WHICH WERE PUT UP TO AUCTION AND SOLD

LAHORE,

In the Years 1850 and 1851,

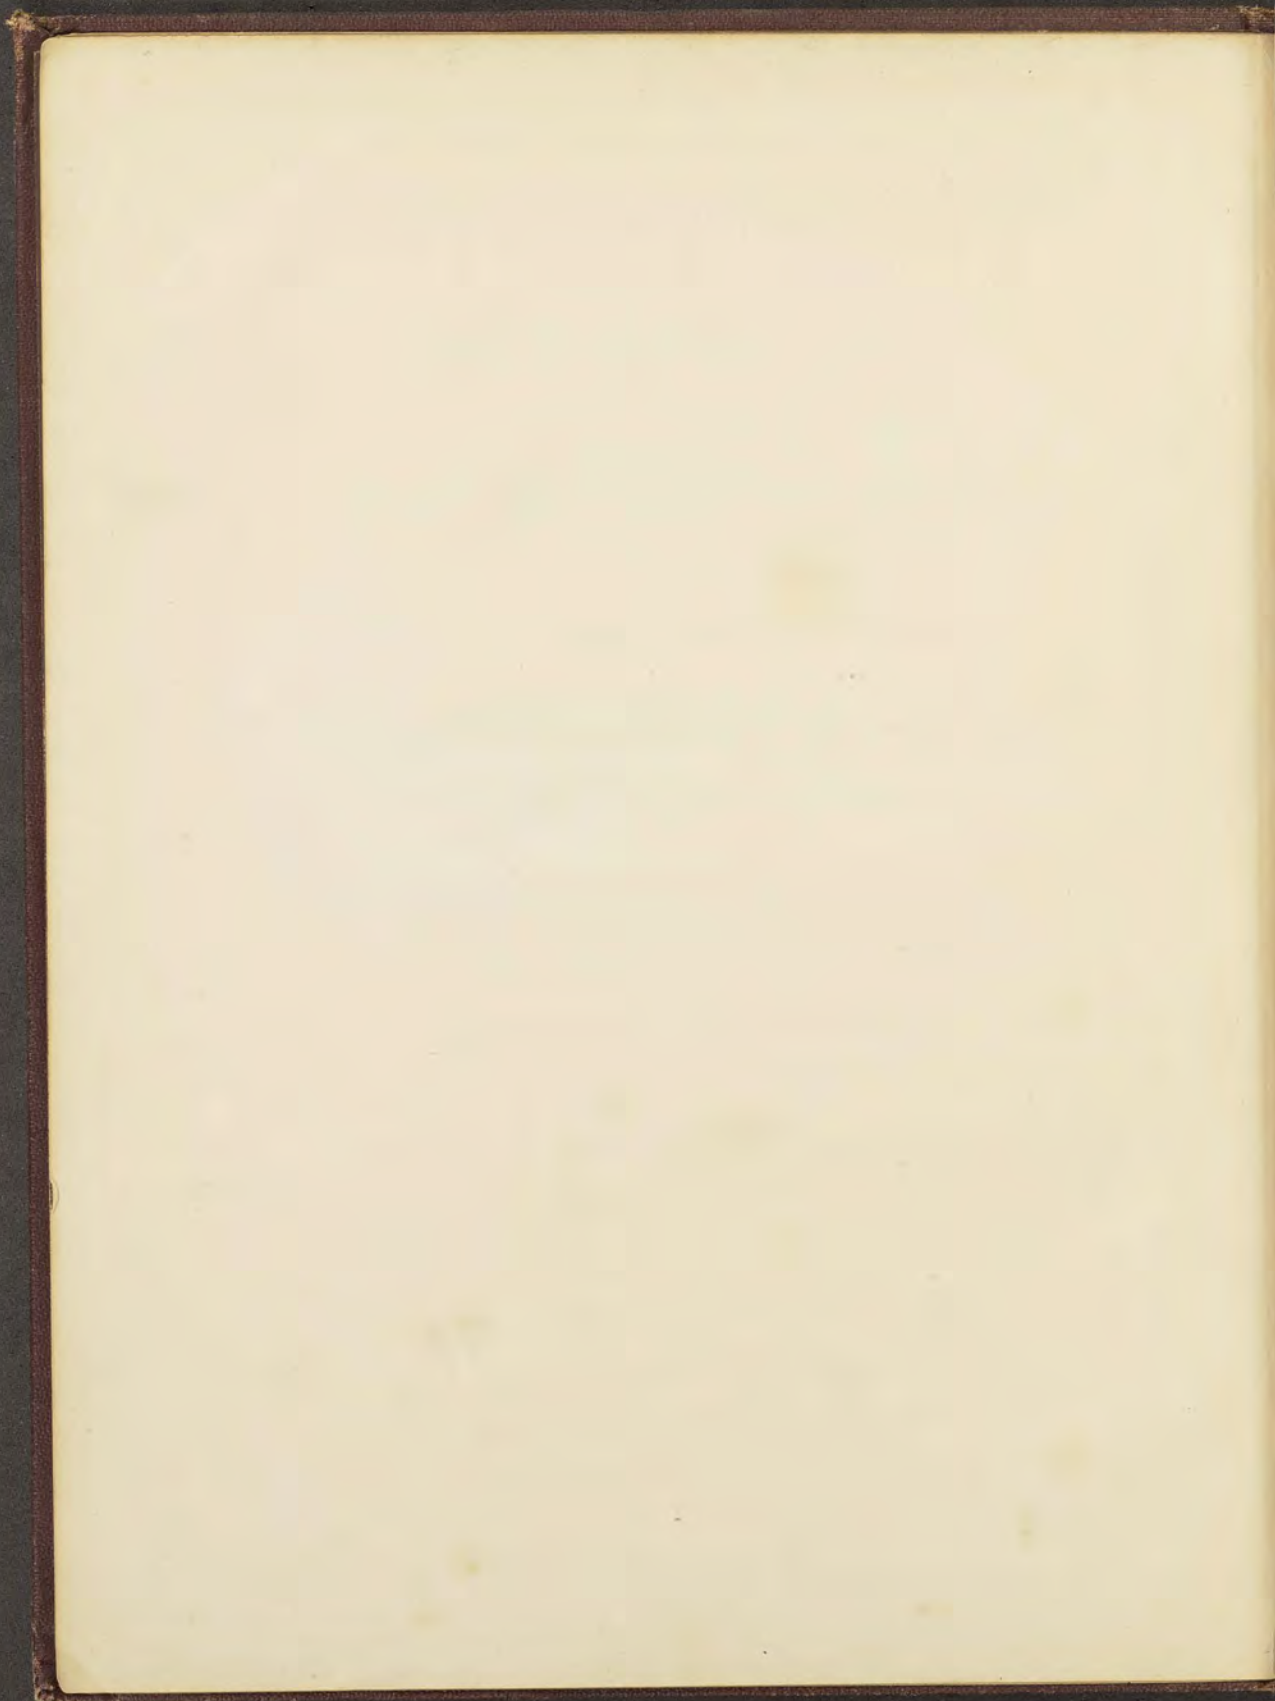

BY

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

WITH INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

[London 5]

1885

INTRODUCTION.

THE two Catalogues appearing in the following pages have been reprinted by order of His Highness the Maharajah Duleep Singh.

At the annexation of the Punjab the greater quantity of the jewels, plate, furniture and other private property of the Maharajah was retained by the British Government, he being allowed to take only a small part with him to Futtehgurh.

Of the property thus retained the principal jewels appear to have been sent to England soon afterwards with the Koh-i-noor, some being exhibited in London in the Great Exhibition of 1851, but by far the largest part was put up to auction in Lahore in the years 1850 and 1851.

Considerable difficulty was experienced by the advisers of His Highness in obtaining any particulars of these sales by auction, but after search had been made in vain in several quarters, copies of two of the Catalogues were found in the course of the present year, and are reprinted below, with marginal notes added to explain such of the vernacular words as are less familiar to English readers.

Of these the first (vide p. 1) is headed "Catalogue of the Seventh Public Sale," so that there must have been six previous sales, the second (vide p. 51), two months afterwards, appears to be a final sale.

No Catalogues of the first six sales, or of the sales, if any, between the seventh and the last, have been procurable.

The property included in the two Catalogues is very various, and some of extreme value. The first one contains a large quantity of shawls, household furniture, wearing apparel, harness, fowling-pieces, personal ornaments and jewels, &c., and the second comprises property of the same nature, but the jewels are much more numerous and of considerably greater value. It is possible that some of the articles included in the first Catalogue here printed may have been bought in at the sale, and so be also included in the second, but no specific articles can be identified as appearing in both.

The Title pages to the Catalogues are given as printed in the original Catalogues used at the Sales in 1850 and 1851, and are headed by the expression "Confiscated Property;" but the Maharajah Duleep Singh contends that the property thus sold was not State property, which was alone, by the operation of the Treaty of 1849, at the disposal of the Government; and it is clear from the general character of the articles specified in the Catalogues, that they were the private property of the Maharajah, and could not properly be described as State property. In this connection the great number of fowling-pieces and other sporting guns by Manton, Westley-Richards and others, in the first Catalogue, and the large collection of shawls sold may be specially noted.

When, however, such of the items as are described more at length are looked at, the matter is at once placed beyond a doubt. In the first Catalogue No. 615 is a miniature of Maharajah Runjeet Singh, the father of Maharajah Duleep Singh. In the second, number 186 is described as being the favourite fowling-piece of Maharajah Runjeet Singh; numbers 220, 501, 722 and 744, are arms and armour which were personally worn by him; 207 is a necklace of pearls worn by one of his Queens; and 305 and 306 are swords made for Maharajah Kurruck Singh, the brother of Maharajah Duleep Singh, and for Maharajah Duleep Singh. The items numbered 61, 70, 139, 224, 366, 368, 447, 537 and 635, some of which are of great value, are specially interesting. They formed part of the property of the Afghan King, Shah Shoojah, and were given up by him to Runjeet Singh with the Koh-i-noor, and many other jewels, some almost as valuable.

The Treaty of 1849, already referred to, declares that all property of the State of Lahore shall be confiscated. Article 3 of the same Treaty treats the Koh-i-noor as the private property of the Maharajah, for by it the Maharajah is made to surrender the Koh-i-noor to the Queen of England—showing that it was not amongst the property confiscated in Article 2; and the same character holds good as to the other jewels derived from Shah Shoojah, for an emerald with Ahmed Shah's name engraved upon it, and a saddle pommel made of a single emerald, both from this source, were included among the articles which the Maharajah was allowed to retain at the annexation as his private property. Thus it was unjustifiable to characterize the property contained in the Catalogues as having been confiscated by the Treaty of Lahore.

The word "confiscate" used in the Treaty is an arrogant expression, singularly ill-suited to the relationship in which the infant Maharajah stood towards the British Government; but it is not proposed in these pages to enter into the historical question between His Highness and the Government.

No record can be found of the sum of money realized by these sales, and it is not possible at this distance of time, and with only two out of several Catalogues to refer to, to ascertain, even approximately, the value of the property thus sold, but it is evident it must have been enormous. The only facts obtained as to the prices realized by the sales are that 95 items of the second Catalogue realized Rs. 1,39,287. There are 952 items in this Catalogue, so that it seems probable that the whole purchase-money amounted to upwards of Rs. 10,00,000 or £100,000. As there were, at least, seven other sales, it would not be very extravagant to put the whole sum realized by the property at half a million of money.

It is hardly necessary to observe that it is highly improbable that sales by auction at so distant a place as Lahore, can have realized the full value of property of this valuable nature, especially as so many sales were held in so short a time.

Independently of the question of money value it may well be asked what right the British Government could have to dispose of historical heirlooms belonging to the Maharajah, who was its ward, whilst he was an infant, without even asking his consent, considering the exceptional interest he would have subsequently experienced in the possession of his father's portrait and personal accoutrements when he came to years of responsibility and full maturity.
