnings and profits. Cf. accumulated-earnings tax under TAX; accumulated taxable income under INCOME.

earnings per share. Corporations. A measure of corporate value by which the corporation’s net income is divided by the number of outstanding shares of common stock. ● Investors benefit from calculating a corporation’s earnings per share, because it helps the investor determine the fair market value of the corporation’s stock. — Abbr. EPS.

fully diluted earnings per share. A corporation’s net income — assuming that all convertible securities had been transferred to common equity and all stock options had been exercised — divided by the number of shares of the corporation’s outstanding common stock.

earnings-price ratio. See earnings yield under YIELD.

earnings report. See INCOME STATEMENT.

earnings yield. See YIELD.

earnout agreement. An agreement for the sale of a business whereby the buyer first pays an agreed amount up front, leaving the final purchase price to be determined by the business’s future profits. ● Usu. the seller helps manage the business for a period after the sale. — Sometimes shortened to earnout.

earwitness. A witness who testifies about something that he or she heard but did not see. Cf. EYEWITNESS.

easement (eez-mənt). An interest in land owned by another person, consisting in the right to use or control the land, or an area above or below it, for a specific limited purpose (such as to cross it for access to a public road). ● The land benefiting from an easement is called the dominant estate; the land burdened by an easement is called the servient estate. Unlike a lease or license, an easement may last forever, but it does not give the holder the right to possess, take from, improve, or sell the land. The primary recognized easements are (1) a right-of-way, (2) a right of entry for any purpose relating to the dominant estate, (3) a right to the support of land and buildings, (4) a right of light and air, (5) a right to water, (6) a right to do some act that would otherwise amount to a nuisance, and (7) a right to place or keep something on the servient estate. See SERVITUDE. Cf. PROFIT À PRENDRE.

access easement. An easement allowing one or more persons to travel across another's land to get to a nearby location, such as a road. ● The access easement is a common type of easement by necessity. — Also termed easement of access.

adverse easement. See prescriptive easement.

affirmative easement. An easement that forces the servient-estate owner to permit certain actions by the easement holder, such as discharging water onto the servient estate. — Also termed positive easement. Cf. negative easement.

“Positive easements give rights of entry upon the land of another, not amounting to profits, to enable something to be done on that land. Some are commonplace, examples being rights of way across the land of another and rights to discharge water on to the land of another. Others are more rare, such as the right to occupy a pew in a church, the right to use a kitchen situated on the land of another for the purpose of washing and drying clothes, and the right to use a toilet situated on the land of another.” Peter Butt, Land Law 305 (2d ed. 1988).

apparent easement. A visually evident easement, such as a paved trail or a sidewalk.

appendant easement. See easement appurtenant.

appurtenant easement. See easement appurtenant.

avigational easement. An easement permitting unimpeded aircraft flights over the servient estate. — Also termed avigation easement; aviation easement; flight easement; navigation easement.

common easement. An easement allowing the servient landowner to share in the benefit of the easement. — Also termed nonexclusive easement.

continuous easement. An easement that may be enjoyed without an interfering act by the party claiming it, such as an easement for drains, sewer pipes, lateral support of a wall, or light and air. Cf. discontinuous easement.

determinable easement. An easement that terminates on the happening of a specific event.

discontinuous easement. An easement that can be enjoyed only if the party claiming it interferes in some way with the servient estate. ● An example is a right-of-way. — Also termed discontinuing easement; noncontinuous easement; nonapparent easement. Cf. continuous easement.

easement appurtenant. An easement created to benefit another tract of land, the use of the easement being incident to the ownership of that other tract. — Also termed appurtenant easement; appendant easement; pure easement; easement proper. Cf. easement in gross.

easement by estoppel. A court-ordered easement created from a voluntary servitude after a person, mistakenly believing the servitude to be permanent, acted in reasonable reliance on the mistaken belief.

easement by implication. See implied easement.

easement by necessity. An easement created by operation of law because the easement is indispensable to the reasonable use of nearby property, such as an easement connecting a parcel of land to a road. — Also termed easement of necessity; necessary way.

easement by prescription. See prescriptive easement.

easement in gross. An easement benefiting a particular person and not a particular piece of land. ● The beneficiary need not, and usu. does not, own any land adjoining the servient estate. Cf. easement appurtenant.

easement of access. See access easement.

easement of convenience. An easement that increases the facility, comfort, or convenience of enjoying the dominant estate or some right connected with it.

easement of natural support. See lateral support under SUPPORT.

easement of necessity. See easement by necessity.

easement proper. See easement appurtenant.

equitable easement. 1. An implied easement created by equity when adjacent lands have been created out of a larger tract. • Such an easement is usu. created to allow implied privileges to continue. 2. See restrictive covenant (1) under COVENANT (4).

exclusive easement. An easement that the holder has the sole right to use. Cf. common easement.

flight easement. See avigational easement.

floating easement. An easement that, when created, is not limited to any specific part of the servient estate.

flowage easement. A common-law easement that gives the dominant-estate owner the right to flood a servient estate, as when land near a dam is flooded to maintain the dam or to control the water level in a reservoir.

implied easement. An easement created by law after an owner of two parcels of land uses one parcel to benefit the other to such a degree that, upon the sale of the benefited parcel, the purchaser could reasonably expect the use to be included in the sale. — Also termed easement by implication.

intermittent easement. An easement that is usable or used only from time to time, not regularly or continuously.

light-and-air easement. A negative easement preventing an adjoining landowner from constructing a building that would prevent light or air from reaching the dominant estate. See negative easement. Cf. solar easement.

mineral easement. An easement that permits the holder to enter the property to remove minerals from it.

navigation easement. 1. An easement giving the federal government the right to regulate navigable waters, even when the regulation interferes with private water rights. 2. See avigational easement.

negative easement. An easement that prohibits the servient-estate owner from doing something, such as building an obstruction. Cf. affirmative easement.

nonapparent easement. See discontinuous easement.

noncontinuous easement. See discontinuous easement.

nonexclusive easement. See common easement.

positive easement. See affirmative easement.

prescriptive easement. An easement created from an open, adverse, and continuous use over a statutory period. — Also termed easement by prescription; adverse easement.

private easement. An easement whose enjoyment is restricted to one specific person or a few specific people.

public easement. An easement for the benefit of an entire community, such as the right to travel down a street or a sidewalk.

pure easement. See easement appurtenant.

quasi-easement. 1. An easement-like right occurring when both tracts of land are owned by the same person. • A quasi-easement may become a true easement if the landowner sells one of the tracts. 2. An obligation or license that relates to land but that is not a true easement — for example, a landowner's obligation to maintain the fence between the landowner's tract and someone else's tract.

reciprocal negative easement. An easement created when a landowner sells part of the land and restricts the buyer's use of that part, and, in turn, that same restriction is placed on the part kept by the landowner. • Such an easement usu. arises when the original landowner creates a common scheme of development for smaller tracts that are carved out of the original tract.

reserved easement. An easement created by the grantor of real property to benefit the grantor's retained property and to burden the granted property.

secondary easement. An easement that is appurtenant to the primary or actual easement; the right to do things that are necessary to fully enjoy the easement itself.

solar easement. An easement created to protect the dominant estate's exposure to the direct rays of the sun. • A solar easement is often created to prevent the servient-estate owner from constructing any building that would cause shadows on the dominant estate, thus interfering with the use of a solar-energy system. Cf. light-and-air easement.

“Solar easements . . . remain difficult to describe because of the relationship of the sun to the earth. Shadow variables include land slope, terrain, solar orientation, latitude, time of day, and height of potential obstructions. Lawyers, engineers, land planners, title companies and others have expressed concern over the complexity required to write a solar easement containing highly detailed, technical information often included in these easements." Sandy F. Kraemer, Solar Law 42 (1978).

timber easement. An easement that permits the holder to cut and remove timber from another's property.

easement appurtenant. See EASEMENT.

easement by estoppel. See EASEMENT.

easement by necessity. See EASEMENT.

easement in gross. See EASEMENT.

easement of convenience. See EASEMENT.

easement of natural support. See lateral support under SUPPORT.

Easter-offerings. Eccles. law. Small sums of money paid as personal tithes to the parochial clergy by the parishioners at Easter. • Under the Recovery of Small Tithes Act (1695), Easter-offerings were recoverable before justices of the peace. St. 7 & 8 Will. 3, ch. 6. — Also termed Easter-dues.

Easter sittings. English law. A term of court beginning on April 15 of each year and usu. ending on May 8, but sometimes extended to May 13. • This was known until 1875 as Easter term. Cf. HILARY SITTINGS; MICHAELMAS SITTING.

East Greenwich (east gren-ich). Hist. The name of a royal manor in the county of Kent, England. • Historically, this manor was mentioned in royal grants or patents as descriptive of the tenure of free socage.

East India Company. Hist. The company that was originally established to pursue exclusive trade between England and India, and that later became more active in political affairs than in commerce. • In 1858, by the Government of India Act, the government of the company's territories was transferred to the Crown. The company was dissolved in 1874. St. 21 & 22 Vict., ch. 106.

EAT. abbr. Earnings after taxes.

eat inde sine die (ee-ət in-dee si-nee di-ee) [Latin] Let him go thence without day. • These words were used on a defendant's acquittal, or when a prisoner was to be discharged, to signify that the matter be dismissed without any eaves-drip. 1. The dripping of water from the eaves of a house onto adjacent land. 2. An easement permitting the holder to allow water to drip onto the servient estate. See DRIP RIGHTS; STILLICIDIUM.

eavesdropping. The act of secretly listening to the private conversation of others without their consent. Cf. BUGGING; WIRETAPPING.

ebba et fluctus (eb-ə et flək-təs), n. [Latin "ebb and flow"] Hist. The ebb and flow of tide; ebb and flood. • The time of one ebb and flood, plus an additional 40 days, was anciently granted to a person who was excused from court for being beyond seas. See EBB AND FLOW; ESSOIN; BEYOND SEAS.

ebb and flow. The coming in and going out of tide. • This expression was formerly used to denote the limits of admiralty jurisdiction.

ebdomadarius (eb-dom-ə-dair-ee-əs), n. [Latin "weekly"] Eccles. law. An officer in a cathedral church who supervises the regular performance of divine service and prescribes the duties of choir members.

EBIT. abbr. Earnings before interest and taxes.

EC. abbr. 1. ETHICAL CONSIDERATION. 2. European Community. See EUROPEAN UNION.

ecclesia (i-klee-z[h]ee-ə), n. [Latin "assembly"] 1. A place of religious worship. 2. A Christian assembly; a church.

ecclesiarch (i-klee-zee-ahrk), n. The ruler of a church.

ecclesiastic (i-klee-zee-as-tik), n. A clergyman; a priest; one consecrated to the service of the church.

ecclesiastical (i-klee-zee-as-ti-kəl), adj. Of or relating to the church, esp. as an institution. — Also termed ecclesiastic.

ecclesiastical authorities. The church's hierarchy, answerable to the Crown, but set apart from the rest of the citizens, responsible for superintending public worship and other religious ceremonies and for administering spiritual counsel and instruction. • In England, the several orders of the clergy are (1) archbishops and bishops, (2) deans and chapters, (3) archdeacons, (4) rural deans, (5) parsons (under whom are included appropriators) and vicars, and (6) curates. Church-wardens, sidesmen, parish clerks, and sextons are also considered types of ecclesiastical authorities because their duties are connected with the church. Cf. ecclesiastical courts under COURTS.

ecclesiastical commissioners. Hist. English law. A group of people empowered to suggest measures to improve the established church's efficiency, to be ratified by orders in council. • This body of commissioners, established by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act (1836), has been dissolved. Its functions, rights, and property are now vested in church commissioners. St. 6 & 7 Will. 4, ch. 77.

ecclesiastical corporation. See CORPORATION.

ecclesiastical court. See COURT.

ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over ecclesiastical cases and controversies, such as that exercised by ecclesiastical courts.

ecclesiastical law. 1. The body of law derived largely from canon and civil law and administered by the ecclesiastical courts. 2. The law governing the doctrine and discipline of a particular church; esp., Anglican canon law. — Also termed jus ecclesiasticum; law spiritual. Cf. CANON LAW.

ecclesiastical matter. A matter that concerns church doctrine, creed, or form of worship, or the adoption and enforcement, within a religious association, of laws and regulations to govern the membership, including the power to exclude from such an association those deemed unworthy of membership.

ecclesiastical sentence. The judgment in an ecclesiastical case.

ecclesiastical things. Property (such as buildings and cemeteries) given to a church to support the poor or for any other pious use.

ecclicus (ek-də-kəs), n. [Greek ekdikos "legal representative"] Hist. The attorney, proctor, or advocate of an organization. • A church's attorney, for example, was known as an episcoporum ecclicus.

echevin (esh-ə-van), n. French law. A municipal officer corresponding with the position of alderman or burgess, and sometimes having civil jurisdiction to hear and determine certain minor cases.

echouement (ay-shoo-mawn), n. In French marine law, stranding. See STRANDING.

ECJ. abbr. European Court of Justice.

e-commerce. The practice of buying and selling goods and services through online consumer services on the Internet. • The e, a shortened form of electronic, has become a popular prefix for other terms associated with electronic transactions. See ELECTRONIC TRANSACTION.

econometrics (ee-kon-ə-me-triks). The branch of economics that expresses economic theory in mathematical terms and that seeks to verify theory through statistical methods.

economic coercion. See COERCION (2).

economic discrimination. Any form of discrimination within the field of commerce, such as boycotting a particular product or price-fixing. See BOYCOTT; PRICE DISCRIMINATION; PRICE-FIXING.

economic duress. See DURESS.

economic frustration. See commercial frustration under FRUSTRATION.

economic-harm rule. See ECONOMIC-LOSS RULE.

economic indicator. A statistical measure (such as housing starts) used to describe the state of the economy or to predict its direction. See INDICATOR.

lagging economic indicator. An economic indicator (such as new-home sales) that tends to respond to the direction of the economy. — Often shortened to lagging indicator.

leading economic indicator. An economic indicator (such as interest rates) that tends to predict the future direction of the economy. — Often shortened to leading indicator.

economic life. The duration of an asset's profitability, usu. shorter than its physical life.

economic loss. A monetary loss such as lost wages or lost profits. • The term is usu. used to refer to the damages recoverable in a lawsuit. For example, in a products-liability suit, economic loss includes the cost of repair or replacement of defective property, as well as commercial loss for the property's inadequate value and consequent loss of profits or use.

consequential economic loss. Economic loss that proximately results from a defective product and that is beyond direct economic loss. • Examples include lost profits and loss of goodwill or business reputation.

direct economic loss. Economic loss flowing directly from insufficient product quality. • The most common type is loss-of-bargain damages — the difference between the actual value of goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been delivered as promised or warranted.

economic-loss rule. Torts. The principle that a plaintiff cannot sue in tort to recover for purely monetary loss — as opposed to physical injury or property damage — caused by the defendant. • Many states recognize an exception to this rule when the defendant commits fraud or negligent misrepresentation, or when a special relationship exists between the parties (such as an attorney-client relationship). — Also termed economic-harm rule; economic-loss doctrine.

“One way the courts have attempted to draw a line between tort and warranty is to bar recovery for ‘economic loss’ in tort. In some states this common law doctrine has achieved the status of the ‘economic loss doctrine,’ meaning that once loss is defined as ‘economic’ it cannot be recovered at least in negligence or strict tort and perhaps not in fraud or misrepresentation.” 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 10-5, at 581 (4th ed. 1995).

economic-realities test. A method by which a court determines the true nature of a business transaction or situation by examining the totality of the commercial circumstances. • Courts often use this test to determine whether a person is an employee or an independent contractor. Factors include whether the alleged employer controls the details of the work and whether taxes are withheld from payments made to the worker.

economic rent. 1. The return gained from an economic resource (such as a worker or land) above the minimum cost of keeping the resource in service. 2. Rent that yields a fair return on capital and expenses.

economics. The social science dealing with the production, distribution, and consumption of goods and services.

economic strike. See STRIKE.

edge lease. See LEASE.

EDI agreement. abbr. Electronic Data Interchange agreement; an agreement that governs the transfer or exchange of data, such as purchase orders, between parties by computer. ● Electronic data transmitted under an EDI agreement is usu. formatted according to an agreed standard, such as the American National Standards Institute ANSI X12 standard or the U.N. EDIFACT standard.

edict (ee-dikt), n. A formal decree, demand, or proclamation issued by the sovereign of a country. ● An edict has legal force equivalent to that of a statute. — edictal (ee-dik-təl), adj.

perpetual edict. Roman law. The praetor's edict republished into legislation and intended to exist in perpetuity or until abrogated by a later enactment. ● This term originally had the narrower sense of the praetors' general edicts as opposed to edicts issued in specific cases.

praetorian edict (pri-tor-ee-ən). Roman law. One of the yearly proclamations by which the new praetors made known the legal rules that they would apply in the administration of justice.

edictal interdict. See INTERDICT (1).

Edicts of Justinian. Roman law. The 13 constitutions or laws of Justinian, appended to the Greek collection of the Novels. ● The Edicts were confined to police matters in the provinces of the Roman Empire.

edictum (ə-dik-təm), n. [Latin] Roman law. An edict or mandate; an ordinance or law enacted by the emperor without the senate, belonging to the class of constitutiones principis. ● An edict was a constitution of the emperor acting on his own initiative, differing from a rescript in not being returned in the way of answer; from a decree in not being given in judgment; and from both in not being founded upon solicitation.

edictum annuum (an-yoo-əm). The annual edict or system of rules promulgated by a Roman praetor immediately upon assuming office, setting forth the principles by which the praetor would be guided in determining cases and administering justice while in office.

edictum perpetuum (pər-pech-oo-əm). The permanent part of the urban praetor's edict, edited in its final form by Julian in A.D. 131.

edictum provinciale (prə-vin-shee-ay-lee). An edict or system of rules for the administration of justice, similar to the edict of the praetor, set forth by the proconsuls and propraetors in the provinces of the Roman Empire.

Edictum Theodorici (thee-ə-də-rī-sī). A collection of Roman laws applicable to both Romans and Goths, promulgated by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, at Rome about A.D. 500, or perhaps in the time of Theodoric III of the Visigoths in Gaul about A.D. 460.

edictum tralatitium (tral-ə-tish-ee-əm). A praetor's edict that retained all or a principal part of the predecessor's edict, with only such additions as appeared necessary to adapt it to changing social conditions or juristic ideas.

edile (ee-dil). See AEDILE.

editorial privilege. See journalist's privilege (2) under PRIVILEGE (3).

effects doctrine. See AFFECTS DOCTRINE.

effets (e-fe or e-fets), n. pl. [French] 1. Bills of exchange. 2. Goods; movables; chattels.

effets mobiliers (moh-beel-yay or moh-bæ-leerz). Funds; stocks.

efficient adequate cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE (1).

efficient breach. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

efficient-breach theory. Contracts. The view that a party should be allowed to breach a contract and pay damages, if doing so would be more economically efficient than performing under the contract. • This relatively modern theory stems from the law-and-economics movement. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

efficient cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE (1).

efficient intervening cause. See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

efficient proximate cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE (1).

effigy (ef-ə-jee), n. A figure, image, or other representation; esp., a crude representation of someone who is disliked. • Effigies are sometimes hanged, burned, or otherwise abused to express public disapproval or ridicule.

effluent (ef-loo-ənt), n. Liquid waste that is discharged into a river, lake, or other body of water.

effluxion of time (i-fluk-shən). The expiration of a lease term resulting from the passage of time rather than from a specific action or event. — Also termed efflux of time.

efforcialiter (e-for-shee-ay-lə-tər), adv. [Latin] Hist. Forcibly. • This adverb referred primarily to military force.

effraction (ə-frak-shən). A breach made by the use of force.

either-or order. See alternative order under ORDER (4).

eiusdem generis. See EJUSDEM GENERIS.

eject, vb. 1. To cast or throw out. 2. To oust or dispossess; to put or turn out of possession. 3. To expel or thrust out forcibly (e.g., disorderly patrons). — ejector, vb.

ejection, n. An expulsion by action of law or by actual or threatened physical force. See OUSTER.

ejectione custodiae. See DE EJECTIONE CUSTODIAE.

ejectione firmae. See DE EJECTIONE FIRMAE.

ejectment. 1. The ejection of an owner or occupier from property. 2. A legal action by which a person wrongfully ejected from property seeks to recover possession and damages. • The essential allegations in an action for ejectment are that (1) the plaintiff has title to the land, (2) the plaintiff has been wrongfully dispossessed or ousted, and (3) the plaintiff has suffered damages. — Also termed action for the recovery of land. See FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER. Cf. EVICTION; OUSTER.

"The evolution of the action of ejectment from its primitive form as a mere action of trespass, enabling a lessee of lands to recover damages when ousted of his possession, through a series of most ingenious fictions, which were afterwards added to enable him to recover possession as well, until its final establishment as the proper method of trying all disputed titles to real property, presents to the student of legal science one of the most interesting studies that the history of the law affords. Few remedies have passed through so many changes of form, both in pleading and practice, and yet retained the same distinctive character that marked their origin." George W. Warvelle, A Treatise on the Principles and Practice of the Action of Ejectment § 4, at 4-5 (1905).

"Any person wrongfully dispossessed of land may sue for the specific restitution of it in an action of ejectment. Originally this action was a special variety of trespass and available only to leaseholders. But in time and by the aid of the most elaborate fictions it came to be used by freeholders also. All these fictions have now been swept away; in theory even the term ejectment has been replaced by the term action for the recovery of land. The older term is, however, replaced in practice." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 41 (17th ed. 1977).

equitable ejectment. A proceeding brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land and for other purposes. • Though in the form of an ejectment action, this proceeding is in reality a substitute for a bill in equity.

justice ejectment. A statutory proceeding to evict a tenant who has held over after termination of the lease or breach of its conditions.

ejectment bill. Equity practice. A bill in equity brought to recover real property and an accounting of rents and profits, without setting out a distinct ground of equity jurisdiction (and thus demurrable).

ejectmente de garde. See DE EJECTIONE CUSTODIAE.

ejector. One who ejects, puts out, or dispossesses another.

casual ejector. The nominal defendant in an ejectment action who, under a legal fiction, is supposed to come casually or by accident upon the premises and to eject the lawful possessor.

ejectum (i-jek-təm), n. Something that is cast out, esp. by the sea. See FLOTSAM. Cf. JETSAM; LAGAN.

ejectus (ee-jek-təs), n. [Latin] Hist. A whore-monger; a pimp.

ejercitoria (ay-hair-see-tor-ee-ə), n. [Spanish] In Spain, the name of an action lying against a ship's owner upon the contracts or obligations made by the master for repairs or supplies. • This action corresponds to the actio exercitoria of Roman law.

ejidos (e-hee-thohs), n. [Spanish] In Spain, lands used in common by inhabitants of a city, pueblo, or town for such things as pasture, wood, and threshing-ground; commons. — Also termed exidos; exedos.

ejuration (ej-ə-ray-shən). The renouncing or resigning of one's place.

ejusdem generis (ee-jəs-dəm jen-ə-ris also ee-joos- or ee-yoos-). [Latin "of the same kind or class"] A canon of construction that when a general word or phrase follows a list of specific persons or things, the general word or phrase will be interpreted to include only persons or things of the same type as those listed. • For example, in the phrase horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, goats, or any other barnyard animal, the general language or any other barnyard animal — despite its seeming breadth — would probably be held to include only four-legged, hoofed mammals (and thus would exclude chickens). — Also spelled eiusdem generis. — Also termed ejusdem generis rule; Lord Tenterden's rule. Cf. EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS; RULE OF RANK.

elaborare (i-lab-ə-rair-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To gain, acquire, or purchase, as by labor and industry.

elaboratus (i-lab-ə-ray-təs), n. [Latin] Property acquired by labor.

Elastic Clause. See NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE.

elder abuse. See ABUSE.

elder brethren. A distinguished body of men elected as masters of Trinity House, an institution incorporated in the reign of Henry VIII and charged with many duties in marine affairs, such as superintending lighthouses. • The full title of the corporation is Elder Brethren of the Holy and Undivided Trinity.

elder law. The field of law dealing with the elderly, including such issues as estate planning, retirement benefits, social security, age discrimination, and healthcare.

elder title. A title of earlier date but one that becomes operative simultaneously with, and prevails over, a title of newer origin.

elected domicile. See DOMICILE.

electee. 1. A person chosen or elected. 2. A person to whom the law gives a choice about status.

election, n. 1. The exercise of a choice; esp., the act of choosing from several possible rights or remedies in a way that precludes the use of other rights or remedies <the taxpayers' election to file jointly instead of separately>. See ELECTION OF REMEDIES. 2. The doctrine by which a person is compelled to choose between accepting a benefit under a legal instrument or retaining some property right to which the person is already entitled; an obligation imposed on a party to choose between alternative rights or claims, so that the party is entitled to enjoy only one <the prevailing plaintiff was put to an election between out-of-pocket damages and lost profits>. — Also termed equitable election. See RIGHT OF ELECTION. 3. The process of selecting a person to occupy a position or office, usu. a public office <the 1994 congressional election>. — elect, vb. — elective, adj.

by-election. An election specially held to fill a vacant post. — Also spelled bye-election. Cf. general election.

election at large. An election in which a public official is selected from a major election district rather than from a subdivision of the larger unit. — Also termed at-large election.

free election. An election in which the political system and processes guarantee that each voter will be allowed to vote according to conscience.

general election. 1. An election that occurs at a regular interval of time. — Also termed regular election. 2. An election for all seats, as contrasted with a by-election. Cf. by-election.

municipal election. The election of municipal officers.

off-year election. An election conducted at a time other than the presidential election year.

popular election. An election by people as a whole, rather than by a select group.

primary election. A preliminary election in which a political party's registered voters nominate the candidate who will run in the general election. — Often shortened to primary.

recall election. An election in which voters have the opportunity to remove a public official from office.

regular election. See general election.

representation election. An election held by the National Labor Relations Board to decide whether a certain union will represent employees in a specific bargaining unit. See BARGAINING UNIT.

runoff election. An election held after a general election, in which the two candidates who received the most votes — neither of whom received a majority — run against each other so that the winner can be determined.

special election. An election that occurs in an interim between general elections, usu. to fill a sudden vacancy in office.

election, doctrine of. A doctrine holding that when a person has contracted with an agent without knowing of the agency and later learns of the principal's identity, the person may enforce the contract against either the agent or the principal, but not both. See ELECTION (1).

election, estoppel by. See estoppel by election under ESTOPPEL.

election board. 1. A board of inspectors or commissioners appointed in each election precinct to determine voter qualification, to supervise the polling, and often to ascertain and report the results. 2. A local agency charged with the conduct of elections.

election by spouse. See RIGHT OF ELECTION.

election contest. A challenge by an election's loser against the winner, calling for an analysis of the election returns, which may include reviewing voter qualifications or re-counting the ballots.

election district. A subdivision of a state, county, or city that is established to facilitate an election or to elect governmental representatives for that subdivision.

election dower. A name sometimes given to a law specifying a widow's statutory share of her deceased husband's estate if she chooses to reject her share under a will. See RIGHT OF ELECTION.

election fraud. Illegal conduct committed in an election, usu. in the form of fraudulent voting (such as a person's voting twice, voting under another person's name (usu. a deceased person), or voting while ineligible).

election judge. 1. A person appointed to supervise an election at the precinct level; a local representative of an election board. 2. English law. One of two puisne judges of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court selected to try election petitions.

election of remedies. 1. A claimant's act of choosing between two or more concurrent but inconsistent remedies based on a single set of facts. 2. The affirmative defense barring a litigant from pursuing a remedy inconsistent with another remedy already pursued, when that other remedy has given the litigant an advantage over, or has damaged, the opposing party. • This doctrine has largely fallen into disrepute and is now rarely applied. 3. The affirmative defense that a claimant cannot simultaneously recover damages based on two different liability findings if the injury is the same for both claims, thus creating a double recovery. Cf. alternative relief under RELIEF (3).

election petition. English law. A petition for inquiry into the validity of a Parliament member's election, when the member's return is allegedly invalid for bribery or other reason.

election returns. The report made to the board of canvassers or the election board, by those charged with tallying votes, of the number of votes cast for a particular candidate or proposition.

elective franchise. See FRANCHISE (1).

elective office. An office that is filled by popular election rather than by appointment.

elective share. Wills & estates. The percentage of a deceased spouse's estate, set by statute, that a surviving spouse (or sometimes a child) may choose to receive instead of taking under a will or in the event of being unjustifiably disinherited. — Also termed forced share; statutory share; statutory forced share. See RIGHT OF ELECTION.

"In many states today, common-law dower and curtesy have been wholly replaced by statutes that make the surviving spouse an 'heir' of the deceased spouse and fix a minimum percentage of the decedent's estate (real and personal) to which the survivor will be entitled regardless of efforts of the deceased spouse to prevent it by will. This statutory minimum — called the statutory forced share — is typically an estate in fee simple, not merely a life estate. A serious disadvantage to the surviving spouse under many of these statutes, however, is that the minimum percentage applies only to property owned by the decedent at death. Both husbands and wives can, under such statutes, defeat their spouses' forced shares by inter vivos transfer." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 37-38 (2d ed. 1984).

elector. 1. A member of the electoral college chosen to elect the President and Vice President. — Also termed presidential elector. 2. One who is qualified to vote; a voter. 3. A person who chooses between alternative rights or claims. 4. Hist. The title of certain German princes who had a voice in electing the Holy Roman Emperors. • This office sometimes became hereditary and was connected with territorial possessions.

electoral college. (often cap.) The body of electors chosen from each state to formally elect the U.S. President and Vice President by casting votes based on the popular vote.

electoral process. 1. A method by which a person is elected to public office. 2. The taking and counting of votes.

electric chair. A chair that is wired so that electrodes can be fastened to a condemned person's head and one leg and a lethal charge passed through the body. • The electric chair was first used in 1890 at the Auburn State Prison in New York.

electronic chattel paper. See CHATTEL PAPER.

Electronic Data Interchange agreement. See EDI AGREEMENT.

electronic funds transfer. See FUNDS TRANSFER.

electronic surveillance. See EAVESDROPPING; WIRETAPPING.

electronic transaction. A transaction formed by electronic messages in which the messages of one or both parties will not be reviewed by an individual as an expected step in forming a contract. UCC § 2A-102(a)(16).

eleemosynae (el-ə-mos-ə-nee), n. pl. Eccles. law. Possessions belonging to the church.

eleemosynaria (el-ə-mos-ə-nair-ee-ə), n. Hist. 1. The place in a religious house where the common alms were deposited, to be distributed to the poor by the almoner. 2. The office of almoner.

eleemosynarius (el-ə-mos-ə-nair-ee-əs), n. Hist. [Law Latin] 1. An almoner, or chief officer, who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts and distributed them to pious and charitable uses. 2. The name of an officer (lord almoner) of the English kings, in former times, who distributed the royal alms or bounty.

eleemosynary (el-ə-mos-ə-ner-ee), adj. Of, relating to, or assisted by charity; not-for-profit <an eleemosynary institution>.

eleemosynary corporation. See charitable corporation under CORPORATION.

eleemosynary defense. See charitable immunity under IMMUNITY (2).

elegant (el-ə-gan-tər), adv. Civil law. Accurately; with discrimination; neatly.

elegit (ə-lee-jit). [Latin "he has chosen"] Hist. A writ of execution (first given by 13 Edw., ch. 18) either upon a judgment for a debt or damages or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king's court. • Under it, the defendant's goods and chattels were appraised and, except for plow beasts, delivered to the plaintiff to satisfy the debt. If the goods were not sufficient to pay the debt, then the moiety of the defendant's freehold lands held at the time of judgment was also delivered to the plaintiff, to hold until the debt was satisfied out of rents and profits or until the defendant's interest expired. During this period the plaintiff was called tenant by elegit, and the estate an estate by elegit. The writ was abolished in 1956.

element. 1. A constituent part of a claim that must be proved for the claim to succeed <Burke failed to prove the element of proximate cause in prosecuting his negligence claim>. 2. Patents. A discretely claimed component of a patent claim. • To recover for patent infringement, the plaintiff must prove that the accused product infringes every element of at least one claim, either literally or under the doctrine of equivalents. — Also termed (in sense 2) limitation. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

elements of crime. The constituent parts of a crime — usu. consisting of the actus reus, mens rea, and — that the prosecution must prove to sustain a conviction. • The term is more broadly defined by the Model Penal Code in § 1.13(9) to refer to each component of the actus reus, causation, the mens rea, any grading factors, and the negative of any defense.

Eleventh Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1795, prohibiting a federal court from hearing an action between a state and a person who is not a citizen of that state. See sovereign immunity under IMMUNITY (1).

eligible, adj. Fit and proper to be selected or to receive a benefit; legally qualified for an office, privilege, or status. — eligibility, n.

elimination. Hist. The act of banishing or turning out of doors; rejection.

elinguation (ee-ling-gway-shən). Hist. The punishment of cutting out a person's tongue. — elinguate, vb.

elisor (i-li-zər). A person appointed by a court to assemble a jury, serve a writ, or perform other duties of the sheriff or coroner if either is disqualified. — Also spelled eslisor.

Elkins Act. A 1903 federal law that strengthened the Interstate Commerce Act by prohibiting rebates and other forms of preferential treatment to large carriers. 49 USCA §§ 41-43 (superseded).

ell (el). Hist. A measure of length corresponding to the modern yard.

Ellenborough's Act (el-ən-brəz). An English law (the Malicious Shooting and Stabbing Act) of 1803 punishing offenses against the person. St. 43 Geo. 3, ch. 58.

elogium (i-loh-jee-əm), n. Civil law. A will or testament.

eloign (i-loyn), vb. 1. To remove (a person or property) from a court's or sheriff's jurisdiction. 2. To remove to a distance; conceal. — Also spelled eloin. — eloigner, n.

eloignment (i-loyn-mənt), n. The getting of a thing or person out of the way, or removing it to a distance, so as to be out of reach.

elongata (ee-lawng-gay-tə). [Latin] 1. adj. Elongated; carried away to a distance. 2. ELONGATUS.

elongatus (ee-lawng-gay-təs). [Latin "el-igned"] A return made by a sheriff to a writ de homine replegiando, stating that the party to be replevied has been eloigned, or conveyed out of the sheriff's jurisdiction. — Also termed elongata.

elongavit (ee-lawng-gay-vit). [Latin 'he has eloigned'] In a proceeding by foreign attachment, the serjeant-at-mace's return that the garnishee has eloigned the goods, so that they cannot be appraised. • Upon such a return, judgment was given for the plaintiff that an inquiry be made into the eloigned goods. The inquiry was then set for trial and an assessment made by a jury.

elope, vb. 1. Archaic. To run away; escape. 2. Archaic. To abandon one's husband and run away with a lover. 3. To run away secretly for the purpose of getting married, often without parental consent. — elopement, *n.

elsewhere, adv. In another place. • In shipping articles, this term, following the designation of the port of destination, must be construed either as void for uncertainty or as subordinate to the principal voyage stated in the preceding words.

eluviation (i-loo-vee-ay-shən). Movement of soil caused by excessive water in the soil.

e-mail. A communication exchanged between people by computer, either through a local area network or the Internet.

emanation. 1. The act of coming or flowing forth from something. 2. That which flows or comes forth from something; an effluence.

emancipate, vb. 1. To set free from legal, social, or political restraint; esp., to free from slavery or bondage. 2. To release (a child) from the control, support, and responsibility of a parent or guardian. — emancipative, emancipatory, adj. — emancipator, n.

emancipated minor. See MINOR.

emancipation. 1. The act by which one who was under another's power and control is freed. 2. A surrender and renunciation of the correlative rights and duties concerning the care, custody, and earnings of a child; the act by which a parent (historically a father) frees a child and gives the child the right to his or her own earnings. • This act also frees the parent from all legal obligations of support. Emancipation may take place by agreement between the parent and child, by operation of law (as when the parent abandons or fails to support the child), or when the child gets legally married. A "partial emancipation" frees a child for only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent's rights, or for only some purposes. 3. Roman law. The enfranchisement of a son by his father, accomplished through the formality of an imaginary sale. • Justinian substituted the simpler proceeding of a manumission before a magistrate. Cf. MANCIPATION.

emancipation proclamation. (usu. cap.) An executive proclamation, issued by President Abraham Lincoln on January 1, 1863, declaring that all persons held in slavery in certain designated states and districts were freed.

embargo, n. 1. A government's wartime or peacetime detention of an offending nation's private ships found in the ports of the aggrieved nation <the President called off the embargo of Iraq's ships after the war ended>. — Also termed hostile embargo. 2. A nation's detention of its own ships in its own ports to promote safety and to preclude transportation to an offending nation <the embargo of all U.S. ships traveling to Iraq remained in effect until hostilities subsided>. 3. The unilateral or collective restrictions on the import or export of goods, materials, capital, or services into or from a specific country or group of countries for political or security reasons <for a time, the industrialized nations placed an embargo on all goods from Libya>. — Also termed trade embargo. 4. The conscription of private property for governmental use, such as to transport troops <the Army's embargo of the company jet to fly General White to Washington>. 5. A temporary prohibition on disclosure <the embargo on the press release expired at 11:59 p.m.>. — embargo, vb.

embassador. See AMBASSADOR.

embassy. 1. The building in which a diplomatic body is located; esp., the residence of the ambassador. 2. A body of diplomatic representatives headed by an ambassador; a diplomatic mission on the ambassadorial level. 3. The mission, business, and function of an ambassador. Cf. LEGATION.

Ember Days. Eccles. law. The days — which the ancient church fathers called quatuor tempora jejunii — that are observed on the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday following (1) Quadragesima Sunday (the first Sunday in Lent), (2) Whitsuntide, or Holyrood Day, in September, and (3) St. Lucy's Day, about the middle of December. • Almanacs refer to the weeks in which these days fall as Ember Weeks; they are now chiefly noticed because, by tradition, the Sundays following Ember Days are used to ordain priests and deacons, although the canon allows bishops to ordain on any Sunday or holiday.

embezzlement, n. The fraudulent taking of personal property with which one has been entrusted, esp. as a fiduciary. • The criminal intent for embezzlement — unlike larceny and false pretenses — arises after taking possession (not before or during the taking). — Also termed defalcation; peculation. — embezzle, vb. See LARCENY; FALSE PRETENSES.

"Embezzlement is not a common-law crime. It is the result of legislative efforts to make provision for an unreasonable gap which appeared in the law of larceny as it developed. Under the early English statute embezzlement was made a misdemeanor, but under most modern American statutes it is either a felony or a misdemeanor depending upon the value of the property converted." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 351 (3d ed. 1982).

"Embezzlement can be defined as the fraudulent conversion of the property of another by one who has lawful possession of the property and whose fraudulent conversion has been made punishable by the statute." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 94 (2d ed. 1987).

emblem. 1. A flag, armorial bearing, or other symbol of a country, organization, or movement. 2. Loosely, something that is used to symbolize something else.

emblemata Triboniani (em-blee-mə-tə trə-boh-nee-ay-nī). [Latin] Roman law. Alterations, modifications, and additions to the writings of the older jurists, combined to form the Pandects. • Justinian appointed a commission over which Tribonian presided to harmonize contradictions, delete obsolete matter, and bring the law up to date.

emblems (em-blə-mənts). 1. The growing crop annually produced by labor, as opposed to a crop occurring naturally. • Emblems are considered personal property that the executor or administrator of a deceased tenant may harvest and take regardless of who may have since occupied the land. — Also termed fructus industriales. 2. The tenant's right to harvest and take away such crops after the tenancy has ended.

"At common law those products of the earth which are annual, and are raised by yearly manurance and labor, and essentially owe their annual existence to the cultivation by man, [are] termed 'emblems' and sometimes 'fructus industriales.'" Sparrow v. Pond, 52 N.W. 36 (Minn. 1892).

emblers de gentz (em-blərz də jents). [Law French] A theft from the people. • The phrase occurs in the old English rolls of Parliament — for example, "Whereas divers murders, emblers de gentz, and robberies are committed . . ."

embossed seal. See NOTARY SEAL.

embracee (em-bray-see). The bribe-taker in the offense of embracery.

embracer (im-brays-ər). The bribe-giver in the offense of embracery. — Also spelled embrac-eor.

embracery (im-brays-ə-ree), n. The attempt to corrupt or instruct a jury to reach a particular conclusion by means other than presenting evidence or argument in court, as by bribing or threatening jurors; a corrupt or wrongful attempt to influence a juror's vote on a verdict. — Also termed jury-tampering; laboring a jury. Cf. JURY-FIXING; JURY-PACKING.

"The word 'embracery' . . . has tended to disappear. It is included in some of the codes but the tendency has been to divide this common-law offense into two parts, placing that which is appropriate thereto in sections on bribery and the remainder in provisions dealing with obstruction of justice." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 552 (3d ed. 1982).

embryo (em-bree-oh). A developing but unborn or unhatched animal; esp., an unborn human from conception until the development of organs (i.e., until about the eighth week of pregnancy).

embryo formatus (for-may-təs). Eccles. law. A human embryo organized into human shape and endowed with a soul. • Though rejected in the early doctrine of the Christian church, the distinction between the embryo formatus and informatus was accepted by Gratian (regarded as the founder of canon law) in his Decretum (ca. 1140), in which he said that abortion is not murder if the fetus has not yet been infused with a soul. Though he did not specify the time of formation or animation, by the 16th century canonists accepted that the time of formation and animation was the 40th day after conception for the male fetus and the 80th day for the female. — Also termed embryo animatus.

embryo informatus (in-for-may-təs). Eccles. law. A human embryo before it has been endowed with a soul. — Also termed embryo inanimatus.

emend (i-mend), vb. To correct or revise; esp., to edit or change (a text).

emenda (ee-men-də), n. pl. [Latin “amends”] Things given in reparation for a trespass.

emendatio (ee-men-day-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. The power of amending and correcting abuses, according to certain rules and measures.

emendatio panis et cerevisiae (ee-men-day-shee-oh pan-is et ser-ə-vizh-ee-ee). [Latin “the correction of bread and ale”] The power of supervising and correcting (assizing) the weights and measures of bread and ale.

emendation (ee-men-day-shən). 1. Correction or revision, esp. of a text. 2. Hist. The correction of an error or wrongdoing; atonement for a criminal offense. • As criminal law developed over time, emendation by payment of wer or wite gradually faded away and was replaced by harsher punishments.

e mera gratia (ee meer-ə gray-shee-ə). [Latin] Out of mere grace or favor.

Emergency Court of Appeals. A temporary court, established during World War II, whose purpose is to review wage- and price-control matters.

emergency doctrine. 1. A legal principle exempting a person from the ordinary standard of reasonable care if that person acted instinctively to meet a sudden and urgent need for aid. — Also termed imminent-peril doctrine; sudden-emergency doctrine; sudden-peril doctrine. 2. A legal principle by which consent to medical treatment in a dire situation is inferred when neither the patient nor a responsible party can consent but a reasonable person would do so. — Also termed (in sense 2) emergency-treatment doctrine. Cf. GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE; RESCUE DOCTRINE.

emergency-treatment doctrine. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (2).

emigrant (em-ə-grənt), n. One who leaves his or her country for any reason with the intent to establish a permanent residence elsewhere. Cf. IMMIGRANT.

emigrant agent. See AGENT.

emigration (em-ə-gray-shən), n. The act of leaving a country with the intent to not return and to maintain a residence elsewhere. — emigrate, vb. Cf. IMMIGRATION.

“Emigration is usually defined as the voluntary removal of an individual from his home State with the intention of residing abroad. However, not all emigration is voluntary; there sometimes exists forced emigration, even mass emigration. Emigration may also be due to flight for political reasons or expulsion. One then speaks of refugees or exiles.” Paul Weis, “Emigration,” in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 76 (1995).

émigré (em-ə-gray or em-ə-gray), n. [French] One who is forced to leave his or her country for political reasons. — Also spelled émigré.

eminence (em-ə-nənts). (usu. cap.) Eccles. law. An honorary title given to cardinals of the Catholic Church. • Until the pontificate of Urban VIII, cardinals were called illustrissimi and reverendissimi.

eminent domain. The inherent power of a governmental entity to take privately owned property, esp. land, and convert it to public use, subject to reasonable compensation for the taking. See CONDEMNATION (2); EXPROPRIATION; TAKING (2).

Eminent Domain Clause. The Fifth Amendment provision providing that private property cannot be taken for public use without just compensation.

emissary. One sent on a special mission as another's agent or representative, esp. to promote a cause or to gain information.

emit, vb. 1. To give off or discharge into the air <emit light>. 2. To issue with authority <emit a new series of currency>. — emission, n.

emolument (i-mol-yə-mənt), n. (usu. pl.) Any advantage, profit, or gain received as a result of one's employment or one's holding of office.

Emolument Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution prohibiting titles of nobility and the acceptance of a gift, title, or other benefit from a foreign power. U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8.

emotional distress. A highly unpleasant mental reaction (such as anguish, grief, fright, humiliation, or fury) that results from another person's conduct; emotional pain and suffering. • Emotional distress, when severe enough, can form a basis for the recovery of tort damages. — Also termed emotional harm; mental anguish; mental distress; mental suffering. See INTENTIONAL INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS; NEGLIGENCE INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

"Emotional distress passes under various names, such as mental suffering, mental anguish, mental or nervous shock, or the like. It includes all highly unpleasant mental reactions, such as fright, horror, grief, shame, humiliation, embarrassment, anger, chagrin, disappointment, worry, and nausea. It is only where it is extreme that the liability arises. Complete emotional tranquility is seldom attainable in this world, and some degree of transient and trivial emotional distress is a part of the price of living among people. The law intervenes only where the distress inflicted is so severe that no reasonable man could be expected to endure it. The intensity and the duration of the distress are factors to be considered in determining its severity. Severe distress must be proved; but in many cases the extreme and outrageous character of the defendant's conduct is in itself important evidence that the distress has existed." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46 cmt. j (1965).

empanel, vb. To swear in (a jury) to try an issue or case. — Also spelled impanel. — empanelment, empaneling, n.

emparnours (em-pahr-nərz), n. pl. [French] Hist. Persons who undertook lawsuits on behalf of others.

emperor. 1. The title of the sovereign ruler of an empire. 2. The chief of a confederation of states of which kings are members. • The rulers of the Roman world adopted the designation emperor after the fall of the republic. The title was later assumed by those — including Napoleon — who claimed to be their successors in the Holy Roman Empire. The sovereigns of Japan and Morocco are often called emperors, as were, in Western speech, the former sovereigns of Turkey and China. The title denotes a power and dignity superior to that of a king. It appears to be the appropriate style of the executive head of a federal government constructed on the monarchical principle and comprising several distinct kingdoms or other quasi-sovereign states, as with the German empire from 1871 to 1918.

emphasis added. A citation signal indicating that the writer quoting another's words has italicized or otherwise emphasized some of them. — Also termed emphasis supplied.

emphyteusis (em-fi-t[y]oo-sis), n. [Greek "implanting"] Roman & civil law. A hereditary leasehold; a nonowner's right to use land in perpetuity, subject to forfeiture for nonpayment of a fixed rent or for certain other contingencies.

emphyteuta (em-fi-t[y]oo-tə), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. The person to whom an emphyteusis is granted; the lessee or tenant under a contract of emphyteusis. See FEE FARM.

emphyteutic (em-fi-t[y]oo-tik), adj. [Latin] Civil law. Founded on, growing out of, or having the character of an emphyteusis; held under an emphyteusis.

empire. The dominion or jurisdiction of an emperor; the region over which an emperor's dominion extends.

empirical (em-pir-i-kəl), adj. Of, relating to, or based on experience, experiment, or observation <the expert's theory was not supported by empirical data>. — Also termed empiric.

emplazamiento (em-plah-sah-myen-toh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. A summons or citation, issued by authority of a judge, requiring the addressee to appear before the tribunal at a designated time.

emploi (om-plwah), n. [French] French law. Equitable conversion. • When property covered by the régime dotal is sold, the purchaser must ensure that the sale proceeds are reinvested for the wife's benefit. See régime dotal under REGIME.

employ, vb. 1. To make use of. 2. To hire. 3. To use as an agent or substitute in transacting business. 4. To commission and entrust with the performance of certain acts or functions or with the management of one's affairs.

employee. A person who works in the service of another person (the employer) under an express or implied contract of hire, under which the employer has the right to control the details of work performance. — Also spelled em-ploye. Cf. AGENT; INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

borrowed employee. An employee whose services are, with the employee's consent, lent to another employer who temporarily assumes control over the employee's work. • Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the borrowing employer is vicariously liable for the employee's acts. But the employer may also be entitled to assert immunity under workers'-compensation laws. — Also termed borrowed servant; loaned employee; loaned servant; employee pro hac vice; special employee. See RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

statutory employee. Workers' compensation. An employee who is covered, or required to be covered, by the employer's workers'-compensation insurance and who therefore has no independent tort claim against the employer for unintentional injuries suffered on the job. See statutory employer under EMPLOYER.

employee benefit plan. A written stock-purchase, savings, option, bonus, stock-appreciation, profit-sharing, thrift, incentive, pension, or similar plan solely for employees, officers, and advisers of a company. • The term includes an employee-welfare benefit plan, an employee-pension benefit plan, or a combination of those two. But the term excludes any plan, fund, or program (other than an apprenticeship or training program) in which no employees are plan participants. — Often shortened to plan. Cf. PENSION PLAN.

defined-benefit plan. A plan established and maintained by an employer primarily to provide systematically for the payment of definitely determinable benefits to employees over a period of years, usu. for life, after retirement. • Retirement benefits under a defined-benefit plan are measured by and based on various factors such as years of service rendered and compensation earned. The amount of benefits and the employer's contributions do not depend on the employer's profits. The employer has the entire investment risk, and must cover any funding shortfall. Any plan that is not a defined-contribution plan is a defined-benefit plan. 29 USCA § 1002(35). Cf. defined-contribution plan.

defined-contribution plan. Under ERISA, an employee retirement plan in which each employee has a separate account — funded by the employee's contributions and the employer's contributions (usu. in a preset amount), the employee being entitled to receive the benefit generated by the individual account. 29 USCA § 1002(34). — Also termed individual account plan. Cf. defined-benefit plan.

disability retirement plan. 1. A plan that is invoked when a covered person is disabled from working to normal retirement age. 2. A plan that provides increased benefits if a person retires because of a disability.

employee-stock-ownership plan. A profit-sharing plan designed primarily to give an employee retirement benefits and a stake in the company, but also used to allow employees to purchase their employer company if it is closing. IRC (26 USCA) § 4975(e)(7)(A). — Abbr. ESOP.

excess benefit plan. An employee benefit plan maintained by an employer solely for the purpose of providing benefits for certain employees in excess of the statutory limitations on contributions and benefits.

401(k) plan. A retirement and savings plan that allows an employee to invest pretax contributions from a certain portion of gross wages. • Many employers match the employee's contributions. The contributions and their earnings are accumulated tax-free until they are withdrawn. The contributions are invested, usu. in investments that the employees choose from a list of options. The employer's contributions and the growth on those contributions are usu. not fully vested in the employee unless the employee has achieved a certain duration of service with the employer. IRC (26 USCA) § 401(k).

governmental plan. An employee benefit plan established and maintained by the government for its employees at any level, including plans established or maintained in accordance with collective-bargaining agreements between governmental entities and labor unions if those plans are funded by, and cover only employees of, governmental entities. — Also termed governmental employee benefit plan; government plan.

individual account plan. See defined-contribution plan.

Keogh plan. See KEOGH PLAN.

money-purchase plan. An employee benefit plan that provides a benefit based on the total amount of employer contributions in a participant's account. • A money-purchase plan can be a qualified plan if the contributions are fixed and not geared to profits.

nonqualified deferred-compensation plan. A compensation arrangement (such as providing stock options), frequently offered to executives, that defers the recognition of taxable income to a later date.

"Generally, a nonqualified deferred compensation plan is an agreement or promise by an employer to certain individuals to pay compensation to those individuals at some future date. A nonqualified plan may also be a series of deferred compensation agreements between an employer and certain individuals that are considered to be a plan of benefits. These types of plans do not qualify for the special tax treatment afforded to plans that meet the qualification requirements of Section 401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code . . ." Bruce J. McNeil, Nonqualified Deferred Compensation Plans 1 (1994).

retirement plan. An employee benefit plan — such as a pension plan or Keogh plan — provided by an employer (or a self-employed person) for an employee's retirement.

simplified employee pension plan. An individual retirement account or annuity established for an employee and funded by employee contributions and by discretionary contributions from the employer. • A simplified employee pension plan operates much like a 401(k) plan, in that the employee contributions can be made by deferred compensation and the employer can contribute. But the plan is attractive to small employers because it is much easier to administer than a 401(k) plan and gives the employer complete discretion on whether to make an annual contribution. IRC (26 USCA) § 408(k). — Abbr. SEP.

split-funded plan. A retirement plan combining elements of both life insurance and investment plans.

target benefit plan. A money-purchase plan that sets a "targeted" benefit to be met by actuarially determined contributions.

employee givebacks. See CONCESSION BARGAINING.

employee-liability exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

employee pro hac vice. See borrowed employee under EMPLOYEE.

Employee Retirement Income Security Act. A federal statute that regulates private pension plans and employee benefit plans and that established the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. 29 USCA §§ 1001 et seq. — Abbr. ERISA.

employee stock option. See STOCK OPTION (2).

employee-stock-ownership plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

Employee's Withholding Allowance Certificate. See W-4 FORM.

employer. A person who controls and directs a worker under an express or implied contract of hire and who pays the worker's salary or wages. Cf. PRINCIPAL (1).

equal-opportunity employer. An employer who agrees not to discriminate against any job applicant or employee on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, natural origin, age, or disability. — Abbr. EOE.

general employer. An employer who transfers an employee to another employer for a limited period. See borrowed employee under EMPLOYEE.

special employer. An employer who has borrowed an employee for a limited period and has temporary responsibility and control over the employee's work.

statutory employer. Workers' compensation. One who employs a statutory employee. See statutory employee under EMPLOYEE.

employers' liability. See WORKERS' COMPENSATION.

employers'-liability insurance. See INSURANCE.

employment. 1. The act of employing; the state of being employed. 2. Work for which one has been hired and is being paid by an employer.

casual employment. Work that is occasional, irregular, or for a limited, temporary purpose.

employment at will. Employment that is usu. undertaken without a contract and that may be terminated at any time, by either the employer or the employee, without cause. — Also termed at-will employment; hiring at will.

"Surprisingly, the employment at will doctrine is not an ancient one. On the contrary, it dates only from the period in the mid-nineteenth century that saw the transformation of the employment relation from one of status to one of contract. The relentless logic of the contract approach dictated the rule that the employee had only such rights as were expressly agreed to in his contract of employment — no more and no less. This meant that there was no implication that an indefinite hiring would last for a year or any other presumed period, since if the parties had wanted a particular term they would have expressly agreed to it." 1 Lex K. Larson, Unjust Dismissal § 1.01, at 1-3 (1992).

"The doctrine of employment at will prescribed that an employee without a contract for a fixed term could be hired or fired for any reason or no reason at all. . . . [The] rule provided that employees categorized as 'at will' had no legal interest in continuing job security. Whereas early American masters had some responsibility to the public as well as to their servants when they turned dependent servants out on the world, under [this] formulation, masters could simply fire employees who had no contracts." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 1.4, at 9-10 (1994).

gainful employment. Work that a person can pursue and perform for money.

hazardous employment. High-risk work; work involving extra peril. • In the context of workers' compensation, hazardous employment often requires an employer to carry workers'-compensation coverage or its equivalent, regardless of the number of employees.

joint employment. A job in which the essential terms and conditions of the employee's work are controlled by two or more entities, as when a company hires a contractor to perform a task and retains control over the contractor's employees in matters such as hiring, firing, discipline, conditions of employment, promulgation of work rules, assignment of day-to-day job duties, and issuance of operating instructions.

permanent employment. Work that, under a contract, is to continue indefinitely until either party wishes to terminate it for some legitimate reason.

seasonal employment. An occupation possible only during limited parts of the year, such as a summer-camp counselor, a baseball-park vendor, or a shopping-mall Santa.

employment agency. A business that procures, for a fee, employment for others and employees for employers. • Whether the employer or the employee pays the fee depends on the terms of the agreement. See FINDER (1).

employment at will. See EMPLOYMENT.

employment contract. See CONTRACT.

employment-practices-liability insurance. See INSURANCE.

employment-related-practices exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

emporium (em-por-ee-əm), n. A place for wholesale trade in commodities carried by sea. • The term is sometimes applied to a seaport town, but properly signifies only a particular place in such a town.

empresario (em-pri-sahr-ee-oh), n. [Spanish] 1. Mexican law. A businessperson; a person who invests in or manages a business. 2. Hist. A person receiving extensive land grants in consideration of bringing people into Mexico (esp. into what would become Texas) and settling them on the land with a view toward increasing the population and developing the country's resources.

emptio (emp-shee-oh), n. [Latin "purchase"] Roman & civil law. The act of buying; a purchase. — Also spelled emtio.

emptio bonorum (bə-nor-əm). [Latin "purchase of goods"] A type of forced assignment for the benefit of creditors, involving a public sale of an insolvent debtor's estate whereby the purchaser succeeded to all the debtor's property, rights, and claims, and became responsible for the debtor's debts and liabilities to an extent fixed before the transfer.

emptio et venditio (et ven-dish-ee-oh). [Latin "purchase and sale"] A contract of sale. — Also termed emptio venditio. See VENDITIO.

emptio rei speratae (ree-I spē-ray-tee). [Latin "purchase of a hoped-for thing"] The purchase of a thing not yet in existence or not yet in the seller's possession; e.g., a future crop. • The price of such a purchase typically depended on the actual yield and thus could fluctuate.

emptio spei (spee-I). [Latin "purchase of a hope"] An emptio rei speratae in which the price is fixed, regardless of actual gain.

emptio venditio. See emptio et venditio.

emptor (emp-tor or -tər), n. [Latin] Civil law. A buyer. — Also spelled emtor. See caveat emptor under CAVEAT.

emptor familiae. See FAMILIAE EMPTOR.

empty-chair defense. A trial tactic in a multi-party case, whereby one defendant attempts to put all the fault on a defendant who settled before trial or who was not named as a party.

empty-chair doctrine. See ADVERSE-INTEREST RULE.

emptio. See EMPATIO.

emtor. See EMPTOR.

emtrix (em[p]-trəks), n. [Latin] Civil law. A female buyer.

enable, vb. To give power to do something; to make able.

enablement requirement. Patents. The rule that the specification of a patent application must describe the invention so that a person with ordinary skill in the art could make and use the invention without experimenting unduly. • A specification that meets this requirement is referred to as enabling. Cf. ENABLING SOURCE.

enabling act. See enabling statute under STATUTE.

enabling clause. The part of a statute or constitution that gives governmental officials the power and authority to put the law into effect and enforce it. See ENACTING CLAUSE.

enabling power. See POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

enabling source. Patents. A document that defeats the patentability of an invention because the information provided made it possible — before the patent application was filed — for a person skilled in the art to make the invention. Cf. ENABLEMENT REQUIREMENT.

enabling statute. 1. See STATUTE. 2. Hist. The Lease Act (1540), by which tenants in tail, husbands seised in right of their wives, and others were empowered to make leases for their lives or for 21 years. St. 32 Hen. 8, ch. 28.

enact, vb. 1. To make into law by authoritative act; to pass <the statute was enacted shortly before the announced deadline>. 2. (Of a statute) to provide <the statute of frauds enacts that no action may be brought on certain types of contracts unless the plaintiff has a signed writing to prove the agreement>. — enactor, n.

enacted law. See LAW.

enacting clause. The part of a statute stating the legislative authority by which it is made and when it takes effect. • In codifications of statutes, enacting clauses generally appear not in the text of the statutes but in historical or legislative notes.

enactment, n. 1. The action or process of making into law <enactment of a legislative bill>. 2. A statute .

enajenación (e-nah-hen-ah-syohn), n. [Spanish] In Spain and Mexico, alienation; conveyance of property.

en arere (en ə-reer). [Law French] In time past.

en autre droit (en oh-trə droyt or on noh-trə drwah). [French] In the right of another, as when an executor sues on behalf of the estate. — Also spelled autre droit. See AUTRE DROIT.

en banc (en bangk or on bongk). [Law French "on the bench"] adv. & adj. With all judges present and participating; in full court <the court heard the case en banc> <an en banc rehearing>. — Also spelled in banc; in bank. — Also termed in banco.

en banc sitting. See SITTING.

enbancworthy, adj. Slang. Worthy of being considered en banc <the Fifth Circuit concluded that two of the four issues are truly enbancworthy>. — enbancworthiness, n.

encomienda (en-koh-mee-en-də), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. 1. A royal grant to a private person of a certain portion of territory in the Spanish colonies, together with the concession of a certain number of the native inhabitants, on the feudal principle of commendation. 2. A royal grant of privileges to the military orders of Spain.

encourage, vb. Criminal law. To instigate; to incite to action; to embolden; to help. See AID AND ABET.

encroach, vb. 1. To enter by gradual steps or stealth into the possessions or rights of another; to trespass or intrude. 2. To gain or intrude unlawfully upon another's lands, property, or authority. — Formerly also spelled incroach.

encroachment, n. An infringement of another's rights or intrusion on another's property <the court remedied the encroachment by ordering the defendant to cut down the tree limb hanging over the plaintiff's yard>. — Formerly also spelled incroachment. See TRESPASS.

encumbrance, n. A claim or liability that is attached to property or some other right and that may lessen its value, such as a lien or mortgage; any property right that is not an ownership interest. • An encumbrance cannot defeat the transfer of possession, but it remains after the property or right is transferred. — Also spelled incumbrance. — encumber, vb.

"Encumbrances are not confined to the law of property, but pertain to the law of obligations also. Choses in action may be mortgaged, settled in trust, or otherwise made the subject-matter of jura in re aliena, no less than land and chattels." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 435-36 n.(k) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"'Encumbrance' means a right, other than an ownership interest, in real property. The term includes a mortgage or other lien on real property." UCC § 9-102(a)(23).

mesne encumbrance (meen). An intermediate encumbrance; an encumbrance that first occurred both earlier and later than other encumbrances.

encumbrancer. One having a legal claim, such as a lien or mortgage, against property.

en gros (on groh). [French] In gross; total; by wholesale.

engross, vb. 1. Hist. To handwrite a document, esp. a deed, in a style characterized by large letters. • This method of writing, which was derived from ancient court hand, was also used in transcribing wills well into the 19th century. Cf. COURT HAND. 2. To prepare a copy of (a legal document, such as a deed) for execution. 3. To prepare a copy of (a bill or mandate) before a final legislative vote. 4. To buy large quantities of (a stock or commodity) in an effort to corner the market and control the price. 5. To absorb or fully occupy. — Formerly also spelled in-gross. Cf. ENROLL.

engrosser, n. Hist. A person who engages in or is guilty of engrossing.

Engrosser of the Great Roll. See CLERK OF THE PIPE.

engrossing, n. Hist. The practice of buying large quantities of commodities or merchandise with the intent of gaining a monopoly and selling them at a very high price. • Engrossing was a misdemeanor in England until 1834. — Also termed engrossment. See CORNERING THE MARKET.

“Engrossing . . . is the getting into one’s possession, or buying up, of corn or other dead victuals, with intent to sell them again. This must of course be injurious to the public, by putting it in the power of one or two rich men to raise the price of provisions at their own discretion.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 158 (1769).

engrossment, n. 1. The preparation of a legal document (such as a deed) for execution. 2. The drafting of a resolution or bill just before a final vote on the matter in the legislature. 3. ENGROSSING.

enhanced, adj. Made greater; increased <because of his recidivism, Monte was subject to an enhanced sentence after his latest conviction>.

enhanced damages. See DAMAGES.

enhancement. The act of augmenting; the state of being enhanced <the use of a deadly weapon led to an enhancement of the sentence>.

inheritance (on-nair-ee-tahns), n. [Law French] See INHERITANCE.

enitia pars (ə-nish-ee-ə pahrz). [Latin] The share of the eldest. • In English law, this describes the lot or share chosen by the eldest of coparceners when they make a voluntary partition. The first choice (primer election) belongs to the eldest.

enjoin, vb. 1. To legally prohibit or restrain by injunction <the company was enjoined from selling its stock>. 2. To prescribe, mandate, or strongly encourage <the graduating class was enjoined to uphold the highest professional standards>. — enjoinment (for sense 1), n. — enjoinder (for sense 2), n.

enjoinable, adj. Capable of being prohibited by injunction <an enjoinal nuisance>.

enjoy, vb. To have, possess, and use (something) with satisfaction; to occupy or have the benefit of (property).

enjoyment, n. 1. Possession and use, esp. of rights or property. 2. The exercise of a right.

adverse enjoyment. The possession or use of land under a claim of right against the owner of the property from which the easement derives.

beneficial enjoyment. The possession and benefit of property, but without legal title.

present enjoyment. The immediate possession and use of an estate.

quiet enjoyment. The possession of real property with the assurance that the possession will not be disturbed by a superior title. See covenant for quiet enjoyment under COVENANT (4).

en juicio (en hwee-syoh), adv. [Spanish] Judicially; in a court of law; in a suit at law.

enlarge, vb. 1. To increase in size or extend in scope or duration <the court enlarged the time allotted for closing arguments>. 2. To free from custody or imprisonment <at common law, an action for escape lay when a prisoner was wrongly enlarged>. — enlargement, n.

enlargement of time. A usu. court-ordered extension of the time allowed to perform an action, esp. a procedural one.

enlarger l'estate (en-lahr-jər lə-stayt). [Law French] A release that enlarges an estate and consists of a conveyance of the ulterior interest to the particular tenant. • If an estate is held by a tenant for life or years, with the remainder to another in fee, and if the one in remainder releases all rights to the particular tenant and his or her heirs (through an enlarger l'estate), the tenant then holds the estate in fee.

enlisted member. Military law. A person in an enlisted grade; a person in military service below the grade of officer or warrant officer.

enlistment, n. Voluntary entry into a branch of the armed services. — enlist, vb.

en masse (en mas). [French] In a mass; in a large group all at once; all together.

en mort mayne (en mort mayn). [French “in dead hand”] In mortmain. See MORTMAIN.

Enoch Arden law (ee-nək ahrd-ən). A statute that grants a divorce or an exemption from liability so that a person can remarry when his or her spouse has been absent without explanation for a specified number of years (usu. five or seven). • This type of law is named after a Tennyson poem, in which the eponymous hero, having been shipwrecked for years on a desert island, returns home to find that his wife has remarried. He selflessly conceals his identity from her so that she can remain with her new husband. — Also spelled Enoc Arden law. See presumptive death under DEATH; ABANDONMENT (2).

enormia (i-nor-mee-ə), n. [Latin] Common-law pleading. Unlawful or wrongful acts; wrongs. • This word, esp. as part of the phrase et alia enormia (“and other outrages”), appeared regularly in writs and declarations of trespass.

enormious (i-nor-mee-əs), adj. Archaic. Made without a rule or against law.

enormous, adj. Aggravated; excessively large <enormous crimes>.

en owl main (en ow-əl mayn). [Law French] In equal hand.

enpleet (en-pleet), vb. Hist. See IMPLEAD.

enquête (on-ket), n. [French] Eccles. law. An examination of witnesses (taken down in writing) by or before an authorized judge for the purpose of gathering testimony to be used on a trial. — Also termed enquest (on[g]-kwes[t]).

en recouvrement (on ray-koo-vrə-mon). [French “for purpose of recovery”] French law. An indorsement on a bill of exchange that does not transfer the property in the bill of exchange but merely gives the indorsee the authority to recover the amount of the bill.

enrégistrement (on-ray-zhees-trə-mon), n. [French] French law. Registration. • This is a formality that consists in inscribing, on a register kept by the government, a summary analysis of certain deeds and documents. When the analysis is so inscribed, the clerk places on the document a note indicating the date on which it was registered; alongside the memorandum the clerk makes an impression with a stamp.

enroll, vb. 1. To register or transcribe (a legal document, as a deed) into an official record on execution. — Formerly also spelled inroll. 2. To prepare (a bill passed by the legislature) for the executive’s signature. Cf. ENGROSS.

enrolled, adj. Registered; recorded.

enrolled agent. One who, though neither a certified public accountant nor an attorney, has been admitted to practice before the IRS, either by passing an examination or by working for the IRS in a technical area for at least five years. • The enrolled agent is one of four types of persons who are allowed to practice before the IRS, the other three being attorneys, certified public accountants, and persons who are admitted to represent either themselves or others in a particular case.

enrolled-bill rule. The conclusive presumption that a statute, once formalized, appears precisely as the legislature intended, thereby preventing any challenge to the drafting of the bill.

enrollment, n. The act of recording or registering.

enrollment of vessels. Maritime law. The recording and certification of vessels used in coastal or inland navigation, as distinguished from the “registration” of vessels used in foreign commerce. • Enrollment and registry are used to distinguish certificates granted to two classes of vessels. Enrollment evidences the national character of a vessel engaged in coasting trade or home traffic; registry is used to declare the nationality of a vessel engaged in foreign trade. Cf. REGISTRY (2).

Enrollment Office. Hist. A department of the Court of Chancery responsible for storing enrolled deeds and judgments. • The Enrollment Office was abolished in 1879; its duties were transferred to the Central Office.

en route (en or on root). [French] On the way; in the course of transportation or travel.

enschedule, vb. Archaic. To insert in a list, account, or writing.

enseal, vb. Archaic. To seal (a document).

enserver (en-sər-vər), vb. [Law French] To make subject to a service or servitude.

ens legis (enz lee-jis). [Law Latin] A creature of the law; an artificial being as opposed to a natural person. • The term describes a corporation, which derives its existence entirely from the law.

entail, n. A fee abridged or limited to the owner's issue or class of issue rather than descending to all the heirs. See BARRING OF ENTAIL.

"Entail is fee entailed, viz; abridged, limited, and tied to certain conditions at the will of the donor; where lands are given to, or settled on others." The Pocket Lawyer and Family Conveyancer 97 (3d ed. 1833).

quasi-entail. An estate pur autre vie that is granted to a person and the heirs of the person's body. • The interest so granted is not properly an estate-tail (because it is not granted by inheritance), but it is similar enough that the interest will go to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the cestui que vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body.

entail, vb. 1. To make necessary; to involve <responding to this onerous discovery will entail countless hours of work>. 2. To limit the inheritance of (an estate) to only the owner's issue or class of issue, so that none of the heirs can transfer the estate <the grantor entailed the property through a so-called "tail female">. See FEE TAIL.

entailed, adj. Settled or limited to specified heirs or in tail <entailed gifts>.

entailed estate. See FEE TAIL.

entailment, n. 1. The act of entailing an estate. 2. An estate so entailed.

entencion (en-ten-shən), n. [Law French] Hist. A plaintiff's count or declaration.

entendment. Archaic. See INTENDMENT.

entente (ahn-tahnt). [French "intent, understanding"] Int'l law. 1. An understanding that two or more nations have for carrying out a common policy or course of action. • An entente is looser than an alliance but stronger than the nations' merely having good relations. 2. The nations having such an understanding. Cf. ALLIANCE; DETENTE.

enter, vb. 1. To come or go into; esp., to go onto (real property) by right of entry so as to take possession <the landlord entered the defaulting tenant's premises>. 2. To put formally before a court or on the record <the defendant entered a plea of no contest>. 3. To become a party to <they entered into an agreement>. See ENTRY.

enterceur (en-tər-sər), n. [Law French] A party claiming goods; one who has placed goods in the hands of a third party.

enterprise, n. 1. An organization or venture, esp. for business purposes.

governmental enterprise. An enterprise undertaken by a governmental body, such as a parks department that creates a public park.

entertain, vb. 1. To bear in mind or consider; esp., to give judicial consideration to <the court then entertained motions for continuance>. 2. To amuse or please. 3. To receive (a person) as a guest or provide hospitality to (a person).

entertainment expense. See EXPENSE.

entertainment law. The field of law dealing with the legal and business issues in the entertainment industry (such as film, music, and theater), and involving the representation of artists and producers, the negotiation of contracts, and the protection of intellectual-property rights.

entice, vb. To lure or induce; esp., to wrongfully solicit (a person) to do something.

enticement, n. 1. The act or an instance of wrongfully soliciting or luring a person to do something.

enticement of a child. Criminal law. The act or offense of inviting, persuading, or attempting to persuade a child to enter a vehicle, building, room, or secluded place with the intent of committing an unlawful sexual act against the child.

2. Hist. The tort of inducing a man's wife to leave him or to remain away from him against his will.

entire, adj. 1. Whole; complete in all its parts. 2. Not divisible into parts.

entire benefit. See entire use under USE (4).

entire blood. See FULL BLOOD.

entire-contract clause. 1. INTEGRATION CLAUSE. 2. A provision in an insurance contract stating that the entire agreement between the insured and insurer is contained in the contract, often including the application (if attached), declarations, insuring agreement, exclusions, conditions, and endorsements.

entire-controversy doctrine. The principle that a plaintiff or defendant who does not assert all claims or defenses related to the controversy in a legal proceeding is not entitled to assert those claims or defenses in a later proceeding. — Also termed single-controversy doctrine. Cf. compulsory counterclaim under COUNTERCLAIM; RES JUDICATA (2).

entire day. See DAY.

entire interest. See INTEREST (2).

entire-output contract. See output contract under CONTRACT.

entire tenancy. See TENANCY.

entirety (en-tī-ər-tee). 1. The whole, as opposed to a moiety or part. 2. Something (such as certain judgments and contracts) that the law considers incapable of being divided into parts.

entirety, tenancy by the. See tenancy by the entirety under TENANCY.

entitle, vb. 1. To grant a legal right to or qualify for. 2. Eccles. law. To ordain as a minister. — Formerly also spelled intitle.

entitlement. An absolute right to a (usu. monetary) benefit, such as social security, granted immediately upon meeting a legal requirement.

entity. An organization (such as a business or a governmental unit) that has a legal identity apart from its members.

corporate entity. A corporation's status as an organization existing independently of its shareholders. ● As a separate entity, a corporation can, in its own name, sue and be sued, lend and borrow money, and buy, sell, lease, and mortgage its property.

public entity. A governmental entity, such as a state government or one of its political subdivisions.

entity assumption. The presumption that a business is a unit separate from its owners and from other firms.

entity theory of partnership. The theory that a partnership is an entity with a legal existence apart from the partners who make it up. Cf. AGGREGATE THEORY OF PARTNERSHIP.

entrapment, n. 1. A law-enforcement officer's or government agent's inducement of a person to commit a crime, by means of fraud or undue persuasion, in an attempt to later bring a criminal prosecution against that person. 2. The affirmative defense of having been so induced. ● To establish entrapment (in most states), the defendant must show that he or she would not have committed the crime but for the fraud or undue persuasion. — entrap, *vb.

What the State cannot tolerate is having crime instigated by its officers who are charged with the duty of enforcing the law. . . . Obviously 'entrapment' is not the appropriate word to express the idea of official investigation of crime, but it is so firmly entrenched that it seems wiser to accept it with due explanation than attempt to supplant it. . . ." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1161 (3d ed. 1982).

derivative entrapment. Entrapment in which the government uses a private person, acting either as an agent of the government or as an unwitting participant, to induce the subject of the entrapment to commit a crime.

sentencing entrapment. Entrapment of a defendant who is predisposed to commit a lesser offense but who is unlawfully induced to commit a more serious offense that carries a more severe sentence. — Also termed sentence-factor manipulation.

entreat (on-trə-bə), n. [Law French] An intruder or interloper.

entrepôt (on-trə-poh), n. [French] French law. A building or place where goods from abroad may be deposited and from which those goods may then be exported to another country without paying a duty.

entrepreneur (on-trə-prə-nər), n. One who initiates and assumes the financial risks of a new enterprise and who usu. undertakes its management.

entrust, vb. To give (a person) the responsibility for something, usu. after establishing a confidential relationship. — entrustment, n. See NEGLIGENT ENTRUSTMENT.

entrusting, n. Commercial law. The transfer of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that type and who may in turn transfer the goods and all rights to them to a purchaser in the ordinary course of business. UCC § 2-403(2).

entry, n. 1. The act, right, or privilege of entering real property <they were given entry into the stadium>.

lawful entry. 1. The entry onto real property by a person not in possession, under a claim or color of right, and without force or fraud. 2. The entry of premises under a search warrant. See EJECTION; EVICTION; search warrant under WARRANT.

open entry. A conspicuous entry onto real estate to take possession; an entry that is neither clandestine nor carried out by secret artifice or stratagem and that (by law in some states) is accomplished in the presence of two witnesses.

reentry. See REENTRY.

2. An item written in a record; a notation <Forney made a false entry in the books on March 3>.

blind entry. An accounting entry that indicates only the debited and credited amounts without any explanation.

compound journal entry. A journal entry requiring more than one debit and credit (as when revenue is received partly in cash and partly in security).

journal entry. An entry in an accounting journal of equal debits and credits, with occasional explanations of the recorded transactions.

3. The placement of something before the court or on the record. 4. Copyright. The deposit of a title of work with the Register of Copyrights to secure its protection. 5. Immigration. Any entrance of an alien into the United States, whether voluntary or involuntary. 6. Criminal law. The unlawful coming into a building to commit a crime.

entry, right of. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

entry, writ of. See WRIT OF ENTRY.

entry ad communem legem (ad kə-myoo-nəm lee-jəm). [Latin] Hist. 1. Entry at common law. 2. AD COMMUNEM LEGEM.

entry ad terminum qui praeteriit (ad tər-mə-nəm kwī pri-ter-ee-it). See AD TERMINUM QUI PRAETERIIT. entry for marriage in speech. See causa matrimonii praelocuti under CAUSA (1).

entry in casu consimili (en-tree in kay-s[y]oo kən-sim-ə-lī). [Latin] See CASU CONSIMILI.

entry of judgment. The ministerial recording of a court's final decision, usu. by noting it in a judgment book or civil docket. Cf. RENDITION OF JUDGMENT.

entry on the roll. Hist. 1. A clerk's notation on a parchment roll of the proceedings and issues in a particular case. • Before parties began submitting written pleadings, they would appear (in person or through counsel) in open court and state their respective contentions orally until they settled on the issue or precise point in dispute. During the progress of these oral statements, an appointed officer of the court would make minutes of the various proceedings on a parchment roll that then became the official record of the suit. Even after the practice of oral pleadings had fallen into disuse, proceedings continued to be entered "on the roll." This practice was abolished early in the 19th century. H.T. 4 Will. 4. 2. A future interest created in a transferor who conveys an estate on condition subsequent.

enumerate (i-n[y]oo-mə-rayt), vb. To count off or designate one by one; to list. — enumeration, n.

enumerated power. See POWER.

enumerator. A person appointed to collect census papers or schedules.

enunciate (i-nən-see-ayt), vb. 1. To state publicly; to announce or proclaim <the court enunciated a new doctrine yesterday>. 2. To articulate or pronounce <enunciate your syllables more clearly when you speak>. — enunciation, n. — enunciabile, adj. — enunciator, n.

enure. See INURE.

en ventre sa mere (on von-trə sa mair). [Law French "in utero"] (Of a fetus) in the mother's womb <child en ventre sa mere>. • This phrase refers to an unborn child, usu. in the context of a discussion of that child's rights. — Also spelled in ventre sa mere. See VENTER.

"An infant in ventre sa mere, or in the mother's womb, is supposed in law to be born for many purposes." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 126 (1765).

en vie (on vee). [Law French "in life"] Alive.

environmental effect. Environmental law. A natural or artificial disturbance of the physical, chemical, or biological components that make up the environment.

environmental-impact statement. Environmental law. A document that the National Environmental Policy Act (42 USCA § 4332(2)(c)) requires a federal agency to produce for a major project or legislative proposal so that better decisions can be made about the positive and negative environmental effects of an undertaking. — Abbr. EIS. — Also termed environmental-impact report (EIR).

environmental law. The field of law dealing with the maintenance and protection of the environment, including preventive measures such as the requirements of environmental-impact statements, as well as measures to assign liability and provide cleanup for incidents that harm the environment. • Because most environmental litigation involves disputes with governmental agencies, environmental law is heavily intertwined with administrative law.

Environmental Protection Agency. A federal agency created in 1970 to coordinate governmental action to protect the environment. — Abbr. EPA.

envoy (en-voy). 1. A high-ranking diplomat sent to a foreign country to execute a special mission or to serve as a permanent diplomatic representative. — Also termed envoy extraordinary. 2. A messenger or representative.

envoy extraordinary. Int'l law. A person who heads a legation rather than an embassy. • In current usage, the term is honorific and has no special significance.

eo die (ee-oh di-ee). [Latin] On that day; on the same day.

EOE. abbr. 1. See equal-opportunity employer under EMPLOYER. 2. Errors and omissions excepted. • This phrase is sometimes appended to an account stated to allow for slight errors. See errors-and-omissions insurance under INSURANCE.

eo instante (ee-oh in-stan-tee). [Latin] At that very instant.

eo intuitu (ee-oh in-t[y]oo-ə-too). [Latin] With or in that view; with that intent or object.

eo ipso (ee-oh ip-soh). [Latin] By that very act.

eo loci (ee-oh loh-si). [Latin] Civil law. In that state; in that condition.

eo loco (ee-oh loh-koh). [Latin] In that place.

E.O.M. abbr. End of month. • This appears as a payment term in some sales contracts.

eo nomine (ee-oh nahm-ə-nee). [Latin] By or in that name <interest eo nomine>.

EPA. abbr. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY.

EPC contract. See engineering, procurement, and construction contract under CONTRACT.

e pili ana (ay pee-lee ah-nah). [Hawaiian] Adjoining. • This term usu. refers to land that adjoins a stream.

epimenia (ep-ə-mee-nee-ə), n. pl. [Latin] Expenses; gifts.

epiqueya (ep-ee-kay-ah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. An equitable principle calling for the benign and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person.

episcopacy (i-pis-kə-pə-see), n. Eccles. law. 1. The office of a bishop. 2. A form of church government by diocesan bishops. 3. An office of overlooking or overseeing.

episcopalia (i-pis-kə-pay-lee-ə), n. pl. Eccles. law. Synodals, pentecostals, and other customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, collected by rural deans and forwarded to the bishop.

episcopate (i-pis-kə-pit), n. Eccles. law. 1. A bishopric. 2. The dignity or office of a bishop.

episcoporum ecdicus (i-pis-kə-por-əm ek-dikəs). [Latin] Eccles. law. A bishop's proctor; a church lawyer.

episcopus (i-pis-kə-pəs), n. [Latin fr. Greek] 1. Roman law. An overseer; an inspector, such as the municipal officer responsible for oversight of the bread and other provisions that served as the citizens' daily food. 2. A bishop.

episcopus puerorum (i-pis-kə-pəs pyoo-ər-or-əm). [Latin "bishop of the boys"] Hist Eccles. law. A layperson who would, on certain feasts, braid his hair, dress like a bishop, and act ludicrous. • This custom lasted in England long after several laws were passed to abolish it.

epistola (i-pis-tə-lə), n. [Latin "letter"] A charter; a written instrument to convey lands or to assure contracts. See ASSURANCE.

epistolae (i-pis-tə-lee), n. pl. [Latin "letters"] Roman law. 1. Rescripts; opinions given by the emperors in cases submitted to them for decision. 2. Opinions of juris consulti, such as Neratius, on questions of law in the form of letters to those consulting them. — Also spelled epistulae.

EPL insurance. See employment-practices-liability insurance under INSURANCE.

e pluribus unum (ee ploor-ə-bəs [y]oo-nəm). [Latin] One out of many. • This is the motto on the official seal of the United States and on several U.S. coins.

epoch (ep-ək), n. 1. A period of time marked by distinctive features or noteworthy events. 2. A time when a new computation is begun; a time from which memorable dates are counted. — epochal (ep-əkəl), adj.

EPS. abbr. EARNINGS PER SHARE.

equal-access rule. Criminal law. The doctrine that contraband found on a defendant's premises will not support a conviction if other persons have the same access to the premises as the defendant. • To invoke this defense successfully, the defendant must show that other persons did in fact have equal access to the premises; speculative evidence that trespassers might have come onto the premises will not bar a conviction.

Equal Access to Justice Act. A federal statute enacted in 1980 to allow the prevailing party in certain actions against the government to recover attorney's or expert-witness fees. Pub. L. No. 96-481, title II, 94 Stat. 2325 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 5, 15, and 28 USCA). — Abbr. EAJA.

equal and uniform taxation. See TAXATION.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act. A federal statute prohibiting a creditor from discriminating against an applicant on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, age, sex, or marital status with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction. 15 USCA §§ 1691 et seq.

equal degree. See DEGREE.

equal-dignities rule. Agency. The doctrine that an agent can perform all acts requiring a writing signed by the principal only if the agent's authority is set forth in a writing. • This rule is an adjunct to the statute of frauds and applies when one or more of the signatories to a contract acted through an agent.

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. A federal agency created under the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to end discriminatory employment practices and to promote nondiscriminatory employment programs. • The EEOC investigates alleged discriminatory employment practices and encourages mediation and other nonlitigious means of resolving employment disputes. A claimant is required to file a charge of discrimination with the EEOC before pursuing a claim under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and certain other employment-related statutes. — Abbr. EEOC.

equal-footing doctrine. The principle that a state admitted to the Union after 1789 enters with the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction within its borders as did the original 13 states.

equality. The quality or state of being equal; esp., likeness in power or political status. See EQUAL PROTECTION.

"We need not repeat the burning irony of Anatole France: 'The law in its majesty draws no distinction but forbids rich and poor alike from begging in the streets or from sleeping in the public parks.' Equality is meaningless under unequal conditions." Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 101 (1961).

equality before the law. The status or condition of being treated fairly according to regularly established norms of justice; esp., in British constitutional law, the notion that all persons are subject to the ordinary law of the land administered by the ordinary law courts, that officials and others are not exempt from the general duty of obedience to the law, that discretionary governmental powers must not be abused, and that the task of superintending the operation of law rests with an impartial, independent judiciary.

"A number of distinct meanings are normally given to the provision that there should be equality before the law. One meaning is that equality before the law only connotes the equal subjection of all to a common system of law, whatever its content. . . . A second theory asserts that equality before the law is basically a procedural concept, pertaining to the application and enforcement of laws and the operation of the legal system. . . . A third meaning normally borne by declarations that all are equal before the law, perhaps no more than a variant of the second, is that State and individual before the law should be equal." Polyvios G. Polyviou, The Equal Protection of the Laws 1-2 (1980).

equality of states. Int'l law. The doctrine that all fully independent nations are equal under international law. • This doctrine does not, of course, mean that all nations are equal in power or influence, but merely that, as nations, they all have the same legal rights.

equalization, n. 1. The raising or lowering of assessed values to achieve conformity. 2. Tax.

The adjustment of an assessment or tax to create a rate uniform with another. — Also termed equalization of taxes; fair and proper legal assessment.

equalization board. A local governmental agency responsible for adjusting the tax rates in different districts to ensure an equitable distribution of the tax burden. — Also termed board of equalization.

equalization of taxes. See EQUALIZATION (2).

equalize, vb. To make equal; to cause to correspond or be the same in amount or degree.

equally divided. 1. (Of property) apportioned per capita — not per stirpes — among heirs on the testator's death. • A provision in a will calling for property to be divided "share and share alike" has the same effect. 2. (Of a court, legislature, or other group) having the same number of votes on each side of an issue or dispute.

equal-opportunity employer. See EMPLOYER.

Equal Pay Act. A federal law mandating that all who perform substantially the same work must be paid equally. 29 USCA § 206.

equal protection. The constitutional guarantee under the 14th Amendment that the government must treat a person or class of persons the same as it treats other persons or classes in like circumstances. • In today's constitutional jurisprudence, equal protection means that legislation that discriminates must have a rational basis for doing so. And if the legislation affects a fundamental right (such as the right to vote) or involves a suspect classification (such as race), it is unconstitutional unless it can withstand strict scrutiny. — Also termed equal protection of the laws; equal protection under the law. See RATIONAL-BASIS TEST; STRICT SCRUTINY.

"Equal protection does not require that all persons be dealt with identically, but it does require that a distinction made have some relevance to the purpose for which the classification is made." Baxstrom v. Herold, 383 U.S. 107, 111, 86 S.Ct. 760, 763 (1966).

"As in all equal protection cases, . . . the crucial question is whether there is an appropriate governmental interest suitably furthered by the differential treatment." Police Dep't v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 95, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 2290 (1972).

"[T]he equal protection principle is exclusively associated with written Constitutions and embodies guarantees of equal treatment normally applied not only to the procedural enforcement of laws but also to the substantive content of their provisions. In other words, the equal protection of the laws is invariably treated as a substantive constitutional principle which demands that laws will only be legitimate if they can be described as just and equal." Polyvios G. Polyviou, The Equal Protection of the Laws 4 (1980).

Equal Protection Clause. The 14th Amendment provision requiring the states to give similarly situated persons or classes similar treatment under the law. Cf. DUE PROCESS CLAUSE.

equal protection of the laws. See EQUAL PROTECTION.

equal protection under the law. See EQUAL PROTECTION.

Equal Rights Amendment. A failed constitutional amendment that, had it been ratified, would have constitutionally prohibited entirely sex-based discrimination. • Congress passed the Amendment in 1972, but it failed in 1982, having been ratified by only 35 of the required 38 states. — Abbr. ERA.

equal-shares clause. Insurance. A clause requiring an insurer to pay its proportionate share of a claimed loss.

Equal Time Act. A federal law requiring that a broadcasting-facility licensee who permits a legally qualified candidate for public office to use the facility for broadcasting must afford an equal opportunity to all other candidates for the office. 47 USCA § 315.

equal-time doctrine. See FAIRNESS DOCTRINE.

equus (ee-kweez), n. [Latin] Hist. A knight.

equilocus (ee-kwə-loh-kəs), n. [Latin] An equal.

equinox (ee-kwə-noks or ek-wə-noks), n. One of the two periods of the year when the time from the sun's rising to its setting is equal to that from its setting to its rising. • The vernal equinox is about March 21, and the autumnal equinox is about September 22.

equip, vb. To furnish for service or against a need or exigency; to fit out; to supply with whatever is necessary for efficient action.

equipment, n. The articles or implements used for a specific purpose or activity (esp. a business operation). • Under the UCC, equipment includes goods if (1) the goods are used in or bought for a business enterprise (including farming or a profession) or by a debtor that is a nonprofit organization or a governmental subdivision or agency, and (2) the goods are not inventory, farm products, or consumer goods. UCC § 9-109(2).

equipment trust. A financing device commonly used by railroads in which a trustee and the railroad together buy equipment from a manufacturer, with the trustee providing most of the purchase price, and the trustee then leases the equipment to the railroad, which pays a rental fee comprising interest, amortization for serial retirement, and the trustee's fee.

equipment trust certificate. A security, usu. issued by a railroad, to pay for new equipment. • Title to the equipment is held by a trustee until the note has been paid off. — Also termed car trust certificate; trust certificate.

equitable (ek-wi-tə-bəl), adj. 1. Just; conformable to principles of justice and right. 2. Existing in equity; available or sustainable by an action in equity, or under the rules and principles of equity.

equitable abstention. See ABSTENTION.

equitable action. See action in equity under ACTION.

equitable-adjustment theory. The doctrine that in settling a federal contract dispute, the contracting officer should make a fair adjustment within a reasonable time before the contractor has to settle with its subcontractors, suppliers, and other creditors.

equitable adoption. See adoption by estoppel under ADOPTION (1).

equitable asset. See ASSET.

equitable assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

equitable-benefit doctrine. Bankruptcy. The principle that allows a bankruptcy court to grant preferred status to claims for service rendered by persons other than bankruptcy officers, to the extent that the service benefited the estate, when the person filing the claim acted primarily for the benefit of the estate as a whole.

equitable construction. See liberal construction under CONSTRUCTION.

equitable conversion. See CONVERSION (1).

equitable defense. See DEFENSE (1).

equitable distribution. Family law. The division of marital property by a court in a divorce proceeding, under statutory guidelines that provide for a fair, but not necessarily equal, allocation of the property between the spouses. ● The court can take into account a variety of factors, including the relative earning capacity of the spouses and (in a state that does not allow for no-fault divorce) the fault of either of the spouses. Equitable distribution is applied in 41 states (i.e., all the states that do not have a community-property system). — Also termed equitable division.

equitable doctrine of approximation. See DOCTRINE OF APPROXIMATION.

equitable easement. See EASEMENT.

equitable ejectment. See EJECTMENT.

equitable election. See ELECTION (2).

equitable estate. See ESTATE.

equitable estoppel. See ESTOPPEL.

equitable foreclosure. See FORECLOSURE.

equitable fraud. See constructive fraud under FRAUD.

equitable-fund doctrine. See COMMON-FUND DOCTRINE.

equitable interest. See INTEREST (2).

equitable lien. See LIEN.

equitable life estate. An interest in real or personal property that lasts for the life of the holder of the estate and that is equitable as opposed to legal in its creation. ● An example is a life estate held by a trust beneficiary.

equitable life tenant. See LIFE TENANT.

equitable mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

equitable owner. See beneficial owner under OWNER.

equitable recoupment. Tax. 1. A doctrine allowing a taxpayer to offset previously overpaid taxes against current taxes due, even though the taxpayer is time-barred from claiming a refund on the previous taxes. 2. A doctrine allowing the government to offset taxes previously uncollected from a taxpayer against the taxpayer's current claim for a refund, even though the government is time-barred from collecting the previous taxes. ● In both senses, this type of recoupment can be asserted only if the statute of limitations has created an inequitable result. See RECOUPMENT (2).

equitable-recoupment doctrine. A principle that diminishes a party's right to recover a debt to the extent that the party holds money or property of the debtor to which the party has no right. ● This doctrine is ordinarily a defensive remedy going only to mitigation of damages. The doctrine is sometimes applied so that a claim for a tax refund that is barred by limitations may nonetheless be recouped against a tax claim of the government.

equitable relief. See equitable remedy under REMEDY.

equitable remedy. See REMEDY.

equitable rescission. See RESCISSION.

equitable-restraint doctrine. See Younger abstention (1) under ABSTENTION.

equitable reversion. See REVERSION.

equitable right to setoff. The right to cancel cross-demands, usu. used by a bank to take from a customer's deposit accounts the amount equal to the customer's debts that have matured and that are owed to that bank. See SET-OFF.

equitable seisin. See seisin in law under SEISIN.

equitable servitude. See restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4).

equitable subrogation. See legal subrogation under SUBROGATION.

equitable title. See TITLE (2).

equitable tolling. The doctrine that the statute of limitations will not bar a claim if the plaintiff, despite diligent efforts, did not discover the injury until after the limitations period had expired. • Equitable tolling does not require misconduct by the defendant.

equity, n. 1. Fairness; impartiality; evenhanded dealing <the company's policies require managers to use equity in dealing with subordinate employees>. 2. The body of principles constituting what is fair and right; natural law <the concept of "inalienable rights" reflects the influence of equity on the Declaration of Independence>. 3. The recourse to principles of justice to correct or supplement the law as applied to particular circumstances <the judge decided the case by equity because the statute did not fully address the issue>. — Also termed natural equity. 4. The system of law or body of principles originating in the English Court of Chancery and superseding the common and statute law (together called "law" in the narrower sense) when the two conflict <in appealing to the equity of the court, she was appealing to the "king's conscience">.

"Equity is that system of justice which was developed in and administered by the High Court of Chancery in England in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction. This definition is rather suggestive than precise; and invites inquiry rather than answers it. This must necessarily be so. Equity, in its technical and scientific legal sense, means neither natural justice nor even all that portion of natural justice which is susceptible of being judicially enforced. It has, when employed in the language of English law, a precise, definite and limited signification, and is used to denote a system of justice which was administered in a particular court — the nature and extent of which system cannot be defined in a single sentence, but can be understood and explained only by studying the history of that court, and the principles upon which it acts. In order to begin to understand what equity is, it is necessary to understand what the English High Court of Chancery was, and how it came to exercise what is known as its extraordinary jurisdiction. Every true definition of equity must, therefore, be, to a greater or less extent, a history." George T. Bispham, The Principles of Equity 1-2 (Joseph D. McCoy ed., 11th ed. 1931).

"The term 'equity' is an illustration of Mr. Towkington's proposition that some words have a legal meaning very unlike their ordinary one. In ordinary language 'equity' means natural justice; but the beginner must get that idea out of his head when dealing with the system that the lawyers call equity. Originally, indeed, this system was inspired by ideas of natural justice, and that is why it acquired its name; but nowadays equity is no more (and no less) natural justice than the common law, and it is in fact nothing else than a particular branch of the law of England. Equity, therefore, is law. The student should not allow himself to be confused by the lawyer's habit of contrasting 'law' and 'equity,' for in this context 'law' is simply an abbreviation for the common law. Equity is law in the sense that it is part of the law of England; it is not law only in the sense that it is not part of the common law." Glanville Williams, Learning the Law 25-26 (11th ed. 1982).

5. A right, interest, or remedy recognizable by a court of equity <there was no formal contract formation, so they sued for breach in equity>.

contravening equity (kon-trə-veen-ing). A right or interest that is inconsistent with or contrary to a right sought to be enforced.

countervailing equity (kown-tər-vayl-ing). A contrary and balancing equity, equally deserving of consideration.

latent equity (lay-tənt). An equitable claim or right known only by the parties for and against whom it exists, or that has been concealed from one who is interested in the subject matter. — Also termed secret equity.

perfect equity. An equitable title or right that, to be a legal title, lacks only the formal conveyance or other investiture that would make it cognizable at law; esp., the equity of a real-estate purchaser who has paid the full amount due but has not yet received a deed.

secret equity. See latent equity.

6. The right to decide matters in equity; equity jurisdiction <the court decided that the wrong was egregious enough to ignore the statute of limitations and decide the case in equity>. 7. The amount by which the value of or an interest in property exceeds secured claims or liens; the difference between the value of the property and all encumbrances upon it <thanks to the real-estate boom, the mortgaged house still had high equity>. — Also termed cushion. 8. An ownership interest in property, esp. in a business <the founders gave her equity in the business in return for all her help>. See OWNERS' EQUITY. 9. A share in a publicly traded company <he did not want to cash in his equity>.

equity, bill in. See BILL (2).

equity, court of. See COURT.

equity accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

equity capital. See CAPITAL.

equity financing. See FINANCING.

equity insolvency. See INSOLVENCY.

equity jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

equity jurisprudence. See JURISPRUDENCE.

equity kicker. See EQUITY PARTICIPATION.

equity loan. See home equity loan under LOAN.

equity of exoneration (eg-zon-ə-ray-shən).

The right of a person who is secondarily liable on a debt to make the primarily liable party discharge the debt or reimburse any payment that the secondarily liable person has made. ● One example is the right of a surety to call on the principal for reimbursement after the surety has paid the debt. Unlike contribution, which exists when the parties are equally liable, the equity of exoneration exists when parties are successively liable. — Also termed right of exoneration. See EXONERATION.

equity of partners. The right of each partner to have the firm's property applied to the firm's debts.

equity of redemption. Real estate. The right of a mortgagor in default to recover property before a foreclosure sale by paying the principal, interest, and other costs that are due. ● A defaulting mortgagor with an equity of redemption has the right, until the foreclosure sale, to reimburse the mortgagee and cure the default. In many jurisdictions, the mortgagor also has a statutory right to redeem within six months after the foreclosure sale, and the mortgagor becomes entitled to any surplus from the sale proceeds above the amount of the outstanding mortgage. — Also termed right of redemption. See CLOG ON THE EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

equity of subrogation. The right of a person who is secondarily liable on a debt, and who pays the debt, to personally enforce any right that the original creditor could have pursued against the debtor, including the right to foreclose on any security held by the creditor and any right that the creditor may have to contribution from others who are liable for the debt. — Also termed right of subrogation. See SUBROGATION.

equity-of-the-statute rule. In statutory construction, the principle that a statute should be interpreted according to the legislators' purpose and intent, even if this interpretation goes beyond the literal meaning of the text. ● Under this little-used rule, for example, if a statute defines jury-tampering to include a party's "giving a juror food or drink," the giving of cigars to a juror would also fall within that definition. Cf. GOLDEN RULE; MISCHIEF RULE; PLAIN-MEANING RULE.

equity participation. The inclusion of a lender in the equity ownership of a project as a condition of the lender's granting a loan. — Also termed equity kicker.

equity ratio. 1. The percentage relationship between a purchaser's equity value (esp. the amount of a down payment) and the property value. 2. The measure of a shareholder's equity divided by total equity.

equity security. See SECURITY.

equity stock. See STOCK.

equity term. The period during which a court tries only equity cases.

equity to a settlement. A wife's equitable right, arising when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have all or part of that estate settled upon herself and her children. — Also termed wife's equity; wife's settlement.

equivalent, adj. 1. Equal in value, force, amount, effect, or significance. 2. Corresponding in effect or function; nearly equal; virtually identical.

equivalents doctrine. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

equivocal (i-kwiv-ə-kəl), adj. 1. Of doubtful character; questionable. 2. Having more than one meaning or sense; ambiguous.

equivocality (i-kwiv-ə-kal-ə-tee). See RES IPSA LOQUITUR (2).

equivocation (i-kwiv-ə-kay-shən). See latent ambiguity under AMBIGUITY.

equuleus (i-kwoo-lee-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A rack in the shape of a horse, used for torture.

ERA. abbr. EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT.

erase, vb. 1. To rub or scrape out (something written); to obliterate. 2. To obliterate (recorded material). 3. To seal (criminal records) from disclosure. — erasure, n.

Erastian (i-ras-chən or i-ras-tee-ən). Hist. A follower of Thomas Erastus (1524–1583), who thought that offenses against religion and morality should be punished by the civil power and not by the censures of the church. • As a sect, Erastians had great influence in England, particularly among 17th-century common-law lawyers.

erasure of record. See EXPUNGEMENT OF RECORD.

erciscundus (er-sis-kən-dəs), adj. [Latin] Civil law. To be divided. • A suit judicium familiae erciscundae was one to partition an inheritance.

erect, vb. 1. To construct. 2. To establish. • In England, erect is one of the formal words of incorporation in a royal charter, being part of the phrase, “We do incorporate, erect, ordain, name, constitute, and establish.” See ERIGIMUS.

E reorganization. See REORGANIZATION (2).

ergo (ər-goh or air-goh). [Latin] Therefore; thus.

ergolabus (ər-goh-lay-bəs), n. [Latin] Civil law. A person who contracts to perform work by personally furnishing the materials and labor.

Erie-bound, adj. (Of a federal court) required to apply the Erie doctrine.

Erie doctrine (eer-ee). The principle that a federal court exercising diversity jurisdiction over a case that does not involve a federal question must apply the substantive law of the state where the court sits. Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817 (1938).

Erie/Klaxon doctrine. See KLAXON DOCTRINE.

erigimus (i-rij-ə-məs). [Latin] Hist. We erect. • This was one of the words used in a corporation’s royal charter. See ERECT (2).

ERISA (ee- or ə-ris-ə). abbr. EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT.

eristic (e-ris-tik), adj. Of or relating to controversy or disputation. — Also termed eristical.

ermine (ər-min), n. The station of a judge; judgeship. • The term refers to the fur trimmings (made from the coats of white weasels called “ermine”) adorning official robes of English judges.

erosion. The wearing away of something by action of the elements; esp., the gradual eating away of soil by the operation of currents or tides. Cf. ACCRETION (1); DELICTION; AVULSION (2); ALLUVION.

err (ər), vb. To make an error; to be incorrect or mistaken <the court erred in denying the motion for summary judgment>.

errant (er-ənt), adj. 1. Fallible; incorrect; straying from what is proper <an errant judicial holding>. 2. Traveling .

errata sheet. An attachment to a deposition transcript containing the deponent’s corrections upon reading the transcript and the reasons for those corrections. — Also termed errata page.

erratum (i-ray-təm or i-rah-təm), n. [Latin “error”] An error that needs correction. Pl. errata. See CORRIGENDUM.

erroneous (i-roh-nee-əs), adj. Involving error; deviating from the law.

erroneous assessment. See ASSESSMENT.

erroneous judgment. See JUDGMENT.

erroneous tax. See TAX.

erronice (i-roh-nə-see), adv. [Law Latin] Erroneously; through error or mistake.

error, n. 1. A psychological state that does not conform to objective reality; a belief that what is false is true or that what is true is false; MISTAKE.

error in corpore (kor-pə-ree). A mistake involving the identity of a particular object, as when a party buys a horse believing it to be the one that the party had already examined and ridden, when in fact it is a different horse.

error in negotio (ni-goh-shee-oh). A mistake about the type of contract that the parties actually wanted to enter.

error in qualitate (kwah-lə-tay-tee). A mistake affecting the quality of the contractual object.

error in quantitate (kwahn-tə-tay-tee). A mistake affecting the amount of the contractual object.

2. A mistake of law or of fact in a court's judgment, opinion, or order.

clear error. A trial judge's decision or action that appears to a reviewing court to have been unquestionably erroneous. • Even though a clear error occurred, it may not warrant reversal.

clerical error. An error resulting from a minor mistake or inadvertence, esp. in writing or copying something on the record, and not from judicial reasoning or determination. • Among the boundless examples of clerical errors are omitting an appendix from a document; typing an incorrect number; mistranscribing a word; and failing to log a call. A court can correct a clerical error at any time, even after judgment has been entered. — Also termed scrivener's error; vitium clerici. See VITIUM SCRIPTORIS.

cross-error. An error brought by the party responding to a writ of error.

error apparent of record. See plain error.

fatal error. See reversible error.

fundamental error. See plain error.

harmless error. An error that does not affect a party's substantive rights or the case's outcome. • A harmless error is not grounds for reversal. — Also termed technical error; error in vacuo.

invited error. An error that a party cannot complain of on appeal because the party, through conduct, encouraged or prompted the trial court to make the erroneous ruling.

manifest constitutional error. An error by the trial court that has an identifiably negative impact on the trial to such a degree that the constitutional rights of a party are compromised. • A manifest constitutional error can be reviewed by a court of appeals even if the appellant did not object at trial.

manifest error. An error that is plain and indisputable, and that amounts to a complete disregard of the controlling law or the credible evidence in the record.

plain error. An error that is so obvious and prejudicial that an appellate court should address it despite the parties' failure to raise a proper objection. • A plain error is often said to be so obvious and substantial that failure to correct it would infringe a party's due-process rights and damage the integrity of the judicial process. — Also termed fundamental error; error apparent of record.

reversible error. An error that affects a party's substantive rights or the case's outcome, and thus is grounds for reversal if the party properly objected. — Also termed harmful error; prejudicial error; fatal error.

technical error. See harmless error.

3. An appeal .

error, writ of. See WRIT OF ERROR.

error de persona (dee pər-soh-nə). [Latin "error of the person"] A mistake about a person's identity. Cf. ERROR NOMINIS.

error in corpore. See ERROR (1).

error in fact. See mistake of fact under MISTAKE.

error in law. See mistake of law under MISTAKE.

error in negotio. See ERROR (1).

error in qualitate. See ERROR (1).

error in quantitate. See ERROR (1).

error in vacuo (in vak-yoo-oh). [Latin "error in a void"] See harmless error under ERROR.

error nominis (nahm-ə-nis). [Latin "error of name"] A mistake of detail in a person's name. Cf. ERROR DE PERSONA.

error of fact. See mistake of fact under MISTAKE.

error-of-judgment rule. The doctrine that a professional is not liable to a client for advice or an opinion given in good faith and with an honest belief that the advice was in the client's best interests, but that was based on a mistake either in judgment or in analyzing an unsettled area of the professional's business. • For example, an attorney who makes an error in trial tactics involving an unsettled area of the law may, under certain circumstances, defeat a malpractice claim arising from the tactical error. — Also termed judgmental immunity.

error of law. See mistake of law under MISTAKE.

errors, assignment of. See ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

errors-and-omissions insurance. See INSURANCE.

escalator clause. A contractual provision that increases or decreases the contract price according to changing market conditions, such as higher or lower taxes or operating costs. — Also termed escalation clause; fluctuating clause.

escape, n. 1. The act or an instance of breaking free from confinement, restraint, or an obligation. 2. An unlawful departure from legal custody without the use of force. — Also termed actual escape. Cf. PRISON BREACH.

“In the technical sense an ‘escape’ is an unauthorized departure from legal custody; in a loose sense the word is used to indicate either such an unlawful departure or an avoidance of capture. And while the word is regularly used by the layman in the broader sense it usually is limited to the narrower meaning when used in the law, — although this is not always so.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 559 (3d ed. 1982).

constructive escape. A prisoner’s obtaining more liberty than the law allows, while not fully regaining freedom.

3. At common law, a criminal offense committed by a peace officer who allows a prisoner to depart unlawfully from legal custody. — Also termed voluntary escape. — escape, vb.

negligent escape. A prisoner’s departure from legal custody as a result of an officer’s negligence.

“Escapes are either voluntary, or negligent. Voluntary are such as are by the express consent of the keeper, after which he never can retake his prisoner again, (though the plaintiff may retake him at any time) but the sheriff must answer for the debt. Negligent escapes are where the prisoner escapes without his keeper’s knowledge or consent; and then upon fresh pursuit the defendant may be retaken, and the sheriff shall be excused, if he has him again before any action brought against himself for the escape.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 415–16 (1768).

escape clause. A contractual provision that allows a party to avoid performance under specified conditions; specif., an insurance-policy provision — usu. contained in the “other insurance” section of the policy — requiring the insurer to provide coverage only if there is no other coverage available. Cf. EXCESS CLAUSE; PRO RATA CLAUSE.

escapee. A prisoner or other inmate who has escaped from lawful custody.

“The word ‘escapee’ is employed at times by those who are not careful in the use of language. They probably think this word is comparable to ‘arrestee’ or ‘employee.’ But the arrestee did not do the arresting and the employee did not do the employing. The employee does the work but that makes him a worker, not a workee.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 560 (3d ed. 1982).

escape period. Labor law. A time agreed upon in some union contracts during which workers may withdraw from the union near the end of one term covered by the contract and before the start of the next.

escape warrant. See WARRANT (1).

escapium (e-skay-pee-əm), n. [Law Latin] That which comes by chance or accident. ● In medieval Latin, the term often referred to the escape of a prisoner or the straying of cattle.

escheat (es-cheet), n. 1. Hist. The reversion of land ownership back to the lord when the immediate tenant dies without heirs. See WRIT OF ESCHEAT. 2. Reversion of property (esp. real property) to the state upon the death of an owner who has neither a will nor any legal heirs. 3. Property that has so reverted. — escheat, vb.

escheator (es-cheet-ər). Hist. A royal officer appointed to assess the value of property escheating to the Crown. ● Corrupt officers led many to associate the escheator with fraudulent conduct, giving rise to the word cheat as used in the modern sense. — Also termed cheater.

escheccum (es-chek-əm), n. [Latin] Hist. A jury or inquisition.

Escobedo rule (es-kə-bee-doh). Criminal procedure. The principle that a statement by an unindicted, targeted suspect in police custody is inadmissible at trial unless the police warn the suspect of the right to remain silent and provide an opportunity for the suspect to consult with retained or appointed counsel. ● This rule was a precursor to the Miranda rule. Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 84 S.Ct. 1758 (1964). See MIRANDA RULE.

escot (e-skot), n. Hist. English law. A tax paid in boroughs and corporations to support the community.

escribano (es-kree-bah-noh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. An officer — resembling a notary in French law — who has authority to set down in writing, and attest to, transactions and contracts between private persons, as well as judicial acts and proceedings.

escritura (es-kree-toor-ah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. 1. A written instrument. 2. A deed prepared by an escribano or notary of a corporation or council (concejo), or that is sealed with the seal of the king or other authorized person.

escroquerie (es-kroh-kə-ree), n. [French] Fraud; swindling; cheating.

escrow (es-kroh), n. 1. A legal document or property delivered by a promisor to a third party to be held by the third party for a given amount of time or until the occurrence of a condition, at which time the third party is to hand over the document or property to the promisee <the agent received the escrow two weeks before the closing date>. 2. An account held in trust or as security <the earnest money is in escrow>. — Also termed escrow account; impound account; reserve account. See escrow account under ACCOUNT. 3. The holder of such a document, property, or deposit <the attorney performed the function of escrow>. — Also termed escrow agent. 4. The general arrangement under which a legal document or property is delivered to a third person until the occurrence of a condition <creating an escrow>. — escrow, vb.

escrow account. See ACCOUNT.

escrow agent. The third-party depository of an escrow; ESCROW (3). — Also termed escrow holder; escrowee.

escrow agreement. The instructions given to the third-party depository of an escrow.

escrow contract. See CONTRACT.

escrow deposit. See escrow account under ACCOUNT.

escrowee. See ESCROW AGENT.

escrow holder. See ESCROW AGENT.

escrowl (es-krohl), n. Hist. 1. An escrow. 2. A scroll.

escuage (es-kyoo-ij). [French, fr. Latin escuagium] See SCUTAGE.

esketores (es-kə-tor-eez), n. pl. Hist. Robbers; destroyers of others' lands or fortunes.

eskipper (ə-skip-ər), vb. To ship. — Also termed eskippare (es-kə-pair-ee).

eskippeson (ə-skip-[ə]-sən), n. Shippage; passage by sea. — Also termed skippeson.

eslisor (es-li-zər). See ELISOR.

esne (ez-nee), n. Hist. A hiring of servile condition; a hired laborer or a slave.

esnecy (es-ni-see), n. Seniority; the condition or right of the eldest; the privilege of the eldest-born. • The term esp. applied to the privilege of the eldest among coparceners to make a first choice of shares under a voluntary partition. — Also termed aesnecia.

ESOP (ee-sop). abbr. See employee-stock-ownership plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

espera (es-pə-rə), n. A period fixed by law or by a court within which certain acts are to be performed (such as payment of a debt).

espionage (es-pee-ə-nahzh). The practice of using spies to collect information about what another government or company is doing or plans to do.

essoin (e-soyn), n. [fr. Old French essoï(g)ne "excuse"] Hist. 1. An excuse for not appearing in court on an appointed day in obedience to a summons. 2. The offering or presentation of such an excuse. — Also spelled essoign.

"The first return-day of every term, properly speaking, is the first day of that term; and on that day the court used formerly to sit . . . to hear the essoigns, or excuses, of such as did not appear according to the summons of the writ. This day therefore came to be called the essoign-day of the term." 1 George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas liv (3d ed. 1787).

essoin, vb. [fr. Old French essoï(g)nier "to excuse"] Hist. To present an excuse for not appearing in court as ordered.

essoin day. Hist. English law. The first general return day of the term, when the courts sat to receive essoins. • By the Law Terms Act (1830), essoins days were eliminated as a part of the term. St. 11 Geo. 4; 1 Will. 4, ch. 70, § 6.

essoin de malo villae (dee mal-oh vil-ee). Hist. A procedure by which a defendant, who was in court the first day but was then taken ill without pleading, would send two essoiners to state in court that the defendant was detained by sickness in a particular village and thus unable to attend. • This essoins would be accepted unless the plaintiff could show its falsity.

essoiner (e-soyn-ər), n. Hist. A person making an essoins. — Also termed essoinator (e-soyn-ee-ay-tər).

essoins roll. Hist. A roll upon which essoins were entered, together with the day to which they were adjourned.

estandard (ə-stan-dərd), n. [Law French] A standard of weights and measures.

est a scavoïr (ay ah skah-vvahr). [Law French, prob. fr. Latin est sciendum "it is to be known"] It is to be understood or known; to wit. • This expression is common in Sir Thomas de Littleton's 15th-century Treatise on Tenures, written in Law French. See SCIENDUM EST.

estate. 1. The amount, degree, nature, and quality of a person's interest in land or other property. 2. All that a person or entity owns, including both real and personal property. 3. The property that one leaves after death; the collective assets and liabilities of a dead person. 4. A tract of land, esp. one affected by an easement.

absolute estate. A full and complete estate that cannot be defeated.

adjusted gross estate. 1. The total value of a decedent's property after subtracting administration expenses, funeral expenses, creditors' claims, and casualty losses. • The value of the adjusted gross estate is used in computing the federal estate tax. Cf. net estate. 2. See gross estate (1).

ancestral estate. An estate that is acquired by descent or by operation of law with no other consideration than that of blood.

augmented estate. A statutory forced share that is enlarged for the benefit of a surviving spouse to include any transfer made by the decedent during the marriage. Uniform Probate Code § 2-202. See FORCED SHARE.

bankruptcy estate. See BANKRUPTCY ESTATE.

base estate. Hist. An estate held at the will of the lord, as distinguished from a freehold.

concurrent estate. Ownership or possession of property by two or more persons at the same time. • In modern practice, there are three types of concurrent estates: tenancy in common, joint tenancy, and tenancy by the entirety. — Also termed concurrent interest.

"A concurrent estate is simply an estate — whether present or future, defeasible or non-defeasible, in fee simple, in tail, for life, or for years — that is owned by two or more persons at the same time. O transfers 'to A and B and their heirs.' A and B own a present concurrent estate in fee simple absolute." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 53 (2d ed. 1984).

contingent estate. An estate that vests only if a certain event does or does not happen. See estate on condition.

decedent's estate. The real and personal property that a person possesses at the time of death and that descends to the heirs subject to the payment of debts and claims.

defeasible estate. An estate that may come to an end before its maximum duration has run by reason of the operation of a special limitation, a condition subsequent, or an executory limitation. • If an estate is defeasible by operation of a special limitation, it is called a determinable estate.

derivative estate. A particular interest that has been carved out of another, larger estate. Cf. original estate.

determinable estate. An estate that is defeasible by operation of a special limitation.

dominant estate. An estate that benefits from an easement. — Also termed dominant tenement; dominant property; upper estate. Cf. servient estate.

estate ad remanentiam (ad rem-ə-nen-shee-əm). An estate in fee simple.

estate at sufferance. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

estate at will. See tenancy at will under TENANCY.

estate by curtesy. An estate owned by a wife, to which the husband is entitled upon her death. See CURTESY.

estate by elegit. An estate held by a judgment creditor, entitling the creditor to the rents and profits from land owned by the debtor until the debt is paid. See ELEGIT.

estate by purchase. An estate acquired in any manner other than by descent. See PURCHASE.

estate by statute staple. An estate in a defendant's land held by a creditor under the statute staple until the debt was paid. See STATUTE STAPLE.

estate by the entirety. See tenancy by the entirety under TENANCY.

estate for a term. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

estate for life. See life estate.

estate for years. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

estate in partnership. A joint estate that is vested in the members of a partnership when real estate is purchased with partnership funds and for partnership purposes.

estate in possession. An estate in which a present interest passes to the tenant without any contingency; an estate in which the tenant is entitled to receive the rents and other profits arising from the estate.

estate in severalty (sev-ə-rəl-tee). An estate held by a tenant separately, without any other person being joined or connected in interest.

estate in vadio (in vad-ee-oh). An estate in gage or pledge. See MORTGAGE.

estate less than freehold. An estate for years, an estate at will, or an estate at sufferance.

estate of inheritance. An estate that may descend to heirs.

estate on condition. An estate that vests, is modified, or is defeated upon the occurrence or nonoccurrence of some specified event. ● While an estate on limitation can revert without any action by the grantor or the grantor's heirs, an estate on condition requires the entry of the grantor or the grantor's heirs to end the estate whenever the condition occurs. — Also termed contingent estate; estate on conditional limitation.

estate on conditional limitation. See contingent estate.

estate on condition expressed. A contingent estate in which the condition upon which the estate will fail is stated explicitly in the granting instrument.

estate on condition implied. A contingent estate having some condition that is so inseparable from the estate's essence that it need not be expressed in words.

estate on limitation. An estate that automatically reverts back to the grantor according to a provision, usu. regarding the passage of a determined time period, designated by words like "during," "while," and "as long as." See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE.

estate tail. See FEE TAIL.

estate tail quasi. An estate granted by a life tenant, who, despite using language of conveyance that is otherwise sufficient to create an estate tail, is unable to grant in perpetuity.

freehold estate. See FREEHOLD.

gross estate. 1. The total value of a decedent's property without any deductions. 2. Loosely, adjusted gross estate.

heirless estate. The property of a person who dies intestate and without heirs. See ES-CHEAT.

joint estate. Any of the following five types of estates: (1) a joint tenancy, (2) a tenancy in common, (3) an estate in coparcenary, (4) a tenancy by the entirety, or (5) an estate in partnership.

landed estate. An interest in real property, esp. suburban or rural land, as distinguished from real estate situated in a city. — Also termed landed property.

leasehold estate. See LEASEHOLD.

legal estate. An interest enforced in law rather than in equity.

life estate. An estate held only for the duration of a specified person's life, usu. the possessor's. ● Most life estates — created, for example, by a grant "to Jane for life" — are beneficial interests under trusts, the corpus being personal property, not real property. — Also termed estate for life; legal life estate; life tenancy.

life estate pur autre vie (pər oh-trə vee). A life estate for which the measuring life — the life whose duration determines the duration of the estate — is someone other than the life tenant. — Also spelled life estate per autre vie.

lower estate. See servient estate.

minor's estate. A minor's property that must be administered by a court-appointed fiduciary.

net estate. The portion of an estate left after payment of state and federal estate taxes. Cf. adjusted gross estate.

next eventual estate. An estate taking effect upon an event that terminates the accumulation of undisposed rents and profits; an estate taking effect when the existing estate terminates.

nonancestral estate. An estate from any source other than the owner's ancestors.

nonfreehold estate. Any estate in real property without seisin, such as an estate for years, from period to period, at will, or at sufferance; any estate except the fee simple, fee tail, or life estate.

original estate. An estate that is the first of one or more derivative estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion.

particular estate. An estate of limited duration, such as a fee tail, a life estate, or an estate for years.

periodic estate. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

possessory estate. An estate giving the holder the right to possess the property, with or without an ownership interest in the property.

present estate. An estate in immediate possession; one vested at the present time, as distinguished from a future estate.

qualified estate. Any estate that is not absolute and unconditional; a limited or conditional estate.

real estate. See real property under PROPERTY.

residuary estate. The part of a decedent's estate remaining after all debts, expenses, taxes, and specific bequests and devises have been satisfied. — Also termed residual estate; residue; residuary; residuum.

separate estate. The individual property of one of two persons who stand in a marital or business relationship. See SEPARATE PROPERTY.

servient estate (sər-vee-ənt). An estate burdened by an easement. — Also termed servient tenement; servient property; lower estate. Cf. dominant estate.

settled estate. An estate created or limited under a settlement; an estate in which the powers of alienation, devising, and transmission according to the ordinary rules of descent are restrained by the settlement's terms.

stipendiary estate (stI-pen-dee-er-ee). Hist. An estate granted in return for services, usu. of a military kind.

taxable estate. A decedent's gross estate reduced by allowable deductions (such as administration costs and ESOP deductions). IRC (26 USCA) § 2051. • The taxable estate is the amount that is subject to the federal unified transfer tax at death.

upper estate. See dominant estate.

vested estate. An estate with a present right of enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment.

estate ad remanentiam. See ESTATE.

estate at sufferance. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

estate by curtesy. See ESTATE.

estate by elegit. See ESTATE.

estate by purchase. See ESTATE.

estate by statute staple. See ESTATE.

estate by the entirety. See tenancy by the entirety under TENANCY.

estate duty. A duty imposed on the principal value of all property that passed on death. • In Britain, this duty was replaced by inheritance tax.

estate for a term. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

estate for life. See life estate under ESTATE.

estate for years. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

estate freeze. An estate-planning maneuver whereby an owner of a closely held business exchanges common stock for dividend-paying preferred stock and gives the common stock to his or her children, thus guaranteeing a pension and avoiding estate tax.

estate from period to period. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

estate in common. See tenancy in common under TENANCY.

estate in expectancy. See FUTURE INTEREST.

estate in lands. 1. Property that one has in lands, tenements, or hereditaments. 2. The conditions or circumstances under which a tenant stands in relation to the leased property.

estate in partnership. See ESTATE.

estate in possession. See ESTATE.

estate in reversion. See REVERSION.

estate in severalty. See ESTATE.

estate in vadio. See ESTATE.

estate less than freehold. See ESTATE.

estate of inheritance. See ESTATE.

estate on condition. See ESTATE.

estate on conditional limitation. See estate on condition under ESTATE.

estate on condition expressed. See ESTATE.

estate on condition implied. See ESTATE.

estate on limitation. See ESTATE.

estate planning. 1. The preparation for the distribution and management of a person's estate at death through the use of wills, trusts, insurance policies, and other arrangements, esp. to reduce estate-tax liability. 2. A branch of law that involves the arrangement of a person's estate, taking into account the laws of wills, taxes, insurance, property, and trusts.

estates of the realm. 1. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. — Also termed the three estates. 2. In feudal Europe, the clergy, nobles, and commons. • Because the lords spiritual had no separate assembly or negative in their political capacity, some authorities reduce the estates in Great Britain to two, the lords and commons. In England (until about the 14th century), the three estates of the realm were the clergy, barons, and knights. In legal practice, the lords spiritual and lords temporal are usu. collectively designated simply as lords.

estate tail quasi. See ESTATE.

estate tax. See TAX.

estate trust. See TRUST.

ester in judgment (es-tər). [Law French] To appear before a tribunal, as either plaintiff or defendant.

estimated useful life. See USEFUL LIFE.

estop (e-stop), vb. To bar or prevent by estoppel.

estoppage (e-stop-ij), n. The state or condition of being estopped.

estoppel (e-stop-əl), n. 1. A bar that prevents one from asserting a claim or right that contradicts what one has said or done before or what has been legally established as true. 2. A bar that prevents the relitigation of issues. 3. An affirmative defense alleging good-faith reliance on a misleading representation and an injury or detrimental change in position resulting from that reliance. Cf. WAIVER (1).

administrative collateral estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

assignor estoppel. Patents. Estoppel barring someone who has assigned the rights to a patent from later attacking the patent's validity. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Formica equitable estoppel. 1. A defensive doctrine preventing one party from taking unfair advantage of another when, through false language or conduct, the person to be estopped has induced another person to act in a certain way, with the result that the other person has been injured in some way. • This doctrine is founded on principles of fraud. The five essential elements for this type of estoppel are (1) that there was a false representation or concealment of material facts, (2) that the representation must have been known to be false by the party making it, or the party must have been negligent in not knowing its falsity, (3) that it was believed to be true by the person to whom it was made, (4) that the party making the representation must have intended that it be acted on, or the person acting on it must have been justified in assuming this intent, and (5) that the party asserting estoppel acted on the representation in a way that will result in substantial prejudice unless the claim of estoppel succeeds. — Also termed estoppel by conduct; estoppel in pais. 2. See promissory estoppel.

estoppel by conduct. See equitable estoppel.

estoppel by contract. A bar against a person' denying a term, fact, or performance arising from a contract that the person has entered into.

estoppel by deed. Estoppel that prevents a party to a deed from denying anything recited in that deed if the party has induced another to accept or act under the deed; esp., estoppel that prevents a grantor of a warranty deed, who does not have title at the time of the conveyance but who later acquires title, from denying that he or she had title at the time of the transfer. See AFTER-ACQUIRED-TITLE DOCTRINE.

estoppel by election. The intentional exercise of a choice between inconsistent alternatives that bars the person making the choice from the benefits of the one not selected.

estoppel by inaction. See estoppel by silence.

estoppel by judgment. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by laches. An equitable doctrine by which some courts deny relief to a claimant who has unreasonably delayed or been negligent in asserting a claim.

estoppel by negligence. An estoppel arising when a negligent person induces someone to believe certain facts, and then the other person reasonably and detrimentally relies on that belief.

estoppel by representation. An estoppel that arises when one makes a statement or admission that induces another person to believe something and that results in that person's reasonable and detrimental reliance on the belief; esp., equitable estoppel.

estoppel by silence. Estoppel that arises when a party is under a duty to speak but fails to do so. — Also termed estoppel by standing by; estoppel by inaction.

estoppel by verdict. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estoppel in pais. See equitable estoppel.

file-wrapper estoppel. See PROSECUTION-HISTORY ESTOPPEL.

judicial estoppel. Estoppel that prevents a party from contradicting previous declarations made during the same or a later proceeding if the change in position would adversely affect the proceeding or constitute a fraud on the court. — Also termed doctrine of preclusion of inconsistent positions; doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgment.

legal estoppel. Estoppel recognized in law, such as an estoppel resulting from a recital or other statement in a deed or official record, and precluding any denial or assertion concerning a fact, as distinguished from equitable estoppel or estoppel in pais.

marking estoppel. Patents. Estoppel that prevents a party from asserting that a product is not covered by a patent if that party has marked the product with a patent number. • This type of estoppel has been called into question in recent years, and has been sharply limited by some courts.

promissory estoppel. The principle that a promise made without consideration may nonetheless be enforced to prevent injustice if the promisor should have reasonably expected the promisee to rely on the promise and if the promisee did actually rely on the promise to his or her detriment. — Also termed (inaccurately) equitable estoppel.

"The doctrine of promissory estoppel is equitable in origin and nature and arose to provide a remedy through the enforcement of a gratuitous promise. Promissory is distinct from equitable estoppel in that the representation at issue is promissory rather than a representation of fact. Promissory estoppel and estoppel by conduct are two entirely distinct theories. The latter does not require a promise.' ” Ann Taylor Schwing, California Affirmative Defenses § 34:16, at 35 (2d ed. 1996) (quoting Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Transpacific Transp. Co., 88 Cal. App. 3d 823, 829 (Cal. Ct. App. 1979)).

prosecution-history estoppel. See PROSECUTION-HISTORY ESTOPPEL.

quasi-estoppel. An equitable doctrine preventing one from repudiating an act or assertion if it would harm another who reasonably relied on the act or assertion.

estoppel by conduct. See equitable estoppel (1) under ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by contract. See ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by deed. See ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by election. See ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by inaction. See estoppel by silence under ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by judgment. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by laches. See ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by negligence. See ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by record. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by representation. See ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by silence. See ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by standing by. See estoppel by silence under ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by verdict. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estoppel certificate. 1. A signed statement by a party (such as a tenant or a mortgagee) certifying for another's benefit that certain facts are correct, as that a lease exists, that there are no defaults, and that rent is paid to a certain date. • A party's delivery of this statement estops that party from later claiming a different state of facts. 2. See WAIVER OF CLAIMS AND DEFENSES.

estoppel in pais (in pays or pay). See equitable estoppel (1) under ESTOPPEL.

estoppel per rem judicatam (pər rem joo-di-kay-təm). See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estover (e-stoh-vər). (usu. pl.) 1. Wood that a tenant is allowed to take for fuel, the manufacture or repair of agricultural instruments, and the erection and maintenance of fences and hedges; necessary supplies. See common of estovers under COMMON. 2. The tenant's right to obtain that wood. 3. ALIMONY.

estoveriis habendis (es-tə-veer-ee-is hæ-ben-dis). [Latin] Hist. A writ for a wife who was judicially separated to recover her alimony or estovers.

estrays (e-stray), n. 1. A valuable tame animal found wandering and ownerless; an animal that has escaped from its owner and wanders about. • At common law, an estray belonged to the Crown or to the lord of the manor, but today the general rule is that it passes to the state in trust for the true owner, who may regain it by proving ownership. An animal cannot be an estray when on the range where it was raised and where its owner permits it to run, and esp. when the owner is known to the party who takes the animal. 2. FLOTSAM.

estreat (e-street), n. A copy or duplicate of some original writing or record, esp. of a fine or amercement imposed by a court, extracted from the record, and certified to one who is authorized and required to collect it.

estreat, vb. To take out a forfeited recognizance from the recordings of a court and return it to the court to be prosecuted.

estrep (e-streep), vb. 1. To strip; to despoil; to commit waste upon an estate, as by cutting down trees or removing buildings. 2. To injure the value of a reversionary interest by stripping or spoiling the estate. See WASTE.

estrepement (e-streep-mənt), n. A species of aggravated waste, by stripping or devastating land to the injury of the reversioner, esp. pending a suit for possession. See DE ESTREPAMENTO.

et, conj. [Latin] And. • This conjunction was the introductory word of several Latin and Law French phrases that were once common.

et adjournatur (et əj-ər-nay-tər). [Latin] Hist. And it is adjourned. • This phrase was used in the old reports, when argument of a case was adjourned to another day, or where a second argument was had.

et al. (et al or ahl). abbr. 1. [Latin et alii or et alia] And other persons <the office of Thomas Webb et al.>. 2. [Latin et alibi] And elsewhere.

et alii e contra (et ay-lee-I ee kon-trə). [Latin "and others on the other side"] Hist. A phrase often used in the Year Books, describing a joinder in issue.

et alius (et ay-lee-əs). [Latin] And another.

et allocatur (et al-ə-kay-tər). [Latin] And it is allowed.

etc. abbr. ET CETERA.

et cetera (et set-ər-ə). [Latin "and others"] And other things. • The term usu. indicates additional, unspecified items in a series. — Abbr. etc.

et de ceo se mettent en le pays (ay də say-oh sə me-tawn on læ pay). [Law French] Hist. And of this they put themselves upon the country. See CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY; GOING TO THE COUNTRY.

et de hoc ponit se super patriam (et dee hok poh-nit see s[y]oo-pər pay-tree-əm). [Latin] Hist. And of this he puts himself upon the country. • This was the formal conclusion of a common-law plea in bar by way of traverse.

et ei legitur in haec verba (et ee-I lee-jə-tər in heek vər-bə). [Latin] Hist. And it is read to him in these words. • This phrase was formerly used in entering the prayer of oyer on the record.

eternal law. See NATURAL LAW.

et habeas ibi tunc hoc breve (et hay-bee-əs ib-I təŋk hok bree-vee). [Latin] Hist. And that you have then and there this writ. • These were the formal words directing the return of a writ. The literal translation was retained in the later form of a considerable number of writs.

et habuit (et hab-yoo-it). [Latin "and he had [it]"] Hist. A common phrase in the Year Books, indicating that a party's application or demand was granted.

ethical, adj. 1. Of or relating to moral obligations that one person owes another; esp., in law, of or relating to legal ethics <the ethical rules regarding confidences>. See LEGAL ETHICS. 2. In conformity with moral norms or standards of professional conduct <the judge's recusal was a perfectly ethical act>.

ethical absolutism. See MORAL ABSOLUTISM.

ethical consideration. (often cap.) An aspirational goal or principle intended to guide a lawyer's professional conduct. • A lawyer's violation of these considerations (which are contained in the Model Code of Professional Responsibility) does not necessarily subject the lawyer to discipline. — Abbr. EC. Cf. DISCIPLINARY RULE.

ethical drug. See DRUG.

ethical jurisprudence. See JURISPRUDENCE.

ethical relativism. See MORAL RELATIVISM.

ethical wall. A screening mechanism that protects client confidences by preventing one or more lawyers within an organization from participating in any matter involving that client. • This mechanism is designed to allow a lawyer to move to a new law firm without the fear of vicariously disqualifying that firm from representing certain clients. Creating an ethical wall generally entails (1) prohibiting certain lawyers and paralegals from having any connection with the matter; (2) banning discussions with or the transfer of documents to those individuals; (3) restricting access to files; and (4) educating all members of the firm, corporation, or entity about the separation of the lawyers and paralegals (both organizationally and physically) from the pending matter. — Also termed Chinese wall; screening mechanism.

ethics. See LEGAL ETHICS.

et hoc paratus est verificare (et hok pə-ray-təs est ver-ə-fi-kair-ee). [Latin "and this he is prepared to verify"] Archaic. A phrase that concluded a plea in confession and avoidance, or any pleading that contained new affirmative matter. • A pleading containing this phrase was technically said to "conclude with a verification," as opposed to a simple denial.

et hoc petit quod inquiratur per patriam (et hok pet-it kwod in-kwə-ray-tər pər pay-tree-əm). [Latin "and this he prays may be inquired of by the country"] Archaic. The conclusion of a plaintiff's pleading that tendered an issue to the country. See CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY.

et inde petit judicium (et in-dee pet-it joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin “and thereupon he prays judgment”] Archaic. A clause found at the end of a pleading, requesting judgment in that party’s favor.

et modo ad hunc diem (et moh-doh ad hængk dī-əm). [Latin “and now at this day”] Archaic. The formal beginning of an entry of appearance or of a continuance.

et non (et non). [Latin “and not”] Archaic. A phrase formerly used in pleading to introduce the negative averments of a special traverse. See ABSQUE HOC.

et seq. (et sek). abbr. [Latin et sequentes] And those (pages or sections) that follow <11 USCA §§ 101 et seq.>.

et sic (et sik). [Latin “and so”] Archaic. The introductory words of a special conclusion to a plea in bar, intending to render the plea positive and not argumentative.

et sic ad judicium (et sik ad joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin] Archaic. And so to judgment.

et sic ad patriam (et sik ad pay-tree-əm). [Latin] Hist. And so to the country. • This phrase was used in the Year Books to record an issue to the country.

et sic fecit (et sik fee-sit). [Latin] Archaic. And he did so.

et sic pendet (et sik pen-dit). [Latin] Hist. And so it hangs. • This phrase was used in the old reports to signify that a point was left undetermined.

et sic ulterius (et sik əl-teer-ee-əs). [Latin] Archaic. And so on; and so further; and so forth.

et uxor (et ək-sor). [Latin] Archaic. And wife. • This phrase was formerly common in case names and legal documents (esp. abstracts of title) involving a husband and wife jointly. It usu. appears in its abbreviated form, et ux. <conveyed the land to Donald Baird et ux.>.

et vir (et veer). [Latin] Archaic. And husband.

EU. abbr. EUROPEAN UNION.

Euclidean zoning. See ZONING.

eundo et redeundo (ee-ən-doh et red-ee-ən-doh). [Latin] Hist. Going and returning. • This phrase was once used to describe vessels in transit.

eundo, morando, et redeundo (ee-ən-doh, mə-ran-doh, et red-ee-ən-doh). [Latin] Hist. Going, remaining, and returning. • This phrase was once used to describe a person (for example, a witness or legislator) who is privileged from arrest while traveling to the place where assigned duties are to be performed, while remaining there, and while returning.

eunomy (yoo-nə-mee), n. A system of good laws that lead to civil order and justice. — Also termed eunomia. — eunomic, adj.

euro (yuur-oh). The official currency of 11 countries in the European Union. • On January 1, 1999, the euro became the single currency of the 11 participating countries — Austria, Belgium, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, and Spain. Euro notes and coins will be issued on January 1, 2002.

Eurobank. A bank that participates in the Eurocurrency market by accepting deposits and providing loans in foreign currencies.

Eurobond. An international bond issued in a country other than the one in whose currency the bond is denominated.

Eurodollar. A U.S. dollar deposited in a foreign bank and used in European money markets.

European Community. See EUROPEAN UNION.

European Court of Human Rights. The judicial body — established in 1950 and sitting at Strasbourg — of the Council of Europe. • The Convention on Human Rights of 1950, in force as of 1953, does not necessarily form part of the domestic law of member nations, nor is a member nation obliged to accept this court’s jurisdiction.

European Currency Unit. A monetary unit whose value is calculated as a weighted average of currencies from ten member-nations of the European Union. • The European Currency Unit was created in 1979 to promote currency stability. The unit was a hypothetical currency. — Abbr. ECU; ecu.

European Economic Community. See EUROPEAN UNION.

European law. 1. The law of the European Union. 2. More broadly, the law of the European Union, together with the conventions of the Council of Europe and the European Convention on Human Rights. 3. More broadly still, all the law current in Europe, including the law of European organizations such as the Western European Union, the Benelux Economic Union, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and all the bilateral and multilateral conventions in effect, as well as European customary law.

European Union. An association of European nations, with the purpose of achieving full economic unity (and eventual political union) by agreeing to eliminate barriers to the free movement of capital, goods, and labor among the member-nations. • The European Union was formed as the European Economic Community (EEC) by the Treaty of Rome in 1957, and later renamed the European Community (EC). The European Community became the European Union when the Maastricht Treaty on European Union took effect in November 1993. As of 1999, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, and Sweden had full membership privileges. — Abbr. EU.

euthanasia (yoo-thə-nay-zhə), n. The act or practice of killing or bringing about the death of a person who suffers from an incurable disease or condition, esp. a painful one, for reasons of mercy. • Euthanasia is sometimes regarded by the law as second-degree murder, manslaughter, or criminally negligent homicide. — Also termed mercy killing. — euthanasic (yoo-thə-nay-zik), adj. See LIVING WILL; ADVANCE DIRECTIVE. Cf. assisted suicide under SUICIDE.

active euthanasia. Euthanasia performed by a facilitator (usu. a physician) who not only provides the means of death but also carries out the final death-causing act.

involuntary euthanasia. Euthanasia of a competent, nonconsenting person.

nonvoluntary euthanasia. Euthanasia of an incompetent, and therefore nonconsenting, person.

passive euthanasia. The act of allowing a terminally ill person to die by either withholding or withdrawing life-sustaining support such as a respirator or feeding tube.

voluntary euthanasia. Euthanasia performed with the terminally ill person's consent.

euthanize (yoo-thə-nīz), vb. To put to death by euthanasia. • This term is used chiefly in reference to animals. — Also termed euthanatize.

evaluative fact. See FACT.

Evarts Act (ev-arts). An 1891 federal statute that established the circuit courts of appeals (now U.S. courts of appeals) and fixed the contemporary method of federal appellate review.

evasion. See TAX EVASION.

evasive, adj. Tending or seeking to evade; elusive; shifting. • If a pleading requiring a response is evasive, the responding party may move for a more definite statement. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e). evasive answer. A response that neither directly admits nor denies a question. • In pleading, this is considered a failure to answer. Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(3).

even date. The same date. • This jargonistic phrase is sometimes used in one instrument to refer to another instrument with the same date, esp. when both relate to the same transaction (as a deed and a mortgage).

evenings. Hist. The delivery at evening or night to a customary tenant of a gratuity in the form of a portion of the grass, corn, or other crop that the tenant cuts, mows, or reaps for the lord.

even lot. See round lot under LOT (3).

evergreen contract. See CONTRACT.

evict, vb. 1. To expel (a person, esp. a tenant), from real property, usu. by legal process. 2. Archaic. To recover (property or title) from a person by legal process. — evictor, n.

eviction. The act or process of legally disposing a person of land or rental property. See FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER. Cf. EJECTMENT.

actual eviction. A physical expulsion of a person from land or rental property.

constructive eviction. 1. A landlord's act of making premises unfit for occupancy, often with the result that the tenant is compelled to leave. 2. The inability of a land purchaser to obtain possession because of paramount outstanding title. • Such an eviction usu. constitutes a breach of the covenants of warranty and quiet enjoyment.

partial eviction. An eviction, either constructive or actual, from a portion of a tenant's premises.

retaliatory eviction. An eviction — nearly always illegal — commenced in response to a tenant's complaints or involvement in activities with which the landlord does not agree.

summary eviction. An eviction accomplished through a simplified legal procedure, without the formalities of a full trial.

total eviction. An eviction that wholly deprives the tenant of any right in the premises.

evidence, n. 1. Something (including testimony, documents and tangible objects) that tends to prove or disprove the existence of an alleged fact <the bloody glove is the key piece of evidence for the prosecution>. 2. See fact in evidence under FACT. 3. The collective mass of things, esp. testimony and exhibits, presented before a tribunal in a given dispute <the evidence will show that the defendant breached the contract>. 4. The body of law regulating the burden of proof, admissibility, relevance, and the weight and sufficiency of what should be admitted into the record of a legal proceeding <under the rules of evidence, the witness's statement is inadmissible hearsay that is not subject to any exception>. — evidence, vb.

"Evidence is any matter of fact which is furnished to a legal tribunal, otherwise than by reasoning or a reference to what is noticed without proof, as the basis of inference in ascertaining some other matter of fact." James B. Thayer, Presumptions and the Law of Evidence, 3 Harv. L. Rev. 141, 142 (1889).

"Evidence, broadly defined, is the means from which an inference may logically be drawn as to the existence of a fact; that which makes evident or plain. Evidence is the demonstration of a fact; it signifies that which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or on the other. In legal acceptance, the term 'evidence' includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. 'Evidence' has also been defined to mean any species of proof legally presented at the trial of an issue, by the act of the parties and through the medium of witnesses, records, documents, concrete objects, and the like." 31A C.J.S. Evidence § 3, at 67-68 (1996).

admissible evidence. Evidence that is relevant and is of such a character (e.g., not unfairly prejudicial or based on hearsay) that the court should receive it. — Also termed competent evidence; proper evidence.

autoptic evidence. See demonstrative evidence.

best evidence. Evidence of the highest quality available, as measured by the nature of the case rather than the thing being offered as evidence. — Also termed primary evidence; original evidence. See BEST-EVIDENCE RULE. Cf. secondary evidence.

"In some circumstances, 'best evidence' may mean that evidence which is more specific and definite as opposed to that which is merely general and indefinite or descriptive. However, 'best evidence' or 'primary evidence' is variously defined as that particular means of proof which is indicated by the nature of the fact under investigation as the most natural and satisfactory, or as that kind of proof which under any possible circumstances affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question; or as evidence which carries on its face no indication that better remains behind." 32A C.J.S. Evidence § 1054, at 417 (1996).

character evidence. Evidence regarding someone's personality traits; evidence of a person's moral standing in a community, based on reputation or opinion. Fed. R. Evid. 404, 405, 608.

circumstantial evidence. 1. Evidence based on inference and not on personal knowledge or observation. — Also termed indirect evidence; oblique evidence. Cf. direct evidence (1). 2. All evidence that is not given by testimony.

"Indirect evidence (called by the civilians, oblique, and more commonly known as circumstantial evidence) is that which is applied to the principal fact, indirectly, or through the medium of other facts, by establishing certain circumstances or minor facts, already described as evidentiary, from which the principal fact is extracted and gathered by a process of special inference . . ." Alexander M. Burrill, A Treatise on the Nature, Principles and Rules of Circumstantial Evidence 4 (1868).

"Some circumstantial evidence is very strong, as when you find a trout in the milk." Henry David Thoreau, Journal, 11 Nov. 1850, in 2 Journal of Henry D. Thoreau 94 (Bradford Torrey & Francis H. Allen eds., 1962).

"Evidence of some collateral fact, from which the existence or non-existence of some fact in question may be inferred as a probable consequence, is termed circumstantial evidence." William P. Richardson, The Law of Evidence § 111, at 68 (3d ed. 1928).

"Testimonial evidence readily defines itself by its name; it is any assertion by a human being, offered to evidence the truth of the matter asserted. Circumstantial evidence is any and all other evidence. Scientifically the term 'circumstantial' is indefensible, for it does not correlate with 'testimonial'; a more correct equivalent would be 'nontestimonial.' But no one has yet invented an acceptable substitute for 'circumstantial.'" John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 38 (1935).

clear and convincing evidence. Evidence indicating that the thing to be proved is highly probable or reasonably certain. • This is a greater burden than preponderance of the evidence, the standard applied in most civil trials, but less than evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, the norm for criminal trials. — Also termed clear and convincing proof. Cf. PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE.

communicative evidence. See testimonial evidence.

competent evidence. 1. See admissible evidence. 2. See relevant evidence.

conclusive evidence. 1. Evidence so strong as to overbear any other evidence to the contrary. — Also termed conclusive proof. 2. Evidence that, though not irrefutable, so preponderates as to oblige a fact-finder to come to a certain conclusion.

concomitant evidence. Evidence that, at the time of the act, the alleged doer of the act was present and actually did it.

conflicting evidence. Irreconcilable evidence that comes from different sources.

corroborating evidence. Evidence that differs from but strengthens or confirms other evidence (esp. that which needs support). — Also termed corroborative evidence. Cf. cumulative evidence.

credible evidence. Evidence that is worthy of belief; trustworthy evidence.

critical evidence. Evidence strong enough that its presence could tilt a juror's mind. • Under the Due Process Clause, an indigent criminal defendant is usu. entitled to an expert opinion of the merits of critical evidence.

cumulative evidence. Additional evidence of the same character as existing evidence and that supports a fact established by the existing evidence (esp. that which does not need further support). Cf. corroborating evidence.

demeanor evidence. The behavior of a witness on the witness stand, to be considered by the fact-finder on the issue of credibility.

demonstrative evidence (di-mon-strə-tiv). Physical evidence that one can see and inspect (such as a model or photograph) and that, while of probative value and usu. offered to clarify testimony, does not play a direct part in the incident in question. — Also termed illustrative evidence; real evidence; tangible evidence; autoptic evidence; autoptic proferance. See nonverbal testimony under TESTIMONY. Cf. testimonial evidence.

"There remains a source of proof, distinct from either circumstantial or testimonial evidence, viz., what the tribunal sees or hears by its own senses. Whether this should be termed 'evidence' or not is a question of words, open to difference of view. But it is universally conceded to be an available source of proof. Bentham's term for it, 'real evidence,' came into wide vogue, but is ambiguous. The term 'autoptic proferance' (etymologically meaning 'showing to the tribunal's own vision') is preferable." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 39 (1935).

derivative evidence. Evidence that is discovered as a result of illegally obtained evidence and is therefore inadmissible because of the primary taint. See EXCLUSIONARY RULE; FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE.

direct evidence. 1. Evidence that is based on personal knowledge or observation and that, if true, proves a fact without inference or presumption. — Also termed positive evidence. Cf. circumstantial evidence; negative evidence. 2. See original evidence (1).

"A little reflection shows that no disputed case will ordinarily be proved solely by circumstantial or solely by testimonial evidence. Ordinarily there is evidence of both kinds. The matter has been obscured by the use of the term 'direct evidence,' — a term sometimes used to mean testimonial evidence in general, but sometimes also limited to apply only to testimony directly asserting the fact-in-issue. . . . The term 'direct' evidence has no utility." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 40 (1935).

documentary evidence. Evidence supplied by a writing or other document, which must be authenticated before the evidence is admissible.

evidence aliunde. See extrinsic evidence.

evidence-in-chief. Evidence used by a party in making its case-in-chief.

exclusive evidence. The only facts that have any probative force at all on a particular matter in issue.

"[T]here is an important class of rules declaring certain facts to be exclusive evidence, none other being admissible. The execution of a document which requires attestation can be proved in no other way than by the testimony of an attesting witness, unless owing to the death or some other circumstance his testimony is unavailable. A written contract can generally be proved in no other way than by the production of the writing itself, whenever its production is possible." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 485 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

exculpatory evidence (ik-skəl-pə-tor-ee). Evidence tending to establish a criminal defendant's innocence. • The prosecution has a duty to disclose exculpatory evidence in its possession or control when the evidence may be material to the outcome of the case.

expert evidence. Evidence about a scientific, technical, or professional issue given by a person qualified to testify because of familiar-

extrajudicial evidence. Evidence that does not come directly under judicial cognizance but nevertheless constitutes an intermediate link between judicial evidence and the fact requiring proof. • It includes all facts that are known to the tribunal only by way of inference from some form of judicial evidence. See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

extrinsic evidence. 1. Evidence relating to a contract but not appearing on the face of the contract because it comes from other sources, such as statements between the parties or the circumstances surrounding the agreement. • Extrinsic evidence is usu. not admissible to contradict or add to the terms of an unambiguous document. — Also termed extraneous evidence; parol evidence; evidence aliunde. 2. Evidence that is not legitimately before the court. Cf. intrinsic evidence.

fabricated evidence. False or deceitful evidence that is unlawfully created, usu. after the relevant event, in an attempt to avoid liability or conviction. — Also termed fabricated fact.

forensic evidence. Evidence used in court; esp., evidence arrived at by scientific means, such as ballistic or medical evidence.

habit evidence. Evidence of one's regular response to a repeated specific situation. Fed. R. Evid. 406.

hearsay evidence. See HEARSAY.

illegally obtained evidence. Evidence obtained by violating a statute or a person's Fourth Amendment guarantee against unreasonable searches or Fifth Amendment right to remain silent.

illustrative evidence. See demonstrative evidence.

immaterial evidence. 1. Evidence lacking in probative value. 2. Evidence offered to prove a matter that is not in issue.

impeachment evidence. Evidence used to undermine a witness's credibility. Fed. R. Evid. 607–610.

incompetent evidence. Evidence that is for any reason inadmissible.

incriminating evidence. Evidence tending to establish guilt or from which a fact-trier can infer guilt.

inculpatory evidence (in-kəl-pə-tor-ee). Evidence showing or tending to show one's involvement in a crime.

indirect evidence. See circumstantial evidence.

indispensable evidence. Evidence without which a particular fact cannot be proved.

insufficient evidence. Evidence that is inadequate to prove something, so that no presumption — even a conditional one — is raised.

intrinsic evidence. 1. Evidence brought out by the examination of the witness testifying. 2. Evidence existing within a writing. Cf. extrinsic evidence.

judicial evidence. Evidence produced in court, consisting of all facts brought to the attention of or admitted into evidence before the tribunal.

legal evidence. All admissible evidence, both oral and documentary, of such a character that it reasonably and substantially proves the point rather than merely raising suspicion or conjecture.

material evidence. Evidence having some logical connection with the consequential facts or the issues. Cf. relevant evidence.

mathematical evidence. Loosely, evidence that establishes its conclusions with absolute certainty.

mediate evidence. See secondary evidence.

medical evidence. Evidence furnished by a doctor, nurse, or other qualified medical person testifying in a professional capacity as an expert, or by a standard treatise on medicine or surgery.

moral evidence. Loosely, evidence that depends on a belief, rather than complete and absolute proof. • Generally, such evidence is testimonial.

multiple evidence. Evidence with probative value on more than one issue but usu. admitted into evidence for one specific purpose.

negative evidence. Evidence suggesting that an alleged fact does not exist, such as a witness's testifying that he or she did not see an event occur. • Negative evidence is generally regarded to be weaker than positive evidence, because a positive assertion that a witness saw an event is a stronger statement than an assertion that a witness did not see it. But a negative assertion will sometimes be considered positive evidence, depending on the witness's opportunity to see the event. For instance, testimony that the witness watched the entire game and saw no riot in the stands is stronger than testimony stating only that the witness did not see a riot. — newly discovered evidence. Evidence existing at the time of a motion or trial but then unknown to a party, who, upon later discovering it, may assert it as grounds for reconsideration or a new trial.

no evidence. See NO EVIDENCE.

oblique evidence. See circumstantial evidence.

opinion evidence. A witness's belief, thought, or inference about a disputed fact. Fed. R. Evid. 701–705. See OPINION (3); OPINION RULE.

“In a sense all testimony to matter of fact is opinion evidence; i.e. it is a conclusion formed from phenomena and mental impressions.” James B. Thayer, A Preliminary Treatise on Evidence at the Common Law 524 (1898).

original evidence. 1. A witness's statement that he or she perceived a fact in issue by one of the five senses, or that the witness was in a particular physical or mental state. — Also termed direct evidence. Cf. HEARSAY. 2. See best evidence.

parol evidence (pə-rohl or par-əl). 1. Evidence given orally. 2. See extrinsic evidence (1). See PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE.

partial evidence. Evidence that establishes one of a series of facts.

personal evidence. See TESTIMONY.

positive evidence. See direct evidence (1). preappointed evidence. Evidence prescribed in advance (as by statute) for the proof of certain facts.

preliminary evidence. Evidence that is necessary to begin a hearing or trial and that may be received conditionally in anticipation of other evidence linking it to issues in the case. Fed. R. Evid. 104.

presumptive evidence. 1. Evidence deemed true and sufficient unless discredited by other evidence. 2. Archaic. Circumstantial evidence as distinct from testimonial evidence. — Also termed probable evidence.

prima facie evidence (prī-mə fay-shə). Evidence that will establish a fact or sustain a judgment unless contradictory evidence is produced.

“The legislative branch may create an evidential presumption, or a rule of ‘prima facie’ evidence, i.e., a rule which does not shut out evidence, but merely declares that certain conduct shall suffice as evidence until the opponent produces contrary evidence.” John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 237 (1935).

primary evidence. See best evidence.

privileged evidence. Evidence that is exempt from production to an opposing party (with certain, limited exceptions) because it is covered by one or more statutory and common-law protections, such as the attorney-client privilege. See privileged communication under COMMUNICATION.

probable evidence. See presumptive evidence.

probative evidence (proh-bə-tiv). Evidence that tends to prove or disprove a point in issue.

proffered evidence (prof-ərd). 1. Evidence that is offered to the court to obtain a ruling on its admissibility. 2. Evidence whose admissibility depends on the existence or nonexistence of a preliminary fact.

proper evidence. See admissible evidence.

prospectant evidence (prə-spek-tənt). Evidence that, before someone does an act, suggests that the person might or might not do the act. • This evidence typically falls into any of five categories: (1) moral character or disposition, (2) physical and mental capacity, (3) habit or custom, (4) emotion or motive, and (5) plan, design, or intention.

Queen’s evidence. English law. Testimony provided by one criminal defendant, usu. under a promise of pardon, against another criminal defendant. — Also termed (when a king reigns) King’s evidence. See state’s evidence.

real evidence. 1. Physical evidence (such as a knife wound) that itself plays a direct part in the incident in question. 2. See demonstrative evidence.

“Anything which is believed for any other reason than that someone has said so, is believed on real evidence.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 480 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

rebuttal evidence. Evidence offered to disprove or contradict the evidence presented by an opposing party.

relevant evidence. Evidence tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue. • Relevant evidence is both probative and material and is admissible unless excluded by a specific statute or rule. Fed. R. Evid. 401–403. — Also termed competent evidence. Cf. material evidence.

reputation evidence. Evidence of what one is thought by others to be. • Reputation evidence may be introduced as proof of character when character is in issue or is used circum-stantially. Fed. R. Evid. 405(a). — Also termed reputational evidence.

retrospectant evidence (re-trə-spek-tənt). Evidence that, although it occurs after an act has been done, suggests that the alleged doer of the act actually did it <when goods have been stolen, and the thief is sought, a person's later possession of those goods amounts to retrospectant evidence that this person took them>. — Also termed traces.

satisfactory evidence. Evidence that is sufficient to satisfy an unprejudiced mind seeking the truth. — Also termed sufficient evidence; satisfactory proof.

scientific evidence. Testimony or opinion evidence that draws on technical or specialized knowledge and relies on scientific method for its evidentiary value. See DAUBERT TEST.

secondary evidence. Evidence that is inferior to the primary or best evidence and that becomes admissible when the primary or best evidence is lost or inaccessible. • Examples include a copy of a lost instrument or testimony regarding the contents of a lost document. — Also termed mediate evidence; mediate testimony; substitutionary evidence. Cf. best evidence.

signature evidence. Evidence of a person's prior bad acts that, while ordinarily inadmissible, will be admitted if it shows, for example, that two crimes were committed through the same planning, design, scheme, or modus operandi, and in such a way that the prior act and the current act are uniquely identifiable as those of the defendant.

slight evidence. Inconsiderable evidence; a trifling quantity of evidence; esp., the small amount sufficient for a rational fact-finder to conclude that the state failed to disprove an affirmative defense beyond a reasonable doubt.

state's evidence. Testimony provided by one criminal defendant — under a promise of immunity or reduced sentence — against another criminal defendant. See TURN STATE'S EVIDENCE.

substantial evidence. Evidence that a reasonable mind would accept as adequate to support a conclusion; evidence beyond a scintilla. See SUBSTANTIAL-EVIDENCE RULE.

substantive evidence (səb-stən-tiv). Evidence offered to support a fact in issue, as opposed to impeachment or corroborating evidence.

substitutionary evidence. See secondary evidence.

sufficient evidence. See satisfactory evidence.

tainted evidence. Evidence that is inadmissible because it was directly or indirectly obtained by illegal means. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE.

tangible evidence. See demonstrative evidence.

testimonial evidence. A person's testimony offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; esp., evidence elicited from a witness. — Also termed communicative evidence. Cf. demonstrative evidence.

"An assertion is testimonial evidence whether made out of court or in court, if it is offered with a view to persuading the tribunal of the matter asserted." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 120 (1935).

traditionary evidence. Evidence derived from a deceased person's former statements or reputation. • Traditionary evidence is admissible to prove ancestry, ancient boundaries, or similar facts, usu. when no living witnesses are available to testify.

unwritten evidence. Evidence given orally, in court or by deposition.

evidence by inspection. See demonstrative evidence under EVIDENCE.

evidence code. A codified set of statutory provisions governing the admissibility of evidence and the burden of proof at hearings and trials.

evidence of debt. 1. BOND. 2. DEBENTURE.

evidence of insurability. Information — such as medical records or a medical examination — that an insurer may require to establish a potential insured's qualification for a particular insurance policy.

evidence of title. The means by which the ownership of land is satisfactorily demonstrated within a given jurisdiction. See DEED.

"There are four kinds of evidence of title: abstract and opinion, certificate of title, title insurance and Torrens certificate. The certificate of title is used extensively in the Eastern states, and some Southern states. In urban centers in a great many sections of the country, title insurance occupies a dominant position in real estate transactions. In farm areas the abstract and opinion method is common. To a great extent, the acceptability of a particular kind of evidence of title depends on the local custom." Robert Kratovil, Real Estate Law 170 (6th ed. 1974).

evidence rules. See EVIDENCE (4).

evidentia (ev-i-den-shee-ə), n. [Law Latin] Evidence.

evidential, adj. Of, relating to, relying on, or constituting evidence; EVIDENTIARY (1).

evidential fact. See evidentiary fact (2) under FACT.

evidentiary (ev-i-den-shə-ree), adj. 1. Having the quality of evidence; constituting evidence; evidencing. 2. Pertaining to the rules of evidence or the evidence in a particular case.

evidentiary fact. See FACT.

evidentiary hearing. See HEARING.

evince, vb. To show, indicate, or reveal <in abstaining from the vote, Hariden evinced misgivings about the nomination>.

evocation (ev-ə-kay-shən). French law. The act of withdrawing a case from an inferior court and bringing it before a superior court.

evolution statute. Hist. Legislation that forbids the teaching of the theory of evolution in schools. • Such statutes were held unconstitutional as violative of the Establishment Clause in Epperson v. Arkansas, 393 U.S. 97, 89 S.Ct. 266 (1968).

ewage (yoo-ij), n. [Law French] Hist. A toll paid for water passage.

ex aequitate (eks ee-kwə-tay-tee). [Latin] According to equity; in equity.

ex aequo et bono (eks ee-kwoh et boh-noh). [Latin] According to what is equitable and good. • A decision-maker (esp. in international law) who is authorized to decide ex aequo et bono is not bound by legal rules and may instead follow equitable principles.

ex altera parte (eks al-tər-ə [or awl-] pah-tee). [Latin] Of the other part.

examen (eg-zay-mən), n. [Law Latin] A trial; investigation.

examen computi (eg-zay-mən kəm-pyoo-tī). [Latin] The balance of an account.

examination. 1. The questioning of a witness under oath. See DIRECT EXAMINATION; CROSS-EXAMINATION. 2. Bankruptcy. The questioning of a bankrupt, esp. at the first meeting of creditors, concerning such matters as the bankrupt's debts and assets. 3. Patents. An inquiry made at the Patent and Trademark Office, upon application for a patent, into the alleged invention's novelty and utility, and whether it interferes with any other patented invention. 4. PRELIMINARY HEARING. 5. A test, such as a bar examination.

examination-in-chief. See DIRECT EXAMINATION.

examination on the voir dire. See VOIR DIRE.

examination pro interesse suo (proh in-tər-es-ee s[y]oo-oh). [Latin "according to his interest"] A judicial inquiry into the merits of a person's claim to sequestered property.

"In practice, an examination pro interesse suo is an inquiry described as follows: When any person claims to be entitled to an estate or other property sequestered, whether by mortgage or judgment, lease or otherwise, or

examined copy. See COPY.

examiner. 1. One authorized to conduct an examination; esp., a person appointed by the court to administer an oath and take testimony. See MASTER (2). 2. A patent officer responsible for determining the patentability of an invention submitted to the patent office. 3. MEDICAL EXAMINER.

examining authority. See AUTHORITY (3).

excambium (eks-kam-bee-əm), n. [Latin] 1. An exchange; a place where merchants meet to transact their business. — Also termed (in Scots law) excambion. 2. An equivalent in recompense; a recompense in lieu of dower ad ostium ecclesiae.

ex capite (eks kap-i-tee). [Latin] On the ground of; by reason of.

ex cathedra (eks kə-thee-drə or kath-ə-drə), adv. & adj. [Latin "from the chair"] By virtue of one's high office or position; with authority <ex cathedra pronouncements>.

ex causa (eks kaw-zə). [Latin] By title.

excellency. (usu. cap.) A title of honor given to certain high officials or dignitaries, such as governors, ambassadors, and Roman Catholic bishops or archbishops.

exceptio (ek-sep-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. An exception, plea, or objection. 2. Roman & civil law. A defendant's plea admitting the claim in principle, but alleging facts or legal provisions that negate it in this instance. 3. A defense to a claim that is justly brought but that unjustly accuses the particular defendant named.

exceptio dilatoria (dil-ə-tor-ee-ə). A dilatory exception; an exception that defeated the action for a time and creates a delay, such as an agreement not to sue within a certain time.

exceptio doli mali (doh-li mal-I). An exception or plea of fraud.

exceptio dominii (də-min-ee-I). A claim of ownership by the defendant in an action to recover property not in the plaintiff's possession.

exceptio dotis cautae non numeratae (doh-tis kaw-tee non n[y]oo-mə-ray-tee). A defense to an action for the restitution of dowry, asserting that, although promised, dowry was never paid.

exceptio in factum (in fak-təm). An exception on the fact; an exception or plea founded on the peculiar circumstances of a case.

exceptio in personam (in pər-soh-nəm). A plea or defense of a personal nature that only the person to whom it is granted by law may assert.

exceptio in rem (in rem). A plea or defense that is not of a personal nature but is connected with the legal circumstances on which the suit is founded, and that may therefore be alleged by any party in interest, such as an heir or surety of the proper or original debtor.

exceptio jurisjurandi (joor-is-juu-ran-di). An exception of oath; an exception or plea that the matter had been sworn to. • This kind of exception was allowed if a debtor, at a creditor's instance, had sworn that nothing was due the creditor, but the creditor sued anyway.

exceptio metus (met-əs). An exception or plea of fear or compulsion.

exceptio non adimpleti contractus (non ad-im-plee-ti kən-trak-təs). An exception in a contract action involving mutual duties or obligations, to the effect that the plaintiff may not sue if the plaintiff's own obligations have not been performed.

exceptio non solutae pecuniae (non sə-loo-tee pi-kyoo-nee-ee). A plea that the debt at issue in the suit was not discharged by payment (as the adverse party alleged), notwithstanding the existence of a receipt or acquittance reflecting payment.

exceptio pacti conventi (pak-ti-kən-ven-ti). An exception of compact; an exception or plea that the plaintiff had agreed not to sue.

exceptio pecuniae non numeratae (pi-kyoo-nee-ee non n[y]oo-mə-ray-tee). An exception or plea of money not paid; a defense by a party who was sued on a promise to repay money that was never received.

exceptio peremptoria (pər-emp-tor-ee-ə). A peremptory exception that forever destroyed the subject matter or ground of the action, such as the exceptio doli mali and the exceptio metus. — Also termed exceptio perpetua.

exceptio plurium concubentium (ploor-ee-əm kon-kyoo-ben-shee-əm). The plea or defense in a paternity action that the plaintiff had several lovers.

exceptio rei judicatae (ree-I joo-də-kay-tee). An exception or plea of matter adjudged; a plea that the subject matter of the action had been determined in a previous action.

exceptio rei venditae et traditae (ree-I ven-də-tee et trad-ə-tee). An exception or plea of the sale and delivery [of a thing]. • This exception presumes a valid sale but, because no one can transfer a right greater than what is possessed, no valid transfer of property occurred, yet the real owner is nonetheless estopped from contesting the sale.

exceptio senatusconsulti Macedoniani (sə-nay-təs-kən-səl-ti mas-ə-doh-nee-ay-ni). A defense to an action for the recovery of money loaned, on the ground that the loan was made to a minor or a person under another person's paternal power. • This defense is so named from the decree of the senate that forbade the recovery of such loans.

exceptio senatusconsulti Velleiani (sə-nay-təs-kən-səl-ti vel-ee-ay-ni). A defense to an action on a contract of suretyship, on the ground that the surety was a woman and thus incapable of becoming bound for another. • This defense is so named from the decree of the senate forbidding such sureties.

exceptio temporis (tem-pə-ris). An exception or plea that the time prescribed by law for bringing a particular action has expired.

exception, n. 1. A formal objection to a court's ruling by a party who wants to preserve the objection for appeal <the prosecutor stated her exception to the court's ruling disallowing the witness's testimony>. • In federal courts and most state courts, the term exception has been superseded by objection.

The following quotation reflects former practice: "The exception must be distinguished from the objection. Many counsel are heard carelessly saying 'I except' when the thing they are doing is 'I object.' The exception serves an entirely distinct purpose from the objection, — a double purpose, in fact. It warns the judge and the other party that the excepter is not satisfied with the ruling and takes issue with a view to appeal; and it sums up and preserves the precise terms of the ruling. The proponent of the evidence is the excepter if the ruling excludes the evidence; but if it admits the evidence, the opponent of the evidence is the excepter. Thus the excepter and the objector are not necessarily the same parties." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 421 (1935).

dilatory exception (dil-ə-tor-ee). An exception intended to delay but not dismiss an action.

general exception. 1. An objection pointing out a substantive defect in an opponent's pleading, such as the insufficiency of the claim or the court's lack of subject-matter jurisdiction; an objection to a pleading for want of substance. — Also termed general demurrer. Cf. SPECIAL EXCEPTION (1). 2. An objection in which the excepting party does not specify the grounds of the objection.

peremptory exception. A defensive pleading asserting that no legal remedy exists for the plaintiff's alleged injury, that res judicata or prescription bars the claim, or that an indispensable party has not been included in the litigation.

special exception. See SPECIAL EXCEPTION.

2. Something that is excluded from a rule's operation <employers with fewer than five employees are an exception to the rule>.

statutory exception. A provision in a statute exempting certain persons or conduct from the statute's operation.

3. The retention of an existing right or interest, by and for the grantor, in real property being granted to another. Cf. RESERVATION (1). — except, vb.

exceptis excipiendis (ek-sep-tis ek-sip-ee-en-dis). [Latin] With all necessary exceptions.

exceptor, n. One who takes exception; an objector. — Also spelled exceptor.

excerpta (ek-sərp-tə), n. pl. [Latin] Extracts.

ex certa scientia (eks sə-r-tə si-en-shee-ə). [Latin] Of certain or sure knowledge. • This phrase was anciently used in patents, and imported full knowledge of the subject matter on the part of the sovereign.

excès de pouvoir (ek-say də poo-vwahr). [French "excess of power"] 1. Int'l law. Beyond the powers (of a tribunal). 2. Administrative law. Beyond the powers of an official.

excess benefit plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

excess clause. An insurance-policy provision — usu. contained in the "other insurance" section of the policy — that limits the insurer's liability to the amount exceeding other available coverage. • This clause essentially requires other insurers to pay first. Cf. ESCAPE CLAUSE; PRO RATA CLAUSE.

excess condemnation. See CONDEMNATION.

excess limits. Insurance coverage against losses in excess of a specified limit.

excess-lines insurance. See surplus-lines insurance under INSURANCE.

excess of jurisdiction. 1. A court's acting beyond the limits of its power, usu. in one of three ways: (1) when the court has no power to deal with the kind of matter at issue, (2) when the court has no power to deal with the particular person concerned, or (3) when the judgment or order issued is of a kind that the court has no power to issue. 2. A court's departure from recognized and established requirements of law, despite apparent adherence to procedural form, the effect of which is a deprivation of one's constitutional right. — Also termed excess jurisdiction.

excess of privilege. 1. An excessive publication of a privileged statement — that is, beyond the limits of the privilege. 2. The improper and malicious use of the privilege to publish a statement.

excess policy. See excess insurance under INSURANCE.

excess-profits tax. See TAX.

excess reinsurance. See REINSURANCE.

excess theory. Insurance. The principle that a tortfeasor will be considered underinsured if the injured party's damages exceed the tortfeasor's liability-insurance coverage. • This principle allows an injured party to invoke underinsured-motorist coverage. Cf. GAP THEORY.

Exchange Act. See SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934.

exchange broker. One who negotiates money or merchandise transactions for others.

exchange rate. The ratio for converting one country's money into another country's money. See FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

exchange ratio. The number of shares that an acquiring company must give for each share of an acquired company.

Exchequer (eks-chek-ər or eks-chek-ər). 1. English law. The government department charged with collecting the national revenue; the treasury department. • The name is said to have derived from the checkered cloth, resembling a chessboard, that anciently covered the table on which certain of the king's accounts were tallied, the sums being marked and scored with counters. 2. COURT OF EXCHEQUER. — Abbr. Ex.

Exchequer bill. A bill of credit issued in England by the authority of Parliament; an instrument issued at the Exchequer, usu. under the authority of an act of Parliament passed for that specific purpose, containing an engagement on the part of the government to repay, with interest, the principal sums advanced.

Exchequer Chamber. An English court of intermediate appeal from the common-law courts, namely, the Court of King's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas, and the Court of Exchequer. • It was established in 1822.

Exchequer Division. Hist. A division of the English high court of justice, to which the business of the Court of Exchequer was specially assigned by section 34 of the Judicature Act of 1873, and later merged into the Queen's Bench Division in 1881.

excise, n. A tax imposed on the manufacture, sale, or use of goods (such as a cigarette tax), or on an occupation or activity (such as a license tax or an attorney occupation fee). — Also termed excise tax. Cf. income tax and property tax under TAX.

excise lieu property tax. See TAX.

excise tax. See EXCISE.

excited utterance. A statement about a startling event made under the stress and excitement of the event. • An excited utterance may be admissible as a hearsay exception. Fed. R. Evid. 803(2). Cf. PRESENT SENSE IMPRESSION.

excludable, adj. (Of evidence) subject to exclusion <excludable hearsay>.

exclusion, n. 1. Tax. An item of income excluded from gross income. — Also termed income exclusion.

annual exclusion. The amount (such as $10,000) allowed as nontaxable gift income during the calendar year. • The purpose of the annual exclusion is both to serve as an estate-planning mechanism (so that gifts made during the donor's lifetime remain nontestamentary and nontaxable) and to eliminate the administrative inconvenience of taxing relatively small gifts. For an individual, the first $10,000 in gifts can be excluded; for married persons, the exclusion is $20,000 per donee for joint gifts, regardless of which spouse supplied the donated property. IRC (26 USCA) § 2503. — Also termed annual gift-tax exclusion.

2. Evidence. A trial judge's determination that an item offered as evidence may not be presented to the trier of fact (esp. the jury). 3. Insurance. An insurance-policy provision that

automobile exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from the use (including loading and unloading) of an automobile, aircraft, or other motor vehicle owned, operated, rented, or borrowed by the insured.

business-risk exclusion. An exclusion in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for common risks of doing business, including harm to the insured's product or work, damages arising from a product recall, damages arising from the insured's failure to perform under a contract, or damages arising from a failure of the insured's product to perform as intended.

design-defect exclusion. A provision in some umbrella policies and some older commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for bodily injury arising from the failure of the insured's product to perform its intended function because of a defect or deficiency in its design, formula, specifications, instructions, or advertising materials.

employee-liability exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for injury to an employee (or a member of the employee's family), arising from and in the course of employment with the insured. • This exclusion is generally intended to exclude from coverage all injuries covered by the workers'-compensation laws.

employment-related-practices exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from an insured's employment practices, including any policy, action, or omission — such as coercion, demotion, evaluation, reassignment, discipline, defamation, harassment, humiliation, or discrimination — that is directed at the person injured.

expected/intended exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for property damage or bodily injury that is expected or intended by the insured, except any harm arising from the use of reasonable force to protect a person or property. • This exclusion is sometimes referred to as "exclusion a" because it is the first exclusion listed on most policies. — Also termed exclusion a; intentional-injury exclusion.

failure-to-perform exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for (1) the loss of use of undamaged property resulting from the insured's delay or failure in performing an obligation, or (2) a design defect or failure in the insured's product. — Also termed loss-of-use exclusion.

knowledge-of-falsity exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from an oral or written communication made by the insured with knowledge that it is false.

named-insured exclusion. An exclusion limiting liability-insurance coverage to a named insured whose injuries were caused by another named insured under the same insurance policy.

owned-property exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damage to any of the following: (1) property owned, rented, occupied, sold, given away, or abandoned by the insured, (2) personal property in the care, custody, or control of the insured, or (3) property located where the insured and its employees work.

own-product exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for property damage to a product that is manufactured, sold, handled, distributed, or disposed of by the insured.

own-work exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damage to the work or services performed by the insured.

pollution exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for bodily injury or property damages arising from the discharge, dispersal, release, or escape of chemicals, waste, acid, and other pollutants. • Pollution-exclusion clauses may take one of two forms: (1) sudden and accidental, and (2) absolute. The sudden-and-accidental clause, usu. limited to policies issued before 1985, contains an exception under which the damages are covered (i.e., exempted from the exclusion) if the discharge or other release was sudden and accidental. The absolute pollution exclusion, in most policies issued since 1985, does not contain this exception.

sistership exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from the withdrawal, inspection, repair, replacement, or loss of use of the insured's product or work, to the extent that the product or work is withdrawn or recalled from the market because of a known or suspected defect or deficiency. — Also termed recall exclusion.

exclusion a. See expected/intended exclusion under EXCLUSION (3).

exclusionary hearing. See HEARING.

exclusionary rule. 1. Evidence. Any rule that excludes or suppresses evidence that does not satisfy a minimum standard of probative value <despite many exceptions, hearsay has long been inadmissible under an exclusionary rule>. 2. Criminal procedure. A rule that excludes or suppresses evidence obtained in violation of an accused person's constitutional rights <in accordance with the exclusionary rule, the court did not admit the drugs into evidence because they had been obtained during a warrantless search of the defendant's home>. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE; GOOD-FAITH EXCEPTION.

"In the simplest of exclusionary rule cases, the challenged evidence is quite clearly 'direct' or 'primary' in its relationship to the prior arrest, search, interrogation, lineup or other identification procedure. Such is the case when that evidence is an identification occurring at the confrontation between suspect and victim or witness, a confession or admission made in response to questioning, or physical evidence obtained by search or arrest. Not infrequently, however, challenged evidence is 'secondary' or 'derivative' in character. This occurs when, for example, a confession is obtained after an illegal arrest, physical evidence is located after an illegally obtained confession, or an in-court identification is made following an illegally conducted pretrial identification. In these situations, it is necessary to determine whether the derivative evidence is 'tainted' by the prior constitutional or other violation." Wayne R. LaFave & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 9.3, at 471 (2d ed. 1992).

ex delicto trust. See TRUST.

ex demissione (eks də-mish-ee-oh-nee). [Latin “upon the demise”] Hist. A phrase forming part of the title of the old action of ejectment. — Abbr. ex dem.

ex directo (eks di-rek-toh). [Latin] Directly; immediately.

ex distribution. Without distribution. • Shares are traded ex distribution when they no longer carry the right to receive a distribution to be made to holders. — Abbr. X; XDIS.

ex dividend. Without dividend. • Shares are traded ex dividend when the seller, not the purchaser, is entitled to the next dividend payment because it will be made before the stock transfer is completed. The first day on which shares are traded ex dividend, the stock price will drop by an amount usu. approximating the amount of the dividend. — Abbr. XD.; X. Cf. CUM DIVIDEND.

ex-dividend date. The date on or after which the buyer of a security does not acquire the right to receive a recently declared dividend. — Also termed ex-date. Cf. DIVIDEND DATE.

ex dolo malo (eks doh-loh mal-oh). [Latin] Out of fraud; out of deceitful or tortious conduct.

exeat (ek-see-ət), n. 1. Generally, permission to go outside (a place). 2. Permission that a bishop grants to a priest to go out of his diocese. Cf. NE EXEAT REPUBLICA.

execute, vb. 1. To perform or complete (a contract or duty) <once the contract was fully executed, the parties owed no further contractual duties to each other>. 2. To change (as a legal interest) from one form to another <the shifting use was executed into a valid legal estate>. 3. To make (a legal document) valid by signing; to bring (a legal document) into its final, legally enforceable form <each party executed the contract without a signature witness>. 4. To put to death, esp. by legal sentence <Johnson was executed shortly after midnight>. 5. To enforce and collect on (a money judgment) <Williams asked the sheriff to execute on the judgment>.

executed, adj. 1. (Of a document) that has been signed <an executed will>. 2. That has been done, given, or performed <executed consideration>.

executed consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

executed contract. See CONTRACT.

executed covenant. See COVENANT (1).

executio (ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh), n. [Latin] 1. The performance or completion of a thing; the act of following through on a commitment. 2. The doing of something thoroughly. 3. Management or administration. 4. Hist. Execution; the final process in an action.

executio bonorum (bə-nor-əm). [Latin] Hist. The management or administration of goods.

execution, n. 1. The act of carrying out or putting into effect (as a court order) <execution of the court’s decree>. 2. Validation of a written instrument, such as a contract or will, by fulfilling the necessary legal requirements <delivery of the goods completed the contract's execution>. 3. Judicial enforcement of a money judgment, usu. by seizing and selling the judgment debtor's property <even if the plaintiff receives a judgment against the foreign debtor, execution is unlikely>. 4. A court order directing a sheriff or other officer to enforce a judgment, usu. by seizing and selling the judgment debtor's property <the court issued the execution authorizing seizure of the car>. — Also termed writ of execution; judgment execution; general execution.

"A writ of execution is an authorization to an executive officer, issued from a court in which a final judgment has been rendered, for the purpose of carrying such judgment into force and effect. It is founded upon the judgment, must generally be conformed to it in every respect, and the plaintiff is always entitled to it to obtain a satisfaction of his claim, unless his right has been suspended by proceedings in the nature of an appeal or by his own agreement." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 26, at 50 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

alias execution. A second execution issued to enforce a judgment not fully satisfied by the original writ. Cf. alias writ under WRIT.

body execution. A court order requiring an officer to take a named person into custody, usu. to bring the person before the court to pay a debt; CAPIAS.

close-jail execution. A body execution stating that the person to be arrested should be confined in jail without the privilege of movement about the jailyard.

dormant execution. An execution authorizing an officer to seize and hold property rather than sell it, until further notice.

junior execution. An execution that is subordinate to another execution issued from an earlier judgment against the same debtor.

malicious execution. An abuse of process by which a person, maliciously and without reasonable cause, issues an execution against the property of a judgment debtor.

special execution. An execution authorizing a judgment to be satisfied from specified property.

speedy execution. An execution issuing quickly (esp. by judges at nisi prius) after a trial.

5. Criminal law. The carrying out of a death sentence <the Supreme Court stayed the execution>. — execute, vb.

execution clause. The part of a deed containing the date, seal (if required), and signatures of the grantor, grantor's spouse, and witnesses.

execution creditor. See CREDITOR.

executione facienda in withernamium (ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh-nee fay-shee-en-də in with-ər-nay-mee-əm). [Latin] Hist. A writ that lay for taking cattle of a person who had taken someone else's cattle out of the county so that the sheriff could not replevy them.

executione iudicii (ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh-nee joo-dish-ee-i). [Latin] Hist. A writ directed to a judge of an inferior court to issue execution upon a judgment in that court, or to return some reasonable cause why the judge has delayed execution.

executioner. A person who puts another person to death to carry out a death sentence; a person who carries out capital punishment on the state's behalf.

execution lien. See LIEN.

exécution parée (eg-zay-koo-syawn pa-ray). [French] French law. A right founded on an act approved and verified before a notary, by which a creditor may immediately — without citation or summons — seize and cause to be sold the debtor's property and keep the proceeds of the sale (to the extent of the indebtedness).

execution-proof. See JUDGMENT-PROOF.

execution sale. See SALE.

executive, n. 1. The branch of government responsible for effecting and enforcing laws; the person or persons who constitute this branch. ● The executive branch is sometimes said to be the residue of all government after subtracting the judicial and legislative branches. Cf. LEGISLATURE; JUDICIARY (1).

chief executive. The head of the executive branch of a government, such as the President of the United States.

2. A corporate officer at the upper levels of management. — executive, adj.

executive administration. Collectively, high public officials who administer the chief departments of the government.

executive agency. An executive-branch department whose activities are subject to statute and whose contracts are subject to judicial review. ● One example is the Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

executive agreement. Int'l law. An international agreement entered into by the President, without the need for approval by the Senate, and usu. involving routine diplomatic matters. Cf. TREATY.

executive branch. The branch of government charged with administering and carrying out the law; EXECUTIVE (1). Cf. JUDICIAL BRANCH; LEGISLATIVE BRANCH.

executive clemency. See CLEMENCY.

executive committee. The group of principal officers and directors who directly manage business operations between meetings of the board of directors.

executive department. See EXECUTIVE (1).

executive employee. An employee whose duties include some form of managerial authority and active participation in the control, supervision, and management of the business. — Often shortened to executive.

executive immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

executive officer. See EXECUTIVE.

executive order. An order issued by or on behalf of the President, usu. intended to direct or instruct the actions of executive agencies or government officials, or to set policies for the executive branch to follow. — Abbr. ex. ord.

executive pardon. See PARDON.

executive power. Constitutional law. The power to see that the laws are duly executed and enforced. ● Under federal law, this power is vested in the President; in the states, it is vested in the governors. The President's enumerated powers are found in the U.S. Constitution, art. II, § 2; governors' executive powers are provided for in state constitutions. The other two great powers of government are the legislative power and the judicial power.

executive privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

executive session. A session of a board or governmental body that is closed to the public and that only invited persons may attend.

"Virtually all open meeting statutes expressly authorize the use of executive sessions, typically specifying the particular circumstances in which executive sessions are permitted. When the specific circumstances are specified, generally no other exceptions are permitted. . . . Use of the executive session to discuss matters not properly hidden from the public is a clear violation of the open meeting law. Many states expressly or implicitly forbid use of the executive session as a subterfuge to defeat the purposes of the open meeting law." Ann Taylor Schwing, Open Meeting Laws § 7.1 (2d ed. 1999).

executor, n. 1. (ek-sə-kyoo-tər) One who performs or carries out some act. 2. (eg-zek-yə-tər) A person named by a testator to carry out the provisions in the testator's will. Cf. ADMINISTRATOR (1).

acting executor. One who assumes the role of executor — usu. temporarily — but is not the legally appointed executor or the executor-in-fact.

coexecutor. See joint executor.

executor ab episcopo constitutus (ab ə-pis-kə-poh kon-sti-t[y]oo-təs). [Law Latin] Eccles. law. An executor appointed by a bishop; an administrator to an intestate. — Also termed executor dativus.

executor a lege constitutus (ay [or ah] lee-jee kon-sti-t[y]oo-təs). [Law Latin] Eccles. law. One authorized by law to be an executor; the ordinary of the diocese.

executor a testatore constitutus (ay [or ah] tes-tə-tor-ee kon-sti-t[y]oo-təs). [Law Latin] Eccles. law. An executor appointed by a testator. — Also termed executor testamentarius.

executor dative. See DATIVE (1).

executor dativus. See executor ab episcopo constitutus.

executor de son tort (də sawn [or son] tor[t]). [Law French "executor of his own wrong"] A person who, without legal authority, takes on the responsibility to act as an executor or administrator of a decedent's property, usu. to the detriment of the estate's beneficiaries or creditors.

"Executor de son tort — or, executor of his own wrong. Is he that takes upon him the office of an executor by intrusion, not being so constituted by the testator." The Pocket Lawyer and Family Conveyancer 98 (3d ed. 1833).

executor lucratus (loo-kray-təs). An executor who has assets of the testator, the latter having become liable by wrongfully interfering with another's property.

executor testamentarius. See executor a testatore constitutus.

executor to the tenor. Eccles. law. A person who is not named executor in the will but who performs duties similar to an executor.

general executor. An executor who has the power to administer a decedent's entire estate until its final settlement.

independent executor. An executor who, unlike an ordinary executor, can administer the estate with very little supervision by the probate court. ● Only a few states — mostly in the West and Southwest — allow testators to designate independent executors. — Also termed nonintervention executor.

joint executor. One of two or more persons named in a will as executor of an estate. — Also termed coexecutor.

limited executor. An executor whose appointment is restricted in some way, such as time, place, or subject matter.

nonintervention executor. See independent executor.

special executor. An executor whose power is limited to a portion of the decedent's estate.

substituted executor. An executor appointed to act in the place of an executor who cannot or will not perform the required duties.

3. (eg-*z*ek-yə-tər) Patents. One who represents a legally incapacitated inventor. — executorial, adj. — executorship, n.

executor fund. See FUND (1).

executor's bond. See BOND (2).

executor testamentarius. See executor a testatore constitutus under EXECUTOR.

executory (eg-*z*ek-yə-tor-ee), adj. 1. Taking full effect at a future time <executory judgment>. 2. To be performed at a future time; yet to be completed <executory contract>.

executory consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

executory contract. See CONTRACT.

executory covenant. See COVENANT (1).

executory devise. See DEVISE.

executory interest. A future interest, held by a third person, that either cuts off another's interest or begins after the natural termination of a preceding estate. Cf. REMAINDER.

“What is an executory interest? Here is a pretty good definition: An executory interest is any future interest created in a person other than the transferor that is not a remainder. Here are five classic examples of executory interest: (1) O transfers ‘to A for life; then, one day after A's death, to the heirs of A.’ The transfer creates a springing executory interest in those who will be A's heirs. (2) O transfers ‘to A for 200 years if he shall so long live, then to the heirs of A.’ This transfer also creates a springing executory interest in A's prospective heirs. (3) O transfers ‘to A and his heirs five years from the date of this deed.’ A owns a springing executory interest. (4) O, when B is fifteen, transfers ‘to A for life; then no sooner than one day after A's death, to B and his heirs if B ever reaches 21.’ B owns a springing executory interest. (5) O transfers ‘to A and his heirs; but if A marries X, to B and his heirs.’ B owns a shifting executory interest.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 80 (2d ed. 1984).

executory judgment. See JUDGMENT.

executory limitation. See LIMITATION.

executory process. Civil law. 1. A process that can be resorted to either (1) when the right of a creditor arises from an act importing a confession of judgment, and that contains a privilege or mortgage in the creditor's favor, or (2) when the creditor demands the execution of a judgment that has been rendered by a different tribunal. 2. An accelerated procedure, summary in nature, by which the holder of a mortgage or privilege evidenced by a confession of judgment seeks to effect an ex parte seizure and sale of the subject property.

executory remainder. See contingent remainder under REMAINDER.

executory sale. See SALE.

executory trust. See TRUST.

executory unilateral accord. An offer to enter a contract; OFFER (2).

exemplum (eg-zem-pləm), n. [Latin] Civil law. A copy; a written authorized copy.

exempt, adj. Free or released from a duty or liability to which others are held <persons exempt from military service> <property exempt from sequestration>. — exempt, vb. — exemptive, adj.

exempt income. See INCOME.

exemption. 1. Freedom from a duty, liability, or other requirement. See IMMUNITY. 2. A privilege given to a judgment debtor by law, allowing the debtor to retain certain property without liability. 3. Tax. An amount allowed as a deduction from adjusted gross income, used to determine taxable income. Cf. DEDUCTION (2).

dependency exemption. An exemption granted to an individual taxpayer for each dependent whose gross income is less than the exemption amount and for each child who is younger than 19 or, if a student, younger than 24.

personal exemption. An amount allowed as a deduction from an individual taxpayer's adjusted gross income.

exemption clause. A contractual provision providing that a party will not be liable for damages for which that party would otherwise have ordinarily been liable. Cf. INDEMNITY CLAUSE.

"An exemption clause may take many forms, but all such clauses have one thing in common in that they exempt a party from a liability which he would have borne had it not been for the clause. In some cases an exemption clause merely relieves a party from certain purely contractual obligations, for example, the duties of a seller in a contract of sale regarding the quality and fitness of the goods. In other cases exemption clauses go further and protect the party not merely from contractual liability but even from liability which would otherwise have arisen in tort. For example, a shipping company's ticket may exempt the company from liability to the passenger for any injuries, however caused. Now if the passenger is injured as a result of the negligence of the company's employees, that would, in the normal way, give rise to an action in tort for negligence, quite apart from the contract." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 167 (3d ed. 1981).

exemption equivalent. The maximum value of assets that one can transfer to another before incurring a federal gift and estate tax.

exemption law. A law describing what property of a debtor cannot be attached by a judgment creditor or trustee in bankruptcy to satisfy a debt. See EXEMPT PROPERTY (1).

exempto (eks emp-toh). [Latin] Roman & civil law. Out of purchase; founded on purchase.

exempt organization. An organization that is either partially or completely exempt from federal income taxation. See CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION.

exempt property. 1. A debtor's holdings and possessions that, by law, a creditor cannot attach to satisfy a debt. • All the property that creditors may lawfully reach is known as non-exempt property. Many states provide a homestead exemption that excludes a person's house and household items, up to a certain amount, from the liens of most creditors. The purpose of the exemption is to prevent debtors from becoming destitute. See HOMESTEAD. 2. Personal property that a surviving spouse is automatically entitled to receive from the decedent's estate.

exempt security. See SECURITY.

exempt transaction. A securities sale that falls outside the scope of the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

exennium (eg-zen-ee-əm), n. [Latin] Hist. A gift, esp. one given at the new year.

ex gratia payment. A payment not legally required; esp., an insurance payment not required to be made under an insurance policy.

ex gravi querela (eks gray-vī kwə-ree-lə). [Latin “from or on the grievous complaint”] Hist. A writ that lay for a person to whom any lands or tenements in fee were devised by will (within any city, town, or borough in which lands were devisable by custom), against an heir of the devisor who entered and detained them from the devisee. • The writ was abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act (1833). St. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27, § 36.

exhaustion of remedies. The doctrine that, if an administrative remedy is provided by statute, a claimant must seek relief first from the administrative body before judicial relief is available. • The doctrine’s purpose is to maintain comity between the courts and administrative agencies and to ensure that courts will not be burdened by cases in which judicial relief is unnecessary. — Also termed exhaustion of administrative remedies.

"The traditional rule can . . . be fairly simply stated. A litigant must normally exhaust state 'legislative' or 'administrative' remedies before challenging the state action in federal court. He or she need not normally exhaust state 'judicial' remedies. The rationale for this distinction is that until the administrative process is complete, it cannot be certain that the party will need judicial relief, but when the case becomes appropriate for judicial determination, he or she may choose whether to resort to a state or federal court for that relief. The word 'normally' is required in both branches of the rule." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 49, at 313 (5th ed. 1994).

exhaustion of state remedies. The doctrine that an available state remedy must be exhausted in certain types of cases before a party can gain access to a federal court. • For example, a state prisoner must exhaust all state remedies before a federal court will hear a petition for habeas corpus.

exhibere (ek-sə-beer-ee), vb. [Latin] 1. To present (a tangible thing) so that it may be handled. 2. To appear personally to defend against an action at law.

exhibit, n. 1. A document, record, or other tangible object formally introduced as evidence in court. 2. A document attached to and made part of a pleading, motion, contract, or other instrument.

exhibitio billae (ek-sə-bish-ee-oh bil-ee). [Latin] Hist. The commencement of a suit by presenting or exhibiting a bill to the court.

exhibitionism, n. The indecent display of one's body. — exhibitionist, adj. & n.

exhibition value. In the motion-picture industry, the minimum receipts that distributors expect to realize from showing a particular film. — Also termed minimum sale; price expectancy.

exhibit list. A pretrial filing that identifies by number and description the exhibits a party intends to offer into evidence at trial. • Courts often require the exchange of exhibit lists before trial so that evidentiary disputes can be resolved with minimal disruption in the course of a jury trial.

exhibitory interdict. See INTERDICT (1).

exhumation (eks-hyoo-may-shən or eg-zyoo-), n. The removal from the earth of something buried, esp. a human corpse; disinterment.

ex hypothesi (eks hi-poth-ə-sī). [Latin] Hypothetically; by hypothesis; on the assumption <conviction for a felony is ex hypothesi impossible in the case of suicide>.

exidos (e-hee-thohs), n. See EJIDOS.

exigency (ek-sə-jən-see), n. A demand for immediate action or performance arising from a circumstance or condition <exigency of a bond> <exigency of a writ>. — exigent, adj.

ex lege (eks lee-jee or lay-gay). [Latin] By virtue of law; as a matter of law <property forfeited ex lege>.

ex legibus (eks lee-jə-bəs). [Latin “according to the laws”] Roman law. According to both the letter and the spirit of the law.

expressio unius est exclusio alterius (ek-spres[h]-ee-oh yoo-ni-əs est eks-kloo-zhee-oh al-tə-ri-əs). [Law Latin] A canon of construction holding that to express or include one thing implies the exclusion of the other, or of the alternative. • For example, the rule that "each citizen is entitled to vote" implies that noncitizens are not entitled to vote. — Also termed inclusio unius est exclusio alterius; expressum facit cessare tacitum. Cf. EJUSDEM GENERIS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS; RULE OF RANK.

"Several Latin maxims masquerade as rules of interpretation while doing nothing more than describing results reached by other means. The best example is probably expressio unius est exclusio alterius, which is a rather elaborate, mysterious sounding, and anachronistic way of describing the negative implication. Far from being a rule, it is not even lexicographically accurate, because it is simply not true, generally, that the mere express conferral of a right or privilege in one kind of situation implies the denial of the equivalent right or privilege in other kinds. Sometimes it does and sometimes it does not, and whether it does or does not depends on the particular circumstances of context. Without contextual support, therefore, there is not even a mild presumption here. Accordingly, the maxim is at best a description, after the fact, of what the court has discovered from context." Reed Dickerson, The Interpretation and Application of Statutes 234–35 (1975).

"The canon expressio unius est exclusio alterius is . . . based on the assumption of legislative omniscience, because it would make sense only if all omissions in legislative drafting were deliberate. Although this canon seemed dead for a while, it has been resurrected by the Supreme Court to provide a basis for refusing to create private remedies for certain statutory violations. Its recent disparagement by a unanimous Court [in Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, 459 U.S. 375, 386 n.23, 103 S.Ct. 683, 690 n. 23 (1983)] puts its future in some doubt but more likely confirms that judicial use of canons of construction is opportunistic." Richard A. Posner, The Federal Courts: Crisis and Reform 282 (1985).

extort, vb. 1. To compel or coerce (a confession, etc.) by means that overcome one's power to resist. 2. To gain by wrongful methods; to obtain in an unlawful manner; to exact wrongfully by threat or intimidation. — extortive, adj.

extortion, n. 1. The offense committed by a public official who illegally obtains property under the color of office; esp., an official's collection of an unlawful fee. — Also termed common-law extortion.

"The dividing line between bribery and extortion is shadowy. If one other than the officer corruptly takes the initiative and offers what he knows is not an authorized fee, it is bribery and not extortion. On the other hand, if the officer corruptly makes an unlawful demand which is paid by one who does not realize it is not the fee authorized for the service rendered, it is extortion and not bribery. In theory it would seem possible for an officer to extort a bribe under such circumstances that he would be guilty of either offense whereas the outraged citizen would be excused." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 538 (3d ed. 1982).

2. The act or practice of obtaining something or compelling some action by illegal means, as by force or coercion. — Also termed statutory extortion. — extortionate, adj.

extrinsic ambiguity. See latent ambiguity under AMBIGUITY.

extrinsic evidence. See EVIDENCE.

extrinsic fraud. See FRAUD.

ex turpi causa (eks tər-pī kaw-zə). [Latin] From an immoral consideration. • This phrase, a shortened form of the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio ("from an immoral consideration an action does not arise"), expresses the principle that a party does not have a right to enforce performance of an agreement founded on a consideration that is contrary to the public interest.

some day be used as a foundation for a change of heart. Speaking of the maxim ex turpi causa, he said: 'In these days there are many statutory offences which are the subject of the criminal law and in that sense are crimes, but which would, it seems, afford no moral justification for a court to apply the maxim'. Beresford v. Royal Insurance (1937), 2 KB. at 220." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 60 (1968).

exuere patriam (eg-z[y]oo-ə-ree pay-tree-əm), vb. [Latin] To renounce one's country or native allegiance; to expatriate oneself.

exuperare (eg-z[y]oo-pə-rair-ee), vb. [Latin] To overcome; to apprehend or take.

ex utraque parte (eks yoo-tray-kwee pah-tee). [Latin] On both sides.

ex utriusque parentibus conjuncti (eks yoo-tree-əs-kwee pə-ren-ti-bəs kən-jəŋk-ti). [Latin] Related on the side of both parents; of the whole blood.

ex visceribus (eks vi-ser-ə-bəs). [Latin "from the bowels"] From the vital part; from the very essence of (a thing).

ex visceribus verborum (eks vi-ser-ə-bəs vər-bor-əm). [Latin] From the mere words (and nothing else); from the words themselves.

ex visitatione Dei (eks viz-ə-tay-shee-oh-nee dee-i). [Latin] 1. By the dispensation of God; by reason of physical incapacity. • Anciently, when a prisoner who was being arraigned stood silently instead of pleading, a jury was impaneled to inquire whether the prisoner obstinately stood mute or was dumb ex visitatione Dei. 2. By natural causes as opposed to violent ones. • This phrase sometimes appears in a coroner's report when death results from a disease or another natural cause.

ex visu scriptiois (eks vi-s[y]oo [or -z[y]oo] skrip-shee-oh-nis). [Latin] From the sight of the writing; from having seen a person write. • This phrase describes a method of proving handwriting.

ex vi termini (eks vi tər-mə-ni). [Law Latin] From or by the force of the term; from the very meaning of the expression used.

ex voluntate (eks vol-ən-tay-tee). [Latin] Voluntarily; from free will or choice.

eyde (ayd), n. [Law French] Aid; assistance; relief; subsidy.

eye for an eye. See LEX TALIONIS.

eye of the law. The law as a personified thinker; legal contemplation <dead people are no longer persons in the eye of the law>.

eyewitness. One who personally observes an event. Cf. EARWITNESS.

eyewitness identification. A naming or description by which one who has seen an event testifies from memory about the person or persons involved.

eygne (ayn), n. See EIGNE.

eyre (air). [Old French aire "journey, march"] Hist. A system of royal courts sent out into the counties by the Crown to investigate allegations of wrongdoing, to try cases, and to raise revenue for the Crown through the levy of fines. • The eyre system was abolished in the 13th century. See ARTICLES OF THE EYRE; JUSTICE IN EYRE.

"In 1176 the itinerant justices were organised into six circuits. . . . The justices assigned to these circuits, who numbered as many as twenty or thirty at a time in the 1180s, were known as justiciae errantes (later justiciarum in itinere, justices in eyre); and the French word 'eyre' became the name of one of the most prominent forms of royal justice until the time of Edward III. Every so often a 'general eyre' would visit a county, bringing the king's government with it. . . . The general eyres were not merely law courts; they were a way of supervising local government through itinerant central government." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 19 (3d ed. 1990).

eyrer (air-ər), vb. [Law French] Hist. To travel or journey; to go about.

F

F. 1. abbr. The first series of the Federal Reporter, which includes federal decisions (trial and appellate) from 1880 to 1924. 2. Hist. A letter branded on a felon who claimed benefit of clergy so that the felon could claim the benefit only once. • Additionally, those convicted for an affray (fray) or falsity were so branded.

“He that shall maliciously strike any person with a Weapon in Church or Churchyard, or draw any Weapon there with intent to strike, shall have one of his Ears cut off; and, if he have no Ears, then shall be marked on the Cheek with a hot Iron, having the Letter F, whereby he may be known for a Fray-maker or Fighter.” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

“F, Is a Letter wherewith Felons, & c. are branded and marked with an hot Iron, on their being admitted to the Benefit of Clergy.” Giles Jacob, A New Law-Dictionary (8th ed. 1762).

F.2d. abbr. The second series of the Federal Reporter, which includes federal appellate decisions from 1924 to 1993.

fabula (fab-yə-lə). [Law Latin] Hist. A contract or covenant, esp. a nuptial contract.

FAC. abbr. Failure to answer a (traffic) citation.

• In some jurisdictions, if someone fails to respond after receiving a ticket, the court notifies the relevant administrative agency, which records this information and suspends the defendant’s driver’s license until the FAC is vacated and any fines or fees are paid.

face, n. 1. The surface of anything, esp. the front, upper, or outer part <the face of a clock>. 2. By extension, the apparent or explicit part of a writing or record <the fraud must appear on the face of the record>. 3. The inscribed side of a document, instrument, or judgment <although the contract appeared valid on its face, the buyer did not have the legal capacity to enter into it>.

face amount. 1. PAR VALUE. 2. Insurance. The amount payable under an insurance policy. — Also termed face value; face amount insured by the policy; face of policy.

face-amount certificate. See CERTIFICATE.

face-amount certificate of installment type. See face-amount certificate (1) under CERTIFICATE.

face amount insured by the policy. See FACE AMOUNT.

face of policy. See FACE AMOUNT.

face rate. See nominal rate under INTEREST RATE.

face value. See FACE AMOUNT.

facial, adj. Apparent; on the face of things; prima facie .

facial attack. A challenge to the sufficiency of a complaint, such as a motion to dismiss in federal practice.

facial challenge. See CHALLENGE (1).

facially sufficient, adj. (Of a document) appearing valid on its face. ● A search-warrant affidavit's facial sufficiency will not protect it from attack if the affidavit is based on false testimony by the officer making the affidavit. See FRANKS HEARING.

facially void. See VOID.

facias (fay-shee-əs). [Law Latin] That you cause. ● Facias is used in writs as an emphatic word. See FIERI FACIAS; LEVARI FACIAS; SCIRE FACIAS. It also appears in the phrase ut facias ("so that you do"). See DO UT FACIAS; FACIO UT DES; FACIO UT FACIAS.

facies (fay-shee-ez). [Latin] The outward appearance or surface (of a thing).

facilitate, vb. Criminal law. To make the commission of a crime easier. ● Property (such as a vehicle or home) that facilitates the commission of certain offenses may be forfeited. — facilitator, n.

facilitation, n. The act or an instance of aiding or helping; esp., in criminal law, the act of making it easier for another person to commit a crime.

facility-of-payment clause. An insurance-policy provision allowing the appointment of a person to receive payment from the insurer on the beneficiary's behalf.

facio ut des (fay-shee-oh ət deez). [Latin "I do so that you give"] Civil law. 1. An innominate contract in which a person agrees to do something for recompense. See innominate contract under CONTRACT. 2. The consideration in such a contract.

facio ut facias (fay-shee-oh ət fay-shee-əs). [Latin "I do that you may do"] Civil law. 1. An innominate contract in which a person agrees to do something for another person who agrees to do something in return, such as an agreement to marry. 2. The consideration in such a contract. See innominate contract under CONTRACT.

"These valuable considerations are divided by the civilians into four species. . . . The second species is, facio, ut facias: as when I agree with a man to do his work for him, if he will do mine for me; or if two persons agree to marry together; or to do any positive acts on both sides. Or, it may be to forbear on one side in consideration of something done on the other; as, that in consideration A, the tenant, will repair his house, B, the landlord, will not sue him for waste." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 444 (1766).

facsimile (fak-sim-ə-lee). 1. An exact copy. 2. FAX.

facsimile signature. See SIGNATURE.

fact. 1. Something that actually exists; an aspect of reality <it is a fact that all people are mortal>. 2. An actual or alleged event or circumstance, as distinguished from its legal effect, consequence, or interpretation <the jury made a finding of fact>. 3. An evil deed; a crime <an accessory after the fact>.

"A fact is any act or condition of things, assumed (for the moment) as happening or existing." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 7 (1935).

ablative fact. See divestitive fact.

adjudicative fact (ə-joo-di-kay-tiv or -kə-tiv). A controlling or operative fact, rather than a background fact; a fact that concerns the parties to a judicial or administrative proceeding and that helps the court or agency determine how the law applies to those parties. ● For example, adjudicative facts include those that the jury weighs. Cf. legislative fact.

alienative fact (ay-lee-ə-nay-tiv or ay-lee-ə-nə-tiv). A fact that divests a person of a right by transferring it to another.

collateral fact. A fact not directly connected to the issue in dispute, esp. because it involves a different transaction from the one at issue.

collative fact. See investitive fact.

denotative fact (dee-noh-tay-tiv or di-noh-tə-tiv). A fact relevant to the use of a nonlegal term in a legal rule.

destitutive fact. See divestitive fact.

dispositive fact (dis-poz-ə-tiv). 1. A fact that confers rights or causes the loss of rights. ● A dispositive fact may be either an investitive or a divestitive fact. — Also termed vestitive fact (ves-tə-tiv). 2. A fact that is decisive of a legal matter; evidence that definitively resolves a legal issue or controversy. See DISPOSITION.

divestitive fact (di-ves-tə-tiv or di-). A fact that causes the loss of rights; an act or event modifying or extinguishing a legal relation. — Also termed destitutive fact; ablative fact.

elemental fact. See ultimate fact.

evaluative fact. A fact used to assess an action as being reasonable or negligent.

evidentiary fact (ev-i-den-shə-ree). 1. A fact that is necessary for or leads to the determination of an ultimate fact. — Also termed predicate fact. 2. A fact that furnishes evidence of the existence of some other fact. — Also termed evidential fact. 3. See fact in evidence.

exonerative fact (eg-zon-ər-ə-tiv or -ay-tiv). A divestitive fact that extinguishes a duty.

extinctive fact. A fact that divests a right by destroying it. — Also termed destitutive fact; ablative fact.

fabricated fact. See fabricated evidence under EVIDENCE.

fact in evidence. A fact that a tribunal considers in reaching a conclusion; a fact that has been admitted into evidence in a trial or hearing. — Sometimes written fact-in-evidence. — Also termed evidentiary fact.

"A fact-in-evidence, or, briefly, evidence, signifies any facts considered by the tribunal as data to persuade them to reach a reasoned belief upon a probandum. This process of thought by which the tribunal reasons from fact to probandum is termed inference." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 7 (1935).

fact in issue. (usu. pl.) 1. Hist. A fact that the plaintiff alleges and that the defendant controverts. 2. A fact to be determined by a fact-trier; PROBANDUM. — Also written fact-in-issue. — Also termed principal fact.

"A fact-in-issue is a fact as to the correctness of which the tribunal, under the law of the case, must be persuaded; the term 'probandum' (thing to be proved) will here be used as the convenient single word." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 7 (1935).

fact material to risk. Insurance. A fact that may increase the risk and that, if disclosed, might induce the insurer either to decline to insure or to require a higher premium.

foundational fact. See predicate fact.

immaterial fact. A fact that is not essential to a matter in issue.

impositive fact. An investitive fact that imposes duties.

inferential fact. A fact established by conclusions drawn from other evidence rather than from direct testimony or evidence; a fact derived logically from other facts.

investitive fact (in-ves-tə-tiv). A fact that confers rights. — Also termed collative fact (kə-lay-tiv).

judicial fact. A fact that the court accepts as proved without hearing evidence. See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

jurisdictional fact. (usu. pl.) A fact that must exist for a court to properly exercise its jurisdiction over a case, party, or thing. See JURISDICTIONAL-FACT DOCTRINE.

legal fact. A fact that triggers a particular legal consequence.

legislative fact. A fact that explains a particular law's rationality and that helps a court or agency determine the law's content and application. • Legislative facts are not ordinarily specific to the parties in a proceeding. Cf. adjudicative fact.

material fact. A fact that is significant or essential to the issue or matter at hand.

minor fact. A subordinate fact or circumstance.

operative fact. A fact that affects an existing legal relation, esp. a legal claim.

physical fact. A fact having a physical existence, such as a fingerprint left at a crime scene.

predicate fact (pred-ə-kit). A fact from which a presumption or inference arises. — Also termed foundational fact; evidentiary fact.

primary fact. A fact that can be established by direct testimony and from which inferences are made leading to ultimate facts. See ultimate fact.

principal fact. 1. A fact on which the plaintiff's right of recovery depends. 2. See fact in issue.

private fact. A fact that has not been made public. • Whether a fact is private often arises in invasion-of-privacy claims. Cf. public fact.

probative fact (proh-bə-tiv). A fact in evidence used to prove an ultimate fact, such as skid marks used to show speed as a predicate to a finding of negligence.

public fact. For the purpose of an invasion-of-privacy claim, a fact that is in a public record or in the public domain. Cf. private fact.

relative fact. A fact incidental to another fact; a minor fact.

translative fact (trans- or tranz-lay-tiv). A fact by means of which a right is transferred from one person to another; a fact that fulfills the double function of terminating one person's right to an object and of originating another's right to it.

ultimate fact. A fact essential to the claim or the defense. — Also termed elemental fact; principal fact.

undisputed fact. An uncontested or admitted fact, esp. one that a court has not deemed necessary to include in a finding of fact.

vestitive fact. See dispositive fact (1).

facta (fak-tə). [Latin] pl. FACTUM.

fact-finder. One or more persons — such as jurors in a trial or administrative-law judges in a hearing — who hear testimony and review evidence to rule on a factual issue. — Also termed finder of fact; fact-trier or trier of fact (in a judicial proceeding); fact-finding board (for a group or committee). See FINDING OF FACT.

fact-finding. 1. The process of taking evidence to determine the truth about a disputed point. 2. Int'l law. A method of gathering information for purposes of international relations, including legislative tours, the peaceful settlement of disputes, the supervision of international agreements, and the acquisition of information required for making decisions at an international level. — Also termed inquiry. 3. A method of alternative dispute resolution in which an impartial third party determines and studies the facts and positions of disputing parties that have reached an impasse, with a view toward clarifying the issues and helping the parties work through their dispute.

fact-finding board. See FACT-FINDER.

fact in evidence. See FACT.

fact in issue. See FACT.

fact material to risk. See FACT.

facto. See DE FACTO; IPSO FACTO.

facto et animo (fak-toh et an-ə-moh). [Latin] In fact and intent <taking possession facto et animo>.

factor, n. 1. An agent or cause that contributes to a particular result <punishment was a factor in the court's decision>. 2. An agent who is employed to sell property for the principal and who possesses or controls the property; a person who receives and sells goods for a commission . • A factor differs from a broker because the factor possesses or controls the property. — Also termed commission merchant; del credere bailiff. Cf. BROKER.

"A factor by the rules of common law and of mercantile usage is an agent to whom goods are consigned for the purpose of sale, and he has possession of the goods, power to sell them in his own name, and a general discretion as to their sale. He may sell them on the usual terms of credit, may receive the price, and give a good discharge to the buyer." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 523 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. One who buys accounts receivable at a discount <the company sold its receivables to a factor at only 5% of their stated value>. 4. A garnishee <the factor held $400 of the debtor's property when the writ of garnishment was served>.

factorage. 1. The compensation paid to a factor for his or her services. 2. The business of a factor.

factoring, n. The buying of accounts receivable at a discount. • The price is discounted because the factor (who buys them) assumes the risk of delay in collection and loss on the accounts receivable.

factorize, vb. See GARNISH.

factorizing process. A procedure or legal process by which a third party, rather than the creditor, attaches a debtor's property; GARNISHMENT. — Also termed trustee process; process by foreign attachment.

"In Vermont and Connecticut, the [garnishee] is also sometimes called the factor, and the process [of garnishing], factorizing process." Charles D. Drake, A Treatise on the Law of Suits by Attachment in the United States § 451, at 386 (7th ed. 1891).

factor's act. A statute protecting one who buys goods from a factor or agent by creating the presumption that the agent was acting on the owner's behalf and with the owner's approval.

factor's lien. See LIEN.

factory act. A statute that regulates workers' hours, health, and safety. See FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT.

fact pleading. See code pleading under PLEADING (2).

fact question. See QUESTION OF FACT.

fact-trier. See FACT-FINDER.

factual cause. See but-for cause under CAUSE (1).

factual impossibility. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

factum (fak-təm), n. [Latin] 1. A fact, such as a person's physical presence in a new domicile. 2. An act or deed, such as the due execution of a will. • Over time, factum in this sense came to mean "charter" — that is, the act or deed of conveying land, reduced to written form. See fraud in the factum under FRAUD.

"[I]t is only a short step to holding as a matter of law that a 'deed' — and by a deed (fet, factum) men are beginning to mean a sealed piece of parchment — has an operative force of its own which intentions expressed, never so plainly, in other ways have not. The sealing and delivering of the parchment is the contractual act. Further, what is done by 'deed' can only be undone by 'deed.'" 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 220 (2d ed. 1899).

factum juridicum (fak-təm juu-rid-i-kəm). [Latin] A juridical fact.

factum probandum (fak-təm prə-ban-dəm). [Latin] A fact to be proved.

factum probans (fak-təm proh-banz). [Latin] A probative or evidentiary fact.

3. A statement of facts. 4. BRIEF (1). Pl. facta.

facultative certificate (fak-əl-tay-tiv). Reinsurance. A contract of reinsurance separately negotiated to cover risks under a single insurance policy. • Facultative reinsurance allows the reinsurer the "faculty" of assessing and possibly rejecting a particular risk (esp. if underwriting information is inadequate).

facultative reinsurance. See REINSURANCE.

faculties. Hist. Eccles. law. 1. An authorization granted to a person to do what otherwise would not be allowed. 2. The extent of a husband's estate; esp., the ability to pay alimony. See ALLEGATION OF FACULTIES.

Faculties, Court of. See COURT OF FACULTIES.

Faculties, Master of the. See MASTER OF THE FACULTIES.

faderfium (fah-thər-fee-əm). Hist. A marriage gift to the bride from her father or brother.

faeder-feoh (fah-thər-fee). Hist. Property brought by a wife to her husband at marriage. • If the husband died, the property reverted to the widow if the heir of the deceased husband refused consent to her second marriage. The property reverted to the widow's family if she returned to them.

faggot. Hist. 1. A piece of firewood used to burn a heretic alive. 2. An embroidered figure of a faggot, required to be worn by heretics who had recanted.

fail, n. A transaction between securities brokers in which delivery and payment do not occur at the prescribed time, usu. on the settlement date. — Also termed fail contract.

fail to deliver. The nondelivery of securities from a selling broker to a buying broker by the settlement date.

fail to receive. The failure of a buying broker to receive delivery of securities from the selling broker by the settlement date.

fail, vb. 1. To be deficient or unsuccessful; to fall short <they failed to settle the dispute>. 2. To become insolvent or bankrupt <two banks failed last week>. 3. To lapse <the bequest failed as a result of ademption>.

failing circumstances. See INSOLVENCY.

failing-company doctrine. Antitrust. The rule that allows an otherwise proscribed merger or acquisition between competitors when one is bankrupt or near failure. 15 USCA §§ 12–27. — Also termed failing-firm defense.

"The 1992 guidelines provide a limited defense for failing firms and failing divisions of firms. The defense is available if impending failure would cause the assets of one party to leave the market if the merger does not occur. Thus to establish a failing firm defense, the parties must show that the failing firm cannot (1) meet its financial obligations, (2) reorganize in bankruptcy, and (3) find another buyer whose purchase of the firm would pose lesser anticompetitive risks. The parties must further show that (4) without the merger, the failing firm's assets will exit the market." Ernest Gellhorn & William E. Kovacic, Antitrust Law and Economics in a Nutshell 398–99 (4th ed. 1994).

fail position. A situation existing when, after all transactions in a security have been netted out, a broker owes another broker more securities than it has coming in from other firms.

failure. 1. Deficiency; lack; want. 2. An omission of an expected action, occurrence, or performance. See LAPSE (2).

failure of a condition. A situation in which an event required in a contract is not satisfied, as a result of which the adversely affected party is discharged from performing. • This situation does not void the contract; the parties are still bound, but one party does not have to perform because of the failure of the condition.

failure of consideration. See FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

failure of good behavior. A civil servant's act that is ground for removal.

failure of issue. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

failure of justice. See MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE.

failure of proof. A party's not having produced evidence establishing a fact essential to a claim or defense.

failure of title. A seller's inability to establish a good claim to the property contracted for sale. Cf. clear title under TITLE.

failure of trust. The lapse of a trust because the instrument creating it has a defect or because of its illegality or other legal impediment.

failure otherwise than on the merits. The defeat of a plaintiff's claim by a procedural device without a decision on the existence of the claim's elements.

failure to bargain collectively. An employer's refusal to discuss labor issues with a union.

failure to make delivery. Nondelivery or misdelivery.

failure to meet obligations. See BANKRUPTCY (2); INSOLVENCY.

failure to perform. A party's not meeting its obligations under a contract. See CONTRACT (4).

failure to state a cause of action. A plaintiff's not having alleged facts in the complaint sufficient to maintain a claim. • This failure warrants dismissal of the complaint.

failure to testify. A party's — esp. a criminal defendant's — decision not to testify. • Under the Fifth Amendment, the prosecutor and the judge cannot comment to the jury on a criminal defendant's failure to testify. But comments on the failure are usu. permissible in a civil case.

failure of consideration. A situation in which a contract's basis or inducement ceases to exist or becomes worthless. • This term, unlike consideration per se, relates not to the formation of a contract but to its performance. See CONSIDERATION. Cf. WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

"An illustration will help indicate how the term is used. If C promises to build a structure for O and O promises to make payment when the work is completed, it is clear that there is consideration on both sides of this contract and that therefore a contract was formed upon the exchange of promises. If C fails to perform, the result is sometimes described as a 'failure of consideration.' 'Failure of consideration' simply means a failure to perform and as used covers both a material breach of constructive conditions and a failure to perform an express condition. The use of the term 'failure of consideration' in this sense appears to be an unnecessary invitation to confusion because the word consideration is being used in two different senses. Fortunately, the use of this phrase has gradually fallen into disuse. It is, however, still sufficiently widespread to be mentioned here. This volume nowhere utilizes 'failure of consideration' as an operative concept." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 11-21, at 474-75 (3d ed. 1987).

partial failure of consideration. A situation in which the contract consists of separable items of consideration and separable parts of the agreement, so that if part of the consideration fails, the appropriate part of the agreement can be apportioned to it. • The several parts of the contract are in effect treated as separate contracts, and the contract is voided only to the extent that the consideration for one part fails.

total failure of consideration. A situation in which the contract is indivisible so that a complete lack of consideration voids the contract.

"The concept of total failure of consideration is a somewhat technical one. In particular there may be a total failure of consideration even though the defendant has actually done some work or expended some money in the performance of the contract, provided that what he has done has not enured to the benefit of the other party. For example, if a person orders machinery to be specially constructed for him, there will be a total failure of consideration if none of the machinery is delivered to him although work may have been commenced and money expended on it. On the other hand, if some benefit has been received under the contract, no matter how trifling, there is no total failure of consideration. In this case, just as there is generally no right to part payment for part performance, so also there is generally no right to part recovery for partial failure of consideration." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 306-07 (3d ed. 1981).

failure of good behavior. See FAILURE.

failure of issue. The fact of dying without children, esp. if they would have inherited the decedent's estate. — Also termed dying without issue. See ISSUE (3).

"There has been considerable litigation during the past several centuries over the meaning of a gift to 'A and his heirs, but if A shall die without issue, to B and his heirs.' First of all, what does 'die without issue' mean? The answer appears simple — you look to the time of A's death to determine whether or not he has any children or grandchildren. But that is not the way the English courts originally construed this language. The English adopted the so-called 'indefinite failure of issue' construction — if at any time in the future A's line of descent should come to an end, then there was a gift over to B and his heirs. The effect of this was a fee tail in A and a remainder in B. This seems a distortion of the language, and particularly unsuited to American circumstances since the fee tail never found a real home here. Most of our jurisdictions, by judicial decision or statute, adopted the so-called 'definite failure of issue' construction — you look to the date of A's death to determine whether he has issue, and to that time alone. If A has issue at that time, then the gift over to B fails. This seems to be the literal meaning of the words, and it is the only sensible conclusion in a system where the fee tail is virtually a dead letter. The English also struck down the constructional preference for indefinite failure by statute in the nineteenth century." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 236-37 (2d ed. 1984).

indefinite failure of issue. A failure of issue whenever it happens, without any certain period within which it must happen.

failure of justice. See MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE.

erage growth rates. ● Failure to thrive is sometimes asserted as a ground for terminating parental rights.

faint action. See FEIGNED ACTION.

faint pleader. A false, fraudulent, or collusive manner of pleading.

fair, adj. 1. Impartial; just; equitable; disinterested <everyone thought that Judge Jones was fair>. 2. Free of bias or prejudice <in jury selection, the lawyers tried to select a fair and impartial jury>.

fair, n. Hist. A privileged market for the buying and selling of goods. ● A fair was an incorporeal hereditament granted to a town by royal patent or franchise or established by prescription. The franchise to hold a fair conferred important privileges, and a fair, as a legally recognized institution, possessed distinctive legal characteristics, most of which are now obsolete. Cf. market overt under MARKET.

fair-and-equitable requirement. Bankruptcy. A Bankruptcy Code standard requiring a forced, nonconsensual Chapter 11 plan (a "cramdown" plan) to provide adequately for each class of interests that has not accepted the plan. ● In determining whether a cramdown plan is fair and equitable and thus can be confirmed, a bankruptcy court must apply the Code's detailed statutory criteria, consider the plan as a whole, and weigh all the circumstances surrounding the treatment of each impaired class of interests. In addition to the fair-and-equitable requirement, the Chapter 11 cramdown plan must (1) be accepted by at least one impaired class of claims, and (2) not discriminate unfairly among impaired classes that have not accepted the plan. 11 USCA § 1129(b). See CRAMDOWN.

fair and impartial jury. See impartial jury under JURY.

fair and impartial trial. See FAIR TRIAL.

fair and proper legal assessment. See EQUALIZATION.

fair and reasonable value. See fair market value under VALUE.

fair and valuable consideration. See fair consideration under CONSIDERATION.

fair averaging. The process of assessing taxes by using the average of the amount and price of goods acquired over a 12-month period rather than the amount and price at a particular time of the year.

fair cash market value. See fair market value under VALUE.

fair cash value. See fair market value under VALUE.

fair comment. A statement based on the writer's or speaker's honest opinion about a matter of public concern. • Fair comment is a defense to libel or slander.

fair competition. See COMPETITION.

fair consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

Fair Credit Billing Act. A federal law that facilitates the correction of billing errors by credit-card companies and makes those companies more responsible for the quality of goods purchased by cardholders. 15 USCA §§ 1666-1666j.

fair-credit-reporting act. A federal or state law that regulates the keeping of credit reports and ensures the right of consumers to get and correct their credit reports. • The federal Fair Credit Reporting Act was enacted in 1970. 15 USCA §§ 1681-1681u.

fair-cross-section requirement. Constitutional law. The principle that a person's right to an impartial jury, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, includes a requirement that the pool of potential jurors fairly represent the composition of the jurisdiction's population. • The pool of potential jurors need not precisely match the composition of the jurisdiction. But the representation of each group must be fair, and there must not be a systematic exclusion or underrepresentation of any group. A minimal disparity in a particular group's representation, such as an absolute disparity of 10%, will not ordinarily violate this principle unless some aggravating factor exists. See DUREN TEST; ABSOLUTE DISPARITY; COMPARATIVE DISPARITY; STATISTICAL-DECISION THEORY.

fair dealing, n. 1. The conduct of business with full disclosure, usu. by a corporate officer with the corporation. 2. A fiduciary's transacting of business so that, although the fiduciary might derive a personal benefit, all interested persons are fully apprised of that potential and of all other material information about the transaction. Cf. SELF-DEALING.

fair hearing. See HEARING.

Fair Labor Standards Act. A federal law, enacted in 1938, that regulates minimum wages, overtime pay, and the employment of minors. 29 USCA §§ 201-219. — Abbr. FLSA.

fairly-debatable rule. 1. Insurance. In some states, a test that requires an insurer to have a plausible basis for denying a claim to avoid bad-faith liability. 2. Zoning. A doctrine that bars a court from interfering with a zoning decision that is supported by substantial evidence, although it is one on which reasonable minds can differ. • A court will not interfere with a decision supported by substantial evidence.

fair market price. See fair market value under VALUE.

fair market value. See VALUE.

fairness doctrine. A federal law, based on an FCC rule, requiring the broadcast media to furnish a reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance. • The FCC abandoned the fairness doctrine in 1987. — Also termed equal-time doctrine.

fair notice. See NOTICE.

fair on its face. (Of a document) having the appearance of being regular or legal and not capable of being shown to be defective without extraneous evidence.

fair play. Equity, candor, and fidelity in dealings with another.

fair play and substantial justice. The fairness requirement that a court must meet in its assertion of personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant to comport with due process. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154 (1945). See MINIMUM CONTACTS.

fair preponderance of the evidence. See PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE.

fair rate of return. See RATE OF RETURN.

fair-report privilege. A defense to liability for publishing defamatory matter from a report of an official or judicial proceeding, when the report is a full, fair, and accurate account of the proceeding.

fair representation. Labor law. Union representation that adequately covers all union members in collective bargaining and in the lodging of grievances.

fair return on investment. See RETURN.

fair sale. See SALE.

fair trade, n. Commerce conducted under a fair-trade agreement.

fair-trade agreement. A commercial agreement that a seller will sell all of a producer's goods at or above a specified minimum price. ● Fair-trade agreements were valid until 1975, when the Consumer Goods Pricing Act made them illegal. 15 USCA §§ 1, 45.

fair trial. A trial by an impartial and disinterested tribunal in accordance with regular procedures; esp., a criminal trial in which the defendant's constitutional and legal rights are respected. — Also termed fair and impartial trial.

fair use. Copyright. A reasonable and limited use of a copyrighted work without the author's permission, such as quoting from a book in a book review or using parts of it in a parody. ● Fair use is a defense to an infringement claim, depending on the following statutory factors: (1) the purpose and character of the use, (2) the nature of the copyrighted work, (3) the amount of the work used, and (4) the economic impact of the use. 17 USCA § 107.

"[Fair use is] the most troublesome [problem] in the whole law of copyright." Dellar v. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., 104 F.2d 661, 662 (2d Cir. 1939) (per curiam).

"Fair use is a judicial safety valve, empowering courts to excuse certain quotations or copies of copyrighted material even though the literal terms of the Copyright Act prohibit them." Paul Goldstein, Copyright's Highway 84 (1994).

fair value. See fair market value under VALUE.

fair-value accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

fair-value law. A statute allowing a credit against a deficiency for the amount that the fair market value of land exceeds the price at foreclosure. — Also termed fair-value legislation.

fair warning. Criminal law. The requirement that a criminal statute define an offense with enough precision so that a reasonable person can know what conduct is prohibited and so that a reasonably skilled lawyer can predict what conduct falls within the statute's scope. — Also termed fair notice.

fair wear and tear. See WEAR AND TEAR.

fait (fay or fe). [Law French fr. Latin factum] Anything done; an act or deed. ● The term fait accompli (fay or fe tə-kom-plee), meaning "a deed accomplished," which is not merely legal, is related to this word.

fait enrolle (fay or fe ton-rohl). [Law French] Hist. An enrolled deed of a sale of a freehold estate.

faith and trust. See FLIM FLAM.

Faithfully Executed Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution providing that the President must take care that the laws are carried out faithfully. U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

fake, n. Something that is not what it purports to be. See FORGERY (2); IMPOSTOR.

fake, vb. To make or construct falsely. See COUNTERFEIT.

Falcidian law (fal-sid-ee-ən). Roman law. A law prescribing that no one could give more than three-fourths of one's property in legacies and that the heirs should receive at least one-fourth (the Falcidian portion). ● If the testator violated this law, the heir had the right to deduct proportionally from each legatee as necessary. The law, proposed by the Roman tribune Falcidius, was enacted in 40 B.C. — Also termed lex falcidia. See LEGITIME.

"A large number of small legacies might [either] leave nothing for the heir . . . [or] make his part so small as to seem valueless in his eyes. But a Falcidian law, passed in the year 40 B.C., put an end to the whole difficulty. This law secured to the heir a quarter of the net value of the estate; the legatees could obtain only three-quarters: if the legatees named in the will amounted to more than this, they were diminished by proportional reductions. . . . Few measures have accomplished their purpose more satisfactorily than the Falcidian law, which remained in force through the history of the empire, and holds an important place in the system of Justinian." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 321–22 (1881).

Falcidian portion. Roman law. The one-fourth part of an estate that one or more instituted heirs are entitled to retain. • The Falcidian portion has been abolished in Louisiana, but a legitimate heir is entitled to a portion by law. — Also termed quarta falcidia. See forced heir under HEIR; LEGITIME.

Falconer error. A trial court's failure to instruct the jury that a guilty finding on a manslaughter charge requires acquittal on a murder charge. Falconer v. Lane, 905 F.2d 1129 (7th Cir. 1990).

falsa causa. See CAUSA (2).

falsa demonstratio (fal-sə or fawl-sə dem-ən-stray-shee-oh). Roman law. A false designation; an erroneous description of a person or thing in a legal instrument. • Generally, a simple error in description, grammar, or spelling will not void an instrument or even a single provision in it (such as a bequest by will). — Also termed false demonstration.

falsa moneta (fal-sə or fawl-sə mə-nee-tə). Roman law. Counterfeit money.

falsare (fal-sair-ee or fawl-), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To counterfeit; to falsify.

falsarius (fal-sair-ee-əs or fawl-). [Law Latin] Hist. A counterfeiter. — Also spelled falcarius. — Also termed falsionarius.

false, adj. 1. Untrue . 2. Deceitful; lying . 3. Not genuine; inauthentic <false coinage>. • What is false can be so by intent, by accident, or by mistake.

false action. See FEIGNED ACTION.

false advertising, n. The tortious and sometimes criminal act of distributing an advertisement that is untrue, deceptive, or misleading. — Also termed deceptive advertising.

false answer. A sham answer in a pleading. See sham pleading under PLEADING.

false arrest. See ARREST.

false character. Hist. The crime of impersonating a servant's master or mistress. See IMPOSTOR.

false check. See bad check under CHECK.

false claim. An assertion or statement that is untrue; esp., overbilling.

False Claims Act. A federal statute establishing civil and criminal penalties against persons who bill the government falsely, deliver less to the government than represented, or use a fake record to decrease an obligation to the government. 18 USCA §§ 286–287; 31 USCA §§ 3729–3733. • The Act may be enforced either by the attorney general or by a private person in a qui tam action.

false conflict of laws. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

false demonstration. See FALSA DEMONSTRATIO.

false evidence. See false testimony under TESTIMONY.

falsehood. A lie. See LIE; PERJURY.

false impersonation. See IMPERSONATION.

false-implication libel. See LIBEL.

false imprisonment. A restraint of a person in a bounded area without justification or consent. • False imprisonment is a common-law misdemeanor and a tort. It applies to private as well as governmental detention. Cf. false arrest under ARREST.

“[In the phrase false imprisonment,] false is . . . used not in the ordinary sense of mendacious or fallacious, but in the less common though well-established sense of erroneous or wrong; as in the phrases false quantity, false step, false taste, etc.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 123 n.38 (17th ed. 1977).

“False imprisonment was a misdemeanor at common law and is recognized by some states today. It differs from kidnapping in that asportation is not required. If the imprisonment is secret, some jurisdictions treat it as kidnapping.” Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 65 (2d ed. 1987).

false judgment. Hist. A writ filed to obtain review of a judgment of a court not of record.

“After judgment given, a writ also of false judgment lies to the courts at Westminster to rehear and review the cause, and not a writ of error; for this is not a court of record...." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 34 (1768).

false light. 1. Torts. In an invasion-of-privacy action, a plaintiff's allegation that the defendant attributed to the plaintiff views that he or she does not hold and placed the plaintiff before the public in a highly offensive and untrue manner. • If the matter involves the public interest, the plaintiff must prove the defendant's malice. See INVASION OF PRIVACY. 2. (usu. pl.) Maritime law. A signal displayed intentionally to lure a vessel into danger. 18 USCA § 1658(b). — Also termed false light or signal.

false making. See FORGERY.

false misrepresentation. See MISREPRESENTATION. • This phrase is redundant — misrepresentation includes the idea of falsity.

false news. Hist. The misdemeanor of spreading false information that causes discord between the monarch and the people or between important people in the realm. 3 Edw. I, ch. 34.

false oath. See PERJURY.

false personation. See false impersonation under IMPERSONATION.

false plea. See sham pleading under PLEADING (1).

false pretenses. The crime of knowingly obtaining title to another's personal property by misrepresenting a fact with the intent to defraud. • Although unknown to English common law, false pretenses became a misdemeanor under a statute old enough to make it common law in the United States. Modern American statutes make it either a felony or a misdemeanor, depending on how valuable the property is. — Also termed obtaining property by false pretenses; fraudulent pretenses. Cf. larceny by trick under LARCENY; EMBEZZLEMENT.

false report. The criminal offense of informing law enforcement about a crime that did not occur.

false representation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

false return. 1. A process server's or other court official's recorded misrepresentation that process was served, that some other action was taken, or that something is true. 2. A tax return on which taxable income is incorrectly reported or the tax is incorrectly computed. See TAX RETURN.

false statement. 1. An untrue statement knowingly made with the intent to mislead. See PERJURY. 2. Any one of three distinct federal offenses: (1) falsifying or concealing a material fact by trick, scheme, or device; (2) making a false, fictitious, or fraudulent representation; and (3) making or using a false document or writing. 18 USCA § 1001.

false swearing. See PERJURY.

false testimony. See TESTIMONY.

false verdict. See VERDICT.

false weight. (usu. pl.) A weight or measure that does not comply with governmentally prescribed standards or with the prevailing custom in the place and business in which the weight or measure is used.

falsi crimen. See CRIMEN FALSI.

falsify, vb. 1. To make something false; to counterfeit or forge <the chiropractor falsified his records to help the plaintiff>. See COUNTERFEIT; FORGERY. 2. Rare. To prove something to be false or erroneous <their goal in the appeal was to falsify the jury's verdict>.

falsifying a record. The crime of making false entries or otherwise tampering with a public record with the intent to deceive or injure, or to conceal wrongdoing. 18 USCA §§ 1506, 2071, 2073; Model Penal Code § 224.4.

falsity, n. 1. Something (such as a statement) that is false. See LIE. 2. The quality of being false. See FALSE.

falsionarius. See FALSARIUS.

falso retorno brevium (fal-soh [or fawl-soh] ri-tor-noh bree-vee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. A writ against a sheriff for falsely returning a writ.

falsum (fal-səm or fawl-səm), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A false statement. 2. A crime involving forgery or falsification.

falsus in uno doctrine (fal-səs [or fawl-səs] in yoo-noh). [fr. Latin falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus "false in one thing, false in all"] The principle that if the jury believes that a witness's testimony on a material issue is intentionally deceitful, the jury may disregard all of that witness's testimony.

"[T]here is an old maxim 'falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus' (false in one thing, false in all), which is often much overemphasized by counsel, though it is recognized by many courts in their charges to the jury. But this is only primitive psychology, and should be completely discarded." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 181 (1935).

fama publica (fay-mə pəb-li-kə). [Latin "public repute"] Hist. A person's reputation in the community. • A person's fama publica could be used against him or her in a criminal proceeding. Cf. ILL FAME.

"Now in the thirteenth century we find in the sheriff's turn a procedure by way of double presentment, and we may see it often, though not always, when a coroner is holding an inquest over the body of a dead man. The fama publica is twice distilled. The representatives of the vills make presentments to a jury of twelve freeholders which represents the hundred, and then such of these presentments as the twelve jurors are willing to 'avow,' or make their own, are presented by them to the sheriff. . . . From the very first the legal forefathers of our grand jurors are not in the majority of cases supposed to be reporting crimes that they have witnessed, or even to be the originators of the fama publica. We should be guilty of an anachronism if we spoke of them as 'endorsing a bill' that is 'preferred' to them; but still they are handing on and 'avowing' as their own a rumour that has been reported to them by others." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 643 (2d ed. 1899).

familia (fə-mil-ee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. 1. All the persons in the power of the head of a family. See PATERFAMILIAS. 2. One's legal relations through and with one's family, including all property, ancestral privileges, and duties.

"The testator conveyed to him outright his whole 'familia,' that is, all the rights he enjoyed over and through the family; his property, his slaves, and all his ancestral privileges, together, on the other hand, with all his duties and obligations." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 170 (17th ed. 1901).

3. A family, including household servants.

"Familia. . . . A family or household, including servants, that is, hired persons (mercenarii or conductitii), as well as bondsmen, and all who were under the authority of one master, (dominus.) Bracton uses the word in the original sense, as denoting servants or domestics." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 603-04 (2d ed. 1867).

familiae emptor (fə-mil-ee-ee emp-tor). [Latin "estate purchaser"] Roman law. A trustee who received an inheritance by a fictitious purchase and distributed it as the testator instructed. — Also termed emptor familiae. See HERES; TWELVE TABLES.

"At some date, probably long before the XII Tables, men on the point of death, unable to make a true will because there was no imminent sitting of the Comitia, adopted the practice of conveying all their property . . . to a person who is described as the familiae emptor, and who is said by Gaius to be in loco heredis. Instructions were no doubt given to him as to the disposal of the property or part of it, but it is not clear that these were enforceable. . . ." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 175 (2d ed. 1953).

family of nations. Int'l law. The community of countries to which international law applies. ● This term is now obsolescent. It is increasingly rejected as Eurocentric.

“The family of nations' is an aggregate of States which, as the result of their historical antecedents, have inherited a common civilisation, and are at a similar level of moral and political opinion.” Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 396 (13th ed. 1924).

family partnership. A partnership that includes family members. IRC (26 USCA) § 704(e). See FAMILY-PARTNERSHIP RULES.

family-partnership rules. Laws designed to prevent the shifting of income among partners, esp. family members, who may not be dealing at arm's length.

family-purpose rule. Torts. The principle that a vehicle's owner is liable for injuries or damage caused by a family member's negligent driving. ● Many states have abolished this rule. — Also termed family-purpose doctrine; family-automobile doctrine; family-car doctrine. Cf. GUEST STATUTE.

“A number of jurisdictions have adopted the so-called 'family purpose' doctrine, under which the owner of a motor vehicle purchased or maintained for the pleasure of his family is liable for injuries inflicted by the negligent operation of the vehicle while it is being used by members of the family for their own pleasure, on the theory that the vehicle is being used for the purpose or business for which it was kept, and that the person operating it is therefore acting as the owner's agent or servant in using it.” 8 Am. Jur. 2d Automobiles and Highway Traffic § 715, at 296 (1997).

family settlement. See FAMILY ARRANGEMENT.

famosus (fə-moh-səs), adj. [Latin] Hist. 1. (Of a statement) having a defamatory character. 2. (Of an action) involving infamy if the defendant lost the case.

Farm Credit Administration. The federal agency responsible for supervising the federal farm-credit system. — Abbr. FCA. See FEDERAL FARM CREDIT SYSTEM.

farmee. See FARMOUTEE.

farmer. A person engaged in the business of farming.

family farmer. A person or entity whose income and debts primarily arise from a family-owned and-operated farm; esp., person who received more than 80% of gross income from a farm in the taxable year immediately preceding a Chapter 12 filing. • Only a family farmer can file for Chapter 12 bankruptcy. 11 USCA § 101(18). See CHAPTER 12.

farmer bankruptcy. See CHAPTER 12.

Farmers Home Administration. A division of the U.S. Department of Agriculture that makes mortgage loans to farmers, issues home-mortgage insurance, and funds public-works programs in rural areas and small towns. — Abbr. FmHA; FHA.

farminee. See FARMOUTEE.

farming operation. Bankruptcy. A business engaged in farming, tillage of soil, dairy farming, ranching, raising of crops, poultry, or livestock, and production of poultry or livestock products in an unmanufactured state. 11 USCA § 101(21). See CHAPTER 12.

farminor. See FARMOUTOR.

farm let, vb. Hist. To lease; to let land for rent. • To farm let is a phrasal verb that commonly appeared in real-property leases; it corresponds with its Latin root, ad firmam tradidi.

farm out, vb. 1. To turn over something (such as an oil-and-gas lease) for performance by another. • The term evolved from the Roman practice of transferring the right to collect taxes to a third party for a fee. It was later practiced in England, Scotland, and France but has been long abolished because the practice led to abuses. 2. Hist. To lease for a term. 3. To exhaust farmland, esp. by continuously raising a single crop.

farmout agreement, n. Oil & gas. A transaction in which the owner of an oil-and-gas lease farmoutee (fahr-ow-tee). An oil-and-gas sublessee to whom the lease is assigned for purposes of drilling a well. — Also termed farmee; farminee.

(the farmoutor) assigns the lease to another (the farmoutee), who agrees to drill a well on the lease. • The farmoutor usu. retains an overriding royalty interest in the lease. — Often shortened to farmout. — Also written farm out agreement; farm-out agreement. See ASSIGNMENT.

farmoutor (fahr-ow-tor or -tər). An oil-and-gas lessee who assigns the lease to another, who agrees to drill a well. — Also spelled farmouter. — Also termed farmor; farminor.

farm products. Crops, livestock, and supplies used or produced in farming or products of crops or livestock in their unmanufactured states, if they are in the possession of a debtor engaged in farming. UCC § 9–109(3). Cf. growing crops under CROPS.

farthing of land (fahr-thing). Hist. An area of land measured as one-quarter of a larger area (much as a farthing was one-quarter of a penny). • A farthing of land ranged from a quarter of a hide to a quarter of an acre.

farvand (fahr-vənd). Hist. Maritime law. Voyage or passage by water under a charterparty.

F.A.S. abbr. FREE ALONGSIDE SHIP.

fas (fas), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Moral law of divine origin; divine law. • Jus, by contrast, is created by man. See JUS.

“The first element to be noted in the Roman composite existing in primitive times, when religion and law were not distinguished, is fas — the will of the gods, embodied in rules that regulated not only ceremonials but the conduct of all men as such.” Hannis Taylor, The Science of Jurisprudence 65 (1908).

“It is true that the two spheres of ius and fas overlapped. . . . All this, however, concerned merely the question of where to draw the line between ius and fas; it did not blur the distinction between the two. From the standpoint of the history of Roman law, this distinction, consciously made from very early times, was of great importance, since it enabled the Romans to delimit the scope and the contents of strictly legal rules. This attitude may occasionally have caused a certain cold aloofness from purely human problems, but it undoubtedly contributed to the clarity of the legal system.” Hans Julius Wolff, Roman Law: An Historical Introduction 51–52 (1951).

2. What is right, proper, lawful, and permitted.

FASB (faz-bee). abbr. FINANCIAL ACCOUNTING STANDARDS BOARD.

FASB statement. An official pronouncement from the Financial Accounting Standards Board establishing a given financial-accounting practice as acceptable.

fast estate. See real property under PROPERTY.

fasti (fas-ti). [Latin] Roman law. 1. The days on which court can be held. • In this sense, fasti is a shortened form of dies fasti. 2. A calendar of days on which court can be held. See dies fasti under DIES.

fast-tracking, n. A court's method of accelerating the disposition of cases in an effort to clear its docket. • For example, a judge might order that all discovery must be finished within 90 days, and that trial is set for 30 days later. — fast-track, vb. See ROCKET DOCKET.

fatal, adj. 1. Of or relating to death <the decision had fatal consequences>. 2. Providing grounds for legal invalidity .

fatal defect. See DEFECT.

adoptive father. See adoptive parent under PARENT.

biological father. See natural father.

foster father. See foster parent under PARENT.

legal father. The man recognized by law as the male parent of a child. • A man is the legal father of a child if he was married to the child's natural mother when the child was born, if he has recognized or acknowledged the child, or if he has been declared the child's natural father in a paternity action.

natural father. The man who impregnated the child's natural mother. — Also termed biological father.

presumed father. The man presumed to be the father of a child for any of several reasons: (1) because he was married to the child's natural mother when the child was conceived or born, (2) because the child was conceived or born during an invalid marriage, (3) because the man married the mother after the child's birth and agreed either to have his name on the birth certificate or to support the child, or (4) because the man welcomed the child into his home and held out the child as his own.

putative father (pyoo-tə-tiv). The alleged biological father of a child born out of wedlock.

stepfather. See STEPFATHER.

Fatico hearing (fat-ə-koh). Criminal procedure. A sentencing hearing at which the prosecution and the defense may present evidence about what the defendant's sentence should be. United States v. Fatico, 603 F.2d 1053 (2d Cir. 1979).

federal common law. The body of decisional law derived from federal courts adjudicating federal questions and other matters of federal concern, such as the law applying to disputes between two states, as well as federal foreign-relations law.

"Notwithstanding Erie, the federal common law still lives in a number of areas. In some, such as admiralty . . . the power to create common law has been inferred from a constitutional or statutory grant of jurisdiction, where a federal common law has appeared necessary to accomplish the purposes of the grant. In other cases, on more or less persuasive evidence, the [Supreme] Court has inferred implicit damage remedies on behalf of injured parties from federal statutes imposing duties for their protection, or has found an implicit congressional delegation of authority to make common law, as in actions on collective-bargaining agreements affecting commerce under the Taft-Hartley Act, § 301." David P. Currie, Federal Jurisdiction in a Nutshell 226 (3d ed. 1990).

Federal Communications Commission. The federal agency that regulates interstate and foreign communications by radio, television, telephone, and telegraph, and oversees radio and television broadcasting standards, cable-television operations, two-way-radio operators, and satellite communications. — Abbr. federal jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

Federal Kidnapping Act. A federal law punishing kidnapping for ransom or reward when the victim is transported interstate or internationally. • The law presumes that a victim has been transported in violation of the law if the victim is not released within 24 hours. 18 USCA § 1201. — Also termed Lindbergh Act.

“The Federal Kidnapping Act was passed in 1932 to close a dangerous loophole between state and federal law. At that time, marauding bands of kidnapers were preying upon the wealthy with ruthless abandon, seizing their victims for ransom while operating outside the reach of existing state laws. Knowing that authorities in the victim's home state were powerless once a hostage was transported across state lines, the criminals would kidnap their target in one state, then move quickly to the next. In response, Congress made kidnapping a federal crime when the victim was moved from one state to another, and comprehensive language was used to cover every possible variety of kidnapping followed by interstate transportation.” 1 Am. Jur. 2d Abduction and Kidnapping § 14, at 185 (1994).

federal labor union. See UNION.

federal land bank. One of a system of twelve regional banks created in 1916 to provide mortgage loans to farmers. • The system is now merged with federal intermediate credit banks to create the federal farm-credit system.

federal reserve note. The paper currency in circulation in the United States. ● The notes are issued by the Federal Reserve Banks, are effectively non-interest-bearing promissory notes payable to bearer on demand, and are issued in denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000.

Federal Reserve System. A network of 12 central banks supervised by the Board of Governors, who are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and who set the reserve requirements for the member banks, review the discount-rate actions of the regional Federal Reserve banks, and set ceilings on the interest rates that member banks may pay. — Abbr. Fed.

“The Federal Reserve System of 1913 evolved out of a search for consensus among bankers, politicians, and some academic experts. It was a move toward ‘central bank’ regulation in the European sense . . . [The System] seemed to resolve the outstanding problems in money and banking. Federal Reserve banknotes could grow with expanding commercial paper and economic prosperity, and assure a more adequate, reliable monetary growth.” William A. Lovett, Banking and Financial Institutions Law in a Nutshell 14–15 (1997).

Federal Rules Act. A 1934 statute granting the U.S. Supreme Court the authority to adopt rules of civil procedure for federal courts. ● For the rulemaking power of federal courts today, see 28 USCA §§ 2071, 2072.

Federal Tort Claims Act. A statute that limits federal sovereign immunity and allows recovery in federal court for tort damages caused by federal employees, but only if the law of the state where the injury occurred would hold a private person liable for the injury. 28 USCA §§ 2671–2680 — Abbr. FTCA. See sovereign immunity under IMMUNITY.

Federal Trade Commission. The independent regulatory agency created in 1914 to enforce the antitrust laws and other prohibitions against false, deceptive, and unfair advertising or trade practices. — Abbr. FTC.

federal transfer. The federal district court’s right to move a civil action filed there to any other district or division where the plaintiff could have brought the action originally. 28 USCA § 1404(a). See CHANGE OF VENUE.

fee. 1. A charge for labor or services, esp. professional services.

attorney’s fees. See ATTORNEY’S FEES.

contingent fee. See CONTINGENT FEE.

docket fee. A fee charged by a court for filing a claim.

expert-witness fee. A fee paid for the professional services of an expert witness.

franchise fee. 1. A fee paid by a franchisee to a franchisor for franchise rights. ● Franchise fees are regulated by state laws. 2. A fee paid to the government for a government grant of a franchise, such as the one required for operating a radio or television station.

jury fee. A fee, usu. a minimal one, that a party must pay the court clerk to be entitled to a jury trial.

maintenance fee. A fee to pay for the service of reinvesting earnings and dividends in mutual funds.

management fee. A fee charged by an investment manager for supervisory services.

origination fee. A fee charged by a lender for preparing and processing a loan.

witness fee. 1. A statutory fee that must be tendered with a subpoena for the subpoena to be binding. 2. A fee paid by a party to a witness as reimbursement for reasonable expenses (such as travel, meals, lodging, and loss of time) incurred as a result of the witness’s having to attend trial and testify. ● Any other payment to a witness is considered unethical.

2. An inheritable interest in land, constituting maximal legal ownership; esp., a fee simple absolute. — Also termed fee estate; feod; feodum; feud; feudum; fief. See FEE SIMPLE.

“To enfeoff someone was to transfer to him an interest in land called a fief — or, if you prefer, a feoff, feod, or feud. Our modern word fee, a direct lineal descendant of fief, implies the characteristic of potentially infinite duration when used to describe an interest in land today; but in the earliest part of the feudal period, a fief might have been as small as a life interest. We shall see later that feoffment was not used to transfer interests ‘smaller’ than life interests — e.g., so-called terms for years — but for our purposes now we may simply note that transfers of interests for life or ‘larger’ were accomplished by livery of seisin.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, arriere fee (ar-ee-air or ar-ee-ər). Hist. A fee dependent on a superior one; a subfief. — Also termed arriere fief.

base fee. A fee that has some qualification connected to it and that terminates whenever the qualification terminates. • An example of the words creating a base fee are “to A and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Tinsleydale,” which would terminate when A or his heirs are no longer tenants of the manor of Tinsleydale. Among the base fees at common law are the fee simple subject to a condition subsequent and the conditional fee. — Also termed determinable fee; qualified fee; limited fee. See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE.

fee expectant. Rare. A fee tail created when land is given to a man and wife and the heirs of their bodies. See FRANKMARRIAGE.

fee simple. See FEE SIMPLE.

fee tail. See FEE TAIL.

great fee. Hist. In feudal law, a fee held directly from the Crown.

knight's fee. See KNIGHT'S FEE.

lay fee. Hist. A fee estate in land held by ordinary feudal tenure, such as socage, rather than by ecclesiastical tenure through frankalmoin. See FRANKALMOIN; SOGAGE.

plowman's fee. Hist. A species of tenure for peasants or small farmers by which the land descended in equal shares to all the tenant's sons.

quasi-fee. Hist. An estate in fee acquired wrongfully.

fee damages. See DAMAGES.

feeder organization. Tax. An entity that conducts a business or trade for the benefit of a tax-exempt organization. • The feeder organization is not tax-exempt. IRC (26 USCA) § 502.

fee estate. See FEE (2).

fee farm. Hist. A species of tenure in which land is held in perpetuity at a yearly rent (fee-farm rent), without fealty, homage, or other services than those in the feoffment. — Also termed feodi firma; firma feodi. See EMPHYTEUSIS.

“Now to all appearance the term socage, a term not found in Normandy, has been extending itself upwards; a name appropriate to a class of cultivating peasants has begun to include the baron or prelate who holds land at a rent but is not burdened with military service. . . . He is sometimes said to have feodum censuale; far more commonly he is said to hold ‘in fee farm.’ This term has difficulties of its own, for it appears in many different guises; a feoffee is to hold in feofirma, in feufirmam, in fedfirmam, in feudo firmam, in feudo firma, ad firmam feodalem, but most commonly, in feodi firma. The Old English language had both of the words of which this term is compounded, both feoh (property) and feorm (rent); but so had the language of France, and in Norman documents the term may be found in various shapes, firmam fedium, feudifirmam. But, whatever may be the precise history of the phrase, to hold in fee farm means to hold heritably, perpetually, at a rent; the fee, the inheritance, is let to farm.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 293 (2d ed. 1899).

fee-farm rent. 1. The rent reserved, usu. one-fourth or one-third of the land's value, on granting a fee farm. 2. A rent charge issuing out of a fee estate. 3. A perpetual rent on a conveyance in fee simple.

fee interest. See FEE; FEE SIMPLE; FEE TAIL.

feemail (fee-mayl). Slang. 1. An attorney's fee extorted by intimidation, threats, or pressure. 2. The act or process of extorting such a fee. Cf. BLACKMAIL; GRAYMAIL; GREENMAIL.

fee sharing. See FEE SPLITTING.

fee simple. An interest in land that, being the broadest property interest allowed by law, endures until the current holder dies without heirs; esp., a fee simple absolute. — Often shortened to fee. — Also termed estate in fee simple; fee-simple title.

“[Fee simple] is a term not likely to be found in modern conversation between laymen, who would in all probability find it quite unintelligible. Yet to a layman of the 14th century the term would have been perfectly intelligible, for it refers to the elementary social relationship of feudalism with which he was fully familiar: the words ‘fee’ and ‘feudal’ are closely related. . . . The estate in fee simple is the largest estate known to the law, ownership of such an estate being the nearest approach to ownership of the land itself which is consonant with the feudal principle of tenure. It is ‘the most comprehensive estate in land which the law recognises’; it is the ‘most extensive in quantum, and the most absolute in respect to the rights which it confers, of all estates known to the law’. Traditionally, the fee simple has two distinguishing features: first, the owner (‘tenant’ in fee simple) has the power to dispose of the fee simple, either inter vivos or by will; second, on intestacy the fee simple descends, in the absence of lineal heirs, to collateral heirs — to a brother, for example, if there is no issue.” Peter Butt, Land Law 35 (2d ed. 1988).

fee simple absolute. An estate of indefinite or potentially infinite duration (e.g., “to Albert and his heirs"). — Often shortened to fee simple or fee.

"Although it is probably good practice to use the word 'absolute' whenever one is referring to an estate in fee simple that is free of special limitation, condition subsequent, or executory limitation, lawyers frequently refer to such an estate as a 'fee simple' or even as a 'fee.'" Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 24 (2d ed. 1984).

fee simple conditional. An estate restricted to some specified heirs, exclusive of others (e.g., "to Albert and his female heirs"). • The fee simple conditional is obsolete except in Iowa, Oregon, and South Carolina. — Also termed general fee conditional.

"The reader should be careful not to confuse this estate with estates having similar labels, such as the 'estate in fee simple subject to a condition subsequent'" Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 29 n.19 (2d ed. 1984).

fee simple defeasible (di-fee-zə-bəl). An estate that ends either because there are no more heirs of the person to whom it is granted or because a special limitation, condition subsequent, or executory limitation takes effect before the line of heirs runs out. — Also termed qualified fee.

fee simple determinable. An estate that will automatically end and revert to the grantor if some specified event occurs (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs while the property is used for charitable purposes"). • The future interest retained by the grantor is called a possibility of reverter. — Also termed determinable fee; qualified fee; fee simple subject to common-law limitation; fee simple subject to special limitation; fee simple subject to special interest; base fee; estate on limitation.

fee simple subject to a condition subsequent. An estate subject to the grantor's power to end the estate if some specified event happens (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs, upon condition that no alcohol is sold on the premises"). • The future interest retained by the grantor is called a power of termination (or a right of entry). — Also termed fee simple on a condition subsequent; fee simple subject to a power of termination; fee simple upon condition.

fee simple subject to an executory limitation. A fee simple defeasible that is subject to divestment in favor of someone other than the grantor if a specified event happens (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs, but if the property is ever used as a parking lot, then to Bob"). — Also termed fee simple subject to an executory interest.

fee simple subject to a power of termination. See fee simple subject to a condition subsequent.

fee simple subject to common-law limitation. See fee simple determinable.

fee simple subject to special interest. See fee simple determinable.

fee simple subject to special limitation. See fee simple determinable.

fee simple upon condition. See fee simple subject to a condition subsequent.

fee-splitting. 1. The division of attorney's fees between the lawyer who handles a matter and the lawyer who referred the matter. • Some states consider this practice unethical. 2. The division of attorney's fees between two or more lawyers who represent a client jointly but are not in the same firm. • An attorney is prohibited from splitting a fee with a nonlawyer. — Also termed fee sharing.

fee statement. A lawyer's bill for services either already rendered or to be rendered, usu. including itemized expenses.

fee tail. An estate that is inheritable only by specified descendants of the original grantee, and that endures until its current holder dies without issue (e.g., "to Albert and the heirs of his body"). • Most jurisdictions — except Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island — have abolished the fee tail. — Also termed entailed estate; estate tail; tenancy in tail; entail; feodum talliatum. See ENTAIL; TAIL.

"The name fee tail comes from the French tailler (to carve) and probably meant that the grantor was able to carve a fee to his exact prescription. This carving could be carried to great lengths and the land could be limited to male descendants generally — fee tail male general; to female issue — fee tail female; or to issue of a specific wife — fee tail special. In the latter case, if the specified wife died, the holder of the estate was said to have a fee tail with possibility of issue extinct — a type of life estate." John E. Cribbet, Principles of the Law of Property 47 (2d ed. 1975).

"If we cannot resist the temptation to say that De Donis permitted the creation of tailor-made estates, we can at least argue that it is not a pun. Our word 'tailor' and the word 'tail,' as used in 'fee tail,' come from the same source — the French tailler, to cut. The word 'tail' in 'fee tail' has nothing to do with that which wags the dog. The estate in fee tail was a cut estate — either cut in the sense that the collateral heirs were cut out, or cut in the sense that the estate was carved into a series of discrete life-possession periods to be enjoyed successively by A and his lineal heirs. . . . We know of no state in the United States that recognizes the estate in fee tail in its strict 1285-1472 form. Wherever it is recognized, the tenant in tail in possession may disentail it by simple deed. In a number of states, the estate in fee tail has been abolished." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 30, 32 (2d ed. 1984).

feign (fayn), vb. To make up or fabricate; to make a false show of <he feigned an illness>.

feigned, adj. Pretended; simulated; fictitious.

feigned accomplice. See INFORMANT.

feigned action. Hist. An action brought for an illegal purpose on a pretended right. — Also termed faint action; false action.

feigned issue. Hist. A proceeding in which the parties, by consent, have an issue tried by a jury without actually bringing a formal action. • The proceeding was done when a court either lacked jurisdiction or was unwilling to decide the issue. — Also termed fictitious issue.

"The chancellor's decree is either interlocutory or final. It very seldom happens that the first decree can be final, or conclude the cause; for, if any matter of fact is strongly controverted, this court is so sensible of the deficiency of trial by written depositions, that it will not bind the parties thereby, but usually directs the matter to be tried by jury. . . . But, as no jury can be summoned to attend this court, the fact is usually directed to be tried at the bar of the court of king's bench or at the assises, upon a feigned issue. For, (in order to bring it there, and have the point in dispute, and that only, put in issue) an action is feigned to be brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares that he laid a wager of 5*l.* with the defendant that A was heir at law to B; and then avers that he is so; and therefore demands the 5*l.* The defendant allows the wager, but avers that A is not the heir to B; and thereupon the issue is joined. . . . These feigned issues seem borrowed from the sponsio judicialis of the Romans: and are also frequently used in the courts of law, by consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading. . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 452 (1768).

feigned recovery. See COMMON RECOVERY.

FELA (fee-lə). abbr. FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

fele (feel). [Law French] See FEAL.

fellow, n. 1. One joined with another in some legal status or relation. 2. A member of a college, board, corporate body, or other organization.

fellow-officer rule. Criminal procedure. The principle that an arrest is valid if the arresting law-enforcement officer lacks personal knowledge to establish probable cause for the arrest but acts upon the knowledge of another officer and the collective knowledge of the law-enforcement office. • This knowledge, which may constitute probable cause, is imputed to the arresting officer. — Also termed Whiteley rule.

fellow servant. A coworker; a person who works for the same employer.

superior fellow servant. A worker that has the power of control or direction over a coworker.

fellow-servant rule. A common-law doctrine holding that an employer is not liable for an employee's injuries caused by a negligent coworker. • This doctrine has generally been abrogated by workers'-compensation statutes. In some jurisdictions, employees were considered fellow servants when they were working with one aim or result in view. In others, the relation of fellow servant was tested by the "doctrine of vice principal," meaning that an employer is liable for injuries to an employee if they result from the negligence of another employee who is given power of control or direction over the injured employee. — Also termed common-employment doctrine.

"[T]here are numerous orthodox instances in history of the judge making a legal principle; for the bulk of the common law was 'made' by them, and the fellow-servant rule in employer's liability is a typical modern instance." John Henry Wigmore, Problems of Law 66 (1920).

felo de se (fee-loh or fel-oh dee see), n. See SUICIDE (2).

"'Felo de se,' or felon of himself is freely spoken of by the early writers as self-murder. Hence one who killed himself before he arrived at the age of discretion or while he was non compos mentis, was not a felo de se, or suicide. . . . [B]y the early common law suicide was a felony and was punished by ignominious burial and forfeiture of goods and chattels to the king." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 120 (3d ed. 1982).

felon, n. A person who has been convicted of a felony.

felonia (fə-loh-nee-ə). [Latin "felony"] Hist. An offense that results in a vassal's forfeiting his fee.

"The attempt to derive felonia from fel 'poison' is merely a folk etymology which came into vogue when 'felony' meant a serious crime, and differed from treason. The word was well established in Feudal Law as the characteristic offense against the Feudal relationship. It will hardly do, therefore, to try to determine its meaning merely by reference to English usage. . . ." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 148 n.7 (1936).

felonious (fə-lōh-nee-əs), adj. 1. Of, relating to, or involving a felony. 2. Constituting or having the character of a felony. 3. Proceeding from an evil heart or purpose; malicious; villainous.

felonious assault. See ASSAULT.

felonious homicide. See HOMICIDE.

felony, n. A serious crime usu. punishable by imprisonment for more than one year or by death. ● Examples include murder, rape, arson, and burglary. At common law, a felony was an offense for which conviction involved the forfeiture of the defendant's lands or goods, or both, to the Crown. Treason was traditionally included in the term felony. — Also termed major crime; serious crime. Cf. MISDEMEANOR.

"Felony, in the general acceptance of our English law, comprizes every species of crime, which occasioned at common law the forfeiture of lands or goods." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 94 (1769).

"Amongst indictable crimes, the common law singled out some as being so conspicuously heinous that a man adjudged guilty of any of them incurred — not as any express part of his sentence but as a consequence that necessarily ensued upon it — a forfeiture of property, whether of his lands or of his goods or of both (in the case of treason). Such crimes came to be called 'felonies.' The other, and lesser, crimes were known as 'transgressions' or 'trespasses,' and did not obtain their present name of misdemeanours until a much later date. A felony is, therefore, a crime which either involved by common law such a forfeiture, or else has been placed by statute on the footing of those crimes which did involve it." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 93 (16th ed. 1952).

treason felony. See TREASON FELONY.

felony de se. See SUICIDE.

felony murder. See MURDER.

felony-murder rule. The doctrine holding that any death resulting from the commission or attempted commission of a felony is murder. ● Most states restrict this rule to inherently dangerous felonies such as rape, arson, robbery, and burglary. Cf. MISDEMEANOR-MANSLAUGHTER RULE.

"[I]t seems fair to suggest that the future of felony murder is uncertain. England, where the doctrine originated, has abolished it. The Model Penal Code recommends its abolition except for the purpose of creating a rebuttable presumption of malice for killings perpetrated during the course of a felony. Although most states have not yet adopted this position, many of the judicial limitations on felony murder discussed above seem to insure that in many states it will be an unusual case in which one is convicted of felony murder, who absent this doctrine, would not have been convicted of murder." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 46 (2d ed. 1987).

fem-crit. See CRIT.

feme (fem). [Law French] Archaic. 1. A woman. 2. A wife. — Also spelled femme.

feme covert (fem kəv-ərt). [Law French] Archaic. A married woman. See COVERTURE.

feme sole (fem sohl). [Law French] Archaic. 1. An unmarried woman. 2. A married woman handling the affairs of her separate estate. — Also termed feme sole trader.

femicide (fem-ə-sid). 1. The killing of a woman. 2. One who kills a woman.

feminist jurisprudence. See JURISPRUDENCE.

fence, n. 1. A person who receives stolen goods.

"The receivers of stolen goods almost never 'know' that they have been stolen, in the sense that they could testify to it in a courtroom. The business could not be so conducted, for those who sell the goods — the 'fences' — must keep up a more respectable front than is generally possible for the thieves." United States v. Werner, 160 F.2d 438, 441-42 (2d Cir. 1947).

"The typical 'fence' takes over the stolen property and pays the thief a price. He purports to 'buy' the goods from the thief." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 395 (3d ed. 1982).

2. A place where stolen goods are sold. See RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY. 3. LAWFUL FENCE.

fence, vb. To sell stolen property to a fence.

fence-month. Hist. The summer fawning season when it was unlawful to hunt deer. — Also termed defense-month.

fencing patent. See PATENT (3).

feneration (fen-ə-ray-shən). Hist. 1. The act or practice of lending money with interest. 2. USURY.

feod (fyood). See FEE; FEUD.

feodal (fyoo-dəl). See FEUDAL.

feodal action. See FEUDAL ACTION.

feodality (fyoo-dal-ə-tee). See FEALTY.

feodal system. See FEUDALISM.

feodarum consuetudines (fee-ə-dair-əm [or fyoo-dair-əm] kon-swə-t[y]oo-də-nee-z). See FEUDARAM CONSUETUDINES.

feodary (fyoo-də-ree). Hist. An officer of the Court of Wards who traveled with the escheator from county to county in order to receive royal rents and estimate the value of land tenures for the Crown. See COURT OF WARDS AND LIVERIES.

feodatory (fyoo-də-tor-ee). See FEUDATORY.

feodi firma (fee-ə-di or fyoo-di fər-mə). See FEE FARM.

feodi firmarius (fee-ə-di or fyoo-di fər-mair-ee-əs). Hist. The tenant of a fee farm.

feodum (fee-ə-dəm or fyoo-dəm). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A fee; an inheritable estate.

"Feodum . . . A fee; the same as feudum. This is the word uniformly employed by Glanville and Bracton to denote an estate of inheritance, and an estate held of another by service, instead of feudum, which is invariably used by the continental feudists." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 615 (2d ed. 1867).

2. Part of a lord's estate held by a tenant (i.e., a seignior). See SEIGNIORY (2). 3. A payment for services rendered.

feodum antiquum. See feudum antiquum under FEUDUM.

feodum apertum. See feudum apertum under FEUDUM.

feodum laicum. See feudum laicum under FEUDUM.

feodum militis (fee-ə-dəm or fyoo-dəm mil-ə-tis). Hist. A knight's fee. — Also termed feodum militare.

feodum nobile (fee-ə-dəm or fyoo-dəm noh-bə-lee). See feudum nobile under FEUDUM.

feodum novum (fee-ə-dəm or fyoo-dəm noh-vəm). See feudum novum under FEUDUM.

feodum simplex (fee-ə-dəm or fyoo-dəm simpleks). A fee simple.

feodum talliatum (fee-ə-dəm or fyoo-dəm tal-ee-ay-təm). A fee tail. — Also spelled feudum talliatum.

feoff (fef or feef), vb. See ENFEOFF.

feoffamentum (fee-[ə]-fə-men-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. See FEOFFMENT.

feoffare (fee-[ə]-fair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. See ENFEOFF.

feoffator (fee-[ə]-fay-tər). [Law Latin] Hist. See FEOFFOR.

feoffatus (fee-[ə]-fay-təs). [Law Latin] Hist. See FEOFFEE.

feoffee (fef-ee or feef-ee). The transferee of an estate in fee simple; the recipient of a fief.

feoffee to uses. Hist. A person to whom land is conveyed for the use of a third party (called a cestui que use); one who holds legal title to land for the benefit of another. Cf. TRUSTEE. See CESTUI QUE USE; GRANT TO USES.

feoffment (fef-mənt or feef-mənt). Hist. 1. The act of conveying a freehold estate; a grant of land in fee simple. — Also termed feoffment with livery of seisin.

feoffment to uses. An enfeoffment of land to one person for the use of a third party. • The feoffee was bound in conscience to hold the land according to the prescribed use and could derive no benefit from the holding.

"Conveyances of freehold land could originally be made only by a feoffment with livery of seisin. This was a solemn ceremony carried out by the parties entering on the land, and the feoffor, in the presence of witnesses, delivering the seisin to the feoffee either by some symbolic act, such as handing him a twig or sod of earth, or by uttering some words such as 'Enter into this land and God give you joy' and leaving him in possession of the land." Robert E. Megarry & H.W.R. Wade, The Law of Real Property 47 (5th ed. 1984).

2. The land so granted. 3. The charter that transfers the land. — Also termed deed of feoffment.

feoffment with livery of seisin. See FEOFFMENT (1).

feoffor (fef- or feef-ər or -or). The transferor of an estate in fee simple. — Also spelled feoffer.

feorme (fərm). Hist. A portion of the land's produce owed by the grantee to the lord according to the terms of a charter.

ferae bestiae (feer-ee bes-tee-ee), n. (pl.) [Latin] Wild beasts. • Under Roman law, since a wild animal belonged to no one (res nullius), it was owned by its captor. See RULE OF CAPTURE (2).

ferae naturae (feer-ee nə-tyoor-ee). [Latin “of a wild nature”] 1. adj. (Of animals) wild; untamed; undomesticated. 2. n. Wild animals. See RULE OF CAPTURE (2).

FERC (fərk). abbr. FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION.

ferdella terrae (fər-del-ə ter-ee). [Latin] Hist. 1. Ten acres of land. 2. A yard-land (twenty acres).

ferdfare (fərd-fair), n. [fr. Saxon fird “military service” + fare “a going”] Hist. 1. A summons to military service. 2. An exemption from military service. — Also spelled firdfare; fyrdfare.

ferdingus (fər-ding-gəs). Hist. A freeman of the lowest class.

Feres doctrine (feer-is or feer-eez or fer-ez). Torts. The rule that a member of the military is barred from recovering damages from the United States on a claim brought under the Federal Tort Claims Act for injuries sustained in military service. Feres v. United States, 340 U.S. 135, 71 S.Ct. 153 (1950). — Also termed Feres rule. See ACTIVITY INCIDENT TO SERVICE.

feria (feer-ee-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A weekday. 2. A holiday. 3. See ferial day under DAY. 4. A fair. 5. A ferry.

feriae (feer-ee-ī), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. Religious and public holidays on which Romans suspended politics and lawsuits, and on which slaves enjoyed a partial break from labor.

ferial day. See DAY.

ferlingum. See FURLONG.

ferlingus. See FURLONG.

ferm. See FARM.

fermer. [Law French] Hist. 1. A lessee, esp. one who holds lands for agricultural purposes. 2. One who holds something (such as land or an incorporeal right) by the term.

ferriage (fer-ee-ij). Hist. The toll or fare paid for the transportation of persons or property on a ferry.

ferry, n. 1. A boat or vessel used to carry persons or property across water, usu. with fixed terminals and short distances. 2. The commercial transportation of persons or property across water. 3. The place where a ferry passes across water, including the continuation of the highway on both sides of the water. 4. The right, usu. exclusive, given by government franchise, to carry persons or property across water for a fee. — Also termed ferry franchise.

ferry, vb. To carry persons or property, usu. across water, for a fee.

ferry franchise. See FERRY (4).

fertile-octogenarian rule. The legal fiction, assumed under the rule against perpetuities, that a woman can become pregnant as long as she is alive. • The case that gave rise to this fiction was Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox 324, 29 Eng. Rep. 1186 (ch. 1787). See W. Barton Leach, Perpetuities: New Hampshire Defertilizes Octogenarians, 77 Harv. L. Rev. 729 (1963). — Also termed presumption-of-fertility rule.

“Suppose testator bequeaths in trust to pay the income to A for her life, then to pay the income to the children of A for their lives, and upon the death of the survivor of such children, to pay the principal to the grandchildren of A. At the time of the testator’s death A is 79 years old, and she has two children. Believe it or not, it has been held that the remainder to the grandchildren of A is violative of the rule against perpetuities and invalid. The law adopted the conclusive presumption that every person is capable of having children until the day he or she dies, as far as the rule against perpetuities is concerned. Consequently, A could have an additional child who would not be a life in being at the testator’s death, and that child could have a child who would be born beyond the permissible period. The result of this hypothesis is to invalidate the remainder to the grandchildren. This situation is sometimes referred to as the case of the ‘fertile octogenarian.’ Remember that the class gift is invalid if it is possible that the interest of any one member of the class can violate the rule.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 188 (2d ed. 1984).

festing-man. Hist. A bondsman; a surety. See FRANKPLEDGE.

festing-penny. Hist. Earnest, or payment, given to a servant when hired.

festinum remedium (fes-ti-nəm ri-mee-dee-əm). [Latin] Hist. A speedy remedy. • It was used in cases, such as actions for dower or assize, where the redress of injury was given without unnecessary delay.

festuca (fes-tyoo-kə). Hist. A rod, staff, or stick used as a pledge (or gage) of good faith by a party to a contract or as a token of conveyance of land. — Also termed fistuca. See LIVERY OF SEISIN.

“The wed or gage, however, was capable of becoming a symbol; an object which intrinsically was of trifling value might be given and might serve to bind a contract. Among the Franks, whom we must regard as being for many purposes our ancestors in law, it took the shape of the festuca. Whether this transition from the ‘real’ to the ‘formal’ can be accomplished without the intervention of sacral ceremonies seems doubtful. There are some who regard the festuca as a stout staff which has taken the place of a spear and is a symbol of physical power. Others see in it a little bit of stick on which imprecatory runes have been cut. It is hard to decide such questions, for, especially under the influence of a new religion, symbols lose their old meanings and are mixed up. Popular etymology confounds confusion.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 186 (2d ed. 1899).

festum (fes-təm). [Latin] A feast-day, holiday, or festival.

fetiales (fee-shee-ay-leez), n. Roman law. The order of priests whose duties concerned international relations and treaties, including the declaration of war and peace. — Also spelled feciales.

fetial law (fee-shəl). Roman law. A branch of law concerned with matters (such as treaties, embassies, and war declarations) affecting relations between peoples or nations. — Also spelled fecial law. — Also termed jus fetiale.

feticide (fee-tə-sīd). The act or an instance of killing a fetus, usu. by assaulting and battering the mother; an intentionally induced miscarriage. — Also termed child destruction. Cf. INFANTICIDE (1).

fetter, n. (usu. pl.) A chain or shackle for the feet. — fetter, vb.

feud, n. Hist. 1. An inheritable estate in land conveyed from a feudal superior to a grantee or tenant, held on the condition of rendering services to the superior.

“It is believed that the forms feud and fief appear in England but late in the day under the influence of foreign books; they never became terms of our law. It is noticeable also that feodum was constantly used in the sense that our fee has when we speak of a lawyer’s or doctor’s fee; payments due for services rendered, at least if they are permanent periodic payments, are feoda; the judges, for example, receive feoda, not salaries. The etymological problem presented by the English fee seems no easy one, because at the Conquest the would-be Latin feodum or feudum (the d in which has puzzled philologists and does not always appear in Domesday Book) is introduced among a people which already has feoh as a word for property in general and cattle in particular.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 236 n.2 (2d ed. 1899).

improper feud. A nonmilitary feud; a feud that is base or servile in nature.

“These were the principal, and very simple, qualities of the genuine or original feuds; being then all of a military nature, and in the hands of military persons: though the feudatories, being under frequent incapacities of cultivating and manuring their own lands, soon found it necessary to commit part of them to inferior tenants. . . . But this at the same time demolished the ancient simplicity of feuds; and an inroad being once made upon their constitution, it subjected them, in a course of time, to great varieties and innovations. Feuds came to be bought and sold, and deviations were made from the old fundamental rules of tenure and succession; which were held no longer sacred, when the feuds themselves no longer continued to be purely military. Hence these tenures began now to be divided into feoda propria et impropria, proper and improper feuds. . . .” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 57–58 (1766).

proper feud. A feud based on military service.

2. The interest of the tenant in the land conveyed. 3. The land itself conveyed. — Also termed (in senses 1, 2 & 3) fee; fief; feod; feude; feudum. 4. An enmity or private war existing between families or clans, esp. as a result of a murder.

feudal, adj. 1. Of, relating to, or growing out of feudalism <feudal law>. 2. Of or relating to a feud <feudal tenure>. Cf. ALLODIAL.

feudal action. Hist. A real action; an action that concerned only real property.

feudalism (fyood-əl-iz-əm). 1. A landholding system, particularly applying to medieval Europe, in which all are bound by their status in a hierarchy of reciprocal obligations of service and defense. ● The lord was obligated to give the vassal (1) some land, (2) protection, and (3) justice. The lord guaranteed the quiet occupation of the land by the vassal and guaranteed to do right if the vassal became involved in a dispute. In return, the vassal owed the lord some type of service, called “tenure” (literally “means of holding”), because the different types of service were the methods by which the vassals held the property. 2. The social, political, and economic system of medieval Europe. — Also termed feudal system; feodal system.

“Modern historical research has taught us that, while it is a mistake to speak of a feudal system, the word ‘feudalism’ is a convenient way of referring to certain fundamental similarities which, in spite of large local variations, can be discerned in the social development of all the peoples of western Europe from about the ninth to the thirteenth centuries.” J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 2 (5th ed. 1955).

feudal law. Hist. The real-property law of land tenures that prevailed in England, esp. after the Norman Conquest. See FEUDARUM CONSUE-TUDINES.

feudal system. See FEUDALISM.

feodarum consuetudines (fee-ə-dair-əm [or fyoo-dair-əm] kon-swə-t[y]oo-də-nee-z). [Latin] The customs of feuds. • This was the name of a compilation of feudal laws and customs made in 12th-century Milan. • It is regarded as an authoritative work in continental Europe. — Also spelled feodarum consuetudines.

feudary. See FEUDATORY.

feudatory, adj. Hist. (Of a vassal) owing feudal allegiance to a lord.

feudatory, n. Hist. The grantee of a feud; the vassal or tenant who held an estate by feudal service. — Also termed feudary; feodatory.

“Every receiver of lands, or feudatory, was therefore bound, when called upon by his benefactor, or immediate lord of his feud or fee, to do all in his power to defend him.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 46 (1766).

feude. See FEUD.

feudist. A writer on feuds (for example, Cujacius, Spelman, Craig).

Feudorum Libri (fyoo-dor-əm li-brī). [Latin “the books of the feuds”] Hist. The Books of Feuds, a five-book compilation of Lombardic feudal law published in Milan around 1152, during the reign of Henry III. • This unofficial compilation was the main source of tenure law among the nations in Europe. It was widely used in medieval law schools and courts in Italy, France, and Germany. The Feudorum Libri were probably known in England but had little effect other than influencing English lawyers to study their own tenure system more critically. — Also termed Consuetudines Feodorum; Usus Feodorum.

feudum (fyoo-dəm). [Law Latin] A fief or feud; a feodum. — Also termed feodum; feum. Pl. feuda (fyoo-də). See FEUD (1); FIEF; FEE (2).

“The Latin equivalent of feodum or feudum is the root of the words ‘feudal’ and ‘subinfeudation’. The French form fief is favoured by some English historians, but it was not used in law-French.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 256 n.4 (3d ed. 1990).

feudum antiquum (fyoo-dəm an-ti-kwəm), n. [Law Latin “ancient feud”] Hist. 1. A feud that passed to a vassal from an intestate ancestor. 2. A feud that ancestors had possessed for more than four generations. 3. An ancient feud. Pl. feuda antiqua (fyoo-də an-ti-kwə). — Also termed feodum antiquum (fee-ə-dəm or fyoo-dəm). See FEUD (1).

feudum apertum (fyoo-dəm ə-pər-təm). Hist. A feud that reverted to the lord because of a tenant’s failure of issue, a crime by the tenant, or some other legal cause. — Also termed feodum apertum.

feudum francum (fyoo-dəm frangk-əm). Hist. A free feud; a feud or fee that was noble and free from talliage and subsidies that vulgar feuds (plebeia feuda) were subject to.

feudum hauberticum (fyoo-dəm haw-bər-tə-kəm). Hist. A feud that was held on the military service of appearing fully armed when summoned by the lord. See ARRIERBAN.

feudum improprium (fyoo-dəm im-proh-pree-əm). Hist. A feud that was improper or derivative.

feudum individuum (fyoo-dəm in-də-vij-oo-əm). Hist. A feud that was indivisible and descendible only to the eldest son.

feudum laicum (fyoo-dəm lay-ə-kəm). Hist. A lay feud. — Also termed feodum laicum.

feudum ligium (fyoo-dəm lij-ee-əm). Hist. 1. A liege feud; a feud held immediately of the sovereign. 2. A feud for which the vassal owed fealty to his lord against all other persons.

feudum maternum (fyoo-dəm mə-tər-nəm). Hist. A feud that descended to the feudatory from the maternal side.

feudum militare (fyoo-dəm mil-ə-tair-ee). Hist. A knight’s feud. • It was held by knight service and esteemed the most honorable species of tenure. — Also termed feodum militis; (in Norman law) fief d’haubert or fief d’hau-berk.

feudum nobile (fyoo-dəm noh-bə-lee). Hist. A feud for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage. — Also termed feodum nobile.

feudum novum (fyoo-dəm noh-vəm). Hist. 1. A new feud. 2. A feud beginning in the person of the feudatory rather than by succession. — Also spelled feodum novum.

feudum novum ut antiquum (fyoo-dəm noh-vəm ət an-ti-kwəm). Hist. A new feud held with the qualities of an ancient feud.

feudum paternum (fyoo-dəm pə-tər-nəm). Hist. 1. A feud that the tenant's paternal ancestors had held for four generations. 2. A feud descendible only to the heirs on the paternal side. 3. A feud that could be held only by males.

feudum proprium (fyoo-dəm proh-pree-əm). Hist. An original feud that is military in nature and held by military service.

feudum talliatum (fyoo-dəm tal-ee-ay-təm). See FEE TAIL.

feu holding (fyoo). Hist. A tenancy held by rendering produce or money instead of military service.

feum. See FEUDUM.

ff. abbr. 1. And the pages following. 2. (often cap.) FRAGMENTA.

FGA. abbr. 1. Free from general average. 2. Foreign general average.

"F.G.A. means Foreign General Average, and implies that, if goods become liable to general average, the rules to be applied will be those of the port of destination or refuge, i.e., the law of the place where the adjustment is made." 2 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 128 (P.W. French ed., 10th ed. 1951).

FHA. abbr. 1. FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION. 2. FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION.

FHA mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

FHLB. abbr. FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK.

FHLBB. abbr. FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD.

FHLMC. abbr. FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION.

fiancer (fyahn-say), vb. [Law French] To pledge one's faith.

fiat (fee-aht or fee-at or fi-at or fi-ət), n. [Latin "let it be done"] 1. An order or decree, esp. an arbitrary one <judicial fiat>. 2. A court decree, esp. one relating to a routine matter such as scheduling <the court requires all motions to contain a fiat — to be filled in by the court — setting the hearing date>. — Also termed fiant.

fiat justitia (fi-at jəs-tish-ee-ə). [Latin] Hist. Let justice be done. • This phrase signaled the Crown's commission to the House of Lords to hear an appeal.

"Fiat Justitia, ruat coelum, says another maxim, as full of extravagance as it is of harmony: Go heaven to wreck — so justice be but done. — and what is the ruin of kingdoms, in comparison of the wreck of heaven?" Jeremy Bentham, An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation 13–14 n.1 (1823).

fiat money. See MONEY.

fiat ut petitur (fi-at ət pet-ə-tər). [Latin] Let it be done as it is asked. • An order granting a petition.

fiant. See FIAT.

FICA (fi-kə). abbr. FEDERAL INSURANCE CONTRIBUTIONS ACT.

factio (fik-shee-oh), n. [Latin fr. fungare "to feign"] Roman law. A legal assumption or supposition (such as that the plaintiff was a citizen) necessary to cause certain legal consequences that otherwise would not occur. • Legal fictions allowed Roman magistrates (praetors) to expand the law beyond what was strictly allowed by prior law. This practice also occurred in English law — for example, the action of common recovery, which allowed a landowner to convey land that by law could not be alienated (such as land held in fee tail). Pl. fictiones.

factio juris. See LEGAL FICTION.

fiction. See LEGAL FICTION.

fictional action. See collusive action under ACTION.

fiction of law. See LEGAL FICTION.

fictitious, adj. Of or relating to a fiction, esp. a legal fiction fictitious action. See ACTION.

fictitious issue. See FEIGNED ISSUE.

fictitious name. See ASSUMED NAME; ALIAS.

fictitious-payee rule. Commercial law. The principle that if a drawer or maker issues commercial paper to a payee whom the drawer or maker does not actually intend to have any interest in the instrument, an ensuing forgery of the payee's name will be effective to pass good title to later transferees. — Also termed padded-payroll rule.

fictitious person. See artificial person under PERSON.

fictitious promise. See implied promise under PROMISE.

fide commissary (fi-dee kom-ə-ser-ee). See CESTUI QUE TRUST.

fide-committee. A beneficiary; CESTUI QUE TRUST. — Also termed fidei-commissarius.

"In a particular case, a cestuy que trust is called by the Roman law, fidei-commissarius. In imitation of this, I have seen him somewhere or other called in English a fide-committee. This term, however, seems not very expressive. A fide-committee, or, as it should have been, a fidei-committee, seems, literally speaking, to mean one who is committed to the good faith of another." Jeremy Bentham, An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation 226 n.1 (1823).

fidei-commissarius. See CESTUI QUE TRUST.

fideicommissary (fi-dee-I-kom-ə-ser-ee), adj. Roman & civil law. Of or relating to a fideicommissum.

fideicommissary substitution. 1. SUBSTITUTION (5). 2. SUBSTITUTION (6).

fideicommissum (fi-dee-I-kə-mis-əm), n. Roman & civil law. An arrangement similar to a trust by which a testator gave property to a person for the benefit of another who could not, by law, inherit property. • Over time, this device was used to tie up property for generations, and most civil jurisdictions now prohibit or limit it. — Sometimes spelled fidei-commissum. Pl. fideicommissa.

"The many formalities with regard to the institution of heirs and the bequest of legacies, coupled with the fact that many persons, e.g. peregrini, were incapable of being instituted heirs, or of being given a legacy, led, in the late Republic, to testators leaving directions to their heirs in favour of given individuals, which, though not binding at law, they hoped their heirs would, in honour, feel bound to carry out. The beginning of fideicommissa, therefore, was very like the early practice with regard to trusts in English law, and, as in the case of trusts, a time came when trusts were made binding legally as well as morally. . . . For brevity, the fideicommissum will here be called 'the trust', the person upon whom it was imposed (fiduciarius) 'the trustee', and the person in whose favour it was imposed (fideicommissarius) 'the beneficiary'." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 252 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

fidejubere (fi-dee-yə-beer-ee). [Latin] Roman law. To become a surety. • Forms of this word were spoken by the parties to a stipulatio that bound one party to become a surety for the other; the first party asked, "Do you pledge yourself?" ("fidejubesne?"), and the second responded, "I do pledge myself" ("fidejubeo"). — Sometimes spelled fideiubere. See STIPULATIO.

fidejussion (fi-di-jəsh-ən). Roman law. An act by which a person becomes an additional security for another. • The act does not remove the principal's liability but only adds to the surety's security. Fidejussion was one of the five types of adpromission. — Also spelled fidejussio; fideiussio. See ADPROMISSION.

fidejussor (fi-di-jəs-or). 1. Roman law. A guarantor; a person who becomes bound to pay another's debt. 2. Hist. Maritime law. A person who acts as bail for a defendant in the Court of Admiralty. — Also spelled fideiussor.

"The proceedings of the court of admiralty bear much resemblance to those of the civil law, but are not entirely founded thereon; and they likewise adopt and make use of other laws, as occasion requires; such as the Rhodian law, and the laws of Oleron. For the law of England, as has frequently been observed, doth not acknowledge or pay any deference to the civil law considered as such; but merely permits its use in such cases where it judged its determinations equitable, and therefore blends it, in the present instance, with other marine laws. . . . The first process in these courts is frequently by arrest of the defendant's person; and they also take recognizances or stipulation of certain fidejussors in the nature of bail, and in case of default may imprison both them and their principal." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 108–09 (1768).

fidelity and guaranty insurance. See fidelity insurance under INSURANCE.

fidelity bond. See BOND (2).

fidelity guaranty insurance. See fidelity insurance under INSURANCE.

fidelity insurance. See INSURANCE.

fidem mentiri (fi-dəm men-ti-ri). [Latin] Hist. To betray faith or fealty. • The term refers to a feudal tenant who did not keep the fealty sworn to the lord.

fidepromission (fi-dee-proh-mish-ən), n. [Latin “faith-promise”] Roman law. A contract of guaranty by stipulation. • Fidepromission was one of the five types of adpromission. — fidepromissor, n. See ADPROMISSION; STIPULATION.

fides (fi-deez). [Latin] Faith.

fides facta (fi-deez fak-tə). [Latin] Hist. Faith-making; faith-pledging. • Among the Franks and Lombards, undertakings were guaranteed by symbolic, formal acts — making one’s faith — such as the giving of a rod when property was transferred. See FESTUCA.

fiducia (fi-d[y]oo-shee-ə). Roman law. An early form of mortgage or pledge in which the debtor passed the title to property to the creditor by a formal act of sale, yet with an express or implied agreement that the creditor would reconvey the property once the debt was paid. • The creditor’s ownership in the property was vested without foreclosure or right of redemption.

“The Roman mortgage (fiducia) fell wholly out of use before the time of Justinian, having been displaced by the superior simplicity and convenience of the hypotheca; and in this respect modern Continental law has followed the Roman.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 443 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

fiduciarius heres (fi-d[y]oo-shee-air-ee-əs heer-eez). [Latin “fiduciary heir”] Roman law. A person formally named an heir in a testament, but in a fiduciary capacity, and charged to deliver the succession to the person designated by the testament.

fiduciarius tutor (fi-d[y]oo-shee-air-ee-əs t[y]oo-tər). Roman law. A fiduciary guardian; a person who by fulfilling a trust to free someone in power became his or her guardian.

fiduciary (fi-d[y]oo-shee-er-ee), n. 1. One who owes to another the duties of good faith, trust, confidence, and candor <the corporate officer is a fiduciary to the shareholders>. 2. One who must exercise a high standard of care in managing another’s money or property <the beneficiary sued the fiduciary for investing in speculative securities>. — fiduciary, adj.

“Fiduciary’ is a vague term, and it has been pressed into service for a number of ends. . . . My view is that the term ‘fiduciary’ is so vague that plaintiffs have been able to claim that fiduciary obligations have been breached when in fact the particular defendant was not a fiduciary stricto sensu but simply had withheld property from the plaintiff in an unconscionable manner.” D.W.M. Waters, The Constructive Trust 4 (1964).

dilatory fiduciary (dil-ə-tor-ee). A trustee or other fiduciary who causes undue delays in administering an estate.

successor fiduciary. A fiduciary who is appointed to succeed or replace a prior one.

temporary fiduciary. An interim fiduciary appointed by the court until a regular fiduciary can be appointed.

fiduciary bond. See BOND (2).

fiduciary contract. Hist. An agreement by which one party delivers something to another on condition that the second party will return the thing to the first.

fiduciary debt. A debt founded on or arising from a fiduciary relationship, rather than from a contractual relationship.

fiduciary relationship. A relationship in which one person is under a duty to act for the benefit of the other on matters within the scope of the relationship. • Fiduciary relationships — such as trustee-beneficiary, guardian-ward, agent-principal, and attorney-client — require the highest duty of care. Fiduciary relationships usu. arise in one of four situations: (1) when one person places trust in the faithful integrity of another, who as a result gains superiority or influence over the first, (2) when one person assumes control and responsibility over another, (3) when one person has a duty to act for or give advice to another on matters falling within the scope of the relationship, or (4) when there is a specific relationship that has traditionally been recognized as involving fiduciary duties, as with a lawyer and a client or a stockbroker and a customer. — Also termed fiduciary relation; confidential relationship. Cf. SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP.

fiduciary-shield doctrine. Corporations. The principle that a corporate officer’s act cannot be the basis for jurisdiction over the officer in an individual capacity.

fief (feef), n. See FEE; FEUD. • Metaphorically, the term refers to an area of dominion, esp. in a corporate or governmental bureaucracy.

fief d'hauberk (feef doh-bairk). See feudum militare under FEUDUM.

fief d'haubert. See feudum militare under FEUDUM.

fief-tenant. Hist. The holder of a fief or fee; a feeholder or freeholder.

field audit. See AUDIT.

field book. A log or book containing a surveyor's notes that are made on-site and that describe by course and distance the running of the property lines and the establishment of the corners.

Field Code. The New York Code of Procedure of 1848, which was the first comprehensive Anglo-American code of civil procedure and served as a model for the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. • It was drafted by David Dudley Field (1805–1894), a major law-reformer. See code pleading under PLEADING (2).

field notes. The notes in a surveyor's field book.

field sobriety test. See SOBRIETY TEST.

field-warehouse financing agreement. The loan agreement in a field-warehousing arrangement.

field warehousing. An inventory-financing method by which a merchant pledges its inventory, which is in the possession of a third person (a warehouse). • This is a method of financing an inventory that cannot economically be delivered to the creditor or third party. The borrower segregates part of the inventory and places it under the nominal control of a lender or third party, so that the lender has a possessory interest. Cf. floor-plan financing under FINANCING; PLEDGE.

"Field warehousing is a way of bringing about the security relationship of a pledge. It is an arrangement for allowing the pledgor a more convenient access to the pledged goods, while the goods are actually in the custody and control of a third person on the pledgor's premises." Business Factors, Inc. v. Taylor-Edwards Warehouse & Transfer Co., 585 P.2d 825, 828 (Wash. Ct. App. 1978).

"Field warehousing is . . . an arrangement whereby a wholesaler, manufacturer, or merchant finances his business through the pledge of goods remaining on his premises. The arrangement is valid and effective where there is an actual delivery to the warehouseman by the bailor who has hired the warehouseman and given him exclusive possession of the warehouse goods." In re Covington Grain Co., 638 F.2d 1362, 1365 (5th Cir. 1981).

fierding court (fyər-ding or feer-ding). Hist. An ancient court of inferior jurisdiction. • Four courts were in each district or hundred.

fieri (fi-ə-ri). [Latin] To be made; to be done. • Fieri usu. appears as part of the phrase in fieri. See IN FIERI.

fieri facias (fi-ə-ri fay-shee-əs). [Latin "that you cause to be done"] A writ of execution that directs a marshal or sheriff to seize and sell a defendant's property to satisfy a money judgment. — Abbr. fi. fa.; Fi. Fa. Cf. LEVARI FACIAS.

"It receives its name from the Latin words in the writ (quod fieri facias de bonis et catallis, that you cause to be made of the goods and chattels). It is the form of execution in common use in levying upon the judgment-debtor's personal property." John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary (8th ed. 1914).

"The writ of 'fieri facias' (commonly called a writ of 'fi fa'), which commanded literally 'that you cause to be made,' was an early common-law means of enforcing payment on a judgment; it was, in effect, an order to the sheriff of the court to enforce a judgment against the debtor by levy, seizure, and sale of his personalty to the extent needed to satisfy a judgment." 30 Am. Jur. 2d Executions and Enforcement of Judgments § 14, at 50–51 (1994).

fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis (fi-ə-ri fay-shee-əs dee boh-nis e-klēe-z[h]ee-as-tə-sis). [Latin "that you cause to be made of the ecclesiastical goods"] Hist. A writ of execution — used when the defendant was a benefited clerk who had no lay fee — that commanded the bishop to satisfy the judgment from the ecclesiastical goods and chattels of the defendant within the diocese. • This was accomplished by issuing a sequestration to levy the debt out of the defendant's benefice. This writ was issued after a fieri facias had been returned nulla bona.

fieri facias de bonis propriis (fi-ə-ri fay-shee-əs dee boh-nis proh-pree-is). [Latin "that you cause to be made of his own goods"] Hist. A writ that executes on an executor's property when a writ fieri facias de bonis testatoris is returned by the sheriff nulla bona or devastavit (a wasting of the testator's goods by the executor).

fieri facias de bonis testatoris (fi-ə-ri fay-shee-əs dee boh-nis tes-tə-tor-is). [Latin "that you cause to be made of the testator's goods"] Hist. A writ of execution served on an executor for a debt incurred by the testator.

fieri feci (fi-ə-ri fee-si). [Latin "I have caused to be made"] Hist. A sheriff's return on a fieri facias where the sheriff has collected, in whole or in part, the sum to be levied on. • The return is usu. expressed by the word “satisfied.”

fi. fa. (sometimes cap.) abbr. FIERI FACIAS.

FIFO (fi-foh). abbr. FIRST-IN, FIRST-OUT.

FIFRA. abbr. Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act. 7 USCA §§ 136–136y.

fifteenth. Hist. A tax of one-fifteenth of all the personal property of every subject. • The tax was levied at intervals by act of Parliament. Under Edward III, the value of the fifteenth was assessed and fixed at a specific sum and did not increase as the wealth of the kingdom increased — thus the tax ceased to actually be one-fifteenth. See QUOD PERSONA NEC PREBENDARI.

Fifteenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1870, guaranteeing all citizens the right to vote regardless of race, color, or prior condition of servitude.

Fifth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, providing that a person cannot be (1) required to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous offense unless a grand jury issues an indictment or presentment, (2) subjected to double jeopardy, (3) compelled to engage in self-incrimination on a criminal matter, (4) deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and (5) deprived of private property for public use without just compensation.

Fifth Amendment, pleading the. See PLEADING THE FIFTH.

Fifty Decisions. Justinian’s rulings that settled controversies and eliminated obsolete rules in the law. • The decisions were made in preparation for Justinian’s Digest. — Also termed (in Latin) Quinquaginta Decisiones.

50-percent rule. The principle that liability for negligence is apportioned in accordance with the percentage of fault that the fact-finder assigns to each party, that the plaintiff’s recovery will be reduced by the percentage of negligence assigned to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff’s recovery is barred if the plaintiff’s percentage of fault is 50% or more. — Also termed modified-comparative-negligence doctrine. Cf. PURE-COMPARATIVE-NEGLIGENCE DOCTRINE. See comparative negligence under NEGLIGENCE; APPORTIONMENT OF LIABILITY.

fighting age. See AGE.

fighting words. 1. Inflammatory speech that might not be protected by the First Amendment’s free-speech guarantee because it might incite a violent response. 2. Inflammatory speech that is pleadable in mitigation — but not in defense — of a suit for assault.

filacer (fil-ə-sər). Hist. An officer of the Westminster superior courts who filed the writs on which process was made. • The office was abolished in 1837.

filacium. See FILUM.

filare (fi-lair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To file.

file, n. 1. A court’s complete and official record of a case <the law clerk went to the courthouse to verify that the motion is in the file>. 2. A lawyer’s complete record of a case <the paralegal stored the file in three drawers in her office>. 3. A portion or section of a lawyer’s case record <the janitor found the correspondence file behind the copy machine>. 4. A case <Jonah was assigned the Watson file after Amy left the firm>.

file, vb. 1. To deliver a legal document to the court clerk or record custodian for placement into the official record <Tuesday is the deadline for filing a reply brief> <they perfected the security interest by filing>. 2. To commence a lawsuit <the seller threatened to file against the buyer>. 3. To record or deposit something in an organized retention system or container for preservation and future reference <please file my notes under the heading “research”>.

filed-rate doctrine. A common-law rule forbidding a regulated entity, usu. a common carrier, to charge a rate other than the one on file with the appropriate federal regulatory authority, such as (formerly) the Interstate Commerce Commission. — Also termed filed-tariff doctrine. See TARIFF (3).

file wrapper. See PROSECUTION HISTORY.

file-wrapper estoppel. See PROSECUTION-HISTORY ESTOPPEL.

filia (fil-ee-ə), n. [Latin] A daughter. Pl. filiae.

filial consortium. See CONSORTIUM.

filiation (fil-ee-ay-shən). 1. The fact or condition of being a son or daughter; relationship of a child to a parent.

"In English we have no word that will serve to express with propriety the person who bears the relation opposed to that of parent. The word child is ambiguous, being employed in another sense, perhaps more frequently than in this: more frequently in opposition to a person of full age, an adult, than in correlation to a parent. For the condition itself we have no other word than filiation: an ill-contrived term, not analogous to paternity and maternity: the proper term would have been filiality: the word filiation is as frequently, perhaps, and more consistently, put for the act of establishing a person in the possession of the condition of filiality." Jeremy Bentham, An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation 276 n.2 (1823).

2. Judicial determination of paternity. See PATERNITY SUIT.

filibuster (fil-ə-bəs-tər), n. 1. A dilatory tactic, esp. prolonged and often irrelevant speechmaking, employed in an attempt to obstruct legislative action. ● The filibuster is common in the U.S. Senate, where the right to debate is unlimited. 2. In a deliberative body, a member in the minority who resorts to obstructive tactics to prevent the adoption of a measure or procedure that is favored by the majority. — Also termed filibusterer. 3. Hist. A person who, together with others, works to invade and revolutionize a foreign state in disregard of international law. — filibuster, vb. See CLOTURE.

filing, n. A particular document (such as a pleading) in the file of a court clerk or record custodian <the lawyer argued that the plaintiff's most recent filing was not germane to the issue before the court>.

filing fee. A sum of money required to be paid to the court clerk before a proceeding can start.

filing status. Tax. One of the four categories under which a person files an income tax return. ● Under federal law, the four categories are: (1) single; (2) head of household; (3) married filing a joint return; and (4) married filing separate returns.

filiolus (fil-ee-oh-ləs). [Latin] Hist. A godson. — Also spelled (in old records) filious.

filius (fil-ee-əs), n. [Latin] 1. A son. 2. (pl.) Descendants. Pl. filii. Cf. HERES.

filiusfamilias (fil-ee-əs-fə-mil-ee-əs). [Latin "the son of a family"] Roman law. An uneman-ipated son or daughter, grandson or granddaughter. — Also termed homo alieni juris.

"Every Roman citizen is either a paterfamilias or a filiusfamilias, according as he is free from paternal power (homo sui juris) or not (homo alieni juris). Paterfamilias is the generic name for a homo sui juris, whether child or adult, married or unmarried. Filiusfamilias is the generic name for a homo alieni juris, whether son or daughter, grandson or granddaughter, and so on." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 177 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

filius mulieratus (fil-ee-əs myoo-lee-ə-ray-təs). [Law Latin] Hist. The eldest legitimate son of a woman who previously had an illegitimate son by the same father; a legitimate son, whose older brother is illegitimate; MULIER PUISNE. Cf. bastard eisne under EISNE.

filius nullius (fil-ee-əs nə-lī-əs). [Latin "son of nobody"] Hist. An illegitimate child. — Also termed filius populi.

"I proceed next to the rights and incapacities which appertain to a bastard. The rights are very few, being only such as he can acquire; for he can inherit nothing, being looked upon as the son of nobody; and sometimes called filius nullius, sometimes filius populi." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 447 (1765).

filius populi (fil-ee-əs pop-yə-lī). [Latin "son of the people"] Hist. An illegitimate child.

fill-or-kill order. See ORDER (4).

filum (fī-ləm). [Latin "thread"] Hist. 1. A thread or wire that holds (esp. legal) papers together to form a file. ● This was the ancient method of filing legal papers. 2. An imaginary thread or line passing through the middle of a stream or road. — Also termed (in sense 1) filacium.

filum aquae (fī-ləm ay-kwee). [Latin "thread of water"] A line of water; the middle line of a stream of water, supposedly dividing it into two equal parts and usu. constituting the boundary between the riparian owners on each side. — Also termed medium filum.

filum forestae (fī-ləm for-ə-stee). [Latin] The border of a forest.

filum viae (fī-ləm vī-ee). [Latin] 1. The middle line of a road. 2. The boundary between landowners on each side of a road.

final appealable judgment. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

final appealable order. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

final argument. See CLOSING ARGUMENT.

final concord. See CONCORD.

final decision. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

final-decision rule. See FINAL-JUDGMENT RULE.

final injunction. See permanent injunction under INJUNCTION.

finalis concordia (fi-nay-lis kən-kor-dee-ə). [Latin] A final or conclusive agreement. See final concord under CONCORD; FINE (1).

finality doctrine. The rule that a court will not judicially review an administrative agency's action until it is final. — Also termed final-order doctrine; doctrine of finality; principle of finality. Cf. FINAL-JUDGMENT RULE.

finality rule. See FINAL-JUDGMENT RULE.

final judgment. See JUDGMENT.

final-judgment rule. The principle that a party may appeal only from a district court's final decision that ends the litigation on the merits. • Under this rule, a party must raise all claims of error in a single appeal. — Also termed final-decision rule; finality rule. 28 USCA § 1291. Cf. FINALITY DOCTRINE; INTERLOCUTORY APPEALS ACT.

final-offer arbitration. See ARBITRATION.

final order. See ORDER (2).

final-order doctrine. See FINALITY DOCTRINE.

final peace. See final concord under CONCORD.

final process. See PROCESS.

final receiver's receipt. The government's acknowledgment that it has received full payment from a person for public land, that it holds the legal title in trust for the person, and that it will in due course issue the person a land patent.

final settlement. See SETTLEMENT.

finance, n. 1. The system in business concerned with the management of money, credit, banking, and investments <after a brief career in finance, Andrea decided to go to law school>. 2. The science or study of the management of money, etc. <Bill sought a degree in finance because he wanted to be an investment banker>.

finance, vb. To raise or provide funds.

finance bill. See BILL (6).

finance charge. An additional payment, usu. in the form of interest, paid by a retail buyer for the privilege of purchasing goods or services in installments. • This phrase is increasingly used as a euphemism for interest. See INTEREST (3).

finance company. A nonbank company that deals in loans either by making them or by purchasing notes from another company that makes the loans directly to borrowers.

commercial finance company. A finance company that makes loans to manufacturers and wholesalers. — Also termed commercial credit company.

consumer finance company. A finance company that deals directly with consumers in extending credit. — Also termed small-loan company.

sales finance company. A finance company that does not deal directly with consumers but instead purchases consumer installment paper arising from the sale of consumer durables "on time." — Also termed acceptance company.

finance lease. See LEASE.

financial accounting. See ACCOUNTING (1).

Financial Accounting Standards Board. The independent body of accountants responsible for establishing, interpreting, and improving standards for financial accounting and reporting. — Abbr. FASB.

financial contract. See CONTRACT.

financial futures. See FUTURES (1).

financial institution. A business, organization, or other entity that manages money, credit, or capital, such as a bank, credit union, savings-and-loan association, securities broker or dealer, pawnbroker, or investment company.

financial intermediary. A financial entity — usu. a commercial bank — that advances the transfer of funds between borrowers and lenders, buyers and sellers, and investors and savers.

financial planner. A person whose business is advising clients about personal finances and investments. • Upon completing a certification program, such a person is called a certified financial planner. — Abbr. CFP.

financial report. See FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

financial-responsibility act. A state statute conditioning license and registration of motor vehicles on proof of insurance or other financial accountability.

financial-responsibility clause. A provision in an automobile insurance policy stating that the insured has at least the minimum amount of liability insurance coverage required by a state's financial-responsibility law.

financial statement. A balance sheet, income statement, or annual report that summarizes an individual's or organization's financial condition on a specified date or for a specified period by reporting assets and liabilities. — Also termed financial report. Cf. FINANCING STATEMENT.

certified financial statement. A financial statement examined and reported by an independent public or certified public accountant. SEC Rule 12b-2 (17 CFR § 240.12b-2).

consolidated financial statement. The financial report of a company and all its subsidiaries combined as if they were a single entity.

financing, n. 1. The act or process of raising or providing funds. 2. Funds that are raised or provided. — finance, vb.

asset-based financing. A method of lending in which lenders and investors look principally to the cash flow from a particular asset for repayment.

construction financing. See interim financing.

debt financing. The raising of funds by issuing bonds or notes or by borrowing from a financial institution.

equity financing. 1. The raising of funds by issuing capital securities (shares in the business) rather than making loans or selling bonds. 2. The capital so raised.

floor-plan financing. A loan that is secured by merchandise and paid off as the goods are sold. • Usu. such a loan is given by a manufacturer to a retailer or other dealer (as a car dealer). — Also termed floor planning. Cf. FIELD WAREHOUSING.

gap financing. Interim financing used to fund the difference between a current loan and a loan to be received in the future, esp. between two long-term loans. See bridge loan under LOAN.

interim financing. A short-term loan secured to cover certain major expenditures, such as construction costs, until permanent financing is obtained. — Also termed construction financing.

internal financing. A funding method using funds generated through the company's operations rather than from stock issues or bank loans.

link financing. The obtaining of credit by depositing funds in another's bank account to aid the other in obtaining a loan.

outside financing. The raising of funds by selling stocks (equity financing) or bonds (debt financing).

permanent financing. A long-term loan obtained to repay an interim loan, such as a mortgage loan that is used to repay a construction loan.

project financing. A method of funding in which the lender looks primarily to the money generated by a single project as security for the loan. • This type of financing is usu. used for large, complex, and expensive single-purpose projects such as power plants, chemical-processing plants, mines, and toll roads. The lender is usu. paid solely or almost exclusively out of the money generated by the contracts for the facility's output (sometimes paid by customers directly into an account maintained by the lender), such as the electricity sold by a power plant. The lender usu. requires the facility to be developed and owned by a special-purpose entity (sometimes called a bankruptcy-remote entity), which can be a corporation, limited partnership, or other legal entity, that is permitted to perform no function other than developing, owning, and operating the facility. See SINGLE-PURPOSE PROJECT; SPECIAL-PURPOSE ENTITY; BANKRUPTCY-REMOTE ENTITY.

financing statement. A document filed in the public records to notify third parties, usu. prospective buyers and lenders, of a secured party's security interest in goods. Cf. FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

finder. 1. An intermediary who brings together parties for a business opportunity, such as two companies for a merger, a borrower and a financial institution, or an issuer and an underwriter of securities. • A finder differs from a broker-dealer because the finder merely brings two parties together to make their own contract, while a broker-dealer usu. participates in the negotiations. See INTERMEDIARY. 2. A person who discovers an object, often a lost or mislaid chattel.

finder of fact. See FACT-FINDER.

finder's fee. The amount charged by one who brings together parties for a business opportunity.

finder's-fee contract. An agreement between a finder and one of the parties to a business opportunity.

finding of fact. A determination by a judge, jury, or administrative agency of a fact supported by the evidence in the record, usu. presented at the trial or hearing <he agreed with the jury's finding of fact that the driver did not stop before proceeding into the intersection>. — Often shortened to finding. Cf. CONCLUSION OF FACT; CONCLUSION OF LAW.

concurrent finding. (usu. pl.) Identical factual findings by two different courts on a specific issue of fact.

essential finding. Military law. A military judge's determination of a collateral pretrial motion.

general finding. An undifferentiated finding in favor of one party.

special finding. 1. (usu. pl.) A finding of the necessary and ultimate facts to support a judgment in favor of one party. 2. Military law. A military judge's finding that directly relates to the determination of guilt or innocence.

fine, n. 1. An amicable final agreement or compromise of a fictitious or actual suit to determine the true possessor of land. • The fine was formerly used as a form of conveyance to disen-tail an estate. — Also termed final concord; finalis concordia. See FOOT OF THE FINE.

"A peculiar and persistent use of the writ [of covenant] was in levying a fine. A fine — finalis concordia — was the compromise of a suit, settled upon terms approved by the court. The dispute, while it might be a reality, was more often fictitious, and was chiefly used as a means of conveying land. . . . Soon after [Glanvill's] book was written, an innovation was made in the procedure which endured until 1833. The terms of the compromise, agreed by the parties and approved by the judges, were entered upon a threefold indenture, one of the parts being given to each of the litigants and the third — the 'foot' or bottom of the document — being kept among the records of the court. The parties thus obtained incontestable evidence and abundant security, and either could sue the other if the agreement were not implemented." C.H.S. Fifoot, History and Sources of the Common Law: Tort and Contract 256 (1949).

"The fine that survived into the nineteenth century was a conveyancing mechanism that had worked in much the same way at the end of the twelfth. It took the form of a compromised law-suit. . . . The terms of the agreement were written out three times on a single piece of parchment which was then cut into three, one part remaining with each party and one, across the bottom and known as the 'foot', with the court. . . . This power to do more than the parties could do by their own act is not a trick harnessing the force of a judicial decision, and it comes from a time when judicial decision was not seen as the only business of courts." S.F.C. Milsom, Historical Foundations of the Common Law 151 (1969).

"Unlike the recovery, which was a real action, the fine was a compromised fictitious personal action, originally designed as a method of ensuring security in conveyancing and only later being employed for the purpose of barring estates tail. In outline, it operated in the following manner. The intending purchaser brought an action, begun by writ of covenant, against the intending vendor. The parties then applied to the court to compromise the action; by the terms of the compromise (finis) the intending vendor admitted that the land belonged to the intending purchaser because he had given it to him, and the terms of the compromise were recorded in the court records. The fine owed its popularity as a means of conveyancing to two factors, neither of which was present in the standard method of conveyance by means of feoffment. First, the enrolling in the court records provided evidence of the transaction which was both permanent and free from the danger of forgery. Secondly, the effect of the fine was to set running a short period of limitation at the expiration of which all claims to the land were barred. It was this second aspect which made the device attractive as a means of 'barring' fees tail." Peter Butt, Land Law 102-03 (2d ed. 1988).

executed fine. Hist. A fine made on acknowledgment of the right of the grantee to land given to him as a gift from the grantor. • This was abolished in 1833. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 74.

2. FINE FOR ALIENATION. 3. A fee paid by a tenant to the landlord at the commencement of the tenancy to reduce the rent payments. 4.

Hist. A money payment from a tenant to the tenant's lord.

common fine. A sum of money due from a tenant to a lord to defray the cost of a court leet or to allow the litigants to try the action closer to home. — Also termed head-silver.

5. A pecuniary criminal punishment or civil penalty payable to the public treasury. — fine, vb.

excessive fine. 1. Criminal law. A fine that is unreasonably high and disproportionate to the offense committed. • The Eighth Amendment proscribes excessive fines. An example of an excessive fine is a civil forfeiture in which the property was not an instrumentality of the crime and the worth of the property was not proportional to the owner's culpability. 2. A fine or penalty that seriously impairs one's earning capacity, esp. from a business.

fresh fine. Hist. A fine levied within the past year.

Fine and Recovery Act. Hist. A statute, enacted in 1833, that abolished the use of fines as a method of conveying title to land. See FINE (1). 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 74.

fine annullando levato de tenemento quod fuit de antiquo dominico (fi-nee a-nə-lan-doh læ-vay-to dee ten-ə-men-toh kwod fyoo-it dee an-ti-kwoh də-min-ə-koh). [Latin "a fine to be annulled levied from a tenant which was of ancient demesne"] Hist. A writ for disannulling a conveyance of land in ancient demesne to the lord's prejudice.

fine capiendo pro terris (fi-nee kap-ee-en-doh proh ter-is). [Latin "a fine to be taken for lands"] Hist. A writ that an imprisoned felon could use in some circumstances to obtain release from jail and to recover lands and goods taken during imprisonment.

fine for alienation. Hist. A fee paid by a tenant to the lord upon the alienation of a feudal estate and substitution of a new tenant. • It was payable by all tenants holding by knight's service or tenants in capite by socage tenure. — Often shortened to fine.

fine for endowment. Hist. A fee paid by a widow of a tenant to the tenant's lord. • If not paid, the widow could not be endowed of her husband's land.

finem facere (fi-nəm fay-sə-ree). [Latin] Hist.

1. To make a composition or compromise; to relinquish a claim in exchange for consideration.

"In the thirteenth century the king's justices wield a wide and a 'common law' power of ordering that an offender be kept in custody. They have an equally wide power of discharging him upon his 'making fine with the king.' We must observe the language of the time. In strictness they have no power to 'impose a fine.' No tribunal of this period, unless we are mistaken, is ever said to impose a fine. To order the offender to pay so much money to the king — this the judge may not do. If he did it, he would be breaking or evading the Great Charter, for an amercement should be affeered, not by royal justices, but by neighbours of the wrong-doer. What the judges can do is this: — they can pronounce a sentence of imprisonment and then allow the culprit to 'make fine,' that is to make an end (finem facere) of the matter by paying or finding security for a certain sum of money. In theory the fine is a bilateral transaction, a bargain; it is not 'imposed,' it is 'made.'" 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 517 (2d ed. 1899).

2. To make a settlement of a penalty. • Magna Carta (ch. 55) specifically limited "[a]ll fines which were made with us unjustly and contrary to the law of the land..." ([o]mnes fines qui injuste et contra legem terrae facti sunt nobiscum).

fine non capiendo pro pulchre placitando (fi-nee non kap-ee-en-doh proh pəl-kree plas-ə-tan-doh). [Latin "a fine not to be taken for pleading fairly"] Hist. A writ prohibiting court officers from taking fines for fair pleading (i.e., beaupleader).

fine print. The part of an agreement or document — usu. in small, light print that is not easily noticeable — referring to disclaimers, restrictions, or limitations.

fine pro redisseisina capiendo (fi-nee proh redis-see-zin-ə kap-ee-en-doh). [Law Latin "a fine to be taken for again disseising"] Hist. A writ that entitled a person imprisoned for twice dispossessing someone (redisseisin) to release upon payment of a reasonable fine.

fines le roy (fɪnz læ roy). [Law French] Hist. The king's fines. • A fine or fee that was paid to the monarch for an offense or contempt.

fine sur cognizance de droit, comme ceo que il ad de son done (fin sər kon-ə-zənts də droyt, kom say-oh kweel ad də sawn dawn). [Law French "a fine upon acknowledgment of the right, as that which he has of his gift"] Hist. The most common fine of conveyance, by which the defendant (also called the deforciant) acknowledged in court that he had already conveyed the property to the cognizee. • This form of conveyance took the place of an actual livery of seisin. See FINE (1).

"But, in general, the first species of fine, 'sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc.,' is the most used, as it conveys a clean and absolute freehold, and gives the cognizee a seisin in law, without an actual livery; and is therefore called a fine executed, whereas the others are but executory." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 353 (1766).

fine sur cognizance de droit tantum (fɪn sər kɒn-ə-zənts də droyt tan-təm). [Law French "fine upon acknowledgment of the right merely"] Hist. A fine of conveyance that does not acknowledge a prior conveyance of land. • This type of fine was used to convey reversionary interests — that is, interests that did not require acknowledgment of an earlier livery of seisin. See FINE (1).

fine sur concessit (fɪn sər kən-ses-it). [Law French] Hist. A species of conveyance in which the cognizor does not acknowledge the cognizee's preceding right in land but grants the cognizee an estate de novo, usu. for life or years, by way of supposed composition. See FINE (1).

fine sur done, grant et render (fɪn sər dawn, grant əy ren-dər). [Law French "fine upon gift, grant and render"] Hist. A double conveyance, consisting of a fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo que il ad de son done and a fine sur concessit, used to convey particular limitations of estates. • For example, after acknowledgment of the cognizee's right in the land, the cognizee would grant back to the cognizor or a third party some other estate in the land. See FINE (1).

finger, vb. Slang. To identify (a person) as a perpetrator, usu. of a crime <in his grand-jury testimony, Vitale fingered Benson as the gunman>.

fingerprint, n. 1. The distinctive pattern of lines on a human fingertip <no two fingerprints are identical>. 2. The impression of a fingertip made on any surface <the detective found several fingerprints on the knife>. 3. An ink impression of the pattern of lines on a fingertip, usu. taken during the booking procedure after an arrest <after Dick had his fingerprints taken, he was put in the drunk tank>. — Also termed print; thumbprint. — fingerprint, vb. — fingerprinting, n. Cf. DNA IDENTIFICATION.

finire (fi-ni-ree), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. To fine; to pay a fine. 2. To end or finish a matter.

finis (fi-nis or fin-is). [Latin] Hist. 1. Boundary or limit. 2. The compromise of a fine of conveyance. See FINE (1).

"The parties then applied to the court to compromise the action; by the terms of the compromise (finis) the intending vendor admitted that the land belonged to the intending purchaser because he had given it to him, and the terms of the compromise were recorded in the court records." Peter Butt, Land Law 102 (2d ed. 1988).

3. A fine, or payment of money made to satisfy a claim of criminal penalty.

finitio (fi-nish-ee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. An ending; death.

finium regundorum actio (fi-nee-əm ri-gəndor-əm ak-shee-oh). [Latin "action for regulating boundaries"] Roman law. An action for settling a boundary dispute.

FI0. abbr. Free in and out. • This bill-of-lading term means that the shipper supervises and pays for loading and unloading of cargo.

FI0S. abbr. Free in and out stowage. • This shipping term means that the vessel does not pay for the costs of loading, unloading, or stowing.

first lien. See LIEN.

First Lord of the Admiralty. Hist. In Britain, a minister and one of the lord commissioners who presided over the navy. • The First Lord was assisted by other lords, called Sea Lords, and various secretaries.

First Lord of the Treasury. English law. The chief officer in charge of the treasury. • Today, this position is held by the Prime Minister.

first magistrate. See MAGISTRATE (1).

first meeting. Archaic. Criminal law. The first contact between a killer and a victim after the killer has been informed of the victim's insulting words or conduct that provoked the killing. ● If the killing occurred during the first meeting, a murder charge could be reduced to manslaughter. See HEAT OF PASSION.

first mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

first-mortgage bond. See BOND (3).

first of exchange. Archaic. The first in a series of drafts (bills of exchange) drawn in duplicate or triplicate for safety in their delivery, the intention being that the acceptance and payment of any one of them, usu. the first to arrive, cancels the others in the set.

first offender. See OFFENDER.

first option to buy. See RIGHT OF PREEMPTION.

first-party insurance. See INSURANCE.

first policy year. Insurance. The first year of a life-insurance policy that is annually renewed. ● This statutory phrase prohibits an insurer from using the policy's suicide exclusion as a defense — and refusing payment on the policy — when an insured commits suicide after the first year of the policy. The insurer can invoke the suicide exclusion as a defense to payment only if the insured commits suicide in the first policy year.

first purchaser. See PURCHASER (2).

first refusal, right of. See RIGHT OF FIRST REFUSAL.

first-sale doctrine. Copyright. The rule that a copyright owner, after conveying the title to a particular copy of the protected work, loses the exclusive right to sell that copy and therefore cannot interfere with later sales or distributions by the new owner.

first taker. See TAKER.

first-to-file rule. Civil procedure. 1. The principle that, when two suits are brought by the same parties, regarding the same issues, in two courts of proper jurisdiction, the court that first acquires jurisdiction usu. retains the suit, to the exclusion of the other court. ● The court with the second-filed suit ordinarily stays proceedings or abstains. But an exception exists if the first-filed suit is brought merely in anticipation of the true plaintiff's suit — as an improper attempt at forum-shopping. See ANTICIPATORY FILING. 2. The doctrine allowing a party to a previously filed lawsuit to enjoin another from pursuing a later-filed action. — Also termed first-filing rule; priority-jurisdiction rule.

fisc (fisk), n. [Latin fiscus] The public treasury.

fiscal (fis-kəl), adj. 1. Of or relating to financial matters <fiscal year>. 2. Of or relating to public finances or taxation <the city's sound fiscal policy>.

fixture. Personal property that is attached to land or a building and that is regarded as an irremovable part of the real property, such as a fireplace built into a home. — Also termed permanent fixture. Cf. IMPROVEMENT.

“A fixture can best be defined as a thing which, although originally a movable chattel, is by reason of its annexation to, or association in use with land, regarded as a part of the land. . . . The law of fixtures concerns those situations where the chattel annexed still retains a separate identity in spite of annexation, for example a furnace or a light fixture. Where the chattel annexed loses such identity, as in the case of nails, boards, etc., the problem becomes one of accession.” Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 137, at 698 & n.1 (2d ed. 1955).

“Broadly, goods can be classified for the purposes of [UCC §] 9-313 into three categories: those that remain ‘pure goods,’ those so substantially integrated into real estate as to become real estate themselves, ‘pure realty,’ and those in the gray area that would pass in a deed to the real estate but that retain separate status as personal property. These last are fixtures.” 4 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 33-8, at 338 (4th ed. 1995).

tenant’s fixture. Removable personal property that a tenant affixes to the leased property but that the tenant can detach and take away.

trade fixture. Removable personal property that a tenant attaches to leased land for business purposes, such as a display counter. • Despite its name, a trade fixture is not usually treated as a fixture — that is, as irremovable.

fixture filing. The act or an instance of recording, in public real-estate records, a security interest in personal property that is intended to become a fixture. • The creditor files a financing statement in the real-property records of the county where a mortgage on the real estate would be filed. A fixture-filing financing statement must contain a description of the real estate.

FKA. abbr. Formerly known as. — Also spelled F/K/A; fka; f/k/a.

flag, n. 1. A usu. rectangular piece of cloth, bunting, or other material decorated with a distinctive design and used as a symbol or signal. 2. Something symbolized by the display of a flag, such as a ship or nationality. See DUTY OF THE FLAG; LAW OF THE FLAG.

flag of convenience. Int’l law. A national flag flown by a ship not because the ship or its crew has an affiliation with the nation, but because the lax controls and modest fees and taxes imposed by that nation have attracted the owner to register it there. • After World War II, shipowners began registering their ships in countries such as Panama, Liberia, and Honduras to avoid expensive and restrictive national regulation of labor, safety, and other matters. Since the late 1950s, there has been increasing international pressure to require a “genuine link” between a ship and its flag state, but this reform has been slow in coming. — Abbr. FOC.

flag of truce. Int’l law. A white flag used as a signal when one belligerent wishes to communicate with the other in the field. • The bearers of such a flag may not be fired on, injured, or taken prisoner, as long as they carry out their mission in good faith.

flag desecration. The act of mutilating, defacing, burning, or flagrantly misusing a flag. • Flag desecration is constitutionally protected as a form of free speech. United States v. Eichman, 496 U.S. 310, 110 S.Ct. 2404 (1990).

forced share. See ELECTIVE SHARE.

force majeure (fors ma-zhør). [Law French "a superior force"] An event or effect that can be neither anticipated nor controlled. • The term includes both acts of nature (e.g., floods and hurricanes) and acts of people (e.g., riots, strikes, and wars). — Also termed force majeure; vis major; superior force. Cf. ACT OF GOD; VIS MAJOR.

force-majeure clause. A contractual provision allocating the risk if performance becomes impossible or impracticable as a result of an event or effect that the parties could not have anticipated or controlled.

forcible, adj. Effected by force or threat of force against opposition or resistance.

"[In the law of trespass, the] term 'forcible' is used in a wide and somewhat unnatural sense to include any act of physical interference with the person or property of another. To lay one's finger on another person without lawful justification is as much a forcible injury in the eye of the law, and therefore a trespass, as to beat him with a stick. To walk peacefully across another man's land is a forcible injury and a trespass, no less than to break into his house vi et armis. So also it is probably a trespass deliberately to put matter where natural forces will take it on to the plaintiff's land." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 5 (17th ed. 1977).

forcible detainer. 1. The wrongful retention of possession of property by one originally in lawful possession, often with threats or actual use of violence. 2. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

forcible entry. At common law, the act or an instance of violently and unlawfully taking possession of lands and tenements against the will of those entitled to possession.

forcible entry and detainer. 1. The act of violently taking and keeping possession of lands and tenements without legal authority.

"To walk across another's land, or to enter his building, without privilege, is a trespass, but this in itself, while a civil wrong, is not a crime. However, if an entry upon real estate is accomplished by violence or intimidation, or if such methods are employed for detention after a peaceable entry, there is a crime according to English law, known as forcible entry and detainer. This was a common-law offense in England, although supplemented by English statutes that are old enough to be common law in this country. . . . It has sometimes been said that there are two separate offenses — (1) forcible entry and (2) forcible detainer. This may be true under the peculiar wording of some particular statute, but in general it seems to be one offense which may be committed in two different ways." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 487-88 (3d ed. 1982).

2. A quick and simple legal proceeding for regaining possession of real property from someone who has wrongfully taken, or refused to surrender, possession. — Also termed forcible detainer. See EVICTION; EJECTMENT.

“Forcible entry and detainer is a remedy given by statute for the recovery of possession of land and of damages for its detention. It is entirely regulated by statute, and the statutes vary materially in the different states.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 74, at 188 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

foreclose, vb. To terminate a mortgagor’s interest in property; to subject (property) to foreclosure proceedings.

“Should the mortgagor default in his obligations under the mortgage, the mortgagee will seek to ‘foreclose’, — i.e., ‘end’ or ‘close’ the mortgagor’s rights in the security. After taking the appropriate statutory steps, the mortgagee will sell the mortgaged property. If the sale is to someone other than the mortgagor or the mortgagee (a ‘third party’ sale) the proceeds will go: first, to pay the costs of the foreclosure proceedings; second, to pay off the principal indebtedness and accrued interest; third, if there is anything left over (i.e., any ‘equity’ existed) this is paid to the mortgagor.” Edward H. Rabin, Fundamentals of Modern Real Property Law 1087 (1974).

foreclosure (for-kloh-zhər). A legal proceeding to terminate a mortgagor’s interest in property, instituted by the lender (the mortgagee) either to gain title or to force a sale in order to satisfy the unpaid debt secured by the property. Cf. REPOSSESSION.

equitable foreclosure. A foreclosure method in which the court orders the property sold, and the proceeds are applied first to pay the costs of the suit and sale and then to the mortgage debt. • Any surplus is paid to the mortgagor.

judicial foreclosure. A costly and time-consuming foreclosure method by which the mortgaged property is sold through a court proceeding requiring many standard legal steps such as the filing of a complaint, service of process, notice, and a hearing. • Judicial foreclosure is available in all jurisdictions and is the exclusive or most common method of foreclosure in at least 20 states.

mortgage foreclosure. A foreclosure of the mortgaged property upon the mortgagor’s default.

nonjudicial foreclosure. 1. See power-of-sale foreclosure. 2. A foreclosure method that does not require court involvement.

power-of-sale foreclosure. A foreclosure process by which, according to the mortgage instrument and a state statute, the mortgaged property is sold at a nonjudicial public sale by a public official, the mortgagee, or a trustee, without the stringent notice requirements, burdens, or delays of a judicial foreclosure. • Power-of-sale foreclosure is authorized and used in more than half the states. — Also termed nonjudicial foreclosure; statutory foreclosure.

strict foreclosure. A rare procedure that gives the mortgagee title to the mortgaged property — without first conducting a sale — after a defaulting mortgagor fails to pay the mortgage debt within a court-specified period. • The use of strict foreclosure is limited to special situations except in those few states that permit this remedy generally.

tax foreclosure. A public authority’s seizure and sale of property for nonpayment of taxes.

foreclosure decree. 1. Generally, a decree ordering a judicial foreclosure sale. 2. A decree ordering the strict foreclosure of a mortgage.

foreclosure sale. See SALE.

foreign situs trust. See TRUST.

Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. A federal statute providing individuals with a right of action against foreign governments, under certain circumstances, to the extent the claim arises from the private, as opposed to the public, acts of the foreign state. 28 USCA §§ 1602–1611. — Abbr. FSIA. See RESTRICTIVE PRINCIPLE OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY.

“The Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA) of 1976 was designed to provide a set of comprehensive regulations governing access to federal and state courts in this country for plaintiffs asserting claims against foreign states and instrumentalities thereof. The enactment of this legislation responded to the reality that increased contacts between American citizens and companies on the one hand, and foreign states and entities owned by foreign states on the other, as well as a constantly expanding range of government activities, had created the need for judicial fora in this country to resolve disputes arising out of these activities.” 14A Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3662, at 160–61 (2d ed. 1998).

foreign state. 1. A foreign country. 2. An American state different from the one under discussion.

foreign substance. A substance found in a body, organism, or thing where it is not supposed to be found <the plaintiff sued because she thought she saw — and later confirmed that she had found — a foreign substance (namely, mercury) in her hamburger>.

forensis (fə-ren-sis), adj. [fr. Latin forum "court"] Roman law. Of or relating to a court of law. ● An advocate, for example, was sometimes known as a homo forensis.

foreperson. See presiding juror under JUROR.

foreseeability, n. The quality of being reasonably anticipatable. ● Foreseeability, along with actual causation, is an element of proximate cause in tort law. — foreseeable, adj.

foreseeable damages. See DAMAGES.

forest, n. Hist. A tract of land, not necessarily wooded, reserved to the king or a grantee, for hunting deer and other game.

forestall (for-stawl), vb. 1. To prevent (an event, result, etc.). 2. Hist. To intercept or obstruct (a person on a royal highway). 3. Hist. To prevent (a tenant) from coming on the premises. 4. Hist. To intercept (a deer reentering a forest). — Also spelled forstall.

forestaller, n. Hist. A person who forestalls; one guilty of the offense of forestalling.

forestalling the market. Hist. 1. The taking possession of commodities on their way to the market. 2. The purchase of goods on their way to the market, with the intention of reselling them at a higher price. 3. The dissuasion of sellers from taking their goods to the market, or the persuasion of sellers to increase the price of their goods at the market. ● At common law, forestalling the market was a criminal offense.

forestry right. A land interest under which a person has the right to enter the land, establish and maintain a crop of trees, harvest them, and construct works for that purpose.

forfeiture (for-fi-chər), n. 1. The divestiture of property without compensation. 2. The loss of a right, a privilege, or property because of a crime, breach of obligation, or neglect of duty. ● Title is simultaneously transferred to another, such as the government, a corporation, or a private person. 3. Something (esp. money or property) lost or confiscated by this process; a penalty. — forfeit, vb. — forfeitable, adj.

civil forfeiture. An in rem proceeding brought by the government against property that either facilitated a crime or was acquired as a result of criminal activity.

criminal forfeiture. A governmental proceeding brought against a person as punishment for the person's criminal behavior.

forfeiture of marriage. Hist. A penalty exacted by a lord from a ward who married without the lord's consent. ● The penalty was a money payment double the value that the marriage would otherwise have been worth to the lord.

forfeiture of pay. Military law. A punishment depriving the guilty party of all or part of his or her military pay.

4. A destruction or deprivation of some estate or right because of the failure to perform some obligation or condition contained in a contract.

forfeiture clause. A contractual provision stating that, under certain circumstances, one party must forfeit something to the other. ● Forfeiture clauses are often held to be void, although they are similar to conditions and other qualifications of estates in land.

forgavel (for-gav-əl). Hist. A small reserved rent in money; quit-rent.

forgery, n. 1. The act of fraudulently making a false document or altering a real one to be used as if genuine <the contract was void because of the seller's forgery>. — Also termed false making. ● Though forgery was a misdemeanor at common law, modern statutes typically make it a felony. 2. A false or altered document made to look genuine by someone with the intent to deceive <he was not the true property owner because the deed of trust was a forgery>. — Also termed fake. — forge, vb. — forger, n.

"While it is true that there is a distinction between fraud and forgery, and forgery contains some elements that are not included in fraud, forgeries are a species of fraud. In essence, the crime of forgery involves the making, altering, or completing of an instrument by someone other than the ostensible maker or drawer or an agent of the ostensible maker or drawer." 37 C.J.S. Forgery § 2, at 66 (1997).

double forgery. A draft having a forged pay-or signature and a forged indorsement.

fori disputationes (for-I dis-pyoo-tay-shee-oh-nee-z). [Latin "arguments of the court"] Roman law. Arguments or discussions before a court.

forinsec service (fə-rin-sik). Hist. The feudal services owed by a mesne (i.e., intermediate) lord, esp. those of a military nature. — Also termed foreign service; forinsecum servitium. Cf. INTRINSEC SERVICE.

"The terminology of Bracton's day and of yet earlier times neatly expresses the distinction between the service which the tenant owes to his immediate lord by reason of the bargain which exists between them, and the service which was incumbent on the tenement whilst it was in the lord's hand. The former is intrinsec service, the latter forinsec service; the former is the service which is created by, which (as it were) arises within, the bargain between the two persons, A and B, whose rights and duties we are discussing; the latter arises outside that bargain, is 'foreign' to that bargain. . . . [T]he term is a relative one; what is 'intrinsec' between A and B is 'forinsec' as regards C." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 238, 239 n.2 (2d ed. 1898).

forinsecus (fə-rin-sə-kəs), adv. [fr. Latin foris "without"] Hist. On the outside.

forinsecus (fə-rin-sə-kəs), n. [Latin] Hist. A foreigner; someone from another jurisdiction.

forisfiliate (for-is-fə-mil-ee-ayt), vb. [fr. Lat. in foris "outside" + familia "family"] Hist. To emancipate (a son) from paternal authority by a gift of land. • This act usu. rendered the son ineligible to inherit more property. — Also termed (archaically) forisfiliare.

forisfiliated (for-is-fə-mil-ee-aytid), adj. Hist. (Of a son) emancipated from paternal authority and in possession of a portion of family land in lieu of inheritance.

"If our English law at any time knew an enduring patria potestas which could be likened to the Roman, that time had passed away long before the days of Bracton. . . . Bracton, it is true, has copied about this matter some sentences from the Institutes which he ought not to have copied; but he soon forgets them, and we easily see that they belong to an alien system. Our law knows no such thing as 'emancipation,' it merely knows an attainment of full age. . . . In old times a forisfiliated son, that is, one whom his father had enfeoffed, was excluded from the inheritance. This is already antiquated, yet Bracton can find nothing else to serve instead of an emancipatio." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 438, 438 n.3 (2d ed. 1899).

forisfiliation (for-is-fə-mil-ee-ay-shən), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The act of forisfiliating a son.

formedon (for-mə-don). [fr. Latin forma doni "form of the gift"] Hist. A writ of right for claiming entailed property held by another. ● A writ of formedon was the highest remedy available to a tenant in tail. — Also termed writ of formedon.

"Called formedon, because the writ comprehended the form of the gift. It was of three kinds, in the descender, in the remainder, and in the reverter." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 650 (2d ed. 1867).

formedon in the descender. A writ of formedon brought by the issue in tail to recover possession of the land.

formedon in the remainder. A writ of formedon brought by a remainderman under a grant or gift in tail to recover possession of the land.

formedon in the reverter. A writ of formedon brought by a reversioner or donor of the grant or gift in tail to recover possession of the land.

former acquittal. See autrefois acquit under AUTREFOIS.

former adjudication. An adjudication in a prior action that resulted in a final determination of the rights of the parties or essential fact questions, the result of which bars relitigation. ● Collateral estoppel and res judicata are the two types of former adjudication. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL; RES JUDICATA.

former jeopardy. The fact of having previously been prosecuted for the same offense. ● A defendant enters a plea of former jeopardy to inform the court that he or she should not be prosecuted again. Cf. DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

former punishment. Military law. The rule that nonjudicial punishment for a minor offense may bar trial by court-martial for the same offense.

form of action. The common-law legal and procedural device associated with a particular writ, each of which had specific forms of process, pleading, trial, and judgment. ● The 11 common-law forms of action were trespass, trespass on the case, trover, ejectment, detinue, replevin, debt, covenant, account, special assumpsit, and general assumpsit.

"Forms of action are usually regarded as different methods of procedure adapted to cases of different kinds, but in fact the choice between forms of action is primarily a choice between different theories of substantive liability, and the scope of the actions measures the existence and extent of liability at common law. . . . The development and extension of the different forms of action is the history of the recognition of rights and liability in the law of torts, contracts, and property, and the essentials of rights of action." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading §§ 27, 30 at 54, 60 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

formula. 1. Roman law. A written document, prepared by a praetor and forwarded to a judex, identifying the issue to be tried and the judgment to be given by the judex. ● The four parts of a formula were (1) the demonstratio, in which the plaintiff stated the facts of the claim; (2) the intentio, in which the plaintiff specified the relief sought against the defendant; (3) in certain cases involving property disputes, the adjudicatio, in which the judex divided the property between the parties; and (4) the condemnatio, in which the judex condemned (usu) to pay the plaintiff a sum) or acquitted the defendant.

"The Roman judges were not, as with us, the presiding officers in the administration of law and justice. This was the position of the magistrate, the praetor. When a suit at law was commenced, the parties appeared before the praetor, who made a preliminary examination, not to ascertain the merits of the case, but to find the precise points in controversy. He heard the statements of the plaintiff and the counter-statements of the defendant, and from the two he constructed a formula (as it was called), a brief technical expression of the disputed issues. He then appointed a judex . . . instructing him to investigate the matter, and if he found the facts to be so and so, as recited in the formula, then to condemn the accused party, but, if he did not find them so, to acquit him." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 59-60 (1881). [This quotation describes only the period of formula procedure, ca. 150 B.C.-A.D. 25. — Ed.]

2. Common-law pleading. A set form of words (such as those appearing in writs) used in judicial proceedings.

forum conscientiae (for-əm kon-shee-en-shee-ee). [Latin "the forum of conscience"] Hist.

The tribunal or court of conscience. • This court was usu. a court of equity. See COURT OF CONSCIENCE.

forum contentiosum (for-əm kən-ten-shee-oh-səm). [Latin “the forum of contention”] Hist. A court of justice; a place for litigation.

forum contractus (for-əm kən-trak-təs). [Latin “the forum of the contract”] Hist. 1. The place where a contract was made, and thus the place of jurisdiction. 2. The court of the place where a contract was made.

forum conveniens (for-əm kən-vee-nee-enz). [Latin “a suitable forum”] The court in which an action is most appropriately brought, considering the best interests and convenience of the parties and witnesses. Cf. FORUM NON CONVENIENS.

forum domesticum (for-əm də-mes-ti-kəm). [Latin] Hist. A domestic court. • This type of court decides matters (such as professional discipline) arising within the organization that created it.

forum domicilii (for-əm dom-ə-sil-ee-i). [Latin] Hist. The forum or court of the domicile, usu. of the defendant.

forum ecclesiasticum (for-əm e-klee-z[h]ee-as-ti-kəm). [Latin] Hist. An ecclesiastical court. — Also termed judicium ecclesiasticum.

forum externum (for-əm ek-stər-nəm), n. [Latin “external tribunal”] Eccles. law. A court dealing with legal cases pertaining to or affecting the corporate life of the church.

forum inconueniens. See FORUM NON CONVENIENS.

forum internum (for-əm in-tər-nəm), n. [Latin “internal tribunal”] Eccles. law. A court of conscience; a court for matters of conscience.

forum ligeantiae rei (for-əm lij-ee-an-shee-ee-ree-i). [Latin] Hist. The forum of the defendant’s allegiance; the court or jurisdiction of the country to which the defendant owes allegiance.

forum non conveniens (for-əm non kən-vee-nee-enz). [Latin “an unsuitable court”] Civil procedure. The doctrine that an appropriate forum — even though competent under the law — may divest itself of jurisdiction if, for the convenience of the litigants and the witnesses, it appears that the action should proceed in another forum in which the action might originally have been brought. — Also termed forum inconueniens.

“Forum non conveniens allows a court to exercise its discretion to avoid the oppression or vexation that might result from automatically honoring plaintiff’s forum choice. However, dismissal on the basis of forum non conveniens also requires that there be an alternative forum in which the suit can be prosecuted. It must appear that jurisdiction over all parties can be secured and that complete relief can be obtained in the supposedly more convenient court. Further, in at least some states, it has been held that the doctrine cannot be successfully invoked when the plaintiff is resident of the forum state since, effectively, one of the functions of the state courts is to provide a tribunal in which their residents can obtain an adjudication of their grievances. But in most instances a balancing of the convenience to all the parties will be considered and no one factor will preclude a forum non conveniens dismissal, as long as another forum is available.” Jack H. Friedenthal et al., Civil Procedure § 2.17, at 87–88 (2d ed. 1993).

forum originis (for-əm ə-rij-ə-nis). [Latin] Hist. The forum or place of a person’s birth, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

forum regium (for-əm ree-jee-əm). [Latin] Hist. The king’s court.

forum rei (for-əm ree-i). [Latin] Hist. 1. The forum of the defendant, i.e., the place where the defendant is domiciled or resides. 2. FORUM REI SITAE.

forum rei gestae (for-əm ree-i jes-tee). [Latin] Hist. The forum or court of a res gesta (thing done); the place where an act was done, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

forum rei sitae (for-əm ree-i si-tee). [Latin] Hist. The court where the thing or subject-matter in controversy is situated, considered as a place of jurisdiction. — Often shortened to forum rei.

forum seculare (for-əm sek-yə-lair-ee). [Latin] Hist. A secular court. — Also spelled forum saeculare.

forum-selection clause. A contractual provision in which the parties establish the place (such as the country, state, or type of court) for specified litigation between them. — Also termed forum-shopping clause. Cf. CHOICE-OF-LAW CLAUSE.

forum-shopping. The practice of choosing the most favorable jurisdiction or court in which a claim might be heard. ● A plaintiff might engage in forum-shopping, for example, by filing suit in a jurisdiction with a reputation for high jury awards or by filing several similar suits and keeping the one with the preferred judge. Cf. JUDGE-SHOPPING.

forum-shopping clause. See FORUM-SELECTION CLAUSE.

forum state. Conflict of laws. The state in which a suit is filed.

for use. For the benefit or advantage of another. See USE.

forward agreement. See FORWARD CONTRACT.

forward and backward at sea. Marine insurance. From port to port in the course of a voyage, and not merely from one terminus to the other and back.

forward contract. An agreement to buy or sell a particular nonstandardized asset (usu. currencies) at a fixed price on a future date. ● Unlike a futures contract, a forward contract is not traded on a formal exchange. — Also termed forward agreement. Cf. FUTURES CONTRACT.

forwarding agent. See AGENT.

forward market. See futures market under MARKET.

forward triangular merger. See triangular merger under MERGER.

fossa (fahs-ə). [Latin “a ditch”] Hist. A ditch or pit of water in which a woman who had committed a felony was drowned. See FURCA ET FOSA.

foster, adj. 1. (Of a relationship) involving parental care given by someone not related by blood <foster home>. 2. (Of a person) giving or receiving parental care to or from someone not related by blood <foster parent> <foster child>.

foster, vb. To give care to (something or someone); esp., to give parental care to (a child who is not one's natural child).

fosterage, n. 1. The act of caring for another's child. 2. The entrusting of a child to another. 3. The condition of being in the care of another. 4. The act of encouraging or promoting.

foster care. 1. A program for parental care for children in lieu of the parental relationship with biological or adoptive parents. 2. The area of social services concerned with meeting the needs of children who participate in these types of programs.

foster-care placement. The (usu. temporary) act of placing a child in a home with a person or persons who provide parental care for the child.

foster-care review board. A board that reviews the permanent plans of foster-care placement of neglected and abused children.

foster child. See CHILD.

foster home. A household in which foster care is provided to a child who has been removed from his or her natural parents, usu. for abuse or neglect. ● A foster home is usu. an individual home, but it can also be a group home.

fosterlean (fos-tər-leen). Hist. 1. Remuneration for rearing a foster child. 2. JOINTURE.

fosterling. See foster child under CHILD.

foster parent. See PARENT.

foul bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

foundation. 1. The basis on which something is supported; esp., evidence or testimony that establishes the admissibility of other evidence <laying the foundation>. 2. A fund established for charitable, educational, religious, research, or other benevolent purposes; an endowment <the Foundation for the Arts>.

private foundation. A foundation that is supported privately rather than publicly, and that exists to advance charitable or educational projects. ● A private foundation is generally exempt from taxation. IRC (26 USCA) § 509.

foundational fact. See predicate fact under FACT.

founded on, adj. Having as a basis <the suit was founded on the defendant's breach of contract>.

founder, n. A person who founds or establishes; esp., a person who supplies funds for an institution's future needs.

founder's share. (usu. pl.) In England, a share issued to the founder of a company as a part of the consideration for the business. • Now rare, a founder's share participates in profits only if the dividend on ordinary shares has been paid to a specified amount.

founding father. A prominent figure in the founding of an institution or esp. a country; specif., one who played a leading role in founding the United States of America, esp. in the Revolutionary War and the making of the U.S. Constitution.

foundling. A deserted or abandoned infant.

foundling hospital. A charitable institution, found esp. in Europe, the purpose of which is to care for abandoned children.

four, rule of. See RULE OF FOUR.

four corners. The face of a written instrument.

• The phrase derives from the ancient custom of putting all instruments (such as contracts) on a single sheet of parchment, as opposed to multiple pages, no matter how long the sheet might be. At common law, this custom prevented people from fraudulently inserting materials into a fully signed agreement. The requirement was that every contract could have only four corners.

four-corners rule. 1. The principle that a document's meaning is to be gathered from the entire document and not from its isolated parts. 2. The principle that no extraneous evidence should be used to interpret an unambiguous document. Cf. PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE.

401(k) plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

403(b) plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

Fourteenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1868, whose primary provisions effectively apply the Bill of Rights to the states by forbidding states from denying due process and equal protection and from abridging the privileges and immunities of U.S. citizenship. • The amendment also gives Congress the power to enforce these provisions, leading to legislation such as the Civil Rights Acts.

Fourth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and the issuance of warrants without probable cause. See PROBABLE CAUSE.

fourth estate. The journalistic profession; the media. • The term comes from the British Parliament's reporters' gallery, whose influence was said to equal Parliament's three traditional estates: the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons. (In France, the three estates were the clergy, the nobility, and the commons.)

fourth-sentence remand. See REMAND.

four unities. The four qualities needed to create a joint tenancy at common law — namely interest, possession, time, and title. See UNITY (2).

Fox's Libel Act. Hist. A 1792 statute that gave the jury in a libel prosecution the right of pronouncing a guilty or not-guilty verdict on the whole matter in issue. • The jury was no longer bound to find the defendant guilty if it found that the defendant had in fact published the allegedly libelous statement. The Act empowered juries to decide whether the defendant's statement conformed to the legal standard for libel.

foy (foy or fwah). [Law French] Faith; allegiance.

FPA. abbr. Free from particular average.

"F.P.A. means Free from Particular Average; that is to say, the insured can recover only where the loss is total or is due to a general average sacrifice. The claims under the Sue and Labour clause are not affected by this stipulation." 2 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 128 (P.W. French ed., 10th ed. 1951).

Fr. abbr. 1. French. 2. FRAGMENTA.

fractional, adj. (Of a tract of land) covering an area less than the acreage reflected on a survey; pertaining to any irregular division of land containing either more or less than the conventional amount of acreage.

fractional currency. See CURRENCY.

Fragmenta (frag-men-tə). [Latin "fragments"] Roman law. Passages drawn from the writings of Roman jurists and compiled in Justinian's Digest. — Abbr. Fr.; Ff.

fragmented literal similarity. See SUBSTANTIAL SIMILARITY.

frame, vb. 1. To plan, shape, or construct; esp., to draft or otherwise draw up (a document). 2. To incriminate (an innocent person) with false evidence, esp. fabricated. — framable, frameable, adj.

frame-up, n. A plot to make an innocent person appear guilty.

francbordus. See FREE-BORD.

franchise (fran-chiz), n. 1. The right to vote. — Also termed elective franchise. 2. The right conferred by the government to engage in a specific business or to exercise corporate powers. — Also termed corporate franchise; general franchise.

“When referring to government grants (other than patents, trademarks, and copyrights), the term ‘franchise’ is often used to connote more substantial rights, whereas the term ‘license’ connotes lesser rights. Thus, the rights necessary for public utility companies to carry on their operations are generally designated as franchise rights. On the other hand, the rights to construct or to repair, the rights to practice certain professions, and the rights to use or to operate automobiles are generally referred to as licenses.” 1 Eckstrom’s Licensing in Foreign and Domestic Operations § 1.02[3], at 1–10 to 1–11 (David M. Epstein ed., 1998).

“In a violent conceptual collision, some franchisors maintain that a franchise is merely an embellished license and therefore revocable at will. Franchisees contend that a franchise is a license coupled with an interest, not subject to unlimited control by franchisors. As a result of this disagreement, legislative draftsmen have had difficulty defining ‘franchise.’” 1 Harold Brown, Franchising Realities and Remedies § 1.03[1], at 1–17 (1998).

franchise appurtenant to land. Rare. A franchise that is used in connection with real property and thus is sometimes characterized as real property.

general franchise. A corporation’s charter.

special franchise. A right conferred by the government, esp. to a public utility, to use property for a public use but for private profit.

3. The sole right granted by the owner of a trademark or tradename to engage in business or to sell a good or service in a certain area. 4. The business or territory controlled by the person or entity that has been granted such a right.

commercial franchise. A franchise using local capital and management by contracting with third parties to operate a facility identified as offering a particular brand of goods or services.

sports franchise. A franchise granted by a professional sports league to field a team in that league; the team itself.

trial franchise. A franchise having an initial term of limited duration, such as one year.

franchise, vb. To grant (to another) the sole right of engaging in a certain business or in a business using a particular trademark in a certain area.

franchise agreement. The contract between a franchisor and franchisee establishing the terms and conditions of the franchise relationship. • State and federal laws regulate franchise agreements.

franchise appurtenant to land. See FRANCHISE (2).

franchise clause. Insurance. A provision in a casualty insurance policy stating that the insurer will pay a claim only if it is more than a stated amount, and that the insured is responsible for all damages if the claim is under that amount. • Unlike a deductible, which the insured always has to pay, with a franchise clause, once the claim exceeds the stated amount, the insurer pays the entire claim.

franchise court. Hist. A privately held court that (usu.) exists by virtue of a royal grant, with jurisdiction over a variety of matters, depending on the grant and whatever powers the court acquires over time. • In 1274, Edward I abolished many of these feudal courts by forcing the nobility to demonstrate by what authority (quo warranto) they held court. If a lord could not produce a charter reflecting the franchise, the court was abolished. — Also termed courts of the franchise.

“Dispensing justice was profitable. Much revenue could come from the fees and dues, fines and amercements. This explains the growth of the second class of feudal courts, the Franchise Courts. They too were private courts held by feudal lords. Sometimes their claim to jurisdiction was based on old pre-Conquest grants. . . . But many of them were, in reality, only wrongful usurpations of private jurisdiction by powerful lords. These were put down after the famous Quo Warranto enquiry in the reign of Edward I.” W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 56–57 (2d ed. 1949).

franchisee. One who is granted a franchise.

franchise fee. See FEE (1).

franchiser. One who grants a franchise. — Also spelled franchisor.

franchise tax. See TAX.

francigena (fran-sə-jee-nə). [Law Latin francus “french” + Latin genitus “born”] Hist. 1. A person born in France. 2. Any alien in England; a foreigner. See FRENCHMAN.

francus (frangk-əs). [fr. French franc “free”] Hist. A freeman.

francus bancus. See FREE BENCH.

francus homo (frangk-əs hoh-moh). Hist. A free man.

francus tenens. See FRANK-TENANT.

frank, adj. [Law French] Hist. Free. — Also spelled fraunc; fraunche; fraunke.

frank, n. 1. (cap.) A member of the Germanic people who conquered Gaul in the 6th century. ● France received its name from the Franks. 2. A signature, stamp, or mark affixed to mail as a substitute for postage. 3. The privilege of sending certain mail free of charge, accorded to members of Congress. — Also termed (in sense 3) franking privilege. — frank, vb.

frankalmoin (frangk-al-moyn). [Law French “free alms”] Hist. A spiritual tenure by which a religious institution held land, usu. in return for a nonenforceable duty to pray for the donor. ● This tenure differed from the tenure by divine service, which required the performance of certain divine services. — Also spelled frankalmoign; frankalmoigne. — Also termed alm-oign; almoin; free alms; libera eleemosyna. See spiritual tenure under TENURE.

“Frankalmoin, or free alms, was a survival of Anglo-Saxon law, and implied simply an indefinite promise to pray for the soul of the donor; but since it was deemed a tenure by which the land was held, the general doctrine of ‘services’ was applied. On the other hand, in the case of Divine Service, which was much less frequently met with, the tenant promised a definite number of prayers, a duty which might be enforced in the King’s courts.” A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter’s Outlines of English Legal History 210 (5th ed. 1958).

frank bank. See FREE BENCH.

frank-chase. Hist. Free chase; a person’s liberty or right to hunt or log within a certain area. ● Others holding land within the frank-chase area were forbidden from hunting or logging in it. See CHASE.

frank-fee. Hist. Freehold land — land that one held to oneself and one’s heirs — exempted from all services except homage; land held other than by ancient demesne or copyhold.

frank ferm. Hist. An estate in land held in socage, the nature of the fee having been changed from knight’s service by enfeoffment for certain yearly services. — Also spelled frank-ferme.

franking privilege. See FRANK (3).

frank-law. Hist. The rights and privileges of a citizen or freeman; specif., the condition of being legally capable of giving an oath (esp. as a juror or witness). See LEGALIS HOMO.

“Frank law . . . may be understood from Bracton’s description of the consequences of losing it, among which the principal one was, that the parties incurred perpetual infamy, so that they were never afterwards to be admitted to oath, because they were not deemed to be othsworth, (that is, not worthy of making oath,) nor allowed to give testimony.” 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 657–58 (2d ed. 1867).

franklin (frangk-lin). Hist. A freeman; a freeholder; a gentleman. — Also spelled francling; frankleyn; frankleyn.

frankmarriage. Hist. An entailed estate in which the donor retains control of the land by refusing to accept feudal services from the donee (usu. the donor’s daughter) for three generations. ● If the donee’s issue fail in that time, the land returns to the donor. A donor who accepted homage (and the corresponding services arising from it) from the donee risked losing control of the land to a collateral heir. After three generations — a time considered sufficient to demonstrate that the line was well established — the donee’s heir could insist on paying homage; doing so transformed the estate into a fee simple. — Also termed liberum maritagium. See MARITAGIUM.

“Only when homage has been done are we to apply the rule which excludes the lord from the inheritance. This is at the bottom of one of the peculiarities of the ‘estate in frankmarriage.’ When a father makes a provision for a daughter, he intends that if the daughter has no issue or if her issue fails — at all events if this failure occurs in the course of a few generations — the land shall come back to him or to his heir. Therefore no homage is done for the estate in frankmarriage until the daughter’s third heir has entered, for were homage once done, there would be a danger that the land would never come back to the father or to his heir.” 2 Frederick Pollock &

frankpledge. Hist. A promise given to the sovereign by a group of ten freeholders (a tithing) ensuring the group's good conduct. ● The frankpledge was of Saxon origin, but continued after the Norman Conquest. The members of the group were not liable for an injury caused by an offending member, but they did act as bail to ensure that the culprit would appear in court. They were bound to produce a wrongdoer for trial. — Also termed laughe. See VIEW OF FRANKPLEDGE. Cf. DECENARY.

"Since there was no elaborate group of royal officials, the policing of the country had to be arranged for in a special way. The commonest way was to hold each household responsible for the offenses of any member of it. A further step was taken when, in the time of Cnut, a group of ten men was formed who were responsible for each other, in the sense that every one was security, borh, for the good behavior of the others. This group was called fri-borh, frankpledge, and remained for a long time one of the chief police methods of England." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 33-34 (1936).

Franks hearing. A hearing to determine whether a police officer's affidavit used to obtain a search warrant that yields incriminating evidence was based on false statements by the police officer. Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 98 S.Ct. 2674 (1978).

frank-tenant. Hist. A freeholder. — Also termed francus tenens.

frank-tenement. Hist. A free tenement; a freehold. ● This term described both the tenure and the estate.

FRAP (frap). abbr. FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE.

frater (fray-tər). [Latin] Roman law. A brother.

frater consanguineus (fray-tər kon-sang-wīn-ee-əs). A brother or half-brother having the same father.

frater nutricius (fray-tər n[y]oo-trish-ee-θs). A bastard brother.

frater uterinus (fray-tər yoo-tə-rī-nəs). A brother or half-brother having the same mother.

fraternal, adj. 1. Of or relating to the relationship of brothers. 2. Of or relating to a fraternity or a fraternal benefit association.

fraternal benefit association. A voluntary organization or society created for its members' mutual aid and benefit rather than for profit, and whose members have a common and worthy cause, objective, or interest. ● These associations usu. have a lodge system, a governing body, rituals, and a benefits system for their members. — Also termed fraternal benefit society; fraternity; fraternal lodge; fraternal order. Cf. FRIENDLY SOCIETY.

fraternal insurance. See INSURANCE.

fraternal lodge. See FRATERNAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION.

fraternal order. See FRATERNAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION.

fraternal society. See benevolent association under ASSOCIATION.

fraternity. See FRATERNAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION.

frater nutricius. See FRATER.

frater uterinus. See FRATER.

fratres conjurati (fray-treez kon-jə-ray-tī). [Latin "sworn brothers"] Hist. Sworn brothers or companions for the defense of their sovereign or for other purposes.

fratriage (fra-tree-ij or fray-). Hist. 1. A younger brother's portion of his father's estate, received as an inheritance. ● Under feudal law, even though the land was from the father's estate, the younger brother was bound to pay homage to the older brother. 2. A portion of an inheritance given to coheirs. — Also termed fratriagium.

fratricide (fra-trə-sīd or fray-). 1. One who has killed one's brother or sister. 2. The killing of one's brother or sister.

fraud, n. 1. A knowing misrepresentation of the truth or concealment of a material fact to induce another to act to his or her detriment. ● Fraud is usu. a tort, but in some cases (esp. when the conduct is willful) it may be a crime. 2. A misrepresentation made recklessly without belief in its truth to induce another person to act. 3. A tort arising from a knowing misrepresentation, concealment of material fact, or reckless misrepresentation made to induce another to act to his or her detriment. 4. Unconscionable dealing; esp., in contract law, the unconscientious use of the power arising out of the parties' relative positions and resulting in an unconscionable bargain. — fraudulent, adj.

"[T]he use of the term fraud has been wider and less precise in the chancery than in the common-law courts. This followed necessarily from the remedies which they respectively administered. Common law gave damages for a wrong, and was compelled to define with care the wrong which furnished a cause of action. Equity refused specific performance of a contract, or set aside a transaction, or gave compensation where one party had acted unfairly by the other. Thus 'fraud' at common law is a false statement . . . : fraud in equity has often been used as meaning unconscientious dealing — 'although, I think, unfortunately,' a great equity lawyer has said." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 263 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

actual fraud. A concealment or false representation through a statement or conduct that injures another who relies on it in acting. — Also termed fraud in fact; positive fraud; moral fraud.

civil fraud. 1. FRAUD (3). 2. Tax. An intentional — but not willful — evasion of taxes. • The distinction between an intentional (i.e., civil) and willful (i.e., criminal) fraud is not always clear, but civil fraud carries only a monetary, noncriminal penalty. Cf. criminal fraud; TAX EVASION.

common-law fraud. See promissory fraud.

constructive fraud. 1. Unintentional deception or misrepresentation that causes injury to another. — Also termed legal fraud; fraud in contemplation of law; equitable fraud. 2. See fraud in law.

"The layman would probably rather be found guilty of fraud, for he can then say the court was wrong, than be found guilty of 'constructive fraud,' for he does not know what that means and he may doubt whether the court does either." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 12 (1968).

criminal fraud. 1. Tax. The willful evasion of taxes accomplished by filing a fraudulent tax return. • Criminal fraud subjects the offender to criminal penalties such as fines and imprisonment. Cf. civil fraud; TAX EVASION. 2. Larceny by trick under LARCENY.

election fraud. See ELECTION FRAUD.

extrinsic fraud. 1. Deception that is collateral to the issues being considered in the case; intentional misrepresentation or deceptive behavior outside the transaction itself (whether a contract or a lawsuit), depriving one party of informed consent or full participation. • For example, a person might engage in extrinsic fraud by convincing a litigant not to hire counsel or answer by dishonestly saying the matter will not be pursued. — Also termed collateral fraud. 2. Deception that prevents a person from knowing about or asserting certain rights.

fraud in contemplation of law. See constructive fraud.

fraud in fact. See actual fraud.

fraud in law. Fraud that is presumed under the circumstances, as when a debtor transfers assets and thereby impairs creditors' efforts to collect sums due. — Also termed constructive fraud.

fraud in the factum. Fraud occurring when a legal instrument as actually executed differs from the one intended for execution by the person who executes it, or when the instrument may have had no legal existence. • Compared to fraud in the inducement, fraud in the factum occurs only rarely, as when a blind person signs a mortgage when misleadingly told that it's just a letter. — Also termed fraud in the execution; fraud in the making. Cf. fraud in the inducement.

fraud in the inducement. Fraud occurring when a misrepresentation leads another to enter into a transaction with a false impression of the risks, duties, or obligations involved; an intentional misrepresentation of a material risk or duty reasonably relied on, thereby injuring the other party without vitiating the contract itself, esp. about a fact relating to value. Cf. fraud in the factum.

fraud in the making. See fraud in the factum.

fraud on the court. A lawyer's or party's misconduct in a judicial proceeding so serious that it undermines or is intended to undermine the integrity of the proceeding. • Examples are bribery of a juror and introduction of fabricated evidence.

fraud on the market. 1. Fraud occurring when an issuer of securities gives out misinformation that affects the market price of stock, the result being that people who buy or sell are effectively misled even though they did not rely on the statement itself or anything derived from it other than the market price. 2. The securities-law claim based on such fraud. See FRAUD-ON-THE-MARKET PRINCIPLE.

insurance fraud. Fraud committed against an insurer, as when an insured lies on a policy application or fabricates a claim.

intrinsic fraud. Deception that pertains to an issue involved in an original action. • Examples include the use of fabricated evidence, a false return of service, perjured testimony, and false receipts or other commercial documents.

legal fraud. See constructive fraud.

mail fraud. An act of fraud using the U.S. Postal Service, as in making false representations through the mail to obtain an economic advantage. 18 USCA §§ 1341–1347.

moral fraud. See actual fraud.

positive fraud. See actual fraud.

promissory fraud. A promise to perform made when the promisor had no intention of performing the promise. — Also termed common-law fraud.

tax fraud. See TAX EVASION.

wire fraud. An act of fraud using electronic communications, as by making false representations on the telephone to obtain money. ● The federal Wire Fraud Act provides that any artifice to defraud by means of wire or other electronic communications (such as radio or television) in foreign or interstate commerce is a crime. 18 USCA § 1343.

fraud, badge of. See BADGE OF FRAUD.

fraudare (fraw-dair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To defraud.

fraude (frawd). [French] Civil law. Fraud committed in performing a contract. Cf. DOL.

fraudfeasor (frawd-fee-zər). A person who has committed fraud. — Also termed defrauder.

fraud in contemplation of law. See constructive fraud under FRAUD.

fraud in fact. See actual fraud under FRAUD.

fraud in law. See FRAUD.

fraud in the execution. See fraud in the factum under FRAUD.

fraud in the factum. See FRAUD.

fraud in the inducement. See FRAUD.

fraud in the making. See fraud in the factum under FRAUD.

fraud on creditors. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE (1).

fraud on the court. See FRAUD.

fraud on the market. See FRAUD.

fraud-on-the-market principle. Securities. The doctrine that, in a claim under the anti-fraud provisions of the federal securities laws, a plaintiff may presumptively establish reliance on a misstatement about a security's value — without proving actual knowledge of the fraudulent statement — if the stock is purchased in an open and developed securities market. ● This doctrine recognizes that the market price of an issuer's stock reflects all available public information. The presumption is rebuttable. — Also termed fraud-on-the-market theory.

frauds, statute of. See STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

fraudulent act. Conduct involving bad faith, dishonesty, a lack of integrity, or moral turpitude. — Also termed dishonest act; fraudulent or dishonest act.

fraudulent alienation. 1. The transfer of property with an intent to defraud others, esp. creditors and lienholders. 2. The transfer of an estate asset by the estate's administrator for little or no consideration.

fraudulent alienee. See ALIENEES.

fraudulent banking. The receipt of a deposit by a banker who knew that the bank was insolvent at the time of the deposit.

fraudulent claim. A false insurance claim. See FRAUD.

fraudulent concealment. See CONCEALMENT.

fraudulent-concealment rule. See CONCEALMENT RULE.

fraudulent conversion. See CONVERSION (2).

fraudulent conveyance. 1. A transfer of property for little or no consideration, made for the purpose of hindering or delaying a creditor by putting the property beyond the creditor's reach; a transaction by which the owner of real or personal property seeks to place the property beyond the reach of creditors. — Also termed fraud on creditors.

are sufficient to satisfy the creditors, then the exercise of the power will not subject the appointive property to the claims of the creditors; if, on the other hand, the owned assets of the donee are inadequate to satisfy creditors' claims after the exercise of the power, then the transfer resulting from the exercise is likely to fall into the category of the fraudulent conveyance and the creditors will be able to reach the appointive property in the hands of the appointee." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 173 (2d ed. 1984).

2. Bankruptcy. A prebankruptcy transfer or obligation made or incurred by a debtor for little or no consideration or with the actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor. • A bankruptcy trustee may recover such a conveyance from the transferee if the requirements of 11 USCA § 548 are met. — Also termed fraudulent transfer. Cf. PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

fraudulent debt. See DEBT.

fraudulent joinder. See JOINDER.

fraudulent misrepresentation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

fraudulent or dishonest act. See FRAUDULENT ACT.

fraudulent pretenses. See FALSE PRETENSES.

FRCP. abbr. FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.

free and common socage

F.R.D. abbr. Federal Rules Decisions; a series of reported federal court decisions (beginning in 1938) that construe or apply the Federal Rules of Civil, Criminal, or Appellate Procedure, or the Federal Rules of Evidence. • Also included are rule changes, ceremonial proceedings of federal courts, and articles on federal court practice and procedure. — Often written FRD.

FRE. abbr. FEDERAL RULES OF EVIDENCE.

Freddie Mac. See FEDERAL HOME LOAN MORTGAGE CORPORATION.

free, vb. 1. To liberate. 2. To remove (a person or animal) from a constraint or burden.

free agency, n. A professional athlete's ability to negotiate an employment contract with any team in the league, rather than being confined to the league's collective system. • Free agency is usu. granted to veteran players who have been in the league for a certain number of years. — free agent, n. Cf. RESERVE CLAUSE.

free alms. See FRANKALMOIN.

free alongside ship. A mercantile term designating that the seller is responsible for delivering the goods to the dock and for paying the costs of delivery there. • When the seller delivers the goods to the specified dock, the risk of loss passes to the buyer. The abbreviation F.A.S. is more common than the full phrase; it is sometimes erroneously thought to stand for free along side as opposed to free alongside ship. Cf. FREE ON BOARD; COST, INSURANCE, AND FREIGHT.

free and clear, adj. Unencumbered by any liens; marketable <free and clear title>.

free and common socage. See free socage under SOCAGE.

free and equal, adj. (Of an election) conducted so that the electorate has a reasonable opportunity to vote, with each vote given the same effect.

free bench. Hist. A widow's (and occasionally a widower's) interest in the deceased spouse's estate. • Free bench gave the surviving spouse a half interest in the estate until death or remarriage. — Also termed francus bancus; frank bank; liber bancus.

"The bench in question was, we may guess . . . a bench at the fireside. The surviving spouse has in time past been allowed to remain in the house along with the children. In the days when families kept together, the right of the widower or widow to remain at the fireside may have borne a somewhat indefinite character. . . . By way of 'free bench' the surviving spouse now has the enjoyment of one-half of the land until death or second marriage, whether there has ever been a child of the marriage or no." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 419 (2d ed. 1899).

free-bord. Hist. 1. A small strip of land (usu. 2½ feet wide and lying just outside a fence) that the owner of the fenced property was allowed to claim and use. 2. The right of claiming that quantity of land. — Also spelled freebord; free bord; free-board. — Also termed francbordus.

free chapel. Hist. Eccles. law. A church founded by the Crown (or by a person under royal grant) and not subject to the bishop's jurisdiction.

"[T]hose onely are Free-chappels, which are of the King's Foundation, and by him exempted from the Jurisdiction of the Ordinary; but the King may licence a Subject to found such a Chappel, and by his Charter exempt it from the Ordinaries Visitation also. . . . [I]t is called free, in respect of its exemption from the Jurisdiction of the Diocesan. . . ." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

free city. Int'l law. A country-like political and territorial entity that, although independent in principle, does not have the full capacity to act according to general international law but is nevertheless a subject of international law.

freedman (freed-mən). Hist. An emancipated slave.

freedom. 1. The state of being free or liberated. 2. A political right.

freedom of assembly. See RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY.

freedom of association. The right to join with others in a common undertaking that would be lawful if pursued individually. • This right is protected by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The government may not prohibit outsiders from joining an association, but the insiders do not necessarily have a right to exclude others. Cf. RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY.

freedom of choice. 1. The liberty embodied in the exercise of one's rights. 2. The parents' opportunity to select a school for their child in a unitary, integrated school system that is devoid of de jure segregation. 3. The liberty to exercise one's right of privacy, esp. the right to have an abortion. — Also termed right to choose.

freedom of contract. The doctrine that people have the right to bind themselves legally; a judicial concept that contracts are based on mutual agreement and free choice, and thus should not be hampered by external control such as governmental interference. • This is the principle that people are able to fashion their relations by private agreements, esp. as opposed to the assigned roles of the feudal system. As Maine famously said, "[T]he movement of progressive societies has been a movement from Status to Contract." Henry Sumner Maine, Ancient Law 165 (1864). — Also termed liberty of contract.

"Like most shibboleths, that of 'freedom of contract' rarely, if ever, received the close examination which its importance deserved, and even today it is by no means easy to say what exactly the nineteenth-century judges meant when they used this phrase. At least it may be said that the idea of freedom of contract embraced two closely connected, but none the less distinct, concepts. In the first place it indicated that contracts were based on mutual agreement, while in the second place it emphasized that the creation of a contract was the result of a free choice unhampered by external control such as government or legislative interference." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 5 (3d ed. 1981).

freedom of expression. The freedom of speech, press, assembly, or religion as guaranteed by the First Amendment; the prohibition of governmental interference with those freedoms.

Freedom of Information Act. The federal statute that establishes guidelines for public disclosure of documents and materials created and held by federal agencies. 5 USCA § 552. — Abbr. FOIA.

freedom of petition. See RIGHT TO PETITION.

freedom of religion. The right to adhere to any form of religion or none, to practice or abstain from practicing religious beliefs, and to be free from governmental interference with or promotion of religion, as guaranteed by the First Amendment and Article VI, § 3 of the U.S. Constitution.

freedom of speech. The right to express one's thoughts and opinions without governmental restriction, as guaranteed by the First Amendment. — Also termed liberty of speech.

freedom of the city. Hist. An immunity or privilege from some burden, esp. from county jurisdiction and its privilege of municipal taxation and self-government, held under a royal charter.

freedom of the press. The right to print and publish materials without governmental intervention, as guaranteed by the First Amendment. — Also termed liberty of the press.

freedom of the seas. Int'l law. The principle that the seas beyond territorial waters are not subject to any country's control. • Ships on the high seas are subject only to the jurisdiction of the country whose flag they fly, except in cases of piracy, hijacking, hot pursuit from territorial waters, slave trading, and certain rights of approach by warships. — Also termed mare liberum.

free election. See ELECTION.

free enterprise. A private and consensual system of production and distribution, usu. conducted for a profit in a competitive environment that is relatively free of governmental interference. See CAPITALISM.

free entry, egress, and regress (ee-gres / ree-gres). Hist. A person's right to go on land as often as reasonably necessary. • A tenant could go on land to gather crops still growing after the tenancy expired.

Free Exercise Clause. The constitutional provision (U.S. Const. amend. I) prohibiting the government from interfering in people's religious practices or forms of worship. — Also termed Exercise Clause. Cf. ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE.

free fishery. See FISHERY (1).

freehold, n. 1. An estate in land held in fee simple, in fee tail, or for term of life. • At common law, these estates were all created by enfeoffment with livery of seisin. 2. The tenure by which such an estate is held. — Also termed freehold estate; freehold interest; franktenement; liberum tenementum. Cf. LEASEHOLD.

perpetual freehold. An estate given to a grantee for life, and then successively to the grantee's heirs for life. • The effect of this type of freehold was to keep land within a family in perpetuity, much like a fee tail.

"It took the form of a grant 'to A for life, remainder to A's son for life, remainder to that son's son for life', and so on ad infinitum. Such a limitation, if valid, would have been an effective substitute for the fee tail. The courts, however, set their face against this 'perpetual freehold' (as it was sometimes termed), and in Lovelace v. Lovelace (1585) it was held that remainders which did not vest before the determination of the first life estate would fail ex post facto. Subsequently a number of other, not entirely convincing, reasons were found for invalidating perpetual freeholds, ultimately culminating in what is sometimes termed the 'old' rule against perpetuities, but, more commonly, the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell, taking its name from the case which marked its emphatic reiteration." Peter Butt, Land Law 136 (2d ed. 1988).

freeholder. Hist. One who possesses a freehold.

freeholder's court baron. See COURT BARON.

freehold estate. See FREEHOLD.

freehold interest. See FREEHOLD.

freehold land society. (usu. pl.) Hist. A society in England created to enable mechanics, artisans, and other workers to buy at the lowest possible price freehold land with a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the right to vote in the county in which the land was located.

free ice. Hist. Ice in navigable streams that does not belong to the adjacent riparian owner or to another with the right to appropriate it, but that belongs to the person who first appropriates it.

free law. Hist. The civil rights enjoyed by a freeman (as opposed to a serf). • Free law could be forfeited if the freeman was convicted of treason or an infamous crime.

freeman. 1. A person who possesses and enjoys all the civil and political rights belonging to the people under a free government. 2. A person who is not a slave. 3. Hist. A member of a municipal corporation (a city or borough) who possesses full civic rights, esp. the right to vote. 4. Hist. A freeholder. Cf. VILLEIN. 5. Hist. An allodial landowner. Cf. VASSAL. — Also spelled free man.

free market. See open market under MARKET.

free of all average. Maritime law. Insurance that covers a total loss only. — Abbr. FAA.

free on board. A mercantile term denoting that the seller is responsible for delivering goods on board a ship or other conveyance for carriage to the consignee at a specified location <FOB Indianapolis plant>. • The seller must deliver the goods to the vessel named and has the risk of loss until the goods reach that location. — Abbr. FOB. Cf. FREE ALONGSIDE SHIP; COST, INSURANCE, AND FREIGHT.

"In an F.O.B. ('free on board') contract, the goods must be delivered on board by the seller, free of expense to the purchaser, and they are not at the latter's risk until actually delivered on board, when the property in them passes to him. The seller must also give the buyer sufficient notice to enable him to insure against loss during the sea transit. The buyer, on the other hand, must name a ship or authorize the seller to select one. The seller cannot sue for the price until the goods are loaded, and if his inability to load was caused by the buyer's failure to name an effective ship, his only remedy lies in damages. Similarly, F.O.R. means 'free on rail.'" 2 E.W. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 86-87 (P.W. French ed., 10th ed. 1951).

FOB destination. A mercantile term denoting that the seller is required to pay the freight charges as far as the buyer's named destination.

FOB shipping. A mercantile term denoting that the seller is required to bear the risk of placing the goods on a carrier.

free port. A port located outside a country's customs frontier, so that goods may be delivered usu. free of import duties or taxes, without being subjected to customs-control procedures; FREE-TRADE ZONE.

free rider. One who obtains an economic benefit at another's expense without contributing to it. — Also spelled freerider.

free socage. See SOCAGE.

free trade, n. The open and unrestricted import and export of goods without barriers, such as quotas or tariffs, other than those charged only as a revenue source, as opposed to those designed to protect domestic businesses. Cf. protective tariff under TARIFF (2).

free-trade zone. A duty-free area within a country to promote commerce, esp. transshipment and processing, without entering into the country's market. — Also termed foreign trade zone; free port.

free warren. See WARREN.

freeze, n. 1. A period when the government restricts or immobilizes certain commercial activity.

credit freeze. A period when the government restricts bank-lending.

wage-and-price freeze. A period when the government forbids the increase of wages and prices.

2. A recapitalization of a closed corporation so that the value of its existing capital is concentrated primarily in preferred stock rather than in common stock. • By freezing capital, the owner can transfer the common stock to heirs without taxation while continuing to enjoy preferred-stock income during the owner's lifetime, while the common stock grows.

freeze, vb. 1. To cause to become fixed and unable to increase <to freeze interest rates> <to freeze prices>. 2. To make immobile by government mandate or banking action <to freeze assets>. 3. To cease physical movement, esp. when ordered by a law enforcement officer <the police officer shouted at the suspect to freeze>.

freeze, n. A person or entity subjected to a freeze-out.

freeze-out, n. Corporations. The process, usu. in a closely held corporation, by which the majority shareholders or the board of directors oppresses minority shareholders in an effort to compel them to liquidate their investment on terms favorable to the controlling shareholders. Cf. SQUEEZE-OUT.

"A 'freeze-out' is usually accomplished by the merger of a corporation into its parent corporation, where the parent corporation owns a large percentage of the shares of the subsidiary, and the minority shareholders are entitled to minimal distributions of cash or securities. A 'freeze-out' may also be used to connote the situation where so large a number of equity shares are issued to the acquiring corporation that the public shareholders own less than 10 percent of the outstanding equity securities and, therefore, have no control over the corporation or any of its decisions. In such event, a short-form merger could later be used to eliminate the minority shareholders." 69A Am. Jur. 2d Securities Regulation — State § 245, at 971 n.60 (1993).

freeze out, vb. 1. To subject one to a freeze-out. 2. To exclude a business competitor <freezing out the competition>.

freeze-out merger. See cash merger under MERGER.

freight. 1. Goods transported by water, land, or air. 2. The compensation paid to a carrier for transporting goods.

dead freight. The amount paid by a shipper to a shipowner for the ship's unused cargo space.

freight absorption. See ABSORPTION (5).

freight forwarder. See forwarding agent under AGENT.

freighting voyage. See VOYAGE.

freight rate. See RATE.

frenchman. Hist. A stranger; a foreigner. • In early English law, this term was applied to all foreigners, even those not from France.

F reorganization. See REORGANIZATION (2).

fresh, adj. Recent; not stale; characterized by newness without any material interval.

fresh complaint. A reasonably prompt lodging of a grievance; esp., a victim's prompt report of a sexual assault to someone trustworthy.

fresh-complaint rule. The theory that the credibility of a sexual-assault victim is bolstered if the victim reports the assault soon after it occurs. • Most courts no longer recognize this theory.

fresh disseisin. See DISSEISIN.

fresh fine. See FINE (5).

fresh force. Hist. Force, such as disseisin or forcement, newly done. • This term refers to force used in a town, and for which a remedy (the Assize of Fresh Force) existed. See assize of fresh force under ASSIZE (8).

fresh pursuit. 1. The right of a police officer to make a warrantless search of a fleeing suspect or to cross jurisdictional lines to arrest a fleeing suspect. 2. The right of a person to use reasonable force to retake property that has just been taken. — Also termed hot pursuit.

fresh start. Bankruptcy. The favorable financial status obtained by a debtor who receives a release from personal liability on prepetition debts or who reorganizes debt obligations through the confirmation and completion of a bankruptcy plan.

Friday market. See MARKET.

friendly fire. 1. A fire burning where it is intended to burn, yet capable of causing unintended damage. 2. Military or police gunfire that injures one's own side.

friendly society. In Britain, a voluntary association, supported by subscriptions or contributions, for the purpose of providing financial relief to ill members and to their widows and children upon death. • Friendly societies are regulated by statute. Cf. FRATERNAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION.

friendly suit. A lawsuit in which all the parties have agreed beforehand to allow a court to resolve the issues. • Friendly suits are often filed by settling parties who wish to have a judgment entered.

friendly suitor. See WHITE KNIGHT.

friendly takeover. See TAKEOVER.

friend of the court. 1. AMICUS CURIAE. 2. In some jurisdictions, an official who investigates and advises the circuit court in domestic-relations cases involving minors. • The friend of the court may also help enforce court orders in those cases.

fringe benefit. See BENEFIT.

frisk, n. A pat-down search to discover a concealed weapon. See STOP AND FRISK. Cf. SEARCH. — Also termed pat-down.

frivolous, adj. Lacking a legal basis or legal merit; not serious; not reasonably purposeful .

frivolous appeal. An appeal having no legal basis, usu. filed for delay to induce a judgment-creditor to settle or to avoid payment of a judgment. • Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 38 provides for the award of damages and costs if the appellate court determines that an appeal is frivolous. Fed. R. App. P. 38.

frivolous defense. See DEFENSE (1).

frivolous suit. A lawsuit having no legal basis, often filed to harass or extort money from the defendant.

FRM. See fixed-rate mortgage under MORTGAGE.

frolic (frol-ik), n. Torts. An employee's significant deviation from the employer's business for personal reasons. • A frolic is outside the scope of employment, and thus the employer is not vicariously liable for the employee's actions. Cf. DETOUR.

front, n. 1. The side or part of a building or lot that is open to view, that is the principal entrance, or that faces out to the open (as to a lake or ocean); the foremost part of something <the property's front was its most valuable attribute>. 2. A person or group that serves to conceal the true identity or activity of the person or group in control <the political party was a front for the terrorist group>. 3. A political association similar to a party <popular front>.

frontage (frən-tij). 1. The part of land abutting a street or highway or lying between a building's front and a street or highway <the property's value was so low because of its narrow frontage>. 2. The linear distance of a frontage <the lot's frontage was 90 feet>.

frontage assessment. A municipal fee charged to a property owner for local improvements that abut a street or highway, such as sidewalks, pavements, or sewage lines.

frontager (frən-tij-ər), n. A person owning or occupying land that abuts a highway, river, seashore, or the like.

front-end money. See SEED MONEY.

front foot. A measurement used to calculate a frontage assessment. — Also termed abutting foot.

front-foot rule. The principle that an improvement cost is to be apportioned among several properties in proportion to their frontage, without regard to the benefits conferred on each property. — Also termed front-foot plan.

front money. See SEED MONEY.

front wages. See WAGE.

frozen account. See blocked account under ACCOUNT.

frozen asset. See ASSET.

frozen deposit. See DEPOSIT (2).

fructuarius (frək-choo-air-ee-əs). [Latin "(one) entitled to fruits"] 1. Roman & civil law. One having the usufruct of a thing (as of land and animals). 2. Hist. A lessee.

fructus (frək-təs). [Latin "fruits"] 1. Roman & civil law. The natural produce of land and animals; the profit or increase from land and animals. 2. USUFRUCT.

fructus civiles (frək-təs sə-vi-leez). [Latin "civil fruits"] Income (such as rent or interest) that one receives from another for the use or enjoyment of a thing, esp. real property or loaned money.

fructus fundi (frək-təs fən-dī). [Latin "land fruits"] The fruits or produce of land.

fructus industriales (frək-təs in-dəs-tree-ay-leez). [Latin "industrial fruits"] See EMBLEMS.

fructus legis (frək-təs lee-jis). [Latin "fruits of the law"] The proceeds of judgment or execution.

fructus naturales (frək-təs nach-ə-ray-leez). [Latin "natural fruits"] The natural produce of land or plants and the offspring of animals. • Fructus naturales are considered part of the real property.

fructus pecudum (frək-təs pek-yə-dəm). [Latin "fruits of the herd"] The produce or increase of flocks or herds.

fructus pendentes (frək-təs pen-dən-teez). [Latin "hanging fruits"] Fruits not yet severed or gathered; fruits united with that which produces them.

fructus percepti (frək-təs pər-sep-ti). [Latin "gathered fruits"] Roman & civil law. Fruits that have been gathered.

fructus rei alienae (frək-təs ree-I ay-lee-ee-nee or al-ee-). [Latin "fruits of another's property"] The fruits of another's property; fruits taken from another's estate.

fructus separati (frək-təs sep-ə-ray-ti). [Latin "separated fruits"] Roman & civil law. The produce of a thing after being separated from it, and so becoming in law "fruits."

fructus stantes (fræk-təs stan-teez). [Latin "standing fruits"] Fruits that have not yet been severed from the stalk or stem.

fructuum perceptio (fræk-choo-əm pər-səp-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman & civil law. The rightful taking of the produce of property by a person who does not own the property.

fruges (froo-jeez). [Latin "fruits" or "crops"] Roman & civil law. Edible produce or crops; esculents.

fruit. 1. The produce or product of something (as of land or property). 2. Civil law. Income or goods derived or produced from property without a diminution of the property's value.

civil fruit. Civil law. Revenue received from property, such as interest income or a lease payment. See FRUCTUS CIVILES.

natural fruit. Civil law. A product of the land or of animals, whether edible or otherwise useful. • Examples are crops and eggs. See FRUCTUS NATURALES.

3. Something (such as evidence) obtained during an activity or operation <the fruit of the officer's search>. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE.

fruit-and-the-tree doctrine. Tax. The rule that an individual who earns income cannot assign that income to another person to avoid taxation.

fruit-of-the-poisonous-tree doctrine. Criminal procedure. The rule that evidence derived from an illegal search, arrest, or interrogation is inadmissible because the evidence (the "fruit") was tainted by the illegality (the "poisonous tree"). • Under this doctrine, for example, a murder weapon is inadmissible if the map showing its location and used to find it was seized during an illegal search. — Also termed fruits doctrine. See EXCLUSIONARY RULE; ATTENUATION DOCTRINE; INDEPENDENT-SOURCE RULE; INEVITABLE-DISCOVERY RULE.

fruits of a crime. The proceeds acquired through criminal acts.

frustra (fræs-trə). [Latin] Hist. In vain; to no purpose.

frustration, n. 1. The prevention or hindering of the attainment of a goal, such as contractual performance.

commercial frustration. An excuse for a party's nonperformance because of some unforeseeable and uncontrollable circumstance. — Also termed economic frustration.

self-induced frustration. A breach of contract caused by one party's action that prevents the performance. • The phrase is something of a misnomer, since self-induced frustration is not really a type of frustration at all but is instead a breach of contract.

temporary frustration. An occurrence that prevents performance and legally suspends the duty to perform for the duration of the event. • If the burden or circumstance is substantially different after the event, then the duty may be discharged.

2. Contracts. The doctrine that, if the entire performance of a contract becomes fundamentally changed without any fault by either party, the contract is considered terminated. — Also termed frustration of purpose. — frustrate, vb. Cf. IMPOSSIBILITY (4); IMPRACTICABILITY; MISTAKE.

"Where the entire performance of a contract becomes substantially impossible without any fault on either side, the contract is prima facie dissolved by the doctrine of frustration. For instance, where a person contracted to let a hall to the plaintiff for use for some concerts, and the hall was accidentally destroyed by fire before the date of the first concert, it was held that the contract was dissolved." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 200–01 (3d ed. 1981).

frustrum terrae (fræs-trəm ter-ee). [Latin] Hist. A piece of land. • This usu. referred to a fragment of land remaining after a survey.

Frye test. The defunct federal common-law rule of evidence on the admissibility of scientific evidence. • It required that the tests or procedures must have gained general acceptance in their particular field. In Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786 (1993), the Supreme Court held that scientific evidence must meet the requirements of the Federal Rules of Evidence, not the Frye test, to be admissible. Frye v. United States, 293 F. 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1923).

FSIA. abbr. FOREIGN SOVEREIGN IMMUNITIES ACT.

FSLIC. abbr. FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION.

FST. See field sobriety test under SOBRIETY TEST.

F.Supp. abbr. Federal Supplement, a series of reported decisions of the federal district courts (from 1932 to 1998), the U.S. Court of Claims (1932 to 1960), and the U.S. Customs Court (from 1949 to 1998, but renamed the Court of International Trade in 1980). • It is the first of the Federal Supplement series.

F.Supp.2d. abbr. The second series of the Federal Supplement, which includes decisions of federal district courts and the Court of International Trade from 1997 to the present. • Some of the F.Supp. volumes contain cases from 1998 and some of the F.Supp.2d volumes contain cases decided in 1997.

FTC. abbr. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

FTCA. abbr. FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS ACT.

fuer (fyoo-ər). [Law French “to flee”] Flight from the law. — Also termed fugere.

fuer in fait (fyoo-ər in fay). [Law French “flight in fact”] Actual flight from the law. — Also termed fugere in facta.

fuer in ley (fyoo-ər in lay). [Law French “flight in law”] Legal flight from the law. • If the accused failed to appear, the law treated that failure as flight. — Also termed fugere in lege.

fugam fecit (fyoo-gəm fee-sit). [Law Latin] Hist. He fled; he has made flight. • When a jury made this finding in a felony or treason trial, the defendant’s property was subject to forfeiture.

fugere. See FUER.

fugere in facta. See fuer in fait under FUER.

fugere in lege. See fuer in ley under FUER.

fugitation (fyoo-jə-tay-shən). Hist. A sentence or declaration of fugitive status that was pronounced against an accused person for failing to answer a citation and appear. • The effect was that the person forfeited his or her goods and chattels.

fugitive. 1. A person who flees or escapes; a refugee. 2. A criminal suspect who flees, evades, or escapes arrest, prosecution, or imprisonment, esp. by fleeing the jurisdiction or by hiding. — Also termed (in sense 2) fugitive from justice.

fugitive-disentitlement doctrine. An equitable rule that allows a trial or appellate court to limit a fugitive’s access to civil and criminal courts in the United States.

fugitive-dismissal rule. The principle that an appellate court may dismiss a criminal defendant’s appeal if the defendant is a fugitive.

Fugitive Felon Act. A federal statute that makes it a felony to flee across state lines to avoid state-felony prosecution or confinement, or to avoid giving testimony in a state-felony case. 18 USCA § 1073.

fugitive from justice. See FUGITIVE.

fugitive’s goods. Hist. The goods that a person forfeited as a result of fleeing.

fugitive-slave laws. Hist. Federal statutes passed in 1793 and 1850 providing for the surrender and return of slaves who had escaped and fled to a free territory or a free state.

fugitive warrant. See WARRANT (1).

fugitivus (fyoo-jə-ti-vəs). [Latin] Roman law. A fugitive; a runaway slave.

fugue (fyoo-g). An abnormal state of consciousness in which one appears to function normally but on recovery has no memory of what one did while in that condition.

fully administered. A plea by an executor or administrator that he or she has completely and legally disposed of all the assets of the estate and that the estate has no remaining assets from which a new claim could be satisfied.

fully diluted earnings per share. See EARNINGS PER SHARE.

fully funded, adj. 1. Having sufficient financial resources to meet current payments, even upon bankruptcy <the company's pension plan was fully funded>. 2. Having completely satisfied a funding requirement; paid <the construction loan was fully funded>. — Also termed funded.

fully managed fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

fully paid face-amount certificate. See face-amount certificate under CERTIFICATE.

function, n. 1. Activity that is appropriate to a particular business or profession . 2. Office; duty; the occupation of an office <presidential function>.

functional depreciation. See DEPRECIATION.

functional discount. See DISCOUNT.

functional disease. See DISEASE.

functional feature. Trademarks. A design element that, in an engineering sense, is necessary to construct an article, or that, in a commercial sense, is necessary to manufacture a salable product; a product's attribute that is essential to its use, is necessary for its proper and successful operation, and is utilitarian in every detail, without containing any ornamental features. • A functional feature is not eligible for trademark protection.

functionality. Trademarks. A shape, configuration, design, or color that is so superior to available alternatives that giving the first user exclusive trademark rights would hinder competition.

aesthetic functionality. A doctrine that denies protection to the design of a product or its container when the design is necessary to enable the product to function as intended.

functional obsolescence. See OBSOLESCENCE.

functionary. A public officer or employee.

functus officio (fəŋk-təs ə-fish-ee-oh). [Latin "having performed his or her office"] (Of an officer or official body) without further authority or legal competence because the duties and functions of the original commission have been fully accomplished. • The term is sometimes abbreviated to functus <the court was functus>.

fund, n. 1. A sum of money or other liquid assets established for a specific purpose .

blended fund. A fund created by income from more than one source, usu. from the sale of a testator's real and personal property.

changing fund. A fund, esp. a trust fund, that changes its form periodically as it is invested and reinvested.

client-security fund. A fund established usu. by a state or a state bar association to compensate persons for losses that they suffered because of their attorneys' misappropriation of funds or other misconduct.

contingent fund. 1. A fund created by a municipality for expenses that will necessarily arise during the year but that cannot be appropriately classified under any of the specific purposes for which taxes are collected. 2. A fund segregated by a business to pay unknown costs that may arise in the future. — Also termed contingency reserve.

executor fund. A fund established for an executor to pay an estate's final expenses.

fund in court. 1. Contested money deposited with the court. See INTERPLEADER. 2. Money deposited to pay a contingent liability.

general fund. 1. A government's primary operating fund; a state's assets furnishing the means for the support of government and for defraying the legislature's discretionary appropriations. • A general fund is distinguished from assets of a special character, such as trust, escrow, and special-purpose funds. 2. A nonprofit entity's assets that are not earmarked for a specific purpose.

general revenue fund. The fund out of which a municipality pays its ordinary and incidental expenses.

guaranty fund. A private deposit-insurance fund, raised primarily by assessments on banks, and used to pay the depositors of an insolvent bank. • Guaranty funds preceded the FDIC's federal-deposit insurance, which began in 1933, though many funds continued until the savings-and-loan crisis in the 1980s. Massachusetts has a guaranty fund for uninsured deposits (deposits above $100,000) that are not covered by federal-deposit insurance.

imprest fund (im-prest). A fund used by a business for small, routine expenses.

joint-welfare fund. A fund that is established in collective bargaining to provide health and welfare benefits to union employees. • The fund is jointly managed by labor and management representatives. — Also termed Taft-Hartley fund.

unsatisfied-judgment fund. A fund established by a state to compensate persons for losses stemming from an automobile accident caused by an uninsured or underinsured motorist.

2. (usu. pl.) Money or other assets, such as stocks, bonds, or working capital, available to pay debts, expenses, and the like <Sue invested her funds in her sister's business>.

current funds. Assets that can be readily converted into cash.

3. A pool of investments owned in common and managed for a fee; MUTUAL FUND .

fund, vb. 1. To furnish money to (an individual, entity, or venture), esp. to finance a particular project. 2. To use resources in a manner that produces interest. 3. To convert (a debt, esp. an open account) into a long-term debt that bears interest at a fixed rate.

fundamental error. See plain error under ERROR.

fundamental-fairness doctrine. The rule that applies the principles of due process to a judicial proceeding. • The term is commonly considered synonymous with due process.

fundamental interest. See FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT.

fundamental law. The organic law that establishes the governing principles of a nation or state; esp., CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. — Also termed organic law. Cf. NATURAL LAW.

fundamental-miscarriage-of-justice exception. The doctrine allowing a federal court in a habeas corpus proceeding to address a claim of constitutional error that, although ordinarily unreviewable, is subject to review because of a state-court procedural default that rendered the proceedings basically unfair. • For the exception to apply, among other things, the petitioner must show by a preponderance of the evidence that constitutional error resulted in the conviction of one who is probably innocent. If the defaulted claim applies only to sentencing, the exception permits review of the claim if the petitioner shows by clear and convincing evidence that, but for the constitutional error, no reasonable jury would have found the petitioner guilty eligible for the sentence received.

fundamental right. 1. A right derived from natural or fundamental law. 2. Constitutional law. A significant component of liberty, encroachments of which are rigorously tested by courts to ascertain the soundness of purported governmental justifications. • A fundamental right triggers strict scrutiny to determine whether the law violates the Due Process Clause or the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment. As enunciated by the Supreme Court, fundamental rights include voting, interstate travel, and various aspects of privacy (such as marriage and contraception rights). — Also termed fundamental interest. See STRICT SCRUTINY. Cf. SUSPECT CLASSIFICATION.

fundamental term. See TERM (2).

fundamental trend. See major trend under TREND.

fundatio (fən-day-shee-oh). [Latin “founding” or “foundation”] Hist. The founding of a corporation, particularly an eleemosynary corporation.

fundatio incipiens (fən-day-shee-oh in-sip-ee-enz). [Latin “incipient foundation”] The incorporation or grant of corporate powers.

fundatio perficiens (fən-day-shee-oh pər-fish-ee-enz). [Latin “perfecting foundation”] The endowment or gift of funds to a corporation.

funded. See FULLY FUNDED.

funded debt. See DEBT.

fund in court. See FUND (1).

funding, n. 1. The process of financing capital expenditures by issuing long-term debt obligations or by converting short-term obligations into long-term obligations to finance current expenses; the process of creating a funded debt. 2. The refinancing of a debt before its maturity. — Also termed refunding. 3. The provision or allocation of money for a specific purpose, such as for a pension plan, by putting the money into a reserve fund or investments. 4. The provision of financial resources to finance a particular activity or project, such as a research study.

fundi publici (fən-dī pəb-lə-sī). [Latin] Hist. Public lands.

funds transfer. A payment of money from one person or entity to another; esp., the process by which payment is made through a series of transactions between computerized banking systems, beginning with an originator’s payment order and ending when a final payment order is received by the beneficiary’s bank. • Commercial or wholesale funds transfers are governed by Article 4A of the UCC. Consumer funds transfers are regulated by the federal Electronic Funds Transfer Act (15 USCA fundus (fən-dəs). [Latin “land”] Hist. 1. Land or ground in general, without consideration of its specific use. 2. A farm.

fundus patrimonialis (fən-dəs pa-trə-moh-nee-ay-lis). [Latin] Roman law. Land belonging to the patrimonium principis (that is, property belonging to the emperor as such).

funeral expense. See EXPENSE.

fungibiles res (fən-jib-ə-leez reez). [Latin] Civil law. Fungible things.

fungible (fən-jə-bəl), adj. Regarded as commercially interchangeable with other property of the same kind <corn and wheat are fungible goods, whereas land is not>. — fungible, n.

fungible goods. See GOODS.

fur (fər). [Latin] Roman law. A thief.

furandi animus (fyuu-ran-di an-ə-məs). See animus furandi under ANIMUS.

furca (fər-kə). [Latin “fork”] Roman law. An instrument of punishment with two prongs to which the arms are tied. • In England, furca became another name for gallows.

furca et flagellum (fər-kə et flə-jel-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. Gallows and whip. • This referred to the basest of servile tenures — the tenant was completely at the mercy of the lord.

furca et fossa (fər-kə et fahs-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. Gallows and pit. • This phrase was used in ancient grants of criminal jurisdiction for punishing felons: hanging for men and drowning for women.

Furian Caninian law. See LEX FURIA CANINIA.

furigeldum (fyər-ə-jel-dəm). [Law Latin fur “theft” + geldum “payment”] Hist. A fine paid for theft.

furlong (fər-lawng). One-eighth of a mile, or forty poles. — Also termed ferlingus; ferlingum.

furlough (fər-loh). 1. A leave of absence from military or other employment duty. 2. A brief release from prison. See STUDY RELEASE.

fur manifestus (fər man-ə-fes-təs). [Latin “manifest thief”] Roman law. A thief caught in the act of stealing.

furor brevis. See HEAT OF PASSION.

furta (fər-tə). Hist. A right or privilege from the monarch to try, condemn, and execute criminals within a jurisdiction.

further advance. 1. A second or later loan to a mortgagor by a mortgagee, either on the same security as the original loan or on an additional security. 2. Equity practice. The agreed conversion of arrear of interest on a mortgage security into principal.

further assurance. See ASSURANCE.

further instruction. See additional instruction under JURY INSTRUCTION.

furtum (fər-təm). [fr. Latin furvus “black”] Hist. 1. A theft of movable property. • Under Roman law, furtum included not only the taking of another’s property, but any handling of the property done with the intent of profiting by it. Furtum was a private crime (delictum) prosecuted by the person suffering the loss.

“The word furtum is derived from furvus, a word which means black, because theft is committed secretly and stealthily and usually by night . . .” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 385 (4th ed. 1956).

2. The thing stolen.

furtum conceptum (fər-təm kən-sep-təm). [Latin] Roman law. A theft in which the thief is discovered in possession of stolen property after a search with witnesses.

furtum grave (fər-təm gray-vee or grah-vay). Hist. Scots law. An aggravated degree of theft that, in ancient times, was punishable by death.

furtum manifestum (fər-təm man-ə-fes-təm). [Latin “open theft”] Roman law. A theft in which the thief is caught in the act of theft. See IN FLAGRANTE DELICTO.

furtum oblatum (fər-təm ə-blay-təm). [Latin “offered theft”] Roman law. A theft in which the thief offers stolen property to a person who is then found with the goods; the planting of stolen goods.

Fusian Caninian law. See LEX FURIA CANINIA.

fustis (fəs-tis). Hist. 1. A staff used in making livery of seisin. 2. A baton or club.

futhwite (footh-wit). Hist. A fine for fighting or breaking the peace. — Also termed fithwite.

future-acquired property. See AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY (1).

future advance. Money secured by an original security agreement even though it is lent after the security interest has attached.

future-advance clause. A contractual term in a security agreement covering additional loaned amounts on present collateral or collateral to be acquired in the future, regardless of whether the secured party is obliged to make the advances; esp., a provision in an open-end mortgage or deed of trust allowing the borrower to borrow additional sums in the future, secured under the same instrument and by the same security. • This type of clause makes a new security agreement unnecessary when the secured creditor makes a future loan to the debtor.

future-advances mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

future consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

future covenant. See COVENANT (4).

future damages. See DAMAGES.

future earnings. See lost earnings under EARNINGS.

future estate. See FUTURE INTEREST.

future goods. See GOODS.

future interest. A property interest in which the privilege of possession or of other enjoyment is future and not present. • A future interest can exist in either the grantor (as with a reversion) or the grantee (as with a remainder or executory interest). Today, most future interests are equitable interests in stocks and debt securities, with power of sale in a trustee. — Also termed future estate; estate in expectancy. Cf. present interest under INTEREST (2).

“[T]he interest is an existing interest from the time of its creation, and is looked upon as a part of the total ownership of the land or other thing [that] is its subject matter. In that sense, future interest is somewhat misleading, and it is applied only to indicate that the possession or enjoyment of the subject matter is to take place in the future.” Lewis M. Simes & Allan F. Smith, The Law of Future Interests § 1, at 2-3 (2d ed. 1956).

future performance. See PERFORMANCE.

futures, n. 1. Standardized assets (such as commodities, stocks, or foreign currencies) bought or sold for future acceptance or delivery. — Also termed financial futures. 2. FUTURES CONTRACT. 3. Future claimants, esp. those who would become members of a class of persons injured by a defendant and thus included in a class action.

futures contract. An agreement to buy or sell a standardized asset (such as a commodity, stock, or foreign currency) at a fixed price at a future time, usu. during a particular time of a month. • Futures contracts are traded on exchanges such as the Chicago Board of Trade or the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. — Often shortened to futures. — Also termed futures agreement; time-bargain. Cf. FORWARD CONTRACT; LEVERAGE CONTRACT; OPTION.

futures market. See MARKET.

futures option. See OPTION.

futures trading. The buying and selling of futures contracts, usu. on formal exchanges.

future use. See contingent use under USE (4). fyrdfare. See FERDFARE.

G

GA. See general average under AVERAGE.

GAAP (gap). abbr. GENERALLY ACCEPTED ACCOUNTING PRINCIPLES.

GAAS (gas). abbr. GENERALLY ACCEPTED AUDITING STANDARDS.

gabel (gə-bel). Hist. 1. A tax or duty on movables. 2. GAVEL (1). — Also spelled gabelle. See LAND-GAVEL.

gabella (gə-bel-ə). Hist. 1. A tax or duty on merchandise. 2. A peasant villager, esp. one who pays rent or tribute. See GAVEL (1). — Also spelled gavella.

gage (gayj), n. A pledge, pawn, or other thing deposited as security for performance. ● An archaic use of this word corresponded to the way wage was formerly used in legal contexts: a gager del ley, for example, was an earlier form of wager of law, while gager de deliverance had the same meaning as wager of deliverance. Cf. WAGE (2).

“A single root has sent out many branches which overshadow large fields of law. Gage, engagement, wage, wages, wager, wed, wedding, the Scottish wadset, all spring from one root. In particular we must notice that the word ‘gage,’ in Latin vadium, is applied indiscriminately to movables and immovables, to transactions in which a gage is given and to those in which a gage is taken. When a lord has seized his tenant’s goods in distress they are in his hands a gage for the payment of the rent that is in arrear, and the sheriff is always taking gages from those who have no mind to give them. The notion expressed by the word seems to be that expressed by our ‘security’ . . .” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 117-18 (2d ed. 1899).

gage, vb. To pawn or pledge; to give as security for. ● Gage is an older form of wage, and often appeared as a phrase, gager deliverance.

“Though the word Gage be retained, as it is a Substantive, yet as it is a verb, use hath turned the Gage into Wage so as it is oftener written Wage; as to Wage Deliverance, to give security, that a thing shall be delivered: For, if he that distrained, being sued, have not delivered the Cattle that were distrained, then he shall not only avow the Distress, but Gager Deliverance, put in surety, that he will deliver them.” Thomas Blount, Nomo Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

gager del ley. See WAGER OF LAW.

gag order. 1. A judge’s order directing parties, attorneys, witnesses, or journalists to refrain from publicly discussing the facts of a case. ● When directed to the press, such an order is generally unconstitutional under the First Amendment. 2. A judge’s order that an unruly defendant be bound and gagged during trial to prevent further interruptions.

gain, n. 1. An increase in amount, degree, or value.

pecuniary gain. 1. A gain of money or of something having monetary value. 2. Criminal law. Any monetary or economic gain that serves as an impetus for the commission of an offense. ● In most states, an offense and its punishment are aggravated if the offense was committed for pecuniary gain. Murder, for example, is often aggravated to capital murder if the murderer is paid to commit the crime. See SOLICITATION (2).

2. Excess of receipts over expenditures or of sale price over cost. See PROFIT. 3. Tax. The excess of the amount realized from a sale or other disposition of property over the property’s adjusted value. IRC (26 USCA) § 1001. — Also termed realized gain.

capital gain. See CAPITAL GAIN.

extraordinary gain. A gain that is both unusual and infrequent, such as the gain realized from selling a large segment of a business.

ordinary gain. A gain from the sale or exchange of a noncapital asset. Cf. CAPITAL GAIN.

recognized gain. The portion of a gain that is subject to income taxation. IRC (26 USCA) § 1001(c). See BOOT (1).

4. (pl.) Civil law. A type of community property that reflects the increase in property value brought about by the spouses’ common skill or labor. See COMMUNITY PROPERTY. Cf. ACQUETS.

gainful employment. See EMPLOYMENT.

gainor. See SOCMAN.

gains, n. See GAIN.

gale (gayl). Hist. 1. A periodic payment of rent. See GAVEL (2). 2. Rent paid by a free miner (the galee) for the right to mine a plot of land. 3. A license to mine a plot of land. • A gale could be conveyed or devised.

Gallagher agreement. A contract that gives one codefendant the right to settle with the plaintiff for a fixed sum at any time during trial and that guarantees payment of the sum regardless of the trial's outcome. City of Tucson v. Gallagher, 493 P.2d 1197 (Ariz. 1972). Cf. MARY CARTER AGREEMENT.

gallows. A wooden frame consisting of two upright posts and a crossbeam, from which condemned criminals are hanged by a rope.

gamalis (gə-may-lis). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A child born in lawful wedlock. 2. A child born to betrothed but unmarried parents.

gambling, n. The act of risking something of value, esp. money, for a chance to win a prize. • Gambling is regulated by state and federal law. 18 USCA §§ 1081 et seq. — Also termed gaming.

gambling contract. See CONTRACT.

gambling device. Any thing, such as cards, dice, or an electronic or mechanical contrivance, that allows a person to play a game of chance in which money may be won or lost. • Gambling devices are regulated by law, and the use or possession of a gambling device can be illegal. — Also termed gaming device.

gambling place. Any location where gambling occurs. 18 USCA § 1081. — Also termed gaming house; gaming room.

gambling policy. See wager policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

gaming house. See GAMBLING PLACE.

gaming room. See GAMBLING PLACE.

ganancial (gə-nan-shəl), adj. Of, relating to, or consisting of community property . See COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

“The Spanish [more correctly, the Castilian] form of community property, called the ‘ganancial’ system, is found today in the nine states of the United States, the Spanish–American republics of Central and South America, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Philippine Republic.” Robert L. Menell & Thomas M. Boykoff, Community Property in a Nutshell 10 (2d ed. 1988).

G & A. See general administrative expense under EXPENSE.

gang. A group of persons who go about together or act in concert, esp. for antisocial or criminal purposes. • Many gangs (esp. those made up of adolescents) have common identifying signs and symbols, such as hand signals and distinctive colors. — Also termed street gang.

gangland. The world of criminal gangs and organized crime.

gangster. A member of a criminal gang or an organized-crime syndicate.

Ganser's syndrome (gahn-zər or gan-sər). An abnormality characterized by the giving of irrelevant and nonsensical answers to questions. • Prisoners sometimes feign this syndrome in an attempt to obtain leniency.

gantlet (gawnt-lit). [fr. Swedish gata "lane" + lopp "course"] 1. Hist. A former military punishment in which the offender was stripped to the waist and forced to run between two rows of soldiers who gave him lashes as he passed. 2. A series of severe troubles or difficulties; an ordeal. — Also spelled gauntlet; (archaically) gantlope.

GAO. abbr. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

gaol. See JAIL.

gaol delivery. See JAIL DELIVERY.

gaoler. See JAILER.

gaol liberties. See JAIL LIBERTIES.

gap creditor. See CREDITOR.

gap-filler. A rule that supplies a contractual term that the parties failed to include in the contract. • For example, if the contract does not contain a sales price, UCC § 2-305(1) establishes the price as being a reasonable one at the time of delivery.

"Contracts often have gaps in them, intentional or inadvertent. Gaps arise, too, out of the 'battle of the forms' under sections 2-204 and 2-207. Some gaps are more or less complete, others only partial. Article 2 of the Code includes numerous gap filler provisions which taken together constitute a kind of standardized statutory contract." 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 3-4 (4th ed. 1995).

gap financing. See FINANCING.

gap period. Bankruptcy. The duration of time between the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition and the entry of the order for relief. — Often shortened to gap.

gap report. In the making of federal court rules, a report that explains any changes made by an advisory committee in the language of a proposed amendment to a procedural rule after its publication for comment. • Before advisory committees began issuing gap reports in the early 1980s, there were complaints that the public record did not show why changes were made after the public-comment period. The five advisory committees — for appellate, bankruptcy, civil, criminal, and evidence rules — therefore began filing the reports to fill in the "gaps" in the record. Although the phrase is sometimes written in capital letters (GAP report), it is not an acronym.

gap theory. Insurance. The principle that a tortfeasor will be considered underinsured if his or her liability-insurance coverage — although legally adequate — is less than the injured party's underinsured-motorist coverage. • This principle allows an injured party to invoke underinsured-motorist coverage. Cf. EXCESS THEORY.

garandia (gə-ran-dee-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. A warranty. — Also spelled garantia (gə-ran-shee-ə).

garauntor (gar-ən-tər). [Law French] Hist. A warrantor of land. • A garauntor was obligated to defend the title and seisin of the alienee. If the alienee was evicted, the garauntor had to provide the alienee with other land of equal value.

Garcia hearing (gahr-see-ə). Criminal procedure. A hearing held to ensure that a defendant who is one of two or more defendants represented by the same attorney understands (1) the risk of a conflict of interest inherent in this type of representation, and (2) that he or she is entitled to the services of an attorney who does not represent anyone else in the defendant's case. United States v. Garcia, 517 F.2d 272 (5th Cir. 1975). See CONFLICT OF INTEREST (2).

gard (gahrđ). [Law French] Hist. 1. Wardship or custody (of a person). 2. A precinct (or ward) of a city. — Also spelled garde; gardia.

garde (gahrđ). [French] Civil law. A relationship that gives rise to liability for a person when an injury is caused by a thing (such as a consumer product) that is considered by law to be that person's responsibility or to be in that person's custody.

Garmon preemption. See PREEMPTION.

Garner doctrine. The rule that allows shareholder plaintiffs in a corporate derivative action to discover confidential communications between a corporate officer and the corporation's attorney. • The Garner doctrine does not apply to attorney work product, and the movant must show good cause. Garner v. Wolfenbarger, 430 F.2d 1093 (5th Cir. 1970). See DERIVATIVE ACTION (1).

garnish, n. Hist. Money exacted from a new prisoner by other prisoners or as a jailer's fee. • This practice was banned in England in 1815.

garnish, vb. [Old French garnir "to warn" "to prepare"] 1. Hist. To serve an heir with notice (i.e., to warn) of certain debts that must be paid before the person is entitled to receive property as an heir. 2. To subject (property) to garnishment; to attach (property held by a third party) in order to satisfy a debt. — Also termed garnishee. — garnishable, adj.

garnishee (gahr-ni-shee), n. A person or institution (such as a bank) that is indebted to or is bailee for another whose property has been subjected to garnishment. — Also termed garnishee-defendant (as opposed to the "principal defendant," i.e., the primary debtor).

garnishee (gahr-ni-shee), vb. See GARNISH.

garnisher. A creditor who initiates a garnishment action to reach the debtor's property that is thought to be held or owed by a third party (the garnishee). — Also spelled garnishor.

garnishment, n. 1. A judicial proceeding in which a creditor (or potential creditor) asks the court to order a third party who is indebted to or is bailee for the debtor to turn over to the creditor any of the debtor's property (such as wages or bank accounts) held by that third party. • A plaintiff initiates a garnishment action as a means of either prejudgment seizure or postjudgment collection.

"Garnishment is a[n] . . . inquisitorial proceeding, affording a harsh and extraordinary remedy. It is an anomaly, a statutory invention sui generis, with no affinity to any action known to the common law. . . . It is a method of seizure; but it is not a 'levy' in the usual acceptation of that term. It is a proceeding by which a diligent creditor may legally obtain preference over other creditors; and it is in the nature of a creditor's bill, or a sequestration of the effects of a debtor in the hands of his debtor." 38 C.J.S. Garnishment § 3, at 248-50 (1996).

wrongful garnishment. 1. An improper or tortious garnishment. 2. A cause of action against a garnisher for improperly or tortiously filing a garnishment proceeding.

2. The judicial order by which such a turnover is effected. Cf. ATTACHMENT (1); SEQUESTRATION (1).

garnishment lien. See LIEN.

garnishor. See GARNISHER.

Garrity statement (gar-ə-tee). A public employee's oral or written report (as of an incident) obtained under a threat of termination of employment. • A public employee usu. makes a Garrity statement in the course of an internal investigation (as by a police department). Because a Garrity statement is coerced, the statement and any evidence obtained as a result of it cannot be used in a later criminal prosecution against the public employee. The statement and evidence may be used only to evaluate the employee's performance. Garrity v. New Jersey, 385 U.S. 493, 87 S.Ct. 616 (1967).

gas-balancing agreement. Oil & gas. A contract between owners of a producing gas well setting forth how production will be apportioned among them if one owner sells more gas than the other owners.

"Gas balancing agreements address the problem of imbalances in production from a gas well or field. Co-owners frequently sell their share of production to different purchasers. . . . Even when co-owners sell to the same purchaser, their contracts are likely to be signed at different times and to have different price and take provisions. Thus, imbalances are inevitable." John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 385 (3d ed. 1995).

gas chamber. A small, sealed room in which capital punishments are carried out by strapping the prisoner into a chair and releasing poisonous fumes.

gas sold. Oil & gas. Natural gas that is actually sold but not necessarily all that a well produces. • The term is used in natural-gas leases.

gas used. Oil & gas. Natural gas that is consumed while a well is in operation but that is not necessarily sold.

GATT (gat). abbr. GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE.

gauger (gay-jər). A surveying officer who examines containers of liquids to give them a mark of allowance, as containing the lawful measure.

gavel (gav-əl). 1. Hist. A tribute, toll, or custom paid to a superior. 2. Hist. An annual payment of rent or revenue, esp. payment in kind, such as gavel-corn, gavel-malt, or oat-gavel. — Sometimes spelled gabel. 3. A mallet used by a presiding officer, often a judge, to bring a meeting or court to order.

gavelbred (gav-əl-bred). Hist. Rent payable in bread, corn, or some other provision; rent payable in kind.

gavelet (gav-əl-it). Hist. A writ used in Kent and London to recover rent from land held in gavelkind. See CESSAVIT.

gavelgeld (gav-əl-geld). Hist. 1. Property that yields a profit or a toll. 2. The tribute or toll itself.

gavelherte (gav-əl-hært). Hist. A service of plowing performed by a customary tenant.

gaveling man (gav-əl-ing man or mən). Hist. See GAVELMAN.

gavelkind (gav-əl-kind). Hist. 1. A species of socage tenure arising in land that has descended equally to the decedent's sons. • It was widespread before 1066, when it was mainly superseded by primogeniture. This property-division technique was then largely limited to Kent. The person holding land in this manner enjoyed several advantages not available under the common law: the land could be disposed of by will, did not escheat for felony other than treason or for want of heirs, and was alienable by an heir at age 15. Gavelkind was abolished in 1925. 2. Land that yields gavel service.

“Archbishop Hubert Walter, who presided in the king's court . . . obtained from King John a charter empowering him and his successors to convert into military fees the tenements that were holden of their church in gavelkind. The archbishop's main object may have been to get money in the form of rents and scutages, instead of provender and boonworks, ‘gavel-corn’ and ‘gavel-swine,’ ‘gavel-erth’ and ‘gavel-rip’ . . .” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 273 (2d ed. 1899).

gavelman (gav-əl-mən). Hist. A tenant who is liable for money rent in addition to a customary service to the lord. • A gavelman was formerly a villein who had been released from villeinage in consideration of money rent. — Also termed gaveling man.

gavelmed (gav-əl-meed). Hist. A tenant's customary service of mowing the lord's meadowland or grass for hay. — Also spelled gavelmead.

gavelrep (gav-əl-reep). Hist. A tenant's duty to reap the lord's fields at the lord's command; bederepe. — Also spelled gavelrip.

gavelwerk (gav-əl-wørk). Hist. Customary service, either by the tenant's own hands or with the aid of the tenant's carts or carriages.

Gazette (gə-zet). An official newspaper of the British government in which acts of State, Crown appointments, notices of bankruptcy, and other legal matters are reported. • Although the London Gazette is the most famous, there are also publications called the Edinburgh Gazette and the Belfast Gazette with similar purposes.

gazumping (gə-zəmp-ing). Slang. The improper sale of a house, usu. by raising the price after accepting an offer. • Gazumping can take different forms, the usu. one being when a seller raises the price after accepting the buyer's offer. But it may also occur when a competing buyer makes a higher bid than the one already accepted, thus encouraging the seller to back out of the earlier contract.

generic, adj. 1. Common or descriptive, and thus not eligible for trademark protection; non-proprietary . 2. Not having a trademark or brand name <generic drugs>.

genericness. See GENERICNESS.

generic drug. See DRUG.

generic-drug law. A statute that allows pharmacists to substitute a generic drug for a brand-name drug under specified conditions. • Most states have enacted generic-drug laws to ensure that less-expensive generic drugs are available to consumers.

genericide (jə-ner-ə-sid). Trademarks. The loss or cancellation of a trademark that no longer distinguishes the owner's product from others' products. • Genericide occurs when a trademark becomes such a household name that the consuming public begins to think of the mark not as a brand name but as a synonym for the product itself. Examples of trademarks that have been "killed" by genericide include aspirin and escalator.

genericism (jə-ner-ə-siz-əm). See GENERICNESS.

generic name. Trademarks. A term that describes something generally without designating the thing's source or creator, such as the word "car" or "sink." • Generic names cannot be protected as trademarks. — Also termed generic term; generic mark; common descriptive name.

genericness, n. The state or condition of being generic <an affirmative defense of genericness in a trademark suit>. — Also termed genericness; genericism.

generic term. See GENERIC NAME.

Geneva Convention (jə-nee-və). An international agreement establishing the proper treatment of prisoners of war and of persons injured or killed in battle. • Drafted in 1864, the Convention has since been adopted in revised form by most nations.

genocide (jen-ə-sid). Int'l law. An act committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or part, a national, ethnic, racial, or religious group. • Under the terms of the Geneva Convention of 1948, genocide is a crime (whether committed during war or peace) subject to prosecution either in the nation where the act was committed or by an international tribunal having jurisdiction elsewhere.

"The draft Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide was adopted by the General Assembly on December 9, 1948 and unanimously recommended for adherence to the members of the United Nations. It came into force in October, 1950 between twenty-four states. The term 'genocide' was first proposed by Dr. Lemkin in the course of the war and incorporated on his suggestion into the Indictment of the Major German War Criminals. The Assembly Resolution on Genocide of December 11, 1946, and the Convention of 1948, are also the result of a remarkable one-man campaign." Georg Schwarzenberger, Power Politics: A Study of International Society 634 (2d ed. 1951).

Genoese lottery (jen-oh-eez or -ees). See LOTTERY.

gens (jenz), n. [Latin] Roman law. A clan or group of families who share the same name and (supposedly) a common ancestor; EXTENDED FAMILY. • Members of a gens are freeborn and possess full civic rights. Pl. gentes. See JUS GENTIUM.

"A wider group still is the gens, of great importance in early law though its importance was gone in classical times. This consisted of all who bore the same nomen, the gentile name." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 61 (2d ed. 1953).

gentes (jen-teez). [Latin] Roman law. The peoples or nations of the world.

gentile (jen-til). [Latin] Roman law. A member of a gens. See GENS.

gentleman. Hist. 1. A man of noble or gentle birth or rank; a man above the rank of yeoman. 2. A man belonging to the landed gentry. • Today the term has no precise legal meaning.

gentleman's agreement. See GENTLEMEN'S AGREEMENT.

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. An officer of the House of Lords who has various ceremonial duties, including the summoning of the members of the House of Commons to the House of Lords when a bill is to receive royal approval. • The office dates from the 14th century.

gentlemen's agreement. An unwritten agreement that, while not legally enforceable, is secured by the good faith and honor of the parties. — Also spelled gentleman's agreement.

gentrification, n. The restoration and upgrading of a deteriorated or aging urban neighborhood by middle-class or affluent persons, resulting in increased property values and often in displacement of lower-income residents. — gentrify, vb.

genuine, adj. 1. (Of a thing) authentic or real; something that has the quality of what it is purported to be or to have <the plaintiff failed to question whether the exhibits were genuine>. 2. (Of an instrument) free of forgery or counterfeiting <the bank teller could not determine whether the signature on the check was genuine>. UCC § 1-201(18).

genuine issue of material fact. Civil procedure. In the law of summary judgments, a triable, substantial, or real question of fact supported by substantial evidence. • An issue of this kind precludes entry of summary judgment.

genus (jee-nəs). A general class comprising several species or divisions. • For example, patent law is a species within the genus of intellectual property; burglary is a species within the genus of crime. In the law of sales, genus referred to fungibles, while species referred to specific, individual items.

geodetic-survey system (jee-ə-det-ik). A federally created land-description method consisting of nationwide marks (or benches) made at longitude and latitude points. • The geodetic-survey system integrates most of the real property in the United States into one unified form of measurement.

brother-german. A full brother; a child of both of one's own parents.

cousin-german. A first cousin; a child of a full sibling of one's mother or father.

germane (jər-mayn), adj. Relevant; pertinent <the caselaw cited in the brief was not germane to the legal issue pending before the court>.

germanus (jər-may-nəs). [Latin] Roman law. 1. adj. Having the same father and mother. 2. n.

A whole brother; a child of both of one's own parents.

gerrymandering (jer-ee-man-dər-ing or ger-ee-), n. 1. The practice of dividing a geographical area into electoral districts, often of highly irregular shape, to give one political party an unfair advantage by diluting the opposition's voting strength. — Also termed political gerrymandering. 2. The practice of dividing any geographical or jurisdictional area into political units (such as school districts) to give some group a special advantage. — Also termed jurisdictional gerrymandering. — gerrymander, vb. Cf. REAPPORTIONMENT.

gersum (gər-səm). Hist. 1. Money paid for a thing; specif., compensation paid by a tenant to a superior on entering a holding. 2. A penalty or amercement paid for an offense. — Also spelled garsumme; gersuma; gersume.

gersumarius (jər-s[y]ə-mair-ee-əs). Hist. Fiable; liable to be fined at the discretion of a feudal superior. • A villein who gave his daughter in marriage was gersumarius — he was liable to pay a fine to the lord.

gestio (jes-chee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. 1. Behavior or conduct. See GESTIO PRO HAEREDE. 2. The management of a thing, esp. a transaction.

negotiorum gestio (ni-goh-shee-or-əm jes-chee-oh). See NEGOTIORUM GESTIO.

gestio pro haerede (jes-chee-oh proh her-ə-dee). [Latin "behavior as heir"] Roman & Hist. Scots law. An appointed heir's conduct (such as selling or leasing the decedent's property) that indicates the heir's intent to receive the inheritance and thereby take on the estate's debts.

gestor (jes-tor). [Latin] Roman law. 1. One who carries on a business. 2. NEGOTIORUM GESTOR.

gestu et fama (jes-t[y]oo et fay-mə). [Latin "demeanor and reputation"] Hist. A writ used by a person who had been imprisoned because of a poor reputation in the community to gain release from jail pending the arrival of justices with commissions of gaol delivery. See COMMISSION OF GAOL DELIVERY.

gestum (jes-təm). [Latin] Roman law. A deed or an act; a thing done. • Gestum is synonymous with factum. See FACTUM (2).

gesture. A motion of the body calculated to express a thought or emphasize a certain point

<the prosecutor was known for her dramatic gestures during closing argument>.

gibbet (jib-it), n. Hist. A post with one arm extending from the top, from which criminals are either executed by hanging or suspended after death as a warning to other potential offenders; a type of gallows.

double gibbet. A gibbet with two arms extending from its top so that it resembles a capital "T."

gibbet law. See HALIFAX LAW.

GIC. See guaranteed investment contract under INVESTMENT CONTRACT.

gift, n. 1. The act of voluntarily transferring property to another without compensation. 2. A thing so transferred. — gift, vb.

absolute gift. See inter vivos gift.

anatomical gift. A testamentary donation of a bodily organ or organs, esp. for transplant or for medical research.

antenuptial gift. See prenuptial gift.

class gift. A gift to a group of persons, uncertain in number at the time of the gift but to be ascertained at a future time, who are all to take in definite proportions, the share of each being dependent on the ultimate number in the group.

"The typical class gift is to 'children,' 'issue,' 'heirs,' 'brothers and sisters,' 'nieces and nephews,' 'grandchildren.' A class gift is one in which the donor intends to benefit a group or a class of persons, as distinguished from specific individuals; the class gift donor is said to be 'group-minded.' The class gift is one in which the donor intends that the number of donees, from the time of the delivery of the instrument of gift in the case of the inter vivos gift, or from the time of the execution of the will in the case of the testamentary gift, is subject to fluctuation by way of increase or decrease, or by way of increase only, or by way of decrease only, depending on the circumstances of the gift." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 136 (2d ed. 1984).

completed gift. A gift that is no longer in the donor's possession and control. • Only a completed gift is taxable under the gift tax.

gift causa mortis (kaw-zə mor-tis). A gift made in contemplation of the donor's imminent death. • The three essentials are that (1) the gift must be made with a view to the donor's present illness or peril, (2) the donor must actually die from that illness or peril, without ever recovering, and (3) there must be a delivery. Even though causa mortis is the more usual word order in modern law, the correct Latin phrasing is mortis causa — hence gift mortis causa. — Also termed donatio causa mortis; donatio mortis causa; gift in contemplation of death; transfer in contemplation of death.

gift inter vivos. See inter vivos gift.

gift in trust. A gift of legal title to property that is to be used to benefit the cestui que trust (i.e., the beneficiary).

gift over. A property gift (esp. by will) that takes effect after the expiration of a preceding estate in the property (such as a life estate or fee simple determinable) <to Sarah for life, with gift over to Don in fee>.

gift splitting. See split gift.

gratuitous gift. A gift made without consideration, as most gifts are. • Strictly speaking, the term looks redundant, but it answers to the donum gratuitum of Roman law.

inter vivos gift (in-tər vi-vohs or -vee-vohs). A gift made during the donor’s lifetime and delivered with the intention of irrevocably surrendering control over the property. — Also termed gift inter vivos; lifetime gift; absolute gift.

manual gift. Civil law. A gift of movable, tangible property, made by delivery without any formalities.

onerous gift (ohn-ə-rəs or on-ə-rəs). A gift made subject to certain conditions imposed on the recipient.

prenuptial gift (pree-nəp-shəl). A gift of property from one spouse to another before marriage. • In community-property states, prenuptial gifts are often made to preserve the property’s classification as separate property. — Also termed antenuptial gift.

split gift. Tax. A gift that is made by one spouse to a third person and that, for gift-tax purposes, both spouses treat as being made one-half by each spouse; a gift in which the spouses combine their annual gift-tax exclusions. • A split gift, for example, is eligible for two annual exclusions of $10,000 each, or a total of $20,000 for one gift. See annual exclusion under EXCLUSION (1). — Also termed gift splitting; gift-splitting election.

substitute gift. A testamentary gift to one person in place of another who is unable to take under the will for some reason. — Also termed substitutional gift.

taxable gift. A gift that, after adjusting for the annual exclusion and applicable deductions, is subject to the federal unified transfer tax. IRC (26 USCA) § 2503.

testamentary gift (tes-tə-men-tə-ree or -træ). A gift made in a will.

vested gift. An absolute gift, being neither conditional nor contingent, though its use or enjoyment might not occur until sometime in the future.

gift deed. See DEED.

gift enterprise. 1. A scheme for the distribution of items by chance among those who have purchased shares in the scheme. 2. A merchant’s scheme to induce sales for market value by giving buyers tickets that carry a chance to win a prize. • Gift enterprises are regulated by state law. See LOTTERY.

gilda mercatoria (gil-də mər-kə-tor-ee-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. A merchant guild; an incorporated society of merchants having exclusive trading rights within a town.

gilour (gī-lər). [Law French] Hist. A guiler; a person who cheats or deceives. • Gilour referred to a person who sold false goods, such as a person who sold pewter as silver.

gilt-edged, adj. (Of a security) having the highest rating for safety of investment; exceptionally safe as an investment.

Ginnie Mae (jin-ee may). See GOVERNMENT NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION.

girth (gərth). [Old English] 1. A measure of length, equal to a yard. • This term, which was used in Saxon and early English law, was taken from the circumference of a man's body. 2. The area surrounding a church. 3. A place of sanctuary. 4. A band or strap that encircles the body of an animal to fasten something (usu. a saddle) to its back.

gisement (jis- or jiz-mənt). [Law French] Archaic. See AGISTMENT.

giser (ji-sər), vb. [Law French] Hist. (Of an action) to lie; to be capable of being brought as a suit in court. • This verb, in its inflected form gist, appeared in such phrases as ou assise ne gist point ("when an assise does not lie"), le action bien gist ("the action well lies"), and gist en le bouche ("it lies in the mouth"), and cest action gist ("this action lies").

gisetaker (jis- or jiz-tay-kər). Archaic. See AGISTER.

gist (jist). 1. The ground or essence (of a legal action) <the gist of the crime>. 2. The main point <she skimmed the brief to get the gist of it>. • This noun derives from the Law French verb giser "to lie." See GISER.

give, vb. 1. To voluntarily transfer (property) to another without compensation <Jack gave his daughter a car on her birthday>. 2. To confer by a formal act <the First Amendment gives all citizens the right to free speech>. 3. To present for another to consider <the witness gave compelling testimony before the jury>. 4. (Of a jury) to impose or award by verdict <the jury gave the defendant the death penalty> <the jury gave the plaintiff $1,000 in damages>.

give bail, vb. To post security for one's appearance in court <the court ordered the accused to give bail in the amount of $10,000>. — Also termed post bail.

give color, vb. Hist. To admit, either expressly or impliedly by silence, an apparent right in an opponent's allegations. • In common-law pleading, a defendant's plea of confession and avoidance had to give color to the plaintiff's allegations in the complaint or the plea would be fatally defective. See COLOR (2).

give, devise, and bequeath, vb. To transfer property by will <I give, devise, and bequeath all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate to my beloved daughter Sarah>. See BEQUEST.

give way, vb. Maritime law. (Of a vessel) to deviate from a course, or slow down, in accordance with navigation rules, to allow a second vessel to pass without altering its course.

giving in payment. Civil law. The act of discharging a debt by giving something to the creditor (with the creditor's consent) other than what was originally called for. • The phrase is a translation of the French dation en paiement and derives from the Roman datio in solutum. See DATION EN PAIEMENT. Cf. ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

gladius (glay-dee-əs). [Latin "sword"] Roman law. The emblem of the emperor's power, esp. the power to punish criminals. See JUS GLADII.

glave (glayv). Hist. A sword, lance, or horseman's staff. • The glave was one of the weapons allowed in a trial by combat.

glamour stock. See STOCK.

glass ceiling. An actual or supposed upper limit of professional advancement, esp. for women, as a result of discriminatory practices.

Glass-Steagall Act. A federal statute that protects bank depositors by restricting the securities-related business of commercial banks, specif. by prohibiting banks from owning brokerage firms or engaging in the brokerage business. 12 USCA § 378. — Also termed Banking Act of 1933.

glebae ascriptitii. See ADSCRIPTI GLEBAE.

glebe (gleeb). [Latin "clod of earth"] 1. Roman law. The soil of an inheritance; an agrarian estate. • Servi addicti glebae ("slaves bound to the land") were serfs attached to and passing with the estate. 2. Eccles. law. Land possessed as part of the endowment or revenue of a church or ecclesiastical benefice.

Globe election. Labor law. The procedure by which a group of employees is given the opportunity to decide whether to be represented as a distinct group or to be represented as a part of a larger, existing unit. Globe Machine & Stamping Co., 3 NLRB 294 (1937). — Also termed self-determination election.

gloss, n. 1. A note inserted between the lines or in the margin of a text to explain a difficult or obscure word in the text <this edition of Shakespeare's works is bolstered by its many glosses on Elizabethan English>. 2. A collection of explanations; a glossary <the horn-book's copious gloss>. 3. Pronouncements considered collectively, usu. by courts; interpretation <the statute and its judicial gloss>.

glossators (glah-say-tərz). (usu. cap.) A group of Italian juriconsults who, from the 11th to the 13th centuries, were primarily responsible for the revival of the study of Roman law. ● They originally worked by glossing (that is, explaining in the margin) difficult or unclear passages, and gradually their writings blossomed into full-blown commentaries and discussions. See POSTGLOSSATORS.

Gloucester, Statute of (glos-tər). Hist. A statute that allowed a successful plaintiff to recover costs in addition to damages. ● The statute was enacted in Gloucester. 6 Edw. I, ch. 1 (1278).

glove silver. Hist. Money given as an incentive or reward to a court officer, esp. money given by a sheriff to an assize official when no prisoners were left by the assize for execution. ● The name derives from the practice of giving money to servants, ostensibly to buy gloves with.

GMI. abbr. GUILTY BUT MENTALLY ILL.

GNMA. abbr. GOVERNMENT NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION.

GNP. abbr. GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT.

go bail, vb. Archaic. To act as a surety on a bail bond.

God-bote. See BOTE (2).

God-gild. Hist. Money paid or something offered for the service of God; esp., a payment of money or a gift (for example, land) to a church. See FRANKALMOIN.

God's penny. Hist. Earnest money; a small sum paid on the striking of a bargain. — Also termed denarius Dei; godpenny.

"It is among the merchants that the giving of earnest first ... becomes a form which binds both buyer and seller in a contract of sale. To all appearances this change was not accomplished without the intermediation of a religious idea. All over western Europe the earnest becomes known as the God's penny or Holy Ghost's penny (denarius Dei)" 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 208 (2d ed. 1899).

go forward, vb. To commence or carry on with the presentation of a case in court <after the lunch recess, the judge instructed the plaintiff to go forward with its case>.

go hence without day. (Of a defendant to a lawsuit) to be finished with legal proceedings without any further settings on the court's calendar. ● Thus, a defendant who "goes hence without day" succeeds in getting a case finally resolved, usu. by dismissal. The phrase derives from the Law French phrase aller sans jour, and over time defendants came to use it to request that the case against them be dismissed without the necessity of a day in court. — Sometimes shortened to go without day; without day. See SINE DIE.

going-and-coming rule. 1. The principle that torts committed by an employee while commuting to or from work are generally outside the scope of employment. 2. The principle that denies workers' compensation benefits to an employee injured while commuting to or from work.

going concern. A commercial enterprise actively engaging in business with the expectation of indefinite continuance.

going-concern value. See VALUE.

going price, n. The prevailing or current market value of something. See fair market value under VALUE.

going private. The process of changing a public corporation into a close corporation by terminating the corporation's status with the SEC as a publicly held corporation and by having its outstanding publicly held shares acquired by a single shareholder or a small group.

going public. The process of a company's selling stock to the investing public for the first time (after filing a registration statement under applicable securities laws), thereby becoming a public corporation.

going through the bar. Hist. A daily process in which the court would ask all barristers present whether they had motions to present. ● This practice, which ended in 1873, was conducted according to seniority, except for the last day of a term, when the junior barristers were asked first.

going to the country. Hist. The act of requesting a jury trial. • A defendant was said to be “going to the country” by concluding a pleading with the phrase “and of this he puts himself upon the country.” Similarly, a plaintiff would conclude a pleading with the phrase “and this the plaintiff prays may be enquired of by the country.” — Also termed go to the country. Cf. CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY.

going value. See going-concern value under VALUE.

going witness. See WITNESS.

gold bond. See BOND (3).

gold clause. A provision calling for payment in gold. • Gold clauses, which are now void, were once used in contracts, bonds, and mortgages.

golden handcuffs. Remuneration set at such a high level that the employee earning it cannot leave the firm or company and receive commensurate pay elsewhere. • As a result, the employee often stays in the position even if it is otherwise unrewarding or unpleasant.

golden handshake. An employee dismissal that includes generous compensation.

golden parachute. An employment-contract provision that grants an upper-level executive lucrative severance benefits — including long-term salary guarantees or bonuses — if control of the company changes hands (as by a merger). Cf. TIN PARACHUTE.

golden rule. The principle that, in construing written instruments, a court should adhere to the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words unless that adherence would lead to some manifest absurdity; esp., in statutory construction, the principle that if a statute’s literal meaning would lead to an absurd or unjust result, or even to an inconsistency within the statute itself, the statute should be interpreted in a way that avoids such a result or inconsistency. — Also termed Baron Parke’s rule. Cf. MISCHIEF RULE; PLAIN-MEANING RULE; EQUITY-OF-THE-STATUTE RULE.

“[T]he ‘golden’ rule . . . allows for a departure from the literal rule when the application of the statutory words in the ordinary sense would be repugnant to or inconsistent with some other provision in the statute or even when it would lead to what the court considers to be an absurdity. The usual consequence of applying the golden rule is that words which are in the statute are ignored or words which are not there are read in. The scope of the golden rule is debatable, particularly so far as the meaning of an ‘absurdity’ is concerned.” Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 14 (1976).

golden-rule argument. A jury argument in which a lawyer asks the jurors to reach a verdict by imagining themselves or someone they care about in the place of the injured plaintiff or crime victim. • Because golden-rule arguments ask the jurors to become advocates for the plaintiff or victim and to ignore their obligation to exercise calm and reasonable judgment, these arguments are widely condemned and are considered improper in most states.

goldsmiths’ notes. Hist. Bankers’ cash notes; promissory notes given by bankers to customers as acknowledgments of the receipt of money. • This term derives from the London banking business, which originally was transacted by goldsmiths.

gold standard. A monetary system in which currency is convertible into its legal equivalent in gold or gold coin. • The United States adopted the gold standard in 1900 and abandoned it in 1934. Cf. PAPER STANDARD.

good, adj. 1. Sound or reliable . 2. Valid, effectual, and enforceable; sufficient under the law <good title>.

good and lawful fence. See LAWFUL FENCE.

good and merchantable abstract of title. See ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

good and valuable consideration. See valuable consideration under CONSIDERATION.

good and workmanlike. (Of a product or service) characterized by quality craftsmanship; constructed or performed in a skillful way or method <the house was built in a good and workmanlike manner>.

good behavior. 1. A standard by which judges are considered fit to continue their tenure. 2. Orderly conduct, which in the context of penal law allows a prisoner to reduce the time spent in prison. Cf. GOOD TIME.

good cause. See CAUSE (2).

good cause shown. See good cause under CAUSE (2).

good consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

good delivery. See DELIVERY.

good faith, n. A state of mind consisting in (1) honesty in belief or purpose, (2) faithfulness to one's duty or obligation, (3) observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in a given trade or business, or (4) absence of intent to defraud or to seek unconscionable advantage. — Also termed bona fides. — good-faith, adj. Cf. BAD FAITH.

"The phrase 'good faith' is used in a variety of contexts, and its meaning varies somewhat with the context. Good faith performance or enforcement of a contract emphasizes faithfulness to an agreed common purpose and consistency with the justified expectations of the other party; it excludes a variety of types of conduct characterized as involving 'bad faith' because they violate community standards of decency, fairness or reasonableness. The appropriate remedy for a breach of the duty of good faith also varies with the circumstances." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 205 cmt. a (1981).

good-faith bargaining. Labor law. Negotiations between an employer and a representative of employees, usu. a union, in which both parties meet and confer at reasonable times with open minds and with a view to reaching an agreement. • The National Labor Relations Act requires good-faith bargaining, and failure to bargain in good faith is considered an unfair labor practice. 29 USCA §§ 151–169. See UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE.

good-faith exception. Criminal procedure. An exception to the exclusionary rule whereby evidence obtained under a warrant later found to be unsupported by probable cause is nonetheless admissible if the police reasonably relied on the notion that the warrant was valid. • The good-faith exception was adopted by the Supreme Court in United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 104 S.Ct. 3405 (1984).

good-faith margin. See MARGIN.

good-faith purchaser. See bona fide purchaser under PURCHASER.

good health. Insurance. A state of reasonable healthiness; a state of health free from serious disease. • Good health, a phrase often appearing in life-insurance policies, does not mean perfect health. — Also termed sound health.

"As used in policies of insurance, there is no material difference between the terms 'sound health' and 'good health,' and generally it appears that the two terms are considered to be synonymous. Such expressions are comparative terms, and the rule followed generally is that the term 'good health' or 'sound health,' when used in an insurance contract, means that the applicant has no grave, important, or serious disease, and is free from any ailment that seriously affects the general soundness or healthfulness of his system." 43 Am. Jur. 2d Insurance § 1061, at 1069 (1982).

good jury. See special jury under JURY.

good moral character, n. 1. A pattern of behavior that is consistent with the community's current ethical standards and that shows an absence of deceit or morally reprehensible conduct. • An alien seeking to be naturalized must show good moral character in the five years preceding the petition for naturalization. 2. A pattern of behavior conforming to a profession's ethical standards and showing an absence of moral turpitude. • Good moral character is usu. a requirement of persons applying to practice a profession such as law or medicine.

good offices. Int'l law. The involvement of one or more countries or an international organization in a dispute between other countries with the aim of contributing to its settlement or at least easing relations between the disputing countries.

Goodright. Hist. A name sometimes used as a fictitious plaintiff in an ejectment action. • "John Doe" was used more frequently. — Also termed Goodtitle. Cf. JOHN DOE.

goods. 1. Tangible or movable personal property other than money; esp., articles of trade or items of merchandise <goods and services>. • The sale of goods is governed by Article 2 of the UCC. 2. Things that have value, whether tangible or not <the importance of social goods varies from society to society>.

"'Goods' means all things, including specially manufactured goods, that are movable at the time of identification to a contract for sale and future goods. The term includes the unborn young of animals, growing crops, and other identified things to be severed from real property The term does not include money in which the price is to be paid, the subject matter of foreign exchange transactions, documents, letters of credit, letter-of-credit rights, instruments, investment property, accounts, chattel paper, deposit accounts, or general intangibles." UCC § 2-102(a)(24).

capital goods. Goods (such as equipment and machinery) used for the production of other goods or services. — Also termed industrial goods.

consumer goods. Goods bought or used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, and not for resale or for producing other goods. UCC § 9-109(1).

customers' goods. Insurance. Goods belonging to the customers of a fire-insurance policyholder; goods held by a policyholder as a bailee.

distressed goods. Goods sold at unusually low prices or at a loss.

durable goods. Consumer goods that are designed to be used repeatedly over a long period, such as automobiles or personal computers. — Also termed durables; hard goods.

fungible goods (fən-jə-bəl). Goods that are interchangeable with one another; goods that, by nature or trade usage, are the equivalent of any other like unit, such as coffee or grain. UCC § 1-201(17).

future goods. Goods that will come into being, such as those yet to be manufactured; goods that are not both existing and identified. • A purported present sale of future goods or any interest in them operates as a contract to sell. UCC § 2-105(2).

hard goods. See durable goods.

household goods. Goods that are used in connection with a home. • This term usually arises when a warehouse claims a lien on what he or she asserts are "household" goods. According to the UCC, a warehouse may claim a lien on a depositor's furniture, furnishings, and personal effects that are used in a dwelling. UCC § 7-209(3)(b).

industrial goods. See capital goods.

mobile goods. Goods that are normally used in more than one jurisdiction (such as shipping containers and road-construction machinery) and that are held by the debtor as equipment or leased by the debtor to others. • Under the Uniform Commercial Code, the procedure for perfecting a security interest in mobile goods is generally defined by the law of the state where the debtor is located. UCC § 9-103(3).

nonconforming goods. Goods that fail to meet contractual specifications, allowing the buyer to reject the tender of the goods or to revoke their acceptance. UCC §§ 2-601, 2-608. See PERFECT-TENDER RULE.

ordinary goods. Goods that are anything other than mobile goods, minerals, or goods covered by a certificate of title. UCC § 9-103(1)(a).

prize goods. Goods captured at sea during wartime.

soft goods. Consumer goods (such as clothing) that are not durable goods.

Good Samaritan doctrine (sə-mar-i-tən).

Torts. The principle that a person who is injured while attempting to aid another in imminent danger, and who then sues the one whose negligence created the danger, will not be charged with contributory negligence unless the rescue attempt is an unreasonable one or the rescuer acts unreasonably in performing the attempted rescue. Cf. EMERGENCY DOCTRINE; RESCUE DOCTRINE; LOST-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

good-samaritan law. A statute that exempts from liability a person (such as an off-duty physician) who voluntarily renders aid to another in imminent danger but negligently causes injury while rendering the aid. • Some form of good-samaritan legislation has been enacted in all 50 states and in the District of Columbia. — Also written Good Samaritan law. — Also termed good-samaritan statute. Cf. GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE.

"The so-called 'Good Samaritan Statutes' . . . do not require aid to be given. They merely encourage doctors to stop and give aid to strangers in emergency situations by providing that no physician who in good faith renders such aid shall be liable in civil damages as a result of acts or omissions in rendering such aid. Some states have enacted statutes that require a person who is able to do so with no danger or peril to himself to come to the aid of another who is exposed to grave physical harm." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 661 (3d ed. 1982).

goods and chattels (chat-əlz), n. Loosely, personal property of any kind; occasionally, tangible personal property only.

good time. The credit awarded to a prisoner for good conduct, which can reduce the duration of the prisoner's sentence. Cf. GOOD BEHAVIOR; EARNED TIME.

good title. See TITLE (2).

goodwill. A business's reputation, patronage, and other intangible assets that are considered when appraising the business, esp. for purchase; the ability to earn income in excess of the income that would be expected from the business viewed as a mere collection of assets. — Also written good will. Cf. going-concern value under VALUE.

"Good will is to be distinguished from that element of value referred to variously as going-concern value, going value, or going business. Although some courts have stated that the difference is merely technical and that it is unimportant to attempt to separate these intangibles, it is generally held that going-concern value is that which inheres in a plant of an established business." 38 Am. Jur. 2d Good Will § 2, at 913 (1968).

goose case. See WHITEHORSE CASE.

gore (gor), n. 1. Hist. A small, narrow slip of land. 2. A small (often triangular) piece of land, such as may be left between surveys that do not close. 3. In some New England states (such as Maine and Vermont), a county's subdivision that has little population and thus is not organized as a town.

Gothland sea laws. See LAWS OF WISBY.

go to the country. See GOING TO THE COUNTRY.

govern, vb. (Of a precedent) to control a point in issue <the Smith case will govern the outcome of the appeal>.

governing body. 1. GOVERNMENT (2). 2. A group of (esp. corporate) officers or persons having ultimate control <the board of directors is the governing body of XYZ, Inc.>.

government. 1. The structure of principles and rules determining how a state or organization is regulated. 2. The sovereign power in a nation or state. 3. An organization through which a body of people exercise political authority; the machinery by which sovereign power is expressed <the Canadian government>. • In this sense, the term refers collectively to the political organs of a country regardless of their function or level, and regardless of the subject matter they deal with. Cf. NATION; STATE.

central government. See federal government (1).

de facto government (di fak-toh). 1. A government that has taken over the regular government and exercises sovereignty over a nation. 2. An independent government established and exercised by a group of a country's inhabitants who have separated themselves from the parent state.

federal government. 1. A national government that exercises some degree of control over smaller political units that have surrendered some degree of power in exchange for the right to participate in national political matters. — Also termed (in federal states) central government. 2. The U.S. government. — Also termed national government.

local government. The government of a particular locality, such as a city or county; a governing body at a lower level than the state government. • The term includes a school district, fire district, transportation authority, and any other special-purpose district or authority. — Also termed municipal government.

mixed government. A government containing a blend of forms, as in democracy and monarchy.

municipal government. See local government.

national government. See NATIONAL GOVERNMENT, federal government (2).

proprietary government. Hist. A government granted by the Crown to an individual, in the nature of a feudatory principality, with powers of legislation formerly belonging to the owner of a county palatine. Cf. COUNTY PALATINE.

governmental act. See GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTION.

governmental activity. See GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTION.

governmental employee benefit plan. See governmental plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

governmental enterprise. See ENTERPRISE.

governmental function. Torts. A government agency's conduct that is expressly or impliedly mandated or authorized by constitution, statute, or other law and that is carried out for the benefit of the general public. ● Generally, a governmental entity is immune from tort liability for governmental acts. — Also termed governmental act; governmental activity. See PUBLIC-FUNCTION DOCTRINE. Cf. PROPRIETARY FUNCTION.

"[A]ctivities of police or firefighters, though tortious, are usually considered governmental in the sense that they involve the kind of power expected of the government, even if its exercise in the specific case is wrongful. The city is immune as to such activities for this reason. On the other hand, if the city operates a local electric or water company for which fees are charged, this looks very much like private enterprise and is usually considered proprietary. . . . The difficult distinction between governmental and proprietary functions is even more troubling where the city's conduct combines both kinds of function at once. For example, operation of a sanitary sewer may be deemed governmental, but operation of a storm sewer may be deemed proprietary." Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 131, at 1053-54 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

governmental-function theory. Constitutional law. A principle by which private conduct is characterized as state action, esp. for due-process and equal-protection purposes, when a private party is exercising a public function. ● Under this theory, for example, a political party (which is a private entity) cannot exclude voters from primary elections on the basis of race. — Also termed public-function rationale.

governmental immunity. See sovereign immunity under IMMUNITY (1).

governmental instrumentality. A constitutionally or legislatively created agency that is immune from certain kinds of liability, as for taxes or punitive damages.

governmental-interest-analysis technique under INTEREST-ANALYSIS TECHNIQUE.

governmental plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

governmental secret. Information belonging to the government and of a military or diplomatic nature, the disclosure of which would be contrary to the public interest. ● Governmental secrets are privileged from disclosure. — Also termed government secret. See executive privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

governmental trust. See TRUST.

governmental unit. A subdivision, agency, department, county, parish, municipality, or other unit of the government of a country or a state. ● The term includes an organization with a separate corporate existence only if the organization can legally issue debt obligations on which interest is exempt from income taxation under national law. UCC § 9-102(a)(31).

government-annuity society. Hist. One of several organizations formed in England to enable the working class to provide for themselves by purchasing, on advantageous terms, a government annuity for life or for a term of years.

government bond. See BOND (3).

government contract. See procurement contract under CONTRACT.

government-contract defense. A theory allowing a supplier of goods to the federal government to escape civil liability under state law when the supplier has conformed to reasonably precise specifications established or approved by the government, when two conditions are satisfied: (1) if the supplier has warned the government about any dangers from the goods about which the supplier has knowledge but the government does not, and (2) if the government itself is immune from liability under the Feres doctrine. See FERES DOCTRINE.

government-controlled corporation. See quasi-governmental agency under AGENCY (3).

government corporation. See public corporation (3) under CORPORATION.

government enterprise. See ENTERPRISE.

government-in-exile. An individual or group of individuals residing in a foreign country while (1) claiming supreme authority over a country, (2) being recognized by the hosting country as the supreme authority over that other country, and (3) being organized to perform and actually performing some acts of state on behalf of the home country.

government insurance. See INSURANCE.

Government National Mortgage Association. A federally owned corporation that purchases, on the secondary market, residential mortgages originated by local lenders and that issues federally insured securities backed by these mortgages. — Abbr. GNMA. — Also termed Ginnie Mae.

government of laws. The doctrine that government must operate according to established, consistent legal principles and not according to the interests of those who happen to be in power at a given time; esp., the doctrine that judicial decisions must be based on the law, regardless of the character of the litigants or the personal predilections of the judge.

government plan. See governmental plan under PLAN.

Government Printing Office. A U.S. government office that prints and publishes federal laws, regulations, forms, and other federal-government documents. — Abbr. GPO.

grand coutumier de pays et duché de Normandie (gron koo-t[y]oo-myay də pay ay də-shay də nor-man-dee). [French] Hist. A collection of the common or customary laws of the Duchy of Normandy. • The code was probably compiled in the 13th century, and it still remains the law of Jersey, except to the extent that it has been modified by later legislation and judicial decisions. See CLAMEUR DE HARO.

Grand Day. English law. 1. Hist. One of four holy days on which the courts are not in session. • Each of the four court terms had a Grand Day. The four Grand Days were Candlemas Day (February 2), Ascension Day (March 25), St. John the Baptist Day (June 24), and All Saints' Day (November 1). The Inns of Court and of Chancery ceremoniously observed each Grand Day. 2. A day in each term on which the Benchers of the Inns of Court host ceremonial dinners in their halls. See BENCHER. Cf. TERM (6).

grandfather, vb. To cover (a person) with the benefits of a grandfather clause <the statute sets the drinking age at 21 but grandfathers those who are 18 or older on the statute's effective date>.

grandfather clause. 1. Hist. A clause in the constitutions of some Southern states exempting from suffrage restrictions the descendants of men who voted before the Civil War. 2. A statutory or regulatory clause that exempts a class of persons or transactions because of circumstances existing before the new rule or regulation takes effect.

grand inquest. See INQUEST.

grand juror. See JUROR.

grand jury. A body of (often 23) people who are chosen to sit permanently for at least a month — and sometimes a year — and who, in ex parte proceedings, decide whether to issue indictments. • If the grand jury decides that evidence is strong enough to hold a suspect for trial, it returns a bill of indictment (a true bill) charging the suspect with a specific crime. — Also termed accusing jury; presenting jury; jury of indictment. Cf. petit jury under JURY.

investigative grand jury. A grand jury whose primary function is to examine possible crimes and develop evidence not currently available to the prosecution.

screening grand jury. A grand jury whose primary function is to decide whether to issue an indictment.

special grand jury. A grand jury specially summoned, usu. when the regular grand jury either has already been discharged or has not been drawn; a grand jury with limited authority. — Also termed additional grand jury; extraordinary grand jury.

Grand Jury Clause. The clause of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution requiring an indictment by a grand jury before a person can be tried for serious offenses.

grand-jury witness. See WITNESS.

grand larceny. See LARCENY.

Grand Remonstrance (ri-mon-strants). Hist. A protest document issued by the House of Commons in 1641, setting forth numerous political grievances against Charles I. • The document demanded three primary remedial measures: (1) improvements in the administration of justice, (2) appointment of trustworthy ministers, and (3) enforcement of the laws against Roman Catholics. It was the first major split between the Royalist and Parliamentary parties, and it led Charles to seek the arrest of the five members who pushed the document through Commons.

grand serjeanty. See SERJEANTY.

Grand Survey. See grand inquest (2) under INQUEST.

grange (graynj). Hist. A farm furnished with all the necessities for husbandry, such as a barn, granary, and stables; esp., an outlying farm that belonged to a religious establishment or a feudal lord.

Granger Cases (grayn-jør). Six U.S. Supreme Court decisions that affirmed the government's right to regulate fees charged by common carriers, warehouses, and grain elevators. • The cases, decided in 1876, arose out of grangers' (i.e., farmers') frustration with the inflated prices they were paying to store and transport their agricultural products. Several state legislatures passed statutes regulating the rates. The affected businesses sued to have the statutes overturned on grounds that they violated the Commerce Clause and the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment. The Court rejected these claims, holding that the activities involved affected the public interest and were therefore subject to the government's regulatory authority.

grant, n. 1. An agreement that creates a right of any description other than the one held by the grantor. • Examples include leases, easements, charges, patents, franchises, powers, and licenses. 2. The formal transfer of real property. 3. The document by which a transfer is effected; esp., DEED. 4. The property or property right so transferred.

office grant. A grant made by a legal officer because the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute a deed to pass title, as in the case of a tax deed. See tax deed under DEED.

grant, vb. 1. To give or confer (something), with or without compensation <the parents granted the car to their daughter on her 16th birthday>. 2. To formally transfer (real property) by deed or other writing <the Lewisons granted the townhouse to the Bufords>. 3. To permit or agree to <the press secretary granted the reporter access to the Oval Office>. 4. To approve, warrant, or order (a request, motion, etc.) <the court granted the continuance>.

grantor-grantee index. See INDEX (1).

grantor's lien. See vendor's lien under LIEN.

grantor trust. See TRUST.

grant to uses. Hist. A conveyance of legal title to real property to one person for the benefit of another. • If, for example, A conveyed land to B and his heirs to the use of C and his heirs, B — the feoffee to uses — acquired seisin in and had possession of the land and was considered the legal owner. C — the cestui que use — was considered the equitable owner of the land and was entitled to the land's rents, profits, and benefits. Because the cestui que use did not have seisin in the land, he was not subject to feudal payments. From the 13th century forward, the grant to uses was an increasingly popular mode of conveyance. See CESTUI QUE USE; STATUTE OF USES; USE (4).

grass hearth. Hist. A tenant's customary service, consisting of the tenant's bringing his plow to the lord's land and plowing it for one day.

guarantor of collectibility. One who guarantees a debtor's solvency and is under a duty to pay only if the creditor is unable to collect from the principal debtor after exhausting all legal remedies, including demand, suit, judgment, and any supplementary proceedings.

guarantor of payment. One who guarantees payment of a negotiable instrument when it is due without the holder first seeking payment from another party. • A guarantor of payment is liable only if "payment guaranteed" or equivalent words are added to the guarantor's indorsement.

guarantor trust. See TRUST.

guaranty (gar-ən-tee), n. 1. A promise to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty, in case of the failure of another who is liable in the first instance. ● The term is most common in finance and banking contexts. While a warranty relates to things (not persons), is not collateral, and need not be in writing, a guaranty is an undertaking that a person will pay or do some act, is collateral to the duty of the primary obligor, and must be in writing.

“Both guaranty and warranty are undertakings by one party to another to indemnify the party assured against some possible default or defect. But a guaranty relates to the future, as a collateral promise designed to protect the promisee from loss in case another fails to perform his duty. A warranty relates to the present or past, and is an independent promise designed to protect the promisee from loss in the event that the facts warranted are not as the promisor states them to be when the contract is made. A warranty is broken as soon as it is made if the facts are not as represented, and is enforceable though oral; whereas a guaranty is not breached until a future default occurs, and is unenforceable unless in writing.” Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 23 (1950).

“A transaction of guaranty involves at least three parties: a promisor, a creditor (the person to whom the promise is made), and a debtor — although at the time the promise is made, the person denominated the ‘creditor’ need not have extended the credit to the person denominated as the ‘debtor.’ The usual guaranty situation arises when the promisor makes a promise to the creditor either as to the solvency of the debtor or as to the payment of the debt.” 38 Am. Jur. 2d Guaranty § 1, at 996 (1968).

absolute guaranty. An unqualified promise that the principal will pay or perform.

conditional guaranty. A guaranty that requires the performance of some condition by the creditor before the guarantor will become liable.

contingent guaranty. A guaranty in which the guarantor will not be liable unless a specified event occurs.

continuing guaranty. A guaranty that governs a course of dealing for an indefinite time or by a succession of credits. — Also termed open guaranty.

general guaranty. 1. A guaranty addressed to no specific person, so that anyone who acts on it can enforce it. 2. A guaranty for the principal’s default on obligations that the principal undertakes with anyone.

guaranty of collection. A guaranty that is conditioned on the creditor’s having first exhausted legal remedies against the principal debtor before suing the guarantor.

guaranty of payment. A guaranty that is not conditioned on the creditor’s exhausting legal remedies against the principal debtor before suing the guarantor.

irrevocable guaranty (i-rev-ə-kə-bəl). A guaranty that cannot be terminated unless the other parties consent.

limited guaranty. An agreement to answer for a debt arising from a single transaction. — Also termed noncontinuing guaranty.

revocable guaranty. A guaranty that the guarantor may terminate without any other party’s consent.

special guaranty. 1. A guaranty addressed to a particular person or group of persons, who are the only ones who can enforce it. 2. A guaranty that names a definite person as obligee and that can be accepted only by the person named.

guardian in socage. Hist. A guardian for a child under 14 who has acquired lands by descent. ● Such a guardian is usu. a relative who could not possibly inherit from the child. This type of guardianship applied to both the person and the property of the child and lasted only until the child was 14, when the child was allowed to select a guardian. See SO-CAGE.

natural guardian. 1. Hist. The eldest son's father, until the son turned 21. 2. In the absence of statute, the father of a legitimate child until the child reaches the age of 21. ● A father of illegitimate children may be appointed as their guardian upon the mother's death. 3. Most commonly and by statute, either the father or the mother of a minor child — each bearing the title simultaneously. ● If one parent dies, the other is the natural guardian.

partial guardian. A guardian whose rights, duties, and powers are strictly limited to those specified in a court order.

quasi-guardian. A guardian who assumes that role without any authority. ● Such a person may be made to account as guardian. — Also termed guardian by estoppel; guardian de son tort.

special guardian. A guardian who has special or limited powers over the ward's person or estate. ● Examples are guardians who have custody of the estate but not of the person, those who have custody of the person but not of the estate, and guardians ad litem.

statutory guardian. A guardian appointed by a court having special statutory jurisdiction. — Also termed guardian by statute.

testamentary guardian. A guardian appointed by a parent's will for the person and property of a child until the latter reaches the age of majority.

2. Hist. A mesne lord who was entitled to treat an infant heir's lands for all practical purposes as the lord's own, enjoying fully their use and whatever profits they yielded. ● At the end of the guardianship, when the heir reached majority, no accounting was owed by the mesne lord.

guardian of the poor. Hist. A person in charge of the relief and maintenance of the poor in a parish. ● Guardians of the poor administered poor-relief funds raised under the Poor Relief Act of 1601. ● The function is now performed by local authorities.

guardian of the spiritualities. Eccles. law. A person who exercises the spiritual and ecclesiastical jurisdiction of a diocese during a vacancy in the see or the absence of the bishop.

habeas corpora juratorum (hay-bee-əs kor-pər-ə juur-ə-tor-əm). [Law Latin "that you have the bodies of the jurors"] Hist. A writ commanding the sheriff to bring in jurors and, if necessary, to take their lands and goods as security to ensure their attendance in court for a trial setting. • This writ issued from the Court of Common Pleas and served the same purpose as a distringas juratores in the King's Bench. The writ was abolished in 1852.

habeas corpus ad deliberandum et recipiendum (hay-bee-əs kor-pəs ad di-lib-ə-ran-dəm et ri-sip-ee-en-dəm). [Law Latin

"that you have the body to consider and receive"] Hist. A writ used to remove a person for trial from one county to the county where the person allegedly committed the offense. Cf. EXTRADITION.

Hadley v. Baxendale rule. Contracts. The principle that consequential damages will be awarded for breach of contract only if, at the time of contracting, the parties contemplated that this type of damage would result from the breach. Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341 (1854). • Hadley v. Baxendale is best known for its impact on a nonbreaching party's ability to recover consequential damages, but the case also confirmed the principle that the nonbreaching party may recover damages that arise naturally from the breach. See DAMAGES.

hand down, vb. To announce or file an opinion in a case. ● The term was originally used in connection with an appellate-court opinion sent to the court below; it was later expanded to include any decision by a court on a case or point under consideration.

hand-fasting. Hist. A betrothal; marrying by clasping another's hand and agreeing to live together as husband and wife.

Hand formula. A balancing test for determining whether conduct has created an unreasonable risk of harm, first formulated by Judge Learned Hand in United States v. Carroll Towing Co., 159 F.2d 169 (2d Cir. 1947). ● Under this test, an actor is negligent if the burden of taking adequate precautions against the harm is outweighed by the probable gravity of the harm multiplied by the probability that the harm will occur.

"The legal standard applicable to most unintentional tort cases is that of negligence, defined by Judge Learned Hand as follows: the defendant is guilty of negligence if the loss caused by the accident, multiplied by the probability of the accident's occurring, exceeds the burden of the precautions that the defendant might have taken to avert it. This is an economic test. . . . Although the Hand formula is of relatively recent origin, the method that it capsulizes has been the basic one used to determine negligence ever since negligence was first adopted as the standard to govern accident cases." Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 6.2, at 122–23 (2d ed. 1977).

handhabend (hand-hab-ænd), adj. Hist. (Of a thief) caught in possession of a stolen item.

same-sex harassment. Sexual harassment by a supervisor of an employee of the same sex.

sexual harassment. See SEXUAL HARASSMENT.

harbinger (hahr-bin-jər), n. 1. Hist. In England, a royal officer who went ahead and was responsible for securing lodging for troops or for a traveling royal entourage. 2. A person or thing that predicts what is to come .

harbor, safe. See SAFE HARBOR.

harboring, n. The act of affording lodging, shelter, or refuge to a person, esp. a criminal or illegal alien.

harbor line. A line marking the boundary of a certain part of public water that is reserved for a harbor; esp., the line beyond which wharves and other structures may not extend.

hard case. A lawsuit involving equities that tempt a judge to stretch or even disregard a principle of law at issue — hence the expression, "Hard cases make bad law."

hard currency. See CURRENCY.

hard dollars. 1. Cash proceeds given to a seller. 2. The part of an equity investment that is not deductible in the first year. Cf. SOFT DOLLARS.

hard goods. See durable goods under GOODS.

hard labor. Work imposed on prisoners as additional punishment, usu. for misconduct while in prison. • Several states (such as Louisiana, Maine, and New Jersey) impose hard labor as a sentence for a variety of crimes. Hard labor is also imposed in military sentencing.

hard-look doctrine. Administrative law. The principle that a court should carefully review an administrative-agency decision to ensure that the decision did not result from expediency, pressure, or whim.

hard money. See MONEY.

hard sell. A sales practice characterized by slo-gans, aggression, intimidation, and urgent decision-making. Cf. SOFT SELL.

hardship. 1. Privation; suffering or adversity. 2. Zoning. A ground for a variance under some zoning statutes if the zoning ordinance as applied to a particular property is unduly oppressive, arbitrary, or confiscatory. 3. The severity with which a proposed construction of law would bear on a particular case, sometimes forming a basis (also known as an argument ab inconvenienti) against the construction. See AB INCONVENIENTI; HARD CASE.

harm, n. Injury, loss, or detriment.

bodily harm. Physical pain, illness, or impairment of the body.

grievous bodily harm. Criminal and tort law. Serious physical impairment of the human body. • Typically, the fact-finder must decide in any given case whether the injury meets this general standard. — Abbr. g.b.h. — Also termed great bodily injury.

physical harm. Any physical impairment of land, chattels, or the human body.

social harm. An adverse effect on any social interest that is protected by the criminal law.

harmful error. See reversible error under ERROR.

harmless error. See ERROR (2).

harmonic plane. An arbitrarily selected zero chosen by the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey to serve as the base for its tidal tables, charts, and maps.

harmony. Agreement or accord; conformity <the decision in Jones is in harmony with earlier Supreme Court precedent>. — harmonize, vb.

harrow (har-oh or hæ-roh), n. [fr. Old French haro] Hist. In Norman and early English law, an outcry (or hue and cry) after felons and malefactors. — Also termed haro. See HUE AND CRY. Cf. CLAMEUR DE HARO.

Harter Act. Maritime law. An 1893 federal statute that allocates the risks of damage to cargo at sea by relieving a carrier of liability for certain events (such as negligent navigation) provided that the carrier has exercised due diligence in sending the ship out in a seaworthy condition. 46 USCA app. §§ 190–196. See CARRIAGE OF GOODS BY SEA ACT.

“During the eighteenth century, common carriers began limiting this liability by inserting clauses in bills of lading relieving them from some of the risks of the voyage. Because of their superior bargaining power, the carriers, through such clauses, eventually were able to exculpate themselves from all liability to the shipper or his consignee, even that for damages caused by the negligence of the master and crew during the voyage. American courts refused to honor these exculpatory clauses, holding them invalid because of the inequality of bargaining power between shippers and common carriers. However, courts of other maritime nations upheld such clauses. As a result, American merchant vessels were at a disadvantage in the world market. To lessen this disadvantage, Congress passed the Harter Act. . . .” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 58–59 (2d ed. 1988).

Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvement

Act. A federal statute, enacted in 1976, that generally strengthens the Justice Department’s antitrust enforcement powers, esp. by requiring firms to give notice to the Federal Trade Commission and the Justice Department of an intent to merge if one of the firms has annual revenues or assets exceeding $100 million, and the acquisition price or value of the acquired firm exceeds $15 million.

haspa (has-pə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The hasp of a door. • Livery of seisin was often made in the doorway of a structure located on the property being transferred.

hasta (has-tə), n. [Latin “spear”] 1. Roman law. A sale by auction, indicated by a spear placed into the ground. • The phrase hasta subicere (“to put under the spear”) meant to put up for sale at auction. 2. Hist. A symbol used to invest a fief.

Hatch Act. A federal statute, enacted in 1939, that restricts political-campaign activities by federal employees and limits contributions by individuals to political campaigns. 5 USCA §§ 1501–1508. • Senator Carl Hatch sponsored the Act following disclosures that Works Progress Administration officials were using their positions to campaign for the Democratic Party.

hate crime. See CRIME.

hate speech. See SPEECH.

hat money. Maritime law. A small gratuity traditionally paid to the master (and sometimes the crew) of a ship for the care of the cargo; PRIMAGE. — Also termed pocket money.

hauber ([h]aw-bər), n. [Old French] Hist. A high lord; a great baron.

haulage royalty. See ROYALTY (2).

haustus (haws-təs), n. [Latin “a drawing”] Roman law. A species of servitude consisting in the right to draw water from a well or spring on another’s property — the term being common esp. in the form aquaehaustus. ● A right-of-way (iter) to the well was implied in the easement.

have. See HABE.

have and hold. See TO HAVE AND TO HOLD.

hawker. An itinerant or traveling salesperson who sells goods in a public street, esp. one who, in a loud voice, cries out the benefits of the items offered for sale; a peddler. ● A hawker is usu. required to have a license.

hawking. The act of offering, by outcry, goods for sale from door to door or on a public street.

haybote (hay-boht), n. [fr. French haye “a hedge” + Saxon bote “an allowance”] Hist. The right or privilege of a tenant for life or years to have material to repair the hedges or fences, or to make farming implements. — Also termed hedgebote. See BOTE.

hayward. Hist. 1. An officer of a town or manor responsible for maintaining fences and hedges, esp. to prevent cattle from breaking through to an enclosed pasture. 2. A cattle herdsman.

Hazantown agreement (hay-zən-town). A type of collective-bargaining agreement used in the garment industry, governing the relationship between a jobber and the contractors that produce the jobber’s garments. ● The agreement does not govern the relationship between the jobber and its own employees. It governs the relationship between the jobber and the contractors that manufacture the garments that the jobber sells, including agreements that the jobber will use only unionized contractors, will ensure that salaries and bonuses are appropriately paid, and will contribute to employee-benefit funds maintained on behalf of the contractor’s employees. This term gets its name from Hazantown, Inc., the jobber involved in Danielson v. Joint Bd. of Coat, Suit & Allied Garment Workers’ Union, 494 F.2d 1230 (2d Cir. 1974). — Also termed jobber’s agreement.

hazard, n. 1. Danger; peril.

extraordinary hazard. Workers’ compensation. An unusual occupational danger that is increased by the acts of employees other than the injured worker.

imminent hazard. An immediate danger; esp., in environmental law, a situation in which the continued use of a pesticide will probably result in unreasonable adverse effects on the environment or will involve an unreasonable danger to the survival of an endangered species. 7 USCA § 136(1).

2. The risk or probability of loss or injury, esp. a loss or injury covered by an insurance policy.

moral hazard. 1. The risk that an insured will destroy property or allow it to be destroyed (usu. by burning) in order to collect the insurance proceeds. 2. The insured’s potential interest, if any, in the burning of the property.

3. Hist. An unlawful dice game in which the chances of winning are complicated by arbitrary rules.

hazarder (haz-ər-dər), n. Hist. A player in an unlawful game of dice. — Also spelled hazardor.

hazardous contract. See aleatory contract under CONTRACT.

hazardous employment. See EMPLOYMENT.

hazardous negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

hazardous substance. 1. A toxic pollutant; an imminently dangerous chemical or mixture. 2. See hazardous waste under WASTE (2).

hazardous waste. See WASTE (2).

hazard pay. Special compensation for work done under unpleasant or unsafe conditions.

H.B. See house bill under BILL (3).

H.C. abbr. 1. HOUSE OF COMMONS. 2. HABEAS CORPUS.

HDC. abbr. HOLDER IN DUE COURSE.

he. A pronoun of the masculine gender, traditionally used and construed in statutes to include both sexes, as well as corporations. • It may also be read as they. Because of the trend toward nonsexist language, careful drafters avoid using the generic pronouns he, him, and his unless the reference is only to a male person.

headborough. See BORSHOLDER.

headlease. A primary lease under which a sublease has been granted. — Also spelled head lease. — Also termed primary lease; chief lease.

headlessor. A lessor on a lease of property that has been subleased.

head money. 1. A tax on people who fit within a designated class; a poll tax. See capitation tax and poll tax under TAX. 2. A bounty offered by a government for a prisoner taken at sea during a naval engagement. • This bounty is divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money. See PRIZE MONEY. 3. A tax or duty on shipowners, imposed by an 1882 federal statute, for every immigrant brought into the United States. — Also termed head tax. 4. Hist. A bounty or reward paid to a person who killed a bandit or outlaw and produced the head as evidence. See BOUNTY; REWARD.

headnote. A case summary that appears before the printed judicial opinion in a law report, addresses a point of law, and usu. includes the relevant facts bearing on that point of law. — Also termed syllabus; synopsis; reporter's syllabus.

"The syllabus or headnote is a brief statement of the propositions of law decided in the case, being in the nature of a table of contents of the case. The modern method is to number each proposition in the syllabus, and to indicate, by corresponding figures, the exact place in the decision where the point mentioned in the syllabus can be found. Sometimes, especially in the older reports, the syllabus is inaccurate or misleading, and it is not safe to rely on it without first verifying it from the decision." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 22 (1922).

headnote lawyer. See LAWYER.

head of household. 1. The primary income-provider within a family. 2. For income-tax purposes, an unmarried or separated person (other than a surviving spouse) who provides a home for dependents for more than one-half of the taxable year. • A head of a household is taxed at a lower rate than a single person who is not head of a household. Cf. HOUSEHOLDER.

headright. In American Indian law, a tribemember's right to a pro rata portion of income from a tribal trust fund set up under the Allotment Act of 1906. • This type of trust fund is funded largely by mineral royalties arising from land held or once held by the tribemember's tribe.

headright certificate. Hist. A certificate issued under authority of a Republic of Texas law of 1839 providing that a person was entitled to a grant of 640 acres if the person (1) had immigrated to the Republic between 1 October 1837 and 1 January 1840, (2) was a head of household, and (3) actually resided within the Republic with his or her family. • The grant was to be held under the certificate for three years and then conveyed by absolute deed to the settler.

head shop. A retail establishment that sells items intended for use with illegal drugs.

head-silver. See common fine under FINE (4).

head-start injunction. An injunction prohibiting the defendant from using a trade secret for a period equal to the time between the date of the secret's theft and the date when the secret became public, since that period equals the "head start" that the defendant unfairly obtained over the rest of the industry.

headstream. The source of a river.

head tax. 1. See poll tax under TAX. 2. HEAD MONEY (3).

headwater. 1. (usu. pl.) The part of a river or stream that is closest to its source. 2. HEADSTREAM.

health. 1. The state of being sound or whole in body, mind, or soul. 2. Freedom from pain or sickness.

public health. 1. The health of the community at large. 2. The healthful or sanitary condition of the general body of people or the community en masse; esp., the methods of maintaining the health of the community, as by preventive medicine and organized care for the sick. • Many cities have a "public health department" or other agency responsible for maintaining the public health; federal laws dealing with health are administered by the Department of Health and Human Services.

sound health. Insurance. A policy applicant's good condition; a state of health characterized by a lack of grave impairment or disease, or of any ailment that seriously affects the applicant's health.

healthcare-insurance receivable. An interest in or claim under an insurance policy, being a right to payment of a monetary obligation for healthcare goods or services provided. UCC § 9-104(c).

health insurance. See INSURANCE.

health law. A statute, ordinance, or code that prescribes sanitary standards and regulations for the purpose of promoting and preserving the community's health.

health-maintenance organization. A group of participating healthcare providers that furnish medical services to enrolled members of a group health-insurance plan. — Abbr. HMO. Cf. PREFERRED-PROVIDER ORGANIZATION.

health officer. A government official charged with executing and enforcing health laws. ● The powers of a health officer (such as the Surgeon General) are regulated by law.

hearing. 1. A judicial session, usu. open to the public, held for the purpose of deciding issues of fact or of law, sometimes with witnesses testifying <the court held a hearing on the admissibility of DNA evidence in the murder case>. 2. Administrative law. Any setting in which an affected person presents arguments to an agency decision-maker . 3. In legislative practice, any proceeding in which legislators or their designees receive testimony about legislation that might be enacted <the shooting victim spoke at the Senate's hearing on gun control>. See PRELIMINARY HEARING. 4. Equity practice. A trial.

adjudicatory hearing (ə-joo-di-kə-tor-ee).

1. A hearing held by a juvenile court to determine whether a juvenile has engaged in delinquent conduct; a trial of a youth accused of a delinquency. See JUVENILE DELINQUENCY. Cf. detention hearing; disposition hearing. 2. Administrative law. An agency proceeding in which the rights and duties of a particular person are decided after notice and an opportunity to be heard. — Also termed adjudicatory proceeding.

conformity hearing. See CONFORMITY HEARING.

Daubert hearing. See DAUBERT HEARING.

detention hearing. A hearing held by a juvenile court to determine whether a juvenile accused of delinquent conduct should be detained, continued in confinement, or released pending an adjudicatory hearing. Cf. adjudicatory hearing; disposition hearing.

discharge hearing. See DISCHARGE HEARING.

disposition hearing. A hearing held to determine the most appropriate form of custody or treatment for a juvenile who has been found at an adjudicatory hearing to be a juvenile delinquent or a status offender. Cf. adjudicatory hearing; detention hearing.

evidentiary hearing. 1. A hearing at which evidence is presented, as opposed to a hearing at which only legal argument is presented. 2. See ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING.

exclusionary hearing. A pretrial hearing conducted to review and determine the admissibility of alleged illegally obtained evidence.

fair hearing. A judicial or administrative hearing conducted in accordance with due process.

Fatico hearing. See FATICO HEARING.

Franks hearing. See FRANKS HEARING.

full hearing. 1. A hearing at which the parties are allowed notice of each other's claims and are given ample opportunity to present their positions with evidence and argument. 2. See ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING.

hearing de novo (dee or di noh-voh). 1. A reviewing court's decision of a matter anew, giving no deference to a lower court's findings. 2. A new hearing of a matter, conducted as if the original hearing had not taken place.

Jackson-Denno hearing. See JACKSON-DENNO HEARING.

Mapp hearing. See MAPP HEARING.

omnibus hearing. A hearing at which many items are discussed and considered.

public hearing. A hearing that, within reasonable limits, is open to anyone who wishes to observe. ● Such a hearing is often characterized by the right to appear and present evidence in a case before an impartial tribunal.

reaffirmation hearing. See REAFFIRMATION HEARING.

revocation hearing. Criminal procedure. A hearing held to determine whether a parolee should be returned to prison for violating the terms of parole.

suppression hearing. A pretrial hearing in which a criminal defendant seeks to prevent the introduction of evidence alleged to have been seized illegally.

trial-type hearing. See ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING.

unfair hearing. A hearing that is not conducted in accordance with due process, as when the defendant is denied the opportunity to prepare or consult with counsel.

Wade hearing. See WADE HEARING.

hearing examiner. See ADMINISTRATIVE-LAW JUDGE.

hearing officer. See ADMINISTRATIVE-LAW JUDGE.

double hearsay. A hearsay statement that contains further hearsay statements within it, none of which is admissible unless exceptions to the rule against hearsay can be applied to each level <the double hearsay was the investigation's report stating that Amy admitted to running the red light>. Fed. R. Evid. 805. — Also termed multiple hearsay; hearsay within hearsay.

hearsay rule. The rule that no assertion offered as testimony can be received unless it is or has been open to test by cross-examination or an opportunity for cross-examination, except as provided otherwise by the rules of evidence, by court rules, or by statute. • The chief reasons for the rule are that out-of-court statements amounting to hearsay are not made under oath and are not subject to cross-examination. Fed. R. Evid. 802. Rule 803 provides 23 explicit exceptions to the hearsay rule, regardless of whether the out-of-court declarant is available to testify, and Rule 804 provides 5 more exceptions for situations in which the declarant is unavailable to testify.

"[T]he great hearsay rule . . . is a fundamental rule of safety, but one overenforced and abused, — the spoiled child of the family, — proudest scion of our jury-trial rules of evidence, but so petted and indulged that it has become a nuisance and an obstruction to speedy and efficient trials." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 238 (1935).

heartbalm statute. A state law that abolishes the rights of action for alienation of affections, breach of promise to marry, criminal conversation, and seduction of a person over the legal age of consent.

hearth money. Hist. 1. A tax of two shillings levied on every fireplace in England (14 Car. 2, ch. 10). • This extremely unpopular tax was enacted in 1662 during the reign of Charles II and abolished in 1688. 2. PETER-PENCE. — Also termed (in sense 1) chimney money.

heat of passion. Rage, terror, or furious hatred suddenly aroused by some immediate provocation, usu. another person's words or actions. • At common law, the heat of passion could serve, in a murder defense, as a mitigating circumstance that would reduce the charge to manslaughter. — Also termed sudden heat of passion; sudden heat; sudden passion; hot blood; furor brevis. Cf. COLD BLOOD; COOL BLOOD.

"To constitute the heat of passion included in this requirement it is not necessary for the passion to be so extreme that the slayer does not know what he is doing at the time; but it must be so extreme that for the moment his action is being directed by passion rather than by reason." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 99 (3d ed. 1982).

heavy work. See WORK.

hebote. See HEREBOTE.

hedagium (hə-day-jee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A toll or custom due at a wharf for landing goods. • The Crown exempted particular persons and societies from this toll.

hedge, vb. To make advance arrangements to safeguard oneself from loss on an investment, speculation, or bet, as when a buyer of commodities insures against unfavorable price changes by buying in advance at a fixed rate for later delivery. — hedging, n.

hedgebote. See HAYBOTE.

hedonic damages. See DAMAGES.

hedonistic utilitarianism. See UTILITARIANISM.

heeding presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

heedlessness, n. The quality of being thoughtless and inconsiderate; esp., conduct whereby the actor disregards the rights or safety of others. • Heedlessness is often construed to involve the same degree of fault as recklessness. — heedless, adj. See RECKLESSNESS.

hegemonism (hi-jem-ə-niz-əm). 1. A philosophical position advocating hegemony. 2. All forms of political extension by means of hegemony.

hegemony (hi-jem-ə-nee), n. 1. Influence, authority, or supremacy over others <the hegemony of capitalism>. 2. The striving for leadership or predominant authority of one state of a confederacy or union over the others; political domination <the former Soviet Union's hegemony over Eastern Europe>. — hegemonic (hej-ə-mon-ik), adj.

heightened scrutiny. See INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY.

heinous (hay-nəs), adj. (Of a crime or its perpetrator) that is shockingly atrocious or odious. — heinousness, n.

heir (air). 1. A person who, under the laws of intestacy, is entitled to receive an intestate decedent's property, esp. real property. — Also termed legal heir; heir at law; lawful heir; heir general.

"Laymen — and sometimes first-year law students taking exams — wrongly assume that one who receives real property by will is an heir. Technically, the word 'heir' is reserved for one who receives real property by action of the laws of intestacy, which operate today only in the absence of a valid will." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 14 n.32 (2d ed. 1984).

2. Loosely, a person who inherits real or personal property, whether by will or by intestate succession.

after-born heir. One born after the death of an intestate from whom the heir is entitled to inherit.

and his heirs. A term of art formerly required to create a fee simple absolute in transferring real property by will <A conveys Blackacre to B and his heirs>. • This phrasing originated in the translation of a Law French phrase used in medieval grants (a lui et a ses heritiers pour toujours "to him and his heirs forever"). See FEE SIMPLE.

apparent heir. See heir apparent.

beneficiary heir (ben-ə-fish-ee-er-ee). Civil law. An heir who accepts an inheritance but files a benefit of inventory to limit his or her liability for estate debts to the value of the inheritance. — Also termed heir beneficiary. See BENEFIT OF INVENTORY. Cf. unconditional heir.

collateral heir. One who is neither a direct descendant nor an ancestor of the decedent, but whose kinship is through a collateral line, such as a brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nephew, niece, or cousin. Cf. lineal heir.

expectant heir. An heir who has a reversionary or remainder interest in property, or a chance of succeeding to it. — Also termed heir expectant. See REVERSION; REMAINDER. Cf. prospective heir.

"The reader should be aware that one never has an 'heir' until one is dead; one merely has an 'heir expectant' Thus, to say that an heir 'owns' anything is conceptually difficult. But . . . some unborn heirs may be entitled to the protection of the courts, and thus be said to have estates." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 26 n.13 (2d ed. 1984).

forced heir. A person whom the testator or donor cannot disinherit because the law reserves part of the estate for that person.

heir apparent. An heir who is certain to inherit unless he or she dies first or is excluded by a valid will. — Also termed apparent heir. Cf. heir presumptive.

"Heirs apparent are such, whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided they outlive the ancestor; as the eldest son or his issue, who must by the course of the common law be heirs to the father whenever he happens to die." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 208 (1766).

heir beneficiary. See beneficiary heir.

heir by adoption. A person who has been adopted by (and thus has become an heir to) the deceased. • By statute in most jurisdictions, an adopted child has the same right of succession to intestate property as a biological child unless the deceased clearly expresses a contrary intention. Jurisdictions differ on whether an adopted child may in addition inherit from his or her natural parents or family.

heir by custom. Hist. In England, a person whose right of inheritance depends on a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind and borough English. See GAVELKIND; BOROUGH ENGLISH.

heir by devise. One to whom lands are given by will.

heir conventional. Civil law. One who takes a succession because of a contract or settlement entitling him or her to it.

heir expectant. See expectant heir.

heir in tail. See heir special.

heir male. Hist. The nearest male blood-relation of a decedent.

heir of the blood. An heir who succeeds to an estate because of consanguinity with the decedent, either in the ascending or descending line.

heir of the body. A lineal descendant of the decedent, excluding a surviving spouse, adopted children, and collateral relations. • The term of art heirs of the body was formerly used to create a fee tail <A conveys Blackacre to B and the heirs of his body>. — Also termed bodily heir.

heir presumptive. An heir who will inherit if the potential intestate dies immediately, but who may be excluded if another more closely related heir is born. — Also termed presumptive heir. Cf. heir apparent.

heirs and assigns. A term of art formerly required to create a fee simple <A conveys Blackacre to B and his heirs and assigns>.

heir special. Hist. An heir who receives property according to the nature of the estate held in fee tail. • Heirs special were said to receive property per formam doni (“by the form of the gift”). — Also termed heir in tail.

joint heir. 1. A coheir. 2. A person who is or will be an heir to both of two designated persons at the death of the survivor of them, the word joint being here applied to the ancestors rather than the heirs.

known heir. An heir who is present to claim an inheritance, the extent of which depends on there being no closer relative.

laughing heir. An heir distant enough to feel no grief when a relative dies and leaves a windfall to the heir.

lineal heir. A person who is either an ancestor or a descendant of the decedent, such as a parent or child. Cf. collateral heir.

natural heir. An heir by consanguinity as distinguished from a collateral heir, an heir by adoption, or a statutory heir (such as a person’s spouse).

presumptive heir. See heir presumptive.

pretermitted heir (pree-tər-mit-id). A child or spouse who has been omitted from a will, as when a testator makes a will naming his or her two children and then, sometime later, has two more children who are not mentioned in the will. • Most states have so-called “pretermitted-heir statutes” under which an omitted child or spouse receives the same share of the estate as if the testator had died intestate, unless the omission was intentional. — Also termed (more specifically) pretermitted child; pretermitted spouse. See PRETERMitted-HEIR STATUTE.

prospective heir. An heir who may inherit but may be excluded; an heir apparent or an heir presumptive. Cf. expectant heir.

right heir. 1. Hist. The preferred heir to an estate tail, as distinguished from a general heir. • An estate tail would pass to a general heir only on the failure of the preferred heir and his line. 2. HEIR (1).

testamentary heir (tes-tə-men-tə-ree or -tree). Civil law. A person who is appointed heir in the decedent’s will.

unconditional heir. Civil law. A person who chooses — expressly or tacitly — to inherit without any reservation or without making an inventory. Cf. beneficiary heir.

heir apparent. See HEIR.

heir by adoption. See HEIR.

heir by custom. See HEIR.

heir by devise. See HEIR.

heir conventional. See HEIR.

heirdom. The state of being an heir; succession by inheritance.

heir expectant. See expectant heir under HEIR.

heir general. See HEIR.

heir-hunter. A person whose business is to track down missing heirs.

heir in tail. See heir special under HEIR.

heirless estate. See ESTATE.

heirloom. 1. An item of personal property that by local custom, contrary to the usual legal rule, descends to the heir along with the inheritance, instead of passing to the executor or administrator of the last owner; traditional examples are an ancestor's coat of armor, family portraits, title deeds, and keys. • Blackstone gave a false etymology that many have copied: "The termination, loom, is of Saxon origin; in which language it signifies a limb or member; so that an heirloom is nothing else, but a limb or member of the inheritance." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Law of England 427 (1766). In fact, loom derives from Old English geloma "utensil," and loom meant "implement, tool." 2. Popularly, a valued possession of great sentimental value passed down through generations within a family.

"Heir-looms, strictly so called, are now very seldom to be met with. They may be defined to be such personal chattels as go, by force of a special custom, to the heir, along with the inheritance, and not to the executor or administrator of the last owner. The owner of an heirloom cannot by his will bequeath the heirloom, if he leave the land to descend to his heir; for in such a case the force of custom will prevail over the bequest, which, not coming into operation until after the decease of the owner, is too late to supersede the custom. . . . In popular language the term 'heir-loom' is generally applied to plate, pictures or articles of property which have been assigned by deed of settlement or bequeathed by will to trustees, in trust to permit the same to be used and enjoyed by the persons for the time being in possession, under the settlement or will, of the mansion-house in which the articles may be placed." Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Personal Property 13-14 (11th ed. 1881).

heir male. See HEIR.

heir of the blood. See HEIR.

heir of the body. See HEIR.

heir special. See HEIR.

hell-or-high-water rule. 1. The principle that a personal-property lessee must pay the full rent due, regardless of any claim against the lessor, unless the lessee proves unequal bargaining power or unconscionability. 2. Insurance. The principle that an insured's automobile-liability policy will cover the insured while using a vehicle owned by another if the insured uses the vehicle in a manner within the scope of the permission granted.

henceforth, adv. From now on <the newly enacted rule will apply henceforth>.

Henricus Vetus (hen-ri-kəs vee-təs). [Law Latin] Henry the Old (or Elder). • This term was used in early English charters to distinguish King Henry I from later kings of the same name.

heordpenny (hərd-pen-ee), n. See PETER-PENCE.

Hepburn Act. A 1906 federal statute that amended the Interstate Commerce Act to (1) increase the (now defunct) Interstate Commerce Commission's jurisdiction to include pipelines, (2) prohibit free passes except to employees, (3) prohibit common carriers from transporting any products (except timber) in which they had an interest, and (4) require joint tariffs and a uniform system of accounts.

heptarchy (hep-tahr-kee). 1. A government by seven rulers. 2. A nation divided into seven governments, specif. the seven Anglo-Saxon kingdoms of Kent, Sussex, Essex, Wessex, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumbria existing before the Norman Conquest.

herald, n. 1. In England and Scotland, one of several officers responsible for keeping genealogical lists and tables, adjusting armorial bearings, and regulating the ceremonies at royal coronations and funerals. • There are six in England and three in Scotland. 2. Hist. A messenger who announces royal or state proclamations, and who carries diplomatic messages

(esp. proclamations of war, peace, or truce) between kings or countries.

Heralds' College. A royal corporation responsible in England for granting and recording armorial insignia and genealogies, and for dealing with matters of precedence. • The College was founded by Richard III in 1484, is governed by the Earl Marshal, and consists of three kings of arms, six heralds, and four pursuivants. The heralds' books, based on family-lineage inquiries made throughout England, are considered good evidence of pedigrees. The heralds' office is still allowed to make grants of arms and to grant name changes. • Also termed College of Arms.

herbage (ər-bij). In England, an easement or liberty of pasturage on another's land.

herdwerch (hərd-wərk), n. Hist. Herdsmen's work, or customary labor, done by shepherds and inferior tenants at the lord's will. — Also spelled heordwerch.

hereafter, adv. 1. From now on; henceforth <because of the highway construction, she will hereafter take the bus to work>. 2. At some future time <the court will hereafter issue a ruling on the gun's admissibility>. 3. HEREINAFTER <the exhibits hereafter referred to as Exhibit A and Exhibit B>.

here and there. See VALUE DATE.

herbannum (her-ə-ban-əm), n. [Law Latin fr. Old English here "army" + bann "proclamation"] Hist. 1. A proclamation summoning the army into the field. 2. A mulct or fine for not joining that army when summoned. 3. A tax or tribute for the support of that army.

herebote (her-ə-boht), n. [fr. Old English here "army" + bod "command"] Hist. In England, a royal edict summoning the people to the battlefield; an edict commanding subjects into battle. — Also spelled herebode; hebote.

hereby, adv. By this document; by these very words <I hereby declare my intention to run for public office>.

heredad (e-re-dahth), n. Spanish law. 1. A piece of land under cultivation; a cultivated farm. 2. An inheritance or heirship.

heredad yacente (e-re-dath yah-sen-te). An inheritance not yet accepted. See hereditas jacens under HEREDITAS.

heredes remotiores (hə-ree-deez ri-moh-sheer-or-eez), n. [Latin] Heirs more remote; relatives other than children or descendants.

heredipeta (he-rə-dip-ə-tə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A legacy-hunter; the seeker of an inheritance.

heredis instituto (hə-ree-dis in-sti-t[y]oo-toh), n. [Latin] Roman law. The designation in a will of a person as the testator's heir. • A testator's failure to appoint an heir could destroy the validity of the will.

hereditament (her-ə-dit-ə-mənt or hə-red-i-tə-mənt). 1. Any property that can be inherited; anything that passes by intestacy. 2. Real property; land.

corporeal hereditament (kor-por-ee-əl). A tangible item of property, such as land, a building, or a fixture.

incorporeal hereditament (in-kor-por-ee-əl). An intangible right in land, such as an easement. • The various types at common law were advowsons, annuities, commons, dignities, franchises, offices, pensions, rents, tithes, and ways.

hereditary, adj. Of or relating to inheritance; that descends from an ancestor to an heir.

hereditas (hə-red-i-tas), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. An inheritance by universal succession to a decedent. • This succession applied whether the decedent died testate or intestate, and whether in trust (ex fideicommisso) for another or not. The comparable right under Praetorian law was bonorum possessio, possession of an inheritance that could be the basis of a right to succeed. 2. Hist. An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. — Also spelled haereditas.

hereditas damnosa (hə-red-i-tas dam-noh-sə). A burdensome inheritance; an inheritance whose debts exceed its assets.

hereditas jacens (hə-red-i-tas jay-senz). [Latin iaceo "to lie"] 1. Property belonging to an estate before an heir accepts it. • This term had a similar meaning at common law. See ABEYANCE (2).

2. Hist. A decedent’s estate that has no heir or legatee to take it; an escheated estate. — Also termed caduca. See ESCHEAT. 3. Hist. An inheritance without legal owner and thus open to the first occupant. — Also spelled hereditas iacens.

hereditas legitima (hə-red-i-tas læ-jit-i-mə). A succession or inheritance devolving by operation of law rather than by will. See INTES-TACY.

hereditas luctuosa (hə-red-i-tas læk-choo-oh-sə). A sad or mournful inheritance; one that disturbs the natural order of mortality (turbato ordine mortalitatis), as that of a parent inheriting a child’s estate. ● This term is more literary than legal. — Also termed tristis successio.

hereditas testamentaria (hə-red-i-tas tes-tə-men-tair-ee-ə). Testamentary inheritance; succession to an estate under a decedent’s will.

heredity. 1. Archaic. Hereditary succession; an inheritance. 2. The hereditary transmission of characteristics from a parent to a child; the biological law by which a living being tends to repeat itself in its descendants.

herein, adv. In this thing (such as a document, section, or matter) <the due-process arguments stated herein should convince the court to reverse the judgment>.

hereinafter, adv. Later in this document <the buyer agrees to purchase the property described hereinafter>. — Also loosely termed hereafter.

herenach (her-ə-nak), n. [fr. Old Irish airchin-nich “chief man”] An archdeacon. — Also spelled erenach.

hereof, adv. Of this thing (such as a provision or document) <the conditions hereof are stated in section 3>.

heres (heer-eez), n. [Latin] Roman law. A successor to the rights and liabilities of a deceased person; an heir. ● Because the heres succeeded

heres astrarius (as-trair-ee-əs). [Law Latin “heir of the hearth”] An heir who has received, by conveyance, an ancestor’s estate during the ancestor’s lifetime.

heres de facto (di fak-toh). [Law Latin “heir from fact”] Hist. 1. An heir whose status arises from the disseisin or other wrongful act of the heir’s ancestor. See DISSEISIN. 2. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an heir by law (de jure).

heres ex asse (as-ee). [Latin “sole heir”] Roman law. An heir to the whole estate.

heres ex testamento. See heres factus.

heres extraneus (ek-stray-nee-əs). [Latin “extraneous heir”] Roman law. An external heir; one not subject to the testator’s power (potestas) and hence not bound to accept the inheritance.

heres factus (fak-təs). [Latin “made heir”] An heir appointed by will; a testamentary heir. — Also termed heres ex testamento; heres institutus. Cf. heres natus.

heres fideicommissarius (fi-dee-i-kom-ə-sair-ee-əs). [Latin] Roman law. The person for whose benefit an estate was given by will to a fiduciary heir. ● This office corresponds closely with the cestui qui trust of the common law. Cf. heres fiduciarius.

heres fiduciarius (fi-d[y]oo-shee-air-ee-əs). [Latin “fiduciary heir”] Roman law. A person made heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another; an heir subject to a trust. Cf. heres fideicommissarius.

heres institutus. See heres factus.

heres legitimus (lə-jit-i-məs). [Latin “lawful heir”] Roman law. An heir entitled to succeed (on intestacy) by statute.

heres natus (nay-təs). [Latin “heir by birth”] An heir by reason of birth; an heir at law or by intestacy. Cf. heres factus.

heres necessarius (nes-ə-sair-ee-əs). [Latin “necessary heir”] Roman law. A person compelled to serve as heir, usu. either a slave freed on the testator’s death or a free person in the testator’s power.

heres rectus (rek-təs). [Law Latin] Hist. A right or proper heir.

heres suus (s[y]oo-əs). [Latin "one's own heir"] 1. A decedent's proper or natural heir; a lineal descendant of the deceased. 2. Roman law. A free person who was subject to the testator's power (potestas) but who could exercise full legal rights upon the testator's death.

heres suus et necessarius (s[y]oo-əs et nes-ə-sair-ee-əs). [Latin "one's own and necessary heir"] A free person subject to the decedent's potestas. • These heirs were called necessary because they became heirs by law, not by the decedent's choice. But since this was also true of slaves, when named heirs in a will, the former class was designated suus et necessarius by way of distinction, the word suus denoting that the necessity arose from the relationship to the decedent.

ultimas heres (əl-ti-məs). The last or remote heir; the lord.

heresy (her-ə-see), n. 1. Opinion or doctrine contrary to (usu. Catholic) church dogma. 2. Hist. In England, an offense against religion, consisting not in totally denying Christianity, but in publicly denying some of its essential doctrines; an opinion on divine subjects devised solely by human reason, openly taught, and obstinately maintained. • This offense is now subject only to ecclesiastical correction and is no longer punishable by the secular law.

hereto, adv. To this document <the exhibits are attached hereto>.

heretofore, adv. Up to now; before this time .

hereunder, adv. 1. Later in this document <review the provisions hereunder before signing the consent form>. 2. In accordance with this document <notice hereunder must be provided within 30 days after the loss>.

herewith, adv. With or in this document <enclosed herewith are three copies>.

heriot (her-ee-ət), n. [fr. Old English here "army" + geatwa "trappings"] Hist. A customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the tenant's death. • Heriot derives from an earlier feudal service consisting of military equipment returned to the lord on the tenant's death; over time it came to refer only to the chattel payment due at the tenant's death.

"We are told that the ancient heriot (heregeatu, military apparel) had at one time consisted of the horses and arms lent by the lord to his man which on the man's death were returned to the lord. . . . Turning to manorial surveys, we find it among the commonest of customs that when a tenant in villeinage dies, the lord shall have the best beast; sometimes a similar due is taken from the goods of the dead freeholder, and it is to these customary dues that the name 'heriot' permanently attaches itself." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 312, 317 (2d ed. 1898).

heriot custom. A heriot due by custom. • This term is used primarily to distinguish a heriot service from an ordinary heriot.

heriot service. A tribute arising from special reservation in a grant or lease of lands, and thus amounting to little more than rent.

herislit (her-ə-sleet or hair-), n. [Old English] Hist. 1. The act of surrendering; laying down of arms. 2. The crime of deserting from an army.

HEW. abbr. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, a former agency of the U.S. government created in 1953. ● When the Department of Education was created in 1979, the name HEW was changed to the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS).

Heydon's case, rule in. See MISCHIEF RULE.

HGN test. abbr. HORIZONTAL-GAZE NYSTAGMUS TEST.

HHS. abbr. The Department of Health and Human Services, a federal agency that administers health, welfare, and income-security policies and programs, the largest of which is social security.

hidage (hid-ij), n. Hist. A tax, payable to the Crown, based on every hide of land. — Also spelled hydage. See HIDE.

“Of the same nature with scutages upon knights’-fees were the assessments of hidage upon all other lands, and of talliage upon cities and burghs. But they all gradually fell into disuse, upon the introduction of subsidies, about the time of king Richard II and king Henry IV.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 300 (1765).

hidalgo (hi-dal-goh or ee-thahl-goh), n. [fr. Spanish hijo “son” + algo “property”] In Spain, a man belonging to the lower nobility; a gentleman of property.

hidalguia (ee-thahl-gee-yə), n. [Spanish] In Spain, nobility by descent or lineage.

high bailiff. See BAILIFF.

High Commission Court. See COURT OF HIGH COMMISSION.

High Court. See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

High Court of Admiralty. In England, a court exercising jurisdiction in matters relating to shipping, collision, and salvage cases. ● The court dates from the 14th century, and much of its early history concerns prize and piracy cases. Its jurisdiction varied through the centuries, sometimes extending into criminal matters and other areas of law not related directly to maritime issues. The Judicature Acts of 1873–1875 merged the Court into the High Court as part of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division. The Administration of Justice Act of 1970 established a new Admiralty Court as part of the Queen’s Bench Division of the High Court. It is regulated by the Supreme Court Act of 1981. — Also termed Court of the Lord High Admiral; Court of Admiralty. Cf. ADMIRALTY (1).

High Court of Chivalry. Hist. A court of honor having jurisdiction over matters relating to deeds of arms and war, armorial insignia, and precedence. — Also termed Court of Chivalry; Court of Earl Marshal. See COURT OF HONOR.

“This Curia Marescalli, or High Court of Chivalry, was revived by James I as a court of honour, which not only tried the right to distinctions of honour and coat armour but also redressed affronts to honour such as slander. The slander jurisdiction was later denied, leaving it with a jurisdiction probably confined to disputes over armorial bearings, which are determined according to the law of arms. The court, which has only sat once since 1737, is the last English court to use the procedure of the civil law." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 142 (3d ed. 1990).

High Court of Delegates. See COURT OF DELEGATES.

High Court of Errors and Appeals. See COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

hijack, vb. 1. To commandeer (a vehicle or airplane), esp. at gunpoint. 2. To steal or rob from (a vehicle or airplane in transit).

Hilary Rules. Hist. A collection of English pleading rules designed to ease the strict pleading requirements of the special-pleading system, esp. by limiting the scope of the general issue in the formed actions and by forcing the defendant to set up affirmatively all matters other than a denial of the breach of duty or of the wrongful act. • Promulgated in England in the 1834 Hilary Term, these rules followed an 1828 initiative to examine procedural laws and other subjects and to report to Parliament changes that might be enacted. The rules had the unintended effect of extending the reach of strict-pleading requirements into new areas of law. Widespread dissatisfaction with the Hilary Rules led to the liberalization of the pleading system under the 1873-1875 Judicature Acts. — Formerly also termed New Rules.

"The failure of the Hilary Rules . . . lay in their insistence on special pleading as it was understood late in the eighteenth century. That parties should plead precisely, and clarify as far as possible the issue between them, is one thing; that their endeavours to do so should be judged by the extremely artificial standards of the old system, was quite another." Theodore F.T. Plucknett, A Concise History of the Common Law 416 (5th ed. 1956).

Hilary sittings. In England, a term of court beginning on January 11 of each year and ending on the Wednesday before Easter. • The Hilary sittings were known as Hilary term until 1875. Cf. EASTER SITTINGS; MICHAELMAS SITTING.

hilo settlement. See HIGH-LOW AGREEMENT.

Hilton doctrine. Civil procedure. The rule that in a dispute between parties to an oil-and-gas lease, royalty owners who would lose their rights if the defendant's lease were terminated are regarded as indispensable parties to a proceeding challenging the lease. Hilton v. Atlantic Refining Co., 327 F.2d 217 (5th Cir. 1964).

Himalaya clause. Maritime law. A provision in a bill of lading extending the carrier's liability limitations under the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act to the carrier's agents and independent contractors. • This type of clause is usu. strictly construed. See CARRIAGE OF GOODS BY SEA ACT.

"An exculpatory or other beneficial clause which seeks to extend to noncarriers, partial immunity or other protections afforded to the carrier by the bill of lading is popularly known to the admiralty bar as a Himalaya clause. This misnomer derives from an earlier British case involving the vessel Himalaya, Adler v. Dickson. . . ." Nicholas J. Healy, Carriage of Goods by Sea: Application of the "Himalaya Clause" to Subdeleagees of the Carrier, 2 Mar. Law. 91, 111 (1977).

hobby loss. See LOSS.

hodgepodge. 1. HOTCHPOT (1). 2. An unorganized mixture.

hodgepodge act. A statute that deals with incongruous subjects.

"Hodge-Podge Act . . . Such acts, besides being evident proofs of the ignorance of the makers of them, or of their want of good faith, are calculated to create a confusion which is highly prejudicial to the interests of justice. . . . In many states bills, except general appropriation bills, can contain but one subject, which must be expressed in the title." 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary 1444 (8th ed. 1914).

holder. 1. A person who has legal possession of a negotiable instrument and is entitled to receive payment on it. 2. A person with legal possession of a document of title or an investment security. 3. A person who possesses or uses property.

holder for value. A person who has given value in exchange for a negotiable instrument. • Under the UCC, examples of "giving value" include acquiring a security interest in the instrument or accepting the instrument in payment of an antecedent claim. UCC holder in due course. A person who in good faith has given value for a negotiable instrument that is complete and regular on its face, is not overdue, and, to the possessor's knowledge, has not been dishonored. • Under UCC § 3-305, a holder in due course takes the instrument free of all claims and personal defenses, but subject to real defenses. — Abbr. HDC; HIRC. — Also termed due-course holder.

holder in good faith. One who takes property or an instrument without knowledge of any defect in its title.

holder of record. See STOCKHOLDER OF RECORD.

hold harmless, vb. To absolve (another party) from any responsibility for damage or other liability arising from the transaction; INDEMNIFY. — Also termed save harmless.

hold-harmless agreement. A contract in which one party agrees to indemnify the other. — Also termed save-harmless agreement. See INDEMNITY.

hold-harmless clause. See INDEMNITY CLAUSE.

holding, n. 1. A court's determination of a matter of law pivotal to its decision; a principle drawn from such a decision. Cf. OBITER DICTUM. 2. A ruling on evidence or other questions presented at trial. 3. (usu. pl.) Legally owned property, esp. land or securities. 4. Hist. In feudal law, tenure.

holding cell. See JAIL.

holding charge. A criminal charge of some minor offense filed to keep the accused in custody while prosecutors take time to build a bigger case and prepare more serious charges.

holding company. See COMPANY.

holding-company tax. See TAX.

holding over. A tenant's action in continuing to occupy the leased premises after the lease term has expired. • Holding over creates a tenancy at sufferance, with the tenant being referred to as a holdover. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

holding zone. See ZONE.

hold order. A notation in a prisoner's file stating that another jurisdiction has charges pending against the prisoner and instructing prison officials to alert authorities in that other jurisdiction instead of releasing the prisoner.

holdover tenancy. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

holdover tenant. See TENANT.

holdup. See STICKUP.

holograph (hol-ə-graf), n. A document (such as a will or deed) that is entirely handwritten by its author. — Also termed olograph. Cf. ONOMASTIC; SYMBOLIC. — holographic, adj.

holographic will. See WILL.

homage (hom-ij). In feudal times, a ceremony that a new tenant performed for the lord to acknowledge the tenure. • This was the most honorable service that a free tenant might do for a lord. In the ceremony, kneeling before the lord, the tenant placed his hands between the lord's hands while saying, "I become your man from this day forward, of life and limb and earthly honor, and to you will be faithful and loyal, and bear you faith, for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the king, so help me God."

"Homage is an oath of fidelity, acknowledging himself to be the lord's man: wherein the tenant must be ungirt, uncovered, kneel upon both knees, and hold both his hands together between the lord's hands sitting before him. This is to be done only to the lord himself." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 143 (1759).

homage ancestral (hom-ij an-ses-trəl). [Law French] A type of homage in which a tenant and the tenant's ancestors have held immemorially of another by the service of homage. • This long-standing relationship bound the lord to warrant the title and to hold the tenant clear of all services to superior lords. — Also spelled homage auncstral (aw-mahzh on-se-stral).

homage liege (hom-ij leej). Homage due the sovereign alone as supreme lord, done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. — Also termed homagium ligium (hə-may-jee-əm li-jee-əm).

homage jury. See JURY.

homagio respectuando (hə-may-jee-oh ri-spek-choo-an-doh), n. [Law Latin “homage to the respected”] Hist. A writ to the escheator commanding the delivery of seisin of lands to the heir of the king’s tenant, even though the heir had not performed homage.

homagium (hə-may-jee-əm), n. [Law Latin] See HOMAGE.

homagium ligium. See homage liege under HOMAGAE.

homagium planum (play-nəm), n. [Law Latin “plain homage”] Hist. A type of homage binding the homager to nothing more than fidelity, without obligation either of military service or of attendance in the superior’s courts.

homagium reddere (red-ə-ree), n. [Law Latin “to renounce homage”] Hist. The process, prescribed in feudal law by a set form and method, by which a vassal disowns and defies the lord.

homagium simplex (sim-pleks), n. [Law Latin “simple homage”] Hist. A type of homage that acknowledges tenure, while reserving the rights of other lords.

hombre bueno (awm-bray bway-noh), n. Spanish law. 1. A judge. 2. An arbitrator chosen by the parties to a suit. 3. A man in good standing; one who is competent to testify in a suit.

Home Owners Warranty. A warranty and insurance program that, among other coverage, insures a new home for ten years against major structural defects. • The program was developed by the Home Owners Warranty Corporation, a subsidiary of the National Association of Home Builders. Builders often provide this type of coverage, and many states provide similar warranty protection by statute. — Abbr. HOW. — Also spelled Home Owners’ Warranty.

home port. See PORT.

home-port doctrine. Maritime law. The rule mandating that a vessel engaged in interstate and foreign commerce is taxable only at its home port, usu. where the vessel is registered.

home rule. A state legislative provision or action allocating a measure of autonomy to a local government, conditional on its acceptance of certain terms. Cf. LOCAL OPTION.

“Home rule in the United States was sometimes envisioned in its early days as giving the cities to whom such rule was granted full-fledged sovereignty over local affairs, thus bringing about dual state and local sovereignty along the national plan of federal and state governments. But such local sovereignty has never developed, nor have any clear-cut distinctions between state and local power.” Osborne M. Reynolds, Jr., Handbook of Local Government Law § 35, at 96 (1982).

home-rule charter. See CHARTER (3).

homestead. The house, outbuildings, and adjoining land owned and occupied by a person or family as a residence. • As long as the homestead does not exceed in area or value the limits fixed by law, in most states it is exempt from forced sale for collection of a debt. — Also termed homestead estate.

business homestead. The premises on which a family’s business is located. • In some states, business homesteads are exempt from execution or judicial sale for most kinds of debt.

constitutional homestead. A homestead, along with its exemption from forced sale, conferred on the head of a household by a state constitution.

homesteader. One who acquires or occupies a homestead.

homestead law. A statute exempting a homestead from execution or judicial sale for debt, unless all owners, usu. a husband and wife, have jointly mortgaged the property or otherwise subjected it to creditors' claims.

"Almost all states also have legislative provisions, commonly referred to as homestead laws, designed to protect the family home from the reach of certain classes of creditors. . . . The protection afforded by an exemption statute is not absolute. A federal tax claim may be satisfied from 'exempt property.' A number of states make similar exceptions for state taxes, claims for alimony and child support, materialmen and mechanics' liens. By statute in most states, case law in others, purchase money mortgages and security interests are generally not affected by an exemption statute." David G. Epstein & Steve H. Nickles, Consumer Law in a Nutshell 384-85 (2d ed. 1981).

homicide (hom-ə-sīd), n. The killing of one person by another. — homicidal, adj.

"The legal term for killing a man, whether lawfully or unlawfully, is 'homicide.' There is no crime of 'homicide.' Unlawful homicide at common law comprises the two crimes of murder and manslaughter. Other forms of unlawful homicide have been created by statute: certain new forms of manslaughter (homicide with diminished responsibility, and suicide pacts), infanticide, and causing death by dangerous driving." Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 204 (1978).

criminal homicide. 1. Homicide prohibited and punishable by law, such as murder or manslaughter. 2. The act of purposely, knowingly, recklessly, or negligently causing the death of another human being. Model Penal Code § 210.1.

criminally negligent homicide. See negligent homicide.

excusable homicide. 1. Homicide resulting from a person's lawful act, committed without intention to harm another. 2. See justifiable homicide (1).

felonious homicide. Homicide committed unlawfully, without legal justification or excuse. • This is the category into which murder and manslaughter fall.

homicide by misadventure. See ACCIDENTAL KILLING.

homicide per infortunium (pər in-fort[y]oo-nee-əm). [Latin "homicide by misfortune"] The unintentional killing of another while engaged in a lawful act; ACCIDENTAL KILLING. See PER INFORTUNUM.

innocent homicide. Homicide that does not involve criminal guilt.

justifiable homicide. 1. The killing of another in self-defense when faced with the danger of death or serious bodily injury. —

Also termed excusable homicide. See SELF-DEFENSE. 2. A killing mandated or permitted by the law, such as execution for a capital crime or killing to prevent a crime or a criminal's escape.

"It should be noted that a justifiable homicide is not criminal, since it is a killing which the law has either commanded or permitted: the actus in such a case is not legally punishable, and therefore we may perhaps say that it is an actus of killing which is not reus. As we shall see in most cases of justifiable homicide the killing is intentional, and therefore the mental element of criminal responsibility is clearly present: but there is no crime committed since there is no actus reus." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 109 (16th ed. 1952).

"English lawyers once distinguished between 'excusable' homicide (e.g. accidental non-negligent killing) and 'justifiable' homicide (e.g. killing in self-defence or in the arrest of a felon) and different legal consequences once attached to these two forms of homicide. To the modern lawyer this distinction has no longer any legal importance: he would simply consider both kinds of homicide to be cases where some element, negative or positive, required in the full definition of criminal homicide (murder or manslaughter) was lacking. But the distinction between these two different ways in which actions may fail to constitute a criminal offence is still of great moral importance. Killing in self-defence is an exception to a general rule making killing punishable; it is admitted because the policy or aims which in general justify the punishment of killing (e.g. protection of human life) do not include cases such as this. In the case of 'justification' what is done is regarded as something which the law does not condemn, or even welcomes." H.L.A. Hart, "Prolegomenon to the Principles of Punishment," in Punishment and Responsibility 1, 13 (1968).

negligent homicide. Homicide resulting from the careless performance of a legal or illegal act in which the danger of death is apparent; the killing of a human being by criminal negligence. — Also termed criminally negligent homicide. See criminal negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

"There is no common-law offense known as 'negligent homicide.' As a matter of the common law of crimes any killing below the grade of manslaughter is innocent homicide. Some of the new penal codes have a classification scheme which (omitting degrees or other variations) divides criminal homicide into murder, manslaughter and criminally negligent homicide — or simply negligent homicide. For the most part, however, this has been achieved by removing from manslaughter the offense of homicide by criminal negligence and using this to constitute the newly named offense. Thus, though there are a few exceptions, most states will have no homicide offense which would be below common-law manslaughter." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 116-17 (3d ed. 1982).

reckless homicide. The unlawful killing of another person with conscious indifference toward that person's life. Cf. MANSLAUGHTER.

vehicular homicide. The killing of another person by one's unlawful or negligent operation of a motor vehicle.

housing court. See COURT.

hovering act. Int'l law. A statute applying to a coastal country's criminal jurisdiction over ships, and persons aboard those ships, when the ships are outside the country's territory.

"The notion of hovering acts evolved long before that of a belt of uniform width in the form of territorial waters. Great Britain's first anti-smuggling legislation to operate at a stated distance seaward was in 1719, applying to the master of any ship 'found at anchor or hovering within two leagues from the shore.' Later enactments extended this limit to three, then four, then eight leagues. A statute of 1794 gave power to seize and confiscate customable goods in vessels 'found at anchor, or hovering' inside specific straight lines drawn between lines on the British coasts, thus resembling the 'King's Chambers' of the Stuart era. In 1805 the British Parliament extended the seizure limit to 100 leagues (300 miles) from the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland in respect of vessels 'belonging wholly or in part to His Majesty's subjects, or whereof one-half of the persons on board shall be subjects of His Majesty.' Foreign-flag vessels could have fallen within this category. In the case of Le Louis (1817) 165 E.R. 1464, the British Admiralty judge Lord Stowell described these statutes as being permitted by 'the common courtesy of nations for their convenience.'" Geoffrey Marston, "Hovering Acts," in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 884-85 (1995).

hue and cry. Hist. 1. The public uproar that, at common law, a citizen was expected to initiate after discovering a crime. — Also termed vociferatio.

"Hue and Cry is the old Common Law mode of pursuing, 'with horn and voice,' persons suspected of felony, or having inflicted a wound from which death is likely to ensue." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 26 (2d ed. 1826).

"All were obliged to pursue the criminal when the hue and cry was raised. Neglect of these duties entailed an amercement of the individual, the township or the hundred. The sheriffs and the constables were under special obligations, as conservatores pacis, to fulfil these duties." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 294 (7th ed. 1956).

2. The pursuit of a felon accompanying such an uproar. 3. A written proclamation for the capture of a felon.

habeas corpora juratorum (hay-bee-əs kor-pər-ə juur-ə-tor-əm). [Law Latin "that you have the bodies of the jurors"] Hist. A writ commanding the sheriff to bring in jurors and, if necessary, to take their lands and goods as security to ensure their attendance in court for a trial setting. • This writ issued from the Court of Common Pleas and served the same purpose as a distringas juratores in the King's Bench. The writ was abolished in 1852.

habeas corpus ad deliberandum et recipiendum (hay-bee-əs kor-pəs ad di-lib-ə-ran-dəm et ri-sip-ee-en-dəm). [Law Latin

"that you have the body to consider and receive"] Hist. A writ used to remove a person for trial from one county to the county where the person allegedly committed the offense. Cf. EXTRADITION.

Hadley v. Baxendale rule. Contracts. The principle that consequential damages will be awarded for breach of contract only if, at the time of contracting, the parties contemplated that this type of damage would result from the breach. Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341 (1854). • Hadley v. Baxendale is best known for its impact on a nonbreaching party's ability to recover consequential damages, but the case also confirmed the principle that the nonbreaching party may recover damages that arise naturally from the breach. See DAMAGES.

had-not test. See BUT-FOR TEST.

haec est conventio (heek est kən-ven-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. This is the agreement. • These formal words commonly prefaced written agreements.

Hague Convention. One of a number of international conventions that address different legal issues and attempt to standardize procedures between nations.

Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. An international convention (established in 1980) that seeks to counteract child-snatching by noncustodial parents. • The Hague Convention is a private legal mechanism available to parents seeking the return of, or access to, their children. More than 46 countries are parties to the Convention, including the United States, which became a signatory on July 1, 1988.

Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents. An international convention, convened on November 15, 1965, that dictates the formal and usu. complicated procedures for effecting service of process in a foreign country. • More than 35 countries are parties to the convention, including the United States, which became a signatory on February 10, 1969.

Hague Convention on the Taking of Evidence Abroad in Civil or Commercial Matters. An international convention, convened on October 26, 1968, that provides the formal procedures for obtaining evidence in a foreign country, such as taking a deposition abroad. • More than 27 countries are parties, including the United States, which became a signatory on October 7, 1972.

Hague Tribunal. Int'l law. A permanent court of arbitration established by the Hague Peace Conference of 1899 to facilitate immediate recourse to arbitration to settle international differences. • The court was given jurisdiction over all arbitration cases, unless the parties agreed to institute a special tribunal. An international bureau was likewise established to serve as a registry for the court and to issue communications about the court's meetings. The court is "permanent" only in the sense that there is a permanent list of members from whom arbitrators in a given case are selected. Apart from making minor changes in the court, the Second Hague Conference of 1907 provided that, of the two arbitrators appointed by each party, only one should be a national of the appointing state.

hand-fasting. Hist. A betrothal; marrying by clasping another's hand and agreeing to live together as husband and wife.

Hand formula. A balancing test for determining whether conduct has created an unreasonable risk of harm, first formulated by Judge Learned Hand in United States v. Carroll Towing Co., 159 F.2d 169 (2d Cir. 1947). ● Under this test, an actor is negligent if the burden of taking adequate precautions against the harm is outweighed by the probable gravity of the harm multiplied by the probability that the harm will occur.

"The legal standard applicable to most unintentional tort cases is that of negligence, defined by Judge Learned Hand as follows: the defendant is guilty of negligence if the loss caused by the accident, multiplied by the probability of the accident's occurring, exceeds the burden of the precautions that the defendant might have taken to avert it. This is an economic test. . . . Although the Hand formula is of relatively recent origin, the method that it capsulizes has been the basic one used to determine negligence ever since negligence was first adopted as the standard to govern accident cases." Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 6.2, at 122–23 (2d ed. 1977).

handhabend (hand-hab-ænd), adj. Hist. (Of a thief) caught in possession of a stolen item.

A thief or another person caught carrying stolen goods. 3. Jurisdiction to try a person caught carrying stolen goods. — Also spelled hand-habende.

hand money. Money paid in hand to bind a bargain; earnest money paid in cash. See EARNEST MONEY.

hand note. See NOTE (1).

handsale. Hist. A sale memorialized by shaking hands. ● Over time, handsale also came to refer to the earnest money given immediately after the handshake. In some northern European countries, shaking hands was necessary to bind a bargain. This custom sometimes persists for oral contracts. The Latin phrase for handsale was venditio per mutuum manuum complexionem ("a sale by the mutual joining of hands"). — Also spelled handsel.

hands-off agreement. A noncompete contractual provision between an employer and a former employee prohibiting the employee from using information learned during his or her employment to divert or to steal customers from the former employer.

hand up, vb. (Of a grand jury) to deliver an indictment to a criminal court.

handwriting. Evidence. 1. A person's chirography; the cast or form of writing peculiar to a person, including the size, shape, and style of letters, and whatever gives individuality to one's writing. 2. Something written by hand; a writing specimen. ● Nonexpert opinion about the genuineness of handwriting, based on familiarity not acquired for litigation purposes, can authenticate a document. Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(2).

hang, vb. (Of a jury) to be unable to reach a verdict <the jury was hung after 12 hours of continuous deliberation>. See hung jury under JURY.

hanged, drawn, and quartered. Hist. An ancient sentence for high treason, consisting of the prisoner's being drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution, hanged by the neck (but not until dead), disemboweled, and beheaded, and the body then divided into four pieces for the king's disposal. ● The sentence was abolished in England in 1870. See TREASON.

hanging, n. The act of carrying out an execution by suspending the person above the ground by a rope around the person's neck. ● Death is caused by asphyxiation (by being hoisted from the ground) or by a sudden breaking of the cervical vertebrae (by being dropped from a height).

harrow (har-oh or hæ-roh), n. [fr. Old French haro] Hist. In Norman and early English law, an outcry (or hue and cry) after felons and malefactors. — Also termed haro. See HUE AND CRY. Cf. CLAMEUR DE HARO.

Harter Act. Maritime law. An 1893 federal statute that allocates the risks of damage to cargo at sea by relieving a carrier of liability for certain events (such as negligent navigation) provided that the carrier has exercised due diligence in sending the ship out in a seaworthy condition. 46 USCA app. §§ 190–196. See CARRIAGE OF GOODS BY SEA ACT.

"During the eighteenth century, common carriers began limiting this liability by inserting clauses in bills of lading relieving them from some of the risks of the voyage. Because of their superior bargaining power, the carriers, through such clauses, eventually were able to exculpate themselves from all liability to the shipper or his consignee, even that for damages caused by the negligence of the master and crew during the voyage. American courts refused to honor these exculpatory clauses, holding them invalid because of the inequality of bargaining power between shippers and common carriers. However, courts of other maritime nations upheld such clauses. As a result, American merchant vessels were at a disadvantage in the world market. To lessen this disadvantage, Congress passed the Harter Act. . . ." Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 58–59 (2d ed. 1988).

Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvement Act.

A federal statute, enacted in 1976, that generally strengthens the Justice Department's antitrust enforcement powers, esp. by requiring firms to give notice to the Federal Trade Commission and the Justice Department of an intent to merge if one of the firms has annual revenues or assets exceeding $100 million, and the acquisition price or value of the acquired firm exceeds $15 million.

See PRIZE MONEY. 3. A tax or duty on shipowners, imposed by an 1882 federal statute, for every immigrant brought into the United States. — Also termed head tax. 4. Hist. A bounty or reward paid to a person who killed a bandit or outlaw and produced the head as evidence. See BOUNTY; REWARD.

headnote. A case summary that appears before the printed judicial opinion in a law report, addresses a point of law, and usu. includes the relevant facts bearing on that point of law. — Also termed syllabus; synopsis; reporter's syllabus.

"The syllabus or headnote is a brief statement of the propositions of law decided in the case, being in the nature of a table of contents of the case. The modern method is to number each proposition in the syllabus, and to indicate, by corresponding figures, the exact place in the decision where the point mentioned in the syllabus can be found. Sometimes, especially in the older reports, the syllabus is inaccurate or misleading, and it is not safe to rely on it without first verifying it from the decision." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 22 (1922).

headnote lawyer. See LAWYER.

head of household. 1. The primary income-provider within a family. 2. For income-tax purposes, an unmarried or separated person (other than a surviving spouse) who provides a home for dependents for more than one-half of the taxable year. • A head of a household is

headright. In American Indian law, a tribemember's right to a pro rata portion of income from a tribal trust fund set up under the Allotment Act of 1906. • This type of trust fund is funded largely by mineral royalties arising from land held or once held by the tribemember's tribe.

headright certificate. Hist. A certificate issued under authority of a Republic of Texas law of 1839 providing that a person was entitled to a grant of 640 acres if the person (1) had immigrated to the Republic between 1 October 1837 and 1 January 1840, (2) was a head of household, and (3) actually resided within the Republic with his or her family. • The grant was to be held under the certificate for three years and then conveyed by absolute deed to the settler.

hearing examiner. See ADMINISTRATIVE-LAW JUDGE.

hearing officer. See ADMINISTRATIVE-LAW JUDGE.

double hearsay. A hearsay statement that contains further hearsay statements within it, none of which is admissible unless exceptions to the rule against hearsay can be applied to each level <the double hearsay was the investigation's report stating that Amy admitted to running the red light>. Fed. R. Evid. 805. — Also termed multiple hearsay; hearsay within hearsay.

hearsay rule. The rule that no assertion offered as testimony can be received unless it is or has been open to test by cross-examination or an opportunity for cross-examination, except as provided otherwise by the rules of evidence, by court rules, or by statute. • The chief reasons for the rule are that out-of-court statements amounting to hearsay are not made under oath and are not subject to cross-examination. Fed. R. Evid. 802. Rule 803 provides 23 explicit exceptions to the hearsay rule, regardless of whether the out-of-court declarant is available to testify, and Rule 804 provides 5 more exceptions for situations in which the declarant is unavailable to testify.

"[T]he great hearsay rule . . . is a fundamental rule of safety, but one overenforced and abused, — the spoiled child of the family, — proudest scion of our jury-trial rules of evidence, but so petted and indulged that it has become a nuisance and an obstruction to speedy and efficient trials." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 238 (1935).

hearsay within hearsay. See double hearsay under HEARSAY.

heartbalm statute. A state law that abolishes the rights of action for alienation of affections, breach of promise to marry, criminal conversation, and seduction of a person over the legal age of consent.

hearth money. Hist. 1. A tax of two shillings levied on every fireplace in England (14 Car. 2, ch. 10). • This extremely unpopular tax was enacted in 1662 during the reign of Charles II and abolished in 1688. 2. PETER-PENCE. — Also termed (in sense 1) chimney money.

heat of passion. Rage, terror, or furious hatred suddenly aroused by some immediate provocation, usu. another person's words or actions. • At common law, the heat of passion could serve, in a murder defense, as a mitigating circumstance that would reduce the charge to manslaughter. — Also termed sudden heat of passion; sudden heat; sudden passion; hot blood; furor brevis. Cf. COLD BLOOD; COOL BLOOD.

"To constitute the heat of passion included in this requirement it is not necessary for the passion to be so extreme that the slayer does not know what he is doing at the time; but it must be so extreme that for the moment his action is being directed by passion rather than by reason." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 99 (3d ed. 1982).

heavy work. See WORK.

hebote. See HEREBOTE.

hedagium (hə-day-jee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A toll or custom due at a wharf for landing goods. • The Crown exempted particular persons and societies from this toll.

hedge, vb. To make advance arrangements to safeguard oneself from loss on an investment, speculation, or bet, as when a buyer of commodities insures against unfavorable price changes by buying in advance at a fixed rate for later delivery. — hedging, n.

hedgebote. See HAYBOTE.

hedonic damages. See DAMAGES.

hedonistic utilitarianism. See UTILITARIANISM.

heeding presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

heedlessness, n. The quality of being thoughtless and inconsiderate; esp., conduct whereby the actor disregards the rights or safety of others. • Heedlessness is often construed to involve the same degree of fault as recklessness. — heedless, adj. See RECKLESSNESS.

hegemonism (hi-jem-ə-niz-əm). 1. A philosophical position advocating hegemony. 2. All forms of political extension by means of hegemony.

hegemony (hi-jem-ə-nee), n. 1. Influence, authority, or supremacy over others <the hegemony of capitalism>. 2. The striving for leadership or predominant authority of one state of a confederacy or union over the others; political domination <the former Soviet Union's hegemony over Eastern Europe>. — hegemonic (hej-ə-mon-ik), adj.

heightened scrutiny. See INTERMEDIATE SCRUTINY.

heinous (hay-nəs), adj. (Of a crime or its perpetrator) that is shockingly atrocious or odious. — heinousness, n.

heir (air). 1. A person who, under the laws of intestacy, is entitled to receive an intestate decedent's property, esp. real property. — Also termed legal heir; heir at law; lawful heir; heir general.

"Laymen — and sometimes first-year law students taking exams — wrongly assume that one who receives real property by will is an heir. Technically, the word 'heir' is reserved for one who receives real property by action of the laws of intestacy, which operate today only in the absence of a valid will." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 14 n.32 (2d ed. 1984).

2. Loosely, a person who inherits real or personal property, whether by will or by intestate succession.

after-born heir. One born after the death of an intestate from whom the heir is entitled to inherit.

and his heirs. A term of art formerly required to create a fee simple absolute in transferring real property by will <A conveys Blackacre to B and his heirs>. • This phrasing originated in the translation of a Law French phrase used in medieval grants (a lui et a ses heritiers pour toujours "to him and his heirs forever"). See FEE SIMPLE.

apparent heir. See heir apparent.

beneficiary heir (ben-ə-fish-ee-er-ee). Civil law. An heir who accepts an inheritance but files a benefit of inventory to limit his or her liability for estate debts to the value of the inheritance. — Also termed heir beneficiary. See BENEFIT OF INVENTORY. Cf. unconditional heir.

collateral heir. One who is neither a direct descendant nor an ancestor of the decedent, but whose kinship is through a collateral line, such as a brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nephew, niece, or cousin. Cf. lineal heir.

expectant heir. An heir who has a reversionary or remainder interest in property, or a chance of succeeding to it. — Also termed heir expectant. See REVERSION; REMAINDER. Cf. prospective heir.

"The reader should be aware that one never has an 'heir' until one is dead; one merely has an 'heir expectant' Thus, to say that an heir 'owns' anything is conceptually difficult. But . . . some unborn heirs may be entitled to the protection of the courts, and thus be said to have estates." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 26 n.13 (2d ed. 1984).

forced heir. A person whom the testator or donor cannot disinherit because the law reserves part of the estate for that person.

heir apparent. An heir who is certain to inherit unless he or she dies first or is excluded by a valid will. — Also termed apparent heir. Cf. heir presumptive.

"Heirs apparent are such, whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided they outlive the ancestor; as the eldest son or his issue, who must by the course of the common law be heirs to the father whenever he happens to die." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 208 (1766).

heir beneficiary. See beneficiary heir.

heir by adoption. A person who has been adopted by (and thus has become an heir to) the deceased. • By statute in most jurisdictions, an adopted child has the same right of succession to intestate property as a biological child unless the deceased clearly expresses a contrary intention. Jurisdictions differ on whether an adopted child may in addition inherit from his or her natural parents or family.

heir by custom. Hist. In England, a person whose right of inheritance depends on a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind and borough English. See GAVELKIND; BOROUGHS ENGLISH.

heir by devise. One to whom lands are given by will.

heir conventional. Civil law. One who takes a succession because of a contract or settlement entitling him or her to it.

heir expectant. See expectant heir.

heir in tail. See heir special.

heir male. Hist. The nearest male blood-relation of a decedent.

heir of the body. A lineal descendant of the decedent, excluding a surviving spouse, adopted children, and collateral relations. • The term of art heirs of the body was formerly used to create a fee tail <A conveys Blackacre to B and the heirs of his body>. — Also termed bodily heir.

heir presumptive. An heir who will inherit if the potential intestate dies immediately, but who may be excluded if another more closely related heir is born. — Also termed presumptive heir. Cf. heir apparent.

heirs and assigns. A term of art formerly required to create a fee simple <A conveys Blackacre to B and his heirs and assigns>.

heir special. Hist. An heir who receives property according to the nature of the estate held in fee tail. • Heirs special were said to receive property per formam doni (“by the form of the gift”). — Also termed heir in tail.

joint heir. 1. A coheir. 2. A person who is or will be an heir to both of two designated persons at the death of the survivor of them, the word joint being here applied to the ancestors rather than the heirs.

known heir. An heir who is present to claim an inheritance, the extent of which depends on there being no closer relative.

laughing heir. An heir distant enough to feel no grief when a relative dies and leaves a windfall to the heir.

lineal heir. A person who is either an ancestor or a descendant of the decedent, such as a parent or child. Cf. collateral heir.

natural heir. An heir by consanguinity as distinguished from a collateral heir, an heir by adoption, or a statutory heir (such as a person’s spouse).

presumptive heir. See heir presumptive.

pretermitted heir (pree-tər-mit-id). A child or spouse who has been omitted from a will, as when a testator makes a will naming his or her two children and then, sometime later, has two more children who are not mentioned in the will. • Most states have so-called “pretermitted-heir statutes” under which an omitted child or spouse receives the same share of the estate as if the testator had died intestate, unless the omission was intentional. — Also termed (more specifically) pretermitted child; pretermitted spouse. See PRETERMitted-HEIR STATUTE.

prospective heir. An heir who may inherit but may be excluded; an heir apparent or an heir presumptive. Cf. expectant heir.

right heir. 1. Hist. The preferred heir to an estate tail, as distinguished from a general heir. • An estate tail would pass to a general heir only on the failure of the preferred heir and his line. 2. HEIR (1).

testamentary heir (tes-tə-men-tə-ree or -tree). Civil law. A person who is appointed heir in the decedent’s will.

unconditional heir. Civil law. A person who chooses — expressly or tacitly — to inherit without any reservation or without making an inventory. Cf. beneficiary heir.

heir apparent. See HEIR.

heir by adoption. See HEIR.

heir by custom. See HEIR.

heir by devise. See HEIR.

heir conventional. See HEIR.

heirdom. The state of being an heir; succession by inheritance.

heir expectant. See expectant heir under HEIR.

heir general. See HEIR.

heir-hunter. A person whose business is to track down missing heirs.

heir in tail. See heir special under HEIR.

heirless estate. See ESTATE.

heirloom. 1. An item of personal property that by local custom, contrary to the usual legal rule, descends to the heir along with the inheritance, instead of passing to the executor or administrator of the last owner; traditional examples are an ancestor's coat of armor, family portraits, title deeds, and keys. • Blackstone gave a false etymology that many have copied: "The termination, loom, is of Saxon origin; in which language it signifies a limb or member; so that an heirloom is nothing else, but a limb or member of the inheritance." 2. William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Law of England 427 (1766). In fact, loom derives from Old English geloma "utensil," and loom meant "implement, tool." 2. Popularly, a valued possession of great sentimental value passed down through generations within a family.

"Heir-loom, strictly so called, are now very seldom to be met with. They may be defined to be such personal chattels as go, by force of a special custom, to the heir, along with the inheritance, and not to the executor or administrator of the last owner. The owner of an heirloom cannot by his will bequeath the heirloom, if he leave the land to descend to his heir; for in such a case the force of custom will prevail over the bequest, which, not coming into operation until after the decease of the owner, is too late to supersede the custom. . . . In popular language the term 'heirloom' is generally applied to plate, pictures or articles of property which have been assigned by deed of settlement or bequeathed by will to trustees, in trust to permit the same to be used and enjoyed by the persons for the time being in possession, under the settlement or will, of the mansion-house in which the articles may be placed." Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Personal Property 13-14 (11th ed. 1881).

heir male. See HEIR.

heir of the blood. See HEIR.

heir of the body. See HEIR.

heir presumptive. See HEIR.

heirs and assigns. See HEIR.

heirship. 1. The quality or condition of being an heir. 2. The relation between an ancestor and an heir.

heir special. See HEIR.

hell-or-high-water clause. A clause in a personal-property lease requiring the lessee to continue to make full rent payments to the lessor even if the thing leased is unsuitable, defective, or destroyed.

hell-or-high-water rule. 1. The principle that a personal-property lessee must pay the full rent due, regardless of any claim against the lessor, unless the lessee proves unequal bargaining power or unconscionability. 2. Insurance. The principle that an insured's automobile-liability policy will cover the insured while using a vehicle owned by another if the insured uses the vehicle in a manner within the scope of the permission granted.

henceforth, adv. From now on <the newly enacted rule will apply henceforth>.

Henricus Vetus (hen-ri-kəs vee-təs). [Law Latin] Henry the Old (or Elder). • This term was used in early English charters to distinguish King Henry I from later kings of the same name.

heordpenny (hərd-pen-ee), n. See PETER-PENCE.

Hepburn Act. A 1906 federal statute that amended the Interstate Commerce Act to (1) increase the (now defunct) Interstate Commerce Commission's jurisdiction to include pipelines, (2) prohibit free passes except to employees, (3) prohibit common carriers from transporting any products (except timber) in which they had an interest, and (4) require joint tariffs and a uniform system of accounts.

heptarchy (hep-tahr-kee). 1. A government by seven rulers. 2. A nation divided into seven governments, specif. the seven Anglo-Saxon kingdoms of Kent, Sussex, Essex, Wessex, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumbria existing before the Norman Conquest.

herald, n. 1. In England and Scotland, one of several officers responsible for keeping genealogical lists and tables, adjusting armorial bearings, and regulating the ceremonies at royal coronations and funerals. • There are six in England and three in Scotland. 2. Hist. A messenger who announces royal or state proclamations, and who carries diplomatic messages

(esp. proclamations of war, peace, or truce) between kings or countries.

Heralds' College. A royal corporation responsible in England for granting and recording armorial insignia and genealogies, and for dealing with matters of precedence. • The College was founded by Richard III in 1484, is governed by the Earl Marshal, and consists of three kings of arms, six heralds, and four pursuivants. The heralds' books, based on family-lineage inquiries made throughout England, are considered good evidence of pedigrees. The heralds' office is still allowed to make grants of arms and to grant name changes. • Also termed College of Arms.

herbage (ər-bij). In England, an easement or liberty of pasturage on another's land.

herdwerch (hərd-wərk), n. Hist. Herdsmen's work, or customary labor, done by shepherds and inferior tenants at the lord's will. — Also spelled heordwerch.

hereafter, adv. 1. From now on; henceforth <because of the highway construction, she will hereafter take the bus to work>. 2. At some future time <the court will hereafter issue a ruling on the gun's admissibility>. 3. HEREINAFTER <the exhibits hereafter referred to as Exhibit A and Exhibit B>.

here and there. See VALUE DATE.

herbannum (her-ə-ban-əm), n. [Law Latin fr. Old English here "army" + bann "proclamation"] Hist. 1. A proclamation summoning the army into the field. 2. A mulct or fine for not joining that army when summoned. 3. A tax or tribute for the support of that army.

herebote (her-ə-boht), n. [fr. Old English here "army" + bod "command"] Hist. In England, a royal edict summoning the people to the battlefield; an edict commanding subjects into battle. — Also spelled herebode; hebote.

hereby, adv. By this document; by these very words <I hereby declare my intention to run for public office>.

heredad (e-re-dahth), n. Spanish law. 1. A piece of land under cultivation; a cultivated farm. 2. An inheritance or heirship.

heredad yacente (e-re-dath yah-sen-te). An inheritance not yet accepted. See hereditas jacens under HEREDITAS.

heredero (e-re-ther-oh), n. Spanish law. 1. An owner of a cultivated farm. 2. An heir.

heredes. See HERES.

heredes proximi (hə-ree-deez prok-sə-mī), n. [Latin] Nearest or next heirs.

heredes remotiores (hə-ree-deez ri-moh-sheer-eez), n. [Latin] Heirs more remote; relatives other than children or descendants.

heredipeta (he-rə-dip-ə-tə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A legacy-hunter; the seeker of an inheritance.

heredis instituto (hə-ree-dis in-sti-t[y]oo-toh), n. [Latin] Roman law. The designation in a will of a person as the testator's heir. • A testator's failure to appoint an heir could destroy the validity of the will.

hereditament (her-ə-dit-ə-mənt or hə-red-i-tə-mənt). 1. Any property that can be inherited; anything that passes by intestacy. 2. Real property; land.

corporeal hereditament (kor-por-ee-əl). A tangible item of property, such as land, a building, or a fixture.

incorporeal hereditament (in-kor-por-ee-əl). An intangible right in land, such as an easement. • The various types at common law were advowsons, annuities, commons, dignities, franchises, offices, pensions, rents, tithes, and ways.

hereditas (hə-red-i-tas), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. An inheritance by universal succession to a decedent. • This succession applied whether the decedent died testate or intestate, and whether in trust (ex fideicommisso) for another or not. The comparable right under Praetorian law was bonorum possessio, possession of an inheritance that could be the basis of a right to succeed. 2. Hist. An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. — Also spelled haereditas.

hereditas damnosa (hə-red-i-tas dam-noh-sə). A burdensome inheritance; an inheritance whose debts exceed its assets.

hereditas jacens (hə-red-i-tas jay-senz). [Latin iaceo "to lie"] 1. Property belonging to an estate before an heir accepts it. • This term had a similar meaning at common law. See ABEYANCE (2).

2. Hist. A decedent's estate that has no heir or legatee to take it; an escheated estate. — Also termed caduca. See ESCHEAT. 3. Hist. An inheritance without legal owner and thus open to the first occupant. — Also spelled hereditas iacens.

hereditas legitima (hə-red-i-tas læ-jit-i-mə). A succession or inheritance devolving by operation of law rather than by will. See INTES-TACY.

hereditas luctuosa (hə-red-i-tas læk-choo-oh-sə). A sad or mournful inheritance; one that disturbs the natural order of mortality (turbato ordine mortalitatis), as that of a parent inheriting a child's estate. • This term is more literary than legal. — Also termed tristis successio.

hereditas testamentaria (hə-red-i-tas tes-tə-men-tair-ee-ə). Testamentary inheritance; succession to an estate under a decedent's will.

heredity. 1. Archaic. Hereditary succession; an inheritance. 2. The hereditary transmission of characteristics from a parent to a child; the biological law by which a living being tends to repeat itself in its descendants.

herein, adv. In this thing (such as a document, section, or matter) <the due-process arguments stated herein should convince the court to reverse the judgment>.

hereinafter, adv. Later in this document <the buyer agrees to purchase the property described hereinafter>. — Also loosely termed hereafter.

herenach (her-ə-nak), n. [fr. Old Irish airchin-nich "chief man"] An archdeacon. — Also spelled erenach.

hereof, adv. Of this thing (such as a provision or document) <the conditions hereof are stated in section 3>.

heres (heer-eez), n. [Latin] Roman law. A successor to the rights and liabilities of a deceased person; an heir. • Because the heres succeeded

heres astrarius (as-trair-ee-əs). [Law Latin "heir of the hearth"] An heir who has received, by conveyance, an ancestor's estate during the ancestor's lifetime.

heres de facto (di fak-toh). [Law Latin "heir from fact"] Hist. 1. An heir whose status arises from the disseisin or other wrongful act of the heir's ancestor. See DISSEISIN. 2. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an heir by law (de jure).

heres ex asse (as-ee). [Latin "sole heir"] Roman law. An heir to the whole estate.

heres ex testamento. See heres factus.

heres extraneus (ek-stray-nee-əs). [Latin "extraneous heir"] Roman law. An external heir; one not subject to the testator's power (potestas) and hence not bound to accept the inheritance.

heres factus (fak-təs). [Latin "made heir"] An heir appointed by will; a testamentary heir. — Also termed heres ex testamento; heres institutus. Cf. heres natus.

heres fideicommissarius (fi-dee-i-kom-ə-sair-ee-əs). [Latin] Roman law. The person for whose benefit an estate was given by will to a fiduciary heir. • This office corresponds closely with the cestui qui trust of the common law. Cf. heres fiduciarius.

heres fiduciarius (fi-d[y]oo-shee-air-ee-əs). [Latin "fiduciary heir"] Roman law. A person made heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another; an heir subject to a trust. Cf. heres fideicommissarius.

heres institutus. See heres factus.

heres legitimus (lə-jit-i-məs). [Latin "lawful heir"] Roman law. An heir entitled to succeed (on intestacy) by statute.

heres natus (nay-təs). [Latin "heir by birth"] An heir by reason of birth; an heir at law or by intestacy. Cf. heres factus.

heres necessarius (nes-ə-sair-ee-əs). [Latin "necessary heir"] Roman law. A person compelled to serve as heir, usu. either a slave freed on the testator's death or a free person in the testator's power.

heres rectus (rek-təs). [Law Latin] Hist. A right or proper heir.

heres suus (s[y]oo-əs). [Latin "one's own heir"] 1. A decedent's proper or natural heir; a lineal descendant of the deceased. 2. Roman law. A free person who was subject to the testator's power (potestas) but who could exercise full legal rights upon the testator's death.

heres suus et necessarius (s[y]oo-əs et nes-ə-sair-ee-əs). [Latin "one's own and necessary heir"] A free person subject to the decedent's potestas. • These heirs were called necessary because they became heirs by law, not by the decedent's choice. But since this was also true of slaves, when named heirs in a will, the former class was designated suus et necessarius by way of distinction, the word suus denoting that the necessity arose from the relationship to the decedent.

ultimas heres (əl-ti-məs). The last or remote heir; the lord.

heresy (her-ə-see), n. 1. Opinion or doctrine contrary to (usu. Catholic) church dogma. 2. Hist. In England, an offense against religion, consisting not in totally denying Christianity, but in publicly denying some of its essential doctrines; an opinion on divine subjects devised solely by human reason, openly taught, and obstinately maintained. • This offense is now subject only to ecclesiastical correction and is no longer punishable by the secular law.

hereto, adv. To this document <the exhibits are attached hereto>.

heretofore, adv. Up to now; before this time .

hereunder, adv. 1. Later in this document <review the provisions hereunder before signing the consent form>. 2. In accordance with this document <notice hereunder must be provided within 30 days after the loss>.

herewith, adv. With or in this document <enclosed herewith are three copies>.

heriot (her-ee-ət), n. [fr. Old English here "army" + geatwa "trappings"] Hist. A customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the tenant's death. • Heriot derives from an earlier feudal service consisting of military equipment returned to the lord on the tenant's death; over time it came to refer only to the chattel payment due at the tenant's death.

"We are told that the ancient heriot (heregeatu, military apparel) had at one time consisted of the horses and arms lent by the lord to his man which on the man's death were returned to the lord. . . . Turning to manorial surveys, we find it among the commonest of customs that when a tenant in villeinage dies, the lord shall have the best beast; sometimes a similar due is taken from the goods of the dead freeholder, and it is to these customary dues that the name 'heriot' permanently attaches itself." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 312, 317 (2d ed. 1898).

heriot custom. A heriot due by custom. • This term is used primarily to distinguish a heriot service from an ordinary heriot.

heriot service. A tribute arising from special reservation in a grant or lease of lands, and thus amounting to little more than rent.

herislit (her-ə-sleet or hair-), n. [Old English] Hist. 1. The act of surrendering; laying down of arms. 2. The crime of deserting from an army.

heritable (her-i-tə-bəl), adj. INHERITABLE.

heritable bond. See BOND (2).

heritable obligation. See inheritable obligation under OBLIGATION.

heuristic (hyuu-ris-tik), adj. Of or relating to a method of learning or problem-solving by using trial-and-error and other experimental techniques <heuristic discovery methods>.

HEW. abbr. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, a former agency of the U.S. government created in 1953. • When the Department of Education was created in 1979, the name HEW was changed to the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS).

Heydon's case, rule in. See MISCHIEF RULE.

HGN test. abbr. HORIZONTAL-GAZE NYSTAGMUS TEST.

HHS. abbr. The Department of Health and Human Services, a federal agency that administers health, welfare, and income-security policies and programs, the largest of which is social security.

hidage (hid-ij), n. Hist. A tax, payable to the Crown, based on every hide of land. — Also spelled hydage. See HIDE.

"Of the same nature with scutages upon knights' fees were the assessments of hidage upon all other lands, and of talliage upon cities and burghs. But they all gradually fell into disuse, upon the introduction of subsidies, about the time of king Richard II and king Henry IV." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 300 (1765).

hidalgo (hi-dal-goh or ee-thahl-goh), n. [fr. Spanish hijo "son" + algo "property"] In Spain, a man belonging to the lower nobility; a gentleman of property.

hidalgua (ee-thahl-gee-yə), n. [Spanish] In Spain, nobility by descent or lineage.

HIDC. abbr. HOLDER IN DUE COURSE.

hidden asset. See ASSET.

hidden defect. See DEFECT.

hidden tax. See TAX.

hide, n. Hist. 1. In England, a measure of land consisting in as much as could be worked with one plow, variously estimated at from 30 to 120 acres but probably determined by local usage. • A hide was anciently employed as a unit of taxation. Cf. CARUCATE. 2. As much land as would support one family or the dwellers in a mansion-house. 3. A house; a dwelling-house.

hidegild (hid-gild), n. [Old English] Hist. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to avoid a whipping. — Also spelled hidgild; hydegeld; hudegeld.

hidel (hid-əl or hid-əl), n. [Old English] Hist. A hiding-place; a place of protection or sanctuary.

high bailiff. See BAILIFF.

High Commission Court. See COURT OF HIGH COMMISSION.

High Court. See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

High Court of Admiralty. In England, a court exercising jurisdiction in matters relating to shipping, collision, and salvage cases. • The court dates from the 14th century, and much of its early history concerns prize and piracy cases. Its jurisdiction varied through the centuries, sometimes extending into criminal matters and other areas of law not related directly to maritime issues. The Judicature Acts of 1873–1875 merged the Court into the High Court as part of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division. The Administration of Justice Act of 1970 established a new Admiralty Court as part of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court. It is regulated by the Supreme Court Act of 1981. — Also termed Court of the Lord High Admiral; Court of Admiralty. Cf. ADMIRALTY (1).

High Court of Chivalry. Hist. A court of honor having jurisdiction over matters relating to deeds of arms and war, armorial insignia, and precedence. — Also termed Court of Chivalry; Court of Earl Marshal. See COURT OF HONOR.

"This Curia Marescalli, or High Court of Chivalry, was revived by James I as a court of honour, which not only

High Court of Delegates. See COURT OF DELEGATES.

High Court of Errors and Appeals. See COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

High Court of Justice. The superior civil court of England and Wales. — Often shortened to High Court.

hijack, vb. 1. To commandeer (a vehicle or airplane), esp. at gunpoint. 2. To steal or rob from (a vehicle or airplane in transit).

Hilary Rules. Hist. A collection of English pleading rules designed to ease the strict pleading requirements of the special-pleading system, esp. by limiting the scope of the general issue in the formed actions and by forcing the defendant to set up affirmatively all matters other than a denial of the breach of duty or of the wrongful act. • Promulgated in England in the 1834 Hilary Term, these rules followed an 1828 initiative to examine procedural laws and other subjects and to report to Parliament changes that might be enacted. The rules had the unintended effect of extending the reach of strict-pleading requirements into new areas of law. Widespread dissatisfaction with the Hilary Rules led to the liberalization of the pleading system under the 1873–1875 Judicature Acts. — Formerly also termed New Rules.

“The failure of the Hilary Rules . . . lay in their insistence on special pleading as it was understood late in the eighteenth century. That parties should plead precisely, and clarify as far as possible the issue between them, is one thing; that their endeavours to do so should be judged by the extremely artificial standards of the old system, was quite another.” Theodore F.T. Plucknett, A Concise History of the Common Law 416 (5th ed. 1956).

Hilary sittings. In England, a term of court beginning on January 11 of each year and ending on the Wednesday before Easter. • The Hilary sittings were known as Hilary term until 1875. Cf. EASTER SITTINGS; MICHAELMAS SITTING.

hilo settlement. See HIGH-LOW AGREEMENT.

Hilton doctrine. Civil procedure. The rule that in a dispute between parties to an oil-and-gas lease, royalty owners who would lose their rights if the defendant's lease were terminated are regarded as indispensable parties to a proceeding challenging the lease. Hilton v. Atlantic Refining Co., 327 F.2d 217 (5th Cir. 1964).

Himalaya clause. Maritime law. A provision in a bill of lading extending the carrier's liability limitations under the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act to the carrier's agents and independent contractors. • This type of clause is usu. strictly construed. See CARRIAGE OF GOODS BY SEA ACT.

“An exculpatory or other beneficial clause which seeks to extend to noncarriers, partial immunity or other protections afforded to the carrier by the bill of lading is popularly known to the admiralty bar as a Himalaya clause. This misnomer derives from an earlier British case involving the vessel Himalaya, Adler v. Dickson. . . .” Nicholas J. Healy, Carriage of Goods by Sea: Application of the “Himalaya Clause” to Subdeleagees of the Carrier, 2 Mar. Law. 91, 111 (1977).

hine (hin), n. Hist. In England, a husbandry servant. — Also spelled hind.

hinefare (hin-fair), n. Hist. In England, the loss or departure of a servant from the master.

hinegeld (hin-geld), n. Hist. A ransom for an offense committed by a servant.

hipoteca (ee-poh-tek-ah), n. Spanish law. A mortgage of real property. See HYPOTHECATION.

hire, vb. 1. To engage the labor or services of another for wages or other payment. 2. To procure the temporary use of property, usu. at a set price. 3. To grant the temporary use of services <hire themselves out>.

hired gun. Slang. 1. An expert witness who testifies favorably for the party paying his or her fee, often because of that financial relationship rather than because of the facts. 2. A lawyer who stops at nothing to accomplish the client's goals, regardless of moral consequences.

hireling, n. a person who is hired or serves for wages, esp. one who works only for the sake of payments.

hire-purchase agreement. See LEASE-PURCHASE AGREEMENT.

hiring. See LOCATIO.

hiring at will. See employment at will under EMPLOYMENT.

his. Properly a possessive pronoun of the masculine gender, but traditionally used and construed to include both sexes. • Because of the trend toward nonsexist language, careful drafters now generally avoid using his (and the personal pronouns he and him) unless the reference is only to a male person.

His Honor; Her Honor. 1. A title customarily given to a judge. 2. A title customarily given to the mayor of a city. 3. A title given by the Massachusetts Constitution to the lieutenant governor of the commonwealth. Cf. YOUR HONOR.

his testibus (his tes-tə-bəs). [Law Latin] Hist. These being witnesses. • The concluding clause of deeds and charters typically opened with these words, which stated the names of the witnesses to the instrument. This clause appeared in deeds and charters until the 16th century. — Also spelled hij's testibus; hiis testibus.

historical cost. See acquisition cost under COST (1).

hobby loss. See LOSS.

hodgepodge. 1. HOTCHPOT (1). 2. An unorganized mixture.

hodgepodge act. A statute that deals with incongruous subjects.

"Hodge-Podge Act . . . Such acts, besides being evident proofs of the ignorance of the makers of them, or of their want of good faith, are calculated to create a confusion which is highly prejudicial to the interests of justice. . . . In many states bills, except general appropriation bills, can contain but one subject, which must be expressed in the title." 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary 1444 (8th ed. 1914).

holder. 1. A person who has legal possession of a negotiable instrument and is entitled to receive payment on it. 2. A person with legal possession of a document of title or an investment security. 3. A person who possesses or uses property.

holder for value. A person who has given value in exchange for a negotiable instrument. • Under the UCC, examples of "giving value" include acquiring a security interest in the instrument or accepting the instrument in payment of an antecedent claim. UCC holder in due course. A person who in good faith has given value for a negotiable instrument that is complete and regular on its face, is not overdue, and, to the possessor's knowledge, has not been dishonored. • Under UCC § 3-305, a holder in due course takes the instrument free of all claims and personal defenses, but subject to real defenses. — Abbr. HDC; HIDC. — Also termed due-course holder.

holder in good faith. One who takes property or an instrument without knowledge of any defect in its title.

holder of record. See STOCKHOLDER OF RECORD.

hold harmless, vb. To absolve (another party) from any responsibility for damage or other liability arising from the transaction; INDEMNIFY. — Also termed save harmless.

hold-harmless agreement. A contract in which one party agrees to indemnify the other. — Also termed save-harmless agreement. See INDEMNITY.

hold-harmless clause. See INDEMNITY CLAUSE.

holding, n. 1. A court's determination of a matter of law pivotal to its decision; a principle drawn from such a decision. Cf. OBITER DICTUM. 2. A ruling on evidence or other questions presented at trial. 3. (usu. pl.) Legally owned property, esp. land or securities. 4. Hist. In feudal law, tenure.

holding cell. See JAIL.

holding charge. A criminal charge of some minor offense filed to keep the accused in custody while prosecutors take time to build a bigger case and prepare more serious charges.

holding company. See COMPANYY.

holding-company tax. See TAX.

holding over. A tenant's action in continuing to occupy the leased premises after the lease term has expired. • Holding over creates a tenancy at sufferance, with the tenant being referred to as a holdover. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

holding zone. See ZONE.

hold order. A notation in a prisoner's file stating that another jurisdiction has charges pending against the prisoner and instructing prison officials to alert authorities in that other jurisdiction instead of releasing the prisoner.

holdover tenancy. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

holdover tenant. See TENANT.

holograph (hol-ə-graf), n. A document (such as a will or deed) that is entirely handwritten by its author. — Also termed olograph. Cf. ONOMASTIC; SYMBOLIC. — holographic, adj.

holographic will. See WILL.

"Homage is an oath of fidelity, acknowledging himself to be the lord's man: wherein the tenant must be ungirt, uncovered, kneel upon both knees, and hold both his hands together between the lord's hands sitting before him. This is to be done only to the lord himself." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 143 (1759).

homage ancestral (hom-ij an-ses-trəl). [Law French] A type of homage in which a tenant and the tenant's ancestors have held immemorially of another by the service of homage. • This long-standing relationship bound the lord to warrant the title and to hold the tenant clear of all services to superior lords. — Also spelled homage auncstral (aw-mahzh on-se-stral).

homage liege (hom-ij leej). Homage due the sovereign alone as supreme lord, done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. — Also termed homagium ligium (hə-may-jee-əm II-jee-əm).

homage jury. See JURY.

homagio respectuando (hə-may-jee-oh ri-spek-choo-an-doh), n. [Law Latin “homage to the respected”] Hist. A writ to the escheator commanding the delivery of seisin of lands to the heir of the king’s tenant, even though the heir had not performed homage.

homagium (hə-may-jee-əm), n. [Law Latin] See HOMAGE.

homagium ligium. See homage liege under HOMAGAE.

homagium planum (play-nəm), n. [Law Latin “plain homage”] Hist. A type of homage binding the homager to nothing more than fidelity, without obligation either of military service or of attendance in the superior’s courts.

homagium reddere (red-ə-ree), n. [Law Latin “to renounce homage”] Hist. The process, prescribed in feudal law by a set form and method, by which a vassal disowns and defies the lord.

homeowner’s policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

Home Owners Warranty. A warranty and insurance program that, among other coverage, insures a new home for ten years against major structural defects. • The program was developed by the Home Owners Warranty Corporation, a subsidiary of the National Association of Home Builders. Builders often provide this type of coverage, and many states provide similar warranty protection by statute. — Abbr. HOW. — Also spelled Home Owners’ Warranty.

home port. See PORT.

home-port doctrine. Maritime law. The rule mandating that a vessel engaged in interstate and foreign commerce is taxable only at its home port, usu. where the vessel is registered.

home rule. A state legislative provision or action allocating a measure of autonomy to a local government, conditional on its acceptance of certain terms. Cf. LOCAL OPTION.

“Home rule in the United States was sometimes envisioned in its early days as giving the cities to whom such rule was granted full-fledged sovereignty over local affairs, thus bringing about dual state and local sovereignty along the national plan of federal and state governments. But such local sovereignty has never developed, nor have any clear-cut distinctions between state and local power.” Osborne M. Reynolds, Jr., Handbook of Local Government Law § 35, at 96 (1982).

home-rule charter. See CHARTER (3).

homestead. The house, outbuildings, and adjoining land owned and occupied by a person or family as a residence. • As long as the homestead does not exceed in area or value the limits fixed by law, in most states it is exempt from forced sale for collection of a debt. — Also termed homestead estate.

business homestead. The premises on which a family’s business is located. • In some states, business homesteads are exempt from execution or judicial sale for most kinds of debt.

constitutional homestead. A homestead, along with its exemption from forced sale, conferred on the head of a household by a state constitution.

homesteader. One who acquires or occupies a homestead.

homestead law. A statute exempting a homestead from execution or judicial sale for debt, unless all owners, usu. a husband and wife, have jointly mortgaged the property or otherwise subjected it to creditors' claims.

"Almost all states also have legislative provisions, commonly referred to as homestead laws, designed to protect the family home from the reach of certain classes of creditors. . . . The protection afforded by an exemption statute is not absolute. A federal tax claim may be satisfied from 'exempt property.' A number of states make similar exceptions for state taxes, claims for alimony and child support, materialmen and mechanics' liens. By statute in most states, case law in others, purchase money mortgages and security interests are generally not affected by an exemption statute." David G. Epstein & Steve H. Nickles, Consumer Law in a Nutshell 384-85 (2d ed. 1981).

homicide (hom-ə-sīd), n. The killing of one person by another. — homicidal, adj.

"The legal term for killing a man, whether lawfully or unlawfully, is 'homicide.' There is no crime of 'homicide.' Unlawful homicide at common law comprises the two crimes of murder and manslaughter. Other forms of unlawful homicide have been created by statute: certain new forms of manslaughter (homicide with diminished responsibility, and suicide pacts), infanticide, and causing death by dangerous driving." Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 204 (1978).

criminal homicide. 1. Homicide prohibited and punishable by law, such as murder or manslaughter. 2. The act of purposely, knowingly, recklessly, or negligently causing the death of another human being. Model Penal Code § 210.1.

criminally negligent homicide. See negligent homicide.

excusable homicide. 1. Homicide resulting from a person's harmful act, committed without intention to harm another. 2. See justifiable homicide (1).

felonious homicide. Homicide committed unlawfully, without legal justification or excuse. • This is the category into which murder and manslaughter fall.

homicide by misadventure. See ACCIDENTAL KILLING.

homicide per infortunium (pər in-fort[ɪ]oo-nee-əm). [Latin "homicide by misfortune"] The unintentional killing of another while engaged in a lawful act; ACCIDENTAL KILLING. See PER INFORTUNUM.

innocent homicide. Homicide that does not involve criminal guilt.

justifiable homicide. 1. The killing of another in self-defense when faced with the danger of death or serious bodily injury. —

Also termed excusable homicide. See SELF-DEFENSE. 2. A killing mandated or permitted by the law, such as execution for a capital crime or killing to prevent a crime or a criminal's escape.

"English lawyers once distinguished between 'excusable' homicide (e.g. accidental non-negligent killing) and 'justifiable' homicide (e.g. killing in self-defence or in the arrest of a felon) and different legal consequences once attached to these two forms of homicide. To the modern lawyer this distinction has no longer any legal importance: he would simply consider both kinds of homicide to be cases where some element, negative or positive, required in the full definition of criminal homicide (murder or manslaughter) was lacking. But the distinction between these two different ways in which actions may fail to constitute a criminal offence is still of great moral importance. Killing in self-defence is an exception to a general rule making killing punishable; it is admitted because the policy or aims which in general justify the punishment of killing (e.g. protection of human life) do not include cases such as this. In the case of 'justification' what is done is regarded as something which the law does not condemn, or even welcomes." H.L.A. Hart, "Prolegomenon to the Principles of Punishment," in Punishment and Responsibility 1, 13 (1968).

negligent homicide. Homicide resulting from the careless performance of a legal or illegal act in which the danger of death is apparent; the killing of a human being by criminal negligence. — Also termed criminally negligent homicide. See criminal negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

"There is no common-law offense known as 'negligent homicide.' As a matter of the common law of crimes any killing below the grade of manslaughter is innocent homicide. Some of the new penal codes have a classification scheme which (omitting degrees or other variations) divides criminal homicide into murder, manslaughter and criminally negligent homicide — or simply negligent homicide. For the most part, however, this has been achieved by removing from manslaughter the offense of homicide by criminal negligence and using this to constitute the newly named offense. Thus, though there are a few exceptions, most states will have no homicide offense which would be below common-law manslaughter." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 116-17 (3d ed. 1982).

reckless homicide. The unlawful killing of another person with conscious indifference toward that person's life. Cf. MANSLAUGHTER.

vehicular homicide. The killing of another person by one's unlawful or negligent operation of a motor vehicle.

homicidium (hom-ə-sī-dee-əm), n. [Latin] Homicide.

homicidium ex casu (eks kay-s[y]oo). Homicide by accident. See ACCIDENTAL KILLING.

The confinement of a person who is accused or convicted of a crime to his or her home usu. by attaching an electronically monitored bracelet to the criminal offender. ● Most house-arrest programs require the offender to work and permit leaving the home only for reasons such as work, medical needs, or community-service obligations.

house bill. See BILL (3).

house-bote. See BOTE (1).

housebreaking. The crime of breaking into a dwelling or other secured building, with the intent to commit a felony inside; BURGLARY. ● Burglary is now used more than housebreaking. In England, for example, housebreaking was replaced in 1968 with statutory burglary, though the term is still used in Scots law.

“The oldest term for this purpose [i.e., of distinguishing between common-law burglary and its statutory enlargements], still encountered at times, is ‘housebreaking’; a more recent suggestion is ‘breaking and entering,’ and peace officers sometimes speak of a ‘breakin.’” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 270 (3d ed. 1982).

houseburning. The common-law misdemeanor of intentionally burning one’s own house that is within city limits or that is close enough to other houses that they might be in danger of catching fire (although no actual damage to them results). — Also termed combustio domorum. Cf. ARSON.

house counsel. See in-house counsel under COUNSEL.

house-duty. Hist. English law. A tax first imposed in 1851 on inhabited houses. 14 & 15 Vict., ch. 36 (repealed 1924). ● This tax replaced the window tax, which levied a duty on houses with more than six windows. See window tax under TAX.

housing codes. See BUILDING CODES.

housing court. See COURT.

hovering act. Int'l law. A statute applying to a coastal country's criminal jurisdiction over ships, and persons aboard those ships, when the ships are outside the country's territory.

"The notion of hovering acts evolved long before that of a belt of uniform width in the form of territorial waters. Great Britain's first anti-smuggling legislation to operate at a stated distance seaward was in 1719, applying to the master of any ship 'found at anchor or hovering within two leagues from the shore.' Later enactments extended this limit to three, then four, then eight leagues. A statute of 1794 gave power to seize and confiscate customable goods in vessels 'found at anchor, or hovering' inside specific straight lines drawn between lines on the British coasts, thus resembling the 'King's Chambers' of the Stuart era. In 1805 the British Parliament extended the seizure limit to 100 leagues (300 miles) from the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland in respect of vessels 'belonging wholly or in part to His Majesty's subjects, or whereof one-half of the persons on board shall be subjects of His Majesty.' Foreign-flag vessels could have fallen within this category. In the case of Le Louis (1817) 165 E.R. 1464, the British Admiralty judge Lord Stowell described these statutes as being permitted by 'the common courtesy of nations for their convenience.'" Geoffrey Marston, "Hovering Acts," in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 884-85 (1995).

hue and cry. Hist. 1. The public uproar that, at common law, a citizen was expected to initiate after discovering a crime. — Also termed vociferatio.

"Hue and Cry is the old Common Law mode of pursuing, 'with horn and voice,' persons suspected of felony, or having inflicted a wound from which death is likely to ensue." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 26 (2d ed. 1826).

"All were obliged to pursue the criminal when the hue and cry was raised. Neglect of these duties entailed an amercement of the individual, the township or the hundred. The sheriffs and the constables were under special obligations, as conservatores pacis, to fulfil these duties." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 294 (7th ed. 1956).

idiota inquirendo (id-ee-oh-tə in-kwī-ren-doh or in-kwə-ren-doh). See DE IDIOTA INQUIRENDO.

idoneitas (i-doh-nee-ə-tas). [fr. Latin idoneus "suitable"] Hist. A person's ability or fitness. — Also termed idoneity.

idoneum se facere; idoneare se (i-doh-nee-əm see fay-sə-ree; i-doh-nee-air-ee see). [Law Latin "to make oneself sufficient; to clear oneself"] Hist. To purge oneself, by oath, of a crime that one is accused of committing.

idoneus (i-doh-nee-əs), adj. [Latin] Roman law. (Of a person or thing) appropriate or suitable. • A responsible or solvent man, for example, was known as an idoneus homo, while a pledge of sufficient security was termed idonea cautio. — Also spelled idoneous.

i.e. abbr. [Latin id est] That is <the federal government's highest judicial body, i.e., the Supreme Court>. Cf. E.G.

i.f.p. abbr. IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

IFP affidavit. See poverty affidavit under AFFIDAVIT.

ignis judicium (ig-nis joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin] Hist. Trial by fire. See fire ordeal under ORDEAL.

ignominy (ig-nə-min-ee). Public disgrace or dishonor. — ignominious, adj.

ignoramus (ig-nə-ray-məs). [Law Latin] Hist. We do not know. • This notation, when written on a bill of indictment, indicated the grand jury's rejection of the bill. See NOT FOUND; NO BILL. Cf. TRUE BILL.

"When the grand jury have heard the evidence, if they think it a groundless accusation, they used formerly to endorse on the back of the bill, 'ignoramus;' or, we know nothing of it; intimating, that, though the facts might possibly be true, that truth did not appear to them: but now they assert in English, more absolutely, 'not a true bill;' and then the party is discharged without farther answer." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 301 (1769).

ignorantia (ig-nə-ran-shee-ə). [Latin] Ignorance; esp., ignorance of the law.

"Ignorantia . . . Divided in the civil law, into ignorantia facti (ignorance of fact) and ignorantia juris (ignorance of law). Lord Coke accepts this division . . ." 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 40 (2d ed. 1867).

ignorantia facti (ig-nə-ran-shee-ə fak-ti). [Latin] Ignorance of fact.

ignorantia facti excusat (ig-nə-ran-shee-ə fak-ti ek-skyoo-sat or -zat). [Latin] Ignorance of fact is an excuse; whatever is done under a mistaken impression of a material fact is excused or provides grounds for relief. • This maxim refers to the principle that acts done and contracts made under mistake or ignorance of a material fact are voidable.

"'Ignorantia facti excusat,' however, is obviously too sweeping even for a general statement of law, because it is clear (to mention only one point for the moment) that if a certain deed would constitute exactly the same crime under either of two factual situations, it will be no excuse that one was mistaken for the other." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1044 (3d ed. 1982).

ignorantia juris (ig-nə-ran-shee-ə joor-is). [Latin] Ignorance of law. • Under Roman law, this type of ignorance (unlike ignorantia facti) did not excuse mistaken conduct, except in the case of minors and those under disability.

ignorantia juris non excusat (ig-nə-ran-shee-ə joor-is non ek-skyoo-sat or -zat). [Latin] Lack of knowledge about a legal requirement or prohibition is never an excuse to a criminal charge. • In English, the idea is commonly rendered ignorance of the law is no excuse. — Often shortened to ignorantia juris. — Also termed ignorantia juris neminem excusat (ignorance of the law excuses no one); ignorantia legis non excusat; ignorantia juris haud excusat.

"Almost the only knowledge of law possessed by many people is that ignorance of it is no excuse (ignorantia juris non excusat). This maxim was originally formulated at a time when the list of crimes, broadly speaking, represented current morality (mala in se), but we now have many other crimes that are the result of administrative or social regulation (mala prohibita), which are equally governed by the maxim. The rule is, then, that whereas ignorance of fact can excuse, to the extent that it negatives mens rea or fault, ignorance of the law generally does not." Glanville Williams, Textbook of Criminal Law 405 (1978).

ignoratio elenchi (ig-nə-ray-shee-oh e-leng-ki or ig-nə-rah-tee-oh i-leng-kee). [Law Latin "ignorance of the conclusion to be proved"] An advocate's misunderstanding of an opponent's position, manifested by an argument that fails to address the opponent's point; the overlooking of an opponent's counterargument. • This fallacy of logic often involves an advocate's trying to prove something that is immaterial to the point to be decided.

ignore, vb. 1. To refuse to notice, recognize, or consider. 2. (Of a grand jury) to reject (an indictment) as groundless; to no-bill (a charge).

ill, adj. (Of a pleading) defective, bad, or null.

illation (i-lay-shən). 1. The act or process of inferring. 2. An inference; that which is inferred.

illegal, adj. Forbidden by law; unlawful <illegal dumping> <an illegal drug>.

illegal alien. See ALIEN.

illegal consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

illegal contract. See CONTRACT.

illegal entry. 1. Criminal law. The unlawful act of going into a building with the intent to commit a crime. • In some jurisdictions, illegal entry is a lesser included offense of burglary. 2. Immigration. The unauthorized entrance of an alien into the United States by arriving at the wrong time or place, by evading inspection, or by fraud.

illegality. 1. An act that is not authorized by law. 2. The state of not being legally authorized.

"A contract made ultra vires is void; but not [strictly speaking] on the ground of illegality. Lord Cairns . . . takes exception to the use of the term 'illegality,' pointing out that it is not the object of the contracting parties, but the incapacity of one of them, that avoids the contract." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 190 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"It must not be thought that illegality in the law of contract is co-terminous with illegality in the criminal law, for a contract may be illegal without involving any breach of the criminal law at all." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 257 (3d ed. 1981).

3. The state or condition of being unlawful. • The affirmative defense of illegality must be expressly set forth in the response to the opponent's pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c).

illegally obtained evidence. See EVIDENCE.

illegal per se. Unlawful in and of itself.

illegal strike. See STRIKE.

illegal tax. See erroneous tax under TAX.

illegitimacy. The state or condition of a child born outside a lawful marriage. — Also termed bastardy.

illegitimate, adj. 1. (Of a child) born out of wedlock <illegitimate son>. 2. Against the law; unlawful <illegitimate contract for the sale of contraband>. 3. Improper <illegitimate conduct>. 4. Incorrectly inferred <illegitimate conclusion>.

illegitimate child. See CHILD.

ill fame. Evil repute; notorious bad character. Cf. FAMA PUBLICA.

illicenciatus (il-li-sen-shee-ay-təs). [Law Latin] Without license.

illicit (i[l]-lis-ət), adj. Illegal or improper <illicit relations>.

illicit cohabitation. See COHABITATION.

illicitum collegium (i-lis-ə-təm kə-lee-jee-əm). [Law Latin] Roman law. An illegal association; a collegium engaging in illegal activity. • Members of an illicitum collegium were subject to prosecution.

Illinois land trust. See land trust under TRUST.

illiquid asset. See ASSET.

illusory (i-loo-sə-ree), adj. Deceptive; based on a false impression.

illusory appointment. See APPOINTMENT (3).

Illusory Appointment Act. An 1839 English statute providing that no appointment of property is to be declared invalid on grounds that it is illusory. • This statute was repealed and reissued in 1925 as part of the Law of Property Act.

IMF. abbr. INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND.

imitation. Trademarks. An item that so resembles a trademarked item as to be likely to induce the belief that it is genuine.

immaterial, adj. (Of evidence) tending to prove some fact that is not properly at issue; lacking any logical connection with the consequential facts. — immateriality, n. Cf. IRRELEVANT.

“The rules of substantive law and of pleading are what determine immateriality; and if the probandum is immaterial, of course no evidence to prove it is wanted.” John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 37 (1935).

immaterial averment. See AVERMENT.

immaterial breach. See partial breach under BREACH OF CONTRACT.

immaterial evidence. See EVIDENCE.

immaterial fact. See FACT.

immaterial issue. See ISSUE (1).

immaterial variance. See VARIANCE (1).

immediate, adj. 1. Occurring without delay; instant <an immediate acceptance>. 2. Not separated by other persons or things <her immediate neighbor>. 3. Having a direct impact; without an intervening agency <the immediate cause of the accident>. — immediacy, immediateness, n.

immediate annuity. See ANNUITY.

immediate breach. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

immediate cause. See CAUSE (1).

immediate control. 1. Criminal procedure. The area within an arrestee's reach. • A police officer may conduct a warrantless search of this area to ensure the officer's safety and to prevent the arrestee from destroying evidence. 2. Vehicular control that is close enough to allow the driver to instantly govern the vehicle's movements. • A driver's failure to maintain immediate control over the vehicle could be evidence of negligence.

imminent danger. See DANGER.

immediate death. See DEATH.

immediate descent. See DESCENT.

immediate family. See FAMILY.

immediate intent. See INTENT (1).

immediately-apparent requirement. Criminal procedure. The principle that a police officer must have probable cause to believe that an item is contraband before seizing it. • This plain-view exception to the warrant requirement was first announced in Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 91 S.Ct. 2022 (1971).

“An object may not be seized from a car merely because the police plain view of it was lawfully acquired; there must be probable cause that the object is a fruit, instrumentality or evidence of crime. And under the ‘immediately apparent’ requirement of Coolidge v. New Hampshire, this probable cause must be determined without examination of the object other than is justified by the purpose underlying police entry of the vehicle.” Wayne R. LaFave & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 3.7, at 201 (2d ed. 1992).

immediate notice. See NOTICE.

immediate-notice clause. Insurance. A provision in many insurance policies obligating the insured to notify the insurer as soon as possible after a claim arises. • A requirement in a policy for “prompt” or “immediate” notice — or that notice must be given “immediately,” “at once,” “forthwith,” “as soon as practicable,” or “as soon as possible” — generally means that the notice must be given within a reasonable time under the circumstances.

immediate possession. See POSSESSION (3).

immemorial (im-ə-mor-ee-əl), adj. Beyond memory or record; very old. See TIME IMMEMORIAL.

immemorial usage. See USAGE.

immigrant. A person who arrives in a country to settle there permanently; a person who immigrates.

alien immigrant. An immigrant who has not yet been naturalized.

immigration, n. The act of entering a country with the intention of settling there permanently. — immigrate, vb. — immigrant, n. Cf. EMIGRATION.

Immigration and Nationality Act. A comprehensive federal law regulating immigration, naturalization, and the exclusion of aliens. 8 USCA §§ 1101–1537. — Also termed Nationality Act.

Immigration and Naturalization Service. A U.S. Department of Justice agency that administers the Immigration and Nationality Act and operates the U.S. Border Patrol. — Abbr. INS.

Immigration Appeals Board. See BOARD OF IMMIGRATION APPEALS.

imminent danger. See DANGER (1).

imminent hazard. See HAZARD (1).

imminently dangerous. (Of a person, behavior, or thing) reasonably certain to place life and limb in peril. • This term is relevant in several legal contexts. For example, if a mental condition renders a person imminently dangerous to self or others, he or she may be committed to a mental hospital. And the imminently dangerous behavior of pointing a gun at someone’s head could subject the actor to criminal and tort liability. Further, the manufacturer of an imminently dangerous product may be held to a strict-liability standard in tort.

imminent-peril doctrine. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (1).

immiscere (i-mis-ə-ree), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To mix or mingle with; to meddle with. • This term took on the figurative sense of meddling in another’s affairs (e.g., acting as if one were an heir), for which a person could be prosecuted.

immobilia (im-ə-bil-ee-ə). Immovables. — Also termed res immobiles (reez i-moh-bə-leez).

immobilia situm sequuntur (im-ə-bil-ee-ə si-təm sə-kwən-tər). [Latin] Immovable things follow their site. • This principle means that immovables are governed by the law of the place where they are fixed. — Sometimes shortened to immobilia situm.

immobilis, adj. (i-moh-bə-lis). [Latin] Immovable.

immobilize, vb. To make immobile; esp., to turn (movable property) into immovable property or to turn (circulating capital) into fixed capital.

immoral consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

immoral contract. See CONTRACT.

immovable, n. (usu. pl.) Property that cannot be moved; an object so firmly attached to land that it is regarded as part of the land. — immovable, adj. See FIXTURE. Cf. MOVABLE.

“Considered in its legal aspect, an immovable, that is to say, a piece of land, includes the following elements: — 1. A determinate portion of the earth’s surface. 2. The ground beneath the surface down to the centre of the world. All the pieces of land in England meet together in one terminable point at the earth’s centre. 3. Possibly the column of space above the surface ad infinitum.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 428 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

immune, adj. Having immunity; exempt from a duty or liability.

immunity. 1. Any exemption from a duty, liability, or service of process; esp., such an exemption granted to a public official.

“An immunity is a defense to tort liability which is conferred upon an entire group or class of persons or entities under circumstances where considerations of public policy are thought to require special protection for the person, activity or entity in question at the expense of those injured by its tortious act. Historically, tort litigation against units of government, public officers, and charities, and between spouses, parents and children, has been limited or prohibited on this basis." Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 341 (2d ed. 1992).

absolute immunity. A complete exemption from civil liability, usu. afforded to officials while performing particularly important functions, such as a representative enacting legislation and a judge presiding over a lawsuit. Cf. qualified immunity.

congressional immunity. Either of two special immunities given to members of Congress: (1) the exemption from arrest while attending a session of the body to which the member belongs, excluding an arrest for treason, breach of the peace, or a felony, or (2) the exemption from arrest or questioning for any speech or debate entered into during a legislative session. U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1. See SPEECH AND DEBATE CLAUSE.

constitutional immunity. Immunity created by a constitution.

diplomatic immunity. The general exemption of diplomatic ministers from the operation of local law, the exception being that a minister who is plotting against the security of the host nation may be arrested and sent out of the country. • A minister's family shares in diplomatic immunity to a great, though ill-defined, degree.

discretionary immunity. A qualified immunity for a public official's acts, granted when the act in question required the exercise of judgment in carrying out official duties (such as planning and policy-making). 28 USCA § 2680(a).

"Probably no one test will control the decision on discretionary immunity. Although the fact that the government has omitted to act is not in itself a defense, the discretionary immunity is frequently emphasized in non-feasance cases. On the other hand, where the government's activity is affirmative, specific, and in violation of a statute, regulation, or constitutional provision imposing a duty upon government, courts are often willing to say there is no room for discretion." Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 131, at 1041-42 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

executive immunity. 1. The absolute immunity of the U.S. President or a state governor from civil damages for actions that are within the scope of official responsibilities. 2. The qualified immunity from civil claims against lesser executive officials, who are liable only if their conduct violates clearly established constitutional or statutory rights. • Executive immunity generally protects an official while carrying out clearly established responsibilities about which a reasonable person would know. Cf. executive privilege under PRIVILEGE (1).

foreign immunity. The immunity of a foreign sovereign, its agents, and its instrumentalities from litigation in U.S. courts.

government immunity. See sovereign immunity.

intergovernmental immunity. The immunity between the federal and state governments based on their independent sovereignty. See INTERGOVERNMENTAL-IMMUNITY DOCTRINE.

judicial immunity. The immunity of a judge from civil liability arising from the performance of judicial duties.

legislative immunity. The immunity of a legislator from civil liability arising from the performance of legislative duties. See congressional immunity.

qualified immunity. Immunity from civil liability for a public official who is performing a discretionary function, as long as the conduct does not violate clearly established constitutional or statutory rights. — Also termed prima facie privilege. Cf. absolute immunity.

sovereign immunity. 1. A government's immunity from being sued in its own courts without its consent. • Congress has waived most of the federal government's sovereign immunity. See FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS ACT. 2. A state's immunity from being sued in federal court by the state's own citizens. — Also termed governmental immunity.

work-product immunity. See WORK-PRODUCT RULE.

2. Torts. A doctrine providing a complete defense to a tort action. • Unlike a privilege, immunity does not negate the tort, and it must be raised affirmatively or it will be waived. Cf. PRIVILEGE (2).

charitable immunity. The immunity of a charitable organization from tort liability. • This immunity has been eliminated or restricted in most states. — Also termed elemosynary defense.

corporate immunity. A corporate officer's immunity from personal liability for a tortious act committed while acting in good faith and within the course of corporate duties.

husband-wife immunity. The immunity of one spouse from a tort action by the other spouse for personal injury. • This immunity has been abolished in most states. — Also termed interspousal immunity; marital immunity.

judgmental immunity. See ERROR-OF-JUDGMENT RULE.

marital immunity. See husband-wife immunity.

parental immunity. 1. The principle that an unemancipated minor child is prohibited from suing a parent for damages allegedly caused by parental negligence. • This immunity has been retained by most states but is not applied in intentional-tort cases or in auto-accident cases covered by insurance. — Also termed parent-child immunity. 2. The principle that parents are not liable for damages caused by the ordinary negligence of their minor child.

3. Criminal law. Freedom from prosecution granted by the government in exchange for the person's testimony. • By granting immunity, the government can compel testimony — despite the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination — because that testimony can no longer incriminate the witness.

pocket immunity. Immunity that results from the prosecutor's decision not to prosecute, instead of from a formal grant of immunity. — Also termed informal immunity.

testimonial immunity. Immunity from the use of the compelled testimony against the witness. • Any information derived from that testimony, however, is generally admissible against the witness.

transactional immunity. Immunity from prosecution for any event or transaction described in the compelled testimony. • This is the broadest form of immunity.

use immunity. Immunity from the use of the compelled testimony (or any information derived from that testimony) in a future prosecution against the witness. • After granting use immunity, the government can still prosecute if it shows that its evidence comes from a legitimate independent source. — Also termed use/derivative-use immunity.

immunize, vb. To grant immunity to <the new legislation immunized the police officers from liability>.

impacted area. A region that is affected by some event; esp., a region in which the school population increases due to an influx of federal employees who are working on a federal project or activity, but the tax revenue declines due to the U.S. government's immunity from local taxes.

impact rule. Torts. The common-law requirement that physical contact must have occurred to allow damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress. • This rule has been abandoned in most jurisdictions. — Also termed physical-impact rule.

impair, vb. To diminish the value of (property or a property right). • This term is commonly used in reference to diminishing the value of a contractual obligation to the point that the contract becomes invalid or a party loses the benefit of the contract. See CONTRACTS CLAUSE.

impaired capital. See CAPITAL.

impairing the morals of a minor. The offense of an adult's engaging in sex-related acts, short of intercourse, with a minor. • Examples of this conduct are fondling, taking obscene photographs, and showing pornographic materials. Cf. CONTRIBUTING TO THE DELINQUENCY OF A MINOR.

impairment, n. The fact or state of being damaged, weakened, or diminished <impairment of collateral>. — impair, vb.

impalement, n. Hist. An ancient mode of inflicting punishment by thrusting a sharp pole through the body. — Formerly also spelled empalement. — impale, vb.

impanel, vb. See EMPANEL.

imparcare (im-pahr-kair-ee), vb. [Law Latin "to enclose"] Hist. To impound; to confine in prison. See CARCER.

imparl (im-pahrl), vb. 1. Hist. To request or obtain an imparlance. 2. To confer with the opposing party in an effort to settle a dispute amicably; to discuss settlement.

imparlance (im-pahr-lants). Hist. 1. A continuance granted for the purpose of giving the requesting party (usu. the defendant) further time to answer the adversary's last pleading (esp. the plaintiff's writ, bill, or count), often so that the parties will have time to settle the dispute. • Imparlanes were abolished in England in 1853. 2. A petition for such a continuance. 3. The permission granting such a continuance. — Formerly also spelled emparlance. — Also termed licentia loquendi.

"After defence made, the defendant must put in his plea. But, before he pleads, he is entitled to demand one imparlance, or licentia loquendi, and may have more granted by consent of the plaintiff, to see if he can end the matter amicably without farther suit, by talking with the plaintiff. . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 298 (1768).

"An imparlance is the time allowed by the court to either party, upon request, to answer the pleading of his opponent. Imparlance, from the French 'parler' — to speak — in its most common signification, means time to plead. Formerly the parties, in the course of oral pleadings, were allowed time to speak or confer with one another, so that they might endeavor to settle the matters in dispute, and later, when the pleadings came to be in writing, the court permitted a certain time for each to plead to or answer the pleading of his opponent. In modern practice the term is rarely used . . ." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 234, at 405 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

general imparlance. The allowance of time until the court's next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception. ● With this type of imparlance, the requesting defendant cannot later object to the jurisdiction of the court or plead any matter in abatement.

general special imparlance. The allowance of time with a saving of all exceptions, so that a defendant might later plead not only in abatement but also to the jurisdiction.

special imparlance. The allowance of time with a saving only of exceptions to the writ, bill, or count, but not to the court's jurisdiction.

impartial, adj. Unbiased; disinterested.

impartial chair. 1. ARBITRATOR. 2. MEDIATOR. — Also termed impartial chairman.

impartial expert. See EXPERT.

impartial jury. See JURY.

impartible (im-pahr-tə-bəl), adj. Indivisible <an impartible estate>.

impartible feud. See FEUD.

impasse (im-pas). A point in labor negotiations at which agreement cannot be reached. ● A neutral third party (such as a mediator) is often called in to help resolve an impasse.

"Not only is the employer free after impasse to implement changes already offered to the union, but either party is free after impasse to decline to negotiate further. Since impasse signifies that the parties have exhausted (at least temporarily) the avenues of bargaining, termination of bargaining at that point cannot be thought to demonstrate a cast of mind against reaching agreement." Robert A. Gorman, Basic Text on Labor Law: Unionization and Collective Bargaining 447 (1976).

impeach, vb. 1. To charge with a crime or misconduct; esp., to formally charge (a public official) with a violation of the public trust. ● Impeaching a federal official, such as the President, the Vice President, or a judge, requires that a majority of the U.S. House of Representatives vote to return at least one article of impeachment to the U.S. Senate, itemizing the charges and explaining their factual grounds. Even if an official is impeached, removal from office does not occur unless two-thirds of the senators vote for conviction. <President Nixon resigned from office to avoid being impeached>. 2. To discredit the veracity of (a witness) <the lawyer hoped that her star witness wouldn't be impeached on cross-examination>. 3. To challenge the accuracy or authenticity of (a document) <the handwriting expert impeached the holographic will>.

impeachable offense. An offense for which a public official may legally be impeached, during the first step in a two-step process that may, depending on the vote in the U.S. Senate, lead to the official's removal from office. ● The U.S. Constitution states that "[t]he President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." The meaning of this language was much debated during the impeachment and trial of President Bill Clinton, against whom two articles of impeachment were returned by the House of Representatives. The question arose what type of misdemeanor will suffice, and whether the high in high crimes modifies misdemeanors as well. No definitive answer resulted from the proceedings.

impeachment. 1. The act (by a legislature) of calling for the removal from office of a public official, accomplished by presenting a written charge of the official's alleged misconduct; esp., the initiation of a proceeding in the U.S. House of Representatives against a federal official, such as the President or a judge. ● Congress's authority to remove a federal official stems from Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution, which authorizes the removal of an official for "Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." The grounds upon which an official can be removed do not, however, have to be criminal in nature. They usu. involve some type of abuse of power or breach of the public trust. Articles of impeachment — which can be approved by a simple majority in the House — serve as the charging instrument for the later trial in the Senate. If the President is impeached, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court presides over the Senate trial. The defendant can be removed from office by a two-thirds majority of the senators who are present. In the United Kingdom, impeachment is by the House of Commons and trial by the House of Lords. But no case has arisen there since 1801, and many British scholars consider impeachment obsolete. 2. The act of discrediting a witness, as by catching the witness in a lie or by demonstrating that the witness has been convicted of a criminal offense. 3. The act of challenging the accuracy or authenticity of evidence.

impeachment court. See COURT FOR THE TRIALS OF IMPEACHMENT.

impeachment evidence. See EVIDENCE.

impeachment of verdict. A party's attack on a verdict, alleging impropriety by a member of the jury.

impeachment of waste. Hist. An action for waste against the tenant of the harmed property.

"[F]or above five hundred years past, all tenants for life or for any less estate, have been punishable or liable to be impeached for waste, both voluntary and permissive; unless their leases be made, as sometimes they are, without impeachment of waste. . . ." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 283 (1766).

impechiare (im-pee-chee-air-ee), vb. [fr. Law French empescher "to impeach"] Hist. To impeach; to accuse.

impediens (im-pee-dee-enz). [Law Latin] Hist. A person who hinders. ● The defendant (or deforciant) in a fine of conveyance was sometimes so called. See FINE (1).

impediment (im-ped-ə-mənt). A hindrance or obstruction; esp., some fact (such as legal minority) that bars a marriage, if known, but that does not void the marriage if discovered after the ceremony.

impeditor (im-ped-ə-tər). [Law Latin] Hist. A person who interferes with a patron's right of advowson, i.e., the right to appoint a clerk to a benefice. — Also termed disturber. See DE CLERICO ADMITTENDO.

impensae (im-pen-see). [Latin] Roman law. Expenditures made on a thing.

impensae necessariae (im-pen-see nes-ə-sair-ee-ee). Expenditures necessary to prevent deterioration, destruction, or loss of a thing — such as money expended for building repair or maintenance.

impensae utiles (im-pen-see yoo-tə-leez). Useful expenditures that improve something and increase its selling value.

impensae voluptariae (im-pen-see vol-əp-tair-ee-ee). Expenditures made on a thing for ornamental purposes only.

imperative authority. See AUTHORITY (4).

imperative law. See LAW.

imperative theory of law. The theory that law consists of the general commands issued by a country or other political community to its subjects and enforced by courts with the sanction of physical force. ● Imperative theorists believe that if there are rules predating or independent of the country, those rules may closely resemble law or even substitute for it, but they are not law. imperial state. See STATE (1).

imperitia (im-pə-rish-ee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. Lack of skill or competence; inexperience. ● The Romans considered imperitia to be a type of culpa that gave rise to liability in tort or liability under a contract calling for the rendering of services (such as a locatio conductio operis). Imperitus denoted an incompetent judge.

imperium (im-peer-ee-əm). [Latin] Roman law. Power or dominion; esp., the legal authority wielded by superior magistrates under the Republic, and later by the emperor under the Empire. • Imperium applied to different types of authority under Roman law, and thus had different meanings. For example, imperium domesticum described the power of the head of a household.

impersonal. See IN REM.

impersonation. The act of impersonating someone. — Also termed personation.

false impersonation. The crime of falsely representing oneself as another person, usu. a law-enforcement officer, for the purpose of deceiving someone. — Also termed false personation. See IMPOSTOR.

impertinent matter. Procedure. In pleading, matter that is not relevant to the action or defense. • A federal court may strike any impertinent matter from a pleading. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Cf. SCANDALOUS MATTER.

“The court will not strike out the matter unless its impertinence clearly appears; for if erroneously stricken out, the error is irremediable; if left to stand, the court may set the matter right in taxing the costs. Matter which is scandalous is also impertinent.” William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 526 (1889).

impescare (im-pə-skair-ee), vb. [fr. Law French empescher “to impeach”] Hist. To impeach; to accuse.

impetio vasti (im-pə-tish-ee-oh vas-ti). See IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE.

impetrare (im-pə-trair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To obtain by request. • This word often appeared in petitions requesting a formula for an action from a praetor. It performed a similar function under English law for those seeking a writ from Chancery. The English word impetrate derives from this Latinism. Cf. FORMULA.

impetration (im-pə-tray-shən). 1. Hist. The act of petitioning for a writ. 2. Hist. Eccles. law. The act of obtaining a papal benefice for the disposal of the king or other lay patron. — impetrate, vb.

impignorata (im-pig-nə-ray-tə). [Law Latin] Hist. Given in pledge; pledged or mortgaged.

impignoration (im-pig-nə-ray-shən), n. Hist. The act of pawning or putting to pledge. — impignorate, vb.

impinge, vb. To encroach or infringe (on or upon) <impinge on the defendant’s rights>.

implacitare (im-plas-ə-tair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin placitum “plea”] Hist. To implead; to sue.

implead, vb. 1. To bring (someone) into a lawsuit; esp., to bring (a new party) into the action. Cf. INTERPLEAD. 2. Hist. To bring an action against; to accuse. — Formerly also spelled emplead; emplet.

impleader, n. A procedure by which a third party is brought into a lawsuit, esp. by a defendant who seeks to shift liability to someone not sued by the plaintiff. Fed. R. Civ. P. 14. — Also termed third-party practice; vouching-in. Cf. INTERPLEADER; INTERVENTION (1).

implementation plan. Environmental law. A detailed outline of steps needed to meet environmental-quality standards by an established time.

implicate, vb. 1. To show (a person) to be involved in (a crime, misfeasance, etc.) <when he turned state’s evidence, he implicated three other suspects>. 2. To be involved or affected <three judges were implicated in the bribery>.

implication. 1. The act of showing involvement in something, esp. a crime or misfeasance <the implication of the judges in the bribery scheme>. 2. An inference drawn from something said or observed <the implication was that the scheme involved several persons>.

necessary implication. An implication so strong in its probability that anything to the contrary would be unreasonable.

implicit cost. See opportunity cost under COST.

implied, adj. Not directly expressed; recognized by law as existing inferentially <implied agreement>. See IMPLY (1). Cf. EXPRESS.

implied acceptance. See ACCEPTANCE (4).

implied acquittal. See ACQUITTAL.

implied actual knowledge. See actual knowledge (2) under KNOWLEDGE.

implied admission. See ADMISSION (1).

implied agency. See AGENCY (1).

implied amnesty. See AMNESTY.

implied assent. See ASSENT.

implied assertion. See assertive conduct under CONDUCT.

implied assumption. See ASSUMPTION.

implied authority. See AUTHORITY (1).

implied color. See COLOR.

implied condition. See CONDITION (2).

implied confession. See CONFESSION.

implied consent. See CONSENT.

implied consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

implied contract. See CONTRACT.

implied covenant. See COVENANT (1).

implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. See COVENANT (1).

implied dedication. See DEDICATION.

implied duty of cooperation. See DUTY (1).

implied easement. See EASEMENT.

implied in fact, adj. Inferable from the facts of the case.

implied-in-fact condition. See CONDITION (2).

implied-in-fact contract. See CONTRACT.

implied in law, n. Imposed by operation of law and not because of any inferences that can be drawn from the facts of the case.

implied-in-law condition. See constructive condition under CONDITION (2).

implied-in-law contract. See CONTRACT.

implied intent. See INTENT (1).

implied malice. See MALICE.

implied negative covenant. See COVENANT (1).

implied notice. See NOTICE.

implied partnership. See partnership by estoppel under PARTNERSHIP.

implied power. See POWER (4), (5).

implied promise. See PROMISE.

implied reciprocal covenant. See COVENANT (4).

implied reciprocal servitude. See implied reciprocal covenant under COVENANT (4).

implied repeal. See REPEAL.

implied reservation. See RESERVATION.

implied-reservation-of-water doctrine. A legal doctrine permitting the federal government to use and control, for public purposes, water appurtenant to federal lands. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

implied term. See TERM (2).

implied trust. See resulting trust under TRUST.

implied waiver. See WAIVER (1).

implied warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. See WARRANTY (2).

implied warranty of habitability. See WARRANTY (2).

implied warranty of merchantability. See WARRANTY (2).

imply, vb. 1. To express or involve indirectly; to suggest <the opinion implies that the court has adopted a stricter standard for upholding punitive-damages awards>. 2. (Of a court) to impute or impose on equitable or legal grounds <the court implied a contract between the parties>. 3. To read into (a document) <citing grounds of fairness, the court implied a condition that the parties had not expressed>. See implied term under TERM (2). — implication, *n.

"Sometimes, when a Court implies a term it is merely reading in what is already logically implicit in the language of the contract. Sometimes a Court is adding something to the contract which the parties probably had in mind but did not actually express. Sometimes, again, the Court is adding terms which the parties would probably have expressed if the matter had been brought to their attention. In yet other cases a Court adds terms to a contract which it thinks the parties ought in fairness and justice to have included, even though they might not have done so if the matter had been brought to their attention. In the first type of case the phrase 'implied term' is unobjectionable. In the last type of case, on the other hand, it seems clear that the Court is merely applying a rule of law, albeit a rule which can be excluded by express agreement. But in the intermediate positions it is difficult to dogmatize about which approach is more accurate, particularly as the different cases tend to shade off into each other. The theory still is that the Courts have no power to add to the contract but may only read in what is implicit in it. This theory, however, is becoming more and more difficult to reconcile with the facts." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 178 (3d ed. 1981).

import, n. 1. A product brought into a country from a foreign country where it originated <imports declined in the third quarter>. See PARALLEL IMPORTS. 2. The process of bringing foreign goods into a country <the import of products affects the domestic economy in significant ways>. 3. The meaning; esp., the implied meaning <the court must decide the import of that obscure provision>. 4. Importance; significance <time will tell the relative import of Judge Posner's decisions in American law>.

importation. The bringing of goods into a country from another country.

import duty. See DUTY (4).

imported litigation. One or more lawsuits brought in a state that has no interest in the dispute.

importer. A person or entity that brings goods into a country from a foreign country and pays customs duties.

Import-Export Clause. U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 2, which prohibits states from taxing imports or exports. ● The Supreme Court has liberally interpreted this clause, allowing states to tax imports as long as the tax does not discriminate in favor of domestic goods. — Also termed Export Clause.

import letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

import quota. See QUOTA.

importune (im-por-t[y]oon), vb. To solicit forcefully; to request persistently, and sometimes irksomely.

impose, vb. To levy or exact (a tax or duty).

imposition. An impost or tax.

impositive fact. See FACT.

impossibility. 1. The fact or condition of not being able to occur, exist, or be done. 2. A fact or circumstance that cannot occur, exist, or be done. 3. Contracts. A fact or circumstance that excuses performance because (1) the subject or means of performance has deteriorated, has been destroyed, or is no longer available, (2) the method of delivery or payment has failed, (3) a law now prevents performance, or (4) death or illness prevents performance. ● Increased or unexpected difficulty and expense do not usu. qualify as an impossibility and thus do not excuse performance. — Also termed impossibility of performance.

"The doctrines of Impossibility, Commercial Impracticability or as the Uniform Commercial Code knows it, Excuse by Failure of Presupposed Conditions, comprise unclimbed peaks of contract doctrine. Clearly, all of the famous early and mid-twentieth century mountaineers, Corbin, Williston, Farnsworth and many lesser men have made attempts on this topic but none has succeeded in conquering the very summit. . . . In spite of attempts by all of the contract buffs and even in the face of eloquent and persuasive general statements, it remains impossible to predict with accuracy how the law will apply to a variety of relatively common cases. Both the cases and the Code commentary are full of weasel words such as 'severe' shortage, 'marked' increase, 'basic' assumptions, and 'force majeure.'" James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 3-9, at 155 (3d ed. 1988).

4. The doctrine by which such a fact or circumstance excuses contractual performance. Cf. FRUSTRATION; IMPRACTICABILITY. 5. Criminal law. A fact or circumstance preventing the commission of a crime.

factual impossibility. Impossibility due to the fact that the illegal act cannot physically be accomplished, such as trying to pick an empty pocket. ● Factual impossibility is not a defense to the crime of attempt. — Also termed physical impossibility.

legal impossibility. Impossibility due to the fact that what the defendant intended to do is not illegal, such as hunting while erroneously believing that it is not hunting season. ● Legal impossibility is a defense to the crime of attempt.

impossibility-of-performance doctrine. The principle that a party may be released from a contract on the ground that uncontrollable circumstances have rendered performance impossible. Cf. FRUSTRATION; IMPRACTICABILITY.

impossible consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

impossible contract. See CONTRACT.

impost (im-pohst). A tax or duty, esp. a customs duty <the impost was assessed when the ship reached the mainland>. See DUTY (4).

impostor (im-pos-tər). One who pretends to be someone else to deceive others, esp. to receive the benefits of a negotiable instrument. — Also spelled imposter.

impostor rule. Commercial law. The principle that an impostor's indorsement of a negotiable instrument is not a forgery, and that the drawer or maker who issues the instrument to the impostor is negligent and therefore liable to the holder for payment. ● If a drawer or maker issues an instrument to an impostor, any resulting forgery of the payee's name will be effective in favor of a person paying on the instrument in good faith or taking it for value or collection. UCC § 3-404.

impotence (im-pə-tənts). A man's inability to achieve an erection and therefore to have sexual intercourse. ● Because an impotent husband cannot consummate a marriage, impotence has often been cited as a ground for annulment. — Also termed impotency; physical incapacity.

impound, vb. 1. To place (something, such as a car or other personal property) in the custody of the police or the court, often with the understanding that it will be returned intact at the end of the proceeding. 2. To take and retain possession of (something, such as a forged document to be produced as evidence) in preparation for a criminal prosecution.

impound account. See ACCOUNT.

impoundment. 1. The action of impounding; the state of being impounded. See IMPOUND. 2. Constitutional law. The President's refusal to spend funds appropriated by Congress. ● Although not authorized by the Constitution and seldom used, the impoundment power effectively gives the executive branch a line-item veto over legislative spending.

impracticability (im-prak-ti-kə-bil-ə-tee). Contracts. 1. A fact or circumstance that excuses a party from performing an act, esp. a contractual duty, because (though possible) it would cause extreme and unreasonable difficulty. ● For performance to be truly impracticable, the duty must become much more difficult or much more expensive to perform, and this difficulty or expense must have been unanticipated. 2. The doctrine by which such a fact or circumstance excuses performance. Cf. FRUSTRATION; IMPOSSIBILITY.

commercial impracticability. The occurrence of a contingency whose nonoccurrence was an assumption in the contract, as a result of which one party cannot perform.

imprescriptible (im-prə-skrip-tə-bəl), adj. Not subject to prescription; not capable of being acquired by prescription.

impressment (im-pres-mənt), n. 1. The act of forcibly taking (something) for public service. 2. A court's imposition of a constructive trust on equitable grounds. See constructive trust under TRUST. 3. Archaic. The method by which armed forces were formerly expanded, when so-called press-gangs seized men off the streets and forced them to join the army or navy. Cf. CRIMPING. — impress, vb.

imprest fund. See FUND (1).

imprest money (im-prest). A payment made to a soldier or sailor upon enlistment or impressment.

imprimatur (im-pri-may-tər or -mah-tər). [Latin "let it be printed"] 1. A license required to publish a book. ● Once required in England, the imprimatur is now encountered only rarely in countries that censor the press. 2. A general grant of approval; commendatory license or sanction.

imprimis (im-pri-mis), adv. [fr. Latin in primis "in the first"] In the first place. — Also termed in primis.

imprison, vb. To confine (a person) in prison.

imprisonment, n. 1. The act of confining a person, esp. in a prison <the imprisonment of Jackson was entirely justified>. 2. The state of being confined; a period of confinement <Jackson's imprisonment lasted 14 years>. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

"Imprisonment, by whatever name it is called, is a harsh thing, and the discipline that must be exercised over human beings in close confinement can never be wholly agreeable to those subject to it. When an attempt is made to hide the harsh realities of criminal justice behind euphemistic descriptions, a corrupting irony may be introduced into ordinary speech that is fully as frightening as Orwell's 'Newspeak.'" Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 57 (1968).

improper, adj. 1. Incorrect; unsuitable or irregular. 2. Fraudulent or otherwise wrongful.

improper cumulation of actions. Hist. Under the common-law pleading system, the joining of inconsistent causes of action in one proceeding. ● This is permitted under most modern pleading systems.

improper feud. See FEUD.

improper influence. See UNDUE INFLUENCE.

improper rector. See RECTOR (1).

impropriation (im-proh-pree-ay-shən). Eccles. law. The annexing of an ecclesiastical benefice to the use of a lay person, whether individual or corporate.

improve, vb. 1. To increase the value or enhance the appearance of something. 2. To develop (land), whether or not the development results in an increase or a decrease in value.

improved land. Real property that has been developed. ● The improvements may or may not enhance the value of the land.

improved value. Real estate. In the appraisal of property, the value of the land plus the value of any improvements.

improvement. An addition to real property, whether permanent or not; esp., one that increases its value or utility or that enhances its appearance. — Also termed land improvement. Cf. FIXTURE.

general improvement. An improvement whose primary purpose or effect is to benefit the public generally, though it may incidentally benefit property owners in its vicinity.

local improvement. A real-property improvement, such as a sewer or sidewalk, financed by special assessment, and specially benefiting adjacent property.

necessary improvement. An improvement made to prevent the deterioration of property.

valuable improvement. An improvement that adds permanent value to the freehold. ● Because of its nature, a valuable improvement would not typically be made by anyone other than the owner. A valuable improvement may be slight and of small value, as long as it is both permanent and beneficial to the property.

improvement bond. See revenue bond under BOND (3).

improvidence (im-prahv-ə-dənts). A lack of foresight and care in the management of property, esp. as grounds for removing an estate administrator.

improvident (im-prahv-ə-dənt), adj. 1. Lacking foresight and care in the management of property. 2. Of or relating to a judgment arrived at by using misleading information or a mistaken assumption.

impruiare (im-proo-ee-air-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To improve land.

impubes (im-pyoo-beez). [Latin] Roman law. A child under the age of puberty. ● Under Roman law, this term referred to a male under 14 and a female under 12. Cf. INFANS.

impugn (im-pyoon), vb. To challenge or call into question (a person's character, the truth of a statement, etc.). — impugment, n.

impulse, n. A sudden urge or inclination that prompts an unplanned action.

uncontrollable impulse. An impulse that is so overwhelming that it cannot be resisted. ● In some jurisdictions, an uncontrollable impulse serves as a defense to criminal conduct committed while in the grip of the impulse. See IRRESISTIBLE-IMPULSE TEST.

impunity (im-pyoo-nə-tee). An exemption or protection from punishment <because she was a foreign diplomat, she was able to disregard the parking tickets with impunity>. See IMMUNITY.

imputation, n. The act or an instance of imputing something, esp. fault or crime, to a person; an accusation or charge <an imputation of negligence>.

imputation of payment. Civil law. The act of applying or directing payment to principal or interest.

impute (im-pyoot), vb. To ascribe or attribute; to regard (usu. something undesirable) as being done, caused, or possessed by <the court imputed malice to the defamatory statement>. — imputation, n. — imputable, adj.

imputed disqualification. See vicarious disqualification under DISQUALIFICATION.

imputed income. See INCOME.

imputed interest. See INTEREST (3).

imputed knowledge. See KNOWLEDGE.

imputed negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

imputed notice. See NOTICE.

in, prep. Under or based on the law of <to bring an action in contract>.

in absentia (in ab-sen-shee-ə or ab-sen-shə). [Latin] In the absence of (someone); in (someone’s) absence <tried in absentia>.

in action. (Of property) attainable or recoverable through litigation. See CHOSE IN ACTION.

inactive case. See CASE.

inactive stock. See STOCK.

inadequate consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

inadequate damages. See DAMAGES.

inadequate remedy at law. A remedy (such as money damages) that does not sufficiently correct the wrong, as a result of which an injunction may be available to the disadvantaged party. See IRREPARABLE-INJURY RULE.

inadmissible, adj. 1. (Of a thing) not allowable or worthy of being admitted. 2. (Of evidence) excludable by some rule of evidence.

in adversum (in ad-vər-səm). [Law Latin] Against an adverse party.

“Where a decree is obtained against one who resists, it is termed ‘a decree not by consent but in adversum.’” 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 1518 (8th ed. 1914).

inadvertence, n. An accidental oversight; a result of carelessness.

inadvertent discovery. Criminal procedure. A law-enforcement officer’s unexpected finding of incriminating evidence in plain view. ● Even though this type of evidence is obtained without a warrant, it can be used against the accused under the plain-view exception to the warrant requirement.

inadvertent negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

inaedificatio (in-ee-di-fi-kay-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. The act of building on another’s land with one’s own materials, or on one’s own land with another’s materials. ● Regardless of the source of the materials, the building became the property of the landowner.

in aequali jure (in ee-kway-li joor-ee). [Law Latin] In equal right.

in aequali manu (in ee-kway-li man-yoo). [Law Latin] In equal hand. ● This phrase refers to property held indifferently between two parties, as when the parties to an instrument deposit it in the hands of a neutral third person. — Also termed in aequa manu.

inalienable, adj. Not transferable or assignable <inalienable property interests>. — Also termed unalienable.

inalienable interest. See INTEREST (2).

in alieno solo (in ay-lee- or al-ee-ee-noh soh-loh). [fr. Law French en auter soile] In another’s land.

in alio loco (in al-ee-oh loh-koh). [Latin] In another's place. See CEPIT IN ALIO LOCO.

in ambiguo (in am-big-yoo-oh). [Law Latin] In doubt.

in apicibus juris (in ə-pis-ə-bəs joor-is). [Latin] Among the extremes (or most subtle doctrines) of the law.

in arbitrable, adj. 1. (Of a dispute) not capable of being arbitrated; not subject to arbitration. 2. Not subject to being decided.

in arbitrio alieno (in ahr-bi-tree-oh ay-lee-ee-noh or al-ee-). [Law Latin] According to the judgment of another. • This term refers to property bequeathed to a trustee for the benefit of others, to be used in the trustee's discretion.

in arbitrium judicis (in ahr-bi-tree-əm joo-disis). [Latin] At the decision or discretion of the judge.

in arcta et salva custodia (in ahrk-tə et salvə kə-stoh-dee-ə). [Latin] In close and safe custody.

in arrears (in ə-reerz). adj. or adv. 1. Behind in the discharging of a debt or other obligation <the tenants were in arrears with the rent>. 2. At the end of a term or period instead of the beginning <the interests, fees, and costs are payable in arrears>.

in articulo mortis (in ahr-tik-yə-loh mor-tis). [Law Latin] At the point of death. Cf. IN EXTREMIS.

inaudita altera parte (in-aw-di-tə or in-aw-di-tə al-tə-rə pah-tee). [Latin "without hearing the other party"] Ex parte. • The term is sometimes used in decisions of the European Court of Justice. See EX PARTE.

inauguration (i-naw-gyə-ray-shən), n. 1. A formal ceremony inducting someone into office. 2. A formal ceremony introducing something into public use. 3. The formal commencement of a period of time or course of action. — inaugurate (i-naw-gyə-rayt), vb. — inauguratory (i-naw-gyə-rə-tor-ee), adj. — inaugurator (i-naw-gyə-ray-tər), n.

in autre droit (in oh-trə droyt). [Law French] See EN AUTRE DROIT.

in banc. See EN BANC.

in banco. See EN BANC.

in bank. See EN BANC.

in being. Existing in life <life in being plus 21 years>. • In property law, this includes children conceived but not yet born. See LIFE IN BEING.

"The intentional killing of one not 'in being,' i.e. an unborn child, was until 1929 punishable neither as murder nor as infanticide. There can be no murder nor manslaughter of a child which dies before being born or even whilst being born, only of one that has been born and, moreover, been born alive." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 104 (16th ed. 1952).

in blank. (Of an indorsement) not restricted to a particular indorsee. See blank indorsement under INDORSEMENT.

inboard, adj. Maritime law. (Of cargo) stowed between the boards (i.e., sides) of the vessel; esp., stowed inside or near the vessel's centerline.

in bonis esse (in boh-nis es-ee or es-ay). [Latin "to be among the goods"] Roman law. 1. To be someone's property. 2. (Of property) held in possession without benefit of a solemn act (such as mancipatio) required to transfer ownership, until ownership might be acquired by the passage of time. See bonitarian ownership under OWNERSHIP.

Inc. abbr. Incorporated.

in cahoots. See CAHOOTS.

in camera (in kam-ə-rə), adv. & adj. [Law Latin "in a chamber"] 1. In the judge's private chambers. 2. In the courtroom with all spectators excluded. 3. (Of a judicial action) taken when court is not in session. — Also termed (in reference to the opinion of one judge) in chambers.

in camera inspection. A trial judge's private consideration of evidence.

in camera proceeding. See PROCEEDING.

in camera sitting. See SITTING.

incapacitated person. A person who is impaired by an intoxicant, by mental illness or deficiency, or by physical illness or disability to the extent that personal decision-making is impossible.

incapacitation, n. 1. The action of disabling or depriving of legal capacity. 2. The state of being disabled or lacking legal capacity. — incapacitate, vb.

incapacity. 1. Lack of physical or mental capabilities. 2. Lack of ability to have certain legal consequences attach to one's actions. ● For example, a five-year-old has an incapacity to make a binding contract. 3. DISABILITY (1). 4. DISABILITY (2). Cf. INCOMPETENCY.

testimonial incapacity. The lack of capacity to testify.

incapax doli (in-kay-paks doh-li). See CAPAX DOLI.

in capita. Individually. See PER CAPITA.

in capite (in kap-ə-tee). [Law Latin "in chief"] Hist. A type of tenure in which a person held land directly of the Crown. — Also termed tenure in capite.

incarceration, n. The act or process of confining someone; IMPRISONMENT. — incarcerate, vb. — incarcerator, n.

shock incarceration. Incarceration in a military-type setting, usu. for three to six months, during which the offender is subjected to strict discipline, physical exercise, and hard labor. ● After successfully completing the program, the offender is placed on probation. — Also termed boot camp. Cf. shock probation under PROBATION (1).

in casu proviso (in kay-s[y]oo prə-vi-zoh). See CASU PROVISIO.

incendiary (in-sen-dee-er-ee), n. 1. One who deliberately and unlawfully sets fire to property. — Also termed arsonist; firebug. 2. An instrument (such as a bomb) or chemical agent designed to start a fire. — incendiary, adj.

incentive pay plan. A compensation plan in which increased productivity is rewarded with higher pay.

incentive stock option. See STOCK OPTION (2).

incentive zoning. See ZONING.

incerta persona (in-sər-tə pər-soh-nə). [Latin "uncertain person"] Roman law. A person (or corporate body) that could not inherit property, such as a person whose existence was uncertain or whom the testator could not identify by name (such as the first person to appear at the testator's funeral). Pl. incertae personae.

"A legacy could only be given to a person with whom the testator had testamentifactio, and in the time of Gaius could not be made in favour of an incerta persona, e.g. 'whoever shall come to my funeral'; among incertae personae were reckoned postumi alieni, i.e. all postumi except persons who on birth become sui heredes of the testator, e.g. a grandchild begotten to a son who has been emancipated would be a postumus alienus in this sense." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 244-45 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

"Another change under Justinian was of much greater importance. Gifts of all kinds could now be made to incertae personae..." W.W. Buckland, A Textbook of Roman Law: From Augustus to Justinian 363 (3d ed. 1963).

incest, n. Sexual relations between family members or close relatives, including children related by adoption. ● Incest was not a crime under English common law but was punished as an ecclesiastical offense. Modern statutes make it a felony. — incestuous, adj.

incestuosi (in-ses-choo-oh-si). [Law Latin] Hist. Children begotten incestuously. Cf. ADULTERINI.

incestuous adultery. See ADULTERY.

in chambers. See IN CAMERA (1).

inchartare (in-kahr-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin "to put in charter"] Hist. To grant by written instrument.

in chief. 1. Principal, as opposed to collateral or incidental. 2. Denoting the part of a trial in which the main body of evidence is presented. See CASE-IN-CHIEF.

Inchmaree clause (inch-mə-ree). (often cap.) Maritime law. An insurance-policy provision that protects against risks not caused by nature, such as a sailor's negligence or a latent defect in machinery. ● This term is taken from a British ship, the Inchmaree, whose sinking in 1884 gave rise to litigation that led to the clause bearing its name.

"The most celebrated decision of recent times under the 'general' clause was doubtless Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, Fraser & Co., 12 App.Cas. 484 (1887). A pump, insured as part of the machinery of a vessel, clogged through valve failure and was damaged. The House of Lords held this accident arose neither through a 'peril of the sea' nor through a cause ejusdem generis with the enumerated perils.... This was a disquieting decision, for it more than suggested that many costly accidents that might be suffered by the expensive machinery on steam vessels were not covered by the standard marine policy. The result was the inclusion of the celebrated 'Inchmaree' clause in hull policies, extending special coverage not only to machinery breakage but to many other classes of loss not covered by the standard perils clause as restrictively construed." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black, Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 4-8, at 74 n.90 (2d ed. 1975).

inchoate (in-koh-it), adj. Partially completed or imperfectly formed; just begun. — inchoateness, n. Cf. CHOATE.

"The word 'inchoate,' not much used in ordinary discourse, means 'just begun,' 'undeveloped.' The common law has given birth to three general offences which are usually termed 'inchoate' or 'preliminary' crimes — attempt, conspiracy, and incitement. A principal feature of these crimes is that they are committed even though the substantive offence is not successfully consummated. An attempt fails, a conspiracy comes to nothing, words of incitement are ignored — in all these instances, there may be liability for the inchoate crime." Andrew Ashworth, Principles of Criminal Law 395 (1991).

inchoate crime. See inchoate offense under OFFENSE (1).

inchoate dower. See DOWER.

inchoate instrument. See INSTRUMENT.

inchoate interest. See INTEREST.

inchoate lien. See LIEN.

inchoate offense. See OFFENSE (1).

inchoate right. 1. A right that has not fully developed, matured, or vested. 2. Patents. An inventor's right that has not yet vested into a property right because the patent application is pending.

incident, adj. Dependent upon, subordinate to, arising out of, or otherwise connected with (something else, usu. of greater importance) <the utility easement is incident to the ownership of the tract>. — incident, n.

incident, n. 1. A discrete occurrence or happening <an incident of copyright infringement> 2. A dependent, subordinate, or consequential part (of something else) <child support is a typical incident of divorce>.

incidental, adj. Subordinate to something of greater importance; having a minor role <the FAA determined that the wind played only an incidental part in the plane crash>.

incidental admission. See ADMISSION (1).

incidental authority. See AUTHORITY (1).

incidental beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

incidental damages. See DAMAGES.

incidental demand. See DEMAND (1).

incidental power. See incident power under POWER.

incidental use. See USE (1).

incident of ownership. (usu. pl.) Any right of control that may be exercised over a transferred life-insurance policy so that the policy's proceeds will be included in a decedent's gross estate for estate-tax purposes <because Douglas still retained the incidents of ownership after giving his life-insurance policy to his daughter, the policy proceeds were taxed against his estate>. • The incidents of ownership include the rights to change the policy's beneficiaries and to borrow against, assign, and cancel the policy.

incident power. See POWER.

incident to employment. Workers' compensation. A risk that is related to or connected with a worker's job duties.

incidere (in-sid-ə-ree), vb. [Latin "fall into or on"] Roman law. To come within the scope of a law or to fall into a legal category; esp. to become involved in a situation that entangles a person in a legal action. • This term had a similar meaning under English law. For example, a person might become liable to (or "fall into") amercement (incidere in misericordiam). See AMERCEMENT.

incipitur (in-sip-i-tər). [Law Latin] Hist. It is begun. • This refers to the practice of entering the commencement of a pleading on the court roll.

incite, vb. To provoke or stir up (someone to commit a criminal act, or the criminal act itself). Cf. ABET.

incitee. A person who has been incited, esp. to commit a crime.

inciteful, adj. Tending to incite <inciteful speech>.

incitement, n. 1. The act or an instance of provoking, urging on, or stirring up. 2. Criminal law. The act of persuading another person to commit a crime; SOLICITATION (2). — inciteful, adj.

“An inciter is one who counsels, commands or advises the commission of a crime. It will be observed that this definition is much the same as that of an accessory before the fact. What, then, is the difference between the two? It is that in incitement the crime has not (or has not necessarily) been committed, whereas a party cannot be an accessory in crime unless the crime has been committed. An accessory before the fact is party to consummated mischief; an inciter is guilty only of an inchoate crime.” Glanville Williams, Criminal Law 612 (2d ed. 1961).

“Emphasis upon the theory of one offense with guilt attaching to several is quite appropriate because it is still part of the groundwork of our legal philosophy, so far as perpetrators, abettors and inciters are concerned, despite the fact that some of the statutes require lipservice to the notion of a separate substantive offense, in the effort to avoid certain procedural difficulties. It explains how one may be guilty of a crime he could not perpetrate, by having caused or procured it as a result of his abetment or incitement.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 732–33 (3d ed. 1982).

inciter. A person who incites another to commit a crime; an aider or abettor.

incivile (in-siv-ə-lee), adj. [Law Latin] Irregular; out of the due course of law.

incivism (in-si-viz-əm). Unfriendliness toward one's own country or its government; lack of good citizenship.

inclausa (in-klaw-zə). [Law Latin] Hist. An enclosure near a house; a home close. See CLOSE.

inclose, vb. See ENCLOSE.

inclosure. See ENCLOSURE.

include, vb. To contain as a part of something. ● The participle including typically indicates a partial list <the plaintiff asserted five tort claims, including slander and libel>. But some drafters use phrases such as including without limitation and including but not limited to — which mean the same thing. Cf. NAMELY.

included offense. See lesser included offense under OFFENSE.

inclusionary-approach rule. The principle that evidence of a prior crime, wrong, or act is admissible for any purpose other than to show a defendant's criminal propensity as long as it is relevant to some disputed issue and its probative value outweighs its prejudicial effect.

inclusio unius est exclusio alterius. See EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS.

incognito (in-kog-nee-toh or in-kog-ni-toh), adj. Without making one's name or identity known <Binkley flew incognito to France>.

incola (in-kə-lə). [Latin “an inhabitant”] Roman law. A foreign resident without full civil rights. — Also termed incolant.

income. The money or other form of payment that one receives, usu. periodically, from employment, business, investments, royalties, gifts, and the like. See EARNINGS. Cf. PROFIT.

accrued income. Money earned but not yet received.

accumulated income. Income that is retained in an account; esp., income that a trust has generated, but that has not yet been reinvested or distributed by the trustee.

accumulated taxable income. The income of a corporation as adjusted for certain items (such as excess charitable contributions), less the dividends-paid deduction and the accumulated-earnings credit. ● It serves as the base upon which the accumulated-earnings tax is imposed. See accumulated-earnings tax under TAX.

active income. 1. Wages; salary. 2. Income from a trade or business.

adjusted gross income. Gross income minus allowable deductions specified in the tax code. — Abbr. AGI.

adjusted ordinary gross income. A corporation's gross income less capital gains and certain expenses. ● The IRS uses this calculation to determine whether a corporation is a personal holding company. If 60% or more of a corporation's AOGI consists of certain passive investment income, the company has met the test for personal-holding-company classification. IRC (26 USCA) § 543(b). — Abbr. AOGI. See personal holding company under COMPANY.

aggregate income. The combined income of a husband and wife who file a joint tax return.

blocked income. Money earned by a foreign taxpayer but not subject to U.S. taxation because the foreign country prohibits changing the income into dollars.

current income. Income that is due within the present accounting period. — Also termed current revenue.

deferred income. Money received at a time later than when it was earned, such as a check received in January for commissions earned in November.

disposable income. Income that may be spent or invested after payment of taxes and other primary obligations. — Also termed disposable earnings.

dividend income. The income resulting from a dividend distribution and subject to tax.

earned income. Money derived from one's own labor or active participation; earnings from services. Cf. unearned income (2).

exempt income. Income that is not subject to income tax.

fixed income. Money received at a constant rate, such as a payment from a pension or annuity.

gross income. Total income from all sources before deductions, exemptions, or other tax reductions. — Also termed gross earnings.

imputed income. The benefit one receives from the use of one's own property, the performance of one's services, or the consumption of self-produced goods and services.

income in respect of a decedent. Income earned by a person, but not collected before death. • This income is included in the decedent's gross estate for estate-tax purposes. For income-tax purposes, it is taxed to the estate or, if the estate does not collect the income, it is taxed to the eventual recipient. — Abbr. I.R.D.

"If a decedent has earned income that he or she had not received before death and was not entitled to receive before death, such income is known — for Federal Income Tax purposes — as 'income in respect of a decedent' (I.R.D.). For example, if the decedent earned fees or salary or wages for work done before death but not payable until later, and if decedent was a cash method taxpayer (versus an accrual method taxpayer), that earned but unpaid income would not properly be shown on the final income tax return filed for the decedent, for that taxable period ends with the date of death. Rather it is I.R.D. that becomes taxable to the estate of the decedent." John K. McNulty, Federal Estate and Gift Taxation in a Nutshell 89 (5th ed. 1994).

investment income. See unearned income.

net income. Total income from all sources minus deductions, exemptions, and other tax reductions. • Income tax is computed on net income. — Also termed net earnings.

net operating income. Income derived from operating a business, after subtracting operating costs.

nonoperating income. Business income derived from investments rather than operations.

ordinary income. 1. For business-tax purposes, earnings from the normal operations or activities of a business. — Also termed operating income. 2. For individual income-tax purposes, income that is derived from sources such as wages, commissions, and interest (as opposed to income from capital gains).

other income. Income not derived from an entity's principal business, such as earnings from dividends and interest.

passive income. Income derived from a business activity over which the earner does not participate directly or have immediate control, such as copyright royalties. See PASSIVE ACTIVITY.

passive investment income. Investment income that does not involve or require active participation, such as gross receipts from royalties, rental income, dividends, interest, annuities, and gains from the sale or exchange of securities. IRC (26 USCA) § 1362(d).

personal income. The total income received by an individual from all sources.

portfolio income. Income from interest, dividends, rentals, royalties, capital gains, or other investment sources. • Portfolio income is not considered passive income; therefore, net passive losses cannot be used to offset net portfolio income.

prepaid income. Income received but not yet earned. — Also termed deferred revenue.

previously taxed income. An S corporation's undistributed taxable income taxed to the shareholders as of the last day of the corporation's tax year. • This income could usually be withdrawn later by the shareholders without tax consequences. PTI has been replaced by the accumulated adjustments account. — Abbr. PTI.

real income. Income adjusted to allow for inflation or deflation so that it reflects true purchasing power.

regular income. Income that is received at fixed or specified intervals.

split income. An equal division between spouses of earnings reported on a joint tax return, allowing for equal tax treatment in community-property and common-law states.

taxable income. Gross income minus all allowable deductions and exemptions. • Taxable income is multiplied by the applicable tax rate to compute one's tax liability.

unearned income. 1. Earnings from investments rather than labor. — Also termed investment income. 2. Income received but not yet earned; money paid in advance. Cf. earned income.

unrelated business income. Taxable income generated by a tax-exempt organization from a trade or business unrelated to its exempt purpose or activity.

income approach. A method of appraising real property based on capitalization of the income that the property is expected to generate. Cf. MARKET APPROACH; COST APPROACH.

income averaging. Tax. A method of computing tax by averaging a person's current income with that of preceding years.

"A distinct departure from the strict annual system of taxing income is the concept of averaging income, allowed until repeal by the 1986 T.R.A. . . . [T]he rate at which the item was taxed was made to depend not only on the rates and level of income for that year, but upon the taxpayer's experience over the past four years. The item was (sometimes) taxed as if it had been received over a four-year period. Especially for authors, actors, athletes, and other taxpayers who have fluctuating or bunched income and face graduated tax rates that apply on an annual basis, income averaging was most important." John K. McNulty, Federal Income Taxation of Individuals in a Nutshell 353 (5th ed. 1995).

income-based plan. See CHAPTER 13.

income-basis method. A method of computing the rate of return on a security using the interest and price paid rather than the face value.

income beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

income bond. See BOND (3).

income exclusion. See EXCLUSION.

income fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

income in respect of a decedent. See INCOME.

income property. See PROPERTY.

income-shifting. The practice of transferring income to a taxpayer in a lower tax bracket, such as a child, to reduce tax liability. See kiddie tax under TAX.

income statement. A statement of all the revenues, expenses, gains, and losses that a business incurred during a given period. — Also termed statement of income; profit-and-loss statement; earnings report. Cf. BALANCE SHEET.

income stock. See STOCK.

income tax. See TAX.

income-tax deficiency. See DEFICIENCY.

income-tax return. See TAX RETURN.

income-tax withholding. See WITHHOLDING.

income-withholding order. A court order providing for the withholding of a person's income, usu. to enforce a child-support order.

income yield. See CAPITALIZATION RATE.

in common. Shared equally with others, without division into separate ownership parts. See tenancy in common under TENANCY.

in communi (in kə-myoo-ni). [Law Latin] In common.

incommunicado (in-kə-myoo-ni-kah-doh), adj. [Spanish] 1. Without any means of communication. 2. (Of a prisoner) having the right to communicate only with a few designated people.

incommutable (in-kə-myoot-ə-bəl), adj. (Of an offense) not capable of being commuted.

incompatibility, n. The quality or state of being incompatible; irreconcilability. • Incompatibility is recognized as a no-fault ground for divorce in many states. See no-fault divorce under DIVORCE.

incompetence, n. 1. The state or fact of being unable or unqualified to do something <the dispute was over her alleged incompetence as a legal assistant>. 2. INCOMPETENCY <the court held that the affidavit was inadmissible because of the affiant's incompetence>.

incompetency, n. Lack of legal ability in some respect, esp. to stand trial or to testify <once the defense lawyer established her client's incompetency, the client did not have to stand trial>. — Also termed incompetence; mental incompetence. — incompetent, adj. Cf. INCAPACITY.

incompetency hearing. See PATE HEARING.

incompetent, adj. 1. (Of a witness) unqualified to testify. 2. (Of evidence) inadmissible. ● This sense is often criticized, as in the quotation below.

“[Incompetent] is constantly used loosely as equivalent to ‘inadmissible’ on any ground. This use should be avoided.” John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 36 (1935).

incompetent evidence. See EVIDENCE.

incomplete instrument. See INSTRUMENT.

incomplete transfer. See TRANSFER.

inconclusive, adj. (Of evidence) not leading to a conclusion or definite result.

in consideratione inde (in kən-sid-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee in-dee). [Law Latin] In consideration thereof.

in consideratione legis (in kən-sid-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee lee-jis). [Law Latin] 1. In consideration or contemplation of law. 2. In abeyance.

in consideratione praemissorum (in kən-sid-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee pree-mi-sor-əm). [Law Latin] In consideration of the premises.

in consimili casu (in kən-sim-ə-lī kay-s[y]oo). See CONSIMILI CASU.

inconsistent, adj. Lacking consistency; not compatible with another fact or claim <inconsistent statements>.

inconsistent defense. See DEFENSE (1).

inconsistent presumption. See conflicting presumption under PRESUMPTION.

inconsistent statement. See PRIOR INCONSISTENT STATEMENT.

in conspectu ejus (in kən-spek-t[y]oo ee-jəs). [Law Latin] In his sight or view.

in contemplation of death. See CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH.

incontestability clause. An insurance-policy provision (esp. found in a life-insurance policy) that prevents the insurer, after a specified period (usu. one or two years), from disputing the policy’s validity on the basis of fraud or mistake; a clause that bars all defenses except those reserved (usu. conditions and the payment of premiums). ● Most states require that a life-insurance policy contain a clause making the policy incontestable after it has been in effect for a specified period, unless the insured does not pay premiums or violates policy conditions relating to military service. Some states also require similar provisions in accident and sickness policies. — Also termed noncontestability clause; incontestable clause; uncontestable clause. Cf. CONTESTABILITY CLAUSE.

incontestable policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

incontinenti (in-kon-ti-nen-tī), adv. [Law Latin] Immediately; without any interval or intermission. — Also spelled in continenti.

incontrovertible-physical-facts doctrine. See PHYSICAL-FACTS RULE.

inconvenient forum. See FORUM NON CONVENIENS.

incorporamus (in-kor-pə-ray-məs). [Law Latin] Hist. We incorporate. ● This word indicated an intent to incorporate.

“All the other methods therefore whereby corporations exist, by common law, by prescription, and by act of parliament, are for the most part reducible to this of the king’s letters patent, or charter of incorporation. The king’s creation may be performed by the words ‘creamus, erigimus, fundamus, incorporamus,’ or the like.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 461 (1765).

incorporate, vb. 1. To form a legal corporation <she incorporated the family business>. 2. To combine with something else <incorporate the exhibits into the agreement>. 3. To make the terms of another (esp. earlier) document part of a document by specific reference <the codicil incorporated the terms of the will>; esp., to apply the provisions of the Bill of Rights to the states by interpreting the 14th Amendment’s Due Process Clause as encompassing those provisions.

incorporation, n. 1. The formation of a legal corporation. See ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION. 2. Constitutional law. The process of applying the provisions of the Bill of Rights to the states by interpreting the 14th Amendment’s Due Process Clause as encompassing those provisions. ● In a variety of opinions since 1897, the Supreme Court has incorporated all of the Bill of Rights except the following provisions: (1) the Second Amendment right to bear arms, (2) the Third Amendment prohibition of quartering soldiers, (3) the Fifth Amendment right to grand-jury indictment, (4) the Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial in a civil case, and (5) the Eighth Amendment prohibition of excessive bail and fines.

selective incorporation. Incorporation of certain provisions of the Bill of Rights. ● Justice Benjamin Cardozo, who served from 1932 to 1938, first advocated this approach.

total incorporation. Incorporation of all of the Bill of Rights. ● Justice Hugo Black, who served from 1937 to 1971, first advocated this approach.

3. INCORPORATION BY REFERENCE. — incorporate, vb.

incorporation by reference. A method of making a secondary document part of a primary document by including in the primary document a statement that the secondary document should be treated as if it were contained within the primary one. — Often shortened to incorporation. — Also termed adoption by reference.

incorporator. A person who takes part in the formation of a corporation, usu. by executing the articles of incorporation. — Also termed corporator.

“An ‘incorporator’ must be sharply distinguished from a ‘subscriber.’ The latter agrees to buy shares in the corporation; in other words, a subscriber is an investor and participant in the venture. An ‘incorporator’ on the other hand serves the largely ceremonial or ministerial functions described in this section. At one time many states required that an incorporator also be a subscriber of shares; however, such requirement appears to have disappeared in all states.” Robert W. Hamilton, The Law of Corporations in a Nutshell 34 (3d ed. 1991).

in corpore (in kor-pə-ree). [Latin] In body or substance; in a material thing or object.

incorporeal (in-kor-por-ee-əl), adj. Having a conceptual existence but no physical existence; intangible <copyrights and patents are incorporeal property>. — incorporeality, n. Cf. CORPOREAL.

incorporeal chattel. See incorporeal property under PROPERTY.

incorporeal hereditament. See HEREDITAMENT.

incorporeal ownership. See OWNERSHIP.

incorporeal possession. See POSSESSION (3).

incorporeal property. See PROPERTY.

incorporeal thing. See THING.

incorrigibility (in-kor-ə-jə-bil-ə-tee or in-kahr-). Serious or persistent misbehavior by a child, making reformation by parental control impossible or unlikely. Cf. JUVENILE DELINQUENCY.

incorrigible (in-kor-ə-jə-bəl or in-kahr-), adj. Incapable of being reformed; delinquent.

incorrigible child. See CHILD.

Incoterm (in[g]-koh-tərm). A standardized shipping term, defined by the International Chamber of Commerce, that apportions the costs and liabilities of international shipping between buyers and sellers. See C.I.F.; F.O.B.

increase (in-krees), n. 1. The extent of growth or enlargement. 2. Archaic. The produce of land or the offspring of human beings or animals. — increase (in-krees), vb.

increase, costs of. See COSTS OF INCREASE.

increased-risk-of-harm doctrine. See LOSS-OF-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

increment (in[g]-krə-mənt), n. A unit of increase in quantity or value. — incremental, adj.

unearned increment. An increase in the value of real property due to population growth.

incremental cash flow. See CASH FLOW.

incrementum (in-krə-men-təm). [Latin] Hist. Increase. ● This term appeared in various phrases, such as costs de incremento (“costs of increase”). See COSTS OF INCREASE.

increscitur (in-kres-i-tər). See ADDITUR.

incriminate (in-krim-ə-nayt), vb. 1. To charge (someone) with a crime <the witness incriminated the murder suspect>. 2. To identify (oneself or another) as being involved in the commission of a crime or other wrongdoing <the defendant incriminated an accomplice>. — Also termed criminate. — incriminatory, adj.

incriminating, adj. Demonstrating or indicating involvement in criminal activity <incriminating evidence>.

incriminating admission. See ADMISSION (1).

incriminating circumstance. A situation or fact showing either that a crime was committed or that a particular person committed it.

incriminating evidence. See EVIDENCE.

incriminating statement. See STATEMENT.

incrimination. 1. The act of charging someone with a crime. 2. The act of involving someone in a crime. — Also termed crimination. See SELF-INCRIMINATION.

incroach, vb. Archaic. See ENCROACH.

incroachment. Archaic. See ENCROACHMENT.

in cuius rei testimonium (in kyoo-jəs ree-tes-tə-moh-nee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. In witness whereof. ● These words were used to conclude deeds. The modern phrasing of the testimonium clause in deeds and other instruments — beginning with in witness whereof — is a loan translation of the Latin.

inculpatae tutelae moderatio. See MIDERAMEN INCULPATAE TUTELAE.

inculpate (in-kəl-payt or in-kəl-payt), vb. 1. To accuse. 2. To implicate (oneself or another) in a crime or other wrongdoing; INCRIMINATE. — inculpation, n. — inculpatory (in-kəl-pə-tor-ee), adj.

inculpatory evidence. See EVIDENCE.

incumbent (in-kəm-bənt), n. One who holds an official post, esp. a political one. — incumbency, n. — incumbent, adj.

incumbrance. See ENCUMBRANCE.

incur, vb. To suffer or bring on oneself (a liability or expense). — incurrence, n. — incurable, adj.

incurramentum (in-kə-rə-men-təm). [fr. Latin in “upon” + currere “to run”] Hist. The incurring of a fine or penalty.

in custodia legis (in kə-stoh-dee-ə lee-jis). [Latin] In the custody of the law <the debtor’s automobile was in custodia legis after being seized by the sheriff>. ● The phrase is traditionally used in reference to property taken into the court’s charge during pending litigation over it.

inde (in-dee), adv. [Latin] Hist. Thence; thereof. ● This word appeared in several Latin phrases, such as quod eat inde sine die (“that he go thence without date”).

indebitatus (in-deb-i-tay-təs), p.pl. [Law Latin] Indebted. See NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS.

indebitatus assumpsit (in-deb-i-tay-təs ə-səm[p]-sit). See ASSUMPSIT.

indebiti solutio (in-deb-i-ti sə-l[y]oo-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman & Scots law. Payment of what is not owed. ● Money paid under the mistaken belief that it was owed could be recovered by condictio indebiti. See condictio indebiti under CONDICTIO.

“Indebiti Solutio — When a person has paid in error what he was not bound to pay the law lays upon the person who has received payment a duty of restitution. . . . Payment (solutio) includes any performance whereby one person has been enriched at the expense of another. Usually it will be the handing over of money or of some other thing, but it may also consist in undertaking a new liability or in discharging an existing liability.” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 373–74 (4th ed. 1956).

indebitum (in-deb-i-təm). Roman law. A debt that in fact is not owed. ● Money paid for a nonexistent debt could be recovered by the action condictio indebiti. Cf. DEBITUM.

“A conditional debt if paid could be recovered as an indebitum, so long as the condition was outstanding.” W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 255 (2d ed. 1953).

indebtedness (in-det-id-nis). 1. The condition or state of owing money. 2. Something owed; a debt.

indecency, n. The condition or state of being outrageously offensive, esp. in a vulgar or sexual way. • Unlike obscene material, indecent speech is protected under the First Amendment. — indecent, adj. Cf. OBSCENITY.

“Obscenity is that which is offensive to chastity. Indecency is often used with the same meaning, but may also include anything which is outrageously disgusting. These were not the names of common-law crimes, but were words used in describing or identifying certain deeds which were.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 471 (3d ed. 1982).

indecent assault. See sexual assault (2) under ASSAULT.

indecent exhibition. The act of publicly displaying or offering for sale something (such as a photograph or book) that is outrageously offensive, esp. in a vulgar or sexual way.

indecent exposure. An offensive display of one’s body in public, esp. of the genitals. Cf. LEWDNESS; OBSCENITY.

indecent liberties. Improper behavior toward a child, esp. of a sexual nature.

indecimable (in-des-ə-mə-bəl), adj. Hist. Not titheable; not liable for tithes.

indefeasible (in-də-feez-ə-bəl), adj. (Of a claim or right) that cannot be defeated, revoked, or lost <an indefeasible estate>.

indefeasible remainder. See REMAINDER.

indefeasibly vested remainder. See indefeasible remainder under REMAINDER.

indefensus (in-də-fen-səs). [Latin “undefended”] Roman law. A person who fails to make a defense or plea to an action. • The term later acquired a similar meaning in English law.

indefinite detainee. See NONREMOVABLE INMATE.

indefinite failure of issue. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

indefinite sentence. See indeterminate sentence under SENTENCE.

indefinite sentencing. See INDETERMINATE SENTENCING.

in Dei nomine (in dee-I nahm-ə-nee). [Latin] Hist. In the name of God. • The opening phrase of certain writs.

in delicto (in də-lik-toh). [Latin] In fault. Cf. EX DELICTO.

indemnification (in-dem-nə-fi-kay-shən), n. 1. The action of compensating for loss or damage sustained. 2. The compensation so made. — indemnificatory, adj.

indemnifier. See INDEMNITOR.

indemnify (in-dem-nə-fi), vb. 1. To reimburse (another) for a loss suffered because of a third party’s act or default. 2. To promise to reimburse (another) for such a loss. 3. To give (another) security against such a loss.

indemnity (in-dem-nis), adj. [Latin] Hist. Free from loss or damage; harmless.

indemnatee (in-dem-nə-tee). One who receives indemnity from another.

indemnitor (in-dem-nə-tər or -tor). One who indemnifies another. — Also termed indemnifier.

indemnity (in-dem-nə-tee), n. 1. A duty to make good any loss, damage, or liability incurred by another. 2. The right of an injured party to claim reimbursement for its loss, damage, or liability from a person who has such a duty. 3. Reimbursement or compensation for loss, damage, or liability in tort; esp., the right of a party who is secondarily liable to recover from the party who is primarily liable for reimbursement of expenditures paid to a third party for injuries resulting from a violation of a common-law duty. — indemnitory, adj. Cf. CONTRIBUTION.

double indemnity. The payment of twice the basic benefit in the event of a specified loss, esp. as in an insurance contract requiring the insurer to pay twice the policy’s face amount in the case of accidental death.

indemnity against liability. A right to indemnity that arises on the indemnitor's default, regardless of whether the indemnitee has suffered a loss.

"Indemnity against Liability — Where the indemnity is against liability, the cause of action is complete and the indemnitee may recover on the contract as soon as his liability has become fixed and established, even though he has sustained no actual loss or damage at the time he seeks to recover. Thus, under such a contract, a cause of action accrues to the indemnitee on the recovery of a judgment against him, and he may recover from the indemnitor without proof of payment of the judgment." 42 C.J.S. Indemnity § 22 (1991).

indemnity bond. See BOND (2).

indemnity clause. A contractual provision in which one party agrees to answer for any specified or unspecified liability or harm that the other party might incur. — Also termed hold-harmless clause; save-harmless clause. Cf. EXEMPTION CLAUSE.

indemnity insurance. See first-party insurance under INSURANCE.

indemnity land. 1. Public land granted to a railroad company to help defray the cost of constructing a right-of-way. • This land indemnifies a railroad company for land given in a previous grant but since rendered unavailable for railroad use by a disposition or reservation made after the original grant. 2. Federally owned land granted to a state to replace previously granted land that has since been rendered unavailable for the state's use. — Also termed place land.

indemnity principle. Insurance. The doctrine that an insurance policy should not confer a benefit greater in value than the loss suffered by the insured.

indent, n. Hist. An indented certificate of indebtedness issued by the U.S. government or a state government in the late 18th or early 19th century.

indent (in-dent), vb. Hist. 1. To cut in a serrated or wavy line; esp., to sever (an instrument) along a serrated line to create multiple copies, each fitting into the angles of the other. See CHIROGRAPH; INDENTURE (1).

"If a deed be made by more parties than one, there ought to be regularly as many copies of it as there are parties, and each should be cut or indented (formerly in acute angles instar dentium, but at present in a waving line) on the top or side, to tally or correspond with the other; which deed, so made, is called an indenture. . . .

Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists; and with us chirographa, or hand-writings; the word cirographum or cyrographum being usually that which is divided in making the indenture. . . ." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 295–96 (1766).

2. To agree by contract; to bind oneself. 3. To bind (a person) by contract.

indenture (in-den-chər), n. 1. A formal written instrument made by two or more parties with different interests, traditionally having the edges serrated, or indented, in a zigzag fashion to reduce the possibility of forgery and to distinguish it from a deed poll. Cf. deed poll under DEED. 2. A deed or elaborate contract signed by two or more parties.

"The distinction between a deed poll and an indenture is no longer important since 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 5. Formerly a deed made by one party had a polled or smooth-cut edge, a deed made between two or more parties was copied for each on the same parchment, and the copies cut apart with indented edges, so as to enable them to be identified by fitting the parts together. Such deeds were called indentures. An indented edge is not now necessary to give the effect of an indenture to a deed purporting to be such." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 84 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

corporate indenture. A document containing the terms and conditions governing the issuance of debt securities, such as bonds or debentures.

debenture indenture. See DEBENTURE INDENTURE.

trust indenture. 1. A document containing the terms and conditions governing a trustee's conduct and the trust beneficiaries' rights. — Also termed indenture of trust. 2. See deed of trust under DEED.

indenture of a fine. Hist. A document engrossed by the chirographer of fines to reflect penalties assessed by the court. • The chirographer prepared indentures in duplicate on the same piece of parchment, then split the parchment along an indented line through a word, sentence, or drawing placed on the parchment to help ensure its authenticity. See CHIROGRAPHER OF FINES.

indenture of trust. See trust indenture under INDENTURE.

indenture trustee. See TRUSTEE (1).

independence, n. The state or quality of being independent; esp., a country's freedom to manage all its affairs, whether external or internal, without control by other countries.

independent, adj. 1. Not subject to the control or influence of another <independent investigation>. 2. Not associated with another (often larger) entity <an independent subsidiary>. 3. Not dependent or contingent on something else <an independent person>.

independent adjuster. See ADJUSTER.

independent advice. Counsel that is impartial and not given to further the interests of the person giving it. • Whether a testator or donor received independent advice before making a disposition is often an important issue in an undue-influence challenge to the property disposition. — Also termed proper independent advice.

independent agency. See AGENCY (3).

independent agent. See AGENT.

independent audit. See AUDIT.

independent contract. See CONTRACT.

independent contractor. One who is hired to undertake a specific project but who is left free to do the assigned work and to choose the method for accomplishing it. • Unlike an employee, an independent contractor who commits a wrong while carrying out the work does not create liability for the one who did the hiring. Cf. EMPLOYEE.

independent counsel. See COUNSEL.

independent covenant. See COVENANT (1).

independent executor. See EXECUTOR.

independent intervening cause. See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

independent investigation committee. See SPECIAL LITIGATION COMMITTEE.

independent personal representative. See personal representative under REPRESENTATIVE.

independent probate. See informal probate under PROBATE.

independent promise. See unconditional promise under PROMISE.

independent regulatory agency. See independent agency under AGENCY (3).

independent regulatory commission. See independent agency under AGENCY (3).

independent-significance doctrine. The principle that effect will be given to a testator's disposition that is not done solely to avoid the requirements of a will.

independent-source rule. Criminal procedure. The rule providing — as an exception to the fruit-of-the-poisonous-tree doctrine — that evidence obtained by illegal means may nonetheless be admissible if that evidence is also obtained by legal means unrelated to the original illegal conduct. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE. Cf. INEVITABLE-DISCOVERY RULE.

independent state. See SOVEREIGN STATE.

independent union. See UNION.

indestructible trust. See TRUST.

indeterminate, adj. Not definite; not distinct or precise.

indeterminate bond. See BOND (3).

indeterminate conditional release. A type of release from prison granted upon the fulfillment of certain conditions. • The release remains revocable if additional conditions are breached.

indeterminate sentence. See SENTENCE.

indeterminate sentencing. The practice of not imposing a definite term of confinement, but instead prescribing a range for the minimum and maximum term, leaving the precise term to be fixed in some other way, usu. based on the prisoner's conduct and apparent rehabilitation while incarcerated. — Also termed indefinite sentencing. See indeterminate sentence under SENTENCE.

index, n. 1. An alphabetized listing of the topics or other items included in a single book or document, or in a series of volumes, usu. found at the end of the book, document, or series <index of authorities>.

grantee-grantor index. An index, usu. kept in the county recorder's office, alphabetically listing by grantee the volume and page number of the grantee's recorded property transactions. • In some jurisdictions, the grantee-grantor index is combined with the grantor-grantee index.

grantor-grantee index. An index, usu. kept in the county recorder's office, alphabetically listing by grantor the volume and page number of the grantor's recorded property transactions.

tract index. An index, usu. kept in the county recorder's office, listing, by location of each parcel of land, the volume and page number of the recorded property transactions affecting the parcel.

2. A number, usu. expressed in the form of a percentage or ratio, that indicates or measures a series of observations, esp. those involving a market or the economy <cost-of-living index> <stock index>.

advance-decline index. A stock-market indicator showing the cumulative net difference between stock-price advances and declines.

index animi sermo (in-deks an-ə-mi sər-moh). [Latin] Speech is the index of the mind. • This maxim supports the concept that the language of a statute or instrument is the best guide to the drafter's intent.

indexation. See INDEXING.

index crime. See index offense under OFFENSE (1).

index fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

indexing. 1. The practice or method of adjusting of wages, pension benefits, insurance, or other types of payments to compensate for inflation. 2. The practice of investing funds to track or mirror an index of securities. — Also termed indexation.

index lease. See LEASE.

index of authorities. An alphabetical list of authorities cited in a brief, usu. with subcategories for cases, statutes, and treatises. — Also termed table of authorities.

index offense. See OFFENSE (1).

Indian Claims Commission. A federal agency — dissolved in 1978 — that adjudicated claims brought by American Indians, a tribe, or another identifiable group of Indians against the United States. • The U.S. Court of Federal Claims currently hears these claims.

Indian country. 1. The land within the borders of all Indian reservations, the land occupied by an Indian community (whether or not located within a recognized reservation), and any land held in trust by the United States but beneficially owned by an Indian or tribe. 2. Hist. Any region (esp. during the U.S. westward migration) where a person was likely to encounter Indians.

Indian land. Land owned by the United States but held in trust for and used by American Indians. — Also termed Indian tribal property. Cf. TRIBAL LAND.

Indian reservation. An area that the federal government has designated for use by an American Indian tribe, where the tribe generally settles and establishes a tribal government.

Indian Territory. A former U.S. territory — now a part of the state of Oklahoma — to which the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole tribes were forcibly removed between 1830 and 1843. • In the late 19th century, most of this territory was ceded to the United States, and in 1907 the greater part of it became the State of Oklahoma.

Indian title. A right of occupancy that the federal government grants to an American Indian tribe based on the tribe's immemorial possession of the area. — Also termed aboriginal title.

Indian tribal property. See INDIAN LAND.

Indian tribe. A group, band, nation, or other organized group of indigenous American people, including any Alaskan native village, that is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the U.S. government because of Indian status (42 USCA § 9601(36)); esp., any such group having a federally recognized governing body that carries out substantial governmental duties and powers over an area (42 USCA § 300f(14); 40 CFR § 146.3). • A tribe may be identified in various ways, esp. by past dealings with other tribes or with the federal, state, or local government, or by recognition in historical records.

"The Indian tribe is the fundamental unit of Indian Law; in its absence there is no occasion for the law to operate. Yet there is no all-purpose definition of an Indian tribe. A group of Indians may qualify as a tribe for the purpose of one statute or federal program, but fail to qualify for others. Definitions must accordingly be used with extreme caution." William C. Canby, Jr., American Indian Law in a Nutshell 3-4 (2d ed. 1988).

indicare (in-di-kair-ee), vb. [Latin] 1. Roman law. To accuse (someone) of a crime. 2. Civil law. To show or discover. 3. Civil law. To fix or tell the price of a thing. See INDICIUM.

indicator. Securities. An average or index that shows enough of a correlation to market trends or economic conditions that it can help analyze market performance.

coincident indicator. An economic or market-activity index or indicator that shows changing trends near the same time that overall conditions begin to change.

economic indicator. See ECONOMIC INDICATOR.

lagging indicator. 1. An index that indicates a major stock-market change sometime after the change occurs. 2. See lagging economic indicator under ECONOMIC INDICATOR.

leading indicator. 1. A quantifiable index that predicts a major stock-market change. 2. See leading economic indicator under ECONOMIC INDICATOR.

indicavit (in-di-kay-vit). [Law Latin "he has indicated"] Hist. A writ of prohibition by which a church patron removes to a common-law court an ecclesiastical-court action between two clerics who dispute each other's right to a benefice. • The writ was long available — nominally up to the 20th century — under the statute De Coniunctim Feoffatis (1306). Actions concerning clerics' rights to a benefice were usu. tried in ecclesiastical courts, but they could be removed to a common-law court if the action involved a church patron in some way, as when one cleric was appointed by a certain patron and the other cleric was appointed by another patron. Cf. ADVOWSON.

indicia (in-dish-ee-ə), n. 1. Roman law. Evidence. 2. (pl.) Signs; indications <the purchase receipts are indicia of ownership>.

indicia of title. A document that evidences ownership of personal or real property.

indicium (in-dish-ee-əm). [Latin] Roman law. 1. The act of accusing someone of a crime. 2. The act of promising recompense for a certain service. 3. A sign or mark; esp., something used as a type of proof. See INDICARE.

indict (in-dīt), vb. To charge (a person) with a crime by formal legal process, esp. by grand-jury presentation. — Also formerly spelled en-dite; indite.

indictable offense (in-dīt-ə-bəl ə-fents). See OFFENSE (1).

indicttee (in-dī-tee). A person who has been indicted; one officially charged with a crime.

indictio (in-dik-shee-oh). [Latin] 1. Roman law. An imperial proclamation establishing a 15-year period for the reassessment of property values for tax purposes. • Indictio also referred to the 15-year cycle itself. 2. A declaration or proclamation, such as a declaration of war (indictio belli). 3. An indictment.

indictment (in-dīt-mənt), n. 1. The formal written accusation of a crime, made by a grand jury and presented to a court for prosecution against the accused person. 2. The act or process of preparing or bringing forward such a formal written accusation. Cf. INFORMATION; PRESENTMENT (2).

barebones indictment. An indictment that cites only the language of the statute allegedly violated; an indictment that does not provide a factual statement.

"What has been called 'a bare bones indictment using only statutory language' is quite common, and entirely permissible so long as the statute sets forth fully, directly, and expressly all essential elements of the crime intended to be punished." 1 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 125, at 558-59 (3d ed. 1999).

duplicitous indictment (d[y]oo-plis-ə-təs). The joining of two or more offenses in the same count of an indictment. — Also termed duplicitous information.

joint indictment. An indictment that charges two or more people with an offense.

indictor (in-dīt-ər or in-dī-tor). A person who causes another to be indicted.

in diem (in dī-əm or dee-əm). [Latin] For each day; per day. Cf. PER DIEM.

indigena (in-dij-ə-nə). [Latin "native"] Hist. A subject born within the English realm or naturalized by act of Parliament. Cf. ALIENIGENA.

indigent (in-dī-jənt), n. A poor person. — indigency, indigence, n. — indigent, adj. See PAUPER.

indigent defendant. A person who is too poor to hire a lawyer and who, upon indictment, becomes eligible to receive aid from a court-appointed attorney and a waiver of court costs. See IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

indignity. Family law. A ground for divorce consisting in one spouse's pattern of behavior calculated to humiliate the other.

indirect attack. See COLLATERAL ATTACK.

indirect confession. See CONFESSION.

indirect contempt. See constructive contempt under CONTEMPT.

indirect cost. See COST (1).

indirect evidence. See circumstantial evidence under EVIDENCE.

indirect loss. See consequential loss under LOSS.

indirect notice. See implied notice under NOTICE.

indirect possession. See mediate possession under POSSESSION.

indirect-purchaser doctrine. Antitrust. The principle that in litigation for price discrimination, the court will ignore sham middle parties in determining whether different prices were paid by different customers for the same goods. ● This doctrine gives standing to bring an antitrust action to a party who is not an immediate purchaser of a product. Thus, if a manufacturer sells a product to a retailer, but dictates the terms by which the retailer must sell the product to a consumer, a court will ignore the retailer and treat the consumer as the direct purchaser of the product.

indirect tax. See TAX.

indiscriminate attack. Int'l law. An aggressive act that (1) is not carried out for a specific military objective, (2) employs a means of combat not directed at a specific military objective, or (3) employs a means of combat the effects of which cannot be limited in accordance with an international protocol such as the Geneva Convention of 1949.

indispensable-element test. Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, based on whether the defendant acquires control over the thing that is essential to the crime. ● Under this test, for example, a person commits a crime by buying the explosives with which to detonate a bomb. See ATTEMPT (2).

indispensable evidence. See EVIDENCE.

indispensable party. See PARTY (2).

indistanter (in-di-stan-tər), adv. [Law Latin "immediately"] Forthwith; without delay.

individual, adj. 1. Existing as an indivisible entity. 2. Of or relating to a single person or thing, as opposed to a group.

individual account plan. See defined-contribution plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

individual asset. See ASSET.

individual debt. See DEBT.

individual liberty. See personal liberty under LIBERTY.

individual property. See SEPARATE PROPERTY (1).

individual proprietorship. See SOLE PROPRIETORSHIP.

individual retirement account. A savings or brokerage account to which a person may contribute up to a specified amount of earned income each year ($2,000 under current law). ● The contributions, along with any interest earned in the account, are not taxed until the money is withdrawn after a participant reaches 59½ (or before then, if a 10% penalty is paid). — Abbr. IRA.

Roth IRA. An IRA in which contributions are nondeductible when they are made. ● No further taxes are assessed on the contributions (or accrued interest) when the money is withdrawn (if all applicable rules are followed). This term takes its name from Senator William Roth, who sponsored the legislation creating this type of IRA.

indivisible, adj. Not separable into parts <an indivisible debt>.

indivision. Civil law. Undivided ownership of property; the condition of being owned by coowners each having an undivided interest in the property.

indivisum (in-di-vi-səm or -zəm), adj. [Latin] Roman law. (Of property) held in common; not divided.

indorsee (in-dor-see). A person to whom a negotiable instrument is transferred by indorsement. — Also spelled endorsee.

indorsee in due course. An indorsee who, in the ordinary course of business, acquires a negotiable instrument in good faith for value, before its maturity, and without knowledge of its dishonor.

indorsement, n. 1. The placing of a signature, sometimes with an additional notation, on the back of a negotiable instrument to transfer or guarantee the instrument or to acknowledge payment. 2. The signature or notation itself. — Also spelled endorsement. — indorse, vb.

“The clever indorser can subscribe his or her name under a variety of magic phrases. The Code specifies the legal effect of some of these phrases. Qualified indorsements (‘without recourse’) limit the liability of the indorser if the instrument is dishonored. Restrictive indorsements such as ‘for deposit only,’ ‘pay any bank,’ and the like set the terms for further negotiation of the instrument. Their main purpose is to prevent thieves and embezzlers from cashing checks.” 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 16-7, at 92-93 (4th ed. 1995).

accommodation indorsement. An indorsement to an instrument by a third party who acts as surety for another party who remains primarily liable. See ACCOMMODATION PAPER.

anomalous indorsement. See irregular indorsement.

blank indorsement. An indorsement that names no specific payee, thus making the instrument payable to the bearer and negotiable by delivery only. UCC § 3-205(b). — Also termed indorsement in blank; general indorsement.

collection indorsement. See restrictive indorsement.

conditional indorsement. An indorsement that restricts the instrument in some way, as by limiting how the instrument can be paid or transferred; an indorsement giving possession of the instrument to the indorsee, but retaining title until the occurrence of some condition named in the indorsement. • Wordings that indicate this type of indorsement are “Pay to Brad Jones when he becomes 18 years of age” and “Pay to Brigitte Turner, or order, unless before payment I give you notice to the contrary.” Cf. special indorsement.

full indorsement. See special indorsement.

general indorsement. See blank indorsement.

indorsement in blank. See blank indorsement.

indorsement in full. See special indorsement.

indorsement without recourse. See qualified indorsement.

irregular indorsement. An indorsement by a person who signs outside the chain of title and who therefore is neither a holder nor a transferor of the instrument. • An irregular indorser is generally treated as an accommodation party. See ACCOMMODATION PARTY. — Also termed anomalous indorsement; full indorsement.

qualified indorsement. An indorsement that passes title to the instrument but limits the indorser’s liability to later holders if the instrument is later dishonored. • Typically, a qualified indorsement is made by writing “without recourse” or “sans recourse” over the signature. — Also termed indorsement without recourse. UCC § 3-415(b). See WITH-OUT RECOURSE.

restrictive indorsement. An indorsement that includes a condition (e.g., “pay Josefina Cardoza only if she has worked 8 full hours on April 13”) or any other language restricting further negotiation (e.g., “for deposit only”). — Also termed collection indorsement.

special indorsement. An indorsement that specifies the person to receive payment or to whom the goods named by the document must be delivered. UCC § 3-205(a). — Also termed indorsement in full; full indorsement. Cf. conditional indorsement.

trust indorsement. An indorsement stating that the payee becomes a trustee for a third person (e.g., “pay Erin Ray in trust for Kaitlin Ray”); a restrictive indorsement that limits the instrument to the use of the indorser or another person.

unauthorized indorsement. An indorsement made without authority, such as a forged indorsement.

unqualified indorsement. An indorsement that does not limit the indorser’s liability on the paper. • It does not, for example, include the phrase “without recourse.” unrestrictive indorsement. An indorsement that includes no condition or language restricting negotiation. — Also termed unrestricted indorsement.

indorser. A person who transfers a negotiable instrument by indorsement. — Also spelled endorser.

accommodation indorser. An indorser who acts as surety for another person.

in dubio (in d[y]oo-bee-oh), adv. & adj. [Latin] In doubt.

inducement, n. 1. The act or process of enticing or persuading another person to take a certain course of action. See fraud in the inducement under FRAUD.

active inducement. The act of intentionally causing a third party to infringe a valid patent. • Active inducement requires proof of an actual intent to cause the patent infringement.

inducement of breach of contract. See TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACTUAL RELATIONS.

induciae legales (in-d[y]oo-shee-ee lə-gay-leez). [Latin] Civil & Scots law. The days allowed after summons for a defendant to appear in court.

inducing infringement. See infringement in the inducement under INFRINGEMENT.

induct, vb. 1. To put into possession of (something, such as an office or benefice). 2. To admit as a member. 3. To enroll for military service.

inductio (in-dək-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. The act of erasing a writing or part of it, as when a testator struck a legacy from a will.

induction. 1. The act or process of initiating <the induction of three new members into the legal fraternity>. 2. The act or process of reasoning from specific instances to general propositions <after looking at several examples, the group reasoned by induction that it is a very poor practice to begin a new paragraph by abruptly bringing up a new case>. Cf. DEDUCTION (3).

indult (in-dəlt). Eccles. law. A dispensation granted by the Pope to do or obtain something contrary to canon law. — Also termed indulto.

indulto (in-dəl-toh). [Spanish] 1. A pardon or amnesty. 2. Hist. A duty paid on imported goods to the Spanish or Portuguese Crown.

in duplo (in d[y]oo-ploh), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] Hist. In double. • This term appeared in phrases such as damna in duplo ("double damages"). — Also termed (in Roman law) in duplum.

industrial-development bond. See BOND (3).

industrial disease. See OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE.

industrial espionage. See ESPIONAGE.

industrial goods. See capital goods under GOODS.

industrial life insurance. See INSURANCE.

industrial relations. All dealings and relationships between an employer and its employees, including collective bargaining about issues such as safety and benefits.

industrial-revenue bond. See industrial-development bond under BOND (3).

industrial union. See UNION.

industry. 1. Diligence in the performance of a task. 2. Systematic labor for some useful purpose; esp., work in manufacturing or production. 3. A particular form or branch of productive labor; an aggregate of enterprises employing similar production and marketing facilities to produce items having markedly similar characteristics.

industry-wide liability. See enterprise liability under LIABILITY.

indutiae (in-d[y]oo-shee-ee). [Latin] 1. Roman & int'l law. A truce or cessation of hostilities; an armistice. — Also spelled (in Roman law) indutiae. 2. Roman & civil law. A delay allowed for performing an obligation. 3. Maritime law. A period of 20 days in which a bottomrybond debtor may unload the ship's cargo and pay the bond. — Also spelled induciae.

in eadem causa (in ee-ay-dəm kaw-zə), adv. [Latin] Hist. In the same cause; in the same state or condition.

infringement, n. Intellectual property. An act that interferes with one of the exclusive rights of a patent, copyright, or trademark owner. — infringe, vb. See INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY. Cf. PLAGIARISM.

contributory infringement. 1. The act of participating in, or contributing to, the infringing acts of another person. • For contributory infringement, the law imposes vicarious liability. 2. Patents. The act of aiding or abetting another person's patent infringement by knowingly selling a nonstaple item that has no substantial noninfringing use and is especially adapted for use in a patented combination or process. • In the patent context, contributory infringement is statutorily defined in the Patent Act. 35 USCA § 271(c). 3. Copyright. The act of either (1) actively inducing, causing, or materially contributing to the infringing conduct of another person, or (2) providing the goods or means necessary to help another person infringe (as by making facilities available for an infringing performance). • In the copyright context, contributory infringement is a common-law doctrine. 4. Trademarks. A manufacturer's or distributor's conduct in knowingly supplying, for resale, goods bearing an infringing mark.

copyright infringement. The act of violating any of a copyright owner's exclusive rights granted by the federal Copyright Act, 17 USCA §§ 106, 602. • A copyright owner has several exclusive rights in copyrighted works, including the rights (1) to reproduce the work, (2) to prepare derivative works based on the work, (3) to distribute copies of the work, (4) for certain kinds of works, to perform the work publicly, (5) for certain kinds of works, to display the work publicly, (6) for sound recordings, to perform the work publicly, and (7) to import into the United States copies acquired elsewhere.

criminal infringement. The statutory criminal offense of either (1) willfully infringing a copyright to obtain a commercial advantage or financial gain (17 USCA § 506; 18 USCA § 2319), or (2) trafficking in goods or services that bear a counterfeit mark (18 USCA § 2320). • Under the second category, the statute imposes criminal penalties if the counterfeit mark is (1) identical with, or substantially indistinguishable from, a mark registered on the Principal Register of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, and (2) likely to confuse or deceive the public.

direct infringement. Patents. The act of making, using, selling, offering for sale, or importing into the United States, without the patent owner's permission, a product that is covered by the claims of a valid patent. 35 USCA § 271(a). Cf. contributory infringement; infringement in the inducement.

domain-name infringement. Infringement of another's trademark or servicemark by the use of a confusingly similar Internet domain name.

infringement in the inducement. Patents. The act of actively and knowingly aiding and abetting direct infringement by another person. • While the term is occasionally used in copyright and trademark law to mean contributory infringement, it is usu. reserved for the patent context. — Also termed inducing infringement.

innocent infringement. The act of violating an intellectual-property right without knowledge or awareness that the act constitutes infringement. • An innocent infringer may, in limited circumstances, escape liability for some or all of the damages. In the copyright context, damages may be limited if (1) the infringer was misled by the lack of a copyright notice on an authorized copy of the copyrighted work, distributed under the owner's authority before March 1989 (the effective date of the Berne Convention Implementation Act of 1988), and (2) the infringing act occurred before the infringer received actual notice of the copyright. 17 USCA § 405(b). In the trademark context, publishers and distributors of paid advertisements who innocently infringe a mark have no liability for damages. 15 USCA § 1114. In both contexts, the innocent infringer is immunized only from an award of monetary damages, not from injunctive relief.

literal infringement. Patents. Infringement in which every element and every limitation of a patent claim is present, exactly, in the accused product or process. Cf. DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

nonliteral infringement. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

patent infringement. The unauthorized making, using, offering to sell, selling, or importing into the United States any patented invention. 35 USCA § 271(a).

"In determining whether an accused device or composition infringes a valid patent, resort must be had in the first instance to the words of the claim. If accused matter falls clearly within the claim, infringement is made out and that is the end of it." Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Prods. Co., 339 U.S. 605, 607, 70 S.Ct. 854, 855 (1950) (Jackson, J.).

trademark infringement. The unauthorized use of a trademark — or of a confusingly similar name, word, symbol, or any combination of these — in connection with the same or related goods or services and in a manner that is likely to cause confusion, deception, or mistake about the source of the goods or services. See LIKELIHOOD-OF-CONFUSION TEST.

vicarious infringement. A person's liability for an infringing act of someone else, even though the person has not directly committed an act of infringement. • For example, a concert theater can be vicariously liable for an infringing performance of a hired band.

willful infringement. An intentional and deliberate infringement of another person's intellectual property.

infringer. A person who interferes with one of the exclusive rights of a patent, copyright, or trademark owner. See INFRINGEMENT.

mandatory injunction. An injunction that orders an affirmative act or mandates a specified course of conduct. — Also termed affirmative injunction. Cf. prohibitory injunction.

permanent injunction. An injunction granted after a final hearing on the merits. ● Despite its name, a permanent injunction does not necessarily last forever. — Also termed perpetual injunction; final injunction.

perpetual injunction. See permanent injunction.

preliminary injunction. A temporary injunction issued before or during trial to prevent an irreparable injury from occurring before the court has a chance to decide the case. ● A preliminary injunction will be issued only after the defendant receives notice and an opportunity to be heard. — Also termed interlocutory injunction; temporary injunction; provisional injunction. Cf. TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER.

preventive injunction. An injunction designed to prevent a loss or injury in the future. Cf. reparative injunction.

prohibitory injunction. An injunction that forbids or restrains an act. ● This is the most common type of injunction. Cf. mandatory injunction.

provisional injunction. See preliminary injunction.

quia-timet injunction (kwī-ə tī-mət or kwee-ə tim-et). [Latin “because he fears”] An injunction granted to prevent an action that has been threatened but has not yet violated the plaintiff’s rights. See QUIA TIMET.

reparative injunction (ri-par-ə-tiv). An injunction requiring the defendant to restore the plaintiff to the position that the plaintiff occupied before the defendant committed the wrong. Cf. preventive injunction.

special injunction. Hist. An injunction in which the prohibition of an act is the only relief ultimately sought, as in prevention of waste or nuisance.

temporary injunction. See preliminary injunction.

injunction bond. See BOND (2).

injunctive, adj. That has the quality of directing or ordering; of or relating to an injunction. — Also termed injunctional.

in jure (in joor-ee). [Latin “in law”] 1. According to the law. 2. Roman law. Before the praetor or other magistrate. ● In jure referred to the first stage of a Roman trial, held before the praetor for the purpose of establishing the legal issues present in the action. Evidence was taken in the second stage, which was held before a judex. — Also spelled in iure. See FORMULA (1). Cf. IN JUDICIO.

in jure alterius (in joor-ee al-teer-ee-əs), adv. [Latin] In another’s right.

in jure cessio (in joor-ee sesh-ee-oh). [Latin “a surrender in law”] Roman law. A fictitious trial held to transfer ownership of property. ● At trial, the transferee appeared before a praetor and asserted ownership of the property. The actual owner also appeared, but did not contest the assertion, and so allowed the transfer of the property to the plaintiff. — Also spelled in iure cessio.

in jure proprio (in joor-ee proh-pree-oh), adv. [Latin] In one’s own right.

injuria (in-joor-ee-ə). [Latin] See INJURY (1); WRONG. Pl. injuriae (in-joor-ee-ee).

“By injuria (or outrage), as the fourth ground of delict obligation, is meant some affronting wrong, calculated to wound the self-respect and touch the honor of the person injured, to humiliate or degrade him in the view of others.” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 243 (N.Y., D. Appleton & Co. 1881).

“The term injuria [is best] used in its original and proper sense of wrong (in jus, contrary to law). The modern use of ‘injury’ as a synonym for damage is unfortunate but inveterate.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 13 nn.51–52 (17th ed. 1977).

injuria absque damno (in-joor-ee-ə abs-kwee dam-noh). [Latin “injury without damage”] A legal wrong that will not sustain a lawsuit because no harm resulted from it. — Also termed injuria sine damno. Cf. DAMNUM SINE INJURIA.

while slander (that is to say, oral as opposed to written defamation) is in most cases not actionable without proof of actual damage.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 14 (17th ed. 1977).

injurious, adj. Harmful; tending to injure.

injurious exposure. Workers’ compensation. Contact with a substance that would cause injury if the person were repeatedly exposed to it over time. ● An employer may be found liable for harm resulting from injurious exposure.

injurious falsehood. See DISPARAGEMENT.

injury, n. 1. The violation of another’s legal right, for which the law provides a remedy; a wrong or injustice. See WRONG. 2. Harm or damage. — injure, vb. — injurious, adj.

accidental injury. An injury resulting from external, violent, and unanticipated causes; esp., a bodily injury caused by some external force or agency operating contrary to a person’s intentions, unexpectedly, and not according to the usual order of events.

bodily injury. Physical damage to a person’s body. — Also termed physical injury. Cf. grievous bodily harm under HARM.

civil injury. Physical harm or property damage caused by breach of a contract or by a criminal offense redressable through a civil action.

compensable injury (kəm-pen-sə-bəl). Workers’ compensation. An injury caused by an accident arising from the employment and in the course of the employee’s work, and for which the employee is statutorily entitled to receive compensation.

continual injury. An injury that recurs at repeated intervals. — Also termed (but improperly) continuous injury.

continuing injury. An injury that is still in the process of being committed. ● An example is the constant smoke or noise of a factory.

direct injury. 1. An injury resulting directly from violation of a legal right. 2. An injury resulting directly from a particular cause, without any intervening causes.

injury in fact. An actual or imminent invasion of a legally protected interest, in contrast to an invasion that is conjectural or hypothetical. ● An injury in fact gives the victim standing to bring an action for damages.

irreparable injury (i-rep-ər-ə-bəl). An injury that cannot be adequately measured or compensated by money and is therefore often considered remediable by injunction. — Also termed irreparable harm. See IRREPARABLE-INJURY RULE.

legal injury. Violation of a legal right.

malicious injury. 1. An injury resulting from a willful act committed with knowledge that it is likely to injure another or with reckless disregard of the consequences. 2. MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

permanent injury. 1. A completed wrong whose consequences cannot be remedied for an indefinite period. 2. An injury to land the consequences of which will endure until the reversioner takes possession, as a result of which the reversioner has a present right of possession.

personal injury. Torts. 1. In a negligence action, any harm caused to a person, such as a broken bone, a cut, or a bruise; bodily injury. 2. Any invasion of a personal right, including mental suffering and false imprisonment. 3. For purposes of workers’ compensation, any harm (including a worsened preexisting condition) that arises in the scope of employment.

physical injury. See bodily injury.

reparable injury (rep-ər-ə-bəl). An injury that can be adequately compensated by money.

scheduled injury. A partially disabling injury for which a predetermined amount of compensation is allowed under a workers’-compensation statute.

injury in fact. See INJURY.

injury-in-fact trigger. See ACTUAL-INJURY TRIGGER.

injustice. 1. An unjust state of affairs; unfairness. 2. An unjust act.

in jus vocare (in jəs voh-kair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To summon a defendant to court.

in kind, adv. 1. In goods or services rather than money <payment in cash or in kind>. 2. In a similar way; with an equivalent of what has been offered or received <returned the favor in kind>. — in-kind, adj. <in-kind repayment>.

inlagare (in-lə-gair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To restore (an outlaw) to the protection of the law. Cf. UTLAGARE.

inlagation (in-lə-gay-shən), n. [Law Latin] Hist. The act of restoring an outlaw to the protection of the law; inlawry. Cf. UTLAGATION.

inlagh (in-law). Hist. A person within the protection of the law, in contrast to an outlaw. Cf. UTLAGH.

inland. 1. The interior part of a country or region, away from the coast or border. 2. Hist. The portion of a feudal estate lying closest to the lord’s manor and dedicated to the support of the lord’s family. — Also termed (in sense 2) inlantal. Cf. UTLAND.

inland bill of exchange. See domestic bill (2) under BILL (6).

inland draft. See DRAFT.

inland marine insurance. See INSURANCE.

inland revenue. See INTERNAL REVENUE.

inland trade. See TRADE.

inland waters. See INTERNAL WATERS.

inlantal (in-lan-təl). Hist. See INLAND (2). — Also spelled inlantale.

in law. Existing in law or by force of law; in the contemplation of the law. Cf. IN FACT.

in-law, n. A relative by marriage.

inlaw, vb. Archaic. To place (an offender) under the protection of the law. Cf. OUTLAW (1).

“If the king inlaws him, he comes back into the world like a new-born babe, quasi modo genitus, capable indeed of acquiring new rights, but unable to assert any of those that he had before his outlawry.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 477 (2d ed. 1898).

in lecto mortali (in lek-toh mor-tay-li), adv. & adj. [Latin] On the deathbed.

in liberam elemosinam (in lib-ər-əm el-ə-mə-si-nəm). [Latin “in free alms”] Hist. Land given away for a charitable purpose; land given away to be held in frankalmoin. — Also spelled in liberam eleemosinam. — Also termed in libera elemosina. See FRANKALMOIN.

in libero sochagio (in lib-ər-oh sə-kay-jee-oh), adv. [Law Latin] In free socage. See SOCAGE.

in lieu of. Instead of or in place of; in exchange or return for <the creditor took a note in lieu of cash> <the defendant was released in lieu of $5,000 bond>.

in limine (in lim-ə-nee), adv. [Latin “at the outset”] Preliminarily; presented to only the judge, before or during trial . See MOTION IN LIMINE.

in-limine, adj. (Of a motion or order) raised preliminarily, esp. because of an issue about the admissibility of evidence believed by the movant to be prejudicial <in-limine motion>.

in litem (in li-tem or -təm), adv. [Latin] For a suit; to the suit. See AD LITEM.

in loco (in loh-koh). [Latin] In the place of.

in loco parentis (in loh-koh pə-ren-tis), adv. & adj. [Latin “in the place of a parent”] Acting as a temporary guardian of a child.

in loco parentis, n. Supervision of a young adult by an administrative body such as a university.

in majorem cautelam (in mə-jor-əm kaw-tee-ləm), adv. [Latin] For a greater security.

in manu mortua. See IN MORTUA MANU.

inmate. 1. A person confined in a prison, hospital, or other institution. 2. Archaic. A person living inside a place; one who lives with others in a dwelling.

in medias res (in mee-dee-əs reez or in me-dee-ahs rays), adv. [Latin] Into the middle of things; without preface or introduction.

in mercy, adv. At a judge’s discretion concerning punishment. ● A judgment formerly noted (by the Law Latin phrase in misericordia) which litigant lost by stating that the unsuccessful party was in the court’s mercy. A plaintiff held in mercy for a false claim, for example, was said to be in misericordia pro falso clamore suo.

in misericordia (in miz-ə-ri-kor-dee-ə). [Law Latin] See IN MERCY.

in mitiori sensu (in mish-ee-or-I sens-[y]oo), adv. [Law Latin] In a milder or more favorable sense. ● This phrase appeared as part of the former rule applied in slander actions. A word capable of two meanings would be given the one more favorable to the defendant.

“Within half a century of its first appearance, the action for words had become part of the everyday business of the common-law courts, in particular the King’s Bench. In the early days there were often more slander cases in the rolls than assumpsit The judges apparently came to regret this aspect of their increased jurisdiction, especially since juries frequently awarded sums of money quite disproportionate to the harm and to the ability of the wrongdoer to pay [T]he principal effect of the judicial reaction was that a spirit of repression began to manifest itself The . . . most effective attack was launched in the 1570s, when the courts began the policy of construing ambiguous or doubtful words in the milder sense (in mitiori sensu) so that they would not be actionable.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 500–01 (3d ed. 1990).

in modum assisae (in moh-dəm ə-si-zee), adv. [Law Latin] In the manner or form of an assize. See ASSIZE.

in modum juratae (in moh-dəm juu-ray-tee), adv. [Law Latin] In the manner or form of a jury.

in mora (in mor-ə), adv. & adj. [Latin] Roman law. In delay; in default. ● This was said of a debtor who delayed performance or failed to perform.

in mortua manu (in mor-choo-ə man-yoo), adv. [Law Latin] Hist. In a dead hand. ● Land held by a religious society was described this way because the church could hold property perpetually without rendering feudal service. — Also termed in manu mortua. See MORTMAIN; DEADHAND CONTROL.

innavigable (in-nav-i-gə-bəl), adj. 1. (Of a body of water) not capable of, or unsuitable for, navigation. 2. Marine insurance. (Of a vessel) unfit for service. — Also termed unnavigable.

inner bar. English law. The group of senior barristers, called the Queen’s Counsel or King’s Counsel, who are admitted to plead within the bar of the court. Cf. OUTER BAR.

inner barrister. See BARRISTER.

inner cabinet. See CABINET.

inning. (pl.) Land reclaimed from the sea.

innkeeper. A person who, for compensation, keeps open a public house for the lodging and entertainment of travelers. • A keeper of a boarding house is usually not considered an innkeeper.

innocence, n. The absence of guilt; esp., freedom from guilt for a particular offense. Cf. GUILT.

actual innocence. Criminal law. The absence of facts that are prerequisites for the sentence given to a defendant. • In death-penalty cases, actual innocence is an exception to the cause-and-prejudice rule, and can result in a successful challenge to the death sentence on the basis of a defense that was not presented to the trial court. The prisoner must show by clear and convincing evidence that, but for constitutional error in the trial court, no reasonable juror would find the defendant eligible for the death penalty. See Sawyer v. Whitley, 505 U.S. 333, 112 S.Ct. 2514 (1992). Cf. CAUSE-AND-PREJUDICE RULE.

legal innocence. Criminal law. The absence of one or more procedural or legal bases to support the sentence given to a defendant. • In the context of a petition for writ of habeas corpus or other attack on the sentence, legal innocence is often contrasted with actual innocence. Actual innocence, which focuses on the facts underlying the sentence, can sometimes be used to obtain relief from the death penalty based on trial-court errors that were not objected to at trial, even if the petitioner cannot meet the elements of the cause-and-prejudice rule. But legal innocence, which focuses on the applicable law and procedure, is not as readily available. Inadvertence or a poor trial strategy resulting in the defendant's failure to assert an established legal principle will not ordinarily be sufficient to satisfy the cause-and-prejudice rule or to establish the right to an exception from that rule. See CAUSE-AND-PREJUDICE RULE.

innocent, adj. Free from guilt; free from legal fault. Cf. NOT GUILTY (2).

innocent agent. Criminal law. A person whose action on behalf of a principal is unlawful but does not merit prosecution because the agent had no knowledge of the principal's illegal purpose.

innocent-construction rule. The doctrine that an allegedly libelous statement will be given an innocuous interpretation if the statement is either ambiguous or harmless.

innocent conveyance. See CONVEYANCE.

innocent homicide. See HOMICIDE.

innocent infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

innocent junior user. Trademarks. A person who, without any actual or constructive knowledge, uses a trademark that has been previously used in a geographically distant market, and who may continue to use the trademark in a limited geographic area as long as the senior user does not use the mark there.

innocent misrepresentation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

innocent passage. Int'l law. The right of a foreign ship to pass through a country's territorial waters, esp. waters connecting two open seas; the right of a foreign vessel to travel through a country's maritime belt without paying a toll. • Passage is considered innocent as long as it is not prejudicial to the peace, good order, and security of the coastal country. — Also termed right of innocent passage. Cf. TRANSIT PASSAGE.

"The term 'innocent passage' accurately denotes the nature of the right as well as its limitations. In the first place it is a right of 'passage,' that is to say, a right to use the waters as a thoroughfare between two points outside them; a ship proceeding through the maritime belt to a port of the coastal state would not be exercising a right of passage. In the second place the passage must be 'innocent'; a ship exercising the right must respect the local regulations as to navigation, pilotage, and the like, and, of course, it must not do any act which might disturb the tranquillity of the coastal state. That state therefore must be entitled to exercise some jurisdiction over ships in passage, but the extent of this is not altogether certain, and in particular there is some doubt how far the coastal state may enforce its own criminal or civil laws against persons on board a ship in passage." J.L. Brierly, The Law of Nations 188-89 (5th ed. 1955).

innocent purchaser. See bona fide purchaser under PURCHASER.

innocent purchaser for value. See bona fide purchaser for value under PURCHASER.

innocent spouse. Tax. A spouse who may be relieved of liability for taxes on income that the other spouse did not include on a joint tax return. • The innocent spouse must prove that the other spouse omitted the income, that the innocent spouse did not know and had no reason to know of the omission, and that it would be unfair under the circumstances to hold the innocent spouse liable.

innocent trespass. See TRESPASS.

innocent trespasser. See TRESPASSER.

Inn of Chancery. Hist. Any of nine collegiate houses where students studied either to gain entry into an Inn of Court or to learn how to frame writs in order to serve in the chancery courts. • Over time, the Inns — Clement's, Clifford's, Lyon's, Furnival's, Thavies', Symond's, Barnard's, Staples', and the New Inn — became little more than dining clubs, and never exercised control over their members as the Inns of Court did. The Inns of Chancery were all dissolved in the 19th century. Cf. INN OF COURT.

Inn of Court. 1. Any of four autonomous institutions, one or more of which English barristers must join to receive their training and of which they remain members for life: The Honourable Societies of Lincoln's Inn, the Middle Temple, the Inner Temple, and Gray's Inn. • These powerful bodies examine candidates for the Bar, "call" them to the Bar, and award the degree of barrister. 2. (pl.) In the United States, an organization (formally named the American Inns of Court Foundation) with more than 100 local chapters, whose members include judges, practicing attorneys, law professors, and law students. • Through monthly meetings, the chapters emphasize practice skills, professionalism, and ethics, and provide mentors to train students and young lawyers in the finer points of good legal practice.

innominate (i-nom-ə-nit), adj. Civil law. Unclassified; having no special name or designation. See innominate contract under CONTRACT.

innominate contract. See CONTRACT.

innominate obligations. Obligations having no specific classification or name because they are not strictly contractual, delictual, or quasi-contractual. • An example is the obligation of a trustee to a beneficiary. — Also termed obligationes innominati.

innominate real contract. See innominate contract under CONTRACT.

in nomine Dei, Amen (in nahm-ə-nee dee-I, ay-men). [Latin] Hist. In the name of God, Amen. • This phrase formerly appeared at the beginning of a will or other instrument.

innotescimus (in-oh-tes-ə-məs). [Law Latin "we make known"] Hist. A certification, in the form of letters patent, of a charter of feoffment or other instrument not filed of record. • This term derives from the word of emphasis appearing at the end of the document. Cf. EXEMPLIFICATION.

innoxiare (i-nok-shee-air-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To purge (a person) of fault.

in nubibus (in n[y]oo-bi-bəs), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] In the clouds. • An expression for something that is under the protection of the law.

innuendo (in-yoo-en-doh). [Latin "by hinting"]

"Innuendo (from innuo, to nod or beckon with the head) is a word used in declarations and law pleadings, to ascertain a person or thing which was named before. . . . If a man say, that such a one had the pox, innuendo the French pox, this will not be admitted, because the French pox was not mentioned before, and the words shall be construed in a more favourable sense. But, if in discourse of the French pox, one say, that such a one had the pox, innuendo the French pox, this will be admitted to render that certain which was uncertain before." 2 Richard Burn, A New Law Dictionary 24 (1792).

"It is not a true innuendo to repeat the obvious meaning of defamatory words in other language, or in an embroiled or exaggerated way. Otherwise an ingenious pleader could perplex the judge and jury and harry the defendant by ringing the changes on the same words, creating numerous different causes of action, each requiring a separate verdict. A true innuendo relies on a conjunction of the words used and some extrinsic fact. Thus it is defamatory in itself to say that a man's affairs are being investigated by the Fraud Squad; but the statement does not support the innuendo that those affairs are being carried on fraudulently. Conversely, the statement 'X is a good advertiser' is innocent in itself, but carries a libellous innuendo if published to persons who know the extrinsic fact that X is an eminent member of the Bar.' R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 149 (17th ed. 1977). [The example about lawyers' advertising no longer has relevance to American law. — Eds.]

in nullius bonis (in nə-ll-əs boh-nis). See NULLIUS IN BONIS.

in nullo est erratum (in nə-l-oh est i-ray-təm), adj. [Law Latin "in nothing is there error"] Hist. Of or relating to a demurrer that denies any error and at once refers a question of law to the court.

inofficiosus (in-ə-fish-ee-oh-səs), adj. [Latin "inofficious"] Roman law. Contrary to a natural duty of affection, used esp. of a will that unjustly disinherits a child or close relative.

inofficious testament. See TESTAMENT.

inofficious will. See inofficious testament under TESTAMENT.

in omnibus (in əhm-ni-bəs). [Latin] In all things; on all points .

inoperative, adj. Having no force or effect; not operative <an inoperative statute>.

inops consilii (in-ahps kən-sil-ee-ī), adj. [Latin] Destitute of counsel; without legal counsel. • This term described actions taken without benefit of legal advice, as when a testator drafts a will without the help of an attorney.

"[T]hat in devises by last will and testament, (which, being often drawn up when the party is inops consilii, and are always more favoured in construction than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made with great caution, fore-thought, and advice) in these devises, I say, remainders may be created in some measure contrary to the rules before laid down. . . ." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 172 (1766).

inordinatus (in-or-də-nay-təs), n. [Latin "disorderly; unordained"] Hist. See INTTESTATE.

in pacato solo (in pə-kay-toh soh-loh), adv. [Latin] In a country that is at peace.

in pace Dei et regis (in pay-see dee-ī et ree-jis), adv. [Law Latin] Hist. In the peace of God and the king. • This phrase was used in an appeal from a murder conviction.

in pais (in pay or pays). [Law French "in the country"] Outside court or legal proceedings. See estoppel in pais under ESTOPPEL.

in paper. Hist. Of a proceeding that is within the jurisdiction of the trial court; that is, before the record is prepared for an appeal.

"Formerly, the suitors were much perplexed by writs of error brought upon very slight and trivial grounds, as misspellings and other mistakes of the clerks, all which might be amended at the common law, while all the proceedings were in paper, for they were then considered in fieri, and therefore subject to the control of the courts." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 407 (1768).

in pari causa (in par-ī kaw-zə), adv. [Latin "in an equal case"] In a case affecting two parties equally or in which they have equal rights <in pari causa, the possessor ordinarily defeats the nonpossessory claimant>.

in pari delicto (in par-ī də-lik-toh), adv. [Latin "in equal fault"] Equally at fault <the court denied relief because both parties stood in pari delicto>.

in pari delicto doctrine, n. [Latin] The principle that a plaintiff who has participated in wrongdoing may not recover damages resulting from the wrongdoing.

in pari materia (in par-ī mə-teer-ee-ə). [Latin "in the same matter"] 1. adj. On the same subject; relating to the same matter. • It is a canon of construction that statutes that are in pari materia may be construed together, so that inconsistencies in one statute may be resolved by looking at another statute on the same subject.

"[I]t seems that the present position is that, when an earlier statute is in pari materia with a later one, it is simply part of its context to be considered by the judge in deciding whether the meaning of a provision in the later statute is plain." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 128 (1976).

2. adv. Loosely, in conjunction with <the Maryland constitutional provision is construed in pari materia with the Fourth Amendment>.

in patiendo (in pash-ee-en-doh), adv. & adj. [fr. Latin patior "suffer"] In suffering or permitting.

in pectore judicis (in pek-tə-ree joo-di-sis), adv. & adj. [Latin] In the breast of the court.

in pejorem partem (in pə-jor-əm pah-r-təm), adv. [Law Latin] In the worst part; on the worst side.

inpenny and outpenny. Hist. A customary payment of a penny on entering into and going out of a tenancy.

in perpetuam rei memoriam (in pər-pech-oo-əm [or pər-pe-tyoo-əm] ree-I mə-mor-ee-əm), adv. [Latin] In perpetual memory of a matter. • This phrase refers to a deposition taken to preserve the deponent's testimony.

in perpetuity (in pər-pə-t[y]oo-ə-tee). Forever. See PERPETUITY.

in perpetuum (in pər-pech-oo-əm or pər-pe-tyoo-əm), adv. [Latin] Forever; perpetually. — Sometimes spelled inperpetuum.

in perpetuum rei testimonium (in pər-pech-oo-əm [or pər-pe-tyoo-əm] ree-I tes-ti-moh-nee-əm), adv. [Law Latin] In perpetual testimony of a matter. • This phrase refers to a statute that confirms existing common law.

"Statutes also are either declaratory of the common law, or remedial of some defects therein. Declaratory, where the old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable; in which case the parliament has thought proper, in perpetuum rei testimonium, and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the common law is and ever hath been." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 86 (1765).

in personam (in pər-soh-nəm), adj. [Latin "against a person"] Involving or determining the personal rights and interests of the parties. — Also termed personal. — in personam, adv. See action in personam under ACTION. Cf. IN REM.

"An action is said to be in personam when its object is to determine the rights and interests of the parties themselves in the subject-matter of the action, however the action may arise, and the effect of a judgment in such an action is merely to bind the parties to it. A normal action brought by one person against another for breach of contract is a common example of an action in personam." R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 98 (7th ed. 1974).

in personam judgment. See personal judgment under JUDGMENT.

in personam jurisdiction. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

in pios usus (in pi-əs yoo-səs), adv. [Law Latin] Hist. For pious uses; for religious purposes. • This phrase referred to property used by, or claimed by, the church, such as the property of an intestate who had no known heirs.

in plena vita (in plee-nə vi-tə), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] In full life.

in pleno comitatu (in plee-noh kahm-i-tay-t[y]oo), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] In full county court.

in praemissorum fidem (in pree-mə-sor-əm [or prem-ə-] fi-dəm), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] Hist. In confirmation or attestation of the premises. • This phrase commonly appeared in notarized documents.

in praesenti (in pri-zen-ti or pree-). [Latin] At present; right now. Cf. IN FUTURO.

in prender (in pren-dər), adj. [Law French "in taking"] Hist. (Of a right) consisting in property taken to fulfill a claim to it, such as an incorporeal hereditament (as a heriot custom) that a lord had to seize in order to exercise the right to it. Cf. IN RENDER.

in-presence rule. The principle that a police officer may make a warrantless arrest of a person who commits a misdemeanor offense not in the officer's actual presence but within the officer's immediate vicinity.

"The common law rule with respect to misdemeanors was quite different; a warrant was required except when a breach of the peace occurred in the presence of the arresting officer. . . . Though the 'in presence' rule might be construed as requiring that the misdemeanor in fact have occurred in the officer's presence, the modern view is that the officer may arrest if he has probable cause to believe the offense is being committed in his presence."

Wayne R. LaFave & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 3.5, at 169-70 (2d ed. 1992).

in primis (in prī-mis). See IMPRIMIS.

in principio (in prin-sip-ee-oh), adv. [Latin] At the beginning.

in promptu (in promp-t[y]oo), adv. & adj. [Latin "at hand"] Archaic. Impromptu.

in propria persona (in proh-pree-ə pər-soh-nə). [Latin "in one's own person"] See PRO SE.

inquest. 1. An inquiry by a coroner or medical examiner, sometimes with the aid of a jury, into the manner of death of a person who has died under suspicious circumstances, or who has died in prison. — Also termed coroner's inquest; inquisition after death. 2. An inquiry into a certain matter by a jury empaneled for that purpose. 3. The finding of such a specially empaneled jury. 4. A proceeding, usu. ex parte, to determine, after the defendant has defaulted, the amount of the plaintiff's damages. Cf. INQUISITION.

grand inquest. 1. An impeachment proceeding. 2. Hist. (cap.) The survey of the lands of England in 1085-1086, by order of William the Conqueror, and resulting in the Domesday Book — Also termed Great Inquest; Grand Survey; Great Survey; See DOMESDAY BOOK. 3. Hist. Grand jury.

inquest of office. Hist. An inquest conducted by a coroner, sheriff, or other royal officer into the Crown's right to property by reason of escheat, treason, or other ground of forfeiture.

inquisitio post mortem (in-kwə-zish-ee-oh pohst mor-təm). [Latin] See inquest of office under INQUEST.

inquisition. 1. The record of the finding of the jury sworn by the coroner to inquire into a person's death. 2. A judicial inquiry, esp. in a derogatory sense. 3. A persistent, grueling examination conducted without regard for the examinee's dignity or civil rights. Cf. INQUEST.

inquisition after death. See INQUEST (1).

inquisitor. 1. An officer who examines and inquires, such as a coroner or sheriff. 2. A person who inquires; esp., one who examines another in a harsh or hostile manner. 3. Hist. Eccles. law. An officer authorized to inquire into heresies; esp., an officer of the Spanish Inquisition.

inquisitorial court. A court in which the inquisitorial system prevails.

"We should remember that in the 'inquisitorial court' the roles of prosecutor, defender, and judge are combined in one person or group of persons. It is no accident that such a court commonly holds its sessions in secret. The usual explanation for this is that the methods by which it extracts confessions cannot stand public scrutiny. But the reason runs deeper. The methods employed by an inquisitorial court, even if open to the public, could scarcely be a secret of meaningful observation by an outsider. It is only when the roles of prosecutor, defender, and judge are separated that a process of decision can take on an order and coherence that will make it understandable to an outside audience and convince that audience that all sides of the controversy have been considered." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 35-36 (1968).

inquisitorial system. A system of proof-taking used in civil law, whereby the judge conducts the trial, determines what questions to ask, and defines the scope and the extent of the inquiry. • This system prevails in most of continental Europe, in Japan, and in Central and South America. Cf. ADVERSARY SYSTEM.

in re (in ree or ray). [Latin "in the matter of"] (Of a judicial proceeding) not formally including adverse parties, but rather involving something (such as an estate). • The term is often used in case citations, esp. in uncontested proceedings <In re Butler's Estate>. — Also termed matter of <Matter of Butler's Estate>.

in rebus (in ree-bəs), adv. [Latin] In things, cases, or matters.

in rem (in rem), adj. [Latin “against a thing”] Involving or determining the status of a thing, and therefore the rights of persons generally with respect to that thing. — Also termed (archaically) impersonal. — in rem, adv. See action in rem under ACTION. Cf. IN PERSONAM.

“An action in rem is one in which the judgment of the court determines the title to property and the rights of the parties, not merely as between themselves, but also as against all persons at any time dealing with them or with the property upon which the court had adjudicated.” R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 98 (7th ed. 1974).

quasi in rem (kway-si in rem or kway-zl). [Latin “as if against a thing”] Involving or determining the rights of a person having an interest in property located within the court’s jurisdiction. See action quasi in rem under ACTION.

in rem judgment. See judgment in rem under JUDGMENT.

in rem jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

in render (in ren-dər), adj. [Law French “in yielding or paying”] Hist. (Of property) required to be given or rendered. Cf. IN PRENDER.

in rerum natura (in reer-əm nə-tyuur-ə), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] Hist. In the nature of things; in existence. • This phrase was used in a dilatory plea alleging that the plaintiff was a fictitious person, and therefore not capable of bringing the action.

inroll, vb. See ENROLL (1).

inrollment. See ENROLLMENT.

INS. abbr. IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE.

insane, adj. Mentally deranged; suffering from one or more delusions or false beliefs that (1) have no foundation in reason or reality, (2) are not credible to any reasonable person of sound mind, and (3) cannot be overcome in a sufferer’s mind by any amount of evidence or argument. See INSANITY.

insane asylum. See ASYLUM (3).

insane delusion. An irrational, persistent belief in an imaginary state of facts that deprives a person of the capacity to undertake acts of legal consequence, such as making a will.

insanity, n. Any mental disorder severe enough that it prevents a person from having legal capacity and excuses the person from criminal or civil responsibility. • Insanity is a legal, not a medical, standard. — Also termed legal insanity; lunacy. Cf. diminished capacity under CAPACITY.

“The lawyers refer to ‘insanity.’ This is a legal term only, and one that is not used by the psychiatrist; the latter prefers to speak of mental disorder, mental illness, or of psychosis or neurosis.” Winfred Overholser, Psychiatry and the Law, 38 Mental Hygiene 243, 244 (1954).

“The word ‘insanity’ is commonly used in discussions of this problem although some other term would seem to be preferable such as ‘mental disease or defect,’ — which may be shortened to ‘mental disorder’ in general discussions if this is clearly understood to include disease of the mind, congenital lack, and damage resulting from traumatic injury, but to exclude excitement or stupefaction resulting from liquor or drugs. Apart from its uses in the law ‘insanity’ is usually employed to indicate mental disorder resulting from deterioration or damage as distinguished from congenital deficiency. Criminal incapacity may result as readily from one as from the other, but while the earlier authorities spoke of the ‘idiot’ and the ‘madman,’ . . . the more recent tendency in the law has been to include both under the ‘insanity’ label.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 952 (3d ed. 1982).

“Another objection to the word ‘insanity’ is the unwarranted assumption that it refers to a very definite mental condition, seldom put into words but apparent in many discussions of the problem.” Id.

emotional insanity. Insanity produced by a violent excitement of the emotions or passions, although reasoning faculties may remain unimpaired; a passion that for a period creates complete derangement of intellect. • Emotional insanity is sometimes described as an irresistible impulse to do an act. See IRRESISTIBLE-IMPULSE TEST.

temporary insanity. Insanity that exists only at the time of a criminal act.

insanity defense. Criminal law. An affirmative defense alleging that a mental disorder caused the accused to commit the crime. • Unlike other defenses, a successful insanity defense results not in acquittal but instead in a special verdict (“not guilty by reason of insanity”) that usu. leads to the defendant’s commitment to a mental institution. — Also termed insanity plea. See MCNAGHTEN RULES; SUBSTANTIAL-CAPACITY TEST; IRRESISTIBLE-IMPULSE TEST; DURHAM RULE; APPRECIATION TEST.

black-rage insanity defense. An insanity defense based on an African-American defendant’s hatred of white people. • This defense was first used in the mid-1990s.

Insanity Defense Reform Act of 1984 test.

See APPRECIATION TEST.

insanity plea. See INSANITY DEFENSE.

inscriptio (in-skrip-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. A written accusation detailed in an official register. • The accuser was liable to punishment if the accused was acquitted. — inscribere, vb. See INSCRIPTION (3).

inscription, n. 1. The act of entering a fact or name on a list, register, or other record. 2. An entry so recorded. 3. Civil law. An agreement whereby an accuser must, if the accusation is false, receive the same punishment that the accused would have been given if found guilty. — inscribe, vb. — inscriptive, adj.

inscriptiones (in-skrip-shee-oh-nee-z). [Latin] Hist. Title deeds; written instruments by which rights or interests are granted.

insecure, adj. Having a good-faith belief that the possibility of receiving payment or performance from another party to a contract is unlikely.

insecurity clause. A loan-agreement provision that allows the creditor to demand immediate and full payment of the loan balance if the creditor has reason to believe that the debtor is about to default, as when the debtor suddenly loses a significant source of income. Cf. ACCELERATION CLAUSE.

in separam (in sep-ə-ray-lī), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] In several; in severalty.

inside director. See DIRECTOR.

inside information. Information about a company's financial or market situation obtained not from public disclosure, but from a source within the company or a source that owes the company a duty to keep the information confidential. — Also termed insider information. See INSIDER TRADING.

insider. 1. Securities. A person who has knowledge of facts not available to the general public.

temporary insider. A person or firm that receives inside information in the course of performing professional duties for a client. • Generally, that person or firm is subject to the same proscriptions as an insider.

2. One who takes part in the control of a corporation, such as an officer or director, or one who owns 10% or more of the corporation's stock. 3. Bankruptcy. An entity or person who is so closely related to a debtor that any deal between them will not be considered an arm's-length transaction and will be subject to close scrutiny.

insider dealing. See INSIDER TRADING.

insider information. See INSIDE INFORMATION.

insider preference. See PREFERENCE.

insider report. See REPORT (1).

insider trading. The use of material, nonpublic information in trading the shares of a company by a corporate insider or other person who owes a fiduciary duty to the company. • This is the classic definition. The Supreme Court has also approved a broader definition, known as the "misappropriation theory": the deceitful acquisition and misuse of information that properly belongs to persons to whom one owes a duty. Thus, under the misappropriation theory, it is insider trading for a lawyer to trade in the stock of XYZ Corp. after learning that a client of the lawyer's firm is planning a takeover of XYZ. But under the classic definition, that is not insider trading because the lawyer owed no duty to XYZ itself. — Also termed insider dealing.

"What is insider trading?" The term is probably best defined, to the extent any definition is adequate, as 'the purchase or sale of securities on the basis of material, non-public information.' What counts as 'non-public information'? What non-public information can be deemed 'material'? When is a trader who is in possession of material, non-public information trading 'on the basis of' that information? Must the information be about the company whose securities are being purchased or sold? What characteristics establish 'insider' status sufficient to warrant legal proscriptions of trading? These are all questions that are derived from the definition of insider trading just offered . . ." C. Edward Fletcher, Materials on the Law of Insider Trading 3 (1991).

"A number of different parties may be subject to a variety of monetary penalties under the federal securities laws for engaging in illegal insider trading. These parties may include actual traders, their tippees, as well as broker-dealers and investment advisors (when they fail to take appropriate steps to prevent the insider trading violation(s) or fail to maintain and enforce policies and procedures reasonably designed to prevent the occurrence of such trading). Measures that may be ordered include (1) requiring the subject party to 'disgorge' the ill-gotten profits (or loss avoided) in an SEC enforcement action, (2) subjecting individuals to a maximum criminal fine of $1 million and 10 years imprisonment, and (3) in an SEC enforcement action, within a court's discretion, ordering the subject party to pay into the U.S. Treasury a treble damage penalty amounting to three times the profit gained or loss avoided." Marc I. Steinberg, Under-standing Securities Law 277-78 (2d ed. 1996). insidiatio viarum (in-sid-ee-ay-shee-oh vi-air-əm). [Latin "ambush on the highway"] Hist. The crime of waylaying someone along the roadway. See LATROCINATION; HIGHWAYMAN.

institutional lender. A business, esp. a bank, that routinely makes loans to the general public.

institutional litigant. An organized group that brings lawsuits not merely to win but also to bring about a change in the law or to defend an existing law.

"Our second observation relates to what has been called the 'institutional litigant.' There are organized groups, such as labour unions or trade associations, that have a continuing interest in the development of the common law. A group of this sort may take a case to litigation, not so much for the sake of a determination of the case itself, but for the purpose of bringing about a change in the law or of defending an existing rule against a change sought by some other group. When such groups are involved, the usual arguments against prospective changes in the law through judicial decisions lose much of their force. Indeed, when the litigants have this sort of long-term interest, a judicial proceeding may take on, with the assent of all involved, something of the nature of a legislative hearing." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 163 (1968).

institutional market. See MARKET.

institutiones (in-sti-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nee-z). [Latin] Roman law. Elementary works of law; institutes. See INSTITUTE.

insular court. See COURT.

insular possession. See POSSESSION (4).

insurable, adj. Able to be insured <an insurable risk>. — insurability, n.

insurable interest. See INTEREST (2).

insurable value. The worth of the subject of an insurance contract, usu. expressed as a monetary amount.

insurance (in-shuur-ənts), n. 1. An agreement by which one party (the insurer) commits to do something of value for another party (the insured) upon the occurrence of some specified contingency; esp., an agreement by which one party assumes a risk faced by another party in return for a premium payment. 2. The amount for which someone or something is covered by such an agreement. — insure, vb.

"Insurance, or as it is sometimes called, assurance, is a contract by which one party, for a consideration, which is usually paid in money either in one sum or at different times during the continuance of the risk, promises to make a certain payment of money upon the destruction or injury of something in which the other party has an interest. In fire insurance and in marine insurance the thing insured is property; in life or accident insurance it is the life or health of the person." 1 George J. Couch, Couch on Insurance § 1.2, at 4-5 (2d ed. 1984).

accident and health insurance. See health insurance.

accident insurance. An agreement to indemnify against expense, loss of time, suffering, or death resulting from an accident. Cf. casualty insurance.

additional insurance. Insurance added to an existing policy.

all-risk insurance. Insurance that covers every kind of insurable loss except what is specifically excluded.

annuity insurance. An agreement to pay the insured (or annuitant) for a stated period or for life.

assessable insurance. Insurance in which the insured is liable for additional premiums if a loss is unusually large.

assessment insurance. A type of mutual insurance in which the policyholders are assessed as losses are incurred; a policy in which payments to an insured are not unalterably fixed, but are dependent on the collection of assessments necessary to pay the amount insured.

automobile insurance. An agreement to indemnify against one or more kinds of loss associated with the use of an automobile, including damage to a vehicle and liability for personal injury.

aviation insurance. Insurance that protects the insured against a loss connected with the use of an aircraft. • This type of insurance can be written to cover a variety of risks, including bodily injury, property damage, and hangarkeepers' liability.

broad-form insurance. Comprehensive insurance. • This type of insurance usu. takes the form of an endorsement to a liability or property policy, broadening the coverage that is typically available.

bumbershoot insurance. 1. Marine insurance that provides broad coverage for ocean marine risks. 2. See umbrella insurance. • This term derives from the British slang term for umbrella. The term applies esp. to a policy insured through the London insurance market. See umbrella policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

burial insurance. Insurance that pays for the holder's burial and funeral expenses.

business-interruption insurance. An agreement to protect against one or more kinds of loss from the interruption of an ongoing business, such as a loss of profits while the business is shut down to repair fire damage.

captive insurance. 1. Insurance that provides coverage for the group or business that established it. 2. Insurance that a subsidiary provides to its parent company, usu. so that the parent company can deduct the premiums set aside as loss reserves.

cargo insurance. An agreement to pay for damage to freight damaged in transit.

casualty insurance. An agreement to indemnify against any loss resulting from a broad group of causes such as legal liability, theft, accident, property damage, and workers' compensation. • The meaning of casualty insurance has become blurred because of the rapid increase in different types of insurance coverage. Cf. accident insurance.

coinsurance. 1. Insurance provided jointly by two or more insurers. 2. Property insurance that requires the insured to bear a portion of any loss if the property is not covered up to a certain percentage of its full value. • A coinsurance clause sets a minimum for which property must be insured, and anything below that amount requires the insured to share proportionally in any loss.

collision insurance. Automobile insurance that covers damage to the insured's vehicle, but does not cover a personal injury resulting from an accident.

commercial insurance. An indemnity agreement in the form of a deed or bond to protect against a loss caused by a party's breach of contract.

"Commercial insurance is a popular and very elastic term, having reference to indemnity agreements issued in the form of an insurance bond or policy, whereby parties to commercial contracts are, to a designated extent, guaranteed against loss by reason of a breach of contractual obligations on the part of the other contracting party. To this class belong policies of 'contract,' 'credit,' and 'title' insurances." Thomas Gold Frost, A Treatise on Guaranty Insurance § 3, at 14 (2d ed. 1909).

comprehensive insurance. Insurance that combines coverage against many kinds of losses that may also be insured separately. • This is commonly used, for example, in an automobile-insurance policy.

compulsory insurance. Statutorily required insurance; esp., motor-vehicle liability insurance that a state requires as a condition to registration of the vehicle.

convertible collision insurance. Collision insurance that carries a low premium until a claim is made against the policy.

convertible insurance. Insurance that can be changed to another form without further evidence of insurability, usu. referring to a term-life-insurance policy that can be changed to permanent insurance without a medical examination.

credit insurance. An agreement to indemnify against loss that may result from the death, disability, or insolvency of someone to whom credit is extended. • A debtor typically purchases this type of insurance to ensure the repayment of the loan.

credit life insurance. Life insurance on a borrower, usu. in a consumer installment loan, in which the amount due is paid if the borrower dies.

crime insurance. Insurance covering losses occasioned by a crime committed by someone other than the insured.

crop insurance. Insurance that protects against loss to growing crops from natural perils such as hail and fire.

decreasing term insurance. Insurance that declines in value during the term; esp., life insurance that lessens in value to zero by the end of the term.

deposit insurance. A federally sponsored indemnification program to protect depositors against the loss of their money, up to a specified maximum, if the bank or savings-and-loan association fails or defaults.

directors' and officers' liability insurance. An agreement to indemnify corporate directors and officers against judgments, settlements, and fines arising from negligence suits, shareholder actions, and other business-related suits. — Often shortened to D & O liability insurance; D & O insurance.

disability insurance. Coverage purchased to protect a person from a loss of income during a period of incapacity for work.

double insurance. Insurance coverage by more than one insurer for the same interest and for the same insured. • The insured is entitled to only a single indemnity from a loss, and to recover this, the insured may either (1) sue each insurer for its share of the loss, or (2) sue one or more of the insurers for the entire amount, leaving any paying insurers to recover from the others their respective shares of the loss.

dread-disease insurance. Health insurance that covers medical expenses arising from the treatment of any of several specified diseases.

employers' liability insurance. 1. An agreement to indemnify an employer against an employee's claim not covered under the workers'-compensation system. 2. An agreement to indemnify against liability imposed on an employer for an employee's negligence that injures a third party.

employment-practices liability insurance. Insurance that provides coverage for claims arising from an insured's injury-causing employment practice, such as discrimination, defamation, or sexual harassment. — Abbr. EPL insurance.

endowment insurance. A type of life insurance that is payable either to the insured at the end of the policy period or to the insured's beneficiary if the insured dies before the period ends.

errors-and-omissions insurance. An agreement to indemnify for loss sustained because of a mistake or oversight by the insured — though not for loss due to the insured's intentional wrongdoing. • For example, lawyers often carry this insurance as part of their malpractice coverage to protect them in suits for damages resulting from inadvertent mistakes (such as missing a procedural deadline). While this insurance does not cover the insured's intentional wrongdoing, it may cover an employee's intentional, but unauthorized, wrongdoing. — Often shortened to E & O insurance.

excess insurance. An agreement to indemnify against any loss that exceeds the amount of coverage under another policy. Cf. primary insurance. See EXCESS CLAUSE.

excess lines insurance. See surplus lines insurance.

extended insurance. Insurance that continues in force beyond the date that the last premium was paid by drawing on its cash value.

extended-term insurance. Insurance that remains in effect after a default in paying premiums, as long as the policy has cash value to pay premiums. • Many life-insurance policies provide this feature to protect against forfeiture of the policy if the insured falls behind in premium payments.

family-income insurance. An agreement to pay benefits for a stated period following the death of the insured. • At the end of the payment period, the face value is paid to the designated beneficiary.

fidelity insurance. An agreement to indemnify an employer against a loss arising from the lack of integrity or honesty of an employee or of a person holding a position of trust, such as a loss from embezzlement. — Also termed fidelity guaranty insurance; fidelity and guaranty insurance; surety and fidelity insurance.

fire insurance. An agreement to indemnify against property damage caused by fire, wind, rain, or other similar disaster.

first-party insurance. A policy that applies to oneself or one's own property, such as life insurance, health insurance, disability insurance, and fire insurance. — Also termed indemnity insurance.

fleet insurance. Insurance that covers a number of vehicles owned by the same entity.

floater insurance. An agreement to indemnify against a loss sustained to movable property, wherever its location within the territorial limit set by the policy.

flood insurance. Insurance that indemnifies against a loss caused by a flood. • This type of insurance is often sold privately but subsidized by the federal government.

fraternal insurance. Life or health insurance issued by a fraternal benefit society to its members.

general-disability insurance. Disability insurance that provides benefits to a person who cannot perform any job that the person is qualified for. — Also termed total-disability insurance.

government insurance. Life insurance underwritten by the federal government to military personnel, veterans, and government employees.

group insurance. A form of insurance offered to a member of a group, such as the employees of a business, as long as that person remains a member of the group. • Group insurance is typically health or life (usu. term life) insurance issued under a master policy between the insurer and the employer, who usu. pays all or part of the premium for the insured person. Other groups, such as unions and associations, often offer group insurance to their members.

“‘Group Insurance’ refers to a method of marketing standard forms of insurance, such as life insurance, whereby a master policy is issued to the party negotiating the contract with the insurer (frequently an employer), and certificates of participation are issued to the individual insured members of the group (frequently employees).” John F. Dobbyn, Insurance Law in a Nutshell 13 (2d ed. 1989).

guaranty insurance (gar-ən-tee). An agreement to cover a loss resulting from another’s default, insolvency, or specified misconduct. — Also termed surety insurance.

“The term ‘guaranty insurance’ is generic in its scope and signification, and embraces within it those subsidiary species of insurance contracts known as ‘fidelity,’ ‘commercial,’ and ‘judicial’ insurances In legal acceptance guaranty insurance is an agreement whereby one party (called the ‘insurer’) for a valuable consideration (termed the ‘premium’) agrees to indemnify another (called the ‘insured’) in a stipulated amount against loss or damage arising through dishonesty, fraud, unfaithful performance of duty or breach of contract on the part of a third person . . . sustaining a contractual relationship to the party thus indemnified.” Thomas Gold Frost, A Treatise on Guaranty Insurance § 1, at 11 (2d ed. 1909).

health insurance. Insurance covering medical expenses resulting from sickness or injury. — Also termed accident and health insurance; sickness and accident insurance.

homeowner’s insurance. Insurance that covers both damage to the insured’s residence and liability claims made against the insured (esp. those arising from the insured’s negligence).

indemnity insurance. See first-party insurance.

industrial life insurance. Life insurance characterized by (1) a small death benefit (usu. $2,000 or less), (2) premium payments that are due weekly, biweekly, or monthly and that are collected at home by the insurer’s representative, and (3) no required medical examination of the insured.

inland marine insurance. An agreement to indemnify against losses arising from the transport of goods on domestic waters (i.e., rivers, canals, and lakes). Cf. ocean marine insurance.

insurance of the person. Insurance intended to protect the person, such as life, accident, and disability insurance.

interinsurance. See reciprocal insurance.

joint life insurance. Life insurance on two or more persons, payable to the survivor or survivors when one of the policyholders dies.

judicial insurance. Insurance intended to protect litigants and others involved in the court system.

“By judicial insurance reference is had to insurance bonds or policies issued, in connection with the regular course of judicial or administrative procedure, for the purpose of securing the faithful performance of duty on the part of court appointees, to guarantee due compliance with the terms of undertakings entered into by parties litigant before the courts, and to secure proper administration of statute law.” Thomas Gold Frost, A Treatise on Guaranty Insurance § 3, at 14 (2d ed. 1909).

key-employee insurance. Life insurance taken out by a company on an essential or valuable employee, with the company as beneficiary. — Also termed key-man insurance; key-person insurance; key-executive insurance.

last-survivor insurance. Life insurance on two or more persons, payable on the death of all the insureds.

lease insurance. An agreement to indemnify a leaseholder for the loss of a favorable lease terminated by damage to the property from a peril covered by the policy. • The amount payable is the difference between the rent and the actual rental value of the property, multiplied by the remaining term of the lease.

level-premium insurance. Insurance whose premiums remain constant throughout the life of the agreement. • Most whole life policies are set up this way.

liability insurance. An agreement to cover a loss resulting from one's liability to a third party, such as a loss incurred by a driver who injures a pedestrian. • The insured's claim under the policy arises once the insured's liability to a third party has been asserted. — Also termed third-party insurance; public-liability insurance.

life insurance. An agreement between an insurance company and the policyholder to pay a specified amount to a designated beneficiary on the insured's death. — Also termed (in Britain) assurance.

"Life and accident insurance has been defined as a contract whereby one party, for a stipulated consideration, agrees to indemnify another against injury by accident or death from any cause not expected in the contract. Strictly speaking, however, a contract of life insurance is not one of indemnity, but is an absolute engagement to pay a certain sum at the end of a definite or indefinite time." 43 Am. Jur. 2d Insurance § 3 (1982).

limited-payment life insurance. Life insurance that requires premium payments for less than the life of the agreement.

limited-policy insurance. Insurance that covers only specified perils; esp., health insurance that covers a specific type of illness (such as dread-disease insurance) or a risk relating to a stated activity (such as travel-accident insurance).

Lloyd's insurance. Insurance provided by insurers as individuals, rather than as a corporation. • The insurers' liability is several but not joint. Most states either prohibit or strictly regulate this type of insurance. See LLOYD'S OF LONDON.

loss insurance. Insurance purchased by a person who may suffer a loss at the hands of another. • This is the converse of liability insurance, which is purchased by potential defendants. — Also termed first-party insurance; self-insurance.

malpractice insurance (mal-prak-tis). An agreement to indemnify a professional person, such as a doctor or lawyer, against negligence claims. See errors-and-omissions insurance.

manual-rating insurance. A type of insurance whereby the premium is set using a book that classifies certain risks on a general basis, rather than evaluating each individual case.

marine insurance. An agreement to indemnify against injury to a ship, cargo, or profits involved in a certain voyage or for a specific vessel during a fixed period.

mortgage insurance. 1. An agreement to pay off a mortgage if the insured dies or becomes disabled. 2. An agreement to provide money to the lender if the mortgagor defaults on the mortgage payments. — Also termed private mortgage insurance (abbr. PMI).

mutual insurance. A system of insurance (esp. life insurance) whereby the policyholders become members of the insurance company, each paying premiums into a common fund from which each can draw in the event of a loss.

national-service life insurance. See NATIONAL-SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE.

no-fault auto insurance. An agreement to indemnify for a loss due to personal injury or property damage arising from the use of an automobile, regardless of who caused the accident.

nonassessable insurance. Insurance in which the premium is set and the insurer is barred from demanding additional payments from the insured.

occupational-disability insurance. Disability insurance that provides benefits to a person who cannot perform his or her regular job.

ocean marine insurance. Insurance that covers risks arising from the transport of goods by sea. Cf. inland marine insurance.

old-age and survivors insurance. See OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE.

ordinary insurance. Life insurance having an interest-sensitive cash value, such as whole life insurance or universal life insurance. • Ordinary insurance is one of three main categories of life insurance. Cf. group insurance; industrial life insurance.

ordinary life insurance. See whole life insurance.

overinsurance. See OVERINSURANCE.

paid-up insurance. Insurance that remains in effect even though no more premiums are due.

participating insurance. A type of insurance that allows a policyholder to receive dividends. • This insurance is invariably issued by a mutual company.

partnership insurance. 1. Life insurance on the life of a partner, purchased to ensure the remaining partners' ability to buy out a patent insurance (pat-ənt). 1. Insurance against loss from an infringement of the insured's patent. 2. Insurance against a claim that the insured has infringed another's patent. 3. Insurance that funds a claim against a third party for infringing the insured's patent.

port-risk insurance. Insurance on a vessel lying in port. Cf. time insurance; voyage insurance.

primary insurance. Insurance that attaches immediately on the happening of a loss; insurance that is not contingent on the exhaustion of an underlying policy. Cf. excess insurance.

private mortgage insurance. See mortgage insurance.

products-liability insurance. An agreement to indemnify a manufacturer, supplier, or retailer for a loss arising from the insured's liability to a user who is harmed by any product manufactured or sold by the insured.

profit insurance. Insurance that reimburses the insured for profits lost because of a specified peril.

property insurance. An agreement to indemnify against property damage or destruction. — Also termed property-damage insurance.

public-liability insurance. See liability insurance.

reciprocal insurance. A system whereby several individuals or businesses act through an agent to underwrite one another's risks, making each insured an insurer of the other members of the group. — Also termed inter-insurance.

reinsurance. See REINSURANCE.

renewable term insurance. Insurance that the insured may continue at the end of a term, but generally at a higher premium. ● The insured usu. has the right to renew for additional terms without a medical examination.

replacement insurance. Insurance under which the value of the loss is measured by the current cost of replacing the insured property. See replacement cost under COST.

retirement-income insurance. An agreement whereby the insurance company agrees to pay an annuity beginning at a certain age if the insured survives beyond that age, or the value of the policy if the insured dies before reaching that age.

self-insurance. A plan under which a business sets aside money to cover any loss. — Also termed first-party insurance.

sickness and accident insurance. See health insurance.

single-premium insurance. Life insurance that is paid for in one payment rather than a series of premiums over time.

social insurance. Insurance provided by a government to persons facing particular perils (such as unemployment or disability) or to persons who have a certain status (such as the elderly or the blind). ● Social insurance — such as that created by the Social Security Act of 1935 — is usu. part of a government's broader social policy. See WELFARE STATE.

split-dollar insurance. An arrangement between two people (often an employer and employee) in which life insurance is written on the life of one, though both share the premium payments. ● On the insured's death or other event terminating the plan, the noninsured person receives the cash value of the insurance as reimbursement, and the beneficiary named by the insured is entitled to the remainder.

step-rate-premium insurance. Insurance whose premiums increase at times specified in the policy.

stop-loss insurance. Insurance that protects a self-insured employer from catastrophic losses or unusually large health costs of covered employees. ● Stop-loss insurance essentially provides excess coverage for a self-insured employer. The employer and the insurance carrier agree to the amount the employer will cover, and the stop-loss insurance will cover claims exceeding that amount.

straight life insurance. See whole life insurance.

surety and fidelity insurance. See fidelity insurance.

surety insurance. See guaranty insurance.

surplus-lines insurance. Insurance with an insurer that is not licensed to transact business within the state where the risk is located. — Also termed excess-lines insurance.

term life insurance. Life insurance that covers the insured for only a specified period. Cf. whole life insurance.

third-party insurance. See liability insurance.

time insurance. Marine insurance. Insurance covering the insured for a specified period. Cf. voyage insurance.

title insurance. An agreement to indemnify against damage or loss arising from a defect in title to real property, usu. issued to the buyer of the property by the title company that conducted the title search.

"Title insurance is normally written by specialized companies that maintain tract indexes: companies involved in writing life or casualty usually are not involved in title insurance. Title insurance is an unusual type of insurance in a few respects. For one thing, it is not a recurring policy: There is only a single premium, and a title insurance policy written on behalf of an owner theoretically remains outstanding forever to protect him or her from claims asserted by others. It is more similar to an indemnification agreement than to an insurance policy. For another, title insurance companies generally do not take risks that they know about. If the title search shows that a risk exists, the company will exclude that risk from the coverage of the policy." Robert W. Hamilton, Fundamentals of Modern Business 84 (1989).

total-disability insurance. See general-disability insurance.

travel-accident insurance. Health insurance limited to injuries sustained while traveling.

umbrella insurance. Insurance that is supplemental, providing coverage that exceeds the basic or usual limits of liability. — Also termed bumbershoot insurance.

underinsurance. See UNDERINSURANCE.

unemployment insurance. A type of social insurance that pays money to workers who are unemployed for reasons unrelated to job performance. • Individual states administer unemployment insurance, which is funded by payroll taxes. — Also termed unemployment compensation.

universal life insurance. A form of term life insurance in which the premiums are paid from the insured's earnings from a money-market fund.

variable life insurance. A form of life insurance in which the premiums are invested in securities and whose death benefits thus depend on the securities' performance, though there is a minimum guaranteed death benefit.

voyage insurance. Marine insurance. Insurance covering the insured between destinations. Cf. time insurance.

war-risk insurance. 1. Insurance covering damage caused by war. • Ocean marine policies are often written to cover this type of risk. 2. Life and accident insurance provided by the federal government to members of the armed forces. • This type of insurance is offered because the hazardous nature of military service often prevents military personnel from obtaining private insurance.

whole life insurance. Life insurance that covers an insured for life, during which the insured pays fixed premiums, accumulates savings from an invested portion of the premiums, and receives a guaranteed benefit upon death. — Also termed ordinary life insurance; straight life insurance. Cf. term life insurance.

insurance adjuster. A person who determines the value of a loss to the insured and settles the claim against the insurer. See ADJUSTER.

insurance agent. A person authorized by an insurance company to sell its insurance policies. — Also termed producer; (in property insurance) recording agent; record agent.

general agent. An agent with the general power of making insurance contracts on behalf of an insurer.

special agent. An agent whose powers are usu. confined to soliciting applications for insurance, taking initial premiums, and delivering policies when issued. — Also termed local agent; solicitor.

insurance broker. One who sells insurance policies without an exclusive affiliation with a particular insurance company. See BROKER.

insurance certificate. 1. A document issued by an insurer as evidence of insurance or membership in an insurance or pension plan. 2. A document issued by an insurer to a shipper as evidence that a shipment of goods is covered by a marine insurance policy.

insurance commissioner. A public official who supervises the insurance business conducted in a state.

insurance company. A corporation or association that issues insurance policies.

captive insurance company. A company that insures the liabilities of its owner. • The insured is usu. the sole shareholder and the only customer of the captive insurer. — Also termed captive insurer.

mixed insurance company. An insurance company having characteristics of both stock and mutual companies in that it distributes part of the profits to stockholders and also makes distributions to the insureds.

mutual insurance company. An insurance company whose policyholders are both insurers and insureds because they pay premiums into a common fund, from which claims are paid. — Often shortened to mutual company.

"Mutual insurance companies are organized by a number of persons for the purpose of transacting some particular insurance business A company is a mutual one when the persons constituting the company contribute either cash or assessable premium notes, or both, to a common fund, out of which each is entitled to indemnity in case of loss. The distinguishing feature is mutuality, evidenced by the co-operation of members, uniting for that purpose, each taking a proportionate part in the management of its affairs and being at once insurer and insured, contributing to a fund from which all losses are paid Democratic ownership and control is a fundamental characteristic of a mutual insurance company." 18 John Alan Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice § 10041, at 79–80 (1945).

stock insurance company. An insurance company operated as a private corporation and owned by stockholders who share in the company's profits and losses.

stock life-insurance company. A stock insurance company that does life-insurance business.

insurance fraud. See FRAUD.

insurance of the person. See INSURANCE.

insurance policy. 1. A contract of insurance. 2. A document detailing such a contract. — Often shortened to policy. — Also termed policy of insurance; contract of insurance.

accident policy. A type of business or personal policy that insures against loss resulting directly from bodily injuries sustained during the policy term solely by accidental means.

assessable policy. A policy under which a policyholder may be held liable for losses of the insurance company beyond its reserves.

bailee policy. A floating policy that covers goods in a bailee's possession but does not particularly describe the covered goods.

basic-form policy. A policy that offers limited coverage against loss. • A basic-form policy generally covers damages from fire, wind-storm, explosion, riot, aircraft, vehicles, theft, or vandalism. — Also termed limited policy.

blanket policy. An agreement to indemnify all property, regardless of location.

block policy. An all-risk policy that covers groups of property (such as property held in bailment or a business's merchandise) against most perils. See all-risk insurance under INSURANCE.

broad-form policy. A policy that offers broad protection with few limitations. • This policy offers greater coverage than a basic-form policy, but less than an open-perils policy.

claims-made policy. An agreement to indemnify against all claims made during a specified period, regardless of when the incidents that gave rise to the claims occurred. — Also termed discovery policy.

closed policy. An insurance policy whose terms cannot be changed. • A fraternal benefit society is not permitted to write closed policies. — Also termed closed insurance contract.

commercial general liability policy. See comprehensive general liability policy.

completed-operations policy. A policy usu. purchased by a building contractor to cover accidents arising out of a job or an operation that the contractor has completed.

comprehensive general liability policy. An insurance policy, usu. obtained by a business, that covers damages that the insured becomes legally obligated to pay to a third party because of bodily injury or property damage. — Often shortened to CGL policy; general liability policy. — Also termed commercial general liability policy.

concurrent policy. One of two or more insurance policies that cover the same risk. • Concurrent insurance policies are stated in almost identical terms so that liability can be apportioned between the insurers.

corrected policy. A policy issued after a redetermination of risk to correct a misstatement in the original policy.

discovery policy. See claims-made policy.

endowment policy. A life-insurance policy payable at the end of a specified period, even if the insured survives that period, or upon the insured's death if death occurs before the end of the period.

extended policy. A policy that remains in effect beyond the time when premiums are no longer paid.

floating policy. An insurance policy covering property that frequently changes in quantity or location, such as jewelry. — Also termed running policy; blanket policy.

following-form policy. An insurance policy that adopts the terms and conditions of another insurance policy.

gambling policy. See wager policy.

group policy. See master policy.

homeowner's policy. A multiperil policy providing coverage for a variety of risks, including loss by fire, water, burglary, and the homeowner's negligent conduct.

incontestable policy. A policy containing a provision that prohibits the insurer from contesting or canceling the policy on the basis of statements made in the application.

interest policy. A policy whose terms indicate that the insured has an interest in the subject matter of the insurance. Cf. wager policy.

joint life policy. A life-insurance policy that matures and becomes due upon the death of any of those jointly insured.

lapsed policy. 1. An insurance policy on which there has been a default in premium payments. 2. An insurance policy that, because of statutory provisions, remains in force after a default in premium payments. • Statutes normally provide a 30- or 31-day grace period after nonpayment of premiums.

level-rate legal-reserve policy. A policy that seeks to build a reserve equal to the policy's face value by the end of the insured's life.

life policy. A life-insurance policy that requires lifetime annual fixed premiums and that becomes payable only on the death of the insured. — Also termed regular life policy.

limited policy. 1. An insurance policy that specifically excludes certain classes or types of loss. 2. See basic-form policy.

manuscript policy. An insurance policy containing nonstandard provisions that have been negotiated between the insurer and the insured.

master policy. An insurance policy that covers those under a group-insurance plan. — Also termed group policy. See group insurance under INSURANCE.

mixed policy. Marine insurance. A policy combining aspects of both a voyage policy and a time policy.

multiperil policy. An insurance policy that covers several types of losses, such as a homeowner's policy that covers losses from fire, theft, and personal injury. — Also termed named-perils policy.

nonmedical policy. An insurance policy issued without a prior medical examination of the applicant.

occurrence policy. An agreement to indemnify for any loss from an event that occurs within the policy period, regardless of when the claim is made.

open-perils policy. A property insurance policy covering all risks against loss except those specifically excluded from coverage.

open policy. See unvalued policy.

paid-up policy. A policy that remains in effect after premiums are no longer due.

participating policy. A policy that allows the holder a right to dividends or rebates from future premiums. • This type of policy is issued by a mutual company.

regular life policy. See life policy.

running policy. See floating policy.

standard policy. 1. An insurance policy providing insurance that is recommended or required by state law, usu. regulated by a state agency. 2. An insurance policy that contains standard terms used for similar insurance policies nationwide, usu. drafted by an insurance industrial association such as Insurance Services Office.

survivorship policy. A joint life policy that is payable upon the death of the last survivor named in the policy.

term policy. A life-insurance policy that gives protection for a specified period, but that does not have a cash value or reserve value.

time policy. An insurance policy that is effective only during a specified period.

tontine policy (tahn-teen or tahn-teen). An insurance policy in which a group of participants share advantages so that upon the default or death of any participant, his or her advantages are distributed among the remaining participants until only one remains, whereupon the whole goes to that sole participant. • Under the tontine plan of insurance, no accumulation or earnings are credited to the policy unless it remains in force for the tontine period of a specified number of years. Thus, those who survive the period and keep their policies in force share in the accumulated funds, and those who die or permit their policies to lapse during the period do not. This type of policy takes its name from Lorenzo Tonti, an Italian who invented it in the 17th century. Today, newer and more ingenious forms of insurance have largely made tontine policies defunct. See TONTINE.

umbrella policy. An insurance policy covering losses that exceed the basic or usual limits of liability provided by other policies. See umbrella insurance under INSURANCE.

unvalued policy. A policy that does not state a value of the insured property but that, upon loss, requires proof of the property's worth. — Also termed open policy.

valued policy. An insurance policy in which the sum to be paid when a loss occurs is fixed by the terms of the contract. • The value agreed on is conclusive for a total loss and provides a basis for determining recovery in cases of partial loss. This value is in the nature of liquidated damages.

voyage policy. A marine-insurance policy that insures a vessel or its cargo during a specified voyage.

wager policy. An insurance policy issued to a person who is shown to have no insurable interest in the person or property covered by the policy. • Wager policies are illegal in most states. — Also termed gambling policy. See insurable interest under INTEREST (2). Cf. interest policy.

insurance pool. A group of several insurers that, to spread the risk, combine and share premiums and losses.

insurance premium. See PREMIUM (1).

insurance rating. The process by which an insurer arrives at a policy premium for a particular risk. — Often shortened to rating.

insurance trust. See TRUST.

insurance underwriter. 1. INSURER. 2. An insurance-company employee who is responsible for determining whether to issue a policy and the amount to charge for the coverage provided.

insure, vb. 1. To secure, by payment of a premium, the payment of a sum of money in the event of a loss. 2. To issue or procure an insurance policy on or for.

insured, n. A person who is covered or protected by an insurance policy. — Also termed assured.

additional insured. A person who is covered by an insurance policy but who is not the primary insured. • An additional insured may, or may not, be specifically named in the policy.

class-one insured. In a motor-vehicle policy, the named insured and any relative residing with the named insured.

class-two insured. In a motor-vehicle policy, a person lawfully occupying a vehicle at the time of an accident.

named insured. A person designated in an insurance policy as the one covered by the policy.

insurer. One who agrees, by contract, to assume the risk of another's loss and to compensate for that loss. — Also termed underwriter; insurance underwriter; carrier; assurer (for life insurance).

quasi-insurer. A service provider who is held to strict liability in the provision of services, such as an innkeeper or a common carrier.

insurgent, n. A person who, for political purposes, engages in armed hostility against an established government. — insurgent, adj. — insurgency, n.

insuring agreement. See INSURING CLAUSE.

insuring clause. A provision in an insurance policy or bond reciting the risk assumed by the insurer or establishing the scope of the coverage. — Also termed insuring agreement.

insurrection. A violent revolt against an oppressive authority, usu. a government.

in tail. See TAIL.

intake. Hist. English law. A piece of land temporarily taken from a common or moorland by a tenant to raise a crop.

intake day. The day on which new cases are assigned to the courts.

intangible, adj. Not capable of being touched; impalpable.

intangible, n. Something that is not tangible; esp., an asset that is not corporeal, such as intellectual property.

general intangible. Any personal property other than goods, accounts, chattel paper, documents, instruments, investment property, rights to proceeds of written letters of credit, and money. • Some examples are goodwill, things in action, and literary rights.

UCC § 9-103(b). See intangible property under PROPERTY.

payment intangible. A general intangible under which the account debtor's principal obligation is a monetary obligation. UCC § 9-103(d).

intangible asset. See ASSET.

intangible drilling costs. Oil & gas. Expenses incurred in drilling, testing, and completing an oil or gas well. • These costs are deductible in the year they are incurred. — Also termed intangible drilling and development costs. IRC (26 USCA) § 263.

intangible movable. See MOVABLE.

intangible property. See PROPERTY.

intangible tax. See TAX.

integer (in-tə-jər), adj. [Latin] Archaic. Whole; untouched. See RES NOVA.

integrated agreement. See INTEGRATED CONTRACT.

integrated bar. See BAR.

integrated contract. One or more writings constituting a final expression of one or more terms of an agreement. — Also termed integrated agreement; integrated writing. See INTEGRATION (2).

completely integrated contract. An integrated agreement adopted by the parties as a full and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement. • The parties are therefore prohibited from varying or supplementing the contractual terms through parol (extrinsic) evidence.

partially integrated contract. An integrated agreement other than a completely integrated agreement.

integrated property settlement. A contract, incorporated into a divorce decree, that divides up the assets of divorcing spouses.

integrated writing. See integrated contract under CONTRACT.

integration. 1. The process of making whole or combining into one. 2. Contracts. The full expression of the parties' agreement, so that all earlier agreements are superseded, the effect being that neither party may later contradict or add to the contractual terms. — Also termed merger. See PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE.

complete integration. The fact or state of fully expressing the intent of the parties.

partial integration. The fact or state of not fully expressing the parties' intent, so that the contract can be changed by the admission of parol (extrinsic) evidence.

3. The incorporation of different races into existing institutions (such as public schools) for the purpose of reversing the historical effects of racial discrimination. Cf. DESEGREGATION. 4. Antitrust. A firm's performance of a function that it could have obtained on the open market. • A firm can achieve integration by entering a new market on its own, by acquiring a firm that operates in a secondary market, or by entering into a contract with a firm that operates in a secondary market. — Also termed vertical integration. See vertical merger under MERGER.

backward integration. A firm's acquisition of ownership of facilities that produce raw materials or parts for the firm's products.

integration clause. A contractual provision stating that the contract represents the parties' complete and final agreement and supersedes all informal understandings and oral agreements relating to the subject matter of the contract. — Also termed merger clause; entire-contract clause. See INTEGRATION (2); PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE.

integration rule. The rule that if the parties to a contract have embodied their agreement in a final document, any other action or statement is without effect and is immaterial in determining the terms of the contract.

intellectual property. 1. A category of intangible rights protecting commercially valuable products of the human intellect. • The category comprises primarily trademark, copyright, and patent rights, but also includes trade-secret rights, publicity rights, moral rights, and rights against unfair competition. 2. A commercially valuable product of the human intellect, in a concrete or abstract form, such as a copyrightable work, a protectable trademark, a patentable invention, or a trade secret. — Abbr. IP.

intemperance. A lack of moderation or temperance; esp., habitual or excessive drinking of alcoholic beverages.

intend, vb. 1. To have in mind a fixed purpose to reach a desired objective; to have as one's purpose <Daniel intended to become a lawyer>. 2. To contemplate that the usual consequences of one's act will probably or necessarily follow from the act, whether or not those consequences are desired for their own sake <although he activated the theater's fire alarm only on a dare, the jury found that Wilbur intended to cause a panic>. 3. To signify or mean <the parties intended for the writing to supersede their earlier handshake deal>.

intendant (in-ten-dənt). A director of a government agency, esp. (as used in 17th- and 18th-century France) a royal official charged with the administration of justice or finance.

intended beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

intended to be recorded. (Of a deed or other instrument) not yet filed with a public registry, but forming a link in a chain of title.

intended-use doctrine. Products liability. The rule imposing a duty on a manufacturer to develop a product so that it is reasonably safe for its intended or foreseeable users. • In determining the scope of responsibility, the court considers the defendant's marketing scheme and the foreseeability of the harm.

intendment (in-tend-mənt). 1. The sense in which the law understands something <the intendment of a contract is that the contract is legally enforceable>. — Also termed intendment of law. 2. A decision-maker's inference about the true meaning or intention of a legal instrument <there is no need for intendment, the court reasoned, when the text of the statute is clear>. — Formerly also spelled intendment.

common intendment. The natural or common meaning in legal interpretation.

3. A person's expectations when interacting with others within the legal sphere.

"Our institutions and our formalized interactions with one another are accompanied by certain interlocking expectations that may be called intendments, even though there is seldom occasion to bring these underlying expectations across the threshold of consciousness. In a very real sense when I cast my vote in an election my conduct is directed and conditioned by an anticipation that my ballot will be counted in favor of the candidate I actually vote for. This is true even though the possibility that my ballot will be thrown in the wastebasket, or counted for the wrong man, may never enter my mind as an object of conscious attention. In this sense the institution of elections may be said to contain an intendment that the votes cast will be faithfully tallied, though I might hesitate to say, except in a mood of rhetoric, that the election authorities had entered a contract with me to count my vote as I had cast it." Lon L. Fuller, The Morality of Law 217 (rev. ed. 1969).

intent. 1. The state of mind accompanying an act, esp. a forbidden act. • While motive is the inducement to do some act, intent is the mental resolution or determination to do it. When the intent to do an act that violates the law exists, motive becomes immaterial. Cf. MOTIVE; SCIENTER.

"The phrase 'with intent to,' or its equivalents, may mean any one of at least four different things: — (1) That the intent referred to must be the sole or exclusive intent; (2) that it is sufficient if it is one of several concurrent intents; (3) that it must be the chief or dominant intent, any others being subordinate or incidental; (4) that it must be a determining intent, that is to say, an intent in the absence of which the act would not have been done, the remaining purposes being insufficient motives by themselves. It is a question of construction which of those meanings is the true one in the particular case." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 383-84 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

constructive intent. A legal principle that actual intent will be presumed when an act leading to the result could have been reasonably expected to cause that result.

"Constructive intent is a fiction which permits lip service to the notion that intention is essential to criminality, while recognizing that unintended consequences of an act may sometimes be sufficient for guilt of some offenses." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 835 (3d ed. 1982).

general intent. The state of mind required for the commission of certain common-law crimes not requiring a specific intent or not imposing strict liability. • General intent usu. takes the form of recklessness (involving actual awareness of a risk and the culpable taking of that risk) or negligence (involving blameworthy inadvertence).

immediate intent. The intent relating to a wrongful act; the part of the total intent coincident with the wrongful act itself.

implied intent. A person's state of mind that can be inferred from speech or conduct, or from language used in an instrument to which the person is a party.

intent to kill. An intent to cause the death of another; esp., a state of mind that, if found to exist during an assault, can serve as the basis for an aggravated-assault charge.

manifest intent. Intent that is apparent or obvious based on the available circumstantial evidence, even if direct evidence of intent is not available. • For example, some fidelity bonds cover an employer's losses caused by an employee's dishonest or fraudulent acts committed with a manifest intent to cause a loss to the employer and to obtain a benefit for the employee. Establishing manifest intent sufficient to trigger coverage does not require direct evidence that the employee intended the employer's loss. Even if the employee did not actively want that result, but the result was substantially certain to follow from the employee's conduct, the requisite intent will be inferred.

predatory intent. Antitrust. A business's intent to injure a competitor by unfair means, esp. by sacrificing revenues to drive a competitor out of business.

specific intent. The intent to accomplish the precise criminal act that one is later charged with. • At common law, the specific-intent crimes were robbery, assault, larceny, burglary, forgery, false pretenses, embezzlement, attempt, solicitation, and conspiracy.

testamentary intent. A testator's intent that a particular instrument function as his or her last will and testament. • Testamentary intent is required for a will to be valid.

transferred intent. Intent that has been shifted from the originally intended wrongful act to the wrongful act actually committed. • For example, if a person intends to kill one person but kills another, the intent may be transferred to the actual act. See TRANSFERRED-INTENT DOCTRINE.

ulterior intent. The intent that passes beyond a wrongful act and relates to the objective for the sake of which the act is done; MOTIVE. • For example, a thief's immediate intent may be to steal another's money, but the ulterior intent may be to buy food with that money.

2. A lawmaker's state of mind and purpose in drafting or voting for a measure.

legislative intent. See LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

original intent. The mental state of the drafters or enactors of the U.S. Constitution, a statute, or another document.

intentio (in-ten-shee-oh). [Latin] 1. Roman law. The part of a formula in which the plaintiff's claim against the defendant is stated. See FORMULA (1). 2. Hist. A count or declaration in a real action. • Intentio was an earlier name for narratio. See NARRATIO.

intention, n. The willingness to bring about something planned or foreseen; the state of being set to do something. — intentional, adj.

"Intention is the purpose or design with which an act is done. It is the foreknowledge of the act, coupled with the desire of it, such foreknowledge and desire being the cause of the act, inasmuch as they fulfil themselves through the operation of the will. An act is intentional if, and in so far as, it exists in idea before it exists in fact, the idea realising itself in the fact because of the desire by which it is accompanied." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 378 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

intentional, adj. Done with the aim of carrying out the act.

intentional act. See ACT (2).

intentional infliction of emotional distress. The tort of intentionally or recklessly causing another person severe emotional distress through one's extreme or outrageous acts. • In a few jurisdictions, a physical manifestation of the mental suffering is required for the plaintiff to recover. — Also termed (in some states) outrage. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS. Cf. NEGLIGENCE INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

intentional-injury exclusion. See expected/intended exclusion under EXCLUSION (3).

intentional manslaughter. See voluntary manslaughter under MANSLAUGHTER.

intentional tort. See TORT.

intentional wrong. See WRONG.

intent of the legislature. See LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

intent to kill. See INTENT (1).

intent-to-use application. Trademarks. An application filed with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to register a trademark or service-mark on the principal register based on a bona fide intention to use the mark. • Trademark rights have traditionally been established by actual use in commerce. In 1988, the Federal Trademark Act (the Lanham Act) was amended to permit applications to be filed based on merely the intent to use the mark. 15 USCA § 1051(b).

inter (in-tər), prep. [Latin] Among.

inter alia (in-tər ay-lee-ə or ah-lee-ə), adv. [Latin] Among other things.

inter alios (in-tər ay-lee-əs or ah-lee-əs), adv. [Latin] Among other persons.

Inter-American Bar Association. An organization of lawyers from North America, Central America, and South America whose purpose is to promote education, cooperation, and professional exchanges among lawyers from different American countries. — Abbr. IABA.

inter apices juris (in-tər ay-pə-seez [or ap-ə-seez] joor-is), adv. [Law Latin] Among the subtleties of the law. See APEX JURIS.

intercalare (in-tər-kə-lair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To introduce or insert among others; esp., to introduce a day or month into the calendar. • From this Latin term derives the rare English word intercalate, roughly synonymous with interpolate.

intercedere (in-tər-see-də-ree), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To assume another's debt; esp., to act as surety for another.

intercept, vb. To covertly receive or listen to (a communication). • The term usu. refers to covert reception by a law-enforcement agency. See WIRETAPPING.

interchangeable bond. See BOND (3).

inter conjuges (in-tər kahn-jə-geez), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] Between husband and wife.

intercourse. 1. Dealings or communications, esp. between businesses, governmental entities, or the like. 2. Physical sexual contact, esp. involving the penetration of the vagina by the penis.

interdependence. Int'l law. The reliance of countries on each other to ensure their mutual subsistence and advancement.

interdict (in-tər-dikt), n. Roman & civil law. 1. An injunction or other prohibitory decree.

decretal interdict (di-kreet-əl). An interdict that signified the praetor's order or decree by applying the remedy in a pending case.

edictal interdict (ee-dik-təl). An interdict that declared the praetor's intention to give a remedy in certain cases, usu. in a way that preserves or restores possession.

exhibitory interdict. An interdict by which a praetor compelled a person or thing to be produced.

possessory interdict. An interdict that protected a tenant who had been ejected or threatened with disturbance. • Possessory interdicts were summary processes of Roman law.

prohibitory interdict. An interdict by which a praetor forbade something to be done.

restitutory interdict (ri-stich-ə-tor-ee or res-ti-t[y]oo-tə-ree). An interdict by which a praetor directed something to be restored to someone who had been dispossessed of it.

2. Eccles. law. An order prohibiting a person from attending divine services or barring their being conducted at a particular place. 3. Civil law. One who is subject to interdiction.

limited interdict. A person whose right to care for himself or herself has been partially removed because of mental incapacity; a person subject to limited interdiction.

interdict (in-tər-dikt), vb. 1. To forbid or restrain. 2. Civil law. To remove a person's right to handle personal affairs because of mental incapacity.

interdiction. 1. The act of prohibiting.

interdiction of commercial intercourse. Int'l law. A governmental prohibition of commercial trade.

2. Civil law. The act of depriving a person of the right to care for his or her affairs because of mental incapacity.

full interdiction. The complete removal of one's right to care for oneself and one's affairs or estate because of mental incapacity. — Also termed complete interdiction.

limited interdiction. The partial removal of one's right to care for one's affairs or estate because of mental incapacity.

interdictory (in-tər-dik-tər-ee), adj. 1. Of or relating to an interdiction. 2. Having the power to interdict. — Also termed interdictive.

interdictum quod vi aut clam (in-tər-dik-təm kwod vī awt klam). [Latin “interdict because of force or stealth”] Roman law. An interdict issued against a person who forcibly (vi) or secretly (clam) altered the claimant’s property. ● The interdict required the defendant to restore the property to its previous condition.

interesse (in-tər-es-ee). [Latin] 1. Monetary interest. 2. A legal interest in property.

interessee (in-tə-re-see). See real party in interest under PARTY (2).

interesse termini (in-tər-es-ee tər-mə-nl). [Latin “interest of term or end”] Archaic. A lessee’s right of entry onto the leased property; esp., a lessee’s interest in real property before taking possession. ● An interesse termini is not an estate; it is an interest for the term. It gives the lessee a claim against any person who prevents the lessee from entering or accepting delivery of the property.

interest, n. 1. Advantage or profit, esp. of a financial nature <conflict of interest>. 2. A legal share in something; all or part of a legal or equitable claim to or right in property <right, title, and interest>.

absolute interest. An interest that is not subject to any condition.

contingent interest. An interest that the holder may enjoy only upon the occurrence of a condition precedent.

controlling interest. Sufficient ownership of stock in a company to control policy and management; esp., a greater-than-50% ownership interest in an enterprise.

direct interest. A certain, absolute interest <the juror was disqualified because she had a direct interest in the lawsuit>.

entire interest. A whole interest or right, without diminution. See FEE SIMPLE.

equitable interest. An interest held by virtue of an equitable title or claimed on equitable grounds, such as the interest held by a trust beneficiary.

expectation interest. The interest of a nonbreaching party in receiving a benefit that would have resulted if the contract had been performed. See expectation damages under DAMAGES; BENEFIT-OF-THE-BARGAIN RULE.

future interest. See FUTURE INTEREST.

inalienable interest. An interest that cannot be sold or traded.

inchoate interest. A property interest that has not yet vested.

insurable interest. A legal interest in another person’s life or health or in the protection of property from injury, loss, destruction, or pecuniary damage. ● To take out an insurance policy, a potential insured must have an insurable interest. If a policy does not have an insurable interest as its basis, it will usually be considered a form of wagering and thus be held unenforceable. See wager policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

junior interest. An interest that is subordinate to a senior interest.

legal interest. An interest recognized by law, such as legal title.

possessory interest. See POSSESSORY INTEREST.

present interest. A property interest in which the privilege of possession or enjoyment is present and not merely future; an interest entitling the holder to immediate possession. — Also termed present estate. Cf. FUTURE INTEREST.

proprietary interest. The interest held by a property owner together with all appurtenant rights, such as a stockholder’s right to vote the shares.

reliance interest. The interest a nonbreaching party has in recovering costs stemming from that party’s reliance on the performance of the contract.

senior interest. An interest that takes precedence over others; esp., a debt security or preferred share that has a higher claim on a corporation’s assets and earnings than that of a junior obligation or common share.

terminable interest. See TERMINABLE INTEREST.

vested interest. An interest the right to the enjoyment of which, either present or future, is not subject to the happening of a condition precedent.

3. The compensation fixed by agreement or allowed by law for the use or detention of money, or for the loss of money by one who is entitled to its use; esp., the amount owed to a lender in return for the use of borrowed money. — Also termed finance charge. See USURY.

accrued interest. Interest that is earned but not yet paid, such as interest that accrues on real estate and that will be paid when the property is sold if, in the meantime, the rental income does not cover the mortgage payments.

add-on interest. Interest that is computed on the original face amount of a loan and that remains the same even as the principal declines. • A $10,000 loan with add-on interest at 8% payable over three years would require equal annual interest payments of $800 for three years, regardless of the unpaid principal amount. With add-on interest, the effective rate of interest is typically about twice the stated add-on interest rate. In the example just cited, then, the effective rate of interest would be about 16%. — Also termed block interest. See add-on loan under LOAN.

Boston interest. Interest computed by using a 30-day month rather than the exact number of days in the month. — Also termed New York interest.

compound interest. Interest paid on both the principal and the previously accumulated interest. Cf. simple interest.

conventional interest. Interest at a rate agreed to by the parties themselves, as distinguished from that prescribed by law. Cf. interest as damages.

discount interest. The interest that accrues on a discounted investment instrument (such as a government bond) as it matures. • The investor receives the interest when the instrument is redeemed.

gross interest. A borrower's interest payment that includes administrative, service, and insurance charges.

imputed interest. Interest income that the IRS attributes to a lender regardless of whether the lender actually receives interest from the borrower. • This is common esp. in loans between family members.

interest as damages. Interest allowed by law in the absence of a promise to pay it, as compensation for a delay in paying a fixed sum or a delay in assessing and paying damages. Cf. conventional interest.

New York interest. See Boston interest.

prepaid interest. Interest paid before it is earned.

qualified residence interest. Tax. Interest paid on debt that is secured by one's home and that was incurred to purchase, build, improve, or refinance the home. • This type of interest is deductible from adjusted gross income.

simple interest. Interest paid on the principal only and not on accumulated interest. •

Interest on Lawyers' Trust Accounts

Interest accrues only on the principal balance regardless of how often interest is paid. — Also termed straight-line interest. Cf. compound interest.

straight-line interest. See simple interest.

unearned interest. Interest received by a financial institution before it is earned.

interest-analysis technique. Conflict of laws. A method of resolving choice-of-law questions by reviewing a state's laws and the state's interests in enforcing those laws to determine whether that state's laws or those of another state should apply. — Also termed governmental-interest-analysis technique.

"Professor Brainerd Currie gets the major credit for developing the interest analysis, or governmental interest analysis, technique. Interest analysis requires an examination into competing laws to determine their underlying policies and the strength of the relative interests the competing sovereigns have in the application of their respective laws in the particular situation. The facts will vary and the strength of the relevant policies will wax and wane accordingly." David D. Siegel, Conflicts in a Nutshell 237 (2d ed. 1994).

interest arbitration. See ARBITRATION.

interest as damages. See INTEREST (3).

interest bond. See BOND (3).

interest-coverage ratio. The ratio between a company's pretax earnings and the annual interest payable on bonds and loans.

interested party. See PARTY (2).

interested person. See PERSON.

interested witness. See WITNESS.

interest-equalization tax. See TAX.

interest factor. Insurance. In life-insurance ratemaking, an estimate of the interest or rate of return that the insurer will earn on premium payments over the life of a policy. • The interest factor is one element that a life insurer uses to calculate premium rates. See PREMIUM RATE; gross premium (1) under PREMIUM (1). Cf. MORTALITY FACTOR; RISK FACTOR.

interest-free loan. See LOAN.

Interest on Lawyers' Trust Accounts. A program that allows a lawyer or law firm to deposit a client's retained funds into an interest-bearing account that designates the interest payments to charitable, law-related purposes, such as providing legal aid to the poor. • Almost all states have either a voluntary or mandatory IOLTA program. — Abbr. IOLTA.

interest-only mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

interest policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

interest rate. The percentage that a borrower of money must pay to the lender in return for the use of the money, usu. expressed as a percentage of the principal payable for a one-year period. — Often shortened to rate. — Also termed rate of interest.

annual percentage rate. The actual cost of borrowing money, expressed in the form of an annualized interest rate. — Abbr. APR.

bank rate. The rate of interest at which the Federal Reserve lends funds to member banks.

contract rate. The interest rate printed on the face of a bond certificate.

coupon rate. The specific interest rate for a coupon bond. — Also termed coupon interest rate. See coupon bond under BOND (1).

discount rate. 1. The interest rate at which a member bank may borrow money from the Federal Reserve. • This rate controls the supply of money available to banks for lending. Cf. rediscount rate. 2. The percentage of a commercial paper's face value paid by an issuer who sells the instrument to a financial institution. 3. The interest rate used in calculating present value.

effective rate. The actual annual interest rate, which incorporates compounding when calculating interest, rather than the stated rate or coupon rate.

face rate. See nominal rate.

floating rate. A varying interest rate that is tied to a financial index such as the prime rate.

illegal rate. An interest rate higher than the rate allowed by law. See USURY.

legal rate. 1. The interest rate imposed as a matter of law when none is provided by contract. 2. The maximum interest rate, set by statute, that may be charged on a loan. See USURY.

lock rate. A mortgage-application interest rate that is established and guaranteed for a specified period. — Also termed locked-in rate.

nominal rate. The interest rate stated in a loan agreement or on a bond, with no adjustment made for inflation. — Also termed coupon rate; face rate; stated rate.

prime rate. The interest rate that a commercial bank holds out as its lowest rate for a short-term loan to its most creditworthy borrowers, usu. large corporations. • This rate, which can vary slightly from bank to bank, often dictates other interest rates for various personal and commercial loans. — Often shortened to prime. — Also termed prime lending rate.

real rate. An interest rate that has been adjusted for inflation over time.

rediscount rate. The interest rate at which a member bank may borrow from the Federal Reserve on a loan secured by commercial paper that has already been resold by the bank.

stated rate. See nominal rate.

variable rate. An interest rate that varies at preset intervals in relation to the current market rate (usu. the prime rate).

interest-rate swap. An agreement to exchange interest receipts or interest-payment obligations, usu. to adjust one's risk exposure, to speculate on interest-rate changes, or to convert an instrument or obligation from a fixed to a floating rate — or from a floating to a fixed rate. • The parties to such an agreement are termed "counterparties."

plain-vanilla swap. A typical interest-rate swap that involves one counterparty's paying a fixed interest rate while the other assumes a floating interest rate based on the amount of the principal of the underlying debt. • The underlying debt, called the "notional" amount of the swap, does not change hands — only the interest payments are exchanged.

interest unity. See unity of interest under UNITY.

interest warrant. See WARRANT (2).

interference, n. 1. The act of meddling in another's affairs. 2. An obstruction or hindrance. 3. Patents. An administrative proceeding in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to determine which applicant is entitled to the patent when two or more applicants claim the same invention. • This proceeding occurs when the same invention is claimed (1) in two pending applications, or (2) in one pending application and a patent issued within a year of the pending application's filing date. — interfere, vb.

interference with a contractual relationship. See TORTIOUS INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACTUAL RELATIONS.

intergovernmental immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

intergovernmental-immunity doctrine. Constitutional law. The principle that both the federal government and the states are independent sovereigns, and that neither sovereign may intrude on the other in certain political spheres. Cf. PREEMPTION.

interim, adj. Done, made, or occurring for an intervening time; temporary or provisional <an interim director>.

interim bond. See BOND (2).

interim committitur (in-tə-rim kə-mit-ə-tər). [Latin "in the meantime, let him be committed"] A court order directing that a defendant be incarcerated pending further action.

interim curator. See CURATOR (2).

interim financing. See FINANCING.

interim measure of protection. Int'l law. An international tribunal's act to prevent a litigant from prejudicing the final outcome of a lawsuit by arbitrary action before a judgment has been reached.

interim-occupancy agreement. A contract governing an arrangement (called a leaseback) whereby the seller rents back property from the buyer. See LEASEBACK.

interim order. See ORDER (2).

interim receipt. The written acknowledgment of a premium paid on an insurance policy that is pending final approval.

interim relief. See RELIEF.

interim statement. Accounting. A periodic financial report issued during the fiscal year

(usu. quarterly) that indicates the company's current performance. ● The SEC requires the company to file such a statement if it is distributed to the company's shareholders. — Also termed interim report.

interim trustee. See TRUSTEE (2).

interim zoning. See ZONING.

interinsurance. See reciprocal insurance under INSURANCE.

interinsurance exchange. See RECIPROCAL EXCHANGE.

Interior Department. See DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

interlineation (in-tər-lin-ee-ay-shən), n. 1. The act of writing something between the lines of an earlier writing. 2. Something written between the lines of an earlier writing. — interline, vb. Cf. INTERPOLATION.

interlining. A carrier's practice of transferring a shipment to another carrier to reach a destination not served by the transferring carrier.

interlocking confessions. See CONFESSION.

interlocking director. See DIRECTOR.

interlocutor (in-tər-lok-yə-tər). Scots law. A nonfinal judicial order disposing of any part of a case.

interlocutory (in-tər-lok-yə-tər-ee), adj. (Of an order, judgment, appeal, etc.) interim or temporary, not constituting a final resolution of the whole controversy.

interlocutory appeal. See APPEAL.

Interlocutory Appeals Act. A federal statute, enacted in 1958, that grants discretion to a U.S. court of appeals to review an interlocutory order in a civil case if the trial judge states in writing that the order involves a controlling question of law on which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion, and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the termination of the litigation. 28 USCA § 1292(b). interlocutory decision. See interlocutory order under ORDER (2).

interlocutory decree. See interlocutory judgment under JUDGMENT.

interlocutory injunction. See preliminary injunction under INJUNCTION.

interlocutory judgment. See JUDGMENT.

interlocutory order. See ORDER (2).

interloper, n. 1. One who interferes without justification. 2. One who trades illegally. — interlope, vb.

intermeddler. See OFFICIOUS INTERMEDDLER.

intermediary (in-tər-mee-dee-er-ee), n. A mediator or go-between; a third-party negotiator. — intermediate (in-tər-mee-dee-ayt), vb. Cf. FINDER.

informed intermediary. Products liability. A person who is in the chain of distribution from the manufacturer to the consumer and who knows the risks of the product. — Also termed learned intermediary.

intermediary bank. See BANK.

intermediate account. See ACCOUNT.

intermediate court. See COURT.

intermediate order. See interlocutory order under ORDER (2).

intermediate scrutiny. Constitutional law. A standard lying between the extremes of rational-basis review and strict scrutiny. • Under the standard, if a statute contains a quasi-suspect classification (such as gender or legitimacy), the classification must be substantially related to the achievement of an important governmental objective. — Also termed middle-level scrutiny; mid-level scrutiny; heightened scrutiny. Cf. STRICT SCRUTINY; RATIONAL-BASIS TEST.

intermediation. 1. Any process involving an intermediary. 2. The placing of funds with a financial intermediary that reinvests the funds, such as a bank that lends the funds to others or a mutual fund that invests the funds in stocks, bonds, or other instruments.

in terminis terminantibus (in tər-mə-nis tər-mə-nan-ti-bəs), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] In terms of determination; in express or determinate terms.

intermittent easement. See EASEMENT.

intermittent sentence. See SENTENCE.

intermixture of goods. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

intern, n. An advanced student or recent graduate who is apprenticing to gain practical experience before entering a specific profession. — internship, n. See CLERK (4).

intern, vb. 1. To segregate and confine a person or group, esp. those suspected of hostile sympathies in time of war. See INTERNMENT. 2. To work in an internship.

internal act. See ACT (2).

internal-affairs doctrine. Conflict of laws. The rule that in disputes involving a corporation and its relationships with its shareholders, directors, officers, or agents, the law to be applied is the law of the state of incorporation.

internal affairs of a foreign corporation. Conflict of laws. Matters that involve only the inner workings of a corporation, such as dividend declarations and the selection of officers.

“The old statement that a court will not hear cases involving the internal affairs of a foreign corporation has been practically dropped from the law today, and the result when appropriate is achieved under the forum non conveniens rule. Modern courts recognize their jurisdiction to entertain such suits, and insist only upon a discretionary power to refuse to exercise the existent jurisdiction when the facts make it both feasible and more desirable for the case to be heard by a court of the state of incorporation.” Robert A. Leflar, American Conflicts Law § 255, at 512–13 (3d ed. 1977).

internal audit. See AUDIT.

internal financing. See FINANCING.

internal law. See LAW.

internal rate of return. See RATE OF RETURN.

internal revenue. Governmental revenue derived from domestic taxes rather than from customs or import duties. — Also termed (outside the United States) inland revenue.

Internal Revenue Code. Title 26 of the U.S. Code, containing all current federal tax laws. — Abbr. IRC. — Also termed tax law.

Internal Revenue Service. The branch of the U.S. Treasury Department responsible for administering the Internal Revenue Code and providing taxpayer education. — Abbr. IRS.

internal security. The field of law dealing with measures taken to protect a country from subversive activities.

internal-security act. A statute illegalizing and controlling subversive activities of organizations whose purpose is believed to be to overthrow or disrupt the government. ● In the United States, many provisions in such statutes have been declared unconstitutional. One such law was repealed in 1993. See 50 USCA § 781.

internal sovereignty. See SOVEREIGNTY.

internal waters. Any natural or artificial body or stream of water within the territorial limits of a country, such as a bay, gulf, river mouth, creek, harbor, port, lake, or canal.

“Waters on the landward side of the baseline of the territorial sea form part of the internal waters of a State.” Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone, Apr. 29, 1958, art. 5, ¶ 1.

international administrative law. See ADMINISTRATIVE LAW.

international agreement. A treaty or other contract between different countries, such as GATT or NAFTA. See GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE; NORTH AMERICAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT.

“Though international agreements are known by a variety of titles, such as treaties, conventions, pacts, acts, declarations, protocols, accords, arrangements, concordats, and modi vivendi, none of these terms has an absolutely fixed meaning. The more formal political agreements, however, are usually called treaties or conventions.” Oscar Svarlien, An Introduction to the Law of Nations 261 (1955).

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. See WORLD BANK.

international bill of exchange. See foreign draft under DRAFT.

international control. Int'l law. The supervision over countries and their subdivisions for the purpose of ensuring the conformity of their conduct with international law.

“[S]upervision is exercised increasingly not only over the conduct of governmental and intergovernmental institutions, but also over the acts and omissions of individuals to establish their conformity with requirements of public international law. Yet even where supranational entities, notably the European Communities, exercise international control over the conduct of individuals and corporate bodies, generally the supervision is destined to verify or secure conformity of governmental measures with relevant rules of law.” Hugo J. Hahn, “International Controls,” in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 1079–80 (1995).

International Court of Justice. The 15-member U.N. tribunal that sits primarily at The Hague, Netherlands, to adjudicate disputes between countries that voluntarily submit cases for decision. ● Appeal from the court lies only with the U.N. Security Council. — Abbr. ICJ. — Also termed World Court.

international crime. Int'l law. A crime against international law, occurring when three conditions are satisfied: (1) the criminal norm must derive either from a treaty concluded under international law or from customary international law, and must have direct binding force on individuals without intermediate provisions of municipal law, (2) the provision must be made for the prosecution of acts penalized by international law in accordance with the principle of universal jurisdiction, so that the international character of the crime might show in the mode of prosecution itself (e.g., before the International Criminal Court), and (3) a treaty establishing liability for the act must bind the great majority of countries.

International Criminal Court. A court that was established by the U.N. Security Council to adjudicate international crimes such as terrorism. ● The court was repeatedly proposed and discussed throughout the 20th century, but was established only in 1998. In the absence of any international criminal code, the court applies general principles of international criminal law. — Abbr. ICC.

International Criminal Police Organization. An international law-enforcement group founded in 1923 and headquartered in Lyons, France. ● The organization gathers and shares information on transnational criminals with more than 180 member nations. — Also termed Interpol.

international economic law. International law relating to investment, economic relations, economic development, economic institutions, and regional economic integration.

international enclave. See ENCLAVE.

international extradition. See EXTRADITION.

internationalization. The act or process of bringing a territory of one country under the protection or control of another or of several countries.

"[T]he concept of internationalization is characterized by three elements: the abolition or limitation of the sovereignty of a specific State; the serving of community interests or at least the interests of a group of States; and the establishment of an international institutional framework, not necessarily involving an international organization." Rüdiger Wolfrum, "Internationalization," in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 1395 (1995).

international jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

international law. The legal principles governing the relationships between nations; more modernly, the law of international relations, embracing not only nations but also such participants as international organizations, multinational corporations, nongovernmental organizations, and even individuals (such as those who invoke their human rights or commit war crimes). — Also termed public international law; law of nations; law of nature and nations; jus gentium; jus gentium publicum; jus inter gentes; foreign-relations law; interstate law; law between states (the word state, in the latter two phrases, being equivalent to nation or country). Cf. TRANSNATIONAL LAW.

"Convenient ... as is on many accounts the phrase 'International Law,' to express those rules of conduct in accordance with which, either in consequence of their express consent, or in pursuance of the usage of the civilized world, nations are expected to act, it is impossible to regard these rules as being in reality anything more than the moral code of nations.... 'International law,' so far as its doctrines have been generally received, is decisive of all questions which arise between one State and another." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 134–35, 392–93 (13th ed. 1924).

"[I]nternational law or the law of nations must be defined as law applicable to states in their mutual relations and to individuals in their relations with states. International law may also, under this hypothesis, be applicable to certain interrelationships of individuals themselves, where such interrelationships involve matters of international concern." Philip C. Jessup, A Modern Law of Nations 17 (1949).

customary international law. International law that derives from customary law and serves to supplement codified norms.

private international law. International conflict of laws. • Legal scholars frequently lament the name "private international law" because it misleadingly suggests a body of law somehow parallel to public international law, when in fact it is merely a part of each legal system's private law. — Also termed interna- tional private law; jus gentium privatum. See CONFLICT OF LAWS (2).

"'International Private law,' 'Internationales Privatrecht,' though a dangerously ambiguous term, is not incapable of being understood to denote the mode in which rules of private law are borrowed by the Courts of one State from those of another." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 422 (13th ed. 1924).

International Law Commission. A body created in 1948 by the United Nations for the purpose of codifying international law. • The Commission is composed of experts in international law. It sits at the European Office of the United Nations in Geneva, though its annual meetings are sometimes held elsewhere.

international legal community. 1. The collective body of countries whose mutual legal relations are based on sovereign equality. 2. More broadly, all organized entities having the capacity to take part in international legal relations. 3. An integrated organization on which a group of countries, by international treaty, confer part of their powers for amalgamated enterprise. • In this sense, the European Community is a prime example.

international legislation. Int'l law. 1. Lawmaking among countries or intergovernmental organizations, displaying structural and procedural characteristics that are the same as national legislation. 2. The product of any concerted effort to change international law by statute. 3. The process of trying to change international law by statute. 4. Loosely, the making of customary international law by a majority with the effect that a dissenter either is bound by the revised text or ceases to be a party to it. 5. Loosely, the adoption by international bodies of binding decisions, other than judicial and arbitral decisions, concerning specific situations or disputes.

International Monetary Fund. A U.N. agency established to stabilize international exchange rates and promote balanced trade. — Abbr. IMF.

international organization. Int'l law. An association of countries, established by and operated according to multilateral treaty, whose purpose is to pursue the common aims of those countries. • Examples include the World Health Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, and the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

international person. Int'l law. An actor that has a legal personality in international law; one who, being a subject of international law, enjoys rights, duties, and powers established in international law and has the ability to act on the international plane.

international private law. See private international law under INTERNATIONAL LAW; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

international regime. See REGIME.

international relations. 1. World politics. 2. Global political interaction primarily among sovereign nations. 3. The academic discipline devoted to studying world politics, embracing international law, international economics, and the history and art of diplomacy.

international river. Int'l law. A river that flows through or between two or more countries. • An international river raises the question whether each riparian state has full control of its own part of the river, or whether control is limited because the river is useful or even necessary to other states.

international seabed. The seabed and ocean floor, as well as the subsoil, lying beyond the territorial limits of nations. — Also termed international seabed area.

International Trade Court. See COURT OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE.

international union. See UNION.

international will. See WILL.

internecine (in-tər-nee-sin or in-tər-nee-sin or in-tər-nes-ēen), adj. 1. Deadly; characterized by mass slaughter. 2. Mutually deadly; destructive of both parties <an internecine civil war>. 3. Loosely, of or relating to conflict within a group <internecine faculty politics>.

internment (in-tər-nənt), n. The government-ordered detention of people suspected of disloyalty to the government, such as the confinement of Japanese Americans during World War II. — intern, vb.

internuncio (in-tər-nən-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin internuntius] 1. A messenger between two parties. 2. A broker who serves as agent of both parties to a transaction. — Also termed internunciatus. 3. A papal representative at a foreign court, ranking below a nuncio. Cf. NUNCIO. — internuncial, adj.

inter pares (in-tər pair-ēez), adv. & adj. [Latin] Between peers; between people in an equal position.

inter partes (in-tər pahr-teez), adv. [Latin “between parties”] Between two or more parties; with two or more parties in a transaction. — inter partes, adj. Cf. EX PARTE.

interpellate (in-tər-pel-ayt), vb. 1. (Of a judge) to interrupt, with a question, a lawyer’s argument. 2. (Of a legislator) to interrupt a legislature’s calendar by bringing into question a ministerial policy, esp. in the legislature of France, Italy, or Germany.

interplea. A pleading by which a stakeholder places the disputed property into the court’s registry; the plea made by an interpleader. See INTERPLEADER.

interplead, vb. 1. (Of a claimant) to assert one’s own claim regarding property or an issue already before the court. 2. (Of a stakeholder) to institute an interpleader action, usu. by depositing disputed property into the court’s registry to abide the court’s decision about who is entitled to the property. Cf. IMPLEAD.

interpleader, n. 1. A suit to determine a right to property held by a usu. disinterested third party (called a stakeholder) who is in doubt about ownership and who therefore deposits the property with the court to permit interested parties to litigate ownership. • Typically, a stakeholder initiates an interpleader both to determine who should receive the property and to avoid multiple liability. Fed. R. Civ. P. 22. See STAKEHOLDER (1). Cf. IMPLEADER; INTERVENTION (1). 2. Loosely, a party who interpleads.

“Interpleader is a form of joinder open to one who does not know to which of several claimants he or she is liable, if liable at all. It permits him or her to bring the claimants into a single action, and to require them to litigate among themselves to determine which, if any, has a valid claim. Although the earliest records of a procedure similar to interpleader were at common law, it soon became an equitable rather than a legal procedure.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 74, at 531 (4th ed. 1983).

Interpol (in-tər-pohl). See INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL POLICE ORGANIZATION.

interpolation (in-tər-pə-lay-shən), n. The act of inserting words into a document to change or clarify the meaning. ● In a negative sense, interpolation can refer to putting extraneous or false words into a document to change its meaning. — interpolate, vb. — interpolative, adj. — interpolator, n. Cf. INTERLINEATION.

interposition, n. 1. The act of submitting something (such as a pleading or motion) as a defense to an opponent's claim. 2. Archaic. The action of a state, while exercising its sovereignty, in rejecting a federal mandate that it believes is unconstitutional or overreaching. ● The Supreme Court has declared that interposition is an illegal defiance of constitutional authority. — interpose, vb.

interpretatio (in-tər-pri-tay-shee-oh). [Latin] Roman law. An opinion of a Roman jurist (an interpreter of the law, not an advocate) who did not usu. appear in court. ● Such an opinion was not originally binding, but by the Law of Citations (A.D. 426), the opinions of five jurists acquired binding force. See CITATIONS, LAW OF.

interpretation, n. 1. The process of determining what something, esp. the law or a legal document, means; the ascertainment of meaning.

"Interpretation, as applied to written law, is the art or process of discovering and expounding the intended signification of the language used, that is, the meaning which the authors of the law designed it to convey to others." Henry Campbell Black, Handbook on the Construction and Interpretation of the Laws 1 (1896).

"There is more to interpretation in general than the discovery of the meaning attached by the author to his words. Even if, in a particular case, that meaning is discoverable with a high degree of certitude from external sources, the question whether it has been adequately expressed remains." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 149 (1976).

administrative interpretation. An interpretation given to a law or regulation by an administrative agency.

authentic interpretation. Interpretation arrived at by asking the drafter or drafting body what the intended meaning was.

"The procedure of referring the doubtful statute to its author has acquired a name in the literature of jurisprudence. It is called 'authentic interpretation.' ... [Although] this device has been tried in ... recent times in certain European countries, ... [it] has always failed, and no thoughtful adviser would recommend it to any government today." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 29-30 (1968).

customary interpretation. Interpretation based on earlier rulings on the same subject.

extensive interpretation. A liberal interpretation that applies a statutory provision to a case not falling within its literal words.

grammatical interpretation. Interpretation that is based exclusively on the words themselves.

liberal interpretation. Interpretation according to what the reader believes the author reasonably intended, even if, through inadvertence, the author failed to think of it.

limited interpretation. See restrictive interpretation.

logical interpretation. Interpretation that departs from the literal words on the ground that there may be other, more satisfactory evidence of the author's true intention.

restrictive interpretation. An interpretation that is bound by a principle or principles existing outside the interpreted text. — Also termed restricted interpretation; limited interpretation; interpretatio limitata. Cf. unrestrictive interpretation.

strict interpretation. Interpretation according to what the reader believes the author must have been thinking at the time of the writing, and no more. ● Typically, this type of reading gives a text a narrow meaning.

unrestrictive interpretation. Interpretation in good faith, without reference to any specific principle. Cf. restrictive interpretation.

2. The understanding one has about the meaning of something. 3. A translation, esp. oral, from one language to another. 4. CHARACTERIZATION. — interpret, vb. — interpretative, interpretive, adj. See CONSTRUCTION (2).

interpretation clause. A legislative or contractual provision giving the meaning of words frequently used or explaining how the document as a whole is to be construed.

interpretative rule. Administrative law. 1. The requirement that an administrative agency explain the statutes under which it operates. 2. An administrative rule explaining an agency's interpretation of a statute. — Also termed interpretive rule. Cf. LEGISLATIVE RULE.

interpreted testimony. See TESTIMONY.

interpreter. A person who translates, esp. orally, from one language to another; esp., a person who is sworn at a trial to accurately translate the testimony of a witness who is deaf or who speaks a foreign language.

interpretive rule. See INTERPRETATIVE RULE.

interpretivism. A doctrine of constitutional interpretation holding that judges must follow norms or values expressly stated or implied in the language of the Constitution. Cf. NONINTERPRETIVISM; ORIGINALISM.

"A long-standing dispute in constitutional theory has gone under different names at different times, but today's terminology seems as helpful as any. Today we are likely to call the contending sides 'interpretivism' and 'noninterpretivism' — the former indicating that judges deciding constitutional issues should confine themselves to enforcing norms that are stated or clearly implicit in the written Constitution, the latter the contrary view that courts should go beyond that set of references and enforce norms that cannot be discovered within the four corners of the instrument." John Hart Ely, Democracy and Distrust 1 (1980).

inter quattuor parietes (in-tər kwah-too-ər pə-ri-ə-teez), adv. & adj. [Law Latin] Within the four walls.

inter regalia (in-tər ri-gay-lee-ə), adj. [Latin] Included in the royal powers or prerogatives; among other things belonging to the sovereign. See REGALIA.

interregnum (in-tə-reg-nəm). 1. An interval between reigns; the time when a throne is vacant between the reign of a sovereign and the accession of a successor. 2. Archaic. Authority exercised during a temporary vacancy of the throne or a suspension of the regular government. 3. A break or pause in a continuous event.

interrogatee (in-ter-ə-gə-tee). A person who is interrogated. — Also termed interrogee (in-ter-ə-gee).

interrogation, n. The formal or systematic questioning of a person; esp., intensive questioning by the police, usu. of a person arrested for or suspected of committing a crime. — interrogate, vb. — interrogative, adj.

custodial interrogation. Intense police questioning of a detained person.

investigatory interrogation. Routine, nonaccusatory questioning by the police of a person who is not in custody.

interrogative question. Civil law. In a criminal trial, a question asked of a witness to elicit inadmissible evidence relating to the crime at issue in the case. Cf. ASSERTIVE QUESTION.

interrogator (in-ter-ə-gay-tər). One who poses questions to another.

interrogatory (in-tə-rɒg-ə-tor-ee), n. A written question (usu. in a set of questions) submitted to an opposing party in a lawsuit as part of discovery.

cross-interrogatory. An interrogatory from a party who has received a set of interrogatories.

special interrogatory. A written jury question whose answer is required to supplement a general verdict. • This term is not properly used in federal practice, which authorizes interrogatories and special verdicts, but not special interrogatories. Fed. R. Civ. P. 49. The term is properly used, however, in the courts of some states. — Also termed special issue.

interrogee. See INTERROGATEE.

in terrorem (in te-ror-əm), adv. & adj. [Latin "in order to frighten"] By way of threat; as a warning <the demand letter was sent in terrorem; the client has no intention of actually suing>.

in terrorem clause. A provision designed to threaten one into action or inaction; esp., a testamentary provision that threatens to dispossess any beneficiary who challenges the terms of the will. See NO-CONTEST CLAUSE.

in terrorem populi (in te-ror-əm pop-yə-li), adv. [Latin] Hist. To the terror of the people. • This phrase was necessary in an indictment for riot.

interruptio (in-tər-rəp-shee-oh). [Latin] Interruption. • This word refers to a break in the possession of land that ends a prescriptive claim.

inter rusticos (in-tər rəs-ti-kohs), adv. [Latin] Among the unlearned.

inter se (in-tər see or say). [Latin "between or among themselves"] (Of a right or duty) owed between the parties rather than to others. — Also termed inter sese (in-tər see-see).

"[T]he law of nations is, or at least includes, a branch of natural law, namely, the rules of natural justice as applicable to the relations of states inter se." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 32 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

intersection. A place where two roads meet or form a junction.

inter se doctrine. Int'l law. The now-defunct doctrine that relations between members of the British Commonwealth were in no circumstances international and were incapable of giving rights and duties under international law.

inter sese. See INTER SE.

interspousal, adj. Between husband and wife.

interspousal immunity. See husband-wife immunity under IMMUNITY (2).

interstate, adj. Between two or more states or residents of different states.

interstate agreement. An agreement between states. Cf. interstate compact under COMPACT.

interstate commerce. See COMMERCE.

Interstate Commerce Commission. The now-defunct federal agency established by the Interstate Commerce Act in 1887 to regulate surface transportation between states by certifying carriers and pipelines and by monitoring quality and pricing. • In December 1995, when Congress eliminated this agency, the Surface Transportation Board (STB) — a three-member board that is a division of the Department of Transportation — assumed most of the agency's duties. — Abbr. ICC.

interstate compact. See COMPACT.

interstate extradition. See EXTRADITION.

interstate income-withholding order. A court order entered to enforce a support order of a court of another state by withholding income of the defaulting person.

interstate law. 1. INTERNATIONAL LAW. 2. The rules and principles used to determine controversies between residents of different states.

interstate rendition. See RENDITION.

intersubjective zap. In critical legal studies, a so-called spontaneous moment of shared intuition. — Also termed zap.

intervening act. See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

intervening agency. See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

intervening cause. See CAUSE (1).

intervening force. See intervening cause under CAUSE (1).

intervenor. One who voluntarily enters a pending lawsuit because of a personal stake in it. — Also spelled intervener.

intervention, n. 1. The entry into a lawsuit by a third party who, despite not being named a party to the action, has a personal stake in the outcome. • The intervenor sometimes joins the plaintiff in claiming what is sought, sometimes joins the defendant in resisting what is sought, and sometimes takes a position adverse to both the plaintiff and the defendant. Cf. IMPLAIDER; INTERPLEADER. 2. The legal procedure by which such a third party is allowed to become a party to the litigation. 3. Int'l law. One nation's interference by force, or threat of force, in another nation's internal affairs or in questions arising between other nations. — intervene, vb.

"Intervention may or may not involve the use of force. It is frequently possible for a powerful state to impair the political independence of another weaker state without actually utilizing its armed forces. This result may be accomplished by lending open approval, as by the relaxation of an arms embargo, to a revolutionary group headed by individuals ready to accept the political or economic dominance of the intervening state. It may be accomplished by the withholding of recognition of a new government, combined with various forms of economic and financial pressure until the will of the stronger state prevails through the resignation or overthrow of the government disapproved." Philip C. Jessup, A Modern Law of Nations 172-73 (1949).

humanitarian intervention. An intervention by the international community to curb abuses of human rights within a country, even if the intervention infringes the country's sovereignty.

intervention duty. Maritime law. A shipowner's obligation to remedy hazardous working conditions for longshore workers, even though the shipowner did not create the condition, when the shipowner knows of a nonobvious condition arising in an area that cannot be avoided by the longshore workers in performing their duties. Cf. ACTIVE-OPERATIONS DUTY; TURNOVER DUTY.

inter virum et uxorem (in-tər vī-rəm et ək-sor-əm), adv. & adj. [Latin] Between husband and wife.

inter vivos (in-tər vī-vohs or vee-vohs), adj. [Latin "between the living"] Of or relating to property conveyed not by will or in contemplation of an imminent death, but during the conveyer's lifetime. — inter vivos, adv.

inter vivos gift. See GIFT.

inter vivos transfer. See TRANSFER.

inter vivos trust. See TRUST.

intestabilis (in-tes-tay-bə-lis), adj. [Latin] Hist.
Disqualified from being a witness.

intestacy (in-tes-tə-see). The state or condition of a person's having died without a valid will. Cf. TESTACY.

intestate (in-tes-tayt), adj. 1. Of or relating to a person who has died without a valid will <having revoked her will without making a new one, she was intestate when she died>. 2. Of or relating to the property owned by a person who died without a valid will <an intestate estate>. 3. Of or relating to intestacy . Cf. TESTATE. 4. Archaic. (Of a person) not qualified to testify <the witness could not testify after being found intestate>.

intestate, n. One who has died without a valid will. Cf. TESTATOR.

intestate law. The relevant statute governing succession to estates of those who die without a valid will.

intestate succession. The method used to distribute property owned by a person who dies without a valid will. — Also termed hereditary succession. Cf. TESTATE SUCCESSION.

intestato (in-tes-tay-toh), adv. [Latin] Roman law. (Of a succession) without a will.

intestatus (in-tes-tay-təs). [Latin] Roman law.
An intestate; a person who dies without a will.
• This term had the same meaning in early English law.

in testimonium (in tes-tə-moh-nee-əm), adv. & adj. [Latin] In witness; in evidence of which. • This phrase sometimes opens attestation clauses.

in the course of employment. Workers' compensation. (Of an accident) having happened to an on-the-job employee within the scope of employment.

intimidation, n. Unlawful coercion; extortion. • In England, intimidation was established as a tort in the 1964 case of Rookes v. Barnard, 1964 App. Cos. 1129 (P.C. 1964) (appeal taken from B.C.). — intimidate, vb. — intimidatory, adj. — intimidator, n.

"The wrong of intimidation includes all those cases in which harm is inflicted by the use of unlawful threats whereby the lawful liberty of others to do as they please is interfered with. This wrong is of two distinct kinds, for the liberty of action so interfered with may be either that of the plaintiff himself, or that of other persons with resulting damage to the plaintiff." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 364 (17th ed. 1977).

intitle, vb. Archaic. See ENTITLE.

in toto (in toh-toh), adv. [Latin "in whole"] Completely; as a whole <the company rejected the offer in toto>.

intoxicant, n. A substance (esp. liquor) that deprives a person of the ordinary use of the senses or of reason.

intoxication, n. A diminished ability to act with full mental and physical capabilities because of alcohol or drug consumption; drunkenness. — intoxicate, vb.

culpable intoxication. See voluntary intoxication.

involuntary intoxication. The ingestion of alcohol or drugs against one's will or without one's knowledge. • Involuntary intoxication is an affirmative defense to a criminal or negligence charge.

pathological intoxication. An extremely exaggerated response to an intoxicant. • This may be treated as involuntary intoxication if it is unforeseeable.

public intoxication. The appearance of a person who is under the influence of drugs or alcohol in a place open to the general public. • In most American jurisdictions, public intoxication is considered a misdemeanor, and in some states, alcoholism is a defense if the offender agrees to attend a treatment program.

self-induced intoxication. See voluntary intoxication.

voluntary intoxication. A willing ingestion of alcohol or drugs to the point of impairment done with the knowledge that one's physical and mental capabilities would be impaired. • Voluntary intoxication is not a defense to a general-intent crime, but may be admitted to refute the existence of a particular state of mind for a specific-intent crime. — Also termed culpable intoxication; self-induced intoxication.

intoxilyzer (in-tok-si-lī-zər). See BREATHALYZER.

intoximeter (in-tok-sim-ə-tər). See BREATHALYZER.

intra (in-trə), adv. & adj. [Latin] Within. Cf. INFRA.

“The use of infra (below) in the sense and place of intra (within) is a corruption of very ancient date. . . . The expression ‘under age’ (the correct literal translation of infra aetatem) indeed, is of more common occurrence than ‘within age.’ But the use of infra in the sense of intra, as expressive of place, is an undoubted barbarism.” 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 75 (2d ed. 1867).

intra anni spatium (in-trə an-ī spay-she-əm), adv. & adj. [Latin] Within the space of a year.

intraday (in-trə-day), adj. Occurring within a single day.

intra-enterprise conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

necessary intromission. The intromission occurring when a spouse continues in possession of the deceased spouse's goods, for preservation.

vicious intromission (vish-əs). An heir's unauthorized dealing with the personal property of a deceased person. — Also spelled vicious intromission.

"The effect of vicious intromission is to render the heir who is guilty of it liable, under the passive title of vicious intromission, for the debts of the ancestor universally — the severity of this passive title being intended to prevent the carrying off of moveables, which are, from their nature, so liable to embezzlement." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 521 (George Watson ed., 1882).

3. Penile penetration into the vagina.

intrusion, n. 1. A person's entering without permission. See TRESPASS. 2. In an action for invasion of privacy, a highly offensive invasion of another person's seclusion or private life. — intrude, vb. — intrusive, adj. — intruder, n.

invasion. 1. A hostile or forcible encroachment on the rights of another. 2. The incursion of an army for conquest or plunder. 3. Trusts. A withdrawal from principal. • In the third sense, the term is used as a metaphor.

invasion of privacy. An unjustified exploitation of one's personality or intrusion into one's personal activity, actionable under tort law and sometimes under constitutional law. • The four types of invasion of privacy in tort are (1) an appropriation, for one's benefit, of another's name or likeness, (2) an offensive, intentional interference with a person's seclusion or private affairs, (3) the public disclosure, of an objectionable nature, of private information about another, and (4) the use of publicity to place another in a false light in the public eye. See RIGHT OF PRIVACY.

invecta et illata (in-vek-tə et i-lay-tə). [Latin "(things) carried in and (things) brought in"] Roman law. Goods brought onto a rural or urban leasehold by the lessee. • The lessor held a tacit mortgage over the goods to ensure payment of rent. Cf. INTRODUCTA.

inveigle (in-vay-gəl), vb. To lure or entice through deceit or insincerity <she blamed her friend for inveigling her into the investment>. — inveiglement, n.

invent, vb. To create (something) for the first time.

invented consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

inventio (in-ven-shee-oh). [Latin] 1. Roman law. A thing found; a finding. • The finder of treasure either acquired title to the property or shared it with the landowner on whose land it was found. 2. TREASURE TROVE. Pl. inventiones.

invention, n. 1. A patentable device or process created through independent effort and characterized by an extraordinary degree of skill or ingenuity; a newly discovered art or operation. • Invention embraces the concept of nonobviousness. 2. The act or process of creating such a device or process. 3. Generally, anything that is created or devised. — invent, vb.

“An ‘invention’ is any art, machine, manufacture, design, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, or any variety of plant, which is or may be patentable under the patent laws. [37 CFR § 501.3(d).]” 60 Am. Jur. 2d Patents § 894, at 601 n.98 (1987).

inventory, n. 1. A detailed list of assets <make an inventory of the estate>. 2. Accounting. The portion of a financial statement reflecting the value of a business’s raw materials, works-in-progress, and finished products <the company’s reported inventory was suspiciously low>. 3. Raw materials or goods in stock <the dealership held a sale to clear out its October inventory>. 4. Bankruptcy. Personal property leased or furnished, held for sale or lease, or to be furnished under a contract for service; raw materials, work in process, or materials used or consumed in a business, including farm products such as crops or livestock <the debtor was found to have inventory that was valued at $300,000>. — inventory, vb.

“Section 547 itself defines ‘inventory’ and ‘receivable.’ Do not use the U.C.C. definitions of these terms, or the definitions of them learned in business law classes. It is especially important to note that, for purposes of section 547, ‘inventory’ includes ‘farm products such as crops or livestock’” David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 6–35, at 351 (1993).

inventory fee. A probate court’s fee for services rendered to a decedent’s estate.

inventory search. See SEARCH.

inventory-turnover ratio. Accounting. The result of dividing the cost of goods by the average inventory. • This calculation is used to determine the effectiveness of the company’s inventory-management policy.

in ventre sa mere (in ven-tree sa mer). See EN VENTRE SA MERE.

inventus (in-ven-təs), p.pl. [Latin] Found. • This word appears in various phrases, such as thesaurus inventus (“treasure trove”) and non est inventus (“he is not found”).

inveritare (in-ve-rə-tair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] To make proof of a thing.

inverse condemnation. See CONDEMNATION.

inverse floater. See inverse-floating-rate note under NOTE.

inverse-floating-rate note. See NOTE (1).

inverse-order-of-alienation doctrine. The principle that if one has not collected on the mortgage or lien on a property sold off in successive parcels, one may collect first from the parcel still held by the original owner, then from the parcel sold last, then next to last, and so on until the amount has been satisfied. — Also termed rule of marshaling liens.

inverse zoning. See ZONING.

inverted market. See BACKWARDATION.

investment bill. See BILL (6).

investment company. See COMPANYY.

Investment Company Act. A 1940 federal statute enacted to curb financial malpractices and abuses by regulating investment-company activities and transactions — specifically, by requiring registration of investment companies and prohibiting transactions by unregistered companies; by making certain persons ineligible as affiliated persons or underwriters; by regulating affiliations of directors, officers, and employees; by barring changes in investment policy without shareholder approval; and by regulating contracts of advisers and underwriters. 15 USCA §§ 80a-1 et seq.

investment contract. 1. A contract in which money is invested in a common enterprise with profits to come solely from the efforts of others; an agreement or transaction in which a party invests money in expectation of profits derived from the efforts of a promoter or other third party. 2. A transaction in which an investor furnishes initial value or risk capital to an enterprise, a portion of that amount being subjected to the risks of the enterprise. • In such an arrangement, the investor typically does not receive the right to exercise control over the managerial decisions of the enterprise.

"[A]n investment contract for purposes of the Securities Act means a contract, transaction or scheme whereby a person invests his money in a common enterprise and is led to expect profits solely from the efforts of the promoter or a third party. . . . It embodies a flexible rather than a static principle, one that is capable of adaptation to meet the countless and variable schemes devised by those who seek the use of the money of others on the promise of profits." SEC v. Howey Co., 328 U.S. 293, 298-99, 66 S.Ct. 1100, 1103 (1946).

guaranteed investment contract. An investment contract under which an institutional investor invests a lump sum (such as a pension fund) with an insurer that promises to return the principal (the lump sum) and a certain amount of interest at the contract's end. — Abbr. GIC.

investment discretion. The ability of a person to (1) determine what will be purchased or sold by or for an account, (2) decide what will be purchased or sold by or for the account even though another may have the responsibility, or (3) influence the purchase or sale of securities or property in a way that, according to an administrative agency such as the Securities and Exchange Commission, should be subject to the agency's governing rules and regulations.

investment-grade bond. See BOND (3).

investment-grade rating. Any of the top four symbols (AAA, AA, A, or BAA) given to a bond after an appraisal of its quality by a securities-evaluation agency such as Moody's. • The rating indicates the degree of risk in an investment in the bond.

investment income. See unearned income (1) under INCOME.

investment indebtedness. Tax. Debt incurred by a taxpayer to acquire or carry assets that may produce income. • The Internal Revenue Code limits the amount of deductible interest on this type of debt.

investment property. Any asset purchased to produce a profit, whether from income or resale.

invidious discrimination (in-vid-ee-əs di-skrim-ə-nay-shən). See DISCRIMINATION.

in vinculis (in vīng-kyə-lis). [Latin "in chains"] In actual custody.

"The engagement of a magistrate to an accomplice, that if he will give his evidence, he will experience favor, is merely in the nature of a recommendation to mercy, for no authority is given to a justice of the peace to pardon an offender, and to tell him that he shall be a witness against others. He is not therefore assured of his pardon, but gives his evidence in vinculis, in custody: and it depends on his behaviour, whether he shall or shall not be admitted to mercy." 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 82-83 (2d ed. 1826).

inviolability (in-vī-ə-lə-bil-ə-tee), n. The quality or fact of being safe from violation.

invited error. See ERROR (2).

invitee (in-vī-tee). A person who has an express or implied invitation to enter or use another's premises, such as a business visitor or a member of the public to whom the premises are held open. • The occupier has a duty to inspect the premises and to warn the invitee of dangerous conditions. — Also termed business guest; licensee with an interest. Cf. LICENSEE (2); TRESPASSER.

public invitee. An invitee who is invited to enter and remain on property for a purpose for which the property is held open to the public.

inviter. One who expressly or impliedly invites another onto the premises for business purposes. — Also spelled invitor. Cf. INVITEE.

invitor. See INVITER.

invocation. 1. The act of calling upon for authority or justification. 2. The act of enforcing or using a legal right <an invocation of the contract clause>.

invoice, n. An itemized list of goods or services furnished by a seller to a buyer, usu. specifying the price and terms of sale; a bill of costs. — invoice, vb.

consular invoice. An invoice used to hasten the entry of goods into a country by bearing the signature of the country's consul as assurance that the shipment's contents have been preverified for quantity and value.

sales invoice. A document showing details of a purchase or sale, including price and quantity of merchandise.

invoice book. A journal into which invoices are copied.

involuntary, adj. Not resulting from a free and unrestrained choice; not subject to control by the will. — involuntariness, n.

“[T]he law, like everyday thought, usually confines the notion of involuntary to that subclass of cases which involve purely physical, physiological, or psychological movements of our limbs, like reflexes and convulsions, movements in sleep, during sleepwalking, or under hypnosis, or due to some disease of the brain, lunacy, or automatism.” Alan R. White, Grounds of Liability 60–61 (1985).

involuntary alienation. See ALIENATION.

involuntary bailment. See BAILMENT.

involuntary bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY.

irrelevancy, n. 1. Something not relevant. — Also termed irrelevance. 2. IRRELEVANCE.

irrelevant (i-rel-ə-vənt), adj. (Of evidence) having no probative value; not tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue. — irrelevance, n. Cf. IMMATERIAL.

irremediable breakdown of the marriage. See IRRETRIEVABLE BREAKDOWN OF THE MARRIAGE.

irreparable damages. See DAMAGES.

irreparable harm. See irreparable injury under INJURY.

irreparable injury. See INJURY.

irreparable-injury rule (i-rep-ə-rə-bəl). The principle that equitable relief (such as an injunction) is available only when no adequate legal remedy (such as monetary damages) exists. ● Although this rule is one that courts continue to cite, the courts do not usu. follow it literally in practice. — Also termed adequacy test.

irrepleviable (i-rə-plev-ee-ə-bəl), adj. (Of property) not capable of being replevied. — Formerly also spelled irreplevisable. Cf. REPLEVIABLE.

irresistible force. See FORCE.

irresistible-impulse test. Criminal law. A test for insanity, holding that a person is not criminally responsible for an act if mental disease prevented that person from controlling potentially criminal conduct. • The few jurisdictions that have adopted this test have combined it with the McNaghten rules. — Also termed control test; volitional test. See INSANITY DEFENSE; MCNAGHTEN RULES.

irretrievable breakdown of the marriage. A ground for divorce that is based on incompatibility between marriage partners and that is used in many states as the sole ground of no-fault divorce. — Also termed irretrievable breakdown; irremediable breakdown of the marriage. Cf. IRRECONCILABLE DIFFERENCES.

irrevocable (i-rēv-ə-kə-bəl), adj. Unalterable; committed beyond recall. — irrevocability, n.

irrevocable guaranty. See GUARANTY.

irrevocable letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

issuable, adj. 1. Capable of being issued <an issuable writ>. 2. Open to dispute or contention <an issuable argument>. 3. Possible as an outcome <an award as high as $5 million is issuable in this case>.

issuable defense. See DEFENSE (1).

issuable plea. See PLEA (3).

issue, n. 1. A point in dispute between two or more parties.

“In federal civil procedure, an issue is a single, certain, and material point arising out of the allegations and contentions of the parties; it is matter affirmed on one side and denied on the other, and when a fact is alleged in the complaint and denied in the answer, the matter is then put in issue between the parties.” 35A C.J.S. Federal Civil Procedure § 357, at 541 (1960).

collateral issue. A question or issue not directly connected with the matter in dispute.

deep issue. The fundamental issue to be decided by a court in ruling on a point of law.

“Essentially, a deep issue is the ultimate, concrete question that a court needs to answer to decide a point your way. Deep refers to the deep structure of the case — not to deep thinking. The deep issue is the final question you pose when you can no longer usefully ask the follow-up question, ‘And what does that turn on?’” Bryan A. Garner, The Winning Brief 49 (1999).

general issue. 1. A plea (often a general denial) by which a party denies the truth of every material allegation in an opposing party’s pleading. 2. The issue arising from such a plea.

“The general issue is a denial of the legal conclusion sought to be drawn from the declaration. It denies by a general form of expression the defendant’s liability, and enables the defendant to contest, without specific averments of the defense to be asserted, most of the allegations which the plaintiff may be required to prove to sustain his action, and in some actions to raise also various affirmative defenses. It fails to perform the functions of pleading, either in giving notice or in reducing the case to specific issues.” Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 169, at 304 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

immaterial issue. An issue not necessary to decide the point of law.

issue of fact. A point supported by one party’s evidence and controverted by another’s.

issue of law. A point on which the evidence is undisputed, the outcome depending on the court’s interpretation of the law.

legal issue. A legal question, usu. at the foundation of a case and requiring a court’s decision.

special issue. 1. At common law, an issue arising from a specific allegation in a pleading. • Special issues are no longer used in most jurisdictions. 2. See special interrogatory under INTERROGATORY.

ultimate issue. A not-yet-decided point that is sufficient either in itself or in connection with other points to resolve the entire case.

2. A class or series of securities that are simultaneously offered for sale. See OFFERING.

hot issue. A security that, after an initial or secondary offering, is traded in the open market at a substantially higher price. — Also termed hot stock.

new issue. A stock or bond sold by a corporation for the first time, often to raise working capital. See BLUE-SKY LAW.

original issue. The first issue of securities of a particular type or series.

shelf issue. An issue of securities that were previously registered but not released at the time of registration.

3. Wills & estates. Lineal descendants; offspring.

lawful issue. Descendants, including descendants more remote than children. • At common law, the term included only those who were children of legally recognized subsisting marriages. See DESCENDENT; HEIR.

4. Commercial law. The first delivery of a negotiable instrument by its maker or holder.

issue, vb. 1. To accrue <rents issuing from land> 2. To be put forth officially <without probable cause, the search warrant will not issue> 3. To send out or distribute officially <issue process> <issue stock>.

issued stock. See STOCK.

issue estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

issue of fact. See ISSUE (1).

issue of law. See ISSUE (1).

issue pleading. See PLEADING (2).

issue preclusion. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

issuer. 1. A person or entity (such as a corporation or bank) that issues securities, negotiable instruments, or letters of credit. 2. A bailee that issues negotiable or nonnegotiable documents of title.

nonreporting issuer. An issuer not subject to the reporting requirements of the Exchange Act because it (1) has not voluntarily become subject to the reporting requirements, (2) has not had an effective registration statement under the Securities Act within the fiscal year, and (3) did not, at the end of its last fiscal year, meet the shareholder or asset tests under the Exchange Act registration requirements.

issue roll. Hist. English law. A court record on which the issues in contested matters are briefly noted. • This practice was abolished in 1834. See INCIPITUR.

ita lex scripta est (i-tə leks skrip-tə est). [Latin] So the law is written. • This expression means that the law must be obeyed despite the apparent rigor of its application. The idea is that we must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. — Sometimes shortened to ita scripta est [“so it is written”].

ita te Deus adjuvet (I-tə tee dee-əs aj-ə-vet). [Latin] So help you God. ● An old form of administering an oath in England, usu. in connection with other words, such as: Ita te Deus adjuvet, et sacrosancta Dei Evangelia (“So help you God, and God’s holy gospels”), and Ita te Deus adjuvet et omnes sancti (“So help you God and all the saints”).

item. 1. A piece of a whole, not necessarily separated. 2. Commercial law. A negotiable instrument or a promise or order to pay money handled by a bank for collection or payment. ● The term does not include a payment order governed by division 11 of the UCC or a credit-or debit-card slip. UCC 4-104(a)(9).

par item. An item that a drawee bank will remit to another bank without charge.

3. In drafting, a subpart of text that is the next smaller unit than a subparagraph. ● In federal drafting, for example, “(4)” is the item in the following citation: Rule 19(a)(1)(B)(4). — Also termed (in sense 3) clause.

itemize, vb. To list in detail; to state by items <an itemized bill>.

itemized deduction. See DEDUCTION.

item veto. See line-item veto under VETO.

iter (I-tər or it-ər). [Latin] 1. Roman law. A servitude that allows the holder to walk or ride on horseback (but not drive a draft animal) through another’s land. Cf. ACTUS (3); VIA (2). 2. Hist. A journey; esp., a circuit made by an eyre justice. See EYRE.

itinerate (I-tin-ə-rayt), vb. (Of a judge) to travel on a circuit for the purpose of holding court. — itineration, n. — itinerant, adj. & n. See CIRCUIT.

itinerate vendor. See VENDOR.

J. abbr. 1. JUDGE. 2. JUSTICE (2). 3. JUDGMENT. 4. JUS. 5. JOURNAL.

JA. abbr. 1. JUDGE ADVOCATE. 2. See joint account under ACCOUNT.

Jac. abbr. Jacobus — the Latin form of the name James, used principally in citing statutes enacted during the reigns of English kings of that name (e.g., “St. 1, Jac. 2”).

jacens (jay-senz). [Latin] Lying; fallen; in abeyance. See hereditas jacens under HEREDITAS.

Jackson-Denno hearing. A court proceeding held outside the jury’s presence to determine whether the defendant’s confession was voluntary and therefore admissible as evidence. Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368, 84 S.Ct. 1774 (1964). — Also termed Jackson v. Denno hearing.

Jackson standard. Criminal law. The principle that the standard of review on appeal — when a criminal defendant claims that there is insufficient evidence to support the conviction — is to determine whether, after considering the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 99 S.Ct. 2781 (1979).

Jackson v. Denno hearing. See JACKSON-DENNO HEARING.

jactitation (jak-ti-tay-shən). 1. A false boasting or claim that causes injury to another. 2. Civil law. SLANDER OF TITLE.

jactitation of marriage. Hist. 1. False and actionable boasting or claiming that one is married to another. 2. An action against a person who falsely boasts of being married to the complainant.

“Jactitation of marriage is a cause of action which arises when a person falsely alleges that he or she is married to the petitioner, and the remedy sought is a perpetual injunction against the respondent to cease making such allegations. The cause is now uncommon in English municipal law and almost unknown in the conflict of laws.” R.H. Graveson, Conflict of Laws 349 (7th ed. 1974).

jactura (jak-t[y]oor-ə), n. [Latin] Civil law. 1. A throwing of goods overboard to lighten or save a vessel; JETTISON. 2. A loss incurred from this; general average. See general average under AVERAGE. — Also termed jactus.

jail credit. Time spent by a criminal defendant in confinement awaiting trial. • This time is usu. deducted from the defendant’s final sentence (if convicted).

jail delivery. 1. An escape by several prisoners from a jail. 2. Hist. A clearing procedure by which all prisoners at a given jail are tried for the offenses that they are accused of having committed. 3. Hist. The commission issued to judges of assize, directing them to clear a jail by trying — and either acquitting or condemning — all the inmates. 4. Archaic. The court charged with the trial of all ordinary criminal cases. See COMMISSION-OF GAOL DELIVERY.

general jail delivery. Collectively, acquittals in high numbers as a result of either lax or reckless administration of the law or defects in the law.

jailer. A keeper, guard, or warden of a prison or jail. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) gaoler.

jailhouse. See JAIL.

jailhouse lawyer. A prison inmate who seeks release through legal procedures or who gives legal advice to other inmates. — Also termed guardhouse lawyer.

jail liberties. Bounds within which a jail or prison lies and throughout which certain prisoners are allowed to move freely, usu. after giving bond for the liberties. ● The bounds are considered an extension of the prison walls. Historically, jail liberties were given in England to those imprisoned for debt. The prisoners were allowed to move freely within the city in which the prison was located. — Also spelled gaol liberties. — Also termed jail limits.

“[S]tatutes were from time to time passed enlarging the gaol liberties, in order to mitigate the hardships of imprisonment: thus, the whole city of Boston was held the ‘gaol liberties’ of its county gaol. And so with a large part of New York City. . . . The prisoner, while within the limits, is considered as within the walls of the prison.” 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 1333–34 (8th ed. 1914).

Jamaican switch. An illegal scheme whereby one conspirator convinces the victim of a need for help in handling a large sum of money, usu. by claiming to have found the money or by claiming to be an unsophisticated foreigner, and promises to share part of the money with the victim or asks the victim for help in finding a suitable charity to donate to, at which time the other conspirator appears and promises to assist if both the victim and first conspirator provide good-faith money, the intent being for the two conspirators to leave with all the money, including the victim’s.

James hearing. A court proceeding held to determine whether the out-of-court statements of a coconspirator should be admitted into evidence, by analyzing whether there was a conspiracy, whether the declarant and the defendant were part of the conspiracy, and whether the statement was made in furtherance of the conspiracy. United States v. James, 590 F.2d 575 (5th Cir. 1979); Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E).

Jane Doe. A fictitious name for a female party to a legal proceeding, used because the party’s true identity is unknown or because her real name is being withheld. — Also termed Jane Roe; Mary Major. Cf. JOHN DOE.

Janus-faced (jaj-nəs-fayst), adj. Having two contrasting or contradictory aspects; two-faced .

Jason clause. Maritime law. A bill-of-lading clause requiring contribution in general average even when the loss is the result of the carrier’s negligence, for which the carrier is otherwise exempt from liability by statute. ● The clause is named after the Supreme Court case that upheld its enforceability, The Jason, 225 U.S. 32, 32 S.Ct. 560 (1912). See general average under AVERAGE.

jaywalking, n. The act or instance of crossing a street without heeding traffic regulations, as by crossing between intersections or at a place other than a crosswalk. — jaywalk, vb.

Jedburgh justice (jed-bər-ə). See JUSTICE (1).

Jeddart justice (jed-ərt). See Jedburgh justice under JUSTICE (1).

judge and warrant (jej). Scots law. The authority given by the Dean of Guild to rebuild or repair a dilapidated tenement.

Jedwood justice (jed-wəd). See Jedburgh justice under JUSTICE (1).

Jencks material. Criminal procedure. A prosecution witness’s written or recorded pretrial statement that a criminal defendant, upon filing a motion after the witness has testified, is entitled to have in preparing to cross-examine the witness. ● The defense may use a statement of this kind for impeachment purposes. Jencks v. United States, 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007 (1957); Jencks Act, 18 USCA § 3500. Cf. BRADY MATERIAL.

Jensen doctrine. The principle that the states may not apply their workers’-compensation statutes to maritime workers injured on navigable waters while performing traditional maritime duties. Southern Pac. Co. v. Jensen, 244 U.S. 205, 37 S.Ct. 524 (1917).

jeofail (jef-ayl), n. [fr. French j’ay faillé] Archaic. 1. An error or oversight in pleading. 2. The acknowledgment of such an error. — Also spelled jeofaile.

jeopardy. The risk of conviction and punishment that a criminal defendant faces at trial. ● Jeopardy attaches in a jury trial when the jury is empaneled, and in a bench trial when the first witness is sworn. — Also termed legal jeopardy. See DOUBLE JEOPARDY.

jeopardy assessment. See ASSESSMENT.

jetsam (jet-səm). Goods that, after being abandoned at sea, sink and remain underwater. Cf. FLOTSAM; LAGAN; WAVESON.

jettison (jet-ə-sən), n. Maritime law. The act of voluntarily throwing cargo overboard to lighten or stabilize a ship that is in immediate danger. — Also termed jactura. — jettison, vb. See general average under AVERAGE.

jeux de bourse (zhoo də bɔrs), n. [French “games of the stock exchange”] Speculation in stocks or bonds, as by dealing in options or futures.

Jewell instruction (joo-wəl). Criminal procedure. A court’s instruction to the jury that the defendant can be found to have the requisite criminal mental state despite being deliberately ignorant of some of the facts surrounding the crime. • If a defendant claims ignorance of some fact essential to the crime, such as not knowing that a particular bag contained drugs, but the surrounding circumstances would put a reasonable person on notice that there was a high probability of illegality, as when the defendant has taken the bag from a known drug-dealer and has noticed the smell of marijuana coming from the bag, then the court may instruct the jury that it is entitled to infer the defendant’s guilty knowledge if the defendant deliberately avoided knowledge of the critical facts. United States v. Jewell, 532 F.2d 697 (9th Cir. 1976). — Also termed deliberate-indifference instruction.

Jim Crow law. Hist. A law enacted or purposely interpreted to discriminate against blacks, such as a law requiring separate restrooms for blacks and whites. • Jim Crow laws are unconstitutional under the 14th Amendment.

jingle rule. See DUAL-PRIORITIES RULE.

JJ. abbr. 1. Judges. 2. Justices.

J.N. abbr. JOHN-A-NOKES.

JNOV. abbr. Judgment non obstante veredicto. See judgment notwithstanding the verdict under JUDGMENT.

job action. Labor law. A concerted, temporary action by employees (such as a sickout or work slowdown), intended to pressure management to concede to the employees’ demands without resorting to a strike. See STRIKE.

jobber, n. 1. One who buys from a manufacturer and sells to a retailer; a wholesaler or middleman. 2. A middleman in the exchange of securities among brokers. — Also termed stockjobber; stock-jobber. 3. One who works by the job; a contractor. — job, vb.

jobber’s agreement. See HAZANTOWN AGREEMENT.

jobbery, n. The practice or act of perverting a public service in a way that serves private ends; unfair means to serve private interests.

job security. Protection of an employee’s job, often through a union contract.

job-targeting program. An initiative by a labor union to maintain or improve its share of the labor in a particular market by financing or backing contractors who bid on targeted projects. — Also termed market-recovery program.

jocus partitus (joh-kəs pahr-ti-təs), n. [Law Latin “divided game”] Hist. A gambling arrangement made by the parties on a lawsuit’s outcome.

John-a-Nokes. Archaic. A fictitious name for an unknown party to a legal proceeding, esp. the first party. • The name is short for “John who dwells at the oak.” — Abbr. J.N. — Also spelled John-a-Noakes.

John-a-Stiles. Archaic. A fictitious name for an unknown party to a legal proceeding, esp. the second party. • The name is short for “John who dwells at the stile.” — Abbr. J.S. — Also spelled John-a-Styles.

John Doe. A fictitious name used in a legal proceeding to designate a person whose identity is unknown, to protect a person’s known identity, or to indicate that a true defendant does not exist. Cf. JANE DOE; RICHARD ROE.

“Sheriffs in time growing remiss in their duty, allowed of any persons as pledges, sometimes returning the names of fictitious persons as pledges, at others, neglecting to require or return any at all. . . . And the legislature, to supply the want of real persons as pledges, and recompense the defendant where he has been unjustly or vexatiously sued, has by various statutes, either given him the costs he has incurred in making his defence, or else deprived the plaintiff of recovering those costs he is entitled to by law, in cases of obtaining a verdict, by leaving it to the judge at the trial to certify on the record, that he had little or no cause of action. Since these statutes for allowing the defendant his costs, where the plaintiff fails, or is nonsuited, the writ to the coroner to affect the pledges has fallen into disuse, and two good-natured personages, John Doe and Richard Roe, from their universal acquaintance and peculiar longevity, have become the ready and common pledges of every suitor." 1 George Crompton, Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas xlvii (3d ed. 1787).

"The fictitious names John Doe and Richard Roe regularly appeared in actions of ejectment . . . at common law. Doe was the nominal plaintiff, who by a fiction was said to have entered land under a valid lease; Roe was said to have ejected Doe, and the lawsuit took the title Doe v. Roe. These fictional allegations disappeared upon the enactment of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852. . . . Beyond actions of ejectment, and esp. in the U.S., John Doe, Jane Doe, Richard Roe, Jane Roe, and Peter Poe have come to identify a party to a lawsuit whose true name is either unknown or purposely shielded." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 290-91 (2d ed. 1995).

John Doe summons. See SUMMONS.

joinder, n. The uniting of parties or claims in a single lawsuit. — join, vb. Cf. CONSOLIDATION (4).

collusive joinder. Joinder of a defendant, usu. a nonresident, in order to have a case removed to federal court. See manufactured diversity under DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP.

compulsory joinder. The necessary joinder of a party if either of the following is true: (1) in that party's absence, those already involved in the lawsuit cannot receive complete relief; or (2) the absence of such a party, claiming an interest in the subject of an action, might either impair the protection of that interest or leave some other party subject to multiple or inconsistent obligations. Fed. R. Civ. P. 19(a). — Also termed mandatory joinder.

fraudulent joinder. The bad-faith joinder of a party, usu. a resident of the state, to prevent removal of a case to federal court.

joinder in demurrer. Common-law pleading. A set form of words by which either party accepts or joins in a legal issue; esp., the plaintiff's acceptance of the defendant's issue of law.

joinder in issue. See joinder of issue.

joinder in pleading. Common-law pleading. One party's acceptance of the opposing party's proposed issue and mode of trial.

joinder of error. A written denial of the errors alleged in an assignment of errors in a criminal case.

joinder of issue. 1. The submission of an issue jointly for decision. 2. The acceptance or adoption of a disputed point as the basis of argument in a controversy. — Also termed joinder in issue. 3. The taking up of the opposite side of a case, or of the contrary view on a question.

joinder of offenses. The charging of an accused with two or more crimes as multiple counts in a single indictment or information. • Unless later severed, joined offenses are tried together at a single trial. Fed. R. Crim. P. 8(a).

joinder of remedies. The joinder of alternative claims, such as breach of contract and quantum meruit, or of one claim with another prospective claim, such as a creditor's claim against a debtor to recover on a loan and the creditor's claim against a third party to set aside the transfer of the loan's collateral.

mandatory joinder. See compulsory joinder.

misjoinder. See MISJOINER.

nonjoinder. See NONJOINER.

permissive joinder. The optional joinder of parties if (1) their claims or the claims asserted against them are asserted jointly, severally, or in respect of the same transaction or occurrence, and (2) any legal or factual question common to all of them will arise. Fed. R. Civ. P. 20.

joinder in demurrer. See JOINER.

joinder in issue. See joinder of issue (2) under JOINER.

joinder in pleading. See JOINER.

joinder of error. See JOINER.

joint ballot. See BALLOT (3).

joint board. Labor law. A committee — usu. made up of an equal number of representatives from management and the union — established to conduct grievance proceedings or resolve grievances.

joint bond. See BOND (3).

joint-check rule. The principle that, when an owner or general contractor issues a check that is made jointly payable to a subcontractor and the subcontractor's materialman, the materialman's indorsement on the check certifies that it has been paid all amounts due to it, up to the amount of the check. ● This rule protects the owner or general contractor from lien foreclosure by a materialman who was not paid by the subcontractor. By issuing a joint check, the owner or general contractor is not left merely to hope that the subcontractor pays all the materialmen. And the materialman is protected because it can refuse to indorse the check until it is satisfied that the subcontractor will pay it the appropriate amount.

jointure (joyn-chər). 1. A woman's freehold life estate in land, made in consideration of marriage in lieu of dower and to be enjoyed by her only after her husband's death; a settlement under which a wife receives such an estate. ● The four essential elements are that (1) the jointure must take effect immediately upon the husband's death, (2) it must be for the wife's own life, and not for another's life or for a term of years, (3) it must be held by her in her own right and not in trust for her, and (4) it must be in lieu of her entire dower. See DOWER. 2. An estate in lands given jointly to a husband and wife before they marry. See JOINTRESS.

jointuress. See JOINTRESS.

joint venture. A business undertaking by two or more persons engaged in a single defined project. ● The necessary elements are: (1) an express or implied agreement; (2) a common purpose that the group intends to carry out; (3) shared profits and losses; and (4) each member's equal voice in controlling the project. — Also termed joint adventure; joint enterprise. Cf. PARTNERSHIP; STRATEGIC ALLIANCE.

"There is some difficulty in determining when the legal relationship of joint venture exists, with authorities disagreeing as to the essential elements. . . . The joint venture is not as much of an entity as is a partnership." Henry G. Henn & John R. Alexander, Laws of Corporations § 49, at 106 (3d ed. 1983).

Jones Act. Maritime law. A federal statute that allows a seaman injured during the course of employment to recover damages for the injuries in a negligence action against the employer. ● If a seaman dies from such injuries, the seaman's personal representative may maintain an action against the employer. 46 USCA app. § 688.

Jones Act vessel. See VESSEL.

jour (zhoor), n. [French] Day <jour en banc>.

journal. 1. A book or record kept usu. daily, as of the proceedings of a legislature or the events of a ship's voyage. 2. Accounting. In double-entry bookkeeping, a book in which original entries are recorded before being transferred to a ledger. 3. A periodical or magazine, esp. one published for a scholarly or professional group. — Abbr. J.

journal entry. See ENTRY (2).

journalist's privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

journal of notarial acts (noh-tair-ee-əl). The notary public's sequential record of notarial transactions, usu. a bound book listing the date, time, and type of each official act, the type of instrument acknowledged or verified before the notary, the signature of each person whose signature is notarized, the type of information used to verify the identity of parties whose signatures are notarized, and the fee charged. • This journal, required by law in most states, provides a record that may be used as evidence in court. — Also termed notarial record; notarial register; notary record book; sequential journal.

journeys accounts. Hist. The number of days (usu. 15) after the abatement of a writ within which a new writ could be obtained. • This number was based on how many days it took for the plaintiff to travel (or journey) to the court.

joyriding, n. The illegal driving of someone else's automobile without permission, but with no intent to deprive the owner of it permanently. — Also termed unauthorized use of a vehicle. — joyride, vb. — joyrider, n.

"When the automobile began to appear and was limited to the possession of a few of the more fortunate members of the community, many persons who ordinarily respected the property rights of others, yielded to the temptation to drive one of these new contrivances without the consent of the owner. This became so common that the term 'joyrider' was coined to refer to the person who indulged in such unpermitted use of another's car. For the most part it was a relatively harmless type of trespass . . ." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 333 (3d ed. 1982).

J.P. abbr. JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

J.P. court. See justice court under COURT.

judge pro tempore. See visiting judge.

lay judge. A judge who is not a lawyer.

municipal judge. A local judge having criminal or civil jurisdiction, or sometimes both, within a city. — Also termed city judge.

presiding judge. 1. A judge in charge of a particular court or judicial district; esp., the senior active judge on a three-member panel that hears and decides cases. 2. A chief judge. — Abbr. P.J. — Also termed president judge.

probate judge. A judge having jurisdiction over probate, inheritance, guardianships, and the like. — Also termed judge of probate; surrogate; register.

puisne judge (pyoo-nee). [Law French puisné “later born”] 1. A junior judge; a judge without distinction or title. • This was the title formerly used in English common-law courts for a judge other than the chief judge. Today puisne judge refers to any judge of the English High Court, apart from the Chief Justice. 2. See associate judge.

senior judge. 1. The judge who has served for the longest time on a given court. 2. A federal judge who qualifies for senior status and chooses this status over retirement.

side judge. Archaic. A judge — or one of two judges — of inferior rank, associated with a judge of a higher rank for the purpose of constituting a court.

special judge. A judge appointed or selected to sit — usu. in a specific case — in the absence or disqualification of the regular judge or otherwise as provided by statute.

“Many, if not all, jurisdictions have made provision for the selection of a substitute or special judge to serve in place of the regular judge in the event of disqualification, voluntary recusal, disability, or other absence of the regular judge. The circumstances under which a special or substitute judge may act in place of the regular judge, and the manner in which such a judge may be chosen, are matters of purely local regulation, entirely dependent on local constitutions and statutes.” 46 Am. Jur. 2d Judges § 248, at 331 (1994).

temporary judge. See visiting judge.

trial judge. The judge before whom a case is tried. • This term is used most commonly on appeal from the judge’s rulings.

visiting judge. A judge appointed by the presiding judge of an administrative region to sit temporarily on a given court, usu. in the regular judge’s absence. — Also termed temporary judge; judge pro tempore.

judge advocate. Military law. 1. A legal adviser on a military commander’s staff. 2. Any officer in the Judge Advocate General’s Corps or in a department of a U.S. military branch. — Abbr. JA.

judge pro tempore (proh tem-pə-ree). See visiting judge under JUDGE.

judge's chamber. See CHAMBER.

judgeship. 1. The office or authority of a judge.
2. The period of a judge's incumbency.

judge-shopping. The practice of filing several lawsuits asserting the same claims — in a court or a district with multiple judges — with the hope of having one of the lawsuits assigned to a favorable judge and to nonsuit or voluntarily dismiss the others. Cf. FORUM-SHOPPING.

judge trial. See bench trial under TRIAL.

judgment. 1. A court's final determination of the rights and obligations of the parties in a case. • The term judgment includes a decree and any order from which an appeal lies. Fed. R. Civ. P. 54. — Also spelled (esp. in BrE) judgement. — Abbr. J. Cf. RULING; OPINION (1).
2. English law. An opinion delivered by a member of the appellate committee of the House of Lords; a Law Lord's judicial opinion.

"An action is instituted for the enforcement of a right or the redress of an injury. Hence a judgment, as the culmination of the action declares the existence of the right, recognizes the commission of the injury, or negatives the allegation of one or the other. But as no right can exist without a correlative duty, nor any invasion of it without a corresponding obligation to make amends, the judgment necessarily affirms, or else denies, that such a duty or such a liability rests upon the person against whom the aid of the law is invoked." 1 Henry Campbell Black, A Treatise on the Law of Judgments § 1, at 2 (2d ed. 1902).

accumulative judgment. A second or additional judgment against a person who has already been convicted, the execution of which is postponed until the completion of any prior sentence.

agreed judgment. A settlement that becomes a court judgment when the judge sanctions it. — Also termed consent judgment; stipulated judgment.

alternative judgment. A determination that gives the losing party options for satisfying that party's duties.

cognovit judgment (kog-noh-vit). A debtor's confession of judgment; judgment entered in accordance with a cognovit. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT; COGNOVIT.

confession of judgment. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

consent judgment. See agreed judgment.

declaratory judgment. A binding adjudication that establishes the rights and other legal relations of the parties without providing for or ordering enforcement. • Declaratory judgments are often sought, for example, by insurance companies in determining whether a policy covers a given insured or peril. — Also termed declaratory decree; declaration.

default judgment. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

deferred judgment. A judgment placing a convicted defendant on probation, the successful completion of which will prevent entry of the underlying judgment of conviction. • This type of probation is common with minor traffic offenses. — Also termed deferred adjudication; deferred-adjudication probation; deferred prosecution; probation before judgment; probation without judgment; pretrial intervention.

deficiency judgment. A judgment against a debtor for the unpaid balance of the debt if a foreclosure sale or a sale of repossessed personal property fails to yield the full amount of the debt due. — Also termed deficiency decree.

definitive judgment. See final judgment.

determinative judgment. See final judgment.

domestic judgment. A judgment rendered by the courts of the state or country where the judgment or its effect is at issue.

dormant judgment. A judgment that has not been executed or enforced within the statutory time limit. • As a result, any judgment lien may have been lost and execution cannot be issued unless the judgment creditor first revives the judgment. See REVIVAL (1).

erroneous judgment. A judgment issued by a court with jurisdiction to issue it, but containing an improper application of law. • This type of judgment is not void, but can be corrected by a trial court while the court retains plenary jurisdiction, or in a direct appeal. See ERROR (2).

excess judgment. A judgment that exceeds all of the defendant's insurance coverage.

executory judgment (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee). A judgment that has not been carried out, such as a yet-to-be fulfilled order for the defendant to pay the plaintiff.

final judgment. A court's last action that settles the rights of the parties and disposes of all issues in controversy, except for the award of costs (and, sometimes, attorney's fees) and enforcement of the judgment. — Also termed final appealable judgment; final decision; final decree; definitive judgment; determinative judgment; final appealable order.

foreign judgment. A judgment rendered by a court of a state or country different from that where the judgment or its effect is at issue.

in personam judgment. See personal judgment.

in rem judgment. See judgment in rem.

interlocutory judgment (in-tər-lok-yə-tor-ee). An intermediate judgment that determines a preliminary or subordinate point or plea but does not finally decide the case. — Also termed interlocutory decree.

irregular judgment. A judgment that may be set aside because of some irregularity in the way it was rendered, such as a clerk's failure to send a defendant notice that a default judgment has been rendered.

judgment as a matter of law. A judgment rendered during a jury trial — either before or after the jury's verdict — against a party on a given issue when there is no legally sufficient basis for a jury to find for that party on that issue. • In federal practice, the term judgment as a matter of law has replaced both the directed verdict and the judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50. Cf. SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

judgment by default. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

judgment homologating the tableau (hə-mahl-ə-gay-ting / ta-bloh or tab-loh). Civil law. A judgment approving a plan for distributing property of a decedent's estate. • The distribution plan is known as the tableau of distribution. La. Code Civ. Proc. art. 3307. See HOMOLOGATION.

judgment in personam. See personal judgment.

judgment in rem (in rem). A judgment that determines the status or condition of property and that operates directly on the property itself. — Also termed in rem judgment.

judgment in retraxit. See judgment of retraxit.

judgment inter partes. See personal judgment.

judgment nil capiat per billa (nil kap-ee-ət pər bil-ə). Judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by the bill; a take-nothing judgment in a case instituted by a bill.

judgment nil capiat per breve (nil kap-ee-ət pər breev or bree-vee). Judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by the writ; a take-nothing judgment in a case instituted by a writ.

judgment nisi (ni-si). A provisional judgment that, while not final or absolute, may become final on a party's motion. See NISI.

judgment notwithstanding the verdict. A judgment entered for one party even though a jury verdict has been rendered for the opposing party. — Also termed judgment non obstante veredicto (non ahb-stan-tee ver-ə-dik-toh). — Abbr. JNOV. See judgment as a matter of law.

judgment of acquittal. A judgment, rendered on the defendant's motion or court's own motion, that acquits the defendant of the offense charged when the evidence is insufficient. See directed verdict under VERDICT.

judgment of blood. See death sentence under SENTENCE.

judgment of conviction. The written record of a criminal judgment, consisting of the plea, the verdict or findings, the adjudication, and the sentence. Fed. R. Crim. P. 32(d)(1).

judgment of dismissal. A final determination of a case without a trial on its merits. See DISMISSAL.

judgment of nolle prosequi (nahl-ee prahs-ə-kwi). A judgment entered against a plaintiff who, after appearance but before judgment on the merits, has decided to abandon prosecution of the lawsuit. See NOLLE PROSEQUI.

judgment of nonsuit. 1. Hist. The judgment given against a plaintiff who fails to be present in court to hear the jury render its verdict or who, after issue is joined, fails to bring the issue to be tried in due time. • This judgment does not prevent the plaintiff from filing the same case again. 2. NONSUIT (2).

judgment of repleader. See REPLEADER.

judgment of retraxit (ri-trak-sit). Hist. A judgment against a plaintiff who has voluntarily retracted the claim. • Such a judgment bars the plaintiff from relitigating the claim. — Also termed judgment in retraxit. See RETRAXIT.

judgment on the merits. A judgment based on the evidence rather than on technical or procedural grounds. — Also termed decision on the merits.

judgment on the pleadings. A judgment based solely on the allegations and information contained in the pleadings, and not on any outside matters. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c). Cf. SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

judgment on the verdict. A judgment for the party receiving a favorable jury verdict.

judgment quasi in rem (kwaj-sī [or -zī] in rem). A judgment based on the court's jurisdiction over the defendant's interest in property rather than on its jurisdiction over the defendant or the property.

judgment quod billa cassetur (kwod bil-ə kə-see-tər). Judgment that the bill be quashed. • This is a judgment for the defendant.

judgment quod breve cassetur (kwod breev or bree-vee kə-see-tər). Judgment that the writ be quashed. • This is a judgment for the defendant.

judgment quod computet. See QUOD COMPUTET.

judgment quod recuperet (kwod ri-kyoo-pər-it). Judgment that the plaintiff recover.

judgment respondeat ouster (ri-spon-dee-at ows-tər). Hist. An interlocutory judgment requiring the defendant who has made a dilatory plea to give a more substantial defense.

money judgment. A judgment for damages subject to immediate execution, as distinguished from equitable or injunctive relief.

nunc pro tunc judgment (nəŋk proh təŋk). A procedural device by which the record of a judgment is amended to accord with what the judge actually said and did, so that the record will be accurate. • This device is often used to correct defects in real-estate titles.

personal judgment. 1. A judgment that imposes personal liability on a defendant and that may therefore be satisfied out of any of the defendant's property within judicial reach. 2. A judgment resulting from an action in which a court has personal jurisdiction over the parties. 3. A judgment against a person as distinguished from a judgment against a thing, right, or status. — Also termed judgment in personam (in pər-sō-nəm); in personam judgment; judgment inter partes (in-tər pah-r-teez).

simulated judgment. Civil law. A judgment that, although founded on an actual debt and intended for collection by the usual legal processes, is actually entered into by the parties to give one of them an undeserving advantage or to defraud third parties.

stipulated judgment. See agreed judgment.

summary judgment. See SUMMARY JUDGMENT.

take-nothing judgment. A judgment for the defendant providing that the plaintiff recover nothing in damages or other relief. — Also termed (in some states) no cause of action.

voidable judgment. A judgment that, although seemingly valid, is defective in some material way; esp., a judgment that, although rendered by a court having jurisdiction, is irregular or erroneous.

void judgment. A judgment that has no legal force or effect, the invalidity of which may be asserted by any party whose rights are affected at any time and any place, whether directly or collaterally. • From its inception, a void judgment continues to be absolutely null. It is incapable of being confirmed, ratified, or enforced in any manner or to any degree. One source of a void judgment is the lack of subject-matter jurisdiction.

judgmental immunity. See ERROR-OF-JUDGMENT RULE.

judgment as a matter of law. See JUDGMENT.

judgment book. See judgment docket under DOCKET.

judgment by default. See DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

judgment creditor. A person having a legal right to enforce execution of a judgment for a specific sum of money.

bona fide judgment creditor. One who recovers a judgment without engaging in fraud or collusion.

judgment debt. See DEBT.

judgment debtor. A person against whom a money judgment has been entered but not yet satisfied.

judgment docket. See DOCKET (1).

judgment execution. EXECUTION.

judgment file. See judgment docket under DOCKET.

judgment homologating the tableau. See JUDGMENT.

judgment in personam. See personal judgment under JUDGMENT.

judgment of repleader. See REPLEADER.

judgment of retraxit. See JUDGMENT.

judgment on the merits. See JUDGMENT.

judgment on the pleadings. See JUDGMENT.

judgment on the verdict. See JUDGMENT.

judgment-proof, adj. (Of an actual or potential judgment debtor) unable to satisfy a judgment for money damages because the person has no property, does not own enough property within the court's jurisdiction to satisfy the judgment, or claims the benefit of statutorily exempt property. — Also termed execution-proof.

judgment quasi in rem. See JUDGMENT.

judgment quod billa cassetur. See JUDGMENT.

judgment quod breve cassetur. See JUDGMENT.

judgment quod computet. See QUOD COMPUTET.

judgment quod recuperet. See JUDGMENT.

judgment record. See judgment docket under DOCKET.

judgment respondeat ouster. See JUDGMENT.

judgment roll. See judgment docket under DOCKET.

"As the pleadings constitute part of the record, it is indispensable that they be filed. In some of the codes they must be filed at the institution of the action; in others, by or before the first day of the term; in others, at or before the trial. They must be used in making the 'judgment roll,' and in the practice of each State (not here considered) procedure is provided to procure filing." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 179 (2d ed. 1899).

judgment sale. See execution sale under SALE.

judicable (joo-di-kə-bəl), adj. Rare. Capable of being adjudicated; triable; justiciable.

judicare (joo-di-kair-ee), vb. [Latin] Civil law. To judge; to decide or determine judicially; to give judgment or sentence.

judicative (joo-di-kay-tiv or -kə-tiv), adj. Rare. See ADJUDICATIVE.

judicator (joo-di-kay-tər), n. A person authorized to act or serve as a judge.

judicatory (joo-di-kə-tor-ee), adj. 1. Of or relating to judgment. 2. By which a judgment may be made; giving a decisive indication.

judicial (joo-dish-əl), adj. 1. Of, relating to, or by the court <judicial duty>. 2. In court <the witness's judicial confession>. 3. Legal <the Attorney General took no judicial action>. 4. Of or relating to a judgment <an award of judicial interest at the legal rate>. Cf. JUDICIOUS.

quasi-judicial. See QUASI-JUDICIAL.

judicial act. See ACT (2)

judicial activism, n. A philosophy of judicial decision-making whereby judges allow their personal views about public policy, among other factors, to guide their decisions, usu. with the suggestion that adherents of this philosophy tend to find constitutional violations and are willing to ignore precedent. — judicial activist, n. Cf. JUDICIAL RESTRAINT (3).

judicial activity report. A regular report, usu. monthly or quarterly, on caseload and caseload within a given court or court system.

judicial administration. The process of doing justice through a system of courts.

judicial admission. See ADMISSION (1).

judicial arbitration. See ARBITRATION.

Judicial Article. Article III of the U.S. Constitution, which creates the Supreme Court, vests in Congress the right to create inferior courts, provides for life tenure for federal judges, and specifies the powers and jurisdiction of the federal courts.

judicial assize. See ASSIZE (6).

judicial bias. See BIAS.

judicial bond. See BOND (2).

judicial branch. The branch of government consisting of the courts, whose function is to interpret, apply, and generally administer and enforce the laws; JUDICIARY (1). Cf. LEGISLATIVE BRANCH; EXECUTIVE BRANCH.

judicial bypass. A procedure permitting a person to obtain a court's approval for an act that would ordinarily require the approval of someone else, such as a law that requires a minor to notify a parent before obtaining an abortion but allows an appropriately qualified minor to obtain a court order permitting the abortion without parental notice.

judicial cognizance. See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

judicial combat. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

judicial comity. See COMITY.

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. A tribunal created in 1833 with jurisdiction to hear certain admiralty and ecclesiastical appeals, and certain appeals from the Commonwealth. • Its decisions are not treated as binding precedent in the United Kingdom, but they are influential because of the overlapping composition of members of the Council and the House of Lords in its judicial capacity.

judicial compensation. 1. The remuneration that judges receive for their work. 2. Civil law. A court's judgment finding that two parties are mutually obligated to one another and crafting the amount of the judgment in accordance with the amount that each party owes. • A claim for compensation is usu. contained in a reconventional demand. La. Code Civ. Proc. 1062. See reconventional demand under DEMAND (1).

judicial confession. See CONFESSION.

judicial control. Civil law. A doctrine by which a court can deny cancellation of a lease if the lessee's breach is of minor importance, is not caused by the lessee, or is based on a good-faith mistake of fact.

judicial council. A regularly assembled group of judges whose mission is to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the courts on which they sit; esp., a semiannual assembly of a federal circuit's judges called by the circuit's chief judge. 28 USCA § 332.

judicial day. See juridical day under DAY.

judicial dictum. See DICTUM.

judicial discretion. See DISCRETION.

judicial economy. Efficiency in the operation of the courts and the judicial system; esp., the efficient management of litigation so as to minimize duplication of effort and to avoid wasting the judiciary's time and resources. • A court can enter a variety of orders based on judicial economy. For instance, a court may consolidate two cases for trial to save the court and the parties from having two trials, or it may order a separate trial on certain issues if doing so would provide the opportunity to avoid a later trial that would be more complex and time-consuming.

judicial-economy exception. An exemption from the final-judgment rule, by which a party may seek immediate appellate review of a non-final order if doing so might establish a final or nearly final disposition of the entire suit. See FINAL-JUDGMENT RULE.

judicial estoppel. See ESTOPPEL.

judicial evidence. See EVIDENCE.

judicial fact. See FACT.

judicial foreclosure. See FORECLOSURE.

judicial immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

judicial insurance. See INSURANCE.

judicialize, vb. 1. To pattern (procedures, etc.) after a court of law <these administrative hearings have been judicialized>. 2. To bring (something not traditionally within the judicial system) into the judicial system <political questions are gradually becoming judicialized>. — judicialization, n.

judicial knowledge. See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

judicial legislation. See JUDGE-MADE LAW (2); LEGISLATION.

judicial lien. See LIEN.

judicial mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

judicial notice. A court's acceptance, for purposes of convenience and without requiring a party's proof, of a well-known and indisputable fact; the court's power to accept such a fact <the trial court took judicial notice of the fact that water freezes at 32 degrees Fahrenheit>. Fed R. Evid. 201. — Also termed judicial cognizance; judicial knowledge.

judicial oath. See OATH.

judicial officer. 1. A judge or magistrate. 2. Any officer of the court, such as a bailiff or court reporter.

judicial opinion. See OPINION (1).

judicial order. See ORDER (2).

judicial power. 1. The authority vested in courts and judges to hear and decide cases and to make binding judgments on them; the power to construe and apply the law when controversies arise over what has been done or not done under it. • Under federal law, this power is vested in the U.S. Supreme Court and in whatever inferior courts Congress establishes. The other two great powers of government are the legislative power and the executive power. 2. A power conferred on a public officer involving the exercise of judgment and discretion in deciding questions of right in specific cases affecting personal and proprietary interests. • In this sense, the phrase is contrasted with ministerial power.

judicial privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

judicial proceeding. See PROCEEDING.

judicial process. See PROCESS.

judicial question. A question that is proper for determination by the courts, as opposed to a moot question or one properly decided by the executive or legislative branch. Cf. POLITICAL QUESTION.

judicial record. See DOCKET (1).

judicial remedy. See REMEDY.

judicial restraint. 1. A restraint imposed by a court, as by a restraining order, injunction, or judgment. 2. The principle that, when a court can resolve a case based on a particular issue, it should do so, without reaching unnecessary issues. 3. A philosophy of judicial decision-making whereby judges avoid indulging their personal beliefs about the public good and instead try merely to interpret the law as legislated and according to precedent. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) judicial self-restraint. Cf. JUDICIAL ACTIVISM.

judicial review. 1. A court's power to review the actions of other branches or levels of government; esp., the courts' power to invalidate legislative and executive actions as being unconstitutional. 2. The constitutional doctrine providing for this power. 3. A court's review of a lower court's or an administrative body's factual or legal findings.

de novo judicial review. A court's nondeferential review of an administrative decision, usu. through a review of the administrative record plus any additional evidence the parties present.

judicial sale. See SALE.

judicial self-restraint. See JUDICIAL RESTRAINT.

judicial separation. See SEPARATION (1).

judicial sequestration. See SEQUESTRATION.

judicial settlement. See SETTLEMENT.

judicial stacking. See STACKING.

jura regalia. See JURA.

jura rerum. See JURA.

jura summi imperii. See JURA.

jurat (joor-at). 1. [fr. Latin jurare “to swear”] A certification added to an affidavit or deposition stating when and before what authority the affidavit or deposition was made. • A jurat typically says “Subscribed and sworn to before me this ____ day of [month], [year],” and the officer (usu. a notary public) thereby certifies three things: (1) that the person signing the document did so in the officer’s presence, (2) that the signer appeared before the officer on the date indicated, and (3) that the officer administered an oath or affirmation to the signer, who swore to or affirmed the contents of the document. — Also termed jurata. Cf. VERIFICATION.

witness jurat. A subscribing witness’s acknowledgment certificate. • Even though this certificate is technically an acknowledgment and not a true jurat, the phrase witness jurat is commonly used. See ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

2. [fr. Latin juratus “one sworn”] In France and the Channel Islands, a municipal officer or magistrate.

jurata (juu-ray-tə), n. 1. Hist. A jury of 12 persons; esp., a jury existing at common law. 2. JURAT (1).

juration (juu-ray-shən). Archaic. 1. The act of administering an oath. 2. The act of swearing on oath.

jurative. See JURATORY.

jurator (juu-ray-tər). Archaic. See JUROR.

juratory (joor-ə-tor-ee), adj. Of, relating to, or containing an oath. — Also termed jurative.

jure (joor-ee), adv. [Latin] 1. By right; in right. 2. By law. See DE JURE.

jure belli (bel-i). By the right or law of war.

jure civili (sə-vi-li). By the civil law.

jure coronae (kə-roh-nee). In right of the Crown.

jure divino (di-vi-noh). By divine right.

jure ecclesiae (e-klee-z[h]ee-ee). In right of the church.

jure gentium (jen-shee-əm). By the law of nations.

jure repraesentationis (rep-rə-zen-tay-shee-oh-nis). By right of representation; in the right of another person.

jure uxoris (ək-sor-is). In right of a wife.

jure gestionis (joor-ee jes-chee-oh-nis), n. [Latin “by way of doing business”] A nation’s acts that are essentially commercial or private, in contrast to its public acts. • Under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, a foreign country’s immunity is limited to claims involving its public acts. The Act’s immunity does not extend to claims arising from the private or commercial acts of a foreign state. 28 USCA § 1605. Cf. JURE IMPERII. See COMMERCIAL-ACTIVITY EXCEPTION; RESTRICTIVE PRINCIPLE OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY.

jure imperii (joor-ee im-peer-ee-i), n. [Latin “by right of sovereignty”] The public acts that a nation undertakes as a sovereign state, for which the sovereign is usu. immune from suit or liability. Cf. JURE GESTIONIS; COMMERCIAL-ACTIVITY EXCEPTION. See RESTRICTIVE PRINCIPLE OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY.

juridical (juu-rid-i-kəl), adj. 1. Of or relating to judicial proceedings or to the administration of justice. 2. Of or relating to law; legal. — Also termed juridic. Cf. NONJURIDICAL.

juridical day. See DAY.

juridical link. A legal relationship between members of a potential class action, sufficient to make a single suit more efficient or effective than multiple suits, as when all members of the class have been similarly affected by an allegedly illegal regulation. — Also termed juridical relationship.

jurimetrics (joor-ə-me-triks), n. The use of scientific or empirical methods, including measurement, in the study or analysis of legal matters. — jurimetrician (joor-ə-me-trish-ən), jurimetricist (joor-ə-me-trə-sist), n.

juris (joor-is). [Latin] 1. Of law. 2. Of right.

juris privati (pri-vay-ti). Of private right; relating to private property or private law.

juris publici (pəb-li-si). Of public right; relating to common or public use, or to public law.

juriscenter (jooə-sen-tər or jooə-ə-sen-tər), n.
Conflict of laws. The jurisdiction that is most appropriately considered a couple's domestic center of gravity for matrimonial purposes.

jurisconsult (jooə-is-kon-səlt or -kən-səlt). One who is learned in the law, esp. in civil or international law; JURIST.

jurisdiction, n. 1. A government's general power to exercise authority over all persons and things within its territory <New Jersey's jurisdiction>. 2. A court's power to decide a case or issue a decree <the constitutional grant of federal-question jurisdiction>. 3. A geographic area within which political or judicial authority may be exercised <the accused fled to another jurisdiction>. 4. A political or judicial subdivision within such an area <other jurisdictions have decided the issue differently>. — jurisdictional, adj. Cf. VENUE.

ancillary jurisdiction. A court's jurisdiction to adjudicate claims and proceedings that arise out of a claim that is properly before the court. • For example, if a plaintiff brings a lawsuit in federal court based on a federal question (such as a claim under Title VII), the defendant may assert a counterclaim that the court would not otherwise have jurisdiction over (such as a state-law claim of stealing company property). The concept of ancillary jurisdiction has now been codified, along with the concept of pendent jurisdiction, in the supplemental-jurisdiction statute. 28 USCA § 1367. See supplemental jurisdiction. Cf. pendent jurisdiction.

anomalous jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction that is not granted to a court by statute, but that is inherent in the court's authority to govern lawyers and other officers of the court, such as the power to issue a preindictment order suppressing illegally seized property. 2. An appellate court's provisional jurisdiction to review the denial of a motion to intervene in a case, so that if the court finds that the denial was correct, then its jurisdiction disappears — and it must dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction — because an order denying a motion to intervene is not a final, appealable order. See ANOMALOUS-JURISDICTION RULE.

appellate jurisdiction. The power of a court to review and revise a lower court's decision. • For example, U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 vests appellate jurisdiction in the Supreme Court, while 28 USCA §§ 1291–1295 grant appellate jurisdiction to lower federal courts of appeals. Cf. original jurisdiction.

arising-in jurisdiction. A bankruptcy court's jurisdiction over issues relating to the administration of the bankruptcy estate, and matters that occur only in a bankruptcy case. 28 USCA §§ 157, 1334.

common-law jurisdiction. 1. A place where the legal system derives ultimately from the English common-law system <England, the United States, Australia, and other common-law jurisdictions>. 2. A court's jurisdiction to try such cases as were cognizable under the English common law <in the absence of a controlling statute, the court exercised common-law jurisdiction over those claims>.

concurrent jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction exercised simultaneously by more than one court over the same subject matter and within the same territory, with the litigant having the right to choose the court in which to file the action. 2. Jurisdiction shared by two or more states, esp. over the physical boundaries (such as rivers or other bodies of water) between them. — Also termed coordinate jurisdiction; overlapping jurisdiction. Cf. exclusive jurisdiction.

"In several cases, two States divided by a river exercise concurrent jurisdiction over the river, no matter where the inter-state boundary may be; in some cases by the Ordinance of 1787 for organizing Territories northwest of the Ohio River, in some cases by Acts of Congress organizing Territories or admitting States, and in some cases by agreements between the States concerned." 1 Joseph H. Beale, A Treatise on the Conflict of Laws § 44.3, at 279 (1935).

consent jurisdiction. Jurisdiction that parties have agreed to, either by agreement, by contract, or by general appearance. • Parties may not, by agreement, confer subject-matter jurisdiction on a federal court that would not otherwise have it.

contentious jurisdiction. 1. A court's jurisdiction exercised over disputed matters. 2. Eccles. law. The branch of ecclesiastical-court jurisdiction that deals with contested proceedings.

continuing jurisdiction. A court's power to retain jurisdiction over a matter after entering a judgment, allowing the court to modify its previous rulings or orders. See CONTINUING-JURISDICTION DOCTRINE.

coordinate jurisdiction. See concurrent jurisdiction.

criminal jurisdiction. A court's power to hear criminal cases.

diversity jurisdiction. A federal court's exercise of authority over a case involving parties from different states and an amount in controversy greater than a statutory minimum (now $75,000). 28 USCA § 1332. See DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP; AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

equity jurisdiction. At common law, the power to hear certain civil actions according to the procedure of the court of chancery, and to resolve them according to equitable rules.

"[T]he term equity jurisdiction does not refer to jurisdiction in the sense of the power conferred by the sovereign on the court over specified subject-matters or to jurisdiction over the res or the persons of the parties in a particular proceeding but refers rather to the merits. The want of equity jurisdiction does not mean that the court has no power to act but that it should not act, as on the ground, for example, that there is an adequate remedy at law." William Q. de Funiak, Handbook of Modern Equity 38 (2d ed. 1956).

exclusive jurisdiction. A court's power to adjudicate an action or class of actions to the exclusion of all other courts <federal district courts have exclusive jurisdiction over actions brought under the Securities Exchange Act>. Cf. concurrent jurisdiction.

extraterritorial jurisdiction. A court's ability to exercise power beyond its territorial limits. See LONG-ARM STATUTE.

federal jurisdiction. 1. The exercise of federal-court authority. 2. The area of study dealing with the jurisdiction of federal courts.

federal-question jurisdiction. The exercise of federal-court power over claims arising under the U.S. Constitution, an act of Congress, or a treaty. 28 USCA § 1331.

foreign jurisdiction. 1. The powers of a court of a sister state or foreign country. 2. Extraterritorial process, such as long-arm service of process.

general jurisdiction. 1. A court's authority to hear a wide range of cases, civil or criminal, that arise within its geographic area. 2. A court's authority to hear all claims against a defendant, at the place of the defendant's domicile or the place of service, without any showing that a connection exists between the claims and the forum state. Cf. limited jurisdiction; specific jurisdiction.

in personam jurisdiction. See personal jurisdiction.

in rem jurisdiction (in rem). A court's power to adjudicate the rights to a given piece of property, including the power to seize and hold it. — Also termed jurisdiction in rem. See IN REM. Cf. personal jurisdiction.

international jurisdiction. A court's power to hear and determine matters between different countries or persons of different countries.

judicial jurisdiction. The legal power and authority of a court to make a decision that binds the parties to any matter properly brought before it.

jurisdiction in personam. See personal jurisdiction.

jurisdiction in rem. See in rem jurisdiction.

jurisdiction of the person. See personal jurisdiction.

jurisdiction of the subject matter. See subject-matter jurisdiction.

jurisdiction over the person. See personal jurisdiction.

jurisdiction quasi in rem. See quasi-in-rem jurisdiction.

legislative jurisdiction. A legislature's general sphere of authority to enact laws and conduct all business related to that authority, such as holding hearings.

limited jurisdiction. Jurisdiction that is confined to a particular type of case or that may be exercised only under statutory limits and prescriptions. — Also termed special jurisdiction. Cf. general jurisdiction.

"It is a principle of first importance that the federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction. . . . The federal courts . . . cannot be courts of general jurisdiction. They are empowered to hear only such cases as are within the judicial power of the United States, as defined in the Constitution, and have been entrusted to them by a jurisdictional grant by Congress." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 7, at 27 (5th ed. 1994).

original jurisdiction. A court's power to hear and decide a matter before any other court can review the matter. Cf. appellate jurisdiction.

overlapping jurisdiction. See concurrent jurisdiction.

pendent jurisdiction (pen-dant). A court's jurisdiction to hear and determine a claim over which it would not otherwise have jurisdiction, because the claim arises from the same transaction or occurrence as another claim that is properly before the court. ● For example, if a plaintiff brings suit in federal court claiming that the defendant, in one transaction, violated both a federal and a state law, the federal court has jurisdiction over the federal claim (under federal-question jurisdiction) and also has jurisdiction over the state claim that is pendent to the federal claim. Pendent jurisdiction has now been co-defined as supplemental jurisdiction. 28 USCA § 1367. — Also termed pendent-claim jurisdiction. See supplemental jurisdiction. Cf. ancillary jurisdiction.

pendent-party jurisdiction. A court's jurisdiction to adjudicate a claim against a party who is not otherwise subject to the court's jurisdiction, because the claim by or against that party arises from the same transaction or occurrence as another claim that is properly before the court. • Pendent-party jurisdiction has been a hotly debated subject, and was severely limited by the U.S. Supreme Court in Finley v. United States, 490 U.S. 545, 109 S.Ct. 2003 (1990). The concept is now codified in the supplemental-jurisdiction statute, and it applies to federal-question cases but not to diversity-jurisdiction cases: 28 USCA § 1367. Neither pendent-party jurisdiction nor supplemental jurisdiction may be used to circumvent the complete-diversity requirement in cases founded on diversity jurisdiction. See supplemental jurisdiction.

personal jurisdiction. A court's power to bring a person into its adjudicative process; jurisdiction over a defendant's personal rights, rather than merely over property interests. — Also termed in personam jurisdiction; jurisdiction in personam; jurisdiction of the person; jurisdiction over the person. See IN PERSONAM. Cf. in rem jurisdiction.

plenary jurisdiction (plee-nə-ree or plen-ə-ree). A court's full and absolute power over the subject matter and the parties in a case.

probate jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over matters relating to wills, settlement of decedents' estates, and (in some states) guardianship and the adoption of minors.

quasi-in-rem jurisdiction (kway-sī in rem or kway-zī). Jurisdiction over a person but based on that person's interest in property located within the court's territory. — Also termed jurisdiction quasi in rem. See quasi in rem under IN REM.

special jurisdiction. See limited jurisdiction.

specific jurisdiction. Jurisdiction that stems from the defendant's having certain minimum contacts with the forum state so that the court may hear a case whose issues arise from those minimum contacts. Cf. general jurisdiction.

subject-matter jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over the nature of the case and the type of relief sought; the extent to which a court can rule on the conduct of persons or the status of things. — Also termed jurisdiction of the subject matter.

summary jurisdiction. 1. A court's jurisdiction in a summary proceeding. 2. The court's authority to issue a judgment or order (such as a finding of contempt) without the necessity of a trial or other process. 3. English law. A court's power to make an order immediately, without obtaining authority or referral, as in a magistrate's power to dispose of a criminal case without referring it to the Crown Court for a formal trial or without drawing a jury.

supplemental jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over a claim that is part of the same case or controversy as another claim over which the court has original jurisdiction. • Since 1990, federal district courts have had supplemental jurisdiction which includes jurisdiction over both ancillary and pendent claims. 28 USCA § 1367. See ancillary jurisdiction; pendent jurisdiction.

territorial jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction over cases arising in or involving persons residing within a defined territory. 2. Territory over which a government, one of its courts, or one of its subdivisions has jurisdiction.

transient jurisdiction (tran-shənt). Personal jurisdiction over a defendant who is served with process while in the forum state only temporarily (such as during travel).

voluntary jurisdiction. 1. Jurisdiction exercised over unopposed matters. 2. Eccles. law. Jurisdiction in cases in which contentious litigation is not allowed.

jurisdictional amount. See AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

jurisdictional fact. See FACT.

jurisdictional-fact doctrine. Administrative law. The principle that if evidence is presented challenging the factual findings that triggered an agency's action, then a court will review the facts to determine whether the agency had authority to act in the first place. • This doctrine is generally no longer applied. Cf. CONSTITUTIONAL-FACT DOCTRINE.

jurisdictional gerrymandering. See GERRY-MANDERING (2).

jurisdictional limits. The geographic boundaries or the constitutional or statutory limits within which a court's authority may be exercised.

jurisdictional plea. See PLEA (3).

jurisdictional statement. See JURISDICTION CLAUSE.

jurisdictional strike. See STRIKE.

jurisdiction clause. 1. At law, a statement in a pleading that sets forth the court's jurisdiction to act in the case. — Also termed jurisdictional statement. 2. Equity practice. The part of the bill intended to show that the court has jurisdiction, usu. by an averment that adequate relief is unavailable outside equitable channels.

jurisdiction in personam. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction in rem. See in rem jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction of the person. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction of the subject matter. See subject-matter jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction over the person. See personal jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

jurisdiction quasi in rem. See quasi-in-rem jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

Juris Doctor (joo-ris dok-tər). Doctor of law — the law degree most commonly conferred by an American law school. — Abbr. J.D. — Also termed Doctor of Jurisprudence; Doctor of Law. Cf. MASTER OF LAWS; LL.B.; LL.D.

juris et de jure* (joo-ris et dee joo-ree). [Latin] Of law and of right .

jurisinceptor* (joo-ris-in-sep-tər). [Latin] Hist. A student of the civil law.

jurisperitus* (joo-ris-pə-ri-təs), adj. [Latin] (Of a person) skilled or learned in law. See LEGISPERITUS.

juris privati. [Latin] See JURIS.

jurisprude (joo-ris-prood), n. 1. A person who makes a pretentious display of legal knowledge or who is overzealous about the importance of legal doctrine. 2. JURISPRUDENT.

jurisprudence (joo-ris-prood-ənts), n. 1. Originally (in the 18th century), the study of the first principles of the law of nature, the civil law, and the law of nations. — Also termed jurisprudentia naturalis (joo-ris-proo-den-shee-ə nach-ə-ray-lis). 2. More modernly, the study of the general or fundamental elements of a particular legal system, as opposed to its practical and concrete details. 3. The study of legal systems in general. 4. Judicial precedents considered collectively. 5. In German literature, the whole of legal knowledge. 6. A system, body, or division of law. 7. CASELAW.

"Jurisprudence addresses the questions about law that an intelligent layperson of speculative bent — not a lawyer — might think particularly interesting. What is law? ... Where does law come from? ... Is law an autonomous discipline? ... What is the purpose of law? ... Is law a science, a humanity, or neither? ... A practicing lawyer or a judge is apt to think questions of this sort at best irrelevant to what he does, at worst naive, impractical, even childlike (how high is up?)." Richard A. Posner, The Problems of Jurisprudence 1 (1990).

analytical jurisprudence. A method of legal study that concentrates on the logical structure of law, the meanings and uses of its concepts, and the terms and the modes of its operation.

ensorial jurisprudence. See LAW REFORM.

comparative jurisprudence. The scholarly study of the similarities and differences between the legal systems of different jurisdictions, such as between civil-law and common-law countries. — Also termed comparative law. Cf. INTERNATIONAL LAW.

"What is known as comparative jurisprudence — namely, the study of the resemblances and differences between different legal systems — is not a separate branch of jurisprudence co-ordinate with the analytical, historical, and ethical, but is merely a particular method of that science in all its branches. We compare English law with Roman law either for the purpose of analytical jurisprudence, in order the better to comprehend the conceptions and principles of each of those systems; or for the purpose of historical jurisprudence, in order that we may better understand the course of development of each system; or for the purpose of ethical jurisprudence, in order that we may better judge the practical merits and demerits of each of them. Apart from such purposes the comparative study of law would be merely futile." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 7-8 n.(c) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

equity jurisprudence. 1. The legal science treating the rules, principles, and maxims that govern the decisions of a court of equity. 2. The cases and controversies that are considered proper subjects of equity. 3. The nature and form of the remedies that equity grants.

ethical jurisprudence. The branch of legal philosophy concerned with the law from the viewpoint of its ethical significance and adequacy. • This area of study brings together moral and legal philosophy. — Also termed (in German) Rechtsphilosophie; (in French) philosophie du droit.

expository jurisprudence. The scholarly exposition of the contents of an actual legal system as it now exists or once existed. — Also termed systematic jurisprudence.

feminist jurisprudence. A branch of jurisprudence that examines the relationship between women and law, including the history of legal and social biases against women, the elimination of those biases in modern law, and the enhancement of women's legal rights and recognition in society.

"The first published use of the phrase 'feminist jurisprudence' occurred in 1978 when Professor Ann Scales published an article called Toward a Feminist Jurisprudence. Feminist legal theory is diverse, and anything but monolithic. Many feminists believe that it is difficult to generalize about feminist jurisprudence. It is, however, possible to understand feminist legal theory as a reaction to the jurisprudence of modern legal scholars (primarily male scholars) who tend to see law as a process for interpreting and perpetuating a universal, gender-neutral public morality. Feminist legal scholars, despite their differences, appear united in claiming that 'masculine' jurisprudence of 'all stripes' fails to acknowledge, let alone respond to, the interests, values, fears, and harms experienced by women." Gary Minda, Postmodern Legal Movements 129–30 (1995).

general jurisprudence. 1. The scholarly study of the fundamental elements of a given legal system. — Also termed jurisprudentia generalis.

"The term 'general jurisprudence' involves the misleading suggestion that this branch of legal science is that which relates not to any single system of law, but to those conceptions and principles that are to be found in all developed legal systems, and which are therefore in this sense general. It is true that a great part of the matter with which it is concerned is common to all mature systems of law. All of these have the same essential nature and purposes, and therefore agree to a large extent in their first principles. But it is not because of universal reception that any principles pertain to the theory or philosophy of law. For this purpose such reception is neither sufficient nor necessary. Even if no system in the world save that of England recognised the legislative efficacy of judicial precedents, the theory of case-law would none the less be a fit and proper subject of general jurisprudence. Jurisprudentia generalis is not the study of legal systems in general, but the study of the general or fundamental elements of a particular legal system." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 3 n.(b) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

2. The scholarly study of the law, legal theory, and legal systems generally. — Also termed jurisprudentia universalis; philosophy of law; legal philosophy.

"According to Austin (1790–1859), general jurisprudence is the study of the 'principles, notions and distinctions' common to the maturer systems of law." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 2 (4th ed. 1991).

historical jurisprudence. The branch of legal philosophy concerned with the history of the first principles and conceptions of a legal system, dealing with (1) the general principles governing the origin and development of law, and (2) the origin and development of the legal system's first principles.

"Historical jurisprudence was a passive restraining mode of thought on legal subjects by way of reaction from the active creative thought of the era of philosophy. It was a reaction, too, from the confident disregard of traditional legal institutions and conditions of time and place which characterized the French Revolution. We were not ready for it in the fore part of the last century. But we accepted it eagerly toward the end of that century when it was already moribund in Europe." Roscoe Pound, The Formative Era of American Law 113 (1938).

jurisprudence constante (kən-stan-tee).

Civil law. The doctrine that a court should give great weight to a rule of law that is accepted and applied in a long line of cases, and should not overrule or modify its own decisions unless clear error is shown and injustice will arise from continuation of a particular rule of law. • Civil-law courts are not bound by the common-law doctrine of stare decisis. But they do recognize the doctrine of jurisprudence constante, which is similar to stare decisis, one exception being that jurisprudence constante does not command strict adherence to a legal principle applied on one occasion in the past. Cf. STARE DECISIS.

jurisprudence of conceptions. The extension of a maxim or definition, usu. to a logical extreme, with relentless disregard for the consequences. • The phrase appears to have been invented by Roscoe Pound. See Mechanical Jurisprudence, 8 Colum. L. Rev. 605, 608 (1908).

normative jurisprudence. See NATURAL LAW (2).

particular jurisprudence. The scholarly study of the legal system within a particular jurisdiction, the focus being on the fundamental assumptions of that system only.

positivist jurisprudence. A theory that denies validity to any law that is not derived from or sanctioned by a sovereign or some other determinate source. — Also termed positivist jurisprudence.

sociological jurisprudence. A philosophical approach to law stressing the actual social effects of legal institutions, doctrines, and practices. • This influential approach was started by Roscoe Pound in 1906 and became a precursor to legal realism. — Also termed sociology of law. See LEGAL REALISM.

systematic jurisprudence. See expository jurisprudence.

jurisprudent, n. A person learned in the law; a specialist in jurisprudence. — Also termed jurisprude.

jurisprudentia generalis. See general jurisprudence (1) under JURISPRUDENCE.

jurisprudential (joo-ris-proo-den-shəl), adj. Of or relating to jurisprudence.

jurisprudentia naturalis. See JURISPRUDENCE (1).

jurisprudentia universalis. See general jurisprudence (2) under JURISPRUDENCE.

juris publici. See JURIS.

jurist. 1. One who has thorough knowledge of the law; esp., a judge or an eminent legal scholar. — Also termed legist. 2. JURISPRUDENT.

juristic, adj. 1. Of or relating to a jurist <juristic literature>. 2. Of or relating to law .

juristic act. See act in the law under ACT (2).

juristic person. See artificial person under PERSON.

jus cogens (jəs koh-jenz), n. [Latin “compelling law”] A mandatory norm of general international law from which no two or more nations may exempt themselves or release one another. Cf. JUS DISPOSITIVUM.

“Viewed from the perspective of international law as understood in the first part of the 20th century, jus cogens seemed hardly conceivable, since at that time the will of States was taken as paramount: States could, between themselves, abrogate any of the rules of customary international law. . . . [Yet] [a]fter World War II the international community became conscious of the necessity for any legal order to be based on some consensus concerning fundamental values which were not at the disposal of the subjects of this legal order. As H. Mosler rightly stresses, there is a close connection between jus cogens and the recognition of a ‘public order of the international community’ (The International Society as a Legal Community (rev. ed. 1980 p. 19). Without expressly using the notion of jus cogens, the [International Court of Justice] implied its existence when it referred to obligations erga omnes in its judgment of February 5, 1970 in the Barcelona Traction Case. The Court spoke of the ‘obligations of a State towards the international community as a whole’ where were ‘the concern of all States’ and for whose protection all States could be held to have a ‘legal interest’ (ICJ Reports (1970) p. 3, at 32). These obligations are seen as fundamentally different from those existing vis-à-vis another State in the field of diplomatic protection.” Jochen Abr. Frowein, in 3 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 66 (1997).

jus commercii (jəs kə-mər-shee-ī), n. [Latin “right of commerce”] Roman & civil law. The right to make contracts, acquire and transfer property, and conduct business transactions.

jus fruendi (jəs froo-en-di), n. [Latin “right of enjoying”] Roman & civil law. The right to use and enjoy another's property without damaging or diminishing it. See USUFRUCT.

jus futurum (jəs fyoo-t[y]oor-əm), n. [Latin “future right”] Civil law. A right that has not fully vested; an inchoate or expectant right.

jus gentium (jəs jen-shee-əm), n. [Latin “law of nations”] 1. INTERNATIONAL LAW. 2. Roman law. The body of law, taken to be common to different peoples, and applied in dealing with the relations between Roman citizens and foreigners. — Also termed jus inter gentes.

“The early Roman law (the jus civile) applied only to Roman citizens. It was formalistic and hard and reflected the status of a small, unsophisticated society rooted in the soil. It was totally unable to provide a relevant background for an expanding, developing nation. This need was served by the creation and progressive augmentation of the jus gentium. This provided simplified rules to govern the relations between foreigners, and between foreigners and citizens. . . . The progressive rules of the jus gentium gradually overrode the narrow jus civile until the latter system ceased to exist. Thus, the jus gentium became the common law of the Roman Empire and was deemed to be of universal application.” Malcolm N. Shaw, International Law 15 (4th ed. 1997).

jus gentium privatum (jəs jen-shee-əm pri-vay-təm). See private international law under INTERNATIONAL LAW.

jus proprietatis (jəs prə-pri-ə-tay-tis), n. [Latin] Civil law. A right in property based on ownership rather than actual possession. Cf. JUS POSSESSIONIS.

jus protegendi (jəs proh-tə-jen-dī), n. [Latin] Civil law. A servitude granting the right to make the roof or tiling of one's house extend over a neighbor's house.

jus publicum (jəs pəb-li-kəm), n. [Latin "public law"] 1. Roman & civil law. The public law of crimes, of officers, of the priesthood, and of the status of persons. 2. The right, title, or dominion of public ownership; esp., the government's right to own real property in trust for the public benefit. See PUBLIC LAW. Cf. JUS PRIVATUM.

jus quaesitum (jəs kwi-si-təm or -zi-təm), n. [Latin] Civil law. 1. A right to ask or recover, as from one who is under an obligation. 2. An acquired right.

jus quiritium (jəs kwi-ri-shee-əm), n. [Latin] Roman law. The ancient, primitive law of the Romans before the development of the jus praetorium and the jus gentium.

jus recuperandi (jəs ri-k[y]oo-pə-ran-dī), n. [Latin] Civil law. The right of recovering, esp. lands.

jus regendi (jəs ri-jen-dī), n. [Law Latin] A proprietary right vested in a sovereign.

jus relictæ (jəs ri-lik-tee), n. [Law Latin "right of a widow"] Civil & Scots law. A widow's claim to her share of her deceased husband's movable estate. • If the widow has children, her share is one-third; if not, her share is one-half.

jus relicti (jəs ri-lik-tī), n. [Law Latin "right of a widower"] Civil & Scots law. A widower's right in his deceased wife's separate movable estate, historically two-thirds if there were surviving children, and otherwise one-half. Under the Married Women's Property Act of 1881, the amount became one-third in the case of surviving children, and otherwise one-half.

jus repræsentationis (jəs rep-ri-zen-tay-shee-oh-nis), n. [Latin] Civil law. The right to represent or be represented by another.

jus rerum (jəs reer-əm), n. [Latin "law of things"] Civil law. The law regulating the rights and powers of persons over things, as how property is acquired, enjoyed, and transferred. See LAW OF THINGS. Cf. JUS PERSONARUM.

jus respondendi (jəs ree-spon-den-dī), n. [Latin "the right of responding"] Roman law. The authority conferred on certain jurists of delivering legal opinions that became binding law.

jus retentionis (jəs ri-ten-shee-oh-nis), n. [Latin] Civil law. The right of retaining something.

jus retractus (jəs ri-trak-təs), n. [Latin “the right of retraction”] Civil law. 1. The right of certain relatives of one who has sold immovable property to repurchase it. 2. A debtor’s right, upon sale of the debt by the creditor, to have a third person redeem it within a year for the price paid by the purchaser.

jus sacrum (jəs say-krəm), n. [Latin “sacred law”] Roman law. The body of law regulating matters of public worship, such as sacrifices and the appointment of priests. Cf. JUS NON SACRUM.

jus sanguinis (jəs sang-gwə-nis), n. [Latin “right of blood”] The rule that a child’s citizenship is determined by the parents’ citizenship. • Most nations follow this rule. Cf. JUS SOLI.

jus scriptum (jəs skrip-təm). [Latin] See WRITTEN LAW.

jus singulare (jəs sing-gyə-lair-ee), n. [Latin “individual law”] Roman & civil law. A law or right established for special purposes, as opposed to the common or public law or right. Cf. JUS COMMUNE (1).

jus soli (jəs soh-li), n. [Latin “right of the soil”] The rule that a child’s citizenship is determined by place of birth. • This is the U.S. rule, as affirmed by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. Cf. JUS SANGUINIS.

jus spatiandi (jəs spay-shee-an-dī), n. [Latin “right of walking about”] Civil law. The public’s right-of-way over specific land for purposes of recreation and instruction.

jus stapulae (jəs stay-pyə-lee), n. [Law Latin “right of staple”] Civil law. A town’s right or privilege of stopping imported merchandise and forcing it to be offered for sale in its own market. See STAPLE.

jus strictum (jəs strik-təm), n. [Latin “strict law”] Roman law. Law rigorously interpreted without modification. — Also termed strictum jus. See STRICTI JURIS. Cf. JUS AEQUUM.

jus suffragii (jəs sə-fray-jee-i), n. [Latin] Roman law. The right of a citizen to vote. Cf. JUS HONORUM.

just, adj. Legally right; lawful; equitable.

justa causa (jəs-tə kaw-zə), n. [Latin] Civil law. A just cause; a lawful ground. See good cause under CAUSE (2).

justae nuptiae (jəs-tee nəp-shee-ee), n. [Latin “legal marriage”] Roman law. A marriage between two persons who had the legal capacity to wed. • Justae nuptiae was the only union that created the familial relationship known as patria potestas. — Also spelled iustae nuptiae. See patria potestas under POTESTAS. Cf. CONCUBINATUS.

jus talionis. See LEX TALIONIS.

just-as-probable rule. Workers’ compensation. A doctrine whereby a workers’-compensation claim will be denied if it is equally likely that the injury resulted from a non-work-related cause as from a work-related cause.

just cause. See good cause under CAUSE (2).

just compensation. See COMPENSATION.

just deserts (di-zərts). What one really deserves; esp., the punishment that a person deserves for having committed a crime. — Also termed deserts.

jus tertii (jəs tər-shee-i), n. [Latin] 1. The right of a third party.

“[N]o defendant in an action of trespass can plead the jus tertii — the right of possession outstanding in some third person — as against the fact of possession in the plaintiff.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 46 (17th ed. 1977).

2. The doctrine that, particularly in constitutional law, courts do not decide what they do not need to decide.

“Jus tertii . . . says nothing about the nature of legal argument on the merits of a case once formed, but as a symbol for the separability of cases is a useful term of art. Translated, however, it reads ‘right of a third person.’ It may once have been associated with a presumption of common-law jurisprudence that one cannot be harmed by an action that achieves its effect through effects upon others, cannot be 'indirectly' harmed." Joseph Vining, Legal Identity 120 (1978).

justice. 1. The fair and proper administration of laws.

commutative justice (kə-myoo-tə-tiv or kom-yə-tay-tiv). Justice concerned with the relations between persons and esp. with fairness in the exchange of goods and the fulfillment of contractual obligations.

distributive justice. Justice owed by a community to its members, including the fair disbursement of common advantages and sharing of common burdens.

Jedburgh justice (jed-bər-ə). A brand of justice involving punishment (esp. execution) first and trial afterwards. • The term alludes to Jedburgh, a Scottish border town where in the 17th century raiders were said to have been hanged without the formality of a trial. Jedburgh justice differs from lynch law in that the former was administered by an established court (albeit after the fact). — Also termed Jeddart justice; Jedwood justice. Cf. LIDFORD LAW; LYNCH LAW.

justice in personam. See personal justice.

justice in rem. See social justice.

natural justice. Justice as defined in a moral, as opposed to a legal, sense. — Also termed justitia naturalis. Cf. NATURAL LAW.

personal justice. Justice between parties to a dispute, regardless of any larger principles that might be involved. — Also termed justice in personam.

popular justice. Demotic justice, which is usu. considered less than fully fair and proper even though it satisfies prevailing public opinion in a particular case. Cf. social justice.

"Nothing is more treacherous than popular justice in many of its manifestations, subject as it is to passion, to fallacy, and to the inability to grasp general notions or to distinguish the essential from the inessential." Carleton K. Allen, Law in the Making 387 (7th ed. 1964).

positive justice. Justice as it is conceived, recognized, and incompletely expressed by the civil law or some other form of human law. Cf. POSITIVE LAW.

social justice. Justice that conforms to a moral principle, such as that all people are equal. — Also termed justice in rem. Cf. personal justice.

substantial justice. Justice fairly administered according to rules of substantive law, regardless of any procedural errors not affecting the litigant's substantive rights; a fair trial on the merits.

2. A judge, esp. of an appellate court or a court of last resort. — Abbr. J. (and, in plural, JJ.).

associate justice. An appellate-court justice other than the chief justice.

chief justice. The presiding justice of an appellate court, usu. the highest appellate court in a jurisdiction and esp. the U.S. Supreme Court. — Abbr. C.J.

circuit justice. 1. A justice who sits on a circuit court. 2. A U.S. Supreme Court justice who has jurisdiction over one or more of the federal circuits, with power to issue injunctions, grant bail, or stay execution in those circuits.

circuit-riding justice. Hist. A U.S. Supreme Court justice who, under the Judiciary Act of 1789, was required to travel within a circuit to preside over trials. • In each of three circuits that then existed, two justices sat with one district judge. See CIRCUIT-RIDING.

3. Hist. Judicial cognizance of causes or offenses; jurisdiction.

high justice. Hist. Jurisdiction over crimes of every kind, including high crimes.

justiciability (jə-stish-ee-ə-bil-ə-tee), n. The quality or state of being appropriate or suitable for review by a court. See MOOTNESS DOCTRINE; RIPENESS. Cf. STANDING.

"Concepts of justiciability have been developed to identify appropriate occasions for judicial action. . . . The central concepts often are elaborated into more specific categories of justiciability — advisory opinions, feigned and collusive cases, standing, ripeness, mootness, political questions, and administrative questions." 13 Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3529, at 278–79 (2d ed. 1984).

justiciable (jə-stish-ee-ə-bəl or jəs-tish-ə-bəl), adj. (Of a case or dispute) properly brought before a court of justice; capable of being disposed of judicially .

justicia errante. See JUSTICE IN EYRE.

justiciar (jə-stish-ee-ər), n. 1. Hist. A royal judicial officer in medieval England; esp., a justice presiding over a superior court. 2. JUSTICIARY (2). — Also spelled justicier.

justiciarii itinerantes (jəs-tish-ee-air-ee-I I-tin-ə-ran-teez), n. [Latin "itinerant justices"] Justices in eyre. See JUSTICE IN EYRE.

justiciarii residentes (jəs-tish-ee-air-ee-I rez-i-den-teez), n. [Latin "resident justices"] Hist. Justices who usu. held court in Westminster, as opposed to traveling with the eyre. Cf. EYRE.

justiciar in itinere. See JUSTICE IN EYRE.

justiciary (jə-stish-ee-er-ee), adj. Of or relating to the administration of justice; pertaining to the law.

justiciary (jə-stish-ee-er-ee), n. 1. A justice or judge. 2. Hist. The chief administrator of both government and justice. • From the time of the Norman Conquest in 1066 until the reign of Henry III (1216–1272), the justiciary presided in the King's Court and in the Exchequer, supervising all governmental departments and serving as regent in the king's absence. These functions were later divided among several officials such as the lord chancellor, the chief justice, and the lord high treasurer. — Also termed justiciar; chief justiciar; capitalis justiciarius. 3. Scots law. The administration of justice, esp. of criminal law.

justicier. See JUSTICIAR.

justicies (jə-stish-ee-eez). Hist. A writ empowering the sheriff to allow certain debt cases in a county court. • The writ was so called because of the significant word in the writ's opening clause, which stated in Latin, "We command you that you do justice to [a person named]."

justicing room. Hist. A room in which cases are heard and justice is administered; esp., such a room in the house of a justice of the peace.

justifiable, adj. Capable of being legally or morally justified; excusable; defensible.

justifiable homicide. See HOMICIDE.

justification, n. 1. A lawful or sufficient reason for one's acts or omissions. 2. A showing, in court, of a sufficient reason why a defendant did what the plaintiff or prosecution charges the defendant to answer for. — Also termed justification defense; necessity defense. 3. A surety's proof of having enough money or credit to provide security for the party for whom it is required. — justify, vb. — justificatory (jəs-ti-fi-kə-tor-ee), adj.

"A little bit of history: the term 'justification' was formerly used for cases where the aim of the law was not frustrated, while 'excuse' was used for cases where it was not thought proper to punish. Killing a dangerous criminal who had tried to avoid arrest was justified, since the law (if one may personify) wished this to happen, whereas killing in self-defence was merely excused. The distinction was important because justification was a defence to the criminal charge while an excuse was not, being merely the occasion for a royal pardon. By the end of the middle ages (it is difficult to assign a fixed date) even excuses were recognised by the courts, since when there has been no reason to distinguish between justification imperfect justification. A reason or cause that is insufficient to completely justify a defendant's behavior but that can be used to mitigate criminal punishment.

justification defense. Criminal & tort law. A defense that arises when the defendant has acted in a way that the law does not seek to prevent. • Traditionally, the following defenses were justifications: consent, self-defense, defense of others, defense of property, necessity (choice of evils), the use of force to make an arrest, and the use of force by public authority. — Sometimes shortened to justification. Cf. EXCUSE (2).

justificator (jæs-tə-fi-kay-tər). Hist. 1. A compurgator who testifies under oath in defense of an accused person. 2. A juror.

Justinian Code (jæs-tin-ee-ən). Roman law. A collection of imperial constitutions drawn up by a commission of ten persons appointed by Justinian, and published in A.D. 529. • The Code replaced all prior imperial law, but was in force only until A.D. 534, when it was supplanted by the Codex Repetitæ Prælectionis. — Also termed Justinianean Code (jæs-tin-ee-an-ee-ən); Code of Justinian; Codex Justinianus (koh-deks-jæs-tin-ee-ay-n(ee)əs); Codex Vetus ("Old Code").

kindred, n. 1. One's relatives; KIN (1). 2. Family relationship; KINSHIP.

King. English law. The British government; the Crown.

“In modern times it has become usual to speak of the Crown rather than of the King, when we refer to the King in his public capacity as a body politic. We speak of the property of the Crown, when we mean the property which the King holds in right of his Crown. So we speak of the debts due by the Crown, of legal proceedings by and against the Crown, and so on. The usage is one of great convenience, because it avoids a difficulty which is inherent in all speech and thought concerning corporations sole, the difficulty, namely, of distinguishing adequately between the body politic and the human being by whom it is represented and whose name it bears.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 341–42 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

King's advocate. See LORD ADVOCATE.

King's Bench. Historically, the highest common-law court in England, so called during the reign of a king. • In 1873, the court's jurisdiction was transferred to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. — Abbr. K.B. — Also termed Court of King's Bench; Coram Rege Court. Cf. QUEEN'S BENCH; QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

“The court of King's Bench is the highest court of ordinary justice in criminal cases within the realm, and paramount to the authority of justices of gaol delivery, and commissions of oyer and terminer. It has jurisdiction over all criminal causes, from high treason down to the most trivial misdemeanor or breach of the peace.” 1 Joseph Chitty, A Practical Treatise on the Criminal Law 156 (2d ed. 1826).

King's Chambers. In the United Kingdom, waters lying within an imaginary line drawn from headland to headland around the coast of Great Britain.

King's Counsel. In the United Kingdom, Canada, and territories that have retained the rank, an elite, senior-level barrister or advocate appointed to serve as counsel to the king. — Also termed senior counsel. — Abbr. K.C. Cf. QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

King's Court. See CURIA REGIS.

King's evidence. See Queen's evidence under EVIDENCE.

King's Great Sessions in Wales. See COURT OF GREAT SESSIONS IN WALES.

King's peace. Hist. A royal subject's right to be free from crime (to "have peace") in certain areas subject to the king's immediate control, such as the king's palace or highway. • A breach of the peace in one of these areas subjected the offender to punishment in the king's court. Over time, the area subject to the king's peace grew, which in turn increased the jurisdiction of the royal courts. — Also written King's Peace. Cf. AGAINST THE PEACE AND DIGNITY OF THE STATE.

"A breach of the King's Peace was at one time the most comprehensive of all offences against the Crown; it indeed included, and still includes, all the more serious crimes. At one time, in fact, every indictment charged the accused with an offence 'against the peace of our Sovereign Lord the King'; and, though this form is no longer employed, that is mainly because the imperative duty of not disturbing the King's Peace has by now evolved into an elaborate system of Criminal Law." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 134 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

King's proctor. See QUEEN'S PROCTOR.

King's silver. Hist. Money paid in the Court of Common Pleas for a license to levy a feudal fine; an amount due on granting a congé d'accorder in levying a fine of lands. • It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land. — Also termed post-fine. See CONGÉ D'ACCORDER; FINE (1).

kinship. Relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption. — Also termed kindred.

kintal. See QUINTAL.

kissing the Book. Hist. The practice of touching one's lips to a copy of the Bible (esp. the New Testament) after taking an oath in court.

• This practice — formerly used in England — was replaced by the practice of placing one's hand on the Bible while swearing.

kitchen cabinet. See CABINET.

kiting. See CHECK-KITING.

Klaxon doctrine (klak-sən). Conflict of laws.

The principle that a federal court exercising diversity jurisdiction must apply the choice-of-law rules of the state where the court sits. • In Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., the Supreme Court extended the rule of Erie v. Tompkins to choice-of-law issues. 313 U.S. 487, 61 S.Ct. 1020 (1941). — Also termed Erie/Klaxon doctrine. See ERIE DOCTRINE.

kleptomania (klep-tə-may-nee-ə), n. A compulsive urge to steal, esp. without economic motive. — kleptomaniac, n. & adj.

knight. 1. Hist. In the Middle Ages, a person of noble birth who, having been trained in arms and chivalry, was bound to follow an earl, baron, or other superior lord into battle. 2. In modern Britain, a man upon whom the monarch has bestowed an honorary dignity (kighthood) as a reward for personal merit of some kind. • The status of knighthood no longer relates to birth or possessions and does not involve military service.

knight bachelor. See BACHELOR (3).

knight service. Hist. A type of tenure in which a knight held land of another person or the Crown in exchange for a pledge of military service. — Also termed knight's service. Cf. BASE SERVICE; SOGAGE; YILLEINAGE.

"By far the greater part of England is held of the king by knight's service (per servitium militare): it is comparatively rare for the king's tenants in chief to hold by any of the other tenures. In order to understand this tenure we must form the conception of a unit of military service. That unit seems to be the service of one knight or fully armed horseman (servitium unius militis) to be done to the king in his army for forty days in the year, if it be called for." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 254 (2d ed. 1898).

knight's fee. Hist. The amount of land that gave rise to the obligation of knight service. • The amount varied from less than a hide to more than six hides. See HIDE.

knight's service. See KNIGHT SERVICE.

knock-and-announce rule. Criminal procedure. The requirement that the police knock at the door and announce their identity, authority, and purpose before entering a residence to execute an arrest or search warrant.

knock-for-knock agreement. An arrangement between insurers whereby each will pay the claim of its insured without claiming against the other party's insurance.

knockoff, n. An unauthorized copy or imitation of another's product, usu. for sale at a substantially lower price than the original.

knock off, vb. 1. To make an unauthorized copy of (another's product), usu. for sale at a substantially lower price than the original <the infringer knocked off popular dress designs>. 2. Slang. To murder <the gang leader was knocked off by one of his lieutenants>. 3. Slang. To rob or burglarize <the thieves knocked off the jewelry store in broad daylight>.

know all men by these presents. Take note. • This archaic form of address — a loan translation of the Latin noverint universi per praesentes — was traditionally used to begin certain legal documents such as bonds and powers of attorney, but in modern drafting style the phrase is generally considered deadwood. See NOVERINT UNIVERSI PER PRAESENTES. Cf. PATEAT UNIVERSIS PER PRAESENTES.

know-how. The information, practical knowledge, techniques, and skill required to achieve some practical end, esp. in industry or technology. • Know-how is considered intangible property in which rights may be bought and sold. See TRADE SECRET.

knowing, adj. 1. Having or showing awareness or understanding; well-informed . 2. Deliberate; conscious . — knowingly, adv.

knowledge. 1. An awareness or understanding of a fact or circumstance. Cf. INTENT (1); NOTICE; SCIENTER.

"It is necessary . . . to distinguish between producing a result intentionally and producing it knowingly. Intention and knowledge commonly go together, for he who intends a result usually knows that it will follow, and he who knows the consequences of his act usually intends them. But there may be intention without knowledge, the consequence being desired but not foreknown as certain or even probable. Conversely, there may be knowledge without intention, the consequence being foreknown as the inevitable concomitant of that which is desired, but being itself an object of repugnance rather than desire, and therefore not intended. When King David ordered Uriah the Hittite to be set in the forefront of the hottest battle, he intended the death of Uriah only, yet he knew for a certainty that many others of his men would fall at the same time and place." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 380-81 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"'Knowingly' or 'knowledge' has a broad sweep when used in connection with the element of a crime, and an untrue representation has been 'knowingly' made if by one who knows it is untrue, believes it is untrue or is quite aware that he has not the slightest notion whether it is true or not." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 379 (3d ed. 1982).

"[B]ecause there are several areas of the criminal law in which there may be good reason for distinguishing between one's objectives and [one's] knowledge, the modern approach is to define separately the mental states of knowledge and intent This is the approach taken in the Model Penal Code [§ 2.02(2)(a) & (b)]." Wayne R. LaFare & Austin W. Scott, Jr., Criminal Law 218 (2d ed. 1986).

actual knowledge. 1. Direct and clear knowledge, as distinguished from constructive knowledge <the employer, having witnessed the accident, had actual knowledge of the worker's injury>. — Also termed express actual knowledge. 2. Knowledge of such information as would lead a reasonable person to inquire further <under the discovery rule, the limitations period begins to run once the plaintiff has actual knowledge of the injury>. — Also termed (in sense 2) implied actual knowledge.

"The third issue in section 523(a)(3) is the meaning of 'notice or actual knowledge.' Under the Uniform Commercial Code knowledge means actually knowing something; notice means having received information from which one could infer the existence of the relevant fact. What the adjective 'actual' adds to the idea of 'knowledge' is unclear." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 7-27, at 516 (1993).

common knowledge. See COMMON KNOWLEDGE.

constructive knowledge. Knowledge that one using reasonable care or diligence should have, and therefore that is attributed by law to a given person <the court held that the partners had constructive knowledge of the partnership agreement even though none of them had read it>.

express actual knowledge. See actual knowledge (1).

firsthand knowledge. See personal knowledge.

implied actual knowledge. See actual knowledge (2).

imputed knowledge. Knowledge attributed to a given person, esp. because of the person's legal responsibility for another's conduct <the principal's imputed knowledge of its agent's dealings>.

personal knowledge. Knowledge gained through firsthand observation or experience, as distinguished from a belief based on what someone else has said. • Rule 602 of the Federal Rules of Evidence requires lay witnesses to have personal knowledge of the matters they testify about. An affidavit must also be based on personal knowledge, unless the affiant makes clear that a statement relies on "information and belief." — Also termed firsthand knowledge.

reckless knowledge. A defendant's belief that there is a risk that a prohibited circumstance exists, regardless of which the defendant goes on to take the risk.

scientific knowledge. Evidence. Knowledge that is grounded on scientific methods that have been supported by adequate validation. • Four primary factors are used to determine whether evidence amounts to scientific knowledge: (1) whether it has been tested; (2) whether it has been subject to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error; and (4) the degree of acceptance within the scientific community. See DAUBERT TEST; SCIENTIFIC METHOD.

superior knowledge. Knowledge greater than that had by another person, esp. so as to adversely affect that person <in its fraud claim, the subcontractor alleged that the general contractor had superior knowledge of the equipment shortage>.

2. Archaic. CARNAL KNOWLEDGE.

knowledge-of-falsity exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

known creditor. See CREDITOR.

known heir. See HEIR.

known-loss doctrine. Insurance. A principle denying insurance coverage when the insured knows before the policy takes effect that a specific loss has already happened or is substantially certain to happen. — Also termed known-risk doctrine.

koop (kohp), n. [Dutch] Dutch law. Purchase; bargain.

koopbrief (kohp-breef). [Dutch] Dutch law. A deed of sale.

L

L. abbr. 1. LAW (5). 2. LORD (1). 3. LOCUS. 4. LATIN.

label, n. 1. An informative logo, title, or similar marking affixed to a manufactured product. 2. Any writing (such as a codicil) attached to a larger writing. 3. A narrow slip of paper or parchment attached to a deed or writ in order to hold a seal.

label-and-significant-characteristics test. Securities. The rule that an instrument will be governed by the securities laws if it is labeled a stock and has the significant characteristics typically associated with shares of stock.

labeling. Under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, any label or other written, printed, or graphic matter that is on a product or its container, or that accompanies the product. ● To come within the Act, the labeling does not need to accompany the product. It may be sent before or after delivery of the product, as long as delivery of the product and the written material are part of the same distribution program.

labina (lə-bī-nə), n. Archaic. Land covered by water; swampland.

la bomba (lə bom-bə). (sometimes cap.) An incendiary device consisting of a plastic bag filled with fuel and placed inside a paper bag stuffed with tissue and rigged with a fuse. ● A person who uses such a device to start a fire violates the federal arson statute. 18 USCA § 844(j).

labor, n. 1. Work of any type, including mental exertion <the fruits of one's labor>. ● The term usu. refers to work for wages as opposed to profits. 2. Workers considered as an economic unit or a political element . 3. A Spanish land measure equal to 177 ¹/₇ acres. ● This measure has been used in Mexico and was once used in Texas.

labor, vb. 1. To work, esp. with great exertion <David labored long and hard to finish the brief on time>. 2. Archaic. To tamper with or improperly attempt to influence (a jury). ● This sense derives from the idea that the tamperer "endeavors" to influence the jury's verdict. See EMBRACERY. — laborer, n.

labor agreement. An agreement between an employer and a union governing working conditions, wages, benefits, and grievances. — Also termed labor contract; union contract.

laborarius (lay-bə-rair-ee-is), n. [Latin "about laborers"] Hist. An ancient writ against a person who had no other means of support but refused to work throughout the year.

laboratory conditions. Labor law. The ideal conditions for a union election, in which the employees may exercise free choice without interference from the employer, the union, or anyone else.

labor contract. See LABOR AGREEMENT.

labor dispute. A controversy between an employer and its employees concerning the terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of those who negotiate or seek to negotiate the terms or conditions of employment.

Labor Disputes Act. See NORRIS-LAGUARDIA ACT.

laborer's lien. See mechanic's lien under LIEN.

laboring a jury. See EMBRACERY.

labor-management relations. The broad spectrum of activities concerning the relationship between employers and employees, both union and nonunion. See FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT; NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT; NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

Labor-Management Relations Act. A federal statute, enacted in 1947, that regulates certain union activities, permits suits against unions for proscribed acts, prohibits certain strikes and boycotts, and provides steps for settling strikes involving national emergencies. 29 USCA §§ 141 et seq. — Also termed Taft-Hartley Act. See NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

labor organization. See UNION.

labor-relations act. A statute regulating relations between employers and employees. • Although the Labor-Management Relations Act is the chief federal labor-relations act, various states have enacted these statutes as well.

Labor Relations Board. See NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

labor union. See UNION.

lacca. See LACTA.

Lacey Act. A federal law, originally enacted in 1900, that permits states to enforce their own game laws against animals imported from other states or countries. 16 USCA §§ 661 et seq. See GAME LAW.

la chambre des esteilles (lə shahm-brə də zes-tay), n. [French] Hist. The Star Chamber. See STAR CHAMBER, COURT OF.

laches (lach-iz). [Law French “remissness; slackness”] 1. Unreasonable delay or negligence in pursuing a right or claim — almost always an equitable one — in a way that prejudices the party against whom relief is sought.

“Early in its history, Chancery developed the doctrine that where the plaintiff in equity delayed beyond the period of the statute applicable at law, relief would be refused on the ground of laches even though no specific prejudice to the defendant was shown. Today, in most states, there are statutes of limitations applying to suits in equity. Despite these, however, the doctrine still holds that even if the delay is for a shorter period of time than that of the statute, it may still bar equitable relief if it is unreasonable and prejudicial to the defendant.” John F. O’Connell, Remedies in a Nutshell 16 (2d ed. 1985).

2. The equitable doctrine by which a court denies relief to a claimant who has unreasonably delayed or been negligent in asserting the claim, when that delay or negligence has prejudiced the party against whom relief is sought. Cf. LIMITATION (3).

“The doctrine of laches . . . is an instance of the exercise of the reserved power of equity to withhold relief otherwise regularly given where in the particular case the granting of such relief would be unfair or unjust.” William F. Walsh, A Treatise on Equity 472 (1930).

laches, estoppel by. See estoppel by laches under ESTOPPEL.

Lackey claim. A prisoner’s assertion that incarceration on death row for a protracted period is cruel and unusual punishment. Lackey v. Texas, 514 U.S. 1045, 115 S.Ct. 1421 (1995) (denying cert.).

lack of jurisdiction. See WANT OF JURISDICTION.

lack of prosecution. See WANT OF PROSECUTION.

laesae majestatis (lee-zee maj-ə-stay-tis). See LESE MAJESTY.

laesa majestas (lee-zə mə-jes-tas). See LESE MAJESTY.

laesio enormis (lee-shee-oh i-nor-mis), n. [Latin “loss beyond half or great”] Civil law. 1. The sale of a thing for which the buyer paid less than half of its real value. • The seller could rescind the sale, but the buyer could keep the item purchased by paying the full value. 2. The principle by which a seller may rescind a contract if a sale yields less than half the true value of the thing sold. — Also termed lesion.

laesio ultra dimidium vel enormis (lee-shee-oh əl-trə di-mid-ee-əm vel i-nor-mis), n. [Latin] Roman law. The injury sustained by one party to an onerous contract when the over-reaching party receives twice the value of that party’s money or property, such as a purchaser who pays less than half of the value of the property sold, or a seller who receives more than double the property’s value. See adhesion contract under CONTRACT.

laesiuworp (lee-zə-wərp), n. [Saxon fr. laisus “bosom” + werpire “to surrender”] Hist. A thing surrendered to another’s hands or power; a thing given or delivered.

Lamb-Weston rule. Insurance. The doctrine that, when two insurance policies provide coverage for a loss, and each of them contains an other-insurance clause — creating a conflict in the order or apportionment of coverage — both of the other-insurance clauses will be disregarded and liability will be prorated between the insurers. Lamb-Weston, Inc. v. Oregon Auto. Ins. Co., 341 P.2d 110 (Or. 1959).

lame duck. An elected official who is serving out a term after someone else has been elected as a successor.

lame-duck amendment. See TWENTIETH AMENDMENT.

lame-duck session. See SESSION.

lammas land. See LAND.

land, n. 1. An immovable and indestructible three-dimensional area consisting of a portion of the earth's surface, the space above and below the surface, and everything growing on or permanently affixed to it. 2. An estate or interest in real property.

"In its legal significance, 'land' is not restricted to the earth's surface, but extends below and above the surface. Nor is it confined to solids, but may encompass within its bounds such things as gases and liquids. A definition of 'land' along the lines of 'a mass of physical matter occupying space' also is not sufficient, for an owner of land may remove part or all of that physical matter, as by digging up and carrying away the soil, but would nevertheless retain as part of his 'land' the space that remains. Ultimately, as a juristic concept, 'land' is simply an area of three-dimensional space, its position being identified by natural or imaginary points located by reference to the earth's surface. 'Land' is not the fixed contents of that space, although, as we shall see, the owner of that space may well own those fixed contents.

Land is immovable, as distinct from chattels, which are moveable; it is also, in its legal significance, indestructible. The contents of the space may be physically severed, destroyed or consumed, but the space itself, and so the 'land', remains immutable." Peter Butt, Land Law 9 (2d ed. 1988).

accommodation land. Land that is bought by a builder or speculator, who erects houses or improvements on it and then leases it at an increased rent.

arable land (ar-ə-bəl). Land that is fit for cultivation, as distinguished from swamp-land. — Formerly also termed araturia.

bounty land. A portion of public land given or donated as a reward, esp. for military services.

certificate land. Land in the western part of Pennsylvania set apart after the American Revolution to be bought with certificates the soldiers received in lieu of pay.

Crown land. Demesne land of the Crown; esp., in England and Canada, land belonging to the sovereign personally, or to the government, as distinguished from land held under private ownership. — Also termed demesne land of the Crown. See demesne land.

demesne land (di-mayn or di-meen). Hist. Land reserved by a lord for personal use.

donation land. Land granted from the public domain to an individual as a gift, usu. as a reward for services or to encourage settlement in a remote area. • The term was initially used in Pennsylvania to reward Revolutionary War soldiers.

enclosed land. Land that is actually enclosed and surrounded with fences.

fabric land. Hist. Land given toward the maintenance, repair, or rebuilding of a cathedral or other church. • This term derives from funds given ad-fabricam ecclesiae reparandam ("to repair the fabric of the church").

"Fabric-Lands are lands given towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repair of Cathedrals or other churches. . . . In antient time almost every one gave by his Will more or less to the Fabrick of the Cathedral or Parish-Church where he liv'd." Thomas Blount, Nomolexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

fast land. (often pl.) Land that is above the high-water mark and that, when flooded by a government project, is subjected to a governmental taking. • Owners of fast lands are entitled to just compensation for the taking. See TAKING.

indemnity land. See INDEMNITY LAND.

lammas land (lam-əs). Hist. Land over which persons other than the owner have the right of pasturage during winter, from lammas (reaping time) until sowing time.

lieu land (loo). Public land within indemnity limits granted in lieu of those lost within place limits.

life land. Hist. Land leased for a term measured by the life of one or more persons. — Also termed life-hold.

mineral land. Land that contains deposits of valuable minerals in quantities justifying the costs of extraction and using the land for mining, rather than agricultural or other purposes.

place land. See INDEMNITY LAND.

public land. Unappropriated land belonging to the federal or a state government; the general public domain. Cf. INDEMNITY LAND.

school land. Public real estate set apart for sale by a state to establish and fund public schools.

seated land. Land that is occupied, cultivated, improved, reclaimed, farmed, or used as a place of residence, with or without cultivation.

swamp and overflowed land. Land that, because of its boggy, marshy, fenlike character, is unfit for cultivation, requiring drainage or reclamation to render it available for beneficial use. • Such lands were granted out of the U.S. public domain to the littoral states by acts of Congress in 1850 and thereafter. 43 USCA §§ 981 et seq.

tideland. See TIDELAND.

land, law of. See LAW OF THE LAND.

landlord-tenant relationship. The familiar legal relationship existing between the lessor and lessee of real estate. • The relationship is contractual, created by a lease (or agreement for lease) for a term of years, from year to year, for life, or at will, and exists when one person occupies the premises of another with the lessor's permission or consent, subordinated to the lessor's title or rights. There must be a landlord's reversion, a tenant's estate, transfer of possession and control of the premises, and (generally) an express or implied contract. — Also termed landlord-and-tenant relationship. See LEASE.

land manager. Oil & gas. A person who, usu. on behalf of an oil company, contracts with landowners for the mineral rights to their land. — Also termed exploration manager; land agent; landman.

landmark. 1. A feature of land (such as a natural object, or a monument or marker) that demarcates the boundary of the land <according to the 1891 survey, the crooked oak tree is the correct landmark at the property's northeast corner>. 2. A historically significant building or site <the schoolhouse built in 1898 is the county's most famous landmark>. See MONUMENT.

landmark decision. A judicial decision that significantly changes existing law. • Examples are Brown v. Board of Educ., 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686 (1954) (holding that segregation in public schools violates the Equal Protection Clause), and Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R., 162 N.E. 99 (N.Y. 1928) (establishing that a defendant's duty in a negligence action is limited to plaintiffs within the apparent zone of danger — that is, plaintiffs to whom damage could be reasonably foreseen). — Also termed landmark case. Cf. LEADING CASE.

land office. A government office in which sales of public land are recorded.

landowner. One who owns land.

land patent. See PATENT (2).

land-poor, adj. (Of a person) owning a substantial amount of unprofitable or encumbered land, but lacking the money to improve or maintain the land or to pay the charges due on it.

landreeve. Hist. A person charged with (1) overseeing certain parts of a farm or estate, (2) attending to the timber, fences, gates, buildings, private roads, and watercourses, (3) stocking the commons, (4) watching for encroachments of all kinds, (5) preventing and detecting waste and spoliation by tenants and others, and (6) reporting on findings to the manager or land steward.

land revenue. See REVENUE.

Landrum-Griffin Act. A federal law, originally enacted in 1959 as the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, designed to (1) curb corruption in union leadership and undemocratic conduct in internal union affairs, (2) outlaw certain types of secondary boycotts, and (3) prevent so-called hot-cargo provisions in collective-bargaining agreements. See HOT CARGO.

lands, n. pl. 1. At common law, property less extensive than either tenements or hereditaments. 2. By statute in some states, land including tenements and hereditaments. See HEREDITAMENTS; TENEMENTS.

land sales contract. See contract for deed under CONTRACT.

land scrip. A negotiable instrument entitling the holder, usu. a person or company engaged in public service, to possess specified areas of public land.

lands, tenements, and hereditaments. Real property. • The term was traditionally used in wills, deeds, and other instruments.

land tax. See property tax under TAX.

land-tenant. See TERRE-TENANT.

Land Titles and Transfer Act. Hist. An 1875 statute establishing a registry for titles to real property, and providing for the transfer of lands and recording of those transfers. 38 & 39 Vict., ch. 87. • The act is analogous in some respects to American recording laws, such as those providing for a registry of deeds. A system of title registration superseded this registry system in 1925.

land trust. See TRUST.

land trust certificate. An instrument granting the holder a share of the benefits of property ownership, while the trustee retains legal title. See land trust under TRUST.

land-use planning. The deliberate, systematic development of real estate through methods such as zoning, environmental-impact studies, and the like. — Also termed urban planning.

land-use regulation. An ordinance or other legislative enactment intended to govern the development of real estate.

“Public regulation of the use and development of land comes in a variety of forms which generally focus on four aspects of land use: (1) the type of use, such as whether it will be used for agricultural, commercial, industrial, or residential purposes; (2) the density of use, manifested in concerns over the height, width, bulk, or environmental impact of the physical structures on the land; (3) the aesthetic impact of the use, which may include the design and placement of structures on the land; and (4) the effect of the particular use of the land on the cultural and social values of the community, illustrated by community conflicts over adult entertainment, housing for service-dependent groups such as low-income families and developmentally disabled persons, and whether the term family should be defined in land use regulations to include persons who are not related by blood or marriage.” Peter W. Salsich, Jr., Land Use Regulation 1 (1991).

land waiter. English law. A customhouse officer with the responsibility of examining, tasting, weighing, measuring, and accounting for merchandise landing at any port.

land warfare. See WARFARE.

land warrant. See LAND CERTIFICATE.

Langdell system. See CASEBOOK METHOD.

langeman (lan-jə-mən), n. Hist. A lord of a manor. Pl. langemanni (lan-jə-man-i).

language. 1. Any means of conveying or communicating ideas, esp. by human speech, written characters, or sign language <what language did they speak?>. 2. The letter or grammatical import of a document or instrument, as distinguished from its spirit <the language of the statute>.

languidus (lang-gwi-dəs), n. [Law Latin “sick”] Hist. At common law, a return of process made by the sheriff when a defendant whom the sheriff had taken into custody was too sick to be removed.

Lanham Act (lan-əm). A federal trademark statute, enacted in 1946, that provides for a national system of trademark registration and protects the owner of a federally registered mark against the use of similar marks if any confusion might result. • The Lanham Act's scope is independent of and concurrent with state common law. 15 USCA §§ 1051 et seq.

lapidation (lap-ə-day-shən). An execution by stoning a person to death. — lapidate (lap-ə-dayt), vb.

lappage (lap-ij). Interference; lap and overlap; conflict. • Lappage applies when two different owners claim under deeds or grants that, in part, cover the same land.

lapse, n. 1. The termination of a right or privilege because of a failure to exercise it within some time limit or because a contingency has occurred or not occurred. 2. Wills & estates. The failure of a testamentary gift, esp. when the beneficiary dies before the testator dies. See ANTILAPSE STATUTE. Cf. ADEMPITION.

lapse, vb. 1. (Of an estate or right) to pass away or revert to someone else because conditions have not been fulfilled or because a person entitled to possession has failed in some duty. See lapsed policy under INSURANCE POLICY. 2. (Of a devise, grant, etc.) to become void.

lapsed devise. See DEVISE.

lapsed legacy. See LEGACY.

lapsed policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

lapse patent. See PATENT (2).

lapse statute. See ANTILAPSE STATUTE.

larcenable (lahr-sə-nə-bəl), adj. Subject to larceny <because it cannot be carried away, real estate is not larcenable>.

larcenist. One who commits larceny. See LARCENY.

larcenous (lahr-sə-nəs), adj. 1. Of, relating to, or characterized by larceny . 2. (Of a person) contemplating or tainted with larceny; thievish .

larcenous intent. A state of mind existing when a person (1) knowingly takes away the goods of another without any claim or pretense of a right to do so, and (2) intends to deprive the owner of them or to convert the goods to personal use. See LARCENY.

larceny (lahr-sə-nee), n. The unlawful taking and carrying away of someone else's personal property with the intent to deprive the possessor of it permanently. • Common-law larceny has been broadened by some statutes to include embezzlement and false pretenses, all three of which are often subsumed under the statutory crime of "theft."

"[T]he distinctions between larceny, embezzlement and false pretenses serve no useful purpose in the criminal law but are useless handicaps from the standpoint of the administration of criminal justice. One solution has been to combine all three in one section of the code under the name of 'larceny.' This has one disadvantage, however, because it frequently becomes necessary to add a modifier to make clear whether the reference is to common-law larceny or to statutory larceny." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 389 (3d ed. 1982).

aggravated larceny. Larceny accompanied by some aggravating factor (as when the theft is from a person).

complicated larceny. See mixed larceny.

compound larceny. See mixed larceny.

constructive larceny. Larceny in which the perpetrator's felonious intent to appropriate the goods is construed from the defendant's conduct at the time of asportation, although a felonious intent was not present before that time.

grand larceny. Larceny of property worth more than a statutory cutoff amount, usu. $100. Cf. petit larceny.

"The English law, as the result of an early statute [the Statute of Westminster I, ch. 15 (1275)], classified this offense [larceny] as either (1) grand larceny or (2) petit larceny (now frequently written petty larceny), the former being a capital offense and the latter punishable by forfeiture of goods and whipping, but not death. Both, as mentioned earlier, were felonies. The offense was grand larceny if the value of the property stolen exceeded twelve pence and petit larceny if it did not. Modern statutes very generally retain this same classification (sometimes without using these labels) but with different penalties and different values set as the dividing line." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 335 (3d ed. 1982).

larceny by bailee. Larceny committed by a bailee who converts the property to personal use or to the use of a third party.

larceny by extortion. Larceny in which the perpetrator obtains property by threatening to (1) inflict bodily harm on anyone or commit any other criminal offense, (2) accuse anyone of a criminal offense, (3) expose any secret tending to subject any person to hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or impair one's credit or business reputation, (4) take or withhold action as an official, or cause an official to take or withhold action, (5) bring about or continue a strike, boycott, or other collective unofficial action, if the property is not demanded or received for the benefit of the group in whose interest the actor purports to act, (6) testify or provide information or withhold testimony or information with respect to another's legal claim or defense, or (7) inflict any other harm that would not benefit the actor. Model Penal Code § 223.4. See EXTORTION.

larceny by trick. Larceny in which the taker misleads the rightful possessor, by misrepresentation of fact, into giving up possession of (but not title to) the goods. — Also termed larceny by trick and deception; larceny by trick and device; larceny by fraud and deception. Cf. FALSE PRETENSES; cheating by false pretenses under CHEATING.

larceny from the person. Larceny in which the goods are taken directly from the person, but without violence or intimidation, the victim usu. being unaware of the taking. • Pickpocketing is a typical example. This offense is similar to robbery except that violence or intimidation is not involved. Cf. ROBBERY.

larceny of property lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake. Larceny in which one obtains control of property the person knows to be lost, mislaid, or delivered by mistake (esp. in the amount of property or identity of recipient) and fails to take reasonable measures to restore the property to the rightful owner. Model Penal Code § 223.5.

mixed larceny. 1. Larceny accompanied by aggravation or violence to the person. Cf. simple larceny. 2. Larceny involving a taking from a house. — Also termed compound larceny; complicated larceny.

petit larceny. Larceny of property worth less than a statutory cutoff amount, usu. $100. — Also spelled petty larceny. Cf. grand larceny.

simple larceny. Larceny unaccompanied by aggravating factors; larceny of personal goods unattended by an act of violence. Cf. mixed larceny (1).

larger parcel. Eminent domain. A portion of land that is not a complete parcel, but is the greater part of an even bigger tract, entitling the owner both to damages for the parcel taken and for severance from the larger tract. • To grant both kinds of damages, a court generally requires the owner to show unity of ownership, unity of use, and contiguity of the land. But some states and the federal courts do not require contiguity when there is strong evidence of unity of use.

laron (lar-ən), n. [Law French] Hist. A thief.

Larrison rule (lar-ə-sən). Criminal law. The doctrine that a defendant may be entitled to a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence of false testimony by a government witness if the jury might have reached a different conclusion without the evidence and it unfairly surprised the defendant at trial. Larrison v. United States, 24 F.2d 82 (7th Cir. 1928).

"The most usual rule in cases in which it is claimed that there was false testimony at the trial or that the witness has since recanted is the 'Larrison rule,' taking its name from the Seventh Circuit case in which it was announced. This is that three requirements must be met before a new trial will be granted on this ground: (a) [That the] court is reasonably well satisfied that the testimony given by a material witness [was] false. (b) That without it the jury might have reached a different conclusion. (c) That the party seeking the new trial was taken by surprise when the false testimony was given and was unable to meet it for it did not know of its falsity until after the trial.'" 3 Charles Alan Wright, Federal Practice and Procedure § 557.1, at 343 (2d ed. 1982) (quoting Larrison, 24 F.2d at 87-88).

lascivious (lə-siv-ee-əs), adj. (Of conduct) tending to excite lust; lewd; indecent; obscene.

lascivious cohabitation. The offense committed by two persons not married to each other who live together as husband and wife and engage in sexual intercourse. • This offense, where it still exists, is seldom prosecuted.

last, n. Hist. 1. A burden. 2. A measure of weight used for bulky commodities.

last antecedent, rule of the. See RULE OF THE LAST ANTECEDENT.

last-clear-chance doctrine. Torts. The rule that a plaintiff who was contributorily negligent may nonetheless recover from the defendant if the defendant had the last opportunity to prevent the harm but failed to use reasonable care to do so (in other words, if the defendant's negligence is later in time than the plaintiff's). • This doctrine allows the plaintiff to rebut the contributory-negligence defense in the few jurisdictions where contributory negligence completely bars recovery. — Also termed discovered-peril doctrine; humanitarian doctrine; last-opportunity doctrine; subsequent-negligence doctrine; supervening-negligence doctrine.

last-employer rule. The doctrine that liability for an occupational injury or illness falls to the employer who exposed the worker to the injurious substance just before the first onset of the disease or injury. — Also termed last-injurious-exposure rule.

last heir. Hist. The person — either the lord of the manor or the sovereign — to whom lands come by escheat when there is no lawful heir.

last illness. The sickness ending in the person's death. — Also termed last sickness.

last-in, first-out. An accounting method that assumes that the most recent purchases are sold or used first, matching current costs against current revenues. — Abbr. LIFO. Cf. FIRST-IN, FIRST-OUT; NEXT-IN, FIRST-OUT.

last-injurious-exposure rule. See LAST-EMPLOYER RULE.

last-link doctrine. The rule that an attorney need not divulge nonprivileged information if doing so would reveal information protected by the attorney-client privilege, particularly if the information would provide essential evidence to support indicting or convicting the client of a crime. • This doctrine is often relied on as an exception to the rule that a client's identity is not privileged. For example, if divulging the client's name would supply the last link of evidence to indict or convict the client of a crime, the name need not be disclosed.

last-opportunity doctrine. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

last-proximate-act test. Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, based on whether the defendant does the final act necessary to commit an offense (such as pulling the trigger of a gun, not merely aiming it). • This test has been rejected by most courts as too lenient. See ATTEMPT (2).

last resort, court of. See court of last resort under COURT.

last sickness. See LAST ILLNESS.

last-straw doctrine. Employment law. The rule that the termination of employment may be justified by a series of incidents of poor performance, not one of which alone would justify termination, followed by a final incident showing a blatant disregard for the employer's interests.

last-survivor insurance. See INSURANCE.

last-treatment rule. The doctrine that, for an ongoing physician-patient relationship, the statute of limitations on a medical-malpractice claim begins to run when the treatment stops or the relationship ends.

last will. See WILL.

last will and testament. A person's final will. See WILL.

lata culpa. See CULPA.

lata negligentia (lay-tə neg-lə-jen-shee-ə). See NEGLIGENTIA.

latching. A survey of a mine; an underground survey.

late, adj. 1. Tardy; coming after an appointed or expected time . 2. (Of a person) only recently having died <the late Secretary of State>.

latens (lay-tenz), adj. [Latin] Hidden or unapparent.

latent (lay-tənt), adj. Concealed; dormant . Cf. PATENT.

latent ambiguity. See AMBIGUITY.

latent deed. See DEED.

latent defect. See hidden defect under DEFECT.

latent equity. See EQUITY.

latent intent. See dormant legislative intent under LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

latent intention. See dormant legislative intent under LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

lateral departure. See DEPARTURE.

lateral sentencing. See lateral departure under DEPARTURE.

lateral support. See SUPPORT.

laterare (lat-ə-rair-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. To lie sideways, rather than endways. • This term was formerly used in land descriptions.

latifundium (lat-ə-fən-dee-əm), n. [Latin fr. latus "broad" + fundus "land"] Roman law. A large private estate, usu. made up of smaller ones, common in the last few centuries of the Republic.

Latin. The language of the ancient Romans and a primary language of the civil, canon, and (formerly) common law.

"The value of the Latin has always consisted in its peculiar expressiveness as a language of law terms, in its superior conciseness which has made it the appropriate language of law maxims, and in its almost unlimited capacity of condensation by means of abbreviations and contractions, many of which are retained in popular use at the present day." 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 131 (2d ed. 1867).

"The Latin maxims have largely disappeared from arguments and opinions. In their original phraseology they convey no idea that cannot be well expressed in modern English." William C. Anderson, Law Dictionaries, 28 Am. L. Rev. 531, 532 (1894).

latinarius (lat-ə-nair-ee-əs), n. [Latin] Hist. An interpreter of Latin.

latini juniani (lə-ti-ni joo-nee-ay-ni), n. [Latin] Roman law. A class of former slaves who, although they were freed, did not acquire full rights of citizenship. — Also spelled latini iuniani. — Also termed libertini. See LEX JUNIA NORBANA. Cf. INGENUUS; SERVUS.

"Upon all these persons . . . a new and definite status was conferred; they were henceforth to be known as Latini Juniani, their position being based upon Latinitas, a status which had been enjoyed by certain Latin colonists. A Latinus Junianus had no public rights . . . But he had part of the commercium, i.e. he could acquire proprietary and other rights inter vivos, but not mortis causâ. A Latinus Junianus, therefore, could neither take under a will . . . nor could he make one . . . But, subject to these disabilities, a Latinus Junianus was a free man, and his children, though not, like the children of citizens, under his potestas, were free-born citizens." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 68-69 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

latitat (lat-ə-tat), n. [Law Latin "he lurks"] Hist. A writ issued in a personal action after the sheriff returned a bill of Middlesex with the notation that the defendant could not be found. • The writ was called latitat because of its fictitious recital that the defendant lurks about in the county. It was abolished by the Process in Courts of Law at Westminster Act of 1832 (St. 2, Will. 4, ch. 39). See BILL OF MIDDLESEX; TESTATUM.

"Latitat is a writ by which all men in personal actions are originally called in the king's bench to answer. And it is called latitat, because it is supposed by the writ that the defendant cannot be found in the county of Middlesex, as it appears by the return of the sheriff of that county, but that he lurks in another county: and therefore to the sheriff of that county is this writ directed to apprehend him." Termes de la Ley 277 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

latitatio (lat-ə-tay-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. A lurking; a hiding; a concealment, esp. to avoid a trial.

Latium maius (lay-shee-əm may-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. The greater rights conferred on the inhabitants of Latium and, later, colonies outside Italy, including a widespread right of Roman citizenship. — Also spelled Latium majus (may-jəs). — Also termed maius Latium. Cf. LATIUM MINUS.

"Under the Principate there is a distinction between Latium maius and Latium minus. The former referred to the rights granted to colonies founded as a coloniae Latinae outside Italy, combined with the concession of Roman citizenship to a larger group of individuals than Latium minus, in which only the municipal magistrates and members of the municipal council . . . were rewarded with Roman citizenship." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 537-38 (1953).

Latium minus (lay-shee-əm mi-nəs), n. [Latin] Roman law. Certain limited rights conferred on colonies founded outside Italy. — Also termed minus Latium. Cf. LATIUM MAIUS.

lator (lay-tər), n. [Latin "a bearer, proposer"] Civil law. 1. A bearer; a messenger. 2. A maker or giver of laws.

latro (la-troh), n. [Latin] Roman law. A robber; a thief.

latrocination (la-trə-sə-nay-shən). [fr. Latin latrocinium "highway robbery"] Archaic. The act of robbing; a depredation; a theft. — Also termed latrocinium; latrocinium. See LARCENY; THEFT.

latrocinium (la-trə-sin-ee-əm), n. [Latin fr. latro "a robber"] Hist. 1. LATROCINATION. 2. Something stolen. 3. The right to judge and execute thieves.

latrocinium (la-trə-sə-nee). See LATROCINATION.

laudamentum (law-də-men-təm), n. Hist. A jury award.

laudare (law-dair-ee), vb. [Latin] 1. Civil law. To name; to cite or quote as authority. 2. Hist. To determine or pass upon (a case, etc.) judicially.

laudatio (law-day-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. Court testimony concerning an accused person's good behavior and integrity of life. • This testimony resembles the practice in modern criminal trials of calling persons to speak favorably about a defendant's character.

laudator (law-day-tər), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. A character witness in a criminal trial. 2. Hist. An arbitrator. Pl. laudatores (law-də-tor-eez).

laudemium (law-dee-mee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Roman law. A sum paid to a landowner by a person succeeding to a particular form of land contract by gift, devise, exchange, or sale; HERIOT. • The payment equaled 2% of the purchase money, and was paid to the landowner for acceptance of the successor. — Also termed (in old English law) acknowledgment money. See EMPHYTEUSIS.

laudere auctorem (law-deer-ee awk-tor-əm). See NOMINATIO AUCTORIS.

laudum (law-dəm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. An arbitrament. See ARBITRAMENT.

laughe, n. See FRANKPLEDGE.

laughing heir. See HEIR.

launch, n. 1. The movement of a vessel from the land into the water, esp. by sliding along ways from the stocks on which the vessel was built. 2. A large open boat used in any service; LIGHTER.

laundering, n. The federal crime of transferring illegally obtained money through legitimate persons or accounts so that its original source cannot be traced. 18 USCA § 1956. — Also termed money-laundering. — launder, vb.

laundry list. Slang. An enumeration of items, as in a statute or court opinion <Texas's consumer-protection law contains a laundry list of deceptive trade practices>.

laureate (lor-ee-it), n. 1. Hist. An officer of the sovereign's household, who composed odes annually on the sovereign's birthday, on the new year, and occasionally on the occurrence of a remarkable victory. 2. A person honored for great achievement in the arts and sciences, and esp. in poetry.

laus Deo (laws dee-oh or lows day-oh). [Latin] Archaic. Praise be to God. • This was a heading to a bill of exchange.

law. 1. The regime that orders human activities and relations through systematic application of the force of politically organized society, or through social pressure, backed by force, in such a society; the legal system <respect and obey the law>. 2. The aggregate of legislation, judicial precedents, and accepted legal principles; the body of authoritative grounds of judicial and administrative action <the law of the land>. 3. The set of rules or principles dealing with a specific area of a legal system <copyright law>. 4. The judicial and administrative process; legal action and proceedings <when settlement negotiations failed, they submitted their dispute to the law>. 5. A statute <Congress passed a law>. — Abbr. L. 6. COMMON LAW <law but not equity>. 7. The legal profession <she spent her entire career in law>.

"Some twenty years ago I pointed out two ideas running through definitions of law: one an imperative idea, an idea of a rule laid down by the lawmaking organ of a politically organized society, deriving its force from the authority of the sovereign; and the other a rational or ethical idea, an idea of a rule of right and justice deriving its authority from its intrinsic reasonableness or conformity to ideals of right and merely recognized, not made, by the sovereign." Roscoe Pound, "More About the Nature of Law," in Legal Essays in Tribute to Orrin Kip McMurray at 513, 515 (1935).

"All law is the law of a group of individuals or of groups made up of individuals. No one can make a law purely for himself. He may form a resolution, frame an ambition, or adopt a rule, but these are private prescriptions, not laws." Tony Honoré, Making Law Bind: Essays Legal and Philosophical 33 (1987).

"It will help to distinguish three senses of the word 'law.' The first is law as a distinctive social institution; that is the sense invoked when we ask whether primitive law is really law. The second is law as a collection of sets of propositions — the sets we refer to as antitrust law, the law of torts, the Statute of Frauds, and so on. The third is law as a source of rights, duties, and powers, as in the sentence 'The law forbids the murdering heir to inherit.'" Richard A. Posner, The Problems of Jurisprudence 220–21 (1990).

adjective law. See ADJECTIVE LAW.

canon law. See CANON LAW.

caselaw. See CASELAW.

civil law. See CIVIL LAW.

consuetudinary law (kon-swə-t[y]oo-də-ner-ee). [fr. Latin consuetudo "custom"] Hist. Ancient customary law that is based on an oral tradition.

conventional law. See CONVENTIONAL LAW.

customary law. See CUSTOMARY LAW.

divine law. See DIVINE LAW.

enacted law. Law that has its source in legislation; WRITTEN LAW.

federal law. See FEDERAL LAW.

general law. 1. Law that is neither local nor confined in application to particular persons. ● Even if there is only one person or entity to which a given law applies when enacted, it is general law if it purports to apply to all persons or places of a specified class throughout the jurisdiction. — Also termed general statute; law of a general nature. Cf. special law. 2. A statute that relates to a subject of a broad nature.

imperative law. A rule in the form of a command; a rule of action imposed on people by some authority that enforces obedience.

"Strictly speaking, it is not possible to say that imperative law is a command in the ordinary sense of the word. A 'command' in the ordinary meaning of the word is an expression of a wish by a person or body as to the conduct of another person, communicated to that other person. But (1) in the case of the law there is no determinate person who as a matter of psychological fact commands all the law. We are all born into a community in which law already exists, and at no time in our lives do any of us command the whole law. The most that we do is to play our part in enforcing or altering particular portions of it. (2) Ignorance of the law is no excuse; thus a rule of law is binding even though not communicated to the subject of the law." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 21 n.(c) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

internal law. 1. Law that regulates the domestic affairs of a country. Cf. INTERNATIONAL LAW. 2. LOCAL LAW (3).

local law. See LOCAL LAW.

natural law. See NATURAL LAW.

permanent law. A statute that continues in force for an indefinite time.

positive law. See POSITIVE LAW.

procedural law. See PROCEDURAL LAW.

special law. A law that pertains to and affects a particular case, person, place, or thing, as opposed to the general public. — Also termed special act; private law. Cf. general law (1).

state law. See STATE LAW.

sumptuary law. See SUMPTUARY LAW.

tacit law. A law that derives its authority from the people's consent, without a positive enactment.

unenacted law. Law that does not have its source in legislation; UNWRITTEN LAW (1).

law and economics. (often cap.) 1. A discipline advocating the economic analysis of the law, whereby legal rules are subjected to a cost-benefit analysis to determine whether a change from one legal rule to another will increase or decrease allocative efficiency and social wealth. ● Originally developed as an approach to anti-trust policy, law and economics is today used by its proponents to explain and interpret a variety of legal subjects. 2. The field or movement in which scholars devote themselves to this discipline. 3. The body of work produced by these scholars.

law and literature. (often cap.) 1. Traditionally, the study of how lawyers and legal institutions are depicted in literature; esp., the examination of law-related fiction as sociological evidence of how a given culture, at a given time, views law. — Also termed law in literature. 2. More modernly, the application of literary theory to legal texts, focusing esp. on lawyers' rhetoric, logic, and style, as well as legal syntax and semantics. — Also termed law as literature. 3. The field or movement in which scholars devote themselves to this study or application. 4. The body of work produced by these scholars.

law arbitrary. A law not found in the nature of things, but imposed by the legislature's mere will; a bill not immutable.

law as literature. See LAW AND LITERATURE.

law between states. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

lawbook. A book, usu. a technical one, about the law; esp., a primary legal text such as a statute book or book that reports caselaw. — Also spelled law book.

lawbreaker, n. A person who violates or has violated the law.

lawburrows (law-bər-ohz). Scots law. Security guaranteeing the peaceable behavior of a party; security to keep the peace.

law clerk. See CLERK (4).

law commission. (often cap.) An official or quasi-official body of people formed to propose legal reforms intended to improve the administration of justice. • Such a body is often charged with the task of reviewing the law with an eye toward systematic development and reform, esp. through codification.

law court. See COURT (1), (2). — Also spelled law-court.

law court of appeals. Hist. An appellate tribunal, formerly existing in South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

law-craft, n. The practice of law.

“This quest for ever-broader empirical understanding must, of course, be kept under reasonable control in practical law-craft, lest it delay necessary decisions in a continually expanding and pointlessly expensive fact-finding spiral.” Bruce A. Ackerman, Reconstructing American Law 30 (1984).

law day. 1. Archaic. The yearly or twice-yearly meeting of one of the early common-law courts. 2. Archaic. The day appointed for a debtor to discharge a mortgage or else forfeit the property to the lender. 3. (cap.) A day on which American schools, public assemblies, and courts draw attention to the importance of law in modern society. • Since 1958, the ABA has sponsored Law Day on May 1 of each year.

law department. A branch of a corporation, government agency, university, or the like charged with handling the entity's legal affairs.

law enforcement. 1. The detection and punishment of violations of the law. • This term is not limited to the enforcement of criminal laws. For example, the Freedom of Information Act contains an exemption from disclosure for information compiled for law-enforcement purposes and furnished in confidence. That exemption is valid for the enforcement of a variety of noncriminal laws (such as national-security laws) as well as criminal laws. See 5 USCA § 552(b)(7). 2. CRIMINAL JUSTICE (2). 3. Police officers and other members of the executive branch of government charged with carrying out and enforcing the criminal law.

Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. A federal agency (part of the Department of Justice) responsible for administering law-enforcement grants under the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968. — Abbr. LEAA.

Law Enforcement Information Network. A computerized communications system used in some states to document drivers' license records, automobile registrations, wanted persons' files, etc. — Abbr. LEIN.

law-enforcement officer. A person whose duty is to enforce the laws and preserve the peace. See PEACE OFFICER; SHERIFF.

law-enforcement system. See CRIMINAL-JUSTICE SYSTEM.

law firm. An association of lawyers who practice law together, usu. sharing clients and profits, in a business traditionally organized as a partnership but often today as either a professional corporation or a limited-liability company. • Many law firms have a hierarchical structure in which the partners (or shareholders) supervise junior lawyers known as “associates,” who are usu. employed on a track to partnership.

Law French. The corrupted form of the Norman French language that arose in England in the centuries after William the Conqueror invaded England in 1066 and that was used for several centuries as the primary language of the English legal system; the Anglo-French used in medieval England in judicial proceedings, pleadings, and lawbooks. — Also written law French. — Abbr. L.F. See NORMAN FRENCH.

“To the linguist, law French is a corrupt dialect by definition. Anglo-French was in steady decline after 1300. Lawyers such as Fortescue, on the other hand, were probably serious in maintaining that it was the vernacular of France which was deteriorating by comparison with the pristine Norman of the English courts. That Fortescue could make such a claim, while living in France, is in itself a clear demonstration that by the middle of the fifteenth century there was a marked difference between the French of English lawyers and the French of France.” J.H. Baker, A Manual of Law French 11 (1979).

“Law French refers to the Anglo-Norman patois used in legal documents and all judicial proceedings from the 1260s to the reign of Edward III (1327-1377), and used with frequency in legal literature up to the early 18th century. When first introduced into England, this brand of French was the standard language used in Normandy; by the 1300s, through linguistic isolation, it became a corrupted language — by French standards, at any rate.” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 504-05 (2d ed. 1995).

“That Law French was barbarous in its decrepitude does not in the least diminish the value of it to our law when it was full of vitality. It helped to make English law one of the four indigenous systems of the civilized world, for it exactly expressed legal ideas in a technical language which had no precise equivalent.” Percy H. Winfield, The Chief Sources of English Legal History 14 (1925).

lawful, adj. Not contrary to law; permitted by law <the police officer conducted a lawful search of the premises>. See LEGAL.

lawful admission. Immigration. Legal entry into the country, including under a valid immigrant visa. • Lawful admission is one of the requirements for an immigrant to receive a naturalization order and certificate. 8 USCA §§ 1101(a)(20), 1427(a)(1).

lawgiver. 1. A legislator, esp. one who promulgates an entire code of laws. 2. A judge with the power to interpret law. — lawgiving, adj. & n.

“John Chipman Gray in his The Nature and Sources of the Law (1921) repeats a number of times a quotation from Bishop Hoadley [1676–1761]: ‘Whoever hath an *absolute authority to interpret any written or spoken laws, it is he who is truly the Law-giver to all intents and purposes, and not the person who first wrote or spoke them.’” Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 23–24 (1968).*

law-hand. Hist. An outmoded rococo method of handwriting once used by scribes in preparing legal documents.

law in literature. See LAW AND LITERATURE.

Law Latin. A corrupted form of Latin formerly used in law and legal documents, including judicial writs, royal charters, and private deeds. • It primarily consists of a mixture of Latin, French, and English words used in English sentence structures. — Abbr. L.L.; L. Lat. — Also written law Latin.

“LAW LATIN. A technical kind of Latin, in which the pleadings and proceedings of the English courts were enrolled and recorded from a very early period to the reign of George II The principal peculiarities of this language consist first, in its construction, which is adapted so closely to the English idiom as to answer to it sometimes word for word; and, secondly, in the use of numerous words ‘not allowed by grammarians nor having any countenance of Latin,’ but framed from the English by merely adding a Latin termination, as murdrum from murder” 2 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 135 (2d ed. 1867).

“Law Latin, sometimes formerly called ‘dog Latin,’ is the bastardized or debased Latin formerly used in law and legal documents. For the most part, we have escaped its clutches. In 1730, Parliament abolished Law Latin in legal proceedings, but two years later found it necessary to allow Latin phrases that had previously been in common use, such as feri facias, habeas corpus, ne exeat, and nisi prius. As Blackstone would later say, some Latinisms were ‘not . . . capable of an English dress with any degree of seriousness.’ 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries 323 (1768).” Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 505 (2d ed. 1995).

law list. 1. A publication compiling the names and addresses of practicing lawyers and other information of interest to the profession, such as court calendars, lawyers with specialized practices, stenographers, and the like. 2. A legal directory such as Martindale–Hubbell. • Many states and large cities also have law lists or directories. See MARTINDALE-HUBBELL LAW DIRECTORY.

Law Lord. A member of the appellate committee of the House of Lords, consisting of the Lord Chancellor, the salaried Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and any peer who holds or has held high judicial office. — Also written law lord.

lawmaker. See LEGISLATOR.

lawmaking. See LEGISLATION (1).

law martial. See MARTIAL LAW.

law merchant. A system of customary law that developed in Europe during the Middle Ages and regulated the dealings of mariners and merchants in all the commercial countries of the world until the 17th century. • Many of the law merchant's principles came to be incorporated into the common law, which in turn formed the basis of the Uniform Commercial Code. — Also termed commercial law; lex mercatoria.

lawnote. See NOTE (2).

law of a general nature. See general law under LAW.

law of arms. See ARMS, LAW OF.

law of capture. See RULE OF CAPTURE.

law of Citations. See CITATIONS, LAW OF.

law of competence. A law establishing and defining the powers of a government official, including the circumstances under which the official's pronouncements constitute laws. — Also termed power-delegating law. See jural act under ACT (2); JURAL AGENT.

law of evidence. See EVIDENCE (4).

law of marque (mahrk). A rule of reprisal allowing one who has been wronged but cannot obtain justice to take the goods of the wrongdoer found within the wronged person's precinct, in satisfaction of the wrong.

law of nations. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

law of nature. See NATURAL LAW.

law of nature and nations. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

law of persons. The law relating to persons; the law that pertains to the different statuses of persons. • This is also commonly known as the jus personarum, a shortened form of jus quod ad personas pertinet ("the law that pertains to persons"). See JUS PERSONARUM.

law of property. The category of law dealing with proprietary rights in rem. • It is one of the three departments into which civil law is divided. See IN REM. Cf. LAW OF OBLIGATIONS; LAW OF STATUS.

law of shipping. The part of maritime law relating to the building, equipping, registering, owning, inspecting, transporting, and employing of ships, along with the laws applicable to shipmasters, agents, crews, and cargoes; the maritime law relating to ships. — Also termed shipping law. See MARITIME LAW; JONES ACT.

law of status. The category of law dealing with personal or nonproprietary rights, whether in rem or in personam. • It is one of the three departments into which civil law is divided. Cf. LAW OF OBLIGATIONS; LAW OF PROPERTY.

law of the apex. Mining law. The principle that title to a given tract of mineral land, with defined mining rights, goes to the person who locates the surface covering the outcrop or apex.

law of the case. 1. The doctrine holding that a decision rendered in a former appeal of a case is binding in a later appeal. 2. An earlier decision giving rise to the application of this doctrine. Cf. LAW OF THE TRIAL; RES JUDICATA; STARE DECISIS.

law of the circuit. 1. The law as announced and followed by a U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. 2. The rule that one panel of judges on a U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals should not overrule a decision of another panel of judges on the same court. 3. The rule that an opinion of one U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is not binding on another circuit but may be considered persuasive.

law of the flag. Maritime law. The law of the nation whose flag is flown by a particular vessel. • A shipowner who sends a vessel into a foreign port gives notice by the flag to all potential contracting parties of the owner's intent for that law to regulate all contracts made involving the ship or its cargo.

law of the land. 1. The law in effect in a country and applicable to its members, whether the law is statutory, administrative, or case-made. 2. Due process of law. See DUE PROCESS. — Also termed lex terrae; ley de terre.

law of the partnership. The rule that the parties' agreement controls the features of a partnership.

law of the place. Under the Federal Tort Claims Act, the state law applicable to the place where the injury occurred. • Under the Act, the federal government waives its sovereign immunity for specified injuries, including certain wrongful acts or omissions of a government employee causing injury that the United States, if it were a private person, would be liable for under the law of the state where the incident occurred. 28 USCA § 1346(b).

law of the sea. The body of international law governing how nations use and control the sea and its resources. Cf. MARITIME LAW.

law of the staple. Hist. The law administered in the court of the mayor of the staple; the law merchant. See STAPLE.

law of the trial. A legal theory or court ruling that is not objected to and is used or relied on in a trial <neither party objected to the court's jury instruction, so it became the law of the trial>. Cf. LAW OF THE CASE.

law of things. The law pertaining to things; the law that is determined by changes in the nature of things. • This is also commonly known as the jus rerum, a shortened form of jus quod ad res pertinet ("the law that pertains to things"). See JUS RERUM.

law practice. An attorney's professional business, including the relationships that the attorney has with clients and the goodwill associated with those relationships. Cf. PRACTICE OF LAW.

law question. See QUESTION OF LAW.

law reform. The process of, or a movement dedicated to, streamlining, modernizing, or otherwise improving a nation's laws generally or the code governing a particular branch of the law; specif., the investigation and discussion of the law on a topic (e.g., bankruptcy), usu. by a commission or expert committee, with the goal of formulating proposals for change to improve the operation of the law. — Also termed science of legislation; censorial jurisprudence.

law report. See REPORT (3).

law reporter. See REPORT (3).

law review. 1. A journal containing scholarly articles, essays, and other commentary on legal topics by professors, judges, law students, and practitioners. • Law reviews are usu. published at law schools and edited by law students <law reviews are often grossly overburdened with substantive footnotes>. 2. The law-student staff and editorial board of such a journal <she made law review>.

law Salique (sə-leek). See SALIC LAW.

law school. An institution for formal legal education and training. • Graduates who complete the standard program, usu. three years in length, receive a Juris Doctor (or, formerly, a Bachelor of Laws).

accredited law school. A law school approved by the state and the Association of American Law Schools, or by the state and the American Bar Association. • In all states except California, only graduates of an accredited law school may take the bar examination.

Law School Admissions Test. A standardized examination purporting to measure the likelihood of success in law school. • Most American law schools use the results of this examination in admissions decisions. — Abbr. LSAT.

Law Society. A professional organization in England, chartered in 1845, governing the education, practice, and conduct of articulated clerks and solicitors. • A clerk or solicitor must be enrolled with the Law Society to be admitted to the legal profession.

Law Society of Scotland. A professional organization established by statute in 1949, governing the admission, conduct, and practice of solicitors enrolled to practice in Scotland.

Laws of Amalfi (ah-mahl-fee). See AMALPHITAN CODE.

laws of Oléron (oh-lə-ron or aw-lay-ron). The oldest collection of modern maritime laws, thought to be a code existing at Oléron (an island off the coast of France) during the 12th century. • It was introduced into England, with certain additions, in the reign of Richard I (1189–99).

laws of the several states. State statutes and state-court decisions on questions of general law.

laws of war. Int'l law. The body of rules and principles observed by civilized nations for the regulation of matters inherent or incidental to the conduct of a public war, such as the relations of neutrals and belligerents, blockades, captures, prizes, truces and armistices, capitulations, prisoners, and declarations of war and peace. See GENEVA CONVENTION.

laws of Wisby (wiz-bee). A code of maritime customs and decisions adopted on the island of Gothland (in the Baltic Sea), where Wisby was the principal port. • Most scholars believe that this code postdates the laws of Oléron. The code was influential throughout northern Europe. — Also spelled laws of Wisbuy. — Also termed Gothland sea laws.

law spiritual. See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

lawsuit, n. See SUIT.

lawsuit, vb. Archaic. To proceed against (an adversary) in a lawsuit; to sue.

law-talk, n. 1. LEGALESE. 2. Discussion that is heavily laced with lawyers' concerns and legal references.

law-worthy, adj. Hist. Entitled to or deserving the benefit and protection of the law. — Also termed law-worth. See LIBERAM LEGEM AMITERE; LEGALIS HOMO; LIBERA LEX.

law writer. A person who writes on legal subjects, usu. from a technical, nonpopular point of view.

lawyer, n. One who is licensed to practice law. — lawyerly, lawyerlike, adj. — lawyerdom, n. Cf. ATTORNEY; COUNSEL.

certified military lawyer. A person qualified to act as counsel in a general court-martial. • To be qualified, the person must be (1) a judge advocate of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps, or a law specialist of the Coast Guard, (2) a graduate of an accredited law school, or a member of a federal-court bar or the bar of the highest court of a state, and (3) certified as competent to perform such duties by the Judge Advocate General of the armed force that the person is a member of.

criminal lawyer. A lawyer whose primary work is to represent criminal defendants. • This term is rarely if ever applied to prosecutors despite their integral involvement in the criminal-justice system.

headnote lawyer. Slang. A lawyer who relies on the headnotes of judicial opinions rather than taking the time to read the opinions themselves.

jailhouse lawyer. See JAILHOUSE LAWYER.

transactional lawyer. A lawyer who works primarily on transactions such as licensing agreements, mergers, acquisitions, joint ventures, and the like.

lawyer, vb. 1. To practice as a lawyer <Mike spends his days and nights lawyering, with little time for recreation>. 2. To supply with lawyers <the large law-school class will certainly help lawyer the state>. — lawyering, n.

lawyer-client privilege. See attorney-client privilege under PRIVILEGE (3).

lawyer-witness rule. The principle that an attorney who will likely be called as a fact witness at trial may not participate as an advocate in the case, unless the testimony will be about an uncontested matter or the amount of attorney's fees in the case, or if disqualifying the attorney would create a substantial hardship for the client. • The rule permits an attorney actively participating in the case to be a witness on merely formal matters but discourages testimony on other matters on behalf of a client. Model Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 3.7 (1987). — Also termed advocate-witness rule; attorney-witness rule.

lay, adj. 1. Not ecclesiastical; nonclerical. 2. Not expert, esp. with reference to law or medicine; nonprofessional.

lay, n. Maritime law. A share of the profits of a fishing or whaling trip, akin to wages, allotted to the officers and seamen.

lay, vb. To allege or assert.

"The Laying of Damages. — At common law the declaration must 'lay damages.'" Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 209 (2d ed. 1899).

layaway. An agreement between a retail seller and a consumer to hold goods for future sale. • The seller sets the goods aside and agrees to sell them to the consumer at an agreed price in the future. The consumer deposits with the seller some portion of the price of the goods, and may agree to other conditions with the seller, such as progress payments. The consumer receives the goods once the full purchase price has been paid.

lay corporation. See CORPORATION.

lay damages, vb. To allege damages, esp. in the complaint. See AD DAMNUM CLAUSE.

lay day. See DAY.

lay fee. See FEE (2).

lay impropriator (im-proh-pree-ay-ter). Eccles. law. A layperson holding a spiritual appropriation.

laying a foundation. Evidence. Introducing evidence of certain facts needed to render later evidence relevant, material, or competent. ● For example, propounding a hypothetical question to an expert is necessary before the expert may render an opinion.

laying of the venue. A statement in a complaint naming the district or county in which the plaintiff proposes that any trial of the matter should occur. See VENUE.

lay investiture. Eccles. law. The ceremony of placing a bishop in possession of lands, money revenues, and other diocesan temporalities.

lay judge. See JUDGE.

layman. 1. A person who is not a member of the clergy. 2. A person who is not a member of a profession or an expert on a particular subject. — Also termed layperson.

layoff. The termination of employment at the employer's instigation; esp., the termination — either temporary or permanent — of a large number of employees in a short time. — lay off, vb.

mass layoff. Labor law. Under the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act, a reduction in force that results in the loss of work at a single site, of 30 days or more, for at least 500 full-time employees, or 50 or more full-time employees if they make up at least 33 percent of the employees at that site. 29 USCA § 2101(a)(3). See WORKER ADJUSTMENT AND RETRAINING NOTIFICATION ACT.

layoff bet. See BET.

layoff bettor. A bookmaker who accepts layoff bets from other bookmakers. See layoff bet under BET.

lay opinion testimony. See TESTIMONY.

layperson. 1. See LAYMAN. 2. Hist. See JUROR.

lay system. Maritime law. A system in which a fishing vessel's catch is sold at auction, and then the proceeds are provided first to the provider of supplies and then to the master and crew.

lay tenure. See TENURE.

laytime. The period permitted for the unloading of a chartered vessel. ● If more time is used to unload the vessel, the vessel's owner is entitled to compensation for the delay.

lay witness. See WITNESS.

LBO. See leveraged buyout under BUYOUT.

LC. abbr. 1. LETTER OF CREDIT. 2. LETTER OF CREDENCE. — Also written L/C.

L-Claim proceeding. Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, a hearing that is connected with a criminal proceeding, and that is intended to ensure that property ordered to be forfeited belongs to the defendant. ● A petition for an L-Claim proceeding is filed by someone other than the defendant who claims an interest in property that has been ordered to be forfeited. The proceeding's purpose is not to divide the defendant's estate among competing claimants, and general creditors of the defendant should not be allowed to maintain an L-Claim petition. To succeed, an L-Claim petitioner must be able to show an interest in a specific asset that has been ordered forfeited. The proceeding is referred to as an L-Claim proceeding because its legal basis is subsection 1 of RICO's penalty provision. 18 USCA § 1963(l)(2).

LEAA. abbr. LAW ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE ADMINISTRATION.

leaching (leech-ing). The process by which moving fluid separates the soluble components of a material. ● Under CERCLA, leaching is considered a release of contaminants. The term is sometimes used to describe the migration of contaminating materials, by rain or groundwater, from a fixed source, such as a landfill. 42 USCA § 9601(22).

lead counsel. See COUNSEL.

leading case. 1. A judicial decision that first definitively settled an important legal rule or principle and that has since been often and consistently followed. • An example is Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602 (1966) (creating the exclusionary rule for evidence improperly obtained from a suspect being interrogated while in police custody). Cf. LANDMARK DECISION. 2. An important, often the most important, judicial precedent on a particular legal issue. 3. Loosely, a reported case that is cited as the dispositive authority on an issue being litigated. — Also termed (in sense 3) ruling case.

leading counsel. See lead counsel under COUNSEL.

leading economic indicator. See ECONOMIC INDICATOR.

leading indicator. See INDICATOR.

leading-object rule. See MAIN-PURPOSE RULE.

leading of a use. Hist. In a deed, the specification, before the levy of a fine of land, of the person to whose use the fine will inure. • If the deed is executed after the fine, it “declares” the use.

“As if A., tenant in tail, with reversion to himself in fee, would settle his estate on B. for life, remainder to C. in tail, remainder to D. in fee He therefore usually, after making the settlement proposed, covenants to levy a fine . . . and directs that the same shall enure to the uses in such settlement mentioned. This is now a deed to lead the uses of the fine or recovery, and the fine when levied, or recovery when suffered, shall enure to the uses so specified, and no other.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 363 (1766).

leading question. A question that suggests the answer to the person being interrogated; esp., a question that may be answered by a mere “yes” or “no.” • Leading questions are generally allowed only in cross-examination. — Also termed categorical question; suggestive question; suggestive interrogation.

lead-lag study. A survey used to determine the amount of working capital that a utility company must reserve and include in its rate base, by comparing the time the company has to pay its bills and the time taken by its customers to pay for service. • Lead time is the average number of days between the company’s receipt and payment of invoices it receives. Lag time is the average number of days between the company’s billing of its customers and its receipt of payment. By analyzing the difference in timing between inward cash flow and outward cash flow, the amount of necessary reserves can be calculated.

leads doctrine. Tax. In a tax-evasion case, the rule that the government is obligated to investigate all the taxpayer’s leads that are reasonably accessible and that, if true, would establish the taxpayer’s innocence, or the government risks having the trial judge presume that any leads not investigated are true and exonerating.

league. 1. A covenant made by nations, groups, or individuals for promoting common interests or ensuring mutual protection. 2. An alliance or association of nations, groups, or individuals formed by such a covenant. 3. A unit of distance, usu. measuring about three miles.

League of Nations. An organization of nations formed in 1919 to promote international cooperation and peace. • President Woodrow Wilson endorsed the League in an address to Congress, but the United States never joined. The League dissolved in 1946 and turned its assets over to the United Nations.

leakage. 1. The waste of a liquid caused by its leaking from a storage container. 2. An allowance against duties granted by customs to an importer of liquids for losses sustained by this waste. 3. Intellectual property. Loss in value of a piece of intellectual property because of unauthorized copying. • The types of intellectual property most susceptible to leakage are recordable media such as compact discs and videotapes.

leal (leel), adj. [Law French] Hist. Loyal.

lean, vb. 1. To incline or tend in opinion or preference. • A court is sometimes said to “lean against” the position of one of the advocates before it, meaning that the court regards the advocate’s position unfavorably. 2. To yield; to submit.

leapfrog development. An improvement of land that requires the extension of public facilities from their current stopping point, through undeveloped land that may be scheduled for future development, to the site of the improvement.

leap year. See YEAR.

learned (lær-nid), adj. 1. Having a great deal of learning; erudite. • A lawyer might refer to an adversary as a “learned colleague” or “learned opponent,” which may be, depending on tone of voice, either a genuine compliment or a subtle slight. 2. Well-versed in the law and its history. • Statutes sometimes require that judges be “learned in the law,” a phrase commonly construed as meaning that they must have received a regular legal education.

learned intermediary. See informed intermediary under INTERMEDIARY.

learned-intermediary doctrine. The principle that a prescription-drug manufacturer fulfills its duty to warn of a drug’s potentially harmful effects by informing the prescribing physician, rather than the end-user, of those effects.

learned-treatise rule. Evidence. An exception to the hearsay rule, by which a published text may be established as authoritative, either by expert testimony or by judicial notice. • Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, a statement contained in a published treatise, periodical, or pamphlet on sciences or arts (such as history and medicine) can be established as authoritative — and thereby admitted into evidence for the purpose of examining or cross-examining an expert witness — by expert testimony or by the court taking judicial notice of the authoritative nature or reliability of the text. If the statement is admitted into evidence, it may be read into the trial record, but it may not be received as an exhibit. Fed. R. Evid. 803(18).

learning, n. 1. Hist. Legal doctrine. 2. The act of acquiring knowledge.

lease, n. 1. A contract by which a rightful possessor of real property conveys the right to use and occupy that property in exchange for consideration, usu. rent. • The lease term can be for life, for a fixed period, or for a period terminable at will. 2. Such a conveyance plus all covenants attached to it. 3. The written instrument memorializing such a conveyance and its covenants. — Also termed lease agreement; lease contract. 4. The piece of real property so conveyed. 5. A contract by which the rightful possessor of personal property conveys the right to use that property in exchange for consideration.

assignable lease. A lease that can be transferred by a lessee. See SUBLEASE.

capital lease. See LEASE-PURCHASE AGREEMENT.

commercial lease. A lease for business purposes.

community lease. A lease in which a number of lessors owning interests in separate tracts execute a lease in favor of a single lessee.

concurrent lease. A lease that begins before a previous lease ends, entitling the new lessee to be paid all rents that accrue on the previous lease after the new lease begins, and to appropriate remedies against the holding tenant.

“A landlord who has granted a lease may nevertheless grant another lease of the same land for all or some of the period of the first lease. The second lease does not deprive the lessee under the first lease of the right to possession of the property, but is, in reality, a lease of the reversion. Because the two leases operate concurrently during at least some part of their respective durations, they are known as ‘concurrent leases.’” Peter Butt, Land Law 233 (2d ed. 1988).

consumer lease. 1. A lease of goods by a person who is in the business of selling or leasing a product to someone who leases it primarily for personal or household use. UCC § 2A-103(1)(e). 2. A residential — rather than commercial — lease.

durable lease. A lease that reserves a rent payable annually, usu. with a right of reentry for nonpayment.

edge lease. Oil & gas. A lease located on the edge of a field.

finance lease. A fixed-term lease used by a business to finance capital equipment. • The lessor’s service is usu. limited to financing the asset, and the lessee pays maintenance costs and taxes and has the option of purchasing the asset at lease-end for a nominal price. Finance leases strongly resemble security agreements and are written almost exclusively by financial institutions as a way to help a commercial customer obtain an expensive capital item that the customer might not otherwise be able to afford. UCC § 2A-103(1)(g). — Also termed full payout lease.

“By carving out the ‘finance lease’ for special treatment, the drafters of Article 2A have recognized a distinct species of lease that is written almost exclusively by financial institutions and — although treated as a true lease — does not normally carry with it certain of the responsibilities that the typical lessor bears under Article 2A.” 2 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 13-3, at 4 (4th ed. 1995).

“A finance lease is the product of a three-party transaction. The supplier manufactures or supplies the goods pursuant to the lessee's specification, perhaps even pursuant to a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement between the supplier and the lessee. After the prospective finance lease is negotiated, a purchase order, sales agreement, or lease agreement is entered into by the lessor (as buyer or prime lessee) or an existing order, agreement, or lease is assigned by the lessee to the lessor, and the lessor and the lessee then enter into a lease or sublease of the goods. Due to the limited function usually performed by the lessor, the lessee looks almost entirely to the supplier for representations, covenants, and warranties. If a manufacturer's warranty carries through, the lessee may also look to that. Yet, this definition does not restrict the lessor's function solely to the supply of funds; if the lessor undertakes or performs other functions, express warranties, covenants, and the common law will protect the lessee." UCC § 2A-102 cmt. at 14-15 (Proposed Final Draft, 30 Apr. 1999).

full-service lease. A lease in which the lessor agrees to pay all maintenance expenses, insurance premiums, and property taxes.

graduated lease. A lease in which rent varies depending on future contingencies, such as operating expenses or gross income.

gross lease. A lease in which the lessee pays a flat amount for rent, out of which the lessor pays all the expenses (such as gas, water, and electricity).

ground lease. A long-term (usu. 99-year) lease of land only. • Such a lease typically involves commercial property, and any improvements built by the lessee usu. revert to the lessor. — Also termed ground-rent lease; land lease.

headlease. See HEADLEASE.

index lease. A lease that provides for increases in rent according to the increases in the consumer price index.

land lease. See ground lease.

leveraged lease. A lease that is collateral for the loan through which the lessor acquired the leased asset, and that provides the lender's only recourse for nonpayment of the debt; a lease in which a creditor provides nonrecourse financing to the lessor (who has substantial leverage in the property) and in which the lessor's net investment in the lease, apart from nonrecourse financing, declines during the early years and increases in later years. — Also termed third-party equity lease; tax lease.

master lease. A lease that controls later leases or subleases.

mineral lease. A lease in which the lessee has the right to explore for and extract oil, gas, or other minerals. • The rent usu. is based on the amount or value of the minerals extracted.

mining lease. A lease of a mine or mining claim, in which the lessee has the right to work the mine or claim, usu. with conditions on the amount and type of work to be done. • The lessor is compensated in the form of either fixed rent or royalties based on the amount of ore mined.

month-to-month lease. A tenancy with no written contract. • Rent is paid monthly, and usu. one month's notice by the landlord or tenant is required to terminate the tenancy. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

net lease. A lease in which the lessee pays rent plus property expenses (such as taxes and insurance).

net-net-net lease. A lease in which the lessee pays all the expenses, including mortgage interest and amortization, leaving the lessor with an amount free of all claims. — Also termed triple net lease.

oil-and-gas lease. A lease granting the right to extract oil and gas from a specified piece of land. • Although called a "lease," this interest is typically considered a determinable fee in the minerals rather than a grant of possession for a term of years.

operating lease. A lease of property (esp. equipment) for a term that is shorter than the property's useful life. • Under an operating lease, the lessor is responsible for paying taxes and other expenses on the property. Cf. capital lease; LEASE-PURCHASE AGREEMENT.

parol lease (pə-rohl or par-əl). A lease based on an oral agreement; an unwritten lease.

percentage lease. A lease in which the rent is based on a percentage of gross (or net) sales or profits, with a set minimum rent.

perpetual lease. 1. An ongoing lease not limited in duration. 2. A grant of lands in fee with a reservation of a rent in fee; a fee farm.

proprietary lease. A lease between a cooperative apartment association and a tenant.

sandwich lease. A lease in which the lessee subleases the property to a third party, esp. for more rent than under the original lease.

short lease. A lease of brief duration, often less than six months.

sublease. See SUBLEASE.

synthetic lease. A method for financing the purchase of real estate, whereby the lender creates a special-purpose entity that buys the property and then leases it to the ultimate user (usu. a corporation). ● A synthetic lease is treated as a loan for tax purposes and as an operating lease for accounting purposes, so that the "lessee" can deduct the property's depreciation and the loan's interest yet keep both the asset and the debt off its balance sheet.

tax lease. 1. The instrument or estate given to the purchaser of land at a tax sale when the law does not permit the sale of an estate in fee for nonpayment of taxes but instead directs the sale of an estate for years. 2. See leveraged lease.

third-party equity lease. See leveraged lease.

timber lease. A real-property lease that contemplates that the lessee will cut timber on the leased premises.

top lease. A lease granted on property already subject to a mineral lease, and taking effect only if the existing lease expires or terminates.

unless lease. Oil & gas. A lease that terminates automatically unless the lessee begins drilling operations or begins making delay-rental payments.

lease, vb. 1. To grant the possession and use of (land, buildings, rooms, movable property, etc.) to another in return for rent or other consideration <the city leased the stadium to the football team>. 2. To take a lease of; to hold by a lease <Carol leased the townhouse from her uncle>.

lease agreement. See LEASE (3).

lease and release. Hist. A method of transferring seisin without livery, whereby the owner and the transferee would enter into a lease for a term of years, to take effect only when the transferee entered the property, whereupon the owner would release all interest in the property to the transferee by written instrument. ● Once the transferee owned both the term and the freehold interest, the two interests would merge to form one estate in fee simple. This lease-and-release procedure was fully acceptable to the courts, on the theory that livery of seisin to one already occupying the land was unnecessary.

leaseback, n. The sale of property on the understanding, or with the express option, that the seller may lease the property from the buyer immediately upon the sale. — Also termed sale and leaseback.

lease contract. See LEASE (3).

lease for years. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

leasehold, n. A tenant's possessory estate in land or premises, the four types being the tenancy for years, the periodic tenancy, the tenancy at will, and the tenancy at sufferance. ● Although a leasehold has some of the characteristics of real property, it has historically been classified as a chattel real. — Also termed leasehold estate; leasehold interest. See TENANCY. Cf. FREEHOLD.

leasehold improvements. Beneficial changes to leased property (such as a parking lot or driveway) made by or for the benefit of the lessee. ● The phrase is used in a condemnation proceeding to determine the share of compensation to be allocated to the lessee.

leasehold interest. 1. LEASEHOLD; esp., for purposes of eminent domain, the lessee's interest in the lease itself, measured by the difference between the total remaining rent and the rent the lessee would pay for similar space for the same period. 2. A lessor's or lessee's interest under a lease contract. UCC § 2A-103. 3. WORKING INTEREST.

leasehold mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

leasehold mortgage bond. See BOND (3).

leasehold value. The value of a leasehold interest. ● This term usu. applies to a long-term lease when the rent paid under the lease is lower than current market rates. Some states permit the lessee to claim the leasehold interest from the landlord in a condemnation proceeding, unless the lease prohibits such a claim. Other states prohibit these claims by statute. See LEASEHOLD INTEREST; NO-BONUS CLAUSE.

lease insurance. See INSURANCE.

lease-lend. See LEND-LEASE.

lease-purchase agreement. A rent-to-own purchase plan under which the buyer takes possession of the goods with the first payment and takes ownership with the final payment; a lease of property (esp. equipment) by which ownership of the property is transferred to the lessee at the end of the lease term. ● Such a lease is usu. treated as an installment sale. Under a capital lease, the lessee is responsible for paying taxes and other expenses on the property. — Also termed lease-to-purchase agreement; hire-purchase agreement; capital lease. Cf. operating lease under LEASE.

least-intrusive-means doctrine. A doctrine requiring the government to exhaust all other investigatory means before seeking sensitive testimony, as by compelling an attorney to testify before a grand jury on matters that may be protected by the attorney-client privilege.

least-intrusive-remedy doctrine. The rule that a legal remedy should provide the damaged party with appropriate relief, without unduly penalizing the opposing party or the jurisdiction's legal system, as by striking only the unconstitutional portion of a challenged statute while leaving the rest of the statute intact.

least-restrictive educational environment. See LEAST-RESTRICTIVE ENVIRONMENT.

least-restrictive environment. Under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, the school setting that, to the greatest extent appropriate, educates a disabled child together with children who are not disabled. 20 USCA § 1412(5). — Also termed least-restrictive-educational environment. Cf. MAINSTREAMING.

least-restrictive-means test. The rule that a law or governmental regulation, even when based on a legitimate governmental interest, should be crafted in a way that will protect individual civil liberties as much as possible, and should be only as restrictive as is necessary to accomplish a legitimate governmental purpose.

leaute (low-tay), n. [Law French "legality"] Hist. Legality; the condition of a lawful man (legalis homo). See LEGALIS HOMO.

leave, vb. 1. To give by will; to bequeath or devise <she left her ranch to her stepson>. 2. To depart willfully with the intent not to return <Nelson left Texas and became a resident of Massachusetts>. 3. To depart.

leave and license. Hist. In an action for trespass to land, the defense that the plaintiff consented to the defendant's presence.

leave no issue, vb. To die without a surviving child, children, or descendants. • The spouse of a deceased child is usu. not issue.

leave of absence. A worker's temporary absence from employment or duty with the intention to return. • Salary and seniority normally are unaffected by a leave of absence.

leave of court. Judicial permission to follow a nonroutine procedure <the defense sought leave of court to allow the defendant to exit the courtroom when the autopsy photographs are shown>. — Often shortened to leave.

LEC. abbr. LOCAL-EXCHANGE CARRIER.

leccator (lə-kay-tər). [Latin] Archaic. A debauched person; a lecher. — Also termed leccator.

lecherwite (lech-ər-wit). See LAIRWITE.

lecture method. See HORNBOOK METHOD.

ledger (lej-ər). 1. A book or series of books used for recording financial transactions in the form of debits and credits. — Also termed general ledger. 2. Archaic. A resident ambassador or agent. — Also termed (in sense 2) leger; lieger.

ledo (lee-doh), n. [Latin] Hist. The rising water of the sea; neap tide. See neap tide under TIDE.

leet (leet). Hist. A criminal court. • The last remaining leets were abolished in England in 1977.

"Leet is a court derived out of the sheriff's turn, and inquires of all offences under the degree of high treason that are committed against the crown and dignity of the king. But those offences which are to be punished with loss of life or member, are only inquirable there, and to be certified over to the justices of assise. See stat. 1 E. 3, c. 17." Termes de la Ley 278-79 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

left-handed marriage. See morganatic marriage under MARRIAGE.

legabilis (lə-gay-bə-lis), n. [Latin] Hist. Property or goods that may be given by will. • As an adjective, the term also meant "bequeathable."

legacy (leg-ə-see), n. A gift by will, esp. of personal property and often of money. Cf. BEQUEST; DEVISE.

absolute legacy. A legacy given without condition and intended to vest immediately.

accumulated legacy. A legacy that has not yet been paid to a legatee.

accumulative legacy. 1. Another legacy given to a legatee, but by a different will. 2. See additional legacy.

additional legacy. Another legacy given to a legatee in the same will (or in a codicil to the same will) that gave the first legacy. — Also termed accumulative legacy.

alternate legacy. A legacy by which the testator gives the legatee a choice of one of two or more items.

conditional legacy. A legacy that will take effect or be defeated subject to the occurrence or nonoccurrence of an event.

contingent legacy. A legacy that depends on an uncertain event and thus has not vested. ● An example is a legacy given to one's granddaughter "if or when she attains the age of 21."

cumulative legacies. Two or more legacies that, being given in the same will to the same person (often in similar language), are considered additional to one another and not merely a repeated expression of the same gift.

demonstrative legacy (di-mon-strə-tiv). A legacy paid from a particular source if that source has enough money. ● If it does not, the amount of the legacy not paid from that source is taken from the estate's general assets.

general legacy. A gift of personal property that the testator intends to come from the general assets of the estate, payable in money or items indistinguishable from each other, such as shares of stock.

lapsed legacy. A legacy to a legatee who dies either before the testator dies or before the legacy is payable. ● It falls into the residual estate unless the jurisdiction has an antilapse statute. See ANTILAPSE STATUTE.

modal legacy (moh-dəl). A legacy accompanied by directions about the manner in which it will be applied to the legatee's benefit .

pecuniary legacy (pi-kyoo-nee-er-ee). A legacy of a sum of money.

residuary legacy (ri-zij-oo-er-ee). A legacy of the estate remaining after the satisfaction of all claims and all specific, general, and demonstrative legacies.

specific legacy. A legacy of property that can be distinguished from the other property forming the testator's estate. — Also termed special legacy.

substitutional legacy. A legacy that replaces a different legacy already given to a legatee.

trust legacy. A legacy of personal property to trustees to be held in trust, with the income usu. paid to a specified beneficiary.

vested legacy. A legacy given in such a way that the legatee has a fixed, indefeasible right to its payment. ● A legacy is said to be vested when the testator's words making the bequest convey a transmissible interest, whether present or future, to the legatee. Thus, a legacy to be paid when the legatee reaches the age of 21 is a vested legacy because it is given unconditionally and absolutely. Although the legacy is vested, the legatee's enjoyment of it is deferred.

void legacy. A legacy that never had any legal existence. ● The subject matter of such a legacy is treated as a part of the estate and passes under the residuary clause of a will or (in the absence of a residuary clause) under the rules for intestate succession.

legacy duty. 1. A tax on a legacy, often with the provision that the rate increases as the relationship of the legatee becomes more remote from the testator. — Also termed collateral inheritance tax. 2. Hist. A tax imposed on personal property (other than a leasehold) passing by will or through intestacy.

legacy tax. See TAX.

legal, adj. 1. Of or relating to law; falling within the province of law <pro bono legal services>. 2. Established, required, or permitted by law; LAWFUL <it is legal to carry a concealed handgun in some states>. 3. Of or relating to law as opposed to equity.

legal act. 1. Any act not condemned as illegal. ● For example, a surgeon's incision is a legal act, while stabbing is an illegal one. 2. An action or undertaking that creates a legally recognized obligation; an act that binds a person in some way.

"A lunatic, though capable of holding property, was in Roman law incapable of any legal act." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 354 (13th ed. 1924).

3. See act in the law under ACT (2). 4. See act of the law under ACT (2).

legal-acumen doctrine (lee-gəl-ə-kyoo-mən). The principle that if a defect in, or the invalidity of, a claim to land cannot be discovered without legal expertise, then equity may be invoked to remove the cloud created by the defect or invalidity.

legal-advice exception. 1. The rule that an attorney may withhold as privileged the client's identity and information regarding fees, if there is a strong probability that disclosing the information would implicate the client in the criminal activity for which the attorney was consulted. 2. An exemption contained in open-meetings legislation, permitting a governmental body to meet in closed session to consult with its attorney about certain matters.

legal age. See age of capacity under AGE.

legal aid. Free or inexpensive legal services provided to those who cannot afford to pay full price. • Legal aid is usu. administered locally by a specially established organization. See LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION.

legal analyst. See PARALEGAL.

legal asset. See ASSET.

legal assistant. 1. PARALEGAL. 2. A legal secretary.

legal brief. See BRIEF.

legal capital. See CAPITAL.

legal cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE (1).

legal centralism. The theory suggesting that state-constructed legal entities form the center of legal life and control lesser normative systems (such as the family or business networks) that define appropriate behavior and social relationships. — Also termed legal centrism; lego-centrism (lee-goh-sen-triz-əm).

legal-certainty test. Civil procedure. A test designed to establish whether the jurisdictional amount has been met. • The amount claimed in the complaint will control unless there is a "legal certainty" that the claim is actually less than the minimum amount necessary to establish jurisdiction. See AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

legal citology (sī-tol-ə-jee). The study of citations (esp. in footnotes) and their effect on legal scholarship. — Often shortened to citology. — legal citologist (sī-tol-ə-jist), n.

Legal Code. See CODE (2).

legal conclusion. A statement that expresses a legal duty or result but omits the facts creating or supporting the duty or result. Cf. CONCLUSION OF LAW; CONCLUSION OF FACT; FINDING OF FACT.

legal consideration. See valuable consideration under CONSIDERATION.

legal cruelty. See CRUELTY.

legal custody. See CUSTODY (2), (3).

legal custom. See CUSTOM.

legal death. 1. See brain death under DEATH. 2. CIVIL DEATH.

legal debt. See DEBT.

legal defense. See DEFENSE (1).

legal demand. See DEMAND (1).

legal dependent. See DEPENDENT.

legal description. A formal description of real property, including a description of any part subject to an easement or reservation, complete enough that a particular piece of land can be located and identified. • The description can be made by reference to a government survey, metes and bounds, or lot numbers of a recorded plat. — Also termed land description.

legal discretion. See judicial discretion under DISCRETION.

legal distributee. See DISTRIBUTEE.

legal duty. See DUTY (1).

legal-elements test. Criminal law. A method of determining whether one crime is a lesser-included offense in relation to another crime, by examining the components of the greater crime to analyze whether a person who commits the greater crime necessarily commits the lesser one too. — Also termed same-elements test.

legal entity. A body, other than a natural person, that can function legally, sue or be sued, and make decisions through agents. • A typical example is a corporation. Cf. LEGAL PERSON.

legalese (lee-gə-leez). The jargon characteristically used by lawyers, esp. in legal documents <the partner chided the associate about the rampant legalese in the draft sublease>. Cf. PLAIN-LANGUAGE MOVEMENT.

legal estate. See ESTATE.

legal estoppel. See ESTOPPEL.

legal ethics. 1. The standards of minimally acceptable conduct within the legal profession, involving the duties that its members owe one another, their clients, and the courts. — Also termed etiquette of the profession. 2. The study or observance of those duties. 3. The written regulations governing those duties. See MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT.

legal evidence. See EVIDENCE.

legal excuse. See EXCUSE.

legal fact. See FACT.

legal father. See FATHER.

legal fence. See LAWFUL FENCE.

legal fiction. An assumption that something is true even though it may be untrue, made esp. in judicial reasoning to alter how a legal rule operates. ● The constructive trust is an example of a legal fiction. — Also termed fiction of law; fictio juris.

"I ... employ the expression 'Legal Fiction' to signify any assumption which conceals, or affects to conceal, the fact that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged, its operation being modified.... It is not difficult to understand why fictions in all their forms are particularly congenial to the infancy of society. They satisfy the desire for improvement, which is not quite wanting, at the same time that they do not offend the superstitious disrelish for change which is always present." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 21-22 (17th ed. 1901).

"Legal fiction is the mask that progress must wear to pass the faithful but bleary-eyed watchers of our ancient legal treasures. But though legal fictions are useful in thus mitigating or absorbing the shock of innovation, they work havoc in the form of intellectual confusion." Morris R. Cohen, Law and the Social Order 126 (1933).

legal force. See reasonable force under FORCE.

legal formalism, n. The theory that law is a set of rules and principles independent of other political and social institutions. ● Legal formalism was espoused by such scholars as Christopher Columbus Langdell and Lon Fuller. — legal formalist, n. Cf. LEGAL REALISM.

legal fraud. See constructive fraud (1) under FRAUD.

legal heir. See HEIR (1).

legal holiday. A day designated by law as exempt from court proceedings, issuance of process, and the like. ● Legal holidays vary from state to state. — Sometimes shortened to holiday. — Also termed nonjudicial day.

legal impossibility. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

legal inconsistency. See legally inconsistent verdict under VERDICT.

legal injury. See INJURY.

legal-injury rule. The doctrine that the statute of limitations on a claim does not begin to run until the claimant has sustained some legally actionable damage. ● Under this rule, the limitations period is tolled until the plaintiff has actually been injured. — Also termed damage rule.

legal innocence. See INNOCENCE.

legal insanity. See INSANITY.

legal interest. See INTEREST (2).

legal intromission. See INTROMISSION.

legal investments. See LEGAL LIST.

legalis homo (lə-gay-lis hoh-moh). [Latin "lawful man"] Hist. A person who has full legal capacity and full legal rights; one who has not been deprived of any rights in court by outlawry, excommunication, or infamy. ● A legalis homo was said to stand rectus in curia ("right in court"). A lawful man was able to serve as a juror and to swear an oath. Pl. legales homines (lə-gay-leez hom-ə-nee-z). — Also termed legal man; lawful man; lageman; liber et legalis homo. See RECTUS IN CURIA.

legalism, n. 1. Formalism carried almost to the point of meaninglessness; an inclination to exalt the importance of law or formulated rules in any area of action.

"What is legalism? It is the ethical attitude that holds moral conduct to be a matter of rule following, and moral relationships to consist of duties and rights determined by rules." Judith N. Shklar, Legalism: Law, Morals, and Political Trials 1 (1964).

"If . . . the law and the lawyer are to make a socially valuable contribution to the operation of the social security system, there must be abandoned old-established habits of thought as to the nature of law and the whole gamut of practices summed up in the layman's word of deadly insult, 'legalism' — his word for rigid attachment to legal precedent, the substitution of legal rule for policy, the fettering of discretion, the adversary style, the taking of technical points, formality." Leslie Scarman, English Law — The New Dimension 43 (1974).

2. A mode of expression characteristic of lawyers; a jargonistic phrase characteristic of lawyers, such as "pursuant to."

legalis moneta Angliae (lə-gay-lis mə-nee-tə ang-gee-ee), n. [Latin] Lawful money of England.

legal issue. See ISSUE (1).

legalist, n. A person who views things from a legal or formalistic standpoint; esp., one who believes in strict adherence to the letter of the law rather than its spirit.

legalistic, adj. Characterized by legalism; exalting the importance of law or formulated rules in any area of action .

legality, 1. Strict adherence to law, prescription, or doctrine; the quality of being legal. 2. The principle that a person may not be prosecuted under a criminal law that has not been previously published. — Also termed (in sense 2) principle of legality.

legalize, vb. 1. To make lawful; to authorize or justify by legal sanction <the bill to legalize marijuana never made it to the Senate floor>. 2. To imbue with the spirit of the law; to make legalistic <legalized conceptions of religion>. — legalization, n.

legalized nuisance. See NUISANCE.

legal jeopardy. See JEOPARDY.

legal liability. See LIABILITY.

legal life estate. See life estate under ESTATE.

legal life tenant. See LIFE TENANT.

legal list. A group of investments in which institutions and fiduciaries (such as banks and insurance companies) may legally invest according to state statutes. • States usu. restrict the legal list to high-quality securities meeting certain specifications. — Also termed approved list; legal investments.

legally, adv. In a lawful way; in a manner that accords with the law.

legally determined, adj. (Of a claim, issue, etc.) decided by legal process <liability for the accident was legally determined>.

legally incapacitated person. A person, other than a minor, who is permanently or temporarily impaired by mental illness, mental deficiency, physical illness or disability, or use of drugs or alcohol to the extent that the person lacks sufficient understanding to make or communicate responsible personal decisions or to enter into contracts. — Abbr. LIP. — Also termed legally incompetent person; incompetent, n.

legally inconsistent verdict. See VERDICT.

legally liable. See LIABLE.

legally sufficient consideration. See sufficient consideration under CONSIDERATION.

legal malice. See implied malice under MALICE.

legal malpractice. See MALPRACTICE.

legal man. See LEGALIS HOMO.

legal maxim. See MAXIM.

legal memory. The period during which a legal right or custom can be determined or established. • Traditionally, common-law legal memory began in the year 1189, but in 1540 it became a steadily moving period of 60 years. Cf. TIME IMMEMORIAL (1).

"Because of the importance to feudal landholders of seisin and of real property in general, the writ of right has been called 'the most solemn of all actions.' Nevertheless, it was believed that the time within which such a complainant would be allowed to prove an ancestor to have been seised of the estate in question must be limited. At first this was done by selecting an arbitrary date in the past, before which 'legal memory' would not run. The date initially was Dec. 1, 1135 (the death of Henry I); in 1236 it was changed by statute to Dec. 19, 1154 (the coronation of Henry II); and in 1275 it became Sept. 3, 1189 (the coronation of Richard I). Finally, in 1540, an arbitrary period of sixty years was set as the period of 'legal memory.' The latter change was probably made because it was felt that a 350-year statute of limitations was somewhat awkward." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 45 n.65 (2d ed. 1984).
